OPEC ministers call for price meetings

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Five OPEC oil ministers agreed Saturday to call two special meetings later this month to consider ways of halting the decline in oil prices, according to the cartel's Nigerian president.

The ministers, at the end of a full day of closed-door meetings, made no recommendations for immediate OPEC action to combat the slipping prices, said Nigeria's Rilwanu Lukman, who was chairman of the session.

He said he and the oil ministers of Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Venezuela and Indonesia would invite at least seven non-OPEC oil producing nations to meet with them in Vienna on April 23 to discuss ways of cooperating to stabilize oil prices.

Lukman declined to identify the non-OPEC countries, but industry sources said they would be Mexico, Egypt, Oman, Angola, Brunei, Malaysia and Colombia.

When asked, Lukman said he would not rule out inviting representatives also from the Soviet Union and Norway. The Soviets are the world's largest oil producers.

Oil ministers of all 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will then meet in Vienna on April 25, Lukman said. He suggested that the non-OPEC representatives might be asked to attend that session as official observers.

OPEC had not previously planned to hold any meetings until its regularly scheduled summer conference June 8.

Lukman said the five ministers had decided that special meetings were needed to "look into the situation generally in the market" and to consider ways of cooperating with non-OPEC countries.

OPEC oil ministers held two meetings with representatives of Mexico, Angola, Egypt, Malaysia, Oman and Brunei in the spring of 1986, but the cartel was unsuccessful in persuading those countries to reduce their production.

This time the situation is different, according to Lukman.

"Non-OPEC (countries) have, on their own, realized the need to cooperate" among themselves and with OPEC, Lukman told reporters after the meeting.

OPEC often has declared in recent years that it alone cannot be expected to bear the burden of cutting production in order to stablize oil prices.

OPEC controls only about 35 percent of the total world oil supply, down from more than 60 percent in the late 1970s.

Lukman said the separate April 25 meeting of all 13 OPEC members was called because of the severity of the recent price decline.

"The price is not what we expected it to be" after having decided last December to maintain strict oil production limits, he said.

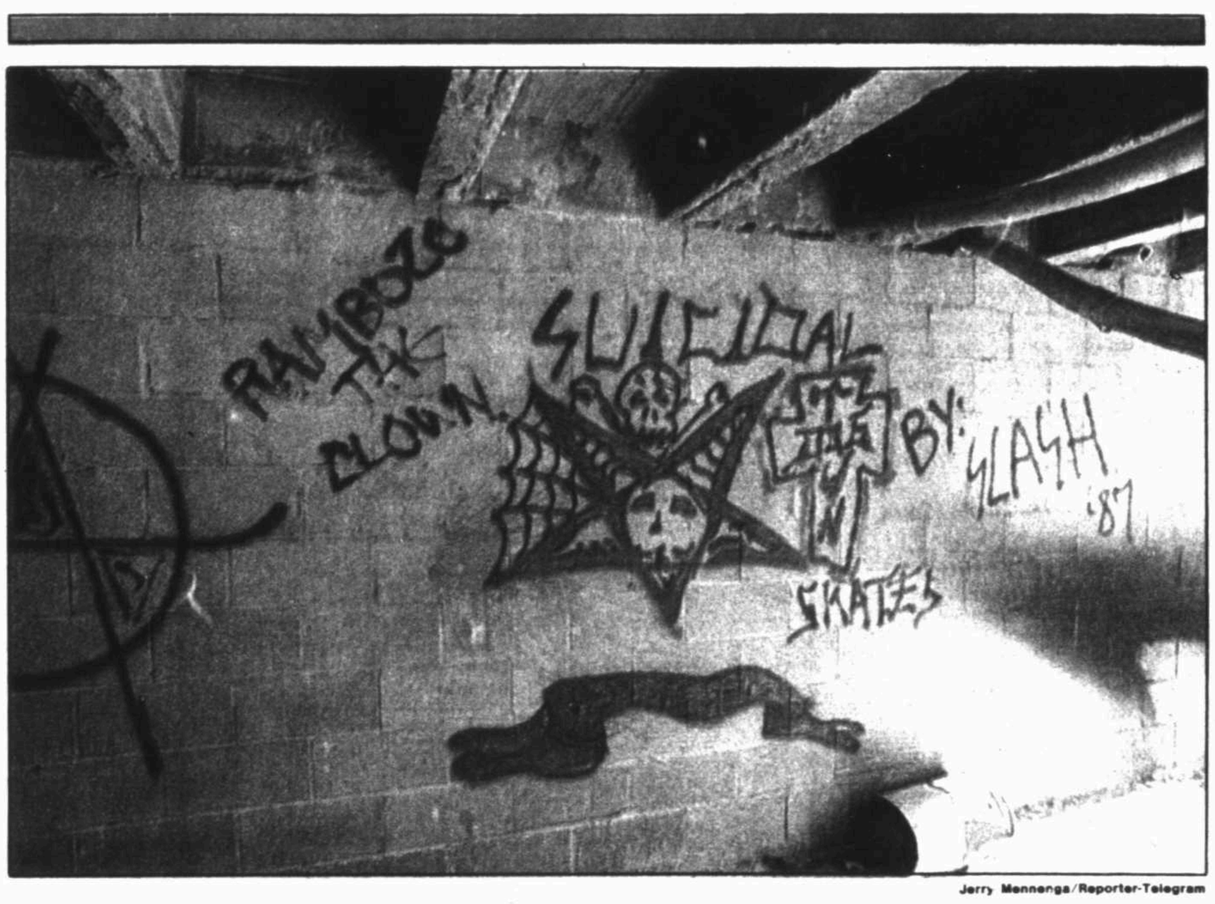

Oil prices in the open market are at least $3 below OPEC's official target level of $18 a barrel.

Lukman said Saturday's meeting had made no recommendation about whether OPEC should reduce its production, either unilaterally or jointly with non-OPEC producers, as a way of boosting prices.

He said increased production by non-OPEC producers this year was partly responsible for the oil price slump.

Although Iran was not invited to Saturday's meeting, its deputy oil minister, Kazempour Ardebili, flew to Vienna and met separately with members of the group.

He said later in an interview in his hotel room that Iran had proposed that OPEC cut its production by at least 5 percent immediately. He said this should be done with or without parallel action by non-OPEC oil-producing countries.

Graffiti at the abandoned Wild River Canyon amusement park west of Midland depicts symbolism common to satanic worship. This and other evidence has authorities concerned that some local teens may be experimenting with their own form of occult "worship."

Teen suicides stir fears

EDITOR'S NOTE: During the past 15 months the Midland Police Department has reported 16 teenage suicide attempts. Of those, two actual suicides were recorded, both this year. During the same period, rumors circulated about the practice of Satanism, with some speculation of a connection. Reporter-Telegram Staff Writer Jane Marler Dees was assigned to investigate both issues. Her report begins with this story.

The mother of a 16-year-old Midland boy says she saw no warning signs prior to a Wednesday in January when a self-inflicted gunshot wound ended his life.

"He got up that morning and I made him strawberry pancakes for breakfast," remembered Cathy Wells, the mother of Brian, a 16-year-old Lee High School sophomore who died Jan. 6.

A note he left read simply: "I don't have the will to live in this world of hurt."

There is no single answer to the question of "why" teens, or adults for that matter, take their lives, says Charlotte Ross, executive director of the Youth Suicide National Center in Eurlingame, Calif.

WHO CAN HELP?

For teens who would like to talk to someone concerning depression or suicidal thoughts, help is available. If there is not a parent, teacher, member of the clergy or friend to share your concerns with, experts suggest calling the following agencies:

Mental Health and Mental Retardation (MHMR) Center of Midland 24-hour suicide hotline — 683-5591

Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital — 563-1200 or 1-800-527-4901 (Texas only)

Teen Challenge of the Permian Basin — 682-3244

Midland Independent School District drug intervention counselors (Pat Cobb and Steve Russell) — 682-4151

Teenagers who are having a problem with drug or alcohol abuse and feel there is no one they can talk to may call:

Palmer Drug Abuse Prevention Center — 685-3645

Teen Challenge of the Permian Basin — 682-3244

Clearview Hospital — 697-5200 or 592-LIFE

Cocaine Hotline — 1-800-COCAINE

Alcoholics Anonymous — 684-9516, 684-9430 or 682-8162

Midland Independent School District drug intervention counselors (Pat Cobb and Steve Russell) — 682-4151

Teenagers who wish to report possible instances of criminal activity but wish to remain anonymous may call:

Midland Police Department — 683-4281 (in an emergency, dial 911)

Midland County Sheriff's Department — 688-1228

Neighbors Against Burglary and Drugs, Inc. — 682-4243

Allegations of satanic worship still surfacing

SATAN LIVES. SUICIDAL. So reads the detailed graffiti emblazoned on the walls of an abandoned Midland amusement park.

Rumors surrounding the source of the artwork are as scary as the hell they allude to.

Are a small group of teens in Midland practicing a self-styled brand of satanic worship, or aren't they? And if so, are those responsible serious, or just exhibiting a way to have fun, circa 1988?

It depends on whom you ask.

Midland police and sheriff's departments say they have investigated the suspicions but have no evidence to support them.

At a press conference Wednesday, Midland Police Chief Richard Czech and Sheriff Gary Painter claimed there was nothing to the "wild rumors."

Hijackers kill one but free another

LARNACA, Cyprus (AP) — The hijackers of a Kuwaiti jumbo jet with 53 people aboard killed one of their captives Saturday and threatened to kill more unless the plane was refueled, government officials said.

The hijackers later freed a sick passenger, the 58th person released from the 112 who were aboard when the plane was seized Tuesday. There are believed to be at least six hijackers.

A senior Palestine Liberation Organization official met four times with the hijackers Saturday, raising hopes of a breakthrough in the deadlocked negotiations.

The Kuwait Airways Boeing 747 was hijacked on a flight from Bangkok to Kuwait and forced to land in Mashhad in northeastern Iran, where 57 people were released. It left Iran Friday and landed in Larnaca after being refused permission to land in Lebanon and Syria.

Cypriot officials identified the slain man as a security guard on the airliner.

But the Kuwait News Agency quoted the Persian Gulf state's information minister, Sheik Jaber Mubarak al-Sabah, as saying the victim was one of three military men returning from a vacation in Thailand.

The agency quoted unidentified officials as saying the released man is a 32-year-old Kuwaiti Shiite Moslem named Fadel Abdel-Rassoul Leeri. A Kuwaiti of that name was listed as a passenger.

Cypriot government spokesman Akis Fantis said the man's release "was a sign of goodwill by the hijackers."

Soon after his release, officials at the airport near Larnaca said the hijackers radioed the tower with an English statement reiterating their demand that Kuwait free 17 terrorists, all but one a Shiite Moslem, convicted there for a chain of bombings in 1983.

Tuesday's state, local runoffs keep candidates in suspense

Gilbreath outspends Boulter for chance to face Bentsen

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Republican senatorial candidate Wes Gilbreath is spending about four times as much money as opponent U.S. Rep. Beau Boulter in a race where campaign finances have become an issue.

Gilbreath, a millionaire businessman from Houston who is personally bankrolling his campaign, faces Boulter of Amarillo in Tuesday's runoff for the GOP nomination for the U.S. Senate. The winner will oppose three-term Democratic incumbent Lloyd Bentsen in the general election in November.

Gilbreath, 59, estimated he will have spent about $800,000 by the runoff, much of it on extensive television and billboard advertising throughout the state. Boulter, 46, who plans to run radio commercials, estimated he will have spent about $200,000.

Boulter has accused Gilbreath of trying to buy the race. But Gilbreath said the congressman entered the contest underfunded and "just assumed everyone would hand him the nomination."

"Beau Boulter just didn't suit up for the game," he said.

A political unknown, Gilbreath surprised the establishment by leading Boulter 37 percent to 31 percent in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary. Gilbreath lead a field of four in his first-place finish.

Call them Nervous Nellies.

They are, in fact, Democratic and Republican nominees anxiously awaiting the outcome of Tuesday's state and local runoffs and stand to gain or lose the most in a November election showdown.

Standing on the sideline in particular is Gerald Cox Jr. — the GOP nominee for County Commissioner, Precinct 3 — whose primary interest focuses on the local Democratic runoff between incumbent Scott Welch and Midland businesswoman Louisa Valencia.

Cox will go on to face the victor of that race on Nov. 7.

The runoffs were necessary because none of the candidates who appear on Tuesday's ballot obtained 50 percent of the popular vote in the March primary election.

Welch, who has held his County Commissioner seat since 1984, received 43.3 percent of the Democratic primary vote last March, compared to Mrs. Valencia's 31.2 percent.

Despite Welch's 12-percentage-point victory over Mrs. Valencia, neither candidate believes the other has a clear advantage or disadvantage heading into Tuesday's runoff.

They differ on solutions to such key issues as flooding and drainage and how the county should go about solving the problem.

The nuisance arose last June when heavy rainfall formed potholes, impassable thoroughfares, damaged vegetation and invited fish and mosquito larvae to take up residence in standing water across resident's yards.

Welch says many of the roads outside the city limits are on private property and are therefore the responsibility of the property owner to maintain.

But Mrs. Valencia argues that repairing and grading the precinct's roads are within the county's fiduciary responsibility. She said the roads were in good condition until Welch took office.

Welch says his concerns center around adding office space to the county courthouse, funding a helicopter surveillance program and working to keep tight reins on the tax rate.

Candidates court votes with more than 'name game'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Running for a relatively low-profile office in a state that sometimes picks its low-profile officeholders based on the sound of their names, Supreme Court hopeful Nathan Hecht realizes he's got a problem.

Despite backing from Republican Party leaders, then-District Judge Hecht lost the Place 1 Supreme Court nomination in 1986 to a man with the All-American name of Charles Ben Howell. Now a justice on the 5th Court of Appeals in Dallas, Hecht's back seeking the Place 2 nomination this year, facing Missouri City attorney Ronald Block in Tuesday's GOP runoff.

Although he likes to remind voters that his name "really rhymes with respect," Hecht's trying to counter voter opposition to the harsh sound of his name by implying that it rhymes with neck. "We've tried to turn it around to a plus with the 'Hecht yes' campaign," he says.

He's printed up billboards, bumper stickers, buttons and t-shirts that say, "Hecht yes for Supreme Court."

Despite the name game, Block and Hecht both claim qualifications are the key to Tuesday's vote. And both claim to hold the superior experience.

Hecht collected 40.7 percent of the vote in the March 8 primary to Block's 31.4 percent. Houston Appeals Court Judge D. Camille Dunn pulled 28 percent to force the runoff.

Lawyers for Hunt brothers hope to settle with banks

DALLAS (AP) — Lawyers for the Hunt brothers and a group of foreign and domestic banks said they hoped to settle within two weeks a two-year legal dispute over payment of about $1.5 billion in loans.

"Nothing is in writing yet, but both parties feel this will be over quickly," said Henry W. Simon, lead attorney for the Hunts' Placid Oil Co. "We're working hard now to get everything done."

Simon and Paul Wickes, lawyer representing Placid's largest creditor First RepublicBank Corp., asked U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Harold Abramson Thursday to hold a hearing Monday of principal attorneys in the case to discuss the deal.

The arrangement resulted from several months of discussions between Hunt officials and the 23 foreign and domestic banks, said Simon. But previous effort to settle the disputes have fallen through.

The three Hunt brothers — Nelson Bunker, William Herbert and Lamar — filed suit in federal court nearly two years ago against the banks, alleging they were fraudulently squeezing the Hunts into accepting increasingly difficult loan terms for a $1.5 billion debt.

The banks filed a countersuit, demanding immediate payment on what the banks contended were legitimate loans in default.

Six weeks later, the banks posted key Hunt assets securing the defaulted loans for foreclosure. The Hunts protected themselves by placing Placid and William Herbert's personal trust under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code. They later did the same with the other brothers' trusts.

Both sides asked the bankruptcy judge to suspend reorganization hearings on Placid Oil until the negotiations were complete, attorneys said.

Ex-day care teacher cleared of charges in sexual abuse case

EL PASO — A former day-care teacher accused of sexually molesting six of her students was found innocent Saturday by a jury in her second trial on the charges.

Michelle "Mickey" Noble was cleared of nine charges of indecency with a child and two charges of aggravated sexual assault after jurors deliberated nearly five hours.

Prosecutors have alleged that she and a co-defendant, Gayle Stickler Dove, took pre-school students from the East Valley YMCA to Noble's house, where they were disrobed and fondled. Dove is appealing a 20-year sentence.

"I need to go home," Mrs. Noble said, tears streaming down her face after she left the courtroom with her husband and two children. "I just want to hold on to my kids and my husband."

Mrs. Noble, who had spent 2½ years in prison, was surrounded by relatives and friends, many of them crying.

She had been convicted in 1986, but the conviction was overturned when the 8th Court of Appeals ruled that videotaped testimony by children was inadmissable.

Western investors may 'be mad, too' if stock falls further

FORT WORTH (AP) — Documents filed with federal regulators show that stockholders in the Western Co. of North America could watch their investments vanish under any financial reorganization in bankruptcy court.

Meanwhile, oilfield services company founder Eddie Chiles said he plans to step down as Western's chairman at the May 3 annual meeting of the Fort Worth-based firm.

Chiles would remain a Western consultant and receive a $50,000 annual retainer from 1989 through 1991, said a company proxy statement.

In a 10-K financial disclosure statement, Western said that "it is likely that any plan of reorganization will result in the dilution or possible cancellation" of the company's common and preferred stock.

Common stock of Western, hardhit by the energy slump brought about by declining oil and gas prices, closed Friday at 68.75 cents per share, down 6.25 cents from the previous close.

In the oil boom days of the early 1980s, Western common stock sold as high as $39 per share, with preferred stock once bringing more than $50 a share. But times have changed.

Western, in its annual report mailed to shareholders this week, said its common and preferred stock and publicly held subordinated debentures "should be considered highly speculative investments with a high degree of risk."

The company has about 15,100 common stock shareholders and 46.5 million outstanding common shares. There are about 350 shareholders of the one million outstanding preferred shares.

Houston police allegedly draw gun on child for second time

HOUSTON (AP) — For the second time in three days, police internal affairs detectives were ordered to investigate reports that a narcotics officer mistakenly drew a gun on a child during a raid.

The latest incident occurred about 6 p.m. Thursday while officers conducted a raid on a house in southeast Houston where they believed drugs were being sold.

The family of Robert Williams, 12, said the boy was standing in the yard of the family's home, several doors down from the raid, when an officer pursuing a suspect chased the boy into the house and held a gun on him while he lay on the floor.

The officer apparently mistook the youth for one of two suspects who ran from the house, said police spokesman Dan Turner.

Turner said police were chasing a man wearing red. The youth was wearing a red pullover shirt at the time, said his mother, Carol Williams. The boy, however, is only 4 feet 6 inches tall, she said, and the suspect is an adult.

"I was standing in the front of the house when my baby came and the policeman came in the door after him," Mrs. Williams said. "I thought he was going to stop at the door but he came right on in. It was like I was in a strange house and it was his own house."

Mrs. Williams said the officer, in plain clothes but wearing a police raid jacket, had the boy on his stomach on the floor and kept a pistol pointed at him. She said the officer would not put his gun away and did not believe her when she said her son was not involved in drug dealing.

"My little boy was begging and crying and saying, 'Please, mister, I don't know what you're talking about,' " Mrs. Williams said.

"I said to the officer, 'Sir, he don't even know what you're talking about.' "

When the officer refused to let her son go, Mrs. Williams said, she dialed 911 and reported the incident.

Patients with chest pains caused by coke overwhelm hospitals

HOUSTON (AP) — Hospitals throughout the city are seeing their intensive care unit beds fill up and their emergency rooms kept increasingly busy with young people suffering cocaine-related chest pains and heart attacks, hospital officials say.

Forty of 113 patients admitted to Ben Taub Hospital in March were diagnosed with suspected heart attacks believed induced by cocaine use, the Houston Chronicle reported in Saturday's editions. Most of the patients were under age 30 and at least 20 of them had to be monitored in the hospital's emergency room because there were no beds available in the filled intensive-care unit.

"There are sufficient identifiable patients with cocaine-related cardiac symptoms that it is pressing us to the limit of what we can do," said Ben Taub administrator Mike Bullard. "We don't have a lot of empty beds around here."

On Wednesday of last week, five of 11 emergency center patients were awaiting admission to the Ben Taub medical intensive care unit for cocaine-related chest pains. Upstairs the 17 beds in ICU were filled.

Book dealer says many early Texas documents faked

AUSTIN (AP) — A rare-book dealer says many historic state documents sold since the 1970s — including a copy of the Texas Declaration of Independence purchased by Gov. Bill Clements — are forgeries.

Thomas Taylor of Austin, who has been investigating a number of bogus artifacts, say the documents were donated to prominent museums, libraries and universities after being bought by private collectors for as much as $30,000.

Some of the forged copies include the famous "Victory or Death" letter written by Col. William Barrett Travis at the Alamo and other early Texas printed documents.

In addition, at least three cases in which papers purported to be from the era of the Republic of Texas have been fabricated, Taylor said.

The fabricated documents sometimes use authentic mid-19th century texts, but they are printed in typefaces that were created between 1896 and 1931, he said.

"The great majority of the important Republic of Texas documents sold in the last 15 years are forgeries," Taylor said. "No one will dispute the evidence that these documents are forgeries. My chief reason for wanting this to become public is that I think there are a lot more of them, and the only way people are going to find out about them is if this becomes public."

The fakes have surfaced since about 1972, Taylor said.

Rebellion, 'shock value' may draw teen-agers to Satanism

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

What is at the root of a teen-ager's fascination with satanic worship?

Experts say that the charm could be two-fold — shock value and rejection of established authority.

Attraction to Satanism may start as a general rebellion against all authority figures, says James Hare, director of social services at Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital.

In the 1950s and 60s, listening to rock and roll was the "rub" between teens and shocked parents. In the 70s, it was drugs.

But in the 1980s, drugs seem to be pervasive, so successful rebellion must take on an additional note of menace, claimed Larry Nelson, a minister at Kentucky's anti-satanic Warnke Ministries.

Michael Warnke, the ministry's founder, was a satanic priest in San Bernadino, Calif., but returned to a Christian orientation in the early 1970s. Now, he offers a Christ-related message to congregations across the country as the "Christian Gallagher."

Nelson, referring to youthful rebellion, maintains "the most popular thing now is Satanism.

"It's a reaction to over-fundamentalism. Often the kids have gone to church and been forced into something that had no meaning for them, and they don't buy it," he continued.

"Sometimes it's their fault, but sometimes it's the church's — too much guilt, too many rules and not enough meat," the minister claimed.

A rebellious attitude can also evolve from a teen's experimentation with drugs or from problems at home, Hare said.

If a youth slips deeply into drug abuse and alcohol use, emotional problems arise where there is a lack of family, spiritual worship and peer groups.

Drugs become the religion, drug-addicted friends become their peer group and Satan may become the source of spiritual acceptance, Hare said.

Teens involved in Satanic groups are taught that "you don't have to obey anyone, and if you are bad enough, no one can do anything to you," Hare explained.

An unhappy youth yearns to be accepted for whom he is now, Hare claimed.

If the teen's status is not accepted and/or forgiven by the authoritarian figures in his life — parents, teachers or clergy — he will seek that approval from another medium, perhaps a group involved in the occult.

"There they will find a group where they can do the worst possible vile thing and they're applauded," Hare said.

"It starts with the acceptance and then the seductive appeal continues ...how you can get your needs met in doing all this.

"It doesn't matter how weird it is. What counts is right now, power and our pleasure," Hare said.

Slipping further into the drug culture, a teen may unknowingly find himself in danger of losing his inhibitions and his ability to discriminate, Hare explained.

At the end of this spectrum, a youth could find himself believing he owes a gift to this "god" who has accepted him for who he is.

Surveying the mindset that is attracted to Satanism, Hare asserted that "the sweetest thing is to give yourself to Satan," or commit suicide.

If one gives over a part of one's life to Satan, then Satan will "start guiding you," Hare said.

"Again, I don't think Satan has any more power over us than God does, but he (Satan) will come in and take advantage of us if we let him," he added.

Authorities interviewed in Midland do not connect the incidences of suicide to possible satanic worship.

A link may not exist at all. However, Nelson maintained that either one — incidences of suicide and satanism — could prove a fertile breeding ground for the other.

Susceptible teens sometimes opt for a "make it up as you go" form of Satanism, Nelson said.

He claims the media — records, movies and videos — helps educate teens about the details of Satanism, especially certain heavy metal rock groups.

Teens are open to ideas perpetrated by blatant satanic symbolism and messages in some heavy metal songs, Nelson said.

"We identify with our rock heroes. The kids often are picking up enough to have bits and pieces, but not a whole religion," the minister explained.

The youth may say to himself, "'Even if I don't understand, I think I'll be a Satanist.'" Nelson warned.

It is the rejection of authority and the gratification of wants on this "fun and games" level that holds the attraction, he said.

As the teen's interest deepens, he becomes more committed, Nelson said.

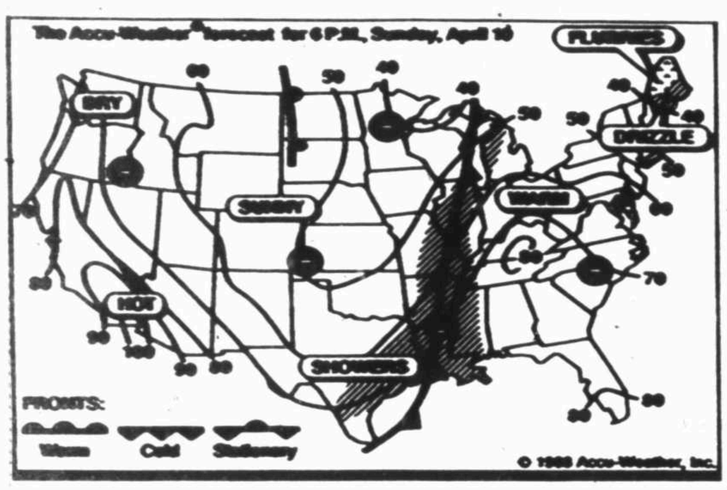

"They are believing that certain kinds of magic and power require rituals that are criminal," he continued.

The acceptance they feel from Satan, the teens may feel, needs to be repaid.

If the young person believes Satan exists, he may eventually feel the need to give something back to Satan to maintain his feelings of power, the minister said.

"After all, no one worships Satan for his good looks."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Chilly conditions continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperatures will remain chilly until until Monday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Today temperatures will drop as the chance for showers increases to 20 percent. The low tonight is expected to be in the 50s. Skies should be cloudy.

Tonight will be partly cloudy and colder with a low in the lower 30s.

Monday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-60s.

The record temperature for Saturday was set in 1939 when it reached 93, while the low record temperature for today was set in 1952 when it dipped to 30.

STATE

A cold front continued to track southward across the state Saturday as scattered light rainshowers dotted the low rolling plains and the Edwards Plateau west of the front.

Meanwhile, moist gulf air and a weak upper-level disturbance continued to produce light rain and drizzle over parts of South Texas and the Coastal Plains.

Skies remained clear over far West Texas, but mostly cloudy skies were dominant over the rest of the state.

Winds had shifted around to the north over the area behind the cold front Saturday with speeds in the 15 to 25 mph range. However, north winds were gusting in excess of 30 mph over parts of the Panhandle and the South Plains.

Temperatures were in the 40s and 50s Saturday over the High Plains and the western Red River Valley, while southeast Texas and the lower Rio Grande Valley had readings in the 80s. Elsewhere, temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

A cold front sliding across the central part of the nation Saturday spread snow across Wyoming and rain across the Plains into Texas.

Heavy snow was reported during the morning at South Pass, south of Lander, Wyo., with more than 8 inches falling in about five hours. An inch of snow was on the ground at Rawlins, while most of central and southern Wyoming had occasional light snow but with no significant accumulation.

Light snow also was reported in the foothills of Colorado including the Denver area, and in parts of Minnesota, with one inch at Alexandria.

Light rain fell across western Iowa, southeastern Nebraska, much of eastern Kansas and northern Oklahoma. Rain was mixed with snow in northeastern Kansas at Fort Riley.

Showers were scattered across southern and western Texas, and afternoon temperatures stayed around 60 degrees as far south as south-central Texas.

SUICIDES

What is known is that 16 people under the age of 20 in Midland have attempted to kill themselves over the past 15 months, Midland Police records show.

While 10 people under the age of 20 attempted to kill themselves in 1987, none were successful.

But of the six who have made the attempt so far in 1988, two succeeded via gunshot wounds — Brian and Parrish Bryant, a 15-year-old Lee Freshman High School student.

Brian's obituary said he was a member of the Catholic church and Young Life, a religious extracurricular teen group.

Parrish's death notice included track, football, basketball and the Baptist church among his activities.

The most common catalyst in a teen's journey toward suicide is the loss of or severe damage to an interpersonal relationship — whether it be through a boyfriend-girlfriend break-up or a death of a loved one, Ms. Ross said last week.

Brian, like thousands of young people his age, had a "girlfriend problem" at the time of his death. But Mrs. Wells felt that may not have been the cause of his depression.

Her son was a good student and had a solid relationship with his parents, Mrs. Wells said.

"The principal from his school came over (after the suicide) and said he was sorry but that he didn't know Brian.

"We said, 'No...that's good. We're glad you didn't know him,'" Mrs. Wells remembered.

"I was blessed with this child," she added.

Local fears in the wake of the two suicides have grown daily, as rumors of a supposed suicide pact spread among Midland's youth, parental, school and mental health communities.

Few details of the "pact" are known.

Rumor had it the list was turned over to an employee of Ellis Funeral Home in Midland, but Newnie Ellis and Bill Valley, the facility's two managers, said that rumor was false.

A young man called the funeral home and asked when it would be convenient for Ellis to host his funeral, then hung up, Valley said last week.

A Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital counselor was shown the pact during a therapy session, but she cannot breach confidentiality ethics and confirm its existence, said James Hare, a hospital director.

Hare did not have details of the pact. Still, his second-hand identification is as close as anyone has come to confirming its existence.

Midland lawmen, school district representatives and concerned parents, however, appear to have some knowledge of details of this pact they've never seen.

Anywhere from 17 to 30 students' names are supposedly listed.

A 1988 report from the National Institute of Mental Health says that the U.S. suicide rate for persons between the ages of 15 and 24 has tripled since 1960.

In 1983, more than 8,500 in every 100,000 persons in that age group committed suicide, the report said.

Suicide is the third leading cause of death for adolescents and young adults, following accidents and homicides, the report continued.

Local school district officials and community groups are bracing for the worst possible scenario.

Rumors of Satanism and suicide pacts are quick to filter through a community after a teen suicide, Ms. Ross said, but often they remain just that — rumors.

A common suicide pact has often been known to occur between two elderly people, one or both of whom may be dying, Ms. Ross said.

With teens, however, a "misery loves company" mentality may evolve, Hare said.

Teens will get together with those who share their depressed emotions and decide to "do something about it," Ms. Ross said.

Information relating to those two "scapegoat" reasons, Ms. Ross said, either is not substantive or a community withholds its knowledge on the subject fearing a "copy cat" syndrome.

(Several calls were received by the Reporter-Telegram, for example, with callers saying they had heard a story on this subject was contemplated and urging that it not be published.)

At a press conference on the subject last Wednesday, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter warned "we don't want this to become another Plano."

That affluent community northwest of Dallas was rocked in 1983 when six Plano teens killed themselves within a six-month period. Three of the six committed suicide within a one-week period alone.

Midland Independent School District officials have implemented new strategies and strengthened on-going suicide prevention measures, says Maridell Fryar, director of secondary education.

Churches called in Dave Roever, an evangelist from Fort Worth, to lecture high school teens Thursday on the merits of life over death.

After the two suicides, at least eight MISD counselors and the district's two drug abuse counselors talked with LHS students one-on-one for two full days, Mrs. Fryar said.

The same sessions were completed at LFHS, as well, she said.

Two "insight" classes were held at the district's central office annex to provide more intensive counseling to students who expressed the need, Mrs. Fryar said. Those students are continuing to be helped.

Administrators and faculty members will engage in classes to learn ways of identifying students who are at a high risk for suicide, drug abuse, teen pregnancy or dropping out.

Within the schools, core committees made up of administrators and teachers work on a daily basis to identify the children at high risk of those circumstances, she added.

In addition, programs stressing positive peer leadership are included in the district's preventative measures, Mrs. Fryar said.

Though the district is assuming 100 percent responsibility for suicide prevention education, Mrs. Fryar stressed that parents must play a role, also.

Parents should not be afraid of the current situation, the director explained.

"They should turn fears into positive actions with children. They may have to pass up bridge club or a vacation to Cancun.

"In truth, the things that students commit suicide about are rarely school-centered," Mrs. Fryar said.

Attempting to nail down the potential a teen has for suicide can be dangerous, said Ken Wolf, mental health program director at Midland's Mental Health and Mental Retardation office.

A teen may act impulsively on depressing situations — and take his life — without having shown any outward signs of sadness, Wolf said.

The MHMR director agreed with Ms. Ross' logic that pinpointing the reasoning behind a teen's suicide is really not possible.

Maybe the teen hasn't arrived at a thought-out conclusion that "life is so bad...," Wolf said.

Instead, the teen may act before he or she thinks.

A teen's penchant for impulsiveness or drugs and alcohol may trigger a suicide rather than his drawn-out decision that life is just terrible, Wolf said.

In general, teens may feel invulnerable to death. The demise of a family pet may be as near as they have ever come to death.

Suicides within peer groups — even on a distant level — can have either a contagious or deterrent effect on teens, Wolf said.

Hearing that a fellow student took his life may hinder similar actions because the teen is — for the first time — seeing the finality of death at such a young age, Wolf said.

However, the flip-side is that he may be charmed into the act by seeing the amounts of attention the dead student receives after a suicide.

A student who commits suicide gets "all the recognition," said one LHS sophomore who wished to remain anonymous.

"They think they can be really hot around high school," the 16-year-old explained.

A parent must realize a child's unhappiness is usually not reflective of a parent's capabilities, Ms. Ross said.

"If a child appears to be depressed, we think we have failed and try to get them to snap out of it," Ms. Ross explained.

If a child hurts himself physically, a parent will take him to the doctor. When a child is hurt emotionally, the same course should be taken, Ms. Ross said.

Judging the difference between an average teen problem and something more deep-rooted can be compared to diagnosing a baby's illness, said Ms. Ross.

"You know your child. You look at the time (the duration of the depression) and you look at the depth of his problem," she advised.

"Open communication, and share with your kids the times you've failed. Talk about when you've felt defeated," Ms. Ross advised.

Though teens often will share problems with a friend — citing a generation gap in their families — Ms. Ross advised parents to teach their children that feeling depressed is a natural human emotion.

Parents should discuss depression, and when the child acknowledges the feeling, help him or her do something about it, Ms. Ross said.

SATANISM

A Reporter-Telegram Texas Open Records request filed Tuesday for information the agencies have concerning criminal activities involving the practice of Satanism remains unresolved.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said the sheriff has "no written reports" on the subject, but investigated the matter.

Counsel for the newspaper said the police probably will wait their legally allotted 10 days before releasing the requested information or asking State Attorney General Jim Mattox to rule on the matter.

Several policemen did say the department was continuing to investigate the possibility of satanic worship in Midland.

Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joe Baressi admits he is aware of and investigated the rumors also, but adds he had no hard evidence.

At the other end of the spectrum is a Midland father whose son the father claims is involved in a satanic cult. In addition, an employee at Midland's First Baptist Church says she knows of another young teen's supposed involvement, and a Lee High School sophomore claims the group exists.

Finally, a startling message is spray-painted across walls at an abandoned Midland amusement park.

The father telephoned the Reporter-Telegram Thursday and said the story of teen satanic practices in Midland needs to be told.

His son is involved, he said.

Czech and Painter did nothing but grant the teens involved a "clean bill of health" in their Wednesday denials, the man claimed.

The father, who asked that all details of his family be kept anonymous, said he asked his son about satanic worship.

The conversation with his son ranged from "recognition, admission and depression to holy hell and total denial," the father said.

Teens dallying with Satanism are elated that lawmen think they don't exist, the father said.

Still, a Reporter-Telegram attempt to find one youth involved in the occult worship proved unfruitful.

One young man was located by the employee at First Baptist Church, but he declined to be interviewed, said church worker Pat Gatlin.

A 16-year-old sophomore at LHS, who also requested anonymity, said he knows the teens practicing Satanism frequent Wild River Canyon and a tunnel that runs underneath Midland Park Mall.

The group which practices the alleged worship is comprised of a "bunch of stoners" or kids who use drugs, the LHS student said. "But they don't go around and brag about it," the boy said.

His friends investigated the tunnel underneath the mall and found blood, dead carcasses and "satanic stuff," the boy said.

While a police detective said he found the boy's statement hard to believe, Reporter-Telegram requests for police reports on animal mutilations believed to be criminal in nature remain tied up pending the department's decision in regard to the newspaper's open records law request.

Wild River Canyon was a water amusement park before its former owner declared bankruptcy.

Midland County Fire Department officials have yet to determine the cause of a grass fire which torched a good part of the now-defunct park March 25, a police spokesman said.

The park sits off State Highway 191 east of Loop 250 charred and apparently abandoned.

Talk — and that's what one must officially call it — has it that the kids who practice a form of Satanism do so at the park.

Visitors to the park see frightening examples of graffiti spray-painted throughout the abandoned area.

Drawings of satanic symbols — five-pointed pentagrams, inverted crosses, images of the devil, the letter A encircled (meaning "anarchy" or denial of authority) and words alluding to the eternal death of Jesus Christ — were apparent throughout the canyon.

The rooms of an old building where other drawings exist are pitch black in daytime and accessible only through long hallways that appear unsound structurally because of the extensive fire damage.

The young worshippers also are rumored to visit a tunnel accessible via a drainage pipe from the draw behind the mall, sources say.

Midland Police have yet to release information regarding their investigation of the March 16 bombing of the tunnel beneath the mall parking lot.

The bomb was set off electronically via stereo speaker wires, initial police reports have said. Police at the time suspected teens as the culprits in the bombing.

A group of teens was seen coming out of the tunnel the day before the explosion that caused extensive damage, according to information police gathered from witnesses.

Graffiti attesting to possible evidence of two gangs in Midland — the Warlocks and the Kings — is painted throughout the El Paisano apartments on Loop 250 west of Garfield Street.

The apartments are fenced-off and closed to the public.

Police detective Dan Walkenshaw said last week he's "not at liberty" to discuss whether the two groups are gangs, but he said he believes there are gangs on the "southside" of Midland.

The detective, who serves as the liaison between the MISD and the police department said he investigated the apartment complex recently looking for runaways.

As for Wild River Canyon, Walkenshaw said he understood the area was a popular hang out for kids even before the park was built.

The graffiti, he speculated, shows signs of little more than a curiosity with the subject of Satanism. The department has little knowledge of it being more than that, he said.

And although it is not against the law to worship Satan in Texas or any other state, Walkenshaw explained, anyone caught spray-painting the satanic-looking artwork could be arrested for criminal mischief.

SENATE

Both primary losers — former state Rep. Milton Fox now of Austin and Georgetown businessman Ned Snead — have endorsed Boulter, who gave up his Panhandle congressional seat to run. Boulter also has picked up the backing of GOP leaders and several pro-life organizations, including the Texas Right to Life Committee and the Texas Coalition for Life.

Boulter said his campaign has raised $168,000 from about 1,700 contributors, mostly individual Texans. He said Gilbreath has received about $21,000 from 11 contributors. "All of the rest comes from his own personal resources," he said.

"I don't think it's healthy to try and buy a nomination with your own money," Boulter said. "If you can't go out among the people and raise money, as we have from 1,700 individuals in this state, something is wrong with your candidacy."

While "billboards may win an election in a heavy turnout" where voters are preoccupied with other races, Boulter said, things will be different in Tuesday's runoff. On that day, he said, a "much more informed electorate" will decide the handful of contests based on the candidates' qualifications.

"That is what we are pinning our hopes on, really," he said.

Gilbreath said Boulter's lack of "a viable campaign" has enabled his campaign to actually conserve money for the general election.

The $800,000 he is spending, Gilbreath said, is "rather low" compared to amounts spent on some other statewide races. "We feel very fortunate that we have only had to spend that amount," he said.

Gilbreath said Boulter has attacked his finances in an effort to overshadow the congressman's own inability to raise campaign dollars.

ROUGH CROWD

Cook-off judges, from left, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, District Judge Vann Culp and Justice of the Peace Bob Pine sampled many of the nearly 50 brisket, fajita and bean entries.

The World's Ugliest Roughneck, as determined by a panel of media judges, was Tom Ellison, senior vice president of First City National Bank, who began his oil-field career with Marathon Oil.

Springtime West Texas winds blew in many of the activities of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's second annual "Blowout" Saturday.

Except for cooking, the final event of Energy Appreciation Week took place inside the Midland County Exhibit Building with belly dancers wiggling, ugly roughnecks parading and law enforcement officers judging.

"We were disappointed in the weather, but still achieved our primary objective — bringing oil-field people together and having a good time," said Harry Spannaus, PBPA executive vice president.

"Today's entries ranged from fair to excellent," Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said of the efforts of 24 local cooking teams.

Painter, a veteran of several cook-offs, said the most important quality in judging is the "ability to make quick decisions."

The judging panel — Painter, Justice of the Peace Bob Pine, State District Court Judge Vann Culp and sheriffs from several surrounding counties — awarded top prizes to teams from: Landon Marine, brisket; Midland Reporter-Telegram, fajitas; and, Joe McShane of Monahans, beans.

Drawing their inspiration from the popular California Raisins of television advertising fame, the team from Petroleum Information danced away with the showmanship trophy. The PI team also was selected as the fifth best brisket cookers of the day.

Other multiple award winners included teams from Exxon, which placed fifth in both showmanship and bean cooking and Pena's BBQ Pit Stop of Kermit, which took second place for showmanship and fourth for its fajitas.

The dubious distinction of World's Ugliest Roughneck was bestowed on Tom Ellison of Midland.

ELECTION

Moving the Sheriff's Department to the new jail is a promise both Welch and Mrs. Valencia think should be kept, they said.

In the race for State Board of Education, District 14, William Hudson will square off against Charles E. McDonald. District 14 encompasses all of Midland County and the Greenwood Independent School District.

Appearing on the Republican Party runoff ballot are U.S. Rep. Beau Boulter and political newcomer Wes Gilbreath, who meet for the chance this fall to unseat incumbent U.S. Senator Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat.

Gilbreath, a Houston businessman, garnered 36.6 percent of the March primary vote, while Boulter, 46, finished with 30.5 percent.

Bentsen, a 66-year-old moderate Democrat, coasted to an easy victory over Joe Sullivan in the Democratic primary, and has vowed to work hard to win his re-election in November.

The independently wealthy Gilbreath, 59, is known to have spent an estimated $500,000 of his own money in the primary campaign, much of which went to extensive billboard and television advertising.

Prior to the race, Gilbreath was politically unknown, but contributed more than $1 million and worked behind the scenes on behalf of past Republican causes.

Boulter gave up his Panhandle congressional seat and entered the race with the backing of national GOP leaders, including U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, whose district includes San Antonio, Midland and San Angelo.

Former State Rep. Ed Emmett of Round Rock is headed for a runoff with P.S. "Sam" Ervin of Dallas in the GOP race for Texas Railroad Commissioner. Emmett pulled 32.7 percent of the primary vote, compared to Ervin's 32.1 percent.

Ervin, who goes by the same name as the late North Carolina senator, has twice made it into a runoff for the Texas Railroad Commission.

After making a legal name change in 1986, Ervin beat out another candidate to square off against John Sharp, but lost out to Sharp in a runoff election.

Emmett vowed to expose Ervin's name game in the runoff, stressing that famous-name candidates historically fizzle in such races because people can focus on those individuals.

In the race for Supreme Court Justice, Place 2, Dallas Appeals Court Judge Nathan Hecht — with 41 percent of the primary election vote — will face Missouri City, lawyer Ronad Block who garnered 31 percent.

COURT

Block points to his 14 years' experience as a Houston-area lawyer specializing in oil and gas law and to his prior work in the real estate business. "I know what the courtroom is all about," he says.

"I know what business is all about. I know what business needs."

Hecht maintains that his five years on the district court in Dallas and 12 months on the appeals court bench put him on top. Asked about Block's claims of business experience, Hecht said, "I've never heard that expressed as a qualification for being a judge."

Both men say they believe the Legislature should impose limits on campaign contributions and expenditures in judicial races to counter recent charges that wealthy groups of lawyers are bankrolling judicial candidates with large contributions. "It ought to be in the Constitution," Hecht says.

As of the end of March, Hecht had raised more than $150,000 despite a self-imposed $5,000-cap on individual contributions. Block had picked up about $7,300 though Feb. 27 and says his March report will show an additional $3,000 to $4,000.

"Fund are still hard for us to raise," Block says.

Either man could find the going tough in the fall against Kilgarlin, who reported collecting nearly $680,000 between July and February. Hecht says that reinforces the need for a limitation.

"The Legislature ought to do it because Bill Kilgarlin won't do it unless they make him," he says.

State officials anticipate voter turnout at 200,000 for the runoff, compared to the more than 1 million who turned out to cast ballots for the GOP presidential candidates in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary.

Gore campaign hopes to cast doubt on Dukakis

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore Jr.'s campaign has all but given up on winning the New York primary on April 19 but wants a strong enough showing to rekindle doubts about Michael Dukakis, thus allowing for a late charge at the Democratic presidential nomination.

"We've got to prove we can get a lot of Northern votes," said one aide, speaking anonymously. "And if we do that I think the race gets shaken up once again."

But Gore has been trying to find a Northern state where he could run strongly since he vaulted near the front of the pack with several border state victories on Super Tuesday a month ago.

Since then, his campaign has encountered a string of defeats in Illinois, Michigan, Connecticut, Wisconsin and elsewhere while piling up a debt of $1.5 million. Even though he spent as much or more on television advertising in some states as Dukakis, his best showing of the past four weeks was 17 percent of the vote in Wisconsin a week ago.

He has gained only 49 delegates since Super Tuesday in The Associated Press delegate count and now trails rivals Dukakis and Jesse Jackson by more than 300 delegates.

Thus, one aide conceded, and if he fails in New York, it will be "very, very difficult to go on in a meaningful way."

Nevertheless, Gore campaign manager Fred Martin insisted Saturday that strategy in New York is to win, not just do well.

"It's certainly true that we're underdogs," Martin said. "It's certainly true that we're behind in the polls, but we are trying to win this state."

"Anyone who says differently doesn't know what he's talking about," Martin said by telephone from New York.

At least one Democrat says failure in New York could do more than spell the end of Gore's 1988 Democratic candidacy, particularly given the senator's decision to criticize black rival Jackson.

"He'd better be careful that he's not burning bridges. New York may pose a much more serious long-term risk to Gore than he may imagine," said Robert G. Beckel, who is not advising any of this year's Democratic presidential contenders after managing Walter F. Mondale's bid in 1984.

Beckel said that by attacking Jackson, Gore risks the animosity of black voters not only in a national campaign, but in his home state of Tennessee. "It's a very risky strategy, and I frankly see a lot more downside than I see upside for him."

An occasional adviser said that the impact on a future campaign is on Gore's mind as he makes the rounds in 1988.

"Al believes he's old enough to be president but too young to be vice president. He hopes to leave a good impression and maybe he'll try again some day," said this source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

At the Dukakis campaign, aides believe that Gore cannot win the nomination, but they fear that he could seriously damage their own man's chances if he split the white vote and enabled Jackson to eke out a victory.

Thus, they seek to belittle Gore whenever they can, with Dukakis pointing out that the senator has failed to carry a single congressional district since Super Tuesday.

"We see it as a two-man race" with Jackson, says Susan Estrich, Dukakis' campaign manager. "He's had one good day in this campaign as far as I can tell," she said referring to Gore's six-state victories on Super Tuesday.

Cuomo rules out draft, won't endorse anyone

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo said Saturday, "I've ruled out a draft" for the Democratic presidential nomination, but he declined to endorse a candidate until after the primaries end June 7.

At a news conference Saturday and in two later conversations with The Associated Press, Cuomo said he did not want the Democratic party to draft him or anybody else as its presidential nominee.

But in the second conversation with the AP, he refused to say point-blank that he would turn down the nomination if he were drafted at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta July 18-21.

Cuomo was attempting to douse a draft movement begun during the week by a former Democratic congressman, but the confusion arose when he declined to close the door on circumstances that might arise at the convention.

"I've ruled out a draft," Cuomo said.

Cuomo's statements about a draft and endorsements came as he released a letter to former New York Rep. Richard Ottinger, a leader of a draft-Cuomo move in New York, asking him "not to go forward with your intention to encourage a draft."

In his letter, Cuomo also said he would not endorse any of the Democratic candidates before the end of the primaries June 7. The governor explained that he wanted to be uncommitted at that point so he could help the front-runner collect enough uncommitted votes to put him over the top for the nomination.

Asked to clarify his statements on a draft, Cuomo told the AP, "We can go around forever...I could have ended it a long time ago by saying 'General Sherman said and so I will say,' but I'm not going to do that because that means that you accept the principle that you have to use whatever language the press says you must use to meet their requirements and they'll keep inventing new language."

It was Civil War Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman who rejected an appeal to draft him as the Republican nominee in 1884 with the political disclaimer: "I will not accept if nominated and will not serve if elected."

"I'm not going to use your language," said Cuomo. "I said, 'How could I rule it out as counterproductive and unwise and still accept it?' I have ruled it out."

Cuomo announced more than a year ago that he would not seek his party's presidential nomination and has taken steps to keep his name off state primary ballots.

And — despite his repeated insistence that he did not want to be a candidate — questions have persisted over whether he would accept the nomination if it were offered to him anyway.

Cuomo started out Saturday with a news conference in which he indicated that he would reject a draft but when pressed to clarify his position, he complained to reporters about "your insistence for magic language."

After the news conference, he telephoned the AP to say he was making his statement because "obviously this is in the midst of the New York primary (campaign) and I don't want any confusing signals to be sent to anyone."

After a story was transmitted saying that Cuomo ruled out accepting a draft, his press secretary, Gary Fryer, called to draw the line at the word "accept."

PBPA

While some might quibble with selecting a banker for the title, others would say there have been few rougher places than behind the banker's desk since oil prices collapsed in 1986.

Ellison's oil patch history stretches from his more than 30 years with the energy lending department at First City National Bank (and its predecessor Midland National Bank) to two years with Marathon Oil (then Ohio Oil Co.) as a landman.

Ellison, who told emcee Janet Storie and the panel of judges that he only entered the contest "for the fun of it," donated his $100 prize to the PBPA in support of the day-long celebration.

In living up to his word, Ellison was honoring a time-tested oil patch tradition of immediately reinvesting all his gains.

Another enthusiastic supporter of the PBPA event was "engineer" Bobby Sparkman. His Odessa company — Liberty Reversing Units, Fishing & Rental Tools — built a barbecue cooker in the shape of a railroad engine for the cook-off, complete with working whistle.

Ferraro's son found guilty of selling coke to undercover agent

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — A jury Saturday found John Zaccaro Jr. guilty of selling cocaine to an undercover officer two years ago, rejecting defense arguments that he was entrapped by a pretty state trooper.

The jury deliberated for slightly more than two hours before finding the son of 1984 vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro guilty of selling one-quarter gram of the drug in February 1986, while he was a student at Middlebury College.

Zaccaro, 24, sat impassively as the verdict was read, his parents and other family members behind him. He faces up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. A sentencing date was not immediately set.

Outside the courthouse, Ferraro read a statement acknowledging that her son had done wrong in the case.

But she also criticized Addison County State's Attorney John Quinn for "prolonging the agony for two years" regarding her son's fate. Ferraro promised to appeal the guilty verdict.

She said she and her husband, John Zaccaro Sr., had tried to set up a plea agreement shortly after their son was arrested, but Quinn would not allow a plea bargain that would not include a felony conviction.

"We, as his parents would not allow him to plead guilty" to a felony, she said.

Ferraro said there were several drug cases recently in Vermont in which plea bargains were easily arranged and light sentences were given to defendants convicted of selling larger quantities of drugs.

In her statement, Ferraro blamed the case on four people: her son; Quinn; former Middlebury police detective Sgt. David Wemette, who initiated the investigation after rumors circulated that Zaccaro had earned the campus nickname of "the Pharmacist"; and herself because of the pressure her 1984 candidacy put on her family.

Ferraro refused to answer reporters' questions as she and her family walked to their car and drove off.

Quinn said the verdict "sends a message that drug pushers will not be tolerated in Vermont. In my mind, it's been difficult dealing with the publicity in the case. I don't care who his parents are."

The state's attorney has an unlisted home telephone number and could not be reached for further comment on the question of plea bargaining.

The verdict came at the end of a six-day trial, more than half of which was taken up by jury selection.

Zaccaro's defense attorney, Charles Tetzlaff, presented no witnesses, but told jurors in closing arguments that they should find his client innocent by reason of entrapment.

In his instructions to the Vermont District Court jurors, Judge Francis McCaffrey said they could find Zaccaro innocent by means of entrapment if they believed he was induced to commit a crime he normally would not commit. Entrapment could not be used as a defense if the jury had considered the lesser charge of possession, the judge said.

Tetzlaff said police acted improperly by sending an attractive female undercover agent to Zaccaro's apartment to buy cocaine. He asked the jury to send a message to police that society should not condone such activities.

Quinn told jurors that the issue was whether Zaccaro sold cocaine to state trooper Laura Manning.

"Yes, she was deceptive. She's not going to the defendant's house dressed in a uniform. That would be ludicrous," Quinn said. "I can't deny Laura Manning is attractive. I can't deny she's female. But I can deny she was bait."

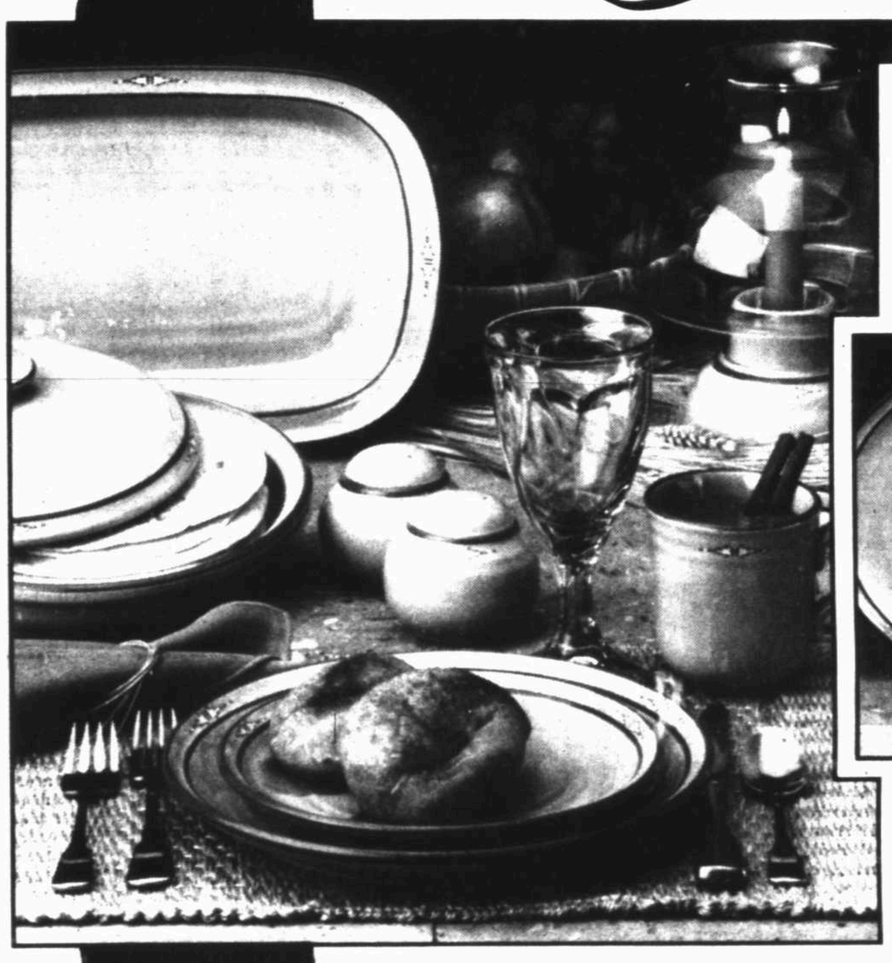

He described the deal as just another sale for Zaccaro.

"When he takes a packet off the tray, he opens it up, being the good merchant that he is...looks at it, wraps it up" and gives it to Manning, Quinn said.

Earlier Saturday, the final prosecution witness, state police chemist Frank Durkee, testified that a packet of powder Zaccaro sold to Manning tested as cocaine.

Tetzlaff, who rested his case soon after Durkee's testimony, had said in his opening statement: "The defense will not dispute the allegation that he sold a regulated drug. This is a case of improper and overzealous police conduct."

Police renew anti-gang blitz in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police renewed an unprecedented 1,000-officer blitz on street gangs Saturday, redeploying a special task force that made nearly 600 arrests in an anti-gang dragnet the night before.

"All day long, we have been lifting the hammer," said police spokesman Bill Frio. "The chief called at 3 p.m. and said to drop it."

The force made 592 arrests during the citywide sweep Friday night and early Saturday for a variety of felonies and misdemeanors, and also impounded at least 10 guns and 96 vehicles. Police said 224 of those arrested were believed to be gang members.

Police had earlier reported 634 arrests, but later corrected the figure, which was caused by confusion during booking, Frio said. Officials were unsure how many of those arrested were held and how many released on bail, he said.

The huge show of force began Friday evening with Mayor Tom Bradley's pledge to "take back the streets," and continued through the night, with even Police Chief Daryl Gates and an assistant chief making arrests.

Gangs were blamed for 205 killings in the city of Los Angeles in 1987. Countywide, the death toll from gang violence last year was 387, many of the victims bystanders caught in the gangs' trademark "drive-by" shootings.

Only one violent gang-related incident was reported in the city during the sweep Friday night, police said.

Shots were fired at an officer serving a search warrant at a house. A special weapons and tactics team was summoned but there was no further violence, Frio said. Six people were arrested for investigation of narcotics possession. Cocaine, cash and several guns were seized.

In a gang-related incident outside the city, Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies in nearby Lynwood arrested a young man after a two-hour standoff that began when he was spotted with a gun, which he allegedly pointed at a deputy.

The sweep was the city Police Department's biggest attack ever on drug dealing and street violence. Over the past month, smaller task forces have arrested a total of 1,400 suspected gang members, Frio said.

The police chief made a collar of his own when he stopped a man in gang dress, frisked him and discovered a bottle of prescription drugs in somebody else's name. The man was held for investigation of possession of a controlled substance, said Lt. Mark Leap.

Assistant Police Chief Robert Vernon, who was on patrol on the southside, also made an arrest. His collar was wanted for a parole violation, Frio said.

About half the special force went to augment regular patrols in the south-central area. The rest of the officers spread out in gang areas throughout the city.

Guardian Angels picket Penn's home over film

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — The Guardian Angels picketed actor Sean Penn's mansion Saturday to denounce his latest movie as a "recruitment film" for street gangs, but Penn and his wife, pop star Madonna, were reportedly out of town.

The anti-crime group, wearing their trademark red berets and carrying signs and mock coffins, marched outside the gates of Penn's mansion in this seaside celebrity enclave, demanding an end to local screenings of the film "Colors."

The movie "pumps (gang members) up; it's better than what a professional coach does," said Paul Barrera, the Angels' regional coodinator. "If I was a 14-, 15-year-old kid, I would say, 'Wow, I want to go out and join.'"

Barrera claimed that up to 50 people took part in the demonstration, but Malibu sheriff's Sgt. Bill Hutton put the number at closer to a dozen.

The picketing, which was peaceful, lasted about three hours, Hutton said.

The group planned to picket the home of director Dennis Hopper on Sunday.

The Guardian Angels are the latest group to criticize the movie, which stars Penn and Robert Duvall as tough cops battling gangs on the streets of Los Angeles.

Although Los Angeles police acted as technical advisers on the film, several law-enforcement officials who attended a pre-release screening last month denounced the final product.

They, like the Angels, said it glorifies gangs, which were blamed for nearly 400 killings last year in Los Angeles County, and were the target of massive police sweeps this weekend.

Woman dies trying to save boy despite fear of water

HILLSBORO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A housekeeper who was afraid of water and couldn't swim died after plunging into the ocean to try to save a toddler whose grandparents had employed her for more than 20 years, officials and family members said.

Kamilia M. Hassan, 46, helped raise the mother of 23-month-old Daniel Kemper Smith Jr. She and the boy died after he bolted into the ocean from a back yard that abuts the beach and she went in after him.

A passer-by spotted them in the ocean Thursday evening, and visiting medical students tried to resuscitate them. But the child died Thursday night at North Broward Medical Center, and Ms. Hassan died there Friday morning.

"She couldn't swim, she knew that," said Jack Davis, the child's great-uncle. "She was really sacrificing herself."

Ms. Hassan, a Syrian native, had no relatives in the United States, Davis said.

The boy's mother, JoAnn Smith of Boca Raton, whom Ms. Hassan had helped raise, was visiting her parents' beachfront home Thursday when the incident occurred.

GOP candidate dies in crash

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — The front-runner for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, Secretary of State Jim Waltermire, died in a plane crash as he was returning from a campaign stop, authorities said Saturday.

Waltermire, who was in a three-way race for the GOP nomination, was flying back from Glasgow, in northeastern Montana, when the twin-engine Cessna 310 went down Friday night in a field east of East Helena, said his campaign manager, Chuck Brooke. The pilot also was killed.

Waltermire, of Helena, and his two GOP rivals had addressed a Lincoln Day Dinner in Glasgow.

Lewis and Clark County Coroner Mickey Nelson identified Waltermire's body and that of the pilot, James A. Morris, 64, of Dillon.

Nixon tells biggest mistake

NEW YORK (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon said in an interview broadcast Saturday that his biggest mistake in office was in not bombing and mining North Vietnam sooner.

"I would say the major mistake I made as president was one, this will suprise you, was not doing early in 1969 what I did on May 3 of 1972 and on Dec. 15 of 1972, and that was to bomb and mine North Vietnam," Nixon said in an interview taped for today's "Meet the Press" on NBC.

"I wanted to do it, I talked to Henry Kissinger about it, but we were stuck with the bombing halt that we had inherited from the Johnson administration, with Paris peace talks," he said. "I knew that, just like the cease fire talks down here in Nicaragua, I didn't trust them at all. And they proved to be, of course, phony.

"But if we had done that then, I think we would have ended the war in Vietnam in 1969 rather than in 1973," Nixon said in a segment of the interview shown on NBC News on Saturday. "That was my biggest mistake as president."

Mondale's daughter weds

HUDSON, Wis. (AP) — Eleanor Mondale, the daughter of former vice president Walter Mondale, married Chicago Bears offensive tackle Keith Van Horne at a small private ceremony Saturday.

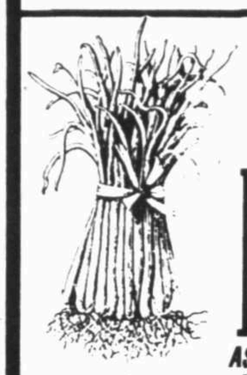

"It was a traditional ceremony. After the ceremony, there was the traditional showering of the bridal couple with popcorn. Well, scratch the word traditional," said Judy Whittlesey, a family friend.

"Dear Walgreens:

This is a note of praise. Your pharmacist on duty the morning of Sunday, Jan. 31st was most helpful. I had come in to get a prescription filled for my daughter. When I got there I discovered the doctor had prescribed a medicine she was allergic to. Your pharmacist was very kind and helpful, even letting me use his phone to call the doctor. I doubt if many pharmacists would have been so nice.

I'll admit I was a "bargain shopper" and usually went to a discount drug store. However, I knew Walgreens would be the only drug store open at 9 am on a Sunday morning.

I learned that some things are more important than price—like service—and I now plan on doing all of my prescription buying at Walgreens. Thank you Walgreens!"

Police arrest protesters, end sit-in at Penn State

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Police ended a 15-hour sit-in at Penn State University Saturday by arresting students who said the use of force typified the school's insensitivity toward blacks.

"We were dragged out and we got pulled out by the state troopers...People were manhandled by the state troopers," said Darryl King, a senior from Philadelphia and a student leader of the almost entirely black group occupying the school's telecommunications building.

"I think it's a terrible message to send to students when the president of the university would rather send state troopers to meet with them than come himself," said Seth Williams, president of Penn State's student government and one of those arrested.

More than 150 students began the protest Friday afternoon after student leaders and school administrators failed to agree on ground rules for a discussion of minority issues with university President Bryce Jordan and top administration officials.

Black students said they wanted to outline grievances on minority issues at an open meeting with Jordan.

After the sit-in began, university officials read students a preliminary injunction ordering them to leave the telecommunications building at 8 p.m. and again at 10 p.m., but negotiations continued until 2 a.m.

At least 75 university, local and state police began arresting students at 5:25 a.m., said David Stormer, director of university safety. Ninety-one protesters were arrested on charges of trespassing in the building or being disorderly outside, Stormer said.

"This is symbolic of the way they treat us here at Penn State," said King, a former president of the Black Caucus, a student organization.

Robert Blair, a spokesman for the Black Caucus, said minority students should have a voice in programs at the university that affect them and criticized Penn State for failing to meet a court-mandated goal for black enrollment.

Last fall, Penn State failed to reach the 5 percent black enrollment it agreed to meet under court order. Penn State has a 3.6 percent black enrollment, or 2,424 black students out of about 67,000.

Jordan agreed to a meeting Tuesday after a group of nine black students and a local black pastor staged an 11-hour sit-in outside his office. The university president sent two senior administrators Friday to speak privately with the students.

But student leaders said they wanted an open meeting with Jordan and 12 administrators and faculty.

Carol Cartwright, chairman of the university's Equal Opportunity Planning Committee, said the administration wanted to meet the student leaders somewhere else to set up a public meeting for their grievances.

Stormer said he waited until dawn to make the arrests, in part to ensure a smaller crowd outside the two-story, brick building. As many as 200 students had gathered to show their support, but their numbers had dwindled to about 30 when police started making arrests.

State troopers, dressed in riot gear, formed lines on either side of the building while officers inside arrested protesters one-by-one.

Students, many holding yellow citation slips, were released almost immediately and walked through police lines to be greeted by hugs from friends and cheers from supporters.

Carol Herrmann, executive assistant to the president, said the administration had no choice but to arrest the students when hours of negotiations failed to get them to leave the building.

"I hope it won't alienate the black community. I think that the administration is ready always to address concerns of (campus) environmen...," she said.

"I think it went very smoothly," Stormer said. "There was no resistance in the form of being combative. They merely resisted in the form of holding onto each other."

About 130 protesters were in the building when police started making arrests, but many chose to leave rather than face prosecution, Stormer said.

NIH, Congress probe allegations of scientific misconduct

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Institutes of Health and two congressional panels are about to launch investigations into charges that a molecular biology manuscript written by a Nobel laureate and his colleagues misrepresented research data.

An official at the NIH said a special committee has been named to review allegations of scientific misconduct involving a study on duplicating immunity cells in laboratory mice. The project was headed by Nobel laureate David Baltimore, director of the Whitehead Institute in Boston, and Theresa Imanishi-Kari of Tufts University. Four other researchers were co-authors.

Mary Miers, an executive in the NIH office that investigates allegations of research misconduct, said the special committee was organized after two NIH scientists, Walter W. Stewart and Ned Feder, "raised issues" about research performed by Imanishi-Kari.

Miers said Stewart and Feder reported their allegations in a manuscript that has been provided to the committee. The two men, who in the past have raised questions about the credibility of other research efforts, declined to discuss the case with a reporter.

Baltimore, who won the Nobel Prize in 1976 for research in cellular biology, said in an interview Friday that he welcomed the NIH investigation and hopes it will silence the charges of Stewart and Feder who he said have "acted like a judge and jury" in the case.

Testimony on the controversy will be heard by two separate congressional subcommittees, both of which have called Stewart and Feder as witnesses.

Monday, the House subcommittee on government operations and human resources will hear the NIH scientists, along with other witnesses on the general subject of scientific fraud.

On Tuesday, the House subcommittee on oversight and investigation will plow some of the same ground. Feder and Stewart will again testify, along with a researcher, Margot O'Toole, who assisted Imanishi-Kari in the controversial study.

Jimmy Swaggart ministries needs miracle to recover, lawyer says

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The Jimmy Swaggart Ministries needs a miracle to recover from the crippling decline brought on by the evangelist's confessed sin and the revocation of his church credentials, Swaggart's lawyer says.

Swaggart announced Friday he was resigning from the Assemblies of God, the nation's largest Pentecostal denomination, shortly after the church said it was defrocking him.

"We're vulnerable, obviously," said attorney William Treeby. "And it will take a miracle of God for us to succeed."

The 13-member Executive Presbytery of the Assemblies, based in Springfield, Mo., last month ordered Swaggart to submit to a two-year rehabilitation plan which included a one-year suspension from preaching, a harsher punishment than originally ordered by Louisiana church elders.

Swaggart said separating from the church was necessary to save his Bible college and $140 million worldwide ministry. Treeby said the organization is in a precarious position, but would not fail financially.

"We believe that to stay out of the pulpit for a year would totally destroy the television ministry and greatly adversely impact the college," Swaggart said Friday.

Soon after the Presbytery ordered the one-year suspension, Treeby announced that Swaggart would return to the pulpit on May 22, coinciding with the end of the three-month suspension first ordered by Louisiana church leaders.

The punishment was handed down after Swaggart publicly confessed to unspecified sin on Feb. 21. A self-described prostitute said Swaggart paid her to pose nude for him several times in New Orleans.

Another defrocked Assemblies of God minister, Marvin Gorman of suburban New Orleans, reportedly hired men who photographed Swaggart with the woman outside a motel.

Police patrol Honduras as emergency declared

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Police patrolled Tegucigalpa's streets Saturday under the state of emergency imposed to quell two days of anti-American riots that left five people dead and the U.S. consulate burned.

The state of emergency decreed Friday by the government of President Jose Azcona, which gave authorities sweeping powers to crack down on the demonstrations, brought a forced calm to the country.

Troops also patrolled the capital in light tanks and trucks. Military units guarded bridges, government ministries and key intersections.

Radio and television stations were forced to suspend regular programming under the emergency order as authorities maintained control of broadcast outlets for the second straight day.

At intervals an announcer read communiques from the government's information secretariat.

The government blamed Thursday night's attacks on the U.S. Embassy compound on what it called a small group of Marxist radicals. The mob, estimated at nearly 2,000 people, burned and sacked the U.S. consulate and offices of the U.S. Information Service, but did not penetrate the embassy portion of the complex.

Five people, all Hondurans, were reported killed Thursday night. The violence began with a student-led demonstration to protest the arrest Tuesday of accused drug trafficker Juan Ramon Matta and his extradition to the United States.

Tuesday, Honduran officials took Matta from his Tegucigalpa home in a pre-dawn raid and placed him on a plane to the Dominican Republic.

Dominican Republic officials put Matta on a New York-bound flight and he was arrested aboard the jetliner by U.S. marshals.

Matta, held at the maximum-security federal prison in Marion, Ill., was wanted by U.S. officials for questioning in the 1985 slaying in Mexico of a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent, Enrique Camarena Salazar.

Some Honduran legislators called the handling of Matta a "kidnapping" and the Foreign Ministry ordered an investigation of the procedures used.

The Honduran constitution prohibits the extradition of citizens. But Honduran authorities, working in concert with U.S. officials, seized Matta.

The two days of rioting was the worst anti-American demonstration in Latin America this year. Although the protests were carried out largely by leftists who are regular critics of U.S. policies, the extradition of Matta was seen by many as a flagrant violation of Honduran law.

Other anti-American sentiment apparently was fueled by the presence in Honduras last month of 3,200 U.S. military personnel dispatched after Nicaraguan government forces reported encroached on Honduran land to pursue Nicraguan rebels, known as Contras. The 3,200 U.S. troops returned to America within two weeks.

Many Hondurans oppose the presence of U.S.-backed Contra bases in Honduras.

The disturbances that began Thursday continued Friday, with police using tear gas to break up concentrations of protestors.

Mothers divided by war, united in grief

By BRYNA BRENNAN

WORLD

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Mercedes Vaca winces at the thought that imprisoned Contra rebels and former national guardsmen, maybe men who killed her son, might go free under a government amnesty.

Sylvia Aleman says her two brothers were falsely accused of being anti-government guerrillas, and she fumes at the idea that they remain behind bars.

In the hearts of these two women, both prominent members of mothers' movements with opposing views, there can be no truce, no lasting peace.

Sandinista government troops and Contra rebels have observed a 60-day cease-fire since April 1. During that time, they have tried to negotiate a permanent truce in the 6½-year-old civil war that has killed or injured an estimated 60,000 people.

As part of the cease-fire, the Sandinistas have pledged gradually to free 3,300 political prisoners and allow exiles to return to Nicaragua.

Mrs. Vaca, 69, a staunch government supporter and member of the government-supported Mothers of Heroes and Martyrs, bristles at talk of the release.

"We are afraid," she said last week. "We don't have any trust in the Contras. They killed. They are savage animals.

"Do you know how many children died in their mothers' arms? How can we forgive that?" she asked, sitting in a rocking chair at her home in a middle-class Managua neighborhood.

"For me, there will always be pain," she said. "I lost my son."

Jacinto Vaca is a hero to many Nicaraguans. They count him among martyrs who died to bring the Sandinistas to power in a revolutionary war that ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979.

Vaca began fighting when he was 13 years old. When he was 24, he was killed in a northern village by members of Somoza's National Guard, which the rightist, pro-American leader had used to maintain power.

"I felt he was too young to be a revolutionary," said Mrs. Vaca, a petite, elegant woman with white hair. "But it was a time when it was a crime just to be young."

Vaca was arrested three times, held incommunicado, tortured and beaten, but he stayed loyal to the revolution, his mother said.

"After the last time he was taken prisoner, he said he'd rather die than go back to jail," she said. "They (the National Guard) were inhuman. I can't tell you all the horrors, all the blood, what criminals they are."

The Contra rebels grew from a group of national guardsmen that fled to Honduras and the northern mountains after Somoza was overthrown. By late 1981, trained and supplied by the CIA, they began to mount attacks to oust the Sandinista government.

Over the years, many poor peasants joined their ranks.

Mrs. Aleman, a member of the opposition Jan. 22 Movement, said last week two of her younger brothers were hauled off to jail four years ago and summarily charged by a revolutionary court. The group is named after the day it was founded in 1987.

"About 10 military jeeps surrounded the house," said Mrs. Aleman, 36, a leader of an anti-government group of mothers and other relatives of political prisoners.

"It was terrible. They were state security agents, and they searched the house, beat up my nephew and planted weapons," she said.

They took away Juan Pablo Aleman, 32, and sentenced him to 18 years in prison. Later that day, police picked up her other brother, Elias Aleman, 34, on a street in Managua, she said.

"We didn't know where Elias was; they wouldn't say," said Mrs. Aleman, waiting to take statements from relatives of other political prisoners at an office of the Democratic Coordinate, an anti-government umbrella group.

"We didn't know anything for two months. He has been tortured and beaten," she said.

Israeli soldiers smashed mosque's windows, Arab villagers say

BEIT UMMAR, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli soldiers rammed bulldozers into shops, uprooted plum trees and smashed the windows of a mosque during a rampage in this West Bank village, residents said Saturday.

Meanwhile, an army report quoted by television suggested that a 15-year-old Israeli girl killed during a clash last week with Arabs on the West Bank was shot by a Jewish settler who panicked during the confrontation.

During a tour of Beit Ummar, this Associated Press reporter saw dozens of metal store gates smashed and dented. One gate lay twisted over the glass counters of a pharmacy where two old men sat, surrounded by glass shards. The outside wall of a school was torn down and uprooted trees lined the main road.

An army official said the matter was under investigation. A preliminary probe showed that villagers blocked roads with stones and garbage containers after a violent protest Friday, the army said.

"In the process of clearing the roads, damage was caused to stairs, shops and cars that were parked along the road," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Violent clashes between Palestinians and soldiers were reported throughout the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip Saturday. In the West Bank city of Nablus, soldiers shot and wounded nine Arabs, hospital officials said. Three Arabs were wounded in Gaza.

The army said it could not immediately confirm the reports.

An army report on the the death Wednesday of Tirza Porat indicated that a Jewish settler inadvertently shot the 15-year-old girl during a clash with Arab protesters near Beita, 10 miles south of the West Bank town of Nablus, according to Israel television.

Two Arabs also were killed in the fighting and 15 people were injured. The girl was one of 16 Israeli teenagers on a hike accompanied by two armed Jewish settlers.

Israeli television, quoting an army report, said that one of the settlers, Romam Al Dubi, opened fire twice with his M-16 rifle, killing a Beita resident. It said the group then walked toward the village.

Mosque loudspeakers in Beita alerted residents that a villager had been killed and called on them to defend Beita against armed settlers, the televison said.

In the village, the mother and sister of the slain Arab struck Al Dubi from behind with a large board, Israel television quoted the army report as saying.

The television account said Al Dubi panicked and apparently fired his automatic rifle in all directions, killing another Arab.

It said Miss Porat was struck by a bullet from Al Dubi's M-16, according to the army report that is set to be submitted to the Cabinet Sunday.

Army officials previously said the girl was stoned to death by Arabs during the clash, then said she had been struck both by a bullet and a rock.

Since Palestinians began violent protests against Israeli rule in the territories in early December, 141 Arabs, one Israeli soldier and one Israeli civilian have been killed. The army has arrested hundreds of Arabs in a crackdown on the areas occupied by Israel since the 1967 Middle East war.

In Jerusalem, scores of left- and right-wing demonstrators protested in front of the home of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir. Police intervened when members of three rival groups engaged in a brief scuffle, Israel television said.

Right-wing Jewish settlers have been staging a vigil at the site since Miss Porat, the child of settlers, was killed Wednesday. The settlers demand more settlements in the occupied territories and harsher army measures against Arab protesters.

They were joined Saturday by dozens of followers of U.S.-born Rabbi Meir Kahane, who heads the anti-Arab Kach movement, and by left-wing protesters chanting "Occupation no, peace yes"

After Friday's clash in Beit Ummar, about 13 miles south of Jerusalem, the army closed the village to reporters.

A Beit Ummar resident said the trouble started when dozens of youths burned tires and threw stones at soldiers after Moslem noon prayers Friday.

In response, soldiers brought in two bulldozers and wreaked havoc in the village for five hours, said the resident, who would only give his first name, Mohammed, for fear of retaliation.

"They just wanted to punish us," said Mohammed, 21.

Chinese name new premier

BEIJING (AP) — The National People's Congress Saturday named as premier Li Peng, a cautious reformer whose foster father held the post for 27 years, and gave its approval to a program to cut bureaucracy.

Li, 59, has been acting premier since November, when Zhao Ziyang gave up the post to become Communist Party chief.

Li was the only candidate for premier, but delegates were told they could write in their own choice on the ballots. There were no reports of how many did, if any.

The premier is responsible for the day-to-day operations of the government, while the party leader controls the direction of government policies.

Li is the adopted son of one of China's most beloved Communist officials, the late Premier Chou En-lai. A Moscow-educated technocrat, Li has previously been vice premier and minister of education and industry.

During the voting, delegates rushed to take pictures of each other depositing the pink and orange ballots into large ballot boxes set up throughout the main conference hall.

One delegate voted against the reorganization of state ministries and top-level commissions, which was approved by a show of hands of the 2,877 delegates in the Great Hall of the People. Two delegates abstained.

WORLD in brief

'War of cities' on hold

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran and Iraq reported sporadic attacks and shellings Saturday in their 7½-year-old war, but both appeared to be observing a tacit cease-fire in their missile attacks in the "war of the cities."

The official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Iranian artillery shells hit the battered southern port city of Basra and four other Iraqi border towns farther north, killing an undisclosed number of civilians.

But neither side reported firing or being hit by any long-range missiles since Friday. The missile duel has taken hundreds of lives in the past seven weeks.

A military spokesman in Baghdad said Iraq had "refrained from bombarding" Tehran, the Iranian capital, and other Iranian cities Friday while Iranians went to the polls to elect a new 270-seat Majlis, or Parliament.

But he did not say if the Iraqi restraint would continue until the results of the election will be known sometime next week.

Negotiator 'optimistic'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Government and rebel officials are not far from agreeing on technical aspects of a cease-fire even though they suspended discussions because of some differences, a negotiator said Saturday.

"I'm optimistic," said Paul Reichler, a Washington attorney who is with the Sandinista government's negotiating delegation. "We've come this far."

Talks between military leaders of the government and the rebels, known as Contras, broke off Friday after four days of discussions. Negotiators are dealing with the technical aspects of a 60-day cease-fire that formally went into effect on April 1.

Both sides agreed on seven zones where the Contras are to gather during the cease-fire, but failed to agree on how the rebels would receive supplies and ways of verifying compliance with the truce.

Rebels kill 10 soldiers

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas attacked a village Saturday in the province of Usulutan, killing 10 government soldiers and injuring 20 others, military and civilian officials said.

The officials said members of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, an alliance of five rebel armies, attacked government positions in Villa El Triunfo, 74 miles east of the capital of San Salvador.

The officials of the Sixth Infantry Brigade of Usulutan and civilians in that region, all of whom demanded anonymity for security reasons, said the rebels attacked the village early Saturday.

They destroyed two army tanks, set fire to the offices of a state-run communications company and damaged four private houses, the officials reported.

The Armed Forces press office, meanwhile, reported that government troops killed 20 rebels and injured 13 others in the first week of April. Three soldiers died and 13 were wounded in the fighting, it said.

Jerusalem proposal draws praise, protest

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Melvin "Mel" Wilcox overlooks a model of Old Jerusalem, which he envisions building in West Texas under the guidance of his Jerusalem 30 A.D. International Ministries.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A proposal to build a massive re-creation of Old Jerusalem in West Texas has drawn both hopeful optimism and healthy skepticism from Midland civic leaders.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas questioned the economic viability and biblical foundation of the project.

But former Mayor G. Thane Akins has invited the project's director, Florida entrepreneur Melvin "Mel" Wilcox, to present his vision to a West Texas industrial development council.

Wilcox's vision is a re-creation of the Holy City as it may have appeared in Jesus Christ's days — a $2.5 billion project that would be, as he calls it, "the number-one attraction in the world."

Dubbing the attraction "Jerusalem 30 A.D.," Wilcox said the project would be spiritually imbued and economically prosperous for West Texas.

Wilcox says it would benefit the churches that he expects to contribute toward construction of the walled city from West Texas sandstone and limestone.

"It's not for the benefit of man to enrich himself economically but spiritually," Wilcox, 47, said recently while in Midland in trying to generate support for the Jerusalem 30 A.D. project.

"If Disney can build majestic amusement parks all over this world and tell the story of a make-believe mouse," Wilcox reasoned, "surely the Christians can get together, united, and build one magnificent place of praise to tell the good news of Christ Jesus."

Wilcox said the project would afford "economic benefits," such as diversifying the West Texas economy. "And, yes, there will be commercial developments around this project" but not within the jurisdiction of the proposed 25,000-acre site within which the city would be built.

"Maybe I was a little bit of a doubting Thomas myself when I first started on this" eight years ago, Wilcox said. "The more that was revealed to me, the more I was convinced" to carry on the project.

Another doubting Thomas — Mayor Carroll Thomas — said he was not favorably impressed by the project when Wilcox first approached him last year.

"He (Wilcox) got kind of upset with me," Thomas recalled.

Earlier, when Wilcox "thought that I was in favor of his project, he was very courteous," Thomas recalled. But later, Wilcox "tried to put words in my mouth — that I was trying to send the business elsewhere," such as to Odessa, said the mayor.

"I immediately told him that I was not saying that. I was merely saying I personally did not support his project, because I did not think it was viable," said Thomas.

The mayor said he "questioned whether the project was biblically founded or biblical."

Thomas said Wilcox was at that time considering building the complex in the McCamey area, with Midland serving as business headquarters.

Wilcox has been invited to present his plans to a West Texas industrial development board that formerly led the area's bid for the Superconducting Super Collider.

Former Mayor Akins, who continues to serve as project director of the commission that attempted to draw the huge physics laboratory to West Texas, made the invitation.

Although the federal government did not choose the West Texas site as a finalist for the SSC lab, the commission remains in existence and is seeking projects to support.

"It would be an awesome project the way they foresee it," Akins said. "It will take a lot of bucks. It would be tremendous if they have the wherewithal to build it. I certainly wish him well."

Said Wilcox of honoring Akins' invitation: "We would be happy — anxious — to do so."

According to biblical accounts and Christian tradition, Jerusalem was the Roman-occupied Jewish city in which Jesus of Nazareth had proclaimed the coming of the Kingdom of God. He was crucified just outside the walled city for treason and blasphemy by claiming to be King of the Jews and the Son of God.

Wilcox said he has selected an undisclosed West Texas ranching area for the site since the area is within the 31- and 32-degree latitude in which Jerusalem lies.

The site also has similar terrain, climate and rainfall of today's Israel, in addition to adequate water supplies and accessibility by highway.

The site is under negotiation, even while Wilcox is seeking "seed" money for the project.

"Man has really no part in this except to obey God in spirit," Wilcox said. "And I believe this is His will."

Wilcox envisions a walled city of 125,000 people, a population larger than either Midland or Odessa. The proposed city would be one mile long and five-eighths of a mile wide.

Wilcox says his vision calls for the city to be built by 10,000 craftsmen and artisans working 24 hours a day.

It would include the Temple, Herod's Palace, the Royal Basilica, the Roman Theatre, the Hippodrome, fountains, banquet halls, palaces, altars, marketplaces, and the Garden of Gethsemane outside Jerusalem's stone wall.

Wilcox said that the Temple would be "an international house of prayer."

Buildings would be leased or rented for the making and selling of wares and crafts similar to those made in 30 A.D. and for carrying biblical messages through missions, a seminary, and radio, television, and newspaper facilities.

The city would have research centers, libraries, museums containing artifacts from the Holy Land, and a free eye clinic for the poor.

"We can't play God," Wilcox said. "I wish I could and lay my hands on a person and restore sight; I can't do that."

Wilcox said "professional entertainers" would be booked to perform nightly in the Roman Theater. "So, you can come in and enjoy a good meal and good entertainment, good Christian fellowship, and go home.

"You can work in the markets. You can learn, you can feel, you can understand. Believe me, many people will come into this area, (people) who have never been face-to-face with God before. They will come face-to-face with the spirit of God in this city."

Visitors would be invited to dress in period costumes and play roles of Jews, Romans and other gentiles and to take chariot rides, he said.

Jerusalem 30 A.D. would generate $2 billion a year, would attract between 27 million and 30 million people annually, and would pay for itself in two years, Wilcox believes.

CAPP using April observance to increase awareness

Child abuse 'just doesn't stop'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

April has been declared Child Abuse Prevention Month in Midland County, with a dizzying calendarful of educational programs, seminars, and even a get-together scheduled before a Midland Angels baseball game.

But does any of it really do any good?

Ralph Petty, a Midland prosecutor who takes child abusers to court or a living, acknowledges with a frustrating sigh the seeming resiliency of the problem.

"You want a good quote?" he asks. "Quote this: it doesn't seem to ever stop. It just doesn't stop."

Petty — who serves as a board member of the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program (CAPP) and on a state bar committee on child abuse — says the problem is a constant struggle for him and other professionals who deal with it. According to reports compiled by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, 129 children died in 1986 as a result of physical abuse.

"Child abuse is so horrible that we tend to want to believe it doesn't exist," he said. "But we all know different."

A 60-page reference guide on the investigation and prosecution of child abuse — written by the prosecutor for other professionals — starkly brings the point home: "Intentional injury inflicted upon children by their parents is, perhaps, the most serious threat to the health of children in America today."

Steve Mild, an investigator with the Midland County Sheriff's office, who has worked child abuse cases for years, agrees with Petty's gloomy assessment.

"It is holding steady," he said of the cases that cross his desk monthly. "I've seen no major changes this year over last."

Because of personnel shortages familiar to those in law enforcement, only the most serious cases of abuse are investigated, Mild contends.

"We investigate only about a third of the abuse cases that we actually could," he said.

Ector Countians to vote in commissioner runoff

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The lone run-off race in Ector County Tuesday pits incumbent Republican Precinct 3 Commissioner Gerrid Bowen against Richard "Ricky" Jorgensen.

Jorgensen beat Bowen and two other candidates in the March 8 primary, but Jorgensen failed to garner the necessary 50 percent of the 3,076 ballots cast to avoid a runoff.

Jorgensen beat Bowen by a margin of only 2.4 percent, 36.28 percent to Bowen's 33.88 percent. One-time Odessa Mayor A.P. Brown received 16.78 percent and Martin Stringer received 13.07 percent. Both have thrown their support to Jorgensen in Tuesday's runoff.

At various forums prior to the primary and runoff, Jorgensen has criticized Bowen for not being a "full time" commissioner during his first term. Jorgensen, who operates Judy's Bonding, has stated he will sell his bail bonding business and devote full time to the business of Precinct 3 constituents and the county.

Bowen, who operates a plumbing business, has contended he needs to augment his $30,000-plus commissioner's annual salary so he can afford to send his children to a Christian school. He has criticized Jorgensen's pledge to get out of the bonding business as a "campaign ploy."

Jorgensen countered this criticism with an announcement he has entered into a contract with a Dallas firm to sell his business if he wins the runoff race against Bowen.

During an April 7 forum sponsored by the Odessa Board of Realtors Bowen and Jorgensen addressed problems faced by Medical Center Hospital.

Bowen told the realtors that area economic problems and decreasing Medicare payments have combined to compound financial difficulties at the county-owned hospital.

He said a firm used by the county to collect delinquent taxes has worked out a program that might help strengthen the position of the county-owned hospital by bringing in a higher percentage of uncollected accounts.

Telling realtors that the cost of indgent care is part of the problem at MCH, Jorgensen questioned the feasibility of billing other counties for the cost of providing care for their indigent residents.

On the question of MCH management, Bowen declined to comment, while Jorgensen questioned if management was a part of the problem at MCH. He pledged to explore this aspect of the problem if elected.

Lincoln County excavations take viewer back to Wild West

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE

LINCOLN, N.M. — The dozen or so men holed up in the smoldering adobe house squinted down their gun barrels, which poked through slits in the bricked up windows.

Alexander McSween, William H. Bonney — aka Billy the Kid — and their friends wiped sweat from their soot-smeared faces and wondered how — or if — they would survive this afternoon of July 19, 1878.

For 4½ days they had held off what passed for the forces of law and order in Lincoln County — Sheriff George W. Peppin and his gang of about 40 newly deputized men.

The McSween house standoff underscored the violent struggle for economic and political control of the largest county in the United States.

In frustration, Peppin's deputies set fire to the west wing of the U-shaped structure about 2 o'clock that afternoon.

After four days of siege, McSween's men had little water to quench the blaze. Desperately, they ripped up the wooden floorboards to slow the fire's relentless advance.

When the men could no longer stand the deadly smoke from burning horsehair sofas and woolen carpets, drapes and mattresses in one room, they moved to the next.

By 8 p.m. they had run out of rooms. Only the kitchen at the end of the east wing still stood.

As the kitchen began to burn, the men deserted the house for the equally hostile atmosphere outside. Bursts of gunfire immediately cut down McSween and four others; Billy the Kid and the other defenders escaped to the brushy banks of an arroyo behind the house.

Controversial columnist to share views

From Staff Reports

Jack Anderson, the nationally syndicated columnist and investigative reporter, will present a lecture entitled "The News Behind the Headlines" 8 p.m. Tuesday in the student lounge at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The often controversial Anderson is considered a premier orator. In 1986, he received the Abraham Lincoln Award from the International Platform Association as the greatest living professional speaker.

He won the Pulitzer Prize in 1972 in the "national journalism" category.

LINCOLN

Thus ended the bloodiest episode in the four-year-long Lincoln County War, according to David T. Kirkpatrick, an archaeologist who has been directing excavations at the McSween house site for the past two years.

Kirkpatrick, in Midland last week to present his findings to the local archaeological society, said the conflict did not pit "cattlemen against rustlers or cattlemen against homesteaders."

Instead, it was "a battle between competing economic interests" with cultural overtones, Kirkpatrick claimed. Alexander McSween was a teetotaling Presbyterian of Canadian stock who was trying to take over the economic territory of Lawrence G. Murphy and his proteges, James J. Dolan and John H. Riley, all Catholics of Irish descent.

Murphy had an economic stranglehold on Lincoln County, then the largest in the nation, covering an area two-thirds the size of Pennsylvania. Because of a shortage of silver, Murphy paid farmers for their grain in credits rather than hard currency, Kirkpatrick continued.

These credits could only be used in Murphy's stores and he determined their value, the archaeologist claimed. But the U.S. Army, which had extensive contracts with Murphy, paid him for the grain in cold cash.

McSween — who had once been a lawyer for Murphy — decided he could undercut Murphy's business, Kirkpatrick said. He joined with John H. Tunstall, who opened a store that gave the farmers more credits for their grain.

This economic conflict ignited the Lincoln County War in late 1876, he said. When it began, about 1,000 people lived in the Rio Bonito Valley where Lincoln is located, about 20 miles northeast of Ruidoso.

"Just 12 families were left in town by the time the McSween house burned down," Kirkpatrick continued. Many people abandoned the county altogether between 1876 and 1879 rather than take sides.

"The factions that were involved were extremely violent," he claimed. "The values of justice in the 1870s were much different from the values of today.... After the Civil War, many people were interested in personal wealth and gain.

"A number of very disreputable characters were involved in the Lincoln County War — Billy the Kid, Jesse Evans," Kirkpatrick said. "There was a general period of lawlessness; the law broke down."

In the late 1870s, the county was the scene of numerous gunfights, isolated killings and cattle rustling.

"At that time, Gov. Lew Wallace preferred to write 'Ben Hur' than deal with stuff like this in Lincoln County," he asserted.

"Increased firepower" developed during the Civil War also was a factor, Kirkpatrick said. And after that bloody conflict, "killing people to solve a problem was not considered unusual."

Kirkpatrick and his crew have found plenty of evidence of this increased firepower — many exploded cartridges — in their excavations of the McSween house.

The excavations were complicated by two later structures built on top of the destroyed McSween house. In 1986, Kirkpatrick's crew unearthed an alignment of adobe bricks under a bedroom floor of the Fresquez House, constructed in the late 1880s, he said.

The bricks, reddened from the intense fire, were laid directly on the soil, without a stone foundation, Kirkpatrick continued. The soil around the bricks contained fragments of charcoal and burned adobe.

Other artifacts recovered during the past two years include fragments of burned and melted window panes, broken pieces of pressed or cut glass, chunks of marble (probably from table or dresser tops), small glass beads which may have decorated kerosene lanterns, charred fragments of cloth, broken pieces of white stoneware, animal bones, peppercorns and coffee beans.

Kirkpatrick hopes to direct three or four weeks of excavations at the site this summer. His non-profit organization — Human Systems Research Inc. — has worked closely with the Lincoln County Heritage Trust, which has funded work at the site.

He stressed the importance of involving the public in archaeological and historical research.

"We try to let people get close to the excavators" while they're working, he said. "To let them see the artifacts as they come out of the ground."

"It's the association of artifacts which tells our story," Kirkpatrick continued. One such grouping of broken window pane glass, unexploded cartridges and melted slugs was found on the floor in one of the rooms.

"If you can, visualize a defender at one of the windows which had been boarded up or bricked up with adobe bricks. The windowpanes have been broken out of the windows so that the men can shoot through them," Kirkpatrick speculated.

"And he's got his box — or leather pouch or whatever — of cartridges, and as fire forces him to leave the room, he grabs his box and he leaves behind a number of these cartridges rolling on the floor...and they lay there until we find them years later."

Archaeology also offers a different perspective in a story which has been distorted by legend and prejudice.

"Unfortunately, history is written by the winners," Kirkpatrick said. "The people who were inside the house (either killed or in hiding) were not asked to testify" at the inquiry which took place after the incident.

For more information about the site, or to contribute to the McSween Archaeological Project, contact Gary Miller, Director, Lincoln County Heritage Trust, P.O. Box 98, Lincoln, N.M. 88338.

ABUSE

But Petty — a 14-year courtroom veteran who has successfully tried 11 child murder cases — sees what he says is a welcome change in the public's perception of child abuse. Awareness has been heightened by events such as those designated for Midland this month, he said.

"For so many years, for most of man's history, people did not believe it happened," the prosecutor said. "Children were treated like chattel, were regarded as property. But gradually, these barriers have been broken down. We have always given parents a lot of discretion in how they raise their children.

"Now, we are slowly moving to the viewpoint that children belong to all of us, and that society has an interest in their welfare."

The Permian Basin CAPP, founded a year ago as an agency of Family Services of Midland, is coordinating many of this month's activities — activities that do, indeed help, said Carol Steele, CAPP's executive director.

"We are trying really hard to up the number of child abuse reports" received by various agencies, Ms. Steele said.

"Not that that will solve the problem. But if they (victims) can't get into the system, nothing can be done."

One of the highlights of the month is happening April 19 at Angels Stadium, when the CAPP is sponsoring a "Safe at Home Night" before the Midland Angels baseball game.

"We'd like both the parents and kids to come that night," Ms. Steele said. Beginning at 6 p.m., free safety tips will be available from the Midland police and sheriff's departments, American Red Cross, Midland Rape Crisis Center, and other agencies.

"One of the things we are trying to do this month is get everyone together," Ms. Steele said, pointing to a calendar of events scheduled for Child Abuse Prevention Month. "We want to get everybody working together — and we are all working for the kids."

At the CAPP, at least a two-week wait is required to see the available counselors. That is one indication that events like this month help awareness of the child abuse problem, according to Ms. Steele.

"Public awareness does make a difference," she said.

Midland area residents need to realize that child abuse is happening in their town daily, among the dozens of churches and idyllic streets, Petty said.

"Until we recognize that some parents abuse their children, we're not going to take any action to look for those children, to try and ensure their welfare," he said.

"Society entrusts the parents with their children, and expects them to adhere to standards of decency and right in their behavior," he said.

"When a parent abuses a child, that trust is violated."

JERUSALEM

In referring to some national and international evangelistic efforts, Wilcox believes that the troubles of former televangelists Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker have been a "godsend," because "money that isn't going to that particular ministry anymore" would be available for the Jerusalem project.

"This project will be very carefully scrutinized by everyone, and we want it that way. We would have full public disclosure as to where every penny goes," he said.

If the new Jerusalem were built, Wilcox would construct replicas of the village of Bethany and the city of Bethlehem, where Christ was born.

Primary funding of the project would be through church mission funds, said Wilcox, and would be repaid in greater amounts from Jerusalem 30 A.D. revenues.

Wilcox said his work background is in insurance management, setting up franchises and holding seminars and classes in management and finance.

Wilcox said the idea for the project materialized follwing a 1980 automobile accident in which he was injured.

"I just prayed to the Lord that either He'd take the pain or take me," Wilcox recalled. "I just started dealing with God: 'God, if you'll do this for me, I'll do this for you. I'll serve you anyway I can. Just lead me to your will in what you want me to do.' " The pain fled, Wilcox claimed.

Wilcox said he has done extensive research on the project but has not yet visited Jerusalem. Both businessmen and ministers have expressed interest in the project, he said.

"There were a lot of people who were skeptical, and that's only natural," he said. "There are a lot of doubting Thomases in this world. Praise God, (there are) a lot of people who will let the spirit move within them and guide them."

Confirmation of the Jerusalem project came in his home town of Bloomington, Ill., when Wilcox said he walked into a library and asked God for a sign.

"I said, 'God, if you truly want me to do this, devote my life to this, I'm going walk down an aisle, pick out a book at random, and open up that book, and see a picture of a certain individual' " — President John F. Kennedy.

The picture appeared upon his opening the book, he said.

Wilcox and members of his incomplete board of 12 directors have held private showings of a model of Old Jerusalem and color slides of modern Jerusalem.

"It might be viable," Midland minister Hawley Wolfe said of the proposed project. "It's hard to say. I think Mel's role is to be the catalyst and the visionary."

The project "should not be ruled out hastily just because of its scope," Wolfe said.

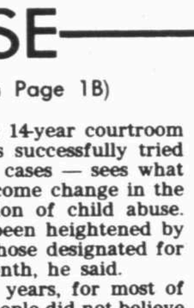

"The location is kind of remote," Wolfe said. "If it were good enough, people would come." Jerusalem 30 A.D. would be "educational and faith enriching."

One of Wilcox's directors, Leslie "Les" Bannon, 50, of Midland said the Jerusalem site would offer "plenty of jobs for people. You just don't get a project like this off the ground real quick."

Wilcox is "sincere," said Bannon, who says he would be director of communications and security if the project became a reality. "He is devoting his whole life to this. This is not a scam. It's one man's idea, and the Permian Basin can have it if it wants it."

Fuller

He is a graduate of San Angelo Junior College, North Texas State University, Texas Tech University, and has done postgraduate work at Texas Tech and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

He is also a graduate of Leadership Midland and serves as a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Inc., Midland Chamber of Commerce, Eastside Task Force, Martin Luther King Jr. Park Committee, and Midland United Way.

He is married to the former Robbyne Hocker., and the couple has a son, Jason Everette Fuller.

Underwood seeking Place 5 seat on GISD school board

Underwood

John Underwood has filed for a position on the Greenwood Independent School District, Place 6.

He served on the GISD school board from 1980 to 1986.

"Each student at Greenwood High School deserves the best education that we, as taxpayers, can provide for them. This 'best' education includes the best teachers, administrators and school board members. I would like to be one of those school board members," Underwood said.

He is a self-employed partner in The Insurance Man and Associates and is married to Betty Underwood, a Midland Independent School District teacher.

He has three children, two of whom attend GISD schools and one in college.

"My six years of experience on the board, and my experience in the business community qualify me for this position.

"I am familiar with the way a school should be run as well as a business," Underwood said.

Police portrait artist matches faces, names of fallen officers

DALLAS (AP) — An portrait artist who uses photographs to try to match the faces with names of Dallas police officers killed in the line of duty says that 53 paintings are enough.

James Spurlock relies on blurry family photos and yellowed newspaper clippings to paint memorials to the officers' sacrifices.

"I'd rather they not send me any more business," said Spurlock. "I'd really like to be fired."

Spurlock's paintings are scheduled to be unveiled May 15, Police Memorial Day, at the police academy in northwest Dallas. Each portrait took up to seven hours to paint and measures 20 by 24 inches.

Most of the officers died violently, leaving spouses and children. But Spurlock said the recent deaths — three since he started the project in early 1987 —trouble him the most.

"It's one thing doing a painting of someone who died in 1892," he said. "It becomes a lot harder when you know they were alive last week and they're not now.

"In this type of display, you can see their faces instead of just looking at a brass plate with their name on it," Spurlock said.

Racial tensions erupted after officer John Chase, who was white, was shot to death Jan. 23 by a black man who was later killed in a shootout with pursuing officers.

Another officer, James Joe, died in a shooting 10 days earlier.

Police said they got the exhibit idea from a similar display at the Fort Worth Police Department. Dallas' $16,000 memorial has been funded entirely by voluntary contributions.

The portraits span 96 years of Dallas law enforcement. It took volunteer researchers months to find photos of the 51 officers and two reserve officers who died in the line of duty.

One of the toughest research tasks was of Theodore Tedford, who was shot off his horse in 1912 trying to bring in a man on a disturbance charge, said Carolyn Newman, administrative assistant in the department's Planning and Research Division.

Local newspapers featured long accounts of Tedford's death but failed to include his picture. Tedford's brother, Alex, was also a Dallas police officer and he died in the line of duty in 1927, said Ms. Newman.

Reeves seeks MISD District 7

From Staff Reports

Reeves

Midlander Connie Reeves officially announced her candidacy for the Midland Independent School Board race, District 7.

Mrs. Reeves said that as a mother and community member, children and education are major priorities for her.

"I have both the time and dedication necessary for serving on the school board and am committed to assuring a quality education for every child in the district," she said.

Her background includes the study of psychology with an emphasis in child development, child psychology and three years of experience in banking and finance.

"I encourage community involvement in school affairs and feel that responsible decision-making can only be accomplished through communication with board members, MISD personnel and the community as a whole," she said.

As a representative of the community, it is her responsibility, Mrs. Reeves said, to be well-informed on the issues, spend tax dollars prudently, objectively evaluate district expansion needs and maintain an educational environment conducive to academic achievement throughout the district.

"I feel that it is in the best interests of the children and education that an indepth study into district structure and operations be conducted to ascertain the most effective methods for facilitating integration of schools and dealing with problem areas," she said.

Mrs. Reeves has been married for 17 years and has four children who attend Midland public schools.

The Right-to-Know Law, passed by the 1987 Texas Legislature, became effective January 1 and "represents a commitment by the state to promote the safe use of pesticides and provide you with information about pesticides used on Texas crops, the health effects and ways to minimize pesticide exposure," according to a press release from organizers of Monday's presentation.

Ms. Campos, a graduate of Tarleton State University, is part of the Right-to-Know team, which consists of five specialists across the state. She has been with TDA three years and has recently transferred from Waco to work with the Right-to-Know program in the 32-county El Paso district.

Red Cross program offered

From Staff Reports

Crime against children continues to grow in the United States.

In an attempt to educate parents and children in a positive self-care program, the American Red Cross, in conjunction with the Midland Police Crime Prevention Unit, the Midland Fire Department, Southwestern Bell, and KTPX-TV, is sponsoring a training program to help children safely care for themselves at home or away from home by offering an "I'm in Charge Program."

Training will be done in five departments: emergency first aid, fire safety, personal safety, telephone safety and weather safety.

Training for parents will be done through an adult seminar at the beginning of the program.

The first session will held May 7 at the Administration Annex, 2101 W. Missouri (the old West Elementary School located across the street from Dennis the Menace Park).

There will be two sessions — one from 8 a.m. to noon and another from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

All children in grades one through four are encouraged to attend the training sessions to learn how to handle any difficult or frightening situation they may encounter.

Parents may register their children during working hours at the American Red Cross by calling 684-6161.

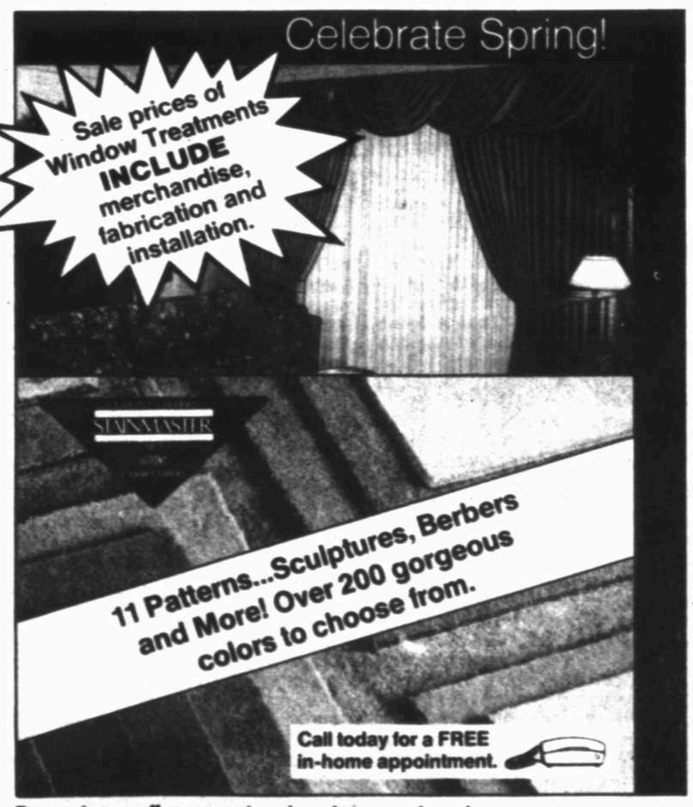

Registration is limited to 500 children. There is no charge. Pre-registration is required and the deadline is April 29.

Solving child abuse takes citizen effort

Child abuse is all around us. Almost daily, one can read in the newspaper of cases or hear reports of them on television and radio. When confronted with these appalling reports, many people shake their heads sadly and wonder why somebody doesn't "do something" to ease the suffering of these victims.

Good question.

Child abuse is a major problem that, all too frequently, society doesn't like to discuss. The silence doesn't mean the abuse isn't occurring in one of its four identifiable forms; just that it's being ignored. It's that apathy that the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program is hoping to reduce this month in Midland. April is Child Abuse Prevention Month and local officials note that beating that apathy problem is the first step in breaking the cycle of abuse. That can happen when cases of abuse are reported to the proper authorities; in Midland County that's either Child Welfare, 683-5411, the Midland County Sheriff's Department or Midland Police Department.

Figures from the Department of Human Services indicate that reporting is on the increase in Region 12, which includes Midland, Ector and 15 other Permian Basin counties. In 1980, only 1,643 cases of child abuse were reported in those counties, but by last year the total had climbed to 2,799 cases. Of that total, 1,157 cases were reported to the Midland County office and 1,642 to the Odessa office.

While cases of abuse hit closer to home when they occur in the local community, nationwide the problem takes on enormous perspective. In fact, the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse estimates there are 2 million reports of suspected child abuse each year. A conservative estimate by NCPCA places at 2,000 the number of children who die each year as a result of abuse.

Defining abuse isn't easy, either. But NCPCA has arrived at the following definition: a nonaccidental injury or pattern of injuries to a child for which there is no "reasonable" explanation. It may be either physical injury, sexual molestation, emotional abuse or neglect. It's important to recognize that discipline — guidance — is not abuse as it is defined.

Statistics also reveal that often the abuser was the victim of child abuse, thus establishing the cycle of abuse. But child abuse caseworkers note that attacking the cycle of abuse is impossible without the help of individuals in reporting cases of abuse. Officials cannot intervene unless abuse is reported, so local workers encourage individuals to report even those cases they think may be abuse but are uncertain. It could save a child's life. In emergency situations in which a child's life is obviously imperiled, officials say to call law enforcement agencies immediately.

Why doesn't somebody "do something" about child abuse? Well, you're that somebody.

JACK ANDERSON

It's time for George Bush to be himself

WASHINGTON — It seemed a simple, if mischievous, proposition: Find out what Vice President George Bush has done for the past seven years from those who sat with him at the Cabinet table.

Jack Anderson

So, we wrote letters to 33 former and present Cabinet members from the Reagan-Bush administration and asked for their opinions.

Apparently, we violated the rules of polite society. Education Secretary William Bennett publicly railed in the press, calling our request "nonsense." Some Cabinet members called the White House for advice. One suggested that they all send us a form letter. A few complained of arm twisting because our letters had cautioned them that "an unwillingness by people like yourself to take a position one way or another may send a negative message about Mr. Bush that may not be warranted." It was the kind of advice they would get from a good public relations person.

Now that the fuss has abated, we're back to our original premise — that a logical way to find out about George Bush is to ask the people who have worked with him.

We were right. All but a few Cabinet members responded in writing, in person or through a designated aide. Their responses, both on and off the record, were revealing about the generally high regard that most Cabinet secretaries hold for George Bush's integrity and decency.

But the insight they provided on his input on the major issues facing the Reagan administration revealed only a few shining moments. What stands out is his general lack of political courage, his fear of being pinned down to one position, and an unwillingness to be much more than a yes man to the president.

Our letters went out on Feb. 16, catching the Cabinet members — all Republicans — before Bush sewed up the nomination. If chief rival Sen. Robert Dole had been out of the way, the Cabinet would undoubtedly would have felt obliged to toe the party line.

We sent virtually the same nine-paragraph letter to 33 of the 36 men and women who have served Reagan as cabinet officials. Two of the 36 have died: CIA director William Casey and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige. The Labor Department alternately refused or was unable to give us the New Jersey address of former Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan — a testimony to what happens to the politically dead.

We asked the Cabinet members for examples of how Bush had made a difference in policy decisions or actions, and for their personal assessment of Bush as presidential material.

At press time, only four had provided examples of how Bush had made a difference: former Energy Secretary James B. Edwards, who publicly declared his support for Bush before Super Tuesday; Secretary of State George Shultz; former Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell; and Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Samuel R. Pierce Jr.

Conspicuous for his silence was Treasury Secretary James Baker, who was Bush's 1980 campaign manager and continues to be an energetic Bush backer. He did not respond at all.

No one wrote a letter saying anything negative about Bush. But, in person or through their aides, several shared their fear that he is not presidential material. The most interesting responses were "off the record" verbal comments from Cabinet members contradicting what they wrote in their letters.

We will report the results of our survey over the next few days.

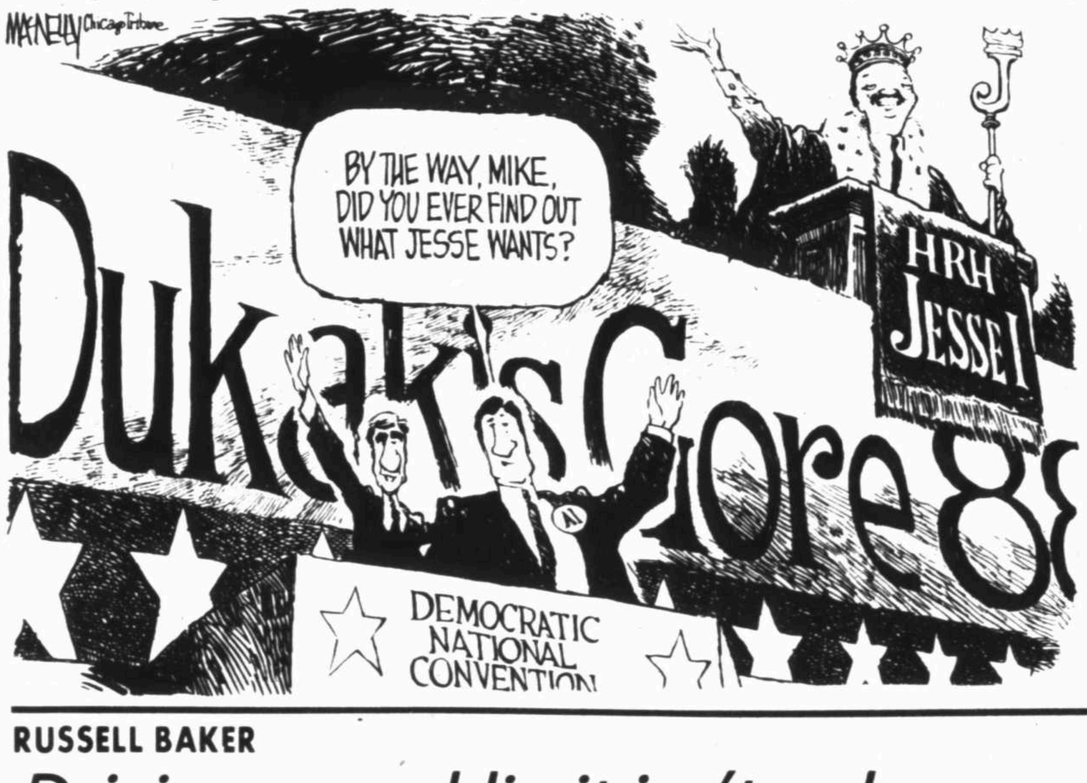

If Bush comes off as a yes man in those assessments, he is only reaping the harvest of seven years in the shadows — a place in which he eagerly put himself.

Overnight in 1980, presidential candidate Bush became running mate Bush, a devoted cheerleader for Ronald Reagan. Bush would later wear the label "wimp" for his backseat role.

The last thing Bush needed was to alienate Reagan, who could become his stongest ally when Bush's name was at the top of the ticket in 1988.

Fine. But the time has come for Bush to relinquish his vow of silence and tell the voters where Ronald Reagan leaves off and George Bush begins.

STEVE LEVINE

Demo 'veepstakes' may target Texas

AUSTIN — I was going to write something about Jesse Jackson today, but everyone else has written so much about Jesse (What does he want? Can he win the nomination? Should the "party leaders" try to stop him? Is America still too racist?) that I doubt I could identify an original thought about the man.

Levine

Being as this column won't be about Jesse, let's throw in one comment I don't think I've read anywhere else.

Six months ago — one month ago, even — political commentators summarily dismissed Jackson's chances of winning the Democratic nomination for president. As his delegate power grew, they started talking about what Jackson would try to "get" out of the party and then, finally, about what the other candidates had to do to stop Jackson from winning.

If nothing else, he seems to have as good a chance as anyone today of winning the nomination. But everyone still says there's no way he can beat George Bush in November.

Maybe so, we say. But maybe not. If Jesse's anti-drugs, anti-economic-violence message can catch on that quickly in primary season, who's to say it won't work in the fall? OK?

Well enough about Jesse. With Bush wrapping up the GOP nomination and just three men left in the Democratic race, it's time to start talking about the No. 2 spot on the ticket. And, historically, when you're talking vice presidents, you're talking Texans.

It's the Texas veepstakes.

Mike Dukakis, who's been using the patriotic-sounding sobriquet "Son of Massachusetts" recently, brought up the idea during a pre-Super Tuesday speech in Austin with numerous references to the Kennedy-Johnson, Massachusetts-Texas, ticket of 1960. 'Course he wouldn't commit to picking a running mate from Texas.

But history shows that that wouldn't be a bad idea. Texans have helped balance the ticket five times in the past 14 elections. Each time, the party with the Texan on the ballot won: John Nance Garner twice with Roosevelt in the '30s, LBJ with JFK in 1960 and I-live-in-a-Houston-hotel-room Bush twice with Ronald Reagan in '80 and '84.

Not only have the half-Texas tickets won every time, regardless of party, but they've won with an average victory margin of 12.8 percentage points. The nine other winning combinations bested their opponents by an average of just 10.7 points.

Now the three times Texans have held the top spot on the ticket — and by the way, they never lost either — they picked veeps from other parts of the country. So, if you let Bush count himself as a Texan, that leaves all the Lone Star Republicans out of the race.

(If we classify Bush as a Yankee, however, one Texas running mate to consider is Kingsville's Anne Armstrong, former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain. She'd balance the ticket quite effectively.)

On the Democratic side, we've got a number of Texans who'd probably help the ticket attract some votes and might do a fine job of attending funerals in Liechtenstein. This isn't to say that they'd get the tap — or even want it — but let's look at some possibilities:

■ U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth has already received mention from Jackson as a possible teammate. Though he's probably too liberal for lots of voters, Wright'd definitely help Jesse pull in the necessary campaign cash and would give a Jackson White House some much needed help in dealing with Congress.

■ San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros made it through the early interviews with Walter Mondale in 1984 and is extremely popular among his fellow mayors because of his understanding of the federal government's recent attempts to dump its problems onto the cities. He's more likely a running mate for Dukakis than Jackson since a black-brown ticket seems out of the question, the beginning of this column notwithstanding.

■ State Treasurer Ann Richards is a heckuva campaigner, female (I guarantee you that one of the parties will include a woman on the ticket) and ambitious.

■ Land Commissioner Garry Mauro's also ambitious but doesn't seem to have anyplace to funnel that ambition towards here in Austin now. Mauro's also got experience in holding an elective office with little power.

Driving speed limit isn't only way left to die

I have an old friend who still smokes. She refuses to give it up, or cannot give it up. She doesn't know which. She hasn't many friends left, and, of course, doesn't deserve any at all, as I remind her when I visit.

Russell Baker

Despite her deepening isolation, she seems calmer than I remember, more inclined to be philosophical. Not so, she says. "It's just the usual effect of smoking. You've forgotten, but you used to be calm and philosophical, too, years ago when you smoked. Not loud and preachy like now."

All right, all right, so I'm loud and preachy, but I'm going to live long after she's gone, I tell her, banging the table not calmly perhaps, but philosophically.

"Not if you pull another stunt like last week's," she says.

So someone has told her about my big adventure: driving all the way from Harrisburg, Pa., to New York City and staying within the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit.

"I did it for the thrill," I explain. Some men go off to savage little wars as mercenaries, some fight in the bullring, some drive in the Mille Miglia. I need something more hair-raising to gratify my masculine itch for challenging death. I take my car onto the highway and stay within the speed limit.

I amuse my sad, smoking friend with tales of gigantic 18-wheelers gnawing at the chrome on my back bumper, their drivers half mad with desire to cross New Jersey at 75 miles an hour.

"But do I play the craven coward and raise my speed even to a trifling 56 miles an hour? Never. To do so would destroy the thrill."

She hopes I may take her along sometime when I go seeking thrills on the highway, she says. She doesn't drive herself. Never learned. Fears she might kill somebody. Not driving, and with public transportation vanishing fast, she fears a future of immobility. Even challenging the great trucks with me at 55 miles an hour offers a chance to travel if we survive.

Sorry, my dear: I will never take her unless she conquers her reeking habit. My car, though two years old, still has a trace of exciting new-car smell inside. That's because I allow nobody, absolutely nobody, to smoke in it.

She complains that it becomes harder for her to get anyplace since railroad and bus services have practically ceased and airlines now refuse to carry smokers.

"Just Northwest Airlines, so far," I point out. Still, we both know that even if other airlines don't follow suit, other ways will be found to make despicable persons like her suffer for the smokiness of their ways.

"Soon whole cities, whole states will be closed to smokers," she moans. Pounding the table again, I cry out my hopes that the closings will take place soon, if only for the sake of her own health.

"Speaking of health," she murmurs, lighting another cylinder of lethal toxic materials, "how's yours?"

She always finds it curious that I have undergone natural physical changes since defeating the habit that so long afflicted me. Though we are old and dear friends, I suspect she is pleased to think of my weight and clothing problems as nature's just retribution for letting me break the nicotine addiction so easily.

"Still 18 pounds overweight?" she asks. "It wouldn't be so obvious, you know, if you gave away your old wardrobe and bought a new one a size or two bigger."

Alas, I observe, beating the disgusting addiction has many happy consequences, but becoming rich is not one of them.

"And that recent rise in your blood pressure?"

"Easily controlled with pills for a mere $90 a month, which is only $15 more than I used to pay for cigarettes."

In any case, how can she suppose that soaring blood pressure results from shaking the nicotine habit? Blood pressure is zooming all over America. It probably results from all those gigantic trucks bearing down on everybody's rear bumper at 75 miles an hour.

Preparing to leave, I mention several dreadful deaths that await her unless she gives up tobacco, then feel ashamed about behaving like a typical nonsmoker, so reminisce a moment about better times.

She is old enough to remember the 1940s when the government packed free smokes in food rations and let cigarette companies send them to soldiers overseas, thus spreading the habit.

"Even then everybody called them 'coffin nails,'" she recalls, "but nobody seemed to mind."

Of course not. In war, life is cheap, and dangerous living romantic. My friend lights up and coughs. I feel bloated in clothes too small. "Till next time," we say, the doomed and the saved.

GEORGE F. WILL

Demos suddenly find U.S. policy too weak

WASHINGTON — In a year divisible by four, springtime is such fun. Just before New York's primary, Democratic presidential candidates experience entertaining epiphanies. They discover that U.S. policy is too weak, in one particular. Regarding Israel they want policy to be robustly independent of what they usually revere — "world opinion" of the "community of nations," as embodied by the United Nations. For a few days, Democratic candidates insist that U.S. military might must be strong, strong, strong — strong enough to defend Israel. Not necessarily Nebraska, but certainly Israel.

George F. Will

Now comes Michael Dukakis, for whom "multilateralism" is a mantra, and who thinks that things like the Rio Treaty are preferable to unilateralism in protecting U.S. interests in this hemisphere. Right on schedule, Dukakis has flanked the Reagan administration on the right regarding Israel.

It is like watching Christopher Robin cast as Metternich in a school play. And getting to the right of the administration is not hard, particularly regarding the Middle East. Dukakis does it obliquely, with a bit of Arab-bashing and by affirming the Camp David Accords. That is a carom-shot criticism of the administration, which has come down with a case of the diplomatic flu known as international conference-itis.

Is Dukakis too oblique? Right. Let's get a direct answer from all the Democratic candidates to this question: What, if anything, is wrong with Prime Minister Shamir's resistance to the administration's policy?

New York brings out conflicting impulses in many Democrats. Remember 1984, when Hart and Mondale struggled to see who could love Israel most ardently? The issue was where in Israel the U.S. Embassy should be. Suddenly, and until New York's polls closed, both candidates suffered stirring public agonies because the embassy is where the State Department, United Nations and "world opinion" want it — in Tel Aviv rather than Israel's capital, Jerusalem.

Correct thinkers know that the embassy should be in East Jerusalem. That would stick a finger in the eye of the United Nations and affirm U.S. support for the proposition that Jerusalem is not negotiable — it shall forever be Israel's united capital. So here is another question for the candidates: Where should the embassy be?

In 1984, the candidates compensated for their semi-correct thinking about the embassy by competing to see who could promise to withdraw from more places in Central America. (Hart won the promise competition by a whisker when Mondale, that Mars-worshipper, said he would permit a few dozen U.S. advisers in Honduras.) This year the task of adhering to the liberal catechism is complicated by the Panama Exception.

International law is an icon in the Democratic church. Democrats have scolded the Reagan administration for insufficient reverence for international law, a sin said to reflect the administration's general "lawlessness." Well, now.

Where does Dukakis, and for that matter Jackson — foe of drugs, scourge of U.S. interventionism in other nations' "internal affairs" — stand on the current U.S. campaign to topple the drug-running regime of Panama's Noriega? There seems to be broad bipartisan support for violating the law of the land.

A treaty is the law of the land. The Charter of the Organization of American States is a treaty. Article 19 says: "No state may use or encourage the use of coercive measures of an economic or political character in order to force the sovereign will of another state and obtain from it advantages of any kind."

Eeeeek! The administration is using both in its attempt to overthrow Noriega's regime. (Please, no sophistries about the "real" government asking us to.)

We conservatives have no consciences (we know this because liberals tell us), so we are untroubled by the general principle that the United States may act like a superpower. Furthermore, we believe that when helping oppressed people like the Panamanians requires the United States to disregard some over-broad language in treaties, the disregarding is not a felony, or even a misdemeanor, but only a demi-peccadillo. However, liberals like Dukakis and Jackson have state-of-the-art consciences, so here are some questions for each of them.

Is not your conscience lacerated by the administration's attempt to act like the world's policeman regarding Noriega? As President, would you make the world safe for Noriegas by eschewing U.S. unilateralism of the sort now being exercised against Panama? Or is the following the Panama Exception to the Democratic catechism?: It is wicked for the United States to try to topple another nation's government, only if that government is, like Nicaragua's, communist.

Turned off callers leave machines to their own devices

Modisett

They call it progress. They being all those people who have bought and installed those telephone answering devices. Like your mother used to say when you were growing up, "Young man (or lady), you've got another THINK coming!"

You know what I'm talking about, those recorders you attach to your telephone and leave a message on telling people you're not home.

Ring...(click, whirr) "This is Albert Fuddlewink. The entire Fuddlewink family cannot come to the phone at this time, but at the tone if you will leave your name, telephone number, and a brief message, I'll try to get back to you as quickly as I can."

Nothing, nothing, irritates me as much as a machine telling me the human being I was calling is not at home or can't come to the phone. I mean, if they could, I would be talking with them instead of a mass of wires and switches encased in plastic. But no, we've progressed to the point that now a machine must tell me, in one way or another, that the person I'm calling can't answer to phone just now. Instead, they employed a machine to do that for them.

Wouldn't a simple no answer have sufficed?

To make the situation even more embarrassing, after the phone clicks on, half the time you're talking before you realize you've been fooled. Then you really feel like an idiot.

In fact only two things irritate me more than being tricked by a machine posing as a person. One is the machine that insists on calling at the evening meal:

"How would you like to win a free trip to the Bermudas?" the silly metallic voice rasps. "Sounds exciting doesn't it. Well, ha ha, all you need to do is to welcome our friendly company representative into your home for a free Super Cleaner demonstra ...." This is the point at which I usually hang up. I waited longer than I should have, but I'm a sucker for a sales pitch.

The other is the "secretary messenger" that calls me at the office, automatically of course, and asks if I will please hold for Wesley Findstermister. I mean, what happens if I say no? Is the machine going to argue with me?

If we're really going to go for this automation trend, why don't we do it up right and let the machines do it all. We could develop one that would call someone at the office where another machine would answer and say, with a whirr, "Hello, Wesley Findstermister isn't in the office at this time. Please leave your name and number and he'll get back to you."

That way we could all have enormous convenience...even if we didn't ever get to talk to the people we were calling.

Oh well, there's always a price to be paid for progress!

LETTERS

Midland College slights jazz ensemble's work

Two or three years ago, I wrote a letter about the lack of community support of Midland College Department of Music programs. Thanks to the Reporter-Telegram printing it, we have seen a substantial increase in community interest. But we now face a much greater obstacle — gross administrative apathy at Midland College.

The members of the MC Jazz Ensemble work very hard to prepare and present good, free entertainment to the public, through the college. We give one concert per semester in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. However, it has become increasingly difficult to secure the auditorium for one evening per semester because the administration feels it necessary to "loan" the auditorium to groups, often not associated with the college, for their debates or activities. It makes the administration "look good to the community." It seems, though, that their efforts to impress the public are suppressing their own departments' progress.

To be told by the administration "it looks like you just won't get to perform this semester" because the date we requested was instead given to a speaker who has nothing to do with fine arts, is an obvious case of disinterest in the college's progress and welfare. Speakers can speak anywhere. Acoustically, we cannot play just anywhere.

The members of the Jazz Ensemble, and others in the Music Department, are tuitioned students, enrolled in courses listed in the curriculum of the college, who receive semester grades. Our concert is our final exam. Shouldn't we be entitled to use the auditorium for our "exam" without such discrimination?

Since I have been involved in the music department, I have watched it develop into a fine program with outstanding faculty. But it is suffocating under the opinion that "looking good to the community" is more important than supporting the school's own programs and developing it into the fine educational institution it could be. I see the Music Department problem first-hand. Based on my investigation, however, this isn't isolated. It appears other departments are faced with the same apathy. Is this the way to influence and educate our youth?

Readers' views on: Jessica film controversy

How can any movie be better than real thing?

To all concerned with the rescue of Jessica McClure, Midland has always been a proud city and will remain so, as soon as this issue is put to rest.

All of you are good people, but somewhere along the line it has been forgotten about whose two hands really did the rescuing. No one party could have done it alone. He was there all the time and still is, but if you take a close look you will probably see tears in His eyes.

Why should this story be told again? The whole world was in on the real thing. A movie could never recapture the love, compassion and togetherness that was in everyone's heart.

Jessica will always be a special little girl, but the time has come to let her live a normal life. God saved her for a reason. Do you honestly think that wealth and stardom was it?

Our hospitals, cities and towns are full of people needing help. It's not too late to show ourselves and the world that we here in Midland are still the same people we were back in October when we spent 58 hours praying and digging together.

May I suggest that the money that has been donated in the past and the money that will be made in the future be donated in Jessica's name to other children in the hospital that are less fortunate? Her life was saved and maybe others will live too. Helping others is what it is all about.

After I read the letter from the lady from rainbow, I just had to write this. You people are our people and we are proud of you, but at the same time a little ashamed. However, without a doubt I know that when you are needed you will be there without any thought of who did what.

Give Midland back the dignity that it so deserves. If it must be in the news, let it be something good again.

Disagreement over film rights appalling

I am appalled at the disagreement over movie rights for Jessica McClure's ordeal. Last October, the coverage of little Jessica's rescue was amazing. Even 300 miles away in Fort Worth, I received a detailed account of what was going on here.

It is very sad that such an endearing story of a city pulling together to save a child's life has turned into a struggle for fame and fortune. Hopefully, the new Blue-Ribbon Citizens Committee can resolve the problem and remind others of the cooperation and love that was shared to save the little girl's life.

European alliance now just paper tiger in today's reality

Safire

LONDON — Last month, NATO held its last meeting. The Brussels session wasn't officially the final meeting — its joint communique was poignantly labeled "A Time for Reaffirmation" — but future confabulations cannot hide the fact that NATO is now a paper alliance.

Its raison d'etre was fear of a Soviet invasion of Europe, and its essence was the guarantee that the United States would treat an attack upon Amsterdam as an attack upon Chicago. NATO's military strategy was to use conventional weapons to delay the Soviet movement westward, then to turn to battlefield nuclear artillery and missiles, and when those defenses failed, to expect the United States to launch a nuclear attack on the Soviet Union.

None of that is present-day realthink. Despite the presence of 18,000 Soviet tanks and enough weaponry to decimate the continent, few in Europe fear a Soviet invasion.

Even fewer believe that America would launch a nuclear attack on the Soviet Union, inviting the leveling of American cities, to punish the Russians for rolling into Europe. That realization turns our "nuclear umbrella" into a parasol.

"Today the fear of nuclear weapons is greater than the fear of the Soviets," Richard Nixon, ever the realist, told the Washington Times editor, Arnaud de Borchgrave, last week.

"That's what made the 'better-Red-than-dead' slogan a tempting option for some — and when you're facing death, it's probably a close call."

The Russians believed Nixon was mean enough to push the button if they invaded Europe; nobody believes the next U.S. president will be that unpredictable, and all know that such a policy would have no popular support.

The recent signing of the INF treaty, despite the forced smiles of European leaders, marked the military parting of the two ends of the North Atlantic alliance.

A decade ago, when Brezhnev tried to dominate Europe with new midrange missiles, the Europeans and Americans countered with what turned out to be NATO's finest hour: despite the cries of our fearful freezeniks (including Jesse Jackson, who refuses to this day to admit his profound mistake) we placed an equal force of U.S. missiles in Europe to call the Soviet bluff.

Gorbachev wisely backed off, signing a treaty that removes his cities from the threat of U.S. medium-range missiles. This move toward fewer nuclear weapons brought hosannas from around the world but now reminds Europeans that the defense of Europe must be done the expensive way — raising and equipping armies by themselves.

Such military cooperation between Western European powers is called "the European pillar." The U.S. used to worry about side deals within the Atlantic alliance; now Reagan welcomes the pillar, but cannot even whisper the reason: because it will be needed to prop up the region when we begin to take our 300,000 troops out.

And ready or not, the 41st president will pull them out in the 1990s. The presence of a tripwire — the potential of enough U.S. casualties to justify our triggering a nuclear strike — is no longer in the U.S. national interest.

The delay that their fighting would cause would not give the world time to stop the invasion; on the contrary, the ensuing brouhaha would reassure the invaders that U.S. public opinion was against heavy nuclear response.

If so, that knocks into a cocked hat the whole notion of the use of a conventional force capable of delaying the Russians for three or four weeks. The delaying force would merely expose our strategic weakness of will (Edward Luttwak, this century's Clausewitz, is writing a book with this thesis).

Only a conventional army capable of resisting and rolling back the Soviet invaders has any strategic value, and its cost is a burden Europeans are unwilling to assume.

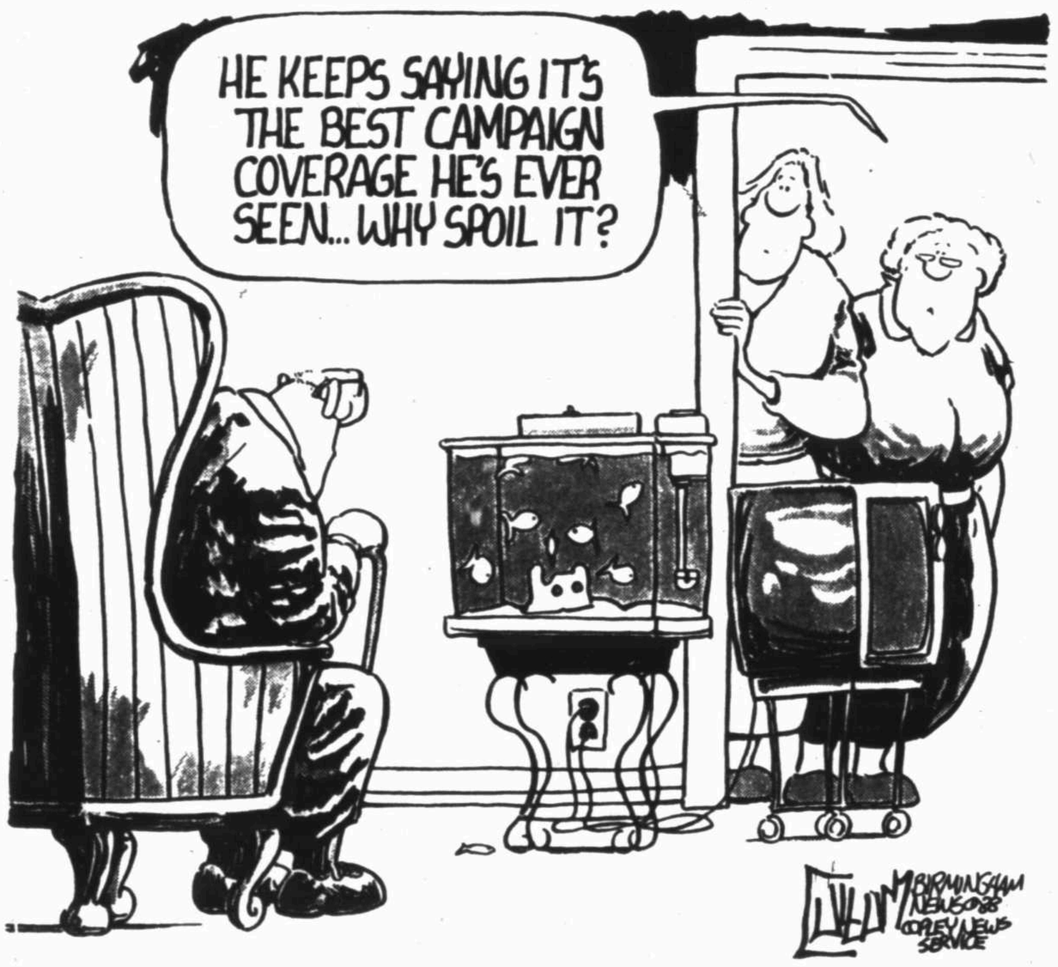

So what should be the successor to "flexible response," which was the rhetorical but not strategic successor to "massive retaliation"?

I cannot vouchsafe that to you in the remaining three paragraphs (sure I could, but do not want to louse up my visa application to the Moscow summit meeting), but its basis goes beyond dickering for an asymmetrical reduction of forces.

A superpower must act globally. Europe is one region, its component powers thinking only regionally in face of a worldwide threat. Our interest is to cooperate with the European region in resisting long-term Soviet expansion, but also to support and extend freedom in other regions like Southeast Asia, the Middle East and Central America.

For Europe, today's pillar talk is healthy if it leads to regional self-reliance; for America, worldwide action to defend freedom requires a new freedom of action.

Watershed finally looming five weeks before French election

Lewis

PARIS — With three weeks to go before the first round of French presidential elections, five weeks before the final vote, a watershed looms after a ho-hum campaign.

The arguments have been much more about personalities than politics, because the basic lines of policy are set and won't change much. What is going to be changed in the next year or two is the French political landscape, the structure of the game.

If President Mitterrand, the favorite, is re-elected, he will try to form a center-left coalition government, perhaps in two stages with a minority Socialist caretaker government while new alliances are negotiated.

He has chosen the posture of running not as the Socialist candidate but as candidate of the Socialists, a distinction that de Gaulle introduced with his claim of being above party.

Should it prove impossible to wangle a majority from the assembly somehow, he would then dissolve the chamber and call new legislative elections.

It is all but inconceivable that the Socialists would win, so he would then be forced to go on sharing power with an opposing prime minister. That would prove that the last two years of "cohabitation" was no aberration but a shift of constitutional practice enforced by the voters.

The French call it the Fifth Republic, and some are already advocating a change in the Constitution to bring the vague demarcation of the president's and prime minister's powers in the text into line with circumstance.

The fact that the regime has lasted two years with two antagonistic heads has been remarkable. But it is a brittle arrangement and there is a felt need for something more durable.

The 1992 deadline for fuller economic integration of the Common Market is seen as a great challenge for France, its chance to rise and shine on the European scene or to be left behind.

Mitterrand is a literary man who seeks to inspire lyrical visions. He speaks of Europe in humanist terms, not just as economic opportunity.

Marie-France Garaud, a sharp-witted politician on the right, suggests that he dreams of making a Europe of human rights into the force opposing totalitarian Europe in the East, "hoping to reproduce on a continental scale what happened in France where Mitterrandism succeeded in marginalizing communism."

That may well be, and if he tries, it would surely exert an important influence on European leftism and neutralism, particularly in West Germany and Britain.

Garaud doesn't think it would work, and sees in what she considers his lack of realism "a great danger for France." But that is what the critics prophesied when he took Communists into the government in 1981, only to chew them to bits.

Mitterrand's approach implies a centrist France.

It is ironic, because until recently it was the French left that insisted on maintaining a sharply limned left-right division. When Mitterrand was elected in 1981, Lionel Jospin, who became head of the Socialist Party, proclaimed that "in France, the center is like the Bermuda triangle. Whoever approaches it disappears."

Doomsday economic prophets' works run in cycles

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — From time to time over the past decade there have been gloom and doom predictions about the economic future of our country. Some of these dire forecasts have been made by well-known economists. Others have been mystical "thinkers."

Last October a book was published entitled "The Great Depression of 1990" (Simon and Schuster). Written by Indian-born Dr. Ravi Batra, a professor of economics at Southern Methodist University who has been hailed as a top international economic theorist, the book attracted wide attention in this country and abroad. In it, he predicted we were "moving toward the greatest worldwide depression in history, in which millions of people will suffer catastrophic financial reversals."

Most of these doomsday prophets base their pessimism on the "cycle" theory that every couple of decades the good years will turn to lean ones. This became known in the earlier part of this century as the Kondratieff cycle, named after a Russian economist, Nikolai Kondratieff, whom Stalin kept in solitary confinement for years until he went insane and died. Stalin imprisoned him in the 1920s not for forecasting a worldwide depression — which he did — but because he predicted the capitalist crash of the 1930s would be followed by a new wave of prosperity. Kondratieff also predicted the worst economic collapse of all would come in the early years of the 21st century.

It is this prelude that I hope will encourage you to appreciate as much as I do the good news that follows in a report from Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent. It is not based on theory but on facts as found by the economic experts of 24 industrial nations, including our own.

"In the year 2020," Kaplan reported, "America's economy will be slightly more than twice as big as its nearest rival — China, not Japan — and in little danger of being overtaken for the rest of the decade."

"Who says so? The very official Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development, the analytical and oversight agency to which the world's 24 top industrial nations belong.

"The OECD's projection of the economic reality a generation from now injects a much-needed sense of perspective into America's latest popular pastime of decrying the nation's loss of economic power and competitive edge.

"Democratic Party presidential hopefuls have harped on this theme. Congress is awash in proposals to 'restore' America's economic 'pride.'

"Several U.S. economic think tanks, mostly of liberal political orientation, warn that America is headed for the economic shoals as other countries overtake and then surpass it.

"All of this makes for attention-grabbing newspaper headlines. But, as virtually all international economic authorities have known right along, the facts are less dramatic. From America's standpoint, they're also considerably more reassuring.

"Boiled down to its essentials, the OECD's message is nearly identical to other global economic forecasts looking ahead to the 21st century. The message is that the American economy is not only too vast to be supplanted by any challenger now in view, but is favored by some basic trends. The latter are expected to weigh even more heavily as time progresses.

"Chief among them is demographics. Alone among the present leading industrial powers, the U.S. population is expected to continue growing at an acceptable pace, providing an ample work force, into the foreseeable future.

"By contrast, Western Europe's birthrate is declining with alarming speed. The birthrate in West Germany, possessor of Europe's strongest economy, has already fallen below the replacement level.

"The same is expected to be true shortly of European Russia. Japan's population has stopped growing, essentially as a consequence of limited land space and radically changing social mores.

"Only newly industrialized China, with its one billion-strong population, will possess a labor force and internal market comparable to America's in the coming century.

"However, as the OECD points out, the Chinese start out so far behind that they're unlikely to catch up to the U.S. before another century is in sight.

"In this contest, the Soviet Union is regarded as being, and headed, nowhere.

"European experts return again and again to the fact that America remains the world's 'essential' economy. In other words virtually nothing America does fails to have a decisive bearing on global developments. That's not true of any other nation, including Japan.

"For example, a recent OECD study indicated that a cut in U.S. imports, brought about by the increased cost of foreign goods stemming from a weaker dollar, may eliminate four million jobs around the world."

"An economy with that kind of clout is in no danger of withering away," Hendrik Smits, and OECD official said. "God help us all if it did."

Let us hope the economic counselors of despair will study the OECD report.

Childhood development is focus of observance at Midland College

EDUCATION

From Staff Reports

Several special events are planned by the Midland College Child Development Center as part of the "Week of the Young Child" this week.

The Child Development Center, located in the Health Sciences Building, will have a children's art exhibit Monday through Friday. Open House is scheduled on Monday from 8-11 a.m. and on both Monday and Tuesday from 3-5 p.m.

Children will have their own campus parade Tuesday at 9:45 a.m., concluding with a balloon launch at 10 a.m. in the vicinity of the Hodge Carillon Tower.

"Gov. Clements proclaimed Wednesday as 'Texas Child Celebration Day', but we'll be celebrating all week and invite the public to visit the center and watch the parade," said Rita Stotts, director of the college's Child Development Center.

The Center provides child care for children of students, faculty, staff, and the public. It also serves as an on-campus teaching facility for students taking Child Development classes and for employees of public child care facilities upgrading their educational and professional development.

Stotts also noted that PBS stations will be telecasting a special documentary on Wednesday at 8 p.m. It's entitled "Who Cares for the Children: The State of Child Care in America."

Feeling "Old"? or can I do something?

Aging doesn't mean you have to feel tired all the time. A thorough physical examination will help discover any conditions which call for improving the physiologic and immunologic processes in the body.

Lifestyle measures such as adopting a healthy emotional outlook, proper diet, exercise, and avoidance of harmful substances are all important. We refer to this as "health enhancement."

Is there more to health enhancement?

Dr. E. W. McCullough prescribes several new physiologic treatments involving:

1) Tissue oxygenators — to give off oxygen to ischemic (anemic) tissues.
2) Anti-oxidants — to remove free radicals.
3) Cell energizers — to increase cell energy.
4) Fat burners — to burn fat instead of carbohydrates.
5) Metabolic catalyzers — to accelerate building up or tearing down of protein.
6) Plus other methods to correct glandular imbalances, cholesterol abnormalities, and circulation problems.

If you want to do something to feel better, you are invited to consult with Dr. McCullough.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC prepares for re-accrediting

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

In order to prosper and grow, every organization needs to stand back and take a look at itself occasionally. That's what Midland College has begun to do in order to prepare for re-accrediting by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

It's a year of self-study, followed by a year of visits by a committee from the Southern Association, the college's primary accreditation agency.

College president Dr. Jess Parrish named Dr. Charles Simmons, instructor in history, to chair the steering committee. Other members of this group include: Bob Peetz, instructor in criminal justice; Dr. Celia Harris, instructor in associate degree nursing; Ricardo Saldana, director of counseling; Donna Bennett, secretary for the registrar's office; Dr. Stan Jacobs, chairman of the fine arts division; and Dr. Pamela Howell, instructor in English and chairman of the Faculty Senate.

Serving as chairmen for major committees will be: Dr. Jack Schneider, chairman of the communications studies division, institutional purpose; Dr. Will Morris, chairman of the cultural studies division, institutional effectiveness; Dr. Camille Duchesene, director of continuing education, educational curriculum; Dale Westfall, instructor in business studies, administration; and Tom Vannaman, instruction in business administration, student support.

MC originally was accredited by the Southern Association for a five-year period, which is the term for all new institutions. It then received a ten-year accreditation, which the new study hopes to have renewed for another ten years.

Dallas schools plan dropout prevention program

DALLAS (AP) — Hoping to stem a 28 percent dropout rate, the Dallas school district has unveiled its first comprehensive dropout prevention program, which is aimed at having 95 percent of its high school students graduating by 1998.

The 192-page plan, developed in response to a new state law requiring Texas school districts to create dropout prevention programs, calls for every school to organize a team of teachers, nurses and counselors to work with potential dropouts.

The district would create a youth services division to coordinate student services, a dropout prevention department and a parental involvement department. The district also would open a dropout recovery center for students who have left the system and want to finish their high school educations.

"It is extremely comprehensive and could be called a 'Cadillac' plan," said Acting Superintendent Otto Fridia. Although Fridia said he was pleased with the report, drafted from recommendations by a task force and top administrators, he said the program may be too expensive for the district to implement fully.

Fridia estimated the plan, called the Student and Teacher Assistance Resources plan, or STAR, would cost $1.2 million the first year.

"Finances are going to play a role," said Fridia, who told school board members that the plan "probably will be scaled down considerably to a more affordable proposal." The plan was sent to school board members Friday.

Man to face charges in Panhandle

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man who led police to the apparent remains of his 5-month-old son in a San Antonio park was returned to the Texas Panhandle Saturday to face a hearing on separate child abuse charges, authorities said.

The Pampa man had been brought to San Antonio after telling lawmen he had wrapped his son in blankets and in January 1987 buried him in the shallow grave in a northside city park.

Police searched about four hours Friday before uncovering the skeletal remains of a child.

Thousands of MC basketball fans joined millions of others in watching Kansas University upset the University of Oklahoma in the NCAA basketball championship. It was sweet for former MC star Lincoln Minor, who played his heart out in the 1987 NJCAA championship game that MC lost by a point.

But it was another frustrating night for MC grads Ricky Grace and Daron "Mookie" Blaylock who performed well for the Sooners. Blaylock was sitting on the bench with a broken foot during that 1987 NJCAA finale. All three were on the 1985-86 Chaparral team which won 33 straight before losing in the NJCAA first round to undefeated San Jacinto.

Plaudits to the Midland Jaycees for another great Texas vs. USA Junior College All-Star game last night in Chaparral Center. If you missed the game, you can watch it May 10 on HSE network. The Jaycees work hard on this project, which brings a lot of attention to Midland and MC. It also spotlights the great talent that's performing each year for the nation's community colleges. We understand the Jaycees are contemplating some changes for next year, but those will talked about next spring.

Victim of bomb had criminal record

FORT WORTH (AP) — Authorities Friday identified the victim of a car bomb explosion that scattered debris for two blocks as a 26-year-old Colombian national with a criminal record.

Giovanni Manuel Mancini, a part-owner in a tanning salon in suburban Hurst, was killed in Thursday's explosion, said Fort Worth Police spokesman Doug Clarke.

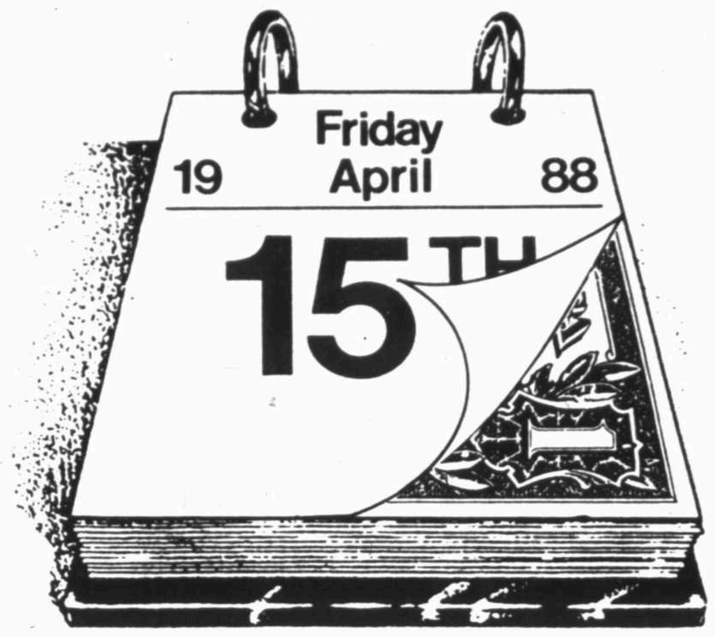

Mancini was on probation at the time of his death in connection with the shooting death of his girlfriend on April 25, 1987, in Irving, records show.

Mancini was charged in the slaying, but pleaded guilty on Sept. 14 to involuntary manslaughter, according to Dallas County court records. In addition to probation, he was ordered to pay $3,025 in restitution and $300 in fines.

In addition to local charges, Florida records show Mancini had a record of drug and weapons charges in Dade County, where his parents apparently live.

Florida records show Mancini was arrested in 1980 for unlawfully carrying a weapon and possession of marijuana and in 1981 for fleeing arrest and possession of a short-barrel shotgun.

"We have several motives right now, but we have not found anything to direct us intensely in any one area," said Louis Iliano, resident agent for the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

IRA -- Pro and Con

If you can still deduct your IRA contribution from income -- if you are not covered by another pension plan, or if your income is below $25,000 for an individual or $40,000 for a couple -- it remains a useful way to save for retirement while reducing taxes. If, however, you don't qualify for the deduction, you may want to think twice and consider your alternatives before you invest.

If you're enrolled in a 401(k) plan at work, that's a better deal, offering you bigger tax savings and an opportunity to contribute a larger portion of your earnings. If you have self-employment earnings, a Keogh plan or a Simplified Employment Pension Plan an IRA also offers sizable tax savings and a chance to save more.

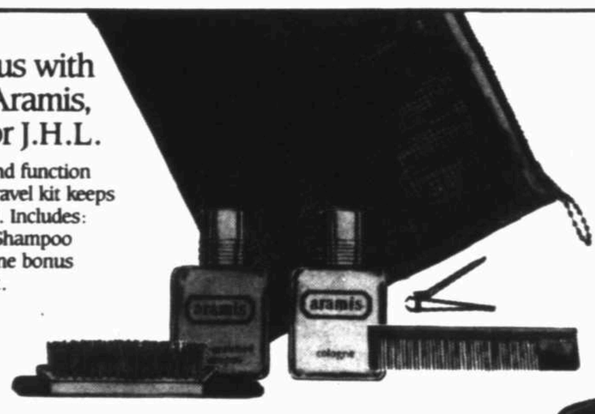

You may get a comparable return if you invest in tax-free municipal bonds, with none of the paperwork, no limits on contributions, nor a penalty for early withdrawal, but you won't have the flexibility of an IRA, which has so many investment alternatives.

STATE IN BRIEF

Millionaire aids seniors

DENISON (AP) — Some lucky high school seniors in Mayes County, Okla., and Grayson County, Texas, will have extra money in their pockets when they enroll in college this fall, thanks to an eccentric millionaire.

Oliver Dewey Mayor was 86 years old when he died in 1985, leaving a multimillion-dollar estate that is expected to fund thousands of dollars in scholarships each year. The first scholarships will be awarded to students enrolling this fall.

Mayor, who made his fortune in oil, had for years waged an angry battle over the waste of tax money at all levels of government. He was raised in Mayes County but later moved to Denison, Texas, where he lived in a small, frame house and never married. When he died on Sept 9, 1985, several of his 12 brothers and sisters lost a lawsuit contesting his will.

His estimated $6.7 million estate went toward the establishment of the Mayor Foundation to be used for educational and charitable institutions only in Grayson and Mayes counties.

Workers' deaths accidental

IRVING (AP) — Two unrelated mishaps in which workers were killed in a hotel elevator and in a fall from scaffolding at Texas Stadium have been ruled accidental deaths, an official said Saturday.

Police Lt. Hugh Corbin said Maxie Wynn Jr. of Avinger was killed Friday morning as he installed telephone cable in an elevator shaft at the Harvey House.

Wynn, 23, was working on the third-floor level, standing on a counterweight shaft for the elevator, when the elevator accidentally was moved upward, said Corbin.

A workman was killed at Texas Stadium Friday afternoon when he apparently fell off some scaffolding as others painted part of the roof of the athletic complex, said Corbin.

The victim was Harold Grafton, 36, of Dallas, said Corbin.

Desert searched for bodies

EL PASO (AP) — More than 300 law officers and military personnel today searched El Paso's northeast desert, where the bodies of a half-dozen young women have been found since September.

The officers began their search around dawn, authorities said.

El Paso Police Lieutenant J.R. Grijalva said officials pretty much had exhausted all other alternatives. He was hopeful that a massive combing of a 10-mile area would be productive.

Democrat ousted by rule

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — Democratic County Commissioner Lorenzo "Yankee" Camarillo has been declared ineligible for re-election because he voted in the Republican primary last month.

Camarillo, who won the Democratic nomination for a second term as a Comal County commissioner, said he was unaware of the state law that bars a candidate in one primary from voting in the other.

"Ignorance of the law is no excuse. I just made that mistake. It's a weird statute that tells you you can't vote, can't cross over," said the commissioner, who plans to run in November as a write-in candidate.

Texas wins, but SJ's Butler steals show

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The third annual Texas-USA All-Star Classic was different things to different people.

For former Midland College stars Skeeter Henry and Billy Ray Smith, it was one last shot at pleasing the Chaparral Center fans.

For David Butler, it was a chance to disprove his own axiom that guards get the most glory at all-star games.

And for Coaches Larry Brown of the national champion of Kansas Jayhawks and Billy Tubbs of the runnerup Oklahoma Sooners, it was a chance to see firsthand a player or two that might help them in the next two years.

Oh yes, the Texas stars soared to a 123-112 decision over the U.S. stars after starting out with a 15-2 lead.

WHILE HENRY scored 22 points and Smith added 16 for the Texas team, Butler stole the show by earning Most Valuable honors in a poll of coaches and media.

The former San Jacinto star scored 20 points, but stuck by his earlier comments.

"All-star games are mainly for the guards," Butler said. 'I owed my points to them all the way, because they set me up."

Henry and former Odessa College star Riley Smith fueled Texas' early spurt with six and four points, respectively. In fact, Henry scored eight points in the first five minutes while the U.S. team was having trouble getting untracked.

The national stars quickly bounced back by outscoring the Texans 21-8 in a four-minute span to pull into a 23-all tie. Texas coach Scott Gernander said the turnaround was expected.

"Us getting ahead like that was the surprising thing," he said. "I knew they'd come back.

"Whenever you have a game of transition, you'll have times when one team makes a long run," Gernander added. "It was just the kind of game I thought it would be."

THE TEAMS jockeyed for position for several minutes midway through the first half, but Texas took the lead for good on a three-point shot by Freeman West of Paris Junior College with 10:06 left in the half. The Texans held an eight-point lead at the half and built up as much as a 22-point bulge in the second half before coasting toward the win.

Only the offensive rebounding of U.S. forward Johnny McNeil kept the national stars from falling any further. McNeil, from Chowan College in Murfreesboro, N.C., tied Riley Smith for game scoring honors with 22 points.

The U.S. stars were hampered by the necessity of playing some of their personnel out of position, coach Ken Rockliitz said.

Missions nip Angels in 10, 6-4

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio designated hitter Javier Ortiz cracked a two-run home run with one out in the 10th inning to push the Missions over the Midland Angels 6-4 in Texas League baseball action here Saturday.

The Missions' rally negated a three-run Angel burst in the ninth that enabled Midland to force extra innings for the second straight night.

After Midland left the bases loaded in its half of the 10th, Luis Lopez singled with one out and Ortiz bashed a Sherm Corbett pitch over the right-center field fence to pin the Angels with their first loss of the season.

Midland erased a 4-1 San Antonio lead with a ninth-inning rally that started with singles by Jim Thomas and Dan Grunhard. Lee Stevens doubled home both runners, took third on the throw home and scored on a single by Jeff Manto.

The Angels scored their other run in the fourth inning on singles by Bill Geivett and Grunhard and a sacrifice fly by Stevens.

MIDLAND'S abortive 10th inning rally started when Dario Nunez was hit by a pitch and had to leave the game. Mike Pappas ran for him and was awarded second base when Midland manager Max Olivares conplained that San Antonio catcher Darrin Fletcher had picked up the ball with his mask.

Pappas took third on a wild pitch, after which Thomas walked and stole second. Geivett was then intentionally walked to load the bases, and the strategy worked for San Antonio when Grunhard grounded into a force play at the plate and Stevens struck out.

The Missions touched Midland starter Tim Burcham for two runs in both the first and sixth innings, though the first-inning runs were unearned.

Corbett, 0-1, took the loss in relief, while Mike Munoz got the win for San Antonio in relief of Missions starter Mike Pitz, who threw 8⅓ innings of eight-hit ball.

Todd Eggertsen makes his first start of the season for the Angels in today's game beginning at 2:05 p.m. The Angels remain in San Antonio through Tuesday before traveling to El Paso.

Midland High's Sterling Warren gets off shot toss in Tall City Relays.

Despite wind, TC records tumble

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The weather didn't cooperate at Memorial Stadium Saturday for the Tall City Relays with cold, gusty winds hampering action, but six records fell anyway and some high powered chess moves were created while heading into the final week before the District 4-5A meet in San Angelo next Saturday.

Odessa Permian waltzed to the team title with 132 points, outdistancing defending champion Lubbock Estacado by 21 points while Lubbock Coronado edged Permian for the girls' title, 138-129½.

But this was a day for comebacks, personal bests and getting that last leg up before the real stakes go on the line next week.

Midland Lee's Jimmy Fennell and Odessa Permian's Valdis Coleman produced the comebacks after missing most of the season with hamstring problems. Fennell's comeback was the most impressive.

FENNELL turned in a 13.88 in the 110 high hurdles, defeating Permian's Shawn Crow in his return. Crow, in fact, got the double whammy put on him as Lee's Marcus Strambler turned in a 37.44 in the 300 hurdles to defeat Crow in that event.

"I wasn't as smoothe as I would like. I hit the first four hurdles and was behind Crow," said Fennell. "Crow really pushes me and I try to push him. My goal is to get to state this year and I know I still have a long way to go, but I'll take this for a start."

It was an amazing performance since Fennell has not run the hurdles for six weeks.

Strambler noted that his victory over Crow in the 300 hurdles may still hold a question mark for next week's district meet.

"The reason I lost to Crow in San Angelo was because the hurdles were on the line instead of in the lane and I don't run well like that," said Strambler. "The district meet will be in San Angelo again and I'm already working on running the lines."

Criticism mounts at Augusta

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Things that have festered below the surface at the Masters for years could no longer be contained by the somewhat artificial veneer of serenity, green jackets and lawn parties at the Augusta National Golf Club.

They erupted in words as the tournament overseer criticized the rising cost of purses demanded by the pros who, for two days now have criticized Masters officials for the condition of the course.

Hord Hardin, the chairman of the Augusta National Golf Club, indicated the Masters probably won't continue forever if that meant keeping pace with the multimillion-dollar purses on the PGA Tour.

Asked if the Masters might cease if it were forced to increase the purse a great deal, Hardin said, "You have to worry about it."

BUT HARDIN was given something more immediate to worry about when Fuzzy Zoeller leveled severe criticism of the playing conditions at this tournament, which was started in 1934 by Bobby Jones. Within hours, one of the most highly respected men in the sport, Arnold Palmer, joined with Zoeller in rapping the men who run the Masters because of what they have done to the course where he won four times.

After shooting a 66 for the lowest score during the first 36 holes of the 52nd Masters, Zoeller said officials had made "a joke" of the event because the greens have been hardened to the texture of a table top, so that balls won't hold on the hard surfaces.

"I'm not a contender anymore," said Palmer, who missed the cut Friday by six shots. "But I'm very disappointed. This is a disservice to the Masters and to the people who watch it. This is too great a tournament and a golf course to turn to trickery.

"I don't enjoy being out there making a fool of myself or seeing the best players in the world four-putt or bounce over the green," Palmer said.

Asked if he had told Hardin how he felt, Palmer said: "He'll hear. If you tell Hord, he just writes it down and throws it away."

The ninth green appeared to be more brown than green this morning.

"That green is totally unfair," said Mark Calcavecchia. "It has no grass on it." Calcavecchia entered the third round today in second place.

SANDY LYL#, the Scot who led by two shots after two rounds, said, "There's a fine line between being very tough and being ridiculous."

Lyle made a magnificent bunker shot at the second hole Friday that gave him a birdie 4 and emphasized how these greens are playing. After his second shot at the par-5 No. 2, Lyle's ball was sitting up well in the bottom of the bowl of the big, right front bunker. He was about 40 feet from the pin that was cut on the far right front of the green.

Bulldogs do it again, beat Rebs

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

There must be something about a Midland High-Midland Lee matchup that makes Mother Nature angry. And when the two teams get together, Ma Nature takes her frustrations out on the Rebels.

The Bulldogs defeated the Rebs 8-6 Saturday, marking the second time this season the Midland-Lee matchup was played under far less than ideal circumstances, hampered by foul, windy, cold weather. It was also the second time this year the Bulldogs have come out victorious over their cross-town rivals. Midland won the district opener, 10-5, last month.

Eric Boyt and Scott Mowles both drove in three runs for the Bulldogs as starting pitcher Kevin Rychell pitched a three-hitter through six innings.

Lee centerfielder Blaine McAnally went 2-for-3 with two doubles and one RBI in a losing cause.

THE BULLDOGS scored four runs in the second after Clark Crawford opened with a double and Dorey Thompson knocked a perfectly placed opposite field single which drove in Crawford. Second baseman Jason Stone copied Thompson's single, his also landing just inside the right-field line.

Midland High's three hits got the best of Lee starter Michael Pearson, who walked Tony Perez to load the bases. When Pearson, 1-1 in district, walked Eric Boyt, driving in Stone, Lee Coach Ernie Johnson went to reliever Cal Jenkins. Jenkins, who had thrown 223 pitches Tuesday against Abilene High, wasn't the answer, though, as another walked forced home Perez and the Bulldogs had a 5-1 lead.

WHEN TALKING in terms of the big inning, the Bulldog second was just that, although MHS showed signs of duplicating their run production in the third.

Masters runaway becomes a race

By BOB GREEN

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — The rout is now a race.

"I left the door open," Scotland's Sandy Lyle said after he squandered half of his four-shot lead Saturday in the third round of the 52nd Masters.

"But that's the way it goes," shrugged Lyle, who was shaken out of his customary composure when he stumbled on the back nine at the Augusta National Golf Club course.

"I had a chance to pull well ahead of the pack," he said. "I guess I got a little too confident."

But some of Lyle's leading challengers suggested that he has every right to be confident.

"You've been having a tough time the last couple of weeks, haven't you, Ace," Fuzzy Zoeller said in mock derision, actually a salute to Lyle's prowess.

"He's got a big paycheck in his pocket from (his second victory of the year at Greensboro) last week. He's playing well. I don't think he feels any pressure," Zoeller said.

"This man (Lyle) can play great golf. He's playing well now, so we have to watch out," said Spain's Seve Ballesteros, who remained in the hunt for a third Masters title.

"SANDY HAS been playing so well all year, his confidence has to be 'way up there," Ben Crenshaw said.

Crenshaw, Zoeller and Langer all were within striking distance of Lyle going into Sunday's final round of the chase for the famed green jacket and a $183,800 first prize.

So were Mark Calcavecchia, Fred Couples, Craig Stadler and Don Pooley.

"There'll be a lot of shouting going on tomorrow," said Lyle, the leading money-winner on the PGA Tour this season.

"If I go into a kamikaze dive, I'll just have to slow down and pull myself together."

MASTERS

There was a hint of a dive on the back nine — a patch of trouble that produced two bogeys in four holes and left the door open for at least eight players to have a last-round shot.

Lyle, who appeared on the verge of a runaway, could do no better than a par 72 and completed three trips over the hills and greens of Augusta National in 210, six under par.

CRENSHAW and Calcavecchia, tied for second at 212, were the closest with 18 holes to go.

Crenshaw, the 1984 Masters winner, used a birdie-birdie finish for a round of 67, the best of the day. Calcavecchia scored an eagle-3 in his round of 72.

Zoeller, who touched off a storm of controversy Friday with his outspoken criticism of Augusta National's greens and golf's officialdom, remained in contention for his second Masters title with a 72 that left him at 214.

He was tied with Couples and Langer, the former Masters champ from West Germany. Both shot 71s on a perfect spring day.

Ballesteros was tied at 215, five shots back, with Pooley and Stadler. Ballesteros and Stadler had 70s and Pooley matched par 72.

Tom Watson, who defended Augusta's greens Friday, became a victim this day. He four-putted the 16th, missing three times inside of 6 feet.

The triple-bogey dropped him from 2-under — and very much in the title hunt — to 1-over.

Watson, however, came back with a birdie on the 17th and finished with a 73 for a 54-hole score of even-par 216.

That, he said, was close enough.

"It might take a 65 tomorrow," he said. "It all depends on the start. If you can play a good front nine, anything can happen on the back."

He was not alone in his miseries on the slick slopes of the double-quick greens.

Greg Norman, who finished second in the last two Masters, spent much of his day scowling and shaking his head at putts that wouldn't fall in his round of 71 that left him at 221 and, apparently, out of it.

Ballesteros, the co-favorite with Norman in the pre-tournament speculation, admitted he was "mad at myself" after a three-putt double bogey on the 11th.

And Lyle, normally a placid, plodding competitor, exhibited some rare emotion when the greens began to eat him up on the back nine.

HE POUNDED his putter on the ground, clasped both hands to his head and stamped his foot on frustration as he endured his third three-putt of the day on the 16th hole.

Lyle, a former British Open champion and winner of two American titles this season, quickly pulled away with birdies from 6-feet or less on the second and third holes.

He three-putted for bogey on the fifth, but got the shot back with an 8-foot putt on the eighth hole and was four in front at the turn.

But things began to change on the back.

Lyle, who birdied eight of the first 10 par-5 holes he played in the tournament, hooked his drive on the par-5 13th hole into an unplayable position, had to take a drop and wound up two-putting for a bogey-6.

He had to make an 8-foot second putt to save par on the 14th, then three-putted for par on the 500-yard 15th.

ON THE PAR-3 16th, he put his tee shot in an awkward position just above a bunker but only some 15 feet from the cup. He elected to putt out of the rough, and stubbed it. It took him two more shots to get down.

That cut his lead to two, but he held it the rest of the way.

Calcavecchia, playing in the final twosome with Lyle, was at even-par through the first 13 holes, then bogeyed the 14th and found himself four behind.

But he made up half the deficit on one hole with a magnificent, hooked long-iron from the rough that cleared the water and set up a 10-foot eagle putt on the 15th.

Crenshaw, who did not have a bogey on his card, played well before the other leaders and jumped over 12 players with the best round of the day.

He capped it with a 30-foot birdie putt on the 17th, and a grin-producing 15-footer on the final hole.

Kevin Rychell and Dorey Thompson led off with back-to-back singles and after Stone struck out, Jenkins walked three straight batters, bringing in Thompson. Scott Mowles drove in the final two runs of the inning — and of the game — on an up-the-middle single with two outs.

"Not very good pitching, and not any hitting," Rebels head coach Ernie Johnson said.

On three straight walks in two consecutive innings, Johnson said, "Nothing goes through your mind, you just wonder why you can't throw strikes. It's the first time all year we've had anything like that. It's unusual."

Strikes were at a minimum to the six Midland batters who received walks in the second and third innings. Of 28 pitches by Pearson and Jenkins, only four were strikes.

"It was just one of those deals," Bulldog head coach Tim Whalen said, "where it seemed like both teams were real tense and couldn't make the right plays."

The Rebels, down 8-2 as late as the fifth inning, averted a Bulldog runaway in the top of the seventh.

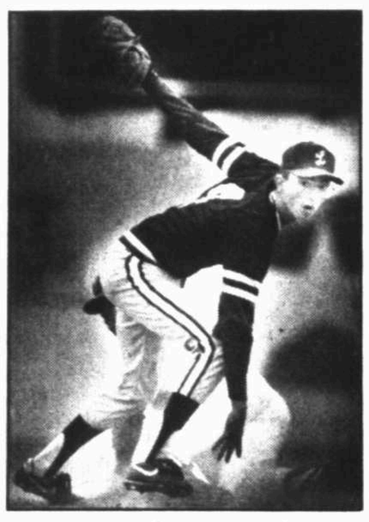

Down 8-4, and with no outs, Jenkins reached on a walk, and went to second on a Scott Mowles' passed ball, his second of the game. Jenkins then scored on a throwing error by MHS shortstop Jamie Surratt. Lee brought in its final run when catcher Greg Garrett singled to left-center, plating Paul Bacon who had reached on a walk.

The Rebels left Garrett, who represented the tying run, stranded at first when shortstop Kemp Laidley hit a foul-tip third strike into the hands of the catcher Mowles.

Rychell, who was lifted in the seventh inning in favor of reliever Eric Boyt, produced the defensive gem of the game. With Robin Pyle at second and no outs, Dudley Jordan popped up midway down the right-field line. Rychell, who was playing right at the time, grabbed the fly ball and, with a perfect strike to third, nailed Pyle who had attempted to advance on the fly ball.

It was an important win for Midland, now 5-2 in district and tied for the lead with Abilene Cooper. Midland's overall record is 14-6. The Rebels are now 4-3 in district and tied for second with Abilene High. After the loss, Lee's overall record is at 9-8.

Expansion at Fenway

BOSTON (AP) — Fenway Park could be growing over the next five years. The American League is considered adding 3,000 seats.

John L. Harrington, president of the JRY Corp., chief general partner of the Red Sox, told the Boston Herald that an expansion of rooftop seats for the 76-year-old stadium is being considered. It would add about 600 seats by next season and as many as 2,400 more during the next three or four years.

"But it wouldn't be a new deck, as you know it in other ball parks," said Harrington of the plans to add the seats behind home plate and above the rooftop seating already in place along the first-and third-base lines..

Fenway now has a seating capacity of 33,583, smallest in the majors.

Wrigley Field, home of the Chicago Cubs, is the smallest park in the National League with a capacity of 38,040.

"We want to determine whether these seats would attract the kind of revenue we need to pay for the renovation," said Harrington, adding that some of the new seats would be luxury boxes.

"We're sensative to our neighborhood," Harrington said. "We don't want to add to the traffic problems."

He said the roof area behind home plate is in need of repair.

"That's what has led us to consider some type of renovation," he said.

Harrington also said the expansion does not mean the Red Sox are committed to Fenway Park for the next 20 or 30 years.

"We really can't project beyond the next 10 years," Harrington said.

Brown's decision swayed by call

Associated Press

A mystery telephone call may have influenced Larry Brown to stay at Kansas rather than return to UCLA in a bizarre decision that shocked everyone involved and left officials at both schools slack-jawed in disbelief.

A heavy-hearted Bob Frederick, the Kansas athletic director, drove to Brown's house Friday afternoon expecting to be told that the 47-year-old vagabond coach was resigning to go to UCLA.

He had left UCLA officials with the impression that he would accept their offer because a news conference was in the works for Saturday and a press release was ready to go.

"I went to his home," said Frederick, a longtime friend of Brown. "He was on the phone. After I waited for a while, he got off the phone and we went into his bedroom to talk.

"He told me he had decided to stay at the University of Kansas. I was greatly relieved."

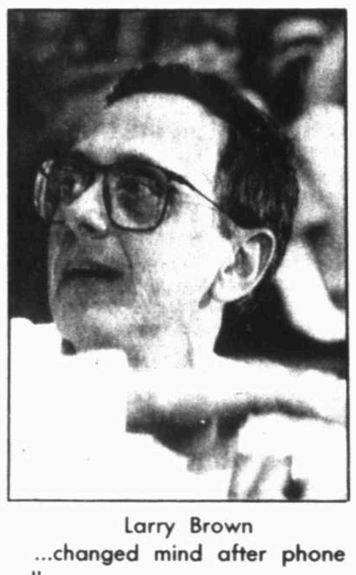

Asked who Brown had been talking to, Frederick said, "I don't know. Once he told me he decided to stay, I really didn't care. Everything that I had heard indicated to me that he was going to go to UCLA."

That's what the thinking was on the West Coast. Officials were stunned when informed of Brown's decision.

"He came in Thursday night and left sometime early Friday," said associate sports information director Bill Bennett. "UCLA was just holding back on anything official until he had a chance to meet with the KU athletic director.

Brown has often said after leaving UCLA in 1981, after two years on the job, was the biggest mistake of his life.

By the time Brown's plane private plane landed at Topeka's Forbes Field, the word was out. Jim Lampley of CBS-TV, a longtime friend of Brown, reported early in the day that Brown was going to take the UCLA job.

Larry Brown
...changed mind after phone call

"I told them (UCLA) I was going to come.... " Brown told Lampley Friday night.

"When I got back to Lawrence, I just started to think about the things UCLA was going to do for me, and I haven't done anything for UCLA. They were more than fair but I just didn't feel comfortable with it."

Floyd Temple, an assistant athletic director at Kansas, said a noon staff meeting offered no hope of retaining the Brown.

It seemed certain that Kansas would soon be looking for a new coach and UCLA's search had ended.

"I don't want to mention any names, but we were told it was a lost cause," Temple told The Associated Press. "He's gone. It's definite."

Temple made his remarks just a half hour before Brown's stunning announcement.

Winning Colors easy Santa Anita winner

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — Winning Colors established herself as a strong Kentucky Derby contender Saturday, leading all the way to become the first filly in 29 years to win the Santa Anita Derby with a powerful 7½-length triumph over Lively One.

The victory was the fifth in six lifetime starts for Winning Colors, owned by Eugene Klein of Rancho Santa Fe, Calif., and trained by D. Wayne Lukas, and was worth $275,000, raising the filly's career earnings to $470,150. Winning Colors finished second in the only race she didn't win.

Winning Colors, ridden by Gary Stevens, covered 1⅛ miles on a fast track in 1:47 4-5 and, as a slight favorite of the estimated crowd of 47,200, paid $7.20, $4 and $3.20.

The stakes record is 1:47 set by Lucky Debonair in 1965 and equaled by Sham eight years later.

The filly carried 117 pounds, five less than the other eight entries in the 51st running of the race for 3-year-olds that is considered a top prep for the Kentucky Derby, to be run at Churchill Downs on May 7.

Winning Colors was only the 14th filly to run in Santa Anita's biggest race for 3-year-olds and just the third to win. Others who prevailed were Ciencia in 1939 and Silver Spoon in 1959.

Only two fillies have ever won the Kentucky Derby — Regret in 1915 and Genuine Risk in 1980.

Lively One, the second choice in the field of nine, who was ridden by Bill Shoemaker and trained by Charlie Whittingham, crossed the finish line 1¼ lengths ahead of Mi Preferido and returned $3.60 and $2.80.

Mi Preferido, winner of last month's San Felipe Handicap in impressive style, was 2½ lengths ahead of Tejano at the wire and paid $3.40 to show.

Mark Williams rolls to PBA victory

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Mark Williams steamrolled three opponents Saturday to capture his fifth PBA title by winning the $140,000 Professional Bowlers Association Fair Lanes Open.

Williams defeated Gil Sliker 229-180 in the championship game to earn the winner's check of $23,000.

It was Sliker's eighth runner-up finish in a PBA singles event. Sliker's lone PBA crown came in a doubles tournament with Mike Durbin in 1983. Sliker earned $12,000 for second place.

The win was the first for Williams since December 1986.

Sliker's hopes for his first singles victory were dashed when he left 5-7 splits in the eighth and ninth frames and failed to convert either.

Williams won two earlier matches to gain a title berth against the top-seeded Sliker.

First he knocked off Mike Taylor, 259-246. Taylor, who has yet to win his first tour title, collected $6,000 for fourth place.

Brian Voss, who was looking for his third PBA win in five weeks, was Williams' next victim, falling 228-190. Voss got $8,000.

Trouble for Cards in Phoenix, already?

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Phoenix Cardinal owner Bid Bidwill says his NFL team may not provide renewal rights with its season tickets because a handful of individuals reportedly controls thousands of tickets.

Cardinals officials said approximately 3,000 of about 11,000 season tickets for the NFL's Phoenix Cardinals allotted to former USFL Arizona Outlaws season-ticket holders are controlled by four or five people.

Bidwill said "a number of people" told him that some of the ticket rights allegedly were given to others by the Outlaws in lieu of salaries and other considerations when the USFL folded before the 1986 fall season. He did not say who gave him the information.

Also, former Outlaws owners Bill Tatham Sr. and Bill Tatham Jr. had rights to a substantial majority of another 3,000 Cardinals season tickets under an agreement between Arizona State University and the Tathams, school officials said.

The Cardinals, who had played in St. Louis for the past 30 seasons, received NFL approval March 15 to move to Phoenix and will play their home games at ASU's Sun Devil Stadium in suburban Tempe.

WALLACE TOPS NASCAR— Rusty Wallace topped the final 15 drivers to qualify Saturday for the Valleydale 500 NASCAR stock car race at Bristol International Raceway, turning in a 115.403 Friday. The starting field will be comprised of 32 cars with Buddy Baker and Bobby Hillin both in the race as provisional starters.

FIRED — Former Houston Oilers QB Gifford Nielsen said "differences with Coach Jerry Glanville" resulted in his firing as color analyst for Oilers radio broadcasts. Glanville said he had nothing to do with the dismissal.

SMALLEY QUITS— Roy Smalley, who capped his 13-year major-league career with his first World Series championship in 1987, retired Saturday after 9½ years with the Twins, batting .262 with 110 home runs and 485 RBI in a Minnesota uniform.

BRABHAM SETS RECORD— Geoff Brabham broke the Road Atlanta track record with a 126.711 mph lap in the Nissan GTP prototype Saturday, grabbing the pole for today's Atlanta Grand Prix IMSA Camel GT sports car race.

TRACY TRIUMPHS— Paul Tracy, averaging 103.764 mph, of Canada won Saturday's crash-marred opening round of the HFC American Racing Series at Phoenix, benefiting from a multi-car crash early in the 100-mile race that eliminated pole-sitter Jeff Andretti and three other top contenders. Calvin Fish was second, less than a half-second behind, followed by Wally Dallenbach Jr.

HATTIESBURG GOLF— Dave Eichelberger and Lance Ten Broeck took advantage of a double-bogey on the 18th hole by second-round co-leader Frank Conner to move into a tie for the lead in the Deposit Guaranty Golf Classic. Eichelberger had a 6-under par 64. Ten Broeck fired a 66, including a 50-foot chip into the cup on 18, to match Eichelberger's 54-hole score of 8-under 202 going into Sunday's final round.

Okamoto putts way to 63

POWAY, Calif. (AP) — Ayako Okamoto of Japan rode a hot putter to an 8-under-63 Saturday for a one-shot lead over Colleen Walker after three rounds of the $225,000 San Diego Inamori Classic.

Okamoto made eight birdies as she completed 54 holes in 10-under-par 203. Walker, who had a 69, was at 204.

Three-time tournament winner Patty Sheehan fired a 2-under-par 69 on the 6,021-yard StoneRidge Country Club course to pull into a third-place tie at 6-under 207 with Korea's Ok-Hee Ku and Judy Dickinson.

First-day leader Lenore Rittenhouse was alone at 208 after struggling to a 1-over-par 72. Dot Germain, Janet Coles and last week's Dinah Shore winner, Amy Alcott, who fired a 67, were at 209.

Nancy Lopez, who started the round tied with Sheehan and Ku at 4-under, had to birdie the 16th and 17th holes to finish 1-over for the round and tied at 210 with Allison Finney.

Okamoto, the defending champion, birdied the second hole, then strung together birdies on the fifth, sixth and seventh holes. After taking par at No. 8, she kept charging to the lead with birdies on the par-4 ninth and par-5 10th.

Five of her birdies came on putts of 15 feet or less as her approach shots made up for occasionally poor tee shots.

U.S. within match of Davis Cup victory

Associated Press

Young Andre Agassi put the United States within one match of victory Saturday, defeating Peru's Jaime Izaga in a Davis Cup American Zone tennis tournament.

The 6-8, 7-5, 6-1, 6-2 victory by the 17-year-old right-hander from Las Vegas, Nev., gave the Americans a sweep of the first two singles. On Friday, Jay Berger of Plantation, Fla., outlasted Pablo Arraya.

The United States could wrap up the zonal semifinal victory by winning the doubles on Sunday. Americans Ken Flach and Robert Seguso, who have never lost in Davis Cup play, are heavily favored against Izaga and Carlos di Laura.

In World Group quarterfinal matches, West Germany and France clinched victories by taking insurmountable 3-0 leads. Sweden leads Czechoslovakia 2-1 and Yugoslavia leads Italy 2-1.

In Clermont-Ferrand, France, Yannick Noah and Guy Forget put France into the Davis Cup World Group semifinals by defeating Australia's Wally Masur and John Fitzgerald 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

It is the first time since 1925 that France has beaten Australia in Davis Cup competition.

In Norrkoping, Sweden, Stefan Edberg and Mats Wilander snapped an unbeaten Davis Cup doubles streak by the experienced Czechoslovakian pair of Miloslav Mecir and Tomas Smid, winning 8-6, 6-4, 8-6 on the fast indoor carpet.

In Frankfurt, West Germany, two-time Wimbledon champion Boris Becker teamed with Eric Jelen to defeat Denmark's Morten Christensen and Michael Tauson 6-3, 6-4, 6-4. In Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Slobodan Zivojinovic and Goran Prpic defeated Italians Simone Colombo and Paolo Cane 6-4, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3.

Only the 16 nations in the World Group actually compete for the prestigious trophy. In World Group relegation matches — the winners remain in the World Group next year while the losers drop to zonal play in 1989 — Spain took an unbeatable 3-0 lead over Brazil, Mexico won Saturday's doubles but still trails Switzerland 2-1 and Paraguay had a 2-0 lead over New Zealand after the first two singles.

Israel clinched a spot in the 1989 World Group when its relegation opponent, India, defaulted.

Derek Harper's 35 points paces Mavericks over Nuggets, 135-109

DALLAS (AP) — Derek Harper poured in 35 points Saturday night as the Dallas Mavericks increased their Midwest Division lead to a game and a half over second-place Denver with a 135-109 rout of the Nuggets.

Harper hit five second-half three-point shots to tie a club record for a half and help break a 10-game Denver winning streak. Dallas put up its highest point total of the season while taking a 3-2 season series edge over Denver.

Rolando Blackman and James Donaldson had 20 points each as Dallas won its third straight.

Danny Schayes scored a team-high 21 for Denver, which had won six straight on the road.

The teams were even, 75-all with 6:25 to go in the third quarter when the Mavericks took command. They outscored the Nuggets 25-8 the rest of the period, which ended with Dallas on top, 100-83. Harper accounted for 10 points and reserve forward Detlef Schrempf contributed seven during the decisive run.

The barrage continued in the fourth quarter as Harper turned in a three-point play to boost the Dallas advantage to 105-83, then Harper later drilled three three-point field goals in five Maverick possessions for a decisive 120-87 lead. Harper missed only one three-pointer in the second half.

At halftime the score was tied at 60 as Dallas rallied from a second-quarter deficit that was 49-41 with 6:17 to play until the intermission. Dallas pulled ahead, 56-55 with 1:56 left in the period and Blackman hit a pair of free throws with 15 seconds left to forge the halftime tie.

Pistons 115, Hawks 102

ATLANTA — Isiah Thomas scored 13 of his 20 points in the fourth period Saturday night as the Detroit Pistons outscored Atlanta 30-17 in the quarter and beat the Hawks 115-102.

The victory gave the first-place Pistons a two-game lead over Atlanta in the NBA's Central Division with eight regular-season games left.

Dominique Wilkins scored 12 his game-high 36 points as the Hawks took a 20-12 lead with 4:12 remaining in the first period.

TALL

Coleman performed well on Permian's 41.13 winning sprint relay team, but appeared to come up lame again in a fifth place finish in the 100. Coleman was carrying an ice bag on his leg after the 100.

The star of the day, however, was Coronado's Debra Tinnell who set an 800 record in 2:13.25 and a 1600 record in 5:19.89. She also ran a leg on Coronado's winning 1600 relay team.

The most surprising matchup to turn into a good race was in the boys' 800 where Lee's David Parkerson gave state ranked Arthur Kinney of Estacado a real battle. Kinney met the challenge with a record 1:54.65, but had to come from behind to beat Parkerson in the last 200 yards. Parkerson turned in a career best 1:56.15.

"Kinney just had too much for me at the end," said Parkerson, "but this was a great race for me. I'm small and that wind tears me up, but I feel real good about going into next week after this."

Parkerson came back to win the 1600 in 4:38.94 as expected to keep his No. 1 district ranking in that event.

Lee's Joel Van Cott won a weird pole vault event with a 12-6. Only Van Cott cleared the opening height of 10-6 in a high wind. Permian's Adrian Hall missed twice at the opening height, made a smart move by passing to the next height to allow the wind to calm and proceeded to force Van Cott to jump again. Van Cott finally won the battle.

"That wind is just like a brick wall," said Van Cott, who won for the third week in a row. "I thought I was going to win it with a 10-6. No one could get to the bar with that wind in your face."

Midland High's Tracy Parker continues to dominate the girls' shot put. She set a meet record with a 39-1¼, but it wasn't her best.

"I'm really not ready for district because I have a leg that is bothering me, but I'll be ready in a week. No one really pushed me here," said Parker.

Lee's Melody Miller won the 100 with a season best 11.67, but still faces a challenge next week.

"I'm going to get first next week, but I've never beaten Kasandra McDaniel of Odessa High," said Miller, who was second last year in the district meet. "I think I can beat her, so this win makes me feel really good."

The Lee girls also won the sprint relay with a 50.12 and got a second place from Carrie Roach in the 200, who lost to state ranked Laurie White of Permian. Lee's 800 relay was second to powerful Coronado. Lee got third places from Monica Ramirez in the shot put, Keyshia Crisp in the triple jump and Jamellia Lott in the 100.

Defending champion Midland High scored 47 points, one of the best performances this season. In addition to Parker, MHS got a third from Myra Pina in the 3200 and a fourth from Pina in the 1600. MHS was fourth in the 800 relay.

"We didn't defend our title, but we defended our dignity," said MHS coach Sonya Pittman. "This is the best we have competed this year."

The MHS boys didn't win an event, but they placed third in the sprint relay with a season best 42.53 and got a third place from Rusty Holt in the high jump with a career best 6-4.

Lee got a second in the 1600 relay after being disqualified in the sprint relay and Paul Little got back over the 50-foot mark for the second time this year, but settled for fourth place in a strong event.

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — Former American League Cy Young Award winner Denny McLain has filed suit against the owner of the Fort Wayne Komets hockey club for alleged breach of contract and fraud.

In his suit filed in Allen Superior Court, McLain said club owner David Welker had terminated McLain's contract on March 8, six months before it was to expire, and that Welker had misrepresented the financial health of his beverage company, David Dan Enterprises LTD.

Daniels' homers sink Astros 5-4

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Kal Daniels hit a pair of solo home runs and singled home two runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Cincinnati Reds a 5-4 victory over the Houston Astros on Saturday.

NL

Daniels hit solo homers in the first and seventh innings off starter Danny Darwin, then completed a 4-for-4 day with a two-run, bases-loaded single in the ninth off ace reliever Dave Smith, 0-1, to overcome a 4-3 deficit.

Chris Sabo opened the Reds ninth with a walk from Smith, Dave Collins singled and Barry Larkin bunted for a single to load the bases. After Jeff Treadway forced Sabo at home for the first out, Daniels lined a 2-2 pitch to left-center field to end the game.

Jose Rijo, 1-1, got the last out in the top of the ninth and got the victory.

Giants 3, Padres 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Will Clark and Kevin Mitchell homered and Rick Reuschel continued the string of strong outings by San Francisco starters as the Giants beat the winless San Diego Padres 3-1.

The Padres, who started last season with five consecutive losses, are 0-5 again this season.

Reuschel, 1-0, allowed one run, a solo homer by Tony Gwynn in the third, and nine hits in 8 1-3 innings before needing relief help from Scott Garrelts.

Phillies 9, Mets 3

PHILADELPHIA — Lance Parrish drove in five runs, three with a home run, and Don Carman pitched a three-hitter as Philadelphia defeated the Mets for their third straight victory.

Carman, who struck out five and walked four, allowed only one hit after yielding a home run to Len Dykstra leading off the third inning.

Trailing 1-0 in the bottom in the second, Mike Schmidt and Von Hayes singled off starter Rick Aguilera, 0-1. Parrish then hit a 3-2 pitch over the left-center field fence for his second home run in two games.

Dodgers 11, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Newcomers Alfredo Griffin and Kirk Gibson each drove in four runs to lead Los Angeles past the 0-5 Braves.

Fernando Valenzuela, 1-1, pitched eight innings en route to his fourth straight victory over the Braves. Brian Holton pitched the ninth for the Dodgers.

Leading 6-2, the Dodgers roughed up reliever Jim Acker for five runs in the eighth on Rick Dempsey's leadoff homer, Griffin's RBI double and Gibson's three-run homer, his first home run with Los Angeles.

Griffin, who was acquired from Oakland, drove in two runs with a single off starter Tom Glavine, 0-1, in the fourth inning and drove in another against Chuck Cary in the sixth.

The Dodgers got a run in the first inning when Griffin walked, went to second on a single by Pedro Guerrero, and scored on a single by Mike Marshall.

After a solo homer by Guerrero in the third made it 2-0, the Dodgers added a pair of runs in the fourth.

Atlanta's Dale Murphy hit is first homer of the season in the sixth.

Cardinals 3, Pirates 0

ST. LOUIS — Ozzie Smith doubled home Vince Coleman from first base with two outs in the sixth inning to snap a scoreless tie and Greg Mathews allowed three hits over eight innings.

It was the Cardinals' first victory of the season after three losses.

Mathews, 1-0, bounced a single up the middle with one out in the sixth and Coleman replaced him on bases after grounding into a forceout. Smith then hit a double into the corner in right field, scoring Coleman.

The Cards added two runs in the eighth on Coleman's run-scoring triple and Smith's sacrifice fly.

Mathews struck out five and retired 11 straight batters after Barry Bonds hit his second straight double with two out in the third.

Expos 10, Cubs 6

MONTREAL — Hubie Brooks drove in four runs with a home run and a double as Montreal defeated Chicago.

Dennis Martinez, 1-1, gave up three hits in five innings as he helped hand the Cubs their first loss of the season after three straight victories.

Martinez left because of a blister on his pitching hand. Andy McGaffigan pitched 3 2-3 innings and Tim Burke got the final out.

The Expos scored two runs in the second inning off starter Calvin Schiraldi, 0-1. Tim Wallach led off with a homer and Martinez blooped a bases-loaded single to score Andres Galarraga from third.

Chicago tied it in the fifth on Ryne Sandberg's two-run homer. It was the second baseman first hit of the season after going 0-for-15.

The Expos regained the lead with three runs in the fifth. Mitch Webster singled home Tim Raines for the go-ahead run and then scored on Brooks' second homer of the season.

Montreal scored two more in the bottom of the sixth on Brooks' two-run double. The Expos added three runs in the seventh on RBI singles by Tom Foley, Webster and Raines.

Trailing 10-4, the Cubs staged a rally in the ninth on Sandberg's RBI double and another run-scoring double by Rafael Palmeiro.

Chandler is forgiven by UK gridders

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The University of Kentucky football team has accepted the apology offered by former Gov. A.B. "Happy" Chandler for a racial slur he used, saying Chandler "wanted to hurt no one by his unfortunate remark," head coach Jerry Claiborne said Saturday.

"Governor Chandler's record speaks for itself over the years," Claiborne said in a statement.

The football team had boycotted Thursday's practice and worn black wristbands upon resuming spring drills Friday. Earlier that day, at least 25 team members joined about 75 other students in a march from the campus to City Hall. The group chanted "Happy's Got To Go" and "Resign Happy."

On Thursday, the team had threatened to boycott the annual Blue-White spring game if Chandler did not resign from the school's board of trustees.

"There will be no boycott," Claiborne said in the statement. "We look forward to displaying our 1988 football team to, hopefully, a record crowd" at the spring game April 23 in Commonwealth Stadium.

At least one team member said the letter was not drafted by the team.

"The letter came as a surprise to us," David Johnson told The Courier-Journal on Saturday.

Horn's fly beats Rangers

Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Sam Horn's ninth-inning sacrifice fly snapped a tie and Roger Clemens allowed five hits over eight innings as the Boston Red Sox beat the Texas Rangers 2-1 Saturday night.

Wade Boggs led off the ninth with a single for only the third hit off Texas starter Charlie Hough, 1-1.

After Boggs moved to second on Jim Rice's grounder, the Rangers walked Mike Greenwell intentionally to set up a possible double play. Hough walked Dwight Evans to load the bases and Horn followed with a fly to left field.

Clemens, 1-0, struck out nine and walked two. Lee Smith pitched the last inning for his second save.

Hough had allowed only one hit and had retired 17 men in a row until Rich Gedman's 400-foot solo homer leading off the eighth tied the score 1-1.

Until then, Boston's only hit had come when Boggs just beat out a single off Hough's glove in the fourth inning.

Hough pitched 8 2-3 innings allowing three hits. He struck out six and walked six.

The Rangers took their 1-0 lead on an unearned run in the fourth. Singles by Pete O'Brien and Cecil Espy put runners on first and second. O'Brien scored when Boggs grabbed Steve Buechele's grounder at third and threw into right field trying to force Espy at second for what would have been the final out.

Both Clemens and Hough were called for a balk.

Indians 12, Orioles 1

CLEVELAND — Cory Snyder drove in three runs and Tom Candiotti pitched an eight-hitter as the Indians beat winless Baltimore.

Cleveland, which lowered its team earned run average to 1.02 after compiling a major league-worst 5.28 in 1987, had 20 hits. The Indians have won four straight since losing their opener at Texas, and the 4-1 start is their best since they went 5-0 in 1966.

The Orioles have been outscored 30-2 in their four losses.

Candiotti, 1-0, a knuckleball specialist, struck out six and walked three. His shutout was spoiled in the ninth inning when Larry Sheets singled with the bases loaded. Friday, Scott Bailes blanked Baltimore 3-0 on three hits.

Every Cleveland regular had a hit by the fourth inning Saturday, and the Indians batted around in both the second and third innings, scoring five runs in the second and four in the third.

Tigers 11, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ray Knight hit Dan Quisenberry's first pitch for a two-run double, keying a seven-run seventh inning that carried Detroit over Kansas City.

The game included five balks, including three on Detroit starter Jack Morris, 2-0. Morris pitched eight innings and allowed six hits and Mike Henneman pitched the ninth.

Relievers Bud Black, 0-1, and Quisenberry combined to face seven batters in the seventh without getting an out. Eight consecutive Tigers reached base against the Royals' relievers until Steve Farr struck out Gary Pettis.

Blue Jays 10, Twins 0

MINNEAPOLIS — Jimmy Key pitched a three-hitter over six innings and Jesse Berfield and Fred McGriff each homered and drove in two runs.

Key, 2-0, whose 2.76 earned run average last year led the AL, yielded only Greg Gagne's first-inning single, Tim Laudner's sixth-inning double and Dan Gladden's sixth-inning infield hit. The left-hander was replaced by Duane Ward, who allowed two hits over final three innings to earn the save.

The defending World Series champion Twins, who led the majors with a 26-17 record against left-handers last year, lost for the first time in nine home games dating back to last Sept. 26.

Yankees 4, Brewers 1

NEW YORK — Rookie Al Leiter allowed four hits over seven innings and Rickey Henderson hit a two-run homer as New York remained the American League's only undefeated team.

The Yankees' last opened the season with four straight wins in 1974 and have not won more than four at the start of a season since 1933 when they opened with seven consecutive victories.

New York took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Don Mattingly's sacrifice fly and made it 2-0 in the second on Don Slaught's run-scoring single off Bill Wegman, 0-1.

Rob Deer's second homer of the season came off Leiter in the sixth inning for the only Brewer run.

Henderson hit a two-run homer in the eighth to make it 4-1.

Mariners 3, White Sox 2 (10)

CHICAGO — Rey Quinones doubled and scored on Henry Cotto's two-out single in the 10th inning. Quinones doubled to left-center field with one out off starter Rick Horton, went to third as Harold Reynolds grounded out, and scored on Cotto's looping single to center.

Jerry Reed, 1-0, picked up the victory in relief after taking over for starter Mark Langston in the ninth inning.

Texas divides pair with Rice

HOUSTON (AP) — Jay Knoblauch slammed a three-run homer to highlight a six-run fifth inning as the Rice Owls rallied to defeat Texas 6-4 in Southwest Conference action Saturday.

SWC

Texas had taken a 1-0 lead in the top of the fifth on Brian Cisarik's RBI grounder, but the Owls came back with three hits off loser Kirk Dressendorfer.

A walk to Hugh Woolever, a sacrifice fly from Ben Mathews and an RBI single from Tim Vannaman produced the first three runs and Knoblauh then followed with his three-run homer over the left field fence.

Texas took the second game of the doubleheader 11-9 in a wild contest that featured 20 walks and 21 base hits. Rice held a 7-5 lead after three innings, but Mike Patrick hit his third home run of the season in the fourth, a three-run shot to right, and gave the Longhorns an 8-7 lead.

Texas' record stands at 41-7 overall and 8-1 in conference play. Rice is 29-16 and 5-7.

Frogs win 24th straight

TCU wins another 400-meter relay

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Christian's crack "Flyin' Frogs" won their 24th consecutive 400-meter relay Saturday, making crisp baton passes despite the wind and rain at the 61st annual Texas Relays.

The foursome of Roscoe Tatum, Greg Sholars, Tony Allen and Raymond Stewart posted a time of 39.43 on wet track conditions.

TCU set the Relays record of 38.97 in 1986 and followed it with an American and collegiate record at 38.46. TCU hasn't lost a sprint relay since 1986 when it dropped the baton at the College Station Relays. The streak of victories includes two NCAA outdoor titles and three Texas Relays' first place medals.

Stewart said the Frogs could have set a meet record if it wasn't for the rain.

"I wasn't running all out," Stewart said. "I was just trying to make sure I finished without getting hurt."

Sholars added "Our goal was to pass the stick around without a big problem. Now we're shooting for a third win in the NCAAs (June 1-4 in Eugene, Ore)."

TCU GOES for its 25th win in a row at the Penn Relays April 28-30. The Frogs have won the sprint relay the last two years there.

The Horned Frogs' foursome also won the 800-meter relay on Friday night, their first victory in the event after three years of trying.

Texas was second in the 400-meter relay on Saturday in 39.80 while Baylor finished third in 40.28.

The Arkansas Razorbacks kept alive their tradition of dominating the distance relays. After winning the distance medley relay on Friday night, the Razorbacks came back to take the 6000 meter relay on Satuurday.

Joe Falcon, the nation's premier distance runner, ran a 3:51.0 anchor over the final 1500 meters of the relay.

"I was very pleased with my race and the team's performance," Falcon said. "In this weather, winning is all that counts. I just coasted. I didn't want to pull a muscle."

HEAVY rain held the crowd to one of the lowest in Texas Relays' history. Less than 500 shivering people huddled in the stands. Several thousand stayed under the overhang of the upper deck at Memorial Stadium.

Lynda Tolbert of Arizona State didn't let the rain bother her in the women's 100-meter hurdles, clocking a 13.11 which beat the meet record of 13.15 by Benita Fitzgerald of Tennessee in 1981.

"I consider it an honor to set a record in the class field I was running against," Tolbert said.

Tolbert also led off Arizona State's medal winning team in the women's sprint relay. The winning time was 45.76.

Stanford upset Arkansas in the 3200-meter relay, winning in a time of 7:22.66 to 7:23.19 for the Hogs, who won the event last year.

Texas won the university sprint medley relay in 3:13.73 as anchorman Pablo Squella clocked a 1:40.64.

FLORIDA ended Baylor's three-year domination in the 1600-meter relay by defeating the Bears thanks to a 45.0 leg by Calvin Long. Florida ws clocked in 3:03.54 to 3:04.06 for Baylor.

The weather conditions were so adverse that the invitational open pole vault was canceled.

TCU was named the meet's outstanding team while Falcon of Arkansas was given the top male performer award.

Christy Gaines of Dallas South Oak Cliff High School was named the top female performer.

TEXAS

"When you're selecting a team based on stats and all-American ratings, you often don't get the chemistry you could have."

As a result, the national stars were burdened with an overabundance of shooting guards and only Marion Cash of Pratt (Kan.) J.C. as a true point guard.

AMONG THE many college coaches in attendance were Brown, Tubbs, P.J. Carlesimo of Seton Hall, and an abundance of assistant coaches, including the entire Kansas staff.

Brown said his appearance was designed as a show of support for junior college basketball.

"I'm just happy for junior college ball," Brown said. "They're finally getting the recognition and the opportunity for exposure.

"You can look at Lincoln (former MC star Minor) and Archie (Marshall) on our team and (former MC stars) Mookie Blaylock and Ricky Grace on Oklahoma to see what we think about junior college players.

Brown expects the junior colleges to continue churning out quality talent because of Proposition 48, the NCAA rule that establishes minimum entrance requirements for Division I athletes.

"Junior colleges will continue to get players because Proposition 48 is so unfair in terms of them having to sit out one year."

While Brown said he wasn't looking his trip to Midland as a recruiting junket, he recognized the positive public relations value of his appearance.

"I just like to show them that I care."

The game was sponsored by United Bank in conjunction with the Midland Jaycees and the Ramada Hotel.

U.S. (112): Chris Morris 3 4-5 11; Marion Cash 5 5-8 15; Ronald Taylor 2 2-2 7; Terry Burns 3 7-8 13; Richard Sherrod 3 0-0 7; Johnny McNeil 10 2-3 22; Kevin Cutler 6 0-1 13; Terry Houston 5 0-2 10; Daron Jenkins 3 0-0 6; Brent Dabbs 3 1-3 7. Totals 43 21-32 112.

Flyers, Caps nab playoff victories

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Dave Poulin had a goal and two assists as the Philadelphia Flyers beat the Washington Capitals 4-3 and took a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven first-round Stanley Cup playoff series.

NHL

The Patrick Division series resumes with Game 4 in Philadelphia tonight.

The Flyers outmuscled the Capitals in a rough game that resulted in 39 penalties, including 10 majors, for 135 minutes. The penalty box was continually jammed in a game that lasted more than 3 hours.

Flyers goalie Ron Hextall faced only 17 shots, while Washington goalie Pete Peeters stopped 25 of 29.

After a fight-marred first period in which 18 penalties for 53 minutes were assessed, the Capitals emerged with a 2-1 lead.

Devils 3, Islanders 0

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Rookie goaltender Sean Burke recorded his first NHL playoff shutout and Mark Johnson scored two goals as New Jersey defeated the Islanders in the Devils' first-ever home playoff game.

The victory gave the Devils a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven Patrick Division semifinal series with Game 4 scheduled for the Byrne Arena Sunday night.

Burke, who did not dress for the Devils' 3-2 victory in Game 2, was the difference in Game 3, particularly in the opening two periods when New York outshot New Jersey 19-10 but trailed 2-0.

Canadiens 4, Whalers 3

HARTFORD, Conn. — Goals by Craig Ludwig, Mike McPhee and Ryan Walter within a 4:19 span of the second period powered Montreal over Hartford and brought them within a victory of sweeping their Stanley Cup series.

With a 3-0 lead, the Canadiens can wrap up their best-of-seven Adams Division series with a victory Sunday night.

Red Wings 6, Maple Leafs 3

TORONTO — Jim Nill and Petr Klima scored twice as the Detroit Red Wings downed the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Nill and Klima each had a shorthanded goal, with Klima's coming on a penalty shot — the first in Wings' playoff history — late in the second period.

Lyle did not aim at the pin because he knew he would end up off the back right of the green that way. Instead, he aimed 20 feet left of the pin and hit his ball perfectly to a spot he had as a target.

The ball landed softly the way a fine, short sand shot should settle. Then the ball began to roll. It slipped gently down the slope toward the pin and finally stopped 2 feet in front of the hole.

That's what some players did to overcome the problems. Some could not handle it. Curtis Strange got a hole-in-one at the 12th. But he had four-putted the ninth half an hour earlier.

Hardin said the pros play such soft conditions on the Tour that they are not ready for firm greens and fast surfaces. The Masters, like the other three majors, is not conducted by the PGA Tour.

"Maybe I'm in a dreamland or something and I will never say never," Hardin said. "But I just don't believe the members of this club would want to continue if the only alternative was to get as much out of television as we could, or to sandbag our patrons for every nickel, or to have hospitality houses all over the place. I have a feeling that once you go down the commercial route it isn't going to be the same here."

THE PURSE, which will be announced before the tourney ends, is expected to be close to $900,000 or $1 million.

Immaculate California Contemporary

Expansive glass walls in the living room, foyer and kitchen of this week's featured home views one of Midland's most exquisite pool areas. This immaculate California contemporary home was originally built by Owen Ingram and was remodeled by Howard Cherry. Located in an older, well-established neighborhood, this home has a formal living room, a spacious den, four bedrooms and four and a-half baths.

Please see IMMACULATE, Page 2D

The formal living room focuses on a fireplace and is highlighted by a wall of windows that look out onto a beautifully landscaped yard with pool.

The St. Charles kitchen and breakfast room, at right, also overlooks the pool area. This sunny room would delight any gourmet cook.

A visitor immediately notices the stunning pool area and beautifully landscaped backyard. A large foyer opens onto to the den, to the left, and the formal living room to the right. The kitchen and breakfast area are also located off the home's entrance. The design of the foyer enables this room to also be used as a separate formal dining room, depending on an individual homeowner's lifestyle.

The St. Charles designed kitchen is only one of the many highlights in this home. The kitchen and breakfast room have a pale yellow and white cabinets with a multi-colored wallcovering lining the breakfast room walls. Any gourmet cook would love this kitchen that features a wall of windows which over look the backyard pool, making the kitchen one of the sunniest in Midland. A built-in buffet lines on wall in the breakfast room and can be used for storage of china and crystal.

A large butlers pantry is situated next to the kitchen and includes storage of small appliances and a cabinet especially designed for trays. The large utility room is also next to the kitchen and has room for an additional refrigerator or freezer. This room also has a sink, lots of storage space and a- half bath is conveniently located off the area.

A cozy den is situated to the left of the foyer. The den is spacious enough to also include a formal dining room and features a fireplace and a wet bar. Neutral carpeting with a cinnamon border also highlight this room. A door leads to a gorgeous courtyard area that focuses on an aged oak tree and exquisite landscaping.

Another unique feature in this home can be found next to the den. The carefully designed office would delight any homeowner. Two large closets are another amenity in the office. One has many shelves that would make the closet perfect for the storage of seasonal decorating items.

A three-quarter bath is next to the office and has been beautifully decorated with gold bath fixtures.

A wall of windows which line the foyer continue into the formal living room, located to the right of the entrance. These windows look onto the pool area and another wall of windows over looks the front yard. This room focuses on a brick fireplace and is another example of why this home is great for entertaining.

A hall off the formal living room leads to four bedrooms in the home. The first bedroom is decorated in a pale blue with antique white accents. This room features two walls of built-ins that include drawers, cabinets, a desk area and gun cabinet.

To the left of the hall, two bathrooms are located which have been decorated in fashionable wallpaper. The first bath features a shower and is decorated in blue, green and a pale yellow. The second bath includes a tub and is decorated in a rose wallcovering.

A door from the master suite leads to a lattice covered patio with a flagstone deck surrounding a backyard pool. The landscaping around the pool is beautiful and includes a planter box for seasonal flowers and a large magnolia tree.

Behind the pool area, a third yard with a multi-use room is located. This room is currently being used as an office but could also be used as a guest house, teenagers gameroom or as a pool cabana. This room has plumbing for a bath, two large closets and separate heating and cooling systems.

This immaculate California contemporary home contains approximately 3,800 square feet and is being offered by Langston Realtors for $298,000.

The spacious den focuses on a fireplace and includes a formal dining area and wet bar. This room views an attractive courtyard that can also be used as a play yard for small children.

The backyard has a lattice patio and a flagstone deck. Many large tress and gorgeous landscaping surround the pool area.

Upgrade to a larger home with the assistance of Don Harvey, Realtors

Many Midlanders have experienced the desire and need to move up to that larger nicer home over the past couple of years but have felt unwilling or unable to take the step. Concerns about the economy, job security and being able to sell their present home for a reasonable amount were enough to keep most homeowners from making the commitment.

Alan and Melissa White, however, are among the ever growing number of homeowners who see now as the right time to buy that nicer home. Alan had originally purchased a home in Ranch Estates as a single man and lived there one year before his marriage to Melissa. They lived there for two years following their marriage. During that time, their desire to own a larger, nicer home and one they would start their family in, grew.

"We had very definite ideas about what we were looking for and we were prepared to take as much time as we needed to find the right place," said Mrs. White. Mr. White added "we were primarily looking for an older more established neighborhood with more mature landscaping we could work with, more room in the house and a more central location to make commuting to and from work easier for both of us." Mrs. White works for HBF Corporation and Mr. White is project manager for Mid-Tex of Midland.

"When Helen Mason listed our home in Ranch Estates and it sold so quickly, we had not found another home yet so we chose to move into an apartment while we continued to look," said Mrs. White. "Helen Mason, with Don Harvey, Realtors, was wonderful to work with. She was very patient and showed us many, many houses without ever pressuring us to make a decision or commitment."

"Since we were looking for an older home," said Mr. White, "we weren't looking for everything to be perfect with the house. We knew that we could come in and over a period of time remodel it to our liking."

"The features we really liked about this house," added Mrs. White, "were the spacious bedrooms, large living area, the brightness and the feeling of the interior, the two-car garage, the yard and a billiard room for Alan. And, once we had the written contract everything went very smoothly and quickly."

"We think that there are a lot of people like us who are either looking to improve the home they already own or to buy that bigger, nicer home," said Mr. White. "And the best advice we could give them is you need to have very clearly defined ideas of what you're looking for, give yourself the necessary time to find what you're looking for, and be sure you find a good real estate agent like Helen Mason to work with."

Helen Mason, an associate of Don Harvey, Realtors, helped Alan and Melissa White in upgrading to a larger home.

Pine to serve as RELO state chairman

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

David Pine, president of Chaparral Realtors has recently been elected to serve as the state chairman for RELO, stated Paul M. Hanson recently in a telephone interview. Hanson is the RELO regional chairman and president of Ebby Holliday Realtors in Dallas.

Pine

RELO is a non-profit organization that is the world leader in relocation, with associates in Australia, Japan, England and South Africia. The RELO associates are among the finest independent real estate firms across the country who are elected to membership based on their professionalism and how well they represent the people in their community. Membership in RELO is continually growing, with approximately 65 members in Texas and over 33,516 sales associates nationwide.

"One of the most important functions of a RELO official is serving as the state chairman. Pine will solicit members across the state where relocation is necessary and will monitor productivity of each RELO member," explained Hanson.

Hanson feels that the key to RELO is being an effective organization that is based on the state chairman. Pine's responsibility will be to find a firm in each community that are prepared to provide the professional services that being a RELO member requires.

RELO is a very effective organization that assist transferees nationwide. Pine gave an example of the RELO system which happened recently. A RELO member in Ohio had a client who was being transferred and had requested a RELO associate in Midland. Pine was contacted at Chaparral, Realtors.

After the initial call from the Realtor, Pine immediately contacted the couple and visited with them about the Midland community, schools and any special needs their family might have. Arrangements and reservations were also discussed about the couple's first visit to Midland.

Jan Stevenson, the assistant vice president of Corporate Marketing and Relocation, will send a transfer couple a packet of information about Midland before the couple's initial visit. Stevenson will assist Pine in meeting a transferee and acquaint them with Midland before they ever meet with a Chaparral real estate agent. Stevenson will pre-interview a prospective homebuyer and then place them with an agent that will best suit their needs.

"Being a RELO member helps us ensure the smoothest transfer possible thereby getting an employee on the job sooner," explained Pine. "In addition to making the incoming person happy, we also have to please the RELO Realtor who initially called us."

Pine feels that serving as state chairman will help him to be a better RELO member by setting goals and higher standard for himself. He is also pleased, through his association with RELO, to be affiliated with a "super" real estate company like Ebby Holliday, Realtors.

Chaparral, Realtors is proud to be a member of the largest relocation network in the world. If a real estate company's quality of service begins to drop, then RELO can terminate that firm from membership. Being a RELO associate affords the Chaparral associates to be "only as good as their last transaction."

Remodeling seminar scheduled

A one hour seminar, designed to help the consumer avoid some of the problems that can occur during a remodeling project, will be held on Saturday, April 16, at 2 p.m. at Midland Park Mall.

A free pamphlet entitled "Selecting a Professional Remodeling Contractor" will be given to those who attend the seminar. For more information contact Joan Lewellen at 686-8007 or James Caton at 694-3585.

Planter boxes brighten entry

Colorful plants cascading out of a square or rectangular planter box add excitement to a front porch or entry courtyard. They also can be used as a railing along a low wood deck or to frame a walkway.

The planter boxes are easily built from naturally resistant western cedar, using 2x4s for the framework and cedar board outside. The boards come in a variety of grades, textures , patterns and sizes so the boxes can be built in styles ranging from rustic to formal.

Drainage should be included in the design, and large boxes can be lightened by filling the bottom half with foam packing pellets in a plastic bag, covered with a layer of potting soil.

Variety of wallcovering colors will enhance any room's appeal

Interior decorating is a lot easier than it used to be, especially if the redecorating includes wallcoverings.

With a wide variety of choices in textures, patterns and colors, consumers can use wallcoverings to transform any room into one with elegance, grace and charm.

The Wallcovering Information Bureau suggests that any remake begin with a study of the color, scale and type of wallcovering. Colors, for instance, are considered warm or cool. Blues and green are cool. Yellow, orange and red range from warm to hot. The softer pastel shades are regarded as neutral and calming.

Use scale to visually enlarged or diminish the dimensions of a room. To make a bare room appear well furnished, says WIB, consider a large scale, dominant wallcovering. A bold design can also make a large room seem more intimate.

Wallcovering types range from sleek metallics to textured effects in which a fabric is laminated onto a backing. Patterns cover the spectrum from the rustic look of calico or gingham to the classically formal look of flocked wallcovering.

For more information on wallcoverings, write to WIB, Dept. HP, PO Box 1708, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163 for a free copy of "The Wallcovering How-To Handbook."

Culver of Carriage Company, Realtors attends national relocation conference

Louise Culver

Louise Culver, of Carriage Company, Realtors, a member of Network 50 - Merrill Lynch Realty's full-service national referral network, recently participated in the sixth annual Network 50, Inc. Relocation Conference. This year's meeting in Orlando, Florida, bought together over 300 industry professionals to address today's most prevalent relocation issues.

"The annual relocation conference gives relocation professionals from across the country the opportunity to share success stories and discuss new ideas," said Culver. "The workshops and seminars focus on new ways to provide quality service and innovative products to the transferee while still meeting the financial objectives of the corporate client."

Speakers at the conference introduced exclusive new products and comprehensive programs specifically designed to sharpen members' real estate and relocation skills. The speakers also reflected on the success of Network 50 in 1987, and discussed future goals for 1988.

"This past year was a record breaking year for Network 50 with over 30,000 referrals and a 19 percent incoming conversion rate," said John M. Moore, president of Network 50. "With plans to expand into international markets and increase membership, we will surpass these accomplishments in 1988."

Rowdy Gaines, an olympic gold-medal swimmer, presented the awards to Network 50's leading members for their outstanding achievements in 1987. These awards recognize members for quality referrals, incoming and outgoing conversion rates and overall performance.

Network 50 is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Merrill Lynch Realty with over 270 member firms and more than 35,000 professional agents. This premier organization assists transferees throughout the United States, Canada and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Merrill Lynch Realty is one of the nation's leading full-service real estate companies. Its three principal lines of business are real estate brokerage, with a network of more than 400 company-owned offices; relocation management, which provides services to major corporations; and mortgage banking which originates residential mortgage loans.

Carriage Company, Realtors, is a full service firm with approximately 25 members servicing the Midland area. The agents are qualified, trained Relocation specialists. Carriage Company has met the high standards for membership in Network 50, which sets a local broker apart from the competition. Pat Stewart, who attended the meeting also, is the relocation manager of Carriage Company.

Merrill Lynch Realty is the operating name if Fine Homes International L.P. It is headquartered in Stamford, Conn. Units of Fine Homes International are traded on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE:FHI). Approximately 25 percent of the partnership's units are publicly traded; the remaining 75 percent are owned by Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc. Merrill Lynch Realty's operations are principally in the residential real estate service area and should not be confused with the real estate-related activities of Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., Merrill Lynch Capital Markets or Merrill Lynch Mortgage Capital.

Midland Board of Realtors to sponsor American Home Week, April 24-30

The Midland Board of Realtors, Inc. will sponsor American Home Week, April 24-30, announced Board President Darrell McDonald. This week long nation-wide celebrations at reminding citizens of their constitutional freedom to own property and the need to protect the rights that come with this ownership, according to McDonald.

"Last year marked the 200th anniversary of the signing if the U.S. Constitution," said McDonald. "Because of the Constitutional guarantees of the right of private property ownership, it's particularly appropriate that the Midland Board of Realtors, Inc. remind the people of Midland of this precious heritage during American Home Week."

Among the activities to be sponsored by the Board are an Open House to be held Sunday, April 24, and a garage sale on April 23. The garage sale will be at 1001 W. Wall Ave., on the parking lot of the Board office, and the proceeds will go to various Midland organizations. Other activities include: tree planting for the newly planned M.A.R.C. handicapped park, Educational Seminars, a booth at Midland Park Mall in conjunction with Midland Crimestoppers, Major's Proclamation proclaiming April 24-30 as American Home Week and Red Cross First Aid/CPR demonstrations for the public being held April 23 at Dellwood Mall.

"These activities will reflect the Board's effort to make the public more aware that home ownership remains one of the most rewarding investments a household can make," said McDonald. "We want everybody in Midland to realize how valuable home ownership is," he added. "Owning a home brings out the best in people because it allows them to assume a responsibility, put down roots and make a commitment to the community." McDonald added that "Because property owners pay taxes, they care about what happens here to the schools, streets, sewers, trees and parks. They want adequate police and fire protection. They care about the quality of life for their families. It's really no different for people who own businesses here, either."

The Midland Board of Realtors, Inc. is one of more than 1,860 Boards in 50 states that help comprise the National Association of Realtors. This professional trade association represents more than 750,000 members involved in every phase of the real estate industry.

Fed neighbors for one dollar in 1880's

In the 1880s, a vegetable gardener could buy 30 packets of seeds for $1 — enough to feed the neighborhood. They contained seeds of watermelon, cantaloupe, beet, four kinds of onions, two varieties of lettuce, sweet pepper, parsnip, squash, two kinds of radishes, two types of tomatoes, turnip, carrot, bush bean, sweet corn, pole beans, cucumber, celery, four species of cabbage, cauliflower, salsify and spinach.

Langston Realtors talk about...

Midland's first Home Buyer's Fair

Langston

Langston Realtors will present Midland's first Home Buyers Fair, Saturday and Sunday, April 16-17 in the Claydesta Atrium.

Q. What is a Home Buyers' Fair?

A. It is a fair designed for potential or "just thinking" home buyers as well as for home owners. Over 200 homes will be exhibited in one place, a sort of "one-stop shopping opportunity" to inform interested persons about the residential market, values, mortgages and other topics pertinent to home owners or potential home owners.

Q. Who attends a Home Buyer's Fair?

A. Anyone interested in homes! Potential buyers can, in a relaxed atmosphere, find out about styles, costs, amenities, neighborhoods, what is on the market, mortgages, etc. Potential sellers can, in a very short period of time, learn what their competition may be and what their home may sell for. The information available at the Fair is especially valuable to first time home buyers or to anyone thinking of "buying up".

Q. How many homes will be displayed?

A. Over 200 homes will be seen through large color photographs, accompanied by descriptive flyers. Langston associates will also be available to answer questions, to offer additional information on properties, and to take an interested party to personally view any of the homes. In a few short hours a person could become very knowledgeable about the entire residential market in Midland.

Q. Will I be able to obtain mortgage information on the homes?

A. Yes! Claydesta Mortgage Bankers personnel will be on hand to give Fair participants complete information, i.e. closing costs, monthly payments, income required for loan qualifications, on all homes in the Fair. They will also "prequalify" everyone who wants to know what size mortgage they can obtain and what price home this will buy, and will advise Fair participants on which mortgage program may be best to meet a buyer's budget or financial situation. So many new programs are available in today's market that even we in the real estate profession find it difficult to keep up with all the changes and developments in home financing. We welcome a mortgage banker's assistance and counseling for our buyers.

Q. What else is planned for the Fair?

A. Many seminars on topics of interest to buyers, owners and "someday" buyers are planned for the Fair? Suzanne Smith of Claydesta Mortgage Bankers will offer tips and advice designed especially for first .time home buyers. Associates from the Design Guild will demonstrate how "high cost-high fashion" interiors can be copied for a fraction of the expense, and how to use accessories in decorating. Susie Wilmeth of Tom's Tree House will talk on "Maximizing Your Drive-Up Appeal" and on the use of native plants in landscaping.

Q. We've been thinking of selling; can we get our home in the Home Buyer's Fair?

A. If you are considering selling, we can think of no better marketing exposure for your home than that if the two day Fair. Any Langston associate will be glad to meet with you, do a free market analysis of your property, then, if you do decide to sell, to list your home for presentation in the Fair.

Q. The Fair sounds like fun! Can the whole family come?

A. We hope that they do! There will be free Coco-Colas and popcorn for everyone, contests and balloons for the children, plus all the great information. Hours are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Joanne Langston is the president/broker of Langston Realtors, one of the city's largest real estate firms, with 41 sales associates serving Midland for 23 years.

Driving down Shady Oak Court in Greentree Country Club, one would think that each home was as traditional as the next. But there is quite a surprise awaiting those who enter the home of Bill and Jeanne Basham. The decor is definitely not traditional. Bright colors, striking decorative treatments and some unusual furnishings fill the house — but it didn't start out that way.

When the Basham's bought the 2,600-square foot home almost two years ago, the interior was decorated in subtle earth-tones. "Everything was brown," Mrs. Basham said.

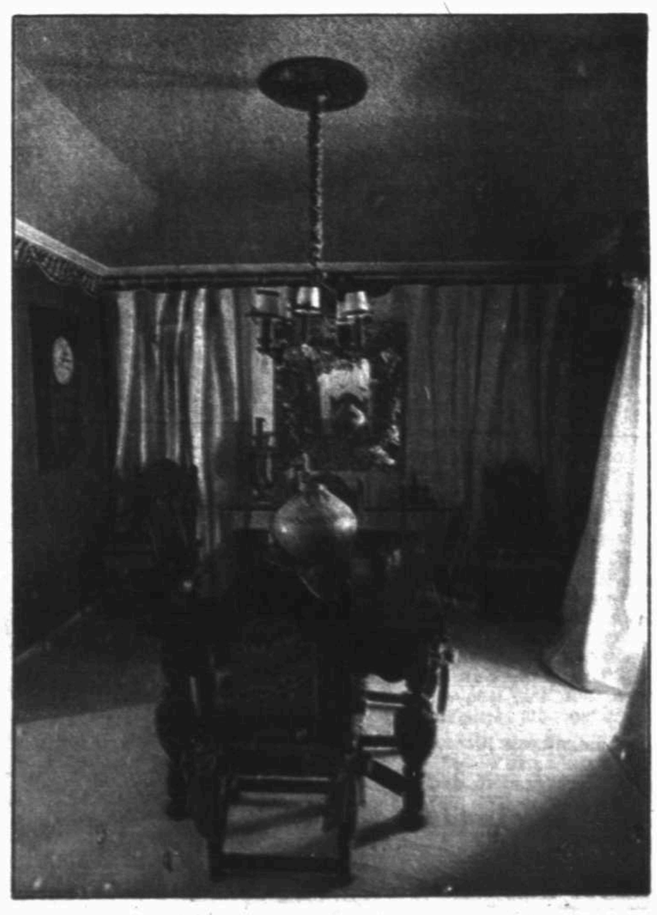

To make the transition from subtle to theatrical, the couple enlisted the help of decorator James Van Stavern. "We gutted the house and totally remodeled," Van Stavern said. "Except for one square of tile," he added, lifting a rug in the tiled entryway, "so, we covered it."

The transformation has taken about two years, and decorative touches still are being added. Now, the Basham's home is an eclectic mixture of bright colors combined with antique, classic contemporary and Spanish colonial furnishings.

BASHAM

Numerous odds and ends fill every nook and cranny — wall to wall and ceiling to floor. These knickknacks are a compilation of couple's collections and souvenirs from the many places they have lived and traveled during their marriage.

The front door opens into the living area, which is one of the more sedate rooms in the house. The walls of this area are whitewashed and feature decorative painted moldings. Points of interest in this room include the brass and brass-clad iron fireplace set from the late 19th century and the floor lamp circa 1920. Oriental rugs cover the living room floor and entryway are in shades of teal, mauve, plum and rasberry.

Basham's study also is sedate, in comparision with the remainder of the house. The walls are painted a pale teal, creating a calm atmosphere.

Mrs. Basham's study, however, is a showplace in itself. Against walls of persimmon, Van Stavern furnished the room with black lacquered, rewoven antique wicker. The wicker writing desk with matching chair are even dated — Oct. 19, 1923, stamped in the drawer. The cushions are covered with black and rose cotton chintz and zebra striped fabric.

There also are small pieces of antique lace subtlely worked into the design of her study, as well as various other places throughout the house. These come from one of Mrs. Basham's many collections. Along the top of the walls, at the ceiling, painter Gary Brewster has handpainted wall treatments. These handpainted borders also are found in the dining room and master bedroom.

In addition to the wall treatments in the dining room, there are many other highlights. The raw canvas curtains that drape onto the floor immediately catch the eye. In the center of the room is a 1925 William and Mary Style American Oak dining room set. The seat backs are carved with shell crests and the cushions are upholstered in pink velvet.

Above the dining table is an art deco light fixture featuring a central cage of polychrome painted peacock and lily motifs in the upper panels and white greyhounds and roses in the lower panels. The mirror hanging on the wall opposite the front door was designed by Van Stavern from concrete and cracked rose mirror. Atop the mirror, visitors should notice that in the design, Van Stavern worked in a feathered hair comb, another object from one of Mrs. Basham's collections. The American oak case clock hanging in the dining room if circa 1890.

A facinating room is the master suite. The bedroom features a 1920s art deco iron courtyard gate from Paris as the headboard and a dhurrhie rug from India as the bedspread. The drapes in this room also are raw canvas. They have been hand-painted to match the rooms decor. There are also two hand-painted chairs accented with mock fringe.

In the corner of the bedroom is a small antique vanity, circa 1900-1920. It is made of tubular, chrome-plated metal, hammered tin, glass, marble and hard wood. Van Stavern created a chair upholstered in silver alligator designs to go with the vanity.

The master bath is divided into his-and-hers private dressing areas with the bath connecting the two areas. Basham's dressing area sports pre-Columbian pottery and art, while Mrs. Basham's dressing area features her collection of evening handbags covering one wall. The walls in this area are painted lilac and pink with a sponge technique.

White cabinets line the kitchen giving it a bright look. The focal point of the kitchen is a wine rack displaying Mrs. Basham's collection of 71 miniture pitchers. The adjoining breakfast area features a contemporary Italian glass table.

Tucked behind the kitchen are the utility room and the family room.

Although most utility rooms are to be used and not seen, the Basham's is the exception to the rule. Mrs. Basham is a textile designer and has a fine arts degree, so she enjoys using the utility room as a work room as well.

The family room is designed for entertainment. The black leather Italian contemporary couches are adorned with Icelandic Sheep Pillows and one wall is covered with shelving hosting a mirage of books and knickknacks. For entertainment purposes, the family room has a large television and a wet bar with a wine rack. There also is a display of the Basham's framed mirror collection hanging on one wall.

The ceiling of the room is coffered and in place of curtains, Van Stavern used an etched glass hanging to cover the window.

Van Stavern said being the Basham's decorator has been, "a designer's dream."

"It's been such fun to do," Mrs. Basham added. "If you really enjoy something, it all works together."

And although numerous styles are used in the decor, from antiques to contemporaries, it does all work together to form a beautifully decorated home.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as a result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate. (The cost is only $50.00)

A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Brass plated furniture may lack in luster

By DOUG HENSLEY
Associated press

From doorknobs to bed frames, brass has been setting home aglow for decades.

But today all that glitters is not genuine brass. Shoppers looking for brass furniture will notice less expensive items are brass plated, whereas top-priced pieces are labeled "solid" or "genuine" brass.

The difference, according to Better Homes and Gardens magazine, is that brass is an alloy of copper and zinc. A piece of solid brass furniture will contain this alloy all the way through. The durable metal is usually coated with a clear, baked-on epoxy finish. Wiping the surface with a dry cloth is all that's needed to maintain its luster.

Brass-plated furniture, however, is made of steel that is coated with a thin skin of brass. Because steel can be welded, brass plating allows for design flexibility. These pieces have a lacquer finish that can also be cleaned with a cloth. Plated items cost about 40 percent less than solid brass but the lacquer may chip, which permits tarnishing.

To judge brass furniture's quality, check the surface and joints. Both should feel smooth and have little color variation. The piece should be turdy, with each tube joined by steel rods.

Planning ahead brings May flowers, early gardens

Seeds, bulbs sprout quicker in microclimates

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

CNS Photo

Beautiful bulb flower beds and early gardens are the result of planning ahead and testing the soil.

All the beautiful flowers blooming now through May were the result of early planning. And like flower beds, getting the garden off to an early and productive start is easier once the gardener comes to grips with the notion of microclimates.

Microclimates are different spots on a gardener's property where buildings, trees, plantings and slopes dramatically affect temperature of the soil and air. A garden exposed to full sun and wind will be colder than one sheltered within the "L" of a building.

The basic need in early-season gardening is to warm the soil and air within the microclimate so seeds will sprout normally and roots will develop quickly. An ideal location for the early garden is one with a southerly exposure, up high and next to a building. Here, soil warms quickly and retains heat in spite of chilly evenings.

"Up high" is an important consideration. Cold air collects in low spots, and in the early season it can defeat the sun's warming effect. Avoid low spots for early season work.

The soil can be worked in the spring as soon as it dries to the right firmness. If a handful makes a muddy ball, it is too wet and needs several days to dry. If it crumbles away, moisture content is okay and cultivation can begin.

Early spring is a good time to have the soil tested and fertilizer or lime added, if needed. Working in compost, leaf mold or other organic matter to improve its structure is best done now, too.

Other than choosing a hospitable microclimate for the early garden, there are at least two other ways to warm the soil. One is by stretching black plastic over the garden several weeks before planting. The plastic captures and traps the sun's heat. Another way is to mulch the early garden with straw before cold weather sets in. Cold won't penetrate as deeply so early warm-up will be easier.

Vegetables have various tolerances to cool soil. Corn and tomato seeds will rot if it is too cold. Young tomato plants simply refuse to grow in cold soil. Carrots, lettuce, cabbage and many others are more tolerate once sprouted, and grow well, even through light frosts.

Some gardeners help their early season success by sprouting seeds indoors and then planting immediately in the warmed-up garden. This differs from using transplants with established leaves and root systems.

This technique is easy and especially useful for seeds that sprout poorly or slowly in cool soil. Here's how: Sprinkle seeds on a damp paper towel and enclose the towel in a plastic bag. Store the bag in a warm spot until the seeds germinate, and then stir the seedlings into a gel made from cornstarch and water. The gel should then be carefully poured into a shallow furrow in the garden. The roots will develop quickly and send out leaves.

Once plants are established, there are any number of ways and gadgets to keep them growing in the cool, early season.

One approach in keeping in warmth is with a blanket of lightweight, spun polyester. This material is new to the garden and is an excellent replacement for clear plastic. The blanket is laid over the seed bed or transplants so light, air and moisture pass through while heat is retained.

Affother approach for a large planting is to make greenhouse tunnels along the planting rows. Wire hoops are spaced every three feet for support, and a sheet of plastic is stretched over the hoops to provide steady warmth. The plastic should be slit along its length for ventilation.

For protecting high-value, high-yield plants, such as tomatoes, try the so-called "Walls of Water." These are plastic sleeves that are placed around a plant and filled with water.

Each sleeve holds about three gallons. The idea is simple and works. The sun heats the water and moderates air temperature inside the sleeve during the day. At night, heat is released and plant and soil stay warm.

There is little risk in rushing the season by using these techniques. They cost little in time or money and offer a good chance at a longer growing season. The worst that could happen is that they fail, in which case the prime planting season is still young and there is ample time to sow seeds again or put out transplants.

Miniskirt dies sudden death

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

It was such a small death notice, you may have missed it. "SKIRT, MINI, age 12 months, died of public apathy complicated by dissent as it slept on clothing racks throughout the country. Only a small group of mourners (12 male designers and 15 starved models) were on hand to mark the passing. Plans are being made by 11 states to declare the first Monday in April a paid legal holiday."

I hate to speak ill of the dead, but I thought miniskirts would never go. I was ready to pull the life-support systems on them last fall when I saw them in store windows. They were designed for failure. One simply cannot compress an active body with 162 movable parts, layered with cellulite and love handles from excessive eating, into a small square the size of a heating pad and expect women to go out in public in it.

It was not what you would call the love affair of the century. Television personalities clung to their desks as if they were life preservers on the Titanic. Laws were passed in some states stating you had to be 18 to watch a woman get in and out of her car. I know two women who gave up climbing stairs for Lent.

I personally did not rush right out and buy a wardrobe of coasters for my body. I waited until I saw what the fashion gurus for women were doing: Barbie dolls. Barbies chose to wear convertible dresses with hemlines that went either way depending on where you slid the ruffles. Is that swell or what!

Who is to blame for the untimely demise of miniskirts? No question about it: designers. They're like mothers who put vegetables on your plate when you didn't ask for them and don't want them, and admonish, "Eat 'em. They're good for you."

Also to blame are the women of the world. We sit around like a bunch of Stepford Wives waiting to be told what part of our anatomy is "in" or "out" this year and adjusting to it accordingly. We flock like sheep to buy clothes plastered with designer names for which we should be included in their advertising budgets. We spend billions of dollars each year for trends that won't outlast the payments. It was time we stopped doing this.

As a final tribute, all of you women hike your skirts to half-mast. That's it! Now let's get on with our lives.

Brides discover gowns in bargain basement

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The thrill of a good buy drew more than 100 brides-to-be, attended by mothers, fiances and friends, to stand in line on a spring morning outside Second Time Around, a thrift shop in Manhattan.

They were awaiting the beginning of an unusual "wedding event." An array of almost 60 unworn bridal gowns — satiny, frilly and almost new — went on sale at the shop to benefit Planned Parenthood of New York City. The sale will last as long as the supply lasts.

The gowns, unworn designers' samples ranging from $100 to $300, would sell for as much as $1,200 if new. A manufacturer of formal wear, who asked to remain anonymous, donated them for the shop's second annual bridal-wear sale. Also on sale are headdresses donated by Betty Wales Bridal Veils and stockings and gloves from anonymous donors selling for $3 to $35.

Jinx Lindenauer, the director of Second Time Around, estimated that the sale would bring Planned Parenthood at least $10,000. Selling wedding gowns, she said, is in keeping with Planned Parenthood's broad range of family planning services. The bridal sale is one of several special events each year for which the organization solicits donations.

A Manhattan thrift shop sold almost 60 unworn wedding gowns to benefit Planned Parenthood.

"We cover a lot of bases," she said.

Opening day was a bargain hunter's dream — or nightmare. When the doors were unlocked at 10 a.m. nearly 300 eager shoppers rushed down the store's center aisle. Like bridesmaids reaching for bouquets, they jostled for positions at the sales rack, and stretched up to reach the dresses, which dangled just over their heads. They grabbed, inspected for stains and tripped over trains.

"Look at them claw!" said Barrett Zinderman, a freelance stylist from Manhattan.

Zinderman said she had been sent to the thrift shop sale by her father in New Jersey. She had looked at bridal gowns in department stores for some time, she explained, but could not find "something simple" for under $3,500.

Pamela Weinstein, 23 years old, of Brooklyn, was delighted with the sale. If the price is right, she said, elegance and ceremony can wait. "There is no romance in buying a wedding dress," she said. "When you're planning a wedding, it's one big headache."

Amanda Burton, a 27-year-old administrative assistant, bought the first dress of the day at 10:30. She did not try it on. For $250, she said, it was worthwhile to purchase in haste and repent — alter, repair, and dryclean — at leisure.

By lunchtime, nearly half the gowns had been sold, and a new rush of shoppers had come and gone, most without making purchases.

Zinderman, disappointed over the very traditional gowns, left emptyhanded. At 30, she said, "I'm too old for frills."

Bridal fashions are being made at home

Associated Press

NEW YORK — With traditional-style weddings and opulent fashions back in vogue, 40 percent of the bridal finery will be sewn at home or by dresssma[illegible]s, using purchased fabrics, laces, trims and notions, reports the Sewing [illegible]ion Council.

Since [illegible], it notes, the number of bridal fashion patterns has increased 100 percent, not including headpiece, evening gown or mother-of-the-bride patterns.

Boxcar ride turns into hobo-chic romance

Hearst News Service

"Sante Fe Bo" and "Northwest Nel" knew they had plenty in common when they shared their first boxcar ride together on Southern Pacific's "Midnight Ghost," a night-time freight that rumbles along the West Coast.

They shared some crusty bread, a little conversation and a spectacular view of the ocean. The two fell in love.

They are modern-day hobos, Bobb Hopkins and his wife, Karna. And when they aren't crisscrossing America for adventure and fun, they look and live like a blond, blue-eyed yuppie couple. They drive a Mercedes and live in a cozy upper-middle-class neighborhood in Century City, Calif. They also are busy raising an 11-month-old daughter, Erika, and earning respectable livings as an actor and an aerobic exercise teacher.

"We're hobo chic," said Bobb Hopkins, 38, a self-described hobo spokesman. But he is careful not to advocate hopping on freight cars. After all, trespassing on railroad property is illegal, he said.

BUT THE couple continues to ride the rails. They are part of a growing number of yuppies who have fallen in love with the world of cabooses and Mulligan stews, rather than BMWs and exotic cuisine.

"There are more yuppies on the road nowadays," Hopkins said. "I guess anybody can do it on a lark. Nobody has a claim or a right to be a hobo. A hobo makes no distinctions."

The couple says there is a camaraderie among the folks who migrate along the freight lines, where people affectionately remember each other by friendly nicknames.

One favorite is "Slim" Pickins, a housepainter who cruises up and down across the California coastline. A well-kept fellow, Pickins would bury his clothes along his favorite hangouts throughout California in cardboard boxes. He always had fresh clothes whenever he stopped for a prolonged visit.

The Hopkinses, who met in acting class, adopted their nicknames from their first boxcar rides.

Bobb Hopkins is the editor of Hobo Times and a founder of the National Hobo Association, where members share information about the rails. The newsletter, which just printed its first issue, features yarns from veteran hobos and information about the best routes and "jungles" — friendly campgrounds. Subscribers pay $18 annually for the bimonthly gray sheets; proceeds go to publication costs and missions providing food to hobos.

SO FAR, the letter has about 2,000 subscribers, ranging from about 500 "professional" hobos — those who are on the road all the time — to 1,500 hobo hobbyists — those who venture to the train routes occasionally.

Hopkins bristles when the naive link hobos to bums or derelicts.

"We're a piece of America starting from the Civil War, when men traveled around looking for work. Hobo is gradually meaning (one who) adventures by wandering throughout the country," Hopkins said.

Hopkins, a sturdy six-footer, prefers jeans and plaid shirts to designer items. His first television role was as a murder victim on the crime show "CHiPs." Before dropping dead, he had managed to utter, "I want to report a murder."

Karna Nelson Hopkins, 30, who teaches Jane Fonda-style aerobics, had never hitched on a boxcar until dating Hopkins. But her husband is a veteran hobo of 11 years. Hopkins first followed the tracks when he was a junior accounting executive in San Francisco. He was short of cash but needed to visit his grandfather in Boston. So he hopped on a train.

In 1981, he filmed a PBS documentary, "The Great American Hobo," for which cameras trailed hobos on their daily treks.

Although Hopkins has been ignoring the whistle stops a little more since his daughter's birth, a hobo's life has not lost its charm. Sometimes, Hopkins prefers the boxcar, rattling along the tracks, to life at home.

"I'm a romantic about it, there's no question about it," Hopkins said plucking his suspenders. "I can think in the open, find peace and quiet."

SUMMER-REED

Cindy A. Summer and Phillip D. Reed were married 3 p.m. April 3. Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe officiated.

Following a wedding trip to Fort Davis, the couple lives in Midland.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip D. Reed

BAUMANN-KOCH

KERRVILLE — Former Midlander Susan Ann Baumann of West Covina, Calif., became the bride of Leland James Koch of West Covina in Notre Dame Catholic Church in Kerrville. The Rev. A.A. Gitter, assisted by the Rev. Roger Robbins and the Rev. Elner Ochoa, officiated.

The bride is the daughter of the late Edna and Maxie Baumann. Parents of the bridegroom are June and Royce Lynch of Muskogee, Okla.

Linda Baumann of Kerrville was matron of honor. Anna Holekamp of Austin was bridesmaid. The bride also was attended by her brother, Mike Baumann.

James B. Green of Houston was best man. Groomsman was Kelly Matz of Riverside, Calif. Ushers were Jesse Leeds of Las Vegas, Nev., Mark Wilson of Durango, Colo., Mark Minnear of Lake Jackson and Rodney Baumann of Granbury, brother of the bride. Other attendants were Sarah Baumann of Kerrville, niece of the bride, Brent Baumann of Kerrville, nephew of the bride, Marylue Thompson of Midland and Bob Lester of Eldorado.

After a wedding trip to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, the couple lives in West Covina.

OLSON-MORRISON

FORT WORTH — Margaret Elizabeth Olson of Fort Worth and Tom Alexander Morrison IV of Midland were married Saturday at St. Andrew's Catholic Church in Fort Worth.

The bride is the daughter of Wayne T. Olson of Simpsonville, S.C. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Tom Morrison of Midland.

Sandra Olson of Greenville, S.C., was maid of honor for her sister. Howard Morrison of Midland served his brother as best man.

Members of this barbershop quartet are, from left, Donnie Wheeler, baritone; Lyn Fite, bass; Will Sass, lead; and Robin Vasicek, tenor.

It's as American as baseball and apple pie — and been around almost as long — the Barbershop Quartet. In fact, according to the Barbershop Quartet Society, "Barbershop harmony was spawned in the 1840s and developed in the early beginnings of the entertainment and recording industry."

But this year is special for the singers of four-part harmony. Monday marks the 50th anniversary of its official organization, The Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America Inc., which was founded April 11, 1938 in Tulsa, Okla.

In honor of this momentous occasion, barbershop singing has been honored with a day, a week and a month.

Today is the first day of S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Harmony Week, which will run through Saturday. Monday is Barbershop Quartet Day, which commemorates the gathering of some 26 persons in Tulsa and the founding of S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc., according to Chase's Annual Events.

In Texas, however, Gov. Bill Clements has taken the celebration further. His proclamation states: "Because the gifted members of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America spread so much joy and bring happiness to so many through their music, it is fitting that we recognize this special group.

"Therefore, I, William P. Clements, Jr., Governor of Texas, do hereby designate April, 1988, as: Barbershop Harmony Month in Texas and urge appropriate recognition thereof."

IN MIDLAND, the Permian Basin chapter of S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc. is celebrating its anniversary in the finest tradition of barbershop singing — by barbershop singing, of course. The group, which consists of a chorus with several members who also have formed quartets, will have an open house 7 p.m. Monday at its new meeting place, Our Savior's Lutheran Church, 3309 Neely.

"It will ... be a musical type of evening," said Tom Laney, music director of the local chapter of the barbershop chorus. "There will be singing, maybe a sing-along. It will be open to the whole family, but our primary purpose is to attract more men to the club." There are currently 29 active members in the Permian Basin chapter, according to publicity chairman Will Sass.

Since Monday is the 50th anniversary of the society's founding, Laney said, "all across the country we are anticipated to have people in every major city singing barbershop songs, especially some of the songs sung at the first meeting — which no one now has ever heard of. It should be a real good night for us. I would encourage not only brand new members, but former members to come and visit."

S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc. information defines barbershop harmony as: "a style of unaccompanied male singing with three voices harmonizing to the melody ... the style is further identified by chords that are harmonious (pleasing). Tuning is as nearly perfect as is vocally possible. The style is distinguished by uniformity of word sounds and a special emphasis on close harmony."

Voices are in four parts — tenor, lead, baritone and base. "The lead is critical in barbershop singing because the other parts are in harmony with the lead," said Thane Akins, assistant musical director of the group.

FOR LISTENERS, barbershop harmony is almost guaranteed to soften the mood and relax the mind.

For singers, it can be a whole way of life. Baritone John D. Stone, president of the Permian Basin group, said he has been singing barbershop harmony since 1956. "I was living in Shreveport, La., at the time. My brother was a member of the local chapter. He kind of talked me into it and I've never regretted it."

Other members also started singing barbershop harmony through the influence of others. "I became a member of a chapter back in Decatur (Ill.)," said Laney. "My best friend directed the group, back when we were both in college."

Sass, who sings lead, said, "Personally, I've had a background in playing musical instruments. I have a good friend who got interested in a group in St. Louis. I wanted to continue my partaking of music, and this was kind of a natural, fun way to enjoy it and participate."

Barbershop singing is fun, members of the local chapter agreed, and that is one of the reasons for joining and participating in the chorus and quartets.

"I think for most of the members it's a fun thing," Laney said. "Some of them take it real seriously. For me it's not only fun and recreation, but I want to strive to make this the best chorus it can be."

"Relaxation is the most important thing," Stone said. "Relaxation and the pleasure of hearing the harmony and being able to contribute to it."

The sound of barbershop singing is unique. "Four-part male harmony is not always equivalent to barbershop," said Laney. "It's a style of harmonization. We like to have a variety of types of songs. What we strive for is as much variation as possible in that type of sound."

SOME SONGS, such as "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and "I Want A Girl Just Like the Girl That Married Dear Old Dad," are classic barbershop quartet tunes, but other, more modern, melodies can also be sung in barbershop style, Laney added.

"Some songs adapt themselves better than others to barbershop harmony — its a certain kind of harmony — as a result some songs are a lot less appropriate for barbershop harmonization. We have Christmas carols, hymns, patriotic songs — there have even been some good Beatles arrangements, (such as) Yesterday, Michelle, some of the ballads. Some country music can be done barbershop."

"We do an old favorite called 'Auralee,' " Sass said. "One of our guys arranged it with 'Love Me Tender.' We have fun with a lot of different types of lyrics.

"We also learn seasonal and special event songs," he said, but the "emphasis at competition time is the music that is strictly barbershop quartet style — it has to do with the arrangement of chords and music. We concentrate on barbershop."

HARMONY

Each year the chorus and quartets compete against others in their categories. This year, "competition is in September in Ruidoso (N.M.) for our area," Laney said. Some of the other cities competing in Midland's area are Lubbock, San Angelo and El Paso. "After only having them (members of the local chapter) for about eight weeks, I took them to the competition last fall," he added. "They won high score for overall song quality. For our little corner of the world, that's a pretty big honor."

IN ADDITION to competitions, the chorus and the quartets frequently perform locally. "We try to get out to perform as much as possible, both as quartets and as a chorus," Laney said. "At Christmas, as a chorus, we go out and sing carols at different areas. We will do parties and things like that — we sing for nursing homes. We just had a quartet sing for the Golden Agers."

Perhaps their busiest time of year is February, when the quartets are available to performing "Singing Valentines."

They have performed in Christmas programs and plan to sing for the Celebrations of the Arts, Laney added.

Nov. 5, the group plans to present a concert, which they hope will become an annual event.

Competitions and concerts may discourage some otherwise-interested persons from joining the group,

"If you are just a shower singer, you can learn — anyone can learn to sing better. We try to train them (members of the organization) in vocal techniques and help them improve their singing."

Tom Laney
musical director,
Permian Basin chapter of S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc.

but the members said the ability to sing well is not a requirement for membership.

"If you are just a shower singer, you can learn — anyone can learn to sing better," Laney said. "We try to train them (members of the organization) in vocal techniques and help them improve their singing."

Singing in the chorus is easier than singing in a quartet, he said, because "in a chorus you have other men to lean on who are singing your same part, so the pressure is not as great as in a quartet, when you are the only one singing your notes."

"You don't have to read music to sing barbershop style," Stone added, "as long as you can sing on pitch accurately."

"It does not take outstanding musical talent to participate," said Sass. "We have people with no musical experience who enjoy it, and people with up to 20 or 30 years experience."

IN FACT, you don't have to sing at all to join S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc. "You can join the chapter and (provide) support," said Laney. "There are always things for people to do even if they don't sing."

Stone said, "We do have members who don't sing at all. They just like to hear it and be a part of the fellowship."

You don't even have to be male to participate in barbershop singing. Laney said there are two national barbershop singing organizations for women, although to the best of his knowledge neither group has a local chapter. But if any women are interested in forming a group, "I would love to work with a group of women who would like to sing barbershop quartet."

Barbershop singing has been a popular form of entertainment for almost 150 years, and the society wants to see it continue on into the future. To preserve and encourage barbershop singing in coming generations, S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A. Inc. is beginning a new program called Youth in Harmony, designed for high school students, Sass said. "We are looking at promoting that this year."

Teacher uses entertainment in classroom

Associated Press

PLAINFIELD TOWNSHIP, Ill. — Jim Aylesworth is spinning a yarn — and he's ensnared his pint-sized audience at Crystal Lawns Elementary School.

All eyes are on him as he paces the gym floor, sits, leaps to his feet, gestures, folds a piece of paper, and then scribbles on it.

Good teachers, he says later, are entertainers — and Aylesworth is an entertainer.

He is also a source of inspiration for these students, who will soon be writing stories for a Young Authors competition.

Aylesworth is an author himself. He's had seven children's picture books printed by major publishers. Three more are in different stages of publication.

He has taught first grade in the Chicago suburb of Oak Park for 16 years and has won several teaching awards. He teaches children's literature at three Chicago-area colleges and is given time off from school to lecture to students at schools and libraries and at teachers' conferences.

His mission, it seems, is to infect audiences with enthusiasm.

He loves words — the rhythm, the feel and the sound of them.

He sings the words of "One Crow, a Counting Rhyme," soon to be published.

He drawls as he reads about barnyard animals settling down for a nap in his first book, "Hush Up!" He speaks slowly and thoughtfully as he tells the students that writing and rewriting is a lot of work. "And it makes your fingers hurt," he says.

Writing, he notes, can be painful — when the words won't come out right, when a publisher rejects you.

There are other problems, "like when I'm writing in the basement and my wife calls me to help with supper and I know I have to put aside what I'm doing," he said.

Aylesworth opens a battered suitcase he has brought with him and holds up a thick sheaf of papers. These are the letters of rejection, he says.

"There are a lot of hurt feelings here," he says, hefting the papers. "But I didn't quit."

He has just finished book No. 11, and is now starting to think about book No. 12.

"Go for it," his audience chants. "Go for it."

When it's time for questions, a dozen hands wave furiously in the air.

"I'll pick some of the best kids here to ask me questions," he says.

More hands shoot up.

"What's your favorite book?" asks one student.

"That's kind of like asking a father which is his favorite child," he replies. "I like all these books, but for different reasons."

"Do you pay them to publish the books?" asks another student.

Aylesworth smiles a big smile. "They pay me." He pauses. "Imagine."

Afterward, in an interview, Aylesworth says "quite a few" of his books haven't been accepted by publishers.

His favorite authors of children's book are Dr. Seuss and Beatrix Potter.

He began writing, he said, because books meant so much to him and he wanted to be a part of that world.

He is particularly fond of folklore and fairy tales and says the key to writing for children is "to know your audience. A lot of people don't. A child's book is not about childhood. It's for children. There's a big difference."

He says he became a teacher because "I'm trying to make a better world. I want to ma'ter." And that's why he has stayed in teaching.

He admits a male first-grade teacher is a rare breed. "There are maybe 20 of us in the state," he said.

"It's sex-role stereotyping in our culture," he said. "It's been traditional that females take care of small children. But children definitely need male and female role models."

He and his wife, Donna, an interior designer, live in Hinsdale and have two sons, ages 18 and 21.

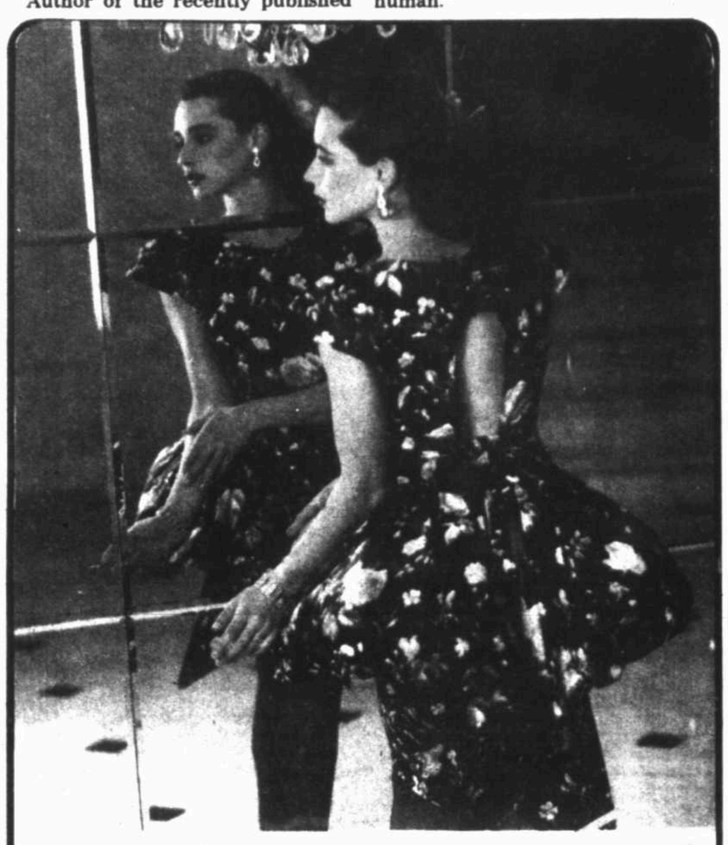

Pets helpful in therapy process

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Pets can help people deal with their problems, psychologist Dr. Janet Ruckert says she has observed in more than two decades of work with both children and adults.

Ruckert, a therapist in the West Los Angeles area, is the founder of the Center for Petcology, where her staff of co-therapists includes two large Rottweilers and two Burmese cats.

Author of the recently published "The Four Footed Therapist: How Your Pet Can Help You Solve Your Problems," she discovered that when an animal was present during a patient's sessions, the patient could express deep emotions and psychological needs much more easily.

"Pet therapy is not a substitute for psychotherapy," Ruckert points out, "but the animal's presence offers healing massage, which in turn can open the door for the healing human."

Publications aimed at women

CNS Graphic

On its maiden voyage into the restless teen-age psyche, Sassy magazine has charted a bold course. Forget the gee-whiz, fanzine frills — although there is enough celebrity schmoozing to indulge an MTV mentality.

This, in essence, is reading between the generations.

Practical, no-nonsense stuff. Like losing your virginity and coping with a friend's suicide (although not all on the same day — or in the same story). And, on the lighter but no-less-vital side: how to flirt.

Make no mistake. Sassy is no sissy.

It is one of two slick, thick magazines with a clearly defined female audience to make its debut this spring.

The other, Lear's, is, as its cover proclaims, "for the woman who wasn't born yesterday." From Sassy's Top 40, we go to post-40: the power generation.

Or as founder and editor-in-chief Frances Lear insists, the woman who "refused to take the ritual trek over the hill at 40."

With an eye to the independent, sophisticated and successful, Lear's aspires to be a role model for the upscale woman seeking to rise above middle-age angst.

AMONG THE subjects explored in a recent issue of the bimonthly magazine: a profile of Philippines President Corazon Aquino and a piece by Anne Bernays on the secrets of a long marriage. (Her own — with biographer Justin Kaplan — has endured 34 years).

"We're offering women an alternative to the youth chauvinism of Madison Avenue," said Stephanie K. Blackwood, the magazine's public relations spokesman. "Most women are not 20 years old, and it makes no sense to show them in a magazine geared to an older, upscale audience."

Of the 200,000-plus charter subscribers, the average household income is a not-to-be-sneezed-at $92,000, according to Blackwood. Lear, the founder and ex-wife of entertainment king Norman Lear, is hoping to corner the marketplace on the above-40 women, of whom there will be a projected 54 million by the end of the decade.

Sassy, on the other hand, is zeroing in on the 14-19 crowd, somewhere between Seventeen and Vogue. It never will be mistaken for a Lear's Junior.

The title, in fact, was suggested by a 13-year-old girl and embraced by a magazine consultant, according to 25-year-old editor Jane Pratt.

Said Pratt: "I want all types of girls to see honest reflections of themselves (in Sassy). Not what their parents want, or what their teachers expect, or what they think they should be — but what they really are. Because we want them to feel good about what they are."

Accordingly, the letters from readers will not be edited "to sound more literary," Pratt insisted. And models will represent all races, shapes and sizes.

Every so often, the 30-person Sassy staff — its average age 26 — tries to brainstorm story ideas from the perspective of a 15-year-old, said Pratt.

"We talk about personal experiences or what our younger sisters or friends are concerned about."

FUTURE ISSUES will include stories about a 19-year-old with AIDS, a 17-year-old girl stripper and — let's not forget the lighter side — how to kiss.

"We want to be fun and entertaining as well as informative," said Pratt, a former associate editor of Teenage magazine who interned at Rolling Stone. "We'll look at celebrities and new artists on the cutting edge, and we'll be very opinionated about it.

"We won't act like we love every person with a hit record, or that every celebrity lives a dream life. And our writers will talk about themselves in our stories."

Indeed, their how-to-flirt piece is an informal discussion among staffers, including token male Neill McCutheon, associate art director.

The first monthly issue was sent to 250,000 subscribers, and there were 300,000 newsstand copies, said Pratt. Projected circulation by 1993: 1 million.

"There's somewhat of a void (in the magazine market) for the older range of teens," said Pratt. "A lot drop teen magazines at 15 and 16, and go on to Vogue or Cosmopolitan."

Now they have a Sassy alternative.

Magazine targets over-40 women

AP Laserphoto

Frances Lear says her new magazine is geared for "the woman who wasn't born yesterday."

NEW YORK (AP) — A few well-earned wrinkles adorn the cover-girl's face on Lear's, a stylish new magazine that celebrates "the woman who wasn't born yesterday."

"I feel a kind of earthquake of women over 40 who are going to change life for themselves for the better," said publisher Frances Lear, 64, whose magazine hit the newsstands in February. "It's going to be a greater movement than the women's movement."

For members of this new movement, Lear, the former wife of television producer Norman Lear, blends a dash of fashion with no-nonsense financial advice and some savvy writing.

"Once upon a time," says her first editorial, "a woman took the events of her life, added the pluses and deducted the minuses, and lived with that arithmetic. No more."

Lear, a longtime supporter of women's causes, knows all about change — and about bouncing back.

Divorced after a 28-year marriage to Norman Lear, she left California for her hometown, New York, carrying two suitcases of clothes and the germ of an idea.

"I could never look like Linda Evans," Lear confides in a letter to potential subscribers. "The women's magazines were urging me to travel, but every resort showed pictures of slim young women in bikinis."

What was needed, she decided, was a magazine for women like her: educated, affluent and over 40. "It took a woman to see it," she said.

Armed with the dream, connections and money, but lacking know-how, she spent 2½ years picking the brains of the publishing world.

"The last person I spoke to was (New York Magazine creator) Clay Felker, who said, 'Do it. Just do it.' And I did," she said. "I was ecstatic that I would be writing and working for women, about whom I care a great deal."

During the late 1960s, Lear founded Women's Place Inc., a Los Angeles consulting firm. She later began Lear Purvis Walker & Co., an executive search firm for women. In 1984, as a partner in a political consulting firm, she founded a division for women candidates.

The magazine, she said, "is a fusion of my experience and the women I've worked with for the past 25 years, who ranged from welfare mothers to highly skilled executives."

It's the female executives — or wives of executives — who make up Lear's guaranteed circulation of 200,000. (The first issue, which ran 475,000 copies, was expected to sell out.) Market research shows the subscribers' average household income is $92,400.

Lear, in fact, is using her own money to start the magazine. "By the time it's in the black (she hopes in two to three years), I will have spent $25 million," she said.

Six issues are planned for this year and 10 for the second year.

The ads and richly colored, high-fashion spreads feature over-40 models whenever possible. (They're in scarce supply.)

"We believe that Lear's will spark a whole culture," she said. "Products, instruction, entertainment, recreation — this whole market will have their own world of toys to choose from."

The copy ranges from humor, essays and fiction to advice on treasury bills and an interview with Philippine President Corazon Aquino, who defends her feminine style in the political arena.

"We have presented women over 40 who are absolutely beautiful and sensual and intelligent and character-ful," said Lear. "It informs, it entertains, it impels, inspires."

Effects lasting

People occupationally exposed to formaldehyde develop subtle, but lasting, problems with dexterity, balance and memory — problems similar to those caused by aging, according to a new study.

Dr. Kaye H. Kilburn, a professor of medicine at the University of Southern California, and his colleagues tested 362 technicians in histology — the microscopic identification of cells. The more hours per day technicians worked around formaldehyde (used for preserving tissue), the more trouble they had recalling visual diagrams and performing dexterity, balance and coordination tests.

Kilburn said it is unclear how long formaldehyde's effects last. None of the technicians tested over the last six years has been away from routine occupational exposure for more than two or three years. But decreased or discontinued exposure "hasn't produced any evidence of recovery."

Compared with unexposed controls, the technicians reported 10 times as many episodes of lost balance and five times as much lightheadedness and dizziness. Average exposure time was 4.3 hours a day, and the technicians had an average of 17 years on the job. Their average age was 40, and about 80 percent were women.

'War between sexes' harmful to both

Hearst News Service

The struggle for equality between the sexes extends beyond the board room and the political arena. The home front, too, is an important setting for the establishment of equal rights. How the housework gets divided can provoke as much controversy as reviving the fight for the Equal Rights Amendment. Some men still won't do housework.

Some say the woman's movement has lost some of its momentum in this decade as women tackle pressing personal issues with men. But if the personal is political, as many feminists assert, then what happens in the home has impact on society, too.

Ann Wilson Schaef, author of "Women's Reality, Codependence — Misunderstood, Mistreated" and "When Society Becomes an Addict," says that as women quietly, firmly speak their own truth rather than react to men and the inequalities of the male system, change is inevitable.

In her keynote speech at a University of Houston conference on "Women's Issues: Myth and Reality" Schaef said the male system depends on a parallel female system in which women struggle against men for power. If women create a system of their own, which incorporates female values of sharing and communication, Schaef says the male system based on competition and hierarchy will fade.

THOUGH SCHAEF'S books criticize the male system, she does not blame men for women's problems. In fact, she says men suffer as much if not more than women in this system. Men pay a steep price for their dominance, she says.

As Schaef explains the male system, it requires that both men and women learn to meet the needs of others before meeting their own needs. This leaves individuals with a lack of self-esteem often experienced as feeling empty inside. To fill the hollow, both sexes become dependent on something external, from love to alcohol. This dependence can become an addiction.

Women are often addicted to people. This has been called co-dependence. Men often are co-dependent, too, but cover this with addictions to work or alcohol. This means, says Schaef, that men have additional layers of addiction to work through in order to recover from the destructive effects of the system.

There are numerous books on the topic of co-dependence, including "Women Who Love Too Much," by Robin Norwood. Norwood's book spawned a nationwide self-help movement among women who felt they were addicted to men, unable to leave them even though staying was painful.

NOT EVERYONE believes that only women love too much. Lecturer and therapist Terry Kellogg said that women appear to work harder at relationships than men, reading more self-help books and going for therapy. Nonetheless, he says they are no more capable of intimacy than men. He says both sexes come from the same families in which they were taught roles that aren't working.

He describes the process of getting close as a dance of intimacy — one spouse moves closer, the other backs off. Sometimes, he says, either may get stuck in the role of the pursuer and feel he or she "loves too much." Often this may be the woman. Kellogg feels that if men and women can learn to accept and ultimately cherish their differences, this will make intimacy possible.

Psychologist Claudia Gish, who teaches a class on male-female relationships, sees women acting on their own to resolve their emotional difficulties with male mates. She says that in the case of "women who love too much," this may mean getting enough distance to be close.

SOME BACKING off may be entirely appropriate, Gish believes. Sometimes, she says, women go so far as to get an "emotional divorce" from their husbands, simply giving up on communication and intimacy without leaving the relationship; they continue to go through the motions of the relationship. Then, when they abruptly leave their husbands, the men are taken by surprise.

"This devastates some men," she said. She feels women often expect men to communicate their feelings in the same way their women friends do, which is unrealistic. She believes women must recognize and appreciate the differences in some instances. That's one of the hallmarks of intimacy.

Intimacy is the current panacea for relationships: to be able to be one's self in a relationship. Much of the work of marriage counselors and therapists is directed toward helping individuals and couples achieve it.

Though some social critics deplore this self-development movement as narcisstic and destructive of family relationships, sociologist Francesca Cancian has written "Love in America," explaining how the movement is actually strengthening marriage relationships. She describes a transition from the "women's magazine" model of marriage to that of interdependence.

IN THE PAST, Cancian asserts, love was the female's central focus, prerogative and responsibility. It was also defined in very feminine terms, emphasizing emotional expression. In interdependent relationships, love is redefined more androgynously to incorporate sexuality and shared activity, both traditionally masculine ways of showing love.

Cancian's book offers some hope that a new style of love and marriage can emerge that will lessen the tensions that many couples experience. Schaef's books, too, suggest that if both sexes recover from their co-dependency, healthier, happier relationships are indeed possible.

America, Japan partners in business

TOKYO (AP) — While creating a trade deficit for the United States, Japan also is an important trading partner.

The United States sells more products to Japan than to any other country except Canada.

Further, U.S. companies are active in the Japanese economy and Japan is pushing aside trade barriers to allow even more foreign trade and direct investment.

One example is a joint venture between Phillips Petroleum International and Toray Industries of Japan to produce and sell plastic in Asia.

Massage breaks relieve stress in corporate offices

Copley News Service

Bill Schurmann, a fast-talking, wired-up financial portfolio manager, had just finished a conference with some clients worth about $3.5 million.

Papers were stacked on every horizontal surface in his classy office, including the couch.

"I've had it," he said, removing his glasses, stripping off his tie.

Schurmann was about to take a stress break, and it wasn't going to be with a martini. Instead, he plunked himself down on a 2-foot-high cushioned stool that a lean, blond man named Steve Bulger had just brought into the office.

Then, growing visibly more content each second, Schurmann submitted to a 10-minute head, neck and shoulder massage, courtesy of Business Alive, one of a handful of "stress-management" companies bringing massage into West Coast offices.

CNS Graphic

Gone are the days when massage meant driving across town and disrobing in an incense-filled apartment in front of a person wearing patchouli oil and Birkenstock sandals or, worse, searching for a masseuse in the yellow pages.

A new breed of corporate stress-busters is bringing tension-releasing massage and other stress-reduction techniques to offices across the country. They range from Pacific Health Systems in San Francisco, which serves about 100 Bay Area clients a week, including Apple Computer, to International Health Systems in New York City, whose experts massage Wall Street clients at their desks in the bullpen, the enclosed area at a brokerage where all the rookies sit and take cold calls.

Business Alive's masseuses are stunningly professional looking. The men wear dress shirts and ties and little plastic tags imprinted with their names. The day's activities are recorded on a computer printout carried in a briefcase by partner Terry Cross.

In short, they blend in, even though they do arrive at the office carrying massage stools.

Said Donna Simondes, a licensed massage therapist and the company's third partner: "We don't present ourselves as New Age. We want to bring massage to mainstream America. We want to legitimize massage, not present it as airy fairy" (out of touch with reality). "We see it as a very practical health-maintenance tool, easily integrated into life."

The fact that massages are given fully clothed, sitting up and only to the head, neck and shoulders makes it very non-threatening, Simondes said.

Schurmann, his partners and employees in Financial Designs Ltd. are part of 85 businesses to partake of the services of Business Alive since it began in March.

Business was brisk at the International Trading Group the day after the Oct. 19 stock-market crash. Cross, Bulger and Simondes went into the office to give a demonstration and found themselves besieged with on-the-spot requests for massages.

"These people were stressed-out," Bulger said. "We did $600 worth of business in one hour."

Job seekers advised to check out own attitudes

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Examine your attitude closely; it can be as important as technical or professional knowledge, an authority on business and interpersonal skills advises job seekers.

"Employers, of course, require basic skills, but at the same time they put a high premium on those personal qualifications a resume can't capture," says J. Oliver Crom, president of Dale Carnegie and Associates Inc., with headquarters in Garden City.

Crom, head of the international organization that trains more than 150,000 men and women annually, offers these suggestions to help project a winning attitude:

■ Keep your self-confidence at full strength. Review past accomplishments and give yourself a pep talk when the going gets tough.

■ Listen actively during an interview. You'll be more at ease, more responsive.

■ For greatest persuasion, communicate your thoughts in terms of the other person's interests.

■ Express genuine enthusiasm. It's one of the most highly prized and productive assets, one especially important in selling, and now you're selling yourself.

■ Be sincere. Experienced interviewers can spot a phony very quickly.

Store adapted to fit disabled manager's needs

WAYNESBORO, Pa. (AP) — Just five months after Judy Ott's spinal cord was injured in an accident that paralyzed her from the waist down, she's back as manager of the Sheetz store in this small south-central Pennsylvania town.

The owners of Sheetz modified the store so Ott could return to work, scooting around in her wheelchair like a pro.

"One of the reasons I came along so well is that I had a job waiting for me," Ott says. "So many people in a situation like mine aren't as fortunate."

Ott, 36, and her fiance, Jim Monsold, collect antique guns, and they were unloading a 1,200-pound gun vault at their home near Chambersburg last September, when the vault shifted and knocked her into the back of a pickup truck.

The fall compressed Ott's spine, pushing bone fragments into her spinal cord.

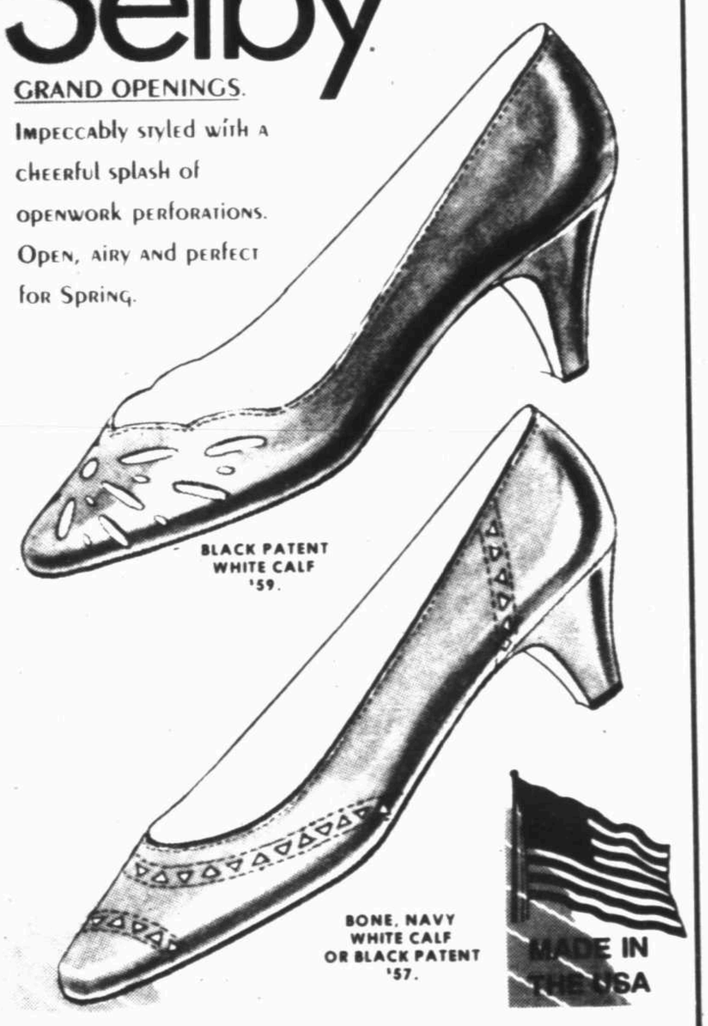

She underwent surgery in the Hershey Medical Center, where two steel rods were inserted in her spinal cord to stabilize it and a bone from her pelvis was grafted around the rods.

Ott has refused to become a victim of her paralysis. She still cleans her house, makes the beds, cooks, washes, irons and does the grocery shopping. "I can do everything I did before the accident. It just takes me a little longer.

"I've asked the other employees not to help me unless I ask for help. I do tend to get in the way, though. I've run over a few toes with my chair," she says with a laugh.

Sheetz converted one of the store's two public rest rooms to meet Ott's needs and built ramps behind the counter and in the back rooms. The store also installed buttons that enable Ott to open the double doors in the front of the store to accommodate her wheelchair.

Ott says she can't describe how she feels about the management of Sheetz. "I hope what they've done for me will open the door for others. And by my coming back to work, I hope to urge other 'special people' to do the things they did before their accidents."

IDEA exam certifies aerobics instructors

Certification insures teacher has proper qualifications

By SHEILA SOBELL MORAMARCO
Copley News Service

All that used to be required to teach aerobics were a pair of sneakers, enthusiasm and some upbeat music.

But, increasingly, dance-exercise professionals and students alike have felt the need for safeguards against unqualified instructors.

According to a study completed in 1985 by the Sports Medicine Center of Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, Md., most injuries occur when people begin exercising vigorously after a period of inactivity.

The study found that, with some restraint used to avoid risky techniques, aerobics and dance exercise are a safe and enjoyable way to achieve and maintain aerobic fitness.

Of 5,000 exercise injuries reported to the Sports Medicine Center, only 1.2 percent were associated with dance exercise, and of these, 39 percent were instructor injuries.

Because of a correlation between injury and improper exercise technique, fitness experts agree on the need for certified instructors and consumer education.

CNS Graphic

"Certification assures health club owners that their instructors have satisfied nationally accepted criteria for safety awareness, injury prevention and knowledge of anatomy and exercise physiology."

— Sheryl Marks

IN 1986, the non-profit International Dance-Exercise Association (IDEA) Foundation addressed this problem with a standardized, industrywide examination administered by the Educational Testing Service, known for the development of the SAT college entrance exams. Quarterly exams are offered throughout the United States.

More than 8,800 instructors have voluntarily taken the IDEA Foundation Certification Examination since it was first offered in May 1986, and 64 percent have passed the test.

In a survey of instructors who have taken the IDEA exam, 93 percent reported that they would recommend the test to other instructors.

Eighty percent of the instructors pointed out the need for professional credibility as their main reason for taking the test.

The IDEA certification exam covers all aspects of instruction outlined in the 400-page "Guidelines for Training of Dance-Exercise Instructors," including exercise physiology, basic anatomy and kinesiology, exercise programming, leadership techniques, emergency training, health screening, legal issues, nutrition and weight control.

"Certification tells the consumer that the instructor has demonstrated a certain standard of knowledge and competence," says Sheryl Marks, executive director of the IDEA Foundation.

"Certification also assures health club owners that their instructors have satisfied nationally accepted criteria for safety awareness, injury prevention and knowledge of anatomy and exercise physiology."

Marks concedes that there are other aspects of instruction that are not evaluated by the test, such as personality and class experience.

WHEN THE campaign for qualified instructors first appeared on the fitness scene, up sprang a multitude of training and certifying organizations. Many provided excellent programs, but some did not.

Certification, upon which credibility of this burgeoning industry depended, soon became a diluted cause, especially when instructors could simply obtain a certificate by mail and still not be qualified to teach a class.

What was needed was a cooperative effort on the part of fitness professionals to develop universally accepted instructor training guidelines.

The IDEA Foundation worked with a committee of 52 volunteers, including the most highly respected names in fitness, such as Dr. Kenneth Cooper, Jacki Sorensen, Judi Sheppard Missett, as well as the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, to identify guidelines for training of dance-exercise instructors.

"What the guidelines have given us is not government regulation, not a law, but a set of standards that represents an opportunity for the industry to regulate and improve itself," Marks says. "All will benefit from these guidelines — consumers, instructors, instructor trainers and business owners."

The guidelines are designed to outline the minimum level of proficiency and knowledge essential for the dance-exercise instructor.

BASED ON these guidelines, the exam measures the instructor's ability to design a safe and effective class, lead and instruct others in dance exercise, and respond to typical questions and problems that arise in an exercise class setting, including emergency situations.

"Eventually, certification will be the equivalent of an academic degree for the dance-exercise professional," Marks predicts.

"The employer will have to evaluate the instructor's personality and experience independently, but now the consumer will be able to check the wall of the exercise studio for the instructor's certificate and be assured that he or she has the proper knowledge and training to lead a safe aerobics class."

Educator wants geography stressed

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. (AP) — Basic education may include the "three R's," but don't forget the "G" for Geography, advises Burrell Montz, associate professor of geology and environment at State University of New York at Binghamton.

Montz, newly appointed coordinator of New York State's Geographic Alliance Network, says teachers should not be blamed for today's widespread geographic illiteracy among students.

"For years," she says, "social studies teachers have not been required to take even one geography course for state certification. Now, when the New York State Board of Regents says they are responsible for teaching global studies as part of the high school curriculum, educators are woefully unprepared."

History, geography and current affairs are inseparable, Montz points out. If anyone's at fault, she says, it's the geographers themselves who downplayed the importance of having elementary and secondary students memorize mountains, rivers, and state capitals.

"I grew up believing that you didn't need to learn anything you could look up," she says, and in the process of acquiring three degrees, she "never had to learn where anything was."

With geographic illiteracy making headlines, Montz is mobilizing the grass-roots energies of teachers, students, school administrators, college geographers and public policy makers to improve geography education.

Alzheimer's Disease most common progressively declining illness

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

A "dementing" illness causes a progressive decline in a person's ability to think, learn and perform routine activities.

The most common dementing illness is Alzheimer's Disease, which has affected an estimated 2.5 million persons.

The characteristics of Alzheimer's Disease include trouble finishing words, remembering thoughts and following directions.

The patient may feel confused, irritable or frustrated. Personality or behavior may be altered.

Each Alzheimer's patient reacts in a different manner to the progression of the disease. Some individuals may maintain a specific function level for years; others may experience a significant change in a matter of months.

Regardless of the time element, the disease will eventually affect the person's ability to function in a normal manner.

Alzheimer's patients face the feeling of giving up control over their own lives. Even though these changes are occuring, the individual does have some options. There are practical steps that can be taken to help maintain a sense of well being for the family and the patient:

■ Patience — Understand that this is an illness that is affecting many abilities. Don't be highly critical of oneself. Accept help when offered and reach out to others when you need their support.

■ Benefits — Family members should check with Medicare, Medicaid, health insurance companies and Social Security to establish which benefits are available.

■ Pride — Both patient and family should not be embarrassed to ask for information that may have already been given. Alzheimer's patients frequently have memory problems.

■ Notes — Writing information down can help both patient and family members with remembering. Such notes can let the patient recall locations of dentures, eyeglasses and other personal items.

■ Mental health — Both family and patient should take care of their mental health. Talk about concerns and feelings — both positive and negative — with family members, friends, support groups and physicians.

Major adjustments will be necessary for both the patient and the family when Alzheimer's is involved. Work, money and legal matters, Medicare care and living arrangements must be discussed.

When dealing with such a difficult illness, remember there are support groups, friends and professionals who are available to help.

Also never forget the family's need for friendship and affection. The importance of the touch of a hand, a smile or a hug remain unchanged.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

DEAR ABBY

Widow who's gotta dance has to pay

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 73-year-old widow, but I don't feel a day over 45, and people would guess my age as 50 or 55. I have always loved to dance, and if I say so myself, I am a very good dancer.

Well, I joined a dance club last summer and took some lessons. I had a wonderful young man for a teacher and got carried away so thoroughly that before I realized it, I had spent close to $15,000 on lessons, which is more than I can afford. Like a dummy, I signed two contracts. Now I've had to hire a lawyer to help me out of this mess. My lawyer figured that my dancing cost me $70 an hour.

This club takes either singles or couples, and it's a real problem for a woman alone, so the dancing teacher was my partner. I am very active and just love to go out and socialize. I own my own home and take of my business, but it's no fun going out alone or with other women.

I suppose there is not much advice you can give me, but if you print this, it might make other single women think twice before they put their foot in it.

Thank you. — CHA-CHA-CHA

DEAR CHA: Your problem is not dancing — it's signing a contract without having consulted an attorney. I hope others will learn from your costly experience, cha-cha-cha.

DEAR ABBY: Several nights ago, my husband and I attended a concert of folk music. Ahead of us sat an overweight boy of about 14, and next to him was his proud overweight mother. We were treated to the spectacle of the boy's bare fanny exposed for about 10 inches. His too-tight jeans and short T-shirt left nothing to the imagination.

To say this was offensive is to put it mildly. A word to parents with overweight boys: Please check so that when they sit down they are decently covered.

Abby, please feel free to use this, but not my name. I don't want people to think I go around checking the backsides of kids, but this is not the first time I've seen this. — OFFENDED IN NEW YORK

DEAR OFFENDED: I agree. Extensive exposure of the bare backside is not a pretty sight, but would it have been less offensive had the 14-year-old been a skinny kid, sitting beside his skinny mother? This bashing of overweight people has got to stop!

DEAR ABBY: What would you do with a husband who never finishes anything? We have at least a dozen unfinished projects — both inside and outside the house.

He'll start something, get about a third of the way through, then start something else, get about a third of the way through, start something else, and so on.

When I ask why he does this, he says he gets bored. Got any ideas, Abby? — GOING CRAZY IN MARIETTA, GA.

DEAR GOING: You could: (1) Hide his tools. (2) Hire someone to finish his unfinished projects and present him with the bill. (3) Hire someone to finish the projects, and pay for it with the money you take out of his pants pocket while he's sleeping. (4) Nag him. (5) Trash all the unfinished projects. (6) Ignore the unfinished projects and save yourself a lot of aggravation.

If I were you, I'd try the last suggestion first.

A woman picks through garbage in search of salvageable items at Mexico City's Santa Fe dump. In the background are homes of some of the thousands who live at the dump, which is being filled in and is to be closed as part of the government's anti-pollution program.

Closing of Mexican dump forces thousands of trash pickers to move

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The sprawling Santa Fe garbage dump is being bulldozed and filled in to help rid Mexico City of pollution, but for thousands of trash pickers it means the end of a way of life that began more than 40 years ago.

A distinct class of the poor people — 2,000 to 3,000 people — had taken shape in and around the dump since it first opened in the 1940s and picking trash provided a livelihood for them. It grew into a tightly knit society regulated by a dump boss — Pablo Tellez Falcon being the most recent — and outsiders were unwelcome.

Now, the city government says, the trash pickers will be moved to homes with electricity and plumbing near a new but temporary dump, and Santa Fe will become a park.

But the plan leaves trash pickers with mixed feelings and somewhat concerned about the future.

The foul-smelling dump, spread over about 150 acres on the western edge of Mexico City, was one of the largest in Latin America and the last of the big open-air sites to be shut down by the Mexico City government.

"This dump became an air pollution and public health problem," the city said in a news release announcing the project.

Under an ambitious plan, the city began a year ago to level, compact and seal the solid wastes at the Santa Fe site. The garbage was estimated to be 230 feet deep in some places, forming enormous cliffs from the refuse deposited there for more than four decades.

Homero Aridjis, a poet and president of the Group of 100 environmental activists, said the project "is important because the garbage is not only a pollution problem but also a social problem."

The Mexico City metropolitan area, the world's largest with 18 million people, is considered by experts to have the world's worst air pollution.

The Santa Fe dump, releasing bacteria into the air, posed a health hazard to the trash pickers ("pepenadores," or scavengers, in Spanish) and residents of surrounding neighborhoods, some of the city's wealthiest.

Spontaneous fires often broke out, sending noxious fumes into the air. There also was concern the wastes were seeping into aquifers and contaminating the city's already scarce water supply.

Much of the trash has been covered over, but many pickers still live in their shacks amid the fly-covered refuse that remains at Santa Fe.

Nearby, the city has opened the other dump, Prados de la Montana, where some 2,500 tons a day of trash are unloaded. That site will be used, however, for just five years.

The Santa Fe pickers will be moved in the coming months and offered new houses outside the Prados de la Montana dump. The nearby Tlayapaca housing project, which will provide 510 two- and three-bedroom houses, with water, electricity and drainage systems, is to be completed in May.

"With this action, the social evolution of that group of people will be achieved, improving their conditions of health and well-being and, as a result, their quality of life," the government said.

Apolonia Martinez de Correa, whose family flattens milk cartons, stuffs them into plastic bags and sells them for recycling, said she would be glad to live in a cleaner place but is not so sure about moving from Santa Fe.

Airline lowers curtain on stand-up routines

SAN DIEGO (AP) — In laid-back California, a little levity has been a hallmark at PSA. But the commuter airline's new parent, USAir, is lowering the curtain on one PSA feature: stand-up routines by flight attendants.

For example, on a recent flight from San Jose to Los Angeles, PSA flight attendant Marka McDougall went into her act as the engines revved up.

"Ladies and gentlemen," Ms. McDougall said, "We'd like to welcome you aboard Flight 1733 on our way to Seattle."

Following a panicky gasp in the cabin, Ms. McDougall added: "Just kidding. I wanted to see if you were listening."

Ms. McDougall, who says about 10 percent of her colleagues go for such laughs, was on a roll.

"If you are traveling with infants or small children, or anyone resembling a small child, place your mask on first, then assist the child — providing they've been good," she said. "And now, for those of you who have not been in a car since 1962, we're going to show you how to fasten your seat belts."

But the managers of Arlington, Va.-based USAir are not amused, and this week is Ms. McDougall's last as a kidder. USAir is completing a $385 million takeover of PSA.

Tuareg nomad outside the 15th century spiked minaret in Agadez, a landmark that can be seen for miles from the desert in northern Mexico.

Nomads change way of life as droughts devastate livestock

EDITOR'S NOTE: Camel caravans still wind across the Sahara Desert in northern Niger as they have done for centuries, but droughts in this decade have wiped out most livestock herds, putting an end to the wandering of the nomadic Tuaregs. In villages such as Agadez, many have been reduced to hawking jewelry to tourists or scratching a meager garden out of the sand.

By SYDNEY RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

AGADEZ, Niger (AP) — The evening call to prayer from a medieval minaret echoes through the sand streets to a market stall next to the sultan's palace where Abdou Amadou sells nomad souvenirs and dreams of Hondas.

The souvenirs are mere remnants of a fabulous desert culture that once flourished in Agadez, then a bustling crossroad of the great trans-Saharan trade.

The village is now an impoverished outpost in the landlocked West African nation of Niger, one of the poorest and most anonymous countries on Earth. But Agadez manages to survive, living off the legacy of the Sahara's golden age.

Abdou, 16, is watching the shop while his grandfather prays on a straw mat outside in the street. Two tourists browse through the sabers, jewelry and camel saddles hanging on the wall.

"It's nomad," Abdou says, pointing to a bracelet. "It's silver. I'll make you a good price."

As the tourists walk away, Abdou says in French, "I want to sell enough to buy a Honda someday and do a motorcross. It would be marvelous." His grandfather returns and, speaking quietly in Tamanjek, tells Abdou to get back to work.

Tamanjek is the language of the Tuareg nomads, who for a thousand years lived and wandered in the once-borderless Sahara Desert that is now northern Niger.

Crafts and caravans, as well as tourism, are essential structural supports for the economy of northern Niger, a country with a population of about 7 million and an average per capita income of $270 a year.

The caravan route to Timbuktu originated in Agadez and was followed by Arabs, Turks and Egyptians. The wealthy traders of the medieval world, including a few Europeans, kept agents in Agadez to expedite the flow of goods south to Black Africa and north to the Mediterranean ports.

The gateway to the Sahara, Agadez linked Europe and Africa, white world and black; the route came to symbolize the mystery of Africa.

Throughout the Middle Ages and continuing until two centuries ago, huge caravans crisscrossed the desert waste. Sometimes lines of up to 40,000 camels stretched to the shimmering horizon. Tuareg nomads, proud and independent, served as escorts, camel handlers and guides across the unmarked sand. Nomad craftsmen made saddles, sabers and other gear for the trail while other Tuaregs bred camels to replace those lost to exhaustion and thirst.

Crossing the desert was a complicated and dangerous business. Tens of thousands of human and animal skeletons lie buried beneath the sand. Whole convoys died from lack of water or heat or fell victim to bandits. Black Africans perished on the forced march north to slavery or were worked to death more slowly in the desert salt pits.

The pits not far from Agadez, near the Libyan border, are still being worked, although not by slaves, and the transport still is handled in the cool winter months by camel caravans. Scores of caravans carry salt to feed the livestock of farmers in the more fertile south. To the north they return with millet, dates and wheat.

Caravans appear suddenly from behind dunes like an illustration from Arabian Nights or frames from a Hollywood Foreign Legion film. The camels glide across the top of dunes, tied in a line, their hooves trailing plumes of sand. Beside them walk the nomads in robes that billow like sails in the wind. From their belts swing curved, carved sabers, symbols of the Tuaregs' warrior past.

The caravan trade still feeds some families, but many Tuaregs in Agadez have been reduced to hawking jewelry to tourists or scratching a meager garden out of the sand. Droughts in this decade have wiped out most herds, putting an end to the nomad's wandering and livelihood. Government policies that encourage the nomads to settle down have accelerated the change to a sedentary life.

The descendant of a line that dates at least to the 10th century, Sultan Ibrahim spent one recent morning negotiating movie rights to film a caravan.

The sultan reclined on a carpet by an open fire in the dark palace, slowly spinning a silver cylinder of snuff in his hand. Across from him on lawn chairs sat a reporter and producer from the British Broadcasting Co., nervously negotiating.

They explained their plan to an old, white-robed interpreter who translated it from French for the sultan and his retinue. The sultan's black eyes, the only part of his head not concealed by an abundant turban, revealed nothing but inscrutable reserve.

After awhile he raised his hand and discussion of details ceased between the BBC and a barefoot caravaner. He approved 30 camels and agreed to outfit the caravan for a reasonable price — and agreed to be interviewed on camera for the trade route film.

"Thirty camels can go now without danger," the sultan says. "It is no longer necessary to travel in large groups for protection."

The danger facing Agadez these days, he says, is not other men, but nature.

"It is getting drier, the water table is falling and we have not had a good rain in two years," he says. "It is difficult to say exactly what is happening.

"We have enough water for the moment for our 30,000 people and there is enough fodder, but any further loss of pasture and there will be no livestock left. I don't know about will happen to the people."

The spread of the Sahara is the biggest problem in Agadez, in the region, in all of Niger. Desertification and the environment was the top priority listed by the new government when it took over in November. The new chief of state is Ali Seibou, the third man to lead Niger since it gained independence from France three decades ago.

Elephants perfect art of long-distance whispering

WASHINGTON (AP) — It seems that elephants can get by with whispering where most of us would have to shout.

Katherine B. Payne, an elephant researcher in Etosha Park, Namibia, says that elephants can be heard for as far away as three miles when they "talk."

But most of the time only other elephants can hear. Two-thirds of the sounds they make are too low for humans, just as a dog whistle makes sounds too high for the limited human ear, she says.

"If you get close enough to the elephant, though, you can feel them," the Cornell University researcher said Thursday at a news conference hosted by her sponsor, the World Wildlife Fund. "It's like thunder, sometimes, or being in church close to the lowest pipe on the organ."

Pigeons and guinea fowl can hear such "infra-sounds," an Asian grouse called the capercaillie is known to make some, and fin whales make quite a lot, but elephants seem to be the first land animals found to have the talent.

"The existence of these calls may help explain how elephants coordinate their society over long distances," Ms. Payne wrote in a summary of her work.

She knows about a dozen different sounds that elephants make, such as the kind of greeting chorused by a group of females when a male has found them.

"The males can tell one another things like 'That's Caroline and her group over there' or 'There's big aggressive bull out that way'," she said.

Other identifiable sounds include those between baby elephants and mothers. She said there is some evidence that a mother and calf can distinguish one another by sounds they make.

Between the elephant's eyes, where there might be a nose if there were no trunk, lies a thick fold of skin that she says can be seen vibrating when the sound is made.

In one experiment, the researchers played the pre-recorded call of a female elephant in heat to a pair of males. The call was not too easy to record because a given female elephant may be in heat for only one day in four years.

"It goes like this," said Ms. Payne, peering earnestly through her gold-rimmed glasses. "Only of course I'm 10 octaves too high."

Alert mutts trained as ears for deaf

JACKSONVILLE, Ore. (AP) — At the sound of the knock, a young mutt named Roody padded over to the door to look, then walked back into the kitchen and pawed at Cary Voorhees to get her attention.

"Good girl, Roody," Ms. Voorhees said, enthusiastically petting the dog as it led her to the door.

Roody, a 10-month-old stray with the spots of an Australian shepherd, was undergoing training at Dogs for the Deaf, the oldest training center in the country for hearing-ear dogs.

Dogs for the Deaf was founded 10 years ago on a former dairy farm near this rustic southern Oregon town. Each graduate earns an orange collar and leash and become the ears for a deaf person who has been waiting as long as a year.

"We have people tell us after they get a dog that they never realized how many people came over and they just didn't hear them at the door," said Robin Dickson, who took over running Dogs for the Deaf after the death of her father, Roy Kabat, the founder.

A smart dog led Kabat to start Dogs for the Deaf, his daughter explained.

"There was a deaf lady in Minnesota," she said. "She had a dog that had trained itself to let her know when there was a sound.

"The dog got hit and killed by a car. She went to her audiologist and said, 'You've got to get me another dog.'

"He contacted the American Humane Society in Denver, and they called my dad in. He had worked for many years training dogs for movies in Southern California and was retired. He became so intrigued by it that he came back here and started Dogs for the Deaf."

Pins in a map on the office wall show that the 300 dogs placed by Dogs for the Deaf are spread from coast to coast, with heavy concentrations in the big cities.

"We very carefully screen the applicants," Mrs. Dickson said. "If you can hear a smoke alarm go off, you don't need a dog."

Deaf people who have someone at home who can hear are ineligible.

"They also have to be able to physically and financially care for a dog once they get it," Mrs. Dickson said. "Sometimes we can arrange a sponsor for a dog if a person can't afford it."

The four trainers go to Humane Society shelters around Oregon and Northern California to find small to medium-sized dogs that are playful, alert and comfortable around people. "If you had a great big Great Dane jumping up on you to let you know the phone was ringing, that wouldn't be so good," Mrs. Dickson said.

The dogs mostly are mutts.

"So many purebreds are so inbred that their disposition and temperament are destroyed," Mrs. Dickson said.

About half of the dogs flunk out before their three to six months of training is done, trainer Doreen James said.

"Stubbornness is one of the major reasons," he said. "That doesn't show up for one to three months. It's lots of fun for them until they realize they have to do it all the time."

In a one-bedroom apartment built in the loft of the old dairy barn, the dogs learn to respond to a telephone, a knock at the door, a smoke alarm, an oven buzzer and a baby's cry.

AP Laserphoto

Eva Bayley, a trainer at Dogs for the Deaf in Jacksonville, Ore,. stands with Anna, a canine in training as a hearing-ear dog.

Trainers also take the dogs to nearby Grants Pass and Medford to get used to the bustle of stores, being around people and riding in cars.

The dogs are rewarded by praise, attention and play.

"You have to be really up," Ms. Voorhees said. "Some dogs take a week to learn to put their paws on the table."

Once the dog is ready, the trainer takes it to the recipient, spending five days there while they get used to each other.

A fully trained dog represents an investment of $3,000, which is covered by contributions from supporters of the program.

"We get more people who send us donations to help the dogs than to help the deaf people," Mrs. Dickson said. "We help save the unwanted dogs, so they want to help us."

Hard times claim complex

Former Haystack apartments demolished

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

"In a normal market apartments can break even with 85 percent occupancy, but apartment rates in Midland have fallen so low that it often takes over 100 percent occupancy just to break-even."
Julie Massey, on-site manager

Hard times have resulted in the demise of a well-known Midland apartment complex.

Demolition has begun on the Autumn Wood apartment complex, known to many Midlanders as the Haystack Apartments, and is expected to be complete by mid-summer when the site will be totally cleared and reseeded.

"It was just the condition of the times," says Julie Massey, on-site manager for Brentwood properties, former managers of the complex.

"High interest rates, low rents and low occupancy rates resulted in the demise of the apartments. It was simply cheaper to tear them down than to renovate them."

Once one of the finer apartment complexes in the city, Autumn Wood was built at a time when stairs and landings were made of wood and most renters did not own their own washers and dryer.

"We would have had to replace all the stairs and landings, put in new appliances and carpet and make structural repairs. And after all, that it still would not have been a class A complex, because it wouldn't have had washer and dryer connections," said Massey.

She said a number of possible buyers had been contacted, but the Midland apartment market is so unstable it was impossible to find lenders.

"In a normal market apartments can break even with 85 percent occupancy, but apartment rates in Midland have fallen so low that it often takes over 100 percent occupancy just to break-even. That was what happened to Autumn Wood," she lamented.

Massey added that some older apartments, built when interest rates were low, are able to show a profit, but not those built when interest rates and rents were high.

"That explains the very high foreclosure rate for apartments in Midland," she said.

Owned by Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. of Irving, Texas, Autumn Wood came back to the insurance company in the fall of 1987 as the result of a foreclosure.

Vacant for over six months, Massey said the apartments were beginning to show signs of deterioration and vandalism was seen as a coming problem.

Now being demolished by Lonestar Dirt & Paving, everything in the complex is being sold for salvage including lumber, insulation, cabinets, fixtures, plumbing, electrical, air conditioners. Even the trees and plants are up for sale.

"When the demolition is complete not even a slab will be left," says Massey.

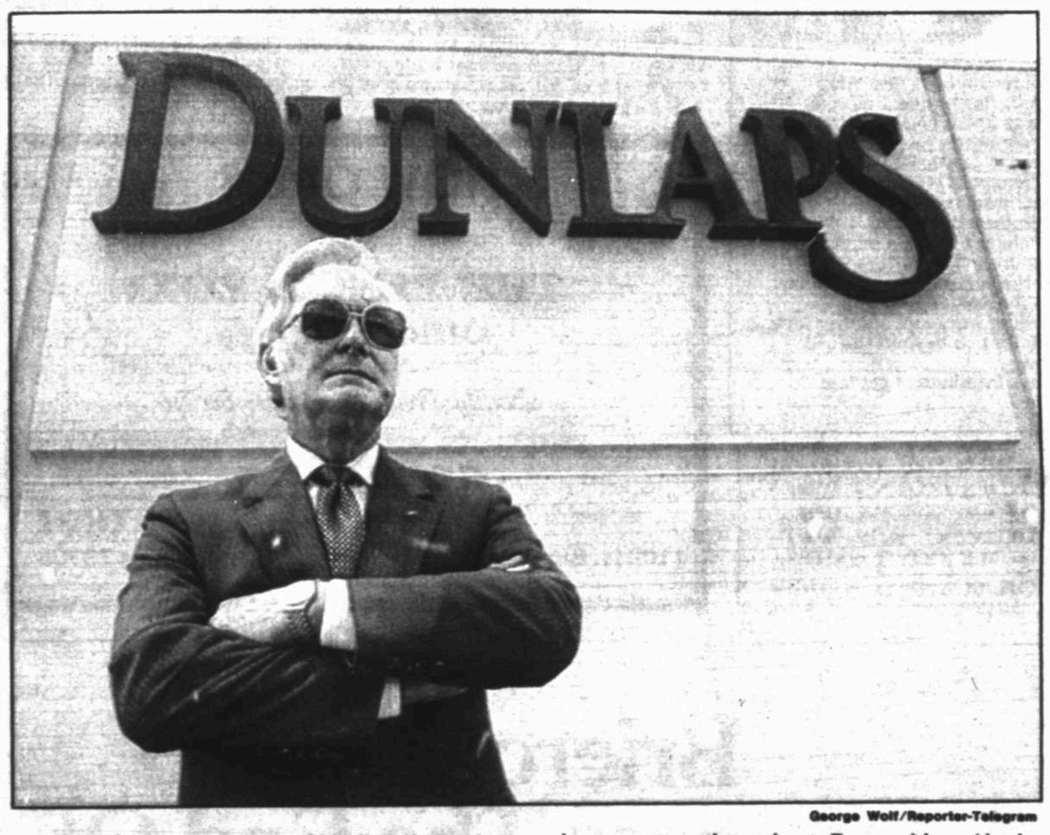

"The owners will reseed the 9.5 acre plot with a grass to keep it from blowing away and try to reclaim some of their loss by the sale of the land."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Florenzio Nunez, 35, examines lumber from the razing of the Autumn Wood apartment complex. He said he plans to use the salvaged materials to build forms for pouring concrete. Hard times have forced demolition of the once-popular complex on North Loop 250 near Garfield Street.

Manager racks up 47 years' experience minding the store

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Midland has lost a number of its institutions — First National Bank, Grammer-Murphy, Scharbauer Hotel to name a few. But one Midland institution, Dunlaps, has managed to survive upturns and downturns for 47 years, thanks in part to a manager with 48 years experience.

Ken Plotner, manager of Midland Dunlaps store at Dellwood Mall, began his career with the privately held department store chain in 1939, as assistant manager of its Holdenville, Okla., outlet after beginning his retail career with C.R. Anthony's in 1937 as a young high school graduate. He says working inside and wearing clean clothes was what attracted him to the career.

"I'd go by stores and see the people, and they seemed to be fairly happy and comfortable — they worked inside most of the time. And they got to dress reasonably well. So I decided that wouldn't be a bad place to work," he recalled.

World War II interrupted his climb up the corporate ladder in 1942, but Plotner returned to Dunlaps in 1948, after his military service, working at the Midland store. Dunlaps had arrived in Midland in 1941 with the purchase of the Addison-Wadley store in downtown Midland. The store moved to Dellwood Mall in 1962, where it is still located.

After six months in Midland, Plotner was tapped to manage the Okemah, Okla. store. From there, he moved back to Holdenville, then on to Denison, Brownfield and Del Rio, Texas. In 1957, he arrived in Farmington, N.M., to manage the brand-new Dunlaps store, staying for 13 years. After a subsequent 6-year tour at the Pampa store, Plotner returned to Midland 10 years ago, and has since been named a corporate vice president and was elected to the board of directors in 1984.

Movers struggle to lift burden of poor image

By MICHAEL FREITAG
New York Times News Service

"On the New Jersey Turnpike no one can hear you scream." This slogan, from an advertisement for "Moving," the recent Richard Pryor comedy about "one family's experience with the 'M' word," typifies a problem that has plagued the moving and storage industry for years: a poor reputation.

"In the past, we probably ranked down around used car salesman," said Maj. Gen. Charles C. Irions, president of the American Movers Conference, a trade group. "But today I think we are up around the doctors and lawyers."

While this claim might sound overly optimistic to anyone who has experienced a nightmarish move recently, moving industry executives contend that the quality of their services has improved considerably in the last few years. The transformation came after 1980, when Congress deregulated the interstate moving industry, which dramatically affected how moving companies price and market their services.

"The market has become extremely competitive because of overcapacity," said Gen. Irions, who is retired from the Air Force. "Because the competition is so intense — and pricing is very much a part of that competition — our standards are improving. Now we go after the customer and try to find out what he wants us to do, rather than telling the customer what we will do for him."

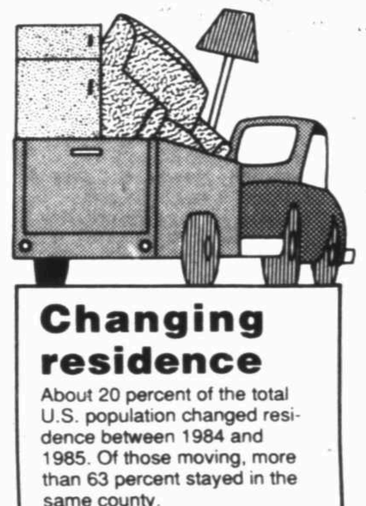

One of deregulation's direct benefits to consumers has been price discounting, which was banned before 1980. Depending on the region and season, many interstate movers offer discounts ranging from 10 to 40 percent of the maximum rate permitted under Federal guidelines. Movers are also offering better liability insurance, guaranteed pickup and delivery dates and extended payment periods.

Still, moving companies have not enjoyed any great surge in business. "Unfortunately, lowering prices in the moving business is not going to encourage anyone else to move," said Joseph M. Harrison, president of the Household Goods Carriers' Bureau, another trade group. "We have an inelastic demand."

Of the nearly 40 million people who move each year, only about 21 percent use a moving company, mainly those moving long distances.

Thanks to a healthy economy that has encouraged corporate transfers and expansion, the $4 billion industry has had steady — if small — increases in revenues and profits over the past few years, Harrison said. But rising costs have squeezed profit margins. In 1986, for example, the top 15 carriers, which had combined

$8.5 million house finished but empty

By WALT SMITH
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Nothing burns in its 10 fireplaces and no drinks are being served at any of its five bars. In fact, all 23,000 square-feet, $8.5 million of it is empty, except for an occasional party designed to show it off.

It is a mansion on 1.5 acres of North Dallas' prestigious Preston Hollow area. The house — believed to be the largest, most expensive ever built on speculation in Dallas — was completed last month but still does not have an owner.

Builder John Needham, who began the house more than two years ago when the city's housing economy was near its peak, says he still believes there is a market for his seven-bedroom, "European style" creation.

"We feel very confident in it," he said at a recent landscape lighting party intended to bring attention to the mansion's five gardens he has groomed around the olympic-size swimming pool and reflecting ponds.

"There is an intense amount of interest in it. We're very pleased. But it's hard to say with a house of this magnitude," Needham said.

The house does have magnitude.

The largest of the seven bedrooms is practically a house in itself. The 3,800 square-foot, two-story master suite has its own small kithcn, separate his and hers bathrooms, a jacuzzi, a sitting area and dressing rooms. The suite's upstairs has room for a desk plus several sofas for relaxing.

"I picture a baby grand up there," said Rona Victorson, the real estate agent selling the house.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

As for me, give me clean air or no Oreos

Pitts

The scene is the cabin of a crowed airliner. One passenger is smoking. Then comes the announcement: "Beginning April 22, smoking will no longer be permitted on Northwest Airline flights anywhere in the U.S." Everyone in the airliner, except the lone smoker applauds.

RJR Nabisco (that's RJR as in R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.) has canned its long-time advertising agency, Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton for producing the ad which applauds Northwest for becoming the only totally non-smoking airline in America. The controversial firing could have far-reaching implications in the advertising industry.

While the agency handles no tobacco accounts for R.J. Reynolds it has handled such Nabisco brands as Oreo, Life Savers, Chips Ahoy cookies, Care Free sugarless chewing gum, Breath Saver mints and Bubble Yum bubble gum for more more than 18 years — long before Nabisco merged with R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. The accounts had amounted to $70 annually in billings for the agency. Northwest Airlines, with a budget of $60 million, had been a client for five years.

Executives of several other major advertising agencies were shocked at the move the move, especially because the agency was handling no tobacco products. They said the move seemed to reflect a broadening of conflict-of-interest concerns among agency clients. One executive called the action "emotional" and "irrational."

In news accounts Kenneth Roman, chairman of Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, said: "This is typical of a trend. We've gone from a product conflict to a company conflict to a category conflict. It's a sweeping extension of the conflict principle.

"It has to do with the huge size of some clients. They feel they can set the rules. I think it was wrong for RJR to take the step."

In the meantime, the official word from RJR Nabisco, which spent some $930 million on advertising in 1986, was that the company thought it important to deal with advertising agencies "that have a wholly consistent philosophical approach to its plans and programs." It said that "philosophical differences" had developed between it and the agency, never mentioning the airline commercial.

The message was clear: "If you support non-smoking, you'll get none of our money."

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is certainly free to throw their weight around and fire and hire any advertising agency they please for any reason they please. And with a $930 million ad budget they certainly have the weight to throw. No court in the land should be allowed to take that right away from them.

But the court of last resort is the consumer. RJR Nabisco is clearly opposed to people breathing clean air on airplanes and supports the rights of individuals to burn weeds (smoke cigarettes) on airplanes. It so strongly supports that philosophy it is willing to stake its products and reputation on that "philosophical position."

It would stand to reason then that those on the opposite side of the philosophical argument who contend that people should not be allowed to burn weeds on airplanes should have the right to challenge that position.

If RJR Nabisco is willing to impose a $70 million economic penalty on an ad agency for producing a commercial that promotes a smoking ban on airplanes, do the consumers who disagree not have the right to impose an economic penalty on RJR Nabisco. Of course we do.

To paraphrase Patrick Henry: I know not what course others may take, but as for me and my family, we will no longer eat anything with Nabisco on it.

If giving up Oreos is what it takes to get clean air on an airplane, that's the price I will pay. I only wish that Northwest flew out of Midland so I could spend my money with them. Money, perhaps that's the secret.

The day appears to be coming soon when the non-smokers of America (now about 80 percent of the population) will get tired of being pushed around and second-class treatment from businesses who feel no need to accommodate non-smokers.

When they do perhaps they will begin to fight back with the only weapon they have — their pocketbooks. Perhaps when they begin to lash out with their purse strings they will get some attention.

Teflon: Still slippery after all these years

Invention blend of serendipity luck, brilliance

NEW YORK (AP) — It's been slipped into everything from frying pans to space suits to the nation's political vernacular, and now Teflon, still the slickest solid on Earth, is sliding into its second half-century.

Discovered accidentally April 6, 1938, by a young chemist named Roy J. Plunkett, the waxy white plastic turns 50 this week, still dominating dozens of scientific and consumer uses with no hint of a higher-tech replacement.

It keeps the eggs from sticking to frying pans, for sure. But it also coats electrical wires, chemical tanks, jogging suits and lightbulbs. It's used to patch human hearts. It keeps the Statue of Liberty from rusting.

"The applications, as far as I can tell, are no smaller than our imaginations," says Plunkett, now a septuagenarian retiree from the Du Pont chemical company. "I'm amazed at the impact. And there's more to go."

The reason for Teflon's endurance is simple: Nothing else is so slippery, so tough and such a good insulator, all at the same time. Even after five decades, "It is unique in these qualities," says professor Fred McGarry, a specialist in such materials at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

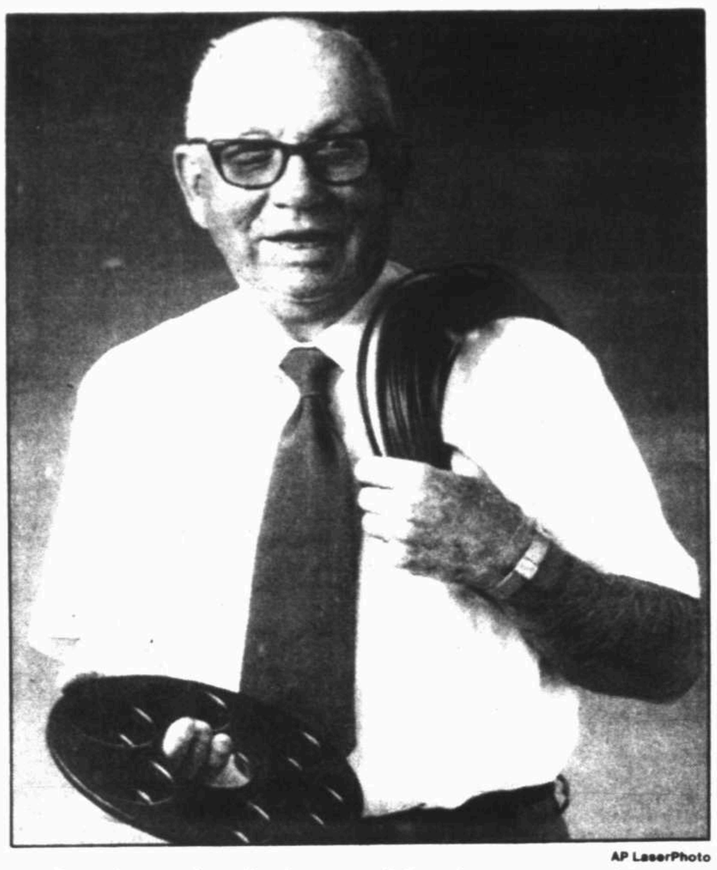

It's a discovery that almost slipped away. Plunkett, two years out of college, was working with refrigeration gases in a Du Pont lab in Deepwater, N.J., when an assistant pulled a cylinder of Freon out of a dry ice storage bin, turned it on — and nothing came out.

Someone else might have assumed the cylinder had leaked and tossed it away. Plunkett didn't. He weighed the cylinder. He shook it. He cut it open.

"A white solid material was obtained, which was supposed to be a polymerized product" of the Freon compound, Plunkett recorded laconically in his lab notebook entry of 4-6-38.

Voila.

"People describe it as a lucky chance, a bit of serendipity or a flash of brilliance," says Plunkett, an inductee into the National Inventors Hall of Fame. "I like to think of it as a combination of all three."

AP LaserPhoto

Since he accidentally discovered the subtance on April 6, 1938, Roy J. Plunkett has seen teflon slipped into everything from electrical cables to muffin pans.

The serendipity, he notes, extended beyond the discovery itself. It soon was found that the chance chemical reaction that produced Teflon can have unhappy consequences. "If there was any luck involved in the discovery," says Plunkett, "probably part of it was that we didn't get blown up."

Du Pont testers gradually established Teflon's extraordinary properties. It is "damn near inert," says McGarry; it won't react with chemicals or break down in the environment. It withstands temperatures from 400 degrees below zero to 500 degrees above. Energy passes through it without heating it up. It holds together in a vacuum, meaning it's perfect for use in outer space.

At the beginning, it was under wraps, restricted to government defense work from 1941, when Du Pont first was able to produce it, until 1948. It was used in the Manhattan Project for gaskets and vessel linings to contain a highly corrosive chemical needed in the production of the atom bomb.

It also coated wires in electronic devices, making them considerably fire resistant. Today, the greatest commercial use of Teflon is in wire coating, followed by gaskets and shaft seals and pipe and tank coatings.

Teflon didn't reach the public eye until May 1956, when a store in Nice, France, put the fist Teflon-lined pan on its shelves. The idea stuck, and an estimated 500 million pots and pans coated with Teflon have been sold since.

It wasn't until 20 years later that Teflon moved from kitchen to clothes closet. Robert Gore, who was in the wire coating business, found that a piece of stretched Teflon has pores big enough to let water vapor out but too small to let water droplets in. He stuck it to fabric and called it Gore-Tex, the first waterproof-breathable clothing.

Teflon's next frontier was the language. That breakthrough came the morning of Aug. 2, 1983, as Pat Schroeder was cooking eggs for the kids. Schroeder happens to be a Democratic congresswoman, and as she slid the eggs out of a frying pan, she reflected on the way political accountability, in her view, slid off President Reagan.

"I said, 'He's just like this pan," she recalled last week. "Nothing sticks."

Members of Congress may start the day's session with one-minute speeches, and this is how Schroeder started hers that day: "Mr. Speaker, after carefully watching Ronald Reagan, he is attempting a great breakthrough in political technology — he has been perfecting the Teflon-coated presidency."

The phrase, picked up by the papers, caught on within weeks. "Americans love shorthand descriptions of things," reflects Schroeder. "The only problem was that it didn't work. Still nothing stuck to him."

Political efficacy aside, one outfit that didn't appreciate the publicity was Du Pont, which holds the Teflon trademark even though the patent on the formula has long expired.

"They were most unhappy. A guy came by my office from their corporate headquarters and kind of snarled and growled about it," even threatening a copyright infringement lawsuit if she kept using the phrase, Schroeder says. "I could hardly keep a straight face."

As for Plunkett, his work with Teflon ended almost as soon as it was begun. After three months, he was transferred to another Du Pont lab. He spent his career working with Freon, not Teflon.

Plunkett did not get a direct share of Teflon profits. Du Pont doesn't work that way. But the company has two bonus pay systems, one for outstanding work and another for a contribution beyond the call of duty.

Says Plunkett: "I got 'em both."

Minimum wage: A tangled puzzle

By PETER PASSELL
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Would the House Labor Committee's plan to increase the federal minimum wage in stages, to $5.05 an hour from $3.35, lift the living standards of the working poor? Or, as opponents contend, would it push marginally qualified workers onto welfare?

The answer, say economists who carry the least ideological baggage, is both. That seems to leave Congress with a choice between more jobs for the poor or better jobs for the poor — a tough choice that partly explains why Congress has been ducking the issue since it last raised the wage in 1981.

In fact, however, there may be a way to raise the pay of low-income workers without reducing incentives to hire the young and badly educated. Rep. Thomas E. Petri, R-Wis., proposes an increase in the federal earned income tax credit, a tax-based wage subsidy. Expanding this credit ought to hold great appeal for liberals as well as conservatives. It is far from clear, though, whether advocates of a higher minimum wage are ready to sacrifice means for ends.

According to Sar Levitan, director of George Washington University's Center for Social Policy Studies, the purchasing power of the minimum wage has fallen by a third from its peak two decades ago. In 1968 a full-time worker getting the federal minimum wage earned 94 percent of the amount needed to support a family of four at the poverty line. Today the minimum wage amounts to barely 60 percent of the poverty line.

There is little disagreement among economists that a higher minimum wage would allow many poor workers to regain ground lost to inflation. But there is also a broad consensus that some young, unskilled workers would be priced out of the market. A research survey directed by Charles Brown, an economist at the University of Michigan, concluded that every 10 percent increase in the minimum wage would reduce the number of jobs for teenagers by 1-3 percent. Nigel Gault and Roger Brinner, writing in Data Resources U.S. Review, estimate that an increase in the minimum wage to $4.65 would cut employment for people 16 to 24 years old by at least 350,000.

One way out of the jobs-vs.-income difficulty is to raise the neediest workers' pay without raising employers' labor costs. Such a wage subsidy is already built into the tax code. In 1987, married workers with children and incomes up to $6,080 a year received a 14 percent earned income tax credit. The credit, moreover, is refundable: workers who file the right federal form can have the cash added to their paychecks. The benefit phases out gradually, disappearing for families with incomes over $15,000.

Petri, a member of the labor standards subcommittee, wants to bolster the tax credit and link it to family size, raising the maximum credit to 35 percent of wages up to $2,500 for families with four or more children. For large families with one full-time breadwinner earning the minimum wage, this would increase take-home pay by 82 cents an hour.

A clear advantage, Petri notes, is that it would have no effect on employment. Perhaps as important, the benefit would focus on those in need. A full-time worker supporting a large family on $6 a hour would gain nothing from an increase in the minimum wage but would receive an extra 58 cents an hour with the expanded tax credit.

On the other hand, a suburban teen-ager who flips burgers after school for gasoline money would get the full benefit of a higher minimum wage but would not be eligible for the tax credit. This is not a small category, by the way: the Congressional Budget Office estimates that in 1985 fewer than 20 percent of minimum-wage workers were members of families living below the poverty line.

Permian Basin rig count drops 20

From Staff Reports

After rising six last week, the Permian Basin rig count plunged 20 to stand at 120.

At the same time, the U.S. count rose six to total 941, according to Baker Hughes Inc. of Houston.

In the Basin, Lea County, N.M. continued to be the most active county, with 19 rigs at work. Andrews and Gaines counties were next with 13 and 12 rigs, respectively. Midland County had two rigs.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being utilized — showed slight gains for both the U.S. and Permian Basin. The Basin percentage rose to 28.1 percent, while the U.S. percentage rose to 23.1 percent.

Among the major oil producing states, New Mexico gained eight rigs, Oklahoma, seven; Colorado, five; Kansas and Louisiana, four each; California, three; and North Dakota, two.

Texas lost nine, Wyoming lost three; and Pennsylvania's rig count fell by two.

Californians oppose offshore drilling

By JANE KAY
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Nowhere in the nation is the opposition to developing offshore oil as strong as it is on California's north coast, where the air is clean and the ocean unspoiled.

But if the next president, in February, backs the Interior Department's plan to explore for oil and gas three miles off Mendocino and Humboldt counties, drill rigs on the north coast appear inevitable.

The Democratic contenders for president say they would cancel Lease Sale 91, the offshore oil lease sale planned for the area. Vice President Bush, the apparent Republican candidate, has been silent on the issue.

Short of presidential intervention, the search for oil could be halted one of three ways. None is very likely by next year.

Interior could decide that it is not economically and environmentally sound to drill the ocean floor.

Congress could pass the Ocean Sanctuary Act, which would protect the coast from oil and gas exploration. Other states could offer up their own protective legislation. Omnibus legislation for America's coastline is under discussion.

(More likely than that, the House Appropriations Committee this summer could delete the lease sale from Interior's budget, thus granting yet another year-long moratorium in California.)

Environmental groups and California, joined by other coastal states, could tie up the Interior Department in court. The lawsuit, citing federal environmental laws, likely would argue Interior hasn't demonstrated the need for oil or adequately looked at the environmental consequences of Lease Sale 91.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency last month urged —but didn't insist — that Interior delete some tracts off southern Mendocino County to protect the Farallon Islands and Point Reyes from "the potential significant impacts of an oil spill." Only canceling the sale off the county would ensure "virtual elimination" of risking a harmful spill, the EPA told Interior.

For now, the EPA wants Interior to do further evaluation in its final environmental impact report — due this summer — on the success of cleaning up an oil spill in rough ocean waters, ocean dumping and air-quality considerations.

In the face of swelling opposition, Interior is continuing apace with plans to sell up to 1.1 million acres eight days after the new president is inaugurated.

The oil companies say Lease Sale 91 must remain on schedule so that national oil needs can be satisfied.

The industry's view is that the north coast misses a point: that it could profit by diversification into oil-related jobs.

At Interior Department regional offices in Los Angeles, officials say their mission is developing deposits off the California coast that some believe could rival Prudhoe Bay, a rich deposit off the coast of Alaska.

Richard Charter, a lobbyist for coastal cities and counties, had this view of the possibility of Interior backing off its plans: "Don't hold your breath."

He added, "This is the Reagan administration's last chance to give the petroleum companies cheap access to public lands offshore at fire-sale prices."

Interior Secretary Donald Hodel offers two reasons for the administration's enthusiasm. He says that throwing off U.S. dependence on foreign oil is a way of aiding national security, and that every state must do its part to contribute to the domestic oil pool.

On Feb. 3, when 3,000 people jammed a public hearing at Fort Bragg, Calif. — half of them standing for hours waiting to testify in opposition — Hodel predicted that oil exploration would proceed in California as an edge against foreign oil.

Meantime, Congress is not expected to pass soon the Ocean Sanctuary Act, which would protect the state's coast against drilling. Even legislators who oppose drilling are split on the proposed act, which has become a rallying point for environmentalists.

The legislation's sponsor, Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., would like to prohibit the sale of any new leases off the coast. Sen. Alan Cranston, in a companion bill, would permit lease sales, but only in already developed offshore oil tracts.

The Western Oil and Gas Association, and industry group, says the state delegation will never have a unanimous front in opposing development because the "anti-leasing argument pivots on the desires of a relatively few persons not to see drilling and production equipment when they gaze seaward."

At the same time, hope of an omnibus ocean protection bill is vague at best.

The Florida congressional delegation, however, united with Gov. Bob Martinez, persuaded Interior to drop a lease sale planned off the Florida Keys. In turn, the state agreed to allow oil and gas drilling in Cape San Blas — and withdraw from a states' rights suit in the U.S. Court of Appeals against the Interior Department's five-year plan to develop U.S. oil and gas.

The remaining plaintiffs, California, Massachusetts, Oregon, Washington and several environmental groups, hope for a decision by the end of the year in the case filed in Washington.

Charter, the lobbyist, said it's evident from "the continued public controversy in Florida that this compromise hasn't eroded the multistate coalition opposing Hodel's plans."

"It's great the Keys were dropped," said Rusty Norvell, a former American Petroleum Institute executive, who now opposes energy development off the north coast.

"But why would you drill in the Keys anyway? It was a bargaining chip. The north coast is as precious as the Keys. So why drill for oil here? The whole idea of the lease sales is dividing up the country like it's a piece of pie," said Norvell.

"The intent is to prevent solidarity so the protectionists end up by squabbling. The Interior Department is a revolving door for the oil industry just as the Pentagon is for the military contractors."

HOUSE

AP Laserphoto

Builder John Needham stands in front of what is believed to be the most expensive "spec" house ever built in Dallas, an $8.5 million mansion in Preston Hollow.

The house also includes a two-story library, complete with a bar, reading rooms and a wine rack. The elevator in the center of the house can take the people to one of the three floors for a game of pool in the billiard room or a workout in the third-floor exercise room.

The house comes with all other necessities of life as well. Servants have their own living quarters and back stairs so they won't interupt family eating in the "banquet hall" or a party centered around the "grand saloon."

The laundry room, with space for several sets of washing machines and dryers, has a "doggy shower, because there's never any place to wash the dog in a house," Ms. Victorson explained.

And the six-car garage, with room for limos, has its own car wash so the chauffer won't have to wait in line at the car wash on a hot summer day.

Despite its price tag and overwhelming size, Ms. Victorson and Needham say they are confident the house will attract many prospective buyers.

"We've had people from out of town and Dallasites interested," Ms. Victorson said. "I feel the large properties are now beginning to sell."

When Needham began the house, the Dallas housing market was at a high, with several large multi-million-dollar homes sold before they were completed, including Mary Kay Ash's trademark pink house just down the street.

Needham said that although he doesn't have a buyer yet, the Dallas market is improving, with at least two other houses "of this price range" being built.

"We feel very comfortable that the house is going to sell," Needham said. "In light of today's market, we had to go ahead and get it finished first. If the market had been better we could have sold it with just the framing. We're in for the long haul."

The original cost of the house was $7.5 million, but that figure was raised to $8.5 million after Needham decided to complete the house.

Although he says the house is finished, it still lacks carpets, tile and counter tops. Needham said he is waiting until the house is sold so the new owners can choose the interior.

Dr. Barbara Reagan, an economist at Southern Methodist University, said a house that expensive will be more difficult to sell, but not impossible in the improving housing market.

"It's very location-specific, but it's perking up a little bit," she said of the market. "Some areas are holding up better than others. We're kind of just bumping along."

Ms. Victorson said she never thought the Dallas housing market was doing as poorly as some people perceived, but she acknowledged interest in the house hasn't been as great as it might have been several years ago.

But, she said, with the improving economy comes more interested and financially secure lookers.

"We've had certainly a sluggish economy," she said. "But a lot of the Dallas players that may have dropped out are back in it."

But for now the house is empty, waiting for someone to turn all 23,000 square feet of it into a home.

PLOTNER

He acknowledged that he's seen a lot of changes in retailing during the last 50 years. Today, there's more competition, he said, recalling the days when Dunlaps and Grammer-Murphy — the two "home-grown" department stores — battled for customers and advertising space.

Today, he says, customers are harder to attract and more impulsive than the customers of 50 years ago: "When I first started, people bought out of necessity. Back then, you'd get a new pair of shoes for Easter and maybe a new pair for Christmas. Or maybe a new dress. Now, people buy something because they want it, or because it makes them feel good."

Modern technology has also had an impact on the retailing industry, Plotner theorized, explaining that people today are inundated with news from around the world.

"Back then, people didn't wake up and find out what had happened in Beirut that morning. They weren't that concerned. Now, there's so much going on, it gets to them. They don't enjoy shopping, they don't enjoy buying. I think food sales are helped, because if you eat something you feel better. And entertainment, because that helps you forget for a while."

Dunlaps stature as a $100 million corporation pales beside the current mega-corporations such as Canada's Campeau, which recently purchased the Federated and Allied retailing firms. But Plotner feels Dunlaps is the right size — large enough to have an impact on the industry, yet small enough to offer personalized service.

The store's service and attention to the customer is what makes it competitive with the other stores — including the currently popular off-price stores, according to Plotner.

"We feel the way we can best offset those stores is through service and attention to the customer. We strive to be more interested in you buying something you're happy with than in just making a sale."

He says the company's reputation and long history in Midland has allowed it to inspire customer loyalty and employee loyalty. Plotner estimated that at least 60 percent of his 44-person staff has been with Dunlaps five years or more.

"Midland has been very good to us over the years, and I hope we've done a few good things for Midland as well."

MOVE

revenues of $2.2 billion, had a return on equity of 10.3 percent, down from a high of 19.7 percent in 1984. In response, moving companies are cutting costs, diversifying and using computers to improve efficiency.

When the interstate moving industry was deregulated in 1980, analysts predicted that thousands of new carriers would enter the business. After all, an industry that had been tightly controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission was now open to anyone with a truck and the nominal license fee.

Those predictions have not been realized. In 1980, there were about 2,100 licensed interstate carriers in the United States. There are the same number today, according to the Household Goods Carriers' Bureau. Likewise, the number of agents — small moving companies that serve as local affiliates of the interstate carriers — has remained constant at 5,000. The number of independent owner-operators, who usually perform work for an agent or van line on a contract basis, continues to be 30,000. More than 80 percent of the interstate business is still controlled by the 15 largest van lines, which include such familiar names as Allied, United, North American, Bekins and Atlas. These companies hauled 3.5 million tons of household goods in 1986.

Nonetheless, deregulation has led to increased competition in the interstate industry because the companies already in business have expanded their reach. A carrier that might have been licensed to work in five or six states before 1980, for example, can now work in all 48 continental states because of simplified licensing procedures. As a result, more carriers are likely to bid on a lucrative job.

Although local and intrastate movers were not covered under the federal deregulation, they too have experienced increased competition. In New York City, for example, Moishe's Moving & Storage in six years has changed from a one-man, one-truck operation to a leading residential mover in the city. The success of the company, started by Moishe Mana, an Israeli immigrant, has inspired a host of imitators: Shleppers Moving & Storage, the Noah's Ark Moving Company, Mensch Movers Inc. and Mazel Tov Moving.

To protect profits in this increasingly competitive environment, movers — from the largest interstate carriers to the one-truck firms — are adopting a strategy of diversification.

"They're broadening their base if they can," said Gen. Irions of the American Movers Conference. "Since the moving business is highly seasonal — nearly half of all moves occur between May 1 and Labor Day — their resources are less occupied the remainder of the year."

The most common type of diversification has been in the moving of commercial goods that require special handling, such as trade-show exhibits and electronics equipment, Gen. Irions said. Before deregulation, moving companies were barred from this lucrative sector of the freight hauling business.

"Every major company now does trade shows," he said. "It's good clean work, and, besides, that's where the best money is."

The Mayflower Group Inc. of Indianapolis, the parent company of one of the largest interstate van lines, with 1986 revenues of $705.8 million, has found an unusual, but fitting side business; it owns the nation's second-largest school bus operator.

Although the two divisions do not share drivers or equipment, the relationship is symbiotic on a corporate level. In September, when the moving trade dies down, the company's executives focus their attention — and financial resources — on the school trade. The balance reverses the following May, when the moving season rolls around again.

With the moving side of the moving and storage industry tightening, many carriers are discovering that storage can provide new sources of profit. With a little fixing, dusty old warehouses can be turned into specialized storage areas that command premium rates.

Morgan & Brother Manhattan, for example, stores 21,000 cases of vintage wine in specially built vaults at a New York City warehouse. For use of the storage area, which is kept at the optimal temperature of 55 degrees Farenheit, wine collectors and restaurateurs pay $1.20 a case a month. The collections range from a half-dozen cases to a few thousand, said Jeffrey S. Morgan, president of the 137-year-old moving company.

Robert W. Foy, president of the Bekins-Pacific Storage Co. in Stockton, Calif., opened a wine vault at one of his warehouses three years ago. "As an amateur wine collector, it occurred to me that it gets hot down here in the valley, particularly in the summer," he said. Heat is bad for wine. Foy put an air-conditioning unit in the basement and started storing his wine; his customers were soon bringing their own bottles to add to his cellar.

The wine vault, which is "not a big operation," has proved useful in storing other valuable items, Foy said. "Somebody loved his $25,000 stereo system so much that when he went away, he left it with us," he said.

Like many moving and storage companies, both Morgan and Bekins-Pacific have entered the computer record storage business. Computer tapes and disks are kept in special "clean rooms" that have controlled temperature and humidity to reduce the possibility of damage. These rooms are monitored by an elaborate fire protection system.

Computer systems are also proving profitable as way to keep better track of stored materials, according to Morgan. "In the olden days — like 10 years ago — you would put your boxes in storage and they would sit there until you came and got them," he said. "Now we have a system where our computer will track individual file names, so we can go right to the box you need and pull out the particular file," he said.

Another trend in the storage business has been the creation of mini-storage facilities, which are new or rebuilt warehouses that have been divided into small sections for individual use.

These units are particularly popular among urban consumers who have run out of space at home and have a relatively small number of things to store (as opposed to the corporate clients, who require acres of warehouse space for their files). Rentals of mini-storage facilities nationwide are increasing by 20 percent every 18 months, according to the National Mini-Storage Institute.

As if intense competition, deep discounts and a possible downturn in the economy aren't enough to contend with, moving industry executives are bracing for a severe shortage of qualified drivers that may begin as early as this summer.

Honda recalls 66,000 Preludes

DETROIT (AP) — American Honda Motor Co. Inc. said it will voluntarily recall about 66,000 1988 Prelude S and Si automobiles for replacement of power steering hoses.

The hose can develop a slight leak under prolonged vibration at engine temperatures, causing smoke if the fluid contacts the hot exhaust manifold cover and possibly fire if it contacts the manifold itself, Honda said.

The company said it had no reports of incidents involving such leaks. Owners of affected vehicles will be notified and improved hose assemblies will be installed free, the company said.

Income tax simplification, fairness? Consider this

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Among the benefits proclaimed for the Tax Reform Act of 1986 were simplicity and fairness, but with each tax return filed this year those claims become more questionable.

Simplicity obviously hasn't been achieved. And fairness? While a quality such as this involves less obvious and more subjective judgments, there is evidence to suggest it is absent from many chapters of the 1986 law.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Consider this: An investor in mutual funds could be forced to pay taxes on profits never realized — in fact, pay taxes on money lost.

Mutual funds, remember, are viewed as the sanctuary of the small investor who doesn't have time or inclination to challenge the marketplace. What could be simpler, such people reason, than to turn over funds to professionals?

The problem with this reasoning, as experienced investors know, is that there are good funds, mediocre funds and poor ones, just as there are superior stocks, ordinary stocks and stocks that go nowhere but down.

While that can be surprising enough to some folks, it is nothing compared to the shock of finding, as many will, that they have incurred taxes while losing money, thanks to the 1986 tax law.

Howard Ruff, publisher of The Ruff Times, a widely circulated economic newsletter, calls attention to this bizarre twist. Its elements are easy to follow:

1. Unlike individual investors who can decide when to buy or sell an investment, a mutual fund investor leaves that decision to the fund's manager.

2. When a fund sells investments, 98 percent of the net gains must be paid out as a distribution to the fund's shareholders.

3. The money is either given in cash or automatically reinvested in more fund shares. But either way, the shareholder must pay tax on the distribution. All shareholders in the fund are equally liable.

4. However, because the fund made money on its investment does not mean the shareholder made money on his or her investment. It's a matter of timing.

5. That timing becomes especially relevant because of the enormous, 5-year price runup of many funds — and the sudden collapse on Oct. 19. Those who were with the fund for five years did indeed gain; many others didn't.

6. For example, an individual who bought on Oct. 15 might have paid a premium for fund shares. The fund then sold some investments for a profit. The investor didn't share in those profits — but he is taxed as if he did.

7. Making the situation more outrageous, says Ruff, is that such an investor might have seen his investment plummet, for two reasons:

First, whenever a fund makes a distribution, the fund's net asset value is reduced by the amount of the distribution. Secondly, the crash reduced the value even more, in some instances by huge percentages.

Ruff offers this example:

"Let's say you paid $18.11 per share for a fund after Bloody Monday. Since then the fund has distributed $2.42 in capital gains.

"The net asset value of the fund was reduced by the $2.42 distribution, and has subsequently fallen another 34 cents. But, since you must pay 68 cents in capital gains taxes on the $2.42 distribution, your real loss is $1.02."

Remember, the fund might have had a gain on the particular stock it sold. You might not have had a gain, and you might have had a loss. It doesn't matter.

This is the worst of both worlds, says Ruff. "First you get zapped by the bear market, then Uncle Sam rubs salt in the wound by taxing a gain you never realized."

Richest 1 percent pay 26 percent of taxes

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — The number of high-income Americans has risen sharply during the Reagan administration, and so has their share of the total federal tax burden.

The 1 million or so couples and individuals whose incomes put them among the nation's wealthiest 1 percent of taxpayers paid 26.1 percent of all personal income taxes collected in 1986, the Treasury Department says. That share is up from 18.1 percent in 1981, when President Reagan took office.

In a study issued this week, the department did not say what income level would place taxpayers into that highest 1 percent.

But it issued a parallel set of statistics showing that during the same period, the share borne by those making over $100,000 rose from 15.2 percent of the total to 30.6 percent.

Meanwhile, the portion of taxes paid by those with incomes under $50,000 — the majority of Americans — dropped from 66.8 percent in 1981, before enactment of across-the-board tax cuts, to 45.7 percent in 1986, the department said.

Those in between, making $50,000 to $100,000, paid the rest, with their share rising from 18 percent to 23.7 percent.

The Treasury attributed part of the higher tax payments by the wealthy to "the extraordinary level of capital gains realized in 1986 in anticipation of the 1987 rate increase on capital gains."

In 1986, the maximum tax rate on capital gains, which are profits from the sale of stock, real estate and other investments, was 20 percent. Knowing the rate would rise to 28 percent in 1987, investors sold billions of dollars worth of assets in the closing days of 1986, which boosted their total incomes for that year.

That sell-off helped capital gains account for nearly 25 percent of the total income of the richest 1 percent of Americans in 1986. In 1985, capital gains accounted for 15 percent; in 1981, 11 percent. By contrast, capital gains make up on the average less than 2 percent of the income of the other 99 percent of Americans.

The preliminary analysis is based on a sampling of tax returns filed last year, reflecting income earned in 1986.

The study made no attempt to fully explain the growing share of taxes paid by the richest Americans. However, once its analysis is complete, the administration is likely to claim that the increase results from the big 1981 across-the-board tax cut that Congress enacted at Reagan's behest.

That law slashed the top marginal rate from 70 percent to 50 percent. It since has been cut to 33 percent.

The administration reasons that reducing tax rates gives workers and investors incentive to produce and save more.

Inflation and economic growth have helped boost incomes and, thus, increase the number of taxpayers who make more than $100,000 a year. In 1986, about 12 of every 1,000 couples and individuals topped that level. The analysis found those taxpayers paid $43 billion in taxes in 1981, $77 billion in 1985 and $115 billion in 1986.

The IRS says more than 1.2 million couples and individuals earned over $100,000 in 1985, an increase of 63 percent over 1982.

The number earning over $1 million a year more than doubled from 1982 to 1985, to 17,312.

Little comfort available to taxpayers

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The news lately has been anything but comforting for people getting ready to file their tax returns for 1987.

When the General Accounting Office made test queries in the Internal Revenue Service's telephone assistant program for taxpayers, it says it got wrong answers 39 percent of the time.

When Money magazine asked 50 professional preparers to compute the taxes owed by a hypothetical family, no two came up with the same number. And the preparers' fees ranged from $187 to $2,500.

A person might conclude from this that the annual exercise of reckoning up with Uncle Sam is becoming a high stakes game played under very uncertain rules.

For temporary tax relief, take Form 4868

NEW YORK (AP) — Internal Revenue Service Form 4868 is surely a popular piece of paper right now.

For those who have not yet had occasion to use it, 4868 is the document taxpayers must file by April 15 to get an automatic extension of the deadline on their federal tax returns.

Such extensions are in heavy demand this year, with taxpayers and paid preparers struggling to adjust to the new system that went into effect in 1987 mandated by tax reform.

Confusion has been running high about many provisions of the new code, even among professional veterans of the tax wars.

Suppose, for example, that you have "passive losses" from some partnership activity. "The IRS recently released 265 pages of temporary passive loss regulations, and this is only the beginning," observed the J.K. Lasser Tax Institute in its current monthly bulletin.

If you are overwhelmed by tax questions, preoccupied by other pressing matters or simply in a mood to procrastinate, you can put off the deadline for completing your return until Aug. 15 by simply filing Form 4868 now.

For this extension, unlike any subsequent one you might seek, the government doesn't require any explanation or excuse. But if Uncle Sam has any money coming from you, he wants it now, not later.

The rules require that you include with Form 4868 a check for the estimated balance of what you still owe, beyond what was withheld from your wages or salary and any other payments you have already made.

The estimate should be made with some care. If it turns out that you still owe money for 1987 when you file your return on, say, June 30, the government will charge you interest at a 10 percent annual rate on the balance due.

And if what you still owe amounts to more than 10 percent of your total tax bill for the year, a penalty may also be imposed.

Although it is a helpful option to have, an extension is not always an unmixed blessing.

When good moms have bad days, kids can suffer.

The phone keeps ringing. The dishwasher won't work. You've got a splitting headache. And now the baby's crying her head off in the back bedroom. You drop a dish, you bump your elbow, the crying gets louder... and suddenly you're headed for the baby determined to shut her up. Stop.

Take time out.

Sit down, breathe deeply, count to ten very slowly. If the anger's still there, punch a pillow. Take a hot bath or a cold shower. Whatever you do, don't take hold of your child until you get hold of yourself.

Midland Community Concerts Association knows economic conditions in Midland in the late 1980s give new meaning to familiar adages about saving pennies and receiving value for value in spending money.

In a time when tickets to see known acts range in cost from $10 up into the hundreds, the association's upcoming "Festival of Fine Music" season offers new members five professional shows at the price of $4 for adults and $2 for students when memberships are purchased before April 22.

"We're the best entertainment bargain in town, and quite often we have brought young budding artists here who have gone on to greater heights and performances in the coveted performance halls for musicians," says Elinore Chase, membership co-chairman along with Dorothy Perkins.

"We've had Segovia here and Lilly Pons — we have a long list of names," Mrs. Chase says. For example, in spring 1987 MCC brought to Midland violinist Leland Ch··n, "whose name we're hearing in the music halls of New York and Washington D.C."

The 41st annual MCC campaign drive for membership begins Monday and runs through April 23. The final concert of the 1987 season, The Empire Brass, is being held April 21. New members purchasing their memberships prior to showtime, may attend this performance as part of the 1988-89 season. Memberships may be purchased at the concert.

Manned by volunteers, campaign headquarters, located in the lobby of the Lexington Motor Inn, is open from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. beginning Monday. Those volunteers will be phoning area residents to invite them to become members.

MCC is a nonprofit membership organization with no paid workers whose sole objective is to present the finest musical artists and attractions in an annual concert series. Adult admission for the season is $20. Half-price admission for student memberships applies through high school.

No individual tickets are sold at the door. For more information call 699-2444 on campaign days or 684-4557 anytime.

The season opens Sept. 26 with The Shanghai Acrobats & Magicians, a company which has its own arena in Shanghai where it performs six sold out shows weekly.

"This company is considered to be one of the greatest tourist attractions in the entire Far East," says MCC's brochure. "For the first time in America, a Chinese magic spectacular is presented with one of the world's greatest acrobatic troupes."

In the United States, magic and acrobatic exhibitions are considered to be fun-filled experiences of pure entertainment.

"This is true in China as well; but, in that ancient civilization acrobats and magic are also considered to be forms of pure art representing a cultural tradition of well over 2,000 years," says the brochure from Community Concerts, Inc.

On Feb. 6, 1989, The Limeliters come to town. Works they perform include some of their own numbers such as "There's a Meetin' Here Tonight" and "Have Some Madea, M'Dear."

"Start with a generous measure of humor, add expert musicianship and exquisite three and sometimes four part harmony and you have The Limeliters," MCC's brochure says. "Beginning as a trio in 1959, they sing and play with an awareness of the past, but with all of the vitality of the present, and audiences everywhere succumb to their infectious brand of merriment and music-making."

Please see MCC, Page 2I

The Shanghai Acrobats & Magicians open Midland Community Concerts 41st season Sept. 26.

The Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet, which performs on 12 different saxophones from a piccolo-like sopranino to the rich baritone, is scheduled to perform for Midland Community Concerts.

Race track's Easter opening drew large crowd of spectators

Temple

Easter Sunday dawned early for those enticed into a sunrise service, especially when clocks were to be moved up an hour the Saturday night before.

I remember years ago, when I was a child, attending sunrise Easter services at Fort Davis. The world was healthier in those days. The inane idea that changing time twice a year has no impact on the human body had not been conceived of at that time.

I wanted to touch base with that childhood experience and was determined, despite all adversities, to pull my unhappy and much asleep body out of bed in time to make a sunrise Easter service. My goal was Midland Lutheran, but I was too late.

Fortunately, Ruthe Owens, a friend of mine, had commented the night before that the church she went to had a sunrise service. Thus, I joined Grace Lutheran Church for its early service. I was bundled up and casually dressed and so grateful to find that most there for the service were likewise attired.

The view couldn't have been more magnificent in Midland Easter Sunday morning. The full moon was directly over my shoulder during the service and the rising sun ahead.

Breakfast following the service was also a treat.

That afternoon found me at the opening of Twin Cities Speedway, located between Midland and Odessa off Coors Road. Due to high winds Friday afternoon which caused visibility at the track to be most limited, the races were moved to Easter.

The size of the crowd was surprising. Apparently the idea of attending races on that Sunday afternoon, when the weather turned out to be nice particularly for this spring, appealed to a lot of people. Fortunately, the track has installed additional stands since last season and additional parking space is opening soon.

The car races provided what they promised — spills, chills and thrills for fans. Races will be held, now that the season is open, on Friday nights beginning at 8 p.m. with gates opening at 6 p.m. Special events are planned throughout the season.

The day closed for me with a lively game of 42 (played with dominoes). I was the only one playing who had played before. It's been more than a decade since I've played, and in order to begin I had to call an expert, my former mother-in-law who lives in Deport. We both got a chuckle out of the call.

In looking back, I realize the day was a pleasure and provided a lull before the storm of activities beginning this week and continuing through May.

For instance, this week brings Sesame Street Live to Midland's Chaparral Center for performances Tuesday and Wednesday; Las Manos is hosting the Artie Shaw Orchestra Thursday at the Holiday Inn Convention Center as a fund raiser for the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, Museum of the Southwest; Johnny Dee and Rocket 88's are at Rumors Thursday; and "Educating Rita" is playing Thursday through Saturday at Theatre Midland.

Coming up the week of April 17 is the final subscription concert in the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's season, which features pianist Jeffrey Campbell on April 19 at Lee High School, Midland, and April 21 at Bonham Junior High, Odessa; Midland Community Concerts final concert of the 1987-88 season, which is open to new subscribers as part of the package for the 1988-89 season, The Empire Brass play at Midland High School Auditorium April 21; and country performers Ricky Van Shelton, Ronna Reeves and Shot in the Dark will be at the New West Club April 21.

In addition, the Pickwick Players, Midland Community Theatre's youth performing troupe, are staging "Tarheel Tales" at 1:30 p.m. April 16. For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Speaking of MCT, tryouts are being conducted today and Monday for two upcoming performances. Dance concert auditions are being held today at 7 p.m. in the Taubman Room at Theatre Midland, and auditions for "Cats in Concert" are being held at 7 p.m. today and Monday in the Davis Theatre One.

An upcoming date to remember: April 19.

On April 19, 1775, the first shots were fired at Lexington and Concord, beginning the war that would change forever men's ideals of freedom — the American Revolution.

"Summer Soldiers: A Survey & Index of Revolutionary War Courts-Martial," by James C. Neagles, is the story of a group of some 3,315 men who could not withstand the hardships and pressures of what seemed like a hopeless enterprise and ultimately found themselves before a military court-martial.

"Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered," wrote Thomas Paine; and the cases in this book tell the story of men who found the task all too difficult. Cost of the book is $16.95 (plus $3.25 shipping and handling charges). The book may be ordered from Ancestry Inc., Department SS, P.O. Box 476, Salt Lake City, Utah, 84110.

I find today's view of freedom in this country growing smaller and more restrictive, and I hope those shots were not in vain. In thinking of April 19, 1775, April seems a good month to inventory and reassess what freedom means to each of us — the responsibility we're willing to assume for the freedoms we have, and the price we're willing to pay to remain a free society. I know I am in the process of doing just that.

The trio has received numerous favorable reviews over the years.

The San Francisco Chronicle says of The Limeliters, "They are a timeless delight for children of all ages."

The Denver Post says, The Limeliters are "more than a nostalgia trip because the group has continued to evolve and skillfully blend elements of both the old and new."

Also performing on the series is CC Ryder Troubadour, a native of Port Hope, Ontario.

"C.C. Ryder is a most versatile gentleman of song and guitar, who travels the world bringing to all who hear him the beauty, the joy and the boundless spirit of folk music," the brochure says. "He has a remarkable vocal range that enables him to sing out a big tune with effortless delivery, evoke a tear with the next song and dissolve his audience into laughter with the third. He offers a rare combination of excellent taste, fine voice and top showmanship."

Rounding out the season is The Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet, which performs on 12 different saxophones from a piccolo-like sopranino to the rich baritone.

"Consistently acknowledged as America's foremost classical saxophonist, Harvey Pittel has popularized the very concept of the saxophone in concert," says a brochure from Community Concerts, Inc.

He has appeared as a solist with numerous symphony orchestras including the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony, the Baltimore Symphony and the Los Angeles Philharmonic and with such conductors as Zubin Mehta, Seiji Ozawa and Neville Marriner and Michael Tilson Thomas.

The New York Times says of Pittel, "If the saxophone needs a Segovia, someone with the ability to make concert audiences take an overlooked instrument seriously, Harvey Pittel could be the man."

Of the quartet, the Daily News in Longview, Wash., says, "The Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet is polished, skilled and extremely sensitive to the music it plays...a standing ovation — justly deserved."

The program may include works by Bach, Debussy, Mozart, Glazunov as well as Glenn Miller, Gershwin, Scott Joplin, vaudeville, swing and jazz favorites. The quartet has received support from the National Endowment for the Arts, Western States Arts Foundation, Mid-America Arts Alliance and the Texas Touring Arts Program of the Texas Commission on the Arts.

"One of the world's most unique and exciting musical experiences, the saxophone quartet brings to its audiences everywhere a combination of quality music-making and elegant entertainment," MCC's brochure says. "Their playing is subtle, refined and restrained, or abandoned, jazzy and swinging."

The dates of the C.C. Ryder and The Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet concerts have not yet been set.

"Because Midland already has a sister city in China, we are pleased to open our season with the Shanghai Acrobats & Magicians," Dorothy Perkins says. "All of our concerts have been selected, as always, for their family appeal. We have a troubadour, folk singer, C.C. Ryder, The Limeliters with their nostalgic songs, and for jazz and classical music lovers we have the Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet."

'Beetlejuice' bizarre, imaginative

Salcedo

The high-camp fantasy film "Beetlejuice" features a zany world of the afterlife where "People who commit suicide become civil servants" and some dead are "haunted by the living."

The film features a happily married couple of homebodies, the Maitlands — Adam (Alec Baldwin) and Barbara (Geena "The Fly" Davis) — meeting their demise in a tranquil setting.

The ditzy pair don't realize their predicament until a mysterious manual, the Handbook for the Recently Deceased ("diseased" Adam asks?), turns up and their reflections in mirrors are absent.

Even worse, they discover that "being dead doesn't make things any easier" when a family — who they literally wouldn't be caught dead with — moves into their house and redecorates it with a ghastly lack of taste.

The crude Deetz family, Charles (Jeffrey "Howard the Duck" Jones), Delia (Catherine "SCTV" O'Hara) and daughter Lydia (Winona Ryder in an Elvira reject get-up) are every bit as garish and annoying as their decorating.

Delia, on arriving at the house, says all it needs is "gasoline and a blow torch, no problem." She insists on making over the house according to her whims and threatens her husband with "If you don't let me fix the house I will go insane and take you with me."

The Maitlands can't leave the house without ending up in a "Dune" type of alternate universe. So, they opt to stay and attempt to frighten their unwanted guests away. Barbara starts by hanging herself in the closet and ripping her face off (a stunt you don't want to try at home). Delia's reaction (since she can't see Barbara) is to shriek and moan "I hope the other closets are bigger."

Soon the quirky daughter comes to the aid of the ghostly couple. She is the only one who can see them and explains this with "I can see the strange and unusual because I am strange and unusual."

The Maitlands soon need serious help and call on the aid of "the afterlife's leading bio-exorcist," Betlegeuse (Michael Keaton in an unrecognizable, but overwhelming, performance), known in the vernacular as "Beetlejuice." The offensive, obnoxious exorcist and party-hound from hell soon adds fuel to the fire by transforming himself into various beastly forms spouting such gems as "Make my millenium!"

Beetlejuice is just one of the otherworldly types the hapless Maitlands have to deal with. There is a whole slew of strange dead folks, some very gruesome. (Despite the PG rating, the afterlife waiting room contains some horrors — a charred body, a woman sawed in half, and such — which may be upsetting to some youngsters).

Some of the special effects are clever and similar to Disneyland's Haunted House attraction (especially a room housing lost souls). The high-point of the film, however, features the Deetzes and their dinner guests (possessed by the spirits of Harry Belafonte and a calypso band) breaking into the "Banana Boat" song ("Day-O") and is laugh-out-loud funny.

Director Tim "Pee Wee's Big Adventure" Burton and production designer Bo Welch must have had a field day making this film. Bizzare with a capital "B," ribald, and reeling with black comedy, "Beetlejuice" deserves points for being highly imaginative. It dares to be different with crowd-pleasing antics, and even though the ending wasn't on par with the rest of the film, a good percentage of the full-house audience stood up and applauded during the credits on the evening I attended.

Just the same, the film's risque brand of black humor is for special tastes. As one delighted moviegoer said, "It was stupid and insane, but I liked it."

"Beetlejuice" is rated PG, but has some rude language and gruesome sights which is more befitting a PG-13 rating. It is showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Bright Lights, Big City' not preachy

It's 6 a.m...Do you know where your children are? asks the opening credits of "Bright Lights, Big City." The movie, based on Jay McInerney's sardonic best seller, explores the lives of the current "lost generation" of the disillusioned ultra-hip drug culture.

Touted as a modern day "Catcher in the Rye," McInerney's screen version (he wrote the screenplay) remains true to the novel. Although the self-mocking protaganist of the novel remained nameless, in the movie he is Jamie Conway, an aspiring writer working as a fact checker for a stodgy Gotham magazine in New York.

Michael J. Fox is surprisingly cast in the role of the irresponsible bad boy which seems tailor made for the likes of Sean Penn. However, Fox gives the role a much needed sympathetic — rather than a glib — characterization.

Director James Bridges works well within limitations of transferring a novel written in the second person to the screen. In the novel, the narrator says things to himself like, "You are a republic of voices tonight. Unfortunately, that republic is Italy." In the movie, some of Jamie's thoughts are echoed in an occasional subtitle which says things like, It's Monday, where did Sunday go?

The movie traces several days in the life of Jamie in his quest for "Bolivia's national product" (cocaine). Jamie says, "My brain cells are composed of tiny Bolivian soldiers. They need to be fed. They need the Bolivian marching powder." Jamie takes the drugs to forget the pain of his mother's death and the pain of his wife's leaving him to become a top fashion model in Paris.

A maternal co-worker (Swoosie Kurtz) befriends Jamie and he pours his heart out to her, explaining that he and his wife had problems because "She wanted to live a magazine ad and I wanted to live a literary cliche."

Jamie's problems are compounded by his persistent bar-crawling buddy, Tad Allagash (Keifer Sutherland). Tad is the kind of guy who shows up at one's door, bangs on it and says, "Open up, narcotics squad, we're soliciting donations."

So Jamie's problems — his drug problems, drinking problems, haunting visions of his wife and mother — lead him into the fast lane of misery and irresponsibility. His life seems as inane as the headlines in "The Post," which Jamie describes as "Spontaneous combustion, Coma Babies..."The Post' is despicable." However, Jamie still reads 'The Post' and develops a strange affinity with the 'Coma Baby,' the baby who gained national headlines by surviving despite its mother's comatose state.

A dream sequence surrounding the Coma Baby is done literally in the movie. Yet it adds a surrealistic atmosphere to the film, befitting to Jamie's drugged state. Cinematographer Gordon Willis does some nice work keeping the mood even from barroom to magazine office.

Fox does a credible job, but Phoebe Cates is too giddy to play his estranged wife, the shallow model. Dianne Wiest shines in the flashbacks as Jamie's terminally ill mother. She pulls off a touching, warm death scene, despite the inane questions she has to ask.

"Bright Lights, Big City" fares better in its transfer to the screen than last year's other drug-related movie, "Less Than Zero." Although the film doesn't make a powerful statement against drugs, it doesn't lecture or trivalize as "Less Than Zero" tended to do.

The film stands well on its own, and comes full circle and ends in the setting where it began. It's 6 a.m. on the island of Manhattan. Maybe this time, Jamie will know where he is.

"Bright Lights, Big City," rated R for a lesbian scene, drug use and adult situations, is showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Collins sees herself as 'enduring presence'

By CURT SCHLEIER
Hearst News Service

Judy Collins sweeps into the room, lighting it up from the candlepower of those large blue eyes. There's a smile on her face, and why not? After a long, sometimes hard life, all's right with the world.

Her autobiography, "Trust Your Heart," was recently published to excellent reviews. It is a well-written account of the life of a remarkable woman who has known her share of pain.

Her father, a blind radio performer, had a drinking problem. At 14, she attempted suicide. There was a childhood bout with polio; later she wrestled with tuberculosis, throat problems, booze, drugs and a nasty custody fight with her husband. There was enough pain for several lifetimes.

If an artist needs to suffer to succeed, Collins should have been a superstar. But that never really happened for the folk/pop singer. Despite several classic recordings — "Both Sides Now," "Amazing Grace" and "Send in the Clowns" — she never achieved those heights, which is OK with her.

"I'm an enduring presence," she says, "which for me is what counts. I have a long history of making appearances, making records. The important thing is to endure and make music."

She said writing her autobiography "was painful. I didn't want to talk about my drinking. I really didn't. There came a point when I was very resistant. But I had a story to tell, a process to go through, and I wrote until I got to the end.

"It's very different from singing. You're exposing your soul, and part of the excitement of that is that you're reaching people on another level. I won't say it's better or worse. But it is exciting to get feedback from people who've been listening to you for over 30 years."

It's strange that both she and Joan Baez publish autobiographies in the same year. Collins agrees.

"It's weird. I think it's uncanny. We couldn't have planned it like that."

When she's told how similar their careers are and how they both have a similar sound, suddenly it's as though there were a power failure. The lights go out in her eyes. "You think we're alike?" Collins doesn't see the connection, and doesn't want to discuss it further.

Collins calls herself "a touring troubadour," and she's on the road again, promoting not only the book, but a new album, also called "Trust Your Heart."

Of one of its songs, "The Rose," Collins says "It's a song that attacked me. It sank into my skin and said I belong to you. If that happens, it means I have to record it."

There have been other songs, however, songs she's passed on that became megahits for other artists, "Fire and Rain," and "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face," among others.

"I hate that song," she says of the Roberta Flack classic. "I get very strong reactions to music and I do not like that song. People send you material all the time and say you've got to do this song; it's yours. But certain songs are determined for certain singers. Some aren't. For me to sing a song that's not absolutely right is not good for my psyche."

Collins' music spans the musical spectrum, from the pure folk genre with which she started her career to pop and country and even religious music.

"Duke Ellington once said to me there are really only two kinds of music, good and bad. That gave me the impetus to take music from all kinds of styles."

Another major influence on her career was Ella Fitzgerald, because of "her phrasing, her clarity, the fact that she doesn't get in the way of her lyrics. Her complete ease of phrasing against the line. She transcends musical categories."

Other major influences include Frank Sinatra ("You learn from him every time you hear him"); Paul Simon ("He's a genius. 'Graceland,' Simon's latest album, opened another window for music, like 'Sgt. Pepper' did) and Jacques Brel ("There was a real singer. He made you understand French").

MCT, MC staging 'Educating Rita'

A young, lower-class, hairdresser is assigned at a British university to be tutored by a middle-aged professor. She is seeking an education, while struggling to discover who she is. He is pessimistic and disillusioned with his professional and personal life and finds solace in the whiskey hidden in his bookcases.

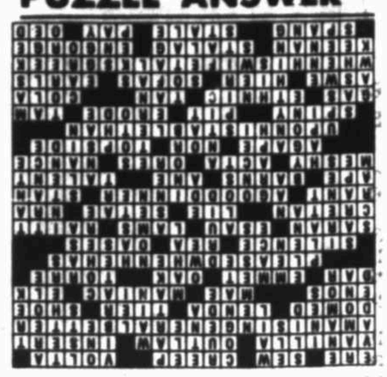

Each receives an education in Willy Russell's "Educating Rita," onstage in Theatre Midland's Mabee Theatre Two, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through May 7.

Written in 1980, the play was made into a popular movie, screenplay by Russell, starring Michael Caine and Julie Walters. The play employs strong language and is recommended for mature audiences.

The role of Rita is being played by Renee Spicer, and the role of the teacher, Frank, is being played by Michael Trost.

Directed by Sharylynn Shaw, the production is a Midland College/Midland Community Theatre's joint venture. For reservations call 682-4111.

Ballet Midand to participate in Santa Fe festival

From Staff Reports

Ballet Midland will be participating in the Southwestern Regional Ballet Association Festival Thursday through April 17 in Santa Fe. N.M.

"The Southwestern Regional Ballet Association is an organization formed to promote quality ballet in all parts of the United States," says a news release from Ballet Midland.

For the past 25 years, a festival has been held regionally to give the nonprofit member companies the opportunity to learn from nationally known artists and to present original ballets from that company. Ballet Midland is one of more than 20 companies represented from the region of Texas, New Mexico, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

As a part of the festival, three performances will be held. The companies who perform on these nights have been chosen by the national staff through an adjudication process. Ron Cunningham of Baltimore, Md., judged Ballet Midland Jan. 27. An original ballet, choreographed by Brian Taylor, formerly of Midland, was chosen to be presented in the Friday Night Performance at the festival.

Ballet Midland company members who will be participating include Metta Boving, Alia Brost, Shannon Dunbar, Julie Greaves, Christy Leonard, Louisa McINtosh, Robin Rapp, Jamie Rasnick, Libby Sanders and Angela Seltzer.

The four-day workshop is headed by Richard Englund of Joffrey Ballet II, Robert Lindgren from the School of American Ballet, Gyula Pandi of North Carolina School of the Arts, Tenley Taylor of Ballet West, Soili Arvola and Leo Ahonen of the Texas Ballet and choreographer and jazz instructor Jerry Evans.

Who knows what evils lurk in the shoals of distribution? Anyone who has been paying attention might have a clue. And if you draw the right conclusion, the countermeasure should be obvious.

We are not sure why West felt compelled to double four spades—from his hand he could not even guarantee that six spades could be defeated! Once having elected to double, he could at least have led a trump and guaranteed the contract's defeat. Fortunately for the defenders, South ignored all the warning signals and handed back the contract on a silver platter.

Declarer captured East's technically correct play of the nine of hearts with the queen. He could afford to lose two diamonds and a heart, so he had to ruff at least one heart in dummy. With nary a thought about the auction, he briskly tried to cash the ace of hearts at trick two. West ruffed and shifted to a trump, and declarer found that he was left with only one trump with which to ruff two losing hearts—down one.

If you have to lose a trick, what difference does it make when you concede it? Sometimes the world. Obviously, West's lead of the deuce of hearts had to be a singleton. Since South couldn't afford to draw trumps before ruffing a heart, and could not cash the ace of hearts until he had pulled West's fangs, the solution is ridiculously simple—declarer should prepare for his heart ruff by leading a low heart from hand at trick two!

The defenders have no counter. If, after winning the heart, East continues with a high heart, declarer plays low from hand and ruffs in dummy. If, instead, East shifts to a trump, declarer wins and ruffs a low heart, then gets back to hand with a club ruff to draw the remaining trumps. Either way, he has preserved the ace of hearts as a trick and the contract is secure.

'Big band' concert to benefit museum

"Begin the Beguine" with the Artie Shaw Orchestra Thursday from 8 p.m. to midnight at the Holiday Inn Convention Center.

In the late 1930s and early '40s, clarinetist Artie Shaw made music that stimulated and excited listeners and dancers. His recording of "Begin the Beguine" brought him in July of 1938 to the pinnacle of his popularity.

"Record stores were besieged, and from millions of radios came Shaw's buoyant musical message in which jazz and the popular song were so artfully linked," says jazz-expert John Lissner.

Throughout his career, Shaw has been known as a blunt, outspoken and often controversial personality.

For a while he and Benny Goodman were touted by press agents as rivals for the "King of Swing" throne, but the competitive aspect was strictly hype. Shaw also made headlines constantly with his seven marriages and divorces to such Hollywood glamour queens as Lana Turner, Ava Gardner, Doris Dowling and Evelyn Keyes.

In 1954, Shaw walked away from music. The 30-year hiatus ended when Shaw came out of retirement to front a 16-piece swing band at the Glen Island Casino in New Rochelle, N.Y., in the mid-1980s.

Prior to that time, he was "hostile" to the idea of reviving his band.

"When I retired in 1954, I had a bellyful of the music business," Shaw says. "In my mind the big-band era was identified with a lot of sleaze and greed."

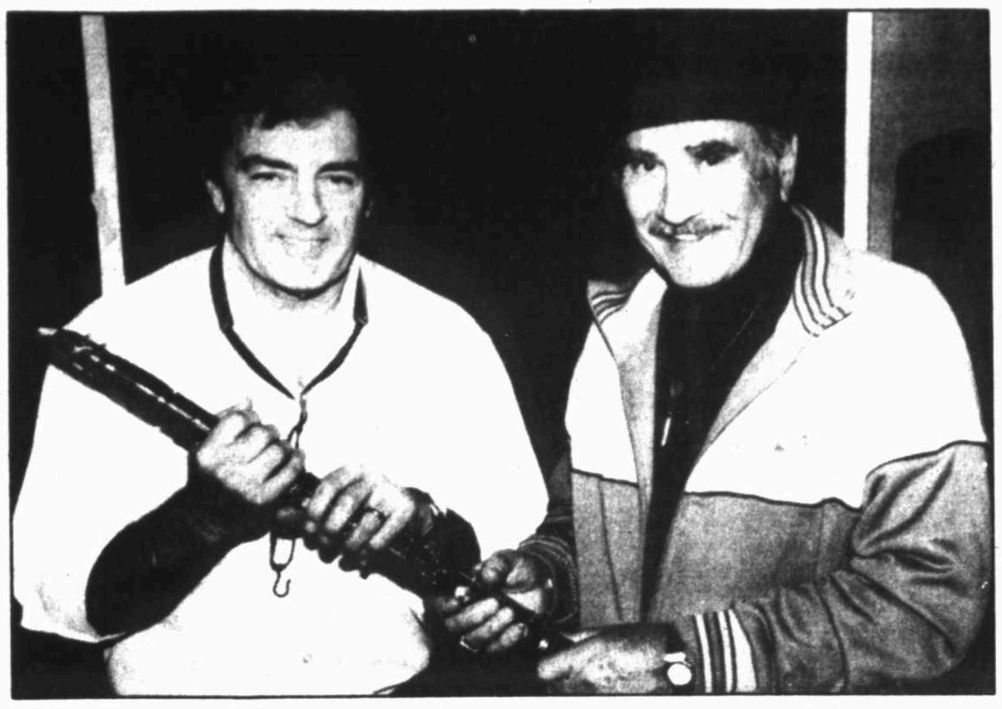

The continued regard for his music made him re-evaluate his position.

"I had no idea that what I was playing in the late '30s and early '40s was going to become classic. Did you know that there are over 300 radio stations around the country programming my recordings along with Goodman's, the Dorseys, Miller, Basie, Ellington.

"You can't help but be affected by that. I'm flattered that modern-jazz players like the late Cannonball Adderley, the avant-garde jazz-clarinetist John Carter and the pianist Muhal Richard Abrams have apparently studied what I have done. All of this convinced me that this was the right time to try it."

Shaw hadn't touched a clarinet in 30 years when he came out of retirement. In fact, his famous clarinet has been converted into a lamp. Thus, Shaw delegated the playing to reedman Dick Johnson who now leads the band. On occasion Shaw appears with the orchestra.

"He's a remarkably talented player on everything — not only clarinet, but soprano, alto and tenor saxes and flute," Shaw says of Johnson.

Dick Johnson, left, and Artie Shaw

"I idolized Artie as a kid," says Johnson. "It was an unbelievable thing for me because it's like idolizing Ted Williams and then having Ted Williams come pick you to teach batting for him."

Johnson perceives his job as that of ensuring the orchestra sounds like an Artie Shaw orchestra.

"I want to see that every nuance of the ensemble is just right, every musician is finely tuned," Johnson says. "I want this band to ring with perfection.

"I'd like to immortalize this kind of music and his playing," he says. "I'm 61, and I don't have any plans to retire. As long as I'm mobile, I'll just keep playing and spreading the gospel."

In the January 1985 issue of Down Beat magazine, John McDonough says of the orchestra, "It's an astonishingly good orchestra, perhaps the very best playing today....

"Dick Johnson succeeds in sounding more like the prewar Shaw than the Shaw on the Book-of-the-Month Club records. He seems to have swallowed him whole. Some of the original texts he follows note-for-note, such as 'Stardust' and the short, furious solos on things like 'Traffic Jam' and "The Carioca.' But more amazing is the way he has transported Shaw's creative circuit boards to himself...

"For pure, clear-as-air swing and overall ensemble balance, Artie Shaw may have the band to beat in 1985."

The Midland performance is a benefit sponsored by Las Manos for the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. The $75-per-couple admission covers hors d'oeuvres and the show and dance. A cash bar will be available.

For more information or to obtain an invitation, call the Museum of the Southwest, 683-2882, and ask for Barbara Horn. Seating is limited.

The continued existence of the Artie Shaw Orchestra of the 1980s depends on the support it receives from fans, says Shaw, who is in his late 70s.

"The question is not, are the big bands back, but are the audiences back?"

Seven sinkholes comprise Bottomless Lakes park

By SUE MAJOR HOLMES

BOTTOMLESS LAKES STATE PARK, N.M. (AP) — It's an area of beige dust covered with creosote and native grasses and surrounded by brilliant red bluffs. And in it lie the sinkholes that generations ago earned the name Bottomless Lakes.

The Bottomless Lakes aren't really bottomless, of course.

They are sinkholes ranging in depth from about 17 feet to about 90 feet. The illusion of great depth is created by algae growth.

The story is that the small, circular bodies of water got their name years ago when early cowboys tried to measure them with lines of rope that never seemed to reach the end.

Now seven lakes are protected in Bottomless Lakes State Park, New Mexico's first state park.

The focus of the park, Lea Lake, was donated to the state in 1932 by the private Fin and Feather Club, which still owns a sinkhole lake nearby.

The park, about 12 miles east of Roswell on U.S. 380, was created in 1934 when an agency known as the State Science Commission recommended to the commissioner of public lands that the area be preserved for its scientific interest.

"Geologically, it's pretty unique," says park Superintendent Ken Britt.

The area is marked by gypsum and salt deposits. The lakes were formed when circulating ground water dissolved the deposits, creating a network of underground channels and tunnels. The roofs of some underground caverns eventually collapsed under their own weight.

The resulting sinkholes filled with water from springs and two separate hydraulic systems east and west of the park.

The water is saline, although three of the lakes are stocked with trout by the state Game and Fish Department during the winter. Several of the lakes have native species, such as the Pecos pupfish and rainwater killifish, which are only a few inches long.

Britt says the pupfish are an attraction of their own. In the summer the males turn bright blue when they go into breeding condition, and look like tiny lines of neon as they swim just below the surface of the water.

A winding asphalt road takes visitors from one lake to another and along an overlooking bluff. Picnic tables are scattered throughout the park, and people swim and boat at one lake.

The first buildings at the park were built by the Civilian Conservation Corps during the Great Depression of the 1930s, when the government put thousands of people to work on public projects.

Some of those beige-and-pink stonework buildings still stand at Lea Lake on the south end of the park. The main building includes original rock portals with beams made by hand. The portal shelters picnic tables.

Britt someday would like to make use of the building's four-sided steeple-like tower. It once housed a water tank, but has been empty for years.

The superintendent says he'd like a staircase built to the top to give tourists a view of the entire park and of a nearby Bureau of Land Management waterfowl area. He'd even like to see a small telescope added.

Much of the building has been renovated and additions have been built. The facility houses a snack bar and game room that are open in the summer. New showers nearby also serve an adjacent campground. The campground and bathhouse were done during a $350,000 renovation project two years ago, Britt says.

Lea Lake, at 90 feet deep and about 250 yards across, is the largest in the chain by far and the only one where swimming is allowed.

"They come swimming and the first time, if you're not prepared for it, you come out licking your lips and you think you're in the ocean," Britt says. "It's that salty."

People also can rent bright yellow 8-foot paddle boards or take out small sailboats. Scuba divers train in the lake.

Britt says Lea Lake attracts several thousand people, both tourists and local residents, on a nice summer weekend.

North of Lea Lake are Pasture Lake, Figure Eight Lake, Devil's Inkwell, Mirror Lake and Cottonwood Lake, the last only a few dozen yards from the park's visitor's center. North of the visitor's center is Lazy Lagoon.

"Each one of the lakes is very different from the other ones," Britt says. "They have different characteristics."

Pasture Lake, the smallest with a depth of 17 feet and a width of 50 to 60 yards, gets its water from runoff. Nearby lies Picnic Dell, a dry sinkhole that illustrates the formation of the Bottomless Lakes.

Figure Eight Lake actually is two contiguous sinkholes in a numeral eight shape. The lake, 37 feet deep, is bordered by salt cedar trees.

In the spring, algae growth turns many of the lakes deep green. One early spring morning at Figure Eight Lake found one side clear, with waterfowl swimming around, and the other a murky pea green with mats of grayish algae floating on the surface.

Devil's Inkwell, Mirror Lakes and Cottonwood Lake are stocked with fish in the winter.

Devil's Inkwell shows perhaps the greatest sinkhole effect of any of the lakes in the chain. The 31-foot deep hole is surrounded by high red bluffs, and a small rocky beach on one edge of the circle can be reached only by a steep path that seems more suited to mountain goats than to people.

Mirror Lake, shimmering twin pools 50 feet deep, was until recent years separate side-by-side lakes. The water level rose about two years ago, submerging the land bridge that separated them, Britt says.

Cottonwood Lake, 30 feet deep, also shows a sinkhole effect. The bluffs rise steeply on three sides; the fourth is blocked by a beige rock fence.

It's 30 feet down to the lake surface from the fence, but Britt says oldtimers have told him that back in the 1920s, the water was so high it flowed out of the lake and ran down the slope to where the visitor's center now stands.

The lake is a popular fishing spot and many anglers sit on the fence and dangle down their lines rather than attempt the climb down closer to the surface, Britt says.

"The trick here is to get the fish out of the water before it falls off" as the fisherman reels it up the 30 feet to the fence, he says.

Lazy Lagoon, the northernmost lake, is the one lake that looks shallow — but it ties with Lea Lake as the deepest. What looks like a border of sand around the lake in reality is an akaline crust covering deep, unpleasant smelling mud. Visitors are warned not to drive near it.

Holiday Inns survey different needs of business and vacation travelers

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The behavior and needs of people traveling on business are quite different from those of the vacation traveler, a recent survey on hotel guests indicates.

"Because their reasons for traveling are so distinct, the differences are reflected all the way from planning stages, room selection and the hotel stay through payment time," said Andrew Lien, senior vice president of worldwide marketing for Holiday Inns, which conducted the study.

The Memphis-based organization surveyed more than 1,200 randomly selected guests at 620 of the chain's lodgings at locations ranging from downtown, airport and suburban hotels to resort, roadside and small-town facilities.

While more business travelers book advance reservations than vacation travelers do, most of them make travel arrangements through their secretaries, corporate travel department or travel agents.

They are nearly six times more likely to travel alone than vacation travelers and three times more likely to arrive by air, traveling by air or rental car rather than their own cars.

Vacation guests have more time to use recreational facilities such as indoor pools and to read magazines found in their rooms. The study suggests they are more likely to spend their evenings out on the town, while businesss travelers will relax by watching TV in their rooms.

While it might seem that the vacationer would have breakfast in bed, it's actually the business traveler, pressed for time, who is more likely to take room service — twice as often as the guest with more leisure.

Slightly more than half of both groups request accommodations other than a standard room with two double beds. However, more business travelers prefer a room with a single king-size bed, while vacation travelers are more likely to ask for adjoining rooms.

Business guests are more apt to watch free in-room movies, make long distance phone calls and use the telephone wake-up service, as well as ask for room service more frequently.

"Growing up in the Boys Club was a great opportunity for me. It gave me a place to go after school and definitely kept me out of trouble. The Boys Club experience has guided me on the right path to success; therefore, I urge others to help in whatever way possible."

Karl Reagan, Retired

"I have been gratified in so many ways to serve the youth. I've learned that life is very precious and has a meaning that only a young person can express. Seeing the young people with whom I've worked, graduate from high school and, in turn, give back something to the community is all the reward I'll ever want. I care because they need care."

Peggy Calderon, Collateral Auditor at First RepublicBank, Midland

"The Boy's Club has so much to offer today's youth. I think Midland needs to be more aware of its existence. Working with these children is an extremely rewarding experience."

To continue to meet the needs of boys and girls, The Boys Club of Midland needs your time and financial support. Call 683-5297, for more information.
