Single mothers fly solo through hectic days

She barely opened her sleepy eyes enough to see the clock read 6:40 a.m. She jumped out of bed frantically realizing she had overslept. Again.

This morning she couldn't afford to be late. She had an important date, with a 5-year-old.

As she started the shower she mentally went over her plans for the day. She took a deep breath and jumped in the steaming stall for a few peaceful minutes of calm before the storm.

As she approached the school she caught sight of other busy mothers, navigating up and down the block, anxiously searching for a parking place as the precious minutes ticked away. She finally found a spot for her dirty car, but hesitated a moment as she realized the gas gauge indicated her car, much like her life, was empty and needed refueling.

She escorted her excited little boy into the school and forced a smile she hoped would hide the wrinkles that had started forming around her eyes. Although she wanted to share his excitement, her mind drifted back home to the dirty dishes piled in the sink, the dirty clothes waiting to be laundered, the stack of bills she knew she couldn't pay and to the unmade bed in which she longed to be sleeping.

Oilmen expect resentment of energy policy

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Members of the oil and gas industry say they are expecting a strong backlash from "the liberal media and the left" when President Bush unveils his comprehensive national energy policy later this week.

"I am certain there will be a backlash," said Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "I am sure that many will claim that Vice President (Dick) Cheney, President Bush and Secretary of Commerce Don Evans are all Texas oilmen, and that they have dreamed up a supply-side energy plan just to benefit the oil industry."

'Liberals always like to talk about conservation and never supply, but we cannot correct California's problem or any other problem without supply.'

— Don Sparks, regional vice president for the Independent Petroleum Association of America

For those who feel that way, Burns said they need only to look at California. "You can only meet demand with supply," Burns said of the rolling blackouts that have occurred there.

Don Sparks, regional vice president for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said the industry was already seeing signs of the backlash in statements made recently by Gov. Gray Davis. The California governor last week in a news interview, accused Texas of hoarding natural gas to drive up prices in California.

"We can expect more such statements and most of them will revolve around supply or conservation and the environment," Sparks said.

"The fact is California has put themselves in a jam because they didn't want to address supply problems. Liberals always like to talk about conservation and never supply, but we cannot correct California's problem or any other problem without supply."

Because of the anticipated backlash, Burns said when the policy is announced all the oil and gas associations in Texas plan to have individual press conferences across the state to put a positive spin on the policy.

"The liberal media and Democrats will immediately come out and attack anything in the policy," Burns predicted.

Midland oilman John Hampton agreed: "I think the liberal media will try to totally discredit the Bush energy policy. They don't like the oil industry at all. They will do what they have always done."

High gasoline prices not expected to have impact on Wall Street

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Though the traditional summer driving season has yet to get under way, motorists are already seeing surges in gasoline prices and there has even been talk of prices rising as high as $3 a gallon.

While rising gasoline prices may hit individual pocketbooks, they are expected to have little, if any, impact on Wall Street.

"It depends on how much rising gasoline prices affect consumer spending," explained Kyle Cooper, vice president and energy analyst with Solomon Smith Barney in Houston. "Gasoline expenditures overall are a very small portion of a household's expenditures, yet they act as a tax and reduce disposable income available for other things. That could lower consumer spending and that could trickle down into lower profits and lower the stock market."

Local financial advisor Tim Bryson said he doesn't see any impact on the stock market other than rising gasoline prices would increase profits for oil companies, especially refiners, making them more attractive to investors.

Even natural gas prices at $10 per thousand cubic feet during the winter did not affect the markets, he pointed out, although he said if gasoline prices remained high for a prolonged period, say eight months to a year, "you would see people making decisions on gas mileage and bring to the front alternative sources like electric cars and fuel cells. People are already asking about fuel cell companies."

Overall, agreed Kate Warne, energy analyst for Edward Jones in St. Louis, "rising prices at the pump should be moderately good news for energy stocks, primarily refiners" like Exxon Mobil, the nation's largest refiner, and even Valero, which will be come the nation's second largest refiner if it is successful in acquiring Ultramar Diamond later this year.

Gasoline prices have begun rising in advance of driving season, which is considered to begin Memorial Day, because of concerns about shortages and because supplies are at historic lows. Adding to those concerns are the fact that different cities require different blends of gasoline and there may be difficulties getting those different blends to the various cities.

Despite speculation prices could soar as high as $3, Ms. Warne does not see prices rising much above present levels, though she expects volatility during the summer.

"I would expect we will see drivers cutting down on their driving to some extent," she said. "Prices will be volatile over the summer. Worries about shortages will send prices up, then they'll fall back

Summer not all just fun, games for high school, college students

Saralee Huntsman
Copy Editor

While summer break may mean water fights and bike rides for younger children, it is often all work and little play for high school and college students.

With classes adjourned until fall, summer becomes a time to earn money for books, tuition, clothes, cars and insurance. Employers at entertainment facilities and retail stores say they are always looking for employees, but they increase their summer staff to fill demand during the peak summer season.

"Although we are open year-round, our busiest season is during summer so we at least double the number of our employees," said Lois Powers, majority owner of Putt Putt Golf & Games.

But for most, the question is not if there are jobs, it is where to start looking.

Most students will look at places in Midland like Putt Putt or fast food chains for a summer job. John Younger, 23, a student at Midland College, is looking to add a second job to earn more money this summer. Younger, who currently works part time at Permian Pool Shoppe, has recently applied for a job at Outback Steakhouse. Younger said he wanted a second job because with classes out, life is less stressful for him and he has more free time.

"When I was young, summer was a time to hang out and go on vacation, but now summer is a time to make money, but also have fun," he said. "It's not hard to find a job. If you're willing to work, you are going to find something out there."

Employers agree it isn't hard for students to find summer employment if they have strong work ethics. They also say the interview process is the most crucial step to obtaining a job.

Delay draws out tension for those looking for McVeigh's end

By Kelly Kurt
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — In a place where the hurt goes on, surfacing like the angry bits of glass that some bombing survivors still pluck from their scalps, the execution stood as the end — at last — of Timothy McVeigh.

The grandmother rearing her daughter's orphans ached to see it. The grieving husband just wanted to know it was over. The man whose ears still ring with McVeigh's bomb hoped never to hear from the bomber again.

But survivor Calvin Moser expects he will, now that an FBI blunder has given McVeigh another month to live.

"I was really hoping I could get up on the 17th and not worry about it," said Moser, who was 6 inches from a window when the bomb shattered it, sending a spray of glass into his head. "I'd like to have that book closed."

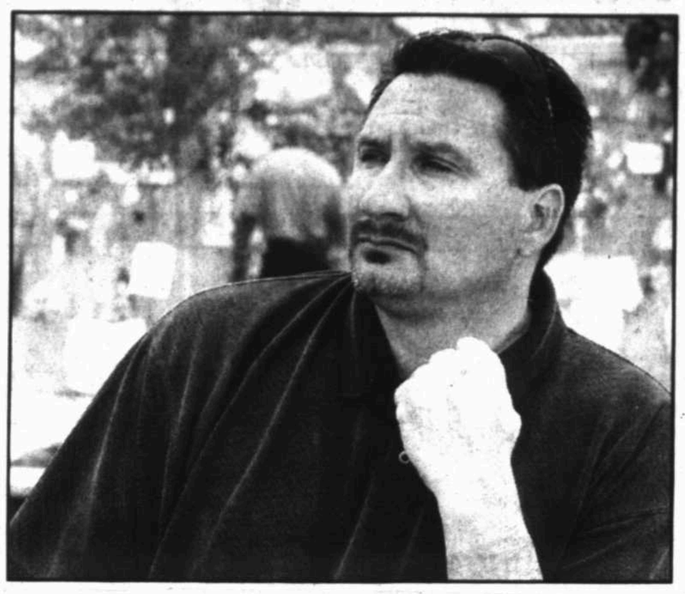

McVeigh was scheduled to be executed in Terre Haute, Ind., on Wednesday for the 1995 bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City that killed 168 people, including 19 children.

But Attorney General John Ashcroft postponed the execution until June 11 on Friday, a day after the FBI revealed it had failed to turn over thousands of documents to McVeigh's defense team.

Some noted the FBI's discovery of 3,135 documents that should have been given to McVeigh's lawyers made the delay necessary.

'I don't have any interest in hearing what he has to say. It will only be hurtful. I really don't even care if he says he's sorry.'

— Lyle Cousins, whose wife, Kim, was killed

But as much as they didn't expect the execution of McVeigh to end their pain, they wanted it over with. Many just wanted him shut up.

"I don't have any interest in hearing what he has to say. It will only be hurtful," said Lyle Cousins, whose wife, Kim, was killed. "I really don't even care if he says he's sorry."

McVeigh's recent talk of the dead children as "collateral damage" — a military term for necessary losses during war — and his disappointment over having failed to bring the whole building down makes survivor Glenda Riley madder than she'd like him to know.

"That would have meant I would be a chair instead of a name on the wall," she said, referring to the 168 chairs representing the dead at the Oklahoma City National Memorial Center museum, which opened earlier this year near the site of the bombing.

Riley thinks McVeigh's death might help in dealing with the loss of 35 co-workers and friends, though she knows it will not make it all better.

Martha Ridley has been raising her two granddaughters alone since her daughter, Kathy, was killed in the bombing. She said she plans to be in line to see a closed circuit broadcast of McVeigh's execution, whenever it occurs. Seeing it will make it real, she said.

"I want this to all be over with," Ridley said. "The man has admitted he did it. He's got a price to pay for his grandstanding and his ego-tripping and the people he hurt."

Others are tired of talking about it. The media calls come incessantly now. As much as Rosemary Koelsch would like to share her slain daughter, Valerie, with the world, she's worn out from the pain talking about her brings.

"It still makes us sad because it reaffirms the loss," she said.

Jim Denny plans to take his children, Brandon and Rebecca, to school as usual on the day of the execution. The children, who were in a day care center in the building during the bombing, have told him they think McVeigh is going to heaven "because God is all-forgiving."

Patrick Reeder said he waited 15 days for searchers to find the body of his wife, Michelle, and her mother, Carolyn Ann Kreymborg, in the pit of the broken building. He understands why he'll have to wait again for the execution, but he is ready to get it over with.

"From a legal standpoint they kind of have to do it, don't they? They have to give them a chance," he said. "It's just going to be hard to go through again."

Report: New program for homeless cuts hospital, jail costs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A pilot mental health program targeting homeless people has reduced California's hospital and jail costs by millions of dollars, according to a legislative report.

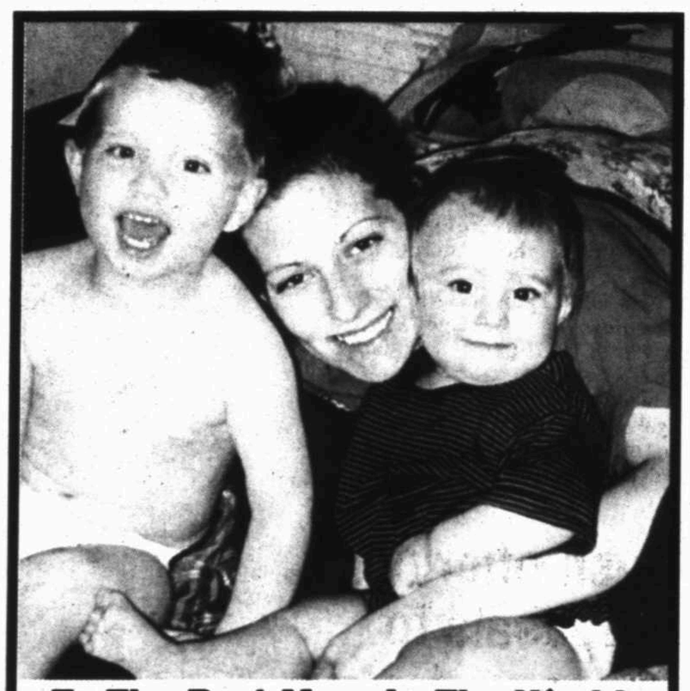

The state's Community Mental Health Treatment Program has enrolled more than 1,100 participants in Los Angeles, Sacramento and Stanislaus counties since November 1999, saving more than $7.3 million.

Through a combination of aggressive outreach, less debilitating medications, and help with housing, job training and money management, the program has reduced homelessness and increased treatment among participants, the study said.

"What we're doing is beginning to fulfill a promise of a generation ago to actually build a community-based mental health care system," said Assemblyman Darrell Steinberg, who wrote the legislation creating the program.

State officials are expanding the program to 32 other cities and counties and have boosted funding from $14 million to $55 million.

Blunders in big cases plague Federal Bureau of Investigation

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It's happened before, the FBI fumbling high-profile cases.

Now, it turns out that the FBI also dropped the ball on the Oklahoma City bombing, the largest terrorist attack in U.S. history, by failing to turn over files and physical evidence to Timothy McVeigh's attorneys.

That disclosure prompted Attorney General John Ashcroft on Friday to delay the convicted bomber's execution, scheduled for Wednesday, until June 11.

In recent years, the bureau failed to notice a Russian spy within its ranks, accused the wrong man in the bombing at the Atlanta Olympics and botched its investigation of a government scientist who handled nuclear weapons secrets.

With word of the new misstep, President Bush and Ashcroft were evasive when asked whether they still had confidence in the FBI. "I'm obviously concerned about an incident where documents have been misplaced. But I withhold judgment until I find out the full facts," Bush said at a news conference Friday.

Less circumspect was Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa: "We must change the FBI culture that has caused these colossal mistakes," Grassley, a senior member of the Judiciary Committee, said in a statement.

The committee will review nominees to replace FBI Director Louis Freeh, who is retiring in June.

"I want to know that the next FBI director is committed to sweeping changes," Grassley said.

Danny Coulson, a lead investigator with the FBI's hostage rescue team who took McVeigh into federal custody, said the incident creates a perception problem for the bureau. But, he added, "I'm sure there's nothing (in the documents) that changes the outcome of the case."

The FBI blames the problem on a computer glitch. Grassley is not so sure.

"We saw documents suddenly disappear in the Waco, TWA Flight 800 and Wen Ho Lee cases," Grassley said. "FBI careers are made in high-profile cases, and this is the fourth time in recent years where evidence has belatedly appeared. We have to be careful that withholding evidence is not done simply to win a case."

Kris Kolesnik, director of the National Whistleblower Center, a Washington-based nonprofit public interest organization, said the recent blunders reflect what he contended was the FBI's tendency to emphasize public relations over pure science or good investigative technique.

"The culture is driven by image — don't embarrass the bureau, make the bureau look good," he said.

On the positive side, State Department officials are praising the way the FBI was able to penetrate a spy ring that Cuba had operated in Florida. Five alleged spies are on trial in Miami on charges of espionage and of involvement in the 1996 MiG attack on a Miami-based unarmed plane north of Cuba. Four Cuban-Americans were killed in the incident.

But success stories like this have been overshadowed by a series of missteps:

■ In February, Robert Philip Hanssen, a 20-year agent at the FBI, was accused of selling national secrets to Moscow. Hanssen carried on his alleged spying activities for 15 years without being detected by his bosses.

■ Salvati of Boston spent 30 years in prison for a murder he did not commit even though the FBI had evidence of his innocence. Salvati was freed in January after a judge concluded that FBI agents hid testimony that would have cleared Salvati because they wanted to protect an informant.

■ Last year, the FBI botched an investigation of Wen Ho Lee, the Los Alamos National Laboratory scientist who was indicted on 59 criminal counts of mishandling nuclear weapons secrets. Lee spent nine months in solitary confinement. All but one count was eventually dropped.

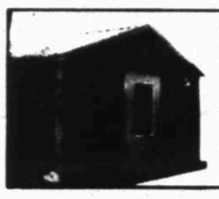

■ In 1999, the General Accounting Office said a report by the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms, which pointed early on to the explosion of a center fuel tank as the cause of the 1996 crash of TWA Flight 800, was never forwarded to the National Transportation Safety Board. The ATF provided the report to the FBI, but the FBI never sent it the safety board, the GAO said.

■ The FBI targeted Richard Jewell in the bombing at the 1996 Summer Games that killed one person and injured more than 100 others. Jewell was cleared three months later.

■ In the mid-1990s, the FBI suffered an embarrassing investigation of its world-renowned crime lab. Justice Inspector General Michael Bromwich criticized the lab for flawed scientific work and inaccurate, pro-prosecution testimony in major cases, including the Oklahoma City bombing.

■ In July, former Missouri Sen. John Danforth said an FBI lawyer "goofed" in not telling superiors in 1996 that federal agents fired pyrotechnic tear gas canisters into David Koresh's Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas. Four agents and more than 80 Davidians died during a 51-day standoff with federal officials.

■ During a 1992 standoff in Ruby Ridge, Idaho, an FBI agent fatally shot white separatist Randy Weaver's wife, Vicki, while she held her 10-month-old baby.

Bush offering proposals to conserve fuel

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush offered a package of tax incentives and other ideas Saturday for saving fuel and power in homes, industry and on the road. The steps appeared aimed at blunting criticism that his overall energy policy favors production over conservation.

This week, he said in his radio address, a Cabinet-level task force led by Vice President Dick Cheney "will introduce a comprehensive energy plan to bring new supplies of energy to the market, and we will be encouraging Americans to use more wisely the energy supplies that exist today."

Bush is seeking tax credits for buyers of hybrid gas-electric vehicles and incentives to promote high-technology solutions to energy shortages.

The president spoke of "a new kind of conservation, a 21st century conservation that harnesses new technology to squeeze as much out of a barrel of oil as we have learned to squeeze out of a computer chip."

The administration will recommend tax changes and eased regulations to promote the development of power plants that produce both electricity and heat, and thereby use less energy.

Hybrid gas-electric vehicles, which are beginning to come on the market, can get three times the fuel efficiency of most conventional gas-powered vehicles. The White House is seeking to make buying them more attractive by expanding a current 10 percent tax credit for all-electric vehicles so it includes the new gas-electric hybrids. The tax credit would be available from 2002 to 2007.

Perry Como dies at 87

MIAMI (AP) — Perry Como, the crooning baritone barber famous for his relaxed vocals, cardigan sweaters and television Christmas specials, died Saturday after a lengthy illness.

Como died in his sleep at his home in Jupiter Inlet Beach Colony, his daughter Terry Thibadeau said. Some sources listed Como's age as 88; others said he was 87.

"We spent two beautiful hours (Friday) with dad, me and my grandson, Holden," Thibadeau told The Palm Beach Post. "We shared ice cream. It was a wonderful moment for us."

The charming Italian-American whose name became synonymous with mellow performed through seven decades, starting in the 1930s. His idol, the late singer Bing Crosby, once called Como "the man who invented casual."

Como left his job as a steel town barber to sing with big bands in the 1930s and his songs were a mainstay of radio and jukeboxes in the late 1940s. He helped pioneer variety shows on the new medium of television in the 1950s and performed on television specials over the last four decades. His music remained popular in recent years on easy-listening radio.

In 1945, Como had his first million-selling hit, "Till the End of Time." It was among many songs including "Prisoner of Love" that topped the charts. He competed with Frank Sinatra and Crosby to be the era's top crooner.

While Como emulated Crosby in his early years, some of his best-known numbers were light novelty songs like "Hot Diggity" and "Papa Loves Mambo." He made a brief foray into wartime movie musicals in Hollywood, but decided to pursue a career in radio.

Como often said he far preferred singing romantic ballads to some of the lightweight numbers, but the novelty songs were a frequent audience request.

"They get tired of hearing 'Melancholy Baby' and those mushy things," Como said in a 1994 interview. "But those are the songs that, as a singer, you love to sing."

Some music experts say Como, with his naturally melodic baritone voice, might have carved a deeper niche if he had taken firmer control of his material.

Will Friedwald, author of "Jazz Singing" and an expert of music from Como's era, once called Como "a marvelous singer" who "seemed to do everything they put in front of him."

Como made his television debut in 1948 on NBC's "The Chesterfield Supper Club" and in 1950 he switched to CBS for "The Perry Como Show," which ran for five years. Como then returned to NBC for a variety show that ran for eight years, first on Saturday nights opposite Jackie Gleason, then on Tuesday night.

In 1963, he gave up the regular television show and began doing occasional specials. Rock 'n' roll had crowded out the crooners who once charmed hordes of screaming bobby-soxers.

His career saw a resurgence in the 1970s with songs like "It's Impossible," "And I Love You So" and several best-selling Christmas albums. In 1987, President Reagan presented Como with a Kennedy Center award for outstanding achievement in the performing arts.

In 1994, Como put out a three-CD boxed set including his most popular songs since he started recording in 1943. And his former hit, "Catch a Falling Star" — for which Como won a Grammy in 1958 — became familiar to a new generation of fans when it became part of the Clint Eastwood-Kevin Costner movie "A Perfect World."

Como said he occasionally tired of the jokes about his somnambulant style, although he found a skit on the SCTV comedy show particularly amusing. The spot showed a Como impersonator lying on the floor nearly comatose with a microphone in front of his barely moving lips as dancers leaped about him.

His casual legend grew from his first pressure-packed appearances on the pioneering medium of live television — with its crashing scenery, misplaced cue cards and camera confusion.

"I decided the only thing to do was take it as it came," he recalled in a 1985 interview. "People wrote in asking how I could be so casual. It all started to grow."

Pierino Roland Como was born May 18, 1913, in Canonsburg, Pa., the middle offspring of 13 children of Italian immigrants.

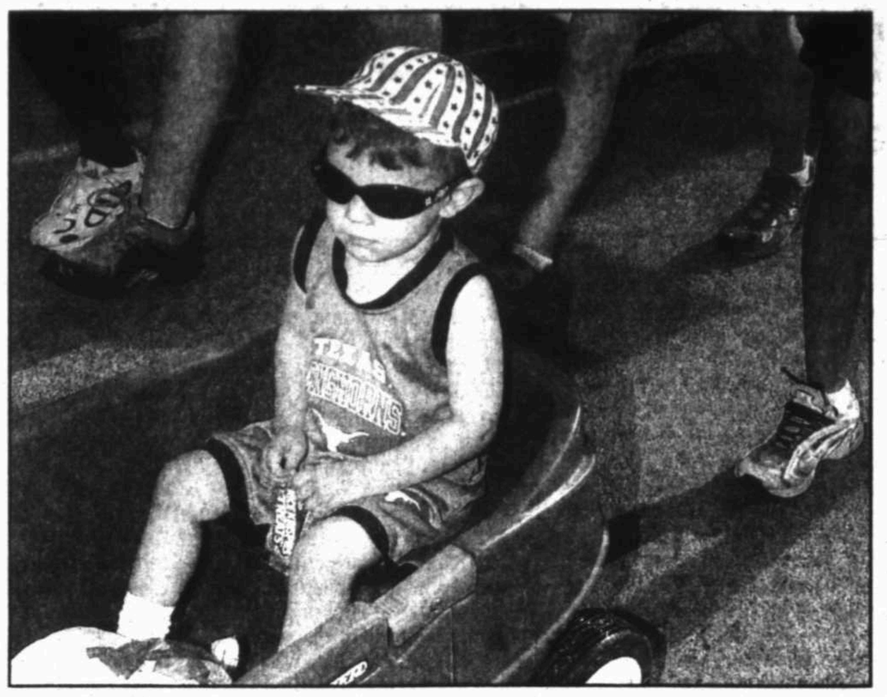

At age 11, he went to work sweeping floors after school at a barbershop in the town just south of Pittsburgh. He got lessons on how to cut the hair of coal miners and other workers, and by the age of 14 he had his own barber business earning $150 a week. His pay dropped off during the Depression when he went to work for another barber.

But he got an offer to sing with Freddie Carlone's band in Cleveland in the early 1930s. He began his rise in show business when he was signed to sing with Ted Weems big band in 1936, a relationship that continued for six years.

In 1943, he began what turned into a 50-year contract with RCA-Victor Records with the recording of the song "Goodbye Sue."

In his later years, Como lived in a private semiretirement with his wife Roselle, whom he met at a picnic when he was 16 and married in 1933. They divided their time between the North Carolina mountains and the Palm Beach County town of Jupiter where he played golf, took long, brisk walks and entertained his grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Mrs. Como died in August 1998, less than two weeks after she and Como celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary. She was 84.

MOMS: Single parents often carry burden alone winding line with an over-anxious child, she finally receives her muffin and coffee and sits down to enjoy it in the company of her smiling son.

She was trying to carry on polite conversation with the other mothers, but kept stealing a glance at her watch. Time is money. And she was desperate for both.

Finally breakfast was over and mother and son, Mary Farmington and little Nathan, went their separate ways, thankful for the opportunity to spend some much needed quality time together.

The hustle and bustle of life may seem overwhelming to most people, but for single mothers who climb the daily mountain of responsibility and continuously play the game of beat the clock, it's a special challenge. They are solo competitors.

"Mom" plays the role of father, cook, maid, chauffeur, therapist, doctor, bread winner, friend and disciplinarian.

"It's not easy being the good guy and the bad guy" said Caren Pagett, a single mother of three. "But the hardest role is being a single financial provider."

Ms. Pagett said although single mothers have the responsibility of playing a number of roles, they have the privilege of seeing the rewards of their hard work.

"You get to see them make their first home run, but you have to deal with a lot of scraped-up knees along the way," said Ms. Pagett.

Another mother, Denise Perkins, also copes with the challenges of single motherhood, but she savors every moment with her two children, Laree and Blaize.

"There are days when you don't get it all done," she quickly acknowledged. "You just go to bed and don't worry about it."

As any parent can attest, children have many needs. Whether it's financial, emotional or a ride to baseball practice, one thing all parents have in common is sacrifice.

However, single parents often carry the burden alone.

Adding to her busy lifestyle, Ms. Perkins works as the district office representative to State Sen. Teel Bivins. It is her job to keep the senator informed of his constituents' needs. She has held that job for the past 3 1/2 years and feels fortunate her job gives her the flexibility to work around her children's schedule.

"One of the biggest keys to my peace of mind is to have a job that allows me to be successful on my own," she said.

Ms. Perkins celebrated her 42nd birthday on May 5.

To compensate for her busy life, Ms. Perkins has developed her own philosophy. She believes life doesn't turn out the way you plan anyway, so why sweat it?

"Life happens while you're making other plans," she said with a laugh.

Although her life is focused around her children, she has to pay the bills. In order to do that, Ms. Pagett works for Western National Bank as an administrative assistant.

"This is the best job I've ever had." Ms. Pagett said. "I have really good people to work with."

Ms. Pagett said she works with a number of single mothers and they all help each other out from time to time.

"If I ever have a conflict with my schedule, I know I can rely on some of the girls in my office to help me out," she said. "And I would do the same for them."

This 40-year-old hits the ground running every morning. And between dropping off Katie, Douglas and Mark to school, her job at the bank, orthodontist appointments, church choir, T-ball practice, volleyball practice, soccer practice, homework, dinner and laundry, she is lucky to find any free time for herself.

"My greatest challenge is making sure that everyone gets to do everything they want to do," said Ms. Pagett.

Although parents would like to shape their children into the perfect person, most parents realize that is an impossible dream. There is simply not enough time in the world and for a single mom who is overloaded already, it is simply not an option.

"Pick your battles," Ms. Pagett said. "And fight the battles worth fighting."

What would Ms. Pagett like for Mother's Day?

(From 1A)

B.J. Elliott, manager at Putt Putt Golf & Games, said he considers the first impression to be the greatest impression.

"The best day they are going to look good is the day they apply for the job," Elliott said. "Kids need to make good eye contact and dress professionally."

He said some teen-agers come in with tongue rings and other body piercings that don't fit the image of a family-oriented place — an image they strive to maintain at Putt Putt.

Lyndsey Yarbrough, 21, who is majoring in horticulture, passed Elliott's interview and is now one of Putt Putt's newest employees. "I needed to find a summer job to pay for books and tuition, but other places I looked at were filling up. I guess it was meant for me to work here."

College students have an advantage over high school kids because classes end earlier and they are able to apply for jobs sooner. Employers like Elliott and Linda Jorgensen, Sears' general store manager, strongly encourage high school students to start looking for summer jobs now. Ms. Jorgensen said Sears is currently accepting applications and she has already begun hiring high school students.

"With our regular employees taking vacations during the summer, we try to hire students looking for a summer job," Ms. Jorgensen said. "We also hire a lot of people who are part time who like the job and stay on when school starts, and we try our best to work around their schedules."

Some students like Clay Cauble, 17, who is enrolled at Midland High School, opt to look outside of Midland for work. Cauble will be working as a camp counselor at Camp Longhorn at LBJ Lake near Austin.

"I'm going to be leaving for school soon and the more time I take to find more responsibility will help me out in the long run," said Cauble, explaining his reasons for wanting to leave Midland for work. "And it will be nice to get out of town."

Lauren Logan, 17, who is on the Midland High School cheerleading squad, will be teaching at cheerleading camps in the Dallas and Austin area this summer. Even though this is her first summer to work, she says she is looking forward to the experience.

"I love cheerleading and I really want to get out of the house. It will give me a taste of what it's going to be like when I'm in college," Miss Logan said.

While some students are leaving Midland to get a job, other students attending universities outside of Midland will be returning home to family, friends and work.

Tiffany Carroll, 19, a freshman at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, said she can save more money working at home in Midland where the rent and food are free.

"I look at summer now as a time to catch up financially and prepare for the next school year," Miss Carrol said.

Time is a crucial element in job searching. Summer jobs may be numerous but so are the applicants. Both Elliott and Ms. Jorgensen say they want most of their employees hired and trained before Memorial Day weekend — summer's first holiday and a prime shopping day.

While for some students the push to save up money for school or loans may be stressful, most students looking for summer jobs say they just want extra money to buy clothes or even their own car.

"I don't think students have the pressure to find a job, they just want more independence and more spending money," Ms. Jorgensen said. "They just want to say 'Hey, I can do this.' It's a good growing experience for them and it helps them better understand how the world works."

BACKLASH: Stoltz says neglect has peaked

(From 1A)

Tom Mitchell, with West Texas Drilling Fluids in Midland, also said he expected a strong backlash. "They will obviously try to shoot holes in the energy policy."

Danny Beggs, a Kansas oilman and past president of the National Stripper Well Association, said he thought Bush was right to put supply first.

"I think the president will be more pro-conservation down the line, but right now he has to get the rigs running and increase supply," Beggs said.

Bob Williamson, sales representative for MI Drilling fluid in Midland, said he didn't think the full extent of the Bush energy plan had been revealed. "I think he has some conservation measures, but the important thing is to increase supply."

Beggs, who has testified before Congress on behalf of the oil industry many times, said he feels Bush may have had to focus strongly on supply to get attention for an energy policy in Washington D.C. "When you are trying to get the attention of Congress, it takes a real strong stance."

Beggs said one way or another, now or later, conservation would have to be addressed in a U.S. energy policy.

"We will have to have conservation," said Midland oilman Deane Stoltz, a board member of Save Domestic Oil. "The Europeans have proved that conservation works, but they did it in the face of $4.50 per gallon gasoline."

Stoltz said the neglect of an energy policy by both Democratic and Republican administrations and Congress over the past 25 years was a sad commentary on our government. "All that neglect has now peaked at this point in time, and President George W. Bush must deal with it."

PRICES: Bryson points out need for policy down when reports come out saying there's enough gasoline."

The only way prices will rise to the $2-3 level for an extended period of time, she said, will be if a refinery shuts down unexpectedly or if a pipeline runs into problems.

"If the system functions properly, we will see prices at their same level," she said.

As the summer driving season ends in the fall, she said, prices will fall again.

But, she added, "the system is tight and we won't be seeing $1 gasoline any time soon."

Bryson said that concerns about gasoline supplies and anger over high prices "brings to the forefront that we need an energy policy."

Freedom Riders gather for 40th anniversary trip

By Bob Johnson
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Police looked the other way 40 years ago when Freedom Riders were viciously beaten in Birmingham on Mother's Day. But on Saturday, a bus caravan marking the anniversary of the event was given a royal police escort.

"The times they are a changing," said Hank Thomas, who was on the bus that was burned 40 years ago when it arrived in Anniston. "I just hope this means blacks and whites in Alabama will hate each other no more."

About 150 people, including several original Freedom Riders, left Atlanta Saturday morning to retrace part of the historic route where violent mobs of segregationists had awaited them in Anniston, Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.

Mayor Bernard Kincaid greeted the Freedom Riders when they arrived at the Greyhound bus station here. Kincaid, who is black, said he owes his political success to blood shed by the Freedom Riders.

"We know the hate you faced 40 years ago," Kincaid said. "I realize full well that I stand squarely on your shoulders."

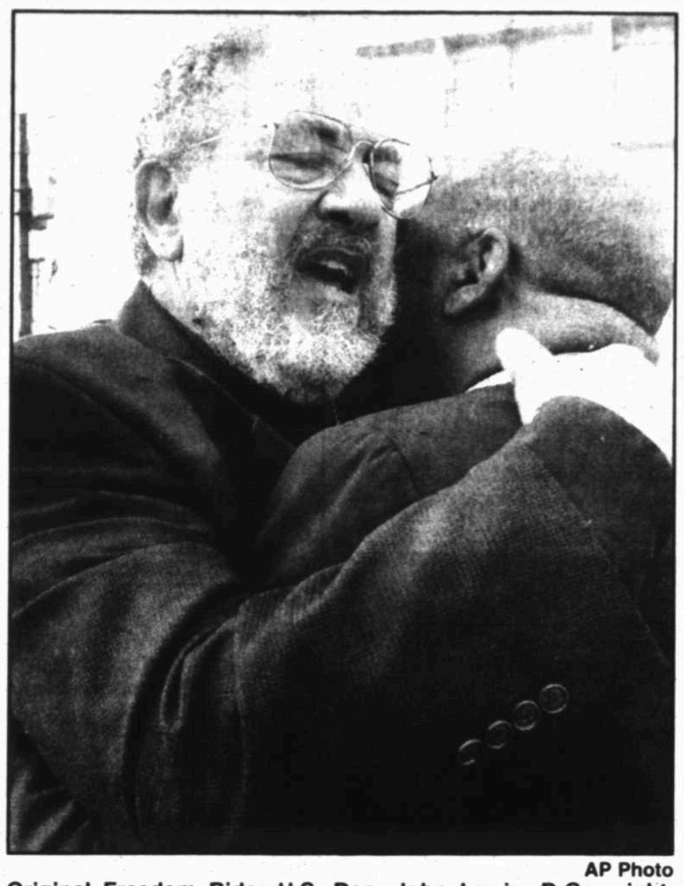

The Freedom Riders, mostly college students, set out in May 1961 to ride from Washington to New Orleans to test a Supreme Court ruling banning racial segregation on interstate public transportation. At segregated bus stations, black riders tried to use white waiting rooms and bathrooms, while whites tried to use facilities set aside for blacks.

When the riders were beaten and arrested along the way, hundreds more joined the campaign. Eventually more than 1,000 people took part.

The commemorative trip to Birmingham Saturday was bittersweet for Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., one of the leaders of the biracial group of Freedom Riders in 1961. He described for a crowd of about 200 people what happened when his bus arrived in Montgomery 40 years ago.

"We started off the bus and stepped down the steps. It was so quiet it was eery. Then the mob came out of nowhere. First, they turned on the press, then on us, and we were beaten," Lewis said.

Before leaving Birmingham for Montgomery, the riders stopped at the Civil Rights Institute, where several people wept as they viewed a replica of a bus that was burned in Anniston.

Ed Blankenheim, a 27-year-old student at the University of Arizona at the time, lost four teeth in the melee in Anniston. He knew what he was getting into when he joined the ride, he said Saturday, but that didn't deter him.

"I was in the Marines in South Carolina when Truman desegregated the military, but I knew my black friends and I couldn't go into town together," said Blankenheim, who is white. "It just struck me as too terrible for words. So when the call came for riders, I went."

Jim Zwerg was a young, white college student from Wisconsin when he and Lewis, then a young black student from Nashville, were beaten as they tried to integrate a white waiting room in the Montgomery bus station. Zwerg provided a light touch amid the seriousness of the event.

"I don't recall our buses being air conditioned, do you?" he joked.

Although he remembers the blows that fractured his teeth and cracked three vertebrae, Zwerg does not focus on them now as he reunites with some of his fellow travelers.

"The bond of love that we had then," he said, "it's still with us."

Cancer drug showing promise

By Daniel Haney
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A precisely aimed new drug that blocks cancer's ability to fuel its own growth is proving useful in terminally ill patients, encouraging doctors that decades of research into cancer biology is finally paying off.

Doctors said Saturday they expect the medicine to become a standard treatment for colon cancer and probably other tumors, as well.

The treatment jams up cancer's complex interplay of chemical growth signals, just one of the many details that make malignant cells different from normal ones. Billions have been spent understanding these differences in exhaustive detail, and the new drug is one of several emerging examples of a payoff from these insights.

Until now, most cancer drugs have indiscriminately attacked all rapidly growing tissue in the body in the hope they will kill more bad cells than good ones. Now, many drugs are in development that exclusively target the processes that make cancer unique.

The latest treatment, codenamed IMC-C225, produced no cures, but it did shrink tumors by at least half in nearly one-quarter of patients with end-stage colon cancer.

"In a population of patients where we would expect the response rate to be zero, this is incredibly exciting. It means a lot of new hope for people with this disease," said Dr. Leonard B. Saltz of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City.

Saltz presented the results of experimental use on 120 patients at a meeting in San Francisco of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

"It represents a new way of treating cancer," said Dr. Frank Haluska of Massachusetts General Hospital. "We now understand what makes cancer proliferate, and targets are being identified on this basis."

The mainstays of colon cancer treatment are the chemotherapy drugs 5-fluouracil, introduced in 1957, and irinotecan, also known as CPT-11, which was approved five years ago. The latest study was done on people who had failed to respond to either.

Panel urges regulation of tobacco, higher cigarette taxes

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The federal tax on cigarettes should increase by 17 cents per pack to pay tobacco farmers to stop growing the crop and the government should have the power to regulate tobacco products, a presidential commission recommends.

The White House said President Bush would study the report, scheduled to be released Monday in tobacco-growing communities in North Carolina and Kentucky. The report also will go to Congress.

Created in September by President Clinton, the 10-member commission of farmers, health advocates and economic experts explored ways to protect the public from smoking hazards and to give tobacco growers an economic incentive to switch crops.

The 17-cent increase in the current 34-cent per pack tax would raise $3.4 billion annually for the buyout of the tobacco-quota system, based on estimated yearly cigarette sales of 20.2 billion packs, according to the report obtained by The Associated Press.

The tax rose by 10 cents per pack in 2000 and is to climb by an additional nickel per pack next year.

The commission put the cost of the buyout at about $16 billion over five years if three-quarters of tobacco farmers stop growing the crop. After five years, dollars from the higher tax should pay for tobacco-prevention, smoking cessation programs and other public health initiatives, the report recommended.

Quotas are allotments dictating how much tobacco farmers can grow. The commission proposes to replace that system with production licenses, which, unlike quotas, could not be rented out to other farmers.

Ending that practice would put tobacco production in the hands of active growers only and lower production costs for many farmers, the report said.

Tobacco farmers in recent years have experienced steep cuts in the amount of tobacco they can grow, the result of declining cigarette sales and an increased reliance on cheaper tobacco from oversees.

The commission also urged giving the Food and Drug Administration more authority over the tobacco industry. The FDA, the report said, should be able to regulate advertising that might reach teen-agers and force tobacco companies to remove harmful or addictive substances such as nicotine from cigarettes.

The FDA asserted jurisdiction over tobacco and sought to crack down on cigarette sales to minors in 1996, but the Supreme Court last year ruled the agency needed congressional approval.

Commission member M. Cass Wheeler, chief executive officer of the American Heart Association, said he hoped the recommendations would be used "as a road map for passing legislation."

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said Bush "recognizes youth smoking is a particularly serious public health issue and the president believes strongly that we should focus on cracking down on youth or teen smoking."

A spokesman for the nation's largest cigarette maker, Philip Morris Inc., declined comment, saying the company had not seen the report. The company has developed its own proposal for FDA regulation, but commission members such as Wheeler say it is too weak.

Tommy Payne, a spokesman for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., said raising cigarette taxes was "a bad idea, and we would vigorously oppose it," according to the Winston-Salem (N.C.) Journal, which reported on the recommendations Saturday.

As for the tobacco buyout, tobacco farmer and commission member Jimmy Hill of Kinston, N.C., said many farmers would use the money to help them retire.

"We have been reduced to such a low level of production," he said. "We really need this buyout to allow many people to exit."

All current quota owners would get $8 per pound of tobacco they are eligible to grow. In addition, farmers who stop growing tobacco would receive $4 for every pound. Farmers who stay in the business would receive $2 a pound and would get a new production license.

The report also recommended that Congress establish an organization that could award grants and help growers become less dependent on tobacco.

Government statistics from 1997, the latest year that such data was collected, estimated there were about 90,000 tobacco farms in the United States. There were nearly 200,000 in 1978.

The states that produce the most tobacco in the United States are North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee.

FORT ATKINSON, Wis. — Evidence of the crash would be easy to miss at this intersection on a lonely stretch of two-lane highway, tucked amid the rolling green hills and dairy farms of southern Wisconsin.

Those who speed by — farmers, office workers, truck drivers — might not notice the skid marks that trail into muddy tire tracks down an embankment and into a barren corn field.

They might also miss the red spray paint used to scrawl a heart and a few words on the pavement of state Highway 18: "Danny, Court, Bridge, Ellen — We Love You." And the handmade crosses that mark this and other roadsides across the country where teens have died.

These are reminders that while school violence has grabbed the nation's attention, automobile crashes are the No. 1 killer of Americans ages 15 to 20, and have been for decades.

In this case, it was Daniel Kudlata, Courtney Ott, Bridget Polk and Ellen McGlynn — four teens from Fort Atkinson, who died April 20 on their way home from a dinner where they'd met their state's governor, Scott McCallum.

Officials say Kudlata, who was driving, apparently ran through a stop sign and into the path of a big rig. The truck broadsided their 1989 Honda Civic, dragging it into the field.

Three of the four teens were thrown from the car in what has become a painfully familiar scenario in Wisconsin. Last spring, a dozen teen-agers died in three separate crashes in the state.

The trend is much the same nationally. Though deaths and injuries have dropped in the last decade — and even dipped in the springtime due to frequent safe-driving campaigns aimed at prom and graduation time — thousands of driving-age teens still die in crashes each year.

In 1999, about 520,000 were injured and more than 4,900 died, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Alcohol was a factor in more than a third of the deaths.

In the Fort Atkinson case, however, sheriff's officials say alcohol and even speeding — another common factor in crashes — played no role. For whatever reason — inexperience, distractions, perhaps fog — Kudlata apparently didn't see the stop sign.

"It could've happened to anybody," Brad Butler, a 16-year-old who was good friends with Polk, says quietly as he pauses outside Fort Atkinson High School, where the American flag remained at half-staff nearly three weeks after the crash. "It's hard to accept."

Safety experts say the major factors that contribute to teen-age road deaths are easy to tally. Besides alcohol, drugs and speeding, they include such distractions as music, passengers and cell phones.

Add a general lack of driving experience to the mix and the risk of a crash becomes even greater, says Cheryl Neverman, NHTSA's youth program coordinator.

"We pay all this attention to school shootings," she says. "And yet young people die in their cars every day, every hour."

Some states are trying to address the problem.

More than half have driving curfews for teens. And 14 of them, from California to Indiana and New Jersey, have passenger limits for young drivers.

Wisconsin began restricting passengers — no more than one, unless they are family members — for new drivers last July. (The law didn't apply to Kudlata, who was 17 and got his license before the law was enacted).

Deadly crashes also have prompted some city governments and individuals to take matters into their own hands.

After five teens died and several others were critically injured in a February 1996 crash in Boca Raton, Fla., emergency room nurse Mary Russell applied for grant money to start one of the country's first "Safe Communities" crash-prevention projects at Florida Atlantic University.

A string of crashes prompted young people in Olney, Md., to organize pool parties and a "battle of the bands" to entice their peers to stay in town, instead of driving to nearby Washington in search of fun.

In Fort Atkinson, county officials might place "rumble strips" on some roadways to help alert drivers to upcoming stop signs.

In July, hundreds of teens will gather in Los Angeles to help federal officials develop safe driving campaigns — like an in-your-face bilingual TV ad campaign young Californians already helped state police design.

Some teens also are changing their personal driving habits. That includes Rebecca Willis, a 17-year-old from Decatur, Ga., who lost two friends in separate crashes last year.

"Every once in a while, I might go a little too fast," Willis says. "But when I have people in the car, I really think twice. I think about how I felt when those two great guys died."

The thought is much the same in Fort Atkinson, where many are still mourning the loss of the four students.

Friends say these were good people and class leaders — three of them members of the school's Young Republicans group who had posed for photos with the governor just hours before the crash.

Consumers show some confidence

Recent data suggests consumers in Midland and across the nation are feeling more confident about the economy these days.

Locally, we were thrilled to see that sales tax figures for the month of May were up 18.46 percent over the previous year. In all, we are up a little better than 6 percent for the year in sales tax receipts in our city.

Meanwhile on the national front, U.S. retail sales rose more than expected in April as business increased at auto dealers, building materials outlets and department stores, a government report showed. Sales at retailers rose 0.8 percent in April to $275.5 billion after falling a revised 0.4 percent in March, the Commerce Department said. Excluding automobiles, sales rose 0.7 percent after falling a revised 0.4 percent the previous month. The April sales increase, the first since January, has many economists suggesting that consumers are confident enough about their jobs and outlook for incomes to keep spending.

That's welcome news, as in so many ways consumers and their level of optimism drive our economy.

Can we keep going forward with this trend?

We can point to a few positive signs on the horizon.

First of all, our legislative bodies are very close to nailing down budget agreements both in Washington D.C. and in Austin. Once the budgets are solidified, the partisan rancor often cools down and we begin to focus on accomplishing the tasks at hand.

In the case of the federal budget, an agreement means we are drawing ever closer to a tax cut, which in this case will put more money in the hands of average Americans thereby continuing to fuel economic optimism.

Next week, President Bush is set to unveil his energy plan, and while it certainly isn't going to please everyone, Americans will have a set of objectives on which to focus.

Locally, there is terrific news on the economic front as Cingular Wireless continues to fill the hundreds of jobs it is creating with its new call center.

In Midland, we've suffered some tough times. But it looks as though the worst is over. It's time to focus on the future and the new opportunities which are ahead.

Today in History

Today is Sunday, May 13, the 133th day of 2001. There are 232 days left in the year. This is Mother's Day.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty years ago, on May 13, 1981, Pope John Paul II was shot and seriously wounded in St. Peter's Square by Turkish assailant Mehmet Ali Agca.

On this date:

In 1607, the English colony at Jamestown, Va., was settled.

In 1842, composer Sir Arthur Sullivan, who collaborated with Sir William Gilbert in writing 14 comic operas, was born in London.

In 1846, the United States declared that a state of war already existed against Mexico.

In 1917, three peasant children near Fatima, Portugal, reported seeing a vision of the Virgin Mary.

In 1918, the first U.S. airmail stamps, featuring a picture of an airplane, were introduced. (On some of the stamps, the airplane was printed upside-down, making them collector's items.)

In 1940, in his first speech as prime minister of Britain, Winston Churchill told the House of Commons, "I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears and sweat."

In 1958, Vice President Nixon's limousine was battered by rocks thrown by anti-U.S. demonstrators in Caracas, Venezuela.

In 1985, a confrontation between Philadelphia authorities and the radical group MOVE ended as police dropped an explosive onto the group's headquarters; 11 people died in the resulting fire.

Ten years ago: South African black activist Winnie Mandela and two co-defendants were convicted of abducting four young black men and keeping them at her Soweto home. (After an appeal, Mrs. Mandela was ordered to pay a fine.)

Five years ago: Recovery workers in the Florida Everglades retrieved the flight data recorder from ValuJet Flight 592. The Supreme Court unanimously struck down Rhode Island's ban on ads that list or refer to liquor prices, saying the law violated free-speech rights. A tornado killed more than 600 people in Bangladesh.

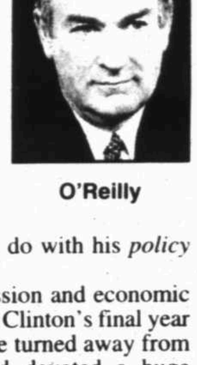

One year ago: Explosions at a fireworks warehouse in the Netherlands killed 22 people and injured nearly 1,000 others.

Thought for Today: "All that I am or hope to be I owe to my angel mother." — Abraham Lincoln.

Bill O'Reilly

Clinton's legacy is all talk, few results

There are times when I feel guilty for hammering Bill Clinton. He is a man who accomplished a miracle, rising up from humble beginnings in Hope, Ark., to become the most powerful person in the world. And he did it with little help. Mr. Clinton was raised primarily by his flamboyant mother, and although she adored him, she could offer him little in the way of worldly influence. I admire self-made people, and William Jefferson Clinton is all that. But that is where my admiration stops.

O'Reilly

We are all suffering right now because of Bill Clinton's presidency, and it has nothing to do with his moral failings. It has everything to do with his policy failings.

The current earnings recession and economic slowdown has its roots in Mr. Clinton's final year in office. During that time, he turned away from managing the economy and devoted a huge amount of time fund-raising for himself (the Clinton Library), his wife's senatorial campaign and the Democratic Party. Spurned by Al Gore, Mr. Clinton traveled not to deliver a political message, but to grab your wallet. His wanderings turned into a giant mobile flea market where he sold his time and presence for major dollars.

Mr. Clinton also became obsessed with brokering a peace agreement between the Israelis and the Palestinians. This, of course, led to nothing but more hatred and violence, as we are seeing now on a daily basis.

With the president's attention diverted, Alan Greenspan and his merry band inexplicably kept the U.S. money supply tight, even as manufacturing orders, especially in high-tech, were slowing drastically. There was no political pressure on the Fed to cut rates as Mr. Clinton was paying scant attention. Thus, in December, when Greenspan still declined to cut interest rates, the economic dam broke, and the waters of declining earnings flooded the stock market.

The bad economic news was compounded by the fact that Mr. Clinton never had an energy policy and allowed the OPEC nations to cut oil production without challenge. Energy prices soared, cutting into corporate profits and gutting the take-home pay of American workers. Mr. Clinton knew there weren't enough oil refineries in the United States but made no attempt to build any. He also knew that America's dependence on foreign oil was at an all-time high but failed to encourage consumers to conserve energy, because that might annoy his SUV-driving soccer mom base. Bill Clinton fiddled while oil and natural gas burned. And finally, the nation's most powerful state, California, simply ran out of power.

In his last days as president, Mr. Clinton signed a number of environmental orders but never once warned anybody about the growing scarcity of energy. To say he was pandering to the greens is a gross understatement.

Bill Clinton's education policies have also been a disaster. Despite a massive amount of federal spending, 60 percent of the nation's poor fourth-graders still can barely read. Mr. Clinton was a champion of educational spending but made no attempt to tie the money to performance. This endeared him to the teachers' unions but didn't do much for at-risk kids who desperately need discipline and learning standards.

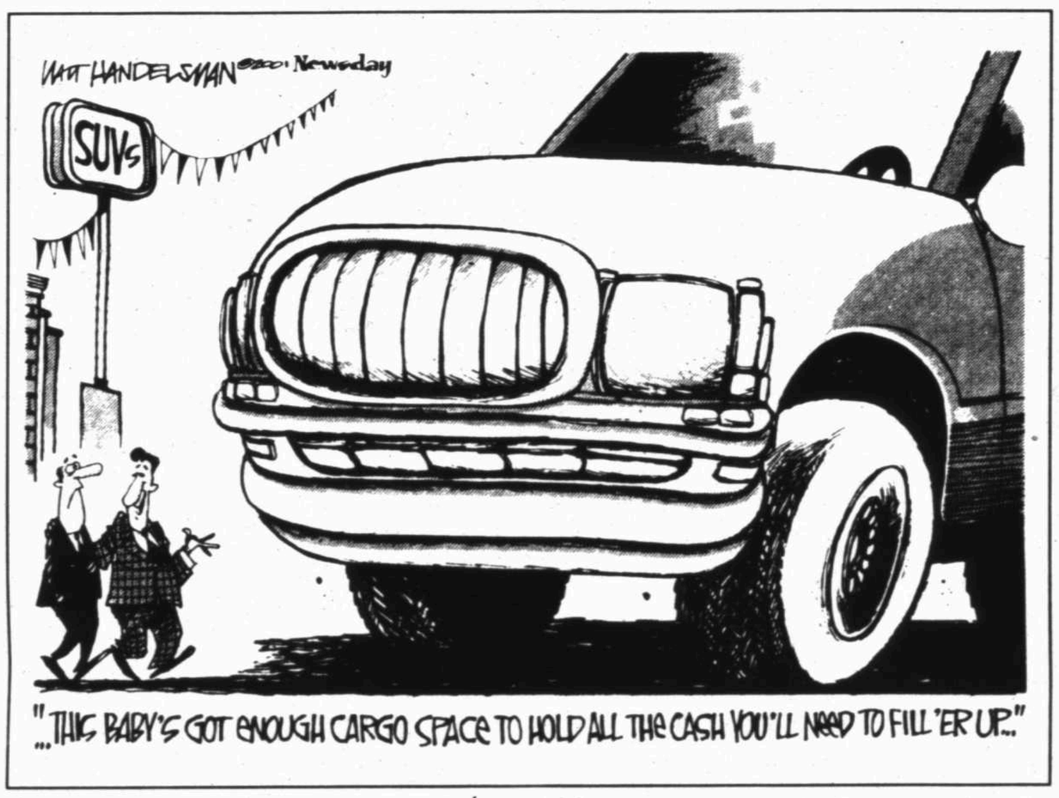

The second most at-risk group in America are poor seniors. And what did Mr. Clinton do for them? Drug prices are the highest they've ever been. Some seniors are still traveling to Mexico and Canada to get their prescriptions filled.

But prices for illegal drugs are the lowest they've ever been. Street heroin and cocaine are readily available all over the United States with no waiting. That's because narcotics continue to flood into this country while Bill Clinton and his drug czar, Gen. Barry McCaffrey, introduced absolutely no effective federal measures designed to cut either supply or demand. Mr. Clinton's NAFTA agreement with Mexico allowed for freer passage through our southern border. The "traffic" that ensued had little do with cars and trucks.

So there's your Clinton legacy, and you can take it over to Barbra Streisand's house and drop it on her lawn. The president wasted one full year lying about his sexcapades and another year asking people for money. The other six years he talked a really good game.

But talk is cheap and gas is not. If our cars and homes and stores ran on hot air, Bill Clinton might be right up there with Abe Lincoln.

Bush should listen to his little brother

After the Florida Legislature passed a package of election reforms last week, Gov. Jeb Bush admitted that last fall's embarrassing debacle had forced his state to act. "If we had not done it," he said, "shame on us." Too bad his brother the president does not have the same sense of shame.

The Supreme Court ruling that gave George Bush the White House said that the Florida recount violated the equal protection clause of the Constitution because every vote was not being treated the same. But now that he's safely in office, Bush has shown no interest in extending that same principle and protection to voters in other states.

His new budget includes no money for helping states modernize their equipment and procedures. And he's ignored a variety of proposals to study and suggest national voting standards. Says Tom Mann, an elections expert at the Brookings Institution: "The person who's missing here is the president."

Cokie & Steve Roberts

But he does not deserve all the blame. Congress has largely ignored the subject, mainly because ballot issues trigger sharp partisan differences. Democrats want every vote to count, and Republicans want every vote to count only once.

In addition, the issue lacks a visible and determined figure demanding action, the way Sen. John McCain has forced consideration of a campaign finance measure. "You need a constituency for this," says Trevor Potter, a former member of the Federal Election Commission. "Where's the squeaky wheel Congress is going to oil?"

Fortunately some states have not been so shortsighted, and there are small signs of progress around the country, if only because many local officials fear that they could be embarrassed next time. The Florida fiasco turned over a rock, revealing a mess of problems in the electoral system, and the most obvious is antiquated voting machines.

The new Florida law outlaws the infamous punch-card process and mandates use of optical scanners, a system resembling a multiple-choice test with a much lower error rate than punch cards. Also, the ballot format must be the same statewide; no local official would be allowed to come up with some brilliant scheme like the disastrous "butterfly" design in Palm Beach County.

Georgia has gone one step further, mandating the most advanced system by 2004: a computerized touch screen resembling an ATM. But there's a problem. Unlike Florida, Georgia provides no money to make the change, and the economic downturn is tightening purse strings in many states.

A third key area that needs fixing in many states is registration. Voters are routinely dropped from the rolls when they move, or never put on in the first place, and every study shows minorities bear the brunt of this inefficiency.

One improvement included in the Florida law: If people are not on the rolls, they are allowed to vote anyway and the legality of their ballot is decided later. Another useful innovation also approved by South Dakota: a single statewide database for all voters.

A fourth piece of this complicated puzzle is voter education. Studies in Georgia show that even when minorities use the same voting machines as whites, they make more mistakes. So new hardware is not the only answer to inequality.

What has happened so far has been driven by politics, not law. But many suits have already been filed, demanding that the equal protection standard enunciated in the Florida case be applied nationally. Katherine Harris, Florida's secretary of state, told us that the legal community is widely split on whether the High Court would agree to expand its ruling.

Those cases could take years to work through the courts. Meanwhile, President Bush should follow the lead of his little brother and make election reform a top priority. Now that questions about his own election have faded and he's established himself in the White House, he should not be afraid to take up the cause. If he doesn't, shame on him.

New study: Gays can go straight

Dr. Robert L. Spitzer is a professor of psychiatry at Columbia University. In 1973, he persuaded the American Psychiatric Association to remove homosexuality from its official diagnostic manual of mental disorders. At the time, Dr. Spitzer was hailed by many as a scientific Moses, leading homosexuals out of their closeted captivity.

Thomas

Last Wednesday, Dr. Spitzer spoke again to the APA at its meeting in New Orleans. This time he had a different message: "Contrary to conventional wisdom, some highly motivated individuals, using a variety of change efforts, can make substantial change in multiple indicators of sexual orientation." In other words, according to Dr. Spitzer, once homosexual does not necessarily mean always homosexual.

Dr. Spitzer interviewed 200 men and women who said they had experienced a significant transition from homosexual to heterosexual attraction, and had sustained this shift for five years. "Like most psychiatrists," Spitzer says, "I thought homosexual behavior could only be resisted, and that no one could really change their sexual orientation. I now believe that to be false. Some people can and do change."

When Dr. Spitzer offered his views to the APA 28 years ago, he was presented as an unassailable expert. Now, after studying the matter further, he says his views have changed. Is he still an expert? Of course not, because he now confronts the only force greater than science, theology or public opinion: political correctness.

Dr. Spitzer must now be silenced or discredited by those for whom "gay rights" is a holy grail. Other "experts" who toe the party line are being produced to undermine his conclusions. Because many of those studied testify to a religious and/or "reparative therapy" model leading them to a different orientation and behavior pattern than before, their conclusions are immediately rejected because they supposedly lack scientific credibility. Never mind that various scientists, some homosexuals themselves, have been trying to force the "gay gene" theory on us with flawed models and a good deal of political, not scientific propaganda behind their conclusions. They remain credible in some minds because of their objective, which is total acceptance of homosexual practice as normal, even good.

The essence of real science is the ability to alter conclusions when new facts are observed. But political correctness is about holding a view in spite of the facts. Political correctness demands that new "facts" be created in order to serve the ideological and social ends of certain groups. That's why in science, religion and politics, new models have replaced old models because the old ones lead to conclusions and destinations to which the PC crowd does not wish to return.

For those homosexuals who are not into the politics of gay rights and who desire help, Dr. Spitzer's findings offer hope. And hope is one of the greatest gifts a psychiatrist can give a patient.

Midland gave great showing

Cingular Wireless is pleased to add Midland as one of its newest locations for a Customer Care Call Center facility. As their consultant, I would like to thank you for your interest, patience, perseverance and determination in pursuit of Cingular. As a consultant I have seen more than a hundred markets in the last 18 months and I can easily say Midland did one of the best jobs in presenting itself and the capabilities of the community of any of the markets we have visited.

Dennis Clayton, the Chamber's economic development manager, picked up the ball and ran with it from day one. He acted as my main point of contact and was the clearinghouse for all the needs of our requirements. The lines of communication that he established made my job easier as I was able to distribute information instantaneously throughout the team at Cingular. I wish I could send Dennis to my other markets to show them how it's done.

Clearly this process was a whole community effort and I thank all who were involved. Midland from day one had a can do attitude, but more importantly the follow through was there and impressive.

May this success bring other new opportunities. Job well done.

Information not totally accurate

I would like to clarify something I recently read about my daughter, Teran Nix, in the Reporter-Telegram. Teran is the young girl who was critically burned in the Lee High School chemistry fire. MISD publicly stated there was an insurance policy available, a catastrophic policy, that would help with our medical expenses. We filed claims with their agent and recently received a letter from the hospital in Lubbock stating the school's insurance was declining to pay anything. I only feel it is fair that this information is reported accurately.

One other issue I would like for the public to know is that the teacher who caused this fire was voted Teacher of the Year at Lee High School for this current school year. I do not doubt that she is a good teacher, however, I feel this "award" was very inappropriate for this school year, and I know it was very insulting to the kids who were burned, as well as to their family members.

Gift of ranch should stay gift

I am disgusted that the Holiman couple gave Wagon Wheel Ranch to Midland College and now want it back because they are angry about the way the college is using it. I have a poem I have saved for some time and would like to see it directed to Odis and Viola Holiman.

The Gift
by Jane Merchant
Whatever gift I give to you is yours.
Give it away or keep it, as you will.
The special books, the china miniatures,
The little birds carved with beguiling skill --
I shall not peer about your house to see
If they are dusted well and daily shown
To visitors, as treasured things may be,
I made a gift of them and not a loan.
I know that even gifts sincerely loved
Both for themselves and for the giver's sake
Have in life's many changes often proved
A burden; be relived of the mistake
Of thinking you must keep a gift I give (Except my love) as long as you shall live.

P.S. There is a lesson in this poem for the Holimans that I hope they will recognize.

Send letters to soldier overseas

To send "Any Service Member" letters to American military personnel in world hot spots, such as Yugoslavia, etc. current addresses to use include: For Army or Air force-Any Service Member, Operation in the FRY, APO AE 09397-0001 or For Navy and Marine, Any Service Member, Operation in the FRY, FPO AE 09398-0001.

Any GI far from home who isn't receiving much mail likely will be glad to see "Any Service Member" letters at mail call to be picked up by anyone who would like to receive a friendly letter.

As an USAF member I was deployed to an alien land during the blockade of Berlin and the Cold War with Russia. Our task was to serve as a threat to Russia. Many deployed service people have not been so fortunate as they have gone to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Somalia, Yugoslavia, etc.

I sent many ASM letters to Operation Desert Shield, Operation Desert Storm, to U.S. ships at sea, etc. and received letters from the different military services, from men and women, enlisted and commissioned personnel. Those who replied expressed appreciation for the letters they received.

The purpose of my letters to ASM people is to express appreciation for what they are doing in the service of our country. And to send a friendly letter to them, to include humorous material, to send comforting religious material, in effect to say something to them I would like to hear if I were in their place.

If you have a son, brother, sister, friend etc. in the service deployed to some hot spot send them an encouraging letter once in a while. They will appreciate your effort. Send a letter to Any Service Member and they will really appreciate your effort.

To send an ASM letter make up two or three copies of the same letter and mail them and see what happens. Send the letters at the regular postage of 34 cents for one ounce, etc., a limit of 12 ounces per letter.

MISD needs to deal with bullies

My child began sixth grade at Rusk Elementary. My child had a very hard time with some of the students in the sixth-grade class, primarily girls. My child was a victim, being picked on, bullied and harassed on a daily basis, as well as having items stolen. These children were not disciplined for harassing or stealing. What does this tell children about today's society? Harassment and stealing are not acceptable behavior in the world, nor should they be accepted in school. I was in contact with the principal, the intern, the counselor and the teachers at numerous times in reference to the problems my child experienced. I was told "kids will be kids" and "it's the age of the students." This may be true to a certain extent, but there should be a limit to what a child has to endure. Some form of disciplinary action should be taken when this behavior continues.

This has a big impact on the learning environment in the classroom. Children go to school for one main goal - to learn, not be distracted by bullying students. I feel like I was very patient with the school, allowing them enough time to handle the situation. Our problems were pushed aside, as if my child wasn't important. My child has been scarred for life by the harassment dealt with at Rusk.

When the district says "...for every child," what does this really mean? That every child is on their own? It is situations like this, that can lead to school violence and teen suicide. Problems at school should be handled at campus level, but what is a parent to do when the principal does not take an issue seriously?

I feel like the principal and staff at Rusk are responsible and should have handled the harassment complaint in serious and timely manner. The district is always worried about losing students because of government funding. If this complaint would have been handled differently my child may still be within MISD.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702 or you may fax to 682-3793.

They can also be faxed to 682-3793 or sent via e-mail to Letters@mrt.com — Letters faxed or sent by e-mail should indicate they are for publication.

Success of 'Evita' due to teamwork

Recently, Midland Community Theatre joined forces with the Midland Odessa Symphony and Chorale to produce the musical "Evita" at the Chaparral Center. The success of "Evita" and this collaboration is a greater reflection on the cooperative spirit of our city. Beside the two main partners, "Evita" was a result of a collaboration with Midland College. The Chap Center staff — led by Mike Stevens — and the Midland College Drama program — led by David Allen — were very helpful in this production process. This production could not have succeeded without the support of a local company — Tomcat USA. By donating motors, truss, an automated spotlight system and high-tech lighting equipment, Tomcat USA raised the bar for lighting effects in our locally produced productions. In fact, the whole event raised the bar for what we can accomplish when we work together. Finally, "Evita" could not have been produced without the financial support of Wagner and Brown, Ltd. and Abell-Hanger Foundation.

During the show, the audience recognized the great actors and musicians who performed "Evita" with their applause. Indeed, the Permian Basin is blessed with great local artistic talent, and MOSC and MCT are fortunate to have had a fantastic cast and wonderful orchestra. However, this event could not have succeeded without MCT's staff and volunteers, who worked for the past six weeks to produce this show.

MCT normally produces shows in our own buildings, and thus "Evita" challenged MCT's staff and volunteers to learn new skills while still striving to produce an excellent show. Without a great design staff, stage management team, scenic crew, props crews, costume crews, lighting and sound crews and house management crews, MCT could not have pulled off this event.

Midland Community Theatre's 55 year existence is a testament to the spirit of cooperation in Midland.

The production of "Evita" was a continuation of the growth of this artistic organization within the community. Many thanks to everyone who helped to support "Evita" and our community theatre, and see you at the theater!

Kindness gave child huge thrill

I am again pleasantly surprised by the kindness and generosity of others. On Saturday, May 5 at approximately 9 p.m., my son was visiting the Walgreen's on Midland Drive. He had $1.61 that was burning a hole in his pocket and he went inside to buy something with his money. I stayed in the car to wait for him. When he emerged from the store with a sack in his hand he anxiously jumped into the car and handed me the sack and told me "Happy early Mother's Day." I could not imagine what item he had purchased for me with only $1.61. When I opened the sack there was a cute little heart shaped red box. Inside the box was a pretty crystal heart necklace. In surprise, I asked him how he purchased such a nice gift. He told me that a nice lady paid for it. He was so thrilled to give me such a nice gift (without me paying for it). This lady's gesture of kindness and generosity made a young man, of 10 years, very happy and proud to be able to surprise his Mom.

Kerrey doesn't deserve hassle

Much to do about the "murder" of innocent South Vietnamese women and children by a group of Seals, of which Bob Kerrey was a member, has continually made news day after day.

To determine whether these men, women or children, they came in contact with were North Vietnamese or South Vietnamese is comparable in part to a person standing on the corner of a busy intersection in Anytown, USA, taking a census by sight of Baptist, Catholic, Church of Christ, Methodist, Presbyterians to name a few individuals, including but not limited to liberals, conservatives, Green Party, Republicans or Democrats, as they drove by in their cars and trucks – none of which the census taker knows.

American troops were sent to Vietnam to relieve the Communistic pressures on South Vietnam by whatever means they had at their disposal. They were given explicit instructions to relieve South Vietnam of the Communist North Vietnam invading Rebels. They were not instructed to kill South Vietnam citizens. French troops were instructed to accomplish this feat, but their attempt also failed.

The Civil War, World War I, World War II, Korean conflict and all other armed conflicts throughout the world have inevitably injured, maimed or killed innocent people. That is tragic, but it is inevitably truthful. Do no harm to the "good people" was their intent, but to differentiate the good from the bad with bombs from the air, artillery shells from miles away, or other mass destructive devices is impossible. America is the home of freedom. We must cherish this precious right as set down by the Continental Congress centuries ago in their Declaration of Independence. That is what Bob Kerrey was sent to do. He did his best, as did all other Vietnam veterans, he failed to do that task through no fault of his or their own. To penalize him is to consecrate our right to fight for our freedom.

Baressi's work deserves thanks

As Joseph Baressi Jr.'s retirement approaches I would like to take this opportunity to thank him for all his work with the district. As a parent I have had many opportunities to speak with Baressi about any concerns I have had. He always took the time to answer my calls and although we didn't agree in our viewpoints, he always listened, took our concerns under consideration and acted on those concerns.

Under Baressi's leadership we have had some outstanding principals at DeZavala. Most recently Mrs. Benavides came to the helm at DeZavala and has made her presence known. She motivates her staff and students alike. She is concerned with not only the educational aspect of our students but with their safety as well. (On more than one occasion we have seen Mrs. Benavides walking children after school.) We have not had a principal with her kind of leadership since Dr. Medrano. We feel Mrs. Benavides goes above and beyond her duties as principal.

I'd like to mention one more person at DeZavala who has made a positive impact at DeZavala, Melinda Guevara our nurse. All of the years I have had children at DeZavala I never even knew the names of any of our nurses. Mrs. Guevara, however, provides training on health issues for parents. She is truly concerned with the health of our children, as I have never seen a nurse be as involved with students and parents.

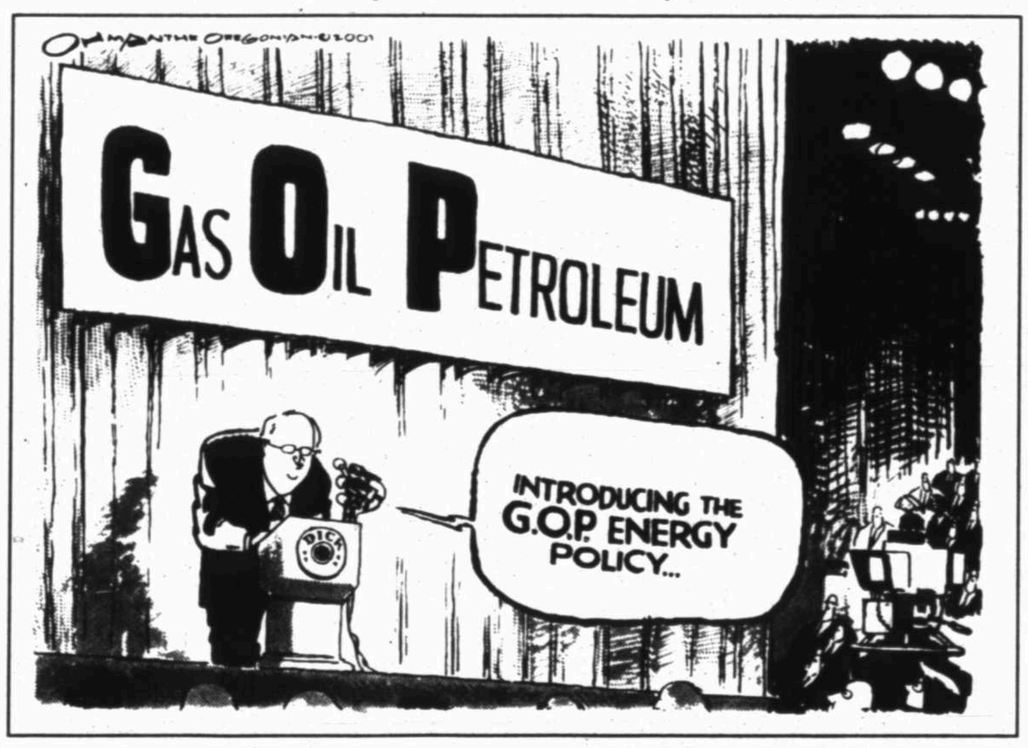

Thank you, Dr. Baressi, for all your hard work and dedication you have given our children. A big thank you to the DeZavala staff for providing our children with a quality education.

DeZavala staff works very hard

I have been to DeZavala and have seen the hard work the DeZavala staff put into teaching our children. They go far beyond what they have to do to get these children educated. I want to let them know how much I appreciate all their hard work. They have not lost the love for their profession and the love for the children. My daughter is in the classroom of the teacher a parent described "as not challenging the child." This teacher has worked hard with all the children and my daughter has grown academically and has inspired her to do more than my daughter has done in the past. This teacher has also motivated me as a parent to be more involved in the education of my children. At this time I would also like to thank whoever was responsible for giving us a great principal. Mrs. Benavides has proven to be very involved in the progress and learning of these children, as well as their safety. We also have a wonderful nurse. Mrs. Guevera has been giving parents instructional classes on the health and caring of our children. She is always aware of the children's medications and makes sure that they take them when needed. She has helped parents obtain help for dental care and glasses. She is always striving to help the children get the care they need to be healthy and attend school with as little problems as possible. All in all Mrs. Benavides has lifted our spirits so we can all work together to better educate the children at DeZavala Elementary School.

SPEAKING OUT

Does zero tolerance in schools do justice to our children?

By Doris McGookey

McGookey

An Eagle Scout is expelled from school for wearing his Scout knife on his belt, seriously damaging his life-long dream of going to West Point. An 11-year-old girl is suspended because the 10-inch key chain that connects to her Tweety Bird wallet is regarded as a weapon. Young boys are suspended for "shooting" each other with their fingers pointed as guns. I think we can all agree such punishments are much too harsh for the infractions and yet these have happened in schools under the zero tolerance policy of "predetermined consequences or punishments for specific offenses."

The point of zero tolerance was to make the consequences of bringing drugs and guns to school perfectly clear to the students. Predictably, overreaction to the horrendous school shootings has resulted in zero tolerance exploding beyond reasonable proportions. The American Bar Association recently advised school districts to abandon zero tolerance because it treats students like criminals. The policies are loosely modeled on the rigid sentencing laws of the criminal justice system. The consequences of these policies are that educators are concerned about test results with students so easily removed from the regular classroom and put into alternative education and administrators are worried about the number of lawsuits resulting from these actions. The truly sad outcome is zero tolerance has not stopped drug use or school shootings, as intended. Zero tolerance was in effect several years before the Columbine tragedy.

Parents in Midland should be concerned when the Midland Independent School District Elementary School Student Handbook and Code of conduct, page 61, Level 111 "Violations/Mandatory Removal to an Alternative Education Program," item No. 19 states possession of a knife of any type is illegal. A mother who innocently puts a harmless plastic knife into her child's lunch could be sentencing that child to time in alternative education. Other insidious infractions are apparent in the handbook.

To use the words of Kathy Christie, a spokeswoman for the Education Committee of the States, "The point of zero tolerance was to make it black or white to not come to school with a gun. But if people keep pushing the envelope, it's going to blow up." The explosion of the zero tolerance policy has blown up in the face of innocent youngsters. Under zero tolerance, there is no looking at former behavior or of the intent, both of which should be critical considerations. Take, for example, the Eagle Scout who had a record of exemplary behavior necessary to get an appointment to West Point. His intent was not to harm anyone but merely neglect in not removing from his belt, the knife given to him by his Scout master for achieving the highest of Scout awards. The mandatory expulsion under zero tolerance put a serious blot on his record. This is not the kind of treatment I want for my grandchildren or any other child.

And that's my concern! As an educator and grandmother of an imaginative 7-year old boy now receiving a fine education in a Midland school, it's unsettling to think he may be trapped by this policy. He loves to make his own costumes, not just for Halloween but delves into it year round depending on his favorite character at the time. When reading about a 6-year-old in Pittsburgh who was suspended last Halloween for carrying a plastic ax as part of a firefighter's costume, it really brings the excessiveness of zero tolerance into focus for me! I can envision my grandson taking the cardboard sword he made for a knight's costume to school in his backpack to show his friends and being suspended and put into alternative education. Truly, an act of innocence on his part, sadly a traumatic punishment!

We all want an orderly, safe setting in our schools but with a proper balance. Concerned parents and grandparents can change the policy by writing and calling their state representatives who mandated zero tolerance in 1993. Also, local school administrators have control over the punishment and should be urged to look at the record and intent of the offender and then scrutinize carefully the length of time the student is removed from the regular classroom. Until there is a change in the code of conduct and the policy of zero tolerance abandoned, all students and parents are at risk of having to defend acts of innocence from mandatory, predetermined harsh punishments!

Palestinians shout for revenge carrying one of the two rocket attack victims through the streets of the northern West Bank town of Jenin, before the victims' funeral Saturday.

Israeli copters fire rockets at car, killing at least 2

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

JENIN, West Bank — Chanting for revenge, some 10,000 people attended the funeral of two Palestinians — including a well-known militant — killed earlier Saturday in an Israeli helicopter attack the Palestinians claim was an assassination.

The attack on a car carrying four members of the armed wing of Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction capped another bloody week of fighting, and Palestinian officials were heading to Washington for meetings with U.S. officials in search for ways to end the violence.

Arafat's deputy Mahmoud Abbas, known as Abu Mazen, is planning to meet with Secretary of State Colin Powell at the beginning of the week, according to Hasan Abdel Rahman, the Palestine Liberation Organization's representative in Washington.

Abdel Rahman said Palestinian officials hope this meeting will lead to a White House invitation for Arafat, who has yet to meet with President Bush.

Unlike the previous administration, the Bush White House has been reluctant to play an active role in Mideast peace brokering.

"We would like to see greater American involvement in the political discussions, not just on security issues," said Palestinian Planning Minister Nabil Shaath.

Massive crowds attended the joint funeral for the two Palestinians killed when Israeli helicopters fired a barrage of rockets on a car. Chanting "Revenge! Revenge!" the mourners marched through the West Bank town of Jenin, where the attack took place.

The attack killed Moutasem Sabaa, 26, a well-known gunman who was in the vehicle, and Ala'a Jaloudi, a Palestinian policeman who was standing nearby.

The car was hit by at least five rockets, witnesses said. The first rocket missed the car and three other members of the Tanzim armed militia were able to escape without serious injury, including Abdel Karim Awais.

Fatah officials in Jenin say they suspect Israel's main target in the attack was Awais, 30, who leads a group of local gunmen and was planning mortar shellings of Jewish settlements in the West Bank. Israeli authorities did not comment on the incident.

Sabaa, who suffered from a past leg injury, was unable to get of the car before the other rockets hit.

Palestinians have held Israel responsible for the pinpoint killings of more than a dozen Palestinians suspected of involvement in shooting and bombing attacks in the past seven months.

"This is state-sponsored terrorism," Shaath, the Palestinian minister said. "It should be condemned by everybody."

At least 17 people were admitted to a hospital and treated for shock and shrapnel injuries. Many of the injured were students returning home from school, hospital officials said.

The Fatah movement distributed a leaflet in Jenin calling for revenge for the attack.

"This assassination will increase our resolve to respond and take revenge," the leaflet said.

Fatah leaders from Jenin warned they had mortar shells and would be targeting Jewish settlements in the West Bank. To date, mortar shellings have been launched only from the Gaza Strip.

On Saturday six mortar shells were fired into the Jewish settlement bloc in the Gaza Strip, injuring one Israeli lightly, the army said.

In a rally of some 1,000 supporters of the militant Islamic movement Hamas in the West Bank town of Ramallah, demonstrators shot a model of a mortar shell into a model of a Jewish settlement.

Photographer of death poses moral quandary for Cambodians

By Chris Decherd
Associated Press

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Day after day Nhem En peered at the prisoners through the lens of his box camera, barely giving a second glance at the ashen, hopeless faces he was recording for the bureaucracy of torture and death.

Once photographed, the prisoners were taken to their cells inside S-21, the Khmer Rouge's most infamous torture center.

Nhem En was just 15, and already chief photographer of S-21. Today, 21 years after the fall of the Khmer Rouge, he lives in a village with his wife and six children, and dreams of opening his own photography shop.

But for those seeking to punish the Khmer Rouge for their atrocities, Nhem En poses a quandary. Should he be prosecuted for being part of the system, or excused because he had no choice?

Nhem En, now 41, says he is ready either way — to testify against his former bosses, or be judged alongside them.

"I would not be afraid to be judged," said Nhem En in an interview in Phnom Penh. "My work was to take pictures only, and if I had refused I would have been killed."

He may have his day in court. But when is anybody's guess.

In January, after years of delays, the Cambodian government finished drafting legislation to establish a U.N.-assisted war crimes tribunal of Cambodian and foreign judges.

The legislation must still be amended into line with the constitution, approved again by Parliament, reviewed by the Constitutional Council and signed by King Norodom Sihanouk.

The Khmer Rouge seized power in 1975 and spent four years trying to build a farmers' utopia. More than 1.7 million people died of starvation, disease, overwork or executions.

No one chronicled the killing machine like Nhem En and his five apprentices at S-21, a former school in Phnom Penh. It was death's waiting room through which 16,000 people passed.

It is now the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum, where tourists gaze on Nhem En's work — montages of large and small black-and-white photographs of inmates.

Nhem En recalls the anguished looks on the faces of his disoriented subjects, some of whom had just had their blindfolds removed. But he said he never interacted with them.

"According to regulations, talking was not part of my work," he said.

Several prisoners professed their innocence to him while he prepared to take their picture.

One was a cousin from his home village. Fearing arrest or worse, Nhem En kept quiet and clicked.

The youth sometimes had to photograph the tortured dead.

One picture in the museum shows a person partly covered in a soiled sheet, ankles still shackled, lying on the floor. Another is a close-up of a man in his 50s, eyes and mouth wide open. A sign in Khmer under the face says "Ros Thoung, 05-10-77."

Nhem En said he feels bad about those who died. He recalled hearing screams from the cells at night.

He was 10 when he left the family farm and followed his four brothers into the Khmer Rouge in 1970 to fight the U.S.-backed regime.

Following the Khmer Rouge's victory he was sent to Shanghai to study photography and filmmaking.

He returned after six months and was made chief photographer, using Chinese box cameras and Japanese or German models seized from shops.

After Vietnamese forces took over Cambodia, Nhem En retreated into the jungle with other cadres, including Khmer Rouge leader Pol Pot.

Tourists look at photographs of prisoners incarcerated by the Khmer Rouge at their infamous prison, in Phnom Penh. The prisoners' portraits were photographed for identification purposes by Nhem En, who 21 years after the fall of the Khmer Rouge regime says he is ready to testify against the leaders. For those seeking to punish the Khmer Rouge for their atrocities, Nhem En poses a quandary. Should he be prosecuted for being part of the system, or excused because he had no choice? AP Photo

In 1996 he defected and lives free but poor in the isolated village of Anlong Veng, 190 miles from the capital.

He is among thousands of middle-ranking Khmer Rouge activists who may never be tried since the proposed tribunal is meant to prosecute only the "most responsible."

But many claim that morally, Nhem En has blood on his hands.

Youk Chhang, director of the Documentation Center of Cambodia, notes that the photography unit worked in concert with the prison torturers and killers, and says Nhem En's selection for study in China indicates he was a trusted cadre.

"The photographers did not kill anybody and, probably, they did not beat anybody, but I think, morally, they live in guilt," Youk Chhang said.

But he acknowledged that Nhem En may be of more value to the tribunal as a witness than as a defendant.

"He knows a lot," Youk Chhang said. "I hope he knows how to put into words what he really has seen."

Only two Khmer Rouge high-ups are currently in custody. They are Ta Mok, the movement's longtime military leader, and Kang Kek Iev, better known as Duch, who ran the S-21 prison.

Situation less dire than feared for baby seals

MOSCOW (AP) — The captain of a Russian ship that had been planning to mount a rescue of baby seals said Saturday that the situation is less dire than feared and the animals don't need help, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

Experts earlier had predicted that some 200,000 seal pups were likely to die in the White Sea in Russia's far northwest.

Greenland seals migrate south from the Barents Sea to the White Sea each spring to give birth. After the seal pups are weaned, they ride ice floes to the Barents Sea, where their main foodstocks are.

This year, however, high winds had left them trapped in an area where most food is too deep for them to reach, the experts said, and a Russian shipping company had planned to send a vessel to bring pups aboard.

However, the seals are now being gradually carried out into the Barents Sea and the vessel's captain, Anatoly Voluzhev, said the rescue plans have been called off, ITAR-Tass said.

Somalia negotiates faction leader's withdrawal after 40 killed in seaport battle

By Osman Hassan
Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Pro-government militia regained control of Mogadishu's abandoned seaport Saturday after 40 people, including 21 civilians, were killed in a gun battle between forces loyal to a faction leader and gunmen normally in charge of the area.

Another 100 people, including prominent military commanders in the pro-government forces, were wounded in the 15-hour battle.

The worst fighting in several years in Somalia's battered capital underscored the tenuous hold on power of the year-old transitional government in a city still carved up among clan-based faction leaders.

Faction leader Hussein Mohamed Aidid's forces gained the upper hand in the battle with Suleiman clan militia after being attacked when they arrived at the port Friday for a meeting, said Information Minister Zakaria Mohamud Haji Abdi.

But Aidid's men later agreed to withdraw to their nearby headquarters and to leave the pro-government militia in control, he said.

The official said the Suleiman sub-clan forces that fought Aidid's men, although normally allied with the government, had been fighting on their own in the battle that began Friday afternoon. Another pro-government militia moved into the port after safe passage out had been negotiated for Aidid and his men.

Nurses in Al Hayat hospital, where many of the dead and wounded were taken, said most of the civilian victims had been killed by random mortars and anti-aircraft shells that fell on their homes near the Indian Ocean port.

Aidid, a former U.S. Marine and son of late warlord Mohamed Farah Aidid, earlier accused the government, which was elected a year ago in Arta in neighboring Djibouti, of "launching a deliberate attack against my people."

"In a serious plot, they have mercilessly massacred many civilians," Aidid said by mobile phone during the fighting. "As long as the provocation of the Arta group continues, the struggle of the Somali National Alliance will continue."

Aidid's father founded the alliance during his struggle with rival warlords after they had joined forces to oust President Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991.

The nation in the Horn of Africa was plunged into chaos and anarchy and was without a central government until President Abdiqassim Salad Hassan was elected by representatives of Somali society. Aidid and other faction leaders refused to attend the gathering in Arta unless their clan-based political factions were recognized.

A U.S.-led United Nations mission, initially intended to protect convoys of relief food to victims of a famine caused by the fighting, ended in disaster when 18 American soldiers died in a botched attempt to capture the elder Aidid in October 1993. Several dozen U.N. peacekeepers were also killed in fighting.

The U.N. abandoned its headquarters at the port when it withdrew from Somalia in March 1995, and the installations were damaged in subsequent fighting among rival Somali groups. It has not been used since.

Aidid said he had been invited to the port to meet with some former military officers instrumental in ousting Siad Barre for what he termed "peace consultations." He said one of his vehicles had been ambushed by the pro-government militia that had controlled the port area.

The fighting occurred less than 24 hours after the arrival in Mogadishu of a 12-truck convoy carrying weapons and ammunition to faction leader Musa Sude Yalahow, allied with Aidid in opposition to Abdiqassim's government. There were reports that the weapons came from Ethiopia, but Ethiopian foreign ministry chief of staff Yamane Kidana dismissed the allegations.

"The transitional government in Somalia always attempts to externalize any problem in its country, rather than solving it," Yemane said in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa. "The allegation that Ethiopia has provided arms to Yalahow is not based on facts. There is no shortage of arms of any kind in Somalia."

Myanmar eager to show its drug fighting efforts

YANGON, Myanmar (AP) — Close to a billion dollars in opium, heroin and amphetamines went up in smoke Saturday as authorities in Myanmar sought to impress foreign governments and media with the seriousness of their efforts to stamp out the illicit drug trade.

The destruction of seized drugs was staged to coincide with a regional meeting held to coordinate the anti-drug efforts of Cambodia, China, Laos, Myanmar, Thailand and Vietnam.

The three-day meeting, held under the auspices of the United Nations International Drug Control Program, ended Friday, but many delegates stayed on to see Myanmar's real efforts in the field.

Drug burnings have become a ritual in Southeast Asian countries, making a public relations virtue out of the necessity to dispose of the dangerous drugs. Myanmar has conducted 15 such events.

On Saturday, the seized drugs were laid out along tables set end to end for about 66 feet.

The drugs — including 2,862 pounds of opium, 255 pounds of heroin, 968 pounds of marijuana and 2.7 million amphetamine tablets — were mostly in their original packing: brown paper wrapping, plastic bags and jute sacks. Below the tables was gasoline-soaked wood for kindling.

The total street value of the drugs in the United States would be $920 million, officials said.

At each of these drug burning events, foreign drug experts are invited to test random samples.

A typical program includes slicing open a bag and dropping a sample into a test solution: amphetamine turns the solution orange, heroin a shade of purple.

Observers are then motioned back for the big moment. A button ignites a fire that engulfs the table, burning the packets and sending white powder spilling to the ground.

The opium burns slowly, like peat. Heroin, its derivative, burns slightly faster. The marijuana burns like the dry leaves it is. Amphetamines send flames high into the air, burning fiercely with huge heat and billowing black smoke.

Afghanistan and Myanmar are the top two producers of opium and heroin.

While Myanmar's military government has curbed opium production considerably, the country has in recent years become a major source of methamphetamine, the cheap and popular stimulant that is wreaking social havoc in several Asian nations.

With Honors

Local valedictorians, salutatorians saluted

Ten area teen-agers are at the top of their class as they graduate this spring from five area high schools. Top graduates from Midland High School, Lee High School, Greenwood High, Midland Christian High School and Trinity School will walk across their respective stages to receive their diplomas knowing that they are the top academic students in their class.

While many of Midland and Greenwood's valedictorians and salutatorians have many things in common, such as being National Merit Scholars and being included in "Who's Who Among American High School Students," each student is different in his or her own way. Some are actors and some are athletes. Some are computer whizzes, while others are missionaries. But for one day in May, all of them will be one thing — the number one and two academic students in their senior class.

GARY OTT

Cellular phones and grocery stores ... I don't think so

She was your typical soccer mom, I suppose ... reasonably attractive with her blonde hair pulled back into a loosely tied pony-tail. She was wearing a brightly colored jogging outfit, and she already had a nice tan in the works, although it was hard to tell if it was real or store-bought.

Ott

She was standing in the produce section of the grocery store last Saturday afternoon. Her basket was a contradiction of sorts ... lots of fruits and vegetables, but also a goodly amount of junk food, including a giant box of sugary cereal, several bags of assorted chips and a large frozen pizza or two.

I was willing to bet a week's salary she had an SUV of some kind out in the parking lot. No, make that two weeks' salary.

But the one thing about the woman that immediately grabbed my attention was the cellular phone she had pressed against her right ear. As she squeezed the various avocados in front of her, she carried on a light-hearted conversation with someone somewhere, who no doubt was also standing in a public place with a cell phone glued to his — or her — ear. All the while, the rest of us in the grocery store just looked away and tried to pretend the scene didn't bother us.

Actually, that's not quite true.

The fact is, only I looked away and pretended the scene didn't bother me.

Everyone else was too busy chattering away into his or her own cellular phone to notice.

When did this bizarre transformation take place anyway?

I mean, there was a time — and it wasn't that long ago — when the only time you found yourself on the telephone was ...

(A) You had just had your dinner interrupted by an unwanted call, probably a wrong number;

(B) You couldn't, even though you gave it the old college try, avoid accepting a long-distance call at the office, usually from an angry customer; or

(C) You just got so darn unlucky with your car that you had to pull over and use a pay phone, although, more times and not, you never got around to making the call because someone had stolen, pardon my language, the damn phone book.

Now, just a few short years later, it is as though 90 percent of Americans have grown cellular phones in their ears.

As you might expect, I have a theory on this.

Which is — 99.9 percent of the phone calls being made are completely unnecessary and the only reason the person is making them is so he — or she — can show off and feel like a big shot.

Well, guess what?

I, for one, am not impressed.

In fact, I think you look downright silly. So take THAT, Mr. and Mrs. Big Shot. And while you're at it, get that SUV out of my way. I'm late for work!

OK, Gary, calm down. Take a deep breath. It's not that big a deal. It's all part of our changing world. Just because you prefer to live in the Dark Ages, doesn't mean everyone else has to.

Besides, cellular telephones can be terribly useful.

Just last month, for example, you were stranded on the highway after you had a flat tire and no spare. Had you had a cell phone, you could have called for help right then and there, saving yourself many headaches.

Remember?

And didn't that nice person who gave you a ride into town let you use her cellular phone? Of course, she did. But wouldn't it have been nicer to have had your own?

Come on, Gary, admit it. You're all wrong about these modern gadgets. If you would just open your eyes to progress, your life would be a whole lot easier.

And think of others.

What about your parents? They are both in their 70s and travel a great deal. Don't you feel better knowing they have a cellular phone of their own? If they have car trouble, like you did, isn't it comforting to know they don't have to hitchhike to the nearest gas station?

And what if you were married? Wouldn't it be nice to know your wife was just a phone call away, no matter what kind of problem might arise?

Face it, Gary, the cellular phone is a marvelous invention with the potential to solve many problems ... and in some cases, even save lives.

So quit your whining, and get with the program.

OK, OK. I get the point. And, yes, you're right. Just like you were about answering machines, word processors, Caller ID and computers.

I need to join the real world. And, by golly, I'm going to.

Tomorrow, I'm buying my very own cellular phone. I promise.

But do me one favor in return.

If you ever — and I mean EVER — catch me using it in the grocery store, shoot me on the spot.

Hey, I'll move forward, but only so far.

Nicotine Lollipop to Stop Smoking

by John L. Davis, RPh, IACP

Numerous nicotine-containing smoking cessatino aids - such as gum, patches, nasal spray and inhalers - are commercially available, and physicians are asking compounding pharmacists to prepare nicotine lollipops and sublingual tablets. Nicotine is not a cancer-causing chemical like cigarette tars and does not contain carbon monoxide like smoke. Nicotine lollipops suppress symptoms of nicotine withdrawal, deal with the hand to mouth fixation, and allow patients to wean off nicotine over several weeks. In contrasts, doses of nicotine gum may be too large for some patients, and continuous nicotine delivery provided by patches may be undesirable. The lollipop is regulated and available by prescription only. Use of a nicotine replacement doubles the success rate of "kicking the habit". People who are highly motivated and use nicotine replacement preparations in conjunction with supportive counseling further increase their likelihood of success.

Many people, strapped by physical limitations such as illness, social barriers and personal limitations struggle each day just to survive. They do not know where their next meal is coming from, and many do not know where they will sleep from night to night. The comforts of life that we take for granted are a Godsend to them.

Many of these people at one time led a life of relative comfort, but find themselves in need of food and assistance as a result of debilitating illness or the loss or death of those they were dependent on.

Many of these people live in our own city.

We should thank God each day for the gifts that we have received, and we should do all that we can to lift the burden from our fellow Midlanders, all the while thanking Him that we have been spared from these hard times.

All of us, as children of God, should be allowed the conditions of life that are in accord with human dignity. We ask that you please help us fulfill this mission in whatever way you can - whether it be in your time, your monetary donations, or in articles to donate to our thrift store. Because we are 100% volunteer, all proceeds go to help the poor.

Last week we assisted 22 families with rent and utilities at a cost of $3,474.43. We helped an additional 56 families (44 men, 51 women, 66 children) with 2,316 pounds of food, $65 in clothing, $425 in furniture and $13.50 in miscellaneous.

Voters decide potbellied pig must go

Now Eli, a Vietnamese pot-bellied pig, must find a new home.

A referendum that would have designated potbellied pigs as exotic pets rather than livestock was rejected by 66 percent of the voters in this Fort Worth suburb on May 5. Hurst's animal-control ordinance classifies potbellied pigs as farm animals and requires that they be kept on at least an acre.

However, the yard where the 175-pound swine swills Dr Pepper and lounges in the sun is less than a half acre.

Last week, Eli's owner Cynthia Wynne received the eviction notice. She has until Tuesday to relocate Eli.

Wynne, who fought the public vote, said she may seek legal counsel, find Eli a new home, or put him in a temporary home until she can sell her house and move away with Eli. Wynne adopted Eli in 1994 when he was 10 days old.

"We haven't made any decisions yet," she said in the Saturday's editions of the Fort Worth Star Telegram. "We're kind of waiting this week."

ADVENTURES IN TEACHING

Teens offer words of love, thanks to their mothers

By R. Eric Setzler

Washington Irving, author of "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," wrote, "A mother is the truest friend we have, when trials, heavy and sudden, fall upon us; when adversity takes the place of prosperity; when friends who rejoice with us in our sunshine, desert us when troubles thicken around us, still will she cling to us, and endeavor by her kind precepts and counsels to dissipate the clouds of darkness, and cause peace to return to our hearts." Many eighth-graders today agree their mothers are special, but prefer to say so in their own words:

Setzler

Karli — My mom is always there to help me and comfort me. She always helps me with my homework or anything I need help with. She gives me advice, takes me to church and helps me with my needs. She's always there when I need her and that is why I love her.

Kendall — She helps me with my hair, she gives me advice and she has always offered me a shoulder to lean on. She is there when I need her.

Keal — My mom bakes me cookies!

Rachel — My mom is awesome! She loves and cares for me 24/7 and she will always be my favorite person!

Cricket — My mom is always there for me. She gives me advice on everything even if I don't ask for it. She always supports me in everything I want to do, especially in sports. If I didn't have her support, I wouldn't be successful in anything. I love my mom very much and I wouldn't get up in the morning having a good day without her.

Mani — My mom is a very valuable asset to my life. She provides so much for my little sister and me. Whenever I ask for something, she is always ready and willing to get it for me, I truly appreciate that! She protects me from things harmful to me, but sometimes lets me learn on my own. She is the perfect mother and I love her so much!

Candice — My mom has always been there for me and lately, since my dad has been gone in Kansas City, she has been extremely strong with the household, my sister and I, the pets and the list goes on. Although she has nearly lost her mind with the selling of the house and keeping us all in line, she still has kept her cool and has managed to have fun and has tried to be involved in my less than perfect life. In other words, I love my mom!

Zaina — I love my mom very much because she is always there for me! I can always confide in her and so she is the best mom ever!

Wesley —

M: is for the many times you have been there for me

O: is for the outstanding cheers you cheer for me

T: is for the terrific way you love all your kids

H: is for the heart inside that cares for me

E: is for everything you ever given to me

R: is for the respect you have for me

Allie — My mom has been there for me in my lowest times. She is always there to pick me up off the floor with a prayer and a hug. I love my mom because she never stopped loving me.

Noelle — My mom always tries to act young. She always acts like a little kid. She can always cheer me up. I love it when she scares me in my room when I am on the computer.

Tori — My mom has done so much for me through out my life! I just want to tell her "Thank you and I love you for all you have done!"

Matt — She helped me out in times of struggle.

Michelle — My mom has always been there for me. When I was sick she would take care of me. When I wanted to do something, she would take me. She is so wonderful, never made me do many chores. I love her dearly and no other mother could replace her.

Abbey — My mom is wonderful, I love her so much. She is always there for me to talk to. She is always taking me places and putting up with me. If she only knew how much I appreciate it. I love you, Mom!

Amber — My mom is a single parent, she works as hard as a mother and father combined! She goes out of her way to do something nice for me — I love her to death! Yes, we fight a lot but she is my best friend and I wouldn't be able to live without her.

Robert — She helps me with orchestra and my homework. She is always there to love and support my brother and me. She cares, understands, and means the world to me!

Mandy — My mom is always there to comfort me and give advice whenever I'm depressed or have a problem. Mom sacrifices everything she has — her time, her love, and her patience, to give to me! I could not get through a single day without my mom!

Alli — I love my mommy because she: Always tells me to "break a pencil" on the TAAS! Sings "zip-a-dee-doo-dah" every time we are about to go over the waterfall at Splash Mountain so I won't be scared! Is not afraid to swim in gross moss infested water at the risk of turning green to show we're a family! Doesn't make me buy toilet paper in public.

Annie — With all the things that my mom does, such as her job, going back to school and bible study, she still has time to be our great mom!

Marivelle — My mom, What can I say? She's my mom and I love her with all my heart. Sure, she gets mad at me when I get in trouble, but that's her job. She's just trying to make me a better person and I thank her so much for it. Mom, I love you and I just want to say thank you for everything.

Breann — With love to my mom, Thank you for bringing me up in a Christian home and teaching me the many things I will need through out life. Even with bad times and good, you'll always be the greatest mom anyone could hope for. Love, Your favorite daughter.

Deborah — My mom is so awesome that I can't just say one thing about her. I love how she will do little things here and there to make a difference. When I'm hurting or sick, I can see that she feels just as bad as I do. She listens to me when I talk about how my day went. She doesn't play favorites between my older sister and me. I know both my sister and I agree we have the best mom in the world. Thanks for everything, Mom. Happy Mother's Day!

Arvin — My mom has and still is there for me each and any time! She loves me and does everything she does for me. I love her and thank her for everything she has done. She keeps me active in sports and other activities. I don't know how to explain everything she has done, but what can I say — she's my mom!

To these very sweet words, I would like to add a prayer:

Most Heavenly Father, thank you for having blessed this world with mothers. We pray for mothers who have now joined you, those who are still with us and those yet to come. Please give them the strength to continue giving, loving, sharing and caring for young people like my students.

Eric Setzler is science department liaison for Abell Junior High.

This week Midland Crime Stoppers and the Midland Police Department need your help in solving a robbery.

At about 9:45 p.m. March 21, the victim was at a convenience store located at Big Spring and Scharbauer streets. When she walked out of the store heading toward her car, a Hispanic male came up behind her and grabbed her purse. When the victim didn't let go she was dragged to the ground. The suspect let go of the purse and ran to a 1998-99 black Ford Mustang with a dent on the driver's door. The suspects fled south on Big Spring Street

The second suspect was driving the car, he is a Hispanic male, heavy set and shaved head. He was wearing a white T-shirt.

The first person to call with information leading to the arrest of these robbery suspects could receive a $1,000 cash reward. Call Midland Crime Stoppers at 694-TIPS or 1-800-7-LOCKUP. Callers remain anonymous and Caller ID is never used.

Was it a bird or freedom? Expert says dream is rarely just a dream

By Jane Greig
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — Ever had that dream in which you arrive in a classroom only to discover a major test is scheduled and you know nothing about it (best scenario) or you have not been to class at all (worst scenario)? How about a dream in which you are suddenly nude on stage, at the dinner table or in a crowd?

You have? Then you are not alone. You don't need Sigmund Freud to conclude these are typical performance anxiety dreams. Start a new job or position and this dream rears its ugly head as a common experience gone awry.

Dreams are a fascinating piece of self. How else can one fly on a broom, swim underwater without air tanks, become a vampire or punch a co-worker — and suffer no repercussions? No drugs, no hangover, no kidding? Nice thing about dreams, the dreamer is the focus, the star. The interpretation is subjective.

Did you wake up this morning with a lingering feeling from a dream you wish you could remember? Wonder what that recurring tornado dream means? Well, today is your lucky day.

What is a dream exactly?

A dream is the mental activity that occurs during REM (rapid eye movement) sleep. Sounds dull, but dreaming is anything but.

Human sleep cycles occur at 90-minute intervals throughout the night. Early REM periods are shorter than those later in the sleep cycle. Early dreams last about 10 minutes; later ones, 30-40 minutes.

Think about it. You sleep about a third of your lifetime. It is estimated that dream time is 80-100 minutes per night. If the average human sleeps 25 years of a 75-year lifetime, about five of those years are spent dreaming. Maybe those five years of dream time are worth a look.

Who dreams what?

Everyone dreams.

If they say they don't, they are lying. Well, not really lying, just failing to remember the dreams. Dreams are usually in color.

Black-and-white dreams have their own significance. Remember the dramatic effect of Dorothy in the "Wizard of Oz" going from thunderstruck Kansas to the colorful land of Oz? Black-and-white dreams could mean the focus is on the event or the self rather than the scene.

Is it a bird or is it freedom?

Deciphering the very real, very personal meaning behind dreams is tricky business. Consider, for a moment, bird dreams. Birds often symbolize freedom in the form of hopes or ambitions, for instance. A dream of a vulture could be a symbol of death and rebirth, while eagles typically mean perspective. But if you have ornithophobia — fear of birds — a dream about birds signals a fear in your life. Mom was a birder? Dreaming of birds could refer to your good, safe childhood.

Dream experts advise working on your own dream-symbol dictionary. But beware of published dream dictionaries. At best they are a starting place for interpretation.

When is a dream just a dream?

Rarely, say the experts.

Mark Shafer, an educational psychologist who teaches an informal class on dream wisdom at the University of Texas, says dreams that occur as you are falling asleep — that twilight time for you — are less symbolic than REM sleep dreams.

There are, however, a few standard symbols with widely accepted meanings. A house is reflective of the dreamer's self. Where you are in the house is significant, notes Shafer. The living room represents your social self, the bedroom your very private self. Water (all types, faucets to oceans) refers to the dreamer's emotions. Interpretation depends on how the dreamer relates to the water — is it washing over, cooling, inundating or comforting you?

Jungian analyst Priscilla Murr of Austin, who leads dream-therapy sessions, says discovering a new room in your house is a common dream, meaning you have found a new part of yourself, a new ability (For instance, "I can paint," or "I have a sense of humor"). And those dreams of being chased? Time to turn and face the fear or anxiety chasing you.

Is there a monster under the bed?

Maybe so.

Nightmares are a peek into the subconscious calling attention to a problem or concern. Children are prone to nightmares because dealing with fear is part of growing up.

Next time Junior claims a monster is under the bed, use the dream as an opportunity to find out what might be weighing on his mind. Ask questions about the dream, suggests Shafer, such as "Where were you when the dream started?" or "What happened next?"

Is interpretation a job for amateurs?

Yes and no.

Local dream enthusiast June Rodgers has been in a dream-therapy group for three years and finds it a fun way "to get into the mystery of dreams." In regular sessions, Rodgers hears a member's dream and the possible explanations offered by other members. For a nominal fee, a professional dream counselor is on hand to guide the group discussions and add references. Think of dream-theory groups like a book club with a literature professor present.

"Even if you do not understand the dream, it can tell you something about yourself," concludes Rodgers.

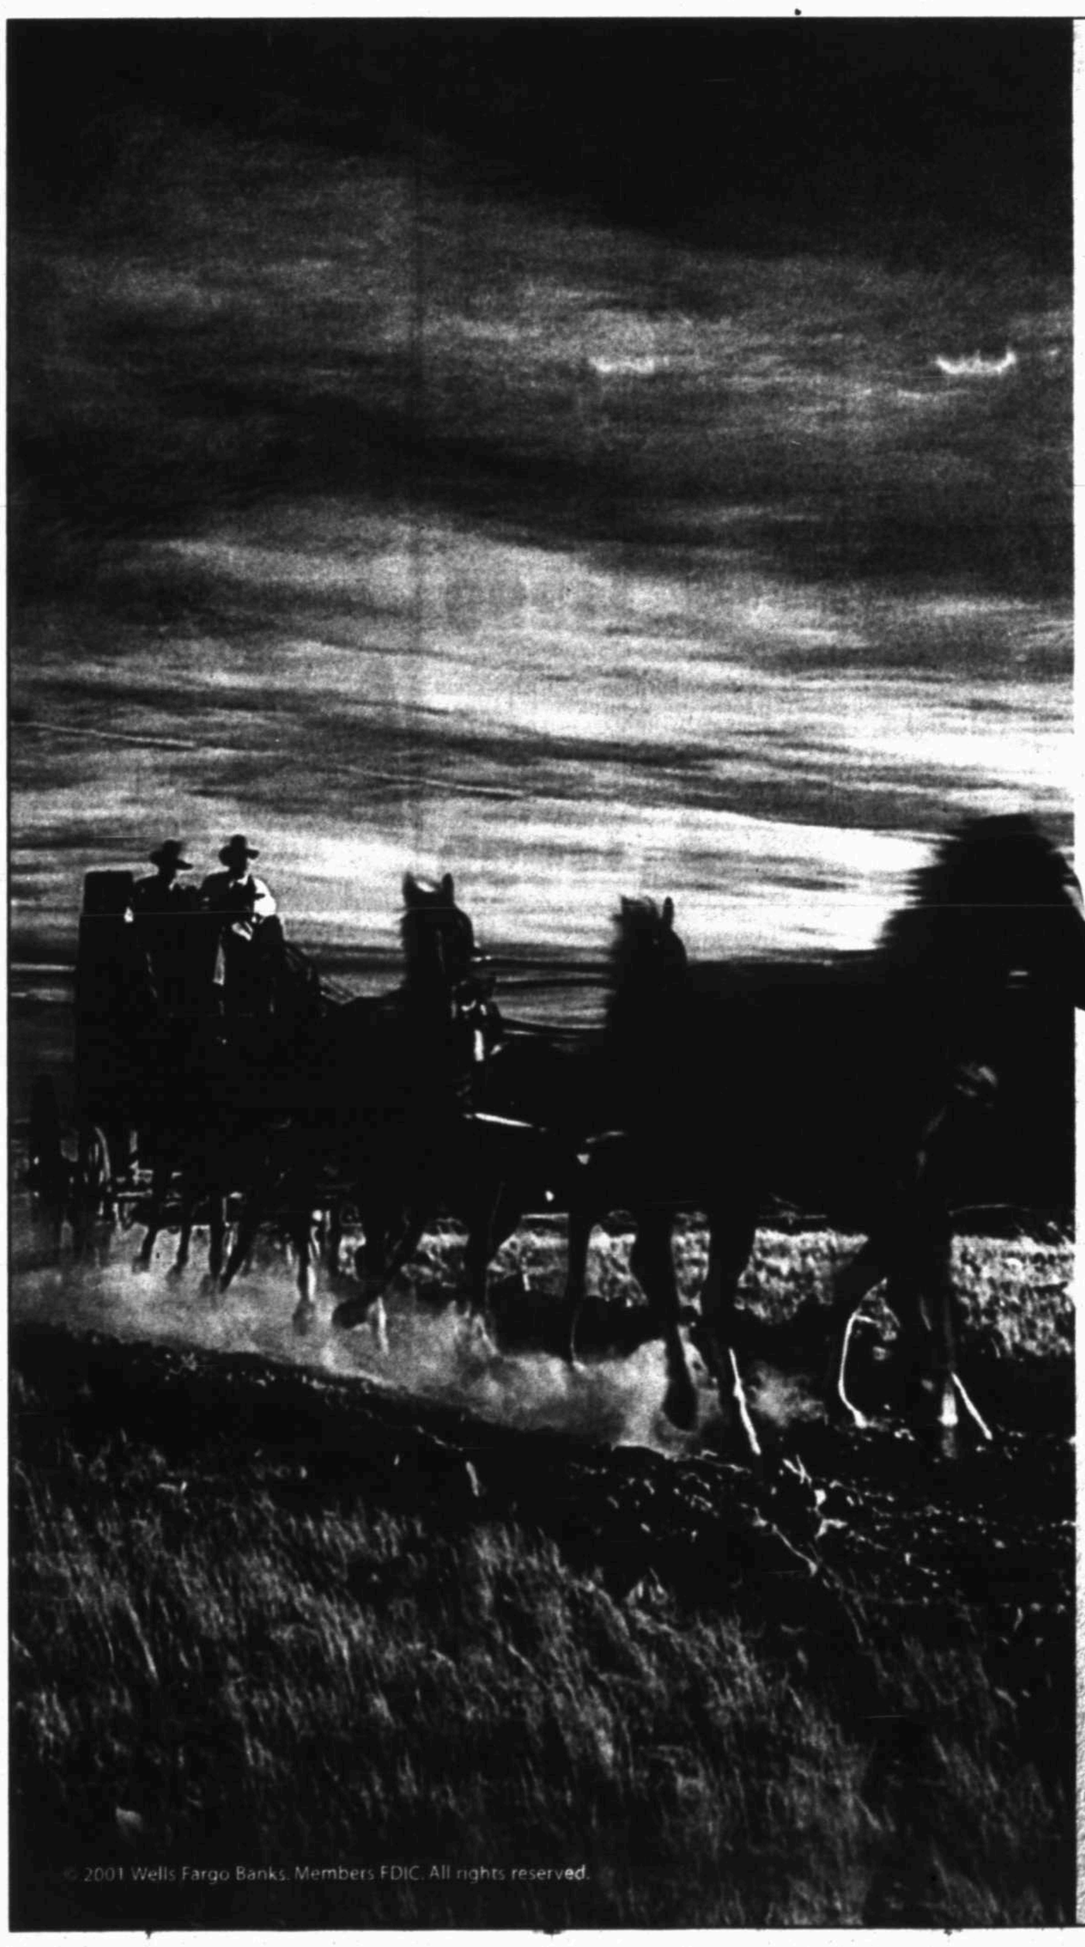

Do animals dream?

You bet they do, particularly mammals. Recent research confirms that many animals, from rats to canines, dream. Makes sense, since animals follow the same sleep pattern as humans. By measuring brain activity, MIT researchers plotted distinctive patterns in animal brains. Spot's yipping and twitching may be just a finally-landed-that-pesky-backyard-squirrel dream.

Storm chaser launches adventurous tour company

By Angela K. Brown
Associated Press

ARLINGTON — After nearly 20 years of chasing storms, Martin Lisius decided to share the experience with others: from armchair weather buffs to businessmen fascinated with Mother Nature.

So he created Tempest Tours for adventurous types willing to spend their vacations in a van searching for twisters across Texas and the Midwest. His first six clients head out next week.

"Some people think a tornado is a thing that comes after you, because for most people that's true," Lisius said. "But for us, we reverse the role. We are the predators — the tornado is the prey."

Lisius has photographed and filmed hundreds of twisters for his company Prairie Pictures, which licenses storm footage for television and movies.

He scheduled tours for May and June in areas likely to have the most supercell thunderstorms, which can produce tornadoes. Also, twisters in those months are easier to chase because they tend to move slower than those in March and April, he said.

The home base for the May tours is Oklahoma City, while June tours will be based in Denver. But the vans — equipped with a weather radio, ham radio, GPS tracking system and computer for accessing weather radar — will travel anywhere in Tornado Alley each day.

The goal is seeing a tornado from a safe distance so the group can take pictures — not driving into the storm or doing extensive research, Lisius said.

The van may get anywhere from one to five miles away, depending on roads and the storm's size, speed and direction. Lisius, who has never been injured while chasing a storm, said twisters don't change directions suddenly.

"The thing that allows you to chase safely is control, and the key to that is visibility," Lisius said. "As long as you can see a tornado, there's no reason you should die from it."

In fact, a storm chaser's greatest risk has nothing to do with weather: it's being on the road up to 400 miles a day, he said.

William Astle of Inwood, W.Va., signed up for the Tempest Tours 10-day trip starting next week.

"I'm getting a little tired of storms in the mid-Atlantic area, so I'm ready to play with the big boys," said Astle, an amateur storm chaser for the National Weather Service.

Astle has never been on a storm-chasing tour and admits he'll be disappointed if he doesn't spot at least one funnel cloud. He gladly signed the waiver releasing Tempest Tours from liability and says he does not anticipate any danger.

"People ask me, 'Why are you doing this and chasing something that we run and hide from?'" Astle said, laughing. "I've been a weather geek since I was a kid."

On dreaded sunny days the group may visit the National Severe Storms Laboratory and Storm Prediction Center in Norman, Okla., or the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo.

The tour also might stop at what Lisius calls "funky places" such as the Tornado Museum and Cadillac Ranch in Amarillo and the world's largest ball of twine in Kansas.

"They're paying good money to be entertained or educated every day, so if it doesn't storm, we'll take them to weather-related places or show them Tornado Alley," Lisius said.

Tempest Tours prices start from $1,800 for a seven-day tour and $2,250 for a 10-day tour. The cost starts at $2,750 for the 10-day lecture series tour, which features Charles A. Doswell III, former research meteorologist with the National Severe Storms Laboratory and a lecturer for the United Nations' World Meteorological Organization.

Lisius, who also founded the Texas Severe Storms Association, a nonprofit organization that provides severe weather education, hopes the tours clear up misconceptions about his career.

Unlike the movie "Twister," Lisius has never tried to drive into a storm, never seen a flying cow and never seen several tornadoes in one day. In fact, he's had only one close call, in 1991 in Oklahoma when he and other chasers stopped at a house and took cover with a farmer in his storm cellar. The group later realized the tornado wasn't as close as suspected.

One of the biggest tornadoes Lisius has ever seen was in South Dakota in May 1998, after he and others had spent the day tracking a storm system from Nebraska. Lisius filmed the almost mile-wide twister just before sunset near Spencer, S.D., the first time a violent tornado has been captured on 35mm motion picture film.

While the group was celebrating during dinner later that night, they saw news reports that the tornado had leveled the tiny town, killing six and injuring dozens.

"All of a sudden, we weren't very happy," Lisius said. "You get excited until you hear somebody gets hurt. Then it isn't fun anymore."

State's oldest Dairy Queen still serving up eats and treats

By Mark Ewy
Longview News-Journal

HENDERSON — Stephany Barton, 48, remembers when she first worked at the Dairy Queen in Tatum as a teen-ager.

"In Tatum we had things that no one else served, like a lunch special."

Those were the days before DQ's menus were more uniform and before things besides ice cream and other cold items became standard offerings.

Barton still lives in Tatum but now spends all her time in Henderson as the manager of the oldest operating DQ in Texas.

"There are a lot of nice people who come here. A lot of regulars and a lot of travelers. We'll see some regulars get out of their car and we'll place their order before they get in the store. By the time they get to the register and pay, their food is ready," Barton said.

According to Barton, the people who come to the 51-year-old DQ, located on U.S. 259, are creatures of habit, and they are a pleasure to serve.

"There are times when I think I could leave it, but I would miss it," she said.

Barton said she gets a lot of customers who are curious about the oldest operating DQ, which incidentally still has its original freezer. (It's used as storage now.)

"We get some pilgrims," Barton said.

"Some of them know more about this store than me. One man said, I helped build this store. Another will say, I remember when this was a walk-up window."

Recently, one of the locals sitting in the booths near the window finished his burger and was sipping a Coke.

"My name is Randall Francis, one of the local folks," he said, smiling.

Francis tells of going to California and coming back to the DQ in Henderson to see what he had missed.

"When you do get back, you come here to take stock and see what's changed."

In tiny towns across Texas that might not have much more than a gas station on the main drag, a Dairy Queen often could be found. In a lot of those burgs, DQ was the place where old-timers would meet to drink coffee in the morning and where teens would descend to socialize in the evenings. For some it still remains a gathering spot for the community.

"Get one every chance I get."

He's had the cone habit ever since he was a teen-ager.

"Vanilla cone with the swirl on top," he said, licking his treat methodically.

Once, he did try something different.

"I got it dipped in chocolate once. But basically I stick to the same thing," he said.

A royal education

Before heading off to college and a career, Karla DeLuca worked at another Dairy Queen in Henderson, on U.S. 79. A Burger King sits in that location now.

In the early 1970s, after DeLuca graduated from high school, there were no McDonalds, Burger Kings or pizza places in Henderson.

"If you wanted fast food in Henderson, DQ and the Whataburger were about it. I remember the cheapest drink at the DQ was 10 cents. It was 10 cents for a cone."

DeLuca, now managing editor of the Marshall News Messenger, recalled that working at DQ during the summer could get a little messy.

"One time this pickup truck pulled up to the window and in the back were 10 kids. They ordered 10 cones and as soon as you made it, it would start melting immediately. It was hard to eat a cone fast enough in the summer before it started melting."

DeLuca said that in those days Dairy Queen employees made Frito pies by putting the chili directly into the chip bag instead of mixing and serving the concoction in a bowl, as is done now with the Texas favorite.

Her favorite menu item then was a pimiento cheese sandwich, but she also recalls an incident involving chili dogs.

"One time these guys drove up and ordered chili dogs and milk. They were talking and I couldn't really get their accent. The chili dog and the milk thing was weird. Then I figured it out. They were Yankees! They were trying to put on a Southern accent, so I decided to really lay it on East Texas-style. I said, 'You boys come back heah sometime,' and their faces lit up!"

One day, DeLuca, who earned $1 an hour at DQ, dropped a big jar of strawberry sundae topping.

"It cost $12. I started crying because that was worth a 12-hour day."

She said one of her "crowning moments" while working at the DQ was when her boyfriend stopped by.

"He was on his way to A&M. He stopped by after I tried to get a chocolate malt made and it sprayed all over me. I looked pretty grungy when he drove up, and I had a big chocolate streak across my chest. I was probably looking like one of those inept people who didn't know how to work a blender."

Blending traditional

Gene Brumbelow owns seven Dairy Queens in East Texas. He bought the one in Henderson in 1988. Brumbelow built new additions to the back so he could keep the traditional look on the front.

"We could have bulldozed it, but we wanted to keep that nostalgic effect. We wanted to expand it, but we didn't want to lose the uniqueness of it. We kept the original structure. We even kept the same windows in the front to preserve the heritage."

For some, the nostalgia of a Dairy Queen can reach as far back as World War II. The first DQ was built in Joliet, Ill., in the summer of 1940. O.W. Klose opened the first DQ store in Texas in 1947 on Guadalupe Street in Austin.

At first, DQ only featured treats such as cones, sundaes, shakes, malts, banana splits and "brown derbies," as the chocolate-dipped cones were called.

But things change. With the emergence of fast-food chains, the American appetite grew larger and more impatient. Brumbelow, along with DQ headquarters, is walking a fine line between traditional and modern.

Barton explained in the trenches of the oldest operating store.

"What we are trying to do is meet the needs of the 'fast fuelers.' It's country vs. modern."

She said Dairy Queens across the nation are trying to escape the country, laid-back atmosphere.

"The new slogan is, 'Something new at DQ.' Every fast-food business has to be 'cutting-edge, and that means change," Barton said.

How's business?

Brumbelow, a former DQ accountant, bought the store from family.

"My father-in-law wanted to sell one of his DQs. I bought it from him and I've bought seven since then." Brumbelow's empire touches Tatum, Henderson, Overton, Troup, Jacksonville, Palestine and Groesbeck.

"I say this all the time. I've loved soft-serve ice cream since I was a kid. I loved it so much that I thought I had to get into the Dairy Queen business to supply my habit!" he said.

"I think if there is a large equity in the name and the product is done right in a fast, friendly, clean atmosphere, you can succeed. I have a basic belief that people want to like you because they love the product so much."

That product is the soft serve.

"It is unique. Soft serve has less fat content. It's light ice cream. They take the ice milk, put it into the machine, freeze it and it has the air blown into it. And that's what gives it the fluffiness and creaminess. Because it's so good, people think that it's loaded up with bad things. It's not like whole ice cream. "

Brumbelow said the Blizzard is the most popular product.

"The Blizzard just turned 16 years old. It is the most popular soft-serve product you have. But you still have the malts, the sundaes, the banana splits, the parfaits, the dilly bars ..."

The Dude

"We're a major player in the food side of things with the Dude and steak fingers," Brumbelow said. With 720 stores in the state, he said, Texas has its own food system. Brumbelow's father-in-law, J.N. Grimes, along with his partner Ray Morrow, invented the Dude. He just started breading the burgers for the Dude sandwich and cut them up in slices for the steak finger basket.

"The story is basically that DQ came in as an ice cream-only business, but as fast food developed in the late 60s, food started to pop up in more stores," Brumbelow said.

"DQ first started with the hot dogs, then the hamburgers were cooked, then they started breading the hamburger patties and making the fried steak."

The Dude was copyrighted in the late 1960s.

"In Texas we're probably as well-known for our food as our soft serve. You can't get (Dudes) outside of Texas. You can get a chicken basket, but not a steak finger basket."

Free children's bilingual books on Web site

By Isela Agundis
Lifestyle Writer

Dr. Hope, J.A.P.D. (just a pretend doctor) children's author from California, has his bilingual storybooks online so that persons with access to a computer and printer can download them. His primary goal in writing the Life Lessons Series was to help children learn "life lessons" to help them throughout their lives.

"Anything you can do to help promote literacy among English and Spanish-speaking youth is a good thing" said Hope.

"Laughing Day-El Dia para Reir" (Alpine Publishing, 2001, $16.95) is the first in the series and focuses on fighting meanness with kindness. It's a way of giving children tools to cope with difficult situations and disagreeable people. The second book, "Chip, the Little Computer," teaches power of determination and believing in dreams. "The Frog Who Couldn't Jump" is the third in the series and teaches that being a winner doesn't mean having to be first.

In "Laughing Day," Oolong, a young boy from the village of the Boologs is sent by his mother to buy "pickled palamodora for the village's upcoming Laughing Day celebration. He has to travel to the land of the "Grumpies" when he can't find "pickled palamodora" at the local market. On his way through the forest, he accidentally breaks a cart that was loaned to him and he becomes distressed. When an old man helps him repair his cart, he learns a valuable lesson about helping others. When he asks the man how he can repay him, the man tells him to help others without asking for any payment except that they help others in need also.

When he gets to the village he helps an old lady who is grumpy and leery of being helped but he makes her day as he picks up the bag of berries she dropped and carries them to her home. All he asks of her is to help others. Next he helps an elf who had lost his pet "Gronk" and the man is happy and unbelieving that he was helped with no payment asked in return except to return that favor to someone else. His good deeds cause a chain reaction of contagious good deeds.

The author of "Laughing Day-El Dia para Reir," was forcibly separated from his mother as a young child but kept her "spirit of optimism and humor that empowered him to cope with his ever-changing surroundings." He lived in a variety of environments, not always good. He saw many abuses during his years in foster homes, state run dormitories and boarding schools which led him to find ways to help children.

Besides the downloadable books, the website made available by Hope, and his musical partner Russ T. Nailz also have free puzzles, games, contests and music. Both men donate part of their royalties to Childhelp USA, a non-profit organization that fights child abuse.

In answer to why he is doing this Hope said, "Well, they said I was a couple of french fries short of a Happy Meal for giving my storybooks away for free but I disagree." It's all about education and to help our kids lead happier, richer lives."

Undercover reporter attends reading by Dave Eggers

By Kim Curtis
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — We sat cross-legged on the dusty bookstore floor. My knees rested on the thighs of the man and woman on either side of me. We were cramped and tired of waiting. And we were the lucky ones.

Best-selling author Dave Eggers stepped over bodies and carefully edged his way through the crowd. He miraculously made it to a folding table and microphone up front without crushing a hand or damaging a foot, and quickly apologized to the hundreds outside who couldn't get in.

"Oh man," he said. "I just wanted to read here. If you can read at City Lights, good Lord! I didn't think about this part of it, though."

The crowd Eggers attracted was close to what William S. Burroughs had drawn in the mid-1980s. Fans outside stood with faces pressed against the glass. They had arrived too late, and the landmark City Lights Bookstore in North Beach, founded in 1953 by poet Lawrence Ferlinghetti and made famous by the beatniks, was full.

The crowd Eggers attracted was close to what William S. Burroughs had drawn in the mid-1980s. Fans outside stood with faces pressed against the glass. They had arrived too late, and the landmark City Lights Bookstore in North Beach, founded in 1953 by poet Lawrence Ferlinghetti and made famous by the beatniks, was full.

And that's too bad, because the lucky ones were in for a good time. There was only one potential spoiler, and that was me.

Like everyone else, I had thoroughly enjoyed the book and felt I had come to know Eggers. He had laid himself bare in the pages of his memoir, emerging as a bring-home-to-Mom guy I genuinely wanted to meet.

But Eggers is notoriously distrustful of the media. He refuses all telephone and in-person interview requests, including one from The Associated Press for this story. He communicates with reporters only by e-mail, and then only for question-and-answer columns. Those who have attempted otherwise have been publicly pilloried.

Eggers, who publishes his own literary Web site, said he had been burned once by a reporter who had cajoled him into an interview. He wasted no time in burning back by posting the entire e-mail exchange with the reporter, along with his own scathing commentary.

"You used my words out of context, and used words that were never meant for public consumption, and now it has happened to you. ... Welcome to the club," Eggers wrote.

At the reading, I met a New York City journalist Eggers had tried to kick out of an earlier reading. She said that he allegedly threw a fit and demanded that she leave. Eggers later wrote about her, too, calling her presence "creepy."

Would I suffer the same fate? Would I be reviled on his Web site? Would he throw a tantrum in the bookstore? I had to take the risk.

The thing is, I longed for a peek at the real Eggers. At readings and in his book, he's a freewheeling, fun-loving guy. But to those who cross him, like that newspaper reporter, he can be downright mean.

San Francisco was midway through Eggers' one-month, 19-city tour promoting the paperback release of "A Heartbreaking Work of Staggering Genius," currently the nation's number one nonfiction paperback on The New York Times best sellers list.

It is a confessional and highly self-conscious memoir that tells the story of how — after both his parents died of cancer within one month — Eggers, in his early 20s, became guardian of his 8-year-old brother Christopher, who is called Toph.

With about 200,000 copies of the hardcover in print, Eggers himself has developed a cult-like following. At City Lights, the crowd appeared to include new readers as well as hard-core fans of Eggers' quarterly magazine, McSweeney's, and his comic strips that ran in SF Weekly.

Eggers is 30, although he looks a bit older. He wore green jeans and an olive drab T-shirt. Attractive. A few of the twentysomething women in the audience flirted when they asked questions and giggled more than a little at the answers.

He reminded me of Hugh Grant — self-deprecating, seemingly shy and downright funny. He spent just a few minutes reading a from his book, letting a fan pick a passage he had excluded from the paperback, published by Vintage Books in February.

The evening's entertainment got underway quickly.

— He read letters he had written to CEOs of major corporations under the guise of an Irish setter named Steven.

"I once ate a pizza," he read, managing a deadpan delivery as laughter rippled across the room. "I'm not supposed to eat pizza because I am a dog. But I don't know who makes rules like this, who can eat what. I ate the pizza and I was fine."

— He told a story about an unusual chain of coincidences. Heads nod. I must have grimaced with doubt. He caught me.

"Do you believe this?" he asked me. I shook my head. "It's true," he said. "You stand up. It's your penance for not believing. It's very true."

The crowd laughed. I blushed and remained sitting. Thank God, he moved on, to an overhead projector, showing panels from a comic strip about a frog for no particular reason.

— He interrupted himself again. "I feel like the rhythm is off," he said.

"You two. There, in the blue." He pointed at me again as I woefully check the color of my shirt. "With you there." He pointed to the man wedged against my left thigh. "It's been bugging me all night. Can you just switch?"

I untangled my legs and got up.

"You probably felt it over there," he told the other side of the room. "It's a feng shui thing."

The AP photographer sitting nearby thought Eggers was on to me. I disagreed, but turned beet red anyway — again.

— He invited the audience to write haiku about Condoleeza Rice, President Bush's national security adviser. One fan came up with this:

Condoleeza Rice confer
in Kubrick's boudoir."

Eggers proclaimed San Francisco "a good haiku town."

Wait ... this wasn't a dry, pseudo-intellectual literary discussion. This was fun! I couldn't believe I hadn't paid for this evening of entertainment. How often do adults come together to write haiku, after all?

But I had almost spoiled the fun — twice. Had he seen my notepad, my tape recorder?

He invited the audience to write haiku about Condoleeza Rice, President Bush's national security adviser...Wait ... this wasn't a dry, pseudo-intellectual literary discussion. This was fun! I couldn't believe I hadn't paid for this evening of entertainment. How often do adults come together to write haiku, after all?

Eggers announces that a bus driven by a man named Duane will arrive at 10 p.m. and will shuttle fans to a secret destination.

We're unsure whether to believe him.

But at 10:15 p.m., after Eggers has been "signing" books for two hours (he actually decorates them, using pen, paint and glitter), someone notices that a bus has circled the block several times.

I was still waiting to see the real Dave Eggers, and the audience wasn't helping. I heard only one personal question: How was Toph? Eggers says his teenage brother joined the Coast Guard. We can't tell whether this is might be true, or part of the show.

Eggers soon invites everyone outside. About 25 stragglers climb into the bus and head to a bar in the Mission District.

"Dave," as we now call him, advises us to tell the bartender we're on the bus. Dave buys our drinks. We stay. Dave circulates. He shakes our hands, asks if we're having a good time, thanks us for coming.

Hours later, Dave decides that when two people are finished playing pool, the bus will head back to the bookstore. And we do. It's almost 2 a.m. I've had a great time.

I offer a ride to a woman I met on the bus. She tells me it's the most fun she's had since she was 16.

I resolve to attend Eggers' second reading the following night at All Saints Church, a larger venue. There, certainly, I will glimpse the real Dave Eggers.

The next night, after spending a half-hour looking for a parking space, I leave my car in front of a fire hydrant. I've got 20 minutes before the show begins, but I know I'm in trouble when I see the throng outside. A bright sign says "sold out." I try elbowing my way through the crowd, then give up. I can't even see the door.

I won't be meeting the real Dave Eggers, after all. Or maybe I already have.

Winning Pulitzer prize gives authors acclaim and money

By Jill Vejnoska
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Talk about your amazing adventures.

After losing several major literary prizes this year, Michael Chabon won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction in April for his colorful, touching novel "The Amazing Adventures of Kavalier & Clay."

The sprawling story of two young comic-book entrepreneurs who create superheroes in part to escape their own dissatisfying lives had been a finalist for both the National Book Critics Circle and PEN/Faulkner awards.

"Did I really win?" asked Chabon, whose previous novel "Wonder Boys" was made into a feature film starring Michael Douglas. "I had kind of figured it was not my year. My goodness, this is exciting."

David Levering Lewis claimed his second Pulitzer for biography, for "W.E.B. Du Bois: The Fight for Equality and the American Century, 1919-1963." Lewis also won in 1994 for his first volume on Du Bois, the renowned civil rights leader and onetime professor at Atlanta University.

Atlanta will have another brush with Pulitzer fame next year when the Alliance Theatre stages "Proof" beginning March 28. David Auburn's Broadway hit about mathematics and madness won the prize for drama. The Alliance is one of a small handful of regional theaters given the rights to produce the piece.

Winning a Pulitzer brings $7,500 and incalculable prestige to individuals, some of whom might otherwise receive little acclaim outside their own arts and cultural specialties.

Thank You for Your Work

Bulldogs take 2 from Eastwood to advance

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

ALPINE — Needing two wins Saturday to stay alive in the playoffs and extend a sterling season, the Midland High baseball team got exactly what it needed from those who had been there before.

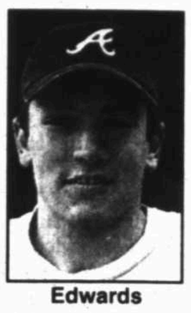

With some players who are making their third straight trip to the postseason and others their second straight, the Bulldogs had to forget Friday's loss to El Paso Eastwood in the first game of the area round best-of-three series at Kokernot Field. It simply came down to taking care of business Saturday.

Game 2
Midland High	7
Eastwood	6
Game 3
Eastwood	0

"I didn't feel like we were going to lose the series even after we lost that first game," said senior Jayson Nix, who along with Matt Bose has been three-year starter and playoff participant for MHS.

And it's thanks in large part to Nix that the Bulldogs didn't lose Saturday. With arms running short by the decisive third game, Nix, normally Midland High's shortstop, was called to the mound in his team's biggest game of the season. He didn't disappoint, as he pitched a six-inning four-hit shutout which was supported by an offensive outburst as the Bulldogs cruised to a 10-0 run rule victory which put them in the regional quarterfinals next week.

MHS will play Amarillo High in next week's playoffs, most likely in Lubbock.

Edwards

Midland High (26-6) got to play a third game because it escaped the second game with a 7-6 victory in which Nix pitched the final two innings for the save. The way that game ended convinced MHS coach Barry Russell that Nix was perfect for the pitching task in the second game.

"I figured that since he closed out the first one (on Saturday) he'd still have something left he could carry into the next game," said Russell of Nix. "I didn't expect him to go the whole game. It was a gutsy performance."

Nix, Midland High's leadoff hitter, got things going in the top of the first of the final game by drawing a walk from David Ramirez on four pitches. After a run came around to score following an infield single by Bose, senior Madison Edwards, another playoff veteran, slammed a two-run home run to right which gave the Bulldogs a 3-0 lead and Nix all the cushion he needed.

Edwards, Midland High's catcher who would drive in three runs in the final game, caught the final eight innings of the day for the Bulldogs, all of which Nix threw, and had confidence with the season riding on Nix' shoulders.

"He was kind of dominating (Eastwood's hitters) in the first game so I knew he could keep it up in the second," said Edwards. "The run support and the defense helped too."

Through the first five innings of the final game, Nix allowed only a pair of infield singles. Meanwhile, Ramirez was gone by the second inning as the Bulldogs had stretched the lead to 9-0 by the fifth and a run-rule win seemed like only a matter of time.

All Nix had to do was avoid any major mistakes.

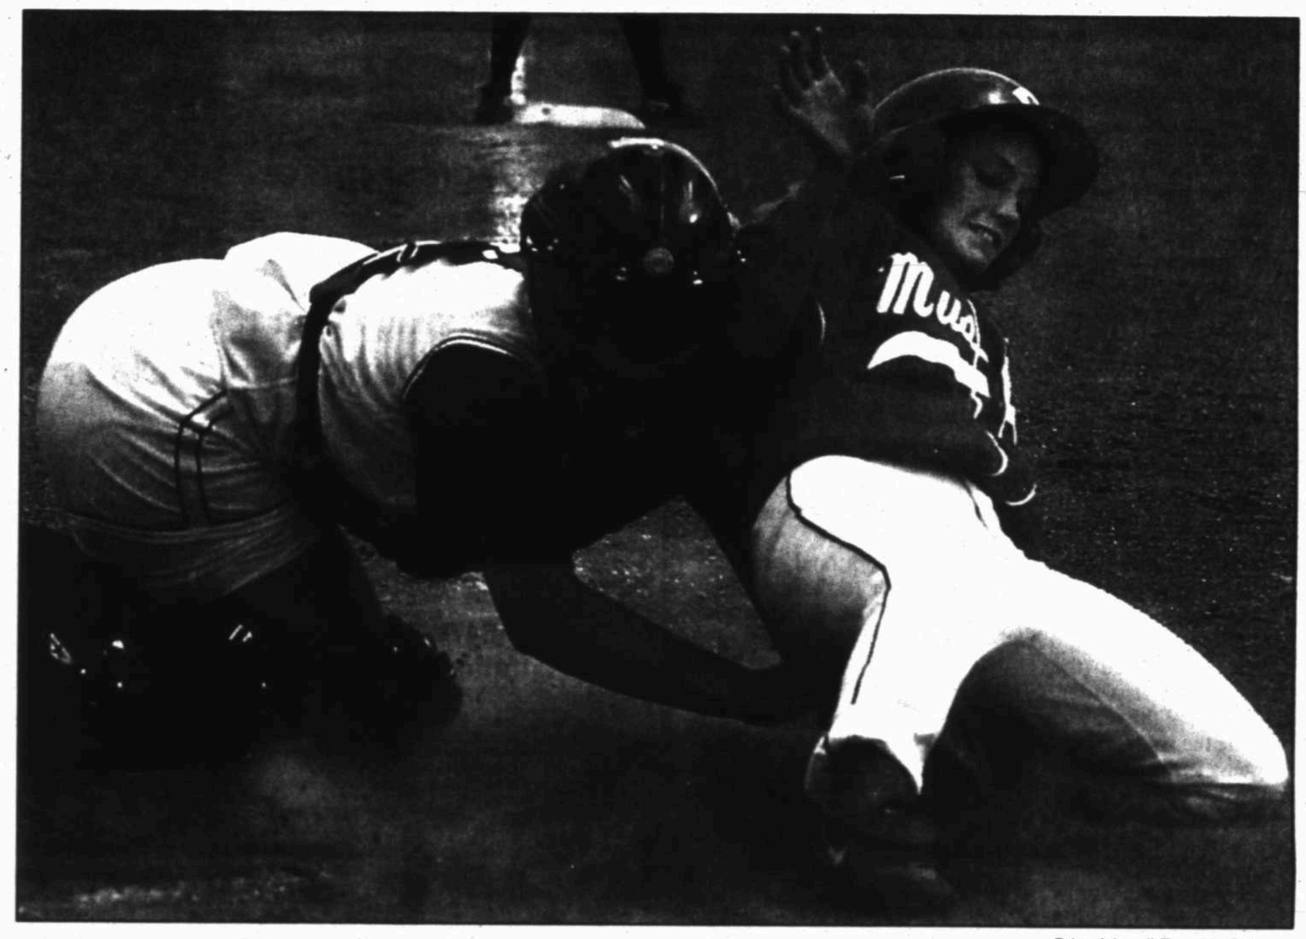

"I wasn't expecting (to start) but it was a situation where I was fresh and ready to go," said Nix. "(The early lead) helped a lot on giving me an opportunity to throw in up there, take some chances and let the defense make some plays."

With two outs in the top of the sixth, Michael Forrest, who had three hits, doubled to right field off Lance Son to drive in James Gripp (another playoff veteran from last year who also had three hits) and give the Bulldogs their 10-run cushion.

In the bottom of the inning, Nix allowed singles to Aaron Vasquez and Andy Diaz and hit Paul Cataldi with a pitch to load the bases with two outs. But Mario Perea popped up to Nix on the pitcher's mound to end Eastwood's season.

SOFTBALL PLAYOFFS

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Lee catcher Shandi Neatherlin couldn't stop Lubbock Coronado's Tyson Tew from scoring late in the game, but the run was the only one the Lady Mustangs could manage. Lee scratched out a 3-1 victory in the regional quarterfinals to advance to play South Grand Prairie.

Hacker fans nine as Lee defeats Coronado in Region I-5A quarters

By Darren Tomhave
MRT Correspondent

ANDREWS - J.J. Johnson was hoping to catch the Midland Lee softball team on an off day.

The Lubbock Coronado coach may have gotten his wish on Saturday, but the Lady Rebels proved that even on their off days, they still can be pretty tough to beat.

Lee overcame some shaky defense by carving out a pair of runs in the fourth inning and relying on senior pitcher Mandy Hacker, who scattered eight hits as the Lady Rebels downed the Lady Mustangs 3-1 in a Region 1-5A quarterfinal at Andrews High School.

The Lady Rebels (34-2-1) advance to the regional semifinals, where they will take on South Grand Prairie at a site and time still to be determined. The upstart Lady Mustangs (22-9), meanwhile, see their season end after collecting their sixth consecutive District 3-5A championship and fourth straight 20-win season.

Midland Lee	3
Coronado	1

However, confidence and talent fell just short against the Lady Rebels, who entered the game having allowed just one run in four playoff games. Lee has been buoyed by a pair of standout senior pitchers in Hacker and Brandie Row, and it was no different on Saturday. Hacker opened the game by striking out the side in the first and fanned nine hitters on the day.

Coronado starter Kristen Carter matched her through three innings, though she lacked Hacker's overpowering repertoire. The junior right-hander was in trouble from the outset after Crista Hargrove and Marci DiGennaro led off the first with infield singles. However, Carter retired the next three hitters, as well as the side in the second.

It wasn't until the fourth when Lee finally solved her, putting together a walk, two hard-hit singles and a Coronado error to take a 2-0 lead. The Lady Mustangs nearly escaped the inning unscathed after Lee courtesy runner Hayley Corbett stumbled rounding third base on a two-out single by Cara Brininstool. Corbett had to hustle back to third instead, after Coronado right fielder Amanda Spruill corralled the hit and hurried the throw back to the infield.

Smith throws one-hitter to lead Greenwood

Staff Report

ANDREWS — Greenwood's Erin Smith allowed the leadoff hitter for Kermit to reach on a single, but after that, Greenwood's ace was unhittable.

Smith allowed just one hit and one walk to go along with her 12 strikeouts against the Lady Yellowjackets in a 1-0 victory for Greenwood in the Region I-3A quarterfinals Saturday at Andrews High School. Greenwood swept the best-of-three series.

Smith improves her record to 29-8, while the Rangerettes improved to 30-8 for the season. Greenwood next plays Graham in the regional semifinals and Rangerettes coach Ken Ferguson said that game will probably be at 5 p.m. Friday in Abilene.

Unlike Friday's 11-0 run-ruled win by Greenwood in Game 1, Saturday's contest proved to be a tough defensive battle. While Kermit was held to just one hit, the Rangerettes tallied six hits (Smith had two) but couldn't get any runs until the top of the seventh inning.

Courtney Awalt led off the inning with a single, went to second base on a sacrifice bunt by Laura Mauldin and then scored on a single by Stephanie Wardlaw. That run proved just enough for Greenwood.

"I didn't expect it to be that easy the day before," said Ferguson, referring to the run-ruled victory on Friday. "Kermit is much tougher team than that first game's score showed. That's why we decided to go to a three-game series because it really could've gone either way.

"This is the step we needed to take if we wanted to achieve the goals we set at the beginning of the year. This is a series we thought we could win. We're just happy to get to the next step."

Fuchs adds silver at state

By Jay Peden
Sports Writer

AUSTIN — The high school athletic careers of two top Garden City athletes — seniors Michelle Fuchs and M'Lynn Niehues — ended Saturday at the UIL State Track Championships. Both finished up well, especially Fuchs, who added to her collection of state-level jewelry.

Only an hour after Niehues finished fifth in the Class A girls' 400-meter run Saturday afternoon, Fuchs took second place in the 1,600, claiming a silver medal to go with the gold she won in the 3,200 Friday.

The win in the 3,200 wasn't a tremendous surprise, but such success in the 1,600 was unexpected.

"I was thinking that I'd be lucky to bring home a medal," Fuchs said of her prospects in the 1,600. "The two-mile (3,200) is my race. I've always had better two-mile times than mile (1,600) times."

Like Friday's 3,200, Fuchs had a lot of speed left at the end of Saturday's race. After 800 meters, Fuchs was next to last in a fairly tight pack, and she was fifth after three laps. But over the final 200 meters, she passed all but one of the girls in front of her as the crowd of 18,765 in the Mike A. Myers Stadium cheered.

Fuchs finished in 5 minutes and 26.8 seconds. Only Landra Stewardson of Detroit finished ahead of her, in 5:23.46. Stewardson got some revenge for Friday's 3,200, when she was the last girl Fuchs passed on the way to winning.

Fuchs attributes her strong final kick to running 400-meter legs as part of Garden City's 400 relay team. At this state meet, she did run the final 400 meters of her races almost like she was running only 400 meters.

"I've been running on the mile relay all year, hoping that's what it would do: so I'd have a strong last lap," she said. "It saved me."

Fuchs hadn't been pushed in a race all year until this weekend, and she said she enjoyed running in races that required strategy.

"This meet was really nice to run," she said. "It's the first time

Mavs get must-win over Spurs

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — When the buzzer sounded, Dirk Nowitzki walked off the court gently touching his bloodied mouth.

Spurs	108

Nowitzki led a team-wide break from a series-long shooting slump, scoring 30 points as the Mavericks beat the San Antonio Spurs 112-108 Saturday to avoid being swept from the second-round series. Game 5 is Monday night in San Antonio.

Dallas, which had lost the first three games by at least 14 points each, improved to 4-0 in elimination games this postseason. Nowitzki has been the leading scorer in three of them.

This time, the third-year forward from Germany did it three days after needing two IVs to play through food poisoning and despite being elbowed in the mouth by Terry Porter with 4:52 left.

"A lot of things have happened to me lately; I don't know what the deal is," Nowitzki said. "As long as we win a couple of games, I'll be all right."

Nowitzki missed only 33 seconds of game time while getting some gauze to stop the bleeding, then came back and grabbed the first possible rebound. He also went on to score his final four points, including two free throws with 6.1 seconds left, and make a smart defensive play.

"What a gutsy guy," Dallas coach Don Nelson said. "Our whole team kind of rallied around that, I think, and everybody played at a high level."

After shooting horribly through three games, the Mavs made nearly half their shots (45-of-93) and their leading men — Nowitzki, Michael Finley, Juwan Howard and Steve Nash — all came up big.

The outburst produced the most points in regulation against the Spurs all season and it was 19 more than they had allowed in eight games this postseason.

Finley had 25 points and 10 assists. His two free throws with 1.7 seconds guaranteed the victory, after his missed free throw with 15.7 seconds left kept San Antonio's hopes alive.

Howard had 17 points and eight rebounds. Three of his baskets came during a 9-0 run early in the fourth quarter that put Dallas ahead for good.

Nash had 10 points and 14 assists, including six on the team's first eight baskets as the Mavericks finally returned to the up-tempo, jump-shooting style that got it this far and led by 17 in the second quarter.

San Antonio answered with a 19-4 run that made it a two-point game at halftime. The Spurs led by three early in the fourth quarter and kept hitting clutch shots every time Dallas tried putting them away.

"Usually when you get that momentum back and you get the game tied or go ahead, you think you're going to get the game," said David Robinson, who had 25 points and 13 rebounds. "Even into the last few seconds I thought we were going to get the game."

San Antonio closed to 108-107 on a dunk by Antonio Daniels. Then Nowitzki made his two clutch free throws, again leaving San Antonio within a 3-pointer of tying it.

Verplank, Damron lead a Texas shootout

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

IRVING — Even before he teed it up Saturday with a share of the lead, Scott Verplank noticed on the electronic scoreboard that Justin Leonard was on his way to a tournament-tying 61 in the Byron Nelson Classic.

"When you see that, obviously low scores can be shot," Verplank said.

Only Verplank couldn't manage one.

Neither could co-leader David Duval. Or Tiger Woods.

The best news for Verplank on a day of wasted chances was that his bogey-free 2-under 68 still left him in a tie for the lead with Robert Damron.

"I could have put some distance between myself," said Verplank, who joined Damron (67) at 13-under 197. "It'll be a lot more exciting."

It should be a classic Texas shootout — Leonard and Vijay Singh (67) one stroke behind, 11 players within three shots of the lead, and 32 players within six shots.

It didn't have to be that way. With overnight rain making the TPC at Las Colinas play as easy as it has all week, Verplank made only two birdies — a 12-footer on No. 4 and a 5-footer on No. 16.

Damron was headed in that direction until he got a good break when his tee shot hit a tree and stopped short of going in the water on No. 9. He got his par, and decided that must have been a good omen.

Damron made six birdies on the back nine, including four of the last five holes, and is a 54-hole co-leader for the second time in his career. The last time, in the 1997 St. Jude Classic, Greg Norman birdied the last three holes to beat him out.

"I'm playing well enough," Damron said. "My job now is just to not put any undue pressure on me because of the situation."

Marlins' Burnett throws no-no against San Diego

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — A.J. Burnett threw the third no-hitter in the Florida Marlins' nine-year history, beating the San Diego Padres 3-0 Saturday night for the 24-year-old's first career complete game in the major leagues.

Burnett, who walked nine, was making just his second start of the season and 22nd of his three-year major league career. He missed the first month while on an injury rehabilitation assignment due to a stress fracture in his right foot.

It was only his second complete game in 99 starts as a professional. Of his 128 pitches, just 65 were strikes.

Catcher Charles Johnson ran out and hugged Burnett near home plate, and the rest of the Marlins mobbed the pitcher.

Burnett (1-1) improved his career record to 8-10 with the win. He struck out seven, hit a batter and threw a wild pitch.

The closest the Padres came to a hit was on Alex Arias' grounder to shortstop in the seventh. Gonzalez made a sliding, backhanded stop, and his throw was up the first-base line. Arias tried to hop over Derrek Lee's tag, but Lee tagged Arias on the left foot.

An inning earlier, Bubba Trammell hit a grounder to the hole at second but Luis Castillo got to it and threw him out.

Burnett had a double at the plate in the second, giving him one more hit than he allowed.

Al Leiter threw Florida's first no-hitter on May 11, 1996, against Colorado, and Kevin Brown — San Diego's ace in 1998 — no-hit San Francisco on June 10, 1997.

Burnett, coincidentally, came to the Marlins in the deal that sent Leiter to the New York Mets on Feb. 6, 1998.

Burnett's gem was the second of the season. Boston's Hideo Nomo no-hit Baltimore on April 4.

The Padres have been no-hit five times, twice at home. The previous was Sept. 11, 1991, a combined no-no by Kent Mercker, Mark Wohlers and Alejandro Pena.

ROCKHOUNDS REPORT

Midland powers way past San Antonio in 7-4 victory

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — Two big swings of the bat turned out to be the difference for the Midland RockHounds Saturday night.

Mike Lockwood and Todd Mensik both delivered big blows which brought home five runs and gave RockHounds' starter Aaron Harang all he needed as the 'Hounds withstood a late uprising by the San Antonio Missions for a 7-4 victory.

Lockwood and Mensik each drove in three runs for Midland, which got the bulk of its offense in the first two innings. The 'Hounds cracked the scoring column in the first when Mensik singled to drive home Lockwood, but that was nothing compared to what they combined to do in the next inning.

With the bases loaded and two outs in the second, that's when Lockwood and Mensik did the most serious damage to San Antonio starter Brian Falkenborg. Lockwood doubled to clear the bases, then Mensik followed with a home run to right which gave the 'Hounds a 6-0 lead.

That turned out to be enough for Harang, who improved to 3-2. Harang gave up only one run on four hits through seven innings. The 'Hounds closed out the scoring in the top of the seventh when Jacques Landry hit a solo homer, his Texas League-leading 15th of the season.

Reliever Kevin Gregg gave up three runs in the bottom of the eighth, but Claudio Galva came on in the ninth for the save, his second of the season.

ROCKHOUND BITES: The 'Hounds and Missions meet again this afternoon at 2:05 p.m... Midland will send lefthander Mario Ramos (3-1, 3.09 ERA) to the mound against San Antonio's Scott Atchison (3-2), whose 1.77 ERA is third in the league... Ryan Ludwick had two hits for the 'Hounds, extending his hitting streak to a team season high 10 games.

Trinidad stops Joppy in the fifth round

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Felix Trinidad Jr. put on a sensational show before a roaring Madison Square Garden crowd, stopping William Joppy in the fifth round early Sunday to take the WBA middleweight title.

Trinidad, becoming a champion in a third weight division, just had too much power for Joppy, knocking him down in the first, fourth and fifth rounds as a pro-Trinidad crowd cheered itself hoarse.

The third knockdown came in the final minute of the fifth round when Trinidad landed a right. Joppy went down, came up almost immediately, and stumbled into the ring post. As he went along the ropes, referee Arthur Mercante Jr. stopped the fight at 2:25.

It was truly a stunning performance by the 28-year-old Puerto Rican, unbeaten in 40 fights with 33 knockouts.

The victory will put Trinidad into a fight for the undisputed middleweight title in the Garden on Sept. 15 against Bernard Hopkins, who retained the IBF title and won the WBC championship by outpointing Keith Holmes on April 14.

Trinidad became the first former welterweight to win a middleweight tile since Roberto Duran in 1989. Trinidad also won the IBF and WBA 154-pound titles, which he now will relinquish.

The right hand was Trinidad's big weapon throughout. Joppy simply could not get out of the way of it.

Joppy, who weighed 158 3/4 pounds, a half-pound less than Trinidad, got through the second round and appeared to have the best of the third when he landed several good right-lefts to the head.

Keller wins CVS Pharmacy 200

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) —Jason Keller sped by Busch series points leader Kevin Harvick on the 185th lap Saturday to win the CVS Pharmacy 200, a race that ended in near fisticuffs and tears, but not tragedy.

"I had tears rolling down my cheeks the last 10 laps," Keller said. "I couldn't help but think about Adam."

Keller's emotional victory came one year to the day after Adam Petty was killed while practicing at New Hampshire International Speedway. Then, less than two months later, Kenny Irwin was killed in a crash in the same third turn.

(From 1C)

But Nowitzki never let the Spurs get it off. He fouled Tim Duncan with 5.1 seconds left and the poor foul shooter made only the first one.

After his miss was nearly tipped in by Malik Rose, Sean Elliott got the rebound, only to have the ball popped away by Greg Buckner, Dallas' defensive specialist. Finley wound up with it, leading to the game-securing shots.

"It was just a lucky play," Buckner said.

The Spurs might've won if they were better from the foul line. They were 29-of-41, with five misses in the final quarter, while Dallas went 18-of-19.

"I missed eight free throws and we lost by three — that's the difference right there," said Duncan, who led San Antonio with 29 points and 18 rebounds.

Nowitzki opened the game with a short jumper, then dunked over Robinson, letting the Spurs know immediately that they weren't going to go quietly.

Nowitzki had 16 points at the half. He scored eight in the third quarter despite picking up his fourth foul early in the period.

He lost his tooth while trying to get the ball from Porter. Porter's elbow clipped Nowitzki in the mouth and he immediately ran to the locker room, blood dripping from his lip. The Mavs led 103-97 at the time.

Nowitzki said the tooth had been loosened over the summer. He said he's glad it's gone so he can get a fake one.

"He looks like a hockey player," Howard said. "He's no longer a sex symbol to the ladies like he was before."

The victory prevented the Mavericks from their first four-game losing streak of the season. Having become the sixth team to win a five-game series after losing the first two, they're now trying to become the first team to ever win a seven-game series after losing the first three.

"We're not ready for our summer to start," Finley said. "It's been very evident in the closing games. It just shows you the type of heart we have as a team.

"Hopefully we can keep that going in San Antonio."

NELSON: Woods struggles with 69

(From 1C)

Duval made five bogeys, three times missing the green that left him virtually no shot at par, but birdied the last for a 70 and was at 199 along with Brian Watts (63), Mike Weir (65) and Nick Price (65).

Like Verplank, Duval took only positives out of an otherwise lackluster round.

"I'm excited about having a chance," he said. "I could have really hurt myself today, and I didn't."

Woods, who squandered a chance to make a move by making three bogeys on the back nine for a 69. He was at 203.

"I struggled all day and have a lot of work to do," Woods told a tour official. He went straight to the practice range after his round.

What could make the final round even more intriguing is that none of the top 13 players on the leaderboard have won this year on the PGA Tour. Four of them have never won at all.

"It's going to be a real dog fight," Singh said.

Leonard is not known for taking it low. Until Saturday, his best score was a 63 two years ago on the easier Cottonwood Valley course. The bigger surprise was that he finished at 12 under as the leaders were on the fifth hole, he remained close to the lead at day's end.

While Verplank had only two birdies, Duval also wasted a chance to pull away by missing greens on the short side of the flag. One of those came on No. 6, when a chip from a swale scooted some 50 feet past the hole.

Meanwhile, good scores turned into great ones with the leaders not making a move. Weir was was walking down the fairway when he looked at a scoreboard and saw the lead at 12 under.

"I thought I had missed a page," he said. "I thought shooting 65, I might be within four or five of the lead."

David Toms, who last week had a 127 on the weekend in New Orleans to win, got started in the similar direction with a 62.

About the only guys who didn't make a move were those at the top.

Verplank gave himself a few decent chances and missed only three greens, but mostly stared at 25-foot putts. He holed a 15-footer on No. 4 for birdie, and after 11 straight pars, pitched to 5 feet for another birdie on the par-5 16th.

Still, he is in great position to go wire-to-wire in the Nelson Classic since Tom Watson in 1980, and become the first Dallas-born player to win this tournament. "Obviously, I'm very pleased to be tied for the lead," he said. "It would really be something special to win this tournament."

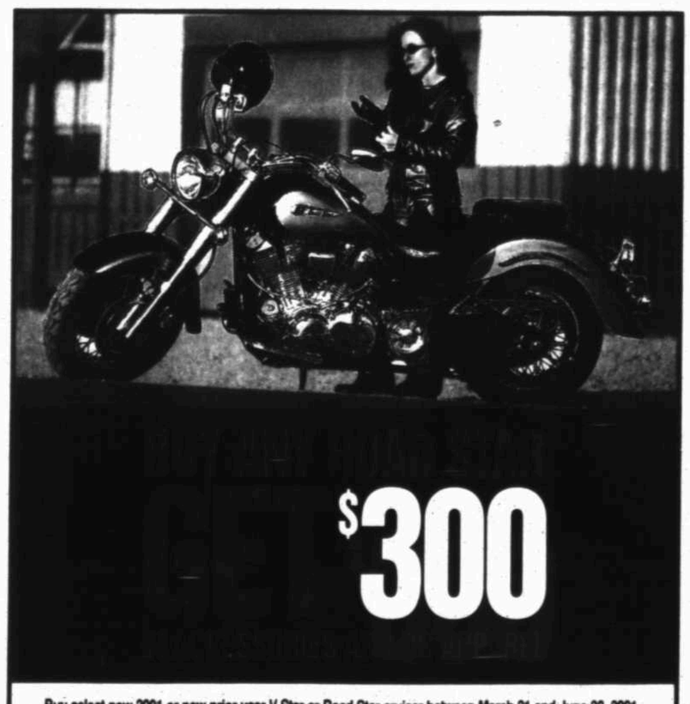

Still, there was evidence that an opportunity was left behind.

A dozen player had 65 or better, and 38 players had at least 67.

Leonard, who has never had a top-10 finish in his hometown tournament and last year opened with an 80, was headed for another ho-hum finish when he reached the turn. Starting with a 40-foot putt, he made birdies on the first two and final four holes for a 29 for his career-low round.

"I've played a lot of bad rounds on this golf course and at this tournament," Leonard said. "All those people have seen and been with me through all those poor rounds. Today is kind of a nice way to pay them back."

Woods had been the last player to shoot 61 on the TPC at Las Colinas. The others were Charlie Rymer in 1996, Ernie Els in 1995 and Billy Mayfair in 1993. Of those, Els is the only player who went on to win the tournament.

Rodriguez hits career homers 200, 201 to lead Texas past Sox

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Alex Rodriguez hit his 200th and 201st career homers and drove in six runs, leading the Texas Rangers over the Chicago White Sox 16-6 Saturday night to end a six-game losing streak.

Rodriguez hit a two-run homer, and Gabe Kapler and Ken Caminiti also connected in a five-run first inning.

Rodriguez added a three-run homer to cap a five-run ninth. He also hit a run-scoring single in his second six-RBI game of the season.

At 25 years and 289 days, Rodriguez became the fifth-youngest player in major league history to reach 200 home runs.

Texas had lost 11 of 12 coming in, including a club-record four straight by one run.

Rusty Greer reached on an error by shortstop Jose Valentin to lead off the game. After Randy Velarde hit into a forceout, Rodriguez hit his 11th homer of the season.

One out later, Andres Galarraga singled and Kapler homered off Jon Garland (1-2). Caminiti then followed with his fifth of the season to put Texas up 5-0.

Rodriguez, who entered play Saturday just 4-for-23 in his previous five games, added an RBI single in the second. After a walk to Rafael Palmeiro loaded the bases, Garland was relieved after throwing 60 pitches in just 1 1-3 innings. Reliever Kip Wells then walked Galarraga and Kapler back-to-back to force in two runs and make it 8-0.

Texas starter Aaron Myette, a first-round draft pick of the White Sox in 1997 who was traded for Royce Clayton in December, couldn't profit from an 8-0 lead. He gave up four runs in the bottom of the second.

Myette walked three batters in the inning and gave up RBI singles to Chris Singleton, Jeff Liefer and Jose Valentin and a sacrifice fly to Ray Durham before Pat Mahomes relieved.

Mahomes (2-2) got Paul Konerko on a bases loaded fly to end the inning and allowed just two hits over 4 1-3 scoreless innings for the win.

Texas added on in the seventh when pinch-hitter Frank Catalanotto hit a three-run double off Lorenzo Barcelo.

BULLDOGS: MHS to play Amarillo

(From 1C)

"(MHS) jumped on us early and we didn't respond," said Eastwood coach Ruly Medrano, whose team finished the season 21-11. "Today we just didn't hit the ball, especially with men on base."

The Bulldogs, who lost Friday's game 5-3 in 11 innings, never trailed in the last two games. Nix started the day by homering to left field off Perea, and by the fifth inning MHS had taken a 5-1 lead.

In the bottom of the inning, though, Eastwood finally got to MHS starter Daniel Stovall, singling on four straight pitches to eventually cut the lead to 5-4. After Ramirez led off the sixth with a double, Nix relieved Stovall, and Son laid a sacrifice bunt down the first base line which MHS first baseman Colby Overstreet fielded and threw to Jason South covering first, where South appeared to have dropped the ball.

During the fracas, Ramirez, who was running on the pitch, eventually came home to score what looked like the tying run, but the first base umpire ruled that Son had interfered with Overstreet and called him out, also sending Ramirez back to second. Nix retired the next two batters to end the inning.

In the top of the seventh, Nix led off the inning with a walk, and scored when Bose belted a two-run homer the other way to right (only his second of the season), giving Midland High a 7-4 lead. That was huge, since with two outs in the bottom of the seventh, Roberto Martinez smashed a two-run homer to left off Nix to cut it to a run, but Nix retired Perea on a pop up to second to end the game.

Houston splits with Cincinnati

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Alex Ochoa singled home the winning run with two outs in the ninth inning Saturday night, giving the Cincinnati Reds a 5-4 victory and a doubleheader split with the Houston Astros.

In the opener, Craig Biggio homered, doubled and scored the tiebreaking run on Deion Sanders' latest outfield misplay as the Astros won 2-1.

Sanders misplayed Lance Berkman's fly into a decisive double in the first game. He was on the bench in the second game when Berkman hit his first pinch homer, a three-run shot off Danny Graves (2-1) that tied it at 4 with two outs in the ninth.

Ochoa also hit a two-run homer and Casey drove in a pair of runs as the Reds pulled ahead 4-1.

Graves, who walked Matt Williams with the bases loaded in the 11th inning of a 4-3 loss in Arizona on Tuesday, blew the save in his second consecutive appearance by giving up a homer to Berkman, who had been 1-for-27 career as a pinch-hitter.

The victory snapped Cincinnati's streak of six consecutive home losses. The Reds have won only two of their last 10 overall.

In the first game, an outfield blunder by Sanders led to a Reds' loss for the second consecutive game.

Biggio hit a solo homer, his fourth, to tie it at 1 in the fourth inning, then doubled to left with one out in the sixth inning off Rob Bell (0-2). With two outs, Berkman hit a fly to center that eluded Sanders, who was looking into the sun.

The speedy NFL cornerback initially broke the wrong way, then froze and vainly tried to make up for his misjudgment. The ball flew over his head at the warning track for a double that brought Biggio home.

Sanders also misplayed a fly ball into a double during a three-run inning in Arizona last Wednesday as the Diamondbacks rallied for a 5-2 win.

The slumping Sanders went 1-for-4 with an RBI double in the first game, then pinch-hit and fouled out in the second, dropping his average to .219. He's 4-for-29 (.138) since his three-hit return to the majors on May 1.

Shane Reynolds (3-2) escaped a four-hit first inning with the help of Houston's outfield, which nailed Sanders at home and Dmitri Young at third. Reynolds then settled in and led the Astros to their sixth victory in eight games.

"I've never seen a game start that way: four straight hits, one run," Reynolds said. "Maybe we got lucky and it was my day."

SOFTBALL: Hargrove has three hits

(From 1C)

However, Row followed with a hard-hit grounder off Coronado third baseman Charlette Armstead's glove, and beat out the throw to first, which pulled Amanda Evans off the bag. The grounder allowed Corbett to cross home plate, and Jessica Thompson plated Brininstool with a single to center field.

The sequence typified Lee's fortunes: Even on a botched play, the Lady Rebels managed to overcome it and turn it into something positive.

"When you get this far in the playoffs, you're going to get two good teams that are going to battle each other," Lee coach Wes Overton said. "Some days, you're not going to have your best game. Coronado played great (Saturday), and this wasn't our best game. But we worked our way through it and didn't give up. We didn't panic, and we kept right on going."

The Lady Mustangs responded in the sixth by manufacturing a run on two hits and a nifty delayed double steal. Coronado put runners on the corners with two outs following singles by Chanee Reed and Carter. With Janeen Leach at the plate, Carter wandered between first and second, drawing a throw from Hacker, allowing pinch runner Tyson Tew to race home and beat the tag at the plate

However, Lee added an insurance run in the sixth on a single from Hargrove. The Lady Rebels managed eight hits — and a handful of other smashes that were swallowed by Coronado infielders — against Carter and Leach, who entered the game in the fourth.

"They're just a little bit slower than what we're used to in our district," said Hargrove, who finished with three hits. "We struggle sometimes with slower pitchers. But once we saw (Carter) once, we got better."

Brininstool scored two runs for Lee, while Carter turned in two singles and a stolen base for Coronado. Lynsey Deaton also had two hits, including one to lead off the top of the seventh. However, Hacker set down the next three hitters to close the game, giving Coronado eight stranded base runners for the game.

"She never let down," said Evans of Hacker. "We did get hits off of her, but she kept battling back. She never let it get in her head. She's just a real good pitcher, and we couldn't overcome that."

Sooners win Big 12 softball tournament

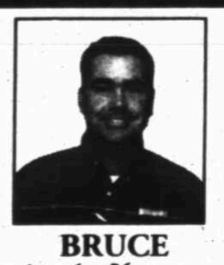

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Jennifer Stump had three hits including a home run and Jennifer Stewart pitched a complete game as Oklahoma beat Oklahoma State 6-0 Saturday to win the Big 12 Conference softball tournament.

The victory was the 18th straight for the defending national champion Sooners (45-7), who hope to play host to an NCAA regional next week.

Stewart (32-3) allowed five hits and struck out three in winning her third game of the tournament.

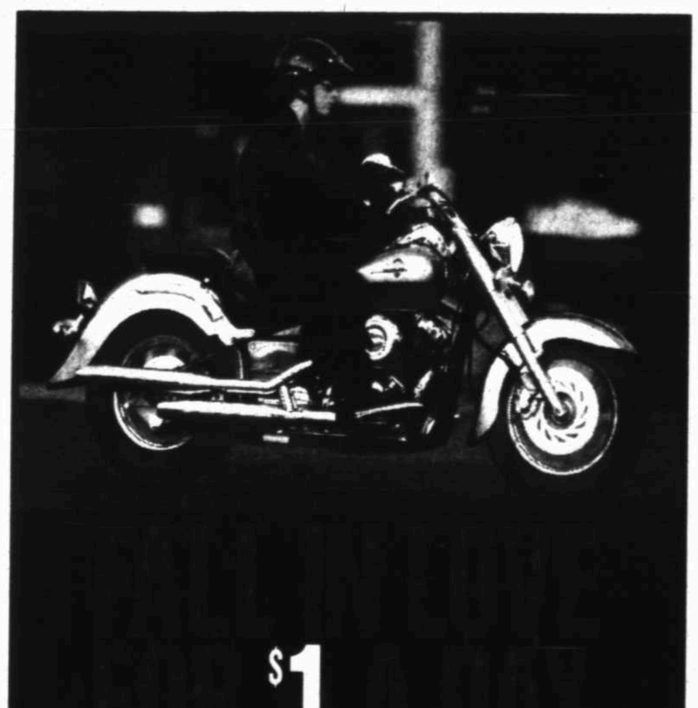

Oklahoma State (28-23) had reached the title game by beating Texas Tech 2-1 earlier Saturday.

Stephanie Hodges scored on a fourth-inning double by Jade Lindley and drove in Amanda Hayes with what proved to be the winning run with a sixth-inning single.

A TRIBUTE TO MY MOM

To look at her one cannot begin to imagine the hardships she has been through and is still going through. This fragile little old lady who has a permanent ear to ear smile, shining eyes and a beautiful face that radiates pure joy. Her favorite thing is to feed the birds in her yard and whistle to them to come down and eat, and they do. Just to see her there, sitting in her wheelchair makes the heartaches of life so much easier. And to know that her appendix has busted, she is diabetic, legally blind in both eyes, has had two heart attacks, and a second stroke that left her paralyzed on one side (which is the reason she is in a wheelchair), and scars on her neck, her limp arm, and her chest from doctors trying to find a lasting place for them to take her blood out of her to clean it, makes seeing her there sitting and smiling in her wheelchair, a true priceless blessing from God. She lives on a fixed income, but somehow manages to save money to buy bibles and give them to children she sees, drunks and homeless people she helps, and just anyone she comes in contact with. She says, "It's doing God's will, and that is my reason to live." She's always ready to listen, give advice, or dry a tear. Whenever we call, she's right there.

That's my Mom, and I love her. LaShon Luck

HOMES & LIVING

Sunday, May 13, 2001

#1 San Clemente Circle

Located in Mission Dorado, this home was built in 1986, but was extensively updated in 1997. Yet the house is timeless in its classic lines and its serene surroundings, with trees that have now matured, and landscape all around that has become integral to the living areas, and borrows liberally of the green of the golf course beyond.

Upon entering, you get a sense of how the house uses light and space and architectural diversity to create its ambience. A stairway immediately to the left of the entry rises past views of the trees and clouds, and the loft/walkway looks down over the floor level living areas, with arched doorways leading to yet wider arched doorways, while transom windows rise toward the ceiling, which rises skyward. Two bedrooms and a bath are on this upper level, both with spectacular views of the world outside.

There is also a spaciousness and diversity in the flooring, with white tile, travertine colored tile, warm wood flooring and different colors of carpet throughout, as function dictates.

The wall treatments are equally imaginative, all meant to enhance the sense of light and space. The wallpaper is light and contemporary, with clean lines and a lot of yellow, and bright botanical borders.

The formal living room and the den have fireplaces, both marble-lined, with dark-stained wood surrounds. There is also a great gameroom, lined with windows facing the back yard, and a door that leads outside.

The kitchen has an island work center as well as lots of counter space and wood cabinetry, with a butler's pantry that has a built in glass cabinet area, and is adjacent to both the formal dining room and a very large breakfast room.

The master suite is downstairs, with doors on one wall opening at one end to a breathtaking sunroom with a full bath adjacent to it, and on the other side to a short hall that leads past a street-side study/library to the formal living room and the entry.

The master bath has two high skylights, a garden tub and separate his and her closets and lavatories.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S PEN

'TIS THE SEASON: COMMONSENSE HOME-SELLING TIPS

With kids soon out of school and summer vacation around the corner, some homeowners may be planning a move to a new home. For most people, selling a house ranks second only to buying one in terms of the level of stress and aggravation that can develop. However, your home-selling experience doesn't have to be that way. Here are some tips that will help you prepare your home for sale, get the best price for it, and move on without so much as a feather ruffled.

When's the best time to sell?

The best time to sell a home is during the warmer months of spring and fall. November and December are usually slow due to the holidays.

How do I prepare my house for sale?

The first step is to make the house as inviting as possible. The important thing to remember is that selling a house is all about letting potential buyers picture themselves in your home. If it's full of your stuff, how can they do that? First you must remove yourself from the home (family pictures, your ceramic frog collection and kids' soccer cleats) and, second, remove your dirt. This includes making sure the entrance to the house is clean and major flaws that lower your home's value are corrected. Finally, keep the inside of the house clean and free of odors - even if it means hiring a professional cleaning service to take care of any "gifts" cats or other furry pets may have left behind. The most inviting house I've seen is one where the homeowner baked chocolate chip or oatmeal cookies before each open house. The aroma gave people who saw the house a whole new perception, as well as a much-appreciated snack after a long day of searching for a home.

Check your home's "curb appeal"

According to the Home Seller's Information Center, the three most important factors in selling a house are location, condition and price. Putting your house on the market requires checking every aspect of your house to repair, freshen or change whatever is necessary to sell it. Here are tips that will help:

- Overall appearance: Remove any junk or clutter from the yard. This includes tree limbs and leaves, but especially goes for junk cars or parts, lawn tractors, etc. If the exterior of the house is dirty or moldy, give is a good scrubbing. If it needs paint, get competitive bids if you can't do it yourself.
- Grass: If possible, re-seed or sod any bare areas of the lawn.
- Landscaping: Trim all shrubbery and plantings. Trim trees, if necessary, especially dead limbs. If the season is right, plant colorful flowers where appropriate. Color experts say that houses will sell faster with yellow trim or yellow flower borders in front. Add mulch to planting beds and around trees - it's an inexpensive but very effective way of freshening the look of the yard.
- Driveway: if the driveway is stone and not in the shape it once was, add a coat of gravel. If it is asphalt, consider resealing.
- Decks and porches: Powerwash and seal, stain or paint.
- Gutters and downspouts: Check gutters and downspouts to make sure they are clear and functioning properly.
- Lights: Make sure exterior lights are working.
- Windows: Make sure both the exterior and interior of windows are clean. Replace any worn, cracked or faded blinds.

Should I sell my home with a real estate professional?

Selling your home with a real estate professional can be very helpful if you have never sold a home before. A real estate professional can offer great tips on how to prepare your property for sale, get the best selling price, and advertise your property. Selling a home involves a tremendous amount of paperwork that a Realtor can clarify and help you understand. Check with your local real estate board to explore all your options.

Do your research

Keep track of how many homes have gone up for sale in your neighborhood. If possible, find out how much they are selling for. Most real estate agents will provide you with a free market analysis of your home's value. The Internet is also very helpful. A National Association of Realtors survey released in January 2000 found a 12-fold rise in the number of Internet home shoppers during the previous three years. There are plenty of helpful sites worth a look that will likely save you time and money, including a new Web site for Texas consumers, TexasRealEstate.com.

Prepare yourself for the costs involved

Checking your equity is an important first step in preparing to sell you house because selling a home can cost the seller about 15% of the total sales price.

Finally, be patient. Selling a home can take several months. Be patient and optimistic about finding the right buyer for your home, follow the commonsense tips above, and you'll be on your way to a new home.

The Permian Basin Board of REALTORS is one of 1,800 local boards and associations of Realtors nationwide that comprise of the National Association of Realtors. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice of Real Estate", representing more than 730,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

Overpricing Will Stall Your Sale

Printz

Pricing a home for sale is an art, not a science. If you set the price too high, your home can take forever to sell - if it sells at all.

How do you find that realistic, top-dollar asking price to attract the right buyers?

First, remember that the real estate market is competitive. Your home is competing with other, similar houses for the attention of buyers. The market value of your home depends, not on how much you want, but on how much buyers are willing to pay. If they can get a better deal down the street, they'll head down the street.

So do your homework. Check the homes for sale within a reasonable distance from yours. Find out about price ranges, how long the homes have been on the market, how much attention they are attracting from buyers. Look most closely at homes that are similar to yours in size, condition, appearance, and location. Find out what comparable properties have sold for in the last six months.

Seek the advice of an experienced real estate agent, who can save you time and trouble by having market information at his or her fingertips. Ask an agent to do a competitive market analysis of your home.

Finally, try looking at your home from a buyer's perspective. Is your home really better than the one down the street with a lower price than you want to ask? Are there flaws that need work? When buyers decide to make an offer, they will normally subtract the cost of needed repairs.

In the end, even the most knowledgeable expert cannot predict exactly how much buyers will be willing to pay. But their close attention to all these factors will enhance your chances of hitting close to the mark.

BUYING HUD HOMES

Robles

HUD Homes are sold by Real Estate Professionals that have been certified to market properties owned by HUD. HUD is the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. A home becomes a HUD home when a lender is forced to foreclose on an FHA insured single family home, townhouse, or condominium. When the buyer can no longer make payments, the lender files a claim under FHA to have HUD pay the balance due on the mortgage and assume ownership of the foreclosed property.

HUD properties may be purchased by qualified buyers without regard to the buyers race, color, religion, sex, national origin, handicap or familial status. HUD may pay legitimate financing or closing expenses for the buyer. HUD homes are sold "As Is" and more sold to owner occupants as well as investors. They are sold on a sealed bid basis submitted by a certified Real Estate Professional. HUD will accept the best net reasonable offer it receives.

There are normally two categories of HUD Homes. They are new listings and extended listings. New listings are those that have never been listed before, or have new terms. These are made available for a 10-day offer period. Full price offers received by 1:30 p.m. of the opening day are opened at 2:00 p.m. of the same day.

If no offer is received following a public sales offer opening, a home automatically becomes an Extended Listing offer. Extended listings are accepted daily and are usually reviewed by the following workday. Notification of acceptance is generally made within 48 hours.

GET A GOOD TITLE!

Noles

When you purchase your next home and receive your deed, how can you be sure you are receiving clear title? In fact, how can you even be sure the sellers are the present owners?

When purchasing real estate, you should be receiving the highest and best deed available - a "General Warranty" deed. By giving you this deed, sellers warrant that they own the property and will defend you against any and all claims to the property by others.

As further assurance, you should always have a "title search" performed by an attorney. This search determines this history of title to the property, and identifies any judgments, liens, or claims by others which may be an impediment to good title. If any are discovered, they must be eliminated prior to passing of title to the buyers.

One additional step insures that buyers are receiving good title. Called "title insurance", this insurances pays legal costs associated with defending title should a claim occur later. In the unlikely event that a title defect is established, the insurance will pay up to face value of the policy - usually an amount equal to the purchase price.

When purchasing your next home, be certain that your purchase contract calls for the seller to deliver a "General Warranty" deed - then ask for title insurance. It's inexpensive and provides great peace-of-mind.

It's Smarter To Stick To One Good Agent

Pine

Although it is tempting when you decide to buy a house, to shop around with different agents and companies, to get the best buy - that is really a mistake. Finding one agent that you are compatible with, will get you better results. In today's market, most Realtors are members of the area's multiple listing service and willingly share information on their listings with other agents and they have access to any piece of property that is listed via the computer network database. The one agent you select will have a better feel for what you are looking for, because that agent has been with you - looking at more than one house and seeing what your likes and dislikes are. He or she has seen your reaction to other houses and can make better use of your time, and his, to find that "just right" property. Knowing that you are going to work exclusively with one agent, that agent will be more apt to expend effort to give you better service and quicker results. Both buyer and agent will be rewarded by this arrangement.

A HUG FOR MOM

Youths answer: Why is your mom special?

By Isela Agundis
Lifestyle Writer

Mother's Day is a chance to let that special woman know how much she is valued and loved. Sometimes moms are taken for granted because their giving is unconditional. Mothers have different characteristics, sizes and shapes and each person thinks their mother is better than anyone else's. Where would we be if not for those mommies who spend thankless hours taking care of their children through illnesses, while not even caring about catching viruses or germs, except maybe that it would mean they would be out of commission to carry on mothering.

A mom's philosophy is "I carried you in my womb for months and changed your diapers and cleaned your grubby hands and runny nose" so they are undaunted by anything their children present to them. Oh yes, they'll complain and talk about the need for children to be more responsible and mindful of manners but they'll also melt at hearing four little words: "I love you mom."

Mothers may think their children don't value or care how much they do for them, but many Midland youth didn't have trouble answering the question: "Why is your mom special?"

Cleto Cordero, 8, a third-grader in Karin Lewis' class at Burnet Elementary School, said, "She takes me to the store and buys me stuff.

"When I'm sick she does dishes for me. My chores are washing dishes and doing my bed. Whenever she's sick and I'm gone she does my bed."

Cleto has six siblings, so "most of the time she does special stuff with everybody. We go out to the movies."

Classmate Valerie Cantu, also 8, is an only child. She said her mother "helps me on homework and makes me laugh by tickling me."

Her Mother's Day gift to her mom would be "my favorite thing in the whole world — mostly a hug. I love her and nobody can take her away from my life,"

Moms respond to loving words

Shirley Timinskas, who has cancer, said that she has never come across a child as caring as her daughter, Amber, 13.

Although her 15-year-old daughter, Ashley is also very considerate, she said that surprisingly, Amber was not put off by how her mother looked after surgeries with her neck swathed in bandages.

"After radiation you can't hug people because of the effects it can have on them but she didn't care that I had radiation," said Mrs. Timinskas. "She wasn't afraid of me, she just wanted her mom. She's a mama's girl."

Mrs. Timinskas had thyroid cancer and surgeries in the neck area made movement difficult. She still is undergoing radiation treatments and is often nauseous. Amber took the role of caregiver for her mom after she came home from her first surgery.

"When I came home out of the hospital she took care of me from then on and when I get really weak she'll come and help me," said the proud mom. "You couldn't ask for a more thoughtful person. I think she would do it for anybody, though. She has a lot of love to give people."

Diana Barker, Dustin's mother, said she's always wanted to be a mom and is getting to live out her dream.

What a dream — besides Dustin, there are three more — Dylan, 6, Drew, 10 and Kasey, 14, who is the only girl. She has been homeschooling all the children. Although Kasey goes to school part time and Dustin was homeschooled through eighth grade.

Although her love is unconditional , Mrs. Barker said it doesn't mean she never gets mad at Dustin.

But, "he's a great kid. It's always nice to hear this from a teen-age boy since they don't always tell you how they feel about you," said Ms. Barker. "It's part of being a mom — you don't get a lot of verbal appreciation."

'She does everything for me, anything I need. She'll ask what she needs to do to help. She's helping me get ready for college, and even if my friends need help she's there.'

—Mandy Hacker, 18

HAVE YOU HEARD?

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Congratulations to Midland Community Theatre and the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra on the outstanding success of their first major collaboration. Using local talent, they pulled out all the stops to produce a smashing version of the musical, "Evita," at Chaparral Center last weekend.

There has been nothing but the highest praise for the production, including such comments as, "It was a flawless performance," and "It equals or surpasses anything I've ever seen on Broadway or the London stage."

The opening night performance was preceded by a gala party honoring the show's co-producers, Abell-Hanger Foundation and Wagner & Brown Ltd. and the sponsors.

The guests were treated to a lavish buffet before the eight o'clock curtain. The striking table decorations featured a black, white and silver color scheme and a spectacular ice sculpture of a silhouette of the show's title character drew oohs and aah from the attendees.

Among the 220 guests seen at the party were Frances and Jack Brown, Lissa and Cy Wagner, Becky and David Smith, Cathy Eastham, Rodney Robinson, Claudette and Dr. Tulsi Singh, Betsy and Keith Seanard, Debbie and Rick Schneider, Connie and Kent Gaultney, Debbie and Steve Owen, Teri and Jack Crockett and Jane and Ken Williams.

Approximately 200 persons enjoyed a fun-filled evening recently at HeartBeat 2001. "A Night on Bourbon Street" was the theme for the event at Midland Country Club.

Following a delicious creole-flavored dinner, the guests enjoyed dancing to the foot-tapping music of the band, Checkpoint.

The benefit for the American Heart Association also included live and silent auctions and an art show and sale hosted by Midland Gallery and Edelman Fine Arts Ltd., New York.

Among those seen in the crowd were Juandelle Lacy, Red Roberts, Diane and Jose Cuevas, Laura and Drew Ingram, Donnette and Stan Sartain, Linda and Mike Miller, Susan and Mark Roomberg, Lynda and Bill Webb and Jim Barnett.

Deana Pittillo was gala chair.

The fun part of the hustle and bustle that precedes high school graduation are the parties honoring the seniors.

One of the largest this year was given by the parents of 23 Lee High School soon-to-be grads. It was held the evening of May 4 at the Party Station.

Music for dancing was provided by A Music Machine, a.k.a. Jerry Inskeep.

The colorful decorations carried out a Hawaiian theme. But the conversation piece of the evening were the poster-size baby pictures of the guests of honor, which kept everyone guessing as to "who's who."

In keeping with the theme, many of the guests came dressed in tropical beach attire.

Congratulations to Midlander Bill Hagerman, who has been selected as this year's Distinguished Artist for the Tall City's annual festival, Celebration of the Arts.

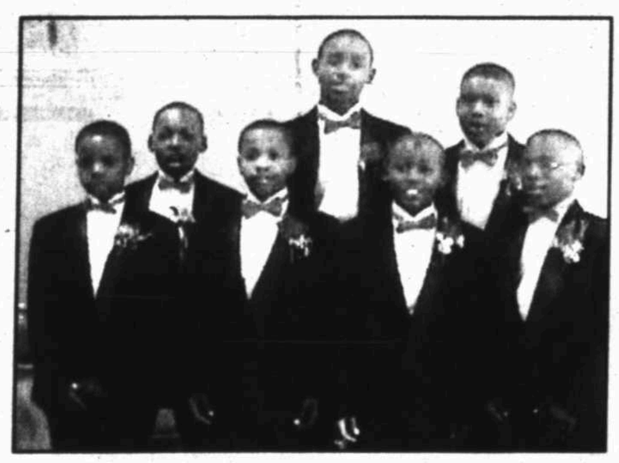

Bill will be present for the Preview Party at Midland Center on May 18, which kicks off the three-day event, and will be signing the 2001 Celebration of the Arts Poster made from his oil painting, "The Sky's the Limit."

In addition to his painting, Bill teaches art classes at his store, Whistle Stop Art and Music, and the Midland Senior Center. Some of his works are currently on display in the American Plains Artists' Grand Miniature Exhibit of 2001 at Haley Memorial Library and History Center. He has been a Midland resident since 1981.

The opening night party also will include delicious food prepared by some of Midland's finest culinary artists, special entertainment and a "sneak preview" of the works of this year's 70 juried artists, who are assembling here from across the United States.

"Celebrations," sponsored by the Arts Assembly of Midland, continues today in downtown. It offers activities of interest to all age groups.

Junior Esquires

The 2001 Junior Esquires, from left, Brian Smith, Desmond Jackson, Chris Cooper, Dray Stewart, Jeremy Liggins, Devon Petterson and Shane Polk were recently honored by the Midland Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority with a ball at the Yucca Theater. The event was for sixth-grade boys who completed the requirements of the eight-week Junior Esquire Leadership program, which provides an opportunity for the boys to learn leadership skills in a classroom setting and interact with mentors and role models throughout the city of Midland. To celebrate the boys' passage from elementary school to junior high school, a "rites of passage" ceremony took place with parents, community mentors, teachers and pastors.

AARP van to visit Celebration

From Staff Reports

AARP is bringing its "AARP on Wheels" to Celebration of the Arts, scheduled for Friday through Sunday downtown.

The AARP van will be parked in front of the Midland Center. Volunteers who will be manning the van will have AARP literature. In addition, videos on aging issues can be viewed from the side of the van.

WORDS: 'Mothers are gift from God'

From 1E

Valerie said.

Several eighth-graders in Laurie Diggins' class at Alamo Junior High School had words of praise for their mothers.

William Weir, 14, said, "Knowing I couldn't have got this far without her. She forgives me for everything I do."

Classmate Kayla Ratliff, 14, said she and her mother have a very strong relationship and that her mom is "extremely special. We have this little bonding thing. I think mothers are a gift from God — nothing can replace them."

Drew Arellano, 14, said his mother makes him his favorite food — rice crispy treats. "She helps me with school and really cares what's on my mind and she is a good cook."

Claudia Tinoco, 14, said, "My mom is the best friend I've ever had. She sacrificed time and money for me to give me everything I need. My dad says I'm always to respect her because he lost his mother when he was 11."

Ryan Calhoun, 14, said, "I'm leaving for the summer so she'll go do something special, like take me to breakfast. I want to tell her I love her and I'd miss her if she wasn't there." Oh, and she takes him shopping.

Amber Timinskas, 13, spoke about her mother's battle with cancer. "After all the cancer my mother has been through, she has always been there and always will be there for me through the good and hard times in our life. I will always love her.

"This is the third time in five years the cancer's come back," Amber said. "She says I'm her guardian angel, 'cause I take care of her."

Marianne Aguirre, 15, said her mother is special because, "She's a single mom raising five kids and a grandson and showed us we don't have to depend on anybody but ourselves — we can make it through the world by ourselves."

David Dunn, 16, Bo Ritchie, 15 and Dustin Barker, 17, had no problem coming up with compliments about their moms.

"Mom home schooled us," David said. "Our whole life she has been dedicated to us and put everything she has into being a mom and that's what makes her special."

Bo said his mother "is the most hard-working person I know. Not only did she bring me into this world but she made it mean something — by the way she lives and the way she treats me, my brother and sister."

Dustin said his mother "loves him unconditionally" no matter what he does or when he messes up. "She's always there for me."

Sharla Garlington, 17, said if both she and her mother have something going on at the same time, her mother will drop whatever she's doing to spend time with her. "She's trying to make my senior year special."

Mandy Hacker, 18, said, "She does everything for me, anything I need. She'll ask what she needs to do to help. She's helping me get ready for college, and even if my friends need help she's there."

Albert Hernandez, 18, said, "She's loving, caring and generous. Even though I never tell her, I love her a lot."

Chad Bushman, 19, said his mother supports him in everything he does. "She's always there and she's always loving. She's given me a Christian home and taught me good morals."

Mothers do tend to get irritable and snappy sometimes but after running errands, washing clothes, making dinner, buying groceries, making sure the kids get to activities on time, attending school functions ... who wouldn't?

In return for their unconditional love, mamas don't expect much, but a hug would go a long way toward making today memorable for her.

Italian vintner brings dream to Romania

By Alison Mutler
Associated Press Writer

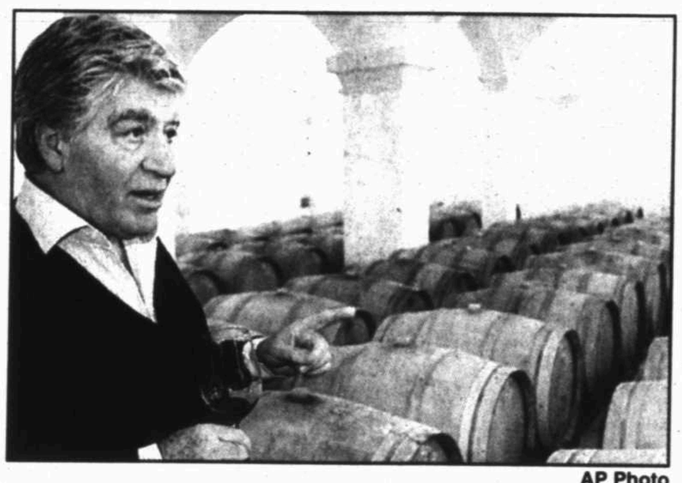

CASTEL BOLOVANU, Romania — One sip of vintage red, and Fabio Albisetti said he was sold. He would follow the footsteps of his ancestors, the Romans, who exported wine from the same region almost 2,000 years ago.

"I tasted a 1971 wine. It was very badly presented, but it had big potential, so I bought the winery," said the Italian over a supper of lamb and spinach, washed down with a glass of his Castel Bolovanu red at a restaurant in Bucharest, the Romanian capital.

When Albisetti made his decision to invest in Romanian vineyards three years ago, he was no novice. A native of Genoa, he owns a vineyard in Tuscany and has traveled the world for three decades buying and selling beef.

Romanian wine brought the country $21 million last year in exports. Though not a major export item, wine earns badly needed hard currency for this former communist country where the average monthly salary is $100. It also adds a dose of prestige to its image.

During communist times, which ended with the execution of dictator Nicolae Ceausescu in 1989, Romania exported huge quantities of cheap, sweet wine — mainly to Russia — to pay off its debts. Ceausescu even bartered wine for Pepsi syrup in the 1970s and 1980s.

AP Photo

Fabio Albisetti talks about his wine at a vineyard in Castel Bolovanu, Romania, last month. Albisetti, a native of Italy, says his Romanian vineyards and the wines they produce are the dream of his life.

That was the low point of Romanian viticulture, a result of decades of neglect and underinvestment in sun-drenched vineyards perched on loamy hillsides that had yielded quality wine in the region for thousands of years.

Albisetti has invested $10 million in his three vineyards since 1997. Now, his dry, complex reds age in French oak barrels and stainless steel vats from Italy that control temperature.

The wine business requires patience and deep pockets — but Albisetti's investment has begun to pay off.

Last year, his Romanian operations had a $1 million turnover. At a recent competition in Brussels, Belgium, his Sienna red was awarded a gold medal and his Castel Bolovanu a silver. Another Romanian company, Serve, also won three silver medals.

"This means a lot in the wine world," said American consultant William E. Scott, an adviser on investment and agriculture in Romania. "With sufficient know-how and money, Romanian wine is as good as anyone's."

But Albisetti isn't in it only for the money.

"This is the dream of my life," said the 64-year-old, strolling through the vineyards in his castel — Romanian for chateau — in southern Romania, some 110 miles west of Bucharest. "We have 10 hectares that is the best quality land in the whole of Europe... I want to see my wines in the best restaurants in the world."

Others also have high hopes for Romania's wines.

Jidvei, in the Transylvania region of Romania, is now a major producer of white wines, made from the sauvignon blanc, riesling and chardonnay grapes. They already have found markets in Britain, the United States, Norway, Belgium and Japan.

Still, the country has a long way to go to catch up with today's competitive wine world. Neglected state vineyards need to be renewed, and there is a lack of marketing savvy. Also, there are no government subsidies, which gives subsidized producers in Chile and Australia a further advantage.

Albisetti sighs as he reflects how the communist era has wiped out the traditional respect and love of wine that is part of the fabric of other European countries.

"The political class is too young and it has no culture," he said. "They need a long time to change their thinking."

Still, he has few doubts that his investment was worth it, as he surveys his domain on a fine early spring day — row upon row of perfectly pruned vines that stretch across a hillside overlooking the lazy River Olt.

"My only regret is that I started too late."

Friend tells Anne Frank's stories

By Heather Saucier
N.Y. Times News Service

MANHASSET, N.Y. — Hannah Pick-Goslar can hold the attention of a fifth-grade audience as well as a teen-age rock star can. When she sat on a makeshift stage at the Holocaust Resource Center at Temple Judea, 100 mesmerized children listened to her story in total silence.

Soon the children could see the 72-year-old woman with the girlish smile and sparkling eyes as a frightened teen-ager imprisoned by Nazis with her best friend, Anne Frank.

Ms. Pick-Goslar herself seems transported when she recalls the horrors of her youth.

She was just 15 in 1944 when the Nazis hauled her in a cattle car

DEAR ABBY

Woman pays tribute to her 'husband's mother'

By Abigail Van Buren

Pauline and Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Although you don't know it, you were very much involved in making my Mother's Day special last year. My son's wife, Maureen, saw a letter in your column that inspired her to write one to me. Maureen and my son Tom met in high school and have been happily married for 33 years. Never in all that time have Maureen and I had a disagreement or argument of any kind.

I've enclosed the letter she sent to me. It brought tears to my eyes.

"Dear Kate: When I saw Dear Abby's column on Mother's Day, I thought of you. I want you to know how blessed I feel to have you for a mother-in-law. In fact, I rarely use that term because of its negative connotations. I usually refer to you as 'my husband's mother.'

"You have always shown me kindness and understanding, especially during some difficult times. You have never criticized me, even when we disagreed. And I surely appreciate the love you have shown me. I have always felt being a part of the Olsen family — as one of you, rather than an in-law.

"Even if I hadn't known you as well as I do, I would deduce how wonderful you are just through the dear, witty, generous son you raised.

"Thank you for every weed you've pulled, for every shirt you've ironed, every thoughtful note you've written, every kind word you spoke when my parents died, every hug you've given me, every day of baby-sitting Kristin and Tim, and for ALL you've done for me.

"Thank you for all of this, Kate, and most of all, for loving me as you do. Love and thanks. Maureen" — KATE OLSEN, INDIANHEAD PARK, ILL.

DEAR KATE: You have a right to be proud. That letter illustrates the ideal loving relationship that can be shared by DILs and MILs. I hope it inspires others to emulate you. Read on:

DEAR READERS: I would like to share with you a tribute to a mother that I printed in 1992. I'm sure many of you can identify with it. While some of the details may differ, the following letter describes the many sacrifices and acts of love on the part of mothers everywhere:

DEAR ABBY: My 37-year-old daughter, Norma, sent me the following testimonial for Mother's Day. It touched me so profoundly that I wanted to share it with you. — DORA BOYD, EDGEWATER, FLA.

DEAR MRS. BOYD: Thank you for sending it. I do, indeed, want to share it with my readers:

"Dear Mother: As I grew up ...

"... You fostered my independence. You allowed me to decide what to wear, what friends to choose, what boys to date, what foods to eat — and how much. You trusted my judgment, even when it differed from yours. Although our views differ on women's issues, fashion, etc., you displayed confidence in my decisions.

"... You never shamed me for being a bed wetter until I was 6 — and for that, I'll always be grateful.

"... You worked backbreaking jobs to give my brother and me music lessons, concerts, plays and educational trips.

"... You taught me about reproduction and birth control. I'm very proud of you for that. My girlfriends cannot say that about their mothers.

"... You admitted that you were not perfect, enabling me to safely question your beliefs, opinions and actions — and draw my own conclusions.

"And now that I'm an adult, I want to thank you for always being there for me. You are a wonderful role model, and I am lucky to have you for my mother. I love you very much. — NORMA"

DEAR READERS: Does Norma's mother sound familiar? If the answer is yes, today's the day to express your appreciation to your mother. If you aren't comfortable composing a letter of your own to give to Mom today, clip this and take it to her. Tell her you recognized her in this column. Give her a big hug and a thank-you — and don't be surprised if you see tears of happiness in her eyes. Happy Mother's Day.

Dear Abby is written by Pauline Phillips, aka Abigail Van Buren, and daughter Jeanne Phillips. Their column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

'Right' clothes made the woman — into a celebrity

By Samantha Critchell
Associated Press Writer

AP Photo
A plaid Vivienne Westwood cocktail dress helped Jessica Brinton score attention and a job offer at the Frick Collection's February Tartan Ball in New York.

Ms. Brinton became Rose Churchill, celebrity socialite.

She joined the elite pack of young New York fashionistas who wear the latest styles, attend the best parties and are featured in The New York Times' Sunday Styles section but don't exactly "do" anything.

To fit in with this crowd, Rose was born with a nondescript social pedigree, great fashion sense, deep pockets and Ms. Brinton's own British accent.

"I thought it sounded like an adventure."

At the very least, it was a whirlwind 10 days for the 27-year-old beauty writer at Harper's Bazaar.

Ms. Brinton and her colleagues at the magazine set out to prove that it's not difficult to make some people sound more important than they are. And eventually, Ms. Brinton adds, "the machine" makes that person important — just look at Anna Nicole Smith, the Hilton sisters, or "Survivor" castoffs.

"I became instantly more fascinating — even to people who know me, the people who know Jessie," Ms. Brinton says.

Being this character also brought out the best and worst in Ms. Brinton. "Rose brought out my gregarious side but also my vain and superficial sides."

The experiment began at a party on the eve of New York's Fashion Week in February for the journal Visionaire.

The event was a hot ticket that left many A-listers shivering outside the Fashion Institute of Technology in their Manolo Blahniks. In her Helmut Lang cashmere coat, Ms. Brinton was swept inside. Someone from a modeling agency handed her a card.

By the end of the week, she was on the red carpet at a celebrity-studded gala thrown by The American Museum of the Moving Image to honor Julia Roberts. Ms. Brinton, feeling glamorous and gorgeous in a black lace Christian Dior gown designed by John Galliano, almost bumped into George Clooney.

The paparazzi went wild for Ms. Brinton, calling to her as she entered the Waldorf-Astoria hotel.

"It's incredible to have so many lights going off and getting so much attention. It's addictive but kind of crazy," Ms. Brinton said during a telephone interview.

In between these social engagements, she managed to fit in a few designer fashion shows at Bryant Park. Her comings and goings to the famous tents were chronicled by photographers, and Ms. Brinton's photo appeared twice in The Times' "On the Street" section as a trendsetter.

The super chic — and very expensive — clothes also were a far cry from Ms. Brinton's own wardrobe, which she describes as "20 percent vintage big-name designers like Yves Saint Laurent, Ossie Clarke, Kenzo — mostly from my mother who was a fashion editor on British Vogue during the '60s and '70s; 60 percent smaller designers like Sally Penn, Amanda Uprichard and Fake London; and 20 percent basics from Levi's, French Connection, Urban Outfitters, Club Monaco, etc."

But for the celebrity-socialite set, clothes are more than just pieces of fabric sewn together to cover your back.

"Clothes are essential to their lives. Everyone is very conscious of their clothes, and they talk about clothes a lot," said Ms. Brinton.

to a concentration camp, where she lived on two slices of bread a day. Every week she borrowed an extra glass of milk from a Jewish family in her barracks to keep her baby sister alive. "We only saw mountains of dead bodies," she told students from Shelter Rock Elementary in Manhasset. "They would die like flies."

The memories of her friend, Anne, are close to the surface, too. These are the stories that most rivet her young audiences. "Anne wanted to be very, very famous," Ms.. Pick-Goslar said. "She never would have dreamt how famous she is."

Ms. Pick-Goslar and her stories of Anne have been around for years in books such as "Memories of Anne Frank: A Reflection of a Childhood friend," by Alison Leslie Gold. As the years have passed, however, Ms. Pick-Goslar recognized that she, like other Holocaust survivors, won't be around to tell their stories forever. Today, she travels the world, and shares memories of Anne, her own life story and message against prejudice.

Ms. Pick-Goslar lived next door to Anne after both girls' families fled Nazi Germany in 1933 and moved to Amsterdam. The two went to school together and collected pictures of famous actors and actresses. Anne did not survive the Nazi camp. She died of typhus shortly before the war and her diary became a classic book worldwide.

After Ms. Pick-Goslar was liberated from the concentration camp, she moved to Jerusalem with her sister and became a nurse. After she retired in 1992, she began her worldwide speaking tours.

Young audiences laugh when Ms. Pick-Goslar says that Anne used to pop her arm out of its socket for attention, and that she loved to write.

"When you asked her, 'What are you writing?'" she always says the same thing," Ms. Pick-Goslar said in her thick German accent. "'None of your business.'"

Ms. Pick-Goslar says her mother perhaps best described the outspoken Frank when she said, "God knows everything, but Anne knows everything better."

Seeing and hearing Ms. Pick-Goslar in person only intensifies the message of the powerful book "Anne Frank: Diary of a Young Girl," for school children like Whitney Quackenbush,11, of Shelter Rock.

"For her to be right there, to be in front of you, and she knew the famous Anne Frank," Whitney said. "it was like someone reading a story to me."

Seeing Ms. Pick-Goslar also helps students see their own lives in a new way. "You think I'm lucky to live in a place where I don't have to go through something like that," said Rebekka Heller, 13, a student at Horace Mann Middle School in San Francisco.

Rebekka's class heard Ms. Pick-Goslar speak last fall. "She brings Anne Frank to life," said Rebekka's teacher, Hene Kelly. "She talks about Anne as a real person, that she was a troublemaker and she talked a lot."

Jack Polak, chairman emeritus of the Anne Frank Center USA, said survivors help teachers surmount very difficult subject matter. "Someone can make it come alive when they went through it themselves," he said.

In "The Diary of a Young Girl," Anne refers to Ms. Pick-Goslar as "Lies," a nickname. Hiding in an Amsterdam attic with no news of her friend, Anne writes how sad she is that Lies will likely die at the hands of the Nazis while her own life will be spared.

Ms. Pick-Goslar also tells her own story with each narration sounding as fresh as the first time.

When she was a young girl, her mother died during childbirth, and her father was taken to a work camp in 1943. She and her younger sister ended up at the Bergen-Belsen camp in Germany, where Anne was eventually taken.

There, Ms. Pick-Goslar and her childhood friend were separated by a tall chain-link fence laced with straw that prevented them from seeing each other. "At night I go near the fence and I call over. I said, 'Anne, what are you doing here?'" Ms. Pick-Goslar said. Not knowing her own father's life was spared, Anne told Ms. Pick-Goslar that her family was gassed to death. "I have nobody anymore," Anne said.

Anne was sick and near death herself. To help feed her, Ms. Pick-Goslar threw a package of crackers over the fence. "Another woman caught it, ran away and didn't give her anything," she said. The following night, Ms. Pick-Goslar tried again and was successful.

Eventually illness claimed Anne. Had she known her father was alive, she may have fought to live, Ms. Pick-Goslar said. "I am always sorry that Anne didn't know. Maybe she would have had more hope."

Teachers are saddened by the fact that Ms. Pick-Goslar and other survivors will not be around to tell another generation of children their stories. "All the survivors in Houston are too old or too ill. I can't use them for interviews anymore," said Margaret Badeaux, who teaches the only Holocaust class in the Houston Independent School District. "Students have said the highest point of the semester was hearing the survivor speak."

Ms. Pick-Goslar herself is growing fatigued. But she hopes that in re-telling her story, she will leave an indelible history that will outlive her. "Every time it takes a little bit of your health," she said. "But I think it's important."

Cookbook contains as much history as recipes

'The Italian American Cookbook,' could be the perfect book for readers who have never attempted to cook Italian food beyond boiling spaghetti and opening a jar of sauce.

By Jason Schulz
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A friend once told me that he doesn't give cookbooks as gifts because "you cannot really read a cookbook." In some cases I might agree, but "The Italian American Cookbook," by John and Galina Mariani is an exception.

The book is as much a history lesson as it is a cookbook. The 250 recipes are illustrated with historical photographs of Italian-Americans preparing or enjoying the food they love. Sidebars like a brief history of the tomato, and the debate about who invented pasta, also perk up the volume.

This could be the perfect book for readers who have never attempted to cook Italian food beyond boiling spaghetti and opening a jar of sauce. After a thorough historical introduction, the authors offer a glossary of ingredients, with tips on where to find them and acceptable substitutions.

The recipes include standards like Bolognese sauce and Osso Buco, the unexpected Buffalo Chicken Wings (invented by Italian-American Teresa Bellissimo) and even cocktails. The recipes are collected from chefs, the authors' families or adapted from classics.

In the preface, the authors state the focus of the book is to portray how traditional Italian food has adapted into a new cuisine with American influences. Some of the recipes do display this theme, but a lot of the book is a rehashing of traditional Italian recipes.

As appealing as the book is, the recipes sometimes fall short. Chicken Tetrazzini turned out dry and flavorless. The proportion of pasta to sauce was unbalanced. Layering the components, as the authors suggested, left the pasta on the bottom without any sauce. On the other hand, the Onion and Parmigiano Gratinata side dish was enjoyable. The sauteed sweet onions baked in a rich cheese sauce would be an especially nice accompaniment to roasted or grilled meats.

Other dishes sound tempting, as well. Ravioli with Fresh Pea Sauce, Italian Sausage with Sweet Potatoes and Mountain Lamb Scaloppine with Figs and Honey (adapted from "The Olives Table," by Todd English) illustrate how dishes are created primarily from Italian ingredients coupled with American influences.

Although the recipes are not perfect, the book would be a good addition to a beginner's bookshelf because of its informative content and readability. This book sometimes reads like a standard Italian cookbook but does contain a few creative recipes you probably won't find anywhere else.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Establishing, maintaining lush lawns is hard work

By Deborah Benge Frost

A new lawn or lawn renovation is something most people encounter at least once, and for some folks it is a task that must be dealt with several times. Putting in a new lawn is not exactly a picnic; it requires lots of work initially and some patient follow-up care. May is an excellent month to be establishing warm season lawns.

Lawns are great for cooling the area, reducing glare, holding soil in place, providing play and recreation space and giving a unified look to the landscape.

Don't make the mistake of making the lawn too large. Grass requires more water, fertilizer, pesticide, labor and maintenance than any other plant in the landscape. If you live in the city, property lines dictate lawn size, but even within a residential lot avoid planting grass from fence line to fence line and curb to house. Enhance the area with large landscaped beds and beautiful, functional hardscaping such as decks, patios, walks and so forth.

For most people a little lawn goes a long way. Just enough turf to meet the aesthetic, cooling and play and recreational needs of the home owners is all that is needed. A rule of thumb for a landscape is 1/3 turf, 1/3 landscape bed and 1/3 hardscaping.

Sun vs. Shade

Grass always grows better in the sun — even shade-tolerant grasses. St. Augustine is our most shade-tolerant grass and even it has to have four hours of direct sunlight. Target the sunny areas of the landscape for grass.

Don't beat your head against the wall trying to find a magic grass for the shade. Instead, turn shady areas into a landscaped bed with shade-tolerant ground covers, shrubs and other shade-tolerant plants or mulch the area. Better utilize by adding benches, decks, fountain or container plants to an area that is mulched. A large live oak will look much better in a lush bed of English ivy than it will in a thin, scraggly lawn. Don't damage your beautiful tree by trying to get grass to grow where it won't.

Grass species

Determining the best grass for your landscape is a critical step. Warm season grasses, like Bermuda, St. Augustine, buffalo, and Zoysia are best for our hot, arid climate. Cool season grasses, like tall turf-type fescue, rye grass, and others, are better suited to cooler, moister climates and are living outside of their range in West Texas. They struggle in our long, hot summers and are more prone to pest problems.

Bermuda grass is the No. 1 grass species for West Texas. Buffalo grass is a good choice in areas where Bermuda has not been previously grown and where the soil has some clay or loam in it. Zoysia grass is an alternative that performs similar to Bermuda grass but has the advantage of some shade tolerance. Zoysia grass is not as widely available and it has a slow establishment rate, two factors you need to be aware of before planting it.

When to plant

One of the biggest mistakes people make when putting in a lawn is missing the optimum planting times. Bermuda grass seed or springs should be planted when the soil temperature is 70 or more for three consecutive days. St. Augustine grass can be established from plugs anytime during the growing season. May is a good month for sowing or establishing buffalo grass. Planting before soil temperatures warm up is a mistake with warm season lawns.

Cool-season grasses like tall fescue are best established in early fall. Spring planting can be accomplished, but the survival rate is not as good as lawns started in the fall.

New lawns

To establish a new lawn all existing grass and weeds need to be removed or killed. Bermuda grass will need to be sprayed with a glyphosate herbicide product that only kill weeds and grasses that are actively growing. To get the best results wait until warm weather and rapid, healthy grass growth. Promote good growth by plenty of water and fertilizer and then do a good job of spraying. A follow-up spray may be needed in two weeks. Glyphosate has no soil activity.

After the grass and weeds are gone, tilling the soil should be the next step. If organic matter is available to till into the soil it will improve soil structure and water-holding capacity. Raking and leveling the soil should be exercised with a great deal of attention for the best results. A float or level can be constructed if the ground is not level. A long ladder with a rope tied to both ends lying flat on the ground can be drug back and forth and across several times to cut the high places and fill the low places. A crosstie or a couple cinder blocks can be added for weight to enhance the cut and fill process.

After leveling, a pre-plant fertilizer can be raked into the top inch or two of soil and then the grass seed, sprigs, plugs or sod can be planted. Seed should be barely raked into the surface of the soil, top dressed with some type of fine organic matter and then rolled with an empty sod roller. Sprigs can be applied, top dressed and rolled. Plugs can be planted on six- to 12-inch centers depending on how fast a cover you desire. Sod can be put down in a brick pattern, butting joints together, rolled with a sod roller and sand sweep into the joints.

Regardless of which method you choose, a moist top few inches of soil must be maintained until establishment is reached. Depending on the grass species establishment should be complete in one month (Bermuda) to two years (Zoysia).

In light of the fact that we live in a hot, dry environment with vulnerable water sources, we need to design our landscapes for wise water use. We can not afford to waste water. This means smaller turf areas, better irrigation systems, and judicious water monitoring are techniques we must employ in our landscapes.

Conservation group sells descendants of famous, historic trees

By Ed Hutchison
Associated Press

Very quietly, history is coming alive in the yards of thousands of Americans and it is a tree, not a historian, that is doing the telling — telling of patriots and battles, of musicians and industrialists, of space exploration and slavery.

The trees are the "product" of a program created by American Forests, a non-profit conservation group in Jacksonville, Fla. The program — Famous and Historic Trees (FHT) — is one of several conservation and habitat efforts spearheaded by the organization.

FHT has identified some 2,000 trees that are in some way connected to a historic event or famous person. Of these, 75 different trees are offered for sale at prices ranging from $35 to $50. Most are $35. With two exceptions, all are direct descendants of trees still alive and ranging in age from about 30 to 225 years old. Among the most popular are:

■ Johnny Appleseed Apple. In the late 1780s, John Chapman planted an orchard of his favorite apple, Rambo, at a farm in Nova, Ohio. Over time, all but one tree died, was cut down or somehow destroyed. Cuttings and seeds from the surviving tree were gathered by American Forests and grown on to develop the trees now offered in the FHT program.

■ George Washington Tulip Poplar. Washington planted this tree in 1785 at his Mount Vernon home where it survives today. It has grown so old that its blossoms each spring require hand pollination if they are to produce seeds, and that is exactly what is done to produce the seeds that are then germinated to grow the saplings offered by FHT.

■ Moon Sycamore. Stuart Roosa was one of three astronauts aboard Apollo XIV when it was launched Jan. 31, 1971. Tree seeds collected from trees across the country was part of the cargo because Roosa, a former U.S. Forest Service employee, wanted to do something to honor the service. Among the seeds were those from an American sycamore, and back on earth, the seeds were germinated, grown on and donated to colleges and universities. The seeds produced from these trees are the ones used by the FHT to grow into saplings.

■ Others are a pin oak, sycamore, sweetgum and weeping willow from the Graceland estate of Elvis Presley; a sycamore from the Antietam National Battlefield in Maryland; an oleander from the Fort Meyers, Fla., home of Thomas Edison; a sycamore from the estate of Henry Ford in Dearborn, Mich.; and a green ash from the birthplace of George Washington Carver in Diamond, Mo.

To grow these trees, representatives from American Forests each year gather the seeds — in whatever form — from the original tree. The seeds (seeds, acorns and so on) are then germinated at a nursery in Florida and grown on as seedlings. When they are big enough — usually 18 to 24 inches tall — they are offered for sale. At any one time, Famous and Historic Trees has 75,000 trees in its nursery — a population that is doubling every year because of the popularity of the program, according to spokeswoman Susan T. Corbett.

By collecting seeds, and in a few cases, cuttings, the direct link to the original tree that in some way has witnessed history is maintained, she said.

Each FHT tree comes with a growing kit that includes a translucent plastic sleeve to protect it for its first few years away from the nursery, fertilizer, a stake to support the sleeve, netting to protect it from birds, planting instructions and information about the tree. It is guaranteed to grow or it will be replaced.

Most of the trees will grow most anywhere in the country. FHT uses the United States Department of Agriculture cold hardiness map to detail specific zones where the particular tree will thrive. Most will do just fine in zones 4 through 8 that covers all but the most extreme climates in the country.

How many of these trees have been set out since the program began in 1988 is not clear, but interest in the program has prompted the nursery to double its production in recent years, Ms. Corbett said.

Strawberry Summer

Big red, juicy strawberries on grocery store shelves symbolize the best part of summer just like watermelons and cantaloupe. But strawberries look so bright and yummy and at the same time manage to be an elegant addition in summer dishes. Seeing those shiny plump berries is enough to bring out the greedy side in some people — "What would it be like to have plants conveniently growing at home?"

There is not much information on growing strawberries because this isn't the best area to grow them, especially with West Texas' hot summers. But it can be done. Armed with some basic knowledge on measures to take, success can be had.

"Researchers at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service found that the plants in this area perform best as an annual crop and do better planted in the fall since they don't do well through the summer months," said Deborah Benge Frost, extension horticulture agent for Midland and Ector counties.

"The problem with fall planting is that they're not available in the fall at nurseries — we almost have to buy and plant in the spring because that's when they're available."

First of all, decide whether to use the annual or perennial system:

✿ With the annual system planting takes place between late September through late November. They will establish a good root system by the spring and produce the bulk of the crop during spring and early summer and be done fruiting by the time summer comes. Plants can then be plowed under before the summer heat hurts them. A drawback to this system is "a hard winter or late planting can result in poor plant growth and a small crop," wrote Larry Stein, extension horticulturist.

✿ With perennial or matted row system the plants are usually set in mid-winter and the fruit will be harvested 16 months later. To develop a matted row, plants should be set 18 to 24 inches apart so they can develop runners that grow on the ground and send out roots in the soil. The roots produce new plants that will also grow and bear fruit. If using this planting method, remove all the developing flowers the first spring because the plant won't be strong enough to carry a crop. Strawberries will be produced in April and May of the second year.

So if confidence in the old "green thumb" is high just go for it. With a little extra care, anything can grow in West Texas. Right?

Then, choose an area where the plants will receive direct sunlight. Next, the soil needs to be improved with at least four inches of organic matter like peat moss, any humus or compost product as long as it is well decomposed — rabbit or horse manure. Spade thoroughly into the top six inches of soil.

Other options are a raised bed garden 4 to 6 inches high, or if space is limited, containers, pots and hanging baskets can be used.

Strawberry plants of the spring-bearing variety do better than ever-bearing in Texas and are still a better choice even if not using the annual system, said Ms. Frost, who suggested using the annual system planting in the fall. Spring-bearing varieties also yield more berries than ever-bearing ones. Varieties recommended for this area are Chandler, Douglas and Sequoia plants.

"They're not big selling items," said Tom Manning, owner of Manning's Garden Center. "We have a lot of customers who use them just as a ground cover."

Many of the local nurseries carry a small quantity because they don't sell well here even in the spring and summer. But Manning's has some plants of the Sequoia variety.

"When it started getting warmer I stopped bringing them in," said Robert Nash, nursery specialist with Lowe's Home Improvement. He said Lowe's would try to have some on hand for those adventurous souls interested in trying to grow strawberries.

Lanham's Nursery & Landscape carries the Quinault variety, which is a perennial (grows back each year). This newer variety produces fruit on unrooted runners and is good for potted everbearing strawberries. It is can be used as a ground cover or for border plantings. Fruit should be produced four to five weeks after planting.

A strawberry plant is capable of producing three times its weight in fruit every spring, which is about 1/3 to 1/2 pounds of berries per plant. Choose top quality plants and set the plants at the same depth at which they were grown (the mid-point of the crown). Plants set too deep or shallow are likely to die. Trim the roots to fit the hole. Never curl the roots around the hole. Planting should be done on a cloudy day or in late afternoon. Water every day for the first two weeks after planting, but once established, water them enough to be moist but the soil should not be saturated.

Strawberries are non-climacteric, meaning they do not ripen after they're picked, so the berries should be allowed to fully ripen on the plant. Once they ripen, make sure to harvest every day since they make great food for birds.

Don't forget — although plants do better in the fall, they can flourish with some TLC. To combat the area heat, Ms. Frost suggested that a three- to four-inch layer of mulch on top of the soil would help the plants. Cotton seed hulls, grass clippings, compost — any organic mulch will be suitable.

"Salt in our water is a problem and when watering make sure they get at least 1 inch," said Ms. Frost. "Use enough water to wash the salts down past the root zone of the strawberries and try to keep the soil evenly moist."

The obstacles are not insurmountable. A good challenge always makes the rewards more meaningful and even if the berries don't come out perfect the birds enjoying them in the garden will be a sight to enjoy.

Strawberry History

Strawberries are thought to have been cultivated in ancient Rome. The berries were originally called strewberries because they seemed to be strewn among the leaves of the plant. The name later became strawberries.

During the medieval period these berries were served at important state occasions and festivals to ensure peace and prosperity. They were used as a medicinal herb in 13th century France. The medicinal uses of Fragaria Vesca (alpine strawberry) extended to using the leaves, roots and fruits for digestive or skin tonic. Internally, it was used for diarrhea and digestion problems and the leaves and roots were used for gout. Externally, it was used for sunburn and skin blemishes and the fruit juice was used for discolored teeth.

The first American variety, the Hoveg, was grown in 1834, in Massachusetts and the first American species was cultivated sometime in 1835. The strawberry plant comes from the Rosaceae (rose) family with all varieties belonging to the Fragaria genus.

The 'berry' truth

✿ Each strawberry has an average of 200 seeds. The seeds on the outside of the berry are the actual fruit and the red berry is really just the stem.

Celebration of the Arts carries visitors on a cultural, cross-country tour when the 18th annual event takes over Midland Center and Centennial Plaza Friday through May 20.

"They can expect a very different look this year with our theme of 'Celebrate America: A Coast to Coast Arts Experience,'" said Kathy Wells, this year's COA chairman. "We're really giving them a visual and musical and cultural trip through the United States.

"The Bike Criterium race on Saturday and the Sunday morning bike tour are brand new this year, and we think those are very exciting and very crowd-pleasing events. One of the other things we have this year that I think is very neat is an all-day Sunday concert on the Showmobile, which will feature music from the four featured regions of the United States."

The event, which begins Friday with a 6:30 to 9 p.m. Preview Party honoring Distinguished Artist William Hagerman and Culinary Arts show featuring the Barn Door, Cattle Baron, Garlic Press, Smoothie King, Tampico Spanish Inn, Main Events & Catering, Ichabod's, Duo Delights, Susie's South 40, A Matter of Taste, Back Door Catering, Brenda Land and Catering Express, is divided into the following areas: New York, New York; The Big Easy; The Wild, Wild West; and California Dreamin.'

"As guests of Celebration enter a different area, everything they see and do — from the children's activities to the food they eat to the music they hear — is tailored to that region of the United States," Ms. Wells said. "We think that will give visitors a completely new way of looking at Celebration of the Arts."

Entertainment will be headlined in the various areas by, in New York, New York, the big-beat a capella quartet Schrodinger's Cat; in The Big Easy by the Zydeco Dots playing its brand of Cajun music; in the Wild, Wild West by the Gillette Brothers, Guy and Pip, awarded Best Duo/Group by the Academy of Western Artists; and in "California Dreamin' by the Pulsations of Midland offering a nostalgic musical trip.

And this year's COA Street Concert at 8 p.m. Saturday features local talent Casey Lee Green and The Wilkinsons, a family trio whose career started with the hit "26 Cents" and includes receiving numerous nominations, awards and honors since 1999 including five Canadian Country Music Awards and four Big Country Awards. Tickets are $12 in advance and $15 at the gate.

Following the Friday Preview Party, COA runs from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. May 20 in Centennial Plaza and the east side of the Courthouse lawn. Admission is $4 for adults (ages 14 to 54), $3 for seniors 55 and older, $1 for ages 3 to 13 and

Jacqueline Bigar's Stars

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, May 13, 2001:

You are unusually caring and dedicated, but you might want to express it more publicly, perhaps through work or another commitment. You have a deep vision about how things should be. This year, your earning power increases. In some way, you might feel as if you are in a dream. If you are single, you could meet someone quite special later this year or next year through your activities and commitments. Communication flourishes. If you are attached, your relationship will benefit if you share more of your aspirations. AQUARIUS inspires you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Think before you start Ramming around. What would you really like to do? Perhaps you would like to have a mellow conversation with a friend or take off for the beach or mountains. Be an initiator, using your Martian qualities. Tonight: Appreciate and be appreciated.
This week: If ever you are to be challenged professionally or emotionally, it will be this week. Look for faulty thinking — yours or someone else's!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Nothing pleases the Bull more than relaxing in a field of flowers. Certainly, if you are the mother of the household, there is no reason you can't. Nevertheless, put in a must appearance. Though you might grumble about going, a happening proves to be gratifying for all involved. Tonight: Smile away.
This week: Others grumble over money, work and desires. Hang in there while working toward successful solutions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ For the gregarious Gemini, getting going takes unusual effort. Make perfunctory calls early. Hop in your car or visit with a loved one at a distance. Your feelings touch someone. Don't forget to touch base with the "mothers" in your life. Smiles greet you. Tonight: Where the music is.
This week: Examine your ideals; others might want to criticize them. Your openness can bring success Wednesday.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ The always-sensitive Moon Child knows when to reveal feelings and when not to. Today, you'll decide to let a loved one know just how very special he is. A quiet walk, arm in arm, does much to restore your energy and well-being. A gift or thoughtful action opens new doors. Tonight: Togetherness works.
This week: Deal with finances. Avoid groups if you can. Pivotal discussions and decisions will be made on a one-on-one basis. Be in the right place at the right time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Do whatever you can to make a friend more comfortable. Know that your sunny Leonine personality makes a difference. Certainly you can tell by the way others seek you out. A relationship makes your mind wander and your heart flutter. Tonight: Follow plans.
This week: Others challenge you, so it seems, if you let your ego lead. While working with others, keep an eye out for flaws and correct them as you go.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Somehow the ball is dropped on you. Virgos are known for their fine sense of organization. If you are tired of this pattern, perhaps you need to be less available or responsible. Reach into your creativity when thanking someone for the difference he makes in your life. Use that special touch. Tonight: Start thinking about Monday.
This week: Others create a lot of steam. You might want to run away. Concentrate on your work and you'll find relief.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ If someone isn't as responsive as you would like, you might need to think the situation through. How might you have encouraged this behavior? Use your well-known creativity to draw this person to you. Give up doing the Libra "thing" of fence-sitting. Take a stand. Tonight: Ever playful.
This week: Imagination leads you down many trails. Test out your ideas on others. You might not see the flaws in your thinking.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ One-on-one relating helps open up a reticent loved one, who needs special attention. Express your intense Scorpio feelings by cooking or treating others to dinner. Indulge and delight those in your immediate circle. Tonight: Put on a favorite piece of music.
This week: Rocky financial and emotional turf sets you off. Separate work and your personal life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Deal with an overly serious partner or loved one by helping him talk through a problem. Your perceptions help. Express your utopian side with others. They often forget that the cup is half-full. You make a difference where it counts. Tonight: Use your wonderful imagination.
This week: Speak your mind, but don't be surprised if others downright disagree. Work with others to find the midpoint, OK?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ What you might value as a token of affection could be a lot different from a loved one. Put on your thinking cap when doing something special for a mother in your life. What would be a special thank-you? Tonight: Treat someone as she would like.
This week: What you think is dynamic could fall apart when tested. Don't pout. Don't worry.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Though commitment isn't an Aquarian strong suit, you'll decide to create more structure within a special relationship. You also might see how you could be depriving yourself in some way by not wanting stronger ties. Allow others to see your inspiration and your vulnerable qualities. Tonight: Just do it!
This week: The ball falls in your court, like it or not. Your resourcefulness on Wednesday solves many problems — not only yours.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Take your time and step back. Express your feelings to a trusted family member, even if you are a bit blah. Others admire your Piscean intuition. Use it right now to help another find enjoyment. Put on a great piece of music and allow your feelings to wander. Tonight: Get a good night's sleep.
This week: You might want to look for cover until Wednesday, when you become everyone's hero.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇

Do you think you are skilled enough to play on a strong team in a major knockout competition? Try your hand at making four spades on this deal from the Canadian Nationals.

The auction was duplicated at both tables of the match. With a hand of opening bid strength facing an opener, game in the 4-4 major should have good play, although South might have made allowance for a three-card raise by partner.

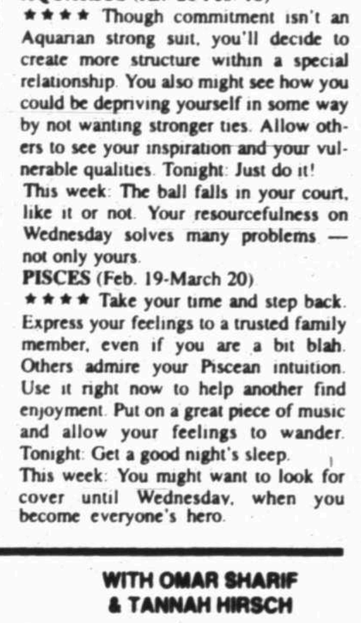

West leads the jack of diamonds, you win with the king in dummy and your top priority is to get rid of your diamond loser. Since there is a dearth of fast entries to dummy, you cannot afford the heart finesse — should it lose, a diamond continuation removes your entry to the table before you can use the queen of hearts for a diamond discard. You sidestep that problem by leading a heart to the ace and continuing with the jack. East takes the king and reverts to diamonds. You win the ace and discard your diamond loser on the queen of hearts.

This could be the last time you are in dummy for a while, so you must take advantage of being there to lead a club to the jack. When that wins, lead a trump toward the queen. West rises with the ace — which can only be a bare ace or from the ace-jack doubleton — and reverts to diamonds, forcing you to ruff in hand.

Now cash the ace of clubs and exit with a club. If the king drops under the ace, your only other loser can be a trump, so assume East is able to win the club and play another. You trump in dummy, overruffing West's jack if necessary, and score the last two tricks with high trumps. On the actual layout, East will have to return a trump, so insert the ten and win the remaining tricks with the king of trumps and dummy's queen.

If you wended your way through this maze successfully, you should be a worthy member of a contending team.

EVENT: Celebration begins Friday

free to those under 3. (Wall and Texas avenues on either side of Midland Center will be closed to traffic. Wall will close Friday at 7 a.m. and Texas at 1 p.m. Both will reopen May 20 after 5 p.m.)

During the event, Midland Center will be filled with works by juried artists from as far away as New York and California.

"We have modified the layout to allow the booths to all be slightly larger, but we've not sacrificed the number of artists," Ms. Wells said. "We have 70 artists from all over the Southwest."

For those anxious to have an early view of the arts show, the Friday Preview Party and Culinary Arts experience offers that opportunity.

"The Preview Party carries out the same theme as all of Celebration," said Ms. Wells. "There will be musical entertainment from the four regions, and, of course, an opportunity to see these artists for the first time and to enjoy food from local restaurants and caterers, many of which are following along with the theme and planning their menus accordingly. It's a wonderful opportunity to get the first flavor of what we are presenting to Midland."

"There's probably close to 50 chairmen and literally hundreds of volunteers,' said Ms. Wells, who has been involved with Celebration of the Arts for around eight years. "This year, somebody said, 'Do you want to take on the whole thing," and I said. 'Sure.' I jumped at the chance

"Celebration is in my blood. The best way to explain it is that I feel very strongly about what Celebration of the Arts does — the cultural education and the environment that it provides for Midland. It's done a wonderful job for the last 17 years, and I am proud to be a part of it for the 18th year and will be a part of it for as long as I possibly can."

Celebration of the Arts is presented by the local umbrella organization for the arts, the Arts Assembly of Midland, as a fund-raiser and a way of promoting the arts locally. Additional information regarding the event can be gained by calling the Arts Assembly, 687-1149 or going to www.artsassembly.net.

"Last year, we were able to give $57,500 to 24 local nonprofit organizations, and we hope that we will be able to do even better this year," said Linda Bond, director of the Arts Assembly. "An interesting side note is that all the organizations that receive funding through the Arts Assembly are required to be a part of the Celebration of the Arts. So all of them will be there in some way giving demonstrations or performing or just telling people about their organizations. This helps people realize how many arts opportunities we have and how important they are to the health and vitality of a community."

Ride for the Arts to be Saturday and May 20

By Georgia Temple
Entertainment Editor

New this year to Celebration of the Arts is a Westwood Medical Center Ride for the Arts.

"Celebration of the Arts has teamed up with the Permian Basin Bike Association to present the first annual Westwood Medical Center Ride for the Arts," said Kathy Wells, 2001 COA chairman.

The event, being held during COA, includes an all-day Bike Criterium race on Saturday and a morning bike tour on May 20.

The Criterium is a fast, action-packed Grand-Prix style bike race through the streets of downtown Midland, with a view of all the action from the Celebration grounds. The Sunday bike tour takes riders on a 10, 20 or 40 mile ride into the country, starting and ending at Midland Center.

"With the ever-increasing interest in bike riding and racing in the Permian Basin, we're excited to add this event to our festivities," said Ms. Wells.

The Saturday USCF Criterium begins at 10 a.m. The race is a .82 mile figure eight race through downtown Midland with eight 90 degree turns per lap. All registered cyclists receive a Celebration of the Arts T-shirt, passes to Celebration's daytime activities, refreshments and a chance to win part of the $1,000 total prizes.

Registration closes 30 minutes before start time. Bike riders must wear approved helmets at all times. There is spectator seating inside the Celebration of the Arts fences.

On May 20, a bike tour begins at Midland Center at 10 a.m. There are 40, 20 and 10 mile tours, all starting at the COA grounds in downtown Midland.

Registration fees for the Criterium Race are $30. Registration after May 11 is $25 for the 20 or 40 mile tour and $20 for the 10 mile tour.

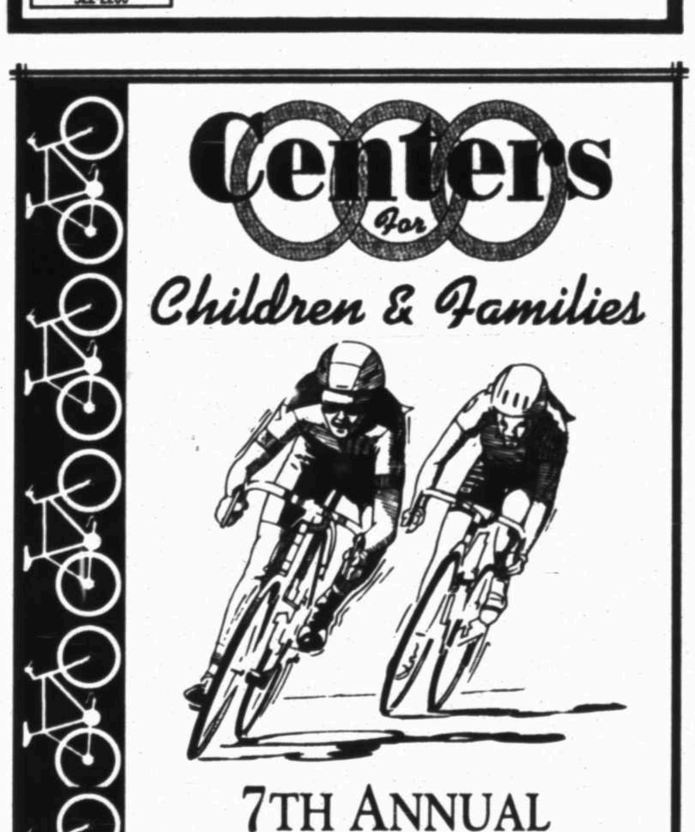

Sponsors are Westwood Medical Center, World Gym, Johnny Carino's, Peyton's Bikes and Fit for Life. For bike information, call John Beane, 915-699-1718 or 800-73-4764 or e-mail ride@peytonsbikes.com.

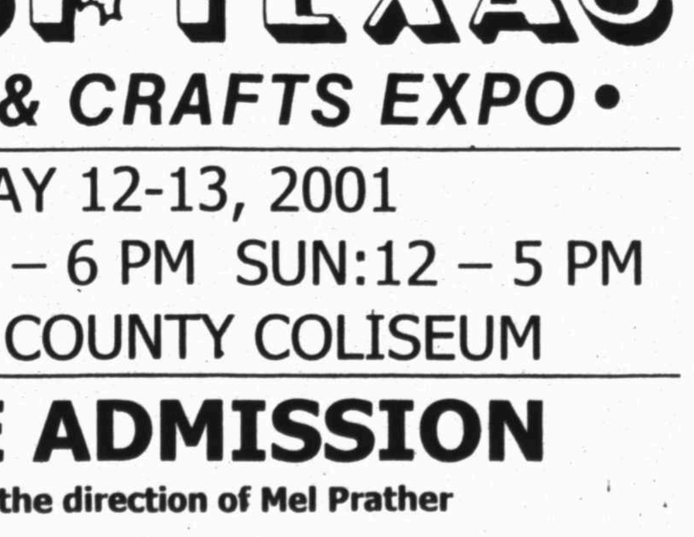

There will be no COA run for the arts this year as well as no separate ArtWalk this month. Instead, ArtWalk Midland, Inc., will participate in COA Saturday and May 20 by creating a walk that guides people through Celebration.

ArtWalk is one of the 16 arts organizations that has a booth at Celebration. The other organizations are: Fine Arts Institute, Midland Arts Association, Midland Poetry Society, Midland Community Theatre, Midland County Public Library, Gem & Mineral Society, Quilters Guild, Museum of the Southwest, (Midland) Community Concerts, The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Library Hall of Fame, Midland Opera Theater, Hispanic Cultural Center, Porcelain Art Club, AARP and Midland Festival Ballet.

The 18th COA is scheduled for Friday through May 20 at Midland Center and Centennial Plaza, downtown. This year's theme is "Celebrate America: A Coast to Coast Arts Experience." For more information on COA, call the Arts Assembly of Midland, 915-687-1149, e-mail: aam@artsassembly.net or check the web page, www.artsassembly.net.

Museum exhibit

HOUSTON — The Houston Museum of Natural Science is celebrating the 1,000th anniversary of the Viking arrival in North America with the opening of "Vikings: The North Atlantic Saga" on July 14. A tale of explorers, farmers and fisherman, not the horn-helmeted warriors of lore, this exhibition showcases more than 300 objects from the national museum collections of the five Nordic countries. These objects pertain to the westward expansion of the Vikings, across the Atlantic and toward the North American continent, which they reached 500 years before Columbus.

From the Lindisfarne Stone, commemorating the Viking raid in Britain in A.D. 793 that inaugurates the Viking Age, to the "Bishop of Baffin," the Inuit wooden carving of Norsemen, the exhibition comprises more than 300 objects including Viking Age jewelry, wooden carvings, grave goods, medieval church carvings dating to 1050, Romantic period objects and modern pop-culture items.

'The Producers' get record-breaking 15 Tony nominations

By Michael Kuchwara
Associated Press

NEW YORK — "The Producers," Broadway's biggest hit in years, received a record-breaking 15 nominations Monday, including a nod for best musical, as the 2001 Tony nominations honoring the best of the Broadway season were announced.

Its two stars, Nathan Lane and Matthew Broderick, were nominated as were three of its performers in the featured-actor category: Roger Bart, Gary Beach and Brad Oscar.

The musical, based on the classic 1968 Mel Brooks film comedy, also received nods for book, score, direction-musical, featured-actress musical, choreography, sets, costumes, lighting and orchestrations. Brooks himself received three nominations — for book, score and for being a producer of "The Producers."

There was some confusion involving the previous record holder for most Tony nominations. For 30 years, it was thought that "Company," the Stephen Sondheim-George Furth musical, had received 15 nominations.

"'Company,' in fact, had 14 nominations," said Keith Sherman, a spokesman for the Tonys. "In all the record books, Hal Prince was listed twice, for best production and best producer. In fact, 'Company' only won for best production. We went back to the actual ballot from the '70s and noticed the truth."

Yet, according to Mary Bryant, a spokesman for Prince, "Hal remembers being nominated three times, but he really doesn't talk Tonys." Prince was nominated for — and did win — a Tony for "Company" as best director of a musical.

A copy of the 1971 Tony ballot obtained by The Associated Press shows it received 14 nominations and there was no separate category for producer.

"The Producers" nearest competitor was "The Full Monty," which received 10 nominations and "42nd Street," which got nine. Winners will be announced June 3.

Besides "The Producers" and "The Full Monty," competition for this year's top musical award includes "A Class Act," a celebration of the life of songwriter Ed Kleban, and "Jane Eyre," a retelling of the Charlotte Bronte novel.

Nominated for best play were "Proof," the 2001 Pulitzer Prize winner by David Auburn; "The Invention of Love," Tom Stoppard's drama about English poet A.E. Housman; "King Hedley II," the latest installment from August Wilson on the 20th century black experience in America, and "The Tale of the Allergist's Wife," Charles Busch's comedy about an anxiety-riddled Manhattan matron.

Nominated for best actor in a play were Brian Stokes Mitchell, the volcanic title character in "King Hedley II"; Richard Easton, who plays the older Housman in "The Invention of Love"; Gary Sinise, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," and the two stars of the Irish comedy, "Stones in His Pockets," Sean Campion and Conleth Hill.

Actress nods went to Mary-Louise Parker, the tormented daughter in "Proof"; Linda Lavin, "The Tale of the Allergist's Wife"; Leslie Uggams, "King Hedley II"; Jean Smart, who played a tempestuous star in the revival of "The Man Who Came to Dinner"; and Juliette Binoche, "Betrayal."

Besides Lane and Broderick, best-actor musical nominations went to Kevin Chamberlin, "Seussical"; Tom Hewitt, "The Rocky Horror Show"; and Patrick Wilson of "The Full Monty."

Briefing

Pure finals Hallwood offer

Pure Resources Inc. says it has finaled its initial tender offer to purchase the outstanding common shares of Hallwood Energy Corp. for $12.50 per share and the preferred stock for $10.84 per share. Pure will also begin a second offering period.

Jack Hightower, Chairman and CEO of Pure Resources said the merger between Pure Resource II, a subsidary, and Hallwood was inevitable, as Pure Resources II intends to vote all its shares in favor of the merger. He said shareholders accepting the second tender offer would be able to obtain consideration much faster than waiting until after the merger.

Patterson-UTI consolidation expected

Following the Patterson-UTIi merger, some consolidation among yards in Midland, New Mexico, and Lubbock are likely to take place, according to official sources. But details will not be available until later this week when company executives meet with personnel in those areas. Patterson-UTI met with personnel in Oklahoma City, Tyler and Victoria last week.

New Mexico seminar set

The New Mexico Oil Conservation Commission will present a two-day seminar aimed at Midland operators on the subject of drilling and producing in New Mexico.

The seminar will be held Wednesday and Thursday at First Presbyterian Church in Midland. The Wednesday session will run from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m. and the Thursday session from 8 a.m. until 2 p.m. Topics include: non-specific well permits, environmental concerns, and a review of the New Mexico permitting process.

Two hearing examiners from Santa Fe as well as personnel from the Hobbs office will present the topics and be on hand to answer questions. There is no charge for the seminar.

Williams Cos. to buy Barrett

NEW YORK (AP) — Williams Cos. said it will buy natural gas producer Barrett Resources for $2.5 billion in cash and stock, topping a $2 billion hostile bid by the U.S. unit of Royal Dutch/Shell Group.

Two hours after the announcement, Shell said it would drop the effort it started in March to acquire Denver-based Barrett.

"Shell decided to take this action because of its unwillingness to increase its offer beyond a level that makes economic sense to Shell," the company said in a statement.

Barrett put itself up for sale last month after rejecting Shell's initial offer for the company.

Shell initially offered $55 per share for Barrett, valuing the company at about $1.8 billion, but later sweetened its offer to $60 per share.

Williams said it will pay $73 per share for 50 percent of Barrett's outstanding stock, then pay 1.767 shares for each remaining Barrett share. Williams will also assume $300 million in Barrett debt.

Barrett is coveted for its significant presence in the Rocky Mountain region, which is becoming increasingly valuable to gas producers because of declining production in traditional mar-

Pipeline conversion opens door for Basin

■ El Paso's conversion of the All-American Pipeline will add new westbound capacity for Permian Basin producers if and when needed.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

When El Paso Natural Gas Co. agreed last February to purchase the 1,223-mile Plains All American Pipeline, it had no idea of the problems ahead or how valuable the pipeline would be in helping relief the California energy crisis.

Since the purchase, a terrible explosion at Carlsbad last August claimed 12 lives and put El Paso into a system-wide renovation and inspection program impacting capacity and transportation. At the same time the energy market in California hit a brick wall for lack of intrastate pipelines and power plants. Consumers suffered rolling blackouts and PG&E went into bankruptcy.

Today the All American Pipeline, which was originally built to bring heavy crude oil from Santa Barbara to McCamey, will be converted into a natural gas pipeline that will address three concerns.

First, it will help El Paso with capacity as it continues system inspections and upgrades of its system.

Two, it increase daily capacity to the California border by 230 million cubic feet to ensure there is plenty of natural gas supply at the California border to power new California power plants if and when they are built.

Three, in the long run the pipeline will be beneficial to Permian Basin gas producers, providing West Texas and Southeast New Mexico producers additional potential capacity into its number one market — California.

El Paso officials say it is but one step in helping alleviate the region's power crisis.

Kim Wallace, a spokesman for El Paso Corp., said that present authorization from FERC is to only to make the pipeline conversion part of a looping system in El Paso's Southern System. This loop system will enable the company to replace existing compression facilities with more efficient facilities and thereby reduce operating, maintenance, and fuel costs to its customers. But with increased production in the Permian Basin and increased demand in California, the 30-inch pipeline could be the answer to additional capacity.

She said the pipeline conversion would not be available for additional capacity without FERC approval: "Before we could add it as capacity we would have to prove that we have the customers and the need."

"Shippers haven't been scheduling up to capacity.

Energy policy may be detailed at conference

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

When Guido DeHoratiis, acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy for Natural Gas and Petroleum Technology, speaks to SPE Permian Basin Recovery Conference attendees Wednesday, he may or may not be able to give full and complete details of President Bush's proposed national energy policy.

If the policy has been announced by Wednesday, DeHoratiis, a former manager for the Naval Petroleum & Oil Shale reserves and supervisor for the Minerals Management Service, said he will be able to talk about all details of the policy. However, if the policy has not been announced, he will be unable to jump the gun on the President.

Guido DeHoratiis, acting deputy assistant Secretary of Energy, will speak at the Recovery Conference.

DeHoratiis, who holds a degree in Petroleum and Natural Gas Engineering from Penn State, has been a member of the Society of Petroleum Engineers since 1977 and is primarily in charge of research and development for the Department of Energy. He will be able to provide local oil and gas operators insight on DOE recovery research.

Also speaking to the Recovery Conference is Bill Pike, Editor in Chief of Hart's E&P magazine. Pike is well-rounded in the petroleum industry with experience in the upstream industry, petroleum academics and journalism.

Gas Processor meeting could see record crowd

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Record attendance is expected for The Permian Basin Gas Processors Association Regional Meeting set for Thursday in Odessa, which will be preceded by a GPA golf tournament Wednesday.

The Permian Basin is one of the largest gas processing areas in the U.S., and the annual meeting of the Permian Chapter of the Gas Processors Association allows those involved in gas gathering, treating, processing and sales in the Permian Basin to keep up to speed on technology, management and issues.

Keynote speaker for the event will be Bob Gallagher, president of the New Mexico Oil and Gas Association. A former Midland resident and former City Manager of Hobbs, Gallagher served as assistant to Secretary of Energy Bill Richardson during the Clinton administration. He will speak on national energy policy and what an energy policy should contain.

Presentations planned for the meeting include four technical presentations and a natural gas outlook session to be presented by John Hull with Texaco Natural Gas in Houston. Hull will provide a full review of natural gas supply and demand, including the impact of electricity demand on supply.

Technical presentations will include a review of effective acid-gas injection systems, a look at the Shackelford SCADA system, the portable chromatograph project and the installation of a precontactor to improve dehydration in a glycol dehydrator.

Frank H. Easton with Master Corp. in Odessa will make the presentation on acid-gas systems and the design of facilities for the disposal of acid gas from treating facilities.

Review of the Shackelford SCADA System will be presented by Clay Noble of Dynegy Midstream Services in Texas. Dynegy has installed a SCADA system in the North Texas gathering system to assist field personnel in prioritizing operations and maintenance activities.

An overview of a portable chromatograph project, initiated in 1999, will be presented by Andy Lary with Duke Energy Field Services in Midland, and Paul Carmody with Amerada Hess in Houston will provide an overview on the use of precontactors to improve dehydration.

All sessions will be at the Holiday Inn Centre in Odessa and will run from 8:30 a.m. until noon, at which time Bob Gallagher will speak. The afternoon will consist of a round table discussion, from 1 to 3 p.m. between industry members on DOT Operator Qualifications.

The Wednesday golf tournament will be a two-man scramble at Ratliff Ranch Golf Links in Odessa.

Petroleum industry basking in price stability

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Price stability has arrived in the oil industry, meaning growth in the Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index is slowing from the sharp increases seen since the spring of 1999.

"Essentially we've been on a price run up from $10 or below up to $25 to $30," explained Karr Ingham, the Amarillo economist who prepares the index for First American Bank, the Midland Chamber of Commerce and Reporter-Telegram.

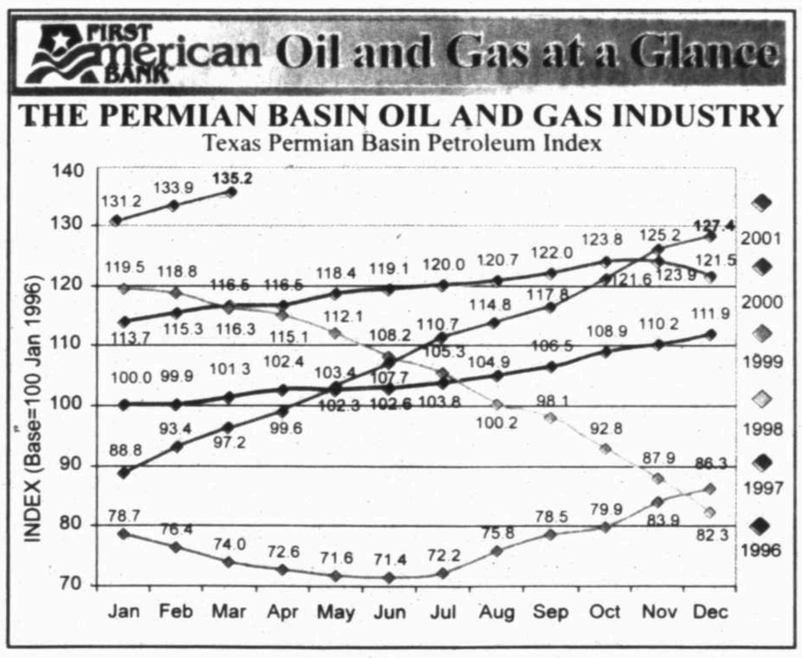

For the index to continue its sharp increases, he said, "We'd have to assume prices would go from $25 or $30 to $35 or $40, and I don't think that's going to happen."

Regardless of price projections, he said, "the best case scenario is prices will stay in the $25-$30 range," a range he said is sufficient to maintain a healthy level of activity in the industry, though he sees some volatility remaining in prices.

"Interestingly, March marks the first time since March of 1999 that the monthly average posted price has been below the same month the previous year," he said. "Gas prices, however, are spurring activity and gas-related activities are lending substantial support to the index at present."

Still, he expects prices to remain strong for the time being, saying "it appears to me, because of OPEC and their recent decisions, which they seem to be adhering to, and with sheer demand and rising demand for petroleum products,

Bush energy plan needs strong conservation focus

Pitts

President Bush's energy policy, to be announced this week, could be headed for tough sledding in the months ahead because of a less than enthusiastic position on conservation.

Vice President Cheney last week outlined the Bush energy policy to the nation, saying the administration will focus on oil, gas, nuclear, clean coal and hydropower to increase domestic energy supplies, but it would not require conservation mandates. He called conservation "a sign of personal virtue, but not a sufficient basis for a sound, comprehensive energy policy."

He said a comprehensive energy policy should be about efficiency and not austerity, that to speak of conservation "is to duck the tough issues."

It is plenty obvious that a nation cannot conserve its way to energy security or prosperity, and the Bush administration deserves all "As" for its decision to focus on supply and bringing all energy sources to the table. But it is equally obvious that America has a serious problem with excessive energy consumption. As a nation we have turned "conspicuous consumption" into a national sport.

Americans drive monster vehicles that burn far too much gas and build homes and businesses that cost far too much to heat and cool. Energy consumption builds wealth and makes life easier, and in itself is not evil. It is the wasteful and frivolous use of energy that is difficult to reconcile with a national energy policy that seeks to reduce foreign imports.

Supply and conservation go hand in hand, and if the Bush team has not gone as far as it should on conservation, those who think we can remain a world power by riding bicycles are equally at fault.

"Our energy strategy," said Cheney, "will recognize that the present crisis does not represent a failing of the American people."

In other words it won't put a kink in an extravagant lifestyle. Failure, however, is exactly what extravagance represents.

American consumers have failed to recognize the gravity of the energy crisis by failing to recognize the importance of energy supply or the impact of energy demand. They have not only failed to let domestic energy producers produce but failed to consume energy efficiently and wisely. And, operating on the politically correct mind set that says: "Forget the facts. Damn the consequences. Green agenda or no agenda," Americans have failed to inform themselves on energy issues, face the truth, bite the bullet, and make hard choices for the good of the nation.

The California mess, however, has proven this head-in-the-sand approach to reality unworkable. Cheney warns that there won't be any drastic price reductions any time soon."

STABILITY: Non-price indicators up

For the index to continue to grow, Ingham said, non-price-related indicators like rig count, drilling permits, completions and employment, will have to pick up steam, and are beginning to do so.

The March rig count in the Texas portion of the Permian Basin was the highest since the index peaked in November 1997, he said, and permits to drill were the highest since October 1997.

Employment, which remains considerably below its peak of late 1997 and early 1998 is also improving, he said, though he expects it to improve slowly.

Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said the lack of workers is hindering activity somewhat.

"There are a few more rigs that could be brought out of mothballs if we had the crews," he said, adding that there are even a few new rigs being built in the Cactus Drilling yard on Interstate 20, the first new rigs built in about 20 years.

He hopes to help ease the problem by securing federal funds to establish training centers at Midland College, Odessa College and New Mexico Junior College.

"Each center would train in different aspects of the industry, it wouldn't be a choice of any of the three," he said. "Midland College would train on drilling and workover rigs, Odessa College would train in being a field supervisor or field foreman and New Mexico Junior College would train in the high tech part of the industry."

He met late last week with aides of U.S. Rep. Larry Combest and said the proposal "is progressing at a normal Washington rate."

Not only does the industry need to recruit field people, Burns said, "we need to recruit professionals."

He noted that universities like Texas A&M and the University of Texas are seeing a lack of students in their engineering and geology departments.

"There's been a dearth of jobs for about the last 15 years, which means our engineers and geologists are now 45 or 50 years old," he said.

Ingham said he believes the slowing national and state economies may loosen the labor market and make the healthy energy industry attractive to workers again.

"A tight labor market meant it was difficult to attract workers to the oil industry because it is so volatile and they had jobs," Ingham said. "With a looser labor market, it may be a little easier to attract workers if the oil economy remains healthy and since wages are attractive."

CONFERENCE: DOE deputy secretary visits

(From 1)

Bill Pike

Prior to becoming a petroleum journalist, Pike, who was born and raised in West Texas, spent 20 years in the upstream oil industry and at one time worked for Sohio in the Spraberry. He has a PhD from Aberdeen University in Scotland, where he taught oil and gas economic history. Pike will address the Recovery Conference Tuesday.

The Recovery Conference gets underway with a Golf Tournament on Monday and runs through Thursday.

PITTS: Bush should play conservation card now that without a clear energy strategy the problems will not go away and all "America will one day face the problems of California — or worse."

(From 1)

This is more true any anyone can imagine. With supply and demand in such tight balance, and the nation so close to the crisis line, the slightest disruption, downturn or deviation can send prices out of sight. There is simply no room anymore for the greenish, recalcitrant agenda that would prevent reasonable supply solutions. It puts the nation at too high a risk.

At the same time, bold, honest decisions must be made about conservation.

One simply cannot talk about an energy crisis without talking about energy conservation. And so far the Bush energy team has not said much about conservation. It should.

Most Midland oilmen agree that the Bush policy must have a conservation plan. Actually, it should be a co-driver of U.S. energy policy. If the intent of an energy policy is to back out foreign barrels and make America less dependent on foreign producers, then a barrel of oil "saved" is the same as a barrel of oil produced. Also, it is easier, cheaper and quicker to conserve a barrel of oil in the U.S. than to find and produce one.

Some have said the Bush team is trying to sell the message that "Supply is more important than conservation, because a gallon of 'conserved' gasoline will not get you out of the driveway." If that is the intended message, it is coming off instead as "Conservation is not that important."

Others have said the Bush team is holding back on the conservation card, that it will come later when supply solutions are in place. I would suggest that if the Bush energy team does have a conservation card, they play it now.

If there is little or no conservation component when the energy policy is announced later this week, that absence will be the entire focus of the media and the rantings of an environmental left who oppose any version of a supply-based energy policy. It could make energy policy sledding very tough as it heads to a vote.

Introduction to Geographic Information Systems
Instructor: Seiichi Nagihara, Assistant Professor, Department of Geosciences, Texas Tech
Date & Time: May 21, Monday, 8:30 am - 4:30 pm
Fee: $175

An introductory course on geographic information (GIS). GIS is defined as "an organized collection of company hardware, software, geographic data, and personnel designed to efficiently capture, store, update, manipulate, analyze, and display all forms of geographically referenced information." Provides an overview of GIS technology and teaches the participants basic techniques for manipulating and displaying geographic data through hands-on computer exercises. Geographically referenced data, or geospatial data, are used almost everywhere in business decision-making and research. For example, petroleum geologists and engineers analyze geologic data for oil exploration and production. Government officials use economic and cultural demographics data for city zoning and other political decision making. The participants will use such real-world examples in carrying out GIS-based spatial analyses. The class also provides information on various types of geospatial data and software packages that are available in the public domain.

PIPELINE: Conversion adds westbound capacity

(From 1)

She noted this was because demand had been down in California for the past few months because of power plants shutting down for maintenance.

California Governor Gray Davis has accused Permian Basin producers and others of hoarding natural gas to drive up energy prices in his state. But Wallace said that is not true.

"California can't take any more gas because they don't have the intrastate capacity to accept it."

For the moment the Permian Basin to California pipeline will be utilized to help El Paso comply with its maintenance requirements without impacting market. Following the Carlsbad accident, an investigation by the Office of Pipeline Safety resulted in requirements to bring El Paso Natural Gas into safety compliance. That required the company to replace a number of 90 degree turns to allow inspection pigs to pass through. Much of that work has been taking place at night, on weekends and during non-peak periods. Now with the conversion of a heavy duty pipe adjacent to their own pipe, El Paso will have more flexibility

Authorization for the $75 million conversion was received from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Wednesday, only two months after application. The commission said it expedited authorization, because of the "pressing energy needs" in the U.S. West. Work on the 785-mile conversion is set to begin immediately.

The 1,223-mile, 30-inch pipeline was built in the mid-1980s as a crude oil transportation system and runs from McCamey, Texas to Santa Barbara, California.

Plains Resources Inc. agreed to sell a stake in Plains All American Pipeline LP, a separately traded oil-pipeline operator, to an investor group for $149.3 million to split the unit from its oil-exploration business. Plains Resources will get about $104 million in cash and stock valued at $45.2 million for the sale, which will cut its stake in Plains All American to 39 percent from 54 percent. The buyers include EnCap Investments LLC, owned by El Paso Corp., and Kayne Anderson Capital Advisors.

"The purchase of these facilities presents El Paso Natural Gas with a unique opportunity to add additional flexibility on its pipeline system that is both operating expense and fuel efficient," said Patricia A. Shelton, president of El Paso Natural Gas Company. "This purchase helps ready El Paso Natural Gas for the coming decade with efficiency gains to accommodate the clockwise shift in the flow of gas in North America.

Don't let deregulation get you booted!

Lately, deregulation of the electric utility industry in Texas has been a prominent topic of discussion among oil and gas producers. Electric utility restructuring has received a great deal of attention because it has the potential to affect the oil and gas industry more than any other major industry in the State. At this time, it seems that there are many more questions than answers as to what effect deregulation will have on the day-to-day operations of producers and operators.

Those questions may remain unanswered until deregulation officially goes into effect January 1, 2002. However, there are some definite changes that can be anticipated. For producers and operators, deregulation will bring about a paradigm shift from being aware of how much power is used to when power is used. For an electricity consumer to take full advantage of the various power pricing options available, it will be necessary to understand their usage profile and process requirements. For example, "peak load" will cost more than "base load" and "firm" power will cost more than "curtailable" or "interruptible" power.

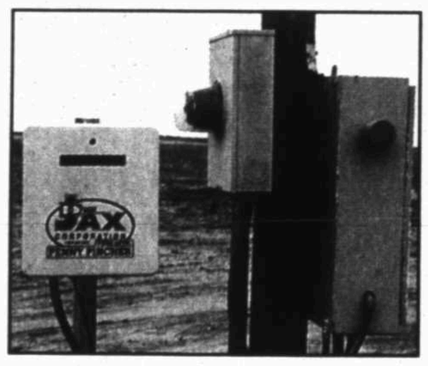

Electric consumers who are able to reduce peak loads and / or shift loads to "off peak" periods will be able to realize significant cost reductions. Planning for loads that can be curtailed upon request or interrupted without prior notice will result in further cost reductions. Conversely, unknown usage patterns and ignoring curtailable or interruptable loads will result in greatly higher electric costs.

You can see the importance of reviewing and understanding field loads and from that, establishing an energy management plan for operations. D-Jax Corporation can help. Penny Pincher pump off controls should be at the center of any energy management plan. Their flexibility, reliability and simplicity make them ideal for reducing peak loads and shifting loads to off peak hours with no production loss.

For several years, some of D-Jax's customers have been implementing energy management plans to deal with electric energy contracts that assessed heavy penalties for peak load use. With the coming of deregulation, for every producer/operator must address these issues to stay ahead of electric energy costs. The Penny Pincher pump off control has repeatedly reduced electric energy costs while maintaining maximum production rates and peak pumping efficiency.

The Penny Pinchers' low acquisition cost, low maintenance and high reliability along with D-Jax's unparalleled customer service make it the natural choice among all pump off controls to implement oilfield energy management programs. For 30 years D-Jax professionals have been serving the petroleum industry with products and services that minimize lifting costs and maximize production.

Electric utility deregulation presents challenges. However there are also many opportunities to save money on electric bills for those companies that develop the best strategies to deal with market trends.
D-Jax Corporation builds and markets pump off controllers and dynamometers worldwide.

Whatever happens to electricity costs due to deregulation of the power industry, the Penny Pincher pump off controller will minimize lifting costs.

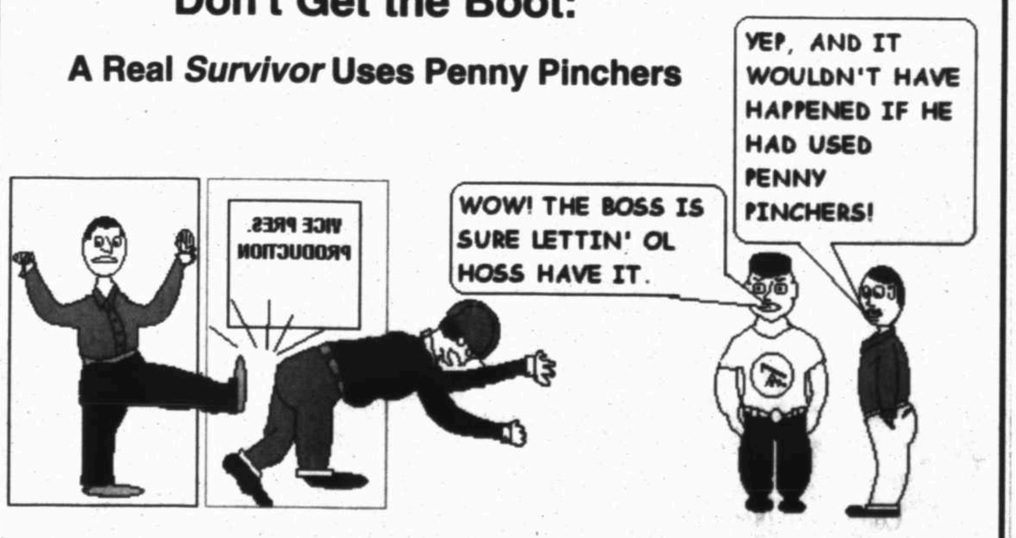

The company accepts Visa, Master Card, Discover and American Express. Call any of the helpful sales staff at D-Jax, 683-5710 or 1-800-446-3529. E-mail them at:

Chevron riding high as energy prices continue to stay strong

By George Raine
San Francisco Chronicle

SAN FRANCISCO — For months, officials at Chevron Corp. in San Francisco have had little to say publicly, the prolonged quiet period due to the proposed merger with Texaco Inc. Looking at the oil company's 2000 and first-quarter 2001 numbers, you would expect Dublin, Ireland-born Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Dave O'Reilly to be leading the board in an Irish jig in front of its Market Street headquarters.

The corporation had revenues of $52.1 billion, a 42 percent increase over 1999 sales.

As a beneficiary of natural gas prices that have more than tripled and rising profits from oil refining, Chevron also reported record first-quarter net income of $1.6 billion, a 53 percent increase over the first quarter of 2000.

Chevron owes much of its good fortune to sustained high prices for natural gas and crude oil during the year — in the $30-per-barrel range for crude, compared with $11 only three years ago — and strong refining margins, particularly in the United States. Chevron also increased oil and gas production 3 percent over 1999, taking advantage of high prices.

Federal Trade Commission approval of the Chevron-Texaco merger is expected soon, perhaps by mid-June.

It will be yet another example of oil industry concentration in California. Accordingly, state Attorney General Bill Lockyer and the FTC are investigating pricing in the state to determine whether the proposed alliance would do significant harm to competition.

Nevertheless, Fadel Gheit, an analyst at Fahnestock & Co. in New York, said the merger with Texaco, based in White Plains, N.Y., is very complementary. He added, "I can't think of two companies that fit together so well, like a glove. I equate this merger with college sweethearts who finally get married."

Gheit says that once regulators give their approval, "the new company will hit the ground faster than we've seen in any other merger. The two companies now are familiar with each other's strengths and weaknesses."

Chevron and Texaco have not offered details to reporters about the process of giving shape to a combined company, but Gheit said, "Everyone knows who he or she reports to. There are telephone lists. No time has been wasted. Once the green light is given they will be at maximum speed."

In January the corporation signaled its optimism about 2001. Chevron said it will spend $6 billion on exploration and capital projects this year, a 16 percent increase over 2000.

The plan is separate from projects that may come to involve Texaco. In addition, Chevron, the second-largest U.S. petroleum corporation in total assets, said it will invest $3.7 billion, or 62 percent of its total spending, in worldwide exploration and production. Of that, $1.2 billion will be spent in the United States.

There is some expectation that crude oil prices will fall during 2001, said Brian Eisenbarth, co-manager of the Golden Gate Fund in Larkspur, which invests in Bay Area companies. Still, do not fear for ChevronTexaco, he said, because O'Reilly, who will head the new corporation, has led a management team that has added to shareholder value in the past.

Under O'Reilly's leadership, Chevron stock in mid-April had nearly returned to its 52-week high — $94.87. "I think they'll be at $100 a share later this year," Eisenbarth said of Chevron.

At the close of the fourth quarter in January, O'Reilly said record earnings pushed Chevron's rate of return on capital to 22 percent. He said Chevron was able to strengthen its balance sheet significantly, including a reduction in debt of $2.7 billion and the repurchase of $1.4 billion in common shares. O'Reilly said the year ended with an improved debt ratio of 24 percent.

Chevron plans to invest about $1.4 billion in worldwide refining, marketing and transportation, which includes $500 million primarily for international pipeline projects. Refining and marketing investments in the United States will total about $600 million.

The consensus estimate for Chevron from 24 Wall Street analysts predicts an earnings decrease in 2001 of 12 percent, but Gheit disagrees . "I think the big surprise will be downstream, in refining and marketing. I think ChevronTexaco will show considerable strength," said Gheit, who added his earnings estimate for Chevron (about $8 per share) "is probably the highest on the street."

He added, "It's likely the merger takes place in the middle of the year, so everything is academic. It will be a completely different company, a lot stronger than two separate companies."
