Hundreds pray for massacre victims

By The Associated Press

Hundreds of weeping women marched through Beirut's Chatilla Palestinian refugee camp today to pray at a mass grave for victims of the Sept. 16-18 massacre that has raised an international furor and shaken Israel to its core.

The final units of French and Italian contingents of the reconstituted multinational peacekeeping force also arrived in Beirut today, but U.S. Marines continued to wait offshore for the departure of Israeli forces.

The peacekeeping force was requested by Lebanon after discovery that at least 320 Palestinian and Lebanese civilians were slain by Lebanese Christians in two refugee camps under Israeli military control.

The contributing countries, however, say none of the international troops will be deployed until Israeli forces are removed from both the east and west sectors of Beirut, as the United States has demanded.

The Tel Aviv military command announced Sunday that its forces would pull out of the capital's Moslem western sector by Wednesday, but gave no indication of when the whole city would be cleared.

Relatives of the victims gathered at the mass grave in Chatilla at a ceremony marking the Moslem Feast of Sacrifice. A few hundred women sobbing and carrying wreaths of flowers and photos of the dead marched down the main street and men chanted prayers from the Koran, Islam's holy book.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin scheduled an emergency Cabinet meeting for Tuesday, and Israel radio predicted he would have to concede to growing pressure from his Cabinet and dissident Israelis for a full-scale investigation of the country's role in the massacre.

The Israeli army's announcement of the pullout date for west Beirut was made a few hours before Israel radio and television went off the air and public and private businesses shut down for Yom Kippur or the Day of Atonement, holiest day on the Hebrew calendar. It began at sunset Sunday.

The killings caused a protest demonstration in Tel Aviv by 400,000 Israelis on Saturday and demands for the resignations of Begin and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon.

Israel radio said five of the 20 members of Begin's Cabinet have decided that the government's proposal of a limited inquiry into the massacre was not good enough because it would not let investigators subpoena witnesses and force them to testify under oath.

Israeli Justice Minister Moshe Nissim was quoted in the daily newspaper Maariv as saying a formal judicial inquiry "now seems inevitable."

The Israeli army, which entered Beirut's Moslem sector Sept. 15 after a successful three-month drive against Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon, announced Sunday that the pullback from the former guerrilla stronghold was being coordinated with the Lebanese army.

After the massacre of men, women and children at the Chatilla and Sabra camps, Lebanon asked the United States, Italy and France to redeploy the multinational peacekeeping force that oversaw the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrilla evacuation last month.

About 800 U.S. Marines had been scheduled to land in Beirut Sunday to join an estimated 1,100 French soldiers and about 670 Italian troops in an effort to help the Lebanese government reassert its authority.

But U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib was said to have told Israel that the Marines would stay offshore until all Israeli forces leave Beirut.

Midland bell takes part

With the Capitol in the background, Louis Ingram of Alexandria, Va., representing J. Evetts Haley, who wrote the book, "The Alamo Mission Bell," shows off Midland's Alamo Bell to Rachel, center, and Rebekah Caulk of Washington, D.C., Saturday. The bell, which is the property of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, was flown to Washington for part of the Prayer Day festivities.

West German party's ouster plans continue

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The Christian Democrat leadership decided today to go ahead with a plan to try to unseat Chancellor Helmut Schmidt this week, despite a stunning setback in a crucial state election.

Helmut Kohl, the Christian Democrat leader who would replace Schmidt, won support from both the party's presidium and ruling board today to try to oust Schmidt's Social Democrat government in a no-confidence vote in Parliament Friday, party spokesman Wolter von Thiesenhausen said.

The Christian Democrats' partners in the plan, the Bavaria-based Christian Social Union and the Free Democrats, also held leadership meetings today but there was no immediate word on whether they would continue to back the ouster strategy.

If he is to succeed, Kohl needs the backing of all 226 conservative deputies — the 174 Christian Democrats and the 52 Christian Social Union deputies — and at least 23 of the 53 Free Democrat members of 497-member Bundestag.

The ouster plan suffered a setback Sunday when voters in the state of Hesse swung behind the highly popular Schmidt and the left-of-center Social Democrats, and rejected the liberal Free Democrats, who precipitated the current government crisis by withdrawing from the Schmidt coalition Sept. 17.

Christian Social Union leader Franz-Josef Strauss, never eager to work with the Free Democrats, said the Hesse election cast doubt on the value of a conservative-liberal alliance as "a lasting strategy."

Official results of the voting in the central West German state gave the Christian Democrats 45.6 percent, or 52 seats, while the Social Democrats won 42.8 percent, or 49 seats, in the 110-seat state Parliament.

This left the two parties in much the same position as in the outgoing Parliament, where the Christian Democrats had 53 seats and Schmidt's party had 50. But Schmidt's Social Democrats did about 10 percent better than opinion polls predicted and voters left the Free Democrats out of Parliament altogether for the first time since 1970.

The Free Democrats won only 3 percent of the vote, far below the 5 percent required for representation, and lost their seven Parliament seats. At the same time, the radical environmentalist Greens got 8 percent, putting them into the state legislature for the first time with nine seats.

Government spokesman Klaus Boelling said Schmidt saw the vote as proof that West Germans support his demand for immediate national elections to settle the power struggle in Bonn. Hesse voters showed "there should be no further manipulation" in the capital, Boelling quoted Schmidt as saying.

Schmidt's coalition collapsed when the Free Democrats withdrew, primarily because of bitter policy differences over the economy.

The two conservative parties and the Free Democrats agreed last week to try to oust Schmidt this Friday through a vote of confidence in the Bundestag, or lower house of the national Parliament, and replace him with Christian Democrat leader Helmut Kohl.

EEOC questions Reagan administration's civil rights claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's claim that his administration has more actively enforced civil rights laws than its predecessors is disputed by an independent study and by records of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The Washington Council of Lawyers concluded in a recent report that "the administration has retreated from well-established, bipartisan civil rights policies" designed to ensure fair housing, school desegregation, voting rights and equal employment opportunity.

Only in the area of prosecution for such crimes as police brutality has the Justice Department excelled, the report said.

In addition, statistics Reagan used to show how active the EEOC has been during his term actually cover the last four months of the Carter administration and an eight-month period before Reagan appointees took over the commission.

More recent records show a significant drop in enforcement litigation, one area Reagan cited as especially active.

Those EEOC records, never released but obtained by The Associated Press, show that in the six months ending last March 31, the commission staff had recommended 108 cases be taken to court. Of those, the agency's general counsel approved 31 suits.

Asked to comment, former EEOC Chairman Eleanor Holmes Norton — a Carter appointee — said the general counsel's office had normally approved "virtually all" recommendations for court action. In her last year in office, she said, those approvals exceeded 400.

In a Sept. 15 speech, Reagan told black Republicans he usually tries to ignore personal attacks, "but one charge I will have to admit strikes at my heart every time I hear it. That's the suggestion that we Republicans are taking a less active approach to protecting the civil rights of all Americans.

"No matter how you slice it, that's just plain baloney.

"Look at the record," Reagan suggested. "The level of activity of this administration in investigating and prosecuting those who would attempt to deny blacks their civil liberties by violence and intimidation has exceeded the level of every past administration."

The 138-page Washington Council of Lawyers study, released the same day as Reagan's remarks, agreed that the president's record in that area is at least equal to those of the two previous administrations.

Reagan didn't mention school desegregation or housing discrimination in his speech: The law council said enforcement activity in those areas has all but halted.

Midlander dies after accident

A Midland man died after he lost control of his car at the intersection of County Road 1120 and U.S. Highway 80 early Sunday night.

Pronounced dead in Midland Memorial Hospital at 10:18 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry was 42-year-old William G. Bristol of Box 10532, Midland.

He was injured when, according to the Department of Public Safety, his 1982 Ford slid through the intersection at an apparent high rate of speed, hit an embankment, became airborne across a set of railroad tracks and slammed into a bar ditch.

The accident occurred about 8:35 p.m. Bristol's car, which had been northbound on CR 1120, came to rest in the eastbound lane of U.S. 80. Services are pending at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Dr. David Scheele, a Midland veterinarian, injects a cat with its annual rabies vaccination. Animal experts warn pet owners to make sure their cats receive yearly vaccinations, since cats are as susceptible to rabies as dogs.

Officials caution that cats are not immune to rabies

By VINCE GIORGI

Cats and dogs are scrapping like...well...cats and dogs...for top spot on a list ranking the most frequent domestic rabies carriers, according to officials at the U.S. Public Health Service Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

While CDC officials say the battle is more the result of a decline in the number of rabies cases in dogs and less the result of a cat rabies epidemic, local animal experts warn pet owners that Midland's felines are as susceptible as their canine counterparts to rabies infection.

G.L. Parham, a veterinarian with the Viral Disease Division of the CDC, said in a recent magazine article that in 1981 the number of reported rabies cases in cats surpassed that in dogs for the first time since such records have been kept.

Parham reported that a quarter century ago dog cases usually numbered in the thousands while cat cases generally totaled only a few hundred. In 1981, Parham said, cat cases had actually surpassed dog cases, 285 to 216.

"When we think of rabies, we think of dogs," said Dalton Byerly, Midland's animal control director. But Byerly said that Midland's latest reported domestic animal rabies cases, one in January 1981 and another a year before that, were found in cats.

Byerly and Parham agree that the decline of rabies in dogs is attributable to an effective vaccination program nationwide. "If we can bring down the number of cases with cats as we have with dogs, then we'd feel like we're getting somewhere," Byerly said.

He said Texas and Midland ordinances require that pets be vaccinated annually for rabies. But because pet owners — cat owners in particular — either don't know about the dangers of rabies or choose to ignore them, Byerly said "it's a slow process" getting Midland's pet population adequately vaccinated.

Dr. Tom W. Green, a Midland veterinarian, said other factors besides vaccination programs contributed to a drop in the incidence of rabies cases in dogs and the need for greater attention to the problem of rabies in cats.

Green said the advent of leash laws in many areas of the country helped keep dogs from being exposed to rabid, wild animals. He said cats, easier to care for and seemingly more independent than dogs, are becoming more popular for pet owners unwilling or unable to interrupt their busy lives to devote an excessive amount of time to pet care.

Green added that cats are prolific, underlining the need for proper rabies vaccination. A cat can have as many as three litters annually, Green said, with an average litter of about six kittens. The offspring are ready to breed in five to six months. Within seven months, another generation could begin.

Because cats are difficult to fence in and tend to wander far from home, Green said they are often more likely than dogs to mingle with wild animals — or even convert to the wild themselves.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for Montana and Wyoming and showers for the Rockies, to the Great Lakes, into the Great Plains, Texas, Louisiana and the northeast.

Midland can expect hot, windy weather

Another round of hot and windy West Texas days, usually identified with the dry heat of July and August, is in the ring for Midlanders as they approach the beginning of the autumn month of October.

Although today's highs, which were expected to climb into the upper 90s, shouldn't be reached Tuesday, Midlanders can still expect temperatures reaching into the lower 90s. Tonight should be mild with the mercury dipping into the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Winds are expected to blow from the south at a heady 10-20 mph tonight, shifting to southwesterly at 15-25 mph and gusting Tuesday.

Although partly cloudy skies are in the forecast for tonight and Tuesday, there is no mention of precipitation for the next couple of days. The monthly and yearly rainfalls stand at 1.43 and 11.62 inches.

Sunday's warm high of 96 missed the blistering heat of 105 degrees in 1977, the record high for that date, by nine degrees. The overnight low of 67 missed 1942's record low of 42 by 25 degrees.

Congress to enact bill giving money to government

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress, eager to recess for the November elections, will rush this week to keep money flowing to the federal government while staging some final pre-election rhetoric on the House and Senate floors.

In observance of the Jewish Yom Kippur holiday, the House is out of session today, and the Senate, although scheduled to meet, will not take any roll call votes.

But work begins in earnest Tuesday so that legislators, anxious to campaign full time back home, can leave town by Friday.

The most important chore this week will be enactment of a stopgap spending measure to keep money flowing temporarily to the government when the new fiscal year begins Friday.

The House already has passed such legislation carrying a Dec. 15 expiration date. The Senate Appropriations Committee is drafting its own version which carries a Dec. 22 expiration date, and action by the full Senate is expected to begin Tuesday.

Negotiators from each chamber will work out the differences between the two measures.

The funding bill is needed because none of the 13 regular appropriations bills necessary to provide money for government operations has been signed into law. Without a stopgap measure, the government technically would be without money at the beginning of the new fiscal year.

Congress will continue considering several of the regular appropriation bills this week, but work on the bulk of the money bills will wait for a post-election lame-duck session that congressional leaders say will begin in mid- or late-November.

Meanwhile, Democrats and Republicans are expected to snipe at each other over President Reagan's economic program, the condition of the economy and which political party is to blame for the nation's 9.8 percent unemployment rate.

Reagan has asked Congress to approve a compromise multibillion-dollar job training bill to replace the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act which expires at the end of the week.

Democrats support the measure, but they say it is no substitute for a $1 billion measure they are pushing to create 200,000 temporary public service jobs.

While the Senate works on the stopgap measure and other items held up during the filibusters over abortion and school prayer, the House will:

—Vote Tuesday on legislation to repeal the Reagan administration's economic sanctions against the Soviet natural gas pipeline. Republican Leader Robert H. Michel, whose central Illinois district has been hard hit by the loss of heavy equipment business due to the sanctions, has announced his support for the legislation.

—Consider a bill proposing the first major changes in the nation's immigration law in 30 years. A similar measure, establishing fines and jail terms for employers who hire illegal immigrants and granting amnesty to illegal aliens already living here, passed the Senate last month.

Body of Vietnam soldier to be placed in Tomb of Unknown Soldier

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An unidentified Vietnam War casualty probably will become the fourth body to be placed in the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, according to the national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

James Currieo said Sunday that federal officials are on the verge of changing a rule that has made it difficult to find a body for the tomb in Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

The tomb now contains the remains of unidentified veterans of World War I, World War II and the Korean War. Department of the Army regulations require bodies for the tomb to be unidentified and 80 percent intact.

Currieo, a Korean War veteran and resident of Sierra Vista, Ariz., said improvements in medical science have made it difficult to find the remains of a unidentified Vietnam veteran to place in the tomb. Bodies that are 80 percent intact are easily identified, he said.

"Today's medical science can identify small fragments of bodies," Currieo said during a visit here for a celebration of the 35th anniversary of a local VFW post.

He said Secretary of the Army John Marsh has indicated he would revise the rule to allow the burial in the tomb of a body that is less than 80 percent intact.

Army spokesman Maj. M.L. Bruce in Washington declined to comment on the report Saturday.

Several bodies being held in Hawaii could qualify if the rule is revised, according to Currieo.

The only opposition to the plan, he said, is from families of servicemen listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia.

"They don't want entombment of a Vietnam veteran until all the MIAs are accounted for," said Currieo, who added that could take many more years.

"We keep hearing reports of sightings of Americans alive in South Vietnam," he said.

VFW and federal officials also are discussing a controversy about the almost-completed Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington. Currieo said many Vietnam veterans are upset that Interior Secretary James Watt has decided there will be no dedication of the memorial during the national salute to Vietnam veterans, scheduled for Nov. 10-14. Watt has decided there will be no dedication of the memorial until a statue of three American servicemen is complete.

"Watt ordered the police to prevent a dedication during the national salute," said Currieo. "We are afraid Vietnam vets are going to dedicate it then regardless."

He said he expected to hear a decision from Watt later this week.

Rabies as likely in cats as dogs

riers, including skunks, bats, raccoons and foxes, among its native animal population, Byerly said. Green explained that rabies is endemic, or constantly present, in West Texas.

Because rabies is a constant hazard in the area, Green emphasized the importance of vaccinating all pets. Since a rabies vaccine for ferrets and other wild animals has not been developed, Green advised against capturing them or keeping them as pets. Also, "people should be extremely aware of the problem with picking up stray animals," Green said. "Picking up stray animals is not a wise idea."

Because there are three different types of rabies, all displaying a variety of symptoms, Green said members of the public might not know a rabies case if it bit them on the ankle.

Green said most people associate the disease with the first type, "mad dog" or furious rabies, which causes the animal to become aggressive and appear to be afraid of water. The apparent fear of water, from which rabies sometimes gets the name hydrophobia, results from muscle spasms in the throat that sometimes make even the sight of water painful.

"Most people think of rabies as 'mad dog,'" Green said. "That probably encompasses a lot of the cases in dogs."

But a second type, dumb rabies, occurs about as often as "mad dog" in cats, Green said. Dumb rabies symptoms, usually including paralysis of the lower jaw, are less visible than those of "mad dog" rabies. A third type, atypical rabies, also often has partial paralysis as one symptom.

Because rabies symptoms are not always easily detected, "it is critical that any bite case be observed," Green said. "When you're talking about a disease that is typically fatal to humans, I think it's extremely important that the animal that has been bitten be confined for 10 days."

Green said the confined animal can then be studied for rabies signs in order to determine whether treatment for the bite victim is required.

Three of plane crash victims listed in improved condition

Three of five men injured in Friday's plane crash at Warwick Aprtments, 4505 N. Garfield St., were in improved condition this morning.

Randy Sellars, 21, of Midland, was listed in serious condition at Lubbock General Hospital. He initially had been in critical condition. Thirty-year-old Bernell Bell of Louisiana, originally in fair condition, is now listed in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital. And 30-year-old George Gibbs, also of Louisiana, is now in satisfactory condition, having been in fair condition over the weekeend at MMH.

An MMH spokeswoman said both Bell and Gibbs would be taken out of the intensive care unit and moved to private rooms sometime today.

Still in critical condition at Lubbock General were 41-year-old Ken Hornsby and 56-year-old Alex Sheets, both of Baton Rouge, La. All five men suffered burns.

Sheets was the pilot of a twin-engine Beechcraft Baron that apparently lost power on takeoff from Midland Air Park, struck the roof of one building at the complex, then cartwheeled into the parking lot. The resulting explosions and fires destroyed the 12-unit building and seven vehicles parked on the lot.

The plane crashed shortly before 2 p.m. Friday. Federal inestigators say it may be four months before a report is issued on the cause of the crash. A Warwick spokeswoman said Saturday there was no damage estimate immediately available.

Car accident victim has leg amputated

A Midland woman had her lower left leg amputated as a result of a traffic accident that occurred near the Midkiff Road overpass of Interstate 20 early Saturday morning.

Listed in serious condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital was 21-year-old Elizabeth Ketter of Route 2, Midland.

She was a passenger in a 1980 Chevrolet driven by Gregory Gene Bonar, 23, of 1008 W. Kentucky Ave. He was treated and released, as was a second passenger in the vehicle, 20-year-old Cindy Bonar, also of 1008 W. Kentucky.

According to police, the southbound car hit a curb on the overpass, crossed the road and overturned after striking a culvert. The accident occurred about 12:45 a.m. Saturday.

Cleaners offers free service to homeless

Zenith Cleaners, 2509 W. Illinois Ave., is offering a goodwill gesture of free cleaning service to those Midlanders left homeless by Friday's plane crash at the Warwick Apartments.

According to Sadru Pirani, owner of Zenith Cleaners, the free cleaning and laundry service is now available to those Midlanders whose apartments and belongings were damaged by the crash and subsequent fire in Building 6 of the Warwick Apartments, Garfield Street and Whitmire Boulevard.

"It's really all I can offer them," Pirani said.

Lung transplant patient in critical condition

NEW YORK (AP) — A gardener who received a lung transplant after he was poisoned by paraquat was "alert and responsive" early today, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Scott Wilson, 25, remained in critical but stable condition. On Saturday, he received the lung of a teen-ager who died as the result of an automobile accident, according to Grace Urrows, a spokeswoman for Montefiore Hospital in the Bronx.

Representative Crane has lost favor with White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Phil Crane, the "early bird candidate" who wanted to be president, has quietly faded from the limelight — even as his conservative cohorts have asserted control of Congress and the White House.

Crane's standing with Congress was dramatized on July 22, 1981, when the House Ways and Means Committee met for long, hard hours to finish work on the omnibus tax cut bill.

When a nattily dressed Crane put in his first appearance around midnight, the committee burst into applause. "He must have given the taxi driver the wrong address," said a voice over the sound system.

Committee records show Crane has been on hand for 16 of the panel's 60 roll call votes during the current Congress; Crane was too busy to discuss his absences, his spokesman said.

In August 1978, the bronzed, square-jawed Crane became the first entrant into the GOP presidential race. He roamed the nation, offering his conservative gospel to save America from financial ruin and nuclear war.

HIS CAMPAIGN floundered and the Illinois congressman all but vanished into the political mists.

Even a White House peopled with fellow conservative Republicans has not spurred the 51-year-old Crane into prominence.

"It has been so long since he has been a player," a Republican with close White House ties says, "...His name just doesn't come up."

One reason for Crane's lack of influence may be White House pique that Crane dared challenge Ronald Reagan in the GOP primaries. Another may be that Crane has not toed a strict White House line in congressional votes.

While Crane has been a reliable supporter of Reagan on most issues, he has broken with the president on several key votes. He voted against both Republican budgets in the last two years, saying they were not conservative enough. He voted against the recent tax increase after telling the House that parliamentary arrangements for its enactment violated the Constitution.

In the two years since Reagan swept conservatives to power, Crane has played a visible role in few if any major congressional debates, despite a seat on the influential tax-writing Ways and Means Committee.

THOUGH HE WAS absent for 44 of the committee's 60 votes, the records show that 32 times he voted by "proxy." That is, he allowed someone else to vote for him.

Crane is "going to be just too busy in the next couple of weeks" to be interviewed on such subjects, press secretary Bob Foster says. But his administrative assistant, David Allen, says it would be unfair to judge Crane harshly for committee absences.

"He was working behind the scenes," Allen says. Further, he says, the Democratic-sponsored Ways and Means version of the tax cut was defeated on the House floor in favor of one backed by President Reagan. Thus, he says, the committee was working on "essentially a worthless bill."

Crane has been a floor leader on one issue in the last two years. On Oct. 1, 1981, he pushed through a measure to repeal a District of Columbia ordinance that would have lowered the statutory rape age and removed from the felony category assorted acts performed in private by consenting adults. Crane argued that it would lower the moral tone of the nation's capital.

"Attempting to hide behind a procedural vote will fool no one," Crane warned. "A vote to table or postpone is a vote to legalize sodomous homosexual liaisons, decriminalize the seduction of 16-year-old children and reduce the penalty for forcible rape..."

Moral Majority lobbyist Gary Curran says challengers are hammering several incumbent Democrats who voted against Crane's resolution.

Crane's future is unclear. He has been mentioned as a possible 1984 primary election challenger to Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Midlander honored for contributions to scholastic journalism in Oklahoma

NORMAN, Okla. — A Midlander is among 26 "Pioneer Advisers" who have made significant contributions to scholastic journalism in the state of Oklahoma and were honored Friday at the fall conference of the Oklahoma Interscholastic Press Association at the University of Oklahoma.

Mary Jewell Sparks, formerly the Publications Director at U.S. Grant High School in Oklahoma City, Okla., and now a Midlander, was one of the 26, all of whom have taught journalism for 20 or more years. The honoring of the "Pioneer Advisors" is an official event sanctioned by the Diamond Jubilee Commission in celebration of Oklahoma's 75th anniversary.

Mrs. Sparks started her career in journalism in 1955, two months after her husband died, and was one of very few women to be included in "Who's Who in Oklahoma City" because of her many career and cultural accomplishments. In 1965 she was honored as a "Wall Street Journal Fellow."

She has two children, Richard T. Sparks of Houston, and Mrs. Verne E. Griffith Jr., of Midland.

To 'Valley Girl' Zappa, imposters just a pain

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Moon Zappa, whose popular record "Valley Girls" spotlighted a Southern California teen trend, was not impressed by the young women hoping to appear on television as examples of the "ultimate Valley girl."

Moon Zappa

To some of the thousand or so contestants who jammed the Sherman Oaks Galleria on Saturday, the competition was an opportunity to out-Val Miss Zappa, who put the teen jargon to music by her father, rock musician Frank Zappa.

"It is like a nightmare," said Miss Zappa, who served as a judge along with former Miss America pageant host Bert Parks, George Christy of the Hollywood Reporter, and Sarah Purcell, Fred Willard and Byron Allen, regulars on NBC's show "Real People," where the winners will appear.

"After this contest," Miss Zappa said, "I hope all the winners take over my position as spokesperson for the Valley girls."

Val girls are marked by a love of shopping and use of such expressions as "grody to the max," meaning disgusting, and "fer shurr," or for sure.

One winning contestant, Erica Freudenberg, 16, of Canoga Park, helped her cause by turning the fad phrase "Gag me with a spoon" to "Pitch me with a fork."

Kimberly Bickel, 16, of North Hollywood, who did not win a TV berth, complained some competitors were cheating because they weren't from the San Fernando Valley. She sniffed: "There are even some girls from Whittier" — just east of Los Angeles and south of San Fernando.

LONDON (AP) — Rosalind Runcie says it's not easy being the wife of the spiritual leader of the Church of England, particularly because of the fish-bowl existence and sometimes because of the boredom.

R. Runcie

Mrs. Runcie, 46, wife of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, said in an interview published in the London News of the World's weekly magazine, "Sunday," "I think one of the things about it has been being on show.

"... I am expected to live up to something, people's expectations," she said. "But I don't know what they are."

Mrs. Runcie also confided she hates "speeches and sermons that last more than 10 minutes."

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Princess Stephanie of Monaco has been released from the hospital where she was treated for injuries suffered in a car accident in which her mother, Princess Grace, was fatally injured.

Stephanie suffered a hairline fracture of a vertebra in the Sept. 13 accident, in which the car, being driven by her mother, left a road after Grace suffered a stroke.

Grace, formerly American actress Grace Kelly, died 36 hours later after a second stroke caused irreversible brain damage, according to her doctors.

The palace issued a statement saying Stephanie's injuries would not cause permanent damage but would take weeks to heal. The statement, quoting her doctors, said the 17-year-old princess would "continue her convalescence at the palace."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Cissy Baker, congressional candidate and daughter of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, has undergone tests to determine what is causing blisters on her skin.

Cissy Baker

A Baptist Hospital spokesman said doctors took a skin biopsy from Miss Baker's fingers Sunday but had not issued results of the tests.

Miss Baker, 27, a Republican, is running against Democrat Jim Cooper for the state's newly created 4th Congressional District.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Actress Lindsay Wagner and her stuntman husband are the proud parents of a 8-pound, 8½-ounce newborn boy, publicist David Brokaw says.

Ms. Wagner, 33, delivered the boy Saturday at Doctors Hospital here. She was resting comfortably Sunday, Brokaw said.

It was the first child for Ms. Wagner, known for her role as television's "Bionic Woman," and her husband of 1½ years, Henry Kinji, 38, a stuntman on the "Dukes of Hazzard" TV series. Kinji has two other children by a previous marriage.

The boy had not been named Sunday.

MMH to hold workshop on dealing with stress

Midland Memorial Hospital will host a one-day workshop presented by The University of Texas at El Paso College of Nursing and Allied Health Oct. 5.

The workshop will be held from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. for a $25 fee. Continuing education credit may be earned.

It will be conducted by Robert T. Harrell, director of Health Source, the center for total health, and Marta Reeder, assistant professor of nursing at UTEP. Both are registered nurses.

Topics will include stress origins, benefits, related potential health problems and overall ways of dealing positively with stress.

Information is available from the Continuing Education Department, UTEP College of Nursing and Allied Health, 1101 N. Campbell St., El Paso, 79902.

Man dies in attempts to 'get close to animals'

NEW YORK (AP) — A man prevented from climbing into two animal areas at the Central Park Zoo was found dead in the polar bear cage, police said.

Police said the unidentified man on Saturday told officers, "You have to get close to the animals," after he was stopped as he tried to climb into the lion cage and the elephant yard. His body was found the next day being pawed by a 1,200-pound polar bear.

According to an autopsy, the man was killed by the bear, not in a fall from the cage's 12-foot spiked fence. Officials said it was the zoo's first human fatality.

Unemployment highs and lows

Unemployment rates increased in June in 47 of the 48 reporting states. Eighteen states had rates of 10 percent or more. Five had less than 6 percent. Michigan continued to have the highest jobless rate — 14.3 percent. North Dakota had the lowest — 4.7 percent. In two states, Kentucky and Iowa, the unemployment rate was not reported.

CycleFest features mountain biking

FORT DAVIS — Bicyclists who long to climb the mountains and then breeze down the downside may get their wish by entering in the fifth annual Davis Mountains CycleFest and Mountain Climb next Saturday and Sunday at Prude Ranch near Fort Davis.

The yearly bicycling around the 75-mile Scenic Loop, which takes in "the highest road east of the Rocky Mountains," will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday at the ranch off Texas Highway 118 near Davis Mountains State Park and will end somewhat later at the ranch, where a Western barbecue supper will await the cyclists.

Elevations of the 75-mile Fort Davis Tour are from 5,000 to 6,800 feet.

However, according to John Robert Prude, there will be a "50-mile, a 25-mile and a 10-mile ride for the less ambitious."

A sag-wagon hauling cold drinks and featuring space for exhausted bikers and their bicycles will follow the touring party.

Riders entering the CycleFest will be awarded monogrammed T-shirts at the ride's end and will be furnished a picnic lunch midway in the ride and the barcecue supper that evening.

Entry fee per biker will be $20.

At 9:30 a.m. Sunday, riders may enter the two-mile, 17-percent grade climb up Mount Locke to McDonald Observatory.

A bicycle rodeo for boys and girls age 12 and under will begin at the ranch at 9 a.m. Sunday.

Those wishing to enter the ride may pick up entry forms at Peyton's Bikes in Midland and mail them to Prude Ranch, P.O. Box 1431, Fort Davis, Texas 79734.

For additional information, cyclists may call Prude at 1-426-3347, David Ham at Peyton's Bikes at 684-5984 or Tommy Hutchinson at Hutchinson Cycles in Lubbock at 1-806-744-4189.

Lodging and meals for cyclists will be available at Prude Ranch beginning Friday. Lodging may be available at the Davis Mountains State Park and in Fort Davis, Marfa and Alpine.

Program to help pay heating bills

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnegasco, a statewide utility, is asking its customers to pledge contributions in a program to help the elderly and handicapped pay rising heating bills this winter.

The utility said a survey of 400 customers found 51 percent willing to join the "HeatShare" program. Those pledging the contributions will have $1, $2, $5 or more added to their monthly bills, to be distributed beginning Feb. 1 by the Salvation Army.

Pentagon relies on civilian satellites

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The highly sophisticated, multi-million-dollar satellites launched by the Pentagon to gather weather data critical for U.S. military and intelligence operations have been virtually inoperable for at least the last 17 months, U.S. military and civilian officials say.

As a result, the Department of Defense has been forced into the embarrassing position of depending on less-complex civilian satellites — using the same data that goes to the local weatherman.

Officials say the civilian data has become so important that the Air Force has classified key aspects of its meteorological satellite program as secret.

And the Pentagon has strongly opposed a recent offer from private industry to take over the government's weather satellites and land-sensing satellites. The National Environmental Satellite Service now runs the weather system and also will soon take over the Landsat system, which takes pictures used for such things as exploring for oil and studying crop conditions.

TO PACIFY THE Pentagon, the Department of Commerce, of which the satellite service is a part, said this month that any private buyer of the weather satellite system would have to consider providing "selected priority service to defense needs when required."

An Air Force public affairs officer, Capt. Ron Rand, said last week that the entire military weather satellite program is not classified, but he said "the number of defense meteorological satellites in orbit and the percentage of their design capacity at which they are now operating is classified."

Rand said the new classification was imposed about 17 or 18 months ago. Other officials said it went into effect almost two years ago.

The result is that the Air Force refuses to say whether any of its weather satellites are in space and how poorly they are working.

However, sources said that of the two military weather satellites now in polar orbit, one is spinning uselessly out of control. On the second satellite, the primary instrument — the "imager," which in effect takes visible and infrared pictures — has failed, the sources said.

A THIRD AIR Force weather satellite was destroyed when its launching rocket failed, Reagan administration officials said. Two earlier military weather satellites went into orbit and worked successfully for longer than their designed life.

The Air Force would offer no reason for the recent satellite failures and refused to discuss plans for future launchings. However, sources said a new weather satellite is expected to be launched in a few months, possibly aboard one of the early shuttle operational missions.

The two military weather satellites in polar orbit are almost identical in size — weighing about 1,600 pounds — and in appearance as two civilian satellites also in north-to-south orbits, but the military satellites were designed to take more detailed pictures and collect a greater variety of information.

One measure of the importance of the two civilian weather satellites to the Pentagon was an official Navy commendation last month to the National Environmental Satellite Service for providing "the only high-quality satellite data available" on the Falkland Islands region during the British-Argentinian war.

APPARENTLY, NOT even U.S. spy satellites could take pictures as well as the weather spacecraft, possibly because the reconnaissance satellites, whose primary focus is the Soviet Union, do not range so far south or are too high in space when passing over the far southern areas.

Both the civilian and military weather spacecraft are made by RCA Government System Division. The civilian versions cost $40 million to build and another $40 million to launch into their 500-mile-high orbits, Dr. Harold Yates, research director of the civilian agency, said. The Air Force says its combined spacecraft and launching costs total $73 million.

The civilian service operates, in addition to the two satellites in polar orbits, two high altitude satellites that are in geosynchronous, or "stationary," orbits 22,300 miles above the equator. One photographs the Western Hemisphere, and the other covers the Eastern Hemisphere, every half hour. Their picture are commonly shown on TV weather forecasts.

THE CIVILIAN polar-orbiting satellites, which are "sun synchronous" so that they can return over the same spot on the equator with the sun at the same angle, measure air temperatures at various altitudes, sea water temperature, cloud cover and wind speeds. Their normal scene covers a square 2.5 miles on each side, although they can be adjusted to produce more detailed images of squares 0.6 miles on a side.

The military weather satellites were designed to focus on squares at least one-fourth smaller in area. They were also designed to measure the age and extent of ice coverage, soil moisture, ionospheric data that affects navigation and communication satellites, and other militarily important factors.

These satellites, unlike the civilian ones, were also designed to measure cloud cover over the Soviet Union so that U.S. spy satellites could be told when to take pictures. And their orbits were chosen to provide data at dawn at key, potential battlefield regions such as Europe.

Your horoscope

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Sportscaster and former Michigan gridiron great Tom Harmon shares his birthday with you. Also born on this date: Brigitte Bardot, country comedian Jerry Clower, and relief pitcher Grant Jackson. In the coming months, you find increased satisfaction in your work. The business outlook is greatly improved and you are able to make lasting financial gains. If you really want to, you can control your romantic destiny. Just learn to recognize what it is that attracts you to someone. Those who have disrupted your life in the past are much less influential now. Make sure that your closest associates share your ideals of justice.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work project goes more smoothly now and you have extra leisure time. Formulate a better plan for the future. Cooperating with a co-worker will bring rich rewards.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be tougher on yourself and you will be happily surprised. You finally have success with a diet. Go ahead and buy something new for your wardrobe.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not let a jealous co-worker undermine your progress. You score points with the boss by finding ways to lower costs and increase productivity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Those who work out of their homes find special satisfaction today. A home computer is an excellent investment for those who use it often. Be sure to comparison shop.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to outwit competitors and gain new customers or clients. Your follow-through tactics are what make long-lasting success.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Allow ambitious subordinates to take on new responsibilities or you risk losing them. It will also free you to do other things that can enhance your career.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid materialistic approach. Choose your friends and business associates very carefully. Curb any bad habits that could affect your health or appearance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may be oversensitive to slights, both real and imagined. Concentrate on work, not other people's "wrongdoings." Creative projects are favored.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Business and financial affairs call for pragmatic, skeptical approach. Check details to avoid costly mistakes. Romance takes an interesting new turn.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Issues involving trust or integrity demand prompt clarification. Use great discretion when discussing sensitive topics. A soft answer turns away wrath.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Appointments and conferences go well today, boosting profits. Curb a tendency to become impatient with your loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Out-of-town travel may be necessary to speed the signing of a contract. Delegate your regular work and correspondence to responsible people.

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠ K109542 ♡QJ963 ◇5 ♣Q
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♠	?

What action do you take?

A.—What action would you like to take? You can't bid two hearts freely, for that would be forcing and could propel your side to an uncomfortable level. You might double one spade if you were sure that would end the auction, but there is a reasonable chance that someone won't sit for it—perhaps even your partner. The prudent course is to pass and await developments.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠873 ♡KJ8 ◇QJ ♣98742
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ♠	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	5 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—So far, you have shown nothing but four or five worthless clubs. Despite that, partner is prepared to contract for eleven tricks. Your red cards must mesh extremely well with partner's holding, and your hand should contribute two or three tricks to your side's efforts. The least you can do is bid six clubs—we would even vote for a bid of five hearts as a grand slam probe.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K84 ♡987542 ◇6 ♣QJ5
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	2 NT
Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Partner's bid is the Unusual No Trump convention. Therefore, you should not bid hearts or raise no trump—partner is asking you to bid your better minor. Since you have a minimum hand for his purposes, all you can do is oblige by bidding three clubs.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K1093 ♡AKQ4 ◇A873 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?

A.—When you hold the equivalent of 19 points as responder, you jump shift with one of two types of hands—either when you have a self-sufficient suit of your own, or when you have a fit for partner's suit. This hand certainly meets the latter condition, so jump to three hearts. Don't worry about the fact that it is a four-card suit. You can always correct to spades if partner raises your suit.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ1054 ♡6 ◇KQ982 ♣83
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Beware, this hand has all the earmarks of a misfit. It sounds as if partner has six hearts and four clubs so, despite the fact that you have a good opening bid yourself, the possibility of making game is not bright. Indeed, we wouldn't criticize you if you dropped the bidding right now before the opponents start doubling. However, that would be too pessimistic. Since partner could still have extra values for his opening bid, we would make one final try with two no trump.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ82 ♡AQ95 ◇7 ♣AJ102
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?

A.—You have the sort of hand that looks as if it will take more tricks on defense than on offense, so pass and hope the opponents get into trouble. If you double, you will be skating on thin ice. Partner will, of course, bid diamonds (partners never bid what you want them to bid), and you will be in trouble. Discretion is definitely the better part of valor here.

A wave of terrorism

A Senate permanent committee on investigations heard some interesting testimony last week concerning the growth of terrorism. Unfortunately, if you put two and two together the picture of the future isn't too appealing.

Diego C. Asencio, assistant secretary of state for consular affairs, told the investigations committee that controls for terrorism are flimsy and need to be improved.

"They (terrorists) don't have to counterfeit, have to steal or have to lie," said Asencio. "The system for getting a birth certificate is so easy."

And, of course, once a terrorist can gain a false birth certificate, he can gain easy access to the United States, acquire various other official documents he needs and carry out his unholy work.

What's even more frightening is the fact that the growth of worldwide terrorism witnessed in the past few years may mean that the rest of this decade and the next may be even more tumultous.

"I think we could be at the beginning of a terrorist cycle. We've been lucky. But they don't need to go through elaborate methods to get visas or passports," Asencio told the committee.

Asencio's testimony will be vital to forging a framework against terrorism in the United States. In a free society like the one existing in this country, it would be extremely simple for terrorists to lead insurrections, detonate bombs, kill innocent people and so forth as they have throughout much of the rest of the world in recent years.

Guarding against outbreaks of terroristic activity, protecting elected officials and innocent citizens, and developing a healthy distrust of the unusual may seem foreign to a large number of Americans. We may have become too accustomed to an open society and now have to pay the price.

Perhaps it's time to start rethinking some of our values and take steps to guard against the coming wave of worldwide terrorism before it becomes a matter of life or death.

Conventional arms edge

Looking back at the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, when the world stood on the edge of nuclear war, Kennedy administration officials say conventional weapons — not nuclear arms — were the decisive factor in the showdown with the Soviet Union.

Six Kennedy aides, including former Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara Jr., write in a recent issue of Time magazine: "The decisive military element in the resolution of the crisis was our clearly available and applicable superiority in conventional weapons within the area of the crisis. ... The Cuban missile crisis illustrates not the significance but the insignificance of nuclear superiority in the face of survivable thermonuclear retaliatory forces."

Those judgments are made with 20 years of perspective on the 13-day crisis when President Kennedy told Soviet Premier Khrushchev to pull his missiles out of Cuba. The conventional view was that Khrushchev backed down because of Soviet nuclear inferiority. The Soviet nuclear arms buildup has been viewed as a response to that humiliation.

Now the tables have turned: The Soviet atomic arsenal is at least on a par with America's atomic arsenal. Cuba has no Soviet missiles, but a massive Soviet army is poised on the rim of Western Europe. In response, America has armed NATO with tactical nuclear weapons and is stockpiling neutron bombs here for use in a European war. But many Europeans fear that nuclear defense will lead to nuclear war — destruction of Europe. And anti-nuclear sentiment is fast pushing Europe away from America politically.

The tank is the core of the Soviet strike force. Something like 20,000 Soviet tanks now face about 7,000 NATO tanks. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says: "We think it (the neutron bomb) enormously increases our deterrent, our ability to demonstrate to the Soviets ... that we have the capacity to respond, and to inflict a cost which we hope they would regard as unacceptably high."

But Western Europeans may also think the cost unacceptably high. Is there a conventional weapon force that can defend Europe?

An arsenal of conventional anti-tank systems is showing itself extremely effective. Anti-tank weapons, now in their third generation, began as crude bazooka-like arms, advanced to remote guided missiles and now are on the threshold of being able to destroy several tanks with one missile.

NATO dependence on tactical nuclear weapons must be questioned in the light European political realities. Judging from the Cuban missile crisis, a European crisis may be resolved by the anti-tank weapon system, not the neutron bomb.

Another View: Reforming fed pensions

Now that private pension restrictions have been signed into law as part of the new tax reform act, it is high time Congress got on with the job of trimming federal pensions.

While federal employees most certainly deserve a decent pension, there is no reason for some to be grossly overcompensated compared to private employees in similar retirements.

For instance, an estimated 100,000 federal retirees get more in retirement now than they did when they were working. U.S. News & World Report states that experts figure generous automatic raises during the 1970s boosted government pensions 28.6 percent faster than the average pay of bureaucrats who kept on working. Congress has to look no farther than its own ranks to see the abuses.

Among the more noted cases is that of the late Speaker of the House John McCormack. When he retired from his $62,500 job, he was eligible for a $50,000 annual pension, certainly more than generous. But when he died he was getting $94,000 a year because of automatic cost-of-living increases.

While the example is not common, the case does give a hint of why the federal pension system has become an enormous burden to the taxpayers.

In comparing federal pensions with typical private ones, the United States Chamber of Commerce says there are four reasons government retirement plans are much more costly:

"First, they provide unreduced early retirement benefits. Second, they provide a fully indexed pension that increases each year with the cost of living. And most importantly, the real costs of federal pensions are being postponed for payment by future taxpayers."

As a percentage of payroll, according to the chamber, "the civil service pensions cost about 30 percent, whereas a very generous private pension, plus Social Security, costs only 20 percent of pay."

It is unfortunate that the restrictions on private pensions, which include a ban on cost-of-living indexing for two years, were passed with virtually no debate. Formerly a very complicated separate measure, the private pension revision was simply folded into the tax increase package.

But it was equally unfortunate that the federal pension issue was not raised at all. "Pension equity goes beyond private pensions," as the Employee Benefit Research Institute has noted.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

White House suspicion of Begin increases

WASHINGTON — White House suspicion of Israel has become so intense that President Reagan's top advisers are now wondering whether Prime Minister Menachem Begin is planning the eventual annexation of southern Lebanon.

Jack Anderson

Secret reports shown to my associates Dale Van Atta and Ron McRae indicate why the White House is disturbed.

One secret State Department report, for example, had this to say on Sept. 15, as the Israeli invasion of West Beirut was proceeding apace: There is a danger that Israel's "logistical operations will evolve into permanent administrative agencies."

In other words, the suspicion is that Israel is in the process of building a military-civilian government for Israeli-occupied Lebanon.

The same pattern of Israeli infiltration that has been seen in the West Bank territories seems to be evolving in Lebanon. The ultra-nationalist extremist group, Gush Emunim, is planning to put Israeli settlements in southern Lebanon, according to U.S. reports.

If Begin follows his past action, he will not denounce these settlements for fear of criticism from hardline Israeli factions that are the bedrock of his political support. Instead, he will see that the bootleg settlements are hooked up to water and electricity to make them permanently viable.

The Gush Emunim and the Israeli Army's chief rabbi, Gen. Gad Navon, believe that God may be giving them southern Lebanon to compensate for Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai. The chaplain's support would be a key element in transforming temporary military governments into permanent civilian bodies. Sensing an opportunity, Israeli businessmen are already beginning to establish themselves in occupied Lebanon.

A significant historical note should be mentioned here. It adds fuel to the White House suspicions.

A former Israeli prime minister, Moshe Sharett, published an intriguing account in 1978 of a meeting of Israeli defense and foreign-policy officials. The meeting occurred 27 years ago, and quotes the late Moshe Dayan, then army chief of staff, as saying Lebanon was ripe for the picking.

"The only thing that's necessary is to find an officer, even just a major," Dayan said, according to the account. "We would either win his heart or buy him with money, to make him agree to declare himself the savior of the Maronite (Christian) population.

"Then the Israeli Army will enter Lebanon, will occupy the necessary territory and will create a Christian regime which will ally itself with Israel," Dayan reportedly continued. "The territory from the Litani (River) southward will be totally annexed by Israel and everything will be all right."

The Dayan scenario was followed to the letter — even to the choice of the cooperative Christian leader's military rank. Maj. Saad Haddad, a cashiered Lebanese officer, has been acting as Israel's puppet warlord in the Litani River area for years.

The secret Sept. 15 report predicted that Israel would try to bestow legitimacy on Haddad, possibly by insisting that he be included in any future Lebanese regime. His role in the massacres at the Palestinian refugee camps in West Beirut may have destroyed his chances, however.

Israel's covetous designs on southern Lebanon are explained in a top-secret CIA report, which states: "Hardliners in Israel have for years pointed out that Israel, by seizing territory up to the Litani River, would gain a more defensive border and a greater supply of water." In fact, Israeli engineers are already working at the Litani, exploring its potential for irrigation.

At the start of the West Beirut invasion, Begin assured Reagan in a private message that Israel "did not covet one inch of Lebanese territory." In early June, he had publicly declared in the Knesset that Israel didn't want "one square millimeter of Lebanese territory."

The White House no longer has faith in these assurances.

Footnote: An official of the Israeli Embassy said that Israel has "no intention of annexing any part of Lebanon or setting up any settlements."

WHO SPEAKS FOR THE AGING?: The lobbying campaign for a bill to extend drug companies' patent protection has grown confusing. Extension of the patent life of a given drug would keep prices high, to the special detriment of the elderly, who spend a high proportion of their income on prescription drugs. Competition would bring prices down; both sides of the issue agree on that.

But the National Alliance of Senior Citizens favors extending the life of drug patents, on grounds that it will give the pharmaceutical companies more money for research. NASC director Curt Clinkscales admitted that he did not poll the claimed 768,000 membership on the issue.

Meanwhile, the National Council of Senior Citizens, which claims to represent 3.5 million elderly Americans, did take a vote on the patent-extension bill at its convention last summer. The vote was solidly against the bill.

Of the rival alliance, a council spokesman said it "does not represent the interests of the mainstream of elderly people."

INSIDE REPORT:

Office talk says Stockman will leave in '83

WASHINGTON — Budget Director David Stockman's closest associates say that at long last he will resign as budget director once the new budget is finished early next year, and then go into private business to support his new wife.

Rowland Evans

Rumors about Stockman departing have abounded ever since the famed November 1981 article in the Atlantic Monthly that expressed misgivings about Reaganomics. But this is the first time that his intimates in the Office of Management and Budget have predicted his departure. The tipoff, they say, is the announcement that the 36-year-old bachelor will wed in February — just after the new budget is wrapped up.

Robert Novak

A footnote: The White House wants a successor who can get along with Congress much better than Stockman did. That weakens White House aide Richard Darman's hopes for the job and enhances the current leading candidate: Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige.

UNBALANCING DEMOCRATS

The main reason why the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget remains bottled up in the House Judiciary Committee is pressure on conservative "Boll Weevil" Democrats from the regular Democratic leadership, dangling choice committee assignments for next year.

One Boll Weevil, Rep. Jack Hightower of Texas, actually signed the petition to force the amendment out of the committee. But under intense leadership pressure, he removed his signature. Texas Rep. Phil Gramm, the conservative Democrat leading the balanced budget push, led one fellow Boll Weevil to the room where the discharge petition is signed, only to have him intercepted by Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill. As a result of such activity, the petition is 18 votes short of the two-thirds needed, with no hope save for a lame-duck post-election session.

A footnote: Sponsors of the amendment are burning that one of the nation's leading conservatives, Rep. Jack Kemp, will not sign the petition. He has turned aside suggestions that he assist in getting the bill to the House floor (where it is sure to pass) and then vote his convictions against it. He opposes it on grounds that it would probably lead to higher taxes.

WILSON'S COMPLAINT

White House insiders are peeved at private grumbling from San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson that President Reagan has "too long a memory" and still harbors resentment over Wilson's record as a one-time Rockefeller Republican and backer of President Ford over Reagan in the 1976 presidential race.

These complaints come as private White House polls show Wilson now running behind Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. for the Senate. That swift Brown surge has dismayed presidential aides who view Wilson's grumbling about Reagan as unbecoming and unfair.

Actually, Reagan starred at a Wilson fund-raiser at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles in August. If Wilson wants the president to spend more time on his campaign, he may be in for a disappointment. Certainly the fact that Wilson's peeve has reached the Oval Office does not help that prospect.

FIRST LADY FUMBLE

Escalating irritation by Mississippi Republicans about the White House rose another notch when they learned Nancy Reagan would be in Jackson, Miss., Sept. 27, in the company of an arch Democratic foe while ignoring a local Republican candidate.

The first lady's visit to Jackson is strictly non-political as part of her nationwide tour against drug abuse. Nevertheless, Republican leaders there are irked that she will be appearing publicly in that role with Gov. William Winter, who in 1980 nearly single-handedly carried the state for Jimmy Carter against Ronald Reagan.

Even if she could not avoid appearing with Winter, the Republicans felt Mrs. Reagan should have sought a meeting with Jackson businessman Liles Williams, the Republican candidate in a hot race against Democratic Rep. Wayne Dowdy. That closely follows the president's promise not to campaign for Democratic Sen. John Stennis against Republican challenger Haley Barbour.

DONOVAN MUST GO!

With one dissent, the high command of the Reagan administration wants Labor Secretary Ray Donovan out of town after the election. But the one dissenter is Ronald Reagan.

Although federal prosecutors say they cannot find legal evidence for prosecution of Donovan's alleged ties to the New Jersey underworld, Reagan's advisers want him out anyway. They worry that his performance as secretary of labor has suffered during the long investigation and that Donovan has developed no rapport with organized labor.

A footnote: Construction tycoon Donovan confides to intimates that he wishes he had accepted Reagan's 1980 offer to become ambassador to Ireland. He rejected that offer after the election and held out for the Cabinet spot.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans should care about others

The little man in the post office lobby recognized me and shuffled over. He was dressed in old and worn clothes. The way his eyes bulged made him appear incredibly serious about what he was saying.

Charley Reese

He had a word of advice for all columnists. He asked me to pass it along. He said we should print, at the beginning of our columns, a warning to the effect that this is the truth as best we can determine it today.

He is a wise man. If such a printed warning were possible, I would also add: And this is generalization to which there are exceptions.

The most frustrating aspect of being a columnist is lack of space. You have to deal in generalities and be brief about it. There is no space for all the exception, nuances, explanatory notes, and so forth that writers of books and academic papers enjoy.

Consequently, the columnist has to trust his reader to understand what's left out as well as what's included. You hope that when you complain about corporate welfarism, the reader understands that of the 200,000 industrial corporations in America, not all of them are beneficiaries of or approve of corporate capitalism.

You hope that when you criticize multinational corporations for meddling in foreign policy, the reader understands that not all multinationals do this and that those who do are doing nothing illegal or unethical. The head of an American corporation is a citizen, too, and perfectly entitled to speak his mind on any public issue.

And if he has a knack for seeing a remarkable parallel between what's good for his corporation and what he thinks is good for the country, then he is no different from the rest of us. All rational human beings act in what they perceive to be their own best interests.

I believe it is necessary, if we are to survive as a free nation, to remove malice and invective from public debate and confine ourselves to debating the issues on their merits. If we continue to cast everyone who disagrees with us into outer darkness, then we are going to end up a nation split into feuding factions.

There are plenty of people trying to divide us by age, race, sex, ethnic origin, religion, and political ideology and not a one of them is a friend of America. They are playing Caesar's game: divide and conquer.

What we ought to do is play our own game: unite and triumph, and we can do this if we will begin to stipulate that most of those who differ with us share the same basic goals and good intentions that we have.

Some don't and we can tell who they are by their tactics. Liars do not have good intentions because to lie is to manipulate a person by denying him the truth. There is no point in debating liars or even talking to them. We can make mistakes unintentionally but nobody lies by accident so the lie itself is evidence of ill will.

Another tactic that is evidence of ill will is preaching hate of involuntary categories. Anybody who tells you that all members of any group are identical is ignorant, and if he then adds that you should hate them, then he has a serious mental problem. We have too many serious matters which require attention to waste time with people hung up on fairy tales about racial superiority or religious bigotry.

Rather than focus on differences we should remember what we share in common — our humanity, our land, and our fate. Polluted water will poison management as well as labor; a bomb will kill without discrimination; disease is an equal opportunity infection; if the young don't have jobs, the old won't have any Social Security; if the farmer goes broke, the city dweller goes hungry.

It is time for Americans to start again to care about Americans because nobody else does and that's the truth as best I can determine it today.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Sept. 27, the 270th day of 1982. There are 95 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 27, 1964, the Warren Commission issued a report concluding that Lee Harvey Oswald had acted alone in assassinating President John F. Kennedy 10 months earlier.

On this date:

— In 1779, John Adams was named to negotiate the American Revolutionary War's peace terms with Britain.

— In 1825, George Stephenson of Great Britain operated the first locomotive to haul a passenger train.

— In 1959, a typhoon battered the Japanese island of Honshu, killing almost 5,000 people.

— In 1969, the Czechoslovak government resigned in the first stage of a sweeping purge of liberal elements in that Communist regime.

Ten years ago: The Nobel Committee in Stockholm announced it would not award any peace prize in 1972.

Unclaimed certificate may hide Texas-sized fortune

DALLAS (AP) — A key to one safe deposit box opens another at the Mercantile National Bank, but does not unlock the answer to an 85-year-old mystery about who owns the fortune it contains.

For 40 years a stock certificate, valued at more than $4 million, has been the centerpiece of what may be Texas' most enduring financial controversy.

Its rightful owner is entitled to 500 shares of the Texas and Pacific Land Trust — a legacy that translates into perhaps as much as $5 million in bonds, land holdings and Texaco stock.

During the last four decades as many as 100 people have claimed the fortune — sincere losers, hapless hustlers and outright cranks from Brazil to Hawaii and back.

A scheduled Nov. 29 trial in the courtroom of State District Judge Craig Enoch could bring the issue to an end or, possibly, cloud the ownership with litigation that could stretch into another century.

"It seems the controversy has been narrowed a bit," said Dallas lawyer Robert Blumenthal, who has been custodian of the fortune for 20 years. "We now have at least two serious claims, but we started with the world."

The confusion began in the events following the bankruptcy of the Texas and Pacific Railway Co. in 1885. Land purchased to build a railroad between Fort Worth and El Paso was placed in a trust when the company reorganized.

Among the railroad's creditors were bond holders who, in lieu of cash, were given shares in the Texas and Pacific Land Trust and more mortgage bonds on the railroad.

A stock company, Blake Brothers and Co., redeemed some T&P Railroad bonds in 1888, and among other things acquired five 100-share numbered certificates in the land trust.

Between 1893 and 1902, the first four certificates were transferred from Blake Brothers to their rightful owners. The fifth, T&PLT No. 390, the one resting in the Dallas bank, was endorsed by the stock company but never re-registered with the land trust.

The certificate was worth only $500 to $600 at the time and was considered to be lost. It became an annual asterisk for an undivided interest in some barren West Texas lands.

That was before the trust lands were discovered in the late 1930s to be sitting atop the West Texas oil fields — before they were leased, before the oil companies moved in and before the certificate began to pay substantial dividends.

Until ownership could be determined, certificate No. 390 was turned over to a district judge and an account was set up at the bank to collect the dividends.

Advertisements and newspaper stories worldwide attracted claims from an assortment of people, but only a handful have been seriously considered.

Heirs of the Blake Brothers lost court battles in New York and Texas to acquire the certificate. And when their case was out of the way, the state of Texas filed a petition to claim the fortune.

Although the state has long since lost interest, it is that petition that will go to trial Nov. 19.

It may never have gone to trial except for Edward G. Munger, a San Francisco bank executive, bank historian and archivist who read about the certificate. He and another officer at the Wells Fargo Bank found the certificate which had been filed in the bank's district office with documents linking it to a 90-year-old debt.

A promissory note for $15,298.48 endorsed by New York businessman Joseph S. Decker to Capt. J.R. Delamar, a prominent industrialist, accompanied the certificate, as did a note to a Wells Fargo banker that indicated it was collateral on the note.

There is no record of final payment of the debt.

Attorneys for the Delamar estate maintain the certificate was meant as partial payment. And if the estate is the owner, the fortune will be split between Delamar's living daughter, Alice Delamar, and the medical schools of Johns Hopkins, Harvard and Columbia universities.

New organization begun to aid those with all kinds of needs

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland, with its vast amount of wealth, has continued to open its arms to the less fortunate who travel with high hopes to the Permian Basin through community service departments, churches and other charitable organizations.

Another voluntary organization recently was established to help alleviate the pain and suffering of those who are financially and emotionally deprived.

St. Vincent De Paul, a national lay organization originally founded in 1833, opened a chapter, referred to as a conference, in Midland May 1. Through a joint effort by members of St. Ann's Catholic Church and Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, those who are in need have another means of spiritual and monetary support.

"Our main objective is to encounter the suffering Christ who we perceive as present in the persons of the poor," Jim Ameel, chairman of St. Vincent De Paul, explained. "When we speak of relieving the suffering of the poor, we're not just talking about the material needs. Anyone who we consider to be alone is an individual who is either made or felt to be alone. Probably the primary work of the St. Vincent De Paul is not so much giving financial need to these people — it's on a direct individual contact with these people."

ACCORDING TO Ameel, most people are referred through word of mouth, although many ministers at local churches have made referrals.

"We've had people out on I-20 at rest stops who have heard of our organization and heard of our work and have called us," he explained. "We want to help all who are suffering; we don't discriminate.

"And, I might add, we don't impose our religious beliefs on these people," he continued.

Funds with which the organization is able to pay for food, lodging, medical expenses or transportation are made available through fund-raising drives, special collections taken up at the two churches and individual contributions. All funds that are contributed remain in Midland for helping local persons in need.

Also, a store located at 1411 Cherry Lane provides needy persons with clothing or small amounts of furniture for a nominal fee.

"THE REASON we charge a small fee is because the individual that buys is still able to retain his dignity; it's not a handout type of a situation," Ameel said. "And the people we contact, hopefully, we present it in such a way that they still retain their dignity and integrity. It is so important."

Although the majority of those helped by the organization, about 60 percent, are transients, Ameel said the 20 to 25 volunteer members also work with prisoners and residents of nursing homes.

"The majority of our workers are lay people in the church," he explained, "with very little experience or background in doing this type of work — but we're learning."

According to Ameel, information and assistance from other organizations is often sought when the need arises.

"We'll go to the various agencies if we think that they possibly could help these people in areas that we are unable to. We try to work with the various agencies and seek their assistance since we are relatively new to this.

"SOME PEOPLE we may only see once," he said. "They may call us and we'll go out there at any time, to their home or to a rest stop on I-20 or wherever, to help them. They might just need money to be on their way. Some will even make an attempt to pay us back in the future. We're here just to simply show them that God does care for them by having others be aware of their problems."

The largest cost factor for the organization is housing, he said. Presently, needy persons are put up in local motels, but Ameel said he hopes that in the future, St. Vincent De Paul can provide housing in a hostel-type facility or build a home to house these persons.

Also, he said he would like to see the store and store hours expand. At the present location, space is limited, thus, few pieces of furniture may be sold. He also said he hopes the store can be open five days a week, rather than the 9 to 11 a.m. Saturday hours it is now open.

All clothing and furniture sold in the store are acquired through contributions. With winter months ahead, warm articles of clothing, such as coats, jackets and sweaters, will be needed, he added.

"To be successful, you have to have a bunch of good people working with you," Ameel said. "We all started out from the bottom at doing this kind of work. It's very encouraging to see these people give their time in working with the cases."

AND EVERYONE DOES what he or she can, Ameel added. All members volunteer their time, from working at the store to visiting the needy to manning the phone.

In the case of St. Vincent De Paul, a man confined to his home offered to have the phone number, 687-6528, forwarded so that he would be able to answer all calls. He takes the calls and gets the background, where the person is located and what his specific needs are, and contacts another volunteer from a roster containing names and phone numbers.

"Several of the people we have helped have remained in Midland," Ameel said. "Through follow-up phone calls and visits we have seen them get established in jobs and homes of their own. It's very gratifying to see the fruits of our labor in that these people are gradually helping themselves. They are finally seeing a light at the end of their tunnel.

"Most of these people are at a very low time of their lives," he continued. "God has been very good to us financially; we've had the money to take care of these people.

"Christianity ought to be put into action. How better to do it than to help your fellow man?"

Have heard Midland has an over 55 club, but I never see anything about it in the paper. How do you become a member of this club or whom do you contact? — Nancy Hughes

ANSWER: Contact Mrs. Harry W. Denton, 683-3984, for information concerning Midland's over 55 club.

I would like to know if there is a Midland group affiliated with Mothers Against Drunken Drivers (MADD), or any similar group. — A.A.

A check reveals no information on such a group in Midland. However, if readers know of any such organization here, Answer Line would appreciate hearing from you.

I would like to have the address of some place I can write to stop unsolicited mail from being delivered to my home. We were gone from the city only three days recently and during that short time received more than 20 catalogs, etc. — Mrs. J.W.B.

Individuls interested in stopping most advertising mail, catalogs and brochures from coming to their homes should contact the Direct Mail Marketing Association at 6 East 43rd St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

This organization will remove their names from the mailing lists of its members. While this won't stop all the advertising mail, it will stop most of it, including most sweepstakes, contest offers, samples, coupons and catalogs.

Who in Midland can refinish a scratched bath tub? — R. Luster

ANSWER: Tub-Man, a Midland business specializing in the repair of porcelain, etc., may be of assistance to you. Tub-Man can be contacted by calling 699-0255. There also is a Midland representative for the Lyons Porcelain Brite Co., Houston. This number is 699-6224.

I would appreciate knowing our rights in the following situation.

My husband and I filled out an apartment rental application and placed a deposit of $270 with a real estate company. We were told that if we changed our mind about renting the apartment we would be refunded $250, with $20 being a non-refundable fee.

A week later we decided that we did not want to rent the apartment and made several unsuccessful attempts to reach the company to notify them of our decision. In July we did make contact with their agent, at which time were told the deposit check had been cashed, whereupon we received a note written and signed by the company agent stating we would be refunded $250 by August 31. On August 12 we received a check in the mail for $200, stating that the company deducted $50 for rent loss.

Does the company have the right to cash a deposit check when no lease agreement was signed? — Janel Reeves

ANSWER: Answer Line talked with the agent of the company you refer to and was told that the company also made several unsuccessful attempts to contact you about the apartment, and held the apartment for over a week after finally talking a couple of times to you. The agent suggested you check with other property rental management companies to compare their policies on refunds. The agent also said she would be glad to discuss the situation again with you.

Pampa cop car finally has change of luck

PAMPA, Texas (AP) — Before its number was changed to D-25, Pampa police patrol car D-13 meant just one thing to local officers.

Bad news.

D-13 looked just like all the other six Chevrolet Impalas that went into service with the Pampa Police Department in July 1980, but in the 20 months before its number was changed to D-25, it was involved in five accidents.

No other police car was involved in an accident during that time.

Maybe it was coincidence, but many officers began to believe in the superstition about unlucky 13, and Police Chief J.J. Ryzman decided to change the number.

The "D-13" designation was simply the way the car was listed on the city's property books.

Ryzman said he decided to change the number because several officers were getting superstitious. But their superstitions were reinforced by the record and the car which, with its patched chassis, repaired engine and bent frame, provided scarred testimony for that record.

"The poor car has been damaged in front, on the back, on the sides, just about everywhere except on top," Ryzman said.

The city has spent more on repairs than the car cost to purchase, records show.

The vehicle was in service 11 months when it was involved in its first accadent.

That was on Aug. 12, 1981, when Lt. Preston Bailey was pursuing a fleeing vehicle, ran a stop sign and was involved in a $3,000 collision.

Four months later, D-13 was in the city vehicle barn — for repairs, naturally — when a city-owned dump truck backed into it and bent the frame for another $900 repair job.

Less than two months later, on Feb. 5, 1982, police Corp. Jess Wallace had parked the ill-starred patrol unit while he directed traffic around a disabled car. A vehicle hit the rear of D-13.

A month later, on March 8, officer Neil Greene tried to change lanes and collided with another car traveling in the same direction, Ryzman said. There were no injuries but damages amounted to $1,500.

Then, on April 1, Officer Steve Chance — who should have known better than to take a chance on D-13 on such a day — was driving the hex wagon when he tried to turn left and crashed into another car. No injuries: The D-13 jinx appeared to favor property damage, which in this case was $2,500.

Three days later, Ryzman ordered the new number for the unluckiest car in the history of Pampa PD.

Six months later, D-25 has a flawless safety record.

Ryzman said "it was humiliating and embarrassing" for an officer to try to explain his wrecked patrol car to a passing citizen.

He didn't want to get rid of the vehicle — "Basically, it was a good-running car" — but something had to be done.

Bailey's accident was his first since he joined the department — 13 years earlier, of course.

He recalled taking old Unlucky 13 to the city barn once, with Capt. Roy Denman, to fill it with gasoline.

"I filled it with 13 gallons of gas and the captain really threw a fit, said I didn't realize the significance of everything that had happened to that car," Bailey said.

Inmate escapes through jail ceiling

LUBBOCK (AP) — Authorities searched today for a 30-year-old Lubbock County Jail inmate who escaped through the ceiling of a visitation room.

Edward Milstead Martinez was being held on federal charges of unlawful flight to avoid prosecution and state charges of felony theft, deputies said.

Chief Deputy Don Feazell said Martinez had been visiting with a minister Sunday night when he went into a hallway and forced his way into a false ceiling.

Martinez crossed over into the visitation room where the ministers were, popped open a vent and dropped down into the room, Feazell said.

Man released from coffin-like prison after almost five days

SANTA FE, Texas (AP) — A 20-year-old man kidnapped and buried alive for four days in a coffin-like box with a bottle of water and a loaf of bread says he was poked by nails, bitten by insects and terrified he would die if he fell asleep.

"I must have said 'I love you' to everybody I knew at least a million times, feeling that I would die in 10 or 15 minutes if I ever fell asleep," Michael Baucom said Sunday night, recalling the days he spent buried in a Texas oil field about 30 miles north of Houston.

"I thought about my job, about how I would change if I ever got out," he said.

The young man was kidnapped at gunpoint shortly before midnight Tuesday, buried in a wooden box early Wednesday and rescued at about 5:30 a.m. Sunday, police said.

AUTHORITIES ARRESTED three people Sunday and continued to seek a fourth suspect in the unsuccessful attempt to obtain a $75,000 ransom from Baucom's parents.

The fourth suspect, Ronald White, 40, of Santa Fe, was charged in an arrest warrant with aggravated kidnapping. Police called White "armed and extremely dangerous" and said they feared he had commandeered a newspaper deliverer's car to make his escape.

Coby Garland Hamilton, 27, a Houston firefighter, failed to return home Sunday after delivering copies of the Houston Chronicle.

Hamilton "called his wife and said he'd met a friend and they were going to Lufkin. But Mrs. Hamilton said her husband sounded strange and called authorities," said sheriff's spokesman Ed deForest.

"No one has heard or seen him since. We're assuming, along with the FBI, that he was abducted since he was in the same area where the other three were arrested," deForest said.

Police Lt. Mike Barry said White formerly worked at an electronics company founded by Baucom's father.

BAUCOM SAID HE was miserable, lying in his own body wastes, bitten by insects and poked by nails driven through the lid of the coffin-like box every time he moved. He breathed through a tube.

His abductors left him with only a water-filled cola bottle and a loaf of bread to eat, he said. He drank the water, but ignored the bread.

"It's hard to believe that somebody would treat another human being like that, but I guess that's why, they're really not human beings themselves," Baucom said.

Baucom said he was kidnapped by two men he had never seen.

"Someone knocked on the door and when I went to answer it I put my hand on the door handle and asked who it was. When the door swung open, there was a gun at my head and a rifle pointed at me," said Baucom, who said he did not resist.

Barry said the kidnappers forced Baucom to tape record messages to his family, then tied his hands in front of him and buried him in the box 31 inches wide, 25½ inches deep and 8 feet, 1½ inches long.

The abductors were "courteous in a very professional manner...I was never harmed except for being buried," Baucom said.

His abductors returned to the burial site twice during the ordeal and shined a flashlight through the pipe that supplied his air to make sure he was still there.

BAUCOM WAS TAKEN to Conroe Memorial Hospital after his release and treated for dehydration and many insect bites.

The arrests came early Sunday when deputies were checking a suspicious car and found ransom notes and weapons inside the vehicle. The driver, Timothy Michael Connelly, 19, of Burlington, Iowa, was arrested, and he led authorities to a campsite where Mark Oler, 21, and Deborah Williams, 29, both of Conroe, were seized, said Montgomery County Sheriff Joe Corley.

The suspects then led police to the oil field in east Montgomery County, where Baucom was buried, Corley said.

The three were charged with aggravated kidnapping, taken from here to the Galveston County Jail, and held on bonds of $100,000 each, said Justice of the Peace James Buckner.

Baucom's father, Benny E. Baucom, first heard from the kidnappers Wednesday morning, when they played him the tape recording of his son and demanded the ransom, Barry said.

Police carried the ransom from Baucom's father's house to his business, to Channelview, to Houston and then back to Channelview on Friday, following orders issued in four phone calls, Barry said. They left the ransom in a car as instructed, but it was never picked up.

CETA apprentice carpenters' training program tobegin

Jim Purcell, business representative for Midland Carpenters Union Local 1428, has announced the start of an 11-week CETA pre-apprentice training program. Fifteen students have been enrolled in the class and will receive four weeks of classroom instruction in the basics of carpentry and seven weeks of on-the-job training, with six hours of evening classroom instruction.

Upon completion of the pre-apprentice program, these students will join the regular apprenticeship training program offered by the local, which now has 38 apprentice carpenters in training.

The apprentice program is operated under the U.S. Labor Department standards. R.W. Simpson, a long-term member and instructor of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, will coordinate the training program with the assistance of local Texas Employment Commission offices and the federal CETA job training program of the Permian Basin, which is funding the program and will provide training for economically disadvantaged persons.

"The training of these young people is in keeping with the United Brotherhood of Carpenters' 100-year tradition of looking to the future in providing qualified craftsmen to meet construction demands," said Purcell.

Carpenters Local 1428 was chartered during the Depression and currently serves the Midland-Odessa area with 300 supervisors, foremen, journeymen and apprentice carpenters.

Arms dealer free on bond after conspiracy charges filed

DALLAS (AP) — A British citizen licensed to sell arms on the international market was free on bond today after federal prosecutors filed charges alleging conspiracy to sell tanks, missiles and rocket launchers to Iran and Iraq.

The charges were lodged Sunday against Ian Smalley, 41, as he attended a specially scheduled hearing to determine if he would be allowed a passport to return to his native England to appear in court on a customs charge.

After the charges were filed, U.S. Magistrate John Tolle denied the passport and set a $200,000 bond on each count.

Smalley previously had posted a $200,000 bond on a minor weapons charge and Tolle allowed that to secure the two new bonds.

Two witnesses testifed Sunday that Smalley planned to sell the weapons to Iran and Iraq through a scheme using phony shipping documents. U.S. Attorney James Rolfe said the documents showed the weapons would be delivered to Jordan.

Dan Winkler, a special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobbaco and Firearms, testified that Smalley planned to kill shipping crew members after the deal was completed to keep them from talking to authorities.

Resign-to-run behind candidate's seat loss

DALLAS (AP) — Citing a law barring a candidate from running for more than one office in an election, Dallas County Democratic officials plan to challenge Jim Jackson's nomination to run as the Republican candidate for Dallas County commissioner.

Jackson's seat on the commissioners court was declared vacant Sunday by U.S. District Judge Robert Porter, who approved an agreement hammered out between county GOP and Democratic officers.

Porter ruled Jackson automatically resigned his post under Texas' "resign-to-run" law when he lodged an unsuccesful campaign for Congress earlier this year.

Anticipating an unfavorable court ruling, a GOP executive committee nominated Jackson for the county commission last week.

But Dallas County Democratic Chairman Bob Greenberg said he doesn't think the incumbent commissioner is eligible to run.

"I don't think Jackson will be qualified to be on the ballot," Greenberg said. "We have a law in Texas that says you only can run for one office in any one election, and he's already run."

Jackson brought the suit on Sept. 8 in an effort to keep his job.

Organization to catch computer criminals formed

By JOHN ECKHOUSE
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Dick Tracy began using computerized gizmos such as wrist radios and televisions to apprehend violent lawbreakers dozens of years ago. But Tracy, like most law enforcement officials, probably lacked the expertise to catch non-violent white collar computer criminals.

To give law enforcement and computer industry officials some assistance, a local consultant has helped to form the International Association of Computer Crime Investigators. Bruce Goldstein, president of Executect Consultants here, says he hopes the nonprofit educational organization will attract thousands of members from all over the world.

Goldstein, who says he has worked with computers for 20 years and specialized in computer security consulting for the past 3½ years, serves as membership director of the organization. He says the group will accept only professionals in the fields of data processing, security, auditing and criminal justice who can demonstrate an ability to conduct investigations in the area of computer fraud.

The organization will provide members with information on advances in investigation of computer crime, current legal trends in prosecution and lists of expert witnesses who will testify in computer crime court cases. Goldstein says the group's 14-member board of directors includes Donn Parker, an expert on computer security at SRI International in Menlo Park, Calif. Membership costs $35 a year.

However, it's not easy for prospective members to learn more about the organization. To protect the association from infiltration, Goldstein refuses to talk on the telephone to people interested in his group and will respond only to inquiries written on official letterhead stationery. "I expect sooner or later there will be people who will attempt to crash or harass the organization," he says in explaining his precautionary measures. Goldstein can be reached at 1100 Gough St., Suite 8F, San Francisco, CA 94109.

Retired probation officer provides alternatives to parents of runaways

By ANN JAPENGA
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — It was his 17th birthday. Tony was enjoying a rare restaurant meal and a reunion with his mother, who he had not seen much of since he ran away from home a year ago. His mother, however, had something in mind besides a birthday get-together.

Tony was halfway through his meal when a tall stranger slid into the booth next to him. He said his name was Mike Parr. He said that Tony was going on a ride.

Tony (not his real name) motioned the waiter over and asked him to call the police. "I'm being kidnapped," he said.

Officers arrived shortly thereafter and Parr explained himself. He said that he was a former probation officer now in business privately. He had been hired by Tony's parents to rescue their son, a chronic runaway. He tried to convince the officers it would be best if they would let him do his job and take Tony to a ranch in Redding, Calif., which boards and educates problem adolescents.

"The way it stands now, the kid is cooked," he said. "He has no future here."

WITH THE POLICE on his parents' side, Tony realized he was trapped. He climbed into the back seat of Parr's Saab for an all-night drive.

With hords of runaways each year, parents resort to police and psychiatrists to keep their children home, often spending thousands of dollars in the process.

(Parr had one client who said he had spent $125,000 trying to cure a wayward youth. "They hadn't done one thing right," Parr said. "Parents always make emotional decisions at a time when you can't do that.")

At one time parents may have gotten results from county probation department, but cutbacks in the last five years have meant that cases get less individual attention and are often referred to private agencies, Parr said.

In 1977, California legislation passed saying that runaways no longer can be institutionalized if they have not committed a crime. So when a runaway is reported to the probation department, he is listed as missing, and it is up to local law-enforcement agents to spot the child. If found, he may be placed in a temporary shelter. Spokesmen for Southern California county probation departments in Santa Barbara and Los Angeles said their main goal is to reunite the family.

Parr does not work that way.

"My objective is to get them as far away from home as possible," he said. "It's always the parents' problem. It may look at first like I'm blaming the kid, but I'm not."

ALTHOUGH A FATHER of three, Parr has not much faith in parenting instincts. "Adults don't like kids much," he advised Tony, once they were alone in the car together. "You get in their way, they're gonna get rid of you."

Two years ago Parr left the Santa Barbara County probation department and got a call which would be the start of a new career. The caller, an attorney, said that he had a juvenile client who had been arrested for selling cocaine to an undercover officer. His parents were looking for a way to keep him out of juvenile hall.

First, Parr placed the boy in a drug rehabilitation program. Next he fulfilled the boy's lifelong dream of learning to fly by enrolling him in an aviation school, where the boy is to this day.

Santa Barbara chief probation officer Alan Crogan said that it is becoming common due to cutbacks in the department for retired probation officers to complete probation reports on a private basis — although he said that he had not heard of anyone else offering Parr's complete service of locating and rehabilitating runaways.

Parr charges $500 and up. Tony's parents paid $1,000 to have their son escorted to a new home.

Included in the fee is an ongoing follow-up. Parr said that he strictly avoids counseling or therapy — he just tells the parents and child what will work.

"THE ONES THAT fail are the ones whose parents come to take them home," he said. "Sometimes the parents just can't stand to see the kid change for the better."

There is no job title for what Parr does, and no way for parents to find him, except by word of mouth. In this manner Parr's reputation has spread throughout affluent suburbs around the country. In a typical case he might be asked to track down a runaway on the streets of Hollywood, or pick up a punk in a Chicago nightclub. He finds a school or a home for the child and persuades the youth to go there. A favorite way of persuasion is to visit kids at dawn. Before the child is fully awake, he is on his way.

In the two years he has been in the business, Parr said, he had placed teenagers in small boarding schools, ranch homes, sports-oriented schools and "emancipation homes," (for young people who are capable of living independently). He has also located specialized training courses and placed kids in the Marine Corps.

Generally, he believes in discipline and hard work, but whatever he thinks will make a child happy, Parr will try.

Parents may pay him, but Parr really believes he is an ally of the child.

"This is a business, man," he told Tony as they drove over at dusk. "I'm not trying to jam you. Parents are big showoffs. Having a good kid is like having a good car. I want your parents out there bragging me up to their friends so their friends will call me."

GAO completed year-long inquiry into family-planning clinics' use of federal funds

By BETTY CUNIBERTI
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — In response to a written request by Sens. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., asking for data such as "the marital status, age and race of the ... clients who seek or receive pregnancy counseling," the General Accounting Office recently completed a one-year investigation of family-planning clinics across the United States, searching for possible misuses of federal funds.

A draft of the unreleased study, obtained Monday by The Los Angeles Times, found "no evidence that (federal funds) had been used to pay for abortions or to advise clients to have abortions," which would have been primary violations among the plethora of possible wrongdoings that Hatch and Denton wanted investigated.

In a four-page letter that specified 18 areas Hatch and Denton wanted investigated, the senators seemed mainly concerned with the possibility that family-planning clinics may be using federal funds to pay for abortions, to advise clients to have abortions, to make improper abortion referrals or to lobby for legislation.

"Their request falls into a pattern of harassment of the family-planning program by the administration and by the senators who oppose it," said Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of a House subcommittee on health and the environment. "First the administration tried to end the program, and now family planning is being harassed by audits, investigations and regulations like the tattletale rules (which require that parents of teen-agers be notified if they seek contraception).

"IF SEN. DENTON had his way, all they would do is advise abstinence as a means of birth control.

"The report confirms what I expected. There is no violation of law by family-planning clinics."

In the wake of last week's failure by the Republican-controlled Senate to pass a major anti-abortion measure, the outcome of the investigation represents another defeat in what Waxman called the Moral Majority's "war on privacy."

Denton was unavailable for comment but his press secretary, Steve Allen, said that he did not know whether Denton had seen the General Accounting Office report. He said that Denton made the request for the study "in his capacity as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging, Family and Human Services as part of a general oversight over Title X programs."

Title X is a provision of the Public Health Services Act, which has granted $1 billion in grants for family-planning services since 1970.

Allen said that Denton's request "had no unusual quality" and to view it as harassment "does not recognize that we have a responsibility to oversee use of federal funds. The senator feels the taxpayer has the right to know how federal funds are being spent. Title X had never been audited."

ASKED IF HE could explain why Denton wanted data on the martial status, age and race of family-planning clients, Allen replied, "No, I can't. It's just statistical data to show if, in fact, the program is benefiting people in proportion to their need."

Waxman said, "I cannot imagine what use that information (on marital status, age and race) would be. It's an invasion of privacy. I'm suspicious that they would try to use the information to end the program."

Hatch said that to call the request an invasion of privacy was "bullcrap, and (you) can quote me."

The study was unable to obtain the marital status, age and race information because it is rarely listed in family planning records.

Hatch was unavailable for further comment. But Ed Darrell, press secretary for the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which Hatch chairs, said, "Marital status and age were critical because of some state prohibitions. Henry Waxman may not represent a district that is concerned about marital status but several others do. It is a statistical tool for information on a topic that has popped up in hearings.

"The race data may involve the question of whether or not it would be discriminatory to end the program."

FOURTEEN FAMILY-PLANNING clinics were surveyed in the study. The draft noted that the study found "some family-planning grant recipients may not be adhering to federal restrictions on abortion-related and lobbying activities," but in each case of a questionable practice, the study pointed out that the clinic had either received no guidelines from the Department of Health and Human Services) regarding the practice, or had received guidelines that were vague.

The questionable practices included activities such as:

— Making an appointment for an abortion for a woman who could not speak English. Family-planning clinics are not allowed to make abortion appointments for clients, or to advise them to have an abortion.

— Seven clinics did not provide counseling on all options available to pregnant women, but instead gave information only on the option they said that they had decided on.

Officers injured

An average of 17 of every 100 law enforcement officers nationwide were assaulted during 1980. Some 22,000 — or six out of 100 officers — suffered personal injuries. The largest number of incidents occurred while the officers were responding to disturbance calls — family quarrel, man-with-gun, bar fight, etc. Personal weapons, such as hands, fists, feet, were used in the majority of the assaults.

Women better at putting it together

ATHENS, Ohio (AP) — If results of the first National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships are any criterion, women are far better than men at putting things together.

The new national singles champion is Barbara Armstrong of Athens, Ga., a 24-year-old unemployed accountant, who finished her 500-piece puzzle in three hours, 35 minutes and 42 seconds. Only 23 seconds behind was Martha May of Lafayette, Ind. Emalda Dahms of Lebanon, Ohio, who completed her tricky puzzle in four hours, 17 seconds.

Women also captured the doubles title in the competition sponsored by Hallmark's Springbok division as two sisters from Columbus, Ohio, completed their 1,000-piece village scene in two hours, 58 seconds. More than 260 jigsaw puzzle experts from 19 states participated in the start of what is scheduled to become an annual championship event.

Water rushes over a southern California Edison power plant near Bishop Sunday after an earthern dam broke, flooding the area in and around Bishop. The dam broke because of heavy rains in the area. 800 people were evacuated; no injuries were reported.

Danger still exists from burst dam

BISHOP, Calif. (AP) — Muddy waters that pushed through an earthen dam and forced at least 800 people to flee their homes began receding today, but authorities warned that the danger had not passed.

"The water is just a little lower, but it's nasty," said John Ferguson, head of the California Department of Forestry in the Inyo-Mono County area. "It's still moving fast.

"There's danger to homes everywhere because of the constant erosion and the debris," he said.

At least 800 people were evacuated in Bishop and nearby Big Pine Sunday when the powerful surges of water in overflowing North Lake burst through an earthen dam built during the early 1900s.

EIGHT HOMES sustained heavy damage when the dam burst, sending Bishop Creek racing out its banks and into streets, gulleys and smaller creekbeds, Ferguson said.

No injuries were reported, and there were no official damage estimates.

Residents of the mountainous area 225 miles north of Los Angeles and 15 miles from the Nevada border — including people on two nearby Indian reservations — spent Sunday sandbagging their homes. There was substantial water damage to some homes on the reservations, said Ferguson.

Bishop Mayor Ron Kiston said the flood was the worst to hit Bishop, but added "It's not that devastating."

John Corwin said he was awakened about 6 a.m. Sunday to the sound of water outside his house. By nightfall, the water was receding.

THE 15-FOOT-deep lake, located 25 miles west of Bishop, was already filled from the meltoff of snow in the Sierra Nevada, when a steady, warm rain began to fall, swelling the lake and causing more mountain runoff, authorities said. After the dam burst, the lake was left virtually empty.

Rescue teams with bullhorns evacuated residents of about 200 homes in north and east Bishop and an unincorporated area along Bishop Creek. Many more people in the town of 3,400 may have fled, only to return several hours later when the churning water left their homes untouched, officials said.

The dam belongs to southern California Edison and spokesman Frank Bellow said the utility will investigate to find out why it gave way. He said no power is generated at North Lake, which has a capacity of 48 acre-feet of water and feeds three power stations downstream.

A few isolated power outages were reported, but there were no major blackouts, he said.

The roaring water left a trail of mud and silt through much of Big Pines, a town of about 3,000 just 15 miles south of Bishop in the heart of the Owens Valley, which is surrounded by the Inyo National Forest.

THIRTY PEOPLE were stranded just north of Aspendell, 15 miles down Bishop Creek at the Cardinal Village Resort, where two feet of water flooded cabins, broke sewers and sidewalks and cut electricity, lodge owner Nadine Stratton said as guests huddled near the main building's fireplace.

"We're like an island, completely surrounded by water," said Mrs. Stratton. "We got the worst of it."

At the Big Pine Indian Reservation on the south side of Big Pine, authorities said the storm apparently damaged some of the homes of the approximately 150 to 200 residents.

Ferguson said the most heavily damaged homes were in Big Pine Canyon, cut off when the floodwaters washed out a small bridge.

"I saw one mobile home and only half of it was left," Ferguson said after a helicopter sweep over the canyon, located about 225 miles north of Los Angeles.

JIM RANDALL, captain of the Inyo County search and rescue team, said volunteers had been airlifted into the canyon, but abandoned the operation because "as far as we know, all the people involved in any of the damaged property or any isolated areas are all OK."

Before the bridge washed out, he said, he helped evacuate people from the Big Pine Canyon area.

"I was tied to a tree with a rope. There was only about four inches of water on the bridge, but I could hardly stand up, it was going so fast," Randall said.

Hawaiian volcano erupts; Sightseers view cooled lava

KILAUEA VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Thousands of people flocked to the site of a brief, spectacular eruption of Kilauea Volcano, with park rangers allowing visitors to approach the cooling, encrusted lava flow.

However, the heat generated by the molten rock on the floor of the huge summit crater kept the sightseers at a safe distance.

The eruption, which created a curtain of fire in the night sky, occurred Saturday night after about two hours warning in the form of a series of mini-earthquakes and a swelling of the volcano summit.

The quakes marked the opening of a crack about three-fourths of a mile long in the southern part of the crater floor near the Halemaumau Firepit.

At 6:44 p.m., lava started spewing from the fissure and after several hours, the molten rock was reaching an average 100 feet in the air, with some bursts of 200 feet, according to observers.

The activity began to die down at about midnight Saturday and ended completely by 9 a.m. Sunday.

The eruption spilled an estimated 3 million cubic meters of lava onto the crater floor, creating one lava flow about a mile long, scientists said.

That lava volume was considerably greater than that produced by Kilauea's last eruption April 30, about a mile from Saturday's eruption. The earlier eruption lasted 19 hours.

The eruption took place inside Hawaii Volcanoes National Park and posed no danger to buildings.

Commercial airs starting burger war

MIAMI (AP) — A commercial featuring a brown-haired little girl with "a very big message for grownups" has gone on the air, the first of the Burger King ads that have sparked a "burger war" with rival McDonald's in federal court.

"Do I look 20 percent smaller to you?" the little girl asked in the 10-second Burger King commercial broadcast on CBS Sunday night. The camera then cut to a chart claiming McDonald's regular burgers contain 20 percent less meat than those of Miami-based Burger King.

"Luckily, I know a perfect way to show McDonald's how I feel," concluded the girl, standing in front of a Burger King restaurant. "I go to Burger King."

McDonald's beef centers on the 20-percent charge and on Burger King's contention that customers prefer the taste of flame-broiled hamburgers over the fried patties it says McDonald's serves. McDonald's says its burgers are grilled, not fried.

Burger King spokesman John Weir of Miami said the company used the little girl in hopes that its $20 million campaign would be as successful as the Life cereal commercial in which a finicky small boy named Mikey happily digs into the product.

"We're looking at it as the next Mikey Life cereal," Weir said. "I think the commercial has that kind of appeal and memorability. Cute little girl."

Burger giant McDonald's, based in Oak Brook, Ill., has demanded that Burger King prove its claims.

U.S. District Judge Eugene P. Spellman ordered Burger King to produce the ads and other documents that back up the claims. Burger King attorneys said much of the information is in the hands of a New York City advertising agency not named in the suit. Spellman told the lawyers to reported to him today on the status of the documents.

McDonald's asks that Burger King be ordered not to broadcast the ads or to broadcast corrective advertising, but its attorneys did not ask for an injunction at a hearing Friday.

"When it comes to protecting our hard-earned reputation you'll never see a white flag flying over the golden arches," McDonald's spokesman Bob Keyser said last week.

Weir defended the claims in the Burger King ads. He said the company is the only one of the three largest hamburger chains to flame-broil the product, and that its survey found 66 percent of consumers tested preferred flame-broiled to fried hamburgers.

"The whole program was carefully researched and can be substantiated," Weir said. "We believe consumers are intelligent people and can make intelligent choices. We're just telling them what many of them already thought."

McDonald's officials retorted that Burger King sometimes steams its burgers, then reheats them by microwave.

At stake is the nation's multibillion-dollar burger market. McDonald's raked in $7 billion revenue last year. Burger King receipts totaled $2.3 billion.

Wendy's Old-Fashioned Hamburger, the No. 3 seller, jumped into the burger war last week, challenging its bigger competitors to a national taste test by an independent research firm.

ABC News ranks as 'most trusted,' says TV Guide

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — ABC News ranked as "most trusted" of the three major networks in a nationwide survey of television viewers, TV Guide magazine reported today.

TV Guide, in its Oct. 2 issue, said a telephone survey of more than 1,000 Americans nationwide found that 28 percent ranked ABC as most trusted while CBS and NBC were trusted most by about 20 percent of the survey sample each.

Nearly 20 percent said that news coverage on the three networks "is all the same," TV Guide reported, while the rest trusted none of the networks or had no opinion.

The survey, conducted for the magazine by Opinion Research Corp. of Princeton, N.J. also found that 47 percent of the people surveyed said they would prefer to see nightly network news continue to be half an hour long.

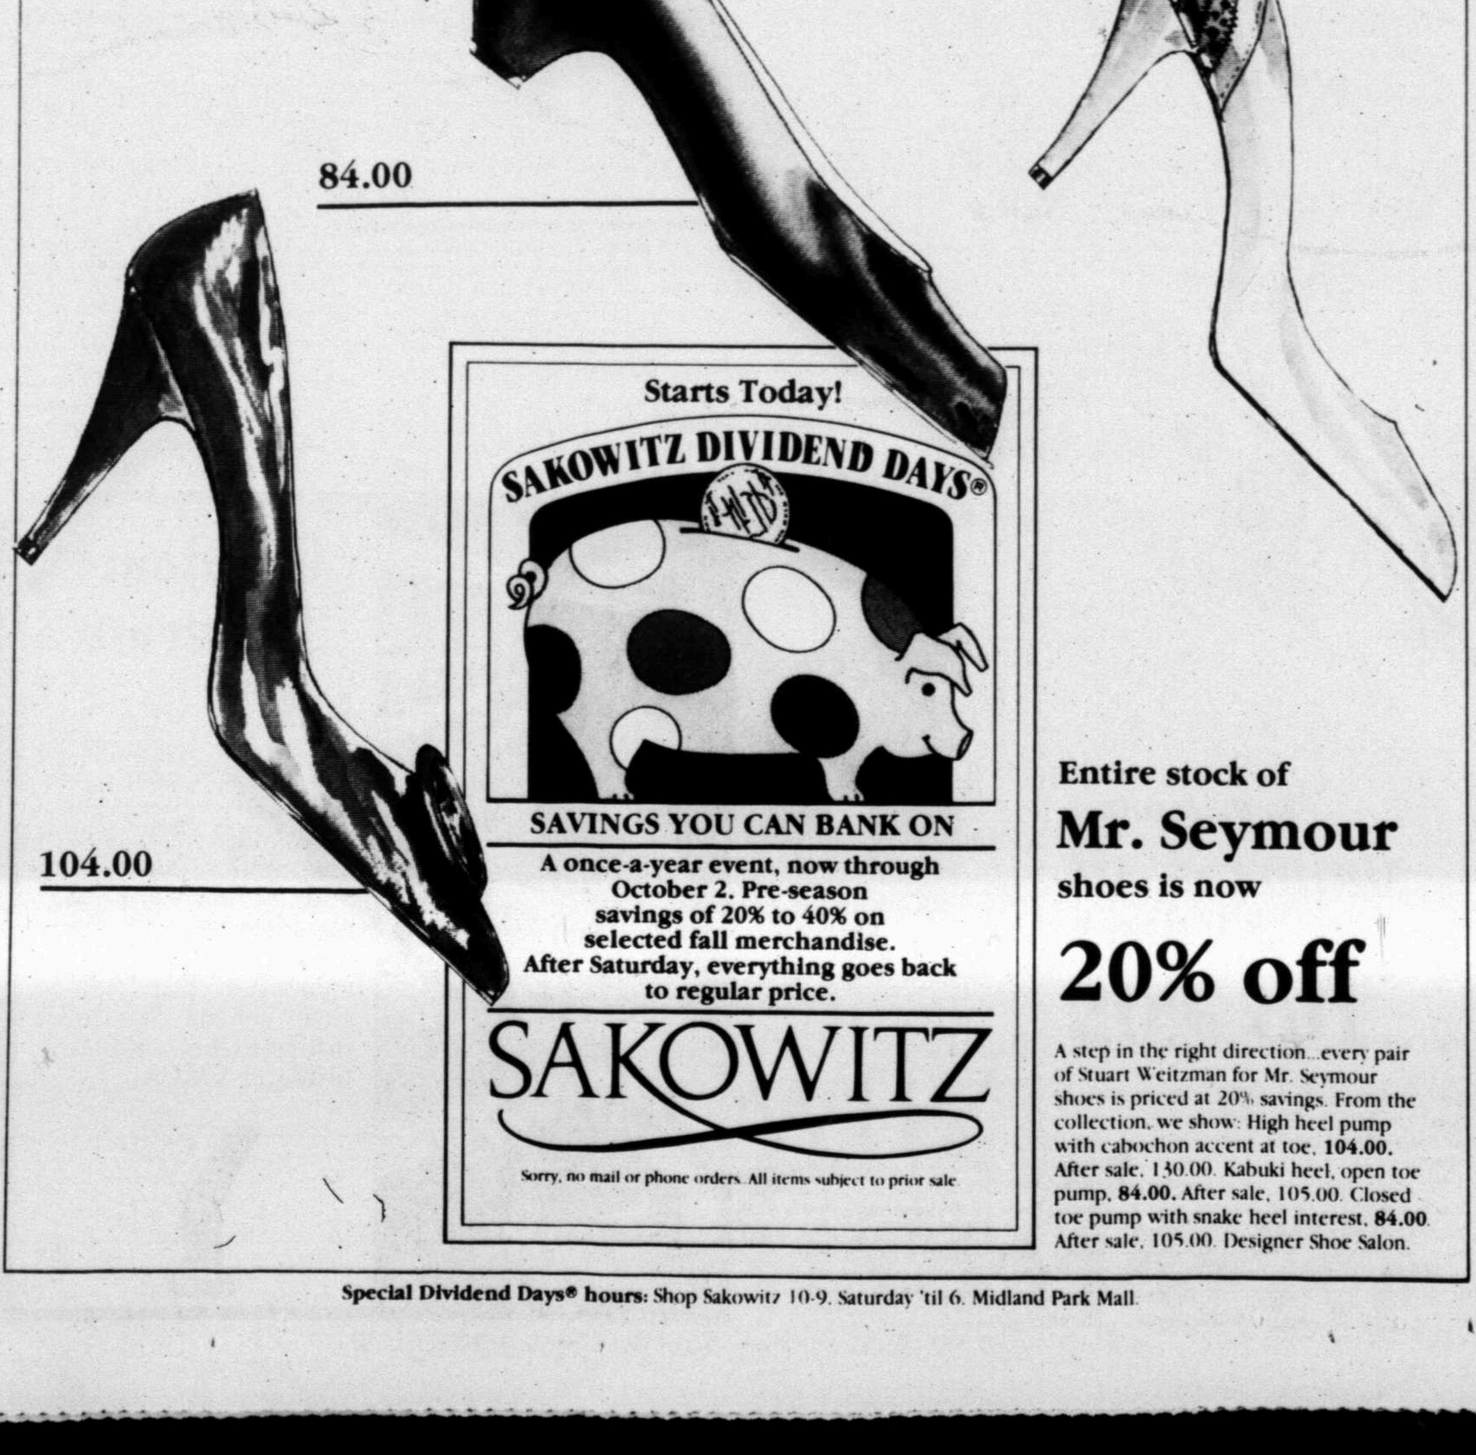
Twenty-one percent said they would like to see network news expanded to 45 minutes or an hour, even if it meant reducing local coverage.

The survey was conducted by telephone over a four-day period in July and found that overall, 81 percent of the respondents said they had "a great deal" or "a fair amount" of confidence in network news programs. Of those surveyed, 56 percent said they depend on TV as their principal source of news.

In more specific questions about fairness in network news, the magazine said 68 percent of the people surveyed said TV news has generally "been fair" in its treatment of President Reagan. A majority said President Carter "got a pretty fair shake, too" in television coverage.

TV Guide said sizeable minorities claimed they did find bias in TV coverage, but provided no figures. More than a third of the people who thought network news was biased said it was against the Democratic Party, and almost as many said it was stacked against the Republicans.

And while almost 70 percent said they found no ethnic or racial bias in network television news, almost a quarter of those surveyed said they did find such bias.



DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Stomach will be examined

Dear Dr. Solomon: The only thing I know for sure is that my doctor is going to use an endoscope to examine me. He tried explaing to me what he was going to do, but I got lost somewhere along the way. I really only want to know two things about what is going to happen: What is an endoscope? And will it hurt? — Charley, New York, N.Y.

Dear Charley: An endoscope is a flexible tube that transmits light into a body cavity. Its value is that it permits the physician to examine the lining of the esophagus, stomach and small intestine.

You will be given a sedative that will help you relax, but you cannot be put to sleep because you will have to cooperate with the doctor during the study. You may feel some discomfort as the endoscope is inserted, but you should not feel acute pain. You will also feel some fulness in your stomach because of the air the doctor will put in. In addition, you may have a sore throat for a day or so after.

The entire procedure should take anywhere from a few minutes to more than an hour. Some patients feel tired when the procedure is over, but others are wide awake. A soft diet is usually recommended for the balance of the day.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I must have missed something in the explanation along the way, but if the Pill causes heart attacks, why should any doctor prescribe it, and why should anyone use it? — Melba, San Antonio, Texas

Dear Melba: Oral contraceptives do have the potential for causing adverse side effects, but they also have benefits. As you suggest in your letter, much of the controversey surrounding use of the Pill has revolved around its cardiovascular effects.

Dr. Howard W. Ory, of the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, points out that these adverse cardiovascular effects are most likely to be seen in older women who smoke. For nonsmokers and even for younger women who smoke, the beneficial effects of oral contraceptives outweigh their adverse effects.

For example, of 29 women who used oral contraceptives and who suffered a heart attack before the age of 50, 21 were over 20 years of age and smoked cigarettes. None of the women who used oral contraceptives but were under 30 and did not smoke had had a heart attack.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have just hit 30 and am in good health, but I'd like to get back to playing tennis which I've neglected since graduating from college. Do you think it would be advisable for me to get a stress test before I become active again? — Deke, Birmingham, Ala.

Dear Deke: It is generally agreed that persons under 35 years of age who are in good health do not have to undergo a stress test before beginning an exercise program.

For Henry, Baton Rouge, La.: The reason the doctor recommended computerized tomographic scanning is that it is considered the best method for diagnosing a primary lesion of the brain.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would going south in the winter, or even moving permanently to a warmer climate, be good for my rheumatoid arthritis? I wouldn't look forward to moving but I would seriously consider doing so if it would stop my condition. — Brad, New Haven, Conn.

Dear Brad: According to Dr. Neal S. Latman, of the Levi Arthritis Hospital in Hot Springs, Ark., the weather may affect the comfort and activity of some patients with rheumatoid arthritis; however, changes in climate do not affect the underlying inflammatory process. His conclusions are based on a study of about 2,800 patients seen over a period of nine years.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The community in which I live prohibits the burning of leaves. I can understand controls on industrial pollution, but burning leaves give off a pleasant aroma. From a medical standpoint, do you see any reason for the restriction? — Mrs. A.D.S.

Dear Mrs. S.: I can see several — asthma, bronchitis, emphysema, and pneumonia — all of which are aggravated by the pollutions caused by leaf burning. The smoke can also affect healthy individuals by causing eye and nose irritation, fever, coughing, and cramps.

The smoke from burning leaves contains about one pound of pollution for every five pounds of leaves burned. Moreover, because the smoke usually is close to the ground, it is more likely to be breathed in before it has a chance to dissipate. Burning leaves is not the harmless activity it appears to be.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The reason I am writing to you is that I don't feel like discussing the subject with my doctor. I find it painful to have sexual relations and I would like to know if there isn't some simple method I can follow to take care of the problem. — Mrs. T.Y., St. Paul, Minn..

Dear Mrs. Y.: The problem of painful intercourse (dyspareunia) may have a fairly simple solution but that is something a physician will have to determine on the basis of a physical examination. The solution may be as simple as using a lubricant during intercourse but other causes, such as an infection, are also possibilities. I would therefore urge you to discuss the situation with your doctor so that appropriate treatment may be prescribed. You can rest assured that you will probably not be the first patient to have discussed such a complaint.

As for how common the problem is, dyspareunia occurs in both men and women and at any age. However, the symptoms are most common in women 45 to 55 years old.

For Bertha, Hagerstown, Md.: The length of time the symptoms remain is a good indication of whether you have a cold or an allergy. If the symptoms disappear after about 10 days, you probably have a cold; if they continue for longer periods and reappear year after year, you probably are suffering from an allergy, along with about 20 to 40 million other people with allergies in the United States.

An Israeli soldier wearing a prayer shawl and a skull cap prays with others at the Wailing Wall Sunday morning before the start of the Jewish Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur. Sunday evening at sundown all motor vehicles stopped for 24 hours and many Israelis fasted for the entire day.

Beirut massacre touches Yom Kippur

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel was in its annual state of near-paralysis today as Jews observed Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, overshadowed this year by the horror of the Beirut massacre.

Many Jews were fasting for Yom Kippur which began at dusk Sunday. Synagogues were packed and thousands thronged the plaza next to the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem, Judaism's holiest shrine. The Wailing Wall, or Western Wall as it is known in Israel, is the largest remaining vestige of Solomon's temple, which was destroyed by the Romans in the second century A.D.

The devout beat their chests as they prayed, ritually begging God's forgivess for their sins.

Traffic was at a standstill and children played hopscotch on normally congested main streets, enjoying a day of brilliant late-summer sunshine. Airports and harbors also were shut, and the only vehicles on the move were police cars and ambulances.

An automobile driving on the holy day ran the risk of being stoned by religious zealots.

For some Israelis it was a day of remembrance for sons, brothers and fathers who died on the first day of the 1973 war, which broke out in the midst of Yom Kippur.

Israel radio and television halted broadcasts and Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other top officials spent the day in synagogues or at home with their families, which meant a respite in the political turmoil shaking Israel in the wake of the slaughter in the Chatilla refugee camp.

Political activity resumes Tuesday with a Cabinet meeting at which some ministers are expected to renew pressure for an independent judicial inquiry into allegations that the government and army could have acted faster to halt the massacre.

Begin has insisted the army acted as soon as it had information that a slaughter was going on, but the Israeli media reported Sunday that he would nonetheless bow to public pressure and order a judicial inquiry.

Jailed Jewish activist begins fast in U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW (AP) — Imprisoned Jewish activist Anatoly Shcharansky began a hunger strike late Sunday at the start of the Jewish holy day of Yom Kippur, his mother reported today.

Ida Milgrom said her 34-year-old son started the fast as a protest against prison officials' confiscation of letters he tried to send to relatives for the past 10 months.

Mrs. Milgrom said the authorities are refusing to send his letters on grounds he was using a code system to give details about life in prison.

She said she has been unable to contact her son since Jan. 4, but that she received the news of the hunger strike through a third party she refused to identify.

She said that following her last visit to the Chistopol prison, 500 miles east of Moscow, she has been turned away twice on subsequent attempts to visit her son. She said her son has not been allowed to send or receive letters since late December.

Speaking with Western reporters, Mrs. Milgrom said her son started the fast at sundown Sunday, the start of the holy day.

'Graduates' of C.C.C. gather to reminisce

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RICHWOOD, W.Va. — It was more than 40 years ago when they first came to the grassy glade that links a mountainside and a trout stream. They were callow, often ragged young men from the slopes and hollows of the Alleghenies who had just signed up for President Franklin D. Roosevelt's new civilian army, "the CCC."

Now, in the evening of lives that, for the most part, had modestly prospered, they had gathered to renew old friendships and to talk about a then-revolutionary government venture — the Civilian Conservation Corps — that many believe transformed the future.

"We were so poor, so poor," E.R. Riffle said, remembering the Great Depression and his childhood in Leon, W.Va. "I dropped out of high school when I was a sophomore. We didn't have any books, and we didn't have any work — maybe 50 cents a day. Maybe, if you could find a farmer who was hiring."

"In the CC, it was the first time in my life I was equal with everybody else. Had as good clothes, as good a bed, as good treatment. Everybody was equal."

RIFFLE, NOW 59 AND a rolling mill operator, was one of 104 veterans of the CCC who assembled here recently for a reunion. "The three Cs" or the "CC," most called it. And, in part, they were like graduates of more conventional institutions who fraternize and reminisce at a reunion.

In another way, however, they were different. They had been part of what most saw as a short-lived but proud experiment — an experiment some say the nation could well afford to repeat as it struggles with economic troubles surpassed in this century only by those of the terrible 1930s.

In the nine years before World War II began soaking up every able-bodied man in America, about 2.9 million sons of the Depression were marshaled by the federal government in a quasi-military organization, assigned to construct a network of camps, then set to work building roads, parks and scores of other projects.

Working in an age before built-in obsolescence became a philosophy and computers could calculate just how much was good enough, the CCC crews built to last. The fruits of their labor have been used — and still are — by tens of millions of Americans.

BUT, FOR MOST WHO JOINED the CCC, the most important thing was the way their experience in the corps transformed them. It was more than a coming of age; it involved learning they could do something with their lives.

Bernard Counts, white-haired and frail at 68, recalled his two years of CCC service as "the greatest thing that ever happened to me."

"It was just a new chance in life," he said. "I learned how to get along with other people and how to take orders. I've always felt I could stand on my feet since I came out."

Said Riffle, "If every young boy that grew up today had to spend a couple of years of that duty, we'd have a different society to live in."

The idea of a modern CCC has been suggested before. And, at a time when welfare costs are straining the budget and unemployment among CCC-age youths has soared to Depression-like levels, it is an idea of more than passing appeal.

INDEED, THE HOUSE PASSED authorizing legislation for such a revival last June, and it is now being considered by the Senate Interior Committee.

However, given the current emphasis on cutting budgets and reducing programs both in Congress and the Reagan administration, the prospects for quick action on a new CCC are not considered bright.

Things were far different in 1933. As a new president with a landslide mandate to act and solid majorities in both the House and the Senate, Roosevelt moved with a speed that is hard to grasp today.

The CCC was one of the president's pet projects, and it was among the first elements of his New Deal to take shape. Roosevelt, who had championed conservation as governor of New York, called a meeting on March 6, 1933, two days after his inauguration, to plan for a federal conservation corps.

On March 21, Roosevelt proposed creation of the corps in a message to Congress. Ten days later, an enabling act was on his desk.

BY APRIL 7, 1933, THE first man had been enrolled. The first-year quota of 275,000 men was reached by July 1. Enrollments eventually peaked at 502,000 in 1935 but Congress put a 315,000-man ceiling on the corps in 1937 after war clouds in Europe spurred a military buildup.

Through most of its life, the corps consisted of 250,000 enrollees between 17 and 26 years old, plus 25,000 otherwise jobless veterans of World War I and 10,000 Indians, who lived in their own camps. There were also 25,000 older men who were hired for their special skills. Blacks were largely enrolled in segregated camps.

Pay ran as high as $45 a month for skilled men holding responsible posts but most enrollees got only $30 a month — all but $5 of which was automatically sent home to their families.

Still, young men jumped at the chance. Nearly half of the 10 million Americans then unemployed were in their late teens or early 20s. Army recruits were paid only $21 a month, and it was an era when candy bars cost a nickel, small beers a dime.

Kline Lovelace, who spent most of his two years in the CCC working in Yellowstone National Park, remembered lying about his age to get in. Enrollees were supposed to be at least 17, but "I was pretty young when my father died and I was responsible for putting food on the table," Kline said. "I was really only 16 when I joined."

Explosions rock offices of travel agencies, airline

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Separate bomb explosions rocked two travel agencies and an airline office early today, killing one person and injuring another.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility but police said a group which claimed to have carried out the bombing of the Israel's El Al airlines in Munich earlier this summer may have been responsible.

Two of the bombings occurred about 1:15 a.m. (7:15 p.m. EDT Sunday), about two minutes apart. One bomb exploded in front of the offices of Iran Air after two unidentified passers-by found it in a plastic bag in front of the Pan American World Airways and carried it about 500 yards to the Iran Air offices, police said. They had no immediate explanation of why the bomb was moved.

About two minutes later, an explosion rocked a six-story apartment building near a city railway station on the east side, blowing out the windows of the Mayco-Tourist travel agency.

At 5:11 a.m. today (11 p.m. EDT) the third explosion went off, at the Giessler travel bureau, killing a 47-year-old janitor and seriously wounding a woman.

Authorities said the bomb had apparently been placed inside the travel bureau. They had earlier thought the bomb had been set in the Alia Royal Jordanian Airline office, which is in the same building and was slightly damaged.

Police spokesman Oswald Neumann said the two travel agencies and Pan Am offered trips to Israel and that police were speculating that may have been a motive of the bombers.

Neumann estimated the damage at $200,000.

There was no indication whether the blasts were connected with a July 31 explosion at Munich's Riem airport that injured seven people near the Israeli El Al Airlines checkpoint.

The bombing was never solved but authorities received a letter from an unknown group called "Justice for Palestinian Organizations" that claimed responsiblity. The letter demanded an end to air traffic with Israel.

Booby trap kills soldier, hurts two others in Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A booby-trap bomb killed one British soldier and wounded two others in Belfast early today, police reported.

The bomb exploded when the troopers, following a morning routine, opened a security barrier on the West Circular Road between Protestant and Roman Catholic districts of the provincial capital, a police spokesman said.

The security gate is locked at night and opened by soldiers every morning. Police believe the booby-trap device was wired to the gate's mechanism by guerrillas after it was closed Sunday night.

Police theorized the bomb was planted by the guerrillas of the Irish Republican Army or its Marxist splinter group, the Irish National Liberation Army. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The mainly Roman Catholic movements are fighting to end British rule in the Protestant-dominated province. They seek to unite the province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic.

The killing raised the known death toll from 13 years of sectarian and political bloodshed in Northern Ireland to at least 2,219 — 47 slain this year.

Police also reported that a bomb blast wrecked a car belonging to a part-time trooper of the predominantly Protestant Ulster Defense Regiment in Armagh early today, when the trooper was asleep at home.

Police said the bomb apparently was meant to detonate when the man started the car engine, but it had exploded prematurely. No one was hurt.

A slaughtered herd of dairy cattle lies in a pen on a farm in Polkton Township, Mich., in this 1976 photo. The 235-cow herd appeared to be suffering from poisoning by the fire retardant PBB which caused agricultural contamination. Other animals were quarantined because they also contained PBB. In October of this year the 1977 Michigan law requiring testing of animals removed from farms plagued by PBB will expire.

After nine years, PBBs still haunt Michigan

GRANT, Mich. (AP) — The Holstein herd roams a dirt lot, not far from the farmhouse where Robert Hollinger's family has lived for three generations.

It's a healthy herd. But according to the state of Michigan, the animals are quarantined because they still contain PBB — nine years after the worst case of agricultural contamination in the nation's history.

In October, the quarantine on Hollinger's herd and farm animals at 12 other farms will be lifted. It will mark the expiration of a 1977 law that required testing of animals removed from farms plagued by PBB, or polybrominated biphenyl. The toxic fire retardant was accidentally mixed with livestock feed in 1973.

"If they came around and told us we had PBB again, I'd just tell them they could have the whole farm," says Hollinger, who with his brother-in-law runs Double H Farms 25 miles north of Grand Rapids.

THE 1977 LAW REDUCED the allowable level of PBB in animal fat tissue from the federal standard of 300 parts per billion to 20 parts. It has cost the state of Michigan at least $20 million. But the program has succeeded in weeding out contaminated animals, says Kenneth Van Patten, director of the state's Bureau of Agricultural Product Assurance.

It was nine years ago that several hundred pounds of PBB was mixed inadvertently into livestock feed distributed to hundreds of Michigan farms and eaten by hundreds of thousands of farm animals.

Bags containing several hundred pounds of the fire retardant — trademarked Firemaster — were mistaken for bags of magnesium oxide — trademarked Nutrimaster — a feed supplement also made at the Michigan Chemical Corp. plant in St. Louis, Mich.

The bags of PBB were sent to Farm Bureau Services feed cooperatives, where it was added to feed.

The error went undetected for several months. Meanwhile, dairy herds throughout Michigan began to develop production and physical problems. Through animals' meat and milk, PBB entered the food chain. Scientists say some level of PBB now is in the bodies of 97 percent of the state's residents, although there is no agreement on whether PBB poses health risks to humans.

"WHAT WE'RE CONCERNED about is what is going to happen with time," says Arthur Bloomer of the Michigan Department of Public Health, which is conducting a study of effects on humans. Some people continue to blame ailments on PBB poisoning. However, Jeff Stross, director of the patient care program at the University of Michigan, recently told a U.S. House subcommittee, "The only objective health effects we found for PBB have been psychological."

There have been other tests. Dr. J. George Bekesi, head of the Environmental Biology Laboratory at New York's Mount Sinai School of Medicine, has been monitoring 340 Michigan residents since 1976.

He recently released findings that indicate the PBB can cause "persistent" damage to the human immunological system. His lab studies indicate that Michigan farm residents with PBB had less T-lymphocytes — a type of white blood cell needed for detecting disease than did a control group of people who never had been exposed to PBB.

AFTER THE 1973 INCIDENT, 576 farms were eventually quarantined. More than 30,000 cattle, 1.5 million poultry and thousands of other PBB-tainted farm animals were destroyed and buried in specially constructed pits.

Between the original contamination in 1973 and the 1977 passage of the testing law, state government officials repeatedly refused to pass legislation that would have required destruction of PBB-tainted animals and pay farmers for those animals.

For 37-year-old farmer Robert Hollinger, who has lost two 100-cow herds to PBB, the testing law justed covered up the state's inaction.

"Maybe in the long run it's helped instill confidence in the food system. But it wasn't necessary. I thought we had good quality food," he says.

Hollinger and the 12 other Michigan farmers with residual PBB problems have finished or are ending state-suggested cleanup programs. That has meant paving highly contaminated feed lots, building new silos, cleaning barns, state purchase of livestock rights at two farms, and the outright purchase by the state of a farm so thoroughly riddled with PBB that it cannot be cleaned.

TWO MULTIMILLION-DOLLAR LAWSUITS remain. One by the state seeks more than $20 million from Michigan Chemical and Farm Bureau Services. The other, filed by workers from Michigan Chemical against the state, asks for $250 million.

About 40 of the 900 original lawsuits against Michigan Chemical remain unsettled, says Grand Rapids attorney Roger Clark, who represents the chemical company.

And the Gratiot County landfill, in which Michigan Chemical illegally dumped 100,000 pounds of PBB-tainted wastes, is the state's most serious "PBB residue problem," says Jack Bails of the Department of Natural Resources. It will take up to $13 million to build a 70-foot-deep vault to prevent seepage of PBB into the groundwater.

POSITIVE THINKING

Courage brings release, relief

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

There is hope for anyone suffering from fear. Courage brings release and relief, for courage banishes fear. We are all heroes in potential, doubt it as you may.

Courage and fear are mental attitudes that result from the kind of thoughts we think. The mental climate one creates determines whether he or she will have courage even when things seem hopeless.

John F. Kennedy once pointed out that courage is an opportunity which sooner or later is presented to us all. Let me tell you about a small Mexican man who overcame a long-held basic fear and summoned courage he didn't know he had to save a little child under dramatic circumstances.

Manuel, a migrant farm laborer, was working in a field when he and three other laborers heard screams for help. They rushed to an anguished mother and grandmother standing by an old unused well shaft. Their little 3-year-old boy had been playing near this abandoned well with a group of playmates. Some of the children had pushed aside a barrel which had covered the well opening, and the little fellow suddenly stepped into the small hole and disappeared from sight. The well was 300 feet deep and cased with a 16-inch pipe. It was 68 feet down to the water level.

Though he could speak little English, Manuel comprehended the desperate situation. A frightened little voice came from the depths and he knew that the child could only last a few minutes more before he would vanish into the water.

Manuel suffered from claustrophobia. He was terrified by dark and narrow places. But he knew he must save this little boy. Probably he had never heard of Robert Louis Stevenson's statement: "Keep your fears to yourself, but share your courage with others." But this is what Manuel did.

He told the other men to tie his feet firmly with ropes so that he could go head-first down the shaft. His shoulders were wider than the pipe, but by compressing his body the wiry farm worker was able to squirm into the opening, where he disappeared from sight.

The foul smell in the pipe sickened him. Head down, he grew very dizzy and had to fight unconsciousness. The sharp rust particles inside the pipe tore this shirt and bloodied him arms. Manuel knew he could not remain conscious for very long, but he forced himself farther and farther down.

Suddenly he heard the sound of splashing water and then felt the tousled little head. He put his arms around the child and signaled his friends to quickly pull up, which they tried to do. But to his horror he couldn't move; he was stuck. Manuel loosened his grip and the boy fell back into the water, screaming in fright. He grabbed the child again, this time by the wrists, and cried in Spanish, "Hurry, hurry. In the name of God, pull us up."

The rope tightened and Manuel suffered agony as his body scraped against the rough pipe as they moved upward. It felt like his legs were being pulled out of their sockets. His arms were numb and his shoulder dislocated. But he held on to the boy and finally strong hands drew them to the surface.

"Thank God," the young mother cried, as she gathered her little son in her arms. The child was cold and wet and whimpering, but unhurt. Bystanders who had witnessed this selfless and heroic act took up a generous offering for Manuel, but he refused it. "Anyone would have done the same for my child," he said in broken English, adding in wonderment, "I lost my fear and found courage." This so-called ordinary man discovered to his amazement that he had inner strength that could overcome fear and find courage. With that strength he was able to meet a fearful crisis. Wonder if those same qualities of courage and strength are not built into each of us.

Remote, Ore., far from madding crowd

REMOTE, Ore. (AP) — It's big enough to have its own zip code, but too small for a separate listing in the telephone book.

And there's no question it's far from the press of urban life.

Remote — population somewhere between three and 100, depending on where one draws the boundaries — is just a wide spot on a winding mountain road, halfway between Roseburg and Coos Bay, Ore.

"Well, it is remote all right, but we like it that way," says Maude Masters, the town's postmistress and owner of the Remote Store, one of four structures in what she refers to, tongue-in-cheek, as "downtown."

Next door to the white frame general store is a slightly ramshackle farmhouse where Mrs. Masters was born and is now home to her older brother. Behind the store is a newer house she shares with Mr. Cat, a huge Siamese, and Miss Sally, a mutt that wandered in one day and stayed.

Bruce Stout, the third human resident of downtown Remote, lives "over there," says Mrs. Masters, gesturing vaguely down the street.

Experts urge consumers to get second opinion

By LOUISE COOK

That old saying about two heads being better than one may be able to save you pain and money when it comes to medical treatment.

A growing number of people in the health-care industry, including some government experts, are urging consumers to seek a second opinion about certain recommended treatment, particularly elective surgery.

The Health Care Financing Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services even has a special, toll-free hotline that members of the public can call to find out where to go for a second opinion about non-emergency operations.

Anne Verano, a spokeswoman for the agency, says the program, begun late in 1978, "has been worth the effort that we've put into it."

She said operators for the hotline field 1,000 calls a month.

Ms. Verano said the department has no statistics yet on how many people who have used the hotline actually got second opinion; nor does anyone have comprehensive figures on how many unnecessary operations have been avoided. She said, however, that program staffers hope to have a summary about the results of the project by the end of the year.

Meanwhile, Ms. Verano said, "the department thinks it's worthwhile. The interest is there."

Medicare — the federal insurance program for older Americans — pays for second opinions on the same basis it pays for other treatment. Ms. Verano said state-run Medicaid programs for the poor and most private insurers also will foot most of the bill for second opinions.

A free booklet, "Facing Surgery? Why Not Get A Second Opinion?" is available from Surgery, Health and Human Services, Washington, D.C., 20201. Ms. Verano said 7½ million copies of the booklet have been distributed so far.

The Health Care Financing Administration hotline program is limited to second opinions on operations which are recommended, but do not involve a life-threatening, emergency situation — things like tonsillectomies and hysterectomies.

Another group of patients — cancer victims — also will be able to get information soon on alternative treatments through a computerized databank being set up by the National Cancer Institute.

Amnesty International reports of killings, torture, 'concocted' Marcos charges

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos, calling charges by Amnesty International that his government killed and tortured dissidents "concocted," says he will "ask for complete evidence."

Marcos, on a 12-day visit to the United States, defended his government Sunday and told hundreds of cheering Northern Californians of Filipino descent, "Don't listen...to all these stories."

Marcos, making his first tour of the United States in 16 years, was to address Filipino-Americans in Honolulu today before flying home to Manila.

Scores of police wearing riot helmets guarded the entrances and elevators of the St. Francis Hotel here as Marcos spoke inside to an enthusiastic and cheering crowd of more than 1,100 people.

Before Marcos spoke, police arrested and booked a man they described as a Philippine national. He was held for investigation of carrying a knife with a blade longer than three inches, police said.

"I stand before you to say...this is not the policy of our government," Marcos said, referring to charges by Amnesty International on Sept. 22

1982 may go down as most expensive campaign year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats think they have the issues on their side this year, but Republicans have the money.

Whether cash can prevail might be the deciding factor in the most expensive mid-term campaign in American history and the first in which one party has a clear financial advantage.

With Election Day less than six weeks away, Democrats live with the nightmare of a tidal wave of money enabling Republican candidates to flood America's television screens and mailboxes with the GOP version of the issues.

With Republican Party organizations raising eight times as much money as their Democratic counterparts, it's a dream come true for the GOP.

The two parties competed on a roughly equal financial basis through 1980.

Republicans liked to point out that in 1980, Democratic candidates for the House spent $71.9 million and the Republicans $70.9 million. In Senate races, Democratic candidates spent $53.6 million, while Republicans spent $48.9 million.

IF REPUBLICAN candidates had greater appeal among wealthier contributors, Democrats had the edge that comes with incumbency. They controlled the House and Senate for a generation and political money flows toward power.

But that Democratic edge was weakened in 1980 when Republicans won control of the Senate and gained enough House seats to raise the prospect of winning a majority there in 1982. Some interest groups that once felt they had to support Democratic committee chairmen now are having second thoughts.

Latest figures from the Federal Election Commission show the Republican National Committee and the GOP Senate and House Campaign committees raised $146 million between Jan. 1, 1981, and June 30, 1982 — compared to $18.9 million for their Democratic counterparts. The GOP total is likely to top $180 million by Nov. 2 and the Democratic figure reach $28 million.

No one disputes that money can do a lot in politics.

It may have turned Social Security from a Democratic to a Republican issue. It is guaranteeing that many Democratic incumbents will face credible challenges. And a shortage of it on the Democratic side could save some Republican incumbents.

But money alone is not a panacea.

Ask David Emery, the Republican congressman from Maine who yearns to serve in the Senate. Emery is running against Sen. George Mitchell, a Democrat appointed to his seat when Sen. Edmund Muskie was named secretary of state by then-President Carter.

SO FAR, EMERY has spent about $650,000 — some $200,000 more than Mitchell — only to see his standing in the polls skid from a 36-point lead to an 8-point deficit.

That's enough to suggest the money gap will not guarantee Republican gains in this year's elections.

But the advantage does give the party a good shot at minimizing its losses in what otherwise might be a disastrous election year. The party out of power in the White House historically gains an average of 30 to 40 House seats in mid-term elections. Combine that trend with an unemployment rate hovering around 10 percent and the Democrats should be sitting pretty.

They're not.

Democratic Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt predicts his party will gain 10 to 15 House seats this year. But he says it would be twice that number if the parties had equal financial resouces.

Take Social Security. The Democrats owned that issue at first. Polls showed the party had succeeded in portraying President Reagan and congressional Republicans as advocates of cutting benefits.

Then came a $1 million GOP midsummer television advertising campaign in which an actor playing an elderly postman told viewers the president had fought to save a July 1 cost-of-living increase in Social Security. Democrats protested that Reagan had done no such thing — and they were right.

NONETHELESS, SOURCES in both parties, including Manatt, say the Republican ads were followed by a 15 percent shift in polls that began to find the GOP favored by Americans concerned about Social Security.

The Republicans are likely to spend an additional $6 million to $10 million in national advertising between now and Election Day. For the Democrats the figure will be $2 million in carefully spotted regional television advertising. The Democrats can't afford time on national networks.

Nearly every Republican Senate candidate will get the legal maximum contribution from the party campaign committee. Under a formula based on population, those contributions of cash and services range from $1.3 million for candidates in California to $91,260 for those from the least populous states such as Utah, Vermont and Nevada. Few Democratic candidates for the Senate will get close to the maximum from their party.

A similar situation is true for House candidates. Republicans who need the money, either to help ward off a challenge or to run against a vulnerable Democrat, will get it. Democrats are targeting their limited funds for what they consider the 80 most important races.

"In the next few weeks we will be spending record amounts of money in individual races to assist our candidates," Rep. Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan, chairman of the Republican House Campaign committee, told a fund-raising breakfast in Virginia recently.

While these may be tough economic times for many industries, the political fund-raising business is booming.

"August usually is a terrible month for fund raising," Phil Smith, finance director of the Republican National Committee, said in a recent interview. "August was just super for us."

NO ONE AT the Democratic National Committee is calling August "super," but the party is doing far better than in 1980.

The total raised for this year's congressional elections easily will top $500 million and could approach the more than $700 million raised two years ago in a national election that included a presidential race.

Money long has been a part of getting elected — the first federal laws dealing with campaign contributions were passed in the 19th century — but campaigning has become a money-intensive business in the modern era.

Enormous sums are spent to buy television advertising time, to saturate areas with mailed brochures, to raise still more money. It is money — early and late, in donations small and large — that determines whether candidates can make their appeal to voters.

"I don't think money wins elections," says Ann Lewis, political director of the Democratic National Committee. "An election is not a stock option fight where the number of votes you get is directly proportional to the number of dollars your spend. But people cannot make a choice if they don't know they have a choice and there is a threshold you need for people to know they have a choice."

Cabinet members on campaign trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — In less than 40 hours, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige sped through five states and three time zones, covered 4,600 miles, spoke at 15 political fundraisers, shook hundreds of hands and gave news interviews almost everywhere his chartered jet touched down.

Drew Lewis, secretary of transportation, made 13 speeches on a three-day swing through California, and is booked for upwards of 40 more political events across the country before the Nov. 2 election.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan has 20 out-of-town fundraisers in his schedule book. Ambassador Bill Brock, the administration's trade negotiator, will be on the road at least 17 days for more than two dozen political appearances.

The roving Cabinet members are among the administration's top stars on the campaign circuit this fall — traveling salesmen for President Reagan's policies and drumbeaters for Republican candidates trying to raise money and attract votes.

From $15-a-person barbeques in California to $1,000-a-head breakfast fundraisers in Washington, travel-weary Cabinet members are turning up in big cities and small towns to influence races the White House wants to win.

IN AN ELECTION year, politicking by Cabinet members is commonplace. By tradition, exceptions to the rule are the secretaries of state and defense, the director of the CIA and the attorney general.

But this year, even White House chief of staff James A. Baker III and counselor Edwin Meese III are making some political trips, perhaps a dozen in all.

All the appearances are coordinated by the Republican National Committee and the White House political office headed by Edward J. Rollins. Travel expenses are paid by the candidate or the RNC.

However, the costs are reduced when an out-of-town political appearance is scheduled in tandem with an "official" appearance before a "nonpolitical" group. Then taxpayers pay for the travel, and the politician is charged only for local expenses.

When they leave Washington, the officials are armed with frequently updated briefing papers spelling out Reagan's policies on foreign and domestic issues.

While Reagan is the Republicans' top draw, the White House is parceling out his time sparingly.

"I THINK ALL of us are aware of the dangers of him being a political huckster," said one White House official, speaking privately.

"He's much more effective as president, in a presidential setting, talking in a presidential way, rather than going out barnstorming," the official said. "We're very much aware of the power that this man has on television, so he can convey a lot of messages across the country through television."

From Labor Day to Election Day, the schedule calls for the president to spend 14 days on the road, generally in areas where Reagan is popular and where the White House believes his appearance could make a crucial difference.

"If you go out there and just hit the road for 14 days in a row, you tend to be a whirlwind of activity and you do very little for the candidate," the official said. "You really don't leave much for the candidate. Our feeling is to select the spots carefully."

"You have to safeguard the coin of the realm," the official added. "You can't just expend him on anything."

On the other side of the coin, Vice President George Bush is campaigning almost non-stop — far busier than anyone else in the administration.

BE ELECTION Day, Bush will have attended nearly 400 political events and covered 160,000 miles in 10 months of political travel — the bulk of it coming after Labor Day, according to his staff's calculations.

Coincidentally, Bush's travels are helping him amass a lot of political IOUs that would prove helpful if he makes another bid for the presidency.

Cabinet members' appearances generally are tailored to specific audiences. For example, Agriculture Secretary John Block is popular in rural areas and the Midwest; Regan, Baldridge and Brock are big with business and trade groups; Interior Secretary James Watt is a good drawing card in the West and with conservative groups.

Speaking privately, a senior White House official said, "I don't want to denigrate any Cabinet officers but there are some Cabinet officers who tend get fewer invitations."

At the head of that list is Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, twice investigated and twice cleared of allegations he once associated with mobsters. He did not even accompany Reagan on a campaign trip to New Jersey, Donovan's homestate.

Others include Housing and Urban Development chief Samuel Pierce, Education Secretary Terrell Bell, Energy Secretary James Edwards and Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweicker.

The demand for Budget Director David Stockman is "not as intensive as it once was," the senior White House official said. However, he added, "There is a lot of curiosity about David Stockman."

Many Cabinet members are keeping the last week of October open on their calendar, awaiting last-minute political assignments.

Judge indicted in drug case

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — A year-long drug investigation by Louisiana police, U.S. Customs and the FBI has culminated in the indictment of a former Florida Supreme Court justice and six other men, officials say.

David L. McCain, 51, and the other men — all from Louisiana and Mississippi — tried unsuccessfully to smuggle marijuana from Colombia and Panama to Louisiana, law enforcement agents allege.

McCain, who was forced to resign from the state Supreme Court in 1975 and was disbarred three years later, was released on $200,000 bond Saturday night, some 7½ hours after he was arrested at his Fort Pierce home and charged with conspiracy to import and distribute more than five tons of marijuana.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., policemen measure the exterior of a house on Schoolhouse Lane Sunday during the investigation in the aftermath of a multiple slaying. Suspect George Banks allegedly shot and killed five children and four adults in the house; a total of seven children and six adults died in the incident.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — A prison guard is in custody today after a shooting rampage that left 13 people dead — five of them his own sons and daughters — was "worried about his children" and had been involved in a custody dispute, neighbors said.

George Banks, 40, has been charged in five of Saturday's 13 slayings, with more charges to be filed Tuesday or Wednesday, said Robert Gillespie, Luzerne County district attorney.

The victims included seven children — five of them Banks' — and six adults, including four women who gave birth to his children and a man who apparently was a bystander. Another bystander was critically wounded, police said.

Gillespie refused Sunday to suggest a motive, saying he was barred from discussing "evidentiary" matters.

NEIGHBORS SAID Banks may have been driven by a custody battle with Sharon Mazzillo, 24, the mother of their 5-year-old child, Kissmayou Banks, who was born out of wedlock. Both Ms. Mazzillo and the child were killed.

Elaine Monahan, who lived across the street from Banks' two-story frame house, said he had asked her to appear as a witness in the custody dispute. "To fight for his kids like that and then do something like this," she added grimly.

Banks' mother, Mary Yelland, said her son began having "problems" three weeks ago at his job. "They told him to come home and see a psychiatrist," Mrs. Yelland said. She did not know if her son had seen a doctor and did not specify the problems.

Mrs. Yelland refused further comment. On Sunday she tacked to her door a hand-printed sign reading: "Reporters, you are not welcome! Please have the respect enough not to knock, and leave me spend Sunday in prayer."

"He had problems he could not deal with any more," said Robert Brunson, 36, who helped talk Banks into surrendering. "He was worried about his children. He said he tried to get help, but there was none available. He said it was a good day to die. He wanted to die."

BANKS IS black and the women who had his children were white. After he moved into this predominantly white neighborhood four years ago, his porch was firebombed, neighbors said. But they stressed that other local property was damaged at that time and many neighbors did not think the firebombing was racially motivated.

Banks was held alone at the Luzerne County Prison. Two guards were posted at his cell door and he was under closed-circuit television surveillance.

"He said he was going to kill himself and nobody was going to stop him," said Margie Collins, a prison nurse who examined Banks after he surrendered. She said Banks told her he had been drinking a fifth of gin a day for four days.

Banks had been on extended leave since Sept. 6 from his job as a tower guard at a state prison near Harrisburg, where he has worked since 1980 after serving seven years for an armed robbery conviction.

Three of the dead women and five of the slain children lived in a house on Schoolhouse Lane where Banks stayed on weekends when he worked in Harrisburg. Four more people, including two children, were killed at a mobile home in Jenkins Township that Ms. Mazzillo shared with her parents.

BANKS, ARMED with an AR-15, the civilian version of the Army's M-16 automatic rifle, surrendered from the barricaded vacant home of a friend late Saturday morning. "He had at least 90 rounds of ammunition on him and there was more ammunition in the house," Gillespie said.

Gillespie tricked Banks into surrendering by having local radio stations broadcast false reports that the children had survived.

"They lied to me. They lied to me," Banks told Ms. Collins later at the jail. "I never would have come out of there if I knew my kids were dead."

The two passers-by were identified as Ray Hall, 24, who was killed near the Schoolhouse Lane home, and a companion James Olsen, 22, who was hospitalized in critical condition.

Loeb's newspaper not lost any of its power

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — Some observers thought The Union Leader — the newspaper that once called President Ford "a jerk" — would "disappear into the woodwork" after its fiery archconservative publisher, William Loeb, died one year ago.

Loeb's widow is doing things a little differently, but she says the paper has not lost any of its power.

During 33 years of publishing New Hampshire's only statewide daily newspaper, Loeb labeled President Eisenhower "Dopey Dwight" and Sen. Margaret Chase Smith "Moscow Maggie." Loeb also called President Kennedy "the No. 1 liar in the United States."

"Obviously, when I write an editorial, I'm not going to pretend I'm someone else and write an editorial like Bill Loeb would," says Loeb's widow, Nackey Scripps Loeb. "If you try to be somebody who you aren't, then you're in trouble."

Loeb's front-page diatribes, read over breakfast tables across New Hampshire, terrorized foes and helped shape the political destinies of his friends — and of the nation, because New Hampshire holds the nation's first primary election during presidential years.

The Union Leader was credited with making the career of right-wing former Gov. Meldrim Thomson and breaking the aspirations of Edmund Muskie, who was favored in the early going for the Democratic presidential nomination of 1972.

Loeb, who lived in Massachusetts, died of cancer at age 75 on Sept. 13, 1981, and responsibility fell to his wife of 29 years. She says the newspaper is still powerful.

"Politicians still worry about us," said Mrs. Loeb, 58, who was Loeb's third wife.

A Manchester-based polling organization, Blake and Dickinson, agrees the newspaper's clout is intact.

"Of all likely voters in New Hampshire, 55 percent say that the Manchester Union Leader is still a force in New Hampshire politics following the death of William Loeb, 25 percent do not feel that it is a force and 20 percent are undecided," the pollsters said.

Circulation has increased by about 2,000 newspapers daily and 4,000 copies on Sunday since Loeb's death. According to newspaper figures, it sells about 67,000 daily and 74,500 Sunday copies to the 920,000 residents of New Hampshire.

Robert Craig, a political science professor at the University of New Hampshire, said the Union Leader's overall influence "remains pretty much the way it was."

Perhaps Loeb was best known for undermining Muskie's 1972 campaign. The newspaper printed a letter, later dubbed the "Canuck" letter, portraying Muskie as insensitive to people of French-Canadian descent. Then the paper reprinted a Newsweek article uncomplimentary to Muskie's wife.

Muskie, then a U.S. Senator from Maine, responded with a rally outside the Union Leader at which he appeared to cry as he stood on a flatbed truck on a blustery winter day. More editorials followed, and Muskie won only a narrow victory in his own backyard. He eventually was forced to abandon his quest for the nomination.

Since Loeb's death, Craig said, the Union Leader has lost its "pointedness" in attacks on politicians.

"Perhaps where Bill would attack something as a personal battle, we can attack it as a situation where we can dig up and point out certain things about somebody or something that is wrong," says Mrs. Loeb, a granddaughter of E.W. Scripps, founder of the Scripps-Howard newspaper group.

One example of the newspaper's new style: A front page editorial on GOP gubernatorial hopefuls avoided any name-calling in criticizing candidate Louis D'Allesandro. But it did point out that he was the only candidate who didn't "take the pledge" to veto any income or sales tax proposals.

D'Allesandro, once the frontrunner, finished third in the GOP primary Sept. 14, but says, "I don't think anyone can say it's the same paper as it was when William Loeb was there...the venom is not quite as venomous."

Gov. Hugh Gallen, another frequent target of the pens of William and Mrs. Loeb, declined to comment on any recent changes at the paper. He said he still doesn't read New Hampshire's largest daily.

"I think we have ridden through that period that a lot of people thought that without Bill Loeb the paper would disappear into the woodwork," Mrs. Loeb said. "I don't think it has."

Body found of man missing since Christmas

BUENA VISTA, Colo. (AP) — The remains of a Dallas man missing since a plane crash last Christmas Eve were retrieved Sunday from rugged terrain in the Collegiate Peaks Wilderness southwest of here, authorities said.

A spokesman for the Civil Air Patrol said the bones and clothing of 42-year-old Gary Meeks were found by accident Saturday while CAP members were conducting a practice search near Cottonwood Lake about 30 miles southwest of Buena Vista.

JOIN AREA RANCHERS FOR A RANGE MANAGEMENT FIELD DAY

See how local ranchers are winning the battle against sand shinnery.

Area ranchers will have the opportunity to learn about the latest range management practices at a field day and tour. Control of sand shinnery oak and noxious weeds with Elanco's pelleted herbicide Graslan will be presented by Dr. Russ Pettit of Texas Tech University, and Allen McGinty, Extension Range Specialist from Fort Stockton, Texas. A following discussion on cell grazing systems will be conducted by J. R. Bell, Area Range Specialist.

If you would like to see how these range management practices are working for local ranchers in your area then join us on a tour of Graslan treated range. Bring a friend, too.

Money supply didn't grow

NEW YORK (AP) — After seven straight week's of growth, the nation's money supply has declined, the Federal Reserve Board reports.

But M1, a measure of funds readily available for spending, is still higher than the central bank would like, and economists said a $1.3 billion decline in the week ended Sept. 15, would have little effect on interest rates.

The central bank would like M1 to grow between 2.5 percent to 5.5 percent this year, a rate it believes is high enough to revive the economy without rekindling inflation.

When money supply growth is too fast, traders worry the Fed will adopt a more restrictive policy, forcing interest rates higher, to curb the expansion of M1. M1 includes cash in circulation, non-bank travelers checks and checking-type deposits in banking institutions.

In a companion report Friday, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said lending activity surged last week, with commercial and industrial loans on the books of the major banks rising $2.71 billion, more than four times the increase a week earlier.

Senate approves bank bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has approved major banking legislation that would help ailing financial institutions and give new powers to savings and loan associations so they could operate more like banks.

The measure also would end the interest rate advantage on small deposits that savings and loans enjoy over banks. And it would direct federal regulators to let banks and savings and loans offer a new account directly competitive with the high-paying money market mutual funds.

The bill, which was approved on a voice vote Friday, now goes to a conference committee with the House, which has agreed to a much-narrower measure limited to helping out weak institutions.

Passage of the Senate measure was hailed by the S&L industry, which has worked hard for some sort of an aid package for its institutions. The industry, originally set up as a specialized lender for home building, has been battered by high interest rates and, as a result, suffering its worst financial crisis since the Depression.

The American Bankers Association's Gerald Lowrie said it was "desirable that the Senate has moved ahead with this bill." The bankers, though, still have reservations about a provision that would generally bar bank holding companies from offering insurance, he said.

New budget deficit record set

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in history, the federal budget deficit has soared past the $100 billion mark in a single year, hitting $108.95 billion with a month still to go in fiscal 1982, the Treasury Department reports.

In the newest rush of red ink, the report said, the government spent $14.5 billion more than it took in during August.

If the government should take in $9 billion more than it spends in September, the last month in the fiscal year, the 1982 deficit could still slip under $100 billion. But the final figure now seems certain to dwarf the 1976 red-ink record of $66.4 billion.

The Reagan administration originally forecast a budget shortfall of $42.5 billion for fiscal 1982. But as the recession deepened, cutting into tax revenue and increasing government unemployment payments, the estimates were gradually raised to $108.9 billion.

The government recorded a $6.9 billion surplus last September — a month in which heavy corporate tax payments usually arrive — holding the 1981 deficit to $57.9 billion. But with corporate profits way down this year, no one is predicting a huge September tax total.

The administration is now forecasting a shortfall of $115 billion for fiscal 1983, which begins Oct. 1, and red ink of $92.6 billion for fiscal 1984 — the year for which President Reagan originally pledged a balanced budget. Congressional and private economists' deficit estimates are even higher.

Woolworth pulling in horns

NEW YORK (AP) — F.W. Woolworth Co. says it will close its 336 Woolco discount stores in the United States and lay off about 25,000 workers next year.

Woolworth, the nation's fourth-largest retailer but which has lagged behind the performance of its competitors in in recent years, cited Woolco's persistent losses for the decision to close.

The move was a "very dramatic change in direction," said Edward Weller, a retail analyst with the Wall Street firm E.F. Hutton. He said the company had invested "a lot of time, effort, money and people in trying to turn the division around."

Woolco stores are primarily in the south and central United States. Woolworth said the successful Canadian Woolco chain will not be affected.

Edward F. Gibbons, chairman of Woolworth, said Friday the company would concentrate its resources on its more productive stores, including its 1,300 Woolworth general merchandise stores; Kinney Shoes, the nation's largest shoestore chain; and several specialty apparel chains.

Massey overhauls debts

TORONTO (AP) — A debt-restructuring proposal for struggling Massey-Ferguson Ltd. could be announced early this week after Massey and its major international lenders ended three days of meetings, a Massey spokesman says.

The meetings "went according to plans" and it appears the two sides reached an agreement on proposals to help the company cope with its huge debt, spokesman Peter Lowry said Friday.

It is believed Massey is seeking to persuade its creditors to accept more common or preferred shares of Massey stock in exchange for forgiveness on part of its $1.27 billion (U.S.) debt.

The meetings, which began Wednesday, were a follow-up to talks held two months ago in London, where Massey proposed a series of plans for restructuring its debt. A major equity refinancing, partially guaranteed by the Ontario and Canadian governments, was completed in 1981.

Massey has been hit hard by high interest rates and low commodity prices, which have caused a depression in the worldwide farm-equipment market.

The company reported a loss of $87 million in its third fiscal quarter ended July 31 and a loss of $186.2 million for the first nine months of its accounting year.

Ford chief against content bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of Ford Motor Co. says a "local content" requirement for cars imported into the United States will not create any jobs right away, contrary what its backers assert.

And such a requirement appeared further away from enactment than ever. The chairman of the Ways and Means trade subcommittee, Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., scheduled more hearings on the bill through this Thursday, leaving little time for further action in the current session.

Ford Chairman Philip Caldwell said Friday he thought the depressed U.S. auto industry would be better served by seeking a continuation of the present "voluntary" quotas on Japanese cars, saving the U.S. manufacturing requirement as a trump card.

"A serious shortcoming of this local content legislation is its lack of immediate job creation," Caldwell said.

The United Auto Workers union has mounted a major push for the bill, which is supported by the Democratic leadership of the House.

Oil industry's role in politics criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional candidates have received $4.3 million so far from oil and gas companies for the 1982 elections, according to a consumer coalition critical of the oil industry's political influence.

The Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, updating an earlier study, said Sunday that 196 political action committees (PACs) with oil and gas interests gave the money to the congressional candidates from Jan. 1, 1981, to July 31, 1982.

It was the largest political contribution from a single industry.

"The message to members of Congress and would-be candidates is as powerful as it is obvious — the oil industry is ready and able to spend millions of dollars to protect its friends and defeat its enemies," said Energy Coalition Executive Director Robert M. Brandon.

Brandon said the growing number of oil and gas PACs is "making a mockery" of campaign spending limits. "With nearly 200 PACs, the oil industry is able to channel almost any amount of contributions into the coffers of its supporters," he said.

Political action committees are sponsored by businesses, unions and associations which solicit funds from their executives or members for the purpose of supporting political candidates. Federal law permits a PAC to give candidates $5,000 in their primary campaign and another $5,000 for the general election. The average congressional candidate gets 40 percent of his money from PACs.

The American Petroleum Institute said oil and gas company PACs were exercising their right to participate in the political process.

The coalition study said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, received the largest amount of oil and gas money of any Senate candidate — $125,158. Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, led House candidates with $82,600.

While both are Democrats, the survey said the oil and gas PACs had contributed three times more money to Republicans than Democrats.

In addition to Bentsen, eight other Senate candidates have received over $50,000, the survey said. They are Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, $107,296; Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., $88,579; Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., $78,934; Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., $73,100; Rep. Jim Santini, who lost a bid for the Democratic Senate nomination in Nevada, $70,614; Rep. Cleve Benedict, Republican Senate candidate in West Virginia, $66,531; Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., $57,500; and Pete Wilson, Republican Senate canidate in California, $57,201.

Following Gramm in the House were Liles Williams, a Republican candidate in Mississippi, $37,987; and Reps. Jim Jones, D-Okla., $33,150; Robert Michel, R-Ill., $32,202; John Rousselot, R-Calif., $29,525; Clint Roberts, R-S.D., $29,100; Jack Fields, R-Texas, $29,050; Jim Coyne, R-Pa., $28,675.

Jack Martin, Bentsen's state campaign director, said Bentsen was happy to lead all candidates in contributions since "oil and gas is a vital part of our state."

America tries to cope with first NFLless Sunday

By The Associated Press

While many football addicts across the United States are suffering withdrawal symptoms, other fans are finding ways to relax during the first interruption of the National Football League schedule in 63 years.

"I want my Sunday football," moaned William Dooland, an Oakland, Calif., airport ticket agent. "I don't care how narrow-minded that sounds. Sunday is my day to relax after a long week. I relax by watching NFL football. I don't like baseball ... I don't like college football ... Canadian football ... reruns ... or Shirley Temple movies. I like live NFL football."

"You go two weeks, just get involved in the football season and they cut you off," said Rick Wright, a University of Puget Sound student in Tacoma, Wash., referring to the NFL players' strike that started last week after each team had played two games. "It's very addictive."

Television on Sunday offered Canadian pro football, baseball games involving pennant races and a rerun of last January's Super Bowl. But this didn't appease some of the hard-core NFL fans.

"I like to sit in front of my TV set with a 12-pack of beer and watch the games with my friends," said Janet Divers, a legal secretary from Fremont, Calif. "But I'm not going to watch that Canadian junk. I keep up with all the NFL players, but Canadian football just isn't the same. It's Greek to me."

Some people on the other end of the spectrum — the football widows and the others who would just as soon see the NFL go on strike and stay on strike — were delighted.

"Football is such a bore, especially on TV," said Christine Hansell, a housewife from Lafayette, Wash. "Now we can go bike riding and have a nice family picnic. I hope the players go on strike the whole season. I know I won't miss the games. Good riddance, I say."

In Pittsburgh, a radio station sponsored a tailgate party similar to the ones that are common outside NFL stadiums before games. Only this one was held outside empty Three Rivers Stadium.

Two amplified bands took turns serenading the fans, some of whom tossed footballs around while swilling beer and singing the Pittsburgh Steelers fight song.

"The fans have the attitude that just because there's no game doesn't mean they can't have fun," said former Steelers running back Rocky Bleier.

Michaels and his wife, Betty, drove about 100 miles from their home on New York's Long Island to New Haven, Conn., to watch son Mark, a freshman, play football for Yale on Saturday.

"This is the first fall weekend in 32 years, gee, 40 years if you consider high school and college, that I'm not directly involved in a game, either playing or preparing as coach," said Michaels, who said he planned to visit his mother and friends Sunday in Swoyerville, Pa.

San Francisco 49ers Coach Bill Walsh saw his son Craig play for Pomona College Saturday and Miami Coach Don Shula watched his son Mike Shula play a prep game Friday night.

Many fans apparently took their own footballs to parks and yards Sunday as St. John's Hospital in Cleveland had 11 people show up in the emergency room with injuries from playing football.

"We saw injured knees, broken wrists, broken clavicles and broken ribs," said Peggy Drew, head nurse of the emergency room. "One man was knocked out; it wasn't a supervised game and he wasn't wearing a helmet. She said the ages of the injured ranged from 14 to 22.

"Most of them said that if the (Cleveland) Browns had been on TV or in town they would've been watching, but since they weren't, the fans decided to try it on their own," she said.

Lee Corey, owner of the Studio East lounge in Kanawha City, W Va., said he would have his "big screen" television on tonight, just as he does on normal Monday nights during the football season, "but I would say that there won't be that much interest. I think my customers won't care about Canadian football."

Baltimore's Gary Roenicke and Milwaukee's Jim Gantner look to first after Roenicke was forced out at second during Sunday game. With the NFL players on strike, America's eyes were also turning back to baseball. Baltimore won this game to stay in the AL East race.

Los Angeles slide continues

Giants, Braves are licking at Dodgers' heels

By The Associated Press

The slumping Los Angeles Dodgers still have the San Francisco Giants and Atlanta Braves right where they want them — in second place and one game back in the National League West.

The Dodgers retained a one-game lead despite a 3-2 loss Sunday to the fast-closing Giants, who moved into a second-place tie with Atlanta, which dropped a 3-2 decision to San Diego. The loss was the fifth straight for the Dodgers and fourth in a row by one run.

All three teams have seven games remaining in the regular season with the Braves and Giants meeting tonight and Tuesday in San Francisco, while the Dodgers open a two-game series at home with Cincinnati tonight.

"We're still in first place, it's that simple," said Los Angeles Manager Tommy Lasorda. "I'd rather be where we are than where they are."

Burt Hooton, 3-7, who gave up all three San Francisco runs in the fifth inning on Jack Clark's RBI double and Darrell Evans' two-run homer, said the Los Angeles is still playing well despite the losing streak.

"We haven't been blown out of any of the games. I'm still optimistic," Hooton said.

Teammate Dusty Baker echoed the thought.

"The law of averages ought to be on our side now," said Baker. "We've been in every game and just haven't gotten the right breaks."

Al Holland, who picked up his fifth save with 32-3 innings of one-hit ball in relief of starter Fred Breining, disputed Lasorda's comment.

"I think we're in the driver's seat now because we're playing the best baseball in the major leagues," said Holland after the Giants posted their 10th win in 12 games. "I hope this series took something out of the Dodgers."

The Dodgers scored runs in the sixth and seventh innings on Steve Garvey's RBI single and Baker's run-scoring groundout.

Padres 3, Braves 2

Joe Pittman singled home the tie-breaking run with one out in the ninth inning as San Diego trimmed Atlanta. Tony Gwynn started the rally with a walk, was sacrificed to second and scored on Pittman's single off Rick Camp.

Gary Lucas, 1-10, got the win with three innings of one-hit relief.

Atlanta scored on Chris Chambliss' home run in the second inning and Terry Harper's sacrifice fly in the sixth.

San Diego took a 1-0 lead in the second when Harper dropped Gene Richards' fly ball down the left-field line and saw it fall out of his glove over the fence in foul territory for a four-base error.

"They're all important now because we've got to win them all," said Manager Joe Torre of the Braves upcoming series with the Giants. "I'm pleased we're going out there after a good effort. We just lost to a good pitcher."

Cubs 6, Cardinals 1

St.Louis had its magic number for clinching the NL East reduced to two despite losing to Chicago, thanks to the Mets' win over second-place Philadelphia.

St.Louis, which has six games remaining, needs any combination of wins or Philadelphia losses totaling two to nail down its first title since 1968.

Ferguson Jenkins, 13-15, pitched seven-hit ball for eight innings to record his 277th career triumph and capped Chicago's two-out, five-run first inning outburst with a two-run double. Jay Johnstone also had a two-run double in the inning and Junior Kennedy added an RBI single off Eric Rasmussen, 0-2.

"It's bad in the fact that we could have clinched a tie," said St. Louis skipper Whitey Herzog. "But it's good in the fact that we didn't lose any ground — and that it's another day gone."

Mets 6, Phillies 4

New York dampened Philadelphia's pennant hopes for the second straight day as Mookie Wilson delivered a two-run, pinch-hit single to cap a three-run seventh-inning.

Philadelphia took a 2-0 lead in the first on a bases-loaded groundout by George Vukovich and bases-loaded walk to Luis Aguayo. The Mets tied the game in the second on Hubie Brooks' RBI double and Brian Giles' run-scoring RBI single. The Phillies made it 4-2 in the fourth on Pete Rose's bases-loaded walk and Gary Matthews' sacrifice fly. Brooks' second home run of the year in the bottom of the fourth made it 4-3.

Pirates 3, Expos 0

Pittsburgh's Larry McWilliams fired a five-hitter, Jason Thompson cracked a two-run homer and Jim Morrison added a solo shot as Montreal's chances of repeating as NL East champions were just about extinguished.

McWilliams, 8-8, walked two and struck out five in tossing his second shutout of the season.

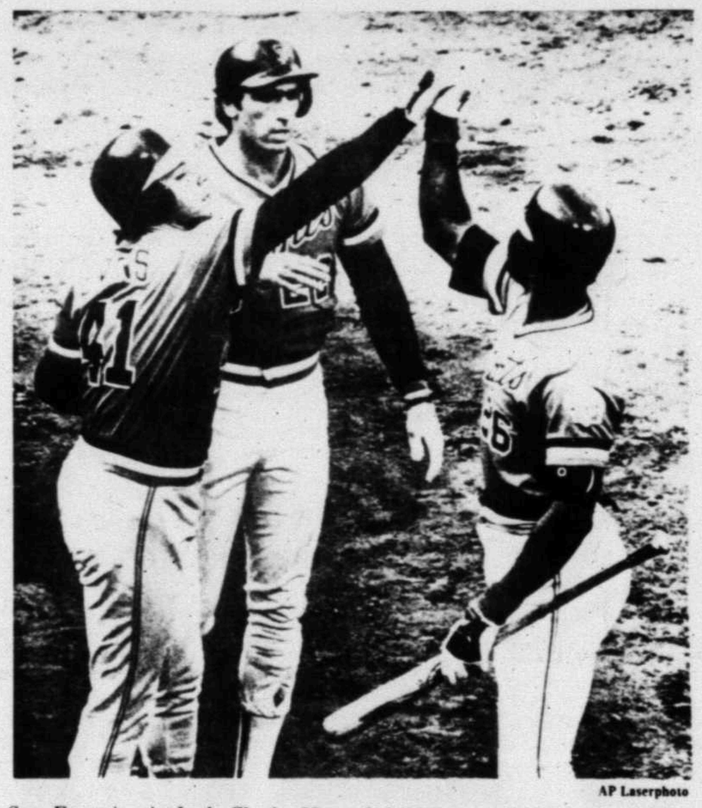
Astros 4, Reds 0

Nolan Ryan, 16-11, struck out 11, marking the 144th time in his career the right-hander has fanned 10 or more batters in a game, and combined with Bert Roberge on a six-hitter as Houston beat Cincinnati. The Astros scored on two-run doubles by Art Howe and Scott Loucks.



AP Laserphoto

San Francisco's Jack Clark (22) and Jeff Leonard (26) congratulate teammate Darrell Evans after his three-run homer defeated Los Angeles, 3-2, to move the Giants to within one-game of the Dodgers.

Baltimore pressures Brewers

John Shelby nails Bob Skube in rookie battle

By The Associated Press

The critical moment of the most crucial game in the American League East pennant race this year came down to a battle of two rookies.

With one out in the eighth inning Sunday, Milwaukee's Bob Skube was perched on third base with his AL East-leading Brewers trailing second-place Baltimore 3-2.

Cecil Cooper then lifted a soft fly to center field, where Orioles rookie John Shelby caught the ball as Skube tagged up.

Shelby's throw home took one hop to Orioles catcher Rick Dempsey, who made the tag just in time to complete the double play and end Milwaukee's threat. Baltimore added two insurance runs in the ninth for a 5-2 victory, which cut Milwaukee's lead to just two games over the Orioles.

Each team has seven games left, and the Brewers and Orioles end the season with a four-game series in Baltimore.

"I knew Shelby had a good arm, and I knew we had a chance once I saw him (Skube) coming in," Dempsey said.

Orioles starter Dennis Martinez, 15-12, said "that was the play of the game. If they tied the game, they might feel completely different."

Skube, a pinch-hitter whose single had set up a Milwaukee run in the eighth, said he gave it his best shot.

"My instructions were to go and I went," he said. "I got a real good jump. If the throw is off six inches one way or the other, I'm safe."

Eddie Murray drilled his 31st homer and added a sacrifice fly, while Milwaukee's Gorman Thomas belted his 39th homer, tops in the majors.

Rangers 7, Angels 5

Larry Parrish hit a three-run homer, capping a four-run first inning to highlight the Texas victory.

California remained 3½ games ahead of Kansas City in the AL West. Any combination of California victories and Kansas City losses totalling four will give the Angels the pennant.

Reggie Jackson hit his 36th homer, while Fred Lynn and Doug DeCinces also homered for California.

A's 5, Royals 4

Mike Heath's run-scoring single with two out in the eighth capped an Oakland comeback and sent Kansas City to its ninth loss in 10 games.

Jerry Martin and U.L. Washington had homered as the Royals took a 4-0 lead, but Oakland rallied as Dwayne Murphy and Tony Armas hit solo homers and Mike Davis belted a two-run double.

Red Sox 5, Yankees 2

Jim Rice's two-out triple gave Boston a 3-2 lead in the seventh inning. The Red Sox added two insurance runs in the eighth. Dwight Evans smacked his 28th homer, a two-run shot, off loser Ron Guidry, 14-8.

Bob Stanley, 12-7, got the victory after bailing out starter Mike Torrez in the sixth.

Twins 2, White Sox 1

Bobby Castillo tossed a five-hitter and Gary Gaetti hit his 25th homer for the Twins. Castillo, 12-11, won his fourth straight game while beating Richard Dotson, 11-14.

Ron Washington tripled and added three singles for Minnesota.

Indians 4, Tigers 3

Jack Perconte had an RBI double as the Indians capitalized on some shabby Detroit fielding. Two of Cleveland's runs scored on Tigers errors.

Len Barker upped his record to 14-11 despite yielding a two-run homer to Alan Trammell.

Blue Jays 6, Mariners 2

Dave Stieb, 16-14, bested Seattle's Floyd Bannister, 12-12, who was hurt by three unearned runs.

Buck Martinez homered and drove in two runs for Toronto. Bannister struck out eight, running his AL-leading total to 203.

Talks fail to bring strike settlement

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Players union leaders have differing opinions about whether management's latest guarantee of $1.6 billion over a five-year period could help settle the National Football League strike.

Jack Donlan, chief negotiator for the NFL owners, said after a six-hour negotiating session Sunday that the Management Council had offered to distribute, in the form of bonuses, the difference between $1.6 billion and the amount of money teams spend in salaries in the next five years.

In return, the players union would drop its wage-scale demand and return to the system of individually negotiated contracts.

"That sounds more like what we were talking about," said Gene Upshaw, president of the players union, who nevertheless said the meetings — the first since talks broke off Sept.17 — were unfruitful.

"The session ended just as it started," Upshaw said. "There is no change in the owners' position in almost all the players demands."

Ed Garvey, the NFL Players Association's executive director, was unenthusiastic about Donlan's proposal.

"It's essentially a false guarantee," Garvey said. "We still don't know where the money is going to go and to suggest to an active player today that you're going to divide it up five years from today is ludicrous."

Garvey also suggested that the bonus money would be given to rookies to keep them from signing contracts with the new United States Football League.

"There is no new offer from the owners," Garvey added. "What they had on the table Sept. 8 is still there. I'm amazed that they wouldn't put something on the table that would entice the players to come back."

Garvey said he didn't believe owners would get serious until Oct. 6, after television money runs out.

"The networks have funded them for two weeks so they haven't felt the pinch yet," the union leader said. "When they see that nobody comes in, then maybe they'll get serious."

Donlan, however, believes Sunday's proposal was bona fide.

"We made a move today which we are very hopeful and very optimistic is going to end the dispute," he said. "We hope to be back negotiating early this week," probably in Washington.

Donlan said any of the $1.6 billion not spent on salaries would be "put in a kitty" and distributed according to a formula to all players active during the five-year term of the agreement.

He said this would solve the players' complaint that management would have an incentive to cut higher-priced veterans in favor of rookies.

Midland's Bobby Hillin to give up racing

Rookie Rahal captures title

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Bobby Rahal proved to himself and his colleagues on the Championship Auto Racing Teams circuit that he could win on a superspeedway.

Rahal, Rookie of the Year this year in the Indy cars, took his first CART oval track victory Sunday by pulling away from Mario Andretti to win the 150-mile Detroit News Grand Prix at Michigan International Speedway.

Rahal averaged 140.515 mph and pocketed $19,979 for the triumph. The victory also was worth another $50,000 for clinching second place in the overall CART points standings.

It was the second win this year for the 29-year-old from Columbus, Ohio. He won a 500-kilometer CART race in July on a twisting road course set up at a Cleveland airport.

"There were a lot of people who felt to win a road race for us was one thing, but to win on an oval was another matter," said Rahal, who graduated to the CART ranks this year after successes in road racing.

"I could have outhandled anybody, anywhere today," he said.

Actually, Rahal was fortunate the race was only 150 miles. A valve problem developed with just six laps remaining and "really made me paranoid. I wanted to go fast enough to coast the last two laps if we had to."

Rahal took the lead for good on the 50th lap around the two-mile Michigan oval when Mario Andretti pitted. Andretti, who was competing in the Las Vegas Grand Prix on Saturday and could not qualify, worked his way to the front after starting at the rear of the 26-car field.

Andretti was the only other driver on the lead lap with Rahal, who had been pulling away steadily to finish with a 13-second edge.

In related race action, Midland's Bobby Hillin, owner of the Longhorn Racing Team, announced his decision to try and sell his team. The Midland oilman said one of the reasons he is getting out of racing is because of the depressed oil business. Al Unser, Hillin's driver, is looking for another ride for next year. Longhorn begin Indy style racing under Hillin in 1977 at the Indy 500. The team never won a race, finishing 18th Sunday, but has consistently been in the top 10 this year. Unser was fifth at the Indy 500 this year and ninth last year while driving for Longhorn.

Nineteen of the 75 laps were run under yellow with A.J. Foyt and Kevin Cogan involved in the most serious accident.

Foyt and Cogan were battling for the lead in the ninth lap when the two collided. Foyt slammed into the wall as Cogan spun out. Foyt was taken to a hospital for X-rays to his left leg and was released after treatment for a bruise.

It was the third time in Foyt's last three starts at Michigan that he crashed and suffered injuries.

"The only thing that happened was I was out against the wall and then I went under him and all of a sudden he came down on me," Foyt said. "I was past him. I couldn't believe it when he came down on me like that."

Cogan, who was uninjured, insisted he had the lead going into the turn.

'Black Sunday' has thunderous impact on fans' social life

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Sports Writer

Pro football's "Black Sunday" — a thunderous impact, the heavy thinkers tell us, on social life in America.

If we listen to the sociologists, psychiatrists and press box chroniclers, this is a much-applied scene in millions of households because a lot of big guys with chicken wire masks and shoulder padding failed to show up on their picture tubes:

Scenario One

The old man rises early, grabs a morning paper off the front steps, turns first to the sports section, then to the TV pullout. The strike is still on. He grumbles and fixes his own breakfast while the rest of the family sleeps.

THE DAY unfolds slowly. He kicks the dog. He barks at his wife. He tells the kids to get lost. At noon, he fills a dish with pretzels, grabs a beer out of the fridge, and repairs to his Sabbath retreat — a reclining chair in the den in front of a 19-inch color screen.

At 1 p.m., he begins flicking with his remote control gadget. On one network, a lot of strange guys in football gear roll on to the field and start what looks like a football game.

As play progresses, he gets confused. Twelve men on a side and no penalty. And whatever happened to fourth down?

"Rouge, rouge — what in the devil is rouge?" he growls. "I might as well be in Bangkok."

He shifts to another station and ah, this is more like it. There's Joe Montana of the 49ers and Coach Bill Walsh walking the sidelines nervously. But it's old hat to the old man, an inveterate bettor — a replay of Super Bowl XVI, won by the 49ers. Jimmy the Greek still picked Cincinnati.

"Like eating warmed-over roast beef," he complains, irritatedly, getting up, banging up the TV set, stepping on the cat and yelling out to the missus: "I'm going to the pub and have a few with the boys. Expect me when you see me."

MOM SIGHS, somewhat with relief. "Hey, children," she calls out. "Have any of you seen my sewing basket?"

Scenario Two

Breakfast is ready when the head of the house arrives and sits down to bacon, eggs and hash browns with the wife and kids. They all dress and go to church.

Back home, the husband joins the family again in a light lunch, and then — as he has done hundreds of times in the past — settles down in the den, turning on the TV.

There's Canadian football on NBC. "Who cares," he fumes, flipping quickly to CBS where he sees highlights of the last Super Bowl. "Like a rerun without canned laughter," he says, shifting to a third network, where there's an old tape of Errol Garner tickling the piano keys.

"Say, honey, how would you and the kids like to go to a good movie and have dinner out?" he asks. Eyes glazed, he looks like a man who has just lost his mistress and gone back to his wife.

"Nicest day I've had in a long time," says the wife at the end of the evening. The kids are delighted, but Pop lets out a grunt.

THERE ARE other, less dramatic scenarios — the glumness of Las Vegas bookies over loss of $10 million weekly in pro football action; the guy, football or no football, who wouldn't miss his Sunday golf foursome for the world; and the tennis couple, who spend Sunday afternoon playing mixed doubles with friends.

There are those who can take it or leave it.

But many are pained — the heavy betters and the small bettors with their $1 and $5 office pools. And just plain fans hooked on the sport.

Pro football has become an addictive drug. Unlike baseball and college football, where interest is largely regionalized, and there is no scheduling consistency, pro football has a constancy and symmetry that can get in one's blood.

With weekly showings on all the big networks and with few personnel changes from year to year, it is easy to become acquainted with the teams and their personalities and to cultivate strong rooting interests.

THE GAME itself has an appeal that traces back to the gladiators and lions in ancient Rome. It is a spectacle with fanfare and trimmings, it is live, and like life itself, it represents conflict — push and pull, unpredictability, victory or defeat.

Moon makes most of American TV exposure

Edmonton, British Columbia capture CFL TV victories

By The Associated Press

With the National Football League embroiled in its first midseason players' strike, America's pro football-starved fans got a chance to see the four-time defending Grey Cup champion Edmonton Eskimos on U.S. network TV.

The British Columbia Lions loved the television exposure, but they were more pleased with the victory that moved them a step closer to a Canadian Football League playoff berth.

The Lions' 46-14 victory over the Toronto Argonauts was also televised nationally Sunday by NBC because of the NFL's player strike.

The Eskimos — and particularly quarterback Warren Moon — didn't blow that television opportunity Sunday. He led Edmonton to a 36-17 victory over the Calgary Stampeders.

Moon, 1978 Rose Bowl player of the game for University of Washington, completed 16 of 31 passes for 294 yards and two touchdowns.

"I'm glad my parents and all my friends back home got the opportunity to see us play," Moon said, "and find out what our game is all about.

"The only thing you can tell them is the score of games they don't see. You really can't tell them what our game is like. They have to see for themselves."

Quipped Denver-based Mike Haffner, one of NBC-TV's sideline announcers here: "There was no alternative programming ... If the American television football viewer didn't like our game, there were no other live one to turn to. It was either watch us or turn off his set."

Despite its four straight Grey Cup titles, Edmonton has been struggling this season. But the Eskimos' victory Sunday was their third in a row and pushed their record to 6-5 in a late-season push to reach the CFL playoffs.

The Stampeders, who beat the Eskimos earlier this month, dropped to 6-4-1.

The victory by the Lions lifted B.C. to a 7-3 mark in the Western Division, second behind Winnipeg as the CFL heads into the final six weeks of the 1982 season. Toronto, the East Division leader, dropped to 6-5-1.

"I'm sure the guys were glad people at home could see them, but it wasn't a major, major issue," said B.C. running back Larry Key, who gained 109 yards on 18 carries and scored two touchdowns. "Even if this game wasn't televised anywhere, we had to win."

"There wasn't any pressure on me personally," said Key, a five-year pro from Florida State, of the first regular-season live telecast of the CFL in the United States since the mid 1950s. "My game is to go out and give 100 percent every time."

Third-year quarterback Roy Dewalt directed the Lions' attack, throwing for two touchdowns and running for two more.

"It was great for us, it was great for Canadian football," Dewalt said. "It was great that mom saw me back in Houston, Texas.

The victory avenged B.C.'s early-season loss to Toronto as the Lions contained the Argo's "run-and-shoot" Toronto's air attack was held to 217 yards, while the Argos ran only five times, gaining just 17 yards.

"Last time we played Toronto, we overreacted on their motion," said B.C. Coach Vic Rapp.

Sheehan is surprise to herself

KENT, Wash. (AP) — Patty Sheehan said she didn't even notice that Joanne Carner had dropped her approach into the bunker on the final hole of the $175,000 Safeco Classic.

Sheehan had to ask her caddy where Carner's ball landed, and when she found out, she knocked her 62-yard wedge shot 30 feet short of the hole and two-putted for a one-stroke victory Sunday in the Ladies Professional Golf Association event at the Meridian Valley Country Club.

Carner, who was tied with Sheehan going into the last hole, blasted out of the bunker and missed a 20-foot par putt.

"I was really in my own little world," said Sheehan, who finished with a 70 for a four-round total of 276. "I didn't know what everyone else was doing. I just played my own game."

Carner, who closed with a 71, said she knew she was in trouble the moment she hit the 80-yard wedge shot.

"I just hit a bad shot," said Carner, who was tied with Sheehan entering the final round. "I was a little bit tired coming into the tournament."

Carner, a 43-year-old Kirland, Wash., native who now lives in Palm Beach, Fla., returned to the LPGA tour after a two-week fishing vacation in Alaska. She complained before the tournament of being out of shape and overweight.

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Young Bobby Clampett got the monkey off his back at the $250,000 Southern Open golf tournament, the same event that launched another great career 11 years ago for close friend Johnny Miller.

Clampett, clad in gray knickers, matching argyle socks and a white hat, shirt and shoes, earned his first Professional Golfers Association victory Sunday by battering the 6,791-yard Green Island Country Club course with a 64 and a 14-under-par 266 total to win $45,000.

Hale Irwin, who shattered the tournament record with a 61 Sunday, including nine birdies, slipped past third-round leader George Burns to take second-place money of $27,000 with a 268. Burns, with a finishing 68, was next at 269.

"I felt like I was going to win but I didn't know when," said the 22-year-old Clampett. "It's been a weight on my shoulders."

With the victory, Clampett, a slim, curly haired blond, now has earned $379,500 in only two years on the tour. He had come close twice, losing in playoffs during that time, and has six second places and three third places, including a third in the U.S. Open.

"It's a great feeling; it really is. I've felt like this before, but never as strong as now," said the smiling youngster.

"Johnny Miller called me twice while on the course," said Clampett of his friend who won his first ever PGA title here in 1971 and has since won 20 others and hauled in nearly $1.7 million on the tour.

He said Miller left messages of encouragement and wished him luck on the seventh and 10th holes.

"I then went out and birdied 7, 10, 11, 12 and 13. John's a very good friend. He's like a big brother," said Clampett.

"Some days are just your day and this was one for me," Clampett said of his round that included seven birdies and a lone bogey.

The birdies came on putts ranging from five feet and included long ones of 45, 25, 23 and 18 feet.

Irwin's 61, which included nine birdies and nine pars, bettered the previous tournament record of 62 set in 1971 by Bobby Mitchell.

Rookie Hal Sutton shot a 66 to finish alone in fourth place, while Andy Bean, also with a 66, was next at 271.

Grant notches No. 100

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Grant Teaff didn't seem all that thrilled over his 100th victory since taking over at Baylor. He should have been. When he assumed the reins at the Waco school, its situation was more desperate than things are now at Rice and TCU, both struggling to reclaim the elusive glories of the past.

The Bears had just suffered through an aggregate of three wins and 28 defeats under Bill Beall and even in John Bridgers' final two years, things were pretty dismal, 1-8-1 and 3-7. Baylor hadn't had anything to celebrate about since 1966 when the Bears were a modest 5-5.

TEAFF WON his 100th Saturday night in Lubbock, a 24-23 breath-snatcher, and yet, no handsprings.

When Grant became coach in 1972, many cynics felt, despite his winning personality, he was just another losing coach to be listed in the Baylor brochure as coach from 1972 to perhaps 1974, if he didn't see the handwriting on the wall before then and jump to something more secure.

Of course, things haven't been all that rosy. Overall, Grant's record is a modest 100-101-5, not something that will make Bear Bryant, Bo Schembechler or Barry Switzer feel insecure. So in a tenure that is now in its 11th year, Teaff has had some bad seasons and felt the pressure, but he has also had some winners and built a solid program that isn't wondering if its future might not be in the Lone Star or TIAA.

HE HAS WON two SWC championships, 1974 and 1980, a prize Baylor hadn't won in 50 years. Both teams went to the Cotton Bowl, something Baylor had never done before.

The win over Tech perhaps best illustrates the progress the Baylor program has made. Grant is 5-6 against the Raiders, but has won the last four in a row.

And while everybody is looking for Arkansas, Texas A&M and SMU to battle it out for the SWC title, Baylor is gradually looking more and more like a possibility as a darkhorse threat along with Texas.

Grant feels he has the type back who could win some big games in Ralph Anderson. Anderson stepped for 109 yards against Tech and presents a threat as a receiver and passer as well. "I've had some No. 1 draft choices in my time and Anderson is as good as any of them. He has all the ingredients. I thought he was sensational tonight against Tech," says Teaff.

MEANWHILE, TEXAS Tech may not be as bad as every one feared before the season's start. Coach Jerry Moore's primary problem will be combating the demoralizing effect of losses-that-could-have-been-wins such as Saturday's. The Raiders played so hard and came so close. Their performance had to be a plus in view of the oddsmakers appraisal of the game and Tech's dismal first half showing.

Still, there was no carrot at the end of the stick and the letdown this week is inevitable. And that's Jackie Sherrill's Aggies, 38-27 winners over somebody from Louisiana, looming this week as Tech inaugurates four weeks of road football.

In addition to the one-point loss to Baylor, New Mexico and Air Force both may be stronger than most people give them credit for. The Lobos are still unbeaten while Air Force beat BYU last weekend and also owns a win over San Diego State.

Looking at the Raiders' season optimistically, if Tech can keep it's head above water, it will have the rest of the SWC just where it wants them. Tech finishes at home with Texas, Houston and SMU in three of its final four games.

EARLIER IN the day, the attraction of a team garbed in Crimson and Gold, defending national champion and ranked No. 1 this season was too much to resist. However, when we showed up at the stadium, it wasn't USC against Oklahoma, but Austin College facing Lubbock Christian College.

The big difference between AC and USC is that they don't give athletic scholarships at AC and while they give 'em at USC, some say nobody uses 'em. Well, not quite the big difference.

AC won 27-8, but it wasn't that one-sided. In fact, LCC was on the verge of wiping out a 14-0 lead. The Chaparrals had scored once to make it 14-8 and were on their way to another TD early in the fourth period. The Kangaroos' defense was showing the effects of a long afternoon of trying to keep LCC quarterback Freddy Palacious' receivers under surveillance. They had managed, but the tongues hanging out were proof the task had taken its toll.

AC's decision to pass up a field goal, and forego the opportunity to pad its lead to 17-0 with a fourth and goal from the seven, loomed as the biggest boner since Roy Riegels grabbed that fumble in the Rose Bowl game and Fred Merkle missed that base way back in, what, 1908?

Then, just to show how quickly a game can turn around, Kevin Kirby picked off a pass inside the AC 20, returned to midfield and Austin had an insurance touchdown in three plays.

While LCC hasn't enjoyed much success in a football program that is only a few years old, it really isn't that far away. Among the recruits who may help the Chaps turn it around are safety Bruce Fisher, cornerback Hank McClung, defensive end Danny Rider, defensive tackle James Day, wide receiver Billy Taylor, all freshmen from Midland; and wide receiver Scott Sears, a freshman from Andrews and former Midlander.

Randy Perkins suffers neck injury

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Randy Perkins, the son of former Dallas Cowboys running back Don Perkins, suffered a severe neck injury in a high school football game last Friday, a doctor reported.

Dr. Fred Balduini said young Perkins suffered a fracture of the sixth cervical vertebrae with trauma to the cervical spinal cord. The youth has suffered partial paralysis, Balduini said, who noted that additional X-rays would be taken to determine if surgery would be needed.

Perkins attends Albuquerque Academy and was injured in a game against Estancia. He had run for 335 yards in three games this season and was injured on the third play of Friday night's game.

Perkins' father attained NFL stardom during his career with the Cowboys, after playing his collegiate football at the University of New Mexico.

Grant didn't even shoot a duck

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — You could almost hear the people in the sedan cursing softly to themselves.

It had pulled up in front of one of the many barricades put up around the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome Sunday. For a few moments they just sat and stared at the big bubble.

It was a few minutes after noon and if not for the National Football League players' strike, the six people in the car would have been in the Metrodome watching the Minnesota Vikings tangle with the Dallas Cowboys.

"We've had tickets for a long time — two months. We planned this trip this summer. Wanted to see America's Team," said Steve Weiland, who along with his wife, Cindy, made the trip from Yankton, S.D., to see their first professional football game and get a cheap trip to Hawaii. "Western Airlines has a deal where if you fly 400 miles round trip you can go to Hawaii for $100."

THE WEILANDS had their tickets but the other four visitors from South Dakota had planned to buy tickets from scalpers.

So why did they show up? For the trip to Hawaii of course and, "We thought there would be somebody here to let us in (the Metrodome). Thought Bud Grant would be in there shooting ducks or something," said Roy Pulfrey of Rapid City, S.D.

The Metrodome was locked tight Sunday but a few people did manage to get inside. A few minutes before what would have been game time, local Minneapolis businessman, Harvey Mackay, was banging on a door demanding entrance for himself and the 40 visitors from Nebraska he was hosting.

He herded them, many of whom were wearing Vikings' hats, off the bus and into the Metrodome through a door opened by a worker.

Mackay had been instrumental in getting the dome built and had acquired tickets to the game for his group of corporate executives and their spouses.

Once inside they took seats and seemed lost in the forest of 62,000 empty seats. Mackay, with the clock in the background reading 0:00, gave the group a talk on the history of the dome. He mentioned that it had helped the Twins and the Vikings overcome such obstacles as rain and snow. It even overcame the "awesome" threat of rain which keeps many fans away.

But there was one obstacle he and others did not count that might keep fans away — a strike.

Outside the dome, one lone workman went about his job of cleaning up. His day would end early.

"I saw some fans take some pictures," Robert Ziegelmeyer said of the only people he saw while performing his chores.

His duties were made easier too. "We had the Gophers here yesterday and things get pretty messy. We come in at 6:30 and work to 9:30. Then we usually come back at 10 a.m. and get ready for the Vikings. But everybody went home today. I'm the only one left."

Ziegelmeyer then disappeared around the corner, chasing an errant piece of paper. He was one of more than a 1,000 people who were to work the game — ushers, vendors, police, cleanup and attendants, according to the stadium commission.

Away from the Metrodome, a bar called Sports Central, usually jumping on Sundays with fans watching the Vikings on a big-screen TV, was far from lively. The bar substituted a Canadian Football League game between the British Columbia Lions and the Toronto Argonauts.

THE CROWD watching seemed attentive as they quibbled over the odd CFL rules. The only problem was the crowd consisted of only 10 people.

"Not much of a crowd for CFL," Sports Central owner Burt Krick said. "You usually have to get here early so you can get a seat.

"Of course the weather is nice so people are out cutting grass or getting in that last game of golf."

About 5,000 Pittsburgh fans showed up at Three Rivers Stadium despite no game and had a lively free beer tailgate party.

The fans in Dallas did not miss the game though. A computer simulation was put on the radio and fans heard it all — play by play. The final score: Cowboys 22, Vikings 10. Minnesota fans hearing that news were not amused.

The players, not taking part in simulated or real games, were scattered. Some stayed home while others visited various sections of the country. The only sure bet was they weren't watching NFL football.

Degrees were rare under Abe Lemons

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The only Abe Lemons' recruit who earned a degree during the Texas basketball coach's six-year tenure says the poor academic showing was not the coach's fault.

"If you're looking at who's responsible, I think it falls first on the individual and then the academic adviser. As far as I'm concerned, the coach is hired basically to coach," said John Danks.

However, UT athletic director DeLoss Dodds, who fired Lemons in March, said he was "disappointed" in the academic record — Danks is the only one of 16 Lemons' recruits to graduate.

"I'd have to say I was surprised at it. I'd be surprised at any of our programs that don't graduate at the rate that the rest of the university does," said Dodds.

ACADEMIC counselor Joe Eivens said 54 percent of UT freshman earn degrees within five years.

Lemons signed 32 players from 1976 to 1981. By now, 16 could have earned degrees. Several players are still in the program and others have transferred.

"You get a lot of bad raps as a coach," said Lemons. "When it comes right down to it in academics, it's up to the individual and what he has within him."

The former coach said judgment should be withheld until the former players have a chance to settle in society. He said he did all he could for them while they were UT students.

"I've tried it all, trying to get them to study. In the old days I used to cut them off a meal for missing a class. I've tried study halls and everything else and I've found out one thing: It doesn't matter what you try to do, they'll study when they're good and ready, and not before. You can sit them down in a room and put a book in front of them, but you can't make them learn if they don't want to," said Lemons.

But Eivens indicated he did not get all the support he needed from Lemons. He said he "sometimes" got the help he wanted.

"It was extremely frustrating to me. There were times when I had to have medication for my stomach because I was getting so upset over things. Obviously we had problems. It was a lack of motivation on the players' part. From my standpoint I needed the support of the coach," said Eivens, who helps UT athletes with their studies.

He said Lemons' recruits still at UT now are doing well academically.

Former Longhorn forward Ken Montgomery agreed with Danks that there was only so much Lemons could do.

"Hell, Abe couldn't go over there and take players' tests," said Montgomery, who is six hours short of his degree.

A SOURCE close to the UT Athletics Council, which approved Lemons' firing, said the poor academic record was "never written down in black and white" as one of the reasons for the dismissal.

"But I think it's no secret that there were problems in that area, and it was not a record to be particularly proud of," the source told the Austin American-Statesman.

Eivens said several new policies have been initiated to help new coach Bob Weltlich's players. A new assistant academic counselor has been hired to work with the basketball team. Also, a mandatory morning study hall will be set up for players who need extra help.

All freshman athletes will be required to attend a class Eivens describes as a "college survival" course.

Weltlich said he plans to recruit "high quality kids" who can handle UT academics.

There is finally joy in Mudville

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — There is finally joy in Mudville. Northwestern, less-than-mighty-Northwestern, has won out.

"Everyone looked at 'The Streak' for psychological and philosophical reasons when Northwestern looked terrible," Coach Dennis Green said after the Wildcats snuffed out the record major college losing streak at 34 games Saturday with a 31-6 victory over Northern Illinois.

"I've never felt there was any reason except the players we had weren't playing well enough to win," added Green, a burly former lineman at Iowa whose first head coaching job came with the inheritance of a 20-game losing streak.

BEFORE SATURDAY, the last game the Wildcats had won was Sept. 15, 1979, in tripping Wyoming 27-22. It was the first win in 15 games under Green's regime — rigorous weightlifting, shuffling the personnel like a deck of cards and an ambitious effort to end a drought that began six years before his arrival.

In 1976 and 1977, the Wildcats won just one game each year for coach John Pont. Under Rick Venturi, they failed to get even one in 1978. And after the Wyoming victory the following year, they rang up 34 straight "no sales."

But all of that ended when Wildcat linebacker Alex Moyer turned the tide in the opening minutes.

Northern Illinois took the opening kickoff and drove with ease to the Northwestern 32. On the next play, linebacker Moyer stepped in front of a Tim Tyrrell pass for the first of Northwestern's two interceptions.

"To be truthful, I started thinking, 'Here we go again,'" said Moyer. But there they didn't.

Freshman quarterback Sandy Schwab, who finished the day 16 of 28 for 212 yards, engineered a 75-yard drive and finished with a sparkling 13-yard TD strike to Ricky Edwards. And Northwestern had its first lead since the final game of the 1980 season.

It was the first touchdown of Edwards' college career, and the senior repeated the feat three more times to tie the school record for touchdowns in a game.

TBS to broadcast game tonight

ATLANTA (AP) — Turner Broadcasting Systems has announced it will televise tonight's crucial National League baseball game between the Atlanta Braves and the San Francisco Giants.

The game between the NL West contenders, tied for second place a game behind the division-leading Los Angeles Dodgers, had not been on the TBS schedule. It will air at 9:35 p.m. CDT for subscribers whose cable systems receive Atlanta-based WTBS-TV. Midland cable owners will see the game.

The station 22 million homes across throughout the country.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 9¾% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14¾% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 16¾%.

GAS, CLEAN ENERGY FOR TODAY AND TOMORROW. FHA/VA financing availble.
