Chairman: Might tax insurance

Dallas Times Herald Bureau AUSTIN — The chairman of the House tax-writing panel, searching for a quick revenue source to forestall a cash flow crisis this fall, unveiled a plan Monday to levy a sales tax on insurance premiums.

The insurance industry immediately denounced the unexpected proposal, contending it would add more than $200 to the cost of insurance for the average Texas family and significantly increase the cost of doing business in the state.

While the House Ways and Means Committee delayed action for a day on plans to hike and expand the sales tax, the panel routinely approved a proposed constitutional ban on personal income taxes.

But by a one-vote margin, the committee scrapped a plan to send to the voters a proposed constitutional amendment that would have prevented the Legislature from enacting a corporate profits tax without voter approval.

Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, sponsor of the anti-tax measure that had passed the House several times in recent years, said the issue was "dead" in the current special session.

The proposed bans on personal and corporate income taxes, which

Wind, hail blast Howard County

By STEVE REAGAN

Staff Writer

Rain, wind, hail and lightning blasted parts of Howard County early Tuesday morning, damaging crops and structures, area residents said.

Knott apparently suffered the most extensive damage.

Debra Lancaster said that cyclone-type winds blew over the chimney of her home this morning. She added that a neighbor, Fred Phillips, lost his barn to the high winds.

Larry Shaw, a Knott farmer, reported that he received 2.9 inches of rain, and that winds caused several cotton trailers to tip over at his farm.

In Big Spring, lightning struck power lines at two places, according to police reports.

Power lines in the 500 block of West Third St. were struck at 8:24 p.m., and lines at East 18th and Virginia streets were hit 27 minutes later. Fire department units were sent to Virginia Street, where the lines were arcing, police reports said.

Repair crews worked about four hours to restore power to 15 to 20 customers, said Hooper Sanders, regional manager for Texas Utilities Electric.

He said that power losses were isolated cases, and that no mass failures occurred. He added that transformers located behind Kentucky Fried Chicken, 2200 Gregg St., had to be replaced because of lightning damage.

Wind gusts in the Big Spring area were as high as 80 miles per hour, according to an Associated Press report.

A spokesman for the Agricultural Research Service in Big Spring said that winds reached a maximum of 56 miles per hour at the Research Station on the north service road of Interstate 20.

The station recorded 1.39 inches of rain, bringing the year-to-date total to 14.48 inches — almost 6 inches above normal.

Hail damaged gardens and crops south of town, according to H. Boyce Hale, Sterling City Route.

Traffic on Farm Road 846 was reduced to one lane after Monday evening's storm tipped over one tree and tore large branches off other trees, landing in the westbound lane of the road leading into Knott.

He said hail as large as one inch in diameter damaged 80 percent of his garden, shredding his corn, tomatoes and other crops. He added that 2.01 inches of rain fell, bringing his total since Jan. 1 to 13.76 inches.

O.W. Scudday of Forsan reported 1.1 inches of rain at his home, and high winds that blew apples from his trees.

Chuck Benz, 2807 Apache St., recorded 1.7 inches of rain and marble-sized hail at his residence. He added that high winds blew over his awning and leveled his rose bushes. Tommy Hart, 1750 Purdue Ave., reported 1.65 inches of rain, while B.G. Barber, 1409 Settles St., recorded 1.5 inches of rain.

Child abuse causes lifelong trauma

For The Associated Press
(Third in a series)

There's a great deal we've learned in recent years about the sexual abuse of children.

We know that, like rape, it can have profound traumatic results, creating lifelong problems for its child-victims.

We know that for many years we were deluded by the myth that sexual abusers of children were dirty old men, or strangers prowling the streets for innocent victims.

We know that the people most likely to sexually abuse children are their own family members, friends, neighbors or acquaintances.

Abuse often is fostered from unhappy marriages — partners who are out-of-touch with each other — Howard County Sheriff A.N. Standard said. Or, alcohol and drugs could be affecting behavior, he said.

Child-victims almost always feel boxed-in and even blame themselves for what happens.

"It's a traumatic experience that the child will live with for the rest of his life," Standard said.

A 44-year-old father in Baltimore recalled an experience with a choirmaster when he was 12.

"I never said anything to my parents. Who would have believed the choirmaster would do such a thing? I was deeply ashamed that I had never spoken more than 20 years later when my own son was in the choir and this same church member tried to fondle him. But my boy told me and we were able to remove the man and make sure he would not manage to be alone with children."

One of the more heart-breaking aspects of this kind of abuse is that if often involves someone the child has been raised to respect, trust and obey: an aunt, cousin, teacher, church leader, scout master, doctor, baby sitter, counselor at a day care center, older brother or sister.

What is sexual abuse of a child? First, it is not the reasonable, responsible physical contact between an adult and a child that is a natural expression of love and fondness.

It is when the adult or older child makes sexual contact with the child for the adult's gratification. It means physical as well as non-physical contact.

Force is a key part of it. That doesn't mean the child has to be chained down. More often, there's subtle force, of a psychological nature. A child may be bribed with gifts or candy or money. He can be threatened, told he'll be all alone and no longer loved. He can be told he is to blame for what happens. He can be told if he doesn't keep the secret and cooperate, his family, mother or father, will be hurt.

The result is that the child rarely reveals what happens to him or

Downtown subject of brochures

A slick brochure announcing plans for Big Spring's downtown will be sent to area and national companies that might consider locating in the city's center.

Downtown Coordinator Teri Quinones said today the Downtown Steering Committee will meet from 3 to 5 p.m. Wednesday to discuss how to market the brochures.

"We'd like to target people we know are interested in this type of project," Quinones said.

The committee might seek assistance from a state Main Street project information center in Austin and a national center in Washington, D.C., she said. Both may be able to provide mailing lists of potential customers.

Contracting with a direct mail company for a mailing list of potential retailers is another option, Quinones said.

In addition, some of the 10,000 brochures will be distributed to local realtors and property owners, she said.

The brochures, completed last week, were printed by Gamco Industries Inc. for approximately $3,000, she said.

The cost of the design was provided by architects Phil Furquerson and Michael Peters and City Planner Robert Lima as part of the master plan, Quinones said.

The downtown renovation project titled "Main Street Inc.: The Master Plan for Downtown" seeks to attract small-business entrepreneurs by providing low-overhead, ready-to-use shared office and retail spaces.

Lawmakers learn measure is futile

Dallas Times Herald Bureau

AUSTIN — Court challenges to a 10-year-old law limiting the malpractice liability of Texas doctors have prevented the measure from effectively holding down insurance rates, physicians and insurers told a House panel Monday.

Medical professionals testifying before the Committee on State Affairs said premiums had skyrocketed in the last two years alone. Obstetricians saw increases of 100 percent to 300 percent, family practitioners who delivered babies were hit with 50 percent to 100 percent increases, and neurosurgeons paid rates 200 percent to 300 percent higher.

As a result, they said, they had curtailed their services. "I used to deliver babies. I quit," said Rep. Mike McKinney, D-Centerville, the only medical doctor among the House membership. His reason: the cost of protecting himself from malpractice suits.

Prompted by fears that the Texas Supreme Court will strike down the 1977 act, doctors are seeking more explicit protection during the current special session. Gov. Bill Clements, who controls what lawmakers may consider during the session, gave tacit endorsement to the doctors' position by adding medical malpractice to the agenda.

Identical legislation introduced by Rep. Brad Wright and Sen. Don Henderson, both Houston Republicans, would limit jury awards for damages such as pain and suffering or loss of companionship to a total of $1 million — roughly the 1977 limit of $500,000 adjusted for inflation.

However, in a critical departure from court interpretations of the 1977 law, the $1 million ceiling would be imposed once on each malpractice claim, rather than separately on each defendant. The result, for malpractice victims, could be significantly lower awards.

A separate measure proposes a constitutional amendment to safeguard the malpractice limits from invalidation by the courts. That drew fire from consumer advocacy groups and other opponents at Monday's hearing.

State Rep. Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, chairs the House Urban Affairs Committee Monday, as committee member, Rep. Lena Guerrero, D-Austin, looks on. The committee heard testimony on a bill that would place limits on liability in medical malpractice cases. Gov. Clements expanded the agenda of the Legislature's special session Monday to include the proposal to limit liability.

Texas oil producers relieved by OPEC decision

Dallas Times Herald Bureau
Texas oil producers and oilfield service company officials expressed relief and optimism at the OPEC decision to hold down year-end oil production — a move many see as assuring stable price levels over the next six months.

"We are confident that prices will remain at or around $18 a barrel for the rest of the year," said Mike Barron, director of strategic planning for Maxus Energy Corp. of Dallas, the new company formed from the exploration and production units of the old Diamond Shamrock Corp.

Contracts for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude oil, rose 11 cents to close Monday at $20.35 a barrel, after reaching a high for the day of $20.70. Contract months after August finished higher.

Some oil market analysts suggested that the fact that New York Mercantile Exchange prices slipped back from Monday's highs showed that traders are skeptical about OPEC's ability to stick to its official production ceiling.

North Sea crude oil prices were quoted Monday at nearly $20 a barrel, up 80 to 85 cents from Thursday when the Vienna talks began. Late in the day, however, Brent was quoted at $19.10 a barrel, up just 5 cents from Friday.

The 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, meeting in Vienna, Austria, decided Saturday to cancel a planned increase in the fall.

The ministers agreed to limit the group's official output to 16.6 million barrels a day in the fourth quarter, the same as the third quarter, from the originally planned 18.3 million barrels.

Some analysts said such a move could boost crude prices above current levels of about $18 a barrel.

"This market has absorbed a lot of buying," said Madison Galbraith, senior energy specialist for Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "At least (the market) has something to grab hold of," he said, referring to the new OPEC accord.

Herb Ryan, a spokesman for Dresser Industries, an international oil services and engineering company based in Dallas, said the decision by OPEC could bring relief to an industry plagued by price uncertainty.

"Our industry seems to be perched to come out of a fairly prolonged recession, and any good news may hasten that day," Ryan said.

"Anything that instills stability will improve the situation," said Al Franco with the International Association of Drilling Contractors in Houston.

Franco said the durability of OPEC accord remains to be seen but it is good news now.

"Companies won't make big plans on six-month projections, but it will help for those with immediate drilling programs. They might want to expedite their plans," Franco said.

her. In the United States in 1985, according to a survey by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse (NCPCA), there were 303,192 cases of sexual abuse of children.

Girls have been the most frequent victims, but various studies indicate that sexual abuse of boys has been increasing.

Child sexual abuse laws vary from state to state. Actually, very few of the sexual offenses against children are reported, let alone prosecuted.

For example, incest, sex between family members, usually takes place in the privacy of a home. There are no witnesses to support the child's testimony. If there is no one to corroborate the story, if the other parent isn't prepared to support the child's allegations, the child is pushed toward retracting the story. And that contributes to the myth that children lie about or fantasize sexual offenses.

Part three

It is the kind of offense that knows no racial, economic, political, cultural, religious, educational or geographical barrier.

Here are some guidelines for children, developed by the NCPCA:

• You need to know that your body belongs to you and no one has the right to touch you without permission. You have the right to say "No" to some adult who is touching you in a way you don't like, even if the touch seems accidental.

• There are different kinds of touching. There's the touch that feels good — hugs and comforting touches. And there's the touch that feels bad — pinching and hitting. Then, there's the touch that feels "funny" — like some adult or older child touching your private parts, the parts that are covered when you wear a bathing suit.

If that happens, tell the person, "I don't like that." And run away, and tell someone.

• If someone is touching your private parts or trying to get you to do something that feels "funny," whether it's a parent or another relative or good friend, you should tell your other parent or some trusted adult.

• If someone wants you to keep some secret, don't do it. No adult or older person has the right to ask you to keep some secret about how he or she is behaving with you.

Of course, there are good secrets — like a surprise birthday party. That's a lot different than the kind of secret that you are supposed to keep forever and that's about doing things that make you feel bad.

You can always tell a person who asks you to keep such secrets, "No, my family doesn't allow me to keep bad secrets."

Parents should look for signs of physical and emotional abuse in their child, Standard said.

It's important to pursue the matter by notifying the Department of Human Resources, a law enforcement agency or a church leader, he said.

"It needs to be reported for the child's sake, as well as the family's," Standard said.

have been killed repeatedly in the Senate, were two of the main items that Gov. Bill Clements placed on the agenda of the special session he called to resolve the state's fiscal crisis.

In an effort to raise nearly $6 billion in new taxes to finance state government in 1988-89, Schluter proposed extending the sales tax to professional services, including doctors, lawyers, accountants, engineers and veterinarians, and establishing a new sales tax on insurance premiums.

"The rationale behind the insurance tax: It's progressive," Schluter said. "It taxes people based on their ability to pay — the larger your house, the more money you pay; the bigger your car, the more money you pay. Poor people don't pay it, because they don't have insurance."

"Of course, the biggest rationale was it's something I can get on line by Sept. 1 and get the revenue going," he said. "If you don't get something on line by Sept. 1, you still can't pay the checks and it's just as disastrous as not doing anything."

Ethridge named interim superintendent

COAHOMA — The School Board hired two teacher/coaches and a teacher, and appointed an interim superintendent at Monday night's special meeting, reported Board member Guy White.

The Board named junior high school principal Rob Ethridge the interim superintendent until the Board hires a replacement for Rick Gentry, a spokesman for the Association of Fire and Casualty Companies in Texas, called Schluter's plan ill-advised, bad public policy and particularly unfair to elderly Texans on fixed incomes.

"If Texas adopts this, we would be the only state in the country with a sales tax on insurance policies," Gentry said.

Ernest Stromberger, executive director of the Independent Insurance Agents of Texas, said the average Dallas family would pay more than $215 a year in sales tax on insurance premiums, based on the current 5.25 percent tax rate.

"Texas consumers already are paying state taxes in their insurance premiums," Stromberger said, referring to homeowner, life, auto and casualty insurance rates that include premium taxes paid to the state by the companies. "The addition of a sales tax to these premium taxes would make Texas insurance the most heavily taxed insured policies anywhere in the United States."

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, one of the sponsors of the hard-fought compromise to overhaul the Jerry Doyle, Doyle announced his resignation last Tuesday. He is leaving to become superintendent at Lampasas, and his resignation becomes effective July 10.

White said the Board expected to hire a superintendent within three weeks to a month.

The Board hired R.L. Coates, a civil justice and insurance systems in the regular legislative session this spring, said the tax plan could offset predicted savings in liability insurance.

"It would obviously be going in the opposite direction of what was done in the regular session as far as tort reform was concerned," Toomey said.

Despite the opposition, Schluter predicted a sales tax on insurance premiums would be part of any House tax package considered by lawmakers later this week.

The Ways and Means Committee plans to debate and vote on a variety of tax proposals following House consideration of the budget today, Schluter said. If approved today, the tax plan could be considered by the full House as early as Wednesday.

Clements, meanwhile, met with conservative Democrats Monday and scheduled breakfast with House Republicans today to lobby against the proposed tax plans, which are still several hundred million dollars above a ceiling set by the governor. Clements has threatened to veto any tax measure that exceeds his limit.

Clements expands session agenda

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has doubled the number of items on the agenda for the Legislature's special session, including a request that lawmakers consider limits on liability in medical malpractice cases.

In adding 11 topics to the 10-item agenda he listed before the 30-day session began June 22, Clements said Monday that completion of a 1988-89 state budget remains the top priority.

"While there are numerous issues before us, we cannot daily when it comes to the budget. Reaching a consensus on the budget is our principal chore in this special session. It's in Texas' best interest that a solution be quickly reached," Clements said.

The Legislature generally is limited in special sessions to considering subjects chosen by a governor.

In adding the health care liability issue to the agenda, Clements said it is an extension of the civil justice legislation — so-called tort reform — already passed by lawmakers.

He argued that it would help boost economic development in Texas.

"A major element in our economic development is the reform of our civil justice system. Today's additions (on health care liability) to the call reflect our continued efforts to enact a comprehensive package of tort reform legislation needed to help rebuild our economy," Clements said.

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, said the governor doesn't have a specific figure in mind for the liability lid "as long as it includes reasonable limits."

Also included on Clements' wider agenda was a bill like one he vetoed earlier to provide scholarships to talented medical students at the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas.

The measure would provide scholarships for highly recruited, so-called "top gun" medical students who plan to earn simultaneous medical doctors' and doctoral degrees.

According to lawmakers, the earlier veto endangered support for the center from Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot, who had offered a $70 million donation that was conditional on passage of the bill and removal of other state requirements on the use of private donations to universities.

'Fairness' rule just isn't valid

The other day, President Reagan wisely vetoed legislation that would have made the Fairness Doctrine the law of the land.

Actually, there is nothing "fair" about this misguided measure and we hope Reagan's veto leads ultimately to the doctrine's repeal by the Federal Communications Commission.

The Fairness Doctrine dates back to 1949, when there was a small number of radio and television stations in the country. FCC officials were concerned that this situation could severely limit public debate and hence, decreed that the proponents and opponents of a controversial issue receive equal air time. However well-meaning the policy then, it has become obsolete today. The scarcity-of-outlet argument now is moot: No less than 10,000 radio stations, 1,300 television stations and 7,300 cable-television stations operate today. A vigorous and healthy public debate is carried forth on this vast communications network.

Moreover, the doctrine is particularly odious to democracy because it represents an unwarranted government intrusion into news operations.

Ultimately, it leads to bland, timid reporting because it second-guesses editorial judgment. In fact, FCC officials consider the doctrine an infringement on free speech and believe it is constitutionally suspect.

So do we. Mind you, our opinion of the Fairness Doctrine is affected by our profession. But we speak from experience in asserting that the doctrine actually detracts from the public debate of issues.

It's only fair to the American people that Congress resist a veto override of this antiquated measure, setting the stage for an FCC deathblow to a doctrine that truly is constitutional suspect.

Today

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, June 30, the 181st day of 1987. There are 184 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 30, 1934, Adolf Hitler began his "blood purge" of hundreds of political and military leaders in Germany. Among those killed was Ernst Roehm, leader of the Nazi stormtroopers and Hitler's one-time ally.

On this date:
In 1834, the Indian Territory was created by Congress.
In 1859, French acrobat Emile Blondin crossed Niagara Falls on a tightrope as 5,000 spectators watched.

In 1870, Ada H. Kepley of Effingham, Ill., became America's first female law school graduate.

In 1906, the Pure Food and Drug Act and the Meat Inspection Act became law.

In 1936, the novel "Gone with the Wind" by Margaret Mitchell was published in New York.
In 1952, "The Guiding Light," a popular radio program, made its debut as a television soap opera on CBS.

In 1962, Pope Paul VI was crowned in an outdoor ceremony at St. Peter's Square.

In 1971, a Soviet space mission ended in tragedy when three cosmonauts aboard Soyuz XI were found dead inside their spacecraft after returning to Earth.

In 1971, the 26th Amendment to the Constitution, lowering the minimum voting age to 18, was ratified as Ohio became the 38th state to approve it.

In 1985, 39 American hostages from a hijacked TWA jetliner were freed in Beirut after being held 17 days.

Ten years ago: In a surprise move, President Jimmy Carter announced he had decided against production of the B-1 bomber, saying it was too costly. However, President Reagan revived the B-1 when he took office in 1981.

Five years ago: The time limit for the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution expired, with proponents falling short of the three additional states needed to ratify it.

One year ago: In a 5-4 decision, the Supreme Court ruled that states could outlaw homosexual acts between consenting adults, even in the privacy of their own homes.

Today's Birthdays: Actor David Wayne is 71. Singer Lena Horne is 70. Actress Nancy Dussault is 51.

SCLC leaders tell concerns with Jackson's rise to fame

By JACK ANDERSON and JOSEPH SPEAR

WASHINGTON — The Rev. Jesse Jackson's emergence in front of the pack in the Democratic presidential race is widely attributed to his greater name recognition. How he achieved celebrity status is, therefore, a matter of legitimate public concern.

Jackson became a media star literally overnight, within hours of the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on April 4, 1968.

Jackson was only 26 — a junior member of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. He was part of King's party in Memphis, Tenn., on the fatal day.

Jackson's actions — and the media's instant lionizing of him — still mystify some of King's old associates after 19 years. He flew home to Chicago within hours after the assassination.

"We saw him on TV at the Midway Airport in Chicago doing a press conference on the tarmac," recalled the Rev. Bernard Lee, then a special assistant to King, and now an aide to Washington Mayor Marion Barry.

"All of us were surprised to see him doing a press conference. He had some blood on his shirt, saying 'This is Dr. King's blood.' I personally did not see him touch Dr. King."

Another SCLC leader interviewed by our reporter Lisa Sylvester was the Rev. Hosea Williams, now a member of the Atlanta City Council.

"Jesse was talking to the press out in the yard after we were sure Dr. King was absolutely dead," he recalled. "Jesse was talking to the press and showed them the blood on his shirt, and I know the blood didn't come from Dr. King. I reacted very violently."

Williams said he and other King associates watched Jackson on TV the next morning.

"Jesse said he was feeling bad and sick. Before we knew it, he was on the 'Today Show.' I thought it was horrible," Williams said.

Jack Anderson

"Jesse flew out that night to Chicago. Why would he keep a bloody shirt on all night? The blood did not come from the body of Dr. King."

Williams attributes Jackson's actions at the time of his youth. "I feel very bad about it," Williams said. "He was just a young man and made a mistake. It could hurt him."

The Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, who succeeded King as head of the SCLC, expressed a similar view.

Abernathy, who was the first to reach King's side when he fell to the floor of the motel balcony, said he has heard of press accounts saying Jackson was the first to reach the fallen leader and the last person to talk to him.

"I am sure the press has been told that," Abernathy said. "But that was not important to me, because we had lost our leader. I can only say Jesse has grown. He has matured greatly."

Abernathy and Williams both recalled Jackson being in the motel courtyard near the balcony when the fatal shot was fired, but they have no recollection that he reached King's side.

Yet the news account in the Chicago Defender of April 8, 1968, said: "(Jackson) said he rushed to Dr. King's side immediately, but got no response when he asked, 'Doc, can you hear me?'"

We called Jackson's campaign office for comment. His press aide, Frank Watkins, said Jackson makes no claim that he spoke with King after the shooting.

Watkins said that just before the murder, Jackson was in the motel courtyard talking with King as he stood on the balcony. Watkins suggested that could be the basis for the claim that Jackson was the last person to talk to King.

As for the blood on Jackson's shirt, Watkins said: "Were there other people shot? I'm just talking about the logic of it. Where did it come from if no one else was shot?"

The press aide noted that Williams is the only one who directly charges Jackson with having exploited King's martyrdom, and said: "Everyone else says Jesse is such a media hound (they) wouldn't put it past him."

POISON GAS IN THE GULF — A U.N. investigating team has uncovered discouraging developments in the Persian Gulf war: Iran apparently has retaliated against Iraqi use of poison gas with chemical attacks of its own.

Four doctors — from Australia, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland — made three visits to the desert battlefields. They found Iraqi soldiers who had been exposed to a severe irritant, which they concluded was probably phosgene gas.

The injuries were different from those caused by mustard gas, which Iraq has used against Iran, so they could not have been the result of accidental mishandling of Iraqi chemical weapons, the doctors observed.

Documenting the gruesome indiscriminate nature of chemical warfare, the doctors cited the case of an Iranian peasant family: a pregnant mother and her daughters aged 2 and 4 who had been exposed to mustard gas. The doctors performed an emergency tracheotomy to help the 4-year-old breathe, but she died within two hours.

Art Buchwald How to earn a degree in stonewalling

By ART BUCHWALD

"Washington School of Applied Ethics and Morality. Can we help you?"

"My son is coming to Washington this summer and I would like to know if you are giving any courses in hypocrisy, betrayal and sleaze?"

"Yes, we have an excellent curriculum that will lead either to a bachelor's degree in stonewalling or a master's degree in perjury."

"Can you give me some idea of what you're offering?"

"We have a popular class in lying. We hold moot congressional hearings in which the student is challenged to wriggle out of answering any compromising questions."

"How does he do that?"

"By using the Elliott Abrams defense. When asked a question the student is taught to reply something like, 'It probably happened but I don't remember it,' or 'I don't remember it but if you say it took place I'll accept your word.'"

"Is Abrams the instructor?"

"No, he has nothing to do with the school. But the students look on him as a role model."

"It doesn't surprise me. He's everybody's role model."

"If your son is working in Washington this summer I would advise that he take a seminar in special prosecutors."

"I didn't know you could take a whole seminar in them."

"It's essential if you're going to work for the Administration. Let's say, for example, your son, while in Washington, gets involved in a defense factory bribery case. In exchange he receives stock and cash as a reward. As soon as it becomes public what he is up to, he is entitled to his own special prosecutor. We demonstrate how he can face up to a prosecutor while keeping damage for himself to a minimum."

"How is it done?"

"The student asks for immunity and then agrees to rat on all the other people involved with his scheme."

"But isn't that dirty pool?"

"No, dirty pool is another course where government officials learn how to help polluters get around the EPA."

"Since we're talking about morality, do you have any studies in adultery?"

"Your son can take adultery, but he won't get any credit for it."

"What about greed?"

"Greed is required, and you can't graduate without it. We teach that there is nothing wrong with being greedy if it's in your country's best interests."

"My son hopes to work with one of the federal agencies. Is there a lot of sleaze involved with this?"

"It depends on how much work he does for the vested interests. We offer all the standard white-collar crimes. What our students do with them is their business."

"My son wants to know if you teach students how to shred incriminating documents."

"Each student is required to own a paper shredder and burn bag. The burn bag can also be used to carry his lunch."

"You have a fun school."

"We try to make our students good citizens, even if they have to lie to do it. As Ollie North said, 'There is more to government than rewarding your friends and punishing your enemies.'"

"How much more?"

"Come to think of it, not much."

By Associated Press Gore enter '88 race

DES MOINES, Iowa — Sen. Albert Gore Jr., a 39-year-old Southerner seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, said today he was not relying on his birth date or his birthplace to set him apart from the competition.

"I'm not running as a generational candidate or a regional candidate," Gore said in Iowa during an appearance on NBC-TV's "Today" show. "I'm running as a national candidate in all regions."

Gore would be the youngest president ever. He made his candidacy official during a day of campaign stops that began on the courthouse steps of his hometown of Carthage, Tenn.

Death chair readied

SOMERS, Conn. — Connecticut has a death chamber, an electric chair, and its first condemned killer in years, but there's no one left in the state prison system who remembers how to carry out an execution.

A jury last week sentenced Michael B. Ross, 27, to death for the serial murders of four teenage girls, forcing state officials to start studying how to make the chair operable and how to carry out the instructions for an execution outlined in Connecticut law.

"A good reference is what they do in other states," Department of Correction spokeswoman Connie Wilks said Monday as she led reporters and photographers on a tour of the death chamber at Somers State Prison.

Dallas teen indicted

A Highland Park High School student accused of stabbing a schoolmate during a swimming party in May was indicted Monday on one count of attempted murder, a Dallas County grand jury official said.

Todd Whitman Sharpe, 18, of the 3800 block of McFarlin Boulevard in University Park, was indicted in connection with the May 31 stabbing of Garvin Donald Fitch, a junior at Highland Park High.

Fitch, 17, remains in serious condition in Parkland Memorial Hospital's Intensive Care Unit.

Phone defense heard

WASHINGTON — An AT&T lawyer told a federal judge today that allowing the regional Bell telephone companies to manufacture telephone equipment would hurt the nation's trade balance and America's position as a technology leader.

Howard J. Trienens, representing American Telephone & Telegraph Co., said that if allowed, the Bell companies would likely join with foreign companies to make phone equipment and then use their control over the local phone network to favor their affiliates in purchases and sales.

India

Three dead, 80 injured in fire

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The owners of a downtown office building where three people died and 80 others were injured in a fire were warned a year ago the 11-story structure was a fire hazard, city officials said.

More than 300 people were rescued from the building's upper floors after being trapped by smoke and flames for five hours on Monday. Some were rescued by helicopter and others by a crane from a partially built structure nearby.

City officials said late Monday that criminal charges had been filed against the owners of the Ansal Bhavan building. They said it was one of 200 New Delhi buildings declared unsafe by the fire department last year.

Municipal Commissioner P.P. Chauhan told reporters the building lacked an underground water tank and a fire detection system. H.L. Kapur, lieutenant governor of New Delhi, appointed a magistrate to determine the fire's cause.

Hospital officials said 15 people were hospitalized, most because of smoke inhalation. Another 65 people were treated for minor injuries and released.

Hundreds of firefighters, army and air force soldiers and passersby worked together Monday to extinguish the blaze.

Air force helicopters rescued some people from the roof before withdrawing because the blades were fanning the flames.

Indian women drenched in their wet saree escape through a window and climb down through the ladder extended from a fire truck Monday when a fire broke out in New Delhi, India.

Burglars loot president's tomb

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Burglars entered the tomb of former President Gen. Juan D. Peron and stole his uniform cap, sword and an Argentine flag that covered his coffin, officials said today.

Vice President Victor Martinez called the burglary "absolutely despicable" and promised authorities would relentlessly pursue those who committed "this profane act."

Police said the burglars entered the tomb at Chacarita Cemetery during the weekend, but the break-in was not discovered until Monday. Police blamed guards for the lax security at the gravesite in central Buenos Aires.

Peron, a charismatic figure idolized by the working class, was president three times from 1946 until his death July 1, 1974, when he was succeeded by his second wife, Isabel Peron.

Isabel Peron was overthrown in 1976 by the military, which retained control under often harsh rule that included the deaths of at least 9,000 suspected leftists until Raul Alfonsin was elected president in 1983.

Peron's first wife, Eva, is buried in another part of Buenos Aires.

By Associated Press Chun hears demands

SEOUL, South Korea — The ruling party leader said today that President Chun Doo-hwan has agreed to direct presidential elections, the key demand of nationwide protests that have caused the biggest crisis of Chun's government.

Roh Tae-woo, the head of the Democratic Justice Party and one of Chun's closest allies, met with him for 70 minutes today to press for reforms including direct presidential elections, freedom of the press and release of political prisoners.

After the meeting, Roh said that Chun "accepted in principle" his demands and would formally announce his decision Wednesday after consultations with government leaders and advisers, according to Yonhap, the Korean news agency, which follows government guidelines.

Barbie trial nears end

LYON, France — Klaus Barbie's actions as Lyon Gestapo chief from 1942-44 were "particularly inhumane" and warrant the maximum sentence of life in prison, prosecutor Pierre Truche said today.

Closing his two-day summation, Truche urged the three judges and nine jurors hearing Barbie's trial on charges of crimes against humanity to convict Barbie, 73, for sending hundreds of Jews and Resistance workers to Nazi death camps.

Iran fires on freighter

MANAMA, Bahrain — An Iranian gunboat fired a missile into the Kuwait-flag cargo ship Al-Mirkab off Kuwait, setting the crew's quarters ablaze, maritime salvage officers said today. No injuries were reported.

The fire was apparently put out by crewmen and the vessel sailed to Bahrain with only minor damage, said the officers, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The gunboat, probably based at the Iranian island of Farsiyah, darted toward the ship to launch its attack shortly before midnight, the executives said. They said the speedboat fired once from a multiple-rocket launcher.

Haitians protest decree

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A one-day general strike called to protest a new election decree shut down Port-au-Prince and other cities, and hundreds of people shouting anti-government slogans stoned the state radio station in the capital.

The strike Monday also was observed in the cities of Gonaives, Les Cayes, Jacmel, Petit Goave and St. Marc, radio reports said.

The general strike was called to protest a decree imposed last week by the three-man military-civilian junta led by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy.

Economics continue climb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today its main forecasting gauge of future economic activity climbed 0.7 percent in May, the fourth consecutive monthly increase.

The advance in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators followed a revised 0.2 percent April increase, which had originally been reported as a sharp 0.6 percent decline.

The combination of the healthy May increase and the sharp upward revision in April presented a picture of an economy that appeared to be gathering momentum.

Many analysts believe that economic growth will strengthen in the second half of the year following a very weak April-June quarter. The leading index appears to be providing evidence to support that view.

In a statement, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said that the leading index reflected improving business investment, which should help spur future growth.

"The net gain in the leading index over the past six months — an annual rate of 7.4 percent — is consistent with near-term growth of 3 to 4 percent in the economy," Baldrige said in a statement.

The May increase in the leading index was the strongest since a 0.9 percent advance in March. The index has risen every month since a 0.6 percent drop in January, which was blamed on special factors relating to the new tax laws.

The main source of strength in May was a rise in the number of hours worked at manufacturing plants. A decline in manufacturing hours had been the biggest factor holding back the April index.

Analysts complained that the April dip in manufacturing hours was a result of a faulty survey taken in a week when religious holidays reduced the work force.

In all, four of the available nine indicators posted increases in May. After manufacturing hours, the largest positive factors were changes in raw materials prices, business delivery times and a rise in plant and equipment orders.

Five of the indicators held back the index. The biggest negative factor was a drop in building permits followed by slower growth in the money supply, a rise in unemployment claims, a decline in orders for consumer goods and a drop in stock prices.

The various changes left the index at 189.3 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

Economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, spurred ahead at a 4.8 percent annual rate from January through March this year, the fastest pace in almost three years.

However, economists said this was overstating the economy's underlying strength because it reflected a large buildup in business inventories which was occurring at the same time that consumer demand was posting a rare decline.

These two factors will contribute to an extremely weak GNP growth rate in the April-June quarter with some analysts forecasting the GNP will increase less than 1 percent.

But economists believe the economy will strengthen in the second half of the year, but there is dispute about when the turnaround will occur.

Some economists contend the weak activity will last through the fall because of continued weakness in consumer demand. Others, including the Reagan administration, believe the pickup in activity will occur sooner.

The most pessimistic forecasters believe that overall economic growth will be little improved from the 2.5 percent GNP growth turned in during 1986, the poorest showing since the end of the 1981-82 recession.

EPA restricts construction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency singled out 14 urban areas for restrictions on new construction in its first concrete steps to enforce a deadline for meeting federal air quality standards.

The Dec. 31 deadline has been postponed twice before and a Senate subcommittee on Monday began drafting a bill to delay it again, for five years for most cities. EPA, however, says it has no choice but to act now.

Similar action is expected against another group of cities late this summer.

Monday's action covered only areas whose air pollution control plans don't show compliance by the deadline. In some cases the plans had lain dormant for four years without action.

EPA officials say that if the latest action does not produce progress toward compliance, the areas could eventually face loss of highway funds.

Cleveland is among the cities threatened with such a loss, and Patricia Walling of the Ohio EPA complained that such punitive measures have a "double negative impact."

"You lose money and can't do as much to combat pollution," while at the same time the incentive to make the corrections drops.

David Kee, director of the federal EPA's air and radiation branch in Chicago, responded that funding withdrawals are "kind of a nuclear deterrent you hate to wheel out, but it's the only deterrent we really have."

Areas with acceptable plans are still being checked to see that they did all they promised. If they failed to follow up they can expect similar restrictions; areas that did all they promised but still missed the mark will have to present more vigorous plans.

The punishment announced Monday is often called a "ban" on construction of major new sources — 100 tons a year — of carbon monoxide or the chemicals that form ozone, a major part of smog. But a builder has a way out — the project can be approved if offsetting reductions in pollution from existing sources can be found.

Man confesses to being unfaithful to wife

DEAR ABBY: I see that you're taking a survey to find out how many couples cheat on each other. I'm reminded of this story I've known for years.

A young farmer took a bride. He made one request: "Never look in the trunk of my car." She said, "OK."

On their 40th wedding anniversary, the wife's curiosity got the better of her and she opened the trunk of her husband's car. There she found three ears of corn and $10,000 in cash! She quickly closed the trunk, went to her husband and asked him what three ears of corn and $10,000 were doing in the trunk of his car.

He then confessed that every time he was unfaithful to her, he would put an ear of corn in the trunk of his car. Her immediate anger was somewhat tempered when she realized that in 40 years, he had placed only three ears of corn in the trunk. Then she asked, "What is the $10,000 for?" He replied, "Every time I got a bushel of corn, I sold it."

Love, FRED

DEAR FRED: I always have

Dear Abby

ears for a corny story — especially one with a kernel of truth in it.

DEAR ABBY: I have just received your booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know." I ordered it to give to my 12-year-old niece. How I wish I had read this booklet 35 years ago. I am 44, experienced sex at 13, married at 16, had a child shortly after, and was divorced before I was 20.

I am now married to a very fine man, which was lucky for me considering the way I started out. Abby, it would be ideal if all pre-teens, teens, and even 20- and 30-year-olds would keep this very precious loving act for marriage, but those who don't need to know how to keep teen-age sex from ruining their lives.

Please keep telling young people what they ought to know. You are doing a wonderful job. Please advertise this booklet. It's the best $2.50 I ever spent.

LUCKY IN MEDFORD, ORE.
DEAR LUCKY: Thanks for your kind words. The booklet can be obtained by sending a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.

DEAR ABBY: Your reply to "Denver Dilemma" was somewhat shortsighted and narrow. I agree, to marry because you want to be a mother is a poor reason for marriage, but marriage is not required to become a mother — as many foolish teens have discovered to their chagrin.

You offer to "Denver" the options of single adoptive parenthood or finding a marriageable man, but why be so restrictive?

I am a 32-year-old professional woman who is also aware that my biological clock is running out, and I have a dear male friend who has agreed to be a sperm donor for me if, by age 35, I haven't met someone I want to marry. If "Denver" can be a single adoptive parent, she can just as well be a single natural parent, without going through the adoption process, or "scrounging around" for a marriageable man.

Having a partner to raise children with is ideal — but it's not the only way.

BIDING MY TIME

DEAR BIDING: Having a dear male friend who has agreed to donate his sperm should you "need" it is not without its problems. The child he has fathered biologically will be a life-long bond between you — and could conceivably (no pun intended) cause problems both legal and social later on. Think about it.

Study shows teen-suicide fueled by drinking and access to guns

CHICAGO (AP) — Teen-agers who were drunk when they committed suicide were seven times more likely to use a firearm, a new study found, suggesting teen-age suicides have been fueled in part by increased drinking and access to guns.

Researchers who conducted the study called the association "striking," but stopped short of saying they had established a causal link between alcohol use by teen-agers and their use of firearms to commit suicide.

"It's well known that individuals who are chronic abusers of alcohol have a much higher incidence of suicide than other groups," said Dr. Joshua Perper, coroner of Allegheny County, Pa., and one of the authors of the study published in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"What we're saying is that in adolescents, there appears to be an association between the drinking of alcohol and the use of firearms in a suicide."

Researchers reviewed suicides of 10- to 19-year-olds in Allegheny County, which includes Pittsburgh, from 1960 to 1983. They found that individuals with positive blood alcohol levels were five times more likely than other suicides to have used a firearm to commit suicide, and those individuals shown to be intoxicated were seven times more likely to have done so.

"Let's assume a person wants to commit suicide and drinks to give himself courage. Then you assume the suicide would occur shortly after drinking," said Perper. "If it occurs several hours after drinking, then perhaps it does show that alcohol intoxication predisposes one to commit suicide rather than the other way around."

Tap-dancing beats watching TV

DECATUR, Ill. (AP) — Gene Kelly, 76, would be proud.

Although this tap-dancing group isn't exactly singing in the rain, it is tap dancing.

The Decatur Park District Recreation Department's rockette tap-dancing classes for dancers 55-years-old and older is testing knees, tap shoes and memories of members of its two classes.

"I'm finding out I'm not as flexible as I used to be," says Joanne Richards, 56, of Decatur. She says she hadn't tapped since 1954, after taking lessons for about 18 years.

Richards says her memory of tap steps held out better than her old tap shoes, which she replaced because "the old ones were stiff like me."

Sue Powell, supervisor of cultural arts, says the program was started after one woman who had danced with the Kansas City Rockettes, a group of senior citizens that tap dances, suggested starting a Decatur performing group.

"If the group stays together and gets to the point where they are tapping up a storm, they may perform," Powell said at the time. "Ultimately we want that to happen."

"Jogging is so lonely," Dick Mosier, 60, says. "I read some place that tap is back."

Bill Conner, 60, says he joined the class to move on to similar forms of dance, including clogging, and because the class "beats watching TV."

But for Connie Oakes, 56, the decision to take tap lessons after years of taking her two daughters to lessons was planned.

"I've been saving the good taps from my daughters' shoes thinking I would do this," she says. "My daughters think it's great."

The classes offer a different challenge from teaching younger pupils for instructor Ellen Malayer.

"They come and think and ask intelligent questions," she says. "Then they go home and practice. They come and they pay attention."

FRED C. WHITE ... received Creative Research Medal

ATHENS, Ga. — Fred C. White — professor of agricultural economics at the University of Georgia and the son of Mr. and Mrs. F.W. White of Big Spring — was one of two faculty members honored recently as recipients of the Creative Research Medal for 1987.

The general problem addressed by White's research was how an economically viable agricultural sector can be maintained in the U.S.

The objectives of the research were to identify sources of these farm problems, to identify relevant policy alternatives to deal with these problems, and to assess the economic consequences of alternative policies affecting agriculture.

Medal presentations were made during the annual Research Awards banquet June 2, sponsored by the University of Georgia Research Foundation, Inc.

Peggy Skiles, a teacher at Big Spring High School, attended the 27th annual Texas Energy Science Symposium at the University of Texas at Austin, June 8-11. She was a guest of Texas Utilities Electric at the conference, co-sponsored by the university and the Texas Atomic Energy Research Foundation of which TU Electric is a member.

SUMATIKUMAR SAND ... awarded $500 scholarship

Sumatikumar "Sam" Sand was recently awarded a $500 scholarship by the Big Spring YMCA Soccer Association.

Sand, a 1987 graduate of Big Spring High School, graduated third in his class with a 3.9 grade point average. He was a member of the National Honor Society, Key Club and French Club.

He also coached and refereed youth soccer games here.

Sand plans to attend Texas A & M in the fall, with a biochemistry major.

Dear Abby surprised at reader response

KANSAS CITY, MO. — Presidential candidates take note! The 90 million-plus readers to DEAR ABBY have responded with overwhelming enthusiasm to Abby's survey in which she has asked men and women to tell her how many have cheated on their mates.

"So many thousands of letters are pouring in daily, I gave up counting and we're weighing them," said Abby. "I have had to add three to my staff just to cope with all this mail. We're flabbergasted at the response."

She said that so far the women who say they've never cheated on their mates represent the largest number of respondents, followed closely by the men who say they have.

"I suspect I may discover that the younger they are, the less faithful they are," said Abby of her respondents of both sexes.

"We'll all know in about four weeks as computers and electronic tabulators are necessary for this job. I'm stunned by the sheer magnitude of this response — we've certainly hit a nerve in the country."

Shiite source says American hostages smuggled to Iran

By MOHAMMED SALAM
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iranian Revolutionary Guards have smuggled two American hostages from Lebanon to Iran in coffins that traveled part of the way in an Iranian Embassy car, a Shiite Moslem source said today.

The source, who has been reliable in the past, told The Associated Press the two American captives were "probably Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland."

The source, speaking on condition of first taken from Lebanon to the Iranian Embassy in Damascus, the Syrian capital, "in coffins as Revolutionary Guards martyrs killed in action against Israel."

The coffins were driven from east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley to Damascus in a Revolutionary Guards jeep through a military road that crosses the Lebanese-Syrian border, the source said.

"An Iranian Embassy car which has a diplomatic license plate transported them from Damascus to Iran via

A second Shiite source, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said Iranian Embassy cars have been recently searched at Syrian border points over the of Iranian diplomats.

The weekly magazine Ash-Shiraa reported June 13 that "some" of the eight Americans kidnapped in Lebanon have been transferred to Iran, where a five-man panel named by Khomeini was working to trade them for U.S. weapons and Iranian funds frozen in U.S. banks.

In November, the magazine broke the story of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran.

On June 22, ABC reported two Americans were on trial in Iran but did not identify them. The report also said two Lebanese linked to the kidnapers were in Iran to testify against the Americans.

There have been various other unconfirmed reports linking the hostages to Iran. Iran has denied some of the reports, including one saying some hostages were held at the Iranian Embassy in Beirut.

The Iranian Revolutionary Guards came to Lebanon in 1982 after the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. They have established bases in east Lebanon and the Shiite slums of south Beirut and built the fundamentalist Hezbollah, or Party of God, alliance of Iranian-backed militias.

Syria maintains 25,000 troops in the Bekaa and northern territories under a 1976 peacekeeping mandate from the 21-nation Arab League. Syria sent 7,500 troops to Moslem west Beirut on Feb. 22 to militia warfare.

Glass, a former ABC correspondent from Los Angeles, was kidnapped in Beirut's southern suburb of Ouzai, a Hezbollah stronghold. He is one of 25 foreigners believed held by kidnapers. Pro-Iranian Shiite extremists are believed to hold most of the hostages.

Besides Glass, the American hostages are: Frank Herbert Reed, 53, director of the Lebanon International School; Joseph James Cicippio, 56, acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut; Edward Austin Tracy, 56, author; and three Beirut University College teachers — Jesse Turner, 39, Robert Polhill, 53, and Alann Steen, 47.

Home again

Pilot Joseph Longo, left, walks with his girlfriend, Leslie Premick, both of Greenburg, Pa., as he arrives at Andrews Air Force Base, Monday night. Longo, who was captured in Angolan airspace some two months ago, was freed Sunday.

Also missing is Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, who vanished Jan. 20 after leaving a Beirut hotel to meet with hostage holders.

In July 1982, the acting head of the American University of Beirut, David Dodge, was kidnapped in Lebanon. He was released one year later with the help of Syrian President Hafez Assad and with the direct mediation of Assad's brother Rifaat.

Although Washington did not disclose where Dodge was held, there were indications that he was taken to Iran and before his release was transferred to Syria for his flight home.

TERRY ANDERSON

anonymity, said the hostages were transported by way of Syria and Turkey. The transfer led Syria to restrict travel by Revolutionary Guards across the Lebanese-Syrian border, he said.

Anderson, 39, the AP's chief Middle East correspondent, was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut on March 16, 1985. He is the longest-held U.S. hostage. Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., acting dean of agriculture at American University of Beirut, was kidnapped June 9, 1985, in west Beirut.

Islamic Jihad, a Shiite group loyal to Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, claimed it kidnapped both men.

The reported transfer took place late in May, the Shiite source said. The two were Turkey," he added.

The Syrians, angered by the transfer of the hostages, have banned the estimated 3,000 Iranian Revolutionary Guards in the Bekaa from using military roads and also imposed "restrictions on the trans-border movements of Iranian diplomats in Lebanon and Syria," the source said.

The ban has stripped the Revolutionary Guards of the privilege to travel in and out of the Bekaa without being stopped at Syrian army checkpoints or border crossing posts.

Some of the restrictions by Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, had been seen as intended to free U.S. journalist Charles Glass, who was kidnapped June 17.

Grandparents innocent of interference

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — A couple who admitted they knew they were breaking the law have been found innocent of criminal charges for taking their 8-year-old granddaughter to Florida to keep her from her father.

A Josephine County Circuit jury deliberated an hour before returning innocent verdicts Monday on felony charges of first-degree custodial interference against Gregg and Thea Schilling, both 45.

The Schillings embraced as the verdicts were read. Cheers and applause erupted in the courtroom.

Schilling said he and his wife would resume efforts to win custody of their granddaughter, Eva, who has been living in California with her father since the Schillings' arrest in November. During their trial, they contended they were justified in breaking the law.

According to testimony, the Schillings fled Grants Pass in November 1984 with their granddaughter, though she was in the legal custody of the state.

Defense attorneys said the Schillings decided to flee in desperation after learning the state was going to recommend Eva live in California with her father, Robert Fordham, who was seeking custody.

Three doctors testified that they wrote letters saying Eva would suffer grave psychological damage if she was separated from the Schillings, who had raised her from the age of 9 months after she was physically abused.

Walter Durrell, the former boyfriend of Eva's mother, Marla Schilling, is accused of beating the child and giving her a bottle filled with acid. Durrell has been indicted on a charge of third-degree assault, but remains at large.

Little League
postponed

The city Little League tournament game between the National League Ponies and American League Astros, scheduled for Monday night, was postponed because of bad weather.

The game will be played tonight at the National League field at 8. Each team has lost one game. The winner will play the undefeated Texas League Tigers Wednesday at 8.

Coaches disagree on cost-cutting

DALLAS (AP) — The "Bold, New Experiment" of the NCAA's powerful Presidents Commission faced a stern test today as opposition rose up against cost-cutting measures aimed at restoring perspective to collegiate athletics.

The NCAA kicked off its special two-day convention, called by the Presidents Commission, with a forum on Monday on the role of athletics in American universities. The commission hopes to continue the forum for 1½ years, leading to major reforms at its 1989 convention.

Today, 43 less ambitious cost-cutting items were on a voting agenda. They would, among other things, cut scholarships, reduce lengths of seasons, cut the size of coaching staffs and set up commission studies of other possible areas of reduction.

Several of the items were expected to be tabled — the result, in part, of impassioned pleas during Monday's forum from some of the bigger athletic universities and their supporters.

Although there were suggestions ranging from a more equitable distribution of athletic wealth to the total abolition of bowl games and athletic scholarships, the most popular and professionally delivered speech at Monday's forum came from Michigan football coach Bo Schembechler.

"Big and successful does not mean corrupt. Not at all," Schembechler said, the pitch of his voice rising as though he were addressing a locker room full of striped football helmets. "Revenue producing is not a sin. How can it be a sin when we talk about revenue sharing? You mean it's more pleasant to receive than to give?"

Although Schembechler's remarks were greeted by applause and laughter, the Presidents Commission was confident of at least partial victory.

"I think that the major thing here is not so much (the voting on) the particular proposals. It's what people want to make of the particular proposal," said Ira Michael Heyman, president of Cal-Berkeley and the Presidents Commission's main speaker Monday. "If they want to read that a defeat of it means that this bold new experiment in the NCAA is dead, then there's a real worry about voting it down. If it gets voted down, I hope they don't read it that way."

"I think somebody made a perfectly valid observation that we really ought to be dealing with larger issues, and if a particular thing gets voted down because it seems to be flawed in some way, so it gets voted down."

Two proposals were expected to cause most of the argument on the floor today. One, resolution No. 19, would cut the total number of football scholarships from 95 to 90, a proposal of the Pacific-10 Conference and not the commission. The other, resolution No. 2, would limit the total playing and practice seasons in all sports to 26 weeks.

Schembechler said it would be impossible to operate a football program with less than 95 scholarships. The Pac-10, however, has been telling delegates here that if their football scholarship limit proposal is tabled or defeated, they will move that resolution No. 18, a proposal to cut grants in other sports, also be tabled.

Resolution No. 2 has drawn fire from, among others, the U.S. Olympic Committee. The USOC says a 26-week limit on practice and playing seasons would force potential international athletes in such sports as swimming and gymnastics to seek coaching elsewhere. "Most athletes will drop out of school and that defeats the whole purpose of the legislation," said Jeff Diamond of the U.S. Swimming Federation. "What choice do you have if you are a world class athlete with a chance of winning a gold medal?"

Jimmy Connors sweeps up a shot during his men's singles match against Kelly Evernden on the number two court at Wimbledon Monday. Connors won the match 6-1, 6-2, 6-7, 4-7, 8-3.

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Three-time champion Chris Evert and 17-year-old Gabriela Sabatini struggled through second-set let-downs against unseeded opponents to advance to the women's quarterfinals at Wimbledon today.

Evert, the third seed, wasted three match points on her serve before reaching the quarterfinals for the fourth consecutive year and the 15th time in 16 appearances at Wimbledon with a 6-2, 2-6, 7-5 victory over Ros Fairbank of South Africa.

Sabatini, seeded sixth, became a quarterfinalist for the second year in a row, beating 16-year-old Natalia Zvereva of the Soviet Union, the defending junior champion, 6-0, 2-6, 6-4.

Moving into the final eight with much more ease were Stefan Edberg, Claudia Kohde-Kilsch, Pat Cash and Diane Fromholtz Balestrat.

Edberg, the men's fourth seed from Sweden, dropped a set for the first time in the tournament before beating Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland 6-3, 6-7, 6-1, 6-4.

Kohde-Kilsch, the women's eighth seed from West Germany, beat 11th-seeded Catarina Lindqvist 6-4, 6-2. It marked the first time in seven Wimbledon appearances that Kohde-Kilsch had reached the quarterfinals. She will play Evert next.

Cash, the men's 11th seed from Australia and a quarterfinalist a year ago, beat Guy Forget of France 6-2, 6-3, 6-4.

Balestrat, of Australia, was a Wimbledon quarterfinalist in 1979. She ousted 15-year-old Mary Joe Fernandez of the United States 7-5, 6-2.

Following Sabatini and Zvereva onto Centre Court were the men's eighth and ninth seeds, Andres Gomez of Ecuador against Henri Leconte of France. Two-time champion Jimmy Connors, the seventh seed from the United States, then played unseeded Mikael Pernfors of Sweden.

On Monday, Connors beat New Zealand's Kelly Evernden 6-1, 6-2, 6-7, 6-3, while Pernfors eliminated 10th-seeded Tim Mayotte of the United States 2-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 7-5.

Reporters take stand in Suns drug hearing

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — After a stormy Maricopa County Superior Court session which saw reporters thrust into the role of newsmakers, Judge Michael Ryan has taken under advisement motions to dismiss drug charges against two Phoenix Suns players.

Called separately to the witness stand Monday, reporters Victor Dricks of the Phoenix Gazette and Charlotte-Anne Lucas of the Mesa Tribune turned aside or refused to answer questions about their contacts in the case.

Both cited the Arizona Shield Law, which allows a reporter to keep sources confidential, and accused prosecutor

James Keppel of using "a process of elimination" in an attempt to get the names of participants in the investigation who leaked information.

Dricks had done informed stories for about a week prior to the April 16 indictments of James Edwards, Jay Humphries and Grant Gondrezick, the three NBA players named in the case.

Keppel attributed the Mesa Tribune's obtaining both the grand jury transcript and a 1,128-page police investigative report to Lucas.

"Did you obtain this from an official source ... In other words, did you get a court order for the transcript?" he asked.

"No," Lucas answered. In subsequent testimony, she said she had worked from a complete copy of the transcript but declined to answer other questions.

Dricks, called to the stand earlier, told Keppel that, "Through a process of elimination ... If you ask me about A, B, C, D or E, you may ... (deduce) my sources."

He said later he was not subpoenaed and was given no warning that he might have to testify.

Edwards, a 7-foot-1 center, and guards Humphries and Gondrezick are among 12 people facing conspiracy or drug-use and drug-transfer counts in the case. Charges against a 13th defendant, former Suns player Garfield Heard, were dismissed and remanded to a grand jury for reconsideration.

Ryan also set a July 22 trial date for Edwards and Humphries. The judge has said he would like to combine the various defendants' cases, but Monday heard motions only for Edwards and Humphries.

Attorney Larry Debus of Phoenix, representing Edwards, alleged in two dismissal motions that Keppel had abused the prosecutor's advisory position with the grand jury. Debus told Ryan that sending Edwards' case back to the grand jury for reconsideration would not be a strong enough action.

Is the 'Thrill' gone?

By FRANK LUKSA
TIMES HERALD
SPORTS COLUMNIST

Maybe the late New York sports writer, Jimmy Cannon, said it first. He'll get posthumous credit here anyway. Cannon could turn a withering phrase.

It was he who said of Howard Cosell, "He changed his name from Cohen to Cosell, put on a toupee and, 'tells it like it is.'"

And he who described a hockey puck as, "A hard rubber disk that hockey players strike when they can't hit each other."

Cannon's put-downs are legend and still circulate among his tribesmen. Even the one where he said, "Sports is the toy department of life." Jimmy sometimes went too far.

I think what he also said, but can't prove through references, is something about snotty athletes. Guys who gave you the shaft when they're on top. The modern-day model would be Steve Carlton.

They're the ones who, when their time is running out and they need a kind, planted word, it's buddy-buddy time. Just like Carlton who granted exclusive, gee-whiz interviews to promote his desperate search for a pitching job with Cleveland.

"Why do they learn to say hello when it's time to say goodbye," Cannon wondered. If he didn't, someone with marvelous insight did.

The thought brings us in roundabout way and orposite fashion to Tony Hill of the Cowboys. As I learned last Tuesday and Wednesday, Hill has learned to say nothing when it's time to say...what?

Good-bye to his Cowboy career or hello to another useful season?

Two days of phone calls to Hill's home caught him, by sheer accident, at the other end. He wasn't returning call-back messages. This wasn't Thrill Hill I'd known for 10 years.

Tony has been a man of his word with the media. He always had several hundred for us. He was never at a loss for a soliloquy. He's a long-time source of notes, quotes and general ramble.

Never was the time more appropriate for Hill to speak. He's gotten distressing notices in the dailies. People have said naughty things about him. One of them was coach Tom Landry.

What Landry said was direct and harsh. Either Hill lost 20 pounds within the next month or he'd be cut. Landry never puts a public rip on his players. Well, almost never.

Nor does the coach demote starters in the off-season. It's never been done. A starter loses his position on the field though lack of performance. Not on the scales or on the basis of how many off-season workouts he's performed.

Never say never. Not when the Cowboys came home 7-9 last year. Not when the heat is on at Valley Ranch. We're talking mad coaches. They're kicking ankles and taking names out there.

Some names are gone. Howard Richards and Reggie Collier were dumped last week. Is Thrill gone, too? Did Tony's 198-pound playing weight expand to 230 last month? Is he shirking workouts?

Hello, Tony, how are you other than a year older (31) last Tuesday? Now about what Landry said.

"I just want to let it rest. No controversial deal," said Hill. "I don't want any publicity. Mum's the word."

But Tony... "I'd rather let it go. I'd rather not read another word until I go to camp."

Then you plan to play another season and not retire?

"Yeah, I guess so." You plan to play with the Cowboys?

"I hope to play here. I'm a mystery, I guess. I don't have any comment. I don't have anything to say pro or con. The best way is not to speak."

Dallas Cowboys veteran wide receiver Tony Hill may have a hard time keeping his spot on the roster this season.

This is not like you, Tony. "I have three kids. That (laughing) is not like me. Times have changed."

Three children? "Three girls. I got my hands full. One's 3 ½ years. One is 16 months and the other an infant born a week ago Tuesday. It's a new era."

But Tony... "I don't want any attention. Ten years. A knee operation. A shoulder operation. A bruised shoulder. I don't want to talk about it. Check with me Sept. 24 or Sept 7 or whatever."

OK, I will. "I don't have much information for you. Get a young guy."

Call (Mike) Sherrard. Call 'Pro (Mike Renfro)."

Don't hang up. You need only 11 catches to break Drew Pearson's club record for career receptions. You already beat him in total yardage, and he was the best all-time around here. Is that important to you?

"Leave me out. If you hear of anything else call me. If you need a source, an unidentified source, I'd be more than happy. Just don't write anything about me."

You got it, Tony. Mum's the word. The fact that you're in big trouble with the Cowboys will remain our secret.

Mavs No. 1 pick really a longshot

By SKIP BAYLESS
DALLAS TIMES HERALD
SPORTS COLUMNIST

Maybe Dr. Bay here can't see the forest for all those Mavs trees like Wenington and Blab.

Maybe, as CBS's Dick Stockton keeps saying, the Mavs are one of the NBA's deepest teams. Maybe, as Mavs G.M. Norm Sonju said, it didn't really matter whether he hired a coach before the draft, because the 20th pick of an unusually average crop wouldn't be a critical selection for a 55-victory franchise. Maybe the Mavs were in such a luxurious position that they could afford to spend a first-round pick on a 6-4 overachiever whose greatest talent is diving for loose balls.

Let's just hope Jim Farmer is as valuable to new Coach John MacLeod as Dale Ellis, Jay Vincent, Bill Garnett, Dallas Comegys or Reggie Lewis would have been. Let's hope dynamite depth comes in fairly small, white packages. Let's hope Farmer's hard-headed hustling detonates Mark Aguirre and Sam Perkins, as MacLeod hopes.

But the harder you look at the Mavs' bench, the more it looks like just another park bench. Maybe I've seen one too many Showtime dunks, but the Mavs have about as much depth as the Laker Girls. They should have an ocean of depth, but Dick Motta left the second shelf bare.

For ex-coach Motta, depth was more of a depth charge. Motta refused to play more than six or seven guys, so it didn't really matter that the Mavs kept stockpiling first-round picks the way the Hunts did silver. If a first-rounder wasn't better than Aguirre, Perkins, Rolando Blackman, Derek Harper or Roy Tarpley (all great picks) or than James Donaldson (acquired through all-time great trade), that first-rounder would do a lot of slam-sitting.

That's what happened to Ellis and Vincent. Motta simply wouldn't play them. If Ellis and Motta were still in Dallas, Ellis still would watch most games from the doghouse and make the locker room miserable for teammates. Who cares that Ellis turned into a great first-round pick in Seattle? He was just in Motta's way.

So was Al "Balsa" Wood, the best the Mavs could get for Ellis. Once a first-rounder, Wood turned out to be just another Dennis Nutt, an end-of-the-bench who also serves as mascot.

Depth? The Mavs, built on a "Cowboys Model," may be developing some Cowboy Mystique. The Dick Stocktons are starting to think the Mavs are more loaded than they really are.

Which brings us to the plague known as White Man's Disease, which Dr. Bay is overqualified to discuss. It seems like the Mavs have chosen more white guys than the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. When some white activist decides not enough whites are getting to play in the NBA, the Mavs' management will be safe.

Yet I don't care if the Mavs draft Danny White — if he can play. Garnett (the fourth player picked) couldn't. Neither can Detlef Schrempf — not when you consider he was the eighth player picked, ahead of Karl Malone and Joe Dumars. The "poor man's Larry Bird" couldn't carry Bird's wallet. Sure, Detlef plays hard, but so do about 12,000 other guys.

In that same pre-Donaldson 1985 draft, the Mavs wasted two more first-rounders on giant Caucasians, hoping one would miraculously turn into Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. Bill Wenington and Uwe Blab are nice guys who belong in Hoop-D-Do.

Maybe '85's Kingston Trio will improve miraculously under MacLeod, who utilizes nine or 10 men and loves overachievers. But I'd prefer Michael Cooper or Mychal Thompson or even a 6-9 underachiever like Comegys on my bench. Take a look at the trees growing on Detroit's (Rodman, Salley, Mahorn, Bedford) and tell me Dallas is deeper than China.

It concerns you when you hear Jim Farmer has great speed and leaping ability for a white guy, and when the Mavs say, "Well, here's that tough cookie who'll help us beat the media rap that we're a pansie team." Think Farmer, at a bulked-up 6-4, will intimidate Kareem and Magic? Let's hope so.

Danny Ainge, the NBA's best white athlete, is 6-5.

Steve Alford, the Mavs' steal of a second-round choice, is 6-2.

San Francisco Giants batter Joel Youngblood points to unconscious umpire Billy Williams as Atlanta Braves catcher Ozzie Virgil (upper right), watches, after Braves pitcher Zane Smith collided with the umpire on a suicide squeeze during the fifth inning Monday. Youngblood was tagged out on the play.

Mets blow another

By The Associated Press

Even though it's only the last day of June, the New York Mets are doing the kinds of things that make for long seasons and short pennant races.

For the second straight game, the defending champions blew a four-run lead and lost. On Monday night, it took 11 sloppy innings before New York fell to St. Louis 8-7 on Ozzie Smith's RBI single.

The defeat dropped the Mets 7½ games behind the first-place Cardinals in the National League East — the most they have trailed this season.

It was also the 25th time this season that the Cardinals have come from behind to win. And it was the sixth time in seven games St. Louis has beaten the Mets.

Cardinals 8, Mets 7

Vince Coleman led off the 11th against reliever Jesse Orosco, 1-6, with a walk and stole his 50th base of the season. Smith, after failing on a sacrifice attempt, drove a single to right and Coleman easily beat Darryl Strawberry's throw to the plate.

Down 7-3 after five innings, the Cardinals scored two runs in the seventh and one each in the eighth and ninth to tie the score 7-7.

Phillies 6, Pirates 5

Phillies 11, Pirates 3

In the first game, Steve Bedrosian set a major-league record with his 12th save in 12 straight appearances and rookie Keith Hughes broke a sixth-inning tie with his first major-league hit.

Bedrosian pitched two innings to break the record set by Sparky Lyle with the New York Yankees in 1973. It was Bedrosian's 19th save of the season.

Mike Schmidt and Darren Daulton each hit two-run doubles in the first inning and Philadelphia added six runs in the sixth in the nightcap to complete the sweep. Von Hayes highlighted the inning with a three-run homer.

Braves 1, Giants 0

Zane Smith shut out the Giants at Candlestick Park for the second time this season by pitching a five-hitter.

Cubs 9, Expos 5

The Cubs broke a five-game losing streak and their offensive slump with a 20-hit attack, including four each by Dave Martinez and Paul Nove.

Jerry Mumphrey drove in three runs for Chicago with two singles and a double as the Cubs pounced on Montreal starter Larry Sorensen, 3-4, for four runs in the first inning, including a two-run homer by Leon Durham and Keith Moreland's solo shot.

Padres 3, Dodgers 0

Rookie Jimmy Jones held Los Angeles to two singles over the final eight innings in relief of injured San Diego starter Storm Davis.

Jones, 2-3, struck out two and walked two to complete the Padres' fourth shutout of the season and their 12th victory in 16 games. Jones' longest outing this year had been six innings.

Outdoor trails

Elks, bears, dreams and cinders

By H. BOYCE HALE

It was a long wait, but fall finally did arrive that year just as it always does. But to an elk hunting trio in Big Spring, it seemed much too long to wait.

Dr. Clyde Thomas and his late hunting buddies, Dr. Wofford Hardy and John Allred, had planned to hunt in the Bob Marshall Wilderness Area of the Lewis and Clark National Forest of Montana.

Upon their arrival at Augusta, Mont. they met with their rancher friend who would provide a horse to pack them into the area. When loaded, they began the day-long trek into the mountains.

While negotiating a winding, narrow trail, a large bear reared near the lead horse. The riders were able to control their mounts, but one of the pack animals bolted and fell from the trail.

As the horse plunged into the canyon, a stove and several lengths of pipe broke free from the pack, falling noisily to the canyon bottom.

As the riders looked at the crumpled horse and pile of heating equipment in the bottom of the canyon, an echo re-played the episode.

Despite that mishap, the hunters reported a successful trip on their return home. And the trio began to plan a hunt for desert mule deer in the trans-Pecos area.

Two days before the season, they completed the several-hours drive from Big Spring to the Davis Mountains.

This time they would have much more comfortable facilities from which to operate — a five-room house with fireplace, kitchen and bedrooms.

After supper and a session of story-swapping by the fireplace, Dr. Hardy was the first to call it a night.

His room contained a wood-burning stove in one corner, but it couldn't be used because the pipe had been removed and stacked nearby.

Sometime later, after John and Dr. Thomas had retired, a clanging noise erupted from Doc's room. John and Dr. Thomas grabbed their flashlights and rushed to Hardy's room.

There they found him on his knees swatting at the stove, knocking the pipe about the room and yelling, "Git out of here, shoo; d-n you, you ain't gonna eat me."

"As he continued to flail about, John and Dr. Thomas shook him by the shoulder.

"Did you see the bear?" the doc asked, prompting a round of hardy laughter.

"It ain't so funny," he muttered.

As a matter of record, he sat near the fire for the remainder of the night.

During the 1920s, I lived in the coal mining town of Thurber. And near our house, the hot cinders from the power plant were clumped.

As they cooled, they would form piles of erie formations that attracted my cousins and I for many hours of "Hide and Seek" was the favorite game but, for variety, we'd occasionally have a rubber gun fight.

One day I fell and landed on my hands and knees. The sharp edges of the cinders produced some severe scratches and I ran crying to my mother. Then I got a spanking, too.

With my tears flowing, mother lectured to me about the dangers of playing on the cinder piles. Then, as tender as a mother can be, she applied "monkey blood" to my wounds and blew on the area to keep it from burning.

Although faced with the threat of another spanking, I would return again and again to play on the cinders.

Recently I walked in the place where the cinders had been piled. In spite of the traffic on nearby Interstate 20, I could hear voices of the past: "One, two three, and you're out."

Yankees win slug-a-thon, 15-14

By The Associated Press

Owner George Steinbrenner, who once ridiculed Dave Winfield's run production by calling him "Mr. May," is going to have to come up with a new nickname for his power-hitting outfielder. How about Mr. June?

In 26 games this month, Winfield has batted .306 with 25 runs batted in and seven home runs. Monday night, he drove in six runs with two homers, the second an eighth-inning grand slam, as the Yankees outlasted the Toronto Blue Jays 15-14.

It was an emotional victory for the Yankees, who took a one-game behind the seven-hit pitching of Richard Dotson; Pete O'Brien singled in the deciding run in the eighth as Texas beat Seattle 4-3; and Bo Jackson's homer allowed Kansas City to beat Minnesota 3-2 in a game called after 4½ innings because of rain.

Yankees 15, Blue Jays 14

On a night when the wind was blowing out of Toronto's Exhibition Stadium, the Yankees and Blue Jays combined for eight home runs, including two grand slams by the Yankees to tie a major-league record.

Don Mattingly connected for the first one in the second inning to give New York an 8-3 lead that eventually reached 11-4 before Toronto unleashed its own long-ball attack.

Willie Upshaw hit a solo homer and Lloyd Moseby a three-run shot in the sixth. An inning later, a two-run double by Tony Fernandez and a two-run single by Jesse Barfield capped a six-run inning that gave Toronto a temporary lead.

Dave Righetti, 5-3, picked up the victory despite being roughed up for four hits that allowed three unearned runs in the seventh.

The loss went to Tom Henke, 0-3, who served up the game-winning homer to Winfield.

Red Sox 14, Orioles 3

Boggs, who lifted his average to .384, was upset that he missed hitting for the cycle against the hapless Orioles, who lost for the 25th time in 30 games.

Boggs singled in a run in the first, tripled for two more in the fourth and hit his second career grand slam in the sixth.

He was thinking cycle when he came to bat in the seventh, but all he got was a pop to shortstop.

Left-hander Bruce Hurst, 9-5 overall and 7-1 in 10 Fenway Park starts, allowed 10 hits in his seventh complete game of the year. After winning his last six decisions, Baltimore's Dave Schmidt crashed to 8-2 when he failed to survive the first inning, allowing six hits and four runs.

This was the 15th time in AL history that three grand slams had been hit on the same day. Boston's Ellis Burks and Marty Barrett and Cleveland's Tony Bernardard did it earlier this season.

Tigers 11, Brewers 1

Morris, 11-3, got out of the first inning unscathed despite walking the bases loaded, then limited Milwaukee to two hits through the next six innings. He struck out seven and walked six.

The Tigers took a 4-0 lead in the second off Chris Bosio, 3-2, who was making his first start of the season. Chet Lemon singled in the first run, Tom Brookins doubled in two more and scored on two wild pitches by Bosio. Lou Whitaker had a two-run single to highlight a six-run Tigers uprising in the rain-delayed fifth.

Angels 11, Indians 4

Don Sutton, 5-8, moved past Gaylord Perry to 12th on the all-time list with his 315th pitching victory. Cleveland has given up 71 runs in the 72 innings of an eight-game losing streak.

The 42-year-old Sutton allowed six hits and two runs in five innings before two lengthy rain delays ended his evening. Greg Minton pitched four innings for his fourth save. Cleveland starter Greg Swindell, 3-8, gave up four runs in five innings.

Joyner's run-scoring single made it 4-0 in the third and he hit a three-run homer to highlight a six-run rally in the seventh.

White Sox 5, Athletics 2

Harold Baines and Ivan Calderon hit consecutive home runs in the third inning and Dotson, 5-5, allowed seven hits. Oakland, which had 23 runs and 10 homers in two previous games against Cleveland, managed only two extra-base hits off Dotson.

With the score 1-1 in the bottom of the third, Baines hit his 10th homer of the year. Three pitches later, Curt Young, 9-5, served up Calderon's 10th homer.

Dotson struck out seven and walked four in his third complete game, ending Oakland's four-game winning streak.

Rangers 4, Mariners 3

Pete O'Brien, who has hit .356 with 22 RBI in June, singled home Jerry Browne in the eighth inning to make a winner of reliever Mitch Williams.

Williams, 5-3, struck out four in two innings after taking over for Greg Harris, who went seven innings.

Browne singled off reliever Stan Clarke, 2-1, and advanced to second on an infield single by Ruben Sierra before O'Brien singled to center.

Royals 3, Twins 2

Kansas City squeezed out all the runs it needed in the seven minutes between two rain delays in the fifth inning at Royals Stadium. After taking three balls from Minnesota starter Les Straker, 3-5, Frank White sat out a 20-minute delay before rapping a single to center.

Ex-Astros outfielder charged with assault

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Houston Astros star Cesar Cedeno has been charged with misdemeanor assault in connection with an incident at a nightclub in the Houston suburb of Nassau Bay, police say.

Cedeno, 36, is accused of smashing a glass into a man's face late Sunday, according to Nassau Bay police Lt. Dave Stall.

Stall said bond has been set at $500. Cedeno has not been arrested, but an arrest warrant has been issued. Stall said late Monday.

lead over the Blue Jays in the American League East. New York saw an 11-4 lead turn into a 14-11 deficit before Winfield's eighth-inning heroics.

It was the 12th victory in 17 games for New York since Toronto swept three games at Yankee Stadium to build a 2½-game lead.

In other American League games Monday night, major league batting leader Wade Boggs drove in seven runs with a grand slam, a two-run triple and a single as Boston thrashed Baltimore 14-3; Jack Morris won his 11th game as Detroit bombed Milwaukee 11-1; Wally Joyner drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single as California won its eighth in a row, 11-4 over Cleveland; Chicago cooled off Oakland 5-2

Cost-Cutting

Jackie Sherrill said there could be so much discussion of the 26-week season "that we may not get to the rest of the convention."

Since football and basketball fall generally within the 26-week limit, there was not expected to be much opposition from those sports. In fact, Schembechler said, "If you want to do that, we'll go along with it."

A proposal to reduce spring football practice from 36 to 30 days was expected to pass unopposed. There also was a proposal to eliminate spring practice in Division II.

Bork considered strong candidate for Court post

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has pruned the list of candidates for the Supreme Court vacancy, with speculation focusing on Robert H. Bork, a strongly conservative federal appeals court judge, as the most likely nominee.

"I would just be shocked if it wasn't Bork," a senior administration official said Monday, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater acknowledged Bork was still in the running after Reagan met with advisers in the Oval Office to review candidates' names and their legal opinions.

"Some preliminary judgments were made today, some winnowing of candidates," Fitzwater said.

However, the spokesman insisted that no final decisions were made and that more than one candidate remained under consideration to succeed Justice Lewis F. Powell, who announced his resignation last Friday.

It appeared likely the decision would be made quickly, perhaps as early as today, when Reagan was to meet with congressional leaders.

Along with Bork, other people frequently mentioned as likely candidates are Republican Sen. Orrin G. Hatch of Utah and two other appeals court judges, Robert A. Posner of Chicago and J. Clifford Wallace of San Diego.

Signaling that the selection process was moving speedily, Fitzwater said consultations were about to begin with key members of Congress.

Fearful of a conservative takeover of the nation's highest court, Democrats warned the White House they would carefully check the credentials of the eventual nominee, who will be subject to approval by the Democratic-controlled Senate.

"Clearly what the radical right and the administration cannot enact through the legislative process, they seek to impose by judicial fiat by altering the ideology of the Supreme Court," said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the assistant Democratic floor leader.

Cranston, in a letter to fellow Democratic senators, said a nominee who possessed the qualifications, independence and balance of Powell — who was viewed as a moderate — likely would be confirmed.

However, Cranston added, "If the president instead nominates someone more on the basis of ideology, our responsibility as senators will be to prevent an ideological court coup."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a member of the Judiciary Committee that will review the nomination, said, "We're replacing the pivotal member of the Supreme Court. This is a far more important Supreme Court appointment than any that President Reagan has made before."

Reagan, in his 6½ years in office, has appointed Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia to the high court and promoted William H. Rehnquist to chief justice.

Fitzwater said candidates would not be judged on whether they oppose abortion or other individual issues important to conservatives. "There are no specific issues that will be litmus tests," he said.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III stressed the same point in a speech in Chautauqua, N.Y.

"We don't have any test. We don't care about the political or ideological allegiance of a prospective judge," Meese said. "We are concerned about how they view the Constitution and how they view their particular responsibilities as a jurist."

... likely Supreme Court nominee

The comment drew laughter from many in the audience of about 3,000 people.

Later, Meese went to the White House to meet with Reagan, Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr. and presidential counsel A.B. Culvahouse to review candidates. William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights who is helping Meese review candidates, also attended.

In predicting Bork's selection, the administration official said Bork and Scalia were the two finalists for the last opening on the court, and that both were judged equally sound and confirmable.

"Regardless of what Meese or Baker thinks, the president's natural inclination is going to be: 'Why not Bork?'"

Bork is best known nationally for his role in 1973 as solicitor general when he fired Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox on orders of then-President Richard Nixon after higher-ranking officials refused.

However, Bork's supporters say that episode probably will not hurt him because then-Attorney General Elliott Richardson — who quit rather than fire Cox — says publicly he had urged Bork to do as Nixon ordered.

"I think he would be an outstanding member of the court," Richardson said Monday, noting that Bork tended to be more conservative than he is.

Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., in a meeting with reporters, said he thought Reagan might be "inviting problems" if he nominated Bork. Later, however, Byrd said he thought Bork could win confirmation.

He also said he didn't know any reason why Hatch couldn't be confirmed by the Senate. But he said the House would have to join the Senate in passing special legislation to keep Hatch from running afoul of a provision in the Constitution that prohibits a senator from taking a job for which he has voted to raise the pay.

AIDS concern youth; less interested in salaries

AMHERST, N.Y. (AP) — Today's high school leaders want general AIDS testing and less sexual promiscuity, but they care much less than their recent predecessors about how much money they make, a new survey says.

The survey conducted Monday, the first day of the 51st annual conference of the National Association of Student Councils, involved about 1,300 of the 1,700 student leaders from around the nation attending the weeklong meeting in this Buffalo suburb.

"In surveys we've done with the kids in the last few years, making money was much more important," said NASC spokesman Lew Armistead. "Today they seem far more concerned with social issues."

The survey addressed 39 questions on current topics, trends and the students' hopes for the future. The association acknowledges that the annual survey, in its fourth year, does not try to be scientific, but that general conclusions can be drawn from the responses.

When asked to rank the five major values in their lives, 27 percent of the students ranked having a successful career as most important, followed by a good first marriage, being better parents than their own are, and contributing to society, each with roughly 20 percent of the vote.

Making more money, which had been top-ranked in most previous surveys according to Armistead, was a distant fifth, with only 11 percent of the students ranking that as most important.

When asked whether there should be general testing for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 89 percent of those responding said yes.

Asked if there is now too much promiscuity in American society, 48 percent said yes, 20 percent said no and 22 percent said they weren't sure.

Three rescued pilot whales return to sea

BOSTON (AP) — Three young pilot whales took to the open sea and cavorted with dolphins, delighting scientists who had nursed the mammals back to health in a first-of-its-kind effort to return them to the wild after beaching.

"I think they are doing very well," Tim Ramage said Monday night, hours after the whales were released. "All the signs are good."

"The animals are doing all the things that we could possibly hope for them to be doing that shows that they are recovered," said Ramage, a member of the New England Aquarium Stranding Team.

The jet-black, 1,000-pound, 2-year-old whales dubbed Notch, Baby and Big Brute — also known as Tag — were released earlier Monday about 115 miles from Boston's New England Aquarium after a trip aboard the 187-foot Albatross IV.

The whales quickly joined a group of dolphins and began swimming on their backs and corkscrewing through the water, officials said. The trio soon joined a group of humpback whales and swam seaward, with the Albatross following about a quarter-mile behind.

"All three of them are together, they're moving well through the water, they've got good body angles and positions, they're diving well — all those are things we want to see in these animals," said Ramage.

Researchers said they could recall no other such effort to rescue, raise and return three whales to the sea.

The three calves were among about 50 whales that beached on Cape Cod in December. About two dozen died, but researchers and volunteers shoved the rest back into the water and they are presumed to have survived.

Scientists attached transmitters to the three whales so they can be tracked. They hope the animals will join a herd, or pod, of about 100 others in the area. The calves' fate will help scientists determine whether they should interfere in future beachings, in which whales overheat and suffer severe internal injuries from the crush of their own weight.

Aquarium Director John Prescott said the mission was more an endeavor to learn about whales and their lives at sea than a life-saving operation.

"It's not a practical way to return whales to the wild. I don't see us doing this every year," he said in a ship-to-shore interview.

Scientists had planned to gently return the whales to the ocean by letting them acclimate themselves in a 22-foot-square, 6½-foot-deep pen, but a wave defeated them.

Notch was being lowered into the ocean in a basket when the animal was washed into water outside the pen. The whale appeared unharmed and swam beside the research vessel while it cruised slowly over 4 to 5-foot waves on a humid, sunny day.

A short while later, Baby and Big Brute were lowered into the open water. They "immediately linked up with Notch," said Mimi Simpson, an aquarium employee aboard an observation vessel.

The ship will track them until its return to port Thursday, after which satellites and occasionally planes will provide the monitoring for a month.

Whales are highly social animals and researchers considered it critical that the three join a large pod. If the pod rejects the whales, scientists hope the calves can survive on their own, said aquarium spokeswoman Sandra Goldfarb.

The three calves, which were deemed too young and weak to survive the beaching in December, were trucked to the New England Aquarium, where they were held in a 60,000-gallon pool shielded from human distractions. Aquarium employees fed, massaged and exercised them.

A fourth rescued whale refused to eat, and was given a lethal injection.
