Fliers grounded

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA on Monday grounded two veteran space shuttle commanders, one involved in a fatal stunt plane crash last weekend and another involved in a near mid-air collision last year.

Navy Cmdr. Robert L. "Hoot" Gibson and Navy Capt. David M. Walker were grounded for violating Johnson Space Center flight crew operations guidelines, NASA said. Gibson was grounded for one year and Walker for 60 days.

Walker was suspended for a May 1989 incident in which the pilot of a Pan Am Airbus 310 reported a "near mid-air collision" between his aircraft and a T-38 jet flown by Walker.

Gibson's stunt plane on Saturday collided with another plane, sending the second craft hurtling into a cornfield and killing its pilot, Henry W. Jones Jr., 69, a retired fighter pilot from Newport News, Va.

It is beginning to sound like a broken record.

Weather conditions? Hot and dry.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, today's high is expected to reach the mid- to upper 90s. And although there is a slight chance for late afternoon thunderstorms, the weatherman says, "Don't bet the ranch on it." Twenty percent chance of rain is the best he can come up with.

So it looks like more of the same. Hot and dry.

MCHD to delay request for sales tax hike

■ Hospital directors accept city's offer to wait for state Legislature to change take hike law.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland County hospital directors Monday pulled a half-cent sales tax proposal off the Aug. 11 ballot, but board President Tom Bruner said a whopping 33 percent property tax hike may be needed to balance the budget.

Bruner said the hospital district did not want to fight with the city of Midland over the last half cent of available sales tax in Midland County.

Instead, directors unanimously decided to accept the city's tentative offer to wait for a change in state legislation allowing each entity to pursue a quarter cent, Bruner said.

City councilmen, who voted on first reading last Friday to also put a half-cent proposal before voters Aug. 11, are scheduled to decide today whether to go on with their election. Wednesday is the deadline to put an item on that ballot.

But Councilman J.D. Faircloth said councilmen likely would honor the city's compromise offer extended to the hospital district.

"I assume the council will back off also," Faircloth said. "We agreed to rescind if the hospital did and let the Legislature take action.

"I'm pleased with the hospital's vote. If we would have both tried to go for the half cent, we would have put the voters in a terrible position."

State law permits only one taxing entity to take advantage of the available half cent, which would have raised the coun-

Leaders divided on aid to Moscow

By Matthew C. Quinn
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — President Bush convened the summit of the leading industrialized democracies Monday and urged their leaders to confront the challenges of a "new world of freedom" in the wake of the Cold War.

At the end of their first session, the seven leaders remained divided on whether to send economic aid to the Soviet Union.

During elaborate ceremonies in withering heat and humidity on the campus of Rice University, Bush welcomed the leaders of West Germany, France, Britain, Japan, Canada, Italy and Canada to what he called the first summit of the "post-post-war era" that will "set the stage for the new millennium."

"A new world of freedom lays before us; hopeful, confident," Bush said. "Together, we're called upon as allies and friends to work toward decisions here in Houston that will bring a new stability and prosperity to the world by tapping the power and energy of free wills and free markets."

Dealing with an appeal from Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev for economic assistance to bolster his economic and political reforms has proven a thorny issue for the summit leaders.

Faced with an inability to agree on a common course, the summit leaders were moving toward a "set of guiding

Williams has another round of commercials for TV viewers

■ Clayton Williams plans a steady diet of ads until the election.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Republican Clayton Williams hits the airwaves again this week with another round of television commercials, hoping to capitalize on an early lead in gubernatorial opinion polls.

The summer TV blitz comes well before the traditional Labor Day campaign start. But his aides said Monday that the Midland oilman would keep up a "very substantial" radio and television barrage until the November election.

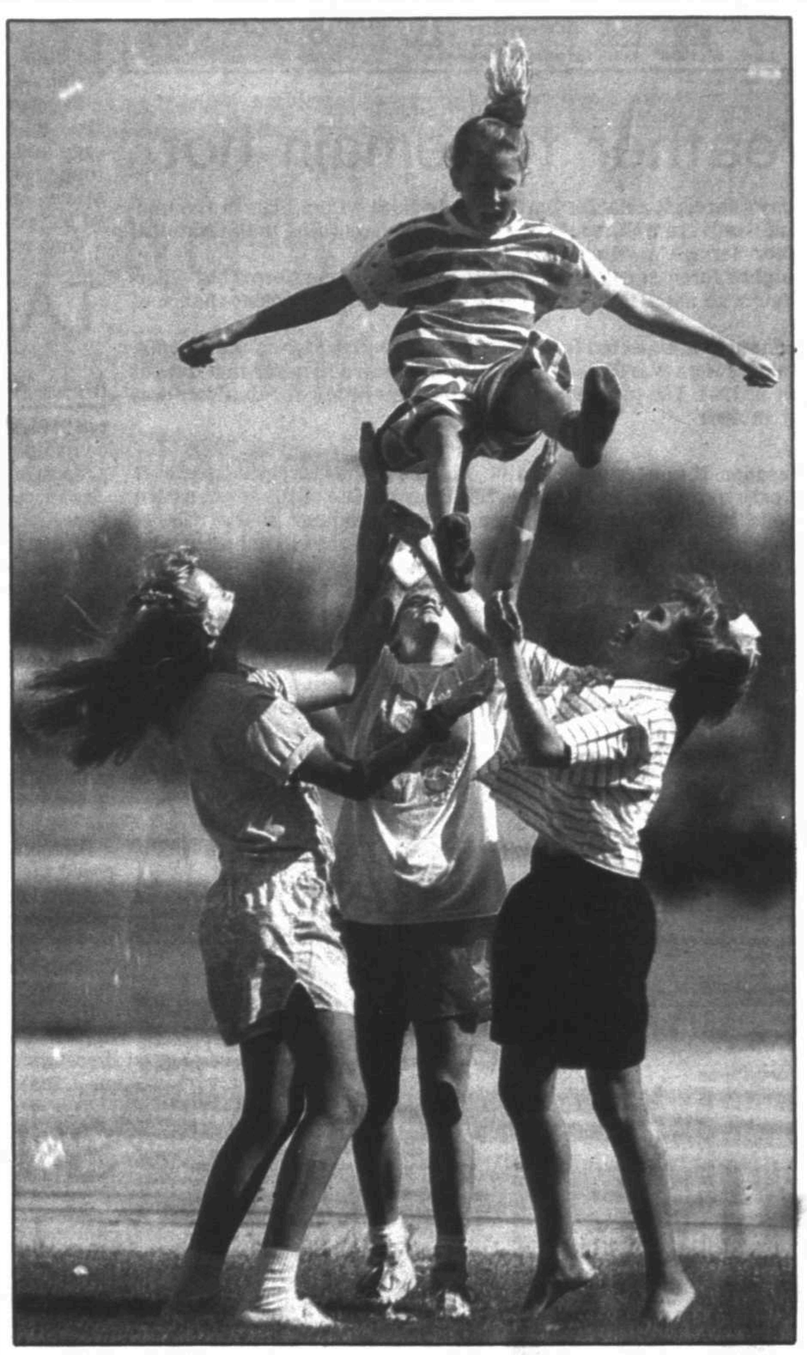

"We think the season's starting a little early this year," said Williams adviser Bill Kenyon. "We always try to be one step ahead of the curve."

Williams aired his first general election commercials last month. He now has produced two new ads that will be shown in several smaller television markets over the next two weeks, Kenyon said.

So far, Democratic candidate Ann Richards hasn't returned any televised fire. Campaign spokesman Glenn Smith said the Democrat sees no reason to begin advertising so soon.

"We're out talking to the people," Smith said. "The audience for those ads is greatly diminished in the summertime. But the rates are lower, so it doesn't cost him as much to advertise."

Summer camp helps youth beat boredom

By Myra Lee Salcedo

Grabbing Gummy Worms with their toes out of buckets of water and stuffing balloons down sweat pants are just two of the zany ways children at Lee Youth Center are beating summer boredom.

Monday was the first day of Super Summer Day camp at the center, located at 3500 Neely.

"It's a lot of fun," said Samantha Bakke, 12, who is a repeat camper. "I came last summer, too," she said. "This time I will be playing tennis, dancing, cheerleading and doing arts and crafts."

Children who have completed grades first through sixth are participating in a host of activities including basketball, cheerleading, arts and crafts, tennis, gymnastics and football through Friday.

The highlight of the week will be the Friday Olympics which will feature such antics as musical water guns and the limbo.

"It gets wild," said Frank Savage, coordinator of the program with Janet Swallow.

The activities are lead by high school students which has resulted in an additional bonus. "We didn't realize at first how the high school students were becoming role models. The younger kids really look up to them," Savage said.

The success of the program is underscored by attendance. "Last year we had about 25 children per session. This year we have 70-80," Ms. Swallow said.

"The program is really two-fold," Ms. Swallow said. "Besides providing fun activities for children, the program employs and trains high school students."

World's richest man reportedly worth $16 billion

■ A Japanese developer leads Forbes magazine's list of the world's richest people.

By Bart Ziegler

NEW YORK (AP) — A Japanese developer again topped a list of the world's richest people, but this year's billionaire tally has one conspicuous deletion: Donald J. Trump.

Despite the New York developer's financial troubles, the United States continues to contain the world's largest number of billionaries — 62 — according to Forbes magazine. In addition, there are 37 U.S. families with fortunes over $1 billion, Forbes said in its July 23 issue.

In estimates released Monday, Forbes said the world's wealthiest person for the fourth-straight year was Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, whose railroad and real estate empire includes golf courses, ski resorts and hotels. Forbes estimated his net worth at $16 billion, up about $1 billion from last year.

Forbes' estimate was far greater than that of rival business magazine Fortune, which put Tsutsumi's net worth at $3.1 billion last September.

Fortune said the world's richest person is the Sultan of Brunei, at $25 billion. Forbes doesn't include heads of state.

Following the 56-year-old Tsutsumi on Forbes' list was Japanese developer Taikichiro Mori, a former economics professor who now owns 78 office buildings. Forbes put Mori's net worth at $14.6 billion.

Third was the family of Sam Walton, founder of Wal-Mart, the third-largest U.S. retail chain. Forbes estimates that the Waltons, who also were third-ranked last year, are worth $13.3 billion, up from $8.7 billion in 1989.

America's du Pont family was fourth, with a net worth at $10 billion. They were followed by Swedish brothers Hans and Gad Rausing, who control a packaging empire worth $9.6 billion.

Kitaro Watanabe, a Japanese real estate owner, was sixth at $9.2 billion. He was followed by Canada's Reichmann brothers, owners of the Olympia & York real estate company, at $9 billion.

Kenkichi Nakajima and his family, founder of Japan's largest maker of pachinko machines, a gambling game similar to pinball, were eighth at $8.4 billion.

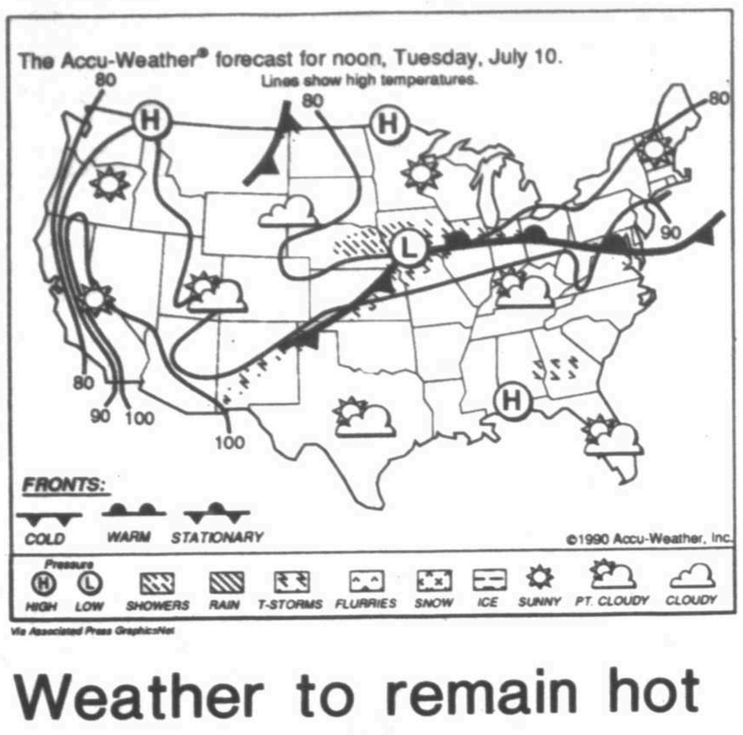

South Korea's Shin Kyuk-ho, who owns a candy and real estate empire, was ninth at $7 billion to $8 billion; and Forrest E. Mars and family of the United States, of Mars candy fame, were 10th at an estimated $6 billion.

Other American families with net worth exceeding $3 billion were the Newhouse, Hearst and Cox families, who derive their fortunes from publishing and broadcasting; the Bass family of Texas; the Mellon family of banking fame; the Dorrance family, whose

Fancy foods displayed for the munching

By Kiley Armstrong

NEW YORK (AP) — Restaurant and gourmet shop purveyors savored caviar soup, cactus salsa and other eccentric vittles Monday at a 19,000-course meal: the international fancy-food trade show.

"It adds a prickly flavor," W. Park Kerr, president of the El Paso Chile Co., said of his salsa, which features cactus leaves that were harvested "very, very carefully," then dethorned with a vegetable peeler.

Kerr was among about 1,250 vendors who eagerly angled their estimated 19,000 products at the Fancy Food & Confection Show in the Javits convention center. Their customers, thousands of industry buyers, milled around — munching, networking and sipping wine from shot-glass-size plastic cups.

Show-goers were plied with olives, espresso and wild-rice muffins; Belgian waffles, turkey sausage and espresso. Crackers were topped with cheese, or dipped in sauces and jams. Bags of "all-natural" potato chips beckoned.

One woman, wearing shocking-pink roller skates and matching miniskirt, circulated with a tray of scones. An array of cake, cookies and chocolates made for a dieter's dream — or nightmare.

Tom and Sally Fegley of Brattleboro, Vt., hawked "Cow Pies." The chocolate patties, with labels bearing animal cartoons, are sold in Washington, D.C., as "Donkey Pies"; in New Jersey as "Road Apples"; in Maine as "Moose Pies" and — well, you get the picture.

"Ham I Am," a company from Plano, Texas, offered Hogwash, a sweet-pungent sauce, sampled with cubes of peppered ham. Company founder Sharon Meehan, mother of four, invented Hogwash in her kitchen; now it's sold by Nieman-Marcus and elsewhere for about $5 a jar.

Bewley Irish Imports suggested topping toast with orange-whiskey marmalade. "It does give you a little nip, but you don't get a buzz at breakfast, unless maybe you eat the whole jar," advised assistant manager Chris Hausler.

The Hansen Caviar Company Inc. had a chef whip up a little chilled beluga caviar soup. The recipe calls for one-half pound ripe tomatoes, 1 cucumber, 2 onions. Actually, with 14 ounces of Hansen-Sturm Russian Beluga retailing for up to $750, do inquiring minds really want to know?

Ron Tanner, spokesman for the National Association for the Specialty Food Trade Inc., said he'd noticed more health-oriented products, such as low-cholesterol cheeses and sugar-free jams and cookies, aimed at the general market this year.

But Tanner said that doesn't necessarily indicate a trimming trend. Instead, he said, Americans seem to be devouring the decadent stuff — then assuaging their guilt with diet foods.

There was opportunity for both at the convention center. At the show, which continues through Wednesday, even the strong capitulated at the sight and aroma of food, food, food.

In their midst was a courageous model of self-control: James Gilbert, salesman for Bel Canto Fancy Foods, whose salmon-pesto mousse was unveiled late Monday as the association's 1990 winner in the meat, pate and game category.

"This is my lunch," said Gilbert, downing a Slim Fast diet bar between sales pitches.

Youth wins Tom Sawyer painting contest

HANNIBAL, Mo. (AP) — A family whose members travel here each year from Kentucky and Minnesota for Tom Sawyer Days seems to have the makings of a fence painting dynasty.

Tony Youngblood, 12, of Mayfield, Ky., did his part Sunday by winning this year's fence painting contest. His cousin, Scott McEndree, 13, of Minnetonka, Minn., was last year's champion.

The contest is inspired by Tom Sawyer's fence-painting exploits in Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," which is set in Hannibal. In the book, Tom gets friends to help him whitewash a fence by making the hated chore appear fun.

The contestants were judged on authenticity of costume, as well as speed and quality of pain ing.

TAX: Hospital directors delay asking for tax hike

ty's overall sales tax rate to 8¼ cents upon voter approval. If both proposals had been approved, the city's would have taken precedence.

"I don't think it's a question of fighting with the city," Bruner said. "It's an issue of cooperating with the city."

Director Margaret Williams said the issue may never have erupted if hospital and city officials had initially communicated better.

"At the time we voted, I didn't know the city was going for the same half cent," Ms. Williams said. "I don't think we should be fighting with the city."

Director David Porter, who opposed the vote to put the sales tax proposal on the ballot, said he does not support any tax-raising plans.

"I could go into another long discussion why that's so, but I'm not going to," Porter said.

However, Bruner said that backing off the sales tax means that directors likely will have to rely on a titanic property tax hike to make ends meet during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

Projected figures on indigent care costs show that the hospital district may be $1.1 million in the red at the end of this fiscal year, Bruner said.

The district needs about a 33 percent tax hike over the effective tax rate, the rate which would levy the previous fiscal year's revenues, to pay the indigent care bills at Midland Memorial Hospital, Bruner said.

That would mean raising the tax rate from 13.7 cents per $100 valuation to about 18 cents, he said. That would raise an estimated $1.3 million in revenues, he said.

A public hearing must be called if an entity plans to raise the rate by more than 3 percent over the effective tax rate.

The public can petition for a rollback election if the tax rate proposal exceeds 8 percent of the effective tax rate.

Though directors are unsure how high they plan to raise the rate this year, Bruner said the district needs "substantially in excess of 8 percent."

Directors will hold a budget meeting later this month and decide in August on whether to raise taxes, he said.

"I think the community has always supported the hospital," Bruner said when asked whether he fears a rollback election. "But we don't know what our rate will be yet. The percentage sounds drastic, but it's really only a matter of pennies."

Meanwhile, city councilmen already have announced that they are studying a proposal for a 7.95 percent tax hike, which would raise the rate from 58 cents per $100 valuation to about 63.9 cents — a 5.9-cent difference.

Bruner said hospital and city officials will work together to push for the legislation allowing both entities to pursue quarter-cent sales tax proposals next year.

The Legislature doesn't reconvene until January. If approved, city officials have said they may ask voters for a quarter-cent hike in August 1991.

In other action at Monday's hospital meeting, directors agreed on a resolution on a joint agreement to operate The Imaging Center, a radiology facility owned by a group of Midland doctors.

Bruner said the deal is expected to be finalized today.

Under the agreement, which would be renewed annually, Midland Memorial Hospital and a group of radiologists would take over the 2205 W. Tennessee Ave. facility from the local doctors group, Bruner said.

MMH and the radiologists would make monthly payments of about $30,000 to General Electric, from which the center's radiology equipment is being leased, he said. The equipment will be paid off in about two years, he said.

The center's radiologists would share 25 percent of the costs and receive 25 percent of the profits, Bruner said.

The director said the takeover is an attempt to consolidate radiology services in Midland and prevent a costly competitive situation caused by duplicate services, he said.

SUMMIT: Fact-finding team may be sent to Soviet Union principles" on aiding the Soviets that would finesse their differences and allow "everyone to go his own way," according to an American official.

The summit leaders were expected to agree on sending a fact-finding team to the Soviet Union to assess what kinds of assistance would be helpful, the official said.

At the first session, each of the leaders took turns listing their views of what the top three or four issues are at the summit. Bush said his top three were world trade, aid to the Soviet Union and the environment, according to Marlin Fitzwater, White House press secretary.

White House chief of staff John Sununu said the summit leaders were split over whether direct financial assistance should be offered the Soviets. "About half are on one side and half on the other," he said.

The main proponents of massive Western aid for the Soviet Union are West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French President Francois Mitterrand. Italian Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti is favorably disposed as is Jacques Delors, president of the 12-nation European Economic Community, the eighth participant in the economic summit.

Bush, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu are firmly opposed to direct aid. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has been in the U.S. camp but showed signs of wavering Sunday.

Fitzwater insisted the differences were merely a "minor fluctuation" inside the economic alliance and, "We all want essentially the same thing."

But the issue has just about consumed the preliminaries leading to the summit.

Bush told Mitterrand and Kohl during back-to-back meetings Monday before the official opening of the summit that he continues to oppose direct economic aid to the Soviets, and instead favors technical assistance that would help the Soviets move toward a capitalist system.

"The president indicated that we continue to believe that further economic reforms and changes in Soviet military spending are necessary before we can consider direct aid," Fitzwater said.

But Bush told Kohl, who has already offered Gorbachev $3 billion in loan guarantees, that "he understood the German desire for unilateral support for the Soviet Union," Fitzwater said, apparently a reference to West Germany's aggressive bidding for Soviet approval of German unification.

All seven leaders were discussing the question further during a Texas-style working dinner Monday night of tortilla soup and grilled red snapper. They were expected to issue their Soviet aid formula in a communique Wednesday as the summit wraps up.

Sununu said the United States stands ready to send experts to the Soviet Union to advise the Soviets on such matters as banking, distribution of goods and storage of grain.

"But the United States has long maintained that the Soviets have to undertake strong reforms geared toward a market economy and that it would not be beneficial to have an infusion of capital into a system that is not geared toward utilizing that capital," he said.

In opposing direct aid, Bush is apparently in the mainstream of American public opinion.

A nationwide poll published by the Houston Chronicle Monday showed that 77 percent of the public has a positive view of Gorbachev but opposes direct economic aid by a 58 percent to 24 percent margin.

The president used the opening closed-door summit session to prod his summit partners to reform their agriculture policies in order to ensure the success of stalled world trading negotiations.

Sununu told reporters that Bush's top priority for the summit was to break the impasse on agriculture subsidies that has blocked progress in world trading negotiations being held under the auspices of the 97-member General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Fitzwater quoted Bush as telling his summit partners that agriculture was "the key" to the 4-year-old trade talks that are scheduled to end this December.

CAMP: Lee Youth Center offers 'fun'

(From 1A)

Ms. Swallow said the high school counselors are hired based on recommendations and their skills in particular activities.

"Some of the activities are very unstructured giving the children options," she added.

The coordinators said the summer camp, sponsored by Lee Youth Center, was assisted by a $2,500 grant from the Permian Basin Area Foundation. "We are grateful to the foundation for the grant," Ms. Swallow said. "We rely heavily on contributions."

Becky Hamrick, board president of the Midland-Lee Youth Centers, Inc., said, "We thank the foundation for its support and recognition of the Youth Center's efforts to provide a safe and drug free environment for children of all ages."

Ms. Swallow said children who attend the centers' programs at a younger age tend to be more comfortable attending programs when they are junior and senior high school age later on. "By the time they get into high school they will have grown up with the Youth Center," she said.

A second session will be offered 9 a.m.- 1 p.m. July 16-20. Cost of the session is $25. Participants should bring a sack lunch. Drinks and snacks are available. For information call 689-1675.

Hospital may be forced to close

ALPINE (AP) — A trustee of struggling Big Bend Regional Medical Center said Monday the hospital must share the money generated by Big Bend National Park to remain open.

David Moore, Brewster County Hospital District board chairman, said the hospital is operating on funds raised by local residents. But he said it likely will close unless it receives more stable funding.

The federal government does not pay taxes on the 1,252-square mile park in far West Texas. Instead it makes regular payments to the county.

This year, the county received $328,000 from the federal government. Of that, two rural school districts in and near the park received about $40,000. The rest went into the county's general fund or was invested in certificates of deposit.

The county currently has a surplus fund of about $670,000 in CDs.

Hospital officials said poor management has led to the money troubles. They also blame the way the hospital is reimbursed for care given to patients insured by Medicare and Medicaid.

The hospital told residents it owed $57,000 and asked for donations. Residents responded with a telethon, bake sales, roping contests and individual pledges. The activities raised more than $100,000.

If the facility closes, many far West Texas residents would be forced to travel hundreds of miles for health care.

The next closest hospital is in Fort Stockton, about 70 miles from Alpine. But that hospital is at least 150 miles from residents in south Brewster County and neighboring Presidio County.

RICH: Trump absent from list

wealth comes from Campbell Soup Co.; and Bill Gates, founder of the computer software company Microsoft Corp.

John Werner Kluge remained the richest American individual, according to Forbes. Kluge, founder of the media company Metromedia, has an estimated net worth of $5.2 billion, placing him in a tie for 12th place on the worldwide list with the Newhouses.

As for Trump, Forbes put his net worth last year at $1.7 billion, but it dropped sharply this year as the value of his real estate and airline empire crumbled. In April, the magazine said he was worth about a half a billion dollars. Some sources peg it even lower.

Forbes says one trend it noticed in compiling this year's list was the number of wealthy Germans. The magazine identified 38 West German billionaire families — far more per capita than in Japan or the United States.

The list includes 40 Japanese and 99 American individuals or families with a net worth over $1 billion.

Forbes says it identified 271 billionaire individuals or families worldwide, up from 226 last year. The compilation is based on recent stock valuations, comparable real estate valuations and currency exchange rates, among other factors.

The magazine says it excludes from consideration royal families and heads of state because their wealth "derives more from political heritage than from economic effort."

But it doesn't exclude drug dealers. Among the billionaires it lists are Colombia's Pablo Escobar Gaviria, the head of the Medellin cocaine cartel, at about $3 billion, and Colombia's Ochoa family, at about $2 billion.

WILLIAMS: Candidate hopes to capitalize on lead

(From 1A)

Williams' new commercials are filmed in a style similar to those which helped him win the GOP nomination. Both spots are biographical, emphasizing his business background and family.

In one, he sits by campfire and talks about a career where he "created a lot of jobs, made a lot of friends, drilled wells, built pipelines, raised some cows, raised some hay."

Kenyon refused to specify where the commercials would be shown or divulge how much will be spent buying air time.

He said the Republican's strategists believe only a small number of Texans remain undecided on their choices for governor, so now is a good time to try to win them over.

The most recently published opinion poll, released in May, showed Williams with a 46 percent-38 percent lead. Seventeen percent said they were undecided.

"There's a fairly small number of people who are undecided," Kenyon said. "We feel that right now we have a lead. We would like to harden that lead."

Ms. Richards' spokesman contended that Williams is hiding behind a television screen rather than making public appearances.

"He's got to hope that somehow, he can fool all of the people all of the time with his high-priced TV ads in ways that he's not able to fool them in person."

"They don't want him out there (in public). The times they've let him out there, he's make terrible mistakes and displayed how little he knows about the issues — not just government but the issues facing all of Texas. He can say two or three key words in a TV spot and make people believe he knows something," Smith said.

Kenyon said Williams has been campaigning more actively than Ms. Richards.

"Clayton understands the power of television, but I doubt if any candidate has made as many campaign stops as Clayton Williams has," Kenyon said.

Jailed TV reporter holds out, remains mum

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Television reporter Brian Karem holds a unique status as he sits in the overcrowded Bexar County Jail among low-grade misdemeanants, drug users, robbers, rapists and murderers.

Unlike his fellow inmates, Karem continues to draw a paycheck for doing his job. He has no scheduled release date, facing renewable six-month terms in jail unless he agrees to turn over his notes and testify as to who arranged his exclusive jailhouse interview with an alleged police killer.

Karem's attorney, Larry Macon, says that because Karem willfully violated a court order, he would be the last inmate to leave under any early release program.

But Karem's refusal to divulge his sources has focused attention on a clash of journalistic ethics and the law: What happens when a confidential relationship with a source runs up against a court's need for information?

The case has been chronicled in newspapers throughout the country and Friday it was examined on ABC-TV's "Nightline."

Although reporters are ordered to turn over materials fairly often — one media representative says at least six such cases are pending in Texas now — Karem is the first journalist since 1978 to face a lengthy jail term for protecting a source. Then, a New York Times reporter spent 40 days in a New Jersey jail for refusing to release information about his probe of a doctor in that state, later acquitted, who allegedly had killed patients.

A quick review of the facts involving Karem: A San Antonio police officer was gunned down and two brothers were arrested. Through undetermined means, Karem obtained a jail interview with one of the brothers, who said on KMOL-TV that he shot the officer in self-defense.

Prosecutors and defense attorneys for each of the brothers, Henry David and Julian Hernandez, demanded to know who set up the interview for Karem.

If jail officials were involved, it is possible the potentially damning admission could not be used as evidence in the trial.

The court ordered Karem to give up his notes and the names of the sources and he refused, leading to his jailing for civil contempt of court.

Karem's ethical duties are clear. Journalists have an obligation to report their sources of information when possible. But often the most newsworthy information can only be reported by offering a promise of anonymity to the source or, as in Karem's case, to a conduit.

For a reporter, protecting the identity of a confidential source is sacrosanct. Giving away a source could dry up future information, not only for a reporter but for an entire news organization.

"Anyone within our organization would say he's doing the right thing," said Ira Perry, assistant metropolitan editor of the Houston Post and chairman of Texas Media, a coalition of news groups. "If sources can't be protected, they're not going to talk to you."

Jane Kirtley, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press in Washington, D.C., said, "The way around the problem is never to use confidential sources. If we do that, we might as well close down shop."

Perry, who himself is facing a potential contempt order for refusing to turn over to a federal court tapes of interviews he did concerning possible civil rights violations by Houston police, said of Karem's case: "There are other ways to get the same information. If they want to know who arranged the interview, they can put all the possible candidates on the witness stand. This is a fishing expedition."

Bexar County Sheriff Harlon Copeland said Thursday that, after using his own confidential sources, he knows the names of all of Karem's sources.

But Beth Taylor, the prosecutor in the capital murder case, said that only Karem can say who the sources were and produce the notes to corroborate his statements.

Karem's legal duties are also fairly clear, but what the law should be is the subject of continued hot debate.

A 5-4 majority of the U.S. Supreme Court found in Branzburg vs. Hayes, a 1972 case, that reporters do not have a constitutional right to refuse to testify about violations of law that they witness.

Since then, however, some courts have suggested that reporters may have a limited First Amendment right to refuse to testify about confidential sources, but that right must be balanced against a criminal defendant's Sixth Amendment right to a fair trial.

Bexar County State District Judge Pat Priest, without using a balancing test, found Karem's rights to be outweighed by fair-trial rights. So far, a federal magistrate and district judge have agreed, and the case is pending before the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The U.S. Supreme Court has so far refused to get involved in the case.

SUMMIT SPOTLIGHT

Trips to keep spouses busy

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The "first spouses" of the industrialized world won't take a back seat in Houston this week.

Monday in their most intimate affair here, the spouses were hosted for dinner at the Memorial-area home of Betty and J. Hugh Liedtke, chairman of Pennzoil Co. and a former business partner of President Bush's.

Beginning today, Barbara Bush has planned several field trips to keep the spouses busy between personal plans that will take them from recreation to shopping to sightseeing.

The spouses will board a plane today for San Antonio, where they will tour the 18th-century missions of San Jose and the Alamo, the most-visited site in Texas, and the city's recently renovated Majestic Theater.

That evening the spouses will dine with the heads of state at Houston's Museum of Fine Arts.

On Wednesday, the last day of the summit, the spouses will visit Texas Medical Center. Details have been withheld for security reasons, but it is known the spouses have been given their choices of several different tours.

Hannelore Kohl, wife of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, and Marie Delors, wife of European Commission President Jacques Delors, did not accompany their husbands to Texas.

The other spouses are:

■ Italy: The most unaffiliated with her spouse's work is Livia Danese Andreotti, who has maintained a private life during 45 years of marriage to Italian Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti.

Mrs. Andreotti, a Rome native, met her husband as she completed her degrees in philosophy and liberal arts. Although once desiring a teaching career, she has never taught.

President Bush kisses Mila Mulroney, wife of Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney upon their arrival at Houston's Rice University for the economic summit. At left is Barbara Bush and Mulroney.

She is reported to be about 67 years old.

Her four children, two sons and two daughters, are grown.

■ Japan: Sachiyo Kaifu has charted a different course for her role in a nation where most women still stay at home in service to their husbands' business or political interests.

A graduate of Kinjo Gakuin University, she met her husband, now Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu, while working for the Japanese equivalent of a congressman. They married in 1967 and lived a relatively modest lifestyle in an apartment rather than a large private house, which is more typical for Japanese politi cians.

Mrs. Kaifu, 57, has two grown children, a son and a daughter.

■ France: One of the more politically active spouses, Danielle Gouze Mitterrand might be more politically left than her husband and not reluctant to show it, President Francois Mitterrand admits.

The 66-year-old activist for human rights has traveled extensively, most recently to Africa to promote AIDS awareness and overseas disaster relief. She has conducted much of her human rights work with the organization France-Libertes, which she founded in 1986.

Yet she has not sacrificed her domestic reputation as an elegant and fashionable first lady and is particularly fond of designer Yves-Saint Laurent.

She and her husband met while working for the Resistance during World War II. They married in 1944 and have two sons.

■ Canada: Mila Pivnicki Mulroney has not gone unnoticed or without criticism as the wife of conservative Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

She, at 37, is 14 years younger than her husband, whom she met in 1972 when she was a worker for a Progressive Conservative Party parliamentary candidate. She was born in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, and moved with her family to Montreal in 1958.

She has been criticized for becoming the first prime minister's wife to have an office and personal staff on Parliament Hill — at considerable cost to taxpayers. Like Mrs. Bush, however, she has been quoted as saying her most important job is that of wife and mother.

The Mulroneys have four children, one girl and three boys, all younger than 17. The Canadian press agrees with her self-description as a traditional, old-fashioned mother.

■ Britain: The only male "first spouse," Denis Thatcher will attend only the summit's opening ceremonies and the Liedtke dinner before embarking on a private schedule that will include visits to companies with British connections.

Observers speculate Thatcher, 75, is further to the political right than his wife, Margaret, but remains silent about his views, avoiding any appearance of challenging his wife.

The Thatchers met at a Conservative Party social event in 1949 and married two years later.

After serving in the British army in World War II, he inherited his family's chemical and paint company. He served on the boards of Castrol and Burmah Oil Co. He retired in 1975 but remains a consulting director to two Burmah subsidiaries.

This is his second marriage. His first ended in divorce. The Thatchers have grown twins, a boy and a girl, and one grandson.

Longhorn steers join farmers' protest

HOUSTON (AP) — Fifty-five farm advocates and a pair of well-behaved longhorn steers paraded next to Rice University Monday, but the protest's tractors, like so many in summit-snarled Houston, got stuck in traffic.

The group of farmers and environmentalists said they had a beef with President Bush's efforts toward an agriculture trade agreement, one issue on the table at the seven-nation economic summit.

Motorcades and street-closings made a mess of usually congested Houston arteries Monday morning, and a half-mile stroll down Fannin Street by Redbone and Tumbleweed, two 1,400-pound farm advocates from Barker, Texas, only made the going slower.

A dozen tractors from outlying farm communities never made it inside Houston's freeway loop, organizer Craig Merrilees said.

The demonstrators claimed Bush's plan for agriculture under a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade would undercut prices for American farmers and allow imports of cheaper foods grown with pesticides not allowed in the United States.

"It is the final nail in the coffin of the family farmer, and it may be the final nail in all our coffins," said Lana Nelson, daughter of country singer Willie Nelson.

Bush has been pushing for a plan to phase-out farm subsidies over the next 10 years. Europeans have been resisting the idea, which doesn't sit well with small-scale American farmers, either.

Carl King, corn cobs pictured on his tie, said farmers would accept a GATT agreement "if it's fair."

"If we open everything up, there will be no fairness involved because you're going to be competing with farms that have peon labor overseas and that don't have to deal with regulations from OSHA or EPA," King said.

"We just want to see the farmers get their price from the marketplace," said Don Vig, a Valley City, N.D., farmer with the National Family Farm Coalition. "But we object to the way Bush wants to do it."

The steers, sporting gold finials on their horns, were the centerpiece of the ragtag, half-mile march down one lane of traffic. Houston parks officials wouldn't allow the hungry animals on the grass of Hermann Park, so they kept to the street.

A few German and Japanese farmers joined the march. "With GATT, you tear down all the barriers that protect a people's own culture, and the farmers are the first to be hit," said Pieter Bricke, a Bonn economist who marched with his wife, Johanna, a farmer.

Leaders dine at former Ima Hogg mansion

HOUSTON (AP) — The seven world leaders attending the economic summit had dinner reservations Monday night at Bayou Bend, a stately mansion that once was the home of the late Ima Hogg, the oil-rich daughter of the first native-born governor of Texas.

It will be the first time that a U.S. president, much less the heads of government of Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Canada or Japan, have dined at Bayou Bend since it became a museum nearly a quarter-century ago.

Sitting amid Miss Hogg's collection of antiques and art objects, the summit leaders dined on tortilla soup, cornbread sticks, grilled gulf red snapper, sweet corn puree and onions, lettuce and almond salad and American cheeses. For dessert, there was blackberry peach swirl ice cream with sliced peaches and cookies.

Miss Hogg was a widely known Texas philanthropist from a family that made a fortune in oil and real estate. Her father, James Hogg, was the first native-born Texan to become governor.

Bayou Bend was built in 1927 along a bend in Buffalo Bayou. The 14-acre estate opened as a museum in 1966. It is situated in the River Oaks section on Lazy Lane, the most exclusive street in Houston. The home's value is unknown, but real estate broker Diane Lokey said the Dogwood Gardens estate next door listed for $11.5 million.

Bayou Bend Director David B. Warren said the museum was chosen for the summit dinner partly because of its intimate, historical atmosphere.

Protocol chief pays strict attention to detail

By William E. Clayton Jr.
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The title of a book on Joseph V. Reed's shelf summed up what he has gone through in preparation for the economic summit: "Thriving on Chaos."

As U.S. chief of protocol, Reed was given the task of making sure the code of ceremonial forms and courtesies is played out precisely.

At the Houston events, "You are talking about protocol with a capital 'P,'" Reed said. "These people have all been around the track."

With any big international gathering, "You have to set, and live within, that mysterious world called protocol... Just as though you were going to have a graduation ceremony or you were going to have a wedding ... you have a certain set of procedures and steps you live with.

"In this particular instance, you put it on a mega scale. You are going to have some 2,000 participants and some 3,000 members of the press who are going to be covering every single moving part with a microscope."

The staff devoted to protocol duties before and during the summit had to apply the protocol test to every detail: hotels, food, flowers, music, who sits where, who arrives when and in what order.

IF THERE are food allergies among the dignitaries, Reed has to know that. The flag arrangers must be sure no flag is backward or upside down or out of order.

A white loose-leaf notebook on Reed's desk has dividers marked with the 17 major events of the summit. Each event was listed in a time line, down to every few minutes.

"Take a look at the arrival ceremony, for instance. One-oh-three (p.m.), 1:11, 1:17, 1:24, 1:31, 1:38," said Reed, ticking off the times.

"This is a perfect example of how the blueprint according to the rules of protocol will be put in force," he said. "The fanfare, the foreign national anthems — starting with France, and there is none for the European Community — then there will be ours, and a 21-gun salute, for all the leaders.

"All these things have to be very carefully worked out— are there enough chairs, is the simultaneous translation in place, are the interpreters ready if need be?"

Some traditional elements acquired critics.

"Somebody asked me the other day, 'Why are we having a review of the troops?'" Reed said. "The answer is ... to show a nation's pride in its ability to defend itself, its ability to maintain a regional order and peace.

"A 21-GUN salute will be going off, and again, people say, 'Why should we have guns?' Well, this is a centuries-old tradition of protocol."

There are occasional details that the average host must worry about that protocol makes unnecessary. For example, seating a left-hander next to a right-hander. For one thing, the formal banquet table is not likely to be so crowded that there would be any elbow-bumping. And for an other, Reed said, the seating is determined by the order of precedence in office.

"Fortunately, it is simple because it goes according to date of ascension to office. So you have (French President Francois) Mitterrand as the granddaddy. As the senior head of state. You would immediately challenge me and ask, what about Mrs. Thatcher (British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher)? She is not a head of state." The queen is that.

"Here you will have George Bush the first to arrive, as the host, and the last to leave," Reed said.

In Houston, by the time the first note was struck in the summit conference welcoming ceremony, there had been myriad rehearsals and protocol planning sessions.

"The first thing you do is you offer the country with the ranking order of precedence an opportunity to come visit, and sit down and discuss the requirements of that country, which happens to be the Republic of France," Reed said.

"IN THIS particular case, you start with the fact that they are going to use a Concorde and arrive at Ellington Air Force Base. From there you will have hotels, cars, meeting rooms, holding rooms, flags, national anthems, food requirements, sitting requirements, standing requirements, moving requirements, health.

"The famous Reed Checklist: it has 4,424 items," he said.

Another 'pro-life' bill caps session

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Gov. Buddy Roemer left open the possibility Monday that he might veto a hastily-concocted abortion bill that would be the strictest such law in the 50 states.

"It's unfortunate that legislation this important would be done at the last minute," Roemer said at a news conference.

"And I just want to remind everybody that an option was given by me long ago to work this thing out to the satisfaction of the vast majority in this state and it's unfortunate that some, for a variety of reasons, waited until the last minute to give us a bill."

Roemer didn't receive a copy of the bill until Monday afternoon. At his morning news conference he refused to say when he would act on it.

He vetoed a stricter anti-abortion bill Friday because it didn't allow abortions for rape or incest victims. Anti-abortion forces drafted the new measure only when it became clear late Sunday they could not muster a two-thirds vote in the Senate to override a veto.

The new measure has rape and incest exceptions, but a requirement that rape be reported to authorities within seven days of its occurrence may be too narrowly drawn to satisfy Roemer.

"The seven-day provision on rape is a problem," he said, although he called the measure "a step in the right direction."

Only the U.S. territory of Guam has stronger anti-abortion legislation. That law, passed in March, makes exceptions only for women whose lives are threatened by their pregnancy. That measure is on hold while it is challenged in court.

Bob Winn, a Louisiana delegate to the National Right to Life Committee, said both measures are excellent vehicles for challenging Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion.

"Insofar as a challenge, an invitation to the court, I'd put Guam at 100 percent and Louisiana at 96," said Winn.

Louisiana lawmakers had tacked the rape and incest exceptions onto the law they drafted in an attempt to appease Roemer.

Like the vetoed measure, the new one would send doctors who perform abortions to jail for up to 10 years with maximum fines of $100,000.

Abortion rights leaders said the bill faces little chance of making it through a state court, much less the federal system.

Roemer was unhappy with the way the bill was amended late Sunday — only 26 hours before the legislative session's legally required end at midnight Monday. The next session begins in April.

The bill was tacked on to Rep. James David Cain's legislation that would have eliminated jail terms and lowered the fines under simple battery laws for people convicted of beating a flag burner.

The amendment by Sen. John Saunders created the crime of "simple battery of abortion."

Abortion rights forces immediately began arguing that the bill won't stand up because simple battery in Louisiana law is a misdemeanor with a maximum six-month jail sentence and $500 fine — much lighter than the hefty fine and prison term in the Saunders measure.

Roemer has 20 days to veto the bill.

USPS plans to let letter sorting

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service said Monday that it plans to contract out some automated letter sorting, a plan that could result in as many as 12,000 jobs moving from the post office to private companies by 1995.

Hiring private companies to do letter sorting could save $10 to $12 per work hour, compared to the costs of postal employees, according to Peter Jacobson, assistant postmaster general for engineering and technical support.

The change could save as much as $4.3 billion over 10 years, said Jacobson, who denied that the announcement was related to upcoming labor negotiations with the agency's major unions.

Moe Biller, president of the American Postal Workers Union, quickly denounced the announcement as a "disgrace."

"They will do nothing with this but create more hostility, more upset more apprehension among the workers," said Biller. "We will fight it on the beaches, on the hill, in negotiations, wherever."

Jacobson stressed in his announcement that no current postal worker need fear for his or her job, though he said it is likely some will be changed to new duties or transferred to nearby facilities.

The focus of the decision is new automated equipment that permits letters that cannot be read by machine to be viewed on television screens, where workers can type in the appropriate ZIP code, allowing the letter to be handled by machinery from then on.

Test equipment will be installed by Bell and Howell in Nassau County, N.Y., and TRW in Louisville, Ky. this fall, with 295 systems planned across the country within three years.

Mexican inmates deserve justice

Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's determination to actively prosecute the "war on drugs" is encouraging. Now he should demonstrate his determination to prosecute those members of the Federal Judicial Police who violate the civil and human rights of Mexican citizens.

Seventy prisoners at the La Mesa Federal Penitentiary in Tijuana, Baja California, have gone on a hunger strike to demand that Salinas's government investigate the Federales, whom they accuse of torturing them to obtain confessions, primarily on drug charges.

The prisoners are eager to show visiting reporters the physical evidence against the Federales. One points to the scars across his hand left a by pistol whipping, and a round scar where he was burned with a cigarette. Another man shows the mark on his neck where he was choked by a plastic bag held over his head to suffocate him.

Others describe tortures that leave no signs. They say towels covered with chili powder and soaked in water were wrapped around their faces. Others say they were shocked with electric cattle prods. After such treatment, in the words of one prisoner, "If they told me to sign a paper saying I killed Pancho Villa, I'd sign it!"

Such abuses by the Federal Judicial Police are not new. But according to a recent report by the human rights group Americas Watch, violence and torture have become routine methods of police "investigation." Two trends have led to the Federales becoming the worst human rights violators in Mexico, the report concludes — the political misuse of the "war on drugs" to justify violence, and political protection for corrupt police institutions.

The prisoners on hunger strike in Tijuana are asking for rights they are supposedly guaranteed under Mexican and international law — an end to torture by municipal, state, and federal police; genuine police investigations and due process; and liberty for all those imprisoned on false charges. They also are asking for a legal aid office for indigent prisoners, which would be staffed by law students from the Autonomous University of Baja California.

Recently, the climate for human rights work in Mexico has worsened, according to Americas Watch. The head of the human rights commission in Sinoloa was assassinated shortly after she lobbied for state legislation mandating a 10-year sentence for any police officer convicted of torture. It has been reported that Victor Clark Alfaro, director of the Bi-National Center for Human Rights in Tijuana, also has received death threats because of his support of the striking prisoners.

President Salinas has taken an important first step to combat the increasing violence. He has appointed a human rights commission to investigate abuses. Now he must demonstrate the political will to protect human rights advocates and to prosecute rights violators among the Federal Judicial Police. The war on drugs is not well-served when it is invoked as a shield for a war on civil liberties and human rights.

Drilling decision deserves praise

President Bush's long-awaited offshore oil drilling decision merits praise and a sigh of relief both for its unexpected scope and for its content. There's a chance now to move the debate over the future of these important resources out of the bunkers where it has been stuck — if only the contending interest groups will recognize that opportunity.

In almost all respects, the president went further in protecting the nation's coastline than either the environmentalists or the oil companies expected. Not only have the lease sales that were pending off Florida and parts of Northern and Southern California been halted, but Bush has extended a 10-year moratorium to all of Washington, Oregon, the central coast of California and the rich Atlantic fishing grounds that stretch from Rhode Island to Canada. Expansion of the existing commercial oil fields in the Santa Maria Basin and the channel area off Santa Barbara in California has been suspended at least until 1996. And Monterey Bay has been declared off limits to the drilling rigs permanently.

The breach could hardly be more complete from the Reagan era's ruinous policy of trying to sell off every square inch of the nation's outer continental shelf for commercial exploitation, without regard for the environmental cost. But the way some conservation groups responded to Bush's announcement, you would think James Watt was still running the Interior Department.

One Sierra Club spokesman, for example, dismissed this new program — the most substantive, far-reaching and long-lasting protection for coastal resources that environmentalists have obtained in the past six years — as just a "big political hype." How myopic. Of course this decision has partisan political implications. What action in Washington does not? But some of the hype is deserved, both by Bush and by Sen. Pete Wilson, the GOP nominee for governor of California, who has been vigorously pushing for this kind of coastal protection for his state.

What the nay-saying environmentalists seem to be missing is the fact that the debate over offshore oil development is no longer limited to a choice between unrestrained exploitation or a complete ban on new drilling. Bush's action opens the way for a more sophisticated discussion of national policy. He relied heavily on a recent National Academy of Sciences report that concluded that no one knows enough about the potential dangers of drilling in some sensitive coastal areas to say what's best. The president's new policy allows time for some of those questions to be addressed.

The permanent ban on new drilling anywhere that some environmentalists demand is not a good idea. Offshore oil development almost certainly has an important role in America's future. But it needs to be set into the context of a national energy policy. That's what President Reagan couldn't provide, and that's the opportunity and the challenge that now faces Bush, Congress, the oil industry and the environmental community.

Cross reminder of communist regime

EAST BERLIN — It is a particularly poignant reminder of the cruelty of the Berlin Wall and the communist regime it guarded: a white, wooden cross on a chain-link fence near the Brandenburg Gate. The cross reads, "Chris Geoffrey/6.2.89"

Anderson

It is the last in a succession of such crosses dating to the wall's construction in 1961, and Geoffrey was the last who tried to cross it. Machine-gun fire from East German border guards ended his attempt — and his life. Only nine months later, he could have joined millions of his fellow East Germans crossing the border freely into West Germany.

While the wall has now been dismembered for souvenirs, East Germans cannot forget those, like Geoffrey, murdered because of it. If the survivors have a mind for revenge, it will be to hunt down the culprits.

Our sources here say investigators from the East German prosecutor general's office are combing records of the East German Army and border guards, as well as of the dreaded "Stasi," or secret police. They seek to identify those who gave the orders — as well as the trigger men — to shoot escapees. They plan to try not just guards but even leaders like Erich Honecker, who ruled from 1971 until he was ousted last October.

Of course, not all guards followed the "shoot-to-kill" orders. Although they were an elite force picked for supposed loyalty to communist leaders, 2,700 of them fled to the West at the first chance. Others looked the other way when comrades tried to flee to freedom. Each border post had two men so one could shoot the other if he didn't do his duty.

The wall was a uniquely infamous edifice. Unlike China's Great Wall or Hadrian's Wall in England, Berlin's wall wasn't built to keep people out. It kept them in. It was illegal to cross without a visa, which were rarely issued.

It ran 103 miles around West Berlin, a West German enclave 110 miles inside East Germany. The wall was actually two walls in many places; between them lay a death strip, up to 300 yards wide. Anyone making it over the first wall had to run a gauntlet of land mines, attack dogs, spikes and devices that sprayed shrapnel.

West German sources say at least 191 Germans were killed while attempting to escape. At least 82 of these were butchered along the Berlin Wall. Each death sparked furious demonstrations. One of the most memorable, in 1962, followed the shooting of a 19-year-old as he made his way toward Checkpoint Charlie, the only passage for vehicles crossing the border. The teen bled to death in full view of scores of foreign correspondents, security officials and West Berliners. Not long afterward, an anonymous shot from a West Berlin apartment killed the border guard believed to have been responsible.

Besides those killed, at least 5,000 more were captured and imprisoned for attempting to escape. Some of them, freed since last year's whirlwind changes, will testify against guards who killed fleeing comrades.

The feats of those who made it out of East Germany are a tribute to both human perseverance and audacity. Their stories are legion and legendary. There was the circus performer who left via tightrope. Another escapee made it over the wall in the bucket of an earth mover. A child was snuck out in a hollowed-out radio. Nine people once made it past guards when much of the engine was gutted from a car so small no one bothered to scrutinize it.

Then there is the story of the East German butcher who had finally had it with life under the communist dictatorship. So he leaned a ladder against the first wall, scaled it and pulled the ladder over with him. When he jumped onto the sandy no-man's land in between, he landed on one of the spikes, which drove through his foot into his ankle. With his hands, he pried his foot loose and continued, with the ladder on his shoulders. He made it to the second wall and used the ladder again to scale it, too.

In one of the more inventive escapes, two East German families made it out in 1979 in a homemade balloon, the largest ever flown in Europe. The wives had stitched it together from bedsheets and curtains.

CHARLEY REESE

Arafat, Mandela should be treated same

Yasir Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, has said repeatedly that the PLO condemns any and all attacks directed at civilians by any source. That is a clearer condemnation of terrorism than we have sometimes gotten out of our own State Department.

Reese

Yet the United States has broken off talks with the PLO.

Nelson Mandela, deputy president of the African National Congress, which as late as two years ago was listed by the U.S. Defense Department as a terrorist organization, has repeatedly advocated violence and has repeatedly refused to renounce violence.

Yet the United States receives him as if he were a head of state.

Arafat, who is not a dictator, but a chairman of a united front organization, was particularly criticized for not singling out by name, Abu Abbas, and denouncing his attempted terrorist attack against Israel.

No one, however, has asked Mandela to denounce by name his wife, Winnie, who has been implicated in murder and torture by her bodyguards. Furthermore, nobody blinked an eye when Mandela spotted four Puerto Ricans who had shot five U.S. congressmen, and tried to kill President Truman, in a New York audience and went out of his way to praise them and to express solidarity with them. They were there, by the way, because Jimmy Carter pardoned them while he was president.

Inconsistencies, of course, don't end here. President Bush lectures Mandela on violence, but of course we use violence — in Panama and Grenada and Lebanon — whenever it suits our purpose, and we fund violence in other places such as Afghanistan, Angola, Nicaragua, and El Salvador.

How do we explain these inconsistencies? Three words. Domestic politics. Expediency. We have, in fact, no foreign policy. We have a policy of expediency, sometimes based on the polls, sometime based on private business interests, sometimes based on domestic politics.

I think the decision to break off talks with the PLO had nothing to do with the aborted raid. The administration had been beating up on Israel and the campaign mechanics thought that breaking off talks with the PLO would be a bone to toss at American supporters of Israel.

While I never dreamed I'd ever write anything in defense of Arafat, two things are quite clear. One, Abbas clearly intended to sabotage the peace talks and Arafat with the raid. Two, there is no evidence at all that Arafat knew about or condoned the raid, which was launched from Libya. By breaking off talks, we help Abbas, who is against peace, and hurt Arafat, who is trying to find it.

Then why didn't Arafat openly condemn Abbas? For two reasons. He is not a dictator and must lead the PLO by persuasion and consensus. Whatever he may have said in private, he apparently felt he could not afford to precipitate a major split at this time in what is a coalition of several Palestinian organizations. Secondly, by publicly demanding that he denounce Abbas, we put Arafat in the position, if he had done so, of appearing to jump through any hoop the U.S. holds up.

I do not believe that the State Department does not fully understand that. After all, they are masters at cutting slack for foreign leaders whenever they find it expedient to do so. Mandela is one example. But we also cut slack for Israel. Israel not only didn't turn over two Israelis involved in stealing U.S. intelligence files but didn't even prosecute them.

We should treat Arafat no differently than we do Mandela.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

What basic principles does Bush believe in?

Capt. Bush's sudden order — hard a-stern on taxes — has conservative crew members muttering mutinously, with some casting speculative eyes on handspikes and belaying pins. A sense of betrayal runs through the ranks. Here we thought the captain had nailed his colors to the mast.

Murchison

What does Bush mean, "tax revenue increases" are required by "the size of the deficit problem and the need for a package that can be enacted"? A tax is a penalty; you don't get more work and investment by penalizing these commodities. And what of the Congressional Budget Office forecast that revenue increases will average $74 billion a year between now and 1995? Let's apply that to deficit reduction instead of new and old programs.

Beyond these immediate matters looms a more worrisome question: What does President Bush believe in, deep down? What are his basic principles? I am not sure. I do not think anyone can be totally sure.

Nobody regards Bush as a man without basic principles, a sort of Republican Lyndon Johnson. Bush is a decent man, a pleasant man, a man with whom you'd enjoy pitching horseshoes at a block party. Bush believes in God, family, and the Fourth of July. And after that? Here the difficulty commences. Bush appears to bend this way and that.

True, Bush isn't exactly the first politician to break a promise. Ronald Reagan himself, when governor of California, reneged publicly on a vow not to raise state taxes. Charm alone did not rescue Reagan's reputation with conservatives. Despite his retreat on taxes, he remained visibly and volubly committed to the idea of smaller, less-intrusive government. It was his political pole star, twinkling for all to see, and for many to steer by.

What is Bush's pole star? If I err, I will gladly accept correction, but my telescope does not reveal any such star. Bush looks exactly like the pragmatist, Eastern-Establishment, country-club variety, that Republican conservatives always insisted he was.

Because Bush worked for a conservative president for eight years, many took him for a conservative; some suggested his White House experience had moved him rightward. But during 17 months as president, he has low-keyed the bloody crackdown on Red China's democracy movement, and accommodated Gorbachev more than Gorbachev has accommodated him. Bush plans presently to sign two expensive bills that would greatly expand federal power in daily life — the Americans With Disabilities Act and the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Before a public outcry arose, the president supported funding the National Endowment for the Arts without restrictions on grants for offensive works. The same day he tore up his no-new-tax promise, Bush, under pressure from environmentalists, banned oil well drilling in highly promising offshore areas.

In fairness, Bush has vetoed some sorry bills that Mike Dukakis would cheerfully have signed, the most recent being one that would have let federal workers take part in partisan politics for the first time in 51 years.

"Pragmatism," the Bush philosophy, is not so much a philosophy as a matter of temperament. Pragmatism concerns itself less with ends than with means. Ultimately pragmatism proves not to be very pragmatic. Tax increases don't work; they just fuel Congress' lust to spend taxpayers' money. Pragmatism erodes loyalties likewise. Who put Bush in the White House anyway, the taxers and spenders? Not so. Ordinary over-taxed citizens put him there. Does anyone hear these people clamoring to ship off more of their money to Washington? I don't. What I hear is anguished Republicans wondering how their leader could have thrown away an issue that is not only politically useful but economically valid, namely, that high taxes hurt, maim, and disable.

NATION IN BRIEF

Mourners pay last respects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Homeless people, activists and others who mourned the death of Mitch Snyder lined up in sweltering heat Monday to pay last respects to the man who ended his own life after years of fighting for the downtrodden.

The mourners, waiting in temperatures that approached 100 degrees, stood in a line that snaked around the three-story shelter Snyder had fought to win from the federal government. Inside, his body lay in simple pine casket.

Snyder's long-time companion, Carol Fennelly, said she hoped the commitment of many activists would not fade with the death of the nation's most visible advocate for the homeless.

Snyder will be cremated after a funeral Tuesday that will include a march to city hall in which Snyder's body will be carried in a horse-drawn carriage, said Fennelly.

Kenya protest filed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top State Department official lodged a protest Monday with the Kenyan ambassador over the East African nation's criticism of the United States.

Herman Cohen, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs, made the complaint in a meeting with Kenyan ambassador Denis Afande amid continuing clashes in Kenya between the government and pro-democracy protesters.

"We protested the language they have been using against our ambassador," said a State Department official who spoke on the condition he remain anonymous. "We also made it clear that (U.S.) Ambassador (Smith) Hempstone has our full support," the official said.

The meeting came as Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., chairman of the House Africa subcommittee, said he would press Congress to freeze or cut U.S. aid to Kenya until that country improves its hu

Wolpe's comments came as U.S. officials said they are helping Gibson Kumau Kuria, a human rights lawyer, find a way to leave the country.

Kuria, 43, sought refuge in the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi on Saturday. Earlier, Kuria had been detained by the government of Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi, who has banned political pluralism in the one-party state.

'McMartin Two' to jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The nation's longest and costliest criminal court proceeding went to a jury Monday for a second time, with a judge telling jurors to ignore public opinion in deciding charges against Raymond Buckey.

"It's been close to seven years of my life and now it's come to a finale, McMartin Two, the summer rerun," Buckey told reporters outside court, referring to the now defunct McMartin Pre-School. "Twelve more people will decide my fate."

Buckey is charged with eight counts of molestation involving three young girls who once attended the Manhattan Beach preschool operated by his family.

Buckey, 32, is the only one of seven teachers accused of molesting children at the preschool still facing charges. Charges against five of the teachers were dismissed and his mother, Peggy McMartin Buckey, was acquitted on all counts following the first trial.

At the first trial, Buckey was acquitted on 40 counts of sexually abusing children at the school. Jurors deadlocked on 13 other charges against him, however, and prosecutors refiled on eight of those counts.

The retrial, which lasted just three months, followed a two-year preliminary hearing and a nearly three-year trial. That was the nation's longest court proceding and cost Los Angeles over $13.5 million — a record for a criminal trial.

'There was use of cocaine,' witness vows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Using a rolled up dollar bill, a Tehran-born restaurateur demonstrated on the witness stand Monday how he said Mayor Marion Barry repeatedly snorted cocaine, once only minutes before giving a speech.

Hassan Mohammadi said he furnished cocaine to Barry about 30 times, once delivering more than 2 grams of the drug to the mayor in his office.

"He wouldn't ask for cocaine, but say, 'What's happening? Are you loaded?'" the witness said.

Barry never paid, Mohammadi testified. In fact, he said, on a November 1987 trip to the Bahamas, Barry played blackjack using the $3,000-$4,000 worth of chips that Mohammadi bought.

The mayor leaned back in his chair at the defense table, sometimes smiling, once grinning broadly. During breaks in the proceedings he joked with his lawyers, his campaign manager and his press secretary.

Mohammadi, who immigrated from Iran in 1972 at the age of 18, said he met Barry at a District of Columbia party during the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco in 1984. He invited the mayor to the grand opening of Pardi's restaurant, in the Georgetown section of Washington, in February 1985.

The first time he saw Barry ingest cocaine, the witness said, was on that occasion, in an office atop the restaurant.

Mohammadi said he, Barry, and nightclub owner Samad Arshadi, went upstairs where Arshadi, placed some powder on the table.

Using a credit card, Arshadi "made a line" out of the powder "and he and Mr. Mayor snorted" the substance through a rolled-up bill, said Mohammadi.

"He bent over the coke and he snorted," Mohammadi said of the mayor.

Barry then licked his fingers to make them wet and began "cleaning his nose with his fingers," said Mohammadi. The mayor finished the cleaning by rubbing his fingers across the table top, the businessman testified.

The men then went downstairs and Barry "made a speech" to the guests at the packed restaurant's grand opening, said Mohammadi.

Then followed visits by the mayor to Mohammadi's apartment nearby in which Mohammadi and Barry snorted cocaine. There was another occasion in a room at the Capital Hilton and a number of times in the Cable Beach Hotel in the Bahamas.

"Did you force the defendant to accept those quantities of cocaine from you?" asked Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Roberts.

"Not at all," the witness said.

"Did anyone force the defendant to accept those quantities of cocaine?"

"No."

Barry is charged with 10 counts of cocaine possession, one count of conspiracy and three counts of lying to a federal grand jury about his alleged involvement with drugs.

Throughout his testimony, Mohammadi referred to Barry as "Mr. Mayor."

At Roberts' urging, Mohammadi demonstrated how Barry allegedly rolled up a bill, put his left finger to close off one nostril and inhaled through the bill with his right nostril.

At that point in Mohammadi's demonstration, Barry grinned broadly.

At the start of the afternoon session, with the jury out of the room, Roberts said he intended to elicit testimony from Mohammadi that he also saw Barry use marijuana and opium on several occasions.

"At one cookout," said Roberts, "there was use of cocaine and opium."

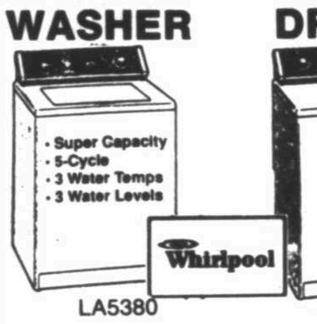

Roberts said the proposed testimony was to show "the defendant's predisposition toward controlled substances," to counter defense claims that Barry was trapped into using cocaine on Jan. 18 when he was arrested.

Mohammadi said that as part of his agreement with prosecutors to testify against Barry, the government promised to speak up for him in any deportation proceedings. Mohammadi has pleaded guilty to one count of conspiring with Barry to possess cocaine.

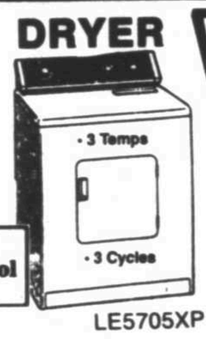

Earlier, a prosecution witness testified that she smoked crack cocaine as recently as last month and had used drugs six days before she appeared before the grand jury that indicted the mayor.

In cross-examination, Lydia Pearson stuck to her story that she had sold crack to the mayor 20 to 25 times in a three month period in 1988, delivering one shipment along with an application for a city job.

Albanian refugees in Czechoslovakia

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The first of more than 5,000 Albanians who rushed foreign embassies in Tirana in a desperate bid to emigrate arrived in Prague early Tuesday aboard the personal plane of Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel.

A U.N. envoy was trying to negotiate safe passage abroad for the thousands stranded in their flight from Europe's last bastion of hardline Communism.

Havel had sent his plane to the Albanian capital and it arrived at about 1:15 a.m. at Prague airport carrying 51 Albanians who sought asylum in the Czechoslovak Embassy.

The refugees, all adults, were bused to dormitories in an outlying district of the Czechoslovak capital.

In a brief dispatch received in Vienna, Albania's state ATA news agency had announced that the group left shortly before midnight Monday.

In Prague, Deputy Foreign Minister Vojtech Wagner of Czechoslovakia said all but one or two wanted to go to the United States or Australia.

ATA said "a group of Albanian citizens, sheltering in the Czechoslovak Embassy, left for Prague with regular documents."

Although Albanian authorities agreed Saturday to permit all the Albanian asylum-seekers to leave under foreign supervision, the process of providing them with travel documents and transportation was expected to take days.

Albanian authorities continued on Monday to refuse aid shipments for the would-be-emigres packed in Western embassies.

Anti-apartheid minister quits after reports of affair with white woman

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Anti-apartheid leader Rev. Allan Boesak resigned his church positions after press reports alleged he was having an affair with a white television star, church officials said Monday.

Boesak was in seclusion and his lawyers said he had nothing to say after telling his congregation Sunday that he was stepping down. Boesak, who is married, said he had done nothing wrong but had to resign.

"This is one of the darkest days of my life," he told the congregation of the Ned Geref Sendingkerk church in Cape Town's Bellville South area where he served for 21 years.

"I am deeply sorry for all the pain I have caused," he said.

Boesak, a leader of the mixed-race community, had become a prominent anti-apartheid leader in recent years. He helped lead campaigns against white-minority rule and toured the world to denounce apartheid.

Boesak resigned after South African newspapers reported he was romantically involved with Elna Botha, who works for the state South African Broadcasting Corporation. Mrs. Botha is a star and producer of "Good Morning South Africa," a news and entertainment show.

Mrs. Botha's husband, TV news anchorman Colin Fluxman, was taken off the air Monday after breaking down as he read a news report about his wife and Boesak during "Good Morning South Africa."

Business Day newspaper reported Monday that Fluxman said the couple were divorcing.

Church officials said Boesak and his wife, Dorothy, had not decided whether they would divorce, according to news reports.

Walter Sisulu, a senior leader of the African National Congress, the main black opposition group, said Monday Boesak's resignation would not harm the movement. Boesak has been an ANC ally.

"It's really a personal matter, a love affair is a personal matter," Sisulu said at a press conference.

The incident was seen as a moral rather than a racial scandal. Apartheid legislation banning interracial sex was dropped in 1985.

Boesak was temporarily suspended from his church posts in 1985 after allegations he was having an affair with a church worker. He was later reinstated.

Business Day also reported that Boesak was likely to devote himself to a political career. He has strong ties to the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups.

Boesak is long thought to have had political ambitions that go beyond his role in the anti-apartheid movement.

Boesak modeled himself on American black civil rights leader Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. He developed a vivid speaking style and often led non-violent marches and demonstrations.

Rev. Johan Retief, leader of the council at Boesak's church, said church leaders were stunned and trying to decide what to do. "We do not take this lightly," he said.

2,000 sign petition for library expansion bond

■ The Midland County library — its expansion, its head librarian — topped the agenda at Monday's commissioner's meeting.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners on Monday named a new librarian, while county officials announced that they had enough petition signatures to call a bond issue for a proposed $1.8 million library expansion.

Commissioners unanimously approved Sandra Wegner, Midland County Public Library assistant director for the past five years, as librarian. Ms. Wegner will replace John Deats, who started July 1 as director of Midland College's learning resource center.

"I don't know if Sandra can walk on water, but she's one of the best-liked people in this community," Commissioner Durward Wright commented after the vote.

Wright said a number of community representatives had contacted him and recommended Ms. Wegner for the librarian position.

Nick Taylor, a Midland attorney and Library Advisory Board member, said Ms. Wegner was picked from a list of 10 exceptionally qualified applicants.

"We had some pretty outstanding applicants," Taylor said. "The competition was pretty heavy."

Following Ms. Wegner's appointment, Taylor announced that 2,000 people had signed a petition for a 20,000-square-foot, $1.8 million library addition. Construction of the addition would be paid through a bond issue and private sources, Taylor said.

"I think we're going to move pretty aggressively," he said. "It's a very extensive and exciting project."

The 301 W. Missouri Ave. library has had only about 27,000 square feet in which to work since its opening in 1957, when Midland's population was only 60,000, he said. More than 1,500 people a day now use the facility, he said.

"We're really tight as far as space," Taylor said.

Forrest Underwood, Library Advisory Board chairman, said commissioners are not expected to review a bond issue proposal for at least six to eight weeks.

Underwood said library officials are still seeking private donations for construction of the addition.

The 2,000 signatures on the petition, which Friends of the Library has circulated around the county since April 22, show that the public is interested in the expansion project, he added.

"That was about our goal," Underwood said. "It's an impressive number of signatures."

Ms. Wegner, 51, a 16-year employee of the library, said she is looking forward to the changes.

"We have a good library now, but things can always be better," she said.

Taylor said library expansion plans call for a single-story addition south of the library, where current parking is located. More parking also would be added, Taylor said.

In other action as Monday's meeting, commissioners approved requesting $279,984 in Texas Community Development Program grant money to install sewer lines to "windowpane" residents.

The windowpane areas, located in south Midland County, are surrounded by city borders but have not been annexed because they have not had sewer and water lines.

Midland County officials plan to commit $23,066 from general funds and $46,930 in labor and materials to the project.

The windowpane project is entering its final phase, with sewer and water lines already installed throughout much of the area, county officials have said.

Dana Dirickson, left, and Lynn Ballard, right, show off their giant organic cabbages — proof, they say, that you don't need a lot of fancy chemicals to grow a garden.

Midland sisters are a pair of gardening naturals

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

The red dirt — sand really — looks unlikely to sprout anything more nutritious than tumbleweeds, but Dana Dirickson and Lynn Ballard have created a garden out of this desert.

The sisters have tilled the patch of land behind their house in northeast Midland since 1982 and it has rewarded them with bumper crops of fruits and vegetables that have never been touched by pesticides or chemical fertilizers.

Ms. Dirickson, a computer supervisor with Strategic Abstract and Title, and Ms. Ballard, a geological technician with Plains Petroleum, said they embraced the concept of organic gardening because they like to eat their produce right out of the garden.

"My little niece would follow me around the garden all last summer saying, 'what's this?' and just pick it up and eat it," Ms. Dirickson said. "That's the main reason not to use chemicals."

"What we do isn't much different than what our grandparents did before chemicals," Ms. Ballard said.

Their mother, Jacel Dirickson, who died this spring, planted her organic garden 35 years ago when she had six kids and couldn't afford weed-killers and insecticides.

The secret to the Dirickson-Ballard garden's success is two tons of homemade compost a year and companion planting.

"You put plants that deter bugs around the plants that attract them," Ms. Ballard explained.

"Radishes around cucumbers and squash," she said.

"Then there's basil around tomatoes — it makes them sweeter," Ms. Dirickson interjected.

Garlic wards off the pests, so do non-hybrid French marigolds. Watermelons around the sweet corn chokes the weeds out. Mexican sunflowers keep the maggots out of the compost pile.

Humans take over where companion plants fail. Tomato horn worms, for example, have no natural foes.

"I come out here in the early morning with a jar of alcohol and pick horn worms off the tomatoes and drop them in the alcohol. Supposedly you can put them in the blender and make a potent horn worm deterent, but I'm not that brave and neither is she," Ms. Ballard said.

It's a labor of love, but they wouldn't have it any other way.

"I moved away for a while, to live in an apartment, and I went crazy. I was over here all the time anyway," Ms. Ballard said.

"Sometimes I get sick and tired of fighting the ants and the stickers but I love this place," Ms. Dirickson said.

"You work up a good sweat out in the garden then you go jump in the pool," Ms Ballard added.

The sisters are applying for certification as organic growers. The certificate will allow them to sell their asparagus, tomatoes, cabbage, okra, radishes, garlic, peppers, squash, lettuce, peaches, carrots and cucumbers as "organic" at farmers'

Funding changes not likely, McCown says

■ Court appeal or no, it seems certain Texas' schools can count on a $528 million infusion for the 1990-91 school year.

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A state district judge said Monday he likely will allow the first year of a new school finance system to go into effect unaltered, but a decision on other years won't come until Sept. 1 at the latest.

"Courts just aren't designed to move that fast, and we don't want a school year in chaos," Judge Scott McCown said Monday after opening arguments on the new system's constitutionality.

Attorneys for poorer school districts in the Edgewood v. Kirby lawsuit are challenging the $6.4 billion, five-year plan that the Democratic-controlled Legislature and Republican Gov. Bill Clements negotiated in June after four special sessions of haggling.

Local school districts, which now are budgeting for next fiscal year, would receive an additional $528 million in state aid during that period under the new plan, which is known as Senate Bill (S.B) 1.

But an attorney representing one group of poorer districts, Al Kauffman of the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund, is asking McCown to replace the first year of the new plan with a "Robin Hood" approach drawn by a special master.

That system does not rely on additional money and would divert millions in state aid from districts with high and moderate property wealth to poorer districts.

However, McCown announced in open court that it would be "highly unlikely" for him to enter such an order, or any order altering first-year implementation of S.B. 1.

The announcement means school districts may continue with their budgeting without fear that a new system with substantially different state aid levels will make their efforts moot, Texas Education Commissioner William Kirby said.

"We've got a bill and are having workshops all over the state," said Kirby. School districts "need to move forward implementing S.B. 1," he said.

Arguments and testimony from witnesses on the new plan are expected to continue over the next two weeks before McCown offers his final decision, which itself is subject to appeal to the Texas Supreme Court.

The high court ruled this past October that the state's school finance system was discriminating against students in poorer school districts because the dis-

MPD plans to focus on 'response'

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

In reply to the old line, "Don't the police have anything better to do?" Midland police are working on exactly that — something better to do.

A new police program in the working is aimed at shortening the response time of officers to crime scenes where their presence is vital.

Improving response time will be accomplished by taking reports for non-emergency calls — those that don't require immediate attention or necessitate the presence of an officer in person — over the telephone by specially trained officers.

"All calls are important but we are wanting to free up some of our officers for some of the more important calls," said Lt. Jerry Morris of the Midland Police Department.

All calls that the police receive are broken down into four categories. Priority One calls, the most serious, deal with crimes in progress, emergencies or situations that may turn into an emergency. Priority Two calls, such as a disturbance call, have a potential for the continuation of an incident or requires an immediate investigation.

Neither Priority One nor Two calls will be affected by the new program except that the districts because the districts were unable to spend as much per student as districts with wealthier tax bases.

Kauffman in his opening statement served notice that his clients believe the high court prescribed a system giving all the state's school districts the same access to money as the wealthiest district.

But the assistent attorney general defending the state, Kevin O'Hanlon, said such a system would cost the state $156 billion yearly. "That approaches the amount of the gross state product," he said.

O'Hanlon said the court asked the Legislature to develop a system that provides "substantially equal access to similar amounts of revenue at similar levels of tax effort."

"There's a lot of fudge words in there to be sure," he said.

While Kauffman acknowledged that lawmakers intended the new system to achieve 95 percent equity, their end-result places even that level in doubt. The new law "depends completely on some very vague terms," he said.

Other complaints Kauffman lodged against the new legislation were that wealthy districts could provide unlimited enrichment to students, that the Legislature could continue setting education spending levels after those of all other state agencies, and that it provides no substantial changes from the current system.

Kauffman and his co-counsel, Richard Gray, called a University of Houston education professor, Richard Hooker, whose expert testimoney indicated both old and new dollar allocation formulas rely on a two-tiered approach in which one level provides money for a basic education and a second level provides money for enrichment.

In addition, both systems feature a "career ladder" teacher reward system, additional money for districts that have students with special needs and a mulitiplying factor within the formula that purports to equalize aid among the state's regions based on local economic factors.

Edwards Aquifer drought plan approved

AUSTIN (AP) — An emergency drought management plan for the Edwards Aquifer was accepted by cities, counties and other interest groups at a meeting Monday in San Antonio.

The plan includes water use reduction measures based on four drought stage conditions and water levels in the aquifer, which provides drinking water to a five-county Central Texas area that includes San Antonio.

The plan will be considered by county commissioners and city councils in every county using the Edwards Aquifer, all of whom have informally indicated their acceptance, the Texas Water Commission said.

Abortion protest case dismissed

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The first of more than 100 criminal trespassing charges against anti-abortion protesters was dropped Monday because of the way police arrested demonstrators.

Maria Partido was to be the first of 141 El Paso anti-abortion protesters to go on trial. Her defense attorneys had promised to introduce fetal body parts — severed arms, hips and heads — as evidence in her trial.

But County Court-at-Law Judge Jack Ferguson dismissed the case after three members of the El Paso police tactical squad said they did not know if Ms. Partido was among the people warned to stop blocking entrances to the Reproductive Services clinic.

County Attorney Joe Lucas said at least 119 other cases also will be dismissed for the same reason. But he said he thinks officers might remember those arrested in the remaining 22 cases.

Police arrested the protesters outside the clinic's offices in separate demonstrations last year.

Gabriel Serna, former commander of the police tactical division, testified that a mass warning was issued to the crowd on Sept. 16, 1989, the day Ms. Partido was arrested. But Serna said he could not identify Ms. Partido as someone who was in the crowd when he shouted the warning.

brought to trial in a four-and-a-half year period prior to her assuming the position as County Attorney.

Ms. Bright has not only worked at prosecuting DWI offenders but has been helpful in working with victims of drunk drivers.

"Her responsiveness to DWI victims has been real good — willing to talk to them and being there to answer questions for them," Erickson said.

President of the Midland MADD chapter Faye Higgins said she agrees that Ms. Bright is well-deserving of the honor.

"She has made such a difference in Ector County. There wasn't much law and order in the prosecution as far a DWI was concerned," Ms. Higgins said.

Ms. Bright expressed her delight at being presented the award.

"I thought it was a real nice honor and I feel excited," Ms. Bright said, adding that she is just fulfilling a promise to the public by going after DWI offenders.

"I think that it is important that law enforcement officers and my staff get most of the credit (for building cases against offenders)," Ms. Bright said.

This is the first year that the Ector County has nominated someone for the prosecutor of the year, Erickson said.

All nominations are sent to three Texas MADD chapters that did not nominate anyone to decide who would be bestowed the honor.

Presently, there are 23 MADD chapters in Texas.

Skills program funded

A recent grant to the Developmental Disabilities Center of Midland is being used to provide children there with skills to help them adjust to the working world.

"It's going to help fund our new vocational training program — a horticulturally-based program," said Marsha Bettis, developmental coordinator for the center.

The $4,000 grant, from the Permian Basin Area Foundation, will fund the program for one year, Ms. Bettis said.

"The kids plant and grow geraniums and other bedding plants, and sell them to the public," Ms. Bettis said.

A greenhouse used for the project has been in service since April, and Ms. Bettis said the program has been a success so far.

The center is a year-round school for developmentally disabled children. Developmental disabilities — like Down's syndrome, autism and hearing impairments — are handicaps other than orthopedic or physical.

Currently the school has an enrollment of 26 students between the ages of 2½ and 15 years old. The center accepts individuals from as young as 18 months up to the late 20s.

Man reports robbery

A 32-year-old man said he was robbed of $63 at gunpoint late Sunday night near the intersection of Cowden Avenue and Carver Street, Midland police officials reported.

Kavin Ray Stevenson told police a man walked up to his pickup truck as though he was going to ask for a ride about 11:45 p.m.

But instead the man pointed a .38-caliber revolver at Stevenson and demanded money. The man then fled on foot, police reports said.

The suspect was described as a black male, 5 feet 5 inches tall, about 160 pounds with black hair and brown eyes.

Beach party planned

Seminarians of Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1208 Cherry Lane, will sponsor a substance-free beach party and volleyball tournament Aug. 4-5 on the church grounds. Teenage boys and girls are invited to participate. The non-denominational social is open to the public.

The beach party will follow Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) principles. Participants are encouraged to dress in shirts and shorts.

Teams will consist of six players with two alternates. Entry fees are $10 per team. For information call 682-2175.

MPD: Patrols will not be effected

(From 1B)

In addition to speeding up response time for high priority calls, the program would not cost the department any additional expenses.

response time will be quicker, Morris said, adding that the sooner an officer arrives at such calls, the better the situation can be brought under control. Arriving at a crime scene promptly will increase the chances of preventing potential injuries and apprehending criminals, Morris said.

Priority Three calls deal with crimes after the fact and Priority Four calls are information-type calls.

The proposed program is aimed at reducing officers' response in person to Priority Three calls by about 20 percent.

"It will be the same thing as the cop does (in person) except it will be done on the telephone," Morris said.

An example of a call where a report might be made over the phone would be a burglary of something such as a lawn mower where the item was stolen a few days earlier, Morris said.

If the nature of the call deems that an officer's presence would be helpful, then one would be dispatched to the scene in person, Morris said.

Emergency 911 service will not be affected, officials said.

Some of the factors that would be involved in determining whether an officer is needed in person include whether any evidence can be obtained, if a witness is available, whether a threat or implied threat is involved and if an officer's presence would increase the solvability of the incident.

"The only difference is that you talk to the officer over the phone instead of face to face," Morris said. "It's not that we care less ... we care more."

In addition to speeding up response time for high priority calls, the program would not cost the department any additional expenses. Another plus would be that the program would allow officers more time to practice preventive patrolling, Morris said.

The program would be manned by six specially-trained officers. Three will be patrol officers and three will be from employee slots opened up from the recently closed city jail. The program will not take any officers off the streets, Morris said, but would actually make three more available because of the change in current staffing and procedures at the front desk.

The program may begin as soon as mid-August after final approval by Police Chief Richard Czech.

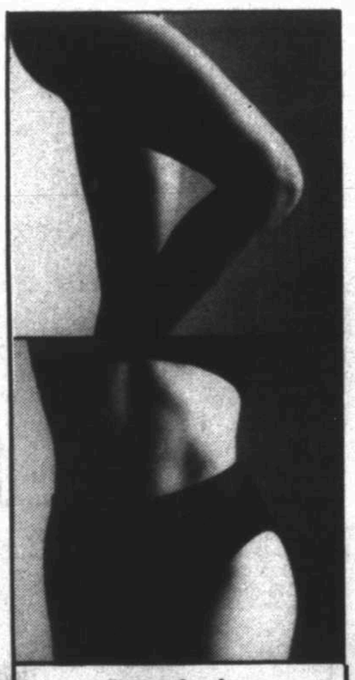

Currently, the Midland Police Department receives about 200 service calls per day in addition to information calls.

Everyone finds fault with suggested legislation, variety of amendments

AUSTIN — It was hard to tell whether Mike Toomey was amused or angry.

"I think the Senate has made a first-time, political vote," the governor's chief of staff said on March 16, the day after the subcommittee finished its work. "It's not a reasonable, plausible vote. With that kind of figure ($1.2 billion), you're talking income tax. And if they think they're going to get an income tax, they're smoking dope in the Senate."

No legislator was seriously suggesting it was time for an income tax, no one other than Bill Hobby, that is, and he wasn't running for re-election. Nevertheless, Toomey was not going to pass up an opportunity for ridicule, even though the session was only 18 days old.

A former state representative from Houston, Toomey, 40, has a stern expression and the general demeanor of someone who missed the '60s completely. He is seldom seen at the Capitol in anything other than a dark suit, on the sleeve of which he wears his hard-core conservative ideology. In his view, Democrats exist to raise taxes, Republicans to stop them. Bill Clements could not have found a better front man.

Toomey saw no need to spend any more money on public education, though he understood that political reality dictated otherwise. But an immediate $1.2 billion? He hardly needed to press the point. Even the senators who were preparing to pass Sen. Carl Parker's bill were talking about an ultimate first-year figure half that. The real concern was not the Senate but the House, where the Republicans would try to make their stand.

"If there is a smell in the air on the House side, it's that the session is over," Toomey said.

It wasn't that nothing was happening. The House Public Education committee, in fact, voted out its bill on March 20, one day after the full Senate, by a vote of 23-9, approved Senate Bill 31. The two bills bore a number of similarities, but the lack of a consensus to support the House version was evident.

The Mexican-American caucus said almost immediately it could not back the bill because the first-year money, $450 million, was too low. Republicans thought the money was too high and the reforms too weak. Some representatives said they were hesitant to support any bill this early in the process.

"I think the bill is dead," said Universal City's Alan Schoolcraft, a member of the House committee and one of three Republicans there to vote against it. Schoolcraft despised the weighted second tier that had become a feature of this bill thanks to an amendment, sponsored in committee by Rep. Greg Luna.

Everybody, it seemed, was finding some fault with the proposed legislation. With the court deadline still more than a month away and legislative leaders having already predicted two sessions would be necessary to iron out a bill, there was little sense of anticipation present when the House convened on March 22 to vote on House Bill 1.

Knowing what lay ahead, Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner nevertheless rose to defend House Bill 1 vigorously, especially its "floating cork" method of maintaining equality in the future.

Unlike the Senate plan's finance model, the one that Rep. Paul Colbert had designed for the House set the guaranteed yield level not at a fixed amount, but at the money being spent and available to schools at the 95th percentile of wealth, such as Plano and Richardson. When their spending and wealth went up, the levels for the property poor schools would go up too.

The idea was to put the state's funding scheme essentially on auto-pilot. Equalization would be perpetual because the Legislature would not constantly be determining what level to equalize to; the wealthier schools would do that for them — hence the description "floating cork." To the governor and his staff, the funding concept was frightening because it eventually would translate into huge increases in education spending, exactly what they did not want.

San Antonio Light/Pamela Sims Harvey

Alan Schoolcraft — Ernestine Glossbrenner

To Glossbrenner, that is what made it attractive. She knew firsthand the impact of deprivation, having grown up attending a poor school near Kilgore, having taught mathematics for 22 years in Alice, and now representing plenty of poor South Texas schools such as Zavala County's La Pryor School District, which derives 78 percent of its revenue from state aid. Through all of her seven terms in the House she had been an advocate of devoting more state resources to education.

"We're going to have to face up to the fact that now that we've invited (poor children) to school we have to provide them with an equal education," she said as debate on her bill began.

Ironically, even as she spoke, the Mexican-American Caucus was meeting to confirm its opposition. The arguments concerning the superiority of the funding mechanism, though well received, were not enough to overcome the first-year money. After all, what assurance was there the Legislature would fully fund future years of the plan? "Members, the future is now," intoned Rep. Eddie Cavazos, the rotund, likable chairman of the caucus. "Are we going to tell students who are finishing school in two or three years that they don't count." Privately, Cavazos explained the opposition as tactical.

"It's like when you're selling a car. We considered this the first offer. We're holding out for better," he said.

More to the Hispanics' liking was an amendment offered by Luna to increase the first-year aid to a whopping $950 million. Glossbrenner was sympathetic but not receptive. What was the point of pursuing a level that was never going to be realistically considered? "I move, very respectfully move, to table the amendment," she said.

And it was, overwhelmingly.

DEMOCRACY IN ACTION

Luna's amendment was one of almost 100 voted on during a debate that lasted all afternoon and into the evening. Rep. Ed Arnold, D-Grand Prairie, found just as little support for an amendment to decrease the first-year money to $300 million.

Successfully added was an amendment to force the state to pay for any mandates it imposed on local schools. Also tacked on, as if to make sure the bill would not find a majority, were provisions that would have gutted three of the major reforms in House Bill 72: the teacher's career ladder, the 22-1 class size restriction in the first four grades, and the uniform teacher appraisal system.

Schoolcraft jumped into the fray by offering a complete substitute bill that appealed to the Republicans and few others. It failed, 85-61.

"At this moment, there is not a majority for any plan," Schoolcraft said. "Basically, we're getting it all out in the open today."

House Bill 1 was dead even before the debate over how to pay for it had really begun. The final tally was 101-45, with Hispanics and Republicans forming most of the block against it. A close vote might have encouraged speaker Gib Lewis to keep working. But now there was obviously no point in continuing.

Rep. Mark Stiles, a Democrat from Beaumont and one of Lewis' lieutenants, said the first session, at least as far as the House was concerned, had been largely just for show.

"A lot of people want to see democracy in action," he said with a cynical grin. "And they did."

Colbert sat with two other representatives outside Lewis' office. Twelve hours earlier, the Houston Democrat had seen his beloved funding formulas die along with the rest of the education bill. Now, on the other side of the door, the speaker and a handful of House leaders were discussing what to do next. Was it significant that Colbert, who'd had so much to do with designing the bill, was on the outside? One veteran Capitol insider thought it was.

"Members don't trust him," she said. "He does not bring any votes with him. I think (the House leadership) wants to cut him out of the process."

The last statement probably was an exaggeration, but certainly Colbert's personality turned many people off, and it was easy to see why. He acted cocky, spoke fast, was full of opinions, often appeared condescending and almost always talked over the head of anyone asking him a question.

Early in the first session, two newspaper reporters approached him to ask about the funding formulas he had authored. Without a moment's introduction, he plunged into technical details of different equity percentiles and spoke at length about his interpretation of one phrase from the Supreme Court's ruling.

When the interview was over, one reporter turned to the other and asked, "Did you understand what he was talking about?"

"Not a word," said the other.

No one doubted that Colbert knew the subject. He had been Supreme Court Justice Oscar Mauzy's main research assistant back when Mauzy was a state senator and chairman of the Education Committee. He could write funding formulas on the back of a napkin while waiting for lunch. But there was still his irritating manner.

One afternoon a week or so before the House vote, he and Glossbrenner met with Parker in the Port Arthur senator's office to explain their bill and its complicated manner of assuring equity. As Colbert asserted its superiority to the Senate version, Parker impatiently began thumping his pen on the desk. The aides in the room expected the volatile Parker to blow up, though he did not. He just kept thumping louder and louder as Colbert went on.

The resounding defeat on the floor for the bill did not seem to discourage Colbert, who had been through the rigors of passing House Bill 72. He seemed as confident as ever.

"The non-finance stuff was in there because it was supposed to be part of the grand compromise to bring in Republican votes," he said. "Now we want to take out all the extra stuff and go up to $600 million. That's the plan. There are 80 votes to do it." In fact, there were not. Although some leaders, including Parker, sometimes spoke of a desire to deal with the financing issue and nothing else, the "non-finance stuff" was a given ingredient without which no bill could prevail.

The $600 million figure seemed a pipe dream, too, inasmuch as not even a half-cent boost in the sales tax would pay for it.

Which made one wonder if Colbert's faith in the salability of the floating cork was also misplaced.

"That is not why the bill failed," he said flatly.

All he had to do was convince Lewis.

Other than repeat his undying opposition to a tax increase, Clements had had little to say during the session. Once or twice he had inveighed Senate Bill 31, and he had given a speech to a United Way convention that was long on the need for deregulation but noticeably short on the need for equity.

Senators eye S&L effort as crime bill nears vote

By Mike Robinson

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private citizens frustrated by the pace of prosecution in the $325 billion savings and loan mess could themselves sue alleged defrauders and pocket damages under a plan sponsors want to add to the Senate's omnibus crime bill.

The so-called "bounty hunter" plan is drawing fire from the Justice Department, which says it might end up snarling criminal investigations already under way.

But sponsors say it could prove to be precisely what is needed to prod the cleanup into high gear.

"The United States has just experienced the greatest financial theft in our history — carried out by thousands of people — and the wheels of justice grind with agonizing slowness," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.

The General Accounting Office estimates that the savings and loan bailout will cost taxpayers between $325 and $500 billion, depending on inflation, interest rates and other economic conditions.

The bounty hunter plan is the last unresolved point in the wide-ranging crime package, which is set for a vote on Wednesday.

Chief provisions of the package call for curbs on nine semiautomatic assault weapons, plus capital punishment for 30 federal crimes ranging from presidential assassination to espionage.

Some Senate liberals are disgruntled about the death penalty provisions and conservatives are ill at ease with any restrictions on the right to bear arms.

Always anxious to show crime-fighting zeal in an election year, though, senators are expected to whisk the package through without difficulty once the savings and loan dispute is wrapped up.

The bill then goes to the House, where the Judiciary Committee already is at work on a distinctively different anti-crime blueprint.

The "bounty hunter" plan is cosponsored by Simon and Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del. Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., has urged something similar.

Endorsed by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, the plan would cover savings and loan fraud under the False Claims Act — which allows individuals to file fraud suits and pocket a portion of the damages as a reward.

Of course, those filing suit would have to have inside knowledge of specific savings and loan fraud. And before setting off on their own, they would first have to give federal prosecutors a chance to act on the problem.

Critics at the Justice Department, however, say the False Claims Act is unconstitutional and ought to be junked.

The department prevailed on senators two weeks ago to postpone action on the plan. It argued that federal agents on the trail of S&L swindlers were liable to get sidetracked into endless reviews of individual claims under the measure.

It also said the plan might spawn a quagmire of conflicting court cases and ultimately torpedo efforts to put S&L crooks behind bars.

By postponing action on the proposal, the Senate gave sponsors additional time for their sales pitch.

There's a game plan, however, in case talks fizzle. If that happens, lawmakers intend to go ahead and vote on the crime package and bring the savings and loan provisions to the floor later as a separate bill.

The Senate already has done the hard work on the crime bill, maintaining its curbs on semiautomatic assault weapons despite a fierce lobbying campaign by the usually influential National Rifle Association.

In other Capitol Hill action this week, congressional budget negotiators plan to meet with White House counterparts in search of an agreement to cut the federal budget deficit by $50 billion in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

Agreement has been elusive after nearly two months of talks. But the bargaining intensified after President Bush eased his position against taxes on June 26 — saying he now believes they must be included in any budget pact.

Participants say they hope a package of higher taxes and spending cuts can be agreed to before Congress leaves for its August recess.

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures rose Monday led by a surge in wholesale gasoline prices.

The session started with brisk selling on the New York Mercantile Exchange amid speculation that supply will exceed demand for the near future. The end of an oil workers' strike in Norway provided another selling incentive.

The contract for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate advanced 11 cents to $16.58 cents a 42-gallon barrel following Friday's decline of 3 cents.

In natural gas trading, the August contract fell to $1.493 per 1,000 cubic feet from $1.498 on Friday.

Analyst James Steel at Refco Inc. said crude garnered technical support from the ability of the August contract to remain above $16 a barrel despite heavy selling in the morning.

Dollar mixed

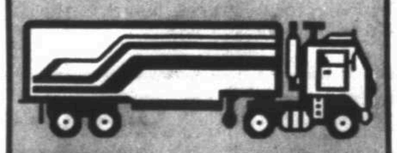

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar finished mixed in light domestic trading Monday as currency traders kept a close watch on the economic summit in Houston but had little news to act upon.

Gold prices fell. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery slipped $2.90 from late Friday to settle at $358.20 a troy ounce.

In London, a pound was quoted at $1.8055. Later, in New York trading, a pound cost $1.8080. In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 150.70 yen. In London, the dollar was quoted at 151.10 yen.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6528 West German marks; 1.3965 Swiss francs; 5.5460 French francs; 1,211.25 Italian lire; and 1.1586 Canadian dollars.

Gold in London was quoted at a late bid of $358.15 a troy ounce. Silver bullion was quoted in London at $4.86 a troy ounce

Texas trucking

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission has approved a 25 percent discount on state trucking rates, the largest ever allowed under a 3-year-old state law.

The discount affects all general freight shipments in Texas weighing more than 10,000 pounds, officials said Monday.

The new rule allows competitive rates between trucking companies and should lower trucking costs for Texas businesses, commission officials said.

The new discount takes effect July 31.

French tower

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump has a new tenant, the giant French retailer Galeries Lafayette, which the embattled developer hopes will make his Trump Tower tonier.

"We have a fabulous anchor for Trump Tower, it's a fabulous tenant," Trump said at a news conference Monday with Galeries Lafayette's chairman, Georges Meyer.

Neither Trump nor Meyer disclosed terms of the lease in Trump's 68-story skyscraper on Manhattan's Fifth Avenue.

Texas again nation's top oil producer

■ Texas has regained its title as the nation's top oil producer after two years playing second to Alaska, and is likely to remain at the top through the year 2000, analysts say.

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — Texas has regained bragging rights as the nation's No. 1 oil producer.

The Lone Star State is holding a narrow edge over Alaska, which claimed the title for the first time in 1988.

And with production declining in Alaska's mammoth Prudhoe Bay field, Texas likely will be the production leader at least through the year 2000, industry observers say.

When Alaska's crude output began outstripping Texas' in 1988, some Texans "felt a sense of shock or loss," said historian T.R. Fehrenbach of San Antonio.

After all, Alaska had inflicted a spiritual blow to the Texas psyche in 1959, when it was admitted to the Union as the nation's 49th state. Texas was no longer the biggest, a title it boastfully had held for 114 years.

Likewise, Texas had been the nation's leading oil producer virtually throughout this century, until Alaska surged ahead two years ago.

But oil production totals for the first four months of this year show that Texas produced 209.9 million barrels of oil. Alaska has produced 207.8 million barrels, or 2.1 million less than Texas.

The Energy Department, which recently compiled final production totals for 1989, says Texas also held a thin production margin last year.

Texas produced 688.2 million barrels of the black gold. Alaska had an output of 684 million barrels, a difference of only 4.2 million barrels, or a gap of less than 1 percent.

Analysts say that although Texas' production is continuing to decline, Alaska's production is expected to decrease at a faster rate throughout the 1990s.

Therefore, Texas is expected to remain the No. 1 producer through the rest of this century, and "in all likelihood the gap (between Texas' and Alaska's production) will widen," said Chuck Logsdon, Alaska's top petroleum economist.

Alaska's production likely will decline by more than 50 percent by the year

TI files suit against five semiconductor makers

■ Texas Instruments is suing five semiconductor makers, claiming patent infringement as part of its campaign to benefit from its past technological avances.

By John A. Bolt

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. filed suit Monday against five semiconductor makers, claiming they are violating a 13-year-old patent governing computer chip manufacturing.

The lawsuit is the latest in TI's 4-year-old campaign to benefit from its past technological advances, which cover more than 5,000 patents, including the forerunner of today's computer chip.

"TI is taking these actions to prevent the unauthorized use of its technology and protect the significant investments the company has made in development of intellectual property that is used in integrated circuits around the world," said company general counsel Richard J. Agnich.

The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Dallas, accuses the companies of illegally using a TI-developed process for covering computer chips with plastic. It asks for unspecified damages.

A companion complaint filed with the International Trade Commission accuses the five companies of importing and selling plastic-enclosed chips without a license.

"Texas instruments has been demanding some incredibly high royalty rates," said Jack Menache, general counsel at Integrated Device Technology Inc. in Santa Clara, Calif., one of the companies named in the complaints.

Menache said IDT officials met with TI representatives in December to discuss the patents, but no negotiations had been held in the meantime.

Menache said the process TI seeks to claim "touches a process that's been around for a long, long time."

Besides IDT, the other companies named were Analog Devices Inc., Norwood, Mass.; Cypress Semiconductor Corp. and VLSI Technology Inc., San Jose, Calif.; and LSI Logic Corp., Milpitas, Calif.

Officials at Analog Devises, Cypress Semiconductor and LSI Logic said their companies had not seen the lawsuits and would have no comment. Officials at VLSI Technology were not immediately available to comment.

New technology won't boost oil production

By Kyle Pope
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – New technology that has boosted oil and gas production in regions long thought spent will not reverse the slide of U.S. production.

That is the opinion of government and industry specialists who took part in a recent three-day University of Houston conference on emerging energy technologies.

McElwrath

"When I look at our energy picture today, it is not an encouraging prospect," said Mike McElwrath, principal deputy assistant secretary of the U.S. Department of Energy. "We are 16 games out of first place, and the end of the season is creeping up on us."

McElwrath blamed the decline on rising oil imports and an American environmental movement he called "anti-growth and anti-economy."

"For some reason, economic growth has been labeled the opposite of environmental protection," McElwrath said. "People do not yet understand there is no irreconcilable conflict between the world's environmental goals and its energy needs."

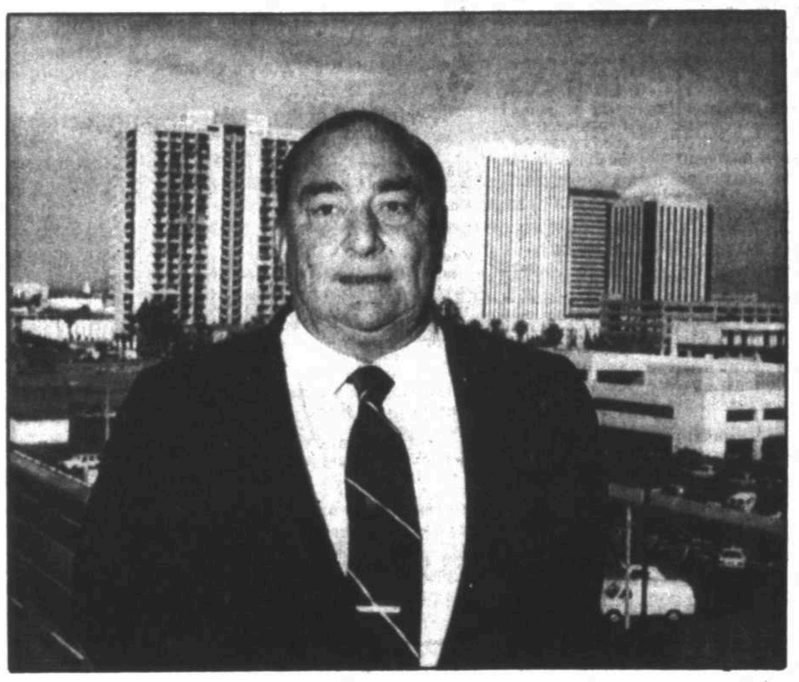

Kenneth Lay, chief executive of Houston-based Enron Corp., said while new recovery advances such as horizontal drilling and steam injection may encourage battered energy producers, they will not offset a U.S. energy trade imbalance, which is now the highest since 1973.

"It's inevitable that we are heading toward a very dangerous position in this country in terms of oil supplies," Lay said. "We have become very complacent."

The executive said U.S. oil production has fallen 20 percent in the last four years. At the same time, Lay said foreign producers now supply nearly half of all the oil consumed in the U.S., collecting about $50 billion in U.S. payments last year alone. "We are dealing with some very grave issues," Lay said.

Still, a Saudi Arabian energy executive

Congressional investigators are looking into the deal that let James Fail of Phoenix buy 15 insolvent Texas S&Ls with borrowed money and federal subsidies.

Senate subcommittee probing S&L purchase

■ A Senate subcommittee chairman wants to subpoena a former Bush aide as part of the probe into the deal that let James Fail purchase 15 thrifts that are now Dallas-based Bluebonnet Savings.

By Dave Skidmore

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of a Senate subcommittee said Monday he wants to subpoena a former aide to President Bush who allegedly helped an Arizona insurance executive secure a $1.8 billion subsidy from savings and loan regulators.

Metzenbaum

The insurance executive, James M. Fail of Phoenix, borrowed $70 million while putting up $1,000 of his own in December 1988 to acquire 15 thrifts that now operate as the Dallas-based Bluebonnet Savings.

The reconstituted thrift was the nation's most profitable large S&L last year, Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said.

Robert Roe, a former official of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. who helped negotiate the Bluebonnet deal, told Metzenbaum's subcommittee on antitrust, monopolies and business rights that Robert J. Thompson, once then-Vice President Bush's congressional liaison, had negotiated the deal for Fail.

However, Fail, Thompson and M. Danny Wall, the former chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which oversaw the FSLIC, all declined to testify before the panel.

"The U.S. taxpayer, compliments of the dealmakers at (the FSLIC) send Mr. Fail a check for what amounts to $23 million every month," Metzenbaum said.

Fail now owns "a worry-free financial institution that doesn't have to compete with other savings and loans in order to make a profit," the senator said.

Brokerage wrap accounts, 1/3 the price

By Jane Bryant Quinn

NEW YORK — Not long ago, I wrote about a better way of dealing with a stockbroker. It's called a wrap account. I like this arrangement because it removes the broker's conflict of interest. He or she no longer has to keep selling you stuff in order to make a reasonable living. More on wrap accounts below.

Quinn

I got several letters from people in the investment business, objecting that wrap accounts are too expensive. You can get the same service at one-third of the price, they said, by quitting your broker and dealing directly with an investment manager. True, true — as I mentioned briefly in the earlier column.

But I still like wrap accounts for brokerage-house clients, and want to take the time to explain my thinking in more detail.

When you go for a wrap, you and your broker jointly pick a professional money manager to handle your account. You pay a flat fee. On a stock portfolio, it's generally 3 percent of assets up to $500,000 — 2 percent to the broker, 1 percent to the manager–and less for larger sums. Bond portfolios might cost 1.25 percent. You pay no sales commissions on trades.

You choose a manager who specializes in your kind of investing — aggressive stocks, income stocks, taxable bonds, tax-exempts and so on. Typically, you need a minimum of $100,000 to invest, although Shearson Lehman Hutton has a program for people with $50,000.

The sticking point is the 3 percent fee, which is stiff. Some of the finest talents in the investment world will run your money in a stock-owning, no-load (no sales charge) mutual fund for 1 percent or less. If you keep $100,000 in a wrap account instead of a mutual fund, you are throwing away maybe $2,000 a year.

Alternatively, you could hire a money manager directly, rather than going through your stockbroker. Managers typically charge in the 1 percent area. Adding brokerage commissions and custodial fees raises your costs, but probably only to 1.5 percent or so.

Obviously, a mutual fund or a personal adviser would be a better choice–especially the fund. For your core, long-term investments, I urge you to buy two or three no-load mutual funds of good reputation and relax.

But here's the rub. Thousands upon thousands of investors still take their investment advice from stockbrokers. These customers know about mutual funds, but have chosen not to use them. They are probably uncertain about looking for personal advisers (the best of which may set minimums of $1 million of more).

Brokerage accounts are what these investors know best. And their accounts are probably a lot more expensive than they realize.

Stockbrokers have to nudge a certain amount of money out of your account in order to make a living and to please their firms. To this end, they may suggest that you buy high-cost products, like mutual funds with substantial entrance, maintenance or exit fees, limited partnerships, unit trusts and annuities. They might put you into risky options.

They might churn your account, by encouraging you to buy and sell stocks frequently, in order to generate sales commissions.

Such a broker could easily cost you much more than 3 percent a year. You might actually save money by moving to a wrap account. Furthermore, a broker is a salesperson — not a professional money manager. For long-term success, you need someone who knows how to allocate your assets properly and balance your risks.

Some of the money managers on the brokers' wrap lists are true stars. Some are pedestrian. But they've been vetted by the brokerage firm, so you're assured of a minimum level of competence. And their mind is on results rather than on sales commissions.

Personally, I'd choose a mutual fund. But if you insist on a brokerage-house connection, a wrap is better.

TOP: State has more oil to produce

(From 4B)

2000, falling to slightly more than 300 million barrels annually, Logsdon said.

Prudhoe Bay, the nation's largest oilfield, accounts for about 70 percent of Alaska's crude production and is expected to experience annual production declines of 8 to 10 percent, Logsdon said.

Texas' production is likely to decline by 20 to 30 percent by the year 2000, said John Wood, an Energy Department official in Dallas.

The state's production has been in a general decline since peaking at 1.3 billion barrels in 1972.

Some analysts have said they expect Texas' oil production to be in a permanent decline. But the state's output conceivably could be stabilized in the future if oil prices rise and technological improvements such as horizontal drilling boost recovery rates, said Rob Finley, associate director of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas at Austin.

There is still an enormous amount of oil to be produced in the state, Finley said.

As an example, he pointed to the huge Permian Basin of West Texas, the state's most important oil-producing region.

About 25.3 billion barrels of oil have been pumped out of the basin, Finley said. But an estimated 75 billion barrels of unrecovered oil still is in place in the basin, and substantial volumes can be recovered using enhanced oil-recovery techniques, he said.

"Nobody is saying you can get all that oil, but just look at what you could do if you could get a quarter of it," he said.

PROBE: Other deals questioned

(From 4B)

Fail's attorney, Stanley M. Brand, in a statement released after the hearing, challenged the jurisdiction of the Metzenbaum panel to look into S&L matters. He said it was misleading to say Fail had bought Bluebonnet for only $1,000 because he had pledged his holdings as collateral for the $70 million in loans.

"It is not difficult to conclude that today's hearing was motivated by sheer political opportunism," Brand said.

Metzenbaum, the only subcommittee member present during a four-hour session Monday, said he would push the panel to subpoena the three, and others, within the week.

"They have failed to show up until this point. We intend to get them here. They owe the public an explanation," he said.

Metzenbaum said a Dec. 5, 1988, "Dear Danny" letter from Thompson prompted Wall to arrange the initial meeting with FSLIC officials putting together bailout deals.

In the two weeks leading up to the Dec. 22 deal, Thompson actively participated in the negotiations, Roe told Metzenbaum.

"To what extent did Robert Thompson's political connections and personal friendships influence the outcome of the bidding process?" Metzenbaum asked.

Asked in a telephone interview what his reply was, Wall said, "None." He said he knew Thompson as a lobbyist, not as a friend, and had not known him when he worked for Bush.

He defended the bank board's choice of Fail even though the three board members had been told that a company controlled by Fail, United Security Holding Co., had pleaded guilty to fraud in 1976 in Alabama.

Wall complained that Metzenbaum was presenting information "very selectively" and said he had declined to testify only because he wasn't given enough time to prepare.

In the waning months of the Reagan administration, the bank board under Wall concluded scores of bailout deals — more than 200 in 1988.

Metzenbaum said he would continue to investigate the other transactions.

"I don't believe this is the only deal that was made that has questions surrounding it,' he said.

OIL: Dependence inevitable

(From 4B)

attending the conference said Lay's warnings – echoed by nearly every conference speaker –are misguided.

"There is no energy crisis," said Sadad Husseini, senior vice president of exploration and production for the Aramco Oil Co. in Saudi Arabia. "It's a trade crisis, and it's really not such a big problem."

Husseini, who commented on trade issues in a presentation on Saudi high-tech advances, later said American hand-wringing over OPEC's influence ignores the organization's role in ensuring a steady supply of oil to American consumers.

"If it wasn't for the existence of these major producers, the U.S. would be in serious trouble," Husseini said.

The conference, sponsored by the Society of Petroleum Engineers and the university's Institute for Improved Oil Recovery, ended Friday.

Lead not enough

The Milwaukee Brewers and California Angels proved again that no lead in baseball is ever safe until the final out.

California led Sunday's game at County Stadium 7-0 in the third inning and appeared to be en route to an easy victory. But Milwaukee scored one run in the third, six in the fourth and 13 in the fifth for a 20-7 victory.

Now the blowout was in the other dugout.

Even Santa sold

ARLINGTON (AP) — Before the 11th Annual National Sports Collectors Convention ended Sunday, many people turned cardboard into cash.

It was by no means any kind of magic act. Officials estimated up to 40,000 people showed up to shop for sports trading cards other items of sports memorabilia.

Even Santa Claus was in demand.

A 1989 Santa Claus card included in the Pro-Set 1989 football set was purchased for $100 by John Sikorskyj, of Buffalo, N.Y.

"What are you going to do, you know," Sikorskyj said. "I decided I wanted it."

Baseball cards dominated the show, and the big names of the game were drawing most of the high prices.

Somebody paid $10,500 for a Willie Mays baseball card, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

All-Stars poised for classic

■ Views differ on the extent to which the fans should participate in the selection of the game's best.

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — Some folks starting in the All-Star Game Tuesday night in Wrigley Field, by dint of the fans' ballot, are not having years nearly as fancy as others who will be riding the cushions in the dugout.

Cal Ripken Jr., for one, was hitting nearly 100 points below another American League shortstop, Ozzie Guillen, for much of the season; and Ozzie Smith, for another, will be at shortstop for the National League when either Barry Larkin or Shawon Dunston would seem a better contemporary choice.

What's Boggs starting at third for, when Gruber's having a superior season? And McGwire over Fielder at first base? No way, Jose. Or is there a way, Jose?

"We're not allowed on the field, so I think the fans should vote for the team," said Dave Taylor, a parking-lot attendant across from Wrigley Field.

"It gives them a chance to express themselves. You always hear the managers and players and sportscasters talking. This gives a fan a voice, too."

"It's ridiculous for the fans to vote," said Josh Noel, a high school student. "The managers and players are the ones who know what's going on, who see the players every day, and they're the experts. They should vote."

"Who cares?" said Frank Robinson, the Orioles' manager. "They're not voting for me."

Right now the fans, as long as they stay on their best behavior, are permitted to select the starting field lineups, and controversies abound.

They were bad boys and girls in 1957, at least those in Cincinnati, and seven Reds were chosen in an unbridled display of ballot-box stuffing. Seven Reds and Stan Musial. And so in 1958, the vote, as in a banana republic, was stripped from the fans because of the embarrassment they caused their baseball superiors.

In 1970, however, that benevolent despot and new commissioner of baseball, Bowie Kuhn, gave the franchise back to the paying customers, where it has resided ever since.

Fans participated in the selection of players for the first two All-Star Games, in 1933 and 1934.

But from 1935 to 1946, managers took over and picked all the players.

Then from 1947 to 1957, the voting for starters was given to the fans.

Some people subscribe to a notion, perpetuated by people who profit from baseball, that the All-Star Game is the fans' game. That is, it's a game designed strictly for the fans' pleasure. And so that's the starting team.

One wonders, meanwhile, well, aren't World Series games, or playoff games, or even the regular season games for the fans' pleasure as well? And shouldn't fans have a say in who starts in those contests, too?

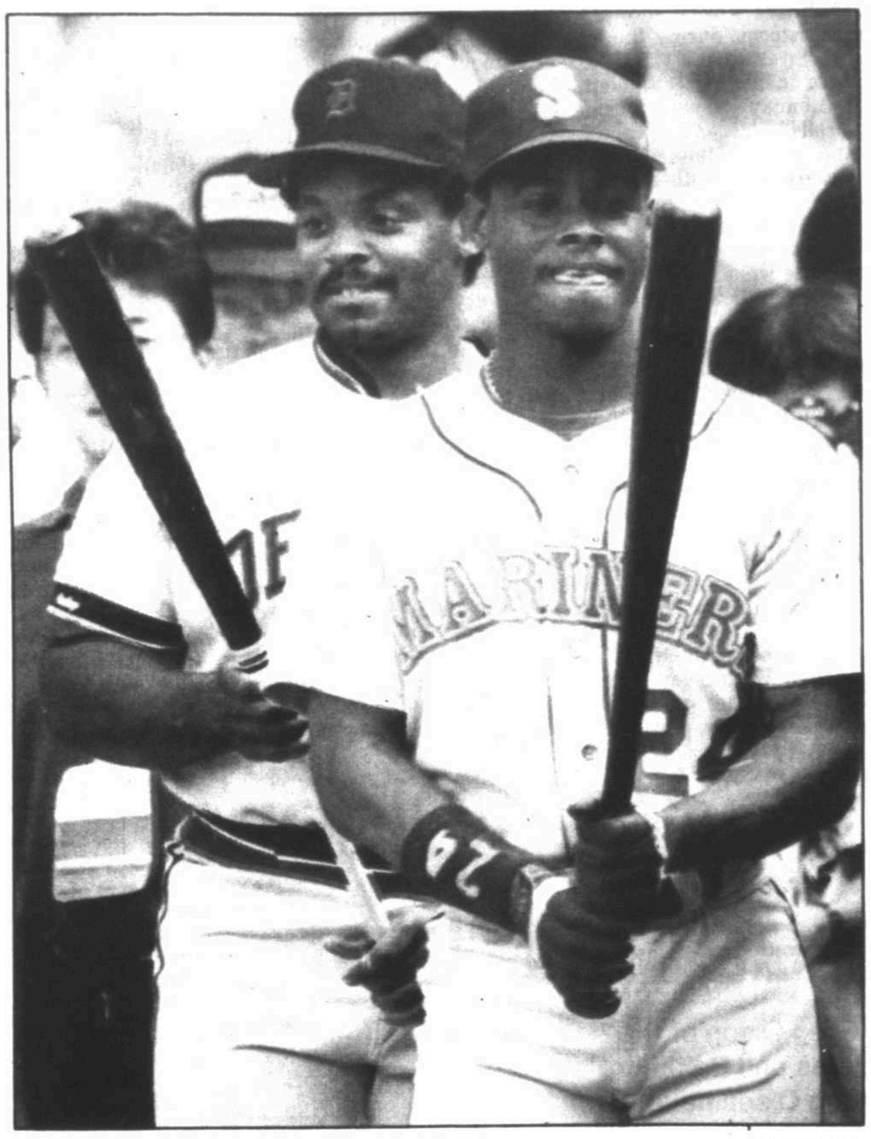

And no one gives the fans a vote on whether there should be a lockout or a strike, or whether the price for a hot dog at the ball park should be raised a buck, or a bleacher seat should be upped by a deuce.

As for the games, they are designed, to be sure, to make money. They are a business venture in the form of a public entertainment.

And the money accrued goes to those who make baseball their livelihood.

No one in baseball says it's the fans' game, so the proceeds should go to the fans.

When the fans were re-enfranchised in 1970, it was because the feeling among baseball people was that the game was slipping in popularity; perhaps this little voting bait will help lure them back.

Germans clamor for view of cup

■ Violence erupts in Berlin just moments after West Germany's 1-0 World Cup win over Argentina.

Associated Press

EAST BERLIN — Tens of thousands of flag-waving fans greeted West Germany's World Cup champions on Monday, a day after four people were killed and hundreds injured after jubilant street celebrations turned violent.

The wild celebrations began moments after West Germany's 1-0 victory over Argentina in Sunday's World Cup final at Rome.

The scene then turned ugly as bands of neo-Nazi skinheads and other hooligans brawled with police in East Berlin and in the West German cities of Hamburg and Bielefeld. Foreigners were singled out for attacks, and stores were looted and vandalized nationwide, police said.

More than 120 people were arrested and at least 60 police officers were among the injured.

The celebration was far more violent and nationalistic than the good-natured euphoria that followed West Germany's last cup championship in 1974. It was also the first shared by East Germany, which is on the threshold of unifying with its Western neighbor and rooted strongly for its neighboring team.

Unification and rising German influence on world affairs has intensified patriotic feeling and spawned new extremism.

"I was astonished by what had happened last night," said Detlev Liepmann, a sociologist at West Berlin's Free University. "There is a special group at the right side of our spectrum who are searching for any occasion to do these sort of things."

About 20,000 cheering fans greeted the West German team when it returned to Frankfurt Monday after taking the championship.

The peaceful display of pride was in sharp contrast to the scenes of random violence that broke out the night before and lasted into the morning.

Hundreds of thousands of people poured into the streets, fireworks streaked the skies over several cities and a concert of honking horns lasted into the morning.

But in East Berlin, about 5,000 youths watching the game on a huge television screen across from the Parliament building began hurling bottles and demolishing concession stands when it ended.

King calls out for fair play

■ Fight promoter claims the knockout could have easily belonged to Mike Tyson and not 'Buster' Douglas

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Don King spoke from the recent controversial past on Monday, calling from a tape in a booming voice for fair play in the James "Buster" Douglas-Mike Tyson heavyweight title fight.

King

"All I'm looking for his justice and fair play — for one side or another," King said in an audio tape played during his breach-of-contract suit against Douglas.

King also was heard to say on the tape at one point, "There's a grave injustice here. It's an injustice if it holds that Mike Tyson was knocked out."

At another point on the tape, King said, "If the rules is kept, the first knockout automatically obliterates the second knockout. There never would have been a second knockout."

He also said, "Here's the facts — Mike Tyson knocked out James 'Buster' Douglas."

King is scheduled to testify Tuesday.

Douglas and manager John Johnson have sued King for breach of contract in federal court in Nevada, contending he tried to get the result of Douglas' 10th-round knockout of Tyson overturned.

King contends he was only trying to get an immediate rematch between Douglas and Tyson.

The Douglas-Johnson suit in Nevada has been stayed, pending the outcome of this trial. King is suing Douglas and Johnson for breaching his promotional contract by signing a contract with The Mirage hotel-casino at Las Vegas for a fight against Evander Holyfield.

King is suing The Mirage for tortuous interference.

Jose Sulaiman, president of the World Boxing Council, who was called as a witness for King, said the audio tape played Monday was made during a meeting involving the press, King and some boxing officials in a narrow coridor.

Actually, it was at a news conference called about an hour after the Feb. 11 fight at Tokyo.

Earlier, Sulaiman had testified that King did not ask him to stop the fight after Douglas was knocked down in the eighth round. Douglas was down for 13 seconds because the referee failed to pick up the count of the timekeeper and instead started his own count at one.

On the tape, however, Sulaiman was heard to say, "The protest originally came from the promoter (King) that the fight should be stopped, but the official report came from the Japanese Boxing Commission."

As he did Friday, Sulaiman once again testified that King did not ask him to overturn the result.

Lendl, Graf slip

WIMBLEDON, England — They've been at the summit so long that the words seem to be permanently attached to their names, like honorary titles bestowed by a monarch.

Top-ranked Ivan Lendl. Number one Steffi Graf.

Lendl has been the top player in men's tennis for all but five months since 1985. Graf has reigned over women's tennis for the last three years.

But don't carve the words in stone just yet. Newly crowned Wimbledon champions Stefan Edberg and Martina Navratilova say they'd like to add a prefix to their names.

"I know I'm close and it's not going to be easy for Ivan to hang on," Edberg said Monday, a day after defeat-

Thunder predicted from skies, big bats

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Watch out, Wrigley Field!

Jose Canseco, Darryl Strawberry and Andre Dawson say it's going to rain home runs at the All-Star Game Tuesday night.

The weatherman says it'll rain, all right. Maybe thunder, too.

"There's a chance, no, make that likely, there will be showers and thunderstorms during the game," Bob Somrek of the U.S. Weather Service in nearby Rosemont, Ill., said Monday. "I would bring an umbrella."

And for those fans sitting in the bleachers, don't bother bringing a glove, said fellow metereologist Larry Hildrebrand.

"It will be a pitcher's day," he said. "The wind will be blowing in from center field, about 10 to 15 mph."

Somrek could not predict how long the rain would last. The All-Star Game never has been completely rained out, although it was shortened to five innings in 1961 and postponed for a day in 1969.

A delay this time would cause some real problems. Five American League games lost to the lockout have been rescheduled for Wednesday, cutting the All-Star break from the usual three days to two.

If the game is rained out, it will be played Wednesday night and the five AL games will be rescheduled again, league president Bob-by Brown said.

On Monday, though, it was bright and sunny at Wrigley with Canseco forecasting that hitters might dominate a game usually ruled by pitchers.

"I've heard a lot about this park. Hopefully, you'll see 500-and 600-foot home runs," he said, a day after hitting one nearly that far in Cleveland. "You guys laugh, but you'll see it."

"Don't forget, you're talking about strong guys," Dawson said.

The last time the All-Star Game came to Wrigley, Rocky Colavito, Leon Wagner, Pete Runnels and John Roseboro homered as the Americans won 9-4 in 1962. Only once since then have more runs been scored, in 1983 when the Americans romped 13-3.

"This is the kind of park where everybody is going to crank it up," Strawberry said. "Even Ozzie is going to try to hit a home run."

Ozzie Smith, who has not homered this season, hit several over the ivy in batting practice. But Canseco hit a ball that got a lot more oooohhhs than anything by Oz, a drive to left field that landed on Waveland Avenue and bounced among some fans seated in a low rooftop.

Yet even with Petula Clark's "Downtown" playing over the sound system, Canseco and Strawberry could not connect in the home-run derby. Neither did major league homer leader Cecil Fielder or Bobby Bonilla and Ken Griffey Jr.

Ryne Sandberg highlighted the sold-out practice session with three home runs. He was the only player to hit more than one.

There have been a total of just five home runs in the last five All-Star Games. Dave Parker, 4-for-15 with one home run in six events, isn't predicting many more at Wrigley.

"I don't think there will be no 15 home runs being hit tomorrow," he said. "Good pitching usually stops good hitting."

That's so, said Rob Dibble, the reliever with the 100 mph fastball.

"You make the pitch you want, nobody is going to hit one out of the park," he said. "I've seen one-and two-run games when the wind was blowing out 30 or 40 mph."

Oakland's Bob Welch, tied for the big-league lead with 13 wins, will start for the AL. Jack Armstrong, 11-3 for Cincinnati, starts for the Nationals.

Athletics manager Tony La Russa said none of his pitchers will work more than two innings.

La Russa did not present any big surprises, as he did when he batted Bo Jackson leadoff last year. He did, however, put Cal Ripken (nine home runs) in the cleanup spot while dropping A's cleanup hitter Mark McGwire (22 homers) to sixth.

Before the workouts, Brown and NL president Bill White reiterated what has become more true in recent years — the All-Star Game is to win, not for fun.

"We're out to stop this three-game losing streak," White said, perhaps forgetting — or forecasting? — that the Nationals have lost only two in a row. The Americans trail the series 37-22 and are trying for their longest success streak since 1946-49.

Greg(g) Olsons meet at last

■ Greg Olson of the Braves and Baltimore's Gregg Olson have been getting each other's mail, but they can exchange it at tonight's All-Star game in Chicago.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Greg William Olson, All-Star catcher, finally met his match Monday — Gregg William Olson, All-Star pitcher.

"It's really deja vu. It's really scary," said Olson the catcher.

It was really overdue. For years, the two Olsons — related by baseball but not by birth — have gotten each other's mail, phone calls and statistics by accident.

When Greg, 29, a catcher for the Atlanta Braves, got called up to the majors last April and came to bat, television announcers mistakenly looked up the lifetime batting statistics of Gregg, 23, a pitcher for the Baltimore Orioles who doesn't hit.

"I got a hit, and they said it was my first major-league hit," said Greg, who actually had one hit at that point. "They looked up Gregg Olson of Baltimore and skipped past my name. I was so unknown to everyone."

Not to Gregg William Olson.

"I had read a story about him in the minor leagues," Gregg said. "He had the same name, with one 'g'. I thought that was kind of funny. What are the chances of that — with the same middle name?"

That was the first time Olson had heard of Olson. It wasn't the last.

While Greg the catcher struggled in the minors for six years, Gregg the pitcher was making the jump from Auburn to the majors. He was the Orioles' top pick in the June 1988 draft — and the only player out of that draft to get called up to the majors last year.

Gregg Olson did so well that he was chosen American League Rookie of the Year — making life a little more difficult for Greg Olson's mail carrier.

"Last year when my wife and I got back from vacation, there were 18 letters for me, and 17 were for Gregg Olson of Baltimore," Greg said. "In the last week I've gotten three addressed to Gregg Olson, Atlanta Braves, Fulton County Stadium. When I see Gregg with two g's, I'm laughing."

Most of the letters include baseball cards of Gregg the pitcher to be autographed. The result — Greg Olson has perhaps the world's most extensive collection of Gregg Olson baseball cards.

"At first I'd send them back, saying , 'Sorry, you've got the wrong Greg Olson, ' " Greg said. "Then I started keeping them. I must have 40 or 50 of his cards. I've got them here today."

There was no even trade at Wrigley Field during workouts Monday. Gregg the pitcher doesn't have any of Greg the catcher's baseball cards because, well, there aren't many. One company made a Greg Olson major-league debut card some time ago, but there was no follow-up.

No new poses. No brittle bubble gum. Nothing to trade Olson.

"I'm probably the only guy here who doesn't have a baseball card. I guarantee that," Greg said, dressing in the National League clubhouse.

Oh, but the other Olson hasn't been spared the confusion of shared names. When he arrived in Chicago on Sunday night to check into his hotel, there was an eerie reminder of his namesake.

"They misspelled my name on the room key — it had only one 'g'. I started to get worried," Gregg said. "Was this my stuff or his?"

And ...

"My wife went to the cleaners yesterday and the guy there said, 'Your husband's a baseball player? The catcher, for Atlanta?' She said, 'No, no, no.'

"This morning, I got a call for him in my room. I figured it was for him — it was from a guy in Atlanta."

They now have another bit of shared information — they made the All-Star game for the first time in the same year, although their paths were very different.

Greg came to spring training as a non-roster catcher and started the season buried in Class AAA. He got called up from Richmond on April 10 as the third catcher and most overlooked player on the roster.

"I was the last of the 27 players to play in a game," he said.

He finally got in a game when first baseman Nick Esasky hurt his shoulder, prompting catcher Jody Davis to move to first base. Once in the lineup, Olson got hot — he's batting .289 with 6 homers and 25 RBIs.

Olson heard from a writer that he'd been chosen as an All-Star.

"I really didn't know what to do," he said. "I felt like crying. I took a few seconds, and prayed a little bit.

"If somebody had written a story like this, no one would have believed it."

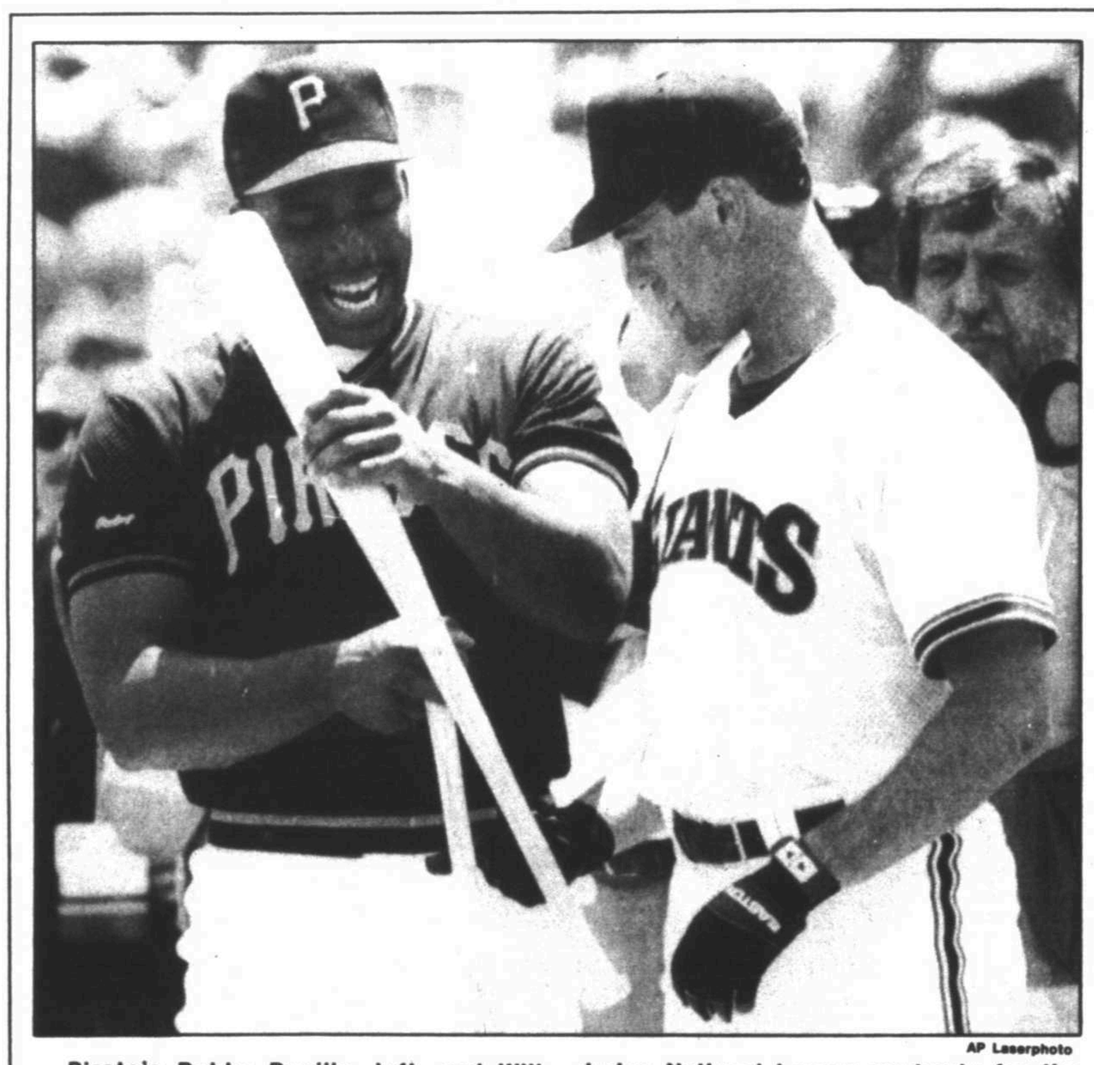

Gregg Olson was a more likely choice. He followed up his rookie season with 17 saves, a 4-3 record and 1.22 earned run average in the first half this year.

"I've gotten the recognition — whether I deserve it or not," he said.

"I'm walking around here saying, 'There's so-and-so,' seeing who's here," he said.

Greg Olson was.

So was Gregg Olson.

Some of game's best paid players absent

Associated Press

The big money takes a break at All-Star time. At least this year.

Eight of baseball's 10 biggest contracts belong to players who didn't make the 1990 All-Star team, including Don Mattingly and three pitchers who threw no-hitters this season — Dave Stewart, Nolan Ryan and Mark Langston (with an assist from Mike Witt).

In fact, the only two Big Ten players who made it to Chicago for Tuesday's game were Jose Canseco of Oakland, baseball's biggest earner at $4.7 million a year, and Will Clark of San Francisco, who pulls down a more modest $3.75 million.

"Is it a question of whether I'm an All-Star or not?" asked Stewart, who has won 20 games in each of the last three seasons for Oakland. "I'm not on the team, but that doesn't mean that I'm not deserving. ..."

Stewart is, in fact, deserving enough to have negotiated a two-year contract last year that will begin paying him $3.5 million a year in 1991. At 11-7, he probably was deserving enough to be on the All-Star team this year, too.

But Stewart's own Tony La Russa, AL manager by virtue of the A's World Series victory last year, said he discussed the situation with Stewart, and the decision was mutual. La Russa already had two Oakland pitchers on the staff — Dennis Eckersley and Bob Welch — and Stewart wanted to make his regular start on Sunday.

So, it seemed like a good idea to take a rest. He obviously didn't need the overtime.

Some, like Stewart and Ryan, could have made the team, but didn't. Others — like Mattingly, Langston, Mark Davis and Robin Yount — didn't deserve it. The only numbers they've put up this year are at the bank.

Stewart pitched his no-hitter on June 29 at Toronto. Ryan, of Texas, got the sixth of his career, at age 43, on June 11 at Oakland, and Langston, of California, got his on April 11. Langston worked the first seven innings and Witt the final two in a no-hitter against Seattle.

Ryan, who will make $3.3 million next year, goes into the All-Star break at 8-4 with a 3.79 ERA and 116 strikeouts after leading the majors with 301 strikeouts last year. La Russa, however, assumed Ryan would like the break to rest an ailing back.

Langston, whose five-year contract averages $3.2 million, has a lower ERA than Ryan, 3.71, but a 4-9 record. His pain has been a little lower this year.

"It's not as if I'm going out there and getting beat up," Langston said. At one point this spring, he lost four straight decisions, giving up two runs in each. Shouldn't that be good enough to win?

"In some instances it is," Langston said. "For me, it hasn't been."

The other Big Ten pitcher, Davis, can barely make a case for staying in the major leagues after winning the Cy Young last year with 44 saves and a 1.85 ERA for San Diego. With a $3.25 million contract at Kansas City this year, he's got just five saves and a 5.66 ERA.

The Royals are so desperately seeking solutions that they gave Davis his first start in three years Sunday, to no avail. He gave up four runs in 3 1-3 innings.

"I can't figure it out," Royals manager John Wathan said. "We've tried everything else."

Mattingly and Robin Yount are having years so ugly they would make Quasimodo shudder.

Mattingly's problem, too, has been in his back. Earning $3.86 million a year from the New York Yankees, he's batting .253 with five homers and 33 RBIs — his worst start ever. He hasn't homered since May 20.

Last year, Mattingly earned the big contract with a .303 average, 23 homers and 113 RBIs.

Yount, who makes $3.2 million a year, had one of the worst slumps of his career this year and, after hitting .318 with 21 homers and 103 RBIs in 1989, just can't get over the hump in '90. He's hitting .239 with seven homers and 36 RBIs at the halfway point this year.

A's ace Clemente recipient

CHICAGO (AP) — Dave Stewart is happy with a staring role off the field, too.

Not that he's looking for any special recognition for doing something nice for people in need. But remember, he didn't have to do it.

Stewart was selected Monday as the recipient of the 20th Roberto Clemente Award. The award is presented annually to the player who best exemplifies baseball on and off the field.

"Roberto was a great man and did many things that nobody even knew about," Stewart said. "I'm honored to get this award because we remember all the good things Roberto did not because of what Dave Stewart is doing."

Stewart has accomplished quite a bit on the field, too.

He is a 20-game winner for the last three seasons and pitched a no-hitter against Toronto on June 29. Stewart was also the World Series MVP last season.

Not bad for a guy who was released by the Philadelphia Phillies in May 1986.

"My success has given me a chance to do more for kids but it doesn't mean I wouldn't have done something if I wasn't successful," Stewart said.

An Oakland native, Stewart has given time and money to schools, the United Way, the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and the MS Society of Northern California. He also sponsors several youth softball and baseball teams, a girls track team, and a dance troupe.

"I give from my heart and most of what I do involves kids," Stewart said. "Kids make me feel like a kid again."

After the earthquake in the Bay area last Oct. 17, Stewart spent time helping those who lost their homes. He also spent time at the collapsed Cypress Freeway helping rescue workers.

Clemente was on his was to help earthquake victims in Nicaragua when the small airplane he was riding in crashed.

"He's genuine and he's for real," Oakland president Wally Haas said of Stewart. "I've never seen a man give as much in terms of his time, his money and of himself. He's one in a million."

Stewart found it hard to continue in the World Series after the earthquake and approached the field like it was a pool of cold water.

"For a few days baseball just didn't seem important to me," Stewart said. "But by talking to others I found watching the World Series would help ease their pain."

Morris player of week

NEW YORK (AP) — Hal Morris of the Cincinnati Reds, with a .625 average and three homers, was named National League Player of the Week for July 2-8.

Morris drove in seven runs and scored eight during the week. His slugging average was 1.188 and he had an on-base percentage of .647.

Cordero sets record time

NEW YORK (AP) — Foresta, ridden by Angel Cordero Jr., set a track record in beating To The Lighthouse by a head on Monday in the $47,000 Rose O'Neill Handicap for fillies and mares aged 3 and up Belmont Park.

The winner's time of 1:39 3-5 for a mile on turf was 3-5 of a second better than the record set by Commadore C. in 1980.

The chaotic situations in baseball

AUSTIN (AP) — Jim Evans likes to tell the story about the scatter-armed pitcher who is so wild that he plunks the batter in the on-deck circle. From there, an argument escalates between the umpire and each baseball manager.

The manager of the batting team, Evans relates, is bending the umpire's ear and insisting his on-deck batter be awarded first base because nowhere in the rulebook does it say the player must be hit while actually batting.

The opposing manager joins the discussion, commends the umpire for not giving in to his counterpart's illogical ramblings and then maintains that the on-deck batter be called out for batting out of order.

While the story may be fictitious, it represents exactly the type of real-life situations that arise each and every day during the 162-game major-league baseball season. Potentially chaotic situations that an umpire must resolve instantaneously, if not quicker, with conviction and aplomb.

Evans, an Austinite who has been a professional umpire for 23 seasons, 19 of them in the major leagues, founded the Academy of Professional Umpiring more than a year ago to help young umpires deal with those rules. His training ground for prospective umpires is one of three such umpiring schools; the other two are run by Joe Brinkman in Cocoa, Fla., and Harry Wendelstedt in Ormond Beach, Fla.

To facilitate his instructions, Evans sought a way to relieve the tedium of the 104-page Official Baseball Rules book. That desire gave birth to Jim Evans' Diamond Challenge, a comic-strip illustration of baseball rules that makes its debut this week in newspapers around the country.

"I created it as a means of teaching my students the rules," Evans said from Milwaukee, where his umpiring crew was handling the Angels-Brewers series that ended Sunday. "I was trying to create an interesting way to illustrate all these rules."

The strip usually includes four panels, two of which are devoted to the baseball situation and the answer with the other two illustrating the scene. Evans, 43, first conceived the idea four or five years ago.

His academy was so successful it drew 30 candidates — everyone from a 38-year-old grocery clerk to a young woman from San Diego who was the head of an auto parts store — and sent the maximum of six to the advanced-umpiring camp in Florida last February. All six were assigned spots in rookie ball.

Evans, who has been a crew chief since 1980 and ranks fourth in seniority in the major leagues, takes a slightly different stance from other schools, he said. He relies on tools like umpiring blindfolded to staging mock brawls after beaning a fellow instructor with a nerf ball, but he also teaches diplomacy. He thinks he's come a long way since making Reggie Jackson his first ejection in 1972.

"There's a lot more to umpiring than going out there for nine innings," Evans said. "My school encompasses a lot of things I've seen missing in other training programs. I think a lot of umpires teach some outdated techniques. They learn to umpire by war stories — how you did it in the old days.

"The game has changed so completely, you have to handle situations more diplomatically and in a professional manner."

Evans commands a salary near the top end of a scale between the minimum salary of $48,000 and the high of $120,000. But he's looking toward retirement down the road and thinks his umpiring academy and new comic-strip venture could ease the transition.

Fifty-five papers have subscribed to the daily cartoon, which will run daily during the remainder of the baseball season. That far outweighs the gloomy predictions several prominent syndicators had told Anderson he'd be lucky to recruit five or 10 buyers.

"Maybe the strip idea will appeal to mothers, fathers, Little Leaguers, high school coaches and players, even major-league managers," said Evans, who has umpired in two All-Star Games — including last year's — three World Series and five American League Championship Series. "A lot of these strips have questions some major-league managers can't answer."

As illustrators go, Evans makes a good umpire, so Anderson and Evans hired John Johnson, a 52-year-old, free-lance commercial artist in Round Rock.

Johnson, a self-proclaimed football fan who followed baseball so remotely he drew a left-handed shortstop in one of his early strips, now watches baseball games on television.

With the introduction of his newspaper strip, Evans may become an even bigger celebrity although that flies in the face of the anonymity he and the other 67 major-league umpires usually seek.

As Evans said, "I may need to run and hide. These people are going to expect me to know every subtle detail of baseball."

United States cyclist Greg LeMond, left, chats with overall leader Steve Bauer of Canada before the start of Monday's ninth round of the Tour de France classic.

Bauer still leads

Associated Press

Tour de France

GENEVA — Massimo Ghirotto of Italy won the ninth stage of the Tour de France Mountain today, while Canadian Steve Bauer continued to hold the overall lead for the ninth day.

Ghirotto broke away with Spain's Eduardo Chozas in the first of the mountain passes.

France's Christophe Lavianne finished third, 16 seconds back.

Monday's stage was a 122-mile leg from Besancon to Geneva as the Tour crossed into Switzerland for the only time this year.

Bauer has led the overall standings since the first stage a week ago Sunday.

Bauer and most of the other overall leaders were in the pack, which finished behind the top three.

As a result, the relative positions of the leaders did not change.

The mountains were encountered with a second category climb as Ghirotto and Chozas took off on a dual breakaway at the 73-mile mark.

Noisy metal bats go quietly in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — The symbol of amateur baseball in Japan — the clang of noisy metal bats — is about to become a sound of the past.

The Japan High School Baseball Association has decided to phase in "quiet" metal bats following studies that found the ring of the current bats could cause deafness.

Association spokesman Kazuhiro Tanabe said Monday he did not know of any specific cases of bat-caused deafness, but the association "decided to act first, before such cases occur."

The association, high school baseball's governing body in Japan, announced the new regulations after final tests of several different brands of metal bats Sunday.

Tanabe said the association is seeking similar regulations on the international level lest Japan's rules be seen as an attempt to keep out foreign brands.

"We have tested bats from all over, including American bats, but only found problems with the ones made in Japan," Tanabe said. "But if the regulation were international, that would eliminate the fear of trade problems."

American-made metal bats dominated the Japanese market in the early 1970s, until certification rules reversed the trend by making the import of American bats a time-consuming, clumsy process.

By the time those regulations were revised in the mid-1980s, the "baseball bat war" had grown into a major trade issue between Japan and the United States.

Tanabe said the new noise limit, 92 decimals, was based on the "absolute safety level" set by the Japan Medical Association. The baseball association founded a bat-testing committee in 1987.

In Sunday's testing, the metal bat currently in use registered 96.3 decibels, the "quiet" bat 85 decibels and a wooden bat 81.5 decibels.

An American bat, made by Easton for the American market, registered 83.8 decibels. The metal bats currently sold by Easton for the Japanese market are noisier, Tanabe said.

"It won't be very difficult to adjust to the new regulations, so I don't think there will be any real change in imports," said a spokesman for Mizuno, Japan's top sporting goods maker. Mizuno markets some of Easton's products in Japan.

Baseball association officials said American exports to Japan account for "only a tiny percentage" of the total market.

Durable metal bats, less likely to break than wood, have been used in all major high school baseball games since 1979. The association said, however, that since the mid-1980s, bat-makers have introduced hollowed-out designs that make hitting easier but also increase the bats' clang.

The new regulation requires that the bats' centers be filled in but, Tanabe said, bat-makers will be free to choose the filling material.

Quiet bats will be required for all national tournaments next year.

GSTAAD, Switzerland (AP) — Third-seeded Martin Jaite of Argentina defeated West Germany's Markus Zoecke 7-5, 6-4 Monday in the first round of the Swiss Open tennis tournament.

Jaite needed 90 minutes to oust the unseeded Zoecke in an error-laced match, though the outcome never seemed in doubt after the first set.

Soviet ace Andrei Chesnokov, the No. 4 seed, fell behind in the first set against Andrei Cherkassov, then struggled to down his compatriot 6-3, 7-6 (7-3).

U.S. defends lacrosse title

PERTH, Australia (AP) — The defending champion United States defeated Canada 25-14 and Australia beat England 24-7 Monday in the second round of the world series of lacrosse.

The Americans, who won the event in 1986 in Toronto, have a 2-0 record, while Australia and Canada are 1-1. It was England's first game in the competition, while a North American Iroquois Indian team had a bye on Monday.

NHL sees three team deal

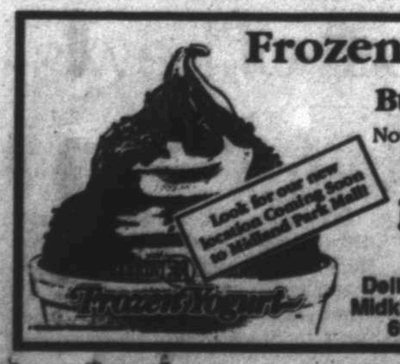

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Rangers acquired right wings Jody Hull from Hartford and Ray Sheppard from Buffalo in a pair of NHL deals made Monday.

In exchange for Hull, New York sent center Carey Wilson and future considerations to the Whalers. The Rangers paid an undisclosed amount of cash for Sheppard.

Hull, 21, split last season between Hartford and the Whalers' AHL farm club at Binghamton. He had seven goals and 10 assists in 38 games with Hartford and was the Whalers' No. 1 pick in the 1987 entry draft.

Wilson, 28, had nine goals and 17 assists in 41 games with the Rangers last season but missed 39 games because of injuries. He was acquired by New York from Hartford Dec. 26, 1988 in exchange for Don Maloney, Brian Lawton and Norm Maciver.

Sheppard, 24, scored four goals and two assists in 18 games with Buffalo last season. He was runnerup in rookie of the year balloting in 1987-88 when he scored 38 goals.

Two more golds give Muse festival record

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Olympic Festival, now in its 10th year, has been a showcase for athletes such as Carl Lewis, Greg Louganis and Michael Jordan. None can match Dante Muse.

Muse, a roller speed skater from West Des Moines, Iowa, won two gold medals Monday, giving him a festival-record 15.

Competition continued throughout the Twin Cities on the third full day of the festival. Championship matches in freestyle wrestling were scheduled Monday night, along with the second round of swimming.

Olympic Festival

Muse's first gold medal Monday came in the 400-meter relay, tying him with table tennis player Sean O'Neill for most golds in festival history. A short time later, Muse led from the start in winning the 500-meter sprint.

"Getting that medal on the stand was really great," said Muse, 23. "I felt like it was my first world gold medal. Every time is a little different, but this was really nice. I felt kind of teary-eyed up there."

The record for most medals won in festival competition belongs to Jim Terrell of El Toro, Calif. Terrell won four medals in canoe-kayak competition Sunday, giving him 23 in his festival career and breaking the previous mark of 22 set by gymnast Scott Johnson.

Jimmy Jackson of Ohio State scored 16 points and grabbed 14 rebounds in helping lead the North to a 95-90 victory over the West in basketball. That sent the North (3-0) into Tuesday's gold medal game.

"We're excited," said North coach Lon Kruger of Florida. "That's the goal of every team when they come, to get to the gold medal game. What we've got to realize now is that even though we're 3-0, it starts 0-0 tomorrow and winner take all. We don't get any points for being undefeated."

Byron Russell of Long Beach State had 20 rebounds for the West (1-2), breaking the festival record of 15 shared by Sam Perkins, Ed Pinckney and Terry Mills.

In archery, Rick McKinney of Gilbert, Ariz., continued his record-breaking ways by winning the eighth final in Grant FITA competition.

McKinney, who broke a festival record and came within a point of the world record in the 30-meter competition Sunday, shot a 328 Monday. That broke the Olympic Festival record of 327 set by Chad Conner last year.

Reputation does not stop boxer

Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Steve Johnston has a lot more to worry about than his fellow boxers in the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Though he's only 17, he's the father of a 7-month-old son. Johnston lives in near poverty in Denver. He's had brushes with the law. He's been on the hit lists of two major street gangs, the Bloods and the Crips.

"I've been getting into a lot of trouble," Johnston said. "Once I make the Olympics, me and my little kid, we'll go together. And once I make my first million, me and him are going to get out of there forever."

Johnston's goals are lofty. But based on his 1990 showing, they may be realistic.

He opened the festival with a 3-2 decision over Skipper Kelp, who is two years older and, at 5-foot-9, five inches taller. Kelp has been in a year-long slump, but was considered the favorite in the 139-pound (light welterweight) division based upon his domination from 1987 to 1989 and his pro potential.

On Sunday, Johnston was too quick and too active for Kelp and appeared to have beaten him soundly. But when the announcer called the 3-2 score before naming the winner, "I was scared," Johnston said.

"I thought they might have given it to him just because of who he is," he said. "I thought maybe I was just fighting his big name."

Johnston is making quite a name for himself this year, his first at 139 pounds after having fought at 132.

He began 1990 by winning the U.S. championships. He then won a fight during a United States-Canada meet before a solid performance in the Goodwill Games box-offs. A controversial loss to Mark Lewis, his only defeat of the year, sent Johnston to the Sports Festival instead of to Seattle for next week's Goodwill Games.

In explaining his loss to Johnston, Kelp said: "Hey, I'm not taking anything away from Stevie. In my opinion, he should have been in Seattle."

Said Johnston, who in Wednesday's title fight meets Ronald Wright of St. Petersburg, Fla.: "Mark Lewis may have beaten me once, but he'll never do it again. I told my grandmother and mother that I ain't losing no more fights."

His grandmother would be happy just to see him avoid street fights.

"She wants me to get out of that, but it isn't that easy," Johnston said.

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Life has one constant for Michelle Marciniak. No matter where she plays basketball, she's always younger than everyone else.

It was that way when she was growing up near Allentown, Pa., playing mostly against the neighborhood boys, and it's that way now in the U.S. Olympic Festival.

At 16, she's the youngest of all the festival basketball players, men or women, and is going against athletes who have had two and sometimes three years of college experience.

And she doesn't give an inch.

"I started out playing when I was 8 years old, with the guys," Marciniak said. "I played with guys all my life, even after I started getting into girls basketball in school. They've always been much older than me."

Her brother, Steve, was a frequent opponent. He's 18 and a solidly built high school football player. She's 5-foot-9 and 130 pounds. Their games weren't necessarily friendly, but Marciniak certainly found them useful.

"He'd go one-on-one with me in the backyard," she said. "He got me to be tough. He knocks me around and shows me no mercy.

"We're brother and sister off the court, but when we play one-on-one we're opponents and really go at it. He's a great guy. I think he helped me a lot."

Steve also introduced Michelle to playground basketball.

"Steve and I would go to the court and he'd say, 'She's on my team.' They'd all be like, 'We don't want her.'

"Then I'd do something — steal the ball, make a move to the basket, shoot outside from 3-point range — and they'd take a different approach."

She still met resistance, though, particularly when she would show up by herself and try to get into a game.

"They'd always say, 'She's a girl. What can she do?' That gave me a lot of determination. They didn't think I could play with them so I had to show them I could. That's helped me throughout my basketball career."

It's a career that is taking off. She earned all-conference honors as a sophomore and junior and was named on some All-America teams for 1990.

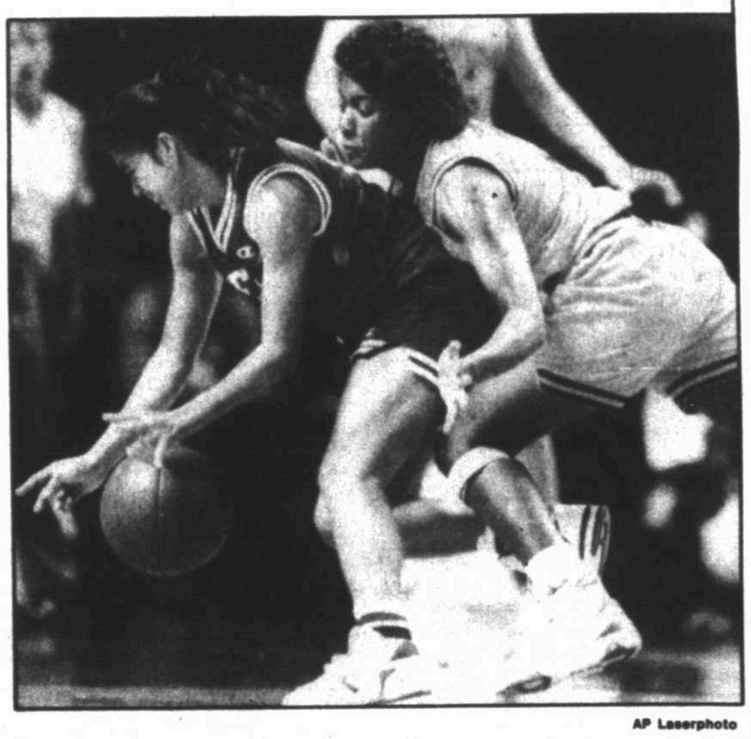

Marciniak has narrowed her college possibilities to 10, ranging from Stanford to Rutgers, and still has found time to play golf, soccer, volleyball and softball in high school.

Despite her youth, Marciniak is a veteran of Olympic Festival competition. She played for the silver medal-winning East team last year and made the East team again this year.

Every player on this year's team is at least two years older, some as many as four.

"Last year, I was the baby. It was really a learning experience for me because I was so young," Marciniak said. "This year, I have one more year of experience under my belt. That helps a little."

The East won its first two games of the festival, and Marciniak gave her team a big lift in the second outing, a 64-62 victory over the West. Although she played only 10 minutes, she had seven points.

ECAC field announced

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Brigham Young, Rutgers, Maryland and South Carolina will make up the four-team field for the ECAC Holiday Festival basketball tournament Dec. 27-29.

The field was announced Monday by ECAC Commissioner Clayton Chapman and Madison Square Garden vice president Paul Munick.

North Carolina State won last year.

Security tight for GW Games

SEATTLE (AP) — Tow trucks and bomb-sniffing dogs will be two of the more obvious signs as authorities tighten security at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport in preparation for the Goodwill Games.

Any vehicle left unattended outside the passenger terminal will be swiftly towed, Port of Seattle Police Capt. John Holman said. In addition, any bag or briefcase found unattended inside the terminal will be carted off.

"There will be absolutely no tolerance in the drive-through area during the Goodwill Games," Holman said. "If someone even parks a car and walks away for any amount of time, a dog will be there to sniff it and a tow truck will tow it."

The measures that begin Wednesday are designed to forestall possible terrorism during the Olympic-style games, which run July 20 to Aug. 5.

Port police call the process "sanitizing," and are sporting buttons that boast they are "Protecting the Gateway to the Goodwill Games."

We have repeatedly stressed that the secret of winning bridge is to search for that little extra percentage which enables you to utilize your assets to best advantage. Can you find the edge on this hand?

Because of South's flat distribution, the jump to four hearts is a little aggressive. However, the diamond fit improves South's holding, and the two aces are undervalued in the point count, so we won't belabor the issue.

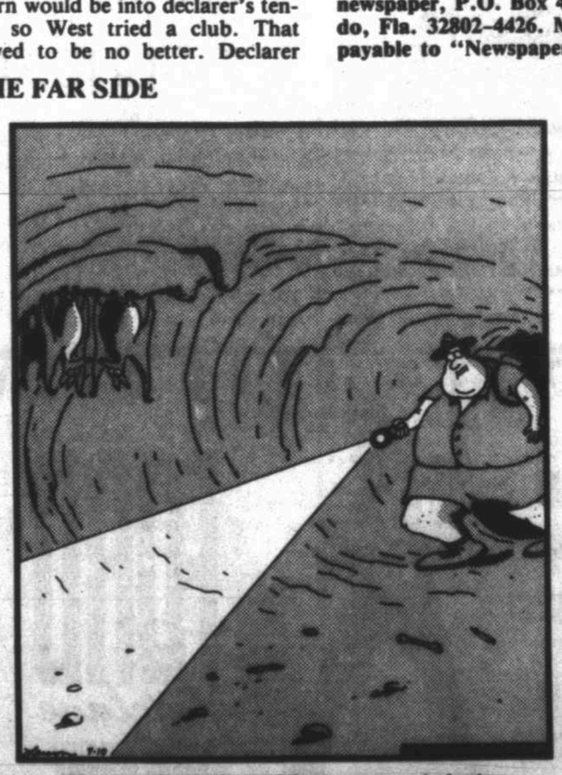

West started with the ace, king and another spade, and declarer was relieved when East did not ruff the third round. The contract seemed to hinge on finding East with one of the two missing diamond honors. In view of the auction, though, there was a distinct possibility that West held both the king and queen of diamonds. However, the double also meant that West was likely to be short in hearts, and that presented declarer with an additional chance.

After drawing only two rounds of trumps with the queen and jack, declarer cashed the king and ace of clubs and ruffed a club. Then a diamond was led to South's eight.

West won the queen and, had that defender been able to exit with a trump, declarer would have had to fall back on another diamond finesse. As the cards lay, however, West was endplayed. A diamond return would be into declarer's tenace, so West tried a club. That proved to be no better. Declarer ruffed in dummy while discarding a diamond from hand, then scored the last three tricks with the ace of diamonds and two winning trumps.

Zsa Zsa Gabor's Rolls auctioned for $90,000

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The 1979 Rolls Royce Zsa Zsa Gabor was driving when she had her infamous cop-slapping confrontation with a Beverly Hills policeman was auctioned for $90,000.

Miss Gabor, 72, sat in the Corniche convertible and patted the door affectionately as auctioneers drove up the price at an auto sale Sunday.

"I don't like giving it up," Miss Gabor said after the auctioneer announced that Leo Dutran of Boston was the high bidder.

The actress was convicted of slapping the policeman during a July 14 traffic stop in Beverly Hills. She was sentenced to serve 72 hours in jail after failing to complete community service work as ordered.

Dutran collects cars of celebrities for a museum in a Boston suburb.

Auctioneer Mitchell Kruse of Kruse International, Auburn, Ind., said 500 cars were sold during the two-day event at Bally's Hotel and Casino.

Another celebrity car sold Sunday was a 1957 Ford with a retractable roof, owned by actor Larry Hagman. It was purchased by Richard Crane of Dallas for $37,500.

Hagman said he bought the car five years ago and kept it in storage.

"I've got nine cars and my wife told me I had to sell one of them," Hagman said.

COLUMBUS, Ind. (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle's visit to his home state created some anxious moments for police and the Secret Service.

Quayle

Officials became alarmed when they found an open hatch door Sunday on a cargo plane that travels with Quayle's entourage.

Bartholomew County Sheriff Rick Hill said the Air Force crew flying the C-141 cargo jet believed that someone had rummaged through the plane.

"It was clear that someone had been on the plane so we had to be cautious," Hill said.

"There was no vandalism, no damage, but some things had been moved around. So a bomb-sniffing dog was brought in," the sheriff said.

Quayle was in southern Indiana to drop off one of his children at summer camp in Brown County when the hatch was discovered open on the jet while it was parked at the Columbus Municipal Airport.

The cargo plane, known as Air Force Two, carries various items — including a limousine — for the vice president's use.

Nothing unusual was found during the search and Quayle returned to the nation's capital Sunday afternoon, authorities said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An $8 million production based on Pink Floyd's best-selling concept album, "The Wall," will be staged in Berlin at, where else, the Wall.

The performance, set for July 21 at Potsdamer Platz near the site of the Brandenburg Gate, will feature the construction and demolition of an 80-foot-tall, 600-foot-long wall.

The concert will launch a five-year campaign to raise $800 million for the Memorial Fund for Disaster Relief, said founding member Roger Waters, who left the band in 1983.

"I want Russians, Germans, Americans building the wall and tearing it down, as a symbolic act of collaboration and the aims of the Memorial Fund," Waters said by telephone from London.

Waters said he wants to get "the armed forces freed to do disaster relief work when they have time off from training or polishing their boots."

The album, a story of a troubled rock star, came out in 1979 and sold some 19 million copies worldwide. A film version was released in 1982.

Due to join Waters on stage in Berlin are Sinead O'Connor, Van Morrison, Thomas Dolby, The Band, Bryan Adams, The Scorpions, the East Berlin Rundfunk Symphony Orchestra, and the East Berlin Radio Choir.

FORT WORTH (AP) — Television personality Monty Hall says he can't even go to the men's room without some wag uttering his familiar line.

Hall

Hall says it is almost inevitable when he walks into a restroom and faces a lineup of stalls that someone will say: "Do you want door No. 1, door No. 2 or door No. 3?"

"They all think they invented the line," Hall said.

But beginning this week, that line will be uttered by Bob Hilton, who is taking over Hall's host role on a new version of "Let's Make a Deal."

Hall, who was in Fort Worth last weekend for a convention appearance, is a consultant and business partner in the new "Deal."

At 66, Hall said he is glad it is Hilton, and not him, reviving the show.

"NBC asked me to go back and do the show," he said. "Everybody has asked me. But there comes a time in life when you want other challenges. I think life is more than doing one show."

Moore tops list of supplemental draftees

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wide receiver Rob Moore, who set pass catching records at Syracuse, joins two other players with less substantial credentials for Tuesday's NFL supplemental draft.

Moore, who graduated in June, passed up his redshirt fifth year to file for the draft. In three years at Syracuse, he caught 106 passes, setting school records with 2,122 yards and 22 touchdowns. Last season he caught 53 passes for 1,064 yards and nine TDs.

The other eligible players in the draft are tight end Willie Williams of LSU, who caught 13 passes for 183 yards and one TD in three years, and Ricky Martin of Grambling, who filed as a defensive back but did not play college football.

Moore's agent is Gary Wichard, who also took linebacker Barry Bosworth and quarterback Timm Rosenbach into supplemental drafts in 1987 and 1989.

"My philosophy is I like my guys to get all the attention," Wichard said. "In the regular draft, 38 juniors came out this year. You get into a pot with them and whatever happens happens. Moore is virtually alone in this draft. It gives the guy the attention he deserves."

NFL Draft

The supplemental draft has been lucrative for Wichard's clients. Bosworth got $11 million in a 10-year contract with Seattle and Rosenbach got $5.3 million for five years from Phoenix.

"I don't believe it's right for everyone but if it's available for premier players, it can only help," Wichard said. "I believe my guys made more because of it."

Wichard said teams are unable to "slot" salaries in the supplemental draft, that is pay a 10th pick slightly more than an 11th pick and slightly less than a ninth. "Teams hide behind slotting," he said. "What it really breaks down to is the bare essentials, what he means to his team."

The draft is conducted in three tiers, weighted to favor the teams with the poorest records. The first tier contains those teams with six or less victories last season — Dallas, Atlanta, the New York Jets, New England, Tampa Bay, Phoenix, San Diego and Chicago.

The second tier has the remaining non-playoff teams — Seattle, Detroit, the Los Angeles Raiders, Indianapolis, Miami, Cincinnati, Kansas City, New Orleans, Washington and Green Bay.

The third consists of the 10 playoff teams — Buffalo, Cleveland, Houston, Pittsburgh, Denver, the New York Giants, Philadelphia, Minnesota, San Francisco and the Los Angeles Rams.

Teams are arranged according to their records and assigned tokens, with the most tokens going to the teams with the worst record. Thus, Dallas with just one victory last season, gets 28 tokens followed by Atlanta, which won three games and gets 27 tokens.

By drafting a player, a team forfeits a 1991 regular draft selection. That's what happened to Dallas last year. The Cowboys would have had the No. 1 choice in April's draft but used the pick by choosing Miami quarterback Steve Walsh in the supplemental draft after Atlanta, armed with the first pick, passed.

Rosenbach of Phoenix and running back Bobby Humphrey of Denver also were first round supplemental choices a year ago, leaving the Cardinals and Broncos without first round picks this year. For the Cardinals, that would have been the third pick of the draft. For the Broncos, it would have been the 25th selection.

Ware, DeHorney SWC athletes of the season

DALLAS (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Andre Ware from the University of Houston and Arkansas' Delmonica DeHorney were named Southwest Conference Athletes of the Year for the 1989-90 season.

Ware, a junior from Dickinson, Texas, and DeHorney, a 6-4 junior basketball star from Poteau, Okla., were chosen by a panel of media representatives from Arkansas and Texas.

Ware's Heisman Trophy culminated a record-setting season in which he set 28 NCAA passing and total offense records and 15 additional SWC marks. He completed 356 of 578 passes for 4,699 yards and 48 touchdowns in leading the Cougars to their second straight 9-2 record.

The Cougars, however, were on probation and were forbidden from participating in a post-season bowl game.

Ware was the first SWC player to win the Heisman since Earl Campbell of Texas received the award in 1977.

Ware decided to forgo his final year of collegiate eligibility, and was the seventh player taken in the 1990 NFL draft, by the Detroit Tigers.

DeHorney led the SWC in scoring (20) and took the Lady Razorbacks to the NCAA West Regional finals. She also led Arkansas in rebounds (7) and blocked shots (2.9).

She was chosen to the all-West Regional team after scoring a career-high 39 points against eventual national champion Stanford in the West final. She scored 32 points two nights earlier to help knock off top-ranked Stephen F. Austin.

Her 62.8 percent field goal shooting topped the conference and was third best in the nation.

CUP: Mob threatens to lynch young Turk

From 1C

A group of 500 neo-Nazis shouting epithets against foreigners rampaged on the main square, Alexanderplatz, chasing Vietnamese workers and ransacking a bar frequented by homosexuals, police and witnesses said.

A group of about 200 skinheads later tried to attack a house occupied by a leftist group, and fought pitched battles with police.

Twelve were arrested and three people were seriously hurt, police said.

In Hamburg, about 400 hooligans and skinheads clashed with police with rocks and bottles. Fifty-four police officers were injured and 88 people were arrested, according to police.

Windows of more than 20 stores were smashed, one bar was destroyed and several police and private autos were damaged by the mob, police said.

Police used truncheons and water cannons to break up the crowd.

In the West German city of Bielefeld, about 200 neo-Nazi skinheads attacked police with rocks and firebombs. Six officers were hurt and 13 people were arrested. Six police wagons were damaged, authorities there said.

In Cologne, a mob surrounded a car driven by an 18-year-old Turk and threatened to lynch him, police said. The car was rocked and three people were hurt when the motorist attempted to drive away.

Anetta Kahane, head of the East Berlin office for foreigner affairs, said Monday that Asians and Africans living in the country are the target of daily attacks.

Wolfgang Schoenpflug, a psychologist at the free University, said resentment of foreigners is rising in both German states, some of it influenced by East Germany.

"New emotions and attitudes are coming from the East, where hostility against foreigners was suppressed but heavily present," he said.

Four people died in accidents related to the celebrations and hundreds were reported injured.

In Cologne, a reveler died when he smashed a window in a moving street car, leaned out and was struck by a concrete pillar, police said.

In the southwest West German city of Heilbronn, two people died when their car slammed into a lamppost. In Geislingen, a speeding car with four fans smashed into a post, killing one and seriously injuring three.

In the West German city of Schwetzingen, 37 people were injured when a fan drove his car into a crowd of 5,000 people celebrating in the street.

TENNIS: U.S. Open next on tourney list

From 1C

ing Boris Becker to claim his second Wimbledon title in three years. "He has Boris and me challenging him hard."

Edberg's triumph moved him past Becker into the No. 2 ranking among men and narrowed his distance behind Lendl, who he had defeated in the semifinals.

"There is more yet to come from Stefan," said his coach, Tony Pickard. "He knows he is knocking on the door to be world number one — but only time will tell."

Edberg said his chance to dethrone Lendl could come at the U.S. Open later this summer, where Becker will be defending his title and trying to move back up in the rankings.

Navratilova said after winning her record ninth Wimbledon singles title that she is ready to regain the No. 1 ranking she lost to Graf in August 1987.

"My next target is the U.S. Open," said Navratilova, who defeated Zina Garrison in Saturday's final and is ranked second among women.

"It would be nice to win in the States," she said. "If I do that I'm number one for the year, so that would be nice too."

One word usually not associated with Graf is vulnerable, but it has popped into her resume in the last few tournaments. Wimbledon was the third consecutive event she failed to win, the first time that has happened in more than four years.

Graf had a 66-match winning streak stopped in May by Monica Seles and then lost again to Seles in the final of the French Open.

At Wimbledon she was plagued by sinus problems and attention focused on allegations that her father had a relationship with a topless model. After losing to Garrison in the semifinals, Graf admitted she had not been comfortable on the court.

Lendl's vulnerability is the same as always — grass. Though he has learned how to serve and volley, and has won the Queen's Club tournament that precedes Wimbledon two years in a row, he still cannot match a natural grass-court player such as Edberg.

Lendl, who has been No. 1 since 1985 except for a brief reign by Mats Wilander in late 1988 and early 1989, said he has no intention of giving up his quest for Wimbledon glory.

But to continue that effort, he may have to risk his top ranking.

"I think he needs to be a serve and volleyer the rest of the year and not just four weeks or six weeks prior to Wimbledon," Navratilova said. "I think he needs to do it the whole time and perhaps practice on grass between tournaments."

Surgery set for Lemieux

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Lemieux will undergo back surgery this week but probably will be ready for the start of the Pittsburgh Penguins' season, the team's doctor said Monday.

Surgeons will remove part of a herniated disk in an operation on Wednesday. Team physician Charles Burke said the recovery period should last from 6-12 weeks and that there's a 90 percent chance Lemieux will be able to play by opening night.

Burke said the operation is not risky.

"Despite the delicacy of this surgery, the complications are very small and very rare," he said. "We do not expect any difficulties."

He also said it probably will be three months before doctors know how successful the surgery was. "We'll, have some very good clues before then," he added.

Lemieux, 24, was bothered by back problems throughout last season. He wore a brace and was excused from most practice sessions but continued to play until Feb. 14, when he left a game with the New York Rangers, ending his 46-game point-scoring streak.

He went to Los Angeles to see Dr. Robert Watkins, a spine specialist who designed a exercise therapy program aimed at correcting the problem without surgery.

After missing 21 games, Lemieux returned for Pittsburgh's last game on March 31 and scored a goal in a 3-2 overtime loss that knocked the Penguins out of the playoffs. He finished with 45 goals and 123 points in 59 games.

During the off-season, Lemieux has continued the supervised exercise program five days a week and has played golf frequently. According to Burke, the golf was sanctioned by the team and the doctors.

"A month ago, he was pain-free," Burke said. "He felt as good as he ever has. About 10 days ago, his condition worsened."

The first inkling that Lemieux was having more problems came about two weeks ago, when he had to skip a celebrity golf tournament. Lemieux was sent to Los Angeles to see Watkins last week. He agreed with the Pittsburgh physicians that surgery was necessary.

Burke said the micro lumbar discectomy will remove about half of the herniated disk.

Local diamond teams do well in first round

Staff Report

Midland American got off to a heady start in the District 3 Big League tournament with a 20-1 first-round win over Coahoma Monday at Angels Stadium.

In the other first-round game for the 16-18 year-old Big Leaguers, El Paso crushed Midland National 18-2.

Army-Navy games set through century

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — At least 10 of the next 13 Army-Navy football games will be played in Philadelphia under an agreement announced Monday between the schools and the city.

The athletic directors from West Point and Annapolis joined Mayor W. Wilson Goode at 62,000-seat Veterans Stadium, site of the game, to formally extend their pact into the 21st century.

"The Army-Navy game is vitally important to our city's economy and national image," Goode said. "It annually generates $15 million, bringing in tens of thousands of visitors, and it belongs in Philadelphia."

Navy athletic director Jack Lengyel acknowledged that the schools have the option, after 1992, to play three games in other cities, but not consecutively.

"It gives us the opportunity to go to other parts of the country where we have high visibility among alumni, and those people very seldom see that game," he said. "It is merely an option. It is not a declaration that we must do that. But we do have the flexibility should we have the desire."

The old contract had a similar option. It was exercised last year when Army played Navy at the New Jersey Meadowlands. Three years before that the game was in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif.

Sixty-six of the 90 games in the series have been played in Philadelphia. Navy leads 42-41-7.

This December's game will mark the 100th anniversary of the first game. The 1991 game will be played on Dec. 7 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor, and in 2002 it will observe the 200th birthday of West Point.

"It's going to be a great decade of Army-Navy football games," Army athletic director Al Vanderbush said.

Yates wins two in SCCA

Staff Report

MINERAL WELLS — Ken Yates of Midland overcame gear problems and teammate Tony Smith to take a pair of victories in a recent Sports Car Club of America competition here.

Yates drove his BMW 2002 in wins in both the West Texas Region championship on Saturday and the SCCA Divisional Championship Series run on Sunday. His car had been rebuilt and shipped to Mineral Wells on Friday, denying him the opportunity for a test drive.

Yates and Smith, driving for European Auto Service, have won seven competitions between them this season.

World Cup a hit on TV

ROME (AP) — The head of the World Cup Organizing Committee declared the soccer tournament a success Monday and cited some figure to back up his characterization.

Luca de Montezemolo, director-general of the organizing committee, said the tournament was a hit.

Disciplined referee retires

ROME (AP) — Luigi Agnolin, an Italian referee disciplined during the World Cup, Monday announced his retirement from soccer, ending a 28-year career.

Agnolin, 47, considered one of the best Italian referees, gave no reason, but some friends indicated he was bitter over his working only one World Cup game.

Agnolin was criticized by Joseph Blatter, general secretary of soccer's governing body for not enforcing FIFA's new rules for curbing rough play during a first-round match between Yugoslavia and Colombia on June 14.

Agnolin was dropped from the FIFA list of referees for the remaining matches.

During his career, dating back to 1978, Agnolin referred matches in two World Cups and two finals of European Cups for clubs in 1987 and 1988.

Asian Nations Tennis begins

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — South Korea defeated Bangladesh 3-0 and Malaysia beat Singapore 3-0 on the opening day of the Asian Nations Tennis Championship Monday.

In other matches in the 11-nation tournament China, defeated Syria 3-0, Indonesia defeated Brunei 3-0 and Thailand defeated the Philippines 3-0.

Wadkins aims jabs at Strange, Stewart

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — At 40, Lanny Wadkins hardly qualifies as an over-the-hill golfer, but some of the younger players apparently would like him to believe he is.

So it was with a devilish twinkle in his eyes that Wadkins took some return jabs at the new stars after he won the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic with a record 18-under 266.

At the top of Wadkins' hit list were Curtis Strange, 35, and Payne Stewart, 33. Strange was second, three shots behind Wadkins, entering Sunday's final round. The two were paired for the round.

"I know where everybody is and when they've won tournaments. I know Curtis is now two behind me instead of one behind me," Wadkins said after his 19th career victory.

"And guys like Curtis and Payne have been giving me a hard time. Curtis says, 'You've got 18. I'll go out and buy (you) in no time flat.' He told me that about a year ago, and I've been thinking about that."

"I thought about that today, as a matter of fact," added Wadkins, who pulled away from Strange and the rest of the field to win by five shots over Larry Mize.

Next up was Stewart, who won more than $1.2 million in 1989 and has collected more than $750,000 this season.

"Payne also was giving me grief, because you know he's won so much money in the last year," Wadkins said. "I mean, I'm getting stuff from these guys, and I don't like it."

Sunday's victory was Wadkins' first since the Colonial in May 1988.

"It hasn't bothered me that much," he said of the victory drought. "I have always felt like if I didn't think I could win out here, I didn't want to play. I don't want to stay out here just to make a living. I've always played out here to win tournaments, and I'm real proud of the number I've won."

Wadkins, who led the final 36 holes at Kingsmill Golf Club, closed with a 3-under-par 68. His four-day total was one shot better than the tournament record set by Ronnie Black in 1984 and matched by Mark McCumber in 1987.

Wadkins took a double-bogey 6 on the eighth hole Sunday, but followed it with a par on the difficult 452-yard ninth hole and a 12-foot birdie putt on the par-4 10th. That pushed his lead back to three strokes, and no one got closer the rest of the way.

"I felt it was important for me to come back and at least par nine and birdie 10," Wadkins said, "because it would let the other guys in front of me know I wasn't going to go completely south. I wasn't going to come back to them real easy. They were going to have to make some moves and come get me."

Strange struggled to a 1-over 73 that left him eight shots back. He refused to be interviewed after his round.

A historian of the future, studying the sociology of the 20th century, would be smart to research greeting cards.

According to Jody L. Roberts, a representative of American Greetings, "Our products are designed to reflect changing lifestyles. Greeting cards mirror society.

"We try to predict two years ahead. Right now we're working on the 1992 market, studying magazines, books, movies and more."

You may not notice it, but Christmas reds and greens differ from year to year.

"The shades vary according to current design trends," says Roberts. "This year's green is a rich, deep shade of evergreen, and the red is holly berry."

Cards also reflect changes in our family structures and the ways we communicate — or fail to do so.

"More and more stepfamilies and single-parent households are being created each day," says Roberts. "Recognizing this, we offer a broader selection of cards with general captions ('To the One I Love') as well to stepmothers, stepfathers, 'To Someone Who's Like a Mother To Me' and 'To My Mother's Husband.'

"While there are many non-traditional families in America today, we're also seeing a return to traditional values. Baby boomers are now having children of their own. They want their kids to grow up with strong family values and traditions."

HALLMARK'S "To Kids With Love" and American Greetings' new "KidZone" lines offer bright, cheery, cute cards that say, "To me, you're always a winner!" and other messages that, according to Hallmark, "offer adults a variety of ways to initiate a conversation, to praise and reinforce, to thank and congratulate, or to simply tell a child, 'I love you.'"

Another segment of the population targeted by the greeting card industry includes people in the 55-plus age bracket.

"Communication needs clearly change as people mature," says a Hallmark representative. "Retirement brings with it a renewed need to establish and maintain close relationships with friends and relatives.

"Several cards in the Best Years line express appreciation for friendships that have endured throughout the years. Other cards express thanks for a time spent with friends or suggest, 'Let's get together.'"

And romance is back.

"More and more people are getting married — and staying married, and they're rediscovering the word 'commitment,' and commitment means communication," says Roberts.

AMERICAN GREETINGS' new "Couples" line addresses the "four phases of love": "Falling in love," "In love," "Intimacies," and "Staying in love."

As far as the appearance of cards goes, most are designed to appeal to women, who, according to Roberts, represent 90 percent of buyers.

"Women have always been attuned to feelings," she says. "Men are more stoic, but that's changing."

She adds that males are more likely to buy humorous, "alternative" cards.

"Our research has shown that there is an increased Victorian influence in fashion and home furnishings," says Roberts. "Many of our greeting cards, party goods and gift wrap designs reflect this trend."

The card companies promote new "holidays." Time will tell if their efforts are successful with Grandparents' Day, National Boss Day, Professional Secretaries Day and Sweetest Day (for special people, especially the sick, the aged and the orphaned).

And for all those heartfelt messages we can't seem to put into words, greeting card makers hope to have an answer. Hallmark's "Just How I Feel" line and American Greetings' "78th St." give you the opportunity to tell someone, "You're a winner," "I wish you wouldn't smoke," "You'll find the right job," etc.

Changes in people's shopping habits also affect the card industry.

"Today's dual-career couples and an increased number of working women have less time to shop," says Roberts. So card shops offer seasonal boutique-style displays, where you can purchase cards, party goods, gift wrap and decorations — all in one place and all color- and design-coordinated.

New salad dressings take health to heart

By Linda Anderson

Years ago, when I found out how fattening most salad dressings are, I learned to eat salads without dressing or with only lemon juice. (After all, I had to save my dietary allowance of fat for chocolate — we all have our priorities.)

Anderson

Then low-calorie dressings came out, but while they had fewer calories, they might not have had the right kind or amount of fat to be heart-healthy.

And to top it off, I fell in love with ranch-style dressing — and I knew the relationship was off limits because when the dressing mix first came out you blended it with mayonnaise and buttermilk.

Well now the HRV company, which Hidden Valley Ranch brand salad dressings, has introduced Take Heart, its new line of low-fat, no-cholesterol salad dressings in familiar and favorite flavors — French, Thousand Island, Blue Cheese, Italian and Original Ranch.

Of course I couldn't resist buying a bottle — Original Ranch, naturally — to check it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy. I knew it wasn't the same as the original ranch-style dressing, but I figured if it was heart-healthy and tasted close to the original, that would be good enough.

An 8-ounce bottle of Original Ranch flavor Take Heart salad dressing (and, I'm assuming, all the other flavors in 8-ounce bottles) cost $1.57.

According to information from the company, the dressing offer "the best of both worlds — a healthy green salad tossed with a heart-healthy dressing that tastes as good as its full-calorie, fat and cholesterol counterpart," and that Take Heart dressings are "cholesterol free, low sodium and 91 to 97 percent fat-free, depending on the flavor. And because the fat has been removed, they're reduced calorie as well."

The company information also claimed: "Although the dressings are virtually fat-free, they still have that smooth taste associated with oil-based dressings. This is achieved by replacing oil with other FDA approved ingredients along with a special blending process to combine them. Take Heart does not contain a fat substitute."

I couldn't resist trying it. The Original Ranch flavor Take Heart tasted wonderful on salads. I can't say it tastes just like regular ranch-style dressing, but it's flavor is close enough for me.

However — a look at the nutrition label reveals that while the dressing contains 20 calories per tablespoon (now I ask you, who ever eats just a tablespoon of salad dressing at a time?), it also contained 1 gram of fat, which means 9 of its 20 calories were from fat (to find out how many calories in any given product are from fat, multiply the number of grams of fat by nine). That's about half of the dressing's calories are from fat, which is more than the 30 percent or so recommended by the American Heart Association.

But I guess when you pour the dressing on a no-fat salad, the percentage of fat calories lessens considerably. And very few people I know eat salad dressing straight out of the bottle with a spoon, so I guess it all evens out.

All I can say is, try it — you'll like it. I did.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Frivolous fare abounds for beach-bag reading

By Kathy Hogan Trocheck
N.Y. Times News Service

Perfect summer beach-bag reading is not weighty. Leave The New Republic, American Spectator and The Economist at the office.

■ With new fiction by such names as Saul Bellow and Geoffrey Wolff, the July "Summer Reading" issue of Esquire doesn't actually qualify as mindless. But wait: The theme binding the fiction together is "Savage Tales of Love." Perfect for an afternoon at the beach or pool.

The Bellow piece, about a Depression-era youth who encounters a naked woman strapped to a doctor's examining table is vintage Bellow, while Wolff's "Love Under the Clock" bears a peculiar but pleasing similarity to Fitzgerald. Read these two, get a refill of iced tea, turn over and apply more sunscreen. Walter Kirn's "Keeping Donna Faithful" is a short story about a Mormon youngster's efforts to keep a lustful friend a saint instead of a sinner, and Rachel Ingalls's "Faces of Madness" is just bizarre.

■ With the cover line "California Screaming — Beverly Hills' Dirtiest Divorce," who wouldn't stuff the summer issue of Fame in the beach bag? The divorce in question involves Robert Trammell Crow, son of Dallas real-estate tycoon Trammell Crow, and his estranged wife, Emilia. She says he's a junkie who offered her $2 million to have sex with him 50 times. He says she's a money-hungry tramp who slept with her co-star in the movie he put up the money to make. Add Janine di Giovanni's delicious story about social-climbing at Britain's acclaimed Royal Ascot, and this issue is a cover-to-cover read.

■ The June issue of Smithsonian has a lighthearted look at Rotisserie baseball, the national pastime of statistic-mad sports fans around the country who have finally found a way to prove that they can do a better job than the real team owners. Author Nathan Cobb, co-owner of the Danzig Bears of the League of Nations, a 12-team Rotisserie league based near Boston, writes of the woes and wonders of fantasy ball, a game whose success is measured by an individual player's statistics. On the upside, he says, seven brands of beer were served at the annual owner's meeting. On the downside were the fading fortunes of one Cecilio Guante, a relief pitcher whose early-season promise faded to ignominy by September.

■ No summer magazine list is complete without at least one Elvis item. Unfortunately, the editors of Life magazine chose Albert Goldman, the biographer who trashed Elvis and John Lennon, to write the June cover story. Goldman says he has uncovered startling new evidence to suggest that Elvis's drug-overdose death was actually suicide.

A new book (actually a revised edition of Goldman's 1981 "Elvis") is soon to follow. Much more successful, and powerful, is a photo-documentary of the crack-ridden streets of North Philadelphia, photographed by Eugene Richards and reported by Edward Barnes. The image of a young addict firing up a crack pipe with her baby by her side is difficult to forget.

■ Fun to look at, with absolutely no redeeming social value, is the July issue of Architectural Digest, which peeks inside the homes of Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson, Michael Landon and Rolling Stone publisher Jann Wenner.

■ The Periscope section of the current Newsweek takes a well-deserved potshot at rival Time for running a cover story on novelist Scott Turow last week without mentioning that the movie of the author's blockbuster "Presumed Innocent" is a Time-Warner production.

■ AT THE CHECKOUT: "LIZ' BEAUTIFUL FACE RAVAGED BY KILLER DISEASE: Doctors Order Suicide Watch After They Finally Diagnose Mystery Illness" — National Enquirer. "Oprah's Agony: AIDS KILLS HER BEST FRIEND" — Globe. "OUCH: FLEEING THIEF SHOVES LOBSTER DOWN HIS PANTS" — National Examiner.

Today's automobiles cost less to operate

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Despite inflation, the real cost of operating your car is lower today than it was in 1950.

A recent study by Allied-Signal Aftermarket Group, which markets auto parts, showed the per-mile operating costs for a typical car decreased 24 percent, from $0.357 in 1950 to $0.273 in 1989.

A blackwall tire cost $17.62 less in 1989 than in 1950, the study showed, and oil filters that cost $3.11 in 1950 were $2.86 in '89. Brake shoe prices also dipped and spark plug costs fell 67 percent over the period.

DEAR ABBY

Bikers let good times roll if they drive defensively

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please remind drivers that the summer's warm weather means more motorcyclists like myself will be on America's roadways. My interest is both personal and professional. As a personal injury lawyer, I've seen the results of motorcycle accidents far too often. There are more than 100,000 motorcycle accidents every year. Tragically, many of these accidents could have been avoided if auto drivers and motorcyclists both drove more defensively.

Van Buren

It may surprise you to know that the stereotype of the biker boozing it up and racing down the highway is wrong. Most riders (like myself) ride safely and responsibly. In fact, many accidents occur because an auto driver violated the motorcyclist's right-of-way. According to National Safety Council statistics, 72 percent of all accidents involving a car and a motorcycle are due to negligent auto drivers.

Motorcycles are hard to see, which is the chief reason for many motorcycle accidents. On top of this, drivers often forget that motorcycles are on the road; their attention is riveted on the cars around them. Drivers can help reduce accidents by keeping a sharp lookout for motorcyclists, especially in heavy traffic.

Unfortunately, some motorcyclists don't ride responsibly. They take shortcuts such as riding in between traffic lanes to gain ground when cars slow to a stop. Not only is "lane splitting" illegal in most states, it often puts the motorcyclist in the driver's blind spot.

Motorcyclists can help themselves by learning proper safe-driving techniques and wearing brightly colored clothing to make themselves more visible. Also, both riders and auto drivers can do their part by staying sober! — BOSTON LAWYER

DEAR LAWYER: Good advice — and it's badly needed. I hope it's heeded. Statistics show that a majority of motorcycle fatalities are due to head injuries that might have been avoided had the cyclist worn a helmet. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Please dedicate this letter to the motorcyclist I drove behind yesterday who was not wearing a helmet. I am a registered nurse who works with brain-injured adolescents and adults at a rehabilitation center — and yes, I know that you have rights. But let me take a few of the same minutes it would take you to put on a helmet to explain to you the side of "rehab" I do not want you to come to know. (I'd like to think of it as "preventive medicine.")

God knows I feel the anguish of the families of the patients I care for. I feel that strain and discouragement of slowly-met goals — like feeding independently, pushing a wheelchair with limited movement or watching a patient not be able to turn over in bed. Some severe accidents result in death. Others keep the patient extremely challenged mentally and physically. After intense rehabilitation, some patients can go back into the home if the many supports and organizations can assist, depending on the funding and waiting lists.

So, allow me to make one plea to the person who hops on the bike without a helmet: You DO have rights. You have the right to eat the kind of foods you choose, the right to choose your own outfit, the right to have your hair styled or combed the way you want it. But when you are brain-injured, impairment of speech, motor functioning and bodily elimination can occur. If you are brain-injured, I will do my best to help you decide what to eat, what to wear and how to do your hair. But if you can't help me, I will do my best to give you the best level of care available.

This is not to scare anyone. It's just the way it IS, and you have the right to know. — NURSE WHO CARES

Cost of cash different on various credit cards

Associated Press

On vacation and short of cash? Pay attention to which credit card you use to get a cash advance. Interest and fees on a $400 advance for 30 days can range from $3.96 (on a Visa or MasterCard from Arkansas Federal Savings) to $24.96 (on a Visa or MasterCard from First Atlanta Bank in Delaware).

Few people note the cash-advance fees when they apply for a card, says Robert McKinley, publisher of RAM Research's Bankcard Update.

But it pays to check out the fine print for fees in one of three forms: a flat fee (typically $1 to $10), a percentage fee (1 to 5 percent of the amount you borrow) or a higher interest rate for cash advances.

There's no such thing as a free cash advance, even among credit cards that don't charge fees. On nearly all cards, the interest meter starts ticking from either the day you take out the advance or the day it's posted to your account.

Although the Discover card does not charge interest on a cash advance for the first 30 days, there is a 2.5 percent fee, with a $10 maximum.

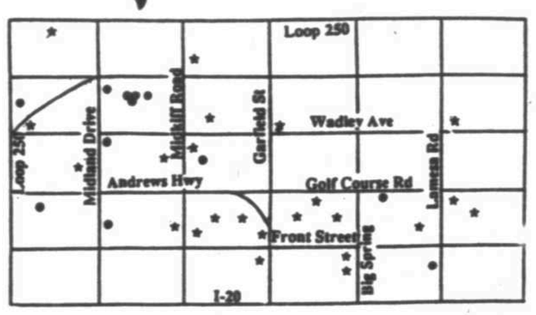

Usually, the higher a credit card's interest rate, the more expensive the cash advance — but there are some notable exceptions. First Atlanta's Visa, for instance, is a good deal for ordinary purchases, at 14.88 percent.

It's the 5 percent cash-advance fee that hurts.

AT WIT'S END

Visiting relatives is mixture of pain, joy

By Erma Bombeck

The relatives are coming! The relatives are coming!

Somewhere today, Nancy is pulling together new underwear for the entire family. Her husband, Roy, is vacuuming the car for the first time since he bought it. Suitcases have been borrowed, car games assembled and coolers stocked in preparation for a trip to visit family members Sis and Raymond.

Bombeck

Meanwhile, Sis and Raymond are into serious cleaning and decorating so the visitors can't see how they really live. They have stocked food, borrowed cots and high chairs, and waxed the driveway. No one will use the bathroom until after the company has seen it.

If there's anything more exciting than the first 24 hours of a family reunion, I don't know what it is. There is tearful hugging, laughter and cries of, "Go play with your cousins. We have a lot to talk about."

At the end of two days, Nancy and Roy realize that TV at Sis' house is not better than it was at home. Raymond works all day and Sis hangs on the phone. Nancy never knew her sister ate lamb before.

Sis and Raymond, who opted to sleep on the sofa bed in the living room, feel as if they're on a float at the Rose Bowl. Sis never realized before that her sister is domestically dead. She doesn't know how to turn on the stove or the washer or load a dishwasher. Her kids change clothes every three hours and leave the refrigerator door open like they're awaiting the Second Coming.

By the fifth day, Nancy and Roy are actually carrying around a portable fan to protect themselves from Raymond's cigarette smoke. Sis and Raymond's kids are children whom their children would not be permitted to play with at home. Nancy has been packed for two days.

Sis and Raymond are beginning to show signs of testiness, too. They are sick of the comparisons between their mall, their baseball team, their economy and their weather and that of their houseguests. Their nephews do not know how to put a toilet seat lid down and they eat like lizards. Sis and Raymond are counting the hours until their relatives leave.

Mixing lifestyles and families is sometimes as risky as freshmen experimenting with chemicals in a science lab without supervision. But the marvel of it all is that family reunions are a lot like giving birth: No one remembers the pain. Next July, Sis and Raymond will pack the kids in the car and head out for a visit with Nancy and Roy, where they will tell their children, "Go play with your cousins. We have a lot to talk about."

Paperweights prized

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP) — Decorative crystal paperweights first appeared in the 1840s.

They soon transcended their immediate purpose of holding down papers to become collectible works of art and prized gifts. Oscar Wilde, Truman Capote and Empress Eugenie (wife of Napoleon) collected paperweights.

According to Swarovski America Limited, makers of crystal giftware, paperweights' popularity has grown steadily over the last several years as desk accessories, business and wedding gifts.

Great improvements underway at Emerald Terrace Apartments

Have you noticed that great things are happening at Emerald Terrace Apartments? Emerald Terrace is located at 4405 North Garfield, near Midland College.

Midland businessman Don Crane is spending approximately $500,000 to improve and extensively update this 172 unit property, which is professionally managed by Balcor Property Management.

"We are completely remodeling the property," Crane said. In addition to new mini-blinds and vertical blinds in each apartment, as well as new carpet and new linoleum floors where necessary, he has implemented major changes in the exterior of the property. "We painted the outside with a new color scheme and also added an iron fence, gas lights and new landscaping," Crane continued.

To be completed soon are improvements to the playground area, tennis court, basketball court and the addition of a weight room.

Emerald Terrace Apartments offer four different floor plans, ranging in size from 528 square feet to 1060 square feet. Choose from our one, two or three bedroom apartment homes.

All floorplans have patio/balcony areas, kitchen pantries, built-in appliances and large walk-in closets. Select floorplans have tile entryways. The color schemes offer you versatility for most any decor.

Stackable washer/dryer connections have been installed in the two bedroom floorplans and full-size washer and dryer connections have been installed in the three bedroom floorplans.

Other Emerald Terrace amenities include two laundry rooms, a pool and a clubroom.

Until the end of August, you can take advantage of special rates on the first two months rent.

Underneath the changes at Emerald Terrace is Crane's commitment to Midland and the local real estate market. "We feel that by coming in and refurbishing the property, rather than knocking it down, we are improving the community."

By the time the improvements are completed, Crane said, "We'll spend more than a half a million dollars. We will have created jobs and used local businesses."

"One reason we picked this property," he continued, "is because it is close to the college — a good location. We want to work with the college and encourage their students to live here."

Added Michelle A. Barnt, property manager and Balcor associate, "We want to provide a quality place for the people of Midland to affordably live." Emerald Terrace is the second Midland property for Balcor, an established management company.

"Balcor is dedicated to customer service," Ms. Barnt explained. "The motto is 'Because People Matter.' We are striving to provide an immaculate environment, even in the midst of construction."

Ms. Barnt brings three and one half years of Balcor experience to Emerald Terrace. She manages the community and is assisted by leasing agent Jennifer Lynch. Both are committed to professional, friendly service.

Medical Center Pharmacy accepts most third party insurance cards

Are you tired of having to wait in line at a pharmacy — just to be waited on? It's a problem, too, to have to wait your turn for the prescription to be filled and then to wait even longer for your name to be called.

However, at Bob West's Medical Center Pharmacy, 2203 W. Tennessee, you can count on quick, dependable service in a friendly atmosphere. And importantly, most third party insurance cards are welcomed at this centrally-located pharmacy.

Owner Bob West is celebrating 30 years of personal, professional pharmacy service to Midlanders.

Medical Center Pharmacy is located just one block north of Midland Memorial Hospital, and convenient to many of Midland's physicians' offices.

"We are well-equipped to handle any prescription from any physician," stressed West, a registered pharmacist.

"We know our customers well and we are very people oriented. Some of our customers have traded with us for 30 years. I like to think of our customers as friends."

"We pride ourselves in having quick service where people don't have to wait long," assessed pharmacist assistant Heather Tan.

In addition to friendly convenient service from West, Ms. Tan and registered pharmacist Waller Diggs, Medical Center Pharmacy offers the advantage of computerized records.

"We are probably one of the oldest Midland stores to be computerized," explained West. Printouts for insurance and income tax purposes are available at no charge upon request.

Another Medical Center Pharmacy advantage is that it honors most third party cards and prescription services. PCS, PCS Recap, Medimet, Texas Blue Cross/Blue Shield, IPC and APC are all welcomed. In addition, Visa, MasterCard and Discover may be used if you don't have a third party plan.

"Third party card prescriptions cost the same everywhere, but we offer fast, friendly and appreciative service," commented West.

Medical Center Pharmacy is a full-service pharmacy, with a wall full of general, over-the-counter products, including soap, hand lotion, sunscreen, contact lens solutions, hair spray, cough and cold medications, vitamin and mineral supplements and first aid supplies.

"We are well-versed on the use of psyllium hydrophilic mucilloid for cholesterol control," said West. "And we fully counsel for side effects and proper use or application on each product we sell."

And Medical Center Pharmacy is up-to-date on the latest in pharmaceuticals. "We get automatic shipments of all new drugs as soon as they are released," added West.

Medical Center is the franchise dealer in Midland for Hollister ostomy products. It also stocks Spenco products, such as Second Skin.

A selection of gifts are available at the pharmacy, including Scent Chips, potpourri and Hummer and Leaning Tree Cards.

A catalog of gift items is available for your convenience, full of discounted items for everyone in the family. You can do your year-round gift shopping while you have your prescription filled or you may take a copy of the catalog home and call in your order. Catalog orders are filled within one full business week.

A complete selection of fine gifts and jewelry is available close by at Son Silks, 2505 West Ohio, also owned by West and his wife, Ellen.

No more identity crisis: Tell your story on Business & Industry pages

The Business and Industry pages, which publish each Tuesday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, offer businesses a great opportunity for in-depth advertising. Call 682-5311, extension 120 for more details.

Ever wished you could see your company's name in the headlines? Every business has a story to tell, and yours can too!

The Business and Industry pages, published each Tuesday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, give you the perfect opportunity to tell your story.

The Business and Industry pages offer advertisers a unique format. The articles and pictures on the pages let readers know what various businesses have to offer.

The pages are not just for one type of business. In fact, the pages feature consumer businesses, as well as commercially-oriented companies.

Both advertisers who offer services and those who are selling a product have been very satisfied with the response they have received by advertising on the Business and Industry pages.

What's really amazing is that your business can be on these pages for a remarkably reasonable rate. Prices for ads start at just $19.58 (gross) per week.

All it takes to begin advertising on the Business and Industry pages is a call to the retail advertising department at 682-5311.

Ads on this page are set up on a contract basis. The number of articles and pictures an advertiser gets is determined by the size of the ad that is run each week on the pages.

The advertiser pays only for the ad, thereby spreading the cost out over a 13 or 26 week period.

Advertisers do not have to worry about writing the articles or taking the pictures themselves. Janice Ford, the Midland Reporter-Telegram's advertising feature writer, that will take care of that.

When possible your articles will be coordinated with special events, such as grand openings and seasonal sales.

To put your business in the headlines of the Business and Industry pages, call 682-5311, ext. 120.

Israeli jets blast Hezbollah bases

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes blasted bases of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah for a second day Monday, killing 12 people and raising fears the violence might thwart the anticipated release of a Western hostage.

Police said eight civilians and four combatants of Hezbollah, or Party of God, were killed. Twenty-eight others, including 10 fighters, were wounded, they said.

A police spokesman said four U.S.-built F-4 Phantom fighter bombers mounted two bombing runs, 10 minutes apart, on Loweizeh and Melita in southern Lebanon.

Palls of black smoke hung over the stricken targets in Iqlim al-Tuffah, or the Apple region, overlooking Israel's self-designated "security zone," the spokesman said.

The attacks came a day after Israeli jets had flattened a Hezbollah base two miles to the south. Three fighters were killed and 12 wounded in Sunday's raid.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli military command said its warplanes struck targets used by Hezbollah for "organizing and launching attacks" and returned safely. It did not elaborate.

Later Monday, Israeli artillerymen in the security zone traded heavy artillery fire with Hezbollah positions north of the buffer, police and U.N. sources said.

A U.N. source said at that one point, the international peacekeepers monitored a barrage of 12 Katyusha rockets fired by Hezbollah into the security zone, which Israel established in 1985. The source spoke on condition of anonymity.

Voice of the South, the radio of the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army militia, said three people were killed and five wounded in the barrage.

'Let us pray the Israeli attacks will not scuttle efforts to free one of the hostages. The hostage-holders are definitely restless, but I personally believe Iran's pressure will probably override the impact of the attacks.'

— Shiite source

Monday's air attack was Israel's third in four days and 15th this year. In 14 previous raids, 19 people were killed and 51 wounded.

The sudden escalation of violence coincided with reports that a Western hostage, most probably a European, would soon be freed by Moslem captors.

"Let us pray the Israeli attacks will not scuttle efforts to free one of the hostages," said a Shiite source close to Hezbollah's Iranian-backed leadership.

"The hostage-holders are definitely restless, but I personally believe Iran's pressure will probably override the impact of the attacks," he said on condition of anonymity.

Danny Neveh, spokesman for Defense Minister Moshe Arens, rejected any links between the raids and hostages and said the timing of the air strikes was "based only on our operating policy against terrorism."

An Israeli government source said the timing of the latest raids might look unfortunate, but could be the result of a lack of coordination between the military and political echelons in Israel. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said the United States views the attacks "as part of the cycle of violence which harms all the parties in the region."

"We are against all acts of violence committed by different groups in southern Lebanon," he said.

Shiite fundamentalists accuse Western governments of favoring Israel and hold them responsible for its actions against Arabs.

A Shiite source, who requested anonymity, said Tehran was pushing hard for the release of a hostage in appreciation for aid it received after the June 21 killer earthquake there.

He would not speculate on the identity of the hostage, despite expectations in Beirut, London and Dublin that it would probably be Irish educator Brian Keenan.

The Irish Red Cross flew the first Western relief plane into Tehran after the earthquake, in which 40,000 people were killed.

The hostages are six Americans, four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss, an Irishman and an Italian. The longest held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

A source close to the Syrian command in Moslem west Beirut said Sunday he did not expect a hostage to be freed before the middle of the week.

Syria, Lebanon's main power broker, has 40,000 troops in control of 70 percent of Lebanon's territory under a 1976 Arab League mandate to snuff out the civil war, now in its 16th year.
