New Orleans police officers examine a Pepsi can Tuesday that contained a needle and syringe.

Tampering reports

NEW YORK — People reported finding syringes in Pepsi cans in several more states and Pepsi-Cola Co., a prolific advertiser and aggressive marketer, took a low-profile response Tuesday. The Food and Drug Administration said it was looking into at least a dozen complaints of syringes or other foreign objects in Pepsi cans and bottles in nine states./5D

Food recall

WASHINGTON — Winn-Dixie Stores are voluntarily recalling 144,000 cans of canned macaroni and beef because some may contain small pieces of hard plastic, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday. The recall of the "Thrifty Maid Macaroni & Beef in Tomato Sauce" covers 13 states, included Texas. Winn-Dixie, based in Jacksonville, Fla., began recalling the product after three customers complained about finding objects in the food. The recall covers all 15-ounce cans with the following code on the lid: "3015WN."

Lower cholesterol

WASHINGTON — Cholesterol levels among Americans have dropped so rapidly in the past 12 years that nearly half the nation's adults now have healthy levels of the blood chemical and heart disease deaths are declining. It is a statistic that is matching the decline in U.S. deaths from heart disease, officials said Tuesday.

City soon to have hand in cable TV rates

Council applies for FCC permit

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Lack of competition for a local cable company could give city officials a hand in regulating their prices by November.

Prompted by a rising tide of complaints from consumer groups, rates set by local cable companies across the nation — including Dimension Cable Services in Midland — will be monitored by local governmental entities.

"Actually the term 'regulate' is a misnomer," said Assistant City Attorney Chad Weaver. "The benchmark rate will be set by the FCC (Federal Communications Commission). All the city can do is say, 'Hey, you're above the benchmark,' do something about it."

Missy Orr-Ryan, general manager at Dimension Cable, said she is unsure what effect the regulations will have on area cable service.

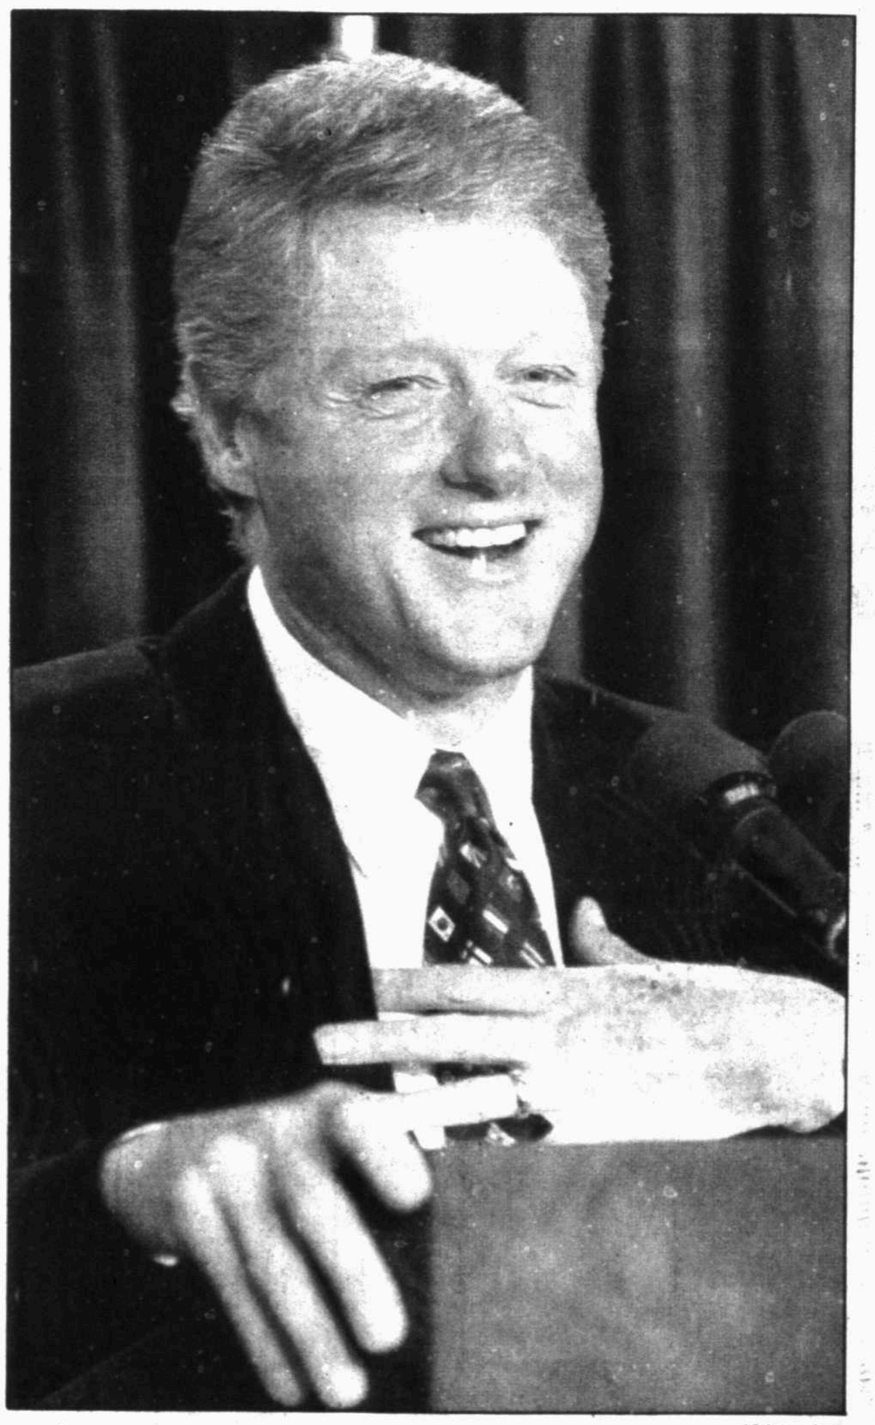

"It's a bit early to tell. We don't anticipate any wholesale changes at this point," she said. "There shouldn't be much of a change in individual cable bills."

The cable company will have the option of restructuring rates for specific tiers as long as the average cable bill remains the same. Some consumer groups are concerned that cable companies may reduce the number of channels offered for basic service.

Under terms of the Cable Act of 1992, a city is allowed to regulate rates only if there is no "effective" competition for cable television services — or if 30 percent of households subscribe to the cable system.

Clinton gives stiff defense of decisions

■ President dismisses assertions that he has been indecisive, portrays himself as penalized for making tough calls.

By Gwin Ifill
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Clinton on Tuesday presented his first six months in office as an aggressive and largely successful attempt to reinvigorate government, dismissing all assertions that he has been indecisive and portraying himself as a world leader penalized for making tough calls at home and abroad.

"No president's budget has been taken seriously in this town for a dozen years," Clinton said. "Three-quarters of the Republicans in the House of Representatives voted against President Bush's last budget. I sent a budget up there that passed — the budget resolution passed on time for the first time in 17 years. And we're out here fighting for these tough decisions.

"This is the most decisive presidency you've had in a very long time on all the big issues that matter," he continued. "And I might say, all the heat we're getting from people is because of the decisions that have been made, not because of those that haven't."

Clinton's appearance on Tuesday at a hastily called news conference was part of a coordinated public relations offen-

Inflation report brings smiles: 'Scare is over'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cost of living barely budged in May, bringing smiles at the White House and prompting one economist to declare, "The inflation scare is over."

The Labor Department said Tuesday that the tiny 0.1 percent rise in consumer prices last month reflected the biggest drop in gasoline prices in more than two years and moderation in other areas including housing, clothing and cars.

Price pressures weren't totally absent. Food costs, driven higher by a 48 percent surge in tomato prices, took another leap upward. So did medical costs, which are still rising faster than any other sector of the economy, and tuition prices.

But the small overall increase was a welcome relief from April, when consumer prices had climbed by a worrisome 0.4 percent.

In other economic news, the Commerce Department said the nation's overall trade deficit

Egan, Schneider counter mayor's paving opposition

Midland City Council member Claudia Egan Tuesday said the city needs to end two decades of idle promises and pave Woodcrest Drive.

Ms. Egan and council member Pat Schneider called a press conference to respond to statements made by Mayor J.D. Faircloth in a story in Sunday's edition of the Reporter-Telegram.

Faircloth argued that the council's recent 4-3 vote authorizing plans for paving a 4½-block section of Woodcrest Drive would set a precedent, forcing the city to pave about 275 blocks of city streets at a cost of $7.5 million.

Faircloth, District 1 council member Buddy Sipes and at-large council member Bill Morrow voted against the proposal.

State political giant John Connally dies at 76

Texan never escaped echoes of gunfire

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — John Connally never escaped the echoes of gunfire in Dealey Plaza but, he said, his brush with death gave him a greater appreciation of life.

And colleagues say the Kennedy assassination changed him profoundly.

Thirty years later, shortly before Connally's death, friends and associates reflected on the tragedy and spoke of his charm, vision, eloquence and leadership.

Says Julian Read, an Austin public relations executive and Connally's longtime friend and adviser:

"I think John Connally's unique and enduring stature and charisma is best evidenced by the fact that even today, without any official portfolio, his presence immediately dominates any room he enters anywhere in the world."

But above all else, friends say, the former governor was a Texan, from his silver mane down to the tip of his western boots.

"I've heard over and over across the country that John Connally represents the very personification of what people envi-

HOUSTON — Former Texas Gov. John B. Connally, the square-jawed, silver-topped politician and businessman whose image became synonymous with the state, died Tuesday from complications related to pulmonary fibrosis, a lung disease. He was 76.

sion in a Texan," said Read.

"He brought a new meaning to the word leadership in Texas and, I think, an era of renewed pride in our state."

Ben Barnes, Connally's former political protege and business partner, said the same thing this way:

"He personified what the people of Texas wanted their governor to look like. He looked Texas. He sounded Texas. He exuded confidence. John was something Texas definitely needed at that time."

Connally was in his first term as governor on Nov. 22, 1963, when a sniper fired on the presidential motorcade as it passed through downtown Dallas.

Kennedy was killed and Connally, in the same car, was critically wounded.

"I got hit and Nellie pulled me over in her lap," he recalled 20 years later. "I thought when I was first hit that I was fatally hit. I thought I was dying."

Instead, his greatest political successes — and failures — lay ahead.

"He's handled triumph and tragedy with equal class," Read said, recalling Connally's composure just hours after the shooting.

"He spoke to the television networks from his hospital bed to help assure a deeply disturbed nation about the steady leadership of President Lyndon Johnson."

Johnson was Connally's friend and political mentor.

"And even Connally's most ardent political foes have admired the grace with which he and Nellie handled their bankruptcy ordeal. I think his true grit is reflected in the fact that he bounced back from that calamity . . . ," Read said.

After the assassination, Connally won two more terms as governor, served as secretary of the U.S. Treasury in the Nixon administration, switched from the Democratic to the Republican Party and ran unsuccessfully for president in 1980.

Connally filed for bankruptcy in 1987 when his oil and real estate deals went sour with the Texas economy in the 1980s. He and his wife eventually auctioned most of their personal possessions to pay secured creditors.

But the shooting in Dallas was never far from his mind, and he often told reporters he deplored the "bad rap" Texans received because of it.

"I was offended . . . because of the obvious attempt on the part of some to castigate Texas and Dallas as if we were a brutal, uncivilized, cannibal society down here," he said in 1983.

"I resented it then and I resent it now."

Friends say he was depressed and deeply affected but never embittered by the assassination. It did sap his political energy, Barnes said.

"After that, he didn't have much patience with the Legislature and the legislative process. He wanted things accomplished quicker. Government didn't work quickly enough for Connally."

He never lost his enthusiasm for Texas, just Texas government, Barnes said.

Connally conceded that the trauma of Dallas made him more cautious.

tion worsened two weeks later, and his wife, Nellie, asked friends to pray for him.

But he did not respond to treatment.

"We deeply thank all of those whose thoughts and prayers have been with us throughout this ordeal," Mrs. Connally said in a statement released by the hospital. "It was those thoughts and prayers that gave John the best possible chance to recover. We always will be grateful for your kindness."

Connally's body will lie in state in the House of Representatives chamber at the state Capitol in Austin on Thursday. Services in Austin and burial at the State Cemetery are scheduled to follow.

Connally is survived by his wife, Idanell Brill Connally; daughter, Sharon Amman of Austin; sons, John B. Connally III of Houston and Mark M. Connally of Austin; three brothers, two sisters, eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild. He was preceded in death by a daughter, Kathleen.

Connally had been active until he became ill. The week before his hospitalization, he announced his involvement in a multimillion-dollar effort to build the first pari-mutuel horse racing track in the Houston area.

Connally, who gained an international profile when he was wounded in the 1963 assassination of President John Kennedy in Dallas, boasted a long and impressive resume that included a Cabinet position. He alternated between business and politics for most of his life.

His three two-year terms as Texas governor, from 1963 to 1969, proved to be his longest stint in one place.

The simple facts of John Bowden Connally Jr.'s life seem spun from the stuff of Texas myth. He was a poor boy from the country who did well in school, learned the hard lessons of backroom politics at the side of the Lyndon B. Johnson, the future president, and in time found himself orbiting among the state's elite.

Determined, smart, and as tough as the mesquite that infested the family ranch near Floresville, Texas, "Big John" was less a man than an icon. He became the Stetson-topped, ramrod-straight embodiment of the Texas that in the 1960s was emerging from its rough-hewn past in a dazzling wave of Sun Belt expansion.

For two decades, Connally seemed poised at the edge of greatness. He leapt for it in his 1979 campaign for the presidency, but fell short. The completion of what one biographer likened to a Shakespearean fall from grace came a few years later, when the state's economy collapsed from a frenzy of overdevelopment, and he collapsed along with it.

Even in bankruptcy, however, Connally maintained a mythic dimension. Media from all over the country came to chronicle his colossal debt.

Connally was born Feb. 27, 1917, in Floresville, one of seven children of J.B. and Lela Wright Connally and a fifth-generation Texan. His father was at various times a tenant farmer, bricklayer, butcher, barber and bus driver.

Connally received a law degree from the University of Texas in 1941. He served from 1939 to 1941 as a secretary to Johnson, who was then a U.S. representative.

In 1940, Connally married Nellie, his college girlfriend.

He joined the Navy as a lieutenant just before World War II, served in the Mediterranean and the Pacific and saw combat aboard the carrier Essex. He attained the rank of lieutenant commander and received the Bronze Star among other decorations.

After the war, Connally organized an Austin radio station, KVET, and served as its president and general manager until 1949. In addition, he worked on behalf of rural electrification and managed Johnson's barely successful 1948 campaign for the U.S. Senate.

Connally was appointed Secretary of the Navy by President-elect Kennedy in December 1960.

Cuba cuts troops, offers America gesture of friendship

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Cuba bade farewell Tuesday to the last brigade of Russian combat troops and said its own military had been cut because of the country's economic woes.

The Communist country also offered a goodwill gesture toward the United States, repeating its willingness to negotiate payment for U.S. properties confiscated in the 1960s. Cuba blames a U.S. embargo for its economic problems.

The developments follow other recent indications that Fidel Castro's government wants better ties with the United States. Both were given relatively lengthy coverage by the official Prensa Latina news agency in its service for foreign readers.

President Clinton's administration has shown no interest in normalizing relations. As a candidate, Clinton said he supported tightening the embargo.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Mike McCurry said no direct communication had taken place between U.S. and Cuban officials on reparations.

The farewell ceremony for Russian troops ended a 30-year combat presence on the island, a crucial Cold War base for the Soviet Union. The departing 3,000-man motorized infantry brigade paraded before a monument to Soviet soldiers on Havana's outskirts.

A few Russian military advisers and staffers remain at an electronic listening post in Lourdes.

The Soviet Union once stationed 20,000 troops on Cuba after the 1962 missile crisis, when President Kennedy forced Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev to remove nuclear missiles from the island.

The developments follow other recent indications that Castro wants better ties with the United States.

But Cuba became less important to the Kremlin as Communism dissolved around the world. At the same time, the Soviet Union's own economic problems came to the fore, leading Moscow to halt critical subsidized oil exports to Cuba.

Russia, which assumed control of the Red Army after the Soviet collapse, announced last year it would pull out of Cuba.

In announcing army cuts, Prensa Latina reported that current maneuvers by the Cuban military were "adapted to the new economic realities of the Cuban armed forces, including the reduction of their forces."

Defense Minister Raul Castro, the president's brother, indicated in April that cuts had taken place, telling Mexico's El Sol chain of newspapers that Cuba cut some non-combatant forces as part of a broader "rationalization."

He said then that Cuba had received no new Russian arms since 1990, although it received some spare parts in 1991.

Neither El Sol nor Prensa Latina said how deep the cuts would go.

According to the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London, Cuba had 175,000 regulars in the armed forces and 15,000 ready reserves.

It also had about 1.5 million paramilitary fighters, though many were inactive. Cuba has prepared for a guerrilla war by building a big network of defense tunnels.

It was not clear what the demobilized troops would do.

DUBLIN, Ireland (NYT) — For centuries overwhelmingly Roman Catholic Ireland has clung proudly to conservative, even strait-laced attitudes toward matters of sexual morality. Literary dissenters like James Joyce and Edna O'Brien were voices of a small minority.

But now, as a result of economic, social and political changes, the government has begun to move steadily toward a liberalization of laws involving families and sex in ways that are generally opposed by the Catholic Church.

"Finally an Irish government is dealing with socially difficult issues," said Anne Taylor, chairman of the Council for the Status of Women, an umbrella organization of 110 groups including both conservatives and liberals on social issues. "After pushing them to the sidelines for many years, they have finally found the courage to deal with issues like divorce, homosexuality, contraception and abortion."

There is considerable opposition to the government's liberalization plans, and various groups opposed to divorce and abortion are, like the church, expected to mount vigorous campaigns when the issues come up for debate in Parliament.

Last week, Mother Teresa, addressing an outdoor rally of 30,000 at a shrine in western Ireland, was applauded as she said, "Let us promise Our Lady we will never, in any circumstances, allow a single abortion in this country."

Pope urges more Catholic influence to stop corruption

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Consecrating Europe's first new cathedral this century, Pope John Paul II urged Roman Catholic church leaders Tuesday to increase their influence on politics to try to counter corruption and other social ills.

John Paul, while cautioning churchmen against actually going into politics, said they should "illuminate" the political community about moral values.

Since arriving in Spain Saturday on a six-day visit, he has targeted what he sees as a serious decline in morality. He has crusaded for moral renewal in Western Europe — stained by corruption scandals in Italy, Spain and elsewhere.

His latest appeal for greater Roman Catholic influence on political and social policy rang out in La Almudena, a cathedral that had been under construction since 1883.

For the pope, the cathedral, rising next to the royal palace, was an apt backdrop for a call for stronger Church presence in society.

In Spain, that society has become increasing secularized as Spaniards — more than 90 percent baptized as Catholics — increasingly ignore church bans on divorce, abortion and artificial birth control.

30 percent chance of rain on tap

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of rain, a high in the mid-80s and southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Thursday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a high in the mid-80s.

After an overnight low of 61, Tuesday's high reached 85, compare to the record high for that date of 106 set in 1960. The record low was 48 set in 1981.

STATE

Almost anywhere you went in Texas on Tuesday there was a need for umbrella. Keep it handy Wednesday, too, because scattered showers are again forecast for much of the state.

An almost stationary front hung over much of North Texas on Tuesday, ranging from near Longview westward to near Denton, and northwestward into Oklahoma.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms were noted over much of the region, but the storms were reduced in strength by an upper-level ridge that also brought southerly winds.

Skies were partly to mostly cloudy Tuesday with temperatures in the upper 80s to mid-90s because of the ridge.

The area can expect partly cloudy skies with isolated thunderstorms and highs in the 90s and lows in the low to mid 70s through tonight.

South Texas got sprinkled on by a few showers and thunderstorms scattered across the area as warm, moist air flowed in from the Gulf of Mexico, carried by 10 mph winds.

NATION

A cold front moving eastward Tuesday triggered strong thunderstorms in the Northeast. Rain fell on the Plains and parts of the Northwest.

One man was killed and another injured in McAlester, Okla., when lightning struck a propane tank as they sought shelter from the storm. The fast-moving thunderstorm dumped 3 inches of rain in Pittsburg County.

Thunderstorms moved across New York, Pennsylvania, parts of the eastern Great Lakes and the south Atlantic coast. Showers and thunderstorms were scattered along the Gulf Coast, through the Plains, across the northern Rockies and the Pacific Northwest.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

COUNTER: 2 council members seek paving

(From 1A)

Ms. Egan said the residents living in the Woodcrest Drive neighborhood have been haggling with the city for years over the estimated $125,000 price tag and the necessity of paving the street.

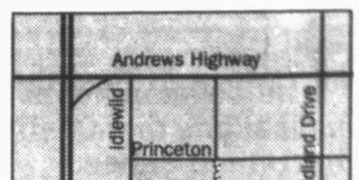

"After 22 years of waiting, begging and being assured it would be taken care of, we have finally told them it is over," Ms. Egan said. "The taxpayers understand that not all streets can be paved immediately. Let's not insult their intelligence. If we can do one Woodcrest a year, certainly that is progress."

Mayor Faircloth was out of town Tuesday and unavailable for comment.

Residents in the Woodcrest neighborhood say the dirt road poses considerable safety problems. At past council meetings, residents have complained about high school drivers racing along the dirt street and about problems incurred during heavy rains.

Others claim that drivers turning onto Andrews Highway avoid Woodcrest in favor of using Idlewild Street, which is located a few feet from a Loop 250 exit ramp.

"This area is a tragedy waiting to happen," Ms. Egan said. "Every day I pray that I don't witness an accident. The stress these citizens go through every day must be agonizing."

But opponents of the paving — including Sipes — believe Woodcrest is low on the list of streets that need paved.

"I believe that we're dealing with a special interest group that's simply making themselves quite vocal," Sipes said. "We have the funds, there are just other places they should be used."

Proponents claim the paving is a way for the city to collect on a debt that the county owes as part of an inter-local agreement. The agreement allows one entity access to services provided solely by the other — such as the county's access to city fire protection or the city's usage of the county jail.

"These services are not collected in cash. They can only be repaid by the county in street paving," Ms. Egan said.

Precinct 1 County Commissioner Henry Goulet has said he favors giving the city the money rather than using county equipment for the paving.

"They can contract the work out or do as they please from that point," he said. "I just feel there are other streets in town that need paved much worse."

About half of the money needed for the paving would be taken from existing reserves in the city's street bond funds — which can only be used for street paving.

Historically — with the exception of federally funded Community Development Block Grant street-paving in southeast Midland — the city has not paved streets, Faircloth said last week. That cost is typically paid for by the developer and then absorbed in the price of the homes — although the city does pay for street repairs.

Ralph Howell, who lives at 4635 Princeton Ave., said he believes the city has spent more money maintaining the dirt street than what it would cost to pave.

"I'm sick and tired of the city of Midland lying to me. I pay my taxes, damn it," Howell said.

But Sipes said taxpayers should not have to bear the burden of paving Woodcrest.

"The bond money for the streets and the money owed to us is a city asset," he said. "It would still come out of the taxpayers' pockets if this street is paved."

Last week, Faircloth said the 70 homeowners living in the neighborhood have refused to pay even 1/3 of the expected cost — or an estimated $500 each. He said the city has never used taxes to build streets.

But, while Faircloth has vowed to fight the issue, Ms. Egan stands by her vote.

"I say that with one vote we have started a process that will certainly assure that tax dollars, especially those in reserves, will be used equitably and fairly for every district in this city," she said.

City officials said it will be about four or five weeks before plans and specifications on the paving are complete and the bidding process for the work begins.

DEFENDS: Clinton strikes out in own behalf

sive by the administration. He came clearly prepared to strike out on his own behalf and counter criticism about his performance after weeks of watching passively, and relatively quietly, as his approval ratings slid under an onslaught of critical assessments about his performance.

"There is no wavering," he said, boasting that under his leadership interest and unemployment rates have dropped and housing sales have risen. He said he had taken the lead on the world stage, signed several pieces of significant legislation and made progress on gaining a budget agreement that will reduce the deficit.

The president's remarks were but the latest sign of anxiety in the administration. The mounting criticism so alarmed Secretary of State Warren Christopher than he was moved to send all American ambassadors a confidential cable listing what he said were Clinton's achievements around the world.

The president's news conference came one day after he selected Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg to serve on the Supreme Court, a process that took nearly three months to conclude and that fueled discussion of the president's apparent indecisiveness.

Dee Dee Myers, the White House press secretary, said David R. Gergen, the former Reagan aide who Clinton recruited to reshape his public relations strategy, suggested taking Clinton to the White House's informal press briefing room — a site he seldom uses — to give him a chance to capitalize on good economic news by making headlines and the evening news.

She also said they hoped his readiness to answer questions would defuse bad feelings left from the previous day's news conference, which Clinton cut short after accepting only one question that he considered cynical.

"It gave us a good way to put it all behind us right away," Ms. Myers said.

White House officials said Clinton planned to increase his public presence in coming weeks by holding a prime-time news conference or delivering a televised Oval Office address in defense of his economic plan.

As Gergen stood by beaming on Tuesday, Clinton strode into the briefing room with a smile and quickly set out to redress Monday's tensions. After making a brief opening statement, he turned to Brit Hume, the ABC News correspondent whom he had snapped at the day before and suggested that he owed him a follow-up to the question Hume had asked in the Rose Garden.

"You know what I'm really upset about?" he said to Hume, who was recently married. "You got a honeymoon and I didn't."

In the general laughter that followed the president's joke, Gergen turned to Ms. Myers and was heard whispering, "That was perfect."

Clinton's appearance seemed deliberately designed to extend the favorable publicity he received on Monday with his announcement of a Supreme Court nominee. The president's search for a new justice had stretched from days to weeks to months, as he came under new fire for hesitating over his choice while prominent candidates watched their fortunes rise and fall on a very public stage.

But Clinton said Tuesday that he never meant to embarrass the other candidates. "First of all, I strongly dispute that I hung them out," he said. "I regret the leaks. But it's not fair to say I hung them out."

Judge Ginsburg, he said, was "the best candidate at this time."

Clinton also said he had received insufficient credit for the decline in interest and unemployment rates, increased housing sales and the enactment of several pieces of significant legislation.

Although those economic indicators have improved since Clinton took office, some economists hesitate to link the improvements to actions taken by this administration other than to give Clinton credit for maintaining stability in the long-term bond markets. The last recession officially ended in March 1991.

At his news conference, Clinton also touted his actions on foreign affairs.

He said that the plan he presented to European leaders on the fighting in Bosnia was still the best approach to solving an intractable crisis. His plan would have initiated multilateral military action against Bosnian Serb targets and lifted the arms embargo to help Bosnian Muslims.

"On Bosnia, I made a decision," Clinton said. "The United Nations controls what happens in Bosnia. I cannot unilaterally lift the arms embargo. I didn't change my mind. Our allies decided that they weren't prepared to go that far at this time."

abortion rights and pro-gay rights positions.

They said his positions are "detrimental to this great nation," "anti-Christian" and fail to represent "values and virtues" consistent with the faith.

"I call upon the Southern Baptist Convention to withdraw fellowship from brother Bill Clinton concerning his efforts in the promotion of homosexual rights," said Jerry W. Jacks of Georgia.

Ron Thomas, a Florida delegate, introduced a motion asking SBC leaders to meet with Clinton and Gore "to reclaim our fallen brothers."

If the pair refused to change their stands, the motion said, they would be declared "heathen" and "officially out of fellowship with our convention."

But SBC leaders said only a local church, not the convention, can expel members.

Several other motions and resolutions called for Clinton to "repent" and for delegates to disavow the administration's positions.

Dr. Timothy George, a conservative scholar from Beeson Divinity School in Alabama, said Southern Baptists are anxious to distance the denomination from Clinton's policies.

George said he doubts Clinton will acknowledge the criticisms. "My sense is, he will dismiss it as a reaction he need not be concerned about," George said.

Young said he would not turn down an invitation to meet privately with Clinton. "I would be happy to speak with the president and share with him the positions where we disagree," Young said.

The Rev. Jay Strack of Dallas was elected SBC first vice president. Delegates gave final approval to a constitutional amendment empowering the convention to expel churches that "affirm, approve or endorse homosexual behavior."

REPORT: May cost of living barely budges

shrank to $20.91 billion in the first three months of the year, The 11.7 percent improvement from the fourth quarter of 1992 reflected gains for American services such as banking and tourism, offsetting the country's perennial merchandise trade deficit.

A third report showed that Americans' average weekly earnings, after adjusting for inflation, shot up 1.6 percent last month, the biggest increase in more than 13 years. Before the May gain, weekly earnings had fallen in six of 12 months.

President Clinton cited not only the good inflation report but recent gains in employment, housing sales and continuing low interest rates as good signs for future expansion.

But in a message directed at Congress, Clinton warned that progress would be jeopardized if Congress failed to pass his deficit-reduction program and interest rates started rising.

"The continuation of this trend depends on our ability to pass a strong economic program through Congress," Clinton said.

The administration had been worried about reports that the Federal Reserve voted last month to increase interest rates if inflationary pressures did not abate. Clinton met for more than an hour last week with Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan.

Administration officials were counting on the new inflation reports to back up their arguments that price pressures are well under control.

'Inflation is unlikely to be a threat any time in the near future.'

— Bruce Steinberg, economist at Merrill Lynch in New York

Private economists said Tuesday's Consumer Price Index and an equally subdued report on wholesale prices last Friday should be the start of much better price figures as idle factories and workers continue to keep the lid on prices.

"The inflation scare is over," said Allen Sinai, an economist and managing director at Lehman Brothers in New York. "The earlier surge was related to such things as the weather and did not reflect any changes in the fundamental picture of weak economies and falling inflation around the world."

"Inflation is unlikely to be a threat any time in the near future," said Bruce Steinberg, economist at Merrill Lynch in New York.

So far this year, consumer prices have been rising at an annual rate of 3.8 percent. But Steinberg said he believed the rate for all of 1993 would be around 3 percent, little changed from the 2.9 percent of last year, the second lowest in 27 years.

For May, gasoline prices fell by 2.5 percent, the biggest one-month decline since March 1991. Overall energy costs were down 1 percent.

However, food costs were up 0.6 percent, the biggest rise since last August. More than two-thirds of the gain was blamed on the first increase in fruit prices in six months, up 1.4 percent, and an even bigger 5.7 percent jump in vegetable prices. Tomato prices alone surged 48.2 percent.

Excluding the volatile food and energy categories, inflation was up a tiny 0.2 percent in May as a sharp jump in housing costs in April moderated to a tiny 0.1 percent May advance and the rise in new car prices slowed to 0.2 percent.

Clothing prices fell 0.5 percent as retailers offered bigger-than-normal discounts during spring and summer sales, a sign, analysts said, that they were not able to make earlier price increases stick because of sluggish demand.

Medical costs continued to outpace any other category, climbing 0.8 percent in May — 6.3 percent in the past 12 months.

CABLE: City to monitor rates

the system subsribe to Dimension Cable.

Last week, the City Council passed a resolution to apply with the FCC for a certificate allowing them to regulate services. Cable rates will be frozen at their present rates until Nov. 15. After that date, cable companies will be free to raise their rates, but only at the discretion of the city. The FCC anticipates that cable charges in most cities will go down after that date.

Once certified, a city only will be allowed to regulate "basic" cable, equipment charges and charges for ancillary services — such as connection and disconnection fees.

Weaver said only the FCC will be allowed to regulate rates for additional tiers of service beyond "basic" cable. Fees for other premium services — including pay-per-view and pay-per-channel — will not be monitored by the FCC or cities.

Since 1986, cable television rates have been deregulated. In response to rapidly rising prices, Congress passed the Cable Act of 1992, allowing municipalities the opportunity to regulate rates if they so desired.

The FCC has agreed to regulate upper tier cable services on a complaint basis.

Lawmakers: Aristide's in charge, but not fully

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide gained parliamentary recognition on Tuesday as Haiti's legitimate leader, but lawmakers refused to set a date for his return.

Haitians reacted warily to the pre-dawn Parliament vote, which demanded that Aristide obtain an end to a punishing international embargo before he could put a new government in place.

A leading Aristide supporter called the vote a sham, and a senior U.N. official said in New York that the move would not delay an international effort to strengthen the embargo, imposed to pressure a return to democracy.

The official, speaking by phone on condition of anonymity, said a Security Council vote on placing a worldwide oil embargo is likely Thursday.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Mike McCurry called parliamentary recognition of Aristide "a necessary first step" to solving the crisis. He said the de facto regime now must show willingness to engage in good faith negotiations.

Peacekeeping forecast: rough years ahead

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press writer

The 'new world order' of the statesmen and strategists is suddenly in the hands of sergeants and street guerrillas.

The "new world order" of the statesmen and strategists is suddenly in the hands of sergeants and street guerrillas. The real world order, it turns out, is a little unruly.

Three times in 10 days, the United Nations has been bullied and bloodied as it tried to keep the peace in three distant corners of the map.

In Mogadishu, Somalia, Pakistani U.N. troops were ambushed and slaughtered. Days later, their angry comrades mowed down a protest crowd of Somalis — an action still under U.N. investigation.

In Bosnia, Serb gunners bombarded Gorazde, mocking the U.N. declaration of the Muslim enclave as a "safe area." Elsewhere in Bosnia, front-line British U.N. troops turned tough, firing on Muslim and Croat militiamen alike when provoked.

■ Analysis

And in Cambodia, dissidents rejected the results of U.N.-run elections and sent demonstrators into the streets to try to drive peacekeepers from the country's eastern provinces.

Can the U.N. "blue helmets" soldier on? Will their control falter as local populations turn more hostile? Is the United Nations — that is, the governments in Washington, Ouagadougou and points between — prepared for the rough years ahead?

The U.N. peacekeeping corps is exploding in size: from 16,000 troops and police in early 1992, to more than 57,000 today, operating in 18 countries. Seventy governments have assigned personnel to the U.N. missions.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, the staff scrambles to deal with the new world disorder. An around-the-clock peacekeeping operations room has been established in recent months, and the in-house military staff has grown to 35 from fewer than 10. Many new officers are borrowed from member governments.

Still, the 183 member governments come up short — of money, of political will, of clear plans.

More immediately, they're coming up short of military equipment. The lightly armed Pakistani peacekeepers in Somalia, for example, had to beg and borrow armored vehicles, and even flak jackets, to face the new threat.

Former KGB general evolves into 'Democrat'

BAKU, Azerbaijan (NYT) — In a remarkable political comeback, a former KGB general, former Communist Party boss and former Politburo member in the Kremlin has maneuvered his way back into power here, saying he is a democrat and promising to turn his native Azerbaijan back from the brink of civil war.

"Let there be no doubt about my purpose," Heydar Aliyev, 70, said in his acceptance speech upon being voted into the office of chairman of Parliament on Tuesday. "I will devote the time God has left me to protect the independence of Azerbaijan and promote the rule of law, democratic pluralism and the development of a market economy."

Aliyev also called on a rebel commander whose forces are within 60 miles of the capital to end his revolt, promising that those responsible for bringing the country to the brink of collapse would be punished.

Aliyev repeatedly referred to the beleaguered president of Azerbaijan, Abulfez Elchibey, as his "host," but the selection of Aliyev by Parliament is widely regarded as signaling that he has won a struggle for supremacy in the oil-producing former Soviet republic. In the week since he arrived in Baku, the Azerbaijani capital, he has waged a campaign against the dwindling authority of the government, meeting with foreign diplomats, summoning international oil executives and promoting an image of himself as the savior of the country.

But Aliyev appears to have bowed to United States and other Western official statements of support for the "government of the democratically elected president." A flight of foreigners involved in the oil industry seems also to have played a role in his decision not to oust Elchibey.

Whatever the sincerity of his recent embrace of political pluralism and market economics, Aliyev was almost a perfect child of the Soviet system, even down to the Russification of his first name, which for years was spelled Geidar. After joining the local KGB, he made his way up the ranks of the Soviet security forces, achieving the rank of general. In 1969, he was promoted to first secretary of the Azerbaijani Communist Party and was one of the most faithful members of Leonid Brezhnev's inner circle.

In 1981, Aliyev was brought into the Soviet Politburo by Brezhnev's successor as Soviet leader, Yuri Andropov. He served as deputy prime minister until he was dropped from the inner circle in 1986 by Mikhail Gorbachev and branded a corrupt, anti-glasnost hardliner.

Ginsburg should endure tough test

President Clinton's surprise choice of Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg — a moderate jurist — for the Supreme Court to fill the position of retiring Justice Byron R. White will still move the court numerically further to the left on the abortion debate. If you support freedom of choice on abortions, you will likely be pleased with her selection. If not, you won't.

While Judge Ginsburg has been termed a centrist judge who is likely to add power to the moderates on the court, she will without question challenge the status quo.

To look at her true potential impact on the court, however, one must get beyond the abortion issue to other issues the court is likely to decide in coming years — affirmative action, school prayer and homosexual rights. In that regard, those who know her say that Judge Ginsburg will represent a shift away from Justice White's conservatism and that can only mean a more moderate position.

That isn't the catastrophe it could have been had Clinton chosen a jurist with sharply liberal views, but Clinton's decision is what could be expected, particularly in light of recent moderation.

Observers are predicting that Judge Ginsburg will be confirmed quickly in the Senate. That would be a positive development, but her confirmation process should be as intense and scrutinizing as those of other appointees in recent years. The object is to get the best potential jurist for the job — not necessarily a woman, not necessarily a black or a Hispanic, but the very best jurist.

To do less would be to hold Judge Ginsburg to less of a standard. That would not be fair.

'Greek connection' haunts Nixon

WASHINGTON — Twenty-one years after the infamous Watergate burglary poisoned the Nixon presidency, conspiracy theories are still evolving about the true motives behind the political scandal of the century.

Anderson

This week's anniversary of the burglary gives us a chance to detail an intriguing theory about the mysterious motives of the break-in. The theory, known as the "Greek connection," was first reported by us a decade ago.

It revolves around the persecution of a distinguished Greek journalist named Elias Dematracopoulos, whose investigative reporting dogged the Nixon administration. A few weeks before the 1968 election, Dematracopoulos presented explosive evidence to the Democratic National Committee that had the potential to doom Nixon's candidacy.

In a meeting with then-DNC Chairman Lawrence O'Brien, Dematracopoulos alleged that the Greek KYP — a spy agency founded and partially funded by the American CIA — may have been secretly bankrolling the Nixon campaign. He was able to trace three cash payments of $549,000 from the Greek KYP to the Nixon campaign. In essence, the CIA was indirectly contributing to the Republican candidates.

The conduit for the illegal contributions was Thomas Pappas, a high-rolling Greek-American businessman, whose enterprises were alleged to be fronts for CIA operations in Greece. Pappas was a major fund-raiser and contributor to the 1968 campaign of Nixon and his running mate, Spiro T. Agnew, who became the highest-elected official of Greek-American background.

In 1971, Demetracopoulos laid out his evidence to a congressional subcommittee — resisting pressure from Nixon's longtime adviser, Murray Chotiner. The "Greek connection" was lent credence in 1976 when a former U.S. ambassador to Greece confirmed before Congress the funneling of money from the Greek junta to the Nixon campaign.

According to some theories, Nixon's curiosity about Demetracopoulos and the dirt he supplied Democrats in 1968 compelled Nixon to authorize the Watergate break-in four years later.

It sounds far-fetched, but strangely complements what G. Gordon Liddy — convicted for being one of the co-conspirators in the burglary of the DNC headquarters at the Watergate hotel — has long contended: that the break-in "was to find out what O'Brien had of a derogatory nature about us, not for us to get something on him or the Democrats.

As Cutler points out: "Significantly, the 'Greek Connection' theory of Watergate caused the most anxiety for the longest period of time for the Nixon administration, and the agencies that served it. The FBI, the CIA, the State Department and the Department of Justice all maintained files containing allegedly hostile information on Demetracopoulos — information that each agency eventually acknowledged was wrong."

Though we may never know exactly why the bungled burglary was ordered, Nixon's own comments during the Watergate cover-up are interesting to note.

"I think it's a matter of fact, though, that somebody said be sure to talk to Pappas because he's being very helpful on the, uh, Watergate thing," Nixon said.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Future writer moons Confederate ladies

In an article concerning sexual harassment in our high schools, the papers quoted a male student the other day as saying he had had his hindparts grabbed by female students.

The young man put it more bluntly than that, and was quoted actually using the "a" word. Because I'm too old ever to have hung out in a mall, didn't learn to read until I was almost 7 and have been out of high school 30 years, I'm still not comfortable using such coarse words in a family newspaper.

Grizzard

I don't even like them when they are shouted into my living room on Donahue.

So, if there are no objections, and keeping in mind they are even taking certain liberties with quotes at the New Yorker these days, I'll substitute the milder "b" word in its place.

The kid said female students grabbed his butt at school.

As a friend puts it, upon hearing of such incredible changes in the mores of our society, "'Help us and save us!' cried Ol' Lady Davis."

That sort of thing didn't go on when I was in high school, of course, and I can launch into a long harangue here about the declining morals of our youth and tie in Murphy Brown and MTV somehow, but I won't.

It wouldn't do any good, anyway. Each generation selects its own behavioral standards. Mine swapped chewing gum when we kissed. Our parents would have been shocked.

Instead, I think I'll simply use this opportunity as a requiem for my own butt, which went ungrabbed all the way through high school and, alas, for the three decades since.

Allow me to begin by saying even if females had grabbed boys' butts when I was in high school, they would have had a difficult time with mine.

I had plenty of hair when I was born but very little butt. Ever notice how some people's butts sort of jut out away from the rest of their body.

I heard a comedienne say she liked butts that jutted out so much you could balance a bottle of English Leather cologne on it.

Mine could star in Sylvester Stallone's new movie, "Cliffhanger." Do the words "sheer cliff" mean anything? No use grabbing if there's nothing to hold on to.

"What happened to your butt?" a female did ask me once.

"I was in a wreck, " I said.

"Took it right off there, didn't it?" she replied.

In high school friends and I drove by a Daughters of the Confederacy picnic one afternoon and I mooned the gathering.

"Help us and save us!" cried Ol' Lady Davis, who invited me to the picnic to try to fatten up what she thought was my face.

That's the bad news. Now, the worse news.

What butt I had I lost during my recent heart surgeries. (They kept cutting until they got it right.)

I first noticed it the other day when I finally had the nerve to stand in front of a mirror to see what's left of my body.

My chest looks like I finished fifth in an ax fight. I have no butt. It's gone. Outta here. Nada. Zippo butto.

I called my surgeon, "Why did you remove what was left of my butt?" I asked him.

"You noticed that?" he replied.

"Yeah, I noticed," I said. "A little butt is better than no butt at all."

"We didn't think you had enough to realize we had taken the rest away," he explained. "A patient in the next room needed another quarter inch on a thumb replacement, so we gave him your butt."

I suppose I can get by with no butt whatsoever. I can write away for Donahue transcripts and put them in the seat of my pants to keep my trousers up, for instance. Of course, if a female ever does try to grab my posterior all she'll still be getting is a handful of mostly nothing.

Russian Latvians deserve recognition

There's a telephone directory in my hotel room.

To people accustomed to freedom, that's expected. But to anyone who worked even for short bursts in the oppressive atmosphere of the Soviet Union, a telephone book is a symbol of freedom.

Safire

In the old days, unless you were an official or had a KGB contact, you could never get a list of numbers; the Soviets did not want people communicating.

How soon we take freedom for granted. Only a few years ago, Western journalists often had to use cut-outs to reach dissidents in the Baltics; at shabby Intourist hotels, hard-eyed security agents acted as doormen, denying entry to locals; passports were taken and "processed" overnight. You always felt you were being followed, tapped, bugged, watched, and used as an excuse to throw somebody in jail. The only air route out was via Moscow.

In these new days, instead of using a portable shortwave to link up to reality, you can turn on CNN in your room; downstairs, a Herald Tribune is on same-day sale; in restaurants, people no longer shy from strangers. From Riga, ringing with the sound of restoration, 85 flights a day take you to foreign cities, 70 of them westward.

Lest we forget, the breakup of the Soviet Union began in the Baltics. Because these three small countries had been traded to Stalin by Hitler, the U.S. never officially recognized the loss of their independence. When Gorbachev's Black Berets began cracking skulls of Lithuanian separatists, the world recoiled and Baltic independence advanced, loosening the bonds of empire elsewhere.

Latvians held an election last week, facing a stark choice. To the south, Lithuania had slid back into the hands of Communist apparatchiks, and the "go slow" attitude had stunted growth. To the north, Estonia was pressing ahead with political and economic reform, with prosperity returning.

The winner was the Latvian Way, centrists bankrolled by a network of youngish entrepreneurs called Club 21. The idealistic dissenters I met a few years ago did not do well at the polls, but neither did the ultranationalists or communostalgics. Politicians exposed each other's financial corruption, all duly reported in a free press led by Diena, "the Day"; real-life politics led to a 90 percent turnout of eligible voters.

But eligibility is the issue. Here in microcosm is a problem faced by many of the freed republics: What's to be done with the resident Russians?

Stalin deported one third of the prewar population of Latvia, colonized the strategic country with hundreds of thousands of Russians, suppressed Latvian language and culture, and otherwise pioneered in what is now called ethnic cleansing. The Latvians want their country back, but half the residents are now Russians, Ukrainians, Jews and others of different ethnic backgrounds. To reassert its nationhood, Latvia denies citizenship to about half of those it calls "colonists."

The citizenship policy seeks to compensate past unfairness with present unfairness. Boris Yeltsin denounces the diminution of Russian influence as a violation of human rights, using it as a pretext for keeping 25,000 Russian troops manning phased-array radars, Big Ear surveillance of Scandinavia and naval facilities on Latvian soil in violation of that nation's sovereignty.

Ominously, Moscow academicians talk of saving the Blizhnee Zarubyozhe, the Russian "near-abroads," not only in Latvia but in Ukraine and other republics. Georgs Andrejevs, Latvia's foreign minister, sees that Russian threat of imperial re-integration in the name of human rights as a supreme irony.

Let's honor Olympic helpers

I would like to recognize the Midland policemen, firemen, paramedics and all others who participated in the recent Special Olympics Torch Run. These people gave of their time and energy to help a worthy cause.

Midland is very fortunate to have dedicated, unselfish professionals who are willing to go an extra mile to help others. These people came home with sore feet, sore bodies and a big heart. The joy and pride they experienced when they encountered our special friends as they participated was something words cannot describe.

Thank you men and women of our community for helping make the Special Olympics a memorable fun-filled event for all involved, especially our "special" people. Your help and support helped make this a tremendous success.

I'm sorry that our local newspaper didn't cover this most important event. I didn't see any coverage about it at all. We need to support our community's helpers. We need to recognize the good things they do for others.

Keep up the good work guys. There are lots of people who appreciate your dedication and who stand behind you.

Sheriff should re-examine jail

Power and control, at what cost?

This question arises when one contemplates the recent actions of Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter in relation to the proposed regional jail. At present his staunch advocacy that he control the regional jail if built in Midland County has cost this community the benefit of 125 jail staffing jobs and not to mention the construction revenues of the facility and so on.

While Sheriff Painter's apprehension to expose this county's liability is admirable, the dialogue at the recent commissioner's court meeting indicates the exposure is minimal.

It is my belief that Sheriff Painter should reexamine and reconsider his position on the regional jail and he and other city and county officials initiate an effort to have the regional jail built in Midland County.

Regarding the June 10th editorial titled "Clinton should look at raising gasoline tax," I would have liked it better had the title and subject matter been "Clinton should look at government waste before raising taxes."

Ukrainian Parliament balks at president

As labor unrest continued to spread through eastern Ukraine, Kravchuk called for elections.

MOSCOW (NYT) — The Ukrainian Parliament balked Tuesday at President Leonid M. Kravchuk's latest attempt to solve the country's growing economic and political crisis, and gave the government two days to come up with an emergency economic recovery plan.

As labor unrest continued to spread through eastern Ukraine, Kravchuk called for parliamentary elections this winter, along with a referendum on his leadership. But that proposal was voted down by Parliament on a vote of 331-138, according to the news agency Interfax.

Prime Minister Leonid Kuchma, who has repeatedly pressed Parliament for extra powers to stop runaway inflation and push ahead with economic reform, warned Tuesday that unless his request was granted, the country could slide into dictatorship within a month.

Kuchma urged striking miners and industrial workers in the Donbas, a region where a majority of the population is ethnically Russian, to go back to work or else face the prospect of starvation in a few days.

The strikes in the Donbas began after Ukraine was hit with another round of price rises, set off after Russia, its main supplier of gas and oil, increased energy prices. In the first quarter of this year, inflation in Ukraine was 314 percent, more than three times the rate in neighboring Russia.

In Parliament on Tuesday, Kuchma accused the miners of staging a "political" strike, and blamed Russia for bringing the Ukrainian economy to a crisis point.

"Russia's position toward Ukraine could hardly be called friendly and normal today," Kuchma said, according to Interfax. "We are being robbed because of our weakness."

As the week-long strikes picked up support, some of its leaders have been pressing for greater autonomy for the Donbas, as well as a referendum on the the future of the Kiev government and its economic policies. This demand was rejected in Parliament on Tuesday by Ukrainian nationalists, who view an autonomous Donbas as "a violation of the territorial integrity of Ukraine."

Ukraine's quickening political and economic crisis comes at a time when Parliament is scheduled to consider ratification of the first Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union, which the Ukrainian leadership committed itself to a year ago.

Parliament's continued delay in voting on the 1991 treaty, as well as in a related vote to join the treaty to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons as a non-nuclear power, has caused anxieties in the West, raising the specter of two nuclear powers — Russia and Ukraine — rising from the ruins of the Soviet Union.

Kuchma, still fighting to get the emergency powers he says he needs to put economic reforms on track, said Kravchuk's proposed national referendum should focus on Ukraine's economic as well as political future.

"There should be a referendum with just one question — what kind of society are we building," Kuchma said in a fiery speech. He said the powers he was seeking last month — which would have given him control of the Ukrainian Central Bank, among other things — were "ordinary, intended for a relatively soft way out of the crisis."

Now, he said, he needs real emergency powers to amend laws and dismiss recalcitrant officials. "If such powers are denied today, dictatorship will be unavoidable in a month," he said.

Problems plague lake project

■ Lubbock must pay $8.89 million to oilmen who would lose drilling access because of lake.

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press writer

LUBBOCK — A battle over West Texas' two most precious commodities is being fought in the oil field known as the future site of Lake Alan Henry.

City officials and the Brazos River Authority already have spent $40 million buying land and building a dam near Justiceburg, about 60 miles southeast of Lubbock. The lake envisioned since the late 1960s would bolster Lubbock's water supply and provide a recreational oasis.

But plans have hit what could prove a major hitch.

In April, a condemnation hearing in Garza County ordered the city to pay $8.89 million to two oilmen who would lose drilling access once the lake is filled.

If that order sets a standard, Lubbock could face an estimated $25 million price tag for the remaining mineral rights under the lake.

City leaders, with John T. Montford Dam 90 percent completed, say the lake budget is dry. Only about half of the mineral rights have been purchased.

"It's a construction project started without all the title work tied down," said Mayor David Langston. "As an attorney I don't understand that."

Langston, who was elected last year, has ordered a study of why officials decided to start buying the mineral rights in 1989.

Langston and two council members met Monday night in Post with about 20 of the principal mineral rights owners. It was the first such face-to-face negotiation, they said.

Earlier Monday, mineral rights owner Earl Chapman said communications problems have plagued the entire project. Chapman is one of the two oil producers involved in the $8.89 million case that the city of Lub-

Bee quarantine

COLLEGE STATION Austin County has been added to a quarantine restricting the movement of commercial bee operations following the detection of Africanized honey bees there. The addition makes 54 Texas counties quarantined, said John Fick, chief of the Texas Apiary Inspection Service, a unit of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station. An Africanized honey bee swarm was found in a U.S. Department of Agriculture trap about five miles south of Sealy on Texas Highway 36, Fick said. A sample from the trap was confirmed as Africanized Monday by the USDA-Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service in Harlingen. The quarantine allows beekeepers to move bee hives within but not out of the zone in an effort to prevent assisting the spread. Africanized honey bees look just like regular domestic honey bees but are more defensive in protecting their hives. Other counties in the quarantine are: Aransas, Atascosa, Bandera, Bastrop, Bee, Bexar, Brewster, Brooks, Caldwell, Calhoun, Cameron, Comal, Crane, Dimmit, Duval, Edwards, Fayette, Frio, Goliad, Guadalupe, Hays, Hidalgo, Jim Hogg, Jim Wells, Karnes, Kenedy, Kerr, Kinney, Kleberg, La Salle, Live Oak, Maverick, Matagorda, McMullen, Medina, Nueces, Pecos, Presidio, Real, Refugio, San Patricio, Starr, Terrell, Travis, Uvalde, Val Verde, Victoria, Webb, Willacy, Williamson, Wilson, Zapata and Zavala.

Foundation announces 10 grants

■ Permian Basin Area Foundation also announces two board appointments.

Staff report

The Permian Basin Area Foundation announced its spring grant recipients and two new board members Tuesday.

Ten area non-profit organizations received grants from the foundation, which awards the grants twice a year.

"These grants recognize two sets of heroes," said Joanie Holt, Foundation Grants Committee chairman, in a press release issued Tuesday.

"First, the organizations providing services and projects are enhancing the quality of life for Permian Basin area residents. They are doing this by raising the consciousness of challenges to daily lives, by providing cultural opportunities for residents and by fulfilling dreams for people.

"The other set of heroes are the individuals, families and friends who have made gifts to the Permian Basin Area Foundation," she continued. "Their support through the creation of unrestricted, field of interest, or advised funds are what make these grants possible. All of us who reside here owe them a debt of gratitude for establishing permanent legacies to meet our area's challenges and needs."

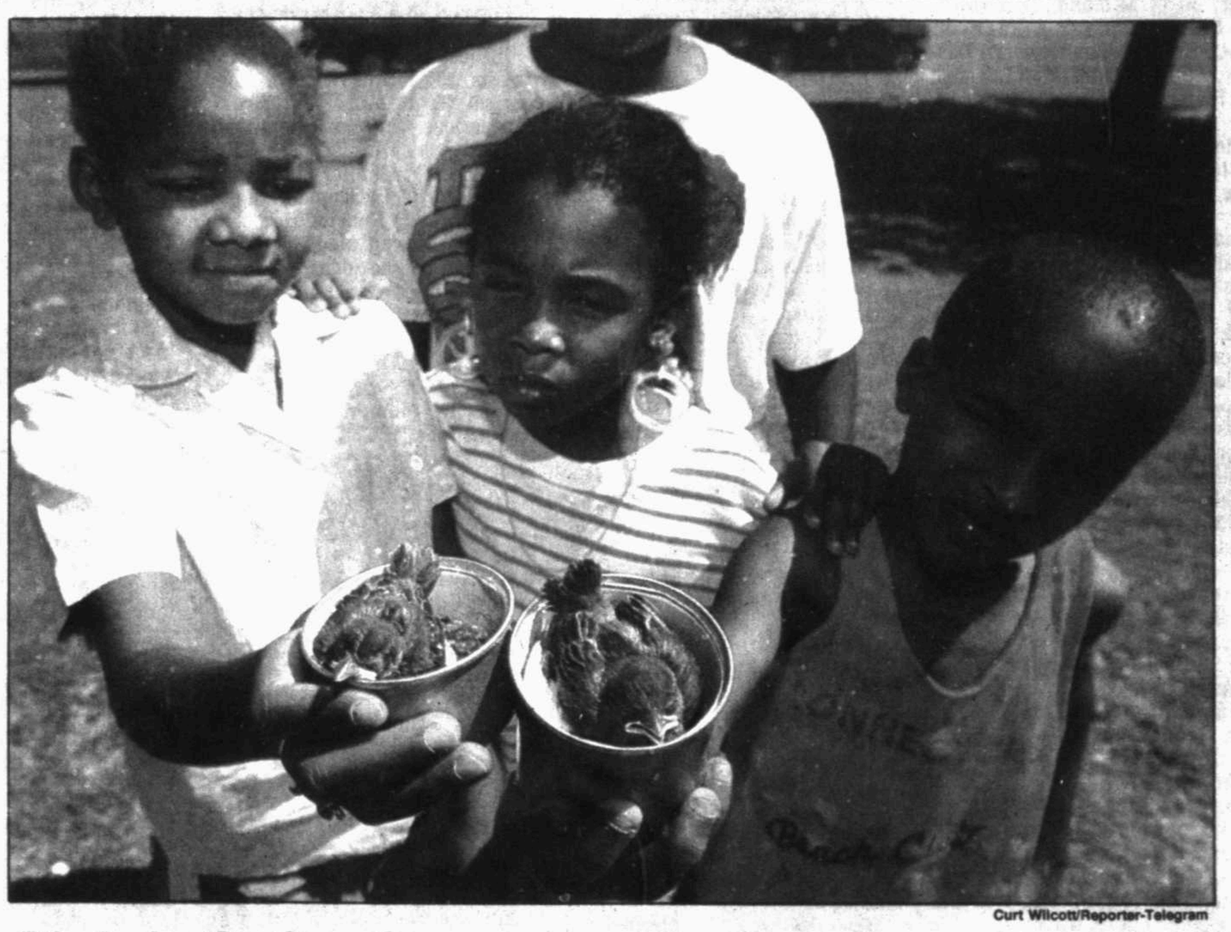

The following organizations received grants:

■ Attention Deficit Disorder Association of Parents and Teachers (ADDAPT) — $1,000 to fund an in-service workshop for educators to increase awareness and understanding of students with attention deficit disorder and to offer techniques in classroom management skills.

■ Bynum School — $3,000 to fund general purposes expenses and the horticulturally based vocational training and basic and life skills program for developmentally disabled children.

■ Citywide Community Services — $1,500 to provide funding for yard work for indigent and disabled senior citizens.

LHS falls short in Texaco championship

Staff report

HOUSTON — The Lee High School academic team from Midland competed fiercely in the Texaco Star National Academic Championship, recently, but fell short in their quest for the national title and $75,000 in scholarships.

After three grueling matches, the team was not one of the 28 teams to qualify for the second round of competion.

The LHS team, however, was one of the top 84 teams from around the country to qualify for the national competition held at Houston's Rice University.

Members of the team, coached by LHS teacher David Fly, were Anu Agrawal, Thomas Fleming, Trey Morris, John Sullivan, Rachael McPhearson and May Wimmer.

In Houston, the students met more than 500 other "academic athletes" from across the United States and the U.S. Virgin Islands. They took a break from the competition to cheer on the Houston Astros and to visit the IMAX theater.

A California high school that features surfing in its curriculum came from behind to win a final battle of wits with a Texas high school to capture a championship.

Torrey Pines High School, north of San Diego, won the Texaco Star National Academic Championship and $50,000 in scholarships on Friday, edging Temple High School.

Weeks of heavy cramming with piles of note cards helped 18-year-old seniors Foote, James Farrell, Ben Higgins and Team Captain Jamie Knox answer an assortment of questions covering math, art, music, science, geography and pop culture.

Texaco awarded $25,000 in scholarships to the second place team from Temple: senior David Kneip, 18; senior Michael Murray, 18; junior Drew Williams, 16; sophomore Jennifer Hopens, 16; and sophomore alternate Dwayne Bandy, 17.

One-man drug prosecution unit receives funding

■ Wayne Frost's office will continue to operate with $100,000 federal grant.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Midland's one-man drug prosecution unit has once again received more than $100,000 in grant funding to keep the office operating under the direction of the award-winning assistant district attorney.

Wayne Frost, chief narcotics prosecutor for the Midland County District Attorney's Office, recently announced the grant-funding of the office for another year after returning from a drug prosecutors' seminar in which he won top honors for his performance.

District Attorney Al Schorre praised Frost's efforts and called the unit "a tremendous asset allowing us to maintain services that we would have difficulty funding otherwise."

The federally funded grant provides funds on a yearly basis with Midland County's narcotics prosecutor's office awarded the money since 1991.

Schorre said he searched for other ways to fund the drug prosecution unit, but county funding has been tight and the money was simply not there.

He said the need for the office arose as drug-related crimes in the county began to escalate resulting in the creation of the drug unit in 1991. Frost took the top spot just last year.

Frost said the total amount approved for the Former deputy of Martin sues for $4 million

■ James Epley's lawsuit alleges he was 'wrongfully terminated.'

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

A former Martin County deputy has filed a $4 million lawsuit against the county and the sheriff alleging that he was "wrongfully terminated" earlier this year.

The lawsuit filed by James Epley indicates that he was terminated on March 18 for disclosing violations by the county and Sheriff Mike Welling and that he commented on matters of public concern.

Epley claims he was protected by the Texas Whistleblowers Act as well as the First and 14th amendments.

The former deputy claims that he requested a post-termination hearing with both the sheriff and the county commissioners' court, but was denied both the opportunity and relief sought. He is alleging that he was dismissed without due process.

Epley has requested a total of $4 million in damages as well as reinstatement.

Welling was unavailable for comment Monday afternoon. James McGilvray, county attorney for Martin County, declined to comment on the case indicating that he had not been served with a copy of the lawsuit.

Tragic day in Dallas in '63 changed Connally's life

By Kaye Northcott
N.Y. Times News Service

John Connally was a star player in some of the most riveting political dramas of the century.

Next to his friend and ally Lyndon Johnson, he was for several decades the most politically influential Texan — in state and out.

A strikingly handsome man who aged gracefully with a mane of white locks, Connally once told an interviewer he should be portrayed on the silver screen by John Wayne or Laurence Olivier.

His life had enough hairpin turns to warrant a screenplay. As former Democratic National Chairman John White put it: "He had some tough breaks. Life levels out. He had some good luck and he had some bad luck."

Biographers have speculated that Connally, "Landslide Lyndon's" campaign manager in the 1948 U.S. Senate race, knew who stuffed the Jim Wells County ballot box with enough names gleaned from a local cemetery to give Johnson an 87-vote victory.

On Nov. 22, 1963, Connally survived the assassin's bullets that snuffed the life of young President John F. Kennedy and catapulted Vice President Johnson to the presidency.

Biographer James Reston Jr. theorized that Lee Harvey Oswald was really after Connally. The defector from Fort Worth had written to Connally, who was secretary of the Navy in 1961. Oswald petitioned Connally to allow him to keep his "honorable discharge" status with the U.S. Marine Corps. When Oswald moved to the then-Soviet Union his status had been downgraded to "undesirable." Connally took no action.

Connally never made much of his bureaucratic link to Oswald.

Close associates said the tragedy in Dallas made Connally a more serious man. It also made him a political icon in Texas.

The Democratic governor carried his bullet-shattered wrist in an elegant silk sling, and Texans said the so-called "silver bullet" made him unbeatable at the polls.

White said Connally's crowning achievement as governor was upgrading the state's higher education system. He convinced business leaders that, to improve Texas' economic outlook, the state must first improve its educational opportunities. He also encouraged the Texas tourist industry.

Texas voters refused to go along with his biggest development project, the multibillion-dollar Texas Water Plan. It would have pumped 13 million acre-feet of water a year from the Mississippi River 800 miles into Texas, via concrete ditches 300 feet wide and 40 feet deep. Environmentalists called it "ecological Russian roulette."

He was the first governor to veto a war-on-poverty program. He opposed Medicare and the desegregation of public accommodations section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Connally retired in 1969 after three two-year terms as governor. His supporters commissioned an elegant, hard-backed book with tissue inlays and a gold seal to commemorate his years in office.

In Texas politics, Connally led the Democratic conservative wing, doing battle with the liberals over control of the one-party state throughout the '50s and '60s. It was a time when the conservative Democrats thought nothing of voting Democratic in the spring primary and then for a Republican president in the fall.

Connally's influence waned after his handpicked gubernatorial successor, Eugene Locke ("Should be Gov-er-nor of Texas," the jingle went) lost to another conservative, Preston Smith, in 1968.

In 1972, Connally's second chosen political successor, then Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes, lost the governorship to conservative Democrat Dolph Briscoe.

The next year, Connally officially joined the Republican Party, a harbinger that Texas would soon become a two-party state.

The emergence of a Texas Republican Party as an option for conservatives eventually allowed the liberal wing of the Democrats to win more statewide offices.

Connally's change of parties angered some Democrats, and longtime Texas Republicans did not rush to embrace Connally as one of their own.

With a ringing endorsement from House Speaker Sam Rayburn, Kennedy had appointed Connally as Navy secretary in 1961. (Connally returned home in 1962 to successfully run for governor.)

Evangelist Billy Graham had told Richard Nixon he should get to know the dashing Texan. In 1970, President Nixon appointed Connally as secretary of the Treasury, where he instituted deeply controversial wage and price controls and successfully campaigned for federal bailouts for Lockheed Aircraft and the Penn Central Railroad.

Nixon valued Connally's advice, but perhaps not enough. Connally was the one who said Nixon should burn the Watergate tapes.

Nixon said that, beside himself and Nelson Rockefeller, Connally was the only other person who understood the role and use of U.S. power in the world.

Texas Democrats to this day debate whether Connally could have won the presidency as a Democrat. Instead he ran as a Republican in 1980. He received great support from the corporate board rooms but he was unable to light a political spark with the public like he once had in Texas.

It didn't help any that Connally had undergone a highly publicized bribery trial in 1975. Then-U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan testified in his behalf and he was found innocent of accepting $10,000 from an associate who worked for a confederation of milk producers.

After he left the Nixon administration, Connally again turned to business. He went to work for the prestigious Houston law firm of Vinson and Elkins, where his job was to attract clients.

In the 1980s Connally teamed up with Ben Barnes to make a fortune in the go-go real estate boom. Instead, they went bust.

FROST: Prosecutor wins 'Top Gun' award

grant for the 1993-'94 year is $109,822; $82,366 of that coming from federal funds with the county matching $27,456.

But, Frost likes to show just how successful the program has been and where the funding is going.

"Statistics from last year indicate we had total Texas Department of Corrections sentences of 1,355 years. On probation cases we had 309 years total and for the year we had about 450 felony drug cases that were referred to our unit," Frost said.

"To put that in perspective, when I started with the district attorney's office back in 1984, an average felony case load was 75 cases a year, now it's about 125 cases to dispose of, so you can see it's way over what the average case load would be."

"Since the initial year of the grant ... we've had about 60 percent more drug cases referred to it than its initial year. As far as performance, we have increased our performance more than 100 percent. By performance I mean cases disposed of — that means convictions," the prosecutor said.

Frost said the 450 cases he handled last year totalled about 30 percent of the 1,200 felony cases disposed of last year by the district attorney's office.

He said prior to the grant funding, no one prosecutor was assigned exclusively to drug cases. Frost said with the creation of his position the other assistant district attorneys are freed from those 450 cases to prosecute other crimes.

"You can see the benefit right there. Between six or seven other prosecutors they had to divide up another 450 cases on top of their 125 or so they already had that they already clear each year. It would cause even more of a bottleneck in the justice system than we have right now. So it has been beneficial and I would like to see it continue as long as necessary," Frost said.

"Over our initial grant year we have gone way above and beyond ... for $24,000 more the taxpayers are getting 100 percent more performance. If I were sitting there paying taxes and wondering where my tax dollars were going, that is something I would like to see," Frost said.

Frost explained the funding from the grant pays for his salary, the secretary's salary, office rent as well as purchasing office furniture and equipment.

"Without the money we just couldn't do what we're doing. First of all, we wouldn't have the space in the courthouse. Even though it's been remodeled on a couple of the floors, there is not enough office space to house the people who are over here in this rented office space," Frost said.

"As long as the funding is there we are able to function," he said.

Frost credited the support staff and the district attorney with assisting in his success.

The narcotics prosecutor hesitated to announce his achievement of winning the first-ever awarded Top Gun drug prosecutor in the state of Texas.

Frost attended the Top Gun Seminar, the first of its kind for drug prosecutors in Texas, sponsored by the Texas District Attorneys' Association.

The prosecutor was selected from 70 investigators and prosecutors attending the seminar of trial-oriented classes.

But, the award is not his only accomplishment.

"For a given 12-month period, I am the only prosecutor to break 1,000 years for penitentiary sentences. I was kind of happy about that," Frost said humbly.

"We are working hard and hanging in there," Frost said. "We have a big job to do ... there is no answer to drugs, but we're making a dent."

LAKE: Lubbock appeals mineral rights ruling

bock is appealing.

"The next thing we know the city says, 'Well we don't have any money so we're going to go through another process,'" Chapman said. "It appears that the wheels of justice will finally grind down and at some point in time they will either take the property by condemnation or they will pay whatever the last thing we go through tells them to pay."

Alan Henry, former mayor and namesake of the lake, said city leaders during the mid-1980s thought the mineral rights owners couid drill from platforms.

"We relied on the very best engineering available, and the best legal advice available," Henry said.

Langston, however, said platform drilling has become too expensive and risks the environment.

Roy Roberts, general manager of the Brazos River Authority in Waco, said the water authority began buying the mineral rights after contracting to build and operate Montford Dam. Budgeting for "conflict resolution" was based on an engineer's estimate that mineral rights would cost $1 million to acquire, he said.

It's the city's decision whether more bonds should be issued to pay for the mineral rights, Roberts said.

Another $100 million remains earmarked to complete the dam and build a water treatment plant and a pipeline to Lubbock.

Langston said only a remote possibility exists that Lubbock will abandon a project other cities could use for drinking water, too.

"We are moving ahead as quickly as possible," the mayor said. But "what you don't want to do is start filling up the lake and then get hit with a bunch of lawsuits."

The State in brief

■ Land board OKs minefield training

AUSTIN — The Texas School Land Board has approved an easement to allow the U.S. Navy to conduct minefield training in the Gulf of Mexico near Corpus Christi.

The easement was granted Tuesday to the Port of Corpus Christi. It would permit Naval Station Ingleside to establish a mine warfare training facility at the base.

The board's action provides two 800-acre tracts in the Gulf in Kleberg County, about 10.3 miles offshore, said Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who chairs the board.

The term of the lease is for three years, and Mauro said officials expect it will be converted to a longer term once the Navy formally selects Ingleside for its mine facility.

All mineral and leasing rights will be reserved for the state.

Mauro said the tracts are in areas where there are no active mineral leases and no historic drilling activity.

He said granting of the easement is designed to help state and local leaders head off possible Corpus Christi-area military base closings.

■ Police: 3 deaths are murders, suicide

WHITE OAK — Police say the deaths of three family members apparently was a double murder-suicide.

The Longview Police Department's SWAT team on Monday entered a home in White Oak and found the bodies of James Matthew Clark, 52, his wife, Betty, and their son, Aaron. The ages of the woman and son weren't available.

They appeared to have been shot with a .30-caliber semiautomatic pistol, said White Oak Police Chief Peyton Hass.

Hass said investigators believe Betty Clark and her son were killed about 6 a.m. Monday after she told her husband of her plans to leave him.

Clark talked by telephone at 1:25 p.m. Monday with another son, Denzel Clark, of Longview, who told investigators that his father told him he had killed his wife and younger son, Hass said.

■ Woman dies after falling down steps

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga. — The mother of a Georgia College graduate died of a brain injury after falling at the school's weekend commencement, Baldwin County Coroner Wayne Brooks said.

Phuong Nguyen, 58, died Sunday at the Medical Center of Central Georgia in nearby Macon. Brooks said the cause of death was bruises and bleeding inside her head.

Mrs. Nguyen was visiting Milledgeville to watch her daughter, Van Nguyen, graduate on Saturday. After the ceremony, she slipped and fell down two steps, hitting her head on the floor, Brooks said.

College spokeswoman Binky Strickland said Mrs. Nguyen had been living in the Houston, Texas, area with another daughter.

Ralph Hemphill, the school's vice president and dean of faculties, said an investigation found the accident was unpreventable.

■ Fort Bliss general heads for Pentagon

FORT BLISS — The commander at Fort Bliss and the Air Defense Artillery Center has been tapped to become an assistant chief of staff at the Pentagon, the Army has announced.

Maj. Gen. John H. Little, the post's commander since November 1991, will become the assistant chief of staff for installation management, a position that will require him to conduct budget assessments and to study base closures and other matters.

"Here we do soldier things, but I'm going to Washington to be a bureaucrat," Little joked Monday.

■ Ex-state legislator Alan Atwood dies

EDINBURG — Alan C. Atwood, a farmer and teacher who served eight years in the Texas House of Representatives, is dead at 58.

Atwood, a lifelong resident of Edinburg, died Monday of respiratory failure after a long illness, said his wife, Marcia.

Atwood, a Democrat, served as a state representative between 1965 and 1972. He exited politics to work on farms in South Texas and Mexico, Mrs. Atwood said.

Servics are set for Thursday in Edinburg.

Cable company's scrambling is inadequate, viewers say

SAN ANGELO (AP) — About 500 people complained to the City Council Tuesday that a cable company isn't adequately scrambling a new adult channel.

The council voted to investigate filing criminal charges against Marcus Cable. Council members also asked the Dallas-based company to block the pay-per-view Spice Channel until the end of the investigation.

Attorney Allen Price and other protestors say the channel presents adult pornography and "perverted sexual talk" they don't want on their televisions.

"All of the audio comes through very clearly," Price said. "The visual is poorly scrambled."

Price said Marcus Cable potentially has committed a Class C misdemeanor by intentionally or knowingly displaying obscene material and being reckless about whether a person is present who will be offended or alarmed by the display.

Another statute possibly violated, he said, is one outlawing distribution or exhibition of material harmful to a minor.

Rachel Rybarczyk, marketing and customer services manager for Marcus Cable, said the Spice Channel is shown only on weekends from 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. She said the company stepped up its scrambling about three weeks ago.

"Customers who do not want it coming into their homes can lock it out free of charge," she said.

Marcus Cable has not broken any laws, Ms. Rybarczyk said.

Governor signs birth defects registry bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Poignant stories accompanied bills Gov. Ann Richards signed into law Tuesday to create a birth defects registry and make it easier for small businesses to provide health insurance to employees.

The birth defects registry's backers include Anne Andis of Houston, who showed a photograph of her daughter, Emma. The baby lived five days after being born with anencephaly, a condition in which all or part of the brain is missing.

Richards said the registry is a response to the "puzzling medical tragedy" of babies being born with such defects along the Texas-Mexico border and near Houston.

"Medical authorities lost valuable time sifting through boxes and boxes of files to detect a pattern and then to evaluate possible causes, and this bill sets up a mechanism so we can quickly detect patterns of birth defects," she said.

The measure provides for $750,000 to establish the registry and gives the Texas Department of Health authority to gather information from other state agencies, medical professionals and health care facilities to monitor birth defects.

The health agency will coordinate efforts with Mexico to develop a registry and conduct research along the border.

The insurance measure was called "one of the most important pieces of legislation that passed the last legislative session" by Richards.

She said that Rep. Mike Martin, D-Galveston, one of its sponsors, knew personally the need for the measure because "he and his family . . . watched as his brother lost his health insurance coverage because he suffered from Lou Gehrig's disease."

The new law will require insurance carriers that sell small group insurance in Texas to renew policies to all small employers, regardless of an employee's health condition. Beginning in September 1995, previously uninsured employers and their workers can't be denied coverage.

It allows small employers to choose from five types of insurance plans.

The measure also establishes purchasing cooperatives to allow small employers to buy insurance together at more affordable rates, and bans the exclusion of pre-existing medical conditions from coverage.

"This bill is going to make life better for millions of Texans," Richards said. She there are more than 360,000 small employers in Texas, and less than half can offer their workers health insurance coverage.

Richards also signed into law bills that:

■ Create an Alternative Fuels Council to finance activities supporting and encouraging the use of such clean-burning fuels as natural gas. The measure provides for up to $50 million in revenue bond financing to state agencies, schools and local governments to convert vehicles to alternative fuels.

■ Enforce regulation of social workers.

■ Allow for state scholarships to be awarded to train chiropractors in Texas. The measure provides no funding, but would provide the legal basis for a future appropriation.

Richards signs 'potty parity' law

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas women may spell "relief" A-N-N R-I-C-H-A-R-D-S, after the governor signed her name Tuesday to a new law requiring more women's restrooms in new or renovated stadiums and other facilities.

"On behalf of all women in the state of Texas, and all women who visit the state of Texas, and all of us sports fans who go into those stadiums with those long, long lines, what a pleasure this is," said Richards at a bill-signing ceremony with Denise Wells, the woman who inspired the measure.

Ms. Wells was arrested at a concert at The Summit in Houston in 1990 for using a men's restroom to avoid long waiting lines for the women's rooms.

She was charged with violating a city ordinance that prevents a person from entering a public restroom for the opposite sex, but was acquitted by a jury after testifying that she just couldn't wait in line any longer.

"You see what you started?" Richards asked Ms. Wells.

The governor called a sponsor of the "potty parity" bill, Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, "My hero."

"I thank you, and my two daughters thank you, and my three granddaughters thank you," Richards said.

The measure she signed into law will require certain buildings constructed after Jan. 1, 1994, or that undergo renovation of more than 50 percent of the entire facility on or after that date, to have two women's toilets for every man's toilet.

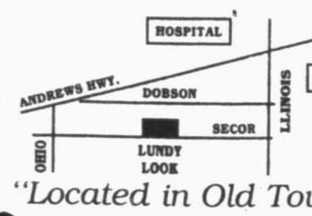

It applies to sports and entertainment arenas; stadiums, including those at colleges and high schools; community and convention halls; specialty event centers; and amusement facilities.

"I think it was long needed," said Ms. Wells, who was accompanied by her sister and lawyer, Valorie Davenport.

She said they were "a little disappointed" when the measure failed in a previous legislative session, "but we couldn't be more thrilled that they got it through this time."

Although the bill only applies to new buildings and large renovation projects, Ms. Wells said, "Maybe it sends a message to the places that aren't affected . . . that there's still a problem."

Customers linger a spell at backyard cannery

By Terry Kliewer
Associated Press writer

PEARLAND — You could call it "fast food." In a way, it is: You drive up. You give 'em your order. You pay. You drive away.

But don't try that approach when you drop by the Jamison's Home Cannery east of here on your way to Friendswood.

Instead, plan on getting out of the car, browsing awhile in the small salesroom, picking out a blueberry pie or a jar of mayhaw jelly (or two or three), then lingering a spell to chat with Frances Jamison.

Next to cooking and canning, talking is what Mrs. Jamison likes best. Her customers seldom get away without a few minutes of conversation about the weather or local politics or the prospects for her fig crop this year.

By the way, that crop is looking good.

She steers a visitor out toward her orchard 20 yards up the front drive. "With these magnolia figs," she explains, "they say if the bud is the size of a matchhead on May 5, you can pick and eat 'em by July 4."

The shrub-like fig trees squat in the tilled dirt of the orchard and, frankly, don't look like much. "But give it a few more weeks, and they'll be up over your head," she says.

Not far away, out closer to the highway, are the vegetables. And over yonder are the orange trees and the pears and the — well, listing everything that Mrs. Jamison and her grandson, Butch Griffin, grow on their 36-acre farm would take several paragraphs. Listing what they make from it all is a lot more fun.

There's mayhaw jelly, apricot preserves, strawberry preserves, blackberry jam, blueberry custard, rhubarb pie, fruitcake, chowchow, corn relish, pepper relish, pepper syrup, chocolate whiskey cake, pineapple upside-down cake, Mexican chocolate cake, buttermilk pie, pecan pie and fudge divinity cookies.

And, of course, there are the fig preserves.

That's what Mrs. Jamison started with a half-century ago when she launched her backyard cannery out here in what was then open countryside, criss-crossed by a few narrow shell roads and covered mostly with fig orchards and rice fields.

"The fig canneries were all over — Pearland, Angleton, Alvin. But when the war came, with no sugar and no help, they all closed down. We (she and her late husband, Bert) had 12 acres of figs on both sides of the road. We figured we can't let those figs go to waste, so I put some up and put a sign on the road, 'Fig Preserves for Sale.'"

She displayed her goods at local farmers' markets and peddled them to grocery stores and restaurants. Drumming up sales wasn't easy work, even for someone with Mrs. Jamison's gumption.

"Once I went down to Galveston in my cotton dress and apron for a call at the main office of a grocery chain, and the big-shot salesmen in their suits and ties just looked down their noses at me. But the woman who was the buyer came out and invited me in, and I made the sale."

The Jamisons kept at it, and business grew. By the early 1980s, they were shipping fruitcakes overseas and stocking jams and jellies in supermarkets all across Houston. They had 15 employees on the payroll.

But after the freeze of 1985 and, last year, the death of her husband, Mrs. Jamison began to slow her pace. She's still energetic at 72, but her grandson handles more of the day-to-day work.

"We used to never give a thought to how many hours we worked a day," she says. Nowadays, though, she devotes more of those hours to other things, like her great-grandchildren and her customers — and to fighting off the real estate speculators who turn up like clockwork.

Ex-death row inmate Daniel Garrett dies of natural causes

HOUSTON (AP) — Daniel Garrett, sentenced to die along with a Houston woman for a notorious double pickax slaying in Houston 10 years ago, has died of natural causes, authorities said Tuesday.

Garrett, 47, was moved from death row near Huntsville to the Harris County Jail in Houston last month to await a new trial after an appeals court earlier this year overturned his conviction.

Garrett had been in Lyndon B. Johnson Hospital in Houston for two days when he died about 11:15 p.m. Monday, sheriff's Capt. B.J. Borchers said.

Borchers said Garrett had refused treatment for what he described as an internal hemorrhage.

Death row inmates said recently that Garrett had been ill for some time and had lost a great deal of weight.

"He had a pre-existing condition when he came to us," Borchers said. "This was not a new illness."

In separate trials, Garrett and Karla Faye Tucker were sentenced to lethal injection for the June 13, 1983 pickax killings of Deborah Thornton and Jerry Lynn Dean.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in January overturned Garrett's capital murder conviction. The same court upheld the conviction of Ms. Tucker, one of only four women among 372 inmates on the Texas death row.

Ms. Thornton and Dean were both found dead in their bedroom. The weapon was imbedded in Ms. Thornton's chest when police found the bodies.

Police said Ms. Tucker and Garrett had gone to the home intending to rob the couple. At one time, Ms. Tucker bragged about the killings, saying she had received sexual gratification each time she swung the large ax.

The appeals court said Garrett was entitled to a new trial because a potential juror was improperly dismissed by prosecutors.

"I'm deeply saddened by the whole thing," attorney Ray Bass of Austin, who won the appeal for Garrett, said. "It's a real American tragedy.

"Here's a guy who got the death penalty for a murder I don't frankly believe he committed. He struggled for eight, nine years to get it reversed. And finally when he gets a bite at the apple again, this happens."

Dinner is a challange at Amarillo steakhouse

By Hollace Weiner
N.Y. Times News Service

Since 1963, more than 23,000 peeople have ordered the big meal, which is the equivalent of 23 Big Macs. Of the 21,347 men going for immortality in Amarillo, 3,977 have met the challenge. Of the 1,995 women ordering the slab of beef, 642 have succeeded.

AMARILLO — Forget the cholesterol.

Beef still reigns supreme at the Big Texan, the Panhandle steak ranch where patrons who devour a $39, 72-ounce steak within 60 minutes get the meal free.

They also get to add their name, weight and pithy comments to a giant list of record holders who put away not only 4½ pounds of prime beef but also side dishes of shrimp cocktail, baked potato, salad and a homemade roll.

I tried.

Why?

In an age of nouvelle cuisine, I couldn't resist an old-fashioned dare.

Associated Press writer Mike Cochran, a barrel-chested wordsmith and a heartier-looking eater than myself, suggested the menu selection before I departed for the Panhandle. As I ruminated over his words, my reaction changed from a chuckle to a challenge.

I entered the Big Texan for supper, read the rules, divulged my weight, signed a consent form and surrendered a credit card for the duration of the meal.

Then, during the 30 minutes it took a white-aproned chef to gas-grill a medium-rare, platter-sized portion of beef, I worked up an appetite.

The wait was the hardest part, affording time to reflect how passe the place really is.

Dimly lit, with a dark, pine-paneled interior, the mammoth restaurant is decorated in exaggerated Texana. Hunting trophies — like stuffed bear, bison and deer — clutter the walls. Light fixtures are fashioned from wooden wagon wheels. The building lumber, including the wraparound porch, was salvaged from World War II barracks.

The late Bob Lee from the Show-Me state of Missouri started the Big Texan in 1959 because Amarillo had no cowboy steakhouse that fit his stereotypical expectations. Nowdays, a billboard campaign promoting the Interstate 40 restaurant begins as far east as Lee's home state.

Despite trends toward fish and other low-cholesterol foods, the Big Texan thrives. Since 1963, more than 23,000 peeople have ordered the big meal, which is the equivalent of 23 Big Macs. Of the 21,347 men going for immortality in Amarillo, 3,977 have met the challenge. Of the 1,995 women ordering the slab of beef, 642 have succeeded.

One out of five makes it.

Journeyers from Egypt and Calgary, Canada, have beaten the gastronomic odds. A 90-year-old woman and a 13-year-old boy have scarfed the meal up.

Former Cincinatti Reds pitcher Frank Pastore, a 215-pounder, set a record in 1987, cleaning his plate in 9½ minutes.

I knew the stats.

Here came my slab of beef, a sizzling, 2½-inch thick steak adorned with seven toothpicks sporting mini Lone Star flags.

"That little lady's goin' to eat that big steak?" gasped a teenager twice my size and two tables over.

I ignored the comments and focused on my task, knowing that I had one less concern than most contenders for the Big Texan wall of fame. Whether I finished or not, this meal was going on my editor's tab.

Cost aside, I started cutting away.

To my dismay, the steak knife was dull. I requested another, and another, and another. Four pieces of cutlery in all, each in need of sharpening. Tender though the steak was, I got worn out sawing through it. The rules to which I'd agreed in advance forbade my cheering section of strangers from assisting.

For 40 minutes I worked at that platter, making dual use of the allotted time, quietly chewing while wielding the knife and fork.

Finally, I could chomp no more. The salad plate was clean. The shrimp cocktail dish, empty. The baked potato, vanished. The roll, gone without a crumb.

But of the legendary steak, 48 ounces remained. I'd eaten but a third.

"My dog could eat five of them," offered the teen-ager two tables away, who said he had a St. Bernard back home.

The rest of my steak left the Big Texan with him, in a doggie bag.

Mexico returns Harlingen squad car

HARLINGEN (AP) — A police patrol car, seized by Mexican customs agents because a Harlingen officer chased car thieves into Mexican territory, has been returned 20 days later.

"We put it back into the rotation right away," Robert Archer, assistant chief of Harlingen police, said Tuesday.

Mexican authorities returned the $20,000 car and the officer's service revolver Monday night after nearly three weeks of negotiations.

"Everything was returned in excellent condition," Archer said.

Officer John Parrish said he crossed the border by about 100 feet May 26 in pursuit of suspects in a stolen Suburban.

Parrish was stopped on the new free-trade bridge at Los Indios for about 30 minutes before being released, but Mexican officials seized his car and weapon.

Mexican authorities insisted on going through diplomatic channels, forcing the state departments of both nations to intervene in the case.

Guillermo Gonzalez, administrator of the Mexican customs office in Matamoros, has said that the matter involved the sovereignty of Mexican territory.

Richards say she'll soon name treasurer

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards says she will appoint a new state treasurer soon.

The governor will name a replacement for Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison, who on Monday was sworn into the U.S. Senate. Her appointee will serve until after the November 1994 elections.

"I haven't had a timetable. I'll do it fairly soon," Richards said Tuesday.

Richards, who served as treasurer from 1983 to 1991, said she expects her appointee to work with Comptroller John Sharp, who has recommended a number of efficiencies in the agency's operation.

But she stopped short of endorsing Sharp's proposal to abolish the job and turn the agency's functions over to his office.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — A heavy schedule for July loadings of North Sea Brent Blend crude added to oversupply concerns, sending the price of oil sharply lower in futures trading Tuesday.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery next month settled at $18.58 per barrel, down 31 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange. The July contract has fallen more than $1 per barrel since Kuwait refused to go along with new OPEC production limits Thursday.

Local purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $17 per barrel.

Traders were given another reason to expect lower prices on Tuesday after the July schedule for loadings of North Sea crude showed at least 55 full cargos, up from 33 in June.

Computer troubles at the Nymex delayed the opening of trading by more than an hour and caused a brief interuption in trading shortly after the start. Despite the delays, traders said volume was heavy.

After the market closed Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported that domestic crude oil inventories dropped 6.77 million barrels last week to 343.215 million, well below the level a year ago.

Supplies of distillates, which include heating oil, rose 1.764 million barrels to 103.540 million and refineries increased their production to 92.6 percent of capacity from 91.3 percent the week before.

Reservations should be made by calling 685-1234.

Dollar rallies

NEW YORK — The dollar jumped nearly two pfennigs Tuesday in a broad rally sparked by speculation that Germany's central bank would cut interest rates this week.

As waves of dollar-buying swept the New York market, the U.S. currency bounced off record lows against the Japanese yen reached earlier during Asian trading, where global currency activity begins.

In New York, the dollar fetched 105.75 yen, up from late Monday's 105.10 yen.

Dow declines

NEW YORK — Uncertainty about the economy's strength and the president's budget proposals helped push the market to a mixed finish Tuesday, despite a better-than-expected report on inflation.

US West selects network suppliers

■ Deal is part of system for consumers to order movies on demand, talk on video phones.

By Anthony Ramirez
N.Y. Times News Service

US West Inc., which announced in February a sweeping plan to create a system for consumers to order movies on demand and talk on video phones, said yesterday that it had decided which companies would supply equipment for the network.

US West said its suppliers would be American Telephone & Telegraph Co., DSC Communications Corp. and Scientific-Atlanta. It said detailed agreements were being negotiated on supplying the network, which will cost $500 million or more.

A separate telephone technology venture was announced Tuesday by GTE Corp., the nation's largest local telephone company. It said it would spend more than $240 million on 50 fiber optic networks in 12 states and would also buy equipment from AT&T.

The installation of the equipment, the basis for what GTE calls "the high-speed information network of the future," is scheduled to be completed in early 1994.

AT&T will be GTE's main supplier of what are known as synchronous optical network rings; Northern Telecom, an AT&T competitor, will be the other supplier. Such rings are capable of sending information at speeds up to 2.5 billion bits a second, or more than enough capacity for 58,000 people — a full Yankee Stadium — to talk to each other at once.

In the US West deal, the regional Bell company is trying to quickly build a high-capacity network with available technology, using a hybrid of digital telephone lines and analog coaxial cable lines, which are now used for cable television.

The phone lines will mostly carry conversation and the coaxial cable will carry television pictures.

Thomas A. Bystrzycki, executive vice president-mass markets of US West Communications, said using such a hybrid of technologies would allow US West to build a high-capacity network more cheaply and more quickly than it could by relying solely on fiber optic technology. US West Communications is the company's largest unit and supplies local phone service.

By 1995, US West expects construction of the network to accelerate to a point at which 500,000 customers a year can be added to the network. US West, based in Englewood, Colo., has 25 million phone customers.

Equipment from US West's three suppliers must be tested in a laboratory before it can be installed in US West's service area, which stretches over 14 states and is the largest of any regional Bell company.

Construction of the network, starting in Omaha, Neb., is scheduled to begin later this year, pending approval by the Federal Communications Commission.

AT&T and its much smaller competitor, DSC Communications of Plano, which also makes high-speed digital switches, will provide distribution and transmission equipment that uses high-capacity fiber optic lines. Copper lines, however, will still carry voice transmissions for the last few hundred feet into consumers' homes.

Nuke plant's outage jolts some Texas electric rates

Associated Press

Electric utilities in central and south Texas said Tuesday they are being forced to turn to more expensive fuels as the long summer heats up and the South Texas Project nuclear plant remains down.

Consumers in San Antonio and Austin are expected to pay about 8 percent more for the electricity this month. And Central Power and Light, which serves 44 South Texas counties, can't dismiss the possibility of power shortages later this summer.

"As we get toward the hotter months, it does make it a much more difficult situation. Because if we are in a situation where we have to purchase power from other utility companies, if they're at peak usage as well, that power may not be available later on," said Larry Jones, spokesman for Central Power and Light.

The South Texas Project is owned by the cities of Austin and San Antonio, Corpus Christi's Central Power and Light and Houston Lighting & Power, which manages the plant.

The Bay City plant this spring underwent an intensive evaluation by the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which also slapped it with hundreds of thousands of dollars in unrelated fines.

GTE plans to build 50 networks in 12 states

IRVING (AP) — GTE Telephone Operations is planning to build 50 advanced fiber-optic networks in 12 states for high-speed digital transmission.

The company said Tuesday that the advanced fiber-optic rings, known as Synchronous Optical Networks, will be installed this year and early next year. The first of GTE's rings already is in service in the Los Angeles area.

The company will invest $240 million in the initiative.

"These SONET rings will serve as the backbone for the high-speed information network of the future," Clark Barlow, senior vice president-operations for GTE Telephone Operations, said.

Barlow said the rings will offer customers "significant increases in efficiency and reliability."

Gallery Furniture owner Jim "Mattress Mac" McIngvale wears his trademark mattress during the Houston filming of a commercial for his business recently.

Hokey ads drive Gallery to top retail spot

By Susan Hightower

HOUSTON — B-E-E-E-D CHECK! B-E-E-E-D CHECK! It's time for a B-E-E-E-D CHECK!

The strident ad was one of the most grating to run on Houston's air waves last year. But it certainly wasn't without precedent.

For a decade, Gallery Furniture owner Jim "Mattress Mac" McIngvale has inundated local radio and TV with earsplitting ads backed by a martial jingle. McIngvale has donned a mattress, leapt through the air and waved fistfuls of cash, exhorting: "Gallery Furniture will save you MMMmmmoney!"

Even McIngvale admits the ads are pure schlock. But he has huckstered his way to $50 million in sales at his single store, leading by far the nation's top furniture stores in sales per square foot last year.

'I have a million of 'em tell me "I hate your ads," and they just kept writing the check.'
owner Jim McIngvale

McIngvale also has branched out into some even higher-profile areas, bankrolling the current Chuck Norris movie "Sidekicks" and a free Christmas feast for thousands of needy Houstonians last year.

"See, I'm hard to embarrass. People say, 'I hate your ads.' I have a million of 'em tell me that — 'I hate your ads' — and they just kept writing the check. So that's fine," McIngvale, 42, said.

According to the industry weekly "Furniture/Today," Gallery had 1992 sales per square foot of $1,833, nearly triple its nearest competitor among the top 100 furniture stores, which averaged $255 in sales per square foot. Gallery also turned its stock 25 times. In 1991, Gallery averaged sales of $1,633 per square foot and turned its inventory 20 times.

The National Home Furnishings Association selected McIngvale as the furniture industry's 1992 Retailer-of-the-Year, dubbing him an "industry innovator and humanitarian" and printing accolades from industry leaders and Houston Mayor Bob Lanier.

"There's no question, he's one of the movers and shakers in this area," said Sylvester Turner, who McIngvale supported in Houston's most recent mayoral race.

By Mella McEwen

Midland Park Mall is in the process of pouring 60 tons of sand into the JCPenney court.

The special sand should be in place by Friday, when Los Angeles sculptor Todd Vander will convert that 60 tons of sand into a dinosaur; he is expected to finish the sculpture June 26. The finished work will be on display at the mall through the end of the year.

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.
2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.
3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.
4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:

Sales of security systems may top $10 billion in '93

By Gregory J. Wilcox
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Two months ago, Wayne Hamm went shopping for peace of mind. He came home with a $2,000 security system.

Today, the Hamm residence in suburban Van Nuys is wired with motion detectors and contact switches. Any surreptitious attempt to get inside would be immediately flashed to employees at Western Pacific Monitoring in Van Nuys, who would then contact police.

"I've been in the neighborhood for 19 years, and it's changed," said Hamm, a printing company foreman who pays $22.50 a month for monitoring. "We have a lot more foot traffic, so we thought we'd be a little bit more secure with an (alarm) system."

Nationwide, about one home in six is protected by some kind of alarm system, said Linda Gimbel, spokeswoman for the National Burglar and Fire Alarm Association in Bethesda, Md., which represents about 3,800 installation companies nationwide.

Security system sales have been rising since 1985 and totaled nearly $9.5 billion in 1992. They are expected to top $10 billion this year, according to statistics compiled by STAT Resources Inc., a Boston-based market research firm.

"It's actually a good time to buy a system. The equipment is very good, it's hard to find bad hardware," said Albert Janjigian, a principal partner in STAT. "These systems have become very appealing because people are working very hard to build a safe haven for themselves."

While home security purchases have increased, residential burglaries have declined.

Statistics compiled by the U.S. Department of Justice show that there were 72,980 residential burglaries in Los Angeles County last year, down from 78,452 in 1991.

In neighboring Ventura County residential burglaries fell to 4,342 in 1992 from 4,709 in 1991. Statewide burglaries fell to 259,921 from 266,516.

Residential burglaries have been on a general decline since the early 1980s but at the same time incidents of violent crime like assaults have been increasing, said Tricia Clark, Justice Department crime statistician.

"It's the potential for violence that worries people the most," explains Joe Freeman, chief executive of J.P. Freeman & Co., a Newton, Conn.-based research and consulting firm that specializes in the home security industry.

In 1992, four times as many burglaries were committed as there were security systems installed, he said.

The alarm association says the average price of a security system has fallen 30 percent in the past five years.

"It's like (pocket) calculators," consultant Janjigian said.

Once-mighty Honda suddenly stumbles

By Doron P. Levin
N.Y. Times News Service

Decline has been so swift and unexpected that automotive rivals, particularly Detroit's Big Three, cannot quite figure why the tables have turned.

DETROIT — Honda. For years the name struck fear and awe into the U.S. auto industry.

But with a strong yen forcing up prices and with many Detroit models flourishing on the strength of improved quality and creative design, Honda Motor Co. is stumbling — still profitable, but not the powerhouse it once was.

From 1989 through last December, for example, Honda's Accord was the best-selling car in the United States, and the company's smaller Civic and sporty Prelude also sold well.

Honda was in the forefront of companies that were shifting production to the United States, reducing costs through efficient production techniques and exporting cars back to Japan. And Honda, with the Acura, was the first Japanese automaker to bring luxury cars to America.

But now sales of most Honda models are tepid. Only months after the Accord was barely edged out by Ford's Taurus for honors as the best-selling car of 1992, sales of Accords have plunged almost 35 percent, and this year the car is not even in the top five.

Even worse for Honda, the company, once so canny, was caught flat-footed in the fast-growing markets for mini-vans and four-wheel-drive sport-utility vehicles, which many Americans now buy as a substitute for cars. Honda, alone among the large automakers, offers no competition for Chrysler's successful mini-vans or Jeeps and their many competitors.

Few auto industry people believe Honda's wounds are mortal, and Honda itself says a wave of new designs will soon rekindle its growth and popularity. Indeed, Nobuhiko Kawamoto, Honda's president, has been exhorting staff members to set their sights high and surpass the much larger Nissan Motor Co. as the No. 2 Japanese automaker, after Toyota, by the end of the decade. That would require higher sales in the United States, Honda's largest market.

Indeed, Honda's decline has been so swift and unexpected that automotive rivals, particularly Detroit's Big Three, cannot quite figure why the tables have turned. Indeed, a stunned U.S. auto industry is not quite willing to believe the sky has opened to drop a house on the wicked witch.

Honda "didn't get dumb overnight," said Arthur C. Liebler, vice president for public relations at Chrysler Corp., adding, "They will be back."

Like Honda, Nissan and Toyota Motor Corp. have been hurt by the strong yen and the worldwide economic slump. The yen's value against the dollar has increased 15 percent in 1993 alone, forcing the Japanese to raise prices more sharply than overseas competitors to maintain profit margins.

Last week, six of Japan's nine big automakers reported their earnings for the last fiscal year, and collectively they were down 76 percent.

But the strong yen does not fully explain the problems at Honda, which was the only major Japanese automaker with declining sales in the United States in 1992. That forced Honda to cut back production at its plants in Marysville, Ohio, and in Japan.

And this year has been no better. In May, for instance, Honda's sales were flat, while Toyota sold 12 percent more cars and 15 percent more light trucks than in May 1992. Nissan sold 24 percent more cars and 48 percent more trucks.

Philips, L.A. company to market voice-powered VCR remotes

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — A 150-employee suburban Los Angeles firm is joining forces with a Dutch electronics giant to distribute voice-powered videocassette recorder remote controls nationwide, company officials said.

Voice Powered Technology International Inc. said Monday it has entered into an exclusive licensing and distribution agreement with Philips Industries, N.V.,a 345,600-employee international company that makes Magnavox televisions and videocassette recorders.

Voice Powered's device, known as VoiceLogic, allows users to program their VCRs by giving verbal commands through a remote control.

Terms of the deal were not discussed but it is expected to provide a significant boost in sales for Voice Powered, which until now had marketed its product through direct sales. Jerry Gutterman, chief financial officer, said it was unknown exactly how much sales would expand.

'90s lobbying rule: Show vulnerable

By Joel Brinkley
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Jan Bergwall, a waitress from a small town in Maryland, drove down to Washington this morning and, at a news conference, stood before a microphone to say she feared that she might lose her job if Congress approved President Clinton's proposal to reduce the tax deduction for business meals.

Lobbyists and other officers in the National Restaurant Association's Washington office recruited Mrs. Bergwall a few days ago. They put her in a commercial that is set in the restaurant where she works and is being televised in four states. Then they put on the news conference here this morning.

As Mrs. Bergwall spoke, the association's representatives stood in the back of the room, quiet and inconspicuous, obediently following the lobbying model of the 1990s. The chief rules are these: Move the debate out of Washington and place it in the mouths of the most vulnerable, sympathetic supposed victims you can find.

The restaurant association's officials are especially eager to follow those rules now because the tax provision they are trying to protect — keeping the deduction for business meals at 80 percent of a meal's cost instead of the 50 percent that Clinton proposes — is perceived to benefit the lobbyists themselves, among others.

"There is a perception, a sincere perception, that it's a fat-cat issue," said Stephen E. Elmont, the association's president. So the strategy is to present the proposed change as a problem for everyman. The victims would include "women, minorities, first-time job holders and people with disabilities" who work in restaurants, an association statement says.

Clinton proposed the change as part of his deficit reduction package and it was approved in the House with little debate. The administration says the provision would raise $16.3 billion over five years. So far it has not been a subject of much discussion among senators working to modify Clinton's plan, a Senate aide said Tuesday. But then the association's new campaign began only this morning.

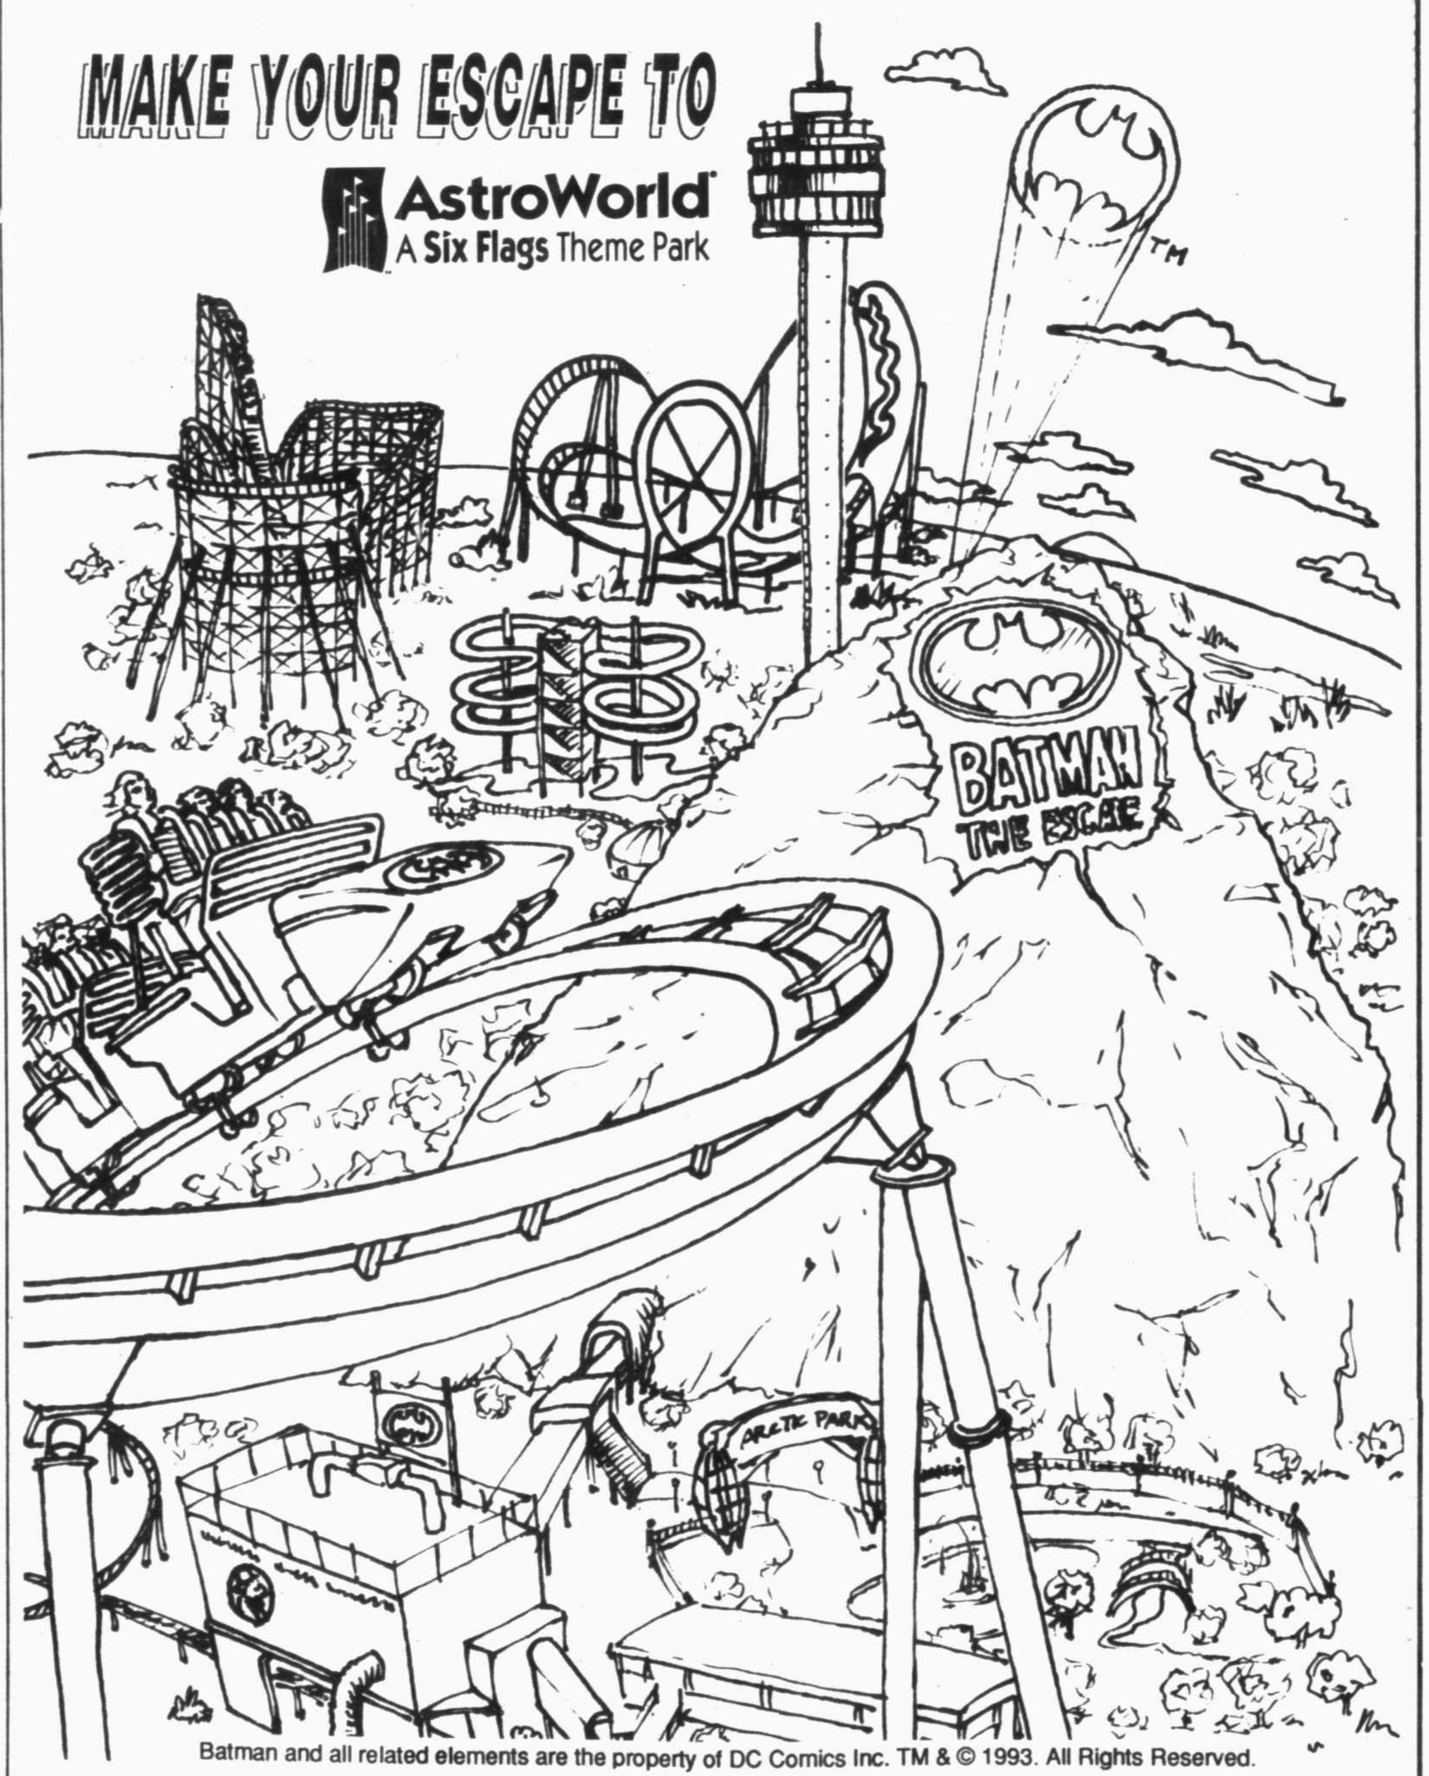

The association has put together dark projections of the provision's effect on the restaurant industry: The nation's restaurants would lose $3.8 billion a year and 165,000 restaurant workers would lose their jobs.

Some of the assumptions behind those projections are questionable, and the logic is tortured in spots. But even if the data were unassailable, the association would be reluctant to promote the numbers on its own.

"We've been hesitant to be proactive on this," Mr. Elmont said.

Nutrition hotline

Can garlic help prevent cancer? Which vegetables have the most vitamins? June is National Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Month, and with all the advice we're hearing about eating lots of fruits and vegetables each day, it's easy to wonder what health benefits are — or why we can't just take a few vitamins pills instead.

The place to get answers — from a registered dietitian — is just a toll-free phone call away. Dial 1-800-843-8114, and you'll reach the AICR Nutrition Hotline, a free public service of the American Institute for Cancer Research (AICR).

AICR is the only national organization to focus exclusively on diet, nutrition and cancer. Today, with increasing scientific evidence about diet's link with cancer and heart disease, the Hotline is an easy and reliable source for information about good nutrition.

Hotline dietitians research answers to callers' questions before phoning them back, using sources including federal agencies like the USDA and National Cancer Institute and AICR studies on diet and cancer. Hotline dietitians, however, cannot give medical advice.

So can vitamin pills replace vegetables and fruits? "No way," says AICR hotline dietitian Clara Schneider. "We need the nutrients and fiber we get from vegetables and fruits. They're vital to a nutritious diet that protects us from diseases, including cancer."

For nutrition questions, call 1-800-843-8114 Monday through Friday, and a AICR Hotline Dietitian will call you back with the answer. — American Institute for Cancer Research

Beyond RDA

Research indicates that taking vitamin supplements beyond the government's recommended daily allowances for a balanced diet may help stave off heart diseases and certain cancers, reports the June 7 Newsweek ($2.95). The magazine reports that its poll shows that 70 percent of Americans use vitamin supplements occasionally and 15 percent of daily users say they started in the past year. The magazine lists sources of vitamins and discusses benefits and risks of exceeding RDA.

The June American Health ($1.95) tells about home remedies — from oatmeal baths for skin disorders to Gatorade for diarrhea — that work. It also lists those, including putting butter on burns, to avoid.

Eye 'sunburn'

On summer days, eyes can get "sunburned," too — overexposure can cause pain, irritation and temporarily impaired vision.

Eye-care professionals say sunglasses that protect against ultraviolet radiation are essential. Look for:

- Lenses treated to filter out UV-A and UV-B rays.
- Close-fitting or wraparound sunglasses that don't allow unfiltered light to seep around the lenses.
- Lenses that are shatter-resistant.
- Polarized lenses to help reduce reflection and glare if you drive a lot or are active near the water.

Gizmos and gadgets

You can whiten and brighten your teeth at home with Hollywood Brite Cosmetic Smile Enhancer, a one-step whitening agent whose active ingredient is carbamide peroxide. Los Angeles dentists Dr. Jeffry Pfeifer and Dr. Kazuo Tomimatsu developed the product.

Users make moldings for their upper and lower teeth, then squeeze the whitening formula into the moldings and place inside the mouth. Recommended application: Three 30-minute sessions a day for two weeks. Hollywood Brite is $39.95. Information: 800-451-2981.

Abuse risk?

Swimming, diving precautions prudent

By Dr. Edwin Richter
Associated Press

Diving or swimming without taking a few prudent precautions can turn fun in the sun for water enthusiasts into a life-threatening venture.

For example, serious injury can result from diving into too-shallow or unfamiliar waters. Or alcoholic intake before swimming may cause enough impairment that can have deadly consequences.

The most serious diving accidents involve the head or the spine, and can possibly result in paralysis, permanent disability or death.

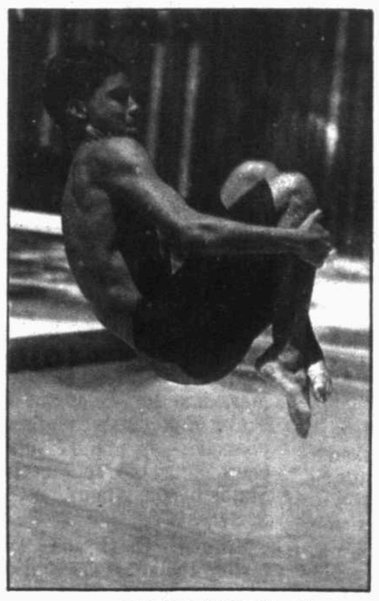

Young men in their teens and 20s tend to be most at risk of sustaining diving accidents because at these ages they may feel invincible and have a susceptibility to peer pressure that may cause them to take undue chances.

Pools and other bodies of water each present unique dangers. Oceans or lakes may have hidden water hazards, or can appear deeper than they are.

Pools may have accurate depth measurements — but a sharply sloping design that makes them dangerous for diving.

Here are some precautions to take before diving:

- Do not dive unless you have been trained by an appropriate water safety or instructional course.
- Obey all posted signs, whether indoors or outdoors, and dive only from a regulation diving board.
- If you have a history of neck problems or other significant physical difficulties, get a medical evaluation before you decide to take up diving.
- Do not drink alcohol before swimming or diving. Alcohol is the single biggest risk factor in water sport injuries. It impairs judgment, coordination, and motor skills, thus increasing the risk of injury.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

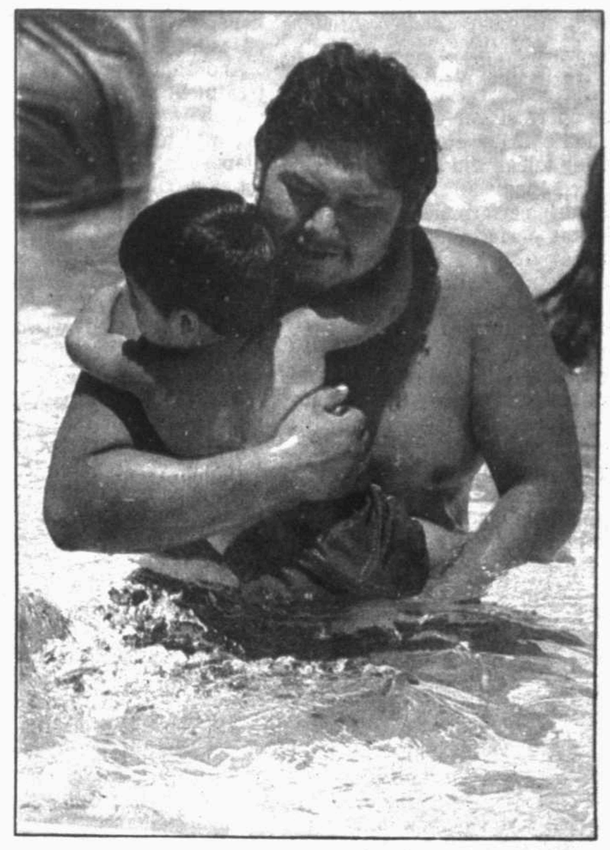

Making sure no one is too close to where he is going to dive, Elias Padilla, 17, curls himself into a cannonball during a Saturday afternoon at Doug Russell Pool.

Swimming is often recommended as an effective and safe form of exercise that works all major muscle groups while imposing relatively little stress on the back and legs. But even good swimmers should take precautions to prevent possible accidents:

- Since swimming is usually most popular in the late spring and during the summer, the activity level should be started slowly in the beginning of the season and should be gradually built up as it continues. For example, approach swimming as a sport by doing stretching exercises before the workout.
- Swimmers also should refrain from eating for one to two hours before being active. Exercising too soon after eating can cause a drop in blood sugar and may also divert some of the blood supply away from the muscles.
- If you are normally used to swimming in the controlled environment of a pool, be aware of currents, boats or other variables that may be present in natural bodies of water.
- Children should always be supervised in the water, even if they are wearing flotation devices.

Pool owners are responsible for the safety of their guests, who should never allow be allowed to swim or dive if they have been drinking alcohol. Owners should also make sure their pools have adequate lighting, and that ladders, steps and diving boards are in good condition. Home pools in areas that aren't always observed should be fenced in to prevent entry by children or pets.

Dr. Edwin Richter is a clinical instructor in the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine at New York University Medical Center's Rusk Institute.

During outings, food poisoning can be avoided

By Jennifer Stack
Associated Press

Barbeques and picnics are popular American warm weather rituals that usually mean full bellies and big smiles.

However, if you don't follow some simple food preparation and storage guidelines, some of our favorite foods like hamburgers and spare ribs can spawn bacteria and give you a case of food poisoning for dessert.

Fortunately, food poisoning can be prevented in most circumstances, provided that certain precautions are taken.

Food poisoning results from eating perishable foods, such as eggs, meats, fish and chicken that have an overgrowth of salmonella and other bacteria. Unlike pretzels, potato chips and other processed foods, animal foods often contain bacteria that can multiply within two hours at room temperature.

In large enough numbers, bacteria can cause illness. But with most foods, very cold or very hot temperatures will reduce the growth of bacteria or kill it.

The prevention of food spoilage begins with food shopping. The basic rule here is: buy perishable foods last. By doing so, you reduce the time that food sits at room temperature. And never leave perishable food sitting in a hot car.

Also, don't buy anything that you won't use before the expiration date on the food package, and don't buy food in poor condition.

Chiggers play havoc with human skin cells

Associated Press

Bugs have been defined as evil creatures too small to shoot — and one of the smallest and ugliest is the chigger.

These are the ninjas of the insect world, Lionel Atwill writes in Sports Afield magazine, working in utter secrecy. You can't even see them to seek revenge.

Chiggers are mites, and mites live everywhere, from the Arctic snows to the dust bunnies under the bed.

There may be as many as half a million species, of which 35,000 have been classified. The All-American Chigger accounts for 2,500 of those creatures, with a bug called Trombicula alfreddugesi the most common.

The chigger, also known as redbugs, rougets, harvest mites and mower's mites, is about the diameter of a human hair, one-hundredth to four-hundredths of an inch. It is red and hairy. It has no body segments, but sports a pair of mandibular claws called chelicerae, with which it grabs you at dinnertime — its dinnertime, that is.

The chigger does all its dirty work as a young larvae. Its parents deposit it as an egg in the ground. When it hatches into its larval stage, it climbs a stalk of grass or plant and awaits a carbon-dioxide-emitting animal.

It is the detection of a high concentration of carbon dioxide that prompts the chigger to abandon plants for pants.

Once aboard, the chigger and its friends wander about until they are stopped by constrictive clothing — socks, underpants, waistbands of pants, bra straps. There they start to feed.

There are a number of myths about what chiggers do — burrow into your skin, lay eggs under your skin, bite once and fall off or suck your blood. None of these are true.

Chigger literature reports that the bug grabs your skin with its chelicerae and injects you with a strong enzyme that liquefies, digests and otherwise plays havoc with your skin cells.

The bug does not burrow under your skin. If you look closely, you can see it — a red dot hanging on for life.

When its enzymes have done their job, the chigger feeds on your dissolved skin for two or three days. Then it drops off to live out its life, molting to a nymphal stage and finally changing to its adult form.

Once a nymph, it feeds solely on plant matter and soil organisms, not man.

The injection of chigger enzymes, coupled with the body's immune response, causes a hollow tube called a stylostome to form in the skin.

Impetigo requires immediate attention

By Dr. Mary Ruth Buchness
Associated Press

The skin, largest of the body's organs, is often the first line of defense against unwanted bacteria, viruses, wounds or insect bites.

Impetigo is a superficial skin infection — most commonly found in children —and caused by either streptococcal or staphylococcal bacteria. It is a condition that requires immediate attention.

The infection starts as a red and itchy sore that blisters briefly and then oozes during the next few days, leaving a sticky honey-colored crust. Left untreated, it will last from two to three weeks.

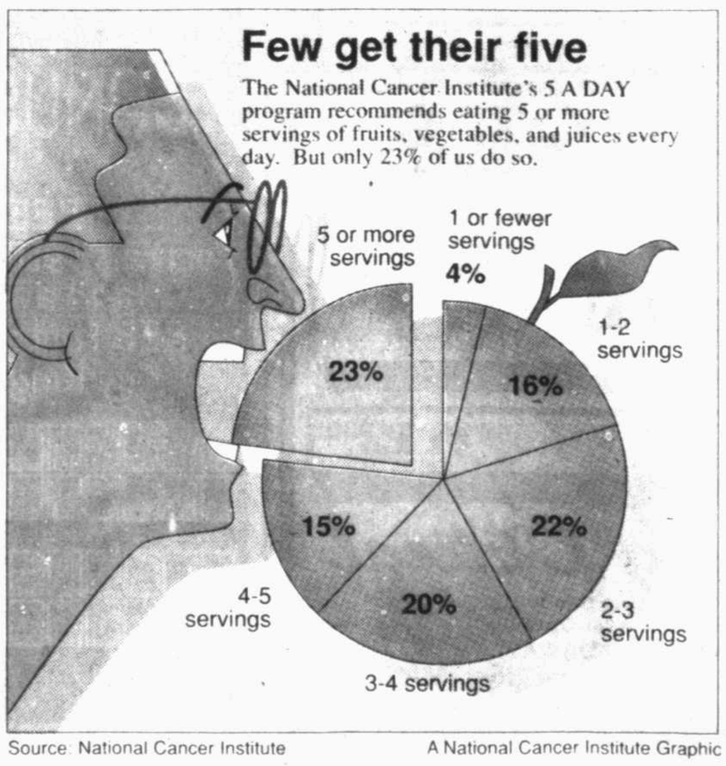

However, parents shouldn't let impetigo run its course; it should be treated as soon as possible to avoid spreading the infection to other children and to prevent a rare but possible kidney disease known as acute glomerulonephritis.

Impetigo is contracted and spread by touching and usually occurs on exposed body areas such as the legs, face and arms. Children often contract impetigo from an infectious playmate at school or day care.

Impetigo starts off as tiny, nearly imperceptible blisters on a child's skin, usually at the site of skin abrasion, scratch or insect bite.

Cancer-fighting properties found in fruits, vegetables

Source: National Cancer Institute — A National Cancer Institute Graphic

Staff report

If we eat nutritiously, we can lower our cancer risk, according to what scientists are finding studying the link between diet, nutrition and cancer. As more evidence of the cancer-fighting properties in fruits and vegetables is found, the more hope we have of fighting America's second deadliest disease.

June is National Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Month, a great time to start eating more fruits and vegetables — five servings a day, as urged by organizations like the American Institute for Cancer Research, The National Cancer Institute and the U.S.D.A.

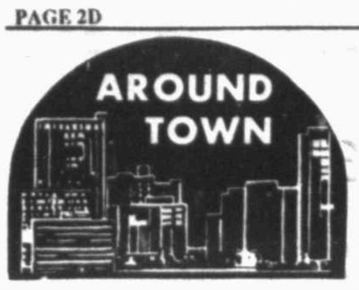

In the 1980s, researchers discovered fiber could help protect us from cancer by reducing our exposure to carcinogens in the digestive system. Now, along with the fiber in whole grains, fruits and vegetables, scientists are finding that vitamins, minerals and other elements in plant-based foods also have cancer-fighting abilities.

Enzymes are among the food elements that scientists are discovering may protect us against cancer. Other examples include sulphoraphane — found in broccoli, cabbage and other vegetables — that helps generate enzymes that protect against carcinogens. Antioxidants, especially in yellow and green vegetables, work to clean up potential cancer-causing molecules. And genistein, in soy foods and cruciferous vegetables, has discouraged tumor growth in experiments. More familiar nutrients, like vitamin C and beta-carotene, also show cancer-fighting potential. Nutrient studies like these are indicating that the healthiest diet we can eat is rich in fruits and vegetables.

One serving equals only about a half cup of most vegetables (for leafy greens, one cup), or one whole medium-sized fruit or half a cup of small fruits like berries. Even ¼ cup of juice counts (although it lacks the fiber of whole produce). The recommended balance is three servings of vegetables and two servings of fruits each day.

Five a day really isn't that much. But if you're worried about how to fit them into your daily schedule, here are some tips. Keep fruit at home and work for snacks or, when you're headed out the door. Thicken sauces or jazz up soups by adding raw, frozen or pureed veggies. Mix chopped vegetables and fruits so you can use as much as you want per meal and not worry about spoilage. Use supermarket salad bars which stock ready-to-eat vegetables and fruits.

Professors find promising cure for yeast infections

By Don Horine
N.Y. Times News Service

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Two Florida Atlantic University professors believe they have found a quick, safe cure for yeast infections, one of the most common diseases affecting women.

And that's not all. The same treatment apparently also knocks out a host of other maladies including athlete's foot, ringworm and diaper rash and may even be useful as a paint additive.

The tin compound developed by chemist Charles Carraher, dean of the College of Science, and Cindy Butler, associate professor of medical technology, has been patented and is being tested by two large national consumer products companies.

Yeast infections are caused by a microorganism that thrives in warm moist parts of the body. Vaginal yeast infections affect from 10 percent to 17 percent of all women and the incidence for pregnant women is double that, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The infection also affects men, who act as carriers, causing irritation and rashes. In men, it often is called jock itch.

ABOUT HALF OF all AIDS patients also have the disease.

Existing cures for yeast infections usually require several applications and take at least a week to 10 days to take effect, according to officials at the University of Miami Medical School. Carraher said his treatment kills the infection in a day.

"The beauty of it is that it's a one-shot treatment," he said.

Some strains of yeast infections are resistant to existing treatments, but Carraher said his treatment kills all strains. And he said in his own laboratory tests, it never failed.

"We tested our material against all of the things you can get by prescription and over the counter," he said. "We beat the heck out of them. We're much deadlier at much lower concentrations."

Another advantage of his treatment, he said, is that it kills only the microorganism that causes yeast infections, whereas other remedies kill all microorganisms in the area, including those that serve to protect the body from other diseases.

"Most drugs kill a wide range of microorganisms," he said. "Both the bad and the good guys are gone. None of the other things on the market are specific."

THE NEW COMPOUND, which is based on the modification of polyvinyl alcohol, can be mixed as a dry powder or put in creams, lotions, ointments and coatings, according to Carraher. It also can be used as a solid.

In this form, Carraher said, thin strips could be woven into feminine health care products, such as sanitary napkins and douches, to prevent yeast infections and also could be woven into baby diapers to prevent diaper rash.

Carraher said he originally thought the substance would be used just for yeast infections, but that as companies started testing it, they began suggesting other uses for it. He said he knows of people who have used it on athlete's foot and have seen the infection quickly disappear.

Butler, who is director of FAU's laboratory science program, said she has seen it kill ringworm.

"I've seen it happen overnight," she said. "A carpenter friend of mine frequently gets ringworm. Just rub the compound in and it's gone the next day."

It's safe to the skin, Carraher said, adding, "As far as I know you can eat the thing."

It also will kill fungi in paint, Carraher said.

BEST OF ALL, he said, it is cheap to make because polyvinyl alcohol is a common thickening agent that's used as adhesive for packaging film.

Carraher, who has been at FAU eight years, has been working 30 years on the modification of polymers and serves on the national board of polymer chemistry. Last year he was named outstanding chemist in the southeast United States by the American Chemical Society.

Kimberly-Clark and Clorox are testing the substance but declined to talk about it, citing proprietary reasons. However, a Clorox spokesman acknowledged that his company was testing it for uses other than treating yeast infections.

Carraher said, "Their tests have been very successful. That's what they've been telling us."

The products are at least two or three years away from being put on the market, the Clorox spokesman said.

Once they are, the university would receive royalties. So would the two 52-year-old inventors: Carraher, a father of eight who lives in Parkland, and Butler, of Boca Raton, who is single.

"I think if it would take off, it would be a lot of money for the university," Butler said.. "And for Charles and me, too, to a lesser degree."

DEAR ABBY

Nose casts dark shadow on girl's sunny self-image

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of a beautiful, intelligent 15-year-old daughter. Unfortunately, as she has gotten older and has gone through puberty, her nose has become very prominent. (She inherited her father's nose, and although it looks good on him, it does not look good on her.) She used to be a very happy, outgoing girl, but for the last year or so she has become withdrawn and sullen because she thinks she's ugly.

Van Buren

Although my husband and I have tried to console and reassure her, she is still very self-conscious and depressed, and keeps begging us to take her to a plastic surgeon so she can have a prettier nose.

We want to help her, but isn't she too young for plastic surgery? — HER MOM IN SANTA MONICA, CALIF.

DEAR MOM: I consulted Dr. Eugene Worton, a board-certified plastic surgeon and a clinical professor at UCLA. He said: "First, the patient must be sufficiently physically mature so that her other facial features can be used in determining the size and shape of her new nose.

"Also, the cartilage and other nasal tissue must be sufficiently mature to lend themselves to surgery. Equally important, the patient must be emotionally mature enough to handle the surgery and recovery period."

Since your daughter is "begging" you for a prettier nose, carefully select the plastic surgeon, and put her nose in his (or her) hands.

DEAR ABBY: I have a question that I hope you — or perhaps one of your readers — can help with.

Every photograph I have ever seen that was taken in a photographer's studio shows couples wherein the wife (or fiancee) is standing beside her husband (or fiance) who is seated on a bench or chair.

Who started this? Apparently that was the custom in those days. One would think that courtesy (proper manners) would have the woman seated and the gentleman standing. Why was the opposite the custom in those days? I have been greatly intrigued by this for many years. — NORMAN E. SAVAGE, HICKORY RIDGE, ARK.

DEAR MR. SAVAGE: I can only speculate that the early photographers positioned their subjects that way. Interestingly enough, the photographs of my great-great grandparents (taken in "the old country") show the man seated, and his wife standing — with one hand planted firmly on his shoulder. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "The Doctor's Wife," concerning people who cornered her husband at social gatherings to ask for free medical advice, struck a familiar chord.

Attorneys also have that problem. I am reminded of the story about a doctor and lawyer who were out for a friendly game of golf. The doctor complained about the problem of people mooching free medical advice at social functions, and the attorney said, "Hey, no problem; just send a bill to the moochers for a consultation."

"Wow, I didn't think of that!" the doctor responded enthusiastically.

Three days later, the doctor received a bill from the attorney for a "consultation." — WILLIAM R. BENEDETTO, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, BEAVERTON, ORE.

FOOD: Refrigerate perishables quickly

(From 1D)

Perishable foods should be transferred from the store refrigerator to your refrigerator as quickly as possible. If you aren't going to use the meat, poultry and fish within one to two days, freeze them.

Even without spoiling, meats, poultry, fish and eggs often contain harmful bacteria. This bacteria can't be seen, smelled or tasted but can cause food poisoning. If you eat these foods raw or on the rare side, you run the risk of food poisoning. As a safeguard, cook your meal thoroughly to kill bacteria.

Red meat is safely cooked when it's brown or gray inside. When poultry is ready, the juices run clear. Fish should flake with a fork. Cook eggs until the yolk and white are firm, not runny. Scramble eggs to a firm texture.

After cooking perishable foods, use clean dishes for serving. A plate with juice from the raw meat might contain harmful bacteria, and those juices can reinfect even a well-cooked hamburger.

Once cooked, food should not sit out for more than two hours. Even well-cooked food can spawn bacteria at room temperature. If you want to pack a picnic with food like cold chicken or hard-boiled eggs, remember to keep the food cool in an insulated cooler, and keep the cooler lid on as much as possible.

If you're serving a buffet, put the food out in small amounts and replenish every 30 to 45 minutes. For a hot buffet, maintain a flame under warm dishes and for a cold buffet keep serving dishes on a bed of ice when possible.

To prolong the life of a leftover, wrap the food well in plastic or store in tight-lidded containers and use within one to two days. But if food has remained out for two hours or more, throw it away.

Even when you handle food properly it doesn't keep forever. If food ever looks or smells like spoilage has begun to set in do not taste it, just toss it away. When in doubt, throw it out.

Jennifer Stack is a senior nutritionist at New York University Medical Center.

CHIGGER: Best remedy is really prevention

(From 1D)

The bite turns red, enlarges, often crests to a small blister, and itches like mad. Multiply that one bite by 100 chiggers — the basic chigger tactical unit — and the sensation is unique.

Although the larva finish feeding in a few days and detaches itself, most chiggers are scratched off well before they are satiated. Another week or 10 days must pass, however, before the body absorbs the tube of digestive enzymes.

There are numerous folk remedies for chigger bites. Nail polish is a favorite, said to "smother" the chigger. (Maybe, but scratching will remove it, too.)

A starch bath or calamine lotion works well to relieve itching in mild cases, but for more serious doses you will need antihistamines and perhaps topical or oral steroids — which means a trip to the doctor.

Watch out for infections, because scratching can contaminate the bites.

IMPETIGO: Skin infection usually doesn't leave scar

(From 1D)

Fortunately, impetigo does not usually scar the skin or cause discomfort other than itching. The infection is not a sign of any greater systemic problem. In other words, normal, healthy children ranging from infants to grammar school age get impetigo.

If you suspect that your child has impetigo, a medical evaluation should be sought. Usual treatment of the infection is with an antibiotic, and with treatment, impetigo will clear up in 7-10 days.

If medical treatment is not available immediately, the sores should be washed with soap and water and an antibiotic ointment applied. Although adults are not very susceptible to impetigo, prevent possible infection to yourself by washing your hands after applying ointment or touching a sore. Also, clip a child's nails to prevent him or her from spreading the infection to other areas of the body.

Children with impetigo should be kept away from playmates and out of school until the sores disappear.

Cases of impetigo with extremely widespread lesions may require hospitalization and isolation. However, the infection is usually easily treated at home.

Dr. Mary Ruth Buchness is an assistant professor of dermatology at the New York University Medical Center.

Ragu joins healthy-eating race

By Linda Anderson

Remember the cola wars or the hamburger wars? Well, the current culinary battle could be called the "healthy-eating" wars. Company after company is rushing to market foods they can slap "reduced fat" and "low cholesterol" labels on.

Anderson

Don't get me wrong, this is not a bad thing. Eating healthier is good for everyone. But sometimes it feels like overkill.

Anyway, Ragu has recently marketed a line of Today's Recipe spaghetti sauces that are advertised as being "low fat" with "50 percent less sodium (than the company's original recipe)," "no sugar added" and "no cholesterol."

The kind of Ragu Today's Recipe we bought was Tomato and Herb flavor. I'm assuming there's other kinds — usually spaghetti sauces come with different additions, like mushrooms or ground meat. A 27.5-ounce jar of the sauce cost $1.59, and was supposed to contain enough sauce for seven servings of spaghetti. (Seven? Doesn't that strike you as kind of odd? Most things come in two-, four- or six-serving sizes. Well, I guess it's perfect if you are serving seven people...)

Label advertising is a little sparse (after all, glass jars usually don't have very large labels), but it does claim the Today's Recipe is "made with pure imported olive oil," and has a toll-free phone number customers can use if they want to talk to someone at the company for free: 1-800-328-7248.

Nutrition information claims a four-ounce serving of the sauce contains 50 calories, 1 gram of fat (that means nine calories from fat) and no cholesterol.

Ingredients label was kind of interesting too. It listed mostly real foods, such as tomato puree (water, tomato paste), crushed and diced tomatoes, onions, pure olive oil, salt, parsley and garlic, and only a couple of ingredients that were slightly vague: spices (could mean anything, I suppose) and citric acid (doesn't that occur naturally in tomatoes, and if so, why did they need to add more?)

My kids were in the mood for spaghetti when we sampled the Today's Recipe, too, so I didn't lack for volunteers. However, they were disappointed in the taste of the sauce. (I even added browned meat because that's the way they like spaghetti.) I thought it tasted like the homemade spaghetti sauce some of my relatives used to make — did need salt though.

The young taste-testers said they thought the sauce was not good or bad, but just so-so. When I asked if they wanted seconds, they both immediately replied "No!" So I guess that answers that question.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Price at other locations may vary.

Clinton assures detractors that Ginsburg's pro-choice

WASHINGTON (HNS) — President Clinton said Tuesday his Supreme Court nominee "is clearly pro-choice" even though she disagrees with the high court's rationale in the landmark 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision.

Abortion rights organizations have called for the nominee, federal appeals Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg, to be questioned closely on the abortion issue during her Senate confirmation hearings.

In Roe vs. Wade, the court used privacy rights to overturn state laws banning or severely restricting abortion. Ginsburg, in written commentary and speeches, has said the court should have based the decision on equality for women. Before being appointed to the appeals court in 1980, Ginsburg was a leading attorney in sex discrimination cases.

"I'm not sure I agree with her, as a matter of fact, on that issue," Clinton said of the basis for the abortion ruling, "but I thought it was a very provocative and impressive argument."

Clinton told reporters he believes Roe vs. Wade was "the most difficult case decided in the last 25 years" and that "the court did the best it could under the circumstances."

The president said he has phoned leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee — chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., and senior Republicans Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Orrin Hatch of Utah — seeking assurances of "the speediest possible confirmation consistent with the Senate doing its duty."

"At any rate," Clinton said. "I am confident that she will be ready to assume her position on the Supreme Court when the fall term begins in October."

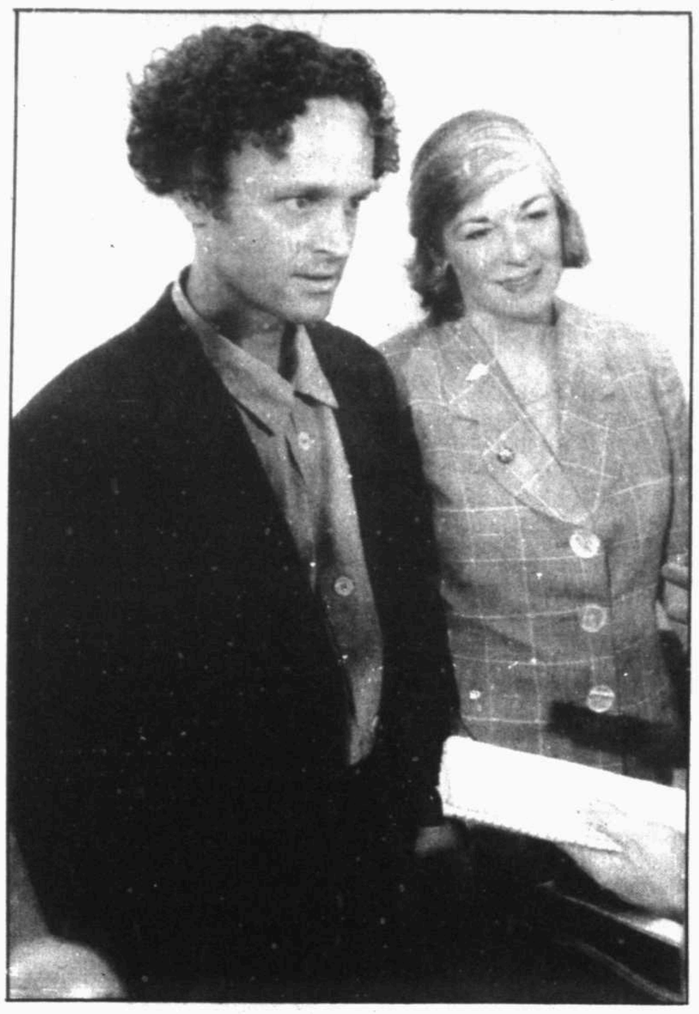

Tuesday's news conference was something of a make-up session.

On Monday, Clinton left the podium after the first question from reporters following his announcement of Ginsburg as his first Supreme Court nominee. Clinton had been asked if he would like to disabuse reporters of the impression that his seemingly tortuous selection of nominees was something of a "zig zag."

Returning to the issue Tuesday, the president defended the public manner in which he had considered Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt and Judge Stephen Breyer of Boston as prospective Supreme Court nominees.

"I strongly dispute that I hung them out," Clinton said. "But do I regret the fact that there were leaks and that that may have exposed them more than they would otherwise have been? I certainly do."

Clinton began Tuesday's session with a statement that covered not only the court nomination but also the economy, his budget proposal before Congress and campaign finance revision.

Rep. Lynn Woolsey, D-Calif., and her son Michael meet reporters on Capitol Hill Tuesday. Woolsey introduced her gay son, vowing that he will put a 'real face' on homosexuality for lawmakers weighing the ban on gays in the military.

Congresswoman takes gay son to Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a hug and kiss on the cheek, Rep. Lynn Woolsey introduced her gay son to Capitol Hill Tuesday, hoping he will put a "real face" on homosexuality for lawmakers weighing the ban on gays in the military.

"I know when other members of the House of Representatives meet him it is going to be easier for them to support lifting the ban," the California Democrat told a news conference.

Woolsey gazed proudly at her 30-year-old son, Michael, and then described her family's reaction two years ago upon learning of her son's homosexuality, her interpretation of family values and her strong belief in ending the ban.

The first-term lawmaker and other parents of gay men and women plan to lobby members of Congress this week on President Clinton's effort to lift the 50-year-old prohibition.

The Campaign for Military Service, an amalgam of groups working to end the ban, sponsored the news conference and announced plans to distribute to lawmakers 100,000 postcards collected during this year's gay rights march that call for an end to the ban.

The news conference marked the third time this year that a parent has talked about a gay child in the unlikely setting of Capitol Hill. Marine Col. Fred Peck, who supports the ban, discussed his gay son and how he feared for his life if he joined the military at a Senate Armed Services Committee hearing.

'I know when other representatives meet him it's going to be easier to support lifting the ban.'

— Rep. Lynn Woolsey

Weeks later, Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., revealed that his daughter is a homosexual during Senate debate on the nomination of Roberta Achtenberg, a lesbian, to a post in the Clinton administration.

Woolsey, who represents the district north of the Golden Gate Bridge that includes Sonoma and Marin counties, said she has three sons and one daughter. Two years ago, her middle son, Michael, told her he was gay.

"Our family exemplifies what family values is all about," she said, her words slowed by emotion. "We are accepting, supporting and loving of each other.

AIDS becomes top killer for many young people

CHICAGO (AP) — AIDS and related infections have surpassed accidents, cancer and heart disease as the leading killer of young adults in an increasing number of cities and states, federal researchers report.

In an analysis of 1990 mortality data, they found that AIDS and illnesses related to HIV, the virus that causes it, were the No. 1 killer of young men in five states and 64 cities nationwide. In some cities, more than half of young men's deaths were AIDS-related.

Among young women, AIDS and illnesses related to human immunodeficiency virus were the leading killer in nine cities, according to the report in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"Although (AIDS) deaths among young adults made up only 7 percent of U.S. deaths from all causes in 1990, they are disproportionately disruptive to society," wrote Dr. Richard Selik and colleagues at the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"Such premature deaths result in the loss of many productive years of life and deprive young children of their parents," the authors wrote.

Selik's findings paint a grim portrait of AIDS in America, an editorial in the issue said.

"Adolescent and young adult HIV transmission guarantees the continuation of the AIDS-HIV epidemic, barring a substantially expanded national prevention effort," wrote Dr. Sten Vermund of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

"The health crisis of AIDS-HIV is of immense significance and will remain so beyond this millennium."

'The health crisis of AIDS is of immense significance and will remain so beyond this millennium.'

— Dr. Sten Vermund

Selik and colleagues analyzed underlying causes of death for adults ages 25 to 44 by using data prepared by the National Center for Health Statistics. They found 18,748 deaths nationwide in 1990. Most were caused by AIDS, but a few were caused by HIV-related infections that had not yet progressed to AIDS.

Nationally, AIDS and related infections were the second-leading cause of death among young men, behind unintentional injuries; and sixth among young women, after cancer, unintentional injury, heart disease, suicide and homicide.

AIDS and related infections were the leading cause of death among young men in California, Florida, Massachusetts, New Jersey and New York. They also caused 61 percent of the deaths among young men in San Francisco and more than half of the deaths of young men in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and Elizabeth, N.J.

Doctors take stand against prison smoking, alcohol ads

CHICAGO (AP) — The American Medical Association banned discrimination against homosexual doctors in the AMA on Tuesday and took stands against smoking in prisons and alcohol advertising on mass-transit systems.

"We are very pleased at what happened today," Dr. John L. Clowe, outgoing AMA president, said of policy-makers' decision to add the words "sexual orientation" to the group's non-discrimination bylaw.

"There are many physicians in this country who feel they have been denied a place at the discussion in the (AMA) House of Delegates, in the house of medicine itself," Clowe added at a news conference after the vote at the AMA's annual meeting.

The policy-making House of Delegates had wrestled with the issue for five years. Opponents argued that the 297,000-member AMA has never refused membership to gay doctors and that changing the bylaw would imply otherwise.

But in testimony at an AMA hearing Monday, several homosexual physicians said they fear disclosing their sexual orientation to colleagues. They said many gay patients also fear revealing their orientation to physicians.

"We've all experienced homophobic comments in the doctors' dining room," said Dr. Matthew Brennan, a resident at the University of Chicago Medical Center.

Benjamin Schatz, executive director of the gay-oriented American Association of Physicians for Human Rights, said the vote Tuesday acknowledged that gay physicians are an increasing force in medicine. He said his San Francisco-based group has doubled in size over the past year to more than 1,000 members in 46 states.

Clowe emphasized during debate Tuesday that "we are not condoning any lifestyle at all," and said the bylaw change would prevent the issue from returning year after year.

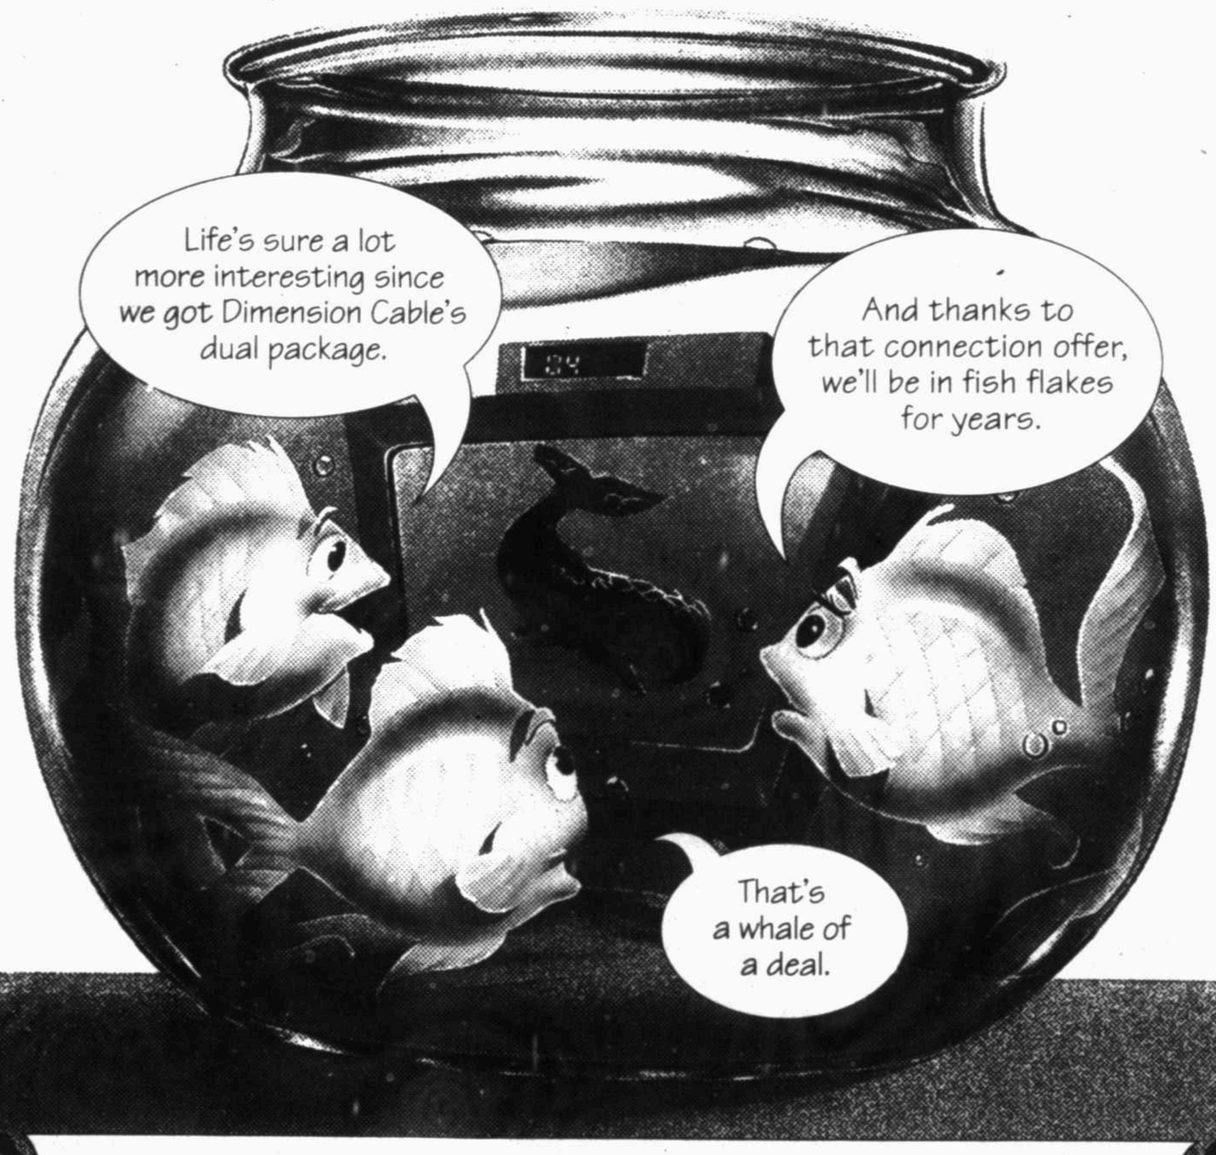

This was the first year that the AMA's 17-member board of trustees had backed a ban. Clowe said similar policies have been adopted by the American Dental Association, American Telephone & Telegraph and IBM.

In other matters, AMA delegates adopted without discussion a resolution to support legislation that would ban smoking in prisons and jails and reaffirm a commitment to smoking-cessation programs in correctional facilities.

Bill Wordham, a spokesman for The Tobacco Institute, an industry trade group, said the decision wasn't surprising, but he questioned its wisdom.

Senators still squabbling about difficult energy tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic tax-writers struggled toward a consensus on a big deficit-reduction plan Tuesday, still split by competing regional interests over how to raise taxes on energy.

Democrats on the Senate Finance Committee were weighing various energy options, including a motor-fuels tax in the range of 5 cents a gallon, to replace President Clinton's broad energy tax.

"We're getting a little closer all the way around," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., who opposes the motor-fuels tax, told reporters after a two-hour closed session.

Baucus, who has adamantly opposed a 7.3-cent motor-fuels tax, was asked whether he was prepared to support a lower tax and replied, "We'll see."

Clinton insisted anew that the plan must cut the deficit by $500 billion over five years — at least half in spending reductions — with most of the burden falling on the well-to-do. Beyond that, he gave Democrats virtually free rein to write the bill, noting that what counts is the final compromise between Senate and House versions.

The president told a news conference he has not "cut the rug out from under" House liberals who voted for his much-maligned energy tax only to have him acknowledge last week that it could not pass the Senate.

"I have not agreed to any provision that the Senate Finance Committee is deliberating," Clinton said. "I'm quite encouraged that we'll get a bill out that they'll (the Congressional Black Caucus and other liberals) feel good about."

In a speech later Tuesday, the president urged an enthusiastic group of college Democrats to "gin up some support among your people for this economic program. Call the members of the Senate without regard to party and ask them to do it."

House approves pro-union legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House handed labor unions what could prove a very temporary victory Tuesday, voting to bar employers from hiring permanent replacements for striking workers.

The House approved the measure, 239-190, and sent it on to the Senate where its prospects appeared bleak.

The House measure bars employers from hiring permanent replacements for striking workers. . .Senate approval appears dim.

Conservative Democrats, annoyed at being forced to choose between labor and business on the issue, said the chances of Senate passage were so dim that the House should not have acted on the bill.

"It's such a divisive issue, with no chance of success at all," Rep. Pete Geren, D-Texas, said. ". . . Why in the world are we doing this?"

But Democratic leaders wanted the House to go on record in support of the so-called "strikebreaker" bill.

Before final passage, the House defeated, 373-58, a Republican compromise proposal that would ban hiring permanent replacements during the first 10 weeks of a strike but allow it after that.

Lawmakers were asked to act on the strikebreaker bill within days of a difficult House vote on President Clinton's tax package.

Pepsi-can syringes pop up in four more states

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Reports of cans of Pepsi-Cola products containing syringes and hypodermic needles continued to be recorded Tuesday, with local police in Missouri, Illinois, Oklahoma and Michigan reporting that consumers said they had found the objects in soft drinks.

The four new reports brought to 14 the number of incidents reported in 10 states in six days, although authorities in none of the locations could determine whether the materials were put in the cans during production or later. That question and others were being studied by the Food and Drug Administration, which is investigating each incident through local offices.

The latest police reports came from Branson, Mo., Melvindale, Mich., Glen Ellyn, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, and Mustang, a suburb of Oklahoma City.

In addition, investigators said Tuesday that they were looking into other reports of similar objects in soft-drink cans.

The FDA announced Tuesday that a laboratory analysis of the first two cans found with a needle or syringe, both in the Seattle area, showed that the contents had not been contaminated with any chemical substance.

For Pepsi-Cola Co., the widely scattered reports have become a public relations nightmare. In the absence of any reported injury, a company spokesman, Andrew Giangola, said the company planned no product recalls.

"Right now, we're just trying to sort through the facts, sifting out truthful claims from hyperbole," said Giangola, a spokesman for Pepsi in Somers, N.Y.

A major difficulty, he said, was that some of the information about compromised cans had reached the company through news reports, rather than from consumers or police authorities.

"We have yet to confirm that any of these reports concern an unopened container," Giangola said. "There have been no injuries reported."

S. Carolina court upholds arrest of street preachers

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Street preachers who break a law against "loud and unseemly" noises can be arrested, because the law doesn't limit what people say only how they say it, a divided state Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The court said the 1991 ordinance enacted by the Beaufort City Council is constitutional because preachers have many other ways of communicating, including preaching at a lower volume.

The ruling upholds the convictions of 14 preachers, who were arrested and sentenced to 30 days in jail or fined $234.

Karl Baker, one of the preachers, plans an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The city council passed the ordinance and police enforced it after merchants complained that the noise was driving away customers.

Beaufort's ordinance is "content-neutral, regulating speech solely upon the noise generated, rather than the message conveyed," Justice A. Lee Chandler wrote in the majority opinion.

In a dissent, Justice Jean Toal wrote, "The majority ... seems to have lost sight of the fact that the Constitution was written to protect the few from the many."

Nancy Rhett, who owns an art gallery in Beaufort, said she doubted the preachers would pay much attention to the ruling, but she was encouraged by the decision.

"You've got to have some order in society and obviously the Supreme Court thinks so also," she said.

The preachers maintain that the volume of their sermons is part of their message. They have cited biblical support for "lifting up" their voices.

Opening lead: King of ♠

When mapping your plan of campaign, consider both the bidding and the play to the early tricks. You would be surprised what a lode of information lies there, waiting to be mined.

We are appalled by West's choice of three clubs for the opening salvo. While we don't go as far as some pundits who ban preempts with a three-card major on the side, it is definitely taboo when you have a four-card major—there is too great a chance of missing game, even slam, in the second suit.

West led the king of clubs and when dummy came down it seemed the contract would hinge on the spade finesse or a normal 3-2 split in diamonds. However, West could not possibly hold the king of spades. The opening lead marked that defender with the ace-king of clubs and with the king of spades as well a preempt would have been out of the question.

As the cards lie, a spade shift at trick two would have ruined declarer's chances—there would have been no way to avoid losing a trick in each black suit and two diamonds. But West woodenly continued with a club and declarer was quick to take advantage.

The club continuation was ruffed and trumps were drawn in two rounds, ending in the closed hand. Now declarer took the safety play of leading the nine of diamonds and running it when West followed low. East won and the only safe return was a diamond. Had West followed to this trick it would have meant that diamonds were 3-2 and declarer's only other loser would be a spade. But when West showed out, declarer won, cashed dummy's remaining high diamond and exited with a diamond. East now was forced to concede the contract either by leading into the table's spade tenace or by giving declarer a sluff-and-ruff. The spade loser had vanished.

Pavarotti bellows gold watch out the window

ROME — Luciano Pavarotti says he feels "like a lion" and has changed his mind about retiring.

The Italian tenor said in an interview published Tuesday in a Milan newspaper that he had considered retiring from opera.

Pavarotti

"Last year, my voice and my health brought me to the verge of retirement," he told Corriere della Sera. "Today I feel like a lion,"

He is preparing currently for an open-air concert in New York City's Central Park on June 26.

Pavarotti's performance of Verdi's "Don Carlo" at Milan's La Scala drew whistles of disapproval last year, and he canceled performances at the beginning of this year because of health problems.

In May, the 57-year-old performer made a comeback at a concert with soprano Aprile Millo at the Metropolitan Opera House, and then performed Donizetti's "Elisir d'Amore" in Japan.

"Those performances went so well," Pavarotti said, "that they made me change my mind about immediate retirement. It's been 15 years since I sang this well."

The tenor has performances booked until 1996.

"I'd like to end my career at the Met in New York, a city which I love and to which I have given much of myself," he said.

LAKELAND, Fla. — A week after Burt Reynolds filed for divorce, Florida citrus officials may be putting the squeeze on him.

The Florida Citrus Commission may decide in meetings this week whether to renew the actor's $500,000, one-year contract to appear in commercials for the state's best known beverage.

Pressure has been building to end the advertising campaign after its first year, The Orlando Sentinel reported Tuesday, and some commissioners have already said they oppose renewing the contract, which expires in November.

Mike Sparks, acting executive director of the Citrus Department, said the campaign has not been particularly successful based on consumer recall tests.

Reynolds' plans to divorce actress Loni Anderson, his wife of five years, may also have undercut the ads' effectiveness.

The Citrus Department scrambled to pull an ad that made reference to Anderson after Reynolds' divorce filing.

The total cost of the ad campaign including television air time is more than $15.4 million.

COVINGTON, Ga. — Carroll O'Connor is ready to welcome actor Howard Rollins back to the set of CBS-TV's "In the Heat of the Night" after Rollins is released from jail Wednesday.

In fact, O'Connor, who produces and costars in the show, says he's willing to do more than that.

"I'd love to spin him off in a series of his own, if he could get himself together," O'Connor said Monday in an interview with The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

Rollins, who plays detective Virgil Tibbs in the police drama set in a small Southern town, has been jailed in nearby Rockdale County since last month for probation violation. He has been arrested three times in eight months for drunken driving, reckless driving and speeding.

LONDON — Princess Anne almost missed the Royal Ascot races Tuesday when an overzealous guard who failed to recognize her behind her sun glasses would not let her through the gate.

Princess Anne

"Well, she was wearing dark glasses, wasn't she? I didn't recognize her straight away," said Eric Petheridge, who had blocked the princess and her guard as they tried to enter at the Sovereign's Gate.

"She took it very well. I am sure she understood that security is paramount," Petheridge said.

Prince Charles, Princess Diana and the Queen Mother all missed the races, one of the fashion showcases of the season.

Charles is down with a back injury suffered in a polo match over the weekend.

Diana skipped Ascot to take her sons Prince William and Prince Harry to lunch in a London restaurant.

The Queen Mother, 92, "had a very busy weekend and has decided to have an easy day today," a spokeswoman at Buckingham Palace said. She is the mother of Queen Elizabeth.

SANTA MONICA, CA — Cassandra Danson has filed for divorce from the "Cheers" star Ted Danson, citing irreconcilable differences as the cause for the end of their 15-year marriage.

The petition was filed last Thursday in Superior Court in Santa Monica, Calif., The Associated Press reported Wednesday. Danson, who is 45, and his wife, 55, have been separated since October.

Jay Leno, host of The Tonight Show with Jay Leno, on the length of Game 3 of the NBA Finals, Sunday in Chicago, a game in which Phoenix defeated the defending champion Bulls, 129-121 in triple overtime:

"The game was so long Charles Barkley and Michael Jordan both had to call a timeout so they could put Epilady on their heads."

First love

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Former President Bush says his first love was baseball, not politics, and says that hasn't changed over the years.

In a guest column in the upcoming issue of "The Sporting News," Bush said the passion began with the Boston Red Sox when he was a child.

"The Boston Red Sox were my favorite team and Lou Gehrig was my favorite player," Bush said.

"They say that you never forget your first love," said Bush in the "Sports Voice" column. "Well, as a little kid, I hated broccoli, but I loved baseball. What I love most about baseball is the 'feeling' ... almost a fever of sorts ...

"But whatever it is, baseball remains a bonding force between men and women of all ages, races and religion."

A first baseman and captain of the Yale University teams in 1947 and 1948, Bush said he no longer plays ball but enjoys watching his family participate in the sport.

"That is part of the beauty of baseball," he said, "It gets handed down from generation to generation. It has spanned many decades, several wars and, yes, many presidents."

No more tobacco

ZEBULON, N.C. (AP) — The first day of the ban on tobacco products in the minor leagues went down swinging at a ballpark built several years ago on a razed tobacco field.

"If I stop chewing, OK now I'm going to eat a ton of sunflower seeds and gain 50 pounds and die of a heart attack. Thank you very much," said Carolina Mudcats manager John Wockenfuss, 44, a former big leaguer for more than a decade and a chewer for half his life.

Wockenfuss was chomping on a wad of bubble gum before the Mudcats' Double AA game with Nashville on Tuesday instead of his customary tobacco, and wasn't enjoying it one bit.

Two weeks ago major league baseball said all uniformed personnel in the minor leagues would be banned from chewing or smoking tobacco during games for health reasons. The order is extended to players, managers, coaches and umpires.

Each violation will cause an ejection and a $300 fine at Class AAA, Class AA and the Arizona Fall League, and $100 in Class A and lower. In most cases, such a fine would be half of a player's weekly salary.

Draw tough for Agassi, Navratilova

By Joseph White
Associated Press Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Andre Agassi and Martina Navratilova didn't get any favors this time at Wimbledon.

A day after being seeded higher than their world rankings, the men's defending champion and the nine-time women's winner Tuesday landed dangerous early opponents for next week's Grand Slam event.

Boris Becker was also victim of a random draw that knows no favorites, while Stefan Edberg and Steffi Graf received easier paths to the second week.

Agassi, who was bumped five places above his ranking to be seeded No. 8, drew a first-round match against Bernd Karbacher of Germany.

Karbacher, ranked 36th in the world, upset Michael Chang in the second round of the French Open this month and beat Chang again Monday at a Wimbledon tuneup in Halle, Germany.

If Agassi gets past Karbacher, No. 9 Richard Krajicek, a strong serve-and-volleyer, possibly looms in the fourth round.

In any event, Agassi's chances of defending his title have been seriously weakened by injury. He has been plagued by tendinitis in his right wrist for much of the year and been sidelined two months.

Agassi lost his opening-round match at Halle on Tuesday in his first appearance on the ATP Tour since April 9. The American complained of elbow pain and admitted having mixed feelings about his availability for Wimbledon.

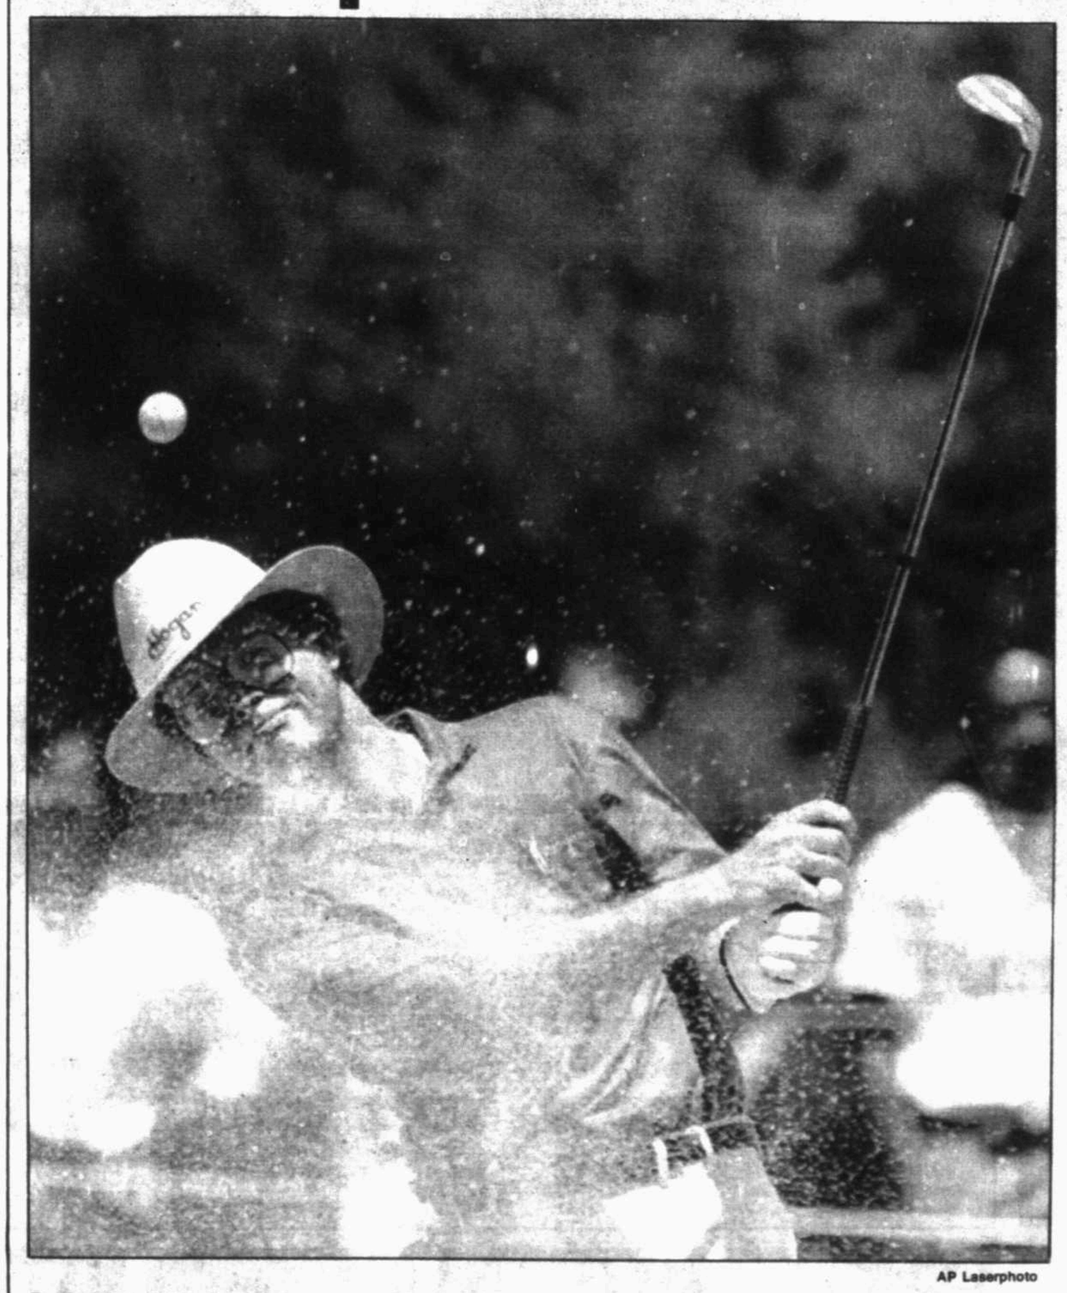

"I'd have probably gone to Wimbledon in a cast," Agassi said after the 5-7, 6-2, 6-1 loss to Carl-Uwe Steeb. "It is possibly a once-in-a-lifetime chance to go and defend the title. My heart tells me to play Wimbledon, my head tells me one year of Wimbledon is not worth making the injury worse and maybe affecting

Europeans like Baltusrol

Defending U.S. Open champion Tom Kite practices from a bunker at Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J., this week.

Masters champion gives Open course a favorable review

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. — After a scouting mission over Baltusrol, Bernhard Langer noticed a crack in the course's defenses that could be exploited by Europeans this week in the U.S. Open.

Unlike previous Opens, where target golf usually was the order of the day, Langer said the Baltusrol Golf Club had "some openings to the greens ... the rough is not so penalizing as before ... and the greens are reasonably fair."

All of which plays to the strength of the 28 foreign players in the field of 156. In fact, Langer said if everything is just right, he could win the tournament that starts on Thursday.

The Masters champion added that other Open courses "were not at all what Europeans are familiar with," citing collars of rough around the greens that prohibit the run-up shot that is a standard of British golf in particular and European golf in general. He also mentioned the more narrow fairways and the penalizing rough that, he insists, "takes chipping out of the game."

During his practice round, Langer was optimistic about a European winning the Open for the first time since Englishman Tony Jacklin in 1970.

Langer also said that if British Open champ Nick Faldo, generally regarded as the world's best player, "is on his game, he can win on any golf course."

Angels win one anyway

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Angels starter David Holdridge delivers early Tuesday night. Holdridge, who was chased after 4⅔ innings and was one of four Midland pitchers in the game, did not receive a decision.

■ A day after being eliminated from the Texas League's first half race, the Midland Angels come from behind to defeat El Paso 12-9 to keep the Diablos from clinching.

Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

It might have been the first night of a newly imposed ban on chewing tobacco in minor leagues but no one told the Midland Angels they couldn't smoke.

Trailing 7-2, the Angels caught fire and erupted for 10 runs to beat the El Paso Diablos 12-9 Tuesday night.

For the Angels, it was sweet revenge on the team that knocked them out of the first half race the night before with a 5-0 shutout. The Angels bats, which had been silenced on four hits the night before, cracked 14 hits on five Diablos pitchers.

El Paso's loss, along with a 6-4 San Antonio win over Wichita, leaves the Diablos 2½ games in front of the Missions with three games remaining for El Paso and four for San Antonio. El Paso needs a combination of two wins over Midland or losses by San Antonio to clinch the first half crown.

El Paso built a 7-2 lead in the game after a four run fifth inning off Angels' starter David Holdridge. Holdridge, who had pitched 50 pitched in the first four innings, ran out of gas in the fifth and was tagged on three bases hits, in-

OPEN: Watson says course favors Europeans

(From 1E)

U.S. Open golf courses, however, have been far from hospitable to foreign players. While the Europeans have dominated world golf in recent years, winning the Masters and British Open with regularity, the U.S. Open has remained an American stronghold.

Before Jacklin's win in '70, you have to go back to 1927 to find the last European to win the Open. In all those years, South African Gary Player and Australian David Graham are the only other non-American winners.

Tom Watson, who owns five British Open titles, said Baltusrol could even lift the Europeans into the role of favorites.

"Under the conditions we have this year, it's very much like a British Open course," Watson said. "I'd say it favors them, makes them the favorites."

Langer certainly didn't want to go that far.

"I don't think it matters who is the favorite," he said. "It all depends on who is playing best. That could be as many as 50, 70 players. I think it is totally wrong to narrow it down to five or six."

Wrong or not, Langer and Faldo certainly would be included on any such short list.

cluding Jeff Cirillo's double that scored Mike Basse from first. Duane Singleton also doubled in the inning to score Ed Smith.

Midland trimmed the lead to 7-4 win a pair of runs in the sixth. Designated hitter Mark Dalesandro was hit by a Kirk Archer fastball. Charlie Rogers replaced Archer and proceeded to throw 10 straight balls to walk P.J. Forbes and Chris Pritchett and load the bases. Clifton Garrett, called up from Cedar Rapids earlier in the day, walked to score Dalesandro and Brian Grebeck sacrificed Forbes home to make it 7-4.

El Paso scored two in the seventh to extend its lead to 9-4 before Midland mounted its comeback.

In the seventh, Midland scored four runs. John Jackson reached first on a fielding error by Rogers, Palmeiro walked, Dalesandro singled to score Jackson and moved to second on a wild pitch. Fabregas sacrificed Palmeiro home to cut the lead to 9-6. Dalesandro scored on a Forbes single, and one out later, Garrett sacrificed home Forbes, 9-8.

In the eighth, Emmitt Cohick, pinch hitting for the slumping Mark Brakebill, walked. Jackson advanced Cohick to second. Dalesandro popped out to second baseman Cirillo before the Angels smacked three consecutive hits. A Fabregas single scored Cohick from second. Forbes followed with a single and then Pritchett scored both Fabregas and Forbes with a triple on a 3-2 fastball by Dave Johnson to give Midland a 12-9 lead.

Jose Musset came on in the ninth for his second impressive relief effort in the series, striking out the side for his 12th save of the season.

Game four of the series is tonight with Mark Kiefer (0-1) starting for El Paso and Colin Charland (1-0) making his Angels Stadium debut for Midland. Charland made his only other Angels appearance against Wichita last week and shut out the Wranglers on three hits in seven innings.

ANGEL NOTES: Two weeks ago major league baseball said all uniformed personnel in the minor leagues would be banned from chewing or smoking tobacco during games for health reasons. The order is extended to players, managers, coaches and umpires. Each violation will cause an ejection and a $300 fine at Class AAA, Class AA and the Arizona Fall League, and $100 in Class A and lower. In most cases, such a fine would be half of a player's weekly salary. ... California released its list of 1993 draft prospects Monday. Among those listed is All-American running back Marshall Faulk of San Diego State University.

DRAW: Edberg opens with qualifier

my later career."

Navratilova asked for, and received, her No. 2 position in the women's bracket, saying she deserved it, having won the event nine times. The seeding put her on the opposite side of the draw from top-ranked Steffi Graf, but it didn't provide for trouble-free opposition in the early rounds.

She should have little trouble with Australia's Michelle Jaggard-Lai in her first match, but then comes a possible second-round meeting with Peru's Laura Gildemeister, a veteran who has beaten Monica Seles and made the Wimbledon quarterfinals two years ago.

Navratilova then could face Patricia Hy, a former top 30 player who defeated Jennifer Capriati and Helena Sukova at last year's U.S. Open.

Another former men's champ with difficult opposition is Becker. The three-time winner and No. 4 seed faces fellow German Marc Goellner, a 6-foot-5 big server with the nickname "Baby Boom Boom." Goellner, ranked No. 34, beat Edberg and Ivan Lendl consecutively this year on his way to winning a tournament in Nice as a qualifier. He upset Petr Korda while reaching the fourth round of the French Open.

"This is the toughest draw you can get," said Goellner, who lost to Becker in the grass-court event at Queen's Club last week. "I'm playing my second grass tournament, while Boris already has three Wimbledon titles. But I'm still happy with the draw, I am looking forward to the match."

So big, you'll see the sweat bead on Canseco's brow.

end this series as soon as possible."

Barkley continues to struggle with his sore elbow, which he injured in a fall to the floor in Game 2. On Sunday, doctors drained the elbow of fluid after it swelled, and though Barkley responded with 24 points and 19 rebounds in Game 3, he has not shot since.

"We're concerned about fluid buildup," Barkley said Tuesday, "and we might have to drain it again before the game. It looks like we'll just have to go out and do the best we can again."

Pippen's 12-for-35 (34.3 percent) shooting performance in Sunday's 129-121 Suns victory can be traced at least partially to painful muscle cramps in his leg. "It's definitely sore, but it's not a concern of mine," he said yesterday. "I realized in practice today that I can run through it and play through it."

On the assumption that both Barkley and Pippen will be able to log heavy minutes, the teams worked Tuesday on fine-tuning other aspects of their games.

Bulls coach Phil Jackson wants his team not to rely so much on Michael Jordan, whose 44 points Sunday were not enough for the Bulls to win.

"It doesn't bother me that they stand around and watch Michael sometimes," Jackson said.

Olerud's bat hot for Jays

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

MINNEAPOLIS — John Olerud extended his hitting streak to 20 games and improved his batting average to .405 with three doubles, driving in three runs and leading the Toronto Blue Jays over the Minnesota Twins, 6-3.

Olerud's streak is the AL's longest this year. Not since Rod Carew was batting .402 on July 14, 1983, has a big-league player carried a .400 average so late into a season.

Juan Guzman (6-1), coming off his only loss of the season, allowed four hits, walked one and struck out seven in eight innings. Duane Ward pitched the ninth for his 18th save, retiring the side on three pitches.

The Twins got to Guzman only in the fourth inning, when Brian Harper's two-run homer and a solo shot by Pedro Munoz made it 3-3.

Toronto responded with three fifth-inning runs off Kevin Tapani (3-7). Devon White and Paul Molitor walked and stole bases, putting runners at second and third. Joe Carter, angered by umpire Larry McCoy's strike-two call, followed with a two-run single.

Olerud then hit a popup that left fielder Shane Mack lost in the Metrodome lights, the ball falling in for an RBI double.

Yankees 9, Red Sox 7

NEW YORK — Streaking Bernie Williams had an RBI single during an eight-run fifth inning and later hit a solo home run, sending the New York Yankees over the Boston Red Sox.

The Yankees won for the fifth time in six games. Boston has lost nine of 10.

Williams, who hit a grand slam in Monday's 4-0 victory, has driven in nine runs in three games. He also tripled in going 4-for-5, and made two nice running catches in center field.

Mike Stanley started the Yankees' biggest inning of the season with a home run, and later drew a bases-loaded walk. Paul O'Neill also drove in two runs as New York overcame a 5-0 deficit in the fifth inning.

The Red Sox scored twice in the eighth, making it 8-7. Williams hit his fifth home run in the bottom half of the inning.

Neal Heaton (1-0) was the winner and Steve Farr got his 16th save. Yankees starter Bob Wickman had his record remain at 7-0, getting a no-decision despite giving up five runs in three innings.

Frank Viola (4-7) lost again, making him 0-6 in seven starts since his last victory April 28 at Oakland.

Mo Vaughn hit an RBI double and Scott Cooper hit a three-run homer that gave Boston a 4-0 lead in the first inning. Cooper singled home another run in the third.

White Sox 4, Athletics 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Wilson Alvarez pitched a three-hitter and faced just 28 batters as the Chicago White Sox beat the Oakland Athletics.

Alvarez (6-2) allowed three singles, struck out a career-high 11 and walked one. No Athletics runner got past first base.

Alvarez pitched his first complete game of the season and second career shutout. His other shutout was a no-hitter at Baltimore on Aug. 11, 1991.

Ron Karkovice hit his 11th home run and an RBI double in the ninth. His solo shot in the seventh inning off Bob Welch (4-6) made it 3-0.

Welch is winless in seven starts, his longest drought since joining the A's in 1988. He gave up nine hits and four runs in 8 2-3 innings, struck out one and walked one.

Tigers 10, Indians 4

DETROIT — Cecil Fielder hit two more home runs against Cleveland, leading the Detroit Tigers past the Indians.

Fielder, who nearly homered over the left field roof Monday, has hit five of his 15 homers this season against the Indians. His three RBIs moved him into the AL lead with 55.

In his career, Fielder has 69 hits in 204 at-bats (.338) against Cleveland. Twenty-seven of those hits have been home runs, and Fielder has 66 RBIs against the Indians.

Fielder went 2-for-3. He drew an intentional walk and struck out with bases loaded in his other plate appearances. It was the third time this season he has hit two homers in a game.

Lou Whitaker also homered for the Tigers, who hit three homers in Monday night's 7-3 win.

Orioles 4, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Brady Anderson and Mark McLemore hit consecutive home runs and Jamie Moyer allowed four hits over seven innings as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Milwaukee Brewers for their 12th win in 13 games.

Anderson, who has now homered in three straight games, drove a 2-1 pitch from Ricky Bones (3-4) just over the fence and beyond the leap of right fielder Tom Brunansky to lead off the sixth. McLemore then hit an 0-1 pitch on a line over the fence in right for a 3-1 lead.

When Bones gave up a single to Harold Baines and walked Mike Devereaux he was replaced by Mike Ignasiak, who then walked two more batters to force home a run.

Phillies' win streak ends at 6

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

MONTREAL — The Montreal Expos handed Tommy Greene his first loss of the season and snapped the Philadelphia Phillies' six-game winning streak, 8-4.

Larry Walker, Moises Alou and Sean Berry each drove in two runs as the Expos knocked out Greene (8-1) after 4 2-3 innings.

Greene allowed five runs on seven hits, struck out three and walked four for his first loss in six lifetime decisions against Montreal.

Brian Barnes (2-1) gave up nine hits, struck out four and walked four in five innings to improve his career mark against Philadelphia to 2-6.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the first when Lenny Dykstra doubled, took third on a groundout and scored on Darren Daulton's line single which tipped the outstretched glove of Montreal first baseman Frank Bolick.

The Expos came back in the bottom of the inning on Walker's two-run single and an RBI single by Alou.

The Phillies made it 3-2 in the second when Kim Batiste singled, moved up on a walk and a single, and scored when shortstop Wil Cordero threw away Mariano Duncan's grounder.

Cubs 3, Marlins 0

CHICAGO — Frank Castillo snapped a personal three-game losing streak, and had an RBI single and a run scored as the Chicago Cubs defeated the Florida Marlins.

Castillo (2-4), outpitched 45-year-old Charlie Hough (3-7), allowing five hits with two walks and five strikeouts over 7 1-3 innings, as the Cubs dealt Florida only its third loss in 11 contests.

Hough gave up seven hits and three runs, walking two and striking out five in seven innings. The loss was the 198th of his career.

Montreal catcher Darrin Fletcher reaches for a fair ball hit by Philadelphia's Pete Incaviglia.

The Cubs jumped in front in the second inning when Sammy Sosa led off with a walk and took third on a single by Rey Sanchez. Sosa then scored when Castillo beat shortstop Alex Arias' throw for an infield single.

Rick Wilkins doubled with one out in the fourth and scored on Sanchez's second single to make it 2-0.

Castillo added his second single in the seventh, scoring from first when left fielder Greg Briley dropped Dwight Smith's fly ball in the corner.

The Marlins twice wasted leadoff doubles. Briley doubled in the second and reached third on an infield out. But Castillo struck out Hough and then, after walking Chuck Carr, he got Bret Barberie to fly out.

Braves 2, Mets 1

ATLANTA — Pinch-hitter Brian Hunter's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the ninth inning gave the Atlanta Braves a victory over the New York Mets.

Braves starter Tom Glavine (8-3) snapped a three-game losing streak, allowing six hits without a strikeout or walk. The left-hander threw just 79 pitches and recorded 13 first-pitch outs.

Jeff Blauser opened the ninth with an infield single off Eric Hillman (0-3), who had just replaced New York starter Bret Saberhagen. Blauser was sacrificed to second. David Justice singled off first baseman Eddie Murray's glove and Blauser went to third.

John Franco relieved and walked Ron Gant intentionally, loading the bases. Hunter, hitting for Sid Bream, lofted a fly ball to center field on a 3-2 pitch and the play had a bizarre ending as Murray cut off the throw home near the pitcher's mound.

It was the Braves' fourth victory in five games and the Mets 10th loss in 12. The Mets beat the Braves 7-4 Monday night and have not won consecutive games since April 16-17.

Saberhagen allowed five hits over eight innings with four strikeouts and no walks.

Padres 3, Astros 0

HOUSTON — Phil Plantier had three hits and drove in two runs and Fred McGriff homered and tripled to lead the San Diego Padres over the Houston Astros.

Wally Whitehurst (2-3) allowed three hits in 6 2-3 innings and struck out three and walked three. Rich Rodriguez allowed two hits in one inning and Gene Harris gave up one more in the final 1 1-3 for his 10th save as Houston was shut out for the second time this season and lost for the fifth time in seven games.

Astros starter Pete Harnisch (6-4) went seven innings and gave up two runs, one earned, on five hits while striking out nine and walking two. The lose was Harnisch's first in six decisions this season in the Astrodome.

Reds 10, Giants 5

CINCINNATI — Kevin Mitchell and Reggie Sanders homered and the Cincinnati Reds beat San Francisco to end the Giants' four-game winning streak.

Tim Belcher (5-4) stopped Cincinnati's three-game losing streak, driving in the go-ahead run early and holding San Francisco to eight hits over 6 1-3 innings.

Mitchell's leadoff homer, his eighth of the year, extended his hitting streak to 10 games.

Cardinals 6, Pirates 3

ST. LOUIS — Bernard Gilkey tied his career-high with four RBIs and the St. Louis Cardinals sent the skidding Pittsburgh Pirates to their sixth straight loss.

St. Louis has won five of six, while the Pirates have dropped nine of 10. The three-time defending NL East champions played their first game since center fielder Andy Van Slyke broke his right collarbone after hitting the wall trying to make a catch Monday night. Pittsburgh, which started five rookies, has lost eight in a row on the road.

Expanded playoffs likely to see approval

Associated Press

DENVER — Baseball owners are expected to expand their playoffs for the first time in 25 years when they gather for a two-day quarterly meeting that begins Wednesday.

No other major decisions are forseen as the owners, now without a commissioner for nine months, continue their tortoise-like pace toward restructuring.

Owners have been unable to develop a consensus on a successor to Fay Vincent or even a definition of the next commissioner's duties. Some teams want the search to be postponed until after collective bargaining with the players' union this winter. Some clubs advocate hiring a commissioner but not giving him authority over these labor talks. Some candidates would refuse the job under these conditions.

"That could be a problem,' John Harrington of the Boston Red Sox said Tuesday. "We'll have to wait and see."

Bill Bartholomay of the Atlanta Braves, chairman of the search committee, said work was ongoing. However, the ruling executive council still has not issued the draft report on how the commissioner's job would be restructured.

American League president Bobby Brown said there would be discussion, but no decisions, on how to deal with the increase in on-field fights. Council chairman Bud Selig said no vote would be taken on plans to go to three divisions in 1995 and start interleague play.

Owners will vote Thursday on expanding the playoffs to a third tier in 1994, pending the approval of the Major League Baseball Players Association.

"The No. 1 team in the East would play the No. 2 team in the West in a 3-of-5 series and vice versa," said Harrington, chairman of the schedule format committee.

Harrington said owners also will discuss an alternative plan that would have the two division winners next season joined by the two teams with the next-best records.

1. Help your reader visualize the item you have for sale. You will sell your merchandise much more quickly if you include a very specific and accurate description of the item in the ad copy. You should include all of the essential details of an effective one-column ad—age, condition, size, brand name and price.

2. Let your reader know when and where to contact you. There is nothing more frustrating then trying to make a call only to receive no answer. Don't make it difficult for potential buyers to contact you! Be sure to include in your ad the hours you will be home to answer inquiries about the items you have to sell. Remember, a potential customer probably will not call twice!

3. Don't use abbreviations. Nvr. frust. a pot. cust. w. abb. You want to make the process of reading your ad easy for your potential customer. Most readers will not take the time to try to decipher confusing ad copy. Limit your use of abbreviations to the following ten: approx. (approximately), ave. (avenue), blvd. (boulevard), bldg. (building), condo (condominium), rec. room (recreation room), refrig. (refrigerator), rd. (road), sq. ft. (square foot), st. (street).

4. Choose a consistent ad schedule. To insure great results, plan to run your ad for several days. If you run the ad only once, you run the risk of missing the buyer most in need of what you have to offer. If you run the ad for several days, you will draw the maximum response. Remember, you can always cancel the ad as soon as you find a buyer!

DELIVERY
MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

Often Asked ????
Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!
Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
