Callers light up Child Find switchboard

NEW PALTZ, N.Y. (AP) — A TV movie about a lost boy drew a ringing response from viewers: after the faces of 55 missing children flashed on the screen, callers lit up the switchboard at Child Find Inc. to offer clues about lost youngsters.

Even before the broadcast, one missing child who saw her picture in a magazine story on the show called and said she wanted to see her father again.

Child Find, which works to recover an estimated 2,000 missing American children, joined forces with NBC-TV on Monday night for the broadcast of "Adam," the story of a 6-year-old who disappeared on July 27, 1981, from a store in Hollywood, Fla.

Adam Walsh's severed head was found two weeks later, but the rest of his body was never found.

The film was supposed to "speak for the children," said the show's producer, Linda Otto. Ms. Otto and executive producer Joan Barnett, were at Child Find's office here to assist the 30 or so volunteers who answered phones and coordinated information that poured in after the film.

Since its founding in 1981, Child Find has located 595 missing children. Nationwide, about 150,000 children are reported missing annually. Roughly 50,000 of those cases are never solved, estimates Child Find.

Ms. Otto has done other work to help find missing children, includ-

Broker: They're not pulling deposits

A national business publication reported Monday that First National Bank of Midland had been notified "by a broker, believed to be Merrill Lynch & Co., that another $80.9 million of deposits will be withdrawn by year-end."

That brokerage wasn't Merrill-Lynch, said Landrum Henderson, resident vice president of Merrill-Lynch.

"Merrill-Lynch has no intention of pulling anything out of the First National Bank of Midland. We hope the bank weathers the storm and becomes a very strong bank again. We have marketed the CD's of First National Bank nationally in the past."

The allegation had been published by The Wall Street Journal.

Minister from China to meet with Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian headed into talks with President Reagan today, American officials were hoping his visit will enable the two countries to forge closer political, military and commercial ties.

After a midmorning meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Wu was due to have a 30-minute meeting with Reagan, a session with National Security Council officials and a luncheon with Vice President George Bush.

One issue certain to come up is the diplomatic fallout from Sunday's terrorist bombing in Burma, which killed four South Korean Cabinet officials.

The Korean question is a sensitive one in Sino-American relations because the two countries fought on opposite sides in the Korean war and still publicly disagree on that issue.

A senior U.S. official said Monday, however, that China has pursued a "constructive" policy recently in Korea despite its continuing public support for a withdrawal of American forces from South Korea.

Any threat to stability on the peninsula is viewed with considerable unease here because four major powers — the United States, the Soviet Union, China and Japan — each have a major stake in that region.

In recent weeks, Washington and Peking have demonstrated an ability to compromise on their differences over Taiwan and other issues in the interest of broadening their relationship.

China has objected to American weapons sales to Taiwan and also cut back on cultural ties with the United States after the Reagan administration granted political asylum last April to a top Chinese tennis player, Hu Na.

But the visit late last month to Peking of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger helped Sino-American relations reach perhaps their highest point since diplomatic relations were established more than four years ago.

In addition to laying the groundwork for an exchange of visits between Reagan and Chinese Premiere Zhao Ziyang early next year, the Weinberger visit also enhanced military cooperation between the two countries.

China presented Weinberger with a list of military items and said it wished to know whether the Reagan administration would approve their sale to China.

Elizabeth Bouvie, a cerebral palsy victim since birth, has checked herself into a California hospital hoping to be allowed to die with dignity.

Paralyzed woman wants to die

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Elizabeth Bouvia has had it with pity, sympathy and support. She doesn't want to see her parents, her husband, her friends. She's almost totally paralyzed, and she just wants to die.

Ms. Bouvia, 26, was born with cerebral palsy. Until her father drove her to Riverside General Hospital a month ago, she spent nine years building a life: earning a bachelor's degree in social work, starting on a master's, marrying.

From a wheelchair, she described why she wants an attorney to help her obtain her death wish.

"Death is letting go of all burdens. It is being able to be free of my physical disabilities and mental struggle to live."

Ms. Bouvia sees her other alternatives as life in a convalescent home or a continuing struggle outside.

"It's not that I don't have the will to live," she explained. "It's too much of a struggle to live within the system or depend on someone in the system. In reality, my disability is going to keep me from doing the living I want to do. I'm trapped in a useless body.

But her struggle to die may rival her former struggle to live.

"I made a couple inquiries (of attorneys), but so far no one will even talk to me. The (Riverside County) public defender says I need a private attorney, and the country legal services wouldn't even touch the case."

Leslie Rothenberg, a Los Angeles attorney who specializes in terminal illness cases, says he doesn't know "what the law has to offer her. The real issue has nothing to do with whether she is competent or has the capacity to understand her decision. The issue here is a woman who needs help."

She hasn't eaten for three weeks, but takes protein liquids and painkillers for arthritis. Her psychiatrist, Dr. Levan Cao, said she is "mentally really stable" and shows no signs of clinical depression.

"If I really could, I would go out there and kill myself. But I can't. I physically can't. Unfortunately, I have a brain. It makes it all the worse. If I were retarded or senile, I wouldn't know the difference to care."

Ms. Bouvia's parents, Ren and Joan Castner, separated when she was 5, then divorced. Castner is retired in Bandon, Ore. He sends money to his daughter but admits she always "was really on her own."

Her mother remarried and put Ms. Bouvia, then 10 years old, in the Angel View Crippled Childrens Foundation in Desert Hot Springs. The two saw each other twice between then and Ms. Bouvia's 18th birthday — once for a two-month trip through Europe — but aren't in touch now.

Parents should listen when children talk about sexual abuse

Editor's Note: From the newborn to the elderly, from the poor to the wealthy, abuse is found in every category of human life. This six-part series explores various forms of abuse and the impact on its victims. Where first names of the victims are used, these names are fictitious. But the stories are true. This third article looks at sexual abuse.

Abuse

The unreported epidemic

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

It's called the "best kept secret." But nine times out of ten, a child will let it out.

The secret is commonly known as sexual abuse. Specifically, it's incest or sexual assault.

About 90 to 95 percent of reported sexual abuse cases are valid, according to Sue Smith, child protective services' supervisor at the Department of Human Resources in Midland.

"Any abuse to a child is ugly, whatever it is," she said. "There are times it makes my stomach turn, but it feels good to intervene to get the help needed.

"If you don't deal with sexual abuse right away, it can stay with the child forever," she added.

Because permissible childhood sexual behavior varies in accordance with cultural, family and social tolerances, sexual abuse — especially incest — is not an easy phenomenon to define, said Miriam Nisenbaum, program specialist/director of Stars for Children-Child Abuse Prevention Center in Dallas.

"It's always happened," Ms. Nisenbaum said. "It's being reported more, especially sexual abuse."

"It's probably being reported more," Ms. Smith said. "Incest has been with us since the beginning of time."

While the actual number of sexually abused children in the U.S. is unknown, the American Humane Association (AHA) predicted at least 4,000 cases occur in every large city.

Ms. Nisenbaum and Ms. Smith agreed when a child leaks the slightest whisper of sexual abuse, parents should take it seriously. A child may indicate sexual abuse through behavior, or tell another person.

"I've worked with more than 500 kids and never had a child lie about being sexually abused," Ms. Nisenbaum said. "Believe it. I've had kids who are the biggest liars, but never, never had one that lied about sexual abuse."

Sue Smith

Midland's District Attorney Vern Martin doesn't agree.

"(Children) are not as likely to lie," he said. "Their age factor and motivation for lying is different from adults.

"But, that's naive to think that children cannot lie," Martin added. "However, that doesn't mean when the issue is raised that every avenue should not be taken to investigate."

"Six-year-olds don't make this up," Ms. Smith said. "Chances of imaginary sexual abuse are slim, particularly the way the secret comes out. You can nearly always determine whether someone is making up a story. But again, six-year-olds don't make up these stories."

Why does sexual abuse happen?

"If you're a three-year-old who loves daddy and daddy says put your shoes up, you do," explained Ms. Smith. "When it's sexual abuse, that child doesn't really know what's happening."

Ms. Nisenbaum said children have been given the wrong message.

"For so long parents said don't take candy from strangers, don't get into a car. That wasn't a clear message. Today parents should say: 'your body is your body and not anybody — not mommy, not daddy, not anybody — has the right to touch you in a way you don't want to be touched.' Unfortunately, you must get explicit. Parents need to take that responsibility."

While experts have found more women physically abuse their children, more men sexually abuse them. But the mothers usually know about it.

"She (mother) may be terrorized," Ms. Nisenbaum said. "She doesn't want to believe it. That's a powerful responsibility. Think about it — you married this guy who is sexually abusing your daughter or son."

According to social workers, pyschologists and literature, the type of mother who allows her child to be sexually abused has a low self-esteem with no skills and needs to stay with her husband for economic reasons.

Studies indicate abusers are usually men who sexually abuse girls and boys. But women may abuse children as well. Also, the stereotype of the "dirty old man" doesn't always hold true. According to one study, half of all the abusers were under 31 years of age with only 10 percent over 50. The majority of all sexual abuse was committed by someone the family knows and trusts — a family member, relative, babysitter or neighbor. Lastly, victims of sexual abuse could grow up to sexually abuse children, or marry or live with someone who does.

Midland Rape Crisis Center has a 24-hour hotline — 682-RAPE — for not only adult rape victims, but also sexually abused children. Parents can call and proper referrals will be made.

Nan Gordon, director of the center, said half of the 91 rape reports this year have been children.

"We have films available to the schools," she said. "This is a preventative measure. We've had children (who viewed the film) who didn't realize they could tell anybody about it (sexual abuse)."

Ms. Gordon said volunteers at the center offer to help the parent and child who are affected. They encourage reporting the abuse to the police and offer para-professional counseling.

While the causes of sexual abuse are complex and vary from person to person, it's thought to be a result of emotional or psychological problems, experts said.

"Individuals (abusers) tend to be immature," said Midland Psychologist Dr. Jim Olson. "They're impulsive and have an inability to delay gratification. And when they're triggered, they are vulnerable to sexually arousing kids. They don't or haven't learn to suppress sexually."

Ms. Nisenbaum added sexual abuse is not usually done in a violent way, but a nurturing way.

"Sexual abuse is done out of love, but the parent's view is distorted," said John Young, director of Midland Family Services.

According to Olson, people who are "going to seek out counseling" for any kind of abuse or neglect are "smarter and more educated." Because sexual abuse not ony affects the victim, but also the abuser and family, it is imperative to seek help, according to experts.

Agencies such as child abuse centers, child welfare or child protective services should be contacted immediately, if a person suspects sexual abuse of a child. Under the law, it is a misdeamenor not to report any suspicion of abuse or neglect, according to Ms. Smith.

She said reports are kept anonymous and complaints are prioritized.

"We focus on reuniting the family and go to great lengths to provide resources," Ms. Smith said, adding child welfare assists in teaching parents how to parent.

"When we get a (sexual abuse) complaint, we frequently go out with the sheriff," she said. "Depending on the age, severity and reaction of the parents, we decide whether or not to place the child into foster care.

"I never bat an eye in removing a four, five or six-year-old," Ms. Smith said. "It's a real disruptive time for the family, particularly if the child must testify. Usually children want to be back with the parents, they just want the activity to stop."

Family and individual counseling help the family get through the situation, according to Young. The victim can develop a number of long-range emotional problems if counseling is not sought.

"The (female) child can grow up to be promiscuous to prove 'I'm loveable,'" he said. "There is a belief (in the child) that I'm bad, I need to be punished. Therefore, putting myself through a number of bad relationships.

"There can also be the fear of relationships with men. How can I trust him? And if he finds out I'm soiled, will he still love me?"

If a parent learns his child is being sexually abused:

— don't deny the problem — believe the child.

— control emotions — fear and anger are normal reactions, but can frighten a child.

— give emotional support — tell the child he or she is not to blame.

— get information — find out as much as possible to the events leading up to, during and after the incident.

— get medical assistance — contact a physician promptly for treatment of any physical injury and seek out counselors for emotional injury.

Memories of being abused as child haunt woman

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Julie squirmed and wiggled in an attempt to stop her uncle from fondling her. She knew there was something "not right" about the way he was touching her.

She was 10 years old the summer she visited her "favorite uncle" who lived in East Texas.

"My sister and I were fighting," the Midland woman remembered. "My uncle said I could sleep with him. I lay there.

"Then, then, he began feeling me. I froze."

Julie returned home. She said she withdrew, became quiet. She wanted to tell her parents, but only said enough so she wouldn't have to go back for another visit.

"I never thought it affected me, until I got into counseling," she said. "Then all kinds of memories began to flow.

"I always remembered the incident with my uncle, but it wasn't until I was an adult I remembered what my step-father did."

Now in her late 20s, Julie shudders at the thought of anyone entering her bedroom without calling out first.

It was her step-father who caused her fear. When she was a child, he'd sneak in her room at night.

"He used to come in a lot. I remember being in the bathroom and him walking in. He'd look at me. Just look at me and smile."

One time — maybe at age 9, 10 or even 11, Julie can't or won't remember — she woke up crying. Her buttocks ached. Julie's father sat on her bed, "rubbing something, maybe medicine on me."

Although she doesn't want to readily admit it, Julie said she thinks her step-father sodomized her.

"My mother had every clue what was going on," she said. "I was a shy, reserved little angel. The prime victim. My step-father would beat us, but he was always easier on me. I was his little princess who he'd always put on his lap.

"I remember telling my mother my bottom hurt. She would never recognize this. For anything else, we'd go to the doctor. For this, she said it was worms."

When Julie's uncle died, the family gathered for the funeral. Julie couldn't show any emotion.

"I sat through my uncle's funeral pinching myself, trying to make myself cry. I couldn't. He was my favorite uncle. I hated him for what he did to me."

Consequently, every man Julie met paid for her uncle and step-father's actions. She fell into a cycle of choosing men who beat or sexually abused her.

"When I was young, I hated men. If anyone asked me to sleep over, I'd ask if their father was going to be home. I went from a straight A student to hell on wheels in the 7th grade.

"This freaked everybody out. I did a complete flip-flop. I got into trouble."

By the time Julie was 15, she had been in and out of court. A judge ordered that she live with another relative.

"I couldn't go, so I got pregnant and married."

Three years later, she had two children. She had sexual difficulties. She got divorced.

"I ended up living with another man," Julie said. "He beat me. He was real sick. One minute he was nice, the next minute he beat me.

"Where could I go? I had two kids, no education, no car — nothing. I called my mother, she said 'no,' so I stayed.

"One time he tied me to a coffee table, forced drugs down me and beat me."

Julie said the incident lasted three days. Her boyfriend jerked the phones out of the wall, locked her in the house and abused her. When her brother came to the door, Julie tried to scream. Her boyfriend smothered her cry. No one came.

When the man "came back to reality, I got away." Her mother took her back.

It was then Julie began abusing alcohol and drugs.

"I felt that men were horrible. I was dirty. I had to have done something to make men react to me. Alcohol and pills were a relief. They were a symptom of my abuse.

"As a small child, I remember asking God: why am I here? I'm just a kid. Why is this happening?"

Through counseling Julie has learned to forgive. She's regained faith. She's kicked alcohol and drugs.

"How do you get over the anger? You don't. But you learn to forgive with the help of God. I can love again. It takes time. It took a lot of time for the anger to develop."

Julie said her healing began when she talked to other sexually abused women. She said she's still "learning how to make love and there are times I don't want anyone to touch me. But I keep good, positive people around me and I pray. I pray all the time."

Bodies of Korean officials returned home

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The bodies of 16 South Korean officials killed by a bomb in Burma arrived home today as tens of thousands of people, some writing anti-communist slogans with their own blood, rallied to blame North Korea for the attack.

Prime Minister Kim Sang-hyup and the surviving members of the Cabinet stood alongside grieving relatives as the special flight from Rangoon arrived at Kimpo International Airport. Four Cabinet members were killed in the attack Sunday.

By midday, more than 100,000 people were reported to have gathered to express outrage at the bombing. In one of the largest rallies, about 5,000 people demonstrated in the southern city of Taegu.

As the crowds protested the bombing, the government set up a committee to monitor the nation's economy and forestall possible economic confusion or unrest.

President Chun Doo-hwan, who narrowly missed the bombing at a ceremonial site in Rangoon because his motorcade was delayed, lost his trusted top aides for economic affairs in the massacre which claimed four Cabinet officials.

Among the dead were Deputy Prime Minister-Economic Planning Ministr Suh Suk-joon and Dr. Kim Jae-ik, chief presidential secretary for economic affairs, both credited with being instrumental in the formation of major economic policies.

Thunderstorms forecast across state

By The Associated Press

A gust of chilly air rushed into the Texas Panhandle early today as forecasters looked for scattered thunderstorms to crisscross the state and the mercury to drop to seasonably cool readings.

Partly cloudy skies dotted the Panhandle while a ridge of high pressure kept skies clear over the rest of Texas before dawn. Some patchy fog formed across Southeast Texas and along the upper coast.

Pre-dawn temperatures were mostly in the 60s. Readings at 4 a.m. ranged from 58 at Amarillo to 72 at Galveston.

Northwesterly winds near 20 mph buffeted the Amarillo area, while breezes near 15 mph were noted across the Edwards Plateau and South Plains. The rest of the state reported light and variable winds.

Forecasters expected scattered thunderstorms to develop through Wednesday as the cool front moved southward. Most of the shower activity was expected to hit North Central and West Texas.

Temperatures in the middle 30s were forecast for the Panhandle tonight, while the mercury was expected to dip into the 50s and 60s over the rest of the state. Cooler conditions were on tap for the entire state Wednesday.

Thunderstorms linger over Midwest

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms lingered over areas from Colorado to Iowa and Kansas today as rain spread out over much of the Upper Mississippi valley.

Scattered showers hit the Northern and Central Plains and snow blanketed the higher mountain peaks of northern and central Colorado. Along the southern Atlantic coast and central Gulf coast states scattered showers developed, turning into thunderstorms along the coast of Florida.

Elsewhere, skies were generally clear.

Rain and golfball-size hail pummeled areas of Nebraska Monday as showers and thunderstorms were widely scattered from Texas to Minnesota across the center of the nation.

ing producing a segment for the ABC-TV news magazine "20-20."

"I've always been of an old-fashioned opinion — if you make a good informative movie about an important issue, people will want to watch it," she said. She predicted about 40 million viewers.

The movie dramatized the lives of John and Reve Walsh, whose attempts to find their son led them to persuade Congress to change laws to ease the search for other parents of missing children.

At the end of the two-hour film, photos of 55 missing children were shown as Walsh read the childrens' names. At the end of that two-minute segment, Child Find's toll-free number was flashed on the screen.

Less than a minute later, callers who thought they recognized faces on the screen lit up all 10 of Child Find's incoming telephone lines. It wasn't immediately clear if the calls would provide information that would lead to recovery of a missing child.

But before the movie started, a teen-age girl called to report that she was one of those whose photographs were carried in a TV Guide story about missing children. She told Child Find that she wanted to be reunited with the father who was looking for her.

Child Find asked that the name of the girl not be released, nor the circumstances of her disappearance, until her identity was confirmed.

Ms. Otto is a founder and president of Find the Children, a national organization that raises funds to support Child Find and other more regional groups. Find the Children also works for legislation to fight child abductions.

Child Find, the only national organization of its kind, is mostly privately funded, according to the group's founder, Gloria Yerkovich. She spent $40,000 in borrowed money, appeared on network television and argued with officials from Ulster County, N.Y., to Washington, D.C. in her search for a daughter she last saw in 1974.

Woman with cerebral palsy has death wish

Although her mother had legal custody, Castner conceded he was partly responsible for his daughter's institutionalization.

"If you want to know the basic truth, I was a little cold. I told her mother we've got to get her to an institution that can handle her. The time came when she (Elizabeth's mother) couldn't handle it and neither could I."

When she was released from Angel View at 18, Ms. Bouvia visited her father — then working in Seattle — and began making her own life.

"She said, 'I want to do it on my own. I don't want to be a burden on you,'" he recalled. "She's got a lot of guts, that little Liz..."

Through the California Department of Rehabilitation she met Sheila Velez, a paraplegic and counselor from the Riverside County community of Corona. They were very close — until her death wish arose.

Ms. Bouvia enrolled at Riverside City College, then transferred to San Diego State University. She needed 24-hour home care and a secretary to help with dictation, but earned her bachelor's and started on a master's degree.

She married Richard Bouvia, but after a tense week with his parents in Iowa, she went to her father in Oregon.

Ms. Bouvia said her husband couldn't cope with her paralysis or their debts. They separated after a month; she doesn't want to know where he is.

Ms. Velez, her counselor and friend, says she can't help now.

"Elizabeth has done it practically by herself...But it's also debilitating mentally to handle that no matter where you go, you're alone...I will fight with her when she wants to fight to live, but I can't help her fight to die."

Cornoner Noguchi writes about Monroe death

NEW YORK (AP) — Sex-symbol Marilyn Monroe was laughing happily a half-hour before she died, had a mysterious bruise on her back and seemed to be reaching for the telephone when her body was found, and those mysteries remain unexplained, a new book says.

Dr. Thomas Noguchi, former chief medical examiner of Los Angeles County, says that controversy will surround the screen star's death until her complete FBI file and notes and interviews from the suicide panel are made public.

A deputy medical examiner when he performed the autopsy on the legendary sex symbol, Noguchi discusses the case in his new book, "Coroner," to be published next month by Simon and Schuster.

Miss Monroe died of a drug overdose Aug. 4, 1962, and her nude body was found the next day sprawled on a bed in her Los Angeles home. Noguchi said her death was a "very probable" suicide. An investigation of the death last year did not answer all remaining questions, he said.

"There was no way, for example, it could determine the source of the bruise on Monroe's hip," Noguchi writes. "Nor why she was laughing happily with Joe DiMaggio, Jr. at 7:30 p.m. and dying only 30 minutes later. And what did the outstretched hand on the telephone mean?"

The Los Angeles district attorney last December rejected allegations made by a private detective that Miss Monroe had been murdered and concluded that her death was either a suicide or resulted from an accidental overdose of barbituates.

The county coroner at the time ruled her death a suicide.

Noguchi said he found a fresh bruise on Miss Monroe's lower left back just above the hip and it is not known how she received it.

Shortly before she died, she was laughing and chatting with DiMaggio, the son of her ex-husband, baseball player Joe DiMaggio.

"Yet — and this was one of the strangest facts of the case — not 30 minutes after that happy conversation, Marilyn Monroe was dying," the book says.

A panel of psychological experts interviewed the late actress' friends, family and associates to determine her psychological background and whether she was capable of suicide. They were promised confidentiality and all notes from the panel have not been released, Noguchi said.

The FBI kept a file on Miss Monroe because she had been friendly with President John F. Kennedy and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. But the files given to the district attorney's office had been censored, Noguchi said.

"Why were the FBI files on a movie actress censored in the first place?" Noguchi said. "What national security concerns could be involved?"

Noguchi, 56, was demoted in April 1982 from chief medical examiner to the post of physician-specialist amid allegations of mismanagement and that he had made inappropriate comments about some celebrity deaths. He filed suit last June suing Los Angeles County for $1 million for reinstatement.

Investigators think men shot over football game

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A 21-year-old man has been charged with murder in the deaths of two men investigators speculated were shot to death during an argument over a football game.

Albert Jones Jr., 21, of Orient, was charged Monday with one count of murder in connection with the Sunday shootings. Bond was set at $200,000 by Tom Green County Peace Justice Ruth Nicholson.

The names of the victims, a 52-year-old Grape Creek man and a 22-year-old man who carried an Alaska driver's license, were withheld by police pending notification of their families.

"They were apparently shot while arguing over a football game with a third person," said Tom Green County Peace Justice Ed Harris, who ordered autopsies on both bodies.

District Attorney Gerald Fohn would not say why only one murder count was filed against Jones. He said if he elaborated it could jeopardize the prosecution's case.

Chief Deputy Raymond Meador said the bodies were discovered about 10 a.m. Monday in the living room of Jones' parent's house, a mile north of Orient, a small community 13 miles north of San Angelo. He would not say who found the bodies.

Meador said he thought Jones and the victims were acquaintances, but he declined to speculate how the men knew each other or why they might have been together Sunday.

Both men were shot at least once in the head, Meador said.

"One of the victims was apparently shot in the head while lying on the floor watching TV," said sheriff's Lt. Bill McCloud. "It looks like he was struck in face when he turned and looked up at his killer.

"The second victim had dark powder burns on his arms, indicating that he tried to shield his face from the gunshot," McCloud said.

Investigator Pete Skains said Jones' parents were not at home at the time of the shootings.

Ultralight plane buyer may be key to murder

SHERMAN (AP) — The name of a customer who was to meet three men to buy an ultralight plane could be the key to solving their execution-style slayings and the fatal shooting of a fourth man who came to investigate, police say.

To find the customer's identity, officers said Monday they plan to hypnotize the widow of one of the victims to see what she remembers of the transaction scheduled at an isolated hangar.

The bodies of B&B Ranch owner and Denison building contractor Bob Tate, 51; Grayson County sheriff's deputy Philip Good, 29; Sherman painting contractor Jerry Brown, 51; and former Sherman police officer Ronald Mayes, 37, were found in the hangar on Tate's North Texas ranch Saturday night.

Relatives said a one-seat ultralight aircraft marked with Tate's initials was missing from the building.

Ultralight planes are powered by a two-stroke engine and can fly up to 200 miles on a five-gallon tank of fuel, said David Dutson, spokesman for Rotec Engineering Inc., an ultralight manufacturer.

A preliminary autopsy report showed that Mayes was shot five times as he apparently tried to run for his life. The other three men were shot twice in the head, the report said.

The bodies of Tate, Good and Brown were found covered by a carpet a few feet from pools of blood on the hangar floor and on a card table.

Mayes' body had been dragged almost 9 feet and was lying in a pool of blood against a side door, Driscoll said.

Funeral services were scheduled today for Good, Brown and Mayes. A funeral for Tate will be held Wednesday in Denison.

Grayson County Sheriff Jack Driscoll, an investigative hypnotist, said he planned to question Marlene Good under hypnosis after her late husband's funeral to see if she can recall the name of the customer the men were to meet.

Driscoll said the deaths did not appear to be a "random killing."

"This is not someplace you would spot off the road," he said of the hilltop ranch. "You really can't see it at all from the road. You'd have to know it was here."

Brown's daughter, Lynn, said Brown, Good and Tate had gone to the hangar at 4 p.m. to meet a man from Dallas who was going to buy the plane for $4,000.

Mayes, who lived within sight of the Tate ranch, knew the men were in the hangar, became curious when they never opened its doors and went over to investigate, said his uncle, George Barbee of Dallas.

Representative's year of bad luck 'a doozer'

WASHINGTON (AP) — "I've had 22 years of good luck and one year of bad luck in public office," Texas Rep. Charles Wilson said. "And (the one year) has been a doozer."

Wilson made the remark in July, shortly after the Justice Department announced it would not prosecute him on drug charges, saying it had found "insufficient admissible, credible evidence to support criminal charges."

But the department's investigation into allegations that Wilson had used cocaine had earned him a half-year of unfavorable publicity. And Wilson — who termed the allegations "ridiculous" — was anxious for life to return to normal.

Then the other shoe dropped. One rainy evening in August the car Wilson was driving was involved in an accident on a bridge crossing the Potomac River.

Police said Wilson's car struck another vehicle, then left the scene. Wilson said he thought he had only hit a guard rail. He paid a $25 traffic fine, and also the price of another spate of unfavorable publicity.

Rep. Charles Wilson

Now Wilson, 50, a Democrat from Lufkin who has never faced serious challenge in his conservative East Texas district, fears all that publicity may take its toll in next year's elections. And for the first time, he is gearing up for a tough fight.

"...I do expect it to be troublesome. I mean you'd be a fool not to," Wilson said recently. "Because some people are going to say 'where there's smoke, there's fire...'"

Wilson, who was first elected to Congress in 1972 after 11 years in the state Legislature, said "I figure that I'll have to expend more energy and time and money than I have defending the seat in any of the other five elections" in which he has sought re-election to Congress.

Wilson's campaign fund-raising committee wound up his last campaign with $35,000 in debts, debts that had jumped to more than $57,000 by June 30, according to reports on file with the Federal Election Commission.

But recently Wilson moved to replenish his campaign coffers with a fund-raiser at a trendy Georgetown cabaret, which guests paid $500 a couple to attend.

Wilson estimated the event raised between $80,000 and $100,000, and indicated it was only the beginning of a concentrated effort to raise money for next year's elections.

"I've never been a very aggressive fund-raiser because I've never needed to," Wilson said. "But I expect to be pretty aggressive this year."

In the 1981-1982 election cycle, Wilson raised about $211,000 in campaign contributions, more than $123,000 of it from political action committees (PACs) representing various interest groups, his campaign finance reports show.

This time around, Wilson said he expects to raise about $400,000.

But Wilson is also wrestling with a financial problem of a different sort.

In his personal financial disclosure report for last year, Wilson listed investment assets of between $416,000 and $1 million. However, he also showed liabilities of between $605,000 and $1.56 million.

Blind man sentenced in murder of daughter

TYLER (AP) — A blind man whose family was given money and gifts by sympathetic citizens after his 11-year-old daughter was found slain has been sentenced to 50 years in prison for killing the girl.

Eugene Curtis McRoy, 38, pleaded no contest Monday in the July 4, 1981, death of his daughter, Trisha, and was sentenced by State District Judge Donald Carroll.

In a written confession, McRoy admitted sexually molesting the girl and smothering her with a pillow when she cried out.

In the confession, McRoy described how he drank heavily all day, then got up during the night and went into the living room where his daughter was sleeping.

When he began to molest her, the girl cried out, "Daddy, don't, Daddy," the confession said.

"I heard a noise in the other room, so I put the pillow over her face so she wouldn't holler," said McRoy in the confession. "I held it down pretty tight for approximately five minutes. She was kicking and wiggling. I didn't hear no racket, so I removed the pillow and she was dead. She wasn't breathing."

McRoy said after he realized the girl was dead, "I just sat there and cried and thought about the horrible thing I had done."

McRoy said he woke his wife and told her the girl was dead. His wife wanted to call the police, but McRoy said he threatened to kill her and the couple's other two children if she did not help him dispose of the body.

The two loaded the girl's body into their car and drove to a bridge over a creek about five miles from their home, where McRoy removed the girl's clothes and dumped her body into the water, McRoy said.

He said the next morning, after slashing a screen door, he called the sheriff's department and reported the girl missing.

The McRoys held a news conference on July 7, 1981, to announce a $50,000 reward, donated by an anonymous Tyler man, for the girl's safe return.

The next day, a fisherman found the girl's body in the creek.

"I won't give up hope. I know I'll get her back because I have the good Lord with me," McRoy tearfully told reporters after the body was found. "I hope they find whoever did this. Maybe that would prevent some other girl having to die like this."

Texas schools pool resources for accelator

HOUSTON (AP) — Four state universities are pooling their resources in an attempt to persuade the federal government that a multi-billion dollar device to help scientists study the atom should be located in Texas.

The machine would accelerate parts of atoms to tremendous speeds, causing them to collide and giving observers a chance to study the basic building blocks of matter, officials said.

The participating schools are Texas A&M, the University of Houston, Rice University and the University of Texas.

McIntyre described the proposed accelerator as "the largest microscope ever built to view the smallest structures ever seen."

"After Howdy Doody, Stanley is the most exciting man I ever met."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, Oct. 12, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Happy Birthday to you, Luciano Pavarotti, comedian and civil rights activist Dick Gregory, Susan Anton and comedian Joan Rivers! You make the most progress when you follow a regular routine. Family members find a way to help you move ahead in business or career. Put the past behind you and concentrate on preparing for the future. Although you may think yourself overqualified for a job, you should go after it with enthusiasm. Someone influential is watching to see how you handle a delay or setback. Stay cool. An air of confidence works wonders. Confide only in those who are always discreet.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ignore a co-worker's negative comments. A romance with someone who is newly single requires patience. Students get financial aid. An opportunity is not what someone says it is. Travel proves advantageous.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone who has felt frustrated for several years finds a new career. Age is not the impediment you thought it to be. A co-worker tries to play matchmaker, not knowing your situation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Give people time to adjust to changes. Honesty is the best policy when it comes to solving a financial dilemma. Credit is extended when you level with those in charge.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stop trying to solve everyone else's problems. You cannot always rescue friends from their folly. Your admiration for someone grows once you get over a crush and accept his/her friendship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Slow down and pursue one goal at a time. You may have too many responsibilities on your plate. Confide in romantic partner. Refuse to spend money you do not yet have.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone may be trying to manipulate you. Keep your guard up. Protect your ideas by putting them down on paper. Your concern for mate is unfounded. Celebrate with a candlelight dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You do well on a job interview or school test. Help expose something a competitor is trying to hide. A secretary gets an overdue promotion. Seek expert advice on a tax question.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An especially productive day for actors, researchers and marine biologists. Cut down on social activities until your finances improve. An old flame returns. Do not make the same mistakes as before.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Reintroduce an old idea. This time around, it will probably fly. Do not underestimate the help mate can give you in a business matter. Romance with a neighbor is a pleasant surprise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep an open mind. Success springs from an outrageous suggestion. Competition brings forth your best effort. An old-fashioned love relationship is what you want most. Pursue your dreams.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You need to break a bad habit that has been bothering others at both home and work. Your boss supplies an added incentive. Romance enjoys favorable influences. Speak kindly of people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid someone who is sarcastic. He/she could ruin your whole day. New business leads look promising. Your social contacts help you arrange financing for a special project.

Mr. Wizard returns to cable

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Mr. Wizard, who fascinated and delighted a generation of baby-boom youngsters in the Sputnik era, is back with the magic of science for children of the computer age.

Don Herbert, who launched his career as Mr Wizard on NBC in 1951, introduced "Mr. Wizard's World" this month on Nickelodeon, the children's cable TV channel.

"Mr. Wizard's World" will, like its forerunner, explain to 9-to 12-year-olds the magic and mystery of science.

In many respects, the new show resembles the old one. The new show has not become a high-tech, "Star Wars"-style extravaganza. Mr. Wizard still does his experiments in a workshop that looks like somebody's family room. And most of his tools are common household items, straight pins and thimbles, yardsticks and medicine droppers.

But this is the '80s, not the '50s, and "Mr. Wizard's World" is zippier than its black-and-white predecessor, which was broadcast live.

Each of the old show's episodes was devoted to a particular scientific subject friction, for example, or inertia.

The new show is organized like a news magazine. Each half-hour episode is divided into eight or 10 segments with titles like "Supermarket Science," "How It Works," and "Know Your Body."

Herbert has made at least one concession to new technology. He has added a small talking robot named Hero, which he uses to explain the workings of computers.

Herbert has retained what he thinks was one of the best features of the old show: the wide-eyed kids whose questions allow him nimbly to explain important scientific principles without delivering a lecture.

He uses no script. The children are given a couple of quick rehearsals immediately before the final taping, but the dialogue is essentially ad-libbed. And the tone of the show is set by the kindly Herbert, who may be the only man on television more avuncular than Walter Cronkite.

Herbert, 66, was trained as a science teacher, but his entire career has been in radio and television. The name "Mr. Wizard" came from an advertiser's suggestion that Herbert call himself "The Wizard." Herbert thought that a bit extravagant, so he toned it down with the addition of "Mr."

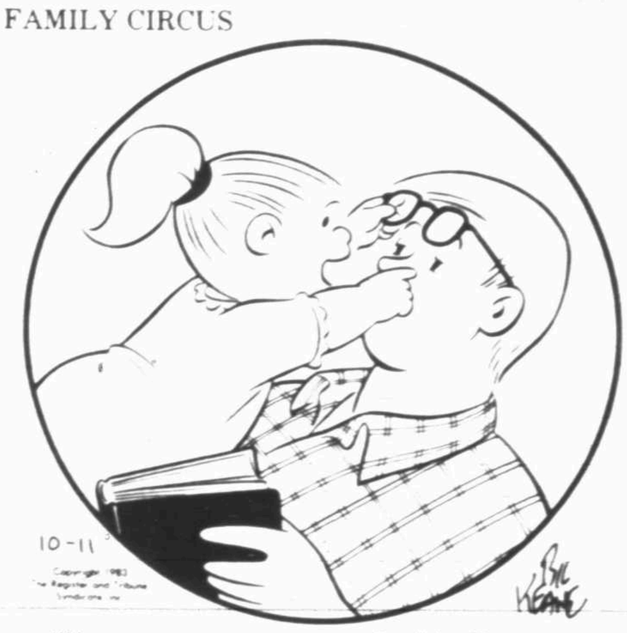

The show was broadcast on NBC from 1951 to 1965. Herbert immediately began making specials for educational television and producing science films for use in the classroom.

"Mr. Wizard" was briefly revived on NBC during the 1971-72 season, but was dropped again when corporate funding for the program dried up.

We are not usually enamored with a collection of bridge columns published in book form. But we might change our minds after reading "Improve Your Bridge with Oswald Jacoby" by Oswald & James Jacoby (McGraw-Hill, paperback, 140 pp., $4.95). The material is well chosen and arranged, and the 125 hands all have points of interest for the average reader. And the price is reasonable — no mean feat in these days of spiralling costs.

This hand from the book was brought to the authors' attention by one of the players who complained about his luck. It did not take long to decide what happened, and it was not poor luck that brought about the defeat of a seemingly impregnable contract. Rather, South was the victim of a masterful bit of chicanery by an astute defender.

"West must have opened the king of hearts. Needless to say, the U(nlucky) E(xpert) let it hold. Then West carefully shifted to the six of diamonds.

"A tough play to make, but quite logical if West studies all possibilities. West could see that South must hold the ace-jack of hearts and either the king of spades or ace of clubs. Should South hold the ace of clubs, nothing could hurt him. But look what did happen when East held that important card.

"South didn't dare try a diamond finesse. He had to assume that West held the ace of clubs. So South took dummy's ace of diamonds and played a club. East took his ace and cleared hearts for his partner.

"Now our unfortunate friend led a diamond. West cashed the diamond king and four hearts for down three.

"Unlucky indeed, but normal for our friend."

Watt's glass house

Before arriving at his decision to step aside as interior secretary, James Watt had to learn first-hand the true meaning of that old saying: Politicians (and those in the service of the public) live in glass houses.

It wasn't an easy lesson to learn, but it was unavoidable. Watt, who supporters have heralded as a strongly religious and decent public servant, simply stepped on too many toes in a position that mandates careful walking. In that way he became a political liability for his boss — President Ronald Reagan — and Republicans joined Democrats in calling for Watt's expulsion from the Cabinet. Oh, Reagan stood by Watt and probably would have continued to do so, which is commendable loyalty. But Watt committed too many blunders.

His slips of the tongue enraged various special interest groups and minorities. Even deeper, they hinted at an underlying callousness and insensitivity of the part of the Reagan administration. Dr. George Hulsey, a member of the board of directors of the National Wildlife Federation, verbalized that sentiment when he said, "I'm pleased to see James Watt gone, but to a certain extent, Watt got a raw deal. He was simply doing what Ronald Reagan wanted done as far as conservation is concerned."

If that is true, it places an even greater burden on Reagan's next interior secretary because no administration needs the reputation of a plunderer of the land. The American people want an interior secretary who will protect and manage their natural resources — their mountains, lakes, forests and deserts — for the benefit and enjoyment of them and future generations. That person must walk a fine line between protecting wilderness while allowing as full development as possible of energy reserves. That is the kind of replacement President Reagan needs to find for Jim Watt.

Watt's replacement should have one other outstanding quality. The new interior secretary should think before he or she speaks.

Cynical politics

A blue ribbon federal commission labored for three years to develop a reformed American immigration policy which was finally hammered into a bill by Sen. Alan Simpson, a Republican, and by Rep. Romano Mazzoli, a Democrat.

The bill, which has the support of spokesmen for both labor and industry, and was overwhelmingly passed by the Senate last Spring, has now been pigeon-holed by the House where it is expected to gather dust until at least 1985 — all because of an arbitrary decision by one man, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

O'Neill's said he feared the House would pass the bill only to have President Reagan veto it as an appeal for support from the Hispantic elements of the country.

When the alibi was blown away by the administration's request that the Speaker reconsider his decision, O'Neill took a new tack: The bill, he proclaimed, is opposed by Hispanic groups and has no genuine support.

O'Neill has conveniently overlooked the bi-partisan orgins of the bill and the bi-partisan backing it received in the Senate. He also had chosen to ignore the unemployment, welfare, and medical problems caused in many states by illegal aliens who continue to stream into the country. As one Western governor exasperatedly remarked recently, U.S. immigration policy presently is being shaped by people like Fidel Castro.

Olympics for all

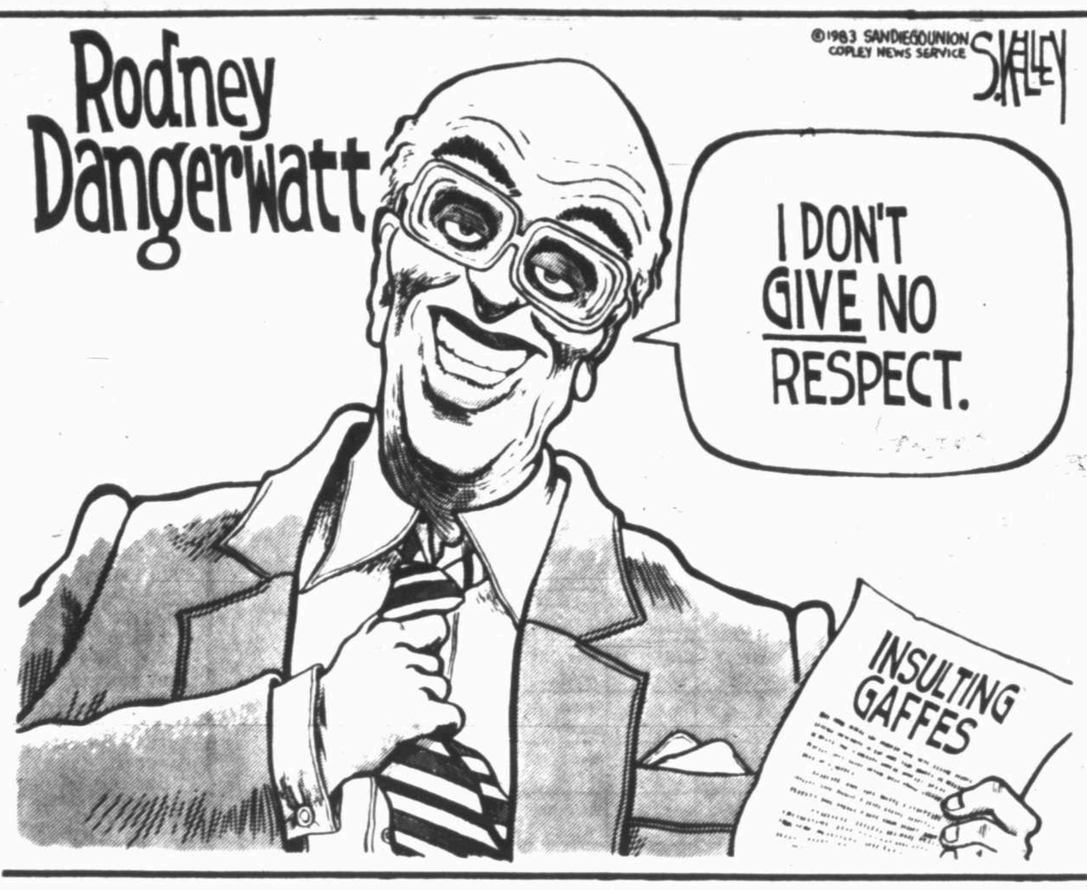

Politics encircles every Olympic Games the way flies plague a picnic, and the 1984 games in Los Angeles inevitably will be no exception. Even assuming the furor over the Soviet downing of a Korean airliner is but a dim memory by next summer, any number of nations can be expected to find various ways of making political propaganda out of an event that, in an ideal world, would be a celebration of individual achievement and international amity, without the nationalistic trappings that cloak contemporary Olympic events. Faced with this inevitability, it behooves Americans in particular, as hosts of the 1984 Games, to do as much as possible to minimize the damage.

In that spirit, a group of Los Angeles businessmen — two of them Korean-Americans with understandable bitterness toward the Soviet Union — would be well-advised to quietly and swiftly abandon the circulation of a petition they plan to submit to President Reagan, urging him to ban Soviet athletes from the Games. Like the unanimous vote of the California Legislature urging the same action, the petition is a misguided gesture that would unfairly punish Soviet athletes for the actions of their government and do incalculable harm to this country's reputation in the world.

Apart from being misguided, the "ban-the-Soviets" move overlooks the fact that this country is only the host of next year's summer Games. The International Olympic Committee has sole jurisdiction over who may participate, and the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee is obliged, as a creature of the Olympic movement, to accept the rules laid down. Any action by the U.S. government or the organizing committee to bar athletes from any accredited country could result, jusifiably, in the removal of the Games from the United States.

Fortunately neither President Reagan nor any significant group in Congress shows any sign of making a move to bar the Soviets from participating. What makes the Los Angeles petition harmful, though, is the way it feeds grist to the Soviet propaganda mill, which is already working overtime with stories about crime, air pollution, price-gouging and the general "unreliability" of this country as an international host. Much of that will continue anyway, but that's no reason for Americans to cooperate with the Kremlin ideologues. Far better to be gracious hosts to the whole world at a 1984 Olympiad that, with luck, will be remembered for its performances, not its politics.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Iran support could be vital

WASHINGTON — The Persian Gulf could erupt in an oil fire that would inflame the Middle East. To defend our access to these vital oil fields, the United States may even resort to military support, including "tactical nuclear warfare."

Jack Anderson

This is the somber warning of Dr. Robert Hunter, the former National Security Council official who helped author the "Carter Doctrine." Under that doctrine, which was proclaimed in 1980 and reaffirmed by the State Department only a few weeks ago, the United States is committed to defend the Persian Gulf "by any means necessary, including military force."

Hunter thinks our best course may be one that would have been unthinkable a couple years ago: increase support for Iran. Such a bizarre twist in U.S. foreign policy would take a lot of explaining. Here's the background:

The Iran-Iraq war is in danger of igniting the Persian Gulf oil fields — all because of irresponsible action by the French government. France has offered to sell super-sophisticated Etendard jets to Iraq, which has been bled white by the war. Facing military and economic collapse, Iraq has threatened to use the French warplanes for a desperate, come-from-behind victory effort: bombing Iran's oil refineries.

In angry response, Iran's cantankerous Ayatollah Khomeini has threatened to shut down the Strait of Hormuz, which would cut off the flow of Middle East oil on which West European industry depends. He might also order retaliatory raids against the Persian Gulf oil sheikdoms, which have supported Iraq.

Massed near the Iranian border, meanwhile, are 26 Soviet divisions, which are ready to roll if the Kremlin should choose to intervene. They have already staged a mock invasion of Iran.

The best way to avoid a catastrophe in the Persian Gulf would be to persuade the French to rescind their sale of the warplanes. "It is vital," Hunter told my associate Lucette Lagnado, "for the government of France to recognize its responsibilities in not raising the risk of a broader conflict."

This could be "devastating to western interests," Hunter said. He minced no words. He called the French decision to sell the planes "stupid and irresponsible."

So far, the United States has had no success in talking the headstrong French out of the plane deal. The Iraqis are suspected of hoping to provoke a crisis that would force the United States to support their war effort. Only by making clear to the Iraqis that this won't happen, Hunter argues, can Baghdad be steered away from its reckless use of the French jets.

But President Reagan may be forced to side with the irascible and unpopular Khomeini to keep the Russians from intervening. If the conflict escalates, the United States is committed to go to war, if necessary, to protect the Persian Gulf. Other sources confirmed Hunter's fear that tactical nuclear weapons might have to be used to defend the gulf.

The implications of such a move are staggering to contemplate, but the fact that the nuclear contingency has been discussed shows how seriously the White House takes the threat against the Persian Gulf. I have seldom seen the strategists in the backrooms so worried.

Meanwhile, the administration has asked our European allies to join in bringing pressure on the French to call off the plane sale.

FEUD OF THE WEEK: Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker has privately informed Treasury Secretary Donald Regan that he will no longer consult with — or even meet — Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel. The two men just don't get along.

Sprinkel is regarded as the Treasury's "Fed watcher," serving as the administration's liaison with the secretive board and monitoring its monetary policy.

The feud has a philosophical basis of sorts: Sprinkel has made no secret of his distaste for the Fed's loose-money policy, which he fears will reignite inflation.

But there's personal animosity as well. Earlier this year, Sprinkel had the temerity to campaign vigorously for Volcker's job. Volcker, a more experienced political infighter, won reappointment and isn't about to let his defeated rival dictate policy now.

INSIDE REPORT:

Nissan's utopia faces challenge

SMYRNA, Tenn. — Whether a 26-year-old paint shop robot technician named Teresa Harding stays happy once the new Nissan truck plant here goes into full production has profound significance for how labor relations will affect the automotive industry in the U.S.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

She carried a union card (United Rubber Workers) in a past job, and wants no part of one now. "Why do we need the UAW?" Harding asked us. "As long as the company treats us like they do now, I don't want the UAW digging into my paycheck. I can use the money myself." This is the prevailing sentiment among some 1,700 workers at the first U.S. subsidiary of the giant Japanese automaker, and it is unchallenged — even by the United Auto Workers.

But UAW organizer Jim Turner in nearby Nashville is confident that the non-union utopia at Smyrna will not survive the tumult in mid-1984 when 2,000 workers roll out 500 trucks daily, compared with the current 120. "Wait until a truck is slipping off the line every 45 seconds, and we'll see how happy they are without a union," he told us. He is betting that generous Nissan salaries and fringe benefits will not suffice. Nissan deals with unions in its Japanese plants, but they neither strike nor submit grievances.

Much is at stake here for the mighty UAW. The union's Democratic-endorsed local-content legislation, which would require partial American fabrication of Japanese cars, is implicitly based on the premise that all auto plants in this country eventually will be organized by the UAW. But so far the workers here like the non-union environment.

Indeed, the atmosphere at Smyrna does not in the least resemble Detroit but is a reasonable facsimile of what we saw a few months ago at Nissan's Zama auto plant near Tokyo. Although executives deny that this all-American factory copies the Japanese model, the impact of sending key employees to Japan for several weeks is obvious.

The morning mood — workers arriving early to play pingpong, widespread participation in voluntary calisthenics before work and management-labor group meetings starting the day — is peculiarly Japanese. This transplant, some 7,000 miles away into Middle Tennessee, manned from top to bottom with Americans, is made possible not only by the absence of UAW shop stewards but by a vastly different style of management.

Egalitarianism is the watchword. Executives and workers (called "technicians") eat in the same cafeterias, park their cars in unreserved lots and socialize together. "Marvin!" one worker with a suggestion shouted at Nissan U.S.A. President Marvin T. Runyon the other day. Runyon, 59, a tall, white-haired Texan with a somewhat forbidding presence, was seldom approached that way during 37 years at Ford. Familiarity is encouraged by the fact that he, like everybody, wears the same blue uniform with the first name written over the pocket.

That is cited by 26-year-old technician Terry Williams as a major reason for easy communication with management: "We all wear the same uniform. We all look alike." Bob Drake, director of quality and assurance, conceded to us that "it was a little hard to get used to" but that he now prefers it to the three-piece suits he wore as a senior executive at General Motors.

Executives and foremen with experience in Detroit cannot get over the difference in mood. "I used to hate to get up and come to work in the morning," said Don Counsell, a Chrysler veteran who came here from Michigan to be a supervisor. Joe Jordan, a 35-year-old Tennessean working in the same plant told us: "We all get along so well together. I've never worked in a place where people felt that way."

Bob Drake is one Nissan executive who feels this mood derives from better management, especially greater empathy toward the workers, that would not be altered by union representation. But other executives here see the UAW as the serpent in the Garden of Eden.

They point out that a worker and his foreman can work out a production snag without calling in a shop steward. "It's a problem when you always have to check through a third party," says Joe Kieltyka, comparing life at the trim and chassis plant he manages here with his previous Ford management post in Dearborn, Mich.

When we asked Runyon whether the mood created here could continue with the UAW as that "third party," he replied flatly the union would not win certification. In response, the UAW's Turner told us: "It won't be up to whether Jim Turner wants it or Marvin Runyon doesn't want it. It'll be up to the workers."

So, the UAW is waiting for assembly-line stress to combine with the American temperament in an un-Japanese plea for "third-party" help. If that call does not come next summer when trucks are really rolling, the impact of Smyrna on the future of American industry will be felt deeply.

CHARLEY REESE

Liberalism remains lost cause

American liberals are bloody hopeless. They have been mismanaging the American-Soviet conflict for most of this century and they haven't learned a thing. Just look at a few of the current liberal positions spawned by the shooting down of the Korean passenger plane.

Charley Reese

1. East-West relations are at an all-time low. Wrong. East-West relations are perfectly normal. It's only American liberals who practice detente and fantasize that relations have improved. The Soviet Union has remained consistently hostile to the United States.

2. The Soviets are paranoic. This is a favorite liberal theme to explain Soviet behavior since liberals are committed to disbelieving that Communist ideology means what it says. If only Napoleon hadn't invaded Russia, if only Adolph Hitler had not betrayed his partner in crime, Joe Stalin, then the Soviets would not be so paranoic. Horse feathers.

The Soviets are neither suspicious nor paranoic. They run a tyranny. To run a tyranny efficiently, one must practice terror internally and maintain an external enemy to provide legitimacy for the internal repression. The Russian tradition is not paranoia, but expansionist, devious and even messianic. The Soviet Union is not a country. It is a Muscovite empire put together by conquest and held together by force.

The Soviet Union did not shoot down the airplane because they were afraid. They shot it down to make other people afraid of them.

3. Soviet cruelty, aggression, and duplicity must not be allowed to interfere with arms control discussions. This is the creme de la creme of liberal insanity. Think for a moment what the liberals are saying. They are saying one must continue to reach an agreement based fundamentally on mutual trust with a regime that is secretive, brutal, aggressive, implacably hostile and totally amoral. If that isn't nuts, Reagan doesn't wear cowboy boots.

4. The Soviet Union suffered so much in World War II that it really wants peace. That, of course, is an example of liberal ignorance. Joseph Stalin signed a non-aggression pact with Hitler and while Hitler invaded Poland from the west, the Soviets invaded from the east as well as attacking Finland, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

The Soviet regime has murdered somewhere between 40 million and 60 million of its own people. During World War II, the executions never stopped. In fact, the Soviets used the war as a convenient means of disposing of many of their own people. Even a casual reading of Soviet military writings will tell you that the Soviets gleaned one lesson from World War II — the importance of a surprise attack.

5. Americans should not build the MX (or the B-1 or a civil defense system) because it would be provocative. Oh boy, this is a peach. The entire Soviet missile program is based on first strike weapons and a first strike strategy coupled with heavy civil defense, re-load capability and a strong air defense system. The liberal position is like saying buying a fire extinguisher will provoke the fire.

(The real problem with the MX is its vulnerability, a deficiency which also applies to the Trident submarine.)

The core problem of American liberalism is that it does not wish to face the reality that the United States and the Soviet Union are locked in a struggle to the death. American liberalism has a pathological desire to avoid this truth; hence, its pathetic and persistent attempts to explain away 60 years of accumulating evidence.

A patient who refused treatment but also denied that he was sick would be crazy in the present and dead in the future. That is the condition of liberalism in regard to the Soviet Union. Let's hope they don't take us with them.

Anesthesia could be pleasant

ATLANTA (AP) — The psychological benefits of a new drug that anesthetizes surgical patients with tiny amounts applied with a cotton swab could "make the anesthesia process so much less unpleasant and perhaps pleasant," researchers say.

The synthetic narcotic carfentanil has a much higher safety ratio than drugs currently used for anesthesia, said Dr. Theodore B. Stanley of the University of Utah on Monday.

Stanley said the potency of the drug was such that 1 cubic centimeter of it probably would be enough to anesthetize 1,000 to 1,500 humans. The drug could be applied by swabbing the nose or mouth, avoiding use of a hypodermic needle.

Jackson's staff to solicit funds

CHICAGO (AP) — As Rev. Jesse Jackson planned meetings to form a "Rainbow Coalition" of minority groups that feel shut out by the Democratic Party, his staff put together fund-raising lists that would fuel his presidential candidacy — if he chooses to run.

Frank Watkins, an aide to the civil rights leader, said Monday that the first nationwide solicitation for Jackson will be mailed this week, asking supporters to "Give a Jackson for Jackson," a plea for contributions of $20 bills, which carry pictures of President Andrew Jackson.

Jackson, 42, who has been considering entering the 1984 Democratic primaries for the last six months, has promised to announce his decision this month.

Family may be cause of killing

MOUNT KISCO, N.Y. (AP) — A marathon family argument could have been the reason for a gunbattle at a Chinese restaurant in which three men were killed, police say.

Two men, one a part-owner of the Szechuan Star restaurant where the deaths took place, were sought for questioning, said police Chief Jerome Herlihy.

None of the victims or those sought for questioning in the slayings in this New York City suburb have been identified.

Judge drops contempt charges

ABBEVILLE, Ala. (AP) — A woman who was charged with contempt after she criticized a judge in a letter published in a newspaper got a reprieve when the judge decided to drop the charge, but she still claims the charge was "the biggest farce I have ever seen."

Circuit Judge Billy Joe Sheffield, who imposed the fine plus court costs on Connie Cox on Friday, said he intended to rescind the $100 fine for the charge today.

Soviets withdrawn from exhibit

MOULTRIE, Ga. (AP) — Soviet officials may be waiting for the furor over the Korean Airlines tragedy to cool down before they try to show Soviet-made wares in the United States, said an organizer for Expo 1983 after a exhibit from the Soviet Union was withdrawn.

Soviet-made tractors that were to have been shown were pulled out of the agricultural exhibition, said organizer J.E. Burnside, but he didn't know the reason. The farm show begins today.

James Brady returns to hometown

CENTRALIA, Ill. (AP) — A misty-eyed crowd cheered and waved welcoming banners and White House press secretary James Brady flashed his signature "thumbs-up" sign on his first trip home since being wounded with President Reagan in an assassination attempt.

Brady's five-day visit began Monday — "James Brady Day" in his honor — with a parade through this southern Illinois town of 15,000. Mayor Jack Sligar gave him the key to the city, and Brady held a brief news conference in front of his mother's house.

"Oh, it's good to be home," Brady, 43, told the crowd, estimated by police at between 5,000 and 6,000.

Some townspeople wiped away tears as Brady, who suffered a critical bullet wound in the head when Reagan was shot in March 1981, told them, "I think Thomas Wolfe was wrong when he said you can never go back home, because we proved today that you can."

Thousands lined the streets on a warm, sunny day as Brady waved and gave the "thumbs up" sign during the eight-block-long parade through the town where he grew up. He rode in a white convertible, accompanied by his 76-year-old mother, Dorothy, his wife, Sarah, their 4-year-old son Scott, and Melissa Brady, his 20-year-old daughter by a previous marriage.

Welcoming posters made by schoolchildren lined the parade route and filled downtown storefronts. A banner reading, "Welcome Home Jim Brady," stretched across a street.

Some spectators ran to the slow-moving car to shake Brady's hand.

Marching bands from the junior high and high school, Boy Scouts from the troop Brady once joined and a fire truck completed the parade.

State Comptroller Roland Burris, also a Centralia native, gave him a proclamation from Gov. James R. Thompson declaring this "James Brady Week" in Illinois.

Brady said he looked forward to relaxing and spending "some time with the old war horse," referring to his mother. Most other activities during Brady's visit were to be private, to give him time to relax with family and friends.

It's difficult to relax in Washington, Brady said, noting that Centralia "is kind of a solitary place where you can come and find yourself relaxing a bit."

He said he hoped his mother had prepared some of her homemade vegetable soup, one of his favorite dishes. She did, saying that fixing up a batch was something she'd finished just before her son arrived.

Jim Brady waves during a parade in his honor in his hometown of Centralia, Ill. Brady, White House Press Secretary, was paralyzed in the assassination attempt of President Ronald Reagan. Brady is joined in the car with his mother, wife, a friend of the family, young Scott Brady, 4 and Milissa, 20 of Winnetka, Ill.

Brady is to leave Friday for homecoming festivities at the University of Illinois at Champaign, about 130 miles to the north. He is a 1962 journalism graduate of the university.

Brady was born in Centralia and attended elementary and high school there before leaving for college. His earliest political contacts were made during his years as assistant to the late Sen. Everett Dirksen in 1961 and 1962 and as an honors intern in the Justice Department's anti-trust division in 1962.

Brady is continuing therapy as he recovers from the shooting. He works one day each week at his White House office and his wife said he looks forward to returning to work full-time.

Fire, explosion knock out power in LA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An explosion and fire at a utility substation knocked out power to two square miles of downtown Los Angeles, and the garment district, a hospital and two newspaper offices were still without power nine hours later today.

Dozens of downtown buildings were without electricity, air conditioning and elevator service.

Department of Water and Power crews worked through the night to restore power to hundreds of business and commercial customers who lost power by the explosion at about 7:20 p.m. Monday.

The 325-bed California Hospital Medical Center used emergency generators for lighting and to maintain operations. No problems were reported.

Today's editions of the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and the city's largest Spanish language daily, La Opinion, were published from the Los Angeles Times office, which is located outside the blackout area, said Times publisher Tom Johnson.

The Associated Press office also lost power.

"Just like an automobile, the equipment here can wear out, and when it does more people are affected," said DWP area superintendent Don McKay, pointing to the charred remains of two refrigerator-sized 34,500-volt regulators that malfunctioned and ignited a flow of oil, setting off a flash fire that blanketed the center city substation building with a cloud of sooty black carbon.

No one was injured in the fire, which was extinguished after about an hour.

Thick soot must be removed from transformers and other equipment before power can be restored, McKay said.

McKay said the cleanup would be completed "as soon possible" and said power probably would be restored before office hours.

The substation area was barricaded by police to keep spectators away. Cleanup crews wore special masks to keep from breathing in fumes from burning electrical insulation that might contain toxic polychlorinated biphenyls, a fire department spokesman said. But no evidence of PCBs had been found, he said.

Sgt. James Darr of Los Angeles Police Department said two men carrying burglary tools were arrested for investigation of burglary in the area of the blackout.

Otherwise, there was no unusual criminal activity reported, as police cars were the only illumination in the several square blocks that were darkened.

Evidence may show wife as accomplice

Mary Orsini

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — The prosecutor for the first-degree murder trial of North Little Rock widow Mary Lee Orsini says evidence may show that she was an accomplice, merely aiding and abetting the slaying of her husband.

"The state does not contend that the defendant acted completely alone in this crime," Wilbur C. "Dub" Bentley said Monday while interviewing prospective jurors.

By the end of the day, two jurors had been selected.

Mrs. Orsini, 36, is accused in Pulaski County Circuit Court of the March 11, 1981, death of her husband, Ron. She is serving a life prison term without a chance for parole for the July 1982 contract killing of Alice McArthur, 42, the wife of lawyer William McArthur, who represented her when Orsini's death was investigated.

Defense lawyer Harold Craig objected to Bentley's statement, saying he regarded it as the introduction of a new theory of the crime. To that, Bentley said, "We haven't said that there is not someone else involved." He declined comment later.

Asked who she thought Bentley had in mind as the other party, Mrs. Orsini told a reporter she feared it was her daughter, Tiffany, 15.

Mrs. Orsini says her husband was killed while she and her daughter slept in another room. She has blamed organized crime for the death of her husband, a partner in a heating and air-conditioning firm. Lawyer Tom Donovan, head of the three-attorney defense team, asked some jury prospects what they knew about the Mafia.

Donovan said the trial could take from one to four weeks. He said he might pose as many as 225 questions of each potential juror.

Mrs. Orsini, granted permission in pre-trial proceedings to participate as counsel in the trial, exercised the privilege late in the afternoon Monday. She asked the sixth prospective juror, Stephen Daughtery, 25, questions mostly having to do with his attitudes about family life. Daughtery became the second juror accepted. The first was Lynetta Robbin.

Judge John Langston excused all of the trial witnesses and some of the jury candidates until 9 a.m. Oct. 17. "We are still a week away from trial at this time, and possibly longer," he said.

Another circuit court jury found Oct. 7, 1982, that Mrs. Orsini had hired two men to kill Mrs. McArthur in the McArthur's west Little Rock home. Eugene Hall and Larry McClendon are serving prison terms for their parts in the murder.

As she entered the judge's chambers, Mrs. Orsini passed, but did not look at McArthur. He sitting on a bench near the door, fixed her with an angry stare. As McArthur, 45, and other witnesses were sworn later as a group, Mrs. Orsini briefly wept.

Langston postponed until Friday arguments on defense motions to dismiss the case, to quash the prosecution's 67 subpoenas and to suppress statements Mrs. Orsini has made to authorities.

Salvadoran leftist leader among four tortured, killed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The top leftist political organizer in El Salvador was among four people tortured and killed by a rightist death squad, according to a rebel spokesman.

Leftist guerrillas, meanwhile, blockaded the Pan American highway east of San Salvador with hijacked vehicles and killed 14 government soldiers in battles to control two small towns, according to military and civilian sources.

The violence wracking El Salvador and other parts of Central America was discussed Monday by former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and other members of a U.S. fact-finding commission during meetings Monday with officials in Panama. The stop was the first on the commission's six-day Central American tour, which continues in Costa Rica today.

Salvadoran leftist Victor Manuel Quintanilla, 32, had been identified earlier as one of four victims whose bodies were found dumped along a road north of San Salvador on Friday. On Monday, a Mexico City-based spokesman for the Democratic Revolutionary Front — the rebels' political wing — disclosed that Quintanilla was the highest official of the Front living permanently in El Salvador.

The spokesman, Hector Oquell, said the slayings showed how rightist extremism was hampering a peaceful solution to the 4-year-old war in El Salvador. U.S. officials also deplored the deaths.

Quintanilla was mayor of Usulutan in 1979 and 1980. In an interview with The Associated Press a few months ago, he said he expected to be captured but said "someone will take my place."

U.S. and Salvadoran government officials had met with rebel representatives over the past three months to discuss ending the civil war, but the talks broke down last month because of the government's refusal to share power with the rebels prior to elections.

Oquell said two of the other three victims also were members of the Front — Jose Antonio Garcia Vasquez and Santiago Hernandez. The other victim was chemistry professor Nora Munoz Castillo.

The Maximiliano Hernandez Martinez Anti-Communist Brigaded said it carried out the killings.

In combat, guerrillas killed five civil guards in the town of El Transito, about 75 miles east of the capital near, said reporters visiting the area Monday. They said troops retook the town after a tough fight with rebels who seized it Sunday.

Rebels reportedly killed nine army troops in nearby San Buenaventura and continued to hold that town.

Guerrillas placed several vehicles across the Pan American highway west of the towns and shot the tires out, blocking traffic since Saturday, residents said.

More than 47,000 people, mostly civilians, have died in political violence in El Salvador since late 1979.

In Costa Rica, a government official who requested anonymity said a Nicaraguan rebel group seeking to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist government will be expelled if it mounts attacks from Costa Rican territory.

The Revolutionary Democratic Alliance, known by its Spanish initials ARDE, "has been severely warned that if it uses Costa Rican territory for armed action against Nicaragua all its leaders and followers will be expelled, 'ipso facto,' from Costa Rica," the official said. "Everyone goes."

ARDE claims to have 3,700 troops fighting the leftist government in southern Nicaragua under Eden Pastora, a disenchanted hero of the 1978-1979 Sandinista revolution that overthrew Nicaraguan strongman Anastasio Somoza.

Pastora was expelled from Costa Rica earlier this year for his military activity and now operates from a camp on the Nicaraguan side of the border between the two countries.

Violence 'gets closer' to Panama

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — President Ricardo de la Espriella says violence raging elsewhere in Central America is "getting closer" and warned former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that it could erupt in Panama without more U.S. economic aid.

The president, speaking Monday at the first of several open sessions Kissinger will head during a six-day tour of Central America, said the social problems of Panama "if not promptly solved could change into social unrest and the loss of peace we value so highly."

Kissinger, chairman of a U.S. fact-finding commission, met with de la Espriella and other political and labor leaders on the group's one-day visit here. The 16-member delegation, which includes 10 of the 12 members of the commission and six U.S. officials acting as advisers, leaves today for Costa Rica.

The commission is gathering information for a report to President Reagan on formulating long-term U.S. policy for the region. The report is expected to be completed Jan. 10.

The meeting with de la Espriella was the first of several conferences, open to the press, with leaders from Panama, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and leftist-governed Nicaragua.

Panama, important to the United States because of the Panama Canal, is suffering a severe recession and high unemployment.

In answer to de la Espriella, Kissinger called Central America "an area with whose aspirations we must be able to identify" and expressed hope "the peoples and governments" will feel the commission has "made a contribution to the future that ultimately they alone can change."

Col. Manuel Antonio Noriega, chief of Panama's 15,000-man National Guard, arrived at the National Palace shortly before the commission and met with Kissinger, a diplomatic source requesting anonymity said.

The subject of their discussion was not known. De la Espriella made no mention of military aid in his open conference with Kissinger.

The U.S. officials accompanying the commission are: U.N. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., Rep. James Wright, D-Texas, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., and former Undersecretary of State William D. Rogers.

Panel members on the trip are: former New Jersey Sen. Nicholas Brady, director of Dilion, Read and Co.; Henry Cisneros, mayor of San Antonio, Texas; William P. Clements, former governor of Texas; Carlos F. Diaz-Alejandro, professor of economics at Yale University; Wilson S. Johnson, president of the National Federation of Independent Businesses, San Mateo, Calif.; Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO; John Silber, president of Boston University; Robert S. Strauss, former chairman of the National Democratic Party and President Carter's personal representative for the Mideast talks of 1979-80; and Dr. William B. Walsh, president of Project Hope, a social welfare and health organization.

Richard Scammon, a political consultant, and former Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart, said they could not make the trip because of schedule conflicts.

Bombing suspect comatose

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — A possible suspect in the bombing massacre of South Korean officials was in a coma today with one arm severed, apparently injured when he detonated his own grenade during a police chase down a Rangoon creek.

The middle-aged, fair-skinned man, trying to escape in a stolen boat, was apprehended Monday night during an extensive search for suspects in the bombing one day earlier. The powerful blast killed 19 people and injured 48.

Sixteen of the dead were high South Korean officials, four of them Cabinet ministers. They were accompanying President Chun Doo-hwan on a state visit here.

The unidentified man, who does not speak Burmese, was expected to recover, doctors said.

British Conservatives meet

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party opened its annual conference today in the shadow of a Cabinet-level sex scandal and an opinion poll showing the rival Labor Party gaining ground on the Tories.

About 5,000 delegates assembled for the week-long conference as some Tory politcians openly criticized Mrs. Thatcher's economic policies. There also was pressure from some for Trade and Industry Secretary Cecil Parkinson to quit because of his admitted love affair with his former secretary.

Quake shakes Ottawa area

OTTAWA (AP) — An earthquake rattled the Ottawa area and parts of upstate New York early today, waking people and shaking windows and dishes but causing no serious damage, seismologists said.

The earthquake, which measured 4.2 on the Richter scale, was centered about 15 miles south of Ottawa and occurred about 10 minutes past midnight, said Anne Stevens of Canada's Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Angolan fighting progresses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Steady progress by rebels fighting Angola's pro-Soviet government may be having the ironic side effect of impeding the Reagan administration's goal of freeing southern Africa of superpower competition, according to U.S. officials.

The administration took office determined to promote independence in Namibia and the withdrawal of the more than 20,000 Cubans from Angola, but that process now appears to be stalled because of the surprising efficiency of the pro-Western UNITA guerrilla movement led by Jonas Savimbi.

Under normal circumstances, a conservative Republican administration would welcome a situation in which a country firmly allied to the Soviet bloc found itself unable to cope with an avowedly anti-communist guerrilla movement.

Weather reporting studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the biggest problems with forecasting tomorrow's weather is studying yesterday's, a problem the new head of the World Meteorological Organization says is at the top of his list to solve.

The first priority is a better worldwide observation network and improvements in collecting and using those observations, says Dr. Godwin Olu Patrick Obasi.

The meteorological organization's secretary general-elect, who takes office Jan. 1, said much of the world has observers, but improvements are needed in the southern hemisphere — particularly the vast ocean areas.

And data collection from developing nations also needs to be better, Obasi said.

Nobel Prize 'honors activists'

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The best-known underground leader of the outlawed Solidarity trade union said in a leaflet issued today that Lech Walesa's Nobel Peace Prize is an honor for thousands of oppressed Solidarity activists.

"This is a prize for those imprisoned, for those awaiting trial, for those repressed and persecuted, for thousands of anonymous Solidarity activists," said Zbigniew Bujak, a member of the union's fugitive four-man temporary coordinating commission, known as TKK.

His statement, dated Oct. 7, was included in a Solidarity leaflet handed to Western correspondents this morning.

Cargo jetliner aborts takeoff

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A Boeing 747 cargo jet swerved off a runway and stopped with its nose pointed skyward in an aborted takeoff today at Frankfurt's international airport, an airport spokesman said.

The incident, involving a Flying Tiger cargo flight bound for Brussels, put one of the airport's two runways out of operation, temporarily delaying traffic at West Germany's busiest airport, the spokesman said.

A Flying Tiger spokesman said no one was injured among the three crew and two company employees on board the plane.

Aquino escorts tested

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Two soldiers escorting opposition leader Benigno Aquino when he was assassinated have been tested positively for nitrates, a component of gunpowder, according to documents released today by a lawyer aiding investigators.

The results do not prove that the two men fired guns, but the findings are a "good lead to pursue," lawyer Amadeo Seno said in an interview.

Seno, assistant general counsel of the now-dissolved presidential commission investigating the slaying, gave The Associated Press copies of National Bureau of Investigation reports on the positive results of paraffin tests performed on soldiers Arnulfo De Mesa and Rogelio Moreno.

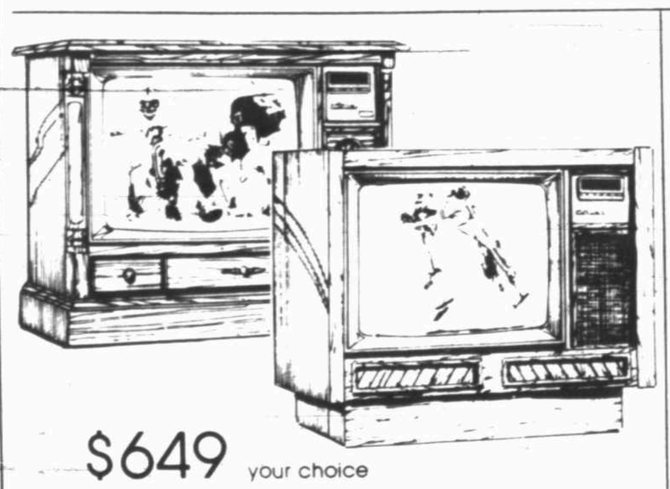

The military has said none of the five soldiers who escorted Aquino from a China Air Lines plane at the Manila airport Aug. 21 was carrying a gun. Aquino, the chief rival of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, was shot and killed seconds after leaving the plane upon returning from voluntary exile in the United States.

Seno said he would have asked military officials to comment on the NBI reports if members of the commission had proceeded with a scheduled hearing Monday. Instead, the five commission members resigned, saying they hoped to clear the way for creation of a panel whose credibility would not be questioned.

Designated hitterless Series begins tonight

BALTIMORE (AP) — Baltimore Orioles Manager Joe Altobelli announced a lineup Monday for the first game of the 1983 World Series that did not include designated hitter Ken Singleton.

"Believe me," Altobelli said, "I did some soul searching, even before we got this far, even while we were playing Chicago."

WHILE THE Orioles were beating Chicago in four games in the American League Championship Series there was no problem. The designated hitter is a fixture in that league, including the playoff.

The World Series, which begins here Tuesday night, is another story. This year, being an odd numbered year, the designated hitter is not used in the World Series, and Altobelli had a decision to make.

"The biggest thing is I didn't want to put Kenny in the outfield and have him do something that would damage his career," Altobelli said. "He hasn't played out there for two years, and that would be a tall order."

So, Altobelli announced a starting lineup, in batting order, of: Al Bumbry, center field; Jim Dwyer, right field; Cal Ripken Jr., shortstop; Eddie Murray, first base; John Lowenstein, left field; Rich Dauer, second base; Todd Cruz, third base, and Rick Dempsey, catcher.

LEFT-HANDER Scott McGregor, 18-7 and loser of Game One of the AL playoffs, will be the starter for Baltimore. Right-hander John Denny, 19-6 and the losing pitcher in Game Two of Philadelphia's four-game National League pennant playoff victory over Los Angeles , will start for the Phillies.

Altobelli said he would like to use a three-man pitching rotation in the Series, bringing back McGregor for Games Four and Seven. That would give him an extra pitcher, Storm Davis, in the bullpen and allow him to use Singleton more often as a pinch hitter.

"I can go to my bullpen more prematurely. That means I can go to my bench, and that means Ken Singleton," Altobelli said. "For example, I could pinch hit for my pitcher in the fifth inning if I had the bases loaded."

Owens, who took over as Phillies manager from the fired Pat Corrales in July, said he remembered that being able to use the DH in the 1980 World Series gave the Phillies an edge over the Kansas City Royals, whom they beat in six games.

"We were able to use Greg Luzinski," said Owens, who was general manager at the time. "But not having used it (the DH) in our league, we get used to not having it. It could have some affect, but I don't think it will be that big."

SINCE 1966, the Orioles have been in the World Series six times. They won in 1966 and 1970. The Phillies are in their fourth World Series and have won just one, in 1980.

The only outfield position at which Altobelli had not planned to platoon was right field. But Dan Ford injured his ankle on the final day of the season, then reinjured it in Game One of the playoffs.

"His ankle is in tape. He says it feels fine," Altobelli said. "But I'm going to give him one more day."

The only potential physical problem on the Phillies was Steve Carlton, who suffered back spasms in Game Four of the NLCS. He left the game after six innings. Rookie Charlie Hudson, a right-hander, will pitch Game Two Wednesday, and Owens said Carlton has been set to pitch Game Three Friday night in Philadelphia.

"It's something he gets occasionally," Owens said of Carlton's flareup. "He gets it especially on cool nights. It's not serious. It starts in his back and works up into his neck. It bothers his pivot.

"But the spasm broke within a hour after the game."

After McGregor, Altobelli said he would go with Mike Boddicker, then probably Mike Flanagan, a left-hander. If he uses a four-man rotation, Davis would be the man. Owens said he would use Marty Bystrom after Carlton, putting rookie starter Kevin Gross in the bullpen.

THE ABSENCE of the DH in this series meant that not only would Singleton be relegated to the role of pinch hitter, but that the Orioles pitchers also would have to hit — something they don't do during the season.

"I'll just try to make the guy throw good pitches to me," McGregor said. "I don't want to be swinging at pitches over my head and embarrass myself. I'll try to get on base. I walked a couple of times in 1979."

Alborn gives up dream for Owls

HOUSTON (AP) — Ray Alborn came to Rice University during the Jess Neely era as a player and was a part of the school's winning past.

He returned as an assistant coach in 1972 and was named head coach in 1978 with one goal in mind. "My goal was to return Rice University to the prestigious position it once held," Alborn said Monday.

He resigned Monday with his dream unaccomplished.

Weighed down by losing 16 of 17 games and faced with growing criticism from alumni groups, Alborn announced that he would step aside as head coach effective at the end of the current season.

Alborn has one year remaining on his contract.

"I have been aware that for the last year and much of this year that the win-loss record is not what I wanted it to be and not what anyone else wanted it to be," Alborn said Monday shortly before informing his team of his decision.

"In light of the changes which I feel do not include me, I felt it was in the best interest of everyone that I step aside," Alborn said. "I don't want to go through a lame duck period. There comes a time when you have to be objective."

Alborn started becoming objective when he saw the losses and injuries mount. The Owls approached respectability under Alborn in the 1980 season when the Owls blasted Houston 35-7 in the final game of the season for a 5-6-0 record. Alborn's best season.

Rice dipped to 4-7 in 1981 and last season finished 0-11 for the first time in the school's history.

The Owls suffered through 15 knee surgeries in 1982 and so far this season have lost their most effective offensive and defensive players. Wide receiver Melvin Robinson was lost for the season in the Texas game with a knee injury.

Defensive end Everett Todd was lost for the year with a finger injury against Texas Christian last week. Todd faced a choice of immediate surgery or possible loss of use of the finger.

"I had hoped we'd get off to a good start this season and we didn't," Alborn said. "The pressure I was feeling from within was beginning to tell on me. I think it was getting through to the players too.

"Maybe now they can relax and go out winners."

Houston Oilers' head football coach Ed Biles has resigned from his position following a 13-game losing streak and a record of 8-23 during his 2½-year coaching stint.

Ed Biles couldn't shake 'Bum' rap

HOUSTON (AP) — Ed Biles said trying to replace "coaching legend" Bum Phillips was his first mistake with the Houtson Oilers.

"I should have known better than to try to follow a coaching legend like Bum Phillips," Biles said Monday after submitting his resignation with the National Football League team in the throes of a 13-game losing streak.

"I should have waited and let someone else do all the dirty work and then take the job now," Biles said. "All the dirty work has been done. It's ready to succeed now. All it needs is a couple of years."

OILER GENERAL Manager Ladd Herzeg shut himself away from the media Monday and said he would name an interim head coach as soon as possible, possibly, today. Today is the players' usual day off.

Interim coaches frequently are chosen from the existing staff, making offensive coordinator Kay Dalton and defensive coordinator Chuck Studley the most likely candidates.

The 'dirty work' to which Biles referred was the dismantling of the aging veteran core Phillips had assembled in leading the Oilers to playoff appearances from 1978 to 1980.

Houston rode into the playoffs on the powerful legs of running back Earl Campbell, but Biles said the team needed a more diversified attack when he replaced the fired Phillips in 1981.

Biles weeded out veterans and replacing them with talented but inexperienced young players. But his plan for diversification never got off the ground and in his final game, a 26-14 loss Sunday to the Denver Broncos, Biles again was depending on Campbell.

But Biles never wavered from his belief in his program would produce positive results.

"I hope they continue with the program," he said. "Eventually the worm is going to turn. It's two years away right now but when it gets rolling, it's going to be fun."

BILES LEAVES with an 8-23 record, including an 0-6 mark this season which has the Oilers in last place in the American Conference's Central Division.

"When you get up in the morning and feel like coaching is no longer fun, then it's time to evaluate," Biles said. "It hadn't been much fun the past 2½ years. I felt like I had been the eye of the hurricane, the center of controversy and sometimes the punching bag.

"You get to the point where you say 'who needs this?' "

Players reacted with surprise as they arrived for workouts Monday.

"This is a zoo," veteran center David Carter shouted as he came into the locker room after learning of the resignation.

"I don't know what effect it will have but it could be adverse," Carter said. "Some of these young kids might look around and say, 'this is a zoo!' I am just amazed at how they keep throwing things around."

Biles became the 10th Oiler coach to depart in the 23-year history of the franchise.

"It wasn't Ed Biles' fault," Carter said. "He didn't get out there on the field and make some of those mistakes."

Quarterback Gifford Nielsen, criticized by Biles following Sunday's loss, wondered if a change was necessary.

"I'm not sure it had to be done. I don't know what it takes for us to win," Nielsen said. "I'm not sure a major shakeup is necessary. All I know is Ed Biles treated me like a man and I respected him."

Biles made some mistakes in his first year as coach of the Houston Oilers that he never overcame, former Oiler tight end Dave Casper said Monday.

"Eddie made his mistakes in his first year," said Casper, traded to the Minnesota Vikings three weeks ago. "He got rid of some good players. He alienated some good players. And he spent the next two years trying to correct the errors."

CASPER SAID Biles may have had predetermined ideas when he took over as coach of the National Football League team 2½ years ago.

Midland High is 'other team' in 'other game'

The Midland High football team knows the story line by heart. Lose to Odessa Permian to open District 4-5A play and quickly become listed as the "other game" in passing weeks.

It's a story that other 4-5A league members would know by heart if they had to open against Mojo. The Bulldogs have to fight for a headline or a TV spot. Such is the nature of the "other team."

FOR THE third week in a row, MHS will be the "other game" as Midland Lee travels to Permian's Ratliff Stadium. Ratliff, the "Pearl of West Texas" stadiums, will be jammed with Mojo and Rebel boosters. It will be listed as "THE GAME" in District 4-5A as two of the state's top-ranked teams go head-to-head.

The "other game" will take place at Memorial Stadium, known as the "Armpit of West Texas," and for good reason. The "other game" is Odessa High vs. Midland High. It's even a Homecoming bash.

In the scheme of things, this game will go unnoticed for the most part, but from Midland High's point of view, this may be "THE GAME" as far as 1983 is concerned.

The Bulldogs have ripped off two straight victories and are tied with Lee and San Angelo for second place. A victory Friday night over the Bronchos and the Bulldogs may be off to producing some stunning news in the weeks to come. "THE GAME" could come back to the Bulldogs yet.

After all, District 4-5A has had "THE GAME" every week. First was MHS-Permian. Next came San Angelo-Lee. Last week was San Angelo-Permian. Now it's Lee-Permian this week.

THE DAWGS went through all this last year. They opened 4-5A play with losses to Permian and Big Spring and then won four of their last five games to tie for second place, ending up only one flip of the coin away from winning a state playoff berth.

This year, MHS is already one step ahead of last year's mark by defeating Big Spring and reproducing a win over Abilene Cooper. The rally started a week early. If it is important for Lee to defeat Permian, it is equally important that the Bulldogs defeat OHS Friday night. It could be a giant step toward something very important.

"THE GAME" could come back to MHS next week when they face San Angelo, but for that to happen, the Bulldogs must beat Odessa High Friday.

It seems almost a shame that this edition of the Bulldogs has to be listed weekly as playing in the "other game." Win or lose, the Bulldogs are the most exciting thing to wear Purple in the last decade. Producing excitement on the field is one area the Bulldogs do not come up short.

The Bulldogs score points faster than a machine gun spits bullets. The passing game has given MHS a potent scoring armada. "General" James Welborn pulls his passing trigger from opening gun until final gun. You can bet when MHS plays, that the Bulldogs will be the last score to come in. MHS games run at least ½-hour longer than any other game.

WHEN WELBORN throws, you can expect Allan Foret, Todd Shiplet or Darrell Davis to be there to catch it. It's really a beautiful thing to watch. There are no clouds of dust with this attack.

The "General" is a good passer and his receivers are the best collection wearing the same colored jersies in the state. But there are five other little known reasons why MHS is so successful throwing the football in 1983. It's a pity that those reasons don't get more publicity.

The five reasons come from the infantry. They do the dirty work so the "General" and his receivers have time to connect. It all starts at center with John David Munn, who has not missed a starting snap in two years. If he isn't "Mr. Captain" to the Bulldogs, I don't know who is. I think Pat Culpepper would agree.

However, tackles Steve Lindsey and Arthur Valencia and guards Jeff Daily and Gil Ward help Munn form an offensive front wall that keeps the "General" from getting his uniform dirty.

Clean! That's the word. MHS is pure as Ivory Snow — as long as you ignore the infantry.

Sooie Pig! It's Texas Week in them thar Hills

Those of us who claim a living as professional journalists are not supposed to show any bias in our coverage.

Fortunately, there are outlets known as columns in which even the best of us can exercise a little creative license. Thus, please excuse the writer for indulging in a little nostalgia.

It's Texas Week in the Hills.

TEXAS WEEK, for those unaware, is the week-long celebration that University of Arkansas students have before the annual grudge war with the hated foe, the University of Texas Longhorns. This is the first Texas Week I haven't participated in since Lou Holtz was coach, and it is not going well.

Texas Week is not an easy thing to describe. It's something that is best experienced. The festivities include a Steer roast, a massive pep rally (Thursday night), and a huge bonfire. The bonfire is quite a highlight, as the entire campus usually takes part.

Another feature of Texas Week, especially where the students are concerned, is the opportunity to cut classes and generally be obnoxious. Pre-Texas game stunts and general rowdy-ism could be an undergraduate program.

I remember them all.

In 1977, Holtz' first at Arkansas, the game was in Fayetteville, home of the main campus. Arkansas splits its' home dates between Fayetteville and Little Rock, the state capitol, because the rich alumnus from L.A. (lower Arkansas) can't easily get to Fayetteville, which is buried in the Northwest corner of the state.

Earl Campbell was the main attraction in 1977, and he was superb. Steve Little, Arkansas' fabulous kicker who had a pro career tragically cut short in an auto accident, kicked an NCAA-record 67-yard field goal to give the Hogs a brief lead, but Johnny "Ham" Jones of Hamlin scored in the fourth quarter to give UT a 13-9 win.

ARKANSAS NEVER lost again en route to a 31-6 smashing of Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl, and a number three ranking.

In 1978, Arkansas was unbeaten and Sports Illustrated had tabbed the Hogs No. 1. Texas beat Arkansas 28-21.

In 1979, Arkansas did the impossible, beating Texas 17-14 in the last time the teams met in the Rock. It was the first win for Arkansas over Texas in eight years, and the win set off a state-wide victory celebration that was unequalled to that point. It happened that I had visitors from Texas up that weekend to visit, and they were amazed at the revelry.

In 1980, Texas won 23-17 on Labor Day, and the game set the tone for Holtz' worst Razorback squad, a 7-5 group that was a thorough bummer.

Then came 1981, and the most famous pre-Texas game stunt in the annals of Hog fans. This is a scoop, a here-to-fore never revealed account of the infamous Big Boy caper.

Several students, whose names will be forever forgotten in case of lawsuits, masterminded the steal of the century and helped Arkansas to their biggest ever win over the dreaded Longhorns.

It began as a wild idea that simply wound up becoming bigger than life. The plot: 'borrow' the Shoney's Big Boy, the large plastic Boy holding a huge hamburger.

SEVEN OF us set out late the Thursday before the game. With a truck we lifted the Big Boy from its position at Shoney's. It was unbolted, so there was no damage or vandalism involved. After hefting the six-foot Boy onto the truck, it was carefully smuggled back to the campus five miles away and placed in a prime location. Underneath the large burger was a sign: BIG BOY SAYS: EAT MORE BEEF. Not too witty or original, but brief and to the point.

Come Friday morning, the Big Boy was a sight to behold, drawing a spot on the local newscasts and setting the tone for the biggest upset of all. Arkansas, spurred by this act so silly, went out and beat the pants off of the nation's top ranked team, 42-11.

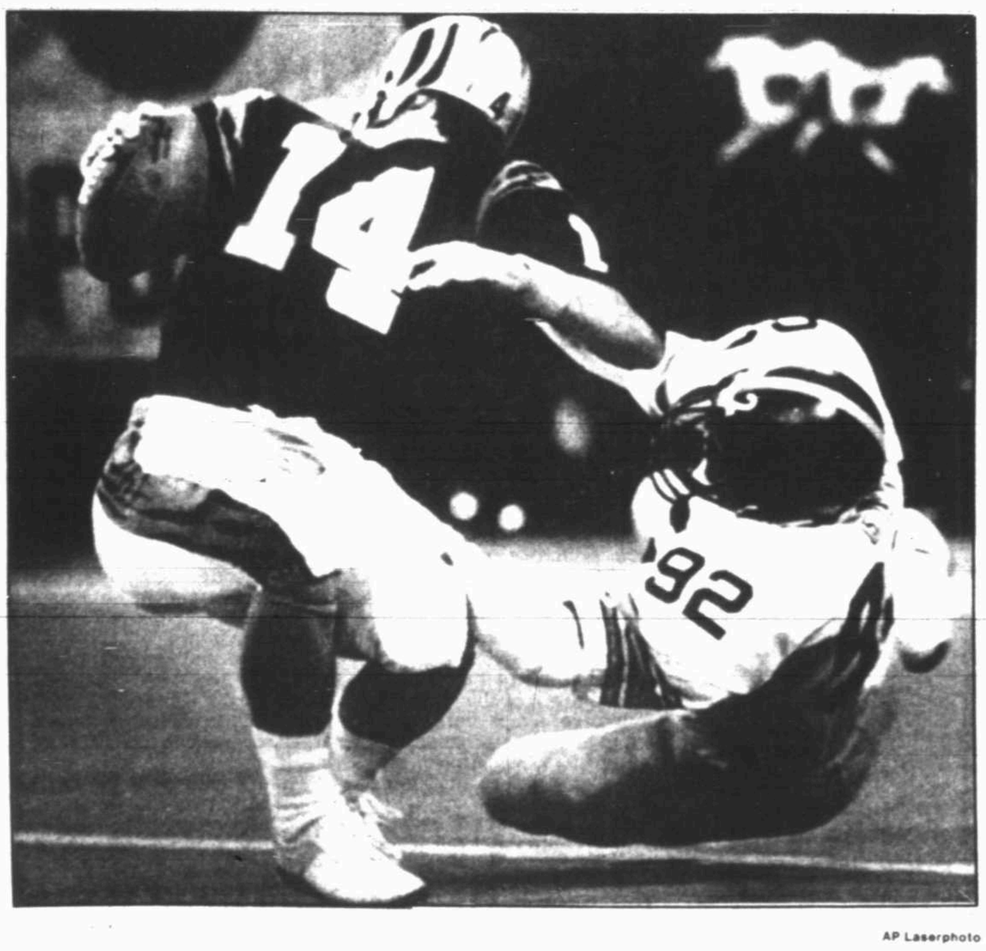

What followed that night isn't very clear, though I am told I had a smashing time. Dickson Street, the main drag in Fayetteville, was closed to cars because the populace took it over, building a bonfire and in general losing all control.

The Big Boy caper is history, but at least now it is out in the open about the perpetrators of the crime. I feel much better.

As for last year, Texas Week was a let down after the Hogs tied SMU. I don't remember much about it because I went to see the Who in Dallas, but Texas dismantled the Hogs 33-7 to extract some revenge.

Saturday I'll be watching Arkansas struggle again, accepting a give-away loss in the R-T football forecast and remembering past Texas Weeks.

Sooie.

Texas gains poll ground on Nebraska

By The Associated Press

For the first time in three weeks, Nebraska is not a unanimous choice as the nation's No. 1 college football team.

The Cornhuskers' 14-10 squeaker over unranked Oklahoma State cost them five first-place votes in this week's Associated Press poll and also left them five points short of being a unanimous pick again.

Nebraska received 55 of 60 first-place votes and 1,195 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. The Cornhuskers have been ranked No. 1 all season, starting with the preseason poll.

The other five first-place ballots went to Texas, runner-up for the fourth week in a row. The Longhorns, who defeated Oklahoma 28-16 and dropped the Sooners from eighth place to 15th, totaled 1,144 points.

Although this week's Top Twenty consists of the same 20 teams as last week, there was considerable shuffling, with Alabama falling from third to 11th after losing to Penn State 34-28. North Carolina, a 30-10 winner over Wake Forest, rose from fourth to third with 1,014 points and West Virginia, which was idle, climbed from fifth to fourth with 983 points.

Steelers find weapon

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers have discovered a new offensive weapon — their defensive secondary.

The Steelers, who have struggled without quarterback Terry Bradshaw, turned their defense loose Monday night and it produced three touchdowns in a 24-14 National Football League victory over the Cincinnati Bengals.

The blitzing Steeler defense returned a fumble and a pair of fourth-quarter interceptions for touchdowns to make up for a sputtering offense.

"It (the blitz) was something we had to do," Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said. "Our offense was struggling, and we needed an offensive defense."

The revamped "Steel Curtain" provided plenty of that.

Trailing 14-10 after three quarters, the Steelers picked off three fourth-quarter passes by backup quarterback Turk Schonert. Safety Ron Johnson returned one 34 yards for a 14-10 lead with 11:04 to play, and rookie cornerback Harvey Clayton turned his first professional interception into a 70-yard touchdown to seal the victory with 1:20 left.

The Steelers also got their first touchdown on safety Rick Woods' 38-yard return of a fumble in the first quarter.

"Three defensive scores is a helluva offense," Noll said. "Our offense couldn't get unlocked, but our defense got warmer and warmer, better and better."

The defense not only did the Steelers' scoring, it prevented the Bengals from mounting much of an attack. The Steelers recorded a club record nine quarterback sacks for 77 yards in losses.

The Steelers' first victory in Riverfront Stadium since 1978 kept them in a first-place tie with the Cleveland Browns in the American Confewrence's Central Division at 4-2. The Bengals fell to 1-5.

"We won't throw in the towel, I can promise you that," Bengal Coach Forrest Gregg said of his the team's slim playoff hopes.

The three turnovers-turned-touchdowns spoiled a strong performance by the Bengal defense, which held the NFL's leading ground attack to just 56 yards in 20 carries.

Steeler quarterback Cliff Stoudt, playing without injured veteran receivers John Stallworth and Greg Hawthorne, completed 10 of 23 passes for 124 yards. The Steelers had just 168 yards total offense.

"I thought our defense did a great job," Gregg said. "They kept us in the game."

However, the Bengal offense lost quarterback Ken Anderson in the first quarter after defensive end Keith Gary jerked him to the ground by the facemask. Anderson was 5-for-5 for 60 yards at that point, but had to leave the game with a sprained and bruised neck. Gary drew a 15-yard penalty, and Schonert came on.

Gregg thought Gary should have been ejected for the foul.

Major upsets rock District 2-4A

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Upsets are a fact of life on all levels of football — high school, collegiate, or professional. Sometimes teams that are superior talent-wise, coaching-wise or otherwise do not win.

When coaches were asked before the season to select teams they thought would represent various districts, the results were typical.

But as the area football season heads into the home stretch, more than a few West Texas schools are wondering what happened.

This is especially so in District 2-4A, where the district favorites have been treated with little respect. Rodney Dangerfield could coach in this district.

Fort Stockton and Andrews were selected to finish 1-2 in the pre-season thinking, but to date both schools are searching for league win No. 1. Both schools have one group to thank for their current miseries: the Pecos Eagles.

The Eagles weren't supposed to be shutting out Fort Stockton and Andrews back-to-back, but that is exactly what has happened. Pecos was expected to be better than Snyder and rebuilding Lamesa, but after that no one expected the Eagles to compete.

A stunning 14-0 upset against Fort Stockton was attributed to the rain during their game. Surely, the doubters reasoned, a fluke.

Then Pecos skunked Andrews 17-0 in Andrews, and suddenly November 11 has become a very important date.

That's when the Eagles meet unbeaten district co-leader Sweetwater. The two schools have already hooked up once this year due to a bizarre scheduling mishap. Sweetwater smashed the Eagles 24-0.

As for Stockton and Andrews, the once-favored squads face a do-or-die situation Friday in Andrews. Both schools realize that three losses in a district this balanced probably insures missing the state playoffs. Thus, Friday's battle should prove quite intense as the two schools meet in a losers-out game.

Monahans, 3-2 overall, has also been a 2-4A surprise. Midland residents witnessing Lee's 31-0 stampeding of Monahans might have written the Loboes off, but after two loop wins the Loboes are atop the standings as well.

Monahans got to the top by knocking off Andrews and by staging one of those pesky upsets against Lake View last week.

Lake View was unbeaten.

Hence, the district now features the district favorites in the cellar and only two teams of eight with losing marks, Lamesa (2-3) and Snyder (0-5).

All bets are off from this point onwards where 2-4A is concerned.

Area Roundup

Not too many people expected the Crane Golden Cranes to get very far this year, either. Crane's choke act last year left a horde of doubters in the wake. After a 7-0 start, the Cranes went into the toilet by dropping their final three and losing a playoff berth. This edition of the Cranes was expected to have trouble bouncing back and over Ozona, Colorado City, Ballinger and district favorite Sonora.

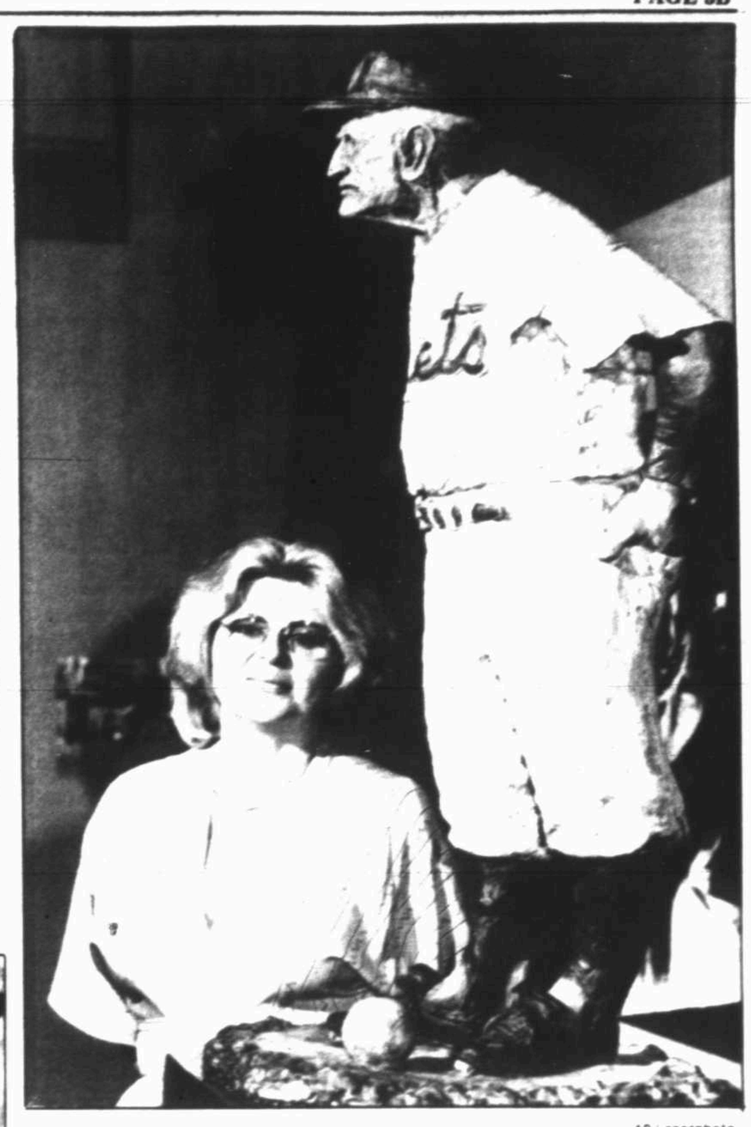

The Cranes are 6-0 and have regained the faith. Sonora, meanwhile, had been impressive at 4-2, but lost the district opener at home to the Cranes, 7-3.

Leading the Crane attack has been a pair of swivel-hipped heroes, Jim and Joe Vasquez. The duo has taken District 6-3A by storm and have led the Cranes to points in every game.

Against Sonora, Crane allowed a field goal with under six minutes to play as the game's first score. The Cranes kept their heads, drove downfield, and coach Rickey White went deep into the play book, calling a halfback pass from Todd Rodgers to Joe Vasquez for the winning score.

Rodgers had been the starting quarterback entering the season, but has adapted well to his new role. His pass to Vasquez was especially interesting since Vasquez has assumed the signal-calling chores.

When Crane visits fifth-ranked Ballinger Oct. 28, it is likely to be a battle of unbeatens for all the marbles.

McGregor once booted Game 7

By MARK HEISLER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BALTIMORE — What goes around, comes around, so it is fitting that when the Orioles open the World Series Tuesday night, Scott McGregor will be their starting pitcher. The last time they were in it, in 1979, he lost Game 7.

He threw the two-run homer to Willie Stargell that won it for the Pirates. Afterward, Stargell cried in his sister's arms, in what was supposed to be the post-game interview. The men who were supposed to be asking questions swallowed on their own tears.

McGregor, who was the only one who really had a reason to cry, went home to see how long his new infamy would last. How about a day?

"The thing you realize," he said Monday, "is 10 years from now, nobody remembers.

"Two weeks from now, the football season will be kicking up. It doesn't take long for things to blow over. The day after it's all over, you're thinking, 'That was it?' "

The World Series, that's where McGregor had been heading all his life, since those days when he was the only toddler in El Segundo, Calif., who could throw a straight change. He played on one of the strongest high school teams ever put together, the one on which George Brett was an also-ran, the one that had six of the nine players drafted.

He flamed out in the Yankee system and came to the Orioles as a throw-in in the big Ken Holtzman-Rudy May deal. And then, some seven years past his golden boy days, he started putting it together on the big-league level.

In '79, he ran behind Jim Palmer and Mike Flanagan on the Oriole staff. Now he's the No. 1 guy, a smallish, soft-throwing left-hander with a 78-38 record over the last five seasons, which gives him the best winning percentage in baseball in that time.

After Scott left school, the road got bumpy. The longer he was in the Yankee system, the more he floundered. He went to camp with the big team four times, but never made it. Even in the early '70s, the new Yankee owner, George Steinbrenner, was going for veterans over his own system's prospects. McGregor went from being "the next Whitey Ford" to the Orioles.

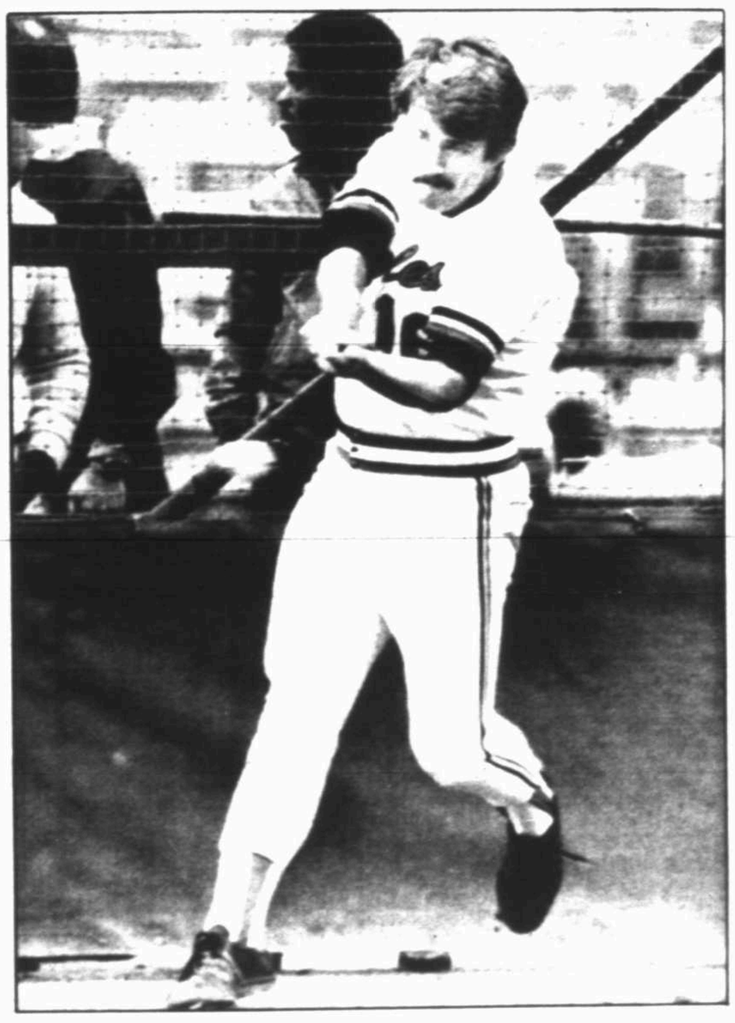

"The first three years in the Yankee organization, I pitched really good," McGregor said. "Then as I got older and I realized the major leagues weren't just around the corner, my development kinda slowed down. I just became a .500 pitcher."

The Orioles had liked him for years. "We saw him in a spring game," the ex-Orioles manager Earl Weaver said. "He couldn't have been two years out of high school and he was the most poised pitcher I'd ever seen."

Given a real big-league shot, McGregor blossomed. He figured out that he didn't throw hard enough to be a power pitcher, went more to his off-speed stuff and became what he is today, professional.

Personally, his transition took some time. In 1979, his first good season, the one in which he shut out the Angels in Game 4 of the playoffs to get the Orioles into the World Series, he started wondering where he was really going. He became a born-again Christian. After that, his career took off.

"I was doing a lot of drinking, heading down a road a lot of guys seem to be heading down now," McGregor said. "I was having trouble dealing with success and dealing with people. I was quiet and introverted. This has given me more faith, more acceptance of people. It's given me more peace of mind on the mound...

Casey Stengel lives in bronze

By DENNIS DUGGAN
Newsday

NEW YORK — It's the closest thing to the real thing, a sculpture of former Dodger, Mets and Yankees manager Casey Stengel, whose syntax made a shambles of the English language and whose Mets made a mockery of the American pastime during his four years as their manager (1962-65).

The nearly 4-foot tall bronze sculpture is in the Queens Museum, an out-of-the-way cultural oasis near Shea Stadium, where Stengel held sway, dazzling everyone with what New Yorker writer and author Roger Angell calls "nonstop disquisitions — stuffed with subclauses, interruptions, rhetorical questions, addenda, historic examples, shifted tenses and free floating vehicles."

The woman who sculpted Charles Dillon Stengel described recently in loving detail how she came to the unusual assignment of capturing this baseball dervish in bronze.

Rhoda Sherbell says there is no such word as "sculptress," although that's how she is described on the column atop which Casey's sculpture stands. She lives in Westbury, N.Y., with her husband, artist Mervin Honig, and says the adventure began after her husband was commissioned to do a baseball painting for an art gallery co-owned by Joan Whitney Payson, owner of the baseball Mets at the time.

"She had the painting hung over her private table in the executive dining suite at Shea Stadium," Rhoda says.

Then Chris Watson, co-owner with Payson of an art gallery and a writer of detective fiction, suggested that Rhoda do a sculpture of Stengel since her husband's painting had been such a hit.

This was in 1965, Stengel's last year as manager of a team that had finished last in every season during his tenure. Payson turned over the use of her private box seats behind the Met's dugout to Rhoda and her husband so they could study Stengel at work.

"The first time I met him, I called him over — he knew what we were going to do and he had agreed to do it — and the ballplayers began razzing him so he began doing pirouettes and spins" — "I have it all on film," Mervin says — "and soon were were going out to the park, and I did sketches, and Mervin took pictures using a film and a still camera."

She also wheedled Stengel into giving her one of his uniforms and a pair of shoes and got friends of hers to pose as models wearing the uniform. The sculpture in the Queens Museum is Casey caught in bronze — and Casey it is, with his jaw jutting forward and his hands in his back pockets, which hang at half mast over as bandy a pair of legs as you will every see.

The original sculpture was done in an Italian clay called Plastilina and then cast in plaster of Paris. It was bought by Joanne Uris, a neighbor whose husband Percy decided to have it done in bronze and then placed in the garden of his Long Island home.

A few years before Stengel died of cancer in 1975, the bronze sculpture was the highlight of a birthday party for him. And Yogi Berra, who also managed the Mets, said he wanted one as well, and the Urises agreed to bankroll a similar statue to be placed alongside Stengel in their garden.

(Rhoda recalls asking Berra after she had completed the sculpture, "Did I catch you?" and that Berra looked at her nonplused and replied, "What do you mean by that?")

John Denny thanks Osteen for tonight's start

BALTIMORE (AP) — John Denny says he will be the Philadelphia Phillies starting pitcher in tonight's World Series opener because of coach Claude Osteen.

Osteen disagrees.

"Denny has been the one who has gone out and made it happen," said Osteen of the pitcher who won 19 games, tops in the National League.

"All I did was give a lending hand."

Osteen said that Denny, whose 2.37 ERA is second best in the National League, has developed a better curve ball and gets more movement on the fastball.

"He's always known how to pitch," Osteen said of Denny who he coached four years with the St. Louis Cardinals.

"Put all these things together and you have a great pitcher."

Osteen observed that Denny, who won 13 of his last 14 decisions including the last six, has gained control of himself.

Denny was known for having a short fuse.

"He doesn't fight the umpires, himself or the manager anymore.

"With the umpires he just assumes it's a ball until the right hand goes up indicating strike. He now takes the attitude, 'I threw the ball not the umpires.' He takes blame on his own shoulders"

Osteen said Denny had been very quick to lose control of himself.

"The least little thing would trigger it, and the ballgame would go out the window. It's (the change) a big factor in his success."

The Phillies were 27-9 in games Denny started, winning eight of his 11 no decisions. And in his six losses the Phillies scored but seven runs.

It was a fine comeback from a season in which he suffered shoulder miseries and posted a 6-13 record with a 4.87 ERA.

"I've never had a consistent year like this," said Denny, whose previous best was 14-11 for the Cardinals in 1978.

"There are a multitude of reasons.

"When I came to Philadelphia I got together with Osteen ... He noticed a problem in my delivery and we corrected it in spring training.

"It made a major difference."

Rangers could pop cork too

By SKIP BAYLESS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BALTIMORE — Long-distance calling Joe Klein, Texas Ranger general manager. Wake up, Joe. One bold stroke and you, too, can pop the cork on a World Series.

All you have to do is acquire that old Cincinnati magic, Pete Rose, Joe Morgan and Tony Perez, who probably will be available after doing their trick for Philadelphia. If not, how about Bob Gibson, Lou Brock and Tim McCarver, who won with another Big Red Machine, in St. Louis. Then about July 18, when your Rangers couldn't win an Oldtimers' game, fire Manager Doug Rader and replace him with 75-year-old Paul Richards, the Ranger sage, or even with Owner Eddie "Casey" Chiles.

You could make yourself manager, Joe, but at age 40 you'd be better off at first base, where you played in the minors.

After all, this illogical logic just vaulted the Philadelphia Phillies into America's living room, prime time Tuesday night. There, in aging color, will be Rose (42), Perez (41) and Morgan, who must show ID to prove he's 40. Replacing last fall's juicy closeups of Milwaukee Manager Harvey Kuenn's chaw will be those of Phillie Manager Paul Owens, dozing. The tall, stooped, white-thatched Owens is nearly 60 going on 80.

Here Monday was a rumor that Owens died three years ago while watching the Phillies beat the Cubs, 1-0, in 13 innings, but Owens would not confirm it.

Comment

At season's start, Owens was G.M. and Pat Corrales, another Ranger scapegoat, was manager. On July 18, with the Phillies tied for first in the NL East, Owens replaced Corrales with Owens. There was a rumor — unconfirmed — that Owens merely had intended to cancel a newspaper but, forgetting, canceled his manager.

Corrales went from the Phillie frying pan into the mire, managing Cleveland. Imagine how this man feels. He could be spitting across your screen the next week or so.

Under Owens and behind the Cincy magic, the Phils went from a game over .500 to 18 over and the NL title, three games to one over the Dodgers, who led the league in pitching. Meanwhile, Phillie superstar Mike Schmidt blasted Owens for lack of leadership. (Owens did not respond, "I don't know any Mike Smith.") Rose pouted, Morgan moaned, Perez groaned, Steve Carlton gestured.

So you may have your Baltimore Orioles, whose organization is as near to the Cowboys' as baseball allows. No fewer than 13 Orioles remain from the '79 Series squad. (The Phils have just two everyday players — Schmidt and Garry Maddox — from the '80 champs.) The Orioles are built on the bedrock of loyalty, humility, pride and promoting from within.

What rookie Manager Joe Altobelli remembers most about their dismantling of the Al East, baseball's toughest, are the two seven-game losing streaks. "No one pointed fingers," Altobelli said. "I was happy I could see a side that wasn't there."

Yes, you may have your Oriole stability, your stats, your dusty volumes of reasons the O's should dismantle Philly in five games. Your starting pitching, power hitting (Eddie Murray, Cal Ripkin, Ken Singleton), defense (the Phillies' 152 errors were next to worst in the NL). This is baseball, and I'm going with the Phillies in six.

The logic: Paul Owens, the one they call Pope.

In this game, you don't need a great manager, the most overrated position in sports. Baseball is an individual team sport. Strategy seldom makes as much difference as a three-run homer.

Owens assembled this club with a keen old eye, full of twinkling life. He designed his Phillies as a lefty-righty platoon team, like the Orioles, and Corrales simply wasn't making out the right lineup card.

Owens wasn't afraid to make a deadline trade for Sixto Lezcano, the right-handed bat he wanted. Nor is he afraid of Rose-Morgan-Perez, whom he acquired as much for what they were as what they are.

"On the bench in September," Pope said, twinkling, "we just knew we were going to win."

Yet Rose, fat and happy as a batboy, is six for his last 16. Morgan, mired at .200, finally got hot. "We know what it takes to win," little Joe said. "Other guys (Orioles?) think they can. We know."

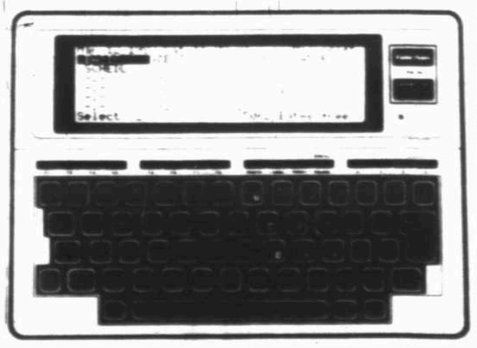

Pope knows. Crazy game. Phillies in six.

Lakers find a way to keep Kareem

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Although the price was all-star guard Norm Nixon and a bankful of dollars, the Los Angeles Lakers brought in 14 feet of basketball talent to fill their center position by re-signing Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and acquiring Swen Nater from San Diego.

Abdul-Jabbar, who has a chance next season to pass Wilt Chamberlain as the leading scorer in National Basketball Association history, was signed Monday to a multiyear contract for an undisclosed amount. A team spokesman said the contract will give the 7-foot-2 Abdul-Jabbar, 36, "the highest salary ever paid a Laker player."

Later in the day, the Lakers filled a void at backup center by trading Nixon and seldom-used guard Eddie Jordan to the Clippers in exchange for the 6-11 Nater and the rights to unsigned rookie guard Byron Scott, the No. 4 pick in last June's college draft.

As part of the trade, the Clippers also will receive at least one, and possibly two future second-round draft choices.

"The only time you would ever trade a player of the caliber of Norman, an all-star, six-year veteran, would be because you feel you need help in some other area," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "We felt we needed size, we needed a big player."

Nixon, a vital cog in the Lakers' two championships in the last four years, was understandably disappointed to be traded to a team that finished with a 25-57 record last season.

"I was hurt," Nixon said. "I have some great friends here. I'm going to miss everybody, but businesswise I can see where we needed a big guy and I knew I was the one guy that most teams were questioned about."

New Cubs' manager promises mirror look

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Frey, who took the Kansas City Royals to the 1980 World Series as a rookie manager, promises his first edition of the Chicago Cubs will mirror his own image as a "no-nonsense guy."

"I think this business is a tough racket. There's a lot of money involved ... and playing baseball had better be the most important thing in these guys' lives," Frey said Monday at a news conference introducing him to the Chicago media.

Asked whether his reputation as a disciplinarian was more a matter of terminology than fact, he replied, "I guess it depends on the circumstances.

"Nobody is going to be Santa Claus all the time and win," said Frey, 51, who spent the last two seasons as a New York Mets coach. "And nobody is going to be Simon Legree and win all the time."

Frey succeeds Charlie Fox, who announced last week he was returning to the Cubs' front office to resume his duties as special consultant to General Manager Dallas Green. Fox replaced Lee Elia on Aug. 22.

Asked whether taking over a ballclub that finished in fifth place in the National League East last season at 71-91 was the biggest challenge of his long baseball life, Frey joked: "I think that was when I graduated high school. I was 5-foot-7, couldn't see, couldn't run and I wanted to be a major league ballplayer.

"But," he added, "this is my 34th year and I've beat out a lot of other guys in the business.

"I didn't take the job so I could retire in two years, and I didn't take it for the expense account," he said. "The only motivation I have is to win and when I lose that, I'm going to go off and play golf."

Frey batted a career .302 as a minor leaguer before hanging retiring in 1963. Before taking the Kansas City job, he had managed for two seasons in the Baltimore Orioles organization and two more in the winter Venezuelan League. Frey also served as Baltimore hitting instructor from 1970 through 1979.

The Royals finished 97-65 and swept the New York Yankees in the American League playoffs in 1980 before losing to the Philadelphia Phillies in the World Series. Frey's debut in the Series marked the 19th time in major league history that a rookie manager had taken his club that far.

SAVE ON THE NEW MINOLTA BETA. THE COPIER OF THE FUTURE.

You don't have to spend a lot to get a lot of copier. Not if you buy Minolta's Beta 450Z. It comes with features that are so advanced, it can do some extraordinary things.
- The unique variable magnification zooming lens gives the 450Z a virtually limitless range of copy sizes. From almost a 50% enlargement to a 50% reduction.
- Auto magnification enables the 450Z to take different size originals and enlarge or reduce them to a uniform size.
- Auto paper selection enables the 450Z to copy different size originals on different size paper, selecting the correct paper size for you automatically.
- If you need to expand capacity with an automatic document feeder or sorter, the 450Z has a full system of design-integrated accessories. And because they're made only for Beta, they give you smoother, significantly more trouble-free operation.

To see the 450Z, the copier of the future, come in for a demonstration today.

Chiles to address Petroleum Pioneers

Eddie Chiles of Fort Worth, chairman of the Western Company of North America, will be the featured speaker at the men's luncheon at the 13th biennial meeting and reunion of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers, Oct. 28, at Midland's Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Chiles, a former Midland resident and city councilman is a Permian Basin Pioneer. He will be introduced by Robert L. Wood of Midland, who is also a Pioneer and a former business associate of Chiles'.

The Permian Basin Petroluem Pioneers is an organization whose membership is open to any one who was engaged in any phase of the petroleum business in the Permain Basin 30 or more years ago, before Oct. 1, 1983.

Pioneer chairman Jno. P. Butler said that programs and reservation cards have been mailed to all registered members. Persons who have not previously enrolled as Pioneers are invited to do so at the Midland Chamber of Commerce, where reunion reservations may also be made. There is no membership fee.

Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa. The registration desk will be staffed by members of the Desk and Derrick Club. A coffee reception, for both men and women, will be held until 11:30 a.m. in the Holidome area.

A luncheon for women is scheduled for noon at the Midland Country Club. Bus transportation will be provided.

Tours of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and of the Midland area are scheduled for the afternoon with buses departing the Inn at 1:30 p.m.

An informal reception and buffet from 6 to 9 p.m., in the Holidome area, will conclude the day's events.

Working with Butler on the reunion are Harvey Herd, treasurer; Les Weatherall, membership and hospitality; Mrs. W.A. Yeager and Mrs. Sally Patterson, ladies activities; W.H. (Bill) Collyns, publicity; and Grant A. Billingsley and Alison Peeler, Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The reunion is staged on alternate years with the Permian Basin Oil Show and is sponsored by the Permain Basin Petroluem Pioneers in cooperation with the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

InterFirst's loss shocks market

By The Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

In the first evidence of Wall Street's shock over a surprising $334 million third quarter write-off reported late last week by a big Dallas bank holding company, securities analysts said Monday that many Texas banks and the state's financially troubled oil industry may be about to report poor results.

InterFirst Corp., the nation's 14th largest banking company and one that had a reputation for solid management, reported Friday that the huge write-off produced a $194 million loss in the third quarter compared to a profit of $57 million the year earlier.

Bad loans to the energy industry, particular the risky contract drilling segment, were blamed for the loss. InterFirst's loan loss reserves amounted to $506 million for the first nine months of 1983, up from $59 million the year earlier. Meanwhile, non-performing assets — principally loans on which customers have stopped paying but which are not yet technically in default — increased to $687 million from $383 million in 1982.

"This was the shock of 1983," said analyst Thomas H. Hanley for New York-based Salomon Brothers. "Management had said everything was under control."

The company said Friday that William E. Breedlove resigned as chief executive of the company's lead bank, InterFirst Bank Dallas.

Robert H. Stewart III, former chief executive of the bank and the holding company, was named to succeed Breedlove. He remains a vice chairman of the holding company. InterFirst also appointed Harvey R. Mitchell as the bank's president, filling the post that W. Tack Thomas resigned from in July.

"Almost all banks today are having problems with bad loans in their portfolio with the oil and gas sector," said Elvis L. Mason, chairman and chief executive of the holding company. "It is that extra increment in our case that we felt was a question of management judgment."

Analysts said the management shake-up should lead to a more cautious strategy at InterFirst. But Mason said no wholesale changes in managerial style are likely. He added, "A very high percentage of our company has grown in a satisfactory way with no problems."

Nevertheless, Texas banks generally have a considerable portion of their loans in the petroleum service and production areas, especially in the very high risk drilling area. Analysts said InterFirst was done in by high risk, poorly secured loans to "contract drillers."

"I don't think we have seen the worst," said Mark Alpert, banking analyst at Bear, Sterns & Co. "The oil business remains depressed in Texas. There are banks which have remained optimistic that there would be a major turnaround in the oil industry."

At least one other Wall Street analyst who asked not to be identified predicted that InterFirst would report as much as $120 million in additional write-offs in the fourth quarter. InterFirst, however, said it expects to report a fourth quarter profit, but not one large enough to fully offset the $125 million in red ink accumulated in the first nine months of 1983.

InterFirst had 25.3 percent of its loan portfolio in energy related activities as of Jan. 1, Alpert said. About 18 percent of those loans were in the risky contract drilling business. Texas banks had an average of 22 percent of their loan portfolios in energy.

"The problems with InterFirst are not related to one company or one loan. It is a reflection of the Texas economy and the energy industry," Alpert said. "If oil prices decline further, the problems of major write-offs would increase further."

Additional weakness in oil prices have been widely predicted in recent weeks, even by Middle East oil officials who worry that OPEC producers will violate their quotas.

Texas bank stocks falter

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — The stocks of most major Texas banks faltered Monday as a side-effect of the announcement Friday by InterFirst Corp. of Dallas that it lost money in the third quarter and expects a loss for the year.

The stock of InterFirst, the state's largest bank holding company, fell 1 1-2 points Monday to close at 18 1-4. Its 7.6 percent drop was the fifth-greatest percentage decline on the New York Stock Exchange Monday.

A total of 643,500 shares of InterFirst were traded Monday, making it the 14th-most active stock on the Big Board.

Trading in InterFirst's stock was delayed for about an hour after the opening of the market Monday because of an excess of sell orders. It opened at 17 1-2, fell to 17 3-8, then rose slowly the rest of the day.

InterFirst said Friday it lost $194 million in the quarter ended Sept. 30 because of a $430 million loan-loss provision. In the third quarter of 1982, InterFirst earned $57 million and had a loan-loss provision of $17 million.

While no other major Texas bank company took as big a loss in trading Monday, just one of the state's five largest bank companies saw its stock rise.

Texas Commerce Banchshares of Houston, which has reported increased profits during the first two quarters of this year, rose 3-8 to close at 40 3-4. Texas Commerce has not reported third-quarter earnings.

RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas dropped 3-8 to 36 1-4. RepublicBank, the second-largest Dallas-based bank holding company, also has not reported third-quarter earnings.

Mercantile Texas Corp., whose stock had been the best gainer among Texas banks last month as analysts issued favorable reports about its planned merger with Southwest Banchshares of Houston, saw its stock fall 1-2 Monday to close at 30 1-2.

Strike talk, no talks hamper major airlines

By The Associated Press

Eastern Airlines flight attendants assembled the framework for a strike as their union leaders and company managers remained at the bargaining table, but a walkout by Continental pilots continued with little hope for a resumption of negotiations.

Federal mediator Harry Bickford kept representatives of Eastern and its flight attendants talking for 10 hours Monday, finally adjourning the negotiations at 11:30 p.m. so everyone could get some rest. Bickford presided over a 19-hour session over the weekend.

The Negotiations, aimed at averting a strike called for Thursday, were to resume at 10 a.m. today.

In Houston, a Continental spokesman said striking pilots have yet to propose a contract in writing, while the carrier has suggested three.

Without a written proposal from pilots, "we don't see any reason to have further negotiations," spokesman Bruce Hicks said.

"The negotiation process can only happen when there's an exchange of meaningful contract proposals."

Talks between the groups broke off Friday after three days, and Continental Airlines began interviewing prospective replacement pilots Monday. Interviews were planned in 11 cities, Hicks said.

There was progress Monday in the Eastern bargaining, Bickford said.

"I continue to be very, very encouraged by both the attitudes of the participants and the progress," he said. "We fully expect to reach an agreement before the deadline" of 12:01 a.m. Thursday set by Local 553 of the Transport Workers Union, which represents Eastern's 5,800 domestic flight attendants.

Nonetheless, union members began preparing for a walkout. Some members were given picketing schedules Monday and a spokesman said the union had established strike headquarters in Miami, New York, Boston and Washington.

Bickford said the flight attendants were considering a package of proposals to replace the contract that expired in February 1982, but neither he nor Federal Mediation Board Chairman Walter Wallace would comment on its contents.

Transport Workers President Patricia Fink said there were three remaining major issues: wages, working conditions for junior flight attendants.

PI reports fewer wells completed

DENVER — Reported U.S. completions of wells drilled for oil and gas totaled 59,214 for the first three quarters of this year. The total down 7.7 percent from the same time a year ago, Petroleum Information Corp. said.

Although behind the all-time record 1982 pace, activity this year continues to be relatively strong. Lower costs of drilling and shallow activity in several regions are reflected in the total.

New field wildcat, or purely exploratory drilling, showed the largest drop in relative activity. Petroleum Information reported 5,950 new field wildcat completions, down 20 percent from the comparable 1982 period. Of wildcats completed during the first nine months, 586 found new oil fields and 452 were new gas field discoveries. The comparable 1982 wildcat discovery totals were 845 new oil fields and 568 new gas fields.

The success rate for new field wildcats completed in the first nine-months is 17.4 percent, compared with 19.0 percent for the same period in 1982.

Also showing a substantial drop was the number of gas well completions. PI reported 11,220 gas completions through the third quarter of this year, compared to 13,303 completions at the same time last year—a drop of 15.7 percent. The gas completions were down across the board: in development, other exploratory and new field wildcat categories.

Texas continued to be the top drilling state in the country, with 18,284 completions recorded, compared to 20,282 in the first three quarters of 1982. Oklahoma again ranked second with 7,488 completions—down 1,402 from the state's 1982 nine-month total.

Other top drilling states and the total number of completions include: Kansas 5,343; Louisiana 3,810; Ohio 3,741; Kentucky 3,148; Pennsylvania 3,130; California 2,089; Illinois 1,623 and West Virginia 1,445. Of the ten leading drilling states, only Pennsylvania and Kentucky showed increases in number of wells reported.

A continued upward trend in the count of active drilling rigs speaks for a strong finish to drilling in 1983, PI noted. The count of active rigs reached 2,312 as the first week of the fourth quarter began.

Fed chairman criticizes Congress

HONOLULU (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker rapped Congress in an address to U.S. bankers, saying that lawmakers' failure to add $8.4 billion to the International Monetary Fund shows an unwillingness to help struggling nations.

One of a host of speakers here entreating members of the American Bankers Association to continue support for international lending packages, Volcker said Monday that dealing with hundreds of banks takes "financial engineering" to realize a "cohesive view."

He said that failure by Congress to approve the $8.4 billion increase in the U.S. quota to the International Monetary Fund "could only be widely interpreted — by design or otherwise — as an unwillingness on the part of the Congress to support the current effort of so many nations and institutions to manage and contain the situation."

Both houses of Congress have passed the IMF quota increase, although the House, which acted second, attached an unrelated housing bill amendment, and the two differing versions have become ensnarled in a debate over whether the quota increase is in fact a "bail-out" of the overextended big banks.

Speaker after speaker here has insisted that the measure is not a bail-out, because the banks will have to increase their own lending levels, and, the United States Treasury can borrow back a considerable degree of its contributions through "Special Drawing Rights," in a formula devised for each IMF nation, based on its level of contribution.

The bankers association, meeting here since the weekend, consists of 13,000 commercial banks, most of which are not the big, well-known banks that are the "lead lenders" with the Third World nations, whose principal debtors are Brazil with $90 billion, Mexico with $80 billion, and Argentina with more than $30 billion.

And a growing sentiment among the smaller bankers, they say privately, is to reconsider their involvement with the big-bank, foreign lenders.

For small banks which are reconsidering whether to participate in another round of Latin American debt negotiations, Volcker said the talks are difficult to arrange, but vital.

"Some banks are restive about it," he said, adding that "When there are hundreds of banks, you can't get them all in the room."

But banks nationwide must support refinancing of Latin America's debt in order for the Third World's economic recovery to succeed, Volcker said.

His remarks were certain to crystallize an informal debate that has the big banks, as the leading lenders, scurrying around convention centers to reenlist support for the international lending packages that include loan participations by hundreds of smaller banks nationwide.

He warned that shutting off "flows of new credit" would lead to widespread default and a breakdown of international financial arrangements.

Bankers here suggested privately that the international debt financing could collapse if enough of the small banks refused to go along with what has come to be annual refinancing of interest and principal payments.

Volcker said lower interest rates, particularly in the United States because most of the loans are in dollars, would accelerate and assure the solving of the debt problem, and thereby allow the borrowing nations to restore a surplus between their imports and exports.

Why Midland is Banking at Briercroft Savings.

Nowadays you don't have to be a bank to do what banks do.

At Briercroft Savings, you'll find all the financial services big banks offer—without a big bank attitude.

Interest-earning checking accounts, as well as tailor-made savings and retirement plans. Money market accounts. Interim construction lending. Home mortgage and home improvement loans. Working capital loans and all types of commercial lending.

For added convenience, Briercroft has two locations with drive-in facilities to make one-stop savings and banking easier still. Briercroft is also part of the Pulse Automatic Teller Network. So you can have access to your money at 1,000 Pulse locations throughout the Southwest.

Over the years our full service approach, plus sound management and broad-based assets, have made us the largest savings association in West Texas.

So, if your current bank is no longer what it used to be, change to Briercroft Savings, for full service banking you can depend on.

Here's Why At ClayDesta National Oil & Gas Is Our Business.

Ever since the discovery of gas and crude in the Permian Basin, Midland has attracted countless independent energy pioneers who came here with a hat full of dreams and a pocket full of leases.

And with the kind of hard work (and a little luck) that only oil and gas people can understand, these operators have made our city one of America's great energy centers.

But factors like the economy, government regulations, and imports have changed the face of the oil and gas industry forever. And as a result, the kind of financial backing an oil and gas man needs now is a lot different from what he needed just a few years ago.

Backing the oil and gas industry is a major part of ClayDesta National Bank's business. It makes up the biggest single component of our loans. And because our bank was built by oil and gas men, we know how to handle the special needs of independent operators.

Quick response. Sometimes you've got to have an answer now! Oil men who deal with ClayDesta National will tell you they can usually measure response time in days not months.

Personal attention. Any oil man's relationship should be one-on-one with his banker, not with a department. And frankly, our oil and gas customers tell us ClayDesta National is the friendliest bank they've ever been in.

Commitment. There aren't many things more important to an oil man than knowing his bank will stand by him. You get a commitment from ClayDesta National, and you've got a commitment.

Asset strength. We opened just a few months ago with the largest capital structure of any bank in West Texas history. Since then our deposit base has grown more than 300%, while our loan-to-deposit ratio is less than 40%. But most importantly, because of our sound relationships with other financial sources, truly no oil and gas deal is too big for ClayDesta National to handle.

Expertise. Not many things are worse than talking to a banker who doesn't understand your business. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks who have full-time oil and gas lenders on staff, ready to work with you.

Positive attitude. Let's be honest. A lot of people think energy loans are a dirty word these days. But those independent oil and gas operators who risked all they had to establish this great industry are still the backbone of it today. And we stand behind 'em. At ClayDesta National Bank, energy lending is OK!

The oil and gas industry has kept this part of Texas looking great for nearly a century.

And at ClayDesta National Bank, we think it's looking better all the time.

Shriners bring more than circuses

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Many people probably look at them as the guys with the funny red hats who march in community parades.

They also bring a circus into town once a year.

But according to Gus Hicks, Shrine general circus chairman, the Christmas parade and the annual circus have one thing in common with the purpose of Shriners — to provide help and entertainment for children.

More than 100 Midland children needing orthopedic treatment for crippling defects and illnesses have received help at no charge because of the local Shriners, Hicks said.

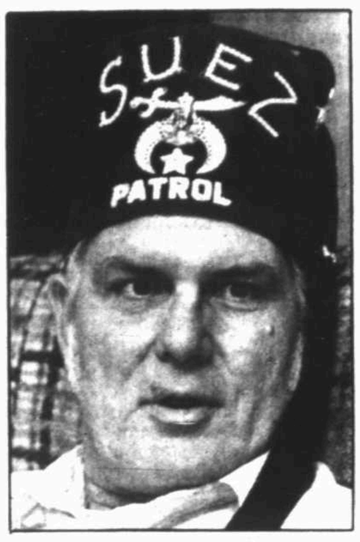

One of the eight or nine Midland children now traveling back and forth to the Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital in Houston is 3½-year-old Lee Martin, son of Beverly and James "Tinker" Martin.

Lee's right leg was broken before or during birth. Because it healed with tissue instead of fiber, it caused the tibia to bow, his mother explained. Lee's physician sent Mrs. Martin to Midland orthopedic surgeon Dr. Jerry Cochran and he in turn sent her to the Shriners.

"I have a world of respect for Jerry Cochran," Hicks said. "I've never seen a doctor that was as dedicated as he is. If that kid needs some help, he's going to get it for him."

According to Hicks, a child won't be turned down by the Shriners unless the hospital cannot help him. Because orthopedic treatment often is expensive, many families would not be able to provide such care for their children without the Shriners.

"It doesn't cost anybody," Hicks said. "Everything is free except we don't supply them with shoes for their braces. And if they can pay their way, we let them."

Gus Hicks

Funds are raised through the annual circus — Midland's 33rd annual this Saturday — and a Hospital Benefit Day in the spring. A large portion goes directly to the Shrine hospital but a "considerable" sum is maintained in a transportation fund for area recipients.

Through referrals of doctors such as Cochran, the Shriners find out about needy children; however, Hicks encouraged anyone knowing of a case to contact the Shriners at 689-7003.

Board proposes plans for library

By ED TODD
Staff Weriter

"It's bull-horn grabbing time," said Charles F. "Chuck" Henderson Jr.

There's a movement adrift to do something constructive about Midland County's quarter-century-old library.

It's time to move on it, Henderson, chairman of the Midland County Public Library's advisory board, said Monday.

Proposals are to renovate and expand the downtown library, to branch out the library to other parts of town via "store-front" libraries, or build a new library with funds that, so far, aren't evident.

"We are going to have to be very careful today," Henderson told the Midland County Commissioners' Court. Otherwise, he suggested, the actions "might be null and void."

Henderson alluded to a 1981 proposal — a joint effort by Midland County and The First National Bank — to build an ambitious $8 million library at the peak of Midland's recent oil boom. But the negotiations fizzled in the resultant economic slump when funds became scarce.

Henderson suggested a Commissioners' Court-sanctioned ad hoc committee "to look into library needs for the county" and to reflect the "enthusiasm and interest" in expanding the library.

"We have some great plans that look like they might bear fruit," said Henderson. "They haven't."

He suggested renovating the library or selling the library's prime downtown land "and build elsewhere."

"We don't know," he said. "We've lost a lot of time."

Library Director John Deats proposed using the library's advisory board as the ad hoc committee, since it represents a "cross-section of the community."

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis proposed calling the group the "steering committee," since it would give direction to the library's future.

John J. Redfern Jr., an avid user of the library, offered his suggestions. Redfern, an oil operator, said he frequently uses the library's technical material.

"I personally have my own biases about the future of the library," said Redfern, who mentioned that he regularly checks out the libraries in Dallas, Houston and Tulsa when he's in those cities.

"I consider it a very important part of the community."

"We'd be more than happy to work with anybody that had anything to offer," said Henderson.

Kathlene Bynum, an architect-advisory board member who noted that committees are "large things that move very slowly," mentioned remodeling the 1957-built library.

"Where are we going to get the money to take care of the remodeling?" asked County Judge Bill Ahders.

"You'll take care of that," quipped Henderson.

Commissioner Durward Wright suggested that "contributions as well as public money" be used to fund any library project.

"We don't want to shoot too low," said Henderson.

"I do think this is a community-wide project," said Davis. Gifts would be needed to bring it to fruition, he suggested.

MISD to implement four-year curriculum plan

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Making choices and decisions seems to be one of the toughest requirements of the teen years, especially when faced with the awesome task of planning for the future. The Midland school district hopes to alleviate some of the frustration, tension and fear associated with that process with the implementation of a four-year curriculum plan.

The program begins this week in conjunction with Midland Public Schools Week.

The purpose of the plan is to encourage parents and students to take an active part in deciding what courses a child will take. Beginning in the eighth grade, parents and students will meet with a counselor and decide on a tentative curriculum through the senior year.

"The focus is to have the parents and students plan and talk about what their curriculum is going to be, instead of having it be a year-to-year thing," said assistant superintendent Dr. Duane Moore. "There shouldn't be any surprises for the youngster. He shouldn't find out his senior year he needs something to enter a university."

It is not, however, a new concept.

"We had it years and years ago," Alamo Junior High counselor Ray Painter recalled, "but we didn't involve parents. It lost a lot of its validity because it was so informal."

Painter will be holding individual conferences for the next five months with approximately 1,000 Alamo students and their parents. He will explain credit hours, graduation requirements, options and electives available to students. This year counselors of ninth and tenth graders will also begin a similar program for their students.

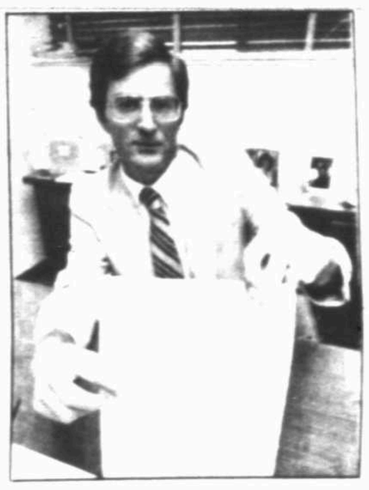

The plan, Moore emphasizes, can be changed or amended at any time. "This isn't set in concrete," he said. "The process will be to monitor and adjust their plans as the students move through the curriculum."

Although there are recommended programs for extremely gifted students, "A" and "B" students and "B" through "D" students, Moore was quick to point out that the plan is not really similar to "tracking" — where it is decided at a young age whether a student will pursue college preparatory or occupational courses.

"The difference is the four-year plan, first of all, is very flexible," Painter said. "It can be changed anytime. There's nothing permanent about it. They do it in pencil, and by the time they graduate I'm sure it'll be marked up and scratched out considerably. It's really to get the kids and parents to start thinking about what they're going to take, instead of just taking it all by chance, accident or coincidence."

Part of the objection to tracking is the belief that once a student is categorized it is difficult for him to change tracks. Thus, a student who decided in seventh grade he didn't want to attend college might find it extremely difficult to change his mind his junior year.

Board President Edia Hernandez, left, announces funding has come through at the last minute to save the Human Relations Council from closing. Listening is Gloria Ellis, HRC director.

HRC's prayers answered: Agency funded for next year

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Human Relations Council was preparing to close its doors at the end of this month, unable to see a prayer of a chance for staying open. But a prayer was answered and the agency now has the funding to remain open another year.

The board voted Monday night in a meeting at Energas to continue operations on an austere budget of $43,000. That will allow employment for two persons — one of them Director Gloria Ellis — and to implement ongoing programs.

"We had been crying out for help for months," said board chairman Edia Hernandez to the almost vacant room with seven chairs filled by board members.

The agency's plight had been publicized in early September. But few phone calls of support came to the agency with the exception of one that stands out in Ms. Ellis' mind. It was from a woman who called to have a moment of silent prayer in hopes that something would come through. It did.

Last Thursday someone contacted Ms. Hernandez about getting some money. This person had talked to others who felt the agency was needed, she said. But they all thought someone else would donate the money.

"No other agency could take this over. We felt we were the only ones who thought the agency was needed," she said.

Of the $43,000, $25,000 has come from the city of Midland and $3,500 from Midland College. The remainder was pumped in at the last minute from private donors.

"Now don't say your prayers aren't answered," Ms. Ellis was told by her secretary.

"We estimated $43,000 was needed to operate the Human Relations Council," said Ms. Hernandez, and that involved cutting back to the "bare necessities."

One of the agency's major involvements in the past two years had been with the federal Community Development Block Grant. The city received this money for housing rehabilitation and HRC's office was the location for filling out applications for the program. Overseeing the project was the Midland Housing Authority.

Last week at a housing authority meeting, some board members had questioned CD Coordinator Susan Howell as to where the applications would be filled out once HRC closes. She had said a replacement agency hadn't been located.

Commissioners: What's sense of cents tax bill?

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Tax talk abruptly dropped from the millions of dollars to a few cents.

Midland County Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis on Monday noted that a friend of his received a tax bill for 2¢ cents on a punt, a small flat-bottomed fishing boat.

The Midland County Appraisal District spent 17 cents on pre-sorted mail postage to get the tax notice to him.

"He was rather irate," said Davis, "and he used me as a sounding board...It's going to take him 20 cents (in postage) to send in his 20-cent tax." A friend of the "boat-man" got six 20-cent tax bills on his boats, he said.

Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson said the 20-cent bill had "nothing to do" with principles but was a matter of law. He is bound by Texas statutes to fix values on taxable properties, no matter what the worth, and to bill taxpayers according to existing tax rates.

"You just have to put it in the machine and put it out?" asked Davis.

"That's right," said Wilkinson.

"What happens if he doesn't pay?" asked the commissioner.

"It's a Catch-22 situation," said the appraiser.

Commissioner Durward Wright allowed that the cents billed was "ridiculous" in view of the dollars it cost just to get the tax notice out to the taxpayer and to collect the cents billed.

"It's discouraging when you have a situation where the processing costs more than what you're collecting," he said.

Wilkinson said he is charged to send out the billing whether the taxable property is valued at $1 million or $10.

Texas/OU reveler learns 'never say never again'

Every year, thousands of people cram into Big D for the Texas/OU game-state-fair weekend.

On this weekend, some things should be avoided. Perhaps these suggestions will guide you easily through Dallas' most hectic weekend each year:

— If you are going to Love Field, opt for a private plane. Commercial planes have been known to alter plans for the night of arrival. If you don't own a plane, get one. No price is too high for the cost of sanity.

— Never ask for directions on Greenville Avenue from the window of a rented car. Direction-givers are convinced rented cars are driven only by Oklahomans on this particular weekend. If you are told "it's two miles that way," be sure to look in the front, left, right and behind you. These well-meaning hosts are sometimes not so well-meaning. You may just find what you're looking for in the next block.

— Never trust directions from someone who first asks "Are you from OU?" Your answer, no matter what it is, won't matter to them.

— Because you never know who you're talking to, never say you're not from the other side. Though it may seem like a neutral stand at the time, never admit to anyone you're a Yankee, whether you are or not. It will only make whatever is bad worse.

— Never believe a parking lot attendant who follows you to your rented car at 2 a.m. when he tells you "it will cost $5.50 to park here or you'll be towed away." Pay careful attention to what he is holding. If it's a cup of wine in one hand, and a wad of bills in the other, don't worry about the car.

— Never eat turkey legs at the state fair. Aside from looking terribly uncouth, they are.

— Never finish the turkey leg and proceed to the "Natchoticho" stand. The two do not make a compatible meal.

— Never drink a beer with any or all of the above combinations.

— Never plan to meet anyone "in front of Big Tex." Everyone at the fair meets in front of Big Tex. And, though he seems to be talking to everyone it doesn't mean he can hear everyone. Take advice from a pro. Big Tex just doesn't care.

— Though the Hans Meuller tent is a great way to start the fair tour — complete with a German band — never eat more sausage than you should. Don't follow this wonderful meal with turkey legs, beer, corndogs, hotdogs, popcorn and natcho-what-evers.

— Never pass up two free tickets for a Cowboy game just to catch your commercial flight scheduled for departure before half-time. You'll be the first one to board the plane — only to hear the pilot announce "we regret to inform you we have mechanical difficulties which cannot be serviced at this time." Because you were first to board the plane, you will be the last one off — and the last in line for rescheduling a flight.

—You'll be crying in the airport because you missed the Cowboys game only to have your flight canceled. At this time, you may recall your friends inviting you to go sailing, which you turned down because of the flight and/or the game. You will feel most un-psychic and foolish.

— Your feet will have blisters and your stomach ache from having such a fun weekend. No one will know or care.

— When you discover the earliest flight you can have is 10:30 the next WORKING DAY, you will decide it's time to do something really fun to cheer up the impossible weekend you've had.

— You decide pizza is the answer.

— Never trust recommendations from anyone who really believes you're from the dreaded territory directly north of us'all.

— You find the famous pizza parlor so highly recommended. The waiter acts strange — but it doesn't bother you because, "what he does is his business," you say to yourself.

— You may notice the only other people in the restaurant are seven men who are not receptive to the party of three males, one female. The party takes the hint, makes a quick exit — out of the neighborhood for good.

The best choices for the '84 weekend are:

A) Opt for a private plane, complete with local escort, chauffeur-driven limo. Request a helicopter to deliver you straight from a nice restaurant to the grounds of the Cotton Bowl.

B) Say "never again," mean it and remember it.

Some people would like to choose both of the above.

But most of them never do.

DEATHS

Virginia West

Mrs. C.C. (Virginia) West, 88, of 2800 N. Midland Drive died in a Midland hospital early Monday morning.

Graveside services will be Wednesday at 11 a.m. in Resthaven Memorial Park with Dr. Hoyt Eudaly, Baptist minister, officiating. Arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

She was born Feb. 26, 1895 in Joplin, Mo. and spent her early life in Missouri and Oklahoma. She married C.C. West in Carthage, Mo. in 1916. They lived in Miami, Okla., many years before moving to Fort Worth in 1945 and Midland in 1977. Her husband, a retired mining superintendent of Eagle-Pitcher Mining Co., died in 1978.

She was an active member of First Baptist Church and formerly longtime member of University Baptist Church of Fort Worth. She was a Sunday school teacher.

Survivors include her son, Charles L. West of Midland; a daughter, Mrs. John L. Hill of Dover, Delaware; four grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hearthstone Foster Group Home of First Baptist Church in Midland.

Allie Franklin

Services for Allie Lee Franklin of rural Midland will be Friday in Tucson, Ariz. Local arrangements are directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

She died this morning at her home.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland.

J.E. McLean

Services for J.E. "Mac" McLean were to be at 2 p.m. today in the First United Methodist Church, with burial in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of the Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Sunday in a Midland hospital.

Pallbearers were to be George Loudamy, Paul Bozeman, Arby Koons, John Walker, Art Cook, and Bill Thomas.

Honorary pallbearers were to be the Midland Lions Clubs and the Buddy Woods Sunday School class of the First United Methodist Church.

Bad publicity about killing hurts district

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The superintendent of Southside High School says his district has been "knocked back three years" by the publicity that ensued after a 14-year-old student was accused of killing a woman by slashing her throat.

The boy, a freshman at Southside, was arrested Friday and charged with the slaying of 34-year-old Lynn Clara Popham.

Investigators said the throat of Ms. Popham, a mother of three, was slashed several times during a rape attempt at her home near the school.

Three of the boy's teen-age friends, who also played hooky to drink beer, were released after being questioned by sheriff's investigators.

"We are fighting a bad image," said Southside superintendent Ronald Geyer. "We had made tremendous gains, which is not to say we don't have a long way to go. Then this happened."

A school assembly was called for today to challenge Southside students to regain the district's good name, he said.

Geyer said he could not discuss what disciplinary measures — if any — would be taken against the four students, who range in age from 14 to 17.

The four were good friends, not a gang, and never had been in serious trouble at the school before, the superintendent said.

"There are no gangs terrorizing this community," he said. "Those boys wore no colors, no name. They were just four boys who hung around together."

Prosecutors have been stymied in their efforts to certify the 14-year-old boy, whose name is being withheld, to stand trial as an adult.

Under Texas law, a youth must be at least 15 before he can be certified.

"I wouldn't be surprised if people started lobbying to have the age dropped down, but how far down can you go?" said Nick Rothe, chief deputy district attorney. "Every time there's an incident like this, people start talking about changing the law."

Former official of oil firm indicted by grand jury

A 37-year-old former vice president for a Midland oil company has been indicted by a Midland County Grand Jury for stealing about $240,000 from the company and for the theft of $40,000 in oil field services.

The accused, Rodger L. Edge, until recently PED Oil Corp.'s vice president for drilling and exploration, was charged under 23 counts in two indictments.

And his father-in-law, Jack Flukinger, about 60, of Odessa was charged with theft of about $23,000 in oil field services.

Edge was indicted for allegedly taking the PED funds from June 1981 to April 1983 and with the theft of oil field services in July and August of this year.

He is accused of 17 instances of theft of services, ranging from $105 for the disposal of brine to $15,644.56 for oil well servicing of the McClintic "A" lease wells.

In the latter, the indictment lists victims as D.A. Snyder, Wilbert "Buddy" Lintzen and Mack Worcester, all who serviced McClintic "A" lease wells, and Winfrey C. "Tex" Bell, who, the indictment says, performed salt-water disposal services for Edge.

Bail for Edge and Flukinger was set at $10,000 each.

Antique gun, silverware, meat stolen from house

In burglary complaints lodged with city police during the past 24 hours, Bryan Vinson told officers an antique gun, a drawer full of silverware and $150 worth of frozen meat were taken from a house at 1505 Douglas sometime in the past two days. Entry was gained through a window. No value was placed on the gun or silverware.

A water heater, two doors and a combination heating-air conditioning unit belonging to the trust department of First National Bank were reported stolen from a vacant house at 1618 E. Pine. Entry was gained by breaking a window. No dollar value was placed on the items.

And Emerson Fyffe Jr. said tools worth $710 were taken from a vehicle parked in the driveway of his apartment complex at 3417 N. Midland Drive. The tools belonged to the Stage West TV Co. of Midland.

Fire believed caused by children playing with matches heavily damaged one room of a wood frame house owned by Francis Eufracia at 1303 S. Camp about 10 p.m. Monday.

Five fire department units responded to the call and firemen spent about 40 minutes at the scene. In addition to the fire damage, the rest of the home sustained smoke damage.

Men questioned about killings

KILGORE (AP) — Two men investigators wanted to question about the killing of five people abducted from a fast-food restaurant were interviewed and then released, police said Monday.

The men, who were sought for questioning because they had prior convictions for armed robbery, were not considered suspects, police spokesman Jerdy Wolverton said Monday.

"At this particular time, they have been cleared," said Wolverton.

Students in violation of health requirements

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland County had 489 students during the 1982-83 school year who did not meet Texas Department of Health requirements for mumps, rubella, measles, polio and diphtheria-tetanus-pertussis immunizations.

Although 489 students were not in compliance, other students in the county had medical or religious exemptions or other reasons for noncompletion of the immunization program, according to the TDH, which recently compiled a report for the Texas Education Agency.

In the county, which has a school population of 18,712 students, 96 were not immunized against mumps, 83 against rubella, 160 against measles, 291 against polio and 519 against diphtheria-tetanus-pertussis.

Students may be exempted from immunization requirements for medical or religious reasons or while serving on active duty with the armed forces, the TDH report states, noting appropriate documentation of exemptions must be kept on file by each school district.

The figures include those who are provisionally enrolled in a county school district. A student may be provisionally enrolled when immunizations are not complete, if he has "begun the required immunizations and continues to receive vaccinations as rapidly as is medically feasible," the report says. School personnel are responsible for monitoring these students until they have met the immunization requirements.

Mumps vaccinations should be given to all students under 11 years of age, rubella vaccinations should be given to all under 12, measles vaccinations should be given to all students regardless of age, polio vaccinations should be given to all under 18 years of age, and diphtheria-tetanus-pertussis vaccinations should be given to all students.

Shriners provide help, entertainment for children

"The primary purpose of the Shriners is to help kids," he said. "We want people to call us and get involved. There are a lot of people that need help and don't know they can get it. Most people have heard of the Shrine hospital but don't know there's an organization in town that can help them get in."

Following a checkup from a doctor and the signature of a Shriner, medical records and photographs of the child are sent to Houston.

On a Thursday in January 1982, Beverly boarded a plane to Houston with her son. They were met at Houston Hobby Airport and taken to the crippled children's hospital.

"That hospital is really coordinated," Beverly said. "They see hundreds of new patients every Thursday beginning at 8 a.m. At 11, they begin seeing the repeats."

On the initial visit, the child and parents are taken in and, following X-rays and photographs, the pediatric staff and the chief surgeon meet with them to discuss the child's condition. Treatments are suggested or the child is referred to another clinic.

For Lee, the trips are short.

Every three months, he and his mother board the 6:15 a.m. plane to Houston. His quick checkups include an X-ray and the lengthening of the brace on his growing leg.

Usually, there is a lot of time to spend before catching the plane back home.

"If we don't have to go back to see the doctors, I'll rent a stroller and take him through the zoo," Beverly said.

After wearing the brace on his leg for 1½ years, little Lee seems unaware of it as he scrambles around the living room floor pushing toy tractors and trucks.

"He's grown up with it," his mother said with a smile. "He doesn't pay any attention to it, now. They said it should heal in two to three years. If not, they'll have to do some bone grafts to correct it."

But if the remark made on their last trip to Houston rings true, Lee may not be wearing the brace much longer.

"They said it was healing," Beverly said, grinning. "It's finally healing. That was very joyful to hear."

"We like to see kids we can help — especially pretty little boys like this one," Hicks said. "You know, I've been what we call a 'card-carrying' Shriner since 1967. But when you get involved in something like this, there's no way you can get away from it."

HRC finds funds for another year

"Everyone wanted that program to go on without interruptions," said Ms. Ellis.

HRC's re-instatement also arrives barely before the winter chill and in time to continue two other programs — weatherization and funding low-income persons' utility bills.

With the weatherization program, said Ms. Ellis, applicants who were rejected from the housing rehabiliation plan could still get storm windows and other work done on their house.

"Now that the weather will be getting cold, more people will be coming in. Last year we ran out of funds in February" for these two programs, she said.

Dan O'Grady, a former board president and now ex-officio board member, said HRC still has a lot of work it can do.

"It's very valuable to the people who receive that help. A lot of people don't see that in the community," he said.

O'Grady had always believed there was a continuing need for the Human Relations Council. "There's still some discrimination. People still need assistance with housing, energy, food...just the day-to-day needs of living."

One Midland City Council member who didn't want to watch the agency die was Steve Davidson. He was one of the influences in finding last-minute funding.

"I think they've done a good job," he remarked. "We can point to their performance — taking applications for the housing rehabilitation program and the Jobs Bill program. I'm pleased they've decided to stay in business. I think there's a role for them in this community."

Future of library discussed

Redfern proposed branches, for which "It doesn't take hardly any money."

"I'm a believer in branches," he said. There would be virtually no capital investment. "We may increase our (the library's) usefulness" via the branches, which, he said, would be "more for recreational reading than research."

"I don't see this downtown library being a children's library if you live five miles out," he said. "All the children's stuff could be taken from downtown."

Redfern said the existing library was utilitarian but lacking in space.

"We have a perfectly good (library) building over there," he said. "It's just not big enough. We have to face this problem of expanding population...I'm afraid we have enough buildings," he said, and could find "reasonable rent space." Redfern and his wife, Rosalind, may serve on the library's steering committee, the commissioners proposed.

Library-booster Mary Jane Young proposed the "store-front branches...We have been pushing for some of those in town."

"Nobody can deny the need is there," said Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig.

"I'm not a believer in big capital expenditures at this time," said Redfern. "We're in a state of flux."

What's sense of bill for cents?

In view of the expenses, Wright suggested that there ought to be a law to negate billings under $1.

"We have to do it," said Frances Shuffield, the Midland County tax assessor-collector, "even if it costs 20 cents to send a one-cent bill."

MISD develops curriculum plan

"We will try to individually respond to every student's future plans, their interests and their abilities," Moore explained. "We will recommend, based on their abilities, the strongest academic program we can. The reason for that is even if they don't go to college we want them to have as strong a background as they can. It's simply to their benefit, no matter what their future plans."

He said students should have no difficulty in making revisions in later years. "I don't envision a problem there unless there's a major change in the student's goals. But that's no different from the problem they have now," he pointed out. "Our basic requirements for graduates are so strong anyway I think it'll serve most students fairly well."

"It wouldn't be difficult," to switch to college preparatory courses, Painter agreed. "You may have to go back and catch up on some things. During your sophomore year you're mainly taking required courses anyway."

The administration is already making plans to smooth any rough edges of the newly-implemented plan. "We will evaluate the whole process before next year and make any adjustments or corrections necessary," Moore said.

AT&T ANNOUNCES PLANS TO CHANGE RATES ON YOUR INTERSTATE CALLS.

RATES FOR AT&T LONG DISTANCE SERVICE WILL BE LOWERED.

AT&T has filed with the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) a plan scheduled to be effective January 1, 1984, to reduce charges for out-of-state long distance calls an average of 10.5%. And that includes calls to Alaska and Hawaii.

Percentage reductions will vary depending upon distance, time of day, and length of call. For example, you will save 16.3% on a 10-minute, direct-dialed call placed between 8am and 5pm, between Denver and St. Louis.

HERE ARE SOME SAMPLE RATES FOR 5-MINUTE DIRECT DIALED CALLS:*

		CURRENT RATES	NEW RATES	PERCENTAGE REDUCTION
56-124 miles (New York to Philadelphia)	Day	$2.05	$1.84	10.2%
	Evening	1.23	1.10	10.6
	Night/Weekend	.82	.73	11.0
293-430 miles (Los Angeles to Phoenix)	Day	$2.27	$1.98	12.8%
	Evening	1.36	1.18	13.2
	Night/Weekend	.90	.79	12.2
431-925 miles (Chicago to Houston)	Day	$2.34	$2.01	14.1%
	Evening	1.40	1.20	14.3
	Night/Weekend	.93	.80	14.0

*Rates shown are subject to federal excise tax.

AND HERE'S MORE GOOD NEWS

On calls to Alaska and Hawaii, the current 55% night/weekend discount rate will increase to 60%. Also, the rate schedule for Alaska and Hawaii will be consistent with the current rate schedule of the continental United States. And that means additional savings.

INTERSTATE DIRECTORY ASSISTANCE

AT&T will charge $.75 for each interstate directory assistance call. However, for every AT&T Long Distance and/or AT&T WATS bill that you receive, you will be allowed one free call to directory assistance per billing period—provided you place at least one interstate call with AT&T within that billing period.

OTHER RATE CHANGES

AT&T WATS rates will be reduced by an average of 7%.

AT&T 800 Service rates will be increased by an average of only 1%. And AT&T Private Line Service rates will be increased by an average of 15%.

Top Italian designers focus on hip for '84

By HINA HYDE
By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

MILAN, Italy — The top Italian designers, from Giorgio Armani to Gianni Versace, are shooting from the hip for spring and summer '84.

The look bypasses the waistline and targets the hip with belts, wrapped sashes and obis for daytime and evening. Armani underscores the point with jackets that wrap and tie at the hip or with aprons that are added to skirts and pants for no other reason than to focus on the hips and add a bit of pocket space. Karl Lagerfeld in the Fendi collection uses aprons the same way. Versace and Luciano Soprano like hip belts but they have also tied sweaters around the hip, much the same way that kids are doing it on the streets of Milan.

Hiplines have made minor headlines before. Designers have been playing with this silhouette for several seasons, calling it, in its other incarnations, the Japanese obi look, the cowboy belt look, the double belt look or, in fashion lingo, the dropped torso look. But by whatever name you call it, it remains the mark of one of the newer rearrangements of clothing to appear in this rather undistinguished season.

But not the only one. During this five-day period, when as many as eight shows a day were held in the Fiera exposition compound, other recurring themes were:

— Asymmetrical cuts that put sharp angles on hemlines and make graphic points with collars and lapels.

— Easy, unlined, loose coats — what we used to call dusters — that give lightweight coverage to everything from suits and dresses to bathing suits.

— Pants, back in abundance in all shapes and lengths, including ankle length, pegged pants and jodhpurs.

The favorite of most designers is the short, flyaway jacket that stands away from the body; it is done in every fabric and as a sweater shape as well.

The overall silhouette is still big and roomy at the top, with shoulder pads firmly in place and dolman sleeves adding to the fullness. The bottoms are narrower, skirts often coming with dangerously long slits or stitched-down pleats. The skirt length is decidedly longer.

In fact, shorts are noticeably absent from current collections although they were a huge success this summer. The black of the last few collections, now very apparent on the streets, is barely in the palette for next spring. Gray is still very prominent and navy is strong. If there is a new return color, it is beige.

If the new clothes are not as body-concealing as the new wave of Japanese designs, other elements of Japanese fashion — from the classic obi to the fascination with textiles — continue. "We have done everything there is to be done with the form (of clothes)," said Versace. "Now we must concentrate on the materials."

Versace practices what he preaches. One of the first to use leather and suede as a fabric for high fashion, he also was the front-runner with rubber and metal mesh. This year his mesh is lighter than ever and he has draped it and printed it and beaded it and even quilted it.

Whether the hip belts reflect a Japanese, or Indian, influence, or are an old or new idea, retailers showed their concern.

"There is a problem keeping the belt securely on the hip," said Garfinckel's president Hanne Merriman.

Designer wins award

NEW YORK (AP) — Willi Smith, a designer who mixes the styles of Arab tribesmen and city bag ladies, won the prestigious Coty award for women's fashion, and Alan Flusser took the award for menswear with a rock 'n' roll collection evoking 1950s "zoot suits."

At Thursday's ceremony, fashion hall-of-famer Bill Blass won the eighth Coty Award of his 35-year career and joked that it was for "longevity."

Perry Ellis, who attended the ceremony with actress Sigourney Weaver, also won a repeat award. Miss Weaver wore a maroon jersey gown that matched Ellis' tie.

Norma Kamali, the sweatshirt queen, was inducted into the Hall of Fame for clothes she said have "a designer content at an affordable price ticket." A typical Kamali sack dress retails for about $60.

The audience at the 41st annual Coty Awards, held at Fashion Institute of Technology, reflected Miss Kamali's influence. The dress was unrelenting black jersey spattered with sequins.

Smith's collection was based on what he called "street couture." "Williwear" models bundled up in layers of oversized cotton sweaters the color of sand, flannel skirts with uneven hems, and piles of rags wound about their heads. They loped down the runway in orange ankle socks and desert boots, swatting imaginary flies with long African brushes.

Smith's most popular outfit was a "Lawrence of Arabia" raincoat, a single khaki piece that resembles a nomad's turban and robe with a kangaroo pocket in the back.

Flusser has been nominated for a Coty every year since 1980, when he introduced pink socks for men, but this is the first time he's won.

"What a relief," he said.

The designer, who has authored "Making the Man," a book for men on the basics of dressing, favors narrow-brimmed fedoras, wide lapeled striped blazers and busboy-style flannel pants with a satin stripe down each leg.

Flusser outfits included a tuxedo with a black-and-yellow checkerboard bib and a grey business suit worn with a bright red vest and a powder blue shirt.

The Coty awards are considered the highest honor given American fashion designers by their industry.

Cameras often require special care

By HOLT CONFER
Copley News Service

This past winter I was taking photographs of nighttime skiers at a slope on the Pennsylvania-Maryland border.

As you might well imagine, the temperature was quite low and my cameras, while I tried to protect them whenever I could by putting them inside my jacket were exposed to lots of chilling wind.

While I can't make a hard and fast rule about using cameras in the cold being dangerous to their (and your) health, you can expect to have more than your share of camera malfunctions whenever those somewhat delicate instruments are exposed for lengthy periods to frigid temperatures.

The problem occurs, I'm told, with the lubricants. Extreme cold has a tendency to make them stiffer than they should be. And when they get so stiff that the electrical impulses or the mechanical movements like advancing the film can't occur, chances are something will break.

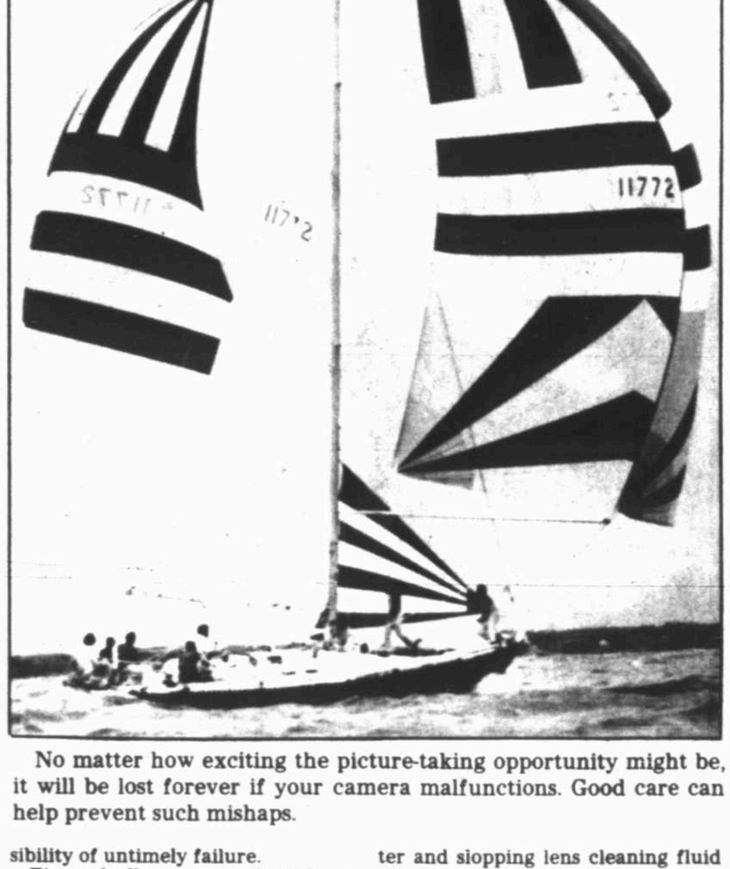

Incidentally, the pros who shoot in the arctic regions will take their cameras to a high-class overhaul shop where the original lubricants are purged, then replaced with special solutions that don't stiffen in sub-zero temperatures.

But this isn't a column about the problems of taking pictures when you need insulated underwear, we're talking here about what to do when your camera breaks.

All of us have a tendency to think the equipment we're using will last forever, and there is no more distressing feeling than losing a great shot because your equipment didn't function as it should.

I've seen the air turn blue and heard camera manufacturer's names taken in vain when a flash didn't fire or when a shutter didn't release properly. And, believe me, malfunctions have no respect for anyone — they can happen anytime, anywhere.

However, there are a few things you can do to help eliminate the possibility of untimely failure.

First of all, cameras should get their fair share of loving care.

Keep them clean — lens tissue and lens cleaning fluid along with canned air are your primary defensive weapons. Keep in mind, though, that ham-handed cleaning is just about as bad as no cleaning — strong blasts of air can ruin a shutter and slopping lens cleaning fluid directly on your lens are classic cases of too much of a good thing.

Use the air gently to remove any loose particles on your lenses and inside your camera. A camel's hair brush — used gently, of course, works well to dislodge dust particles; and then if it's necessary to clean your lenses, apply the lens cleaning fluid to the lens tissue (instead of applying it to the lens) and wipe the dirty spot ever so gently.

Just remember you're not scouring burned butter from the bottom of a stainless steel pan, so use your lightest touch when it comes to cleaning lens surfaces.

And if something should come loose inside one of your lenses, I'd strongly discourage you from trying to be your own mechanic. Lenses are quite complex and require the expertise of trained technicians when something goes wrong.

And don't even think of trying to repair your own camera. The inside of a modern SLR unit is jam-packed with electronic circuits and hundreds of little bitty parts that, it seems, all need to work together. Turn a wrong screw, bend a part, or short out a circuit and you've got big trouble.

Finding a competent, reliable camera repair person is just about as difficult as finding a competent, reliable auto mechanic — and when you do make that discovery, consider yourself quite fortunate.

If your camera needs new parts, often there will be a two-to four-week wait before the parts arrive from the manufacturer. Every repair person I've ever spoken to questions why it takes the camera companies so long to ship parts they have on the shelf. The camera makers all seem to have trouble getting parts requests through their internal paper mill and into the warehouse for packing and shipping.

I'm telling you this so you don't get overly impatient with your repair shop when, after several weeks of waiting, your camera still isn't ready to be picked up.

But the best way to avoid the frustration of waiting for your camera to be repaired is to take very good care of it. Certainly, even the best preventive maintenance isn't always enough to prevent a malfunction, but following simple cleanliness procedures will go a long way toward extending the arrival of that moment when things go wrong.

Products make 'scents'

By The Associated Press

Ancient civilizations burned incense to sweeten the air and concocted aromatic mixtures to perfume the body. The Romans added scent to their public baths.

Later, American colonists placed potpourri, pomander balls and sachets in drawers and closets. In the mid-1950s, the introduction of aerosol air fresheners modernized the methodology. So, scenting the environment is not a new idea.

Indications are, however, that home fragrance products are about to become more important — and more fashionable — than ever before. Those who make and market products such as potpourri, scented candles and pillows, perfumed soaps, sachets and related items say sales are approaching all-time highs.

Furthermore, a number of new products are about to come on the scene that are expected to increase interest in scent as an important adjunct in home decor.

"The 'Flower Children' of the 1960s, may have started the interest in natural floral and herbal scents," says Annette Greene, executive director of the Fragrance Foundation.

The economy which forced people to look to their home and improve the quality of life there, the consequent growth of home entertaining, and even the development of home videocassette players also played a part, according to Barbara Carver. Ms. Carver is vice president of Charles of The Ritz which has developed what some people regard as one of the most interesting new home fragrance products.

This produce is the Aroma Disk. It consists of a small, electric heater which "plays" flat disks that have encapsulated such aromas as a crackling fire, buttered popcorn, the smell of a Christmas tree, roses or an ocean breeze. As the heater gets warmer the aroma is diffused into the room, says Ms. Carver.

The heater will sell for about $20, while individual disks good for up to 30 uses will be $1.50. More heavily-impregnated disks will sell for about $4 and provide up to 150 uses. So far, 40 aromas have been developed, and the company is working toward development of about 100 actual and fantasy aromas.

The new technology allows for total user control without any distortion of scent, according to Ms. Carver. Any fragrance can be reproduced and it takes only two to three minutes for the aroma to permeate the room, after which the heater shuts off. It also takes only a few minutes to replace the old scent with a new one.

As a result, it is possible to match scent to music, a television program or a film, and to change the scent as the action on a screen or recording changes.

The disk is being distributed as a home fragrance product through cosmetic departments in department and other stores. In addition, the company has licensed Remington Shaver Co. to sell it to housewares and hardware outlets. Among retailers slated to carry the product as of October were Neiman Marcus, Macy's, Bloomingdale's, Sears, J.C. Penney, and Montgomery Ward.

Testing indicates a broad market for such a product, including teen-agers, adult males who normally avoid scented products as feminine, and women who are now the largest purchasers of home fragrance products.

While the disk may the most unusual new home fragrance product, it is not the only one. Recently, Johnson Wax Co. introduced a toilet tissue dispenser with tiny fragrance beads inside its plastic exterior. Each time the dispenser turns, a measure of fragrance is released.

Aquaculture farms increase

HONOLULU (AP) — Several times a month, Robert Hanohano drags a net along the perimeter of a one-acre freshwater pond as two helpers, waist deep in water, pull in the slack.

They harvest fresh water prawns on the Island of Oahu. It is a facet of the growing aquaculture industry in Hawaii.

"We made our profit in the first year," said Hanohano. "The demand far exceeds the supply."

The Hanohano venture began in 1974, and even as more players enter the business, Hanohano says the future remains bright.

Others active in the burgeoning industry agree.

"We're in the black by a reasonable margin," said Dr. Jim Wyban, 32, who has been in the aquaculture business since mid-1981. "Now it is just a matter of maximizing those things we're doing profitably."

Wyban said he has paid off his initial investment of $10,000.

Wyban modified an ancient Hawaiian fishpond, and raises several species of fish. The largest sellers are mullet and tilapia, which are popular with Hawaii's Asian population, he said.

"Everything we've been producing can be consumed right here in the state," said Richard Fassler, spokesman for the Aquaculture Development Program of the state Department of Land and Natural Resources.

Gross sales from aquaculture in Hawaii rose from $200,000 in calendar 1976 to $2.6 million in calendar 1982, Fassler said. The figure is expected to rise as more "farms" in Hawaii become commercially viable, he said.

"We predict that the expansion is going to be enormous," said Fassler. State officials envision growth in exports as the industry matures.

However, not all aquaculture ventures in Hawaii have been quick successes. Many have been plagued by financial and technical snafus, and a slow return on investments.

Other operations, sponsored as research programs by large companies, have found the companies unwilling to spend the extra money to get the ventures operating commercially.

One of the biggest problems is the high start-up cost associated with aquaculture.

Dr. Ed McSweeny, of Amorient, a company raising salt water prawns, has yet to break even after starting up in 1979.

Rabbits considered 'the food of the future'

ROGERS, Ark. (AP) — No matter whether he calls it "lapin," "conejo" or "hasenpfeffer," Robert Patrick has a real challenge trying to persuade more Americans to try rabbit meat.

Patrick, an official of a firm here that processes up to a million rabbits a year for consumption in this country and abroad, says some Americans' seeming reluctance to consider rabbit meat as a food is psychological.

"Many Americans don't take kindly to the consumption of rabbit," said Patrick, director of marketing for Pel-Freez Rabbit Meat Inc.

"Although it's featured at many of the better French, Italian, German, Greek, and Hungarian restaurants around the country, most Americans don't even know what rabbit tastes like. And the problem is, their desire to know is blocked by visions of the Easter Bunny, Peter Cottontail, and Bugs Bunny."

All the same, Patrick believes rabbit is the "food of the future," not only because of its taste — domestic rabbit is tender white meat, quite different from wild rabbit — but for a number of more practical reasons:

— More than 93 percent of the rabbit can be used: a young rabbit fryer dresses out at up to 55 percent of its live weight; its fur is used for coats and gloves; its blood and brains are important to medicine and research, and its feet are sold as good luck charms.

— Rabbits require no grazing land, use feed not directly edible by human beings and have one of the highest feed to meat conversion ratios around.

— A 5-ounce serving of rabbit has only 199 calories, yet is higher in protein than beef, pork or chicken. It's low in fat, low in cholesterol and so low in sodium that it's recommended by the American Heart Association for low salt diets.

"Add to this the fact that one female rabbit, or doe, can produce at least 10 times her weight in meat a year, and one can call 'efficient' an understatement," Patrick says.

Pel-Freez, in business here for 72 years, contracts with 800 local farmers to raise rabbits to its specifications and monitors production, sales and futures on an IBM computer so that the prolific animals won't outproduce the marketplace.

"Generally speaking, Americans either love rabbit or they won't dare try it," Patrick says. "But the American palate is becoming more sophsticated. People are becoming more willing to experiment with new foods, particularly people who like to travel and eat out. Every year the number of Americans who consume rabbit as a main dish increases by about 15 percent.

"But there's still a long way to go," Patrick says, pointing to sales printouts from the computer. "The average American consumes 60 pounds of poultry a year. The same person consumes ½ of one ounce of rabbit annually."

Queen Anne gave land to Manhattan

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1705, the site that now holds the famous Trinity Church on lower Manhattan's Wall Street area held a farm house and small garden.

The property was owned by Queen Anne, ruler of Great Britain and Ireland until her death in 1714. She gave the property to the island of Manhattan as a gift.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Dish garden simplifies plant care

By ELVIN McDONALD

Autumn often finds me with more small pots of plants than I know what to do with. If that happens to you, try grouping those of a kind in one large container. They'll require less individual care, grow better, and in the process make a fascinating garden in miniature.

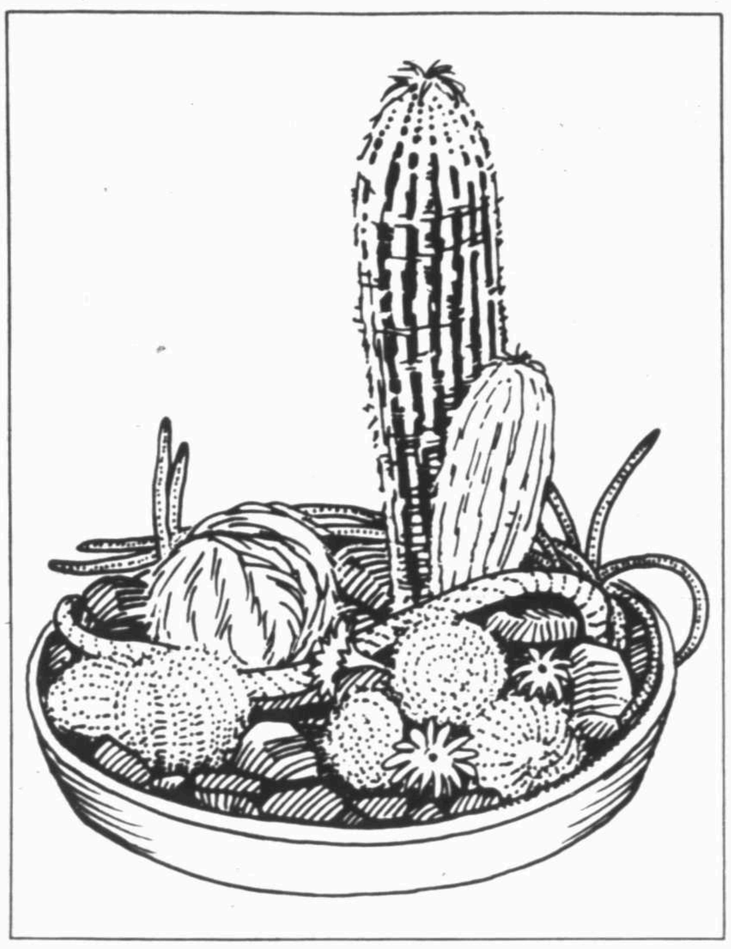

One of my favorite such gardens combines all cacti and other succulents from the desert, which is to say they need sandy soil kept on the dry side during cool weather and a half day or more direct sun in a window garden. Mine grows in a 12-inch clay pot saucer.

To plant a microcosmic desert garden, start with a large clay pot saucer. Add 1 inch of pebbles for drainage and aeration. Sprinkle with a handful of horticultural charcoal chips.

Remove your selection of small cacti and other succulents from the pots and try different arrangements of them in the pot saucer, until you hit upon the one that looks just right. Now proceed to plant them on the pebble and charcoal chip base. Fill in with a mix of two parts sand to one each of all-purpose potting soil and peat moss.

When all roots are settled and the soil firmed so that each plant stands secure, add a unifying mulch over all the exposed soil. This can be sifted, clean sand, or sandstone pebbles. You might also used crushed clay pot or almost any small pebbles or stones that look natural with the garden inhabitants.

Since the pot saucer has no drainage hole, water cautiously so as to moisten the roots, but not so much that they are left standing in water. That would be disastrous.

Small plants, such as these cacti, grouped together require less individual care.

Q. I have a jade plant that has grown well for seven years. It is 17 inches tall and spreads to nearly 2 feet, making a nice tree in a clay pot 7½ inches deep and 10½ inches wide at the top. Suddenly this summer the petals began to drop, some yellow first, others just get loose and fall off. The smaller petals at the stem ends turn black or shrivel up before dropping. Is the hot weather responsible? I haven't done anything different from the usual care.

A. This reader enclosed excellent color photos of the jade in question. The "petals" are leaves and the plant appears to need more light. It sits on a table next to a curtained window; curtains protect shade plants from sun but a succulent like jade needs all the light possible indoors.

The leaf loss suggests too much water. It's easy to drown a relatively small plant in a large pot. An 8-inch diameter pot is ample for a 24-inch jade.

What to do: Unpot. Crumble away most of the soil. Rinse the roots in running water. Examine them in good light; cut off any that are discolored or appear rotted. Replant (using a smaller pot) into a mixture of 2 parts clean, sharp sand to 1 each of packaged all-purpose potting soil, sphagnum peat moss and well-rotted leaf mold (or coarse vermiculite).

Prune off about a third of the jade's upper branches. Set it to grow in a sunny position. Keep the growing medium on the dry side for a few weeks, gradually increasing so that it feels between nicely moist and dry when you touch the surface. Don't ever leave jade's pot standing in a saucer of water. Wait until late winter to fertilize.

Many care tips and sources for cacti and other succulents, including jade, are in my bulletin. Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed envelope with "Cacti and Succulents" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305; in Canada, 4141 Glenayr Ave., Niagara Falls, Ont. L2E 6K1.

Quick take: I am often asked to suggest one book that tells "all" about gardening. "Ortho's Complete Guide to Successful Gardening" fills the bill superbly; the color photographs are truly inspiring. This 500-page volume is $30; at local booksellers, or write Ortho Books, 575 Market St., San Francisco, Calif. 94105.

Q.T.: Foremost authority Ben Oki will host a bonsai tour of Japan next year, departing Los Angeles May 31, returning June 14. Highly recommended. For details write Kokusai International Travel, Inc., 400 E. 2nd St., Los Angeles, Calif. 90012.

Q.T.: When you pot up hardy bulbs like tulip, daffodil and hyacinth, water well and set in a dark place having moderate temperatures (50-70F.) for a few weeks to start rooting, then place in a cooler spot (40F.) for eight weeks.

Study: Men threatened by working spouses' success

NEW YORK (AP) — Most successful working women still have to keep the home fires burning, still have to worry that job-success threatens their mates and hold power in relationships based on whether they feel pretty, a new study of American couples says.

However, the study largely reflects the opinions of white, middle class, college educated men and women — heterosexual and homosexual — in their 30s.

According to the study, by Philip Brumstein and Pepper Schwartz, both professors of sociology at the University of Washington, working wives still bear practically all of the responsibility for housework.

In households where wives worked full-time, 41 percent did less than 10 hours of housework a week, while 78 percent of husbands in these same relationships did less than 10 hours of housework a week. Only 4 percent of husbands whose wives worked full-time did the bulk of the work around the home, while 18 percent of the working wives did.

Of married couples, 39 percent of the wives and 31 percent of the husbands thought that both partners should work. Of cohabiting couples, 74 percent of the women and 66 percent of the men thought that both should work. And about 75 percent of homosexual men and women thought both partners should work.

"Many couples have not yet worked out their true feelings about women succeeding and striving in the work place," Blumstein said.

"When the man was ambitious and successful," he said, "they're more likely to stay together. When the woman is, then they're more likely to break up."

The notion of physical beauty drew surprising responses from women, Ms. Schwartz said. Attractiveness "remained the source of power in a relationship. Women's sexual habits were different according to whether they considered themselves attractive or whether their partners considered themselves attractive."

One of the most interesting findings for sociologists, Ms. Schwartz said, is how important money is. "There's been a debate on if money can overcome gender roles. What we're finding is that money is giving women more clout and they can use that power in ways they didn't used to."

The study says: "Because working wives bring money into the household, their work helps equalize the balance of power in their marriages. Their work also brings them greater respect from their husbands."

Only 1 percent of husbands who responded and 1 percent of wives were black. One percent were Asian, 1 percent were Mexican-American and none were Puerto Rican or Native American.

The study, to be published this month as a book, "American Couples" (William Morrow and Co., $19.95), was conducted and written by Blumstein and Ms. Schwartz.

More than 12,000 questionnaires were involved as well as personal interviews with 300 of the couples who responded.

"It's a study of white American couples," said Ms. Schwartz in a telephone interview Wednesday. "I must say that there are some things in it that people of any color would be interested in reading."

Blumstein added that "social class and educational background are more important than racial differences," and that middle class, college educated minority couples might have similar responses to those of the white couples in the study.

There were about 38 pages in the questionnaire, to be filled out by married couples and single people living together. Questions ranged from who has the most influence in deciding on where to go for a vacation to how far one lives from one's parents, to opinions on alimony and religious beliefs.

Swindlers target elderly

Hearst Feature Service

Would you like to make $10 an hour watching your own television? Will you invest a few thousand dollars to earn big profits raising earthworms at home? Or would you prefer to make a guaranteed fast fortune buying gold or stock in a little-known company?

Many unwary Americans are cheated out of millions of dollars every year through such easy-money schemes, and older people are some of the con artists' choicest victims.

Swindlers know that retired people in particular often need extra money for food, shelter and medical bills. Accordingly, the swindlers have refined their techniques for preying on them. Losses have reached into the tens of thousands of dollars in a single scam, with many losing their life savings.

Citibank's Consumer Views magazine notes the most common frauds fall into four categories:

— Work-at-Home Businesses: Ads promising big incomes for doing something easy, like stuffing envelopes or watching TV and filling out questionnaires on programs. But in return for a fee, all you get is a booklet describing how to recruit your own paying applicants — setting up an illegal pyramid scheme — or you receive nothing at all.

Other ads offer to sell the materials so you can knit baby booties, raise earthworms or fur-bearing chinchillas, or make home decorations, to name only a few. The seller promises to buy the output at high prices, but your investment of several thousand dollars gets you inferior or unusable materials, and when it's time to sell your output your promised buyer disappears.

— Trick Franchises and Distributorships: Legitimate companies sell the right to run a small business marketing their products in a given territory. Con artists, however, promise bigger, quicker profits than any legitimate business could offer, or sell "exclusive" territorial rights in areas saturated with their services or products.

Businesses range from pizza parlors and tanning salons to vending or electronic game machine distributorships, with investments in the tens of thousands of dollars. The sponsor has a number of ways to keep you from making a profit, including binding you to paying unreasonable fees or royalties, providing low quality equipment or products, and withholding delivery of any equipment while your sponsor skips town.

— Stock and Bond Scams: Legitimate securities are sold through licensed brokerage firms or banks. But unlicensed, silver-tongued operators, promising quick riches, talk victims into buying the securities of fictitious businesses or depleted gold mines.

— Commodities Frauds: Trading commodities, gold and silver, coffee and cotton, foreign currencies and the like, is a risky business conducted legitimately by licensed traders on major exchanges and under the watchful eye of government regulators.

Illegal operators are unlicensed, sell off the exchanges, and make little or no effort to tell you about the risks of trading. They pressure you to increase your stake and refuse to execute your orders to sell. Frequently, they never buy the commodity you paid for. Either way, the "trader" pockets your investment.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for saying, "There's nothing wrong with being heavy, as long as you're healthy." Somehow, it's thought to be fair game to discuss someone's weight, although when it comes to other physical conditions, these same people wouldn't think of commenting. (If my nose were coming out of my ear, people would just stare at their toes and not say a word.)

The seesaw of weight gain and weight loss is unhealthy; besides, less than 2 percent of dieters keep the weight off. The simple fact is, some people are watermelons and others are bananas, and that's that, so why should a healthy watermelon be made to feel that it should be a nervous banana? This could be likened to a rambling rose climbing on a fence, seeing a tulip bed and thinking, "My God, I've got to straighten up!"

Heavy people are often ruthlessly judged by family, friends, shopkeepers and employers. The pressure of being fat in a society that is obsessed with thinness is alleviated by the National Association to Aid Fat Americans, Inc. This group helps to dispel myths about obesity and provides an organization in which fat people are neither judged nor criticized. — FAT AND SASSY IN NEVADA

DEAR FAT AND SASSY: Look what blew in from the Windy City.

DEAR ABBY: I am a physical therapist in a busy rehabilitation hospital. In a recent column, you congratulated people who have learned to accept their obesity, saying, "There's nothing wrong with being heavy — as long as you're healthy."

Abby, most people in the health care profession will tell you that obese people are prone to health problems and postoperative complications. Obesity increases chances for heart disease, strokes, high blood pressure and accidents.

Nurses and physical therapists will verify that obese patients are a burden on the staff. No matter how adept they are at lifting and turning the heavy patient, their backs eventually suffer from that kind of strain.

School bus tests sound detector

By The Associated Press Writer

One of the fleet of school buses that serves the Camden, Ark., School District has an extra piece of equipment that alerts the driver of approaching trains, and vehicles on emergency runs.

Sam Watkins, assistant superintendent and director of special programs, said the school is testing the device for a Texas manufacturer.

"Anytime somebody comes up with something that may look good, we sure want to put it out and test it," said Jim Bohannon, supervisor of school transportation for the Arkansas Education Department in Little Rock. "It sounds like a good idea. It has merit. But you never know. Things may look good in theory, but when you put them on a bus, it may not work."

Marriage not seen as "process"

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Love may make the world go round, but our society does a poor job of teaching us how to sustain or repair a relationship, says a University of Rochester professor.

"In our popular media, marriage is viewed as an institution, not a process," says Gerald Gladstein. "The typical romantic movie ends with the happily-ever-after scene. It doesn't prepare us for the problems that not only are normal in a marriage, but that also provide a means for growth."

In his course on "Couples Communication," Gladstein explains the "crucial" later stages of a relationship: maintenance, continuity or distintegration, and restoration or termination.

Mountain legends studied

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Mountain people have believed for centuries that swallowing a spider will reduce fever or that tossing a dead snake over a tree will make it rain.

Now flatland students will get the chance to learn such mountain myths in Central Piedmont Community College's folklore course, being offered for the first time this fall.

The course instructor, Mary Herrera of Harrisburg, says mountain folklore was part of her childhood in Lenoir.

"I've been around it all my life," said Ms. Herrera, 47. "It wasn't very important to me when I was young because it was such a common thing. Now I appreciate it."

Ms. Herrera says she grew up listening to her "granny" tell stories about fireballs that appeared on the mountain after dark and chased "younguns." She also learned mountain theories on medicine and healing.

For example, she was told that pulling the legs off a granddaddy longlegs spider and swallowing the body alive would reduce high fever. She was taught that tying knots in a dishcloth and throwing the cloth out the back door would get rid of warts.

"People where I grew up believed those things and, to a large degree, they worked," Ms. Herrera said. "I don't know if it was the power of suggestion or the fact that people's faith was so strong, but these things worked a lot of the time."

Several colleges in the western part of the state have offered classes in mountain folklore for years. Central Piedmont is one of the first schools east of the mountains to offer such a course, but Ms. Herrera says she believes the popularity of such classes is increasing.

"People who grow up in these areas think this stuff is silly and they want no part of it when they're young," she said. "But you start to appreciate the wisdom of some of these things as you get older. At the very least, they bring back a lot of good memories, sitting on the porch, listening to your grandmother tell ghost stories."

Cameras often require special care

By HOLT CONFER
Copley News Service

This past winter I was taking photographs of nighttime skiers at a slope on the Pennsylvania-Maryland border.

As you might well imagine, the temperature was quite low and my cameras, while I tried to protect them whenever I could by putting them inside my jacket were exposed to lots of chilling wind.

While I can't make a hard and fast rule about using cameras in the cold being dangerous to their (and your) health, you can expect to have more than your share of camera malfunctions whenever those somewhat delicate instruments are exposed for lengthy periods to frigid temperatures.

The problem occurs, I'm told, with the lubricants. Extreme cold has a tendency to make them stiffer than they should be. And when they get so stiff that the electrical impulses or the mechanical movements like advancing the film can't occur, chances are something will break.

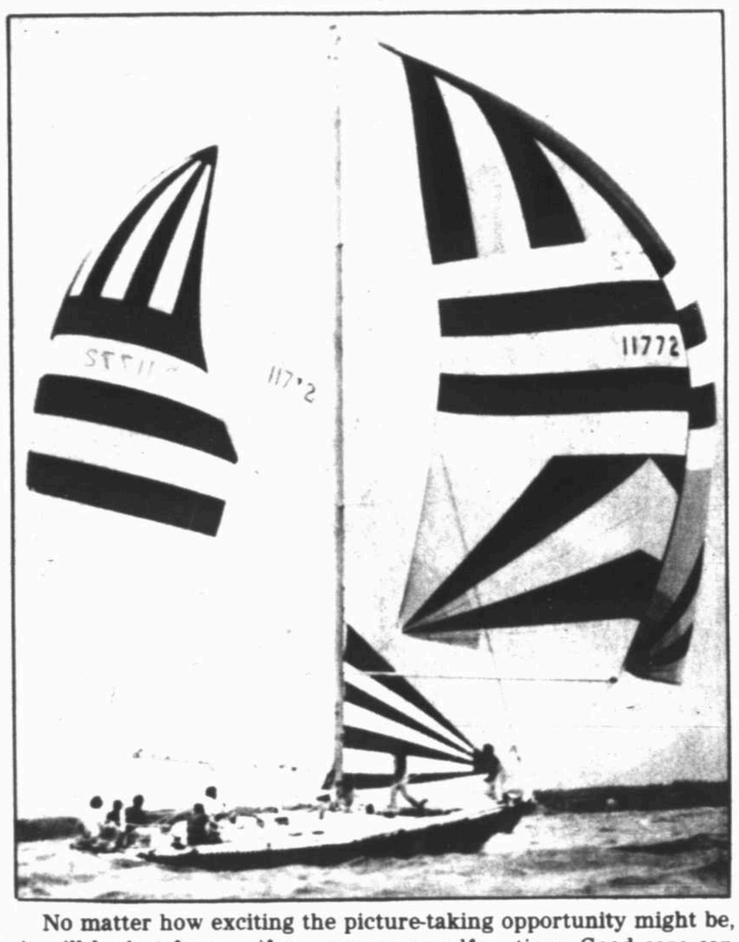

Incidentally, the pros who shoot in the arctic regions will take their cameras to a high-class overhaul shop where the original lubricants are purged, then replaced with special solutions that don't stiffen in sub-zero temperatures.

But this isn't a column about the problems of taking pictures when you need insulated underwear, we're talking here about what to do when your camera breaks.

All of us have a tendency to think the equipment we're using will last forever, and there is no more distressing feeling than losing a great shot because your equipment didn't function as it should.

I've seen the air turn blue and heard camera manufacturer's names taken in vain when a flash didn't fire or when a shutter didn't release properly. And, believe me, malfunctions have no respect for anyone — they can happen anytime, anywhere.

However, there are a few things you can do to help eliminate the possibility of untimely failure.

No matter how exciting the picture-taking opportunity might be, it will be lost forever if your camera malfunctions. Good care can help prevent such mishaps.

First of all, cameras should get their fair share of loving care.

Keep them clean — lens tissue and lens cleaning fluid along with canned air are your primary defensive weapons. Keep in mind, though, that ham-handed cleaning is just about as bad as no cleaning — strong blasts of air can ruin a shutter and slopping lens cleaning fluid directly on your lens are classic cases of too much of a good thing.

Use the air gently to remove any loose particles on your lenses and inside your camera. A camel's hair brush — used gently, of course, works well to dislodge dust particles; and then if it's necessary to clean your lenses, apply the lens cleaning fluid to the lens tissue (instead of applying it to the lens) and wipe the dirty spot ever so gently.

Just remember you're not scouring burned butter from the bottom of a stainless steel pan, so use your lightest touch when it comes to cleaning lens surfaces.

And if something should come loose inside one of your lenses, I'd strongly discourage you from trying to be your own mechanic. Lenses are quite complex and require the expertise of trained technicians when something goes wrong.

And don't even think of trying to repair your own camera. The inside of a modern SLR unit is jam-packed with electronic circuits and hundreds of little bitty parts that, it seems, all need to work together. Turn a wrong screw, bend a part, or short out a circuit and you've got big trouble.

Finding a competent, reliable camera repair person is just about as difficult as finding a competent, reliable auto mechanic — and when you do make that discovery, consider yourself quite fortunate.

If your camera needs new parts, often there will be a two-to four-week wait before the parts arrive from the manufacturer. Every repair person I've ever spoken to questions why it takes the camera companies so long to ship parts they have on the shelf. The camera makers all seem to have trouble getting parts requests through their internal paper mill and into the warehouse for packing and shipping.

I'm telling you this so you don't get overly impatient with your repair shop when, after several weeks of waiting, your camera still isn't ready to be picked up.

But the best way to avoid the frustration of waiting for your camera to be repaired is to take very good care of it. Certainly, even the best preventive maintenance isn't always enough to prevent a malfunction, but following simple cleanliness procedures will go a long way toward extending the arrival of that moment when things go wrong.

Products make 'scents'

By The Associated Press

Ancient civilizations burned incense to sweeten the air and concocted aromatic mixtures to perfume the body. The Romans added scent to their public baths.

Later, American colonists placed potpourri, pomander balls and sachets in drawers and closets. In the mid-1950s, the introduction of aerosol air fresheners modernized the methodology. So, scenting the environment is not a new idea.

Indications are, however, that home fragrance products are about to become more important — and more fashionable — than ever before. Those who make and market products such as potpourri, scented candles and pillows, perfumed soaps, sachets and related items say sales are approaching all-time highs.

Furthermore, a number of new products are about to come on the scene that are expected to increase interest in scent as an important adjunct in home decor.

"The 'Flower Children' of the 1960s, may have started the interest in natural floral and herbal scents," says Annette Greene, executive director of the Fragrance Foundation.

The economy which forced people to look to their home and improve the quality of life there, the consequent growth of home entertaining, and even the development of home videocassette players also played a part, according to Barbara Carver. Ms. Carver is vice president of Charles of The Ritz which has developed what some people regard as one of the most interesting new home fragrance products.

This produce is the Aroma Disk. It consists of a small, electric heater which "plays" flat disks that have encapsulated such aromas as a crackling fire, buttered popcorn, the smell of a Christmas tree, roses or an ocean breeze. As the heater gets warmer the aroma is diffused into the room, says Ms. Carver.

The heater will sell for about $20, while individual disks good for up to 30 uses will be $1.50. More heavily-impregnated disks will sell for about $4 and provide up to 150 uses. So far, 40 aromas have been developed, and the company is working toward development of about 100 actual and fantasy aromas.

The new technology allows for total user control without any distortion of scent, according to Ms. Carver. Any fragrance can be reproduced and it takes only two to three minutes for the aroma to permeate the room, after which the heater shuts off. It also takes only a few minutes to replace the old scent with a new one.

As a result, it is possible to match scent to music, a television program or a film, and to change the scent as the action on a screen or recording changes.

The disk is being distributed as a home fragrance product through cosmetic departments in department and other stores. In addition, the company has licensed Remington Shaver Co. to sell it to housewares and hardware outlets. Among retailers slated to carry the product as of October were Neiman Marcus, Macy's, Bloomingdale's, Sears, J.C. Penney, and Montgomery Ward.

Testing indicates a broad market for such a product, including teen-agers, adult males who normally avoid scented products as feminine, and women who are now the largest purchasers of home fragrance products.

While the disk may the most unusual new home fragrance product, it is not the only one. Recently, Johnson Wax Co. introduced a toilet tissue dispenser with tiny fragrance beads inside its plastic exterior. Each time the dispenser turns, a measure of fragrance is released.

Aquaculture farms increase

HONOLULU (AP) — Several times a month, Robert Hanohano drags a net along the perimeter of a one-acre freshwater pond as two helpers, waist deep in water, pull in the slack.

They harvest fresh water prawns on the Island of Oahu. It is a facet of the growing aquaculture industry in Hawaii.

"We made our profit in the first year," said Hanohano. "The demand far exceeds the supply."

The Hanohano venture began in 1974, and even as more players enter the business, Hanohano says the future remains bright.

Others active in the burgeoning industry agree.

"We're in the black by a reasonable margin," said Dr. Jim Wyban, 32, who has been in the aquaculture business since mid-1981. "Now it is just a matter of maximizing those things we're doing profitably."

Wyban said he has paid off his initial investment of $10,000.

Wyban modified an ancient Hawaiian fishpond, and raises several species of fish. The largest sellers are mullet and tilapia, which are popular with Hawaii's Asian population, he said.

"Everything we've been producing can be consumed right here in the state," said Richard Fassler, spokesman for the Aquaculture Development Program of the state Department of Land and Natural Resources.

Gross sales from aquaculture in Hawaii rose from $200,000 in calendar 1976 to $2.6 million in calendar 1982, Fassler said. The figure is expected to rise as more "farms" in Hawaii become commercially viable, he said.

"We predict that the expansion is going to be enormous," said Fassler. State officials envision growth in exports as the industry matures.

However, not all aquaculture ventures in Hawaii have been quick successes. Many have been plagued by financial and technical snafus, and a slow return on investments.

Other operations, sponsored as research programs by large companies, have found the companies unwilling to spend the extra money to get the ventures operating commercially.

One of the biggest problems is the high start-up cost associated with aquaculture.

Dr. Ed McSweeny, of Amorient, a company raising salt water prawns, has yet to break even after starting up in 1979.

Rabbits considered 'the food of the future'

ROGERS, Ark. (AP) — No matter whether he calls it "lapin," "conejo" or "hasenpfeffer," Robert Patrick has a real challenge trying to persuade more Americans to try rabbit meat.

Patrick, an official of a firm here that processes up to a million rabbits a year for consumption in this country and abroad, says some Americans' seeming reluctance to consider rabbit meat as a food is psychological.

"Many Americans don't take kindly to the consumption of rabbit," said Patrick, director of marketing for Pel-Freez Rabbit Meat Inc.

"Although it's featured at many of the better French, Italian, German, Greek, and Hungarian restaurants around the country, most Americans don't even know what rabbit tastes like. And the problem is, their desire to know is blocked by visions of the Easter Bunny, Peter Cottontail, and Bugs Bunny."

All the same, Patrick believes rabbit is the "food of the future," not only because of its taste — domestic rabbit is tender white meat, quite different from wild rabbit — but for a number of more practical reasons:

— More than 93 percent of the rabbit can be used: a young rabbit fryer dresses out at up to 55 percent of its live weight; its fur is used for coats and gloves; its blood and brains are important to medicine and research, and its feet are sold as good luck charms.

— Rabbits require no grazing land, use feed not directly edible by human beings and have one of the highest feed to meat conversion ratios around.

— A 5-ounce serving of rabbit has only 199 calories, yet is higher in protein than beef, pork or chicken. It's low in fat, low in cholesterol and so low in sodium that it's recommended by the American Heart Association for low salt diets.

"Add to this the fact that one female rabbit, or doe, can produce at least 10 times her weight in meat a year, and one can call 'efficient' an understatement," Patrick says.

Pel-Freez, in business here for 72 years, contracts with 800 local farmers to raise rabbits to its specifications and monitors production, sales and futures on an IBM computer so that the prolific animals won't outproduce the marketplace.

"Generally speaking, Americans either love rabbit or they won't dare try it," Patrick says. "But the American palate is becoming more sophisticated. People are becoming more willing to experiment with new foods, particularly people who like to travel and eat out. Every year the number of Americans who consume rabbit as a main dish increases by about 15 percent.

"But there's still a long way to go," Patrick says, pointing to sales printouts from the computer. "The average American consumes 60 pounds of poultry a year. The same person consumes ½ of one ounce of rabbit annually."

Queen Anne gave land to Manhattan

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1705, the site that now holds the famous Trinity Church on lower Manhattan's Wall Street area held a farm house and small garden.

The property was owned by Queen Anne, ruler of Great Britain and Ireland until her death in 1714. She gave the property to the island of Manhattan as a gift.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Dish garden simplifies plant care

By ELVIN McDONALD

Autumn often finds me with more small pots of plants than I know what to do with. If that happens to you, try grouping those of a kind in one large container. They'll require less individual care, grow better, and in the process make a fascinating garden in miniature.

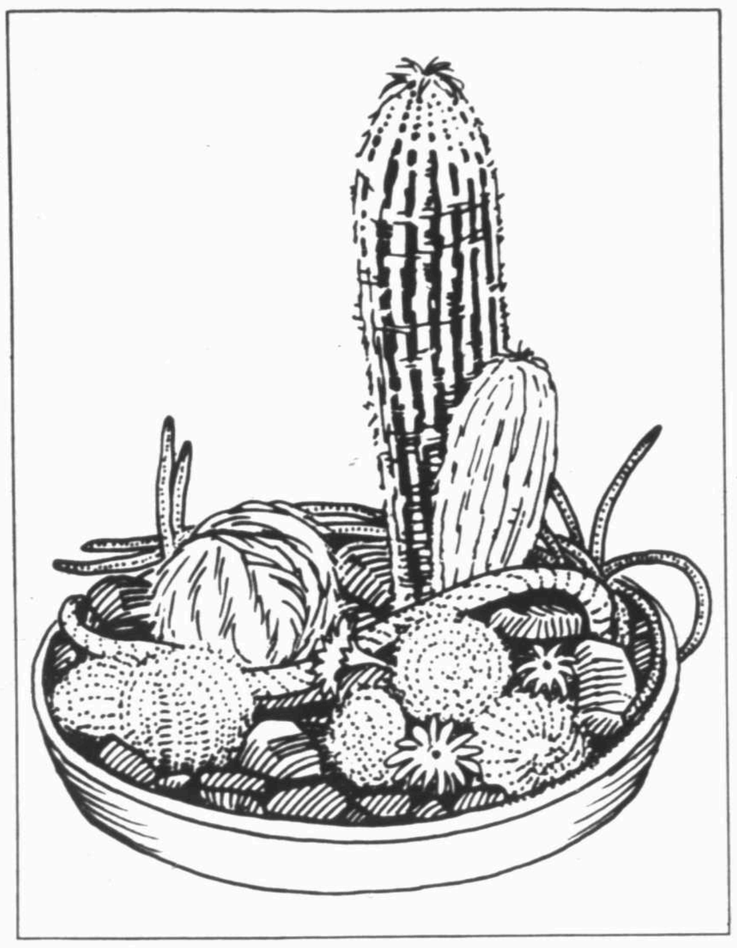

One of my favorite such gardens combines all cacti and other succulents from the desert, which is to say they need sandy soil kept on the dry side during cool weather and a half day or more direct sun in a window garden. Mine grows in a 12-inch clay pot saucer.

To plant a microcosmic desert garden, start with a large clay pot saucer. Add 1 inch of pebbles for drainage and aeration. Sprinkle with a handful of horticultural charcoal chips.

Remove your selection of small cacti and other succulents from the pots and try different arrangements of them in the pot saucer, until you hit upon the one that looks just right. Now proceed to plant them on the pebble and charcoal chip base. Fill in with a mix of two parts sand to one each of all-purpose potting soil and peat moss.

When all roots are settled and the soil firmed so that each plant stands secure, add a unifying mulch over all the exposed soil. This can be sifted, clean sand, or sandstone pebbles. You might also used crushed clay pot or almost any small pebbles or stones that look natural with the garden inhabitants.

Since the pot saucer has no drainage hole, water cautiously so as to moisten the roots, but not so much that they are left standing in water. That would be disastrous.

Small plants, such as these cacti, grouped together require less individual care.

Q. I have a jade plant that has grown well for seven years. It is 17 inches tall and spreads to nearly 2 feet, making a nice tree in a clay pot 7½ inches deep and 10½ inches wide at the top. Suddenly this summer the petals began to drop, some yellow first, others just get loose and fall off. The smaller petals at the stem ends turn black or shrivel up before dropping. Is the hot weather responsible? I haven't done anything different from the usual care.

A. This reader enclosed excellent color photos of the jade in question. The "petals" are leaves and the plant appears to need more light. It sits on a table next to a curtained window; curtains protect shade plants from sun but a succulent like jade needs all the light possible indoors.

The leaf loss suggests too much water. It's easy to drown a relatively small plant in a large pot. An 8-inch diameter pot is ample for a 24-inch jade.

What to do: Unpot. Crumble away most of the soil. Rinse the roots in running water. Examine them in good light; cut off any that are discolored or appear rotted. Replant (using a smaller pot) into a mixture of 2 parts clean, sharp sand to 1 each of packaged all-purpose potting soil, sphagnum peat moss and well-rotted leaf mold (or coarse vermiculite).

Prune off about a third of the jade's upper branches. Set it to grow in a sunny position. Keep the growing medium on the dry side for a few weeks, gradually increasing so that it feels between nicely moist and dry when you touch the surface. Don't ever leave jade's pot standing in a saucer of water. Wait until late winter to fertilize.

Many care tips and sources for cacti and other succulents, including jade, are in my bulletin. Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed envelope with "Cacti and Succulents" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305; in Canada, 4141 Glenayr Ave., Niagara Falls, Ont. L2E 6K1.

Quick take: I am often asked to suggest one book that tells "all" about gardening. "Ortho's Complete Guide to Successful Gardening" fills the bill superbly; the color photographs are truly inspiring. This 500-page volume is $30; at local booksellers, or write Ortho Books, 575 Market St., San Francisco, Calif. 94105.

Q.T.: When you pot up hardy bulbs like tulip, daffodil and hyacinth, water well and set in a dark place having moderate temperatures (50-70F.) for a few weeks to start rooting, then place in a cooler spot (40F.) for eight weeks.

Study: Men threatened by working spouses' success

NEW YORK (AP) — Most successful working women still have to keep the home fires burning, still have to worry that job-success threatens their mates and hold power in relationships based on whether they feel pretty, a new study of American couples says.

However, the study largely reflects the opinions of white, middle class, college educated men and women — heterosexual and homosexual — in their 30s.

According to the study, by Philip Brumstein and Pepper Schwartz, both professors of sociology at the University of Washington, working wives still bear practically all of the responsibility for housework.

In households where wives worked full-time, 41 percent did less than 10 hours of housework a week, while 78 percent of husbands in these same relationships did less than 10 hours of housework a week. Only 4 percent of husbands whose wives worked full-time did the bulk of the work around the home, while 18 percent of the working wives did.

Of married couples, 39 percent of the wives and 31 percent of the husbands thought that both partners should work. Of cohabiting couples, 74 percent of the women and 66 percent of the men thought that both should work. And about 75 percent of homosexual men and women thought both partners should work.

"Many couples have not yet worked out their true feelings about women succeeding and striving in the work place," Blumstein said.

"When the man was ambitious and successful," he said, "they're more likely to stay together. When the woman is, then they're more likely to break up."

The notion of physical beauty drew surprising responses from women, Ms. Schwartz said. Attractiveness "remained the source of power in a relationship. Women's sexual habits were different according to whether they considered themselves attractive or whether their partners considered themselves attractive."

One of the most interesting findings for sociologists, Ms. Schwartz said, is how important money is. "There's been a debate on if money can overcome gender roles. What we're finding is that money is giving women more clout and they can use that power in ways they didn't used to."

The study says: "Because working wives bring money into the household, their work helps equalize the balance of power in their marriages. Their work also brings them greater respect from their husbands."

Only 1 percent of husbands who responded and 1 percent of wives were black. One percent were Asian, 1 percent were Mexican-American and none were Puerto Rican or Native American.

The study, to be published this month as a book, "American Couples" (William Morrow and Co., $19.95), was conducted and written by Blumstein and Ms. Schwartz.

More than 12,000 questionnaires were involved as well as personal interviews with 300 of the couples who responded.

"It's a study of white American couples," said Ms. Schwartz in a telephone interview Wednesday. "I must say that there are some things in it that people of any color would be interested in reading."

Blumstein added that "social class and educational background are more important than racial differences," and that middle class, college educated minority couples might have similar responses to those of the white couples in the study.

There were about 38 pages in the questionnaire, to be filled out by married couples and single people living together. Questions ranged from who has the most influence in deciding on where to go for a vacation to how far one lives from one's parents, to opinions on alimony and religious beliefs.

Swindlers target elderly

Hearst Feature Service

Would you like to make $10 an hour watching your own television? Will you invest a few thousand dollars to earn big profits raising earthworms at home? Or would you prefer to make a guaranteed fast fortune buying gold or stock in a little-known company?

Many unwary Americans are cheated out of millions of dollars every year through such easy-money schemes, and older people are some of the con artists' choicest victims.

Swindlers know that retired people in particular often need extra money for food, shelter and medical bills. Accordingly, the swindlers have refined their techniques for preying on them. Losses have reached into the tens of thousands of dollars in a single scam, with many losing their life savings.

Citibank's Consumer Views magazine notes the most common frauds fall into four categories:

— Work-at-Home Businesses: Ads promising big incomes for doing something easy, like stuffing envelopes or watching TV amd filling out questionnaires on programs. But in return for a fee, all you get is a booklet describing how to recruit your own paying applicants — setting up an illegal pyramid scheme — or you receive nothing at all.

Other ads offer to sell the materials so you can knit baby booties, raise earthworms or fur-bearing chinchillas, or make home decorations, to name only a few. The seller promises to buy the output at high prices, but your investment of several thousand dollars gets you inferior or unusable materials, and when it's time to sell your output your promised buyer disappears.

— Trick Franchises and Distributorships: Legitimate companies sell the right to run a small business marketing their products in a given territory. Con artists, however, promise bigger, quicker profits than any legitimate business could offer, or sell "exclusive" territorial rights in areas saturated with their services or products.

Businesses range from pizza parlors and tanning salons to vending or electronic game machine distributorships, with investments in the tens of thousands of dollars. The sponsor has a number of ways to keep you from making a profit, including binding you to paying unreasonable fees or royalties, providing low quality equipment or products, and withholding delivery of any equipment while your sponsor skips town.

— Stock and Bond Scams: Legitimate securities are sold through licensed brokerage firms or banks. But unlicensed, silver-tongued operators, promising quick riches, talk victims into buying the securities of fictitious businesses or depleted gold mines.

— Commodities Frauds: Trading commodities, gold and silver, coffee and cotton, foreign currencies and the like, is a risky business conducted legitimately by licensed traders on major exchanges and under the watchful eye of government regulators.

Illegal operators are unlicensed, sell off the exchanges, and make little or no effort to tell you about the risks of trading. They pressure you to increase your stake and refuse to execute your orders to sell. Frequently, they never buy the commodity you paid for. Either way, the "trader" pockets your investment.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for saying, "There's nothing wrong with being heavy, as long as you're healthy." Somehow, it's thought to be fair game to discuss someone's weight, although when it comes to other physical conditions, these same people wouldn't think of commenting. (If my nose were coming out of my ear, people would just stare at their toes and not say a word.)

The seesaw of weight gain and weight loss is unhealthy; besides, less than 2 percent of dieters keep the weight off. The simple fact is, some people are watermelons and others are bananas, and that's that, so why should a healthy watermelon be made to feel that it should be a nervous banana? This could be likened to a rambling rose climbing on a fence, seeing a tulip bed and thinking, "My God, I've got to straighten up!"

Heavy people are often ruthlessly judged by family, friends, shopkeepers and employers. The pressure of being fat in a society that is obsessed with thinness is alleviated by the National Association to Aid Fat Americans, Inc. This group helps to dispel myths about obesity and provides an organization in which fat people are neither judged nor criticized. — FAT AND SASSY IN NEVADA

DEAR FAT AND SASSY: Look what blew in from the Windy City:

DEAR ABBY: I am a physical therapist in a busy rehabilitation hospital. In a recent column, you congratulated people who have learned to accept their obesity, saying, "There's nothing wrong with being heavy — as long as you're healthy."

Abby, most people in the health care profession will tell you that obese people are prone to health problems and postoperative complications. Obesity increases chances for heart disease, strokes, high blood pressure and accidents.

Nurses and physical therapists will verify that obese patients are a burden on the staff. No matter how adept they are at lifting and turning the heavy patient, their backs eventually suffer from that kind of strain.

School bus tests sound detector

By The Associated Press Writer

One of the fleet of school buses that serves the Camden, Ark., School District has an extra piece of equipment that alerts the driver of approaching trains and vehicles on emergency runs.

Sam Watkins, assistant superintendent and director of special programs, said the school is testing the device for a Texas manufacturer.

"Anytime somebody comes up with something that may look good, we sure want to put it out and test it," said Jim Bohannon, supervisor of school transportation for the Arkansas Education Department in Little Rock. "It sounds like a good idea. It has merit. But you never know. Things may look good in theory, but when you put them on a bus, it may not work."

Marriage not seen as "process"

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Love may make the world go round, but our society does a poor job of teaching us how to sustain or repair a relationship, says a University of Rochester professor.

"In our popular media, marriage is viewed as an institution, not a process," says Gerald Gladstein. "The typical romantic movie ends with the happily-ever-after scene. It doesn't prepare us for the problems that not only are normal in a marriage, but that also provide a means for growth."

In his course on "Couples Communication," Gladstein explains the "crucial" later stages of a relationship: maintenance, continuity or distintegration, and restoration or termination.

Mountain legends studied

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Mountain people have believed for centuries that swallowing a spider will reduce fever or that tossing a dead snake over a tree will make it rain.

Now flatland students will get the chance to learn such mountain myths in Central Piedmont Community College's folklore course, being offered for the first time this fall.

The course instructor, Mary Herrera of Harrisburg, says mountain folklore was part of her childhood in Lenoir.

"I've been around it all my life," said Ms. Herrera, 47. "It wasn't very important to me when I was young because it was such a common thing. Now I appreciate it."

Ms. Herrera says she grew up listening to her "granny" tell stories about fireballs that appeared on the mountain after dark and chased "younguns." She also learned mountain theories on medicine and healing.

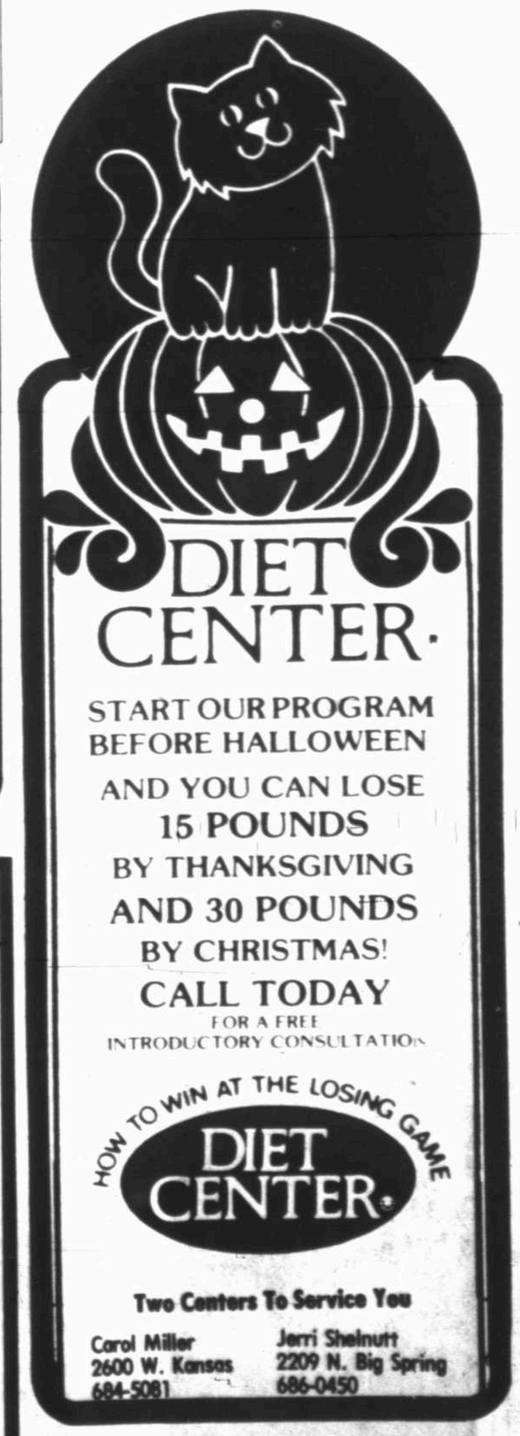

For example, she was told that pulling the legs off a granddaddy longlegs spider and swallowing the body alive would reduce high fever. She was taught that tying knots in a dishcloth and throwing the cloth out the back door would get rid of warts.

"People where I grew up believed those things and, to a large degree, they worked," Ms. Herrera said. "I don't know if it was the power of suggestion or the fact that people's faith was so strong, but these things worked a lot of the time."

Several colleges in the western part of the state have offered classes in mountain folklore for years. Central Piedmont is one of the first schools east of the mountains to offer such a course, but Ms. Herrera says she believes the popularity of such classes is increasing.

"People who grow up in these areas think this stuff is silly and they want no part of it when they're young," she said. "But you start to appreciate the wisdom of some of these things as you get older. At the very least, they bring back a lot of good memories, sitting on the porch, listening to your grandmother tell ghost stories."

Bette Davis should check back into 'Hotel'

Bette Davis

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Although "doctors held little hope that she could recover ever," actress Bette Davis continues to gain strength after a mastectomy and a stroke, producer Aaron Spelling says.

The 75-year-old Miss Davis now is expected to return to the television show "Hotel," in which she portrays Mrs. Laura Trent, owner of the St. Gregory Hotel in San Francisco, "during the second half of the (television) year," said a statement issued by Spelling Monday.

Filming of the second half of the year's shows should begin around January.

Miss Davis, who has appeared in more than 100 films, received two Academy Awards and was nominated for Oscars 10 times — more than any other actress.

She underwent the breast surgery in New York in June and nine days later suffered the stroke, Spelling said. He said she considers it a miracle that she is recovering.

Miss Davis' illness had been kept a secret from the public.

The statement was issued through the Rogers & Cowan public relations agency "to put the record straight," said agency account executive Sally Van Slyke. "There were so many rumors floating around."

ST. CLOUD, Minn. (AP) — Jerry Mathers — Theodore "Beaver" Cleaver on the old "Leave It to Beaver" TV series — hosted a 24-hour marathon of "Beaver" shows. But even his presence couldn't lure enough advertising to make the binge profitable for KXLI-TV.

Station general manager N. Walter Goins said Monday the station lost money because it couldn't get advertisers to buy all the commercial slots for the 48 30-minute episodes.

Mathers, now 35 and a radio DJ in Los Angeles, sat in a stuffed chair in KXLI's streetside studio Friday and Saturday commenting on the programs and asking viewers trivia questions when he wasn't outside signing autographs.

Goins said despite the monetary lost, the marathon was an overwhelming success as far as viewers were concerned, and similar events are planned.

"We think the stuff is silly, the stuff is childish, camp (and) kitsch," he said. "And you know what else? It's fun."

NEW YORK (AP) — Debbie Reynolds suggests "Do It the Debbie Way" as she joins the list of entertainers offering advice on how to keep fit.

Miss Reynolds, 51, also has launched a line of dance and exercise wear called Debbie's Design Leotards, by Michael Stewart for Keystone Designs.

The line is part of a "Do It the Debbie Way" fitness campaign for "full-figured" women which includes a workout book, a video cassette and a record album, all expected to be out by Christmas.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pop singer-turned-actor Rick Springfield, winner of a Grammy Award as 1981's best rock singer for the single "Jessie's Girl," is being sued for more than $12.5 million by his former management company.

Carman Productions Inc. contends the 33-year-old Springfield, who had an 18-month stint as Dr. Noah Drake on ABC's daytime soap "General Hospital," broke several lucrative contracts by taking on new managers.

Springfield was out of the country Monday, said his publicist Michael Ameen. "At this point, the case is a pending lawsuit and Mr. Springfield is on a sold-out tour of Japan, so there's no comment," he said.

The Australian-born Springfield's newest single is "Souls."

LONDON (AP) — American actor George Segal married show-biz agent Linda Rogoff at a ceremony attended by about 20 relatives and friends including Glenda Jackson, his co-star in the movie "A Touch of Class."

The marriage Sunday at Westminster Synagogue was the second for the 49-year-old Segal. He has been in Britain filming a new movie spoof about Robin Hood.

NEW YORK (AP) — Case closed, says Mayor Ed Koch's personal physician, and there's no need for further tests to determine why the mayor passed out in an Italian restaurant.

Koch just ate too much, said Dr. Philip Brickner in a statement Monday night. "I plan no further tests or examinations as a result of this matter, which I consider closed."

Koch, 58, agreed. He said he had spaghettini with garlic and oil and veal parmigiana Sunday night, and that he and others at the table had red and white wine and cappucino, and when he began to drink his coffee "I suddenly felt this pain."

"I did eat a lot," said Koch. The coffee "was my undoing."

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — World class bridge players Bob Hamman and Bobby Wolff of Dallas spearheaded the Aces team from the United States that captured the Bermuda Bowl world contract bridge championship.

The winning team included Alan Sontag of New York and Peter Weichsel of Atlanta, partners in a dramatic finale Saturday; Hamman and Wolff, who played throughout the final see-saw day, and Ron Rubin and Mike Becker of New York, who played steadily in the first two segments of play.

COCOA, Fla. (AP) — Kurt Debus, a scientist whose career spanned from the development of Germany's World War II V2 rocket to the ground-breaking for a space shuttle landing strip, died Monday of a heart attack. He was 74.

Debus helped develop the V2 rocket used against Britain and France. He came to the United States after World War II and worked on the Redstone Ballistic program of the 1950s, the Army's first missile equipped with a nuclear warhead. In 1952, Debus became director of operations at what was to become the Kennedy Space Center.

Members of the progressive country-rock group Alabama accept one of their three honors at Monday night's 1983 Country Music Association awards presentation in Nashville.

Alabama again honored

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Expecting to win nothing, the four-piece band Alabama earned the top award for the second year in a row as well as two others at the 17th annual Country Music Association awards show.

The progressive country-rock group from Fort Payne, Ala., won the entertainer of the year award Monday night, and also won honors for top album and No. 1 vocal group at the nationally televised ceremonies at the Grand Ole Opry.

Singers Lee Greenwood and Janie Fricke received bullet-shaped awards for being the top male and female vocalists — Miss Fricke for the second year in a row.

Singer John Anderson joined Alabama as the only multiple winner, earning single of the year award for his amusing tune about front-porch romance, "Swingin'," and the Horizon Award for most promising performer.

Nelson and Anne Murray were co-hosts of the show. Selections were made by 7,400 singers, songwriters, musicians, disc jockeys and record company employees who belong to the CMA — the industry's trade organization.

"Surprised is a great understatement," Greenwood said of his award.

Janie Fricke

Lee Greenwood

The singer, who received one of the biggest ovations from the crowd of 4,400 in the Opry House, often appears in concert with Alabama.

"Traveling with them, you reach a lot of people real quick," said Greenwood, whose big hit during the past year was "I.O.U."

Miss Fricke, too, was not expecting an award.

"This was a pleasant surprise tonight...more than I ever expected," she said. "It sure is hard to predict what will happen."

Her big hit during the past year was "He's a Heartache (Looking for a Place to Happen)."

Little Jimmy Dickens capped a 40-year career when the 4-foot-11 singer was chosen for induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

His hits include "May the Bird of Paradise Fly Up Your Nose," "A Sleepin' at the Foot of the Bed," "Out Behind the Barn," and "Take an Old, Cold Tater And Wait."

Wearing a big cowboy hat that accented his small size, he received a standing ovation as he tearfully walked to the stage to see his plaque unveiled.

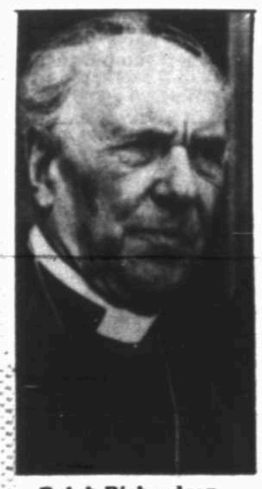

The Ricky Skaggs Band was named instrumental group of the year, and guitarist Chet Atkins won instrumentalist of the year for the sixth time.

"Always on My Mind" won song of the year for writers Johnny Christopher, Mark James and Wayne Carson Thompson for the second straight year. The song, a big hit for Nelson in 1982, was recorded previously by Elvis Presley, Brenda Lee and others.

Nelson and Merle Haggard, who recorded the swift-selling album "Pancho and Lefty," were chosen top vocal duo.

Nashville broadcasting pioneer Irving Waugh was given a special award for outstanding service to country music. The award was presented by Dolly Parton, who was lifted off the stage by a Waugh bearhug.

Theatergoers remember Richardson

Ralph Richardson

LONDON (AP) — Theatergoers and performers paid a moment of silent tribute to Sir Ralph Richardson, one of Britain's trio of actor knights, when the final curtain came down in London's playhouses following his death at the age of 80.

The actor, who often turned up for appointments riding a motorbike with his pet parrot perched on his shoulder, was one of a disappearing breed: the eccentric Englishman. It was this image as much as his low-key acting style that friends and obituary writers recalled following his death Monday.

Lord Laurence Olivier, 76, his close friend in the knightly triumverate with Sir John Gielgud, was reported too distraught to comment. Gielgud, 79, said he was "blighted."

The Daily Telegraph said Richardson was as popular as Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

"No other actor enjoyed such unstinting affection from a public that delighted as much in his exotic tastes for pet parrots and large motorcycles as his compelling stage performances," it said.

Richardson, who began a six-decade career as a scenery painter with an amateur theater group, died in London's King Edward VII Hospital after a brief illness. His second wife, Lady Meriel, was at his bedside. He had been hospitalized last week.

Having survived several plane crashes as a navy pilot in World War II, Richardson once said, "Death is like dropping into an abyss — very drowsy and very nice."

On the three stages at London's National Theater, where Richardson had been recently starring in "Inner Voices," the leading actors stepped forward at the end of the performances Monday night and asked the audiences to stand for a moment of silence.

Telephone Professionals saves you time, money

Telephone Professionals, Inc., has recently acquired Custom Telephone Systems of Midland-Odessa. This purchase substantially increases the sales and service base of Telephone Professionals, Inc., in the West Texas area. The aggressive position of Telephone Professionals, Inc., in telephone equipment market and service capability has been recognized and well noted by both their customers and their competitiors. According to John P. Smith, President of Telephone Professionals, Inc.," This acquisition will increase Telephone Professional's customer base by 38 per cent and the service and technical personnel by 40 per cent."

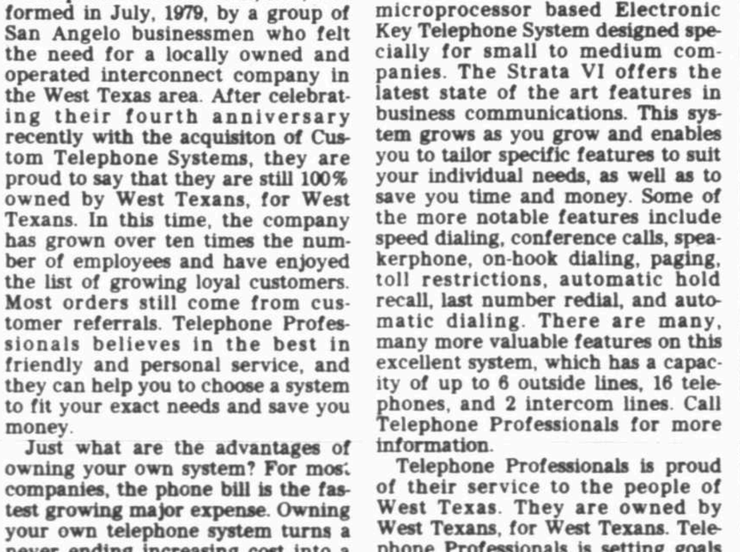

Telephone Professionals, Inc., was formed in July, 1979, by a group of San Angelo businessmen who felt the need for a locally owned and operated interconnect company in the West Texas area. After celebrating their fourth anniversary recently with the acquisiton of Custom Telephone Systems, they are proud to say that they are still 100% owned by West Texans, for West Texans. In this time, the company has grown over ten times the number of employees and have enjoyed the list of growing loyal customers. Most orders still come from customer referrals. Telephone Professionals believes in the best in friendly and personal service, and they can help you to choose a system to fit your exact needs and save you money.

Just what are the advantages of owning your own system? For most companies, the phone bill is the fastest growing major expense. Owning your own telephone system turns a never ending increasing cost into a valuable asset. Your phone equipment can be depreciated and you will receive investment tax credit. Also, with the lease/purchase method of payment, you have steady, non-increasing payments which easily fit into your budget. And while the average increase in your phone bill is 12% per year, many times the lease/purchase payment is actually lower than what you are currently paying the telephone utility company for equipment rental.

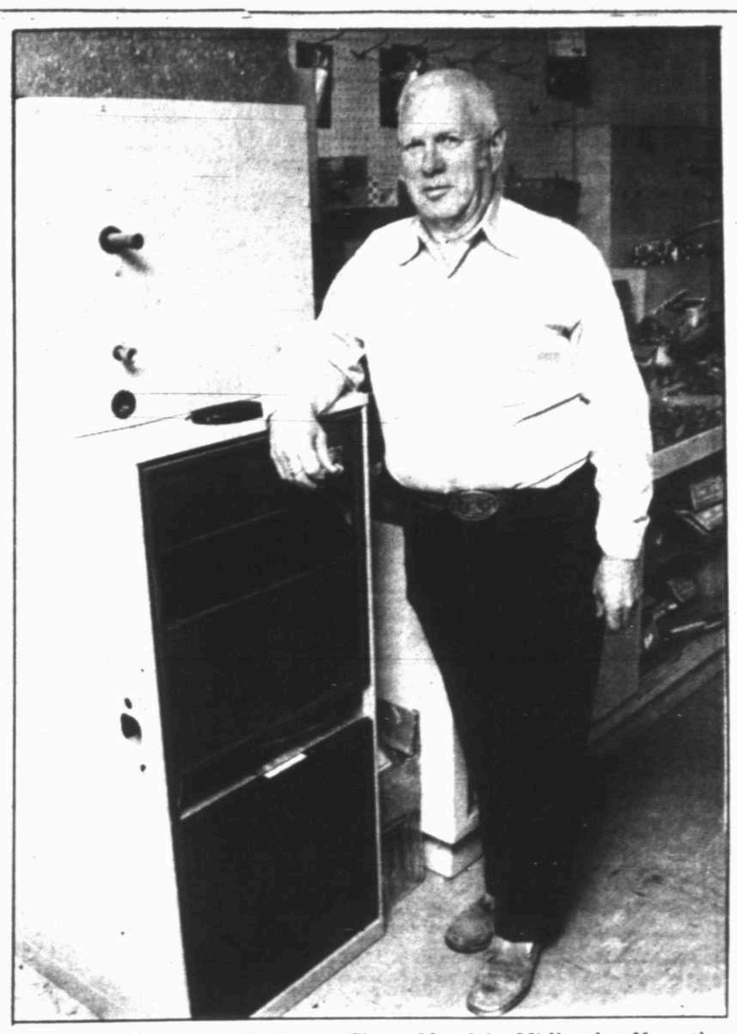

Other benefits of owning your own system include the ability to cut down on employee abuse of long distance calls. A phone may be restricted totally from long distance calls, or even restricted to certain area codes on most systems. You may also conduct a long distance usage study to find out where most of your calls are going and then determine what percentage of your calls can be routed on less expensive and more cost effective lines. Station Message Detail Recording (SMDR) allows you to record each and every station and then periodically evaluate your phone calls. Even things such as speed dialing or memory dialing will save you money, time and flaring tempers. Other features available include automatic call back and line privacy.

Telephone Professionals, Inc., handles several different lines of telephone systems, some of which are NEC, Harris Digital, Mitel, and ITT. They were recently awarded a dealership for Toshiba Telecom products. You can call Telephone Professionals for information on the new Strata VI, which is a new advanced microprocessor based Electronic Key Telephone System designed specially for small to medium companies. The Strata VI offers the latest state of the art features in business communications. This system grows as you grow and enables you to tailor specific features to suit your individual needs, as well as to save you time and money. Some of the more notable features include speed dialing, conference calls, speakerphone, on-hook dialing, paging, toll restrictions, automatic hold recall, last number redial, and automatic dialing. There are many, many more valuable features on this excellent system, which has a capacity of up to 6 outside lines, 16 telephones, and 2 intercom lines. Call Telephone Professionals for more information.

Telephone Professionals is proud of their service to the people of West Texas. They are owned by West Texans, for West Texans. Telephone Professionals is setting goals throughout the company and encouraging a genuine commitment to keeping priorities in the proper perspective. The most important thing to the staff at Telephone Professionals is a sincere commtiment to each and every customer. By purchasing your telephone system from Telephone Professionals, you placed your trust not only in the equipment, but in the service of the company. You, as a customer, are the most important aspect of their business. After purchasing your system if you ever have any trouble, however minor, please feel free to contact one of their employees immediately. Let Telephone Professionals show you the advantages of owning your own system and help you to choose the one that will fit your exact needs. Telephone Professionals, Inc., is located on 1305 County Road South. They may be reached at 563-5201.

Telephone Professionals, Inc., has recently acquired Custom Telephoe Systems of Midland-Odessa in order to even further enhance their outstanding service to each and every customer. To find out how they can help you save time and money through purchase of your own telephone system, call them at 563-5201.

First Lady's health speculated

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — The most provocative political teaser in Washington these days isn't whether Ronald Reagan will run again, but the use of Nancy Reagan's physical, mental and emotional state by unnamed White House sources to dramatize that question.

For those who have been following the leaks and insider insights, there seem to be only two possible conclusions: If Reagan doesn't run, it will be his sacrifice for Nancy; if Reagan does run again, it will be her sacrifice for him.

As for Mrs. Reagan, in response to a question, she said Monday she is just trying to lead a normal life "after taking a couple of days off trying to get over a cold."

Through her press secretary, Sheila Tate, the first lady also denied that she has been discussing the president's plans about whether to seek a second term.

"I haven't discussed my husband's plans with anybody in the West Wing or the East Wing or the North Wing or the South Wing," she said from Camp David, where she and the president spent the weekend.

The subject came up when a White House official said the first lady had left the incontrovertible impression in discussions with Reagan's senior staff that she wants him to run again.

The same official, denying that Mrs. Reagan is ill, said she suffers from a "nervous" stomach. Other senior White House aides have described Mrs. Reagan as "depressed." But Tate denied that those descriptions were accurate.

Ever since the first lady told a magazine interviewer in August that she had lost 10 pounds, and subsequently attributed that to "one personal worry on top of another," she has been under scrutiny for telltale signs of deteriorating health.

White House aides, anxious to protect Reagan's image of electability, have churned out their firsthand observations on the first lady's health, apparently as a way to give the boss an excuse if he decides not to run.

Big tipper mistaken for thief

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A man who tipped cab drivers and hotel clerks with $100 bills was a prime suspect in a weekend theft of $10,000, until police learned he was "a legitimate rich guy" who kept stacks of cool cash in his motel refrigerator.

Police said they visited Douglas Flood Pigott's motel room afternoon and confiscated 83 $100 bills because they believed the money could have been part of the 100 $100 bills stolen from another hotel.

But the $8,300 was returned to Pigott on Monday with an apology after police verified that the 27-year-old man comes from a wealthy trucking family in Seattle.

Pigott had not been arrested or charged with any crime, police said.

"We told him his behavior was not common and if it had been his money that was stolen he would have wanted us to investigate it the same way," Detective Dennis Jones said. "He agreed and didn't have any hard feelings."

Lounging by the hotel pool Monday afternoon, Pigott refused to comment on the case. He said only: "I don't have any problems with police. They're good police."

"He's a legitimate rich guy with considerable wealth," Jones said.

A GOOD USED CAR... MORE CAR FOR THE MONEY.

Year in and year out, cars depreciate in value. You've heard it. But it's not true! Cars only depreciate each year in price, not in value because the next year's models have arrived.

There's a difference between price and value. Today's late model used cars, specially those that received good care, actually can give you as much value as a new one. When you can buy a good used car for thousands of dollars less than a new one, that's real value. Our reputation for offering good value for the money is your best assurance buying your used car.
