Tax differences narrow

■ Congressional leaders wrap up Sunday's budget talks around 11:30 p.m., with the compromise measure likely to raise the income-tax rate on the wealthy from 28 to 31 percent.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats and Republicans narrowed differences Sunday over new taxes on the rich, gasoline levies, and Medicare cuts, even as Bush administration officials angrily stalked out of deficit-reduction talks.

Congressional leaders of both parties negotiated until about 11:30 p.m. Sunday over a $250 billion package of tax increases and spending cuts in agriculture, student loans and dozens of other programs. They said they would resume talking today.

"We've made good progress in many areas," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine. But he conceded, "The remaining areas of disagreement are important ones."

Weekend bargaining saw the two sides move toward each other in several areas, including the question of how — and how high — to raise taxes on the rich.

The talks proceeded on the eve of what lawmakers hoped would be Congress' last week before adjournment for the year. In the scant time left, House and Senate leaders say they would still like to tackle bills dealing with civil rights, air pollution and child care.

Budget negotiators seemed willing to raise the income-tax rate on the wealthy to 31 percent, up from its current 28 percent. They were also close on proposals to limit the deductions the wealthiest taxpayers could claim.

But Democrats were insisting on a 7.5 percent surtax on incomes exceeding $1 million annually. The proposal, if adopted, would allow Democrats to claim that rates on millionaires were raised substantially.

"We think it's good public policy and fair," said Mitchell.

Republicans were adamantly against that idea, and instead wanted higher limitations on millionaires' deductions.

White House Chief of Staff John Sununu accused Democrats of being too divided to respond to the latest GOP offer.

"We're not going to negotiate with Democrats who can't come to an agreement among themselves," he said as he left the Capitol with White House budget chief Richard Darman and Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady. "This was a great offer."

But Mitchell denied that, saying, "I can say to you Democrats are unified."

Despite the standoff over taxes, the two sides moved closer in other areas,

FORT WORTH (AP) — A racially charged confrontation sparked by displays of the Confederate battle flag at a high school here illustrates how insensitive youths are to minority concerns, some experts say.

"Part of it is that there is a lack of history, of knowing about the civil rights era and the struggles this country went through in the late 1950s and the 1960s," said Mark Briskman, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in Dallas.

Hundreds of actors and prominent New Mexicans turned out Saturday evening for a dinner to commemorate the opening of the Greer Garson Communications Center and Studios at the College of Santa Fe.

Miss Garson, 82, was unable to attend because she was recovering from the flu at her Dallas home. But in a telephone call to the audience, she said wants the center to advance the cause of communication around the world.

The center at CSF was built with a $3 million gift from Miss Garson and her late husband, E.E. "Buddy" Fogelson.

Arab stabs three Israelis to death

AP

■ Although two Palestinian groups claimed responsibility for the attack and Israeli youths stoned Arab cars after the incident, Jerusalem police think the laborer acted alone.

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An Arab laborer shouting "God is Great!" stabbed three Israelis to death Sunday as he rampaged through a Jewish neighborhood, apparently seeking revenge for the Temple Mount killings, police said.

One victim managed to shoot and wound the attacker, who was then seized by furious residents, ending the rampage in the Baka area of southern Jerusalem, police said.

The attack inflamed tensions in the capital and brought in a stream of police reinforcements as vengeance-seeking Jews took briefly to the streets.

Police spokesman Aharon Elchayani said his forces would bar Arabs from traveling into Jerusalem today.

Two Palestinian factions claimed responsibility for Sunday's attack, but police said they believed the assailant acted alone. The suspect was identified as Omar Abu Sirhan, a 19-year-old Arab laborer from the village of Ubbadiyeh in the occupied West Bank.

Police said his motive apparently was revenge for the Oct. 8 blood bath on the Temple Mount, in which Israeli police fired at stone-throwing Palestinians, killing at least 19 of them.

Parmer playing David to Gramm's Goliath

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a seven-day series looking at the state and local races in the Nov. 6 election. Today, State Sen. Hugh Parmer's battle to unseat powerful U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm and the race between Bob Bullock and Rob Mosbacher for lieutenant governor are featured. On Sunday, Oct. 28, the Reporter-Telegram will publish the annual Voters' Guide by the League of Women Voters.

AUSTIN — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, a College Station Republican seeking reelection, makes it a point not to respond directly to charges leveled by his opponent, State Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth.

Gramm isn't the only one ignoring the hapless Parmer.

If recent polls are any indication, Gramm may achieve his goal of being the first Texas senatorial candidate since the 1950s to garner 60 percent of the vote.

A Texas Gallup survey released in the third week of October found Parmer at 29 percent and Gramm at the magic 60.

The same week, Federal Election Commission records indicated Gramm had more than $5 million left to spend in his campaign chest before the Nov. 6 election, compared to $6,000 for Parmer.

"I'm not disappointed. I knew it would be hard," said the state senator, who is 51 and a Yale University graduate.

He said he hoped to gather between $250,000 and $400,000 for "a modest television showing across most of the state during the last 10 days of the campaign."

Bullock, Mosbacher face off for lieutenant governor slot

By James Cullen

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The race for lieutenant governor pits a longtime Democratic state comptroller, Bob Bullock, against a young Republican Houston businessman with high political connections, Rob Mosbacher Jr.

Campaigns for lieutenant governor usually attract little attention, particularly in the 17 years William P. Hobby Jr. has served as the governor's backup.

But the lieutenant governor's real power is as president of the Senate, where tradition gives that officer a strong hand that rivals the House speaker in determining the course of legislation.

As comptroller since 1975, Bullock, 61, has served as the state's tax collector whose revenue forecasts were crucial in establishing how much money was available for the Legislature to budget.

Bullock has a law degree and is a former state representative, assistant attorney general and Texas secretary of state.

Natural gas leak causes evacuation

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Thirty families were evacuated from their homes southeast of Midland Sunday night as a precaution because of a low pressure natural gas well leak.

Law enforcement and fire officials were notified about 7:15 p.m. about the leak on the Tru Love lease located near county roads 1130 and 84 and sealed the area off to traffic shortly after, officials said.

The well "leaked a few hundred cubic feet of gas" according to Warren McCullough, an employee of the Midland Southwest division of M.A. Hanna Corp., which owns the well.

Because of Sunday night's humidity, the gas appeared as a visible cloud that remained close to the ground for about an hour before dissipating, officials said.

Residents were evacuated as a precautionary measure while representatives from the Texas Railroad Commission evaluated the extent of the danger.

After it was determined that the leak was natural gas from a low pressure well, residents were allowed to return home about 9 p.m., once the leak had been capped and the gas cloud had cleared.

The leak did present a potential explosion danger, fire officials said.

It was caused by a malfunction of production equipment when a safety valve opened and failed to close, McCullough said.

The Department of Public Safety, Midland County Sheriff's Office, the Texas Railroad Commission, and both the Northeast and Greenwood Volunteer Departments responded to the incident.

terrogation, said the attacker seemed to have chosen his victims at random. He said Abu Sirhan had no known criminal background.

Israel television showed scenes of Abu Sirhan being led down a corridor by policemen. He wore a bloodstained hospital smock, his head and leg were bandaged and his ankles were chained.

Shouting "Allahu Akbar" — Arabic for "God Is Great" — the attacker killed an 18-year-old woman soldier, a 43-year-old garden nursery owner and a 28-year-old member of an elite police anti-terrorism unit, police said.

The off-duty police officer managed to shoot the assailant as he was being attacked.

Angry Israeli youths stoned Arab-owned cars on a Jerusalem highway. Shouts of "Death to the Arabs!" resounded in the streets of Baka.

Defense Minister Moshe Arens voiced fears that Arab-Jewish communal violence was reducing prospects of a Mideast peace settlement. He told Israel television that he feared "a chasm is opening."

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek appealed for calm, saying the attack was "a tough test of people's patience and tolerance."

Some Israeli politicians demanded broader powers for troops and police to fire on attackers. They also said the off-duty policeman should have immediately shot the assailant dead. Instead, the officer fired his pistol in the air, then shot the attacker in the legs.

"If someone attacks with intent to kill, he should be killed on the spot," Agriculture Minister Raphael Eitan said.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's senior adviser, Avi Pazner, said the U.N. Security Council's condemnation of Israel for the Temple Mount clash created "an atmosphere that incites extremist actions against innocent Jewish civilians."

After the killings on Temple Mount, known in Arabic as Haram es-Sharif, leaflets distributed by leaders of the 34-month-old Palestinian uprising called for vengeance in these "bloody days of total escalation."

According to police accounts, the rampage began when the Arab plunged his 16-inch blade into the chest of Iris Azulai, 18, just outside her home. He then ran to a nearby street where he slightly injured a 13-year-old boy, then assaulted nursery owner Eli Eltratz, stabbing him fatally in the chest.

Police said the assailant used a knife. Israel radio said the weapon was the bayonet of a Kalashnikov assault rifle.

The off-duty policeman, Charlie Chelouche, wearing civilian clothes, fired two warning shots in the air and then shot the attacker twice in the legs, but was himself stabbed in the chest.

The two struggled in a dusty lot outside a preschool for 3- and 4-year-olds, where Abu Sirhan was arrested. Afterward, witnesses covered the bloodstains with dirt.

Miri Rechtshaffer, a neighbor, said she was in bed when she heard the first victim screaming: "I'm being stabbed, I'm being stabbed!"

"Then I saw her on the street dying, and now she is dead. So beautiful, killed only two minutes from her home," Mrs. Rechtshaffer said, weeping.

SENATE: Parmer runs old-style campaign

(From 1A)

Otherwise, Parmer, a state senator since 1983 and a one-term Texas House member in the 1960s, said he is limiting his campaign to "traditional, old-style campaign devices" like personal appearances.

Gramm, 48, attributed his success to two reasons: "Texans want their senator to be a national leader, while at the same time getting the job done for Texas."

The U.S. senator is a former economics professor at Texas A&M University and was a Democratic U.S. representative until he changed parties before a 1983 special election. He is seeking his second term in the U.S. Senate.

In Congress, Gramm was a prime author of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget act.

The law established an important budgeting mechanism in which automatic, across-the-board cuts in federal spending go into effect if Congress and the White House fail to work together to reduce the deficit.

Reaching budgetary goals set by the act for this year has prompted Congress and President Bush to agree on at least two time extensions as they negotiated a package of spending cuts and higher taxes.

Watchers of the C-SPAN cable television network have seen Gramm at work during several late-night sessions defending the laws' goals.

Although Gramm is rumored to be tilling the political soil for a 1996 presidential bid, the senator said he hasn't yet "made any plans."

However, he acknowledged having "thought about it" and, as Bush faces different world crises, Gramm said he "wondered what I would do."

A victory with 60 percent of the vote would show fellow Republicans that Gramm is strong in Texas, an important swing state in recent presidential elections.

Another Texas senator rumored to have presidential ambitions, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, nearly achieved the 60 percent mark in 1988, even as he ran for vice president on the national ticket.

Facing Amarillo Republican Beau Bolter, Bentsen garnered 59.2 percent of the vote.

The last candidate to cross 60 percent was Democrat Ralph Yarborough, who beat Republican Roy Whittenburg with 74.6 percent of the vote in 1958.

Paradoxically, Gramm has maintained a reputation as a budget-cutter even while lending an important hand bringing high-dollar research and defense projects to Texas.

The two primary example are the Superconducting Super Collider, a huge circular physics lab set for construction near Waxahachie, and the U.S. Navy Homeport in Ingleside, near Corpus Christi.

On a lesser level, he has earned the rancor of U.S. representatives who worked hard to bring government projects to their districts only to find Gramm's ties to a Republican administration gave him first crack at the publicity.

"Stop Gramm-standing" was a popular cry tossed about early in the campaign.

Much of Parmer's record stands on his work for the environment. He sponsored the state's end of the Superfund toxic chemical cleanup effort and other clean water legislation. He was named the Sierra Club's man of the year for 1989.

He feels Texans are unaware of several Gramm nay votes that he said illustrate the incumbent's lack of compassion. He said they include votes against "every penny of funding for education," the federal Hunger Relief Act and the Meals on Wheels program.

He also charged that Gramm, a member of the Senate Banking Committee, received more than $500,000 in campaign contributions from thrift industry political action committees and directors.

The federal government is in the midst of a massive bailout effort of savings and loans which has cost taxpayers so far tens of billions of dollars.

Asked about the contributions, Gramm said, "I don't think anybody in the U.S. Senate has a stronger voice than I do in terms of providing leadership to get on with the job."

Parmer also criticized the horse-trading between Congress and the president on balancing the budget, saying the federal officials shouldn't consider cutting Medicare benefits or increasing gasoline taxes.

Parmer thought Congress should force U.S. allies, who also are trade competitors, to shoulder more of their share in defense.

"What I hear people saying in Texas is that they are sick and tired of those people in Washington," said Parmer. "And he (Gramm) has been in the middle of all that."

BUDGET: Democrats offer to cut Medicare

(From 1A)

said a Democratic congressional official who asked to not be identified.

Democrats offered to raise the gasoline tax 5 cents above its current 9-cent-a-gallon level. Republicans were seeking a 7-cent increase.

Democrats were offering to reduce Medicare by as much as $44 billion, $3 billion less than Republicans were demanding.

In addition, Democrats were seeking to boost the $51,300 wage cap from which Medicare taxes are deducted to $125,000. Republicans want to increase the cap to $98,000. The 1.45 percent Medicare tax is part of the Social Security deduction.

Republicans have been fearful of late that Democrats have made the tax-the-rich battle cry their own barely two weeks from Election Day. Earlier in the day, White House aides said higher levies on the rich were on the way.

"This is one of the all-time false issues, the rich-poor thing," said administration budget director Richard Darman. "This compromise in the end will tax the rich."

Working against a Wednesday deadline when stopgap spending authority expires, bargainers were trying to find middle ground between separate deficit-reduction plans approved by the House and Senate last week. The Senate bill — preferred by Bush — had more moderate tax increases on the wealthy, took a bigger bite out of Medicare spending and doubled the gasoline tax.

"We feel very strongly there should be a surcharge and a rate increase on higher-income levels," House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., told reporters.

"It's got to move in the direction of being fairer in terms of taxes, in other words, asking the wealthiest Americans to pay their fair share," said House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., who like Darman appeared on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" program.

Darman said Bush would accept a 31 percent rate on the rich, up from 28 percent, if the rate on those slightly less well-off was reduced from 33 percent to 31 percent. That tradeoff, eliminating the so-called bubble, would increase taxes for 700,000 people and reduce them for 5 million others while raising an estimated $7 billion in additional revenue.

But Mitchell said Democrats would not accept that offer alone.

"It obviously would have to be accompanied by other measures" so people whose taxes were cut "would be required to pay something to offset that reduction," Mitchell said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program.

"We're not hung up on any one formula, but rather the principle of fairness," Mitchell added.

RACE: Mosbacher currently directs TDHS

(From 1A)

former U.S. Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee and finished third in a Republican primary race for the U.S. Senate against Phil Gramm in 1984. He earned his bachelor's degree from Georgetown University and his law degree from Southern Methodist University.

Also on the ballot is the Libertarian candidate, Tom Owens of Midland, who believes education should be privatized, drugs should be legalized and victimless crimes should be repealed to reduce prison costs.

Owens, 46, a management consultant who unsuccessfully ran for a House seat in Dallas in 1982, would replace the current school financing system with a book and tuition voucher system.

While Hobby wielded power that many say exceeded the governors he served under, the Senate gave him that power and conceivably could take it away from his successor.

The lieutenant governor by statute sits on the five-member Legislative Redistricting Board, which redraws legislative districts if the Legislature fails to complete the task, as well as the Legislative Budget Board, which handles interim budget transfers.

In their only debate, Bullock and Mosbacher refused to rule out tax increases to deal with a budget deficit expected to top $3 billion as well as a court-mandated rewrite of the school financing system.

But Mosbacher criticized Bullock's refusal to rule out an income tax as a possibility in a restructured tax system.

Mosbacher and Owens endorsed a constitutional ban on a state income tax, and Mosbacher later claimed Bullock was leaving the door open to an income tax.

But Bullock said the income tax threat is a scare tactic.

"If Texas were to have one, (Mosbacher) would bring it about because he's the one that's asking for $2.5 billion in new money for DHS and 10,000 new employees," Bullock said.

Bullock said he believes voters will recognize that the comptroller's office under his supervision has become a model for the nation, while under Mosbacher's chairmanship the state welfare agency has experienced hundreds of millions of dollars in cost overruns.

Mosbacher played down his responsibility for the deficits, which are expected to reach $340 million to finish the current fiscal year. He blamed the unexpected costs to expansion of coverage the federal government ordered.

His experience as DHS chairman showed him "how desperately we need to reorganize state government," and introduce accountability of state agencies, he said.

Mosbacher has proposed better use of state money to gain federal matching grants, tapping new revenues as the state's economy improves and eliminating duplication of services in state agencies.

On other issues, Mosbacher would support abortions only in cases of rape or incest or to save the mother's life, and would require parental consent for women under 18.

Bullock opposes any change in the current law, which allows abortions in most cases in the first six months of pregnancy.

Mosbacher said he hopes the anti-incumbent feeling of voters will help him, and promised he would not seek more than two four-year terms for the office, which pays the same $7,200 a year that other legislators get.

Mosbacher also said he believes the Senate would not strip him of the powers of committee appointments and bill referrals that the lieutenant governor traditionally has wielded.

"I simply don't believe the Democrat senators are going to want to dump decades of tradition on the basis of partisanship," he said.

Abortion re-appearing as campaign issue

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — After taking a back seat to worries about taxes, the economy and the Middle East, abortion is re-emerging as a potentially decisive issue in the final days of the 1990 election season.

"It's one of the few issues that's still out there that distinguishes people," said Harrison Hickman, a pollster for abortion-rights causes. "I would predict you'll see a lot of people using it at the last minute to try to push undecided voters."

Conventional political wisdom has held that abortion-rights candidates had the upper hand this year and that opponents of abortion were on the defensive after a 1989 Supreme Court ruling revived the issue. Electoral losses for abortion foes in 1989 contributed to that view.

Yet abortion hasn't proven to be the "silver bullet" for abortion-rights candidates, in the words of Democrat Donald Avenson, a pro-choice candidate for Iowa governor. And abortion opponents point to races where their candidates have stood firm and are leading — including governor's races in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas and Iowa.

"It's not the issue some thought a year ago. On the other hand, it's more salient this year than it has been in the past in a lot of states," said Doug Johnson, legislative director for the National Right to Life Committee.

As a result, some thought abortion was fizzling this year as an issue.

But strategists for abortion-rights campaigns say there will be a flurry of last-minute advertising pushing the abortion issue. In some races it's already begun.

Sometimes the push will be on television. But in other cases it will be more selectively targeted toward young women voters through direct-mail or telephone.

"People are thinking this is a dead issue. I think that's just a fundamental misunderstanding of this issue," said Celinda Lake, who has conducted polling for abortion-rights candidates around the country.

"It's a last-minute issue," she said. "It's something you lay out in the last weeks of a campaign."

Abortion-rights strategists say their target audience, younger voters, typically does not pay attention to campaigns until the final stages.

Lake says polling shows that increasing economic worries and lack of trust of Democrats on the economy has caused a drop-off in support for Democrats among younger women, she said. Abortion may lure them back.

"It's a big drop off — 10 points," she said. "Because of that you'll see more pro-choice direct-mail geared toward that audience at the end."

In North Carolina's Senate race, both anti-abortion Sen. Jesse Helms and his Democratic challenger, Harvey Gantt, have been airing ads on the issue.

But in most states, it's the abortion-rights candidates who have been using the issue in television ads.

In Oregon, Democrat Harry Lonsdale has drawn even in his challenge to GOP Sen. Mark Hatfield, according to recent polls, after airing ads that attack Hatfield's opposition to abortion among other issues.

One race where abortion hasn't been the factor that was expected is in Florida, where former Sen. Lawton Chiles is challenging GOP Gov. Robert Martinez, who opposes abortion. Chiles, who supports abortion rights, has found the issue uncomfortable for him and isn't airing ads despite Martinez' seeming vulnerability on the issue.

The issue is important in Iowa's Senate race, where Democratic incumbent Tom Harkin has a double-digit lead over anti-abortion challenger Rep. Tom Tauke, according to recent polls.

Harkin has been the abortion-rights point-man in the Senate, and he led the fight last week to oppose an amendment requiring teen-age girls to notify their parents before getting an abortion. Parental consent on abortion tends to gain strong support in most polls, but Harkin said the overall abortion issue helps him.

"The last thing my opponent wants to talk about is the choice issue," Harkin said. "I'm watching my tracking polls ... and the number of people viewing his position as extreme is going like this," he added, pointing upward.

The Senate adopted the parental consent provision on a 48-48 vote, but the amendment was expected to be deleted in later congressional action. Harkin's side was surprised it drew 48 votes.

That vote has become an issue in California, where both candidates for governor are trying to appeal to abortion-rights supporters. Democratic candidate Dianne Feinstein blasted her GOP rival, Sen. Pete Wilson, for missing the vote while campaigning.

Abortion opponents have the upper hand in several races.

In Kansas, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Joan Finney has had difficulty explaining her anti-abortion position recently. But she still leads GOP Gov. Mike Hayden, an abortion-rights supporter, in the polls.

Anti-abortion Republican George Voinovich has the lead in Ohio's governor race, where Democrat Anthony Celebrezze has been criticized for a startling flip-flop in which he dropped his long-standing opposition to abortion.

A September poll by the University of Cincinnati found that the issue was helping Voinovich more than Celebrezze. Voinovich led among the 13 percent of respondents who said abortion was the single most important issue.

In Iowa's governor's race, Democrat Avenson is running abortion-rights ads but has yet to catch up with anti-abortion GOP incumbent Terry Branstad.

Abortion opponents in Idaho were angered by Gov. Cecil Andrus' veto of a restrictive abortion bill this year, but he is in strong shape in his re-election bid.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K5 ♡A983 ◇J543 ♣KJ2
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—In most methods, North is showing a balanced hand of some 19-20 points. While the honor cards in partner's suit are attractive, the hearts are weak and the hand is riddled with losers. We prefer a pass, but will accept five clubs as a second choice.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠1076 ♡K5 ◇J1083 ♣AQJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	Dbl
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Bear in mind that, in the balancing seat, partner's double could be about a king lighter than in the direct position. Therefore, we would tend to be a bit conservative here. We think that one no trump is adequate and will allow partner some breathing room if his double was more courtesy than substance.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K ♡QJ105 ◇KJ82 ♣10875
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—It's a question of how much value to assign to the bare king of spades. In support of hearts you have a pretty reasonable hand, and even if you count your singleton king as only three points, we feel you are worth a jump raise to three hearts.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Void ♡6543 ◇84 ♣AKQJ1085
As dealer, what action do you take?
A.—With seven sure tricks for a possible no trump contract, this hand is too good to pass or preempt. In addition, the four-card major makes a preempt unattractive. Our vote goes to an opening bid of one club, with pass a distant second.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK ♡A1063 ◇AJ6 ♣KJ92
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	4 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—With so many prime cards, reasonable intermediates and a ruffing value, slam could be there in a suit if you have a 4-4 fit. The way to probe is to bid five clubs now. That is natural, not an ace-showing response. If partner bids five diamonds, continue the probe by bidding five hearts. Sign off at five no trump if you do not find a fit.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J93 ♡AK1062 ◇AK ♣J42
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have 16 points and no way to show them! To bid no trump without a secure stopper in either black suit is absurd, and to raise diamonds with a doubleton, even with the two top honors, is out of the question. Bid two hearts and wait for partner's rebid.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 9-year-old Ohio boy who died after boosting his best friend to safety when they fell through the ice on a frozen pond was among four recipients to receive 1989 Young American Medals for Bravery Sunday.

Thornburgh

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said Andrew William D'Alesio of Reynoldsburg, Ohio saved his friend's life on Feb. 19, 1989 after they sank through the ice playing hockey. D'Alesio pushed his friend to safety, but then fell underneath the ice and died.

The second recipient of the bravery award was Jason Frank Guntert, then 17, of Hudson, N.Y. He pulled a woman from a burning, smoke-filled car that had been involved in an accident.

Guntert suffered serious burns when he extinguished the flames on the woman's coat and body with his hands.

Two other young people also received the 1989 Young American Medals for Service.

■ Gregory D. Bassuk, then 17, of Chestnut Ridge, N.Y., has served both the youth and the elderly of his community through a series of volunteer activities. He has worked as a community aide for senior citizens and hosted a radio talk show that focused on youth-related issues.

■ Christopher E. Daly, then 17, of Gaithersburg, Md., has served his community through membership in various organizations. He planned a one-day regional conference for teen-agers with orthopedic disabilities, their parents and their friends.

The medals program, established in 1950, recognizes young people for acts of bravery and community service. It directs the Department of Justice to pick the recipients, who are then given medals by the president.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Nicolas Cage is the proud owner of a 1920s castle, complete with at turret, in the Hollywood Hills, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Cage

The sloe-eyed, 25-year-old actor known for his oddball roles in movies such as "Raising Arizona, "Moonstruck" and "Wild at Heart," has purchased the 5,367-square-foot residence in the Los Feliz neighborhood, according to the Los Angeles Times.

The castle sits atop a promontory with a 360-degree city view and the master suite has a black marble fireplace.

The 11-room home has three bedrooms, 4½ bathrooms and a maid's quarters, according to the listing by Dorothy Carter and Jodi Hedges of Douglas Properties. The house was listed for $1,695,000.

Cage paid about $1.5 million for the gated property, the newspaper said.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Actress Claire Bloom says she doesn't understand how actors "slog on" in long-running Broadway plays.

"I haven't left the theater. It left me," says the 59-year-old actress, who nonetheless maintains a hectic schedule. "The plays are not that interesting, the theater district in New York is a horror and the audiences aren't that terrific there. It's only when you go off Broadway that you still have enthusiastic people, younger people and interesting things."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joel McCrea's death was seen as an end of a Hollywood era, another passing of a show business cowboy who personified the Old West.

"He was the last great 'A' Western film cowboy," said John Langellier, director of the research center at the Gene Autry Western Heritage Museum.

"Along with Randolph Scott and certainly a few others like John Wayne and Gary Cooper, he created the strong, silent stereotype of the rugged Western hero," Langellier said. "There will never be another like him. His death marks the end of an era."

McCrea died Saturday at age 84 in the Motion Picture and Television Fund Hospital. His wife of 57 years, actress Frances Dee, and son, Peter, were with him at the time.

Following private services, McCrea will be cremated and his ashes scattered at sea, Peter McCrea said. McCrea also leaves sons Jody and David.

McCrea's last public appearance was Oct. 1, with first lady Barbara Bush at a Beverly Hills fund-raising dinner for Republican gubernatorial candidate Pete Wilson.

After her speech, Mrs. Bush went over to McCrea, took his hand, and said, "My hero," said A.C. Lyles, a friend of McCrea's for many years.

"He lit up," Lyles said. "That summed up everybody's feeling about Joel."

Descended from pioneers — one grandfather fought Apache Indians and drove stagecoaches — McCrea's early ambition was to own a ranch.

"He loved the outdoors. He loved the West and history of the West," said producer Walter Mirisch, who worked on six films with McCrea.

While most of his 87 roles were Westerns, McCrea also was adept at light comedy and drama. He was the trenchcoat-wearing reporter in Alfred Hitchcock's 1940 "Foreign Correspondent."

"He had the quality of childlike innocence, and yet there was a strength of character that comes through," said Peter McCrea. "When the chips were down, you felt he could handle a situation."

New rights law racism in reverse

Congress is expected to approve the 1990 Civil Rights Act shortly, but if the bill slips through Congress as anticipated, President Bush should veto it for the national good.

The landmark 1964 Civil Rights Act was written at a point in history when it was crucial to outlaw racial discrimination so that this country would become a color-blind society. The 1964 law made racial discrimination legally wrong as well as socially unjust.

However, liberal federal judges began to write their own law — attempting to justify race-and-gender-based quotas in employment and education as well as other segments of society. What was a good and needed law in the beginning was turned into a hodgepodge design to mask a racial quota system for American business.

For the past two years, the U.S. Supreme Court has attempted to redress that quota system. It has effectively ruled that equality of opportunity does not mean equality of results. Ability and merit also must be considered, as they should.

Liberals, from politicians to academicians and the media, accused the high court of "misinterpretations of civil rights law." Their reply is this new measure — not calling for quotas by name but enforcing them nonetheless. The end result is ridiculous and what this nation must always guard against — elevating a minority to special status by way of the law.

Under the 1990 Civil Rights Act, the employer or institution must now furnish proof that it is not guilty of racial discrimination. That makes it much easier for alleged victims to sue for damages. Under the bill, statistical imbalances in hiring or admissions would become evidence to prove discrimination. Big financial penalties would result. By any reasonable standard, that is a quota system.

America has always extolled ability and leadership, which is entirely appropriate. They are needed more than ever in the competitive new economic and political order. Yet instead of meritocracy, we are plunging headlong into mediocrity. America has become a society that demands equality based on color rather than demonstrated talent and that is wrong and an insult to intelligent people of all races.

This bill is not only racism in reverse, but it is demeaning to able and proud minorities who would rather earn success. It represents one more attempt by liberals to undermine the Supreme Court. In so doing, they undercut the fabric of the country itself.

Adventists spread around the world

While many people in Midland are trying to figure out how to celebrate United Nations Day this week, members of the Midland Seventh-day Adventist Church are reminded of international relations at church every week.

We hear weekly mission reports that remind members the Adventist church is a worldwide Protestant denomination, with a presence in 185 of the 215 countries recognized by the United Nations.

It makes interesting problems for us. For example, the denomination has believers in both Kuwait and Iraq. Indeed, if two nations are at war, chances are good that Adventists will have a presence (churches, schools, hospitals or development and relief ministries) in both countries.

Just last summer almost 2,500 Adventist delegates from around the world met in Indianapolis for a once-every-five-years church council that resembled a United Nations meeting. Delegates represented every continent and many islands, all of the larger countries and many small ones like Pitcairn Island, and translation was provided in nine languages. it is a miracle that unity could occur in the midst of such cultural diversity.

So this Saturday when we pray we'll remember our fellow believers in Iraq and Kuwait, in South Africa, Nigeria and Panama, just to name a few.

And we'll remember everyone here in Midland, also.

Campaign reports slanted

We hear much today about how bad it is that those who are in the race for the governorship of Texas are some sort of criminals against society because they are outspending all earlier candidates. Why is it that such "holier-than-thou critics" can freely spend more on everything in the 1990s and yet presume that those seeking the governorship should indulge in some sort of "pittance campaigns?"

Right along with this "unbiased information apparently "chosen interviewees" are literally talked into telling us that these monies which are being spent on the governor's race could better be spent on other causes. Then we are told that Williams has spent $16 million and Richards has spent only $10 million.

These supposedly tragic facts are climaxed by a seemingly-learned and presumably-serious anchorman who says, "Williams has outspent Richards two to one." Perhaps we might justly inquire as to where this learned person did his study of mathematics or where he came to such competency. Nevertheless, I suppose that kind of consistency should garner a few biased votes.

Is it not sad — very sad — that the intellectual and ethical geniuses among our "objective reporters" would use their prominent TV spots to subtly promote their choice candidates under the cover of misinformation and with pseudo-objective reporting? Is it not doubly sad that these "objective reporters" and such "consistent anchormen" cannot see that monies spent on campaigns is keeping a multitude of needy Texans employed?

Must we be forever saddled with and misled by biased information provided for us by reporters who are without any conscience under the guise of a supposed integrity? Has biased reporting become the only acceptable way of life for those who bring us the news via TV, and the only rational basis for voting by the multitudes whose lives are apparently dependent upon their television news information?

JACK ANDERSON

Incumbents, hopefuls toss rules aside

WASHINGTON — Democrats and Republicans have broken the cease-fire in the savings and loan war. With the congressional elections just two weeks away, members of Congress and their challengers are freely slinging accusations trying to link each other to the scandal.

Anderson

That's something House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., had hoped to keep to a minimum. Several months ago Foley said that he believed Congress and the White House should simply deal with the crisis instead of pointing fingers across the aisle.

Finger pointing is tolerated during odd-numbered years, but in even-numbered election years, the rule is to keep mum about certain subjects for the good of both parties. Party leaders on both sides of the aisle had already agreed to downplay the generous congressional pay raise during the election.

Foley's own party angered him by firing the first shot. Last month the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee filed an ethics complaint against Rep. Denny Smith, R-Ore. One of the accusations against Smith was that he tried to pull strings to exempt savings and loan directors from liability if their thrift went under. At the time, Smith was a director of a shaky thrift.

Knowledgeable sources told our associate Scott Sleek that Foley was irked when the Democrats pointed the finger at Smith. Foley had been hinting for some time that he thought any open accusation against a Republican over the S&L mess could backfire.

He was right, and it didn't take long. The Republicans shot back with a complaint to the Federal Elections Commission accusing Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., of failing to file proper information about campaign donations he received from the S&L industry. Annunzio is a senior member of the House Banking Committee.

Foley had good reason to attempt a cease-fire on the S&L issue. GOP leaders made it clear early on that they were ready to fight, and they were in the best position to win. In June, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater implied that the Republicans were ready to pinpoint vulnerable Democrats on the S&L issue if the Democrats tried to make hay out of it during the election. Fitzwater dropped a few names.

Foley criticized Fitzwater and said the administration should stop making accusations and start cleaning up the financial mess.

On this issue, the Democrats would have been smart to keep their heads down. Four of the "Keating Five" are Democrats. The five — Sens. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., Donald Riegle, D-Mich., John Glenn, D-Ohio, and John McCain, R-Ariz. — have been accused of pulling strings to keep federal regulators off the back of Charles Keating, the biggest S&L villain of them all. A special counsel has recommended that Glenn and McCain, the lone Republican, be dropped from the Keating investigation.

That leaves the "Keating Three," all Democrats. The party doesn't need to see any more names added to the list. A spokesman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee said that the committee took a long time to file a complaint against Smith because it was researching his financial dealings. But other sources say the specter of an all-out S&L war prompted months of indecision among the Democratic leadership over whether to make an issue out of Smith. In the end, the temptation to nail him during an election year was too great. They simply couldn't help themselves.

It's a shame that it takes political opportunism for Congress to get to the bottom of the S&L scandal. But at this point, the victims — the American people — will take justice any way they can get it.

CREDIT SPREE — Money is flowing freely from American banks to the Eastern Bloc at low interest rates. Without Western currency, the emerging regimes cannot finance imports, acquire technology or modernize their economies. But European banks are being more cautious about lending to the East. They were burned in the early 1980s when Poland and Romania began having trouble paying their loans. The willingness of U.S. banks to be generous with the struggling Eastern Bloc is surprising in light of the fact that many of those banks are already holding bad loans to Third World countries.

MINI-EDITORIAL — American troops in the Persian Gulf don't have to wait for a war to endanger their lives. Two American tobacco companies did it for them, sending 10,000 cartons of free cigarettes to the troops and using an Air Force plane to do it. This outpouring of "patriotism" by the tobacco industry is nothing more than despicable opportunism. What better place to recruit new smokers and recapture reformed smokers than in the stressful and tedious atmosphere of Saudi Arabia? The tobacco companies should do American troops a favor and send the cigarettes to Saddam Hussein.

CHARLEY REESE

Ghost of Henry Kissinger haunting Bush

If you want to support the young Americans in the Persian Gulf, rather than hanging a ribbon on a tree, you would do better to call the White House and your representatives and senators, urging them to avoid war.

Reese

The attempt, well-intentioned, to focus people's thoughts on supporting the soldiers with cookies, ribbons and letters simply diverts attention away from the most critical issue, which is the sordid backroom politics that put them in harm's way.

The issue now is whether or not comfortable politicians with private agendas will sacrifice 50,000 to 70,000 precious American lives for the most squalid of motives.

The Iraq invasion of Kuwait is not the issue. Most of us disapprove of that. The issue is whether it's worth 50,000 to 70,000 young American lives to forcibly eject the Iraqi army from Kuwait, which consists of a small patch of desert with two cities.

Let the Kuwaiti ruling family buy their country back if they want it so badly. Americans should be livid and outraged that the Bush administration wants to save the Al Sabah family money by substituting the blood of American youth and the money of American taxpayers.

Now is a critical time. The deployment of U.S. forces is almost complete and Iraq, as predicted, shows no sign of buckling under the trade embargo. In fact, White House people are describing the voluntary withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait as a "nightmare" scenario. That's quite revealing because it clearly shows that the Bush administration is less interested in liberating Kuwait than in destroying Iraq.

This assessment stems, of course, from the Henry Kissinger crowd. Kissinger has said the U.S. must destroy Iraq's military capability even if Iraq voluntarily withdraws. Two of Kissinger's former employees are key Bush advisors — Brent Scowcroft, the National Security Council chairman, and Laurence Eagleburger at the State Department.

We have already seen the Kissinger influence in the case of China where Bush broke his word to the American people that there would be no high level contacts until there was some improvement in China's treatment of dissidents. Bush broke his word and Secretary of State James Baker lied about it, denying there had been an earlier secret trip by Scowcroft.

Kissinger's clients, of course, are, among others, the Rockefeller empire with its vast network of global corporations, foundations, and foundation-financed think tanks.

If President Bush wishes to be a front man for Kissinger's clients or their dupe, then that's his business, but it is not the business of the office of the president to pursue the interests of private business under the guise of America's interests.

It is not in our interest to sacrifice tens of thousands of young Americans over an inter-Arab squabble that can be settled by the Arab governments with diplomacy and bribes.

It is not in our interest to alienate the entire Arab world. It is not in our interest to claim the right to decide who controls somebody else's assets in their own countries.

It is not in our interest to squander billions overseas while our own people suffer a recession, our own government lurches toward bankruptcy, and our own infrastructure crumbles.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

'One size fits all,' the label should read

During the recent budget crisis I kept hearing a lot about "non-essential government services."

"If Congress doesn't reach an agreement on the budget," the news anchors said, "then the nation faces a shutdown of non-essential governmental services."

Grizzard

So I started thinking. Just how many non-essential services does the government offer?

And, if these services are non-essential, it means we could get along without them, right?

And, if we could get along without them, then why do we have them in the first place, and wouldn't getting rid of them be a great place to start in reducing the federal deficit?

Couldn't even a looney tune like Newt Gingrich figure out such a simple premise?

So what governmental services are non-essential?

You've got your Washington tourist stops. They closed the Smithsonian during the budget crisis because there was no money to pay Smithsonian personnel.

Hasn't just about everybody seen all that stuff in the Smithsonian by now? We could box it up and store it someplace and if anybody wanted to look at it again, they would be welcome to, as long as they were willing to go through the boxes and pull it out themselves.

The Washington Monument was closed, too. Why do we need to staff that? Want to see the Washington Monument? There it is. Stare as long as you please.

Air traffic controllers, we probably ought to keep, since I fly a lot. But do we really need all those people in post offices?

I don't care how many people you have working in a post office, you're still going to have to stand in line forever, anyway. So why not have half as many loafers. Heck, why not do away with the post office, altogether, and Fed Ex it?

We could give the national parks back to the bears. They were there first anyway. If anybody wanted to camp out, they could find a Motel Six in some remote location and sleep on the floor.

Why doesn't Barbara Bush clean up behind that silly dog of hers herself so that the White House maid wouldn't have to come in but twice a week?

Want to look up something in the Library of Congress? They should have taught you the Dewey Decimal System in school. Look it up yourself and save the taxpayers some money.

Start talking non-essential and there's no end to it.

Do we really need a vice president with a big bucks salary and a lot of perks? If anything happens to the president, just call in Alexander ("I'm in charge here") Haig until we can think of something. He would work free as long as we allow him to carry a swagger stick.

Couldn't we combine some Cabinet posts? Couldn't the secretary of state also handle Interior? I ask you, was James Watt "essential"?

Why do we need Congress itself?

Let the governors get together once or twice a year and handle what would be a stripped-down, simplified, one-size-fits-all government.

You don't think this country couldn't get along without Newt Gingrich?

I think we've just solved a huge portion of the deficit problem here. Or, put it another way: Get a real job, Newt.

NATION IN BRIEF

High winds fan California fire

FONTANA, Calif. (AP) — A fierce wind early Sunday spread a 1,200-acre wildfire through parts of the San Bernardino National Forest, but firefighters began to gain on the blaze later in the day when the wind ebbed.

The fire, which began Saturday night, burned through brush and timber in the western part of the forest, said Hal Seyden of the U.S. Forest Service. The cause of the blaze, in an area ravaged by fire two years ago, was unknown.

Two firefighters suffered minor injuries and a house caught fire in the Simi Valley, Seyden said.

The blaze began in rugged Lytle Creek Canyon and burned up 5,000-foot San Sevine Ridge, he said.

Blustery Santa Ana winds up to 50 mph roared through the mountain canyons, pushing the fire through hundreds of acres overnight and grounding aircraft, forcing crews to chop fire lines by hand.

Farmers testing soil

LAS CRUCES (AP) — Farmers in the Hatch and Mesilla valleys of southern New Mexico are testing ways to keep fertilizer and pesticide residues from polluting ground water.

The five-year experiment in preserving water quality also might show if environmental protection can be cost effective.

The six farmers involved in the study tested their soil for moisture and other elements during the growing season using scientific measuring instruments.

Hector Mendoza, who farms near Garfield in Sierra County, said the first season's results were mixed. He said abundant rain raised concern about overwatering and reduced the need for irrigation this season.

"We got caught a few times after irrigating by heavy downpours," he said. "We had to dig trenches to get the water out."

House limits free mail

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Sunday to slap limits on how much mail each member can send constituents and to force them to disclose how much tax money each spends on postage.

Lawmakers also voted to cut a total of $76 million from the $2.2 billion spending bill that pays for the operations of Congress, including elimination of proposed increases in staff salary accounts.

The House gave final approval to the bill on a vote of 292 to 117, after adopting the mailing limits on a voice vote. The measure was sent to the Senate for its consideration.

With the popularity of Congress at a new low and elections just 16 days away, the gestures were seen as an effort to shoulder a share of the budget-cutting responsibility.

Their hypersensitivity about spending money on themselves even led members to spend a good part of the day debating whether to spend $500,000 on modular furniture and $350,000 to renovate the House beauty shop. The furniture was nixed, the beauty shop left in.

Big city crime climbs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violent crime soared 10 percent during the first half of the year as police in the nation's largest cities recorded a 20 percent increase in murders, the FBI reported Sunday.

Overall, the number of crimes reported to state and local police departments increased less than 1 percent during the first six months of the year over the same period last year, the FBI said.

But the bureau's Uniform Crime Index reported that violent crimes — murder, aggravated assault, rape and robbery — went up 10 percent during the period that ended June 30.

The jump in violent crimes was the largest since 1986, when it increased 12.1 percent over 1985.

Homecoming unruly

BROOKINGS, S.D. (AP) — An estimated 1,000 people roamed city streets and the South Dakota State University campus, setting bonfires and throwing rocks and bottles as a homecoming celebration got out of hand for a second night.

Police arrested about 50 people on charges ranging from aggravated assault and intentional damage to property to fleeing arrest and alcohol violations involving minors. They were being held Sunday in Brookings County Jail.

Asthma is the most common reason, of any chronic disease, to cause children to miss school and adults to miss work. It is also, the most cited reason for a child's inability to participate in sports and physical education classes. In the large majority of cases, this is unnecessary. Asthma can't be cured, but it almost always, can be well controlled.
Over 7% of the American population suffers from Asthma. The frequency of asthma in the population and the number of deaths caused by asthma is clearly increasing.
Asthma has become the most common reason for hospitalizations of American children. Based on recent United States statistics, 6.3 million school days are missed, per year, due to allergies and asthma.
Almost always, these problems can be prevented by using a comprehensive preventative medical approach. The importance of patient education and a close working relationship between the patient and the physician cannot be over emphasized.

WORLD in brief

Church leader lauds cut in Salvador aid

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A Roman Catholic Church leader Sunday praised U.S. lawmakers' decision to cut military aid to El Salvador, saying the reduction could help force both sides to end the country's civil war.

The action on a foreign aid bill "reflects the awareness that many things are not going well here and should change, so that the peace process can end this conflict and establish new bases for a society in which human dignity is genuinely respected," Auxiliary Bishop Gregorio Rosa Chavez said.

"Peace cannot be built with weapons," he told a news conference after the Sunday homily, which the influential Salvadoran church frequently uses as a platform to speak out against human rights abuses and put forth its vision of how to end the decade-old civil war.

The Senate Friday approved an amendment to halve the $85 million in military aid to El Salvador the U.S. had budgeted for the 1991 fiscal year. A similar version of the amendment was tacked onto a House version of the aid bill.

Malay coalition leading

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad's ruling coalition was swept back into power in weekend elections, defeating a loose grouping of opposition parties.

With all but one seat accounted for, Mahathir's National Front coalition had 127 seats in the 180-member lower house, to 48 for the combined opposition. Four seats went to independents.

"We are happy that the people have returned us to power with a more than two-thirds majority. This will enable us to give a strong, peaceful and stable government," said Mahathir, 64.

Buddhists end boycott

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Rebellious Buddhist monks Sunday ended a boycott on ministering to soldiers after government troops surrounded their monasteries. Defiant monks were also threatened with death.

Reports reaching the capital, Rangoon, from Mandalay, center of the defiance campaign, said the monks ended their boycott after troops ringed at least six major monasteries.

The monks' apparent capitulation also came as Burma's prime minister, Gen. Saw Maung, gave army commanders the power under martial law to bring monks before military tribunals for activities deemed disruptive to Buddhism, official Rangoon Radio said.

Sentences dispensed by such tribunals range from a minimum of three years in prison to a maximum of death.

Monks emerged at the forefront of anti-government protests during a 1988 pro-democracy uprising that the army crushed, killing thousands of people.

Aoun aide killed

BAABDA, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen burst into the home of a top supporter of Christian Gen. Michel Aoun Sunday and shot him, his wife and two sons to death, police said. Only an 11-month-old girl survived.

The daybreak massacre of Dany Chamoun and his family in their suburban Beirut apartment came a week after a Syrian and Lebanese government troops crushed Aoun's mutiny in Lebanon's Christian enclave.

Chamoun, a Maronite Catholic and the son of late President Camille Chamoun, was one of the most outspoken critics of President Elias Hrawi and Syria's military presence in Lebanon.

Russian groups unite against Communist Party

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — More than 30 Russian groups united Sunday to form the nation's largest political bloc opposing the Communist Party, and the new movement demanded that Kremlin leaders resign.

National legislators and key officials of the Russian republic attended the two-day founding conference of the Democratic Russia Movement, the broadest grouping yet to openly challenge President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

But the conference glossed over sharply divergent views among the republic's various groups, and gave them the right to pull out of the movement. The movement's chances of becoming a unified political force were uncertain.

Many small parties have been created since the Communist Party surrendered its constitutionally guaranteed monopoly on power last February. None, including the new bloc, have anywhere near the Communists' 18 million members. The new movement joined Christian Democrats with labor unions, scholars with peasants, and Red Army officers with disabled veterans. They united around a sweeping platform that called for Russian sovereignty as well as the resignation of Gorbachev and his prime minister, Nikolai Ryzhkov.

The platform underlined growing disenchantment with the Soviet leader.

The conference also formed a commission to organize "civil disobedience" if necessary. It was not clear under what conditions civil disobedience would be used.

It delegated another commission to find ways to create a market economy in Russia, the largest and most populous of the 15 Soviet republics.

A fledgling coalition between Gorbachev and Boris N. Yeltsin, the reformist president of the Russian republic, fell apart after the Soviet president balked at the radical economic program backed by Yeltsin.

"Gorbachev finally showed that he has moved to the right" by rejecting radical economic reforms last week, prominent legislator Yuri Boldyrev told the 1,272 delegates. They met in a central Moscow movie theater.

After his speech, delegates voted by a show of hands to approve a draft declaration forming the Democratic Russia Movement.

"The task of the movement is coordination of the activities for the unity of democratic forces ... to carry out the progressive, radical political and economic reforms in Russia," according to the draft, published Sunday by the independent Postfactum news agency.

The movement will be run by a 21-member Coordinating Council and will include a Council of Representatives and consultative body to make sure all members' views are heard, according to the declaration.

The draft also "guarantees the independence of every associated member ... in choosing his strategy and tactics."

The final version will be published next week in the movement's newspaper, said Oleg Rumyantsev, leader of the Social Democratic Party of Russia and member of the new Coordinating Council.

Following the vote, the celebratory air in the hall subsided and officials proposed several supplementary planks and dozens of minor resolutions.

Raymond Velarde, City of Midland sanitation operator.

DIRTY DEEDS DONE DIRT CHEAP

Raymond Velarde could wear a three-piece suit to work and not get it dirty.

Velarde's occupation involves driving a $75,000 vehicle from one end of Midland to another and mingling with thousands of people's daily business, so why shouldn't he dress up?

Velarde is not a tenacious salesman, nor is he an affluent physician making citywide house calls in a limousine. His job, however, is about as paramount to society as any other profession.

To most people, Velarde would be known as a garbage man, the epithet for what the city of Midland Sanitation Department calls a "sanitation operator."

But Midland sanitation operators don't fit the mold of the stereotypical can-slinging trash collector who walks down the street beside his noisy truck and keeps the neighborhood dogs barking for 30 minutes.

Velarde drives one of technology's latest contributions to the world of trash collecting.

Riding in an air-conditioned cab, he jockeys his truck up to a garbage bin, pulls a few levers and punches a few buttons. Like the front legs of a praying mantis, two mechanical arms extend from the truck's side and grapple the bin. The bin is lifted high in the air and tipped, emptying trash into the truck's rear.

From the bins to the landfill and back, Velarde never has to get out of the truck. Neither rain, nor snow, nor stench of rubbish can get to him.

A former carpenter who left school in the eighth-grade, Velarde, now 54, joined the city of Midland trash team 30 years ago, when sanitation operators were still "pitching cans."

"We don't get any exercise now," he quipped last week while on a collection route. "We're not even supposed to get out of the truck."

Also gone are the days of finding pearls in oyster beds of waste.

Velarde said trash collectors during the can-slinging era found numerous treasures in their work domain. It was not uncommon to find money, guns and even gold pieces mixed in with the garbage.

About the biggest dangers trash collectors face today is driving in traffic and facing juvenile delinquents, he said.

"Kids throw rocks at us," he said. "Sometimes they run up and hang from the truck while it's moving."

Riding in the truck, especially a full one, can be a jarring experience. The vehicle lurches back and forth and from side to side with every bump and pothole in the road.

Living on the $44 a week sanitation operators made when Velarde started driving can be financially dangerous, but their pay has improved substantially since then.

To make ends meet, Velarde once had to hold down a night custodian job. He has a wife, Sally, and 10 children who are grown and married.

Jack Burns, assistant public works director, said drivers today make a $1,550 monthly base salary.

The department has 32 drivers to handle 21 residential routs. Twenty years ago, when a crew of three or four trash collectors manned each truck, the department had twice as many employees, Burns said.

In addition to saving payroll money, he said the new trucks also have cut down on the number of worker compensation cases because the job involves less physical work.

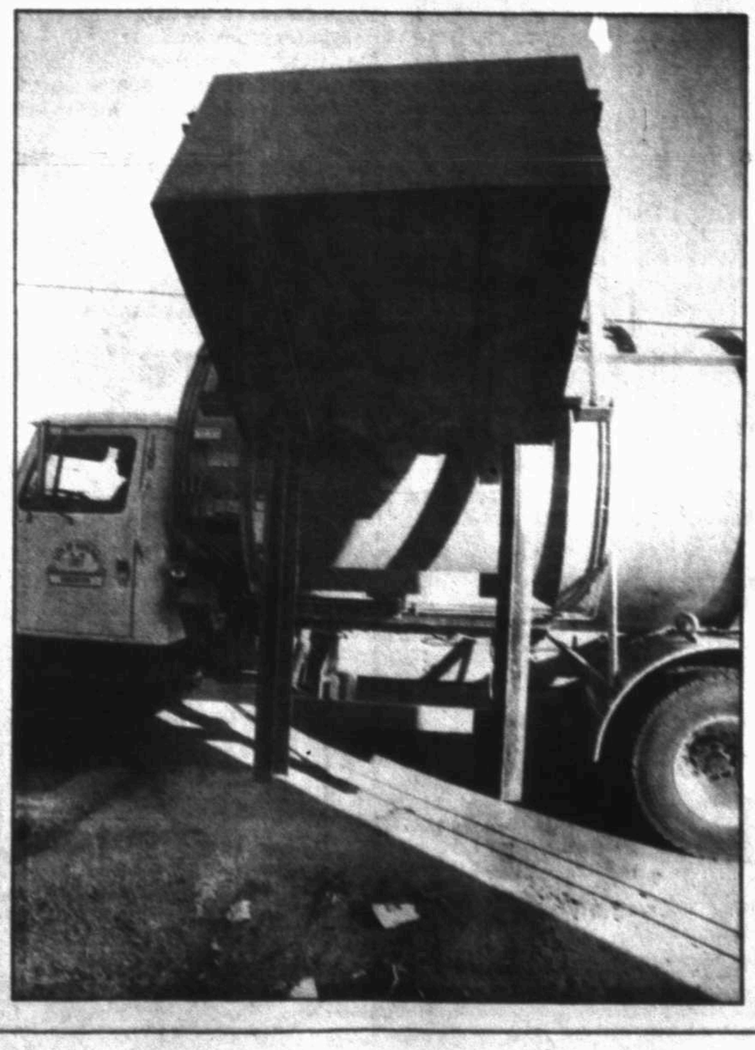

He said the department, which is self-sustained through collection and landfill dumping fees, is still working on replacing older trucks with ones with air conditioning.

"Some of the old salts don't use them (air conditioners) anyway," he said, adding that the department is trying to replace three trucks a year.

He said sanitation operators here netted about 65,000 tons of trash during the 1989-90 fiscal year.

Though collecting trash may not seem like a lucrative career to some, more than half of the drivers have been with the department more than 20 years, Burns said.

"Our employees in the sanitation division are dependable, long-term employees," he said. "Most of them stay and retire out of it."

Above, Velarde uses his mirror to watch a trash dumpster as its contents are emptied into his sanitation truck. Left, gone are the days when sanitation workers collected trash by hand. New automatic trucks make trash collection easier and faster. The new trucks, which use an automatic pick-up system, also eliminate the need for up to three sanitation workers per truck.

Rescuers find boy lost at Three Rivers

THREE RIVERS, N.M. (AP) — Search and rescue teams rescued a 7-year-old California boy Sunday after he became separated from his family while camping in the Three Rivers area north of Tularosa.

Earlier Sunday, crews rescued two boys from Lubbock, Texas, in a canyon northeast of Capitan.

In the latest rescue, Steven Cooper of El Cajon, Calif., near San Diego, was shortly after 3 p.m. about 45 minutes' hike from the Three Rivers base camp, state police dispatcher Martha Julian said.

"He's doing real well," said the boy's father, Jim Cooper. "He was real cold when they came in. His clothes were all cold because he went through the creek several times last night, so he was completely wet.

"He was heavy-sleeping when they found him," Cooper said. "He's seems perfectly normal, except he was cold and they were warming him up. They want to observe him tonight at the hospital."

Cooper added: "I'm really appreciative of all the people that came and helped out and all the effort that was put into it. I feel really good that he was found and that he's all right."

Julian said he would be checked at Gerald Champion Memorial Hospital in Alamogordo.

The boy was reported missing around 7:30 p.m. Saturday. He apparently was on a hike with family members when he became lost. Ms. Julian said he was last seen hiking up a trail.

The search area was about 20 miles north and 10 miles east of Tularosa in the Sacramento Mountains of south-central New Mexico.

Julian said about 40 people were involved in the search Sunday, including teams from Alamogordo, Otero County, Las Cruces and the state Game and Fish Department. Bloodhounds and three police helicopters also went out.

A separate search for two Boy Scouts reported missing Saturday afternoon ended successfully Sunday morning when the boys were found at about 5 a.m.

Renaissance Festival offers old fun for modern visitors

PLANTERSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Four courageous knights sit atop their trusty steeds, preparing to joust. A pretty peasant girl, plucked from the village, is the chosen prize and the young warriors seem eager to win her. As the green and red knights take their positions before the royal podium, the helmeted red knight rides up to the audience of commoners.

"You left the lens cap on," he taunts a portly gent squinting into an automatic-focusing camera.

The Texas Renaissance Festival is 237 acres of 500-year-old fun, a place where Cockney accent and Texas drawl meet and meld.

The contrast of modern and ancient is striking. Reeboks tread on cobblestone walks, paper cups meet pewter goblets in toasts to the king, and Houstonians wear Astros caps while Renaissance men don plumed tams.

Transcending centuries is the ever-present flirting. Bawdy wenches with plunging necklines call suggestively to red-faced visitors while courtly gentlemen woo female guests with caressing accents and sonnets: "Shall I compare thee to a summer's day ..."

Even the food is a mix of old and new: ale and turkey legs are sold next to booths offering margaritas or Cajun gumbo.

The permanent staff of 16 calls the immense medieval playground a theme park. Most of the structures are permanent, like thatched-roof cottages with carved wooden signs advertising wares for sale and a false-front castle with turrets and stained-glass windows. About 2,000 actors, food vendors and artisans complete the staff of the seven-week-end yearly ritual.

Falconer John Karger of San Antonio, one of those 2,000, weaves the past and present in his presentation. "Falconry is representative of a part of the Renaissance era," he said. "It was the king's sport and the birds were respected. Now we just mow over the earth and people think chicken hawks should be killed."

Karger is a member of Last Chance Forever, a non-profit organization providing for the care and release of birds of prey back to nature. Six birds recovering from injuries and hand-raising participate in his show. They will be released into the wild when they can take care of themselves.

One visitor, Bob Marshall of Kemah, also brought the past and present together in his own way. Dressed in a peasant shirt and hat, he drove a motorized rustic-looking cart through the park. Marshall said he sometimes has trouble walking long distances.

Scientific collar curbs dogs' bark

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — A high-tech dog collar invented by a Texas A&M scientist could silence chronic barkers with a high-frequency beep.

"It's not an electric shock collar. It will not hurt the dog," said Jon Hunter, 48, inventor of the collar and an associate professor of veterinary physiology and pharmacology at Texas A&M.

A miniature microphone set in the collar emits a burst of high-intensity, high-frequency sound whenever the dog barks, surprising the animal and causing it to stop prolonged howling. The sound is inaudible to most humans.

"It will not be so effective that it will stop dogs from barking completely," Hunter said. "Many people want their dogs to bark in order to warn them of intruders."

Hunter said he devised the collar after recalling his experience as an 11-year-old farm boy in northern Missouri.

"We were milking cows and a thunderstorm occurred," he said. "When the thunder occurred, the cattle and dogs would seek shelter.

"Later, in attempting to modify the behavior of animals, I thought of different sounds that would change an animal's behavior," he said.

During three years of research, Hunter tried electronic simulations of sounds like thunder, explosions and gunfire. He later decided the high-pitched sound that few humans could hear offered the best tool to stop dogs from barking.

Hunter said the collar is the "most humane solution" to barking — a malady sometimes treated with electric shock collars, vocal cord surgeries or by giving away or destroying the animal.

Major candidates receptive if citizens want state lottery

DALLAS (AP) — The state's next governor and lieutenant governor — regardless of who is elected — will not stand in the way if Texans want a state lottery.

Democrat Ann Richards and Republican Clayton Williams, both running for governor, said they would not second-guess the voters if they favor the lottery as a way to pay the state's bills.

Likewise, lieutenant governor candidates Bob Bullock, a Democrat, and Republican Rob Mosbacher also said they would not stand in the way of a lottery.

The candidates responded to a questionnaire published by The Dallas Morning News in Sunday's editions.

Richards, the state treasurer, said she supports the lottery and "would actively back legislation to have this issue placed before the voters as a constitutional amendment."

She said that revenue from the lottery should not be tied to "any specific areas, such as education, so that no state agency becomes dependent on that income."

"We do not want to (have) to tell our schoolchildren, 'The lottery only brought in half of what was expected, so we're going to cut back on your education,'" she said.

Williams said a lottery should be submitted to voters for approval.

"We should consider all possible sources of revenue for the state which do not increase taxes," he said. If voters want it, said Williams, a lottery "could be part of the answer for needed additional revenues."

Bullock and Mosbacher said they don't advocate a lottery but would not oppose one.

"I am personally not an advocate of the lottery," said Bullock, the state comptroller. But he added, "I wouldn't work against it ... I didn't question the people of Texas when they elected me (to the comptroller's office). I think we have a very informed electorate."

Mosbacher said he would not actively oppose a lottery. He cautioned, however, that it "is not a quick fix financially" for the state's economic stresses.

The lieutenant governor, who presides over the Senate and controls the flow of legislation in that chamber, would have a key role in a lottery proposal.

To set up a lottery, the Legislature would have to pass a constitutional amendment, which would need voter approval.

Local/Area Reports

House fire

Staff Reports

Midland firefighters responded to a house fire that sustained heavy damage Sunday afternoon.

No one was home when the fire broke out at 1503 W. Ohio Ave. about 3:55 p.m., officials report.

A neighbor, Larry Wollschlager, who called the fire department, said the fire appeared to have begun in the patio area in the back of the house. Wollschalager attempted to quell the blaze with a garden hose while awaiting the arrival of firefighters.

Susie Sanon, who resided at the home with her husband, Emmanuel, and four children, said the fire began while she was gone for about an hour. The Sanon's were renting the home, fire officials said.

The fire marshall's office confirmed that the fire began on the west side of the patio area. The cause of the fire was of an undetermined nature, officials said.

Shack burns

A wood shack on Rankin Highway that burned to the ground Sunday afternoon apparently caught fire from a cigarette, the owner said.

Firefighters responded to the fire at 3404 Rankin Highway about 3:30 p.m.

Dan Crocker, owner of the storage shack which was located behind a former auto salvage business, said he noticed the shack in flames from his home next door. He said he had been in the shack earlier and believed the fire ignited from a cigarette and trash.

Crocker said he unsuccessfully attempted to fight the fire with a garden hose before firefighters arrived.

No monetary loss was incurred as a result, Crocker said.

Playhouse fire

Firefighters doused a fire that burned a playhouse and fence behind a home at 2608 Hughes St. Saturday evening, officials said.

The cause of the fire was ruled undermined but there was the possibility that a child playing with a lighter may have been the cause, fire officials said.

One fireman was injured as firefighters left the scene, officials reported. Don Turnbow was treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital after he hit his head on a fire truck.

Fatality

ODESSA — A car accident at the Penwell Raceway in Ector County killed a 46-year-old Pecos man Sunday, Medical Center Hospital officials said.

The name of the victim had not been released pending notification of next of kin late Sunday night.

Ector County Sheriff's Officers responded about 5:15 p.m. to the raceway to escort the ambulance carrying the accident victim.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle outfits popular for Halloween

DALLAS (AP) — Costume shop managers here say they're "shell shocked" by the new set of heroes that have become this year's Halloween craze.

To the surprise of few living in the 20th century, the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles have replaced Freddie Krueger and Batman as 1990's Halloween costume of choice among children and adults.

"The turtles are hot," says Jerry Moore, retail sales manager for a Dallas costume store. "One of the biggest requests we are getting is for the Ninja Turtles, followed by the Simpsons."

The pizza-eating shell-kickers have gotten so hot, that Moore says he typically fields 20 to 30 calls each day from people requesting the turtles.

Authorized versions of the costumes carry a retail price of $38.95.

"There's only one company that's licensed through the copyright owners to sell the costumes. They're in a little town called Collegeville, Pa. — and they're sold out. They have back orders to November," Moore says. "I know there's already a black market for Ninja Turtle costumes."

Customers have become so enchanted by the turtles, that apparently money is no longer an object.

Johnny Trevino, who helps manage a costume store which he calls the Neiman-Marcus of costume shops, has high quality outfits similar to the copyrighted costume. But Trevino's costumes sell for $1,000 and may be rented for $100.

Clients don't mind shelling out the big bucks for the Costume World costumes, Trevino says.

The turtle attire comes with a hard-shell back made of hard plastic, heavy-duty cotton long johns and colored arm and knee bands.

Magicland owner Howard Hale says Halloween costumes usually reflect the latest popular movies or television shows.

"Last year it was Batman," he says of the most popular Halloween costume in 1989. But Hale also says the turtles have even wider appeal because there are four of them.

Experts say flag incident shows youths not informed

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A racially charged confrontation sparked by displays of the Confederate battle flag at a high school here illustrates how insensitive youths are to minority concerns, some experts say.

Many students apparently don't know or have forgotten the racist symbolism attached to the Rebel flag. Experts say many white youths see themselves as victims of busing programs and affirmative action.

"Part of it is that there is a lack of history, of knowing about the civil rights era and the struggles this country went through in the late 1950s and the 1960s," said Mark Briskman, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in Dallas.

"To these kids, that is ancient history."

The Rebel flag made a turbulent return to Southwest High School last week despite being banned by the Fort Worth school district four years ago.

Four students who said they were trying to inspire school spirit were sent home Wednesday for wearing T-shirts featuring the flag.

But a football pep rally Friday turned violent when someone slipped a makeshift Confederate flag into an overhead projection that was lowered during the rally.

That ignited a melee between at least 300 black and white students who shouted racial epithets and became involved in a series of scuffles.

On Saturday, two teen-agers were arrested outside a grocery store that had been ransacked. A Rebel flag, racial slurs, and the phrase "Southwest rules" had been scratched into a desk at the store.

"I think young people in general have a lower tolerance for issues that are racially sensitive," said Sara Bullard, research director for Klanwatch.

Halloween's now a home holiday

Ghosts, goblins spook costume parties intead of trick or treating

NEW YORK (AP) — Time was when Halloween in America was kids' night — an excuse to raid the dress-up box and mother's make-up drawer; to roam the neighborhood in search of popcorn balls and candy apples, homemade cookies and fresh-pressed cider; maybe to play a little trick on the grouch next door. To stay up late.

But those were gentler times, when people weren't afraid to walk the streets after dark or open their doors to strangers, when there were no razor blades in apples, and cult worshipers were only the stuff of story books.

Today, Halloween is most likely celebrated at home — with a party and with grownups as much in disguise as the little ones.

"While trick or treating is declining, the amount of party going is increasing rapidly, and with it a rise in sales of decorations and party goods," says Stacy Botwinick, associate managing editor of Playthings, a magazine for the toy industry.

Sales of greeting cards are up, too. The Greeting Card Association predicts some 28 million cards will be sent this Halloween. Even boutique card companies, which limit their production to truly special occasions, are getting into the spirit.

Barbara Miller, a spokeman for Hallmark Cards Inc., predicts that some 50 million Americans will spend some $400 million on costumes and party goods — including goodie bags, but not the goodies.

"Where Halloween decorations used to just mean paper plates, napkins and crepe paper ...," she told Gift Reporter, a trade magazine, "it's become like a mini-Christmas."

There's a myriad of decorations for indoors and out: Ceramic pumpkins and candlesticks and tarantula napkin rings to help create a festive dinner table, giant pumpkin-print plastic bags to be stuffed with autumn leaves and left on the lawn, ornamental lights to string around the front door.

While Freddy Kruger's glove is out there, along with some pretty gruesome rubber masks, this year's costumes generally are more fun than frightening.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles are expected to be a favorite in both the ready-made and sewn-at-home categories. For those who don't have a fedora and trench coat hanging around the house, there's Dick Tracy in a package, complete with mask.

Other licensed character costumes available at retail are The Simpsons, The Flintstones, The Jetsons, Al and Peg Bundy — from TV's "Married with Children" — and, of course, a host of Disney characters.

For those who are undecided about what they want to be, one company is making double-sided capes — a rags-to-riches Cinderella, a bat that becomes a vampire, frog that turns into a prince and a Red Riding Hood who becomes a wolf.

Among new creations for home sewers is Butterick's Miss America Collection, giving every little girl a chance to fulfill her fantasy of being a beauty queen. Among favorite patterns from Simplicity is Mario, as in Super Mario Brothers of Nintendo game fame.

No matter what you wear or where you go, all Halloweeners should be able to travel safely, assured they won't trip over too-long garments or have their vision limited by ill-fitting masks.

It's also a good idea to add reflective tape to dark costumes. Since many of the materials used for costumes might not be flame retardant, take extra care around jack-o'-lanterns and candles.

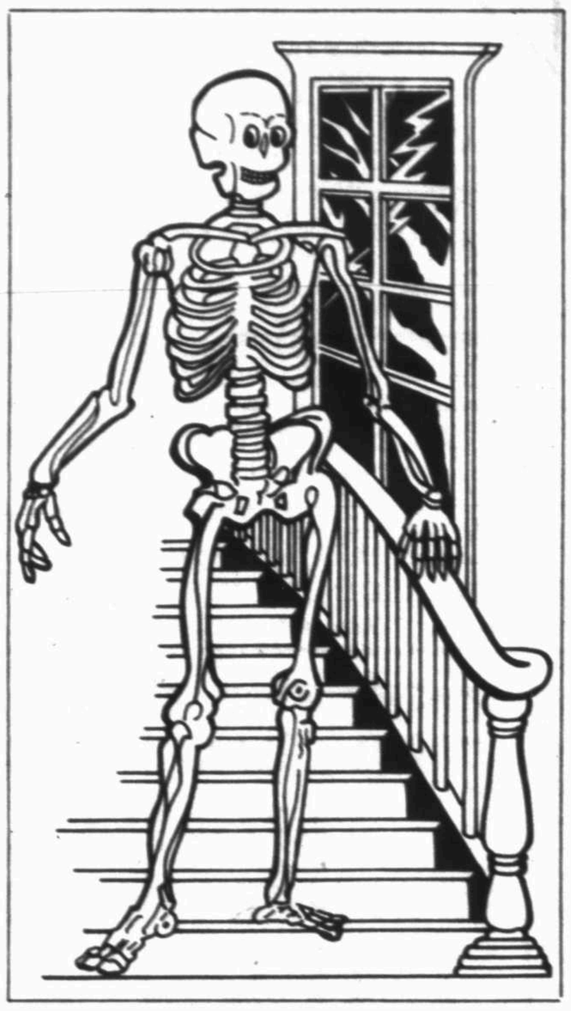

Dennis Passis, director of the National Halloween & Costume Show in Chicago, says what struck him among the 400 exhibitors at this year's show was the proliferation of face paint and makeup. Indeed, such a disguise is a lot more comfortable than a mask for an evening of merriment.

Costume shops treat adult customers to Halloween tricks

By Valli Herman
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Halloween is still a red-letter day on the calendar for most children. But an increasing number of adults also observe the holiday. In fact, it's the second most-popular adult holiday party occasion, according to research by the Hallmark card company. (New Year's Eve is the No. 1 holiday for grown-ups.)

Grown-ups aren't satisfied with a mere bag of peanut M&Ms and popcorn balls consumed while wearing a simple black mask. Parties are becoming more sophisticated. We of the age of consent don't seek thrills from sugar shock but from an all-out escape from the clenches of reality. The fastest path? The costume. In fact, this Halloween, one in four adults will dress up, according to Hallmark research.

'It's fantasy time, U.S.A. People are coming in here and they want to party. They want a sense of fantasy to take them away from it all.'

— Pat Burdy
owner of Somewhere in Time Costumes

SLIP INTO something comfortable, my dear, for a ride into another time or into an alter ego with a get-up appropriate only in the company of clowns, goblins and ghouls. Be good to yourself; go for the elaborate.

Sure, you could be a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle, Bart Simpson, or a witch like the other 227 million Americans. But why? The imagination is a terrible thing to waste.

A wave of creativity has arrived, possibly in response to the depressing news of sky-rocketing oil prices and plummeting stock values, say local costume shop operators. Their adult customers are ordering early and often.

"It's fantasy time, U.S.A.," said Pat Burdy, owner of Somewhere in Time Costumes in Pasadena. "People are coming in here and they want to party. They want a sense of fantasy to take them away from it all," she said.

So far, world events aren't bringing in customers clamoring to be Saddam Hussein, a Chinese revolutionary or a walking Berlin Wall. But that doesn't mean the traditional costumes aren't still in demand. You just have to settle on one.

The sheer volume of selection could be the most intimidating part of the costume process. In the San Fernando Valley alone, a costume shopper can select from the 80,000 costumes at the Glendale Costume Shop in Glendale, or the 2.5 million at the Western Costume Co. in North Hollywood, the world's largest costume house.

"To put it another way," said Paul Abramowitz, president of Western Costume, "we have 5½ linear miles of hanging costumes and another 5½ miles of boxed costumes. There are two costumes for every person in the state of Maine."

YOU DON'T have to rent an Eagle Scout troop to get through the Western Costume warehouse, just one of the company's trained costumers, who, for about $20 an hour, will take you through the cavern. Like all of life's pleasures, fantasy has a price. The minimum rental at Western Costume is $100. But, for the money, you could be wearing a dress designed for Natalie Wood or a Dracula cape made specifically for a movie.

If you venture onto the Pomona Freeway, you can find as much theatrical authenticity for less money. The 50,000 costumes at the Center Theatre Group Costume Shop rent for an average of $45 to $55. Not a bad deal considering that most of their stock was custom-made by experts for shows at the Ahmanson Theatre and the Los Angeles Music Center's Mark Taper Forum. You can be a Phantom of the Opera courtesy of the very people who costumed the L.A. production.

And the beauty of the CTG is the range of sizes it offers. Not all actors are professionally thin. "Actors come in all sizes. Our costumes come in all sizes," said L. Jane Reddell, promotion director for the CTG shop. It offers dresses made for the not-petite Jean Stapleton and a suit for the very tiny Herve Villechaize. It even rents the appropriate style of shoes for each outfit.

AS AT OTHER movie- or theater-oriented shops, the CTG Costume Shop offers one-of-a-kind ensembles in quality materials. You could be a cowboy in real leather chaps, a king in a fur cape worn by Charlton Heston, a '20s dandy in Christopher Reeve's "Summer and Smoke" suit, or the sexiest kind of wolf in Jeff Goldblum's Big Bad Wolf costume, designed for a "Faerie Tale Theatre" production. The CTG shop is especially well supplied with fantasy costumes from its many fairy-tale and Shakespearean productions.

"If you're done as a Cleopatra here, you're not going to see yourself at a party," said Reddell. "These are one of a kind."

As the Halloween holiday draws nearer, so does the flow of customers into the basement-level Glendale Costumes in downtown Glendale. Manager Randi Budlong has been outfitting adults and children alike in the traditional favorites — harem girls and guys, witches, devils, ghosts and goblins — along with the shop's collection of theatrical wear and a new shipment of authentic Austrian dirndl dresses.

AMONG THE 80,000 costumes in stock at the Glendale Costume Shop are pink panthers, pigs, reindeer and dinosaurs. If you can dream it, you can be it on Halloween in this town. And the costume shops just may be a step ahead of you. At Glendale, there's even a Snow White costume — for men.

DEAR ABBY

Simple precautions ensure a safely scary Halloween

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Don't tell me it's time to prepare for another Halloween again! Well, it is, which means it's time to remind you that:

Van Buren

- Somebody's child will be seriously injured or killed in a Halloween-related traffic accident.
- Somebody's child will be badly maimed or fatally burned due to a flammable costume.
- Somebody's child will become violently ill or die after eating poisoned candy or an apple containing a razor blade.
- Somebody's child will be coaxed into an automobile or lured into a secluded area and sexually assaulted.

To make sure that child isn't yours, here are some tips to ensure the safety of your children:

- Use flameproof costumes only. If costumes are made at home, treat the fabric with a flame-resistant solution.
- Because masks, floppy hats, wigs and veils often interfere with a child's vision, use makeup instead.
- Accessories such as swords, broomsticks, hatchets, wands, etc. should be made of cardboard rather than plastic, metal or wood. Sharp items are dangerous.
- Provide youngsters with flashlights to prevent falls on sidewalks or porch steps. (Positively no lighted candles should be carried!)
- Decorate your child's costume and trick-or-treat bag with reflective tape to make them highly visible to motorists.
- Remind children that they should never enter the home of a stranger or accept rides.
- Adults can help by keeping their yards well-lighted.
- Parents should check all "treats" before allowing children to eat them.
- Very young children should never be out after dark unless accompanied by an adult.

So, make it a safe Halloween, and come Thanksgiving, you'll have more to be thankful for.

DEAR ABBY: What do you give a 78-year-old woman who doesn't need anything and can buy anything she wants? The woman is our mother.

The occasion was her birthday, so all five daughters came home to Elgin, Ill., for the weekend to help Mom celebrate. We included her only sister and her grown granddaughter.

We all got into my station wagon and drove to Sears for a family photograph. Then we drove to Chicago where my father had his business 30 years ago. From there, we drove to our old home from which we moved in 1954.

We had dinner at the restaurant where my sister had worked 20 years ago. The next morning we all went out for a farewell breakfast and then went on our way. We made plans to get together again next year to visit the Swedish neighborhood in Chicago, since Mom's parents came over from Sweden about 90 years ago.

The memories of that weekend meant just as much to us five daughters as they did to Mom. And the memories will last much longer than any material gift we could have given her.

Just thought I'd like to share this with you because I'm ... GLAD WE DID IT.

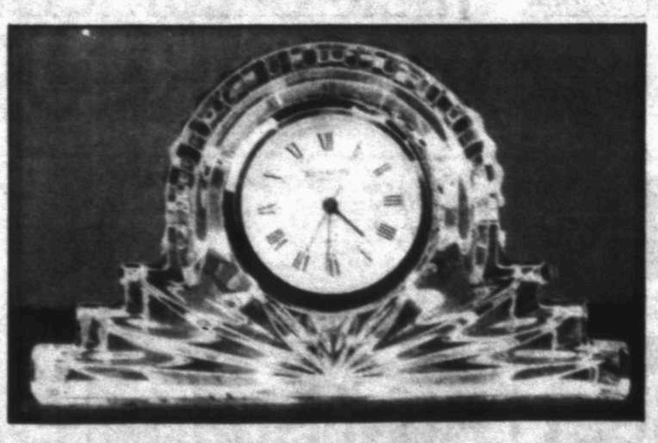

DEAR GLAD: I'm glad you shared it with me. A trip down memory lane is a wonderful gift for someone who has everything.

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Pokes keep Bucs at Bay

■ Dallas beat Tampa Bay for the second time in the last three weeks and upped their record to 3-4 with a 17-13 victory Sunday.

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Michael Irvin felt like himself again Sunday. More importantly for Dallas, he played like the big-play wide receiver the Cowboys expect him to be.

Irvin's 28-yard touchdown reception with 23 seconds remaining set off a wild end-zone celebration reminiscent of his college days at Miami and gave the Cowboys their second victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in three weeks.

Troy Aikman completed three of six passes for 60 yards and scrambled 20 yards to the Bucs' 28 to set up the winning points. Two weeks ago, he directed a 14-10 victory over Tampa Bay (4-3) but didn't think Dallas (3-4) earned the respect it deserved.

"All week long (the Bucs) were saying we were just lucky to win, and that they were a much better team," Aikman said. "They weren't giving us any credit, and that was on our minds."

Irvin missed the last 10 games of 1989 as well as the first four weeks of this season recovering from knee surgery. Until he caught a 14-yard pass to begin Dallas' decisive march, he didn't have a reception in 1990.

"To tell you the truth, there really wasn't any pressure on me," Irvin said. "It's a situation I enjoy being in. That's where I get my nickname 'The Playmaker.' It was just a chance to make a play.

"I just said, 'Get it to me, get it to me,' and he did," Irvin added. "Troy made a perfect pass."

The game-winning catch came only 1:33 after Steve Christie's 32-yard field goal appeared to thwart the Cowboys effort to overcome a 10-point halftime deficit and win in their first-ever appearance at Tampa Stadium.

Issiac Holt returned one of his two interceptions of Vinny Testaverde 64 yards for a touchdown, and Aikman's ability to remain calm under pressure on the last drive helped the Cowboys remain one of eight teams that have never lost to the Bucs in a regular season or playoff game.

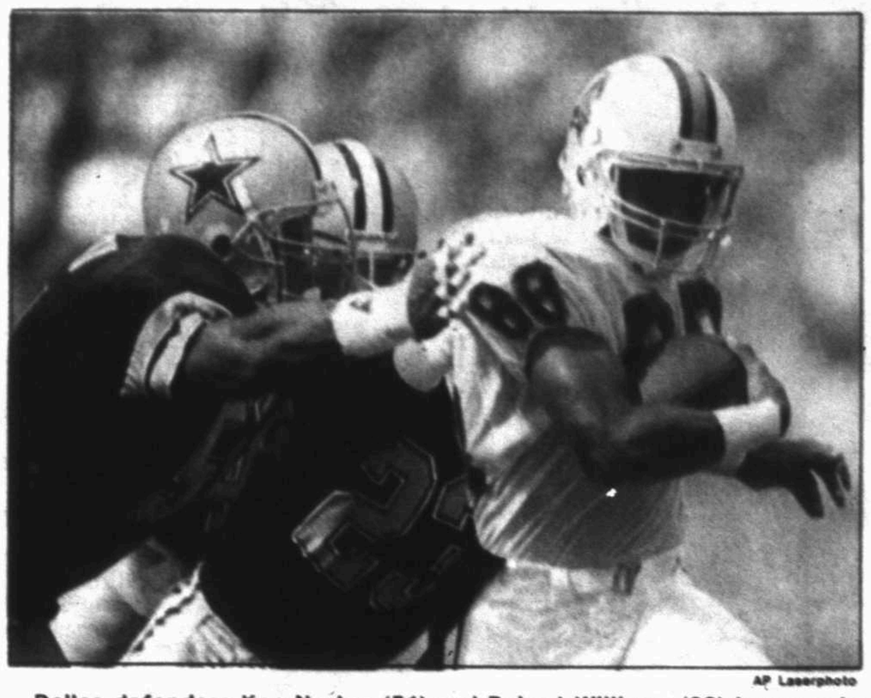

Aikman, who completed 13 of 29 passes for 159 yards, threw 14 yards to Irvin and 18 yards to Jay Novacek before his 20-yard run gave Dallas a first down at the 28 with 31 seconds to go.

After a timeout, Irvin ran past cornerback Rodney Rice to the left corner of the end zone, where he made his TD catch just beyond the reach of safety Mark Robinson. Several Cowboys joined him in a celebration that drew a penalty.

"This team has gone through some difficult times and we're trying to fight through it," said Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson, who watched his team generate only 100 yards total offense in a 20-3 loss to the Phoenix Cardinals last week.

"We had a very disappointing game a week ago," Johnson added, "and it's really good to see them bounce back the way they did."

No surgery

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Cincinnati Reds outfielder Eric Davis won't need surgery on the kidney he severely bruised during Game 4 of the World Series.

Davis will remain at Merritt Hospital for five to seven days, team spokesman Jim Ferguson said Sunday. The rest of the team was flying back to Cincinnati after sweeping the Oakland A's.

A battery of overnight tests, including a CAT scan, found no rupture of the kidney, so no surgery will be necessary, Ferguson said. Team physician, Dr. Michael Lawhon, visited Davis in the intensive care unit Sunday.

"A full recovery is expected," Ferguson said.

The left fielder hurt his ribs and right kidney Saturday night when he dove for a fading liner by Harold Baines in the first inning of the Reds' clinching 2-1 victory over the A's.

Irish rebound

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — The last three years, the winner of the Notre Dame-Miami game has gone on to win the national championship. Lou Holtz hopes the pattern continues.

After losing to Stanford two weeks ago, Notre Dame appeared to be out of the national title picture. But Saturday's 29-20 victory over second-ranked Miami put the No. 6 Irish back in the race.

Holtz, however, felt more like a survivor than a winner after his team improved to 5-1.

"It's not who can win the title, but who's left," the Irish coach said. "It's like getting up in the morning and reading the obituary column. You're happy if you're not in it."

Trivia Teaser

Monday's Question — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman passed for college and pro career highs in the same stadium. Where?

Sunday's Answer — The late Norm Van Brocklin threw for 554 yards for the Los Angeles Rams against the old New York Yankees in 1951. It's still the league record.

Oilers bedevil Saints

■ Houston's defense sacked New Orleans quarterback Steve Walsh four times, and the Oilers dealt the Saints a 23-10 loss Sunday.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers, presented with the mystery of Steve Walsh making his first start at quarterback for New Orleans, decided a relentless defensive charge would be the solution.

"The line kept constant pressure on him after that first drive and then he started to feel the pressure more," defensive end William Fuller said after Walsh was sacked four times, fumbled once and intercepted once in Houston's 23-10 victory Sunday.

"Steve had a good game," Saints coach Jim Mora said. 'It wasn't a perfect game by any means, but I'm encouraged by his performance. Houston has an outstanding defense."

Walsh said his short time with the Saints was a factor in his performance.

"I'm still not where I'd like to be, but I feel like I'm making progress. I've learned the system. I just need more experience with it."

He also noted that the Oilers' defensive players were talking a lot and it upset some of his rhythm.

"That hurt us on some of the snap counts," Walsh said. "The pressure was good. The only time they were able to get a lot of heat on me was on obvious passing situations late in the game.

"They get good pressure on the quarterback. They get in the passing lanes and give you a lot of trouble when you're trying to make some reads."

Berthe cards 2 Rolex wins

Staff Report

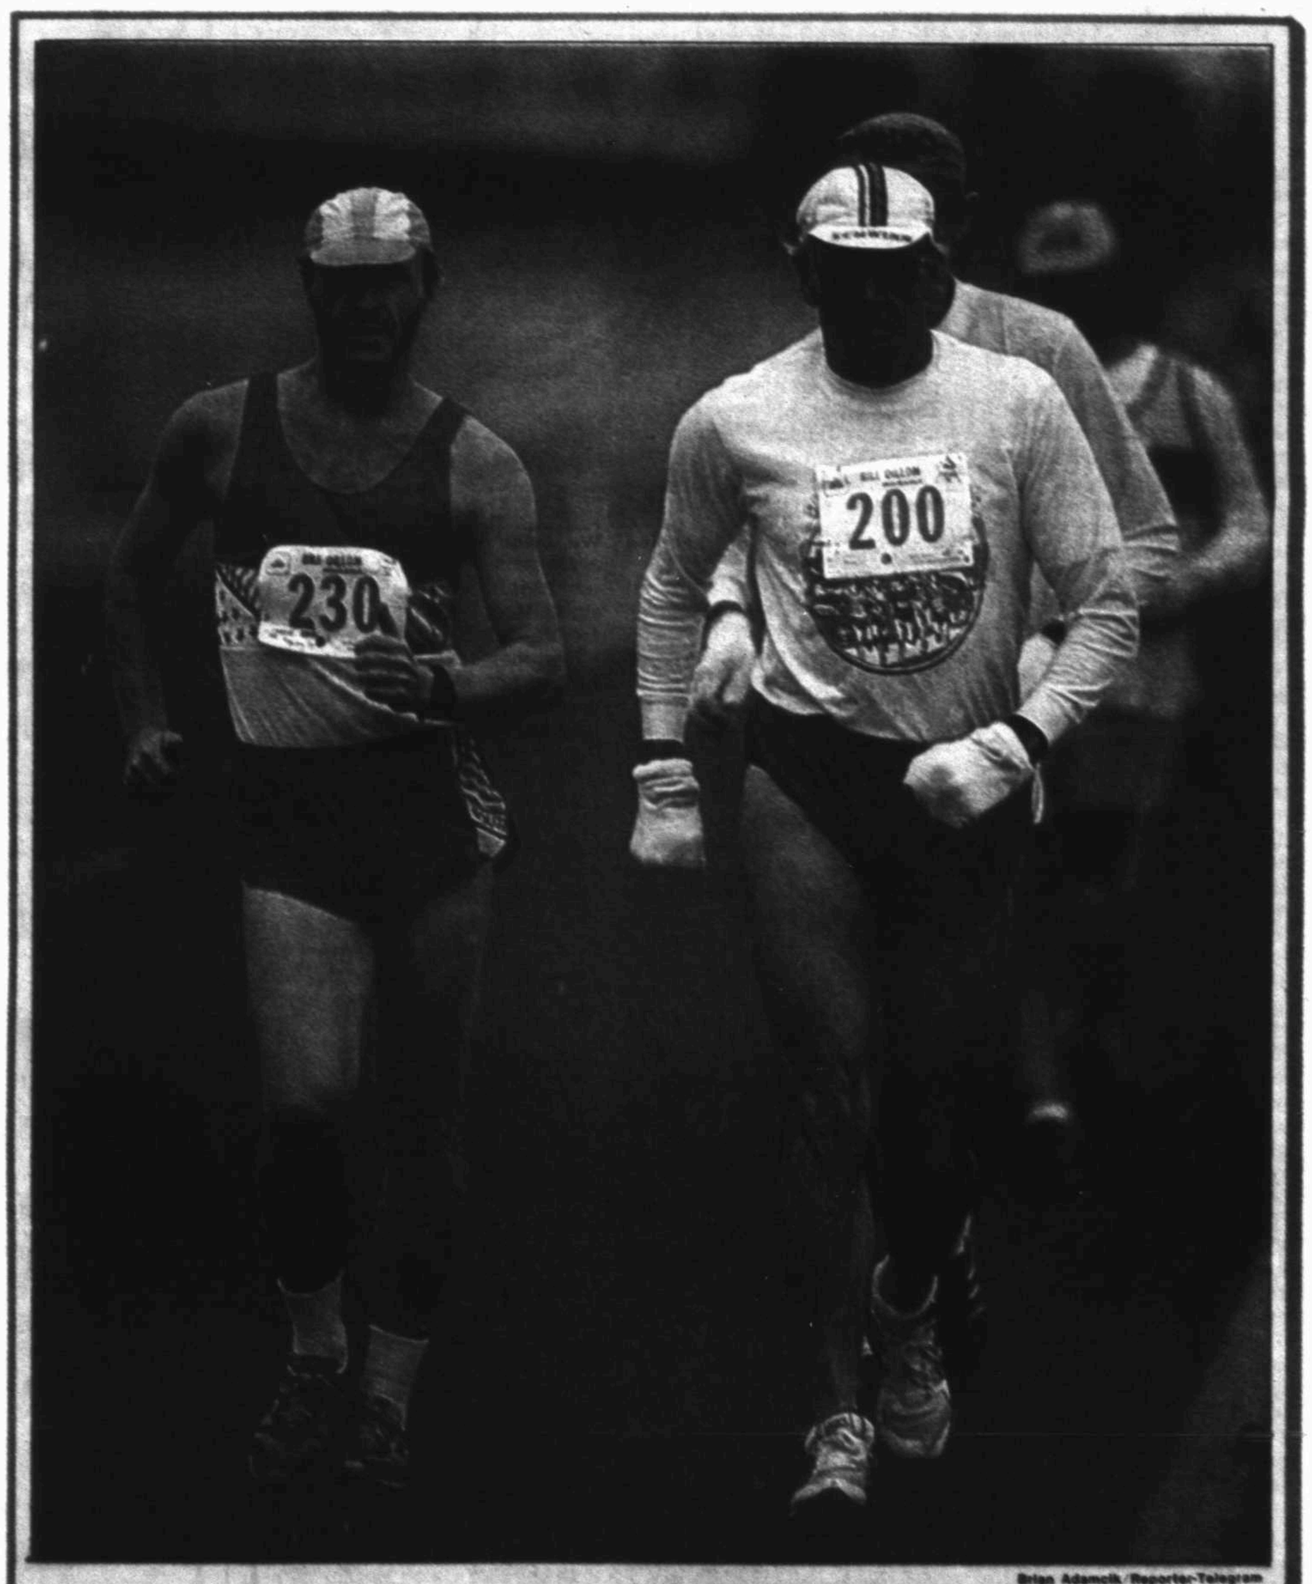

CORPUS CHRISTI — Midland College tennis standout Myriam Berthe became the overall small college champion in the Rolex ITCA National Small College Championships here Sunday.

Berthe, a freshman from Senegal, wiped out NAIA champion Sarah Castillejo of North Florida 6-3, 6-0 in the semifinals, before dumping NCAA Division III champ Shelly Keefer 6-4, 6-4 in the final.

Keefer had beaten NCAA Division II champ Patty Dixon in her semifinals.

Berthe receives an automatic berth in the National Division I tournament sponsored by Rolex in February.

It's the second straight time a MC woman has won the Rolex tourney. MC sophomore Janneke Garos won the same event as a freshman last season, but was defeated by Tyler's Susheel Gulati in the first round this year.

Smith hot in cool racewalk

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Andy Smith is at least a foot shorter than Norm Frable. In many sports, that would probably be to Smith's disadvantage.

But Sunday, Smith and Frable agreed that the former's lack of physical stature was a plus. Smith, a 41-year-old from Crownpoint, N.M., again got the better of hometown favorite Frable, 45, in the North American Masters 20-Kilometer Racewalk Championships on an unseasonably cool morning in north Midland.

Smith finished the eight-lap course in 1:47.39, while Frable clocked 1:50.54.

Another New Mexican, Mataji Graham of Albuquerque, won the women's division with a 1:58.34, and was fifth in the overall masters competition.

A couple of relative youngsters took overall 20K honors. U.S. Olympic Festival veteran Ian Whatley, 31, of Greenville, S.C. finished in 1:43.41, while Tori-Ivar Guttulsbrod of Houston finished abreast of Smith with an identical time of 1:47.39. Guttulsbrod, 26, was the youngest of the 62 competitors.

Larry Martinez of Albuquerque dominated the 5K walk with his 26:13 more than three minutes ahead of second-place Celeste Hamman's 29:30.

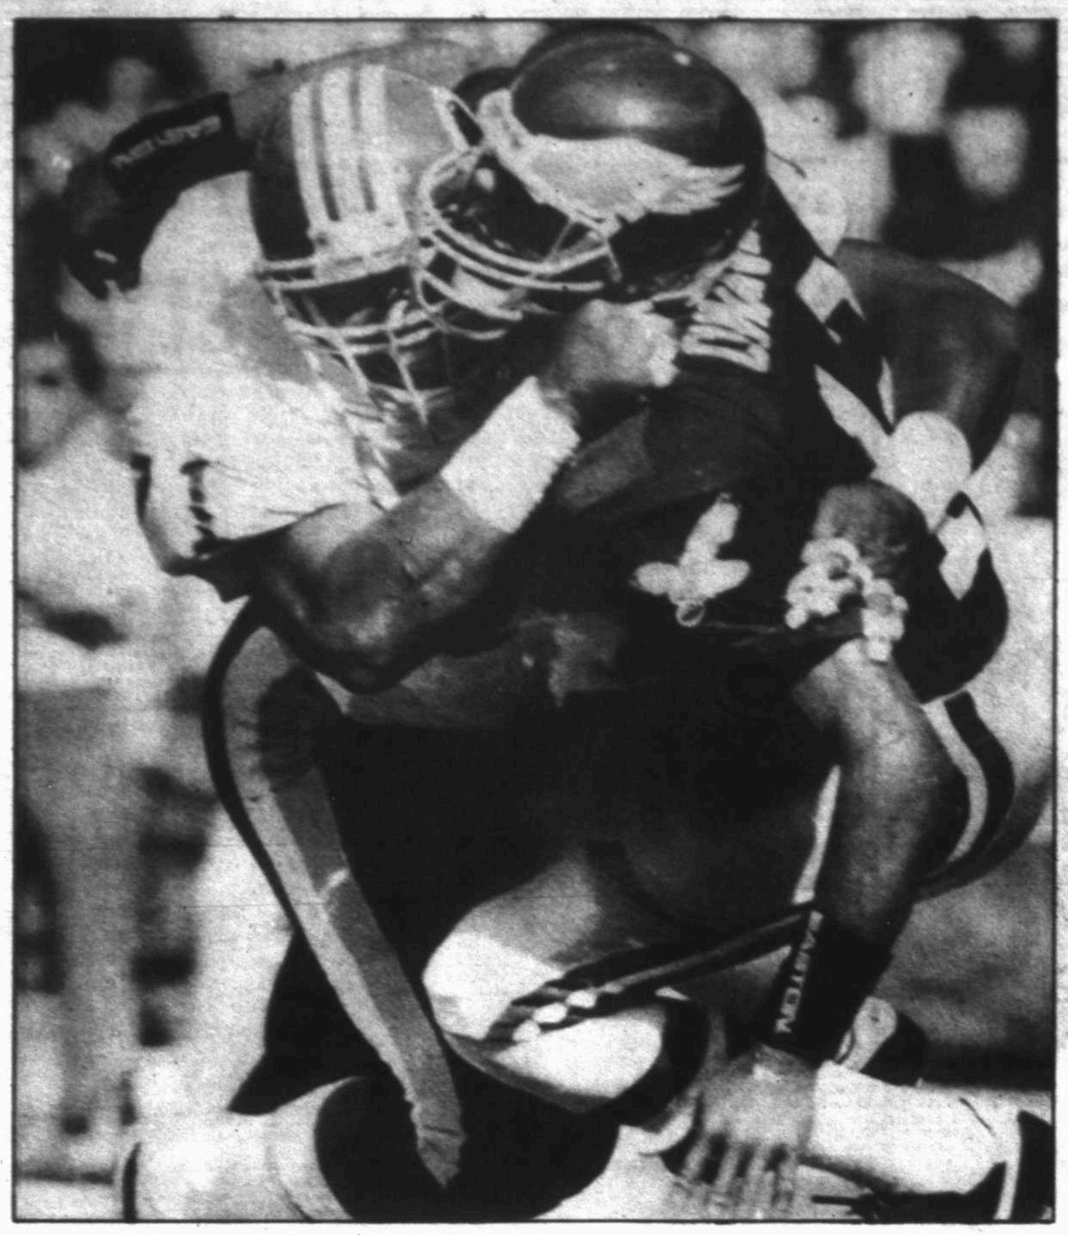

Smith and Frable walked together the first three laps on the 2½ mile course. But Smith chose the hardest part of the course to make his move.

The elfin New Mexican essentially won the race with a surge on a slight uphill straight into an unseasonably cool north wind.

"Even though it was probably the hardest part of the course, I felt like I might have an advantage because I'm shorter than Norm."

The 6-4 Frable still finished one second behind his person-

Washington defensive end Charles Mann (71) sacks Philadelphia quarterback Randall Cunningham in the first quarter of the Redskins' win over the Eagles Sunday.

Redskins poach Eagles

Associated Press

Stan Humphries' two long passes set up the winning touchdown as the Washington Redskins held off the Philadelphia Eagles 13-7 Sunday.

Humphries threw passes of 33 yards to Gary Clark and 44 yards to Art Monk before Gerald Riggs dived in from the 1 late in the first half as the Redskins (4-2) survived a battle of missed field goals.

Washington's Chip Lohmiller missed four field goals before connecting from 33 and 39 yards. Philadelphia's Roger Ruzek, who was playing with bruised ribs, hooked two kicks to the left.

The Eagles (2-4), who have not been shut out in 80 games, barely averted one this time. They scored on Randall Cunningham's 9-yard pass to Fred Barnett with 43 seconds left after driving 77 yards.

Coming in with the NFC's fourth-ranked offense, the Eagles had 270 total yards, 87 below their average.

Randall Cunningham, who threw a career-high five touchdown passes in a win in Washington last year, was 21 of 42 for 220 yards, was sacked five times for 44 yards in losses and fumbled once.

Both teams got nothing from long drives in the first half as Lohmiller was wide left on three attempts and Ruzek hooked a 28-yarder.

The Redskins got to the Eagles' 31 on their first two possessions before Lohmiller missed from 51 and 48 yards. He later missed from 41 and 50 yards.

Cunningham led one long drive in the first half, taking the Eagles from their 1 to the Washington 11 in 16 plays. But he failed on two passes in the end zone and Ruzek missed a field goal.

Broncos 27, Colts 17

John Elway passed for 307 yards and two touchdowns as the Denver Broncos, snapping their longest losing streak in seven years also spoiled Eric Dickerson's return to the Colts. David Treadwell's field goal, a 42-yarder with 3:45 to go, was his second of the game and ended a three-game slide for the Broncos (3-4). They added a clinching touchdown on a 4-yard run by Steve Sewell two minutes later.

Indianapolis (2-4) got 55 yards on nine carries by Dickerson, playing his first game of the season after missing six games while suspended during a contract dispute. But both Colts' touchdowns came on passes from Jack Trudeau, who had 312 yards.

Denver built a 17-3 lead on Elway's touchdown passes of 52 yards to Ricky Nattiel and five yards to Mark Jackson and a 39-yard field goal by Treadwell. Indianapolis got one touchdown back on a 1-yard pass to rookie Anthony Johnson late in the second quarter, then tied it on a 5-yard pass to Jessie Hester in the final period.

A sack of Elway put the Broncos at their 12-yard line on the next possession. But a 66-yard pass to Jackson and four straight runs by rookie Blake Ezor took Denver to the Indianapolis 10. An apparent touchdown run by Elway was called back on a holding penalty, and after another Denver penalty, Treadwell kicked his go-ahead field goal.

Rams 44, Falcons 24

Jim Everett threw for 302 yards and three touchdowns to give the Los Angeles Rams their first victory in more than a month, a romp over the Atlanta Falcons.

The only other victory by Los Angeles (2-4) this season was against Tampa Bay on Sept. 16. They then lost to Philadelphia, had a bye, and were beaten by Cincinnati and Chicago.

Los Angeles started against the Falcons (2-4) as it had in the losses to the Bengals and the Bears, falling behind early. Atlanta took a 10-0 first-quarter lead, but Everett and the Rams went on to score the next eight times they had the ball to turn the game into a rout.

Working against the NFL's worst pass defense, Everett completed 24 of 38 and was not intercepted.

49ers 27, Steelers 7

San Francisco took advantage of an inexplicable muff of a kickoff by Pittsburgh's Barry Foster to blow open a close game and run its record to 6-0 with a win over Pittsburgh.

Foster's mistake came late in the third period after Mike Cofer had kicked a 20-yard field goal to give the 49ers are a 13-7 lead.

On Cofer's kickoff, Foster, a rookie from Arkansas, started toward the ball, then wandered away, allowing San Francisco's Mike Wilson to grab the free ball at the 5. Three plays later, Tom Rathman took the ball in from the 1 to make it 20-7.

The win was the 14th straight over two seasons for the 49ers, who won this time as much with rushing and defense as with the arm of Joe Montana, who had his streak of 300-yard passing games stopped at four, one short of his own NFL record.

Seahawks 19, Chiefs 7

Norm Johnson kicked four field goals and Seattle's defense held Christian Okoye and Barry Word tightly in check as the Seahawks beat Kansas City in an error-filled game.

Dave Krieg was intercepted four times, but Seattle recovered three Kansas City fumbles. Rufus Porter sacked Steve DeBerg and recovered DeBerg's fumble on the Kansas City 11 to set up a 4-yard touchdown run by John L. Williams with 1:54 left.

The 260-pound Okoye, last year's NFL rushing champion, was held to 31 yards on 11 carries and the 240-pound Word, who set a Kansas City single-game rushing record with 200 yards last week, was limited to 35 yards on seven rushes.

Giants 20, Cardinals 19

Matt Bahr's 40-yard field goal on the final play capped a 10-point comeback in the final 3:21 and lifted New York to a victory over Phoenix, giving the undefeated Giants their best start in franchise history.

New York (6-0) looked like a beaten team after Al Del Greco kicked his fourth field goal, a 45-yarder, with 5:38 to play, putting Phoenix (2-4) ahead 19-10.

But Jeff Hostetler, subbing for the injured Phil Simms, drove New York 76 yards in eight plays, finishing the march with a 38-yard scoring pass to a diving Stephen Baker with 3:21 to play.

The Giants allowed the Cardinals one first down before getting the ball back with 58 seconds to play.

Raiders 24, Chargers 9

Bo Jackson ran for two touchdowns in his 1990 football debut and Jay Schroeder added a touchdown pass in the Los Angeles Raiders' victory over the San Diego Chargers.

The win lifted the AFC West-leading Raiders to 6-1 while San Diego, winless in its three home games, fell to 2-5. The Chargers were held without a touchdown for the first time this year.

Jackson, an outfielder with the Kansas City Royals, joined the Raiders this week. He had 53 yards on 12 carries while splitting time with Marcus Allen at tailback.

Jackson's second touchdown run, a seven-yarder, gave the Raiders a 17-6 lead with 5:08 gone in the third period.

On the third play of an eight-play, 68-yard march, Schroeder completed a 47-yard pass to Willie Gault to advance the Raiders to the San Diego 23. The Raiders then used five consecutive running plays to score, with Jackson's touchdown run around left end the longest in that series.

Bills 30, Jets 27

Jim Kelly threw four touchdown passes, including the winner to Jamie Mueller with 19 seconds left in the game, as the Buffalo Bills rallied for the third game in a row to beat the New York Jets.

Kelly, who completed 19 of 32 passes for 297 yards, found Mueller in the end zone for a 14-yard touchdown, completing a 71-yard, 11-play drive.

Kelly threw two touchdown passes to Andre Reed and a 60-yard bomb to James Lofton, while Scott Norwood kicked a 29-yard field goal, lifting the Bills to a 5-1 record. Norwood missed an extra point after the game-winning touchdown also hooked a 24-yard field goal attempt in the fourth quarter.

'Dawg Pound' poised to receive Cincinnati

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Sam Wyche doesn't live in Cleveland. He lives in Cincinnati. And he'll find out Monday night whether the people of Cleveland still remember the day last December when he used their city as a synonym for rowdiness.

"It's not just an in-state rivalry between two football teams. I think this one transcends that," Wyche said last week as he prepared his Bengals for the Browns in the Monday night game. "It's between two cities that compete just about every way you can compete within the state."

He insists he holds Cleveland fans in high regard, despite the disparaging way he spoke of them during the Bengals' game against Seattle last Dec. 10. When Cincinnatians began throwing snowballs at Seattle's players, Wyche grabbed a public address microphone and scolded them, "You don't live in Cleveland — you live in Cincinnati!"

It was an insult that Cleveland fans had coming. Some patrons of Cleveland's "Dawg Pound" bleachers had earned a nasty reputation by throwing eggs, batteries, dog biscuits and other objects at the Denver Broncos last October, forcing the referees to move the Broncos to the opposite end of the field.

Wyche, whose Bengals had won at Cleveland the week before the Seattle game, expects civilized treatment from Browns fans.

"Last year was the first time in six years that I wasn't hit with dog biscuits, chicken bones and double-A batteries there," he said. "Those things could have gone in somebody's eye and destroyed a career, or could have gone in a fan's eye and destroyed the sight of a fan. After six years of it, it is now over, I'm told, and that is good.

"My comment was very clear, that we didn't want to have anything thrown in our stadium, and the reputation that a few people in the Dawg Pound had created for the Cleveland Stadium was not something we wanted in Cincinnati."

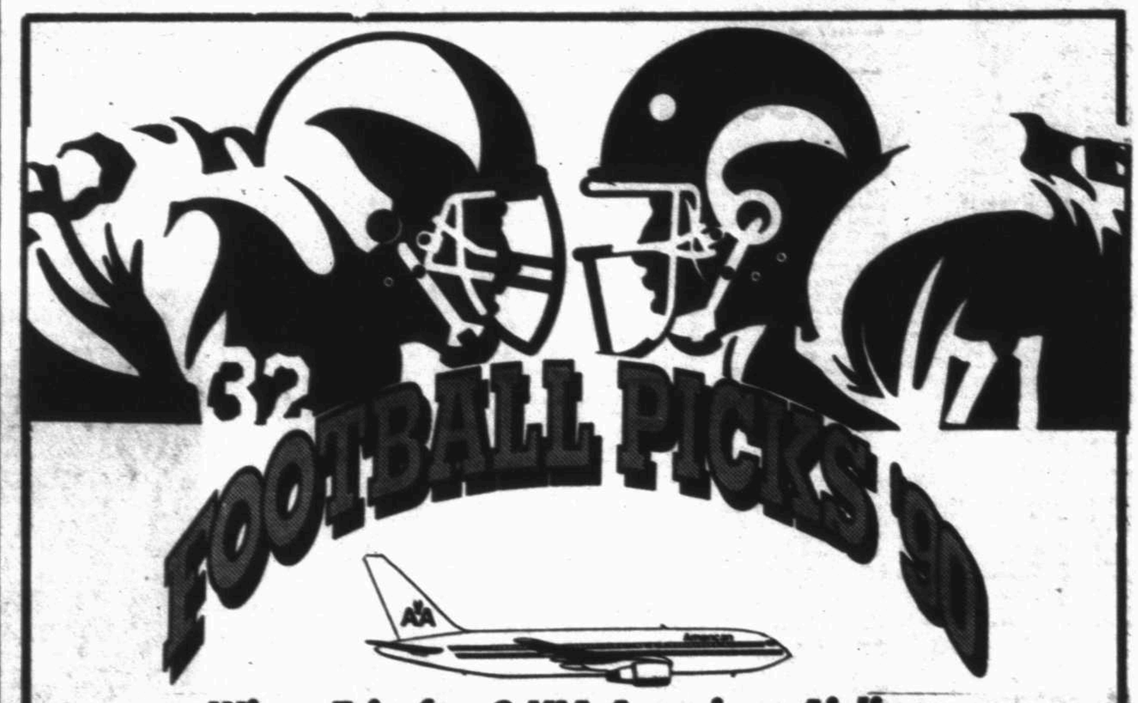

Wyche came to Cleveland this summer and spent an afternoon sitting in a carnival dunking booth, getting drenched for charity. Bernie Kosar took the first shot at him and dunked Wyche with his fifth pass at the target.

"I have water on the ear as a result, a slight head cold, to prove that I was dunked about 50 times to make sure that everybody up there understands the spirit of this game," Wyche said. "It's very competitive, but that's what it is, a game. There should not be any hatred between people or cities."

The outspoken Wyche created more controversy this year when he banned a female reporter from the Bengals' locker room following their game at Seattle on Oct. 1. He was fined about $30,000 by the NFL, and he has since devised a system using curtains to let his players shower and put on their pants in private before meeting with reporters, male and female alike, in the locker room.

The Browns, meanwhile, are off to their worst start since Kosar became their quarterback in 1985, and there's no way they can underestimate the importance of a game against the first-place Bengals.

A win puts Cleveland one game out of first. A loss drops it three games back and jeopardizes its chances of a sixth straight playoff season.

1972 — The Oakland A's won their first World Championship with a 3-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds in the seventh game. It was the first championship since 1930 for the franchise, when it was in Philadelphia.

1975 — A ninth-inning RBI single by Joe Morgan gave the Cincinnati Reds a 4-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox and the World Championship in seven games. It was the first title for the Reds in 35 years.

Testaverde completed 21 of 32 passes for 271 yards and one touchdown before leaving the game with a toe injury on the drive that produced Christie's field goal and a 13-10 lead with 1:56 left.

Chris Chandler set up the go-ahead points with a 23-yard completion on his first pass. The backup quarterback got one more chance to lead the offense, but Bill Bates' interception ended the Bucs hopes with six seconds to go.

The loss was particularly disappointing for Tampa Bay because the team is off to its best start since 1982 and could have moved within one game of first-place Chicago (5-1) in the NFC Central Division. It also continued a trend of two-game sweeps in the NFL this season.

In all nine of the two-game series concluded so far this year, the same team has won both times.

OILERS: White fumbles at one

From 1C

"Walsh will help them a lot once he learns their system," said Warren Moon, who completed 23 of 37 passes for 202 yards and one touchdown.

"This was a scratch-and-claw win and not very pretty. We just had to take what the defense gave us."

"I had a lot of fun out there. We were geared up," said Oilers defensive end Sean Jones, who had two of the sacks of Walsh. "It's one of those things that comes and goes in cycles. But as long as I'm confident I'm getting the job done and the line is putting constant pressure on, I'm happy."

Lorenzo White accounted for Houston's touchdowns, one on a run and the other on a pass from Moon.

The Oilers (4-3) spotted the Saints a 3-0 lead before reeling off 20 straight points. The loss snapped the (2-4) Saints' NFL record-tying streak of 13 consecutive victories against American Conference teams, dating back to 1986.

Walsh, acquired last month from the Dallas Cowboys for three high draft choices, completed 22 of 39 passes for 292 yards and one touchdown, a 31-yarder to Hoby Brenner with 12:53 remaining in the game.

White, whose fumble at the 1-yard line on the opening drive of the game cost the Oilers an almost certain touchdown, went in from the 1 with 8:53 left in the third quarter to put Houston ahead 17-3.

RACE: Graham comes back

From 1C

al 20K record, despite the adverse conditions.

"The weather did not cooperate," he said. Still, the mastermind of Midland's first-ever national walking event said he'd do it again.

"There's not that many masters races that people want to put on," he said.

Graham, for one, would come back. But she might return with more appropriate clothing in honor of the ever-changing West Texas climate.

"I thought I came prepared, but I didn't bring a hat," she said. "And the wind would come and go."

Graham finished about 2½ minutes ahead of Eliza Walbridge of Zuni, N.M. in the women's division, despite a self-admitted lack of intensity — even though she was competing close by several male walkers.

"A lot of women can challenge guys," she said. "But I had trouble getting in my concentration zone, because I didn't have any women to compete with."

Sunday's race earned high marks from Graham, who ought be a good judge.

"I travel almost every month, and this was one of the best organized races I've been to," she said. "The running and walking community here was very warm-hearted."

Graham conducted a pair of clinics Saturday that drew a combined total of 65 people.

For overall winner Whatley, the race was a lark.

A former college teammate of world-class runners Sebastian Coe and David Moorcroft in his native Britain, Whatley was en route to Brazil on business when he talked his employer, the Umbro sportswear company, to pay for a quick side trip to Midland.

"My company is very supportive of my training and racing," he said. Not only is Whatley the Director of Research, Design and Development for Umbro, but he is the 14th-ranked 50K walker in his adopted country.

Whatley took the cold matter-of-factly.

"You win a few, lose a few," he said. "It could have been 103 degrees and humid."

The oldest walker in the masters race was 73-year-old Don Johnson of Littlesilver, N.J., while Rose Kash, 69, of Manhattan Beach, Calif. was the oldest woman in the field.

Other local finishers in the masters race included Georgia Thomas, fourth woman and 12th overall in 2:05.22; Ken Carpenter, 24th overall in 2:24.18; and Lois Carpenter, 28th in 2:26.45.

Reds return home with championship

Eric Davis remains hospitalized in California with kidney bruises sustained Saturday

N.Y. Times News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Cincinnati Reds left California on Sunday with their championship and their new aura as a team of destiny, and with lingering resentment over the somewhat begrudging attitude of the Oakland Athletics, the team the Reds swept in the World Series.

But they also left without Eric Davis, their injured superstar, who remained in the intensive-care unit of Merritt Hospital with severe kidney bruises.

Davis was hurt Saturday night while trying to make a tumbling catch in left field in the first inning of the final game of the Series. He was undergoing X-rays and scans while his teammates were rallying in the eighth inning to defeat the Athletics, 2-1, and complete a four-game sweep of historic dimensions.

"The doctor said he lost a fair amount of blood out of his kidney," Lou Piniella, the Reds' manager, reported. "He was badly hurt. He would have missed the rest of the Series, anyway. They say he'll stay here three to five days."

It was an upset achieved by uncanny success in baseball fundamentals, and one that left some of the Athletics sounding like less than gracious losers.

The Reds went to great lengths to discount any notion that they had more or less pulled a neat trick in sweeping the favored A's, a team heralded as the best in the business in years.

They especially resented it when Dave Stewart of the A's, who pitched twice and lost twice, remarked afterward that the better team hadn't necessarily won, and added, "I believe we're more talented than the Cincinnati Reds."

"That's sour grapes," Piniella said. "Anybody who really believes that is thinking something weird. The best team won. I've been very gracious saying they're a great team. But we outplayed them in every aspect."

"They did a lot of hot-dogging," said Rob Dibble, the hardest-throwing Nasty Boy. "Sweep, sweep, sweep, that's all everybody was saying over there. They tried to show us up. That's why we don't mind sweeping them. They didn't give it up. We went out and beat them."

"We beat them fair and square," said Chris Sabo, echoing the party line. "We're No. 1 now. We're better than they are now."

Even the Athletics couldn't deny Cincinnati's impressive numbers, to wit:

—The Reds batted .317 as a team, 110 points higher than Oakland; outhit the Athletics, 45 to 28, and outscored them, 22 to 8.

—The Reds' pitchers finished with an earned run average of 1.70; the Athletics' pitchers finished at 3.82. The Reds struck out 28 batters; the A's, nine in four games.

—In the entire Series, the Reds allowed zero runs to the Athletics after the third inning. Jose Rijo, who pitched shutout ball for seven innings in the opening game, came back to pitch two-hit ball into the ninth inning of the fourth game, and allowed one run in 15 innings in both starts. He was duly named the most valuable player in the Series.

—The Cincinnati bullpen — notably Norm Charlton, Randy Myers and Dibble, the three flame throwers renowned as the Nasty Boys — got into all four games and allowed zero runs in 13 innings. The last bullpen to close a World Series without allowing a run was the Reds' bullpen in 1976, which zapped the New York Yankees for nine innings in a four-game sweep. In fact, the last run scored against any Cincinnati bullpen in a Series was the dramatic home run hit by Carlton Fisk of the Boston Red Sox in the 12th inning of the sixth game in 1975.

The Reds also executed the hit-and-run to perfection, bunted twice in the eighth inning of the final game with the Series on the line.

Trevino overtakes Hill

Senior Golf

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — Lee Trevino made five birdies over the final seven holes Sunday for a two-stroke victory over Mike Hill in the $500,000 Transamerica Senior Golf Championship.

Trevino's final-round 7-under-par 65 earned him $75,000. He finished the 54 holes on the 6,632-yard Silverado Country Club south course at 205, 11 under par.

"I felt pretty good today," Trevino said. "It seemed like I was striking the ball better on the practice tee than I had been the first two days."

Hill, who also shot 65 Sunday, had five birdies on his back nine and entered the clubhouse the leader at 9 under.

But Trevino birdied Nos. 14, 17 and 18 to win the tournament pulling away from the field. Trevino held at least a share of the lead throughout the final nine holes.

"I've always been a good front-runner," Trevino said. "I like to be in the lead. I don't really even think about it. When I get in the lead, I don't try to sit on it."

Trevino began the day tied for the lead with five other golfers at four under.

He has now won seven tournaments during his rookie season on the PGA Senior Tour.

With Trevino scheduled to play three more tournaments, he can easily become the senior circuit's first million-dollar man.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar finished mostly stronger in domestic trading Friday after weakening in Europe, but foreign exchange brokers said the U.S. currency remained wobbly because of American economic uncertainty.

Gold and silver prices rose.

"This is volatile stuff," said Lloyd G. Atkinson, chief economist for the Bank of Montreal, "and all indications are that this is going to continue for some time."

The dollar had fallen through a psychological barrier of 1.50 German marks to 1.4970 in New York Thursday, but it rebounded Friday, closing at 1.5025 marks.

In Tokyo, the dollar finished trading at 125.25 yen, up 0.85 yen.

In London, the cost for one British pound rose to $1.9590 from $1.9540 late Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday included: 1.2680 Swiss francs, up from 1.2590; 5.0295 French francs, up from 5.0165; 1,124.25 Italian lire, up from 1,122.00; 1.1731 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1698.

Gold closed at $372.80 on the New York Commodity Exchange, up from 370.10 Thursday.

Gold rose in London to a late bid price of $372.75 a troy dunce from $367.75 bid per ounce late Thursday. In Zurich, gold rose to a closing bid of $372.50 from $366.50 late Thursday. Earlier in Hong Kong, gold rose $6.00 to close at a bid $375.58.

On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $4.295 per troy ounce, up from $4.198 Thursday. Silver bullion rose in London to a late bid price of $4.28 a troy ounce from Thursday's $4.18.

Phone layoffs

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Southwestern Bell Corp. hopes to trim 1,600 management-level employees from its telephone subsidiary by the end of the year with a voluntary incentive program, company officials said Friday.

"That's kind of a target number. If it goes above or falls short then that's what we get. It's not locked in concrete," said Bob Dickemper, vice president of human resources for the company.

Changes in the way the company is run and improved technology have reduced the company's needs for managers, he said.

Oilman hopes U.S. learns from crisis

■ Robert O. Anderson, former chairman of Arco, said he hopes the U.S. will learn from the current Persian Gulf crisis.

Anderson

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Longtime oilman Robert O. Anderson said the United States is producing less than half the oil it uses, and that places it nowhere near its status of 50 years ago as the world's largest oil exporter.

"We need to wake up and face reality," Anderson said. "We are no longer the 'Imperial City' and the world doesn't necessarily march to Washington's tune."

He said the Middle East crisis should teach the United States a lesson about its role in the rapidly changing world economy.

"Out of this will hopefully come the recognition that we're no longer self-sufficient in energy," Anderson told the Western Association of Collegiate Schools' annual conference.

Anderson is former chairman and chief executive officer of Atlantic Richfield Co. and now heads Hondo Oil and Gas in Roswell.

He said America's economic status probably will be reflected in a coming recession.

"I think it (the recession) is going to be a long one and a much deeper one than you hear on TV or from the White House," he said. "I'm not optimistic. I think it will last a couple of years."

Anderson said oil prices probably have peaked unless war breaks out in the Middle East. He predicted the cost of a barrel of oil gradually will drop to about $25 and said that prices, along with Washington's adversarial attitude toward business, will keep domestic oil production in check.

"I'd rather do business with any other government in the world than with Washington," he said.

The Middle East crisis could be the jolt the United States needs to force it into developing sound energy practices, he said.

"What's happening in the Middle East today may be the best thing that could have happened," Anderson said. "Not in the way it happened, but inevitably it had to happen."

Anderson said oil production could increase with the aid of drilling incentives and a depletion allowance like those for gravel, coal and copper.

The United States inevitably will be forced to review its energy policies and develop alternative sources of energy, he said. Nuclear energy probably will occupy a big part of the nation's energy future, he said.

"It's the curse of the oil industry," Anderson said. "Ten million barrels a day of oil have already been replaced by nuclear power. But it's the answer to the Persian Gulf."

In September, the American Petroleum Institute reported imports at 8,878,000 barrels per day. This was 49.6 percent of total U.S. consumption.

Of that amount, Persian Gulf crude represented 23.5 percent of total U.S. petroleum imports. About 10,000 barrels daily of Persian Gulf crude passed through the Straits of Hormuz.

Saudi Arabia accounts for about 12.3 percent of total U.S. imports or 6.6 percent of total U.S. production. Persian Gulf countries normally account for almost 25 percent of U.S. imports.

Birds killed in study of Valdez spill losses

■ Over 200 seabirds were killed this summer by researchers seeking evidence in the government's case against Exxon in the Valdez spill.

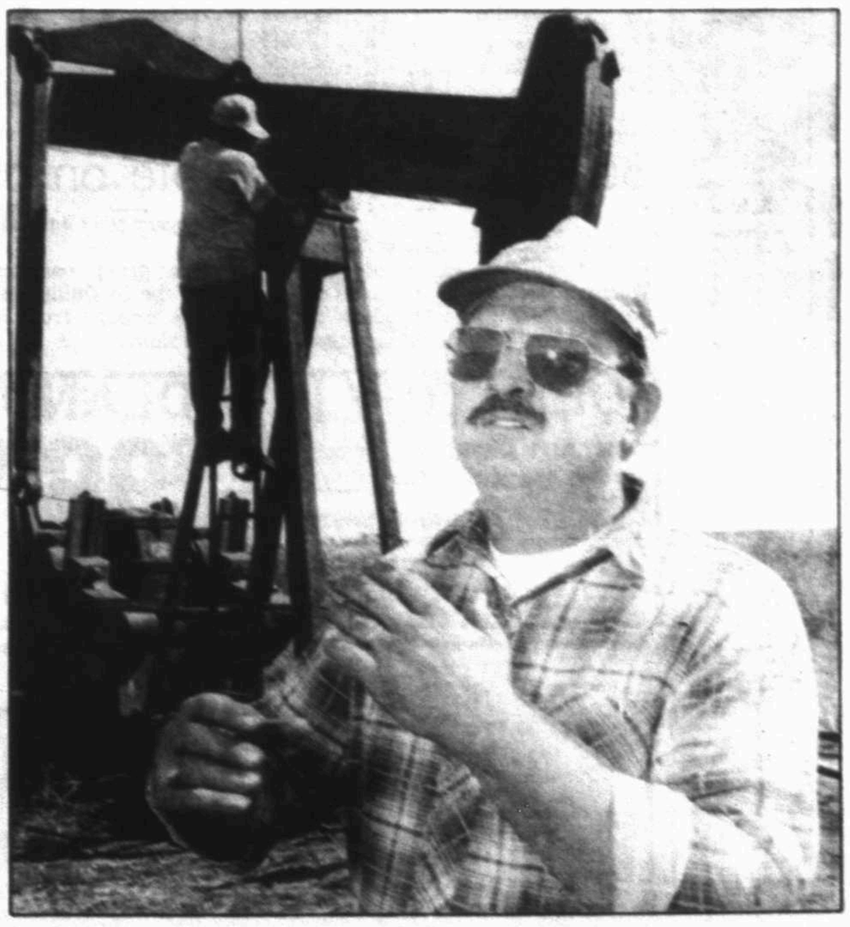

N.Y. Times News Service

More than 200 wild seabirds were deliberately killed this summer, mostly in national wildlife refuges, by researchers seeking evidence in the government's case against the Exxon Corp. in last year's Alaska oil spill, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service said Friday.

In total, the dead birds equal about 30 percent of the 797 that the Fish and Wildlife Service says were retrieved, cleaned and freed in a rescue effort after the spill.

Researchers "went out in a rubber raft into the seabird colonies and shot the birds," said Bruce Batten, a spokesman for the Fish and Wildlife Service in Cecil A. Anderson, 78, had to come out of retirement and go to work on farms after he lost his money in the failure of the uninsured Leroy Bank.

Leroy Bank depositors manage to struggle on

■ Three years after the uninsured Leroy Bank failed, the more than 400 depositors have managed to carry on.

Associated Press

LEROY, Texas — Cecil A. Anderson lost $40,000 when the private, uninsured Leroy Bank failed three years ago.

As a result, he was forced to go back to work at age 75.

"When the bank was closed, all I had was $45 in my pocket," Anderson told the Waco Tribune-Herald in Sunday's editions.

For a while, he read water meters for the Birome Water Corp. "I had to quit that," he said. "That's a young man's job." Now he drives tractors and combines.

Anderson is one of the luckier ones among the more than 400 people who lost their deposits in the failed bank. Thirteen depositors have died since the "Curse of the Leroy Bank" threw them into dire financial straits.

Of the 1,181 banks that have failed nationally since 1980, only the Leroy Bank depositors lost every cent when it closed Aug. 7, 1987. The depositors found out the hard way that the bank was uninsured and unregulated by the federal government.

"The Leroy depositors are the only depositors I'm aware of who have lost their deposits during the financial turmoil," said Kent Gilbreath, associate dean of the Baylor business school and a former director of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank.

Times have been difficult for those who lost their savings. But the survivors press on.

One 73-year-old depositor, who asked not to be identified, said she had sold two businesses and deposited the money less than 24 hours before the Leroy Bank closed. She had planned to build a house and live on the proceeds.

Instead, she lives on $300 a month from Social Security in a house in need of repairs.

Changing programs while spreadsheet prints

By Dennis Sever

Sever

Q. I know that there is a way for me to be able to print a spreadsheet and then while that is happening I should be able to leave the spreadsheet program and go into a word-processor or other program and work while the spreadsheet keeps printing. How can I do that?

A. Depending on your software there are three ways to do it.

First, some spreadsheets have a print option called something like "BACKGROUND PRINTING". If your spreadsheet has this option, then you just need to select it prior to printing a spreadsheet.

If your spreadsheet does not have this capability then it will hopefully provide an option for printing to a file rather than the printer. If this is possible you can choose this option prior to printing your spreadsheet, then print to a disk file (which is very much faster than printing to a printer.)

You may then exit the spreadsheet program, print the file using DOS's PRINT program, and startup a new application.

Another alternative is to find Print Spooler software. There are several available and some are in the Public Domain and can be downloaded from local bulletin boards or purchased at some of the local computer vendors' stores for about five dollars per disk.

A final alternative that you might consider if your computer memory is limited or if your computer is of the XT class or older (you must recognize that all these before mentioned methods may slow your other processes) is that of a hardware solution.

You might install a printer buffer with sufficient memory for your largest expected spreadsheet between your computer and your printer. This will allow a printing process to be completed by the computer much faster than even printing to a disk file.

I have found printer buffers to be a real time saver in several instances and not just for large files. If you print any graphs on a dot matrix printer or a plotter it can be very slow for even a small graph. A printer buffer really frees up time with graphics.

Printer buffers are available starting at about one hundred dollars for one with 32 Kilobytes of memory and can cost over four hundred dollars for one with with two Megabytes of memory.

Q. What do people mean when they use asynchronous communications?

A. We have essentially two methods of communicating between computers, and between computers and other devices.

These methods are synchronous and asynchronous.

Asynchronous communications involves some feedback from the receiver. In most asynchronous instances the sender sends a special signal to advise the receiver that a message is coming. Then the message is sent, followed by another special signal to advise the receiver that the message is over. A message may be any amount of data from 1 byte up.

Sometimes the receiver will find it necessary to send a message to the sender advising it to stop sending until further notice (this happens when a buffer fills or the receiving process must be interrupted because of some other event). This start-stop capability is called flow control and is widely used by printers and modems and such devices.

Synchronous communications involve to devices that communicate a set packet length or a carefully designed packet that has to synchronized by special clocks in both devices. Synchronous communications is generally much faster than asynchronous, but it is also much more expensive.

Texas Instruments posts quarterly loss

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Texas Instruments Inc., one of the nation's largest makers of computer memory chips, said Friday that it lost $7 million in the third quarter, compared with a profit of $65 million, or 67 cents a share, in the period a year ago. Revenue rose 7 percent, to $1.68 billion from $1.57 billion.

Falling memory chip prices, rising spending on new technology and chip plants as well as a temporary shutdown of its Philippine chip-making plant after an earthquake in July contributed to the loss, said Jerry R. Junkins, chairman and chief executive.

The Philippine plant is now running at full capacity, but production was limited for four weeks.

The third-quarter loss was anticipated on Wall Street, in part because two other large makers of memory chips, Advanced Micro Devices and National Semiconductor, had reported losses.

Also, Junkins said last summer before the earthquake that a third-quarter loss was likely.

Texas Instruments shares fell 37.5 cents, to $25.50, in trading Friday on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. Junkins also indicated that the company's losses would extend through the fourth quarter. He said high levels of capital spending would continue in a period with falling prices for memory chips and a weakening economy in the United States.

Prices for dynamic random access memory chips that store a million characters of memory fell from more than $6 to below $5 in the quarter.

Some Japanese chip makers have begun shipping memory chips that store four million characters.

A spokesman, Stan Victor, said Texas Instruments would start shipping these new chips later this year.

Junkins said the company's orders for military supplies, which include missiles and computer chips, fell by 51 percent.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Trading on margin can be risky business

By Bill Doyle

Q. Although I have never purchased stocks, I am getting ready to start. My two brothers are active in the stock market — one much more so than the other. My brother who buys and sells stocks frequently says the way to make money in the market is to "trade on margin." My other brother lost a great deal of money in the 1987 market crash and says buying on margin greatly increased his losses.

Exactly what is margin. Is it as dangerous as my second brother contends?

Doyle

A. The quick answer to your second question is a resounding "YES."

When you buy on margin, you put up only part of the purchase price and borrow the rest through your broker. The "margin requirement," set by the Federal Reserve, currently is 50 percent. That enables you to buy more shares with less money. But it also increases your risk.

Let's say you buy 100 shares of XYZ stock at $100 per share — $10,000 worth — on 50 percent margin. You must deposit $5,000, plus commission on the $10,000, with the broker.

If XYZ's market price rises to $110, your shares are worth $11,000. At that point, you have a $1,000 "paper" or "unrealized" profit. That's a 20 percent gain on the $5,000 you invested. If you had bought in a cash transaction and paid $10,000, your gain would be only 10 percent.

However, if XYZ falls to $90, you have a 20 percent loss on the margin transaction — double what you would have had on a cash transaction.

Margin works great when stock prices are rising. But it can be disastrous in a falling market. Your second brother and many other people had that lesson driven home in the '87 crash and more recently when the Persian Gulf crisis sent stock prices tumbling.

Q. If I buy stocks on 50 percent margin, do I get dividends on all the shares or just half? And what interest do I pay on the borrowed 50 percent?

A. You receive dividends on all the shares. Because stock in a margin account is held by your brokerage firm in "street name," the brokerage collects those dividends and credits them to your account.

You pay interest on your "debit balance" — the money you borrowed and any decline in the stocks' value. Interest rates vary a bit from brokerage to brokerage. In general, the rate is at least one-half of 1 percent higher than the 9.5 percent "broker loan" or "call money" rate at which brokerages now borrow from banks.

Q. You advise readers who have disputes with brokers to take their cases to customer-broker arbitration. Without my knowledge, my broker put a great deal of my stocks on margin. Do I have recourse? If so, how do I go to arbitration?

A. You have a good case, if you did not give the broker "discretionary power" over your account — to do things without your specific approval — and the customer's agreement you signed with the brokerage does not permit margin trading.

You can enter arbitration through any of the stock exchanges on which the brokerage is a member. More than 90 percent of all arbitration cases are handled by the New York Stock Exchange, 11 Wall Street, New York, NY 10006, and the National Association of Securities Dealers, Two World Trade Center, 98th Floor, New York, NY 10048.

If the Brokerage is a member of the American Stock Exchange, 86 Trinity Place, New York, NY, you probably can use the American Arbitration Association. A clause in the American Exchange Constitution permits that, but some courts say no. The legal battle rages on.

The American Arbitration Association has 35 offices around the country. If you can't find one in your phone book, contact the association's headquarters, 140 West 51st St., New York, NY 10020. Many observers feel investors do better with the AAA.

BANK: Few believe their money will be returned

(From 5C)

"I don't want any money and I don't want anybody feeling sorry for me," she said. "It just seems like a dream now. I don't think about it except sometimes when I see what needs to be done to this house. When it gets real bad I go to church."

The failure of Leroy Bank is having repercussions beyond those who deposited money.

"Clearly, it's devastating not only on a person who lost money, but on their children," said Larry Lyon, director of the center for community research at Baylor University. "The children have to step in and help. But it's still psychologically damaging to parents who has saved money in order not to be a burden on their children."

Lyon said many Leroy depositors probably had not understood the difference between an insured and an uninsured bank.

"But society requires a more and more sophisticated understanding of government," he said. "Tragedies like this happen when you don't understand."

In the last three years, the Leroy Bank saga has continued:

■ Depositors formed an association which has raised and spent $60,000 in legal fees in an fruitless attempt to get their money back.

■ A California woman claiming to be rich conned another $17,000 out of the residents while promising to reopen the bank with a $10 million injection, according to the Texas banking commissioner.

■ Country music superstar Willie Nelson was able to raise only $4,096 in a private benefit concert in Waco in November 1988 for the Leroy Bank Depositors.

■ The bank spent several months in bankruptcy court before the judge decided that the bank was, indeed, a bank and threw the petition out of court. Banks cannot file for bankruptcy under federal law.

BIRDS: Interior officials ask questions on killings

(From 5C)

Anchorage.

Some of the bird carcasses were dunked in oil, he said. All were fitted with radio transmitters and tossed into the sea so they could be traced to final resting places.

The idea, he said, was to determine what proportion of the birds ended up on shore and what proportion sank before reaching the shore.

More than 36,000 dead birds were pulled from oily waters after the spill, but many thousands more are believed to have sunk.

The object of the study is to come up with a formula that can be used in court to establish the number of birds that actually died, Batten said.

"We are asking serious questions" about the killings, said a spokesman for Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr., whose department includes the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Lujan found the episode "incredible," the spokesman, Steven Goldstein, added. "He does not understand why they didn't seek prior approval, and had it been sought, it would not have been given."

The killings were first reported by The Anchorage Daily News.

The $598,000 study, which is not yet complete, is intended to help determine the number of birds killed when the tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground in Prince William Sound in March 1989, dumping 11 million gallons of crude oil in the worst oil spill ever in U.S. waters.

The work is being done by Ecological Consulting Inc., of Portland, Ore.

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Iraq courts former foe, expels anti-Iran group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq, responding to a request from Iran, appears to have expelled members of a major Iranian opposition group, U.S. officials say.

Members of the People's Mujahedeen of Iran, the largest group trying to overthrow the clerical government in Tehran, have apparently started leaving Iraq for Paris and other European sites, said the officials who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

However, the assessment from the U.S. officials was strongly challenged by Mujahedeen spokesman Farid Soleimani, who telephoned news agencies to insist that his group remained intact in Baghdad and elsewhere.

"We claim very firmly that none of our members have left Baghdad involuntarily," Soleimani said. "There are comings and goings, that's natural, and it has nothing to do with expulsions."

The reputed expulsion move would be in keeping with Iraqi attempts to end its economic and diplomatic isolation by courting Iran, a one-time enemy with which it fought a disastrous eight-year war until 1988.

In recent weeks Iraq has ceded many of its war gains, sending back thousands of war prisoners, withdrawing troops from areas it captured in the war, and agreeing to share sovereignty over the strategically important Shatt-al-Arab waterway.

In return, Iraq asked for permission to hook into a major Iranian oil pipeline and circumvent the international naval blockade that's preventing the export of its oil. The Iraqis also asked Iran for food and medicine.

Iran has sent some truckloads of food, but has not responded to the pipeline request, U.S. officials say.

"We're very watchful of what kind of relations Saddam Hussein is able to establish with Iran," said CIA Director William Webster in an interview this week with The Associated Press. "So far, Iran is in a kind of win-win situation."

Iran and Iraq have restored diplomatic relations and restaffed their embassies in each others' capitals.

"The sense is that with this new understanding between Iran and Iraq, an organization like that (the PMOI) is not welcome there any more," said another administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Iran's official news agency IRNA reported several times last month that Massoud Rajavi, the PMOI's Baghdad-based leader, had asked his people to leave Iraq and was himself leaving for Germany.

The Mujahedeen sent telexes and communiques from Baghdad denying the reports as "garbage allegations" designed to discredit and destroy the organization.

But PMOI representatives in the United States, who used to bombard reporters with phone calls, interview offers and news conferences, have all but disappeared in recent weeks. Repeated calls to their officials have not been returned.

The group did hold a news conference at U.N. headquarters last Wednesday to complain about Iran's human rights record, but the officials refused to discuss their relations with Baghdad despite repeated questioning.

The PMOI is no stranger to expulsions.

Rajavi and his supporters fled to Paris in 1980 after their former allies, Khomeini and his fundamentalist leadership, turned on them in a bloody purge of leftists and liberals.

In 1986, France asked the organization to leave its territory, under pressure from the Iranian government, and Rajavi moved to Baghdad.

Iraqis deny stripping hospitals in Kuwait

EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press reporter Salah Nasrawi was among a group of reporters flown to Kuwait and permitted to visit a hospital there Sunday by the Iraqi Information Ministry.

By Salah Nasrawi

KUWAIT CITY (AP) — A senior Iraqi official said Sunday that allegations Iraq has taken medical equipment from hospitals in occupied Kuwait were false.

Abduljabbar Abdulabbas, the Iraq official in charge of hospitals in Kuwait — which Iraq calls its 19th province — told reporters that normal services continue at hospitals in the occupied emirate.

"Although medical equipment exceeds by far the needs of the population, we did not move any of them to other places," said Abdulabbas, a physician who heads Baghdad's health department. He spoke during a tour of the main maternity hospital in Kuwait.

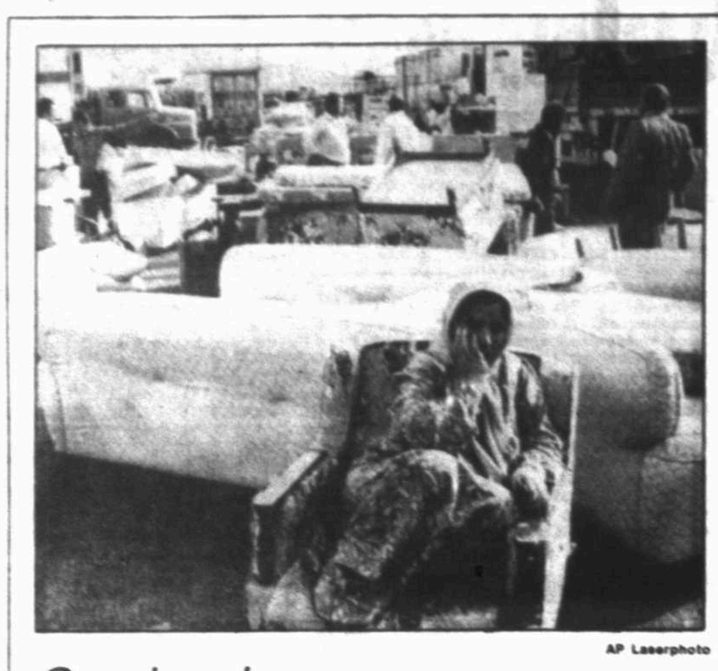

The Iraqi manager of the maternity hospital, Qais Abdulsattar, said the 500-bed hospital is still providing services, including health care, to prematurely born babies who need to be kept in incubators.

The United States and the exiled government of Kuwait have reported that Iraq moved medical equipment to Iraq, including a large number of incubators, causing the death of some Kuwaiti babies.

Reporters were flown into Kuwait and given a tour of the hospital Sunday in an attempt to dispel these reports.

Abdulsattar showed reporters 12 babies in incubators in the main intensive care unit of the hospital, which is staffed mostly by Asian and non-Kuwaiti Arab medical staff.

"Why should we send incubators to our maternity hospitals in Iraq? We have plenty of them there," said Abdulsattar.

U.S. ship tracks Iraqi vessel after firing shots

Associated Press

A U.S. destroyer was tracking an Iraqi vessel Sunday in the Persian Gulf after the ship defied warning shots and tried to elude American warships, military officials said.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Steve Roy said the incident was one of about a dozen cases in which U.S. ships have fired warning shots to enforce trade sanctions on Iraq.

The U.S. destroyer O'Brien fired several shots across the bow of the al-Bahar al-Arabi after the ship did not answer its radio and ignored commands to stop, Roy said.

U.S. military sources in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia said the vessel was headed for Aden, Yemen and was being tracked by Italian and U.S. warships.

The United States and a dozen other nations are participating in the naval armada in the gulf region to back the trade sanctions with military might.

The sanctions were imposed after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

In Tokyo, meanwhile, more than 20,000 people rallied Sunday to protest a government plan to send soldiers to the gulf, police said. It would be the first deployment of Japanese troops abroad since World War II.

Opponents say the government proposal, introduced in Parliament last Tuesday, violates Japan's constitution, which bars the use of force to settle international disputes.

The bill would allow members of Japan's Self Defense Forces to be sent for non-combat roles in peacekeeping operations, such as that in the gulf.

Japanese rallied at 17 sites in the capital, including 11,000 at a downtown Tokyo park and 12,000 who joined hands in a human chain around a U.S. air base in Tokyo's suburbs, a police official said.

About 300,000 troops are deployed in Saudi Arabia and the gulf region as part of the multinational force arrayed against Iraq. Saddam Hussein's army is estimated at about 460,000.

A gulf newspaper, the Sharjah-based Al-Khaleej, said in an unattributed front-page report Sunday that Iraqi troops have been withdrawn from parts of occupied Kuwait over the past two nights. Sharjah is one of seven sheikdoms that make up the United Arab Emirates.

The movement was "intensive and quick and takes place during the night and until dawn, ceasing altogether at daylight," the paper said. "Hundreds of tanks and armored vehicles and armored personnel carriers have been sighted heading toward north Kuwait, specifically to the region of Matla."

In Washington, Roy said he had no information on the report, but said "Iraqi forces have been doing repositioning from time to time."

The incident involving the Iraqi ship began Saturday, when the vessel was boarded by American Navy and Coast Guard inspectors. It agreed to turn back to Iraq because its cargo was prohibited under the U.N. sanctions, Navy sources said. It was not immediately clear what the ship was carrying.

But the ship continued to sail southward in the Persian Gulf despite renewed warnings by the O'Brien to stop, the sources said.

Sunday, about 24 hours after the encounter began, the O'Brien fired warning shots from its 5-inch deck guns, 50-caliber machine guns and 25-millimeter deck guns in an attempt to halt the 5,200-ton Iraqi ship.

The ship was reported to have ignored the challenges, continuing on course.
