Remarks dismissed on corporate taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surprised White House aides say they're "not seriously considering" President Reagan's suggestion that corporate income taxes be abolished, describing it as "just something he threw out."

Reagan, in a meeting with businessmen in Boston Wednesday, remarked off-the-cuff that the corporate tax is unfair to American business and "there really isn't any justification for it."

His aides seemed taken aback.

"We're not seriously considering it," said David R. Gergen, the president's assistant for communications.

"There's no study, there's no plan. It's just something he threw out," said Larry Speakes, the deputy press secretary. "It was nothing that had ever been discussed at the White House."

Reagan told reporters he did not plan to submit legislation to abolish the tax, but added: "I said it was something to study and look at."

Speakes said none of the White House staff who accompanied Reagan to Boston heard him make the suggestion during a public meeting with the Massachusetts High Tech Council, a group of high technology businesses.

Reagan's comments came at the end of a four-hour trip that began with stops at a minority job training center, computer factory and an Irish pub, where he took one sip of beer.

Reagan wound up at the Millipore Corp., in Bedford, Mass., for a meeting with the High Tech Council. He dropped his surprise suggestion at the end of the long session in a crowded room with an inadequate sound system.

Seated at a table with about 15 businessmen, the president said:

"I realize that there will be a great stirring and I'll probably kick myself for having said this, but when are we all going to have the courage to point out that in our tax structure the corporate tax is very hard to justify its existence?"

Instead, he said, corporate profits should be distributed to stockholders in the form of dividends. The stockholders then would pay tax on the income.

Some business leaders have raised that suggestion in the past, contending the current system of levying a 46 percent tax on corporate profits and taxing dividends as well amounts to double taxation of corporations.

The Office of Management and Budget estimated last July that corporate income taxes would yield $58.3 billion in the current fiscal year, ending next Sept. 30, and will account for 9 percent of all federal tax revenues. The corporate share of federal tax receipts has been declining in recent years.

The president said abolishing the corporate income tax would be "a net gain to the government all the way around if we would look at that instead of sticking with what is literally a myth about corporations and what the taxing policy should be."

After getting applause from the businessmen, the president joked: "I'll remember your applause when the press keeps questioning me for days now about that."

Dee d'Arbeloff, president of Millipore, a health technology firm, told Reagan the issue was under serious study by members of the American Business Council.

On his trip, Reagan touched several political bases by visiting a predominantly black neighborhood and a blue-collar neighborhood.

Reagan encountering some GOP resistance in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, his hand weakened by the November elections and a faltering economy, is finding his 1984 tax and spending proposals under attack in Congress from Republicans and Democrats alike.

In the GOP-controlled Senate, Republican leaders told Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in private Wednesday what they have said publicly. Reagan must agree to cut more from his defense buildup than the $8 billion he's agreed to.

In the Democratic-controlled House, it was public repudiation with a flourish.

"I can't conceive of a freeze in domestic spending," Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., declared as he dismissed in a single sentence one of the key elements of Reagan's budget plan.

"He spoke of creating jobs, but opposes jobs legislation," said the speaker.

"He spoke of fairness but insisted on retaining the third year of his unfair tax program and insisted on protecting the defense industry from the same level of austerity that he wants to impose on domestic programs," he said.

The meeting in the Senate and O'Neill's comments came the day after Reagan sketched his tax and spending plans in his State of the Union address. His formal budget presentation to Congress will be made Monday.

But that Congress will be far different from the one that received his first two plans in 1981 and 1982.

The biggest difference is in the House of Representatives, where there are 26 more Democrats than the old Congress. As a result, O'Neill and the Democrats now have effective control, instead of the nominal majority they had the last two years.

"We have the votes" to pass a Democratic budget, Rep. Brian Donnelly, D-Mass., declared. Aides said O'Neill and other party leaders would draft a Democratic alternative and secure its approval.

For both the House and the Senate, Reagan's budget will arrive with Republicans and Democrats concerned about the lingering recession, the high joblessness and deficits that will remain over $100 billion through 1988.

As a result, it seems that Reagan faces opposition wherever he looks:

—He proposed standby tax increases to reduce the deficit in future years. Opponents include Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee as well as the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and the top Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Barber Conable of New York. Sen. Russell Long, D-La., the top Democrat on the Finance Committee, also opposes the plan.

—He proposed an $8 billion cutback in his defense buildup, a position that sources said Weinberger staunchly defended at his private breakfast with GOP Senate leaders. Baker and Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., say the cuts must be deeper. O'Neill said he feels the same way.

—He said he would accept no change in the 10 percent income tax cut scheduled for this year or in the plan to adjust the tax rates for inflation beginning in 1985 — a provision known as indexing. GOP Leader Baker and Democratic Speaker O'Neill both favor repeal of indexing.

And O'Neill and Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia made it clear Democrats will attempt to repeal or limit the scheduled 10 percent tax cut for wealthier taxpayers. Republican Sen. Dan Quayle, of Indiana is one Republican who favors repealing the 1983 tax cut entirely.

'Peace with honor' arrives in Vietnam

10 Years Ago Today

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — At 12:30 p.m. on Jan. 27, 1973, the United States signed the agreement in Paris that officially ended the longest and most divisive war in American history.

At the time of the ceremony, the dawn had not yet arrived in Washington on that cold, gray morning a decade ago today, a day that President Nixon said brought "peace with honor in Vietnam."

Henry A. Kissinger, asked later in the day what he was doing at the moment the agreement was signed, deadpanned, "Making love, not war," — precisely what his anti-war critics had been prescribing for years.

For Kissinger, who had negotiated the agreement with North Vietnam over four torturous years, the end to American military involvement in Vietnam meant he could concentrate on other diplomacy for the first time.

More importantly, it meant that Americans no longer would be divided against themselves. They would no longer be subjected to the grim details of B-52 bombing runs and of televised scenes of battles in obscure locales such as Quang Tri, My Tho and Ba Bien. Within two months, 591 American prisoners would be sent home by the Hanoi government.

The agreement, however, failed to live up to expectations, particularly for the American-backed government in Saigon.

South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, who felt the accord established the legitimacy of his government, was driven from power by North Vietnamese invaders less than 2½ years later as all of Vietnam came under Hanoi's domination.

Nowadays, Vietnam, solidly aligned with the Soviet bloc, is one of the few countries with which the United States does not have diplomatic relations.

The Soviets have established a military presence at the old American base at Cam Ranh Bay, giving them a measure of control over the sea lanes of the Western Pacific. The Vietnamese have had an occupation army of some 200,000 in Cambodia for more than four years. A pro-Hanoi regime has been installed in Laos since 1975.

Still, the worst American fears about the consequences of communist domination of Indochina have not materialized. At the time of the Paris agreement, no one could have foreseen the way in which Indochina has become a major point of friction between the Soviet Union and China.

William Sullivan, a top Kissinger aide during the Paris negotiations, said in a telephone interview that China has been able to blunt whatever expansionist designs Hanoi may have in Southeast Asia. He noted that Vietnamese concerns about a hostile Peking have forced Hanoi to squander much of its military manpower along the border with China.

Many Americans have taken defeat in Vietnam in stride. Some veterans of the conflict wear tee shirts with the message: "Southeast Asia War Games, 1964-1975. United States: 2nd Place."

For other Americans, agony of the war continues unabated. Today, in observance of the anniversary of the Paris agreement, the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia is opening a two-day meeting here to call attention once again to the fact that 2,500 Americans remain unaccounted for. Since the war ended, Vietnam has returned to the United States the remains of 79 U.S. servicemen.

And, 10 years after the signing of the Paris agreements, there is still no clear consensus on the lessons of the war for the United States.

To Harvard University professor Ernest May, the conflict may have been the most selfless war in American history. "The impulse guiding it was not to defeat an enemy or even to serve a national interest; it was simply not to abandon friends," he says.

Water reserves could aid firefighters

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Installation of strategically located water tanks in rural Midland County could be a boost in fighting fires, saving lives, houses and grassland and in lowering insurance rates, suggested Midland County Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis.

Davis, who said the city of Midland is seeking locations for reserve water tanks, said the need for readily-available fire-fighting water was noted recently after a grass fire ignited old cars and then destroyed a mobile home south of Midland.

"If you're not there with 2,000 gallons of water immediately, you're lost," said Davis."

Davis said he was witness to that particular mobile home fire.

"When I got there, they (city of Midland firemen) were looking for water, and there was water out there if they knew were to look for it."

Davis said the Commissioners' Court is willing to assist the city in pinpointing water wells and in locating tank sites throughout the county. Otherwise, once a fire engine has exhaused its tank of water, it would have to be driven back to town for a refill. By then, the fire damage would be more extensive or there would be virtually nothing else left to burn.

"I haven't heard from the city if they need our assistance," Davis said Wednesday. "I want to see if they would like for the county to cooperate with them in any way whatsoever."

In 1959, the city and county entered an agreement by which the city would provide fire-fighting and emergency ambulance services to rural Midland County areas in exchange for the county providing library facilities for the city.

Davis speculated that the readily-available water for fighting fires in any populated part of the county would tend to lower rates on homeowners' fire insurance coverage.

"The more fires you have, the higher your key rates; the fewer the fires, the lower the rates," said Davis, who noted that rates are set similarly to those on automobile insurance: the more wrecks you're involved in, whether you're at fault or not, the higher goes your car insurance premiums.

"It's pretty alarming," Davis said of the increasing number of rural fire calls in the growing suburban areas of the county. "We're trying to do something to catch up," said Davis, who noted that otherwise the county may be lagging when the 21st Century does arrive.

"It's just like the computers; let's get on or get off." Commissioners have been discussing the merits of computerizing the county's bookkeeping and other record-keeping functions.

Last year, commissioners considered putting in a volunteer fire station in the burgeoning Greenwood community east of Midland. Charlie Welch, who then was commissioner of Precinct 2 which takes in Greenwood, had fueled discussion on a community fire station.

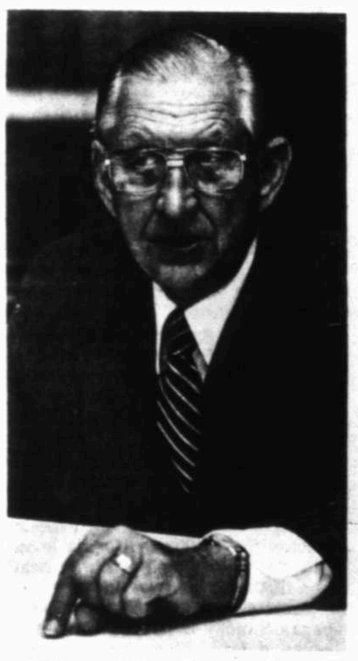

"Nobody has said anything to me about it," Welch's successor, C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, said. "I'm not opposed to talking about it, to pursuing it.

"I feel sure if anyone had wanted to say something to me, they would have called me," Craig said. "I've gotten a lot of calls on roads."

Just as Greenwood has considered putting in a volunteer fire station, so has the Midkiff — Hadacol — community in northeast Upton County. The community's trade area takes in the four corners of Midland, Glasscock, Reagan and Upton counties.

Davis said he had talked to Upton County Judge Peggy Garner and Commissioner Billy Wheeler about Midland County assisting its rural neighbor in putting in a fire station. The community would raise funds to get the fire trucks, equipment and water storage tanks. Davis said Midland County's contribution would be funds — about $10,000 — toward building a fire station.

"Anytime they're ready," Davis said, "we'll get together and talk turkey."

"I haven't heard from the city if they need our assistance. I want to see if they would like for the county to cooperate with them in any way whatsoever."

Reagan to assure Mubarak of stand on Israeli withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will assure Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak that the United States is doing all it can — short of cutting off aid — to press Israel to withdraw its troops from Lebanon, U.S. officials say.

Mubarak, who arrived in Washington for a three-day visit late Wednesday, planned to confer today with Reagan and with Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger.

Egyptian officials said Mubarak would express his unhappiness over the slow pace of negotiations to obtain a withdrawal of the 25,000 Israeli troops in Lebanon. Egypt is the only Arab nation with a peace treaty with Israel and the continuing Israeli presence in Lebanon, following the June 6 invasion, is an embarrassment to Cairo.

Mubarak not only wants an Israeli troop withdrawal from Lebanon, but also a halt to Israeli construction of settlements in the occupied West Bank. He is also seeking better terms on U.S. aid to his own country.

A well-placed State Department official said Wednesday that Mubarak probably would press the administration for "concrete" measures, such as curtailing the nearly $2.5 billion in annual U.S. military and economic aid to Israel, if Israel doesn't get moving soon on a troop withdrawal. Egypt receives about $2.2 billion in U.S. aid.

While an aid cutback was among options before Reagan, the official said Reagan was prepared to tell Mubarak it would be a mistake now. "We are going to try to keep him (Mubarak) persuaded that we are making a full effort," said the official, who like another State Department official spoke on the condition that he not be identified.

The official thought it was unlikely that Reagan would opt for an aid cutback.

Poison acid cleaned from state highway

ATLANTA, Texas (AP) — Officials have cleaned up about 1,000 gallons of poisonous sulfuric acid that spilled from an overturned tanker truck and forced the temporary closure of a stretch of Northeast Texas highway.

Crews worked hurriedly Wednesday to collect the acid before it could seep into water supplies.

The truck, fully loaded with 48,560 pounds of acid bound for the International Paper Co., overturned Wednesday morning, said Texarkana Department of Public Safety spokesman Gary Chandler.

DPS communications operator Bill Wilson said the last of the spill was collected at 4:45 p.m. — about 9½ hours after the accident.

"It's all cleaned up and neutralized and the road is open," Wilson said. "Everything is running smoothly."

The truck, owned by Matlack Inc. of Bossier City, La., overturned near the stoplight at the intersection of Farm Road 3129 and U.S. Highway 59, Chandler said.

Highway Department workers used a backhoe to cut a deep drainage ditch next to the wreck to catch the spilled acid and try to keep it from contaminating the water table.

"It's very, very toxic," Chandler said. "The fumes are poisonous, and if you get it on your skin, it's not too healthy for it."

The clean-up crew wore air packs to protect them from the toxic fumes.

"The main worry right now is to protect water supplies by either soaking it up with dirt or neutralizing it with other chemicals, so it won't seep into the water table," said DPS communications supervisor Vernon Young.

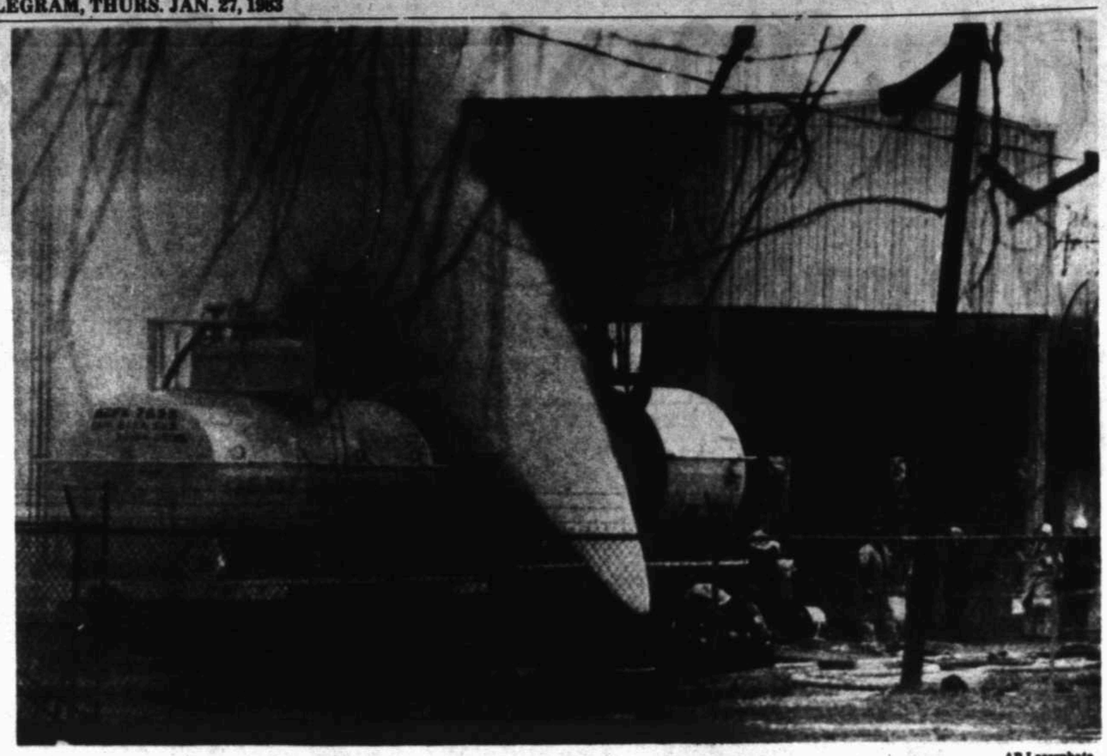

The driver, William Oswalt, 55, of Bossier City received scratches and bruises in the accident but refused medical treatment, said Chandler.

The tank was bound for the paper comapny plant at the end of the farm road, he said.

More than five hours after the accident, the tank was still leaking slowly and the truck was still overturned on the road, which troopers had closed to other traffic.

Matlack Inc. spokeswoman Era Nell Cassel said the company ordinarily delivered a truckload of the acid a day to the paper company.

The cause of the accident is under investigation.

Sulfuric, hydrochloric acid spills create hazards in Texas, California, Indiana

By The Associated Press

Acid spills closed highways in California and Texas, and a towering cloud of sulfuric acid from a chemical plant in Indianapolis forced evacuation of 2,000 people and injured 11 others, authorities said.

The Indianapolis leak Wednesday was only noticed when crews on a passing fire truck saw the cloud rising at least 400 feet over Ulrich Chemical Inc. and decided to investigate, said Warren Township Fire Chief Gerald Humphries.

Ulrich plant foreman Kim Davis, 30, of Martinsville, was burned over 40 percent of his body and was listed in critical condition today at Wishard Memorial Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Ten other people were treated and released from local hospitals for less serious injuries. They included another Ulrich employee, two Warren Township firefighters, a Marion County sheriff's deputy and six local residents.

About 2,000 people in a square-mile area were evacuated, Mayor William H. Hudnut said. Among the buildings emptied was the Sunny Heights Elementary School, with an enrolment of 500.

All residents were allowed to return home at about 7:30 p.m.

Meanwhile, the only highway to the San Diego suburb of Coronado was blocked for three hours Wednesday after a drum of hydrochloric acid cleaning solution tipped over in a delivery van and began "belching smoke," forcing evacuation of about 150 people from nearby Navy residences, police said. No injuries were reported.

In the northeast Texas community of Atlanta, at least 1,000 gallons of sulfuric acid spilled on a highway when a truck overturned Wednesday, closing an intersection of U.S. 59 for about nine hours, officials said.

The truck driver suffered only minor scratches and refused medical treatment. No other injuries were reported and there were no evacuations.

Crews wearing air packs to protect them from fumes used a backhoe to cut a deep drainage ditch to prevent the acid from leaking into local water supplies.

The Warren Township fire chief in Indianapolis said he was concerned that the Ulrich company "did not notify anyone immediately" about the leak.

Ulrich officials could not immediately be reached for comment. A guard at the plant said early today that no one with authority to discuss the matter was available.

A ruptured valve, which Davis had been trying to repair, caused a leak from a storage tank containing 12,000 gallons of sulfuric acid, possibly corroding another tank of the same size containing muriatic — hydrochloric — acid.

Social Security may need another 'fix'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The $168 billion Social Security rescue plan might still leave the system vulnerable to crisis in a few years, the executive director of the reform commission says.

Robert J. Myers says as a result, Congress may want to move faster than the commission recommended in changing the cost-of-living formula to help Social Security weather hard times.

Myers expressed his views on the package for the first time Wednesday in an interview with The Associated Press. He called the plan "a great forward step," but said there's still room for improvement.

A bill embodying all of the panel's bipartisan proposals was introduced in the Senate Wednesday by Sens. Robert Dole, R-Kan., Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y. and John Heinz, R-Pa.

Dole introduced a separate amendment raising the normal age of retirement from 65 to 66 by the year 2015. A majority of the commission backed that move, but it was not part of the compromise.

Meanwhile, Democratic congressional leaders edged away from their earlier suggestions to link the proposed six-month delay in this year's cost-of-living increase for retirees to a similar postponement of an income tax cut for high-income earners.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said this tactic would be "an injustice to the golden agers and senior citizens," but added he will seek other ways to repeal this July's tax cut or to limit the tax break for the wealthy.

A Washington Post-ABC News poll reported today said that Americans are deeply split over the proposed Social Security reforms. It said that a majority or plurality of those surveyed opposed each of the three elements of the program that would increase Social Security taxes.

It found that a majority supported three other elements: including federal workers under the system, postponing July cost-of-living increases for pensioners and increasing benefits for those who delay retirement past 65.

President Reagan urged Congress on Tuesday in his State of the Union address to enact the rescue plan by Easter, which is April 3. The House Ways and Means Committee opens hearings on the issue next Tuesday, and the Senate Finance Committee begins hearings Feb. 15.

Myers, 70, a former longtime chief actuary and deputy commissioner of Social Security, may be in a position to help shape changes in the package. He will soon go to work as a consultant for Republicans on the Senate and House committees that will draft the rescue plan.

The Social Security commission recommended that Congress safeguard the system "against the possibility of exceptionally poor economic performance," but not until 1988.

"I think you may need it sooner. I don't want to see the system get into trouble again in 1985 or 1986 if we have what happened in 1980 all over again," Myers said.

In 1980, Social Security beneficiaries got a 14.3 percent benefit increase although the average worker's wages — and Social Security's payroll tax receipts — rose less than 9 percent that year. Prices also outstripped wages in 1979 and 1981, propelling the system into its current cash crisis.

The commission's proposal would give retirees the lower of the average increase in workers' wages or the Consumer Price Index if the old age and disability trust funds fell below a reserve level equal to 20 percent of one year's benefit payments.

Since 1975, beneficiaries have gotten raises each July matching the rise in prices.

The bipartisan recommendations were hammered out on Jan. 15 after a flurry of talks with White House officials.

"Naturally, when the consensus was reached under such pressure, there are some things in it that may need touching up," said Myers.

Myers also observed:

—There is discrepancy in the proposal to tax half of Social Security benefits for single retirees with adjusted gross incomes above $20,000 and couples above $25,000. The commission left it to Congress to find a way to smooth in the tax so that a single dollar of income won't spell the difference between owing hundreds of dollars and owing nothing.

—Charges by federal workers' union that the plan to bring new federal workers into Social Security will bankrupt the civil service retirement plans are "nonsense ... just utterly untrue."

—The payroll tax increase for the self-employed — from 9.35 percent now to 12.7 percent next Jan. 1 — is justified since workers and their employers now pay a combined tax of 13.4 percent for the same coverage. They will be able to deduct half the payroll tax as a business expense, and Myers said, "If they all incorporated tomorrow, the same result would be achieved."

Severe coastal storms continue

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

A bruising Pacific storm slammed inland today after destroying seaside buildings with 30-foot waves, forcing dozens of coastal residents to evacuate, darkening 100,000 California homes and closing two highways with heavy rain that sent rivers overflowing.

The string of coastal storms which began Sunday is already blamed for seven deaths. Wednesday's violent weather was only the vanguard of a still worse storm expected to hit today.

In unusually forceful language, the Weather Service warned people who lived near creeks and rivers in Northern California that they might have to "act quickly to save yourself and those who depend on you. Youmay only have seconds."

The storm whipped down the Pacific Coast and was expected to cross the Rockies today, reaching western Wyoming and Montana. In the Midwest, meanwhile, heavy snow made driving hazardous and two traffic fatalities were reported in Missouri.

"It's a nasty one," said Harry Gordon, of the National Weather Service's Severe Storm Center in Kansas City.

Near Redding, Calif., a mudslide Wednesday shoved two pickups, a bulldozer and a bus carrying Shasta County prisoners down a 60-yard ravine and into a creek, killing a county employee, public works crewman David Waterman. The prisoners had been trying to clear a flooded road choked with mud.

In southern Oregon, 80-100 mph wind gusts interrupted a search for a hiker lost near Mount Ashland, and waves pulled one man and four trucks into the surf of Coos Bay; all were safely retrieved.

At least 100,000 homes, most in the San Francisco Bay area, lost power, said Dennis Pooler, spokesman for Pacific Gas & Electric Co. Pacific Telephone reported 3,000 phone circuits out.

Posh San Francisco hotels offered bargain rates to commuters stranded by mudslides and power failures on electric trolley lines.

Tides rose to a record 9.93 feet at the Rio Vista Bridge on the Sacramento River, said state flood emergency coordinator Bill Helms.

KIRYAT MALACHI, Israel — The last of the Americans who helped out at army bases and filled in for kibbutzniks while they fought in Lebanon are going home, leaving behind what one Israeli soldier called "a new spirit of Zionism."

At the tail end of the recruitment drive, which at its height mobilized more than 700 U.S. volunteers, are 14 men and 19 women ranging in age from 18 to 73.

For the past month, their home has been an army base here in central Israel, where they worked at everything from waiting on mess hall tables to sorting screws.

The project grew out of a conversation among the Israeli military chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, and some of his officers during the invasion of Lebanon that began June 6.

The idea was to get American Jews to do a month of service in Israel in a symbolic parallel to the army reserve duty incumbent on every able-bodied Israeli male.

Eytan's officers recruited a few others who went to New York last July and advertised for volunteers. They had no official support from the Israeli government or Jewish organizations, but the response was good — and not only from Jews.

The first volunteers arrived in August and filled in for kibbutzniks and farmers who had been called up to serve in Lebanon. When the soldiers returned, the volunteers who followed that group were sent to several army camps.

One of them, Alan Putter of Dallas, said he was told not to discuss his work, other than that he did light maintenance on tanks.

Wearing army fatigues, the 23-year-old menswear salesman explained that he came to Israel because he was ambivalent about his Jewish heritage. "I now feel strongly that Israel is a legitimate state," he said.

Paul Clines, a 21-year-old Irish Catholic from Queens, New York, who came with the first group, said he wanted to accompany a Jewish friend.

"I just thought it was important to come to help Israel," he told a reporter soon after he arrived in August.

Putter said the volunteers helped boost morale among the soldiers and change the image of Americans as "rich, spoiled people."

Their Israeli commanders agreed.

"The Americans brought a new spirit of Zionism to our soldiers," said Sgt. Maj. Monica, who would not give her surname.

She said she was impressed by the American willingness to work hard, recalling that one volunteer refused to take a coffee break until he had finished the chore she gave him — sorting out thousands of screws.

That volunteer was Robert Kaufman, a 73-year-old retiree from Edison, N.J., who carved out a job for himself dispensing spare parts to tank crews.

"If there's another group I'd come again," he said, "but this time with the right clothes."

Kaufman said he had been told in New York to expect 70-degree temperatures and sunshine. Instead he found rain and chilly barracks.

Helene Merlis of Queens said living conditions here were "for the birds," but she didn't regret coming.

"I was laid off from my work and wanted to do something worthwhile with my time," she said. She ended up painting tanks.

Organizers of the recruitment drive say they are planning to continue the project and have formed a committee of politicians, writers and other public figures to spread the word.

U.S., Soviet negotiators spend three hours on missile reductions

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators conducted three hours of talks today on reducing medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, following efforts by both sides to win European support for their positions.

No details of the discussions were announced, in keeping with the mutual agreement to say nothing publicly about the talks. The two sides are scheduled to meet again Tuesday.

The NATO allies plan to start deploying hundreds of new missiles in Europe in December if there is no agreement at the bargaining table.

Asked if he expects an accord this year, Soviet delegate Yuli A. Kvitsinsky said before the talks resumed: "I don't know."

Moments later, veteran arms control expert Paul H. Nitze arrived at the Soviet diplomatic mission in Geneva to start bargaining after a two-month recess. He declined to comment to reporters.

There were few signs that any progress had been achieved when the negotiations recessed in late November.

Kvitsinsky warned that time is running out for reaching a missile-limiting accord.

President Reagan strongly hinted in his State of the Union address Tuesday night that he is prepared to compromise at the negotiating table if the terms are right.

The president said, "We are also prepared to carefully explore serious Soviet proposals."

Nitze said as he arrived in Geneva on Tuesday that he was "prepared to examine every kind" of Soviet offer that meets the Western alliance's security interests.

He also said that the United States "certainly is not locked into" the bargaining stance it has maintained since the talks opened 14 months ago. The Soviets repeatedly have rejected that stance.

Kvitsinsky told reporters at his arrival Tuesday: "The time is approaching when a choice will have to be made between an agreement on joint steps to reduce the level of nuclear confrontation, or a new round of the arms race."

Reagan so far has been insisting on a plan Washington officials call the "zero option," which he put forward last year.

Under that plan, the United States would cancel plans to begin deploying in December 572 new Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in NATO countries — if the Soviets dismantle their arsenal of highly accurate, SS-20 missiles.

The most recent Soviet proposal called for reducing, but not necessarily dismantling, enough SS-20s to reduce the arsenal to 162 — the current level of French and British missile forces. The United States has rejected the proposal, made by Kremlin chief Yuri V. Andropov.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz recently visited the NATO capitals to drum up support for the missile deployment plans.

The world is left to wrestle with the 'Bear's' death

College football's winningest coach dead at age 69

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — As a youth, he wrestled a bear. As a man, he wrestled with something else — a drive for perfection the world of college football had never seen before.

Paul William "Bear" Bryant — craggy-faced, gravel-voiced, the toughest kind of field master, the softest touch to friends in need — is dead at 69.

Flags at the Alabama State Capitol in Montgomery flew at half-staff today as though a national hero had fallen. And for many, including the president of the United States, one had.

"We Americans lost a hero who always seemed larger than life," President Reagan said as eulogies for Bryant came in from every corner of the country.

Bryant, four weeks to the day after he shuffled off into retirement as the winningest coach in the history of his sport, died Wednesday of a heart attack, a death that stunned Alabama's followers and reduced strong young athletes to tears.

"Quit coaching? I'd croak in a week," he once said. It took almost a month.

The entire 1982 Alabama football team — a squad that struggled to an un-Bryant-like 8-4 record but capped the Bear's career with a 21-15 victory over Illinois in his final game at the Libery Bowl last Dec. 29 — will serve as honorary pallbearers at funeral services Friday.

Eight will be selected to carry the casket of Bryant, who earned his fabled nickname as a youth when he wrestled a bear in a traveling circus. He will be buried at Elmwood Cemetery in Birmingham after services at the First Methodist Church in Tuscaloosa.

Many of the foremost figures in college football are expected to attend, many of them Bryant disciples who played or coached under him during the course of his record-setting 38-year career.

Bryant's death, caused by a sudden massive heart attack at a hospital one day after he was admitted with chest pains, left Crimson Tide followers in tears. Some wept on the air as radio stations broke off regular programming to open call-in shows about Bryant.

The death was also mourned at the highest levels of government.

Reagan eulogized Bryant as "a hard, fut loved, taskmaster. Patriotic to the core, devoted to his players and inspired by a winning spirit that would not quit, Bear Bryant gave this country the gift of a life unsurpassed."

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, ordering flags at the capitol lowered, called Bryant "a man among men who brought great fame and honor to Alabama."

Bryant captured the imagination of many by sending his often small, always well-disciplined teams to the top of the rankings, winning national titles in 1961, 1964 and 1965.

Later he would add two more — in 1978 and 1979 — and closed his career with a 323-85-17 record. He passed Amos Alonzo Stagg's mark of 314 career victories in 1981.

Bryant's death was unexpected, even though he suffered from mild heart trouble in recent years.

His doctor, William A. Hill, said Bryant's heart stopped at 12:24 p.m., CST, Wednesday and efforts to restore his heartbeat began immediately.

"We did put a pacemaker through his chest and were able to restore a weak heartbeat" for about an hour, Hill said. Bryant was declared dead at 1:30 p.m.

Hill said Bryant suffered "a sudden cardiopulmonary arrest" only moments after appearing in good spirits, joking with nurses and making plans for a duck hunting trip to his native Arkansas. He said the cause of death was "a massive coronary occlusion."

Members of Bryant's family, including his wife, Mary Harmon Bryant, were summoned to Druid City Hospital and were present when he was pronounced dead.

Hill said Mrs. Bryant "showed a great amount of courage. She held up well, certainly with a high degree of dignity."

The family — Bryant also is survived by a son and daughter — asked that no flowers be sent. They asked that any memorial contributions be made to the university's athletic department in care of scholarship funds.

Ray Perkins, the former Alabama star and New York Giants coach who was picked to succeed Bryant last month, learned of the death while on a recruiting trip in North Carolina.

Perkins, who planned to cut short his trip and return to Tuscaloosa, said Bryant, who was to have remained at Alabama as athletic director, was "a greater man than a football coach because of what he has meant to so many people during their playing careers and then afterward."

"All you had to do was call on the man," Perkins said. "If you had done right by him, there was nothing he wouldn't do for you. Coach Bryant, to those who have been associated with him, has been much more than just a genius with X's and O's."

Bryant, whose 38-year career spanned coaching stints at Maryland, Kentucky, Texas A&M and finally Alabama for the last quarter-century, sent players like Joe Namath, Lee Roy Jordan, Ken Stabler and Richard Todd to the pros.

Others among "Bear's Boys," who became head coaches and are still active, include Bum Phillips of the New Orleans Saints, Charley Pell of Florida, Danny Ford of Clemson, Jackie Sherrill of Texas A&M, Howard Schnellenberger of Miami, Pat Dye of Auburn, Jerry Claiborne of Kentucky, Steve Sloan of Duke and Perkins.

Hill, at a news conference at the hospital, said Bryant had been on medicine for mild heart trouble the past few years. He said Bryant was visiting Tuesday with a close friend, Jimmy Hinton of Tuscaloosa, when he complained of chest pains and was taken to the hospital by ambulance.

Shortly before going to the hospital, Bryant had talked about his life since retirement.

"I don't wake up in the middle of the night any more sweating and worrying," he said then. "I haven't looked at a football film. I may never see another football film."

For most of his life, football consumed him. He discovered the sport as a tall, raw-boned Arkansas country boy and used it as a way out of the poverty of his youth in Moro Bottom, Ark.

He became a coach after playing as a two-way end for Alabama and by the end of his career he was far, far removed from the hardscrabble life of his youth. He had wealth, celebrity, friendships with presidents.

To a nation that watched college football on Saturdays, he was that gruff-talking man in the houndstooth hat whose teams played to win — and most often did.

He went to Maryland in 1945, fresh from serving in the Navy during World War II, began his career with a 60-6 rout of Guilford and finished his first year as a head coach with a 6-2-1. Some 317 victories were still to come.

Then he moved to Kentucky, where in eight seasons his teams went 60-23-5, appeared in four bowls and, most memorably, whipped Oklahoma 13-7 in the 1951 Sugar Bowl to end a 31-game Sooner winning streak.

In 1954, his first year at Texas A&M, Bryant went 1-9, the only losing season of his life. Before that campaign, Bryant took two busloads of players to training camp at a dusty spot called Junction, Texas. It was hot and it was brutal. By the end, barely one-fourth, 27 players, stuck with him.

A legend at Alabama had been born. A legend now reserved to memory.

Chaparrals close in on post-season play, host Clarendon

Midland College is approaching Count Down time to the Region V tournament, just nine games away, as the second go round of the Western Junior College Conference chase begins tonight.

The Chaparrals are a game ahead of the pursuing pack with an 8-1 record, but face formidable foes in their next two home games.

First, it's Clarendon College at 8 p.m. tonight in the Langford Chaparral Center and then, Monday, the Chaps host South Plains College.

MIDLAND moved into sole possession of first place Tuesday night by overcoming a variety of physical maladies and Western Texas College's unexpected persistence for a 66-51 triumph while Howard College was unseating New Mexico Junior College from its piece of first, 98-87.

That had to be comforting to Coach Jerry Stone, whose next road game is at Hobbs against the NMJC Thunderbirds, whose Coach Ron Black can't wait to get another shot at the Chaps.

Howard might be right in the thick of the battle for first, except that the Hawks lost Saturday night, and to Clarendon, no less. Clarendon followed up the upset with a 75-70 win over Odessa College Tuesday night. So the Bulldogs come to Midland with a 5-4 WJCC record and 16-6 record overall.

"Clarendon always seems to play us tough and our players remember how they had to struggle to win,". Stone said, referring to the five-point win at Clarendon earlier. "I don't think we'll take them lightly. In fact, after finishing the first half of conference play, we know that everyone is going to be coming after us...all psyched up and trying to knock us off."

THE CHAPS do have one advantage in the second half with five of nine games at home, but some of those on the road are lulus, Howard and NMJC, not to mention NMMI, assistant coach Reggie Franklin's alma mater.

Tied for second with NMJC is Amarillo College, the team that handed MC its lone league loss. The defeat at the hands of Howard came in the finals OIL Classic.

CHAPSTQUES—Sophomores Justin Morett and Jerome Crowe will be honored at tonight's game. Pictures of the players will be passed out to the first 500 admissions...Howard's Nathan Givens continues to lead WJCC scorers with a 27.0 average while Midland's Nate Bufford moved into sixth place with an 18.4 average and Chester Smith is eighth at 17.9...Spud Webb, who is the 12th leading scorer, leads the WJCC with 177 assists...In rebounds, Givens is first and Smith is fourth while Ervin Williams and Crowe are ninth and 13th respectively...

It wasn't too long ago that the WJCC had three teams ranked in the Juco's top 20. Now there are none....Laredo (18-1) continues to rank No. 1 while San Jacinto (18-1) is the only other Texas team...No. 2 Scottsdale, Ariz., (20-0) and No. 8 Alexander City, Ala., (15-0) are the only unbeatens in the top 20 while Westark, Ark., the national champion in 1981 is 17-2 and ranked 10th...Fashion Institute of New York is 13-2 and ranked 14th... —TED BATTLES

Rebels take the court early against OHS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College basketball fans might want to arrive at Chaparral Center a little early tonight to catch a glimpse of the Midland Lee girls, who just happen to be well on their way to their third District 4-5A basketball playoff berth.

The Lady Rebels, owning an impressive 19-5 season record, will meet Odessa High at 6:15 p.m. today at Chaparral Center just prior to the Clarendon-Midland College tussle.

Coach Shirley Stephenson's Rebels own a two-game lead in District 4-5A play with an 8-1 record. There are only five district games left for the Rebels, and since there are two district playoff berths available to the district this year, it seems almost certain that Lee will own one of the berths.

Two of those five games for Lee are against Odessa High tonight and Abilene High later. Those two district teams have only one loop win between them, so it appears that Lee has a two game lead with three "real" games left with San Angelo, Big Spring and Odessa Permian.

Midland High, Big Spring, Permian and San Angelo are all in the hunt for the other playoff berth, all owning 6-3 records. Those teams will be in a mad scramble to the end.

At least one of those four teams will suffer a setback tonight. Midland High faces Permian in the district's most crucial outing. The loser will have its back to the wall with only four games left to play.

San Angelo meets Abilene Cooper and Big Spring tests winless Abilene High in tonight's other district games.

The Lee girls have been a high scoring team this year and have three players averaging in double figures. Yshun King is the leading scorer with 314 points for a 13.1 per game average. Felicia Farias has the best average at 13.6, but has played in two fewer games than King and has 300 points. Stacy Harmon owns a 10.5 average with five straight games in double figures.

Midland High is still led by Shelia Christian with 340 points. Lee held her to a mere four points Tuesday, but she is still averaging 14.2 points a game to lead all scorers in the city. Orvetta Johnson is averaging 9.5 per game while Rebecca Caton stands at 8.5 per outing.

COM pool may face water shortage for this weekend's winter invitational

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

More than 300 swimmers from 15 teams are expected to fill the Mabee Memorial Swim Center for the McDonald's COM Winter Invitational swim meet starting Friday night.

The City Of Midland team features the biggest number of entries with 52 youngsters scheduled to participate in the meet with Abilene bringing 44, Odessa 34, Water Ranch of El Paso 33 and Amarillo with 30. Because of numbers, each of those teams looks to be in strong contention for the meet title.

Other swim teams coming to Midland this weekend are: Carlsbad, N.M.; San Angelo, Lubbock Red Raiders, Amarillo Maverick, Big Spring, Fort Bliss of El Paso, Las Cruces, Hobbs, YWCA-Lubbock, and Monahans. Five swimmers have entered competition unattached.

There will be four divisions of competition, eight and under, 10 and under, 11-12 and 13-18. The 13-18 division is a combination of two divisions to guarantee enough entries in each event. The 13-15 and 16-18 swimmers, while swimming at the same time, will receive seperate awards for their top finishers.

"THE STRONGEST team, swimming-wise (fastest previous times) is Amarillo," said COM's new head coach Paul Bridgers. "It will be a hard time for us against them. They have some very, very good swimmers. Some of them were top 16 in the country over the summer for their age groups."

COM, will be strong in the "stroke events," according to Coach Bridgers. COM features two National Junior Olympic hopefuls in Suzi Simpson and Mike Seay. Simpson, 17, will be a strong conteder in her two best events, the 100 and 200-yard butterfly while Seay's, 17, best events are the 100 and 200-yard backstrokd and the 200-yard freestyle.

"We have two National Junior Olympic hopefuls and that's the outstanding age group meet in the country. They should reach their qualification marks this weekend."

Though the NJO is for a national level of competion, Coach Bridgers pointed out that qualification times for that meet are slower than those required for competition in TAGS (Texas Age Group Swimming), a state meet held at the conclusion of the swimming season.

"OUR STRONGEST events really are the strokes (backstroke, breaststroke and butterfly). Our TAGS qualifiers are doing best in the strokes and they are traditionally the hardest events to qualify for in Texas."

The Winter Invitational gives COM its first chance to show off its newly renovate Mabee Pool. Recently work was completed on the building's interior which included the addition of new bleachers with room underneath for a weight training room; a new snack bar, enlarged and improved locker rooms and a new coat of paint.

The meet will begin at 6 p.m. Friday and will continue over the weekend with competition getting underway at 9 a.m. on both Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free. Mabee Pool is located on North Avenue A about one block south of Wadley.

Did You Know?...

Third baseman Brooks Robinson, rated an outstanding glove man, set nine offensive records for the Baltimore Oriole team during his career.

Defense is Skins' difference

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The difference between last year's 8-8 Washington Redskins and the contingent that has come to the Super Bowl with a glittering 11-1 mark is along the defensive line, according to defensive coordinator Richie Petitbon.

"We have the same runners, the same quarterback and even the same offensive line as last year," Petitbon said. "The difference is a defensive line that has a year's experience under its belt, has stayed relatively healthy and has had a chance to mature as the season has gone on."

Last year, the Redskins finished a woeful 21st in the NFL in defending against the rush and 20th when it came to sacking the quarterback. This season, in which they led the NFL in fewest points (128) surrendered during the regular season, they were second in the NFC in in yards given up (284) and fourth in sacks with 32.

In the playoffs, against such imposing runners as Detroit's Billy Sims, Minnesota's Ted Brown and Dallas Cowboy Tony Dorsett, the Redskins have held their opponents to less than 80 yards a game rushing.

The Redskin front four that is responsible for the impressive statistics is composed of veterans Dave Butz and Perry Brooks at tackle and ends Matt Mendenhall and Dexter Manley. Two important additions this year are former New England Patriot Tony McGee, who spells Mendenhall in passing situations, and Darryl Grant, a converted offensive guard who has been asked to fill in for Brooks while he nurses a bad knee.

"We have more experience and with experience comes confidence," notes defensive line coach LaVern Torgeson.

Butz, at 295 pounds, and Brooks, 265, present a large obstacle to teams trying to run up the middle. At the ends, Manley, a first-year player, and McGee, a 12-year veteran playing with new enthusiasm after coming over from the dissident-plagued Patriots, have combined to give the Redskins their best pass rush in years. Together the two combined for 13 sacks during the regular season.

"The biggest improvement is in the pass rush," Petitbon said. "We had 32 sacks in the nine-game season this year, the same number of sacks we had in the full (16 games) season last year."

Recalling Manley's sack of Danny White that knocked the Dallas quarterback out of last week's NFC Championship game, Torgeson said: "Dexter took an inside route, beat All-pro Pat Donovan, jumped over a running back and hit him solid. It was the type of play that few lineman could make. When he makes up his mind, Dexter can be as good a pass rusher as there is in the game."

Wednesday afternoon, Petitbon and head coach Joe Gibbs put the team through its paces for more than two hours.

Among those missing from practice was Joe Washington, who had his injured knee checked out with the team doctor. Washington is listed as questionable for Sunday's game.

Knox signs with Seahawks

SEATTLE (AP) — Chuck Knox, who had problems with his owners in Los Angeles and Buffalo despite winning six division titles in 10 seasons, has resurfaced as head coach of the Seattle Seahawks.

Knox, 50, became the third head coach in the National Football League club's seven-year history Wednesday, just one day after resigning in Buffalo.

"Nobody in this business is a miracle worker," Knox stressed. "We have not set any timetable to win this or win that. But we will be competitive."

Knox takes command of a team yet to the NFL playoffs. His 91-51-1 record, a .636 winning percentage is third among active coaches behind only Miami's Don Shula, .710, and San Diego's Don Coryell, .640.

The late Carroll Rosenbloom, who drowned in a swimming accident in 1979, gave Knox his first NFL head coaching opportunity in 1973. Knox, then 40, was a little-known NFL assistant coach in Detroit.

In five seasons with the Rams, Knox won five division championships. But he never got the Rams to the Super Bowl and Rosenbloom was particularly critical of Knox's offense, calling it dull and unimaginative.

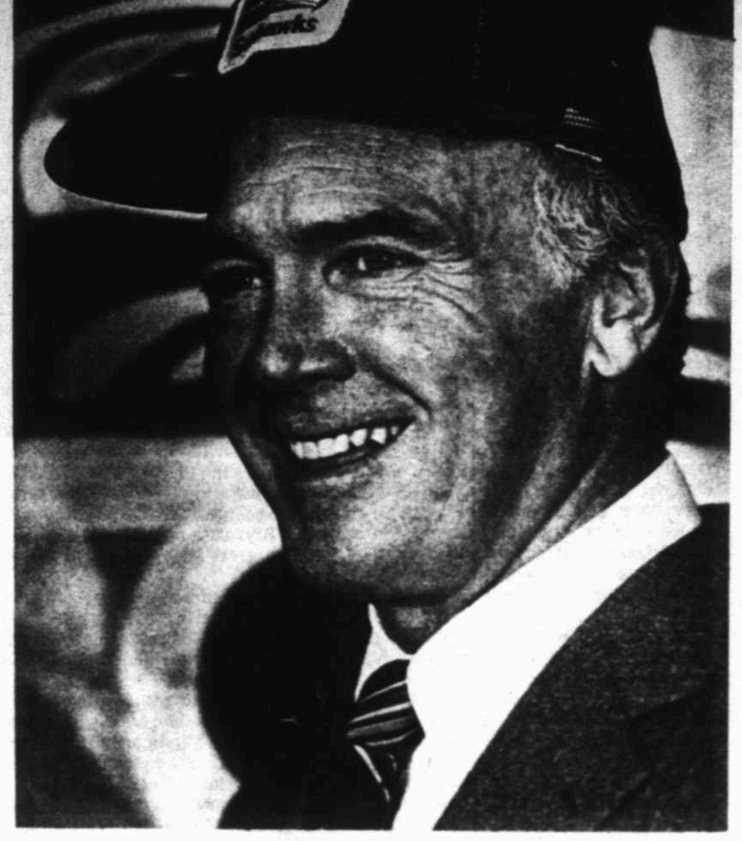

Rosenbloom gave Buffalo owner Ralph Wilson permission to talk to Knox and Wilson signed Knox to a six-year contract for a reported $1.2 million.

But Knox apparently ran into philosophical problems in Buffalo with Wilson. He felt Wilson did not want to spend enough money to win big and Wilson felt Knox wanted to spend too much, sources said.

So Knox resigned Tuesday with one year left on his Buffalo contract. On Wednesday, he flew to Seattle and was introduced at a news conference as the Seahawks' new head coach.

At a news conference, Knox would not disclose any terms of his contract nor its length. But, presumably, it was a long-term pact worth more than the $200,000 annual salary that he made in Buffalo.

Knox, a 10-year NFL head coaching veteran, refused to acknowledge that he was a candidate for the Rams' head coaching job but he reportedly was made a lukewarm offer for the post.

Chuck Knox

At a news conference at the Seahawks' Kirkland, Wash., offices, he said, "I don't want to discuss what other options I had. That would be a slap in the face to other people."

Knox refused to talk about the reasons he left Buffalo.

"I have no complaints about Ralph Wilson," he said when asked about reports that he was unhappy with Wilson's commitment to win.

Knox was effusive in his praise of the Nordstrom family, which owns 51 percent of the Seahawks.

"I'm satisfied here," he said. "I'm satisfied that John Nordstrom (a spokesman for the Seattle ownership) has a commitment for a winning football program here.

"I feel very strongly that the Seattle Seahawks exist for one reason and that's to win."

The Seahawks have a seven-year record of 39-62.

Shula holds off evaluation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don Shula doesn't look back until there's nothing left to look forward to. So, until next Sunday night, he's reserving judgment on this, his 20th season as a head coach and fifth in the Super Bowl.

"I think it's too early to evaluate," he said as he took a break from preparing his fourth Miami Super Bowl team (he also coached Baltimore in its Super Bowl III loss to the New York Jets). "I feel that at the end of the season is when you go back and look at it.

"Up until now, with the problems of the eight weeks off and everything else, I'm happy and proud of the things that have happened, the way this team has come along the last three playoff weeks," Shula said.

"But the final test comes Sunday. I've been around long enough and exposed to Super Bowls now for a few years, and I realize that both teams get equal time, equal attention, all the way through the week.

"But when the game's over, there's only one team that's talked about. The other team's put down, and that's a shame because there are two pretty good teams out of 28 that are left. And for one team to be raised to the heights as a winner and the other to be put down as low as the loser of this game, it just doesn't seem right, but that's what winning and losing are all about."

And, when asked how he felt about the prospect of winning a title "tainted" by the eight-week players' strike and the shortened nine-game season, Shula replied: "Listen, I'll take it, just as long as it's a Super Bowl. They can put that little asterisk down there somewhere where you can sort of ignore it."

Shula was a member of the National Football League's Competition Committee which established the 16-team playoff formula, the so-called Super Bowl tournament, resulting from the eight-week players' strike. And he says he is gratified that out of it has come two of the league's best teams.

Shula, 53, who apprenticed as an assistant at Virginia, Kentucky and with the Detroit Lions, is one of only four NFL coaches — behind George Halas, Curly Lambeau and Tom Landry — to have won 200 games. He was voted by the Pro Football Hall of Fame's 25-member selection committee as the Coach of the Decade, and he has the best winning percentage of any active coach.

Even at their best, the Bucks lose to the Lakers

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

"We are playing as good as our team can possibly play and have been for over a month," Milwaukee Bucks Coach Don Nelson said.

That has been good enough to make the Bucks the runaway leaders in the National Basketball Association's Central Division, but it wasn't enough to beat the defending NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers Wednesday night.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 29 points, including six in the last four minutes, to bring the Lakers from behind and defeat Milwaukee 115-113.

"It's a super game between two divisional leaders, the type of game I was expecting," said Lakers guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who had nine points and 20 assists. "We played well in the first half. They played well in the second half and the game consequently was up for grabs in the last minutes."

In other NBA games, Boston bombed Washington 125-99, Philadelphia tripped Phoenix 113-102, Chicago defeated Cleveland 124-119, Seattle beat Detroit 118-109 and Dallas stopped Kansas City 125-115.

The Lakers, who led 60-54 at halftime, trailed by seven points with 4:11 remaining before scoring 11 straight points to take a 115-111 lead with one minute to play.Bucks' center Dave Cowens scored to close the gap to two points and Milwaukee hand a chance to tie when the Lakers missed a shot at the 20-second mark.

But Cowens missed a follow shot with two seconds left to give the Lakers the win.

Jamaal Wilkes had 26 points, including the Lakers' other five down the stretch. Bob McAdoo added 19 points for Los Angeles.

Marques Johnson had 30 points for Milwaukee and Charlie Criss and Junior Bridgeman added 20 and 16 points, respectively.

But what might have cost Milwaukee the game was a calf injury suffered by star guard Sidney Moncrief on Tuesday night. Moncrief played sparingly, scored only 10 points and wasn't in the game at the end.

"He wanted to play down the stretch," Nelson said of Moncrief. "He's probably mad at me for not playing him, but I would not take any chance of losing him."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley was most pleased with his team's defensive effort down the stretch as Milwaukee scored only two points the last four minutes.

"We tightened the reins toward the end, really stiffened up," Riley said. "Kareem came through for us tonight, making big baskets at the end. We tried to key on Marques and Sidney.

"They are a very good basketball team," Riley added. "We had to do everything to win. When we were seven down we started making things happen and came up with the big shots."

Celtics 125, Bullets 99

Kevin McHale led eight Boston players in double figures as the Celtics avenged a two-point loss to Washington two nights earlier.

McHale, starting in place of flu-stricken Cedric Maxwell, had six points as the Celtics scored the first 14 points in the game. They also got the first 10 points of the second period for a 44-24 advantage.

76ers 113, Suns 102

Moses Malone had 34 points and 11 rebounds, while reserve guard Clint Richardson sparked a fourth-period rally by Philadelphia against Phoenix.

The 76ers trailed 83-79 going into the fourth quarter after the Suns outscored them 25-13 in the third period. Richardson had eight points in the final 12 minutes, and the 76ers never trailed again after his basket gave them a 93-91 lead.

Walter Davis led the Suns with 30 points.

Sonics 118, Pistons 109

Gus Williams and Jack Sikma had 26 points apiece as Seattle beat Detroit to break a nine-game road losing streak.

The Pistons led 46-44 before the Sonics scored 11 straight points to take the lead for good.

Isiah Thomas led all scorers with 27 points for Detroit, which had won three games in a row before the loss.

Mavericks 125, Kings 115

Mark Aguirre scored 35 points, including 12 in the fourth quarter as Dallas set a franchise record with its fifth straight victory.

Kelvin Ransey and Jay Vincent each finished with 28 points for the Mavericks, who have won seven of their last eight games.

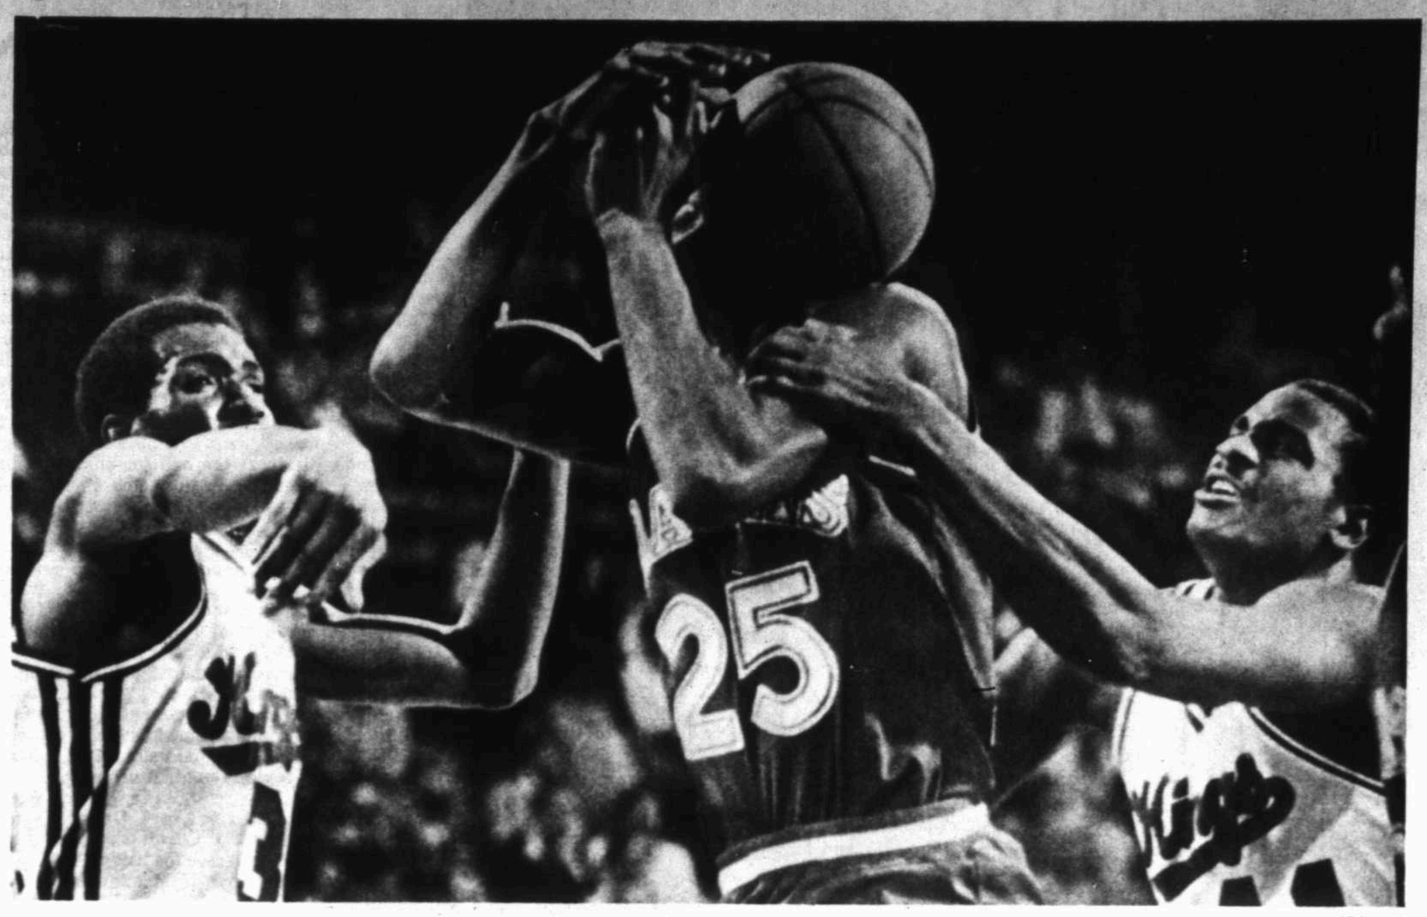

Kansas City, which got 20 points each from Larry Drew and Mike Woodson, battled back from a 10-point deficit to take a 75-71 lead midway through the third quarter. But Dallas took back control of the game by finishing the quarter with a 23-9 spurt.

Bulls 124, Cavaliers 119

Reggie Theus scored 27 points and Dave Corzine 21 as Chicago handed Cleveland its 35th loss in 42 games.

The Bulls led at the end of each period although the Cavaliers cut a 106-93 deficit to 120-116 with 26 seconds to go. A free throw by Quintin Dailey and two by Corzine kept Chicago in front.

Geoff Huston scored a career-high 31 points and World Free added 30 for Cleveland.

Fourth-stringer embarrases Black Hawks

By The Associated Press

Gary Lupul and Dave "Tiger" Williams were the unlikely heroes as the Vancouver Canucks continue to find ways to deal misery to the slumping Chicago Black Hawks.

Lupul, a fourth-string center called up from the minors because the Canucks leading scorer, Ivan Hlinka, was suffering with a back ailment, had a goal and two assists and Williams added a goal as the Canucks handed the Black Hawks a 5-1 loss Wednesday night. It was the eighth defeat in 13 National Hockey League games for the Black Hawks, who still lead the Norris Division by seven points over Minnesota.

"It's a big lift for a kid like Gary Lupul to come along and take over the way he has," Canucks General Manager Harry Neale said. "Fortunately the loss of Ivan Hlinka has not hurt as much as I feared. Lupul's outstanding ability is forechecking and tonight he excelled and was the reason the Hawks came up empty."

Williams, the Canucks veteran left winger, said, "It's a good thing the Black Hawks are in the league because I have seven goals and two assists in the last eight games I've played against them. Since my goal production is only seven this season I just thank my lucky stars that there is a team I can score against."

Vancouver's victory followed an embarrassing 6-2 defeat against Detroit on Tuesday.

Sabres 7, Canadiens 3

Buffalo raced to a 6-0 lead in the first two periods to whip Montreal.

Craig Ramsay started the onslaught with a short-handed goal four minutes into the game, and Tony McKegney and Andre Savard also scored in the first period. Lindy Ruff, Hannu Virta and Ric Seiling scored in the second period before Mark Napier finally got the Canadiens on the scoreboard.

Capitals 6, Penguins 2

Dennis Maruk and Bobby Carpenter scored 21 seconds apart to trigger a five-goal first period that carried Washington past Pittsburgh.

The Penguins are 0-9-1 in their last 10 starts, matching a team record for consecutive games without a victory.

Bengt Gustafsson, Alan Haworth and Glen Currie also scored for the Capitals in the first 14:43 of the game.

Leafs 6, Oilers 6

Miroslav Frycer scored two of Toronto's three third-period goals that lifted the Maple Leafs into a tie with Edmonton.

The Leafs went into the final period trailing 5-3, but Frycer and Dan Daoust scored 11 seconds apart on power plays to tie the score. Frycer put Toronto ahead with his second goal before Laurie Boschman deadlocked the game again with a goal for the Oilers at 9:14.

Wayne Gretzky helped Edmonton take a 3-2 lead after the first period with his 43rd and 44th goals.

Wednesday rare day for college basketball; No top 20 team loses

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Two of the nation's Top Ten college basketball teams visited New York and learned that it's not always Fun City.

Fifth-ranked Memphis State and No.8 Louisville had to fight for their lives before coming away with hard-earned victories over Iona and Rutgers Wednesday night in a Madison Square Garden doubleheader.

First, Memphis State held off Iona 94-88 behind Keith Lee's 28 points, including a pair of free throws with three seconds left when Iona called a timeout although it had none remaining and was hit with a bench technical.

Then, Louisville froze the ball for more than seven minutes late in the game and nosed out Rutgers 54-49 for its eighth consecutive triumph.

Top Ten

Memphis State, 15-1, took advantage of foul problems by Iona's top two scorers — Steve Burtt had 31 points and Gary Springer added 15 — to move from a 61-59 lead to 70-61. Lee and Bobby Parks, who finished with 21 points, each scored four for the Tigers during that span.

Memphis State's first 15 opponents had averaged only 61.4 points a game and Coach Dana Kirk called Iona "the first team we've had this year we couldn't contain offensively."

In the nightcap, Louisville Coach Denny Crum said he thought it was obvious why he ordered the Cardinals to freeze the ball with a 51-49 lead and more than eight minutes left.

"We shot 37 percent in the first half, and I doubt it was that good in the second half," he said. "When you play against a zone, you don't get any easy shots. We were shooting to begin with, but they obviously didn't want to come out and play us."

Rutgers' Tom Young said his players didn't challenge Louisville's stall "because we were tired. I wanted to rest our players and then come out and foul with two minutes to go. Who figures they're going to stall against us for five minutes?"

The slowdown finally was interrupted with 31 seconds left when Scooter McCray was fouled and made two free throws. Sophomore Milt Wagner led the Cardinals with 22 points, including two baskets that gave them a 51-47 lead.

In Chicago, Ted Kitchel scored 29 points after being held scoreless for the first nine minutes and led 15-1 Indiana over Northwestern in a Big Ten game. The Hoosiers trailed through most of the first half, but finally went ahead to stay early in the second half on a three-point shot by Kitchel and a basket by Jim Thomas. Randy Wittman added 25 points for Indiana, while Art Aaron topped Northwestern with 21, including a trio of three-pointers.

Kitchel, who connected on four three-point shots, said he doesn't like the new rule.

"I don't like messing with the game of college basketball," he said. "It's a good game. You don't need new rules and shot clocks. They should leave college basketball alone."

At Charlottesville, Va., Virginia's Ralph Sampson scored 16 points, grabbed 16 rebounds and blocked four shots and the Cavaliers, 16-2, pulled away from George Washington in the final seven minutes. Reserve Jim Miller added 11 points, all in the second half.

Houston's Abdul Akeem Olajuwon scored 20 points, pulled down eight rebounds and rejected four shots to lead the Cougars, 16-2, over Rice in Southwest Conference action.

Second Ten

In another SWC game at Lubbock, Texas, 16-1 Arkansas used clutch free throws down the stretch to fend off Texas Tech. Darrell Walker had 18 points for the Razorbacks, who converted 16 of 24 free throws in the second half.

At Lawrence, Kan., Steve Stipanovich scored 25 points and Jon Sundvold poured in 18 of his 22 in the second half as Missouri eased past Kansas in a Big Eight game. The Tigers are 15-3 overall, 3-0 in league play.

At Landover, Md., Patrick Ewing had 22 points, 11 rebounds and four blocked shots as Georgetown, 14-4, pummeled Seton Hall. The Hoyas scored the first eight points of the second half as part of a 22-2 blitz that broke open a close contest.

Southwest Conference

In the only other SWC game Wednesday, Baylor pounded Texas 76-43 for its second victory in six conference matches. Texas fell to 1-5.

Daryl Baucham scored a career-high 22 points to lead Baylor to its victory over Texas, which could hit only 26 percent of its field goal attempts. The Bears took a 24-6 lead in the first half and were on top 36-14 at the half. Bill Wendlandt led Texas with 13.

IAAF warns USOC not to let Nehemiah run

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The president of the International Amateur Athletic Federation has warned that the U.S. Olympic Committee's disregard of a ruling barring hurdler Renaldo Nehemiah from all track events will interfere with preparations for the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

Primo Nebiola, president of the world governing body for track and field, has asked the International Olympic Committee to make the USOC abide by the body's stand on Nehemiah, according to a letter released Wednesday.

In a Jan. 19 letter to Olympic President Juan Samaranch that was released Wednesday, Nebiolo asked the IOC to insist that the USOC "respect the eligibility rules of the IAFF" on the status of Nehemiah.

Nehemiah, the world record holder in the 110-meter hurdles, signed a professional football contract and played with the San Francisco 49ers of the National Football League during the 1982 season.

The IAAF declared Nehemiah ineligible to compete in track, but USOC President William Simon said recently that Nehemiah was eligible for domestic events. On Tuesday, the IAAF reaffirmed that Nehemiah was ineligible despite Simon's statement.

Vaulters' pole a heavy burden to carry

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times and
Washington Post News Service

What happened to pole vaulter Anthony Curran would have been funny in a cartoon but was a little scary in real life.

Curran was hustling through an airport, carrying his 16-foot fiberglass pole. He stepped onto a down escalator, being careful to keep the pole tilted upward so as not to ram his fellow passengers. But his angle was too high, and the front of the pole jammed against a wall. The other end was wedged into the steps of the escalator. The pole began to bend.

In a cartoon, the pole would have sprung the escalator in the reverse direction, slingshotting the riders into space. In real life, the pole kept bending until it exploded in a shower of powdered fiberglass.

It was just another incident in the most difficult event in track and field — transporting poles.

At the meet, the pole is the vaulter's ticket to fly.

"THERE IS a part in the vault where you really do fly," says vaulter Tom Hintnaus. "On a bad vault, nothing feels right, but on a good vault, after you plant, you're gone. It almost feels like flying. As you release, you get that weightless feeling of flying."

At other times, however, the pole is the vaulter's burden. Imagine trying to get one through a revolving door, for instance.

"It's such a pain traveling with poles," Curran says, "that even other athletes don't want to travel with us."

The vaulter usually travels with three to five poles, in cardboard tubes. A world-class vaulter would no more rely on borrowed poles than Minnesota Fats would pluck a house cue stick off the rack for a big shootout.

Trouble usually starts at the airport, checking this strange bit of baggage.

"It was worse in the early years, the early '60s," says John Pennel, the world's first 17-foot vaulter, now retired. "There were no big jets and the poles wouldn't fit in the luggage holds."

So Pennel would personally supervise the loading, long before the passengers boarded. The poles would have to be loaded into the passenger cabin, but they wouldn't bend enough to fit through the regular doors. So they would be loaded through the front cockpit windows, or through rear doors or bathroom vents. Then they'd be tied to the overhead racks or stacked along the aisle.

Pennel became friendly with many of the pilots, actually keeping a book on which ones were most cooperative — "It helped when I started breaking world records."

But flight attendants were seldom thrilled.

"I always fought with the stewardesses," says former Olympic medalist Bob Seagren. "They would always hassle me, then the captain would override the stewardess. There were some unbelievable fights among the crew members over poles."

THEN THERE are those lovable baggage handlers, most of them frustrated linebackers, to whom finesse is a foreign word.

Seagren once bent his pole and popped it neatly into a baggage hold, but at the end of the trip he couldn't get it out, and was holding up the next flight. After a long struggle he freed it, to the disappointment of a baggage handler who stood by with a hacksaw.

Pennel checked two poles at a baggage counter, where the friendly clerk assured him the poles would fit in the plane and would be delivered safely. Later, at baggage claim, Pennel discovered that his two 16-foot poles had been neatly sawed into eight 4-foot poles. Although ruined and useless, they were much easier to carry through the airport.

It is common for poles to be run over and crushed by service vehicles on airport aprons, to be dropped and shattered by handlers.

A few years ago Earl Bell was traveling with four poles taped together. Somehow they were run over and crushed, but not visibly. On his first vault that night, Bell planted his pole and it splintered. He grabbed another and tried it again, getting all of three feet off the runway before it splintered in the same spot.

Using an unfamiliar hole can be almost as dangerous. Pennel once borrowed a pole when his were lost in transit. On his first attempt he fell back on the runway and injured his heel, but sprayed painkiller on it and went on to set an American record. The next night, in another town, with another borrowed pole, he fell again and hurt his wrist. X-rays showed broken bones in his heel and hand.

SO THE vaulter carries his own poles, like a golfer carries his own clubs or a baseball team carries its own bats, never trusting to a local supply. Fortunately for golfers and baseball players, their equipment isn't 16 feet long.

The vaulter is conspicuous. Don Bragg used to tell curios folks that he was carrying a 16-foot lightning rod; Pennel claimed to be The Great Wasnini, king of the tightrope, with his balancing poles.

Sailors learn of nature's brutal oceans

First around-the-world sailboat race takes its toll

By EDMUND MAHONEY
Los Angeles Times and
Washington Post News Service

One skipper abandoned his sinking ship in heavy seas near Antarctica. Another, exhausted and lashed to the helm, chatted with hallucinations. A third boat was reduced to flotsam on a rocky island near Australia.

The three are among the casualties of the BOC Challenge, the first single-handed, around-the-world sailboat race.

Sixteen boats embarked from Newport, R.I., on Aug. 28. On Jan. 15, 14,000 miles later, the remaining 11 started on the third — and possibly most brutal — leg from Sydney, Australia.

So far, the race's grim label — organized suicide — has not applied. But, telephone conversations with some sailors forced to withdraw from the race seem to indicate that the fleet of sailboats ranging in length from 38 feet to 56 feet has left a battered trail of men and boats in its wake.

In about five months, they have sailed halfway around the world, from Newport to Cape Town to Sydney. The boats have been tossed about like corks, knocked down, frozen and broken apart by pounding seas. Gipsy Moth V, the last boat built by Sir Francis Chichester, the famed British aviator and sailor, was wrecked on rocks.

THE SKIPPERS, often thousands of miles from medical attention, have suffered shortages of food and water, bruises, infections, frostbite and mental and physical exhaustion. They still must sail to Rio de Janiero before returning to Newport.

"Well, you really can't afford to panic, can you? You just take it as you can," says Tony Lush of Alachua, Fla. They seem mild words for someone forced to abandon ship in towering seas near Antarctica when his 54-foot ketch, Lady Pepperell, began sinking between Africa and Australia.

It was a knockdown that knocked Lush out of the race.

"It was at night and I was in bed so I can only judge what happened from what I saw inside the boat. The only way I have been able to describe it is something lika a swan dive with a one-third twist," Lush said by phone from Sydney.

"The boat appeared to dive off a wave and roll over, at least 135, maybe 150 degrees," he said.

The next morning, Nov. 29, Lush found that supports designed to absorb shock from Lady Pepperell's keel had been broken. The keel was swinging freely and in danger of falling off. Without a keel, which provides stability, the boat could flip in a wind. It was leaking, too.

IN WHAT everyone associated with the race considered an amazing stroke of luck, Lush learned by radio that fellow American competitor Francis Stokes of Moorestown, N.J., was only 40 miles east. The two boats rendezvoused that evening.

"I saw the opportunity to save my hide and I figured the chances of me making it to (South Africa) were pretty slim," Lush said.

Lush caught a line from Stokes, made it fast to his safety harness, jumped into the ocean and was dragged aboard.

Nearly all the competitors have reported at least one knockdown. Between Cape Town and Rio de Janiero, the fleet sails between latitudes 40 degrees and 58 degrees south, a band around the Earth that mariners call the roaring forties.

The swatch of ocean is unobstructed by landmass. Constant, easterly moving low-pressure systems whip up gale force winds and seas up to 90 or 100 feet. Ships sailing before the wind, like the around-the-world fleet, tend to yaw, or slip sideways, down the leading edge of a wave, resulting in a knockdown or worse.

PAUL RODGERS of London had made it just past Cape Town when he narrowly survived being knocked over by a wave in his 55-foot schooner, Spirit of Pentax.

But before the knockdown, as he crossed the northern and southern Atlantic, Rodgers was plagued by broken self-steering equipment that kept him at the helm. He could only sleep in snatches, and he suffered hallucinations throughout the crossing.

"It was people coming aboard. They're usually a friend, or two friends giving me advice," Rodgers said by telephone from Cape Town, South Africa.

"They say, 'This is ridiculous. You go ahead and have a nap. We'll look after things here.' And at the time, I did it," he said.

"It always seems to be helpful. They have precisely the same mannerisms as my friends. Unfortunately, at the time my mind doesn't say, 'What are you doing here, 1,000 miles from the nearest land?'" he said.

RODGERS had been without food three days when he reached Cape Town. He had not been much longer out of port en route to Sydney when a huge wave put an end to his race.

"She was quite a mess afterwards," he said.

Rodgers, who lashed himself to his schooner while above decks, had gone below to brew some coffee at night and was listening to loud rock 'n' roll tapes, when the sound of the wave drowned out the music.

"I was really pushing the boat, hitting 16 knots at times — which in this boat, with only one person, is really quite fast — when the boat went over.

"At that particular time, the boat was upside down and the companionway was open. Water was being forced into the cabin by the force of the wave. I was thrown across the cabin and couldn't move.

"I could only sit and watch the water coming in. It looked for a little while like she might sink."

Even those boats remaining in the race have suffered extensive damage to equipment from the wind and water and have required refitting after each leg of the race. Despite the breakdowns, organizers consider the race exceptionally successful — so far.

"I THINK the race is going better than expected at this point," said David White of Florida, who dreamed it up.

"Nobody expected this thing to be a piece of cake. We're sailing a boat around the world. We've lost a couple of boats, but we haven't lost any people," he said.

White's 56-foot cutter, Gladiator, is now out of the running. After compiling a significant lead in the Atlantic, Gladiator simply began cracking apart from the strain.

White made repairs in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., but was 30 days behind fleet leader Philippe Jeantot of Le Havre, France, when he made Cape Town. After a series of self-steering-gear problems in Cape Town, White withdrew, figuring it was hopeless to think he could ever regain his lead.

"I was in the race to win it. I was never in this race only to do it. I still think I have the fastest boat in the race. It's just the breaks of the game," he said from Cape Town.

Possibly the biggest tragedy so far in the race was the destruction of Gipsy Moth V, which Chichester built after seiling Gipsy Moth IV on his famous single-handed circumnavigation. Gipsy Moth V became a victim of the exhaustion suffered by her skipper, Desmond Hampton of London.

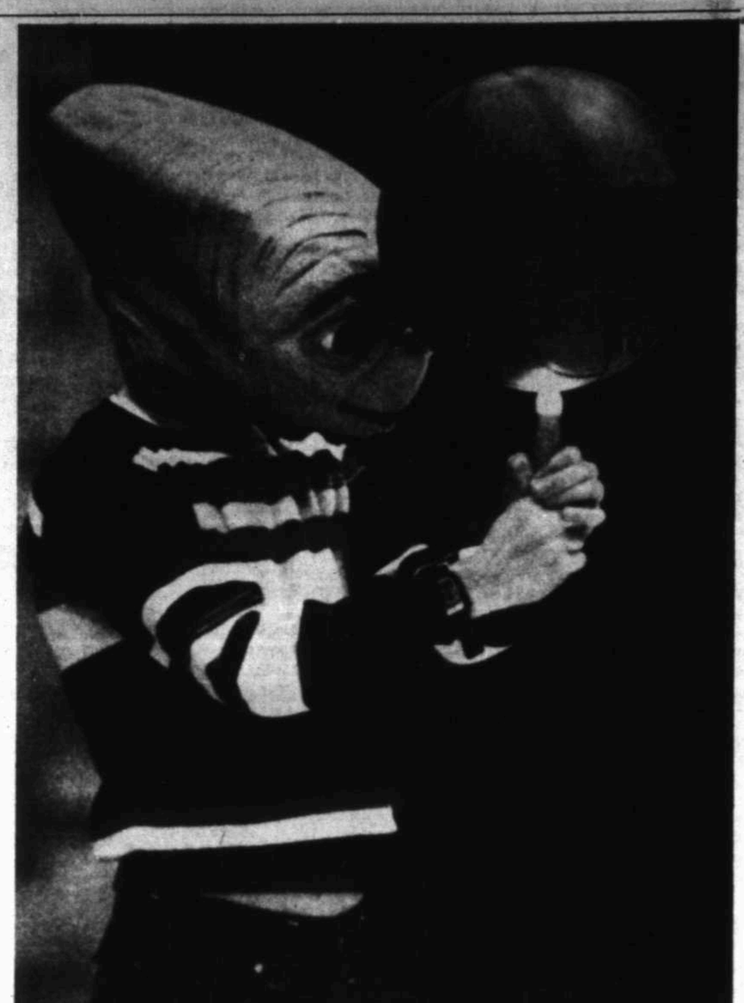

Compounding the disaster was that Hampton was hard on fleet leader Jeantot's heels and only a day or so out of Sydney when Gipsy Moth V was reduced to flotsam on rockbound Gabo Island off Australia's southeast coast.

HAMPTON SAID last week from Sydney that he had just navigated treacherous Bass Strait and then threaded his way through the numerous offshore oil rigs beyond it when he ran aground. He was exhausted after remaining awake for two days, first through the Strait and then through the rigs.

"I was short on sleep and at 4:30 p.m. decided to try an hour catnap. I knew exactly where I was and where I was heading," he said.

Hampton said he set a course, using his self-steering gear, to take him downwind of Gabo Island, and retired. He thought he would wake in an hour by habit. He slept 40 minutes too long.

Two others have withdrawn from the race, which is being sponsored by the British Oxygen Co. New Zealander Greg Coles started late and gave up trying to catch the fleet in Cape Town. Thomas Lindholm of Hidden Hills, Calif., withdrew in the North Atlantic after numerous gear failures.

Dolphin's all-time receiver playing in first Super Bowl

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's no wonder people mistakenly link Nat Moore to the Miami Dolphins' glory years.

The nine-year National Football League veteran concedes that sometimes he feels like he was a part of those Miami teams that made three straight Super Bowl appearances in the early 1970s.

But when the 5-foot-9, 188-pound wide receiver looks at the hands that have caught more passes than any other Dolphin receiver, the realization that he has never played in a NFL title game smacks him in the face.

"A lot of people come up to me and ask to see my Super Bowl ring and it sinks in," said Moore, a native of Miami and product of the University of Florida. "It's hard for them to understand that I didn't play on those teams.

"I played with a lot of those guys and sometimes you got the feeling of being a part of the success," Moore added. "I just didn't get the (Super Bowl) ring."

The Dolphins selected Moore in the third round of the 1974 NFL draft, the spring after winning Super Bowl VIII. It would be nine years, however, before Coach Don Shula's team would win another playoff game.

"I always had the feeling I was a year too late and that I'd be a year too early leaving," said Moore, the Dolphins' all-time leading receiver with 339 receptions for 5,284 yards and 48 touchdowns.

"I think every player's goal is to be on a championship football team," the 31-year-old receiver said. "We've been close, making the playoffs, but not quite good enough."

Moore's dream of playing in a title game will be realized Sunday when the Dolphins meet the Washington Redskins in Super Bowl XVII in nearby Pasadena.

It's ironic, though, that the appearance comes during Moore's worst season as a pro, and just a few weeks after he said he'd like to play for another team next season.

Moore, who returned from knee surgery this season, caught a career-low eight passes for 82 yards and one touchdown. For the first time in his career, he found himself riding the bench.

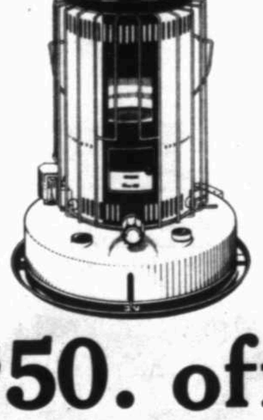

Looking back, he said he is not bitter and managed to smile.

"Anytime that you can go to the Super Bowl, you can forget about all the bad things that have happened," he said. "Everybody has personal goals and the only personal goal I've ever set is that I want to be a part of a Super Bowl champion.

"I have that opportunity now, and whether I've contributed as much does not matter. The big thing is what happens for 49 guys, not one," he added.

Moore, however, hasn't completely pushed the frustration out of his mind.

"Once the season is over and whatever I decide to do can't hurt anybody but me, Coach Shula and I will talk about what's going to be best for the Miami Dolphins as well as Nat Moore," he said.

Sports world reacts to Bryant's death

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

"A hero who always seemed larger than life"..." Bigger than the game itself"..."A man's man"..."A monumental figure in intercollegiate athletics"..."The best that's ever been"..."The master coach!"

The tributes poured in Wednesday, each seemingly more glowing than the last one, as the stunned world of college football tried to find the proper words to pay tribute to Paul "Bear" Bryant, who died of a massive heart attack at the age of 69, the winningest coach in history.

But in the final analysis, Bryant was simply a football coach. And one after another, his adulators kept coming back to the same phrase — "the greatest football coach of all time."

"When you saw football, you thought of Coach Bryant," said John Cooper, athletic director and head coach at the University of Tulsa.

Almost 50 of "Bear's Boys" — his former players and assistants — became head coaches in the college and pro ranks. The latest was Bruce Arians, who coached the running backs last season and is the new head coach at Temple University.

"I have a hollow, hollow feeling right now knowing Coach is not there," Arians said. "I was looking forward to going back and visiting him and he had made plans to come to our game with Penn State next year. He said he wanted to get around to see as many of his former players and coaches as he could."

College football wouldn't have been quite the same without the Bear prowling the sidelines next fall. Now, he won't even be in the stands.

"It was going to be difficult not seeing him on the sidelines, but his death is going to leave a void in so many places," said Clemson Coach Danny Ford, a player and coach under Bryant at Alabama. "He is going to be missed by so many people because he helped so many. That was his main goal in life, to help people. And he reached so many of them. He taught all his players something about life.

"He related football to life, and everybody who was under his teachings had to come out a better person. And when you think about the thousands of players who wore his colors, it's easy to determine that this world is a little bit better because of Coach Bryant."

Charlie McClendon, executive director of the American Football Coaches Association and former coach at LSU, who played under Bryant at Kentucky, saw him two weeks ago at the AFCA convention in Los Angeles.

"He looked as good and as useful as ever," McClendon said. "I still don't want to believe it."

Yale Coach Carmen Cozza also saw Bryant in Los Angeles. "He joked with us that he was going to go fishing," Cozza recalled. "My God, he couldn't even enjoy it."

One of the last people to visit with Bryant was Ray Perkins, his successor as Alabama's head coach.

"I saw him this morning (Wednesday)," Perkins said. "He made the statement to me that he was feeling real good. He looked good. He was sitting up on his bedside having breakfast.

"We talked about why he went to the hospital. Then we talked about recruiting and me leaving on a trip. In fact, I kinda had to run out of the hospital to catch a plane.

"The last thing I remember, he was going to call a young man that we're recruiting for one of our coaches last night (Tuesday) and he didn't get to make that call. He wanted me to tell the coach that he was sorry he didn't get to make that call."

Penn State's Joe Paterno, whose 1982 national champions lost only to Bryant and Alabama, said:

"The death of Paul Bryant is a tremendous shock and difficult to believe. He almost appeared to be indestructible. He was a monumental figure in intercollegiate athletics, a man who set standards not easily attainable by men. He was a giant, and we will miss him."

President Reagan, who telephoned Bryant's widow Wednesday evening to express his condolences, said Bryant "made legends out of ordinary people ... He was a hard, but loved, taskmaster. Patriotic to the core, devoted to his players and inspired by a winning spirit that would not quit, Bear Bryant gave his country the gift of a life unsurpassed. In making the impossible seem easy, he lived what we all strive to be."

Richard Williamson, executive director of the Bluebonnet Bowl and a former player and assistant under Bryant, called him "a totally honest, totally dedicated person. He always gave you a totally honest answer, and there's not a lot of people who can give you that these days."

"He was a winner," said former Ohio State Coach Woody Hayes, whose team was whipped 35-6 by Alabama in the 1978 Sugar Bowl. "He was honorable, and he won with good, clean ballclubs."

Pat Dye, head coach at Auburn University, Alabama's bitter intrastate rival, spent nine years as an assistant under Bryant. "He was like all great people who have come through American history," Dye said. "Though he may be gone, his teaching will last forever in the lives of those he touched."

Jones Ramsey, sports information at the University of Texas who held that position at Texas A&M when Bryant coached there and whose son, Paul, was named after Bryant, said that "what his kids thought of him as a person meant more to him than winning, and that's what they'll remember him for."

Steve Sloan, the new head coach at Duke and once rumored to be the leading candidate to succeed Bryant, called his old coach "a godfather-type person for everybody in coaching. Last month, I spent a night there in his house. We watched one of the pro games and he was in excellent health. He was feeling good, and the only worry he had at that time was whether to retire or whether to coach.

"The thing that I'm of course saddest about was that he was looking forward to having some time on his own to hunt and fish and play golf. I remember last time I saw him that's what he remarked to me, that he just wanted to spend some time doing things that he wanted to enjoy."

It was after a 20-10 loss to LSU last November that Bryant first talked publicly about retiring. LSU Coach Jerry Stovall said Bryant "influenced more young men as players and coaches than any man who ever touched the game. We have all suffered a great loss in his death, but we were blessed for 69 years with his presence."

Florida Coach Charley Pell, who played at Alabama two decades ago, talked with Bryant on Tuesday, a few hours before the coach entered the hospital.

"He was in good spirits and laughed often. It was the best talk we've had since I've known him and I got to express many of my strong feelings."

Chinese need sportsmanship training course

PEKING (AP) — A national sports meeting, mentioning brawls in recent Chinese-Canadian hockey games, has demanded stronger ideological education to improve Chinese athletes' behavior, the official Xinhua News Agency reported Wednesday.

At a meeting to plan for the 1983 national sports meet, Chinese officials said China's sports achievements were the main factor in the last several years, but there had been problems in both international soccer and hockey games with unsportsmanlike conduct and even serious fighting, Xinhua added.

In competition among Chinese teams, there also had been numerous cases of fighting and hitting and cursing referees, they said.

Xinhua said the officials called an improvement in the atmosphere on the playing fields a pressing matter.

Earlier this month, the Chinese Sports Commission said two Chinese players who brawled with Canadians in games in the northeast Chinese city of Harbin in December were left home from a series of games in Japan as punishment.

The Canadian team was from the southern Alberta Institute of Technology. The Chinese press said its game with the Harbin team on Dec. 22 was held up 20 minutes by a brawl and rock-and-bottle throwing from the stands.

The newspaper Sports News said that despite repeated instructions and criticism, some teams had not taken the matter of sportsmanship and discipline seriously enough.

Biggest Super Bowl team is behind the cameras

By DAN MARTINSE
Los Angeles Times and
Washington Post News Service

The largest team participating in Sunday's Super Bowl in Pasadena will not be equipped with shoulder pads and helmets. Most of their names and faces will remain unnoticed by football fans, and their team emblem is a passive-looking peacock.

Their most potent offensive weapon may be simply a voice in a broadcast booth, or a hand-held camera lurking among the spectators at the Rose Bowl, but an estimated television audience of 112 million viewers in the United States is depending on this 130-member NBC team to bring Super Bowl XVII into their living rooms.

BROADCASTERS Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen will assume a large share of that responsibility, teaming up to announce their second Super Bowl. Enberg will handle the play-by-play and Olsen will provide the commentary. Together, they have been preparing for this telecast since the first week of the season.

"I think the way we prepare for the Super Bowl is similar to how the football season progresses," Enberg said. "When the regular season concludes, you are hopefully left with the two best teams competing in the Super Bowl. Each week Merlin and I look at tapes of our games and set standards for ourselves to improve the broadcast. As the season progresses, we try to increase our standards until our broadcast is sharpened to the point where, hopefully, we can provide the best coverage possible for the Super Bowl."

This is NBC's ninth Super Bowl telecast. Before the game Enberg and Olsen will meet with director and coproducer Ted Nathanson to discuss possible story ideas to be used during the broadcast. Nathanson has worked on every Super Bowl telecast on NBC since Super Bowl I in 1967, when both NBC and CBS shared a single camera to televise the game.

SUNDAY NBC will use 20 cameras (13 stationary, five hand-held "minicams," one on a helicopter and one on the Goodyear blimp) to cover Super Bowl XVII.

"Working with them (Enberg and Olsen) is like having two extra producers in the broadcast booth," Nathanson said. "They are always totally prepared and understand the technical end of the broadcast."

"I think that you get the best results in a telecast when you arrive fortified with information before the game," Enberg said. "I feel my job is to represent the average sports fan in the booth. So when I prepare for the game, I'll talk to the players at one of their practices and usually leave with four or five stories about the men that would be interesting to the fans. So when I get into the booth, and the time is right, I'll tell the story expressing to the viewer that here is so-and-so, and this is why you should care about him."

Olsen, the former all-pro defensive tackle for the Los Angeles Rams who recently was inducted into the pro football hall of fame, will serve as a strategist during the game. Together Enberg and Olsen hope to produce a broadcast to help viewers understand the strategy of the coaches and players as well as the stories behind that strategy.

"BROADCASTING A game, any game, is not unlike a three-act play," Enberg said. "You introduce the characters and develop them as the game progresses. The broadcast should have a beginning, middle and an end. I think Merlin and I both are educators, inherently, so at the end of the Super Bowl I would be most satisfied if the fan went away feeling fully informed and enriched by the job we did."

It will be Nathanson's job to decide what pictures will actually appear on the screen to accompany the words of Enberg and Olsen. Outside of the Rose Bowl, in the NBC production truck, Nathanson will decide which camera shots and angles to use and how long they will appear on the screen. Co-producer George Finkel will be in charge of replay coverage.

"The biggest worry I have is the possibility of missing something," Nathanson said. "There is always that possibility that you could miss a big play or an important penalty. And if you miss a play, there is nothing you can do to bring it back."

NBC IS PLANNING to use several technical devices to enhance the production. During last year's Super Bowl, which recorded the highest audience rating of any sporting event in history, CBS analyst John Madden used the CBS Chalkboard, which allowed him to draw on the screen while commenting on a play. Olsen will use the same type of device today, but Nathanson said that Olsen will use it in a different way.

"It's basically a coaching-linked device, so we won't find it as beneficial as CBS," Nathanson said. "Madden draws a lot of pass patterns when he uses it. When Merlin is analyzing a play, and he wants to point out something significant, such as a stunting defensive lineman, or a block that caused a big offensive gain, he'll draw an arrow on that player. He may occasionally draw out a play, but the main use will come when there are a lot of players in the picture and he wants to single someone out."

NBC ALSO will use replay packages, a technique they introduced two years ago. The actions of a player over several plays will be recorded on tape, and then shown as a package when the opportunity arises, probably during a timeout.

But NBC's chief technical goal for this Super Bowl is to pick up as much sound from the playing field with field-level microphones as possible. Nathanson said his goal is not to pick up sounds from the benches, but the sounds and voices from the action on the field.

"It's a very difficult thing to do," he said. "There's a lot of luck involved with it, and it's much harder when your working at an outdoor stadium compared to an indoor stadium."

NBC conducted a survey of the Rose Bowl six months ago to determine the best locations for camera positions, monitors and foreign-broadcast booths. The game will be televised at military bases overseas, as well as in Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Locations also had to be set for the post- and pre-game shows.

The two-hour pre-game show will be hosted by Len Berman, assisted by reporters Mike Adamle and Pete Axthelm. The show will be co-produced by Ron Kershaw and David Neal and directed by John Filippelli. Since only a week separated the conference championship games and the Super Bowl — because of the eight-week NFL players strike — NBC had less time than usual to familiarize itself with the teams. But Nathanson believes this will reduce a lot of the hype that usually accompanies the Super Bowl, and perhaps will lead to a better telecast.

"WHEN YOU have that two-week break after the conference championship games, the tendency for the teams is usually to get uptight because of the press buildup," Nathanson said. "I think a lot of the hype will be reduced this year, and I think the quality of the game might be better because of it."

Chicago trades ex-M-Cubs Fletcher, Martz to Chisox

(Staff and wire)

CHICAGO — The Chicago White Sox traded pitchers Steve Trout and Warren Brusstar to the Chicago Cubs for pitcher Dick Tidrow and three other players in a cross-town deal announced today.

The Cubs also sent infielder Pat Tabler and a couple of former Midland Cubs, pitcher Randy Martz and infielder Scott Fletcher to the White Sox.

Fletcher once had a 14-hit streak with Midland, where he played second baseman. However, when he moved up to AAA, Scott moved over to shortstop.

Martz, a native Pennsylvania, helped pitch the University of South Carolina to the College World Series in 1977. He was 5-3 for Midland that year and 8-6 with Midland in 1978 before being promoted to Wichita, AAA American Association, in mid season.

The White Sox, meanwhile, added to their roster by picking pitcher Steve Mura of the St. Louis Cardinals in the compensation draft.

Cubs General Manager Dallas Green said the trade was made possible by the signing of third baseman Ron Cey on Tuesday, which solidified the club's infield.

The Sox selected Mura, 12-11 last year, in baseball's compensation draft after losing free agent Steve Kemp to the New York Yankees. There had been speculation that the Sox would chose veteran pitcher Ferguson Jenkins, who was left unprotected by the Cubs, who reportedly thought that he would not be picked because he is 39 years old and has a high salary.

Green said the Cubs have great expectations for Trout, 25, who was a disappointing 6-9 last year with the Sox. Brusstar, 29, came to the Sox from the Philadelphia Phillies last season and was 2-0.

Tidrow is a 34-year-old veteran reliever, who finished 1982 with an 8-3 record.

Martz, 25, was a starter with Cubs last year when he was 11-10.

Fletcher came up to Cubs at end of last season from the club's Iowa farm team and batted .167 in 11 games.

Tabler, 22, came to Cubs from Iowa in the middle of last season and batted .235 in 25 games.

Texas Tech will hold a two-day Bass Fishing Institute seminar Feb. 19-20 at the TT University Center for beginnmng and advanced anglers.

Experts such as Bill Dance, Bobby Murray, Rick Clunn, Jerry McKinnis, Chuck Roberts, Forrest Wood and Bill Murray will share their knowledge in helping anglers on the how, where and whens to shorten the time between strikes.

A study manual details techniques, compiled by the faculty and staff, is presented with more than 130 diagrams, photographs and charts.

One hour sessions will be devoted to bass behavior, water classification, seasonal patterns, fish migration, casting and lure techniques as well as structure fishing and use of electronic depth finders and graphs.

Concurrent sessions will include demonstrations of lures, discussion of fish species in Texas and casting ranges. Women and youth have will meet separately with the pros to learn knot-tying, lure selection, line, balanced tackle and safety.

The BFI will b from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Feb. 19 and 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Sunday. Registration for a husband-wife team is $60; one adult $40 and one yuth, age 10 to 15, will be admitted free with each paid adult.

Registration fees can be addressed to the Bass Fishing Institute, Indiana State University, Terre Haute, Ind., 47809. For information, contact the Division of Continuing Education, Box 4110, Texas Tech (806 742 2354).

I ATTENDED the BFI during the Bass Masters Classic at Montgomery, Ala., in the fall and found it the most complete clinic I have ever seen.

Bass fishing, bass behavior and bass habitat are the keys to the seminar.

Forrest Wood, Flippin, Ark., asserts, "If a guy didn't know anything about bass fishing, he would improve his skill 1.000 per cent. If he knew all the basics, he would still learn something. I learn something every time I teach in the Institute."

Bill Dance: "Best educational fishing program anywhere. Emphasis is 100 per cent on instruction."

I talked with Deborah Palmer at Tech the other day and she said, "Those professionals to hold this West Texas seminar will be Bobby and Billy Murray, Jim Rogers, Al Linder and two other pros who haven't been announced yet."

Midland building boom sees $750 million in new structures

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

In a three-year period from 1980 to 1982, about $750 million, or three-fourths of $1 billion, was invested in hard dollars in Midland in the form of new construction, President Larry Bell told the Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors during their monthly session Wednesday.

It was during a look back comparing those three years in building permits and subsequent valuations, new housing and employment-unemployment figures that Bell injected his evaluation of Midland's economy.

The chamber also heard updates on Clean Midland, Inc., the Small Business Council and a seminar, Midland Arts Assembly, membership relations seminar and organizational reports.

After Grant Billingsley, director of economic development for the chamber, had projected three graphs which charted monthly figures in the various areas, Bell remarked, "One of the most significant things in light of what he told you is that this is hard dollar investment in structures. A lot of that money came from places around the country."

LATER, HE NOTED that the figure doesn't include land costs or inventory, such as furnishing these new buildings. Bell explained he had taken permit valuations only for new residential and new commercial structures to arrive at the figure of $750 million. Including other costs, such as land, he said it probably could reach almost $1 billion.

Looking at a list of economic indicators for December and the resulting total for 1982, Billingsley noted that airline boardings were at an all-time high with 672,674 for an increase of 16.95 percent.

Charting the issuance of building permits for the three-year period from 1980, Billingsley noted that Midland was running ahead in 1982 of the all-time record set in 1981 until the fourth quarter started.

"Slowdown wasn't the word for new construction permits," he said. "They fell off like a rock."

On all three graphs, Billingsley pointed out that 1982 still ranked far above the figures for 1980, which at that time had set new records.

Residential permits, he said, were running ahead of 1981 until the fourth quarter when these, too, took a nosedive. For 1980, there were 528 new single family homes permitted. For 1981, it was 1,642; and for 1982, 1,230.

Multi-family residential units, which include items such as apartments and duplexes, stopped at 1,801 in 1980. For 1982, it was 2,009; and for 1982, 2,621.

But, the total number of residential units — single family homes and apartments — broke the record set in 1981 of 3,651. For 1982, the ending number was 3,851.

While the unemployment figure on paper shows a 31 percent increase from December 1981 to 1982, Billingsley noted there were about 550 fewer persons working at the end of 1982 than in 1981. The figures were 59,450 and 60,000, respectively. This, he added, puts Midland's economy on a stable line.

WHEN AVERAGING the total number of persons working through 1981 and 1982, the latter year surpasses the previous, according to Billingsley. For 1981, there were on the average 57,000 persons at work each month. The next year it was 59,000 each month.

"Our economy is still remaining strong," he added. "It's one of the strongest in the state."

Joan Baskin reported the Midland Arts Assembly, after being allotted money from the City Council, can begin advertising the city's cultural offerings. Bell added the assembly will be coordinating efforts with the chamber.

Nancy Sharp, coordinator of Clean Midland, Inc., said certification will be coming in early March from the Keep America Beautiful national organization. Heading up local divisions will be Peyton Cook, schools; Fred Baker, municipal; Linda Bond, communications; and Don Harvey, business and industry.

Randy Hicks, communications director for the chamber, noted that of 16 cities attempting to start such a program, Midland is the first to ask for certification.

A SMALL BUSINESS Seminar that has been coordinated by the chamber will be taped later for showing to businesses and high schools, according to coordinator Amy Stewart. The tapes may be checked out from Midland College. And any profit from the seminar will go for a scholarship at that college, she said.

Additionally, a seminar on new tax laws will be aimed for the small businessman and is scheduled for Feb. 15 at Midland Center. Fee is $5 for chamber members, $7.50 for non-members.

Hicks reported a new membership directory listing 1,800 chamber members will be completed by mid-February. Cost is $10 to members and $25 to non-members.

Dodie Devore reported the city will be the site of a Texas Range Management Association convention in December. And Midland is included in a tourist publication on West Texas.

In looking back over the past year, Billingsley told the directors the chamber has "a renewed dedication to involving our volunteer members. We are interested in hearing feedback. We need to know about any program not meeting the needs of the community."

State Senate moves to prevent land rush

AUSTIN (AP) — Fearing a modern-day land rush on oil leases, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro asked legislators to quickly pass a bill doing away with cheap "prospecting permits" on state lands.

Senators approved the bill Wednesday and sent it to the House. Mauro predicted it would be the first piece of legislation signed by Gov. Mark White and would save the state "tens of millions of dollars in the immediate future."

Mauro said a young Fort Worth lawyer discovered last fall that a 44-year-old mistake in Texas law could make him rich.

In 1939, legislators acted to eliminate prospecting permits. State lands had become valuable and selling leases was much more lucrative for the state.

But lawmakers apparently failed to completely eliminate the prospecting permit clause, which allows citizens to file prospecting permits on state-owned lands for $100, then pay the state a $2-per-acre "bonus" fee and one-eighth royalties if they strike oil.

Under leases, there are higher initial payments and bonuses, and the state gets up to one quarter of the proceeds of any oil find.

Mauro said sale of leases had slacked off because of a court battle over the validity of the prospecting permits. He said he sought legislative help because two tries before the U.S. Supreme Court had failed to get the law thrown out.

To emphasize the value of the lease sales, Mauro said that last October's sales were the "smallest ever" with a potential for $100 million in state revenues in bonuses and royalties.

"If it isn't repealed, the bid process is down the drain," Mauro said.

He told the Senate Natural Resources Committee that quick action was needed to avoid publicity that would widen knowledge of the permit law and draw a rush of seekers after permits.

"Do you have any of those forms with you?" Sen. Buster Brown, R-Galveston, asked jokingly. The committee heard Mauro's testimony for about 10 minutes, then unanimously sent the measure to the Senate floor.

"For over 50 years, everybody thought it had been repealed," Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, sponsor of the bill, told senators before they voted 28-2 to pass the legislation on to the House.

The issue had been declared an emergency by White, getting around the "60-day rule" which keeps legislators from passing any but emergency bills in the first 60 days of the session.

Mauro said only 10 modern-day prospecting permits had been filed — all by the same Fort Worth attorney, whom Mauro said he was legally restrained from identifying.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate voted 28-2 Wednesday in favor of Senate Bill 183. It could save the state millions of dollars, said the sponsor of the bill, Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso.

The bill repeals state law thereby eliminating a loophole in the state's oil and gas leasing laws.

The bill now goes to the House of Representatives for consideration.

The old law allowed oil and natural gas drilling companies to dodge the state's competitive bids process for selling leases.

The old code allows oil and natural gas leases to be purchased for two dollars per acre, with royalty of one-eigth of the gross on oil land one-tenth of the gross on natural gas, a spokeswoman for Santiesteban said.

Current leases sell for between $10 to $40 per acre with a royalty of from one-fifth to one-fourth of the gross on oil and natural gas, she said.

Although only a few companies had discovered the old law, Santiesteban believed the law should be repealed to prevent the possibilty of future loss in state revenue.

Also Wednesday, the Senate Natural Resources Committee sent Senate Bill 182 back to the Senate for consideration.

The bill relates "to the trade of public school lands" and the leasing of subsurface mineral rights.

Texas economy may be hurt by OPEC price wars

DALLAS (AP) — Disharmony in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries could trigger an oil price plunge that could put the squeeze on Texas' energy-oriented economy, experts say.

Oil exploration firms, banks holding loans to Mexico, some oil companies, oilfield suppliers and the state treasury — which depends on oil taxing for 10 percent of its total revenue — could feel the pinch of OPEC discord.

OPEC failed to reach agreement Monday on production quotas that might buoy the falling world price of oil by limiting supply.

"It really depends on whether you're a producer or consumer of oil," said University of Texas-Dallas economist Bernard Weinstein. "We do both in Texas. On balance, though, I'd say a decline in oil prices is bad for the Texas economy."

"The amount of harm depends on how far the prices fall," Houston energy analyst Dennis Eklof told The Dallas Morning News. "Right now, it's anybody's guess."

Perhaps the biggest loser from lower oil prices, The News said, would be the state government, which figured to take in $1.2 billion in each of the next three fiscal years from a wellhead tax. The tax draws 10 percent of all state revenues.

The Texas treasury could lose $40 million annually from each $1-a-barrel decline in oil prices, said Billy Hamilton, chief revenue estimator for the state comptrollers' office.

"Our assumption was that OPEC would get together and support prices," Hamilton said. "Whether they do that, it's too early to tell. If they don't, we're not going to stick to our estimates."

•••

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — The government says it is raising oil production by 45 percent to match increased competition from other OPEC members following the cartel's failure to agree on production quotas.

Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba, who announced the production jump from 1.1 million barrels to 1.6 million barrels on Wednesday, also predicted a price cut in Persian Gulf crude.

The emergency meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries collapsed in Geneva on Monday after some members of the 13-member cartel refused to agree on reduced production quotas they were already ignoring and other members refused to stop cutting prices below the $34 base.

The once-powerful cartel, which has relied on production quotas to hold down the supply of oil and keep prices artificially high, has been torn by internal rivalries and a worldwide oil glut that has forced prices down.

"Some OPEC states have started pumping additional quantities of oil at lowered prices," Oteiba said in a local television interview. He said his country had reduced its daily production from 2.2 million barrels "as a contribution toward the world glut," but could no longer afford to keep its production down.

"We must produce at a rate fulfilling our commitments toward our citizens, especially since we have many unmet basic necessities attained by other oil-producing nations," he said.

Saudi Arabia, the leading OPEC member, is producing an all-time low of 4 million barrels daily, in contrast with a high of 10 million barrels. But Oteiba, whose country is closely allied with the Saudis, gave no indication that they plan an increase.

Oilmen watch legislators

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Texas oilmen and royalty owners will be watching the state legislature in Austin with great interest in coming weeks.

There is a lot to look at: a new governor, the threat of higher severance taxes, the problem of oilfield theft and delayed royalty payments, and many other concerns.

Several bills have been introduced which could affect their futures. Chief among them are bills which would:

— Require a time provision for royalty payments to be made and impose interest penalties on late-paying producers.

— Change the Texas Railroad Commission name, number of commissioners, and duties.

— Create a manifest system for oil haulers to help reduce theft.

— Make oil theft a felony.

One group overseeing these issues will be the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association (TIPRO), one of the most influential watchdogs and lobbyists in Austin.

At their mid-winter conference last week, TIPRO members did not formally endorse or reject any of the proposed bills, according to Hans Hansen, Midland, chairman of TIPRO's State Petroleum Issues Committee.

The group prefers to wait until legislators have been in session a while longer and begin acting on specific bills, he said.

A major issue to be addressed is how to make sure producers pay late royalty fees. TIPRO members had discussed in December the design of a possible bill.

Senate Bill 146 would impose a penalty of 1 1/2 percent interest per month on late-paying producers. Hansen thinks the amount is excessive, and should be tied to the prime rate or some other index.

"We're not totally opposed to the bill, but I think we'll want to amend it so we can live with it, from a producers' and a royalty owners' standpoint," he said. "There are some provisions in the bill which would require tremendous changes in accounting."

He said the bill stems from problems royalty owners in the Giddings area have had in the past year.

TIPRO will likely oppose any changes in the name, structure or duties of the Railroad Commission, Hansen said.

One pre-filed bill would change its name to Texas Energy and Transportation Commission, which more accurately reflects what the RRC does. Another would ask for a constitutional amendment to be submitted to the voters to change the RRC from three to nine members in single member districts.

A third bill would restrict ex-RRC employees from accepting any job with a utility or business normally regulated by the RRC, for two years after they leave the commission.

"I'm kind of like Calvin Coolidge," said Hansen of proposals to change the RRC. "'If it ain't broken, don't fix it.'

"I think we'll be opposed to these changes. Historically, the commission has done a good job of representing the public — the consumer side, and the oil industry — the producing side. Other states look to it as a model. And, with nine members, you run the risk of being too unwieldy."

The Texas Sunset Commission reviewed the Railroad Commission and on Dec. 2, 1982, made several recommendations to change it. None of the recommendations will necessarily become law, Hansen said, yet they will probably influence legislation.

In the past, TIPRO and the RRC have worked together on a number of issues. The industry group actively supported a proposed RRC manifest system which would make it more difficult for thieves to haul stolen oil. That proposal is before the public now for comment.

MDI, Cox agree to merger

Richard D. Collins, president of Mineral Development Inc., Midland, and James W. Spofford, president of Cox Resources Corp., Dallas, jointly announced today MDI and Cox have signed a letter of intent whereby Cox Resources wold be merged into MDI, or become a wholly-owned subsidiary, formed for merger purposes, of MDI. Terms of the proposed merger have not been finalized. Cox Reources has assets of $3.1 million.

The consummation of the transaction is conditioned upon the execution of a definitive merger agreement and other agreements, the filing and receipt of government regulatory approvals and securing the necessary shareholders approval. The closing is targeted for April 30.

Internorth Building announced

Groundbreaking for the new 11-story office building at the corner of Wall and Pecos Streets is scheduled for February, according to latest reports from the Sussex Group, the Dallas developer handling the project.

The structure, which features a reflective glass facade and interior atrium, will be known as the Internorth Building, after its major tenant.

The Sussex Group announced Jan. 24 the signing of an agreement between Sussex/Wall-Pecos Joint Venture and Internorth, an energy company based in Omaha, Nebraska.

Internorth will move its 140 Midland employees into the building in January 1984. The move will consolidate its operations in Midland.

Currently, employees are located in the Gibraltar Building, Wall Towers West, C&K Petroleum Building and Texas American Bank Tower.

The employees are with Internorth's subsidiaries in Midland: Nortex Gas and Oil, Northern Natural Gas and Northern Liquid Fuels Company. These groups will occupy about 50 percent of the new building, which is estimated to cost $14 million.

The building will have more than 100,000 square feet of rentable space and a six-story parking garage incorporated in the design. Glass-backed elevators will overlook the atrium.

When Sussex unveiled plans for the building here in October, the firm presented a plan for a 13-story, rather than 11-story, building. Groundbreaking was originally announced for Oct. 15.

Interim financing is provided by First National Bank of Oklahoma City.

Internorth, a diversified energy company involved in natural gas, petrochemicals, liquid fuels, and exploration and production, is headquartered in Omaha. The company has taken a five-year lease on the new office space with two five-year options for renewal.

The Sussex Group, Dallas, is involved in development, acquisition and sale of commercial properties, acting as managing venture partner or general partner for both domestic and foreign partners. The firm has other real estate interests in Midland.

Oil tax plan draws API fire

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — One of the most controversial parts of President Reagan's stand-by tax plan is a $5 a barrel tax on both domestic and imported oil.

Industry spokesmen said this could increase gasoline prices by 12 cents a gallon.

Reagan also warned he would oppose any attempts to dilute or delay the third year of his 1981 tax cut, a 10 percent reduction due on July 1, or to eliminate the controversial provision that takes effect starting next year to index individuals' taxes to the inflation rate to prevent "bracket creep."

The oil taxes, along with a proposed surcharge on personal and corporate income taxes, would take effect on Oct. 1, 1985, the start of the 1986 fiscal year, if federal budget deficits had not been brought down to 2.5 percent of the nation's output of goods and services for that year.

The proposed surtax would be limited to three years and would be triggered not just by the size of deficits but by Congress' acceptance of Reagan's other proposals to freeze most non-defense spending. Republican leaders generally have opposed the standby tax plans, which began to be circulated last week.

The American Petroleum Institute, in opposing Reagan's crude oil tax, said it would be "unsound public policy to impose a contingent excise tax on oil for future years without knowing what the price of oil might be at that time, the size of U.S. oil imports or the state of U.S. balance of payments."

TIPRO talks to Gov. White

This year's session of the state Legislature will be monitored by the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association just as it has been ever since TIPRO was formed in 1946.

The group, 5,400 strong, will be giving the lion's share of attention to new governor Mark White.

Realizing this, White took time out of his busy inauguration day schedule last week to speak to TIPRO's mid-winter policy meeting. It was the governor's first public meeting with oil industry leaders.

He admitted, only half jokingly, that most TIPRO members probably didn't vote for him.

According to Midlander Hans Hansen, who was there, most TIPRO members thought White gave an impressive performance.

"The Governor gave us a lot of encouragement," said Hansen. "In essence, he said he doesn't want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg.

"He indicated he understood the value of industry — all industry, not just the oil industry — to this state, and would certainly not be in favor of anything that would discourage industrial expansion."

TIPRO members are worried that White, in an attempt to offset a possible state budget deficit, might increase the state severance tax on production, which currently sits at 7.5 percent for gas and 4.6 percent for oil.

Hansen said White generally assured TIPRO members that if additional taxes are found to be needed, he has other ideas in mind which he would consider before recommending an increase in severance taxes.

"We were concerned about the increase (in severance taxes) because it would cause us a decrease in drilling," Hansen said. "You need as much money back as possible in order to go drill more wells," particularly since the flow of outside investment money has slowed.

Braniff deal dead?

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The chairman of grounded Braniff International says the Federal Aviation Administration's decision to block transfer of the carrier's landing slots to a California airline could kill a proposed venture between the two airlines.

Braniff is fighting to win approval for a plan to lease about 30 planes to San Diego-based Pacific Southwest Airlines and possibly rehire 1,500 former Braniff workers.

FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms said in a letter to Braniff chairman Howard Putnam that the Braniff-PSA plan "constitutes a sale of assets by the bankrupt estate, not a reorganization."

Putnam said Wednesday that Braniff's hopes rest with U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge John Flowers, who for nearly two weeks has been hearing arguments on the venture before approving or rejecting it.

"I just think it is incredible that the FAA can make all these decisions while we are trying to provide more competition, get fares down and put 1,500 people back to work," Putnam said.

"All of a sudden, the FAA has become the all-powerful ruler saying what we are entitled to. We will just have to depend on the bankruptcy court to make the right decision."

High tech, economic progress linked

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — For an increasing number of states, economic development is linked to a quest for high technology industries. Some states, primarily California, New York and Massachusetts, have already made vigorous efforts to attract these industries.

Now, however, an additional 33 states are preparing to spend $250 million in the next year or so to encourage the development of high technology within their borders.

To aid these states and interested industries, top officials of government, the private sector and academia plan to convene Feb. 1 and 2 for a first-of-its -kind examination of the public policy issues posed by the growth of high technology and its implications for the nation's economic future.

The national conference, sponsored by the Government Research Corp. (GRC), and six leading high-tech business associations, will focus on such issues as capital formation, expansion of domestic and international markets, human resource needs, tax and trade policy, technology transfer, and research and development.

Among the 44 speakers and panelists appearing on the two-day program at the Shoreham Hotel will be U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock, Sen. John Glenn, D. -Ohio, top officials of the Departments of Commerce, Defense and Treasury, members of Congress and representatives from Japan and the United Kingdom.

A spokesman said the conference will provide a national forum for discussion of "the challenges and the opportunities facing high technology companies and their implications for the American economy and society."

GRC, a major analyst of government and public policy, is the publisher of the National Journal. Cosponsoring the forum with GRC will be the American Business Conference, the American Electronics Association, the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association, the Electronic Industries Association, the Scientific Apparatus Makers Association, and the Semiconductor Industry Association.

High-growth high tech firms are expanding in several areas of the country — notably in Massachusetts, where high technology is credited with rejuvenating an ailing industrial base, and in California's "Silicon Valley," where high-tech entrepreneurs are adding some 25,000 new jobs yearly.

Nationwide, small and mid-size businesses, many of which are high-tech firms, have created about 70 percent of all new private-sector jobs in the last decade.

OLDER AMERICANS,EMPLOYMENT

A new study by the National Commission for Employment Policy has found that older displaced workers are more likely to have been employed in better paying occupations and to be in better health than other unemployed workers of similar age.

The panel contended that displaced women workers are normally likely to find new jobs faster than other unemployed women and younger job seekers are more likely to receive job referrals from local Employment Service offices than older job seekers.

EXPORTS

With continuing industrial stagnation and increased unemployment, there is a growing public awareness of the importance of the role that increased American exports can play in restoring economic health.

A high-level administration official, kicking off a series of 28 conferences to be held within the next few months to promote the formation and use of export trading companies, was optimistic about the new approach.

Lionel H. Olmer, under secretary of commerce for international trade, said that legislation which permits U.S. companies to cooperate in export markets without fear of violating U.S. antitrust laws may increase employment by 640,000 workers, increase the gross national product (GNP) by $55 billion, and reduce the federal deficit by $11 billion to $22 billion.

The new legislation was designed to encourage individuals and businesses to form export trading companies on the Japanese model to compete with foreign corporations for overseas sales.

TO BRIEF ON BARGAINING

The Bureau of National Affairs plans to hold briefing sessions on collective bargaining in seven cities, starting Feb. 25 with a session in the capital. A March 7 meeting is planned for Los Angeles and a March 11 meeting for Boston.

Collective bargaining is in more turmoil and transition than it has been in any year since the briefings were begun in 1952. The sessions will examine the 1983 bargaining outlook in the context of changes that are rewriting the ground rules for negotiators — international competition, economic attrition of once prosperous industries and regions, inflation, sluggish productivity growth, federal deregulation of industries, robotization of production, aging of the labor force, and changing leadership styles in management and unions.

CITIES AND TAXES

Property taxes provided cities with 22 percent of total general revenue in fiscal 1981, a drop from 33 percent 10 years earlier, according to the Census Bureau. All forms of local taxes generated $34 billion, or 41 percent of city government general revenue, the rest of which comes from state and federal aid. Property taxes, still the main local tax source, supplied $18.3 billion of that.

How was the money spent? About 71 percent of all city expenditures went to fund publicly owned and operated utilities, liquor stores, and general municipal purposes. Salaries and wages totaled $37 billion, or 36 percent of all expenditures. Capital outlay, mostly for construction and equipment, land purchases, and acquisition of existing structures, totaled $18.6 billion, or 17.8 percent of all city spending.

STATISTICS

The National Planning Association of Washington, a nonprofit research organization specializing in domestic and international economic issues, projects that although unemployment will remain high in 1983, it will begin a long-term decline towards levels under 4 percent by the year 2000. In its most recent projections, the organization forecast unemployment to fall to 8 percent in 1983, to 6 percent in 1985 and 3.8 percent in 2000.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The National Association of Corrosion Engineers and the Commerce Department's National Bureau of Standards have agreed to a cooperative data program to help reduce corrosion damage to the nation's infrastructure — its roads, bridges, buildings, industrial plants, vehicles and utilities. Corrosion will cost the U.S. an estimated $126 billion in 1982. About 15 percent of this cost could have been saved through treatment and better utilization of materials, according to government experts...New requirements concerning prevention of pollution from ships will become effective on Oct. 2, 1983, according to the Coast Guard. Details can be obtained by writing to the Coast Guard headquarters here...The General Services Administration will try out air bags with an eye to approving them as optional safety equipment on its passenger vehicles. The agency, which does most of the purchasing of automobiles for the federal government, operates a fleet of 85,000 vehicles...The Senate Rules Committee will hold hearings Feb. 3 on the costs of producing and mailing Senate newsletters and other mass mailings, which cost at least $37 million in 1982, according to Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md...Names and locations of all identified oil and gas fields in the U.S. are published in a new reference directory released by the Energy Information Administration in the Energy Department.

Brucellosis law challenged

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today agreed to hear a Uvalde rancher's challenge of a state program aimed at controlling brucellosis, a highly contagious cattle disease.

The high court set a March 16 hearing of R.J. Nunley's suit against the Texas Animal Health Commission.

In 1979, Nunley succeeded in getting an injunction barring TAHC from enforcing the program on Nunley's cattle. In 1980, TAHC started a new brucellosis program. Nunley went back to court and a judge said the commission was in contempt because it had violated the 1979 injunction.

Lawyers for the TAHC appealed that order, but the San Antonio Court of Appeals in July ruled the contempt decision could not be appealed.

The Supreme Court today agreed to rule on that matter.

U.S. Agriculture Department officials have said Texas cattle might have to be quarantined if the state does not have a brucellosis control program. Texas is the nation's leading beef producer.

Brucellosis affects the sex organs of cattle. It can cause cattle to abort, produce weak calves, become sterile and produce less milk.

There is no danger to humans who eat meat from a diseased animal. However, the milk can cause undulant fever, sometimes fatal to humans.

Nunley contends the brucellosis program is arbitrary and unreasonable. The Uvalde rancher also complained it would be costly.

Oil excise tax unlikely

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's proposal for a standby $5-per-barrel excise tax on oil got a chilly reception Wednesday on Capitol Hill, where similar proposals in recent years have been rejected quickly.

The tax, which Reagan proposed Tuesday in his State of the Union address, would go into effect Oct. 1, 1985, if the federal deficit fails to fall below acceptable levels.

"I think this idea peaked in the State of the Union Address," said Rep. James M. Shannon, D-Mass., who led the successful fight in 1980 against President Carter's proposal for a gas conservation fee. "The timing is way off on this one."

Shannon, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, which deals with all tax legislation, noted that administration officials told reporters that they do not expect that the oil tax or the other standby taxes the president proposed Tuesday night will be necessary.

"You could say that this is an insurance policy for the future — a remedy that will be at hand if needed," Reagan said.

According to the White House, the excise tax on oil would raise the price of gasoline and home-heating oil by about 12 cents per gallon for consumers.

"It seems to me a lot to ask members of Congress to vote for what is going to be a very unpopular tax and then say it might not go in place," Shannon said. "Any sane politician is going to be very skeptical."

A number of economists have suggested recently that the administration should take advantage of any sharp decline in the price of petroleum in coming months by imposing a stiff tariff on oil imports. But there seemed almost no support Wednesday for a tax that would not come into play for at least 2 1-2 years.

"I don't know how you would figure out what the impact of that might be, given the tremendous amount of uncertainty between now and then," said Edward Murphy, director of statistics for the American Petroleum Institute.

"We don't know what the price of oil is going to be by October 1983, much less 1984 or 1985, and we don't know what is going to be happening to demand for oil or supply," Murphy said. "All you can say with certainty is it would make the price of oil higher — no doubt about that — and it would make U.S. oil exports less competitive on the world market."

Several congressional sources also expressed doubt about the wisdom of boosting home-heating oil prices at a time when a major legislative effort is under way to bring down soaring natural gas prices.

Unemployment will stay at record high, secretary says

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Reiterating that the economy finally is turning upward, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said that the very slow growth will keep unemployment at post-war record heights through the 1984 presidential elections.

Regan countered critics, however, who predict that the current 10.9 percent jobless rate will still higher before it heads downward, saying "we don't have it exceeding 11 percent in any quarter."

The Reagan administration project that unemployment in 1983 will average 10.7 percent, which is flat rather than a reduction due to a statistical change that for the first time will incorporate military employment into the overall figure and thus depress the overall rate.

For 1984, Regan said, unemployment will average 9.9 percent, pulled downward by what they see as more vigorous growth in the latter months of the year, with an average of 9.5 percent unemployment for the three months beginning Oct. 1, 1984.

What happened? asked Sen. Paul Sarbannes, D-Md.

He quoted Regan's words from a year ago, telling Sarbannes to relay to struggling Maryland constituents who were selling furniture to pay mortgage bills that "we think our program is going to work and that things are going to get better."

What do you tell them now? the newly reelected Sarbannes asked.

"You can tell them the secretary of the Treasury made a mistake (on projections) for 1982 — like most other forecasters," Regan said. "But, in all sincerity, I think we have turned the corner."

The Regan-Sarbannes exchange typified yesterday's congressional hearing before the Joint Economic Committee.

The senators and House members were friendly; they applauded Regan's and President Reagan's candid assessment that still more tough times are ahead in the slow-growth recovery.

But they were skeptical as well — with conservative Republicans critical that the Reagan administration wasn't more ferocious in whacking back spending, with Democrats such as Wisconsin Sen. William Proxmire calling the president's standby tax proposal a "diversionary tactic" to take the eyes away from out-of-control budget deficits of more than $300 billion.

As Regan staunchly defended the president's most sacred cows, the third year of the giant $750 billion tax cut and the plan to index taxes to the inflation rate starting next year, it was clear that many other agendas were being shaped by jittery members of Congress.

—Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., said Reagan's freeze on non-defense spending didn't go far enough and he is putting forth his own, to freeze not only all domestic programs but the military and the national debt as well. Reagan said some of that might be illegal, conflicting with contracts already signed.

—Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, said he wanted to freeze cost-of-living increases on social-welfare and retirement programs for two years, not six months as Reagan spelled out in his State of the Union address Tuesday. Regan indicated if Congress took that step, the administration would accept it.

—Proxmire said the standby tax plan would not reassure business and industry that the soaring deficits actually would be curbed and that instead Congress should cut the impending July 1 tax cut of 10 percent, delay indexing taxes starting in 1975 and cut the defense spending more than Reagan recommends. Regan objected to all three.

—Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., said if Social Security cost-of-living raises are being frozen for six months, there should also be a freeze put on tax cuts for upper-income taxpayers. In this case, Hawkins hadn't gotten the word — that key Democratic leaders had overridden Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd who proposed just such a linkage and had vowed to keep the Social Security package, COLA freezes and all, intact. Regan objected anyway.

Regan also sought to downplay friction between the Reagan administration and the Federal Reserve. In the process, he may have created more.

One key question is whether Congress will put pressure on the Federal Reserve to keep reducing interest rates, to spur not only a U.S. recovery but a worldwide one.

The Reagan administration opposes any such move but it is divided on the central issue: whether the Fed has lowered interest rates enough, whether it should do still more — or whether it already has put too much money into the economy and risks reigniting inflation that would undo all the gains made during the punishing recession.

Midland building boom sees $750 million in new structures

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

In a three-year period from 1980 to 1982, about $750 million, or three-fourths of $1 billion, was invested in hard dollars in Midland in the form of new construction, President Larry Bell told the Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors during their monthly session Wednesday.

It was during a look back comparing those three years in building permits and subsequent valuations, new housing and employment-unemployment figures that Bell injected his evaluation of Midland's economy.

The chamber also heard updates on Clean Midland, Inc., the Small Business Council and a seminar, Midland Arts Assembly, membership relations seminar and organizational reports.

After Grant Billingsley, director of economic development for the chamber, had projected three graphs which charted monthly figures in the various areas, Bell remarked, "One of the most significant things in light of what he told you is that this is hard dollar investment in structures. A lot of that money came from places around the country."

LATER, HE NOTED that the figure doesn't include land costs or inventory, such as furnishing these new buildings. Bell explained he had taken permit valuations only for new residential and new commercial structures to arrive at the figure of $750 million. Including other costs, such as land, he said it probably could reach almost $1 billion.

Looking at a list of economic indicators for December and the resulting total for 1982, Billingsley noted that airline boardings were at an all-time high with 672,674 for an increase of 16.95 percent.

Charting the issuance of building permits for the three-year period from 1980, Billingsley noted that Midland was running ahead in 1982 of the all-time record set in 1981 until the fourth quarter started.

"Slowdown wasn't the word for new construction permits," he said. "They fell off like a rock."

On all three graphs, Billingsley pointed out that 1982 still ranked far above the figures for 1980, which at that time had set new records.

Residential permits, he said, were running ahead of 1981 until the fourth quarter when these, too, took a nosedive. For 1980, there were 528 new single family homes permitted. For 1981, it was 1,642; and for 1982, 1,230.

Multi-family residential units, which include items such as apartments and duplexes, stopped at 1,801 in 1980. For 1982, it was 2,009; and for 1982, 2,621.

But, the total number of residential units — single family homes and apartments — broke the record set in 1981 of 3,651. For 1982, the ending number was 3,851.

While the unemployment figure on paper shows a 31 percent increase from December 1981 to 1982, Billingsley noted there were about 550 fewer persons working at the end of 1982 than in 1981. The figures were 59,450 and 60,000, respectively. This, he added, puts Midland's economy on a stable line.

WHEN AVERAGING the total number of persons working through 1981 and 1982, the latter year surpasses the previous, according to Billingsley. For 1981, there were on the average 57,000 persons at work each month. The next year it was 59,000 each month.

"Our economy is still remaining strong," he added. "It's one of the strongest in the state."

Joan Baskin reported the Midland Arts Assembly, after being allotted money from the City Council, can begin advertising the city's cultural offerings. Bell added the assembly will be coordinating efforts with the chamber.

Nancy Sharp, coordinator of Clean Midland, Inc., said certification will be coming in early March from the Keep America Beautiful national organization. Heading up local divisions will be Peyton Cook, schools; Fred Baker municipal; Linda Bond, communications; and Don Harvey, business and industry.

Randy Hicks, communications director for the chamber, noted that of 16 cities attempting to start such a program, Midland is the first to ask for certification.

A SMALL BUSINESS Seminar that has been coordinated by the chamber will be taped later for showing to businesses and high schools, according to coordinator Amy Stewart. The tapes may be checked out from Midland College. And any profit from the seminar will go for a scholarship at that college, she said.

Additionally, a seminar on new tax laws will be aimed for the small businessman and is scheduled for Feb. 15 at Midland Center. Fee is $5 for chamber members, $7.50 for non-members.

Hicks reported a new membership directory listing 1,800 chamber members will be completed by mid-February. Cost is $10 to members and $25 to non-members.

Dodie Devore reported the city will be the site of a Texas Range Management Association convention in December. And Midland is included in a tourist publication on West Texas.

In looking back over the past year, Billingsley told the directors the chamber has "a renewed dedication to involving our volunteer members. We are interested in hearing feedback. We need to know about any program not meeting the needs of the community."

State Senate moves to prevent land rush

AUSTIN (AP) — Fearing a modern-day land rush on oil leases, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro asked legislators to quickly pass a bill doing away with cheap "prospecting permits" on state lands.

Senators approved the bill Wednesday and sent it to the House. Mauro predicted it would be the first piece of legislation signed by Gov. Mark White and would save the state "tens of millions of dollars in the immediate future."

Mauro said a young Fort Worth lawyer discovered last fall that a 44-year-old mistake in Texas law could make him rich.

In 1939, legislators acted to eliminate prospecting permits. State lands had become valuable and selling leases was much more lucrative for the state.

But lawmakers apparently failed to completely eliminate the prospecting permit clause, which allows citizens to file prospecting permits on state-owned lands for $100, then pay the state a $2-per-acre "bonus" fee and one-eighth royalties if they strike oil.

Under leases, there are higher initial payments and bonuses, and the state gets up to one quarter of the proceeds of any oil find.

Mauro said sale of leases had slacked off because of a court battle over the validity of the prospecting permits. He said he sought legislative help because two tries before the U.S. Supreme Court had failed to get the law thrown out.

To emphasize the value of the lease sales, Mauro said that last October's sales were the "smallest ever" with a potential for $100 million in state revenues in bonuses and royalties.

"If it isn't repealed, the bid process is down the drain," Mauro said.

He told the Senate Natural Resources Committee that quick action was needed to avoid publicity that would widen knowledge of the permit law and draw a rush of seekers after permits.

"Do you have any of those forms with you?" Sen. Buster Brown, R-Galveston, asked jokingly. The committee heard Mauro's testimony for about 10 minutes, then unanimously sent the measure to the Senate floor.

"For over 50 years, everybody thought it had been repealed," Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, sponsor of the bill, told senators before they voted 28-2 to pass the legislation on to the House.

The issue had been declared an emergency by White, getting around the "60-day rule" which keeps legislators from passing any but emergency bills in the first 60 days of the session.

Mauro said only 10 modern-day prospecting permits had been filed — all by the same Fort Worth attorney, whom Mauro said he was legally restrained from identifying.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate voted 28-2 Wednesday in favor of Senate Bill 183. It could save the state millions of dollars, said the sponsor of the bill, Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso.

The bill repeals state law thereby eliminating a loophole in the state's oil and gas leasing laws.

The bill now goes to the House of Representatives for consideration.

The old law allowed oil and natural gas drilling companies to dodge the state's competitive bids process for selling leases.

The old code allows oil and natural gas leases to be purchased for two dollars per acre, with royalty of one-eigth of the gross on oil land one-tenth of the gross on natural gas, a spokeswoman for Santiesteban said.

Current leases sell for between $10 to $40 per acre with a royalty of from one-fifth to one-fourth of the gross on oil and natural gas, she said.

Although only a few companies had discovered the old law, Santiesteban believed the law should be repealed to prevent the possibilty of future loss in state revenue.

Also Wednesday, the Senate Natural Resources Committee sent Senate Bill 182 back to the Senate for consideration.

The bill relates "to the trade of public school lands" and the leasing of subsurface mineral rights.

Texas economy may be hurt by OPEC price wars

DALLAS (AP) — Disharmony in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries could trigger an oil price plunge that could put the squeeze on Texas' energy-oriented economy, experts say.

Oil exploration firms, banks holding loans to Mexico, some oil companies, oilfield suppliers and the state treasury — which depends on oil taxing for 10 percent of its total revenue — could feel the pinch of OPEC discord.

OPEC failed to reach agreement Monday on production quotas that might buoy the falling world price of oil by limiting supply.

"It really depends on whether you're a producer or consumer of oil," said University of Texas-Dallas economist Bernard Weinstein. "We do both in Texas. On balance, though, I'd say a decline in oil prices is bad for the Texas economy."

"The amount of harm depends on how far the prices fall," Houston energy analyst Dennis Eklof told The Dallas Morning News. "Right now, it's anybody's guess."

Perhaps the biggest loser from lower oil prices, The News said, would be the state government, which figured to take in $1.2 billion in each of the next three fiscal years from a wellhead tax. The tax draws 10 percent of all state revenues.

The Texas treasury could lose $40 million annually from each $1-a-barrel decline in oil prices, said Billy Hamilton, chief revenue estimator for the state comptrollers' office.

"Our assumption was that OPEC would get together and support prices," Hamilton said. "Whether they do that, it's too early to tell. If they don't, we're not going to stick to our estimates."

•••

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — The government says it is increasing oil production by 45 percent to match increased competition from other OPEC members following the cartel's failure to agree on production quotas.

Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba, who announced the production jump from 1.1 million barrels to 1.6 million barrels on Wednesday, also predicted a price cut in Persian Gulf crude.

The emergency meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries collapsed in Geneva on Monday after some members of the 13-member cartel refused to agree on reduced production quotas they were already ignoring and other members refused to stop cutting prices below the $34 base.

The once-powerful cartel, which has relied on production quotas to hold down the supply of oil and keep prices artificially high, has been torn by internal rivalries and a worldwide oil glut that has forced prices down.

"Some OPEC states have started pumping additional quantities of oil at lowered prices," Oteiba said in a local television interview. He said his country had reduced its daily production from 2.2 million barrels "as a contribution toward the world glut," but could no longer afford to keep its production down.

"We must produce at a rate fulfilling our commitments toward our citizens, especially since we have many unmet basic necessities attained by other oil-producing nations," he said.

Saudi Arabia, the leading OPEC member, is producing an all-time low of 4 million barrels daily, in contrast with a high of 10 million barrels. But Oteiba, whose country is closely allied with the Saudis, gave no indication that they plan an increase.

Oilmen watch Legislators

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Texas oilmen and royalty owners will be watching the state legislature in Austin with great interest in coming weeks.

There is a lot to look at: a new governor, the threat of higher severance taxes, the problem of oilfield theft and delayed royalty payments, and many other concerns.

Several bills have been introduced which could affect their futures. Chief among them are bills which would:

— Require a time provision for royalty payments to be made and impose interest penalties on late-paying producers.

— Change the Texas Railroad Commission name, number of commissioners, and duties.

— Create a manifest system for oil haulers to help reduce theft.

— Make oil theft a felony.

One group overseeing these issues will be the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association (TIPRO), one of the most influential watchdogs and lobbyists in Austin.

At their mid-winter conference last week, TIPRO members did not formally endorse or reject any of the proposed bills, according to Hans Hansen, Midland, chairman of TIPRO's State Petroleum Issues Committee.

The group prefers to wait until legislators have been in session a while longer and begin acting on specific bills, he said.

A major issue to be addressed is how to make sure producers pay late royalty fees. TIPRO members had discussed in December the design of a possible bill.

Senate Bill 146 would impose a penalty of 1 1/2 percent interest per month on late-paying producers. Hansen thinks the amount is excessive, and should be tied to the prime rate or some other index.

"We're not totally opposed to the bill, but I think we'll want to amend it so we can live with it, from a producers' and a royalty owners' standpoint," he said. "There are some provisions in the bill which would require tremendous changes in accounting."

He said the bill stems from problems royalty owners in the Giddings area have had in the past year.

TIPRO will likely oppose any changes in the name, structure or duties of the Railroad Commission, Hansen said.

One pre-filed bill would change its name to Texas Energy and Transportation Commission, which more accurately reflects what the RRC does. Another would ask for a constitutional amendment to be submitted to the voters to change the RRC from three to nine members in single member districts.

A third bill would restrict ex-RRC employees from accepting any job with a utility or business normally regulated by the RRC, for two years after they leave the commission.

"I'm kind of like Calvin Coolidge," said Hansen of proposals to change the RRC. "'If it ain't broken, don't fix it.'

"I think we'll be opposed to these changes. Historically, the commission has done a good job of representing the public — the consumer side, and the oil industry — the producing side. Other states look to it as a model. And, with nine members, you run the risk of being too unwieldy."

The Texas Sunset Commission reviewed the Railroad Commission and on Dec. 2, 1982, made several recommendations to change it. None of the recommendations will necessarily become law, Hansen said, yet they will probably influence legislation.

In the past, TIPRO and the RRC have worked together on a number of issues. The industry group actively supported a proposed RRC manifest system which would make it more difficult for thieves to haul stolen oil. That proposal is before the public now for comment.

TIPRO talks to Gov. White

This year's session of the state Legislature will be monitored by the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association just as it has been ever since TIPRO was formed in 1946.

The group, 5,400 strong, will be giving the lion's share of attention to new governor Mark White.

Realizing this, White took time out of his busy inauguration day schedule last week to speak to TIPRO's mid-winter policy meeting. It was the governor's first public meeting with oil industry leaders.

He admitted, only half jokingly, that most TIPRO members probably didn't vote for him.

According to Midlander Hans Hansen, who was there, most TIPRO members thought White gave an impressive performance.

"The Governor gave us a lot of encouragement," said Hansen. "In essence, he said he doesn't want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg.

"He indicated he understood the value of industry — all industry, not just the oil industry — to this state, and would certainly not be in favor of anything that would discourage industrial expansion.

TIPRO members are worried that White, in an attempt to offset a possible state budget deficit, might increase the state severance tax on production, which currently sits at 7.5 percent for gas and 4.6 percent for oil.

Hansen said White generally assured TIPRO members that if additional taxes are found to be needed, he has other ideas in mind which he would consider before recommending an increase in severance taxes.

"We were concerned about the increase (in severance taxes) because it would cause us a decrease in drilling," Hansen said. "You need as much money back as possible in order to go drill more wells," particularly since the flow of outside investment money has slowed.

Braniff deal dead?

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The chairman of grounded Braniff International says the Federal Aviation Administration's decision to block transfer of the carrier's landing slots to a California airline could kill a proposed venture between the two airlines.

Braniff is fighting to win approval for a plan to lease about 30 planes to San Diego-based Pacific Southwest Airlines and possibly rehire 1,500 former Braniff workers.

FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms said in a letter to Braniff chairman Howard Putnam that the Braniff-PSA plan "constitutes a sale of assets by the bankrupt estate, not a reorganization."

Putnam said Wednesday that Braniff's hopes rest with U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge John Flowers, who for nearly two weeks has been hearing arguments on the venture before approving or rejecting it.

"I just think it is incredible that the FAA can make all these decisions while we are trying to provide more competition, get fares down and put 1,500 people back to work," Putnam said.

"All of a sudden, the FAA has become the all-powerful ruler saying what we are entitled to. We will just have to depend on the bankruptcy court to make the right decision."

Elementary students discover what different careers entail

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

They may not be ready to choose a career just yet, but you can bet by the time they graduate from the fourth grade these students will have a good idea about what several different jobs entail.

The students are Tier I reading students at Jones Elementary School and their teacher, Pauline Watson, is excited about the response from the community and the growth of her students.

Although Tier I students don't receive as much publicity or praise as perhaps the Tier II students do, they also form a gifted group.

Selected for the program through California Achievement Test results and teacher recommendations, these high achievers represent the top 25 percent of their grade level.

But motivation in each child is the most important factor for selection.

"If I know that child is a high achiever and super motivated, I want that child to be in my program," Ms. Watson said, adding with a grin, "I don't care what the test score says."

THE TIER I program is divided into two areas of curriculum. Some students may be high achievers in math while others may be high achievers in reading. Some may be high achievers in both.

The method with which the program is implemented in the district varies from campus to campus, Ms. Watson explained. At Jones there is a Tier I program at every grade level in the school.

"They try to allow a lot of flexibility with the program," she noted. "Each school has a Tier I program but it's up to the principal how it will be implemented."

Ms. Watson, who teaches language arts in addition to her two Tier I classes, which contain a total of 75 high achievers, said schools containing few high achievers may decide to operate the program on an individual basis.

"It's just an enrichment program," she said. "I try to plant the seeds and then they just take off and grow. I give them the basic knowledge they need — try to give them the beginning background and whet their appetite — and they take off from there."

Elementary education

Tier I fourth grade students, representing the top 25 percent of their grade level, listened to veterinarian Dr. Mark Miller discuss his career Monday. The Jones Elementary School students are studying careers, only one unit in the district-wide high achiever program partially designed by their teacher, Pauline Watson.

THE PROGRAM for high achievers is modeled after Bloome's Taxonomy, which provides different levels of organizing curriculum, she said. While most children will remain at the knowledge and comprehension level, high achievers can climb up into the application, analysis, synthesis, evaluation and, it is hoped, the independent study level.

"That's what we want," Ms. Watson said. "We want them to come up with original ideas. We want to get the kids to respond — get them to ask questions."

Wednesday they were asking questions. In fact, hands were still waving in the air as Cal Clausen, a Midland paramedic, was thanked for sharing his career with the students and the class was dismissed.

The study on careers, which includes voluntary visits from professionals in all areas, is just one of the units in the high achiever program, written in part by Ms. Watson.

Students learned how to prepare resumes and fill out job applications, according to Ms. Watson. Discussions were held in her class on white collar workers and blue collar workers, vocational schools and the need for college degrees for certain careers.

"WE DON'T EXPECT any of these kids to make a decision on a career," she said, laughing, "but it does get their interest into different careers and when they meet a lawyer on the street, they'll know what he does."

In the second year of operation, the two GEM (Gifted Education Midland) programs differ only slightly. Tier II students, who represent the top 5 percent of their fourth through sixth grade classes, are pulled off campuses twice a week. At Jones, the Tier I students, comprised of kindergarten through sixth grade levels, are pulled out of their regular classes on the same days to participate in their high achiever program on campus. Tier I students are involved in the enrichment activities an hour and a half each week.

According to Ms. Watson, her

National blood bank association issues statement on immunological disease

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Because there is a possibility that a deadly immunological disease may be transmitted through blood products, the American Association of Blood Banks (AABB) has issued a nationwide statement.

The recommendation was issued to hospital-affiliated and independent blood banks with "the full realization that the cause of AIDS (acquired-immune-deficiency-syndrome) is unknown and that evidence for its transmission by blood is inconclusive," according to a joint statement by the AABB, the American Red Cross and the Council of Community Blood Centers.

"We believe, however, that we must respond to the possibility that a new and infectious illness has surfaced. Until more information is available, we believe that the measures outlined are prudent and appropriate," according to the statement.

THE NEW killer — AIDS — has been documented far more lethal than Legionnaires' disease, which killed 34 of its 224 victims in 1976, and toxic-shock syndrome which victimized 1,600 women in 1979-1980, killing 84.

The mysterious AIDS, a deadly epidemic which ravages the body's natural defenses against disease, has the medical profession frantically attempting to isolate the cause.

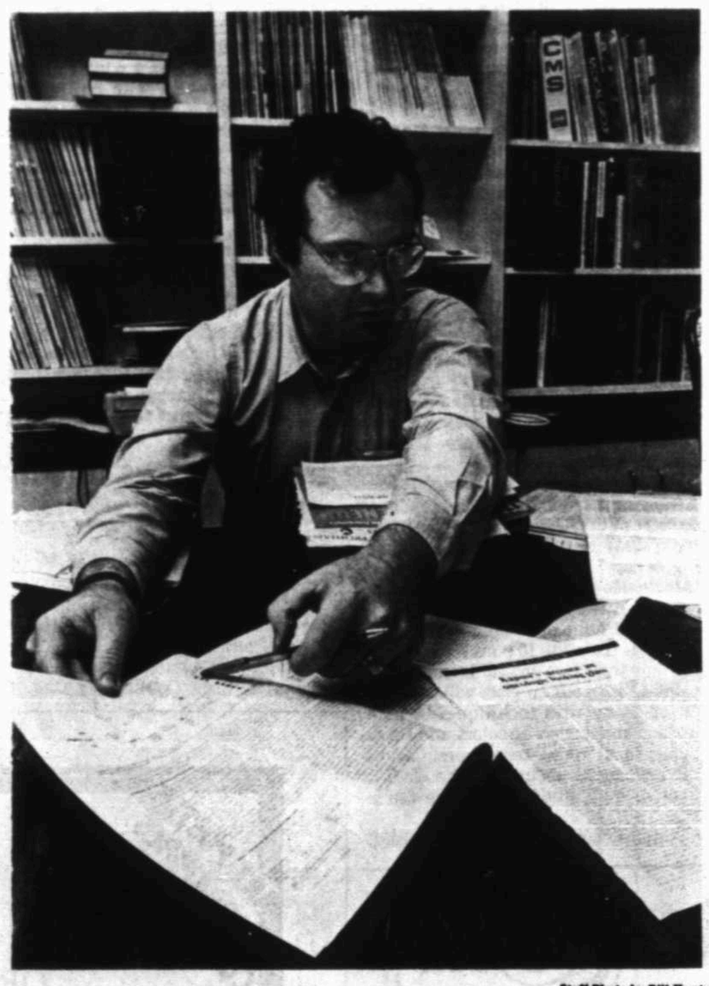

More than 800 AIDS cases have been recorded since late 1981, and more than 300 people have died within the first year of diagnosis. Furthermore, victims have died from opportunistic infections as well as a cancer rarely found in the U.S., Kaposi's sarcoma.

Originally found in drug addicts and male homosexual communities in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco, the syndrome turned up among hemophiliacs and other people who receive blood products. After doctors examined 10 Haitian victims who denied any contact with drugs or homosexuality, but were diagnosed as having AIDS, a warning of its possible hazard was issued to the general public.

More recently, there has been a concern about a major outbreak of the syndrome after infants who received blood transfusions developed AIDS symptoms.

BECAUSE INFANTS' immune systems are not fully developed, it has been suggested that newborn children may be vulnerable to the disease. Until now, about 75 percent of AIDS victims have been homosexual and 13 percent have been needle-using drug addicts.

Medical investigators now fear it is caused by an infectious agent, such as a virus, and may spread through blood or sexual contact.

Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a Midland allergist and immunologist, explains the immune system which can be attacked by a new deadly epidemic — acquired-immune-deficiency-syndrome (AIDS). The disease has afflicted more than 800 people, killing about 300 a year after it was diagnosed.

In Midland, one physician said a few of his patients have inquired about AIDS, but Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, an allergist and immunologist, claims "we have little risk around here," because the disease seems to afflict high-risk target groups — homosexuals, hemophiliacs, Haitians and heroin addicts.

Dr. David Shneidman, a Midland pathologist, said if it is proven that AIDS is transmitted through blood products, the chance of Midlanders contracting the disease is slim.

"In Midland, like very few communities, blood products are homegrown," he said. "We don't have problems associated with paid donors."

WHILE MIDLAND Memorial Hospital has a hospital-based blood bank, Parkview Hospital receives its blood from United Blood Service in San Angelo. All blood donors are carefully screened and give blood strictly on a volunteer basis.

Recommendations from the AABB to blood banks include:

—Educational campaigns for physicians to balance the decision to use each blood component against the risks of transfusion.

—In cases of elective surgery, patients should donate their blood, rather than rely on others.

—Blood banks should plan to deal with increased requests for cryoprecipitate.

—Donor screening should include specific questions to detect possible AIDS or exposure to patients with AIDS.

—There is currently considerable pressure on blood banks to screen out homosexual males, but "such an invasion of privacy can be justified only if it demonstrates clear-cut benefit. In fact, there is reason to believe that such questions, no matter how well-intentioned, are ineffective in eliminating those donors who may carry AIDS. Blood banks should work with leadership groups which include some individuals at high risk of AIDS."

—No routine implementation of any laboratory screening program for AIDS is advised at this time.

ACCORDING TO Wiesenfeld, AIDS appears to be caused by a virus, which attacks the immune system, rather than a bacteria.

Wiesenfeld explained that the immune system is divided into two universes — one controls cellular response and the other controls antibody response. The antibody control is divided into T cells and B cells. The T cells are divided also — T helper, T suppressor and T killer cells. While the "helpers" aid the B cells to produce antibodies against the disease, the "suppressors regulate and suppress the production of antibodies and the killers attack certain infections.

"It is a virus that affects T helper cells, " he said. "The majority of AIDS victims have suppression of defensive antibodies because of the excess T suppressor cells."

Wiesenfeld said in a Jan. 4 AIDS workshop, the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., suggested that sexual relations between male homosexuals, heterosexuals and contact between mother and child should be diminished.

"THIS IS unrealistic," Wiesenfeld said. "It is important that people be very cautious. All homosexuals are potential carriers and the contact with those people shoud be diminished, especially sexual.

"Because hemophiliacs receive blood products they are potential carriers of AIDS," he added.

"Because a newly-developed Hepatitis B vaccine is made from pooled serum, it is probably advisable to avoid it until further study," Wiesenfeld noted. "People who handle blood products are at the highest risk in developing Hepatitis B, but it's better here (less risk) where we have a volunteer donor system.

"Why children get the disease we don't know."

Warren Taylor, left, chairman of the Midland College Exhibits Committee, and other Midland College employees carefully wheel the display stand for the Gutenberg Bible into the Allison Fine Arts Building on the MC campus Wednesday afternoon. The Bible arrived Tuesday and will be featured in an 11-day display beginning today at the McCormick Gallery. The stand is solid oak and weighs more than 400 pounds.

Gutenberg Bible exhibit opens today at McCormick Gallery

An 11-day exhibit of the Gutenberg Bible opens to the public today at the McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Entitled "The Gutenberg Bible: The Beginning of the Printed Word," this exhibit of historical importance is made possible by The University of Texas at Austin, as part of its centennial celebration.

Also on display will be 40 plates of etchings illustrating the Bible by Marc Chagall. These works are the property of Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University.

The Chagall etchings as well as the Gutenberg Bible will remain on display through Feb. 6. Display hours for this special exhibit will be 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

AIDS symptoms similar to those of common flu

In many ways AIDS, a potential killer, resembles a common garden variety of flu-like symptoms. Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a Midland allergist and immunologist, suggest if any of the following symptoms persist consult your physician immediately. Although there is a slim chance of contracting AIDS here, these symptoms could be linked with numerous other diseases:

—A fever for more than four days, or one that comes and goes.
—An unexpected dramatic weight loss.
—Swelling or soreness of lymph glands over a period of time.
—Persistent aches, pains and fatigue for more than 10 days.
—Bluish or purplish spots on the skin.
—Sensory or motor ability loss.
—Persistent herpes sores that worsen.

NAB says it will fight Bentsen bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Association of Broadcasters says it will fight a proposal by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, that would assure political candidates free air time to counter attacks in broadcast commercials paid for by political action committees.

"Broadcasters shouldn't have to subsidize the political process," said Erwin Krasnow, NAB general counsel, who said his organization would lobby against the proposal.

Bentsen told the Senate Rules Committee on Wednesday that he would introduce legislation assuring the free air time because of vast amounts spent by so-called "independent" political action committees to oppose certain candidates.

Bentsen said that in 1982 conservative political action committees such as the Christian Voice Moral Government Fund, National Congressional Club and the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC) "spent millions of dollars on spiteful, hit-and-run attempts to pursuade voters to vote against any number of candidates."

His own campaign was forced to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to counter broadcast and direct mail attacks by NCPAC, Bentsen said.

He said his legislation would "assure that a candidate will be able to respond to unfair attacks."

"It will provide for freedom of speech, but it will also allow the target to gain an automatic right to reply," Bentsen said as the committee began two days of hearings on campaign financing.

Joe Steffen, a NCPAC spokesman, termed Bentsen's proposal "ridiculous." Steffen said NCPAC had spent about $220,000 in its unsuccessful effort to unseat Bentsen.

"I don't know why anyone should be given free time to respond," Steffen said.

Under federal election laws, political action committees may contribute no more than $5,000 to a candidate per election. But sueh a committee can make unlimited expenditures on behalf of a candidate if it does not coordinate its activities with the candidate.

The fire department's Jaws of Life had to be used to extricate the driver of this 1982 Buick, 30-year-old Robert A. Martin of 2304 Lockheed, after his car and a school bus collided at the intersection of Cuthbert and Broadway about 5:45 p.m. Wednesday. Martin suffered a broken left leg and was in fair condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital. No other injuries were reported. The driver of the bus was identified as Pearl N. Sims, 24, of 1505 E. Butternut. There were no schoolchildren on the bus.

interest in the high achievement program stemmed from her experience with students she has taught in the Midland Independent School District for the past 5½ years.

"I just had some really sharp kids in my classes that I really enjoyed," she said. That enjoyment was followed by invitations to attend out-of-town workshops on gifted students and opportunities to listen to several speakers address gifted and talented programs.

"Before, we had all of these programs, but none for these over-achievers," she remembered. "When Midland began the program, I went to several workshops to hear more about it."

FROM THERE she was asked to serve on a gifted committee under the present superintendent, Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., and, concurrent to that, served on the writing committee for the high achievement fourth grade unit. Last year, she conducted workshops on the fourth grade program.

"It all went hand-in-hand," she said. "For one full year I was in meetings everyday."

The fourth grade units contain not only studies on careers, but also studies on subjects ranging from dinosaurs to weather.

And the involvement of the public is one factor that makes the high achiever program successful, she said.

"Getting someone to come in means so much more," she said. "The children can read all about sharks, but to have someone come in with a giant shark jaw that the kids can stand in...well, that's something that they'll always remember."

The visitors who stream in and out of her classroom, including the man with the shark's jaws, are not difficult to locate, she said. "I just listen," she explained. "I listen for people. And then I'm on the phone all the time calling them to ask them to come to my class."

SHE ADMITS SHE isn't shy about making her requests. When she was flipping through a magazine and noticed a story about a doctor in California who was involved in shark hunts, she immediately contacted him.

Soon, her students were looking at material and information sent by the man — including authentic reward posters for sharks.

She emphasized that the program is not a simple show-and-tell. When students studied Indians of Texas, an anthropologist visited the class. However, the students worked, too.

Model villages were constructed, charts were drawn and comparisons between living habits of different tribes were made. The students found Indian names for themselves and had to explain why they chose it. Students also wrote a story about Indians — in sign language.

"The main purpose is for the student to utilize his high creative and thinking skills and to produce some original projects," she said. "It's exciting to watch. These kids develop so much during the year in the fourth grade. They think so much in every unit."

Grocery owner convinces daughters to report alleged vote-buying attempt

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A grocery store owner says she convinced her daughters to report an alleged vote-buying attempt to authorities after she became weary of hearing and reading about voting irregularities in Duval County.

"I hate to see the papers...talking all the time about buying votes," Guadalupe Hinojosa told a U.S. District Court jury in Brownsville Wednesday.

"I've heard it all my life," she said.

Mrs. Hinojosa, of San Diego, Texas, was the final witness called by prosecutors who are hoping to convince the jury that four Duval County women paid or offered to pay voters with county food vouchers in exchange for voting favors during the May Democratic primary.

When Mrs. Hinojosa learned one of her daughters had been given a welfare voucher and another daughter offered one if they would vote for county judge candidate Gilberto Uresti and other specified candidates she convinced her daughters to report it to the county attorney, she testified.

She said she told her daughter "we were going to make a statement because it (vote buying) is not right."

Her daughter, Diana Leal, testified Wednesday that she voted for Uresti in the election "because I was thrilled to get a $50 voucher."

Mrs. Leal acknowledged she had received food vouchers in the past "when I knew I needed it and I knew I qualified.

Mrs. Leal said she was approached by defendents Amelia Garcia and Virginia Barrera who told her they could give her a voucher "easy."

Santos Garza and Teresa Aleman Briones also are charged in the case.

Mrs. Leal, a 27-year-old mother of three, denied she had already decided to vote for Uresti when asked by defense attorney Nelson Sharpe of Kingsville.

Crime prevention program begins Friday morning at mall

A two-day crime prevention program conducted by the Midland County Sheriff's Department, the Midland County Extension Service and the Midland Rape Crisis Center is to get under way Friday morning in the hallway outside the J.C. Penney Store in Midland Park Mall.

"A burglary occurs every two minutes in Texas," said Lt. Bryan Cook, who heads up the recently instituted Crime Prevention Unit of the sheriff's department.

"There is real concern about the increasing threat to the security of homes and businesses. During 1982, there were 852 business and residential burglaries in (rural) Midland County. Individual action can greatly (increase) the chances of (thwarting burglars)."

The program, which is free and open to the public, includes films and demonstrations showing how to make homes, businesses and motor vehicles more secure. Included in the list of topics are security lighting, proper locks, property identification and how to organize neighborhood crime watch patrols and committees.

Also on the program is a film on "Common Street Swindles" and tips on how to avoid becoming a victim of such frauds as The Pigeon Drop, The City Inspector, The Contract Man, The Home Improvement Racket and The Medical Machine.

The Home Security Survey portion of the program "teaches (people) to look at their homes in the same way a burglar would look at them to find security weaknesses — the path of least resistance to their money and other valuables," said Cook.

Narrated by "bad guy" character actor Jack Elam, the security survey film takes viewers completely through a home — from landscaping and lighting to windows, doors and miscellaneous entrances. Also included is information on alarms and Operation Identification.

A film titled "Victim or Victor" will be presented by the Midland Rape Crisis Center.

The program starts at 10 a.m. Friday and will run periodically through 7 p.m Saturday.

Man charged with prostitution promotion

A 42-year-old East Cuthbert Street man was charged with promotion of prostitution following his arrest at the Hilton Hotel in downtown Midland early Wednesday morning.

The arrest came on the heels of an undercover operation in which offers were made to exchange sexual favors for a fee, according to sheriff's department investigators who said they and Department of Public Saftey intelligence officers conducted the undercover operation and made the arrest about 12:40 a.m. Wednesday.

An unidentified woman also was arrested and charged with prostitution. Prostitution and promotion of prostitution are misdemeanors.

Students receive letter from author

Students at The Hillander School have received a letter from Wilson Rawls, author of "Where the Red Fern Grows." The letter was received after he was notified by fifth-grader Natalie Peacock that his book had been voted favorite book by Hillander students during National Children's Book Week in November.

In the letter, Rawls told the students how be became interested in becoming a writer. "My mother read stories to us when we were children. After she read the book "Call of the Wild," she gave it to me. I loved that story so much I carried the book with me everywhere I went.

"One day, I got the idea that it would be wonderful if I could write a story like that one," Rawls' letter continued. "From that day on, all I've ever wanted was to be a writer. I didn't have an education like children get now so I read books to get my education. It took a long time before I got my first book published, but I didn't give up."

"Where the Red Fern Grows" is based on Rawls' boyhood life in rural northeastern Oklahoma during the 1920s.

District attorney seeks new indictments against home

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A district attorney says he will seek new indictments against a nursing home firm that had been accused of killing patients through neglect.

Officials of Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. said they withdrew their approval of a plea bargain agreement Wednesday because Galveston County District Attorney Mike Guarino asked a judge to find the company guilty of involuntary manslaughter.

Autumn Hills pleaded no contest Dec. 27 to a single involuntary manslaughter count and agreed to pay $100,000.

Visiting State District Judge Larry Gist of Beaumont had promised to find the firm innocent if it kept state law for the next 10 years, but Guarino argued successfully that Texas bars corporations from benefiting from such deferred judgments.

Gist then ordered Galveston County to return the nursing home's $100,000 payment.

"We have done nothing wrong, we've never harmed any of our patients and we've never been able to tell our side of the story," said Autumn Hills' President Robert Gay.

The Houston-based corporation and eight present and former employees of its Texas City nursing home had been indicted on murder charges in the deaths of eight patients between Sept. 1, 1977, and Aug. 31, 1979.

"I think it's the kind of case that should be aired before a grand jury," said Guarino, who succeeded James Hury at the first of the year. But he said he did not know what charges he would seek.

Guarino asked Gist for an immediate finding of guilt, but the company objected.

The firm pleaded no contest to involuntary manslaughter in the Oct. 16, 1978, death of Edna Mae Witt, ending a three-year investigation of patients' deaths at the Texas City facility.

After Wednesday's hearing, Guarino said he planned to study the case and that it could be two months before it is presented to a grand jury.

"I'm not on any time schedule," he said.

Autumn Hills' attorney Roy Minton of Austin denounced as "foolish" Guarino's attempt to take the case back to the grand jury.

Former Assistant District Attorney David Marks, whom Hury fired for insubordination Dec. 16 for seeking to block the plea bargain, said he was surprised and happy with Wednesday's developments.

He said he was "confident if someone works on this case it can be successfully prosecuted."

Texas Supreme Court upholds Ector court ruling

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court Wednesday reversed an appeals court decision and upheld an Ector trial court ruling in awarding lump sum attorney fees in a worker's compensation death case.

The appeals court had reversed the award made in connection with the death of Daniel Stott in November 1979 while employed by Mapp Truck Lines.

Texas Employers Insurance Association had contested the award on the grounds that Stott's death was the result of disease and was not job-related.

The trial court awarded $28,572 in attorney's fees to the attorney for Stott's widow, with the Supreme Court concluding the award was correct under the circumstances of the case.

Senate OKs bill changing protective custody rules

AUSTIN (AP) — People placed in protective custody — for their sake or the sake of others — could challenge their detention within 72 hours under a bill approved by the Senate on Wednesday.

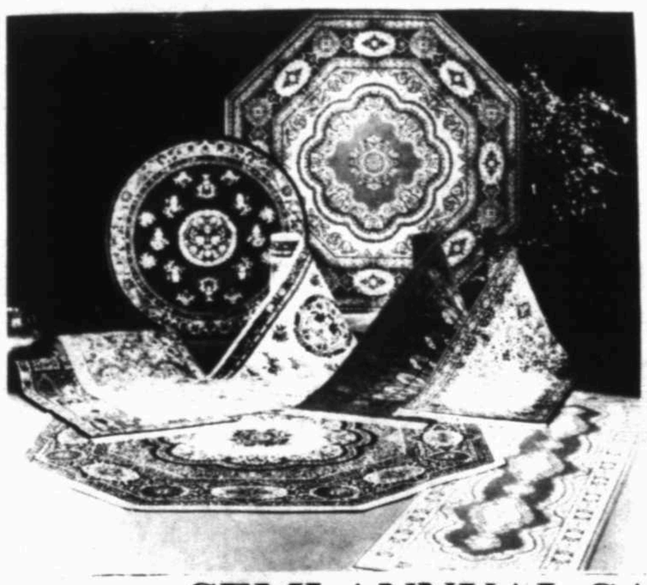

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said the bill was needed because U.S. District Judge George Kazen ruled in November that the protective custody provisions of the Texas Mental Health Code were unconstitutional.

NOT ALL RUGS ARE BORN EQUAL . . . Read why Couristan's Oriental Design Rugs are the finest available today.
Locked-In Weave
Each yarn is securely anchored and woven close through to the back. This means that the thousands of tufts in every square yard of a Couristan are looped "under and over" the cross-threads and pulled tight so the face of the rug stands erect and firm. The process is exclusive and patented by Couristan.
Delineated Designs
Another feature of Couristan oriental design rugs is the unique manner in which the outline of each flower, figure or abstract design is clearly delineated. The accentuation enriches the rug-coloration.
Deep, Luxury pile
The wool used in the looming of a Couristan rug is carefully selected and woven into a long-filmed yarn by an exclusive process that makes the pile extremely thick, deep and resilient. Twisting of each individual yarn strengthens its durability and resistance to wear.
Crystal-Point Finish
The tip of the yarn is finished with a crystal-like point — not cut "straight across" as in ordinary rugs. This adds greater definition to the design and a shimmer like finish to the entire rug. "Crystal Point" is another exclusive Couristan feature.
100% Worsted Wool
The famous Wovenwerk is sewn at back of Couristan all-wool rugs, certifying that the quality and weight of the wool conforms to rigid quality standards. What wool's better — is "lively" and resilient, holds color brilliance, cleans easily, and has greater fire-resistance.
Hand-Knotted Fringe
The crowning touch in the making of many Couristans is the fringe trim. Each strand of the fringe is individually hand-knotted. Ordinary rugs may be finished with sewn on strips of machine-made fringe. Hand insertion of each strand into the edge of the rug and hand-knotting one fringe at a time achieves a distinctive touch of elegance

Both sexes think boys have it better, study shows

By CAROL TAVRIS
Hearst Feature Service

In essence it was a comparison between the lives of men and women that launched the movement for women's rights. As women realized that their lives would be not only different but also better — in status, income, advantages, freedom — if they were men, they began seeking ways to eradicate the inequities between the sexes. Anyone who has lived through the last decade knows what a bumpy ride it has been: a little progress here, a little relapse there, but over-all, a steady improvement.

Or has there been? The clearest measure of progress may be found not in the generation that strugggles for change but in the generation that should be the beneficiary of change — the children of the pioneers. For ten years, public-school teachers and administrators have been trying to eliminate sex bias in the counseling they provide to children, in the books that children read, in the lessons they teach (by example as well as in content). To measure the effect of this effort, Dr. Alice I. Baumgartner and her colleagues at the Institute for Equality in Education, at the University of Colorado, came up with a startlingly simple method. They surveyed nearly 2,000 children throughout the state of Colorado: children in grades three through 12, from large metropolitan areas and from small rural communities. They simply asked one question: "If you woke up tomorrow and discovered that you were a (boy) (girl), how would your life be different?"

THE ANSWERS WERE sad and shocking, for they show how little has in fact changed in children's attitudes in the recent years of social upheaval. Dr. Baumgartner did not find that boys and girls think there are benefits and disadvantages to being either sex. What she found was a fundamental contempt for females — held by both sexes.

The elementary-school boys, for example, often titled their answers with little phrases such as "The Disaster," or "The Fatal Dream," or "Doomsday." Then they described how awful their lives would be if they were female: "I wouldn't like having a little pink dress or anything about a girl. It wouldn't be fun" (fourth-grade boy). "If I were a girl, I'd be stupid and weak as a string" (sixth-grade boy). "If I woke up and I was a girl, I would hope it was a bad dream and go back to sleep" (sixth-grade boy). "If I were a girl, everybody would be better than me, because boys are better than girls" (third-grade boy). And this one, succinctly: "If I were a girl, I'd kill myself."

But the girls wrote repeatedly of how much better off they would be as boys. "If I were a boy, I would be treated better. I would get paid more and be able to do more things" (fourth-grade girl). "I could do stuff better than I do now" (third-grade girl). "People would take my decisions and beliefs more seriously" (11th-grade girl). "If I were a boy, my whole life would be easier" (sixth-grade girl). And this poignant response from a third-grade girl: "If I were a boy, my daddy might have loved me."

TO PROBE THE CHILDREN'S answers more carefully Dr. Baumgartner compaired their remarks in four categories: matters of appearance; how their activities would change; how they would be expected to behave; and how others would treat them.

Boys and girls alike realize that girls, but not boys, are judged by their looks and therefore must pay a lot of attention to their appearance. "If I was a girl," said one boy, "I'd have to curl my hair and put on makeup." One boy said with alarm: "I'd have to shave my whole body!" The girls, on the other hand, said that not having to attend to these matters was a definite advantage to being male: "I wouldn't have to be neat" (fourth-grade girl). "I would't have to worry how I look" (sixth-grade girl). Noting the amount of time and energy that "proper" dress and makeup require, a tenth-grade girl said, "If I woke up and discovered I was a boy, I would go back to bed, since it would not take very long to get ready for school."

The boys' comments, however, show that being a girl is not just a matter of cleanliness and neatness; what really matters is being attractive. "The boys frequently said that if they had to be a female, they would want to be 'gorgeous' or look like a particular movie star," says Dr. Baumgartenr, "but none of the girls made any reference to wanting to be handsome if they were male." As early as the third grade, boys are aware of the hazards faced by women who are "gorgeous:" "If I were gorgeous, I would be jeered at and hear plenty of comments," said one little boy. ("Unattractive women are jeered at too," Dr. Baumgartner observes. "It's just that they hear different kinds of comments.") By high school, when so many girls worry about being "gorgeous" to boys, the boys see the matter differently. "If I were a girl, I would use a lot of makeup and look good and beautiful to everyone," wrote one teenaged boy, "knowing that few people would care for my personality."

IS WOMEN'S WORK AS valued and valuable as men's work? Don't you believe it, said these children. "Not one girl expressed a negative reaction to male activities," says Dr. Baumgartner, "but most of the boys had a critical or hostile reaction to female activities — no matter whether those activities involved school, play, home chores, marriage or eventual choice of occupation. Their general view is summed up in the words of a boy who said, 'Girls can't do anything that's fun' and the depressing words of a girl who said her expectation as a female was 'to be nothing.'

Girls continually pointed out that they would have more or different career choices if they were male: "I could run for President"; "I want to be a nurse, but if I were a boy, I'd want to be an architect" "I would consider work in math or science"; "if I were a boy, I could do more things" "if I was a boy, I'd drop my typing class and start taking really hard classes, since my dad would let me go to college and he won't now." The boys felt they would lose choices if they were female: "I wouldn't be able to keep my job as a carpenter"; "I couldn't be a mechanic." One adamant young man, though, said he would "refuse to work as a secretary or something stupid like that."

When the boys even considered the possibility that as females they could marry and work outside the home (for most boys, these were mutually exclusive categories), the jobs they listed most often were secretary and nurse. Other possible "female" occupations included cocktail waitress, social worker, airline stewardess, interior decorator, receptionist, model, beauty queen — and prostitute. "Boys still see women's work as serving others and providing support," says Dr. Baumgartner, "instead of being in charge."

TO THE GIRLS, THE thought of being male liberated their imagination. The career they mentioned most often as a possible choice if they were male was — ready? — professional athlete. This was followed by a much longer list of possibilities than the boys see for girls: mechanic, construction worker, pilot, engineer, race-car driver, forest ranger, dentist, architect, stunt man, coal miner, geologist, farmer, sports commentator, draftsman, banker, and so on.

But there is a glimmer of good news. Four occupations that were once nearly all male are now (the children say) open to both sexes: truck driver, computer programer, doctor and lawyer.

Boys and girls learn early that girls may express their feelings but boys will be "sissies" if they do; boys are more belligerent than girls; and girls are weaker and more passive than boys, or at least are allowed to behave as if they were.

Many of the boys said that being female would restrain their active impulses: "I would have to be nicer"; "I'd have to be polite"; "I'd have to be kind, cute and have nice handwriting"; "I'd be quieter, more reserved, and wait for other to talk to me first"; "Instead of wrestling with my friends, I'd be sitting around gossiping." "I," said one woebegone boy, "would have to hate snakes."

INDEED, WHEN BOYS imagine themselves as girls their language is filled with words of deprivation — what they would no longer be able to do: "I couldn't climb trees or jump the creek,"; "I couldn't throw spitballs"; "I couldn't have a pocketknife"; "I would not help my dad wash the car or gas up the car"; "I couldn't play football or basketball." But when girls imagine themselves as boys, their language is filled with images of what they would gain: "I could go hunting and fishing with my dad"; "I could run for President"; "I wouldn't have to baby-sit"; "I'd be noisier and more active." And: "Life on the home front would be a lot easier, I know that for a fact, since I've got a brother."

Many girls realized that one disadvantage of maleness is stoicism: "If I were a boy, I would have to stay calm and cool whenever something happened"; "I would not be allowed to express my true feelings." The girls often felt that as boys they would have to be "rowdy," "smart-alecky," "macho," and "show off more" — though a couple of them saw male aggressiveness as an alternative to female pacifism. "I'd kill my art teacher," said one girl, "instead of arguing with him as I do now."

Over and over, girls reported that if they were boys, they would be treated better than they are as girls: "I might be shown that someone cares how I do in school"; "I'd get called on to answer more questions"; "I'd be trusted more when driving." (Interesting, that one, since teen-aged girls are more trustworthy drivers than teen-aged boys.)

"My grandparents would treat me extra special"; "My father would be closer because I'd be the son he always wanted" (a sad and pervasive refrain); "I could play football without being laughed at by others."

EVEN THE YOUNGEST BOYS and girls are aware of another disadvantage to being female: the prevalence of violence against women. Girls frequently mentioned that if they were boys, they would not have to worry about being raped or beaten up, and the boys feared for their safety if they became girls: "(If I were a girl), I'd have to know how to handle drunk guys and rapists" (eighth-grade boy). "I would have to be around other girls for safety" (sixth-grade boy). "I would always carry a gun for protection," said a fourth-grader.

But there was one situation in which both sexes think girls are better off: that of the classroom. The rare benefits boys could imagine about being female had to do with better treatment in school: "If I was a girl, the teacher would favor me"; "I'd be treated like a normal human being, not an animal or anything else." And the girls likewise were aware of their preferential treatment: "If I were a boy, I'd be treated unfairly, with less respect"; "I'd get away with a lot less"; "I would more than likely get yelled at more" were some of their answers.

"The children are right," says Dr. Baumgartner, "because research tells us that teachers reprimand boys three or four times more often than they reprimand girls. The classroom is one of the few places where male rambunctiousness is punished. But it isn't just boys who pay the price of not conforming. The quiet behavior of girls may be appreciated more by the teacher — but it also means the girls are more often ignored. The boys get reprimands — but also more praise and attention." She reports that in this study, one of the math teachers insisted that there were more boys than girls in his advanced-math class. When he checked his grade book, he found out that he was wrong — the opposite was true. He'd simply been overlooking the girls.

WHAT DO THESE FINDINGS mean? Some child-development experts would say that there's nothing to get upset about, that children's prejudice against the female sex is just a phase during which they come to terms with the gender they are. Dr. Lawrence Kohlbert, of the School of Education at Harvard University, argues that all children go through a period of rigid stereotypic thinking while their mental faculties develop. At this stage Sandra Day O'Connor, the first woman on the U.S. Supreme Court, couldn't convince a four-year-old that women can be judges.

This argument is appropriate for very young children but it does not explain why prejudice flows primarily in one direction — from boys to girls — and why girls disparage female activities as much as boys do. Nor does it explain why stereotypic thinking about the sexes lasts — why, for instance, as boys grow older (and presumably more self-assured about being male) they find less and less to admire in women.

The youngest elementary-school boys occasionally mentioned a few benefits of being female. "No one would make fun of me because I'm afraid of frogs," said a third-grader, and a classmate confessed that he "could ride girls' bikes without being laughed at." But once out of grade school, none of the boys envied anything about womanhood, although most of the girls envied much about manhood. "It's-a-normal-stage" theories of cognitive development do not provide a satisfactory explanation for this. "The pattern suggests," says Dr. Baumgartner, "that we are talking not about expected emotional development, but about differences in status."

Ministry to open school for deaf

By MICHAEL SMITH
AP Writer

KAUFFMAN STATION, Pa. (AP) — The sound of banging book bags hasn't been heard in the hallways of old Brown's Mill Elementary School for more than five years.

And if the Franklin County school reopens this year, those sounds still may go undetected by students.

American Missions to the Deaf Inc., an international ministry, is attempting to open the first non-denominational Christian school for deaf children in the United States in the former Brown's Mill school.

The Rev. C. Ray Roush, director of the project and a deaf clergyman, said deaf children need Christian training just like hearing children.

"The deaf ministry has been very neglected," he said. "One reason is ... until a person communicates with a deaf person, he can't tell that they are handicapped.

"The Bible says to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and that means to the hearing impaired, too."

According to Roush, AMD is unique because six of eight board members are deaf. Other deaf ministries exist, he said, but none with a predominantly deaf board of directors.

"We feel deaf have a better understanding of the needs of deaf and how to reach them with the gospel," he said.

The 49-year-old clergyman said the school is one of his highest goals because sign language has not been standardized around the world, so deaf and hearing missionaries are needed to spread the gospel.

Throughout college, Roush said, he studied without benefit of sound or interpreters, but he earned his degree because "I studied like crazy and always sat next to someone who took good notes."

When Roush became a missionary to the deaf in Jamaica, he met his deaf wife, Alice. The Roushes have three hearing children.

Looking ahead at his project, Roush explained his vigor to go on.

"For most deaf Christians," he said, "the voice of Jesus will be the first voice they hear. The Bible promises the ears of the deaf will be unstopped and the tongue of the dumb will sing, so the deaf look forward to singing with the angels."

But before any teaching can be done, he must contend with getting the school.

On and off the auction block for the past few years, the brick school once prompted waves of protest when the decision to close and sell it was first announced.

Built in 1921, the facility was cited five years ago for safety violations by the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry. But Roush said the rural atmosphere and location makes the setting ideal for a school.

Roush said the AMD still needs at least $500,000 in funds to renovate the building for use by the hearing impaired. The school is now being leased to AMD by Heritage Academy, a Christian school based in Maryland that obtained Brown's Mill in the form of a donation in 1979.

If the ministry goes ahead with the project, Roush said, the school would like to attract 100 students. Dormitories would be built on the five-acre tract, he said.

Book offers ideas on making use of junk

By SARICA D. JHABVALA

Hold it! Before you dump that old pair of shoes remember that they began as raw material.

So begin from scratch. Can you see them as flower planters? Can you picture a terrarium made from a shot light bulb?

If you can't, and waste not want not is part of your psychological makeup, you nedd the Carol Jabs book "Re/Uses." She has put together a compendium of 2,133 clever ideas to reuse or recycle ordinary household garbage into something useful or decorative.

The suggestions run the gamut: From A for aged refrigerators ("perfect storage for root vegetables, potatoes, apple and other winter foods" or with a little bit of doing, convert it to a solar collector) to Yarn (make pompons, fringe blankets, pancho and pillows, wrap packages). Hang on to zippers, you never know when you will have to replace a broken one.

Tuna cans can be reworked into bracelets, eggshells into tree ornaments, egg boxes to ice cube trays, old stockings into pillows and pants into blouses.

If those suggestions are too obvious, let's go back to shoes: Fill toes with plaster of paris, cover the shoes with clear acrylic and use them as bookends; or seal the shoe with acrylic, cut off a plastic container so it fits inside, pot the plant in the container and conceal it in the shoe. Voila! a planter; or bury the shoes in the garden, leather will decompose.

A burnt-out light bulb terrarium is a bit trickier, but Jabs tells you how and Robert Duffek's line drawings lets you see how it should look.

The underlying premise of the book is sensible, with sobering statistics. It cites an analysis made by University of Arizona students which showed the average American household in one year throws away 500 bottles, 1,800 plastic items, 850 steel cans, 500 aluminum cans and more than 1,300 cardboard and paper items.

AT WIT'S END

The non-aging phenomenon

By ERMA BOMBECK

I never go to a class reunion that I don't come away feeling desperately sorry for all those pathetic people in their twilight years who look their ages, but don't act it.

With me, it's different. I look the same as I did in college, have the energy of a 20-year-old and the body of an athlete. I cannot fathom why age has not taken its toll on me. And don't ask me to explain why we were all 21 or 22 when we graduated and I am now the youngest person in the room. I just accept it.

You can imagine my surprise when a survey came out a few weeks ago claiming that two-thirds of the men and women in this country perceive themselves as younger than they are. Once they reach middle age they think of themselves as anywhere from 5 to 15 years younger ... most of them putting themselves between 30 and 35.

Translation: Two-thirds of this country has the mentality and attitude of a 30-year-old. No wonder Social Security is in trouble. No one figures they're old enough to get it. No wonder unemployment is at a high. No one wants to retire. No wonder car sales are down. Everyone is out running marathons. Small wonder divorce rates are rampant. Everyone thinks they're single.

I can't figure out what's so great about being 30. I can truthfully say I never aspired to lock into that decade. They weren't the best of all years for me. My hair was its natural color, maternity underwear was a staple, and I had a four-phrase vocabulary: "Shut the door," "The check's in the mail," "I'll be out in a minute. What do you want?" and "You should have gone before you left home."

The days had 36 hours in them and I felt like I was 50 years old.

Age 30 was a time of struggle. A time when you only went to your reunion if you were selling insurance or cars. A time when you got mad if your husband/wife didn't fly into a jealous rage when someone talked to you. A time when the car payments outlasted your car by two years.

Maybe it's time for someone to step forward and volunteer to assume their rightful age of wisdom and experience. It's a rotten job, but someone has to do it.

I'd volunteer, but who would believe me?

Expert gives alarming notes on smoke detectors

By JANET SUTTER
Copley News Service

When fires occur, we all stop to think about our own safety and fire prevention.

Vic Palumbo — former firefighter, fire marshal and now fire and arson consultant to private firms — came to town and first, he was pretty surprised to discover there wasn't a smoke detector in his hotel room. It is required by law in many major cities, he said.

But Palumbo was prepared. He had brought a smoke detector along with him — one with a special bracket which can be attached and then hung on a hotel door.

That is just one of many new fire safety products on the market. There also is a smoke-penetrating emergency light designed to increase visibility in smoke by 10 percent. And one doesn't even have to scramble around looking for it in the dark — a smoke detector alarm activates the light.

As well as traveling with a smoke detector, Palumbo had other advice for people on the road.

— NOTE THE EXITS as soon as you check into the hotel.

— Never use the elevator in case of fire, use stairs.

— If there is a fire in the hotel, feel the door. If the door is hot, don't go out into the hall. "Wet towels and bedsheets to seal off the door, keeping the smoke out. If smoke continues to seep into the room, break open the window, then hang a sheet out." That tells fire fighters that someone is in that room. Then the hard part — just sit.

Now for home fire safety.

Plan an escape route, and have a designated area outside for everyone in the family to meet. Have a fire drill like they used to do in school — a school of 3,000 kids can empty in 3½ minutes. Again, in the event a fire does occur, feel the door of the room. If it's warm, don't go out that way. The problem is that people usually try to go out the way they came in; a second means of egress should be planned.

If you have a house of more than one story, you might consider getting a folding or collapsible ladder. (One with a type of device to hold the ladder away from the building, so you won't slip.) Once out of the house, go to the designated meeting spot. A life could be needlessly lost (and has been) if a parent goes back in to search for a child, who was safely out all along.

"Never go back for material things." Palumbo has investigated too many fires when a death should not have happened.

A HOME FIRE extinguisher. An ABC is the best type, a two-pound one. (ABC represents Class A fire: ordinary combustible, such as rags, paper, overstuffed chairs. Class B fire: flammable liquid fire, such as greases, gasoline. Class C: energized electrical equipment fires) It costs around $10 to $15. It usually releases a dry powder (chemical) for paper, wood, grease or electrical fires.

"Learn how to operate it. Read the directions. Make sure it's charged properly — check the gauge." (Remember the garden hose, but not for grease or electrical fires. Baking soda can also serve to extinguish grease fires.) Put an extinguisher in the kitchen where most fires start.

First, call the fire department, then attempt to extinguish the fire. "I know of many occasions when an individual tried to fight a fire and lost the whole house."

However, "the deadly ones (fires) are in the family or living rooms." It's the smoke that kills. These are smoldering types of fires that happen when you are sleeping and you are breathing these gases."

"In New York, when we used to roll into a fire, if it was black smoke, then it was an oil furnace. If it was brown or gray (smoke), the paint was burning" and we knew we had a big fire going. If the smoke was white, "we knew another engine had gotten water on the fire."

NOW THE COLORS OF smoke are green and purple too, said Palumbo. "That's the synthetics used in furniture today. When burning, they give off very toxic, acrid smoke. They are the killers. That is why you lost the people in the MGM Grand in Vegas — smoke from the upholstery."

He mentioned reading of proposed legislation to set a cigarette safety standard, so they would be self-extinguishing. This would be done by not adding nitrates and citrates, which make cigarettes burn longer. Cigarettes have been known to burn as long as 20 minutes. Out of 300 deaths that occur in New York, as a result of fires, Palumbo said 50 percent are related to cigarettes, with alcohol as a factor too. Nationwide, the figures are 40 percent.

The extension cord can be a source of a fire. Palumbo says the problem starts when a small wire (the extension) links up with a larger wire. Particularly when it's linked to a heater, that's a lot of amps. The wire can overheat and ignite any combustibles nearby.

DEAR ABBY

Group helps parents accept gay children

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is in reply to "Sick Inside," a mother who fears her son may be gay. She wrote that her husband had a heart condition and she was afraid he couldn't handle discussing the situation.

Please let that mother know that in all the years of helping parents to understand their gay/lesbian children, we have never lost a parent. However, we do know of gay/lesbian people who have committed suicide because their parents either did not understand them or refused to accept them.

Whether her son is gay or not, we here at PARENTS FLAG (Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays, Inc.) are in a position to support and help her. We have parent groups and contacts throughout the United States.

The latest edition of our booklet, "About Our Children," with information in five languages (English, French, Chinese, Japanese and Spanish), is now available free if the request comes with a stamped (20 cents), long, self-addressed envelope. The address: Box 24565, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024. — ADELE STARR, PRESIDENT

DEAR ABBY: Last summer my fiance gave me a necklace for my birthday. It was worth about $400. It came with a card saying, "A gift from ( )," and Gerald signed his name.

We have since broken up because of his mother's constant interference. She has called me several times to tell me that Gerald wants the necklace back. I told her that I would have to hear from Gerald, so she put him on the phone and told him what to say. I decided to keep it anyway.

Since then she has called me several time and asked me where the necklace was, and I have told her I have no intention of returning it.

I found out the other day that Gerald still owes $100 on the necklace. (The store called and informed me.)

I know I am legally entitled to keep it because I have proof it was a gift. My parents say I don't have to give it back or pay what's owed on it. My friends say I should give it back.

What do you say? — CONFUSED IN MISSOURI

DEAR CONFUSED: Give it back. And be glad you're not stuck with a wimp like Gerald.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is being married soon. She's living in a one-bedroom apartment and has no room to store anything. After the wedding, she and her husband plan to live in the same apartment.

Would it be proper to include a letter with the wedding invitation suggesting that if anyone wishes to give a gift, money would be greatly appreciated?

Our daughter wants to do this, but my husband and I wonder if it would be considered poor taste. — SOMEWHERE, U.S.A.

DEAR SOMEWHERE: You and your husband are wise to wonder. To include such a letter in the wedding invitations would be in very poor taste.

DEAR ABBY: You said New York is called "The Big Apple" and Cleveland is known as "The Plum." Then a reader asked if there's a city known as "The Pitts."

Yes, it's "Pittsfield, Mass." — M.M. IN PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Using acting skills is called key to public speaking without trauma

By MARLENE AIG
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It's happened to almost everyone. The buckling of the knees, the sweaty palms, the sudden turmoil in the pit of the stomach — all part of the overwhelming paralysis caused by the fear that takes over the body when you look into the sea of eyes of the audience you have to address.

"In a country where freedom of speech is guaranteed, the fear of public speaking is the No. 1 phobia," declares Natalie H. Rogers, whose book, "Talk-Power," uses acting techniques to help people overcome the trauma of public speaking.

A former actress, Ms. Rogers first realized the "paradox" of America's attitude toward public speaking when she took an oral communication course while studying to be a psychotherapist.

"As a theater person, I was appalled at the way public speaking was taught," says the 42-year-old native New Yorker. "The students were extremely uncomfortable and the speeches were boring, rambling and endless."

It occurred to Ms. Rogers then that utilizing the skills she had developed as a Method actress could possibly relieve the often "pathological form of discomfort" that possesses so many otherwise highly personable, intelligent and successful people when faced with an audience of more than one.

The idea was to "take basic acting techniques and modify them and use them to deal with the stress of presentation."

While studying this, she realized that traditional keys to successful public speaking — willpower, relaxation, deep breathing — just didn't work if the fear and panic response were more powerful.

What was needed, she discovered, was a gradual program of exercises dealing not just with the actual giving of the speech, but with the emotional, mental and physical reactions of standing up in front of a group of people.

"It's behavior modification combined with speech crafting," she says. "And if giving the speech becomes a total performance, that doesn't mean it's bad. As long as it works."

Here is what she calls a "detailed map" of overcoming the panic responses of giving a speech, "much like a fitness or diet plan." The emphasis is on small manageable steps and continual exercising — and questioning whether previous techniques, such as videotapes, aid or hinder a terrified public speaker.

The aim, she says, is not just to give the speech, but to overcome the panic and survive.

Much of the program was developed while teaching what she calls "Panic Clinics" in New York at colleges and for J. C. Penney. While still doing corporate seminars, she maintains a private practice as a psychotherapist and is a fellow at the department of psychiatry at Cornell Medical College.

The book was not even a glimmer in her eye when Ms. Rogers started her show business career as a night club singer at age 18. She began acting lessons and married actor-director Harold Herbstman when she was 25.

Together, the couple founded the Dove Theater in 1967, offering acting classes and a showcase for experimental plays. With changing times — and a baby — the couple shut down the theater in 1973 and Ms. Rogers started thinking about going back to school because she was "fascinated by the problems of behavior."

And now, she says, "Talk-Power" has taken over her life, with her teaching Panic Clinics throughout the city. She is working on an assertiveness training book.

"Sure there's a silent majority," says the woman whose experimental theater was once a center for the anti-war movement. "And that's because people are afraid to speak, especially to speak in public. There's fear about expressing an opinion because there's a fear of embarrassment and humiliation. More than ever people have to learn the skill of being able to stand up and be heard."

Professor keeps mink 'in the pink'

By JOHN M. DOYLE
AP Writer

VALPARAISO, Ind. (AP) — In the multimillion-dollar fur industry, Dr. William Leoschke is a highly regarded worldwide expert on keeping mink in the pink.

Leoschke, who teaches chemistry to nursing and pre-med students at Valparaiso University, heads to Wisconsin every summer to scrutinize the eating habits of Mustela vision — otherwise known as mink.

For more than 30 years, he has been conducting experiments that he hopes will produce the largest, healthiest and best furred mink.

A mink's diet determines whether or not it is healthy, and that, in turn, determines how valuable a pelt it will produce, says Loeschke.

"Mink is the only carnivore raised in large numbers in captivity," Leoschke said.

In the wild, mink eat crayfish, ducks, eggs, fish and small rodents. He said that's a difficult and costly diet to match in captivity. In 1950, when he first started his research, mink were being fed a combination of cereal, horsemeat, fish and liver.

"Mink are very fickle," Leoschke says. "I've seen them not eat for 10 days and then die."

Leoschke's initial goal was to come up with a dry mink feed that would make life easier for the mink rancher.

"It took 20 years," he said. "Only two companies in the world have succeeded, although others are still working on it."

Leoschke does his nutrition research for National Mink Foods of New Holstein, Wis., one of the two firms marketing mink feed. But the majority of mink ranchers still feed their mink the combination of cereal, meat and fish, he said.

"It's going to take a long time to convince these mink ranchers that there is another way to raise mink," he said. "You feed them seven days a week and twice a day in May, June and July after the young are born. With feed pellets, you just have to feed them one day a week."

In addition to freeing mink ranchers and their help from a seven-day work week, the feed pellets help create a better pelt color because of their engineered biochemistry, Leoschke said. It also makes for a lighter leather.

"What a woman likes is a full length mink coat that weighs about three or four pounds," he said.

Leoschke's involvement with mink began in the 1950s while he doing post-graduate work at the University of Wisconsin. His teacher was Conrad Elvehjem, who helped discover the vitamin niacin in the 1930s.

While he never discovered any new vitamins, Leoschke said he found a way to prevent the development of bladder stones in pregnant mink, a condition that was costing the industry $1 million a year.

That led to his long-term affiliation with National Mink Foods.

"My first love has always been teaching," he said. "My second goal has been research, but I wanted to get into an area where there wasn't too much pressure to publish. There are maybe a dozen people in the world who are experts on mink nutrition."

Secrets to painless shaving

Hearst Feature Service

Most men can shave closer than they do now without drawing a drop of blood, provided they follow newly-published tips from 15 leading doctors and several shaving industry researchers.

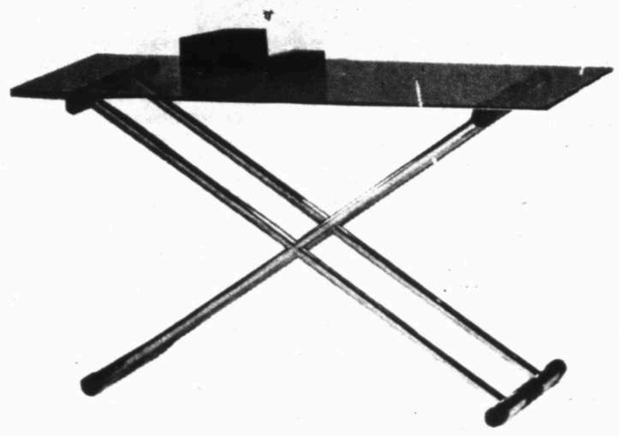

The tips, drawn from a survey of dermatologists and other experts, are listed in an article in the February issue of Popular Mechanics. The experts advise:

- Avoid shaving immediately after rising from bed. Because you've been reclining all night, your face is usually bloated with moisture, making it easier to nick yourself and harder to get a close shave. Shower or shine your shoes first.
- If you can, leave the shaving cream on your face for as long as 15 minutes to avoid cutting the skin. Two minutes is the minimum for a close, bloodless shave.
- Always shave with the grain of hair. The blade should always lead.
- Apply the shaving cream against the grain to get it deep into the beard.
- A wet shave is no more effective than an electric shave. Either one will do the job, but stick with one or the other.
- If all else fails and you can't avoid committing facial hara-kiri in the morning, concludes the Popular Mechanics article, rub petroleum jelly on your face before applying shaving cream.

Stuffed Eggplant Italiano

High-fiber foods can combine taste appeal, good nutrition

Adding more fiber to your diet can be very simple and tasty. Breads, main and side dishes, desserts and nutritious snacks can all play a part in providing dietary fiber.

Not all foods have fiber — even in their raw, unprocessed state. Only foods from plant sources have dietary fiber. There is no dietary fiber in meat, fish, poultry, eggs or milk. However there is fiber in a wide range of foods, including fruits, vegetables, cereals, nuts, seeds and legumes.

Like a supporting cast, vegetables, salads and other side dishes serve to complement the leading element or main dish in a menu. Appetizing and colorful accompaniments are not only an important source of nutrients essential in well-rounded diet but also a significant source of dietary fiber, especially when bran cereals are used to add crunch to a topping or flavor to a casserole.

Stuffed Eggplant Italiano, with 5.6 grams of dietary fiber per serving, is a delicious way to introduce the beautiful eggplant to those who are unaccustomed to its versatility.

STUFFED EGGPLANT ITALIANO

1 medium-size eggplant (about 1 pound)
1/3 cup shreds of wheat bran cereal
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms (2 to 3 oz.)
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1/4 cup chopped onion
1/4 cup finely chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted
1 small garlic clove, finely chopped
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon basil leaves
Dash pepper
1/3 cup shredded mozzarella cheese

Cut eggplant in half lengthwise. Place halves, cut side down, in shallow baking pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes. Remove from oven. Cool slightly.

Scoop out pulp, leaving 3/8-inch shell. Place shells, cut side up, in baking pan. Coarsely chop pulp. Combine with remaining ingredients expect mozzarella cheese. Fill eggplant shells, pressing firmly. Cover with foil. Pierce foil in several places to allow steam to escape.

Bake at 350 degrees about 40 minutes or until vegetables are tender. Remove foil and sprinkle with mozzarella cheese. Bake, uncovered, about two minutes longer or until cheese melts. Cut each half into two pieces to serve.

Makes four servings, 150 calories, 5.6 grams dietary fiber per serving.

While flavor and variety are often primary concerns when choosing the menu's main dish, it is just as important to consider its nutrient, calorie and dietary fiber content. A successful new main dish may feature a familiar food with a flavor or texture twist. You'll be pleased to present a tasty new recipe to the family that is not only attractive and nutritious but also easy and quick to prepare like Cheese-and-Meat Balls with Savory Onion Sauce. One-half pound of ground beef combined with shredded cheddar cheese makes 30 meatballs!

CHEESE-AND-MEAT BALLS

1/2 cup shreds of wheat bran cereal
1 egg
1/3 cup milk
1/8 teaspoon pepper
1/2 pound lean ground beef
1 cup (4 oz.) shredded cheddar cheese

In meduim-size mixing bowl, combine cereal, egg, milk and pepper. Mix well. Let stand about five minutes or until cereal is softened.

Add ground beef and cheese, mixing until well combined. Shape into one-inch meatballs. Place in single layer in greased, shallow baking pan.

Bake at 400 degrees about 10 minutes or until browned. Remove from oven and immediately loosen meatballs from pan. Serve with Savory Onion Sauce over noodles, if desired.

Makes about 2-1/2 dozen meatballs, six servings. Per serving (without Savory Onion Sauce or noodles) 160 calaories, 2.3 grams dietary fiber.

SAVORY ONION SAUCE

1/4 cup chopped onion
1/4 cup margarine or butter
1/4 cup all-purpose flour
Dash pepper
1 can (10-1/2 oz.) condensed beef broth soup
1 can water
2 tablespoons sherry

In medium-size frypan, cook onion in margarine over low heat until tender. Stir in flour and pepper. Cook until bubbly and lightly browned, stirring constantly. Remove from heat.

Stir in condensed soup and water. Increase heat to medium and cook until mixture boils and thickens, stirring constantly. Stir in sherry. Serve over Cheese-and-Meat Balls.

Makes about two cups. Per 1/3 cup serving, 100 calories, 0.2 grams dietary fiber.

Perhaps their simplicity is the reason warm and flavorful quick breads are easy to include in nutritious menus. Even the busiest family can enjoy warm-from-the-oven bread throughout the day. Bran adds a characteristic flavor and texture appeal to quick-to-fix loaves such as Peanut Butter Bread. This nutritious combination of peanut butter and high fiber bran flakes cereal will appeal to family members of all ages.

PEANUT BUTTER BREAD

1-1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup sugar
2 cups wheat bran flakes cereal
1-1/3 cups milk
1/3 cup peanut butter
1 egg

Stir together flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Set aside.

Measure cereal and milk into large mixing bowl. Let stand about two minutes or until cereal is softened. Add peanut butter and egg. Beat well. Stir in flour mixture. Spread batter evenly in greased 9 x 5 x 3-inch loaf pan.

Bake at 350 degrees about one hour or until done. Cool 10 minutes before removing from pan. Cool completely before slicing.

Makes one loaf, 15 slices.

CPSC faces budget cuts

By SUZANNE CHONEY
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — C'mon now, admit it: How many hours of sleep do you lose worrying about your lawn mower?

Probably none, if the mower works as smoothly as it should.

But an estimated 80,000 Americans were injured last year when they finished mowing their lawns and the mower's steel blade kept moving.

No doubt, those persons have followed news accounts of the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission's decision, which took effect Jan. 1, 1983, requiring the blades on lawn mowers to automatically stop when the operator's hands are removed from the mower's handle.

And, no doubt, those 80,000 persons are probably cheering the CPSC.

But not every decision the tiny commission makes brings front-page headlines or creates lots of controversy.

The biggest controversy the commission has right now is the commission itself, which like other federal agencies, faces additional budget cuts this year.

They are cuts which consumer activists fear may cripple the commission's investigative and enforcement efforts.

The commission has initiated the recall of hundreds of products, and put into force improved standards, from infants' cribs to requiring wood- and coal-burning stoves to be labeled for installation and maintenance instructions.

"And really, there's not a sense of outrage about it until you or someone you know gets hurt," said R. David Pittle, a former commissioner.

"It's amazing. People become 'born again' once they get hurt," he said.

Right now it is the commission that is hurting. The commission, created in 1972 under President Nixon, had a peak budget of $46 million and 925 staff members, largely investigators and technicians, by the late '70s.

This year, the commission, after a 25 percent budget cut the year before, has a budget of $33.5 million and a staff of 636.

Many of the technician-investigators slots have been dropped, leaving a greater proportion of public educators, and meaning fewer people to do the enforcement work of the commission, whose five commissioners are appointed by the president.

The federal Office of Management and Budget has proposed a $28 million budget for 1984, but commission chairwoman Nancy Harvey Steorts, who had asked for $35 million, said her personal lobbying efforts have resulted in a "compromise" budget of $32 million.

A study by the private and conservative Heritage Foundation recommends that the commission be abolished because it is ill-equipped to handle such an overwhelming task. And another proposal by a House Republican study group calls for putting the commission under the wing of the Department of Commerce would diminish the power of the independent agency.

But Steorts said the commission is and will continue to remain "very sound and viable."

John McLaughlin, legal counsel for the House subcommittee on Health and the Environment, which has control over consumer programs such as the commission, downplayed the efforts to dismantle the CPSC.

In 1675 engraver Jean Papillon became the first person to print wallpaper in matching, continuous patterns.

AT WORK

Make your own recipe for success

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q. I make great soups, and my friends keep encouraging me to write a specialized soup cookbook. How do I do that?

A. First, establish yourself as something of an expert in the public's eye. Sell your soups to local groceries or restaurants; demonstrate soup making in a class or on a local television talk show.

Second, get a copy of the book "Literary Market Place" to find names of agents who may specialize in cookbooks. Third, write a proposal aimed at persuading the agent to represent you. State what makes you a soup expert, how your book will be different or better than those already published, who the market (the buyers) is, how many pages and illustrations you imagine. Then include two sample chapters plus recipes, tested by some friends, and a table of contents. If you can't find an agent, go to the publisher yourself.

Q. I'm an MBA student in my first year, and I'd like to find a summer internship. How do I approach the management of a company? Or should I wait for them to find me?

A. You're right to seize the bull by the horns. Instead of waiting for business or the university to come to you, go to them. Choose which industry and company you think you'd like to join eventually, then go to the director of the division most interesting to you. But first prepare yourself. Take a few business papers you've written, samples of past work experience; rethink some successes in school and work. Do some homework — this time about the company's record. Then make your pitch. Don't be afraid to accept the most menial "go-fer" job because every contact demonstrates your cooperation, and competence. Then they can offer you something more substantial — a job.

Q. I want to get promoted from production manager to director of another area, marketing or data processing. How do I cross the bridge of disciplines?

A. For sure, intent and competence are not enough to make this leap. You have to get known by top management for your demonstrated interest and capability, so you'd better bone up on either marketing or data processing. Then get yourself on a task force comprised of people from several departments that concerns a universal issue — dealing with technological change or productivity or quality control.

If there is no such task force, suggest one and lead it. If that isn't possible, go to your highest ranking vice president, reveal both your expertise and wish to contribute to a second department, and ask for advice. If that advice is positive, great. If it isn't, your next step is to start your search outside.

Road to new drugs often full of frustrations

By JERRY ZREMSKI
Hearst Feature Service

RENSSELAER, N.Y. — Dozens of scientists spend their careers at the Sterling-Winthrop Research Institute here trying to discover chemical compounds that might be used as new prescription drugs.

They succeed about once in every 10,000 tries.

"There are many excellent chemists who will work an entire lifetime and never get a product on the market," said Dr. Denis Bailey, vice president for chemistry at the institute. "The odds against our success our astronomical."

It often takes more than 10 years of research, development and testing by more than 200 scientists before a new drug hits the market, and problems at any step of the process could doom the project. Consequently, some scientists lack the patience and confidence to keep trying.

"Some people do get distressed at not being able to succeed at what they're doing, so they have to give up creative work and do other things here at the institute," Bailey said.

STERLING-WINTHROP spends between $50 million and $60 million each year searching for new drugs, and the bulk of that research is conducted by the 850 employees of the Rensselaer facility.

Scientists here have developed non-prescription drugs such as Bayer's new coated, easy-to-swallow aspirin as well as so-called "orphan" prescription drugs — those used to treat rare and debilitating diseases that afflict up to 56 million Americans, such as Tourette's syndrome and Huntington's disease.

President Reagan recently signed a bill giving pharmaceutical firms tax credits and other incentives to search for orphan drugs. Sponsors of the bill said drug firms often felt searching for such drugs would not be worth the investment.

IF SCIENTISTS at the institute think current drugs aren't effective enough to treat a particular condition, a team of chemists and biologists is appointed to study how a better drug can be found. The team spends up to a year preparing a report for the institute's management explaining the shortfalls in current therapy and isolating a particular family of chemical compounds where a new drug might be found.

If the institute's management thinks the project is worth the investment, the research team enters the lab. First they test the chemical compound they think will most likely be able to treat the condition, and keep going from there.

"The conditions we're talking about involve a biochemical defect, and we try to come up with the chemistry to offset that defect," Bailey said.

At this step, the problems usually begin. Often, at least 200 compounds are tested in the laboratory before an effective one is found.

"There's a good deal of art as well as science involved," Bailey said. "Some people just seem to have the ability to take fragile leads and elaborate upon them, while others spend their whole careers waiting for a phone call from corporation headquarters to tell them their product will make it to the market. I'm still waiting for my first phone call."

AFTER THE DRUG is put in its final form, the Product Development Division manufactures enough to be used for further testing. A quantity of the drug is stored at various temperatures for years at a time to test its shelf life, Rosenberg said.

And after passing Food and Drug Administration safety tests, samples of the drug are packaged and sent to research hospitals across the county for testing on patients.

Sterling-Winthrop scientists travel to the hospitals to monitor how the drug is working, and even at this level there are failures. "There are times that we'll get a potential new product to this stage and it just doesn't do what we want it to do," Rosenberg said.

If that happens, it's back to the laboratory. But if the drug works, the formula for the drug is sent to one of Sterling-Winthrop's other plants, which manufacture the product that actually makes it to the market. Scientists consistently monitor the drug as it is being manufactured to make sure the ingredients don't vary as larger quantities are made.

And finally, the drug enters the marketplace.

DR. GEORGE LESHER, who discovered NegGram, is one of the few chemists at the institute to have a drug reach the market. He also has two new creations — one for use with cardiac patients and an antibacterial to treat infections, awaiting FDA approval.

He attributes his success — three new products discovered in a 30-year career — to luck. "Of course, I've had a few thousand failures, but that's the odds of the game. You have to be a born optimist, because so much of what you do goes nowhere."

Bozo Texino traveled on boxcars of the nation's rails for 50 years

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — He smoked a long-stemmed pipe and wore a 10-gallon cowboy hat adorned with the Lone Star of Texas.

His name was Bozo Texino and for awhile he was famous.

He was a face scrawled on boxcars with yellow chalk. People all over the United States, and sometime seven in foreign countries, spotted the caricature for almost 50 years.

Bozo Texino became as familiar to the railroad workers and hobos as Kilroy once did to American GIs overseas. The originator of Bozo Texino, however, was one man.

James Herbert McKinley was a railroad engineer who worked for Missouri Pacific from 1914 to 1964. He lived in San Antonio before he died in nearby Pleasanton in 1967 at age 75.

Early in his career, he began to draw the once familiar but now nearly forgotten figure on the sides of boxcars. In 1939, McKinley told a reporter he had adorned a quarter-million or so boxcars since 1919.

AP Laserphoto Cartoon

Boxcar art was once a thriving art form.

Arthur Hecox, a Southern Pacific station clerk in the 1930s, reported that he often saw comics serialized on a string of cars.

One series depicted the bodies of men with the heads of birds and were labeled "the Scissor-Bill Bunch." A scissor-bill was a brakeman.

Boxcar nudes were popular as well as graffiti. Recurrent names glimpsed on boxcars included J.B. King, Dead-Eye Dick and Stockton Jim. Doggerel was often illustrated with crude sketches.

"Boxcar art is seldom seen nowadays," said F.A. Schmidt, a San Antonio railroad buff and author who has published five books on railroading, particularly on Texas rail lines. His latest book is "Train Wrecks."

"I saw some well-drawn naked women on a boxcar in the Katy railyard about two or three years ago, but I haven't seen much since," he said.

The meaning and original inspiration for Bozo Texino is unclear and is perhaps lost with the colorful character who invented him.

Other railroad men who worked with McKinley remember that "Bozo" was his own nickname. But no one seems to know where "Texino" came from.

"I never could understand that," said Henry "The Fox" Munoz, a consultant for employer-labor relations. "It was not 'Tejano' or 'Texano' which would've meant 'Texan.' I think there must have been a catch to it. He (McKinley) certainly was no clown."

Well, not exactly, although McKinley was known to sometimes wear a checkered shirt, a bow-tie, and a derby hat with his denim railroad overalls and is remembered by one of his peers as "one of the wildest engineers who ever worked for Missouri-Pacific."

Munoz first encountered Bozo Texino as a young shoeshine boy in Laredo in the early 1930s.

"I would get three cents to shine a pair of shoes. That was a hell of a lot in those days. My father made $1.50 a week and my grandfather earned $2 a week digging holes for the city gas company," Munoz remembered.

"I'll never forget when a train would come in with Bozo Texino drawn on it. There were freight train and passenger trains in those days. 'The Eagle' went all the way to Mexico City. 'I'm in the chips today,' I would tell myself when I saw Bozo Texino.

"He always came on big trains with a lot of railroad men with him. They had to take the cars across the boder and would have a couple of days layover in Laredo.

"I would go to the hotel where they stayed and collect at least 15 pairs of shoes to take home and shine. They were good shoes and they always paid me a little extra.

"I neve knew which man draw Bozo Texino but I always figured he must have been somebody leading the pack. Obviously he knew what was going on, and when I saw his boxcar I knew I would make some money," Munoz said.

Two retired railroad men in San Antonio knew and worked with McKinley.

Howard Handley, a former Mo-Pac railroad conductor, said he spent many af afternoon sitting in front of that Laredo hotel getting his shoes shined.

It is Handley who remembers Bozo as "one of the wildest engineers who ever came down here."

"Those cartoons traveled all over the country. In 1949 I went to Cuba with the Army reserves and saw a train there with one of Bozo's logos on it," Handley said.

It has been reported that McKinley never drew on a Missouri Pacific boxcar, selecting "foreign" boxcars instead, because there was a rule against it. However, Handley said "the cartoons were very unofficial as far as the railroad was concerned, but they didn't really care, because they were pretty good advertising."

Henry Doerr worked with McKinley in "about '52 or '53 on the San Antonio to Austin and return run."

"He was quite a guy," Doerr said. "He had asthma and always carried around a little thing that he put in his mouth to rejuvenate his lungs. He as a pleasant fellow. Everything always seemed to be funny to him.

"Most of the people who would've known him are gone now. I'm crowdin' 79 now and ones even younger than me are dying."

McKinley was survived by his wife, Mrs. J.H. McKinley, 88, who lives in Pleasanton, and a sister-in-law, Willa Mae Preston, of nearby Poteet.

"He was a very talented, intelligent, special person," Mrs. Preston said. "I think he had a photographic memory.

"I thought it was silly and I don't remember much about those little things he used to do," Mrs. McKinley said. "I guess I was a gripey wife. I din't like them but he did and he kept on doing them. I never did like that name 'Bozo' either. Maybe I should have encouraged him, but I didn't."

Mrs. McKinley said she never wrote any of the McKinley's poems or articles which appeared under the 'Bozo Texino" pen name in some railroad publications.

"He'd write them in pencil and I would type them for him. But I don't have any of those articles now. He threw them all away before he died."

1 NT	Pass	6 NT	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

When you have a two-way finesse to take, it helps if you can get a count of the opponents' hands. But you must do all you can to assure that the count is as complete as possible.

The auction was a matter of simple arithmetic. After South had shown a balanced hand of 13-15 points with his one no trump rebid, North added in his 20 points, came up with enough for slam and wasted no time in bidding it.

Because of the unfortunate duplication in hearts, there are only ten fast tricks. The only place for declarer to develop two more tricks is in the club suit, and to do that declarer will have to find the queen of clubs.

If declarer wins the diamond and cashes out all his winners, he will learn that West started with five diamonds and two hearts and that East began with five hearts and two diamonds. However, he will have no way of knowing the distribution of the black suits. Is the club finesse, therefore, a pure guess?

Not to an expert declarer. He will correct the count at trick two by ducking a spade! Now when he cashes his winners, he will also discover that East started with two spades, which places West with five spades. That means that twelve of West's cards are accounted for, so he must hold exactly one club.

Now the play in the club suit is an open book. Declarer cashes the king of clubs and takes care to jettison the jack of clubs under it. When the queen does not drop, declarer runs the nine of clubs, and he can stay in dummy to repeat the finesse!

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Sierra Blanca, Texas, claims to have the world's best weather

SIERRA BLANCA, Texas (AP) — Forget frost-free Key West, Fla., and the tropical lure of Hawaii. The world's finest weather is not in those places.

It's in Sierra Blanca, this West Texas town boasts.

"Our weather is pretty close to perfect," says "Dargie" Wright, former Texas Ranger and Hudspeth County sheriff.

Residents agree: "I rate it terrific," says secretary Brenda Bullock. "I'd have 12 feet of snow right now if I was back in Schenectady (N.Y.)."

It's a sparkling clear day in the mid-40s, and a dusting of snow from a surprise storm that struck Christmas Day still lingers.

But no one here lingers long in his or her assessment of the Sierra Blanca climate.

"Climate is one of our finest assets, something we feel we can vie with El Paso and most cities in the Southwest," says Beth Sweiven, head of the local Chamber of Commerce.

It was Chamber of Commerce honchos who baked up the world's best climate concoction: Crudely painted billboards placed along both sides of Intertate-10 proclaim Sierra Blanca as the site of the world's best climate.

"We need something to attract people," Mrs. Sweiven says. "We hoped this would attract people from the East and West."

She says that monthly temperature medians compiled nationwide from popular resort centers prove Sierra Blanca year-round has better climate than anywhere else.

Key West, the southernmost city in the continental United States and famed for its frost-free weather, hardly compares to Sierra Blanca, Wright says. The same applies to Mauna Kai near Kona, Hawaii, which banker David Rockefeller claims has the best climate on Earth.

"Both those places h10 nearly bypasses the town, leaving State Highway 80 devoid of much traffic, Mrs. Sweiven says.

"So we decided to come up with a logo," she says.

But isn't the world's finest climate a little pretentious?

"We do have dust storms and some wind," admits secretary Juanita Ramirez. "And this year has gotten awful cold."

But citizens say the town's 4,500-foot altitude and an average of 11 inches of rain per year makes its climate benevolent, especially when the rest of the Southwest sweats each summer .

"It never gets too hot or too cold," says Wright, at 81 the dean of the town. "I do remember once around 1947 when it got 20 degrees below zero from a bad storm. Killed eight big trees around the courthouse overnight."

The courthouse is the largest structure in Sierra Blanca now that the Palace Hotel is closed and boarded up. The town also houses a border patrol office, has an aged railroad depot and two residential developments.

But Mile High and Country Club Estates seem almost lost on the high plains around Sierra Blanca. A 7,000-foot mountain devoid of trees — Sierra Blanca, or White Mountain, hovers near the town.

Country Club Estates, with 18 homes planted around a yellowed 9-hole golf course, is touted as the site where the town can expand.

But the town has lost about two-thirds of its population since it was founded as a railroad transportation center in 1881. The Southern Pacific and the Texas and Pacific railroads met here 101 years ago to connect railroads for the first time between coasts.

A silver spike was driven into the ground by business tycoon Jay Gould to commemorate the occasion, but officials here say their historical thunder was stolen when El Paso claimed the railroads were first connected about 90 miles away in that far West Texas city.

"But we were first," says Mrs. Sweiven.

Sierra Blanca is also first among pretenders to the world's climate crown, she insists.

"About the only thing I can find wrong with the weather is the dust storms," says Wright. "We're high and dry and that makes everyone healthier."

The locals have few unhealthy things to say about the town.

"I wish we had some sidewalks — that's what this town needs," says Ms. Ramirez.

"Who can complain too much when we get all this sunshine?" Wright asks.

NASA official wants things speeded up

WASHINGTON (AP) — For 25 years, every satellite, every spaceship, every system rocketed into space by NASA has been shaken, rattled, rolled, baked, frozen and microprocessed in endless test chambers to perfect it for flight.

Now, times are changing at NASA. A key official says the conservative approach is obsolete in the space shuttle era and, in a significant reversal of agency practice, he's prompting agency technicians to speed things up.

"I don't think it's a WPA program for engineers, but you ought to look at some of the engine joints we have on the shuttle," says Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson. "What ought to be just a simple fitting is scalloped out to save a few ounces. They measure the strain inside a bolt not with just a standard old torque wrench, but by a very, very complex computer operation.

"That adds to the cost and they ought to knock that stuff off."

It now takes a minimum of $1 billion and eight years to bring a new satellite or major system to the production stage, he said.

Abrahamson, once a frustrated astronaut-in-waiting, now a young, tough general, is well aware that words like these challenge the rigid conservatism that was NASA's hallmark for many successful years before the agency put man on the moon, and for many successful years since.

"I'm trying to create a revolution," Abrahamson said in an interview at the headquarters of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "I'm trying to make people realize that we're in a new age, the shuttle age, and that there are new methods and less expensive methods that ought to be incorporated.

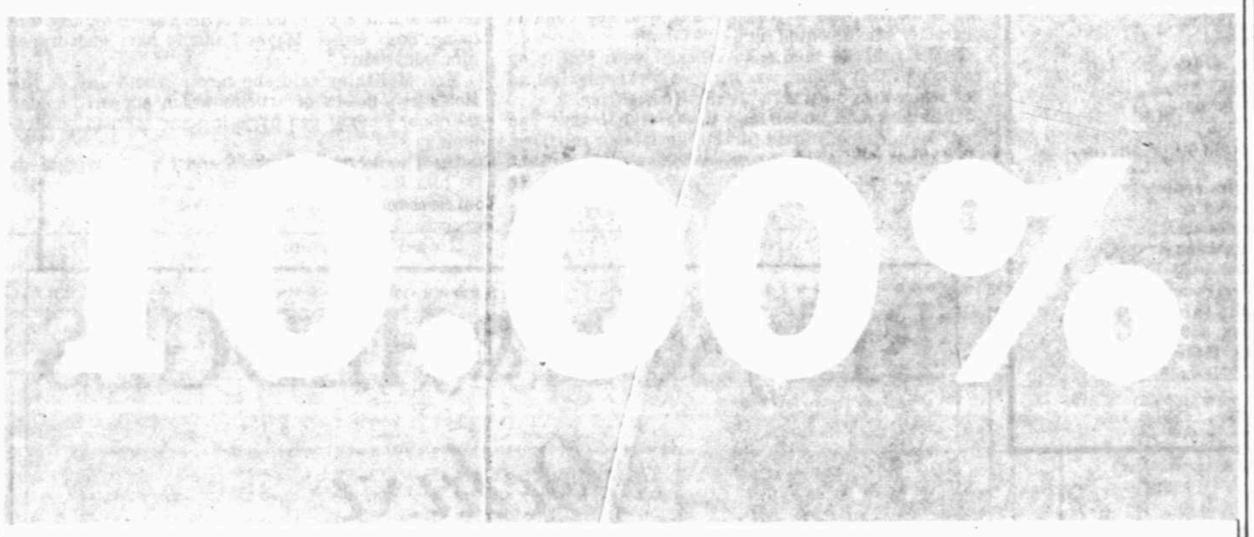

"The shuttle by itself won't do it," he said. "We have to have people who will step up to the new tasks."

As director of NASA's shuttle program, Abrahamson, 49, is charting the new course with initial moves like these:

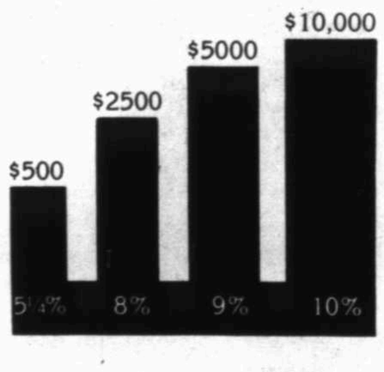

—After the first shuttle space walk was canceled last November because of suit faults, he quickly added two days to the next mission, No. 6 in February, and rescheduled the effort. Under NASA's earlier conservatism, weeks of study and debate would have preceded such a decision.

—Because half the shuttle pilots who have flown have suffered from motion sickness, he decided to find out why by adding astronaut-doctors to the crews of the seventh and eighth missions scheduled in May and July.

Abrahamson has been a test pilot, a combat flier in Vietnam and an astronaut with an Air Force program that never got off the ground. Among his commands, he gained recognition for his aggressive management of the F-16 fighter program.

Elementary students discover what different careers entail

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

They may not be ready to choose a career just yet, but you can bet by the time they graduate from the fourth grade these students will have a good idea about what several different jobs entail.

The students are Tier I reading students at Jones Elementary School and their teacher, Pauline Watson, is excited about the response from the community and the growth of her students.

Although Tier I students don't receive as much publicity or praise as perhaps the Tier II students do, they also form a gifted group.

Selected for the program through California Achievement Test results and teacher recommendations, these high achievers represent the top 25 percent of their grade level.

But motivation in each child is the most important factor for selection.

"If I know that child is a high achiever and super motivated, I want that child to be in my program," Ms. Watson said, adding with a grin, "I don't care what the test score says."

THE TIER I program is divided into two areas of curriculum. Some students may be high achievers in math while others may be high achievers in reading. Some may be high achievers in both.

The method with which the program is implemented in the district varies from campus to campus, Ms. Watson explained. At Jones there is a Tier I program at every grade level in the school.

"They try to allow a lot of flexibility with the program," she noted. "Each school has a Tier I program but it's up to the principal how it will be implemented."

Ms. Watson, who teaches language arts in addition to her two Tier I classes, which contain a total of 75 high achievers, said schools containing few high achievers may decide to operate the program on an individual basis.

"It's just an enrichment program," she said. "I try to plant the seeds and then they just take off and grow. I give them the basic knowledge they need — try to give them the beginning background and whet their appetite — and they take off from there."

Elementary education

Tier I fourth grade students, representing the top 25 percent of their grade level, listened to veterinarian Dr. Mark Miller discuss his career Monday. The Jones Elementary School students are studying careers, only one unit in the district-wide high achiever program partially designed by their teacher, Pauline Watson.

THE PROGRAM for high achievers is modeled after Bloome's Taxonomy, which provides different levels of organizing curriculum, she said. While most children will remain at the knowledge and comprehension level, high achievers can climb up into the application, analysis, synthesis, evaluation and, it is hoped, the independent study level.

"That's what we want," Ms. Watson said. "We want them to come up with original ideas. We want to get the kids to respond — get them to ask questions."

Wednesday they were asking questions. In fact, hands were still waving in the air as Cal Clausen, a Midland paramedic, was thanked for sharing his career with the students and the class was dismissed.

The study on careers, which includes voluntary visits from professionals in all areas, is just one of the units in the high achiever program, written in part by Ms. Watson.

Students learned how to prepare resumes and fill out job applications, according to Ms. Watson. Discussions were held in her class on white collar workers and blue collar workers, vocational schools and the need for college degrees for certain careers.

"WE DON'T EXPECT any of these kids to make a decision on a career," she said, laughing, "but it does get their interest into different careers and when they meet a lawyer on the street, they'll know what he does."

In the second year of operation, the two GEM (Gifted Education Midland) programs differ only slightly. Tier II students, who represent the top 5 percent of their fourth through sixth grade classes, are pulled off campuses twice a week. At Jones, the Tier I students, comprised of kindergarten through sixth grade levels, are pulled out of their regular classes on the same days to participate in their high achiever program on campus. Tier I students are involved in the enrichment activities an hour and a half each week.

According to Ms. Watson, her

National blood bank association issues statement on immunological disease

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Because there is a possibility that a deadly immunological disease may be transmitted through blood products, the American Association of Blood Banks (AABB) has issued a nationwide statement.

The recommendation was issued to hospital-affiliated and independent blood banks with "the full realization that the cause of AIDS (acquired-immune-deficiency-syndrome) is unknown and that evidence for its transmission by blood is inconclusive," according to a joint statement by the AABB, the American Red Cross and the Council of Community Blood Centers.

"We believe, however, that we must respond to the possibility that a new and infectious illness has surfaced. Until more information is available, we believe that the measures outlined are prudent and appropriate," according to the statement.

THE NEW killer — AIDS — has been documented far more lethal than Legionnaires' disease, which killed 34 of its 224 victims in 1976, and toxic-shock syndrome which victimized 1,600 women in 1979-1980, killing 84.

The mysterious AIDS, a deadly epidemic which ravages the body's natural defenses against disease, has the medical profession frantically attempting to isolate the cause.

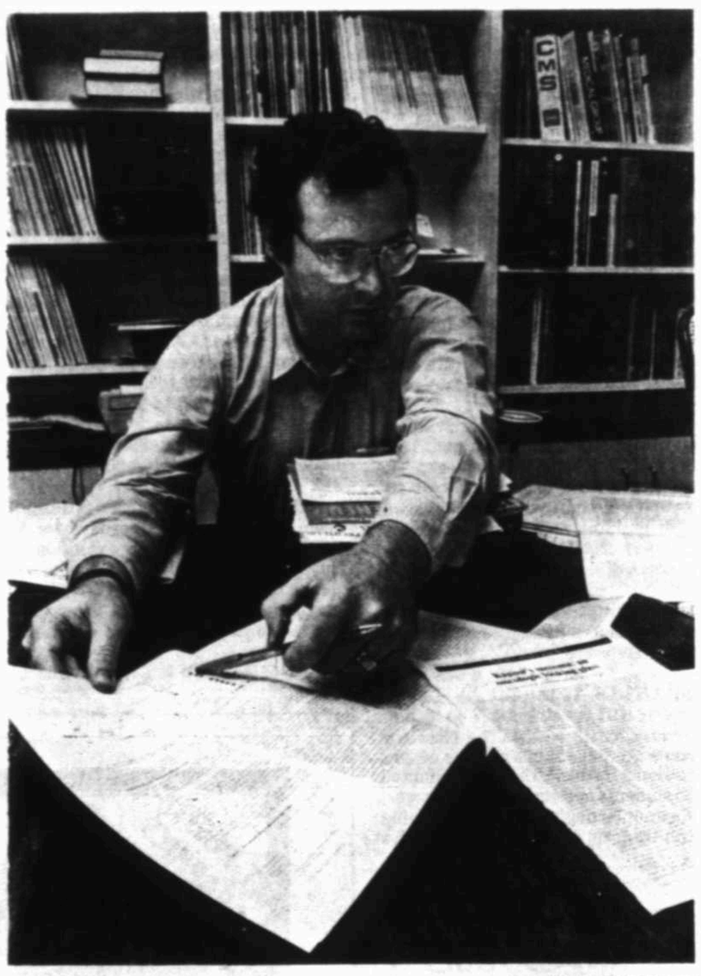

More than 800 AIDS cases have been recorded since late 1981, and more than 300 people have died within the first year of diagnosis. Furthermore, victims have died from opportunistic infections as well as a cancer rarely found in the U.S., Kaposi's sarcoma.

Originally found in drug addicts and male homosexual communities in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco, the syndrome turned up among hemophiliacs and other people who receive blood products. After doctors examined 10 Haitian victims who denied any contact with drugs or homosexuality, but were diagnosed as having AIDS, a warning of its possible hazard was issued to the general public.

More recently, there has been a concern about a major outbreak of the syndrome after infants who received blood transfusions developed AIDS symptoms.

BECAUSE INFANTS' immune systems are not fully developed, it has been suggested that newborn children may be vulnerable to the disease. Until now, about 75 percent of AIDS victims have been homosexual and 13 percent have been needle-using drug addicts.

Medical investigators now fear it is caused by an infectious agent, such as a virus, and may spread through blood or sexual contact.

Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a Midland allergist and immunologist, explains the immune system which can be attacked by a new deadly epidemic — acquired-immune-deficiency-syndrome (AIDS). The disease has afflicted more than 800 people, killing about 300 a year after it was diagnosed.

In Midland, one physician said a few of his patients have inquired about AIDS, but Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, an allergist and immunologist, claims "we have little risk around here," because the disease seems to afflict high-risk target groups — homosexuals, hemophiliacs, Haitians and heroin addicts.

Dr. David Shneidman, a Midland pathologist, said if it is proven that AIDS is transmitted through blood products, the chance of Midlanders contracting the disease is slim.

"In Midland, like very few communities, blood products are homegrown," he said. "We don't have problems associated with paid donors."

WHILE MIDLAND Memorial Hospital has a hospital-based blood bank, Parkview Hospital receives its blood from United Blood Service in San Angelo. All blood donors are carefully screened and give blood strictly on a volunteer basis.

Recommendations from the AABB to blood banks include:

—Educational campaigns for physicians to balance the decision to use each blood component against the risks of transfusion.

—In cases of elective surgery, patients should donate their blood, rather than rely on others.

—Blood banks should plan to deal with increased requests for cryoprecipitate.

—Donor screening should include specific questions to detect possible AIDS or exposure to patients with AIDS.

—There is currently considerable pressure on blood banks to screen out homosexual males, but "such an invasion of privacy can be justified only if it demonstrates clear-cut benefit. In fact, there is reason to believe that such questions, no matter how well-intentioned, are ineffective in eliminating those donors who may carry AIDS. Blood banks should work with leadership groups which include some individuals at high risk of AIDS."

—No routine implementation of any laboratory screening program for AIDS is advised at this time.

ACCORDING TO Wiesenfeld, AIDS appears to be caused by a virus, which attacks the immune system, rather than a bacteria.

Wiesenfeld explained that the immune system is divided into two universes — one controls cellular response and the other controls antibody response. The antibody control is divided into T cells and B cells. The T cells are divided also — T helper, T suppressor and T killer cells. While the "helpers" aid the B cells to produce antibodies against the disease, the "suppressors regulate and suppress the production of antibodies and the killers attack certain infections.

"It is a virus that affects T helper cells, " he said. "The majority of AIDS victims have suppression of defensive antibodies because of the excess T suppressor cells."

Wiesenfeld said in a Jan. 4 AIDS workshop, the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., suggested that sexual relations between male homosexuals, heterosexuals and contact between mother and child should be diminished.

"THIS IS unrealistic," Wiesenfeld said. "It is important that people be very cautious. All homosexuals are potential carriers and the contact with those people shoud be diminished, especially sexual.

"Because hemophiliacs receive blood products they are potential carriers of AIDS," he added.

"Because a newly-developed Hepatitis B vaccine is made from pooled serum, it is probably advisable to avoid it until further study," Wiesenfeld noted. "People who handle blood products are at the highest risk in developing Hepatitis B, but it's better here (less risk) where we have a volunteer donor system.

"Why children get the disease we don't know."

Warren Taylor, left, chairman of the Midland College Exhibits Committee, and other Midland College employees carefully wheel the display stand for the Gutenberg Bible into the Allison Fine Arts Building on the MC campus Wednesday afternoon. The Bible arrived Tuesday and will be featured in an 11-day display beginning today at the McCormick Gallery. The stand is solid oak and weighs more than 400 pounds.

Gutenberg Bible exhibit opens today at McCormick Gallery

An 11-day exhibit of the Gutenberg Bible opens to the public today at the McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Entitled "The Gutenberg Bible: The Beginning of the Printed Word," this exhibit of historical importance is made possible by The University of Texas at Austin, as part of its centennial celebration.

Also on display will be 40 plates of etchings illustrating the Bible by Marc Chagall. These works are the property of Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University.

The Chagall etchings as well as the Gutenberg Bible will remain on display through Feb. 6. Display hours for this special exhibit will be 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

AIDS symptoms similar to those of common flu

In many ways AIDS, a potential killer, resembles a common garden variety of flu-like symptoms. Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a Midland allergist and immunologist, suggest if any of the following symptoms persist consult your physician immediately. Although there is a slim chance of contracting AIDS here, these symptoms could be linked with numerous other diseases:

—A fever for more than four days, or one that comes and goes.
—An unexpected dramatic weight loss.
—Swelling or soreness of lymph glands over a period of time.
—Persistent aches, pains and fatigue for more than 10 days.
—Bluish or purplish spots on the skin.
—Sensory or motor ability loss.
—Persistent herpes sores that worsen.

Martin suffered a broken left leg and was in fair condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital. No other injuries were reported. The driver of the bus was identified as Pearl N. Mondale: Address should stir debate

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — President Reagan's State of the Union address should trigger a "great debate" on whether mid-course corrections should be made to his "disastrous" economic policy, former Vice President Walter Mondale says.

Mondale, who is expected to seek the 1984 Democratic nomination for president, criticized the program outlined Tuesday night by Reagan during a nationally televised address.

Reagan's proposals create no new jobs and threaten deficits of up to $300 billion, Mondale said at a news conference in San Antonio, where he met with Democrats who have pledged to support his run for the presidency.

Mondale likened the U.S. economy and high unemployment to the Great Depression times described in John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath."

Americans voted for a change in the 1982 elections, and now Congress may have to force Reagan to make changes halfway through his administration, Mondale added.

"I hope this State of the Union message will begin the great debate that will change policy this year," Mondale said.

"We cannot wait until 1985 and a new president. People need jobs now. They need opportunity now and I'm hopeful that the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, will in fact change the course, which is exactly what the people voted for here in Texas and around the country in 1982."

He said Congress should repeal income tax cuts scheduled to go into effect next July 1, defer or repeal indexation of taxes, impose hospital cost controls to hold down prices of medical care and "reach an accord" with the Federal Reserve Board to permit long-term economic growth.

The Democrat said if unemployment can be cut by 3 percent, which he said should be "no big deal," the result would be a $100 billion reduction of the federal deficit.

Mondale, after meeting with supporters, told reporters that Reagan has cut social services unfairly, but has steadfastly refused to do away with the tax cuts which Mondale said benefit the wealthy at the expense of average Americans.

"There's more suffering going on in this country than I've seen since a child in the Great Depression. The unemployed, the underemployed, the discouraged workers number perhaps more than 20 million in our country. For the first time since John Steinbeck's 'Grapes of Wrath,' we have thousands of Americans roaming this country homeless and aimlessly.

Grocery owner convinces daughters to report alleged vote-buying attempt

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A grocery store owner says she convinced her daughters to report an alleged vote-buying attempt to authorities after she became weary of hearing and reading about voting irregularities in Duval County.

"I hate to see the papers...talking all the time about buying votes," Guadalupe Hinojosa told a U.S. District Court jury in Brownsville Wednesday.

"I've heard it all my life," she said.

Mrs. Hinojosa, of San Diego, Texas, was the final witness called by prosecutors who are hoping to convince the jury that four Duval County women paid or offered to pay voters with county food vouchers in exchange for voting favors during the May Democratic primary.

When Mrs. Hinojosa learned one of her daughters had been given a welfare voucher and another daughter offered one if they would vote for county judge candidate Gilberto Uresti and other specified candidates she convinced her daughters to report it to the county attorney, she testified.

She said she told her daughter "we were going to make a statement because it (vote buying) is not right."

Her daughter, Diana Leal, testified Wednesday that she voted for Uresti in the election "because I was thrilled to get a $50 voucher."

Mrs. Leal acknowledged she had received food vouchers in the past "when I knew I needed it and I knew I qualified.

"This time I went because I was offered the voucher," she said.

Mrs. Leal said she was approached by defendents Amelia Garcia and Virginia Barrera who told her they could give her a voucher "easy."

Santos Garza and Teresa Aleman Briones also are charged in the case.

Mrs. Leal, a 27-year-old mother of three, denied she had already decided to vote for Uresti when asked by defense attorney Nelson Sharpe of Kingsville.

Selma Pena, Mrs. Hinojosa's other daughter, testified that she also was offered food vouchers. However, Ms. Pena said that when she called Ms. Garcia, she was told her not to go to the County Welfare Program office because the Texas Rangers were there.

The trial before U.S. District Judge James De Anda is the first resulting from a five-county federal investigation into alleged voter fraud.

The Duval County investigation centered around the race between Uresti, the incumbent, and Frank Garcia for the Democratic nomination for county judge. Uresti won the nomination and the November election.

Earlier this month, four other women indicted in the probe pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges after a plea bargain with prosecutors. Those four had backed Garcia in the primary.

Defendents in the current case were Uresti supporters.

Mrs. Hinojosa denied she urged her daughters to sign statements against the Uresti backers because she supported Garcia.

Another San Diego woman, 20-year-old Rosalinda Sanchez, she she received a $25 county food voucher after she cast an absentee ballot for Uresti in the May primary.

Mrs. Sanchez, a high school dropout, said she was living with her mother-in-law in April 1982 when Ms. Gara came to the house and asked if she "wanted to go vote."

"My mother-in-law asked if she would pay me," Mrs. Sanchez said.

Elementary students discover career choices

interest in the high achievement program stemmed from her experience with students she has taught in the Midland Independent School District for the past 5½ years.

"I just had some really sharp kids in my classes that I really enjoyed," she said. That enjoyment was followed by invitations to attend out-of-town workshops on gifted students and opportunities to listen to several speakers address gifted and talented programs.

"Before, we had all of these programs, but none for these over-achievers," she remembered. "When Midland began the program, I went to several workshops to hear more about it."

FROM THERE she was asked to serve on a gifted committee under the present superintendent, Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., and, concurrent to that, served on the writing committee for the high achievement fourth grade unit. Last year, she conducted workshops on the fourth grade program.

"It all went hand-in-hand," she said. "For one full year I was in meetings everyday."

The fourth grade units contain not only studies on careers, but also studies on subjects ranging from dinosaurs to weather.

And the involvement of the public is one factor that makes the high achiever program successful, she said.

"Getting someone to come in means so much more," she said. "The children can read all about sharks, but to have someone come in with a giant shark jaw that the kids can stand in...well, that's something that they'll always remember."

The visitors who stream in and out of her classroom, including the man with the shark's jaws, are not difficult to locate, she said. "I just listen," she explained. "I listen for people. And then I'm on the phone all the time calling them to ask them to come to my class."

SHE ADMITS SHE isn't shy about making her requests. When she was flipping through a magazine and noticed a story about a doctor in California who was involved in shark hunts, she immediately contacted him.

Soon, her students were looking at material and information sent by the man — including authentic reward posters for sharks.

She emphasized that the program is not a simple show-and-tell. When students studied Indians of Texas, an anthropologist visited the class. However, the students worked, too.

Model villages were constructed, charts were drawn and comparisons between living habits of different tribes were made. The students found Indian names for themselves and had to explain why they chose it. Students also wrote a story about Indians — in sign language.

"The main purpose is for the student to utilize his high creative and thinking skills and to produce some original projects," she said. "It's exciting to watch. These kids develop so much during the year in the fourth grade. They think so much in every unit."

Midlanders to participate in competition

ODESSA — The 21st annual National Young Artist Competition will be held Friday and Saturday in Odessa at Odessa College. The competition, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Association, Inc., alternates yearly between Midland and Odessa.

Sandy Henson

Karen Eggleston

Of the 85 young musicians competing, two are Midlanders. Sandy Henson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henson, and Karen Eggleston, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. David M. Eggleston, are entered in the woodwinds division.

Miss Henson is currently attending the University of Texas at Austin. A breakdown of orchestras with which she has performed includes the 1978-82 region bands, 1979-80 area band, 1981 all-state Philharmonic Orchestra, 1982 all-state Symphony Orchestra, 1981 Texas State Solo and Ensemble Outstanding Soloist, 1982 Texas State Solo and Ensemble Outstanding Soloist, 1981 Baylor Wind Ensemble Outstanding Woodwind Soloist, John Philip Sousa Band Award 1982, 1982 featured soloist in Robert E. Lee High School's spring concert and Texas All-Region Orchestra 1981-82. Miss Henson has won 10 region solo and ensemble medals as well as six state solo and ensemble medals.

Miss Eggleston, a junior at Midland High School, has performed with the all-region and all-state orchestra in 1982-83 as well as being concert mistress of her high school orchestra.

The purpose of this competition is to allow talented young musicians from all over the United States to compete for recognition and financial rewards, thus the NYAC has both college and secondary school divisions. Competition categories within each include piano, voice and woodwinds, with an additional voice category in the college division.

The prize monies total $7,750 and are distributed to the finalists, winners and performing winners. The performing winners additionally win the Lara Hoggard Performance Award. In addition, they return in February to perform in both Midland and Odessa with the symphony during its regular subscription concert season.

The contributors of the NYAC include Mr. and Mrs. W.D. Noel, Mrs. Raiford H. Burton, Mr. and Mrs. Joel B. Locke, Mr. and Mrs. Donald A. Ross and Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Anson. Contributors toward the administrative expenses of the competition are the Beal Foundation and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Bruno. Mr. and Mrs. Jerome M. Fullinwider are benefactors of the Lara Hoggard Performance Awards. The performing winners Transportation Fund is underwritten by Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr.

This year's competition is chaired by Mrs. Charles Jones. Mrs. Lee Ochs, president of the Odessa Symphony Guild, will serve as the official hostess of the event.

Judges for this year's competition are Gregory Allen, recent winner of the Arthur Rubenstein competition and member of the piano faculty at The University of Texas at Austin; Frederick Fennell, founder of American Wind Ensemble and formerly conductor of the Eastman School of music and conductor emeritus at the University of Miami; Margaret Harshaw, renowned vocal pedagogue and professor of voice at the University of Indiana; Roger Keyes, well-known piano adjudicator and coordinator of the Keyboard Division at Baylor University; and Margaret Pardee, renowned violin instructor at Juilliard School of Music.

The preliminaries begin Friday at 8 a.m. at Odessa College's fine arts department, with the finals beginning at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at OC's main auditorium. There is no admission charge for either and the public is invited to attend.

Singer to perform Lipscomb's music at UTPB

ODESSA — Blues singer Kurt Van Sickle will perform at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's Live Oak Stage Friday from 3 to 6 p.m.

His performance will feature the music of Mance Lipscomb as well as a film documentary on Lipscomb entitled "A Well Spent Life."

Born in 1895, Lipscomb was the son of an emancipated slave. He worked for 60 years as a tenant farmer in the cotton fields in East Texas. Music was his escape from hardship and poverty. Shortly after his discovery by Arhoolie Records when he was 65 years old, Lipscomb received recognition for his music. Eight solo albums and concert performances in 48 states established him as one of the best country blues guitarist of the time. His repertoire of 350 songs encompassed seven musical styles and reflected five generations of life experience.

Van Sickle, who presents concerts and blues seminars at college campuses throughout the United States, became acquainted with Lipscomb about four years before his death in 1976. During that time, he spent every available moment learning from and performing with Lipscomb.

The show is free and open to the public.

Competition winners perform at OC

The first place winners in the annual Pauline Slator Competition, held Saturday at Odessa College, performed in a Sunday afternoon recital at the Jack Rodgers Fine Arts Building.

Chen and a student of Linda Cody; Andrea Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Hamilton; and Christy Heller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Heller, both students of Harriett Motter.

Second place winners were Melanie George, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.J. George and student of Mrs. George, and Tiffany Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Taylor and student of Mrs. Motter. Third place went to John Sikes Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sikes Johnson, Julie Dillman, daughter of Mrs. Henry Odle, and Shanie Loftin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Loftin. All are students of Mrs. Motter.

Actress finds out tweed a mistake

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actress Clio Goldsmith, who stars in the new French comedy "The Gift," says tweed was not the thing to wear to an audition with Burt Reynolds.

Miss Goldsmith, who was working in Italy at the time, was called to Atlanta to audition for "Sharky's Machine."

"He'd seen a photograph of me in some European magazine," she said. "And I must tell you, I look much better in photographs than I do in person. Bigger, somehow more voluptuous."

When she met Reynolds, she said, she was "tired and white-looking and exhausted and totally lost in this awful tweed outfit, and when I walked into Burt's suite, his face fell — literally. His jaw dropped. I've never seen anybody look so disappointed."

Right villa becomes wrong villa

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Producer-director Dan Curtis says he spent weeks finding a villa in Italy with the precise look of aging neglect needed for the ABC miniseries, "The Winds of War."

It was to be the home of Natalie and Aaron Jastrow, played by Ali MacGraw and John Houseman.

"We found the right place," Curtis said. "It was perfect. We paid them in advance and said we would be back to film in a few months.

"Well, they used the money to have the place fixed up. It had orange paint. It looked like a garish motel. We had to remove all the paint and have it put back like it was. The owners were furious, but when we finished we had it painted again."

Lange to take deserved vacation

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jessica Lange, after two back-to-back films, "Frances" and "Tootsie," is planning a long rest that includes time in a Minnesota log cabin she built for herself.

'Hill Street Blues' mirrors the real world

NEW YORK (AP) — Most television programs take the E.F. Hutton approach to the noises of real life. Everything seems to stop dead, as the waters part for the principal characters.

The scenes may be of teeming streets, prisons or bars, but every location sounds like the plains of Kansas.

"TV tends to be homogenized," said Greg Hoblit, a producer-director on NBC's cop opera "Hill Street Blues," an unconventional show in many ways and, particularly, in its sense of sound.

"Most TV and bad movies show and tell," Hoblit said. "They show a picture and explain it. Oh, here's three of you sitting in a room. Oh, hello three of you."

"Hill Street" takes a different road, one that offers potholes, honking horns and a broken traffic light or two. You might say it echoes the cluttered, complicated real world outside the TV studio. The effect is greater tension, energy and viewer involvement.

"We like to pepper the senses with a lot of inputs and images," said Hoblit. "We'll have clipped, incomplete dialogue and a lot of information that doesn't get spelled out."

This busy business is most obvious in roll call, the scene that opens every episode. A day in the life of the Hill Street Precinct starts with Sgt. Phil Esterhaus (Michael Conrad) dispensing assignments and Aristotle amid soundtrack from Off The Wall's greatest hits.

"There's also an economic factor," Hoblit said.

blood-shot eyes and black coffee.

You could call it Dungeon Din. Phones jangle, chairs scrape and cops moan, cackle and shriek. There's shop talk, sex talk and small talk. Some you pick up; some you don't. But most of it is actually phony, off-camera sound, the rantings and ravings of Off The Wall, an improvisational comedy group.

"We just put them in a room with a microphone and let them create voices," said Hoblit.

Watch closely tonight. The only distinct words come from the regulars, the Renkos, Hills and Coffeys. The rest is the "Whenever an extra mouths an audible word, he ceases being an extra, and we have to pay him more."

From the squad room to the hallway, you're likely to hear another "Hill Street" trademark: continued or overlapped dialogue.

"I love to start a conversation off-screen, when you hear Bates (Betty Thomas) and Coffey (Ed Marinaro), but you can't see them right away because they're behind a post," said Hoblit. "A few words sweep you into the scene. A standing start is dead. It just sits there."

MAKE SURE YOUR BMW ISN'T THE FIRST BMW YOUR MECHANIC HAS LAID HIS HANDS ON.

The average mechanic, no matter how well-intentioned, cannot offer you anything approaching the expertise of the BMW service technician.

Who was trained by BMW and who maintains his knowledge through yearly updates and ongoing courses.

Who can offer you genuine BMW parts, thereby maintaining your investment.

And who will have perfected his techniques on many BMW's before he so much as touches yours.

*The 1st year's payments and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8¼% loan to value + terest will be charge at a rate of 12 1.4% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year pe d the graduation in payment will cease.
