Man kills family, self

Hospital stay precedes Odessan's rampage

About an hour after purchasing a .38-caliber Rueger at a local store Thursday, Richard Allen Law killed his wife and three children in the living room of their home, police say.

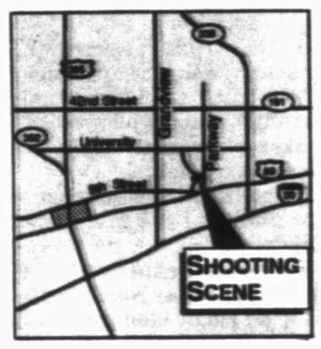
ODESSA — The day after being released from a state mental hospital, a 23-year-old man with a history of suicide attempts fatally shot his wife, daughter, two sons and himself on Thursday, officials said.



Graphic by Allen Howland

About an hour after purchasing a .38-caliber Rueger at a local store, Richard Allen Law killed Theresa Gail Law, 20, Kendra Maxwell, 4, Richard Law Jr., 3, and Robert Law, 2, in the living room of their 1222 Pueblo St. home about 10:30 a.m., police said.

Police were summoned to the scene by a 24-year-old man, a family friend who discovered the murder-suicide.

The friend, who had been staying at the family's home, had gone to a local 7-Eleven store about 10 minutes earlier to buy a pack of cigarettes requested by Law.

Police found Mrs. Law on a couch, the 3-year-old boy on a chair and the others on the floor, police Cpl. John McAhon said.

All had been apparently shot once in the head with no sign of a struggle, said Detective Sgt. Jack

Murder-suicide shakes serenity of friendly Odessa neighborhood

ODESSA — Residents in the 1200 block of Pueblo Street said it had been a quiet, friendly neighborhood until that serenity was shattered by Thursday's bizarre murder-suicide.

"We're horrified," said Sharon Howard, who lives a few houses away from the home where 23-year-old Richard Allen Law shot and killed his family and himself early Thursday. "We've lived here 12 years and it's a good neighborhood. It's always been a good neighborhood. This is such a tragedy."

"I've lived here since 1977 and this is the first time I've seen anything happen here," said Jerry Owen. "I'm shocked."

Neighbors said the Laws, who had lived in the house at 1222 Pueblo for only a few months, kept mainly to themselves.

"They came out to work on their cars sometimes, and on their motorcycle," said Odessan Gene Lee, a frequent visitor to a friend's home in the block. "I noticed that because nobody else worked on their cars in the driveway."

Some said the Laws didn't seem to "fit in" to the neighborhood — a busy street lined with close-set, modest homes and many well-kept lawns.

"We never saw the kids playing in the front yard," said Julie Howard, a high school student. "They

Local GOP, Dem leaders oppose redistricting plan

By Myra Lee Salcedo

The Texas House on Wednesday narrowly approved a congressional redistricting plan which divides Midland County in half, a prospect which has drawn the ire of both Republican and Democratic leaders in Midland.

Under the plan, half of the county — about 53,000 Midlanders — would remain in the 21st Congressional District with U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith. The remaining population would be in the 19th Congressional District under Congressman Larry Combest.

Hostage McCarthy's home; group claims another kidnapping

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Lebanese kidnappers freed British TV producer John McCarthy on Thursday after five years as a hostage, a move designed to pressure Israel into freeing hundreds of Arab prisoners as part of a full-scale prisoner swap.

Within hours, however, in yet another chilling replay of Lebanon's cycle of terror, a separate underground group claimed it had kidnapped a Frenchman and would kill him if any more hostages are released.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar had said another of the remaining dozen Western hostages — apparently an American — might be freed by today. But he acknowledged that the new report of a kidnapping could complicate those plans.

Britain's Foreign Office minister, Douglas Hogg, said late Thursday that McCarthy had brought no word about the prospects of another hostage being released.

Judge takes abortion issue public

N.Y. Times News Service

"I wanted . . . to tell the U.S. attorney that there will be bloodshed in the streets of this city."

Judge Patrick F. Kelly

WICHITA, Kan. — On Tuesday night, then again on Wednesday morning, Judge Patrick F. Kelly did something almost unheard of for a sitting judge: He appeared on national television to lay bare an issue before his court.

But these are not typical times, either for the judge or for this Kansas city where he has spent most of his life, a city of safe streets, wheat prices broadcast on the radio and Wizard of Oz souvenirs.

For almost a month, a militant anti-abortion group, Operation Rescue, has made Wichita the site of the latest battle of the national war over abortion. Nearly 2,000 abortion opponents have been arrested trying to block access to the city's three abortion clinics. For a week last month the clinics were closed.

But that was before Kelly issued an order prohibiting the protesters from blocking entry to the clinics and before he promised to jail anyone who defied his order, including the Kansas governor, Joan Finney, and the bishop of Wichita's Roman Catholic diocese, Eugene Gerber.

On Monday, Kelly strenghtened the order and sent in U.S. marshals to enforce it.

But what pushed the judge before the television cameras was not

Cityline Community Pulse

Pulse poll results

More than 90 percent of respondents in this week's Cityline Community Pulse poll said the media are going overboard in covering celebrity news.

As one caller put it, "This kind of coverage gives people the wrong impression of what is important in this world."

Eight percent of those calling between Sunday and Wednesday believe that the explosion in personality-oriented news coverage is a response to popular demand.

"What could have been more appropriate than to talk about Michael Landon on the front page of the newspaper?" one female caller asked. "It provides a breather from reading about the Milwaukee killer every day. . . . Sometimes you want to reflect on the good part of your memories," she said.

While less serious news seems to have its place, callers recognized that "celebrities should have a certain amount of privacy in their lives and they should be able to have their private lives shielded from the press . . . (There are) things that are no one else's business."

But another caller was less sympathetic, "If they don't like news about them being covered, they shouldn't be in the public eye."

Santana pleads

HOUSTON — Rock singer-guitarist Carlos Santana pleaded no contest Thursday to a misdemeanor charge of marijuana possession and was given a six-month deferred sentence and must do community service. Santana, 44, was going through a routine inspection June 27 at Houston Intercontinental Airport when 5 grams of marijuana were found stashed in a film carrier inside his suitcase. Santana, a native of Mexico, had just arrived on a flight from Mexico City. Besides the deferred sentence, Santana also was ordered to donate $100 to a charity of his choice and perform a benefit show with an anti-drug message for Houston children.

SHOOTINGS: Man purchased a gun 1 hour earlier

(From 1A)

White at the scene.

Neighbors — who said the children were seen playing outside about an hour earlier — watched the sealed-off house in dismay until police left about 4:15 p.m.

But that wasn't the first visit to the home by police in recent days.

On Sunday, at about 3 p.m., Mrs. Law called police and told a dispatcher that her husband was going to kill himself, according to a police report.

An officer went to the house and was advised by the family friend that Law had left in a "very angry and depressed state of mind," the report stated.

Law was upset because his wife had left him four days earlier, the friend told police.

Police left in search of Law but later found him at home.

Law suffered a self-inflicted cut about 2 inches long on the right side of the neck. He told police he had tried to kill himself with a 3-inch lock-blade knife after Mrs. Law refused to reconcile, the report said.

"Richard (Law) then advised that he then left to look for a gun but he could not find one. He advised that when he got paid on 08-07-91, he would buy a gun. He advised he would then kill himself while standing in front of his wife," the report stated.

"Richard advised that if his wife would not return, he had no reason to live," the report further stated.

Law also said that he had attempted suicide twice before — eight years and six years ago — by taking pills.

Police notified a Mental Health and Mental Retardation (MHMR) worker, who spoke to Law. The worker submitted a protective custody request, signed by Justice of the Peace Dennis Bright.

Law was then transported by police to the Big Spring State Hospital — and subsequently released on Wednesday.

The mental health facility admitted Law on an emergency warrant that allows a state hospital to keep a patient for observation up to 24 hours, a hospital official said.

A probable cause hearing to determine whether Law should be kept at the hospital was conducted on Wednesday by Howard County Judge Ben Lockhart.

"In a probable cause hearing, you need to find probable cause to keep someone in the hospital," Lockhart said. "There didn't seem to be probable cause to keep him there and the hospital recommended he be released."

The judge said he observed Law when he testified about his case and "he seemed to be an ordinary Joe."

"He was fine at the time, in pretty good shape," Lockhart said. "Any time anything like this happens it's a real shock."

Ed Moughon, assistant superintendent at the hospital, said facts must be found to continue to detain a patient against his will.

"We had testimony from professional staff," Moughon said, "but the hospital is just one place the judge seeks testimony."

Moughon said the hospital staff would need to present specific information that the patient was dangerous to himself or others, or that he had a deteriorating mental condition.

Moughon said he couldn't comment on Law's state of mind because of patient confidentiality laws.

"This is a terribly grave concern for everyone involved," he said. "The staff involved in this case has been tragically disturbed. One thing that troubles us deeply in this industry is predicting behavior."

A friend and former co-worker of Law's, Susan Chandler, said Law had been suffering "great mental stress" lately. Ms. Chandler had last seen Law the night before the murder-suicide.

The separation from his wife and Law's worries about being recently unemployed were the cause of the emotional distress, Ms. Chandler said.

Law had worked as a cook for Angelo's Restaurant, 2338 Eighth St., before quitting about two weeks ago, Ms. Chandler said.

He was supposed to have started a new job at the Kettle Restaurant, 2927 E. Highway 80, on Monday, a restaurant employee there said.

Other than marital problems and being unemployed, Law was a gentle, caring person, Ms. Chandler said.

"He was very soft-spoken, a quite giving man, a family man," Ms. Chandler said.

Ms. Chandler added that Law was deeply concerned about supporting his family, and cared greatly for the children. The oldest child, Kendra Maxwell, suffered from cerebral palsy, she said.

Ms. Chandler dismissed reports that drug use by Law may have been involved.

"Richard was not on drugs and he was not an alcoholic," she said.

Police suspected narcotics use may have been a factor and a toxicology report on Law was ordered.

Susan Feuer, who lives adjacent to where the Law's resided, also indicated drugs may have affected Law.

"She (Mrs. Law) said he was doing drugs . . . that he had spent his last paycheck on drugs," Ms. Feuer said.

Also, Mrs. Law said that her husband had recently expressed hostility toward her, Ms. Feuer said.

"She said he held a knife to her and said 'If I can't have you nobody can,'" the neighbor said.

A friend of Mrs. Law's, who requested not to be identified, related, as did Ms. Chandler, that Law was upset because his wife had a boyfriend.

But none of Richard or Theresa Law's friends who were interviewed foresaw the tragedy.

On the morning of the murder-suicide, Ms. Feuer said the Law family was in their backyard, the children playing and the father working on a car.

They had only resided at the three-bedroom rented home for about three or four months, Ms. Feuer said. They had resided in West Odessa previously.

There had been no problems at the Law's until last Sunday, she said.

Other neighbors stayed away from the Law's, Ms. Feuer said.

"I was the only one who ever talked to them. No one liked them. They were scared of them (because) they (the Law's) were different," she said.

About 9:30 a.m., the Law's went inside, Ms. Feuer said.

No shots were heard by neighbors, nothing to indicate what had happened until police arrived about 10:30 a.m.

All the victims were pronounced dead at the scene about 12:10 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Dennis Bright.

Police continued their investigation on Thursday.

REACTION: Some say the Laws didn't fit in

always played in the back and we thought it was weird."

"They had loud parties sometimes, and people were over there all the time," said David Wright, a school coach who rents the home across the street from 1222. "This is impossible to understand, but they were different — wilder."

He said there were rumors of drug use at the house.

"You wondered," Wright said. "But it's not the kind of thing you can imagine happening to anyone, no matter what they were into."

Some said the children were seen playing outside a few times, but were often kept in the house with a wooden gate attached inside the front doorway. Smith said his wife, Pamela, saw the three children inside the gate about 9:30 a.m. as she drove by the house.

"She waved at them and they waved at her. Nothing was wrong then," he said. "It all happened so fast."

When police were called to Law's house earlier in the week, residents said they knew something was going on, but didn't anticipate the outcome.

"I saw them taking him away in handcuffs," said Steve Sestric, a high school junior who lives down the street from 1222. "That was no big deal, I guess, but now I'm starting to think you never know who's living next to you. You have to be careful."

Lee said the scene belonged on a television show, not on a quiet Odessa street.

"I was watching 'Geraldo,' and I started thinking this sounds just like what was on," he said. He said he had heard Law and his wife were having marital problems.

"It's all this jealously stuff. People want to take someone with them when they go," he said.

Throughout the day, a steady stream of cars drove down Pueblo Street, drivers rubber-necking at the police barriers, television cameras and media vehicles.

"All these people never go down this street," said Steve, who recognized several of his friends, a teacher and others driving by. "We should sell tickets or something."

Smith said he was outside about the time a family friend, who police say had been living with the Laws, made the grisly discovery.

"He went in the house and I heard him scream," Smith said. "He jumped in his car and drove off. I knew something big was up, and it wasn't too long before all the police came up," Smith said. Lee said 11 police cars arrived at the home within minutes after the discovery.

"There was an accident right down the street and I thought they might have hit my truck, so I came out and couldn't believe it," he said. "This guy with the news came by and I had to ask him what was up."

Shocked and confused, some neighbors said they hoped their lives would soon return to normal.

Smith said he was trying to decide how to explain the tragedy to his 3-year-old son.

"He knows someone died, but I don't know how much he realizes. I hope not much," Smith said.

Others said the tragedy was "one of those things."

"Will anybody every know why it happened?" Lee said, shaking his head. "The world's just gone crazy."

PLAN: House bill would divide Midland County

(From 1A)

Congressional District," said State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland.

The redistricting plan, which was sent to the Senate on a 72-63 vote, features four congressional districts anchored in Bexar County.

Increasing population in the state allowed lawmakers to draw 30 districts, or three more than Texas had in the 1980s.

The plan creates three new minority districts — the 28th, 29th and 30th — to reflect the state's growing population, which is nearly 17 million people, according to the 1990 census.

Smith's district shifted from potential West Texas dominance to a Central Texas and North Bexar County anchor.

"This will dilute our voting strength in any one district," Craddick said. "It's splitting cities and counties to the point that no one will know who their representative is."

Craddick offered a substitute bill Wednesday which was defeated 74-57. "I tried to amend the bill to put Midland back as a whole county," he said.

According to several Austin reports, during a debate which lasted nearly five hours, House Democrats repeatedly beat back the Republican minority's attempts to change what they saw as a gerrymandering plan — one that maximizes Democratic chances at the expense of Republican ones.

Despite his defeat, Craddick said, "There is a good chance to change this in the Senate plan or in working out our differences in the conference committee."

"I think the plan is an example of gerrymandering by the Democrats," said Rick Davis, Republican Party chairman in Midland. "Splitting up Midland County doesn't serve the best interests of the county. It divides our voice and our votes. On one hand, we will have two representatives, but on the other hand, no one representative will have to answer to all of Midland."

Davis said the plan was written by a Democratically-controlled State and House.

"Even Midland County Democrats wouldn't want this," he said. This is something that is not in the best interest of Midlanders whether they are Republicans or Democrats."

Midland Democratic Party Chairman Chris McCormack, confirmed Davis' point. "I have no idea why they (the House) did this. They may have some valid reason, but it is harmful to divide Midland like that. There is no basis to believe that there is a difference between Midland and northwest Midland," McCormack said.

Some Democratic state representatives in Austin said they joined with the Republicans in protesting the plan because they thought the bill had become an incumbent protection plan.

McCormack said he would oppose any type of division which splits the community into separate parts.

"I would like them (House representatives) to articulate to us just what justification they had in doing this. I recognize that they were directed by demographics making Smith's district more of Central Texas. But one other factor in their figuring should have been preserving community interests," said the Midland County Democratic leader.

Craddick said he will push to keep Midland County in the same district. Otherwise, keeping Midland in two congressional districts will be "very confusing for people," he said.

"People won't know who their representative is and that does away with the community concept," he said. "It's a very poor situation. "I think the whole redistricting plan is a very poor plan. Splitting up community interests is one of the worst things we can do for people in the state."

Counties other than Midland which are only partially included in the proposed District 21 are Bell, Bexar, Burnet, Comal, Guadalupe, Tom Green and Williamson.

HOSTAGES: An American might be freed today

(From 1A)

"We were hoping that there would be another release, there may still be another release, but I have no hard information I'm afraid," said Hogg, who met McCarthy on his return home.

The newly freed McCarthy, exultant, looking fit and full of thanks for those who worked for his release, earlier told a Syrian interviewer his Islamic Jihad kidnappers "believe the time is right" to finally end the Lebanon hostage drama.

"There were times," McCarthy confided, "when it seemed it would never end."

The 34-year-old newsman, brought to Damascus from Beirut, said he carried with him a letter from Islamic Jihad for Perez de Cuellar, seeking the U.N. chief's intervention to gain freedom for "all prisoners and hostages being held in Lebanon and ... in Israel."

The day of McCarthy's release would have been his mother Sheila's 69th birthday. She died of cancer in 1989.

In Jerusalem, Israeli officials sounded encouraging. But they said they would free none of their prisoners unless the deal includes seven Israeli servicemen missing in Lebanon, some since Israel's 1982 invasion.

Iran's U.N. ambassador said Tehran was "exerting influence" on the varied pro-Iranian extremist groups in Lebanon to free the hostages, and reiterated that Israel should release Arab prisoners for the procedure to continue.

The Iranian official, Kamal Kharazi, told CNN that he saw a connection between the release of McCarthy and the assassination, hours later, of former Iranian prime minister Shahpour Bakhtiar outside Paris.

"I believe it's a suspicious issue that these two phenomenon are coinciding, and I don't know who has done that (the assassination) and what is behind it," Kharazi told CNN without elaborating.

McCarthy said he was held with three other hostages — Americans Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland, and Briton Terry Waite — as recently as Tuesday and "they were in good health and good spirits."

That news heartened their families back home.

"Terry's not a quitter," Peggy Say, sister of Associated Press correspondent Anderson, told reporters in Kentucky.

In Britain, word of McCarthy's release thrilled friends and family — even strangers. Riders on the London subway cheered when the news came over loudspeakers.

"I think I screamed!" said Jill Morrell, who was McCarthy's girlfriend for three years, of the moment when a friend telephoned with the news.

McCarthy, who was picked up by the Syrian military in Lebanon and turned over to the British ambassador in Damascus, arrived in Britain later aboard a Royal Air Force plane.

Smiling broadly, he waved to a cheering crowd as he descended onto the tarmac after nightfall at the Royal Air Force base at Lyneham. He made no statement before walking to a waiting car.

Perez de Cuellar told reporters in New York, "I hope we are going to have another one today or tomorrow," possibly one of the six captive Americans.

If so, he said, "then I think we have to consider this as the beginning of a process leading to the release of all hostages."

U.N. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Perez de Cuellar was to leave Saturday morning for London to meet McCarthy and receive the letter from his captors.

Unconfirmed reports and rumors flew in Beirut that Anderson would be released next.

On vacation in Maine, President Bush told reporters, "I think those who follow this most closely feel it is likely an American will be released."

Hostage relatives express caution, solidarity

Associated Press

Relatives of hostages and those who once shared their plight in Lebanon expressed joy Thursday at John McCarthy's freedom, but also anxiety about waiting for the release of another captive.

"My prayer is not that it will be Terry Anderson. My prayer is that it will be all of them," said Anderson's sister, Peggy Say.

McCarthy, freed Thursday from five years of captivity in Lebanon, credited fellow hostages Anderson, Thomas Sutherland and Briton Terry Waite for giving him the strength to endure. He said the three were "in good health and in good spirits."

"That's certainly a relief, but we don't have any information so far as to how well he is," Sutherland's daughter Kit said in a Colorado radio interview.

Virginia Rose Steen said she was watching for news about her professor husband, Alann, who was captured in Lebanon on Jan. 24, 1987.

"I'm certainly pleased that John has been released. We'll just have to see what he's heard," Mrs. Steen said from her parents' home in Clarklake, Mich.

Such caution, born of repeated disappointment, characterized statements by those working for the hostages' release.

"I would like to be optimistic," McCarthy's former cellmate Frank Reed said in Malden, Mass. "But I still think the Islamic Jihad is doing some messaging that there's another thing on the table to negotiate."

McCarthy said upon arrival in Syria that the shadowy group Islamic Jihad released him with a letter to the United Nations secretary-general asking for help in arranging a full exchange of prisoners and hostages being held in Lebanon and Israel.

Reed, who was released in April 1990 after 44 months in captivity, headed for London and a reunion with McCarthy and former Irish hostage Brian Keenan.

Say also planned to meet with McCarthy.

"Because John looks so well, I'm going to get to him as soon as possible," Say said.

In an emotional news conference in her front yard in Cadiz, Ky., Say was asked if President Bush deserves any credit for McCarthy's release.

"It's been years since I have been able to put confidence in an administration official," she replied. But Say praised Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who may have laid the groundwork for a hostage deal in his contacts with Syria and his Middle East peace efforts. "He's the man who is perfect for this job," Say said.

"All I ever asked of my country is that it care for the hostages. It should have no higher priority," she said.

Thomas Cicippio, whose brother, Joseph, is held by a different Shiite Muslim group than the one that released McCarthy, said "things are looking better."

"I'm getting the impression that things will start to happen," Thomas Cicippio said from his home in Norristown, Pa. "How long it will take no one knows. There's movement and that's very important."

Cicippio keeps signs outside his house listing the number of days each hostage has been captive. For Joseph, the acting comptroller at American University in Beirut, Thursday was day 1,792.

"Our hopes become high, and we become very optimistic, but in most cases we are in for a letdown," he said, adding it "sort of destroys you in some way."

Estelle Ronneburg of Boise, Idaho, went to work rather than stay home to await news about her son Jesse Turner, captured Jan. 24, 1987. "If I were at home I would be pacing, wearing out my new carpet and biting my nails. I'm better off here," she said.

Say said she had been "sick with worry" since the kidnappers released a picture two weeks ago showing a haggard Anderson. "I should have known, Terry's not a quitter," Say said.

The 43-year-old chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, the longest-held hostage, was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

In Lorain, Ohio, where Anderson was born, family spokesman Jack LaVriha said, "We have a 35-foot 'Welcome Home Terry' banner we plan to hang on the front of City Hall, and it's ready to go just as soon as we hear something."

Batavia, N.Y., where Anderson grew up, dusted off contingency plans for both a thanksgiving service and a party.

Coincidentally, Thursday was the day a sculptor in Lackawanna, a steel-mill town about 40 miles from Batavia, unveiled an artwork commemorating the six American hostages.

PUBLIC: Judge brings out issue

the demonstrators or the threatening telephone calls to his office and home. It was the Justice Department's decision to enter the case, in the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver, in opposition to his order.

The government's lawyers argue that women seeking abortions are not protected under the Reconstruction-era civil rights law that was the basis of the judge's ruling.

"It's an inordinate event for a judge to go public," Kelly said in an interview in his chambers on Wednesday. "I went public with it for the reason I wanted to talk to my community and to tell the U.S. attorney that there will be bloodshed in the streets of this city if I am forced to remove the marshals."

In the last three days, the streets of Wichita outside the clinics have been quiet. Organizer's of Operation Rescue's protests have left town and protesters are awaiting the outcome of the group's appeal the of Kelly's ruling. But the quiet has not extended to the judge's chamber.

He said he has received hundreds of nasty telephone calls and letters from across the country. He has been cursed at, shoved and repeatedly called a Nazi judge, even on national television.

A lifelong Roman Catholic, Kelly complains that he cannot even attend church because of the anger provoked by the demonstrations and his rulings.

"People ask, 'How can a Catholic judge sit on this kind of case?' " he said. "It's simple. I have a duty to carry out the law and Roe is the law."

The judge will not discuss his personal views on abortion or Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court case that made abortions legal. With a wave of his hand and a quick smile he dismisses the subject. "This is not a religious issue," he said. "It's a legal one."

According to The Associated Press, Kelly once told his parish priest that if an abortion-related case came before him, he would consider it his sworn duty to hear it. The AP also reported that as a private lawyer, he twice counseled clients with pregnant teen-age daughters, suggesting that the women choose adoption or keep their babies.

He recently attended the wedding of one of the babies, The AP said.

In his television apparence and again in his chambers, Kelly scolded the Justice Department for intervening in the case. But it was not the first time the 62-year-old judge had tangled with a Republican administration or federal authorities.

Last March, Kelly ordered Attorney General Richard Thornburgh to testify about a mysterous 7-year-old case involving the crash of a Kansas-based airplane into the Caribbean Sea. The plane had been leased by federal drug agents.

At the time, the judge told the newspaper here, The Wichita Eagle, that he wanted Thornburgh to straighten out some confusion over a civil settlement arising from the loss of the plane.

A settlement was reached a few days later and the attorney general did not testify.

Earlier in the same case, in 1987, Kelly was so angered by the testimony of the convicted drug dealer who crashed while working for the government that he sent copies of dealer's testimony to the White House and the Iran-Contra special prosecutor.

The drug dealer, Michael Toliver, testified that he had flown arms to Central America for the government and returned with drugs.

Assassins kill Shah's last prime minister

PARIS (AP) — The Shah of Iran's last prime minister was found stabbed to death at his home outside Paris on Thursday, and Iranian exiles claimed the slaying was the work of a hit squad from Tehran.

Shahpour Bakhtiar, 76, and his top aide, Fouroush Katibeh, were discovered by Bakhtiar's son at the well-guarded home in Suresnes, west of Paris. They were killed sometime Wednesday night or Thursday morning, police said.

There were no immediate claims of responsibility, and it was unclear how an assailant could have entered the residence, which is guarded around the clock by four policemen. There were no signs of forced entry or a struggle.

Police said they were searching for three Iranians who visited Bakhtiar Tuesday afternoon. Papers checked by guards showed they lived in France, police said.

Iranian exiles immediately claimed the killings were carried out by Iran in retaliation for Bakhtiar's staunch criticism of the radical regime that came to power — led by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini — after the 1979 revolution.

Bakhtiar's murder "was ordered by the mullahs" of Iran, said former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

"Three or four days ago I received a list of oppositionists that the regime had decided to suppress ... and among them was Shahpour Bakhtiar," said Bani-Sadr, who also lives in exile near Paris. "I received information saying that this time it was very serious, and that the mullahs in power had decided to suppress me (as well)."

"There is no doubt that this was commited by a death squad from the Khomeini regime," said Afchine Alavi, secretary general of the People's Mujaheddin, an Iranian exile group.

Ali Chakeri, president of an opposition group founded by Bakhtiar, said Iranian President Ali Akbar Rafsanjani ordered Bakhtiar's assassination.

"Shahpour Bakhtiar was the only one to speak out that the Iranian regime has not changed its nature" under Rafsanjani, said Chakeri, who heads the Executive Committee of the Movement of National Resistance.

An attempt was made on Bakhtiar's life 11 years ago when armed men posing as journalists entered his house and tried to shoot their way to the ex-premier.

Yugoslav truce holds; binding peace elusive

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — A shaky truce held throughout most of strife-torn Croatia for a second day Thursday, but Croatian and Serbian leaders staked out opposing positions on how to prevent the country from slipping back into war.

Croatian officials accused Serb militants of breaking the cease-fire by shooting at police and shelling villages in the regions of Slavonia, in eastern Croatia and Banija, in the south.

A Croatian guardsman was killed and five other Croats injured by Serb shelling at Topusko, in Banija, the Croatian news agency HINA reported. It said Croatian forces did not return fire.

Serbia's president, Slobodan Milosevic, on Thursday offered the Yugoslav republics of Bosnia-Hercegovina and Montenegro a new, smaller Yugoslavia in an apparent move to counter the declarations of independence by Croatia and Slovenia.

The Serbian offer excluded the sixth Yugoslav republic, Macedonia, which has scheduled a referendum for its own independence next month.

The Serbian representative on the federal presidency, Borisav Jovic, said Croatia's Serbian minority must be allowed to vote in a referendum to choose whether it wants to join the "new Yugoslavia."

■ Report: Communist Party near bankruptcy

MOSCOW — The Communist Party, its membership plummeting, is on the verge of financial collapse, a Soviet newspaper reported Thursday.

The radical Nezavisimaya Gazeta published what it said were the party's confidential balance sheets, tallying revenues and expenditures for 1990 and 1991. "Communist Party on Eve of Bankruptcy," said the headline.

It said the party projects a budget deficit of more than 1.1 billion rubles this year. That is about $1.96 billion at the official exchange rate — five times last year's shortfall.

Party officials would not immediately confirm the documents were authentic, but Nezavisimaya Gazeta previously has published confidential party documents that proved to be genuine.

■ Judge convicts former president

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — Former President Salvador Jorge Blanco was convicted of corruption charges and sentenced to 20 years in prison Thursday after a two-year trial.

Jorge Blanco, 65, was president from 1982 to 1986. He was tried and convicted in absentia in November 1988, but returned later that month from Atlanta, where he had undergone treatment for a heart condition, and was given a new trial.

The latest trial, which began in April 1989, frequently was interrupted by Jorge Blanco's bouts of illness.

He was convicted Thursday of embezzling $5 million from the government by inflating the price of equipment bought by the military and national police in the last two years of his administration.

■ North, South Korea close to joining U.N.

UNITED NATIONS — North and South Korea cleared the last major hurdle on Thursday in their decades-long efforts to join the United Nations when the Security Council unanimously approved their applications for separate membership.

The Security Council had also been scheduled on Thursday to consider the applications of the Federaed States of Micronesia and the Republic of the Marshall Islands, but the items were taken off the calendar.

A council member said the Soviet Union requested a delay on those votes because its delegation needed to consult with its embassy in Washington. The diplomat said it did not appear that Moscow had any objections to the admission of the island states and there was no other serious threat to their acceptance.

The last step in the acceptance of North and South Korea will come when the annual General Assembly opens on Sept. 17 and the full membership votes on the applications. The General Assembly is expected to approve the Security Council decision to make North and South Korea the 160th and 161st member countries.

■ 20 die in India as bus plunges into gorge

NEW DELHI, India — At least 20 people were killed when a bus skidded off a mountain road and plunged into a ravine, Press Trust of India said Thursday.

Sixteen passengers were injured in the mishap Wednesday night, near the town of Pauri Garhwal in Uttar Pradesh state, the news agency said.

The injured were hospitalized, and further details about the accident were awaited, Press Trust said.

Saddam was 1, 2 years from nuclear bomb

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq was a year or two away from producing enough nuclear fuel for a bomb, not five or 10 years as U.S. intelligence believed," administration officials say.

The officials were surprised this week by the discovery of another piece in Iraq's nuclear weapons puzzle — a plant to make centrifuges for uranium enrichment.

A team of international monitors found the plant during a surprise inspection of a government complex near Baghdad, one official said. The plant was to become operational by the end of this year, but the schedule was interrupted by the war with the U.S.-led allies, said the official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The inspectors, on their fourth postwar U.N. mission to investigate Iraq's nuclear program, said the plant was supposed to produce roughly 200 centrifuges annually for uranium enrichment, he said.

"It remains a question as to whether Iraq cohave fulfilled this rather ambitious deadline," the official said, given the fact that it lacked several key components including extremely strong steel.

Nonetheless, the U.S. intelligence community has been caught by surprise at the extent of Iraq's nuclear program, said this official and another one who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

The United States and its allies knew Iraq was buying components for a centrifuge process, and they had successfully confiscated some related shipments to Iraq. But they didn't know the Iraqis had an operational facility for centrifuge production, the officials said.

"They were clearly closer than we estimated," said the second official. "They were within a year or two of having a production line for the bomb."

Before the war, President Bush and his top aides said Iraq was close to making a primitive nuclear device. But experts with access to intelligence information projected that Iraq was at least five to 10 years from being able to manufacture a deliverable nuclear weapon.

Pressure mounts on Israel to free detainees

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel came under mounting international pressure Thursday to free Lebanese detainees for Western hostages in Lebanon, but said any deal must include missing Israeli soldiers.

Following the release Thursday in Beirut of British hostage John McCarthy, appeals for an Israeli gesture came from Britain, Egypt and Syria as well as Peggy Say, sister of American hostage Terry Anderson.

Defense Minister Moshe Arens, responding to reports that McCarthy carried a letter from the Shiite Muslim group Islamic Jihad offering such a swap, said:

"We are definitely ready for an arrangement that will bring our prisoners and missing (soldiers) home."

The Defense Ministry's top adviser on Lebanon, Uri Lubrani, said that "if we are speaking of a deal which will include our soldiers and prisoners, we have always said we will be happy to help free all the hostages."

Lubrani said the condition "is clear and unequivocal."

Arens was noncommittal when asked if Israel, as a condition for any swap, would first insist on the return of all seven servicemen missing in Lebanon since 1982.

"I prefer not to conduct negotiations through the media on this sensitive matter," he said on Israel radio.

Arens dismissed the recent public proposals by Muslim kidnapers for a swap, saying meaningful contacts were usually made through secret channels.

"There have been various statements but such statements usually serve propaganda purposes," Arens later told Israel army radio. He said Israel has not yet had contacts that "would first of all bring us the thing we are asking for, signs of life from our prisoners and missing."

McCarthy, speaking in Damascus, said his captors sought a "full exchange" of Western hostages and Israel's prisoners from Lebanon.

Fleeing Albanians continue to arrive on Italy's shores

ROME (NYT) — Another huge wave of Albanian migrants washed onto Italy's Adriatric shores Thursday seeking an economic haven but finding instead a hard-line government determined to send them back home.

The Albanians fled their impoverished country aboard several ships, with by far the largest group, estimated at 10,000 people, forcing their way into the port of Bari, on the heel of the Italian boot.

They arrived on a rusty freighter called the Vlora, young men for the most part who said they were looking for work and who filled every inch of available space from deck to mast.

Italian ships had tried to keep them out, but the Vlora ran the blockade nonetheless. As it entered the harbor, hundreds of men wearing nothing but shorts or underwear jumped into the water and swam to shore.

■ Justice worries ruling may have chilling effect

CHEYENNE, Wyo.— A split Wyoming Supreme Court on Thursday ruled that public figures have private lives and careers shielding them from defamatory attacks.

The decision that attorney Gerry Spence can sue Hustler magazine for defamation left one justice worried about the decision's possible chilling effect on free speech.

"The right to freedom of speech has frost on it today. I am compelled to dissent lest tomorrow it be entombed in ice," Justice Michael Golden said.

In overturning a lower court's summary judgment in favor of the magazine and publisher Larry Flynt, the high court said "a public figure is not subject to defamatory attack and criticism just because he is a public figure."

Neither Spence nor lawyers for the magazine were available for comment Thursday.

Spence, who successfully defended Imelda Marcos against federal corruption charges, sued Hustler for $150 million for naming him its "Asshole of the Month" for July 1985.

■ Pee-wee supporters rally in Manhattan

NEW YORK — About 400 supporters of Paul Reubens and his Pee-wee Herman character rallied Thursday to denounce his arrest on an indecent exposure charge and praise his TV show for bringing children "life and comic relief."

The boisterous crowd, including some parents and a few children clutching Pee-wee Herman dolls, grew so large that, at one point, police had to route traffic around the site on Greenwich Village's Christopher Street.

"If those police in Sarasota spent more time on the streets of Sarasota and not in porn movie theaters maybe there would be less street crime in Sarasota," William Kunstler, the civil rights lawyer, told the throng.

"Everybody knows this is an arrest which is unwarranted, a crime that should not be a crime," he added as he was cheered in front of the Abracadabra novelty store, whose owner had organized the rally.

Reubens, the actor who created the nerdy, bowtied Pee-wee character, was arrested July 26 at an adult theater in Sarasota, Fla., on an indecent exposure charge.

■ Nation's mayors plan march on Washington

HYANNIS, Mass. — The nation's mayors Thursday demanded a meeting with President Bush to discuss urban issues and called for a massive march on the nation's capital next spring to protest what they called Washington's neglect of cities.

"It's time for mayors and the people of America to take to the streets," said Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn, president of the United States Conference of Mayors. "The people of America's cities are tired of being treated as second-class citizens."

About 30 top officers of the mayors group held more than four hours of closed talks Thursday to develop a strategy for the organization heading into the 1992 presidential elections.

They emerged promising to demand that candidates of both parties address urban issues, with several Republican mayors stepping forward to make clear that the mayors' beefs were not with Republican President Bush alone.

The group's officers unanimously endorsed a Flynn proposal to demand a meeting with Bush "at the earliest possible convenience."

But, according to participants in the closed session, the group had a fractious debate, largely along partisan lines, when Flynn urged them to organize a march and protest in Washington on April 4, the anniversary of the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr.

Bush calls for release of all hostages

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — President Bush is pleased that British journalist John McCarthy has been released, but he wants all other hostages held in Lebanon freed immediately, the White House said Thursday.

"Rumors persist of the release of an American hostage, but we still have no direct information that such a release will occur," press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said in a statement released at the Bush family vacation home here.

"While we are happy for the family of Mr. McCarthy, we reiterate our appeal that all hostages be released immediately, safely and unconditionally," the statement said.

Bush spent his morning boating and playing tennis with Fitzwater, while press aides released Fitzwater's statement. The president planned an afternoon round of golf in this resort town where he's spending a month-long vacation.

Six Americans are among the 11 Western hostages still believed held by Islamic kidnappers. Among them is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who is the longest held captive.

"We are in frequent contact with the families of the American hostages and our thoughts and prayers are with them," Fitzwater said in the statement. "We continue to hope and pray that all hostages will be released."

United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar has said he anticipates the release of an American hostage.

"We're hearing, too, that there may be another release," said a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity. The official could provide no elaboration.

Fitzwater said the State Department medical and psychological team preparing for potential release of hostages had left for Wiesbaden, Germany, on Wednesday night, before McCarthy's release.

Wiesbaden has been where Americans held hostage in the Middle East have stopped to meet with family and have medical checkups before returning to the United States.

Administration officials were in contact with the British government to glean any information McCarthy might provide on other hostages, White House officials said.

Bush was briefed on the hostage developments and the release of McCarthy during a morning session with Robert Gates, the deputy national security adviser and the president's nominee to head the CIA.

Gates then joined the president in his boating outing. Later, Bush played tennis at his seaside home on Walker's Point with Fitzwater, White House media affairs adviser Dorrance Smith and Sports Illustrated writer Curry Kirkpatrick.

Progressive Baptists oppose Thomas nomination

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Members of a predominantly black Baptist church with more than 2 million members voted overwhelmingly Thursday to oppose the nomination of Clarence Thomas to the U.S. Supreme Court.

About 2,700 delegates to the Progressive Baptist National Convention stood to support a resolution criticizing Thomas for opposing affirmative action. Only about 30 people voted "nay."

But Thomas garnered support Thursday from two other groups.

In New Orleans, delegates to the annual convention of the nation's largest predominantly black fraternal organization — the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World — approved by voice vote a resolution supporting Thomas.

The organization, with about 450,000 members, isn't affiliated with the predominantly white Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. About 50,000 members are attending the convention, spokesman Wendell Johnson said.

"There was a great deal of discussion examining the candidate's record," Johnson said.

In St. Louis, 450 voting delegates at the national convention of the 1.5 million-member Knights of Columbus, the Roman Catholic fraternal service group, approved on voice vote a resolution calling Thomas "exceptionally well qualified."

Several organizations have opposed Thomas' nomination because of his civil rights record. They include the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the AFL-CIO, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and a black lawyers' group, the National Bar Association.

Groups supporting Thomas, a federal appeals court judge, include the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the American Conservative Union and Republican partisan groups.

In Pittsburgh, the Rev. John Mendez of Emmanuel Baptist Church in Winston-Salem, N.C., said Thomas was part of a "conservative trend of 10 years" that is undermining civil rights progress.

"This man represents that trend," he said.

Firm agrees to measures for reducing Grand Canyon pollution

WASHINGTON (NYT) — After two decades of court battles and regulatory skirmishes, the owners of a giant coal-burning power plant in northern Arizona agreed Thursday to a series of expensive measures to control air pollution and reduce haze in the Grand Canyon by the end of the decade.

The agreement, between the owners and two environmental groups, is almost certain to end one of the angriest and most visible environmental struggles in the American West.

In recent years, thick haze had turned the Grand Canyon from a breath-taking natural wonder to a sad tableau of spreading industrial pollution and government inaction. On many days, particularly in the winter, the haze is so thick that visitors standing on one rim can barely see the other side.

The power plant blamed for much of the haze had also become a symbol for environmentalists of industrial excess every bit as visible as the towering brownish-yellow plume of soot and smoke that poured from its 770-foot smokestack across the fragile desert landscape.

Under the agreement, which will be open for public comment and is likely to be adopted as law this fall by the Environmental Protection Agency, which assisted in negotiations, six owners would spend roughly $430 million to install pollution control equipment on the power plant's three boilers, with the first boiler-scrubbing system to be installed by 1997 and the last by 1999.

If the equipment works properly, it will reduce the amount of sulfur dioxide pouring from the plant's smokestacks to 6,000 to 7,000 tons a year, a 90 percent reduction from the 65,000 to 70,000 tons now produced each year.

The plant generates power for 4 million people and businesses.

Eight mobsters convicted of racketeering

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — The Patriarca crime family's reputed boss and seven underlings were convicted of racketeering Thursday in a trial that provided a glimpse into the Mafia, including a secretly recorded mob induction ceremony.

"These defendants, out of their own mouths, convicted themselves," said Assistant U.S. Attorney John Durham.

Authorities boasted that the convictions of reputed Patriarca boss Nicholas L. Bianco and seven associates signaled the death knell of the Providence, R.I.-based organization. It allegedly has controlled rackets in Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut since the 1940s.

"Obviously it's very gratifying that the head of the organization was convicted," Durham said.

A federal indictment charged various defendants with gambling, loan sharking, extortion, attempted murder and murder to support criminal enterprises that authorities say took in hundreds of millions of dollars over the last decade alone.

All eight defendants were found guilty of at least one count of racketeering, defined as committing crimes to support a continuing criminal enterprise.

Three were also convicted in the 1989 slaying of William "the Wild Guy" Grasso, the family's feared boss in Connecticut, and a fourth was found guilty of conspiracy in Grasso's death.

The eight were among 21 alleged members and associates of the Patriarca crime family indicted in March 1990.

Seven others will be tried in Boston this fall, including Raymond J. "Junior" Patriarca, who prosecutors allege was the family boss until he was replaced by Nicholas L. Bianco after his indictment last year. The others pleaded guilty earlier in return for reduced sentences.

Most of the defendants reacted stoically as the verdicts were read. But Gaetano Milano, convicted of murder in Grasso's death, clasped hands in front of his face and shook his head.

The verdict came just as the jury began its 15th day of deliberations.

"Yes, we're disappointed," said Jeremiah Donovan, attorney for Louis Failla. "We got our hopes up and then they were dashed."

Convicted in Grasso's death were Milano, 39, the accused triggerman; Frank Colantoni Jr., 37; and Louis "Louie Pugs" Pugliano, 64. Frank "Frankie Pugs" Pugliano, 63, was found guilty of conspiracy.

Convicted on other charges were Bianco, 59; Salvatore "Butch" D'Aquila, 51; Failla, 63; and Americo "Cigars" Petrillo, 57.

U.S. District Judge Alan H. Nevas set sentencing for Nov. 25. Milano, Colantoni and Louis Pugliano face up to life in prison. The others face maximum sentences ranging from 40 to 80 years.

The government introduced more than 100 surveillance tapes during the three-month trial, including one described as the first-ever secretly taped recording of an induction ceremony.

According to the tape, the mobsters fussed over the seating arrangement and the buffet lunch before inductees had their trigger fingers cut for a blood oath of silence during the 1989 ceremony, attended by 17 people in Medford, Mass., a suburb of Boston.

"Now, the dates you got to leave in the can or they get messy," said a voice identified as Joseph Russo, who's awaiting trial in Boston.

Jury foreman Donald Gesswin downplayed the impact of the induction tapes.

"It's not illegal to be a member of the Mafia," said Gesswin, reached by telephone at home. "It was nice to hear it, but it didn't have much weight. ... It just proved that the enterprise did exist."

The prosecution's case got a boost last summer when two defendants, John F. "Sonny" Castagna and his son, Jack Johns, decided to testify in return for reduced sentences.

Castagna and Johns testified that they participated in three failed attempts to kill Grasso, before he was killed June 13, 1989. Three days later, two fishermen found Grasso's body on the banks of the Connecticut River, a bullet in the back of his neck.

Authorities believe Grasso was killed because leaders of the family's Boston faction suspected he and Patriarca were maneuvering to grab more control over the Boston rackets.

The Grasso murder appeared to shake the crime family's hierarchy, weakening the status of Junior Patriarca, federal authorities said. He had allegedly taken the helm when his father, Raymond L.S. Patriarca Sr., died of a heart attack in 1984.

Special Agent Milt Ahlerich, who heads the FBI in Connecticut, estimated that at its peak during the 1970s, the Patriarca family had more than 100 members and active associates.

The defense took only one week to present its case, and concentrated on rebutting the testimony of Castagna and Johns.

Dry cleaners charge women more, state human-rights agency finds

CHICAGO (AP) — Are launderers taking women to the cleaners?

The Illinois Human Rights Department says yes: Dry cleaners routinely charge more to clean women's shirts than men's.

Dry cleaning industry officials say that's true, but there's a good reason: Women's blouses typically require more hand-cleaning than men's shirts.

The state now is trying to determine if there is sufficiently serious gender discrimination to warrant negotiating a formal price agreement with five Chicago cleaners that it recently studied, a spokesman for the Human Rights Department said Thursday.

If one can't be reached, the next step would be to file a formal complaint with the Illinois Human Rights Commission, which could send the case to an administrative law judge, according to the spokesman, Dick Battles.

At five Chicago cleaners studied by the state, women were charged 35 cents to more than $2 more for exactly the same services, Battles said. The Illinois Human Rights Act prohibits any company providing a public service from discriminating because of gender.

"We understand that the practice is universal. We are aware that it has been a longstanding procedure," Battles said.

Dry cleaning industry officials say price differences have been an issue for years, and they acknowledge charges often are higher for women's cleaning than men's.

But they say the difference is dictated by economics.

Machinery used to finish men's shirts can't be used on smaller women's shirts, said Alice Laban, spokeswoman for the International Fabricare Institute in Silver Spring, Md.

"Those shirts have to be finished by hand, so it naturally takes longer and costs more," Ms. Laban said.

"We don't support any kind of sex discrimination, but we do understand why dry cleaners charge a different price," she said.

The average price to dry clean a blouse ranged from $2.74 in the South to $3.37 in the Northeast, according to International Fabricare Institute statistics from November 1990.

Laundering a men's shirt cost between $1.20 in the South and $1.43 in the West, the institute said.

Battles said the state does not object to higher prices for special handling.

"We're looking at (cleaners) charging more to women than men when exactly the same processing is indicated," he said.

He said he did not know the specific prices charged by the cleaners under investigation. The state has not identified the cleaners.

Similar complaints come up periodically around the country, said Hal Horning, editor of the monthly trade magazine National Clothesline.

Two complaints before the District of Columbia Human Rights Office in 1989 accused two Washington dry cleaners of charging women more than men, according to National Clothesline. Local trade associations settled the complaints by writing gender-free pricing guidelines, the magazine said.

The guidelines approved extra charges for special handling required by such things as dark or bright colors, frills, gathers, padded shoulders, ruffles, delicate trims, zippers and closed fronts.

Governor needs to take chance

Gov. Ann Richards has scored the highest approval rating of any Texas governor since The Texas Poll began asking Texans for their opinions in 1984. She recently achieved a 55 percent approval rating and even among Republicans polled, Richards received a 47 percent approval rating.

That result might have been anticipated since it's awfully close to the 52-48 percent voting split by which she won the 1990 gubernatorial election, and the fact that since taking office Richards has been sounding more like a deficit-cutting Republican than a free-spending Democrat.

At least her statements sounded like those of a fiscal conservative until she ran headlong into the lottery. Now Richards appears to be talking out of both sides of her mouth at once — on one hand admonishing legislators that a state tax bill simply won't be acceptable to taxpayers with all the potential cuts in state expenditures they have been identified and on the other, saying the state needs a lottery so it can spend more money. How's that for a true contradiction?

If the lottery bill is approved by the legislature and put to voters, it could well be a tossup as to what would be the outcome. Richards is now telling voters that the choice facing the state is either a lottery or a huge state tax bill. Wow, what a choice! Bad or worse.

There may be a lot of voters who do not want either, but would take their chances with the lottery — literally — if the legislature and the governor do not possess the intestinal fortitude to do the cutting necessary to avoid a state tax increase. The mood in regard to increased taxation in Texas is downright ugly, with good cause.

The question left unanswered in the rush to a lottery by the governor and the legislature is whether it is a suitable role for government to be involved in actually staging a game of chance. Governorships have been made and lost on such questions.

Chances are if the lottery is put to a vote of the people of Texas, Ann Richards will get the opportunity to learn the answer to that question — along with how firm her 55 percent approval rating is.

World's biggest joke is Marx's 'paradise'

Occasionally, Karl Marx hit the mark, as when he wrote: "The last phase of a world historical figure is generally comical. History takes this course in order that mankind may break away from its past in good spirits."

Marxism, which has caused so much tragedy (40 million killed in the Soviet Union, 100 million in China, 3 million in tiny Cambodia, millions more in Poland, Vietnam, Ethiopia and so on) has finally faded, and its "world historical figure," Karl Marx, has become a worldwide joke.

The last laugh, perhaps, came . . . when the world's top communist himself, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, formally dumped Marxism....

He admitted: "Our experience and that of others does not give enough grounds to believe that this aim (building communism) can be realistically achieved in the forseeable future."

Gorbachev's "program of the '90s" includes restoration of a market economy and democracy.

Gorbachev must go much farther. He has yet to renounce, and in fact has often reitered his faith, in Leninism. In fact, his program looks much like Lenin's New Economic Policy of the 1920s, which did revive the Soviet economy a bit, but continued central control, especially the terrorist security apparatus.

We should judge . . . Gorbachev by what he achieves, not by his words. He has instituted glasnost, allowing a measure of political freedom. Yet his perestroika economic program has sputtered along; the major industries remain under the control of the central government; private property rights remain meager. And the independent nations of the Baltics, Armenia, Georgia and Ukraine remain enslaved.

At any rate, we can laugh in good spirits, as Marx advised us, at his repudiation by the head of the socialist "paradise" created in his name.

IRS isn't picky about who pays piper

WASHINGTON — Sharon Arnsberger quit her job with an Austin, Texas, landscaping company back in 1987 when she found out her bosses were dodging their federal payroll taxes. Then she did what any conscientious person would do — she reported the fraud to the Internal Revenue Service.

Anderson

Now the IRS is doing what it could be expected to do — going after Arnsberger for $119,765 in payroll taxes that her employers failed to pay. Apparently Arnsberger was easier pickings for the IRS than her bosses were. She has learned too late that bookkeepers, clerks and managers who have no ownership interest in a business can still be held responsible for taxes the business owes.

Under federal law, workers who have even a slight responsibility for a company's funds, even if they simply write the checks, can be stuck with the tax debts of their bosses. Fairness has nothing to do with it. If the boss disappears or files for protection from creditors, then the IRS will look for an easy win. Innocent people can suddenly find themselves owing six-figure sums to Uncle Sam.

What angers Arnsberger the most is that she was the one who alerted the IRS to the wrongdoing in the first place.

In 1986, Arnsberger, then 24, became comptroller for the landscaping firm. She kept the books and paid the bills, but she never owned a piece of the company. She grew concerned when her bosses opened another company in California and started draining money from the Austin office to pay for it. There wasn't enough money to pay the payroll taxes, and Arnsberger warned her bosses to satisfy the debt to the IRS.

When they didn't heed her warnings, Arnsberger resigned. Then she and another employee went to the IRS and reported the unpaid taxes. They were thanked and sent on their way. The company later folded, and Arnsberger heard nothing more until last April when an IRS agent called her and told her she was being held liable for the taxes. She is appealing, but faces having her and her husband's wages garnished to settle the debt.

"The IRS does not want to hear the circumstances and does not care how innocent I am," Arnsberger told our associate Scott Sleek. "They just want their money and they do not care from whom or how they get it."

An IRS spokeswoman in Austin told us Arnsberger is liable because she signed most of the company's checks and knew about the unpaid taxes long before she quit. Arnsberger told us that she is guilty of being too trusting when her bosses told her they would get around to paying the government. Now the IRS won't tell us whether the owners of the company have been penalized too.

John and Susan Heiland also know what it's like to be on the IRS hit list. For three years, the Iowa couple has been stalked for back taxes owed by a trucking company John managed several years ago. The IRS has seized the Heilands' car and money in their checking account and has been taking part of John's paycheck for two years. Ultimately, the IRS wants to squeeze $400,000 out of him, even though he has an affidavit from the head of the company saying Heiland was not responsible for the payroll taxes.

The Heilands have received some help from Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, but their ordeal continues. "My family is suffering because of the mishandling and collection of the taxes," John Heiland said.

Jack Anderson's and Dale Van Atta's column is distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

CHARLEY REESE

Bush will win smarmy election by default

The problem with the Democrats is not that they lack candidates to challenge George Bush. The problem is they lack ideas and convictions with which to challenge George Bush.

In politics, money is the great leveler. The only people with lots of money to give to politicians, Democrat or Republican, are the big shots. With the Republican and the Democrat calves sucking on the same teats, it should not surprise anyone that they have become virtually indistinguishable.

Reese

Let's pretend for a moment you are a great and respected Democrat getting ready to challenge George Bush for the country's highest office. On what issues would you challenge him as a Democrat?

The Persian Gulf War? No, you supported it.

The stupid budget agreement? No, you helped craft it.

Fast track for the Mexican free trade agreement? No, you supported Bush on that one.

Foreign aid? No, you supported it.

The tax laws? No, you voted for them.

The deficit? No, you bought half of it with the budget agreement.

Trade laws? No, you handed all that authority over to Bush.

Savings and loan scandals? No, you share responsibility for that.

Ethics? Uh, well, let's skip that subject.

Civil rights? No, Bush has outflanked you. He claims to be for civil rights without quotas and the only way you can distinguish your position from his is to mandate quotas, but you're afraid to do it openly.

The fascist crime bill? No, you helped draft and pass it.

The truth is that beyond saying, let's spend more money we don't have on children, the Democrats don't have any differences with the Bush administration on issues important enough to persuade an undecided voter to turn Bush out.

Thus, Bush is likely to win a second time just like he did the first time — by default. The campaign, if there is one, is likely to be a smarmy, marshmallowy contest to declare who loves children and Israel and hates criminals and Saddam Hussein the more.

We have actually one political party, alike on the main issues, different on the minor ones — like one hog with spots on his left side and stripes on his right side. What we don't have is a political party that will represent the lower and middle classes of America.

Please don't bombard me with yor ideas for new parties. I just write columns. I'm not a politician and I'm not carrying water for anybody but my readers.

But if you do care about your country, you should beware of partisan numbskullism — the belief in the absence of evidence that someone who calls himself or herself a Democrat is better than someone who calls himself or herself a Republican — and vice versa.

My old man used to say that Democrats were for the working man, and Republicans were for the rich. That was true when Democrats like Harry Truman would drive back to Missouri in his second-hand car to seek re-election to the Senate and more often than not would sleep in his car because he couldn't afford a hotel and wouldn't be bought.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

27th amendment would prohibit pay raises

Now you, too, can stop unlimited congressional pay raises. Just demand prompt ratification of the 27th amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Heaven knows, ratification has been pending long enough — 202 years, to be exact. The matter is all the timelier, what with the Senate voting July 17 to raise its pay by $23,200: a move the House went along with uncomplainingly. (The House had bumped up its own pay the previous year.)

Murchison

We need just three more states on the dotted line, whereupon Congress will be prohibited from "varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives . . . until an election of Representatives shall have taken place."

The 27th amendment, drafted by James Madison himself, was originally the second amendment proposed by Congress as part of the Bill of Rights. It preceded, numerically, what is today called the First Amendment.

Madison had warned: "There is a seeming impropriety in leaving any set of men, without control, to put their hand into public coffers, to take money to put in their pockets."

Only six states, nonetheless, voted to ratify. Maybe the trust level for congressmen was higher in those days. Whatever the case, Madison's amendment faded into the twilight zone: out of which it was suddenly yanked in the 1980s, according to Insight magazine, by Gregory Watson, a Texas legislative aide.

While researching a college term paper, Watson stumbled onto the lost amendment. He was enraptured. At last — a way of checking congressional greed. No congressional pay hike, by the amendment's terms, could go immediately into effect. There would have to be an election first — a chance for the hike to be disputed and defended. The sovereign people would in some sense judge the propriety of the salary raise in terms of whom they elected and whom they defeated.

Watson, says Insight, "used $5,000 of his own money to spur the nationwide movement among state legislators to ratify Madison's amendment . . . he is credited with influencing 26 states to ratify language that had been approved by just eight states in the previous 193 years." This was possibly because the First Congress had set no deadline for ratification. Any time was fine.

A conservative activist in Dallas, Stephen A. Panteli, has made it his business to press the remaining non-ratifying 15 states, just three of which need to act favorably. Kentucky for one is considering taking up the amendment at a special session on redistricting. (The other prospects: Alabama, Hawaii, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Washington, California, Illinois, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, Rhode Island.)

Panteli's correspondence with the other states has been energetic. He tried but failed to get the final three ratifying votes this summer. Ratification would have headed off the Senate pay raise at the pass. On the struggle goes anyway. The Madison amendment may just make it one of these days.

And if it does? Would this assure us government of squeaky-clean sanctity? Not by any means, but it might put some limits on the fine old practice of nest-feathering.

Congressmen live amid so many feathers you expect them to break out sneezing. For fiscal 1992, the legislative branch will cost an estimated $3 billion, vs. $1,199,061 way back in the dark ages: 1980 to be exact.

The goodies pour out freely. Money magazine says lawmakers with five years' tenure must pay only $80 a month for health insurance covering themselves and their families – 'til God calls the congressman home. Each member gets health insurance automatically, with no doctor's exam.

Congressmen also get taxpayer-financed junkets on military airplanes, subsidized meals, special tags that let them park almost anywhere, free health club facilities and a $3,000 tax deduction for housing.

Back home, the average family of four makes do on $35,000 a year.

No, Madison's amendment isn't a cure-all for the problem of political egoism and self-aggrandizement, but it can't hurt, and it might actually help. What Madison feared was lack of accountability for the emoluments of political office. There's no accountability now. Whatever we can do to introduce some, let us do it as swiftly as possible.

Authorities arrest man in Houston kidnapping

HOUSTON (AP) — An ex-convict wanted for abducting the wife of the manager of entertainers ZZ Top and Clint Black was arrested in Colorado and has confessed to killing the woman, police said Thursday.

Spencer Corey Goodman, 22, was arrested Wednesday in Eagle County, Colo., and was charged with credit card abuse, Lt. Ira Franks said.

Goodman led Colorado police on a 32-mile chase before crashing the car of Cecille Ham, the wife of band manager Bill Ham of Houston.

Franks said Goodman gave Colorado authorities a statement saying he killed Mrs. Ham after abducting her July 2. On the previous day, he was released from a Bexar County facility for parole violators.

"It appears to be just a robbery," said Franks, who said Goodman probably did not know Mrs. Ham and was attracted by her 1991 red Cadillac.

Houston police learned Goodman was in Colorado because a store merchant in Eagle County told state authorities Goodman used credit cards reported stolen during his 11-day stay at a church camp in Marble Falls, Texas.

"Colorado authorities put out a statewide alert on Goodman and the missing vehicle," Franks said.

Police trailed Goodman's movement from July 2 to July 10 based on a "paper trail" of receipts from several thousand dollars' worth of credit card purchases he made with Mrs. Ham's cards. Goodman's whereabouts through July 21 were provided by a person at the camp with him.

Police anticipated Goodman, who grew up in the Friendswood area southeast of Houston, would be returned to Houston later in the day.

Mrs. Ham, 48, was last seen at a drug store July 2.

Memo gags Houston police

HOUSTON (AP) — Some Houston police are agitated by a department memo that warns them to watch their words when speaking to reporters.

"There's no doubt this is politically motivated," one officer, who requested anonymity, told the Houston Chronicle Thursday. "We've never had any problem talking to the news media, but now that it's three months before the election and the mayor is facing stiff opposition in the polls, this comes out."

Officers said the directive is an attempt to prevent them from speaking about controversial subjects which have become the focus of the upcoming mayoral election.

The memo was prompted by an officer's contention during a television interview last week that only five police units were available to patrol a Houston area encompassing 50,000 residents.

Houston Police Chief Elizabeth Watson has demanded the officer submit documentation on how he came up with those figures.

Legislators study broader sales tax

■ While legislative leaders conider applying the state sales tax to items not covered, Gov. Ann Richards says she opposes a wider levy.

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislative leaders said Thursday they are looking at proposals to start applying the state sales tax to numerous items not currently taxed.

But Gov. Ann Richards indicated that she generally opposes widening the levy.

Tax talk zoomed to the forefront as lawmakers remained divided over spending and revenue with the 30-day special session to write a state budget set to expire Tuesday.

Lawmakers face a projected $4.8 billion deficit to pay for the current level of services for 1992-93. A major tax plan in the House fell far short of paying for its proposed budget, and the Senate has yet to approve a budget.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, the leader of the Senate, and House Speaker Gib Lewis circulated lists of possible tax options to their colleagues to try and forge some kind of budget and tax agreement.

"I think you will see some broadening (of the sales tax base). I certainly do," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

Bullock said the tax and fee options range from expanding the state sales tax to country club dues, used boat sales, concert tickets, and other items.

"There are a lot of things on this list that I don't like," Bullock said. "But I have a responsibility to the agencies and the people who are served by those agencies to pass a bill that is as fair as we can get to continue services in Texas."

The state sales tax currently is 6.25 cents per dollar, one of the highest in the nation.

Richards told reporters that expansion of the sales tax was not being considered by her.

"The list of items that we have been working from do not include real expansions," she said.

"At least those that anyone thinks has a chance of getting in an ultimate bill. I do not look favorably on expansions," she said.

State leaders have discussed repealing a number of tax exemptions and discounts, and increasing the state gasoline tax and various fees. Many of these proposals have already been shot down in the House.

In addition, Bullock said the House and Senate have failed to reach an accord on how to reform the state's primary business tax, which is called the corporation franchise tax.

House Ways and Means Chairman James Hury wants to expand the base, lower the rate, and make businesses pay the higher of a tax on assets or income.

Bullock wants to exempt single-owned companies from the tax. Lewis said the House may be leaning toward Bullock's proposal.

Despite the focus on taxes, Bullock said serious efforts to reform the state's tax system are dead.

Richards adds demonstrations at Capitol to legislative agenda

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards opened the agenda of the special session Thursday for legislation to place restrictions on demonstrations at the Capitol, while a civil rights group said they would fight such a proposal.

The House has already approved a bill that would prohibit overnight protests, and sleeping or lying on the Capitol grounds.

Opponents of the measure said it is a violation of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and assembly.

But Richards said the State Preservation Board needs to adopt rules for demonstrations during the massive construction project under way, which includes expansion and restoration of the 103-year-old Capitol.

"I think that all of you know that I'm going to be the first that will defend any First Amendment rights as a member of that Preservation Board," she said.

The Texas Civil Rights Project announced that if the bill approved by the House becomes law, the group would challenge it in court.

Under the House bill, the Preservation Board would be in charge of rules regulating visitor activities in the Capitol.

Police find crack with Evans' body

AUSTIN (AP) — After discovering crack cocaine at the apartment where the body of state Rep. Larry Evans was found, police said Thursday they were investigating whether drugs played a role in his death.

Police spokeswoman Gail Phillips said investigators collected "potentially evidentiary materials" from Evans' apartment, including 3.44 grams of crack cocaine, narcotics paraphernalia and "some sexually explicit materials and devices."

Evans

Norm Carmack, assistant to Travis County Medical Examiner Roberto Bayardo, said an autopsy didn't immediately reveal what caused Evans' death. Toxicology test results should be completed next week, he said.

Ms. Phillips said Bayardo "has ruled out a heart attack as the cause of death."

"Mr. Evans had been suffering from bronchial asthma that could have caused the death. However, Dr. Bayardo will not be able to make a final ruling and determine the cause of death until he studies the toxicology and lab results," Carmack said.

Homicide investigator Sgt. Mike Huckabay said he suspected that the death was the result of a drug overdose.

"Dr. Bayardo seems to think it's the combination of crack cocaine and his asthma inhaler medication," he said.

But Carmack said such a determination could not be made until Evans' body fluids are tested for any types and amounts of alcohol, drugs and medications in his system when he died.

"That's the sort of thing that we would look for with toxicology," he said. "If that is a factor, (Bayardo) will be able to tell whether a particular drug or medicine or combination was a cause or factor in the death."

"I think he was taking several medications for his condition," Carmack added.

Ms. Phillips said the autopsy showed that Evans, 42, died late Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning.

Bill would ban 'canned' hunts

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texas legislators introduced a bill Thursday to end "canned" hunts, the controversial practice of killing wild animals that have been kept in captivity.

"The canned hunts we've heard and read about in the (news) media lately turn the stomach of most Texans," said Rep. Robert Saunders, D-LaGrange.

"These individuals are not hunters or sportsmen, and they have no regard for fair and ethical activities. That's why this bill is necessary," Saunders said.

The bill by he and Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth, would restrict ownership of certain wild animals and strengthen enforcement of laws regulating licensing and inspection of wild animal facilities.

According to Texas Parks and Wildlife Department spokeswoman Lydia Saldana, canned hunts aren't illegal under current Texas law unless the animal involved is listed as federally endangered or threatened.

The bill is aimed at protecting lions, tigers, cougars, leopards, cheetahs, hyenas, bears and similar state-listed endangered species.

The measure would make it illegal to kill any of those animals, except where human life was threatened, or under certain narrowly defined exceptions.

Sheriff, county judge butt heads on budget

■ Midland County Judge Charles W. Seltzer wants Sheriff Gary Painter to concentrate on the county.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The seeming power play between the Midland County sheriff and judge is focusing on "fat" in the sheriff's proposed budget and on who's supposed to do whose job.

The men, County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer and Sheriff Gary Painter, are in an obvious conflict. Both are headstrong, tenacious, bound to duty, and say they are determined to do what's right.

Their jobs and approaches to work are different, though both declare responsibility to the taxpayers while the five-member Midland County Commissioners' Court tries to whittle down the county's proposed $21-million budget by at least $2 million dollars to match incoming revenue by way of taxes, fines and fees.

Seltzer, the county's 43-year-old chief budgetary officer, is proposing severe cuts into the sheriff's proposed $5-million budget — the largest departmental budget in the county.

Likewise, Seltzer has been openly critical of the sheriff in his dispatching of investigators throughout Texas and into four states to probe crimes and make drug "busts."

Seltzer fears liability suits. He contends the sheriff, except in rare instances, should stay home and attack crime and work on the public safety in Midland County.

The sheriff, a 44-year-old former Texas Department of Public Safety trooper and ex-deputy sheriff, counters that the budget, once approved, is his to do with what he will within the confines of the law and in the interest of public safety.

Painter Seltzer

"My budget is mine," Painter said. "I take care of my own business, and I run it the way I think it ought to be run as long as I'm sheriff. I don't work for the Commissioners' Court. I work for the people. And as along as the people will have me, that's what I'll do."

Painter was elected sheriff in 1984 after defeating Sheriff Dallas Smith in a controversial and fiery campaign.

Seltzer, who has been judge since first of the year, succeeded William B. "Bill" Ahders.

While Painter is hoping to get a budget in the $5-million range, he said that he feels he is under "attack" by the judge because, in part, his proposed budget is only $280,000 more than his 1991 budget of between $4.8 million and $4.9 million.

"I didn't ask for $3 million (the budget's approximate shortfall)," Painter said Thursday. "They're trying to lay the blame on me," he lamented.

"Why is the Sheriff's Office a target? I've fought my enemies: drug dealers, thieves and (other) crooks that I deal with everyday. Now, I'm being made a target.

4-year-olds get shots for school

■ Activity at the Midland Health Center picks up as the start of school nears

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Waiting until a child enrolls in school to get his or her immunizations is a risky practice. Nonetheless, the Midland County Health Department is seeing an increasing number of children four years old and older who haven't received a single immunization.

"Then it's too much for a child to get four immunizations at once," said Monette Burke, administrator of the local health department.

Gretchen Parsley, nursing supervisor for the health department, said she has inoculated a high percentage of four-year-olds this summer.

Immunizations have been in the media spotlight for the past few months due to outbreaks of preventable diseases nationwide.

Celebrities — including Bill Cosby and Henry Winkler — and other members of the Children's Action Network have joined forces with the American Academy of Pediatrics to produce a series of public service announcements about the importance of childhood immunizations.

In recent weeks, celebrities have decried the outbreak of diseases which were virtually wiped out by immunizations in the 1950s.

A recent nationwide Gallup poll of 700 parents indicated that only 28 percent of children in the United States are immunized for preventable diseases such as measles, diptheria,

Crime victim agencies get grant awards

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Victims of rape in Midland will have the benefit of a professional counselor as a result of an increase in VOCA allocations this year.

Midland's crime victims will once again be supported by three local agencies using money collected from those responsible for the crimes.

Midland Rape Crisis Center, Midland County Victim Assistance Program and Midland County Crisis Intervention Unit were all recently allocated grant money from the state's Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) fund. The money, designated for crime victim assistance, is collected from criminal fines, penalties and bond forfeitures in federal criminal court cases. It is allocated through Gov. Ann Richard's Criminal Justice Division.

Victims of rape in Midland will have the benefit of a professional counselor as a result of an increase in VOCA allocations this year. Rape Crisis director LaNell Honeyman said the service is greatly needed at the agency, where currently, all counseling comes from staff members and volunteers.

"I feel like we're not offering what we could to these people," she said. Sexual assault, incest and other "personal" crimes are often emotionally damaging to victims, Honeyman said.

"This is going to offer them the chance for long-term care to overcome the effects," Honeyman said. She has hired counselor Meg Branson, whose work is also expected to lend the agency renewed credibility among the counseling community, Honeyman said.

Rape Crisis has been allocated $45,749 in VOCA funds to provide the counselor, other employee salaries and administrative costs. The agency, which served 87 victims in the first six months of this year, is funded through United Way, the Texas Department of Health and donations from foundations and individuals.

The Midland County Victim Assistance Program will receive $26,764 in VOCA funds, slightly less than last year.

"We've done some streamlining, computerized some things," said director Sandra Edge. "So we didn't ask for as much this time." She said the money will fund some salaries and administrative costs for the agency, which operates out of the Midland County district attorney's office to assist crime victims through the criminal justice system.

In the three-month period from April 1 through June 30, Victim Assistance served 433 primary victims — those directly hurt or affected by the crime, and 25 secondary victims — people close to the victim.

"Most people aren't that familiar with the criminal justice system," Ms. Edge said. "We try to help them know what they're getting into."

Crisis Intervention, a first-response support system for victims, uses its $35,471 grant for salaries and administrative costs, said director Olivia Wilson.

Most of the agency's funding comes from money seized by lawmen, she said.

"What we do doesn't cost anybody anything," she said. "Not one taxpayer in the county pays, except the drug dealers." The program works with police, sheriff's deputies, Department of Public Safety troopers and the Texas Rangers.

Ms. Wilson and 25 volunteers, working out of the Midland County Sheriff's Office, respond immediately to the scene of many crimes to help victims find the assistance they need.

Throughout the state, 92 programs were awarded VOCA money totalling more than $4 million. Other Permian Basin agencies receiving the grants included the Odessa Rape Crisis Center and Big Spring's Rape Crisis/Victim Services, which got $50,000 each.

The Odessa Rape Crisis Center, currently in the process of hiring an executive director, received a slightly higher allocation than previous years, said board treasurer Cathy Figert.

With a team of about 35 trained volunteers and six paid employees, the center operates a counseling service, 24-hour hotline and a referral network for victims. Although not their only means of support, VOCA funding is a large part, Ms. Figert said.

Lisa Brooks, director of Big Spring's program, said the money is planned to fund half of the agency's work — services to crime victims in Martin, Glasscock and Howard counties. RC/VS also counsels rape victims in the area.

Six Soviet officials to visit Permian Basin

Staff Report

Six high-level officials from the Soviet Union will be in the Midland-Odessa area next next week, visiting here Monday through Wednesday.

According to Dr. Jerry Lee Jones, chair of Midland College Business Studies Division and head of the college's Business Development Center, the Soviet visitors will be leaders in the "privatization of Russia."

The purpose of the visit is to learn about economic competiviness and to develop future business contacts, Jones said.

The delegation includes six Russians, plus two interpreters. They are scheduled to arrive Monday night and leave Thursday morning. They have already toured several East Coast cities, including New York and Washington, D.C. Before returning to Russia, they will also tour San Francisco.

The delegates will include:

■ Viktor Sergeyevich Budkin, head of the Department of Foreign Social and Economic Issues at Ukrainian Academy of Sciences.

■ Fedor Glebovich Burchak, head of the Department of Legislation and Law and Order, and Secretariat of the Ukrainian Supreme Soviet.

■ Vladimir Nikolayevich Karyagin, vice president of the USSR Federation of Consumer Securities, and editor-in-chief of the "Business Herald," an independent publication, and People Deputy and member of the Municipal Executive Committee of the City of Minsk.

■ Petr Borisovich Shelishch, vice president of the USSR Federation of Consumer Societies and chairman of the Russian Union of Consumer Societies and director of the Leningrad Agency for Social Information.

■ Vladimir Yevgen'yevich Tsapelik, scientific fellow at the Institute on Market Issues for the USSR Academy of Sciences and Deputy Chair of the Scientific Council on De-Monopolization of the Russian Republic.

■ Yerzhan Utembayev, deputy director of the Economic Office of the Kazakh Republic Cabinet of Ministers.

Senate panel endorses lottery bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A Senate committee Thursday approved a constitutional amendment for a state lottery after Gov. Ann Richards testified that each dollar earned in the game means a dollar less in taxes.

The Senate Finance Committee approved the measure, 9-4, and sent it to the full Senate for debate.

The lottery amendment was passed by the House on Monday. If passed by the Senate, voters would go to the polls Nov. 5 to decide whether to start the gambling game.

"The people of Texas want to vote on a lottery, and we ought to give them that chance," Richards said.

The lottery amendment was passed by the House on Monday. If passed by the Senate, voters would go to the polls Nov. 5.

"The lottery is not going to solve all the financial problems of the state of Texas. But the bottom line is that every dollar of lottery revenue is one less dollar in taxation that is paid to the state," she said.

Lawmakers are meeting in special session to write a state budget in the face of a $4.8 billion deficit.

Although the numbers game has been proposed in every regular session since 1983, this week marks the first time it won House approval.

The Senate has passed the measure in the past, but it now faces an obstacle in Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas.

Leedom, a longtime lottery opponent, said he intends a filibuster on the bill when it reaches the full Senate, probably Friday. Leedom said he is prepared to talk until the end of the session Tuesday, which could block action on critical budget and tax bills.

The Senate committee did not vote Thursday on accompanying legislation that would set up the lottery by creating a new division in the State Comptroller's office.

Montford, D-Lubbock and the Senate sponsor of the bill, said his version of the lottery could raise $471 million in the next two years.

That would be $270 million more than the House proposal because an amendment to the bill would limit advertising funds and would

COUNTY: Judge questions sheriff's proposals

(From 1B)

And I'm not sure why."

Other departments, Painter suggested, could to be scrutinized at least as severely as his.

The sheriff cited the Road and Bridge Department's $1.85-million budget.

"That belongs to the county commissioners (Durward Wright, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and Win Brown). They spend it any way they want to."

The judge admitted that "fat" can be trimmed from other departmental budgets.

"I suspect there is fat in everybody's budget," Seltzer said, "and the Commissioners' Court is sitting down and analyzing all the departmental budgetary requests."

The sheriff commands a 157-person force made up mostly of jailers in conforming to the rules, regulation and mandates of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards. Through no fault of his or the Commissioners' Court, the jail is an unusually heavy tax drain due on the county.

Because of overcrowding in the state prisons, Midland County lodges Texas prisoners at the county's expense. And the resultant loss is about $1 million in federal revenue. That's because bunks, once set aside for the lucrative federal-prisoner market, are being filled with state prisoners because of shortages of state penitentiary beds.

Since 1985, the sheriff's budget has grown from $2.3 million to almost $5 million. Most of the increase has been through growth in the jail's population.

Criminal investigations, patrol work and warrant services have increased.

"I have a very strong sense of responsibility to the people of this county," Painter said. "I have a very strong conviction to do what I think is right."

"I'm not involved in the fight," Painter said. "I'm under attack."

Seltzer has a different perspective and views any "conflict" as more of a commonality of leadership traits.

Both are strong and aggressive and are accustomed to taking command.

"I suspect that Gary Painter is very much the same type of leader (that Seltzer is)," the judge said.

"I tend to take command of the situation and attack problems," Seltzer said.

"There's a difference in leadership style between my predecessor (Ahders) and me," he said.

Ahders had been judge since the late 1970s until he retired from office when his last term expired last year.

"Quite frankly," Seltzer said, "there are a lot of county elected officials and department heads who weren't quite prepared for the changeover. It's a difference in leadership style."

"I tend to be pretty aggressive," the judge said. "And I tend to attack things, and I tend to attack them and stay on them until I get them right."

Meanwhile, Painter seems determined to do what he thinks is "right."

"And I'll continue to do that," Painter said. He, perhaps, will draw "a political opponent (in 1992). It's open to everyone. It's a free country."

In his freedom and in carrying out what he deems as duties of his office, the sheriff has launched investigations and drug "busts" outside the county and outside the state.

"Uniformed crime reports show that crime is not as abundant (in Midland) as it is in neighboring areas," Painter said.

The judge is adamant that the sheriff should, in the main, keep his business entirely in Midland County.

"I'm a law-enforcement officer," Painter said. "I work for the people."

And in moments of discord and in debate, such as in budget-study times with the Commissioners' Court, "We've always been able to sit down and work it out," Painter said.

"And now, all of sudden with 'Bro' (Seltzer) as the head of it, it has changed," Painter said. "And that disturbs me because the groundwork is being laid. There are things that are going on behind the scenes. All I can do is guess at it. I think there are some underlying reasons for the moves that are being made. And they will become apparent the closer we got to election time."

SHOTS: Youngsters get ready for school whooping cough and polio by age two.

Ms. Burke said, "For whatever reason — finances or education — fewer parents are getting their children immunized when they should. There is also a bigger lapse of time between getting immunizations."

The state recommends immunizations begin at age two months.

National statistics also indicate that the incidence of tuberculosis TB) has been increasing in the past two years.

Ms. Burke said there were 14 active cases of TB reported in Midland in 1989 while 23 were reported in 1990.

"There is a skin test which detects exposure to TB," Ms. Burke said. "It's a misconception that people think of TB as an old person's disease — something that someone is sent off to a sanatorium for."

The health administrator said that the national outbreak of measles in 1989 increased awareness about vaccinations.

"We (health personnel) even went into Midland schools to vaccinate children where measles were reported," she said.

In 1990 the health department administered 5,464 Diptheria/Tetanus/ Pertussis (DTP) injections, 4,148 of the oral polio immunizations, 2,361 measles/mumps/rubella vaccines and 1,720 Haemophilus b conjugate (Hib) vaccines.

State law requires students to have the proper measles/mumps/rubella, polio and DTP inoculations before entering school.

The Hib vaccine is recommended by pediatricians. It is a vaccine which prevents a bacteria (Haemophilus Influenzae Type B) which can cause serious disease, especially in children under 5. The bacteria causes meningitis (an infection of the lining of the brain). About one child in every 20 who contracts the disease dies from it and one in four has permanent brain damage.

The bacteria also can result in pneumonia and infections of the blood, joints, bone, soft tissue, throat and covering of the heart.

Ms. Burke said that cost of immunizations are $12.50 per child, no matter how many injections the child receives. "We can keep our cost low because the state provides the vaccinations," she said. "But no child will be turned away because of their parents inability to pay."

The health administrator said about 30,000 immunization schedules suggested by the state will be enclosed with Midlanders' water bills this month.

Children may be inoculated from 8 a.m.-11 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. Mondays and Fridays at the Midland Health Department, 501 Andrews Hwy.

Cost of the inoculations is $12.50 per child, no matter how many injections the child receives. No child will be turned away for lack of funds.

LOTTERY: Committee endorses amendment

(From 1B)

"significantly impair the marketability of the lottery," Montford said.

Revenue from the game could rise to $1 billion in 1994-1995, Richards said.

She told the committee that the lottery is played by people from all income levels and shouldn't be opposed for its effect on the poor.

"Every activity that costs money costs the poor more," Richards said. "Frankly, it is just plain nervy to suggest that those of us who are fortunate enough to be more affluent have any business telling people with modest incomes whether or not they can spend their money on one activity or another."

Richards also said that she had not misled Texans when she said they had to choose between a lottery or a "huge" tax bill.

"A lottery does not solve our problems, but the amount of money that it does produce reduces the amount of money we have to raise in taxation," she said.

However, Sen. Jim Turner, who voted against the bill, said it would take $1.28 billion — the amount of projected ticket sales — out of the state's economy.

"It will come out of taxpayers' pockets one way or the other," said Turner, D-Crockett.

In addition, several representatives of religious and consumer groups testified Thursday against the lottery.

Jude Filler of the Texas Alliance for Human Needs called the lottery "a cruel joke."

"Every dollar played in the lottery is one more dollar of taxes. It's just called by a different name," she said.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Girl shot

Staff Report

An investigation continued Thursday into the shooting of a 14-year-old girl that occurred Tuesday evening, officials said.

Police said they were looking for a 37-year-old woman, believed to have shot the youth in the right lower leg following a argument involving several women.

The injured woman — shot with a .38-caliber gun — was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital where she was treated and released.

Boys caught

Police arrested four juveniles for breaking into a building Wednesday evening, officials said.

The youngsters were discovered after police responded to a burglar alarm at 122 S. Fort Worth St. at about 9:10 p.m., reports stated.

Upon arrival, police found an open door on the south side of the building and subsequently apprehended the juveniles.

The boys were aged 16, 13, and two were 10. All were released into the custody of their parents.

Nothing was reportedly taken from the building.

Houston police decoy gay bashers

HOUSTON (NYT) — To quell a tide of violence directed against homosexuals, Houston police officers have taken to the streets of a downtown neighborhood dressed as potential victims, with results that have startled even gay leaders who have called for increased protection for years.

Since the decoy program, thought to be the first of its kind in the country, was begun last Friday in the Montrose neighborhood, an area long troubled by "gay bashing" incidents, three undercover officers have been attacked, and 13 people have been arrested.

Two officers posing as a gay couple were sprayed with Chemical Mace Friday night hours after the program began, and another undercover officer was beaten with a baseball bat early Monday.

Police said both attacks were by groups of young men from outside the neighborhood who thought their victims were homosexuals.

None of the officers was seriously injured, and the eight people accused in the attacks on them were arrested and charged with crimes ranging from carrying a prohibited weapon to aggravated assault.

In another incident on Monday night, police arrested five juveniles who undercover officers said were harassing pedestrians. They were charged with posession of alcohol.

The Montrose is a residential area whose pre-World War I mansions and bungalows house art galleries and chic restaurants and shops, as well as many of Houston's gay bars.

In the last decade, carloads of teen-agers have cruised the streets on weekends, shouting epithets at passers-by and sometimes throwing rocks and bottles or attacking them, seemingly for sport.

But the decoy program, which members of the gay community helped the police develop, arose in response to the July 4 beating and stabbing death of 27-year-old banker, Paul Broussard.

As Broussard and two companions left a gay bar, they were chased down by 10 young men wielding boards and knives. One of Broussard's companions escaped, and the other was wounded, although not critically.

Ten men, most of whom are residents of an affluent suburb, have been arrested, indicted by a grand jury and charged with murder in Broussard's slaying.

The Houston Police Department fell under heavy criticism from gay and other human rights groups following the incident, especially after homicide detectives initially said there was no evidence the attack was a hate crime, a statement they later retracted.

More than 1,000 neighborhood residents, organized by the group Queer Nation, rallied at a major intersection in the Montrose on July 13, blocking traffic for several hours.

Dallas County commissioner surrenders

DALLAS (AP) — An embattled Dallas County commissioner surrendered to police Thursday to face a felony assault charge for breaking a man's ankle during a downtown scuffle.

Commissioner John Wiley Price was booked at Lew Sterrett Justice Center Thursday evening for aggravated assault in connection with one of two brawls Friday.

He was released on $1,500 bond, according to jail records.

If convicted, Price could be sentenced to a jail term ranging from two to 10 years. He also would not be allowed to serve in public office.

Price is accused of breaking carpenter Tim Short's ankle. Short was working on the set of a movie being filmed near the Dallas County Administration Building when the fight occurred.

The incident started after Price and construction workers argued about construction equipment blocking the street.

"He had no reason to attack me," Short said in a television interview Thursday. "He pushed down on my leg and I saw the bone break."

About 90 minutes earlier, Price had fought with a jogger who tried to run through a picket line set up outside the offices of WFAA-TV and The Dallas Morning News.

Larry Buck said he was tackled and beaten by Price as he ran through the group of picketers. Buck was not seriously hurt in the mishap.

Price still faces misdemeanor assault complaints in connection with both Friday incidents.

There was no answer at Price's home Thursday evening.

These recent run-ins are the latest in a string of controversial events involving the commissioner.

Heart institute, Texas A&M reveal research fellowship

HOUSTON (AP) — Physicians at the Texas Heart Institute and officials at Texas A&M University on Thursday announced a new research fellowship program that will train veterinarians in human cardiovascular medicine.

"To me, the merger is just the epitome of my dreams to see THI and Texas A&M get together," said Michel T. Halbouty, the chief executive officer of Halbouty Energy Co., which made the initial donation to endow the five-year fellowships.

The first two of what will eventually be 10 full-time fellowships have been awarded this month to two graduate veterinarians who have completed internships at teaching hospitals.

Yellow leaves indicate plants need more iron

The most common problem showing up in county plants is iron deficiency. The symptoms begin as a yellow leaf with green veins. Some plants, such as pears, willows and maples, progress to completely yellow leaves, then to creamy white leaves with brown to black burned margins and eventually complete death of the leaves.

Kiker

Most people try to correct this problem with sulfate (copperas) or one of the liquid irons, which are usually dilutions of iron sulfate. Iron sulfate will work on turf if applied dry at 10 pounds per 1,000 square feet. The root system of grass reaches only a few inches into the soil and some iron sulfate will reach the roots before it is "tied up" in our high pH soils.

Trees and shrubs do not have as many roots that close to the surface. The majority of their roots will be in the first 18 inches of soil. Some people try putting liquid irons on the foliage, but most give up after a couple of applications and end up with yellow leaves with green spots.

The person who is serious about curing iron deficiency should buy one of the chelated irons, either 138Fe or Ferriplus. These chelated irons have an organic molecule that protects the binding sight so the iron can be taken up by the root when it grows past it or when soil water brings it by. Large trees and shrubs should have the iron placed at the dripline where the feeder roots are located. These irons are hard to mix with water. Avoid throwing in a container of water, it will become lumpy and not mix well. Either make a paste with a little water before diluting or place the iron in a sprinkling can and mix it with hose pressure. These chelated irons are expensive, but they work when other irons will not. Try them and you will not be disappointed.

Scientists investigate methane discharges from cattle

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — While some people think it's a gas, researchers studying bovine belches want everyone to know that's the point: gas.

"It has been estimated that a single cow produces 100 to 200 liters of methane a day," said Brian Lamb, an associate professor at Washington State University's Laboratory for Atmospheric Research.

"That may not sound like much, but multiply that by the estimated 1.2 billion cattle in the world and you begin to get some idea of the magnitude."

Lamb, fellow atmospheric chemist Hal Westberg and Kris Johnson, an animal sciences associate professor, are conducting a three-year, $300,000 study for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to determine how much methane gas enters the atmosphere when cows burp.

This has led to some chortling among colleagues and in the media, but Westberg and Lamb insist their research is important to understanding what causes the Earth-warming greenhouse effect.

Carbon dioxide from burning fossil fuels is thought to be the biggest contributor among gases that trap heat. The concentration of methane in the atmosphere is increasing at about 1 percent a year.

Natural wetlands and rice paddies each produce about 20 percent of the total atmospheric "budget" of the colorless gas. Ruminant, or cud-chewing, animals are thought to produce about 15 percent.

But researchers at Cornell University at Ithaca, N.Y., contend the problem is exaggerated.

Cornell resource economists Duane Chapman and Thomas Drennen said cow methane estimates fail to take into account the effects of biological and chemical cycles.

The net effect of methane gas from cud-chewing animals may be less than 5 percent, said Chapman.

"The present estimates have ignored how livestock recycle carbon," he said. "They don't just emit methane; they also utilize hay and grain, which remove the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide from the atmosphere through the photosynthesis process."

Westberg said he was unfamiliar with Chapman and Drennen's work, scheduled for publication in the fall. But he said the uncertainty among scientists is exactly the reason the studies are needed.

Bacteria in the cow's first stomach, or rumen, break down the feed and produce methane, which the animal exhales when it belches. The process is called enteric fermentation.

During the study's first year, the scientists will rotate cattle through range, feedlot and dairy diets to see how much methane each produces. In subsequent years, the EPA wants to check those results against cattle diets in other countries, Westberg said.

A canvas harness, similar to a horse bridle, is fitted over the cow's head. A stainless steel cylinder is attached that hangs like a cow bell from the animal's neck. Sensors on the harness draw samples from the animal's nose and mouth into the vacuum cylinder, which is then removed and taken to a laboratory for analysis of the gases inside.

The study — which eventually will involve up to 100 cows — is being conducted jointly with the National Center for Atmospheric Research at Boulder, Colo.

"I think it's important that people understand that climatic change is a serious threat and that enteric fermentation is an important part of the global methane budget," Lamb said. "If we're going to understand what effect it all has on our climate, we have to look at each piece, one piece at a time."

The study — "Methane Emissions from Ruminant Livestock" — has been skewered in editorial cartoons and ridiculed by radio talk shows. Pulitzer Prize-winning humor columnist Dave Barry used it. An episode of the "L.A. Law" television series depicted it as an example of government waste.

Westberg and Lamb said they were surprised by the reaction.

"It was a new experience for us," Westberg said. "But as long as we can avoid the circus atmosphere, it doesn't bother us."

"When you first hear about it, it really is funny, and we can understand that," Lamb said. "But the point is, it is a serious part of the climate change problem. Our reaction is, we hope the serious side gets out."

As for those looking for more fodder for fun, forget about flatulence studies.

Lamb said 95 percent of the methane a cow produces comes from the front end.

Poll shows Americans lack food knowledge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost half of all Americans don't know that white bread is made from wheat, but think oatmeal is wheat, according to a Gallup Poll.

These and other findings surprised the Wheat Foods Council, which commissioned the poll.

"We must admit to being perplexed," said Judi Adams, head of the council. "In a society where consumers are blanketed with nutrition information, Americans still know very little about the foods they eat."

Revised government dietary guidelines issued last fall urge consumers to cut fat to 30 percent of total daily calories and increase consumption of grain products and other complex carbohydrates.

The wheat council hired Gallup to learn what it needed to do to help Americans shape their diets around the new guidelines.

The council now has decided it's task is even more basic: teaching the public what a wheat food is and why it's healthy.

The poll found that most people were familiar with the four basic food groups — meat and poultry, dairy products, breads and cereals, and fruits and vegetables.

The groups were identified in 1956 as basic to a healthy diet and people were told to eat equally from among them. But in 1990, the government provided a daily food guide that said Americans should eat more than twice as many foods from the breads and cereals category as any other single category.

Two-thirds of the poll respondents said they did not know about that or any other details of the new guidelines.

When told about the guideline of six to 11 servings of bread, cereal, rice or pasta a day, 19 percent of the respondents said they were very likely to comply; 36 percent said they were somewhat likely, 28 percent not too likely.

Congress seeks to increase public grazing fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ranchers who graze livestock on federal land will be faced with significantly higher costs if a movement in Congress to raise grazing fees is successful.

The House already has acted by attaching a fee-raising amendment to the bill reauthorizing the Bureau of Land Management.

Now, it's the Senate's turn, and Sen. Jim Jeffords, R-Vt., is offering legislation that will do the same, but under a slightly different formula.

Currently, ranchers pay a federal grazing fee of $1.97 per "animal unit month." That is the amount of forage an adult cow or five adult sheep eat in one month — about 800 pounds.

Jeffords' bill would change the formula that determines the fee. It would bring the fee to $4.94 in 1992, increasing to $5.09 in 1995.

About 27,000 ranchers, about 2 percent of the industry, graze their cattle and sheep on nearly 300 million acres of land belonging to either the U.S. Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management in 16 Western states. Most ranchers use private or state-owned land, which is much more expensive.

Although grazing costs are a relatively small percentage of the total cost of raising cattle, Jeffords said "it's not fair that a few producers receive such a big subsidy at the taxpayers' expense."

He said many of the federal permit holders are large corporations and wealthy individuals.

He said that because of the low fees, there's not enough money coming into the Range Betterment Funds, which is used to repair and maintain federal rangeland.

Defensive signalling is a key aspect of what is surely the most difficult facet of bridge. The thoughtful exchange of information between defenders enables them to construct declarer's hand and decide how best to try to defeat the contract. However, in telling partner what you hold, you also are passing information to declarer. In a game of reasonable standard, how much credence should be placed in a defender's signal?

North-South conducted a sensible auction to the only makable game as the cards lay. Had the game been played with transparent cards, declarer would have had no problem coming to nine tricks. What would you do?

West led the suit bid by partner, and declarer held up the ace of hearts until the third round, West discarding the seven of diamonds. With five fast tricks, there were chances of developing the four tricks needed in either minor, as long as West held either the king of clubs or ace of diamonds and declarer picked the suit where East did not have an entry. Would you play a club and finesse, or lead the king of diamonds, and why?

The answer depends on how well you know the player in the West seat. If he is a pillar of society who would never stoop to deception, believe that the seven of diamonds shows the ace and go after that suit. When West wins the ace of diamonds and shifts to a club, don't tempt the fates by taking the club finesse. Shoot up with the ace and cash out your nine tricks.

What if West is the sly sort you usually find hanging around bridge clubs? The nine could be a bluff, or a double bluff—an honest card hoping that you will think it's a bit of duplicity. Mentally toss a coin and go with the result.

Actors Delta Burke, Paul Sorvino to judge Miss America Pageant

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Actors Paul Sorvino and Delta Burke will be two of the judges for the finals Sept. 14 of the Miss America Pageant, officials said Thursday.

Burke, star of television's "Designing Women," will be a judge for the second straight year. She was Miss Florida 1974.

Sorvino has never been a pageant judge. He has acted in the movies, "Goodfellas," "Dick Tracy," and is in "The Rocketeer" as well as the television series, "Law and Order."

The five other judges for the 71st annual pageant have not yet been named.

BURBANK, Calif. — Actor-director Kevin Costner has notched a deal to direct, produce and star in movies for Warner Bros., the company said.

Costner

The 36-year-old star of "Dances with Wolves," "Bull Durham" and "Field of Dreams" already has appeared in several Warner Bros. films, including "Fandango," "American Flyer" and his latest, "Robin Hood: Price of Thieves."

"My association with Warner Bros. has been intensive over the past year-and-a-half," Costner said in a statement.

The deal with Costner and his Tig Productions was announced Wednesday by Terry Semel, Warner's president.

Tig Productions made its debut with "Dances with Wolves," the 1990 film that earned seven Academy Awards, including best director for Costner. Costner formed the production company in 1989 with Jim Wilson.

NEW YORK — Eunice Shriver used to get lots of attention because of her brothers — John, Robert and Ted Kennedy. These days, people are more interested in her son-in-law — the Terminator.

Shriver says in this Sunday's Parade magazine that when she speaks to groups of schoolchildren about mental retardation, the teachers ask about President Kennedy. But the kids ...

"They're all really excited that I'm the mother-in-law of you-know-who," says Shriver, whose daughter, Maria, is married to movie star Arnold Schwarzenegger.

MIDDLESBORO, Ky. — A proposal to name a street Lee Majors Boulevard may have reached a dead end.

"Lee Majors already has a football stadium," City Councilman Laurence Bailey said. "Why should he get a street, too, just because his daddy had a house there?

Naming 20th Street after Majors — a Middlesboro native — would boost tourism and show the town's pride in the star of "The Six Million Dollar Man," said city attorney Charlie Sigmon.

Supporters also say it would encourage Majors to get more involved with the town. It would be "an opportunity to put him on a guilt trip," said Councilman Jim Gandy.

The council couldn't decide Tuesday and sent the proposal back to its author, Mayor Troy Welch, who's away on vacation.

Ullman

Tracey Ullman has given birth to her second child, John Albert Victor, 8 pounds, 13 ounces, was born Tuesday, a spokesman for the comedian and her husband, producer Allan McKeown, said Wednesday. Ullman's first child, Mabel, is 5 years old.

CHICAGO — Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan said Thursday he has signed a multimillion-dollar contract to endorse the sports drink Gatorade.

Jordan, 28, a guard for the 1991 NBA champions, endorsed Coca-Cola until his two-year contract expired at the end of July.

"I think it's a relationship that through my profession is natural because of what I use Gatorade for," Jordan told reporters.

The exact terms of the Jordan contract were not announced. Published reports have put the deal at as much as $18 million.

Jordan said he expected to promote Gatorade until after he retires from the NBA.

STANLEY, N.C. — Producers of the cable television movie "Wildflower," directed by Diane Keaton, came here to shoot 15 minutes of small-town flavor, giving residents a rare glimpse of Hollywood.

Hundreds turned out to watch Wednesday after Keaton and her 70-member crew arrived.

"This is the best thing that's ever happened to Stanley," resident Bill Smith said.

The hype could get bigger Friday when the crew — and star Beau Bridges — visit a church in nearby Mount Holly.

Stanley — population 2,800 — was chosen for its quaint, small-town atmosphere, said location manager Anne McCaffrey.

The movie, due for release in December, is set in 1938. It's about how society then shunned epileptic children.

Keaton won an Academy Award in 1977 for "Annie Hall."

Author delves into cultural differences she sees in life

By Hillel Italie

NEW YORK (AP) — Mexicans wear masks, Octavio Paz once wrote. They protect themselves with politeness and disdain. They speak in metaphors and allusions. They are remote from the world and remote from themselves.

Sandra Cisneros, the free-spirited daughter of a Mexican father and a Mexican-American mother, is trying to change that. She's writing about sex and race, revealing secrets about friends and family, acting like the kid whose leg gets kicked under the dinner table.

"In my culture to remove those masks is considered vulgar, is considered in bad taste," explained Cisneros, author of three books, including the recent "Woman Hollering Creek."

"There's the issue of Latino men and white women; that's a big issue in my culture. I want to explore that. I want to explore issues of fathers and daughters, the whole idea of Mexican princesses, the dynamics of sexuality and how fathers teach us to be the lovers we are.

"The racism in the culture, the way Mexicans view Americans, the way Mexicans view America. I have a unique front-row seat to these issues."

She reads Juan Rulfo and Elena Poniatowska, but rarely American literature. There's no passion in it, no music, and nothing about her culture.

She attended the Iowa Writers Workshop, training ground for Flannery O'Connor and John Irving among others, but she leaves that fact off her official biography.

"I don't want some Chicano writer to see I went there and say, 'Oh, I want to write there.' It wasn't a nurturing place. It didn't encourage diversity of voices," Cisneros said.

"I didn't know what was wrong until they started talking about houses — and I didn't have a house. They were talking about their grandmothers' house and seaside houses and house this and house that and then I realized we were talking about class division."

Born in Chicago in 1954, Cisneros was the only girl among six children. She was often alone and turned to writing.

In 1984, she came out with "The House on Mango Street." Only 110 pages, the book consists of dozens of vignettes about life in Chicago's Hispanic quarter, in a house of crumbling bricks.

"Mango Street" is seen through the eyes of young Esperanza Cordero, the writing as spontaneous and childlike as a notebook of fingerpaintings, full of sad and spiritual confessions.

"Some day I will have a best friend all my own," Esperanza tells herself. "One I can tell my secrets to. One who will understand my jokes without having to explain them. Until then I am a red balloon, a balloon tied to an anchor."

Author Sandra Cisneros poses following an interview in New York last month. Cisneros, author of three books, including the recently-published "Woman Hollering Creek," wants to tear off the masks worn by Mexicans, who protect themselves with politeness and disdain.

'In my culture to remove those masks is considered vulgar, is considered in bad taste.'

— Sandra Cisneros, author

There are warring souls in this book, a fear of entrapment and a fear of leaving. She longs for a house on a hill, but wants bums to sleep in the attic. She vows to say goodbye one day, but only so she can tell stories about the people left behind.

"This book was written during my 20s and it shows an earlier self. It takes the struggles I was going through in my 20s: my ethnic identity, my class identity, my gender identity. All my politics were shaped by those three conflicts," said Cisneros, who also wrote a book of poetry, "My Wicked Wicked Ways."

"Once you have knowledge about something you can't unknow it. It doesn't matter how much money I'm earning. When I walk down the street I'm still looking at the same kinds of people. I'm looking at the brown people. I'm always looking at the brown people, and at home I'm talking in Spanish."

The stories are longer in "Woman Hollering Creek," and the characters have grown up, their wide eyes opened a little too wide.

"There Was a Man, There Was a Woman" tells the story of two lonely people who go to the same bar, but never meet. In "Bien Pretty," the woman's lover walks out on her, just sits down one Sunday morning and tells her, "My life, I have to go."

A woman is beaten by her husband in the title story and eventually runs away, taking their baby son with her. The woman in "Never Marry a Mexican" has learned to trust no one, including herself.

"She's an ugly part of myself," Cisneros said, "a self I could have been but luckily I didn't end up like her. If I'm going to marry anybody at all I'm going to marry a Mexican.

"It's real important to me that I write these stories, that we tell our stories. I don't want other people writing my stories. Very, very few people know us intimately. They haven't cared to know who we are. Very few white women are my friends because they haven't made the effort to know that culture."

"Woman Hollering Creek" is published by Random House and has a suggested retail price of $18.

FAMILY MATTERS

Readiness, realistic goals can be key items to weight-loss

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I've tried to diet for all my life and I just can't seem to ever lose and stay at my ideal weight. I know more about nutrition and what to eat when than most experts, but it doesn't seem to make any difference.

I would give up but I'm tired of wearing "tents" to the swimming pool so my children can swim. Despite what they want, I wouldn't dare wear a bathing suit. I know it's too late for this summer but do you have anything that I could try? TOO FAT

May

DEAR TOO: You obviously know a lot more about dieting than I do, so I will only share a couple of my thoughts with you. One issue to address is whether one is ready to diet or not. Dr. Kelly Brownell of the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine suggests that having the right mind set is necessary before attempting a diet. Try his "Goals, Attitudes, and Readiness" test. For each question cicle the answer that best describes your attitude.

■ Compared to previous attempts, how motivated to lose weight are you this time? 1 - Not motivated at all; 2 - Slightly motivated; 3 - Somewhat motivated; 4- Quite motivated; 5 - Extremely motivated

■ How certain are you that you will stay committed to a weight-loss program for the time it will take to reach your goal? 1 - Not at all certain; 2 - Slightly certain; 3 - Somewhat certain; 4 - Quite certain; 5 - Extremely certain

■ Considering all outside factors at this time in your life — the stress you're feeling at work, your family obligations, etc. — to what extent can you tolerate the effort required to stick to your diet? 1 - Cannot tolerate; 2 - Can tolerate somewhat; 3 - Uncertain; 4 - Can tolerate well; 5 - Can tolerate easily

■ Think honestly about how much weight you hope to lose and how quickly you hope to lose it. Figuring a weight loss of one to two pounds per week, how realistic is your expectation? 1 - Very unrealistic; 2 - Somewhat unrealistic; 3 - Moderately unrealistic; 4 - Somewhat realistic; 5 - Very realistic

■ While dieting, do you fantasize about eating a lot of your favorite foods? 1 - Always; 2 - Frequently; 3 - Occasionally; 4 - Rarely; 5 - Never

■ While dieting, do you feel deprived, angry and/-or upset? 1 - Always; 2 - frequently; 3 - Occasionally; 4 - Rarely; 5 - Never

Add up your scores. If you scored 6 to 16, you may not be ready to start a diet. Inadequate motivation and commitment and unrealistic goals could block your progress. Think about what contributes to your unreadiness and consider changing these factors before undertaking a diet. If you scored 17 to 23, you may be close to being ready to begin a program, but should think about ways to boost your preparedness. If you scored 24 to 30, you are ready to decide how to lose weight in a safe, effective way.

Although this is an important first step in dieting, it is only one aspect. Dr. Brownell's program consists of seven steps: (1) Set reasonable goals; (2) Do a reality check about your expectations; (3) Follow a balanced, low-fat diet; (4) Reshape bad eating habits; (5) Add exercise; (6) Track your progress; and (7) Celebrate your success.

Another aspect of weight gain is grounded in issues associated with not receiving nurturing as a child. If that is an issue with you, I also encourage you to seek professional counseling.

DEAR FAMILY: My step-children are coming back from their summer visit with their mother next week (it's an unusual situation). She lets them run wild without any rules or discipline. When they first come home it is pure h— for at least a month. I get angry every time I think about what I have to go through because she's too lazy to discipline her children. I don't let mine do that so why should she be able to get away with it? What can I do to get her to set rules and discipline her children like she should? FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Nothing. I encourage you to have a meeting with your step-children and your husband as soon as the children come home. Tell the children you understand that different homes have different rules. Review the rules in your home that usually are violated when they first return. Their father should be the one to lead this discussion. Focus on rules in your home without commenting on other homes (I know that will be hard to do).

Children do need time to re-integrate into the custodial home. Try to be sensitive to this process, but firm. Emphasize the behavior that must be changed, not the children or their mother.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Grierson, will be the last guest speaker of the summer lecture series at Fort Davis National Historic Site. Dinges' presentation on "The Life and Times of Grierson and his Family," will be presented 2:30 p.m. Saturday in the Fort's auditorium.

Editor of the Journal of Arizona History and director of publication for the Arizona Historical Society, Dinges has written several articles on Grierson as well as other late 19th century army officers including Second Lieutenant Henry O. Flipper. One of his latest efforts is a biography of Grierson printed in the publication "Soldiers West: Biographies from the Military Frontier."

Dinges received his doctorate in 1978 at Rice University where the subject of his dissertation was the Grierson's Civil War Career. In recent years, Dinges has continued to research Grierson, who was the first Colonel of the Tenth U.S. Cavalry and post commander at Fort Davis from 1882 to 1885.

Dr. Dinges' presentation is free and all area residents and visitors are invited to attend. Following the program, refreshments will be served.

DEAR ABBY

Homeless people are more in need than homeless pets

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You told a woman that if reconciliation with her estranged son is not successful, she and her husband can leave their money to their favorite charity or to their local animal shelter.

Van Buren

A few years ago, I might have said the same thing. But my drive to work takes me through the streets of downtown Los Angeles, where hundreds of men, women and children live, scrounge through trash cans for garbage to eat, and warm themselves by bonfires they light in the street at night. I've seen grown men using the streets for a public restroom, with looks of anguish and great embarrassment on their faces as I drive by.

Given the awesome task of helping such people, it grieves me to think of people with money to give away donating it to animals. The number of children without food, people without jobs and families without homes is growing daily, and it appears that the government isn't going to do much about it at the moment. — FEMALE EXECUTIVE

DEAR EXECUTIVE: Must one make a choice? I would hope the human heart would be big enough to provide ample food and shelter for all God's living creatures. But in a country as wealthy as ours, for people to be scrounging in trash cans for garbage to eat is a national disgrace.

DEAR ABBY: I have decided to end our marriage. The reason for our divorce is my wife's marital indiscretions. We are well known in town, and our family and close friends were utterly shocked when they heard the news.

My problem: I do not want anyone thinking that I have been a less-than-decent, caring husband and father. There was no wrongdoing on my part. My wife, although appearing to be a very decent, moral woman, chose to ignore her vows to "forsake all others," if you get my drift — and I think you do.

I do not wish publicly to slander her, but mutual friends are treating me somewhat coldly because I initiated the divorce.

At the present time, I am not speaking to my wife, which is perceived as being cruel; however, I feel that this is appropriate in light of her indiscretions.

So, should I remain silent and try to ignore my friends' cold shoulders? — MR. X

DEAR MR. X: Whether you want to speak to your wife is your own business, but for you to "let people know" that she violated her marriage vows will make you look like a cad. It is almost impossible to throw dirt on someone without getting a little on yourself.

DEAR ABBY: I have asked many people, but no one seems to have the answer, so I'm asking you!

Of what significance is the "eye" in the upper part of the pyramid on the back of the U.S. $1 bill? My Canadian granddaughter has asked me, but I haven't been able to find the answer for her. — L.B. IN GREAT FALLS, MONT.

DEAR L.B.: I wasn't aware of the "eye" (or the pyramid) on the back of the U.S. dollar bill. (I needed a magnifying glass to find it!)

According to Ron Supinski, manager of media relations for the Federal Reserve Bank in San Francisco, "The unfinished pyramid and the eye go together. The eye represents the eternal eye of a diety. The pyramid is a symbol of material strength and enduring foundation for future growth and a goal of perfection. The pyramid is unfinished because it represents our country's future and our unfinished goals."

CONFIDENTIAL TO TALKED ABOUT IN NEW ORLEANS: Keep your character in mint condition, and your reputation will take care of itself.

Gardening by computer links green thumbs

By George Bria

POUND RIDGE, N.Y. (AP) — Computers blend easily and even sensationally with some hobbies, like, say, chess. What's in it for gardeners?

Farms and market gardens already use computers for some operations, but nobody would expect a gardener to buy one just for help with backyard delphiniums or eggplant. However, if you're already a computer fan and like to garden, chances are you're fitting them together.

Take "bulletin boards." Thousands of gardeners consult one another on computer networks. You "post" a message on the "board," wait a day or two, then hook up again to scan the replies.

If your problem is weeds in the asparagus patch, your screen lights up with a dozen suggestions to mulch heavily with leaves or salt hay — plus other welcome advice on how to raise asparagus. Browsing in a network, you find experienced gardeners discussing intricacies of orchid-raising or beginners asking whether peppers grow underground like potatoes (False) or hang on bushes like tomatoes (True).

To see what gardeners are doing with computers, I posted a query on the bulletin board I belong to, called "Good Earth Forum." It's part of the CompuServe Information Service of Columbus, Ohio, which links subscribers internationally to a vast array of forums and other activities at a basic connect-time charge of 21 cents a minute. Aside from networking among members, forums provide access to "libraries" of stored information. After you get the hang of it, you can pull in an amazing amount of material in just a couple of minutes.

AS EXPECTED, the replies to my query showed that many of us don't scribble garden notes on odd scraps of paper any more, but use our word processors to keep neat, organized journals. Beyond this, some have created databases to streamline and view information in selective ways. I saw that the forum hosts not only expert gardeners but also some computer whizzes. A few had written garden programs good enough to market or to offer free to forum members.

Gardening catalogs have begun marketing software containing information on dazzling numbers of plant varieties. A rose database offered by Greer Gardens of Eugene, Ore., for example, has more than 2,000 different roses, including 400 miniatures. The program lets you select rose by color, scent, foliage date, petal count, idiosyncracies and awards.

Such programs will answer multiple questions. For instance, you can instantly find out which decorative plants do well in partial shade in your climate, identified by ZIP code. Or which vegetables are most nutritious. Or exactly how much fertilizer to use.

BUT DOES ALL this make you feel you're gardening?

David Peyton of Huntington, W.Va., who serves as the forum's gatekeeper, looks forward to the day "when computers get so sophisticated that we can put probes in the garden to measure soil temperature, air temperature, moisture, acidity and available nutrients. When that happens the computer will be able to tell us a lot about when to plant, when to fertilize, when to water and even when to harvest."

But "right now, the computer is primarily an elementary adviser and a record-keeper," he said.

For people whose hobbies include both gardening and computers, however, it also offers entertainment as well as instruction. Linda C. Jones of New York City, for example, hopes somebody will create a "dream program" that would "enable you to lay out a whole plot on the screen, then zoom in on various parts of it."

Bequest beloved garden to loved ones

By George Bria

POUND RIDGE. N.Y. (AP) — Pushing 76, I wonder what will happen to my vegetable garden after I'm gone. I poured much work, time and affection into this garden in the country and got much in return. How soon will it vanish?

Can you leave a garden to somebody? Now, in midsummer, everything looks so solid, a sturdy fence enclosing tall beanpoles, tasseling cornstalks humming with bees. But in reality, is this just a fancy that will pass with me?

My son, who lives in an adjoining house on the same property, has a gorgeous flower garden, a truly arresting perennial collection. He's one of those strange people, however, who can live with store-bought vegetables, unavailing himself of the chance to savor the matchless quality of those grown at home.

With his strong arms, he did much of the work in putting up my latest fence a few years ago. But I sense he feels my exuberant assemblage of foodstuff-in-the-making is an eyesore, spoiling the landscape at the front of the family compound instead of being hidden in back acreage.

I placed the garden there originally because the site enjoys abundant sunlight and also slopes slightly, ideal for drainage. I also wanted to be as close as possible to guard against marauding woodchucks and deer. With time, and the close relationship I developed with my plants, the place acquired beauty too, at least for me. Over the years, I built up a little treasury of lore about these vegetables.

Looking through my south windows, I can see the tall asparagus ferns elegantly dancing in the breeze. Aren't they as handsome as my son's pastel blue delphiniums that he grew from seed? And aren't the tomatoes reddening on the golden salt hay I've spread around them pleasing to the eye?

The oil man and other service men coming up the drive seem to think so. Occasionally, one will stop his truck and say, "That's some garden you've got there."

Living in a Maryland suburb, my daughter grows a few vegetables as well as flowers, and perhaps she could carry on in a distant future when she might move here. But that's very iffy. My wife, who is the same age as I, has always done flowers, leaving vegetables to me.

Walking around in these beautiful Westchester hills 50 miles north of Manhattan, I sometimes see traces of old gardens, an unpruned azalea or rhododendron flowering in the brush, a few solitary asparagus ferns poking up through the weeds of a once-thriving patch. In my imagination, I try to picture the scene as it once may have been in full glory.

Such reveries are romantic silliness, you might say. What is a vegetable garden, after all, but well-worked, patch of earth bursting with life in summertime only to die in the fall? The only perennials it usually contains are asparagus and rhubarb. Except for these, you have to renew your planting year after year.

True enough, but old folks think such thoughts. What will happen to my books, my boat, my guitar? The best part of your life may have gone into such things, even more meaningful than your job or your relationships. Why shouldn't an obit mention, among the list of survivors, "He left his much-loved vegetable garden."

Woman claims record as oldest female skydiver

MENDOTA, Calif. (AP) — An 88-year-old woman who said her husband had "never let me do anything even close to this" is claiming a record as the oldest woman ever to sky dive.

Hazel Stout, of Portland, Ore., parachuted from a plane 10,500 feet over central California on Saturday. If her jump is accepted by the Guinness Book of World Records, it would shatter the mark set by an 80-year-old Briton, Sylvia Brett, in 1986.

"My husband, when he was alive, never let me do anything even close to this," Stout said. "He wouldn't even let me cross the street alone. He's probably turning over in his grave right now."

Parachuting is just the most recent of numerous adventures Stout has tried since her husband died 11 years ago.

In recent years, she's gone ice fishing, broken a foot while body surfing in Hawaii and slid along waterfalls that tumble over granite shelves in New Hampshire.

'My husband, when he was alive, never let me do anything even close to this. He wouldn't even let me cross the street alone. He's probably turning over in his grave right now.'

— Hazel Stout

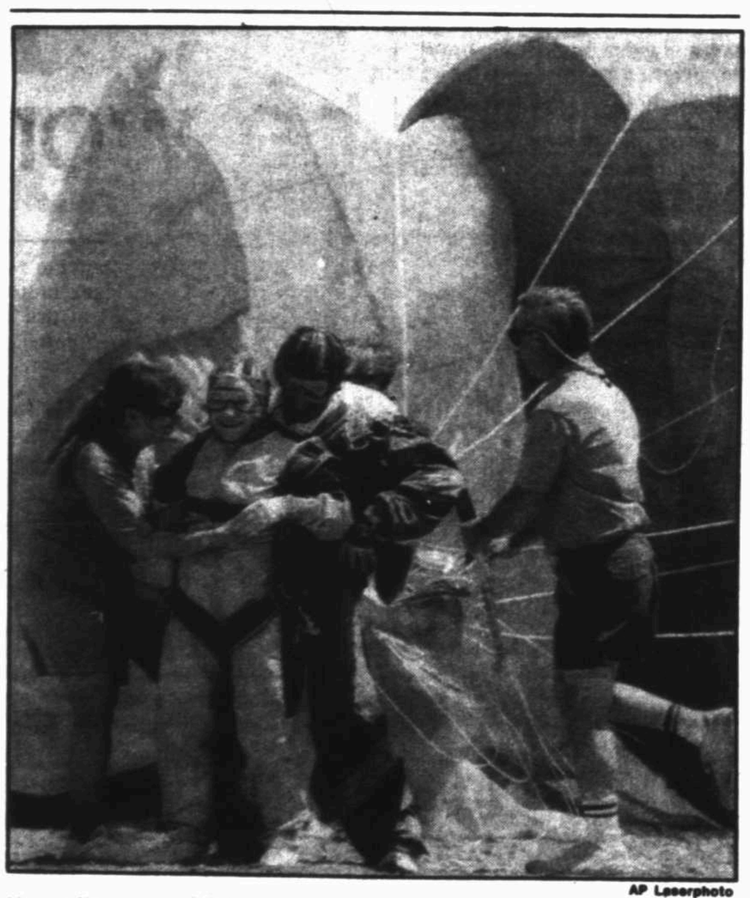
Stout said she wasn't scared before her jump: "I figure when you're 88 years old, how many years have you got to lose?"

Edwin C. Townsend of Vermilion Parish, La., holds the record as the oldest man to parachute from a plane. He was 89 when he accomplished the skydive on Feb. 6, 1986. He died a year later.



AP Laserphoto

Hazel "Portland" Stout is greeted by her granddaughter, Shelly Tarrel, after touching down from a tandem skydive with her grandson, Rick Tarrel, 37, at Mendota Airport. Stout, 88, jumped from 10,500 feet and broke the record for the oldest woman in the world to skydive.

Seniors enjoy bowlers tournament

Associated Press

HONOLULU — For some, it's a chance to get out and see former neighbors. Others say it relieves stress.

It's the Hawaii Roller Bowlers tournament, in which teams from Oahu care homes compete.

"It means an awful lot to me. I haven't been up in this area for a long time," said Connie Botelho, a team member from the Aloha Health Care Center in Windward Oahu. The team recently was bused across the island to Waikiki to meet the Laniolu Good Samaritan Center team.

The league was organized by Kristin Moser of the Aloha center. Players use a rubber bowling ball and hollow plastic pins set at the end of a 15-foot lane.

"Bowling's good exercise, and it gets you out," said Ruth Wrightson of the Aloha team.

Gladys Liho of Laniolu had a simpler explanation: "It's something that gives you a lot of fun."

Of the 98 teams, 22 are from Midland and another seven are from Odessa, but the tournament is far from a local affair.

Teams from every corner of Texas will be in town, as places such as Abilene, Amarillo, El Paso, Killeen, Lubbock, New Braunfels and Wichita Falls will be represented.

Stallings sets another record

CARROLLTON — Stanton's Jeremy Stallings completed his summer track season by setting a senior division state record in the 800-meter run at the 1991 T.A.A.F. Pepsi Games here Aug. 3.

Stallings, who already holds the state record in the 15 and 16-year old intermediate division (1:55.9) ran a 1:54.8 in the 17 and 18-year-old senior division.

He set the intermediate mark at last year's Pepsi Games, also in Carrollton.

Lightning kills another fan

■ For the second time in a major golf tournament, a fan is felled by the forces of nature.

Associated Press

CARMEL, Ind — Lightning killed a spectator at one of golf's major championships for the second time in two months Thursday during a heavy thunderstorm that interrupted the first round of the PGA Championship.

Thomas Weaver, 39, a business executive, town board member in suburban Fishers and father of two, was struck on his left shoulder as he was going to his car in a parking lot, about a mile from the 15th fairway at Crooked Stick Golf Club.

A nurse and five doctors who had been watching the tournament and were in the lot tried to revive Weaver, and the Hamilton County Rescue Squad administered CPR as he was rushed to nearby St. Vincent Carmel Hospital. He arrived there in full cardiac arrest and was pronounced dead when doctors could not establish a sustained heartbeat.

"It's a pretty unfortunate thing," said golfer Ken Green, who was on the course when the storm hit. He remembered the U.S. Open at Chaska, Minn., in June, when one person was killed and five others injured by lightning as they huddled under a tree during a storm delay.

"At the Open it hit me hard," Green said. "It doesn't seem right that someone can come watch us play golf and then someone has to tell his family that he dies."

There were questions at the Open whether storm warnings were adequate to protect the gallery. The warnings Thursday were posted an hour before play was suspended, almost an hour and a half before the lightning struck.

Weaver was 100 yards from the safety of his car when it happened.

Sgt. Tom Gehlhausen of the Hamilton County, Ind., Sheriff's Department closes umbrellas in the aftermath of the storm at Crooked Stick.

Jim Awtrey, executive director of the PGA of America, said the lightning hit Weaver's umbrella. Hospital spokeswoman Lorrie Heber said doctors indicated to her "it was a direct strike."

Awtrey said the lightning also knocked an umbrella out of the hand of an unidentified friend walking next to Weaver, but that man was not hurt.

"There were streaks of lightning all around," said Mary Hayt of West Lafayette, a tourney volunteer who was selling programs near the parking lot. "There were streaks, real shockers, immediately followed by thunder, so you knew it was very close."

Patrolman Don Poorman of the Carmel City Police was directing traffic in front of the parking lot and called for an ambulance after a woman "came running up and said somebody was hit by lightning."

"I didn't see it," Poorman said. "It was in the back of the parking lot, so I would say it probably took a couple of minutes

■ Thursday's storm leaves 27 players stranded on the course, as Kenny Knox and Ian Woosnam are tied for the early lead of the PGA Championship.

Associated Press

CARMEL, Ind. — In an eerie replay of a tragedy two months ago, a spectator was struck and killed by lightning during Thursday's opening round of the PGA when a brief but intense thunderstorm ripped over the lush acres of Crooked Stick.

Knox

And once again a killer storm eventually caused an overnight postponement of first-round play.

Woosnam

Twenty-seven players were stranded on the sodden course by darkness Thursday night and were scheduled to return Friday morning, weather permitting, to complete their first rounds.

At least two, Tom Sieckmann and Larry Mize, had a chance of catching overnight leaders Ian Woosnam and Kenny Knox. Sieckmann was four under par with two holes to play, Mize three under with three to play.

Woosnam, the Welshman who owns the Masters title, and Knox, a chipper journeyman on the American tour, completed their 5-under-par 67s shortly before the storm caused a 1-hour, 46-minute delay.

U.S. goes 1-2 in two events

HAVANA — An American runner inspired by Che Guevara captured a gold as U.S. and Cuban athletes, revving up for a long-delayed clash in the Olympics, savored triumphs against each other in the Pan American Games.

Ana Quirot, Cuba's queen of track, and countrywoman Liliana Allen ran to their second golds, while America's beleaguered track and field team finally celebrated with 1-2 finishes in the men's 800 and hammer throw and a gold in the pole vault.

Americans Ocky Clark and Terril Davis grabbed the gold and silver in the 800, and Jim Driscoll and Jud Logan did the same in the hammer throw. Pat Manson won the pole vault at 18 feet, 1-2 inch.

Clark, who won in 1:46.91, said he got pumped up by a quote from Cuban revolutionary martyr Che Guevara about "the willpower of champions" that he read in an American newspaper a few days ago.

"I could feel we'd been taking a beating," said Clark, 29, of Sanford, Fla. "People say we didn't bring all our best, but we brought some of them."

Glanville's back but he won't be in black

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Jerry Glanville would like his Atlanta Falcons to wear black uniforms against the Houston Oilers. He can't afford it though.

Glanville developed his "man in black" image during four seasons as head coach of the Oilers before he left in a front office dispute prior to last season.

Glanville returns to the Astrodome for the first time today night when the Falcons meet the Oilers in a preseason game 7 p.m. CDT.

"They told me we can't wear black so we'll wear white," Glanville said. "They told me I'd be paying the fine if we wore black. Maybe we'll bring them (black uniforms) along anyway, but we'll wear white."

Glanville plans to eat at his favorite Mexican food restaurant and visit his old neighborhood when he returns Friday. He thinks his reception in the Astrodome Friday night will be mixed.

"I tell everybody that there will be maybe as loud a 'boo' as I got to hear in Cleveland or maybe as loud a 'boo' as I get to hear in Pittsburgh," Glanville said. "And hopefully those boos will get that loud at San Francisco, LA and New Orleans."

The Oilers lost their exhibition opener to San Diego 31-29. The Falcons beat the Los Angeles Rams 38-17.

Glanville said he'd play his starters more this week and that quarterback Chris Miller would likely play three quarters.

The Oilers are trying to piece together a defense that is splintered by injuries and contract holdouts.

Starting linebacker Johnny Meads, end Sean Jones and cornerback Cris Dishman remain holdouts.

Injuries have the defensive line unsettled. Cornerback Richard Johnson has not played in a scrimmage while recovering from arthroscopic knee surgery.

Tackle Jeff Alm is out six to eight weeks with a knee injury. End William Fuller, and tackle Doug Smith and Glenn Montgomery also are hobbled.

Harris signs, 6 still out

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Houston Oiler wide receiver Leonard Harris has agreed to a two-year contract, the player said Thursday, leaving the Oilers with six unsigned players.

Defensive end Sean Jones, linebacker Johnny Meads, cornerback Cris Dishman, running back Lorenzo White and punter Greg Montgomery, all starters, remained contract holdouts along with second round draft pick defensive back Mike Dumas.

"I agreed to Mr. Holovak's demands," Harris told Houston's KRIV-TV. "He didn't want to give me a gig base salary and he didn't want to give me incentives originally.

"But after awhile, I went on and agreed to his terms on the base salary and he gave in to the incentives."

Harris caught 13 passes for 172 yards and three touchdowns last season.

The Oilers also traded a 1992 draft choice to the Philadelphia Eagles for four-year veteran defensive tackle Dick Chapura, 6-3, 277. Chapura was a 10th round pick by the Chicago Bears in 1987. In 45 career games, he has three starts, 50 tackles and six sacks.

Free agent kicker Ian Howfield was invited to camp Thursday, one day after the Oilers brought in two other kickers to challenge Teddy Garcia.

Dallas' Edwards begins to shine

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Second-round draft pick Dixon Edwards, a major disappointment so far, is beginning to make an impact for the Dallas Cowboys.

The outside linebacker from Michigan State had been slowed by a variety of early injuries. But he's healthy now and is starting to catch the attention of the coaching staff.

"He's starting to show some things, showing what we thought he had when we drafted him," coach Jimmy Johnson said. "The concern we had early on was that he wasn't doing a whole lot in practice.

"We see now that it was because of injuries. Now he's getting healthy. We were just disappointed that we weren't able to see him full speed."

Edwards made an impression during one recent practice, recovering a fumble, making an interception and disrupting the offense. Johnson said Edwards was "a blur out there."

"I understand how the coaches feel," Edwards said. "You just bought a Ferrari and you want to go out and run it every once in a while at 100 mph, but the Ferrari won't do it. I'm in the shop all the time."

Edwards knows he has some catching up to do, both in terms of conditioning and learning the defense. He is expected to play most of the second half of Monday night's home exhibition opener against the Los Angeles Raiders.

"You can learn all you want in the classroom, but it doesn't mean a thing if you aren't out on the field doing it," Edwards said. "Once I learn my assignments, the big plays will come."

Second-year man Stan Smagala, locked in a battle with Ray Horton for the starting job at free safety, has also returned to practice after missing a week with a strained thigh.

The coaching staff likes Smagala's speed and aggressiveness, but questions remain after he missed most of his rookie season with a broken arm, then missed the first exhibition game last Saturday against Kansas City.

"When you miss a lot of time, they can start thinking that you're injury prone," Smagala said.

Chicago White Sox' Mike Huff falls in front of New York Yankee catcher Matt Nokes after Huff was hit by a pitch from Jeff Johnson in the 4-1 Sox win.

Sox win third straight

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Alex Fernandez pitched eight strong innings and Frank Thomas drove in two runs with a double and a single Thursday, leading the Chicago White Sox to a 4-1 victory and a three-game sweep of the New York Yankees.

The victory was the fourth straight and 12th in the last 14 games for the White Sox, who pulled within two games of the idle first-place Minnesota Twins in the American League West. The Yankees have lost 10 of their last 12 games.

Fernandez (6-8) held the Yankees to two hits through eight innings, but was relieved by Scott Radinsky after Steve Sax and Don Mattingly opened the Yankees' ninth with singles.

After Mel Hall hit into a double-play, Radinsky gave up an RBI single to Matt Nokes. But Radinsky then got Hensley Meulens to hit into a game-ending forceout, giving him his fourth save of the season.

A crowd of 36,032 gave the White Sox a season record of 2,150,951, breaking the mark of 2,136,988 set in 1984.

American

Brewers 6, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — Greg Vaughn, Paul Molitor and Darryl Hamilton hit solo home runs and Bill Wegman again beat Baltimore, leading the Milwaukee Brewers over the Orioles.

The Brewers won for the fourth time in five games. Cal Ripken hit his 23rd home run and Sam Horn also homered the Orioles, whose 17-34 home record is the worst in the majors.

Tigers 4, Blue Jays 0

TORONTO — Pinch hitter Mark Salas stung Tom Henke with a three-run homer in the 14th inning as the Detroit Tigers beat Toronto, salvaging the finale of a three-game series with the American League East-leading Blue Jays.

Mickey Tettleton also homered as Detroit ended a three-game losing streak and pulled within 5½ games of Toronto. The game took 5 hours, 12 minutes.

Padres down Astros

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Tony Gwynn drove in three runs Thursday night, leading the San Diego Padres past the Houston Astros 5-3.

Gwynn hit a two-run single in the third inning for a 4-0 lead and had another RBI single in the fifth. He leads the National League with 146 hits.

Andy Benes (7-10) gave up two runs on six hits in six innings. He has allowed only three runs in his last 28 innings. Craig Lefferts pitched the ninth for his 17th save in 22 chances.

Ryan Bowen (1-2) got tagged for five runs on seven hits in 4 2-3 innings.

Mets 4, Pirates 3

NEW YORK — Frank Viola allowed six hits over eight innings and Howard Johnson scored one run and drove in two more as the New York Mets beat Pittsburgh.

The victory gave the Mets, who broke a seven-game losing streak behind Dwight Gooden Wednesday night, two wins in their three-game series with the Pirates and drew them within 5½ games of first-place Pittsburgh in the National League East.

Viola (12-8) struck out six and walked one in snapping a personal three-game losing streak. He left after allowing a double to Jay Bell to start the ninth.

The first-place Pirates finished a 14-game road trip at 4-10. The Mets now head into a 10-game road trip to Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburgh.

National

Phillies 11, Cubs 1

PHILADELPHIA — Charlie Hayes drove in a career-high four runs, and Philadelphia extended its longest winning streak in five years to nine games with an 11-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The winning streak is the longest since the Phillies won 10 straight in May 1984. In between, Philadelphia's longest streak was seven games early in the 1986 season.

Hayes, who had been benched for light hitting, singled home a run in the first and hit a three-run double in the fourth to support Danny Cox, who pitched a strong seven innings despite a game left knee.

Dodgers 6, Reds 4

CINCINNATI — Mike Morgan pitched six solid innings and drove in a run as Los Angeles capitalized on Cincinnati's sloppy play.

The Dodgers' third straight victory in the four-game series pushed the Reds 8 1-2 games back in the National League West, matching their biggest deficit of the season.

The three straight wins came after the Dodgers had lost 14 of their last 16 road games.

Giants 8, Braves 1

ATLANTA — John Burkett won his fourth straight decision as the San Francisco Giants roughed up Tom Glavine and the Atlanta Braves.

Burkett (9-5) matched the longest winning streak of his career. He allowed eight hits, struck out five and walked one in eight innings.

Glavine (14-7) gave up four runs on seven hits in five innings. He struck out six but also walked six.

ST. LOUIS — The Montreal at St. Louis game scheduled for Thursday night was rained out in the top of the second inning. No makeup date was announced.

A senseless week for Cincy

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Lou got sued, Dibble got a break, Schottzie died and Eric Davis was told to get out of town.

And the Cincinnati Reds lost all the ground they had made up since the All-Star break.

What a week for the defending World Series champions!

Just when the Reds started to make a move towards first place in the National League West, their world came crashing down. Even opponents are shaking their heads in wonder.

"They're the most exciting third-place team in baseball," Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Tim Belcher said. "We've been in first place since May and we can't get any publicity. We're like tapioca pudding."

The week has been no dessert for the Reds.

It started Saturday night, when manager Lou Piniella went wild over a reversed call. Home plate umpire Gary Darling decided Bill Doran's drive was foul, not a home run, and Piniella released weeks of frustration by kicking dirt on home plate and first base.

That wasn't the worst part. One day later, Piniella tore into Darling, accusing him of showing bias against the Reds in his calls.

Bad, huh? More to come.

The third-place Reds beat the Dodgers 10-6 Monday night to move just 5½ games back, their best position since mid-July. Suddenly, a team that had lost 16 of 24 was starting to feel good about itself.

"We're starting to get the breaks and starting to win," outfielder Glenn Braggs said. "This club feels we can make a run."

Their luck ran out before the homestand ended.

Los Angeles won Game 2 of the four-game series 5-2 to stop Cincinnati's momentum, and word of the problem with the umpires' union got back to Piniella.

"He's going to say I should be fined and suspended," Piniella said of Richie Phillips, the union's counsel and chief. "Fined and suspended for what?

"Because one of his umpires made a mistake? Let's get real. Let's live in the real world. This isn't la-la land."

It became lawsuit city one day later, when Phillips filed a $5 million defamation suit against Piniella for Darling and the union. The unprecedented lawsuit claims Piniella damaged the umpire's reputation by claiming bias.

While the umpires were heading to court, Piniella was meeting with NL president Bill White, who took no public action against the Reds manager. Matter closed, they thought.

White also had another bit of controversial news Wednesday: reliever Rob Dibble would be fined but not suspended for hitting Chicago baserunner Doug Dascenzo with a throw.

While they were mulling that one over, Davis was getting something to mull over: advice from boyhood friend Darryl Strawberry.

"I think he needs a change of scenery, to go somewhere he can feel good about what he accomplishes," Strawberry said.

That's the same advice Davis gave Strawberry in the off-season. Strawberry listened, going from the New York Mets to the Dodgers. Is Davis listening?

"I haven't reached that conclusion," said Davis, who has one year left on his contract. "It's the farthest thing from my mind. I don't want to leave Cincinnati."

Enough news for one night, right?

No.

The Reds lost to Los Angeles for a second straight night 2-0, falling 7½ back. They managed just three hits. And they lost their mascot, Schottzie the St. Bernard, whose death was announced while the Dodgers were rallying to go ahead.

LIGHTNING: Warnings posted on leader board to get the information to us up here."

The PGA said Weaver was struck right at 3 p.m. Carmel police records, however, showed the rescue squad was dispatched at 2:42 p.m.

The lightning struck about 45 minutes after play was suspended at 2:14 p.m. EST. Tournament officials said weather warnings were posted on leaderboards and scoreboards at 1:15 p.m., advising spectators to seek shelter from the approaching storm.

Awtrey said the PGA reviewed its own procedures after the Open and did everything possible to protect the gallery at Crooked Stick.

There were eight roving rules officials in carts with air horns, Awtrey said, in addition to the warnings on the leaderboards.

"While the PGA takes great precautions to warn and protect spectators and participants, lightning is an unavoidable, dangerous occurrence," Awtrey said in a statement.

At a news conference later, he defended the decision not to suspend play at the same time spectators were urged to leave the course.

"We suspend play as closely as we can to still have time to evacuate the players," Awtrey said. "We have posted the warnings for the gallery earlier to allow them time to get to their cars and evacuate the course. ...

"Some people pay attention to it and immediately go home."

Sandy Lyle, who was in a threesome with Green and Dan Forsman, said, "It's one of those things that you are in the wrong place at the wrong time. It's unavoidable, I guess. You can only do so much to protect everyone. It's hard to evacuate 30,000 people at one time."

Green said the golfers were called off the course before any lightning was seen.

"I think they got us off OK," he said. "We walked in because we were not that far away. It's unfortunate. He was obviously doing the right thing in heading home. I think all the players eventually came in. Some didn't get in as quick as they would like."

Awtrey said it was "a very difficult decision" when to suspend play, but said that, too, will be reevaluated.

PGA: Wet course even better for long hitters killed Thomas Weaver, 39, of Fishers, Ind.

(From 1C)

"It is at times like this that we realize there are far more important things in life than golf," PGA executive director Jim Awtrey said.

Weaver's death came less than two months after six spectators were felled and one killed by lightning during the first round of the U.S. Open at Chaska, Minn., on June 13.

Woosnam welcomed the heavy rains that accompanied the violent storm, but the short-hitting Knox did not.

"I like it a bit wet," Woosnam said after his round over the very long but, at the time, relatively dry course.

"I don't need rain," Knox said. "You've got some long-ball hitters out there are going to play good and if it rains, there's par 4s I can't get to."

It didn't just rain, it rained hard — a third of an inch in just 30 minutes.

More rain was forecast Friday, threatening further disruptions in the last of the year's Big Four golf events and playing into the hands of the game's longer hitters.

The Pete Dye-designed course, listed at 7,289 yards, was set up Thursday at 7,281, the longest ever for a major championshp. With the rain, it will only play longer.

"When somebody yells 'Hey, one-putt,' I look up," Knox said. "I'm a great chipper and putter. I can chip and putt with anybody in the world, but I'm not long."

Woosnam is. Despite his 5-foot-4½ stature, the Masters champion is one of the longer hitters in golf. So are Sandy Lyle, Bruce Lietzke, Craig Stadler and Tom Purtzer, Ray Floyd and John Daly and all were among the leaders.

Lyle, a former Masters and British Open champion from Scotland, Lietzke and Stadler were tied with Ken Green at 68.

Floyd, who counts two PGA titles among his four major championships, was tied at 69 with Purtzer, Daly, Jim Hallet, Andrew Magee and Billy Ray Brown.

Jack Nicklaus and Greg Norman also were 3-under until the 18th hole jumped up and grabbed them.

Nicklaus hit into the water, took a double bogey and shot 71. Norman got away with a bogey and a 70, placing him in a large group that also included Nick Faldo.

Woosnam and Knox played before the course grew teeth in the rain and found it at its most forgiving.

"Definitely two shots easier than yesterday" in practice rounds, Woosnam said. "Some of the tees were up and that made it just that much easier."

He missed only one green on the front, played that side in 35 and then found his putting touch on the back.

He birdied the 11th hole from eight feet, the 13th from 20 and the 14th and 16th from about 15.

Two critical saves from bunkers, on the 15th and 17th, got him in with a share of the lead.

Woosnam played in a threesome with the other holders of major 1991 titles, U.S. Open champ Payne Stewart and British Open winner Ian Baker-Finch of Australia. The latter two shot 74.

Knox, winner of three titles in a 10-year career on the American tour, centered his effort on a pair of pitch-in eagles and his customary putting heroics.

He holed a 45-yard sand wedge for an eagle-3 on the ninth to get back to even par for the day, then watched a 168-yard 5-iron shot "trickle in the hole like a putt" for eagle-2 on the 12th.

Knox also one-putted the last four holes, three for birdies, and needed only 10 putts over the last 10 holes.

"My chances of winning are pretty shaky," he said. "I'd love to stay in the red numbers, but the guys out there are not worried about Kenny Knox."

Pate played in a threesome with Tim Simpson and Tom Kite, the men most closely involved in the chase for the final spot on the American Ryder Cup team.

Coming into this event, the last qualifying tournament for places on that team, Simpson was 10th, Pate 11th and Kite 12th on the list from which 10 players will be chosen.

Colt LB clean and sober

Associated Press

Linebacker Quintus McDonald says he's playing football free of drugs and alcohol for the first time since his junior year in high school.

"I'm an alcoholic and an addict. I no longer have qualms about saying that," McDonald said. "I live my life day to day, and my main goals are just staying clean and sober. The rest will take care of itself."

The 6-foot-3 McDonald, a sixth-round draft pick, is starting his third year with the Colts after playing at Penn State.

His admission at training camp cleared up a mystery that has lingered since he spent five weeks on the non-football injury-illness list at midseason last year. The club wouldn't discuss the situation, and McDonald declined to talk about it when he returned.

Now McDonald says being open and honest about his problems makes them easier to handle.

"This is a whole new thing for me, and I'm excited to see what the results will be," he said. "Alcoholism and addiction is strong in my family background."

McDonald, the nation's top-rated high school player coming out of Montclair, N.J., High School, said he didn't know how good he could be because his mind was too foggy from substance abuse.

"I was the party animal," he said. "I'd always been that way. But now I'm going to be the football animal."

In accordance with NFL regulations, McDonald undergoes random and frequent drug testing.

McDonald has been impressive in training camp and gave a strong performance in the club's opening exhibition game at Denver last week. He's playing at a sleek 252 pounds and subbing for the injured Duane Bickett at right outside linebacker. Last year, his weight ballooned to 270.

Dolphins

Dan Marino will miss the battle of Florida on Saturday.

Coach Don Shula said Thursday he wants to get a look at backup quarterbacks Scott Mitchell and Scott Secules, who are battling for the No. 2 job, and thus Marino won't play against Tampa Bay.

Marino's rest comes at a time the offensive line has been depleted by injury, including a knee injury to Pro Bowl tackle Richmond Webb that will keep him out for three weeks.

On Wednesday, left guard Keith Sims severely sprained his left wrist. Sims missed practice Thursday but is expected to start Saturday with a protective wrap around the wrist.

Jeff Dellenbach, slated to be the starting center, will shift over to left tackle and Bert Weidner, usually the right guard, will play center. Rookie Gene Williams will go to right guard.

"This was the time we felt we should give him some time off and give the other two guys a chance to play," Shula said. "The Webb injury didn't enter into that decision."

Shula said that he had planned all along to keep Marino out of one of the five exhibitions. Marino, one of the NFL's most durable quarterbacks, sat out one game in each of the last two years.

Shula also said first-round draft pick Randal Hill, who signed early this week, may return kicks Saturday.

Chiefs

Steve DeBerg, Kansas City's starting quarterback, said Steve Pelluer walked out of the Chiefs training camp because he lost interest in the game.

"As far as Steve was concerned, he just kind of lost his desire for the game," DeBerg said. "He was forcing himself to do it. He couldn't convince himself to do it just for the money."

Pelluer, the backup to DeBerg, walked out Wednesday after meeting with coach Marty Schottenheimer.

"If your heart's not in it, it's a pretty tough deal," DeBerg said. "Maybe the desire will come back, the hunger will come back. Right now, he's kind of frustrated with the game of football."

Giants

Joe Morris, the New York Giants' leading career rusher, showed good form against his former teammates for the Cleveland Browns in a scrimmage Wednesday.

The 5-foot-7 running back darted through the line, made a cut and was quickly into the end zone from about 15 yards out. He also showed speed on sweeps and was a well-used outlet receiver.

The teams are practicing this week at Lakeland Community College before meeting in an exhibition game Saturday night at Cleveland Stadium.

Morris, 30, missed 1989 with a broken foot, then was cut at the end of training camp last season.

Oilers

The Houston Oilers have brought Raul Allegre and Jim Power into training camp for a tryout to compete with Teddy Garcia, who missed two extra points in Houston's 31-29 loss to San Diego in last weekend's exhibition game.

"When you miss two extra points, you have to be somewhat concerned," Oilers coach Jack Pardee said. "Allegre has NFL experience, but he's had some injury problems."

Allegre, an eight-year NFL veteran who also has played for the Colts, began the 1990 season with the New York Giants.

Baugh seeks first LPGA win in 17 years

Associated Press

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. — Laura Baugh, seeking her first victory in 17 years on the LPGA tour before she leaves to have her fourth child, tied for the first-round lead Thursday in the $450,000 Stratton Mountain Classic.

Baugh and last week's winner, Deb Richard, matched strokes in the same threesome for 4-under-par 68s, and Rosie Jones came in moments later with the same score.

All three thought they could have done better under the sun on the 6,219-yard course that played much tougher in the rain last year.

Baugh, putting herself into birdie position all day with an accurate 6-iron, sank a 30-35 footer on her second hole and followed with other birdie putts of 4, 15, 8, 4 and 10 feet. But she missed five other putts from eight feet and a two-footer, and a putt from 15 feet went in and out.

"It could have been real scary," she said.

Richard, on her best roll in six years on the tour with two victories and $317,655 in earnings, also felt she "left a lot of birdies out there."

"I think there's some low numbers out on the golf course," she said.

Jones echoed those sentiments.

"I'm not real happy with 68," she said. "If I would have made the four-footers, I would have been 7-under.

"I feel great. I'm just missing them."

Two of her misses were on makeable putts on Nos. 15 and 16 when she was troubled by a photographer with a loud camera who was in line with her putts.

"He wasn't doing anything different than any other photographer. He waited until after I putted. He was just there," she said. "It rattled me.

"I was having a great day in the park until he got there.

"I just wish he had been with Laura," she laughed.

In contrast, Baugh, whose play has never matched the publicity she received when she was the 1973 rookie of the year, didn't seem bothered by anything.

When she made bogey on No. 17, her eighth hole of the day, with a poor chip, she came back with two pars and a birdie.

And when she hit the bunker on No. 7 and made her other bogey, she followed with a birdie.

"I'm trying to have fun," said Baugh, who is about three months pregnant and has husband Bobby Cole as her caddy. "This could be my last event of the 1991 season.

"My doctor says I'm not supposed to have any stress, and I try, but when you have those 3- and 4-footers, you're grinding pretty hard, whether you're pregnant or not."

She played only one tournament during two pregnancies, and played little before her third birth in April 1990, but her husband convinced her not to leave this season on a low note. She missed the cut twice and took a month off in the past six weeks.

"It would be lovely" to win her first tournament this week, she said. "Otherwise, I'll just try again the next time."

Lurking one stroke behind the leaders was Pat Bradley, the tour's leading money winner, and Nancy Scranton, a seven-year veteran without a victory but with two six-place finishes this season.

Mitzi Edge was alone at 70.

Second-year pro Melissa McNamara made a run at the top with an eagle on No. 3, the most difficult hole on the course, and with birdies on Nos. 2 and 4 to go 4-under. But she fell back with bogeys on Nos. 6 and 7 and finished with 12 others in a group at 71. One of them was defending champion Cathy Gerring.

Girls soccer team competes at clinic

Staff Report

STILLWATER, Okla. — Members of the Midland-Odessa Girls Olympic Development Soccer team took part in a sub-regional ODP clinic July 25-28 on the cammpus at Oklahoma State University, where under-14 state olympic teams from Oklahoma and Tennesse, as well as district teams from Lubbock, North Texas, NTX-Arlington and South Texas gathered.

Midland-Odessa fell 2-0 to both Tennessee State and Oklahoma State, lost 2-1 to North Texas-Arlington, and battled to a 2-2 tie with the South Texas District team.

Participating members of the Midland-Odessa team — which is trained by Jay Caippas, Chad Peterson, Amy Hubbard and Deegan Donnelly — are Linda Castillejos, Jennifer Fontenot, Christi Johnson, Lesley Keel, Jacque Ketter, Robyn Malick, Rebekah Nix, Lindy Penick, Jamie Rhoads, Tina Richardson, Rochelle Roberts, Larissa Sellars, Valli Shumake, Nikki Smetzer and Kristen Underwood.

Capriati edges closer to match against Sabatini

TORONTO (AP) — Jennifer Capriati of the United States took a comfortable step towards her next big test, then admitted it's a test she's been preparing for for some time.

Capriati, the third seed, beat unseeded Sara Gomer of England 6-2, 6-3 in the third round of the $600,000 Player's Ltd. Challenge women's tennis tournament on Thursday, moving within one victory of a semifinal metting with Gabriela Sabatini, the top seed and one of the few top players Capriati has yet to beat.

Capriati, 0-6 against Sabatini, says she and assistant coach Tom Gullikson have been working on counteracting the Argentinian's game, particularly her top-spin shots.

"I don't really play that well against Gaby's style of game," said Capriati. "But I've improved on my topspin. Tom has been working with me a lot on that — he hits topspin to me a lot, and he hits it pretty good."

Capriati, 15, will have to get past ninth-seeded Natalia Zvereva — a 7-6 (7-2), 6-0 winner over American Jolene Watanabe on Thursday — to reach the semifinal showdown, while Sabatini will need her 10th straight win over Czechoslovakia's Helena Sukova.

Zvereva earned her quarterfinal berth with a 7-6 (7-2), 6-0 triumph over American Jolene Watanabe.

The other half of the quarterfinals field could provide a tennis rarity, with sisters Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere and Katerina Maleeva one victory apiece away from a semifinal meeting.

Katerina, seeded fourth, downed No. 12 Naoko Sawamatsu of Japan, 6-1, 6-3, after which Manuela, seeded second, beat No. 16 Regina Rajchrtova of Czechoslovakia, 6-1, 6-2.

Maleeva-Fragniere, of Switzerland, will play eighth-seeded American Amy Frazier. Katerina, of Bulgaria, takes on 10th-seed Laura Gildemeister of Peru.

Gildemeister upset fifth-seed Nathalie Tauziat of France 6-3, 4-6, 6-4 on Thursday night.

Despite the fact they are still a round away, the semifinals seemed to have already captured the imagination of some key participants.

The Maleeva sisters, especially Manuela, seemed excited about the prospect of meeting on court.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed lower today after the latest in a series of unsuccessful runs at a record high.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 10 points at midmorning, was off 16.55 at 3,010.06 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Losers slightly outnumbered gainers in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 691 up, 716 down and 590 unchanged.

Traders have shied away from stocks several times in recent days as the Dow Jones industrial average approached the closing high of 3,035.33 it reached on June 3.

But analysts said positive feelings persisted about the Federal Reserve's move early this week to relax its credit policy further.

The Fed's action appears to have helped promote a warm response to a record $38 billion offering of bonds and notes by the Treasury this week.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .72 to 213.08. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .95 at 366.38.

Volume on the Big Board came to 121.31 million shares with two hours to go.

Goody's dead

NEW YORK — Sam Goody, a toy-store owner who turned a hugely profitable sideline — selling scratchy, breakable 78-rpm records — into one of the world's largest record stores, died Thursday at St. John's Hospital in Far Rockaway, Queens. He was 87.

Goody's record business boomed in the years after World War II, when long-playing records were just catching on, and audiophiles were switching from shellac 10-inch disks to non-breakable 12-inch ones. /9C

Checks link BCCI, smuggling

Brother of BCCI branch manager faces smuggling charge

Economist ties Texas banks to BCCI

NEW YORK (AP) — Evidence surfaced Thursday of unusual cash transactions between two Texas banks in the 1970s — one owned by key figures in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International scandal.

Main Bank of Houston, a small community bank with about $58 million in deposits, was buying $10.4 million per month in new $100 bills between October 1978 and December 1979, said James S. Henry, a former McKinsey & Co. economist.

At the time, one of Main Bank's owners was Khaled bin Mahfouz, who owned 20 percent of BCCI in 1988.

Henry, now a New York-based author, said he discovered the transactions in Federal Reserve Board data in 1980 while researching Fed currency flows.

An investigator said the heavy flow of $100 bills was quite unusual.

"I'm just surprised there would be that many cash transactions in a bank of that size," said Larry Hearn, an assistant examiner for the Texas State Banking Commission in Austin.

On Main's board of directors was former Texas Gov. John Connally, who bought the bank in 1978 with Texas banker Fredrick Erck, bin Mahfouz and Ghaith Pharaon. Regulators say Pharoan was a BCCI front man in the United States and a key figure in the MIAMI (AP) — Postdated checks from top U.S. coffee roasters helped finance an alleged coffee-smuggling scheme linked to the scandal-plagued Bank of Credit and Commerce International, according to BCCI documents filed in a lawsuit.

The checks from Chock Full O' Nuts Corp., Chase & Sanborn, and the now-inactive James W. Phyfe & Co. were dated a month or more in advance and made out to Munther Bilbeisi, who is accused of smuggling.

Bilbeisi, whose brother runs BCCI's branch in Jordan, used the checks as collateral with BCCI to buy Central American coffee for sale in Jordan or Syria in 1985, according to the documents.

That coffee, which cost only a third the price set by treaty for legal U.S.-bound shipments, was then smuggled past customs in Miami and New Orleans and illegally sold to U.S. roasters, according to a racketeering lawsuit filed here last year against Bilbeisi by Lloyd's of London.

His attorney, Arthur Koski, has denied his client took any illegal acts during his coffee imports.

Arthur Berman, president of Chock Full O' Nuts when the checks were issued in May and June 1985, and earlier head of Chase & Sanborn, received $160,000 from Bilbeisi, according to the lawsuit, which names Berman as a co-defendant.

Martin promises to shatter firms' 'glass ceilings'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor Secretary Lynn Martin promised Thursday to help American corporations shatter the "glass ceiling" that keeps minorities and women from advancing.

Martin pledged to use her position as a "bully pulpit ... to encourage every corporation to develop its own strategy" for promoting women and minorities.

The action came after a Labor Department review of nine Fortune 500 companies revealed widespread barriers to promotion.

The review of the nine large companies, which were not identified, "gives us clear signs that the progress of minorities and women in corporate America is being affected by more than just qualifications and career choices," Martin said at a news conference.

The report stressed that none of the companies was guilty of discrimination, but said all engaged in practices that, intentionally or unintentionally, prevented women and minorities from advancing into middle and upper level management.

The companies were selected randomly by computer from among businesses that received federal contracts. The companies offered a wide range of products and services, were geographically diverse and had work forces ranging from 8,000 employees to 300,000 employees.

"All of the companies reviewed had a level beyond which few minorities and women had either advanced or been recruited, and minorities tended to be found at lower levels of management than women," the report said. "To put it plainly, the glass ceiling existed at a much lower level than first thought."

A survey of large companies last year by the consulting firm, Korn-Ferry International, and the University of California-Los Angeles found that women represented 37 percent of the work force and minorities 16 percent.

However, only 7 percent of the executive-level managers were women and only 3 percent were minorities.

Among the practices identified by the Labor Department as contributing to the bias were reliance on word-of-mouth recruiting rather than on more formal methods that include women and minorities, the lack of access for women and minorities to management development and training programs, and the lack of involvement by top managers in fostering advancement of women and minorities.

The nine companies reviewed either have signed or will sign agreements promising to improve their practices.

The Hotel Cactus in San Angelo, built in 1929 as a Hilton, will be auctioned off with its contents August 22-24.

Hotel Cactus is up for sale

By Rick Smith
Associated Press writer

SAN ANGELO — Buyers will have a chance to purchase tiny — or enormous — pieces of San Angelo history when the Hotel Cactus and its contents go on the auction block later this month.

What's left of the once-stately hotel's furnishings — items ranging from chandeliers, paintings and furniture to an ancient telephone switchboard — will be sold between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Aug. 24.

The building's restaurant and kitchen equipment — including everything from corkscrews to huge freezers — will be sold between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. Aug. 23.

The 14-story building and three-story parking garage will be offered for sale at 1 p.m. Aug. 22.

Auctioneer Lane Bates, whose Greater Western Auction Co. will conduct the sale, said he is selling the structures and contents for B.W. Alpha, Inc.

The family-owned San Angelo corporation bought the building from Baptist Memorials Geriatric Center in 1983 and completed a substantial amount of renovation before declaring bankruptcy in 1986.

Auctioneer Bates said he could not comment on how much the building and parking garage might bring in the auction.

Bates estimated that the furnishings could sell for as much as $100,000.

Oil giants' earnings rise, fall

Associated Press

British Petroleum said Thursday that second-quarter profits rose about 8 percent because of higher oil prices, while Royal Dutch Shell Group of Companies said earnings fell 5 percent due to lower North American earnings.

BP: BP reported second-quarter net income of 313 million pounds sterling, or $515 million, compared with earnings of 284 pounds for the same period a year earlier. The earnings came on revenues of 7.7 billion pounds for the 1991 quarter and 7.6 billion pounds for the 1990 quarter.

The British company said in a statement that its results benefited from more stable worldwide oil prices and an after-tax gain of $150 million on the sale of its interest in the Gothenburg Refinery in Sweden.

The company said a jump in crude oil prices played a major role in the improvement from second-quarter 1990.

Per-barrel prices for North Sea Brent crude averaged $18.80 in the second quarter of this year, compared with $15.95 a year earlier. Average per-barrel prices for Alaska North Slope crude were $17.30 this year, compared with $15.96 a year ago.

For the first six months of 1991, BP said it earned 834 million pounds, or $1.51 billion, compared with earnings of 645 million pounds for the same period of 1990. The earnings came on revenues of 15.9 billion pounds for the 1991 period, compared with 15.3 billion pounds for the 1990 period.

Royal Dutch Shell: The British-Dutch company, with headquarters in London and the Hague, Netherlands, reported second-quarter earnings of 533 million pounds, or $910 million, compared with earnings of 563 million pounds in 1990's second quarter. The profits came on revenues of 17.8 billion pounds for the 1990 period, compared with revenues of 16.9 billion pounds a year earlier.

For the first six months of 1991, Shell reported earnings of 1.38 billion pounds, on revenues of 36.0 billion pounds, virtually the same as the earnings a year earlier, which came on revenues of 34.9 billion pounds.

Both BP and Shell said they based their pounds-to-dollars exchange rate on average exchange rates for the reporting periods.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Short-term bonds seldom fluctuate wildly

By Bill Doyle

Q. I am retired on a small pension and Social Security benefits. I have a $35,000 certificate of deposit paying 8 percent interest and due to mature in 1994.

Recently, I closed a $15,000 money market deposit account and put that money in a mutual fund holding short-term bonds and yielding 9 percent. I was informed this fund is more conservative as to risk than most other mutual funds. On this basis, I plan to close my other money market account and invest the $20,000 I now have there in the short-term bond mutual fund.

Doyle

Do you feel the fluctuation in price of this fund's shares will continue in the same conservative amounts of the past few months?

A. With the caveat that no one can predict, for sure, future prices of individual securities and/or the overall market, my feeling is the share value of that type of fund will fluctuate narrowly. Although it carries some risk, it's unlikely that fund will cause you to lose sleep nights because of wild price swings.

Think it through and you'll realize why. Short-term bonds — those due to mature in one to five years — seldom fluctuate widely in price. Each bond will be paid off at its face value on its maturity date, unless it defaults. So, as its maturity date draws closer, a bond's price in the marketplace approaches its face value.

The share price of a mutual fund reflects the ups and down of the securities the fund holds in its investment portfolio. It stands to reason the share value of a fund holding short-term bonds should not gyrate.

Note I wrote "should not." You can't be sure they "will not." As the Securities and Exchange Commission insists and every mutual fund makes clear, "Past performance is no guarantee of future results." Nonetheless, your chances of making a big investment mistake with that fund are small.

Q. Is there any report I can obtain to help determine when it is time to close out a mutual fund account?

A. There are multitudes of newsletters, magazines and advisory services offering that kind of advice. Before subscribing to any, go to a public library and read whatever advice is available there.

Anyone who could accurately predict the right times to buy and redeem mutual fund shares would get awfully rich, awfully fast and wouldn't have to write for a living.

Q. I have $50,000 from a certificate of deposit that expired recently and will have $16,000 more from two CDs that expire soon. Since interest rates have dropped, is there any place else I can get more interest? I need the money as income. I have been approached to invest in an equity mutual fund. I am 71 and retired.

A. If you truly need income, stay away from equity mutual funds. As the word indicates, an "equity" mutual fund holds common stocks as investments. As a general rule, common stocks pay relatively low dividends.

Slacker generation: too hip, too jaded to work

By Shann Nix

c. 1991 New York Times

Overheard in a coffee house, black-leather-clad girl to black-leather-clad guy:

"You better get down there. They have jobs for women and men."

Leather-clad guy: "Really, women and men?" He stops to consider. "But I don't WANT a job."

And neither do many of his compatriots. The labor force participation rate for teenagers and young adults this year is down 4.2 percent from an all-time high of 57.9 percent in 1979, says the U.S. Department of Labor. That's not the employment rate — that's young people who are even considering looking for work.

They may be bright, they may be hip, they may even have finished four years of college. But the kids are not working.

Call them slackers.

With an insouciant grace that's the despair of the adults who want them to settle down, to lock in and start doing something productive, slackers drift from bus station to newsstand to used-record store to nightclub, floating in a liminal gray zone between academia and the real world.

They're the ones who pack the coffee houses all day every day, who ponder the meaning of life leaning against street signs, who blow froth from their lattes onto their copies of "Crime and Punishment" and sit all day writing in cloth-bound blank books.

Slackers drift from job to job and relationship to relationship like Post-it notes that have lost their stickum.

Slackers favor low-overhead lifestyles and support their caffeine habits in a variety of ways — parental dole, student loans, working a few nights a week at a restaurant. A true slacker can tell you exactly how many months he has worked in the past two years — and it won't be many.

Many of them were pointed down the track toward purposeful employment until they got disillusioned. Now they hang out.

"I definitely hang out," says Brandon Saltz, 24, of El Cerrito, Calif. "I was going to be a lawyer. I liked the philosophy of law.

"But when I started interning, I didn't like the money orientation. I just didn't like what I saw."

Not only are the slackers becoming more visible as a subculture, they now also have their own movie, titled "Slackers."

Written and directed by Richard Linklater, a 29-year-old fledgling film maker who describes himself as "a slacker who finally figured out what he wanted to do," the movie follows the aimless ones as they ramble around Austin, Texas.

Linklater defines a slacker as "someone who is not doing what society instructed them to do. They're somewhere between education and a real job, left in the margins by their own choice. Slack time could last a summer, or it could be a couple of decades. It's a de-programming time."

Young people have always dropped out to try to "find themselves," that amorphous cliche handily thrown up as a revetment against the parental guilt attack.

But Neil Howe, co-author of "Generations: The History of America's Future 1584 to 2069," sees a difference in the slackers of today and the beatniks or hippies that went before them.

"The beatniks were a vanguard who stepped out to break the conformity of that age," says Howe. "Today there's no conformity to break — this generation is all over the place, without any social or cultural norms of any kind.

"And the slackers are different than the hippies, too — there's not the idealism, not the sense of changing the world or the culture."

Samuel Halperin, director of the William T. Grant Commission on Work, Family and Citizenship in Washington, says necessity plays a part in the slackers' grand repudiation of the working world.

"The status quo doesn't offer them a heck of a lot," says Halperin. "Most young people today get the message that 'we don't really need you.'

"These kids have gone through high school and college, and what's out there? MBAs are a dime a dozen, corporations aren't hiring. Our society says we need broadly educated humanity students, but we don't know what to do with them.

"So what are the rewards for not being a slacker? I can almost see their point."

Sound depressing? It may not be all bad — Linklater says he sees some hope in the slacker phenomenon.

"It's an idle time, a world of ideas," he says. "It might be naive but it's open-ended, people thinking and educating themselves. They see things in big perspectives."

It worked for Jane Hopper, 25, who's hanging out in San Francisco for the moment.

"It's good to take time out," she says. "It took me a whole year of doing nothing before I could even start to think properly. I have a kind of knowledge I would never have had if I hadn't done this, a whole new way of seeing things."

Hopper once planned to become an architect. "But there was just no integrity to it," she said. "It was all business and money. So now I just travel from coffee shop to coffee shop."

So do the characters in Linklater's movie, which appropriately enough lacks any plot or narrative structure, but is packed with such classic slacker lines as: " 'Sorry I'm late.' 'That's OK, time doesn't exist.' "

The slackers have an outlook as faded as a good pair of jeans. They've seen too many videos, watched too many TV shows, soaked up too much information. They are jaded before they begin.

"I think a lot of people my age today have been exposed to too many things, without having done any of them," says Saltz.

"Any time I start something, I feel like I already know the underside of it, I know how it will turn out. At 22 or 23, we're world-weary."

Slackers drift from job to job and relationship to relationship like Post-it notes that have lost their stickum. Saltz reports that he has worked in a publishing house, a record store, a bookstore and as a tutor and a manual laborer.

Halperin speculates that this "unstuck" quality may be a result of the poor economic outlook for young people.

"This is the first generation that will not be economically as well off as their parents," he says. "That has got to have an impact on what people think of themselves and work.

"This used to be a land of opportunity. But there just aren't any values strong enough to hold people into the system anymore."

BCCI: Postdated checks establish link to BCCI

(From 8C)

Berman, now retired from the coffee business, denied in an affidavit that the money from Bilbeisi was a kickback for buying smuggled coffee. He said it was a loan he used to support "a young lady" and to pay off gambling debts. Chock Full O' Nuts and Chase & Sanborn have declined to answer questions from The Associated Press about Berman or whether they were aware their companies had financed or bought smuggled coffee. Phyfe owner Abba Bayer acknowledged that use of postdated checks was unusual, but denied knowing Bilbeisi was a smuggler.

The BCCI-Bilbeisi case is the subject of a federal grand jury probe in Miami, but U.S. attorney's office spokeswoman Diane Cossin said she could not confirm whether the postdated checks are part of the investigation. Bilbeisi is now a fugitive in Jordan from separate U.S. tax evasion charges linked to the coffee scheme.

Bankers, importers and financial analysts question why reputable roasters would have given Bilbeisi postdated checks, which ranged from $150,000 to $750,000, to underwrite the coffee shipments. Most spoke on condition of anonymity because their companies did business with the roasters or did not want to be identified with BCCI.

"These were not kosher deals," said a coffee analyst for one of the world's largest brokerages. "That's not the way you do business."

A New York banker said normally a roaster would have given Bilbeisi a signed purchase contract for use as collateral at the bank — but that would require proof the shipments were legal.

Arthur Stevenson, a coffee analyst for Prudential Securities Inc., said while use of postdated checks was odd, the biggest question was why the roasters would be involved with coffee shipments that could not legally be imported into the United States.

"It could be considered unusual, but just because something is unusual does not mean its unlawful," Stevenson cautioned. "That's something the judicial system will have to determine."

Bob Mitchell, a spokesman for New York-based Chock Full O' Nuts, said questions about the checks had been passed on to management, but there was no response.

Susan Isphording, San Francisco spokeswoman for Nestle Beverage Co., which now owns Chase & Sanborn, said that company's only immediate response was to note it bought the roaster some months after the checks were issued.

Phyfe's Bayer called Bilbeisi "a creep among creeps" — but denied knowing the coffee he sold was contraband.

"It had all the proper markings on it and it was in a regular warehouse," said Bayer. "We later found out it was sleight of hand."

He agreed that issuing postdated checks to Bilbeisi — instead of a normal signed contract — to finance the coffee was unusual, but said Bilbeisi somehow talked him into it.

"He was very slick, very persuasive," said Bayer. "He could convince you it was snowing in your own room."

In the end, Bayer said, Bilbeisi cheated him out of 17,000 bags of coffee by selling it to Chock Full O' Nuts, a case that Phyfe eventually won in arbitration.

Regulators in Texas said they couldn't recall whether Main was cited for wrongdoing. The U.S. partners involved in the Main Bank takeover told The Houston Post last week they had no dealings with BCCI at the time they held Main Bank's stock.

Main Bank, with total assets of $72.8 million in 1979, didn't attract attention because it had enough money to cover any unexpected losses, Hearn said.

Art Tribble, vice president for supervision and regulation of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank, said examinations concerning possible violations by Main Bank of a federal money laundering statute wouldn't be made public.

A Fed spokeswoman in Dallas said information about Main Bank and the $100 bill transactions could not be obtained immediately.

The BCCI scandal erupted July 5, when the United States and seven other countries shut down the bank's operations and froze its assets.

Since then, BCCI and two longtime top officers have been indicted in New York on bribery and fraud charges. The Federal Reserve Board has moved to impose a $200 million fine on BCCI, and the bank has been linked to terrorism, smuggling and illicit nuclear weapons procurement.

Main Bank, which wasn't a member of the Federal Reserve System, bought the $100 bills from First City National Bank of Houston.

First City spokesman James Day said it has correspondent banking relationships with "hundreds of banks" throughout Texas. "We're not verifying any amounts," Day said.

Henry said he didn't know why Main Bank would require such heavy levels of cash. "To me, it was an illustration of the tremendous offshore demand for currency at the time," he said.

Main Bank merged in 1980 with a unit of Mercantile Texas Corp., which later became a part of MCorp, now owned by Banc One Corp., a large regional banking company in Columbus, Ohio.

DOYLE: Higher yielding CDs involve greater risk from stocks it holds and, after deducting the fund's operating expenses, passes the balance of the money along to fund shareholders as dividends.

Equity funds are more suitable for people who hope for growth in value of their investments — and who are willing to take on some risk, while settling for low dividends.

There are a number of places where you can get higher yields than those available from newly issued CDs. But they all involve risk, which is unlikely you should take. My advice is to steer a risk-free course in CDs or U.S. Treasury bills.

Q. My broker suggests investing in a mutual fund which has paid 13.5 percent in the past years. He is confident it will again pay 13.5 percent. What do you suggest?

A. That you get a new broker. Better yet, do your future mutual fund investing in no-load funds, which can be bought directly from the funds — with no commission charge.

No mutual fund has paid 13.5 percent in dividends in many, many years. You might ask that broker precisely how far back in the past that mutual fund paid that percentage.

CACTUS: Auction of furnishings slated Aug. 24

(From 8C)

He said the furnishings include several pieces that date back to the building's 1929 opening, as well as furniture bought later when the building was used as a retirement center and housed a posh "Heritage Club."

Among the items to be auctioned is an enormous painting by Peter Plotkin. The painting, which depicts the interior of a blacksmith shop, dates back to the hotel's 1929 opening, Bates said.

Other sale items range from the trivial (made-in-Taiwan salt shakers) to the historically significant (the massive wooden box that stood behind the lobby desk and held the hotel's room keys).

Among the treasures to be auctioned is the huge mirror that hangs behind the lobby's stairway. The mirror also dates back to the building's debut as a Hilton Hotel and has an "H" sculpted into its design.

Except for the bottom two floors, which house the lobby, mezzanine, ballroom and meeting rooms, little remains of the building's original interior.

The upper floors were gutted by developers who planned to fill the space with offices and apartments.

The only businesses now in the massive building include a barber shop and clothing store, both on the ground floor, and a telephone communications center, on the top floor.

A brief chronology of the Hotel Cactus:

1929 — The San Angelo Hilton opens as the fifth hotel in the Hilton chain.

1933 — Hilton drops his lease on the hotel; San Angelean C.C. McBurnett renames the structure the Hotel Cactus. The hotel is later sold to Affiliated National Hotels, part of the Moody Foundation, and operated in conjunction with San Angelo Hotel Corp.

1982 — The hotel is put up for auction.

1983 — When no bids from the auction are accepted, the Moody Foundation gives the structure to the Baptist Memorials Geriatric Center, which operates the building as a retirement center for 20 years.

1983 — A fire erupts in the basement linen storage. No injuries are reported, but the hotel is closed because of the high cost of meeting fire codes. A group of Austin investors buys the building and begins restoration efforts. The building is later sold to B.W. Alpha, Inc., a San Angelo corporation owned by the Burk family. The corporation completes a substantial amount of renovation.

1984 — The Heritage Club Corp. opens a "private, downtown city club" in the building.

1986 — B.W. Alpha, Inc. files a petition to reorganize under federal bankruptcy laws. The Heritage Club closes.

1988-1990 — A developer announces plans to build condominiums in the Cactus building. The plans never come to fruition.

Among the treasures to be auctioned is the huge mirror that hangs behind the lobby's stairway. The mirror also dates back to the building's debut as a Hilton Hotel and has an "H" sculpted into its design.

Owner of Goody's records, Sam Goody, is dead

NEW YORK (NYT) — Sam Goody, a toy-store owner who turned a hugely profitable sideline — selling scratchy, breakable 78-rpm records — into one of the world's largest record stores, died Thursday at St. John's Hospital in Far Rockaway, Queens. He was 87 and lived in Woodmere, L.I.

He died of heart failure, said his son, Howard.

Goody's record business boomed in the years after World War II, when long-playing records were just catching on, and audiophiles were switching from shellac 10-inch disks to non-breakable 12-inch ones.

The Sam Goody chain today includes 320 stores across the country. Many of them were not opened until after Goody sold the business and his name in the 1970s. That was long after his flagship store on West 49th Street had become known as a New York phenomenon. Four thousand customers a day were said to jam the aisles, browsing through bins crammed with 38,000 LPs — a large inventory in the days before chains had hundreds of record stores from coast to coast.

In 1955, Goody's cash registers rang up 7 percent of the total national sales of 33//Y-rpm disks and a gross income of nearly $4 million.

Goody played the role of the number-crunching businessman in his store; he hired people who knew music to advise customers on which was more electrifying, a Eugene Ormandy recording of a symphony or a Leopold Stokowski.

"I can't stand listening to anything more highbrow than a Strauss waltz," he said in 1954.

That may have been why Goody — born Samuel Gutowitz on Feb. 25, 1904, but nicknamed "Goody" as a child — did not get into the record business in the first place.

Children face uncertain destiny

Maria Ferrer poses with her husband and three daughters outside their Bronx apartment. Maria, a former junkie, and her husband are infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, but the children are not. Maria plans to use whatever time she has left to find a home for her three girls.

NEW YORK (AP) — For 17 years, Satan pulled the strings and Maria Ferrer danced a junkie's waltz.

She lived for heroin, then cocaine and finally crack. She traded food and furniture for a fix, she bought crack from her teenage son, she dragged her crying daughters out of bed in the middle of the night to beg for drug money in the streets of the South Bronx.

In 1988, 33-year-old Maria lay stick-thin and fever-ravaged in a hospital bed, convinced she would die soon and leave her children with the memory of a mother who loved her drugs more than she loved them.

"My God, what have I done?" she thought as she floated in and out of consciousness, too weak to move. "Look at the time that I've wasted, so vainly! I never did anything for my daughters. I'm going to die, and I never had a chance to show them real love."

The fear brought her to life like a slap in the face. When Satan tugged now, Maria pulled back with new strength.

But the hour was so late, and the devil already had his due.

Maria Ferrer was infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, and so was her husband. Now she worried not for herself but for her three girls. Who would keep them together and care for them when she and her husband died? Who would raise them with the kind of spiritual values she only recently had rediscovered herself? Who would help them grieve and go on?

Maria couldn't think of a soul.

When Maria was a child, she knew a kind West Indian lady who lived in the neighborhood, a lady who loved her. "Why don't you give me that little girl?" the lady used to say to Maria's mother. Years later, Maria sometimes wondered what that life might have been like, and whether that sweet lady could have beat the devil from her door.

Life became chaotic after her parents divorced. Her mother shuttled Maria and her two younger sisters between New York and Puerto Rico. The girls frequently clashed with their stepfather, who resolved every conflict by throwing them out of their mother's house. Maria never forgot that or forgave it, how her mother stood by while he pushed the three of them out the door.

By the time she was 15, Maria had quit school, married and had a son. Her husband was a year older. They fought often, and he hit her. She left her baby with her mother and lived on the streets. By the time she was 19, she was hooked on heroin.

She met her second husband in 1973 when they showed up at the same place looking for a fix. The attraction was intense and immediate: He was drawn to her dark beauty, the high cheekbones and expressive eyes; she was intrigued by his quiet intelligence. They stayed together from then on.

Drugs drove their lives, and they careened out of control, end over end, over the edge. Her husband went to prison for five years for burglary and armed robbery, and Maria became a prostitute to support her habit. She was raped twice and beaten often. She thought she would be dead soon; it seemed to her that dead women littered Puerto Rico's beaches like crumpled paper cups.

She entered a drug program and kicked her habit for four years. Her husband was clean in prison. But by 1980, they were back in New York and addicted again.

Daughters were born, one in 1981, another in 1982, the last in 1984. Maria was on methadone with the first and mainlined cocaine every day of her second pregnancy. She was drug-free for the third, and she struggled to stay that way, wrestling her demons every day. She drank beer, lots of it, to kill the craving for the needle.

But when Maria learned she was infected, she gave up again. She went out in search of money for drugs, or drugs to buy, or a place to shoot up, and left her children to fend for each other. Her oldest girl was about 6 then.

Once, Maria and her husband had an argument. She wanted to leave, and he didn't want to stay with the children. So she set the bedroom on fire and ran out, her daughters' screams in her ears.

Later, when Maria was straight again, she wondered what possessed her. Drugs were scrambling her brain. People treated her like garbage; she felt like dirt, like nothing.

"I was born to be a drug addict, I'm going to die a drug addict," she thought. "This is destiny, this is destiny. This is what I was born to be."

With so many needles in her life, it's impossible to say when Maria became infected. She and her husband shared works with friends and strangers, drifting in and out of shooting galleries where hundreds of junkies used the same syringes over and over.

Pay a dollar, shoot up, rinse it off. Nobody talked about AIDS.

When the epidemic was five years old, Maria's younger sister fell deathly ill in Puerto Rico. She had pneumonia, the doctors said, and no one would go into her hospital room. In late 1986, she came to New York and stayed with Maria, who was dancing around the needle, trying to keep it at arm's length.

Maria bought a bag of dope for the two of them, and asked her sister to leave her half to sniff. But her sister cooked the whole batch.

They shared needles, and they shared the AIDS virus. Maria's sister found out she was infected when she became pregnant.

Most couples regularly use birth control

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifty-three percent of the world's couples use contraception, U.N. Population Officer Mary Beth Weinberger estimated.

For the United States, the rate was 74 percent in 1988, the latest year for which material was available and virtually unchanged from the 73 percent recorded for 1973.

Recent U.S. trends include a rise in the use of birth control pills, which had declined, and an increase in the popularity of sterilization.

Worldwide, one in five couples has a partner who is sterilized; 80 percent of those who are sterilized are women.

Ms. Weinberger's estimates did not include abortion as a form of contraception. Joseph Chamie, assistant director of the U.N. Population Division, said in an interview that his office is making a separate study of abortion.

"Most countries where use of female sterilization has grown rapidly are ... in Asia or Latin America," Ms. Weinberger told a conference on population and health surveys.

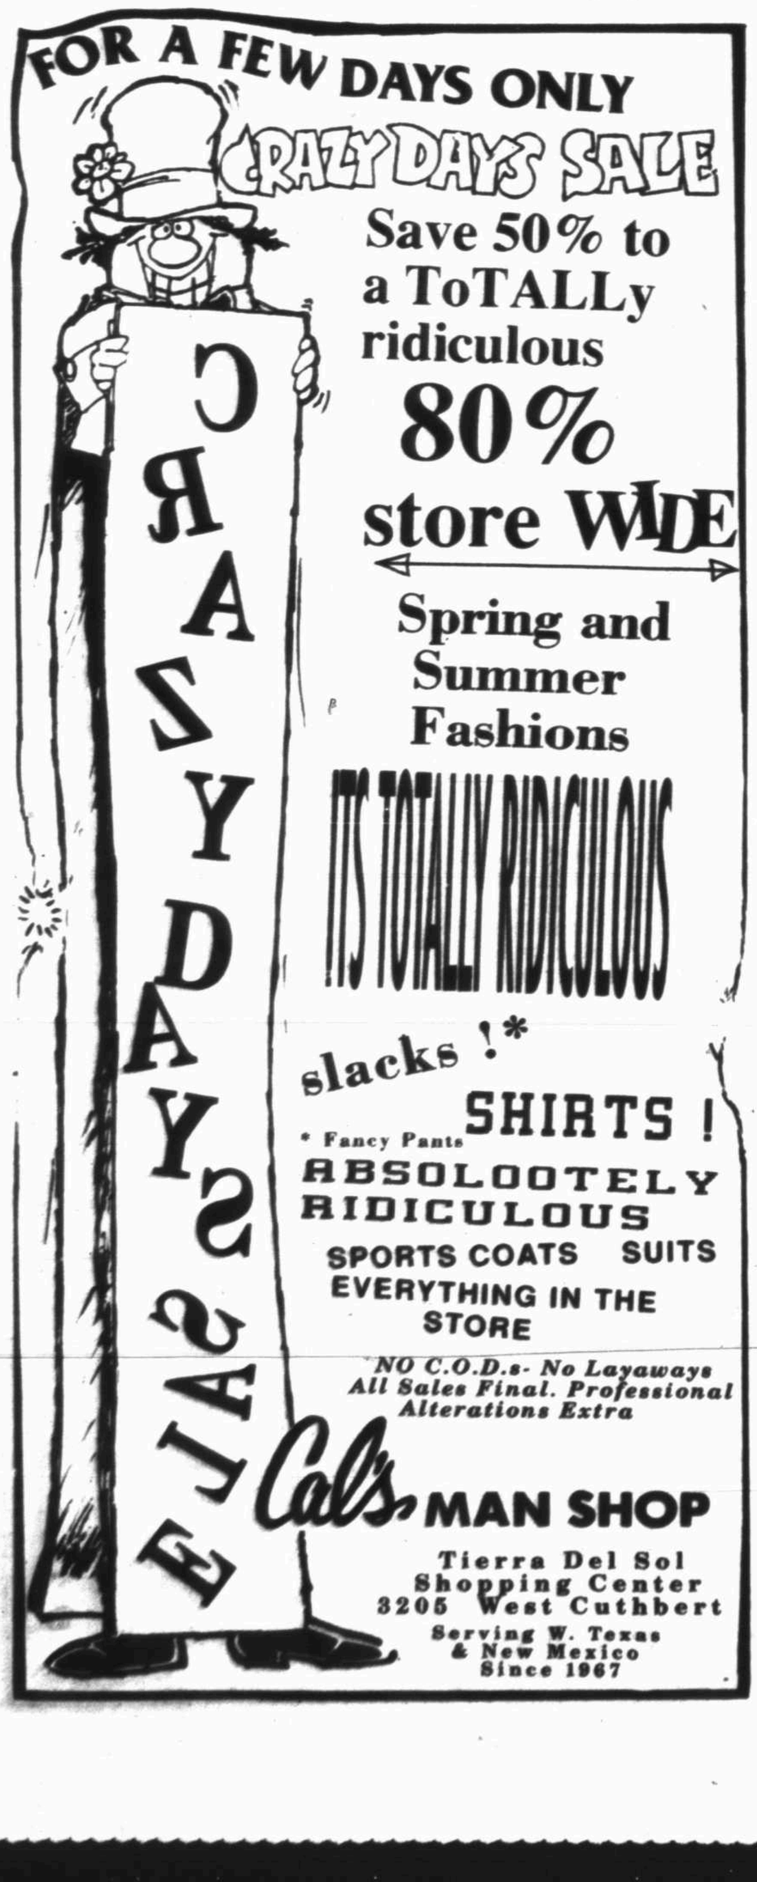
"This method stands out as having the greatest increase in prevalence and the highest current prevalence of any method."

An additional 11 percent of couples use intra-uterine devices (IUDs) and 7 percent use birth-control pills.

"Condoms, rhythm and withdrawal are each employed by 4-5 percent of the world's couples," she added.

In the Third World, just under half the couples — 48 percent — were estimated to use contraceptives and she said the number is growing rapidly. These estimates were based largely on figures from Demographic and Health Surveys, a privately-managed enterprise funded by the government's Agency for International Development.

The highest on Ms. Weinberger's list was 95 percent of all couples in Czechoslovakia in 1977. She said the figure for Czechoslovakia was especially high because couples there were asked if they had ever used contraception.



Soviet freedom elapses into economic collapse

AP Laserphoto

Two Soviet woman hold new shoes and clothing which they are trying to resell at a profit out on the street in Moscow.

MOSCOW (AP) — On the street once named for Communist writer Maxim Gorky, the windows of Estee Lauder, Nina Ricci and Pizza Hut sparkle among grimy state-owned shops barren of goods.

Crowds gather at tables where entrepreneurs sell homemade jewelry, new independent newspapers or foreign bubble gum that costs three rubles a stick, about an hour's pay.

The Soviet Union has undergone a new revolution since the last time an American president visited Moscow.

There is more freedom, but the country seems ready to come apart. Entrepreneurs can make fortunes, but the state-run economy has nearly collapsed. Shortages abound and inflation is rampant.

In May 1988, the Communist Party ran a totalitarian state and the Soviet Union was still a superpower.

Capitalism was evil and Pravda responded to American complaints of human rights violations by claiming the United States had 11,000 political prisoners of its own.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev was only beginning to mention the possibility of allowing different views.

Today, six of the 15 Soviet republics are moving toward independence and at least five are abandoning communism.

Elected leaders are kicking Communist bureaucrats out of their powerful positions in government and factories. There are parliaments and alternative political parties. Anti-Communist demonstrations routinely attract crowds of 100,000.

People on Gorky Street, now called Tverskaya, wear the bright colors of private manufacturers, not the dark, frumpy styles favored by clothing bureaucrats.

Hundreds of people, mostly teen-age boys, lined up outside the Estee Lauder store, which sells chic cosmetics at state-subsidized prices. All of them load up when they get inside and some resell the goods on the black market at enormous profits.

Equally young guards hired to manage the line guzzle cans of Austrian beer, sold at a state beverage store across the street for 100 times the price of domestic tomato juice.

Most of the new Western franchise stores demand foreign currency. Thousands of Soviet citizens now have some, and no longer risk arrest when they spend it.

Private ownership of factories has become legal and 4.5 million people work in small private businesses — making the fashionable clothes, publishing the independent newspapers, dealing in the Western luxuries like bubble gum and beer.

Copying machines, formerly restricted to official use, now can be purchased freely — for a suitcase full of money.

Managers of military factories did not dare mention their existence in 1988. Now, they give tours to Westerners, seeking investment and sales for hard currency.

Lenin still lies in waxy state in his Red Square mausoleum, but the line to see him is shorter than the one at the Moscow McDonald's.

His picture no longer adorns every office, statues of him have been pulled down in many cities and, although they may not get their way, the citizens of Leningrad voted to change the name back to St. Petersburg.

Millions of Soviets attend reopened churches, mosques and synagogues. Some even enroll their children in religious studies.

Three years ago, President Ronald Reagan canceled a visit to the home of a Jewish family trying to emigrate after the Soviets indicated the family would never be allowed to leave otherwise.

Last year, 425,000 Soviet citizens emigrated, many of them Jews. Now, the United States sets limits on the number it will accept.

The Kremlin has given up Eastern Europe, withdrawn its army from Afghanistan and destroyed 1,846 nuclear missiles under the the treaty Reagan and Gorbachev signed. The Warsaw Pact military alliance has been dissolved, and millions of Soviet and American citizens have visited each other's countries.

Then there is the other side.

Thousands of Soviets have died in ethnic conflicts. Attacks by soldiers on civilians in Georgia, Lithuania, and elsewhere have left millions of Soviets more afraid of their own army than NATO's.

People struggle to get along because some prices have risen tenfold. Most prices remain government-controlled, which prevents a natural market from filling empty store shelves.

Rape victim still lives scarred life

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A young woman who was repeatedly raped and sodomized by four men has decided talking publicly about her ordeal would help her come to terms with it.

"Why would I want to put this in a closet and hide it there the rest of my life?" asked Kim Jackson, now 21. "I don't think that would be very healthy."

In a lengthy interview published Sunday in The Kansas City Star, Ms. Jackson recalled the events of her June 6, 1990, abduction and rape and the aftermath.

Ms. Jackson said she and a woman friend had been harassed by hoots and shouts from four men in a parked car at a restaurant that night. The two women had laughed it off at the time, but after she had driven home alone, one of the men was waiting in her driveway and dragged her to a car.

She knew it is the men from the parking lot. Later she would learn their names — Kenneth Thornburg, 25, Andrew Harper, 19, Lee Ross, 21, and James Lutes Jr., 23.

Over the next 12 hours, she was repeatedly raped and sodomized.

"I was so furious," she later said. "I told them, 'No more!' I said I needed fresh air, water, and something to eat."

The assaults ended, but she was handcuffed to a pole. When three of the men had left and her lone guard fell asleep, Ms. Jackson managed to slip her hand from the cuffs. She fled across a field, and sprinted about a half-mile to a farmhouse to contact police.

Harper was arrested walking along the highway. Ross was arrested at his Nevada home, and Lutes and Thornburgh were picked up several days later in Florida during a traffic stop.

Eventually, all four men pleaded guilty to every charge against them in Cass County. Each received sentences ranging from 40 to 55 years.

They were taken to Clay County on the kidnapping charges, where all but Ross pleaded guilty. A jury convicted him. Harper, Thornburg and Ross received the maximum of 15 years in Clay County. Lutes was sentenced to 30 years because he was charged as a repeat offender.

While their criminal story has ended for now, Ms. Jackson still faces a life scarred by the ordeal.

An angry thought struck her as she watched one of the men being led back to his jail cell.

"He can sit there and watch TV or whatever he wants," she said. "Well, I have to live my life. Put a smile on my face every day. I can't take the time like they can. I have to deal with it now.

"Sure, they are in prison, but in a way ... so am I."

Friends and family have said Ms. Jackson is a very different now. The old Kim was perky and vibrant, always laughing, and loved to garden and go to softball games.

Now, she rarely goes to softball games, rarely gardens and no longer likes to go out late.

Before she gave little thought to a career. Now she's a college student who wants to work in victim's advocacy.

"It gave me a positive sense of direction," she said. "But boy what a price."

Solidarty's birthplace in trouble

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — The shipyard where Solidarity was born, symbol of the anti-communist fight through a decade of banners and truncheons, survived to see its most famous worker, Lech Walesa, become president of Poland.

Now, the question is whether the shipyard has the economic wherewithal to make it through the victory.

The same can be said of the whole Solidarity union.

"We are not thinking of fighting for all of Poland, like it used to be, but today we are thinking of ourselves," said Jerzy Borowczak, deputy chairman of Solidarity at the Gdansk Shipyard, which used to be named for Lenin.

At Solidarity's national headquarters a few blocks away, the union is caught in an uneasy transition from political success to labor power.

Just as the shipyard Solidarity chapter must decide how many layoffs to accept, national Solidarity leaders wonder to what degree they should protect the non-communist government they formed in 1989.

The issue is especially ticklish when that government's reform objectives conflict with traditional union goals like job security and higher pay. Should Solidarity, for instance, keep a lid on strikes or promote workers rights?

"Solidarity is still the major anti-communist and pro-reform element in Poland," its national chairman, Marian Krzaklewski, said in an interview. "Even if we don't want that responsibility, no other force has appeared."

There is serious tension in the ranks and Solidarity feels "the pressure of waiting for effects" from economic reform, he said. Krzaklewski, 44, traveled 6,000 miles to 60 "very wild" membership meetings in two months after his election in February.

Commentators suggest Solidarity already has folded the "protective umbrella" it held over the government and its painful economic reforms, and has begun using it as a poker.

So far, the jabs have been fairly gentle. Newspapers carry reports of strikes everywhere from bakeries to bus depots, but most are settled when Solidarity accepts raises far below initial demands, acknowledging the nation's empty coffers and low tolerance for job actions.

Even so, the government concedes an increase in social tensions. Walesa felt obliged to request special decree powers to speed reforms, and consultations with Solidarity were intensified.

Solidarity has found it isn't calling all the shots anymore. Although it divorced itself from a strike of air traffic controllers in June, the controllers walked out anyway and Walesa had to threaten military action.

"People seem to have lost the feeling of their group identity, wrote an observer, Pawel Spiewak. "The slightest spark could ignite the barely concealed discontent and send a wave of unrest rolling across all segments of society."

Today's Solidarity has about 2.5 million members, one-quarter of the 10 million claimed during its first period of legality in 1980.

Cookies may be hazardous

NEW YORK (AP) — Aunt Vertie's sugar cookies may be hazardous to your health — and not because of the calories.

Gourmet magazine sent 750,000 letters to subscribers last week because the recipe for the cookies in its July issue called for wintergreen oil, which can be toxic.

The recipe should have called for wintergreen extract, said Melissa Small, an assistant editor.

"We thought we should inform our readers of this. Some people can be allergic to it," Small said.

The letters urge readers to immediately "block out the reference to '¼ teaspoon wintergreen oil (available at some pharmacies),'" to make sure no one uses it.

They include a sticker of the corrected recipe and suggest it be pasted over the original.
