Nutritionist have no beef with beef: cattlemen pleased

The prestigious National Academy of Sciences released new diet guidelines last week that support what cattlemen have said all along—beef is good for you.

In an Associated Press story from Boston, the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences was quoted as saying "There's nothing wrong with a meal consisting of a thick, juicy steak, a green salad and a baked potato with sour cream, as long as you have variety in your diet."

The food board is the panel that recommends dietary standards for the food industry.

John S. Cargile, president of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, said his group was encouraged by the report in light of attempts by some "food experts" to link beef and cholesterol to heart disease.

"The food board says there is no convincing evidence that what you eat will affect your body's cholesterol levels and we think that pretty well buries any allegations that eating beef provides thiamin, riboflavin, niacin, pyridoxine, vitamin B-12 and other B-vitamins, minerals like iron and zinc and, of course, protein. Off hand, I can't think of a single food more nutritious or more tasty than beef."

Henry Kamin, vice chairman of the food board, says much the same thing.

Contemplating a steak dinner, Kamin said, "I would love to have that sort of meal, and if I add up the constituents of a potato, meat and salad, I can see that it certainly is adequate in protein. It is not excessive in fat. It is certainly adequate in calories. And I can't think of any vitamins it is deficient in."

Americans consumed only 2.77 ounces per day of cooked (lean plus marble) red meat cuts in 1979, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Nutritionists generally recommend two three-ounce servings from the meat group daily.

"This tells me that Americans can and should eat more beef. The good news for the consumer is that retail beef prices as of mid-May were averaging 15 cents per pound lower than the same time a year ago. Considering the inflation rate, beef is a good buy and now the National Academy of Sciences confirms it is healthy for you," Cargile said.

ENERGY-SAVING IDEAS

Maximize energy saving to live with today's energy limitations.

Start with the hot water heater and hot-water-using appliances.

Hot water accounts for 12 percent of the energy used by Texans.

For a beginning, try these tips:

Wait until you have a full load before using the dishwasher.

Run the dishwasher at night during hot summer months to reduce heat-load during the day.

Insulate your water heater.

Repair leaky hot water faucets—they can waste as much as 100 gallons of hot water a month.

Water heaters are most efficient when clean.

Therefore, once a month, drain out two to three gallons of water to remove rust and sediment.

This saves energy and extends water heater life.

Fresh Produce Season

Spring means fresh fruits and vegetables, so check out roadside markets for good buys on your favorite produce.

"Texas fruit and vegetable production is getting into full swing," points out Tom Longbrake, horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. Roadside stands will soon be bursting at the seams with good supplies of squash, tomatoes, sweet corn, peaches, green beans, cucumbers, Irish potatoes and a host of other items."

Good buys are available from local producers who sometimes sell for less than supermarkets, says the horticulturist. And the produce is often much fresher because it comes right out of the field or orchard. "In checking for freshness, look for green shucks on sweet corn; straight, smooth pods on green beans; vine-ripened tomatoes; and fresh-cut squash," suggests Longbrake.

Other items available at roadside stands from now into early summer are mustard and turnip greens, collards, kale, cabbage and leaf lettuce. However, okra, watermelons, cantaloupes and southern peas won't be available in volume until late June.

"Watch for peak production sales and be prepared to can or freeze some homegrown vegetables and fruit," suggests Longbrake.

Also, some growers may have a pick-your-own deal which you could turn into a family outing.

These six Borden Jr. High girls attended the Western Texas College, Sports Camp last week. The camp is for girls 9-14 years old to improve their basketball skills. Back row - Kelli Williams, Kristi Stone and Julie Ridenour. Front row - Shelly Buchanan, Rene Telchik, and Cathy York.

Kelli Williams received the most improved player award for her team.

CAPITOL UPDATE

John Tower
U.S. SENATOR for TEXAS

142 RUSSELL OFFICE BUILDING
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

For years, those of us who are concerned about our deteriorating military strength relative to the Soviet Union have been frustrated. Our colleagues in the Congress didn't seem to be listening. But this year they are -- thanks in part to polls that show the American people, by an 80 percent majority, support increased defense spending.

The process of approving money for our national security, or any other budget item, is long and complex. And much of the most important work comes in the committee room, before the full House or Senate ever begins to consider any bill.

The first step is the Concurrent Budget Resolution, in which both houses of Congress formally agree on spending ceilings for each sector of the federal government. This year, both houses have recommended large increases for defense, approximately $7 billion more than President Carter requested. If that resolution receives final approval, the stage will be set for including a similar amount in the authorization and appropriations bills.

Recently, the Armed Services Committee, on which I serve as senior minority party member, has devoted several all-day sessions to the final writing of the Defense Authorization Bill for fiscal year 1981. This bill will determine whether and by how much we will be able to increase our military readiness in the year which begins Oct. 1.

Owing to mounting Senate concerns over the shift in the military balance with the Soviet Union -- especially in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan -- there is strong sentiment within the committee to increase substantially the amount we authorize for defense spending.

Specifically, I expect the committee will approve a major increase in shipbuilding for the Navy to begin to improve our ability to protect U.S. interests in distant areas such as the Persian Gulf. Also, I believe the committee will call for increased numbers of tactical aircraft, so that we can produce them at the most efficient, and least costly, rates. We also will be approving spending levels that will allow us to be better prepared in other areas.

Once we in the committee finish our work, we will have to take the bill to the full Senate. But if the committee's recommendations are presented persuasively, we have a good chance of winning on the Senate floor -- even though President Carter is strongly opposing increases in his defense budget. Ironically, the President is asking for fewer aircraft and other items of equipment than he requested last year, even though he pledged the U.S. to a new commitment for the security of the Persian Gulf.

But the authorization bill isn't the final step in getting money approved. An appropriations bill must be passed before any money can be spent. That will happen this summer. Both the authorization and appropriations bills will have to receive approval from both houses of Congress, of course. And usually yet another committee, the conference committee, comes into the process to work out differences between versions approved by the House and Senate.

So the road to spending a responsible amount of money on national defense this year will be a long one, with many twists and turns along the way. I am optimistic, however, because we have a better chance than we have had in many years to make real progress this year.

Your County Agent Says by Sam Field

The latest information in the rapidly developing field of alternate energy sources will be presented in a two-day public symposium June 19-20 at the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

It is designed to help prospective producers and users of alternate energy, especially alcohol fuels, avoid, "snakeoil" and pitfalls in the field. It is a follow-up to last fall's "Gasohol Know-How Conference" here.

Co-sponsors are the Texas Farmers Union, Texas Tech University, Small Business Administration and the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

Experts in ethanol production and use will present objective, concise, substantiated information on various topics and endeavor to answer all questions participants may raise, the sponsors said.

Registration is from 7:30 to 9 a.m. both days. The heart of the two-day program will be eight workshops. Workshop topics are: Business considerations; Fuel ethanol applications, Parts 1 and 2; Ethanol production; Legislative and policy considerations; Legal, tax and state legislative concerns; Wind and solar power; and, Inputs for ethanol-energy and feedstocks.

Keynote speaker Thursday, June 19, will be Victor Ray, alcohol fuels specialist with the National Farmers Union. Friday's keynote address will be given by Bill Holmberg, Alcohol Fuels Division, U. S. Department of Energy.

Fee for the symposium is $20 if pre-registered or $30 at the door. Participants will receive a copy of the DOE book, "Fuel from Farms-A Guide to Small Scale Ethanol Production."

Farmers Still Single Largest Land Owners

AUSTIN--Despite the fact that so much of American land today is urbanized, farmers remain the single largest group of private landowners in the United States, according to Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

"Farmers and farm managers make up less than 2 percent of the U. S. adult population, but they own 46 percent of all private land," said Brown, commenting from a recently-released U. S. Department of Agriculture study of American land-ownership. The survey, conducted in 1978, also shows that over 8 percent of all land-owners are farmers.

Brown noted that the last government survey of land-ownership in 1946 showed there were slightly more than 6 million farmland owners, of which 70 percent were actual farm operators. "Today, there are still about 6 million farmland owners, but the number who actually operate farms has dropped to around 33 percent."

Since 1975 alone, Texas has lost over 16,000 farmers and about 1.3 million acres of farmland. This has been duplicated on a much larger scale nationwide. Individual farms have become fewer, but have grown larger in size.

"The continuing loss of farmers and ranchers, coupled with declining farm acreage, should be one of this country's priority concerns," said Brown. "Some think that we don't need farmers as long as we have supermarkets, but we have to realize that what concerns agriculture, concerns us all," he said.

EMERGENCY FEED PROGRAM

The approved feeding period under the Emergency Feed Program ended May 31, 1980. All livestock producers that participated are encouraged to bring in their purchased feed statements as soon as possible so that we may close out this program.

FINAL PLANTING DATES

The final planting dates for Borden County are June 15 for cotton and June 20 for grain sorghum. These dates do not restrict you from planting at a later date, but establishes a date by which these crops must be planted or replanted.

PREVENTED PLANTING

If you intended to plant cotton or grain sorghum but are unable to do so because of adverse weather conditions, you may file for prevented planting credit. (This includes large lake areas that have not dried up enough to plant at this time). To be eligible for consideration, requests must be filed within five days of the final planting date. (June 16 through June 20 for cotton and June 21 through June 25 for grain sorghum).

CERTIFICATION

The final certification for cotton, grain sorghum, and other spring seeded crops is August 1. A total farm certification will be required and crop acreage must be accurate. Failure to certify within 1.0 acre or 5 percent of the reported acreage could cause the loss of all program benefits. (Target price protection, disaster coverage, and price support loans).

MEASUREMENT SERVICE

To aid in correct certifications, the ASCS Office is offering crop measurement service. If you cannot accurately determine your crop acreage, it might be to your advantage to have measurement service which will guarantee full program benefits. Requests must be filed by Tuesday, July 1, 1980.

WHEAT DISASTER

Wheat harvested and producing less than 60 percent of your established yield may be eligible for a disaster payment. In order to be eligible, form ASCS-574, Application For Disaster Credit, must be filed not later than 15 days from the date harvest is complete. You must also keep complete and accurate records of the production indicating the crop name, the date, and pounds or bushels produced.

If you determine your wheat acreage is not worth harvesting, you must file an ASCS-574 prior to making any other use of the acreage in order for the acreage to be inspected by this office.

Eligibility for participation in all programs administered by ASCS is established under law without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or National origin.
