Killing spree leads to riots in West Bank

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops shot and wounded four Palestinian demonstrators today as the worst Arab riots in years swept Israeli-occupied territories after a Jewish gunman's killing spree on the Temple Mount shrine.

The military command said troops opened fire on a mob that assaulted them in the West Bank town of Nablus. One youth was hit in the leg and the condition of the other three was not immediately known, a spokesman said.

Police and troops stopped Arabs marching down main business streets of Jerusalem's Arab sector and arrested 15 people, Israel radio said. Hospitals reported treating about 125 injured Arabs and Jews, including 15 or 16 with bullet wounds.

In Beirut, a rocket grenade hit the third floor of the U.S. Embassy at 4:30 a.m. today, knocking some concrete loose, and the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio reported a telephone caller said the attack was in response to Sunday's fatal shooting in Jerusalem which killed two Arabs. An embassy spokesman said no one was hurt.

Israel radio identified the gunman as Alan Harry Goodman, 38, and an Israeli reporter said he was from Baltimore, Md. The chief of Jerusalem's police captured him after a 30-minute shooting spree in the golden-domed Mosque of Omar, on the Temple Mount, the site from which Moslem tradition says the prophet Mohammed ascended to heaven.

Goodman was drafted two weeks ago and attached to a unit in Nablus on the occupied West Bank, military officials said. The daily Maariv said he told police he acted to avenge the deaths of 34 Israelis in a Palestinian terrorist attack on a bus four years ago.

THE NEWSPAPER QUOTED HIM as saying he acted alone "on behalf of the whole Jewish people." But police sources said investigators were checking whether Goodman was linked to the Kach movement, offspring of the militant Jewish Defense League in the United States.

Kach, in a statement issued in New York, said it neither supported nor condemned the attack but called Goodman a "a hero who tried to liberate the Temple Mount from the hands of foreigners."

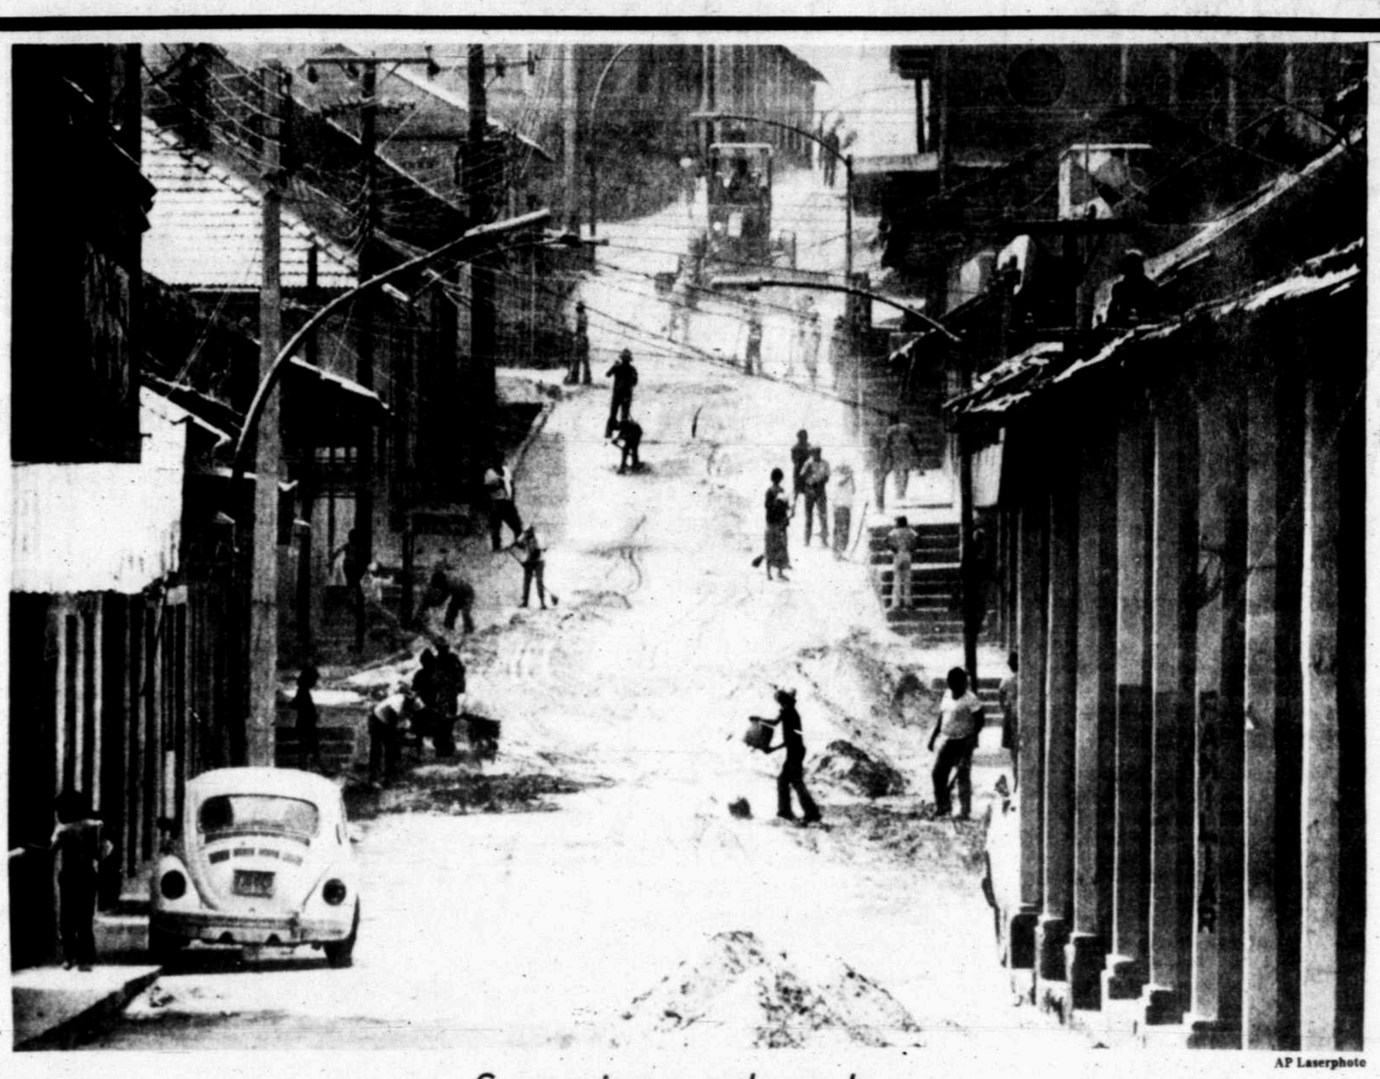

But a Kach spokesman in Jeruslam described the attack as "a deviant act by a sick man" and said no record of Goodman was found in the group's files.

The gunman, wearing an army uniform and carrying an M-16 rifle, struck at one of the most sensitive places in the Israeli capital. The golden-domed Mosque of Omar is on the the Temple Mount, location of the Wailing Wall which is Judaism's holiest shrine. Moslems revere the site as the third holiest after Mecca and Medina, and riots broke out immediately as word spread that the attack was underway.

Police Chief Yehoshua Caspi said the gunman told him: "So many of my family and friends are being killed. I had to take revenge."

Prime Minister Menachem Begin said the man was "mentally ill." Israel's chief rabbinate denounced the attack, saying: "By this despicable act of opening fire on innocent people, the gunman desecrated the holiest site of the Jewish people and removed himself from the nation of Israel."

Most towns in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip responded to a call by the Jerusalem's Moslem Supreme Council to go on a week's general strike to protest the attack which left also left nine Jews and Arabs wounded.

Haig takes peace proposal to Britain

LONDON (AP) — Britain's ban on Argentine shipping around the Falkland Islands went into effect today, but a Buenos Aires newspaper reported that Argentina ducked a confrontation by keeping its warships out of the war zone proclaimed by the British.

No shooting was reported as Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. returned to London with peace proposals from Argentina and met with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

The Buenos Aires newspaper La Nacion reported that Argentine warships were patrolling the coasts of the mainland — well away from the Falklands — and that the rest of the navy's ships were docked in their home ports "until they are needed to face the adversary."

Confirmation of the report was not immediately available in the Argentine capital or London. But the British Defense Ministry reported on Sunday that all but two ships of Argentina's invasion fleet — a destroyer and a frigate — returned to their home ports before the war zone went into effect at midnight Falklands time (11 p.m. EST Sunday).

La Nacion said officials it did not identify told it Argentine naval aircraft were "in action" monitoring ship traffic and making preparations for attack missions.

Haig, making his second trip to London in four days, arrived shortly after Britain's 200-mile "maritime exclusion zone" around the South Atlantic islands went into effect. Britain had said any Argentine vessel found in the zone would be sunk.

"I am bringing here to the British government, to Mrs. Thatcher and her ministers, some ideas which have been developed on the basis of United Nations Security Council Resolution 502, and look forward to these discussions," Haig said on his arrival at London's Heathrow airport.

The U.N. resolution calls for Argentina to pull its forces out of the Falklands and resolve the crisis with Britain through diplomacy.

INFORMED SOURCES SAID Argentina insists on keeping its flag flying over the islands. But the sources said Haig was told Argentina would consider withdrawing its troops if Britain halted its 40-ship fleet sailing for the Falklands and lifted the blockade.

The sources ruled out control of the islands by the United Nations or a third power. But they said Argentina is willing to offer the Falklanders some self-government and will let Britain share in development of the archipelago's natural resources, including offshore oil and gas.

Peruvian Foreign Ministry sources inj Lima said Argentina proposed a peacekeeping force of troops from the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said that before Britain will negotiate, Argentina must withdraw totally.

Argentina invaded the British colony 250 miles off its southern coast April 2 following a 149-year sovereignty dispute with Britain. Most of the 1,800 islanders are British descendants and say they do not want Argentine rule.

The British naval task force sailing south is still more than a week away from the islands, but at least four of Britain's nuclear-powered hunter-killer submarines are reportedly prowling the war zone.

Argentina reportedly has increased its occupation force to 6,000 men.

Clements tops field in funds

DALLAS (AP) — Crowded primary races have forced candidates to settle with a smaller share of the money poured into politics by oil and gas interests, but Republican Gov. Bill Clements has captured the largest chunk of the gubernatorial contributions, a study of financial reports shows.

And Democrat challenger Mark White isn't far behind Clements, The Dallas Morning News reports.

The newspaper said Sunday that its analysis of candidates' April 1 financial reports showed Clements received $138,000 from oil and gas interests in contributions of $1,000 or more. White, the state attorney general, got $120,500.

The figures in the newspaper's analysis were based on contributions of $1,000 or more from contributors whose occupations or connection with the candidate were identifiable. The figures cover contributions from Jan. 1 to March 22, the period reported by April 1 in the candidates' financial statements to the secretary of state's office.

Oil and gas interests were the largest sources of contributions for Clements and White, and were an important source for the other two Democratic gubernatorial candidates: Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple and Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong.

Armstrong had $42,000 in major contributions from oil and gas interests, while Temple received $27,500.

Clements, an oilman, has raised nearly $4 million for this year's campaign, more than twice as much as the combined funds raised by his three Democratic opponents. His finance chairman, George Bayoud, predicts a fund-raising dinner in June will add $3 million to Clements' campaign.

In the lieutenant governor's race, Republican George Strake, a millionaire oilman, received $121,500 from oil and gas interests, compared with $21,000 received by Democratic incumbent Bill Hobby, the newspaper reported. Real estate and development sources provided $80,000 for Strake and $3,500 for Hobby.

In the attorney general's race, oil and gas interests contributed $34,500 to Max Sherman, $19,500 to Jack Ogg, $4,000 to John Hannah and $3,000 to Jim Mattox. All four of those candidates are Democrats.

Attorneys provided $40,200 for Hannah, $31,150 for Sherman, $17,500 for Ogg and $2,000 for Mattox. General business contributions totaled $37,900 for Sherman, $20,000 for Ogg, $12,200 for Hannah and $1,000 for Mattox, the newspaper's study said.

In the race for agriculture commissioner, Democratic incumbent Reagan Brown had no contributions of more than $1,000 from oil and gas interests, while Democratic challenger Jim Hightower reported $8,500.

Reagan returns from 'working holiday'

WASHINGTON (AP) — For President Reagan, this is a week of keeping track of U.S. peacekeeping missions beyond the nation's borders while his aides hold budget talks with members of Congress.

Reagan, who returned to the White House Sunday evening after a five-day "working holiday" in Jamaica and Barbados, will be on the road again Thursday when he visits Chicago to address Roman Catholic educators and, most likely, unveil support for some form of tax credit based on tuition payments to private schools, a step he advocated long before taking office.

Today, he invited a delegation of Jewish leaders to meet with him at the White House.

Reagan had been expected to meet early in the week with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who was to have returned from his mission to London and Buenos Aires in an effort to settle the Falklands Island crisis.

But deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the president and Haig decided Saturday evening to have the secretary return to London. Thus, it could be several days before Reagan receives a face-to-face report on Haig's efforts.

Reagan, who said Sunday he had spoken twice with Haig since the secretary of state left Washington early Thursday morning, communicated with Haig through written cables, Speakes said.

"Very detailed cabled instructions and reporting have gone on between the president and secretary of state," the White House spokesman said aboard Air Force One as the president flew home from his seaside holiday.

U.S. officials who declined to have their names used expressed skepticism about the accuracy of a broadcast report that Haig was carrying to London a four-point plan proposing immediate Argentine withdrawal from the Falkland Islands, which Argentina seized from the British.

ACCORDING TO THE report, the other three points call for reversal of the British fleet steaming toward the South Atlantic trouble spot, self-government of the islands, and a decision that sovereignty there remains in dispute.

In addition to Haig's trip, Nicholas Veliotis, assistant secretary of state for Near-Eastern Affairs, was sent to the Middle East in the wake of fears of a new Israeli move into Southern Lebanon.

Congress remains on its Easter recess, but Speakes said White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, who accompanied Reagan to the Caribbean, "will still have more talks" with senators and representatives on the budget.

It was not clear whether the talks will be with lawmakers in town despite the recess, by telephone, or a combination.

As for the vacation, Reagan pronounced it "just fine" and Speakes said, "I think he had a good time."

The president ended it Sunday with a visit to a 107-year-old coral stone church fewer than 100 yards from the gentle Caribbean surf. He attended an Anglican High Mass, as he and his wife celebrated Easter at the St. James Parish church.

Then they paid a final call, for brunch, on their friend, actress Claudette Colbert, who maintains a house on the island and whose invitation prompted the 5,120-mile trip.

The journey began with meetings with Prime Minister Edward Seaga in Jamaica on Thursday and with Eastern Caribbean leaders in Barbados on Thursday.

Conservative publisher William F. Buckley and his wife, Pat, who also visited Miss Colbert, flew home aboard Air Force One.

West Coast rains add to misery, records

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Rivers swelled near flood stage today after a weekend storm drenched Northern California with up to 7 inches of rain that loosened tons of muddy earth, while gale-force winds toppled trees into power lines and darkened thousands of homes.

The storm, which swept out of the Pacific from the Gulf of Alaska, killed at least four people and left four missing.

The downpour added to already-record rainfall for the century in several parts of California, including San Francisco and Sacramento. Weather officials said between 2 and 7 inches of rain fell in northern and central areas of the state in a 24-hour period ending Sunday afternoon.

Forecasters predicted a new but weaker storm would dump more showers from central California northward through Tuesday.

The San Joaquin River was forecast to reach 12 feet today — two feet short of flood stage — at Mendotta, about 20 miles east of Fresno, and the Cosumnes River, a San Joaquin tributary, was forecast to reach 45 feet — one foot away from flood stage.

The Coast Guard continued searching for two yachts missing since Saturday in a 60-mile race to the Farallon Islands, about 30 miles offshore from San Francisco. Two people were aboard each boat.

Two men died Saturday night when their boat, which was not involved in the race, sank off the stormy Marin County coast north of San Francisco. Killed were Davis police Lt. John Huber, 48, and police Detective John Stroble, 26.

In San Francisco, Mary Dickson, 32, was killed when a wind-blown branch struck her while she was riding in a car through Golden Gate Park, the coroner's office said. In Los Angeles, Jean Pierre Dolfi, 26, a native of France, was killed when his car skidded and smashed into a utility pole.

Winds gusting to 60 mph knocked trees into power lines, leaving nearly 150,000 without power Sunday in pockets from Santa Rosa to Santa Cruz — a 150-mile stretch. Most had power restored by Sunday afternoon, and the rest were to be restored this morning.

"It was primarily wind damage," said Dennis Pooler, a Pacific Gas and Electic spokesman. "It wasn't too major because we have had so many storms already earlier this year ... most of the weak spots (in transmission systems) have been repaired."

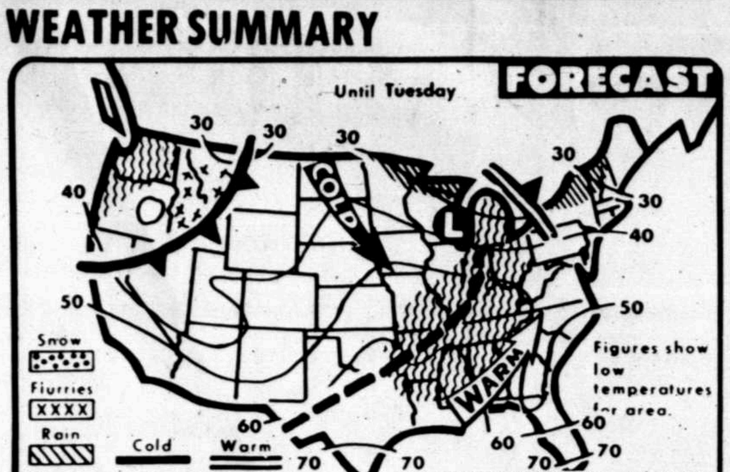

In northern Nevada, a flood threat eased Sunday night when the Carson and Truckee rivers crested below flood stage and began falling.

Telephone service in and out of Downieville, Calif., in the Sierra Nevada, was out after up to a million cubic feet of earth slid across Highway 49 Sunday afternoon, knocking out telephone lines.

Another section of the highway was closed by flooding between Cool and Auburn, said Transportation Department spokesman Bill Davis.

Yosemite National Park 150 miles east of San Francisco remained closed today due to mudslides and flooding from the Merced River; and park crews were piling sandbags around employee housing in Yosemite Valley, said park spokeswoman Linda Abbott.

Spokesman denies deficit overestimated

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget director David Stockman's chief spokesman has denied that Stockman has deliberately overestimated the budget deficit projections for the current fiscal year.

"In absolutely good faith, we expect the deficit to come in close to $100 billion," said Edwin Dale, a spokesman for Stockman's Office of Management and Budget. "Our most senior numbers man is puzzling over whether to bet the deficit will be over or under $100 billion."

Last week, Stockman estimated that the deficit for the current fiscal year will be a record $100.5 billion.

But tax-cut advocates in the administration suggested that Stockman may be suppressing figures which indicate the deficit would only be about $70 billion.

One administration official who declined to be identified suggested that high projections support a congressional move to increase taxes and cut defense spending, two proposals rejected by President Reagan.

A BOSTON-BASED analyst for the Heritage Foundation, a conservative research group, also concluded in an independent review that the deficit could be $25 billion to $35 billion below forecasts.

In a newspaper column distributed for use today, Warren T. Brookes said the administration may be planning to announce the good news this summer "to help lower interest rates and 'tone up' the economy for the fall elections."

But there is a "more sinister view," Brooks said. "The OMB faction ... is deliberatively downplaying the positive revenue trends to keep pressure on both Congress and the president for compromise."

Administration supply-siders, who believe large tax cuts stimulate economic growth, have attacked Stockman as an enemy of Reagan's program, saying Stockman wants to cut last year's tax reduction to reduce the deficit.

Stockman did not comment personally but authorized Dale's comments.

Dale conceded that spending is running below expectations through the first half of the fiscal year, and Treasury Department officials said tax revenue about $2 billion above estimates. But they say it is unlikely for these trends to continue.

NORMAN TURE, the Treasury Department's undersecretary, is skeptical that the deficit might be only $70 billion. Most of the optimism about a smaller deficit seems to stem from figures showing lower federal spending, he said.

Water use in 2000 is projected to be 2.5 million acre feet short of dependable supplies, even with expected cutbacks in irrigation.

If the oil and gas production decline continues it means legislators will have to seek state revenue elsewhere, probably from new taxes.

Vehicle traffic is expected to more than double in texas between now and 2000. Inadequacies in transportation in both urban and rural areas are expected.

The Texas 2000 report says that agricultural productivity is heavily dependent on water and energy supplies, as well as transportation facilities.

THE COMMISSION thinks that Texas must spend more time and money on research and development to solve these problems. Most research funds spent in Texas now come from the federal government and go to industries and public universities.

"If Texas is to maintain a competitive position in the nation and sustain its own economy, it must expand research and development efforts and focus them on areas most import to the state," the report said.

Dole: 50-50 chance budget will be agreed upon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Bob Dole, said today the chances are "about 50-50" that President Reagan and Congress will agree on a budget compromise to bring the projected fiscal 1983 federal budget deficit below $100 billion.

Dole, a Kansas Republican, said congressional and administration negotiators who have been meeting in secret to find a compromise have gone about as far as they can. The next moves are up to Reagan and the Speaker of the House, Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., he said

"I don't think we can accomplish much more," Dole said on NBC's "Today" show. "Maybe we ought to have two or three more meetings this week, but it's time for the two big players to suit up."

Sources say tax increases of about $135 billion over the next three years, a $35 billion cut in Reagan's defense buildup and reductions in Social Security cost-of-living increases are among the compromise proposals.

Reagan has refused to consider any major change in the three-year, 25 percent tax cut he won from Congress last year, and both the president and O'Neill have rejected cuts in the Social Security increases.

"Sometime this week we should have some indication from both the president and the speaker that we're on the right course or the wrong course," Dole said.

He said the chances of agreement are "about 50-50, though they've improved a great deal in the last week, and, with active participation of the president and the speaker, they'll be much better."

Dole acknowledged that a 4 percent income surtax on high-income taxpayers is among the proposals to avoid reducing or postponing the third-year tax cut, which was part of Reagan's 1981 tax package.

"We haven't agreed on any tax figures, but it's going to be a big number ... billions and billions," he said.

"Nobody wants to reduce Social Security, but we want to lower interest rates and that's one of the factors being considered."

If a compromise is not reached, "then we have real problems," Dole said. "The president's budget will not be adopted; we'll do very little in Congress."

Items worth $1,300 taken in burglary

Two residence burglaries — one in which more than $1,300 worth of belongings was taken — and a business burglary were being investigated by Midland police this morning.

Barbara Walker of 501 W. Estes Ave., Apt. D, told police her apartment was burglarized between 6:30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Sunday. Taken in the burglary, she told officers, was a 14-inch television, meat from the freezer, a class ring, a ladies' dress, miscellaneous baby clothes and $550 in cash. Total dollar value of the loss was listed as $1,305.

H.E. Collins of 1304 Connell reported a burglary at that location which occurred between 8 p.m. and 9 p.m. Sunday. Taken in that burglary was a 19-inch color television valued at $419.95.

Max Scarbrough of 4318 Leddy Drive reported a burglary at Driggers Supply Co., 1300 W. Front Ave., that occurred between 1 p.m. Saturday and 4:15 p.m. Sunday. Entry to the building was gained by kicking open the front door, according to police reports.

Taken from an unlocked safe inside the business was about $200, according to reports.

Police, Fire Roundup

Midland firemen and emergency medical personnel experienced a relatively uneventful weekend. Firemen were called to the scene of a warehouse fire shortly after 1 a.m. Sunday and spent about 20 minutes extinguishing the blaze. That fire, at 1800 W. Front Ave., slightly damaged the warehouse.

Arson is suspected in that blaze, fire department reports indicated.

Gas station clerk robbed at gunpoint

ODESSA — A gun-wielding bandit robbed a clerk at the Sav-Mor gas station at 4230 N. Grandview of an undetermined amount of cash at 9:15 p.m. Sunday.

The clerk, James Curtis Wooten, told police he was preparing to close the station when a man walked up, displayed a gun and demanded cash. After getting the cash the man left in an unknown direction of travel, police said.

Wooten described the robber as weighing 160 pounds and wearing a blue T-shirt, jeans and a blue cap.

Missing men not linked to string of Atlanta slayings

ATLANTA (AP) — Two young black men disappeared last month, but there is no evidence to link their cases with a string of 28 slayings that terrorized Atlanta for nearly two years, police said Sunday.

The missing men, both slight of build, have mental problems, police have been told.

"There's no indication of any wrongdoing of a homicidal nature," said Acting Public Safety Commissioner George Napper. "We just don't know where they are."

Dallas still being considered as site of Republican convention

DALLAS (AP) — Republican Party officials planned to tour this city's hotels and meet with Dallas officials this week to resume negotiations aimed at satisfying President Reagan's wish and holding the 1984 GOP convention here.

"They want it badly down there," GOP Chairman Richard Richards said from Washington Sunday. "I think we're going to get together."

The party's convention site selection committee, headed by Richards, will meet with Dallas officials today and Tuesday and then report to the GOP executive committee, which will meet here Wednesday.

"Assuming we get together on the terms of a contract, I think the site committee will recommend Dallas," said Richards, adding that the recommendation would then have to be ratified by the Republican National Committee when it meets in June.

If Dallas is chosen this year, it would be the earliest either major party has made its convention choice.

"I DON'T THINK they have acted this early," said Richards. "But I'll tell you, in years ahead they're going to have to get this early because even now, for us to go in, the city of Dallas has to change a couple of conventions they already have scheduled.

"These companies and associations schedule their conventions so far in advance now that the political parties have to act well in advance."

Reagan sends Undersecretary of State Stoessel to Mideast

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will send Undersecretary of State Walter Stoessel to the Middle East this week in an effort to head off fighting between Israel and Palestinians in southern Lebanon, the White House said today.

"The situation still remains tense in the Middle East," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said. "Once again, we are in relatively continuous contact with governments in the area to urge them to use maximum restraint."

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said early last week that his nation might strike at "terrorist organizations" in retaliation for the murder of an Israeli diplomat in Paris.

On Saturday, Lebanese President Elias Sarkis said Israel had massed two armored divisions and 40,000 troops along their common border. Sarkis maintained that the Israelis were posed for an immediate attack and asked U.S. officials to persuade Israel to call off any planned invasion.

Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman Yassar Arafat had said Saturday he expected Israel to strike at Palestinian guerrillla positions in southern Lebanon within 48 hours.

The United States on Saturday appealed for all sides in the Middle East to "show the utmost restraint" and asked for "an end to all actions that contribute to tension and violence."

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis on Sunday that no attack has been decided upon, according to a U.S. embassy spokesman.

Speakes said the administration thought "it would be helpful and useful for Secretary Stoessel to go this week."

McNamara proposes NATO 'no first use' weapons policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara disagrees with the Reagan administration position that renouncing a NATO first strike with tactical nuclear weapons would mean the United States would have to increase its armed forces three-fold.

Conditions have changed in the 20 years since he advocated using nuclear threats to deter a non-nuclear attack on Europe by the Soviet Union, McNamara said Sunday on NBC's "Meet The Press."

When he was defense secretary during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, "we had a massive superiority in nuclear weapons to the Soviets. That does not exist now."

McNamara has proposed that NATO adopt a "no first use" policy on nuclear weapons in Europe.

But his idea was rejected by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who said it would give the Soviets an automatic victory on European battlefields because they have a big superiority in conventional arms.

Without the nuclear threat, Haig said, the United States would have to reinstitute the draft, triple the size of its armed forces and "put its economy on a wartime footing."

But McNamara disagreed. "We continually overestimate the strength of Soviet conventional forces and underestimate the strength of NATO conventional forces. I see no evidence whatsoever that a tripling of manpower or placing the nation on a wartime footing would be required."

McNamara said the nuclear weapons policy change would have no effect on the draft.

Heiden, Kristofferson's daughter in accident

LANCASTER, Calif. (AP) — The daughter of singer-actor Kris Kristofferson was in serious but improving condition after a motorcycle accident that also slightly injured Olympic gold medalist Eric Heiden, authorities said.

Tracy Kristofferson, 20, who suffered internal injuries and a head injury, remained in the intensive care unit of Antelope Valley Hospital Medical Center here, hospital spokeswoman Frankie Richards said Sunday night.

Gunman caused rioting to erupt in holiest of Jerusalem holy sites

JERUSALEM (AP) — On the Temple Mount in the ancient walled city of Jerusalem, modern political strife mixes with the prayers of Moslems and Jews on a rectangular stone platform only 300 yards by 450 yards.

The tiny hilltop is revered by Moslems as the third holiest place in the world after Mecca and Medina, and thousands of Palestinian Arab worshipers regularly go there to pray at the al-Aqsa Mosque, a low silver-domed structure, and at the golden-domed Mosque of Omar, also known as the Dome of the Rock.

THE HOLIEST SITE for Jews, the Western Wall — or more familiarly, the Wailing Wall — is part of the massive retaining wall for the Temple Mount, and thousands of Jewish pilgrims prayed there for Passover during the past week.

The wall is the last remnant of the second Jewish temple built in 538-515 B.C. and extensively rebuilt by Kind Herod around the time of Christ.

The Romans destroyed that Jewish temple in the year A.D. 70, and it has been a dream of some ultra-religious Israelis — and the nightmare of Moslems — to rebuild the temple on its original site.

Israel's official policy is to protect and maintain freedom of access to the holy sites of all faiths in Jerusalem. Since Israel captured East Jerusalem from Jordan in 1967, all governments have left authority over the Temple Mount itself to the Supreme Moslem Council.

The mount is thus one of the few places under Israeli control where the red, white, black, and green Palestinian national colors can be seen, in a plaque on a courtyard wall.

The significance of the plaque might not be understood by the hundreds of thousands of foreign tourists who visit the Temple Mount. They also may be puzzled by the large — but often ignored — signs announcing that Israel's chief rabbinate forbids entry to the mount.

THE REASON IS to prevent Jews from inadvertently desecrating the Holy of Holies — a site in the original temple whose location is no longer known. The site was forbidden to everyone but a special caste of high priests who went there to feel God's presence on the Jewish New Year and the Day of Atonement.

Most Orthodox Jews observe the ban, but each year there are a few clashes between Moslems and Jews as small groups of ultra-nationalists try to hold Jewish prayer services on the mount.

On Sunday, a Jewish gunman shot his way into the Mosque of Omar, one of Islam's holiest shrines, and emptied his M-16 automatic rifle in an attack that ignited Jerusalem's bloodiest Moslem riots in years. At least two people were killed and more than 120 injured. The fighting marked the first bloodshed since March 2, when an Arab guard was stabbed and a Jew was injured by a rock.

Israel's Supreme Court routinely rebuffs suits asking that it permit Jewish prayer services on the mount.

Last November the court said the matter was a political issue rather than judicial and, like past governments, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's has made no move to involve itself in the controversial issue.

Jews and Moslems have the same legend about Judgment Day: that the dead will rise from the Mount of Olives, which faces the Temple Mount, and cross a miraculously appearing bridge to the Temple Mount and join Mohammed — in the Islamic legend — or the Messiah in the Jewish version.

MOSLEMS BELIEVE MOHAMMED made his miraculous leap to heaven from the Temple Mount, and the two big mosques date from the end of the seventh century. They were converted into Christian places of worship in the time of the Crusaders and back into mosques in the 12th century.

Portillo announces recovery plans for volcano victims

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo said Sunday the government would spend $3.3 million to rebuild houses and reclaim farmland buried by the ashes of El Chinchonal volcano in southern Mexico.

He outlined the recovery plan in a meeting with Gov. Juan Sabines of Chiapas, one of two states declared a federal disaster zone after the volcano turned active March 29 and spread ashes over a 200-mile area.

Sabines said after the meeting in the Pacific port of Tapachula, 180 miles south of the peak, that most of his state's banana, cocoa and coffee crops had been destroyed and hundreds of head of cattle had died. Twenty-one people have been reported killed in the disaster.

Army patrols reported no progress in the search for 4,800 villagers believed to be trapped on the slopes of El Chinchonal. The Mexico City newspaper Excelsior quoted two peasants in Pichucalco as saying they had hiked 23 miles Saturday from a village on the slope and that there were 600 people surviving on food rations that would run out Monday.

An army foot patrol rescued 200 people from the slope last Wednesday, but dust, ash and smoke still clung to the 4,340-foot peak, preventing search helicopters from landing.

Even Moses available on computer

CHICAGO (AP) — The divine wisdom that Moses brought down from Mount Sinai on stone tablets is now encoded on the silicon chips of a computer — along with 3,000 years of sacred words on subjects ranging from adultery and abortion to uses of garlic and the right-to-strike.

They are the teachings of Jewish law, recorded hundreds of years ago by rabbis who pondered legal and moral dilemmas and penned their responses on scrolls everywhere from the sands of the Sahara to synagogues in Spain.

Now, this tapestry of ancient Jewish rules has been woven into the memory of a modern computer. It is a religious repository of some 40 million words, including almost 40,000 formal rabbinic "responsa," or authoritative replies on questions of Jewish tradition.

"The great authorities on Jewish laws wrote these decisions," said Rabbi Irving J. Rosenbaum, a coordinator of the computer system, the Responsa project. "It's like the Supreme Court decisions."

AND LIKE A set of legal decisions, the 1,500 rabbinic authors have written about topics ranging from the mundane — insurance policies — to the mystic — the use of garlic as a medicinal aid.

There are topical and thorny issues, too, such as abortion, homosexuality, the right to strike and life-support systems.

Within a matter of minutes, the computer can deliver a list explaining how a rabbi in Algiers in the 15th century and another in Poland 400 years later responded to whether a man can be kicked out of his home for beating his wife.

These decisions may not seem contemporary, Rosenbaum said, but "There are no new questions. There are only new people asking them."

The Responsa project, recently completed after 15 years of research, was compiled by Chicago's Institute For Computers In Jewish Life in conjunction with Bar-Ilan University, in Israel, which has its own computer.

The Chicago computer houses 200 volumes of work — most of them in Hebrew — which represent the ultimate source of social codes and values practiced by Jews since Moses walked down the windswept mountain with the Ten Commandments.

"Jews have lived in all parts of the world since their exile in 70 A.D.," said Rosenbaum. Often, he said, they have lived in autonomous communities, where they dressed, ate and married in accordance with Jewish laws.

"WHEN QUESTIONS came up, they were directed to local rabbinical authorities," Rosenbaum said. "The rabbi was the religious, ethical and legal authority."

As Jews migrated through Europe and the Mideast, this tradition followed.

"In the course of centuries, certain responsa became the authority," Rosenbaum said. "Even today, a rabbi or judge determining a question will still consult the responsa."

Though replies date back 1200 years, Rosenbaum said, "Everything in the responsa is traced back to the Bible or an interpretation of the Bible."

For example, Rosenbaum said, one commandment, 'Honor thy father and thy mother' could be applied to decide whether Jewish law says it is proper to send an aged parent to a nursing home.

On many issues, the responsa give divergent opinions, but in some issues there's unanimity, particularly in inter-faith marriages and adultery — both of which are generally considered taboo. Even there, exceptions are made.

Cuba halts visas

MIAMI (AP) — The government of Cuba canceled visas for more than 200 American tourists and Cuban expatriates just moments before they were to board a Havana-bound charter jet, a tour official says.

Saturday's cancellation marked the second consecutive day that customers of American Airways Charters Inc. discovered they could not make a trip to Cuba.

On Friday, the U.S. government ordered the company to shut down its operation, calling AAC an agent of the Cuban government. Friday's scheduled flight left Miami for Havana empty, but returned to Miami carrying tourists.

The government allowed the charter agency to continuing operating weekend flights through Monday to avoid stranding passengers in Miami or Havana.

It was not clear whether the Cuban decision applied to all non-nationals waiting to visit the island or whether it was an isolated incident.

Frank Reynolds, AAC supervisor of operations, said he received a call Saturday afternoon from company headquarters in Hialeah telling him to take passengers' baggage out of the Air Florida DC10 at Miami International Airport.

"They told me, 'Don't put anybody on the plane that is not a Cuban (national) because the (Cuban) government has revoked all visas,'" Reynolds said.

Following the Cuban announcement, Reynolds said the company's policy for the weekend would be to carry no one but Cuban nationals on Havana-bound flights. He said only 51 Cuban nationals were allowed to board flights over the weekend.

Attorneys will attempt to show officers did not cause drownings

By SALLY CARPENTER

DALLAS (AP) — Defense attorneys open their side of a racially sensitive trial today in an attempt to show three Limestone County officers did not cause the drownings of three teen-agers through negligence.

The youths were among several thousand blacks at Lake Mexia last June 19 for an annual celebration of Juneteenth, which commemorates the day in 1865 that Texas slaves learned of their freedom.

Testimony indicated the officers hustled the teen-agers through the crowd to a 14-foot boat they had brought across the lake from a sheriff's command post.

The boat, which had neither life jackets nor running lights, capsized 40 yards from shore. The three youths — one of whom could not swim — drowned. The two white officers swam back to shore and the black officer clung to the overturned craft and was rescued.

Defense attorneys were expected to arrive in court with case law to show why jurors should not hear the defendants' testimony before a Limestone County grand jury last summer.

Dallas County Criminal Court Judge Tom Price tentatively admitted the testimony into evidence, but said he would consider defense arguments today.

In place of the grand jury testimony, the defense wants deputy Kenny Elliott, reserve deputy Kenneth Archie and probation officer David Drummond to take the stand to give their accounts of events that June night.

The trio is charged with criminally negligent homicide, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of a year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Elliott and Drummond are white; Archie is black.

Defense attorneys indicated in opening statements that they would argue the young officers simply were doing their duty in arresting the youths and that they perceived the crowd that gathered around them as hostile.

The officers have said they did not drive a patrol car to the celebration that night because of traffic congestion on the one-lane bridge across the lake.

Three prosecution witnesses testified last week that the youths' arrests — for marijuana possession — probably were the first at the Central Texas festival. One former deputy said sheriff's officers were advised not to make arrests for minor offenses.

Officers and celebrants alike testified drinking and marijuana smoking were widespread at the three-day party.

The last state witness was an engineer for the boat's manufacturer who said the six men surpassed the boat's maximum weight limit by about 400 pounds.

Under cross-examination, other witnesses said the sign on the craft that specified the weight limit was too small to see in the dark.

The drownings have brought outcries from blacks who pushed for felony charges against the officers. Representatives of the NAACP and interested parties formed the Comanche Three Committee to pressure state and federal authorities for independent investigations, which are pending the trial's outcome.

The six jurors in the case have been sequestered during the trial, but on Thursday Price allowed them to go home for the Easter weekend. Price ordered the jurors to avoid discussion or news accounts of the trial.

Chicagoans rush to register guns

CHICAGO (AP) — A last-minute rush by Chicago handgun owners may have put as many as 7,500 weapons on the books before the city's freeze on handgun registrations went into effect, authorities say.

Officials will be counting the registrations following a wave of applicants who went to police before the freeze began Friday.

Police said the application rate was 10 times larger than usual in the days before the registration office closed Thursday. It remained closed because of Good Friday and the Easter weekend.

Under the new ordinance, proposed by Mayor Jane Byrne and passed by the City Council on March 19, applications postmarked no later than April 9 will be accepted through the mail.

The new law prohibits owning unregistered handguns within the city, with violators subject to a $500 fine. No new guns will be acepted for registration after April 9.

About 727,000 weapons — 475,000 of them handguns — were registered under Chicago's old registration law, which went into effect in 1968, said Sgt. Tony Figlioli, the city's gun registration chief. He said another 7,500 guns will probably be added to those figures when new registrations are counted.

Owners of previously registered handguns will have another six months to re-register them, or lose the right to keep the weapons.

The new law has sparked a swell of gun purchases, some officials said.

"I'll bet a lot of guns have come into Chicago since the law was passed," said Conrad Petersen, 67, a gun collector who says he has 35 weapons. "And they're going into weak hands, people who don't know how to handle a gun but want to get one."

Even under the old law, 1,438 guns were registered to felons by Dec. 31, 1981, Figlioli said. The new system will have all registered gun owners' names on file in a computer, he said, making it easier at least to find felons with registered weapons.

About a dozen guns have been surrendered in the northwest suburb of Morton Grove since a new anti-handgun ordinance went into effect there on Feb. 1, officials said. That law bans both possession and sale, and residents were asked to turn in their weapons.

Texan Oil rig worker says wife misinterpreted calls

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS

LA PORTE, Texas (AP) — An oil rig worker from this Houston suburb says his family misinterpreted his two phone calls from Argentina last week and contacted a congressman and the State Department, believing he had been placed under arrest by Argentine authorities.

Michael Martinez Jr., who worked on a British oil rig near the Falkland Islands, said that Argentine authorities cut off communications and shipments to the rig for three days after Argentina invaded the islands April 2.

"We had plenty of food and went about our jobs," said Martinez, who returned home Sunday.

Martinez called his wife Friday and Saturday. He said his wife, Marion, contacted the State Department after the first call, believing he was under arrest in Argentina.

Martinez' mother, Mary Martinez of Amarillo, also contacted Rep. Jack Hightower, D-Texas, whose office got involved.

Mrs. Martinez told The Associated Press she understood her husband to say the military was monitoring the conversation and that "the company did not know where he was for two days."

Martinez said the company always knew where he was and that he believed a telephone operator listened in on the phone call.

Martinez, 31, was working for Sonat Exploration Co. on the British drilling rig InterOcean 2 about 500 miles west of the Falkland Islands.

"That was the extent of it," Sonat official Aubrey Cornelius said when he heard what Martinez said Sunday. "There are no problems down there now."

Martinez said that when flights from the land base resumed April 5, each helicopter carried an armed Argentinan soldier.

"But we were never threatened," he said.

Martinez said the crew members were "about 80 percent British" but declined to specify how many workers operated the rig. He said he was not the only American aboard but also refused to give an exact number.

Martinez arrived in the coastal town of Rio Gallegos on April 9, four days after he was scheduled to leave for the United States, and was questioned by soldiers each time he stepped ouside.

"It wasn't like a gestapo thing," he said. "They asked me where I was going and what I was doing there. I assumed it was for security reasons."

He said he was told "I would probably not leave Argentina because the airport was being taken over by the military...I became both alarmed and frightened and called my wife and told her I had been detained. I also told her if I did not arrive home in two days to call the State Department."

Mrs. Martinez also said she had apparently misunderstood another company official, thinking he told her the InterOcean 2 was being moved into Chilean waters. Cornelius said the rig had not been moved.

Mrs. Martinez said company officials had called her Thursday to tell her the crew change on the rig was being delayed, but that nothing was out of the ordinary.

Cornelius said the crew change took longer than usual because the company was trying to hire non-British workers.

Civil rights activists plan march

ATLANTA (AP) — Civil rights activists are planning to march from Alabama to the nation's capital to demand extension of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, economic justice for the poor and arms control.

Dr. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said Sunday the marathon, five-state march will begin after a rally April 19 in Tuskegee, Ala.

The marchers, who will ride by bus or motorcade between the major towns on the route, will travel from Alabama through Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia before reaching Washington, D.C., in late June or early July, he said.

"We'll be going through congressional districts in all five states that have substantial black populations so that intensive voter registration can enable people in these districts to have a meaningful impact on the elections in 1982 and '84," Lowery said.

"We're not going marching in random," he said. "This really is a revival, a revival of hope for people on the brink of despair as they face the juggernaut of Reagan economics."

While extension of the Voting Rights Act will be the major goal of the march, Lowery said the SCLC also wants the demonstration to stress economic justice and arms control.

"We're concerned about rising unemployment," he said. "We'll also be marching for jobs and particularly against the cutbacks which have wiped out public service jobs and job training programs.

"Our third issue is the arms race. The $1.3 trillon proposed in arms spending over the next few years not only threatens the future of humankind but also wipes out social programs intended for the poor."

Lowery said a core of 50 to 100 marchers will travel the entire distance from Tuskegee to Washington, and will be joined in each community by local supporters.

While plans call for the marchers to ride between towns, he said the demonstrators will walk the last 40 miles into Washington for a rally.

Among those expected to participate in the march are Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young; Coretta Scott King, widow of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.; Jesse Jackson, head of the Chicago-based People United To Serve Humanity; and Douglas Frazier, president of the United Auto Workers.

The first stop after Tuskegee will be Albany, Ga., where the marchers plan to spend several days participating in voter registration drives, he said.

The 1965 Voting Rights Act was passed by Congress after the historic march led by King from Selma, Ala., to Montgomery, Ala.

'Pregnant' character puts health center in suit

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A cartoon illustration of a pregnant girl in a campus newspaper ad looked too much like Peppermint Patty, a character in the Peanuts comic strip, claims United Feature Syndicate.

The befuddled — and very pregnant — little character appeared in the ad and on posters promoting the health center at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

Headlines above the ads said, "Once is Enough," "Does this Offend You?" and "Love Won't Protect You."

The feature syndicate, which owns the copyright to the strip, filed suit in U.S. District Court, where a pretrial hearing was held last week.

The suit asks $50,000 for copyright infringement and a ban on further use of the Peppermint Patty image.

"They may think it's all a joke or a lark, but as we delve into it we find very little to laugh about," said attorney Louis Colombo, who represents the syndicate. "I look at what they did...and I have to say that it was distasteful. And obnoxious.

"We have done our best to keep the Peanuts characters out of political and social squabbles," Colombo said. "We don't have them endorsing Democratic or Republican candidates or abortion referendums. And we don't want them supporting some health services anti-pregnancy campaign."

Steve Underwood, assistant state attorney general who is defending the state, said a mountain is being made of a molehill.

"We just don't understand how something as innocuous and innocent could be subject to this kind of attack," he said.

"What we do say is that whether the whole thing was funny or unfunny, when they sue for this kind of thing they infringe on the First Amendment rights of newspapers," Underwood said.

Lawyers try to prevent Pruett's execution

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Defense attorneys this week will be in Hinds County Circuit Court seeking a new trial for Marion Albert Pruett, the North Carolina native who last Thursday was sentenced to die in the gas chamber for the kidnap-slaying of Mrs. Peggy Lowe.

If Circuit Judge William F. Coleman overrules the motion, Pruett's attorneys will have 30 days after the trial transcript is prepared to file briefs with the Mississippi Supreme Court, arguing legal points they hope will prevent their client's execution, now scheduled for May 20.

Bill Kirksey, one of the three attorneys who worked with Pruett in the case, said the major issue of Pruett's appeal will be the question of whether the state has the jurisdiction to prosecute, because Mrs. Lowe was actually slain in Sumter County, Ala., after her abduction in Jackson on Sept. 17, 1981.

Under state law, to obtain a capital murder conviction, the prosecution must prove that a defendant committed another felony during the commission of the murder.

Banks get funds shifted from savings institutions

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a "quiet run" apparently spawned by reports about the financial troubles of thrift institutions, Americans have shifted billions of dollars from them into commercial banks, analysts say.

Despite the fact that savers have never lost a cent in federally insured accounts, Americans moved an estimated $12 billion out of savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks last year into commercial banks, according to an analysis by Andrew Carron, a researcher for the Brookings Institution. That was about one-third of the net new deposit losses reported by those institutions in 1981.

Savers were "sometimes accepting a lower interest rate" to shift their money, he said.

"The only plausible explanation is that some people now believe banks are safe and thrifts are not," Carron said in recent congressional testimony. "The regulatory agencies call this the 'quiet run.'"

Savings and loans and mutual savings banks — thrift institutions — have been battered by high interest rates and inflation. The institutions, which have large portfolios of low-yielding mortgages, have to pay more to attract new money than they take in from those home loans. The result has been unprecedented losses for the industry.

Richard Pratt, who as chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board is chief federal regulator of S&Ls, has said that if interest rates stay at current levels, as many as 400 savings and loans could exhaust their capital this year. As a result of the growing number of weak institutions, regulators have put together a record number of mergers with stronger thrifts.

Pratt also said late last month that the thrifts are being hurt both by competition from high-paying money market mutual funds and by the shift of savings to commercial banks. He said the transfer to banks likely stemmed from "public apprehension over the state of the thrift industry."

"The evidence for the existence of this situation is that, for account categories where bank and thrift interest rates are the same, customers are shifting very large quantities of funds from S&Ls to commercial banks," he told the House Banking Committee.

The "wide publicity" about thrifts' problems, he said, has had "a sufficiently disquieting effect on great numbers of savers to erode their faith in the implicit assumption that Congress always would provide the (Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.) with enough funds to safeguard depositors."

Congress, at Pratt's urging, recently passed a resolution designed to reassure savers their savings in insured accounts in banks and savings and loans are backed by the "full faith and credit" of the U.S. government.

A saver's money in any of 3,700 participating S&Ls is insured to $100,000 by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., an arm of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The insurance corporation has some $7 billion in assets and a $750 million line of credit with the Treasury.

Deposits in some 14,800 state and national banks are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which has more than $12 billion in assets and a $3 billion line of credit with the Treasury.

Regulators used money from the S&L insurance fund to help arrange 23 mergers of weak savings and loans last year, up from 11 in 1980. So far this year, 10 assisted mergers have been approved and dozens more are expected. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has assisted nine mergers of mutual savings banks since last November.

Airline deregulation bringing changes in passenger handling

Associated Press

Fares aren't the only thing that are changing in the world of air travel. The gradual deregulation of the airline business also is bringing changes in the rules that protect passengers.

The Civil Aeronautics Board is scheduled to go out of business on Jan. 1, 1985, and there have been proposals to shut down the agency even earlier.

The CAB already has lifted many of the restrictions it used to impose on prices and routes, leading to the often-confusing fare wars in competitive markets.

Now, the agency is considering two other areas of passenger concern: overbooking and baggage problems.

Under current rules, an airline which overbooks a flight must follow a standard procedure when it winds up with more passengers than it has room for.

The airline first must ask for volunteers — people who are willing to travel on a later flight in exchange for some kind of compensation. The amount and type of compensation are negotiable.

IF THERE ARE NOT enough volunteers, the airline may start bumping people. Any passenger who is bumped involuntarily is automatically entitled to compensation equal to the one-way fare to his or her destination, with a minimum payment of $37.50 and a maximum of $200.

In the past, the airline had to double the compensation if it could not get bumped passengers to their destinations within two hours of the scheduled time — or four hours for international flights. That provision was suspended after the air traffic controllers went on strike.

At the same time, the CAB is looking at the whole overbooking problem in anticipation of the agency's coming loss of power. It asked for comment on a variety of options, including:

—Eliminating required compensation for passengers who could be seated on an alternate flight arriving within one hour of the original flight.

—Eliminating the $37.50 minimum to avoid the possibility of a bumped passenger on a low-cost flight being paid more than the price of his or her original ticket.

—Requiring airlines to compensate passengers only for the first leg of a flight when connecting flights are available.

The CAB also is considering several options to protect passengers in the event of lost, damaged or delayed baggage.

At present, passenger tariffs on file with the CAB are required to meet minimum standards regarding liability limitations, excess value coverage and airline responsibility for fragile and perishable items.

THE TARIFFS PROVIDE that each passenger's luggage is covered for up to $750. (Note: The coverage is per person, not per bag.) They also provide that individuals can purchase, from the carriers, extra coverage above the $750 limit.

The baggage liability standards are included only in the airline tariffs — not in the CAB's published regulations. The CAB authority in this area expires Jan. 1, 1983. The possible changes include:

—Eliminating all federal regulation of baggage practices and relying on competition to protect passengers.

—Eliminating all regulation except the $750 limit.

—Incorporating the key baggage liability rules in the CAB's formal regulations.

If you have a complaint involving overbooking, baggage handling or any other problem, you should try to resolve it with the airline staff at the airport or with the carrier's consumer affairs department.

If you cannot get satisfaction, write to the Civil Aeronautics Board, Bureau of Consumer Protection, Washington, D.C., 20428, or to one of the CAB regional offices in Des Plaines, Ill.; Fort Worth, Texas; Anchorage, Alaska; Miami, New York, Los Angeles or Seattle. The CAB will review your complaint and the airline's handling of it.

14-month-old takes frog jump

SPRINGFIELD, S.C. (AP) — Those old pros who have been bringing frogs to this rural community for years trying to win the Governor's Day Frog Jumping Contest might learn something from this year's winner — 14-month-old Gina Bonnette of Springfield.

Her frog Hoppy vaulted 10 feet, 5 inches to capture first place in the 16th annual event Saturday before a crowd estimated at 15,000.

Gina was too young to explain the secret of her frog's success, so her father, Gene Bonnette, explained the winning strategy: "We kept the frog locked up until today."

Bonnette's nephew, Eddy, had the runner-up frog: Swamp Fox, which jumped 9 feet, 1 inch.

The winning amphibian and its entourage will be flown to the biggest jumping contest of them all this summer — the "grand nationals" in Calaveras County, Calif.

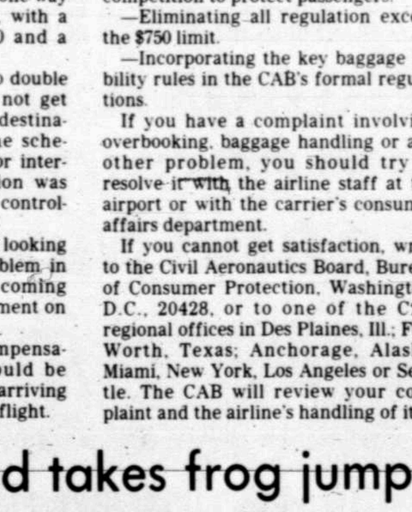

Many trainers were unable to get their frogs to budge, although they tried everything from flailing rubber hoses to yelling and waving hats to coax the lazy animals into action.

There were a lot of theories about how to get the frogs moving. Wil Harvey, 10, said his frog did not jump because, "I didn't tell him I'd cut off his legs and fry them" if he refused.

The most heated competition came in the municipal division, which included frogs entered by politicans.

The frog belonging to Mayor Richard Phillips Sr. took first place. State Rep. Michael R. Daniel, a candidate for lieutenant governor, saw his frog come in second.

All Illinois wants prison in its backyard

CENTRALIA, Ill. (AP) — The last time state corrections officials looked for a site for a new prison, they found few takers, as most communities didn't want such a facility in their backyards.

Now, however, they're being welcomed with open arms by officials from more than 20 towns who believe that having a medium-security prison in their community may be just the thing to make crime pay in a harsh economic climate.

Some local communities are using pep bands, poetry and politicking to woo Gov. James H. Thompson and Illinois Corrections Director Michael Lane over to their side.

"It's phenomenal," said Nic Howell, spokesman for the Department of Corrections, noting the turnaround from five years ago, when the state had problems trying to find a location for a prison.

"People in these communities are seeing the problems that they have and are coming up with a unique idea to solve that problem — get a prison," he said.

The proposed 750-bed, $50 million prison would employ 425 people at an annual payroll of about $9 million. Competition for the medium-security facility, which would house people convicted of non-violent crimes, has been fierce from the northern Illinois town of Belvier to Eddyville in the south.

"They're seeing their neighbors out of work, they're seeing very proud people having to go to the government to get assistance...and it's tough," Howell said.

Budget-conscious city officials aren't the only ones getting into the act. Business representatives, school officials, union leaders, church groups and high school bands have turned out at local public hearings to welcome Lane and representatives of Thompson.

Officials hope to recommend a site to Thompson by the end of this month, Howell said. The governor is expected to decide by May or June.

Perhaps the most visible pro-prison campaign comes from Mount Sterling, in west-central Illinois, where residents formed a group known as the Brown County Chain Gang.

About 2,500 people — half the county's population — showed up at the public hearing. The high school band played.

For Valentine's Day, officials sent Thompson and Lane a dozen roses each. An attached note said: "When you make your decision on a medium-security prison, you'll find not a frown in the county of Brown."

Mount Sterling officials also sent a 130-car caravan to the Capitol on March 24. They also are planning a postcard drive aimed at Thompson, listing reasons why Brown County should be picked.

"Where other communities are looking for a shot in the arm because times are tough, we're looking for a blood transfusion to save the county," said John Oliver, a Chamber of Commerce vice president and co-chairman of the Brown County Chain Gang.

He said county unemployment hit 8.9 percent in February, but added there is no local industry and many people have to go elsewhere for work.

"I think people see the predicament we're in," Oliver said. "Everybody's felt it and pulled together for this like nothing else. Our public hearing was almost like a pep rally."

At the hearing in the central Illinois city of Streator, someone whipped out a couple of apples and said, "We want you to remember Streator as the apple of your eye," Howell said.

The western Illinois city of Galesburg took a different tack and rented a billboard near the governor's mansion in Springfield.

Several communities have promised free land for the prison.

Corrections officials say the state will need another 2,000 beds by early 1985 to meet the continued rise in inmate population at Illinois' 13 adult prisons. The prison population is expected to exceed 17,000 by mid-1985.

Colleges find yearbooks dying campus breed

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — In 1950, Arlington State College students chose "Reveille" as a new name for their college yearbook. But the students of 1982 just don't seem to care about their yearbook anymore and "Taps" probably would be a more appropriate name.

"Reveille" is dying.

The school is now the University of Texas at Arlington with an enrollment of more then 20,000 students, most of whom live off-campus somewhere in the huge Dallas-Fort Worth metropolitan area and commute to school.

Dwindling interest in "Reveille" in recent years has left some editions of the annual more than $10,000 in the red. The projected loss for the edition now in production is $8,405.

Student Publications Director Dorothy Estes said she analyzed the losses and poor sales and decided to omit "Reveille" from the student publications budget she submitted for the 1982-83 school year — in effect, a mercy killing.

"IF THE STUDENTS really demonstrated an interest, I would find a way," said Ms. Estes. "I already have in the past."

The yearbook's problems are not unusual. Sluggish sales and rising production costs have killed yearbooks even at universities where the books had been a tradition since the late 19th century.

Texas Christian University, for example, stopped issuing its "Horned Frog" in 1973 when only 500 students bothered to pick up the 2,600 yearbooks that had been published. North Texas State University dropped its annual, "Yucca," about the same time.

Should the "Reveille" vanish, said school archivist Bob Gamble, the university will lose more than just a coffee-table book of limited sentimental value. The yearbooks, he said, are history.

"We find them a valuable source of information about past classes, sporting events, individuals and even building construction because it's the only place you find the documentation in one place...we rely on them heavily to answer reference questions," Gamble said.

"They are really important sources of historical information. They bring it all together in one place and we don't have anything else like it. We were really distressed when we heard that the yearbook may be stopped."

Ms. Estes said the problem is obvious — although UTA's enrollment now approaches 25,000, only 1,877 copies of this year's annual have been subscribed.

Last year's book sold 3,176 copies, meaning sales plunged 40 percent in 12 months, she said.

In the past five years the book has made money but once, a slim $593 profit in 1980, records show. It broke even in 1978 and lost a total of $20,550 in the other three years, costs that had to be covered by student publications funds.

MS. ESTES SAID cutting corners on production, trimming the staff to seven students, reducing the number of pages from 488 to 384 and doing away with color reproduction have not erased the deficit. The current book has projected expenses of $61,420, against total resources of $53,015.

College annuals have a history of such troubles, said Dick LoPachin of Taylor Publishing Co. in Dallas. LoPachin, 52, runs Taylor's yearbook division and claims about 30 years' experience in the business. He estimates Taylor prints about 4 million yearbooks annually.

"The marketing of a yearbook has almost become a separate job in itself," he said. "It's (difficult)...to make a campus aware that a yearbook even exists.

"The commuter school presents more of a problem to make the student aware...because he's on campus for a couple of hours and then he leaves."

Frank Ragulsky, former director of student publications at Southern Methodist University, estimated about 80 percent of the SMU student body buys the "Rotunda."

"Let me put it in a nutshell for you," he said. "In...commuter schools, most of the yearbooks are dying. Schools that have a very strong Greek (fraternity-sorority) influence are going to do better."

Countering that, however, is TCU, which has active fraternities and sororities as well as a dead yearbook. The school twice tried to revive the "Horned Frog" in the 1970s but both editions did poorly.

Reagan a little more visible on Caribbean trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, rarely seen by the folks on the streets of the U.S. cities he visits, was more visible — at least by presidential standards — on his trip to the Caribbean.

While he moved about, as he does at home, in what amounts to a hermetically sealed security cocoon, he may have been seen personally by more local residents — and maybe even more Americans — than when he is on U.S. trips.

In Kingston, Jamaica, hundreds of local citizens lined an airport fence to watch Reagan step from Air Force One. An even larger crowd showed up at Grantley Adams International Airport in Barbados for his arrival. Crowds are rarely if ever allowed to gather and watch him emerge from his airplane in the United States.

And at dusk Thursday, when a small U.S. military helicopter carried Reagan into Bridgetown from his vacation villa, hundreds of Babardians welcomed him at Dellamer Park, the temporary landing zone.

Along the north end of Barbados' fashionable West Coast facing the Caribbean Sea, there usually were some Americans waiting to wave to Reagan when his helicopter landed or took off near his hideaway.

But by spending so much time in helicopters for security purposes, aide say, Reagan missed some of the local sights.

In Jamaica, for instance, the route to the Norman Manley International Airport would have taken him through a run-down neighborhood where black and pink pigs were spotted moseying along the roadway and goats meandered among shanties and buses clogged the air with diesel fumes.

ONCE THE BUSINESS of meeting with the leaders of eastern Caribbean nations was concluded Thursday, the second day of the president's trip, Reagan's time here was spent in a fashion similar to that of any tourist staying at some of the lavish resort hotels. He swam, walked the beach, and skimmed flat, surf-worn stones on the surface of the shimmering aqua marine sea.

He borrowed the sprawling home of Paul H. Brandt, a Fort Worth, Texas, furniture manufacturer. The villa, "Casa de Pablo," features walls of solid coral stone, two landscaped acres of terraced garden, a courtyard, swimming pool and a spectacular view of the sea from atop a hillside.

Meals usually were taken at the home of actress Claudette Colbert, a 5 to 10-minute helicopter ride away.

"Miss Colbert's got a good cook," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes.

REAGAN RECEIVED CABLES with intelligence briefings as he does every day he travels, but he had little contact with aides here or elsewhere. He spoke with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. for five minutes Friday while Haig was over the mid-Atlantic on his way from London to Buenos Aires. He spoke with the secretary again on Saturday, Speakes said.

But, typically, Speakes said one day around noon, "I don't think anyone's seen him this morning except Mrs. Reagan." The next day, Speakes predicted "no one will see him until about noon."

As on other presidential vacation trips, reporters and photographers trying to get a glimpse of a relaxed chief executive and first lady played a cat and mouse game with his staff and Secret Service agents.

Cable News Network placed cameras at either end of the crescent-shaped Cobbler Cove Beach where Miss Colbert's house is situated.

At one point Mrs. Reagan and the actress were so engrossed in conversation as they strolled along the sand that they did not spot the camera until they were about 15 feet away. They smiled, waved, and turned to walk away.

ABC News chartered a 40-foot boat to help them cover the president from the water, and with the help of a telephoto lens, The Associated Press captured a picture of the president that clearly showed the scar of the operation following his shooting.

Saudis warn Arab conflict could escalate problems

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The Saudi state radio cautioned Sunday that escalating intra-Arab tensions would allow Israel to inflict "a catastrophic blow ... which may destroy the Arabs this time."

Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat predicted Saturday that Israel planned to attack within 48 hours to wipe out the 15,000 guerrillas based in Lebanon.

The Israeli Cabinet held a six-hour session Sunday. But U.S. Ambassador Samuel L. Lewis was quoted by his embassy spokesman as saying Prime Minister Menachem Begin said no decision on a Palestinian attack had been reached.

"Israel is given unprecedented power by the fact that the Arab states are waging sharp conflicts against one another and behaving in a manner lacking rationality," the Saudi radio said in a commentary.

"The Arab mood is in an unusual state of saturation, and the (Israeli) blow would leave far-reaching implications on the future of the area for a long time to come, leading to a state of permanent despair among the Arab people.

"Transposing the conflict with Israel into a conflict among the Arab states themselves represents the basis for the catastrophe, which we fear will be destructive this time," the radio said.

In related developments, the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Wattan reported that Arafat had telephoned Saudi King Khaled to ask for his "intervention with the United States" to "pressure Israel into abandoning a planned attack on south Lebanon." There was no immediate confirmation here of Al-Wattan's report.

The Saudi media earlier this week maintained that Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy was thwarting efforts by the PLO to convene an Arab summit conference on the Lebanese situation.

The Saudi radio commentary came as the Kuwaiti Cabinet deplored the deterioration of relations between Syria and Iraq.

Syria announced last week it was closing its borders with Iraq and suspended the pumping of Iraqi and Persian Gulf oil through its territory.

Some Gulf-area newspapers said Syria's action was aimed at supporting Persian Iran in its 19-month-old war with Arab Iraq.

"We hope wisdom will prevail and tension will subside...in this critical stage of the Arab nations' history," Kuwait's minister of state, Abdel-Aziz Hussein, said after the Cabinet's weekly session.

Israeli jets fly over Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets thundered over Beirut Sunday and drew anti-aircraft fire over Sidon from Palestinian guerrillas on alert for a possible Israeli invasion of southern Lebanon.

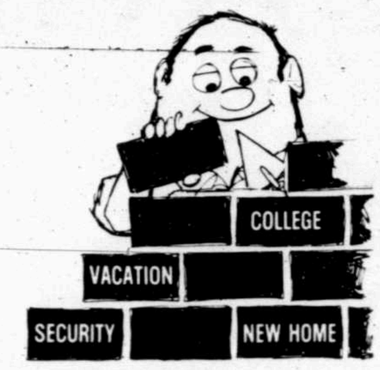

The Lebanese government said Israel had massed 40,000 troops at the border it shares with Lebanon, and the Reagan administration appealed for restraint. U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon said after meeting with Lebanese officials in Beirut that the situation was dangerous

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin assured U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis during a three-hour meeting Sunday in Jerusalem that Israel had not decided whether to attack southern Lebanon, U.S. Embassy spokesman Jeff Dietrich said. Begin's spokesman, Uri Porat, refused to comment on the embassy report.

Israel regularly makes reconnaissance flights over Lebanon, but sources in the southern port city of Sidon told The Associated Press they were more frequent Sunday.

Report details Korean concentration camps

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korean officials say there are at least eight concentration camps in North Korea with an estimated 105,000 political prisoners, all serving life sentences.

Recent defectors confirmed the isolated mountain camps were opened after the Korean War in 1953 to intern "dangerous elements" and enlarged in the early 1970s to hold those believed opposing policies of President Kim Il-Sung and his politically powerful son, Kim Jong-il, the officials said.

In an elaborate presentation, the Ministry of Culture and Information said detailed information about concentration camps was disclosed by a North Korean intelligence agent, Kim Yong-jun, who it said defected on Jan. 7.

The ministry said Kim's information was corroborated and supplemented by two other defectors. He and one of the defectors spoke with reporters at a briefing, but the other one was reported to be ill.

"Living in caves, mud huts and shanties, (prisoners) barely subsist on potatoes and roots," the ministry said. "There are no medical or recreational facilities at all. Even under such miserable living conditions, they are forced to do hard labor.

"Only death relieves them of extreme suffering, as they are committed to the camps for life."

A summary opening a 36-page booklet accused North Korea of "callous disregard for human rights." The South Korean government has often been criticized for alleged violations of human rights, and the material on concentrtion camps in the North appeared aimed in part at offsetting such charges.

The booklet said that, in addition to President Kim's critics, the prisoners include people considered disloyal to the North Korean Workers (Communist) Party, officials unhappy with the designation of the younger as successor to his father, members of families of North Koreans who fled to South Korea and disillusioned Korean residents of Japan who apparently were arrested while visiting the North.

The booklet said the prisoners must work more than 12 hours a day without pay and at night are forced to attend two-hour "ideological re-education" sessions featuring "self-criticism."

"One reason for the expansion of concentration camps was that it was thought inadvisable to confine them in prisons along with common criminals," the booklet said.

"Concentration camps were considered more suitable for confining not only political opponents of Kim Il-sung and Kim Jong-il, but their families as well, in order to completely isolate them from society."

Much of the material in the 36-page booklet dealt with a camp in Onsonggun county, in the northernmost province of Hamgyongpukdo. Security is provided by barbed wire, land mines, and electric fences, it added.

Britons on top of world, ready for home

LONDON (AP) — Two British explorers bade farewell to the North Pole and began the last and possibly most hazardous leg of their 52,000-mile journey around the world via both poles.

Sir Ranulph Fiennes and Charles Burton, who planted a Union Jack on their arrival at the top of the world Sunday, mounted their snowmobiles for the 600-mile ride to the edge of the Arctic Circle. They were expected to rendevous in five or six weeks with a ship that will carry them home to England after nearly three years away.

The two set a record by crossing to the North Pole from the Canadian coast in 45 days.

In a message relayed by radio to the British Broadcasting Corp., Fiennes warned that hazards were now posed by ice breaking into floes due to unseasonably warm weather.

"Satellite pictures and aircraft have reported enormous areas of open pack ice and sea normally frozen for another two months," he said.

"So we have got to race as fast as we can, hope that the winds which break up the ice stay away and that low temperatures which make travel very unpleasant indeed but which keep our chances open continue."

Prince Charles, the expedition's royal patron, who has called it "mad but marvelous," sent the explorers congratulations on their arrival at the North Pole, where they celebrated by sipping champagne in 26-degree-below-zero weather.

"Whatever the hazards, we are over the top," the 38-year-old Fiennes radioed to London.

Easter in Ireland peaceful

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Three masked Irish Republican Army gunmen fired a pistol salute Sunday in Belfast's Milltown cemetery to mark the anniversary of the 1916 Easter rebellion in Dublin against British rule.

Police and troops in this British province were on full alert for the traditional demonstrations, attended by several hundred people.

Helicopters clattered above the cemetery — burial place of Bobby Sands, the first of 10 jailed guerrillas who starved themselves to death last year in a seven-month hunger strike demanding political-prisoner status.

But security forces took no action, and no incidents were reported.

At Crosmaglen in South Armagh, troops watched silently as a masked guerrilla pledged the outlawed IRA would continue its violent campaign until Britain withdrew from the province.

The IRA is fighting to unite the Protestant-majority British province with the mostly Catholic Republic of Ireland.

A time of crises

With all the potential crises facing the United States government — Poland, Afghanistan, the Middle East and, now, the Falkland Islands — the last thing this country needs is another potential crisis. But that's exactly what may be shaping up in Moscow as Leonid Brezhnev, general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party and President of the Soviet Union, enters what may prove to be his final days.

Brezhnev's illness and hospitalization of recent days, much like others of recent months, aroused speculation once again that the Soviet Union's leader of the past 18 years is approaching death or may step down, due to his failing health.

In either event, the future course of the Soviet Union, its relationship with the United States and, very possibly, the future security of the entire world will be determined in large part by the occurrences of the next few months.

With Brezhnev out of power, both the United States and the Soviet Union would face uncertain times. Already the Soviet Union is suffering under a financial crisis brought on by a cumbersome and repressive system of economic management that discourages initiative and innovation and encourages waste and inefficiency. Chronic shortages have wracked the Soviet Union the past few years and one recent report indicated one or more members of the average Soviet family spend two hours a day in line shopping for food and other necessities.

The same report, in Newsweek, indicated that in the six months ending last June, Soviet deposits with Western banks dropped from $8.5 billion to just $3.6 billion signalling a severe financial situation in the land of the sickle and hammer.

Jockeying for power in the Politburo undoubtedly is underway as Brezhnev approaches the end. But there is no clear replacement for him although a number of possible successors have been mentioned in recent years, such as Konstantin Chernenko or Andrei Kirilenko. But neither these two Politburo members or any of the others virtually unknown to the West appears to hold a lead for the Soviet Union's leadership post.

That choice will be fundamental to the future direction of the Soviet Union and its role in the world power structure. If the Soviet Union cannot put its financial house in order as appears unlikely, the entire Soviet empire may crumble, a development which would drastically alter the world landscape politically and, without a doubt, pave the way for a power struggle by China and a number of Third World powers.

Such a power struggle likely would create a threat to world peace far surpassing anything experienced by the United States and the Soviet Union. Even the selection of a leader to replace Brezhnev probably would not constitute as acute a situation, although an unknown could bring new, more aggressive policies to the workers' state that, again, might threaten the world balance.

Communism's crisis and Leonid Brezhnev's final days certainly will hold the world's attention.

Twisted teaching's threat

One of the best places to brainwash is in the schools. Teachers who want to twist the facts, or omit facts, have a marvelous opportunity to warp the minds of unsuspecting youngsters.

Leaders of fascist and communist nations have known this for a long time. Some of them have rewritten history so cleverly that students in many lands are influenced by textbooks that distort, or delete essential information. Bernard D. Kaplan, The Hearst Newspaper correspondent in France, gave an example in a recent column.

Kaplan wrote from Paris: "Laurent Bergheaud is a 24-year-old honors graduate in modern history who plans to teach the subject, but he was unaware that Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin ordered the murder of his arch-rival, Leon Trotsky.

"In fact, he says that none of his teachers at his university or earlier ever referred to Stalin as a dictator. Neither did they indicate that under his 25-year reign tens of millions of Soviet citizens died in labor camps and political prisons."

Kaplan selected an appropriate phrase when he referred to this as "a highly sanitized version" of the history of the Soviet Union and communism since 1917. He pointed out that such "sanitizing" is not limited to Soviet-dominated nations, nor are the writers and teachers of such history always communists "or even pro-Soviet in the usual sense." As a French teacher told Kaplan, all he was interested in was a "balanced assessment."

What they get, of course, is not a balanced view, but a bungled view.

Let us hope America's parents and teachers are sufficiently vigilant to prevent any comparable brainwashing from happening here.

Another View:

Consider the people

In working to stabilize the Caribbean basin, is the administration inadvertently destabilizing Puerto Rico? This is the foreboding of Puerto Ricans close to the mainland Democratic Party. They feel that the tariff and tax privileges the administration now proposes to extend to the whole region will simply cancel out the advantage those privileges — the heart of "Operation Bootstrap" — have conferred on the commonwealth. The governor and other Puerto Ricans close to Ronald Reagan reply that the president's Caribbean Basin Initiative does protect the island, but they are awfully jittery about it.

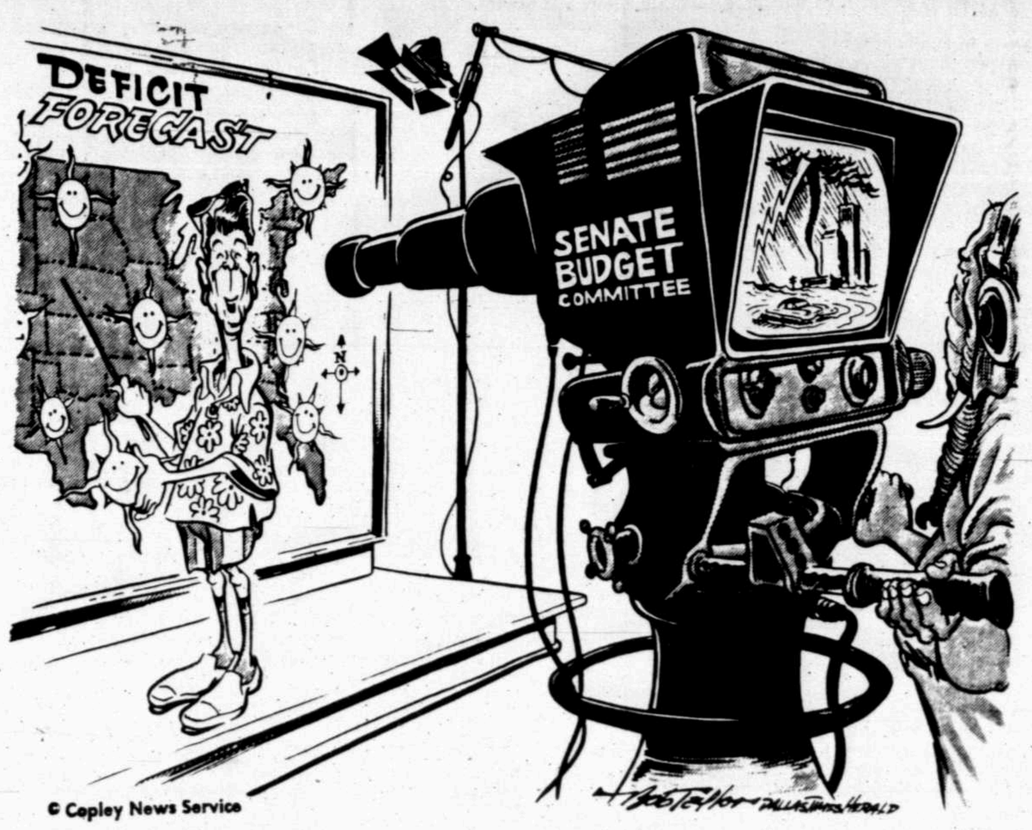

Already, Puerto Rico, with a per capita income half that of the poorest state and an economy sadly dependent on federal transfer payments, was the American jurisdiction most hurt by federal budget cuts. With the Initiative, the hurt deepens. Puerto Rico pays a special price for the Reagan domestic policy and a special price for the Reagan foreign policy. These are American citizens, and it's not fair.

The critics argue that the island, while more advanced than most intended beneficiaries of the Caribbean Initiative, is still a developing country and needs to be relieved of the burdens that an undifferentiating federal law now imposes. Let Puerto Rico control imports while its industry grows, the island's house proposes; let the island avoid more expensive American shipping, and so on.

There are some sensible ideas here. The trouble is, many of them cut across the administration's guiding policy — to put the island on a statehood course or, in the shorter run, to treat it within the context of the "new federalism." This tilts the administration against proposals whose secondary effect is to strengthen the island's commonwealth status and, not incidentally, the Democrats.

The most likely result of this confrontation on an economic program is the same stalemate that has curdled the status debate in recent years. A break is essential, and we think we know what it should be. The administration should grant that its first responsibility is not to one status, statehood, but to the people. That means living with commonwealth, because it exists and is flexible, and consulting with all political elements to agree on the best development idea regardless of their implication for the ill-starred status debate. After all, even Mr. Reagan's political opponents basically accept his fundamental economic insight — that the curse of welfarism on the island must be licked. If the president could turn from the form of status to the substance of development, he might yet lead the turnaround the island desperately needs.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Was Falkland invasion practice for future?

WASHINGTON — The Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands may be a warmup for a future assault on Antarctica. But next time, U.S. toes may be tramped on.

Jack Anderson

Secret CIA documents point out that the conditions which led to this month's Argentine aggression in the South Atlantic apply even more strongly to Antarctica: (1) a reported abundance of oil; (2) the desire to divert the public's attention from domestic strife; (3) a long-standing legal acclaim; and (4) national pride.

The CIA papers give this background on the Falklands furor: An oil-thirsty Argentina hopes "to lay the basis for a claim to oil deposits believed to exist near the Falklands" and, at the same time, to create "a useful diversion from domestic turmoil."

According to the CIA, a British research team, attracted by the scent of oil, made a foray into Falkland waters in 1976. As the British approached the islands, "a series of intercepted naval communications (indicated that) an Argentine destroyer sought to halt the British research vessel Shackleton near the islands and threatened to fire into its hull when the Shackleton refused to comply."

This incident on the high seas was a prelude to today's British-Argentine showdown over the Falklands. Explains the CIA: Argentina has "refused to recognize British sovereignty over the Falklands, and the century-old dispute has been made worse by Argentine suspicions that (the British have been exploring for) oil deposits in the area."

There have been similar tensions over the Antarctic. Relates the CIA: "Overlapping claims of the United Kingdom, Argentina and Chile at the Antarctic peninsula (have) sparked much political heat and, at least once, even gunfire."

The United States, which explored the frozen continent in the 1820s, has more right than the other claimants to the Antarctic. But instead of claiming the land, the United States sought to mediate the dispute and persuaded the rivals to sign a 1959 treaty temporarily setting aside their claims.

Nevertheless, Argentina has continued to assert sovereignty over a portion of Antarctica and has bolstered its claim by performing marriages and flying pregnant women there to give birth to Argentine citizens on the disputed territory.

Secret White House documents also point out that "Argentina geographically dominates the ocean routes between the South Atlantic and Pacific Oceans .... Were the Panama Canal not operable or available, or in the event of a protracted war, this route would have a high strategic importance ..."

My associate Dale Van Atta, who recently visited Antarctica, found that Argentina has been forceful in pressing its territorial claims. The Argentine junta has been stimulated no doubt by the discovery of rich oil and mineral deposits on the icy continent.

Given the same incentives that led to the Falklands adventure, the Argentine generals may eventually decide to occupy the Antarctic peninsula, intelligence sources suggest. Any such move would have to overrun a permanent U.S. base staffed by scientists.

The secret White House papers urge "a concerted diplomatic effort to reach some agreement with Argentina .... Such an effort could possibly head off what otherwise might become a divisive (issue) which would adversely affect the excellent U.S.-Argentine cooperation in Antarctic research and logistics, or might have even more serious consequences for our relations."

UNDER THE DOME: Members of Congress are professional boosters of home-state products, but usually not of one brand over another. So when Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, sent a letter to military-exhange officers suggesting they stock a particular brand of macadamia nuts and report back to him, it outraged a rival nut processor and at least one of the exchange officers. The letter plugging the Hawaiian specialty included a brochure and a price list and a request that the exchange officers report back "on this matter at your earliest convenience."

— Rep. Mervyn Dymally, D-Calif., took exception to my use of the word "junket" to describe an official trip he took to various Caribbean nations, including Trinidad, where he was born. "As a foreign-born black, and the only one in Congress, I take the message to Third World countries that the American dream is still alive," Dymally wrote. "You cannot evaluate that message in terms of dollars and cents." He added that he saved the taxpayers some money by staying with relatives in Trinidad.

— In the official biography distributed by his office, the first reference to Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., is followed by a phonetic spelling of his last name. More than a year after he attained the high-profile job of Senate Budget Committee chairman, many people still need to be told that Domenici is pronounced "doe-MEN-uh-chee."

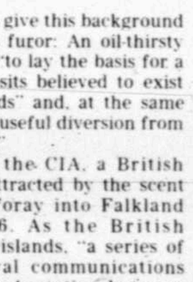

— Another Italian-American in Congress has a potentially more serious problem. Rep. Guy Molinari, R-N.Y., is allergic to garlic.

INSIDE REPORT:

Reagan a prisoner of Pennsylvania Avenue

WASHINGTON — The weekly five-minute radio talks that Ronald Reagan began April 3 are a shrunken version of what was proposed as full-blown fireside chats, a miniaturization symptomatic of what ails his troubled presidency.

Rowland Evans

While outsiders have pleaded with the White House for months to put President Reagan on television regularly to explain his philosophy and his policies, the senior staff has resisted. Five minutes on the radio every Saturday at the questionable time of early afternoon (E.S.T.) is a compromise that may not be too late but certainly is too little.

Robert Novak

This is part of the isolation syndrome at the White House that led troubled junior staffers months ago to describe the president as a prisoner of Pennsylvania Avenue. The senior staff, intent on control, has severely limited outside access to Reagan and Reagan's access to the outside.

What makes this pertinent is the difference in tone and substance between the president and his senior aides on taxes, defense spending and Central America. He is inherently ideological; they are essentially pragmatic compromisers. The same aides who flinch at Reagan going to the nation to plead his case want to limit his exposure to outsiders who might bolster his ideological convictions.

Thus, the week that ended with the parsimonious five-minute radio talk began with the second straight cancellation of Reagan's weekly meetings with Republican congressional leaders. No explanation was offered.

The suspected reason was the senior staff's concern that free-wheeling talks between Reagan and the Republican leaders might disrupt chief of staff James Baker's secret budget negotiations with House Democrats. The unstated, underlying fear was that the president might find potent support in his adamancy against abandonment of his tax and defense policies (while Baker promotes three-year defense cuts of up to $50 billion).

Long before the Baker negotiations, the weekly meeting with congressional leaders had become a source of concern to some presidential aides. These wide-open sessions break the protective shield around the president, particularly with the presence of Rep. Jack Kemp, chairman of the House Republican Conference.

Kemp is described to reporters by senior staffers in unprincipled language, but he may well be Ronald Reagan's favorite congressman. Yet, he has never been afforded a single private meeting with Reagan as president. His access comes through meetings of the congressional leaders and of Reagan's outside economic advisers (the "graybeards").

But the most recent meeting of the graybeards that Reagan attended was rump affair. Only five members of the advisory council, all compatible with the senior staff, were invited and present. Had Kemp or Professor Arthur Laffer been there, they would surely have urged Reagan to protect his tax cuts and change monetary policy. Neither was informed about the meeting.

When the full economic advisory council meet two weeks later, Kemp and Laffer were present — but Reagan was not. He had been scheduled elsewhere.

Deputy chief of staff Michael Deaver, a longtime Reagan servitor who is uneasy with issues and ideology, has absolute control over who sees the president and for how long. Richard Darman, a Baker protege hostile to Reaganite ideology, has similar control over paper flow, and thus polices Reagan's access to information.

The image of Darman as a non-ideological paper shuffler is spurious. Darman not only chooses what the president sees but puts a spin on it. When veteran Reagan aide Lyn Nofziger (shortly before resigning Jan. 22) sent the president a letter arguing against excise tax increases, Darman affixed his notation suggesting that Nofziger knows nothing about economics.

Despite Darman, the president accepted Nofziger's advice. Moreover, his policy remains closer to Jack Kemp's than Jim Baker's. Nevertheless, he is isolated from outside opinion supporting his instincts and he is restricted in making his own arguments to the public. Unattributed quotes from senior aides have recently depicted Reagan as a stubborn old man unwilling to compromise. The real problem is not the president's stubbornness but the isolation imposed on him by those aides.

CHARLEY REESE

Journalism misused in El Salvador

It's good that the press is being made a public issue in the situation in El Salvador. The best way to stimulate the press to do a better job is to focus attention on the bad job it's doing and, to be sure, the press is doing a bad job of reporting the events in El Salvador.

Charley Reese

As one man put it, "Hey, I've heard all this before — when Castro was in the mountains." Precisely. The left-of-center bias of the New York Times, the Washington Post and the television networks is clearly visible in their reports of the guerrillas warfare being conducted in Central America. Here are some points to watch for.

You will often see an automatic assumption that what the guerrillas and their spokesmen are saying is true and an automatic scepticism about anything the governments of El Salvador and the United States government say. Even after the guerrillas publicly admitted that they had received aid from Nicaragua, some U.S. news stories were still saying, in reporting comments by the U.S. officials, "alleged" Nicaraguan involvement. It is no longer an allegation when the guerrillas themselves verify what the Reagan administration has been saying.

Bias is often revealed, however, by selectivity. News is a matter of subjective judgment from start to finish. Even among ourselves, we use the phrase "news judgment" to describe the process of choosing which events to report, how much importance to attach to them, and which events to ignore.

If this judgment is not exercised in such a manner as to present a balanced picture of what is taking place, then the news subtly shifts from news to propaganda. Even if this is done without a conscious intent to deceive, the result is the same.

For example, by focusing exclusively on the battles or skirmishes between guerrillas and soldiers, one can make the war seem much more intense than it actually is. There is a lot going on in El Salvador besides the shooting, but the impression left by television reporting especially is that there is nothing going on but the shooting. Shooting incidents, of course, make more dramatic visuals than reports on land reforms or efforts to reform the government.

A second way bias is revealed is by reporting out of context. Often this is laziness and sloppiness, but often it is deliberate. If you quote someone or televise an interview with someone and you fail to define the person's background, then you are misleading the viewer or reader. If, for example, you describe someone as a Mexican journalist when he is a Mexican journalist publicly known for his Marxist leanings, then you are engaging in deception because you are presenting the man's remarks as the remarks of a disinterested observer when in fact he is a partisan on one side of the dispute. This is a common tactic.

The most vocal critics of this kind of journalism should be other journalists for it discredits our trade and destroys our credibility. Unfortunately, a lot of journalists allow their ambition to get the better of their integrity and they are loathe to criticize organizations they admire and may hope to work for one day.

The fact remains, however, that a free, unbiased and accurate press is absolutely essential to the survival of a free society. If the press becomes inaccurate and biased, then it makes no difference if the bias is self-imposed or imposed by government censorship. The injury to the public good is the same.

The people cannot evaluate their public officials if they do not have access to all the information on which the officials are basing their decisions. This is a sound argument against excessive government secrecy. It is an equally sound argument against sloppy, incomplete, inaccurate or biased reporting.

Too many journalists today see themselves not as observers whose loyalty is to their readers or viewers but as active participants in public events. In other words, they make a judgment about an issue and then set out to sway public opinion to support their private judgment. This is a job for editorial writers, not reporters. When reporters and editors set out to influence events instead of reporting them, they are as guilty of an abuse of public trust as any crooked politician who sells his vote. And they deserve the same moral condemnation.

Chemical train derails

ST. JOSEPH, Mich. (AP) — Nearly 500 people were evacuated in the pre-dawn hours after a train carrying toxic chemicals derailed and one of six overturned tank cars began leaking, police said Sunday.

The cars in a Chessie System "chemical special" train bound for Dow Chemical Co. in Midland left the track at 4:55 a.m. next to the Whirlpool Corp. manufacturing plant in St. Joseph, police Sgt. Dale Adams said.

No one was injured, and about half the people evacuated were allowed to return to their homes about 9:30 a.m., Police Chief William Mihalik said.

A Dow emergency response team from Midland, about 190 miles to the northeast, flew in Sunday morning to help in the cleanup, Dow spokesman Terry Witt said.

"All (the cars) appear to be structurally sound, but there is ethylbenzene dripping from a vacuum relief valve on the dome of one of the cars," Witt said. "They'll get that fixed easily."

Four of the tank cars carried ethybenzene and two contained phenol, Witt said.

He said phenol, which is used primarily in production of resins, is the more toxic of the two, while ethylbenzene, used as an intermediate in the production of styrene and various solvents, is more flammable.

"Neither would be considered highly flammable," Witt said. "Both would be irritating if you got them on your skin and you would not want to breathe their vapors."

Adams said a pole and several lines used for the Chessie System's telegraph and track switching were knocked over, causing the sparks, but later were disconnected.

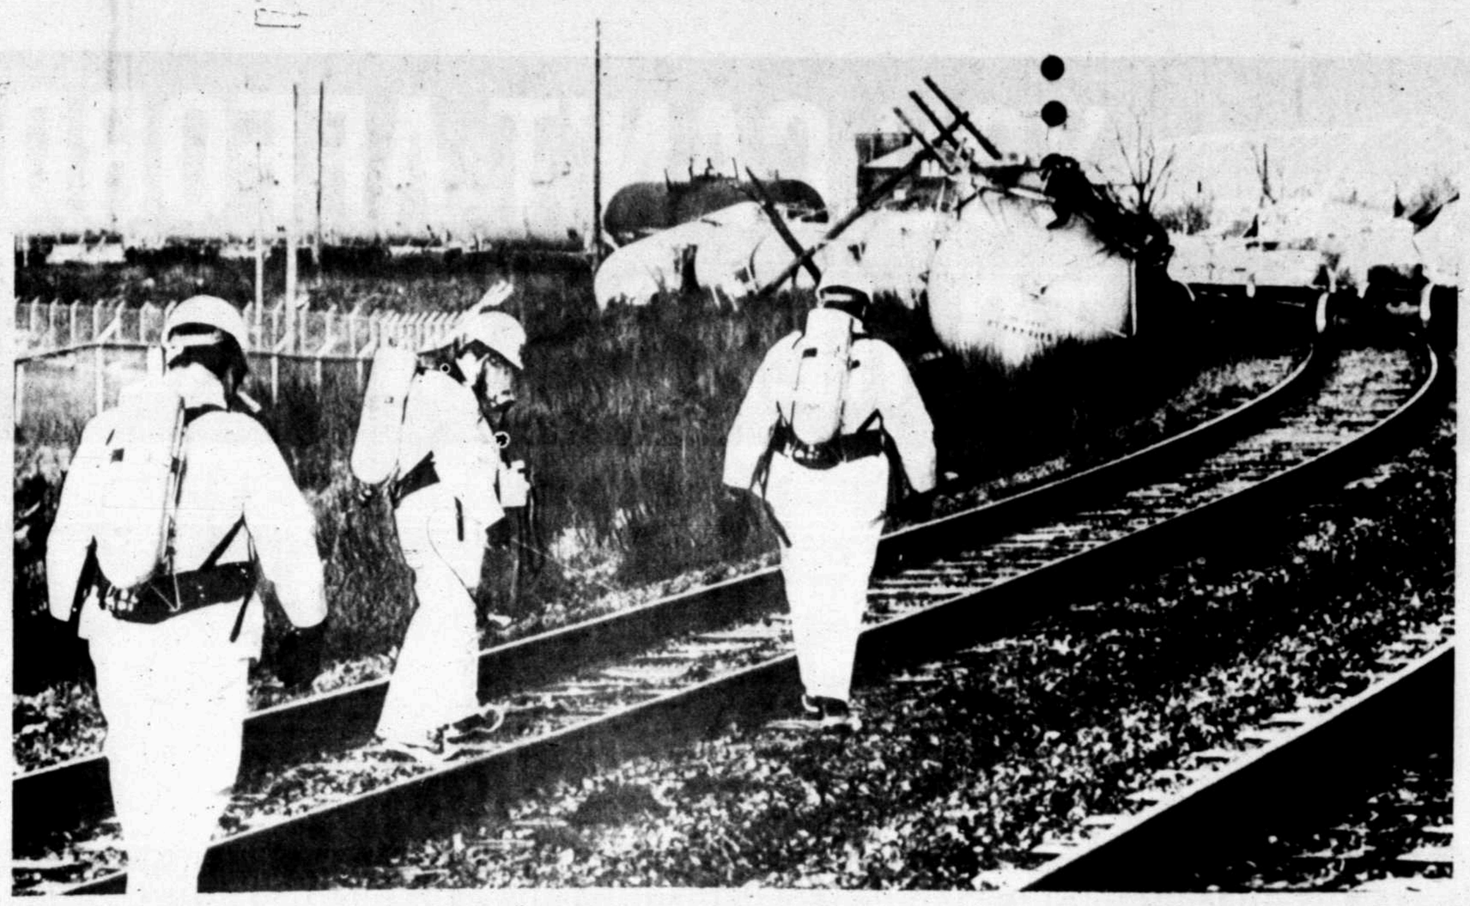

"As explosive as those chemicals are, the lines make for a dangerous situation," the sergeant said.

Evacuations were ordered in the Edgewater District, a neighborhood of some of the most lavish homes in the Lake Michigan city of 11,000 people, police said. The residents were given temporary shelter at St. Joseph High School.

The cause of the derailment was not known.

Witt said the train was a "unit train" filled entirely with chemicals which makes weekly runs from a Dow plant at Freeport, Texas, on the Gulf coast through Chicago to Dow's Midland complex.

"That way, we know what's in each train, what they're carrying, all the way along. And they're not in transit as long," Whitt said. "It reduces the amount of time there would be a potential for problems while the train is moving."

A Dow Chemcial Co. emergency crew approaches the scene of a derailed chemical train, the "chemical special." Five cars derailed in St. Joseph, Mich., Sunday afternoon causing evacuation of several hundred residents. No injuries were reported. The "chemical special," runs every Sunday between the Dow Chemical Co. plants in Freeport, Texas, and Midland, Michigan.

Mislabeling of plutonium caused leak

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) — Mislabeling of radioactive material at Los Alamos National Laboratory caused a plutonium leak that officials said contaminated 15 people last year, a federal study said.

A four-member investigation team of the U.S. Department of Energy listed three major factors that led to the incident last Oct. 14.

In addition to radioactive plutonium being labeled on a form as uncontaminated, the report said, the material was opened and handled in an area of the laboratory that is not designed for handling plutonium. Then a contaminated worker spread radioactive contamination out of the laboratory to a van and residences.

Lab officials said after the accident that a chemist might have inhaled plutonium, while 14 others contaminated were given a clean bill of health. The federal study said the chemist, whose name was not released, remains under observation.

One wing of a lab building was temporarily closed after the incident for cleanup and investigation.

Plutonium, a by-product of commercial nuclear power plants, does not exist in nature. The governnent produces it primarliy for nuclear weapons. In large doses plutonium is poisonous, but the greater risk generally is considered to be the radiation it produces, and it can cause cancer if inhaled.

The radioactive material, most of it plutonium, was in test containers that hold it. Plutonium was put into containers, which were put inside other containers, and then removed. Pieces of the container then were analyzed for stress and leakage.

The outside of the can that was the source of the contamination was labeled "cold inside," which the report says was one of the ambiguous labels that caused confusion.

> "The ususal procedures...presumably were used except that this time a serious error was made. Staff member A accidentally...marked 'uncontaminated' even though he knew these samples to be highly contaminated. The copying process then propagated this error."

On July 22, 1981, a metallurgist, referred to in the report as staff member A, filled out forms requesting tests on various materials. The forms were supposed to list whether the contents wre contaminated.

"The ususal procedures...presumably were used except that this time a serious error was made," according to the report, which was released April 1.

"Staff member A accidentally ... marked 'uncontaminated' even though he knew these samples to be highly contaminated," the report said. "The copying process then propagated this error" to forms for additional samples.

Three cans of samples were taken to an analytical department of the Chemistry-Material Science Division, where they were analyzed.

The workers who received the can apparently did not notice the words "cold inside" might conflict with the word "uncontaminated" written on the form, the report said.

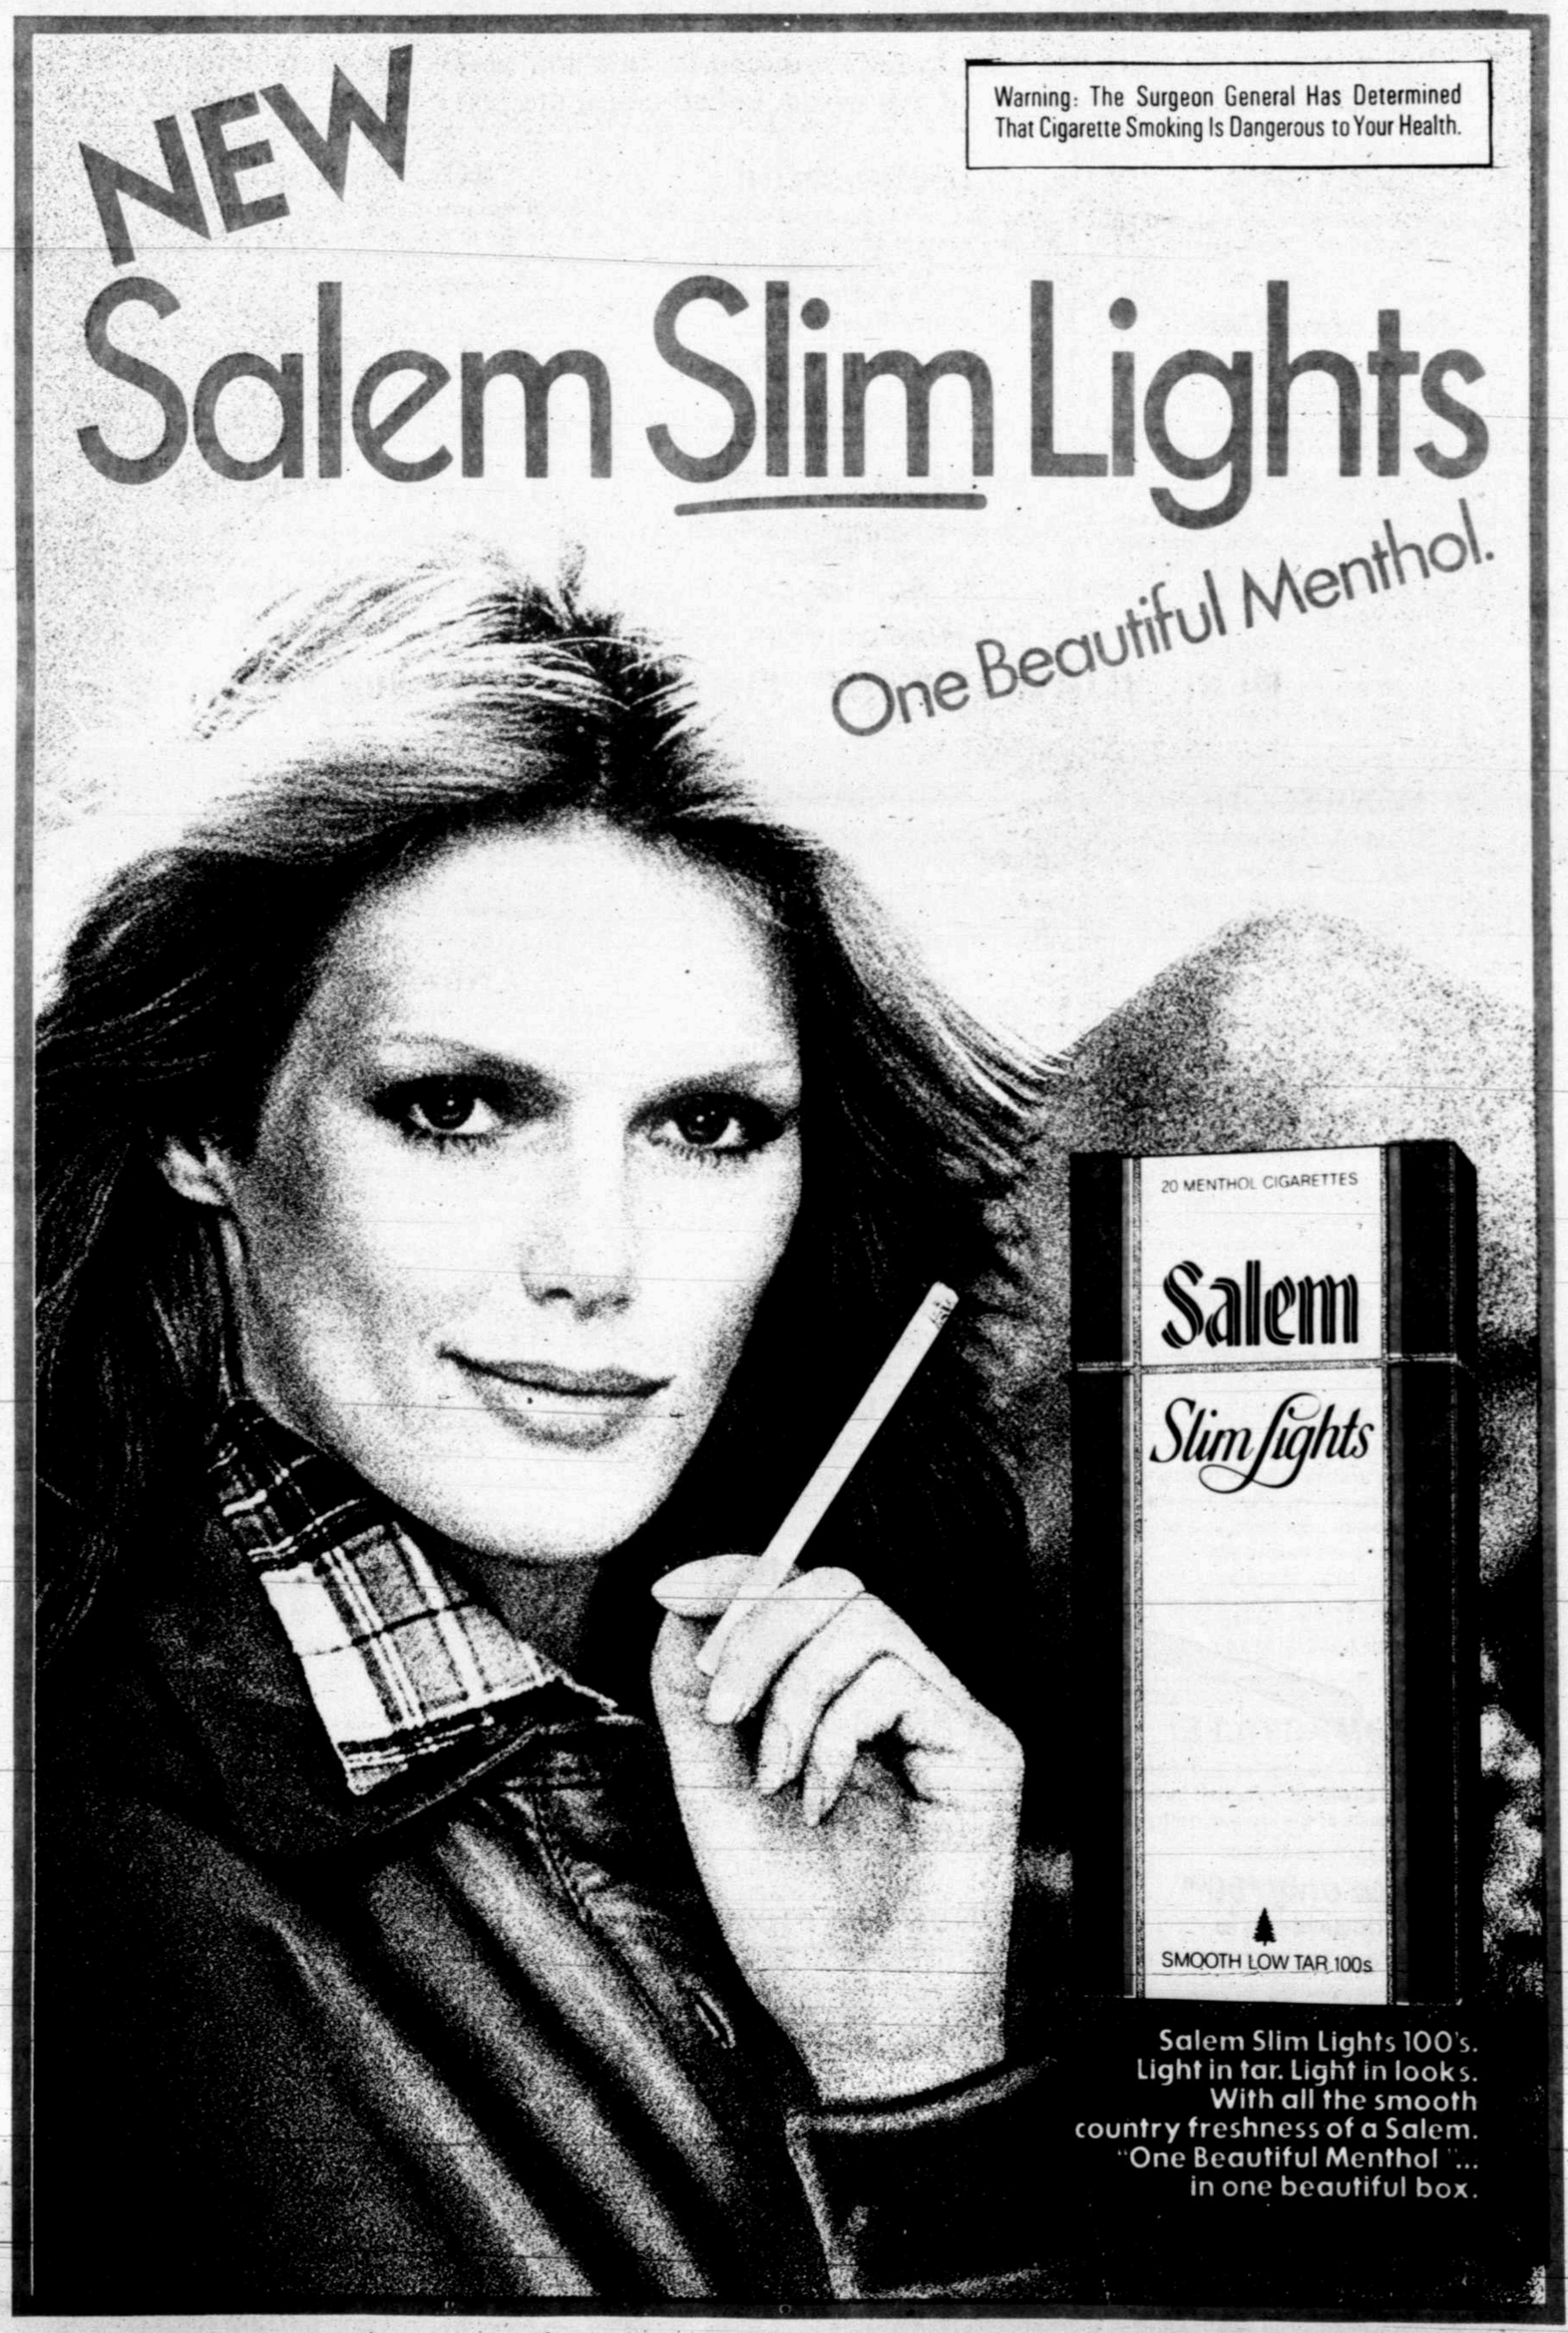

"To experienced plutonium workers, 'cold inside' clearly implies that the container so labeled could be opened without encountering radioactive contamination, but that (additional) containers inside the labeled container could contain radioactive material," the report said.

"On the other hand, most non-plutonium workers interpreted 'cold inside' literally to mean that radioactivity would be found nowhere inside ...," the report said.

A second worker came into contact with the samples, then moved from office to office in the wing, contaminating several areas. Other people picked up the contamination and spread it, the report said.

The contamination was spread to a men's changing room, in which clean smocks and shoe coverings were available, the report said. Later in the day, anyone entering the room was contaminated.

The second staff member received the most contamination and underwent tests that night and the next day, and still is under observation, the report said.

Testing door for air leaks

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We have a fairly old refrigerator. It is not self-defrosting. Lately it seems to be building up more frost on the inside than it used to. Somebody told us that the refrigerator door probably is not airtight, but it seems all right to us. I remember reading a long time ago about a test that could be made with a $1 bill, but don't remember how it works? Can you tell me?

A. — It's a test that can be made with any bill — $1 or $10. Just close the door on a bill that is placed so that you can still hold part of it. Now pull gently on the bill. If it moves or comes out without opening the door, there is a space letting in air. When you pull on the bill and it does not move or come out, try it in several other places before deciding whether air is getting inside. If so, a new gasket or seal around the edges of the door will usually correct the trouble.

Q. — I have a home-made wooden deck behind our house. It was painted some years ago and now is getting a bit messy. What I would like to do is to refinish it with a wood preservative that has a little color in it. Can this be done without taking off the paint? If not, can I get off the paint with a regular paint remover?

A. — You cannot apply a colored wood preservative over the paint. Yes, you probably can get off the old paint with a remover, but it would be one tough chore. It would be much better to scrape off any loose paint and get the surface in shape for a new coat of paint. Use an outdoor deck enamel or one of the other outdoor paints which can be walked on.

Q. — We have just moved into a house which has kitchen cabinets that apparently had a clear finish on them many years ago. We want to refinish them with varnish. Can it be applied right over the old finish, which is in pretty good shape?

A. — Yes, but be certain all dirt and grime are removed from the surface of the cabinets. One of the regular household cleaners will probably handle the job, but if not, follow by rubbing the wood with denatured alcohol, being certain there is plenty of ventilation in the room. Then you can apply the varnish.

New theory on dyslexia

By MARIAN J. MEYERS
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — Sammy, 11, is friendly, athletic and well-liked by his classmates. His IQ is at the top of the average range of intellegence. He is a typical fifth-grader — with one exception. Sammy can't read.

Sammy — not his real name — has tried to read and doesn't want to give up. He has been in special education classes since first grade, has been evaluated twice, received visual training from an optometrist and has seen a psychologist since second grade. Still, his reading is no better than that of a beginning second-grader.

About a year ago, Sammy's mother began telling people her son had dyslexia, a condition widely believed to cause people to see letters and words backwards. She explains that he is not really dyslexic. She only says he has the disorder so people won't assume he's retarded.

But what most people assume about dyslexia also may not be true, according to studies conducted at colleges in this country and Europe. Some researchers are now saying it may not exist.

"I'm not absolutely certain there is such a thing as dyslexia," says director Frank Vellutino of the State University's Child Research and Study Center here. "I'm absolutely certain that some of the symptoms don't exist."

Vellutino's research has a long way to go before it uproots the widely-held view that dyslexia causes people to see letters as mirror images. The theory was popularized in 1925 by neuropsychologist Samuel T. Orton.

"I'm convinced that children don't see letters backwards — that Orton was incorrect," Vellutino says. "We have no evidence that so-called dyslexics are qualitatively different than other children with reading problems."

If there are differences, he added, they are in the domain of combining sounds, understanding words and using them properly.

While Orton and his followers have maintained dyslexia is a problem of visual perception, possibly caused by a defect in the brain cortex, Vellutino argues it is a verbal deficiency — and should be treated as such.

Vellutino estimates that 1 to 5 percent of the school-age population are poor readers — a term he prefers over dyslexics. He says that studies indicate dyslexia may not exist as anything more than a severe reading problem.

In one study, poor readers fared as well as normal readers when copying Hebrew letters. Researchers at Haskin Laboratories in Connecticut, the University of London and Oxford University in England, and Boston, Harvard and Columbia Universities have come to the same conclusion — while poor readers can copy letters as well as others, they don't pronounce words or spell them as well.

Without intervention, Vellutino claims, reading problems will not go away.

"There's no such thing as outgrowing a reading problem," he emphasizes. But while his "verbal deficit" explanation of reading problems is gaining ground, many still cling to the idea that reading can be improved through other methods.

One of the most widely-accepted treatments for dyslexia is the Orton-Gillingham method developed by Orton and Anna Gillingham. The approach is multi-sensory, using hearing, feeling and seeing, and is highly structured and sequential, explains Elizabeth Wells Denning, a reading tutor trained in the techniques at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Denning rejects theories which dismiss dyslexia as a non-existant problem. She maintains it is a language disorder in people with average or above-average intelligence characterized by an inability to deal with written and verbal aspects of language.

"If their IQ is in the normal range, if their hearing and eyesight test out as accurate, if there is no obvious problem with these people — why are they poor readers?" she asks.

One theory, recently proposed by proposed by Dr. Harold Levinson, holds that the problem lies in the cerebellum — the lower part of the brain which controls balance and coordination.

Levinson, a psychiatrist and neurologist with New York University Medical Center, says he suspects genetics and/or an ear infection at an early age as the cause of dyslexia. He advocates treating the "defective" link between the brain and inner-ear with anti-motion sickness medication. The drugs, he claims, have been successful in correcting problems in reading, balance, coordination, spelling, mathematics, writing and drawing.

According to Vellutino, however, procedures such as Levinson's — which accept the premise that some children do see letters backwards — "are virtually worthless" and, in some cases, actually harmful.

DEAR ABBY

Surprise at shower

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Recently my married daughter and several of her girlfriends gave a shower for a bride-to-be. As a surprise gift, one of the girls hired a male stripper to "crash" the party and put on a striptease dance.

None of the girls knew that a male stripper was going to barge in and go into his act. The bride's mother, a very dignified lady of 60, was terribly embarrassed, but she just sat there and made the best of it. (Afterward the girl who had hired the stripper apologized to the bride's mother.)

This is my problem: My youngest daughter just announced her engagement, and I know there will be showers given for her. My mother, who is 79, will surely be invited, and she wouldn't appreciate a male striptease act. How can I be sure that this doesn't happen?

I am not a prude, but I couldn't sit there in the presence of my elderly mother and just "make the best of it." If a male stripper were to show up at my daughter's shower, would it be all right to get up and leave the room? Or do you think I'd be making a fool of myself? — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: First, the guests should be told in advance that the male stripper-type-surprise is inappropriate. And, if someone has the gall to send one anyway, leave the room. (And take Granny with you.)

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe your answer to the woman with arthritis in her hands. She asked how to get out of shaking hands with everyone in the receiving line at her daughter's wedding, and you told her to tell everyone as he or she approached, "Sorry, I can't shake your hand; I have arthritis."

So if it's a large wedding, can you imagine saying, "Sorry, I can't shake your hand; I have arthritis," 150 times or more? Or should she hang a sign around her neck, or have a public announcement made?

I have four daughters, and I also have painful arthritis in my hands. I, too, have wondered what I will do when they get married. I hope someone will write in with a better solution than the one you offered. — CHRIS IN FERGUS FALLS, MINN.

DEAR CHRIS: Several did. "Hold a small nosegay in both hands." (How's that for a bloomin' good solution?)

Preparing for marriage

By MARGE COCKER
Hearst Feature Service

Times were simpler when Robert Browning caressed 19th-century romantics with words of enduring love — "Grow old with me; the best is yet to be."

Today couples marching to the altar have stars in their eyes, love in their hearts and some pretty grim statistics in their pockets. Promising their troth until death do them part, they are going into a relationship that many experts predict will last, maybe, seven years.

With divorce rates at an all-time high and getting higher, church leaders across the country are taking a new look at the way engaged couples are being prepared for marriage.

A recent New York Times article quoted divorce statistics compiled by the Department of Population Dynamics at John Hopkins University which show little difference now between divorces involving Catholic couples and those of other denominations.

The numbers show that 31 percent of "non-active" Catholic couples married since 1960 divorce within the first 10 years. "Non-active Protestants maintain a narrow lead with 37 percent. Couples active in either religion divorce less but those numbers, too, are growing and church officials are alarmed.

Father Ed Holen, director of the Marriage Tribunal for the Catholic Archdiocese of Olympia, Washington, and leader of a task force currently at work trying to establish a serious new policy on marriage preparation, admits the Catholic church "sort of backed into" getting engaged couples ready for a lifetime celebration of the sacrament of matrimony.

The tribunal has been more concerned, he says, with saving marriages than getting people ready for them.

The law of the church, says Holen, requires that pastors prepare couples for marriage. In the past this has meant about six sessions with the emphasis of the meetings on the sacrament of marriage. Parish priests have developed their own programs.

The object of the task force, says the clergyman, is to standardize a policy that will be as open and supportive as possible for people who come to the church for marriage. Ultimately, the Catholic Church will make mandatory a six-month program of preparation. "It only makes sense. If people are going to make a lifetime commitment they should spend some time getting ready for it."

One aspect that is changing in his church structure, says Holen, is a recognition that other Christian religions can have the same goals. As a result many parish priests are sending about-to-be married couples to the Office of Campus Christian Ministry, an ecumenical organization that seems to have cornered the marriage preparation market in this area.

That may be because of the dynamic leadership of Susan Morris, a woman with a social work background who designed the program of no-nonsense workshops which speak little of God and a lot about what's good and bad about being married.

The philosophy of the program, she says, is based on "life as a gift from God and love as a gift from God and that God is a part of our lives. Other than that we don't have worship service, and we don't use much religious language — this to the dismay of some ministers and the vast relief of many non-religious participants. We don't teach specific church doctrine. Couples go to their priests or pastors for religious training."

What they preach, Morris says, is that marriage is a covenant. And that it takes a lot of work to keep a promise.

Morris says one of the most important things they try to do is prepare couples for the unknown. "A general misconception is that everything is wonderful now and always will be — love will make it so," she says. "Some couples come in saying, 'We've known each other two months and it was love at first sight. We're perfect for each other.' Nothing can ever go wrong with us. But they haven't shared any real history.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Be good to yourself

DEAR FRIENDS:

It's time for a little chat, so fix yourself a cup of coffee or a pot of tea and settle in for a few moments.

How often do you spend some time by yourself doing what you want to do? Most of us have family, even pets, who depend on us and demand a lot of our time and attention.

I love taking care of things at home, working and putting this column together, helping you and answering your questions on radio and TV shows.

But there are times when you have to be good to yourself!

I used to hate getting on an airplane... I would take work with me or an outline for a book or I'd answer mail, etc. But now, it is about the only time the phone isn't ringing or there isn't someone asking me a question or my dog or ferret needing my attention. Not to mention my husband — but at least he can pretty much take care of himself.

You need some time for YOU. Even if it's an afternoon at a movie or a few hours in a nice, quiet library, or sitting in the park with your favorite magazine.

This is not being selfish. It's called "survival" and don't be ashamed of it.

It can cost you nothing or you can spend some money on a shampoo and facial or, for men, a barbershop shave. What a treat!

Do yourself a favor and take time for you (just for me) and enjoy!! — Hugs, Heloise

If the fabric is a dark print, dirt won't show, yet these pillowcases are durable and pretty. — Dar Carman

CAR THEFT

Dear Heloise: After having my parked car broken into and vandalized via the old coat hanger method, I discovered I could remove the little inside door knobs from the locks and make it impossible for the car to be opened in this manner.

The occupant of the car can still pull up the lock or can remove the knobs only when parking the car.

I haven't had a break-in since! — Gwen Bennett

I replaced my door lock knobs that mushroomed out at the top with straight knobs. A coat hanger can't lift them. — Heloise

Softening ice cream

Don't forget that ice cream is easier to scoop or slice if you transfer it from freezer to refrigerator for softening. Tempering takes about 20 minutes for one-half gallon, 10 minutes per pint for scooping. Allow 10 minutes (for half-gallon) and five minutes (per pint) if you're going to slice ice cream.

Eggs and protein

While a lot of protein foods are being priced out of the reach of many people, eggs remain a good buy. When priced at 96 cents a dozen, eggs cost just eight cents apiece of 64 cents a pound.

New aid for heart attack victims

By LEO BOWLER
Copley News Service

For the first time, doctors have a tool with which to intervene while a patient is in the throes of a heart attack.

The technique they use takes a high degree of skill. Using it is a little like threading a piece of cooked spaghetti through a moving needle when you can't touch either the needle or the spaghetti.

But they are doing it to save lives.

Until a few months ago, once a heart attack had started, the major objective in coronary care was to keep the patient alive through the critical hours of the attack, so that damage could be assessed and repairs started as soon as possible after it ran its course.

During the attack, doctors could use life-giving drugs, administer oxygen and try to limit the pain. But they were largely helpless to stop the attack or to minimize the damage it was doing.

Teams of doctors at hospitals, using the new technique, are rapidly changing that. They are excited about ushering in what may be a new era in heart attack treatment.

They are introducing a drug directly into a blood clot, even though the clot is in an artery within the heart itself. The drug then can dissolve the clot and end the attack.

The method is still experimental. The Federal Drug Administration now will allow the drug, streptokinase, to be used for this purpose only in authorized heart care centers around the country, pending more proof of its effectiveness. Mercy Hospital in San Diego, Calif., is one of those centers.

"It's a way to fight back in a situation where before, all you could do was sit back and wait," says Dr. Robert A. Schlamowitz, of the hospital's cardiac care staff.

Schlamowitz set up the protocol under which the drug is being used at the hospital.

"The pendulum has swung back," Schlamowitz says. "Years ago, everyone thought that blood clots were the direct causes of heart attacks. They thought that the clot kept the blood from carrying oxygen to the heart muscle.

"Then the idea fell into disuse. But now we are finding that it is true. So, if you can dissolve the clot, you should bring benefits to the patient."

For many years, doctors have been using a diagnostic technique in heart cases which involves introducing a catheter, a small plastic tube, into the heart to inject an opaque dye into the bloodstream. The dye could then be watched by X-ray as it circulated through the heart, and damage to the heart muscle could be assessed by the way the heart pumped.

The patient was put on a table in a room full of weird equipment, an incision was made in his thigh, and the tube was fished through the main artery in the thigh into the aorta, and then into the heart by a skilled cardiologist. It is much like a plumber putting a reamer through a complicated system of pipes.

Except with the catheter, both the patient and the doctor can watch the progress of the tube on a TV screen which is hooked to the X-ray unit.

But this diagnostic technique is generally used only after the heart attack has subsided and the patient has to some extent recovered.

Now Schlamowitz and other cardiologists are using the method during heart attacks, but they have added a few new wrinkles.

The catheter is a hollow tube about two millimeters in diameter. Inside it Schlamowitz puts a second tube, the size of the lead in a mechanical pencil, and inside that is a very thin stainless steel wire.

The outside tube will fit through the larger arteries, but it won't go through the small ones, yet the bulk and strength of the larger tube is needed to get through to the heart. That's where the smaller tube is useful.

"It can be extended from the larger tube and pushed through the small arteries of the heart until the clot is reached," Schlamowitz says.

"If we hit a bend too sharp for the small tube, the wire, which is very flexible, can be used to get around the corner. Then the small tube will follow the wire."

The wire can also be used to poke a hole in the clot so that the streptokinase can enter it more easily.

It is very important that the drug be used as close to the clot as possible. It will attack any clot it finds and some clots are desirable, so doctors like to limit its location in the body to the area around the clot.

At some hospitals in Europe, the drug is being injected in veins far from the site of the clot. Although this technique can be done faster and with less skill, much more of the drug must be used and the chance of unwanted side effects are multiplied.

"If the patient cut himself while shaving that morning, the drug is going to make him bleed," Schlamowitz says.

"Or it might dissolve a clot in the brain which is holding back the dike, and he is going to have a stroke."

Video games

FREMONT, Calif (AP) — A teacher of children with learning disabilities here has found home video games to be one of his best educational tools.

Regarded by most as entertainment, some of the games are an integral part of a Mission Valley Elementary School clinical program to develop children's hand-eye coordination, says its director, Michael Schoop.

Video games selected for the clinic must be non-threatening to children with a learning handicap, must have a system of measuring player improvement and should be colorful and entertaining, Schoop says.

After favorable response to a skiing game by his students, Schoop contacted the company that developed it, asking to purchase additional game cartridges. The company, Activision, has since donated each of its games to the clinic, and has also asked for feedback on the children's progress, reactions to the games, and suggestions for their improvement.

Parents allow children to express themselves

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Let me tell you my theory of parent-child relationships that I haven't heard about from others. It is useful and practical. It works, and besides, it is enjoyable.

In our family we have a regualr daily "Talking Time," and we try to measure time very carefully so that no one dominates this precious period.

Parents would be so surprised if they tried out this technique. I've learned so much about reading techniques that can speed up the reading process, trends in music, dance and movies, new diet techniques and nutrition values, sales on clothing and food, car repair, yes, and even economic trends related to stocks and prices.

If you think my children are unusual it's really not true, except maybe in one direction — their desire to share ideas with their parents. That factor relates entirely to our being willing to listen to them and to respect their thoughts.

What do you think about all this?

A. Hooray for you, and for all parents who believe in the "equal time" theory based on more parental listening and less telling. It's an enjoyable practice that needs far more exposure than it is getting.

Thank you very much for stimulationg thought in this direction.

Q. Please help other parents learn from our experience (which fortunately turned out all right).

My 3-year-old picked up my house key and put it into an electrical outlet in the wall. He received a small shock, but it was enough to teach him a good lesson. It could of course have been worse, and that's where my suggestion comes in.

Plugs or covers are available in many hardware stores, and they are so inexpensive.

Perhaps it just takes a little foresight or this hint from me, if you'll use it.

A. I appreciate your thoughtfulness in writing. Most homes these days have covers over the electrical outlets, but some may not. it's well worth a quick check around any house which may have a baby or small child living in it.

Q. Do you think it is possible to increase the size of the brain so that a child can become brighter than he or she might otherwise be?

My husband and I have three children whom I have to admit are quite ordinary in their school performance. They do all right, but really nothing special.

We would give such a great deal if they could be made smarter because that is what really pays off in this world of ours. "Brain power" is what it is all about.

So what are our hopes for brain expansion?

A. Much has been written and researched regarding the brain, in scientific journals and books, as well as in the daily press. The trends are not so much in increasing "size" as in use of what we already have and recognition of left and right brain parts.

A book by Rostak called "The Brain" and others that can help parents and teachers capitalize on what already exists within each of us are being read and used. Although all of us cannot become gifted (despite the claim of one widely read writer) we can perform closer to our intellectual capacities than many of us now reach.

Motivating children to perform in areas of their interest and competencies, utilizing methods and materials that stimulate thinking, communicating more freely and clearly with our children, expanding experiences — all of these are used by wise teachers and parents.

Parents who are interested should talk to the teachers of their own children so that specific techniques and materials can be utilized that are appropriate for each child. Efforts like these have to be individualized if they are to work.

Daphne Award established to honor furniture design

By BARBARA M. AYER
AP Newsfeatures

There are Academy Awards, Pulitzer Prizes, and a host of other awards for accomplishment in the United States. But until recently there was no award to honor the best furniture designs.

That lack has been partially remedied with the Daphne Awards — established in 1981 to honor achievement in hardwood furniture design.

This year's recently announced winning designs covered a wide spectrum. Consumers who might wish to go shopping for a Daphne prize winner to take home would find quite a diversity in looks, price and place of purchase.

Interestingly enough, a majority of the citations went to those who produce only a small portion of the furniture sold in the United States each year. Of 26 mentions, nine went to furniture craftsmen working mainly out of tiny woodworking shops, often in obscure rural localities.

Six awards went to manufacturers with small production shops, just a few steps removed from the craftsmen, and five went to companies that normally distribute their small production through designers.

The remaining winners or finalists were manufacturers and designers whose products are normally sold through furniture and department stores where most Americans buy their new furniture.

The dominance of small companies and designers as award winners is not surprising and has a parallel in the apparel field, according to Fred Calabrese, an architect and design professor at the Parsons School of Design and chairman of the judges' panel.

The newest ideas in apparel often come from a small group of avant-garde designers with a limited clientele. Then, others take up their ideas and translate them into more commercial products. The same process appears to occur in home furnishings, said Calabrese.

"Many larger manufacturers try to be all things to all people, so their designs are naturally somewhat diluted," he noted.

Calabrese, however, believes that some of those who market products often underestimate the intelligence and awareness of the general public. He would like to see some of the more advanced products made widely available.

Interesting new products are often too expensive for most people to buy. Since they buy what is available in their price range, consumers may seem to be supporting the idea that adventurous designs won't sell, while they are really reflecting the absence of such products at reasonable prices, said Calabrese.

One advantage of an awards program is that it exposes the newer, more interesting designs to a wider public and may stimulate greater sales for these designs. Such a state of affairs is the best way to persuade manufacturers to offer more such products, he added.

Among the Daphne award winners, John Saldino's upholstered ash sofa for Dunbar was cited as best of show and best occasional seating in the designer showroom category.

Other Daphne winners were: Walter Bahno and Jeffry Blaesing for Thomasville's Country Collection of light ash wood bedroom, dining-room and living-room furniture; Leif Blodee, designer, Kimball International, for his oak-frame stackable dining chair; Chris Bergelin, White Furniture Co., for a mahogany chest and desk; Marion Pratt, Councill Craftsmen, for a Chippendale-style side table in mahogany, and Dan Droz for his oak and glass table adjustable to coffee table, desk or dining height.

John P. Ryan, Smith and Watson, was cited for his Chippendale silver table reproduction, and Po Shun Leong for his oak dining chair.

Among finalists were these furniture craftsmen: John Baiet, Cheshire, Conn.; John Basinski, Philadelphia; Urbane Chapman, Northfield, Mass.; Alan Friedman, Hudson, N. Y.; Peter Korn, Philadelphia; Robert Leung, Riverside, Calif.; Gerald McCabe, Venice, Calif.; Richard Tannen, Watertown, Mass.; Steven Voorheis, Missoula, Mont., and Jay Peters, Blue Hills Falls, Maine.

Companies recognized for merit in the contest sponsored by the National Hardwood Lumber Association included Baker Furniture, Bernhardt Furniture, Davis Cabinet Co., Naomi Gale Wall Systems, Lorraine Furniture, and Richardson Brothers.

Corklike material in sockets causes problems in bathroom

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. In response to a column which appeared last November, and headlined "Sniffing around for the source fo a bad odor," I feel certain that we can be of help.

Our problem was in the bathroom also. It was especially bad after we had been away for two or three days. No plumber, painter, contractor, wallpaper hanger could solve the cause of the foul odor, which came and went unpredictably.

Finally, I happened to find a piece of "somethin g" on the tile drain. I picked it up and sniffed. The odor was in it! Oh happy day!

It was a corklike material that had been used as a sort of cushioning in making the sockets — four of them — of our light fixture. Evidently, the heat from the bulbs would dry out the corking, perhaps scorching it a bit. Then the steam from the shower would be absorbed by the corking, causing the odor.

Thankfully, the material eventually deteriorated a bit, and very luckily, I found it. We had the corking removed from the sockets, which was no easy matter, and have been free of the odor ever since.

I do hope this solves the problem of Mr. and Mrs. Joe McG. — Marie McLean, San Diego.

A. Thank you very much. Your discovery is interesting, indeed, and hopefully may be helpful to others plagued with an odor that is hard to trace.

The November column to which McLean refers was in response to a question about an odor problem in a bathroom, and the answer we gave was a suggestion that excess moisture may have been the source of the problem, and also suggested a thorough inspection by a competent plumber. No way could we have known about what the McLeans discovered.

Q. One of your readers recently mentioned an article in your column last year on how to get rid of fleas the natural way. I would appreciate it if you could print that article again. — J. Elke Ertle, San Diego.

A. Here's a condensed repeat of the article about control of fleas, roaches and other pests, all of this information coming from our readers.

E.B. of Dulzura, Calif., says, "We've found that eucalyptus leaves accomplish the disappearance of fleas in a room, carpets or whatever. Cut lots of smaller shoots or leaves and place heavily in the room or area infected. They might also be cut up and placed in sections of the room.

"Eucalyptus has a strong fragrance which repels fleas and is often used in combination with sage and other highly pungent odor plants for spraying insects in the garden — all without harm to the vegetables.

"Another thought: Use of eucalyptus oil might be even better."

From Thelma Stacy of San Diego, this advice is offered: "I have a friend who is a biologist who gave me some advice about two years ago.

Reagan selected most trusted, least trusted in magazine poll

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan is both the most trusted and least trusted political figure in America, although he would keep his office if an election were held today, according to a reader survey in People magazine.

The president held the trust of 29 percent of those quizzed, down from last year's 36 percent. He was mistrusted by 21 percent.

Forty-eight percent of the readers said they would vote to re-elect Reagan if the 1980 election were held today.

Meanwhile, readers of the magazine tabbed Brooke Shields by a 3-to-1 margin as "the contemporary celebrity who will be most quickly forgotten."

Shields

The 16-year-old actress and model was snubbed by both male and female readers in the survey, which was released Sunday. Nearly 90 percent of the women say they wouldn't change places with Miss Shields; 83 percent of the men say they wouldn't want to marry her.

Readers also selected Henry Fonda, 76, and Katharine Hepburn, 72, as their favorite screen actor and actress. The Academy Award-winning stars of "On Golden Pond" edged Paul Newman and Sally Fields of "Absence of Malice."

Other winners in the People survey were Alan Alda, selected for the fourth straight year as favorite television actor; Stephanie Powers, favorite televison actress; Tom Selleck and Jaclyn Smith, the best-looking man and woman in America; Kenny Rogers and Barbra Streisand, best male and female vocalists for the third time each; Hall and Oates, most popular musical group; and anchorman Dan Rather as the most trusted newscaster.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — This city may be a Democratic stronghold, but a moving company agent thinks it would still be a good place for Richard M. Nixon's presidential library.

"The revenue impact on the community of Terre Haute is what caught my interest," said Richard Eldred, who said a museum would create jobs and bring in up to $15 million annually from tourists.

Eldred, a Democrat, admits he expects negative reaction from local party members.

"The fact that Nixon is controversial has not affected my thinking on this matter. I don't think you can take the man's entire political career and cite him on just one item," he said, referring to the Watergate scandal.

Eldred, a Mayflower Transit Co. agent, said he has talked to Nixon's attorneys and officials at the National Archives.

"The (former) president's people have not discouraged us ... they say they will look at our proposal," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Jack Dempsey, who slugged his way through some of the greatest bouts in boxing history, has been hospitalized for observation.

Dempsey, 86, was taken ill Sunday and admitted to New York Hospital-Cornell University Medical Center, said administrator Scott Margolis.

"He is under medical observation and is in stable condition," said Margolis. "Basically he is just feeling bad."

Dempsey won the heavyweight title July 4, 1919, by knocking down 6-foot-6 Jess Willard seven times in three rounds. Willard failed to answer the bell for the fourth round.

Dempsey, who ruled as champion until 1926, also won a classic, 10-knock-down slugfest with Luis Firpo of Argentina in which Dempsey was knocked out of the ring, only to be pushed back inside.

His most famous fight was the "Battle of the Long Count" in a 1927 rematch with Gene Tunney, who had taken away his title. Tunney beat Dempsey in that rematch despite being knocked down and getting several extra seconds to rise to his feet because Dempsey failed to move to a neutral corner.

South African empire becoming major U.S. investor

By THOMAS LIPPMAN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The South African diamond and minerals empire controlled by Harry F. Oppenheimer is rapdily becoming a major investor in mining, energy and commodities companies in the United States and Canada.

Through a subsidiary called Minorco, a holding company based in Bermuda, the South African firms headed by Oppenheimer have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in North American coal, uranium, gold, copper and other important minerals, and have developed the capital resources to finance further acquisitions.

Documents filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission show that dozens of mining and minerals companies throughout the United States and Canada are wholly or partially controlled by the South African interests. Though no total figure for the value of their holdings is available, a new study by a New York researcher says the South African group has been one of the biggest foreign investors in this country over the past two years.

The investments reflect a long-range corporate strategy that Oppenheimer developed in the 1970s and spoke about publicly at the time. Oppenheimer sought to expand his companies' stake outside South Africa for economic and political reasons, and to do it he transferred assets now worth more than $2 billion to the Bermuda subsidiary to circumvent his country's restrictions on the export of funds.

The policy of investing in North America "is no accident," corporate research specialist Ruth Kaplan says in a report to be published by The Africa Fund. "It offers a stable area politically and economicaly, it is an area rich in mineral and energy resources and (the company) will realize a high return on successful investment." In addition, she said in a telephone interview, "it allows them to position themselves outside South Africa in the event of trouble there."

In addition to investments by Minorco, Kaplan said, "a total of 144 separate investments in North America by the Anglo group have been identified; 108 of these investments are in the U.S. (in 32 states) and 36 are in Canada."

BUSINESS RELATIONSHIPS between American firms and South Africa have been controversial for many years because, critics say, they contribute to the economic power of the white-minority regime in South Africa and support its apartheid racial policy. Most attention from church groups, institutional investors and stockholders, however, has focused on investments in South Africa by U.S. corporations. The extent of South African investment in the United States — which has the same effect of forging links of mutual interest between U.S. and South African companies — has been little noticed.

A few critics who have examined South Africa's growing involvement in the U.S. economy have objected that the investments are financed by the fruits of apartheid, and strengthen the power of the ruling minority.

For example, the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, a Protestant church group that monitors corporate performance on social and environmental issues, plans to offer a stockolders resolution at the forthcoming annual meeting of Citicorp to get Citicorp Chairman Walter Wriston off the board of directors of Minorco. Citicorp, parent of the giant Citibank, has continued to make loans to South Africa when most other major banks have stopped doing so.

Oppenheimer, one of the world's richest men, has a longstanding reputation as a liberal, at least in the South African context, using his personal wealth and power to oppose apartheid and improve living conditions for his country's blacks. Nevertheless, Timothy Smith, director of the Interfaith Center, said Oppenheimer is still a "profiteer" whose fortune was built on the backs of low-paid black miners.

Oppenheimer is chairman of the Anglo American Corp. and of its affiliate, De Beers Consolidated Mines Ltd., each of which owns a substantial interest in the other.

According to Kaplan, whose findings are confirmed by SEC records and by investment experts in the Commerce Department, "Anglo American is the biggest single economic factor in South Africa ... the Western world's largest producer of gold, diamonds and platinum." De Beers "operates a monopoly in the diamond trade, marketing 80 percent of the world's diamonds, including the Soviet Union's."

Brewery heir's disappearance puzzles authorities, family

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A disbarred lawyer who was with Adolphus von Gontard when he was last seen is "important" in the search for the vanished heir to the Anheuser-Busch brewing and Mercedes automobile fortunes, an investigator says.

It has been nearly 14 months since von Gontard disappeared, puzzling authorities in New Mexico, Arizona and Nevada.

The 46-year-old great-grandson of Adolphus Busch, founder of the St. Louis brewery, was last seen Feb. 20, 1981, in Phoenix's Sky Harbor International Airport, according to his family and police.

"There's not the tiniest thread of evidence what has happened to him," said his brother, Paul T. von Gontard of Jackson, Wyo.

Authorities say von Gontard was with Rick E. Allen, a disbarred lawyer from California, at the airport. But they won't say if they know what happened after that.

Police say they don't believe von Gontard was suicidal, the victim of foul play, involved with criminal activity, or involved with a woman.

Allen, who now lives near Reno, Nev., has refused to discuss von Gontard's disappearance and has refused to say whether he has been in contact with von Gontard, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

ALLEN FACES TRIAL in Reno on a drug charge and nine counts of practicing medicine without a license. Authorities say Allen and von Gontard, who lived in Santa Fe, N.M., had joint real estate holdings in Canada and had been associates for about three years.

The prosecuting attorney in Phoenix has jurisdiction over the investigation of the disappearance. David Corey, an investigator for the Maricopa county attorney, would say only that "the Allen thing is important," and that "bits and pieces indicated that von Gontard has talked to Allen since he vanished."

Authorities, however, say they believe von Gontard had no connection with Allen's alleged illegal activities, which they said stemmed from the operation of a chiropractic clinic, the Sparks Spinal Orthopedic Centre in Sparks, Nev., after von Gontard vanished.

Airline records show von Gontard flew to Las Vegas, as he told his estranged wife he planned to do. But investigators could find no one who saw him there.

If von Gontard, who is also a grandson of a former president of Mercedes-Benz & Manser Corp. of West Germany, is not found by Feb. 20, 1986, New Mexico law says his estate must be disposed of according to the terms of his will.

LAST MONTH, A COURT appointed Kenneth S. Lay of St. Louis, von Gontard's long-time attorney, as conservator of his estate. Lay applied for the position at the request of von Gontard's brother.

His only competition for the position was Jutta von Gontard — Adolphus von Gontard's second wife.

Mrs. von Gontard and her husband were divorced in January 1981, but they reconciled shortly before he vanished, she told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

In a copyright story Sunday, the newspaper quoted her as saying that on the day von Gontard disappeared, he was to receive $200,000 in cash from Allen — the proceeds from the sale of 100 acres in Canada.

Noguchi supported by Japanese-Americans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Embattled county coroner Thomas T. Noguchi, suspended by the county Board of Supervisors over management problems and the handling of celebrity deaths, is drawing support from the Japanese-American community in Los Angeles.

"I think there's a racial implication in the suspension, but we feel we may not win our case if we concentrate only on that," said Dr. Mitsuo Inouye, chairman of CARP, which stands for Concerned Americans for Responsible Progress.

He said he also sees political motives behind the suspension.

"He's a stubborn person," Inouye said. "They can't corrupt him or use him and these politicians can't live with that."

Inouye, a physician in general practice in Culver City, said Sunday that CARP represents about 30 organizations ranging from the Japanese American Citizens League to the Union Church in Little Tokyo and includes the Asian employees of Los Angeles County.

John J. Saito, regional director of the JACL, said that under a policy change instituted in 1976, new department heads would no longer be protected by the Civil Service Commission, and he and Inouye believe that is one reason the supervisors want to get rid of Noguchi.

"As we see it, the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors has wanted the coroner's department for their own political purposes for a long time," Inouye said.

The board suspended Noguchi for 30 days starting March 29, accusing him of poor management, absenteeism and making prejudicial remarks about the deaths of celebrities including William Holden and Natalie Wood.

In early March, county Chief Administrative Officer Harry Hufford recommended firing Noguchi and placing the coroner's department under the the county sheriff's department. An audit by the county grand jury stated that the coroner's office needed update equipment and better managerial organization.

Dr. Carole Fujita, the supervisor of the pharmacy department at Harbor General Hospital and the head of the Asian Pacific Women's Network, is in charge of collecting signatures on a petition supporting Noguchi, and she has gathered 700 to 800 so far, Inouye said.

"She went through the same thing as Dr. Noguchi," Inouye said. She was passed over for promotion and "she had to sue them. She just won her appeal through civil service. That was another case where they didn't want an Asian in there," he said.

The board of the 9,000-member Pacific Southwest District of the JACL voted on Wednesday "to do whatever is necessary to support Dr. Noguchi," Saito said.

"Our District Governor, Cary Nishimoto, said that after meeting with Supervisor (Mike) Antonovich that he didn't feel Noguchi was being given a fair and impartial hearing," Saito said.

The Civil Service Commission is expected to decide Wednesday whether to grant Noguchi a hearing he requested last Tuesday. In 1969, when the Board of Supervisors summarily fired Noguchi, the commission reinstated him.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Don't invest money saved for home in stock market

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. My husband and I have just retired. Our pensions and Social Security give us income of $2,900 a month. We also collect $8,120 annual tax-free interest from municipal bonds and $8,400 a year dividends from utility stock and have $10,000 in an "all savers certificate" paying about 12 percent tax-free interest.

Doyle

We plan to sell our home and move to a different area. We will then rent for a year or two, until we decide exactly where to settle. We will clear about $100,000 on our present home and have been advised to invest $50,000 in each of two utility common stocks, yielding about 14 percent in dividends, until we need the money for our new home. Do you feel this is good advice?

A. It might turn out to be good; it might not. No one can tell you the prices at which you will be able to sell those utilities, or any other stocks, a year or two from now. Although almost all utility stocks pay good dividends and are counted as conservative investments, there is no assurance their prices won't drop.

This column always advises against buying stocks for relatively short periods, when the money used to buy them will be needed for a specific purpose. The stock market is no place to keep money earmarked for the purchase of a home. Even though you are in much better financial shape than most retired people, my recommendation is to take no risk with that $100,000.

A far better thing to do would be to put the money for a retirement home someplace where it will earn a high yield and be safe, such as 182-day savings certificates, U.S. Treasury bills or money market mutual funds.

Q. I have $40,000 invested in stocks. I have paid for all the stocks but they are not registered in my name. I leave them with the brokerage firm with which I do business. Suppose the broker goes bankrupt? Do I then lose the stocks?

A. No. So, don't fret. Your brokerage account is protected by the Securities Investor Protection Corp. SIPC was established by an act of Congress in 1970, after the bankruptcy of brokerage houses sent tremors from Wall Street to Main Street.

SIPC insures each customer's account for up to $500,000, no more than $100,000 of which may be in cash, when a brokerage firm goes belly up. So, if your brokerage fails, you'll get your stocks and cash you have left with the firm back — up to the SIPC insurance limits.

This insurance, of course, does not protect you against loss, if the market prices of the stocks you have left with a broker fall. It simply insures that your stocks and cash will be returned to you.

Q. Some people advise me to never leave stocks with a broker but to get my stock certificates and keep them in a safe deposit box. What do you advise?

A. If you buy and sell stocks frequently, it's wise to leave your stock with the broker. Then, you don't have to bother delivering certificates to the broker when you sell. Your stocks are safe with the broker. The statements you receive show what the broker is holding for you.

But, if you're a long-term investor, it is usually better to have the stocks registered in your name and tucked away in your "lock box." Your dividends come directly to you, as do stockholder reports and other communications from the companies in which you own shares.

Q. My broker says his firm's money market mutual fund is safer than stocks. Is this true?

A. Sure. The value of all money market mutual funds remains constant, at either $1 or $10. The market values of stocks can rise or fall. That's basic.

Economy teaches people they can survive with less

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — There are some things in life an American just can't do without, they were saying back there a decade ago. Like a car with 8 cyls., 350 hp., and a house with family room, 3 brs., 2 bths.

But Americans have done without them. Forced by necessity, especially by high prices and interest rates, they have shown they can indeed do without the things the marketing people had said were essential.

They have accepted downsizing, and even have made small-is-beautiful a symbol of smartness. Conservation is in, waste is out. A little wear and tear on the automobile is a merit badge and a sign of good sense.

Only those whose peculiar talents help them ride the crest of inflation still buy up a storm. They drive hand-rubbed cars. They build big, empty vacation houses for the sheer joy of owning.

Some economists have an explanation for this. There is, they say, an element that has been almost immune to inflation, made up of doctors, lawyers, technology entrepreneurs, entertainers, and athletes.

But even these may be showing signs of hurting. "Apparently the recession is forcing the big-ticket consumer to retrench," says Edward Yardeni, chief economist at E.F. Hutton & Co., the securities firm.

Yardeni's observation followed an announcement from General Motors in March that it would suspend production for a week at a Cadillac plant.

"Even the rich can't afford Caddies, notwithstanding a $2,000 rebate on the Seville," he comments, suggesting that one reason might be that some of the entrepreneurs who generally buy Caddies are going broke.

Whatever may be happening to the rich, the middle and lower classes know all about it. They have resisted rebates and gone for years with the old jalopy, and they have lived without the house of their dreams.

They have cut lifestyles, in some cases drastically.

The number of households actually diminished last year as singles doubled up and parents and children reunited under one roof, the luxury of separate apartments being too much for their pocketbooks.

Some families have learned to exist with 50 percent of take-home pay going for rent, utilities and insurance on the furniture, or if they own a house, for mortgage, tax, utility, insurance and heating bills.

Recalling the aspirations of a decade ago, the change seems remarkable, challenging the assumptions of marketing people that they could motivate almost at will. Inflation took care of that notion.

Americans are adaptable. While the size of houses rose during the 1960s to include extra baths and bedrooms, and a family room too, the trend is now the other way. Homebuyers want less; the affordable home rather than the elaborate home is now the dream and the goal.

Remember what used to be called the mobile home? Metal framed and boxy, it was scorned by those who aspired to a "real" house.

But now, the same people who used to scan the classifieds for the magic 3 brs., 2 bths. are reading catalogues which tout the economy of "manufactured homes," successor to the old style mobile units.

A decade ago it was smart to spend. Now it's smart to save. How long people will put up with it is debatable, and there are even some who speak about impending social disorder should the austerity continue.

Meanwhile, statistics show Americans are more reluctant to use credit and more highly motivated toward reducing their debts.

Marketing people might argue that it is not nearly so fulfilling as spending, but those who have adapted to the new style of rebuilding the bank account say it is smart in a way such people wouldn't understand.

Four found dead on farm

CHASKA, Minn. (AP) — Four people whose bodies were found in a farmhouse after they failed to show up for a birthday party apparently were victims of a triple murder and suicide, authorities say.

Carver County Sheriff William R. Schalow said the bodies were found Saturday at the house of farmer Arthur Bollman, 60, whom he described as well-known in this community 30 miles southwest of Minneapolis.

Bollman's wife Elizabeth, 59, son David, 14, and daughter Joan, 27, were found slain with a shotgun on the first floor of the farmhouse.

Roughnecks shown above are at work on Platform Grace. Despite its name, Platform Grace is far from graceful. From the bottom of the legs planted on the ocean floor to the top of the twin derricks, it awkwardly stretches about 550 feet, or approximately 55 stories, 32 of them below the water's surface.

Cheaper oil could hurt U.S. economy

Copley News Service

It's one thing to look a gift horse in the teeth. It's quite another to kick the horse in the teeth.

Yet that seems to be the attitude among some economists these days: They're so-depressed about the economic ramifications of a drop in oil prices that, it almost appears, they'd like to hand the decrease — if we get it — back.

What? Turn down a price decrease? Wouldn't an oil price drop be, figuratively, an Arabian stallion with gold teeth?

It does sound flaky, but it's true: A drop in oil prices wouldn't be complete bliss. It would pump money back into the hands of the consumer, but it would also take money from the government (in windfall oil tax revenues), thereby raising the deficit and interest rates. It would lead to a drop in oil-related capital spending — in fact, that's already happening.

There would be a decrease in exports — and there is danger there could be a relaxation of energy conservation efforts. There is already some evidence, for example, that gas-guzzling cars are selling better in relation to fuel-stingy ones.

COULD ALL THESE negatives possibly outweigh the positives of lower oil prices? In the long run — hardly. But short term — indubitably.

But before we discuss the possible negatives, let's first consider whether we'll actually see the world oil price dropping significantly — say, by $10 a barrel.

OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) "has for the first time in its 21-year history acted like a true cartel," noted Joseph McAlinden of Wall Street's Argus Research. OPEC is trying to hold production to 17.5 million barrels a day — about 25 percent below last year's levels. Even after the agreement, the price of Saudi light oil in the spot market slipped to $28 a barrel, about $6 below the official price.

Can the suddenly sated satrapies — who were barely speaking to each other before their recent summit — maintain the discipline necessary to rig the price?

Most observers doubt it: "Maintaining discipline will be difficult — and ultimately unsuccessful," said McAlinden, arguing that in a weak world economy there will be too much temptation for the debt-ridden smaller countries to shave prices. Iran, for example, is desperately selling off the shah's treasures to stay afloat, and intends to sell oil unilaterally, said McAlinden.

Of course, all economists hedge their bets on this question: "The Middle East is still a political tinderbox. An Arab-Israeli war or a Saudi Arabian coup are just two possible — if not very probable — events that could swiftly turn today's oil glut into another damaging shortfall," said McAlinden.

BUT LET US suppose international statesmanship triumphs and ~~price~~ statesmanship peters out. The world oil price plunges by $10 a barrel.

Gary Wenglowski of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs figures that each $1 of oil price drop puts $5.5 billion into consumers' pockets.

Michael K. Evans of Washington, D.C.,'s Evans Economics figures a $10-a-barrel price drop, by putting money in consumers' pocketbooks, would lead to a $40 billion increase in consumer spending.

Good news? Evans wipes away the windfall with the flick of a wrist: First, we suffer a $10 billion decline in exports.

Second, there is a $10 billion decline in capital spending. "The decline in energy investment is already quite apparent," said Evans. "The weekly rig count in the United States has declined 17 percent over the past 13 weeks. Investment in synfuel plants is at a standstill. Airlines are dredging up any excuse they can find to cancel their 757 and 767 orders." For the first quarter, oil companies expect their capital investments to drop 7 percent; for gas utilities, it's 11 percent.

Agreed McAlinden, "The past several weeks have witnessed a flurry of canceled energy projects, since it makes little sense to proceed with multibillion-dollar investments that are based on the now-shaky assumption that the price of oil will reach $50-$60 a barrel by 1985."

NEXT, EVANS considers the effect on the government's tax receipts. "The government gets about 80 percent of an increase in oil prices, and hence correspondingly suffers 80 percent of any decline in prices."

Ergo, said Evans, "The government deficit is increased by $40 billion." This, in turn, raises interest rates by 2 percent — and that, in turn, drops GNP (gross national product) by $30 billion. If you've been keeping count, the total $50 billion loss to the economy is $10 billion more than the $40 billion increase in consumption — ergo, "The net effect of lower oil prices is to depress, rather than increase, GNP," said Evans.

Of course, others would argue that the decrease in oil company investments will be more than offset by the increase in investment by other kinds of companies. And other arguments could pierce this thesis.

First quarter drilling suggests record year

DENVER (AP) — Although lower world oil prices and a sudden slowdown in the use of drilling rigs suggest that 1982 drilling could fall behind the 1981 pace, the nation's largest compiler of statistics regarding the oil industry still predicts a record year for drilling.

Petroleum Information Corp. reported that a total of 21,685 oil and natural gas wells were completed in the United States during the first quarter of this year, compared with 16,556 wells during the first quarter of 1981, a year that saw 78,884 wells completed.

"Completions showed increases in every drilling category compared to 1981 first-quarter statistics," PI, which is based in Denver, reported in a news statement.

Texas led the nation with 7,164 well completions for the quarter, up 40 percent from the 1981 first quarter rate, and Oklahoma was second with 2,781 completions, up 23.6 percent, PI reported. Kansas had 2,083 completions, up 53 percent; Louisiana 1,469, up 10.2 percent, and Ohio 1,235, up 29.2 percent, the reporting firm said.

PI said the number of new field wildcats, the riskiest exploratory wells, was up 33.4 percent over last year's first quarter, while other exploratory drilling increased by 41 percent and development drilling was up 29.6 percent over the same period a year ago.

Of the 2,726 wildcat wells drilled in the first quarter, 304 turned out to be oil discoveries, and 186 were gas discoveries, PI said.

Of the 1,915 other exploratory wells drilled during the period, 435 were completed as oil wells and 378 as gas wells.

PI said there were 17,044 development wells during first-quarter 1982, compared with 13,155 for the same period last year. Development wells tap known producing areas to recover known reserves. PI said that about four of every five of the development wells were successful.

Gas prices continue decline

Texas gasoline prices have decreased from one to seven cents per gallon on the various grades of fuel available; these drops occurred during the period March 19 to 26. The drop in prices continues as the Easter travel time nears.

In the latest survey taken by the American Automobile Association (AAA) 314 stations were surveyed. Gasoline availability appears to be good for the Easter weekend, with only 31 percent of the stations surveyed planning to close. Motorists are urged to remember to use their seatbelts, no matter what the length of the trip.

The state-wide survey shows varying gasoline prices throughout the state. Survey price ranges are as follows: Full service regular .965 (Beaumont) to 1.46 (Pecos); unleaded .999 (Beaumont) to 1.48 (Pecos); premium unleaded 1.229 (Beaumont) to 1.52 (San Antonio); diesel 1.04 (El Paso) to 1.41 (Pecos). Self service regular is .949 (Galveston) to 1.38 (Pecos); unleaded 1.048 (Huntsville) to 1.45 (Pecos); premium unleaded 1.099 (Huntsville) to 1.49 (Pecos); diesel 1.039 (Beaumont) to 1.258 (Pecos). With the return of vigorous competition in the market, price wars are sprouting up regularly.

Easter means that spring has arrived. This is a good time for motorists to inspect their vehicles to determine the effecgts of winter wear and tear; it's the tune-up time of the year.

Current average full service prices (March 19 survey prices are in parentheses) are: Regular 1.216 (1.268); unleaded 1.269 (1.312); premium unleaded 1.305 (1.381); diesel 1.228 (1.270). The average prices in the self service category are: Regular 1.062 (1.112); unleaded 1.157 (1.179); premium unleaded 1.211 (1.277); diesel 1.104 (1.151).

Blocker reports Ohio acquisition

HOUSTON — Blocker Energy Corporation has announced the acquisition of interests in 78 producing wells in Ohio.

The wells are primarily natural gas producers being acquired from Bartlo Oil and Gas Company and affiliates of New Philadelphia, Ohio. The properties are in Ohio's Guernsey, Medina, Summit and Tuscarawas counties.

GOREN BRIDGE

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠952 ♡84 ◇10974 ♣AQ83
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ♠	Dble	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Despite the fact that you might have nothing, partner has told you that he expects to make nine tricks. He should have a good hand and, probably, a six-card suit for this action. You have two possible tricks for partner, and you owe him a vote of confidence by bidding four hearts.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ1076 ♡6 ◇KQ952 ♣J7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Because of the obvious misfit, this hand is not as good as it looks. Still, some move toward game is indicated, and it does not look as if three diamonds is the right one. The most likely game is in no trump, and you should make that suggestion to partner by bidding two no trump now.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK4 ♡864 ◇K10762 ♣AK
The bidding has proceeded:

1 NT	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—It is usually correct to raise partner's major suit to game when you have three-card support and he has jumped. Here, however, all your points are outside partner's suit, and we suggest that you bid three no trump — that might be the better contract. If partner is highly unbalanced, he does not have to linger there — he is free to bid again.

Q.4—Both vulnerable as South you hold:
♠763 ♡KJ8752 ◇7 ♣Q65
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—While you might strike gold by introducing your heart suit, such action is fraught with danger. Partner will surely expect a better hand from you and might do something rash. Pass. We really don't know how this question slipped in — we know none of our readers would indulge in a rescue operation since partner has not yet been doubled..

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ82 ♡63 ◇KQ8 ♣A1093
The bidding has proceeded:

1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—If you play that a one no trump response to a one club opening bid shows 9-11 points, it is close as to whether you should pass or raise. Since you have combined count of at least 24, you should be safe at two no trump and could have game if partner is maximum, so we would raise. If partner's no trump response shows a weaker hand and you did anything other than pass, you must have misunderstood the problem.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J ♡AJ109852 ◇4 ♣A987
The bidding has proceeded:

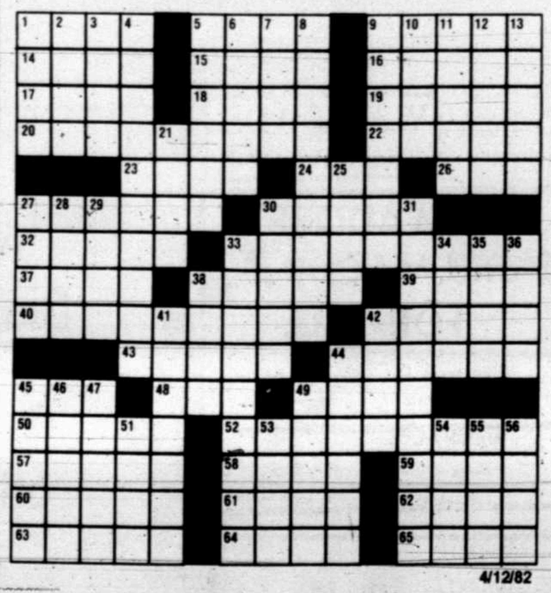

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Because of your great playing strength, you should be willing to commit the hand to slam. However, you could easily have a grand slam on the hand if partner has the right cards. A cue-bidding sequence should determine whether partner has two aces and second-round control of clubs. Bid four clubs.

Argentina nuclear situation causing worry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The confrontation between Argentina and Great Britain over the Falkland Islands has focused new attention on the South American nation's ambitious nuclear program, particularly the question of how soon Argentina may be able to produce atomic weapons.

"They haven't got the bomb yet, but they're not that far away. They have, or are putting into place, most of the elements needed to make the weapons," said one U.S. nuclear expert, who declined to have his name used.

His judgment was shared by several other people who follow nuclear proliferation.

Although Britain has long had nuclear weapons, they are expected to play no role in the looming confrontation. The British have four Polaris missile submarines, part of NATO's nuclear deterrent force.

Argentina has Latin America's most advanced nuclear program, which is aimed at producing 20 percent of the country's electricity needs by 1997.

While Argentine leaders have said repeatedly that their program is aimed at generating power, it also will give them the potential to develop nuclear weapons.

Last week, Argentina and the Soviet Union signed an agreement in which the Soviets will supply enriched uranium to augment the uranium mined by Argentina in the Andean foothills.

"They're probably a year away, at the earliest, from weapons," said Len Weiss, an aide to Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio. "More likely, it could be several years."

"It's very worrisome," said a former Carter administration non-proliferation expert. "They've got, or are getting, in place most of the elements needed for a weapons program. If they really pushed, they could probably put some type of crude weapon together in a few months." The Carter administration official, like most of the others willing to discuss the topic, asked that his name not be used.

In December, the British magazine "New Scientist" said Argentina could build an atomic weapon by the end of 1982. The magazine, citing unnamed U.S. intelligence sources, also said the nation was believed to be preparing a rocket that could deliver the weapon.

Six nations have exploded atomic devices, including the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union, France, China, and India. A seventh, Israel, is widely believed to have the weapon although it has never publicly admitted it.

Last month, Adm. Carlos Castro Madero, chief of Argentina's Atomic Energy Commission, said his nation would not rule out making a nuclear explosive for "peaceful reasons," such as building a waterway or land tunnel.

In 1974, when India exploded its atomic device, a similar reason was given. But the United States insists that there's no difference between peaceful and military nuclear explosions.

Argentina has refused to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, which 115 nations have approved, nor have the Argentines joined the Treaty of Tlatelolco, the 1967 pact banning atomic weapons in Latin America.

Susan Pittman, a spokeswoman for the State Department, said last week that "the United States supports the development of nuclear power for peaceful purposes, subject to adequate controls and safeguards. In that regard, we continue to urge the government of Argentina to ratify the Treaty of Tlatelolco and to conclude a full-scope safeguards agreement."

Brazil, Argentina's chief rival in South America, also has an ambitious nuclear program and observers here say the competition between the two nations will be a key factor in any Argentine decision about whether to build nuclear weapons.

Currently, Argentina has one power reactor, Atucha 1, with two others under construction. A second reactor will start operation later this year or early next year and the third is scheduled to go on line in 1989.

The Argentines also have a fuel fabrication plant and are expected to finish construction this year of a reprocessing plant, which would mean plutonium could be separated from spent fuel produced by Atucha 1. Plutonium is one of the key elements in nuclear weapons.

Weiss noted that there have been rumors fuel, which could have gone into a weapons program, may have been diverted from Atucha 1.

Soviet media claim U.S. partiality

MOSCOW (AP) — Pravda accused Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. on Sunday of siding with Britain in its dispute with Argentina over the seizure of the Falkland Islands.

Haig made trips to London and Buenos Aires last week trying to mediate the dispute.

"Covering up with an outwardly mediatory mission, Washington, as many people believe, in actual fact acts as a messager for British neocolonialists," the Soviet Communist Party newspaper said.

It said restoration of the Falklands to "colonial status" was "absolutely inadmissible" and said the dispute could only be solved by "peaceful negotiations."

Britain took control of the Falklands from Argentina 149 years ago, and Argentine troops retook the islands, which they call the Malvinas, on April 2.

Radio Moscow reported Sunday that a "NATO armada" carrying nuclear weapons was en route to Falklands to enforce the British declaration of a 200-mile war zone around the South Atlantic archipelago.

The Pravda commentary claimed there was a "clear disproportion" between Britain's "bellicose" actions and the "character and the scale of the long-standing and chronic dispute."

It said the Conservative Party politicians governing Britain "cannot rid themselves of nostalgia for the glorious colonial times" when Britain ruled the seas and "gunboat diplomacy was commonplace."

"An excessive escalation of the present conflict by London reveals the desire to cover up the failures of the conservative government in domestic policies," Pravda asserted, adding that this was no reason "to unleash a war."

Thatcher's future connected to Falklands

NEW YORK (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's political future "is very much at risk" because of her handling of the Falkland Islands crisis, a leader of the opposition Labor Party said Sunday.

Denis Healy, deputy leader of the Labor Party, criticized Mrs. Thatcher, charging the Argentine takeover of the British colony could "without the slightest doubt" have been prevented.

"I think myself that the mishandling of events which led up to the Argentinian occupation was a classic error," Healy said in an interview on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley."

"I think that Mrs. Thatcher's personal future is at risk here, and many people in her own party think she may be succeeded...during the summer," Healy said.

Healy said he felt it was "perfectly reasonable" to have United Nations troops replace the Argentine forces in the Falklands as a prelude to negotiations.

"It is possible to reach some sort of resolution to these problems," Healy said, "but it does require diplomacy and a very sensitive application of force with maximum economy."

Winston Churchill Jr., a member of Parliament, also appeared on the program and condemned Argentina's "flagrant act of aggression."

But he added he believes there is "a very good chance" England can avoid a war with Argentina provided the South American forces are removed from the Falklands.

"A prerequisite to any negotiations would have to be the removal of Argentine troops from the islands," Churchill said.

Churchill also said Mrs. Thatcher's position as prime minister will remain safe provided the British continue to protect their interests around the world.

Pope calls for end to Falklands dispute

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II appealed in his Easter message Sunday for Argentina and Great Britain to settle the Falkland Islands dispute while there is still time to avoid more bloodshed.

The pope, wearing white and gold vestments, also told 300,000 people in St. Peter's Square that world hunger would be eased if countries spent less money on arms and more on food for the poor.

Many tourists and pilgrims carried yellow and white helium-filled balloons — the Vatican colors — during the open-air Mass and the pope's Urbi et Orbi (to the City and the World) speech. The sky was blue and the air was warm.

About 50,000 people filed through Rome to St. Peter's Square in a March against Hunger organized by various political parties and led by Rome's Communist Mayor Ugo Vetere.

"The joy of Easter is disturbed by the situations of tension and of conflict in various parts of the world," the pope said in Italian.

"Of late there has been added a grave tension between two countries of Christian tradition, Argentina and Great Britain, involving the loss of human lives and the threat of armed conflict and fearful repercussions in international relations.

"I express the fervent hope and the particularly pressing appeal to the parties involved to diligently seek, with responsible commitment and with all good will, ways of a peaceful and honourable settlement of the dispute while there is still time to prevent a struggle involving bloodshed."

Argentina seized the Falkland Islands in the south Atlantic on April 2 after 149 years of British rule. Britain is sending a fleet of warships to the archipelago to retake the islands by force if necessary.

The pontiff's message also expressed concern about the Iran-Iraq War, which is in its 21st month with no sign of resolution.

John Paul II said Easter is for "all the victims of injustice, human cruelty and of violence, of exploitation and of selfishness."

Easter is also for "all the millions and millions of human beings threatened by the scourge of famine, which could be removed or diminished if humanity knew how to renounce even only a part of the resources which it foolishly consumes in armaments," he said.

Thousands of those present cheered when the pope referred to famine, and some of the March Against Hunger participants released helium balloons.

The marchers included Jean Pierre Cot, French Minister for Cooperation and Development; Hannes Alfwen of Sweden, winner of the 1970 Nobel Prize for Physics, and Betty Williams of Northern Ireland and Lord Philip Noel-Baker of Britain, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1976 and 1959 respectively.

The two-hour Easter Mass was marked by joyous hymns and the sounding of trumpets at the elevation of the host.

The massive crowd spilled out of St. Peter's Square and onto surrounding streets.

At noon John Paul II appeared on a balcony to say "Happy Easter" in 43 languages, including his native Polish. He added in Polish that the resurrection of Christ should be an example to his compatriots and others.

"For all those — and there are many — who carry the cross: We must rise again," the pope said.

Demonstrators show both sides support

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About 200 Argentines gathered Sunday to show their support for the takeover of the Falkland Islands, which they call the Malvinas.

A much smaller group of British subjects had staged their own protest Saturday outside the World Trade Center where the Argentine Consulate is located, demanding that Argentina leave the islands it seized April 2.

Los Angeles Police Sgt. Robert Griffin said no trouble was reported in either demonstration.

The demonstrators Sunday sang Argentina's national anthem. Many carried signs with slogans such as, "Malvinas Belong to Argentina," "England Killed Soldiers, Argentina Didn't," and "British Pirates OUT of Argentina." Others held umbrellas to keep off pouring rain.

Posted on the speakers' platform were two large banners. One said, "1776 The British are coming...! Americans were waiting...!" The other said, "1982 The British are coming...! Argentinians are waiting...!"

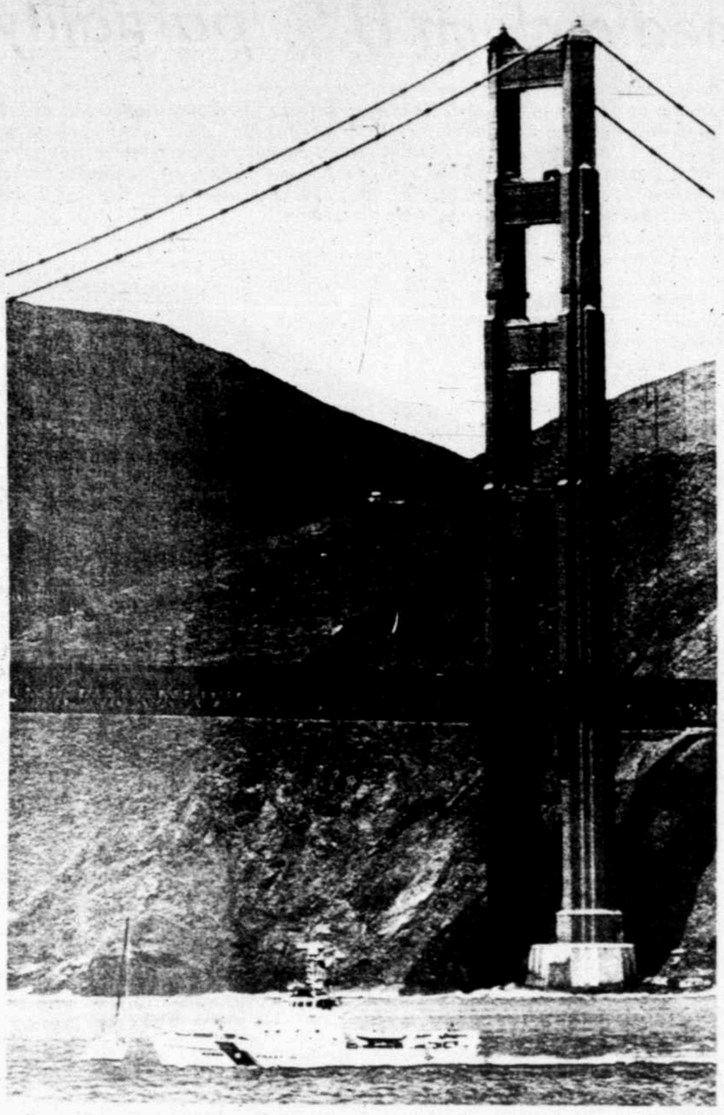

Alberto Pringles, an Argentine computer programmer and former publisher of a magazine called "Malvinas," said Malvinas is the proper name for the seized islands.

"That was the name before the British came in and took over in 1833 and called them the Falklands," said Pringles, who organized the demonstration.

"It was a magnificent demonstration, considering it was raining and a holiday too," he said. "There were by far more people than we expected."

During Saturday's demonstration, 15 British subjects carried signs saying, "Liberate British Hostages," "Stand Back, Buenos Aires," and "Argentine Marines — Leave Our Sheep Alone."

Sailboat Nidaros, left, owned by Bjarne Junge of Los Gatos, Calif., is under tow from a Coast Guard cutter under the Golden Gate Bridge after being rescued in the Pacific Ocean Sunday morning. The Coast Guard is still searching fortwo yachts out of 127 that attempteda 60-mile, two-day race in stormy seas over the weekend.

Coast Guard searches for two yachts

By FRANCES D'EMILIO

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Coast Guard searchers scanned the waters off Northern California on Sunday for two yachts that failed to return from a 60-mile race after a storm. Six other sailboats, some of them battered by the winds and high seas, were found.

The yachts, each carrying a crew of two, were among 127 participating Saturday in the third annual race from San Francisco to the Farallon Islands and back. The race officially ended at 6 a.m. Sunday, and the search was mounted when eight vessels failed to return on time.

Three other yachts ran aground, one capsized and several lost their masts in the storm.

No injuries were reported, said Coast Guard spokesman Dan Mincher.

By mid-day Sunday, six of the missing sailboats were accounted for. One, the Lazy Boy, had berthed safely in Berkeley. The Air Force One was found beached on Bolinas Bay, while the Nideros, which had lost its rigging, was being towed to port by an 82-foot Coast Guard cutter, said Coast Guard Lt. Steve Branham.

TWO OTHER boats were spotted about five miles west of the Golden Gate bridge. One of them, the Penguin, was sailing under its own power, while the other, the Tiree, needed some aid, Branham said.

The sixth boat apparently docked in Oakland and did not immediately notify authorities, a club official said.

Joanne Sandskrom, a member of the St. Francis Yacht Club race committee, identified the missing boats as the Bad Sneakers, from the Alameda harbor, and the Sweet Omega, from Portland. She said she did not know the identities of the crew members.

A C-130 plane and helicopter aided boats in the search for the yachts, which had set out in steady rain at 8 a.m. Saturday for the uninhabited islands 30 mil west of San Francisco.

A storm came up quickly, and the weather became "miserable," Ms. Sandskro said.

"When the race began, the wind was 20 to 25 knots. As soon as the boats got ou of the (Golden) Gate," a new forecast called for winds as high as 50 knots, she sai "About 50 boats turned back immediately and another 22 turned back soo after."

THE FIRST boat completed the course at 3 p.m. Saturday and 51 others fi ished, Ms. Sandskrom said.

Three hours after the race began, the Coast Guard began receiving distre calls as the yachts, which ranged from 22 feet to 33 feet, ran into the storm.

One boat, which had notified authorities Saturday night that it was droppin anchor 13 miles west of the Golden Gate to wait out the weather, sailed in befor the Coast Guard began its air search at dawn.

"We're hoping others did the same, just stayed offshore, and if the batteries ar low, they can't make radio contact," said Ms. Sandskrom said.

Storm warnings were posted when the air search began Sunday morning. Vis bility was a mile at best and waves were as high as 20 feet, Mincher said. Wind were blowing up to 70 knots.

BUT BY mid-morning, sun broke through the skies above San Francisco Ba and seas were about 12 feet high, Branham said. Winds had also calmed down.

In another accident Saturday, two men died after their boat, not involved i the race, sank off Bolinas Bay, said Mincher. A third man, the boat's owner, swar safely to shore.

San Francisco County Coroner investigator Gary Jeffries identified the dea men as Davis police Lt. John Huber, 48, and police detective John Stroble, 26.

Study concludes citizen delay affects arrest rate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new federally financed study concludes that establishing an expensive police "911" emergency telephone system can produce at best three more arrests for every 1,000 serious criminal cases.

The three-year study also found that dialing 911 was on average only 10 seconds faster than calling the telephone operator and that in one city a 911 system actually caused delays in citizen crime reports.

Analyzing 3,332 crimes in four cities, the researchers found that citizen doubts about whether to call the police cause three times the delay in reporting crime that communications problems produce.

The researchers suggested that police departments establish citizen neighborhood watch programs to increase the reporting of crimes in progress, call-screening systems to reserve fast responses for those cases where it will make a difference, and witness aid programs to reduce citizen reluctance to get involved.

RELEASED SUNDAY, the study, "Calling the Police: Citizen Reporting of Serious Crime," was based on analysis of burglaries, robberies, aggravated assaults, motor vehicle thefts, larcenies and rapes between April, 1979 and January, 1980 in Jacksonville, Fla., Peoria, Ill., Rochester, N.Y., and San Diego, Calif.

With a $530,000 grant from the National Institute of Justice, research arm of the Justice Department, the Police Executive Research Forum conducted the study using police data and interviews with more than 4,000 victims, witnesses and bystanders.

The forum's executive director, Gary P. Hayes, said the results cast new doubt on "the time-honored tenet that police departments must send patrol cars immediately to all crime calls because the chances of making arrests are good."

As of January 1980, there were 911 systems in 800 places covering 25 percent to 30 percent of the nation's population, according to the study. More have been installed since, but it is not known how many, said Hayes.

The report provides the first confirmation of a controversial 1977 study in Kansas City which found that citizen delays in reporting crime were so long that fast police response could only affect the chances of arrest for a very small percentage of serious crimes. The latest study sheds new light on the reasons for those citizen delays.

THE STUDY found that rapid police reponse leads to on-scene arrests in only 29 out of every 1,000 cases, and that a fully effective 911 system could at best raise the arrest figure to 32. It concluded that the best reporting and response systems could only increase the figure to 50 to 60.

Of the four cities, only Peoria had a 911 system, which was installed in 1976 and widely publicized but for emergency calls only. Contrary to expectations, the researchers found "citizens were more likely to delay the call by looking through the (telephone) book in Peoria. Moreover, this relationship held true even for the most urgent cases."

They found that 20 percent of Peoria callers looked through the book even when someone had been injured or the crime was still in progress, a higher percentage than in any of the other cities, in part because citizens were misclassifying critical calls as non-emergencies and trying to find police administrative numbers to avoid overburdening the 911 system.

In an interview, Hayes said the basic benefit from a 911 system could be achieved for a tiny cost by simply putting gummed stickers on every telephone with the police department's telephone number on them.

Juror believes guilty verdict right in arson case

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A juror who helped convict a hotel waiter of arson and murder in a fire that killed 26 people at Stouffer's Inn says the jury reached the right verdict, even though the judge thought otherwise.

Luis Marin, 26, a Guatemalan immigrant, was convicted Saturday of arson and 26 counts of murder for setting the Dec. 4, 1980, fire. All the victims were business executives.

The nine-man, three-woman jury deliberated for six days before returning the verdict.

Marin's lawyer, Howard Dryer, said his client believes Westchester County Judge Lawrence Martin will set aside the verdict Wednesday. Earlier in the six-week trial, the judge told the prosecution outside the jury's presence that its case was "purely speculative."

"If there is any justice in this world, he'll be vindicated," Dryer said.

Juror Anthea Frankl, contacted at her Ossining, N.Y., home, said she believed Marin was guilty.

"We decided in the end that he started the fire so he could put it out and be a hero," said Mrs. Frankl.

Another juror, John Cioffi of Yonkers, said the jury "reached total agreement on each point" in the verdict.

Marin could be sentenced to 26 consecutive life prison terms.

The judge allowed the case to go to the jury because he believed the charges involved were too serious to be decided by "one man's opinion."

He warned the jurors that they they could not convict Marin unless convinced "to a moral certainty" that no one else could have set the fire.

Mrs. Frankl, one of the few jurors who would discuss the trial, said the jury had decided that.

Jury foreman Frederick Young said he had been crying all Sunday morning and did not want to talk to anyone. His wife said Young, a retired supermarket manager from Yorktown Heights whose task was to announce the verdicts, was "... really upset."

Juror Alice Croft of White Plains said the case was "too fresh in my mind" to discuss.

While there were no witnesses to the start of the fire, the prosecution contended Marin was the only person with the "means, opportunity and motive" to ignite the blaze.

Dyer argued there was no direct link between Marin and the fire, and cited past incidents of union violence at the hotel as proof that an unknown arsonist could have slipped inside and set it.

Mrs. Frankl said there was "no one thing" that convinced the jury to convict Marin. But she said his whereabouts in the hotel when the fire broke out was "critical."

Marin was last seen in the hotel at 10:15 a.m., but could not account for his whereabouts when the fire supposedly began at 10:20 a.m.

Mother's Convention organized

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — Mothers need to share their skills with each other the way businesses swap ideas, according to the woman behind the Mother's Convention.

"Years ago, women learned mothering from other women," says Kay Willis, a Rutherford, N.J., mother of 10 who is organizing the meeting. "Today women no longer have those role models to turn to."

The two-day conference April 30 and May 1 is expected to draw 200 women from New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, she said.

Walrus wears the Green

'I gotta sink this one to win Masters' dream comes true

By D. BYRON YAKE
AP Sports Editor

AUGUSTA, Ga. — He's not stylish in the image of Madison Avenue, his golf game is mostly self-taught, he has no agent, and, until now, making a run for big riches outside golf has not been of interest.

He's roundish, his mustache a bushy kind that hangs far over his upper lip. He looks more like a construction worker than a country club golfer.

His nickname is Walrus, he fights being overweight and his belt is tucked under his protruding stomach.

He vents emotion more freely than most of his peers, and he's had to work hard at not throwing clubs, not stomping his feet, not losing his cool when the going got tough on the golf course.

He is Craig Stadler, the new Masters champion. He could be the guy next door.

"When I was a kid, I'd do what many do. I'd drop a couple balls on a green at 5 or 6 at night and say, 'I got to sink this to win the U.S. Open or the Masters.' " Stadler said after he beat Dan Pohl on the first hole of a sudden death playoff Sunday at Augusta National Golf Club.

"The Masters was something as a kid I dreamed of just seeing.

"Just playing it for the first time in 1974 was a dream come true.

"This ... this is just unbelievable."

STADLER, 28, may not fit the image of a Masters winner, but he has the $64,000 check and he has the green jacket. He earned them.

Earn them he did. He escaped disaster after blowing a six-stroke lead he had at the turn.

He started the day three strokes ahead of Jerry Pate, his playing partner, and Spain's Seve Ballesteros, the Masters champion in 1980.

With birdies at two, six and seven, however, he stretched the lead to six strokes over Ballesteros and Tom Weiskopf, who had gained one stroke. Pate, meanwhile, fell off the pace by eight strokes with bogeys at one and four.

It was a stroll in the park for Stadler, so it seemed. A runaway.

The day was perfect. The azaleas and the dogwood dressed the course in its Sunday best. The sun was bright, the breezes gentle.

"I had a good drive on 11, laid it up to the right of the green," Stadler recalled.

"And as I was walking down the fairway, looking at the leader board with a six-shot lead, I was thinking, 'This is pretty easy.' I was picturing myself on the putting green (where the winners' presentation is made).

"Then I started thinking, 'Worry about your own game, don't start thinking that way.' My mind did stray for a bit," he said.

HIS GAME started to stray on the next hole, the par-3 No. 12, where he took a bogey after missing a seven-foot putt.

Meanwhile, Pohl, the longest driver on the tour, but a non-winner in more than four years, had birdied 12 with a 10-foot putt, and now the gap was suddenly four strokes.

Pohl, who had played eight straight holes — the last six holes of the third round and the first two of the fourth — in eight under par that included successive eagles Saturday, also birdied the next hole, No. 13, a par 5.

He just missed an eagle on a 10-foot putt after hitting a four-iron — "my best iron shot in a long time."

Pohl then bogeyed the 14th and, with Stadler at the 11th, Pohl was still four strokes back.

But Pohl birdied the par-3 16th, and Stadler's fortunes went further awry.

He bogeyed 14 with three putts, then took a bogey at 16 when he hit his drive in a bunker.

His sand wedge shot went past the hole and slid down the other side of the glass-like green about 40 feet. He two putted coming back.

"I was at 14 when I saw Pohl on the board," Stadler said. "He was four under and I was seven under. I thought, 'I have to get another birdie.' " It was not to happen.

POHL BIRDIED 16 and now the margin was just one stroke, and what had been a stroll for Stadler became a struggle.

Stadler hit a drive and a five-iron to 20 feet of the hole on 18. It looked like a routine two-putt par.

But he hit his putt weakly and left a six-footer. Then he missed that, too.

It was reminiscent of the 1979 Masters when Stadler's playing partner, Ed Sneed, who started the day five strokes ahead, missed a similar putt at 18 that sent the match into a playoff.

Pate, who needed to make a 15-foot putt at 18 to tie for the lead, left it short and fell into a third-place tie with Ballesteros.

Now, this match was tied, and Stadler and Pohl went to a sudden death playoff, starting at the 10th hole.

But unlike Sneed, who had lost in the playoff, Stadler atoned for his 40 on the back nine, atoned for blowing a six-stroke lead, and silenced the whispers that he had choked.

The playoff started and ended on the 10th with Stadler making a routine par, and Pohl hitting a poor second shot to the right of the green, then missing an eight-foot putt for a bogey.

"I'd be a fool to say I wasn't nervous walking down the 10th fairway," said Pohl, who had scores of 67-67 the final two rounds after shooting a pair of 75s.

"It was a tough way to end the day. I let Craig off pretty easy on the playoff," he said. "I played well prior to that. And I proved to myself I could keep in contention in a major championship."

Craig Stadler comes out of sand on to the green.

"I KIND of thought what winning would mean when I was going to 10, (for the playoff)" said Stadler.

"As a person it's not going to change me any. I just enjoy being myself.

"Up until now I've haven't really thought of running to Colombia this week or to New Zealand next week (to play in tournaments).

"It just wasn't in my game plan."

Stadler and Tom Watson, the defending champion who finished three strokes back at 287, are now the only golfers who have won two tournaments this year. Stadler is also the leading money winner with $211,557.

What will it take for him to be a superstar on the tour?

"The only real negative thing in my game I've seen is my consistency," he replied, slightly avoiding the question.

Perhaps, now wearing the green jacket, he didn't need to answer it.

San Antonio nudges Cubs in 11th, 2-1

SAN ANTONIO—Midland's Cubs led the Texas League in one-run losses last year and after a third straight one-run loss, seemed destined to do it again this season.

San Antonio dealt the Cubs a 2-1 defeat when Greg Smith singled to center with two out in the 11th to score Tony Brewer from second base.

It was the only hit relief pitcher Mike Thompson gave up in 3 2/3 innings, but it was enough to beat him. Brewer had reached first on a walk and was sacrificed to second.

San Antonio took a 1-0 lead in the first when Mark Sheehy singled to left with one out, stole second, took third on an infield out and came home on a wild pitch by Carlos Gil.

Midland tied it in the fourth, when Fritz Connally reached on a bobble by third baseman Leo Hernandez, took second on an infield roller and scored on Mike Diaz' single.

Rebs, Bulldogs tangle Tuesday

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

As the first half of the District 5-5A baseball race nears an end, Midland Lee and Midland High are looking for more than a victory in their meeting Tuesday at Lee Field. They are looking for intensity and momentum.

Since neither team has anything to gain as far as the first half standings are concerned, setting up for the second half is the issue at stake.

Gaining intensity for this game should be no problem, it never is when two town teams meet. Lee's Ernie Johnson and MHS' Tim Whalen both agree on that point. It's keeping it that sometimes proves to be trouble.

"We usually hook up and have a real good game," said Johnson. "In the last couple of years, it's been pretty close and I think this one will be also. I don't think we'll have much trouble getting ready."

"They're 2-4 and so are we," said Whalen. "We beat them once and they beat us once. They'll come out and play and I hope my kids do the same. There's pride at stake. We have to live in the same town and it makes it a lot easier to keep your head up if you play well. I think it'll probably be a good game."

THIS YEAR the style of play between the two teams has been similar. Both rely heavily on pitching and defense because neither has an overpowering lineup at the plate.

That formula didn't do all that well in the first half. Both teams suffered from errors, mental as well as physical and both paid the price for their miscues in the won/loss column.

Each team will be throwing a pitcher that has had some measure of success.

Lee sophomore Bryan Willis is 2-1 in 5-5A play (5-1 overall) and has a 3.71 earned run average. He's given up a lot of bases in four games with 30, 22 hits and eight walks, but has 19 strikeouts to his credit. The K's, along with a usually sound defense, have kept opponent's runs down.

On the mound for the Bulldogs will be Billy Miles. The senior hurler for MHS has also given up a lot of bases, 23 hits and 13 walks, but has struck out 32 batters. After a shakey start when his ERA was overwhelmingly high, he has settled down and dropped it to 2.75. Defensive plays have also been a key for his success.

"I think the team that makes the fewest mistakes will be the winner," said Johnson. "Neither team is capable of scoring a lot of runs so it'll be the team that gives up the fewest will win."

"I think it'll be a battle of pitching and defense," said Whalen. "Neither of us are whomping the ball as a team. If it turns into a slugfest, we'll be in trouble because we don't have the relief pitching."

EACH TEAM has players that have proven they can hit the ball, but neither has an overwhelming supply of hitters.

Elsewhere in the 5-5A, Big Spring and Abilene High (both 5-1) will be seeking at least one-third of the first half title when they take the field. The Steers will face 3-3 San Angelo while the Eagles will take on Abilene Cooper (4-2) and Odessa Permian, 3-3, battles Odessa High, 0-5.

Cooper's only hope for the first half is in beating AHS then getting some help from San Angelo.

Islanders pushed to limit

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

If the Stanley Cup playoffs are proving one thing, it's how relatively insignificant the National Hockey League regular season seems to be.

The Chicago Black Hawks, St. Louis Blues and Pittsburgh Penguins are showing that what you do during the 80-game regular schedule matters little when you can elevate your play in the postseason.

Those three teams have done precisely that and have either staged impressive upsets — Chicago eliminating Minnesota and St. Louis ousting Winnipeg in four games — or have moved to the verge of one — Pittsburgh's tying the two-time champion New York Islanders at two games apiece.

The Black Hawks downed Minnesota, a Stanley Cup finalist last year, 5-2 Sunday night to advance to the Norris Division finals against St. Louis. The Blues blasted Winnipeg 8-2.

Pittsburgh thrashed the Islanders 5-2 to force a fifth and deciding game in their Patrick Division series. The Penguins finished fourth in the division, 43 points behind the first-place Isles.

Elsewhere Sunday, the New York Rangers edged the Philadelphia Flyers 7-5 to win their Patrick Division series in four games; the Boston Bruins downed Buffalo 5-2 to eliminate the Sabres in four games in the Adams, amd Montreal forced a fifth game against Quebec on Tuesday by routing the Nordiques 6-2 in the Adams.

The fourth game of the Kings-Oilers Smythe Division series, with Edmonton trailing 2-1, is set for tonight in Los Angeles. Vancouver ousted Calgary in three straight games in the other Smythe matchup.

Chicago and St. Louis each wound up with 72 points this season. The Blues were awarded third place in the Norris for having two more victories than the Hawks. Minnesota was first with 94 points and Winnipeg, with the top one-season improvement in NHL history, had 80.

Blues 8, Jets 2

Brian Sutter scored twice, including the game-winner, and Bernie Federko and rookie Joe Mullen each established team records with five points on a goal and four assists. Mike Liut made 39 saves as St. Louis, which was second in the overall standings last season but fizzled in the playoffs, turned things around.

Penguins 5, Islanders 2

Pittsburgh, which was blown out 8-1 and 7-2 in the first two games in New York, reversed the series with a 2-1 overtime win at home Saturday and Sunday's victory. Andre St. Laurent, a former Islander, had two goals and an assist for the Penguins.

Rangers 7, Flyers 5

The Rangers were second in the Patrick, five points in front of Philadelphia. But they were 4-2-2 in their season series and showed why by taking the last three games of the opening-round playoff after losing the first contest at home.

Steinbrenner adds to Smalley to masterpiece gallery

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Like an art dealer assembling a gallery of masterpieces, George Steinbrenner continues to add expensive exhibits to his burgeoning collection at Yankee Stadium.

The problem is the Yankees' owner is beginning to run out of wall space on which to display all of them.

The Yankee bench is crowded with expensive players. In the first game of Sunday's doubleheader against the Chicago White Sox, New York had Dave Collins ($800,000) and Roy Smalley ($600,000) heading the roster of reserves. In the second game, when both Collins and Smalley started, it forced Ken Griffey ($1 million) and Bucky Dent ($300,000) into the dugout.

This, plus Manager Bob Lemon's disclosure that he would platoon Dent and Smalley, sent Dent rushing to see Steinbrenner with the Yankees' first squawk of the regular season.

THAT'S ONE problem for Lemon.

While they were waiting for the last bit of snow to melt from a storm that delayed Opening Day by five days, the Yankees traded for Smalley, their fourth deal in less than three weeks. Two of the acquisitions, pitcher Doyle Alexander and infielder Butch Hobson, are not currently on the 25-man roster. Even without them, there were 10 players on the team Sunday who were not there on Opening Day in 1981.

Two of the deals were connected. First Steinbrenner acquired reliever Shane Rawley from Seattle, creating a crowded bullpen with Goose Gossage and Ron Davis already on the scene. That condition didn't last long, though, because the Yankees turned around and dealt Davis and two minor leaguers to Minnesota for Smalley.

MEANWHILE, permanent members of the Yankee shock troops in the dugout who serve as designated or pinch hitters with occasional visits to first base or the outfield are Oscar Gamble ($350,000), Bob Watson ($350,000), Bobby Murcer ($333,000) and Lou Piniella ($333,000).

Part of the problem is the American League lets you play only 10 men at a time. Deciding which 10 is Lemon's job and it is no easy assignment.

When Collins signed a three year $2.4 million free agent contract, last winter it was with the understanding that he would play fulltime, perhaps in the outfield, perhaps at first base, perhaps, if necessary, as a designated hitter, but certainly fulltime. The money was nice, but he made it clear that he would not have signed with the Yankees without the assurance of playing regularly.

Collins came to spring training and worked hard at first base, a new position for him. But when holdover Dave Revering had the hottest bat in camp, Collins was squeezed out there. There was no room in the high-priced New York outfield of Griffey, Jerry Mumphrey and Dave Winfield so it became obvious that he could not crack the lineup, a condition that didn't thrill him.

THE DECISION to platoon Smalley with Dent created another problem for Lemon. And, he had another before the club's opening day was over.

Lemon used every available non-pitcher in the doubleheader. But to no avail. New York still lost both games, a dismal way to start the season.

When the free agent draft revolutionized baseball, Steinbrenner was the first owner to plunge full tilt into the market place. He bagged the re-entry draft's first jewel in 1976 when he signed Reggie Jackson to what was at the time baseball's most expensive contract — a $2.9 million deal. For that investment, the Yankees got five often tumultuous and almost always productive seasons in right field out of Jackson.

But Jackson's old contract palls by comparison with some of today's salaries, specifically those being paid by Steinbrenner to players who opened the season Sunday on the New York Yankees' bench.

Almon sparks Chicago attack

Chisox sweep NY Yankees

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The New York Yankees waited nearly a week to open their 1982 baseball season.

As it turned out, it wasn't worth waiting for.

Hosting an opening-day doubleheader at Yankee Stadium Sunday, after a record four games were postponed by bad weather, the defending American League champions lost both games to the Chicago White Sox — a 7-6, 12-inning decision in the opener and 2-0 in the nightcap.

The last two major league teams to open the storm-delayed season, Chicago and New York played before a crowd of 31,008 that didn't have much to cheer about as far as the home team was concerned.

A big reason for that was Chicago shortstop Bill Almon, who belted five hits against the Yankees' finest pitchers and figured in more than one White Sox rally. With 18 family members from Rhode Island in the audience, Almon led off the 12th inning of the opener with a 425-foot triple off Yankee relief ace Goose Gossage and scored the winning run on Ron LeFlore's single.

"That's about as deep as I can hit a$ball," he said. "He got a fastball down over the plate, but I'm a pretty good fastball hitter. Goose was pitching in his fourth inning and I think he was starting to lose a little. I was geared for a Goose Gossage fastball, and maybe it was a little less than that."

Earlier, Almon singled off Ron Guidry in the third inning and started a two-run fifth with a single off George Frazier.

In the second game, Almon singled twice off Tommy John. The first one was wasted, but his single with one out in the sixth ignited a two-run inning. Almon took second as LeFlore grounded out and scored on Tony Bernazard's double. Steve Kemp singled Bernazard home.

"Charley Lau (the White Sox' batting instructor and a Yankee coach the past three years) told us that you can't pull John," Almon said. "You've got to hit the ball where it's pitched but he got a couple of sinkers up and I was able to pull them."

The Yankees scored all their runs in the opener off Chicago starter Jerry Koosman, but were held to one scratch hit over the final 6 1-3 innings by Dennis Lamp and Kevin Hickey. In the second game, Britt Burns and Salome Barojas combined on a five-hitter.

Tigers 2, Royals 1

Dave Rozema hurled a four-hitter in eight strong innings and got batting support from Enos Cabell and Kirk Gibson as Detroit edged Kansas City.

Vida Blue, making his Kansas City debut and his first American League start since 1977, surrendered only five hits in nine innings. Cabell led off the Tiger fourth with a double, then Gibson tripled and scored on Larry Herndon's sacrifice fly.

Mariners 6-1, A's 3-3

Jim Essian's fifth hit of the game, a bases-loaded, two-out double in the 16th inning, drove in three runs and gave Seattle its first-game victory over Oakland. The game lasted 6 1-2 hours, including a rain of more than one hour in the 10th inning. It was the A's second 16-inning loss in four days, and their third extra-inning game in the week-old season.

Rickey Henderson smashed three hits and for the A's as they beat the Mariners in the second game. Rick Langford, pitching the A's first complete game of the year, scattered 11 hits. The doubleheader took 9 1-2 hours to complete.

Brewers 14, Blue Jays 5

Milwaukee batters shelled Toronto starter Jim Clancy for seven runs in the first inning and Charlie Moore smashed four hits as the Brewers crushed the Blue Jays.

Ben Oglivie had four RBI for the Brewers, including a two-run single in the game-breaking first, and a two-run homer in the ninth.

"I don't know if it was magic, but we got some bloop base hits," said Milwaukee Manager Buck Rodgers. "We hit a few balls right on the nose, too."

Indians 13, Rangers 1

Toby Harrah drove in four runs with three singles and Len Barker scattered eight hits as Cleveland routed Texas. The Indians went up 2-0 in the third inning against Rangers starter Doc Medich on Harrah's two-run single, then chased Medich with a four-run fourth that virtually locked up the game.

Barker said his fastball and curve were not at their best, but he managed to shackle the Rangers by keeping the ball in good locations.

"He's pitched better," said Sundberg of Barker. "We got some pitches to hit. With the situation, you knew he'd be throwing a lot of fastballs. You didn't have to look for much of anything else. We didn't hit well, field well or pitch well."

Red Sox 6, Orioles 0

John Tudor hurled a six-hitter and Carney Lansford drove in four runs to lead Boston over Baltimore. Tudor pitched out of threats in the second and fourth innings and Lansford singled home two runs, forced another in with a bases-loaded walk and drove home another with a sacrifice fly.

Baltimore starter Mike Flanagan yielded seven hits and seven walks in 5 2-3 innings.

Twins 3, Angels 1

Randy Johnson hit his first major league home run and drove in the winning run as Minnesota beat California. The game-winner came in the seventh when Johnson doubled in Kent Hrbek, who had walked and was sacrificed to second. Pete Redfern got the victory for the Twins, scattering seven hits.

Braves' Mahler blanks Houston for 2nd shutout

By MIKE EMBRY
AP Sports Writer

Rick Mahler's job with the Atlanta Braves is to deny, not deliver runs.

So it wasn't unusual when Mahler stranded four baserunners while striking out twice and tapping to the mound Sunday against the Houston Astros.

But the Braves' right-hander came through on the mound, stopping the Astros 5-0 on five hits while striking out five and walking one for his second shutout of the season.

"Nobody expects to throw two straight shutouts but that's what you intend to do when you go out there," said the bearded Mahler, who had never pitched a shutout until the past week.

"He was just great," said Atlanta Manager Joe Torre of the 29-year-old pitcher. "He never had a shutout in his career and now he has two in one week. He's mixing his pitches well, in command of the hitters and challenging them."

Atlanta's victory, its fifth without a loss, equaled a team record set by the 1957 Milwaukee Braves, a club that went on to capture the World Series.

Dale Murphy cracked a two-run homer in the fourth inning and Bob Horner a solo shot in the eighth to power the Braves. Nolan Ryan, 0-2, was tagged with the loss.

The San Diego at Los Angeles game was postponed because of rain. It was only the 10th rainout for the Dodgers since they moved from Brooklyn to Los Angeles in 1958 and the first since Sept. 5, 1978.

Giants 6, Reds 1

A reluctant Jeff Leonard powered San Francisco with a run-scoring single in a two-run first and capped a three-run rally in the sixth with a sacrifice fly.

Al Holland, 1-0, gave up seven hits over seven innings, getting relief help from Gary Lavelle for the triumph. Charlie Leibrandt, 0-1, was the loser.

Mets 5, Cubs 4

George Foster cracked his first home run of the season to spark the Mets over Chicago. The blast triggered New York's four-run rally in the sixth inning off loser Dan Larson, 0-1.

Jerry Morales and Keith Moreland homered for the Cubs, their second each of the season.

Phillies 1, Expos 0

A couple of ex-Midland Cub pitchers battled in this hill classic, although right-hander Mike Krukow says he wasn't at his best. Still he tossed a three-hitter in leading Philadelphia to its first victory after three defeats.

"I've always contended that if you have good stuff, you can lose," said Krukow, who

Garry Maddox drove in the game's only run with a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the eighth inning off Ray Burris.

Cardinals 7, Pirates 6

Dane Iorg singled in the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth to rally St. Louis past Pittsburgh and snap a three-game losing streak.

Iorg's hit off veteran reliver Enrique Romo, 0-1, came after Julio Gonzalez tripled home Gene Roof with the tying run.

And all at once Masters was a major tournament

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

No one knows quite how the Masters golf tournament became a "major." The little world of Golf looked up one morning and there it was on the doorstep marked, "Important. Refrigerate After Opening. Store With The British Open, The American Open and PGA. Keep Out of Reach of Children."

I suspect the golf historian, Herbert Warren Wind, had as much to do with it as anybody. The presence of the incomparable Bobby Jones as inventor, founder and resident dreamer of the tournament -- which was otherwise stuck away in a little hillbilly corner of Tobacco Road in North Georgia -- didn't hurt.

Herb -- and Jones -- grew up in an era when amateur golf was king. Gentlemen didn't play a game for money, and the Masters was conceived as a showcase for amateurs with only a smattering of the most socially-acceptable pros invited to play.

Nevertheless, an amateur never won it, and, I dare say, never will, a fact of some annoyance to Master Jones, the only amateur in history ever to beat the pros at their own game.

THE AMATEUR influence thus declined. Jones finally came to the regretful conclusion that none of those weekend players, the stock brokers from Long Island, dentists from Cucamonga, auto salesmen from San Francisco, were gonna be able to match shots with the flower of the American golf tour; so he began to invite tour winners.

They had sort of wanted to keep the Masters as a kind of inside party in golf. You know, one of those parties the big rich keep from view of the masses. But, it became part of locker room lore, and first-tee mystique, and the media came sniffing around, positive it was missing something -- as, indeed, it was. It was a pure golf party. No Hollywod hoop-la. No pro-am. It was like a Skull and Bones dinner at Yale.

TV was beguiled. It yearned to get its camera into those secret places. The Masters finally let them. But it made it clear it would be on the Masters' terms. It didn't need media hype. Its sport of millionaires no more needed their pictures in the papers than the Mafia dons. They preferred running the tournament as they ran the country: in the dark.

Nothing whets media appetite like being told it's not wanted. They eagerly accepted the Masters' conditions, and relinquished control over the show to a large extent. Any other event, and they might have insisted it be played at night, that timeouts be arranged for commercials, rules modified, and the things they did to football, baseball and boxing. But, when they threatened they would withdraw their camera from the Masters unless proprietors relented, the Masters said "Good!"

THEY SAID the tournament would not outlast Bobby Jones. It did. They said it wouldn't outlast Cliff Roberts, the crusty New York financier, confidant of presidents, who blew his brains out on the 13th green one night three years ago, but it did.

The Masters, somewhat reluctantly, has become a fixture on the American sports scene. Augusta has grown from a one-hotel, one-restaurant, one-Confederate-statue town to a metropolis for a week. It belongs to the ages now. Also to Channel 2.

But, it retains one part of the whimsy it has had since the day Jones founded it in 1934. A former nursery, the 365-acre course is studded with exotic shrubs brought in for centuries from all corners of the world. So, Jones named his holes after them. The first hole, for example, is the "Tea Olive" hole. The second, is the "Pink Dogwood." The third is the "Flowering Peach." And so on.

This, it seems to some of us, is like nicknaming Dracula "Cuddles." The Little Red Riding Hoods who wander on to it with a golf stick should know that under that sleeping cap is not grandma but a full-grown and hungry wolf.

ACCORDINGLY, a friend and fellow hacker, "Dynamite" Page, and I have decided to rename Augusta National's Hell Holes after a more appropriate set of guideposts -- movie titles. Hole No. 1 is no longer the "Tea Olive," it's the "I Wake Up Screaming" hole. Hole 2 is not "Pink Dogwood," it's the "Kiss The Blood Off My Hands."

Hole 3, "Flowering Peace" on the card, is the "Chainsaw Massacre." Hole 4 is "Murder, My Sweet." Hole 5 is "Each Dawn I Die," and hole 6 is "Circle Of Deceit" or "Ring Of Fear." Holes 7 through 12 are "Five Graves to Cairo" andor the "Rocky Horror Show." Hole 13 is "Wuthering Heights," and 14 is "The Curse Of The Cat People." Hole 15 is "Magnificent Obsession." Hole 16 is "The House of Frankenstein." And 18 is "The Creature From The Black Lagoon," or, more properly, "The Creature That Ate Tom Weiskopf." It seems much more fitting somehow to label it this way rather than having somebody done in by a flowering crabapple plant or a yellow jasmine bush.

Celtics edge 76ers in overtime

By Associated Press

The Boston Celtics wanted to get Cedric Maxwell involved in the offense, and the Philadelphia 76ers hoped to do the same with Darryl Dawkins. While Maxwell got hot, Dawkins just got in hot water.

Maxwell scored 17 of his 25 points in the third quarter, turning a 13-point halftime deficit into an 81-81 tie, and the Celtics went on to post a 110-109 overtime victory over the 76ers Sunday.

Larry Bird scored the game-winning field goal, with 55 seconds left in overtime as the Celtics ended the season series against their National Basketball Association archrival with a 4-2 edge. It was the first time in three years the two teams didn't split their six games.

Meanwhile, Dawkins scored two points on 1-for-7 shooting from the field, prompting 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham to say, "Darryl Dawkins better get going more or we'll have to let him take the summer off."

The powerful Philadelphia center has struggled for most of the 12 games he's played since missing seven weeks with a broken leg.

In other NBA games, San Antonio stopped Kansas City 126-121, Dallas upset Houston 109-97, Atlanta bombed Chicago 108-89, Detroit beat New York 97-89, Los Angeles nipped Seattle 107-104, and Portland topped Golden State 116-106 in overtime.

"We turned it around in the third quarter when Maxwell got hot and we turned the ball over to him," said Bird, who finished with 20 points.

"He was so hot in the third quarter that we just called his number and got the ball to him," said Boston Coach Bill Fitch.

"I've been trying to get more involved in scoring more points," Maxwell bleated.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

U.S. scores swimming victory

By The Associated Press

SWIMMING

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — The American men's and women's 200-meter medley relay teams each posted American record clockings as the United States team scored a decisive victory over West Germany in a dual meet at the University of Florida.

The American men's 200-meter relay team of Dave Bottom, Steve Lundquist, Dave Cowell and Robin Leamy bested the old American mark of 1:44.37 by coming in at 1:41.30. It topped the mark set in 1976 by the USA Olympic team during trials in Canton, Ohio. Jill Sterkel, Kim Rhodenbaugh, Debbie Risen and Dara Torres combined for the women's 200-medley relay record of 1:55.39. That eclipsed a July 1981 mark of 1:58.99, set by the Nashville Aquatic Club.

California teenagers Jeff Kostoff and Tiffany Cohen swam to their third victories in distance events by winning the men's and women's 1,650-yard freestyles in the U.S. Swimming Short Course Championships. Kostoff, who earlier set an American record in the 1,000-yard freestyle, won the 1,650 with a time of 14:52.39. Cohen took the women's 1,650-yard in 15.58.52. Dave Bottom set a new American record in the men's 100-yard backstroke in a time of 48.94, bettering the 49.08 set by Clay Britt in 1981.

Tracy Caulkins picked up her 39th national title since winning her first in 1977 by taking the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:02.41.

BOWLING

NORTH OLMSTED, Ohio — Art Trask won his third Professional Bowlers Association championship of the year by upsetting Marshall Holman 216-200 in the final of the $100,000 Cleveland Open.

GENERAL

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Rick Lynch, considered a major figure in the shakeup of the Arizona State University football program in 1979, died of cancer at the age of 43. Lynch, a former operator of a Phoenix-area dragstrip, made allegations that led to the dismissal of Arizona State football coach Frank Kush in 1979 and sanctions against the Tempe school by the NCAA. Kush claimed Lynch had "orchestrated a conspiracy to get me fired." Lynch later filed a $50 million defamation suit against Kush, state officials and news media — including the Associated Press.

RENO, Nev. — Jesse Phillips Jr., a former running back with four pro football teams, was shot as he tried to rob a jewelry store, police said. Phillips, 35, was listed in fair but stable condition, suffering from two shotgun pellet wounds in his right arm and one in one foot. Phillips was arrested for investigation of armed robbery Saturday.

Nuggets, Vandeweghe agree to long term pact

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Nuggets and Kiki Vandeweghe appear to be close to an agreement for a long-term contract for the 6-foot-8 forward.

Nuggets president-general manager Carl Scheer and Gary Vandeweghe, Kiki's uncle and agent, said over the weekend they have agreed that Vandeweghe won't go into the free-agent market and seek offers from other National Basketball Association teams even after his contract expires at the end of this week.

"We're going to keep talking with the Nuggets even if the season runs out," said Gary Vandeweghe. "We won't be going to other teams unless we're just unable to reach an agreement.

To 'entertainers,' Japan not so entertaining

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Police in this mecca for aspiring young entertainers say they are investigating a sophisticated new vice ring luring women singers and dancers to Japan where their dreams of fame are dashed in prostitution.

Bogus "talent agents," working with Japanese cohorts who may include members of the Yakuza, the Japanese Mafia, find victims with ads placed in reputable trade papers for entertainers to work abroad, authorities say.

In recent months, at least 50 young women and girls from the Hollywood area have been sent to Japanese cities including Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto, Kobe and Sasebo, says Los Angeles Police Detective Fred Clapp, who is heading the local investigation.

"This is as close to white slavery as you'll ever get," says Clapp, who describes the typical victim as "blonde, preferably tall, in her early 20s, blue eyes, dumb or naive." He says most are singers or dancers with minimal talent and great dreams.

"THE DEMAND FOR Caucasian prostitutes is so great over there it can't be filled," says Clapp.

Some women have bent to the will of their Japanese bosses, while others have "escaped in the night" and have talked their way onto flights to the United States, propelled by fear that they would be killed, he says.

"I know for a fact that at least 50 girls have gone over there because they called and told me," says Clapp.

"The ones who haven't called have to be in the hundreds."

Some have vanished without a trace, he adds.

"These people promise them a job, usually singing in a club. They give them a one-way plane ticket to Japan. Actually, it's like a one-way plane ticket to hell," says Clapp.

"There is more than a hint of Yakuza involvement," he notes, and the ring is moving into new territories.

"We've had reports from Salt Lake City, Las Vegas, San Francisco, Seattle and San Diego," says Clapp. "I'm sure it's going on back East, too."

Clapp says the criminals cleverly escape arrest because "the crimes occur in another country" and "agents" here plead ignorance of improprieties awaiting the women entertainers in Japan.

A federal prosecutor in Los Angeles and the FBI investigated the problem for two years, but gave up when they failed to produce evidence needed to prosecute the American "agents."

"We have to show that people here definitely knew what was going to happen once the girls got to Japan," said Assistant U.S. Attorney William Landers. "Proving that was going to be very difficult."

OF ABOUT 100 women interviewed by Landers' office, none had been sophisticated enough to gather evidence. Some, he said, tried to complain when they returned, but the talent agencies — usually fly-by-night operations — had closed shop. Others were too frightenend to call.

Authorities on both sides of the Pacific suspect criminal violations.

Landers said his office believed women were coerced into being prostitutes as well as performers in live sex shows, "but all the problems were generated in Japan...Any coercion exercised was at the other end."

In Japan, U.S. consular officials say their hands are tied on such matters unless women are willing to go to Japanese law enforcement.

"If anyone comes for help, we will help them get back to the States," said William Maurer, spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo. "But if they want to blow the whistle they have to be willing to tell the Japanese authorities." Most Americans choose to leave the country rather than go through Japanese legal red tape, and the culprits in both countries go unprosecuted.

Clapp, whose division is the only one actively pursuing the case, says his department lacks sufficient funds to go to Japan to probe further.

He put The Associated Press in touch with a woman who has filed a civil suit against two American talent agents and a Japanese talent scout seeking general damages for breach of contract and return air fare from Japan, and punitive damages for the anguish she suffered. The suit alleges "white slavery."

The pretty, blonde entertainer in her early 20s was interviewed on the condition that neither her identity nor the names of the defendants would be used in the story. She said she feared the publicity would endanger her life.

While in Japan, she said, she was told to "watch out for the Japanese Mafia, that they were involved". She heard that other women had been beaten and had their clothes stolen when they refused overtures to be prostitutes and that some had been killed.

The woman, who was interviewed in the Beverly Hills office of her attorney, Ronald Litz, said she responded to an ad in a Hollywood trade paper and that led to an agency's offer of $4,000 for eight weeks' work as a singer in Kyoto, plus roundtrip airfare and lodging.

SHE SIGNED a contract and flew to Japan with two women hired as waitresses. She was given only a one-way ticket. In Japan, one of the agents took her to a private club, where she was told to sing one song per set.

Pill not veneral disease protection

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been on the pill for about seven months. Is it still possible for met to get a venereal disease? — Mary, Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Mary: Protection against pregnancy is not the same as protection against venereal disease. The best protection against the transmission of venereal disease (other than complete abstinence) is the condom. Oral contraceptives, intrauterine devices, and other birth control measures are not designed to prevent the transmission of venereal disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm not trying to be a wise guy, but I'm not clear about something. You have written that smoking is bad for the health, and that being overweight is bad for the health. If I stop smoking, I'll put on weight. Therefore, what good will it do me to stop smoking? If you have an answer, I'd like to hear it. — Dave, Los Angeles.

Dear Dave: While some people who stop smoking may put on weight, this does not have to happen. In my book "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight," I outline a number of steps a person might take to avoid this either/or dilemma. If you are really motivated to stop smoking, you might want to check the book for suggestions on diet, exercise, and behavior modification techniques that could enable you to stop smoking without putting on weight.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was a college jock and, at the age of 31, I still belong to a weekend touch football league. Now I find out I have to have a colostomy. I can take almost anything, but I can't take not being physically active. What do I have to look forward to? — Stan, Queens, N.Y.

Dear Stan: You can look forward to participating in virtually every activity in which you took part before the operation. This includes tennis, golf, swimming and many others.

It would probably be a good idea to avoid contact sports such as football, but even here newly designed protective equipment may permit some degree of participation. If you do plan to take part in a contact sport, I suggest you first discuss this with a doctor familiar with the operation, or with someone knowledgeable about sports medicine.

Is Salvadoran president just pipe dream?

By TONY CASTRO
Hearst Feature Service

SAN SALVADOR — Direct presidential voting in El Salvador might not take place for at least four years.

The 60-member Constituent Assembly is charged with writing a new constitution and naming a temporary government to replace the civilian-military junta, leading to a national presidential election next year.

But yesterday, Mario Redaelli, secretary general of the Nationalist Republican Alliance (ARENA), said the right-wing coalition apparently emerging in the new assembly wants to establish a government with a president and vice president who would rule for at least two years and possibly four.

SUCH A DEVELOPMENT would contradict the general assumption here that the new Constituent Assembly was only to name an interim president until the presidential elections next year.

Although the Christian Democratic Party of junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte won 24 seats in the 60-seat assembly, they were short of the 31 needed for control, opening the way for a rightist coalition led by ARENA and its founder, former Maj. Roberto d'Aubuisson.

ARENA won 19 seats and, together with the National Coalition Party's 14 seats, have agreed to keep the Christian Democrats from holding any major positions in the new government.

The possibility that presidential elections might be delayed as long as four years appears to be an additional move to erode the following of the Christian Democrats and Duarte, who, despite the ongoing civil war, violence and a troubled economy won a plurality of the votes.

DUARTE IS GENERALLY regarded as being a strong contender in presidential elections next year, especially since a plurality of that vote would win him the office.

D'Aubuisson himself has implied as much in vowing to work with Christian Democrats, though not with their figurehead leader.

Duarte has called for presidential elections in six months to a year.

Leaders of the six parties involved in the election have been in negotiations for a new government, with the only announced conclusion being that the new government is be led by a president and vice president instead of a junta.

D'Aubuisson is the name most often mentioned as likely new president of the assembly, which is expected to convene shortly after Easter.

Former U.S. Ambassador Robert White has called d'Aubuisson a "pathological killer," charging he was involved in the killing of San Salvador Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero two years ago.

A compromise presidential candidate coould be Rene Fortin Magana, head of the right-wing Democratic Action Party and president of the Salvadoran Lawyers Association.

MEANWHILE, VISITING U.S. congressmen warned rightist leaders that aid to El Salvador may be severed if land and banking reforms begun by the U.S.-backed junta are scrapped under a new government.

The eight-member delegation warned that aid to El Salvador may be contingent on continuing land and banking reforms started under the Christian Democrats.

"If certain conditions are not met in July, according to the law that now exists, we cut off the aid," said Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House subcommittee on Interamerican Affairs.

Congress has required President Reagan to certify that the reforms are moving forward and that El Salvador is improving its human rights record as a condition for economic and military aid.

Knowing how to be bureaucrat is way of life

By JIM KLURFELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Room 3D 1048 is not one of those that you immediately notice walking through the dimly lit, narrow, dirty-beige corridors of the Pentagon. It doesn't have a seal outside, as does the office of the Secretary of the Navy, nor wood paneling, as does that of the Secretary of Defense. It doesn't have a sign warning people that they are about to enter a restricted area. It doesn't even have a combination lock or a small hidden television camera, indicating the presence of highly classified documents.

Like hundreds of other offices in the Pentagon, it is identified only by a small, blue sign. It reads: 3D 1048 Dir. Naval Warfare, W.D. O'Neil, director.

Yet behind this door is a man who not only has responsibility for reviewing $18 billion in naval programs, but who also knows that his decisions could make a significant difference in how the U.S. Navy performs if there is another war.

William Daniel O'Neil III is a member of the permanent government in the office of the defense secretary. For 12 years he has worked on projects involving aircraft carriers, guided missiles, cruisers, submarines, sonars, mines, antisubmarine warfare and torpedoes. In the process, according to friend and foe alike, he has built an expertise that makes him one of the more influential people in the nation when it comes to naval warfare.

His job is to tell the defense secretary whether the aircraft carriers, submarines and assorted weapons the Navy wants to build will work and be adequate to meet the Soviet challenge in the coming decades. What type of hull to use for a guided missile cruiser, whether and how to develop a new type of lightweight torpedo, how best to develop a new sonar detection system — these are the questions that O'Neil deals with, always with the knowledge that the Soviets are spending more money and making new advances.

O'NEIL is not a political appointee. Nor is he a professional manager who serves one administration after another in a variety of top policy posts. He, and many others like him, constitute a class of specialists who influence policy by their expertise, bureaucratic skill and institutional memory.

Occasionally they are drawn into the public arena, but these members of the permanent government are more comfortable — and often most effective — when they remain anonymous.

"In a bureaucracy, knowledge is power," says O'Neil. "And I have the knowledge." It is a statement made quietly and with only the faintest hint of a smile. He simply leans back in his chair and points to the black loose-leaf binders that fill the bookshelves of his office. Their topics include: anti-submarine warfare, weapons systems, warfare and strategy, radar and electronic warfare, aircraft design, ship design, aero propulsion and ship propulsion. That is just a sampling. The room is filled with black loose-leaf binders and, in another part of the office, so is a safe.

O'Neil, a man who deals in facts, is not boasting, just stating a fact. He is 43 years old, balding and bespectacled, the image of a bureaucrat. But to Will O'Neil, knowing how to be a bureaucrat, surviving as a bureaucrat, influencing the process of government, is a way of life.

A mathematician by training and a novelist by hobby (his first book, a spy thriller entitled "The Libyan Kill," was published by Norton last year), O'Neil is a quiet-spoken but feisty man, ready to fight the bureaucracy when he believes he is right. He once even proposed the creation of a long-range airplane (he called it Big Momma) to replace the Navy's sacred aircraft carriers. Telling the admirals to do away with their aircraft carriers is a little like telling a French chef to cook without butter, eggs and cream.

Room 3D 1048 is really a suite of offices for a staff of seven. The office number is a kind of code for locating O'Neil in the Pentagon's maze of halls. The 3 indicates that O'Neil is on the third floor of the five-floor building. The D means he is in the fourth outer ring of the building's five rings. The first two digits of 1048 indicate that he is located in the 10th corridor, which runs from the inner ring like the spoke of a wheel. And his is the 48th suite of offices in the 10th corridor.

HIS OFFICE contains a blackboard, a floor-to-ceiling map of the world and dozens of models, from a 2-foot glassed-in scale of the Ticonderoga guided missile carrier, a ship whose design he helped influence and that was launched in April, to smaller-scale models of carriers, jet fighters and submarines.

His work is not usually dramatic, and more often than not he does not get credit for it. Indeed, O'Neil, like others in similiar positions, says his influence is directly proportional to his willingness to let others take the credit. But the influence is real.

When programs turn out to cost more than the Navy originally estimated or to be technically deficient, O'Neil alerts the undersecretary's office.

"Our job is not to advise the secretary to cancel a program; it is our job to tell the secretary what the problems are with a program and then make recommendations on what can be done," O'Neil explained.

It is a job that his superiors appreciate. "You count on a person like Will O'Neil to be your institutional memory, both programatically and politically," said William Perry, the former defense undersecretary for research and engineering and once O'Neil's boss. "For the appointees, like me, it was absolutely essential to have somebody on the staff with that background. I always counted on Will and his counterparts in other offices to provide the technical knowledge so that we would not be snowed by the proposals coming in from the services."

For instance, Perry says that O'Neil was instrumental in convincing the Pentagon to pursue passive acoustic detection systems towed from submarines and to continue to develop a new, lightweight torpedo that can counter the growing Soviet submarine threat. He was able to suggest ways in which technical and managerial problems in those programs could be solved.

O'NEIL SAYS that he could be earning much more than the $58,500 paid to top-level bureaucrats, but that he stays in the Pentagon because he enjoys the sense of being in the middle of the process, of working on the central questions of naval defense. He is one of those people who could happily work 18 hours a day, and his home library is a reflection of his professional interest in the history of warfare and his avocational interest in intelligence matters.

O'Neil says that decisions made now will affect the manner in which sea battles are fought in the next century. For instance, he says, if the United States had been able to solve technical problems with its torpedos at the beginning of World War II, the war in the Pacific might have been shortened by six months.

"Even as a child I was interested in military things and, in particular, World War II," he said. "I still remember listening to newscasts about the war as a child." He combined that interest with an aptitude in science and technology and, after graduating from UCLA, went to work in the southern California defense industry. He also joined the Navy, serving on the ammunition ship Vesuvius — "the only evidence of official humor I ever found in the Navy," he said.

It was in 1968 that he accepted an offer to come to Washington as an aide to the secretary of the Navy, at a 25 percent cut in pay. "Frankly, I was getting awfully bored and frustrated in industry," said O'Neil. "I found that I was much more interested in dealing with questions having to do with what type of system do we really need than in working only on individual projects."

At the moment he is on the cutting edge of the most intense and divisive debate in the Pentagon today: What size and what type of Navy should be developed? O'Neil is skeptical about whether the Navy should be spending billions of dollars to produce a new fleet of surface ships as Navy Secretary John Lehman has proposed. He argues that the aircraft carrier — the backbone of the Navy in World War II — is too vulnerable to modern guided missiles. He believes that the money would be better spent on submarines, which are far less vulnerable to attack.

"When submarines are armed with cruise missiles, they will even be able to do some of the things we have done with carriers — strike land targets from distant points," said O'Neil. "And subs are more survivable. Certainly a sub with two dozen cruise missiles doesn't have the strike capability that an aircraft carrier does. On the other hand, it has a great deal more strike capability than an aircraft carrier that has been sunk.

"IT IS NOT just a matter of keeping costs down and looking for less expensive alternatives. I don't have an easy and cheap answer. Everybody in this building believes it is very difficult to keep up with the Russians, spending as much less as we do. I am not talking about the figures that the CIA puts out about Soviet defense spending. I mean, just look at the output of equipment for the Soviet Navy, in terms of quality and quantity, and you realize what tremendous amounts of money they are spending."

O'Neil also finds himself caught in one of the Reagan administration's major structural changes at the Pentagon: a de-emphasis on the power of the defense secretary's office, where he works, and increased authority to the individual services, the Navy, Marines, Army and Air Force. The decentralization attempt lessens the authority and responsibility of his office, at least in theory. But O'Neil has been through such bureaucratic cycles before. "Every new administration says that it wants to give more authority and power to the services," he said, smiling. "But inevitably the pendulum in these things starts to swing back our way."

Inherent in O'Neil's job is tension with the Navy. While colleagues say there is more cooperation than contention, there are still intense feelings generated when a Navy project is killed or modified by the civilian in the defense secretary's office, especially when the Navy believes it is being cut at the expense of one of the other services. "From the Navy point of view, you are the bad guy," said Gerald Cann, the principal deputy assistant secretary of the Navy for research, engineering and systems.

But Cann, who formerly had O'Neil's job, believes that O'Neil serves a useful purpose. "Will has been a very successful irritant," said Cann, who has worked with O'Neil for nine years. "He is good at getting the system geared up, if nothing else, to fight what he says, forcing people to think and to provide a focus. He is a very valuable kind of person to have in the system."

One illustration of O'Neil's work, according to Perry and other colleagues, is the manner in which he helped the Navy solve the technical and managerial problems involved in developing a new lightweight torpedo. The program is extremely important because of the great advances of the Soviets in developing submarines. The new Sovjet submarines are bigger, faster and able to dive deeper than anything they had before, said O'Neil. The Navy program to develop the new, lightweight torpedo relied on an "immense advance in technology." But O'Neil's office found that the program was seriously behind schedule and poorly managed. The defense secretary was ready to kill it.

O'Neil and people in his office helped the Navy and the contractor restructure the program. And when the problems were solved, he went to Perry and convinced him and former Defense Secretary Harold Brown that the program should be continued. "This is an area in which the United States has always had an advantage," said O'Neil. "And we feel it is very, very important to maintain our advantage."

WHEN O'NEIL came to the office a decade ago, one of his first projects was to help evaluate the Navy's proposed surface-effect ship — a ship that would float on a cushion of air. It was a delicate assignment, because the ship was a pet project of Adm. Elmo Zumwalt, who was then chief of naval operations, the No. 1 position in the Navy. There were incredible technical problems with the project. "Zumwalt wanted it built whether the laws of physics permitted it or not," said O'Neil.

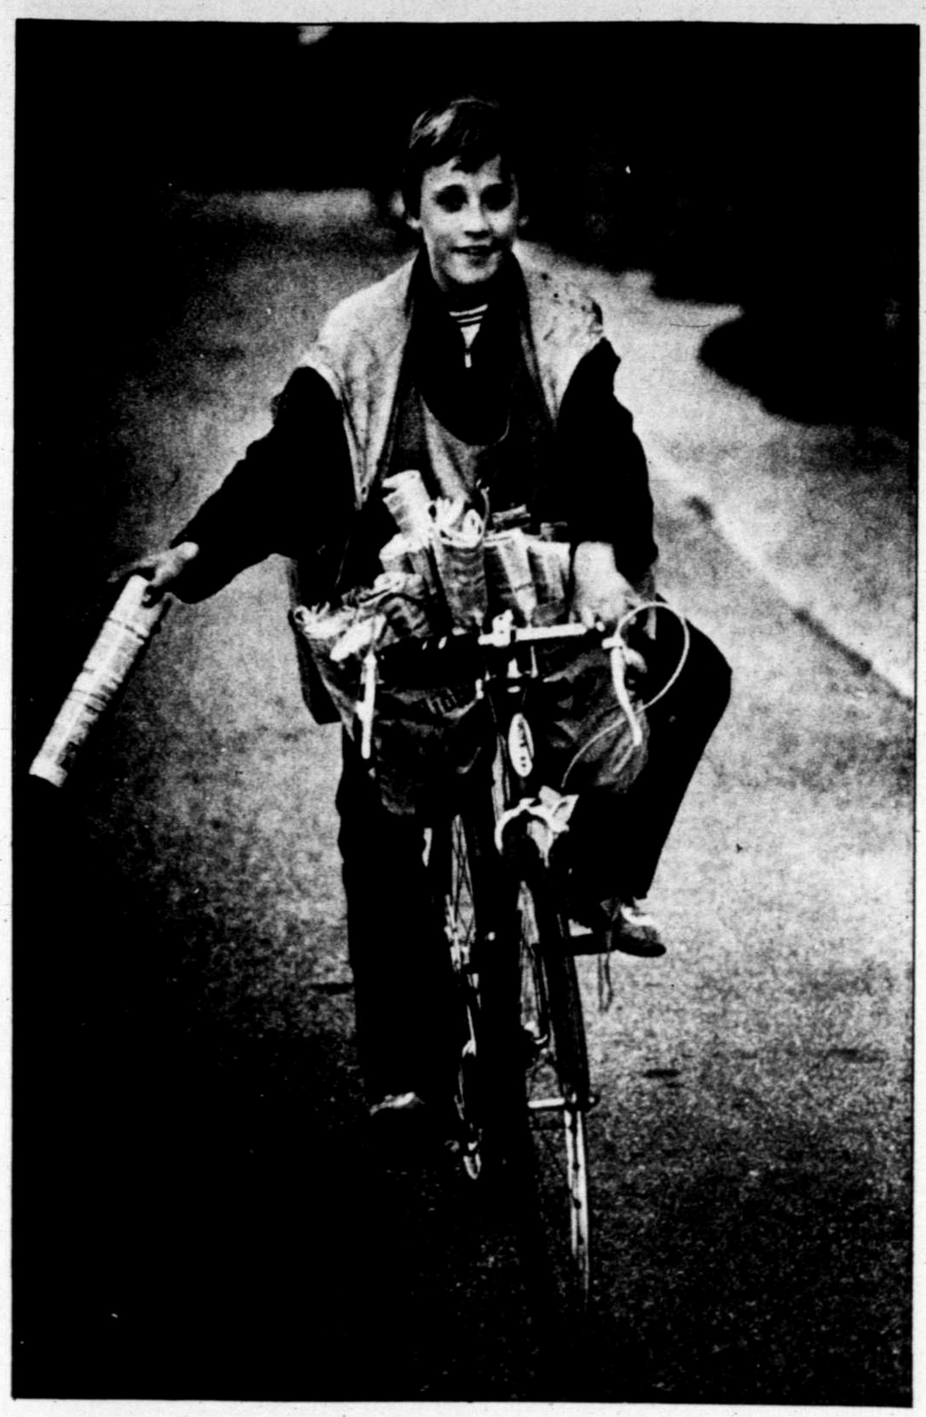

The Navy personnel assigned to the surface-effect ship, while aware of the problems, also were aware that their Navy careers could come to a dead end if they bucked the chief of naval operations. It was up to the civilians in the defense secretary's offices — in this case, Will O'Neil and his colleagues — to define and highlight the problems.

O'Neil did it by demonstrating why the project would not work technically and what the management problems were. "I just tried to add a sense of technical and managerial realism," said O'Neil. "My goal was to get all the people involved to address these problems as well as the overall question of what we were going to do with the ship once we had it."

Typical of such a project — and this is a major theme of O'Neil's — the battle of the surface-effect ship lasted eight years. It wasn't until the fiscal 1980 budget that Defense Secretary Brown, looking to save money, cut the program. But by bringing out the problems, the Office of Naval Warfare prevented the Navy from investing hundreds of millions of dollars in a ship that would not have worked well.

Even after all his years on the job, O'Neil says he is still awed by the scale of the Pentagon. Nothing is ever easy or simple. Projects always have many different casts of characters, including not only the Navy and the defense secretary's office, but the Congress and contractors as well. Decisions, when they are actually made, take years.

"The scale of the Department of Defense job is just enormous — I don't think anybody can quite comprehend the size of it all," said O'Neil. "I've been here more than a decade, and I think I'm just beginning to understand how things really work."
