COURT RULES ON RIGHTS UNDER MAY SECURITY ACT

By United Press
WASHINGTON, April 6.—The Supreme court, in an opinion striking at bureaucratic encroachment on constitutional rights, today ordered J. Edward Jones, oil producer, in his challenge of registration provisions of the securities act of 1933.

The court did not, however, rule on the constitutionality of the act. It held, merely that Jones was not to be allowed to testify before the board to testify concerning the registration as required by the securities and exchange commission.

The examination of the opinion, it might hamper them in their enforcement of strict securities issues. They contended that the commission might be "embarrassed."

RAYMOND HENRY GIVES NOTICE OF APPEAL FROM FIFTY-YEAR "SKELETON" DEATH SENTENCE

Notice of appeal from the 50-year sentence given him in the "hanging skeleton" slaying of H. L. McBee at Rising Star May 1, 1933 had been given Monday by Raymond Henry.

Jurors reported their verdict of murder after a trial in 88th district court Sunday morning at 9:30. They received the case Saturday night at 10:20 after hearing eight hours of arguments by counsel.

The defendant was shaken by the decision. His eyes filled with tears as his wife, Della, 30, former wife of McBee, endeavored to comfort him with, "I know you aren't guilty."

Mrs. Henry sobbed violently as her father and brother, G. W. and Russell Burton, assisted her from the courtroom.

On May 18 she is scheduled to go on trial on a similar charge of murder.

The state introduced testimony in the week-long trial that Henry stabbed McBee with an ice pick May 1, 1933, was the chief of a bizarre after-midnight burial, several weeks later exhumation and hanging of the skeleton. The skeleton was found Dec. 22, 1934.

Special Prosecutor Allen D. Dabney pointed out the woman in his arguments as the "consideration and motive" for Henry in the death.

Criminal District Attorney Grady Owen closed arguments. R. E. Grantham of Cisco, L. H. Flewelling and J. Frank Sparks of Eastland were heard for the defense.

By the conviction only one was as yet to be tried. Jack Smith, 40, was a defendant until he was found slashed to death in the county jail recently. Lynn, his brother, is charged as an accessory.

FHA Title I Is Extended to 1937

The Federal Housing Administration's District Office in Fort Worth has announced the extension of Title I of the National Housing Act to April 1, 1937, and outlined some of the salient features incorporated in the extension as recently passed by the Congress.

The following changes are noted: The financing of movable equipment or machinery is no longer permitted for any type of property where the loan for same is less than two thousand dollars.

In the future the borrower must either own the property to be improved or hold it under lease—running at least six months beyond term of loan.

In the future loans until Title I—or the modernization and repair section of the Act can be made for improved property only—thus eliminating new construction under the first section of the Act.

Approved financial institutions will be insured against loss up to ten percent of total advance instead of twenty per cent.

Total liability which Administrator may incur for insurance reduced from two hundred million to one hundred million dollars.

New contracts of insurance, copy of new regulations and text of bill will be mailed to financial institutions within a few days.

In a statement made today by the Director for the Northwestern District of Texas it was stated that under the new provisions of the Act that the repair and modernization of both business and residential properties would be stressed this year until Title I and the building, refinancing and purchase of homes would apply to the regulations governing Title 2 or the Single Mortgage plan as the long term mortgage program is called.

How New AAA Will Work In County Is Explained by Agent
How the new agricultural adjustment administration soil conservation program may work out in Eastland county is explained briefly by Elmo Cobb, county agent.

"Take a typical farm of 70 acres. Native pasture and the land around barn and house and lots cover a total of 13 acres, garden and orchard take up two acres. The remainder is normally divided between 40 acres in cotton, and 15 acres in feed, mostly grain sorghum and a little corn and cane.

"The soil depleting base would be 55 acres in this case. The minimum requirement to qualify for a grant calls for at least 20 per cent, or in this example 11 acres devoted to soil conserving or soil building crops or practices. This means that some cotton or feed land must be shifted to other uses."

"Suppose this farmer feels that he must have at least 30 acres of cotton to get along. That will give him 10 acres for soil improvement plantings, but he needs one more acre to qualify, so he takes out an acre of grain sorghum to make up his 11 soil conserving acres. He may plant these to legumes or pasture grasses, or to small grains to be pastured or turned under. There are other possibilities, but these are the chief ones.

"He finally decides on five acres of sudan grass pasture and six acres of cowpeas to be pastured off and turned under. This helps the land and at the same time makes his feed supply safe. So with 30 acres of cotton, 14 acres of corn, grain sorghum and cane, six acres of cowpeas, five acres of sudan pasture, garden, orchard and a little native pasture, this farmer has a pretty fair farming system."

The following members were present at the meeting: Clinton Revels, Dwight Bryant, Marvin Dupuy, James Dupuy, Raymond Caudle, Sam Caudle, Bill Holliday, Otto Dupuy, Neil Eaves. —James Dupuy, Reporter.

Nude Figures Still Are Center Of A Big Controversy

AUSTIN, April 6.—Texas officials, unable to agree on a nude sculptured group, proposed as a memorial to pioneer Texas women, appeared likely to pass the matter to Vice President John Garner for a decision.

It has not been decided which memorial will be financed with federal and which with state funds.

A conference will be held in Washington tomorrow or Wednesday to decide if the federal committee will handle the funds or hand the money to Texas officials.

Regardless of how it is handled, Lt. Gov. Walter Woodul, chairman of the Centennial Commission of Control, said, "There will be no nude monuments. We do not have to go to Washington to see about that. The pioneer women may not have been clothed in silks and satins, but they were clothed with modesty."

TAX BILL IS UNDER FIRE AT HEARING

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Currency inflationists attacked the $500,000,000 tax bill of the administration with charges that new levies are unnecessary while $10,180,000,000 in "idle gold" rests in the treasury.

Rep. Wright Patman, Dem., Tex., leader of the house currency expansion bloc, was first witness before the house ways and means committee in what was expected to be the last day of hearings on the budget balancing, corporate surplus tax bill.

Patman, author of an inflationary bonus bill, which was passed last session and vetoed by the president, has been sponsoring legislation to finance the new bonus bill through new currency instead of by $120,000,000 in new taxes as proposed by the administration.

Idle gold in the treasury, he contended, should be used for the issuance of government currency. "When it is used then we should have a right to levy taxes while this idle gold remains in the treasury."

Reminded the committee had no jurisdiction over currency matters, Patman replied that if the committee failed to report out a tax bill then the inflation question would be forced to the house for consideration.

By United Press
ATLANTA, Ga., April 6.—Storms of terrific intensity lashed five southern states today, spreading death and destruction over an extensive area.

There were 147 known dead in the states of Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and Arkansas, with the town of Tupelo, Miss., bearing the brunt with 79 known dead.

Another storm ripped through the college town of Gainesville, Ga., seat of Riverside Military Academy and Brenau Women's College.

Red Cross reports estimated the dead at Gainesville at 20. Western Union officials estimated the toll might reach 100. Others ranged to 1,000. Property damage at Gainesville was estimated at $5,000,000.

W. M. Brice, United Press correspondent, said the Princeton Hotel, largest in the city, was demolished, as well as the city hall. Two companies of the 152nd Infantry, Georgia National Guards, were dispatched from Atlanta.

T. F. Abernethy, state director of health, sent all available nurses and doctors and TVA physicians were to aid in caring for the injured.

Communication lines were so badly disrupted an accurate check of the dead could not be obtained. Damaged water mains intensified the seriousness of the fire hazard, with five buildings already aflame.

Riverside Military Academy and Brenau College were missed by the storm, reports said.

A public school building was reported demolished 15 minutes before classes were to start. It was believed most of the children were outside when the storm hit.

About two-thirds of the business section was affected.

The storm vented its fury on the courthouse square. The courthouse, city hall and a number of other large buildings were demolished.

The known dead by towns: Tupelo, Miss., 79. Columbia, Tenn., 6. Grenada, Miss., 5. Red Bay, Ala., 4. Boonville, Miss., 4. LaCrosse, Ark., 1. Melbourne, Ark., 1.

Modern City Helpless
In Face of Disaster

Whatever else the recent floods have done, they at least have shown how the modern city leaves the lives of its inhabitants forever at the mercy of a mechanical accident.

What hurt Pittsburgh the worst, for instance, was not the fact that a great torrent of water went sloshing through the street and basements of the downtown district. It was the fact that electric power was cut off, that heat was not available, that the city water supply was menaced.

The flood itself took comparatively few lives in Pittsburgh. The money wrench which the flood dropped in the city's utilities threatened to take a great many. It left Pittsburgh, for a day or so, facing the most dreadful fate imaginable for a modern city.

Of course, the danger passed. The flood waters subsided, people got their basements shoveled out and mopped up, the power plants began to hum again, and life was going forward on the usual basis before so very long. But the threat had been just real enough to show what a slim thread it is that holds up the lives and the happiness of the millions in our cities.

We do a great deal of talking about the horrible things that could happen in a modern war, with airplanes raining explosives and incendiary bombs on a densely populated city. The picture is frightful but it is too elaborate. An invader bent on destroying a city would not need to lay down any intensive bombardment.

All we need to do would be to drop a few bombs on the power plants and the pumping stations. Then, if his aim had been good, he could fly serenely away and leave the city to writhe helplessly through its death agony. A dozen bombs, properly placed, would do the trick.

A modern city is essentially an unnatural thing. It groups together some hundreds of thousands of people and strips them all of the ability to find for themselves in case of need. The water that they drink, the fire that warms their houses, the power that gives them light, preserves their food, enables them to move from place to place, and permits them to keep in touch with one another—all these things are as much out of the individual citizen's control as they are out of the control of his pet spaniel.

For the city dweller depends on co-operative effort for all these things. Produce an accident or a hostile blow which disrupts that effort and he is as helpless as a shipwrecked sailor on a raft in midocean. He can do absolutely nothing toward supplying these wants for himself. He can only wait until the services on which he depends are restored.

Postpone their restoration for only a few days, and you would let loose in the modern city a horror of darkness, cold, hunger, and panic such as the world has not seen before.

Ah! If Only It Were T'other Way 'Round

Editorial Tells of Blanton's Fight
On Rent Control

NOT MUCH HOPE

Rep. Thomas L. Blanton, from a little town on the Texas plains—as good a little town, to be sure, as any—is having his way with the matters of most importance to the people of Washington. At the moment the matter is a bill designed to set up rent control in the District. It may be a good bill or it may be a bad bill. The point is that Blanton has made up his mind, based, so he says, on a personal experience, that it would be a bad bit of legislation. Wherefore he has dug in his hind heels and set himself to stop it. He seems likely to succeed, since he is using the filibuster method.

There is no point in accusing Blanton of venal motives. He has been exposing himself to the public spotlight too long for anybody to doubt his honesty. The worst ever suggested on this score is that he uses his trouble-making powers to get jobs in the District Government for his Texas constituents.

That doesn't rate as a major political crime hereabouts. No, Blanton is just what he seems to be—a man abnormally obsessed with the righteousness of his own views and somewhat more mulish than most in his stubborn adherence to those views. He isn't playing anybody's game but his own. If it is good politics for him—his personal wars with Washington go good down in the cow country—it doesn't keep him from feeling completely righteous, just the same. Blanton isn't a political fool—nor a parliamentary fool. He knows that the days of this session are running out, so far as District legislation is concerned. He may or may not have a real interest in the bill. He does have a real interest in District legislation that is to follow, particularly the bill to repeal the Red rider which he attached to the District appropriations bill last year.

THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON
WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—Donald R. Richberg is back on the inside again.

Once known as "assistant president," chief New Deal co-ordinator and head of the National Emergency Council, he disappeared from White House huddles as well as from the public gaze after the U. S. Supreme Court swung at NRA in its famous decision on Richberg's pet Schechter case.

But now he has again become such a court favorite—without publicity—that other insiders are beginning to grumble.

Richberg wrote most of the president's relief message to Congress, which called for co-operation by private industry to increase employment.

Don't be surprised if he soon receives an important appointment under the Department of Justice and subsequently appears both before the supreme court on New Deal cases and before the public with pro-New Deal campaign speeches.

Although his friends thought he had been treated shabbily by being dropped after taking many "raids" for the administration, Richberg never became bitter. He began a series of speeches supporting Roosevelt on the constitutional issue and relations began to warm up again when, as head of the National Progressive League, he caustically criticized Al Smith's Liberty League speech.

His job used to be to conciliate industrialists and business men with the New Deal and he probably will resume that function.

subpoena telegrams are agreed to Chairman Hugo Black of Alabama is a very smart man.

Whatever your opinion of the ethics involved, consensus in Washington is that Black's recent counter-moves have been good as strategic maneuvers. Loaded down with publicity by legal and official protests from Liberty Leaguers, William Randolph Hearst—who rejected to Black's perusal of the telegrams—Black first directed public attention and got the telegrams all stirred up again by revealing that six congressmen lived last summer with a "trust" lobbyist.

Then he achieved his major coup by making available to John J. McSwain (Dem., S. Cal.) an alleged copy of a telegram which Hearst by court action had sent to suppress. The results were the scarcely less than terrific impact of the heights of melodrama, as Hearst's description of him as a "Communist in spirit and in action" was published.

The House roared its approval to McSwain, who in 1917, at the age of 42, volunteered to go to war, liquidate a private and returned a captain.

He is a member of the Supreme Court, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and pacifists have called him the "biggest jingo in the House."

No man suggested that the present gram was "private" and should have been in McSwain's hands. He had been a member of the House since 1917. One of the boys of the Revolution, he had been in the House since 1917. One of the boys of the Revolution, he had been in the House since 1917.

FOR DIGESTION'S SAKE... SMOKE CAMELS

Science and everyday experience agree that Camels pleasantly promote good digestion

People in every walk of life get "keyed up." The constant hurry and mental strain—the worry and tension—tend to slow down the flow of digestive fluids. Camels act as a release from this strain on digestion. Scientific experiments definitely confirm the fact that smoking Camels promotes good digestion. Camels restore and increase the natural flow of the digestive fluids. Enjoy Camels... for their cheery "lift"... for supreme smoking pleasure. Camels set you right! They never tire your taste or get on your nerves.

COSTLIER TOBACCOS
Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand.

STEEL WORKER. "I have to eat quick," says Harry Fisher, who works high in the air on narrow beams. "A Camel helps my digestion."

PARACHUTE JUMPER. Joe Crane is a hearty eater. "It's just natural for me to turn to Camels for digestion's sake," says Mr. Crane.

TRACK CHAMPION. Johnny Follows, long-distance record holder. He says: "I heartily enjoy a good meal. Camels stimulate digestion and a sense of well-being."

WINNING PITCHER. Tommy Bridges, of the World-Champion Tigers, says: "I like to smoke my Camels, particularly at meals. They help my digestion."

BIG-GAME HUNTER. "Camels never upset my nerves," says Frank Buck, wild-animal snarer. "And they are a delightful help in promoting digestion."

SCIENTIST. Ous Barton goes down 3000 feet into the ocean depths in the "Bathysphere." He says: "Camels make my food taste better and help it digest."

FARMER. John Kirby enjoys Camels best of all at meals: "Smoking Camels helps a man digest his dinner better. I get a 'lift' with a Camel."

EXPLORERS. Mr. and Mrs. La Varre. He says: "Camels make any meal taste better and digest easier." She adds: "Camels appeal to a woman's taste."

BILLIARD CHAMP. "I found that smoking Camels is a special pleasure and a real aid to digestion," says the veteran Willie Hoppe.

AERIALIST. Vera Kimrie, star of "Jumbo," says: "Thanks to Camels, I get added enjoyment out of my food. I like Camels' milder flavor."

WORLD-SERIES HERO. "Goose" Goslin, says: "Camels help me digest my food. I like Camels' milder flavor."

SPEED KING. The winner of the Indianapolis Classic, Kelly Petillo, says: "Camels hit the spot and go a long way in keeping my digestion in good shape."

BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

"He said quickly: 'But lots of people do that. Harriet'."

"Yes, I know but not for the same reason. You see Clyde and I can't be married because he is married now."

She went on before the other could speak. "His been separated from his wife for years. It was long time ago they were married. Clyde was only a boy. They soon found out they couldn't get along so they agreed to separate. They didn't get a divorce because he didn't care anything about it at first and then later when she thought he wanted it she refused. But now everything's changed. He's got a divorce and a divorce, too and she's started the suit. A man always has to let the woman get it. You know even though the trouble was her fault."

"Then—you're going to marry him?"

Harriet nodded. "Just as soon as people would think it was dreadfully being around with a married man but you see how it is, don't you, Toby?"

"Yes, I see—." Perhaps Clyde Sabin was all right. Toby hoped sincerely that he was.

"Of course, I'm sorry about it all," Harriet continued. "I'm sorry because that part of Clyde's life has been so unhappy. But I'm going to make up for it. You know, Toby, I'm not sort of a girl who wants a home. It's going to be wonderful, making a home for Clyde. I've been in this business—modeling and posing—now for four years. Most people will tell you four years is as long as a girl can do it—five at the most. I've known hundreds of models and some of them have dropped out of sight. I used to think I'd give anything to get into the movies like Kay Francis and Norma Shearer, but I've changed my mind about that. What I want is a home."

Toby said, "You'll have a lovely one, Harriet. I know you will. I've been delighted that she hoped Clyde Sabin was the man Harriet believed him to be."

SHE had to go to have some test photographs made that afternoon. Color photographs. Toby didn't know anything about them, except that Sally had called from the Model League office and told her that if the tests were good she might land an excellent job.

During the hour Toby's photographer had never been in his studio and she approached it hesitantly. Duryea was famous. Duryea made the handsome photographs—always signed—that appeared in the most expensive magazines. In color photography he was a pioneer. Duryea, more than any of the other celebrated photographers, had been declared an artist.

But, when she met him, he was not in the least formidable. He was short, and rather stout and wore spectacles, reminding Toby of the baker from whom she had often bought bread when she and her aunt lived in Jackson Heights.

Duryea studied her through his spectacles and said, "Well, we'll see. The hair is very good—."

"They told me you wanted to make tests," Toby said. "I didn't bring another dress. Will this do?"

She was wearing the blue suit Harriet had persuaded her to buy month-before—a slim, youthful girl without the slightest bit of trimming. Her blouse was white with a frill down the front.

Duryea nodded slowly. "It will be all right."

He told her to put on make-up as she waited for the street. Being very careful not to use even a shade too much.

She came back from the dressing room to the high-ceiling studio—a more elaborate studio than she had seen before. At one end were screens, cranes, cables, gigantic lights and a switchboard. The camera was on a platform.

Duryea had placed a red chair before a bright blue screen. "Here," he said. "Sit here."

SHE posed for an hour and a half and Duryea made two pictures. She had never seen anything like the painstaking attention he gave to details. Duryea was like a scientist in a laboratory. He changed lights, the angle of the camera and her pose a dozen different times. Finally the pictures were made.

Duryea said, "You'll hear from the Motion League if we need you again, and Toby nodded and went back to the dressing room to get her hat.

She opened the door and let out a little exclamation. She had expected the room to be empty. Instead, a tall, slender girl in an amazing gown of white and flame stood before the mirror. It was the evening gown, daring in its lines as well as its fabric.

Toby said, "Oh, excuse me—" and the girl turned. It was Carol Marsh.

For an instant she eyed Toby. Then she said, "Hello." She said it in a way that was more of a direct cut. Toby thought, than if she had not spoken at all.

"Hello," Toby said, and gathered up her gloves and make-up kit. She pulled on her hat without even glancing into the mirror and hurried away.

Out on the street she breathed a deep sigh. She had liked working with Duryea and had hoped the tests would be good enough to win the job. But that chance would be gone. She had against Carol Marsh! That, undoubtedly, was why Carol was there. Sally had said several other girls were going to make tests. Carol, in that flame and white creation, made Toby look like Cinderella before the ball. Carol would be the one chosen—

It was a pleasant afternoon and Toby decided to walk. She was going half a block when a shop window halted her. It was a window filled with bright-colored sport clothes. Toby eyed one dress in particular, a white dress with a short green jacket and a yellow scarf. It was a style that would be becoming to her and she looked at the colors.

The moment she became aware that a man was watching her. He was a man she had never seen before—rather shabbily dressed, wearing a dark hat.

A girl as pretty as Sally is accustomed to having men look at her, and knows exactly how to discourage them, but this one made her uncomfortable. She had turned when she reached the corner. Then she turned her head, ever so slightly and looked back.

The man was following, not a dozen steps away.

movement declare, a new investment of $26,000,000 annually is needed for the farmer through the utilization of the waste products of California vegetables.

The preliminary meeting of the new movement here was taken for a Far West States' Conference on the subject to be held at Fresno, Calif., on 26 and 27. From this meeting, it is hoped the movement can be launched on a worldwide basis.

Aided by Chemists

A fundamental program for a new drive for the re-establishment of American agriculture in the profitable industry had its last May at Dearborn, when the Farm Chemurgic was organized under the auspices of the Chemical Found-

B. Fritzsche, of the Farm Chemurgic Council, will preside at the Fresno meeting. He will have as his guest Dr. Robert A. Millikan, of the California Institute of Technology, the Dean Hutchinson, of the University of California's College of Agriculture.

The underlying principles of the program by purely scientific, economic and industrial methods instead of by statutory regulation are embodied in the following program:

Gradual absorption of much of the domestic farm surplus by domestic industry.

Profitable utilization of idle acres.

Increase of the purchasing power of the American farmer on a stable and more permanent basis.

Complimentary increase in the demand for manufactured products.

Ultimate creation of new work for idle hands, revival of American industry, restoration of American labor to productive enterprise and relieving of economic distress of the nation.

Urges New Approach

"We must get rid of the idea," declared Fritzsche, "that there are no new frontiers to conquer and of the belief that the farm problem can be solved by enacting statutes.

"We feel that we can go a long way toward solving the problem by developing new uses for farm surpluses through the application of the discoveries of science."

The program, according to Dr. Alfonso Taylor, of the Stanford University Food Research Institute and a member of the Farm Chemurgic Council, "is something which economists have been waiting for years."

"It is a question," declared Dr. Taylor, "of directing agricultural surpluses into profitable non-food outlets. The products of American farm labor are being used less and less proportionately for food and more for the production of goods and services, as the standard of living rises."

Backers of the new movement are confident American inventive genius and initiative will find ways of turning all of the productive possibilities of American farming into a profitable use that will entirely rehabilitate agriculture.

Waste Products Used

According to Fritzsche, the Farm Chemurgic Council already has a definite program of projects not only for the use of waste farm products but for the non-food absorption of agricultural products in various forms of industry.

For example, Fritzsche points out that the Mississippi Valley has demonstrated that the soy bean crop is capable of being utilized in production of an oil used in paints and varnishes.

Artificial wool, he asserts, can be made from casein extracted from dry milk. Furfural also is obtainable from the waste hulls of oats and forms a solvent for composition materials such as tiles, linoleum, paneling, etc.

There also can be intensified in agricultural regions, he declares, the production of wood and cotton cellulose which results in cellophane and rayon.

Vast quantities of California raisins which are not quite up to the fruit market standard are capable of conversion into industrial alcohol in the proportion of 90 gallons to the ton. Pectine, which is obtained from California citrus fruits, is used in a vast number of chemical operations.

Cooperative Revival Comes to An End

By Rev. T. E. Bowman

Last night was the closing service of the Co-operative Revival. In spite of the bad night a large and enthusiastic crowd gathered for the service. It was a fine climax for the series of meetings held through two weeks. I think the music was the best we have had. The general atmosphere was inspiring and wonderfully helpful. The general handshaking at the close of the service showed a general good feeling in the hearts of all present. A strong undercurrent of spiritual power was swept through the large congregation present. It was a great service.

Brother Gray, President of the Minister's Alliance did a fine job of expressing appreciation to all who helped to make the meeting possible and who contributed in any way to its success. We all join heartily in these resolutions. Brother Les Taylor, a vice president of the County-Wide United Forces for Prohibition Organization and key man in this community, made a short statement for that organization in which he urged every lover of sobriety and righteousness to go to the polls and vote against 14 per cent alcoholic drinks on April 18th.

After a few announcements Brother Stephens preached a most excellent and stirring sermon from the text found in Matthew 11:28-30. This invitation with the promise attached to it is one of 18,000 promises found in the Bible. This invitation is on the lips of all God's prophets today. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart; and ye shall find rest unto your soul. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." The heart of the sermon is wrapped up in three propositions: He wants you to come; He wants you to come as you are; He wants you to come now. This invitation is to every child of man. There is no person, no matter how weak, but can accept it. There are no conditions that make the acceptance of it impossible. Nothing stands between the lost soul and God but a stubborn will. Jesus said, "You will not come unto me that ye might have life." "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" is God's urgent appeal to the people to make Christ their personal choice, and by doing so we will be with him through eternity. At the close of the sermon the large crowd shook hands with the preachers, saying they had been helped by the meeting, and promising their prayers and sympathetic help in the future. It was a great closing out of the meeting.

After all expenses were paid $32.45 was deposited to the credit of the Churches United Charities.

Electrolux IS JUST AS SILENT

And this noiseless operation of Electrolux is evidence of its basically different refrigerating method—no machinery at all. It's the key to every one of the famous Electrolux advantages.

- No moving parts to wear
- Lasting efficiency
- Continued low operating cost
- Fullness food protection
- Savings that pay for it

THERE'S good reason for the silence—the permanent silence—of Electrolux. It hasn't a single moving part! A tiny gas flame does all the work.

This simplicity accounts also for the greater efficiency of Electrolux... and for the ever-growing popularity of this modern gas refrigerator!

Already, Electrolux has been the choice for more than half a million American homes and apartments. Each year a larger percentage of all refrigerators sold are Electrolux Refrigerators.

Electrolux runs for only a few pennies a day... and this cost will never be increased through the inefficiency of worn or wearing parts. For parts that do not move cannot wear or cause trouble!

Remember, too: the constant, steady cold of Electrolux—24 hours a day, winter and summer—keeps perishables and left-overs fresh for days. Owners find that savings on food bills and refrigerating cost actually pay for Electrolux.

See the beautiful new 1936 models for yourself. Inspect the many worthwhile Electrolux conveniences that speed kitchen work. Get the facts about our liberal purchase plan. Come in today!
