South Africa 'shall not be found wanting'

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government has stockpiled strategic goods for a decade as protection against international anti-apartheid sanctions and has set up a panel to find ways to circumvent them, a top official said.

"We shall not be found wanting," Manpower Minister Pietie du Plessis said Thursday.

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu today said du Plessis and others engage "in the national pastime of many white South Africans — Tutu bashing — knowing it will give them instant popularity, certainly assured publicity.

"It is sad to discover that we still think we can solve the serious problem of this country by looking for scapegoats either outside the country or internally, and I fill the bill," he said at a press conference.

Tutu, who returned Thursday night from a three-nation overseas tour, was responding to du Plessis' claim that the bishop's advocacy of international sanctions against South Africa bordered on high treason.

The South African government claims that sanctions designed to force an end to the country's apartheid racial segregation policy hurt blacks the most and that most blacks oppose them.

Although President Reagan and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher remain opposed to harsh economic measures as a way to push for racial change, tough measures have won support in the Commonwealth and U.S. Congress.

"The government is not unaware of what our enemies are planning," du Plessis said.

He said a committee had been set up in the Department of Trade and Industries to develop a strategy for circumventing trade sanctions and to arrange for barter agreements.

For 10 years, South Africa has stockpiled "strategic goods of literally thousands of items in order to safeguard our economy against sanctions," du Plessis said, but did not give examples of stockpiled material.

Apartheid by law and custom establishes a racially segregated society in which the 24-million black majority in South Africa has no vote in national affairs.

The 5-million white minority controls the economy and maintains separate districts, schools and health services.

MISD: Minorities not 'politically cohesive'

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Attorneys for the Midland Independent School District argued today that the city's minority community is not "politically cohesive" enough to show a need for seven single-member voting districts.

Using the Supreme Court case, Thornburg v. Gingles to back up the district's arguments, MISD attorney Charles Tighe said the League of Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council have not proven three points necessary for a seven single-member district system.

Tighe said they have not shown:

— an insulation or compactness among minority groups.

— a political cohesiveness among minority groups.

— a white group using a voting bloc to prevent the minorities from electing a candidate of their choice.

LULAC and BAC are suing for seven single-member districts on the school board, while the school district has agreed to four single member districts and three at-large districts.

In January, U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton rejected the district's 4-3 compromise and ordered the school system to set up seven single-member districts for school board elections.

In early August, the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans "vacated" Bunton's ruling for seven single-member districts and ordered him to reconsider the case.

Today is the district's last chance to present arguments to Bunton for its 4-3 compromise.

Citing a MISD study conducted from July 20 to 24, Delbert Taebel, a University of Texas urban researcher testified that,

Funerals begin in stunned town

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — A shocked community today began burying 14 victims of a post office rampage in which a mailman used guns he was issued for target practice to kill his co-workers and commit suicide.

The two Colt .45-caliber pistols used in the shooting Wednesday morning had been issued to Patrick Henry Sherrill, a member of the guard's marksmanship team, Maj. Gen. Bob Morgan, adjutant general of the Oklahoma Air National Guard, said today at a news conference.

Sherrill competed Saturday in a National Rifle Association match near Edmond and was to compete in a national contest later in the month in Arkansas, Morgan said.

He had checked out 200 rounds of ammunition for the first competition and was issued 300 rounds on Sunday for practice for the national competition, Morgan said. He did not discuss whether that ammunition was used in the Edmond shootings in which six people were wounded in addition to those who died.

Morgan said Sherrill, one of 12 Guard members authorized to check out weapons, had been awarded the Oklahoma good conduct ribbon and the Oklahoma National Guard 100 percent drill attendance badge.

"There had been no reports, including medical, that would have precluded him from serving in the Guard or from being a member of the marksmanship program," he said. "He was a quiet person, but he served the military well."

The first of a weekend of funerals was scheduled today, as were the counseling sessions for survivors and victims' relatives.

As mail delivery resumed Thursday, stunned residents greeted letter carriers with newfound appreciation and decorated mailboxes, telephone poles and windows with yellow ribbons.

A search of Sherrill's cluttered home in Oklahoma City found BB guns, bull's-eye targets, military magazines and Russian books, but gave no clues to the ex-Marine's motivation, said police Lt. Mike Wooldridge.

Mood at post office 'eerie;' Related stories — Page 2E

"That's the one thing we were hoping for — a note to let us understand this," Wooldridge said at a news conference Thursday.

Five people remained hospitalized today with gunshot wounds. Three were in fair condition and two were in serious but stable condition.

All but one of the 80 workers who escaped injury returned to work voluntarily Thursday, joined by volunteers from other post offices in Oklahoma and Texas. Officials advised residents that mail delivery would be slow because workers would be attending funerals.

The early morning reunion of surviving workers was emotional.

"People were hugging each other and crying," said mail carrier Joe Sturgil. "I can't describe what was felt there. It was the first time we'd seen each other since it happened. It was a hellish day, a long day."

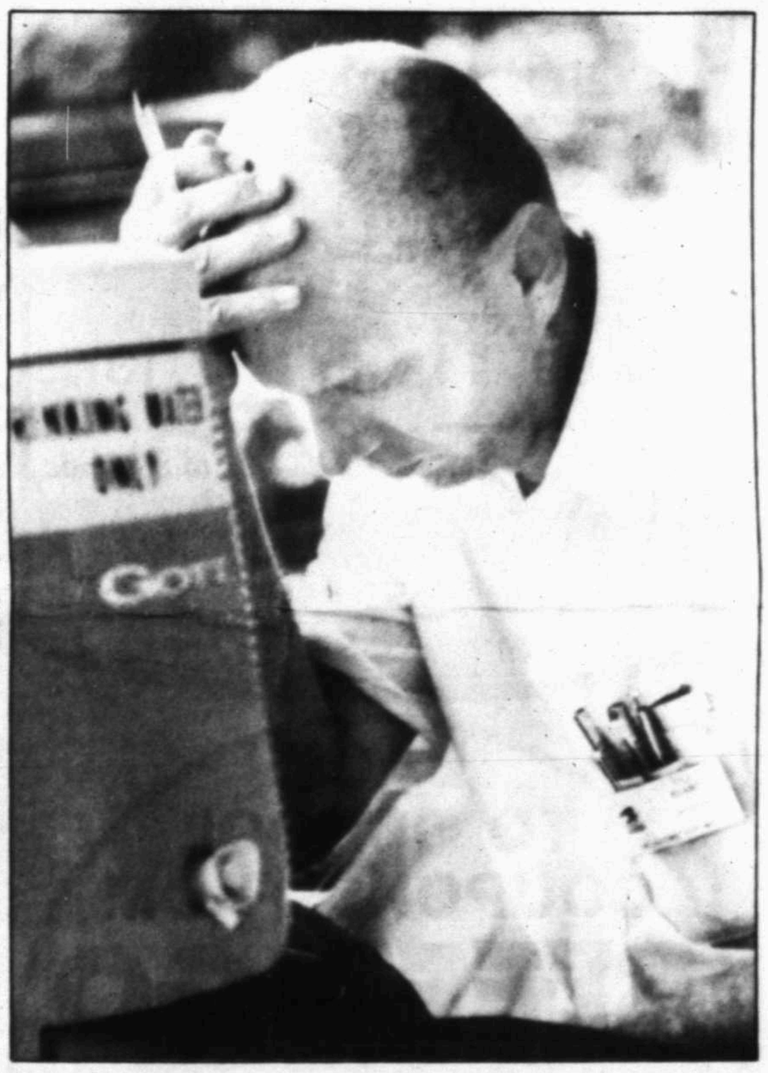

Jerry Reed, another employee, said he was "doing OK. But it is very rough, very rough to be back here."

Sturgil said mail customers on his route handed him flowers and had wrapped ribbons around mail boxes. "It touches you that people can show this concern for your welfare when you've lost so many friends," he said.

Mayor Carl Rehrman said the effect of the shooting would be to pull the town together. "It's a strong community...We'll bounce back," he said.

Employees and families of victims were to begin meeting today with counselors, including Michael Mantel of the National Organization of Victim Assistance, who led the response team in San Ysidro, Calif., following the killing of 21 people at a McDonald's restaurant in 1984.

State Senate accuses House of 'double talk'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — With angry words and emotional testimony from the mother of a severely handicapped child, the state Senate Thursday turned up the heat on its plan to force the House to raise taxes.

For several hours, senators railed against the $740 million in cuts the House sliced from the fiscal 1987 budget last week. They accused the House members of "double talk," of using "a shell game" to disguise cuts in direct services and of lacking "the guts to stand up to a roll call" vote on the cuts.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, who wants the cuts to keep the state solvent through next year without a tax bill, said the horror stories the senators told don't match the reality of the House plan. "All I ask them to do is read the bill, to examine the bill, try to work through the bill," Lewis said.

"No direct services are cut, or they're very minimal."

Midland coaches prefer 'positive approach' to drug tests

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland high school coaches say they are concerned about drug abuse but are not planning to test their athletes.

But the school district has hired two consultants to deal with the problem and a student group is active in trying to prevent drug abuse among students and athletes.

"We're trying, now, education within the system on the abuse of drugs, alcohol inclusive. We prefer the positive approach and drug testing is negative," said Midland High head football coach Doug McCutchen.

"At the present time, our philosophy on drug testing is it should be a last resort. We're going to try other measures first and if they don't work, drug testing might be implemented," he said.

"We feel like our kids have responded very favorably to the program we have going. We want to establish a line of communication. We want to understand their problem and want them to see that we're trying to help them."

Midland Lee head football coach Earl Miller said he is also supportive of the efforts under way by the Midland Independent School District toward the drug and alcohol problem.

"The school district has hired two drug consultants, Pat Cobb and Stephen Russell, and they are available if anybody has any problems," said Miller.

"They have formed a drug policy which I feel is adequate, taking steps to control any problems we have.

"I'm an advisor to the school board and to the councils and this summer we spent two full days at drug seminars to help us recognize the problem and how to refer them to councilors."

As to the possibility of drug testing in the future, Miller looked at it from an educational stand point.

"If the school board were to implement the test, we'd learn the best way to get it done," said Miller. "We'd become knowledgable and go to the best source of testing — some place like the University of Oklahoma where they have an excellent program."

The problem of drug use among athletes has been recently publicized, sparking many professional, college and high school teams to take an in-depth look at drug testing.

In recent headlines, former Maryland basketball All-American Len Bias and safety Don Rogers of the National Football League's Cleveland Browns died due to drug overdoses, officials said.

Also, the same day the Sacramento County Coroner's office announced Rogers' autopsy report, University of Miami All-American tight end Willie Smith was arrested on cocaine and weapons-possession charges.

In the Midland school system, there is one program which was organized by students. It is called PUSH, and it was started locally by MHS football and track star Tyrone Oliver.

"He's a young man we sent to the Texas War on Drugs," said McCutchen. "He went to a camp two summers ago and he came back and started the program called PUSH. It has really caught on. It started with 30 people and is up around 400 now."

Oliver says the number is closer to 500, although he won't know for sure until the 1986-87 school year gets under way.

"This will be the second year for PUSH — Prevention Using Student Help. Every secondary and high school in Midland has a program."

Town responds to brothers' needs

The Bright Side

GAINESVILLE, Ga. (AP) — When Judy O'Kelley died of a brain tumor in 1983, her last wish was that her seven sons stay together.

So when their grandfather died last year, the O'Kelley brothers, now aged 8 to 18, stayed on in the mobile home on his farm and took care of themselves.

It was tough, and this week it got tougher when their home burned down.

There was a mortgage on the place, along with debts from funeral expenses and Christmas gifts.

Nuclear waste may travel through Texas, official says

AUSTIN (AP) — A report prepared for the U.S. Department of Energy indicates that high-level nuclear waste could move by rail through Texas even if the nation's nuclear dump site is placed in another state, a state official says.

The plan could mean that a load of the potentially dangerous material could come into the state once every three days for 25 years, according to Steve Frishman, director of the governor's nuclear wastes program.

Frishman testified Thursday before the House Joint Committee on Hazardous Waste Transportation. He based his remarks on a report prepared by the Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois for the Department of Energy.

The report, prepared last December, said, "Transporting spent fuel and nuclear waste using barges in conjunction with trains is a viable option." The waste would be loaded in casks.

"In general, shipments from plants on the Atlantic coast or on the Gulf coast or shipments that travel by rail to an Atlantic port are assumed to travel by water to Houston," the report said.

One potential rail route through Texas begins at the Houston-Galveston area and moves northwest through Dallas, Fort Worth and Amarillo, according to Frishman.

"If a cask ruptures, you are dealing with a few tons of spent fuel. In a city, you could have injuries, death and long-term effects," Frishman said.

A site in Texas' Deaf Smith County is among the three finalists for the repository, with a decision expected in 1992. The other sites are in Nevada and Washington state.

Department of Energy officials have made no final decision on how to transport nuclear waste.

Honduras squabbles over Contra aid

By REID G. MILLER

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The U.S. aid hasn't even begun to flow, but already Honduras is awash in charges that its military is squabbling over the $100 million approved by Congress for Nicaraguan rebels.

Some Honduran and foreign analysts contend top officers are simply fighting among themselves for a possible share of the bonanza earmarked for the anti-Sandinista Contras.

Others say deeper issues divide the army, including U.S. policy in Central America and eventual leadership of the Honduran armed forces.

But Gen. Humberto Regalado, commander of the army, says such talk is absurd, insisting the officer corps is neither divided philosophically nor trying to muscle in on rebel aid money.

A bill calling for $70 million in U.S. military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal aid has already passed the House and Senate, but awaits action by a conference committee and final approval from both chambers before it is sent to President Reagan for signing.

Touching off the controversy in Honduras was an Aug. 8 army raid on the home of Rodolfo Zelaya, an alternate delegate to the national legislature and a businessman with close ties to the Contras, most of whom are based in Honduras.

Zelaya said the raid was orchestrated by Col. Roberto Nunez, chief of army intelligence, and carried out by soldiers under Col. Wilfredo Sanchez, the head of Honduras' public security force.

Their motive, Zelaya said, was to pressure him into relinquishing control of his business, which in the past year has supplied the Contras with millions of dollars in food, clothing and medicines, and turning it over to them and their friends in the army.

Both officers were temporarily dismissed pending a military investigation, a rare occurrence in Honduras where graduation from the national military academy usually guarantees a lifetime job.

In the meantime, Zelaya's house on the outskirts of Tegucigalpa was put under guard by soldiers from an armored cavalry unit. Some observers suggest Zelaya may enjoy the protection of rival elements in the army.

The incident so embarrassed the government that Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras announced Wednesday that none of the $100 million would be permitted to be channeled through Honduras.

"The government has always been clear on this point: North American aid for the Nicaraguan counterrevolution will not pass through here," Lopez Contreras said.

Most analysts, however, saw that as an idle threat.

"The Honduran government has been pretending for years that the rebels are not even here," said one Western diplomat. "They have said before that they wouldn't permit U.S. aid to pass through their country, but it always has."

Enrique Ortez Colindres, a leader of the Liberal Party, suggested some high-ranking army officers were fighting among themselves for a share, legal or not, of the Contra aid.

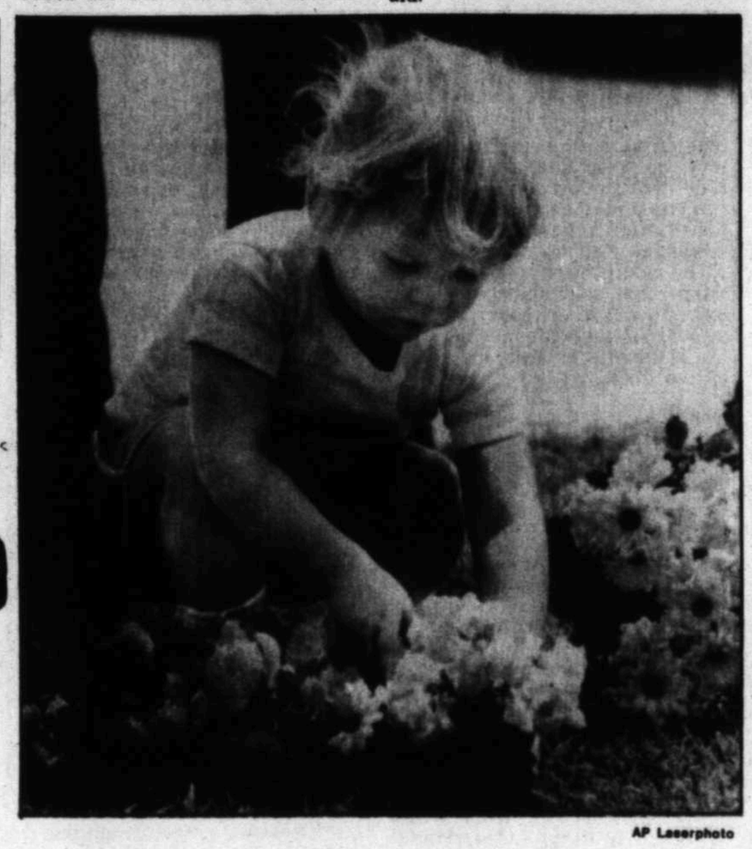

"The armed forces are split by truly childish and shameful interests," said Colindres, an announced presidential hopeful in 1988.

Victor Meza, a political analyst who heads a private research center in Tegucigalpa, agreed.

"Von Clausewitz said that warfare is the continuation of politics by other means," Meza said. "In Honduras, warfare has become the continuation of business by other means."

But another Western diplomat, who also spoke on condition he not be identified, said divisions within the army run deeper than a dispute over possible spoils from the Contra aid.

"There are very few differences between blacks, Hispanics and Anglos. This study clearly shows no particular cohesion on issues affecting the school district."

However, Rolando Rios, attorney for LULAC and BAC, argued that Midland's minority groups have participated in coalition politics in the past years by working together to elect the first Hispanic to the City Council and by attempting to elect a minority to the school board.

Taebel testified that a 60 to 65 percent voting majority is needed to show an insulation or compactness among minority groups. Looking at past voting precinct results, he said, "I was only able to find one precinct in which blacks constituted a majority. I could find no voting precinct in which Hispanics constituted a majority."

Using the precinct results from the Midland College board election this year, Taebel also testified that whites have not used their voting bloc power in Midland to defeat a candidate preferred by the minorities.

In the Midland College April election, John Cooper, a black, won 73.3 percent of the vote, he said.

"This clearly shows that whites are not using their voting power to deny minorities the right to elect a candidate of their choice," Taebel said.

Testimony continued in the case through the morning. Bunton was not expected to make a decision on the case today.

SANCTIONS

Du Plessis claimed Tutu was unconcerned about the possibility sanctions would increase hardships for South African blacks.

Tutu responded by saying of the minister: "His newfound altruism and that of his colleagues is quite galling, when you realize that he is a member of a government whose policies have inflicted, quite deliberately, unnecessary and unacceptable suffering on our people."

The Citizen, a pro-government Johannesburg newspaper, said today, "It is understood at a high level in government that no move is being contemplated against him (Tutu) before his enthronement on Sept. 7" as Anglican archbishop of Cape Town.

It also reported purported Cabinet-level discussions on possible action against Tutu but said "the weight of opinion has been against taking any action because it would create another world martyr of the likes of Nelson Mandela," imprisoned leader of the outlawed African National Congress, the paper said.

Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner, confirmed Thursday he asked the government to expedite visa applications for guests invited to his installation as Anglican primate of southern Africa.

The bishop's reaction to local press criticism of his invitations to famous Americans who oppose apartheid was, "Can you imagine in a more normal country there being such an unseemly fuss over a guest list?" he asked. "And to have newspapers gloating that invited guests may not come — how petty."

The guest list includes singers Lionel Richie, Stevie Wonder and Harry Belafonte, actor Bill Cosby, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

In other developments:

— Parliament opened debate in Cape Town on a motion calling on the Cabinet to resign. The National Party government's domestic and foreign policies have been attacked by both left-wing and right-wing opponents.

— South African Airways announced Thursday it was investigating complaints that news videotapes failed to show up in Britain or the United States after being sent air freight by foreign television networks including ABC and NBC.

— Business Day newspaper reported today that police conducted house-to-house raids in Sandton, between Pretoria and Johannesburg, and arrested 16 blacks on charges of violating the Aliens Act. The paper said employers reported some of those arrested were from Zimbabwe, Lesotho and other nations.

VICTIMS

A BB rifle, two BB target pistols, bull's-eye targets and a broken Japanese-made rifle were found at Sherrill's small home, Wooldridge said.

Also found were a number of magazines, including Guns and Ammo, Soldier of Fortune and World of War, as well as several copies of Soviet Life, a language book called "Russian Made Simple," and a Russian travel guide.

"We aren't trying to make anything out of these. It is just that they were there," Wooldridge said. Sherrill also left a box of computer disks, which police were studying, he said.

Sherrill's supervisors had told him that "his job performance was unsatisfactory and he was told that if it didn't improve, he was going to be fired," Woldridge said. "We still think the problem was with his fear of losing his job."

AT&T discovers sharks like to 'reach out and bite' cable

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — A new undersea telephone cable that carries conversations on lasers has been repeatedly attacked and damaged by a group of tough-skinned, sharp-toothed saboteurs: sharks.

The cable has developed electrical shorts three times since it was laid near the Canary Islands in September, and each time gashes in its insulation were found to be studded with shark teeth, said Richard Mondello of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s Bell Laboratories.

Marine biologists are still arguing over what kind of sharks are attacking the cable, said Mondello, head of undersea cable and apparatus design at the Holmdel, N.J., research center.

But one thing is clear. "They're relatively small sharks," Mondello said in an interview Thursday. "They're not the kind of thing you see in 'Jaws.'"

The Canary Islands cable, which stretches about 70 miles between Tenerife and Gran Canaria Island, is the first deep-sea, amplified fiber-optic cable, Mondello said. Fiber optics allows the transmission of information, including telephone conversations, by laser rather than electricity.

The shark attacks have complicated AT&T's plans to lay the first trans-Atlantic fiber-optic cable in fall 1987. The company is beginning studies of sharks.

BROTHERS

The two older brothers had dropped out of school to work in a poultry plant to make ends meet. But the four youngest — David, 14; Jeff, 13; Michael, 11; and Jason 8 — went to foster homes last spring because of financial problems.

"My mama only asked me one thing and that was to take care of the boys," Terry, the eldest, said Thursday.

He said his father left the boys after their mother died at age 33 and returned only briefly to administer the estate of their grandfather.

Terry and Tommy, 17, were out buying a used sofa Wednesday when their home burned in a fire that officials have blamed on faulty wiring. Charles, 15, also lived there, but no one was home at the time.

"I don't think there's nothing salvagable," Terry said after coming home to find firemen trudging in and out of the place. He said a drawer full of blackened pants was recovered, "and my grandfather's gun, we saved it."

Even before the fire, word of the boys' plight had spread and neighbors began collecting furniture, appliances and clothes for them last month. Much of it was destroyed in the fire.

Thursday, the brothers learned that a fund set up by a local church has grown to nearly $27,000 and that the Homebuilders Association of Northeast Georgia has promised to build them a four-bedroom house.

Spokesman Johnny Lawson said plans for the house were made weeks ago but the association decided to make them public now that the need was urgent.

Jack Hodge, who helped set up the church fund, went shopping with the three older boys Wednesday night. "They had to have clothes to wear to work," he said.

"The sad thing is, all of it went up in the fire," Hodge said of the donated bunkbeds, clothes, shoes and television set destroyed by the flames. "Just back to point one," he said. "Just got to start all over."

He said an Atlanta man who asked to remain anonymous has agreed to support the two older boys until they can finish their education.

The three older O'Kelley brothers are staying with the Hodge family until other arrangements can be made.

Brenda Gore, a social worker who has known the brothers for more than a year, described them as "the best-behaved boys I have ever been around" and said Hall County hopes to place the seven in the new house as soon as it is built and a guardian can be found.

But the boys are in debt $33,000, partly because of a $12,000 mortgage on the 7.4-acre farm.

SENATE

Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston and vice chairman of the Senate Health Services Subcommittee, led the attack on that proposition. To dramatize his point, Whitmire brought Sandra Murjia and her 2-year-old son Kenny before the full Senate.

Kenny suffers from a rare genetic disorder and receives some state-financed therapy from the Capital Area Easter Seals Rehabilitation Center in Austin. His mother praised that therapy, saying it helps her keep Kenny at home.

"He can sit on his own, he can roll over, he can play with things, he can tell me — not with words but with actions — that he loves me," she said. Without those services, Ms. Murjia said, "Kenny would be dead."

Lila Coughran, director of the Austin Easter Seals center, said the Department of Health told her budget cuts would remove $43,000 from a $150,000 grant that provides therapy for children such as Kenny. Without that money, Ms. Coughran said, the center will have to lay off two therapists and discontinue treatment for 51 children.

Whitmire said Ms. Murjia's testimony proved that House cuts will directly affect services. Health Department officials, however, said the House bill makes no direct cuts in the crippled children's program, which finances the Easter Seals therapy.

A Senate committee staffer said the bill forces the department to use $3.4 million in funds set aside to cover anticipated federal cutbacks. That $3.4 million includes $900,000 for crippled children.

House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said all the House cuts to services are "very minor," including the crippled children. "That's not a critical service to me," he said. "That's one person."

Other senators complained that the House is derelict in its duties by passing a bill that would lay off 5,800 state workers and refusing to consider higher taxes.

"We have reached a point where we've got to accept our accountability as public servants responsible for the indigent, for the poor, for the hungry, for the old, for the people in trouble in Texas," said retiring Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin. "We have got to pass a responsible tax bill."

"When I had a bellyache, my mother would give me castor oil," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur. "We're going to have to take the castor oil and be left with the bellyache too."

The Senate Finance Committee is expected to work through the weekend modifying the cuts the House approved.

ATHLETES

Oliver said he prefers the approach PUSH, and other programs like it, is taking to drug testing.

"There should be some type of positive approach — not only among athletes but all students — instead of lining them all up one day and saying 'take a drug test,'" said Oliver.

Being an athlete doesn't hurt Oliver's cause. In fact, he considers it a big selling point in his favor.

"I think — because there's more publicity and I'm sure everybody has a role model like Tony Dorsett or Jim McMahon — I think as an athlete it helps kids say 'well, if Tyrone doesn't use drugs, I don't need to either.'"

And, being an athlete is another reason not to use drugs.

In many cases, a player who is caught using drugs or alcohol is kicked off the team without being given a second chance.

"One thing I would say about this team, I don't have to worry about anybody on the team using drugs," said Oliver. "I'm 100 percent confident nobody does drugs.

"Coach has a contract saying even if they hear of someone using drugs, he's off the team and that helps keep them away from drugs. They want to play a lot more than want to use drugs."

Oliver said he has heard some tragic stories about drug abuse at "a youth conference I go to every summer in Grandville, Ohio. Everybody meets there and talks about the problems in their community.

"There are kids there, 13 and 14 years old who are hooked on drugs, I mean really hooked," said Oliver. "We're there to try and help rehabilitate them. After listening to some of their stories, it just about tears you apart."

Helping others is another fact Oliver would like to make known. He, and other members of the PUSH program, are willing to listen to and help anybody who has a drug or alcohol problem and doesn't know where to go.

"I think people misunderstand what PUSH is for," said Oliver. "They think it's only for kids who don't use drugs but we're open to anybody, even those who do. We want to help."

Panel approves PUC appointment despite allegations over rate case

STATE

By David Plesa
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A Senate committee Thursday approved the appointment of Public Utility Commissioner Jo Campbell despite allegations that she privately communicated with parties involved in a rate case.

The Senate Committee on Nominations unanimously recommended that the full Senate confirm Ms. Campbell's appointment to the three-member commission after hearing about the allegations from Don Butler, an Austin attorney who represents cities in rate cases before the commission.

Ms. Campbell, a former assistant attorney general, was appointed to the commission that regulates electric and telephone utility rates by Gov. Mark White in October.

Butler told the Senate committee that one of the reasons he filed for a rehearing in an AT&T Communications rate case involved an allegation that unnamed commission members or employees may have violated state law by privately communicating with other parties about the case. The commission, following a recommendation by Ms. Campbell, approved a $55 million rate increase for the long-distance company in that case last winter.

State law prohibits anyone involved in the decision-making process in a pending utility rate case from privately conferring about the case with anyone involved in the proceeding.

"As a result, we apparently triggered in Campbell's mind that these allegations were aimed at her," Butler told the committee.

Ms. Campbell then privately questioned five PUC staffers who were involved in providing calculations in the AT&T rate case, testimony showed. Ms. Campbell tape-recorded that meeting.

"I met with the staff to try to find out what happened so I could make the facts available," Ms. Campbell said.

She said she met with the staff after learning that a staff member who provided her with calculations in the AT&T case also had been involved in preparing the staff's presentation of the case. Because the PUC staff also presents its recommendations in rate cases, commissioners are prohibited from discussing rate cases with any staffers involved in the cases.

"When I first asked to have the numbers run, I requested specifically that no one who had been involved in the case be involved in the running of the numbers," Ms. Campbell said. She said the calculations were not exact and she made no recommendations in the case based on those figures.

Tough school discipline bill adopted

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate followed the House's lead Thursday and unanimously adopted a tough school discipline bill that will give teachers more power in the classroom.

The Senate bill — almost identical to a House-approved package — also will make it easier for school districts to suspend students. Under the bill, schools can suspend students carrying drugs or weapons, instead of referring them to alternative education programs.

Students caught once with alcohol could be suspended under the House bill, while the Senate proposal gives students a second chance before facing possible suspension.

Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center and sponsor of the House discipline bill, said he hopes the House can accept the Senate version and avoid a conference committee. "I would like to get it over with that easily," he said after the Senate approved the discipline bill.

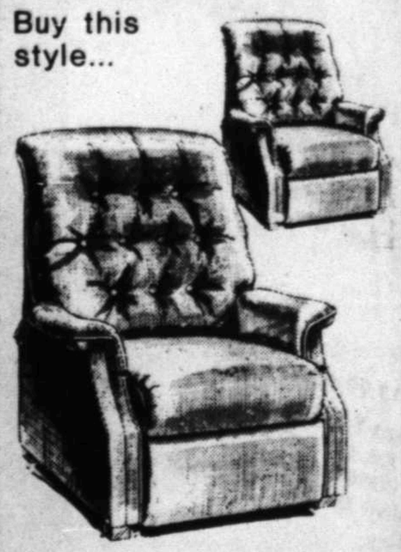

Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, carried the bill in the Senate. "Under current law, school districts have absolutely no power to use suspension as a discipline tool," he said. "Students were bringing guns, knives, drugs and marijuana, and the school districts had no recourse for suspension.

White House unhappy with Soviet criticism

NATION

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — In the latest round of U.S.-Soviet wrangling, White House officials are making it clear they're unhappy about the lack of progress in arms control and the recent outpouring of Soviet criticism directed their way.

Despite this spate of one-upmanship, the administration announced Thursday that a new round of high-level U.S.-Soviet meetings will take place in Washington next month as it pointed to an "unprecedented" level of superpower discussions under way.

At the same time, administration officials are confirming that President Reagan, in his letter last month to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, proposed to delay as long as 7½ years the deployment of an anti-missile defense system and offered to share research for such a system.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, in California with the vacationing president, insisted Thursday that the Soviet Union should "get down to business" and respond to the president's arms control and summit proposals.

"Literally, the ball in arranging a timetable for a summit and in arranging agreements is in the Soviet court," Speakes said.

The president invited Gorbachev to the United States during their first summit last November, but as yet no date has been set for the second meeting. Gorbachev has said progress in arms control was necessary for a superpower meeting. The Soviet leader sent his proposals to Reagan in June and the president responded in late July.

"The Soviet government has not responded to the president's letter with serious, detailed arms control proposals," Speakes said. "If the Soviets are interested in eliminating nuclear weapons, then they should get down to business in responding to the President's letter and in the discussions at Geneva."

White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, in separate comments to reporters, termed Gorbachev's speech made earlier this week a "disappointment" because he did not address Reagan's arms control plans with specifics.

But in contrast to Speakes' remarks, Regan said the timing of the Soviet response does not worry him.

"We've given him a very thoughtful response, and we're hopeful of getting back a very thoughtful response from him," Regan said.

In a speech to a local civics club, Regan also stressed that the administration has not pinned its hopes for a summit on arms control alone or any other single issue.

"We want to talk about arms control, but not exclusively," Regan said.

One administration official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said the White House was not as unhappy about any foot-dragging about setting a summit date as it was about Soviet accusations of U.S. intransigence in arms control in Gorbachev's speech and a Soviet news conference in Washington this past week.

"That's not helpful. We have been trying to be circumspect about what we say and keep it serious, and not go into a lot of propaganda," the official said.

Although Speakes refused to comment about reports that Reagan proposed a ban on all ballistic missiles in his letter to Gorbachev, one administration official said the president had made "broad, philosophical" suggestions to the Soviet leader that the two superpowers could eliminate all such weapons.

Rehnquist: No knowledge of policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice-designate William H. Rehnquist says he had no first-hand knowledge of military spying against anti-war protesters and cannot remember writing a 1969 draft memo for the Justice Department that proposed such a policy.

"I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities," Rehnquist wrote Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md.

Mathias had sent Rehnquist written questions about his March 25, 1969, memorandum, which detailed a military response to potential disturbances at a time of growing protests against the Vietnam War.

The senator also sought to learn what Rehnquist knew generally about the military surveillance program while he was an assistant attorney general in the Nixon administration.

The nominee's knowledge of the surveillance is related to an issue brought up during confirmation hearings by Rehnquist's opponents, who still hope to stop his confirmation before the full Senate next month.

Social Security tax becoming bigger burden

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tax overhaul bill will accelerate a trend that has made the Social Security payroll tax a bigger burden for most low- and moderate-income Americans than the income tax.

Indeed, while many citizens are wondering whether their income tax bill will rise or fall in the next few years under the system of lower rates and fewer deductions, they can be certain of one thing: their Social Security taxes will keep going up.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, who lost a battle on the Senate floor in June to add a third tax rate for the wealthy to provide more breaks for the middle class, said in a telephone interview from Portland, "There is a very unhealthy and unfair trend now occurring to reduce the income tax, which is based on ability to pay, while increasing all other federal taxes, which are not related to ability to pay."

The payroll tax, which pays for Medicare as well as Social Security's old age, survivors and disability insurance, is now levied at a 7.15 percent rate on income up to $42,000 a year. It is headed for 7.51 percent in January 1988 and 7.65 percent in January 1990. The ceiling on wages subject to the tax also usually rises each year.

That means workers will pay 5 percent more Social Security taxes on the same wages in 1988, and a total of 7 percent more in 1990. Currently, 125 million Americans — 95 percent of all U.S. workers — pay an average of $1,090 a year in Social Security taxes. Employers pay a matching tax; the self-employed have even steeper rates, now 12.3 percent and headed for 15.3 percent in 1990.

The tax bill awaiting passage by Congress will remove 6 million low-income Americans from the income tax rolls by sharply raising the standard deduction and personal exemptions.

Some parents will also be helped by an expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit, a tax refund that Congress enacted in 1975 to help cushion the working poor from the payroll tax. The credit, now a maximum of $550, will be boosted to $800, and it will help families with incomes up to $17,000 instead of $11,000.

John Bickerman, research director for the private Center on Budget Policies and Priorities, said the tax bill "is perhaps the most important piece of anti-poverty legislation in a decade." But he added, "The middle-income person isn't going to benefit a great deal. Some are going to lose under this system."

Mitchell said the Social Security tax "is now a larger tax for more working people than is the income tax. When you add on all the other excise taxes and gas taxes and other things, the effect is to shift the tax burden down the income scale, so that middle-class working people are bearing an ever-larger share of the tax burden."

"Most middle-income Americans have been persuaded by President Reagan that he's for lowering their taxes. But in fact that applies only to the income tax," Mitchell charged.

Joseph Pechman, senior fellow at the Brookings Institution and its former director of economic studies, said most Americans now pay more in Social Security taxes than income taxes, counting both what they contribute and what their employers kick in.

Pechman calculated that in 1984, Social Security taxes were steeper than income taxes for single persons earning up to $18,000; a married couple earning up to $29,000; and a couple with two children earning up to $33,000.

"I've always been concerned with the fact the payroll taxes are the highest taxes paid by the poor," he said, adding that the expanded Earned Income Tax Credit will not help poor people without children.

"Now that we've reformed the income tax, we should reform the payroll tax, which is really the oppressive burden on the poor," Pechman said.

Paul S. Hewitt, president of Americans for Generational Equity, a group formed to argue for the interests of young Americans, said, "We're leaving the most regressive aspects of the federal tax system in place."

Mitchell said the rising payroll tax could build young workers' disillusionment with Social Security. "Most people under 40 don't think the system will survive. There has been a complete loss of confidence...by those in the baby boom generation.

Angolans charge Soviet-aided troops with chemical warfare

WORLD

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Angolan guerrillas charge that Soviet-aided government troops have begun to use chemical weapons in the country's 10-year-old civil war.

The weapons have killed three rebel fighters, blinded several others and turned leaves on trees "totally dark," Brig. Isidro Peregrino Chindondo, intelligence chief of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, or UNITA, said Thursday.

He said government air and ground units used a "toxic agent" in battles at Bie in June, at Lucusse in July and at Cuito Cuanavale in August.

The chemical bombs and grenades emit a yellow and green vapor, Chindondo said.

UNITA fighters learned to combat the effects of the weapons by placing wet cloth over their faces, he said.

UNITA has fought a civil war from the bush in southeastern Angola since losing a power struggle in 1975-76 to the rival Popular Movement for the Independence of Angola, or MPLA, following independence from Portugal.

Cuban troops moved into the southwestern African nation in late 1975 to back the Marxist MPLA against UNITA, which is supported by South Africa and the United States. The Cubans now number about 30,000.

There was no immediate reaction from Angola's government to the UNITA charges, made to journalists who flew from Pretoria, South Africa, to the guerrilla group's headquarters at Jamba in southeastern Angola on Thursday and then returned to file their stories.

UNITA leaders also claimed that they scored a victory at Cuito Cuanavale, a town at the tip of a government-controlled area protruding into UNITA-held territory.

The fighting at Cuito Cuavanale has been regarded as crucial to the outcome of a dry-season government offensive aimed at Jamba, near the borders with Zambia and South-West Africa, also known as Namibia.

Guerrilla leader Jonas Savimbi said 4,000 UNITA fighters attacked Cuito Cuavanale on Aug. 9 and succeeded in making the town useless as a base for further government attacks.

"Our troops still control part of Cuito Cuanavale," Savimbi told the reporters.

UNITA invites groups of journalists to Jamba several times a year, usually when the movement seeks to influence foreign opinion.

Savimbi denied government claims that 95 South African soldiers fighting alongside UNITA rebels were killed at Cuito Cuanavale and four others captured.

Savimbi said the attack was carried out by UNITA and that the four captured men were rebel fighters.

The South African government has acknowledged that its troops occasionally enter Angola to pursue rebels fighting for independence in Namibia, which South Africa controls. The Pretoria government has denied allegations that it provides battlefield assistance to UNITA.

Savimbi also said Zambia was prepared to authorize Angolan government forces to foray into UNITA-controlled territory from bases in Zambia.

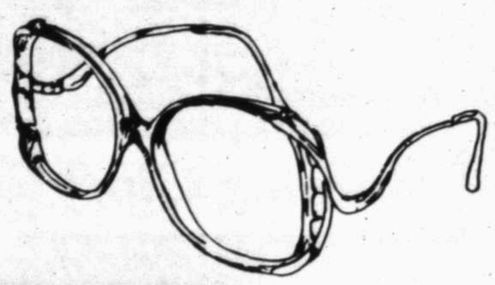

"If we are attacked from whatever quarter, we have to retaliate," said Savimbi.

Chindondo said UNITA has shot down 22 warplanes since June 1, including three MiG fighters at Cuito Cuanavale.

He said government forces were massing again in the region in preparation for a two-pronged drive toward Jamba.

High tide of Sweden's sexual permissiveness beginning to ebb

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Here in the world capital of permissiveness, the tide of sexual revolution has begun to ebb.

Marriage is staging a comeback in Sweden, abortion and teen-age pregnancy rates are low, and a public outcry over pornography is growing.

Attitudes are still relatively permissive, notes sex expert Maj Fant, but they are enlightened by sex education, and more and more Swedes seem to cherish faithful and close relationships.

"Sweden was regarded a bit like Sodom and Gomorrah, with free sex and easy girls," said Ms. Fant, secretary of the government-sponsored National Association for Sexual Information.

Now, she said, the hundreds of ordinary Swedes she speaks with weekly still view sexual desire as healthy but feel that "what's important in a relationship is to be responsible and show consideration."

At the same time, Swedish authorities have tightened up on extreme forms of the sexually permissive society. They outlawed live sex shows four years ago, for example, and are now considering a ban on the sale of violent pornographic videotapes.

The government undersecretary of social affairs, Monica Andersson, says Swedes "have a general consensus on sex and living situations" — a consensus, the specialists say, that good sex does not necessarily mean free sex.

Motivated by this message, Swedish youth seems to deal with sex better than the young people of other countries, according to a 1985 study by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a non-profit, Washington-based research foundation affiliated with Planned Parenthood.

Abortions here declined 12 percent from 1980 to 1985, and the teen-age pregnancy rate was only one-third what it was in the United States in the same period, the study shows.

The institute credits the ready availability of sex information and contraceptives, and the fact that teen-agers, not morally condemned for sexual relationships, can conduct them more openly and maturely. Even some liberal bishops in the dominant Swedish Lutheran Church, such as Per-Olov Ahren of the university town of Lund, accept premarital sex in responsible relationships.

Ms. Fant says information and contraceptives have been important, "but I also think fidelity is a factor in handling sexual relationships maturely. I've noticed a great difference when I've visited schools."

She estimates she meets about 300 people a week in sessions at schools, labor unions, libraries and elsewhere, and deals with other people's problems through correspondence.

Ms. Fant said fear of AIDS — the sexually transmitted disease Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — also has played some role in discouraging promiscuity, although the disease has not been nearly as widespread here as in the United States. As of Aug. 1, AIDS had stricken 62 Swedes and killed 35 of them, the government's bacteriological laboratory says.

The sexual revolution of the 1960s and 1970s, spurred by cheap and available contraceptives, rocked the institution of marriage here. By the early 1980s about 20 percent of all couples living together were not married. But that proportion is now holding steady, while in 1985 the number of marriages shot up by 6 percent.

"Many people want to make a statement that they have strong ties and aren't simply cohabiting, although legally there's not much difference," said Fant, 56. "It's more important to have a long-lasting relationship because the world is so unsafe with wars and disasters."

Public attitudes toward pornography, which was legalized in 1970, have changed markedly.

Because of popular pressure, live sex shows were banned in 1982. Stockholm Police Inspector Torsten Englund says sex-oriented nightclubs have all but disappeared.

Last February, a government commission proposed a ban on rental or sale of violent pornographic films for home videos.

Some foodstore chains have been boycotting pornographic magazines.

Priest may receive more punishment

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A U.S. priest barred from teaching theology because of his views on sex could face further punishment, and action may be taken against other American members of the Roman Catholic clergy, Vatican officials said.

The Rev. Charles E. Curran, ordered by the Vatican this week to end a 20-year teaching career, could also be stripped of his right to perform duties as a priest, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said Thursday.

"The best thing for him to do now is to reflect and, hopefully, change his mind," Navarro told The Associated Press.

Another Vatican official said further "housecleaning" might be ordered when two Vatican-appointed panels complete a review of Catholic clergy and institutions in the United States.

Told of Navarro's warning, Curran said Thursday in a telephone interview: "That would be totally unfair...but I still couldn't change my positions."

Curran has taught moral theology for 20 years at the Catholic University in Washington, D.C.

Despite repeated Vatican criticism, he has taken issue with the church's strict opposition to artificial birth control, abortion, divorce and homosexual acts.

He has also argued that, under some circumstances, masturbation, premarital sex, euthanasia and sterilization are justified.

On Wednesday, Curran said he would fight to keep his job, and that the church "must allow dissent on these issues and ultimately should change its teaching."

In making the announcement Tuesday that Curran was being stripped of his right to teach theology, the Vatican said the censure was approved by Pope John Paul II.

The Vatican action did not immediately affect his status as a priest.

The bishop of Curran's home diocese of Rochester, N.Y., Monsignor Matthew H. Clark, said Curran remains a priest in good standing.

But Clark's comment was received coolly at the Vatican and Navarro described it as "excessively tolerant."

The spokesman said punitive measures are reserved for extreme cases. Noting that the Vatican's formal investigation of Curran took nearly seven years, Navarro said John Paul displayed great patience with Curran.

Navarro said that if Curran persists, and the local bishop refuses to take punitive action, the Vatican Congregation for the Clergy could step in and suspend the priest from celebrating Mass, hearing confessions and performing other religious ceremonies.

Asked whether Curran's case might divide the U.S. church, Navarro said: "We know he has a certain following, but what's important is that the U.S. bishops are solidly behind the pope, and they are the ones who count."

Japan world's largest consumer of hardwood

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese used more than 11 billion pairs of chopsticks last year, enough wood to build about 15,000 Japanese-style houses.

The chopsticks wound up in the garbage, along with thousands of disposable wooden lunch boxes.

Japanese builders used more than 8.5 million cubic yards of plywood. A lot of it was discarded after being used for forming concrete.

Japan, which is about 70 percent covered in forests, is the world's largest consumer of hardwood and one of the world's largest consumers of processed lumber, according to the latest figures available from the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

While the country's 120 million people represent only 2.7 percent of the world's population, Japan consumes a third of the wood exported worldwide and 70 percent of that exported by other Asian nations, according to the FAO.

About 45 percent of that imported wood comes from Southeast Asia, 34 percent from the United States, and 14 percent from the Soviet Union.

Japan's voracious appetite for other people's wood is causing some governments to take note of what may be happening to their forests, and to do something about it.

Indonesia was the first to impose export limits on its wood and the Philippines recently followed suit.

John Holliman, a spokesman for the Japan office of the conservation organization Friends of the Earth, says only 5 percent of Japan's timber comes from sustainable sources. The rest is being "mined," and it will take decades, even centuries, for the forests to recover.

Some sources include delicate rain forests in Southeast Asia that may never come back, Holliman says.

He says a lot of wood that Japan imports is being misused, partly due to the yen's high value, which makes it easier to continue importing wood from abroad than to conserve or recycle local resources.

Michael Lake, former secretary for the European Economic Community's commission on forestry and forestry products, says it will take "from 400 years to a millenium" for some of the rain forests to recover.

"It's having an international impact," he says, "slowly damaging the ability of these rain forests to produce oxygen."

Holliman says many hardwood trees are cut down and abandoned just so loggers can reach other trees.

"They really want only a few valuable timber trees," he says. "To get to them, they build roads, and destroy up to 60 percent of the rest of the forest."

This destroys wildlife habitat and triggers a chain reaction, he says.

"When the trees are cut away, it causes soil erosion and landslides," he says. "This results in flooding, and the soil flows to the sea, where it suffocates coral reefs, a source of ocean life."

Holliman says at least 741 million acres of Southeast Asia's forests have been destroyed and another 74 to 173 million acres will be doomed by the turn of the century.

More than half of the Philippine forest vanished in the past 10 years and a third of Indonesia's have been used up.

While not denying that such lumbering endangers Southeast Asian forests, the Japanese say other factors should be considered.

A spokesman for the Japan Forestry Agency, asking not to be identified, said some countries cause even more damage by allowing "slash and burn" farming, and Hiroshi Yamada, director of the Japan Lumber Importers' Association, argued that some deforestation is beneficial.

"For a healthy growth and formation of a forest, trees must be trimmed and some must be cut out," he says.

In 1980, to preserve jobs and help its timber industries, Indonesia began to phase out log exports.

Indonesia exported 23 million cubic feet of wood to Japan last year, down sharply from 316 million in 1980.

Philippines President Corazon Aquino has imposed a similar ban.

The Japan Forestry Agency spokesman says many local forests have never recovered from post-World War II years when lumber was needed to rebuild cities.

The government says Japan was self-sufficient in lumber until the high-growth 1960s brought expanded demand for housing, paper and pulp. By 1984, domestic production supplied only 36 percent of Japan's needs.

Mas Nagahama, a Japan-based official of a U.S. lumber firm, the Weyerhaeuser Company, says Japan actually has cut timber consumption recently from more than 3.5 billion cubic feet to 3.2 billion because of a decline in housing construction and development of prefabricated housing.

The Japanese recycle metal cans and paper but have no program for conserving used wood, most of which goes to local dumps.

Marion Hara, spokesman for the Japan Consumers Union, says one group has organized a campaign to eliminate disposable chopsticks, or at least find ways to recycle them.

"Even though disposable chopsticks represent only 0.3 percent of all wood consumed in Japan, we see this as a symbol of a much larger problem," she says.

Survivor of 'flying car' idea sorry it didn't work

AP Laserphoto

John N. "Tommy" Thompson Jr., stands next to a photo of the 'Flying Car,' which he pledged to build in 1945. Thompson did the sheet metal work on the craft, which had a cruising air speed of 125 miles per hour and a top speed of 140 mph.

By EMILY SMITH

TEMPLE (AP) — It may sound like something out of the children's book "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang," but the story a Temple man tells about a flying car is no fairy tale.

John N. "Tommy" Thompson Jr., is the only surviving member of the group of men who built the "flying car," designed by B-24 designer T.P. Hall in 1945.

Thompson did sheet metal work on the craft, which had a cruising air speed of 125 miles per hour and a top speed of 140 mph. The car weighed 575 pounds and had a top speed of 60 to 70 mph.

Unlike the novel by Ian Flemming about a magical flying car, the motive for the builder of this car-plane was profit.

Hall had in mind selling his creation to businessmen who would use the car-plane on business trips. They could fly to small airports, remove the wing assembly and drive off in the car to conduct business.

After formulating his design plans, Hall rented space in a garage in San Diego and hired Thompson and two other former employees of Consolidated Vultee, now General Dynamics.

"After the war I wanted to rest, but five weeks after it ended I got the call from Mr. Hall," Thompson said.

Not everyone involved with the project was confident about its possibilities.

"I thought it was OK; of course, we all had our doubts, but we lived by faith and Mr. Hall believed in it," Thompson said.

The group started building the flying car in the fall of 1945. It was ready for its first flight July 2, 1946.

Consolidated-Vultee test pilot Russ Rogers took the plane on its maiden trip through the air, with Hall and workers watching in delight, Thompson said.

The plane climbed to about 2,000 feet with no problem. When Rogers landed, he rolled down the window and said, "I like it."

A highway patrolman at Lindberg Field had watched in disbelief. He told the men it was time for him to get a new book for writing tickets for flying cars, or change his brand of liquor, Thompson said.

The prototype logged more than 100 hours of flying time. Hall's dream had come true, but there was one hitch — finding a market for the craft.

Hall decided to sell the car to Consolidated-Vultee. Another prototype, with improvements, was built by the company. Thompson also worked on that project.

The first plane was built of light-gauge aluminum, with fabric-covered wings, elevators and rudder assemblies. The car had a frame of welded steel tubing, and was equipped with a four-cylinder engine from a 1945 Crosley automobile. The wheels were mounted on hydraulic cylinders to take the shock of landing the plane.

The pilot sat in the car and the plane controls hung down, through the roof.

The second car was made of fiberglass. It could attain a speed of 68 mph, Thompson said.

Only test pilots and an authorized flight engineer were allowed to fly either plane. However, Thompson did get to try out the car.

The second plane once had to make an emergency landing on the mud flats of Chula Vista, Calif., but not because of a mechanical failure.

"The pilot just ran out of gas," Thompson said.

Schoolboy's lollipop packet accessory to $1 million transfer through automatic teller

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (UPI) — A schoolboy outsmarted an automatic bank machine by using the cardboard from a lollipop packet to transfer $1 million New Zealand dollars into his account, bank spokesmen said Thursday.

Tony Kunowski, corporate affairs manager of the United Building Society savings and loans institution, said the 14-year-old student slipped the cardboard into an envelope and inserted it into the machine while punching in a deposit of $1 million — the U.S. equivalent of $650,000.

"We are not amused, but we don't think this is the tip of an iceberg," he said of the incident of four weeks ago.

Kinowski said when the boy, identified only as Simon, 14, checked his account a few days after the deposit, he was amazed to discover the money had been credited. He withdrew $10.

When no alarm bells rang and no police appeared, he withdrew another $500. But his nerve failed and he re-deposited the money.

On Tuesday this week, Simon withdrew $1,500, Kunowski said.

But his nerve failed again on Wednesday and he confessed to one of his teachers at Selwyn College, Kunowski said. The school's headmaster, Bob Ford, took Simon to talk with the executives at the United Building Society.

Ford said Simon had not been considered one of his brightest pupils — "at least until now."

Edmond's despair

Events in Edmond, Okla. on Wednesday once again shattered the bubble of security many Americans had built around themselves. A part-time postal worker facing dismissal opened fire in a crowded post office, killing 14 people and injuring six others before taking his own life.

The attack was listed as the nation's worst rampage by a lone gunman since the tragic killing of 21 individuals at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, Calif. stunned the nation in July two years ago.

Over the next several days, readers likely will be given a number of glimpses of the killer, Pat Sherrill, and a degree of insight into why he decided to vent his anger or frustration or whatever inside the post office where he worked. Hopefully that will help the thousands of people touched by the Edmond shooting incident to better rationalize and, perhaps, even accept what happened there.

But it will not help society understand killings of such a scope. Every maniacal murder spree like this begs for answers: What is there in our society that drives so many individuals to the brink and, then, over in a plunge into death, taking as many around them along as possible? What, if anything, can people do to protect themselves from such assaults? What can society do to better identify individuals who may break under stressful conditions and resort to mass killings?

Advocates of a ban on handguns likely will use the Edmond killings to resurrect their call for greater restrictions on the sale of such firearms. But would tighter restrictions really make a difference to a would-be killer getting a gun and using it? Not likely, due to the large number of handguns already owned throughout the nation.

Perhaps there really is no "answer" to the problem of these killings. They occur on farms and ranches, in restaurants, in work places. Maybe the only answer is to study the social dilemma that likely was the motivating factor for any number of killing rampages and hope that society can change enough to reduce the pressures it exerts on people.

Until such a change is forthcoming we're likely to see San Ysidro, the Tower killings at the University of Texas and the Edmond killings repeated over and over again.

Another View: Major tax victory

President Reagan has seldom been portrayed as a champion of the poor, but history may regard that as an error. The tax reform legislation approved in the last few days by House and Senate conferees will do more for low-income citizens than any massively funded War on Poverty-type program that comes to mind, and will do it simply and directly.

If the reform package receives final congressional approval, many lower-income Americans will be removed from the tax rolls altogether, and others will pay much less to the government.

Permitting poor people to keep more of what little money they have rather than running their confiscated dollars through spongelike agencies that trickle back only pennies' worth of benefits may sound simple, but for bureaucratic Washington it's a somewhat revolutionary idea.

Thinning out the jungle of shelters and tax "breaks" in order to reduce the taxes of the vast majority of individuals also is revolutionary for Washington, no matter how much sense it has always made to most Americans.

Although Congress will get much of the credit for tax reform, it was dragged to it kicking and screaming by Mr. Reagan.

Now that the screaming has subsided, it looks as if the top corporate tax rate will drop from 46 percent to 34 percent, and the top individual rate will plunge from 50 percent to 28 percent.

While reducing the top corporate rate, the overhaul eliminates or reduces many corporate loopholes, basically swapping a corporate tax increase of $120 billion over the next five years for a tax cut of roughly the same amount for individuals.

Aside from the low-income, the tax overhaul is most generous to middle-income families earning less than $50,000 a year. Individual taxes will be cut an average of 6.1 percent.

President Reagan made tax reform his top domestic priority, and scored a major victory when congressional conferees agreed to a plan that, although modified, meets most of his major goals, including lower rates, a broader tax base and a system that encourages investment for profit making rather than for avoiding taxes.

The jury is divided on how well the compromise reform package meets the president's goal of simplifying tax law.

Nevertheless, the Republican president quite correctly called the package "a triumph for the American people and the American system, good for the economy and good for the taxpayer."

"The American people are the big winners," said Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III. He might have added that it's about time.

Final passage of the tax reform measure is expected when lawmakers return from their recess next month.

The reform package is far from perfect, but considering the political realities of Washington, it is pretty good.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 22, the 234th day of 1986. There are 131 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Seventy-five years ago, on Aug. 22, 1911, the art world was stunned by the news that Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" had been stolen from the Louvre Museum in Paris the night before. (The painting turned up two years later in Italy.)

On this date:

In 1485, England's King Richard III was killed in the Battle of Bosworth Field, ending the War of the Roses. He was succeeded to the throne by Henry VII.

In 1762, Ann Franklin became the first female editor for an American newspaper, the Newport, R.I., Mercury.

In 1775, England's King George III proclaimed the American colonies to be in a state of open rebellion.

In 1848, the United States annexed New Mexico.

In 1851, the schooner America outraced the Aurora off the English coast to win a silver trophy that came to be known as the America's Cup.

In 1902, President Theodore Roosevelt became the first chief executive to ride in an automobile, in Hartford, Conn.

In 1968, Pope Paul VI arrived in Bogota, Colombia, for the start of the first papal visit to Latin America.

Ten years ago: North Korean President Kim Il-sung termed "regretful" the clash in Korea's demilitarized zone that resulted in the deaths of two U.S. Army officers at the hands of North Korean soldiers.

Five years ago: President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, returned to their Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch after spending a week in Los Angeles.

One year ago: President Reagan spoke at a Republican fund-raising dinner in Los Angeles, his first address outside the White House since his cancer surgery in July.

Today's birthdays: Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping is 82. Author Ray Bradbury is 66. Heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley is 66. Independent Network News anchorman Morton Dean is 51. Baseball great Carl Yastrzemski is 47. Actress Valerie Harper is 46. Actress Cindy Williams is 38.

Thought for today: "The trouble with our times is that the future is not what it used to be." — Paul Valery, French poet and critic (1871-1945).

FBI finds links in anti-communist gangs

WASHINGTON — A special kind of terrorism has afflicted many Vietnamese refugees in the United States in recent years: violence and intimidation instigated not by Hanoi, but by virulently anti-communist Vietnamese groups in this country.

Jack Anderson

Some outspoken refugees have been murdered, apparently to silence their advocacy of normalizing relations with the communist Vietnamese regime. These attacks have been compared to the murderous vigilante operations of right-wing "death squads" in Central America, whose thousands of victims have included suspected communist, leftists and moderates who criticized the military regimes of their countries.

Now our associates Donald Goldberg and Corky Johnson have learned that the FBI has found links between Vietnamese anti-communist organizations and anti-Castro Cuban groups. The G-men have gathered evidence that the collaboration might extend to the establishment of secret military training camps in this country.

The FBI disclosed its interest in the Cuban-Vietnamese connection in a response to questions from Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., ranking minority member of a Senate subcommittee on terrorism.

"The FBI has no information relating to the exact location of 'secret' training camps," the bureau told Leahy, "however, there are indications of collaboration between the anti-Castro group 'Alpha Sixty-Six' and the 'Associates' in the Southeastern United States."

"Associates" is the loose term used by law enforcement officials to designate a group of former South Vietnamese military officers who fled to this country following the collapse of the Saigon government in 1975.

In his inquiry to the FBI, Leahy cited earlier columns in which we first disclosed the ties between anti-Castro Cubans and anti-Hanoi Vietnamese in this country.

The FBI also identifies 10 Vietnamese criminal gangs known to be operating in the United States. They sport such colorful names as "The Frogmen" and "The Pink Knights," and operate in major cities, including New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles and New Orleans.

Although the Vietnamese gangs' membership totals only about 200 nationwide, they often work with the notorious Chinese criminal gang, "The Ghost Shadows," and have become a significant part of what lawmen describe as a growing force of Asian organized-crime groups across the country. The FBI has identified at least 14 Asian gangs that are of "investigative interest," most of them with a membership of about 30.

Noting recent crackdowns on Asian gangs in New York City — which included prosecution of the Ghost Shadows and another Chinese gang, United Bamboo — the FBI disclosed that it has current investigations under way in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Honolulu, Boston and Washington, D.C.

"The Asian gangs are highly violent, well-armed and predisposed to open fire on law enforcement personnel in arrest situations," the FBI told Leahy. "In addition to the high-risk arrest problems, investigations are difficult to pursue due to the lack of numbers of native-speaking law enforcement personnel."

Regarding another Asian criminal group, the FBI said it has no reliable estimates on the number of Japanese "Yakuza" gang members who have set up shop in this country. The bureau said it is investigating suspected Yakuza activities in Hawaii, California, New York, Guam and the Pacific Trust Territories.

WATCH ON WASTE: An Air Force general recently spent $75,000 to buy and install an "avenue" of 50 flagpoles on his base. Complaints about this extravagance were sent — where else? — to the base, to be investigated by a member of the very unit that had put up the flagpoles. Not surprisingly, his report concluded that charges of waste were unsubstantiated — because the flags bought to go atop the poles were of high-quality material.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The Liberty Federation (formerly the Moral Majority), the Rev. Jerry Falwell's fundamentalist religious group, is supposed to be politically neutral, interested in saving souls regardless of party affiliation. Yet its recent rating of members of Congress declared that nine of the 10 best are conservative Republicans and nine of the 10 worst are liberal Democrats. Funny how these things work out, isn't it?

Idaho vote no test for Reagan Revolution

BOISE, Idaho — The Reagan Revolution is only a shadowy backroom player in the seminal Senate campaign between right-wing Republican Sen. Steve Symms, one of its early beneficiaries, and self-proclaimed "conservative" Gov. John Evans, the workaday Democrat who is powerfully backed by the AFL-CIO.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Ex-Marine Symms is virtually ignoring his trademark as tough anti-Soviet hard-liner and loyal leader of Reagan's military buildup and the Reagan Doctrine. He is disciplining himself for an uncertain battle on less exotic terrain: how to sell Steve Symms as the leader to solve soul-tearing recession in mining, timber and agriculture that has this state by the throat.

Little else is talked of here — certainly not the nuclear balance, strategic defense or faraway wars in Angola and Afghanistan. With a tragic population exodus now running close to 500 a month, Idaho voters will decide who is to blame: Symms and Washington or Evans and the state government he has led for 10 years.

Ronald Reagan? When we asked the governor over toasted-cheese sandwiches in his office how much the president should be blamed, he did not hesitate. "The president has been a very fine president and he has led our nation well," he told us. "I blame the administration, not the president."

Such fine tuning in laying blame is explained by Reagan's awesome pluralities in the 1980 and 1984 presidential elections and his continuing high popularity in this conservative stronghold at the half-way point of his second term. Evans means to neutralize the Reagan factor. In addition, he hopes to cash in on the last ounce of support from state and national labor unions galvanized against a right-to-work referendum that will be on the Nov. 4 ballot.

For Symms, the need to concentrate on farmers, loggers and miners is a stark about-face from 1980. One of 16 new Republican senators to emerge out of that first Reagan landslide, Symms edged in with a 4,400-vote plurality over the late Sen. Frank Church. He ran a brilliant swashbuckling campaign with independent help from the right-wing National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC). NCPAC has not made an appearance here so far this year).

That moved him into the center of the Reagan Revolution in national security policies, with the reputation of a tough guy who could shoot from the hip. He quickly became one of Reagan's dependable anti-Soviet hard-liners.

But in the Idaho of 1986, the defense issue "is not even a blip," one of Symms' top political aides told us. That dictates a different and more difficult kind of political campaign. It explains why none of Symms' 13 television commercials even mentions his record as one of the Senate's strongest defenders of Ronald Reagan's foreign and defense policies.

Instead, the senator's bland 30-second spots make the claim that he is the "only" candidate who understands Idaho farmers and miners, and that he has no peer in trying to halt cheap imported Canadian timber and in finding new markets abroad for the minerals that used to pour from Idaho's once-teeming mines.

The pitfall in this campaign is that Symms' record is more profuse and credible in defense and foreign policy than in easing Idaho's economic pains. He is now being forced on the defensive in comparatively alien territory instead of taking the attack in the familiar world of national security as he did six years ago.

Moreover, the right-to-work referendum guarantees a maximum pro-labor turnout that will strengthen the entire Democratic ticket, starting with Evans and popular gubernatorial candidate Cecil Andrus, a former governor. Republican strategists are far more worried than they admit that the intrusion of right-to-work, labor's most incendiary issue, could be a time bomb this year as it was in 1958.

In that right-to-work year, Idaho Democrats captured both houses in an explosion of anti-right-to-work sentiment. The State Legislature has not been Democratic-controlled since.

Labor insiders here claim that the national AFL-CIO did not want to risk a right-to-work test in Idaho, a state that ranks near the bottom in union members, in an election that would also decide a Senate seat and the governorship. But state AFL-CIO boss Jim Kerns insisted on the effort to nullify the Republican Legislature's override of Evans' right-to-work veto last year.

That assures maximum AFL-CIO money for the entire Democratic ticket as well as the anti-union referendum, a blessing for the money-starved Evans campaign.

The unexpected right-to-work issue adds another ingredient that negates this race as a meaningful test of the Reagan Revolution, even though it may prove crucial for keeping the Senate under Republican control during Reagan's last two years.

CHARLEY REESE

Transnational corporations hurting America

Ronald Reagan's victory in preventing an override of his veto of a textile trade bill will prove to be a hollow and bitter victory indeed. He has, in effect, sacrificed not only the public interest but his own party's interest to play along with the transnational financial gang.

Charley Reese

If Democrats can't slay Republicans over this issue, they ought to hang it up and abolish their party.

The real issue is not trade, but whether the U.S. government will represent the American people or the transnational corporations. The hollowness and downright deceptions of the Reagan position on trade is revealed by the facts:

Fact: We've followed the free traders policy and we have the highest trade deficit in U.S. history.

Fact: We've followed the free traders policy and we have persistently high unemployment despite low inflation and despite tax cuts and despite a lessening of government regulations.

Conservatives have to face the truth. If you're going to argue that liberalism was tried and failed, then you must also grant that free trade was tried and failed.

The conservative position argued by Reagan was this: Give us tax cuts, give us a lessening of government regulations, give us free trade, and you'll see that a growing economy will reduce the deficits and reduce unemployment.

Well, Reagan got what he asked for but the results were not as promised: Deficits have grown and unemployment remains high, public and private debts are at all-time highs, and bankruptcies and bank failures are at all-time highs.

The free trade theory doesn't work because it does not accurately represent reality. The theory says every dollar spent on imports must come back to the United States. That's not true when the dollar is the world's reserve currency. The dollar, because of its universal acceptance, can stay out of the United States indefinitely and most of those that do come back, come back to pay interest on loans made by transnational banks, not to buy American products.

Reagan and his supporters had better get out of their limousines and go look at the United States. Rural areas are in a depression. Industrial areas are in a depression. When manufacturing jobs vanish, they take service jobs with them.

Ask yourself these questions: When American manufacturing jobs are vanishing, why are we importing an all-time record amount of manufactured goods? When American farmers are being devastated, why is the United States importing foreign agricultural products?

I'll tell you why. Because the transnational corporations control your federal government and most of the think tanks and, for that matter, some of the unions. They own most of the foreign imports. They moved their manufacturing jobs to cheap labor countries. They control a great deal of foreign agriculture. They don't give a rat's toenail about American farmers or American consumers or American workers.

All you have to do is read for yourself the publications of the Trilateral Commission — the transnational's own private organization — and you'll see that they are quite explicit: The big threat is not communism or extremism. The big threat, in their view, is nationalism, is people wanting to develop their own economies rather than the global economy which the transnational corporations can control.

The propaganda says only special interests — unions and textile manufacturers — want protection. The truth is, the special interest that the transnational corporations and their hired lackeys fear is the American people.

It's time to demand of every single elected official: Who do you represent? The American people or the transnational corporations? The transnationals are ruthless in exploiting Americans. Americans had better be ruthless in weeding out of office their political lackeys. The vote on the trade veto tells you who they are.

(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

From Staff and Wire Reports

The continued possibility of thunderstorms is in the forecast for tonight and Saturday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. There is a 20 percent chance of storms for tonight, and the possibility increases to 30 percent on Saturday.

Skies will be mostly cloudy through Saturday. Tonight's low will be in the middle 60s with southeasterly winds at five to 10 mph. Southeasterly winds will increase to 10-15 mph on Saturday, when a high of near 90 is expected.

Thursday's high of 91 was 11 degrees below the record high set in 1964. This morning's 70-degree low was 18 degrees warmer than the record high set for this date in 1947.

STATE

A low-pressure trough extending along the Texas Gulf coast triggered scattered heavy thundershowers early today, and forecasters predicted the rainfall would spread later.

Thursday night in Corpus Christi, high winds knocked out power to 1,300 families, shut down Harbor Bridge temporarily and blew over a 10,000-pound concrete slab at a construction site, according to authorities.

Bill Braselton of Braselton Construction said winds at the construction site were clocked at 70 mph.

Strong winds off the Galveston coast sank a shrimp boat, tore an oil rig from its moorings and knocked out two navigation lights in the channel, the National Weather Service reported.

Early today, the weather service said scattered heavy thunderstorms were occurring in East Texas from Tyler to between Lufkin and College Station. Meanwhile, other thunderstorms were detected offshore in the Gulf of Mexico.

The weather service said skies were mostly fair in the rest of the state, associated with a weak ridge of high pressure extending from the Great Lakes into the nation's southern plains.

NATION

Rain and thunderstorms dotted the nation from New England into the West today and set off a flash flood watch in Nevada after drenching sections of Colorado.

Thunderstorms ranged from western Kansas to eastern Colorado and eastern New Mexico.

Rain and thunderstorms were scattered across southern Texas and southern Florida while rain spread from New England across New York and eastern Pennsylvania.

SPORTS

Red Sox score 24 against Tribe

Associated Press

Scoring runs, Spike Owen said, can be contagious.

Owen, Boston's newly acquired shortstop, started an epidemic Thursday night by scoring a record-tying six runs in a 24-5 victory over the Cleveland Indians. The Red Sox scored the most runs in an American League game since 1979 and had the biggest inning in the majors in three years with a 12-run sixth.

Owen, in his third game since being acquired by Boston from Seattle, tied the modern major-league record with his six runs. The last time it happened was 1957 by Frank Torre of the Milwaukee Braves.

"I can't score unless the guys behind me pick me up," said Owen, who had a solo homer among his four hits. "My feet are a little sore. I did a whole lot of running, but it was well worth it."

Other offensive stars for the Red Sox included Bill Buckner, with five hits, and Tony Armas, with six RBI on two homers — including a grand slam in the 12-run inning.

THE LOSER was Greg Swindell, a former University of Texas All-America making his first major-league start. Swindell, who had three minor-league appearances before being called up by the Indians earlier in the day, gave up six runs and six hits in 3⅔ innings.

"The game was just one of those things," Owen said. "We hit some balls that were simply mashed, but we got some bloopers to fall and topped some hits, too. It was just a combination of all different types of hits."

The Red Sox scored the most runs by an AL team since the Angels scored 24 times against the Toronto Blue Jays on Aug. 25, 1979. It was the most runs by one team in a major-league game since Philadelphia beat the New York Mets 26-7 on June 11, 1985.

Boston had 24 hits, three more than the highest total in the majors this year, and Cleveland pitchers issued nine walks.

The only American Leaguer to score six runs in a game was Boston's Johnny Pesky in 1946. Pesky now is a special assistant to Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman.

"I've heard of him," Owen said of Pesky. "I can't tell you a great deal about him, but I'm looking forward to meeting him."

Owen didn't equal the all-time record for runs, however. In 1886, Guy Hecker of Louisville of the American Association scored seven times when that league was considered a major league.

Almost lost in the torrent of runs was the first victory since July 8 by Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 12-9, who allowed eight hits and two runs in seven innings. Boyd had lost three straight after returning from a suspension on Aug. 1.

Reliever Bryon Oelkers gave up 11 hits and nine runs in 2 1-3 innings and saw his earned run average jump from 3.72 to 4.97.

One Red Sox player who missed out on the slugfest was Wade Boggs, the majors' leading hitter? Somehow, he went 0-for-5.

Royals 4, Rangers 3

Charlie Leibrandt shut out Texas over the last four innings for his 10th victory and first complete game since June 6, and Kansas City got homers from Frank White and Steve Balboni.

Balboni gave the Royals a 2-0 lead in the third inning, but the Rangers tied it in the fourth with the help of an error by Leibrandt, 10-10, who missed a tag that allowed Pete Incaviglia to reach first, then gave up an inside-the-park homer to Larry Parrish.

"That's probably the most embarrassing play in my life," Leibrandt said. "I tried to put the tag on him and he jumped out of the way. The next guy comes up and hits it off the center field wall.

Center fielder Willie Wilson leaped for Parrish's drive in front of the 410-foot sign, but the ball hit him in the face and he lay stunned as Parrish circled the bases for a 2-2 tie.

In the fifth, White hit a 435-foot home run, snapping a 3-3 tie, and Leibrandt, who allowed seven hits, held on for his first victory since July 12.

Baseball

Ed Correa, 7-11, gave up both home runs and was the loser. He pitched six innings before being relieved by Mitch Williams. Dale Mohorcic had his record-tying streak of 13 consecutive relief appearances snapped.

Angels 6, Tigers 1

Mike Witt allowed only five hits in eight innings and got batting support from Bob Boone, Dick Schofield and Wally Joyner as California beat Detroit to extend its AL West lead to five games over Texas.

Witt, 15-7, who has allowed only 27 hits during his last six starts, walked three and struck out six before being relieved by Donnie Moore at the start of the ninth. The only run Witt allowed was on a bases-loaded walk in the sixth inning.

"I guess you could say I'm in a groove, but I'm not doing anything different," Witt, who last lost on July 12, said. "I'm being consistent and getting ahead of guys. I think that's helped a lot. My confidence is pretty high right now. It can't get much better than it is right now."

White Sox 4, Blue Jays 3

Ozzie Guillen's run-scoring single broke a 3-3 tie in the top of the ninth inning as Chicago snapped Toronto's five-game winning streak.

Jerry Hairston opened the ninth with a double off loser Jimmy Key, 11-9, and moved to third on Russ Morman's sacrifice bunt off reliever Mark Eichhorn. Guillen followed with a single through a drawn-in infield.

The Blue Jays outhit the White Sox 14-9, but grounded into three double plays and twice were cut down trying to steal by rookie catcher Ron Karkovice.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Reds 9, Cardinals 4

Eric Davis drove in four runs with a pair of homers, and Buddy Bell and Nick Esasky added solo shots to power Cincinnati to a three-game sweep of St. Louis.

Davis led off the second with a homer and hit a three-run home run in the third. Bell's fifth-inning homer, his seventh in his last eight games, staked left-hander Chris Welsh to a 5-0 lead. And Esasky homered to lead off the eighth.

Welsh, 5-4, retired the first 13 batters and didn't allow a hit until Jose Oquendo led off the sixth with a single. Terry Pendleton had a two-run single in the inning to end the shutout.

Giants 7, Phillies 6

San Francisco rallied for five runs in the eighth inning to snap a four-game losing streak and beat Philadelphia, which had won four in a row. The loss dropped the Phillies 19 games behind the New York Mets in the NL East.

Dan Gladden drew a bases-loaded walk, Luis Quinones hit a two-run single and Candy Maldonado drove in the tying and winning runs with a two-run double, pinning the loss on Kent Tekulve, 6-2. Mark Davis, 4-4, was the winner.

Braves 5, Cubs 2

Atlanta won its fourth in a row, getting a two-run homer from Dale Murphy to break an eighth-inning tie. Braves right-hander Jim Acker allowed just six hits through 7⅓ innings.

Murphy's 23rd homer came off Ed Lynch and broke a 4-4 tie. The Cubs contested the homer, saying it didn't clear the fence in left field, but second-base umpire Fred Brocklander said it had gone into the screen basket atop the wall and thus was a homer.

Padres 6, Expos 0

Steve Garvey hit his 18th home run, a three-run shot in the third inning, to help pitchers Dave Dravecky and Gene Walter hand the Montreal Expos their fifth straight loss with a five-hit shutout. Terry Kennedy also homered for the Padres.

Dravecky, 9-10, gave up three hits in five innings before leaving with a stiff back. Walter finished up, allowing the other two Montreal hits.

Diablos add TL West title

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The last 10 games of regular season play will mean absolutely nothing in the Texas League after the El Paso Diablos and Shreveport Captians took victories Thursday.

The Diablos drilled the Midland Angels 8-3 at Dudley Dome while Shreveport blanked the Tulsa Drillers by a 3-0 score as both teams nailed down second half titles.

For the Diablos, the victory means El Paso has a bye into the Texas League championship contest against either Shreveport or Jackson, the Eastern Division's first half champion. El Paso won both halves in the West.

El Paso did the same thing last year before being swept by Jackson in the championship series.

Thursday, El Paso did little wrong on the way to its crowning as Billy Jo Robidoux's solo homer in the second and a five-run fifth inning that included two more homers did in the Angels, who will finish in last place for both halves of play.

Oilers' line: 58 sacks or strength?

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

It's hard to figure out these bull-chested men with legs like tree trunks that form the offensive line of the Houston Oilers.

On the one side, the front five allowed the opposition through its walls to sack quarterback Warren Moon 58 times last season, fourth worst in the National Football League.

On the other side, the line is listed as one of the strengths in the 1986 season with a pair of All Pros returning. And with three No. 1 selections lining up, it should be the Oilers-strength — they've been assembling the pieces for nearly five years. Mike Munchak (1982), Bruce Matthews (1983) and Dean Steinkuhler (1984) were all rated at the top of their draft class and went in the first round. Center Jim Romano and guard John Schuhmacher, both veterans, round out the front five.

Munchak and Matthews both were Pro Bowl selections last season while Steinkuhler, potentially a dominant player, sat out with knee trouble, so the talent is certainly there.

So what happened?

"It's not just the lineman that cause sacks, it's running backs not picking up blitzes, it's the quarterback holding onto the ball too long. It's a combination of everything. You can't rate us on the number of sacks," said Munchak in defense of the offensive line.

DESPITE THE talk, protecting the quarterback was still one of new coach Jerry Glanville's top priorities as Houston prepared itself for the 1986 season. With Moon jitterbugging his way through his own backfield, he never did settle into running Hugh Campbell's complex offense.

Glanville has done a couple of things to the Houston offense. The first was to simplify the game plan and define the roles of each component of the front line.

"We didn't seem to have a clear cut plan last year," said Matthews, a fourth-year pro out of Southern Cal. "We did have a plan, but if after two series we weren't successful, we'd just scrap everything we worked on. When you don't know what you're going to be doing one game to the next, it is a real detriment to the line as a unit."

Offensive coordianator Dick Jamieson, at Glanville's urging, has emphasized the run to the Oiler lineman, and that should be familiar territory for these guys, all the products of running environments. Schuhmacher and Matthews are both from USC, Steinkuhler from Nebraska and Munchak and Romano are Penn State products.

"WE'RE TRYING to do a few things well, run a core group of plays and do them well," Matthews said. "We're going to run the ball, we know we're going to do that."

The key to the unit may be Steinkuhler, a 6-3, 275-pound Outland and Lombardi Trophy winner in college. A legendary figure in Nebraka football, Steinkuhler has not found instant success in the pro ranks after arriving in Houston as the second pick in the entire draft in 1984.

After starting 10 games his rookie season, Steinkuhler blew his knee out and sat all of last year. All indications point to a healthy return for Steinkuhler, but it isn't known whether the knee can withstand the punishment of a 16-game schedule.

"I've been doing everything in camp that I'll need to do in a game, I'm just ready to get back out there and play," Steinkuhler said. "I've been away from the game for one and a half seasons and it's been really tough."

With Steinkuhler slated to move back into the lineup at tackle, holdout Harvey Salem seems to be the odd man out. "We have everybody here that's going to be starting," says Munchak.

So with a healthy Steinkuhler, the offensive line seems to have finally completed the puzzle. Maybe this is the year it will shake the inconsistent label and allow the offense to do what it does best.

Herschel Walker show may not come tonight

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Herschel Walker may be the new star attraction of the Dallas Cowboys, but fans at Texas Stadium and a national television audience probably will have to settle for Tony Dorsett tonight.

Walker, who was one of the USFL's bright spots, began practicing with the Cowboys this week but is likely to remain on the sidelines, leaving the tailback duties to Dorsett.

The kickoff is scheduled for 7 p.m. CDT. The game will be telecast by ABC.

Dorsett, who asked to be traded and then apologized after Walker signed a $5 million contract with the Cowboys, reversed himself this week and asked again to be traded. Dorsett makes $450,000 a year.

"Obviously, you're investing money for the future," Coach Tom Landry said in explaining Walker's salary and the Cowboys' refusal to trade Dorsett. "Herschel could become the Dorsett of the future. That's the only way you can think about this."

The Cowboys and the Steelers are both winless during the NFL preseason — Dallas is 0-3 and Pittsburgh 0-2. But neither Landry nor Pittsburh counterpart Chuck Noll seems overly concerned.

"I think our players still think they can win even though we haven't won anything this year. Obviously, it would help if we could win a game here pretty soon," said Landry.

The Cowboys have suffered through an offensive drought, and finally scored their first touchdown in a 24-19 loss to the Raiders last week after just two field goals in its two previous losses.

The Steelers, 0-2, opened the exhibition season with a loss to the Bears before falling to Washington 27-24 last Friday. But Noll said he was "happy with the progress we made" in the Washington game.

The contest could be the first real test for the Steelers No. 1 pick, 280-pound offensive guard John Rienstra, who saw only limited action against the Redskins after a 26-game holdout.

Noll said he would once again use three quarterbacks against the Cowboys, starting with veteran Mark Malone. Scott Campbell and rookie Bubba Brister also will see some time, Noll said.

The Steelers had a five-game regular and post-season winning streak against Dallas snapped last Oct. 13 when the Cowboys won 27-13 for their first victory over Pittsburgh since 1972. The Steelers defeated the Cowboys twice in Super Bowls — in 1975 and 1979, but neither team has been to a Super Bowl in the '80s.

"I think that if you have a winning team anyway — like we come out of an Eastern Division championship and we lose a few games — I don't think it hurts as much as it hurts a team that's trying to establish a winning pattern," Tom Landry said.

'Pony Express' invests in air travel

DALLAS (AP) — The "Pony Express" is history at Southern Methodist.

Football deliveries by alternating tailback tandems such as Craig James-Eric Dickerson and Reggie Dupard-Jeff Atkins are a luxury the depth-shy Mustangs can no longer afford.

The Mustangs have gone to more passing and less pounding. The air, not the ground, will be their prime way to travel during the upcoming Southwest Conference football season.

"We used James and Dickerson and Dupard and Atkins the way we did to utlize their talents and keep them fresh," said Coach Bobby Collins. "It was no secret we were going to run. But it was mighty hard to stop anyway."

However, SMU's ineffective passing caught up with the Mustangs last year.

They suffered through a 6-5 season, including a 35-13 slaughter by eventual national champion Oklahoma at the end of the year.

Because SMU could give no scholarships as the result of NCAA football recruiting violations, the depth is gone from Collins' manpower pool.

SMU will only be able to give 15 scholarships in the next recruiting session and of course the Mustangs aren't eligible to win the Southwest Conference title, play in a bowl game, or be seen on television.

SWC Preview, SMU

The well-coached Mustangs will still be hard to handle.

"We should have our moments," said Collins, who has changed the Mustangs' offense into a more wide-open, pass-happy attack. "We have some talented receivers and we believe Bobby Watters can throw the ball. We won't be alternating tailbacks, either. Atkins will be our starter."

Collins said it will be hard to get over last season.

"We were very disappointed with our season last year," Collins said. "We had some close games that could have gone either way. In the past, we have been able to win those, but not last year. The NCAA penalties were a tremendous distraction. The further we get away from them, the better off we will be."

The Mustangs have strong weapons.

They've got a hard-running tailback in Atkins, who rushed for 810 yards and scored eight touchdowns last year.

Tight end Albert Reese is expected to be one of the best in the SWC. He caught 25 passes for 328 yards last year.

"I think we'll have more big plays on offense this year," Collins said.

On defense, Jerry Ball, who had 80 tackles, including seven quarterback sacks, returns to anchor the Mustang defense which loses eight starters.

Linebacker Ben Hummel showed his class by making seven tackles against Oklahoma.

"Replacing eight defensive starters, including four starting linebackers is a big concern," Collins said. "We'll be relying on walk-ons for a lot of help."

SMU redshirted all of its freshmen last year but one so they will still have four years of eligibility left.

Collins will get a break in that the Mustangs do not play an early game. They open the season in an SWC game against Rice in Houston on Sept. 13.

"A&M and Baylor should be the teams to beat and the rest of the conference should be in a dogfight behind those two," Collins said. "I believe we'll have an exciting team to watch. We'll be capable of springing some upsets."

Today's Question: Longest field goal by a player still active in the SWC? He kicked it last season.

Thursday's Answer: Randy McAnally is the only SWC Back Judge from Midland, Texas.

Jazz trade Dantley for Tripucka

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Detroit General Manager Jack McCloskey figures the Pistons made the right move when they traded a player who helped restore them to respectability for someone who can bring them closer to an NBA title.

The Pistons announced Thursday that they acquired two-time scoring champion Adrian Dantley from the Utah Jazz in exchange for forwards Kelly Tripucka and Kent Benson.

The Pistons also will get Utah's second-round choice in the NBA draft in 1987 and 1990, Pistons spokesman Matt Dobek said.

"I don't know how close it brings us (to a championship), but it makes us a better basketball team," McCloskey said.

McCloskey said trading Tripucka was difficult. "Kelly was instrumental in helping us go from a very poor basketball team to a very good team," he said.

Dantley, 30, averaged 29.8 points, second highest in the league, and 3.5 rebounds per game last year for Utah. He played seven years with the Jazz after shorter stints with Buffalo (now the Los Angeles Clippers), Indiana Pacers and Los Angeles Lakers.

For Dantley, the trade marked the end of a long feud with Utah Coach Frank Layden.

Sooners face tough slate

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Brian Bosworth, the most well-known character on an Oklahoma football team loaded with colorful players, says he can't wait for the Sooners' Sept. 27 date with Miami, Fla.

"We want to go down there and try to pay them back," Bosworth said of the Hurricanes, who last year handed Oklahoma its only loss in an 11-1, national championship season. "They came into our pit and embarrassed us on national TV. We'd like to even the score."

Before they can think along those lines, however, the Sooners will have to get past Rose Bowl champion UCLA in the opener Sept. 6, then beat Minnesota two weeks later.

Oklahoma returns 18 starters from its 1985 team, including 10 of 11 from an offense that scored nearly 31 points per game. The thought of watching his sometimes slow-starting wishbone go against the likes of Miami and UCLA so early in the schedule has Coach Barry Switzer wringing his hands in nervous anticipation.

"I don't think we've ever played a tougher schedule," said Switzer, who is beginning his 14th season as head coach. "We've played Ohio State or Southern Cal and then Texas before, but we've never played a UCLA, a Miami and then Texas (in one year)."

The one consolation, as Switzer sees it, is the return of a talented, experienced quarterback in sophomore Jamelle Holieway.

Holieway took over during the Miami game last year after starter Troy Aikman suffered a broken ankle. In the next eight games, Oklahoma averaged more than 300 yards rushing and twice scored more than 50 points in a game.

"It's been an inexperienced quarterback or quarterback injury that's caused us to start slow," said Switzer. "I remember when we started slow in 1977 because Thomas Lott pulled his hamstring in the sneak preview (game) and we wound up playing ... a true freshman. We started slow that year and we had a great offensive football team.

"And the competition has a lot to do with it. If we were playing a bunch of teams I could think of, you'd think we really had it going. But UCLA will have something to do with that."

Holieway, who rushed for 861 yards and passed for 517 last season, has plenty of help. The offensive line returns all but one starter and will average 280 pounds. Tight end Keith Jackson caught 20 passes at a 24-yards-per-catch clip and was a second team All-America last year, and none of the returning full-time running backs averaged less than 4.6 yards per carry.

Switzer didn't like Holieway's 41 percent completion rate last year and says he'd like to have more speed at split receiver. But the explosive running game helps shield those flaws.

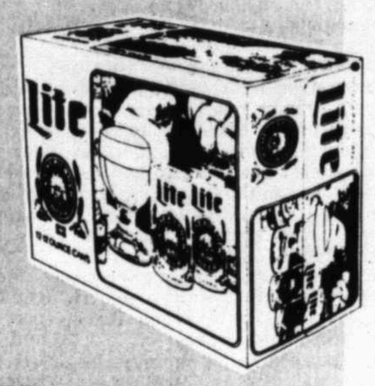

Oklahoma led the nation in total defense and pass defense, and was second against the rush last year. But three members of that unit are gone, including Lombardi Award winner Tony Casillas and defensive end Kevin Murphy, an All-America as a junior.

"We lost three of our front seven, and our depth won't be as good," said offensive coordinator Gary Gibbs. "Statistically, I don't think we can come anywhere near the figures we posted in 1985."

Buckeyes suspend two grid starters

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State football coach Earle Bruce has announced that two starters and a backup have been suspended from the team, less than a week before the Buckeyes meet Alabama in the season-opening Kickoff Classic.

Junior Terry White, a two-year starter at safety, was dismissed from the team for the season, as was backup tailback Roman Bates, a senior. Sophomore Derek Isaman, who was scheduled to start against Alabama at outside linebacker, was suspended for one game.

"These dismissals and the suspension were for violating team regulations," he said, without elaborating. He said the decision to suspend the three players was made Wednesday night and Thursday morning.

After making the announcement at the end of his first press luncheon of the season, Bruce hurriedly left the room and declined to answer any questions.

Reached at his office by telephone later, Bruce was asked if the dismissal of White and Bates was for the season.

"The way it stands right now, (the dismissal) is forever," Bruce said.

Asked to comment on the reasons for the suspensions, he said, "What can I say. There's nothing I'm going to say now that is going to help them any."

Ohio State plays Alabama Aug. 27 in the annual Kickoff Classic at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J.

Two unidentified athletic department sources told The Columbus Dispatch that drinking was involved in the penalties.

"I was not involved in alcohol, but the whole incident did have something to do with alcohol," White told the newspaper in an interview published today. "But I can sit here and say that I was not drinking any alcohol."

White, who has two years of eligibility remaining, said he's considering transferring to another major university outside the Big Ten.

""I'm going to relax and talk to my wife and family, then go from there," he said. "I'm not going to make any rash or sudden decisions."

White, of Cambridge, Ohio, a 5-foot-9, 176-pound junior, started at safety each of the past two years. He was in on 71 tackles in each of his first two seasons and had a total of seven interceptions.

White's interception in the final seven seconds of the 1985 Florida Citrus Bowl sealed the Buckeyes' 10-7 victory over Brigham Young.

He has been suspended from the Ohio State team twice before, missing the 1985 Rose Bowl and a 1985 regular-season game against Wisconsin. Personal problems were cited for the suspensions both times.

Bates, a 6-foot, 207-pound senior from Memphis, Tenn., has played both fullback and tailback at Ohio State. He started at fullback, blocking for tailback Keith Byars, for most of the 1984 season. His most productive year came in 1983, when he averaged 5.5 yards on 53 carries and scored four touchdowns.

Isaman, a native of Fremont, Ohio, saw action in all 12 games last season as a freshman. He started one game.

Bruce said sophomore John Sullivan would take Isaman's position. Bates was not listed on the roster for the opener.

"I don't know yet who's going to take (White's) position," Bruce said. "It could be (freshman backup safety) David Brown. Or it could be that we will switch some other players around."

Swindell's debut turns sour

CLEVELAND (AP) — Greg Swindell's major-league pitching debut will be long remembered, but it won't be for a solid pitching performance.

It will be for the 24 runs Swindell and the four Cleveland Indian relievers who followed him surrendered to the Boston Red Sox.

While Swindell's showing was not the worst of the night, it was bad enough to leave the former University of Texas star with a 9.82 earned run average.

In 3⅔ innings, the Indians No. 1 pick in the June free-agent draft gave up six hits, three walks and six runs — four of them earned. He also issued a run-scoring balk.

Swindell, a fastball strikeout artist who fanned 501 batters in 440 innings in three seasons of college ball, failed to strike out anyone Thursday night.

Red Sox slugger Dwight Evans, who collected two singles off the rookie, said Swindell exhibited some poise during the first couple of innings.

"The major leagues must be the ultimate and it's not easy up here," Evans added. "He had quite a career as a college player. This was his first time out. He just got the ball up."

Swindell was the first Indian to pitch in the majors without pitching above Class A level in the minors since Steve Dunning made the jump from Stanford University in 1970.

"I can't believe I started that game," the 21-year-old left-hander said afterwards. "I've made some mistakes. I'll just have to pick it up next time out."

Indians pitching coach Jack Aker saw enough of Swindell to be impressed despite his difficult debut.

"The kid pitched under the toughest possible circumstances," he said. "He hardly had any sleep last night, flew in, pitched his first major league game."

ANGELS

El Paso led 2-0 after the fourth inning. The Diablo's fifth-inning action included a solo shot by Alan Cartwright and a three-run shot by Steve Stanicek. In the eighth, Billy Bates had a solo shot.

Midland scored all three runs in the eighth, driven in on a homer by Pete Coachman, his fourth of the year.

Alex Madrid, 11-9, was the winner while Rafael Pimentel, 9-7, was the loser. Pimentel has failed in his last three starts to nail down his 10th victory of the season and will probably have only one more start before regular season play ends.

A crowd of 5,495 witnessed the title clinching contest.

The Captains won the second half East title behind the five-hit shutout of John Burkett, 9-6, over Tulsa.

Shreveport scored two unearned runs in the top of the second inning when Tulsa shortstop Larry Klein threw away a ground ball. That allowed third-baseman Charlie Hayes, who reached on a force-out, and shortstop Angel Escobar, who doubled, to score.

The Captains added a run in the sixth on an RBI double by Hayes.

Paul Kilgus, 3-6, was saddled with the loss for the Drillers.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Jointly-held resources can be enlarged. Parents find it easier to cope with problems involving their children. You win family members' support for a savings and investment plan. A legacy could bring you both extra cash and valuable heirlooms. Romance will be idyllic in December.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Emmy Award winner Shelley Long of "Cheers," "The Spirit of '76" artist Archibald Willard, actress Jean Darling, football's Rayfield Wright, actress Barbara Eden, sportscaster Sonny Jurgensen, dancer-actor-director Gene Kelly and Baltimore Orioles' Mike Boddicker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Not a good day to make important moves. Domestic matters will need your close attention. A scheduling problem regarding vacation or social plans could arise. A compromise will prevent resentment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Enjoy any extra time you can spend with family members. You find new ways to combine business with pleasure. Entertaining at home will help you get to know an influential person better.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A personal relationship moves in a new direction. You are baffled but pleased with mate's change of attitude. A financial discussion is part of today's plan. Limit money spent on entertainment tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A writer could get a great idea for a new book. A change of lifestyle will increase your personal comfort while reducing tension on the home front. Favorable trends promote romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Let friendship guide the decisions you make today. Last-minute invitation could hold great appeal. A new environment will expand your horizons. Welcome change. Romance has its ups and downs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not be shy about expressing your feelings to your loved ones. Domestic life can be cozy and relaxed. Mate or partner offers valuable financial or career suggestions -- follow up immediately.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give top priority to family projects that will both inspire and bring greater comfort. Close friends are highly supportive. Talking shop at social events could make others think you a bore.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A letter or messenger brings good news. Travel is possible. Pack your bags! Consult a lawyer if confused about a legal notice. A friend helps you cut through red tape.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Shun get-rich-quick schemes advanced by well-intentioned pals. A new friend helps you satisfy a secret desire. Do not be afraid to reveal your true feelings. A new love works wonders.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A friendship could prove very expensive. Trips for promotional activities pay off handsomely. Think about the long term no matter what your age. Follow your instincts where money matters are concerned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not get involved in an argument between a parent and child. Waiting will enable you to buy a luxury item at a greatly reduced price. Friction lessens at place of employment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Close friends' investment advice may be well-intentioned but incorrect. Consult an expert. It is time to tackle some work you have been postponing. A clean desk will make the weekend seem sweeter.

Timing is a vital ingredient in many of the plays we have described in our bridge player's dictionary. Whether you are a tempo ahead or behind can be of key importance in how you tackle a hand. Here is an example of what a difference one tempo can make, from George Coffin's "Bridge Play from A to Z."

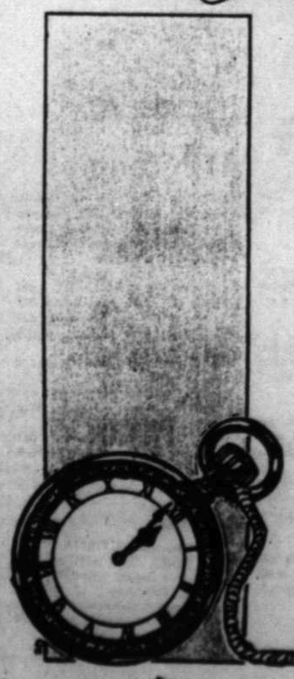

A routine auction landed North-South in four hearts. Note the fact that North, with a defensive trick and four-card support for his partner's opening bid, raised despite West's takeout double; that is standard practice today.

Against four hearts, West led the king of clubs. This would have been the wrong time to employ H for Holdup. West might shift to a diamond at trick two, and the defenders would be a tempo ahead in the race to establish the pivotal trick. Declarer would not be able to do any better than nine tricks, for the defenders would collect two spades, a club and a diamond before declarer could find a 10th trick.

Declarer edged ahead in the contest for the key trick by the simple expedient of winning the first trick. After drawing trumps in three rounds, he set about establishing a spade trick in dummy by leading low from his hand. West took his queen of spades and shifted to a diamond, but it was too late. Declarer won in hand and continued with the king of spades to West's ace. The dummy's jack of spades was set up for a discard while the ace of diamonds was still on the table as an entry.

As the cards lie, the contract could have been defeated with a diamond opening lead as long as the defenders persevere with the suit whenever they gain the lead. But the king of clubs is the natural lead from the West hand. Anything else would lead to raised eyebrows at the very least.

Roman Catholic church officials not convinced there's 'a ghost in the house'

WEST PITTSTON, Pa. (AP) — Roman Catholic Church officials say they are taking seriously a family's tale of scary goings-on in its century-old house, but are unconvinced it is the work of a demon.

"We don't know what it is — that's the problem," said the Rev. Gerald F. Mullally, the Scranton diocese's chancellor. "We believe what the family is telling us. It's the explanation for what they are experiencing that we are not sure of."

Mullally said the diocese is sending a priest experienced in demonology and parapsychology to help the family of Janet and Jack Smurl. Mullally declined to name him or discuss his training, but demonologist Edward Warren said the priest comes from St. Bonaventure University in New York.

Warren said he visited the house in January and was terrified by a dripping message on the mirror that told him to "GET OUT."

In the master bedroom, he said he invoked the name of Jesus and commanded the spirit to reveal its identity.

"Within seconds the room turned icy cold," Warren said Thursday.

"There was a foul stench — I would describe it as rotting flesh. Objects on the bureau started to move and then in front of the bureau gossamer threads — a mucous-like, smoky-type substance — whirled and materialized on the mirror, spelling out filthy obscenities, telling me in no uncertain terms to get out of the house."

Warren said he was convinced then that the Smurls, their four daughters and the in-laws who live with them were in terrible danger.

The family says the demon resisted two exorcisms and responded to investigations and growing public attention with more vicious attacks.

Warren said he investigated a Brookfield, Conn., case of a possessed 11-year-old boy, the subject of an NBC-TV movie. He and his wife, clairvoyant Lorraine Warren, also worked on the case of the alleged haunted house in Amityville, N.Y., that became the subject of a best-selling book and movies.

Warren was one of the first to have taken the Smurls seriously, the family said. "It took nine months to even find someone who we could ask questions of," Mrs. Smurl said. "We are a haunted family."

Her 17-year-old daughter, Dawn, who says she was grabbed by the arms and bruised by the demon in the shower, said she is scared, too, but not terrified.

"It's like a family member that's bad, that nobody gets along with. You don't want it there," she said.

Meanwhile, Smurl said he sprinkles holy water about the house, and he and the family say "mini-exorcism" prayers nightly, but the demon is fighting back.

"Sometimes when I say the rosary, it drags me from my knees and tries to beat me into submission," Smurl said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Forrest Tucker is being treated at Hollywood Presbyterian Medical Center after collapsing shortly before his star was placed in the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Tucker

The nature of his illness was not disclosed. Tucker earlier this month complained of chest pains while on an airliner from Memphis, Tenn., to Chicago.

Tucker was taken to Hollywood Presbyterian Medical Center. His family requested that no details be revealed, said nursing supervisor Ever Jaldon.

Tucker, 67, known as Sgt. O'Rourke in the 1965-67 television series "F-Troop," had arrived for the ceremony Thursday aboard a tour bus when he became ill, said Kathryn Shepard, spokeswoman for the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

The five-minute unveiling of Tucker's star continued, however, with his sister, Betty Hitchcock, and daughter, Cindy Tucker, attending. They went to the hospital afterward, said Ms. Shepard.

Tucker was born Feb. 12, 1919, in Plainfield, Ind. His career began in burlesque and has encompassed stage, television and motion picture productions.

Among his more than 50 movie credits are 1940's "The Westerner" with Gary Cooper and Walter Brennan, and "Keeper of the Flame" with Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn.

The 6-foot-4 Tucker co-starred in "The Sands Of Iwo Jima" with John Wayne.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Musicians Paul Kantner and Grace Slick shared the stage and private lives for years as part of the Jefferson Airplane and the Jefferson Starship rock band, but now they are squaring off in court.

Kantner, 45, is suing Slick, 46, and her husband and manager, Skip Johnson, saying they taped confidential telephone talks with Kantner between 1984 and 1985 without his permission.

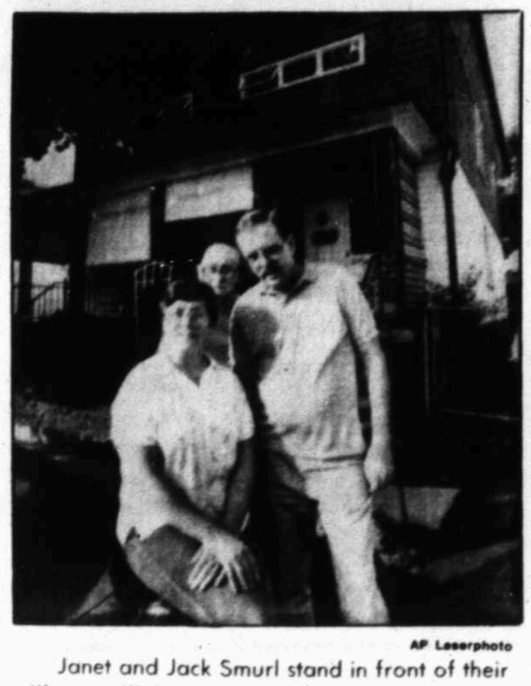

The suit, filed Monday in San Francisco Superior Court, alleges that Slick and Johnson played parts of the conversations for others. The court ordered the lawsuit file sealed Wednesday.

Before Slick and Johnson married in 1976, she lived with Kantner and the two had a daughter.

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Philippine President Corazon Aquino will receive the Ignatius Medal, the highest honor at Boston College, when she visits the campus next month.

Aquino and her assassinated husband, Benigno, were neighbors of the campus when they lived in Boston, and their daughter, Victoria, graduated from the college in 1983.

The five-minute unveiling of Tucker's star continued, however, with his sister, Betty Hitchcock, and daughter, Cindy Tucker, attending. They went to the hospital afterward, said Ms. Shepard.

Tucker was born Feb. 12, 1919, in Plainfield, Ind. His career began in burlesque and has encompassed stage, television and motion picture productions.

Among his more than 50 movie credits are 1940's "The Westerner" with Gary Cooper and Walter Brennan, and "Keeper of the Flame" with Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn.

The 6-foot-4 Tucker co-starred in "The Sands Of Iwo Jima" with John Wayne.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Musicians Paul Kantner and Grace Slick shared the stage and private lives for years as part of the Jefferson Airplane and the Jefferson Starship rock band, but now they are squaring off in court.

Kantner, 45, is suing Slick, 46, and her husband and manager, Skip Johnson, saying they taped confidential telephone talks with Kantner between 1984 and 1985 without his permission.

The suit, filed Monday in San Francisco Superior Court, alleges that Slick and Johnson played parts of the conversations for others. The court ordered the lawsuit file sealed Wednesday.

Before Slick and Johnson married in 1976, she lived with Kantner and the two had a daughter.

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Philippine President Corazon Aquino will receive the Ignatius Medal, the highest honor at Boston College, when she visits the campus next month.

Aquino and her assassinated husband, Benigno, were neighbors of the campus when they lived in Boston, and their daughter, Victoria, graduated from the college in 1983.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar firmed to close at 153.40 yen. That was up 0.37 from Thursday's close of 153.03, but one yen below last Friday.

Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 153.20 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Thursday:

—2.0400 West German marks, down from 2.0480

—1.6445 Swiss francs, down from 1.6485

Oil Show 97 percent sold out

Directors upbeat about this year's exhibition

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

With just under two months to go, the Permian Basin Oil Show is 97 percent sold out, and Jay Alvey, executive director of the exposition, reports that his office is getting calls every day for space.

"We're highly pleased with the response," Alvey said. "We would like to be sold out, but with the current state of the economy, we feel selling 97 percent of the space is excellent. And with the requests we're getting, we could easily be sold out in time for the show." This is the first time since 1974 the show hasn't been sold out close to the show dates.

He added that the Oil Show has lost a few long-time exhibitors, "but we haven't lost many." The Oil Show had maintained a waiting list since the 1974 show, but there isn't one this year.

In light of the current state of the petroleum industry due to collapsing oil prices, many Permian Basin residents had wondered if there was going to a Permian Basin Oil Show this year.

"We feel that, due to the current economic climate, it's even more important to have the Oil Show," stated T.L. (Woody) Gregory, president of the 1986 Oil Show, which has been scheduled for Oct. 15-18 at the Ector County Coliseum complex in Odessa. "More than ever, we need to involve the community in the Oil Show. We're going to have to worker harder than ever to make this Oil Show a success."

Oil Show officials expect exhibitors to send fewer people to man the booths, so the hours have been shortened to give exhibitors a little breathing room. Hours will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Oct. 15 and 16, the two days reserved for those in the industry. On those two days, no children will be admitted on the grounds. The gates will open to the public on Oct. 17 at 1 p.m. and close at 6 p.m., and on Oct. 18 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Officials also rescheduled the parade and opening ceremonies in order to accomodate school bands. The parade will be Oct. 14 at 4:30 p.m., which gives students time to get out of school and to Odessa. Opening ceremonies, traditionally held after the parade on Friday afternoons, this year will be held at 9:30 a.m. on Oct. 15.

This year's honoree will be Jay Alvey, who has been executive director of the Oil Show since 1960.

Alvey noted that there will be over 500 companies taking up 912 spaces at the exhibition. "We've had contributors say they can contact more people at the Oil Show than they could having a man on the road for a year."

Norway may hold line on production

OSLO (UPI) — Norway's oil minister said the North Sea nation might be willing to hold the line on current oil production levels to support the recent OPEC decision to cut output by nearly 4 million barrels a day in September and October, the OPEC news agency reported Thursday.

Norwegian Oil Minister Arne Oeien, in an interview with the Business Weekly Economic Report, said Norway will announce its decision on possible cooperation with OPEC by Sept. 1 following a cabinet meeting on the issue later this month.

On Aug. 5 the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced an agreement to end its pricing war against outside producers and lower production to about 16.8 million barrels a day for two months beginning Sept. 1.

Oeien said in the interview that any action taken by Norway would be to "dampen (production) growth" rather than to implement a direct output cut, according to OPECNA.

Asked if permanent contact would be established between Norway and OPEC, Oeien said "there will be some meetings from time to time, but it would be a completely different direction if this were to develop into any form of international contact."

In recent months Norwegian government officials have expressed some interest in taking steps to help OPEC stabilize the world oil market and bolster prices.

Failed bank opens under new owners

DANBURY, Texas (AP) — The Danbury Bank was shut down Thursday because of liberal lending practices, the 15th bank in Texas to fail this year, the state banking commissioner said.

The failed bank's deposits will be assumed by Danbury State Bank, a newly chartered subsidiary of P.J.D. Bancshares Inc. in Louise, Texas, said Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Depositors of the failed bank automatically will become depositors with the new Danbury State Bank when it opens Friday, Whitney said.

The old bank, which had assets of $9.6 million, was closed at 2 p.m. by Texas Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton.

According to a statement released from Sexton's office in Austin, liberal lending practices coupled with inadequate loan administration resulted in losses exceeding the institution's capital funds.

Danbury State Bank will assume about $9.1 million in 1,700 accounts and pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $7,500, Whitney said. It also will buy some of the failed bank's loans and other assets for $6.4 million.

The FDIC, which assumes the remaining assets, will advance $2.7 million to the new bank and will repay assets of the failed bank with a book value of about $3.2 million, Whitney said.

Thursday's closure of the Danbury bank was the 93rd bank failure in the nation so far this year, he said.

Texas already had set a record with its number of bank failures this year, topping the old mark of 13 shared by Oklahoma and Nebraska in 1985, according to FDIC records.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas speaks at the White House Conference on Small Business in Washington Thursday.

Small businesses want some government help

WASHINGTON (AP) — Entrepreneurs at a White House conference say they want the government out of their hair when it comes to employee benefits, but they wouldn't mind some help coping with soaring insurance costs and foreign competition.

Though a great majority of the 1,822 delegates to the White House Conference on Small Business voted to fight "government-mandated employee benefits" such as unpaid leave for new parents and sick employees, they also urged government regulation of the insurance industry and called for a new Cabinet-level Department of International Trade.

The delegates also called for preserving the Small Business Administration, which the Reagan administration has tried repeatedly to eliminate, and said it should be a Cabinet-level agency.

The delegates' 60 recommendations, winnowed from an initial 371, were presented to Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Thursday at the conclusion of the four-day conference.

"We're not only going to look at them, we're going to try to implement the recommendations you've made," Dole, R-Kan., told the group. "The first thing this Congress has to do is to take on the American Trial Lawyers Association and the insurance industry and get product liability (reform legislation) on the way."

The call for reform and government regulation of the insurance and re-insurance industries was No. 1 on the list with votes from 1,419 delegates. They labeled the insurance crisis "a life and death sentence to many small businesses."

The delegates contend government-mandated benefits, No. 2 on the list, are another critical issue for small business. Specifically targeted in the recommendation, which received 1,360 votes, was parental leave legislation pending before the House.

"It would have killed the small business industry for good," said Mary Diener, who employs seven people at Diener & Associates in Cary, N.C.

Neither of their businesses would have to allow leaves under the bill approved in June by the House Education and Labor Committee. The measure would require companies with at least 15 employees to provide 18 weeks of unpaid leave to workers with newborn or newly adopted children, serious medical problems or elderly dependents.

The conference delegates recommended that Congress reject the bill as well as proposals to require medical coverage, and bar states from imposing such requirements. They said they support voluntary private efforts "to enable working parents to fulfill their job and family responsibilities."

But women's groups, unions and some medical associations say all other industrialized countries have national leave policies and that private industry has not met the needs of U.S. families.

"We call this pro-family worker protection," said Andrea Camp, a spokeswoman for Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., a prime sponsor of the bill. "We think employers will also benefit by retaining a loyal, experienced and more productive work force and by saving on costs for hiring and retraining replacement workers."

Oil stocks can be bargain investment

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The days of blanket industry-wide stock recommendations, particularly in the petroleum industry, are past.

But evaluating individual companies within the industry, even in the generally depressed and tumultuous oil and gas sector, can yield bargains for the long- and short-term investor, says John F. Ryan Jr., vice president and senior energy analyst for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes, Inc. (RPR), Dallas.

A couple of key considerations in selecting an energy stock are the company's financial capability to withstand continued slumping oil and gas prices and its position to benefit when prices begin rising.

Ryan projects that natural gas prices could rebound as early as this winter, based on the fact that during the recent statewide heat wave, when natural gas was burned to meet incremental air conditioning demand, the spot natural gas market tightened considerably and prices jumped as much as $.15 per Mcf during the period.

"If minor fluctuations in demand can have a tightening effect on market prices, we are getting near the turning point in the overall gas supply/demand balance," Ryan notes.

Ryan points to independent producers with 'natural gas leverage' such as Amarillo-based Mesa Limited Partners and Noble Affiliates Inc., Ardmore, Okla., as best able to benefit from the expected changes in gas market conditions. Mesa, Noble and other companies with substantial online shut-in deliverability, plus additional reserves, are considered by RPR to be attractive investments.

Ryan expects oil prices to remain strong but volatile at least until mid-October, when OPEC meets to consider extending the current short-term production cutback agreement. Despite the unstable outlook, RPR cites Exxon, Mobil and Occidental as major oil producers whose stocks hold good potential.

Exxon and Mobil are favored because of their low debt load positions, while Occidental's recommendation comes on the strength of corporate chairman Armand Hammer's dedication to maintaining a high dividend yield for stockholders, Ryan says.

Among gas transporters, RPR leans toward those companies further upstream — with heavier concentrations of gathering system lines — rather than long-line transmission firms. Those lines closer to the wellhead, particularly in those areas with a low density of competing systems will be in a position to take advantage of increasing spot market prices through greater flexibility, he adds.

RPR particularly likes Endevco's stock.

The firm projects that oil prices, while volatile, will remain in the $13 to $20 per barrel range as OPEC gradually regains market share. As this happens, consuming nations such as the U.S. again become vulnerable to production disruptions by the early 1990s, RPR warned in a recent investors' report.

Panhandle Eastern, Grace Drilling plan combined operation

HOUSTON (AP) — Panhandle Eastern Corp. and W.R. Grace & Co. plan to combine their land and inland barge drilling operations into what officials say could be the world's largest rig fleet, officials announced.

Executives at the two companies said Thursday they have agreed in principle to combine operations for efficiency and to reduce overhead costs so they can better compete in the current depressed drilling industry.

Negotiations are still in progress to complete final agreements for the combination of Panhandle Eastern's subsidiary, Dixilyn-Field Drilling Co. with Grace Drilling Co., officials said.

The two companies already have announced a merger of operations between Grace and Panhandle's subsidiary, Brinkerhoff-Signal Inc.

Grace Drilling, with 129 rigs, is headquartered in Oklahoma City while Panhandle's subsidiaries are based in Houston with 63 land rigs and two inland barges. Dixilyn-Field also has 11 offshore rigs that are not included in the joint venture, officials said.

Major banks expected to reduce prime rate

NEW YORK (AP) — Analysts expect the nation's major banks to cut their prime lending rates from the present 8 percent in response to the Federal Reserve Board's 0.5 point cut in the discount rate.

Although several smaller institutions reduced their prime rates to 7.5 percent from 8 percent Thursday, the day after the discount rate cut, the big banks did not.

The Fed reduced the discount rate, the interest it charges on loans to financial institutions, to 5.5 percent from 6 percent, cutting the key rate for the fourth time this year to its lowest since August 1977.

Major U.S. banks generally follow changes in the discount rate with similar changes in the prime, a benchmark used to set the interest charged on a variety of credit.

While prime changes usually are made in conjunction with discount rate changes — often on the same or following business day — they are not always immediate.

The banks generally decline to comment about any impending rate changes, and were tight-lipped about the prime rate.

"We don't forecast when we're going to change it," said Charles Salmans, a spokesman for Chemical Bank in New York. "We announce the change when we announce it."

Smaller institutions that cut their prime rates to 7.5 percent Thursday included Southwest Bank in St. Louis, People's Savings Bank in Bridgeport, Conn., and San Jacinto Savings Association in Houston.

Speculation over the reasons for the big banks' delay ranged from surprise at the timing of the discount rate cut to a reappraisal of how the prime should be structured in light of the loss of tax breaks contained in congressional tax proposals.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Dresser elects former ambassador to board

DALLAS (UPI) — Dresser Industries Inc. said Thursday that John Gavin, the former U.S. ambassador to Mexco, has been elected to the company's board of directors.

Gavin also is the vice president-federal and international relations for the Atlantic Richfield Co. of Los Angeles.

Dresser's board of directors also said it has approved a plan to restructure the company's capitalization and to reduce the dividend on common stock.

"These actions represent prudent management of the company's cash resources for long-term enhancement of shareholder values," said John J. Murphy, Dresser chairman and president.

The company's total capitalization currently consists of about 25 percent debt and 75 percent equity. Murphy noted that "The recapitalization will maintain approximately the same debt/equity ratio by reducing short-and long-term debt and purchasing...over the next 12-15 months."

General Homes Corp. completes merger

HOUSTON (UPI) — General Homes Corp. said Thursday its merger with General Homes Management Corp. has been completed after shareholders approved the move last month.

The merger, which had been awaiting a favorable tax ruling, was received last week, a company spokesman said.

The spokesman said the merger had no effect on the ownership of shares by existing shareholders of General Homes and did not increase the number of outstanding shares of General Homes Stock.

As a result of the merger, the former two shareholders of GHMC now directly own the equivalent ownership of General Homes, one of the nation's top builders of single family, detached homes in Houston, Dallas, New Orleans, Tampa, Orlando and Phoenix.

Reagan signs extension of government's credit

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan has signed a $32 billion extension of the federal government's credit through the end of September, the White House said.

The measure, approved by Congress last week, increases the ceiling on the national debt from its previous level of $2.079 trillion.

The government would be in danger of default without approval of the stopgap measure, announced Thursday by the White House press officials while Reagan vacationed on his ranch near here.

Oil Show 97 percent sold out

Directors upbeat about this year's exhibition

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

With just under two months to go, the Permian Basin Oil Show is 97 percent sold out, and Jay Alvey, executive director of the exposition, reports that his office is getting calls every day for space.

"We're highly pleased with the response," Alvey said. "We would like to be sold out, but with the current state of the economy, we feel selling 97 percent of the space is excellent. And with the requests we're getting, we could easily be sold out in time for the show." This is the first time since 1974 the show hasn't been sold out close to the show dates.

He added that the Oil Show has lost a few long-time exhibitors, "but we haven't lost many." The Oil Show had maintained a waiting list since the 1974 show, but there isn't one this year.

In light of the current state of the petroleum industry due to collapsing oil prices, many Permian Basin residents had wondered if there was going to a Permian Basin Oil Show this year.

"We feel that, due to the current economic climate, it's even more important to have the Oil Show," stated T.L. (Woody) Gregory, president of the 1986 Oil Show, which has been scheduled for Oct. 15-18 at the Ector County Coliseum complex in Odessa. "More than ever, we need to involve the community in the Oil Show. We're going to have to worker harder than ever to make this Oil Show a success."

Oil Show officials expect exhibitors to send fewer people to man the booths, so the hours have been shortened to give exhibitors a little breathing room. Hours will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Oct. 15 and 16, the two days reserved for those in the industry. On those two days, no children will be admitted on the grounds. The gates will open to the public on Oct. 17 at 1 p.m. and close at 6 p.m., and on Oct. 18 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Officials also rescheduled the parade and opening ceremonies in order to accomodate school bands. The parade will be Oct. 14 at 4:30 p.m., which gives students time to get out of school and to Odessa. Opening ceremonies, traditionally held after the parade on Friday afternoons, this year will be held at 9:30 a.m. on Oct. 15.

This year's honoree will be Jay Alvey, who has been executive director of the Oil Show since 1960.

Alvey noted that there will be over 500 companies taking up 912 spaces at the exhibition. "We've had contributors say they can contact more people at the Oil Show than they could having a man on the road for a year."

Norway may hold line on production

OSLO (UPI) — Norway's oil minister said the North Sea nation might be willing to hold the line on current oil production levels to support the recent OPEC decision to cut output by nearly 4 million barrels a day in September and October, the OPEC news agency reported Thursday.

Norwegian Oil Minister Arne Oeien, in an interview with the Business Weekly Economic Report, said Norway will announce its decision on possible cooperation with OPEC by Sept. 1 following a cabinet meeting on the issue later this month.

On Aug. 5 the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced an agreement to end its pricing war against outside producers and lower production to about 16.8 million barrels a day for two months beginning Sept. 1.

Oeien said in the interview that any action taken by Norway would be to "dampen (production) growth" rather than to implement a direct output cut, according to OPECNA.

Asked if permanent contact would be established between Norway and OPEC, Oeien said "there will be some meetings from time to time, but it would be a completely different direction if this were to develop into any form of international contact."

In recent months Norwegian government officials have expressed some interest in taking steps to help OPEC stabilize the world oil market and bolster prices.

Failed bank opens under new owners

DANBURY, Texas (AP) — The Danbury Bank was shut down Thursday because of liberal lending practices, the 15th bank in Texas to fail this year, the state banking commissioner said.

The failed bank's deposits will be assumed by Danbury State Bank, a newly chartered subsidiary of P.J.D. Bancshares Inc. in Louise, Texas, said Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Depositors of the failed bank automatically will become depositors with the new Danbury State Bank when it opens Friday, Whitney said.

The old bank, which had assets of $9.6 million, was closed at 2 p.m. by Texas Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton.

According to a statement released from Sexton's office in Austin, liberal lending practices coupled with inadequate loan administration resulted in losses exceeding the institution's capital funds.

Danbury State Bank will assume about $9.1 million in 1,700 accounts and pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $7,500, Whitney said. It also will buy some of the failed bank's loans and other assets for $6.4 million.

The FDIC, which assumes the remaining assets, will advance $2.7 million to the new bank and will repay assets of the failed bank with a book value of about $3.2 million, Whitney said.

Thursday's closure of the Danbury bank was the 93rd bank failure in the nation so far this year, he said.

Texas already had set a record with its number of bank failures this year, topping the old mark of 13 shared by Oklahoma and Nebraska in 1985, according to FDIC records.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas speaks at the White House Conference on Small Business in Washington Thursday.

Small businesses want some government help

WASHINGTON (AP) — Entrepreneurs at a White House conference say they want the government out of their hair when it comes to employee benefits, but they wouldn't mind some help coping with soaring insurance costs and foreign competition.

Though a great majority of the 1,822 delegates to the White House Conference on Small Business voted to fight "government-mandated employee benefits" such as unpaid leave for new parents and sick employees, they also urged government regulation of the insurance industry and called for a new Cabinet-level Department of International Trade.

The delegates also called for preserving the Small Business Administration, which the Reagan administration has tried repeatedly to eliminate, and said it should be a Cabinet-level agency.

The delegates' 60 recommendations, winnowed from an initial 371, were presented to Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Thursday at the conclusion of the four-day conference.

"We're not only going to look at them, we're going to try to implement the recommendations you've made," Dole, R-Kan., told the group. "The first thing this Congress has to do is to take on the American Trial Lawyers Association and the insurance industry and get product liability (reform legislation) on the way."

The call for reform and government regulation of the insurance and re-insurance industries was No. 1 on the list with votes from 1,419 delegates. They labeled the insurance crisis "a life and death sentence to many small businesses."

The delegates contend government-mandated benefits, No. 2 on the list, are another critical issue for small business. Specifically targeted in the recommendation, which received 1,360 votes, was parental leave legislation pending before the House.

"It would have killed the small business industry for good," said Mary Diener, who employs seven people at Diener & Associates in Cary, N.C.

Neither of their businesses would have to allow leaves under the bill approved in June by the House Education and Labor Committee. The measure would require companies with at least 15 employees to provide 18 weeks of unpaid leave to workers with newborn or newly adopted children, serious medical problems or elderly dependents.

The conference delegates recommended that Congress reject the bill as well as proposals to require medical coverage, and bar states from imposing such requirements. They said they support voluntary private efforts "to enable working parents to fulfill their job and family responsibilities."

But women's groups, unions and some medical associations say all other industrialized countries have national leave policies and that private industry has not met the needs of U.S. families.

"We call this pro-family worker protection," said Andrea Camp, a spokeswoman for Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., a prime sponsor of the bill. "We think employers will also benefit by retaining a loyal, experienced and more productive work force and by saving on costs for hiring and retraining replacement workers."

Oil stocks can be bargain investment

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The days of blanket industry-wide stock recommendations, particularly in the petroleum industry, are past.

But evaluating individual companies within the industry, even in the generally depressed and tumultuous oil and gas sector, can yield bargains for the long- and short-term investor, says John F. Ryan Jr., vice president and senior energy analyst for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes, Inc. (RPR), Dallas.

A couple of key considerations in selecting an energy stock are the company's financial capability to withstand continued slumping oil and gas prices and its position to benefit when prices begin rising.

Ryan projects that natural gas prices could rebound as early as this winter, based on the fact that during the recent statewide heat wave, when natural gas was burned to meet incremental air conditioning demand, the spot natural gas market tightened considerably and prices jumped as much as $.15 per Mcf during the period.

"If minor fluctuations in demand can have a tightening effect on market prices, we are getting near the turning point in the overall gas supply/demand balance," Ryan notes.

Ryan points to independent producers with 'natural gas leverage' such as Amarillo-based Mesa Limited Partners and Noble Affiliates Inc., Ardmore, Okla., as best able to benefit from the expected changes in gas market conditions. Mesa, Noble and other companies with substantial online shut-in deliverability, plus additional reserves, are considered by RPR to be attractive investments.

Ryan expects oil prices to remain strong but volatile at least until mid-October, when OPEC meets to consider extending the current short-term production cutback agreement. Despite the unstable outlook, RPR cites Exxon, Mobil and Occidental as major oil producers whose stocks hold good potential.

Exxon and Mobil are favored because of their low debt load positions, while Occidental's recommendation comes on the strength of corporate chairman Armand Hammer's dedication to maintaining a high dividend yield for stockholders, Ryan says.

Among gas transporters, RPR leans toward those companies further upstream — with heavier concentrations of gathering system lines — rather than long-line transmission firms. Those lines closer to the wellhead, particularly in those areas with a low density of competing systems will be in a position to take advantage of increasing spot market prices through greater flexibility, he adds.

RPR particularly likes Endevco's stock.

The firm projects that oil prices, while volatile, will remain in the $13 to $20 per barrel range as OPEC gradually regains market share. As this happens, consuming nations such as the U.S. again become vulnerable to production disruptions by the early 1990s, RPR warned in a recent investors' report.

Panhandle Eastern, Grace Drilling plan combined operation

HOUSTON (AP) — Panhandle Eastern Corp. and W.R. Grace & Co. plan to combine their land and inland barge drilling operations into what officials say could be the world's largest rig fleet, officials announced.

Executives at the two companies said Thursday they have agreed in principle to combine operations for efficiency and to reduce overhead costs so they can better compete in the current depressed drilling industry.

Negotiations are still in progress to complete final agreements for the combination of Panhandle Eastern's subsidiary, Dixilyn-Field Drilling Co. with Grace Drilling Co., officials said.

The two companies already have announced a merger of operations between Grace and Panhandle's subsidiary, Brinkerhoff-Signal Inc.

Grace Drilling, with 129 rigs, is headquartered in Oklahoma City while Panhandle's subsidiaries are based in Houston with 63 land rigs and two inland barges. Dixilyn-Field also has 11 offshore rigs that are not included in the joint venture, officials said.

Major banks expected to reduce prime rate

NEW YORK (AP) — Analysts expect the nation's major banks to cut their prime lending rates from the present 8 percent in response to the Federal Reserve Board's 0.5 point cut in the discount rate.

Although several smaller institutions reduced their prime rates to 7.5 percent from 8 percent Thursday, the day after the discount rate cut, the big banks did not.

The Fed reduced the discount rate, the interest it charges on loans to financial institutions, to 5.5 percent from 6 percent, cutting the key rate for the fourth time this year to its lowest since August 1977.

Major U.S. banks generally follow changes in the discount rate with similar changes in the prime, a benchmark used to set the interest charged on a variety of credit.

While prime changes usually are made in conjunction with discount rate changes — often on the same or following business day — they are not always immediate.

The banks generally decline to comment about any impending rate changes, and were tight-lipped about the prime rate.

"We don't forecast when we're going to change it," said Charles Salmans, a spokesman for Chemical Bank in New York. "We announce the change when we announce it."

Smaller institutions that cut their prime rates to 7.5 percent Thursday included Southwest Bank in St. Louis, People's Savings Bank in Bridgeport, Conn., and San Jacinto Savings Association in Houston.

Speculation over the reasons for the big banks' delay ranged from surprise at the timing of the discount rate cut to a reappraisal of how the prime should be structured in light of the loss of tax breaks contained in congressional tax proposals.

South Texas Drilling profits on lower revenue

SAN ANTONIO (SWN) South Texas Drilling & Exploration, Inc. reported revenues for the first six months of 1986 of $419,000, compared to $2,506,000 in the same period last year. Revenues for the three months ended June 30, were $27,000 compared to $1,017,000 in the same period last year.

The company's net earnings for the first six months of 1986 were $1,465,000 ($.36 per share), compared to a net loss of $1,138,000 ($.33 per share), in the same period last year.

The net earnings reflect the completion of the company's debt restructuring program.

"The elimination of debt was an important step for the survival of the company, but continuing depressed conditions of the oil industry will tax to the limit our survival instincts," said Robert R. Marmor, CEO "However, a number of positive developments gives us guarded optimism: the U.S. weekly rig count has stablized, the tentative increase in the price of oil and the probability that the tax reform act may pass shortly and thereby remove a great deal of business uncertainty."

Harken revenue declines with oil prices

DALLAS (SWN) — Harken Oil & Gas, Inc. reported total second quarter revenues of $836,000 compared to $2,025,000 in the 1985 second quarter. The decrease in revenues is due primarily to the decline in oil and gas prices experienced during 1986 which resulted in reduced oil and gas revenues and the $786,000 reduction in drilling revenues due to management's decision to cease drilling activity in this distressed environment.

MC shows largest pre-registration in its history

From Staff Reports

Midland College heads into its final two official days of registration with the largest pre-registration in its history.

Students will register Tuesday and Wednesday for credit courses which begin on Sept. 2.

At the conclusion of pre-registration Thursday, 2,746 persons had signed up for classes. That's 425 more than the 2,321 who pre-registered during 1985's record enrollment.

When late registration ended last year, the head count was an all-time record 3,513 students.

Those who pre-registered will report for registration Tuesday or Wednesday in the Physical Education Building according to times given them as they pre-registered. Hours are from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 4:30 to 8 p.m. Tuesday, and from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 4:30 to 8 p.m. Wednesday.

Persons who didn't pre-register will be processed only between 6 and 7 p.m. Wednesday. Late registration begins Sept. 2.

"Since late registration runs through Sept. 17, we don't have any idea what our final count might be," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

"Pre-registration usually gives us a pretty good indication, but there are a lot of variables which can affect the final total. However, we feel quite pleased by the count at this time."

New college students are scheduled to have their orientations on Monday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Students will meet in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium, then be divided into smaller groups. Each group will have a returning student leader and a faculty member to conduct portions of orientation and a campus tour.

The sophomore student and faculty members will serve as "big brother/big sister" to the new students.

A make-up orientation session is slated for Friday at the same times and location.

Faculty members also return on Monday to begin their academic year.

This begins at 8:30 a.m. in the Student Center with the traditional "President's Breakfast." A general faculty meeting in the Health Sciences Building lecture hall will follow.

During the meeting, College President Dr. Jess Parrish will discuss the college's planned budget and assess the state's revised funding for community colleges.

Faculty members continue their meetings Monday afternoon and Thursday in preparation for the semester's beginning.

"We've been watching the pre-registration figures closely during the past week, in case the count began slowing down," said Dr. Raymond Yell, vice president for instruction.

"But the higher count has continued, so we are making our instructional plans based on a larger enrollment. This includes preparing for larger sections, more sections of the most-requested classes, and the possibility of utilizing extra part-time instructors.

"It's a nice problem to have and one we feel we can handle to the satisfaction of most students...and it's certainly more pleasant to plan for an increase than a decrease," he said.

Yell attributed the anticipated increase to several factors: the Abell-Hanger Foundation scholarships which cover cost of tuition, fees, and books for all 1986 graduates of the three public high schools in the county; unemployed workers seeking new skills or degrees in other fields; economic conditions which necessitate students remaining at home rather than going elsewhere for college; and workers who are concerned about future employment conditions.

The 'stylish' elite

Several leading Midlanders participated in a "style" show Thursday at Green Tree Country Club to help raise funds for the Salvation Army. Among them were Bill Morrow, left, who awaits his turn to go down the isle, and Sara Selber and Judy Priddy, above, who both clown with the crowd. In addition, a trip for two from American Airlines to anywhere in the United States, Canada and Mexico along with $300 was awarded as a door prize. The winner was Mrs. Harry Denton.

Decision allows newspapers, magazines in county jail

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midland County prisoners will be allowed to have newspapers and magazines in their cells after a decision by the Fifth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Before the Aug. 4 court ruling, prisoners were not allowed to have subscriptions to magazines and newspapers because they pose a fire hazard and could be used to stop up plumbing, said County Attorney Mark Dettman.

The new rule probably won't increase the hazard of fires in the jail because prisoners don't have access to matches or lighters, said Capt. Richard Sexton.

"Our only concern over the years was inmate safety and jail fires. We feel there won't be the availability to build up material."

Prisoners will not be allowed to accumulate magazines and newspapers, he said.

Only subscription magazines and newspapers will be allowed because, drugs and other material could be smuggled in too easily through magazines brought in by family members, Dettman said.

Also no pornographic magazines or publications that are a "risk to the jail" will be allowed in the cells, he said.

Before the Aug. 4 ruling, prisoners were only allowed to have law books and jail library books in their cells.

Book owners, unlike the owners of magazines and newspapers, are easier to trace if they are found flushed down the toilet, Dettman said, explaining the county's decision to allow books, but not magazines.

However, in his opinion, 5th Circuit Judge Patrick Higginbotham wrote, "In view of the jail's policy of allowing inmates to possess other material that was flammable and capable of being used to interfere with the plumbing, we hold that the rule is too underinclusive to be upheld under the applicable first amendment test."

The civil rights suit was filed in 1983 by former county prisoner, Stewart Mann, who was held in the county jail for 111 days on robbery charges.

Mann was convicted of robbery in 1984 and was sentenced to 15 years at the Texas Department of Corrections, Dettman said.

Police say charges yet to be filed in auto vandalizing spree

From Staff Reports

Charges have yet to be filed against two Midland men police said went on a spree early Thursday that left at least 25 vehicles damaged, most with smashed windshields and mirrors, head and tail lights.

According to reports, estimated damage to the vehicles was about $9,000.

The men, both 18, were arrested early Thursday by Midland police after the 1986 Cadillac they were traveling in allegedly ran several red lights. Police chased the vehicle, and found a jack handle believed used in the vandalism cases and a .44 caliber revolver. A juvenile who police say also may have participated in the attacks was also taken into custody and is still being questioned.

Charges of criminal mischief, theft, and burglary of an auto are expected to be filed against the men.

A 29-year-old Midland woman is in serious but stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital and is expected to file aggravated assault charges following an argument and fight she had with a man, police said.

According to reports, an ambulance was called to the 1300 block of Pennsylvania Avenue about 5:30 p.m. Thursday, and paramedics found the woman on the porch of the residence bleeding heavily. Police said according to statements the 34-year-old man exchanged punches with the woman. Sometime during the fight a bottle was produced which was apparently broken and used to stab the woman.

In other reports, tools and other items valued at more than $1,000 were reported stolen Thursday from a local business. The complainant, Thomas Shankle, told police three impact wrenches valued at $300, a ratchet and socket set valued at $200, a battery charger valued at $200, a case of refrigerant valued at $200, a battery tester and jumper cables valued at $150, and a drill valued at $60 were stolen from J&K Auto Repair, 606 S. Pecos.

A portable AM-FM cassette player valued at $119 and a window air conditioner valued at $80 were reported stolen late Thursday or early today from a residence in the 400 block of S. Madison Street. The victim, Janett Henry, told police the items were apparently taken sometime between 8 p.m. Thursday and 3:30 a.m. today. Police have a suspect in the burglary, described as a black male, 23 years old, five feet nine inches tall and weighing about 160 pounds.

The Midland County Sheriff's office reported the theft of a trailer valued at $1,500. According to reports, the homemade utility trailer was stolen from Permian Production Equipment, along County Road 128, apparently sometime between 5 p.m. Wednesday and 5 p.m. Thursday.

State-of-art mammogram machines erase exposure worries, officials say

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Though reports show the number of mammograms performed at the Allison Breast Screening Service decreased in June, an official said it was not due to fears of the test itself.

"We do have women come in who've heard these horror stories and think they'll get cancer if they have the test," ABSS mammographer Maryellen Potter said.

"I try to calm them down and explain it's a very simple procedure and remind them it's better to be safe than sorry," she added.

However, a recent Washington University study did indicate older mammogram machines — which emit high doses of radiation — would be responsible for 670 cases of breast cancer in women over 40.

Published this month in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, the study said women under 50 shouldn't have a mammogram — a complete X-ray of the breasts — unless there is evidence of breast cancer in her family history.

Bob Bregant, administrative director of the ABSS, disagreed.

"A woman should begin with a "baseline" mammography when she's between 35 and 40, that provides us with a starting record of her breasts to refer back to in the future," Bregant said.

Thereafter, women should have it done about once a year, he said.

He said the brand new $170,000 mammogram machine at the ABSS, is state-of-the-art and that women who have the $45 test, have nothing to worry about.

Ms. Potter agrees.

"The amount of radiation you're exposed to during the test is about the same as smoking three quarters of one cigarette in your whole life.

"Exposure lasts about seven to 10 seconds each picture and we take a total of four pictures," Ms. Potter said.

Bregant said the patient numbers at the ABSS declined in June as a result of the introduction of the American Cancer Society Breast Self Examination Program which Bregant said inherently limits the capactity of the ABSS.

"When we just did mammograms, it took about 20 minutes a patient.

"But now in addition to having the test done, each patient watches a video teaching them how to examine themselves for tumors. So the procedure lasts a bit longer now, so we can't see as many women each day," Bregant said.

Statistics show in April, the first month of operations, the ABSS saw 191 patients.

The figure jumped to 332 in May and then back down to 291 in June, though 179 self-breast examinations were done in addition to the mammograms that month at the clinic.

Bregant adds that 95 percent of the 814 patients the clinic has seen have been Anglos and 50 percent have been between the ages of 50 and 65-years-old.

He does agree with the Washington University study on the fact women under 35 don't need a mammogram unless there's a strong suspicion of early tumor formation because of family history.

Odessa speaker uncovers stigma of alcoholics' treatment

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Successful treatments of alcoholics will increase when the stigma of alcoholism as a "sin" is replaced by the recognition of it as a disease, said the director of an Austin alcohol treatment center visiting Odessa Thursday.

"Most illnesses had a moral kind of stigma attached to them. The stigma of this disease (alcoholism) is not peculiar. As the stigma goes away, people are more willing to come in for treatment," said Dr. Lawrence Wharton.

Wharton, a medical director at the Faulkner Treatment Center, spoke in Odessa Tuesday at the one-day Alcohol and Drug Training Institute sponsored by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

Although alcoholism was officially recognized by the American Medical Association as a disease in 1966, the view of the disease as bad behavior still lingers, Wharton said.

Alcoholics tend to have a higher level of acetaldehyde — a chemical created in the body as alcohol is metabolized into water. When the acetaldehyde level increases, the pleasant high created by drinking dissipates, so alcoholics have to drink more to keep "high," Wharton said.

Also, as they metabolize liquor, alcoholics produce a byproduct called "Di-hydro-iso-quinoline," or DHIQ, which creates a loss of control over drinking, Wharton said.

"The disease itself is an abnormal metabolic process. Alcohol and drug dependency is no different from metabolic illnesses like diabetes," Wharton said.

In lab tests, rats injected with DHIQ will drink themselves to death, Wharton said.

Children with an alcoholic parent have a one-in-three chance of becoming alcoholics themselves, Wharton said.

And although alcoholism is a genetically determined illness, the responsibility of overcoming it is up to the individual, he said.

"No alcoholic is responsible for being a alcoholic. He just got a bad roll of genes.

"Even though an individual is not responsible for his disease, he's going to be totally responsible for his recovery."

Once an alcoholic seeks treatment, to be successful, family members must be counseled also, Wharton said.

"If we can get the family involved in treatment, our success rate is far better. If we can get people to drop roles that are not healthy for them then we're way ahead," he said.

Convicted killer is seventh executed this year

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Larry Smith, convicted of killing a Dallas convenience store co-manager during a $25 holdup, was put to death by injection early today, the second condemned man to be executed in Texas in 48 hours.

"All I want to do is tell my mother that I love her," Smith said in his final statement. "I also want to tell the other guys on death row to continue their struggle to get off death row."

He was pronounced dead at 12:24 a.m., Attorney General Jim Mattox said.

Smith, 30, from Dawson County in West Texas, was executed for the 1978 robbery-slaying of Mike Mason, who was shot in the back of the head after he said he could not open a store safe.

Smith's brother, Gloster, 28, is serving a life prison term for his participation in the same robbery.

Mason's widow, Marilynn, was across the street from the prison as the execution took place.

"I'm relieved," she said. "But I did cry."

She said she earlier had asked to watch Smith die, but was told corrections department rules barred her presence in the death chamber.

"All I want to do is tell my mother that I love her. I also want to tell the other guys on death row to continue their struggle to get off death row."

— Larry Smith

"There's no logical reason why Mike should be dead," she said of her husband. "The one thing he can't take away is my love for Mike and the time I spent with Mike. He took Mike but can't take away those things."

She said she sat through two trials and three execution dates.

"Every time something comes up, it opens up my husband's grave," she said. "I want to make sure it's closed forever."

Attorneys for the former laborer argued his execution date was set improperly because Smith was informed of it by mail and not in an open court hearing.

The U.S. Supreme Court, however, rejected the last-day plea. Smith's attorney, Craig Washington, decided not to seek a 30-day reprieve from Gov. Mark White, who has never granted such requests in previous capital cases.

The condemned man selected a final meal of steak smothered in gravy, french fries, lemon pie and a Coke.

Smith, who had refused requests for interviews in the weeks before his execution, became the seventh Texas inmate to die this year and the 17th since the state resumed the death penalty in 1982. The 17 made Texas the leader — one ahead of Florida — among states which have carried out capital punishment since the Supreme Court allowed executions to resume in 1976.

Smith's execution came just 48 hours after Randy Lynn Woolls was put to death early Wednesday for the 1979 robbery-slaying of a drive-in movie cashier in Kerrville.

Another death row inmate, Chester Lee Wicker, faces execution early Tuesday for the 1980 death of a woman who was abducted from Beaumont and buried alive on a beach near Galveston.

Mattox said it was likely Wicker also would die.

Smith was 22 when he was arrested for the Feb. 2, 1978, robbery-slaying of Mason, 26, who was gunned down during the 3 a.m. holdup of a 7-Eleven store he co-managed.

According to testimony, Smith and his brother demanded Mason turn over money in a cash drawer and a safe. Mason surrendered the $25 in the register but said he could not open the safe.

As the clerk lay on the floor face down, he was shot in the back of the head. Smith also was identified by Fred Norris, one of Mason's coworkers.

"The man is a cold-blooded killer," State District Judge Jack Hampton, who set the execution date, said. "We could try the case 10 times and we'd get the same result."

Smith was a parolee from Colorado prison where he served three years of a 20- to 30-year sentence for robbing and shooting a couple outside a photography studio.

Mattox, asked about Mrs. Mason's request to watch Smith die, said it was not a good idea and against the rules anyway.

"This is an extremely difficult and emotional time," he said. "I would not recommend it. I can understand this woman's concern but she might regret it."

Rule: Ector County tax collector cannot stash excess payments

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Ector County Tax Assessor-Collector cannot place excess tax payments into a separate account and use the money to make up under-paid property tax, the attorney general ruled Thursday.

Ector County Attorney Gary Garrison asked for an attorney general's opinion to decide if the county could establish a "tax clearance" account.

Using excess property tax payments to bridge the gap caused by people who do not pay their taxes or do not pay in full is unconstitutional, Attorney General Jim Mattox decided.

Ex-president shocked at references to Clements

AUSTIN (AP) — Former President Gerald Ford says he was surprised and shocked when the Texas Democratic Party chairman sought to link former Gov. Bill Clements' stock holdings with Libya and terrorism.

Calling it a "desperate political attack" on Clements, Ford said Thursday, "I feel so strongly about this that I have offered, and Bill has accepted, to campaign in Texas on his behalf. I'm clearing my calendar and I'm coming to Texas."

But Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle stood by his remarks, saying neither Clements, the GOP gubernatorial candidate, nor his defenders is answering the key question.

"Why don't they answer the simple question? Why doesn't he (Clements) sell all his Schlumberger stock or, as a principal stockholder, get his company out of Libya?" asked Slagle.

Slagle, a Sherman lawyer, told a news conference Wednesday that Clements should rid himself of $25.7 million worth of stock in Schlumberger Ltd., a multi-national oil well services company he said does business in Libya.

"All I asked him to do was what the president asked all Americans to do — quit doing business with the Libyans. They don't have money to buy weapons from the Soviets or export terrorism if they don't have that oil revenue," Slagle said in a phone interview Thursday.

The reaction from Republicans was heated.

Henry Kissinger, secretary of state while Clements was deputy defense secretary for Ford, said Clements was a tough opponent of terrorism.

"Gov. Clements was, while in the Defense Department, an implacable foe of terrorism in general and (Libyan leader Moammar) Gadhafi in particular. He remains so today," Kissinger said.

Clements said Slagle's charge was designed to help Gov. Mark White's re-election effort against Clements, who was ousted by the Democrat in 1982.

"My opponent's desperate strategy of trying to link me with Gadhafi, Libya and terrorism does not surprise me. It does, however, disappoint me," Clements said.

Added U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, "To question Bill Clements' patriotism...is patently absurd. Bob Slagle and Mark White are on the verge of losing an election, and this incredible attack simply highlights their desperate situation."

White had little to say about the charges Slagle made.

"I haven't any remarks to make about that. I am unaware of any of his investments and don't have any comment to make about that," White said.

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, called the move "a sleazy thing to do," and said Clements' business interests shouldn't be an issue in the gubernatorial race.

While acknowledging Schlumberger does "a small amount of business there (Libya)," Bashur said, "It's my understanding Schlumberger is not an American company, it's multi-national. They do business in some 100 countries around the world.

"If President Reagan thought it was in the best interest of the United States to flatten Libya, Bill Clements would be the first to stand and cheer," Bashur said.

Schlumberger spokesman Jim Smith in Houston said he didn't know how much business the company did in Libya, but confirmed it does have activity in the Arab nation.

"They have a Schlumberger subsidiary that works in Libya. We have been working in Libya ever since they started looking for oil there," Smith said.

Tattoo artist says of etching images in skin, 'why not'?

By ARLENE BATTISTA

GALVESTON (AP) — Inside the shop a hefty, bald man with a bushy beard sat at a picnic table that almost filled the small room. There was just enough room for a huge motorcycle and an 11-foot python, which slithered about in a glass cage.

The ambience would fit nicely into a Hollywood script calling for a tattoo parlor. But the stereotype didn't advance much further. Unlike Hollywood images, this 33-year-old tattoo artist was a husband, a father, and a man proud of his artistic talents.

"If someone comes in here really drunk, I won't fool with them," Mike Gill said. "They won't stand still and they get 'skin slip,' so it's hard to put the ink into them."

Concrete reasons for etching an indelible image on the skin are hard to come by. "Why not?" Gill responded, drawing a parallel between tattooing and ice cream. "It's one of those things you either love or hate, but once you do it, you fall in love."

Most people don't stop with one, he added, although there are some notable exceptions. Winston Churchill's mother, for instance, sported a tattoo on her wrist, and Barry Goldwater has one on his left hand. Rumor has it that Cher once showed hers on the David Letterman show, so presumably its location isn't too secretive.

Women constitute the majority of business at the Island Tattoo Studio, Gill said. Butterflies, roses and unicorns are favorites among females, and such private areas as thighs, breasts and buttocks remain popular. Gill, however, recommends the shoulder, as the skin there is tougher and heals more easily.

Men generally advocate public display of tattoos and frequently sport them on the arms or chest, he continued. The Grim Reaper and their eagles rank among their favorite tattoos, while anything with flowers ranks among the lowest. The infamous "Mom" tattoo has lost popularity since its heyday in the 1940s.

Gill doesn't practice his art in the small room with the snake, but in a large back room, he explained. A barber's chair without arms is comfortable for the customer, yet it allows the artist a full range of motion.

The basic tool of the trade is an electric gun with a removable needle, he said. A single needle is used to outline the image, and an eight-pointed needle is used to apply color.

The needles are kept in germicide, which kills everything except the hepatitis germ, Gill said. Before being used the needles are sterilized in a Speedclave machine.

"Don't let anybody kid you. It hurts," he said. "A lot of people say the outlining hurts the most, because after that the area is numb. I say it all hurts."

Women, he added, generally handle the pain better than men.

"I've had soldiers, merchant seaman and motorcycle men pass out on me," Gill said. "Only one woman has asked me to stop, and I've never had a woman pass out."

Pain, though, hasn't altered Gill's love of tattoos. At the age of 18 he counted 50 tattoos on his body. He's since stopped counting.

Gill's first tattoo came at the age of 11, and was a product of his own hand. He became a pro at "hand-sticking," and graduated to the electric gun at age 14.

A small tattoo costs about $25 and takes approximately 15 minutes to complete, Gill said. Larger ones require an hourly charge of $60. Gill specializes in coverups, or etching a new design over an old tattoo, thereby completely changing the image.

There are medical techniques for removing tattoos, but all involve some degree of scarring, said Dr. Edgar B. Smith, dermatologist at the University of Texas Medical Branch.

Tattooing calls for injecting color deep into the skin, thereby changing the pigmentation, Smith said. To remove the tattoo, the pigmented skin must be destroyed or removed.

The newest technology in tattoo removal involves the use of lasers, which burns away the pigmented areas, he said. Perhaps the easiest and surest way of removing the tattoo is by literally cutting away the image and pulling together the skin on either side of the wound, he said.

"It's not like deciding to buy a Cadillac, because someday that will end up in the junkyard," Gill said. "A tattoo will go to the grave with you."

Broker offers abductors 'moon' to gain freedom

EDINBURG (AP) — A real estate broker, claiming he was held at gunpoint for three days in Mexico City, says he promised his abductors "the moon" to gain his freedom.

Joe Ramon, 51, of Edinburg, said he was lured to Mexico City last weekend to present a real estate proposal to potential investors. Instead, he said, he was abducted, threatened at gunpoint, handcuffed and told to have family members come up with $60,000 or he would be killed.

He said he escaped after convincing the four men that he would send them money from the United States.

"I convinced them...I was worth more alive than dead," Ramon told a news conference Thursday. "I did everything they wanted me to do. I promised them the moon to get over here."

Ramon said Mexican clients made up about 30 percent of his business and that his pledge to avoid Mexico will hurt.

"The only mistake that I made was I went over there without knowing who it was I was supposed to see," Ramon said. "I don't ever want to go back to Mexico. I will not go back to Mexico."

Ramon said he waited until Thursday to tell his story as as to not hamper law enforcement investigations.

Ramon, a real estate broker for 15 years, said he continues to receive telephone calls from the man who wants the $10,000 Ramon promised him.

"I feel that everyone should be aware of the abuses that are happening across the border and take all necessary and reasonable precautions to insure that they do not experience the pain, frustration, harassment and overall tragedy I experienced these last few days," Ramon said.

Last week, Ramon said he received numerous calls from a man in Mexico City. The man wanted Ramon to give a real estate presentation to potential purchasers from Mexico, Ramon said.

He said the man told him he had seen Ramon's billboard advertisements and telephone number.

Ramon, who regularly traveled to Mexico, went to Mexico City on Aug. 15. The next day, Saturday, he received a phone call at his hotel from the man who said he was sending a chauffeur to take him to meet the potential real estate buyers.

Instead, he said two men took him to a shack on the outskirts of Mexico City and threatened him.

"When we arrived at the location, one man held a pistol to my ribs and the other placed a knife on my throat. They told me they were going to kill me," Ramon said.

Housefly plays dangerous role in human disease transmission

First part of a series

Most people are unaware of, or complacent to, the potentially dangerous position the housefly plays in human disease transmission. Insecticides have been one of the main contributors to this false sense of security. However, because of increasing resistance to insecticides and the high costs associated with insecticide development, the housefly could rapidly become a scourge to the nation's health.

Due to the fact that this insect can fly and is omnivorous, it can move quickly from highly-contaminated disease areas to infect other areas in its flight path. To the fly, a sewage-filled barnyard is as acceptable a feeding place as a piece of pie or glass of milk. For this reason, coupled with its attachment and dependency on human developments and activities, it's easy to see why the housefly is medically important to man.

The fly's relationship with man would be no serious problem were it not for pathogenic organisms carried by flies and spread between humans. The fly has been proven to transmit pathogenic protozoa, bacteria, viruses, worms, rickettsia, and funguses.

The fly's role in food poisoning is one of transmission of bacteria to food. The food poisoning danger lies not only in the amount of bacteria the fly deposits, but in the bacteria's growth potential.

For example, theoretically, if a fly deposited one bacterium on a container of egg custard, at the end of 24 hours this one bacterium would have multiplied to 280 trillion — more than enough to cause food poisoning symptoms. Unfortunately, when a fly contaminates food, it is never with just one bacterium, but with thousands.

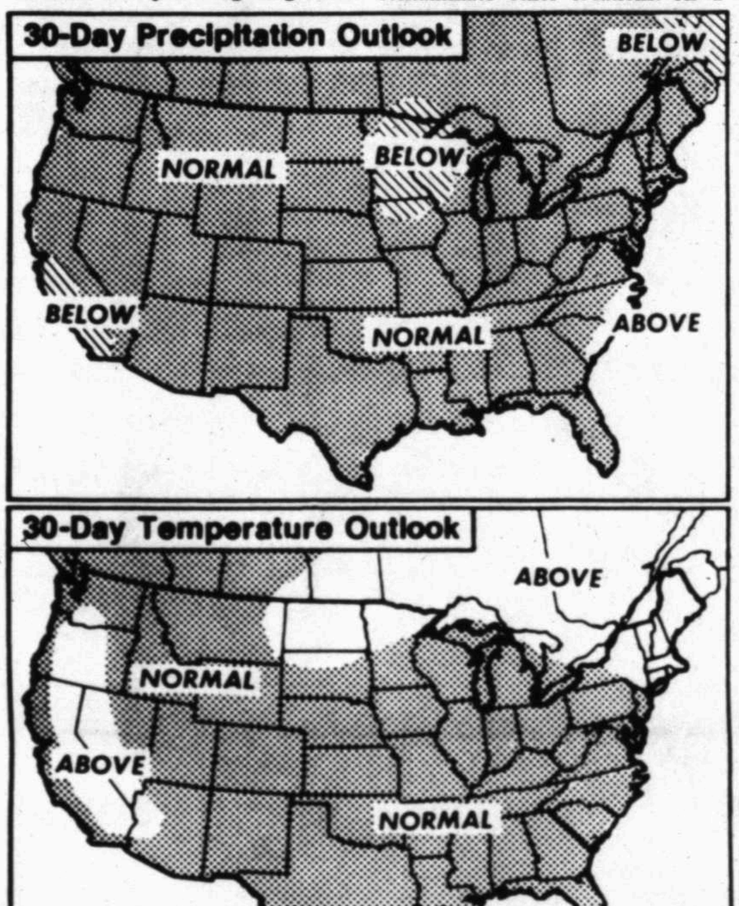

Establishing the major role of the housefly as a disease carrier is not accomplished unless we point out two ways the fly acts as a perfect microbial dispenser — first mechanically, and second, biologically.

First, the fly's structure and size makes it the perfect mechanical microbe dispenser. Its size allows it to crawl or move through small cracks to feed in homes. Externally it is covered with thousands of hair-like spines on its head, thorax, abdomen, and legs. To further complicate things, it has sticky pads called pulvilli on its feet. With this external body conformation, the fly can pick up and carry many pathogens and contaminate other locations. As a rule, the microbes picked up on its body surface and sticky feet live for only a few hours, especially if exposed to sunlight.

The second method, or biological disease transmission, has been considered the chief means by which flies spread infection. The insect has sponging and sucking mouthparts which force it to regurgitate saliva, stomach and crop contents upon the food its consumes. In this feeding process, the food is softened and/or dissolved sufficiently to be ingested. If pathogens happen to be present, they will be taken into the insect's digestive and excretory system. The insect's crop and stomach become a microbe concentrator and reservoir. Digested food and microbes pass from the stomach of the fly into the intestines, and waste accumulates in the rectum and is expelled. The fly defecates every four to five minutes, thus contaminating surfaces and materials with high concentrations of disease-causing microbes.

Congressional pitch to sell farm products abroad 'humming along'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new sales pitch invented by Congress to sell U.S. farm products overseas is humming right along, although the Agriculture Department says it's too early to see much result.

Under the program, private commodity groups serve as the main promoters, with USDA picking up half the cost. The operation is the Targeted Export Assistance Program, or TEAP, which was included in last year's Food Security Act.

The law says USDA can spend $110 million a year on the program through 1988, and $325 million annually in the two succeeding years.

Other assistance programs also have been fortified with additional money or new direction, including credit packages for the purchase of U.S. farm products, ranging from apples to wheat.

In many cases, the projects are designed to help counter what U.S. officials consider unfair trade restrictions and subsidies by foreign competitors, particularly the European Community.

For years, the USDA has had a special "cooperator" program in which dozens of commodity and trade organizations share the expense of promoting commodities in foreign countries. The new TEA program refines this further by targeting parts of the world where specific agricultural markets are sought.

More than $50 million has been allocated to a score of TEA projects, according to the department's Foreign Agricultural Service.

For example, last month two projects totaling $1.1 million were announced to help expand wheat sales in developing countries. A $500,000 program in Colombia will promote U.S. wheat. In another project, $600,000 will be used to make wheat flour for distribution to bakeries to demonstrate U.S. wheat qualities.

One $1.4 million project calls for expansion of sales of Washington state apples, particularly to the United Kingdom, Taiwan, Malaysia, Hong Kong, Norway and Saudi Arabia. The goal is to offset the European Community's subsidized exports of apples to Scandinavia and the Arabian Peninsula.

Still another project, allocated at $653,000, is intended to expand sales of U.S. wood products to the United Kingdom, specifically "to help counter the effects of unfair trade practices on exports of U.S. wood products and inaccurate publicity about wood-frame houses," the agency said.

Dry peas and lentils will be promoted in a $2.5 million program to expand exports of those commodities to the European Community, Colombia and India.

Cattle herd rebuilding 'may be under way'

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department economists say cattle production may be ending its latest tailspin and that some herd rebuilding may be under way.

But it takes nine months of pregnancy before a cow has a calf, and another 18 months or two years before the newborn calf can grow into beef roasts, steaks and hamburger for American consumers.

A new outlook report by the department's Economic Research Service noted that the inventory of cattle and calves last Jan. 1 had dropped to 105.5 million head, the lowest in 23 years.

Further, on July 1, the inventory was down 4 percent from a year earlier, the smallest for any summer since the mid-year figures were begun in 1973.

If the cattle herd continues to decline at a 4 percent annual rate, analysts said the inventory next Jan. 1 could be around 100 million head. Not since the early 1960s has the U.S. cattle inventory been as small as it is right now. The peak was 132 million in 1975.

Always cyclical, with up years and down years, the current sell-off was stimulated by many factors: low market prices, relatively high feed costs, heavy debt among many producers and lagging consumer demand.

There have been some improvements. Record feed supplies have eased production costs, and the cutbacks by hog farmers have helped take the edge off competition from pork.

One result has been a surge of new cattle going into feedlots for marketing over the next few months. Last week the USDA reported feedlot placemements in the major beef states in July at 1.54 million head, up 43 percent from a year earlier. It was the heaviest July placement of cattle in feeding pens since 1978.

The outlook report said that while the liquidation of cattle herds may be nearing an end, inventories are expected to continue declining through 1987 and that increased production is unlikely before 1988-89, at least.

"Although the mid-year inventory does not contain state data, it appears that producers in some areas have already stabilized their herds or perhaps begun to expand them," the report said.

Most of the country has abundant forage supplies and another bumper hay crop, but the Southeast drought has had a major impact on the cattle situation.

"Livestock sales in this region have been running at near capacity as parched pastures and dwindling hay stocks forced cattle on the market early," the report said. "However, prospects of reduced cattle and beef supplies have strengthened demand for cattle to be placed on pastures in other areas."

Leaf scorch a condition of shade trees, shrubs in area

Leaf scorch is a non-infectious condition of shade trees and shrubs, especially those not well adapted to the dry, low humid conditions of West Texas. Trees such as maple, sycamore, magnolia, ash and, occasionally, oak are affected. Under the right conditions many other trees, including fruit and nut varieties, may be affected.

The following are symptoms of leaf scorch:

1. It will first be noticed as yellowing or bronzing of tissue between the vein or along the margin of leaves.
2. This symptom usually follows drying winds and bright sunshine of extremely hot days.
3. Later, these leaves may appear dry and scorched and may even drop off. The tree usually does not die; however, if there are other problems such as disease, nematodes, etc., it could lead to death.
4. Usually appears on single limbs, or on one side of the tree (usually the south or the west side).

In most cases, all leaves on the same branch are affected more or less uniformly. Frequently, only one side of the tree is affected — the side exposed to the sun or drying winds. Occasionally, individual trees are severely damaged, while those of the same species in the immediate vicinity are unaffected. This can be due to the seedling variation or, more probably, due to variations in soil and moisture conditions.

Leaf scorch is caused by the failure of the tree roots to supply enough water to leaves at a critical time, usually in dry, hot, droughty weather. A great amount of water evaporates from the leaf surface during hot, windy, dry weather.

If soil is deficient or the root system is damaged, the exposed leaves actually dry out and scorch.

Accumulations of salts from the irrigation water in the root zone can interfere with the uptake of moisture by the roots and result in scorch. The same holds true for trees whose roots have been partly removed or covered with impervious materials like asphalt or concrete paving. Soil that drains excessively (course-textured sands) can contribute to the scorch problem. Leaf sucking insects also drain moisture and can be a cause.

Leaf scorch cannot be corrected once it appears, but injury can be kept to a minimum by improving the tree's general condition.

1. If the tree has a permanently suppressed or injured root system, prune out some of the branches to maintain an even balance between top and roots.
2. Mulching the surface to improve the soil's water-holding capacity and water liberally during hot weather. Two applications of one inch of water per week may be better than a two-inch soaking a week during hot, windy conditions due to low water-holding capacity of sandy soils.
3. Watch for and control insects.
4. Leach soluble salts from the soil every six to eight weeks by applying four to six inches of water at a time to flush water below the root zone.

Composer's keyboard brings certain celebration of senses

By GARY SHULTZ

IRVING (AP) — His long, nimble fingers bridge more than an octave on the keyboard. His hands glide over the ivories with the fluidity of a slow-motion scene in a Sam Peckinpah western.

They stop. An index finger settles on the key that should provide a middle C. But surprise — the sound is that of crunching potato chips — so light, so crunchy you can almost taste them.

The finger slides down the keyboard, stops and settles again. Again, the sound of a potato chip but in a much lower tone: like Godzilla stepping on a minibus.

James Neel flashes an impish grin and begins to play, one hand on a piano-like keyboard, the other on a computer keyboard. Clinking wine glasses, clucking chickens, trumpets, violins, grand pianos and the mournful English horn — the sounds tumbling together in catchy tunes.

A gifted introvert who has performed with rock groups, swing bands and jazz ensembles, Neel comes alive at the keyboards, producing a wide range of musical numbers — some suitable for television commercials, others appropriate for live renditions of the Earth's creation.

"I'm the only one in this area with a Synclavier Digital Music System," he says.

That's one of the reasons officials at Oral Roberts University sought out Neel when they were looking for music and sound effects appropriate for an exhibit depicting the major events of the Bible.

Neel has composed music for the Sesquicentennial celebration at Fair Park, public television's "Where the Heart Is" and "Mending of the Mind," and numerous industrial films.

He's the piano player for the "Mr. Telephone" commercials and the bottle clanker in the Lone Star beer commercials. He has created the background music for MBank, Lincoln Hotel, U.S. Home and Sewell Village Cadillac commercials.

As he works the keys and the sounds swell from the synthesizer, it is easy to imagine this machine replacing the horns, clarinets, drums and other instruments of today's orchestras.

"That's a bit harsh," Neel says. "I think the symphony orchestra will always be there. They perform the greatest works of western civilization.

"But as far as commercial music or music where there is no history, it's every man for himself. The kids who are growing up right now, who are cutting their teeth on on this kind of equipment, are going to take the idea of music and sound farther than we can imagine today."

Neel sees himself as a composer caught between the past and the future, someone who grew up playing trumpet, saxophone, flute and piano, who knows the feel of the instruments and is intimate with their idiosyncrasies.

"When I play a woodwind patch (on the synthesizer) or a trumpet patch, I know what it's supposed to sound like or feel like because I have played them," he says. "Imagine what it's going to be like for someone who doesn't even know what it's supposed to sound like. Imagine playing trumpet on a keyboard and never having heard a real one."

But does he still feel like a composer? After all, a small room in a North Irving office building is not the same as an auditorium filled with musicians wearing tuxedos or black dresses.

"Oh, more so," Neel says without hesitation. "Here I have greater variety. The imagination's the limit. When I used to sit down at my piano and write a score, I had to be more conservative because I don't want to wind up with a product where people had spent thousands of dollars for something I later decided didn't sound right."

Woman's cold irons rarer gifts than gold

WAELDER, Texas (AP) — They call Carol Walker the "Iron Lady."

She's not one of those mega-muscled women weightlifters who spend their days pumping bar bells at the gym. Quite the contrary. Still, you could say she has a rather pressing interest in heavy metal. Indeed, her focus gives a whole new meaning to the phrase "make it burn."

Mrs. Walker began collecting antique irons 13 years ago, after stumbling across a "sad" iron that had belonged to her mother. One of the earliest forerunners of today's iron, the sad, or flat iron, basically is a chunk of shaped metal with a handle.

"I decided to use it for a bookend," says Mrs. Walker, displaying the blackened, paint-splattered relic that doesn't begin to compare to the beauties she's collected since. "Well, that just got me started. I needed more irons for bookends."

She began scavenging antique shops, shows and auctions, fascinated by the wide variety of irons she encountered.

"When I had collected about 20, I figured I had every kind of iron made," she said. "Then, at an antique show, I found this book, 'The Evolution of the Sad Iron.' When I saw all the different types I still hadn't found, I just went crazy."

Mrs. Walker has been collecting full-steam since, browsing shops and shows whenever she can, keeping up with advertisements in antique magazines.

She and her husband, Jimmy, occasionally take trips specifically aimed at iron acquisition, and have traveled all over America in their quest for fire.

"Texas is pretty short on irons," she says. "I've found some of the more simple ones here, but as I've gotten more advanced I've had to look in other places."

"Many American irons were junked for scrap metal during World War II," says Jimmy Walker, who seems to know almost as much about irons as his wife. An artist who paints using "absolute realism," Walker often finds objects for his still lifes while on iron-hunting junkets.

Mrs. Walker also corresponds by telephone and mail with dealers and other collectors around the world. Though relatively few in number, especially when compared to numismatists and philatelists (exotic words for coin and stamp collectors), antique iron aficionados represent a tightly knit group.

They even have their own quarterly newsletter, wittily dubbed "Pressing Matters."

Perhaps it was destiny that Mrs. Walker should collect old irons. She was, after all, born on a Tuesday, the day of the week traditionally alotted to wrinkle-reducing ("Wash on Monday, iron on Tuesday," Mrs. Walker says in a sing-song voice). Because now more than 1,100 antique irons fill the couple's home in Waelder, located 80 miles east of San Antonio.

Their abode stands as a veritable monument to ironing.

Visitors are transported back to the days when housewives cooked their own starch and Polly Esther was just a woman's name. Every inch of available space has been devoted to irons. There are irons in antique display cases in the living room, irons on every table and counter top.

White shelves cover the walls of a den area, where irons are displayed level by level, like shoes in a shoe store. Strolling through the home, one is hard-pressed to find a single nook or cranny uninhabited by irons. One could say the house is, well, iron-clad.

"There's no room for books anymore," says Mrs. Walker, gesturing to a handsome wooden bookcase in the hall. "The irons have taken over."

Whatever remaining space is occupied by Mrs. Walker's antique kitchen utensil collection, trivet (antique iron rest) collection, iron heaters, miniature stoves, shadow boxes filled with old knick-knacks, iron-theme postcards and a coffee mug collection.

While some would say Mrs. Walker has too many you-know-whats in the fire, she defends her pack-rat tendencies.

"I like these things around me. I can't imagine not having them in my house. It would be so vacant-looking," she says.

Her collection starts with irons dating as far back as the early 1800s, including several U.S. Patent Office models, and stops at the early 1940s.

She has a few rudimentary electric irons, the kind that plugged into lightbulb sockets, but keeps them in a rather out-of-view back hall. She even has a few fuel-powered models, the handles of which are a tad scorched.

"Women used to iron by the backdoor with these, so if they caught on fire they could just throw them out," offers Walker.

As could be expected, Mrs. Walker receives many iron-motif presents from friends at Christmas and on her birthday. A frilly, lace curtain decorated with iron designs hangs in the den. There are framed pictures of little children ironing and animals doing laundry.

But while her home is chocked-full of objets d'iron, it has neither the clutteredness of a junk shop nor the coldness of a museum. It is a neat and cozy place. The only time Mrs. Walker bemoans her hobby is twice a year, when she must conduct a thorough, three-day dusting. "It's hit and miss the rest of the time."

A native of Buda, Texas, Mrs. Walker is prone to using comfortable, small-town exprssions like "li'l ole" and "itty bitty." With a patience found only in the truly dedicated, she explains the evolution of irons.

It is postulated that our prehistoric ancestors rubbed stones over their animal hide outfits to keep them prim and tidy-looking.

Around the eighth century B.C., the Vikings, a notoriously image-conscious bunch, achieved that polished, put-together look by rubbing their clothes with animal bones.

Other non-heated appliances followed, such as smoothing boards, linen presses and glass "irons." In Europe they invented the "mangler," a long box containing rocks through which material was fed. The device looks as gruesome as it sounds.

Then someone discovered that heat made it easier to get the wrinkles out of clothes, and the ironing world was rocked.

The Moody Blues

Moody Blues playing to their strengths again

NEW YORK (AP) — Some writers have looked down their noses at the Moody Blues, calling their music "pomp rock" and saying it weaves majestic sounds with pretentious lyrics.

However, a recent Rolling Stone review of the group's latest LP, "The Other Side of Life," puts it somewhat more kindly: The album, the review said, "plays to the Moodys' longstanding musical strengths: luscious symphonic textures; rich, stately melodies, and densely overlaid vocal arrangements."

"The Moodys for a lot of people are a very personal kind of thing," said singer-guitarist-songwriter Justin Hayward, who joined the 22-year-old British group with bassist John Lodge just before "Nights in White Satin," one of the group's greatest hits, in 1967.

The song was from the landmark "Days of Future Passed" LP, which was recorded with the London Symphony and regarded by many as pretentious.

"A lot of people discovered us through radio and concerts, not through hype and pictures of the guys everywhere. We've never been rammed down everybody's throat. We wanted to let the music speak."

The Moodys began a tour in the United States in June and will be performing though October. "The Other Side of Life" reached the Top 10 on the best-selling charts in July as did the single, "Your Wildest Dreams."

Songs on the current LP have a harder edge than previous tunes, Hayward said in an interview. "There's not so much icing on the cake, layering over the top, and more emphasis on the rhythm track. The type of songs is still the same."

The Moodys never tire of singing their old tunes, especially their greatest hit. "We never get tired of playing 'Nights in White Satin.' It means such a lot to a lot of people. It's the most wonderful thing in my life to be able to share that feeling," Hayward said.

"I can remember where I was when I wrote it. I had a bedsitter in Bayswater, only one room and a cupboard which was a kitchen. It expressed a lot of emotions I had to get out. I was at the end of a big love affair.

"We recorded it for BBC2 on a Friday lunchtime. They aired it at Saturday lunchtime. We were in a van driving up the M1 and listened to it on the radio. It was the first time we thought, 'This is something.'

"The record company didn't want to release it as a single. They said it was too long, 4½ minutes, had a slow, boring flute bit in the middle and would never be a hit."

The Moody Blues came together in Birmingham, England, in May 1964. Their second single was a big hit, "Go Now." In 1970, the group earned five gold LPs. Their first No. 1 LP in the United States was "Seventh Sojourn" in 1972 shortly before the group split for solo careers. The Moodys regrouped and came out with the gold LP, "Long Distance Voyager," in 1981.

"I thought we were crazy at the time, splitting up," said Hayward. "We were at our peak everywhere. Total madness, I thought. Looking back now, it was the best thing we ever did. ...We came back fresh, having worked with a lot of different people, with new ideas.

"The record company released a greatest hits album, 'Caught Live & Five,' in 1977. It was our five attempts to a follow-up single to 'Nights in White Satin,' we thought didn't work plus live concerts we also thought didn't work.

"We got together again in September 1977. We knew maybe two years up front of that, before any of us had made any solo records, that we were going to get back together.

Hayward, Lodge, flutist Ray Thomas and drummer Graeme Edge — both original members — reunited. Keyboardist Mike Pinder, also an original member, decided not to and was replaced by Patrick Moraz, who'd played with Yes.

Their last album was "The Present," released in 1983, which had no big hits. "There were some lovely songs on it," Hayward said. "I think we were looking too much inside ourselves and not looking out the window at the world when we were making it.

Goldblum loved 'The Fly' as kid, now it's his most important role

ENTERTAINMENT

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jeff Goldblum, who made his New York stage debut in "Two Gentlemen of Verona" and won critical praise in such films as "The Big Chill" and "The Right Stuff," now has his most important role, as a fly.

"The Fly" is 20th Century-Fox's new version of the 1958 camp classic that starred Vincent Price and David Hedison, the latter as a scientist who exchanges heads with a fly. Goldblum takes the Hedison role in the new version, directed by David Cronenberg ("The Dead Zone") and produced by the Brooksfilm company of Mel Brooks ("Blazing Saddles").

"I loved 'The Fly' when I was a kid, and I've seen it again and again on television," Goldblum recalled in an interview. "I saw a lot of Vincent Price movies, but then, I always had a taste for the bizarre. I used to love reading Ripley's Believe It or Not, with all its wild and crazy facts.

"When they sent the new script to me, I liked it from the start. It was different from the first film, and I felt the differences justified a remake.

"I saw a test screening of the movie, and I was amazed at the reaction. It's not campy, but it does have a sense of humor in a subtle kind of way. The people were laughing along with it, then they got caught up in the suspense. The ending is delightfully appalling, so that the audience is horrified. One person even jumped up and screamed, 'No — not that!' "

Goldblum, 33, delighted in recounting how he as scientist Seth Brundle misfires on a teleportation experiment (transforming identity from one animal to another): "He doesn't know that the fly's genes are growing inside him, and he begins to have peculiar symptoms, like a craving for sugar and an insatiable sexual appetite."

The actor shrugged off any prospect that "The Fly" might type him in the way that Vincent Price was pegged as a horror-film specialist. "I'm not worried about becoming known as 'Mr. Fly,' " he said. "I've always done a variety of things, and I plan to continue. I like to act."

No wonder. Acting has come to him with consummate ease. He skipped all the cliches about waiting on tables and making TV commercials while struggling for roles.

Jeff Goldblum grew up in a Pittsburgh suburb knowing that he wanted to be an actor but not doing much about it. It wasn't fashionable for boys to consider acting, and he never entered school plays. But unbeknownst to his colleagues, he took six-week summer drama courses at Carnegie-Mellon University.

"None of my family was in show business," said Goldblum. "My father's father was an upholsterer and a candy shop owner. My father became a doctor, and he said that he once looked into a drama class at Carnegie-Mellon but decided the other students were more talented. My mother was encouraged by a high school play in which she was 'pure quicksilver.' But she never pursued it."

Was there consternation in the Goldblum house when Jeff announced he was going to pursue acting in New York instead of college?

"Not really. They told me to go for it."

Goldblum, whose 6-foot-4 frame and hawk-like face makes him look like a latter-day Ichabod Crane, enrolled at the famed Neighborhood Playhouse under Sandford Meisner. He was halfway through the two-year course when Joseph Papp cast him in a minor role in "Two Gentlemen of Verona." He finished the course, then scored as the crazy piano player in the off-Broadway "El Grande de Coca Cola."

"Then by a stroke of luck, Robert Altman saw me in 'El Grande' and gave me small roles in 'California Split' and 'Nashville,' " he said.

Goldblum followed with a series of memorably offbeat characters: the antic Californian who forgot his mantra in "Annie Hall"; the neurotic actor in "Next Stop, Greenwich Village"; the impoverished rock music critic in "Between the Lines"; the harried disco owner in "Thank God, It's Friday"; the poet-turned-pod in "Invasion of the Body Snatchers."

Perhaps his most memorable role came as the ex-radical reporter for People magazine in "The Big Chill."

THIS YEAR'S MOST ARRESTING COMEDY!

Sculptor molds bread into creations, dubbed 'dean of Paris doughboys'

PARIS (AP) — Horses, camels, rabbits and donkeys pulling carts fill the windows and line the walls of Rene-Gerard Saint-Ouen's bakery. Bread is more than the staff of life for the sculptor, who molds his dough into fanciful shapes without forgetting bread's more elemental appeal.

"I love dough; I love to touch it," said Saint-Ouen in an interview at his shop, surrounded by his menagerie of bread creations.

His creature sculptures are interspersed with intricately designed bicycles and are crowned by a giant tortoise, sculpted eight years ago and still hugging the wall above the pantry.

Saint-Ouen and his assistants start work each day at 3 a.m., taking five hours to make bread the old-fashioned way with unrefined flour, as little yeast as possible and no chemical additives.

The sculptures are edible, unlike the flour and water versions that decorate some bakery windows.

He has little use for the standard baguette as it is mass-produced in France these days, hallowed though it is as a symbol of the nation like the beret or the Bastille.

"The French have more money now and eat less bread," he said. "Consequently, the quality of bread is not what it used to be."

Doughy animals decorate windows in many Paris bakeries, but Saint-Ouen, who began sculpting bread in 1963, says he was the first to do it and emphasizes that his creations alone are edible.

He's been dubbed the "dean of the Paris doughboys" by Passion magazine, and has attracted the attention of bakers from Asia to Latin America.

"Here, this is nearly a bread museum. So all the bakers who pass through Paris come to see me," he said.

Nieman-Marcus once used Saint-Ouen's bread to decorate its Dallas store and his products will be exhibited in Berlin this fall.

Saint-Ouen is currently sculpting a farm and a transport motif to decorate two hotels on French highways.

Bread as decor likely would have scandalized the average Frenchman not many decades ago.

"Bread is sacred in France," said Saint-Ouen. "It was more so before. You didn't throw it away."

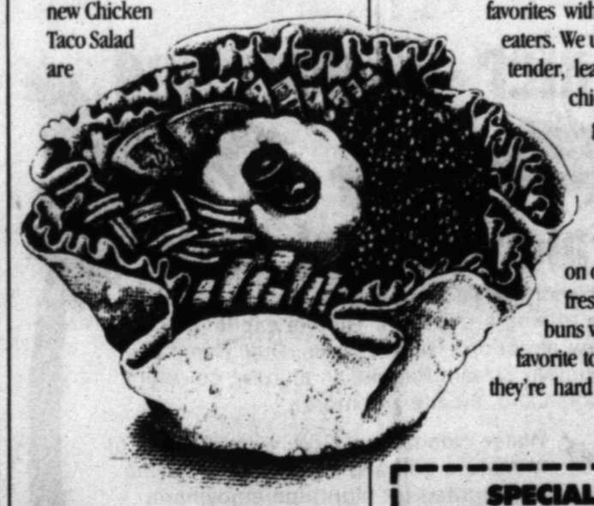

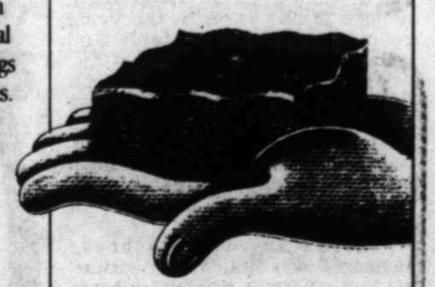

At the time of the French Revolution 200 years ago, fighting sometimes erupted in bread lines and most workers spent half their wages on their daily bread. It was the theft of a loaf of bread that plunged Jean Valjean into prison and a sea of troubles in Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables."

Until the 1900s, three-quarters of the average Frenchman's nourishment came from bread or other cereal products. The consumption of bread is much lower now, but the government still keeps a ceiling on bread prices.

Saint-Ouen, 57, has been making bread for 42 years, rising from apprentice in a village bakery, to worker and finally bakery owner in Paris. His shop, in a fashionable district, is also a restaurant. His calling card identifies him as "sculptor in bread."

As a teen-ager working on farms in the Sarthe region southwest of Paris, Saint-Ouen got to know the village baker.

"The dough, the flour, the warmth, especially the warmth, attracted me," he said.

Teen-age bone cancer patient dwells on success stories

DAUPHIN, Pa. (AP) — A year ago, David Brumbaugh gave himself up for dead after learning he had bone cancer at age 15.

Depressed, he headed for a camp for young cancer patients, where he thought the campers would sit around pitying each other.

He figured wrong.

This year, David is back for a week at Camp Can-Do, in the central Pennsylvania woods. His cancer is responding to treatment and he's counting the days until October, when his chemotherapy is scheduled to end.

"Nobody could tell me I wasn't going to die," he said Thursday. "I just had to go along with the treatment and trust the doctors."

They told him his hair, which fell out during the early stages of treatment, would grow back, and it did. They told him his strength would gradually return, and it did.

The doctors took care of everything but removing David's doubts. Camp took care of that this year by helping him decide to try out for the soccer team when he starts his junior year in high school in suburban Phiadelphia next month.

"I found out I wasn't as out-of-shape as I thought I was," he said. "I found out there are people who have less of a chance than I do."

David is one of about 70 campers attending Camp Can-Do's fourth summer session. For a week, they ride horses and canoe, play board games, build models, swim and talk with other kids who share their problems and concerns.

"They offer each other hope. They offer each other support," said volunteer camp counselor Dale Perkel, a social service worker at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia. "They really keep each other going."

David said he feels an obligation to help other campers, especially younger ones, deal with their illnesses and treatment because he can speak from experience about the side effects of drugs.

"Everybody else says they understand, they understand," he said. "But they really can't."

Dr. James F. Balsley, a pediatric oncologist at the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center, said a child has a 1-in-600 chance of developing cancer. Because of the odds, healthy children aren't accustomed to seeing peers without hair or with disfiguring surgery scars or amputations. So they, and many adults, stare. Others shun young cancer patients.

Even when a medical cure is attained, as it is in about 60 percent of the cases, social acceptance is slow, Balsley said.

Nicole Todd, an 8-year-old camper from Enola whose leukemia is in remission, said some children still keep their distance at school.

"They treat me like they never knew me," the third-grader said. "They just treat me like I'm new there. I just ignore them and I play with the people who do know me and they treat me nice."

Twelve-year-old Jennifer Clites, whose hair is thin and wispy because of her treatments for Hodgkins disease, said the taunts of other children taught her about the way she treats people.

"I don't make fun of anybody anymore," she said.

The Pittsburgh girl's diagnosis was made on Valentine's Day and chemotherapy started a short time later. Her treatments are now on hold because of complications.

Crab study sheds light on sleep-wake cycles

By PAUL RAEBURN

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — The biological rhythms that govern sleep-wake cycles and other bodily processes appear to be determined both by heredity and the environment, a researcher says.

Robert Barlow said Tuesday that his studies of horseshoe crabs have convinced him that the so-called circadian rhythms are triggered by exposure to light and dark.

But their length — which seems to be approximately 24 hours in all animals studied, including humans — is genetically fixed from the moment of conception.

Barlow, of Syracuse University and the Marine Biological Laboratory here, said horseshoe crabs must experience at least one light-dark cycle to develop circadian rhythms. But the rhythms are about 24 hours in length no matter what length of "day" and "night" the animals are exposed to in the laboratory.

Barlow said his experiments, done this summer at the Marine Biological Laboratory, are the first to show that individual animals raised from birth in varying periods of light and darkness would all develop circadian rhythms fixed at roughly 24 hours in length. (The word circadian comes from Latin words meaning "about a day.")

Animals raised from birth in constant light or constant darkness had no circadian rhythms, he said. "The one thing we can attribute to the environment is the trigger."

Barlow believes the same thing is true in higher animals, including humans. Study of the origin and nature of circadian rhythms is important, he said, because almost all biological quantities that can be measured — body temperature, blood sugar levels and even such things as pressure within the eye — vary regularly over a 24-hour period.

"To find a process that does not have a 24-hour modulation would be a surprise," he said. Jet lag, in which the body is unable to quickly adjust to changes in sleep-wake cycles, is one obvious sign of the regularity of these 24-hour cycles.

He described his findings at the Marine Biological Laboratory's General Scientific Meetings.

Barlow's research required that he raise young horseshoe crabs from birth in chambers where light and darkness were controlled.

He and his colleagues collected horseshoe crab eggs from nests on Cape Cod beaches last year, fertilized the eggs in the laboratory, and allowed the crabs to be born in light-tight chambers.

The Moody Blues

Moody Blues playing to their strengths again

NEW YORK (AP) — Some writers have looked down their noses at the Moody Blues, calling their music "pomp rock" and saying it weaves majestic sounds with pretentious lyrics.

However, a recent Rolling Stone review of the group's latest LP, "The Other Side of Life," puts it somewhat more kindly: The album, the review said, "plays to the Moodys' longstanding musical strengths: luscious symphonic textures; rich, stately melodies, and densely overlaid vocal arrangements."

"The Moodys for a lot of people are a very personal kind of thing," said singer-guitarist-songwriter Justin Hayward, who joined the 22-year-old British group with bassist John Lodge just before "Nights in White Satin," one of the group's greatest hits, in 1967.

The song was from the landmark "Days of Future Passed" LP, which was recorded with the London Symphony and regarded by many as pretentious.

"A lot of people discovered us through radio and concerts, not through hype and pictures of the guys everywhere. We've never been rammed down everybody's throat. We wanted to let the music speak."

The Moodys began a tour in the United States in June and will be performing though October. "The Other Side of Life" reached the Top 10 on the best-selling charts in July as did the single, "Your Wildest Dreams."

Songs on the current LP have a harder edge than previous tunes, Hayward said in an interview. "There's not so much icing on the cake, layering over the top, and more emphasis on the rhythm track. The type of songs is still the same."

The Moodys never tire of singing their old tunes, especially their greatest hit. "We never get tired of playing 'Nights in White Satin.' It means such a lot to a lot of people. It's the most wonderful thing in my life to be able to share that feeling," Hayward said.

"I can remember where I was when I wrote it. I had a bedsitter in Bayswater, only one room and a cupboard which was a kitchen. It expressed a lot of emotions I had to get out. I was at the end of a big love affair.

"We recorded it for BBC2 on a Friday lunchtime. They aired it at Saturday lunchtime. We were in a van driving up the M1 and listened to it on the radio. It was the first time we thought, 'This is something.'

"The record company didn't want to release it as a single. They said it was too long, 4½ minutes, had a slow, boring flute bit in the middle and would never be a hit."

The Moody Blues came together in Birmingham, England, in May 1964. Their second single was a big hit, "Go Now." In 1970, the group earned five gold LPs. Their first No. 1 LP in the United States was "Seventh Sojourn" in 1972 shortly before the group split for solo careers. The Moodys regrouped and came out with the gold LP, "Long Distance Voyager," in 1981.

"I thought we were crazy at the time, splitting up," said Hayward. "We were at our peak everywhere. Total madness, I thought. Looking back now, it was the best thing we ever did. ...We came back fresh, having worked with a lot of different people, with new ideas.

"The record company released a greatest hits album, 'Caught Live & Five,' in 1977. It was our five attempts to a follow-up single to 'Nights in White Satin,' we thought didn't work plus live concerts we also thought didn't work.

"We got together again in September 1977. We knew maybe two years up front of that, before any of us had made any solo records, that we were going to get back together.

Hayward, Lodge, flutist Ray Thomas and drummer Graeme Edge — both original members — reunited. Keyboardist Mike Pinder, also an original member, decided not to and was replaced by Patrick Moraz, who'd played with Yes.

Their last album was "The Present," released in 1983, which had no big hits. "There were some lovely songs on it," Hayward said. "I think we were looking too much inside ourselves and not looking out the window at the world when we were making it.

Goldblum loved 'The Fly' as kid, now it's his most important role

ENTERTAINMENT

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jeff Goldblum, who made his New York stage debut in "Two Gentlemen of Verona" and won critical praise in such films as "The Big Chill" and "The Right Stuff," now has his most important role, as a fly.

"The Fly" is 20th Century-Fox's new version of the 1958 camp classic that starred Vincent Price and David Hedison, the latter as a scientist who exchanges heads with a fly. Goldblum takes the Hedison role in the new version, directed by David Cronenberg ("The Dead Zone") and produced by the Brooksfilm company of Mel Brooks ("Blazing Saddles").

"I loved 'The Fly' when I was a kid, and I've seen it again and again on television," Goldblum recalled in an interview. "I saw a lot of Vincent Price movies, but then, I always had a taste for the bizarre. I used to love reading Ripley's Believe It or Not, with all its wild and crazy facts.

"When they sent the new script to me, I liked it from the start. It was different from the first film, and I felt the differences justified a remake.

"I saw a test screening of the movie, and I was amazed at the reaction. It's not campy, but it does have a sense of humor in a subtle kind of way. The people were laughing along with it, then they got caught up in the suspense. The ending is delightfully appalling, so that the audience is horrified. One person even jumped up and screamed, 'No — not that!' "

Goldblum, 33, delighted in recounting how he as scientist Seth Brundle misfires on a teleportation experiment (transforming identity from one animal to another): "He doesn't know that the fly's genes are growing inside him, and he begins to have peculiar symptoms, like a craving for sugar and an insatiable sexual appetite."

The actor shrugged off any prospect that "The Fly" might type him in the way that Vincent Price was pegged as a horror-film specialist. "I'm not worried about becoming known as 'Mr. Fly,' " he said. "I've always done a variety of things, and I plan to continue. I like to act."

No wonder. Acting has come to him with consummate ease. He skipped all the cliches about waiting on tables and making TV commercials while struggling for roles.

Jeff Goldblum grew up in a Pittsburgh suburb knowing that he wanted to be an actor but not doing much about it. It wasn't fashionable for boys to consider acting, and he never entered school plays. But unbeknownst to his colleagues, he took six-week summer drama courses at Carnegie-Mellon University.

"None of my family was in show business," said Goldblum. "My father's father was an upholsterer and a candy shop owner. My father became a doctor, and he said that he once looked into a drama class at Carnegie-Mellon but decided the other students were more talented. My mother was encouraged by a high school play in which she was 'pure quicksilver.' But she never pursued it."

Was there consternation in the Goldblum house when Jeff announced he was going to pursue acting in New York instead of college?

"Not really. They told me to go for it."

Goldblum, whose 6-foot-4 frame and hawk-like face makes him look like a latter-day Ichabod Crane, enrolled at the famed Neighborhood Playhouse under Sandford Meisner. He was halfway through the two-year course when Joseph Papp cast him in a minor role in "Two Gentlemen of Verona." He finished the course, then scored as the crazy piano player in the off-Broadway "El Grande de Coca Cola."

"Then by a stroke of luck, Robert Altman saw me in 'El Grande' and gave me small roles in 'California Split' and 'Nashville,' " he said.

Goldblum followed with a series of memorably offbeat characters: the antic Californian who forgot his mantra in "Annie Hall"; the neurotic actor in "Next Stop, Greenwich Village"; the impoverished rock music critic in "Between the Lines"; the harried disco owner in "Thank God, It's Friday"; the poet-turned-pod in "Invasion of the Body Snatchers."

Perhaps his most memorable role came as the ex-radical reporter for People magazine in "The Big Chill."

Teen-age bone cancer patient dwells on success stories

DAUPHIN, Pa. (AP) — A year ago, David Brumbaugh gave himself up for dead after learning he had bone cancer at age 15.

Depressed, he headed for a camp for young cancer patients, where he thought the campers would sit around pitying each other.

He figured wrong.

This year, David is back for a week at Camp Can-Do, in the central Pennsylvania woods. His cancer is responding to treatment and he's counting the days until October, when his chemotherapy is scheduled to end.

"Nobody could tell me I wasn't going to die," he said Thursday. "I just had to go along with the treatment and trust the doctors."

They told him his hair, which fell out during the early stages of treatment, would grow back, and it did. They told him his strength would gradually return, and it did.

The doctors took care of everything but removing David's doubts. Camp took care of that this year by helping him decide to try out for the soccer team when he starts his junior year in high school in suburban Phiadelphia next month.

"I found out I wasn't as out-of-shape as I thought I was," he said. "I found out there are people who have less of a chance than I do."

David is one of about 70 campers attending Camp Can-Do's fourth summer session. For a week, they ride horses and canoe, play board games, build models, swim and talk with other kids who share their problems and concerns.

"They offer each other hope. They offer each other support," said volunteer camp counselor Dale Perkel, a social service worker at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia. "They really keep each other going."

David said he feels an obligation to help other campers, especially younger ones, deal with their illnesses and treatment because he can speak from experience about the side effects of drugs.

"Everybody else says they understand, they understand," he said. "But they really can't."

Dr. James F. Baisley, a pediatric oncologist at the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center, said a child has a 1-in-600 chance of developing cancer. Because of the odds, healthy children aren't accustomed to seeing peers without hair or with disfiguring surgery scars or amputations. So they, and many adults, stare. Others shun young cancer patients.

Even when a medical cure is attained, as it is in about 60 percent of the cases, social acceptance is slow, Baisley said.

Nicole Todd, an 8-year-old camper from Enola whose leukemia is in remission, said some children still keep their distance at school.

"They treat me like they never knew me," the third-grader said. "They just treat me like I'm new there. I just ignore them and I play with the people who do know me and they treat me nice."

Twelve-year-old Jennifer Clites, whose hair is thin and wispy because of her treatments for Hodgkins disease, said the taunts of other children taught her about the way she treats people.

"I don't make fun of anybody anymore," she said.

The Pittsburgh girl's diagnosis was made on Valentine's Day and chemotherapy started a short time later. Her treatments are now on hold because of complications.

Crab study sheds light on sleep-wake cycles

By PAUL RAEBURN

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — The biological rhythms that govern sleep-wake cycles and other bodily processes appear to be determined both by heredity and the environment, a researcher says.

Robert Barlow said Tuesday that his studies of horseshoe crabs have convinced him that the so-called circadian rhythms are triggered by exposure to light and dark.

But their length — which seems to be approximately 24 hours in all animals studied, including humans — is genetically fixed from the moment of conception.

Barlow, of Syracuse University and the Marine Biological Laboratory here, said horseshoe crabs must experience at least one light-dark cycle to develop circadian rhythms. But the rhythms are about 24 hours in length no matter what length of "day" and "night" the animals are exposed to in the laboratory.

Barlow said his experiments, done this summer at the Marine Biological Laboratory, are the first to show that individual animals raised from birth in varying periods of light and darkness would all develop circadian rhythms fixed at roughly 24 hours in length. (The word circadian comes from Latin words meaning "about a day.")

Animals raised from birth in constant light or constant darkness had no circadian rhythms, he said. "The one thing we can attribute to the environment is the trigger."

Barlow believes the same thing is true in higher animals, including humans. Study of the origin and nature of circadian rhythms is important, he said, because almost all biological quantities that can be measured — body temperature, blood sugar levels and even such things as pressure within the eye — vary regularly over a 24-hour period.

"To find a process that does not have a 24-hour modulation would be a surprise," he said. Jet lag, in which the body is unable to quickly adjust to changes in sleep-wake cycles, is one obvious sign of the regularity of these 24-hour cycles.

He described his findings at the Marine Biological Laboratory's General Scientific Meetings.

Barlow's research required that he raise young horseshoe crabs from birth in chambers where light and darkness were controlled.

He and his colleagues collected horseshoe crab eggs from nests on Cape Cod beaches last year, fertilized the eggs in the laboratory, and allowed the crabs to be born in light-tight chambers.

Tablecloth brings back memories

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — You get to write on the tablecloth at dinner at the Masters' house.

At least once in a while: Christmas, Thanksgiving, Easter, sometimes on somebody's birthday. It's the Masters' way of marking memorable family times.

"After we eat, we get the magic markers down and write whatever comes to mind on special occasions," Suzanne Masters explained.

"Some people write too much," added Myrtle Mackey, her husband's grandmother.

"You get the wise sayings from the older people," Mrs. Masters said.

"And you get wisecracks from the younger ones," Michael, her husband, finished.

The family tablecloth, an unusal historical record, has been compiled by grandparents, uncles, aunts, mothers, sisters, brothers and cousins at holiday get-togethers since 1978. After dinner's over and everyone's had his say, Mrs. Mackey gathers up the cloth, takes it home and spends hours embroidering over her family's words.

Already a close clan, the idea of family tablecloths that all would help decorate seemed a natural. On summer Sundays, Masters says, the family gathers at his mother's house. They have dinner, then everyone sits around playing cards.

"I think we're fortunate," Mrs. Mackey says. "There aren't a lot of close families around today."

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Drinking linked to economic 'busts'

By JIM MAY and MARTI VERMILLION

May

Vermillion

DEAR COPING: It seems to me that during trying times some people tend to drink more. I have several friends who have recently lost their jobs and I see them drinking more than I recall that they have in the past.

Whenever I go to the liquor store, I always ask about how their business is doing and they all have indicated that their business is great.

I know that I have not been very scientific in my approach, but is there some relationship between the economy and alcohol consumption? — John

DEAR JOHN: Your letter is one that reflects a concern we share and consider to be especially debilitating to the family. While the answer we want to share with you may not be exactly what you are after, we would like to take this opportunity to share our concerns over this subject.

First of all, we have not researched the situation in our area to the extent that you have, but we will and will share those findings with you next week.

In the short term, we will refer to the findings of Dr. M.H. Brenner of The Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health. In studying the relations between a number of sociodemographic factors and patterns of alcohol consumption, he found that alcohol consumption is highly correlated with long- and short-term changes in the economy.

His data indicates a strong tendency for per capita consumption of alcohol to increase within months following any given economic downturn. The study found that a condition of social instability and stress, particularly involving economic conditions, was associated with increased general alcohol consumption and increases in the incidence of alcohol-related problems.

The major findings of Dr. Brenner's study were consistent with the vast majority of current alcoholism theories which emphasize the role of stress as a precondition of alcoholism. We know from a vast amount of other research and the experiences of our readers that the loss, or threatened loss of a job, is a significant stressor.

In fact, the available research shows substantial correlations between increases in economic and social stress and increases in suicide, mental hospital admissions, heart disease mortality and infant mortality during the period covered by Dr. Brenner's study.

Summarizing some of the available research, we find some disconcerting information for the family:

- The loss of a job or income places individuals in a position from which it is virtually impossible to conform to "normal" expectations, whether family, cultural, peer group or individual. Alcohol becomes a method of adapting to the problems of these discrepancies.
- The nearly universal occurrence of alcohol in human societies has been suggested as indicative of its acceptability and utilitarian anxiety-reducing function.
- It has been further suggested that frustrated ambitions are significant factors in the development of alcoholism. Then further excessive use of alcohol compounds problems associated with lack of achievement, which causes further failure, which renders the individual even less capable of achievement, and so on.
- The alcoholism that arises in response to anxiety unfortunately continues even with the stress associated with family discord, illness and so on.
- Increased alcohol consumption is directly related to cirrhosis of liver mortality (with a lag of from one to two years).

Knowing these findings, what can we do? One researcher, Robert Straus of the University of Kentucky, notes in his work, "Alcohol and Alcoholism," that alcoholism becomes a response to stress primarily in cultures where, among other things, there are no culture-approved alternative modes of dealing with stress.

We encourage those caught in this trap to consider their family as a "culture-approved" alternative mode of dealing with stress. In this case, when we refer to "family," we mean not only our immediate family, but our extended family, church family, social family and so on. Unfortunately, this is easy to say, but often hard to do.

Next week we will talk more about what the individual, family and friends can do to help.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center and Marti Vermillion is a family life consultant.

Facing facts best way to handle rejection

Associated Press

The best way to handle rejection is to face it, learn from it and move on.

Rejection is hard to take but recent research, according to an article in the August issue of Science Digest, indicates that whether it is in romance or business, the worst response to rejection is to refuse to face it.

"The common reaction is to escape, not to think about it," said Jerry Suls, professor of psychology at the State University of New York, Albany. "For example, one way adults handle rejection in a relationship is to seek out someone else immediately, without too much forethought, as a distraction."

Suls found, in studies reported in the journal Psychosomatic Medicine, that people who keep trying to blunt the pain of rejection eventually get sick more often than is normal.

Since rejection cannot really be rejected, it may be best to let the impact sink in. Suls said that as people shifted from avoiding rejection to confronting it, the pain diminished.

He said another good strategy was to accept rejection as an opportunity to move ahead.

ASK DR. RUTH

Happiness depends on individual choices

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. What can I do to make a man happy?

A. Personally, I usually want to give him a nice big cup of cappuccino, that Italian coffee with lots of whipped cream — because that is what I like. But, guided by long experience, what I usually do is offer him a choice. If he is so stupid as to want black coffee, no sugar, I indulge him.

To make a man happy, find out what he likes and give it to him, only not so repetitively that it becomes tiresome. And never if it is truly unpleasant to you. If the smell of sauerkraut makes you sick, let your knockwurst lover have it elsewhere, for lunch — or cook it himself while you are out for the evening, only ask him to keep the kitchen vent fan on.

Sexually speaking, don't make a fetish of pleasing him. Instead, find those mutually pleasing things to do, and keep your own pleasure in mind. Otherwise you will begin to resent always being the geisha, even though you may like it now and then.

Q. From his sexual past my boyfriend regales me with all kinds of kinky goings-on, which sort of puts me down, as my past is very plain. I get jealous and make up stuff about what I used to do before we met, and of course I fake volcanic orgasms. We do a lot of things together that I really think are kind of dumb, like bondage. Sex is losing its charm.

A. There is no reason to feel jealous when he tells you those tall tales, which may be as made-up as the stuff you tell him. Even if some of it were true, it is almost impossible, psychologically, that he did not exaggerate it a good deal. If he asks you to do something you don't want, tell him it's not for you.

Or, "We tried that. I think it's a once-in-a-while thing." As for faking orgasms, don't do it. Instead, ask him for more foreplay and longer time devoted to arousing you and then he'll find out what fun really is, with a wonderful participating partner.

Q. Recently I met a man my age — 57 — and we fell for each other, but sexually there is a wall between us because he has sores all over. No matter how much I want to, I can't touch him or look at him with his clothes off. His doctor says it's his nerves — not much help.

A. Get another opinion from another doctor. There may be a treatment for this condition. It may be curable, or controllable; perhaps it is a periodic outbreak leaving his skin clear at times. Until it can be cleared up, you can pleasure each other sexually in ways that don't call for nudity or all-over skin-to-skin contact. Let both of you use fantasy to enhance this activity.

Q. How long is it before you should ask somebody out? I have not had much experience with women.

A. Then it is time that you acquired some. I don't mean heavy sexual experience, but the ability to ask somebody out because you want to, without undue fear of rejection.

There is no set passage of time between meeting a girl or woman and asking her out. You do it when you have the feeling that she would be interested in going out with you. Even if you have just met on the bus, if she gives you that impression, there is no harm in asking. She may say no. Don't take it as a knockout blow. Risk it, and if she says no, accept her answer gracefully.

And don't let time pass before you ask another girl for a date — not looking to form a heavy relationship or to make big plans for life, just to have a nice evening with another person who has the pleasant quality of being female. You need to have a number of practice sessions doing light, social dating.

New guide lists language of aging

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Do you know the meaning of the word senescence? What is the difference between life expectancy and life span?

If you are age 55 or over, or you have an elderly relative, you may be mystified by terms like these when talking with health care professionals. The relatively new field of gerontology (the study of aging) has unleashed a special vocabulary of terms about aging which can confuse the lay public.

A new publication from the National Institute of Aging may help clear things up. "Age Words: A Glossary on Health and Aging" defines 275 basic terms frequently used by physicians and other service providers.

"Age Words" is designed for a broad audience, including older persons and their families, students, reporters and health care workers. The 65-page book features easy-to-read print and groups terms under subject categories, such as the body, medicines and drugs, women and social problems and services.

An index at the back of the book helps readers find individual terms ... like senescence, which means the normal process of growing old; life expectancy, a projection of the number of years a person may live based on race, sex and socioeconomic status; and life span, the number of years a person could live under ideal conditions (probably 110).

Lightning rod manufacturing business booming

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — In this age of computers and lasers, Morris Rosenthal's lightning rod business, using the same basics discovered by Benjamin Franklin, is crackling.

Rosenthal is president of the 117-year-old St. Louis Lightning Protection Co., the oldest lightning rod manufacturing company in the country.

"There's nothing you can do about an earthquake or a tornado," said Rosenthal. "There's not much you can do about a flood. But lightning is one of the few things you can protect yourself against."

And the company does more than just protect people from lightning. As its motto proclaims: "We can and do control lightning."

"The philosophy is simple," said Rosenthal. "It's just like what Ben Franklin discovered. You want to conduct the electricity through a conductive material and into the ground so that it's dissipated."

Lightning rod manufacturing hasn't changed much in recent years, Rosenthal said. The biggest innovation has been the increased use of braided copper instead of twisted steel because copper is a better conductor.

While the image of the itinerant lightning rod salesman, driving the country roads in a beat-up Model T, may still be foremost in some minds, Rosenthal said his products have turned up in some lofty places.

Seven rods from the company sit atop the 630-foot Gateway Arch on the St. Louis riverfront. The company's rods also protect several stately 100-year-old oak and sassafras trees at the Missouri Botanical Garden.

As one of only five lightning rod manufacturers in the country, Rosenthal said competition is fierce, even though repeat business is an unknown commodity. Lightning rods are good for the life of a structure.

Rosenthal's company also manufactured fancy weathervanes for a while, but now merely sells them for another producer.

Rosenthal attributes a consistent growth in his lightning rod business over the last 25 years to the increased awareness by insurance companies that anything tall and valuable should have a lightning rod.

Rosenthal's biggest clients are electrical contractors.

The company's 1915 catalogue acknowledges the troublesome times in the industry, saying it fell "into disrepute through the rapacity of some of those engaged in it."

But Rosenthal said those days are over.

DEAR ABBY

Handicapped deserve acceptance

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 21-year-old deaf student at the Rochester Institute of Technology. I was born with German measles, which left me deaf, blind in one eye and 50 percent brain damaged, but I feel fortunate to be alive.

All my life I have tried to get people to be a little more patient with handicapped people because I have been discriminated against because of my disabilities, and I hate discrimination.

I wrote a piece for my 12th grade high school public-speaking class presentation. It was "The Handicap Plea." Many people loved it. I have met a few famous people who have visited the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, and I typed up my "plea," framed it and gave it to a few special people I thought deserved it. They are Annie Glenn, Peter Jennings and Jeff Float. I even gave one to my best friend, Tim Sly, who never treated me any different.

I am sending you a copy, hoping you will print it and wake up some people to realize that handicapped people are normal. Thank you for your time and good luck with yourself. — HARRISON F. PARSONS JR., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR HARRISON: I think your "plea" should be shared with my readers, and here it is:

THE HANDICAP PLEA

We the handicapped may look strange. But look around carefully, we all have the same needs. As nature goes, we all have the same form of body. But some part of our body may be missing or deformed. Some parts of us may not function the same way as yours do. We may lose it at birth, or get hurt in an accident or have a disease. But we are lucky to be alive and are willing to sacrifice for that.

Normal people can become handicapped from old age, accident, war or disease. If you look around carefully, you will understand that people who are handicapped are just like people who are not. We are still people, who want the chance to walk the golden road to success. We don't ask you to give us success, just the chance to succeed without putdowns or ridicule. You can give us the courage to succeed.

You look at nature as a thing of beauty, yet no two snowflakes are alike. We would be honored to be treated the same, because we know your needs are the same as ours. The needs we all have are physical (natural), emotional and spiritual. So after all is said and done, please give us the chance and encouragement to prove to all that people who are handicapped are normal people!

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column concerning nursing homes, you said it was not necessary to tolerate thievery. Obviously you have never had much experience with nursing homes. I have.

When a relative of mine was admitted to a very fine nursing home, he was advised to keep nothing of value in his room. Also, he was told that all medication, hair oil, shaving cream, hand lotion, etc. were to be left at the nurses station, and when he wanted to use any of these items, he should ask for them.

Some senile patients who were ambulatory would walk into the rooms of fellow residents and pick up whatever wasn't locked up. They'd drink after-shave, hair oil, etc., and take medication without realizing that they are doing anything wrong.

There is not enough personnel to watch each patient 24 hours a day to see that they don't get into trouble. It takes a lot of patience to work in a nursing home. And those who do deserve a lot of credit. — MRS. R.L.C., EL CENTRO, CALIF.

DEAR MRS. R.L.C.: Watch this space for more on nursing homes. I was blitzed with letters, pro and con — mostly con.

AT WIT'S END

Rats winning race?

Editors note: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. She left behind some of her favorite columns.

By ERMA BOMBECK

Like most women, I have become paranoid about crime.

I lock my house every time I go to the garbage can; I set the burglar alarm when I go for the mail; and I lock my car every time I get gas.

To date, I have been locked out of my house 14 times, have been charged for five false alarms, and have required the services of a locksmith on eight occasions so I could get into my own car.

That proves something: the world is safe from me!

If there is one thing that ticks me off about the whole crime scene, it is the way other people whom I don't even know have had a profound effect on my life.

To begin with, I carry around more keys than a school janitor. I have a key for my luggage, a key for the gas tank, a key for the safety-deposit box and a key to the box that holds all of my extra keys.

The keys have two things in common. They all look alike, and they never open what I want to get into.

Secondly, I have been forced by bad people roaming the streets to get a dog that barks whenever he hears a noise. Unfortunately, this noise can be as inaudible as the chirp of a bored cricket at 3 a.m. This will cause the dog to jump higher than the windowsill. The dog never barks at strange people — only at family members.

Thanks to the evil that is lurking around every corner, I have had to install dead-bolt locks on all the doors. Dead bolts were never meant to be taken seriously as a deterrent against crime. They were originally invented to measure the limits of human stress. At one point when I could not find a key, I found myself on my hands and knees signing for a flower delivery through the dog door.

Robberies have also turned me into a crazy person every time I leave the house. The house must look like it is occupied by five or six people who work out of the house. There should be no exposed windows but lots of lights; no newspapers in the driveway; a car in the garage always; and a sign on the front lawn that says an alarm will break your eardrums if you turn the doorknob. Possibly the worst thing crime has done for me is force me to get an unlisted phone number, to have a mailbox without a name on it, and to be a person who is afraid to open the door to a person who might need help.

Sometimes, I think the rats are winning.

Study discovers today's 'new' woman not so new

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The "new woman" of the 1980s, the one who has a small family or perhaps no children at all, the one who has the same education as her male counterparts, is not so "new" after all: She is, in fact, very like her grandmother.

Although her path into family life and the work world may seem to be blazing new trails, she is not a pioneer, but is returning to old ground for new reasons. That is one of many conclusions contained in a study in progress called "The Cosmopolitan Report on the Changing Life Course of American Women."

Comparing today's young women with the women having children in the 1950s, the report notes:

"It is the mothers of the baby boomers, rather than their daughters, who departed from many historic demographic trends.

"By several key demographic measures, today's young women appear more similar to their grandmothers than to their mothers," it continues. "They are marrying later (if at all), gaining in educational attainment relative to men, having few children and showing greater willingness to go it on their own. These are all returns to patterns typical of the first half of the 20th century."

The report emphasizes that the pursuit of career represents a societal change that was more abrupt than evolutionary: "The rapid entry of women into the labor force in recent years represents the only current change with no historic precedent."

The study was commissioned by Cosmopolitan magazine and is being conducted by the Battelle Memorial Institute's Health and Population Research Center in Seattle. The institute is a private international research organization with headquarters in Columbus, Ohio.

The work is divided into three sections that are being issued separately. The first part, which was published in January, analyzes demographic changes in the lives of women. The second section, which is now in draft form and scheduled for publication next month, links demographic changes with new attitudes, values and lifestyles. The final part, to be issued next January, will discuss how those changes will affect the demands of women for goods and services in the years 1990 and 2000.

Drawing on surveys, interviews and statistics from 350 academic papers, the report is based largely on two federal studies called the National Longitudinal Surveys of Labor Market Experience. One of those studies interviewed 5,000 women who were 14 through 24 years old in 1968; the other contacted 5,000 women who were 30 through 44 in 1967. All participants were contacted 11 times during the 15 years between 1967 and 1982.

Although much of the first part and the draft of the second part of the report analyze already familiar trends, among them the massive entrance of women into the work place on a lifelong basis and the multiple roles they assume in balancing career and family, the report also produces some new information.

It says that women of the baby-boom generation — those born between 1946 and 1964 — differ not only from their mothers, but also from one another depending on when during the boom years they were born.

The women who reached adulthood in the late 1960s and early 1970s underwent more profound upheaval than did their sisters who came of age in the late 1970s and early 1980s. The older group of women clearly anticipated that they would follow the same course as their mothers, marrying, having children and dropping out of the labor force at least until their children entered school, according to the report.

Photographers scream about ice cream

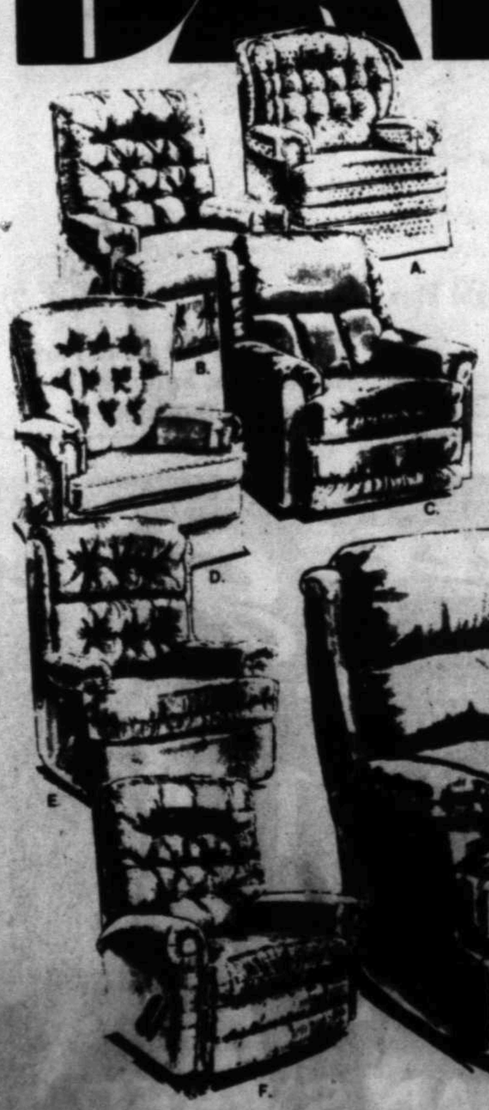

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hot lights needed to photograph ice cream for a series of greeting cards created a lot of technical problems for photographers trying to snap the shutter before the confection started to melt.

Dry ice was tried, but its 'smoke" floating down on the product was a problem, one finally solved by putting the dry ice above to create a normal frosty look, said Jim Drake, a product manager at Hallmark Cards.

A shot that called for a candle in whipped cream atop ice cream was especially difficult, Drake recalled. The candle drooped, the whipped cream turned to liquid and the ice cream slid and dripped.

"The photographers were ready to scream before they got the idea of freezing the whipped cream and the candle overnight, and doing some record-breaking shutterbugging," Drake said.

Lap safety belt study may send public mixed signals

DALLAS (AP) — The president of an emergency physicians' group said this week that a government agency's study indicating lap safety belts sometimes contribute to injuries was ill-advised and sends the public mixed signals.

Dr. Richard Stennes, president of the American College of Emergency Physicians, said the National Transportation Safety Board acted hastily in releasing a report this month that indicated lap safety belts worn by back-seat passengers contribute to injuries in automobile accidents.

"Our concern now is that the NTSB has come out with a suggestion that lap belts in the back seats of the cars may make things worse rather than better," Stennes said.

Stennes said the board drew conclusions from sparse research and gave the public mixed signals on whether to wear the lap safety belts.

NTSB officials contend the report resulted from more than a year's worth of study and included extensive study of available literature on crash victims who wore lap safety belts.

The report does not recommend that people stop wearing the rear-seat lap safety belts. The study only looked at frontal collisions and did not guage the safety value of lap belts in other types of crashes.

"We said there was a better way and that would be to go with the three-point belt," said Barry Sweedler, director of the board's bureau of safety program in Washington, D.C.

However, Stennes said the board's study will most likely be used by passengers as an excuse not to wear the belts.

"I have many specific incidences in my own practice in San Diego where we've seen people who have been wearing (lap) seat belts and have had their lives saved," said Stennes, who was in Dallas on Tuesday.

Stennes said that shoulder belts are better, but that back-seat passengers have better safety odds wearing the lap belts.

The board's report recommended that automobile manufacturers install three-point safety belts in the rear seats of cars and also urged emergency physicians to become more informed on the possible injuries that can result from wearing lap belts.

"One of the main reasons we released the study the way we did was to make sure the emergency medical people were aware of the type of injuries that could be caused by seat belts," Sweedler said.

Reagan's jokes make us feel like he's having fun

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Ronald Reagan speaks, people laugh.

And the president goes out of his way to encourage it. In nearly every speech he delivers, Reagan offers up a joke or two.

He's not even above using the hoariest of comedian's lines: "A funny thing happened to me on the way to Nevada," he told an audience in Las Vegas in June.

Of course, Reagan's not the first president to use humor to his advantage. Lincoln would tell backwoods yarns to break the tensions of running a country at war with itself. And Harry Truman loved to josh, for instance, about having to make speeches.

"I feel like the fellow who was at the funeral of his wife and the undertaker asked him if he would like to ride to the cemetery in the same car with his monther-inlaw," Truman once told an audience. "He said, 'Well, I can do it, but it's just going to spoil the whole day for me.'"

Reagan is inclined to warm up an audience with a laugh whether he's addressing U.S. Marines at boot camp or foreign ministers at a conference in Indonesia. His repertoire includes one-liners, put-downs and feature-length jokes with punch lines that merit a drummer's rimshot.

— At a high school commencement in New Jersey:

"There are advantages to being president. The day after I was elected, I had my high school grades classified 'Top Secret.'"

— To the Asia-Pacific Council in Tokyo:

"There is a story about a businessman who ordered flowers to be sent to the opening of his friend's new branch office. And when he got there, he was shocked to see the flowers with the inscription, Rest in Peace. He was so outraged that on the way home he stopped at the florist to complain. And the florist said, 'Don't get so upset. Just think of it this way. Today someone in this city was buried beneath a flower arrangement with the inscription, Good luck in your new location.'"

— To the ministerial meeting of the Association of South East Asian Nations in Bali, Indonesia:

"There is a story back in the United States about two men out in the woods on a hike. And they saw a large bear coming over the hill directly toward them. And one of them sat down, took off his knapsack, reached in, got out a pair of tennis shoes and started to put them on. And the other one looked and says, 'You don't think that putting on those tennis shoes — you're going to be able to outrun that bear?' He said, 'I don't have to outrun the bear; I only have to outrun you.'"

Dana Rohrabacher, a White House speechwriter since the first days of the Reagan administration, says the president loves to joke.

"When we go into the Oval Office," says Rohrabacher, "we have to make sure we get down to business because the president keeps us in stitches half the time."

One of Reagan's current favorites touches on differences between the superpowers:

"It seems that an American and a Soviet citizen were having a discussion about who had more freedom. And the American said, 'Look, I can march into the White House — the Oval Office — and I can pound the desk and say to the president, "Mr. President, I don't like the way you're running our country.'" And the Soviet citizen said, 'Well, I can do that.' 'You can?' He said, 'Yes, I can walk into the Kremlin, into the General Secretary Gorbachev's office, and I can say, "Mr. General Secretary, I don't like the way President Reagan's running his country.'""

Reagan said he told that story to General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev at their summit last year in Geneva.

"Thank goodness, he laughed, too," said Reagan.

People laugh, but professional comedian Alan King, after listening to a recording of the Gorbachev joke, thinks the president deserves better material.

"It's a good joke," says King, "but it doesn't bear repeating."

It's a joke Reagan tells repeatedly. Nevertheless, King thinks Reagan has the delivery of a pro.

"Everybody seems to forget, before he was the president he was an actor and a public speaker," King says. "Nobody has to tell Reagan how to tell a joke.

"The inflections are all there. It means he's having a good time — even when he isn't. He makes you feel that he's having a good time when he's telling a joke."

The targets of Reagan's humor include Washington's institutions, Congress, the news media, the Democrats and himself. He often jokes about his age. It's a device that has helped him defuse doubts about his capacity to serve at age 75.

Edmond postal workers find that 'people really do care'

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — Black crepe paper hangs from the counter where patriotic stamps are sold, and customers murmur condolences to shaken clerks who survived the bloodbath.

"It's spooky," said a woman hurrying out of the Edmond Post Office after scooping mail from her rented box.

Outside, flowers from grieving residents and sympathetic strangers turned a patch of the post office's tidy lawn into a memorial garden. Four white daisies from someone's yard; a giant wreath with a ribbon reading Fort Worth, Texas. Delicate silk flowers in clay pots; plastic roses in dime-store vases. A warm morning rain smeared the ink on tiny sympathy cards tucked amid the blossoms.

"People really do care," a counter clerk with bloodshot eyes said to no one in particular as he watched a deliveryman squeeze through the door with a 6-foot-tall rubber plant.

The faint odor of disinfectant still lingered in the air when the post office reopened Thursday, barely 25 hours after mail carrier Patrick Sherrill slaughtered 14 co-workers, then killed himself.

Cleaning crews had scrubbed and scoured the work room until midnight, removing all traces of the carnage.

"Everyone is going about their job dutifully, methodically. We're family here...There's been quite a bit of hugging on the workroom floor."
— Earl Artis, regional communications administrator

Although employees weren't required to return to work so soon, only one stayed away the day after the massacre, said Earl Artis, the postal service's regional communications administrator.

"Everyone is going about their job dutifully, methodically," Artis said. "We're family here...There's been quite a bit of hugging on the workroom floor."

Postal worker Ron Blackwell described the atmosphere as eerie.

Another employee, Frank Newson, 39, said returning to work "was pretty scary. There were empty chairs...a lonely feeling.

"The whole day was real long and awful quiet," he said. "Some crying. But none of the chatter that we usually have around here."

Supervisor Bill Bland carried on with the day's work, pausing to pat a back, touch a shoulder or offer a few words of support to his staff.

Customers trickled in to mail packages, buy stamps or collect their mail, often finishing their business at the counter with the words "I'm sorry" instead of the usual "goodbye."

Many appeared to have stopped by just to check up on a favorite clerk or mail carrier. Eyes lit up when a familiar face was spotted behind the counter.

"How are you doing?" a young mother asked the clerk with bloodshot eyes.

"A little rocky," he replied.

"Well, you just holler if there's anything we can do," the mother said.

"It's terrible, but we were still happy about you," her husband said, telling the toddler in his arms to wave goodbye.

Postal worker Lorrene Christian, left, comforts an unidentified co-worker in the workroom of the Edmond, Okla., Post Office Thursday morning. The two women were part of the first shift to return to the post office since Patrick Sherrill shot and killed 14 fellow employees and then himself Wednesday.

Commerce Department probes another leak

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department, after firing one employee and reprimanding several others following leaks of sensitive financial data, says it is investigating whether another leak occurred this week.

The department said one employee has been fired, another has resigned and three others reprimanded following an investigation into premature release of a gross national product report last September.

That leak resulted in major changes in the way the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis protects the security of its information and also the disciplinary action disclosed Thursday.

Meanwhile, the agency has begun a preliminary investigation into allegations that the latest GNP report, issued Tuesday, was widely known in financial markets in New York and London the day before.

In July, Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said he was ordering the dismissal of three employees for premature release of the September GNP figure. All of the employees worked for the Bureau of Economic Analysis, which prepares the GNP and a variety of other government reports on the economy.

However, officials said Thursday that after further investigation it was decided that one of those accused should receive only a written reprimand.

"The actions that were proposed were carefully considered in the light of employee responses," Commerce spokesman Malcolm Barr said.

None of the individuals' identities have been released, and Barr said the department would provide no details on which discipline was imposed against those mentioned in the report.

Barr said the three employees receiving written reprimands and the one employee fired will have the right to appeal those actions.

Baldrige had said two of the BEA employees made financial gains from the government data through purchase of bond futures, contracts to buy bonds at a future date for a specified price. The third individual had passed inside information to another person who had profited from it.

Killer showed violent anger in recent days, police say

EDMOND, Okla. (LAT) — In the last days of his life, mass killer Patrick H. Sherrill exhibited an increasingly open and violent anger.

A police official said Sherrill had thrown "an absolute tantrum" in an ice cream parlor the day before he entered the post office where he worked part-time and gunned down co-workers with military precision. Earlier he had flared up at a woman who complained about her mail delivery.

Police, postal employees and acquaintances said those incidents were among several recent outbursts by the 44-year-old ex-Marine and loner who lived in a cluttered house packed with electronics gear, magazines and military clothing.

The emerging profile seems to add credence to the police theory that a buildup of sheer rage drove Sherrill to commit the third worst mass murder in U.S. history. He killed 14 coworkers and wounded six others before fatally shooting himself.

Police said Sherrill erupted in anger the day before at a Braum's Ice Cream parlor — his favorite lunch spot — when a waitress inadvertently picked up the receiver of a pay phone as he awaited a call.

Police said Sherrill, believed to have committed the shootings in a rage over what he believed was his pending dismissal from the post office, earlier threw an angry fit when a woman told him he had sorted her mail improperly.

"She said, 'You're crazy for acting that way. You're crazy,' " Edmond police Lt. Ron Cavin said, recalling the woman's statements to police.

On the job, "Pat was basically a disciplinary problem," said Ron Blackwell, a shop steward for the National Association of Letter Carriers. "He operated on a different level of attitude than people. He got into more trouble than he could fend off and took it all kind of personally."

Sherrill, described by a friend as a "pack rat," lived alone amid organized clutter.

There was little on the walls of his home except some medals, a photograph of himself and several shooting targets, riddled with bullet holes. Chairs and tables were hidden by neatly folded clothes and electronic parts. Police found a computer and dozens of floppy discs, which they plan to analyze.

He had more than 100 copies of Penthouse magazine, some dating to 1975, piled precisely in his bedroom. There were copies of "Soviet Life" and "Russian Made Simple," an instructional book. There were 10 sets of military dungarees, and his uniform from his Oklahoma Air National Guard unit.

Disaster team arrives to deal with grief, guilt

BOSTON (AP) — Shock, grief, guilt and other powerful emotions may cause lingering problems in Edmond, Okla., in the aftermath of a mass murder and suicide, say counselors who have helped after other grisly episodes.

A team of seven disaster experts affiliated with the National Organization for Victim Assistance arrived in Oklahoma City suburb Thursday at the request of local authorities. They included a police psychologist who helped residents of San Ysidro, Calif., cope with a massacre at a McDonald's restaurant in 1984.

The team planned to concentrate on helping emergency personnel, who "often have two competing reactions," said Karen McLaughlin, a member of Washington-based organization's board.

"One is that they need to respond, and they are immersed in what is similar to a combat situation. With so many dead bodies and so many people critically wounded, they are going through an overwhelming state of shock, immediate grief, or immediate numbness," said McLaughlin, who also runs the Massachusetts Office for Victim Assistance.

On Wednesday, Patrick Henry Sherrill, a 44-year-old postal worker, opened fire inside the Edmond Post Office, killing 14 co-workers before taking his own life. Six other people were wounded in the attack.

"This level of a massacre in a community of that size is obviously going to have an overwhelming emotional impact," McLaughlin said.

In addition to emergency personnel, people who may need help are the families of homicide victims, the injured and their families, bystanders and eyewitnesses, and the community as a whole.

"There's a real need for a public expression of grief, and people need to provide a forum," McLaughlin said.

NOVA, a non-profit network of disaster experts based, was contacted Wednesday by the Oklahoma attorney general and by local mental health agencies seeking assistance.

Ex-lawmaker apologizes for 'butch' remark

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former state Sen. John Schmitz has publicly apologized to a feminist attorney for calling her "a slick butch lawyeress" in a news release, but the $20,000 settlement will be paid from state funds.

Schmitz' apology to Gloria Allred and to Jews, homosexuals, women and others named in the 1981 news release, was read in court Thursday by Superior Court Judge Leon Savitch in a settlement of a $10 million defamation suit filed by Ms. Allred. The former senator did not appear in court.

"I apologize to Gloria Allred and to all others who may have been wrongfully characterized, hurt or harmed in any way by these statements," Schmitz wrote in the statement.

"Based upon my past relationships with Gloria Allred, her husband and her family, I have never considered her to be and recognize that she is not a 'slick butch lawyeress.' "

Schmitz took responsibility for a news release written by aide Brad Evans and issued Dec. 22, 1981, on his official stationery after Ms. Allred presented him with a chastity belt during hearings on a proposed anti-abortion measure.

It was headlined, "Senator Schmitz and His Committee Survive 'Attack of the Bulldykes' " and denounced witnesses as "imported lesbians from anti-male and pro-abortion queer groups in San Francisco and other centers of decadence."

It referred to the audience as "a sea of hard, Jewish and (arguably) female faces," and specifically attacked Allred as "a slick butch lawyeress."

Schmitz, a right-wing Republican and former member of the John Birch Society, gave up his state Senate seat in 1982 to run for the U.S. Senate in 1982. He was unsuccessful.

Surrogate mother claims husband may be baby's father

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — A surrogate mother fighting in court to keep the baby now says the father may be her husband and not the man who agreed to pay her $10,000 to bear the child.

Mary Beth Whitehead filed papers in Bergen County Superior Court on Thursday saying she had had sexual relations with her husband, Richard, not long after she was artificially inseminated with sperm from William Stern.

The custody battle for the girl, born March 27, will be put on hold for the next 2½ weeks while Judge Harvey Sorkow attempts to determine the identity of the biological father, lawyers said.

The child named "Baby M" in court papers remains in the custody of Stern and his wife, Elizabeth, of Tenafly.

Mrs. Whitehead walked out of the judge's chambers Thursday after a closed hearing, crying and fighting off crowds of reporters. She repeatedly sobbed, "They are stealing my baby and they're letting them get away with it."

The dispute over Baby M began when Mrs. Whitehead refused to surrender her daughter to the Sterns as she had agreed to do in a contract signed before the baby was born. She fled with the child to Florida, but when authorities found them, they placed the child in the Sterns' custody.

Deaver report may have been wrong, chairman says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional staff report that concluded former White House aide Michael K. Deaver lied to a House subcommittee investigating his lobbying activities may have been partly in error, the subcommittee's chairman says.

In a letter made public Thursday by Deaver's attorney, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., acknowledged the possible error to independent counsel Whitney North Seymour Jr., named by a federal court to investigate Deaver.

The controversial section of the subcommittee report concluded Deaver falsely testified that he informed officials of Rockwell International Corp., a client, that he planned to meet with a top federal official about Rockwell's B-1 bomber.

Dingell informed Seymour that he has learned from company officials that Deaver may indeed have informed them in advance of his meeting with James C. Miller III, director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Are 'stealth' planes flying?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is conducting secret nighttime flights of about 50 "Stealth" jet fighters, a radar-dodging plane that the government does not officially admits exists, a published report says.

Several squadrons of the planes are stored in hangars in the desert near Tonopah, Nev., southeast of Reno, according to an article in today's editions of The Washington Post.

Lt. Cmdr. Ross Kudlick, a Pentagon spokesman, said Thursday night he would have no comment on the report.

But the Post article, citing informed sources, said the planes have so far proven to be virtually undetectable to radar.

NBC News had a similar report earlier this month.

The report also said the plane that crashed near Bakersfield, Calif., last month was a Stealth fighter on a training mission. There was speculation to that effect at the time of the crash, but it was not confirmed.

Short injures 15 people

CINCINNATI (AP) — A short circuit in an electrical panel sent a fireball through a switch room of a downtown office building, injuring 15 people and spewing thick smoke that slowed rescue attempts.

Two electricians were hospitalized in critical condition with burns over most of their bodies from the accident Thursday evening. The rest of the injuries were less severe, and most of the injured people who were taken to hospitals were treated and released.

Officials said the electricians were working on the panel when an arc of about 440 volts of electricity shot from the unit.

"It was more like a flash fire, a very intense fireball immediately," said District One Fire Chief James Ross. "It set their clothing on fire and all the combustibles in the area. It blew the front cover of the panel off and burned these people severely."

'Buff bandit' strikes again

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — A woman was robbed by a naked man in what authorities say is the fourth such purse-snatching in less than a month.

The woman, an employee at Keesler Air Force Base, was confronted by the naked man early Wednesday and forced into a closet before he took her purse and fled, said Air Force Lt. Art Haubold. Authorities said they did not know how much money was in the purse, and declined to identify the woman.

The purse-snatcher, as in two robberies in downtown Biloxi on July 28 and a third two days later, was described as a tall, black man who wore a mask over his head, authorities said.

It's a car lot, real estate office, job fair and garage sale, all rolled into one.

Baby girl spends month in prison with mother

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — An 8-month-old girl spent a month in prison with her mother, who was detained under a nationwide state of emergency, a newspaper reported.

The Johannesburg Star said Thursday that Margaret Makgatho, 27, was detained in the black township of Tembisa, northeast of Johannesburg, on July 18 and released Monday.

"I left my two other children, aged 8 and 3," she was quoted as saying by The Star. "But I had to take my youngest child, Carol, along with me because I could not leave her in the care of the others."

Mrs. Makgatho is a member of the Black Municipal Workers' Union and was involved in a strike in Tembisa in June. She said she was questioned about her union activities during her detention, but was not charged.

British TV being screened

LONDON (AP) — A British television network has unveiled a plan to warn viewers if scenes of violence, bad language or explicit sex are in the movie they want to watch.

A red-and-white triangle will fill the screen with the words "Special Discretion Required" before the start of a movie that warrants such a warning and after commercial breaks, the independent Channel Four network said in a statement Thursday.

The triangle will be superimposed on the top left corner of the screen while the movie is shown.

Family to leave for Israel

MOSCOW (AP) — Anatoly Shcharansky's brother said that the family of the freed Soviet human rights activist will fly out of Moscow on Monday on the first leg of their journey to Israel.

Leonid Shcharansky told The Associated Press by telephone Thursday that he, his wife Raya, their two sons Alexander, 14, and Boris, 1, and his mother Ida Milgrom will leave on an Aeroflot flight to Vienna, Austria at 2:40 p.m. Monday.

The Shcharanskys received visas Tuesday from Soviet authorities after being promised Aug. 3 that they would be allowed to leave the country on Aug. 23.

Their emigration was part of the deal agreed on when Anatoly Shcharansky was freed in an East-West prisoner exchange in February after serving nine years in Soviet jails on charges of spying for the United States.

Anatoly Shcharansky, a leader of the Soviet dissident and Jewish rights movements in the 1970s, now lives in Israel with his wife Avital. The five leaving are his only close relatives in the Soviet Union.
