JUST HERE and THERE

Reports from over the 31st Senatorial District indicate State Representative Max Boyer of Perryton is gaining strength every day and that there is a strong possibility that he will win over his two opponents in the first primary.

Max has one great advantage over his opponents. He does not have to make a campaign of promises as to what he will do if elected as a legislator. He can point with pride to his record as to what he has actually accomplished as a representative of his district in the state legislature.

Max Boyer will go out of Ochiltree county with practically a one hundred per cent solid vote in his race for the State Senate. During the last two weeks of the campaign, delegations of Perryton business men and Ochiltree county farmers and stockmen will visit every part of the district.

Gene Worley, Shamrock candidate for Congress from the 18th District, addressed the voters here Monday evening. Gene resigned from the Texas State Legislature to make the race for Congress. He is making a good clean campaign and is hoped to be among the high three when the polls close on July 27.

His condition is reported to be as well as could be expected Wednesday night.

End In Sight For 1940 Harvest Locally

Ochiltree County's wheat harvest is approaching the close of the 1940 season with thousands of bushels of wheat daily entering granaries, elevators and being shipped to terminals via Santa Fe.

From Perryton alone a total of 431 cars, each containing an average of 1,500 bushels of the golden grain, have been shipped since June 25. Other loading points have handled the following amounts: Waka, 131 cars; Lord, 34 cars; Farnsworth, 151. From the three remaining loading points in the county, Booker, Hinton and Tinsley, reports were not available at the present time.

The total number of bushels shipped up to Wednesday approached the one-half million bushel mark. Elevator men report that all the elevators in the county are filled to the overflowing with grain. Many more unestimated thousands of bushels are stored in farm granaries under the government setup.

Approximately 90 per cent of the 1940 wheat crop is being placed into government loan, it was said.

It was discovered that the thief or thieves parked their car on the highway and walked across the field about a quarter mile to the tractor.

The Pitching and Second Base Duo Sparking Cleveland's Bid

BY ART BRONSON

THERE has been a lot of beefing and discontent among the Cleveland Indians this season but the folks who follow the Tribe don't mind. Not as long as the Redskins continue to rage along at a pace which makes them the best pennant threat since 1926.

It has been a long time since Cleveland has flown a championship flag—20 years, in fact. Two whole decades since Stanley Coveleski, and Bill Wamby, and Elmer Smith and the ill-fated Ray Chapman gave the Tribe its only flag.

This edition of the Indians, despite managerial squabbles and criticism around the league of so-called "cry-baby" tactics on the part of the players, has better than an even chance of leading the pack at the end of the hottest American League race in years.

RIGHT now Cleveland is getting the best pitching in the loop. Bob Feller, best in the business today, should be a 25-game winner. Johnny Allen and Mel Harder have been a disappointment so far, but Al Milnar and a surprising showing by Al Smith, a National League cast-off, have taken up the slack.

Possibly the biggest reason for Cleveland's success, however, has been the work of Ray Mack and Lou Boudreau, the youthful second base combination that is considered the best in the majors today.

Their brilliance afield and their ability to click off double plays is the feature of the Tribal inner works. Both are hitting well and Mack is bidding for the team batting championship in his first full season in the majors.

ROLIE HEMSLEY is no longer the rollicker of old. He has settled down to handle pitchers with a finesse that stamps him as the peer of any in the circuit.

Big Hal Trosky is off on another homer parade for his contribution to the cause.

Ken Keltner is as good a third sacker as anyone would want.

There is a shade of weakness in the outfield, which so far hasn't hit up to expectations but Roy Weatherly, Ben Chapman and Beau Bell are capable enough, with Jeff Heath ready to go at full speed very soon.

The Tribe is on the warpath for keeps, this time. So long as they keep winning, the fans don't care about the squabbles.

Fence Building Practices Changed

Contour tillage, airline highways, and general streamline conservation farming have radically changed fence-building practices of many farmers in the Perryton Camp Area, according to George C. Twombly of the Soil Conservation Service.

A straight fence dividing a pasture and a field farmed on the contour wastes either a great deal of pasture or farm land. Mr. Twombly states. Contour fences and field boundaries are becoming more and more popular with farmers who are practicing contour tillage because such fences eliminate many point rows. Where fences are built around terraced fields it is usually found advisable to have fence lines follow the terrace lines.

The job of building a curved fence that requires very little extra care has been solved by most of these conservation-minded farmers' Twombly declares.

"There is no such thing as a straight fence anyway in rolling country. All fences either curve over hills and down draws or curve around the hills on the level."

The gully control fence is another type of fence that is proving popular on farms where conservation farming is in vogue. Such fences are built around gullies to protect them from livestock, in order that natural vegetation may heal over the erosion scars. Movable fences, built around temporary pasture tracts, are also becoming more popular. In many instances one-wire electric fences are used for this purpose. Diagonal and curved fences following highways are also quite common.

"The old method of laying out all fences in line with the points of the compass is as much outdated as horse-drawn artillery," Twombly states. "In streamline conservation farming, fences and field boundaries must fit the contours of the land."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 14. Text: Job 14:13-17; 17:13-16; 19:23-29

THE question humanity has been asking through the ages—"If a man die, shall he live again?"—is asked by Job in our lesson this week. There have been three answers to that question through the ages—and the same three are given today.

The first answer, that of the materialists, is that this life is all there is, and that after death there is nothing. It seems strange that those who answer this question that way should think it worthwhile to speak and write extensively about it.

Surely there would seem to be no gospel or good news for man in persuading them that there is no soul life beyond the few years of earthly existence. If there be no life after death, why be concerned about it at all? The whole thing will soon be over, so far as the individual is concerned.

The second answer is the answer given by spiritualists, who believe that there is evidence of life after death in communication in the spirit world with those who have departed this life. The value of the evidence offered varies greatly, but the fact that there has been much deceit and fraud does not justify the open-minded investigator in disregarding much evidence that is more impressive and that is not so easily explained away. Numbers of eminent men and some who were eminent scientists, trained to appraise cause and effect, have believed that immortality is demonstrated by spiritual phenomena.

THE third answer is that of Christian faith, which finds in the words of Jesus and in the New Testament clear hope of immortality—although it should be emphasized that Christianity does not go beyond hope and faith to scientific demonstration. There is nothing really inconsistent with Christian faith in whatever demonstration one might believe is found in spiritualistic communication, although the field is one where there are many pitfalls and where there is much need for care against credulity or hasty conclusions. Jesus put the matter of faith and immortality in the realm of the things that one might take for granted. "In my father's house," He said, "are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you."

WHAT essential difference between good and evil can we believe in, if there is nothing abiding or permanent in the universe or human life? If decay and death are the end of all that is living, what place is there for the hope and faith that are at the very foundation of moral and spiritual being?

The closing words of our lesson are: "That ye may know there is a judgment." What place is there for judgment, if this life is all; and how baffling and utterly subversive of moral convictions would judgment be, if there is no abiding and permanent spiritual reality with which human life is inseparably associated?

To see the wicked prospering while the good and the innocent suffer, often because of their conscientious convictions, is to feel that one is in a topsy-turvy world, unless there is some vindication of truth and right that roots in some deeper spiritual reality than is found in the short span of man's life on earth from the cradle to the grave.

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you" (John 6:27).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Obeying his precious precepts—following his demonstration so far as we apprehend it,—we drink of his cup, partake of his bread, are baptized with his purity; and at last we shall rest, sit down with him, in a full understanding of the divine Principle which triumphs over death" (page 31).

Beaver Designated as Tenant Purchase County for Coming Year

Beaver County, Oklahoma, has been designated by Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, as a county in which the Bankhead Farm Tenant Purchase program will operate this year.

Members of the section of Beaver County were received here today by R. Bruner, Rural Rehabilitation Supervisor for the Farm Security Administration.

Loans will be made available to tenant farmers, sharecroppers and farm laborers with which to purchase their own farms. Loans are made for a period of years at three per cent interest. Although only a limited number of loans will be made in this county, tenants, sharecroppers and farm laborers may make application.

A county advisory committee will be appointed in the near future to select the applicants and aid in the selection of farms to be purchased.

Selections from among applicants will be made on the basis of character, farming ability and experience. A high standard of farming ability is a basic requirement for applicants.

The Farm Tenant Purchase Program is one of the weapons which the Department of Agriculture is using to combat the growing problem of farm tenancy. Administered by the Farm Security Administration, farmers who receive loans are assisted by this agency by the making of adequate farm and home plans which largely insure repayment of loans. Only farms within Beaver County may be purchased by the farmers.

To prevent land speculation, several safeguards have been devised by the FSA. The price per acre to be in keeping with its value and earning capacity.

Farmers desiring to make application for one of the purchase loans should obtain further information about the program, are asked to contact Mr. Oris R. Bruner at the Farm Security Administration office in the County Court House, Beaver, Oklahoma.

Richard Ballinger, Lubbock, was here Sunday night and Monday the T. M. Osborne home. He is nephew of Mrs. Osborne.

This Third Term Issue Has Often Stirred This Country Ever Since the Time of Washington

In the same Chicago Stadium where Franklin Roosevelt was nominated for his first term as President, the Democratic party is again holding its national convention.

THE third-term question has dominated the Democratic political show right up to the opening gun for the party's quadrennial convention in Chicago.

With President Roosevelt withholding his decision to the last, politicians have been able to heed to little else.

No President ever waited so long to declare himself, but probably no President ever approached the end of his second term with the world in such a state.

While opponents of the President clamored for word on his third-term ambitions, his friends argued that his early elimination from the presidential picture would weaken the U. S. hand in dealing with the foreign situation.

GEORGE WASHINGTON established the third-term tradition. In 1793, near the end of his first term, he wrote: "The spirit of the government may render a rotation in the elective officers of it more congenial with the ideas of liberty and safety."

ULYSSES GRANT was widely suspected of desiring a third term, but the cry of "Caesarism" was raised against him, and the House of Representatives passed a resolution branding a third term "unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

The issue cropped up again in Theodore Roosevelt's time, it being argued that Teddy had served only a term and a half, and the tradition would not suffer by his re-election. The threat did not materialize.

Washington could probably have had a third term, but refused—more because he wanted to return to private life at Mt. Vernon than because of principle. He had wished to retire at the end of his first term, but felt the new nation needed him more.

Thomas Jefferson once declared against even a second term, but he reconsidered and accepted one himself. There was third term agitation at the time Andrew Jackson finished his second four years in office, but he too was old and tired, and had his successor chosen.

Buffalo Wins Over Greys

The Buffalo Greys were defeated by one run when they invaded Buffalo, Oklahoma, Sunday, July 7.

The loss of the game 6-5 was despite an excellent brand of pitching turned in by Gyger, handling the pitcher's box for the first time for the Greys. Gyger was substituting for Lefty Blair, well known slinger from Berger.

Teague of Buffalo struck out 14 men as compared with Gyger's nine. Earned runs by Perryton were one; Buffalo, two.

The Buffaloes gained the upper hand in the third inning when after the first man was on resultant of an error, another batter was on safely when the pitcher and catcher became confused and allowed a high fly to drop between them.

With three men on, the Buffalo nine followed up in that inning making four runs off of two hits.

Shattuck will play the Greys at Fairgrounds Park Thursday evening starting at 8:30 o'clock, according to local managers.

The first Saturday night game of the season will be matched with the Amarillo Texans at the Park July 20.

Suckers and Signatures

It always has been a good rule: "Think before you act." College professors have a timehonored way of impressing this upon their students. They often have done something like this:

Appearing before their class one morning with a long petition they ask the class to sign it. Sleepy, in a hurry, or just careless, they all do so, without reading the long petition itself. Then the professor plays his ace: he reads the petition which all have signed. It turns out that all have agreed to have their own heads cut off.

Moral: Don't do that. Many a student learned in this simple but unforgettable way not to sign things without knowing what they are. But not everybody has learned this simple lesson.

In Pennsylvania the Communist Party wanted to get on the ballot. To do so, a certain number of signatures of voters on a petition was required, as is customary everywhere.

Evidently feeling that they did not have enough members of their own party to fill the petition to the required length, party workers went around seeking voters' signatures wherever they could get them.

Many people are willing to sign anything, especially a political petition. Many signed this one.

The Pittsburgh Press, however, smelling a rat, began to print the names of those who had signed the communist petition. And lo and behold, literally hundreds of people learned for the first time what they had done.

"I thought it was a petition to keep the U. S. out of war!" cries one. "I was told it was to help people to get jobs," says another. "I thought it had something to do with the census," "I didn't read it. I had no idea it had anything to do with the Communist Party."

People supposedly smarter than these innocent people have been taken in by organizations with aims laudable on the surface, but which turned out to be deeply influenced within by forces with which they were not in sympathy at all.

These are times when all must think. It is no less the duty of a citizen in a democratic republic to think, than it is to pay taxes or bear arms.

The defense of a democratic people is not only in tanks and planes and guns, but in their ability to be alert, keen, and clear-sighted.—The Pampa News.

Enough To Make You See Red

A Justice of the New York State Supreme Court rules that it is not libelous to call an American a Communist. He points out that, while the Communist party "actually has its roots in foreign lands" and while its members "have potentially obligated themselves even to overthrow our government by force and violence," the party still, "under the existing law, may function as a political party."

The decision in question shows how extremely careful Americans are to preserve the democratic rights which individuals and minority groups in this country enjoy. In the case of the Communists, indeed, we lean over backwards to insure protection for an organization that has no respect for and no understanding of the very principles which make its continued existence here possible.

It may not be libelous at the present time to call a person in the United States a Communist—but it strikes us as being about the most insulting "non-libelous" remark that could possibly be addressed to an American citizen!

There Shall Be No Hunger Here

Since the dawn of history hunger and the fear of hunger have driven men to war. And nations have had to have food to defend themselves. No nation has ever been so secure in its supply of food and fiber as America is today. Never has a nation been given such a guarantee of abundance as that assured the United States by the American farmer.

America's granaries are full to overflowing with food and fiber, for America has the Ever-Normal Granary that stores the abundance of fat years against any possible scarcity in the lean years. The Ever Normal Granary is on millions of farms, in thousands of roadside bins and in countless elevators and warehouses.

Wheat and corn and cotton to feed and clothe the multitudes are there. Three times the normal supply of wheat has been put into this storage, and added to the new crop it gives us more than a billion bushels for the coming year — half again as much as we would normally consume.

The Ever-Normal Granary for corn holds three times the usual carry-over, and the corn means pork and lard, beef and mutton, milk and butter, poultry and eggs.

If there were a cotton crop failure, we should not go without because the Ever-Normal Granary now has more than a full year's supply.

The American farmer is the most efficient on earth and he now has the most efficient storage system on earth. America's bursting bins of food and fiber are the farmers' reply to the bursting shells in Europe. Come what may, the American farmer with his Ever-Normal Granary is ready for the defense.

A recent survey has revealed that American agriculture is the only industry fully prepared to meet any emergency. This is due in a large part to the conservation program of the past few years.

The League Is Dead

On the shores of beautiful Lake Geneva in Switzerland stands an enormous gray stone palace opened only three years ago as the home of the League of Nations. Now barren of occupants except for a few caretakers, it remains a $10,000,000 reminder of a broken ideal.

The League, as envisioned in Woodrow Wilson's famed Fourteen Points, failed utterly.

After a decade of minor usefulness, the League declined rapidly in prestige in the early 30's. U. S. overtures designed to halt the invasion of Manchukuo by Japan were turned down by the British.

A half-hearted attempt to halt the Italian conquest of Ethiopia in 1935 by the use of sanctions failed. Japan, Germany, and Italy mocked the aims of the League and withdrew from membership.

Only once after the outbreak of war on the plains of Poland did the League take action. It expelled Soviet Russia last December after the invasion of Finland. Thereafter it was silent.

Virtually forgotten in the crushing storm of destruction that soon swept over Europe, fearing that Switzerland might be next to go, League officials abandoned their palatial home. Secretary Joseph A. C. Avenol requested all employees to resign, said the League might be revived later "if Britain wins."

So the League is dead. But its death does not necessarily prove that the ideal it represented—the ideal of international justice without resort to war—is dead, too.

One attempt at international sanity has failed. Some day, another one must succeed.

Dispelling the Fog

By CHARLES MICHELSON
Director of Publicity, Democratic National Committee

The smoke-filled room of the Harry Daugherty period gave place in Philadelphia to an air-conditioned suite, and the two-fer cigars of that rude political day were superseded by privately-manufactured perfectos—but the principle of private selection of a Republican Presidential nominee was not seriously infringed.

The necessities of the 1920 selection compelled nothing more than the choice of a man who looked like a President and whose innocuous Senatorial status offended nobody and who was right geographically. Improvement in the caliber of the president of the honor was required this time. Hence Wendell Wilkie, the "Hoosier candidate" who can make speeches as salty as those of General Hugh Johnson. Actually Mr. Wilkie is as definitely New Yorker as Wall Street or the House of Morgan.

Had District Attorney Dewey, for example, turned out to be the candidate, he would have been the Michigan candidate. To avoid the obvious linking of the leading power magnate with his congeners of the financial district, it was deemed wise to build him up as far as possible from that belt. So, according to the paenegyric-singing newspaper columnists, he is the young man from the West who, triumphing over all the political machines, drove through to nomination. According to Mr. Mark Sullivan, typical of the group, the Republican National convention was unable to resist the demand of the public. Actually the public, as reflected by the primary voting in the various States wanted Dewey, Taft or Vandenberg. The public's interest seemed to be limited to the clamor of the galleries which were filled through a "special issue" of admission tickets as shown by the confession of a Wilkie booster, Sam Pryor. The only other demonstration of interest seems to have been numerous telegrams, produced under the old Holding Company system, which the newspapers told us were identical in text to grammatical errors.

Perhaps the most definite evidence of the solidarity of the big industrialists behind Mr. Wilkie was the active participation in his convention campaign of "Tom" Lamont, one of the Morgan partners. However, equally significant was the maneuvering of Joseph N. Pew, Pennsylvania's director of Republican conscience, and District Angel of the minority party's finances. Pew, according to various newspaper reports, held at least 50 of the Keystone State's delegates for Senator Taft. At various times during the voting the sending of these reinforcements to the Taft forces would have practically assured Taft's nomination, but Pew held them solidly for his Governor, James, who had about as much chance for the nomination as Adolph Hitler. Yet Pew kept the solid delegation voting for James through five ballots and on the sixth turned them over bodily to Wilkie. As Wall Street goes so goes the President of the Sun Oil Company, and so it went at Philadelphia, despite the circumstance that the Tafters thought they had his pledge to strive for their candidate. This is the first time that the massed forces of Big Business named one of their own people for the Presidency. Hitherto they have been content to nominate a politician they thought could be handled, but now they have moved in openly.

Pampa Youth Form Club for Worley

Organization of a "Mr. Worley Goes to Washington Club," by 300 high school and college students and other young people of Pampa was announced in the following story in the Pampa Daily News of Sunday, June 2:

"Presenting a signed membership of more than 300 Pampa high school and college students and other young people, leaders yesterday announced the organization of a 'Mr. Worley Goes to Washington Club.'"

"They declared that their club was formed 'under their own power and on their own hook' to advocate the candidacy of Eugene Worley of Shamrock, for Congress.

"Signatures covering 22 sheets were written under the following statement:

"Because Eugene Worley is a young man and has already served two terms in the State Legislature at Austin where he was in line to be the next speaker of the house, and because he has already had the necessary experience, we believe that he is ideally equipped to fill Marvin Jones' seat in the national congress at Washington. We believe that he understands the problems of youth as well as the problems of old age and middle age and their solution, and that if he does go to Congress he will do all he can to give young people a break.

"We further believe that he will be a congressman for the average person and for young people and won't be a congressman for the big shots only. We promise him our influence and support and call upon all young people and their parents in this congressional district to urge his election and we promise to use our influence at home. We hereby enroll as members of the Mr. Worley Goes to Washington Club."

"A statement said that the club would hold a meeting soon and elect officers."

Fortunately, for the Republicans, Senator McNary is a thinking, rather than a talking individual, which will save him from some embarrassing heckling, but votes speak louder than words, and perhaps somebody will ask the Republican banner bearer, what he now thinks about some of the things his running mate—and the constituents of Senator McNary—hold as requisite for the welfare of the people of the United States.

Typhoid Is Annual Menace To Texans

AUSTIN, Texas—The control of typhoid fever in the United States represents an outstanding achievement in preventive medicine.

In 1900, the national death rate from this disease was 31.3 per hundred thousand; today, the rate is 1.9. This marked decrease in typhoid deaths is based on knowledge of its cause, how it is spread, and the application of control measures. Perhaps at this time, no other disease is more vulnerable to scientific attack than typhoid fever. "Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that from a public health point of view, there should be no typhoid fever," declares Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

However, Dr. Cox pointed out that typhoid, while an unnecessary evil, was a persistent attacker of Texans. Each year about four hundred Texans die of typhoid, and approximately four thousand are ill. The average duration of illness is about six weeks, which makes typhoid responsible for the loss of 168,000 man days in Texas each year.

Typhoid prevention is a simple procedure. Typhoid vaccine is injected under the skin in the upper part of the arm, in three doses, usually at weekly intervals. It ordinarily protects against the disease from two to three years or longer, although one who is definitely exposed to infection should be revaccinated at more frequent intervals.

Typhoid fever can be controlled by the use of pure water, pasteurized milk or clean milk, clean foods, proper disposal of sewage, screening against flies and destroying their breeding places, by search for carriers of human typhoid carriers, and by the general practice of vaccination.

Certain people, apparently healthy, carry the germs of typhoid in their intestines or urinary tract and cause many cases of typhoid each year by insanitary personal habits. They are called typhoid carriers, and many cases of typhoid result from personal contact with these carriers.

In selecting a place for a vacation, choose one where the water and milk supplies are pure. Be sure that the food supply is screened against flies. When camping, it is best to boil water used for drinking, unless its purity has been certified. Clear, sparkling stream water may be polluted.

Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Taliaferro, Ellensburg, Washington, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bell, Seattle, Washington, are visiting in Perryton and Booker with relatives and old time friends. Dallas is a son of Deputy Sheriff Dell Taliaferro. Mr. Bell is a pioneer in the Booker and southeast Beaver county country.

A Few Words From The Learned Professor Colt, D. H. S., Equine College

"When seeking to best competition, or to succeed in a difficult job, consistent training and a balanced diet are of the utmost importance."

Words of wisdom that apply to almost every field of endeavor. Especially to advertising. In the Perryton area, no merchant is without competition. Nor can any merchant operate successfully without at least a portion of the patronage of the hundreds of Perryton families who read the Herald weekly. Thus, it's just good sense to advertise consistently to the Herald's balanced readership.

To make certain that you get the most results from your advertising, the Herald subscribes to the Meyer Both General Newspaper Service which contains tested-for results copy, layouts and illustrations. OCHILTREE COUNTY HERALD
"The Best All-Round Weekly Newspaper in Texas"

The Story of a Panhandle Farm Boy

Editor's Note: The following life story of Deck Wells, Wellington newspaper man who is one of the leading candidates for Congressman from the 18th District, was written by Jimmy Gillentine, Editor of the Hereford Brand. Jimmy Gillentine was reared in Wellington and received his newspaper training under Deck Wells for whom he worked six years. No higher tribute can be paid to any man that the remarkable support being given to Deck Wells by his home folks and those who have worked and lived with him for years.

The growing strength of Deskins Wells campaign for Congress, which is beginning to reach landslide proportions in some strictly agricultural communities, is causing more and more people to want to know the reason for such unified support of his home county. They ask why people in every county in the Panhandle, who know him personally, are such loyal supporters. Perhaps the story of his life and his work will answer these questions.

The deceptive allure of a shimmering mirage offered the only infringement upon the man's thoughts as an automobile sped along a smooth Panhandle highway. Rays from the hot sun emphasized scattered freckles upon the face of the little eight-year-old girl who sat beside him. Her hands were clasped together on her lap, and the slight frown seemed out of place on her face.

Suddenly the little girl twisted around, looked up at her father, and spoke:

"Daddy, if you want to go to Washington . . ." she hesitated, "I guess it's all right. But . . . well, I'd just as soon be plain Diane Wells and go to East Ward."

Somewhat, the homely phrase struck a keynote which has always been foremost in the life of Henry Deskins Wells, who to those who know him, is and has always been "just plain Deck Wells."

Born 38 years ago on a farm five miles southeast of Wellington, Deskins Wells was the second child and the only son of Henry and Lucy B. Wells, pioneer settlers of Collingsworth County.

From Henry Wells' long line of English-Welsh ancestry came a determined, square jaw and a manner of practical living which played a highly important part in Deskins' early training and which has always dominated his life.

When Deskins was five years of age his father sold the homestead farm and purchased a half-section of land on the northeast corner of the Wellington town section. Mr. Wells saw fit to enter the mercantile business shortly afterward, and at the age of eight Deskins was graduated from the chores around the farm to the role of field worker.

Even at this tender age his sense of practical values and his ability to meet situations was apparent. Pioneer neighbors of the Wells family recall with a chuckle the manner in which he outwitted Kit and Jude, the two mules which were assigned to him in his farm work.

Deck was mighty proud of his position as a full-fledged farm hand, but he was still a little fellow and it irked him no little that his father had to harness his mules each morning. Kit and Jude were very gentle, but they were extremely large animals. After a few days, Deskins decided that it would take entirely too long for him to grow enough to harness his own mules. He decided to do something about the situation.

You can imagine the father's surprise when one morning he approached the lot to find Kit and Jude harnessed and ready for work. Mr. Wells asked no questions, but he was careful to watch the process the following morning. Deskins first went to the crib, where he secured an ear of corn with which he enticed the mules to the fed trough. By climbing onto the trough he was able to complete his task. The process required some 30 minutes, but once finished the youngster marched off behind a slide-go-devil, proud as a peacock.

In school his progress was around the average, but even in his early years he showed a remarkable interest in history, geography, English, figuring—and elocution. This trend, probably encouraged by a suppressed desire on his own behalf, led Mr. Wells to believe that in Deskins he had the makings of a lawyer. Often as they returned from the lot with their milk pails, or sat on the porch in the twilight of the evening, he talked with his son regarding the subject.

Meanwhile, the youngster's practical mind continued to assert itself, and when Deskins was 12 years of age it led him into his first financial venture—the hog business.

Mr. Wells was feeding out a large herd of Duroc Jersey hogs and it fell Deskins' lot to feed them. One morning when he was slow about starting his work he was reprimanded by his father, who insisted that he take more interest in the work.

"Well," Deskins said, "I could if some of the pigs were mine."

Mr. Wells told him to pick out two of the pigs, which he might have as pay for feeding the others. In a few days the two pigs began to show improvement short of miraculous, and within a few weeks they had far outdistanced others in the large herd. Everyone in the family was wondering at the amazing growth of the two pigs. Finally, the mystery was solved.

Each morning when he turned the rest of the hogs out to graze Deck would cut back his two pigs; he fed them the best corn as long as they would eat. He then rubbed them down with corn cobs until their coats glistened in the sunlight.

Later he traded the two hogs to his father for four smaller ones and gradually built his own herd to 120 head of shoats and 20 fine Duroc Jersey sows, besides those which he marketed during the period. However, the hazard of hog raising took its toll in June and July, as cholera spread over the country. Only four hogs were left after the siege.

At the same time Deskins was also raising Rhode Island Red chickens in partnership with his mother. From the two ventures he realized a bank account which totaled $600 by the time he finished high school.

In 1918 Deskins lost forever his closest friend and adviser. His father, Henry Wells, died at an early age in life Deskins faced responsibility. Problems connected with operating a farm can be serious enough for a 16-year-old boy, his mother and three sisters.

Lucy B. Wells, whose English-Irish ancestry traces back to the American revolution, instilled in her children a determination and an ambition to secure an education and what she could not give them in worldly goods she more than compensated for in the form of good training and American ideals.

Sometimes the going was hard and being the only man about the place Deskins found little time for frivolity.

Anyway, the Wells family always had enough to eat. There were no bananas, no grapefruit, no strawberries, but there were oranges and apples at Christmas time. Mrs. Wells recalls that Deskins found time to help her cultivate a large garden and there was an abundance of potatoes, turnips, carrots, squash, and okra in season. They also had cows, which always accounted for milk and mush which in case they wanted a change in fare, could always be switched around to mush and milk. In the fall when the neighbors usually dropped around to help kill hogs, they did right well.

Deskins says today that breakfast is his favorite meal. Sometimes, when he sits down to breakfast his mind drifts back to one of those mornings on the farm: walking a mile or so to drive in the calves, then coming in with huge pails of milk—and an appetite for a large platter of home-made sausage, hot cakes and golden butter.

With the crops laid by and Deskins busily engaged in his work in high school, he sought parttime employment and finally secured a job as printer's devil on The Wellington Leader, a newspaper he was later to own and publish.

It was during the summer of 1919 that the stocky, freckled lad first met a man who was destined to become a fast friend and frequently advisor—for Marvin Jones, then only 30 years of age, was making his first race for Congress. The first meeting was a brief one, for Jones was a busy man. He did shake the boy's hand, however, and chatted with him a few seconds—and in that brief interval he won a life-long admirer.

As the primaries came and went, the ink-stained fingers of a printer's devil flitted back and forth across the old wooden type cases, and the eyes of Deskins Wells shone with happiness as he set up the lines which spelled victory for Marvin Jones. Today, that old file is one of the most prized possessions of The Wellington Leader, despite the fact that the paper now has one of the most complete and modern printing plants in West Texas.

During the next year Deskins Wells became so busy with the work in his senior year of high school that little else mattered. Typical of his past and future life was the manner in which he literally threw himself into his studies and activities.

Although he did not finish as class valedictorian, he was president of the senior class and he discovered a new outlet for his energy in the form of sports.

Basketball, in those days, was the rage and fortunately his employer at The Leader was a basketball fan. This encouraged, he found time to practice after school and became a regular player on the basketball team.

In fact, the 1918-19 squad set a record which has not been equaled, before or since, in Wellington High School. The team went undefeated during the entire season.

In basketball, like other games, the players frequently learn lessons which startle them: so it was with Frank Cooke, Tom Campbell, Candler Hawkins, John French and Deck Wells. About the time the season was half over they encountered a team which placed a substitute in the game. You can imagine the surprise of these country boys, who thought they were being "city slicked." Considerable argument followed the substitution, but the official finally convinced them that the action was absolutely legal.

Realizing the advantage of "sub" the boys went home and added Bob Jones and Cliff Cook to their own team—but the newcomers saw limited service in three games during the remainder of the season.

In the fall Deskins Wells, armed with the $600 he had made from his hog and chicken business which he had invested in Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, went to Canyon, Texas, where he enrolled in West Texas State Teachers College.

To say that he immediately mastered his topics would be in gross error, as Doug Shirley, L. E. Sheffy, and other old timers of the school will tell you today, for his analytical mind sought the practical side of things, even in his text books. One of his instructors said, "Deskins Wells can ask the question, 'Why' more than any boy I ever saw. In history he was not content with the assertion that Washington's ill-clad and hungry soldiers won their Valley Forge campaign, but spent hours by the score in determining just how and why they won. Too, he continued to show a decided aptitude for history, English, economics, sociology, and elocution—which has now come to be called "Expression."

He also continued his career as a basketball player, holding the position of guard on the 1921 team, which lost one game to Simmons and one out of four games to Clarendon College.

The night after the final game of the season Deck and Candler Hawkins were sitting in their room at Canyon discussing what they had hoped to do after they finished school. In a definite tone Deskins said, "I'm going to be a newspaper editor."

During his college career at Canyon, Deskins had continued to spend his summer months in the printing shop of the Wellington Leader, and he had come to love the smell and crackle of new, white paper. Too, his brilliant themes in college led his instructors to suggest a career in newspaper work.

Meanwhile, new settlers poured into Collingsworth County. The folks in Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia kept hearing of new opportunities in the Texas Panhandle—and many of them found what they sought on the fertile plains around Wellington. Timely rains, bumper crops, fat cattle, fair prices and good business prevailed.

To Lucy B. Wells, typical pioneer mother, these things were welcome, for they meant an education for her children.

Therefore, when Deskins laid down his pica rule and type stick in the fall of 1921, he went to Austin and entered the school of his father's dreams, the University of Texas.

His board, lodging and laundry problems ended, young Wells answered the dictates of his heart and plunged into the study of journalism; history, English and economics were his chief supplementary courses.

As required by the department of physical education, he continued in athletics—for he loved sports, just as he loved the smell of fresh plowed loam and the glisten of dew-laden grass at early morning.

It was on the football field at Canyon that he wrenched his knee severely in a practice game and although he tried hard to continue he was forced to give up the game. However, he did serve in the spring as captain of the freshman tennis squad and was a member of the basketball squad.

The old knee injury kept bothering him, however, and in the next year Deskins forgot all about tennis and basketball for he became a full-fledged reporter on The Daily Texan, University newspaper.

So interested and proficient did he become as reporter that a rigid rule was broken and he found himself with the title of "Assistant Issue Editor." Next term he became issue editor of the Daily Texan, and was awarded a "Gold Medal of Excellence" for his activities on the paper. In 1923 Deskins Wells was awarded his Bachelor of Arts degree by the University, and in 1924 he took his Bachelor of Journalism degree from the same institution.

It was along toward the last of the school year that Paul Thompson, head of the Journalism Department got "peevish" at Deskins Wells.

Thompson, it seemed, had hopes that Deskins might seek fame and fortune as an editorial writer on one of the larger papers of the country. The elder man felt that Wells' unusual background of hisson, which hundreds of others have learned, that it is easier to "make good" in almost any place other than your own home town.

While the merchants admired and loved Deck they just couldn't see how a young fellow they had known all of their lives could be very smart. When Deck talked advertising very often, it was about 50-50-1 that the merchant would close the conversation by relating some incident which occurred when Deck was a little shaver.

"Once I went over to sell a dry goods man a campaign of ads upon which I had worked, and planned for several weeks," Deck recalls with a grin. The interview wound up with the story of how Bill Godfrey and I had attempted to learn to swim in a hog trough out back of the barn.

"I remember the incident just as well as the merchant, and we were both thinking about how I was covered with soft mud and slime. Anyway, I never got around to showing him the ads which were to revise his business and put it on a new basis. I knew it wouldn't do any good."

Nevertheless, Deskins was hap-

TIMELY TIPS ON THE CARE OF YOUR ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR

from your electric service man

Follow the suggestions below and you will enjoy even more economical and efficient service from your always dependable and inexpensive-to-operate electric refrigerator.

DEFROST REGULARLY. When frost becomes thick on the freezing unit, it acts as an insulator, preventing efficient cooling and also resulting in extra running of the motor. Frequency of defrosting depends upon atmospheric humidity and moisture content of foods stored. A good rule is to defrost whenever the frost on the freezing unit becomes three-eighths of an inch thick.

KEEP CONDENSER CLEAN. The condenser looks like a finned radiator. In some models it is housed with the motor and compressor; in others, it is behind a removable shield on the back of the refrigerator. Use a long bristle brush or the suction hose from your vacuum cleaner to clean off all dirt and lint. This will permit quicker condensation of the refrigerant and result in more economical operation.

OIL PER INSTRUCTIONS. If your refrigerator has an open type unit, it should be oiled regularly in accordance with manufacturer's instructions. If it has a sealed unit, it does not require oiling. In case you do not know how to oil your refrigerator, consult the dealer from whom you purchased it.

DO NOT CROWD STORAGE SPACE. Since free circulation of air inside the food cabinet is necessary to maintain proper temperatures economically, dishes and other containers should not be crowded too closely together on the shelves.

WATCH TEMPERATURE SETTING. To keep down operating cost do not set control for colder than necessary. Food compartment temperatures should not go below 38 degrees or above 48 degrees.

SPECIAL VACATION

Before you leave sure to turn your refrigerator to the vacation setting, so that the refrigerator will not be running in the refrigerator setting. This will prevent the heat and lack of air circulation in the tightly closed house. Unused refrigerators will use more than 50% of the energy of a refrigerator in use, so leaving it on wastes electricity.

If you plan to be gone for a considerable length of time, disconnect your refrigerator to consult your dealer on proper vacation settings on proper vacation settings. Otherwise the cycle may be shortened. This applies only to sealed units.

married. Meanwhile, conditions were improving in general, and The Leader was becoming more and more of a by-word in homes of the community. A homespun column, "Deck's Didactics," had made its appearance in the paper and at the time—just as today—the deep thinking and the sincere philosophy of the young country editor proved to be the most popular feature of the paper.

Perhaps it was because he loved the teaching of Benjamin Franklin that caused Deskins Wells to often quote Franklin's phrase, "Keep thy shop and thy shop will keep thee." But it was an inherent urge for progress that caused him to follow out the quotation.

It is still a standing joke around the Wells household about the time Deck bought a new font of type near Christmas one year and found himself in an embarrassing financial condition during the holidays. He insists that he did give his wife some small remembrance, but every time Mrs. Wells sees the imprint of the type in the paper, she declares that it was his Christmas present to her the first year after they were married.

Good equipment and hard work soon placed The Wellington Leader in an enviable position in the newspaper field, and in 1932 The Leader was honored by The Texas Press Association as having published the "Best Special Edition of any Weekly Newspaper in Texas."

This same year Diane Wells, a daughter, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Deskins Wells.

Many men become the fathers of daughters each year in the United States, but very few of these men write homespun columns—and certainly none of this few wrote with the emotion, sincerity and thoughtfulness as did Deskins Wells—for 1933 "Deck's Didactics" was judged by the National Editorial Association to be the "Best Personal Column published by any weekly newspaper in the United States and Canada."

In 1934, The Wellington Leader again brought recognition and honor to the community which it served, when the greatest of all awards was bestowed upon the paper, and it was selected by The Texas Press Association as the "Best All Round Weekly Newspaper in Texas."

While recognition and awards came to the newspaper its editor took them as a matter of course, for he was still engrossed in the fascinating panorama of life, and still to friends he still loved horses, cattle and hogs best.

"Why don't you paint a picture of a fine Duroc Jersey sow, surrounded by a litter of energetic piglets?" he once asked a visiting artist of some note. The artist hesitated, waiting for some joke which was sure to follow. Instead, the country editor launched forth in a tirade of words in which he orally sketched possibilities of such a masterpiece.

Choosing some feeble excuse, the artist managed to escape and later asked one of Wells' friends if their editor could be a little bit off his mental balance.

In his home town Deskins Wells is also considered an authority on the growth of roses and shrubbery. This hobby led him to conduct through his paper, an annual flower exchange, a feature which has since been likewise adopted by numerous other publications and which has done much toward beautifying the smaller towns of West Texas.

During the intervening years Deskins Wells had managed to complete the purchase of The Leader, which he publishes as sole owner, and any doubt about whether the "local boy had made good" was erased in 1933, when his fellow citizens saw fit to elevate him to the office of mayor.

Other than a few minor community offices, this was his only experience in politics, and after two terms he refused to again become a candidate on the grounds that he was neglecting his newspaper; and incidentally the subscribers raised plenty of fuss when he occasionally gave up in despair.

However, there are some things which he shall never forget. One is the fact that he was made an honorary member by the Wellington P. F. A. boys, another was his recent election to the office of secretary by the Collingsworth County Agricultural Association, and above all else is an appreciation banquet which was given in his last year by his townsmen and the farmers of Collingsworth County.

"They're my friends," he will tell you, and "and life has no blessing like a prudent friend."

could not find time to write his personal "Didactics" column.

In 1938-39 he was again honored by his chosen profession when the editors of Texas unanimously elected Deskins Wells president of the Texas Press Association, members including editors and publishers of both daily and weekly newspapers.

Life, to Deskins Wells, still represents good health, and health among his family and his friends. Although he is a prolific reader, nothing pleases him more to dig in the dirt with his hands, cultivating his roses and shrubbery.

To his employees, he seems more like a big brother than a boss—and the situation pleases the parties of both parts. No man or woman ever worked for Deskins Wells more than a month before he was willing to wager his life that "Deck was a man, who above all else, kept his word." He also soon discovered that Deck was the type of fellow who thought things out, then decided the right thing to do, and that, although Deskins Wells is possessed with dynamic energy, he is cool headed in cases of emergency and calmly does his best, no matter how difficult the task.

As an editor and as a man Deskins Wells has many achievements upon which he can look back with pride, but it is a better than average guess that they seldom enter his mind and were it not for his wife the loving cups and trophies which his newspaper has won might well be listed in the "Lost columns of his paper. Mrs. Wells sought two years after they were married to find his college diploma, then finally gave up in despair.

However, there are some things which he shall never forget. One is the fact that he was made an honorary member by the Wellington P. F. County Schools Get More Money

AUSTIN, July 5—Ochiltree county will receive $468 more from the state this year to operate its schools than it did last year, State Supt. L. A. Woods estimated today. This is based on the assumption that the county will have the same number of students next year as it had last year.

Supt. Woods said the action of the state board of education in raising the per capita from $22 to $22.50 was another step toward bettering the educational facilities of Texas.

Supt. Woods has led the fight for increased state per capita appropriations to schools since he came into office. The per capita when Supt. Woods was first elected was $16, and it has been raised year by year until the $22.50 mark has been established.

Supt. Woods pointed out that increased state assistance to schools, plus more efficient management and improved teaching methods have been largely responsible for Texas being raised to 18th educational rank in the union from the low mark of 36th which it held in 1932.

It is not expected that the additional per capita appropriation will increase state expenditures as a whole, Woods pointed out, since the scholastic population has decreased in some localities.

Believes Farmers Should Own Home

John M. White of Extension Service, Oklahoma A. and M. College, writing under the heading "Human Erosion," has the following to say about the farmers of this country: "Farming is a way of life. Farmers can't be made of city-raised people. They have to be born and raised out on the farm with the love of the soil bred into their souls, and since the tillers of the earth are the first line of defense either in peace or war in any nation, they are entitled to be first to be subsidized by the state and federal governments.

"Many believe there is a wide difference between commercial and subsistence farming. The goal of one is the accumulation of wealth, the other a way of living, the moral, spiritual, and general welfare of family home and fireside, the good of the community as a whole, thinking of the state and nation as a grand free place in which to enjoy life.

"The suitcase and commercial farmers are not to be condemned, as mass production is necessary to feed the millions in our congested centers. On the other hand when it comes to a contented dependable patriotic citizenship, there is none superior to God's contact man between earth and heaven, the dirt farmer. He is born with a love in his heart for the land, for the children of nature, the growing things, plants, animals, birds, bees, and trees; a person who has time to stop to listen to the mocking bird, the rippling brook, children at play, loves the smell of new plowed earth, the clover in bloom, sees diamonds in the early dewdrops shining on the blades of grass, can feel grand opera in the sound of raindrops pattering on the broad green blades of corn. The call of the whippoorwill in springtime is sweet music to his ear. He has a sense of closeness to the spiritual that many can never know; he is the salt of the earth.

"As home ownership substantially anchors the citizenship of a nation, every tiller of the soil should own at least the tract of land on which his home is located. If more land is needed, it can usually be rented within easy reach. The next best is permanent long term lease where as a tenant he may have a feeling of security and the landlord a greater income on his investment."

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Dodd and daughters, Nancy and Addye Lou, returned Monday from a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Dodd, Cashon, Okla., and with Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Sanders, Blackwell, Okla.

As the Herald goes to press Thursday morning, there is a prospect of rain. With the wheat harvest over for many, rain would probably do more good to growing feed crops than the damage it would inflict on uncut wheat.

There remain thousands of acres of wheat that are yet uncut. It is impossible to make an accurate estimate of the yield but one thing appears to be certain and that is that the yield is much greater than was expected and that it is the largest wheat crop since 1931.

Very little wheat has been sold, practically every bushel going under the government loan program. As the returns from wheat loans are coming in, bank deposits are rising. Every indication points to the best fall and winter business in Perryton since 1936.

Literature advertising the Theocratic Convention of Jehovah's Witnesses in 20 cities on July 24-28 was distributed in Perryton Monday. Meetings of this sect have been held in Ochiltree county and Perryton recently. An attempt was made to hold a meeting last night but local officers appeared and ordered them to disband and forbade them to hold any more gatherings. A similar group were ordered out of the county a few days ago by officers.

SMITH SAYS:

"I'll never forget the day I called up Stewart's and told them I needed some order pads right away. Sure enough, they were over to my store the next day. They certainly helped me out of that jam, although I was to blame. Of course, I wouldn't expect them to meet such unfair demands all the time! But Stewart's just has a knack for turning out good printing quickly."
