Abimael Guzman

Guzman sentence

LIMA, Peru — A secret military tribunal on Wednesday sentenced Abimael Guzman, the mastermind and top leader of the deadly Shining Path guerrilla movement, to life in prison without parole. The judge presiding over the trial, held on a heavily guarded island off Lima, also ordered the rebels to pay $25 billion for the damage they caused to Peru. Nothing was said about where that much money could come from. The Maoist group's brutal 12-year insurgency has caused 25,000 deaths and $22 billion in economic damage, and Guzman's capture and trial has not halted the bloodshed./7A

Energy legislation

WASHINGTON — The Senate is set to vote today on a major energy bill that earlier appeared to be irretrievably entangled in last-minute maneuverings as Congress struggled toward adjournment. The sweeping bill, which passed the House on Monday, would mark the first major overhaul of U.S. energy policy in more than a decade. The legislation would boost energy conservation through tax incentives and new efficiency standards.

Clinton, Gore mark new Southern Baptist strain

By Peter Steinfels
N.Y. Times News Service

At first it seemed a mere curiosity: in Bill Clinton and Al Gore, the Democratic Party was fielding the first presidential ticket in history with two Southern Baptists.

Then the Republicans declared their party the guardian of traditional values and sought to rebuild an alliance with the religious right, and the Democrats' religion took on new significance.

Any plan to portray the Democratic candidates as alien to churchgoing America has met at least a medium-sized snag in their undeniable church ties. But just how the religious fac-

Cooler air, strong winds signal shift into fall gear

Staff report

The first cold snap of the season packed high winds and kicked up a lot of dust Wednesday, but left Midland relatively unscathed as compared to the rest of the state.

The cold front, which blew in the from the Rocky Mountains, brought high winds and freezing rain to Amarillo and severe weather to Dallas, letting Texans know that the gradual descent in temperatures has now begun.

National Weather Service officials said the first significant cold snap of the fall was right on schedule and another one, building in Canada, may make its way into the area by the beginning of next week.

The cold fronts should now start hitting with some regularity, starting the trend into cool-

Bush plugs trade pact

High-profile ceremony celebrates agreement

■ President meets his Mexican, Canadian counterparts to highlight successful negotiations.

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — President Bush participated in a high-profile ceremony in a must-win state Wednesday to highlight the successful negotiation of an agreement creating the world's largest free-trade zone.

With Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari looking on, Bush hailed the 2,000-page North American Free Trade Agreement that was negotiated last August.

"This meeting marks a turning point in the history of our three countries," Bush told a crowd of dignitaries in the courtyard of a local hotel. "We are creating the largest, richest and most productive market in the entire world."

Bush defended the pact against criticism that it will result in the loss of U.S. jobs from companies being lured across the border to lower wages in Mexico. Instead, Bush said the removal of trade barriers would expand U.S. exports to Mexico, which is already America's third largest market.

"If anyone doubts the importance of trade for creating jobs, they should come to this great state," Bush told the crowd.

Senate votes plan requiring pharmaceutical companies to help pay for drug review

By Philip J. Hilts
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Wednesday approved a plan to require pharmaceutical companies to pay fees to the government to help cover the cost of reviewing the safety of new drugs and to speed up the process.

The legislation, approved unanimously by voice vote, marks a major change in the relationship between the Food and Drug Administration and the industry it monitors. The bill already has been approved by the House, and President Bush is committed to signing it.

The change is important not only for federal drug approvals, but for the precedent it sets as a way for federal regulatory agencies to raise money in difficult times.

Other regulatory agencies like the Environmental Protection Agency have considered expanding their fees on the companies they regulate to raise new money and are watching the FDA program to see if it succeeds.

In return for collecting what is expected to be about $300 million over the next five years from companies that want their drugs reviewed, Dr. David Kessler, the commissioner of food and drugs, agreed to hire 600 new examiners

Dispatch: "Is he still there?"
Miss Henry: "Yes."
Dispatch: "And does he have any weapons?"

Miss Henry then screamed and the phone sounded as though it was dropped.

Study: Abortion pill works as next-day contraceptive

BOSTON (AP) — A controversial French-made abortion drug is also a highly effective morning-after pill, preventing all pregnancies in women who have unprotected sex, a study found.

The drug, RU486, has not been approved for use in the United States.

A study conducted in Scotland and published in today's New England Journal of Medicine concluded that making the drug available for use after intercourse could reduce the need for abortions.

However, one anti-abortion group said it would fight this use of the drug, arguing that a morning-after pill is just another form of abortion.

The drug is available only in France, where it was introduced in 1988, and in Britain, Sweden and China.

The drug acts on the hormonal system to trigger abortions early in pregnancy. It causes the embryo or fetus to become separated from the uterine wall and be expelled.

When used as a morning-after pill, RU486 is believed to

STRAIN: How religious factor will play out in campaign is unclear

tor will eventually play out in the campaign, or what clues it provides to the challengers' characters or politics, is far from clear because Clinton and Gore are a new and different strain of Southern Baptist.

Unlike the last Southern Baptist presidential candidate, Jimmy Carter, whose forthright piety made many Americans uneasy, Clinton and Gore do not speak of being "born again" and having their hearts "cleansed" by Jesus.

And in many of their social views they are closer to the liberal Protestant churches than to the 15-million-member Southern Baptist Convention, controlled for more than a decade by leaders determined to uphold the literal reading of the Bible.

But for all their differences with the Southern Baptist Convention and other religious conservatives on issues like abortion, homosexual rights and public financing of the arts, the two Democrats are not shy about invoking their religious roots.

Their speeches at the Democratic National Convention in July were marbled with Biblical references. Their emotional personal narratives — Clinton's about his troubled childhood, Gore's about the automobile accident that nearly killed his 6-year-old son — echoed Baptists' testimonials about how they found salvation.

The Clinton campaign turned down requests for an interview on the candidate's religion, though Clinton's wife, Hillary, spoke recently about her own commitment to the Methodist Church.

Clinton has said that as a child, he felt a strong need to attend church, although his parents did not go themselves. After high school he became an "erratic churchgoer," he told U.S. News & World Report this summer.

But in November 1980, shortly after his defeat for a second term as governor, he became a member of Immanuel Baptist Church, the most prominent congregation in Little Rock, and began singing in the choir.

When he is in Little Rock he attends services there nearly every Sunday; campaigning on the road, he goes to other churches, sometimes non-Baptist ones. Clinton spoke at length about his faith in a television interview broadcast this summer ago on VISN, an interdenominational religious cable network, putting it this way:

"My faith tells me that all of us are sinners, and each of us has gone in our own way and fallen short of the glory of God. Religious faith has permitted me to believe in my continuing possibility of becoming a better person every day. If I didn't believe in God, if I weren't, in my view, weren't a Christian, if I didn't believe ultimately in the perfection of life after death, my life would have been that much more difficult."

Gore, who went to an Episcopal school during his Washington childhood, spent a year studying in the graduate Department of Religion at Vanderbilt University, originally a Methodist institution, while also working as a newspaper reporter.

In "Earth in the Balance," his book on environmental issues, the Tennessee Senator traces "the roots of the global crisis" to "an inner crisis that is, for lack of a better word, spiritual."

His book "just oozes religious faith," said the Rev. James M. Dunn, a friend who is executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs.

Besides religious reflections at beginning and end, the book contains a chapter, "Environmentalism of the Spirit," devoted to philosophical and Biblical teachings about the use of nature. "The duty to care for the earth is rooted in the fundamental relationship between God, creation and humankind," Gore writes.

Both the candidate and his wife, Tipper, are members of Mount Vernon Baptist Church in Arlington, Va., where she has served as a deaconess.

Both candidates appear at ease with the religious faith of their fellow citizens, unlike Michael S. Dukakis, whom the political historian Garry Wills called "the first truly secular candidate we had ever had for the presidency."

Despite Clinton's opposition to prayers in public school classrooms, for example, he seemed more nostalgic than indignant when he recalled in that cable interview that in junior high school, "I had to get other people to read the Scripture every day or do it myself."

Women, children tell of terrors of ethnic cleansing

TRAVNIK, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Hasnija Halilovic said the Serb fighters came in the night, wearing black masks.

They lined up about 200 Muslim women and children at gunpoint in three rows between a Muslim home and piled the house's contents nearby, she recalled.

Then both the furniture and the house were set ablaze.

For four hours, with fires in front of them and behind, the women and children stood helpless, screaming and pleading for their lives. They cried. They choked on the smoke. Their captors taunted them, threatening to shoot.

Finally, they were let go.

"No one was killed, but they were beating us," said Mrs. Halilovic, 60, her blue eyes ablaze with anger.

The scene occurred two weeks ago in Kljuc, a northern Bosnian town where thousands of Muslims from surrounding areas have been herded into a ghetto since last spring.

Now, in another example of the process known as "ethnic cleansing," the last Muslims are being expelled by Serb occupiers from their land and sent to Travnik, one of the few remaining Muslim-held cities in Bosnia.

A key part of ethnic cleansing is to instill terror, and the Serbs in Kljuc succeeded.

Mrs. Halilovic's daughter-in-law, Zijada, said the shock sent her into labor. The infant at her breast, Rashid, was born the next day.

Dressed in a green scarf and five layers of shirts, sweaters and skirts, Mrs. Halilovic stood Sunday with about 1,000 other bedraggled figures outside a decaying secondary school, now their temporary home in Travnik.

On this bleak, rainy day, they waited for their daily meal: rice.

This front-line Muslim city, squeezed into a narrow mountain valley adorned with a dozen minarets, has become a main refuge for people forced from their homes in Serb-controlled areas of Bosnia.

The city is patrolled by Croatian and Muslim troops, including units of the "Muslim Forces" who affect the bravado of Middle Eastern guerrillas by wrapping their heads in traditional headdresses.

An occasional rifle-toting volunteer from the Middle East or North Africa also can be seen in the streets, lending credence to Serb claims that "mujahedeen" from Islamic countries are fighting on the Muslim side. But such foreigners resolutely refused to talk to journalists.

There are now about 25,000 refugees in Travnik, normally a city of 35,000, said Meris Zulic of the humanitarian organization Merhamet. If the Serbs complete the ethnic cleansing around Banja Luka, capital of the self-proclaimed Serbian Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, 80,000 more Muslims and 40,000 Croats could join them, he said.

There already are shortages of food, shelter, toilets and clean water. With winter fast approaching, officials worry about bitter cold and disease.

Travnik has not been shelled recently, but nearby areas have been bombed, said Zeir Krnjic, a Muslim forces commander.

Mrs. Halilovic and other veterans of ethnic cleansing described their exodus from Serb-held areas as brutal.

After their night between the flames, the women and children holed up for another week in the crowded Muslim quarter of Kljuc.

Then, on a Thursday, about 3,000 Muslims from Kljuc and surrounding villages were put into 10 buses and eight trucks.

As they were put aboard, they were beaten by about 150 soldiers who demanded money or stole from their meager belongings, Mrs. Halilovic said.

"Then they were shooting at the trucks," she said. "One truck didn't arrive at all and we don't know what happened to those people."

At the frontier of Serb-controlled territory, she said, the refugees were ordered to abandon their remaining belongings and told to start walking over mountainous terrain toward Travnik, about 12 miles away.

After five hours on a treacherous track with steep cliffs, they reached a unit of Croatian soldiers.

Details of such journeys are impossible to verify, but they mesh with accounts from numerous other refugees and Western journalists who have traveled with them.

Zulic said large groups of such people have been arriving every two or three days since May, despite promises of Bosnia's Serbs to curb ethnic cleansing.

Croats and Muslims also have been accused of purging areas of other ethnic groups, but the Serbs have been condemned internationally most often.

Jagan wins violent Guyana election

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP) — Leftist Cheddi Jagan unseated President Desmond Hoyte in a violence-marred election, returns showed Wednesday.

Hoyte conceded defeat in a written statement issued Wednesday night after his backers earlier contested the results from Monday's vote in this South American nation on the Caribbean.

"I would urge all Guyanese, in keeping with our democratic culture, to accept the results of the elections," he said.

The balloting had sparked rioting and clashes between Jagan's Indian backers and Hoyte's black supporters. Police gunfire left two people dead.

Hoyte, 63, said the new president would be sworn in "immediately after the chairman of the elections commission formally announces the results of the poll — and not before. My information is that the announcement is likely to take place by the end of this week."

Jagan, 74, is a longtime Marxist and a champion of the poor. But he has backed capitalist-style economic reforms implemented by Hoyte.

Foreign observers, including former President Jimmy Carter, characterized the vote as Guyana's first fair elections since the 1960s.

With 96 percent of the ballots counted, Jagan's People's Progressive Party had 129,484 votes, or 54.2 percent of the total, to 98,918 or 41.4 percent for Hoyte's People's National Congress, according to the national elections commission. The rest was divided among nine small parties.

Elections Commissioner Rudy Collins said it would be "impossible" for Hoyte to overtake Jagan. The voting was for party parliamentary lists and the winning party's leading candidate is elected president.

Jagan told supporters in a Tuesday night TV broadcast that "all indications are we will win a landslide victory," but he urged them to remain patient.

The political uncertainty kept racial tensions high in this poor nation on South America's northeast coast. Police and soldiers patrolled the capital.

Security forces fired warning shots at a crowd that gathered outside the main courthouse, hurling rocks. Demonstrators included relatives of about 200 people arrested for violence and looting during Monday balloting.

No injuries were reported.

WEATHER SUMMARY

SHIFT: Cooler air blows in

(From 1A)

er fall weather, according to the NWS.

The front dropped temperatures into the lower 60s by late Wednesday afternoon. Overnight temperatures were expected to hit the lower 40s and today's high is only expected to be the mid-70s with northwest winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-40s, forecasters said.

Friday should be sunny and warmer, with a high in the lower 80s.

After an overnight low of 53, Wednesday's high reached 82, compared to the record high for that date of 99 set in 1979. The record low was 33 set in 1976.

STATE

The state's first real cold front crashed into the Panhandle Wednesday, bringing damaging winds, rain and reports of ice pellets in some areas.

Temperatures were climbing out of the 30s early Wednesday, when rain with "sleet or ice pellets" began falling near Amarillo, said Ed Andrade, meteorologist at the National Weather Service station in Amarillo.

Scattered pea-sized hail accompanied wind gusts up to 60 mph, which destroyed a billboard and threw debris carelessly into the streets.

Temperatures rose into the 50s and 60s by mid-afternoon in Amarillo as the lower temperatures headed south.

The storm, which is not being considered a freeze, lost intensity as it moved south. Andrade said the "southern portions of Texas will notice a drop in temperature and plenty of blowing dirt."

"It was a rapidly moving cold frontal system," said Ernie Pelto, a NWS spokesman in Lubbock. "It's the first significant one of the season, but it's nothing really out of the ordinary for October."

Andrade said temperatures were expected to drop into the 30s overnight, but skies should warm up to the 70s and low 80s by the end of the week.

Amarillo police reported only one minor weather-related wreck Wednesday. The blowing dirt kept many residents indoors.

A wind-fueled grass fire believed to have been caused by lightning had burned a section of land west of Miami.

NATION

The season's first widespread snowstorm rolled out of the northern Rockies onto the Plains on Wednesday with high wind and freezing weather.

One to 5 inches had fallen over central and eastern Wyoming by the time the storm moved out of the state at midday.

In Colorado, foothills west of Denver and some suburban lawns were laced with white and highways north of Colorado Springs were slippery. Winter Park, site of one of the state's major ski areas, got 4 inches of snow, the National Weather Service reported.

Wind gusting to near 50 mph combined with temperatures in the low 30s to create a wind chill near zero around Colorado Springs, Colo.

In western South Dakota, Deadwood, Custer and higher elevations in the Black Hills reported 2 to 4 inches of snow, the weather service said.

On the plains of western Nebraska, 1 inch of snow was reported at Scottsbluff.

By midday, showers and occasional thunderstorms extended over the panhandles of Texas and Oklahoma and into the central Plains, with rain changing to snow in western sections of Kansas and Nebraska.

Showers extended over western South Dakota and southern Minnesota.

Heaviest rainfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. CDT was 0.77 of an inch at Russell, Kan.

Advisories for frost or freezing weather were in effect overnight into Thursday for eastern Colorado, southwestern Colorado and the western third of Kansas, the weather service said.

In Texas, along the eastern edge of the advancing cold air mass, wind gusted to 55 mph at Dalhart and 52 mph at Lubbock.

Showers also extended over Florida's Panhandle and Peninsula and along the lower Texas Gulf Coast.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

saying that exports from Texas alone totaled $47 billion last year with $15 billion of that amount going to Mexico.

Salinas told the crowd that "we can all win with this agreement" while Mulroney called free trade "the pathway to prosperity."

As leaders of the three nations looked on, their trade ministers initialed the completed text in what was largely a symbolic ceremony. Under U.S. law, Bush cannot actually sign the agreement before Dec. 17.

Critics of the trade pact noted that a similar "initialing" ceremony was not held when the United States negotiated a free-trade agreement with Canada in 1988.

Calling the event "pure political theater," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., a key congressional critic of the accord, said, "If the Bush administration spent as much time and energy negotiating the NAFTA as it spends holding campaign events built around it, we would have a far better NAFTA."

If approved by lawmakers in all three countries, the trade agreement is scheduled to go into effect on Jan. 1, 1994, beginning a process of removing all tariffs and other barriers to trade, services and investment between the three countries over a 15-year period.

The pact is designed to create the world's largest and richest free-trade zone, covering 360 million people.

American labor unions and many environmentalists strongly oppose the pact, charging that it will cost up to a half-million American jobs as more companies move their operations to Mexico to take advantage of low wages and lax enforcement of environmental laws.

The administration disputes that view, arguing that the agreement will end up creating more jobs than it loses as U.S. companies are able to boost their exports to Mexico, already America's third largest foreign market.

While the free-trade agreement is not politically popular in auto states such as Michigan, the administration sees the deal as a political plus in border states such as Texas and California, where large numbers of Mexican-American voters support the pact out of the belief it will boost living standards in Mexico.

"This is a very positive issue for us and the president," said Bush campaign spokeswoman Torie Clarke. "This is the trade agreement that everyone predicted couldn't be done in an election year and he got it done."

Democratic candidate Bill Clinton on Sunday came out in support of the free-trade agreement although he said additional steps should be taken to protect American jobs and the environment.

He said his objections could be met without re-negotiating the pact, a position that disappointed the AFL-CIO and environmental groups who have charged that the current deal is so fundamentally flawed that it will have to be renegotiated.

Clinton told reporters in Little Rock, Ark., on Wednesday that the pact "can be a good thing for America if we change our economic policy to rebuild American industry here at home and if we get the kind of guarantees we need on environmental and labor standards in Mexico and a real plan to help the people who will be dislocated by it."

Texas, with its 32 electoral votes, is a critical state for Bush as he tries to overtake Clinton. Clarke cited a new poll published today in the Washington Times that showed Bush leading in Texas with 40 percent of those surveyed compared to 35 percent for Clinton and 14 percent for Perot.

Free-trade pact's key facts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are key facts about the North American Free Trade Agreement that would link the United States, Mexico and Canada economically.

■ WHAT IT DOES: Tariffs and other barriers to the movement of goods, services and investment among the three countries would be eliminated, creating the world's largest and richest trading bloc, covering 360 million people.

■ TIMING: The pact, which must be approved by the legislatures of all three nations, would take effect Jan. 1, 1994. Congress is not scheduled to begin consideration of the proposal until next spring at the earliest.

■ TARIFFS: All tariffs would be eliminated over a 15-year period, with industries that suffer the most from import competition getting the longest time to adjust. About half of all U.S. exports to Mexico would be eligible for duty-free treatment within five years. Currently, U.S. tariffs on Mexican products average less than 4 percent, while Mexican tariffs on American products average 10 percent.

■ ENVIRONMENT: The agreement states that national and state laws protecting the environment, health or safety cannot be overruled by the pact. Environmentalists have expressed concerns that the agreement would increase pollution along the U.S.-Mexico border unless Mexico beefs up its enforcement.

■ JOB PROTECTION: The Bush administration has pledged that U.S. workers who lose their jobs because of the trade pact would be eligible for retraining assistance either through existing or expanded federal programs.

■ AUTOS: To qualify for duty-free treatment, the North American content of cars, now set at 50 percent, would have to reach 62.5 percent after eight years. This would prevent a country such as Japan from shipping parts to Mexico for assembly into cars destined for the United States.

■ AGRICULTURE: U.S. farmers would be given 15 years to adjust to added competition from Mexican producers of such crops as peanuts, broccoli, cauliflower, onions, orange juice concentrate, melons, sugar and asparagus. Mexican import licenses, which cover about 25 percent of U.S. exports, would be dropped immediately.

■ FINANCIAL SERVICES: U.S. and Canadian banks, virtually shut out of Mexico at present, would be allowed to establish wholly owned subsidiaries in Mexico.

■ TEXTILES: Mexico would be able to escape high duties on shipments to the United States and Canada if the clothing is made from yarns and fabrics that come from North America.

■ TRUCKING: Mexico would allow foreigners to invest in its trucking firms and buses and truckers with international cargo would be given "open roads" throughout the continent.

PILL: Drug's effective morning after, study finds prevent implantation of the fertilized egg in the wall of the uterus.

In the study, doctors from the University of Edinburgh compared RU486 to high doses of the birth-control pill, now the standard morning-after approach, but one that frequently causes nausea and doesn't always work.

"People are trying to find a highly effective form of post-coital contraceptive that is easy to use and free from side effects," said Dr. Anna Glasier, who directed the study. "It would seem that RU486 meets those requirements."

The research was conducted on 800 women who sought emergency contraception within three days of having unprotected intercourse.

Half the women were given RU486 and half got birth control pills. None of the women taking RU486 got pregnant, compared with four pregnancies among those receiving birth control pills. RU486 was also less likely to cause nausea.

The main drawback of RU486 was that it delayed the start of menstrual periods by a few days in about 40 percent of women, researchers said. This caused anxiety in those worried about whether the treatment had actually worked.

Glasier said the World Health Organization will soon start a study to see if a lower dose of RU486 than the one they tried will be as effective in preventing pregnancy.

Dr. David A. Grimes of the University of Southern California said the drug is a contraceptive, not an abortive agent, because pregnancy does not begin until an embryo is implanted in the uterus.

"I think this will change the political landscape for this medicine," he said. "It is a use that may prevent abortion rather than cause abortion."

But Richard Glasow of the National Right to Life Committee called the study "a blatant attempt to improve the public image of a dangerous abortion technique."

He said that proponents of the drug "are just playing word games to try to change the debate" when they argue that life begins at implantation, not fertilization.

FEES: Bill requires industry to help pay for reviews to speed drug approval. Kessler said the FDA's goal is to cut the time of drug review in half — to six months for the most important drugs and 12 months for others.

The FDA receives about 100 applications for new drugs, not including generic ones, each year, and approves 30.

The plan is considered politically feasible because the companies may make millions of dollars at the same time they pay new fees to the government. The FDA estimates that companies may earn an average of $10 million for each additional month they have a drug on the market.

Kessler said Wednesday that the action was "a major milestone for this agency" and for government regulatory agencies facing increasing workloads at the same time budgets are cut.

The FDA said the number of new drugs needing review among biotechnology products alone was expected to increase 10-fold over the next five years. "If we did nothing, the time it would take to approve drugs would increase dramatically," Kessler said in an interview Wednesday.

Gerald J. Mossinghoff, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, the trade group for the drug industry, said Wednesday that "a concerted effort over the past several months has enabled Congress to enact into law this historic agreement" which he said would get life-saving drugs to patients faster.

Richard D. Godown, president of the Industrial Biotechnology Association, a Washington lobbying group for biotechnology companies, said the fee law was "a landmark in cooperation between a regulatory agency, lawmakers in Congress and the private sector."

The agreement on "user fees" came after increasing tension and frustration in the past several years over the agency's inability to fulfill its legal obligations.

Many regulations required by law have simply been shelved because the agency has not had the money to issue all the required regulations.

Both government and industry agreed that the agency was underfinanced. At the same time it has been unable to meet all its statutory obligations, the number of new drug applications is increasing rapidly, especially because of the boom in biotechnology products.

There were barriers to establishing the fees previously. Industry was unwilling to pay fees if the money would not go directly to review of their products.

The companies feared that the money would instead be deposited in the Treasury and used to reduce the government's deficit without offering specific help to the Food and Drug Administration or drug makers.

Government budget and taxing mechanisms created serious technical problems among the White House, the congressional appropriators and the Congressional tax committees.

The logjam was broken this year when staff members from the offices of Reps. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., and John D. Dingell, D-Mich., and Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, joined the FDA to convince industry officials the plan could work.

Currently, companies are not charged when they submit applications for drug approval; the agency's budget must cover the cost of reviewing the applications.

The new law, the Prescription Drug User Fee Act of 1992, will charge companies $100,000 for each drug application, rising to $233,000 per application five years from now.

It will also charge $50,000 to each company annually, rising to $138,000 five years from now. It would also charge $6,000 annually for each product already on the market, rising to $14,000 five years from now.

The law will expire in five years, Kessler said, so that if the agency fails to make the goals, it can be held accountable when a new law is drafted.

CALL: Police release tape

(From 1A)

Midland Police Sgt. B.G. Johnson said the tape brings the case no closer to being solved than it was a year ago.

"We have interviewed all the boys she dated, or the ones we know about," he said. "We are not one inch closer to solving this."

Miss Henry disappeared on the afternoon of Aug. 19, 1991, after making the 911 call at approximately 2 p.m.

After arriving at her residence, 3610 Apollo Court, police found the garage door open, the back door unlocked and no signs of a struggle.

Two hours later, Ralph and Lynn Henry returned home to find the lights, television and stereo on, the dogs inside and their daughter missing.

The next day, Miss Henry's car, a 1987 Ford Bronco II, was found at the Midland International Airport, with her purse inside.

A nationwide ad campaign conducted in June failed to produce any concrete leads for police nor did two anonymous phone calls made to the police in August that alluded to the missing girl.

El Al investigators find 40 bodies, black box

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Investigators found the charred and dented flight data recorder of an El Al Boeing 747 Wednesday, saying the "black box" could provide clues to why the jet slammed into a suburban apartment block.

The briefcase-sized box was found as hundreds of searchers, sifting carefully through an unstable mountain of rubble and wreckage, pulled more bodies from the apartment building destroyed in Sunday's crash.

By Wednesday night, 40 corpses had been removed from the smoldering rubble, but 250 people were still unaccounted for, according to City Hall spokesman Robert Kaercher. He said the missing were presumed dead.

If confirmed, the toll would make it the world's deadliest air disaster in terms of deaths on the ground.

Authorities said a more precise casualty toll was impossible because an unknown number of illegal immigrants lived in the low-income apartment block.

The recovery was also slowed because searchers were finding bits and pieces of bodies in the rubble, charred in the intense heat from the fuel-laden jumbo jet that exploded on impact.

"The large number of victims of the jumbo jet disaster that cannot be identified will likely be buried in a mass grave," the Amsterdam newspaper De Telegraaf said in its Wednesday editions.

The newspaper quoted Amsterdam Mayor Ed van Thijn as saying: "We fear a tragic form of mass burial will take place."

The Israeli airline said it was setting up an emergency fund to assist survivors of victims of the crash.

Authorities said they hoped the flight recorder would provide details of the last moments before the Boeing 747-200 cargo plane crashed into the 10-story building 10 miles east of Schiphol Airport, destroying 80 of its 230 apartments and heavily damaging 150 others.

At a news conference Wednesday, Henk Wolleswinkel, a senior inspector at the Dutch aviation authority, said only one of the plane's starboard engines had been found, not two as reported earlier. He said a tail cone also fell off, and "that has most likely led to the confusion."

He declined to comment on a Dutch television report quoting a Schiphol Airport official as saying the same El Al jumbo jet landed at the airport July 24 with one engine on fire.

Wolleswinkel said the outer starboard engine was found Monday in a lake southeast of Amsterdam and showed no signs of fire. "At this moment there are no positive indications there was something wrong with the engine," he said.

But a retired engineer for KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, who said he witnessed the crash, told Dutch television the plane was missing both engines its right side before it went down.

The flight recorder was sent to the Air Accidents Investigation Branch of Britain's Department of Transportation. The organization is considered one of the world's best at interpreting flight data recordings.

Officials could not say how long it would take to analyze the data.

Officials initially said the flight recorder was badly damaged and was unlikely to provide much information about the moments preceding the crash.

But Wolleswinkel said that, although the box had been exposed to high temperatures, it was cleaned up and, "looked better than I dared to hope."

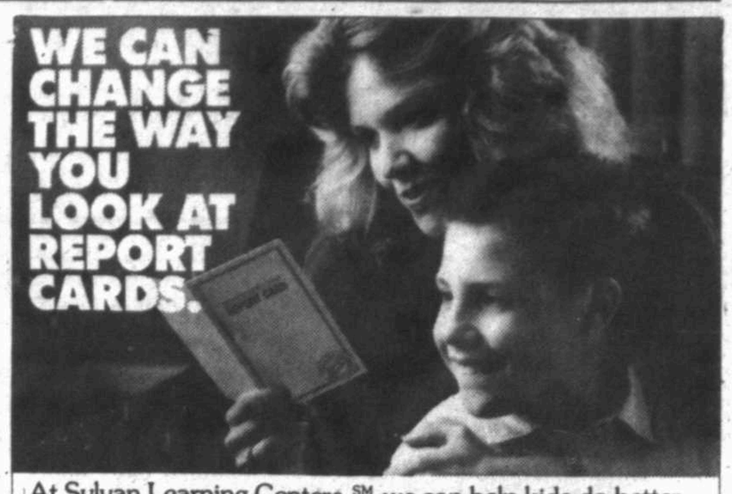

"But that still doesn't say anything about the quality of the contents," he added.

Located in the plane's tail, the flight recorder would have recorded technical data as the plane circled twice over metropolitan Amsterdam before plowing into the apartment complex in the southern suburb of Bijlmermeer.

The plane's voice recorder was still missing, said Hans Scholten, a spokesman for the Dutch aviation authority.

Wolleswinkel said there was an "intensive migration of birds" in the area the night the El Al jetliner went down, but that there was no indication the birds were sucked into the turbines, thereby causing the crash.

The Boeing Co. said Tuesday its officials met in Seattle with some operators of 747 jumbo jets two weeks before Sunday's crash to discuss engine mount problems.

Second small bomb explodes in London

LONDON (AP) — A small bomb under a sidewalk exploded in London's theater district shortly before curtain call Wednesday night, smashing windows but causing no serious injuries, officials said. It was the second blast in the area in the same day.

The London Ambulance Service said that "about a dozen" people were treated for shock at the scene.

Five people were treated for minor injuries and shock after a small bomb went off in a garbage can in the area before dawn.

No group immediately claimed responsibility for either blast, but telephone tipsters had warned police. The Irish Republican Army has planted bombs in central London as part of a campaign to disrupt British life and pressure the government to relinquish control over Northern Ireland.

The second blast occurred at about 7:15 p.m. (2:15 p.m. EDT), shortly before shows were to begin and near a major street intersection crowded with tourists, theatergoers and commuters, a police spokesman said.

Chris Remington, 27, visiting from Wisconsin, said it "sounded like a thunderclap."

Commander George Churchill-Coleman, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorism branch, said the "small improvised device," concealed behind a telephone junction box. He described damage from the blast as "minimal."

Police said a warning was telephoned to a local radio station about the same time device went off. Police evacuated the immediate area after the bomb went off following reports another bomb may have been planted.

The nearby Dominion Theater was evacuated and several clubs were closed.

Nevertheless, the curtain went up as scheduled for a performance of "Blood Brothers" at the Phoenix Theatre, about 40 yards from the explosion.

The explosion was on Flitcroft Street, close to the junction of Charing Cross Road, Tottenham Court Road and Oxford Street, an area home to many bookstores and theaters and is popular with tourists.

Choices for jurists are vital to justice

Midland voters will be taking part this fall in the selection of jurists to a total of seven positions on the state Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, and the 8th District Court of Appeals.

As in past elections, the decisions to be made are vital to the quality of justice dispensed by the appellate courts of Texas.

Supreme Court, Justice

PLACE 1 — Oscar Mauzy, the Democratic incumbent, has been widely known for his liberal tendencies, including being closely identified with the trial lawyers. He obviously has his eyes on the chief justice's slot on the court now held by outstanding jurist Tom Phillips.

This time, however, Mauzy faces tough competition from Craig Enoch, the Republican nominee, who is our recommendation for the court. Enoch now serves as chief justice of the Fifth District Court of Appeals in Dallas and has performed admirably during his term there. He previously has been endorsed by newspapers in Abilene, Amarillo, Austin, Bryan/College Station, Corpus Christi, Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, Lubbock, Longview, San Angelo, San Antonio, Tyler, and Victoria.

PLACE 2 — Eugene Cook, the GOP incumbent, faces Rose Spector, a San Antonio democrat, in this race. But Cook, who was elected to the court in 1988, has performed capably and gets good marks from lawyers on both sides of the political spectrum.

Voters should case their ballots for Eugene Cook.

PLACE 3 — This race is a tossup between Jack Hightower, a Democrat who's on the court now, and Republican challenger John D. Montgomery of Houston. Since coming to the court, Hightower has operated as a balancing vote between conservative and liberal factions on the court, sometimes voting with one side and sometimes with the other.

In that regard, he is considered important to equal justice on the Supreme Court and voters should cast their ballots for Jack Hightower.

Courts of Appeals

PLACE 1 — Elected to an unexpired term on the court in 1990, Charles F. "Charlie" Baird, a Democrat, is facing opposition from GOP nominee Joseph A. "Joe" Devany of Dallas, presiding justice of the Court of Appeals 5th District.

Both of the jurists are competent and qualified, and there is no compelling reason to replace Baird. On the contrary, during the time after his election to the unexpired term he wrote more than 165 opinions, while maintaining the most current court docket and even accepting cases from other courts. Baird says modestly, "I've just rolled up my sleeves and worked hard." It shows.

Voters should cast their ballots for Charles F. "Charlie" Baird.

PLACE 2 — Democrat Morris L. Overstreet was also elected in 1990 and is the first African-American elected by popular vote to a statewide office in the history of Texas.

Overstreet's opponent, Republican nominee Sue Lagarde of Dallas, a justice on the Fifth District Court of Appeals, is also a well qualified jurist. But again, there is no compelling reason not to re-elect Overstreet.

Voters should cast their ballots for Morris L. Overstreet.

PLACE 3 — Appointed to the court in 1991 by Gov. Ann Richards, Pete Benavides is being opposed for a six-year term by Republican nominee Lawrence "Larry" Meyers.

Democratic nominee Benavides points proudly to the fact that he is the only judge on the Court of Criminal Appeals who served as a district judge prior to moving onto the court. He also points to his service, having written over 500 opinions since his appointment.

Again there is no compelling reason to change. Voters should cast their ballots for Pete Benavides.

This race pits Susan Larsen, who was appointed to the Eighth Court after the Democratic primary election earlier this year, against GOP nominee Marc Skeen of Midland, an attorney in the firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy Laughlin & Browder, Inc.

Skeen contends that through Ms. Larsen's television ads, campaign literature and speeches, she "has made it clear that her background has been limited to representing certain classes of litigants and that she seeks judicial office to advance the political agenda of certain special interests." Larsen, who is closely identified with Supreme Court Justice Oscar Mauzy, was with the El Paso Legal Assistance Society and a law firm before going into private practice in 1988.

Skeen says that justice must be administered fairly to all individuals and groups and that he will do exactly that. A graduate of Texas Tech University and Baylor University School of Law, Skeen served for two years as law clerk to a senior federal judge, sitting by designation with the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. He joined the Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder firm in 1983.

Ms. Larsen classifies herself as a liberal and says, "I would like the court to be more respectful of jury verdicts and the jury system."

On that point, Skeen responds, "I feel the court's role is to set aside jury verdicts when the facts mandate it." He adds, "The partisanship of those who seek to use the judiciary to achieve legislative goals must be stopped."

The impartial application of the law is critical to our system of justice. Marc Skeen promises to apply the law in that manner. Voters should cast their ballots for him.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Congressman comments on politics

EDITOR'S NOTE: We are indebted to a reader who provided us with the following excerpts from comments made by Rep. Otis Pike (D-N.Y.) when announcing in 1978 that he would not be seeking reelection after 18 years in Congress. We, like the contributor of this piece, believe Pike's comments are thought provoking and that much of his commentary is as pertinent today as when he made the announcement.

Why am I getting out even though I believe you would return me to Congress?

There is no one reason.

I have been a public servant for 25 years and it's time to do something different — There's time for at least one more career — People will vote this year who have never known another Congressman. How would they know whether I was good or bad if they never had anything to compare me with?

Last year, my attendance was 96 percent, but it wasn't the best.

Being expected to put in a full day's work at the office and a full night's appearance on the banquet or meeting circuit each and very day and night can be, and has come to be, a bore.

It may be a sign of "old" age, but people are beginning to "bug" me more. They are asking their government to do more for them and are willing to do less for themselves. I hear from about 300 people a day and no one "requests" or "asks" for my help anymore — they DEMAND IT!

The people who bug me most are those who are absolutely, positively, sure that they're right on issues that to me are very close or troubling. I have often wished that I could see issues as clear and one-sided as either doctrinaire liberals or conservatives do. It is more difficult being able to see some validity on both sides of an agreement and then trying to work out a compromise.

I feel increasingly uneasy with the never-ending fiscal irresponsibility of both political parties. The Republicans pay lip service to fiscal responsibility and then vote overwhelmingly to increase defense spending, start new pension programs, revenue sharing programs, increase tax credits and tax cuts, every one of which must, of course, increase both our deficit and our debt. The Democrats vote to increase welfare programs, education programs, health programs and recognize every national need except the need to pay our bills. The House is not a comfortable place for a Congressman who believes that people should work when they can, earn what they can, save what they can, pay their bills and balance their budgets. And that nations should too.

I don't enjoy political campaigns the way I used to.

I have absolutely come to dread the fund raising aspect of campaigning. I have always relied on a few dear friends who gave me their fine efforts, and money and they have given enough — I can't ask them to give any more.

I am tired of pretending that the accumulated wisdom of the ages has been secretly entrusted ONLY to Democrats — and to being accused of "treason" if I should say some Republican Congressman was great.

The work of Congressmen has increased greatly and that's OK; so has our pay. But so much is nit picking trivial! So many of the votes are junk and our lives are to a large extent controlled by a small group of procedural nit pickers — there are plenty of important issues, but I'm weary of wasting time on drivel.

Candor compels me to admit I'll get a darned good pension when I retire.

Will I miss the Congress? Lord yes, I'll miss it! Congressmen are treated — in Washington at least — like little tin Jesuses. It's been a real ego trip; but I've taken the trip and it's time to cruise on to other waters.

Thank you for consenting to elect me for 18 years. — Otis Pike (D-N.Y.) 1978.

Cinematic novel illustrates tension of politics

WASHINGTON — If you crave relief from the tedium of 1992, spend a few hours in 1757. The new movie made of James Fenimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans" is not restful, but it is a bracing immersion in some great American themes, and in the company of a mythic figure who flits soundlessly across the forest floor of our national dreams.

Will

The movie made from Cooper's remarkably cinematic novel (it is all pursuit and rescue, with the rustle of gingham skirts in the wilderness) illuminates today's politics. It illustrates a tension — think of it as the call of the forest against the claims of community — that still conditions our politics.

The movie opens with a panorama of (supposedly) the New York wilderness beyond Albany 235 years ago. Actually, the setting is the Great Smokey Mountains of North Carolina, in one of the few remaining old growth forests. But this Arcadia is not Eden. It is infested with British and French forces enlisting rival Indian tribes in their contest for control of the continent.

One brief scene in "The Last of the Mohicans" concisely explains the first of the Americans. A dandified British officer is haranguing some buckskin-clad colonials, hectoring them to join the fight against the French. One man in particular is skeptical. The officer becomes furious: "You call yourself a patriot and loyal subject to the crown?"

Hawkeye, laconic: "Don't call myself subject to much at all."

Hawkeye was a political problem. Still is.

A distinctively American consciousness was quickened during the struggle of the British with the French in North America. One young Virginian, name of Washington, acquired in that struggle military experience that soon would be put in the service of that consciousness. Ever since then, America's political problem has been that most Americans do not feel, or want to feel, subject to much at all. It is hard to govern a nation of Hawkeyes.

"The Last of the Mohicans" was published in the magical year of 1826, the 50th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, the year when, on the Fourth of July, the second and third presidents died hours apart. The passing of the Founders' generation plunged the young Republic into anxiety about the malleability of its character and the perishable nature of its virtue. Everything precious seemed as liable to vanish as the wilderness was vanishing under the assault of ax and plow.

Cooper was born to wealth in America's Bethlehem: Cooperstown, N.Y., mythic birthplace of baseball. He went to Yale and then to Europe, the expatriate's path taken by many other Americans worried that American society was too thin, too lacking in material for literature. But it was on the frontier, where society was thinnest, that he gave America its first and most enduring romance. It is the romance of life lived on the edge, on the frontier where law and social convention barely constrain, and where the individual can step entirely away from both, into the fringe of the forest.

The movie is rated "R" because of the violence which, although graphic, is not gratuitous. It is part of the movie's meticulous realism, a convincing re-creation of pre-modern war comparable to the battle scenes of "Henry V" and "Glory." This was a heroic age because beyond the mostly coastal settlements America could be a terrifying place.

Midlander thinks private school choice is solution

By now, everyone has heard that American public school students do poorly compared to students in other developed nations, especially in math and science. Yet Midlanders want very much to believe that our public schools are significantly better than average. Midland Independent School District (MISD) administrators work hard to maintain this wishful thinking, with the frequent help of the Reporter-Telegram, as in two front-page articles on Tuesday.

We like to hear that "MISD rates in top half of nation's schools," so that was the headline, even though the text of the article contradicted it three times in three paragraphs. MISD is "near the top half," "higher than 45 percent of public school districts," and scored 95.2 on a scale where 100 is average. I trust that you will run a correction.

In a comparison story on ACT scores, we learned that MISD students averaged 21.5 compared to 20.6 nationally. You then quoted Joe Cummins of MISD: "even 1 point... is significant." (But of course, 21.5 is less than one point better than 20.6.) Cummins tried to make a mountain out of this molehill of a difference, informing us that "lots of students do not score at the national average." Yeah, about half of them, I would guess.

The clear-thinking citizen must not be blinded by hometown pride or distracted by MISD's slick marketing. Public schools are government-run monopolies. That's why they are inefficient and mediocre (despite the valiant efforts of many dedicated teachers). Splitting hairs about fractions of a point just drives the point home. Private school choice is the only solution.

A new Gallup Poll shows that 70 percent of Americans support school choice, including 86 percent of blacks and 84 percent of hispanics.

Morality starts with telling the whole story, man says

In regard to the letter "Stanton woman tires of hearing presidential lies" in the Sept. 27th Midland Reporter-Telegram, family values and morality start with telling the whole story.

Where were Oradell's letters when Hussein laid waste to the Kuwait infrastructure and ignited the oil fields? Where was her letter on the dictator of Panama (Noriega) enriching himself in the illegal drug trade through the misery of others?

Could she also tell me, and America, where thousands of our young men were slaughtered in the four invasions of the last 12 years?

Oradell's letter smacks of Democratic, bleeding-heart liberal, 1960's anti-war Jane Fonda drivel. Come to think of it, was that her and Slick Willy (Clinton) sitting next to Jane Fonda on that North Vietnamese tank?

Man observes political indifference to truth

During this time of heated political rhetoric, are there any in politics who are guided by the saying of Socrates, who wrote, "... for surely we are not now simply contending in order that my view or that of yours may prevail, but I presume that we ought both of us be fighting for the truth."

The late psychoanalyst, Karen Horney, M.D., accurately, I think, describes the characters involved with continuing charges and counter-charges when she wrote, "The compulsiveness of the person's need for indiscriminate supremacy makes them indifferent to truth, whether concerning himself, others or facts."

Observing the American political process is a wonder.

Rebels kill 6 after Guerrilla boss gets life

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A military tribunal on Wednesday convicted and sentenced Abimael Guzman, leader of the deadly Shining Path guerrilla movement, to life in prison without parole, a government communique said.

Defiant rebels killed four airmen and two policemen hours before the judgment was announced.

The tribunal, after a secret 10-day trial at a naval base on a heavily guarded island off Lima, convicted Guzman of treason. Ten other rebel leaders also were convicted of the charge and received the same sentence, according to the communique from the Supreme Military Tribunal, Peru's highest military court.

"The terrorist criminal Abimael Guzman has been sentenced to perpetual imprisonment by a special judge of the navy on the charge of treason to his homeland as maximum leader of the so-called Communist Party of Peru, or the Shining Path" the communique said.

President Alberto Fujimori, waging a crackdown against the rebels, had said Tuesday that the 57-year-old rebel leader would never be eligible for parole.

Guzman is founder and leader of the Maoist group whose brutal 12-year insurgency has caused 25,000 deaths and $22 billion in economic damage.

His capture Sept. 12, at a safe house in an upper middle-class Lima neighborhood, was a stunning blow to the insurgency. But experts expect the fighting to continue for years.

Guzman was tried at a naval base on San Lorenzo island near Lima. During the trial he was held in a 5-by-5 foot steel cage. It was the first trial of a rebel leader by a military tribunal.

Alfredo Crespo, Guzman's lawyer, has said he would appeal Guzman's sentence. Fujimori has said the nine-man Supreme Military Tribunal would have until Oct. 14 to rule on an appeal.

Guzman and two rebel leaders, including Elena Iparraguirre, his companion, were tried and sentenced at the naval base, the communique said.

Four rebel leaders were convicted in a military tribunal in Arequipa, Peru's second largest city 465 miles southeast of Lima. Four others were tried and convicted in a military court in Puno, 525 miles southeast of the capital, according to the communique.

The communique did not say where Guzman or the two convicted with him would serve. It said the four tried in Arequipa would be imprisoned at an air force base in the city and the four convicted in Puno would serve their sentences at a new maximum-security prison near that Andean city.

Hours before Guzman's conviction and sentencing was scheduled, rebels shot to death four airmen and wounded a fifth as they were buying supplies for their base at a public food market in the working-class district of La Victoria, police said.

In another attack at the same hour, 8:30 a.m., police said Shining Path assassins shot dead two policemen on foot patrol on the northern outskirts of Lima.

A midday, a 13-pound bomb exploded outside the University of San Marcos in downtown Lima, injuring a street vendor and shattering windows. Police tore down rebel banners bearing the hammer and sickle that hung in a nearby park.

In a message delivered to The Associated Press this week, the Shining Path threatened Peruvians who celebrated Guzman's capture.

"We will freeze your laughter, and don't complain. Learn to suffer, learn to weep, learn to die," the pamphlet said.

The bearded, bespectacled Guzman is known to his fanatical followers as "Presidente Gonzalo" and the "the Fourth Sword of Marxism," after Marx, Lenin and Mao.

When police presented him to the news media on Sept. 24, the former philosophy professor called his capture "a bend in a long road" that would not stop communist revolution in Peru.

"There are those who see this as a great triumph," Guzman said, referring to his arrest. "They are dreaming. Let them dream."

Experts on the insurgency say that without Guzman at the helm his movement most likely will lose steam, but they say that could take as long as 10 years.

In the meantime, they warn that Peru should brace for revenge attacks by the rebels, perhaps of a ferocity unseen in this war-scarred nation.

Guzman founded the Shining Path in 1970 as a splinter of the Peruvian Communist Party. He concluded that armed revolution was the only way to achieve profound social change in Peru.

Fischer takes decisive lead in chess showdown

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Bobby Fischer, deftly using a defense that helped him beat Boris Spassky in a key game 20 years ago, defeated his old rival again Wednesday to take a 6-3 lead in their $5 million chess rematch.

Spassky, playing white in game 16, got into severe time trouble late in the game and resigned after Fischer's 34th move.

It was Fischer's first victory in five games since the match moved to the Yugoslav capital from the Adriatic coast resort of Sveti Stefan. Spassky won once in Belgrade, and the three previous games before Wednesday ended in draws.

Draws do not count under special rules devised largely by Fischer. The first player to win 10 games takes the $3.35 million top prize. The loser gets the remainder.

The next game is scheduled for Thursday.

Spassky opened with his usual pawn to queen 4, and Fischer responded with the Benoni Defense for the first time in the match.

Fischer used the Benoni against Spassky in Game 3 of their 1972 world championship match, when he was down 2-0. Fischer won the game, his first victory against Spassky, and went on to take the match and the title.

On Wednesday, the opening evolved by transposition into the King's Indian Defense.

Experts watching the match initially saw Fischer's sacrifice of a knight for a pawn on the ninth move as an innovation. But Fischer called it "an old opening trap, 20 or 25 years or more old."

Spassky questioned the wisdom of the move by black, and Fischer responded: "All I know is that I remember seeing a game or two where black was winning or should have been winning."

Extremist attacks threaten Egyptian tourism boom

By Zina Hemady
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — Egyptian officials are scrambling to contain potential damage to a booming tourism industry from a series of attacks on foreign visitors by Muslim extremists.

A record 3 million tourists visited Egypt, land of the Nile and an archaeological treasure trove, last year. The $3 billion they brought in made tourism the most lucrative sector of its economy.

The flood of tourists continues. Hotel bookings are hard to come by. Flights from Europe and elsewhere are full. And officials hope to double the visitor figures within five years to create new jobs and solve some of the country's grave economic problems.

That's why eight recent attacks by extremists — until now far less serious than bombing and other terrorist incidents in some European countries — is so worrisome.

By far the most serious of the attacks occurred Tuesday: an explosion in the bathroom of a train at a station in southern Egypt. The Interior Ministry said the device went off prematurely and killed the bomber and an Egyptian father with his 3-year-old son and wounded 10 people.

The latest of the attacks on sites where foreigners frequent was most distressing to tourism officials: firearms were used for the first time. On Oct. 2, four extremists shot at a steamer carrying 140 Germans on a Nile cruise through southern Egypt. Three Egyptians were wounded, none seriously.

Officials initially tried to camouflage the bullets as strays from the guns of feuding families. They later admitted religious extremists carried out the attack.

No foreigners have been seriously injured in the attacks on tourists. They consisted of throwing homemade bombs at buses or planting them near monuments or public squares, an attempted stabbing and the shooting of the Germans' tour boat.

Speaking shortly before that attack, Tourism Minister Fouad Sultan played down the importance of the extremist threat in a speech to the American Society of Travel Agents meeting in Cairo.

"There isn't an area in the world where you don't have some kind of trouble," Sultan told 5,200 convention delegates, mostly from the United States.

But "this doesn't mean that the fundamentalists will be allowed to break the law and wreak havoc. Whenever they go overboard, the security forces will crack down on them."

Even in Cairo's state-owned newspapers, that's seen as part of the problem. Some commentators criticize the government for handling the burgeoning Muslim militancy as nothing more than a security question, without addressing underlying economic and social failings.

Al-Gamaa al-Islamiya, an umbrella organization for extremist fundamentalists, says the security crackdown prompted the attacks on tourists, to embarrass the government.

Mohammed Bekir of the Egyptian tourism office in Frankfurt said Egypt's problem in Europe is one of image.

Speaking by telephone, he said Europeans are aware that violence can happen anywhere. But the idea of Islamic terrorists is riveting, he said.

"European media portray Muslim extremists as the only threat to European society," Bekir said.

Egypt's government is campaigning vigorously to portray the country as a haven of peace in a tumultuous Middle East. The American travel agents' convention, the trade's largest international gathering, met under the motto "Travel the Pathway to Peace."

Tourism Minister Sultan may have succeeded in allaying fears, but with every new incident they are revived.

"Lots of people have called us. They're worried and want to cancel their trips," said Leila Wasfi, spokeswoman at the Egyptian Embassy in Bonn.

Wasfi and her colleagues try to explain that random violence can happen anywhere and that the incidents are contained in largely rural southern Egypt.

But, she said, "We're at the beginning of the tourist season. I hope this won't happen again, because if it does it will be disastrous."

Japan to help plant trees to combat smog

By William Cormier
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — Japan, the world's leading importer of rainforest lumber, says it will finance an ambitious project to combat smog in Mexico City by planting 134 million trees.

At the Rio Earth Summit in June, Japan pledged to help reverse deforestation of huge tracts of hardwood and tropical rain forests across Latin America.

On Friday, Japan said it would extend $84 million in low-cost loans for the first large-scale tree planting in the volcano-ringed valley where Mexico City's smog is trapped. The city's sprawl includes 18 million people.

The World Bank and InterAmerican Development Bank are to finance an unspecified amount of the loan, signed at a ceremony in Mexico City attended by Japan's finance minister, Tsutomu Hata.

Mexican Finance Minister Pedro Aspe called the credits a sign of Japan's commitment to helping developing nations "avoid conflicts between economic development and environmental protection."

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari has been initiating economic reforms since 1988, some say at a risk of letting companies harm the environment with impunity. Salinas says he is undertaking a campaign to repair past damage and that the Japanese agreement was the latest step.

Albanian kills U.S. soldier in Germany

KAISERSLAUTERN, Germany (AP) — An Albanian immigrant has been arrested in the stabbing death of a U.S. soldier last weekend, the prosecutor's office said Wednesday.

Chief prosecutor Helmut Bleh said 23-year-old Kastriot Lamce, an Albanian asylum-seeker, was arrested on Monday.

Spec. John McQuaide, 22, of Logan, Ohio, died Saturday at a hospital in Kaiserslautern after being stabbed during a fight in the town of Otterbach, about six miles to the north.

Bleh said the fight broke out after a group of people, including Lamce, began shouting insults at McQuaide and other Americans attending a party at a private home.

Another American soldier, 22-year-old Spec. Brian Baxter, also was stabbed and is recovering at the U.S. Army's Landsthul hospital. U.S. military officials gave no other information about Baxter.

Bleh said Lamce told investigators that he attacked the Americans after they chased him and beat him up.

Bonilla plans change in congress conduct

■ If elected, candidate wants to propose act which forces congressmen to abide by same laws as everyone else.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

If elected to the 23rd Congressional District, Henry Bonilla plans to propose a three-part congressional conduct act, the candidate said at a news conference Wednesday morning in Midland.

The bill would force congressmen to abide by the same laws as everyone else, form a committee of non-congressmen to hear charges of unethical practices of congress members, and penalize congressmen who sponsor a bill and later vote against it.

"This is a response to a real dissatisfaction out there in the community ... America is very upset right now about its congressional leadership in Washington," Bonilla said.

Because an anticipated 150 new congressmen will be elected this November, such proposed legislation can be achieved, Bonilla said.

"We are going to elect the biggest freshman congress this year in many generations and we can work as a block ... I am optimistic as a group we can make some real changes up there," he said.

The first part of the bill would require congressmen to "live under the laws they pass."

"They always make laws then exempt themselves from those laws," Bonilla said.

The second proposal would be to revise the way charges of unethical behavior are investigated.

"It's like the classic fox guarding the hen house," Bonilla said of the current practice of congress members having other members hear their case.

Bonilla's plan would establish a citizens committee on ethics, composed to 12 average citizens from across the nation and chaired by a retired judge.

The group would be responsible for hearing charges and determine what penalties, if any, apply.

"They (citizens) are the customers and should be the one's judging unethical charges," Bonilla said.

The third measure to curtail questionable acts by congressmen would be a "flip-flop provision" in response to congressmen who sponsor or co-sponsor a bill then later vote against it.

"That should be prohibited by law," Bonilla said of the practice.

The candidate said congressmen use the flip-flop practice to deceptively show they support popular bills and oppose unpopular ones.

To quell the practice, Bonilla supports taking away all franking privileges of guilty congressmen until constituents are notified and given an explanation of the change of support.

Bonilla pointed out that his opponent, incumbent Albert G. Bustamante, D-San Antonio, co-sponsored the balanced budget amendment and then voted against it.

The conduct act idea is the second bill Bonilla said he would introduce to the 103rd congress if elected. The first, the small business development act, would grant a $30,000 tax deduction for new small businesses and reduce the self-employment tax to half.

District 23 covers the southwest region of the state from part of El Paso County along most of the Mexican border to Webb County. Locally, the district includes southwest Midland County and south and east Midland.

Teens aim to help offenders

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

While the nation's justice system may have a problem with repeat offenders and jail over-crowding, the Midland Teen Court is taking aim at changing the lifestyles of offenders while they are still young.

"Although I am not privy to information on kids after they go through the system, statistics prove that this is the most effective system among teenagers," said Mary Beck, Midland Teen Court executive director.

Ms. Beck, who has been the director for three years, said many of the students she has talked to said that the system is better for the students than the adult judicial system.

"These kids make life changes, career changes and obviously, changes in their lifestyles," she said.

Teen-agers who have come through the court have often turned up later as jurors or attorneys, she said.

The Midland Teen Court started in 1986 as a joint venture of the Junior League of Midland Inc., the city of Midland, Midland Independent School District and Midland County. During the past six years, more than 3,200 cases have been referred to the court, with thousands of teens participating as jurors, clerks, bailiffs or attorneys.

The court is an alternative system of justice for juvenile offenders who plead guilty or no contest to Class C misdemeanors or status offenses. These offenses include traffic violations; theft under $20; minor in possession of alcohol; disorderly conduct by language, fighting and obscene gestures; criminal mischief under $20; runaways; and truancy. Teens may request deferral from Municipal Court or Justice Court for these offenses or be referred directly by the Juvenile Probation Department or schools. Those referred must be at least 10 years of age but still be in their teens and in school.

A defendant appears before a jury of teens and receives a constructive sentence: four to 30 hours of community service and one to four evenings to return to serve as a teen juror. Upon successful completion within the 90 days allowed by law, the citation is dismissed and cannot be used against the student.

Junior League volunteers serve as monitors and community service placement counselors. Members of the Midland County Bar Association and Young Lawyers Association serve as judges along with district and county judges.

Sheriff fires 4

Staff report

Four of Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter's deputies and jailers were fired in the past two weeks after the employees had violated the sheriff's "policy and rules," Chief Deputy Jim Chancellor said on Wednesday.

A fifth person, a peace officer, voluntarily resigned from the Sheriff's Department.

"That's all we are saying," Chancellor said, until the sheriff, who is out of town, returns to Midland on Friday. The firings were "in-house" and were for "judgment and policy and rules violations."

Chancellor did not specific which rules and policy were violated.

The sheriff has a force of about 150 workers, including about 90 commissioned deputies.

Chancellor said that he would not release names of the sheriff's ex-employees.

German pilot to be honored at CAF's Airsho'92

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

A World War II German pilot, Werner Seitz, will be among "eagles" honored Saturday and Sunday in the Confederate Air Force's AirSho'92 at Midland International Airport.

Seitz, whose constant post-war prayer is that "There must be no more wars," was 19 when WWII broke out in Europe in 1939 and was 22 in 1942 when he became a Luftwaffe pilot.

He flew most of the combat aircraft in Germany's Luftwaffe inventory and was a member of the top-secret "Mistel" or "Iron Hammer" mission designed to bolster Germany's air offensive between 1943 and 1944.

Seitz, 72, who retired to Boerne after a career in business, is a member of the Confederate Air Force's High Sky Wing and Hill Country Squadron.

"I am a proud member of the Confederate Air Force," Seitz said recently, "and a strong believer that we should do everything possible to remind the new generation of what has happened in the senseless destruction of life and culture all over the world."

Seitz, who has nurtured a flair for flying since his childhood, is the last living pilot of 100 Luftwaffe pilots who were assigned to the "Iron Hammer" mission in which the pilots flew the KG-200 "Mistel."

Seitz built and piloted gliders and sailplanes before he entered the war.

The "Mistel" was the mating of a Focke-Wulf Fw-190 fighter or a Messerschmitt Bf-109 fighter to a scrapped twin-engine Junkers Ju-88 bomber, which was armed with a four-ton warhead.

The fighter carried the bomber over a target, dropped it like a bomb, and the fighter pilot guided the flying bomber to target by remote control.

Don Luttrell, a World War II air-power historian and CAF AirSho'92 announcer, said that upon reaching the target area, the pilot of the single-engine fighter would cut his aircraft free of the bomber by explosive bolts, and then would guide the "warhead aircraft" to the target "by remote commands to a sighting device connected to an autopilot in the Ju-88.

"A mission to Russian-held territory along the Oder River found Werner looking out the left wing of his Mistel aircraft at two American-built Bell P-39 Aircobras in Russian markings," Luttrell said.

"Next, he found himself hearing, over the radio, that one of the three Mistel aircraft in his flight was on fire. He found out, almost too late, that it was his. Through many near-captures after belly

Anyone of good conscience steps forward in 'the now'

One of today's popular catch phrases and admonitions is "living in the now," as if that's all there is that counts.

Take care of the moment.

Timing, after all, is critical in whatever you are doing: ironing a shirt or landing an airplane, boiling beans or navigating a ship, typing on a keyboard or firing off a discourse, planting a crop or rounding up dogies.

Todd

Living and acting in the "now" is paramount. Focus on the task.

What counts is now. Those yesterdays of living in the now and perfecting those ironing, flying, cooking, navigating, typing, firing-off, planting and rounding-up techniques pay off this very day and in every now.

Those tomorrows, of course, someday will be now and, later on, "back then."

That's a truism.

So, if what's important is now, why dwell on the past?

Why should consternation crop up today when it costs several nickels, anywhere from seven to 11, to buy a five-cent candy bar or a nickel soft drink?

Why worry if it takes about five quarters, $1.25, to buy a gallon's worth of gasoline which, a generation ago, could be bought for about a quarter, including tax.

Why be concerned about so-called old-fashioned morality, the "right" and the "wrong" or the "proper" and the "improper," in dealing with self and with others?

Why be concerned with the past?

By that reckoning, history would be for old-fogeys, which it probably is, as well as for anybody who is curious about how a person, a neighborhood, a community, a people, or a nation, "got here from there."

Looking backing with the intent of understanding heritage is to help make each day more vibrant and more alive and each tomorrow a good day when it comes.

What is fabulously fascinating is seeking to understand how each person got to where he or she is today. No doubt, it is a result of the universal laws of cause and effect and, maybe, a little bit of "luck" often guided by hard work and, perhaps, mystical fate.

Does a "great" person evolve out of winning the Irish sweepstakes or by diligence, tenacity, talent, integrity, well-honed definition of purpose and, above all, kindness?

What makes "the now" so important?

Can we live in another time?

Bringing the past to the fore is nothing more than retrieving artifacts and conjuring up memories and writings, which may have flaws. To observe is to infer and not always to know exactly "what is" or "what was."

To live is to "do right" most times and to stumble at other times. Doing is always active in "the now." Daydreaming may be getting entangled in the world's and in personal frustrations: "What if" this or "what if" that had happened or not happened?

About all that anyone of good conscience can do today is to step forward, do what seems right and proper and necessary based on past experiences and intuition and expect the best for tomorrow.

High court hears arguments in case of death row inmate

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Dying from a gunshot wound in his chest and unable to speak because of tubes in his throat, Los Fresnos, Texas, police officer Enrique Carrisalez could only nod his head when investigators showed him a photograph of their leading suspect.

But the 22-year-old officer's death-bed accusation added yet another piece of incriminating evidence to the prosecution case in one of the most notorious slayings in South Texas history. Within a span of about 20 minutes on Sept. 29, 1981, a man driving a 1978 Cougar shot and killed a Department of Public Safety patrolman and mortally wounded Carrisalez on a quiet stretch of highway leading to South Padre Island.

Five days after the double homicide, police arrested Leonel Herrera, a known drug dealer with a reputation for violence. Herrera ultimately admitted killing DPS officer David Rucker and was sentenced to death for shooting Carrisalez.

For prosecutors, it seemed like an ironclad case, all but impervious to future legal challenges. It didn't work out that way.

Eleven years later, Herrera has reached the Supreme Court with an appeal based on explosive allegations of police misconduct and sworn statements pinning the double homicide on the condemned man's dead brother.

In oral arguments Wednesday, Herrera's lawyer told the nine justices that the state of Texas is preparing to execute an innocent man. Defense attorneys contend that Herrera was sent to Death Row to prevent the disclosure of police involvement in large-scale drug trafficking.

Government lawyers and law enforcement officials dismiss Herrera's appeal as an example of all that is wrong with the criminal justice system. To them, the inmate's last-minute claims of innocence, which surfaced a decade after his conviction, are laughable in the face of the evidence against him.

"All of this is so flaky, it's amazing they're even trying it," said Henry Hernandez, a childhood friend of Carrisalez who now works as an Arlington Police Department narcotics officer. "I can understand a guy not wanting to die. But the man messed up. He got caught. It's as simple as that."

Investigating officers found Herrera's Social Security card on the ground next to Rucker's body. They also discovered the DPS officer's blood type on Herrera's wallet and on his blue jeans, which contained the keys to the Cougar.

In addition to the physical evidence linking Herrera to Rucker's death, prosecutors had two witnesses to Carrisalez's shooting — the officer himself and Hernandez, who was riding with his buddy the night he was shot.

Carrisalez, who was unaware of Rucker's murder, stopped the Cougar for speeding minutes after the DPS officer was shot in the head at close range. Hernandez, who stayed in the patrol car, watched in horror as his friend was gunned down on the side of the road.

The witness later identified Herrera from a photograph and picked him out of a police lineup.

"I've lived with this thing for 11 years. I still remember every detail," Hernandez said in an interview Wednesday. "Life goes on, but it still hurts. It still hurts a lot."

Among the most incriminating evidence against Herrera was a letter found in his pocket when he was arrested.

"To whom it may concern: I am terribly sorry for those I have brought grief to their lives," Herrera wrote in rambling message scrawled on the back of several envelopes.

But Herrera also made an allegation against Rucker that was to surface again in his appeal.

"What happened to Rucker was for a certain reason," he wrote. "He was in my business, and he violated some of its laws and suffered the penalty, like the one you have for me when the time comes."

Herrera, who pleaded guilty to Rucker's murder after being convicted for Carrisalez's, seemed all but certain to suffer the death penalty until 1990, when his lawyers produced a series of sworn statements blaming the murders on Herrera's dead brother, Raul.

The affidavits, which came to light six years after Raul Herrera was shot to death, allege that Raul killed Rucker during a dispute over their mutual involvement in drug trafficking.

In one affidavit, Edinburg defense attorney Hector Villarrael, a former judge, said Raul Herrera confessed the 1981 killings to him in 1984.

"In previous conversations with Raul, I had been told that Raul, Leonel and their father, Jose Herrera, were in the drug trafficking business with the sheriff of Hidalgo County, Brigido Marmolejo," Villarrael said in his sworn statement.

American, German aces remember dogfight

By Tommy Witherspoon
Associated Press Writer

WACO — Fate, worlds at war and a daringly reckless act threw Joe Bennett and Hubert Heckmann together 48 years ago.

Bennett and three other American fliers squared off against Heckmann and about 30 other German pilots during a World War II dog fight in 1944 over Botenheim, Germany.

Heckmann flew up behind Bennett's P-51 and was bearing down on him when his machine gun jammed. The young German, flying only his second combat mission, was determined not to let the more experienced American captain escape.

So Heckmann intentionally flew his plane into the back of Bennett's, sheering off the tail section and coming within 2 feet of the plane's rear fuel tank.

Bennett, who teased that he and his buddies just about had the Germans "surrounded," popped the P-51's canopy, striking his head when he ejected. He floated gently to the ground and was surrounded by farmers with pitchforks, hoes and clubs almost before his parachute touched down.

He was led off to jail in nearby Brackenheim, where less than an hour later, a young German pilot named Heckmann, who had belly-landed his plane, walked into the jail to take a look at the first American he put out of commission as a pilot.

The meeting was cordial, the men remember. Bennett remained in a prisoner of war camp until the end of the war while Heckmann went on to fly again, ultimately getting shot down five times himself by American fliers.

A twist of fate brought the men together last year after Heckmann managed to track down Bennett in Laguna Vista with help from some German military historians.

Bennett and his wife, Hallie, flew to Germany to meet Heckmann and his wife, Helga, on the 47th anniversary of their fateful first meeting.

Last week, Heckmann and his wife returned the favor by visiting the Bennetts in Texas.

Bennett, a retired farmer and a 20-year employee of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, mistakenly believed for 46 years that he and the German pilot simply collided accidentally during the fight.

However, in a letter from Heckmann explaining who he was and how he found him, Heckmann told Bennett the rest of the story. The men became pen pals, arranged to meet and now consider each other best friends.

A German boy who witnessed the fight and the collision of the planes grew into somewhat of a historian, Heckmann said. He and another man were discussing the collision one day, and the historian said he knew the name of the American pilot but not the German's.

The other man, also a World War II buff, said he knew who the German pilot was because he was a friend of his employer's. The historian wrote to Heckmann, who tracked Bennett down through veteran's organizations, he said.

"When I got his first letter, I hadn't even thought about Germany or the war in a long time," Bennett said. "It took me a while to answer him because it took me some time to get my thoughts and feelings straightened out. Now, I consider him one of my best friends."

Heckmann, too, spoke fondly of Bennett, his broken English sometimes lapsing into German as he searched for the right word.

"When we first met, the war was over for him," Heckmann said. "He was my enemy, but then again, he really wasn't. Now I am glad we have met again."

PILOT: CAF's Airsho'92 to honor many pilots landing his Fw-190, he walked, by night, to the nearby home of his sister, evaded capture by the Russians, turned himself into the Allies, and survived the war."

Seitz, in a Reporter-Telegram interview earlier this year, said that from childhood on "flying was part of my life. I enjoyed it. We all have the dream when we watch the birds — to fly like the birds."

Like so many American, German, Japanese, British, Canadian, French, Italian and other pilots around the world, flying "was my dream as a little boy," Seitz said. "I started building model (airplanes)" in pre-war Germany. "I met the best people you can meet" — would-be and aspiring aviators. Their common goal was to fly airplanes.

Then, the politicians, principally Adolf Hitler of Germany, Benito Mussolini of Italy, and General Hideki Tojo and the military regime in Japan, turned airplanes into machines of war and destruction.

"War, you don't talk about it. You try to forget it," Seitz said. "That's the best thing to do. ... There must be no more wars."

Among those joining Seitz as honored guests at the CAF's weekend AirSho'92 are:

- David L. "Tex" Hill, a World War II ace who scored 18¼ kills and who served with Claire Chennault's American Volunteer Group (The Flying Tigers) and the U.S. Army Air Corps in China.
- George Gay, the only survivor of Torpedo Squadron Eight from the U.S. Navy carrier Hornet in the Battle of Midway on June 4, 1942.

Richards plans to call lawmakers into lame-duck session

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards said Wednesday she plans to call lawmakers into a lame-duck special session next month to debate a school finance plan being readied by her, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and outgoing House Speaker Gib Lewis.

"I expect us to present a unified plan," she said. "Are we going to be successful? I can't tell you that. I don't know. We're going to try very hard."

Richards said she probably would convene the Legislature the second week of November, after the Nov. 3 election, and limit its agenda to the thorny school finance problem.

"We want to give the members an opportunity to discuss it and discuss it in depth," she said.

The Texas Supreme Court repeatedly has struck down school finance plans, saying the system wasn't equitable to poor districts. The issue has been one of the most bitter and divisive for legislators since the late 1980s.

At least three dozen of the current House and Senate members, including the House speaker, are lame ducks. They won't be returning for the 1993 Legislature because of retirements or primary election defeats.

But Richards said she wants to debate school finance in November rather than waiting until the regular session opens in early January with the new lawmakers.

She said that is because the proposal will include a constitutional amendment that needs to go to voters before the June 1, 1993 court deadline for action.

Any proposed amendment would have to clear the Legislature by Feb. 21 to make the ballot, her aides said. Richards said meeting that deadline would be difficult to do in the first month of a new regular session.

"It's very important to address the issue in November to get a constitutional amendment on the ballot," she said. "I hope very much we can get the 100 (of 150) votes in the House that are necessary for a constitutional amendment. But I can't make you any guarantees at all that that will happen."

Richards said she doesn't plan to reveal details of the school finance proposal until "right before the session."

Her staff and those of Bullock and Lewis have been working for months to craft a plan that passes court muster.

"It's going to be along the lines we've discussed since the beginning — very limited recapture (of money) from a small number of districts to bring equity," said Rafe Greenlee, a spokesman for Bullock.

Richards had discussed calling a special session in May, shortly after she unveiled her own proposal to levy a statewide tax on business property and divide that money among all school districts.

However, legislative support was lacking for the idea, and no session was convened.

Republicans are pushing hard to increase their numbers in the 31-member Senate, where they now hold nine seats. An increase of two would give them more than one-third of the seats, allowing them to block such actions as ratification of proposed constitutional amendments.

Richards' executive assistant, Paul Williams, said that had nothing to do with the timing of the November special session.

"I expect we'll have Republican votes in November just as we would expect to have Republican votes in January," Williams said.

He also said that if lawmakers are in session for more than 10 days, Richards is required to submit for Senate confirmation the names of some 500 people she has appointed to state boards and commissions since the Legislature adjourned in August 1991.

Top official: Minorities face unfair discipline

DALLAS (AP) — Harsher discipline is dispensed to minority officers in the Dallas Police Department than their white counterparts, according to the organization's top internal affairs administrator.

Executive Assistant Chief Robert Jackson's comments Tuesday were the first acknowledgment by a ranking police administrator that racism in any form could be affecting assessment of punishment.

Police Chief Bill Rathburn said there is no proof to support Jackson's contention, but that he is committed to overhauling the discipline system to ensure against discrimination.

Jackson, the No. 4 official in the department and its highest ranking black, offered no figures or examples. But he monitors all discipline cases in the department.

"People may feel, in their minds, that they are being fair. But if you look at the numbers, there is some clear partiality," Jackson said. "The administration, like someone going to AA, needs to admit there's a problem."

He said disparity is caused by subtle racism among supervisors, rather than overt efforts. He insisted he was not questioning the level of discipline being dispensed.

"I'm not saying that any of these officers didn't deserve what they got," Jackson told The Dallas Morning News. "But we need to make sure that like situations are handled in a like manner."

County Commissioner John Wiley Price and the Texas Peace Officers Association, a mostly black group of 300 officers, have complained that black officers were treated differently than whites in disciplinary cases.

Former state representative dies after crash

HOUSTON (AP) — Former state Rep. James Hury, who resigned from the Legislature two weeks ago after five terms in office, died Wednesday at Houston's Hermann Hospital, hospital officials said. He was 46.

Hury died at 4 p.m. of injuries he suffered last week in an air show collision, Hermann spokeswoman Patty Riddlebarger said.

Hury suffered massive head injuries and had been in critical condition and on life support since he was brought to the hospital by emergency helicopter Saturday.

Hury was injured Saturday morning during the eighth annual Wings Over Houston Airshow at Ellington Field. The Cessna L-19 Hury was piloting collided on a runway with a Stinson L-5 shortly after the two single-engine planes landed in formation. The cockpit of Hury's plane was smashed by the other plane's propeller.

The pilot of the other plane, Austin ophthalmologist Dr. Quintin Smith, told federal investigators he did not see Hury's craft until the two planes collided. Smith was only slightly injured.

After 10 years in office, the Galveston Democrat abruptly stepped down from the Legislature Sept. 22 to join the Austin offices of Houston-based law firm Fulbright & Jaworski. His term would have expired Jan. 1.

Hury first was elected to the state House of Representatives in 1982. Since 1989, he served in key positions as chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee and member of the Legislative Budget Board.

Hury began his 20-year career in public service in 1972 as an assistant Galveston County district attorney. In 1977, Gov. Dolph Briscoe named Hury criminal district attorney, where he served until 1983.

Attorney: Halcion caused former officer to kill friend

By Jay Jorden
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Popular sleeping pill Halcion prompted a former police official to become violent and kill his best friend, the attorney for the officer said Wednesday as a civil lawsuit over the drug opened.

William R. Freeman, formerly assistant chief of the Fort Stockton police department, is serving a life prison term for Donnie Hazelwood's 1987 slaying. But Freeman would not be there were it not for the drug, his attorney told jurors.

The case is the first involving Halcion to go to trial against Upjohn Co.

"I am convinced that when the evidence is in, you will consider that Mr. Freeman's family deserves to be compensated for the pain, humiliation and tragedy inflicted on them by this drug," attorney Randy Johnston of Dallas said in his opening statement.

Freeman, his wife and four children filed the $5.5 million lawsuit against the Kalamazoo, Mich.-based company in 1989, the same year the former officer was sentenced to prison.

"I know that all of us want desperately to believe that the drugs we take are safe, and that when our doctors give us something, we should take it," said Johnston. "But we will prove to you that Upjohn is a corporate crook that lied to the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) to get this drug approved."

We will prove to you that Upjohn is a corporate crook that lied to the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) to get this drug approved.'

—Randy Johnston
attorney

An attorney for Upjohn said that Halcion didn't come up before jurors in Freeman's criminal trial.

"They convicted him of murder and sentenced him to life in prison," said attorney Richard L. Josephson of Dallas, representing Upjohn. "We are here to undo what another jury did and award a substantial amount of money to a murderer."

Josephson said a psychiatrist who examined Freeman determined he was competent to stand trial. Freeman, rather being victimized by Halcion, abused other drugs along with alcohol, the attorney said.

Johnston said that Freeman began drinking and taking drugs after injuring his back while on police duty in 1984. That injury required surgery.

"The man was in pain, disabled from his job and he drank," Johnston told the 11-member jury, adding that Freeman received Halcion for more than two years as a result of his injuries.

But now, the FDA will not allow patients to take even half the Halcion dosage that Freeman was prescribed by a Dallas doctor and two others, Johnston said.

The drug caused Freeman to become paranoid, lose his memory and behave abnormally before shooting Hazelwood in the head, according to a document filed in the lawsuit.

The product liability and negligence case contends Upjohn failed to provide adequate warnings for Halcion and failed to inform Freeman and his doctors of dangerous side effects.

Dozens of other cases pending nationwide against Upjohn also contend the drug causes side effects such as depression, anxiety, insomnia and aggression that could lead to violence.

Halcion, known by the generic name triazolam, has been reviewed by the FDA several times since it was approved for use in the United States in 1982.

Perot testifies he was target for assassination

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI warned Ross Perot that North Vietnam was plotting his assassination in 1970 using Black Panther hitmen because of his efforts to expose mistreatment of POWs, according to Senate testimony released Wednesday.

Perot also said that in 1986, then-Vice President Bush asked him to pay $4.2 million for a videotape purporting to show live POWs and promised that the federal government would reimburse him. Perot said a Bush aide later withdrew the promise to pay Perot back.

The testimony was part of a 300-page transcript of Perot's deposition last July to the Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs. Perot later testified in public before the committee. But his deposition testimony, given in Dallas on July 1, was withheld until now because Perot wanted his comments screened for secret or sensitive material.

In the deposition, committee legal counsel William Codinha questioned Perot on whether he had ever been warned of an assassination plot.

"As I recall, the FBI told me that," Perot said. "They basically told me that they had sent a team of people or sent representatives into Canada with people from the United States, and the FBI had infiltrated the group and had a list. And they just wanted me to know that my family and I were on the list."

The group included members of the radical Black Panthers organization.

A year earlier in 1969, Perot had embarked on his first POW-related excursion to Vietnam in which he complained publicly of the mistreatment of U.S. POWs.

In response to repeated questioning on the subject, Perot grew testy.

"I really don't think my family's security is within the purview of your committee," Perot said. "I think we're getting far afield from POWs. This will be a good story when it leaks and further heighten my family's security."

The alleged assassination plot was mentioned only briefly in Perot's public testimony.

With the end of the Vietnam War, Perot's interest in the treatment of POWs evolved into a concern over whether any were left behind. Perot testified that he spent millions "out of my own pocket" on trips to Southeast Asia to investigate the possibility that POWs were still being held.

Perot elaborated on a 1986 incident in which Bush "called me about a man in jail in Singapore who claimed to have a videotape of POWs being used as slave laborers." The man was asking $4.2 million for the tape, Bush told Perot, according to the deposition. "The Vice President asked me if I would acquire the tape and, if it were authentic, the U.S. government would reimburse me."

But later, "once it appeared the process might work," Perot said, Bush aide Donald Gregg "called and said we've changed our policy. We will not reimburse you." Perot said he asked to speak to Bush and when Bush didn't call back, Perot called him.

"He professed not to know anything about it," Perot said.

Eventually, the deal fizzled and no videotape ever came to light nor did Perot pay the $4.2 million.

Perot said he set aside his fears of assassination in 1987 when he went to Vietnam for his first face-to-face negotiations with Vietnamese leaders.

Mathematics meets Nintendo generation

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press Writer

IRVING — If the textbook is football and one tool is big-screen television, the subject must be ... mathematics?

Math with a high-tech spin, anyway.

Seventh-graders at Austin Junior High — just miles from Texas Stadium, home of the Dallas Cowboys — are learning decimals and fractions thanks to GTE and the National Football League.

The program is called Project PASS, or Promoting Achievement & Student Skills. It involves a compact disc-interactive player, digitized NFL highlight video, personal computers and grids.

The NFL and GTE are trying out Project PASS in 38 schools in the Seattle and Dallas areas this year. The Texas pilot schools are in Irving, Plano and Grapevine-Colleyville.

Results, so far, are scoring big.

"It helps us understand. Usually the teacher will bore you," said Robin Schacht, 12. "It's like TV, and everybody likes TV."

Robin and classmates Ruben Alaniz, 14, and Reginald Medlock, 12, giggled Tuesday as they demonstrated several lessons. They used a remote control to glide a football-figure across the large colored screen.

They would click on the flare pass and score a touchdown maybe two times out of three. Then they would click on the halfback dive and — to wild, recorded cheers — hit the end zone maybe three times out of four.

Then they used probability to advise Coach on the next play.

"What this does is creates a game, creates excitement in the classroom," said John Bello, president of NFL Properties. "It helps defray costs at the school level, helps capture attention, helps teachers teach. It actually applies academic situation to what you use every day."

Numbers become fun and relevant for a math-obstinate age group.

Austin Junior High teacher Deborah Bellew finds students clustering in her classroom before and after school to work with the technology. They're learning and liking it.

"It comes more to life," said Mrs. Bellew, one of about 30 teachers who helped develop the 50-minute lessons. "They realize a player in the stands is a 'point.' A 'plane' is the field."

The student playbook starts with a shape-up section of terms such as perpendicular and skewed lines. The playbook's fourth-quarter ends with vertical bar graphs.

The pages in between feature team logos and statistics on turnovers, punts and penalties.

Participants study shapes (stadium architecture), statistics (calculating average yards rushing) and geometry (shortest distance from quarterback to receiver). Voices talk back.

Pythagorean Theorem, meet the sports-crazed Nintendo generation.

Project PASS handles typical roadblocks math students encounter:

—Difficulty envisioning three-dimensional concepts from a flat textbook. But the program moves.

Reginald demonstrated the shapes section. He glided the screen's football-figure over a cone, then clicked to unfold it.

—Difficulty applying simple addition and subtraction to life situations. For example, participant are asked to count the number of fans wearing hats. They then calculate a sample from random stadium sections.

—Difficulty staying alert. But the program beeps, dings and roars.

And it boasts Houston Oilers quarterback Warren Moon as a national spokesman.

Moon helped kick off Project PASS last week.

"Junior high school is a very tough time for young people, especially boys, because there are so many different things going on inside your mind," Moon said.

Three sexual assault cases prompt suspensions

HOUSTON (AP) — Three separate cases of sexual assault involving Houston elementary school students have prompted the suspension of a teacher and the reassignment of another teacher and janitor, school officials said Wednesday.

In addition, three teen-age students at O.E. Smith Education Center were expelled Wednesday, while four other boys requested private hearings with school officials about an alleged gang-rape of a 13-year-old girl.

L. Mickele Daniels, a Houston lawyer representing the girl and her mother, said the seven boys, 13 to 15 years old, pulled the girl into the boys' bathroom during school hours on Sept. 28. Three of the boys allegedly held the girl down while four others raped her, she said.

A coach who interrupted the assault and allegedly failed to report it has been reassigned to a non-teaching position, Jaime de la Isla, associate superintendent for Houston Independent School District, said. In the meantime, the boys have been assigned to a campus suspension center.

The girl said the coach instructed the boys to get dressed and allowed them to leave after they promised they would not do it again. She said some of the boys again attacked her after school, threatening to kill her if she told.

Parents attending a Parent Teacher Organization meeting at Smith Wednesday were upset that campus officials would not discuss the case, saying they feared for their children's safety. But school officials said until a district investigation was complete, they would not talk about the incident.

The girl has transferred to another school and is undergoing therapy, her mother said. She said she wanted the coach and the attackers punished.

"Just kicking him out is not enough," the woman said. As for the attackers, she said, "they need counselors or some kind of help."

Experts question some pregnancies

■ Science now allows older women to have test-tube children, but some fear it may be problem for child, society.

Lynn Elber
Associated Press Writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Science is allowing older women such as Mary Shearing to fulfill their desire for motherhood — the 53-year-old grandmother is pregnant with twins.

But some experts are questioning the cost to their children and society.

"Mentally, people can stay up, but physically, even with the strides in medicine, I'm not so sure we're not cheating the children," said Ruth Wetherby, manager of social services for Western Medical Center in Santa Ana.

"By the time the child is a teenager, you're not going to be a mom in her 30s, bouncing around," she said.

Dr. Arthur Caplan, director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics at the University of Minnesota, said the impact on children is difficult to assess.

Older parents will be less energetic, and children may find themselves caring for aged parents early in life, he said.

"I'm not sure it's a reason not to have kids, but it's an additional burden, so parents ought to provide for it," Caplan said.

Mrs. Shearing and her 32-year-old husband, Don, of Orange, say they have considered the potential pitfalls — and found them outweighed by the benefits.

"Having a baby is just an incredible experience — bringing a life into the world," said Mrs. Shearing, mother of three grown children from a previous marriage and a grandmother.

Although she was going through menopause, she was given embryos created from donated eggs and her husband's sperm. Her twins are due in December.

"The age consideration, while it's important, is not something you run your life by," she said. The couple said they went public, in part, as a reaction to negative comments they heard about menopausal pregnancies.

A recent study found that women over age 40 are just as successful at bearing healthy babies with donated eggs as younger women, as long as the eggs come from a younger donor.

The study, in the Sept. 9 Journal of the American Medical Association, found that the standard in-vitro or test tube fertilization technique offered to most infertile older women works much better with donated eggs from women under age 35 than with the older woman's own eggs.

But Caplan and other observers say the use of test-tube fertilization for older women raises a number of complex and important issues.

"I think we should respect people's strong desire to have children. That's something that's obviously very important to many, many people," said Ellen Moskowitz, an associate for law with the Hastings Center, a research institution dealing with medical ethics in Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.

But one broad question, she said, is whether it is "an appropriate use of our medical resources, given there are limits to our resources." Is the investment of time, money and technology better used elsewhere, she asked.

Caplan asked if medicine should encourage procedures that put patients at risk.

"A 53-year-old woman with twins is a walking illustration of a high-risk pregnancy," he said, with danger possible for both the mother and the child.

He also questioned how patients become part of in vitro, or test-tube, fertilization programs.

Mary Shearing, 53, pregnant with test-tube twins, and her husband Don Shearing, 32, talk to media during press conference Monday at Martin Luther Hospital in Anaheim, Calif. Mrs. Shearing became pregnant by in-vitro fertilization.

Businessman gives hope to prisoners

By Verena Dobnik
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Abdul Singleton got his job the hard way: in jail.

Singleton, an 18-year-old with a gentle smile, was serving an eight-month term at Rikers Island for selling drugs and for "traffic directing" — pointing customers toward the pushers. It was his third arrest: "I never wanted to be out there selling drugs, but I couldn't get a job."

That's when he encountered Fernando Mateo and his Mateo Institute of Training, a very different kind of MIT that has been established behind coils of razor wire at the jail in the East River.

There, Mateo and seven other contractors train prisoners for jobs — at no cost to the government. The idea is to provide training AND a job once a prisoner gets out; Singleton was one of the first four graduates, and a second class, which ended in July, graduated 14.

"In the beginning, I thought he was selling dreams, and that it wouldn't happen. It did," he said. "Fernando was the only one who gave us something."

Why does Mateo give? "When I was 15 and experimenting with drugs, I dropped out of school and got a job. Two years later, I opened my own carpet shop and prayed, 'God, if you give me health and success, I'll come back and help others someday,'" he says.

Mateo is now 34 years old. His little carpet shop is not so little; it does $3 million in business each year, he drives a Mercedes-Benz and lives in affluent Westchester County. Now, it is payback time, and he brings his own passion for success to men who have known little but failure.

"Fernando is like a secret weapon," says Sandy Smith, director of the special events division at Rikers that oversees MIT. In 15 years with the Corrections Department, "I've never seen anything like this."

"We're going to teach you self-esteem, for your children," Mateo tells the inmates. "We need you guys. It's time that we as minorities get our act together. ... I used to live in a Lower East Side home where I saw guys shootin' up in the hallways. But I said, 'This isn't the way to live.' "

As he listened, Anthony Choily made the sign of the cross.

Once a plumber's apprentice, he was sentenced to a year for car theft. Now, Choily has gotten a second chance to learn plumbing.

"I'm giving back to myself what I took away," said the 28-year-old recovering alcoholic and drug addict. "I'm ready for society."

Once or twice a week for 12 weeks, Mateo and the others bring their own materials to Rikers to teach carpeting, asbestos removal, clothes manufacturing, carpentry, plumbing and fencing, as well as sheet-metal and electrical work.

The trainees are all sentenced prisoners, serving time for assault, drugs, weapons possession — everything except the most violent, murder and rape.

Life inside Rikers, as in any prison, can be violent.

"One guy had his face ripped open right in front of me," said Fernando Figueroa, 19, who is serving one year for heroin dealing.

Figueroa, a sheet-metal trainee who was once a toy salesman, said that before he was arrested for the third time, "I was doin' real bad. I was killing people, with drugs, and I was real hooked."

His unemployed mother "is real happy with me now; she was never so happy. I'm glad I'm at Rikers. There are a lot of opportunities for me."

"I used to help my girlfriend with her boutique. I'm very much into fashion," says Benjamin Brooks, 23, who is learning clothes manufacturing. "But I used to get mad. Now, I'm going to try to improve my attitude, hold my composure, so I can be patient with customers when they don't buy something."

This is precisely what Mateo tells them. "At first, you might be unloading trucks. Be humble, be nice. If you have a good attitude, you make money," he says.

Does it work? Of last year's four graduates, all trained in laying carpets, only one has returned to jail — for possession of an unlicensed gun.

Trial centers on home seller's responsibility

ST. ALBANS, Vt. (AP) — It was the first substantial snowfall of the 1988-89 winter, and time to try out the gas-powered de-icer under the steep driveway of their new home.

John and Linda Cifarelli turned on the de-icer and went to bed — for the last time. The couple and their 23-month-old daughter, Nina, died in their sleep, victims of carbon monoxide fumes seeping from a faulty gas heater in the adjoining garage.

In an unusual twist, the man who sold the family the house is on trial this week, charged with three counts of involuntary manslaughter in their deaths. If convicted, he faces up to 15 years in prison on each charge.

Prosecutors contend Stephen Converse Brooks, 37, who has pleaded innocent, should have told the Cifarellis the heater was malfunctioning before they took up residence in August 1988.

Legal experts said it is rare, if not unique, for homicide charges to be filed in connection with the sale of an individual home.

Real estate case law has been expanding in recent years to give buyers more protections. In California, home sellers are being asked to complete disclosure forms on problems with property.

"This is another example of the expanding duties and obligations of the sellers and their agents," said James Sulzer, a Chicago attorney who specializes in real estate law.

"It seems if a person had knowledge of a dangerous situation, and it was a hidden defect, that they ought to be liable at least civilly and possibly criminally."

But Peter Schuck, professor of law at Yale University, said involuntary manslaughter charges require a high degree of recklessness bordering on malice. "This seems considerably less venal," he said.

'It seems if a person had knowledge of a dangerous situation, and it was a hidden defect, that they ought to be liable at least civilly and possibly criminally.'

—James Sulzer
Chicago attorney

Cifarelli, 34, a painter, was found dead in bed on Dec. 10, 1988. His wife, a 26-year-old secretary, was found on the floor. Nina was in a crib in another room. Two other people in the house survived — the couple's 5-month-old daughter, Annabelle, and a 28-year-old friend who'd been staying overnight.

The friend, Andrew Csermak, told police he wasn't feeling well and went downstairs to watch television and later fell asleep. He came across the bodies the next day.

Investigators say the boiler, used to push hot water through underground coils to melt snow on the driveway, was responsible for the carbon monoxide. Autopsies found lethal levels of the highly poisonous gas in the bodies.

Prosecutors maintain Brooks knew about the malfunction because he had taken his girlfriend and daughter to a hospital in November 1987 for what was later diagnosed as carbon monoxide poisoning.

In opening arguments last week in Vermont District Court, prosecutor Edward Sutton maintained Brooks had an obligation to disclose the fault when he sold the house to Mrs. Cifarelli's mother. Brooks knew the heater was "very dangerous" when he sold the house, Sutton charged.

Gas company and plumbing experts testified the appliance vent was blocked and the unit had no safety mechanism to sense the malfunction and shut it down.

The prosecutor said that at one point, the gas company contacted Brooks about the broken heater and told him what was needed to fix it. After the deaths, the company found the repairs had not been made.

Defense lawyer Robert Andres has portrayed Brooks, a former Republican county chairman in Chittenden County and Burlington, as incapable of making simple repairs and said he relied on the gas company to fix the heater. Andres also suggested that Brooks didn't have the $300 to $500 needed for repairs.

The gas to the heater had been turned off a year earlier by the gas company. It's not clear whether it was hooked up again by Brooks or after the Cifarellis moved in.

Andres tried to show that under gas company rules, workers could not admit any mistakes in installation. He said a service worker did not mark the appliance with a red tag, as is current policy, to highlight the danger.

He said the heater was not installed according to regulations by Vermont Gas employees in the 1970s, when the house was owned by former Vermont Gas Systems President Julian Gaissert.

A civil lawsuit in which the family's estate charges negligence is scheduled for trial in January.

Mother walks out on newborn twins at hospital

NEW YORK (NYT) — In the Brooklyn hospital where they were born, they were being called Baby A and Baby B. That is because 18 hours after their birth Monday, their mother walked out of the Brooklyn Hospital Center without leaving either child so much as a name.

But she did leave behind a mystery. When the police went to the address she had given to the hospital, no one in the building had ever heard of her. Late Tuesday, detectives were canvassing the neighborhood and the area around the hospital, hoping to get a lead to the mother's whereabouts. The hospital made a plea for her to return.

"I don't think we've ever had a case like this one, where the mother ever just disappeared," said Penny Campanella, associate director of public affairs for the hospital.

The twins, she said, a boy and a girl, are doing fine.

"In fact, they're doing very well," she said. "Big babies, nice-size twins, full term."

The mystery of Baby A and Baby B began to unfold shortly before 2 a.m. Monday, when a woman in labor, calling herself Michelle Cobb, entered the Caledonia campus of the hospital. Ten minutes later, she delivered a girl, Baby A, at 5 pounds, 3 ounces. Twenty-one minutes later, at 2:25 a.m., Baby B was born, a boy, 6 pounds, 10 ounces.

The woman and her children were transferred to the downtown campus of the hospital. At 11 p.m., a nurse making her rounds there saw that the woman was missing from her bed. Hospital officials eventually realized Ms. Cobb was gone and at 1:20 a.m. called the 88th Precinct.

"She never notified the hospital in any way that she was leaving, that she was even considering leaving," Ms. Campanella said.

A police spokesman, Detective Ralph Saint Just, said the mother had left about 8 p.m., saying she "wanted to talk to her boyfriend."

Detectives from the 88th Precinct went to the address Ms. Cobb had listed in East Flatbush, but no one there knew her, said Saint Just. On Tuesday four detectives were working the streets while three others worked the phones in the squad room.

At the hospital, Dr. Meena Gulrajani, chief of neonatology, said it was "premature to decide the future of the twins or presume they are abandoned."

Earl Weber, spokesman for the city's Human Resources Administration, said that generally babies who were determined to have been abandoned in hospitals stayed there for a short time and then, if they were healthy and the authorities could not find any relatives, they were placed in foster homes. Ultimately, the children can be put up for adoption.

"We have a policy of keeping siblings together," Weber said.

On Tuesday, Baby A and Baby B were resting comfortably in their bassinets, Ms. Campanella said.

"They looked quite peaceful," she said.

Newest member of AIDS panel says victims' real needs are 'cure and care'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mary D. Fisher, the newest member of the National Commission on AIDS and a carrier of the virus that causes the disease, says she brings to the panel a simple focus on AIDS victims' real needs.

"We want a cure and we want care," she said Wednesday.

Ms. Fisher, 44, who got the AIDS virus from her former husband, met briefly with President Bush, and afterward the White House announced her appointment to the commission. She replaces basketball star Magic Johnson, who quit the panel last month, complaining of a lack of support from Bush.

She said the nation needs a new policy for combating AIDS. To accomplish that, "We need to sit down" with Bush "and talk and create this partnership and have some action happen," she told reporters outside the White House.

She gained national renown for her speech at the Republican National Convention last August in which she called for greater tolerance for AIDS victims and urged that the search for a cure not be held hostage by partisan politics.

Ms. Fisher, a mother of two boys, said she understood Johnson's frustrations with the politics of AIDS. Johnson, who joined the commission last November after announcing he was HIV positive, said in a Sept. 28 resignation letter that Bush had "utterly ignored" the panel's efforts.

"Magic and I are friends, and I understand what he's saying because we're all so very frustrated," she said. "Because of his frustration I think that we all have a sense that we want something to happen and we need it to happen now because we're talking about life and death here."

She said she did not discuss the commission's business with Bush in her briefing meeting. She gave him a small red ribbon symbolizing the AIDS awareness movement.

"It's a hard time of the year right now to have things happen," she said in reference to the presidential election campaign.

She is a professional artist in Boca Raton, Fla., and the daughter of Max Fisher, a longtime Republican insider and friend of Gerald Ford. Her father currently is the honorary chairman of the Bush-Quayle '92 National Finance Committee.

Ms. Fisher recently founded the Family AIDS Network, a group that offers information and support to families of AIDS patients. Earlier this year she became a consultant to the National Commission on AIDS. She was given the 1992 Award of Courage presented by the American Foundation for AIDS Research.

Bush first mentioned he was putting Ms. Fisher on the AIDS Commission last Sunday in an interview on CNN. He called her "a very loving person" and criticized Magic Johnson, saying Johnson failed to attend commission meetings.

"I think she'll be very faithful in attendance there," Bush said of Ms. Fisher.

The radical AIDS activist group, Act-Up, criticized Bush's choice for Johnson's replacement.

"We have to question what her qualifications are. She's not a doctor. She's not a researcher. She's the daughter of a Republican fundraiser and is HIV positive," said Act-Up spokesman Michael Petrelis.

Ms. Fisher said she was in Washington mainly to participate in the Names Project AIDS Memorial Quilt, an international program that includes the reading of names of people who have died of AIDS around the world. The names are on a 30-ton quilt on display this weekend on the grounds of the Washington Monument.

She describes her philosophy toward the AIDS problem this way:

"We're all one. We're all one family, and we want to have an end to this epidemic. We want a cure, and we want care."

Don't be the last to find out what's happening.

Indiana strike threat could hurt GM plants

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers threatened Wednesday to strike a key General Motors parts plant in Indiana — a walkout that could shut down all of the company's North American assembly plants.

The plant, in Anderson, Ind., 35 miles northeast of Indianapolis, is crucial to GM production because it supplies outside lights to most GM cars.

However, some labor experts and union insiders said Wednesday they expect a strike to be averted because of the enormous financial impact it could have on the financially weakened automaker.

The required five-day notice of the UAW's intent to strike was received at GM headquarters in Detroit on Wednesday. A strike could begin at that time Oct. 14.

The strike threat, though rooted in local grievances, keeps up UAW pressure against GM's massive restructuring that is intended to close 21 plants and cut 60,000 U.S. and Canadian hourly jobs by 1995.

The UAW has struck GM twice since Aug. 27, both times over issues concerning worker cutbacks.

A nine-day strike at a parts plant in Lordstown, Ohio forced nine assembly plants to shut down. A four-day walkout at a body-making plant in Lansing, Mich., halted production of the Pontiac Grand Am, GM's second best-selling car.

A strike at the Anderson plant would have a much greater impact because it makes tail lights, electronic dimming equipment and bumper systems for a variety of GM cars and trucks. A strike would first shut down GM's assembly plants, then would knock out plants that make parts for the idled assembly operations.

UAW Local 663, which represents 3,400 workers at GM's Inland Fisher Guide plant in Anderson, has said that GM's desire to send parts manufacturing to outside suppliers is a main issue in the dispute.

These so-called "outsourcing" issues also were key in the strike at Lordstown.

One union official who asked to remain anonymous said Wednesday the UAW is working hard to avert a strike at Anderson. His comment was similar to one made several weeks ago by Local 663 spokesman Dave Toombs.

Thomas O'Grady, chief executive of Integrated Automotive Resources, an automotive consulting firm in Newark, Del., said the union is bringing up local outsourcing and other personnel issues now to make sure they are included in national contract negotiations next summer.

GM stock was trading at $30 late Wednesday, down 87½ cents in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Six dead after military plane crashes into house

BERKELEY SPRINGS, W.Va. (AP) — Milton Barnhart was sitting at his kitchen table Wednesday morning when an Air National Guard transport plane crashed into his house in a huge fireball, killing all six people on board.

Barnhart's house was destroyed, but he escaped without serious injury, with his hair singed.

Witnesses said one wing or engine on the four-engine plane, which was on a routine training flight, appeared to be on fire before the crash.

The turboprop C-130E was part of the 167th Tactical Airlift Group based at the Eastern West Virginia Regional Airport at Martinsburg, 20 miles east of Berkeley Springs in the state's Eastern Panhandle. The unit's 12 aircraft were used to ferry troops and supplies during the Persian Gulf War.

Air National Guard Maj. Edward Dockeney Jr. said an Air Force investigation board will convene to determine the cause of the crash. He would not discuss possible causes.

A voice recorder was recovered from the wreckage, said Brig. Gen. Jack Koch, assistant to the Air Guard's adjutant general. He said the aircraft had been in flight less than an hour.

Barnhart, 77, a retired railroad worker who lives alone, said the plane slammed into his two-story, frame farmhouse outside Berkeley Springs about 9:30 a.m.

"I ran out and got out of there," he said. "It was a fire inside and outside. It took the whole roof off the house and half of the first floor. ... The whole porch was on fire. The yard was on fire."

Only his chimney was left standing. Also destroyed were a shed and a pickup parked nearby.

Barnhart said he only saved a charred photograph of a grandson, and he clutched it as he talked to reporters. He could not immediately find his three dogs, he said.

He was shaken up but not seriously hurt. The heat from the fire singed his eyebrows and hair and melted the vinyl siding on a house 50 feet away.

A firefighter looks over the crash scene of a West Virginia Air National Guard C-130 cargo plane that crashed into a house Wednesday near Berkley Springs, W.Va., killing at least six people.

"It's just unbelievable, as big as the plane was, there is just nothing left," said C. Mike Coates, a Martinsburg firefighter. The C-130 has a wingspan of about 130 feet.

Judy Youngblood, 30, who lives about 100 feet from Barnhart, said she "heard a huge explosion and the house just shook."

"There was an extremely loud roar," she said. "I can't describe the sound. The next thing I knew there was just a huge explosion and the balls of fire were just hundreds of feet in the air."

Her husband, Dale, said authorities told him the plane carried 6,000 gallons of fuel when it crashed. He said they ordered residents of a couple of houses near the crash site to stay away until the fire was out.

Betty Yost, who lives a quarter-mile away, was driving down the road when the plane crashed. "I looked up and saw all the fire in the sky and I thought, 'Oh my God, what's going on?'" she said.

Her 37-year-old son, Larry F. Yost, said he saw the airplane coming from the east and believed it was missing a wing and had an engine on fire.

"There was popping and snapping, and then it made a tremendous bang, and smoke and fire shot out the back end," he said.

Air National Guard Capt. Patricia Burkhart said the bodies of all six crew members were found by midafternoon. Their identities were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Dockeney said the 167th has one of the best air safety records in the military with just under 150,000 safe hours of flight.

The C-130, built by Lockheed, usually carry a crew of four or five, including a pilot, co-pilot, navigator and systems manager and sometimes a person to supervise loading, reference books say.

On Feb. 6, a C-130 from the Kentucky National Guard practicing touch-and-go landings crashed into a restaurant and motel in Evansville, Ind., killing 16. And April 28, nine people were killed when a C-130 on a training mission over North Carolina crashed into a lake in Anson County.

Berkeley Springs, a town of 750, lies just south of the Maryland state line and about 55 miles northwest of Washington, D.C.

Perot uses classic business techniques in TV campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political operatives may scoff at Ross Perot's campaign methods, but marketing experts say the Texas billionaire is using classic business sales techniques — the same ones that helped make him rich.

"The first step of persuasion is making people painfully aware of how much they need what you are selling," says Tom Reilly, a suburban St. Louis consultant who advises companies on how to improve marketing techniques.

In his 30-minute ad Tuesday night, which was the second-most-watched network show in its time-slot, Perot delivered a scathing critique of the economy and President Bush's handling of it. In so doing, "he paved the way for selling the solution" during a second 30-minute spot Friday night on ABC, Reilly said.

That could be a tough sell, since Perot's recommendations include higher taxes and deep cuts in popular government programs.

But Jack Trout, a Greenwich, Conn., advertising consultant, said Perot has cleverly sugarcoated the bitter pill he is asking Americans to swallow by calling his program "shared sacrifice."

"That does a good a job with some bad news," said Trout, co-author with his business partner Al Ries of the book "Marketing Warfare."

On Thursday, Perot will begin airing three new 60-second commercials on several cable networks. The ads discuss children, leadership and economic troubles, each pointing out that Perot is not a politician.

"In this election, you can vote for a candidate who has proven his leadership by making the free enterprise system work," one ad says. None mentions Perot's opponents.

The experts said Perot, the businessman turned independent presidential candidate, brings to the political stump the same skills that made him a legend on the IBM sales force, where he once took only a month to fill a sales quota for an entire year.

"All of persuasion is built on a simple model; obviously he understands that model," said Reilly.

With its avalanche of facts and figures on charts and graphs that viewers often had difficulty reading, Perot's first broadcast didn't have the polish of a state-of-the art political production.

But he hammered away with a simple message: The economy is in trouble because the government is burdened with an intolerable debt the country can't afford to keep accumulating.

"It is like having a guy coming into your office with a little pile of flip charts and taking you through the selling deal," Trout said.

"In the medium of television, he should have spent a few more dollars on the production, since in reality the chart was critical to the selling," the consultant added. Still, Perot's broadcast commanded a large audience.

In overnight Nielson ratings, it ranked second in its time slot to ABC's "Full House" and ahead of NBC's "Quantum Leap."

The program reached an estimated 11.4 million households or 16 million viewers, the rating service said.

Political professionals were less impressed than the salesmen by Perot's performance Tuesday night.

Bush questions Clinton's Moscow trip

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — President Bush late Wednesday said Bill Clinton should "level with the American people" about a student trip he took to Moscow in 1969 as well as his participation in overseas protests during the Vietnam war.

Bush, appearing on CNN's "Larry King Live" also said that Clinton should answer as many questions about his Vietnam draft record as Bush has about what he knew about the Iran-Contra affair.

Responding to an angry caller who accused the president of being out of touch with the economy and not coming clean on Iran-Contra, Bush tried to raise doubts about Clinton's patriotism, credibility and leadership. "To go to Moscow after Russia crushed Czechoslovakia, not remember who you saw — I really think the answer is, level with the American people," he said.

Clinton has said that as a Rhodes scholar at Oxford University in England, he visited Moscow as part of a 40-day tour of Europe during a winter break in 1969. Several other members of the Rhodes class that year also toured the then-Soviet capital. Clinton has not denied taking part in antiwar demonstrations in London.

Bush declared that "I cannot for the life of me understand mobilizing demonstrations and demonstrating against your own country, no matter how strongly you feel, when you are in a foreign land," the president said. "I just don't think you should do that."

"Maybe I'm old fashioned, but to go to a foreign country and demonstrate against your own country when your sons and daughters are dying halfway around the world, I am sorry but I think that is wrong,' Bush said.

Bedouin culture yields to 20th century intrusion

By Chris Hedges
N.Y. Times News Service

JUMAMA, Egypt — Dressed in a billowing white robe and carrying an old double-barreled shotgun, Mohammed Issa padded softly in bare feet through the rolling white sand dunes along the Mediterranean coast.

The 29-year-old Bedouin hunter beat small stands of wood, surrounded at the base by fishnets, with a branch, trying to scare up birds resting in the shade. Suddenly a small, bulbous quail, startled by the movement, darted skyward and Issa swung his gun upward and let loose a noisy blast of birdshot. The quail plummeted onto the sand and lay flapping helplessly until the hunter, a knife now clutched in his hand, slit its throat.

The scene, repeated each September and October across North Africa when the birds migrate south from Europe for the winter, has become embedded in the spartan life of the desert nomads. Many families live off the sale of the birds, most of which are trapped alive in the nets, during the migration. Children with wooden cages filled with quail stand by the edge of the road offering the birds for $1 each to motorists.

But the skies that a century ago provided a hunter with hundreds of birds a day now provide a few dozen. And the pristine beaches, where the men wait patiently in small palm-thatched huts, are rapidly being gobbled up by developers who have already littered hundreds of miles of coastline with concrete bungalows and tawdry tourist hotels.

"We wonder if all this won't be over in three or four years," said Mikayed Ali, a Bedouin hunter. "Each year there are fewer birds and fewer areas to hunt."

THE DECLINE in the quail hunt is emblematic of the end of a way of life for the Bedouins across the Middle East. Most are succumbing to the lure of modern conveniences and the intrusion of the 20th century.

The disappearance of the Bedouin is only a generation or two away, many sociologists assert.

"Our world is changing," said Abed Hussein Bekhater, 50, as he watched the surf pound ocher-colored slabs of stone. "Only 10 years ago most of us lived without contact with people from the outside. Now it seems we are surrounded by them. The change is good because it gives us money, water and electricity, but we can no longer live like before."

The Bedouin population in the Arab world has already dwindled to a few hundred thousand. And as the culture dies it takes with it the bedrock of Arab culture. Everything from the famed Arab hospitality to the rigid family ties is derived from the iron social code that governs existence in the desert.

'Our world is changing. Only 10 years ago most of us lived without contact with people from the outside. Now it seems we are surrounded by them. The change is good because it gives us money, water and electricity, but we can no longer live like before.'

— Abed Hussein Bekhater

In an environment where death seems to beckon from the pounding heat of the sun above and the barren wasteland below, every Bedouin must offer food and lodging for three days to a traveler entering his tent.

And women, often left alone while the men hunt or herd the flocks, are forbidden to speak to anyone outside their tribe and must remain veiled, and chaste before marriage.

EGYPT'S WESTERN desert covers two-thirds of the country, although nearly all of the 56 million Egyptians live along the fertile ribbon of land along the Nile.

The huge belts of sand inundate anything that stands before them, and armies, including that of Alexander the Great, have nearly been swallowed up in the empty tracts.

But new roads and construction seem to have tamed the edges of the desert. And the Bedouins in Jumama, 100 miles west of Alexandria, who have just sold their beach property to developers, are struggling to come to grips with the eventual disruption of their lives.

A large blue sign on the beach, not far from the wreck of a warship from World War II, heralds the coming of the Birds of Paradise Resort.

"Everything is as God wills," said Issa, holding a shotgun that once belonged to his grandfather. "We can do nothing to stop this, but I shall miss the hunt and the peace of the beach. I hope when the houses come I will be able to find a small area to sit and catch quail."

The development has meant quick cash to Bedouin tribes, who own much of the land along the coast.

SOME BEDOUINS also rent out plots of land to wealthy Egyptian and European hunters, who set up elaborate blinds and shoot dozens of birds with gleaming Italian shotguns. Greek hunters ship their cars over on ferries and stay for several weeks, free from the quotas and restrictions placed on them at home.

"We are becoming poor, while the Bedouins are becoming rich," said Dr. Mohammed Ahmed Abdellah, Alexandria's deputy in Parliament.

Bedouin families have built small concrete homes behind the beach developments and are raising sheep and goats. Many now drive pickup trucks.

But despite the financial gains the adjustment promises to be hard, even for those far from the desert expanses.

At midnight in the Beyassa neighborhood in Alexandria Abdellah sat at a small wooden table outside the crowded King of Quail restaurant.

Cooks tended quail on an open grill and waved a feather fan to keep back the smoke. Stacks of wooden cages filled with birds sat by the restaurant door. And small boys with sticks walked in and out of the tables tapping the stone pavement to keep back the hungry cats that lurked nearby.

FOR MORE than a century the narrow alleys in this old quarter have been turned over each fall to men who cook quail. The birds, smothered in a black pepper sauce, have become part of the seasonal traditions of the city, and both the elite and the working class sit under the open sky and pick at the meat with their fingers.

"The birds are weak and are not transported easily to Cairo," Abdellah said as constituents came up to shake his hand or say a few words. "They have to be eaten fresh, right after being killed. This is why you only find this kind of restaurant in Alexandria. It is part of our life."

Lasorda to return

LOS ANGELES — Tom Lasorda and Fred Claire will be back to run the Los Angeles Dodgers next season, the one after the organization's first last-place finish since 1905.

Lasorda

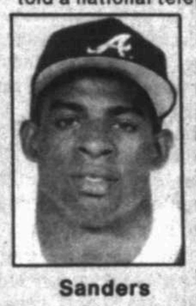

President Peter O'Malley ended months of speculation about the long-time manager and Claire, the executive vice president, when he made the announcement Wednesday.

"I have reviewed the past year with Tommy and Fred, and together we're concentrating our efforts on the 1993 season," O'Malley said in a statement. "We recognize and accept the challenge before us, and enthusiastically approach the new season."

The Dodgers finished last in the NL West this season — nine games behind the fifth-place San Francisco Giants — with a 63-99 record, the worst in the majors.

Not ready for Prime Time

ATLANTA — Atlanta Braves general manager John Schuerholz told a national television audience on Wednesday that the hoopla surrounding Deion Sanders was overshadowing his team's achievements.

Sanders

However, when asked later by a reporter to elaborate, Schuerholz denied saying anything about the two-sport star's situation.

Sanders apparently is considering playing cornerback for the Atlanta Falcons in Miami on Sunday afternoon, then chartering a plane to fly to Pittsburgh for Game 5 of the NL playoffs.

Schuerholz told CBS in an interview during the fourth inning of the Braves' 13-5 victory over Pittsburgh that he felt the attention being given to Sanders was detracting from his team's achievements.

Oliver had three interceptions in the Dolphins' 37-10 win over Buffalo, returning one an NFL-record tying 103 yards for a touchdown. Massey, meanwhile, returned two interceptions for touchdowns, one of 31 yards, the other of 41.

A's return to power; beat Jays

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

TORONTO — The Oakland Athletics always manage to do things with flair at the SkyDome, don't they?

ALCS

Even without Jose Canseco hitting rocket shots, the A's still won with plenty of power Wednesday night.

Mark McGwire and new Bash Brother Terry Steinbach hit consecutive home runs in the second inning, and Harold Baines led off the ninth with a drive into the second deck in right that gave the A's a 4-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays in Game 1 of the American League playoffs.

Baines' shot off Jack Morris decided a game in which all but one run scored on homers. Dave Winfield and Pat Borders connected for the Blue Jays off Dave Stewart.

"This is my time of the year. I don't mind sharing it with Jack," Stewart said. "The main thing is that if you're going to give up home runs, you want to give up solo shots, like I did. Jack gave up a two-run homer, and fell behind 3-0."

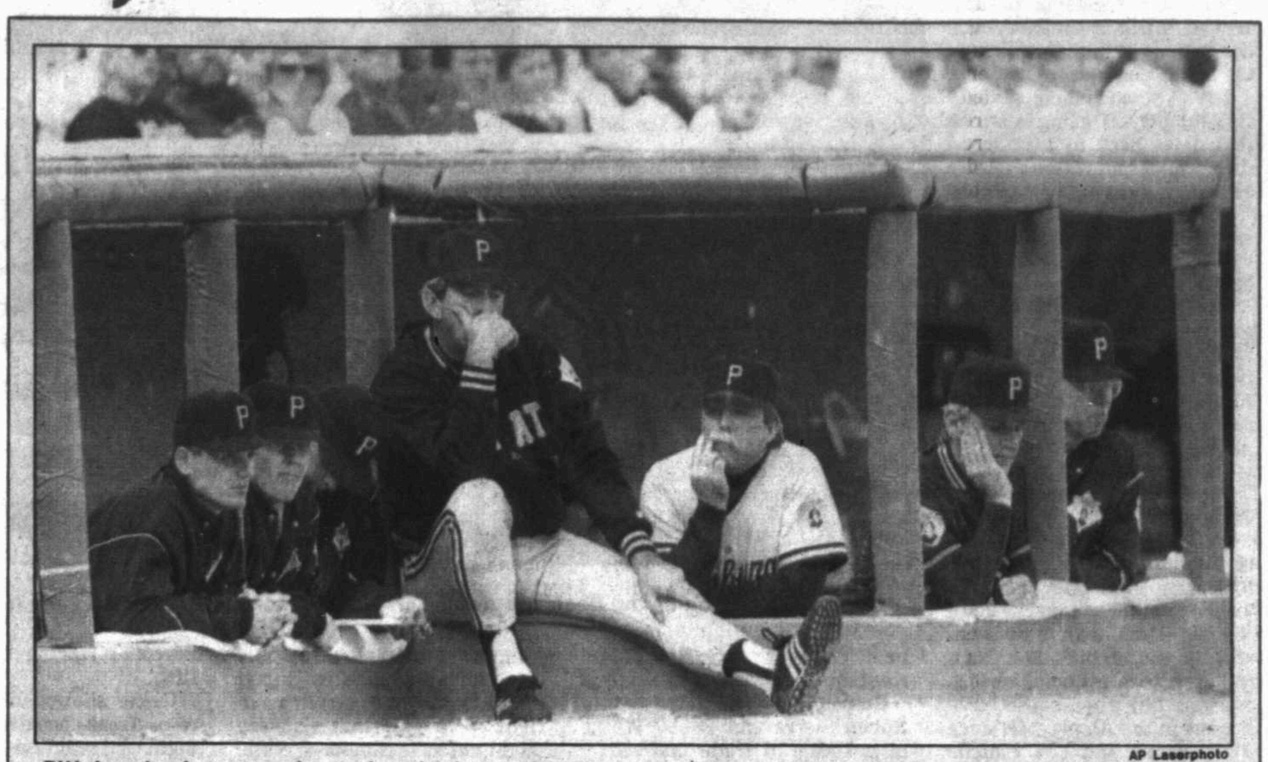

Morris and Winfield, the two free agents Toronto signed in the winter to help them win in October, did their jobs.

Winfield, hounded by his horrible slump in the 1981 postseason, hit a solo home run in the sixth that made it 3-2, and doubled and scored the tying run in the eighth on John Olerud's two-out single.

Morris' last appearance in the postseason produced a 10-inning shutout in Game 7 of the World Series last year and earned him the MVP award. He had not allowed a hit since the fourth inning before Baines connected.

Baines hit his second career homer in 111 at-bats against Morris. Baines singled in his first two at-bats, then won it when he hit Morris' second pitch of the ninth

Pittsburgh players and coaches look on glumly during their Game 2 defeat.

Braves look unstoppable

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — Oh, what pitching. Atlanta has it all. Oh, what hitting. The Braves own that, too. The only 'oh' for the Pittsburgh Pirates? 0-and-2.

NLCS

Steve Avery on the left, John Smoltz on the right, 20-game winner Tom Glavine ahead of them. Everywhere the Pirates look, they see trouble. They're playing the best team in baseball, and they certainly look second-best to the Braves in the National League playoffs.

Pittsburgh finally ended 13 years without a big inning in postseason play, but the four meaningless runs in the seventh came after Atlanta was well on its way to a 13-5 victory Wednesday and a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 series.

"The weight's on their shoulders now," Avery said. "They wanted to come in here and split and they didn't do it."

"We were embarrassed. We're in an uphill climb and it's not a good situation to be in," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "But I don't think anybody's pressing and you can throw out all the psychological stuff. What we need are some hits."

'We're in the emergency room and we hope we're not in intensive care by Friday.'

— Pirates' outfielder Andy Van Slyke

And soon. Only two of the 10 teams to trail 2-0 in the NL playoffs have rallied to win the series, and the Pirates give no sign they'll be the third to do it. If they don't, they'll be the first team since the 1976-78 Phillies to lose three straight playoffs.

"We've been getting our heads beat in and we've got a headache," Andy Van Slyke said. "We're in the emergency room and we hope we're not in intensive care by Friday."

The cure?

"We've got to score some runs, get out in front and win a game, there's no secret to that," Leyland said.

Steers, 'Stangs meet in District 2-4A showdown

Emiliano

■ Big Spring finds itself in the middle of a tough stretch of the schedule, but will have home turf advantage against the 5-0 Andrews Mustangs.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff writer

No, Rodney Dangerfield was not Big Spring's representative at the District 3-4A scheduling convention. It just seems like they received his kind of respect — none at all.

After battling one certain playoff contender — Monahans — to a 10-10 tie in last Friday's league opener on the road, the Steers are gearing up for a showdown on their home turf with defending co-champion Andrews. Then it's off to Sweetwater to take on last year's other co-champ.

"It's just the luck of the draw. We drew the bad bean," said Big Spring coach Dwight Butler, whose Steers entertain undefeated Andrews at 8 p.m. Friday in a re-match of last season's zaniest of all confrontations.

In other inter-district area games Friday, Lamesa, Greenwood and Midland Christian each open league play as the Tornadoes put their 4-1 mark on the line at Lubbock Estacado, the Rangers take a 2-3 mark into Crane and the MCS Mustangs aim to keep their record perfect at Northeast Christian Academy of El Paso.

A pair of teams that are already 1-1 in league play collide when Stanton hosts Ozona. And Rankin visits Eldorado in a final non-district encounter, while Garden City enjoys a bye.

LAWNMOWER MAN

■ Disturbed at the length of the grass at Weatherford's stadium, a high school placekicker takes the lawn into his own hands.

Associated Press

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas — Eric Smith likes a level playing field — or at least a freshly mowed one.

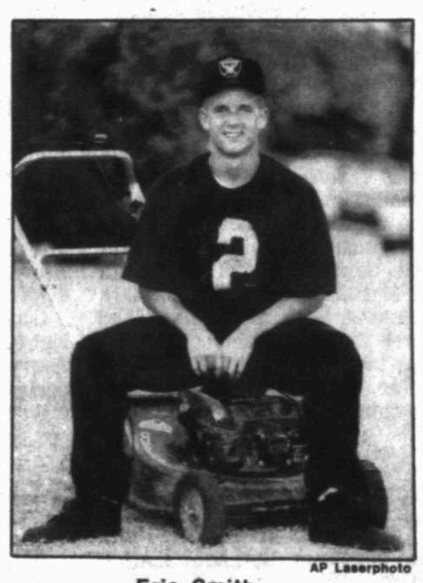

So the senior kicker trimmed the grass at an opponent's field last week. But school officials told Smith to cut out the antics.

Smith's football coach says he doesn't plan to discipline his player.

"You know how kickers are," said South Grand Prairie coach David Thompson, former head coach of the Big Spring Steers.

The player likes to check out opponents' home fields. He said he noticed on game films that the grass at Weatherford High School's stadium was unusually high.

So Smith brought along his mower for an hour-long drive last Wednesday night to kick a few practice field goals in anticipation of the teams' game two nights later.

Unbeknownst to coaches on either team, Smith then shaved a small strip of the field from where he thought he might have to kick.

"I knew they'd probably be mad," said Smith, "but I didn't think I'd get caught."

He said the shorter grass would enable him to kick better. He's accustomed to Safety should come first — but often doesn't

Price

It happened in the pre-game warmups just before the Amarillo High-Midland High football game last Friday at Memorial Stadium.

Amarillo was practicing its extra-point kicks, and the defenders, members of the same team on plays that meant nothing, were performing exactly what they had been coached to do — knocking the center on his hiney.

The practice has been going on for a long time, at least since I played center for the Class 2A Clarendon Bronchos (now Broncos, much to my chagrin), 15 years ago. When the center lines up to make a long snap to a holder or punter, head tucked between his legs in order to see to whom he is snapping the ball, a linebacker usually stands poised to get a running start then smack the center right on the nape at precisely the time of the snap.

I was never injured by the practice, but making the long snap was the single thing about playing football that filled me with dread. The question is, how long must we wait for the University Interscholastic League to ban the act? Until some unlucky center gets his neck broken? Until a quadraplegic is made of some student-athlete who is just playing the game for the love of it?

Now, we could ask coaches to police themselves, to teach players that the act is unsportsman-like and could quite possibly cause injury if not paralysis. But we know better than that, don't we?

The coaching profession is just like any other, where most individuals are worthy of the trust we hand them where our student-athletes are concerned. But there are others who will will resort to any tactic — within the rules if not exactly ethical, or even outside the rules — in order to win.

They know that their jobs, or a better paying job somewhere down the line, ride on their won-lost record. So if it takes bashing a center on the neck to louse up a snap or enable a defender to block a kick, so be it.

Among the many other attributes that earned Ronnie Reeger the head coaching job at Midland High are his ethical credos. Reeger has voiced his concern over the "art" of pancaking a long-snapping center.

Reeger thinks a rule ought to be in place banning the practice, and many others wholeheartedly agree that it should be banned by the UIL. Maybe the powers that be in the college and professional ranks think it is a meek way to approach the problem, but in high school competition safety should always come first.

And only when it will cost a team a 15-yard penalty will some coaches begin teaching that the practice is wrong, unsafe and unethical. Must it take a paralyzed player filing a wrongful injury suit against the school, UIL or the State of Texas before something will be done? Probably.

ALCS: Ex-Ranger Russell gets win

inning into the stands.

"It was a slider up over the plate," Baines said. "I was trying to drive it well. I don't consider myself a great home run hitter, but it was a great time to hit one."

Dave Stewart went 7 2-3 innings and maintained his reputation as a big-game pitcher, and Dennis Eckersley enhanced his status by pitching the ninth for a save.

The A's won their seventh straight playoff game, a streak that dates back to 1989, when they wiped out Toronto in five games.

Toronto will try to even the series Thursday night when David Cone pitches against Mike Moore.

"Everybody has kind of written us off," Steinbach said. "But our attitude all year has been kind of, 'Let's play ball.' Now we have a big game tomorrow. We have a real tough pitcher going against us in David Cone."

Pat Borders also homered for Toronto.

McGwire, whose 42 home runs were second in the majors to Texas' Juan Gonzalez, silenced another sellout crowd in the SkyDome with a two-run shot in the second. Steinbach followed with a homer to left, marking the first consecutive homers in the AL playoffs since Rick Cerone and Lou Piniella did it for the New York Yankees in 1980 against Kansas City.

After Borders put the Blue Jays on the board, Winfield made it a one-run game in the sixth. Winfield is still hounded by his 1-for-22 showing in the 1981 World Series, but showed that at 41 he was more of a factor than ever.

Winfield doubled into the gap in right-center with two outs in the eighth, finishing Stewart, and Olerud singled past reliever Jeff Russell's reach to make it 3-3.

Russell, acquired along with Ruben Sierra and Bobby Witt in the Aug. 31 trade that sent Canseco to Texas, was the winner despite allowing the game-tying single. The loss was the second in nine postseason decisions for Morris.

The A's struggled in the field this season, but no one would have known by the way they kept Stewart and themselves out of trouble.

Shortstop Mike Bordick started double plays in the first two innings, and McGwire showed off a Gold Glove with a diving stop in the third.

In the fourth, all three outs came on nifty plays as Ruben Sierra ran down a deep drive in right — a ball that Canseco might not have caught — Willie Wilson charged in for a grab in center and McGwire dug a throw out of the dirt.

Sierra struck again in the seventh when he raced into the right-center field alley and backhanded Borders' low line drive.

The Blue Jays were fine in the field, too. Third baseman Kelly Gruber robbed Bordick of extra bases in the seventh with a backhanded grab on a grounder, and right fielder Joe Carter made a sliding catch on Bordick's sinking liner in the fifth.

Carter showed no ill effects of a freak accident Tuesday night that sent him to the hospital. He and teammate Roberto Alomar attended the Toronto Maple Leafs' NHL opener, which was highlighted by an indoor fireworks display.

Carter, however, looked up at the wrong time and got a burning cinder in his left eye. The mishap sent him to the hospital for a couple of hours.

Dallas offense rots under 'gang-green'

Associated Press

IRVING — The Philadelphia Eagles "gang-green" defense dominated the Dallas Cowboys like they knew what plays Troy Aikman was going to run. Maybe they did.

Dallas fullback Daryl Johnston said Wednesday "everytime we called a play they would jump into the right front for that play. We couldn't get anything going. They had us scouted very, very well. Whatever it was, the Eagles played well against us."

The Cowboys fine-tuned offense which had been so effective against Washington, Phoenix and the New York Giants collapsed against the Eagles in a 31-7 loss Monday night. Aikman was intercepted three times and Emmitt Smith, the NFL's leading rusher, was held to 69 yards on 19 carries.

"I've still got a sore back from that game," Smith said. "There's no doubt it put us in our place. We know now we can be beat."

The Norv Turner-generated Dallas offense percolates on timing and the Eagles destroyed it.

"We've just got to get it out of our systems fast," said Johnston. "We beat the Eagles last year. We felt confidence against them. But things did go wrong."

Wide receiver Michael Irvin said "I still draw a blank thinking about the game. I don't know what happened. All I know is we better get ready quick for Seattle this week. They have some Miami players on defense. They can bite you. They're football players."

Seattle (1-4) comes to Texas Stadium for a noon game on Sunday against the Cowboys (3-1).

Smith said he could be in for a long, hard day because of the type of defense the Seahawks play.

"They use the eight-man front a lot and it's different from what we are used to," Smith said. "We need to trash that Philadelphia game quick. I think we will. Morale is up. The spirit is up better than it was last year when Philadelphia beat us 24-0 in Texas Stadium and Troy was sacked 11 times. We bounced back from that game. We'll bounce back again."

Running back Tommie Agee said the Seattle game now looms as one of the most critical of the year.

"We have to play like we are capable of playing," he said. "It's an important game if we want to get to the playoffs. You have to win games like this."

Smith agreed.

"I'd call it vital," he said. "The tale of a good team is how it bounces back after a tough loss. The Eagles game is over. I just let it go."

Piniella 'just didn't want to come back'

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Why did Lou Piniella walk away from the chance to stay as the Cincinnati Reds' manager?

Piniella

Three years of working in one of baseball's most unpredictable organizations left him ready for a change. And Piniella's credentials as the Reds' manager — two 90-win seasons, one World Series title — will get him a job somewhere else.

During a four-hour meeting Monday with chief executive officer Marge Schott, Piniella said he wasn't interested in coming back. Neither will discuss what was said. The Reds haven't even acknowledged that Piniella is leaving.

But Piniella's comments to reporters and acquaintances in the last few weeks — and his brief comments Tuesday to local television stations — suggest he'd simply grown weary of the daily uncertainties and indignities that come with managing the Reds.

"I just didn't want to come back," he told WLWT in Cincinnati.

Relief pitcher Norm Charlton was sad but not surprised that Piniella wanted to leave.

"I'm sure he looked at the situation and figured he could do that good or better elsewhere," Charlton said Wednesday.

The situation in Cincinnati had tested his patience.

The team won 90 games this year but finished second, leading Schott to fume and hint that she would slash the payroll. She also left Piniella and general manager Bob Quinn dangling, refusing to discuss their situations until after the season, when their contracts expire.

Piniella wondered why other managers were being rewarded with contract extensions during the season, but Schott was ignoring him.

"A few times he mentioned how other managers were having things done with their contracts," said one acquaintance, who spoke Wednesday on condition of anonymity.

The situation was underscored on Sunday during the Reds' final game against the San Francisco Giants. Reporters tried to ask Schott about her plans for Quinn and Piniella, but all she would talk about was Beethoven, a St. Bernard of movie fame that was visiting Riverfront Stadium.

By the time Schott got around to discussing a contract on Monday, it was too late. Schott wasn't the only one surprised that Piniella had already reached a decision.

Schott's handling of his contract wasn't the only irritation. The ballclub had turned into a soap opera the last two months.

NLCS: Pirates get to face Glavine next

(From 1C)

"It's definitely not a good situation to be in, two games down, but this is also the major leagues," Braves shortstop Jeff Blauser said. "That's a pretty good team over there."

Not so far. The Pirates have been outscored 18-6 in the series, and they've now got to face Glavine — he's 4-0 against them this season — in Game 3 Friday in Pittsburgh.

"The pressure's on them now," said Avery, whose major league-record record streak of 22 1-3 scoreless playoff innings was stopped in the seventh.

The game was long since over by then, thanks to a four-run Braves' second and a four-run fifth theat featured Ron Gant's first grand slam in the majors. The tail end of Atlanta's lineup continued to torment Pittsburgh, with eight hits; Gant finished 2 for 4 with three runs and four RBIs; Mark Lemke — yeah, him again — had three hits and Damon Berryhill had two.

The bottom of the order had five hits — two each by Sid Bream and Lemke — in Atlanta's 5-1 win in Game 1.

Avery's streak broke Ken Holtzman's mark of 18 innings for Oakland in 1973-74. His concentration left him in the seventh, when he yielded Lloyd McClendon's RBI double and Jose Lind's two-run triple and his wild pitch scored another run, but he gave up only two hits over the first six innings.

"With the 8-0 lead, I might have let down a little bit," Avery said. "I've had trouble with that in the past and I've got to work on that."

"(Avery) was real tough as long as he had to be," Leyland said. "(The seventh inning) was almost cosmetic. They've got a great staff and we haven't even seen Glavine and (Charlie) Leibrandt and (Pete) Smith yet."

The Pirates won't see Atlanta again unless they win at least twice in Pittsburgh. The Pirates are only 2-4 at home against the Braves in '92, and pitching has had a lot to do with that.

Counting the playoffs — and, right now, it's all that counts — Avery is 6-0 the last two seasons against the Pirates, who again received very little production from big guns Van Slyke and Barry Bonds, a combined 1 for 8.

Those two may be stars in the summer, but they fail in the fall. Bonds is 8 for 51, a .157 average, and Van Slyke 11 for 68, .162, in the playoffs.

"Barry's trying to hit a five-run homer or make an unbelievable play," Leyland said. "He's pressing a little bit and it's bothering him a little bit. We've impressed upon him we don't need him to carry the team."

"They might be pressing some, but they can still carry a team and we've got to be careful with them," Avery said.

Runs came in bunches of four, until a five-run seventh enabled the Braves to tie the playoff record for most runs in a game. The 18 combined runs also set a post-season record.

Jackson was 3-1 in the postseason, 2-0 in the playoffs — but 0-4 against the Braves in six starts this season. He's 0-6 in his last nine starts against the Braves and hasn't won in Atlanta since Sept. 24, 1988.

Brian Hunter, a .500 hitter against Jackson, singled behind third to start the Braves' second. Gant walked and Berryhill, playing because Greg Olson is out with a broken right leg, singled home Hunter with a liner to left.

Lemke, a .226 career hitter who is the Braves' version of Mr. October, singled up the middle to make it 2-0 and raise his postseason average to .625 this season and .365 overall. Seven of Lemke's nine playoff hits have come with runners in scoring position; by contrast, Bonds is 0 for 23 in that situation.

"I don't know what it is," Lemke said. "I'm just glad to have the opportunity to play in the postseason, a lot of great players never get that chance."

The 13 runs tied the record total by the Chicago Cubs over San Diego in the opening game of the 1984 NL series and the New York Yankees over Oakland in Game 2 of the AL playoffs in 1981.

Lohr takes early lead at Las Vegas Invitational

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The score was important, Bob Lohr said after a 7-under-par 65. He added a share of the first-round lead in the Las Vegas Invitational was not.

"In this kind of tournament, with four rounds to go and knowing the guys are going to be shooting low numbers every day, it's important to get off to a good start," he said Wednesday.

For the record, however, he shared the top spot with John Ross, a 40-year-old, non-winning graduate of the Hogan Tour. He birdied the first four holes he played and was five under par for the day on the par-5's.

Ross has not finished higher than 16th in his rookie season on the PGA Tour and admitted he wasn't thinking of winning, only of retaining his exempt status for next year.

"And I don't even want to think about that too much," said Ross, who ranks 152nd and needs to improve 27 places on the earnings list.

Other, more optimistic players with winning on their minds, agreed with Lohr that a good start is important but the lead really doesn't matter.

"In my mind, in a tournament like this, having the first-round lead, the second-round lead, the third-round lead, means nothing at all," said Tom Lehman, one of six tied for third at 66 in this traditionally low-scoring event spread over three desert resort courses.

That rotation changed this season, however, with the new Fuzzy Zoeller-designed TPC at Summerlin taking over as the home course, replacing too-easy Sunrise.

And Zoeller's creation drew the praise of the game's touring pros, even though it gave up four scores of 66 in the near-ideal playing conditions.

"One of the best TPC's I ever played. I love it," said Paul Azinger.

Rangers to interview Missions' manager

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers on Wednesday named three candidates they will interview for the managerial position besides Toby Harrah.

Royster

The candidates are Montreal Expos coach Kevin Kennedy, Oakland A's coach Rene Lachemann, and Los Angeles Dodgers minor league manager Jerry Royster.

Harrah managed the Rangers for the second half of the 1992 season and will also be interviewed.

"We considered a number of people in identifying this list of candidates," said general manager Tom Grieve. "We feel that we have selected three very talented and qualified individuals from outside the organization in addition to Toby. We look forward to discussing the position with each of them."

Royster, 39, spent four years managing in the Dodgers farm system with a 217-189 record, last year leading the San Antonio Missions. He spent 16 years in the big leaguesand is currently managing the Sun City club in the Arizona Fall League.

Kennedy, 39, joined the Montreal organization in October, 1991 as director of minor league field operations. Prior to joining Montreal Kennedy spent eight years as a manager in the Los Angeles Dodgers farm system, compiling a 533-373 record. He led Class AAA Albuquerque to three-consecutive championships.

Lachemann, 47, is completing his sixth season on the A's coaching staff, the last four as third base coach. He has managed in the Oakland and Seattle minor league systems.

AREA: MCS Mustangs start TAPPS district play

(From 1C)

The last meeting between Andrews and Big Spring was a memorable one. It was a game in which Big Spring needed to beat Andrews by no fewer than 12 points because of the league's complicated 21-point system for breaking ties. The Steers fell behind 12-0 at the start (meaning they were down by 24), but they rallied for a 28-14 victory (meaning they won by two points).

But from another perspective, Andrews could have accepted a loss to Big Spring if it had been by no fewer than 12 points. Yet even after taking the early 12-0 advantage, the Mustangs suffered what would have been a fatal defeat had Big Spring not fallen unexpectedly to Monahans in the 3-4A finale, leaving Andrews and Sweetwater with the playoff berths.

"It seems like we've walked into this ambush before. We get to go back to the place where we got our hearts broken last year, but this time we know what's there," said Andrews' coach W.T. Stapler, whose Mustangs boast a perfect 5-0 mark, including a whopping 56-7 win over Lake View in last week's loop opener.

What Stapler and the high-flying Mustangs will run into is a Steers' team that stands just 2-2-1, but it's not a record that has Andrews fooled. Big Spring is 5-1 over Andrews since dropping to Class 4A, with Andrews' win coming in a 49-0 blowout in 1988.

"Hey, if Big Spring had our schedule they'd have the same record as ours," Stapler said. "They've had a lot of problems that have not shown up on the scoreboard, like missing five defensive starters on defense for a couple of games.

"But they're getting almost all those people back, they understand how to win in Big Spring and they were one of my preseason picks to win this district."

Still, Andrews has to be one of the favorites at this juncture. The Mustangs have up an average of 45.2 points on the board through five games, leading the league in total offense with 420 yards a game.

Jonathon McDonald has already scored 12 touchdowns and averages 9.2 yards a carry for the Mustangs, while Xavy Emiliano has seven TD runs.

"McDonald has the breakaway speed, but the other guys get the 10s and 15s," said Butler, whose Steers held Monahans scoreless for the entire first half.

"Andrews is quite a force running the ball, and they have a stifling defense."

That defense is also tops in 3-4A, giving up just 173.6 yards a game and picking up a league-best 11 fumbles thus far.

Quarterback Wes Hughes runs the Big Spring offense and his chief target is Oscar Cervantes, whose 16 catches for 310 yards leads the league.

Hughes will hand it off to Lonnie Jackson and Tim Pearson, who each average around five yards a tote.

Bryan Lepard runs the predominately ground-oriented Andrews attack. The junior QB has run the ball 38 times himself for 265 yards and two TDs.

■ LAMESA is off to a 4-1 start under second-year head coach Gary Yoder. The Tors open 2-4A play against a 1-3-1 Lubbock Estacado squad. But the Matadors are 9-3-2 against Lamesa. They tied 14-14 in 1990, but the Tors haven't won a game against Estacado since 1975.

■ GREENWOOD got a solid 35-15 victory over Lubbock Cooper last Friday and heads into District 6-3A play against a Crane team looking for its first win of the season. The Golden Cranes have scored just 24 points in reaching their 0-4 mark. The Rangers are 3-2 and have scored 92 points in all.

■ STANTON can reach the 2-1 mark in District 6-2A with a win Friday over Ozona. The Buffs, 3-2 overall, are coming off a smashing 41-0 triumph over McCamey.

■ MIDLAND CHRISTIAN stormed past 1991 UIL state finalist Christoval, 66-54, as Andy Awtry fired six TD passes. Now the Mustangs, 5-0, take on NECA in the TAPPS district opener for both teams.

■ RANKIN'S Red Devils are coming off an open date and visit Eldorado for a final non-district tune-up. Eldorado, of 6-2A, is 3-2 overall and has beaten Rankin five straight. However, the two teams have not met since 1987.

kicking on the artificial turf of South Grand Prairie's home field.

The field was trimmed between the 10- and 40-yard lines, between the hash marks, on each side of the field, said Weatherford High School coach David Bourquin.

The player said he cut a much smaller patch between the hash marks, maybe 10 yards long.

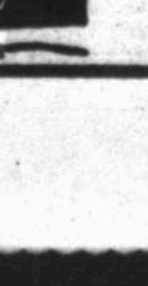

"I was going to cut the whole thing, but the sprinklers came on," said Smith.

A couple of Weatherford players and several joggers watched him practice his kicks at the stadium, Smith said. He pretended to leave but waited until almost everyone was gone before emerging with a push lawnmower.

Bourquin noticed the cut grass on Thursday. He said a few people had seen Smith mowing the lawn but just thought somebody was working late.

Smith's aim was true for a 42-yard field goal and two extra points. But Weatherford won 33-23.

Colorado's fifth-down play not about to go away

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — It's time to return to the scene of the crime.

Two years have passed since the infamous fifth-down controversy that handed Colorado an undeserved 33-31 victory over Missouri, and eventually, a national championship. Apparently there's no statute of limitations on such a gaffe, because no one's forgotten.

"I don't think people are going to let it die for a while," said Colorado coach Bill McCartney, whose ninth-ranked Buffaloes play at Missouri Thursday night. "It isn't going to go away."

The game will be nationally televised by ESPN, and not because it's an attractive Big Eight Conference matchup.

Colorado is 4-0 and had a week off, and Missouri is 1-3 and had only five days to prepare after ending an eight-game losing streak with a 44-21 victory over Division I-AA Marshall on Saturday. Not only that, Colorado has beaten Missouri seven straight times. The Buffaloes manhandled the Tigers 55-7 last year in Boulder, Colo.

No, that's not it.

It's the fifth down, with a nice little slippery turf subplot to boot.

To reset the scene from Oct. 6, 1990:

Missouri was clinging to a 31-27 lead over Colorado with 31 seconds to go and the Buffaloes with a first down at the 3 before the confusion began.

■ Colorado Buffaloes at Missouri Tigers, 7 p.m., ESPN.

— On first down, quarterback Charles Johnson spiked the ball to stop the clock.

— On second down, Eric Bienemy gained 2 yards up the middle to the 1 and Colorado called its last timeout with 18 seconds to go.

— Officials forgot to move the down marker to third down for the next play, Bienemy up the middle for no gain, after which officials ruled that Missouri was late getting off the pile and called time with eight seconds to go.

— On fourth down, the chains showing third down and the clock running, Johnson spiked the ball again to stop the clock with two seconds to go.

— On fifth down, Johnson scored on a quarterback sneak.

In the aftermath, referee J.C. Louderback and the rest of his crew were suspended for a game, and his name went down in infamy on the Missouri campus.

Colorado went on to win the Big Eight, the Orange Bowl and the national championship while Missouri, perhaps shaken by the experience, won two of its last six games. And McCartney never gave a second thought about embracing the tainted victory, which will always make him a villain in the Show-Me State.

"There are a certain number of people who feel I didn't do the honorable thing, so it just sticks in their craw," McCartney said.

Missouri coach Bob Stull hasn't forgotten. He can't forget. His post-game news conference after the Marshall game hadn't gotten very far before he had to field a question about the fifth down.

"You're not going to let us ignore that," Stull said. "It'll create some excitement. It'll be fun."

As if the fifth down weren't enough, McCartney has been the most vocal critic of Missouri's artificial turf surface, called Omniturf. In fact, after the fifth-down game he chose to deliver a rant about the turf and was still talking about it two days later after reviewing game films.

Prep football '92: So far, so unique

Associated Press

DALLAS — The 1992 schoolboy football regular season has reached the halfway point with amazing streaks, unique teams and surprising players stealing the headlines.

Odessa Permian lost. Dallas Carter had a losing record after three games. New Braunfels hasn't given up a point in five games — and isn't ranked.

Freer became No. 1 in 2A for the first time in school history and has celebrated by outscoring opponents 134-0 in two games.

Southlake Carroll set a state record with its 54th consecutive regular-season victory and looks poised to end the year with 61 straight wins and a sixth consecutive undefeated season.

On the down side, San Antonio Burbank has lost 35 straight in 5A. Houston Davis dropped to 4A, but hasn't been able to stop its seven-year losing streak covering 68 games.

This weekend, the Panthers face Houston Furr, which is 0-4 this year after reaching the playoffs in 1991.

A Furr victory would put Davis on track to set the national record for consecutive losses on Nov. 5 in the season finale against Houston Worthing. A 73rd straight defeat would be one more than Iberia, Mo., suffered from 1965-74.

Then there's Class 2A Seymour, which has made a habit of scoring on special teams.

In five games, the Panthers have returned three kickoffs and one punt for touchdowns. They've also had two other scoring returns called back. Last year, they had four touchdowns off kickoff in the first three weeks.

"That's just part of our game," coach Darrel Aldridge said. "We've run the same return for years. It's no big secret. Anybody can run it."

Under Aldridge's method, called a "twister," any one of six players will catch the kick, then simply waits for a wall of blockers on either side of the field and runs behind it.

"It works because the kids are patient. They believe in it," Aldridge said.

The season, so far, has been relatively free of scandal.

An interesting issue developed at Victoria Stroman, where running back Raydon Alexander played his first game of the season only hours after receiving a curfew extension from his parole office.

Alexander, who wears an electronic monitoring device on his ankle because he was arrested on assault charges in August while already on probation, returned to lead Stroman to a 14-14 tie against rival Victoria, ending a 21-game losing streak.

He rushed for 413 yards in three games, but could be lost for the season because his probation was revoked Tuesday, Stroman coach Jose Martinez said.

Garland Lakeview coach Tommy Watkins avoided a potential problem by forfeiting a 46-15 victory over Duncanville after learning he had used an academically ineligible player.

San Antonio school officials suspended Burbank coach Domingo Rangel for two rules violations.

Rangel used an academically ineligible player in spring practices and this fall allowed two players who had played in a junior varsity game on a Thursday to play in a varsity game the next night.

SAISD has asked the University Interscholastic League's state executive committee to investigate the case, meaning the district is seeking a harsher penalty against Rangel.

When the committee meets Oct. 22, it also will discuss the circumstances surrounding a forfeited game between Oakwood and Calvert, caused by unruly fans on the Oakwood side of the stadium.

The UIL's legislative council will meet next week to discuss whether to implement a single site for state championship games.

This is the council's first crack at the issue, which was forwarded to the panel without a recommendation. A vote may be taken.

"I'm going to say it's never going to fly because I think there's a lot of division," said Temple coach Bob McQueen, who said he prefers multiple sites.

"There are a lot of ways of looking at it," he said. "Coaches and administrators would like to decide (where to play), but, gosh, strictly from (media) coverage and exposure, there's a lot to be said for a single site."

The most exciting individual performers this season have been running backs — or running quarterbacks.

Austin LBJ's Shon Mitchell has had the best stretch, gaining 618 yards in two weeks. His first effort of 303 yards was three feet shy of the city record, which he broke last weekend with 315 yards.

The one-game highlight was 413 yards in the season opener by Beaumont Kelly's Dexter Hebert against 4A's Bridge City.

Hebert, who dedicated this season to the memory of his father, has rushed for 1,253 yards and 16 touchdowns on 104 carries.

Another exciting, but often overlooked, runner is Tidehaven's Aric Sardinea. He entered the season with 2,358 career yards and has added 1,150 in five games this year.

REGIS SALONS CLIP FOR A CAUSE

Stylists Raise Money For Breast Cancer Research

Mastercuts, Regis, JCPennys, and Great Expectations in Midland Park Mall will be participating in the second annual "Clip For The Cure," a nationwide cut-a-thon on Saturday, October 10. Stylists will offer haircuts for $10 in the JCPenny court area from 12 p.m. to 6 p.m. All proceeds will be donated to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation and the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation. Last year stylist used their creative talents to raise $300,000 for breast cancer research.

The fund-raiser is coordinate by Regis Corporation, leaders in hairstyling worldwide, and supported nationally by Marilyn Tucker Quayle and actress Lynda Carter. In addition to the money raised from haircuts, Regis Corporation is donating 10 percent of the proceeds from Regis professional hair care products purchased October 1-10.

There are a number of special events planned during the "Clip For The Cure." The High Sky Square Dancers will perform at 1:00 p.m. and at 3:00 p.m. Bingham Dance Center will perform "We Dance For Joy." Chick-Fil-A and Morrows Fine Candy & Nuts will be serving refreshments for our customers. Also, door prizes and raffles from Midland Park Mall merchants will be given out throughout the day.

Professional healthcare consultants from Allison Breast Screening Service will be on hand to inform customers about early detection and answer questions on breast cancer. We're excited about being able to help friends, family members and customers in the Midland area. Currently one out of nine women are diagnosed with breast cancer. By supporting the fund-raiser, we will help save lives in the future."

Regis Corporation has been in the hair fashion for 70 years and currently operates over 1,100 hairstyling salons primarily in shopping malls throughout North America.

Laettner looks ready to sign with T-Wolves

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Christian Laettner would be willing to make a deal with the Minnesota Timberwolves before the Charlotte Hornets sign the NBA No. 2 draft pick, center Alonzo Mourning, Laettner's agent says.

Negotiations with Timberwolves president Bob Stein are not close, but that could change, agent Arn Tellem said.

"I'm not optimistic about getting something done the next couple of days, but we're discussing," Tellem said Tuesday.

Stein said the conversation was a "good sign," but he called the talks preliminary. The Timberwolves have cleared enough money on their salary cap — $2.5 million for this season — to sign Laettner, clearing the way for what could be a quick agreement with their first-round pick.

Asked if Laettner, the No. 3 pick, could be in training camp before Mourning, Tellem said, "I don't need to wait to know what's fair."

"Waiting wasn't for my benefit, it was for the Timberwolves' benefit," Tellem said.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Prices rise

NEW YORK — Oil prices rose slightly in thin trading Wednesday with U.S. supply figures for heating oil giving the market a lift.

Energy market activity on the New York Mercantile Exchange was particularly light because of the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in November rose 8 cents per barrel and settled at $21.89 at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in November settling at $2.390 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 5 cents.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in November rose 8 cents and settled at $19.39 per barrel.

Two programs set

The Small Business Development Center of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will present two programs Wednesday at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, Highway 191 and FM 1788.

The programs are "Debt Collection: How to Do It and How Not to Do It" and "Bankruptcy: What to do When Your Debtor Files." They will be held from 8:30 to 11:30 am.

The programs are co-sponsored by UTPB, Midland College, Odessa College, Howard College, the chambers of commerce for Midland, Odessa and Big Spring, Midland County Bar Association and Permian Basin Mediators Association.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against most major currencies Wednesday, partly in reaction to European shifts in interest rates and a drop in the U.S. bond market.

The dollar rose to 120.40 yen, up from 119.70 late Tuesday in New York.

In New York, the British pound fell to $1.7095, down from $1.7135 late Tuesday.

The pound rallied against other European currencies, closing at 2.4773 German marks compared with 2.4483 German marks on Tuesday.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — The stock market fell moderately Wednesday after a weak Treasury note auction set off heavy selling in the government bond market.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which was up 9 points in morning trading, reversed direction by the afternoon, closing down 25.94 points at 3,152.25.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 13 to 9 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Spending: Old idea gains new respect

■ Interviews reveal developing new attitude that says a rising deficit is a lesser evil until the weak economy can be revived.

By Louis Uchitelle
N.Y. Times News Service

Slowly, with many misgivings, federal spending on public works is gaining a new respectability among economists, Wall Street traders and some corporate executives as a last-resort formula for generating jobs and ending the nation's economic stagnation.

In their view, other prescriptions have failed, and now with unemployment remaining stubbornly at 7.5 percent or more, they are concerned that the recovery may not take place without special help from the government.

The new adherents are, in effect, putting aside years of opposition to increased public spending as unaffordable because it would add to the already huge federal budget deficit and drive up the inflation rate, hurting the economy rather than helping it.

The position seems closer to that of the Democratic candidate for president, Bill Clinton, who has said some government investment is needed to help the economy, than it is to that of President Bush, who is counting on the economy to pick up without extra government spending.

The link between at least a temporary shot of more spending — on highways, transit systems, education and the like — and adding to the deficits has not changed.

But an extensive range of interviews in recent days reveals a developing new attitude that says a rising deficit is a lesser evil until the weak economy can be revived.

"The basic view that is emerging is, 'don't just stand there, do something,' " said Richard B. Hoey, chief economist at Dreyfus Inc. He said he had opposed extra government spending because of the deficit but now believes, like many other recent converts, that because the economy is so weak the deficit can rise without pushing up the inflation rate.

Hoey said he was not certain that more public spending would produce the desired recovery. But particularly in view of the persistent unemployment, he said he came to the conclusion that it was worth a try.

Some, like Robert Giordano, chief economist at Goldman, Sachs, said they came painfully and reluctantly over the last few months to the position that the economy would not begin to grow again without government spending.

"People are missing the boat," Giordano said. "If I were a policy maker, I would definitely have short-term fiscal stimulus, but I would couple this with a program that assured that the deficit expansion would be reversed later on, when the economy was stronger."

Some economists continue to believe that even a temporary spending increase is harmful, among them Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve, and Charles L. Schultze, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution and a top economist in the Carter adminstraiton.

But the unmistakable trend is toward greater tolerance. Henry Kaufman, an economist and Wall Street money manager, said he believed the economy was so weak that even bond-market traders, who are hurt by inflation, were finally willing to tolerate some deficit spending.

Franchisee offers 'Big Macs,' bytes

By Susan Fahlgren
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — Don't look for Ronald McDonald or the Ham Burglar at McDonald's newest Houston franchise.

Owner-operator John Tillman tore out the slides and merry-go-round when he demolished the 19-year-old McDonald's across the street from the University of Houston.

Instead, the new McDonald's offers students personal computers, copiers, fax machines, a video arcade — and pizza.

"I just felt that in an environment like this, it would really be good to be able to have a total restaurant," said Tillman, a Houston graduate and former IBM mainframe salesman.

"This is the college Playland as opposed to having the traditional McDonald's where the 5- and 6-year-olds climb and jump," Tillman said. "That's great. I don't what to minimalize that. But what I was trying to do was capitalize on the arches and present the adults with an adult environment."

While they still offer "Happy Meals" and "McNuggets," Tillman's McDonald's features gray carpeting, upholstered chairs that aren't anchored to the floor and colorful neon accents.

"This whole concept . . . looks like a Bennigan's or a Chili's," Tillman said, pointing out the dining area that seats 130.

Effort to sell more GM cars in Japan stalls

By David E. Sanger
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — Nine months after President Bush declared that his trade mission to Tokyo had yielded a milestone agreement to sell 20,000 more American cars in Japan every year, one major deal to implement the accord appears to have gone off track.

A deal between the world's two largest carmakers, under which Toyota would sell General Motors cars to the Japanese public, had been hailed by Bush's aides during the ill-fated January trip as a prime example of how the administration was coming home with what the president had termed "jobs, jobs, jobs" for Americans.

For most Americans, the content of what Bush called "agreements" — for different reasons, both Japanese and American industry officials said later that they were not really agreements at all — were lost amid various distractions.

The most vivid was Bush's collapse at a state dinner, but there was also the much-criticized performance of his traveling companions, the highly paid chief executives of Detroit's Big Three automakers facing off against their more modestly compensated Japanese counterparts.

In the ensuing nine months the "action plans" adopted during the visit have yielded mixed results. While sales of the Big Three's cars in Japan seem unchanged this year, American auto-parts makers have said that they are encouraged by a tremendous increase in the number of inquiries from Japanese makers, particularly Toyota.

Moreover, the number of American-made cars shipped to Japan is rising — though not the cars Bush had in mind when he began the visit-turned-trade mission here. Most are Japanese-name cars produced in the North American plants of Japan's biggest auto companies and shipped back to Japanese consumers.

Indeed, the symbolic centerpiece of the effort was expected to be an arrangement between General Motors and Toyota that would have given GM access to the largest car sales network in Japan.

Consumers reduce debts for 7th consecutive month

WASHINGTON (AP) — American consumers reduced their outstanding debt for the seventh consecutive month in August, improving their balance sheets by $959 million, the government said Wednesday.

The decline translated into a 1.6 percent reduction at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, following a drop at a 1.8 percent rate in July, the Federal Reserve said.

Both consumers and businesses have been busy reducing huge debt burdens built up during the 1980s and economists often cite that as one of the chief factors slowing the recovery.

But, in a speech to the Rotary Club of Washington, Deputy Treasury Secretary John E. Robson said high debt levels were among a number of temporary obstacles that the economy would soon surmount.

"These are by and large transitory factors that time and the inherent adaptability of the American economy will overcome," he said.

Economists believe paying down consumer debt eventually will create a healthier economy, but in the meantime it means consumer spending — representing two-thirds of all economic activity — has been extremely sluggish.

Consumers unnerved by lackluster income growth and weak job markets have been paying off their debts for more than a year and may continue doing so for another year, many analysts believe.

August marked the 13th decline in credit outstanding in 16 months.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Ginnie Maes' can provide solid investment

By Bill Doyle

Q: As a widow, alone, I must preserve my principal. My investments are $30,000 in GNMAs and $30,000 in FNMAs. I have another $50,000 to invest. Would you advise for or against more GNMAs?

Doyle

A: "For," providing you understand that type of investment.

The initials "GNMA" stand for Government National Mortgage Association, "FNMA" for Federal National Mortgage Association.

Investors hold pass-through securities backed by pools of mortgages. As homeowners pay on those mortgages, your share of those payments — both interest and principal — is sent along to you monthly. Hence, the term "pass-through."

Do not consider the total amount of those monthly payments as interest. Some people make that mistake and, after all the mortgages are paid off, are shocked to learn their GNMAs and FNMAs have zero values.

GNMA and FNMA securities, nicknamed "Ginnie Maes" and "Fannie Maes," pay higher interest than U.S. Treasury securities with similar maturities. But keep in mind that part of the money you receive is principal. Also, when homeowners make additional payments or pay off mortgages early, you receive larger principal payments.

Because you want to preserve your principal, you had better set the Ginnie Mae and Fannie Mae principal payments aside and invest that money elsewhere.

Some brokerage firms, banks and other financial organizations have arrangements through which principal payments from pass-through mortgage securities are automatically reinvested — usually in mutual funds. With that kind of deal, investors receive only the interest portions of Ginnie Mae and Fannie Mae monthly payments. Their principal remains intact.

Q: How safe are GNMA and FNMA pass-though securities?

A: Timely payment of interest and principal on Ginnie Maes is backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Treasury Department. Even when homeowners default on mortgages, holders of Ginnie Mae securities get their monthly payments.

While not providing the same unconditional government backing, mortgages in a Fannie Mae pool are covered by private mortgage insurance and FNMA reserves. The same thing applies to pass-through securities issued by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. — "Freddie Mac," for short.

Summed up, you can be sure of collecting your interest and full principal — if you hold the pass-through securities until all the mortgages are paid off.

But this does not remove all risk. If you sell a pass-through mortgage security before the final payoff of all mortgages in the pool, you might get more or less than the remaining principal amount.

Q: If interest rates rise, can I redeem my Ginnie Maes and Fannie Maes and receive the unpaid principal, so that I can reinvest the money at the then-prevailing higher rate?

A: No! There is no provision for redeeming those pass-through securities. When you want out, you have to sell them in the market.

And, when interest rates go up, the market values of fixed-interest securities such as mortgage pass-throughs fall.

Q: What do you think of good-quality, long-term municipal bonds?

A: They are fine, for investors in the 28 or 31 percent federal income tax brackets. But they are not suitable for the vast majority of Americans, who are in the 15 percent bracket.

Municipal bond interest ordinarily is not subject to federal income tax. Most states exempt from tax "munis" that are issued within the state.

But munis pay lower interest than taxable bonds of similar quality. So, people in the 15 percent income tax bracket almost always get more after-tax "keeping money" by staying with investments paying taxable interest or dividends.

Strong suits for fall are figure-flattering

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Pencil-thin skirts and nipped-in jackets make this season's suits downright sexy. These streamlined long-over-lean styles are slightly 1940s in feel and owe their inspiration to menswear.

Even the new muted pants suits in tweeds, pinstripes and plaids with French-cuff shirts, fedoras and neckties pack plenty of allure. And they're a perfect hedge against the long vs. short skirt.

"As customers adjust their eye to the new longer length, they're thinking, 'If I can't decide, I'll go with trousers...," says Phillip Monaghan, a vice president at Express in Columbus, Ohio.

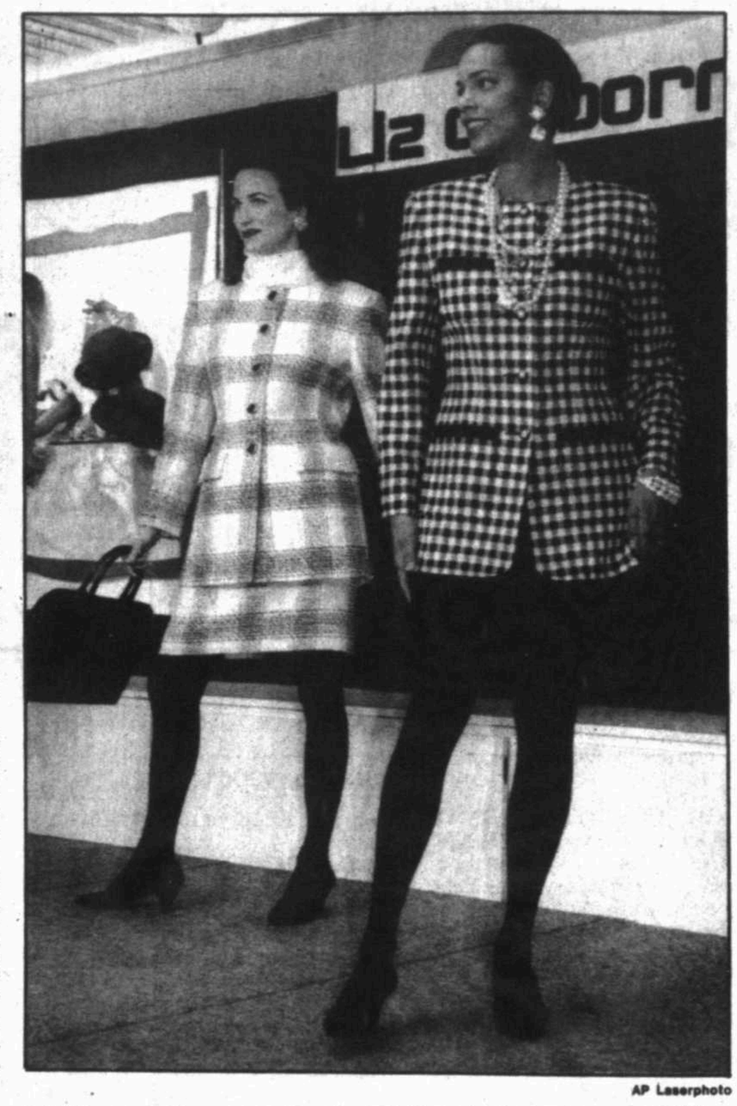

Francine Browner, a clothing designer in Los Angeles, says pants suits are a key because menswear is important.

She created rayon and poly matched separates in gray or navy pinstripes. The double-breasted jackets are $58, the slim cuffed trousers $38 at The Stage stores and JC Penney.

"The pants are figure-flattering and slim, and the jackets are more fitted, with a nipped-in waist and wide lapels like Katherine Hepburn or Lauren Bacall might have worn," Browner says.

Monaghan says the menswear look at Express isn't a literal translation.

"We're feminizing menswear by adding a shirt with French cuffs and collar turned up and unbuttoned a bit, so it's sexy," he says. "And we're throwing a pendant and pearls down the front to soften it."

AP Laserphoto

EXPRESS STORES carry a double-breasted wool crepe blazer in charcoal, navy or maroon, $120, and matching long wrap skirt, $68, or short pleated skirt, $49.

JH Collectibles pays tribute to the Edwardian dandy with a collection of suits with black velvet trim. There's a fuchsia worsted wool crepe cardigan with black velvet collar, cuffs and pockets and matching short pleated skirt. The group also includes a red wool crepe jacket with velvet collar; long, slim wool crepe skirt in black; a red worsted wool plaid jacket with velvet collar and buttons and matching short slim skirt.

Prices for the separates range from $196 to $94 at Bloomingdale's, Lord & Taylor, Robinson's and Dillard's.

Classic suits of the 1940s are making a strong comeback as a feminine look for the '90s.

"We're capturing the vintage spirit with old-fashioned parasol skirts, loop-scalloped lapel jackets, Czechoslovakian glass beading, passementerie and pressed inverted pleats," says Renee Shaw, New York designer for Zelda, a women's wear company.

"The clothes evoke that 'Casablanca' feel yet aren't attic-y looking," she says. "The shape is contemporary, particularly in the shoulders, which are softer, less squared off."

Zelda's black satin-backed crepe jacket is embroidered with shell pink eyelet, $485. A matching button-front skirt which grazes the ankle is $240. Polish the image with a beret, ankle-strap platforms, shades and gloves.

"It's real imagination clothing, an attitude that brings you back to times when things were more elegant," she says.

The Zelda line is sold at Henri Bendel, Charivari, Fred Segal, Roz and Sherm in Birmingham, Mich. and Joan Shepp in Philadelphia.

THIERRY MUGLER has a red wool peplum jacket with black velvet laces. With a matching short black velvet skirt, it's $3,015 at Saks Fifth Avenue in New York.

Ungaro has a long, fitted black wool tweed jacket with vivid windowpane plaid, $1,980, and a long pleated wool challis paisley skirt, $1,430 at Saks.

For added mileage and versatility, try separates.

"You really can put your own stamp on separates by mixing and matching," says New York designer Andrea Jovine.

Jovine offers a mid-calf straight skirt with deep back slit in double-knit wool, $138, and a long single-breasted jacket in black and white mini-check wool knit, $270. Other separates include skirts, trousers, vests, turtlenecks and jackets in a variety of silhouettes.

They range from $80 to $270 at Neiman Marcus, Bloomingdale's and Saks Fifth Avenue.

"With a suited look you can choose from a long, lean skirt; knee-length skirt, pleated trousers, stirrup pants or a cigarette slim pants," Jovine says. "Your top can be a blouse, shirt, turtleneck or vest. It gives you the luxury of creating multiple looks from your components."

DEAR ABBY

Victor in battle of bulge wages war on self-esteem

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter in your column from a 50-year-old widow who had undergone a radical mastectomy and was concerned about men's reaction to her disfigured body.

Van Buren

Well, my inhibitions are of a different sort. I am 40 years old, divorced and a mother of four children. I have stretch marks from my pregnancies and from being overweight. I have lost 160 pounds and am now working on toning and firming, but I still have sagging skin on my arms, stomach and thighs. I, too, want to start dating. I look pretty terrific with clothes on, but I am afraid to wear a swimsuit, etc.

I find most men to be very visual. A pretty face is not enough. They also want a woman to have a pretty body. I, too, am inhibited and embarrassed and afraid to start any kind of a serious relationship. I am afraid to get emotionally involved with a man because once he sees my body he will give me the heave-ho. — INHIBITED AND EMBARRASSED II

DEAR I AND E, II: Few women of 40 have the skin tone of a woman of 20, it's true. But fewer women of 20 have the depth of perception and wealth of life experience that make a woman of 40 appealing.

Nobody has everything, so if the men in your life have given you the message that you are less than acceptable because after winning a battle with 160 extra pounds you now have some sagging skin — I urge you to upgrade the quality of the men in your life.

DEAR ABBY: Our 30-year-old daughter lives with us in our modest home. She has her own room, pays her way, and is a rather private person. She has a very good job and leaves home looking like she has just stepped out of a fashion magazine. So what's-the problem? The condition of her room is disgusting!

Everything (including cobwebs) is covered with a layer of dust and body powder so thick the furniture looks white!

There are heaps of clothing on the floor along with newspapers, magazines, shoes, cans, bottles ... I could go on and on!

If she lived in her own home, her sloppiness would be none of my business, but since she lives in my home I feel it is very much my business. She flatly refuses to allow me in her room to clean it up. (I have seen the mess through the open door.) I don't want to make an enemy of her as she is my only daughter and life is too short. To add insult to injury, the one-woman office she runs is spotless! How can I get her to clean up her room? — LONG-SUFFERING MOTHER

DEAR MOM: Since apparently you never bothered to insist that she clean up her room — and keep it clean — she probably assumed you didn't notice, or didn't care. Nothing will change unless you demand it. Tell her that enough is enough, and you can no longer tolerate her making a pigpen out of a room in your home. (Cans? Bottles? Do you have cockroaches and mice yet?)

DEAR ABBY: I thoroughly enjoyed your column on the misuse of words. My greatest pet peeve is the misuse of "like" instead of "as." Millions of dollars were spent in advertising "Winston Tastes Good Like a Cigarette Should."

Winston should be ashamed. — EMIL HONIG, WEST PALM BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: Last year, you ran a column asking readers to send cards, letters and cheery gifts to Marines in Okinawa, Japan. I am hoping that you can do the same again this year. The response we received was absolutely wonderful! It was so enormous that we were able to split the mail among six separate USOs in Okinawa.

We have a new address for Okinawa:

We thank you and your readers. Without the great support they showed, our military members would have had a very depressing Thanksgiving, Hanukkah and Christmas. — LORRI FORRESTER

P.S. There are women Marines as well as men in the service of their country.

DEAR READERS: I will soon be publishing the annual Operation Dear Abby addresses for those who want to send holiday cards and letters to our service-people around the globe. Watch for them.

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! To purchase Abby's new booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. AT WIT'S END

Big Daddy has to learn to say no

By Erma Bombeck

Let's talk about family.

If the government is going to start teaching family values, maybe it should go to the source — those of us who have been at it for years.

Bombeck

Let's suppose a president is indeed the father of this country and we are his children. How does he go about raising a country full of responsible, decent human beings?

First, Mr. Any President, you start by saying "No" once in a while. Kids are always ding-donging you to death about things they want and need, whether it's a government program or a new C.D. Saying "No" is one of the hardest things you have to do because they hate you for it, but they get over it.

Next, you have to give them responsibilities ... even when they don't want them. If you do everything for them, they'll never be able to run their own lives. Let them make their own mistakes. That's how they learn.

It's not enough to tell them to have values. You have to show them through your example. How can you expect a kid to curb his credit spending when the government is spending more than it can print? You can't show your children a double standard any more than parents can preach honesty and cheat on their income taxes.

Kids are quick to pick up on your mistakes, and you have to admit you made them. You can't blame Congress any more than a mother can blame a washer for shrinking her daughter's favorite sweater.

The hardest thing about parenting is telling your kids what they don't want to hear. But it's your job. They have to know when they have to work harder ... bite the bullet and do with less.

You learn quickly with kids that trust is paramount. You have to be consistent, or they won't respect you or believe you. In government, it's called flip-flop. On our turf, it's called lying.

A president has a big family, which complicates things. He has jealousy, infighting, resentment, feelings of rejection and disharmony on a much larger scale. But as with families, you search out some common ground.

The job of parents and the goal of a president are much the same — keeping their children fed, housed, healthy, educated and productive. They're the basics on which they build.

Hard discipline and the eat-it-it's-good-for-you syndrome rarely win any popularity contest for the parent figure. But popularity is not what parenting nor the presidency is all about.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A major breakthrough is likely where a partnership, legal matter or long-distance union is concerned. Let the words flow freely if you are moved. Turn to a creative writing project tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Agreements and alliances rapidly fall into place today. Both your professional and social contacts find you spellbinding. Your sixth sense helps you discover if someone has a hidden agenda.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not allow yourself to be haunted by a financial mistake. The past is over. If you postpone making a major decision until next week, you will be happier with your choice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A spontaneous approach provides the right answer in an emergency. You feel more in control of your life and are more productive. Do not chase after an indifferent romantic partner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The money signs you have been looking for appear today. Your social life improves at the same time your career takes off. Evaluate your wardrobe before going shopping.

TODAY'S CHILDREN: One of these youngsters' greatest joys is music. Rejoice if they express a desire to play an instrument or join a choir! They have the talent and dedication to accomplish great things.

Bill Root's The Play of the Hand was voted the Best Bridge Book of 1990, and justifiably so. At present he is working on a book on defense, due to appear next year, and it rates to be another award winner. Here's a preview from the chapter on discarding.

North's jump to four clubs was Gerber, asking for aces. When South showed three, North elected to go directly to seven no trump on the strength of his excellent trick-producing club suit.

"Sometimes you must discard to help your partner, instead of trying to save a trick yourself. Partner leads the ten of spades and declarer wins the first trick in hand with the ace. He then starts running the club suit and you (as East) have no discarding problems, but your partner may have. Your first discard (on the third club lead) should be the queen of diamonds, to tell partner that you have control of that suit. Look at the four hands so you can see how that helps partner.

"Before leading a red suit, declarer should cash six clubs and two spades, hoping that someone will carelessly discard a heart and allow him to win four heart tricks and make his bid. Suppose you were West and had to come down to five cards; which five cards would you save? Without the signal it is tempting to throw a heart and save K 5 of diamonds, (but that would be fatal). Knowing that partner still has J 10 x of diamonds, it is easy to blank the king of diamonds and hold onto four hearts" (and declarer must go down).

P.J. O'Rourke: Worst thing about American politics is that it's best

INDIANAPOLIS — Author and humorist P.J. O'Rourke says the bad thing about the American political system is that it's the best in the world.

"This is as good as it gets. You go any place, it's worse," O'Rourke said during a lecture Tuesday night at Butler University.

"That's not for us to be proud of. That's for us to worry about the rest of the world."

O'Rourke, whose books include "Parliament of Whores" and "Give War a Chance," is foreign affairs editor for Rolling Stone magazine.

He compared the Republican and Democratic parties to gigantic Mexican pinatas.

"The American voter is then blindfolded and given a stick," he said. "Then the voter swings the stick wildly in every direction, trying to hit a presidential candidate on the head and knock some sense into him."

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Jane Fonda says one of the reasons her marriage to Ted Turner is successful is because she's financially independent.

Fonda

"I have proven myself on my own terms and so I can come to the relationship as an equal," the actress said of her marriage in December to the media mogul. "Otherwise, I'd be steamrolled."

Fonda, 54, was at Radcliffe College on Tuesday talking about feminism, her career and her husband, who was speaking at Harvard.

She said she knows what it's like to feel the backlash of anti-feminist sentiment.

"There's a lot of things that I've been real confused about for a couple of years that have led me off and on to feel apologetic about the fact that I continue to call myself a feminist," she said.

In August, Fonda said she was ending her acting career to devote more time to her fitness business and her husband. She made her last film, "Stanley and Iris," in 1990.

PHILADELPHIA — Bill Cosby says students going into teaching should prepare for many roles.

"Teaching has to take on a new banner, and if you're going to enter, you have to have many new hats," Cosby told 2,500 students, faculty and staff at Drexel University, where he picked up another honorary degree Tuesday.

"You're going to run into counselors who don't know how to counsel, so you have to," he said. "You're going to run into parents who don't know how to parent, so you're going to have to parent."

The entertainer, a longtime booster of higher education, was the keynote speaker at Drexel's convocation, which marks the beginning of the academic year.

Cosby has master's and doctoral degrees in education from the University of Massachusetts. Drexel awarded him an honorary Doctor of Pedagogy degree.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A dozen gospel music stars will hit the road again this year with a program of Christmas carols, spirituals and an update of Handel's Messiah.

"The Young Messiah" tour includes Steven Curtis Chapman, Sandi Patti, Larnelle Harris, Kathy Troccoli, Steve Green, Phil Driscoll, Cindy Morgan, Michael English, Twila Paris, Wayne Watson and 4 Him.

This is the third year for the tour, which has already been seen by more than 350,000 people.

It begins in late November in Charlotte, N.C., and includes stops in Dayton, Ohio; Pittsburgh; Minneapolis; Milwaukee; Detroit; St. Louis; Nashville; Jackson, Miss.; Houston; Phoenix and Tacoma, Wash.

NEW YORK — The National Ethnic Coalition of Organizations has put a $10 bounty on Sinead O'Connor albums.

The coalition, upset that the Irish singer ripped up a picture of Pope John Paul II during an appearance on "Saturday Night Live," will donate $10 to charity on behalf of anyone who sends in one of her records, cassettes or compact disks.

The group already has begun asking radio and television stations not to play O'Connor's music, said its chairman, Bill Fugazy.

"We think she went to far," Fugazy said. "She may not approve of the church, but she shouldn't desecrate the picture of a world religious leader. We're going to hit her hard in her pocketbook."

Gov. Mario Cuomo and Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., are honorary chairman of the group, which represents 66 ethnic organizations around the country.

On "Larry King Live" the other night, Barbara Bush proclaimed that "sex is death."

The first lady had been asked whether her previously stated view that abortion shouldn't be a matter of public debate conflicts with her husband's anti-abortion position.

The first lady, who dropped out of Smith College to marry George Bush and became pregnant less than a year later, said, "We ought to be telling these wonderful young women there's a great deal of life out there for you if you finish school, if you get a job, and then you can have a family."
