City Marshal Is Elected

Harry Gensburg has been elected as city marshal, according to a news release Monday.

He may be reached at his home by calling 938-2376.

HHS Youths Report Trip

Kerry George and Gary Jackson reported on their participation this summer in Boys State at Monday's luncheon meeting of Hart Lions Club.

"It gives you an opportunity to learn a lot," George said. "We met a lot of new friends."

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack George, he said that he had campaigned and won election to the office of Justice of Peace.

Son of Mrs. Harry Gensburg, Jackson said Boys State enabled him to learn quite a bit about politics.

"It gives you pride in your own party," he said, "when you try to get your candidates elected."

Lion Boss Weldon Jones expressed the club's appreciation of Sweetheart Jana Mapp for representing the club as their candidate for Miss Hart.

Kim Williamson, Lions Club treasurer, reported that proceeds should be approximately $2,200 after expenses, for the various projects conducted by the club during Hart Day Activities.

Adult Education To Be Offered

Hart I.S.D. will offer Adult Continuing Education at night beginning this fall provided sufficient interest is shown. This public service will be of two types: (1) Courses offered in connection with TSTI and (2) Courses offered in connection with PESO which is the Panhandle Educational Service Center. Both types furnish all books and there is no charge for the courses.

Courses that could be organized through TSTI are typing, shorthand, bookkeeping and Spanish. In order to offer any one of these courses, 15 people must enroll in that course. Upon completion of a course, a person receives a Certificate from TSTI. These certificates are not transferable as college credit to academic colleges.

A person must be at least 17 years of age OR have not been in school for a year, and cannot be presently enrolled in Texas Public Schools. Contact Shirley Barnes for more information, Hart Elementary School, 938-2142 from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m.

There will be a public meeting of the people interested in the courses by TSTI on Sept. 7 at 8 p.m. in the school cafeteria. This meeting will determine the need for these services.

Courses that could be organized through PESO are a basic math, English and reading course that helps a person to pass the G.E.D. which is a high school equivalency certificate, classes that help a person to become a United States citizen, and classes learning to speak English.

The public meeting of all people interested in the courses by PESO will be Sept. 28 at 8 p.m. in the high school cafeteria. Interested persons may contact Shirley Barnes for more details.

The Scientists Tell Me...

Rising Energy Prices Are Hurting Irrigated Farming

By Robert L. Haney
TAES Science Writer

It will be ironic if farmers in the major energy producing state of the nation are forced out of business by rising costs of energy.

For example, natural gas is a major source of agricultural energy and supplies more than three-quarters of all energy used in irrigation of crops.

This is especially significant since pumping irrigation water is the single largest use of agricultural energy in Texas, a state which produces and consumes more energy than any other state in the nation.

Unfortunately for farmers who irrigate their fields, increased demands upon limited energy sources have caused natural gas prices to rise, disproportionately affecting irrigated agriculture. Rising energy costs with higher costs for pesticides and fertilizers are also affecting most phases of dryland farming.

Irrigated crop production uses natural gas for energy to pump water out of the earth, as well as dry or process the crop, and is therefore very sensitive to changes in the price of natural gas. Since water is pumped over a large part of the growing season, a curtailment of natural gas supplies would greatly reduce output from irrigated lands.

Irrigation removes the annual variation in output that is caused by varying amounts of rainfall. It also increases crop yields considerably — although only 35 percent of Texas' cropland is irrigated, production from the irrigated land accounts for more than 60 percent of the total.

Many arid regions, such as the Trans-Pecos region of Texas, do not receive sufficient rainfall for dryland crop production and are completely dependent upon irrigation for crop growth. When properly irrigated, such regions can be highly productive, as state rankings of individual crops show.

At present, Texas leads in the production of cotton, sorghum, beef cattle, several vegetables, sheep, wool and lambs, many of which are produced in the Trans-Pecos region.

Scientists with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station (TAES) and Texas Agricultural Extension Service Specialists studied irrigation in the Trans-Pecos, where traditionally about 100,000 acres are irrigated. Higher natural gas prices in this area have contributed to a reduction in irrigated acreage. With reduced irrigated acreage there is less income generated in the area, thus affecting the regional economy.

TAES scientist Ronald Lacewell and Extension

Specialist Gary Condra also analyzed a 700 acre farm on the Texas High Plains, a farm that had a plentiful water supply. They found that if natural gas prices continued to rise, area producers would be forced to do one of three things: acquire more land at a lower price, reduce their standard of living, or default on the land payments. TAES economist Ron Lacewell and Extension specialist Gary Condra warn that local, state and federal policymakers should be aware of the serious problems that could arise from defaults in land payments.

"Widespread default could severely affect the economic base and employment of the area," Lacewell and Condra said.

They added that the High Plains region is one of America's most important agricultural areas, with almost 3.7 million acres under irrigation. The region produces 60 percent of the corn, sorghum and wheat of the Texas High Plains, plus 90 percent of the soybeans and 30 percent of the High Plains cotton. But Lacewell warns that such production may not continue for long.

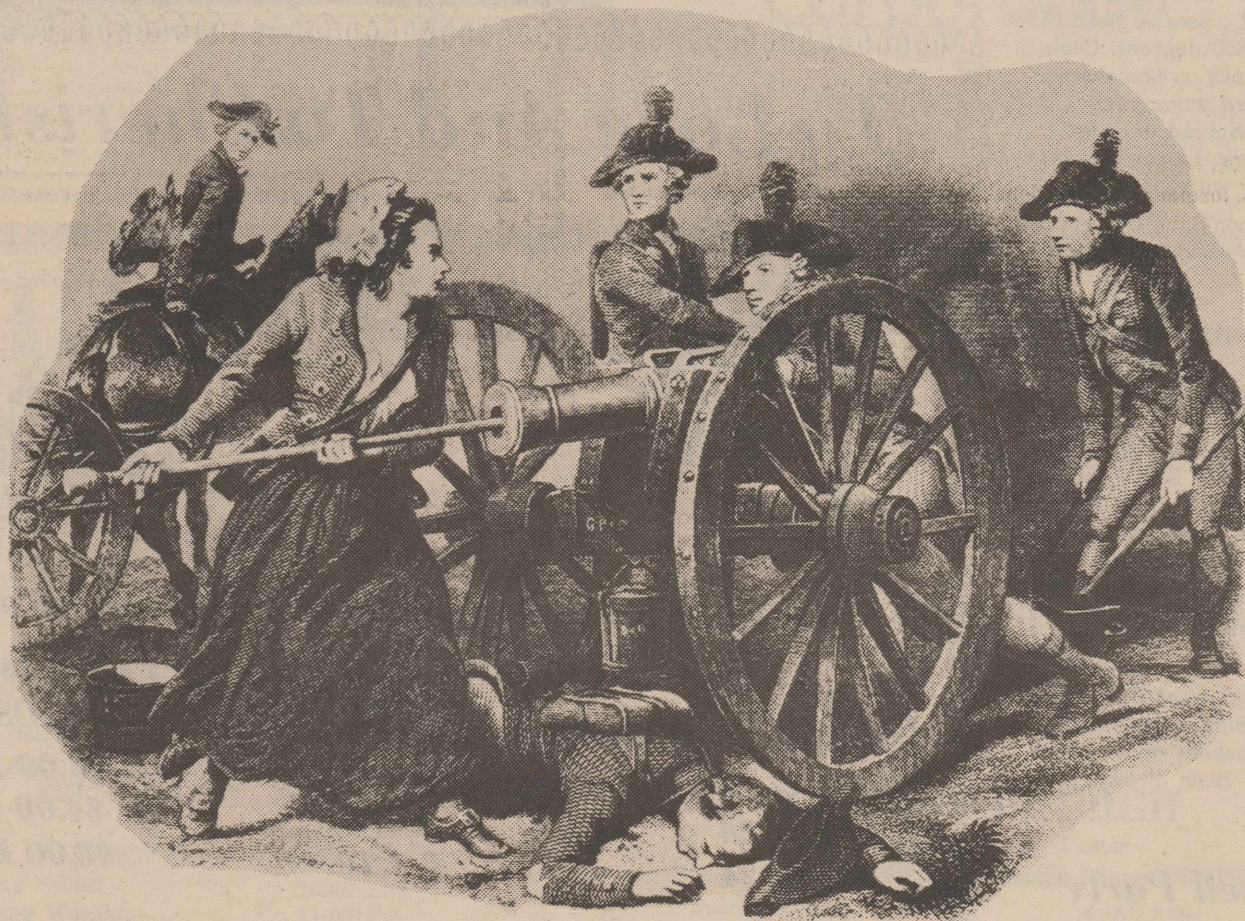

"The High Plains and other irrigated regions are approaching a situation similar to that of the Trans-Pecos," Lacewell said. "If the price of natural gas continues to rise past the current $1.30 per thousand cubic feet, it will likely result in a reduction of water pumped, irrigated acreage and agricultural production."

One possible way to keep cropland from being forced out of production and converted to rangeland might be to increase water pumping and utilization efficiencies, but scientists have found that upgrading pump efficiency can be very expensive.

The development of new integrated crop production systems promises to be an effective way to save energy. A short-season cotton production system developed by TAES scientists for South Texas Producers increased lint yield per acre by more than 30 percent and reduced energy use by 33 percent. The new system uses less fertilizer, pesticides, and water and uses fewer field operations. In addition to the energy savings, profit to the farmer was increased.

Although the over-all outlook for irrigated farming is bleak in many areas, increases in energy costs need not cause great losses in production in arid regions. Improving present equipment and developing new cropping systems could give farmers the economic boost they need to keep them operating at a profit.

Why???

There are so many things in the span of the summer months some of us cannot understand. First we plant a garden and most of us are so happy to share, if asked, and sometimes without being asked.

Quite a bit of work goes into the art of raising vegetables such as working soil in preparation of planting the seed, and they cost money; keeping weeds and unwanted grass cut; watering and hoeing. Then we go to gather vegetables and find someone has gathered them, torn up the vines and some even went as far as to dig some carrots and then drive over the vines.

We who have worked and raised the vegetables will share with you if you will only ask.

Most people have a small plot of land for a garden, even a part of the yard.

Free, Reduced Price Meal Eligibility Scale Announced

The Hart School serves nutritious meals every school day. Students may buy lunch for 50 cents and Kindergarten students may buy breakfast for 20 cents.

Children from families whose income is at or below levels shown on the scale printed in this issue are eligible for free or reduced-price meals. The reduced price for lunch is 20 cents and for breakfast 10 cents. If your income is greater than those shown, but you have unusually high medical bills, shelter costs in excess of 30 percent of your income, special education expenses due to the mental or physical condition of a child, or disaster or casualty losses, your children may still be eligible.

The school children of parents or guardians who become unemployed are eligible for free or reduced-price meals during the period of unemployment, provided that the loss of income causes the family income during the period of unemployment to be at or below the levels shown on the scale.

To apply at any time during the year for free meals or reduced-price meals for your children, applications may be picked up at the school. Within ten days of receiving your application, the school will let you know whether or not your children are eligible. If you do not agree with the school's decision you have a right to a fair hearing. This can be done by calling or writing Ted Averitt at Box 487, Hart or by phone 938-2143.

In certain cases foster children are also eligible for these benefits. If you have foster children living with you and wish to apply for such meals, please notify us or indicate it on the application.

All children are treated the same regardless of ability to pay. In the operation of child feeding programs, no child will be discriminated against because of race, sex, color, or national origin.

Superintendent Ted Averitt says, "If we can be of any further assistance or if your family size or income changes during the year, please contact us."

Of all the presidents, Thomas Jefferson is considered the greatest connoisseur of fine foods. He had an active interest in sampling different types of food and spent money freely to set the most elaborate table in Washington. He is credited with introducing many European delicacies and was particularly fond of dishes such as Beef Wellington. This recipe for Beef Wellington and many other American beef favorites can be found in "The Bicentennial Beef Cookbook" available for $2 from the Beef Industry Council, Dept. 76, 444 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Illinois 60611.

Beef Wellington

3½ to 4-pound beef tenderloin
Pastry*

8 ounces liver sausage or liver pâté
1 egg, beaten

Place tenderloin on rack in open roasting pan. Do not add water. Do not cover. Roast in a preheated hot oven (425°F.) allowing a total, depending on size of roast, of 20 to 25 minutes for rare; 25 to 30 minutes for medium. Remove from oven and let stand 30 minutes. Prepare pastry as directed and roll into an 18 x 14-inch rectangle, ¼ inch thick. Spread pâté over surface of pastry. Place the tenderloin lengthwise, top down, in middle of pastry. Bring the long sides of pastry up to overlap on the bottom of tenderloin; brush with egg to seal. Trim the ends of pastry and fold over; brush with egg to seal. Transfer pastry-wrapped meat, seam side down, to baking sheet. Cut decorative shapes from pastry trimmings and arrange on top. Brush top and sides with egg. If desired, check internal temperature by inserting roast meat thermometer, being sure bulb is centered in thickest part. Bake in a hot oven (425°F.) for 30 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes before carving.

*Pastry for Beef Wellington

3 cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
¾ cup lard
½ to ¾ cup cold water

Sift together flour and salt. Cut in lard to form a fine even crumb. Add water, 1 tablespoon at a time, until dough just holds together. Shape into a ball and roll on a lightly floured board or pastry cloth.

WHY FARMERS CRY - Farmers who grew onions this year found themselves in the costly wake of an unpredictable market which forced them to leave the mature vegetables unharvested in the fields. Cost of harvesting the onions exceeded the market.
