Path of destruction

Residents of Water Valley, Mo., return to the area of their town devastated by a tornado Saturday night. The tornado cut a path 100 yards wide, destryoing homes and a shopping center. This is one of a series of tornadoes which whipped through northern Mississippi, killing 15 people and injuring at least 100.

Great Britain severs diplomatic ties with Libya

LONDON (AP) — Libyans in their besieged London embassy said today they were preparing to evacuate by Sunday, the deadline set by Britain when it broke diplomatic relations with the North African nation.

It was not clear exactly when the estimated 20 to 30 Libyans would leave the embassy. A man answering the embassy's telephone, asked by The Associated Press whether they would depart by the Sunday midnight expulsion deadline, replied, "Yes...I don't know exactly (when) yet, because we haven't arranged it."

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, quoted a Libyan spokesman in the embassy today as saying, "We will go on the last day, on the Sunday, in the afternoon." The spokesman, reached by telephone, declined to be identified.

There was no official confirmation from Tripoli, the Libyan capital.

A Scotland Yard spokesman who declined to be identified told The Associated Press, "They have to make plans to leave and we are making plans to assist them. As for where, when and how they leave, we know the answers to most of these questions, but we cannot make them public."

Britain broke relations and ordered the evacuation Sunday in a move designed to end a diplomatic standoff that began last Tuesday when a submachine gun was fired from an embassy window at Libyan exiles demonstrating against Col. Moammar Khadafy's regime.

Constable Yvonne Fletcher was killed and 11 protesters were injured. The embassy has been ringed by police marksmen since then.

Libya expressed "astonishment and displeasure" at the British order and declared it "holds the British government responsible for this decision and its consequences."

Nevertheless, Britain said the building in St. James's Square will lose its diplomatic status — and immunity from assault — at midnight Sunday, freeing police to search the embassy.

Richard Luce Leon Brittan

Home Secretary Leon Brittan said the emerging Libyans would be given safe passage home after a search for arms.

But he conceded the Libyans would be able to move out any arms in diplomatic bags, which are inviolate under the 1961 Vienna Convention on diplomatic relations. Official sources said there was little chance of finding Ms. Fletcher's killer.

Brittan said the inquiry into the shooting would continue as a "matter of record."

"Taking account of the need to rid the country of this dangerous presence in that bureau and the safety of our fellow countrymen in Libya, we concluded that what we're doing is the right thing," Brittan said.

In Tripoli, the Foreign Ministry said in a statement: "The British decision has come amid an atmosphere of acute tension created by the British government, which paved the way for it by launching a racialist campaign of hatred against the Libyan Arab people."

But the statement added that "the Libyan people are anxious to provide all security and care" for the 8,000 Britons living in Libya. The statement was carried by Libyan television and monitored in London.

Richard Luce, the British Foreign Office's minister of state, said Britons in Libya, many of whom work at remote oilfields, were not being advised to leave but should "consider their situation carefully."

Senior citizen will receive citizenship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mary Kaszkiewicz of Warren County, N.J., who will be 96 years old next week, will receive a belated birthday present in early May: 77 years after arriving in this country, she will become a naturalized American citizen.

"Oh golly, we're so happy," the widow's daughter, Anna Fay Macklin, said for her mother this week. "She says she's going to kiss the flag and be an American. She says her wish will come true before she dies."

Mrs. Kaszkiewicz, who speaks some English but is hard of hearing, said through her daughter, "All my life, I wanted to be American."

Mrs. Kaszkiewicz was born April 26, 1888, in Poland, although no one is sure exactly where. She immigrated to this country in July 1907, and two years later married another Polish immigrant.

Her husband, Anthony, was naturalized in 1926. By law, women whose husbands were naturalized before 1922 automatically became American citizens. Mrs. Kaszkiewicz missed that deadline by four years.

"We at first thought that when pop was naturalized, mom was too," said Mrs. Macklin, 72, who lives with her mother in Washington, N.J., about 45 miles west of New York City. "Then we got older and found out she wasn't."

Mrs. Macklin said her mother, who made a living doing laundry, kept asking her family over the years to help her become an American citizen.

"She kept wanting it," said Mrs. Macklin. "But we kind of ignored it on and off. We tried once or twice, but nothing ever became of it."

The latest efforts for Mrs. Kaszkiewicz's citizenship were sparked in February, when Mrs. Macklin's son, Dennis, invited his mother and grandmother to visit him in Rome, Italy, where he is a doctor. For the trip, she needed an American passport.

Mrs. Kaszkiewicz is scheduled for her preliminary interview May 3 in Belvidere, N.J. The next day, at the same place, she is scheduled to be sworn in as a citizen.

Proposal won't affect Midland JPs

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

If a proposal to bar Texas justices of the peace from charging fees for performing weddings during business hours becomes law, it won't affect Midland JPs because neither asks a fee for the service.

State Rep. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, reportedly is planning to introduce legislation curtailing "weddings for profit" during courthouse hours.

"If they're getting a full-time wage, the taxpayer has a right to demand and expect 100 percent," Tejeda was quoted as saying in an Associated Press story last week.

Tejeda, who could not be reached for comment, is reportedly upset about Harris County JPs who double their annual $51,000 salaries by charging $25 fees for performing weddings during working hours.

While both Midland County JPs accept donations for doing weddings during business hours, they say they do not seek them. "I do accept gifts," said Judge Robert Pine. "When they ask what they owe me, I just say it's up to them.

"I don't know if we're legally entitled to charge a set fee. And while we're authorized to conduct weddings, I don't think we're required to do so. I do know if we get a gift, we don't have to turn it over to the county."

JP Charlie Sprayberry also said he accepts "a tip or gratuity" for weddings performed at the courthouse but doesn't require them. "After hours, however, I do reserve the right to set a fee for my time.

"It varies according to the circumstances. I've been asked to do them at midnight, at sunrise, on weekends and on holidays."

Although most weddings are conducted in the JP courtroom, both judges have gone out of their way to meet the requests of the future bride and groom.

One couple wanted Sprayberry to conduct their ceremony on the Riverwalk in San Antonio. "They put my wife and me up in a nice hotel for the weekend and paid all our expenses, so I didn't charge them anything," he noted.

Sprayberry has held office since January 1981 and grosses $29,500 a year. He says he has no idea how many weddings he's performed or how much extra money he's made from them.

The largest donation he's ever received is $40; the highest after-hours fee he's ever charged is $75: "That was for a 90-mile drive to a ranch wedding near Big Lake."

He's done weddings in bars, hotels, country clubs and — on occasion — his own home. The most unusual place, however, was a bowling alley, where the couple had met.

Unemployment in Midland and Odessa increased slightly according to preliminary figures released today by the Texas Employment Commission in Austin.

Midland's unemployment rate increased by 0.6 percent during March to 4.3 percent. In February the rate was 3.7 percent and one year ago it was 5.8 percent. Midland ranked third out of the state's 25 metropolitan areas surveyed.

Odessa's unemployment rate also rose by 0.6 percent during March to 5.9 percent. Last month Odessa reported 5.3 percent unemployment and 9.6 percent in the previous year.

However, while the unemployment rates are up in both cities, the labor forces, persons employed and persons unemployed have increased. According to Paul Adams, TEC labor market analyst for Midland and Odessa, anytime the economic picture appears to be improving many people rejoin the labor market to look for work.

"Generally there is a fluctuation in March compared to the post-Christmas months of January and February. The confidence is there that the economy is improving so people are going to go out and try to look for work again or for the first time," Adams said.

The trend appeared to be statewide according to John Kruse, labor market analyst with the TEC in Austin. "Since people saw the unemployment rate go down significantly in February, many people who had become discouraged in the past, became encouraged by the good news and decided to rejoin the labor force. However, while the economy is strong, it was not strong enough to absorb all these people."

The TEC said the jobless rate was 6.5 percent in March, well below the national average of 8.1 percent.

San Angelo tied with Abilene for the fourth lowest in the state with 4.5 percent unemployed. Lubbock recorded 6.2 percent unemployed and El Paso reported a 10 percent jobless rate.

The number of initial claims filed in Midland was 11 and the number of continuous claims was 123 during March. In Odessa, 48 initial claims were filed and there were 224 continuous claims during the same time.

Civilian labor forces increased in both cities during March. In Midland the total rose by 700 compared to the previous month and Odessa's increased by 800 during the same time period. The number of persons employed also increased by 300 in both cities compared to the previous month.

The National Weather Service forecastssnow for Tuesday for the central Rockies and Plains and rain for the Northeast.

Dry, hot weather forecast for Midland, Permian Basin

Just plain weather, without a drop of rain, is to reign over Midland today and Tuesday.

For tonight, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a low in the low 50s and southerly winds at 5 to 10 mph.

The weatherman is predicting a high near 90 on Tuesday and southerly winds at 5 to 15 mph.

The high on Sunday was 72 degrees, and the overnight low was 40 degrees.

STATE

Clear skies and cool temperatures dominated the Texas weather picture before dawn today as forecasters looked for rain-free conditions for at least a couple of days.

Sunny days with warmer tempertures were forecast through Tuesday. Long-range forecasts called for a chance of scattered showers and thunderstorms on Wednesday in the Panhandle.

Pre-dawn temperatures dipped into the 30s in the Panhandle and the mountains of West Texas, while readings hovered in the 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. Most temperatures were in the 40s and 50s.

Temperatures at 4 a.m. ranged from 37 at Marfa to 64 at Laredo.

A ridge of high pressure resulted in northerly winds under 10 mph over most of Texas.

The forecast called for afternoon temperatures to hit the 70s in North Texas, the 80s and lower 90s in West and South Texas and the middle and upper 90s in the Big Bend valleys.

Along the upper coast, westerly to southwesterly winds at 10 to 15 knots were forecast tonight, followed southerly winds at 15 to 20 knots Tuesday. Along the lower coast, southerly winds blowing at 10 to 15 knots were forecast tonight with increased gusts at 15 to 20 knots Tuesday.

NATION

Rain and thunderstorms lingered from the Florida Panhandle to the mid-Atlantic Coast today, triggering a tornado in Appling County, Ga., which ripped the roof off a house and heavily damaged two barns.

No injuries were reported.

The storm system dumped rain on parts of Florida, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina on Sunday, spinning off twisters that lifted roofs from barns in two Georgia counties and caused two minor injuries.

The same system, which dumped 3 feet of snow on the Rockies last week, brought rain, sleet and snow to parts of Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin and light snow in southeastern Minnesota. Scattered flooding was reported Sunday in Tennessee and Kentucky.

The system has been blamed on 21 deaths since last week.

Rain showers were scattered today from the central Appalachians, across the Great Lakes to the mid-Mississippi Valley. A mixture of rain and light snow fell across parts of Wisconsin and southern Minnesota.

Except for parts of the Southeast, fair skies dominated the southern third of the country, as well as the Plains, New England and much of the Rockies. But, cloudy skies and scattered showers prevailed from the Pacific Northwest to western Montana.

Today's forecast called for rain over the northeastern quarter of the nation while thunderstorms will be scattered from Florida to Virginia.

A few showers were expected to pass through the Pacific Northwest while windy conditions develop over the northern Rockies.

Fair weather was expected elsewhere.

Mild temperatures were expected across the nation. Highs in the 50s and 60s were to cover the northern half of the country while 70s and 80s were expected to prevail over the southern states.

Temperatures at 2 a.m. EST ranged from 28 degrees in Concord, N.H., to 78 degrees in Key West, Fla.

U.S., China may sign nuclear accord

HONOLULU (AP) — American and Chinese negotiators are close to hammering out an interim nuclear cooperation agreement that may be ready for President Reagan to sign on his visit to China this week, senior U.S. officials say.

"It is more than possible," said a senior aide traveling with Reagan, who arrived here Sunday. Such an agreement would be significant because it would clear the way for American contractors to bid on billions of dollars in lucrative nuclear equipment contracts.

But the aide, who insisted on anonymity, said the agreement would only partly address the major outstanding dispute, which is whether China will meet the U.S. requirement giving Washington final say over the disposition of nuclear fuel processed by American supplied equipment.

U.S. officials are anxious to have a major accord for Reagan to sign during his visit to China, which begins Thursday.

Reagan, making his second rest stop on his way to China, arrived here Easter Sunday on a flight from Santa Barbara, Calif., saying in an arrival statement he was on "a long journey for peace."

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, later attended Easter services at St. Andrew's Cathedral, one of the few times in recent months Reagan has attended public church services.

At the evening service, Reagan heard the Episcopal bishop of Hawaii criticize the priority the U.S. government has given to nuclear weapons.

"We see a greater share of resources switched from the compassionate face of government to the expenditure of arms while we learn to think the unthinkable in the language of acceptable megadeaths and limited nuclear warfare," the Right Rev. Edmond L. Browning said in his sermon.

At Hickam Air Force Base, the leibedecked Reagan told a crowd of about 2,000 that "our prayers this afternoon will not just be for the success of this mission, but for an enduring peace among the peoples of all nations."

President Reagan looks on as his daughter, Mauren Reagan, hugs first lady Nancy Reagan after Easter services in Honolulu Sunday. Entertainer Jim Nabors stands behind the president's daughter.

The traditional flower leis were placed around Reagan's neck by Jean Ariyoshi, wife of Hawaii's Democratic governor, George Ariyoshi, who greeted the president in the bright sunshine. A U.S. Navy band played various songs, including "Easter Parade."

The 73-year-old president planned to remain here until Tuesday to rest and make additional preparations for his journey to Peking. But first there will be one additional rest stop, and a final pre-China briefing from Secretary of State George P. Shultz, on Guam on Tuesday night.

Reagan said his trip marks another "careful, yet sure step" toward peace and friendship between the Chinese and American peoples.

"While our friendship is vital to the cause of world peace, we should also acknowledge that our vital national interests are at stake," he said.

Reagan was to receive a briefing today on the Soviet military buildup in the Pacific region from Admiral William J. Crowe Jr., commander of U.S. Pacific forces.

A senior aide said that "the Soviet capability and Soviet threat is of concern to us, the Japanse and probably the Chinese." He said Reagan wanted to be ready to discuss the Soviet buildup in his talks with Chinese leaders.

"Down deep, we think the Chinese look at us as a stabilizing force and as a deterrent to the Soviets," he added.

Reagan's visit to China will be his first as president to a communist country.

Senior aides had told reporters earlier that it would be Reagan's first visit ever to a communist country, but they corrected that Sunday, explaining they had overlooked an hour-long drive Reagan had into East Berlin as a private citizen, while on a trip to Europe in 1978.

A proposed U.S.-China accord on peaceful uses of atomic energy has been the subject of on-again off-again negotiations for the past two years. But both sides have made a major push to have it ready in time for Reagan's visit.

The Chinese are anxious to acquire American nuclear technology for their nuclear power program, while Washington wants American producers, such as Westinghouse, to have the business.

The senior aide said if an agreement is worked out in time for the visit it would be largely "an agreement in principle," leaving for follow-up negotiations the contentious issue of the final say over disposal of nuclear wastes from American-supplied reactors.

After 10 to 15 years of processing, nuclear fuel becomes plutonium, which could be further reprocessed into weapons-grade plutonium. The United States insists on guarantees from other nations that this won't happen. China already has nuclear weapons.

Even if there isn't a nuclear agreement, Reagan will be able to sign a previously concluded tax treaty with the Chinese and a cultural exchange plan, but these are not considered major agreements.

The last time Reagan attended regular worship services was with American troops in South Korea last November. Aides have said he doesn't regularly attend church in Washington to avoid inconveniencing other parishioners with the security precautions that are taken when he ventures into public.

Girl wins cruise in Easter egg hunt

By The Associated Press

From tornado-flattened churches to the decks of a luxury cruise ship, from the Hollywood Bowl to the Atlantic City Boardwalk, Americans celebrated Easter with traditional egg hunts, religious services, fancy hats and parades.

"On this Easter Sunday, we're thinking about the power of God and the Resurrection," the Rev. Guy Reedy told parishioners in Water Valley, Miss., where a tornado killed seven people Saturday and ripped the top off the First Baptist Church.

Gazing at his small flock sitting on chunks of broken concrete, piles of brick and wooden chairs pulled from the ravaged church, Reedy added: "We can look around at all this, and see the hand of God. He has spared us."

Meanwhile, in New York City, more than 40 children boarded the Queen Elizabeth 2 in search of 500 chocolate-covered marshmallow eggs and one bonus egg redeemable for a three-day cruise on Long Island Sound.

After being handed a basket and a fluffy, stuff bunny, the children scurried from room to room of the huge luxury liner. Five-year-old Tara Schein of Manhattan was the lucky winner of the three-day cruise.

Across town, thousands of people lined up in cool but sunny weather to march in the Big Apple's annual Easter parade.

Thousands of Los Angeles-area residents began their Easter Sunday at the traditional daybreak non-denominational service at the Hollywood Bowl. The program included a reading by actor Mickey Rooney and chorale singing of hymns and gospel music in the open-air bowl.

Holiday celebrators also donned Easter bonnets and spring clothes in parades and promenades in Philadelphia's Rittenhouse Square and along Atlantic City's famous Boardwalk.

In Wilmington, Mass., five anti-nuclear protesters were arrested for trespassing at the Avco Systems Division plant after slipping through a fence about 3:30 a.m. to celebrate Easter Mass, police said.

The five, including a Roman Catholic priest, refused to pay $20 bail and spent their holiday in jail, police said. Avco makes components used in the construction of nuclear missiles.

About two dozen protesters interrupted a morning service at Shadyside Presbyterian Church in Pittsburgh to lecture worshipers about corporate responsibility for laid-off workers.

The protesters, members of a coalition of union leaders and ministers, said they selected Shadyside because its congregation includes the vice chairman and chief operating officer of U.S. Steel Corp., Thomas C. Graham, and several other corporate leaders. Churchgoers tried in vain to drown out the speech with song.

An estimated 1,200 people attended a sunrise Easter service on the south rim of the Grand Canyon in Arizona, a tradition since 1902.

In Wayne, N.J., hard hit by floods earlier in the month, the American Red Cross prepared an Easter dinner and show for about 75 people who have been unable to return to their homes.

In Chicago, charities gave ham dinners to the needy.

The Easter holiday was sunny in many areas, but parts of the South — including Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and the Missouri Valley were plagued with harsh thunderstorms that spawned tornadoes.

Hundreds of residents in Decatur, Ind., hung more than 700 brightly painted Easter eggs on a tree, reviving a 30-year-old tradition that was stopped in 1977 when the town's new library was built and the tree once used for the celebration was felled.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said a frog named "Ronald Reagan" entered by his 8-year-old son Paul "might not win, but the president will." The frog came in second with a three-jump total of 6 feet, 1 inch.

The real Ronald Reagan, meanwhile, was headed from his California ranch Sunday to Hawaii en route to China for a presidential visit.

The traditional Easter Egg Roll on the White House lawn was scheduled for Monday morning, without the first family.

Buttons tout women for vice president

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political soothsayers judging the odds on whether a woman will share the Democratic ticket in November should consult Mary Stanley, who is selling campaign buttons for the National Women's Political Caucus.

The Fresno, Calif., businesswoman is pushing buttons touting seven women as Democratic vice presidential candidates as a way to raise money for the bipartisan political organization — and best sellers have been Mayor Dianne Feinstein of San Francisco and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York.

"The response has been tremendous," said Ms. Stanley, who hopes to sell about 140,000 of the $2 buttons before the Democrats gather in San Francisco in July.

Besides Mrs. Feinstein and Mrs. Ferraro, the caucus is selling buttons portraying the other women prominently mentioned in Democratic Party circles as possible running mates: Reps. Lindy Boggs of Louisiana, Barbara Mikulski of Maryland and Patricia Schroeder of Colorado; Gov. Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky and Lt. Gov. Martha Griffiths of Michigan.

Ms. Stanley, a Republican, says that even though many political handicappers find the odds are against a woman sharing the ticket in November, the prospect for the Democrats "makes the whole thing so much more exciting."

Her organization sold campaign buttons portraying possible Republican women candidates in 1980, Ms. Stanley says, but the Reagan-Bush ticket has ruled out that possibility for the GOP this election year.

A woman sharing the Democratic ticket would be an incentive not only for Democrats but also for Republican women to cross over and vote for the opposition this fall, Ms. Stanley argues.

Her views are shared by several senior Democratic Party organizers.

"It might be a strong advantage to the party" if a woman is picked for the ticket, says Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

If a woman does not get on the ticket, Coelho expects several of those under consideration for the second slot to get top posts in a Democratic Cabinet, reflecting the growing power of women in the party.

"It's no longer a question of whether there will be a woman vice president but when," predicts Ann Lewis, political director of the Democratic National Committee. "It there isn't a woman on the ticket in 1984, there will be one the next time around."

The Democrats may be aided by the so-called "gender gap," a belief that fewer women support President Reagan's re-election than men, Mrs. Lewis says. But she also points out that since women make up 53 percent of the voting-age population and since 6 million more women voted in 1980 than men, it will be to the Democrats' advantage to bring a woman into this year's race.

"Turnout is the key to our strategy, and a woman V.P. candidate would inspire turnout," she said.

Pollster George Gallup said last week that if the Democrats select a woman it "would be a very big factor and enhance the Democratic ticket" this fall.

In 1937, only 34 percent of the population surveyed said they would vote for a woman presidential candidate, but the figure is now up to 80 percent and reflects "one of the most dramatic trends we have ever recorded," Gallup said.

Coelho believes Mrs. Feinstein and Mrs. Ferraro are the strongest contenders, citing their government experience and the fact that they come from populous states.

Mrs. Feinstein has been mayor of San Francisco since 1978 and was the city's first female president of its Board of Supervisors. She is regarded as a political moderate, supports the Equal Rights Amendment and displayed talents of a political survivor by handily turning aside a recall attempt last year.

Mrs. Feinstein says she considers it "a major breakthrough that women are seen as capable of doing the job" of vice president and she believes "the American people are open to the possibility."

Proposal won't affect local JPs

The most unusual place Pine — who's held office for 20 years and makes $30,528 annually — ever conducted a ceremony was in the air: circling the city in a light plane.

He's also done weddings in night clubs, pool halls, restaurants, churches, parks and gardens.

The least he ever got for a ceremony was 50 cents; the most was $100. "I've also performed many weddings for nothing," he said.

Midland JPs, according to Sprayberry, make about $7,000 a year less than most other elected county officials.

Among other things, JPs hold inquests and rule on causes of death; issue search warrants; conduct driver's license suspension hearings; hold hearings to determine if a criminal case should go to the grand jury for possible indictment; and preside over civil and small claims litigation.

Sprayberry, like Pine, has also performed weddings for nothing. And on occasion, a wedding has even cost him money:

"I've actually given less fortunate couples the money to go out and have a meal at a restaurant to celebrate their wedding.

"Once, I even provided the wine and hors d'oeurves. The couple said they'd like to mail me a donation. That was 2½ years ago. I'm still waiting."

Libyan radio, reading from an editorial in the Tripoli weekly Green March, accused Britain of "hunting down and oppressing" Libyan students in Britain and added that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was behaving "according to U.S. cowboy Reagan's counsel and orders...since women do not do anything without consulting their husbands."

London's weekly Observer newspaper reported Sunday that some Libyan students were hanged on the Tripoli University campus on Monday, April 16 — the day before the demonstration outside the Libyan Embassy in London.

The newspaper, in a report from Tripoli, cited "unofficial sources" and "Libyan student sources" as saying between two and eight students were publicly hanged for offenses against the regime. The offenses were not specified.

The Washington Post reported today from Tripoli that the Student Revolutionary Committee, a group loyal to Khadafy, announced April 15 that two students would be hanged for treason. On April 16, the Post said, gallows were built at the entrance to the university in Tripoli and the two students were hanged before thousands of their peers. The report was based on accounts from witnesses.

The demonstration in London was an anniversary protest against the hanging of anti-Khadafy students at Benghazi University in April 1977, London's Observer said. The protesters reportedly shouted "Khadafy hangs students."

In Tripoli, British Ambassador Oliver Miles and his staff prepared to depart by the same Sunday deadline. Miles headed unsuccessful negotiations with the Khadafy regime.

Curtis E. Willaims poses with his camera and a photo of a hummingbird in his home in Marlin, Texas. Williams is one of the foremost odonatologists in Texas. Odonatology, the study of dragon flies, is a specialty the 66-year-old Willaims fell into almost by accident. But he now has nine articles published on the subject, most of them in the journal of the International Society of Odonatoligsts.

Dispatcher a dragonfly specialist by accident

MARLIN (AP) — Curtis E. Williams is not only a dispatcher for the Falls County Sheriff's Office, he is one of the foremost odonatologists in Texas.

Odonatology, the study of dragonflies, is a specialty the 66-year-old Williams fell into almost by accident. But he now has nine articles published on the subject, most of them in the journal of the International Society of Odonatologists.

A collection of Williams' nature photographs, which earned him mention in Texas Monthly and a magazine published by the Texas Association of Museums, has been on display at Baylor University's Strecker Museum and the Dallas Museum of Natural History.

Williams recently explained over coffee (in mugs ordained with dragonfly paintings, no less) that his fascination with insects and animals sprang primarily from his hobby of photography.

"I wasn't really interested in insects except for photographing them," he said.

In addition to dragonflies, he tries to capture other insects and "most any small creatures" on film. His photos of birds have appeared in numerous books and five of his dragonfly photos have been published in Audobon society field guides.

He gets many of the bird photographs — primarily hummingbirds, goldfinches and cardinals — right in his backyard or in Marlin's city park. He sells his photos through an agency in England, but "it doesn't pay for the film to sell 'em," he says.

Williams said the museum collection includes 150 photos of all types of animals — dragonflies, birds, insects, reptiles, even deer and longhorns.

A camera buff who custom-builds some of the equipment and tailors it to nature photography, Williams has addressed photo clubs in Temple, Waco and Dallas. He has also shown slides of his work to the Dallas County Audubon Society and students at Texas A&M and the University of Florida. He has guided Baylor biology students on field trip and appeared on local television shows.

The retired postman now works the night shift as a sheriff's dispatcher. He says he doesn't require much sleep so he has most of the day to pursue his hobby.

He has no formal training in odonatology, getting most of his scientific information from reference books and simple observation.

"I took all the other science courses in school but I missed biology," he said. But after he began photographing the dragonfly. "I started writing to more learned people than I in the dragonfly field. One of them hit me up about going into the international society.

"After I'd photographed every species I could find around here, I started going into the Sam Houston National Forest, part of the Big Thicket. I added about 20 species that we don't have around here."

Williams has also hunted dragonflies in Holland, West Germany and England. He says he is the only dragonfly specialist he knows of in Texas.

Several thousand dragonfly species have been identified worldwide, he said, many of which are discernable by only minute differences.

Lucas may be member of murderers' group

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — Henry Lee Lucas, a self-professed mass murderer sentenced to die for killing a hitchhiker, says he was inspired by a cult known as "The Hands of Death" which has hundreds of followers.

A key law enforcement officer involved in the Lucas case would only say that the claim is being investigated, while a Catholic lay worker says Lucas is not the first prisoner who has claimed membership in the cult.

"I belonged to a cult," Lucas told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in an interview from the Williamson County Jail, published Sunday. "It was a devil's organization. For initiation, you would have to go out and kill a person."

Lucas, a 47-year-old drifter convicted in four killings, claims to have slain about 360 people during an interstate spree of terror from 1975 until his arrest in Texas in 1983. Investigators say they have cleared over 100 killings following interviews with Lucas, who now faces murder charges in six states.

A jury in San Angelo sentenced him to death April 13 for the slaying of an unidentified female hitchhiker near this Central Texas city.

According to Lucas, the cult killed by contract and performed ritual cremations and crucifixions of animals and humans to promote "a reincarnation of the devil."

NOW, LUCAS SAYS he has had a religious experience and has decided to embrace Christianity.

A Texas Ranger who has worked with the Lucas case since November said Lucas told law enforcement officials about the cult some time ago.

"We are aware of (Lucas' story) and it is being investigated by the proper authorities," said Ranger Sgt. Bob Prince, who declined to say what agency is handling the probe or whether corroborating evidence has been found to back Lucas' story.

Lucas and his traveling companion, Ottis Toole, who has been implicated in several killings, began mentioning the cult several months ago during interviews with law offficers across the country, the Star-Telegram reported.

Toole, who faces trial in Florida on Monday in connection with an arson-related death, also claimed cult membership, investigators said.

During the interview, Lucas referred repeatedly to a companion who was involved "even more deeply than I was," in the cult. Toole is the only man known to have traveled frequently with Lucas.

A Catholic lay worker who has befriended Lucas said she was aware of stories about the cult. The church worker, who has ministered to prisoners in the Williamson County Jail, said she heard of the cult from two other prisoners long before she met Lucas.

SISTER CLEMMIE, who asked that her surname not be used, said two prisoners told her that they could not convert to Christianity because they feared they would be killed for disavowing the cult.

"I've been treated as an offcast all my life. I became what everybody wanted me to become."
— Henry L. Lucas

Lucas said his imprisonment last summer on a charge of killing an 80-year-old Ringgold woman led to a transformation in his life.

Since becoming a Christian, Lucas said he is "pushing" law enforcement agencies to uncover and destroy the cult. The cult's activities "all tie in with what the Bible is against," he said.

Lucas said Sister Clemmie has helped him realize that God gave him the memory to recall details of murder scenes and the appearances of victims even in slayings that he committed five or six years ago.

A bitterness toward society began in his childhood and led to his years of repeated murder, Lucas said. Lucas said his mother's practice of prostitution led to his hatred of women.

Lucas was convicted of killing his mother in 1960 and spent 10 years in prison and a mental hospital in Michigan.

"I'VE BEEN treated as an offcast all my life," said Lucas, who lost his left eye as a boy and was the object of ridicule because of it. "I became what everybody wanted me to become."

Lucas said a man in Shreveport, La., first approached him about joining the cult, to which, he later learned, his "companion" already belonged.

After parting ways with his family in Maryland, Lucas said he returned south and joined the cult.

Lucas said the organization has members all over the country who meet to conduct rituals that sometimes include cremations of bodies and crucifixions of human beings and animals. Some meetings that he attended were small and others included hundreds of people, he said.

Many of the killings were done at the behest of the cult, which would provide him with money and help him to obtain a car or truck to carry out the killing, Lucas said.

LUCAS WAS VAGUE about how the cult chose its victims. Often the body of a cult victim was marked with crosses or other symbols, he said. He also said his companion "participated in it worse than I did. He would eat human flesh and drink human blood."

Toole has told investigators of eating human flesh on more than one occasion, Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell and other investigators have said.

Lucas did not blamed all his killings on the cult. Sometimes, he killed simply to fullfill his desire to have sex with dead women, while some of the victims died during burglaries and robberies, he said.

"The biggest majority were killed out of hate," Lucas said. "I don't hate women, but I hate what they do."

Couple says black market adoptions risky

HOUSTON (AP) — Adoption officials say a shortage of babies may be tempting more people to consider black market adoptions, but a Houston couple warn that private adoptions can be heartbreaking and risky.

"Private adoption obviously is an easier way, but it's very dangerous," said Ron Moore, who with his wife, Cindy, adopted two children privately.

Desperate for a baby, the couple twice adopted infants through the black market and lost one when the baby's natural mother changed her mind.

Mrs. Moore has experienced both sides of the adoption process. She married while she was still a teenager. The short-lived marriage produced one baby, whom Mrs. Moore, then 18, decided to give up for adoption.

But Mrs. Moore, now 25, learned after she married Ron that she could not have any more children.

Houston officials say offers for black market adoptions — especially for healthy white babies — are growing at an alarming rate.

"All of our waiting adoptive parents get approached with an offer of private adoption," said Lynn Waldeman, a social worker at the DePelchin Faith Home adoption agency.

One or two teen mothers in DePelchin's maternity care division receive private adoption offers each year, said Agnes Zaccarro, a DePelchin social worker. But she said at least 11 mothers received such offers over the past year, more than half of them during the past month.

The Moores said they received one of their first black market adoption offers from a lawyer — who also was a priest. The man claimed he had a baby available for $12,000, said Moore. He said their lawyer refused the offer and tried to have the man prosecuted.

Then the Moores said their rabbi told them of a baby girl they could adopt privately.

"You want a baby so bad, you ignore everything," Mrs. Moore said.

Moore said he and his wife "spread the word across the continent" that they were desperate for a child to adopt.

"It's not what you know, it's who you know," Moore said.

He said that when he and his wife paid $3,000 to adopt Alissa 3½ years ago, private adoptions were legal. But he said the state adoption laws have become stricter since then.

State law makes illegal for someone to make money for an adoption other than to cover normal legal and medical fees. It also is illegal to arrange or plan an adoption unless it is done by a parent or by someone licensed to handle adoptions.

In February 1983, the Moores privately adopted a baby boy with the help of a lawyer.

They had the infant, whom they named Ryan, for three weeks before the lawyer called again to tell them the natural mother had filed a writ of habeas corpus to regain her son. The Moores learned that the 25-year-old mother had married five times and given up four of her five children.

Moore said he contacted two lawyers and two judges about the matter and was told it would cost about $20,000 in legal fees to fight for custody and that the couple had less than a 1 percent chance of winning.

"When I had to hand my baby boy over to the attorney and kiss him and say goodbye, I went to pieces," Moore recalled.

Moore said he and his wife decided against adopting through the black market after they lost Ryan, but they almost accepted another illegal adoption offer.

A friend told them her doctor knew a family that wanted to give up a baby. The Moores offered to adopt the baby if the natural mother would have counseling at least twice before the adoption and once afterward, but the mother refused.

The Moores say they've received several private adoption offers since then, but have turned them down.

DePelchin spokeswoman Linda Silverman said more than 96 percent of teen mothers keep their babies, a complete reversal from 10 years ago. Also creating a shortage of babies for adoption is an increase of abortions, she said.

Cities troubled by hiring

TYLER (AP) — Tyler's fire chief says last month's hiring of a Hispanic firefighter was "the right thing to do," but the firefighters union complains the move bypassed more qualified Anglo applicants.

Fire Chief Jerry Weaver says Tony Tijerina, 25, is the first minority member to join the 109-member fire department since 1975.

"We just felt like, morally, it was the right thing to do," Weaver told the Dallas Times Herald. "We can't go on with this kind of racial imbalance without getting sued."

But union officials say the issue is not racial and will sue the city if necessary.

"We're not addressing his name, his race, his creed or color," said David Schlottach, president of the Tyler Professional Fire Fighters Association. "We believe the most qualified applicants on the list should be the first considered for employment."

City officials say federal court rulings allow them to override state hiring laws to increase minority employment.

"To have one minority out of 109 — that's so far out of line, we're not making any progress," said city personnel director Ben Blair. "We're hopeing that the issue will drop and that it may not be necessarily to have a (Civil Service Commission) hearing."

Tyler's population is made up of 25 percent minorities. The police department has only one minority police officer, the Times Herald said.

Other East Texas cities are troubled by similar disproportionality, the newspaper said: Greenville's population is 20 percent black, but only one of its 60 firefighters is black; Marshall's population is more than 30 percent black, but there are two black firefighters among the city's 40.

Helen's miracle continues

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — It's always risky to do a sequel to a critically acclaimed movie, particularly one that celebrated a miracle. But "Helen Keller: The Miracle Continues" does justice to the original and has its own purposeful and inspirational story to tell.

This TV movie, which takes Helen Keller and her teacher, Annie Sullivan, to the years beyond "The Miracle Worker," will be broadcast on the syndicated network Operation Prime Time. Many stations will show the two-hour movie tonight.

In the 1962 "Miracle Worker," starring Patty Duke as Helen and Anne Bancroft as Annie, blind and deaf Helen's recognition of the world around her begins with Annie spelling the word "w-a-t-e-r" into her hand. That came at the age of 7.

Tonight's story picks up 10 years later in 1898, with Helen studying to enter Radcliffe. College was essentially an exclusive male domain then, and it was a major achievement for any woman to further her education. For a blind and deaf woman, it was mind-boggling.

Not only did Helen go to school, she graduated and, while there, wrote magazine articles and a book.

The movie examines the special bond between Helen (Mare Winningham) and Annie (Blythe Danner). Essentially, Annie also was enrolled at Radcliffe. Her painstaking task was to "read" Helen's schoolbooks into her hand letter by letter.

The relationship between the two women dominates their lives, and it satisfies many of their needs. At times, the brilliant and perceptive Helen becomes the teacher, advising Annie to seek happiness outside their home.

But that's not really possible. Their total commitment to each other virtually precludes all other serious attachments, and it ends up destroying Annie's brief marriage and Helen's plans to elope.

Helen's intellectual feats are recognized here — she was a friend of Mark Twain's (Jack Warden) — as is her growing need to find the love of a man.

She thinks it will be John Macy, her magazine editor. But Macy (Perry King) marries Annie.

In the recent play, "Monday After the Miracle," written by "Miracle Worker" playwright William Gibson, Helen's jealousy is given more shrill attention. In tonight's movie, based on Joseph P. Lash's book, "Helen and Teacher," the female rivalry is virtually ignored.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♡KQ75 ◇10643 ♣AQ1098
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡
4 ♠	Dble	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A. — Your partner, who is looking at a weakish six-card heart suit and spade length, is afraid that your side cannot make five hearts. It's possible, but your hand is so offensively oriented that we still would not pass. This could be a hand where they can make four spades and you can make five, or even six, hearts. Bid five hearts.

Q.2 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J32 ♡KQJ54 ◇953 ♣Q6
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?
A. — It is tempting to put in a one heart overcall as a lead directing bid. However, respect for money should tell you that this is not a wise decision — you should pass. At the table South overcalled, was doubled and went for 800 when game for the opponents was doubtful.

Q.3 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K9853 ♡9 ◇K108 ♣K872
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A. — We realize that North might have very little for his reopening bid, though the fact that East could not bid again makes us suspect that partner has a reasonable hand. Therefore, we would jump to four spades — our kings behind the opening bid look good. The only other action we would consider is a cue-bid of two hearts.

Q.4 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ6 ♡KJ3 ◇KQ9 ♣Q1063
Your left-hand opponent opens the bidding with one club, which gets passed round to you. What action do you take?
A. — Your hand is too strong to balance with one no trump — in the pass-out seat, that action shows less than a one no trump opener. The correct way to show your hand is to start with a takeout double and then bid no trump at your next turn.

Q.5 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♡A109 ◇Q5 ♣AQJ853
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A. — You have close to a minimum in terms of point count, but your playing strength is good and your queen of diamonds is a useful card. You might be able to run nine tricks at a no trump contract if partner has a spade stopper. Bid three hearts to show your stopper in that suit. Since you didn't bid one heart over one diamond, partner won't read you for a real suit.

Q.6 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K8 ♡AQ ◇K109542 ♣KQ6
What is your opening bid?
A. — We know that you can show us all sorts of rules in textbooks that make it clear that you should open one diamond. But then you are going to face a very difficult rebid if partner responds one of a major, because your suit just isn't good enough for a jump to three diamonds. Change one of your low diamonds to a heart and you would unhesitatingly open one no trump. We recommend that action here. Despite your six-card suit your hand is, essentially, balanced.

Nigeria's fate

If the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization had a genuine interest in education, science and culture throughout the world, it would stand up and be counted on the side of a free press.

That's because without a free press, those noble goals and worthy enterprises for which UNESCO is supposed to stand up will wither and die. But instead of championing the people's right to know, UNESCO has concerned itself with handcuffing the press.

One of the latest infringements on a free press has just taken place in the African nation of Nigeria, and to this day UNESCO has not raised a finger of objection.

Here is what has happened. The military government of Nigeria has created a law that gives the government the power to close newspapers and radio stations that print or broadcast anything that is "detrimental to the interest of the federation." Individuals found guilty of such alleged heresy can be slammed into the clink for two years.

And just who decides who is guilty of "detrimental" language, and who goes to jail? You guessed it. The government. It appoints its own tribunal, presided over by a Supreme Court judge who will be assisted by three of the military types who run the country. That should be impartial enough, right?

To add injury to this insulting type of democracy, the law says the burden of proof will be on the journalist charged with criticizing the government, or one of its officials. In other words, a reporter in Nigeria is to be judged guilty unless he can prove himself innocent. Furthermore, there is no appeal.

Tighter handcuffs on the press have seldom been seen, even in the days of Mussolini and Hitler. So it is fair to ask why the leaders of UNESCO, who talk endlessly about the press and a "new world information order" do not have the courage or the honesty to speak out against the unconscionable muzzling of the press that is taking place in Nigeria.

The people of Nigeria deserve a better fate.

Pizza parlor panic

Published reports last year concerning the pheonomenon "El Nino" — a sudden and unexplained warming up process in certain stretches of the Pacific Ocean — caused little stir except among scientific buffs.

But the havoc wrought by El Nino among some species of fish is certain to cause widespread distress to a large segment of the population of this and other countries — the legions of pizza lovers.

Sadly, one of the principal victims of El Nino has been the anchovy. According to the National Marine Fisheries Service, the United States anchovy catch in 1983 was only 23.3 million pounds as against 103.3 million pounds the year before — a drop of almost 80 percent.

As all pizza lovers know, one of the most delectable varieties of the doughy disc is the pizz'alice (prounounced peets aleetch) — a production covered with the tiny, salty fish. The anchovies add zest to an already zesty concoction.

The villainy of El Nino may soon either eliminate pizz'alice from the menu or price it beyond the reach of the average pizza devotee.

All he can do is ask for another plain or sausage.

And mutter expletives deleted about El Nino.

Another View:

Promoting partition

If there is going to be a solution to the Cyprus problem, it is going to come slowly through free and open negotiations and not as the result of outside pressures.

That reality has not kept the Senate Foreign Relations Committee from reverting to its old habits of making a portion of American foreign aid to Turkey conditional on Turkey's accepting specific proposals on peace for the island nation.

Predictably, the Turkish government has compounded its error last November of commending the creation of a separate Turkish Cypriot state by exchanging ambassadors with the Turkish Cypriot minority.

There is no cause for optimism in the new effort, led by U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, to find a peaceful solution to the divisions of Cyprus between the Greek Cypriot majority and the Turkish Cypriot minority. But that effort will be undermined, not reinforced, by congressional meddling, which has repeatedly led the Turks to dig their heels ever deeper. Turkey's behavior is to be regretted. Turkey bears an extraordinary responsibility for the way it has extended an emergency intervention a decade ago into an occupation. Ankara's deeds have encouraged the suspicion that its primary interest is the permanent partition of Cyprus and perpetuation of an independent Turkish Cypriot state, which is a formula neither for peace nor for justice.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 23, the 114th day of 1984. There are 252 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 23, 1564 — 420 years ago — William Shakespeare was born at Stratford-on-Avon, England. He died on the same date 52 years later.

On this date:

In 1789, President-elect George Washington moved into the first executive mansion, the Franklin House, at No. 1 Cherry Street in New York.

In 1791, the 15th president of the United States, James Buchanan, was born in Cove Gap, Pa.

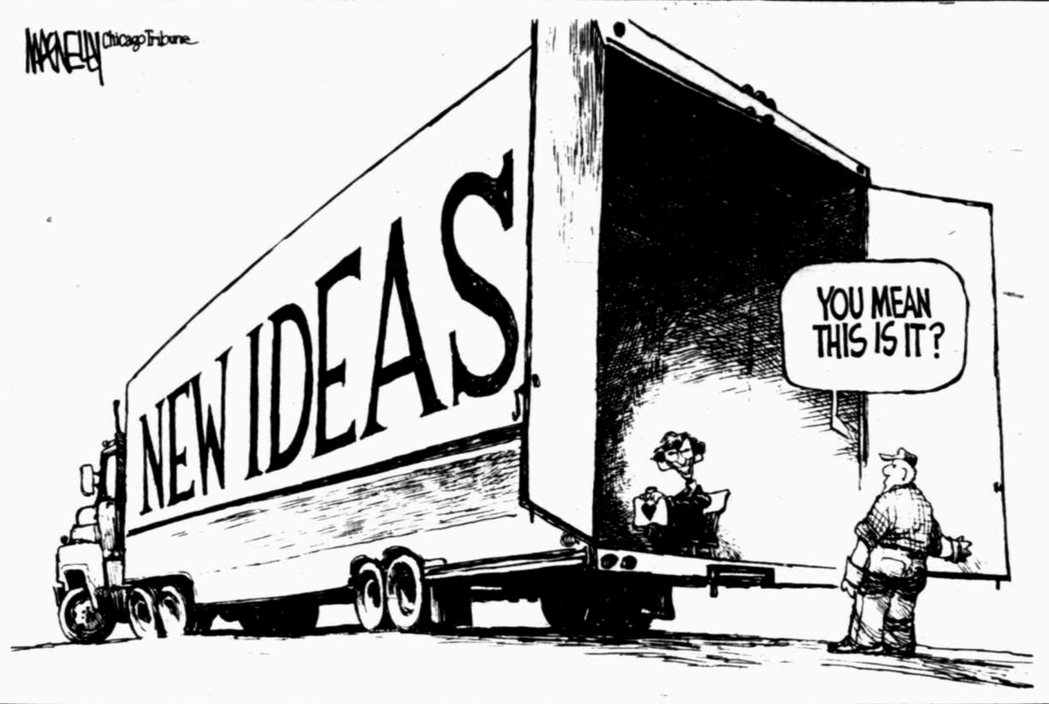

In 1949, Illinois Gov. Adlai Stevenson vetoed a bill that would have required that cats be kept at home. He declared, "It is the nature of cats to do a certain amount of unescorted roaming."

And in 1969, Sirhan Sirhan was sentenced to death for the assassination of Sen. Robert Kennedy, D-NY; the sentence was later reduced to life in prison.

Ten years ago: The Supreme Court refused to decide whether professional schools could give preference in admissions to members of racial minorities at the expense of white applicants.

Five years ago: President Carter's brother, Billy, called himself a "reformed alcoholic" and said he expected to be discharged shortly from a rehabilitation program.

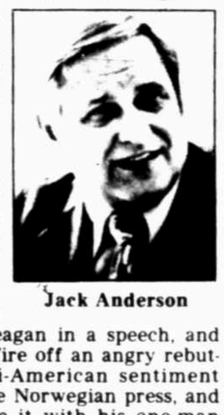

One year ago: President and Mrs. Reagan went to Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland to meet a plane carrying the coffins of 16 Americans who died in the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut.

JACK ANDERSON

Ambassador smells something

WASHINGTON — Mark Austad is a big, amiable bull of a man who carries around his own china shop. He is the American ambassador to Norway, a hero in unheroic times, hemmed in by the flummery of diplomatic protocol — a John Wayne in a post more suited to a Henry Kissinger.

Jack Anderson

There is nothing suave or subtle about him; he has an unfathomable genius for antagonizing the anti-American clique in Norway. Let the Labor Party chairperson assail President Reagan in a speech, and Austad will fire off an angry rebuttal. Let anti-American sentiment appear in the Norwegian press, and he'll trample it with his one-man stampede.

This awesome ambassador practices diplomacy with the finesse of a bull on the loose, barging around Norway, winding over its tortuous backroads, stopping at village crossroads to shake hands, dropping in on schools and factories, speaking at dreary gatherings, talking to anyone who'll listen, always defending America. He has addressed more than 60 Rotary clubs alone.

He tends to reduce complex issues to simple moral principles. He insists on calling U.S. naval vessels "peace ships"; he's promoting a "peace park" in the Norwegian town of Dombas; he presented a U.S. passport to Knut Haukelid, a World War II hero, after learning he had been born in the United States. Nevermind that Haukelid was raised a Norwegian since the age of two.

Austad confronts each problem, each challenge, each issue head-on. If students are critical of U.S. policy, he invites them to his residence for answers straight from the shoulder. If Norwegian doctors want to brush up on their heart research, he raises $250,000 to send them to the United States for study.

In this spirit, he picked up the telephone the other day and placed a trans-Atlantic call to my office. He was calling, he told me, as a friend. He was "getting murdered" in the press, he complained. Norwegian and American newspapers alike were portraying him as a foot-in-the-mouth buffoon, who had made racial slurs and had been picked up by the police at 3 a.m. banging on a woman's door.

He asked me to conduct my own investigation and tell America the truth about him, whatever I found it to be.

My findings: The ambassador has antagonized many Norwegians with his shoot-from-the-hip remarks and his confrontational style. This has offended some; others like his approach. He speaks the native tongue, loves the country and has won many friends in Norway.

The racist remarks attributed to Austad supposedly were made to a Norwegian reporter who cannot be found and probably doesn't exist. Sources close to the ambassador have never heard him say anything offensive about other races.

It is true that he was picked up by police in the town of Tromso after banging on a woman's door after midnight. Press accounts of the incident implied that he was drunk. In fact Austad, a practicing Mormon, doesn't drink.

As nearly as I can determine, he encountered an old friend at a party. The man insisted that Austad drop by his home for a late-night reacquaintance visit, then the friend would drive him back to the hotel. The ambassador gave the address to a taxi driver who dropped him off. But there were two homes at the same address — one 119, the other 119A — both sharing the same driveway. Austad simply went to the wrong house.

He kept banging on the door, he said, because it was cold and he had no transportation back to the hotel. Then, he walked up and down the streets searching for a taxi, but the streets were empty. So he returned to the house and again beat on the door. The police eventually appeared and gave him a ride back to his hotel. No charges were filed.

Austad isn't a diplomat of the striped-pants, lace-handkerchief set, to be sure. But a lot of people think he's one of our best.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Dr. Richard Elggren has invented a new method of identifying bodies: a numbered decal, or wafer, cemented to the inside of a tooth. The wafer, stuck on by a dentist, lasts four or five years. Elggren thinks it would be useful for military personnel, replacing dog tags which can be lost or destroyed. The Utah inventor and his attorney, former Republican National Chairman Richard Richards, have met with Army and Marine Corps officials, but so far have failed to sell the idea.

Hart could unleash 'beef' in Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio — When Sen. Gary Hart arrived here last Tuesday night to plead his seemingly hopeless case to mostly unsympathetic Ohio Democratic leaders, he brought his campaign to a state that could become a trap for Walter F. Mondale's revived juggernaut.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

True, Ohio abounds in unionization, smokestack industries, high unemployment and other elements that helped produce Mondale's overwhelming victories in New York and Pennsylvania. Key figures in Ohio's party establishment have always felt more comfortable with Mondale's bread-and-butter liberalism than Sen. John Glenn's patriotism-moderation. They were only too eager to embrace Mondale when their favorite son's campaign expired.

But Ohio is not New York, where governor and state party were mobilized for Mondale. In contrast, Ohio Democratic Chairman Jim Ruvolo has been pleading with Gov. Richard Celeste to stay neutral. Although Celeste seems certain to discard that advice for the admonitions of organized labor, his endorsement (unlike Mario Cuomo's in New York) would be more personal than organizational. Furthermore, just as he is being blocked out of the presidential picture for the second time, Hart is picking up his own endorsements here and there in Ohio.

That suggests dissent from the conventional wisdom that this state is Mondale Country. The rambunctious Ohio working man is less prone to accept union leadership than his brothers in New York or Pennsylvania. Mondale does not sell so well in the more conservative southwest half of the state as in the economically ravaged northeast half, but that is where Jesse Jackson cuts in.

So, traditional, Midwestern Ohio is really Gary Hart's last hope. Apart from slowing Mondale, the May 8 primary here is Hart's final chance to show he can pull votes in a big blue-collar state.

One post-New Hampshire poll gave Hart a 15-percentage point lead over Mondale. Even after his calamities of the past month, one shrewd insider believes Hart is still no worse than even and might be a little ahead here? But Hart also started the New York and Pennsylvania campaigns in close contention, then managed to fall steadily behind.

That's why Democratic leaders did not expect much from Hart when he came to Columbus to visit them behind closed doors Tuesday evening. But fresh from a combined vacation and fund-raising in California, he resembled not at all the frazzled candidate of Pennsylvania. "We were impressed and surprised," one told us. Another described Hart as "cool and collected" and "extremely well briefed on Ohio."

That briefing included a rundown on just how many bridges in the state need repair. After being bloodied by Mondale for opposing the Chrysler bailout, Hart finally took the offensive by claiming that no plan losing so many jobs could be considered a success. He landed surprise endorsements from two county chairmen in the state's northern industrial belt: Don Hanni of Youngstown and Al Teodosio of Akron.

Even so, most big guns present are backing labor and Mondale. Ohio is second only to Michigan as favorable terrain for his Chrysler bailout attacks. Besides, Mondale has debts outstanding among key Ohio Democrats — including Dick Celeste, who, as the Carter administration's Peace Corps director, was supported by the vice president (an obligation Mondale has publicly noted).

In the face of Mondale's advantages, a batch of Cleveland-area Democrats — including Parma's decidedly non-liberal Mayor John Petruska — endorsed Hart the day before his Columbus visit. Nowhere is the adage that all politics is local more true than in Cleveland, where some of Hart's new supporters privately confess they were motivated by enmity for Mondale's main man in Ohio: colorful, pugnacious County Commissioner Tim Hagan.

But other politicians eyeing Hart do so because of lingering doubts — privately shared by some Mondale supporters — that Mondale could carry this state against Ronald Reagan. Hanni, the maverick county chairman from Youngstown, told us on entering the meeting with Hart that he might back him because Mondale would lose in November.

Whatever the motives, Hart enjoys political support here not seen in New York and Pennsylvania. The argument for the governor's neutrality has been that a Mondale endorsement could undercut his own coalition — pro-Jackson blacks, but also suburban and southern Ohio Democrats attracted to Hart.

Mondale scarcely needs Celeste to win another major industrial state if Hart, as in Pennsylvania, responds to demands for the beef by remaining the wimp. However, if Hart gets out of the day care centers and into the steel plants and wraps Jimmy Carter around Mondale's neck, Ohio politicians see some chance for Hart's second great upset, once again blocking Mondale's runaway hopes.

CHARLEY REESE

Great men deserve our emulation

The recent network show on George Washington's public life was a great service. We, more than earlier generations, need to be reminded of the greatness of our forefathers.

Charley Reese

The American people loved Washington not only for his brilliant military leadership, but for his character which was about as close to perfect as an infallible human being can get.

Washington never accepted pay for commanding the American army through its long years of struggle. After the war, the Virginia Assembly voted him shares in a navigation project and he declined to accept them, saying that if he accepted personal rewards then the people would have just cause to question his motives when he spoke out on public issues.

Later, when Washington was elected President, an office he did not seek and most reluctantly accepted, he declined any pay for that position, asking only that his expenses be paid.

"When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty required that I should renounce every pecuniary compensation," he said in his first communication to the Congress. "From this resolution, I have in no instance departed: and being still under the impressions which produced it, I must decline, as inapplicable to myself, any share in the personal emoluments which may be indispensably included in a permanent provision for the Executive Department; and must, accordingly, pray, that the pecuniary estimates for the station in which I am placed, may, during my continuance in it, be limited to such actual expenditures as the public good may be thought to require."

It's difficult for us to imagine a modern politician saying, "I am personally well off, thank you, so I will decline to accept any payment for service to my country."

Many of the politicians now in office are 10 times richer than Washington ever was yet they not only gladly accept pay, they contrive to enrich themselves even further with pay raises and honorariums for speeches and articles.

Yet the lesson for us all in George Washington's life is that he was real, he did exist, and he actually was what all men could and should be. That we live in an age of cynicism and opportunism is all the more reason to cherish his example.

Such men who are able to put service to their country ahead of their own welfare do still exist. One such man is Gen. (ret.) Lewis Walt, former assistant commandant of the Marine Corps.

It's been one of the good fortunes of my life to have the opportunity to get to know General Walt for he has the same selfless love of country that Washington did.

In World War II he found himself the exeecutive officer of a unit of Marines destined for a major battle. His commanding officer had these young Marines painting rocks and tidying up the island, instead of training for the coming battle.

Walt pleaded with his commanding officer the men needed training. He was told roughly that he was not in command and would do what he was told. A lesser man would have done that, but Walt put his career on the line and went to the next higher level. There the general told him angrily, "Do you realize what you're doing? Your putting your commanding officer on report. You could be court-martialed."

"I know, sir," the young Walt replied, "but I would rather be court-martialed than take those young men into battle unprepared." The general's aide, Paul Douglas, who would later become a U.S. Senator, suggested that the Marines be inspected for battle readiness. The general agreed and by four o'clock, young Walt's commanding officer was on an airplane heading back to the states and military oblivion.

The new commanding officer gave Walt the go-ahead and he trained the men day and night. Without a doubt, Walt had saved the lives of many young Marines because the battle that followed was one of the most fierce in the Pacific War.

General Walt throughout his career gave his country the only things Washington said of himself that he had to offer: integrity and firmness.

It's easy enough these days to think not only that there are no heroes but that there never were. That is false, however, for greatness in individuals did exist and continues to exist. Those are the people we should revere and attempt to emulate.

Jackson urges anti-poverty plan

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Declaring that "the real war on poverty was never fought," the Rev. Jesse Jackson is calling for a new federal effort to rescue Americans who have not shared in the nation's economic recovery.

"As long as there's a slum, recovery hasn't worked," Jackson told 3,000 Vanderbilt University students Sunday night as he campaigned in Tennessee, where the Democratic primary is May 1.

While his two rivals for the presidential nomination rested on Easter, Jackson was up for a sunrise service at Knoxville College, where he said the nation's poor suffer an "extended crucifixion." He said they lose dignity by having to wait in line for food giveaways.

"When the poor are standing in those long lines, they're still being humiliated and crucified," Jackson said.

As he campaigned across Tennessee, Jackson repeatedly focused on the poor. In Alcoa, he told 150 people at a school it was time for a new war on poverty.

"The real war on poverty was never fought," he said. He did not give specifics of just what such a program should be like.

Jackson spent Sunday night in the home of Andy and Judy Fabri in the racially integrated Wherry Housing Complex in Smryna. He planned to leave Tennessee today for Maryland, where the Democratic primary is May 8.

At the I.W. Gernert Homes, a public housing project in Nashville, he joined hands with senior citizens and led them in prayer.

Jackson was ushered into the Jefferson Street Missionary Baptist Church to the sound of a gospel choir. Many of the 400 swaying members of the congregation were perspiring from the intense heat as the candidate proclaimed: "All around there is a resurrection ... New hope, new light, a possibility."

"The Lord never gave us a great mission when he didn't give us an opportunity to fight the mission," he said. He said the way to fight was to vote and also passed the hat for his campaign fund, as he often does.

Between stops, Jackson told reporters he plans another meeting with Charles Manatt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to protest party rules governing some caucuses. As a result of those rules, he said, "We're being robbed of 200 delegates."

Jackson press secretary Frank Watkins said Jackson continues to be irked by a rule in some caucuses that candidates must obtain 20 percent of the vote to be awarded delegates. He called that an example of the "undemocratic nature" of the caucus system.

Jackson already has protested the "20 percent threshold" rule to Manatt but Watkins said the new meeting would "give them a chance to rectify a wrong." He also hinted that if they fail to get satisfaction on the issue before the Democratic National Convention, Jackson forces might take their complaint to the convention floor.

"There's a possibility that the convention could be diverted off its real purpose, which is to nominate a candidate," Watkins said.

Helms in hot contest with Hunt

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, backed by contributions from conservatives around the nation, is fighting an uphill battle to keep his seat on Capitol Hill in an hotly contested and costly race with North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt.

But Helms, a Republican, said his chances to retain the office he has held since 1972 are improving, and a recent newspaper poll showed him closing in on his Democratic adversary after trailing by almost 20 points in June 1983.

"We never were as far behind as some of the polls showed at one time," Helms said recently. "We have a lead in the race. The question is how great the lead is."

Helms has one important edge: a 2-to-1 edge in campaign contributions. Election reports released Tuesday show Helms has raised $6.4 million, compared to Hunt's $3.1 million.

Facing little opposition in the May 8 primary, both Hunt and Helms are concentrating their fund-raising and advertising efforts on the Nov. 6 general election.

Hunt's report listed $1,000 contributions from film stars Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward and Barbra Streisand. Television producer Norman Lear chipped in $2,000, and Woody Allen, Marlo Thomas and Joel Gray each contributed $250.

Other prominent Hunt contributors include former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, $500; New York Times publisher Arthur Sulzberger, $250; Park Broadcasting Co. chief executive officer Roy H. Park, $2,000; and chairman of the Duke Foundation, Angier Biddle Duke, $1,000.

Helms, meanwhile, reported a $1,000 contributions from cowboy star Gene Autry of Hollywood, Calif., and Ellin Berlin, wife of New York City composer Irving Berlin. Hundreds of other contributions — ranging from small checks from housewives to $1,000 donations from out-of-state businessmen who like the senator's conservative views — have swelled Helms' warchest.

A Charlotte Observer poll in February showed Hunt with 46 percent and Helms with 42 percent of the vote. In June 1983, an Observer poll showed Hunt with 50 percent and Helms with 31 percent.

A statewide poll conducted in March by the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill showed Hunt ahead of Helms by a slim 47 percent to 45 percent margin.

"It obviously signals the movement and momentum is in our court," Claude Allen of the Helms for Senate Committee said. "It is still an uphill battle and we're not getting overconfident."

"It is neck and neck, nip and tuck," said Hunt's campaign director Joseph Grimsley. "It depends how much TV you've got on whether he's got a point or two."

Helms' advertising portrays Hunt as a politician who is unwilling to take a stand. The ads also try to link Hunt with big-spending policies and liberal Democrats.

"It takes more than press releases and promises," Helms said. "It takes some courage and some forthrightness."

Hunt's commercials, meanwhile, point out discrepancies in Helms' Senate record and say the two-term governor can do a better job on Capitol Hill by working closely with other lawmakers.

Federal government's share of school spending down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government now pays only 6.4 percent of the nation's school bills, its smallest share since the 1960s, the National Education Association said today.

The teachers' union, in a report based on school statistics gathered from the states, also reported that the average classroom teacher is earning $22,019 this year, a 6.3 percent increase over last year's $20,715.

The NEA said that for the sixth year in a row, state governments are bearing the major share of the school burden. States are providing 49 percent of school revenue this year, compared to less than 43 percent a decade ago.

The share paid by local taxes has dropped from 49 percent to 44.5 percent over the past decade.

For years the federal government footed roughly percent of the cost of public schools, primarily through remedial programs for disadvantaged children and aid for teaching the handicapped.

Those programs still exist, but they have not kept up with inflation.

The NEA said its research shows that the federal aid reached $9 billion, or 9.2 percent of all school costs, in 1979-80, the last full year of the Carter administration. The top dollar mark was set in 1980-81, when the federal government paid $9.3 billion or an 8.7 percent share, the NEA said.

But the federal share has fallen in the past three years to $8.2 billion, or 6.4 percent, the union said.

It estimated the public schools are costing $126.9 billion to run this year, up 6.5 percent from 1982-83 and almost 124 percent more than the $56.7 billion spent in 1973-74.

It estimated the total enrollment last fall was 39,223,841, down 475,000, or 1.2 percent, from the year before and down almost 6.2 million from 1973-74.

The average daily attendance in the schools — not counting those who left school permanently since the fall — is an estimated 38.5 million this year, and of those 36.4 million are in school on any given day. The per pupil cost for each of those students is $3,173, a 7.8 percent increase from the 1982-83 cost of $2,944.

The number of classroom teachers was expected to drop by 18,454, or 0.9 percent, from 1982-83, but there are still an estimated 2.1 million classroom teachers. Typically, secondary school teachers earn about $1,000 more than their elementary colleagues. The NEA said classroom teachers earned an average of $10,778 in 1973-74, or less than half the current figure of $22,019.

Average salaries ranged from a low of $15,895 in Mississippi to a high of $36,564 in Alaska.

Teachers earned an average op $6,821 in 1966-67. Their salaries today are comparable to $7,121 in 1966-67 dollars, the union said, so "the real gain in (their) purchasing power ... has amounted to 4.2 percent in the (past) 17 years."

The NEA estimated that almost 2.6 million students will graduate from high school this year, a drop of 72,000, or 2.7 percent, from 1982-83.

The figures appear in a booklet, "Estimates of School Statistics," drawn from data that state education agencies supplied the union. The NEA has collected similar statistics for the past 42 years. Its state and local affiliates use the data in their negotiations, research and lobbying.

Supreme Court weighing selective service ties to school financial aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a case that recalls draft protests of the Vietnam War era, the Supreme Court is considering whether the government may deny federal aid to male college students who fail to register with the Selective Service.

The court was to hear arguments in the case today and is expected to announce its decision by July.

U.S. District Judge Donald L. Alsop in St. Paul, Minn., ruled in 1982 that it is an unconstitutional form of punishment to force students to forfeit federal loans or grants unless they prove they have registered for the draft.

The Supreme Court suspended Alsop's ruling pending its review of the case. That left the government free to deny college aid to students who have not registered.

Since last Oct. 1, colleges have been required to obtain statements of registration compliance before handing out federal aid for the current school year.

Draft registration — but not the draft — was reinstituted in 1980 under a law signed by then-President Jimmy Carter.

Some 11 million young men, more than nine out of 10 who are eligible, have registered.

The law requires all male citizens and resident aliens born after Jan. 1, 1963, and who are between ages 18 and 26 to notify the Selective Service.

The law is designed to make it easier to draft young men if that becomes necessary. It was also intended to demonstrate American resolve in the aftermath of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Failure to register carries a maximum penalty of five years in jail and a $10,000 fine. That is not at issue in today's case.

In 1982, President Reagan signed the legislation that disqualifies nonregistrants from receiving college aid. Last October, the Labor Department also said it would deny eligibility for a new job-training program for failure to register.

Judge Alsop ruled in favor of six Minnesota college students who challenged the college aid law.

Alsop said the law is an unconstitutional "bill of attainder" — a law that legislatively determines guilt and inflicts punishment without a trial.

He also said the law violates some students' right against self-incrimination because it may force them to admit to breaking the draft-registration law.

The government began issuing draft cards last October to those men who registered with the Selective Service.

Unlike earlier draft cards that were burned by the thousands in anti-Vietnam War protests, the new ones do not have to be carried at all times. Selective Service officials said the new cards are a convenience for those called on to prove they have registered.

Two killed in accident

NEWCASTLE, Wyo. (AP) — Burlington Northern's second fatal accident in 10 days killed two crew members and injured two others when an eastbound coal train stopped to pick up workers and was struck from behind by another train.

Five locomotives, 18 cars and one caboose derailed in Sunday's accident seven miles west of Newcastle, said Burlington Northern spokesman Jack Martin in Denver.

Five derailed cars of a thid train parked on a side track were not involved in the collision on the main line, he said.

On April 13, five of the railroad's workers were killed near Wiggins, Colo., when two trains collided head-on.

Leak delaying testing

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — Pacific Gas & Electric says it will be midweek before workers can repair a leaking seal which is delaying low-power testing of its Diablo Canyon nuclear plant.

Word of the leak in one of the reactor's four coolant pumps came Sunday, the same day 10 people were arrested for investigation of trespassing as they crossed onto plant grounds following a protest march.

Startup of the plant, the scene of continuous protests by people who claim the facility is unsafe, had been scheduled to begin today.

The leak was discovered by technicians as they readied the plant for the startup.

Enrollment decreases

BOSTON (AP) — About 58,000 fewer pupils are attending Roman Catholic schools in the United States this year from last, a decrease attributed to a drop in the number of school-age children, a new report says.

Catholic school enrollment continued falling this year, but the number of church schools has begun to level off, according to the report prepared for the National Catholic Educational Association's 81st meeting, which opened here Sunday.

During the 1983-84 school year, 31 of the 7,937 Catholic elementary schools and 1,474 secondary schools closed, compared with an average of 72 closings a year.

Tomb of Moslem desecrated

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Police in Israel say vandals in the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip desecrated the tomb of a venerated Moslem patriarch, believed by many to be great-grandfather of the Prophet Mohammed.

Army sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said police had sent investigating teams to the Sayed Hashem Mosque in Gaza City and had determined the desecration Sunday was probably the work of a Moslem fundamentalist sect. They did not identify the sect.

The sources said the group reportedly believed the grave should not be housed in a mosque and wanted to move the tomb at least 65 yards from the mosque. Police said there was no indication of involvement by Israeli civilians or soldiers.

The sources said the vandals were seen by a mosque guard who was unable to stop them from throwing some grave stones out the windows of the mosque and tearing a cloth covering on the tomb.

The mosque was built in the 5th century as a church and converted to an Islamic house of worship in the 7th century.

Bomber to be raised from water

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — What it believed to be the only surviving Wellington bomber that saw active service in World War II is to be raised from 200 feet of water in Loch Ness, according to Herriot Watt University in Edinburgh.

The operation is planned for Sept. 15, with the help of North Sea Diving, an Aberdeen company, which wants to test new equipment. The wreck was found in 1978 by an underwater technology team from the university, 38 years after the plane was ditched when an engine failed. The crew escaped.

A total of 11,461 Wellingtons was built but the only one preserved is a trainer version at the Royal Air Force Museum in north London.

The twin-engined aircraft was the principal medium bomber of the RAF in the early years of the war.

'Conflict could continue in Chad'

ROME (AP) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy described Chad as "an extension" of Libya and said conflict would continue in the central African country there unless France withdrew its troops, the official news agency JANA reports.

"Chad is an extension of us and we are an extension of Chad," Khadafy said in Tripoli, according to a JANA report monitored Sunday in Rome.

"France has no right to intervene on our borders in an African country which concerns us as Africans and as Libyans," he said of Chad, which borders Libya in the south.

France, the former colonial ruler of Chad, has nearly 3,000 troops there to support President Hissene Habre, who is fighting Libyan-backed rebels led by former President Goukouni Oueddei.

Northern Chad, occupied by the Libyan-backed troops, is predominantly Moslem. The south, controlled by the government, is largely animist.

Police checking passenger lists

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Police reportedly are checking the passenger lists of some airplanes bound for Brasilia in another move to block anti-government demonstrators from coming to the capital.

The military government last week imposed emergency measures in Brasilia's Federal District to block planned demonstrations demanding direct election of the president. Under the present system, the successor to President Joao Figueiredo will be selected by an electoral college controlled by the government's party.

Congress is to vote Wednesday on an amendment that would provide for direct presidential elections this year.

A rally that had been scheduled for Tuesday in Brasilia by supporters of the direct-election amendment was canceled after Figueiredo imposed emergency rule in Brasilia and 10 surrounding counties.

Newspapers reported Sunday that some airlines bound for Brasilia from Sao Paulo must now submit passenger lists to the police. Federal police declined to comment on the reports.

Miners' strike in seventh week

LONDON (AP) — The British miners' strike against pit closures by the state-run National Coal Board entered its seventh week today, and militant strikers headed to ports to try to block shipments of imported coal.

While miners from Durham and Yorkshire were on their way to several coastal ports, others headed for power stations, rail depots and coal yards to try to stop deliveries of fuel.

A national strike coordinating committee was set up at the National Union of Mineworkers headquarters in Sheffield, under the control of union president Arthur Scargill. Union officials said the center will draw up plans to persuade miners still working in parts of central England to join the strike.

Military supporting Aquino slaying theory

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The general who was in charge of security at Manila's airport when Benigno Aquino was assassinated there handed over a stack of documents to a investigative board today and said they back up the military's version of the murder.

The reports, prepared by military investigators, show the opposition leader was killed on an airport tarmac and not on a stairway as some witnesses have said, Armed Forces Chief Gen. Fabian C. Ver testified.

Aquino, returning from three years in the United States last Aug. 21, was shot after leaving a China Air Lines plane under military custody. Only soldiers were with him on the airport stairway.

The government claims alleged communist agent Rolando Galman shot Aquino on the tarmac 12 feet from the bottom of the stairway and then was killed by soldiers. Aquino's family and opposition officials say the military was involved in the murder with the backing of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Non-military witnesses testifying before the board set up by Marcos have said they saw Aquino on the stairway after the first shot and Galman in a position where he could not have shot the former senator.

Ver said the military documents include photographs showing the stairway after the assassination with no traces of blood on the steps or railings.

A report of a re-enactment shows Aquino and his military escorts could have reached the spot on the tarmac where his body was found in the 11 seconds clocked on video tape between the time Aquino left the airplane doorway and the sound of the first shot, Ver said. The military says the first shot killed Aquino and later shots killed Galman.

Asked by Lupino Lazaro, an attorney for the Galman family, how Marcos could blame the communists one day after the murder when the military had not yet identified the alleged killer, Ver said, "He was theorizing as to who would have done the killing."

Other documents Ver gave the board included a four-inch-thick book which he described as Galman's criminal record, large books of photographs which he said showed the government's humane treatment of Aquino during eight years of military custody.

Army to remove mines

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Lebanese army unit was dispatched today to remove mines that prevented disengagement forces from moving into positions around the embattled mountain town of Souk el-Gharb.

A security committee meeting in Beirut, meanwhile, discussed ways to end the sporadic sniper and rocket fire that prevented full implementation of a plan to separate warring militias in the capital.

The security committee is made up of representatives of the Lebanese army and Druse, Shiite Moslem and Christian warring militias. It has been overseeing the disengagement process, which began last Thursday.

About 1,500 policemen and draftees plus 200 truce observers have been deployed along the three-mile "green line" separating Christian east Beirut from the mostly Moslem west and in the southern suburbs.

But they were unable to take up three posts in Beirut because of fighting, while mines kept the disengagement forces from moving into two posts near Souk el-Gharb.

Except for the occasional gunfire in the isolated areas of Beirut, police said a cease-fire declared last Wednesday to usher in the disengagement plan was holding today.

Meanwhile, in Damascus, Syria, Lebanon's top opposition leaders were holding talks with Syrian officials today on a proposed cabinet of national unity to lead Lebanon out of its nine-year-old civil war.

The leaders included leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt, Shiite Moslem militia commander Nabih Berri and Sunni Moslem leader Rashid Karami, who has been named as the most likely head of the new Lebanese cabinet.

President Amin Gemayel won Syrian President Hafez Assad's support for the formation of the unity cabinet in summit talks held in Damascus last week.

Assad, the main backer of the Lebanese opposition, promised to prevail upon Syria's Lebanese allies to join the proposed half-Christian, half-Moslem cabinet, according to Gemayel administration officials.

The Phalangist Christians' Lebanese Forces militia has announced it will not participate in a Syrian-brokered national unity government.

Nevertheless, Gemayel, a Maronite Catholic, plans to begin consultations with Parliament bloc leaders within the next two days to designate a Sunni prime minister to form the new government, said the administration officials who declined to be identified.

Family members and friends of miners at the Strmosten Pit of the Vodna Mine in Resavica, Yugoslavia wait Sunday for news of their loved ones at the mine after a methane gas explosion ripped through the mine killing 33, according to the national news agency Tanjug.

Death toll from explosion up

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The death toll from a methane gas explosion at a coal mine in eastern Yugoslavia rose to 33 after the bodies of two more miners were found, the national news agency Tanjug reported.

Another 14 workers were injured in the blast Saturday at the Strmosten pit of the Vodna Mine, about 100 miles southeast of Belgrade.

Tanjug quoted the chief mining inspector, Dusan Petrovic, as saying Sunday that an investigation was under way to determine how the gas leak occurred and went undetected.

The regional government declared today a day of mourning, with flags to be flown at half staff and public entertainment canceled.

Rebels deny killing U.S. aide

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The Popular Liberation Force, one of the five leftist rebel groups fighting in El Salvador, has denied responsibility for killing the Salvadoran who was a top security chief at the U.S. Embassy.

The security officer, Joaquim Alfredo Zapata Romero, was shot and killed a week ago, and a note left at a San Salvador radio station the next day said members of the Popular Liberation Force killed him because of alleged links with right-wing death squads.

However, a communique from Popular Liberation Force commander Leonel Gonzalez, read Sunday over the rebels' clandestine radio station, said the organization "is not responsible for the assassination of Zapata." It did not explain the delay in denying responsibility.

Reporters who saw the note left at the radio station said the message did not have the official emblem of the Popular Liberation Force and carried an outdated slogan.

Zapata Romero, 59, was killed by men who pulled up in a taxi beside his car and shot him 10 times. His wife Yolanda was seriously wounded.

He had been chief of local security at the U.S. Embassy for eight years and was in charge of 200 full-time security men.

There were reports before Zapata Romero's death that Salvadoran security forces people had threatened him for unknown reasons.

During the Easter weekend, fighting throughout El Salavdor eased up, with no reports of major attacks by either the guerrillas or the army.

The guerrillas broadcast Easter messages over their clandestine radio stations, urging people to listen to the words of the priests "who share the experience of a people that is already building a new society and new fatherland in territory controlled by our Farabundo Marti Front."

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front is the umbrella organization for the rebel groups trying to topple the U.S.-backed government.

Marshall does 'job' on Padres

By Associated Press

The way he was hitting, Mike Marshall was due to break out any day.

Sunday was the day.

"It was my turn to do the job today, but this was a surprise," said the Los Angeles outfielder after putting together the first five-hit game of his career in the Dodgers' 15-7 pounding of the San Diego Padres.

Until the splurge, which included two home runs and a career-high six RBI, Marshall had collected only one hit in his previous 13 appearances.

Marshall was joined in the Los Angeles hit parade by catcher Steve Yeager, who drove in four runs, three of them on a bases-loaded double as the Dodgers got the day started with a six-run first inning.

National League

The Dodgers put together an 18-hit attack, which featured four homers and seven doubles. Greg Brock hit his fourth homer of the weekend and fifth of the season to forge a tie for the league lead with Atlanta's Claudell Washington. Dave Anderson hit the other Dodger homer.

Phillies 12, Mets 5

Juan Samuel hit a home run and single, batted in two runs, scored three and stole two bases to pace Philadelphia over New York.

Samuel opened the Phillies' first with his first homer of the season for a 1-0 lead. The Phillies sent 10 men to the plate in a five-run bat-around in the second inning that provided them with a 6-0 lead.

Astros 3, Braves 1

Craig Reynolds and Enos Cabell belted solo home runs as Houston trimmed Atlanta in a game that was plagued by two rain delays.

Reynolds broke a scoreless tie in the third when he hit his second homer off Pete Falcone, 0-3. Two outs later, Cabell hit his first of the season.

The homers were only the fourth and fifth of the year for the Astros, with four of them coming in the three-game series with the Braves.

Winner Joe Niekro, 2-3, allowed two hits and fanned three in his five innings.

Expos 4, Cardinals 2

Undefeated Bryn Smith won his fourth game with late relief help and Andre Dawson drove in three runs with a homer and a single as Montreal defeated St. Louis.

Smith, 4-0, gave up eight hits, struck out three and walked one in 7 1-3 innings before needing relief help from Gary Lucas.

Giants 9, Reds 5

Jeff Leonard hit a three-run homer in the third inning and Gene Richards collected four singles to lead San Francisco over Cincinnati.

The Reds scored three runs in the top of the third to take a 3-1 lead, knocking San Francisco starter Mark Davis out of the game. But the Giants took the lead for good in the bottom of the inning, at 5-3, as Al Oliver singled home one run and Leonard blasted his home run.

Rangers blank Yankees again

NEW YORK (AP) — During the off-season, Danny Darwin learned to throw a change-up and he's already beginning to see its results.

"The batters don't look as steady up at the plate as they used to," said the 28-year-old right-handed pitcher, who scattered seven hits over seven innings Sunday in the Texas Rangers' 4-0 victory over the New York Yankees.

"His off-speed pitch really made the difference," said Texas catcher Ned Yost. "He always had the hard stuff and now they have to look for something else. He made the important outs look easy."

Darwin, 2-0, walked two and struck out two in his stint, throwing 103 pitches. Left-hander Mike Mason followed with two innings of hitless relief.

"We don't have the big name pitchers," said Darwin, "but we can pitch."

Texas hurlers shut out the Yankees for two straight games and have not allowed a New York run for 24 consecutive innings. Saturday, starter Frank Tanana and Dave Tobik defeated New York 1-0.

"We're not getting the timely hit," said New York Manager Yogi Berra. "I don't know when it's going to come, but it's gotta come. We had plenty of chances to break this game open."

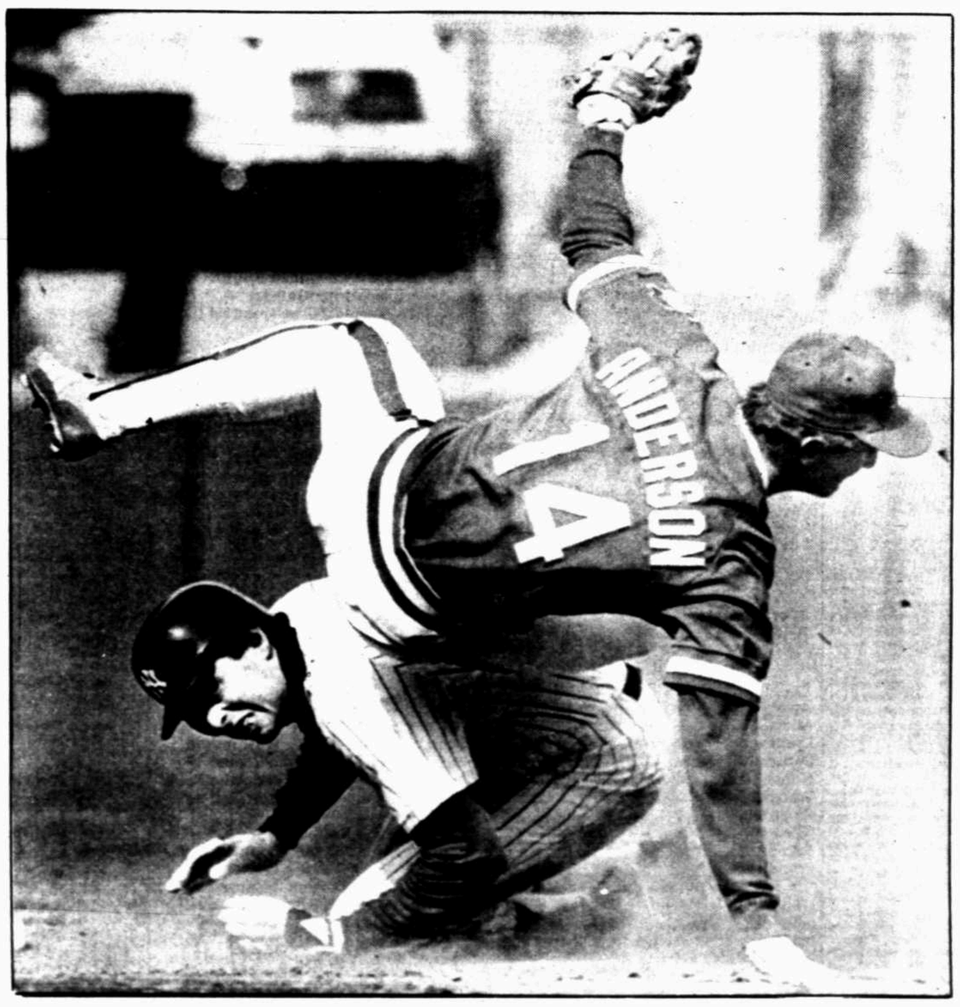

"My changeup tailed away from all their left-handed hitters," said Darwin, who also throws a fastball and slider. "I never felt like I was in trouble."

Darwin forced Butch Wynegar into an inning-ending double play with the bases loaded in the fourth and got Willie Randolph to fly out with two men on in the seventh.

"Each time I think they guessed wrong," said Yost. "That's how good Danny was out there."

The Rangers broke a scoreless deadlock with four runs in the eighth inning off relievers Jose Rijo, 0-1, and Dale Murray.

Designated hitter Mickey Rivers drove in the first run with a single to center. George Wright singled in another, and pinch hitter Pete O'Brien capped the scoring by lining a two-run single to right as Texas sent nine batters to the plate.

Playoff berth goes on line

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Playoff representatives from District 4-5A could be decided Tuesday at Midland Lee when league-leading Abilene Cooper comes into town against No. 2 Midland Lee.

At the moment, all the Rebels have clinched is a tie for the second playoff berth. With a 9-3 record, the Rebels can still be caught by Odessa High, in third place with a 7-5 mark. However, for the Bronchos to stay in the hunt, they must win both of their remaining games while the Rebels would have to lose both of theirs.

Should Lee win against Cooper, then the two playoff teams are decided and the only question remaining would be which team goes as 4-5A champ and which as runner-up. The Cougars are 10-2 and could clinch the title with a win Tuesday.

OHS has to get by a revived San Angelo team in San Angelo in order to stay alive.

In the rest of the 4-5A, the only thing on the line is pride. Midland High will try to win some back against Abilene High while Odessa Permian takes on prideless Big Spring. The Steers are 0-12 in 4-5A play this year and sport only a 6-19 record overall. All games are scheduled for 4 p.m. starts.

THE REBELS will more than likely throw ace pitcher Bryan Willis against the Cougars. He has been Lee's only consistant stopper all year long.

Willis did short duty against Big Spring Thursday. He pitched all seven innings against the Steers, giving up a perfect game to leadoff hitter Michael Dodd in the bottom of the sixth and, using a double play in the frame, still only faced the minimum 21 batters.

The one-hit shutout lowered Willis' earned run average to 1.66 and improved his district record to 6-1. In the course of eight appearances, he has struck out 52 batters while walking only 15.

With a lack of consistent offensive production the Rebels need a better hitting and defensive showing than they came up with in the first meeting with Cooper. In that game, Lee committed seven errors and managed only five hits in a 7-2 loss.

Steve Woodlee returned to the top of the Rebel's hitting statistics last week, improving his average to .421. Willis is hitting .412 and Jimmy Phillips is closing in on the .400 mark with a .389.

The rest of the Rebel lineup isn't hitting as well.

THE FIRST time Midland High and Abilene High met, the Eagles tagged starter Steve Wootan and reliever Doug Daehling to claim an 11-2 victory.

Since the Bulldogs nearly went through their entire pitching staff in Thursday's loss to San Angelo, it's likely Wootan will get the call again against the Eagles. He's one of only two MHS pitchers that didn't come into the Abilene game.

On the year, Wootan has a 2.85 ERA abd a 1-2 4-5A pitching record. He's allowed 12 walks while strking out 21.

At the plate, the Bulldogs have been getting their consistent six to 10 hits a game and, of late, Chis Herbert, at .421, as been swinging the deadliest bat. Herbert's current average is the highest it's been all year and trails only Mike Timlin's .429 for the Bulldogs.

Wootan is also hitting at a good click with a .405 while Darren Thorpe is hitting .300. Like Lee, the MHS lineup loses a lot of punch after its first few hitters.

76ers shove toe in door

By Associated Press

The Philadelphia 76ers aren't quite ready to give up their dream of repeating as champions.

After losing twice to upstart New Jersey in Philadelphia to fall behind 2-0 in their best-of-five first-round playoff series, the 76ers rebounded to defeat the Nets 108-100 Sunday to stay alive for at least one more game.

"Our object is to make it back to Philadelphia," said 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham, whose club is trying to become the first team in 15 years to win the NBA title in consecutive years. "We don't lose three in a row in Philly very often."

To get back home, however, the 76ers have to win one more time at Byrne Arena in East Rutherford, N.J. The Nets believe Sunday's loss will not adversely affect them mentally, although Cunningham said that "for the first time in the series they are in a position where they have to think."

"There's no reason to begin soul-searching," said Nets forward Buck Williams, who had 21 points and 17 rebounds. "We played well. We rebounded well. Everything is still in sync."

Julius Erving scored 11 of his 27 points in the fourth quarter and Moses Malone collected 21 points and 17 rebounds for the 76ers.

Erving's basket with 1:09 left gave Philadelphia the lead for good, and his free throw 24 seconds later made it 102-100.

NBA Playoffs

Lakers 108, Kings 102

Los Angeles led from the opening basket to complete its sweep of the Kings at Kansas City.

The Lakers, who got 23 points from Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and 22 from Mike McGee, led 59-43 at halftime and 84-72 after three quarters before the Kings rallied to cut the deficit to 93-88 with 4:49 left. But two baskets by Abdul-Jabbar and two free throws by Earvin "Magic" Johnson rebuilt Los Angeles' lead to 11.

Reggie Theus and Mike Woodson led Kansas City with 22 points apiece.

Knicks 120, Pistons 113

Bernard King, who established New York's playoff record with 46 points in its second-game loss against Detroit, matched that total in a winning effort in Game 3.

The visiting Pistons trailed 54-36 at halftime after shooting only 32.6 percent from the field in the first two periods, but they more than doubled their first-half total with 77 points in the second half.

Kelly Tripucka scored 25 of his 40 points and Isiah Thomas all of his 29 points in the final two periods for Detroit, but New York's big halftime cushion and King's 30 second-half points kept the Pistons at bay.

Nuggets 121, Jazz 117

Guard Rob Williams, usually overshadowed by Denver's high-scoring front line, scored 10 of his 20 points in the final 4½ minutes as the Nuggets won at home after splitting two games in Utah.

The Nuggets led 102-101 before Williams took charge with an 18-footer, a three-point goal from the corner, a 20-footer and three free throws down the stretch. Forwards Alex English and Kiki Vandeweghe and center Dan Issel led Denver in scoring with 29, 24 and 23 points, respectively.

Adrian Dantley had 29 points and Darrell Griffith 24 for the Jazz.

Suns 106, Blazers 103

Walter Davis scored 12 of his 27 points in the fourth period and he and Maurice Lucas had two baskets apiece during a late run of 10 straight points by Phoenix against visiting Portland.

The Suns trailed 101-96 with 2:41 to go, but a jumper by Kyle Macy and two consecutive baskets by Davis put them ahead to stay at 102-101.

Answers to readers' questions

Carefully considered answers to questions readers ask:

Q—In a column you deplored the fact that North Carolina's Michael Jordan was again picked as college player of the year simply because, for the second straight year, the Tar Heels didn't win the ACC tournament or reach the Final Four. Don't you realize Jordan had an excellent season and players aren't judged by what they do in the post-season play...which just isn't that important?

A—You are absolutely right and this will be a great relief to Danny White when he hears about it.

Q—It was mentioned recently that the University of Richmond, a school in the heart of the Confederacy, joined the Yankee Conference, composed primarily of New England schools. What was the real reason?

A—Very simple and elementary, when you come to think about it. It was the only way Yankee Conference schools, when traveling south to play opponents, could avoid having their league called "that Damned Yankee Conference" as a matter of rote. With Richmond in the league, the reasoning is, they won't dare call it the "Damned Yankee Conference."

Q—Are you thrilled by the NBA playoffs?

A—My excitement is beyond words, however, I do think they should reduce the number of NBA teams in the field, getting rid of the dogs, and expanding it by inviting all over .500 college teams that do not make the NCAA tournament. Then we'd get to see some players we've been watching on TV all season.

Q—Do you think the NHL Stanley Cup playoffs encompass enough teams? It seems a shame that one of the teams didn't make it this year.

A—I not only think the NHL playoffs should be expanded, but should be adopted by major league baseball. It's the only way fans will ever get to see the World Series they've been waiting so long to see...the Chicago Cubs vs. the Cleveland Indians.

Q—Now that John McEnroe is coming to Midland for an August 9 tennis exhibition match, who will the officials be?

A—The success or failure of the entire venture and Midland's reputation as a "with it community" may very well depend on the selection of the officials. They could bring in linesmen and such with whom McEnroe has jousted before, but if they really want to make it something special, they'll go with regional talent. The obvious choice is Ron Barnes.

If John McEnroe argues with the linesman over a close call while he is in Midland, will he be fined, like at Wimbledon or the U.S. Open?

A—I think the way it will be arranged is, John will be fined if he doesn't argue with the linesman. It will be considered a lack of good faith on his part and evidence that he really isn't trying.

Q—In a story on William Simon recently, you mentioned a place near Summit, N.J. called Madame Bey's. Is that a place for weirdos and fortune tellers?

A—Fortune tellers I don't know about, but it is, or was, a famous fight training camp and was regularly in the news when Madison Square Garden was the fistic capitol of the world. It later became Ishan's.

Q—I notice the University of Oregon is being referred to as the Ducks. Is that the school's official name?

A—A lot of calls and letters have been received at the sports desk from worried fans, fearful that one of the great nicknames in college sports has been abandoned. Our man from Oregon, Midland Cub pitcher Ron Richardson, assures us that although they may be the Ducks outside Oregon, within Oregon they are still the Webfoots.

Q—And a last minute inquiry...who is Ron Barnes?

A—Perhaps you should ask George Enright, Midland Cub manager, who debated with Ron what he was after the Texas League umpire called a three-run homer by Danny Norman foul. Most witnesses claimed it was fair by 10 yards and that's how far the outfielder was from the foul line as he helplessly watched it sail over his head.

Islanders next, but Canadiens feeling no pressure

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens are preparing to face the New York Islanders, winners of four straight Stanley Cup championships, but the pressure is off in a certain way, says Montreal Coach Jacques Lemaire.

The Canadiens and Islanders meet in the Prince of Wales Conference final with the winner of the best-of-seven National Hockey League series advancing to the Stanley Cup final. The series opens at the Forum on Tuesday night.

But with the emotional Battle-of-Quebec series against the Nordiques behind them, Lemaire believes the pressure on the Canadiens has diminished.

"There will be less pressure now because we won the war," Lemaire said of Montreal's 4-2 series victory in the Adams Division final. "There's always more pressure when you play Quebec.

"The two cities are so close and there's so much emotion, much more than against the Islanders.

"When you play under that kind of pressure the players don't play the same game. They're all afraid of making mistakes and they don't get as involved. It's easier when the guys are more relaxed."

That this is the Stanley Cup semifinal and the Islanders, as far as Lemaire is concerned, the best team in hockey, would make it hard for a lot of teams to relax.

But because of those factors, Lemaire believes his players go into the series with the same 'nothing-to-lose-everything-to-gain' attitude they brought to their Adams Divison semifinal series sweep of heavily favored Boston.

The Canadiens certainly qualify as underdogs against New York. The Islanders won all three regular-season games between the teams, including a 7-0 drubbing in their final meeting.

"That (the 7-0 loss) doesn't bother me at all," said rookie goalie Steve Penney, who played in that game. "This is a totally different team.

"It's undergone a total transformation, not so much in personnel but in attitude."

The brilliant play of Penney — he's posted a 1.66 goals-against average in nine playoff games — has had a great deal to do with the transformation, as does their disciplined, defensive style.

Potvin was in Ottawa attending the funeral of his father who died after battling cancer for more than a year. The veteran defenseman will play on Tuesday night.

As for Montreal, Jean Hamel, who suffered a broken nose and ligament damage to his right shoulder in a fight against Quebec Friday night, is expected back Tuesday.

TENNIS—Martina Navratilova Navratilova continued her streak to 10 straight over Chris Evert Lloyd, demolishing the defending champion 6-2, 6-0 in the WTA championships Sunday. It was the worst beating Lloyd has suffered as a pro and first loss as a pro on Florida clay courts after 84 straight victories. "I'm embarrassed," said Lloyd. "Martina played great tennis and I congratulate her." Lloyd held serve once in a match that lasted only 51 minutes.

"It's too bad it wasn't a better match for the people who wanted to see one," said Navratilova. "The last thing I expected was a match like this."...

Generals rally to beat Maulers

By The Associated Press

Herschel Walker and Maurice Carthon scored fourth-quarter touchdowns Sunday as the New Jersey Generals, trailing 10-0 after three quarters, broke loose in the last 10 minutes to edge the Pittsburgh Maulers 14-10.

Walker, having his best day of the season, ran for 152 yards on 25 carries on Three Rivers Stadium's rain-soaked artificial turf. He went four yards for the Generals first touchdown midway through the fourth period after catching a a key 23-yard pass from Brian Sipe on the 73-yard drive.

Then, with 5:21 left, Carthon went in from 16 yards out for the winner touchdown.

THE ANTICIPATED duel between Walker and Mike Rozier, the last two Heisman Trophy winners, never materialized. Rozier had to leave the game in the second quarter after gaining 20 yards on five carries and never reappeared.

"I was very disappointed to see him get hurt. You always hate to see a great athlete injured," said Walker."It might have been a different outcome if he had stayed in the game. It might have been best for us from that standpoint that he didn't come back."

In other games Sunday, the New Orleans Breakers beat the Denver Gold 20-18; the Philadelphia Stars beat the San Antonio Gunslingers 20-14,and the Washington Federals won their first game by beating the winless Oakland Invaders 31-17.

Saturday, Cliff Stoudt threw five touchdown passes as the Birmingham Stallions trounced the Oklahoma Outlaws 41-17 and the Houston Gamblers topped the Arizona Wranglers 37-24 on Jim Kelly's 11-yard touchdown pass to Richard Johnson and defensive end Pete Catan's 58-yard TD return of a blocked field goal.

Friday, the Chicago Blitz beat the Los Angeles Raiders 49-29 and the Jacksonville Bulls edged the Memphis Showboats 12-10.

Tampa Bay will be at Michigan Monday night.

NEW JERSEY'S win was its seventh in nine games this season and kept the Generals a game behind Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division. Pittsburgh fell to 2-7.

The Maulers, who blew a fourth-quarter lead for the third straight game, took a 10-0 halftime lead with the help of three Generals turnovers. Tony Lee kicked a 42-yard field goal, then a fumbled kickoff by New Jersey's Dwight Sullivan set up Amos Lawrence's 4-yard scoring run.

In the final minute, the Maulers marched to the New Jersey 3 bu couldn't score.

Buford Jordan ran for 182 yards and two touchdowns Sunday in New Orleans' victory over Denver as both teams moved to 7-2.

But the Gold, trailing 20-12, narrowly missed tying the game after backup quarterback Fred Mortenson hit Leonard Harris with an 18-yard scoring pass with 31 seconds left to cap a 78-yard drive. Kevin Williams then caught a two-point conversion pass just out of the end zone.

Jordan scored on a 9-yard TD run in the first quarter and from 13 yards out in the third.Tim Mazzetti added field goals of 29 and 22 yards.

Bryan Speelman kicked field goals of 39, 31, 26 and 34 yards for Denver.

WASHINGTON'S Curtis Bledsoe rushed for a team record 165 yards and scored two fourth-quarter touchdowns for the Federals, 1-8, who had their highest scoring game of the season. Oakland, 0-9, squandered a 10-7 halftime lead.

With the score 10-10, Washington went ahead for good when quarterback Mike Hohensee handed off to halfback Billy Taylor, who lateraled to Hohensee, who ran two yards for a touchdown. Bledsoe ran five yards to score early in the fourth period and 27 yards for a later TD.

Nick Faldo fends off Kite's charge

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Tom Kite's blistering challenge, five birdies in the first 12 holes, did not surprise Nick Faldo, who won the Sea Pines Heritage Classic golf tournament by a single stroke Sunday.

"I knew Tom was going to make a run," Faldo said after his no-bogey round of 69 had blunted Kite's charge and secured his first American PGA Tour victory, and the first by an Englishman on U.S. soil since Tony Jacklin won the Greater Jacksonville Open in 1972.

"Tom made it a tough day," said Faldo, 26, the leading golfer in Europe last year.

"I KNEW I had to shoot under par. I had to keep going forward. You can't shoot par or one over and win over here.

"I was just trying to hang on, make one putt, make one birdie.

"And it call came right for me in the end," he said.

"This was my No. 1 goal for the season, to win in this country. I'm thrilled to bits."

He won it with a 270 total, 14 under par and matching the record on the difficult, deeply-respected Harbour Town Golf Links.

Kite, a title-contender in the Masters last week until he hit into the water on the 12th hole, applied the pressure with a brilliant effort, a no-bogey, 5-under-par 66 and finished with a 271 total.

"I played well," Kite said.

"I have no complaints. I wish the results had been different, of course, but Nick played well. He did what he had to do.

Heritage Classic

"It hurts to play that well and not win," Kite admitted, but said it was a much milder disappiontment than in the Masters.

"I WAS really down there, really down," he said. "I didn't play as well as I can there.

"This is a lot different. I hit 16 greens, didn't make a bogey, shot 66. When you do that and somebody beats you, there's not much you can do about it."

Kite, twice a Vardon Trophy winner, came from four shots off the pace in cloudy, hazy weather, and tied Faldo for the lead with a birdie on the 12th hole.

But Faldo, winner of five European titles last season, regained sole control of the top spot with a six-foot putt for birdie-4 on the 15th, then parred in from there — all he needed to do to collect $72,000 from the total purse of $400,000.

He nailed it down with a gritty performance on the 18th. His approach ran through the green and stopped on the edge of a bunker. Using a putter, he ran it back to within tap-in distance while Kite watched from beside the green.

Faldo, a three-time British PGA champion, pushed his American earnings for the year to $144,705 and secured for himself a place in such prestige events as the Tournament of Champions and the World Series of Golf.

Kite, a winner of the Doral Open earlier this season and eagerly seeking his first two-victory season, again came up just a little bit short. He had to be content with a $43,200 check for second place.

DR. GIL Morgan, a non-practicing optometrist who tied for second last week in Augusta, Ga., again came from well back to claim a share of third. He had a closing 66 and tied at 274 with Ronnie Black. Black shot a 67.

It was two more shots back to Dan Pohl at 276. Pohl matched par 71 over the final 18 holes.

PGA champion Hal Sutton, Andy Bean and Chip Beck were next at 278. Sutton and Beck each had a 70 and Bean moved up with a 67.

Tom Watson, a runner-up in the Masters and twice a winner on the Harbour Town Links he called "everybody's favorite course," had a 75 and drifted back to 282.

Defending champion Fuzzy Zoeller struggled to a 77-285.

Faldo, a 4-stroke leader when play started, hit his approach to about four feet and made birdie on the first hole.

But, with Kite moving at him, he could do no better than reel off a string of 13 consecutive pars.

Eventually, Kite got a share of the top.

Faldo continued to play steadily, but couldn't get a putt to fall.

He missed from about six feet on the 12th. He missed from about the same distance on the next.

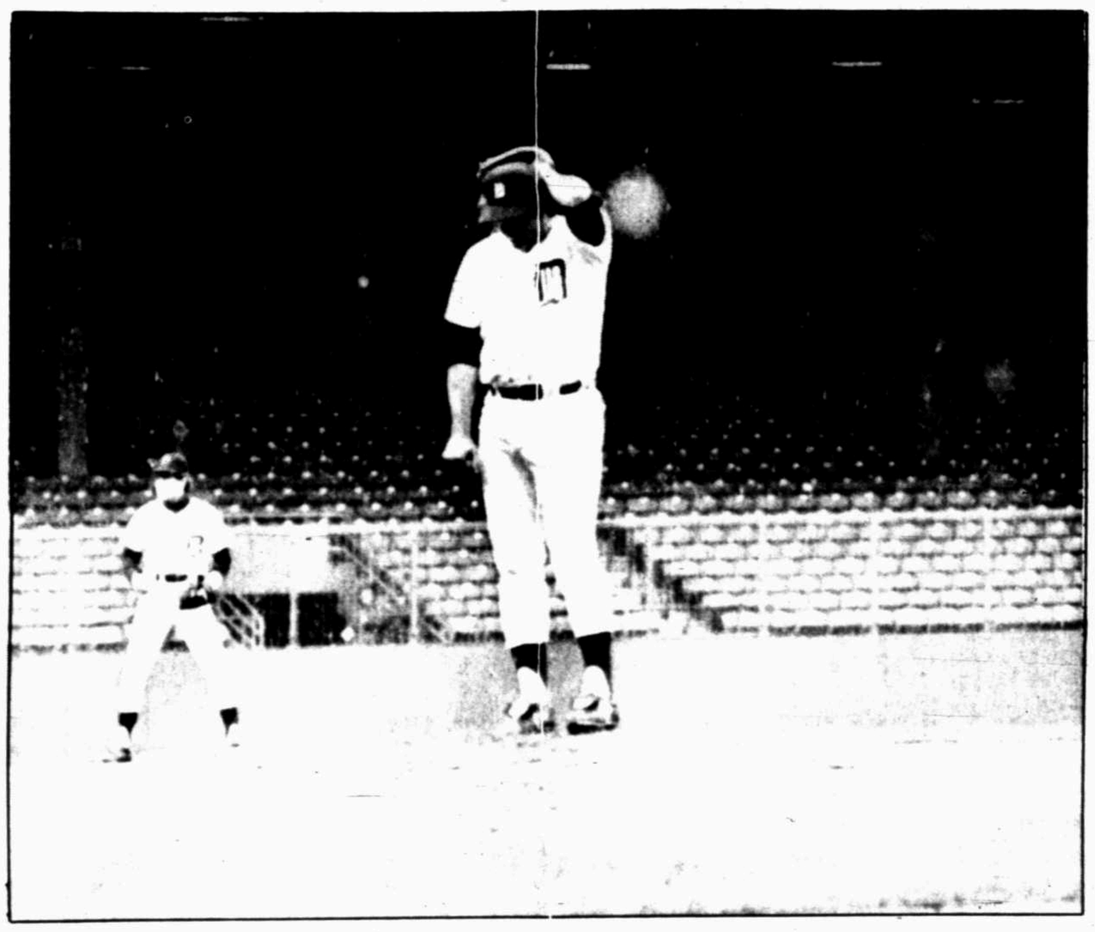

"I told my caddy that we just have to make one, then hold on," he said.

And he made that one, about a 6-footer, on the 15th and — just as he said he had to do — held on.

Gators blank Cubs, 3-0

From Staff Reports

BEAUMONT—Jimmy Jones notched his third win without a loss, combining with Mike Couchee to blank the Midland Cubs for the Beaumont Gold Gators, 6-0, in a Texas League game Sunday.

Jones went 7 2/3 innings, pitching six hit ball, and Couchee finished up in hitless fashion as the Cubs suffered their second shutout of the young season.

Beaumont scored three in the fourth and three in the eighth. Lefthander Jim Bouddreau was victimized by the first outburst in slipping to 0-3 for the season. Jorge Carpio was tagged for the final three runs.

Boudreau pitched six innings of five-hit ball.

Joe Steels had two hits, Mark Gillaspie two singles and a double and Jimmy Johnson two doubles and a single to lead the Gators' attack. Johnson knocked in two of the runs as Beaumont made it three straight against Midland.

The teams play two more games before Midland moves on to El Paso for a five-game series.

Darrin Jackson, Danny Norman and Mike Anicich each had two hits each for Midland, accounting for all of the Cubs' hits.

Jackson wins on Bill Max slam

By The Associated Press

Bill Max hit a grand-slam homer in the top of the ninth to push Jackson to an 11-6 win over Tulsa in Texas League action.

Max's round-tripper, which came with two outs off losing pitcher Billy Taylor, gave Jackson its 10th win in 13 games this season and pushed the Mets to a 3½ game lead in the East Division over Arkansas.

In other games Sunday, San Antonio clipped El Paso 7-5 and Beaumont blanked hapless Midland 6-0. Sherveport and Arkansas had the night off.

Tulsa jumped out to a 3-0 lead, but the Mets scored five runs in the fifth while batting around.

After Tulsa scored three runs in the bottom of the sixth, the Mets tied the game in the eighth on an unearned run. Dave Cochrane singled, went to second on a wild pitch, advanced to third when right fielder Javier Ortiz dropped a fly ball and scored on Fermin Ubri's sacrifice fly.

Randy Milligan added a solo homer for Jackson in the ninth after Max's grand-slammer. Max now has two homers for the year.

Tulsa loaded the bases with two outs in the bottom of the ninth, but reliever Joe Graves struck out Ortiz to end the game and pick up the win.

San Antonio's Mariano Duncan had three hits, including an RBI double and a run-scoring single.

El Paso catcher Garrett Nego threw out four runners and picked another Dodger off second base.

Tim Meeks, 2-1, was the winning pitcher. Bill Wegman, 1-2, took the loss.

Beaumont was led by Jerry Johnson, who hit two RBI doubles, and Mark Gillaspie, who scored two runs and drove in a third.

Infielder Squires cools Tiger bats, after rampage

By Associated Press

Mike Squires, already an oddity as an occasional left-handed third baseman, made his major-league pitching debut and did something few other American League hurlers have been able to do this season — cool off the sizzling Detroit Tigers.

By the time Squires got his chance, however, the Tigers had already pounded four previous Chicago pitchers for 18 hits Sunday in thumping the White Sox 9-1.

Squires started the game at first base and shifted to third base in the eighth inning. When the Tigers roughed up Britt Burns for five more runs, Squires got the call with runners on first and second and two outs.

The move worked up when Tom Brookens flied out to left on Squires' second pitch.

"Carlton (catcher Fisk) asked me what I wanted to throw. I said fastball and slider," Squires said.

Detroit, in completing a three-game sweep, ran its record to 12-1, best in the majors.

Kirk Gibson slammed a two-run homer in the first inning against Chicago's Tom Brennan, 0-1. Barbaro Garbey, who has 10 hits in 20 at-bats this season, delivered a two-run pinch-single in the fifth off Juan Agosto before Detroit wrapped it up against Burns.

American League

Chet Lemon went 4-for-4 to pace Detroit's assault before 10,603 fans on a raw day at Tiger Stadium. The game was delayed 1 hour, 23 minutes in the fourth inning because of mixed snow and rain.

Red Sox 12, A's 8

In yet another Fenway Park slugfest, Boston got home runs from Jackie Gutierrez, Rich Gedman and Mike Easler to overcome Oakland, which got a pair of blasts from Dave Kingman.

The Red Sox broke the game open by scoring six times in the fourth inning against Steve McCatty, 2-1, and reliever Chris Codiroli, an outburst capped by Tony Armas' two-run triple.

Gutierrez hit his first major league homer in the fifth, Gedman lined his second homer in the sixth and Easler hit his two-run homer, his second, in the eighth.

Kingman drove in three runs off Dennis Eckersley, 1-2, with his two homers, which raised his AL-leading total to seven.

Angels 9, Blue Jays 6

Doug DeCinces and Bobby Grich drilled two-run homers in the seventh inning to put California ahead, and Brian Downing added a two-run shot in the ninth for insurance.

Reliever Curt Kaufman nailed down the Angels' fifth straight victory by getting Alfredo Griffin to ground out with the bases loaded to end the game in Toronto.

Trailing 4-3 in the seventh, Fred Lynn singled and DeCinces followed with his third homer of the season. After Reggie Jackson singled for his fourth hit of the game, Grich connected for his second homer to pin the loss on Jimmy Key, 2-1.

Twins 6, Orioles 1

Butcher checked the Orioles on six hits in raising his record to 2-1. Both victories have come against Baltimore, which is off to a 4-11 start, matching the worst in the team's history.

Butcher, who has a 3-0 lifetime record against the Orioles, threw a one-hitter against them last season.

Oilers, Stars advance in NHL

By Associated Press

It took the Edmonton Oilers and Minnesota North Stars a lot longer than they planned. They got the desired results anyway.

The Oilers, a heavy favorite over Calgary, were extended to seven games by the Flames. Sunday night, however, Edmonton's offense — the most prolific in National Hockey League history — came alive for a 7-4 victory that sent the Oilers into the Campbell Conference final.

Their opponent is Minnesota, which was forced to overtime before eliminating St. Louis 4-3 on Steve Payne's unassisted goal at 6:00.

The Oilers-North Stars series opens Tuesday night in Edmonton.

Edmonton had 43 shots on goalie Reggie Lemelin, who had sparked Calgary's revival from a 3-1 deficit in the series. The Flames had rallied from a 2-0 deficit in Game 7 to grab a 4-3 lead midway through the game. But the explosive Oilers got goals from Glenn Anderson, after a Wayne Gretzky steal, Ken Linseman from the edge of the crease, and Jari Kurri on a breakaway set up by Linseman before the end of the period.

Linseman scored the winner when he came from behind the Calgary net and put in his own rebound 58 seconds after Anderson had tied the game 4-4.

North Stars 4, Blues 3

St. Louis took a 3-2 lead on Mark Reeds' shorthanded score with 5:54 remaining in regulation. Only 15 seconds later, Willi Plett's 75-foot slapshot zipped past the glove of Blues goalie Mike Liut to tie it.

"I feel ecstatic," said Plett, who scored twice for Minnesota. "Who knows, we've gotten some good luck and maybe this is our year to go all the way.

"I just put my head down and shot. You never know when the puck's going to take a strange bounce. It was probably more luck than anything. I was as surprised as anybody when I saw the puck in the back of the net."

Then Payne won it.

"The goal developed off a miscue by a St. Louis defender (Rob Ramage)," Payne said. "I didn't have any angle. The puck came around the boards and Ramage missed it.

"I picked up the puck at the boards and went right to the net. The goalie slid over when I went to my forehand, so I tried a backhander."

The shot trickled through Liut's pads, spoiling a sensational 39-save effort.

"I thought we gave it our maximum," Blues Coach Jacques Demers said. "It was a hard-fought series. Minnesota said they would come back here and win it and they did."

Three-point college goal refuses to go away

By The Associated Press

The three-point goal in college basketball may not be dead after all.

While the NCAA Basketball Rules Committee earlier this month limited significant changes to adoption of a coaching box and addition of a timeout for TV games, it did vote for continued experimentation with shot clocks and three-point goals.

In the main, the committee is trying to find a way to avoid stall games, which make for disinterested television viewers and could hurt the lucrative TV packages the NCAA and its members have been raking in.

The three-point goal appeared to be a dead issue after the 1982-83 season when it proliferated nationwide. Only two Division I conferences and four overall used it last season.

But in Seattle, the committee approved an experiment combining a 45-second shot clock left on the entire game and a three-point goal, measured 19 feet, 9 inches from the center of the basket. The committee also voted continued experimentation with a 45-second clock, left on the entire game.

While a conference may choose to use just the shot clock, it cannot institute the three-point goal by itself.

Conferences wishing to experiment with the three-point goal or the shot clock next season must apply to the NCAA by Aug. 1

In both cases, there would be no lack-of-action counts. In the past, some conferences used the five-second violation for lack of action in conjunction with the shot clock.

In the past, some conferences turned off the clock the last four minutes or the last two minutes. Last season, 10 conferences in Division I and 12 overall experimented with a 45-second clock.

"Our findings show there is some feeling among the coaches that you can't have the shot clock without a three-point goal," says Ed Steitz,

Mondale using Chrysler to help stave off Hart

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter F. Mondale says he helped save the Chrysler Corp. from bankruptcy four years ago and is using Gary Hart's vote against the federal bailout of the company to help stave off his rival for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I fought for Chrysler and we saved 600,000 jobs and I'm proud of that," Mondale said time and time again during his victorious Pennsylvania primary campaign earlier this month.

"If he (Hart) had his way, 600,000 people would be out of work," added Mondale, who was vice president when the federal loan guarantees were approved.

Hart disputes Mondale's contention that the loan guarantee legislation passed in 1979 saved jobs. And some campaign aides say Mondale is playing on workers' fears about their jobs.

But aides on both sides of the nominating fight agree that Mondale has been skillful in exploiting Hart's vote against the loan legislation, and that the issue has helped the former vice president to a series of primary and caucus victories in industrial states.

"I think to a degree, people believed it meant I didn't care about their jobs," Hart, himself, said last week as he campaigned in Texas.

Hart launched a counterattack Sunday, noting that Mondale had voted against federal legislation to help the Lockheed Corp. and Penn Central.

In an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press," Hart said votes on individual bailouts were necessary because the Carter-Mondale administration failed to put forward an industry-wide program to help the nation's keystone industries, such as autos and steel.

"It started out as a positive point," Maxinne Isaacs, Mondale's press secretary said of the Chrysler issue.

Mondale touted the company for months as an example of how a faltering company could be saved with cooperative efforts by labor, management and the federal government, she said. "Then we discovered that Gary Hart had voted against it and we discovered it had all kinds of usefulness."

For Mondale, the "usefulness" has included:

—Driving the 1 millionth four-door Chrysler produced at the Belvedere, Ill., plant off the assembly line. "If Gary Hart had his way this plant would be idle today," he said as television cameras recorded the event.

—Telling workers at the Chrysler facility in St. Louis several days before the Missouri caucuses that he helped save their jobs.

—Scheduling a visit a Chrysler facility in Indiana this week in advance of the state's May 8 presidential primary.

—Airing a television commercial in Pennsylvania that said, "Five years ago, the Chrysler Corp,. was going under, and some people said, 'Let em go.' But I disagreed."

—Raising the issue repeatedly on the stump for blue-collar votes.

Mondale used the Chrysler issue over and over again in Pennsylvania, a state that was hard hit by the last recession and where pocketbook issues were important in the primary. Aides say he will continue to talk about Chrysler in other industrial states that have not yet held primaries, such as Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey and California.

Hart says he favors an overall plan to revitalize the automobile and other basic industries, and Mondale lacks such a plan. Hart also says he opposes bailouts for individual companies.

Hart aides say Mondale was successful because he was able to exploit "the fears of workers," and insist he has inflated his claims.

They say that Chrysler's entire assembly line employment in 1978 was less than 100,000, and more than 50,000 jobs were lost in the ensuing fight to save the company.

Mondale's aides say the figure of 600,000 jobs includes employees at Chrysler's suppliers and other dependent companies. Even so, Mondale's television commercial says 350,000 jobs were saved.

Hart's aides insist other companies were prepared to purchase part of Chrysler's facilities if the company went bankrupt, and that many or all of those jobs would have been saved.

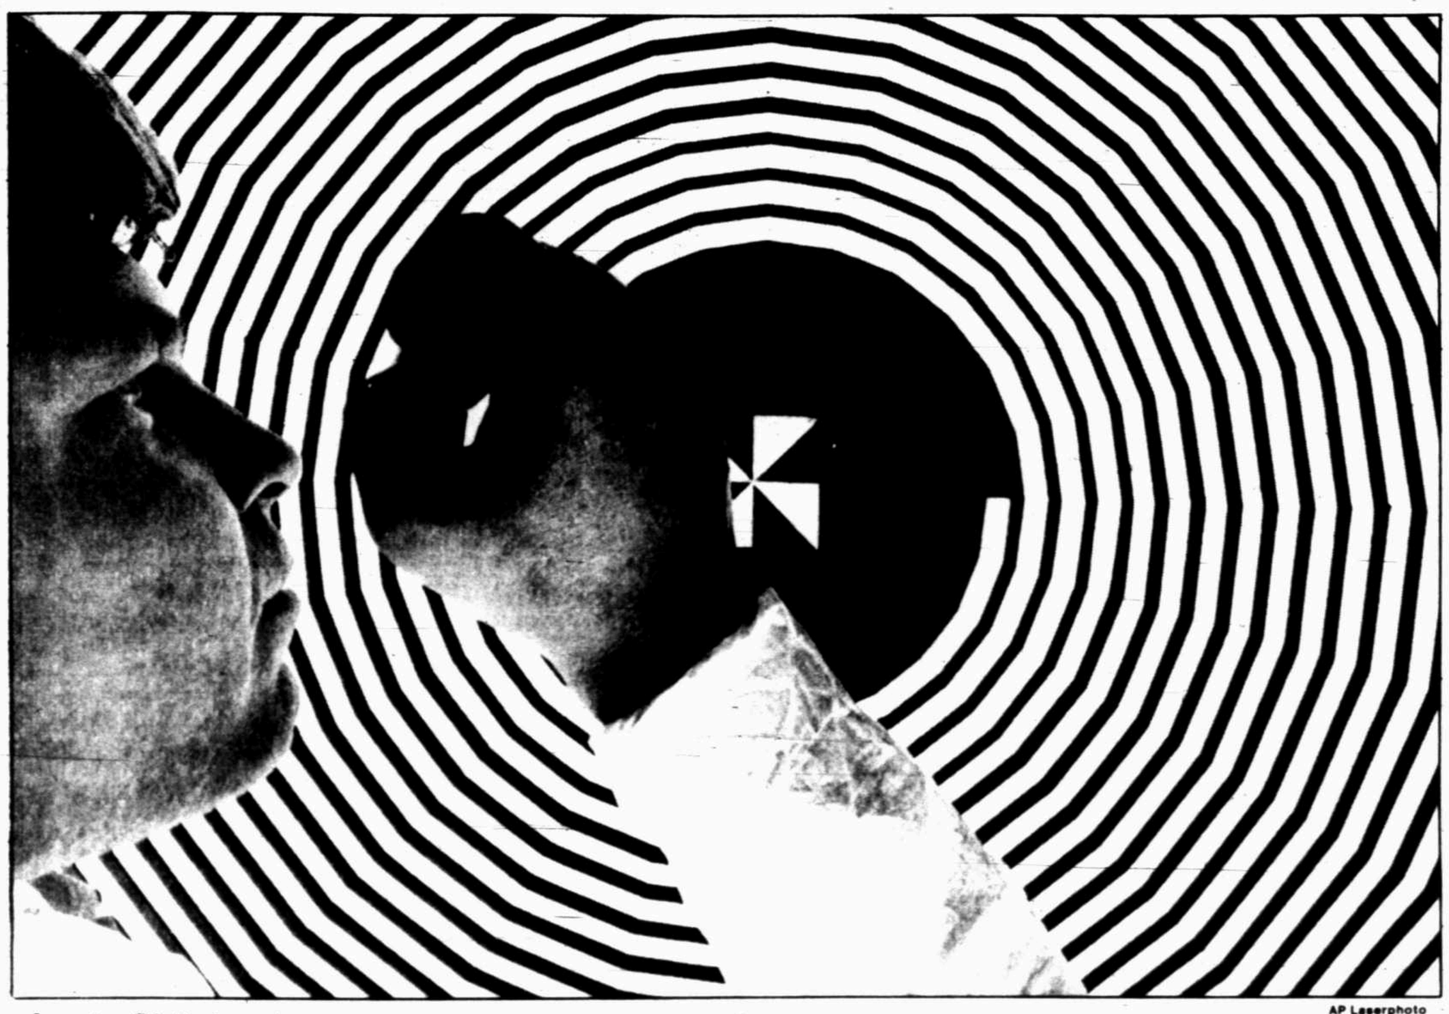

William Stempien, a company spokesman, says Chrysler tried to sell some of its productive facilities, but could find no buyers. He also said the company now has 74,000 hourly employees, and another 18,250 workers on layoff eligible for recall.

Despite the arguments over details, the Hart campaign has decided it must somehow blunt the political impact of Mondale's use of the issue.

Says Oliver Henkel, Hart's campaign manager, "I think what you're going to see in Ohio and Indiana in particular is he is not going to be able to get away with it as he has in the past.

Hart declared on a television interview on April 8 that despite the loan guarantee bill, "A lot of Chrysler workers lost their jobs. The productive assets of Chrysler would have been operated by other companies. They wouldn't have been abandoned, and as many people working in Chrysler today would have been working under a reorganized company in the private sector."

In an interview last week, he said, "It was really a bailout in which there were stockholders and banks and some managers who got quite wealthy."

Major unions set for contract negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bargainers for the U.S. Postal Service and the soft coal industry sit down with union officials this week for contract talks with potential impact on mail deliveries and energy supplies.

The mail and coal talks, coupled with upcoming negotiations in the auto, rail and retail food industries, are viewed as likely to test the resolve of unions to resist more of the concessions they made to management over the last two recession-plagued years.

Prospects for amicable settlements are uncertain in both sets of negotiations, which begin Tuesday. The board of governors of the Postal Service has ordered its bargainers to hold the line against new wage increases for the 600,000 workers represented by several unions.

When the Bituminous Coal Operators Association last met in 1981, the union struck the industry for 72 days.

Leaders of postal unions say the atmosphere has been poisoned by an April 3 statement from the board of governors, which said that, "as a general proposition, the compensation and benefits paid Postal Service employees exceed the compensation and benefits paid for comparable levels of work in the private sector."

"The board directs the Postal Service to seek correction of this situation," the statement said.

Moe Biller, fiery chief of the 320,000-member American Postal Workers Union, retorted that there would be "positively no givebacks."

"The Postal Service is playing Russian roulette with this," he said.

Exxon claims highest bid for leases in Bering Sea

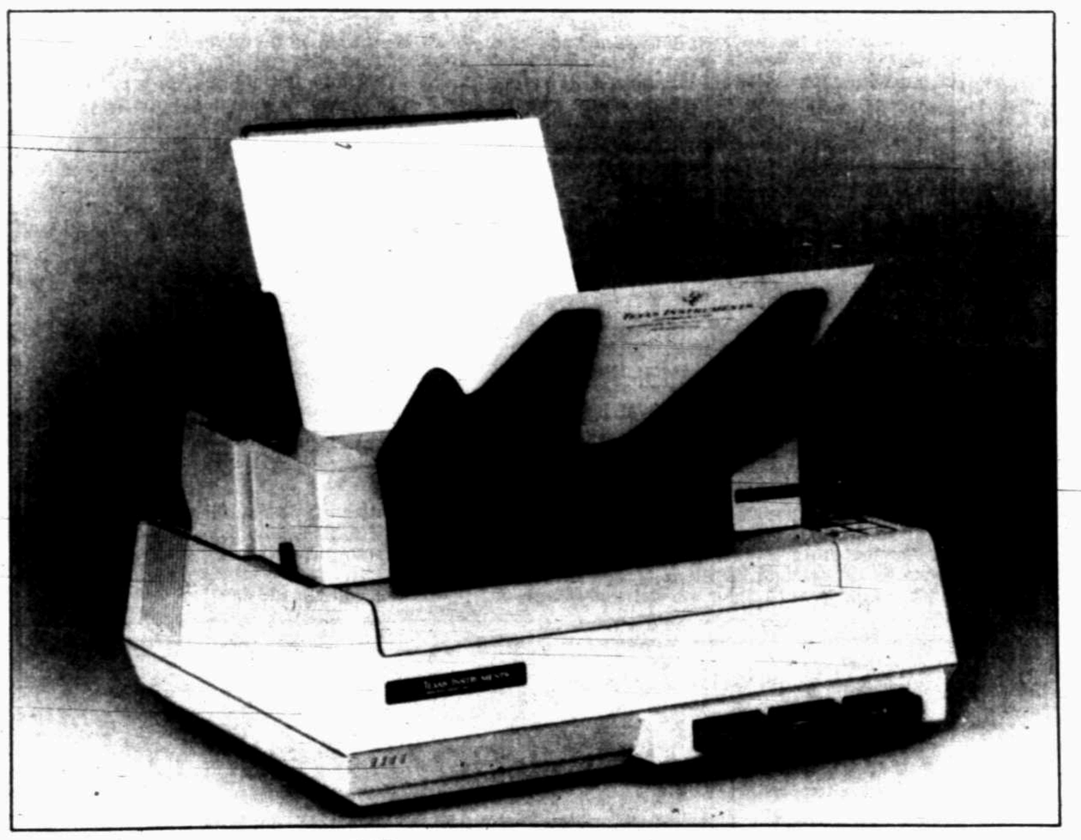

HOUSTON (AP) — Exxon Company U.S.A. and two other petroleum firms jointly made the highest bid of $205 million for federal oil leases off the Alaskan coast, Exxon officials said.

Exxon, Sun Company Inc. and Elf Aquitaine bid for 63 blocks in the Navarin Basin in the Bering Sea, Exxon announced in a release Wednesday.

Exxon's portion of the bids was $168 million, the released stated.

Exxon entered the highest bid in the Outer Continental Shelf sale — $33.39 million for one block.

The sale drew 425 bids totaling $631 million on 186 blocks, officials said.

The Texas Instruments OMNI 800 Model 855 bin feeder option, designed especially for correspondence-intensive word processing applications, allows the user to automatically feed up to 125 sheets of paper at one time, eliminating the time-consuming hand-feeding of individual sheets of paper. The dual mode Model 855 microprinter with its new bin feeder option saves time and increases the efficiency of the user's entire system by making continuous printing on letterhead stationery an easy task.

TI introduces bin feeder option

HOUSTON — A bin feeder option designed especially for correspondence-intensive word processing applications of the Model 855 microprinter was introduced by Texas Instruments Inc. The new OMNI 800 bin feeder provides an advanced paper handling capability that allows the user to automatically feed up to 125 sheets of paperat one time, eliminating the time-consuming hand-feeding of individual sheets of paper.

The Model 855, a dual-mode printer which provides both letter-quality printing for word processing and draft quality printing for data processing, has standard friction feed and tractor feed. The new bin feeder option saves time and increases the efficiency of the user's entire system by making continuous printing on letterhead stationery an easy task.

The TI bin feeder is a totally mechanical unit, unlike the electronically-connected bin feeders which are used on more expensive daisy wheel printers. Priced at $499, the TI bin feeder offers the advantage of low cost as well as ease of installation and use. Because it has no electronic connections, it merely snaps to the top of the printer. The operator can access the printer controls and ribbon cartridge without removing the feeder from the printer by tilting the feeder back.

Preferred paper use is an important Model 855 bin feeder benefit. The bin feeder makes printing on single sheets of letterhead or bond paper just as fast as printing on lower-quality perforated tractor feed paper that must be individually loaded and manually separated. This means the user can choose to print on any type of paper without sacrificing printer speed.

Another feature of the bin feeder is FIFO (first in, first out) collation in the output bin. With this feature, printed sheets of paper are stacked in the output bin in the same order in which they are printed.

The bin feeder is available in two versions: one that accomodates standard 8 and one half inch wide paper and a 8.27-inch paper width version for international use. The paper length specification for both is 11 inches maximum, while acceptable paper weight can range from 16 to 25 pounds.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Abuse of 'inside' information: New focus on old problem

By CHET CURRIER
Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — To anyone who follows the stock market, the scene is familiar.

The shares of Hypothetical Manufacturing Corp. have been trading quietly, showing no special trend, when suddenly they are caught up in a flurry of activity. The price of the stock mysteriously shoots upward.

A trading halt is ordered, and rumors fly. Then, a few hours or a day or two later, comes the announcement of a takeover, a new contract, or some other development that significantly enhances the value of Hypothetical's stock.

The authorities immediately begin asking questions: Who was buying the stock before trading was suspended? What if anything did they know, and how did they come by that knowledge?

Cynical onlookers don't wait for the answers to those questions to reach their own conclusion: The "insiders" have been at it again.

It is against the law for people with inside knowledge of a company's affairs to buy or sell its securities acting on any "material" information that has not yet been disclosed to the public.

Yet abuse of inside information has long been presumed to be a common, if not rampant, practice. It may be one of the nation's most popular forms of white collar crime. And it has certainly been a blot on the public image of Wall Street for as long as anyone can remember.

In recent months, abuse of privileged information has been getting even more attention than usual, at least partly because of a new drive to clamp down on it.

With the help of computer technology, the self-regulatory organizations of the securities industry — including the Amex, the New York Stock Exchange, and the National Association of Securities Dealers — have developed methods to monitor all the activity in their markets.

In the last few years, the Securities and Exchange Commission has brought dozens of "insider" cases under the chairmanship of John S.R. Shad, who otherwise is known as an advocate of reducing what he sees as cumbersome and costly regulatory interference in the workings of the markets.

Shad and SEC staff members have frequently characterized abuse of inside information as nothing more than a sophisticated form of theft.

Some of the SEC's targets have been prominent figures — for example, Paul Thayer, former chairman of LTV Corp. and deputy secretary of defense, who was accused in January of having tipped off friends about merger plans while he was at LTV. The case against Thayer and eight co-defendants is pending.

But the range of potential abusers of inside or privileged information doesn't stop with top corporate officials. Accusations have been levied in various cases against bankers, brokers, lawyers, accountants, even employees of financial printing firms.

In two recent instances, questions have been raised whether workers in news organizations made improper use of advance knowledge they had concerning stories being prepared about public companies.

The present campaign against abuse of privileged information may have put a damper on such activity, for the moment at least. But authorities have been trying to stamp out the practice for decades without much evidence of lasting success.

The rules spell out criminal as well as civil penalties for illegal insider activity. Yet people in surprising numbers have shown a willingness to risk lucrative careers and their personal reputations, as well as the threat of those penalties, to use inside knowledge for their personal gain.

Now, sentiment appears to be growing that more needs to be done to discourage them.

Computer fights battle against inside abuser

By CHET CURRIER
Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A glass-enclosed room on the 14th floor of the American Stock Exchange is home these days to a relatively new resident — a talking computer.

On a recent business day, it could be heard droning out stock symbols and prices in a monotonal robot voice as an electronic ticker on the opposite wall reported transactions taking place downstairs on the Amex trading floor.

While they listened to the machine's sporadic reports, clerks seated nearby kept their eyes and hands busy as well, monitoring flickering screens of data and pulling the latest printed stories from financial news tickers. The object of their vigil: unusual activity anywhere in the market that couldn't be explained by legitimate developments.

These people and equipment in the Amex's Stock Watch Department are typical of the increasing arsenal of weapons Wall Street and its regulators are using in their efforts to police the securities markets against the abuse of "inside information."

The battle is an old one. But now, amid mounting numbers of investigations and the attendant publicity, it is being fought with a special intensity.

Arrayed on one side in this struggle, along with the Amex, are the New York Stock Exchange and the National Association of Securities Dealers — with their own market surveillance facilities — brokerage firms themselves, with their "compliance" departments, and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

On the other side, to judge by the news of late, is a large and varied collection of people who seek to turn their special knowledge of coming events in the financial world into investment profits. The temptation to do this can be very great, since advance knowledge of a single business deal often is all any savvy investor needs to reap a fortune.

The institutions of Wall Street take considerable pride in their ability to detect suspicious activity. The Amex alone says it refers 50 to 60 cases a year to the SEC. And the SEC says it is working harder than ever before to catch offenders and take them to court.

Still, many experts believe the authorities need additional ammunition if they are to be successful in this capaign. Proposals now in Congress would impose stiffer penalties for convicted offenders, including criminal fines of up to $100,000.

With today's computer and communications equipment, Wall Street officials say it is a quick and relatively easy job to spot possible abuses, and to track down the name of any investor who bought or sold any stock at any given time.

However, proving in court that the law has been violated can be more difficult. There is, for one thing, no strict definition of who is an "insider" and who is not. For the last two decades at least, court decisions have constantly been refining and revising it.

Some regulators think it would be a mistake to make the laws too specific. Once strict lines have been drawn, they argue, offenders could readily find ways to tiptoe around them.

Even with stiffer penalties as a deterrent, the struggle to curb insider violations promises to be a long and difficult effort. Yet regulators in Washington and Wall Street argue that progress is being made.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

What is price-earnings ratio?

By BILL DOYLE

Q. From my years of following the stock market, I have noted that price-earnings ratios have moved up and down. A P-E of approximately 5-to-1 or 8-to-1 was normal for most stocks until the 1960s, when P-Es of about 9-to-1 or 12-to-1 became the norm. During the 1970s and until mid-1982, P-Es dropped back to the 5-to-1 or 8-to-1 range and now are back up to where they were in the 1960s.

I realize that P-Es rise when earnings growth is expected. However, to me, the present P-Es do not seem to reflect anticipated higher earnings. Or, do they?

A. They do reflect that, as well as general stock market conditions. The U.S. has come out of a nationwide recession and, despite poor business conditions in some areas, now is in what qualifies as an economic boom. Profits of most companies have increased and are expected to be even higher this year and in future years.

A price-earnings ratio, of course, is the relationship between a stock's market price and its earnings per share. If XYZ Corp. reported net income — after all expenses and taxes — of $100 million last year and the company has 10 million shares of common stock outstanding, its earnings per share were $10. If XYZ common stock is trading at $90, its P-E is 9-to-1. You'll often hear this expressed as "XYZ is selling at nine times earnings."

Growth stocks — those with records and expectations of substantial earnings increases — usually sell at higher P-Es than stocks plodding along with small or no earnings rises.

What's a "normal" P-E? That's pure conjecture. Back in the 1960s, some growth stocks traded at 40 or more times earnings. During that bull market decade, buyers bid up stock prices to what turned out to be unrealistically high prices.

Prices of most stocks went down and P-Es tumbled in the 1970s, when the economy slumped and expected earnings increases didn't pan out. Now that the economy seems to be on firmer footing, stock prices are higher than they were a few years ago. So are P-Es.

Dancing devotion

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

A career in ballet demands commitment. It softly but persuasively calls those who possess the talent, drive and dedication to follow its exacting path, to leave behind all other options. And it does so when the laughter of peers can be heard in the playgrounds close to home, jumping rope, climbing jungle bars and whiling away the lazy hours.

For Donna Ross — who grew up in Midland and whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Donald A. Ross, still live here — ballet stole her when she was still young, moved her into the ballet world in New York and Europe and beckoned her when she left its embrace twice to build other careers.

She returns to Midland to dance the peasant pas de deux from "Giselle" during the Permian Civic Ballet's spring performances at Lee High School at 8 p.m. Friday and 2 p.m. Saturday. This is Miss Ross' first performance in Midland since she was one of the original members of Permian Civic Ballet in 1968 when Robert Mann produced his ballet "Pandora" for PCB's premiere performance.

"I think my first love as a child was movement, not ballet per se," Miss Ross says in a recent telephone interview.

It wasn't until she was 11 or 12 that Miss Ross focused her energy on ballet. She gave up all other activities.

For Miss Ross, ballet was the most refined, sublime expression of dance. Ballet was where dance became art with a capital A.

This decision, coupled with the knowledge that she would need training from the best teachers available, took Miss Ross to Dallas for a six-week course during the summer she was 12 and to Gulfport, Miss., the following summer.

"I studied with some of the finest teachers in the country, most of them from New York. I was on scholarship at the SMU program, which was run by Nikita Talin who had been a dancer with Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo."

She also attended American Dance Camp in Gulfport, Miss., and studied with Alexandra Danilova, Sallie Wilson and David Howard.

While in Gulfport, she realized competition in the ballet world was intense and she would need to train in a professional school. In 1970, the 14-year-old Miss Ross went to Ballet Center of Buffalo, N.Y., which was run by Kathleen Crofton. Ms. Crofton was an Englishwoman who had danced with Anna Pavlova's company in the 1920s and had taught privately in London in the 1940s through early 1960s.

In her second year, she was promoted into the company. In her third, she was promoted to soloist rank and danced most of the principal roles. The years at Buffalo were some of the happiest of her life.

"Had I been at home and not been dancing I think I would have been much, much more unhappy than any unhappiness or homesickness I might have experienced being away from home," she says. "I knew I wanted to dance. I was quite miserable my last year in Midland because I knew that I was not in a competitive enough situation for my talent to really be nurtured...

"I was leading a very balanced life. On the one hand, I had my school in the morning, then I had ballet in the afternoon and evening. I was living with a wonderful family and one of the girls was my age, a school chum of mine. It was really a dream come true."

Then, in mid-1973, tragedy struck the company. The studio burned down, destroying costumes, sets and musical scores.

"We also ran into severe financial difficulties apart from the fire. And we felt that the city of Buffalo was not offering us enough financial or moral support. The movers and shakers of the city had become more interested in modern dance and less interested in the classical style that our company had. So the company disbanded."

Miss Ross accepted an offer from the New York-based Joffrey II, the apprentice group of Joffrey. She first finished high school, then spent one tour with the company before being asked by the director, Jonathan Watts, to join the company on a permanent basis. He assured her of "being promoted into the main company."

Donna Ross, who grew up in Midland and grew into a dancer in New York and Europe, will return to Midland to perform with Permian Civic Ballet.

"At that point, however, I was very intent on joining a classical company — a company with an old European tradition, like American Ballet Theatre or London Festival or the Stuttgart Ballet. I refused the offer and instead went to New York where I auditioned for Stuttgart Ballet School and was accepted and went to Stuttgart, Germany, in the fall of '73."

It was at this point she was faced with a serious decision. She had suffered an injury, had "ill-advised surgery" on her foot and was in a great deal of pain when she danced. Also, the school in Stuttgart was in a state of transition. Under these circumstances she did some reflective thinking.

"I was going to have to decide whether I was going to college or not. Naturally, as a young dance student the idea of going to college, practically taking four years off, putting yourself out of the climb to the top professionally was unthinkable. So that was when a real crisis developed in my life."

In 1973, Miss Ross began a nine-year period of going in and out of the dance world.

"I had two wonderful, promising paths, either of which would have been very rewarding to follow, and I suffered from indecision.

"On the one hand, I wanted to dance because I knew I had the talent and the love for it, the passion for it. I'd had the training and had achieved a great deal already by the age of 17. On the other hand, I also had discovered that I had a mind and a lot of intellectual curiosity and an interest in having a fuller social life that I thought I could only find in a university environment.

"I became more pragmatic, perhaps, and I realized that dance was a short-lived career; that it might well be over by 35. Why go through the pain of investing in something that was short lived at best and that left you very unprepared to do anything else? Why not invest in something more academic that would last for a much longer period of time?"

Miss Ross dropped out of the dance world at 17 and went to the University of Rochester, N.Y. While there, she did some teaching and performing.

"I saw a videotape of a performance I did. My eyes swelled up with tears because I realized that I had something that most people would kill for. And I realized how very much I missed dance, how much it meant to me."

The semester ended and she rejoined Joffrey II in the summer of 1975, being promoted to the main company in January of 1976.

Once again, in the summer of 1978, Miss Ross left the world of ballet.

This time she got married. She and her husband felt it would be difficult to begin a marriage with her on tour for 4½ months a year. Instead, she went to Columbia University, taught ballet at Brooklyn College and studied acting at Stella Adler Conservatory of Acting, New York.

"In retrospect, I think it was probably a very poor decision that I made to give up my career when I got married.

Woman teaches others how to save

CROSBY, Texas (AP) — Sherry Sims credits her Pekingese puppy for launching a career that's saved her family thousands of dollars each year on groceries.

Faced with a new canine mouth to feed eight years ago, she found a brand of dog food that offered a free can for every three she purchased. She bought an entire case.

"That's how it all started," Mrs. Sims, 40, a Crosby housewife, says.

Today, she teaches shoppers how to cut their grocery bills by 30 to 90 percent and is organizing the third annual National Coupon and Refunders Convention, slated for April 27-28 in Houston.

She expects more than 1,000 people from around the country to participate in coupon and refund offer giveaways by manufacturers and an all-night coupon and refund offer trade-off.

MRS. SIMS AND her husband, Ray, estimate she has saved Houston-area shoppers between $500,000 and $2 million, a feat which she admits is "a real ego trip."

She spends about 3½ hours a day organizing coupons and refund offers in the bedroom-turned-office of her home.

"This is just like a job," she says. "I'm not making a fabulous salary, but I think I'm doing good for staying home."

Her "salary" was more than $535 in January, when she says she bought more than $654 worth of groceries for about $119. And she says she earned another $150 to $200 from refund offers mailed to manufacturers.

"Now if that's not worth cutting and saving coupons for, I don't know what is," she says.

Surgery forced Ray Sims to leave his construction job. But his wife says the extra income she contributes has allowed him to return to school to pursue a computer science degree.

Mrs. Sims says her work offers advantages that most jobs don't. She pays no income taxes. She doesn't need to commute every day. And she can remain home with her children.

"I HAVE MY own little business, at my leisure, at my hours," she says.

She says Christmas presents last year for her husband, two children and mother cost $16 and brought her watches, toys, a picnic cooler and luggage.

"I built my entire Christmas around refunding," Mrs. Sims says. "After all the Christmas packages were opened, I made my big announcement to my mother."

When Mrs. Sims' mother learned that her daughter did all her holiday shopping using coupons and refund offers, she was anxious to join in.

"I created a monster," says Mrs. Sims. "Now my mother's doing it."

One of the most important tools of her trade is a shoebox in which she files her coupons by categories.

"I always keep it in my car. This way I'm never without it," she says.

She also attributes her success to refund bulletins she receives.

These magazines are valuable," she says, and alert subscribers to hundreds of refund offers worth "hundreds of dollars" every month.

SHE SAYS SHE won't settle for a product she doesn't want, even if she has a coupon for it.

"A lot of the reason for a lot of the refunds is to get you to try a new product," she says. "I feel this way — I'll try anything once. But it's very rare that I'll buy something I don't like."

When Mrs. Sims finds a coupon or refund offer in a newspaper for a product she often uses, she buys 100 copies of the paper and stocks up on the product. Once, she says, she had an attic full of toilet paper.

After having been so dedicated to a career so intense as dance, to suddenly be without that, and to be taking on the responsibilities of a new marriage and be finding a new career, or at least a new identity, was taking on too many things at once.

"The second time when I stopped dancing, I think I knew I was making a mistake. But sometimes we don't listen closely enough to our instincts, to our hearts."

She quit dancing for four years "in my early 20s when a dancer's career is really being formed. It was not until I was well into my mid-20s that I realized that I had indeed made a mistake, that I really was meant to dance."

When her marriage broke up, she returned to ballet classes for exercise and as a therapeutic measure. She discovered she had lost very little in four years.

"I had gained a lot in terms of personal maturity and was much more ready and able to commit myself to dancing again."

Acting on the advice of her Joffrey colleagues, she decided to attempt a comeback.

"I had overcome a lot of fear that I had had about certain technical things involved in dance — pirouettes on point and various things that dancers sometimes in a funny way develop phobias about. And I just exuded self-confidence for the first time in years."

At 26, Miss Ross began auditioning. Looking for a company with a solid repertoire which had a good balance between classical and contemporary works, she auditioned with the Dallas Ballet in March of 1983. A week later she was accepted.

"I was interested in Dallas because it was a young company, small, close to my roots, and the director was someone whose choreography I had admired very, very much — Flemming Flindt."

Today, Miss Ross finds her life "wonderful.

"I've never been happier as a dancer. I've never felt more complete as a human being. The day will come when I can't dance any more, and I know it's going to be difficult all over again to go through that loss of identity. Anyone is lying if they tell you that you can easily find something to replace it with.

"I can't think of anything more complete — it's intellectual, it's physical, it's spiritual, it's emotional. It is probably the highest high you can have. When you're onstage and the fruits of your labor are shining through, it's exhilerating. And it's the most alive I think you can feel."

Marijuana gardens hard to find

HOUSTON (AP) — Marijuana farmers are becoming more skilled at hiding their gardens from law enforcement officials, but the plots of the illegal weed are still "out there."

Lawmen said commercial growers of the illegal weed are hiding their crops in more remote areas and some are even growing it in greenhouses.

The Texas Department of Public Safety reported that the number of marijuana gardens found in 1983 dropped below the number found in 1982, but this is no indication that the number of growers has declined, officials said.

"It's out there," said Billy Ball, a special agent with the U.S. Forest Service in Lufkin. "And, yes, it's going to always be out there."

Don Perry, a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman, said the success by lawmen in finding marijuana plots in 1982 has caused the growers to plant smaller plots in more remote areas.

"It's a lucrative business and it does impact the economy because it is not taxable," said Perry. "It's a multimillion-dollar business."

Law enforcement officials said they welcomed a U.S. Supreme Court ruling last week that allows them to search open fields on private property without a warrant.

Marijuana growers in the past were almost flagrant in their planting of the illegal weed in national forests. Plots frequently were discovered by timber companies and by the U.S. Forest Service.

But Sam Logan, head of the information section of the state forest association, said that in the last two years very little marijuana cultivation has been found in the state's four forests, an area that totals about 69,000 acres. Ball said only 703 marijuana plants were found in 1983 on the 700,000 acres of national forest land in Texas.

Council focusing on budget street closings, hearings

Street closings, Revenue Sharing money, public hearings on zone changes and the Northwest Drainage Channel comprise a major part of the agenda when the Midland City Council goes into a regular session at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

A public hearing at 11 a.m. will focus on the Revenue Sharing budget for this currrent fiscal year. Up for discussion is a resolution to amend that budget.

At 11 a.m. the council will look at a list of structures declared dangerous and will order their removal.

Midland Arts Assembly is requesting a temporary closing of Loraine Street between Wall and Texas and a beer permit for May 19. Parks and Recreation Department wants a permit to close Colorado Street between Texas and Illinois for "Life Be In It" Day and a temporary beer permit.

The council will consider opening Washington Pool this summer; last year it remained closed.

Discussion on the I Street bridge crossing at Northwest Drainage Channel will be continued. The council at a previous meeting had accepted a bid for building a bridge at that intersection coming out of Midland College, thinking that MC would pay half the cost. But MC trustees declined.

At 1:40 p.m. a public hearing will look at the request by Fay Ramirez for a specific use permit for a lounge on the west side of Terrell Street and about 100 feet south of Ohio Avenue.

Creation School of Midland is asking for specific use permits for a private school and a day nursery for the northeast corner of Pecos and Neely. The public hearing will be at 1:55 p.m.

Mark Withrow's request for a zone change to Amended Planned District at the northeast corner of Sunshine Parkway and Sunburst Drive will be heard in a public hearing at 2:15 p.m.

The council also will consider accepting a data processing plan prepared by the Taylor Group, the possibility of franchising trash collection, purchasing a fire alarm monitoring system, awarding the bid for remodeling the fire station at 200 E. New Jersey, possible layout of new Air Park runways and a request by the FDIC to waive the city's repurchase option on the former Metro Bank land at Air Terminal.

Bandits steal rifles, pistols

DALLAS (AP) — Three bandits dressed in camouflaged fatigues and armed with a sawed-off shotgun tied up a gunshop owner and stole $35,000 worth of guns, $4,000 in cash, silver coins and an undetermined amount of ammunition, authorities said.

Chuck Gibson said he had planned to spend the Saturday night at his store to prevent burglaries. Instead, he spent the night and most of Sunday morning tied to a backroom bedstand.

Gibson told police the men forced their way into the building about 11:45 p.m. Saturday, made him open the safe and made off with 170 rifles and pistols, $4,000 in cash, $450 in silver coins and ammunition.

Being born female still serious hardship in India

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW DELHI, India — Sixty-six years ago, when a daughter was born in the family of Jawaharlal Nehru, his mother openly lamented, "Oh, but it should have been a boy."

Since then, Indira Nehru Gandhi has managed to overcome the disadvantage of being born a female in India. She plunged into politics and became prime minister of the world's largest democracy.

But, despite her achievement, centuries-old customs change with glacial slowwness in this country. Baby girls born here still face lower status, shorter lives and, in some cases, "bride burning," in which a husband murders his wife by fire so he can seek another marriage and another dowry.

In India, lawyer Rani Jethmalani says, "women are a secondary subcaste."

OR AS Purnima N. Mane said in the Economic Times, "The evidence points to women as the most disadvantaged among the disadvantaged and likely to remain so."

In Hindu mythology, woman appears in two forms: the protecting mother-goddess Durga, vital source of all human energy, and as Kali, a godess of destruction wearing a necklace of human skulls.

Sociolgists say that this helps to explain why India shows an easy acceptance of a few powerful females, such as Indira Gandhi, yet tolerates widespread oppression of most women.

This duality has been present throughout India's 5,000-year history.

Manu, the ancient Hindu lawgiver, saw woman as totally submissive — in childhood subject to her father, in youth to her husband, and, when her husband is dead, to her sons; she should never enjoy independence."

ON THE other hand, independence leader Mohandas K. Gandhi was a pioneer feminist, bringing women into leading roles in the decades-long struggle for freedom from British rule. And Nehru, India's first prime minister, advocated total equality between men and women.

Indian women, as they have expanded their public careers, have become business leaders, doctors, lawyers, scientists, diplomats and even bandit queens. Yet, despite constitutional guarantees of equality, the vast majority of women in India clearly play a subordinate role, in accordance with Hindu and Moslem tradition.

"Even though a woman is well-qualified and holding a top position, the society recognizes her as so-and-so's wife," wrote retired Dr. Sumati Mulay in the Hindustan Times, describing the frustration of younger female scientists.

"A woman gets as much as she's able to bargain for," said Yogendir Singh, a male sociologist at Nehru University. "Since independence (in 1947), more and more women have been taken out of the work force. Having a wife at home and not working has become a status symbol."

NATIONAL STATISTICS dramatize the situation. Women in India, unlike women in the Western world, have a shorter life expectancy than men. Only one-fourth of Indian women can read or write, compared to half of men.

Women generally work harder for less pay. they get the difficult jobs in farming, forestry, fishing. In construction, men tend to occupy skilled positions, while women serve as laborers, carrying heavy loads of brick and other building materials on their heads.

The Hindustan Times quoted a woman who rolls cigarettes at home and is paid two rupees (about 20 cents) less for each 1,000 than men who do the same job in the factory.

"The men say that their bidis (cigarettes) are better than ours," the woman said. "Then why are they sold for the same price?"

In New Delhi's crowded public buses, women are routinely pawed, pinched and harassed by men. The police have established a telephone number for complaints of what is jocularly called "Eve-teasing."

THE HARDSHIPS do not end there. Child marriage, although outlawed, is still prevalent in some rural areas. Traditional families, who arrange marriages for their daughters, often must pay vast sums to satisfy the dowry demands of a bridegroom's parents.

Worst of all is bride burning. In a recent 12-month period in New Delhi alone, 610 wives died of burns, presumably because husbands soaked them with kerosene and set them afire in search of another dowry. Convictions are rare.

"Dowry takes away the dignity and equality of women, but now it has reached diabolical dimensions," said Kapila Hingorani, one of the relative handful of women admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of India.

The compensation for women in this system seems to be a certain security, since marriage is regarded as an unbreakable bond and divorce is relatively rare by Western standards.

EVEN SO, the emphasis on childbearing, especially male children, is extremely strong. "Better be mud than a barren woman" is an old saying in India.

Statistics show that the Indian female, right from the cradle, faces tougher odds than the male. Infant mortality rates are significantly higher for girls than for boys. Life expectancy for women in India, now estimated at 51.8 years, is 1.4 years behind male life expectancy at birth. In the United States, women can expect to live about eight years longer than men.

Ashish Bose, head of India's Institute for Economic Growth, said that some poor families neglect their daughters, providing them with less food and attention than they give their sons.

"Village people are agreeable to the small family norm concept, provided the two children are male," Bose said recently. "Two daughters are considered unnecessary."

FEWER GIRLS are enrolled in school. One study found that one of every three girls from age 6 to 11 was kept out of classes, causing one writer to conclude, "So great is the drudgery of running the average rural home that the daughter cannot frequently be spared to enjoy the luxury of school."

Prejudice against single working women in India is strong, especially in smaller cities and towns.

"Single working girls living on their own are viewed with suspicion — often regarded as loose women — by the police and the public," a recent Indian Express editorial said.

Nigerian women face modern ways, tradition

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Hajiya Zahra, the pseudonym of a Muslim Hausa woman in her 40s, was first married to a liberal Hausa man who approved of her teaching adult literacy classes to other women in their homes. Then her father called her to his deathbed and implored, "Leave this man who cannot keep you, and find one who will hold you in seclusion as he is supposed to do."

She returned to her husband, begged for a divorce, and left him to look for a man with more parochial religious attitudes. After several months she found a strict man with stern attitudes about keeping his wives in seclusion. To ensure her spiritual salvation, she gave up her writing and teaching and joined his household in the subordinate status accorded a Muslim man's third wife.

The increasingly strong influence of Islam extends far beyond the Middle East, to areas such as sub-Saharan Africa, where women are subject to both religious doctrine and the tenets of pre-Islamic traditional beliefs.

LAT Photo

Nigerian women at work on craft items.

WHILE HAUSA women of northern Nigeria do not wear the veil, they share with Muslim women everywhere conflicting impulses: to follow educational and career patterns of Western women while meeting deeply rooted obligations to a religion that is often opposed to much of what Western culture advocates. The dilemma of Muslim women is the reconciliation of Western values involving a career outside the home, with the Islamic definition of God's purpose for women — the role of domestic guardian, wife, and mother.

Another Hausa woman also in her 40s, who, for the sake privacy will also have a pseudonym — Hajiya Binta ("Hajiya" designates a woman who has made the obligatory pilgrimage to Mecca) — sought to resolve the conflicts of a public career and devotion to her religion in a more assertive manner.

After marrying at a young age and bearing a child, she divorced her husband and began teaching local primary classes. She then found work at a national transport organization and has worked her way to a responsible position as head of the northern regional office.

WITH HER own earnings she has fulfilled her life's ambitions: to build her own home, to take her mother with her on a pilgrimage ("hajj") to Mecca, and to build a mosque for her hometown. Although she is an extremely devout Muslim, she has never remarried.

Both Hajiya Binta and Hajiya Zahra grew up in rural areas and moved to Kano, the urban center of northern Nigeria, when they married. Each was instructed in the Koran as a child by her father, who was in each case a scholar and teacher of Islamic doctrine. Each woman married, had one child, and began teaching. But their similarities end at the point where Hajiya Zahra complied with the demands of her orthodox father, who felt that a proper Muslim woman's welfare and spiritual salvation depended upon her strict seclusion in the home.

Hajiya Binta asserts that she "knows her rights" and will be coerced into neither a second marriage nor submission to the authority of men at work.

BETWEEN THE extremes of these two examples there is a wide range of response on the part of Muslim women who are caught between encroaching Westernization occuring simultaneously with a rising fundamentalist Islamic movement in sub-Saharan Africa. Northern Nigeria is perhaps most representative of such conflict.

Kano, in northern Nigeria, has been a major urban center of sub-Saharan Africa since the Middle Ages; its people — the Hausa — have maintained their traditions through the onslaughts of Arab traders across the Sahara, the Islamic evangelists of the 19th century, and British colonials in the 20th century. In each case, however, they have prospered by incorporating aspects of the intruders' culture into their own. Arab and British influences remain very strong in northern Nigeria; Islam has become a pervasive tradition of the area, embraced by the Hausa as "a complete way of life."

WHILE IT shares with Middle Eastern Islam many orthodox practices, Islam in northern Nigeria is greatly influenced by local Hausa custom. Unlike Muslim women of the Middle East, urban Hausa Muslim women are not veiled in public. Instead, wife seclusion is the Hausa equivalent of the Arab woman's veil, and is indicative of both modesty and social status. Almost 95 percent of Kano's Muslim women are secluded inside their homes.

On the rare occasions that women do leave their homes it is with the express permission of their husbands, and covered from head to foot in a modified drape of several lengths of brightly colored cloth. Thus they effect a sense of invisibility through modest attire.

Young girls' marriages are arranged by their parents as early as the age of 9, at which time they may be given to men old enough to be their grandfathers. Often they are a man's second, third, or fourth wives — Islam permits a man to have up to four wives at one time.

of 9 and 12, 43 percent between the ages of 13 and 15, and 17 percent between the ages of 16 and 20.

But parents' propensity for marrying off a daughter at such a young age is not indicative of cruelty on their part. Rather, it represents an attempt to guard the girl's security and to help her to fulfill her religious obligation as wife and mother.

AN UNMARRIED Hausa girl is a pariah. A childless woman is the object of pity. For Hausa Muslim women, the way to spiritual redemption is through the execution of the domestic role, childbearing, and deference to her husband, who is presumed always to act in her best interests. Meeting the religious obligation is unquestionably their most important aim, and it takes precedence over everything else, including education.

By Western feminist standards, seclusion and polygamy reduce a woman's life to slavery. But a Hausa woman growing up in her culture understands the demands made on her and is prepared to deal with them on her own terms. She knows there are certain social expectations to be met: marrying according to parental choice, bearing children, and obey ing the head of the household.

Japanese women networking

TOKYO (AP) — Unable to find a job when she got back to Japan after ten years of college and graduate school in the United States, Mariko Fujiwara went to a placement agency for help. The man she talked to offered neither a job nor very much encouragement.

"He said it was a curse for a Japanese woman to have a sound academic background and advised me to take secretarial courses," she recalls.

"He said I'd be placed at the top of a company (as an executive secretary) and when there was an opening in a section, I could talk the president into letting me apply."

The advice was not uncommon. Secretarial school is one place that aspiring Japanese career women often find themselves. And, beginning a year ago, that is where they began to discover each other.

"Graduates always came back to me for career advice," said Kaoru Furukawa, founder and director of the Women's Institute for New Studies (WINS) where Ms. Fujiwara went to train for a position as a bilingual secretary.

"But until I was in a bookstore in New York and came across a book called 'Networking,' I didn't realize that that's just what I'd been doing," Ms. Furukawa said in an interview. "After I saw the book, I decided to formalize a network for working women in Japan."

The network — now 200 formal members and a few thousand WINS alumnae seen by Ms. Furukawa as potential members — doesn't run like a traditional men's "old boy network" of school chums and business cronies, mainly because few Japanese women have such connections to exploit.

Rather, its monthly discussions and gatherings function as a meeting ground for women with careers and women who want careers.

At the first meeting in December 1982, Ms. Furukawa brought together some friends with alumnae of her program to discuss women and careers. One panelist was Ms. Fujiwara, who had found a job as a research director at Japan's second largest advertising agency, Hakuhodo.

"I want to encourage women to continue their career by presenting them with role models," Ms. Furukawa said. "I say to them: you're not outsiders."

'Workaholics' worry Japan

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — "Women lead a boring life. If your career is the most important thing for you, you should live alone. You have no need of a family."

This was the note that Hiroshi Maura, a 45-year-old company executive, found waiting for him when he rushed home after failing to reach his family by telephone.

His wife, Ikuko, 49, was unconscious and his three sons were dead from carbon monoxide poisoning.

Ikuko's last act, in what the Japanese often call "family suicide," was to rig a heater in the room where the three boys — Tsuyoshi, 12; Takeshi, 10; and Jun, 9 — were sleeping to produce carbon monoxide and then cut off ventilation. She is still in a coma.

The incident, which powerfully illustrated the growing social problem of "workaholic" lifestyles causing family breakdowns in Japan, sent shockwaves through the ranks of salaried men in similar positions to that of Hiroshi Maura.

The Maura family lived in Hasuda City, near Tokyo. Last April Hiroshi was transferred by his company, Toshiba Corporation, to Sendai, some 200 miles north of Tokyo.

He lived in a company dormitory and returned home only two or three times since. On weekends he played golf with company guests and spent summer and winter vacations on business trips, not even coming home on New Year's Day.

"Absent father syndrome" has become a structural problem of a Japanese society that places top priority on economics.

Said Taro Nakajima, 43, employed at another top-flight company in the hub of Tokyo's business universe:

"In order to become a division manager quickly, one needs to perform better than one's colleagues. And to do that, one must work overtime, drink with one's boss and colleagues after work, etc.

"One must express one's thoughts and sell oneself, otherwise one will be left behind in the race to succeed. If I become a division manager, then a director, the social position of my wife and children will also rise."

Increasing juvenile delinquency, statistics on work habits and family cohesiveness and stark tragedies like the Maura case recently have prompted an urgent concern in Japan about re-examining the relationship between the individual and the family.

The Committee for Educational Affairs, which is affiliated with the Japan Committee for Economic Development, has urged white-collar workers: Be a good family person and member of society, before being a good company person.

The Maura family's situation showed the problems that are causing increasing concern in Japanese society.

Ikuko Maura complained that the children never played with their father, and that he was never home for supper. Then he agreed to make the 200-mile move to Sendai. A graduate of a prestigious private school, Keio University, Hiroshi was pursuing the course of the elite. Toshiba is a top-flight electrical appliances manufacturing company, and the Sendai post would be good for his career.

Hiroshi and Ikuko agreed that it would be better for the boys to stay where they were. The children could do without distractions from their studies.

But while the arrangement apparently suited Hiroshi, the burdens were too much for Ikuko.

DEAR ABBY

Teachers deserve thanks for not giving up

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am the president of the South Philadelphia High School Alumni Association, and I have a confession to make.

We saw this item in your column in the Philadelphia Daily News, and we liked it so much we used it in our newsletter:

"Dear Abby: What a thrill I just had! A former student of many years just telephoned from across the country to tell me that I had made a difference in his life. He wanted to thank me for not giving up on him.

"He began his conversation by saying, 'You probably won't even remember me ...' How wrong he was. Not only did I remember what he looked like, I even remembered his small, neat handwriting.

"Abby, if any of your readers had a schoolteacher who has made a difference in their lives, please urge them to take a few minutes to let that teacher know.

"One call from a former student has inspired me to hang in there with students I now have and will have in the future. — Ula Pendelton, Los Angeles

"Dear Ula: Thank you for inspiring the following: Readers: Did you have a teacher who made a difference in your life? A teacher who encouraged you to stay in school when you wanted to quit? A teacher who believed in you and your ability to succeed when you had no confidence in yourself? A teacher who stayed late to give you the extra help you needed? If so, please phone or write that teacher and say thank you. It will make that teacher's day."

Abby, because of that write-up, a lot of former South Philadelphia students contacted their former teachers, and it really made their day. Keep up the good work. I hope you don't mind. — BILL ESHER, HADDONFIELD, N.J.

DEAR ABBY: It's class reunion time again, and I have a gripe to air. I've attended five reunions of my high school class (mid-'50s), and at each one prizes were given to the "longest married," "member with the oldest child," "member with the most children," "member with the oldest grandchild," "person with the most grandchildren," and "person who has traveled the farthest distance to attend."

Year after year, the winner of the first five categories has been the same lady! As a girl she created the scandal of the town when she eloped in the 10th grade and carried a baby during her junior year. Now she is being "honored" for her "reproduction" record. (Tacky, tacky!)

We have alumni who have distinguished themselves. One was recently elected to a state office, another has published a book, another was just honored for outstanding volunteer service to his community, and we have a nurse who started a special program for disabled people in the hospital where she works. These people sit quietly and are not even acknowledged at our reunions.

Sign me "Miss Virginia" or I won't be able to go to any more reunions. — MISS VIRGINIA

Indonesia making changes in its educational system

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Indonesia's education system is being overhauled, after the discovery that it was not in synchronization with the economy.

High schools have been turning out too many graduates with academic qualifications but not enough with vocational skills, officials said. Millions are jobless while employers complain of a lack of skilled labor.

"We pay great attention to the development of education because the question of education is a hard and complicated problem for a country with a large population," President Suharto told his nation of 158 million in the recent budget speech.

"In order to meet the demands of development, we will also increase the number of vocational training schools at all levels and expand the enrollment capacity of higher education."

The draft budget has 1.5 trillion rupiahs ($1.5 billion U.S.) for education in the fiscal year starting April 1, the largest sum set aside for development spending.

A new curriculum is being phased in this year to achieve what Education and Culture Minister Nugroho Notosusanto calls "a balance in education for quality and education for quantity."

A curriculum has been devised with 14 compulsory subjects, nine of them considered as the core. These require three years of studying the state ideology called Pancasila, religion, Indonesian history, economics, the Indonesian language, English, physical education, the arts and manual training.

The five minor fields of compulsory classwork cover biology, chemistry, Indonesian geography, mathematics and physics.

A Ministry of Education spokesman said other elective courses are offered to help prepare pupils for higher education, vocational training or the job market.

The reform alters the basic precept of the old system of universal education for a privileged elite. Largely inherited from Dutch colonial days, it assumed all children were being prepared for university.

In recent years that system resulted in vast numbers of dropouts, with estimates ranging from 7 million to 24 million a year.

Those who did graduate from high school tended to seek government jobs or at least something clerical. Meantime, demand built up for trained electricians, machinists, draftsmen and other skilled workers.

Two million Indonesians are unemployed or underemployed while 2 million more job seekers pour onto the market each year, according to official figures.

"We must not lose track of the basic function of education as a preparation for employment. We need to research what skills the economy requires and then tailor our education system to providing those skills," said Professor Imam Santoso. He headed the panel which last year advised President Suharto on how to overhaul the system.

Education Minister Nugroho announced four months ago that no new high schools would be built during the next five-year development plan. Vocational schools and polytechnics will be greatly expanded.

With financial backing from the World Bank, the first six polytechnics were opened in 1979. Planners expect 18 to be operating by 1986.

Nugroho said traditional high schools "tend to create unemployment rather than solve it because it is hard to deal with those with academic qualifications but without jobs."

New dorm rules causing uproar

MACOMB, Ill. (AP) — Meg Powers says her parents don't mind when she sleeps with her boyfriend at home, and she resents being deprived of the same freedom by Western Illinois University, where she is a freshman.

But Gloria Gaynord, another Western freshman, says she wants the extra privacy she gets when men are ordered off her dormitory floor at night.

"I came down here to study," she says.

The two 18-year-old women live on the only floor of any Western residence hall where coed visiting is restricted. Ms. Gaynord chose the floor; Ms. Powers was assigned it.

But now the university says that starting next fall it will expand that restriction to all floors of all dorms that house freshmen and sophomores.

Men won't be allowed in women's rooms, and women won't be allowed in men's, after midnight on weekdays and 2 a.m. on weekends. The curfew will end at 8 a.m. throughout the week.

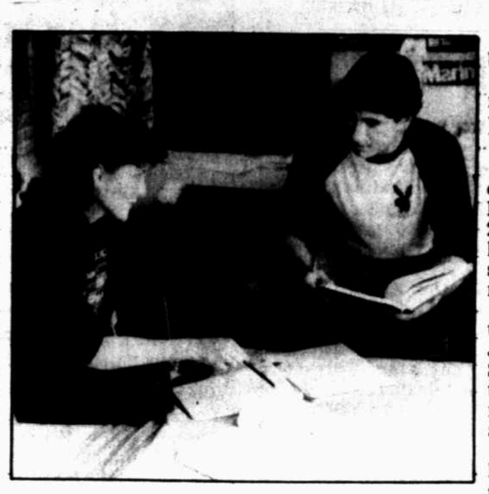

The plan to end 14 years of around-the-clock room visitation between the sexes has stirred an uproar among the 10,000 students at Western, which sits amid the soft hills shaped by the La Moine River in an otherwise flat expanse of Cornbelt.

Only a decade ago, the university was rated by Playboy magazine as one of the nation's premiere "party" campuses.

"I don't know about other people, but I have more freedom at home," said Ms. Powers, whose parents live in Rockford. "I can go home and my boyfriend can stay with me in my room with my parents next door. They don't care."

Students don't concern themselves with who stays with whom and "neither should the administration," she said.

Ms. Powers' mother, Mary Jo, a fifth-grade teacher in Rockford's public schools, agrees with her daughter — to a point.

AP Laserphoto

Western Illinois University students Sandy Frazier, left, and Nelson Cuevas, do some late-night studying at a campus dorm in Macomb, Ill. School officials have decided that round-the-clock coeducational visitation rights for freshmen and sophomores will end in the fall.

"My philosophy is, you are not going to stop students from having premarital sex." she said. "So my husband and I have tried to teach our children the proper behavior. We don't believe in bed-hopping.

"There was a lot of groundwork before Meg's boyfriend ever slept over," she said.

But Mrs. Powers said Western probably was right to end the open dorm policy — ushered in when radical sexual and political thinking swept U.S. colleges during the Vietnam War era.

Paul Jahr, chairman of the research committee of the Association of College and University Housing Officers, said many of the colleges with 24-hour coed visitation were considering setting limits, but he didn't know how many had done so. In many cases, he said, such changes are requested by students seeking greater privacy.

"I don't think the idea of having 24-hour visitation is so glamorous" to students as it once was, Jahr said in a telephone interview from Kearney State College in Kearney, Neb., where he is director of residence life. "They've grown up in a more permissive society where visitation wasn't an issue.

"The women want to be able to walk down the hall in their housecoats and not see a guy," he said.

"Students are not as interested now in their individual freedom as they are in getting an education," he said.

Ron Gierhan, vice president of student affairs at Western Illinois, said the new rules were prompted partly by complaints from freshmen and sophomores, usually females, locked out of rooms for a night or a weekend by roommates occupied with lovers.

Even though she prefers living where men and women cannot share the same room all night, Ms. Gaynord, of Chicago, said such a policy should not be imposed on students.

Gierhan said the new restrictions are mainly to protect students' safety and privacy and not to stop them from having sex.

'Twilight Zone' participants await trial ruling

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As film director John Landis and four other men awaited a ruling on whether they must stand trial in the "Twilight Zone" deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two children, a defense lawyer insisted prosecutors have no case.

Attorney Harland Braun said he was "hopeful" Municipal Court Judge Brian Crahan will dismiss manslaughter charges today in the deaths that occurred when a helicopter crashed down on the victims during filming of the movie version of "Twilight Zone."

Crahan, who presided over a preliminary hearing that ended April 9, said he would announce today whether there is enough evidence to bring the men to trial, said Braun, attorney for Landis.

After a long investigation, the National Transportation Safety Board ruled March 6 that the crash's "probable cause" was the proximity of the helicopter to special-effects explosions, which threw debris into the craft's tail rotor, causing the rotor assembly to fall off.

The NTSB also cited a lack of communication between the pilot and Landis. Prosecutors claimed Landis and the other filmmakers had been reckless.

But Braun and other defense attorneys dispute those allegations.

Braun said that intense heat from a misfired special-effects explosion caused the helicopter to crash, and that there was no way Landis could have foreseen the accident. "I don't think there is a case," he said Friday.

The defense says the heat caused the helicopter rotor's thin skin to peel off in a process called heat delamination which had not been recorded before. It caused the rotor to separate from the craft, defense lawyers say.

Defense attorneys have asked the NTSB to reopen its investigation based on preliminary testimony that disputes the earlier findings.

Meanwhile, an announcement was expected later this week on whether helicopter pilot Dorcey Wingo's license should be revoked. An NSTB spokeswoman said last week that the board had reached a decision but it would not be announced until about Thursday.

Wingo piloted the chopper that crashed onto the actors during filming of a Vietnam war scene.

Besides Wingo and Landis, who also directed "Animal House" and "The Blues Brothers," defendants were associate producer George Folsey Jr., unit production manager Dan Allingham, and special-effects coordinator Paul Stewart.

The five pleaded innocent to involuntary manslaughter charges stemming from the July 23, 1982, deaths of Morrow, 54, and two Vietnamese children, Renee Chen, 6, and Myca Le, 7.

They died during filming at Indian Dunes Park, about 40 miles north of Los Angeles.

The five filmmakers also were appealing more than $82,000 in fines that had been imposed by state safety and labor agencies.

Diet program designed for city

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (AP) — Move over Beverly Hills, Southampton and Scarsdale. Here comes the New Rochelle diet.

But unlike those other well-publicized fitness plans, the New Rochelle version is aimed strictly at city residents, or rather, at their spreading waistlines.

Since Valentine's Day, more than 1,000 New Rochelle residents, as well as the police and fire departments, have agreed to weigh in and exercise their way to fitness — backed by each other and viewed regularly on local cable television. Although the plan has shown disappointing results so far, officials remain enthusiastic.

"We want to see our city fit," says Mayor Leonard Paduano, who said the Westchester County suburban community of 72,000 people believes "in good living and good eating."

The idea for a city diet began two years ago, when the New Rochelle Hospital Medical Center took a survey about nutrition.

"People knew what they should be doing, but weren't doing it," says Frank Hall, a spokesman for the medical center. "So we decided to try to do something."

Aided by the city's health department, "Stay Well, New Rochelle," was born and publicized thoroughly by volunteer groups and the news media.

"We designed the program to be readily available and appealing," says Sylvia Schur, the program food consultant. "We designed it to be used by a variety of people, to give them choices. We based it on the recommendations of the National Institutes of Health. It reduces salt and builds on fiber and more complex carbohydrates."

Darlyne Barber, 43, says she's one of those people who has tried every diet around, "from grapefruit to 500 calories a day and pray to God you don't die."

But the thing about staying well in New Rochelle, she said, is that the community is backing you up as well as "and watching you weigh in on TV." That's one incentive to lose or at least look thinner between the regular weigh-ins, she said.

Although the program does not guarantee instant weight loss, officials emphasize, it offers "wellness," which has attracted residents from ages 14 to 86.

Weight is only one of the items involved in the program. Exercises to increase the efficiency of how the body burns calories are integral to the program.

"It's done a lot for our seniors," Paduano says. "Some of them never realized they could continue to be fit. And continue to be concerned about good eating."

Participants are given the classic calories lists and menus, and are asked to attend regular exercise classes or to do them on their own.

But the numbers have officials a little down.

Only 15 percent of the 800 who signed up in February and say they are regular participants have returned for weigh-ins, with a total weight loss of only 228 pounds.

Statistics for those who joined the program during April weren't available.

"People may be embarrassed because they haven't lost enough," says Keith Barnes, coordinator of the program for the city.

So the city is busy following up through phone calls trying to find out just how successful the program really is — and to let people know it's OK if goals aren't immediately met.

"It may be harder for some than others," says Paduano, who attributes his trimness to good eating, walking stairs and long walks with his dog, Niko. "We initiated the program to change habits. And that may take some time."

Patricia Neal wants to work despite medical problems

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oscar-winning actress Patricia Neal says she's afraid that with publicity about her medical problems, some people may think her acting days are over.

"I want desperately to work," she says. "I want a good film. It would do so much for my self-esteem."

Miss Neal, 58, who visits Los Angeles rarely, now makes her home in Martha's Vineyard, Mass., after her divorce last year from British author Roald Dahl, with whom she lived for 30 years. Dahl helped nurse her back from a series of crippling strokes she suffered in 1965.

"My problem is convincing people that I'm well again and able to work," she said on a recent visit here. "Of course, the right side of my body has been a bit of a mess since my strokes, but otherwise I'm fine."

She conceded that living so far away from Hollywood may have contributed to the crimp in her career. Nonetheless the actress, who won her Academy Award for "Hud," has roles in an ABC-TV pilot, "Glitter," and a Walt Disney cable-TV movie, "Love Leads the Way."

"It would be easier if I lived here, perhaps," she said. "But I can't drive now. My right leg doesn't work properly, and I have trouble seeing out of the corner of one eye, so I can't get a license...Some people would probably say that's a good thing. I was always a rotten driver."

Rose Kennedy

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Rose Kennedy needed oxygen after fainting over her dinner, but responded well to the treatment, her doctor says.

The mother of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., remains at her home and was feeling "quite well" Sunday, said a woman who answered the telephone at Mrs. Kennedy's residence but refused to give her name.

However, the woman said, Mrs. Kennedy was unable to go out for Easter Mass, and a service was celebrated at her home.

Mrs. Kennedy, 93, fainted Friday night having dinner with her family, said Bob Schrum, an aide to Kennedy.

"She got a little bit faint, a little weak," said her physician, Dr. Robert Gerard. "Her nurse took her upstairs and gave a little oxygen. She responded fairly well."

Kennedy preferred that his mother be treated at home rather than at a hospital, Gerard said.

"There's nothing we can provide her in the hospital that can't be provided her here," the physician said.

Lana Turner

NEW YORK (AP) — Veteran actress Lana Turner fell while boarding a jet in Los Angeles and left the flight in New York in a wheelchair and suffering "great pain," a syndicated TV show host says.

But in the best show-must-go-on tradition, the 64-year-old Miss Turner was described as determined to continue a trip to Cairo, Egypt, to finish a film segment for the show.

Miss Turner was met at the plane Saturday by Robin Leach, who had filmed her at her home in California for his show, "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous." He planned to complete the episode in Egypt.

Despite Miss Turner's determination, Leach was reported uncertain whether the segment could be finished.

"I've already spent a fortune," he was quoted Sunday in the New York Daily News. "She's in great pain. I don't know what's going to happen."

Prince Charles

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles says he thinks that a person blessed by the "accident of birth or wealth" has a duty to return something to the public.

But the 35-year-old heir to the British throne said that if he "sold up" and gave up everything he has, "it would be a three or four day wonder."

"There would be headlines about it for a bit and a lot of people would think I was quite dotty," he said. "I'm not sure how much I could achieve after that."

Charles was speaking on a British Broadcasting Corp. radio interview about the Royal Jubilee Trusts, which sponsor inner-city projects.

He condemned Britain's inner cities as "one of the appalling legacies" of the industrial revolution and said that to repair them would require "mind-boggling" investment.

JASPER, Texas (AP) — Veteran Southeast Texas newsman Joseph R. Broughton died Sunday at Jasper Memorial Hospital. He was 53.

Broughton began his career in 1956 at the Port Arthur News and worked for the Beaumont Enterprise and Journal from 1969 until 1976, when he was named editor and general manager of the Jasper News-Boy.

He gained the respect of both labor and management for his labor coverage in Southeast Texas during the 1960s.

"Joe had a close personal relationship with both sides," said Beaumont labor leader Hugh Davis, business agent for Machinists Local 305. "He never chose sides, but he had a more personal approach than you see these days."

Broughton, a native of Trinity, was a Navy veteran and had lived in Jasper for eight years.

Funeral services were scheduled for 2 p.m. Tuesday at Kelley-Hixson Funeral Home in Beaumont, with burial at Forest Lawn Memorial Park.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Marcel Janco, a painter who joined rebellious European artists in founding the Dadaist movement during World War I, died Saturday. He was 89.

The Romanian-born painter studied architecture in Switzerland, where he met a group of artists who rejected what they saw as the staid bourgeois artistic conventions of the times.

They formed a movement in painting, sculpture and literature characterized by fantastic and incongruous creations. Dadism is regarded as the forerunner of modern abstract art.

Wayne Jackson poses with some of his designs he has made in wood at his Denton, Texas, home. Jackson makes almost any decorative item out of wood, including clocks, nameplates and signs.

Man carves new life for self from wood

DENTON, Texas (AP) — What do you do when you have $30,000 invested in a hobby?

If you're Wayne Jackson, you quit your job with the telephone company and turn your hobby into a business.

"For years I worked with wood as a hobby. One day I got curious about how much money I'd invested. After I totaled it up, I found I had put about $30,000 into it. I'm a poor man. I can't afford a $30,000 hobby. I had discovered there was quite a market for this sort of thing, so I invested another $15,000 or $20,000 and here I am with my own business," said Jackson.

Jackson operates Designs in Wood out of his Denton home, which he shares with his 16-year-old daughter Genet. He makes almost any decorative item out of wood, including clocks, nameplates and signs, that a buyer or he can think up.

"It's almost endless, what you can do with wood. There's almost no end to the variety of things you can do and the ways you can go," he said. "Wood is just a beautiful, versatile thing. You can use it for practical purposes, for beauty or to be different."

Jackson spends about half his time experimenting. One of his experiments has resulted in what he calls a unique product. After three months developing the design and another three months of perfecting it in wood, he now produces a script desk nameplate that is not reproduced anywhere because of its intricate letters and unbroken flow. His script woodwork is so unusual, he said, he sometimes sells the pattern to other woodworkers.

"My goal is to be able to personalize a piece of wood in any way possible. I'm just about there. The satisfaction comes from being able to produce (in wood) what I see in my mind and from the reactions of my customers."

Film commission wooing products

CUERNAVACA, Mexico (AP) — The way Juan Jose Perez Pandilla tells it, this area of perpetual spring has just about everything film producers want or need: near-perfect weather, low production costs and an abundance of talent.

"The day you don't have sun, we pay the payroll," said Perez Pandilla, who has headed the Morelos State Film Commission since its inception in December 1983.

While Perez Pandilla admittedly is bragging about the weather, it is not an idle boast. People living here have to scratch their heads and think when asked about the last time there was really bad weather.

Because of its year-round springlike climate, Cuernavaca has been a recreation area since the Toltec Indians of 800-1000 A.D. During Prohibition it was a playground for American gangsters and during the Red Scare of the 1950s, it was a refuge for expatriates from the United States.

"California no longer has the skies (because of pollution). We do and we don't sell it to you, we give it to you," Perez Pandilla said in an interview with the Associated Press.

THE FILM commission here is similar to the state film commissions that have mushroomed in the United States to attract productions from Hollywood. In Mexico, the only state that had a film commission in the past was Durango in the north central part of the country where many Westerns have been made.

The formation of the Morelos commission was prompted at least in part by an upsurge in productions in Mexico that took advantage of bargain basement prices resulting from the 1982 devaluation of the peso. The price advantages are being eroded by inflation, but the idea of filming in Mexico has spread to Europe and elsewhere.

Perez Pandilla said the Cuernavaca area has more than blue skies. The state has purchased three large warehouses which, with little work, have been converted into sound studios for a variety of indoor settings.

Work also is under way on sound and film processing laboratories which should be ready within six months. A film institute is being planned with its campus in Cuernavaca.

For outdoor settings, Perez Padilla said, there are forests resembling the terrain in Canada, mountains that could be in Colorado, jungles, deserts, caves and lagoons — all within a few hours' drive from here.

"THERE ARE a lot of friends we talk to — we induce them to come here," Perez Pandilla said. "We hope we can compete across the border."

His efforts have been paying off. From January through March, eight full-length feature or TV movies were completed in the area. Five were in production in April. Before the commission was established, the area averaged five film productions a year.

Perez Pandilla says he hopes to get at least 25 films into production this year.

Among films produced in the area have been "Under the Volcano," based on the Malcolm Lowry cult novel set in the Cuernavaca of 40 years ago. It was shot last year in nearby Tepoztlan and directed by John Huston.

There also is the recently completed "The Falcon and the Snowman" starring Academy Award winning actor Timothy Hutton, and "Little Treasure," known as much for the reported fisticuffs between stars Burt Lancaster and Margot Kidder as for its plot about a woman finding her long-absent father.

The State of Morelos recently has agreed to become a co-producer of films, furnishing up to half the capital for productions for films that would be distributed in the United States.

Barbara Rush headed for Broadway in style

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — There is a built-in graciousness in Barbara Rush, the actress seen in so many second-banana film roles and TV's departed "Flamingo Road."

In the peculiar world of film celebrity, good manners rarely pay off. Instead of serving her well, hers have tended to make her more or less invisible — until now.

"I came in just after those Irene Dunne-Claudette Colbert years," she explained recently in the understated elegance of a small den in her home — a home that once belonged to Hedda Hopper. "Following those, every sort of neurotic, psychopathic gamin was popular. I didn't fit the description. I've never been able to overcome a certain look. I was classified not as beautiful, but that terrible word: pretty. Not offbeat. Pretty."

There was neither anger nor disgust in the voice; rather a touch of bemusement. Besides, she was speaking from a promontory of newfound strength: the uncommon pleasure of having scored a major success in a one-woman stage play squarely headed for Broadway.

"It's made me find my specialness," she said of Elizabeth Forsythe Hailey's "A Woman of Independent Means," Hailey's stage adaptation of her own best-selling epistolary novel of the same name. It is an exceptionally moving and entertaining account of the uneventful life of a well-to-do Texas matron, written as a collection of remarkable letters. Rush, without the help of makeup, plays that formidable doyenne, Mrs. Steed, from childhood to old age.

"Until I did this play, I didn't know what people thought of me," Rush continued. "This part required a lady. You had to have the manners and speech to match. Sandy Meisner (teacher and theater coach) told me a long time ago that the easiest thing to play is a handicap. The hardest is style — good manners.

"The play demands great vocal skills," Rush went on, "certainly articulation. I drove over the canyons to the theater vocalizing. The grammar in these letters is impeccable. There are no interjections; Betsy (Hailey) insisted on that. I can't add a single word for emphasis. But all of these latent skills of mine are finally being used. I may have that mundane 'prettiness,' but also a certain intelligence and no neurosis.

"How many parts are written for this kind of person?

"Yet the most interesting women are sure of themselves, are not neurotic. Like Mrs. Steed, they have the capacity for great joy and great depth. I think it's wonderful that she dies on a thought that to her is great joy: the thought that she's going to take another trip."

Kenny Culbreth, a longshoreman for four decades on the docks of Philadelphia, waits to help hand out the day's jobs at the Union Hiring Hall at the Packer Marine Terminal in south Philadelphia. During his career, Culbreth has handled whatever cargo came his way and he's not sure whether he'd recommend the job to a younger man.

Longshoremen on brink of extinction

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — During four decades of working on the docks of south Philadelphia, longshoreman Kenny Culbreth has handled whatever cargo has come his way, from the benign to the hazardous.

In the 1960s, "we worked poison gas and mustard gas and asbestos by the millions of tons, boxcar loads," he says. He's seen skin peeling from the arms of co-workers who unloaded containers of acid.

"Longshoremen do the hardest labor in this country. We unload every commodity that's imported and exported. Ship to rail, we handle it," says Culbreth, a stocky man with graying hair. "Whether you use brain or brawn, you get it to move."

Culbreth still accepts the physical risks and rigors of an occupation that has put food in the mouths of his seven children.

But these days, he isn't sure he would recommend that a young man looking for a line of work follow his footsteps.

Culbreth is afraid he and his fellow stevedores are the dinosaurs of the blue-collar world, being driven to the brink of extinction by increasing automation on the waterfront and by shippers more concerned with "union busting" than paying a man an honest wage for an honest day's work.

He has a right to be concerned, because there just isn't as much work to go around as there used to be, and there are more people who are unemployed and looking for whatever work they can find.

The stickiest issue in contract negotiations during the February strike by International Longshoremen's Association members in North Atlantic ports was the guaranteed annual income program that dockworkers have enjoyed since the inception of containerized cargo.

Under their previous contract, Philadelphia area longshoremen who had worked enough hours to qualify for the program were guaranteed that they'd be paid for at least 1,900 hours per year, even if they worked fewer hours.

The three-year contract ratified by the ILA locals Feb. 16 reduced the number of guaranteed hours to 1,500 — the equivalent of 37½ forty-hour weeks.

However, to qualify for that guaranteed annual income, anyone starting out on the docks after Oct. 1, 1983, must work at least 700 hours a year for five successive years. Union members in good standing before Oct. 1 don't have to work a minimum number of hours for the guaranteed income.

Working the minimum number of hours to become "qualified," or eligible for guaranteed income, has become increasingly difficult in recent years, mostly because of a reduction in the amount of freight coming into Philadelphia that requires ILA labor.

Philadelphia, because of its many oil refineries, handles a large number of bulk cargo vessels, whose contents can be unloaded with a minimum of manpower.

But longshoremen say what has really hurt them most is the advent of containerized cargo vessels. Containers from those ships can be lifted by cranes onto waiting truckbeds, reducing the time needed to unload at dockside.

Until the current contract expires, union members won't have to concern themselves with "making their hours." But after the three years is up, some longshoremen worry that under a future contract they may have trouble working the minimum number of hours to remain qualified.

Gesturing toward dozens of men waiting for work inside a crowded hiring center in south Philadelphia, Culbreth says he could be "in the same boat as these people are in."

At each ILA local's hiring center, between 7 and 8 each morning, foremen fill out crews for the various projects that need to be done. First they'll choose from among the "qualified" union members, and then, if they need more workers, the foremen will pick from among the non-union people there.

In past years, Culbreth says, getting work on the waterfront wasn't much of a problem.

"The average man down here who was qualified to work would make 2,300, 2,400, 2,600 hours per year. That's less five weeks vacation. That's working five, six days a week.

"You see here?" he asked, pointing to non-union men anxiously milling about, waiting for work. "It used to be there wouldn't be nobody here, when we had the work.

"These are newcomers, don't even belong to the local, trying to get work. They come from all walks of life," said Culbreth.

Culbreth said he feels shippers have been diverting cargoes away from Philadelphia to other ports in an attempt to "bust" the strong unions here.

Whether those shippers bring the work back to Philadelphia will determine whether he and his coworkers live comfortably or scrape by, he says.

"Would I advise anybody to come be a longshoreman? If the work picks up, yes. If it doesn't, no," Culbreth said.

Wife abuse common form, survey shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women attacked by their husbands or ex-husbands are the most common victims of family violence, and crimes between spouses are more likely to be repeated and to produce injuries than violent crimes by other relatives or strangers, the Justice Department says.

Reporting Sunday on massive survey results from 1973 through 1981, the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics said crimes by spouses or ex-spouses make up 57 percent of all violent crimes committed between relatives. And 91 percent of the attacks on spouses were committed by the husband or ex-husband.

One quarter of the victims of spousal attacks had suffered at least three similar attacks within the previous six months. By comparison, victims of attacks by their parents, siblings, other relatives and strangers reported repeated attacks in only 15 percent, 13 percent, 11 percent and 9 percent of the cases, respectively.

Nearly 58 percent of the victims of attacks by spouses or ex-spouses reported injuries, most of them minor, compared to only 38 percent of the victims of the attacks by other relatives and 27 percent of the victims of attacks by non-relatives.

Based on results of its National Crime Survey for the nine-year period, the bureau estimated there were 4,108,000 cases of violence in which the offender was a spouse, ex-spouse, parent, child, brother, sister or other relative of the victim. This is an average of 456,000 cases a year, but the bureau said that number understates the extent of family violence because many instances are not reported.

The bureau said this total represented 7.2 percent of all the violent crimes uncovered by the survey during the nine years, by far the smallest source of violence measured.

By comparison, strangers were responsible for 58.2 percent of the violent crimes during the period, and acquaintances were blamed for 32.7 percent of them. The relationship between victim and offender could not be determined in 1.9 percent of the cases.

The National Crime Survey is based on interviews every six months with about 132,000 Americans who are asked whether they have been a victim of crime, regardless of whether the crime was reported to police.
