New Credit Plan of Government Spurs Stock Market

YEAR'S BEST GAINS MADE ON SATURDAY

NEW YORK, Feb. 13. — The best gains of the year were recorded on the stock market today as tremendous activity came into trading. Prices jumped one to 17 points.

Tickers ran behind the market both at the beginning and just before the close, so heavy was the trading.

The street was cheered by the outlook for swift passage of the new government plan to expand credit. This plan which would make available for rediscount at the federal reserve banks high grade bonds and mortgage paper, and expand currency output by making government bonds backing for the currency was hailed as the best solution of the problem of halting the deflationary tendency in securities and commodities.

Grains, cotton and other commodities rose with stocks all being aided by prospect of adjustment in the financial situation through the use of the new credit plan.

SPECIAL RULE IS PREPARED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—House leaders today prepared a special rule to enable the house to take up on Monday the administration bill designed to unlock reservoirs of federal reserve credit now unused.

CHINESE AND JAP POSITIONS ARE UNCHANGED

SHANGHAI, Sun., Feb. 14.—Copy-right—The Japanese and Chinese armies came to grips along Woosung creek on Saturday in the fiercest battle of the Shanghai campaign and the banks of the creek were littered with dead and wounded.

The Chinese at 1 o'clock this morning reported hundreds of casualties on both sides. The Japanese admitted several officers and many men were killed and wounded.

The mayor of Shanghai announced that the Chinese commander had reported the Japanese who previously had crossed the creek and stormed the Chinese positions had been compelled to withdraw across the creek.

The battle began after nightfall and was halted at 11 p. m. while the Japanese reorganized for another attack. The Japanese admitted their casualties included one captain. The relative positions, they said, were unchanged.

GARNER WAS POWER WHEN STATE SOLON

AUSTIN, Feb. 13.—When John N. Garner was a member of the Texas House of Representatives, he introduced but two bills in two legislatures and joined as co-author in a third. None of them became law. One was killed in committee; one failed to get enough votes for engrossment. The other passed, only to be vetoed by Governor J. D. Sayers.

Although Garner handed down no legislation that bears his authorship, the young representative from Uvalde was a recognized power in the 27th and 28th legislatures of 1899 and 1901. From the latter he went to congress. In it he was a member of the committee which re-districted Texas to provide the places allowed in the 1900 census. Fellow members of that legislature point with pride to the fact that so skillfully was the state re-districted that every house member who aspired to go to congress, succeeded in doing it.

Garner's first bill was offered in the 26th legislature. It sought to provide for sale and lease of public lands. It received 42 favorable votes and 61 negatives.

In the next legislature he offered a bill to settle titles to lands between the Nueces and Rio Grande rivers, held under grants from Spain and Mexico. It was vetoed. In the 27th legislature he advocated what was probably the first bill seeking to establish manual training in Texas schools. It was killed by unfavorable committee report.

Fellow members of the legislature included Tom Connally, of Marlin, now U. S. Senator; C. M. Chambers, Mayor of San Antonio who has called a Garner-for-President rally for Feb. 22 in San Antonio, and Former Gov. Pat M. Neff.

In the 28th legislature he served on the committees on internal improvements, judiciary, public lands and stock and stock raising. In the 27th he was only upon one standing committee, internal affairs, but had a place on the much coveted re-districting special committee. He was chairman of no committees during his legislative terms in Texas.

His bill in the 26th legislature sought to end free occupancy of the lands set apart for public schools and asylums. Having failed, it is not preserved in the House Journal. Its nature can be judged only from the reasons appended to some of the votes against it. One member said that plenty of good land was already for sale in East Texas as low as $1 an acre. Some of it now is a part of the East Texas oil field. Another said the treasury of Texas already had $1,300,000 for school purposes. There would be no safe

TWO SCOUT COUNCILS TO BE COMBINED

Consolidation of the Oil Belt and Pecan Valley Boy Scout councils into what will be known as the Comanche Trail Council was completed at a meeting of a special committee here Friday evening. The move insured not only a more economical administration of the scout affairs of the area but a more effective administration, it was declared. Even with the consolidation the new council is less in area and has less troops than the average Scout council, it was said.

Guy N. Quirl will remain as Scout executive. He will have a part time assistant in the executive who was formerly in charge of the Brownwood or Pecan Valley council. Headquarters for the new council will be maintained at Brownwood although an office will be kept Eastland as at present.

The committee which met in Cisco Friday evening was one named at a joint meeting of the two councils about 10 days ago in Brownwood to work out details of the consolidation and choose the officers of the new council. The officers chosen at the meeting here Friday evening are:

Dr. Jewel Daugherty, Brownwood, president; H. C. Anderson, Ranger, first vice-president; Earl Fairman, Goldthwaite, second vice-president; Russell Jones, Breckenridge, scout commissioner. Chairmen of the various committees will be appointed later it was announced.

Those present at the meeting Friday evening were: Earl Fairman, Goldthwaite, Judge T. J. Miller, Brownwood, Henry Williams Brownwood, representing the Pecan Valley council, and Russell Jones, Breckenridge, Frank Lovett, Eastland, Doc Sellers, Rising Star, and E. P. Crawford, Cisco, representing the Oil Belt council; and Guy N. Quirl, Scout executive.

Rough Cedar Cross May Mark Burial Spot Of Texans Killed in Massacre in 1836

GOLIAD, Feb. 13. — A rough cedar cross two miles southeast of here marks the probable burial spot of 331 men brutally massacred by Mexican troops on the morning of March 27, 1836.

For several decades all trace of the Goliad massacre were lost. William B. Bennett Jr., of Goliad, a sophomore and pre-med student at the University of Texas, stumbled upon the spot. In the loose earth thrown up by gophers he found a charred bone. His father, a dentist, identified it as a portion of the human jaw bone. They marked the spot with a cross.

Marks of fire on the fragment tally with the story of the Goliad execution. Colonel Fannin and 330 men surrendered their arms after the battle of Coleto. After being held prisoners for nine days in the Bahia Mission they were ordered to march, and told they were being sent home on parole as promised.

Under heavy guard, they were marched half a mile. The Mexicans suddenly turned and fired. Those not killed by bullets were bayoneted. The bodies were gathered in three groups, wood from a brush fence piled upon them, burned and left unburied.

Three months later General Thomas F. Rusk returned and buried the remains he found. The spot near Goliad on which bone fragments have been found corresponds roughly to a map and diary of Dr. Joseph H. Barnard, assistant surgeon of Fannin's army, one of the few who escaped the massacre, and to other documentary evidence recently secured by County Judge J. A. White.

The city of Goliad has bought and presented to Texas for a state park about 207 acres of land two miles southeast of Goliad along the San Antonio river.

This land includes the grave, the Mission of La Bahia, property of the Catholic church and ruins of the college of Aransas. A road through the park, linking State Highway 19 and 12, has been proposed.

A state commission from Austin will inspect the park this year and examine the evidence and documentary proofs of the grave of the Texas heroes. Goliad citizens plan to ask for a state monument to be erected on the site.

COLLEGE REVISION.

James O. Guleke, Amarillo member of the state board of education, made an inquiry and said it disclosed that in about seven years that the University of Texas has offered a course of mathematics on the Einstein theory nobody has signed up for it.

"And Einstein has changed his theory in that time," he commented.

Einstein and the universe were but a part of this state official's inquiry.

He reported that he found hundreds of courses were being given to one, two, five or seven students, even though the cost is as great as for a full class.

He estimated if the sparse courses can be trimmed out of one educational institution and doubled up in others, the state would get along by presenting about 400 fewer courses of instruction in the aggregate of its institutions of higher learning, and without depriving anybody of a chance for any course who valued it enough to choose the school offering it.

One other phase of college administration was concerning this successful lawyer-board of education member. That is the extensive array of instructors, lecturers, adjunct and associate professors and professors in Texas colleges who teach nine hours a week and no more or no less.

Mr. Guleke has suggested that the board of education, which is required to assist in shaping the curriculum of the higher institutions, and will assist in working out the budget, should either increase or reduce these work hours.

At nine hours a week, an instructor has to put in a lot of golf to take up his spare time . . . really he's majoring in golf; but the nine hours' teaching a week threaten to interfere with the golf. He thinks most of these people could teach six hours a week without its interfering; or, he suggested, maybe the board can increase the hours to 15, which will put enough school work upon them that they won't have to bother about golf.

Mr. Guleke said he knows as well as anyone that not all a professor's work is confined to his lecture periods; but he believes there's something to his theory that college courses ought to be so adjusted as to take up the slack of faculty dead time; and to weed out the courses largely responsible for it that are so sparsely attended as to render them unjustifiable.

Improvements at either end will result in what he wants, higher efficiency and better results for what Texas can afford to put into education, he points out.

That may bring up the old question of trying to specialize each of the numerous teacher colleges and junior colleges into a set of institutions of high standing in special fields rather than to spread their work so far and so thin, as did the Kingsville College of Arts and Industries that it lost its affiliation with the college and secondary school association. It appears probable that this summer the state board of control and the governor, both preparing to pass on and review requests of the institutions and colleges, will hold joint sessions with regents of the University of Texas, directors of A. & M. college and members of the boards of the teacher colleges, College of Industrial Arts, Texas Tech college and others, with the purpose of getting a unified budget, based on a correlated program of work, with as much duplication and overlapping as possible taken out, considering that no effort will be made to reduce the number of schools.

OTHER OPINIONS

THE RAILWAY WAGE CUT.

The decision of the railroad brotherhoods to accept a ten per cent wage reduction for one year beginning February 1st was without a precedent, as was the manner in which negotiations preceding between the railway presidents and union chiefs. There was no threat of strikes, no evidence of animosity, no pointed disagreement as to the fundamental issues involved in the situation. The labor delegation and the railway executives simply sat around a conference table and in terms of friendliness and understanding discussed the problems that affected all of them. The result of such a conference was agreement upon a wage arrangement that will go far toward aiding the railroads in recovering from the economic difficulties that are threatening their very existence, and toward stabilizing employment for the nineteen hundred thousand workers involved in the railway union organizations.

While the acceptance of wage reductions by the brotherhoods is heralded as voluntary, it was not quite that. The railroads in December gave notice of their intention to insist upon a 15 per cent reduction. During the conference in Chicago the brotherhoods suggested a reduction of six and one-half per cent. As a compromise, a "deduction" of ten per cent was agreed upon, with the understanding that the schedule is to continue for only one year and is not to affect existing wage contracts. Instead of reducing wages, the railroads are merely to "deduct" a flat ten per cent from each pay check during the one year period. This "deduction" will apply to unorganized employees of the railroads as well as to members of the several brotherhoods.

It is believed that the action of the Chicago conference will have a far-reaching effect upon industry and business in general. It was the belief that this would be the case, which induced the brotherhoods to accept the plan, according to David B. Robertson, spokesman for the unions, who said, "In the hope that our action may improve the health of our industry, may improve the co-operative relations of management and employees, may stimulate a revival of business and may advance the general welfare, we have decided to accept the proposal." The ten per cent reduction of payrolls means a saving of approximately $215,000,000 to the railroads during the year, and that very large sum should be sufficient, with other measures now being taken for the assistance of the roads, to turn the balance in their favor. Railway prosperity; and therefore it is believed that a far-reaching step toward recovery of normal business and industry has been taken. Both the unions and the railroads are to be commended for the spirit in which they have considered a problem of such vast importance to the whole scheme of American economics.—Brownwood Bulletin.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Jesus and the Man Born Blind

Text: John 9: 1-11, 30-38
 The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 14.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
 Editor of The Congregationalist

As we have seen in the miraculous feeding of the multitude a symbol of the spiritual food which never fails but increases the more it is shared, so in the miracle of this lesson, the restoration of sight to a man blind from his birth, there is a symbolism of the spiritual fact of Jesus Christ as the bringer and giver of light. Through him not only blind eyes but blind minds and blind hearts receive spiritual vision. The story is one of the most colorful and interesting in the New Testament. In narrative interest it is striking, but it has also a deeper significance in the reality with which it portrays what has again and again happened in the treatment of its spiritual leaders.

The disciples were interested in the blind man not from the standpoint of sympathy, nor from the standpoint of the possible help that they could give him, but from the standpoint of speculation as to what part sin had to do with his blindness. Like all speculations run wild, their very question indicated its foolishness. "Master," they asked, "who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind?" How could the man have been responsible for his own blindness, unless there was the implication that he had lived in a previous state of existence?

That the sin of his parents might have been responsible for his blindness was not so impossible. It is a sad and tragic physical fact that much blindness has been, and is, occasioned by physical disease of the loathsome sort associated for the most part with ignorance and immoral conduct.

It is doubtful, however, whether such physical cause. Their minds were full of the idea that misfortune was somehow associated with sin. They had not grasped the simple teaching of Jesus involved in his tenderness, that the Divine Father makes his sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sends rain alike on the just and unjust.

Jesus met their questioning plainly in two ways. First he assured them that sin had nothing to do with the matter; and second, displayed the power of grace by restoring eyesight to the blind man. The aftermath of the miracle was as interesting as the miracle itself.

stores harmony. Truth will at length compel us all to exchange the pleasures and pains of sense for the joys of Soul.

The dime-a-dance girl

BY JOAN CLAVTON

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Beautiful Ellen Foster, a salesgirl in Barclay's Department Store, lives with her extravagant mother, Molly Foster, her elder sister, Myra, and her young brother, Mike. The two girls support the family. Molly foolishly spends money saved to pay the rent. Ellen decides to work at night at Dreamland as a dance hall hostess until the sum is made up. The hostesses must wear evening dresses and Ellen owns none.

Steven Barclay, a man of 57 and Ellen's employer, sees the girl crying and discovers the situation. He offers to give Ellen a dress but she proudly refuses. He then loans her a dress from stock.

Ellen is half-pleased, half-frightened by her wealthy employer's obvious interest in her. But she forgets him entirely when at Dreamland she meets handsome Larry Harrowgate, an artist whose prospects, in his own phrase, are exactly nothing. She accepts Larry's invitation to tea the following day. Her mother is already planning that Ellen shall capture Barclay which exasperates the girl. She says nothing of the meeting with Larry.

In the morning flowers arrive from Barclay. Ellen is distressed because they are not Larry's gift but her mother and sister are delighted.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VIII

The initial excitement over Steven Barclay's flowers and Steven Barclay's intentions simmered down a little as breakfast progressed. For one thing, Mike with his clamorous demands for "More toast, Ellen" and "Just a little tummy bit of your coffee, Mom," made any sustained discussion impossible. But after he had gulped his food and scampered away Molly was at the fascinating topic again. "She went straight to the main issue."

"Mr. Barclay is a bachelor, isn't he, Ellen?"

"I don't know and don't care," Ellen answered on a note of rising resentment. "Oh, dear! I'm sorry," she apologized as tears welled up in Molly's eyes. "I didn't mean to be rude. I just hated being made a Roman holiday I think he's a widower."

"Grass," supplied Myra. "He's been married to his first wife but he divorced the second one—got a Mexican divorce. The papers were full of it at the time." Myra concluded self-consciously. "The second Mrs. Barclay was Leda Grayson—that notorious dancer. There was a terrific scandal."

"Oh," said Molly uncertainly. She was dashed. "Then that's different."

"It wasn't his fault," Ellen put in sullenly, reluctantly compelled to come to Steven Barclay's defense. "I remember the whole story now. It was all the woman's fault."

"I should say it was her fault," Myra commented warmly. She amplified her statement. "Leda Grayson cheated from the first but Mr. Barclay was chivalrous enough to get a divorce in Mexico—incomquick, infectious laugh, the way he had said he was glad he had found her. She was thinking that she would see him soon, soon.

Scattered-brained Molly, rebellious and alarmed, was thinking too. Something had arisen to menace the bright fancies she had been weaving. What was there to say? What was there to do? A certain hardness in Ellen's square flushed jaw warned her that tears would be useless. So she held her silence.

Myra's thoughts were darting from Bert to Ellen. She was remembering the way she had loved Bert in the beginning, was remembering the way that love had faded with endless waiting. Surely Ellen could not in the brief space of one night have met another Bert. Surely life could not be so cruel just when it had seemed things were to be easier, just when she admitted honestly it had seemed that Ellen had at last met the man who was to rescue them all.

"Did you mean anything special, Ellen?" Myra spoke at last with effort and hoped that Ellen's jeering laugh would prove her wrong. But Ellen did not laugh.

"No, I didn't mean anything special," he replied, uncomfortably after an appreciable pause.

"That's why you weren't pleased over the flowers, isn't it?" Myra persisted. "It was because you met someone you liked better last night at Dreamland? You spoke of meeting someone there. It was a man, wasn't it, a man that you liked?"

Her breath rose and fell on a long sigh.

"Yes, I did," Ellen replied defiantly, her bright, hostile eyes moving from her sister to her mother and back again. "Furthermore, I hope you and mother will be kind enough to let me handle my own affairs. I don't meddle in yours."

"I'm sorry, dear," burst out Ellen furiously. "You and mother—both of you—make me sick. Were poor. All right, I can recoup the family fortunes by trying to trap a rich man into marriage. That's a fine and honorable solution. That's just great! It makes no difference what I—"

She burst unexpectedly into tears and rushing from the table ran into the bedroom and flung herself upon the bed. When Myra followed and sat down on the bed she refused to speak except to insist hysterically that she be left alone.

"Listen to me," Myra pleaded tearfully, resting Ellen's efforts to force her away. "Listen now. You'll cry yourself sick. I'll be crying if you don't stop. I—I'm crying now."

"You've spoiled everything," Ellen sobbed, her voice muffled by pillows.

"We couldn't. Not if you feel as

Out of the maze of contradictory stories about Washington, there emerges a great plantation owner—hard-headed, efficient, punctual, industrious, close-fisted, practical and cautious.

He was one of Virginia's richest and most successful tobacco planters. He practiced crop rotation, diversified his products and experimented in breeding horses and cattle.

He disliked slavery on economic rather than moral grounds. He carefully clothed and fed his hands and employed a doctor to care for the sick.

House parties were frequent at Mt. Vernon. Washington liked afternoon tea served on the veranda in the summer; he was fond of picnics, barbecues, clam bakes; he played cards and billiards, hunted, fished and still danced at the age of 64.

Washington's first taste of military life came in 1753, when Governor Dinwiddie sent him with a small party to warn the French to desist from encroachment on Ohio valley lands claimed by Virginia for the British crown. The French received him courteously enough, but told him they intended to take possession of the Ohio, nevertheless.

Returning homeward, Washington narrowly escaped death when thrown from a raft into the ice-filled Allegheny river.

Tomorrow: His romance.

Begins Series of Lenten Services

The Rev. Arthur Rathjen, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, will preach a series of special Lenten sermons, beginning with tonight.

The sermons will be based on the words of Christ spoken from the Cross. Says the pastor: "There are only seven brief sentences left us, as traces of His crucifixion experience. They seem like meaningless remarks which came unbidden out of the stress of dreadful anguish. But underlying each of His 'last words' is a whole chapter of poignant beauty and revelation. He left them with us as tokens of meaningful teaching, in which He summed up the import of His gospel." Grace Lutheran Church extends a cordial invitation to all who wish to take part in these services.

The significance of "values" is best understood when we call them to account. For instance, we place a value on Service only when we have need of Service. Or again, we come really to know Courtesy and Confidence as having potent meaning particularly when we seek them and, noting their absence, demand them.

Realizing this, the First National has set up a scale of values which you desire and can use. They combine the best we have to offer with those qualities most useful to you. They are: Service, Efficiency, Friendliness, Confidence and Courtesy.

These qualities are found in our Scale of Values.
