What do you think?

Given the importance of instant information and the value of propaganda in modern warfare, debate has erupted on the appropriateness of continuing CNN's televised reports from Baghdad, with all dispatches approved by Iraqi censors.

Do you think CNN is being unreasonably used by Saddam Hussein and the network should discontinue reports?

Either way, call the CITYLINE COMMUNITY PULSE, 560-2400 to express your opinion. When asked for your category number, press 7655 to register your opinion in support or opposition.

Results will be compiled through Wednesday night and published in Friday's edition.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space center workers who will never forget where they were five years ago fell silent for 73 seconds Monday to honor the seven astronauts who died in the explosion of space shuttle Challenger. All activity at NASA's Kennedy Space Center halted at 11:38 a.m., the time of Challenger's final liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986. It exploded 73 seconds later over the Atlantic Ocean. The dead included Christa McAuliffe, the Concord, N.H., schoolteacher who had planned live lessons from orbit.

Iran's role suspect

Issue of Iraqi jets raises questions

■ 'This is not a defection. They are being sheltered in Iran,' U.S. official says.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The flight of more than 80 Iraqi planes to Iran has raised urgent questions in the Bush administration about Iran's intentions and avowed neutrality in the Persian Gulf war.

The nature and scale of the flights strongly suggest advance Iranian approval. Iran has said it intends to keep the aircraft grounded until the war ends, but there is concern within the administration about that commitment and puzzlement over Iran's motivations in offering a friendly hand to Iraq. The two countries fought a bitter war from 1980 to 1988, which began when Iraq invaded Iran.

Lt. Gen. Thomas Kelly, director of operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Monday that Iran had so far kept its commitment to impound the planes, but left open the possibility that Iran and Iraq may have struck a secret deal.

"It could be a plan to save those aircraft for another time, to include during this conflict or after this conflict," Kelly said. "I don't know what kind of arrangements Iraq has reached with Iran."

Peter Arnett of the Cable News Network reported from Baghdad on Monday that President Saddam Hussein told him in an interview that despite the history of conflict between Iran and Iraq, Tehran was offering sanctuary to the Iraqi planes in a gesture of Muslim solidarity.

According to Arnett, Saddam said Iranian authorities would decide whether the planes would fly again during the war.

The decision to give refuge to Iraqi planes may be an extension of Tehran's effort to play both sides of the gulf conflict,

Saddam now hints at use of chemical, nuclear arms

N.Y. Times News Service

President Saddam Hussein said in an interview reported from Baghdad on Monday that Iraq had maintained its balance in the war thus far by using only conventional weapons, but that his missiles could deliver chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

He suggested they would be used if necessary to preserve his nation.

In his first interview with a Western reporter since the war began on Jan. 17, the Iraqi president told the CNN correspondent Peter Arnett that allied air superiority had failed, and insisted that Iraq would win the war, although he declined to predict the length of the fight.

In a wide-ranging, 90-minute talk that Saddam initiated and that took place in a bungalow in a Baghdad suburb, the Iraqi president also blamed the United States for the huge oil spill in the Persian Gulf, skirted questions on Iraqi warplanes flown to neighboring Iran and said Iraq was justified in using allied prisoners of war as human shields.

Saddam made no explicit threat to use chemical, biolgical or nuclear weapons, but was paraphrased by Arnett as having said Iraq would use weapons "equitable" to those used by allied forces.

Asked if he meant Iraq would use such weapons only if they were used by the allies, he said he did not mean that.

The implication, according to Arnett, appeared to be that Iraq would use unconventional weapons if it found its back to the wall.

"He said, 'Let's pray that we don't go that far, that the losses aren't that great.'" Arnett said in a late-afternoon

New economic hostages: oil workers

Hearst News Service

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — Many American employees of the Saudi national oil company, frightened by almost nightly Iraqi rocket attacks, are preparing to take their families back to the United States.

But some of the 2,000 U.S. workers here say they fear their jobs won't be here for them after the shooting stops. Others suggest that they are being forced to make a choice between safety and job security.

The Iraqi missile barrages that began on Jan. 18 brought residents of a suburban-like enclave within the desert kingdom to the abrupt realization that a war was at hand. And the U.S. expatriates, called "Aramcons," fear that the comfortable way of life they've come to enjoy may be ending.

With debris from missiles falling around them, their once-comfortable compound now seems more like a war zone.

"My biggest worry is the lack of bomb shelters," said one Aramco employee. "There are no basements in any of the homes."

At least one man has been fired for refusing company orders.

Jerry Sunley, 46, said Monday he was sacked for refusing to fly in northern Saudi Arabia, near the border with Kuwait. Sunley, a helicopter pilot for Aramco for four years, was assigned to fly offshore oil rig workers from an Aramco base in Tanajib, about 30 miles south of the Kuwaiti border.

"I told them we didn't sign on to work in a war zone," Sunley said.

Told that he was being fired "for failing to follow a legitimate order," Sunley said he told his supervisors, "There's nothing 'legitimate' about flying within 30 miles of a war zone."

Sunley, a former Army helicopter pilot in Vietnam who used to fly in the Houston area for Tenneco, said he's trying to

Bush postpones summit meeting with Gorbachev

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, troubled about a long trip to Moscow in the midst of the Persian Gulf war as well as bogged-down talks over a strategic arms reduction treaty, decided Monday to put off his scheduled Feb. 11-13 summit with Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The decision was "by mutual agreement" with the Kremlin, and the summit will be rescheduled in Moscow at "a later date in the first half of this year," according to a joint statement of Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertnykh.

Bush met with Bessmertnykh just prior to the announcement. It was the first time that a scheduled U.S.-Soviet summit had been put off since the late Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev canceled President Dwight D. Eisenhower's 1959 visit to Moscow in furious objection to U.S. spy fights over Soviet territory.

But the postponement of the Bush-Gorbachev meeting "was a mutual decision so there is no disappointment," Bessmertnykh emphasized.

Standing together in a White House driveway, Bessmertnykh first in Russian and then Baker in English read their joint statement.

It said: "The gulf war makes it inappropriate for President Bush to be away from Washington. In addition, work on the START treaty will require

Security tight for Bush's State of Union message

WASHINGTON (AP) — Streets around the Capitol will be closed and security measures inside will be pervasive today when President Bush delivers his State of the Union address amid concern about a possible terrorist attack.

Security is always tight for the president's annual address. But additional measures are planned this year because security officials believe the building could be a prime terrorist target during the Persian Gulf war.

A number of heightened measures already are in place and will stay in effect at least for the duration of the threat. In one departure from the past, everyone entering the building is asked to remove overcoats, which are then checked by hand.

Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark, said members of Congress have been briefed on how to protect themselves and recognize letter bombs. Staffers have been given advice on recognizing suspi-

Administration may slash Medicare by $20 billion

■ About half of reduction would come at expense of hospitals, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration may try to slash Medicare spending by $20 billion over the next five years, a move that would jeopardize already struggling hospitals around the country, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Monday.

Bentsen, a Democrat whose home state of Texas has led the country in the number of hospital failures since 1986, said about half of the reduction under consideration would come at the expense of hospitals.

"Medicare cuts of the size we're hearing about would put severe strains on the ability of hospitals to cover rising medical costs," said Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"I don't see how they can propose another $20 billion cut when half our hospitals already lose money each time they treat a Medicare patient. It's obvious to me — and to most of you — that a growing number of hospitals are simply not in a position to take another hit," Bentsen told the American Hospital Association's annual meeting.

"More than half of the hospitals in the country are losing money on Medicare patients. The Texas Hospital Association estimates that 70 percent of Texas hospitals are losing money on Medicare patients," Bentsen said.

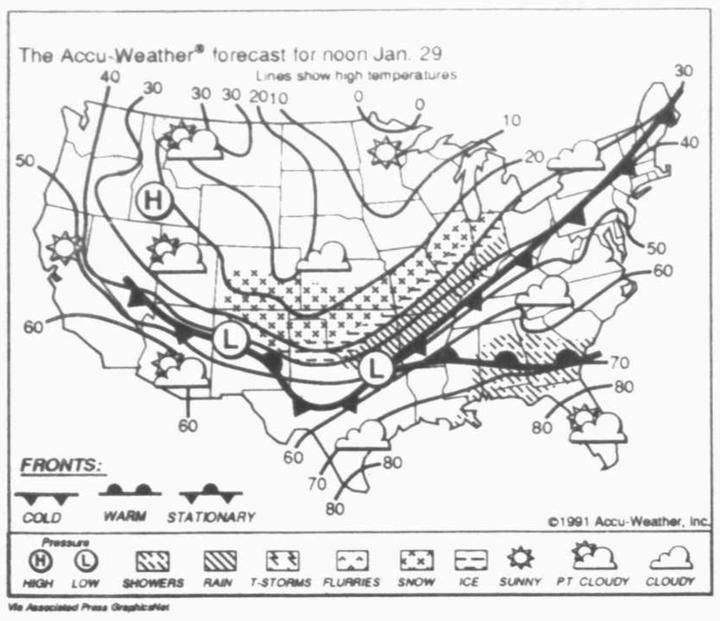

The Office of Management and Budget said it would not comment on details of the president's new budget plan, due out next week. Kevin Moley, assistant secretary of the Health and Human Services Department, which administers Medicare, similarly said only that "The budget will be released a week from today, and that will speak for itself."

Last year's agreement to reduce the national deficit by $500 billion over five years included a $45 billion cut to Medicare. As a result, hospitals will receive $17 billion less over five years, including $1.85 billion this year, Bentsen said.

Throughout the negotiations with Congress, the Bush administration sought deeper Medicare cuts, Bentsen said.

"But when it was all over I was under the clear impression that further cuts in Medicare were not going to be on the table this year. I thought we had a deal," Bentsen said. "As far as I'm concerned, further Medicare cuts would be a deal-breaker."

Cloudy skies forecast

Today's forecast is for cloudy skies with a high in the upper 40s and south winds 5-15 mph, shifting to north 20-30 mph by noon, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be cloudy with a 20 percent chance of light snow and a low in the lower 20s.

Wednesday should be cloudy with a high near 40, the NWS said.

After an overnight low of 28, Monday's high was 59, compared to the record high for the date of 79, set in 1987. The record low for today's date is 2, set in 1948.

STATE

Dense fog and clouds blanketed most of the state Monday except for parts of West Texas where clear skies prevailed.

Some sunshine however, peeked in on North Texas by mid-afternoon.

Temperatures warmed up, reaching into the low 60s over the south and western locations around Waco and Abilene with 50s reported elsewhere.

State readings ranged from 48 degrees at Texarkana to 73 degrees at Laredo and Del Rio.

But the warmer climate is only masking colder weather on its way to Texas as a cold air mass from Canada moves into the western region of the state.

Cloudy and colder weather will hit the West Texas area today with a chance of light snow in the Panhandle, spreading to the Permian Basin by nightfall.

In North Texas, much colder weather, showers and possibly snow are expected today as the front moves into the area. Lows today are expected to range from 21 to 35 degrees. Highs today to range from 37 to 59 and on Wednesday, 32 to 40 degrees. Freezing drizzle is expected on Wednesday.

NATION

Snow was scattered from the Northwest to the Great Lakes on Monday, and several inches of snow was expected during the night from the northern Rockies across the northern Plains.

At midday, snow was falling over northeastern Oregon, northeastern Idaho, southern and central Montana, Wyoming, northern Nebraska, South Dakota, southwestern Kentucky, east-central and northern Lower Michigan and Upper Michigan.

Accumulations during the night were expected to reach 4 to 8 inches in the mountains of Wyoming, 8 inches in the mountains of northern Colorado, 6 inches in the Black Hills of South Dakiota, and 4 inches in the Nebraska Panhandle, the National Weather Service said.

Between 3 and 6 inches of snow fell on the Big Horn mountains of Wyoming in the 12 hours between midnight Sunday and noon Monday.

Rain was scattered over west-central Oregon, south-central Oklahoma, north-central Texas, west-central through east-central Georgia, northern and west-central Florida, and the central coast of North Carolina.

Dense fog blanketed Indiana highways during the morning and one person died in a one-car accident on a road police described as "ice-covered and shrounded in fog." Snow and sleet during the weekend were blamed on four fatalities.

Because of the fog, an eastbound section of Interstate 74 was closed after about 30 cars piled up, but there were no serious injuries, Shelby County police said. A highway near Anderson was closed because of a series of accidents, mostly fender-benders, involving 30 to 50 cars, said the Madison County Sheriff's Department.

QUESTIONS: Iran, Iraq may have struck deal administration officials and experts on Iran said.

The government officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Iran's actions were consistent with its practice of publicly criticizing Iraq's military aggression but apparently assisting Saddam at the margins of the crisis.

"They're in the catbird seat, and they have been since August," a U.S. intelligence official said of Iran on Monday. "For them, the war is a win-win situation."

In August, two weeks after Iraq invaded Kuwait, Tehran and Baghdad concluded a treaty in which Saddam surrendered virtually all his territorial and political gains in the war with Iran. Saddam's gains from that bargain appear minimal so far.

Iran has effectively permitted organized smuggling of goods into Iraq, turning a blind eye to small truck convoys crossing the border in defiance of a United Nations embargo, according to some American officals. But American intelligence officials say the comparative amount of smuggling is small.

The Pentagon first confirmed the flight of Iraqi planes into Iran on Saturday, and the number of fleeing planes has soared in recent days. Kelly described the fleeing Iraqi planes on Monday as the "flower of the air force."

Though administration spokesmen said that it was not clear whether the planes were being piloted by defectors or as part of an organized effort by Saddam to protect his air force from attack, administration officials, who declined to be identified, discounted the defector theory.

"It's definitely not defections," an American intelligence official said Monday. "Some of them have actually been escorted in by Iraqi planes, and then the escorts fly back."

Another administration official said: "It is undoubtedly organized. This is not a defection. They are being sheltered in Iran."

Some experts noted that Saddam shifted part of his air force to Jordan to protect the planes during the war with Iran, and speculated that Iraq might be trying that tactic again. A senior Pentagon official said that F-117A fighters, which have highly accurate bombing systems, had begun to concentrate on the destruction of Iraqi aircraft shelters in recent days and said that that might have prompted the Iraqi planes to flee.

Iranian support to Iraq would be a serious setback to American and allied efforts to keep Iraq isolated during the war. Secretary of State James A. Baker III has asserted that Washington has received assurances from Tehran that Iran will remain neutral in the conflict and that the Iraqi planes will not be permitted to leave. Pentagon officials said there was as yet no evidence that Iraqi planes that have flown to Iran have returned.

About three-quarters of the fleeing planes are combat planes, including French-made Mirage F-1 fighters, which are capable of firing Exocet missiles, MIG-29 Soviet-made fighters, SU-24 Fencer bombers and one of Iraq's two airborne radar reconnaissance planes.

The remaining Iraqi airborne radar reconnaissance plane was destroyed in a ground attack, a senior Pentagon official disclosed Monday in an interview. The other planes that are fleeing are transport planes.

Pentagon officials appear to have mixed feeling about the flight of the Iraqi planes. On one hand, the departure of the planes is seen as another indication that the American and allied air force has achieved air superiority. And as long as the Iraqi planes are in Iran, they are of no use to Saddam.

"The aircraft remaining in Iraq believe they will be destroyed and I believe they are right," Kelly said.

Kelly also argued that the departing Iraqi planes might soon break down unless properly maintained. Since the Iranian air force does not have many planes that are similar to those in the Iraqi inventory, he said, spare parts may well be lacking.

INTERVIEW: Saddam makes no explicit threat broadcast over the Cable News Network.

Arnett's report on the interview included no videotape of the Iraqi president and no audio recordings of his comments.

The live report was relayed over a telephone-satellite hookup that bypassed regular telephone circuits in Iraq, but was subject to censorship, as all of Arnett's recent reports have been.

Arnett, who has been the only correspondent for a major Western news organization in Baghdad since the war began, quoted the Iraqi president as saying:

"We have maintained our balance using only conventional weapons. Pray that not a lot of blood will be shed from any nation. We pray we shall not be forced into taking a forced measure."

For the first time, Saddam said the missiles Iraq has been firing at Israel and Saudi Arabia have the ability to carry chemical, biological or nuclear warheads.

Arnett said Saddam Hussein "proudly" referred to the weapons as "al Hussein missiles."

Iraq is known to have developed chemical and biological weapons, but Western analysts have questioned whether Iraqi military could use their Scud-B missiles to deliver such weapons. Much of the allied air war has been directed at knocking out the missiles.

It is unclear whether Iraq has nuclear weapons. Some analysts in the West say Iraq before the war was a year or two from developing atomic warheads, and U.S. military officials have said the recent bombing has obliterated any nuclear abilities Iraq might have had.

Asked how long he believed the war would last, he said, according to Arnett:

"Only God knows. Iraq will win the admiration of the world with their fighting prowess. Lots of blood will be shed, lots of blood. We are referring to blood on every side, American, French, Saudi blood, and Iraqi."

On the possibilty of negotiations to end the war, Arnett quoted Saddam as saying that was up to President Bush.

But then he said such a dialogue "could only come between the peoples of the lands of Iraq and in the West and elsewhere in the world."

When asked about U.S. assertions that Iraq had released millions of gallons of oil in the Persian Gulf, the Iraqi leader suggested that the United States had released the oil by attacking Iraqi tankers and oil installaions.

Thus, he said, if his field commanders used oil as a weapon of self-defense in the war, "such as trenches filled with burning oil or other techniques," they would be "justified in taking this action," he was quoted as saying.

To a question about scores of Iraqi aircraft flying to Iranian air fields, he shed no light on whether the planes were being flown by deserters or perhaps secretly sheltered by Iran, out of reach of allied warplanes.

Iraq and Iran are neighboring Muslim countries and despite nearly a decade of war, both now regarded the present war as "a battle between faith and the infidel," Saddam said.

He was asked if the planes might be used again in the war.

"He said in all circumstances we respect the decisions and regulations of the state of Iran," Arnett said.

Asked about allied prisoners of war and their use as human shields at targets of allied planes, contrary to the rules of the Geneva Convention, Saddam responded that Iraqi students were being unfairly interned in the West and that restrictions had been placed on Arabs of Iraqi descent.

Arnett said Saddam expressed annoyance at what he called "hypocritical Western politicians" who convinced him last year that he could preserve peace by releasing 5,000 hostages from Iraq.

WORKERS: Compound seems like war zone

(From 1A)

"get out of this missile range and join my family" in Springfield, Mo. His wife, Donna, and their two children had left Jan. 14 for a vacation.

As the air war rages and a ground war is believed imminent, long-time employees are reconsidering their exotic careers and no longer believe they will be in Saudi Arabia when they retire.

"My original plan was to be here eight years until I retire at 60," said Paul Varady, from Orange County, Calif. "Lord knows, I could be out of here tomorrow."

It is a classic golden handcuffs situation.

Employees enjoy generous salaries, pay little or no taxes, enjoy low rent and travel widely at the company's expense. Some families have been around the world two or three times. Their fenced-in community offers rolling hills, green lawns, tennis courts, pools, stables and crime-free neighborhoods.

"There is no question that for the expatriates it is the best company to work for in Saudi Arabia," Varady said.

Americans have long been instrumental in developing the Saudi kingdom's vast oil reserves. In fact, a consortium of U.S. oil giants — Texaco, Mobil, Exxon, Shell and Standard Oil of California — jointly owned Aramco until 1981, when the Saudi government bought all company shares. By 1989, Aramco was abolished and the company became Saudi Aramco. Today, the company employees more than 40,000 people, about 2,000 of them American.

The incentive to remain on the job is great. Benefits jump at the 5-year mark when employees become fully vested in the retirement program and their savings are matched dollar for dollar. And retirement benefits are outstanding, they say.

But the war has changed all that for many.

"Now there is a good question about what this part of the world will be like for Americans for years to come," said a land surveyor who asked not to be named. "A lot of people want to forget it and go home."

For employees who ignore the requirement to give 30 days' notice of resignation, the penalty is forfeiture of months of severance pay, the Americans say. And only vacations scheduled well in advance of the war are being honored.

SUMMIT: Meeting to be rescheduled later

some additional time. Both presidents look forward to setting an exact summit date as soon as it becomes feasible to do so."

Bush and senior administration officials have been hinting for weeks that he would forgo the Feb. 11-13 trip to register displeasure with the military crackdown on the independence movement in Latvia and Lithuania.

But the statement did not mention the situation in the Baltic Republics.

Asked whether that issue was involved in the decision, Baker said "the statement speaks for itself."

However, he said "we have made our substantial concerns known" to the Soviets over the Baltics issue.

In Vilnius, Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said he hoped the postponement would not encourage more Soviet military aggression in the Baltics.

"It is not so important what reason is named (for the postponement)," he said. "It is more important what reasons are in mind, and whether they have these reasons in mind or not will be seen in the results."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., told reporters at the Capitol that Bush should have used the summit to convey U.S. concerns about the crackdown in the Baltics.

"Unfortunately, the strongest statement of disapproval would be to cancel the summit. I say unfortunate because if we are having difficult times, it is probably all the more reason to have a summit," Leahy said.

There was no elaboration, meanwhile, on why it would be "inappropriate" for Bush to be away from Washington during the Persian Gulf war.

The President has not taken any trips — except to his Camp David retreat in the nearby Catoctin mountains of Maryland — since ordering U.S. forces into action against Iraq.

On the arms control front, meanwhile, Baker said some technical issues were still standing in the way of completing the treaty to cut U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear missiles, bombers and submarines by about 30 percent.

He cited, for instance, ways of monitoring U.S. and Soviet missile plants to guard against cheating.

Other unresolved problems include how much data from missile flight tests will be exchanged and Soviet demands to inspect U.S. bombers.

Earlier, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater offered reasons both for going and for staying home.

SECURITY: Additional measures are in effect

cious individuals and packages.

For the speech, scheduled at 8 p.m. CST today, the Capitol Police will close all streets within a four-block radius of the building until Bush leaves.

Technicians installed additional devices that detect explosive materials by "sniffing" enzymes in the air.

As in previous years, the building will be closed to everyone but the news media, those with tickets to the speech and employees starting at 5 p.m. The ticket holders will go through metal detectors twice, once when entering the building and again before going into the galleries.

Capitol security forces also are linked by radio hookup with other law enforcement agencies such as the Secret Service, and with key government agencies including the State Department and Defense Department.

House Sergeant At Arms Jack Russ, in a letter detailing security precautions for Bush's address, wrote: "I recommend as a security precaution that all members of Congress park in underground garages and use the subways (the Capitol's underground tunnels)."

On Friday the Capitol Police Board, which sets policy for security, decided to curb visitor access to the Capitol.

All visitors will be barred from the West Front Plaza, the side of the building that faces the Washington Monument.

Visitors will not be permitted on the sides steps on the East Front — the side of the Capitol that contains a paved plaza. And only visitors, but not protestors, will be allowed on the East Front's center steps, where the public enters for tours. Protestors have in the past been allowed to use the steps for demonstrations.

Political demonstrations will now be confined to the grassy areas on either side of the Capitol.

One congressional source, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said that for the past two years, security forces have been installing the devices that detect explosives.

The Capitol Police for years have had tactical units to combat terrorism and demonstrations, and have them on alert. Days off have been canceled for the entire force of nearly 1,400 officers.

House Sergeant at Arms Jack Russ and Senate Sergeant at Arms Martha Pope have briefed Capitol employees on the security threat.

The privately owned newspaper that circulates in the Capitol, Roll Call, reported that Russ told his meeting the Capitol is the "number one" target in the country for terrorist attacks.

"We don't know how we're going to be hit. We just believe we are going to be hit," Russ said, according to Roll Call's account of the meeting.

Rep. Alexander said members were urged to change personalized license plates.

Guessing When An Assault May Come

The U.S.-led multinational force's expected ground attack will be carefully timed for maximum military and political advantage. Some of the factors that observers speculate may figure in such a decision are summarized on the calendar below.

U.S. M1A1 tank

Many dates are approximate, including Islamic calendar dates

Moonlight

Dark, moonless nights are thought best for an attack because the dark increases the chance of surprising the enemy. In addition, U.S. and allied forces are thought to have an advantage in the dark because of superior night-sighting equipment.

Marked on the calendar are dates when the moon will rise between about 4 a.m. and 10 a.m. local time in Kuwait (and so will be high in the sky during the day and evening only), plus dates within two days of the new moon.

Tides

The presence of Marine amphibious forces in the Gulf suggests that an assault by allied ground troops would involve a landing on the beaches of Kuwait or Iraq. Such landings are thought to be easiest at or near high tide, when the distance across the exposed beach is narrowest, and at night, when invaders are hard to see.

Marked on the calendar are dates when the tide will be high at Kuwait City sometime between midnight and 4 a.m. local time, approximately.

Calendar

Fighting is considered to be sinful for Muslims during the Rajab and three other months of the Muslim lunar calendar. The 17th of Ramadan, when Mohammed attacked at Badr in 624, and surrounding days are considered favorable for war. Soldiers on duty are exempt from the requirement to fast from dawn to dusk during Ramadan.

Western planners are unlikely to choose Easter Sunday for an assault because of the possible negative political impact.

Weather

Sandstorms can strike the Arabian desert any time of year, but they tend to be bigger and worse once the weather warms up in the late spring and summer.

The winter is the rainy season in the Gulf region; the rain tends to pack the sand, making vehicle movement easier. The rains stop and the temperature starts climbing in March. By the end of April, the daytime heat can become unbearable for heavily laden soldiers and damaging to equipment.

U.S. faces battle-tested, modern Iraqi tank corps

■ American military analysts say it could be biggest tank confrontation since Allies took on Rommell in World War II.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Commanders of America's top-of-the-line M-1 tanks will need all their technological advantages and strong air support to successfully wage war against Iraq's massive, modern and battle-tested tank corps.

A land offensive to drive Iraq from occupied Kuwait will test the mettle of the M-1 Abrams, a $3 million piece of technological wizardry named after the late Gen. Creighton W. Abrams.

The Iraqi tank corps hoping to smash an allied ground assault contains the Soviet-made T-72, a powerful and respected vehicle the Iraqis used to good advantage in its 1980-88 war against Iran.

American military analysts say it could be the biggest tank confrontation since the Allies took on German Field Marshal Erwin Rommel and his Afrika Korps in World War II.

In this war, the crucial factor in a tank battle will be air support, and it is here that the United States and its allies should have an overwhelming advantage.

A-10 attack planes armed with Maverick missiles and armor-piercing cannons and Apache helicopters firing Hellfire missiles will be swooping down on Iraqi tank positions, while reconnaissance aircraft will be calling in positions for ground artillery.

The analysts express confidence that M-1, developed in a $20 billion program over the last two decades, has the firepower to prevail. But the Iraqis will also be going into battle with several key factors in its favor.

Iraq will field some 4,000 tanks, compared to about 2,200 American tanks and 1,200 tanks from its allies. The modified T-72's 125mm main gun is slightly larger than the 120mm guns mounted on the M-1; The T-72's three-layer, 200mm armor compares with the best American equipment.

"These tanks are designed not to be easily destroyed," Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said of the Soviet vehicles.

B-1 bomber likely to sit on sidelines

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — While the Air Force's aging B-52 bomber is playing a big role in the air attack on Iraqi forces in the Persian Gulf, the nation's newest active bomber, the B-1, appears destined to sit out the war on the sidelines.

Air Force and congressional officials said the B-1 was designed primarily as a nuclear bomber, although it is also capable of flying missions with conventional, nonnuclear bombs.

They said B-52 crews are better trained in conventional bombing missions and that the Air Force wants to keep the B-1's at their bases in the United States in their traditional cold war role as a deterrent to a nuclear strike by the Soviet Union.

Because of the political turmoil in the Soviet Union, "There is no eagerness to get the B-1's involved" in the war with Iraq, said Maj. Dick Cole, a spokesman for the Air Force. The Air Force has 97 B-1's, about a third of which are on active alert at any one time for a nuclear strike at the Soviet Union.

"To have a significant force of those aircraft in the gulf would disrupt training for all crew members and would require some planes to be taken off nuclear alert," Cole said.

Moreover, they said, the entire B-1 fleet has been grounded for more than a month because of the latest in a series of problems with the airplane, which entered service in 1986.

U.S. loses AV-8 Harrier jet; pilot missing

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Another U.S. warplane went down in combat Monday, the first allied loss in more than three days, the U.S. Central Command said.

The Marine Corps AV-8 Harrier jet was the 11th American aircraft lost in combat during 12 days of allied air attacks against Iraq. Its pilot was listed as missing, joining 13 other Americans listed as missing in the Persian Gulf war.

Some of the airmen are held by Iraq, which said Monday that some POWs had been injured by their Desert Storm comrades during bombing raids on Iraq. Iraq had threatened to hold the pilots as "human shields" at military targets.

The Harrier apparently was shot down by Iraqi ground fire as the U.S.-led coalition continued relentless attacks aimed at forcing Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to yield Kuwait.

U.S. officials also said Monday that four more Iraqi planes were shot down, bringing the allies accounting of Iraqi aircraft losses to 49 — 26 shot down and 23 destroyed on the ground.

The erosion of Iraq's air fleet was being accelerated by the movement of aircraft across the border to Iran.

Brig. Gen. Pat Stevens, a U.S. Central Command spokesman, said that as of Monday, 69 Iraqi planes had flown from various fields in Iraq to Iran. Hours later, Pentagon spokesmen disclosed a new figure of 80 and military sources in London, insisting on anonymity, said the total was "rising and approaching 100."

Iraq's air force has 663 combat aircraft, according to the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies.

The discrepancies were not explained, but appeared to result from the swift pace of the Iraqi movement of its aircraft.

Stevens refused to speculate on the reason for the movements, but said, "Every one of those aircraft that leaves is one less that we have to face in combat."

In his estimate of 69 planes that had landed in Iran, Stevens said 30 were transport planes and 39 were fighters and bombers.

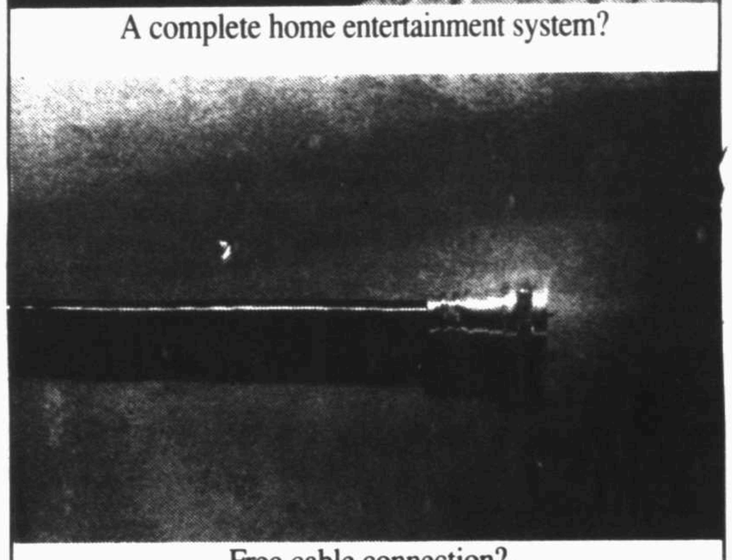

The Iranian government has said it would impound any plane that lands in Iran until after the war. It's U.N. ambassador, Kamal Kharrazi, reiterated that Monday.

U.S. officials say they do not know why the Iraqis were moving the aircraft. Theories have ranged from mass defections by disgruntled pilots to Saddam assembling his force for an assault on allied targets in the Persian Gulf and Saudi Arabia.

Iraqi missile parts hit West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Iraq launched its seventh missile attack on Israel Monday night, and parts of a Scud rocket landed on Arab villages in the occupied West Bank, military officials and the state radio reported.

There were no immediate reports of injuries and apparently no U.S.-made Patriot missile was fired to intercept the Scud.

It was the first reported hit in the West Bank, where Arabs have shown support for Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. Some reportedly have applauded his earlier missile raids from their rooftops.

Like the 25 other Scuds fired at Israel, the missile carried a conventional warhead, officials said.

Israeli leaders warned Iraq on Monday that it would be taking "very, very grave" risks by attacking Israel with chemical weapons, and said they have plans to retaliate against such an assault.

So far, the Israelis have not launched counterattacks following the Scud barrages.

The state radio said parts of the missile fell on villages beyond the so-called "green line," Israel's border before the 1967 Middle East war in which it captured the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Military sources confirmed the report.

Israel, which has handed out gas masks to its entire population of 4.7 million, has distributed only about 30,000 masks to 1.7 million Palestinians in the occupied territories, considering them an unlikely target for Iraq.

A military spokesman, Brig. Gen. Nachman Shai, said be believed no U.S.-supplied, Patriot anti-missile missiles had been fired at the incoming rocket. He did not explain why.

The United States provided Israel with six Patriot batteries and sources in Washington say as many as a dozen will eventually be supplied.

Although some of the Scuds were intercepted by the Patriots, others — some apparently after being deflected by Patriot explosions — have struck neighborhoods in the Tel Aviv and Haifa areas, killing two people and wounding about 200. Two other people have died of heart attacks during the missile assaults, and more than 2,000 apartments have been damaged.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said it was unclear whether Saddam has the technology to carry out his threat to arm the Scuds fired into Israel with chemical weapons. Defense Minister Moshe Arens said Israel lacked "foolproof information" about it.

"Maybe he does, maybe he doesn't," Shamir added, speaking on Israel radio. "And if he has them, he could use them, but if he uses them, he is risking himself and his country to a very, very grave extent."

Any Israeli action would be coordinated with the United States, Shamir added. "Israel is not interested in doing anything not useful, that will not reduce the dangers that are threatening us," he said.

Israel has withheld reacting to the Iraq missile attacks so far, heeding American pleas to stay out of the war. The United States fears that an Israeli attack could weaken the resolve of the Arab nations in the U.S.-led alliance against Iraq. Iran has said it would join battle in a war pitting Israel against Arabs.

Arens said Israel wanted the American-led coalition against Saddam "to last until victory. ... We are simply trying to do the right thing at the right time."

The United States has airlifted six U.S.-made anti-missile Patriot batteries to Israel to intercept Iraqi Scuds. Four batteries are run by American crews and two by Israelis, Arens said.

Arens complained that Israel asked for the Patriots five months ago but that U.S. officials stalled, saying the air defense batteries were needed by U.S. forces in Saudi Arabia. So far, the Patriot system has blocked two barrages of Scuds aimed at Israel but failed to stop others.

Iraq blames coalition for 300 deaths

N.Y. Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS — The Baghdad government said Monday that the American-led alliance had killed at least 324 civilians, wounded another 416 and damaged or destroyed religious, cultural and residential buildings during its aerial bombardment of Iraq.

The Iraqi charges were made in a letter from Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz to the United Nations secretary general, Javier Perez de Cuellar, which also said Baghdad holds Perez de Cuellar personally responsible "to history and to mankind" for the civilian death and destruction it said the raids are causing.

The allied air forces say they are attacking only military targets and are doing everything they can to minimize civilian casualties. But the Iraqi letter speaks of "deliberate and brutal attacks launched on behalf of the United Nations by the forces of the criminal Zionist-imperialist alliance on civilian, economic, humanitarian, medical, cultural and religious targets and on citizens and their families in all parts of Iraq."

It concludes by telling the secretary general that "you, personally, bear responsibility to history and to mankind for the heinous crimes being committed against the noble people of Iraq who are fighting for their freedom."

The letter asserts that in the first five days of the war, allied air forces mounted 74 bombing missions that resulted in loss of civilian life or damage to civil buildings and installations.

It asserted that the single greatest loss of civilian life occurred Jan. 21 during a raid on "residential neighborhoods" in Najaf and Kufa, south of Baghdad, when 144 civilians were killed.

AP Laserphoto

This photo of damage in downtown Baghdad was distributed by the Iraqi news agency INA to local newspapers in Jordan Monday. INA did not say when this photo was taken.

The letter said that 22 civilians were killed on Jan. 21 in attacks in the Dur district north of Baghdad, which, it said, also damaged the Al-Abbasi mosque, one of the country's oldest Islamic shrines; and that Baghdad's oldest Christian shrine, the Church of St. Thomas in the northern city of Mosul, was "bombed and damaged" on Jan. 19.

It also reports "large-scale damage" to the Iraqi Museum in Baghdad, which contains some of the finest surviving examples of ancient Mesopotamian artifacts.

In his letter, Aziz says the "so-called new international order of which the arrogant former colonialists and new imperialists are speaking" is proving to be "a dark age of threats and intimidation" for millions of people in the Third World.

He places much of the responsibility for the United Nations-sanctioned attacks against Iraq on recent political changes in Moscow which he says have removed "the balancing role formerly played by the Soviet Union" in world affairs, opening the way for "arrogant former colonialists and new imperialists once again to impose hegemony and intimidation."

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS continued its search for a four-member news team that disappeared Jan. 21 while near occupied Kuwait, and is seeking more details on a "sketchy" report that the men were seen with Iraqi troops.

It isn't known if the four are the CBS team, or even "if the story is true," CBS spokesman Tom Goodman said.

The crew was led by Bob Simon, 49, a veteran Middle East correspondent. The journalists disappeared in northern Saudi Arabia near a point where the borders of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Iraq come together, CBS said. A Saudi patrol found their empty car.

In a broadcast Monday, CBS News quoted a high-ranking Saudi official as saying an Iraqi deserter told Saudi interrogators he saw four Westerners with an elite group of Iraqi troops.

CBS officials so far "have no confirmation of that report," he said. "We're trying to find out more, and trying to go up to the region to interview the deserter" and Saudi officials, soldiers and residents.

CBS News Vice President Don DeCesare is in Saudi Arabia, trying to make the trip, Goodman said, but Saudi officials have declared the area "off-limits" without explanation.

Simon was with producer Peter Bluff, cameraman Roberto Alvarez and soundman Juan Caldera, traveling without a military escort.

Church offers conscientious objectors sanctuary

NEW YORK (HNS) — The progressive Riverside Church here began offering sanctuary Monday to military personnel applying for conscientious objector status — a move its backers say is spreading in churches across the nation.

Members of the nondenominational church voted Sunday to provide shelter to CO applicants in the reserves and on active duty who are afraid they'll be shipped to the Persian Gulf before their requests are acted upon.

Riverside became the first church in New York and the fourth in the country to offer such service. Earlier this month, two California churches, First Presbytarian in Palo Alto and University Lutheran in Berkeley, along with the University Baptist Church in Seattle, took similar action.

"This movement is on the way," said Rev. Donovan Cook at the Seattle church, which is now sheltering several men and women aged 19 to 41. "I'm loaded now with calls for help. The ground war hasn't really hit yet. That's what's really going to push this."

Cook said he has sent information to eight churches elsewhere in the country outlining the sanctuary plan. The churches are in Pennsylvania as well as Chicago, Los Angeles and Austin, Texas.

The military requires that reserve or active duty people applying for conscientious objector status remain with their unit until the request is answered, which can take months. Meanwhile, they must accompany their unit it if it ships out to the Persian Gulf.

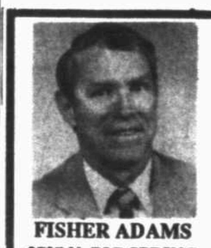

"By coming here, (CO applicants) are de facto deserting," acknowledged Eric Kolbell, an associate minister. "But it's either taking on that battle or going over to Saudi Arabia."

OPERATION DESERT STORM

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Experts from around the world raced to the Saudi Arabian coast Monday to help the kingdom defend its vital desalination plants against an oil slick.

A Norwegian company that helped fight the Exxon Valdez spill in Alaska was sending a pollution-battling ship capable of swallowing a half-mile of oil daily. It was to reach a critical desalination plant by today.

British Petroleum Co. was flying in more than 70 tons of oil booms and suction skimmers. A team of experts from the U.S. Coast Guard and Environmental Protection Agency arrived in Riyadh and immediately met with Saudi officials.

The slick was several days away from Jubail, site of the world's largest water desalination plant and one of many such facilities in the path of the spill.

The oil from the Sea Island Terminal at Kuwait's Mina al-Ahmadi may have been halted by the allied precision bombing Saturday of the mechanism that allowed the oil to be pumped into the Persian Gulf, U.S. military officials said.

But environmentalists say so much crude already has poured into the waterway that an ecological catastrophe was certain.

For the arid desert region, the top priority was protecting the desalination plants that treat water for two-thirds of the region's estimated 18 million people.

U.S.-led allied forces in the war with Iraq also depend in part on the plants, which make sea water drinkable.

Saudi Oil Minister Hisham Nazer told King Fahd and his Cabinet that the slick contained roughly 11 million barrels of oil, or 460 million gallons, making it by far the biggest spill ever.

The previous record was 4.2 million barrels, or 176 million gallons, in a 1979 slick in the Gulf of Mexico. By contrast, the Exxon Valdez spill, the worst ever in the United States, was just under 11 million gallons.

U.S. officials said the Kuwaiti spill was heading south at 15 miles per day and would reach the Saudi coastal city of Ras al-Misha'ab by today. That is about 100 miles north of Jubail.

Brig. Gen. Pat Stevens IV, deputy director for logistics of the U.S. Central Command in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, said the extent of the slick was not clear.

"It appears we have stopped the flow of oil, but we continue to seek positive confirmation of that fact," he told reporters.

Nazer also said it also was unclear if the flow had been stopped by the U.S. bombing.

Lt. Col. Ahmed Roboyan, a Saudi military spokesman, said a fire at the source of the slick had begun to diminish, an indication that the oil flow was abating.

Walter McKenzie, principal surveyor for London's Salvage Association in the Persian Gulf, said the U.S. operation "almost decidedly was the best thing and to me the only way" to stop the gushing oil.

President calls war noble, moral cause

By Greg McDonald
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush, quoting Scripture and philosophy to justify the war against Iraq, described the Persian Gulf conflict Monday as a noble and moral cause.

Bush, addressing a group of religious broadcasters, contended the war would end with the "good" intentions of the allies triumphing over the "evil" aggression of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein. He said his aim was not to destroy Iraq but only to drive Saddam's forces out of Kuwait.

"I am convinced that we are doing the right thing," Bush said, suggesting that the war effort is one way that U.S. policy is serving God.

After quoting a clergyman on serving God and seeking God's guidance, Bush said: "Abroad, as in America, our task is to serve and seek wisely through the policies we pursue. Nowhere is this more true than in the Persian Gulf."

Bush's speech to the annual convention of National Religious Broadcasters was the second time in five days that he had delivered an impassioned public defense of the war effort.

Acknowledging that innocent civilians will be killed, Bush called such deaths the "greatest tragedy" of war. But he said the conflict is being pursued "for the greater good" and will be carried out "reasonably, humanely," with every effort made to minimize casualties.

He said it would have been immoral for the United States and its allies not "to stop the rape, the pillage and plunder of Kuwait."

"He made this just war an inevitable war," Bush said of Saddam, as he recounted stories of atrocities committed against the Kuwaiti people since Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion.

Bush quoted from the Bible and drew on the writings of Christian theologians and Greek and Roman philosophers to justify the war effort.

"Saddam tried to cast this conflict as a religious war, but it has nothing to do with religion," Bush said. "It has, on the other hand, everything to do with what religion embodies: good vs. evil, right vs. wrong, human dignity and freedom vs. tyranny and oppression.

"The war in the gulf is not a Christian war or Moslem war; it is a just war and it is a war with which good will prevail," he said to thunderous applause.

The president's speech, which was interrupted twice with standing ovations, followed a weekend march in which an estimated 75,000 people took to the streets of Washington to protest the war.

Bush acknowledged that there are "some" across the country who "disagree with the course I have taken," as he sought to reassure Americans that the gulf war would not turn into another Vietnam.

"We seek nothing for ourselves" in the region, he said, adding that "U.S. forces will leave as soon as their mission is over."

He also tried to deflect the Soviet Union's criticism that a prolonged war could leave Iraq so destabilized that it would be incapable of defending itself from regional aggressors.

"We do not seek the destruction of Iraq. We have respect for the people of Iraq, for the importance of Iraq in the region," Bush stressed. "We do not want a country so destabilized that Iraq itself could be a target for aggression."

Logistics chief defends supply work in gulf

By Charles J. Lewis
Hearst News Service

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — As field commanders grumbled about slow delivery of weapons and supplies, the top U.S. logistical officer in Saudi Arabia said Monday the system was doing a "magnificent" job of supplying U.S. forces.

Army Brig. Gen. Pat Stevens IV, in charge of logistics for the central command, told reporters that the "logistics aspects of this campaign have been executed magnificently."

Stevens said that "one of the most difficult situations that we've had — speaking for the U.S. forces — we're in a theater 7,000 miles from the United States — we not only have to move stuff to the theater but we have to move things within the theater."

As Stevens spoke, truck convoys streamed from a port in Eastern Saudi Arabia carrying tanks and armored cars north to near the Saudi border with Kuwait. The trucks had unloaded a ship that recently had brought the cargo from European bases.

Stevens said the problems of supply will continue even after a ground campaign starts, He declined to say whether the timetable for the ground war has been impeded by supply problems.

However, officers in the newly arrived units — mainly Germany-based armored divisions — are complaining that they're not yet ready to take the offensive because their equipment hasn't arrived.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Sunday that U.S. soldiers will be prepared "before the end of February" to launch a ground offensive against Iraq.

President Bush signaled a major change in U.S. strategy last year when he announced plans for a huge military buildup in Saudi Arabia by transferring the Army's VII Corps from Europe to Saudi Arabia. That move gives U.S. forces the muscle to take the offensive against Iraq rather than merely defending Saudi Arabia against attack.

It's those VII Corps units that are still trickling in.

Col. Charles Burke, 45, of Denver, Colo., the top aviation officer of the 3rd Armored Division, said the division's first tank-killing Apache helicopters had arrived near the front only a few days ago. Other helicopters were on a cargo ship forced by mechanical problems to make an unscheduled stop in Malta, the officer said.

Burke said his pilots also want more time to practice night flying and train with A-10 anti-tank planes.

"I think the important thing is to give the air campaign plenty of time to work," Burke said. "I want to go to war with all my stuff. There's no reason for us to rush" into a full-fledged ground struggle "by sending troops in prematurely."

Officers emphasized that senior U.S. commanders will wait weeks if necessary to get troops and equipment fully prepared to take the offensive.

Officers of the Germany-based 1st Armored Division also complained last week that their equipment, including the Bradley armored personnel carriers, was still arriving.

Germany, Japan must pay pledges

There is growing public resentment in the United States at the reluctance of Japan and Germany to pay a greater financial share of the rising cost of the war against Iraq. That war is being waged to a great extent to keep those two nations, and others, from being held "hostage" by Iraq because of their reliance on oil from the Middle East.

Japan is now pledging $9 billion to the allies fighting in the Persian gulf. That new offer follows an earlier promise of $4 billion in aid. President Bush said during a recent press conference that of the $4 billion Japan had pledged, it has only paid $600 million.

The Germans have pledged $2.2 billion to the coalition and promise perhaps as much as $6.5 billion more. Nevertheless, congressional advisers are now indicating that the war may cost Americans as much as $86 billion.

The leaders of Japan and Germany claim their people oppose even much of the aid they are promising. They cite their constitutions as prohibiting them from sending troops to the gulf. That is a valid restriction for their past aggression, but it shouldn't prevent them from paying their share of this war carried out in their interest.

Both are really saying this: Let the Americans pay for most of the war; let them fight and die for us, and let the Bush administration take the political risks at home and abroad.

That won't fly. The United States would not be held hostage by Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein even if all oil imports were stopped. Japan and Germany could be since they acquire nearly all their oil from Mideast countries. That is why the allies — and particularly Japan and Germany — must bear more of the cost of fighting the war.

The Bush administration has soft-pedaled these growing differences because it obviously has enough to face in the war. But many members of Congress and other Americans are right to challenge the outrageous conduct of the foreign leaders and many in the public in both countries.

Japan has made good on only half of its original financial pledge, and it put strings on both halves. Of the total, half was for nonfighting purposes. The other half was economic aid to Jordan, Egypt and Turkey — to open wider their economic doors to Japan in the form of project loans that later would evolve into work contracts for Japanese firms. The Japanese also offered fax machines, air conditioners and Walkmans. Presumably, the Japanese will also drag their feet on any added aid and place similar conditions on it.

The Japanese promised 100 medical volunteers for the gulf. Only 25 actually arrived and all have already been pulled out.

Not only is Japan's annual trade surplus with America as much as $50 billion a year, but Japan is now the largest direct foreign investor here. It has money to buy America, but the Japanese seem to believe that Americans can pay most of the cost for defending Japanese investments in the gulf. Meantime, Japan can afford to spend $30 billion a year on its own self-defense forces.

The German government is now investigating more than 100 firms for allegedly breaking the United Nations embargo and selling military technology to Iraq. It is well known that the Germans sold nuclear, biological and chemical technology to Iraq. They have done the same in Libya and elsewhere. A German company even built Saddam Hussein's impregnable underground bunker from which he now directs the war against this country and its allies.

Japanese and Germans are complaining they will have to pay higher taxes in order to contribute more to the coalition cause in the Mideast. This is really repugnant ingratitude in view of the enormous economic and military aid that the American people have given both nations over the past 45 years.

Both countries voted at the United Nations in effect to send America and others to war to protect the oil that keeps their economies humming. They now hedge on their responsibilities.

Gorbachev real glasnost killer

Why does the new Mikhail Gorbachev aim to undo one of the old Mikhail Gorbachev's greatest achievements? Glasnost, or openness, has become part of the universal language of human rights, the clearest signal to the world that a new era had begun in the Soviet Union.

Now glasnost has become inconvenient for the Soviet president. Last week, following press reports of his bloody crackdown in the Baltics, he demanded the Soviet parliament suspend the law guaranteeing the free dissemination f information.

He eventually backed off his proposal and accepted a less draconian measure forming a commission that would monitor the Soviet press to ensure its "objectivity." ...

But make no mistake: The real executioner of glasnost is the man who invented it.

Appropriations chief fumbles equity rule

The chairman of the Texas House Appropriations Committee, James Rudd, D-Brownfield, must have forgotten about the lawsuit over public school financing that the state keeps losing.

Last week, he unveiled the committee's budget proposal, which recommended cutting the amount promised in the 1990 education reform law by almost $1 billion over the next two years.

Legislators considering the Appropriations Committee recommendation had better ask themselves how and whether the state will satisfy Texas Supreme Court demands for an equitable school funding plan with a plan like that.

Rudd called the proposal a starting point, but where education is concerned, it seems the Legislature keeps starting at the wrong place and never reaches the court decreed destination: EQUITY.

U.S. plans on quick gulf withdrawal

WASHINGTON — The good news for the American troops who survive the Persian Gulf war is that President Bush is planning a surprisingly quick and massive withdrawal immediately after the war ends. There will be no loitering in the sand for U.S. forces. Bush has another surprise up his sleeve too — a peace conference to settle Arab-Israeli differences. But there will be no peace for Palestinians.

Anderson

The president has secretly given his word to Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Saudi Arabian King Fahd that the majority of troops will be gone, possibly in less than a month after a victory. The promise is crucial to Arab leaders, who don't want the United States to become a de facto colonial power in the Persian Gulf.

The swift and massive pullout is only one intriguing element of the post-war plan now being drafted by the National Security Council, State and Defense departments. Bush must have a workable diplomatic plan in place, or the post-war chaos could obliterate the high price America will pay in loss of human life.

The royal Kuwaiti Sabah family will be restored to power, but in secret discussions between the United States, Saudi Arabia and Kuwaiti exiles, a consensus has been reached that Kuwait must allow democratic reforms. That means reconvening parliament and allowing opposition parties to flourish. Bush does not want historians to recall this as the war that was fought "to make the world safe for monarchies."

The president's current plan is to also institute a regional security arrangement including the promise that U.S. troops will return again if necessary to defend a country in the region.

Kuwait will be protected by a combined force of Egyptian, Saudi and Kuwaiti troops trained by the United States and equipped with American state-of-the-art weapons like the Patriot missiles.

Both the NSC and the State Department experts believe that this war will mean the end of "Pan Arabism" — the uniting of all Arabs as a single political, military and economic empire. Time and again the different Arab leaders have shown that their chief interest is to wield power over their own countries — not to be one voice in a council of Arab leaders. Saddam Hussein effectively killed Pan Arabism when he swallowed up another Arab country, some experts believe.

Another surprise Bush will roll out after the war is a call for a multi-national peace conference to settle Arab-Israeli issues — something he was unwilling to do while Iraqi troops occupied Kuwait. It is the only way of insuring peace in the region, which is one of Bush's stated aims for fighting this war in the first place.

Sadly, the Palestinian issue will be the last to be resolved, under current White House planning. None of the four big Arab powers who will participate in the peace conference — Syria, Jordan, Lebanon or Egypt — cares enough about the Palestinians to put that issue in front of their own problems. And the Saudis and Egyptians, who for years have bankrolled the Palestinian cause, feel betrayed by the Palestinian support of Iraq. Saudi Arabia and Egypt won't waste any of their chits for Palestinian leaders now.

So Bush administration experts and intelligence sources are now predicting that it will be years before a solution is reached for the Palestinian problem. The only thing the Palestinians may get is a joint-stewardship arrangement over the occupied territories by Jordan and Israel. A Palestinian state is unlikely, according to some experts, for at least a decade.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Don't let the decline in popularity of cigarettes in America fool you. The tobacco companies are making a killing overseas. The U.S. tobacco industry made $4 billion on foreign sales last year and is planning a vigorous campaign to expand overseas markets. The campaign has the eager support of the Commerce and Agriculture departments. What Uncle Sam condemns with one hand, he promotes with the other.

CHARLEY REESE

How easily pride can turn into arrogance

God willing by the time you read this the U.S. will have accomplished all of its military objectives with the lowest possible cost in human lives.

Though I was opposed to using war in this instance, once the shooting starts, that question becomes moot. Let us now concentrate on getting Americans home safe.

Reese

Our military forces have always done their job. They did that in Korea and they did it in Vietnam. Where we, as a nation, are often inept is in the international political wars. This is nothing new. Will Rogers, the great American humorist who died in the 1930s, used to joke that America had never lost a war nor won a peace conference.

This is important to understand because war, as the old German philosopher von Clausewitz remarked, is the pursuit of political objectives by other means. It is always political conflict that produces war, but it is rare that military victory itself solves the political problem. Thus, often the sacrifice and achievements of the men on the battlefield are lost by the diplomats and political leaders at the conference table.

In a very real sense, for example, the war in the Persian Gulf in 1991 is a direct result of the failure of the politicians and diplomats following World War I. It was a result of that war that Great Britain and France created the modern Middle East, and in doing so left us with the wars and conflicts that remain alive today.

As we are proud and grateful for the courage and skill of military men, and appreciative of their sacrifice, we should be diligent in the pursuit of a Middle East policy that will eliminate future conflicts, not creating more of them. That will be extremely difficult. But as our military men give us their best, so, too, should our political leaders and diplomats.

The key to a peaceful world is not difficult to identify. It is justice. Physical problems like hunger, natural disasters, too much population versus resources, can be dealt with without war.

Injustice, however, burns like a fuse in the hearts of men and always produces conflict. The great French observer, Alexis de Tocqueville, said that justice is the end of civil society and it will always be pursued.

The greatest mistake we could make — one which could in the long run waste the achievement and sacrifice of our military forces — is to assume that Saddam Hussein was just a bad guy who caused the problem and that once rid of him, the problem is solved. It was the problem that created him, not the other way around.

That problem is that throughout the Arab world people feel they have been exploited, abused, and betrayed by the great powers and denied an opportunity to develop, using their own resources and their own lands for their own benefit.

Our military action only adds to this perception. The fact we joined with British and French — the old colonial powers — adds to this perception. The fact we are allied with Israel adds to this perception. The fact that the only Arab countries we ever showed an interest in was the Gulf oil sheikdoms which were created by and are tied to the West adds to this perception.

If, after this is over, we continue the same policy it will only be a matter of time before there is another war and another war and another war. Wars can kill particular people and destroy particular governments but they cannot destroy a whole people's will toward finding justice.

Just as war is the pursuit of political objectives by other means so, too, can people, seared by injustice, pursue war by other means than tanks and missiles. We should be careful that our pride not turn to arrogance, which is a form of blindness and therefore can be dangerous and even fatal.

Let us ask God to safeguard our military forces and remember that peace is more than the temporary silence of the guns.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Blessed be the chopped-barbecuemakers

I ate my first chopped barbecue pork'pig sandwich at Sprayberry's in Newnan, Ga., when I was 7 years old. It was a Saturday. On Saturdays my mother would drive us from our home in Moreland six miles to the county seat in Newnan.

Grizzard

Her main purpose was to buy groceries for the following week. That finished, she would drive us, in the '48 Chev, to Sprayberry's.

We always ordered from the curb. That's because my mother enjoyed a beer with her barbecue.

But a rural first-grade school teacher couldn't be seen even in the vicinity of a beer, so she would order it in a brown paper bag.

When it came she would take it off the curb tray and put in on the floorboard of the car. When she took a sip, she would bend down out of sight.

So that makes 37 years I've been eating Sprayberry's barbecue. I've had some marvelous barbecue in other places to be sure, but Sprayberry's will always have my heart and my loyalty.

I still make the 45-minute drive from Atlanta at least twice a month to ease my cravings. The barbecue has never lost its quality. The Brunswick stew is world class and they serve it with white loaf bread, as God intended.

The onion rings. The icebox lemon pie. Help me, Jesus.

All this to tell of the recent passing of Mr. Houston Sprayberry, the founder. He was 87. He had been in poor health for a time.

He opened for business in 1926.

"He was," somebody said at his funeral, "what he did."

Until his health failed, and one of his sons took over the business, Mr. Sprayberry was at his command post six days a week.

He was a man of few words.

A man was paying his bill one day with Mr. Sprayberry at the cash register.

The man said, "Mr. Sprayberry my wife and I have driven 300 miles out of the way to eat your barbecue. I think it's the best in the world. I must have sent you one thousand customers over the years."

Mr. Sprayberry replied, "Thank you, that'll be eleven, fohty-five."

David Boyd, the brilliant political cartoonist, lives in Newnan. He told me of being in Adelaide, Australia, in 1969.

"I'm in a bar and somebody says, 'Where ya' from, Yank?'

"I said, 'I'm not a Yank, I'm from Newnan, Ga.'

"The guy said, 'Have you ever eaten at Sprayberry's, mate?'

"Turns out his father was the liaison officer in Georgia during World War II.

"That's how Sprayberry's became so famous. During the war Newnan was on the main route from Fort Jackson to Fort Benning. Half the American Army ate there, and the old soldiers kept coming back year after year."

David Boyd said Mr. Sprayberry's funeral was the largest he'd ever seen in Newnan.

I think of Mama now and of her one surreptitious beer a week. The memories of her are precious and Sprayberry's certainly has its place in them.

My sympathy to the Sprayberry family.

"He was what he did."

So fitting an epitaph.

NASA remembers Challenger 7

NATION

Workers stopped whatever they were doing and bent their heads in offices, cafeteria lines and on sidewalks. Security guards slowly lowered flags to half-staff.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space center workers who will never forget where they were five years ago fell silent for 73 seconds Monday to honor the seven astronauts who died in the explosion of space shuttle Challenger.

All activity at NASA's Kennedy Space Center halted at 11:38 a.m., the time of Challenger's final liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986. It exploded 73 seconds later over the Atlantic Ocean.

The dead included Christa McAuliffe, the Concord, N.H., schoolteacher who had planned live lessons from orbit for the nation's students. She was the first ordinary American to venture into space.

At Concord High School, where McAuliffe taught, students and faculty also paused for a moment of silence. Five years ago, cheering students had jammed the school's auditorium watching the launch on television before their joy turned to horror.

At Firestone High School in Akron, Ohio, where astronaut Judith Resnik graduated in 1966, attentive students listened to a commemorative account of her life. "You could hear a pin drop," said Principal William Holk.

At the cape, Kennedy Space Center's director, Forrest McCartney, in a message televised throughout the launch site, asked employees as he has each anniversary to "remember and honor the crew of Challenger and at the same time recommit ourselves to excellence in everything we do."

Thirteen missions have been accomplished safely since shuttle flights resumed in September 1988 and "these have been five years of accomplishment of which we can all be proud," McCartney said.

Workers stopped whatever they were doing and bent their heads in offices, cafeteria lines and on sidewalks. Security guards slowly lowered flags to half-staff.

No official observances were held at Johnson Space Center in Houston or at NASA headquarters in Washington. But NASA Administrator Richard Truly, in a written message to employees, said the seven would never be forgotten.

"It has been through your tireless efforts in the interim that we have profited from the important lessons we learned," Truly said.

The other four Challenger crew members were Michael Smith, Ellison Onizuka, Ronald McNair and Gregory Jarvis.

One by one, children placed 14 tiny flags in a wreath on the memorial, each representing astronauts killed in the line of duty. Three Apolio 1 crew died in a spacecraft fire on Jan. 27, 1967, and four astronauts have been killed in jet training flights.

"They are models in courage and commitment for the children of America," said Carmella LaSpada, founder of No Greater Love, a humanitarian group that organized the observance.

At precisely 11:38 a.m., a bugler blew taps.

There was no ceremony at the cemetery in Concord, N.H., where McAuliffe is buried. But a single apple, with a yellow and white ribbon attached, adorned her snow-covered gravestone Monday morning.

"That's dwelling on the sorrowful end of it," said Charles Foley, principal of McAuliffe's high school. "Christa is now a positive memory."

On Friday, the school will rename its auditorium in her name. No other events are scheduled.

Suspect in slayings gives up

ESPANOLA, N.M. (AP) — Charges of first-degree murder and attempted murder were filed Monday against a 29-year-old man suspected in the fatal shootings of two lawmen and possibly five other people, including his girlfriend.

The officers were killed Saturday after they arrived at the man's home to serve a restraining order on him at his girlfriend's request, police said. The man, Ricky Abeyta, surrendered to New Mexico State Police in Albuquerque Sunday night.

Abeyta, shackled around his waist and ankles, was arraigned Monday in Magistrate Court. His sisters, Dora Abeyta, 35, and Sandra Abeyta, 19, were arraigned on charges of attempted murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weaponin the same case.

Innocent pleas were entered for all three. Abeyta was ordered held without bail and bond for each of his sisters was set at $50,000.

Abeyta was charged with three counts of murder for the deaths of Rio Arriba County Deputy Jerry Martinez, 30, state police Officer Glen Huber, 35, and his own girlfriend, Ignacita Vasquez, 36.

Black Americans prefer 'black' appellation, survey finds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite increasing use of the term African-American, most black Americans still prefer to be called black, according to a newly released survey.

The Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies, a black-oriented study group, said it conducted the survey among a sample of 759 black people.

It found 72 percent said they preferred black, 15 percent African-American, 3 percent Afro-American and 2 percent Negro, with the rest giving no opinion or other responses.

The change from black to African-American was first proposed in December, 1988, at a meeting in Chicago to lay the groundwork for the African American Summit that was held in New Orleans in April 1989. Ramona H. Edelin, president of the National Urban Coalition, suggested it would give black people more of a sense of their history.

Civil rights leader Jesse Jackson endorsed the idea at the summit, and it has since been adopted by such other prominent blacks as New York Mayor David Dinkins, Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson, Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., and by some black organizations.

The joint center has not embraced the change.

"Individuals here use the term, but as an institution we have not adopted it," said Milton Morris, vice president for research. "Frankly, we think that among other practical considerations it is a bit more cumbersome than is convenient for much of our communication."

Morris said Jackson's endorsement appeared to have been the chief impetus for the movement to change to African-American.

"There is a strong inclination among what you might call the elite in the black community to fall in line with such pronouncements, so they have, and the white community has been very responsive," Morris said. "Once they assumed that this was what people wanted to be called, they fell in line to do that."

Morris said the group undertook its survey because "at no time have we had any sense of what the public preference was, what the mood was."

There have been, however, some previous surveys. In polls in 1989 by Time magazine and the Chicago Tribune, 26 percent of black respondents said they preferred African-American. Sixty-one percent in the Time poll said they preferred black. In the Tribune poll, 40 percent favored black and 31 percent said either term was fine.

The joint center poll showed that the word black was preferred over African-American by 72 percent to 28 percent in the East when only those two terms were considered.

Black was favored 76 percent to 24 percent in the Midwest, 85 percent to 15 percent in the South and 78 percent to 22 percent in the West.

The survey found more support for African-American among black men than among black women, 28 percent to 15 percent.

Blacks with some college education were more likely to favor the new term than those who had not gone beyond high school. The figures were 20 percent to 15 percent.

NATION IN BRIEF

Bush to call for banking reform

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Although the Persian Gulf war will dominate his State of the Union Message on Tuesday, President Bush will also address domestic issues and will offer sweeping proposals to revamp the nation's banking laws, administration officials said Monday.

While Bush is not likely to propose any major changes in social welfare programs, he is almost certain to recommend a comprehensive overhaul of the nation's banking laws. His proposals would make it easier for banks to operate across state lines and would break down barriers that now separate commercial banks, investment banks and stock brokerage firms.

The Bush proposals would permit investment banks and industrial corporations to own commercial banks, administration officials said. In addition, under the proposals, commercial banks would be allowed to underwrite and deal in corporate securities.

Bush is expected to devote more than half of the speech to reporting on the progress of the war and to affirming his view that it is "a just war" with a noble aim.

Burt leaving in March

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard R. Burt, the chief U.S. strategic weapons negotiator and a former ambassador to West Germany, will step down in March to become a private consultant, the State Department announced Monday.

However, Burt will return to Geneva soon to keep working on an unfinished treaty to cut U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear missiles, bombers and submarines by about 30 percent overall.

Officials who spoke on condition of anonymity said it was a personal decision after 10 years' service in government. Burt was not resigning out of frustration that the treaty is still unfinished or because of any friction with his colleagues, the officials told The Associated Press.

Oil-reserve demand high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department's offering of crude oil from the nation's strategic stockpile was oversubscribed, with bids for much more oil than was put on the market, the government said Monday night.

Twenty-six companies submitted bids totalling nearly 44.81 million barrels of oil, the Energy Department said.

President Bush on Jan. 16 ordered 33.75 million barrels of oil put on the market as part of a release of inventories coordinated with allies.

Bids ranged from a low of $18.7793 per barrel for some sour crude to $28.5194 per barrel for some sweet crude.

The department did not say when it would decide whose bids would be accepted.

Fire closes landmark

NEW YORK (AP) — Ratner's restaurant, a Lower East Side landmark for kosher cuisine since 1905, was forced to close Monday after sustaining "extensive" damage from a fire that started in its trash compactor, fire officials said.

The restaurant's staff and about a dozen breakfast customers escaped without injury after the blaze erupted around 7:40 a.m., said Fire Department spokesman Joseph McGee.

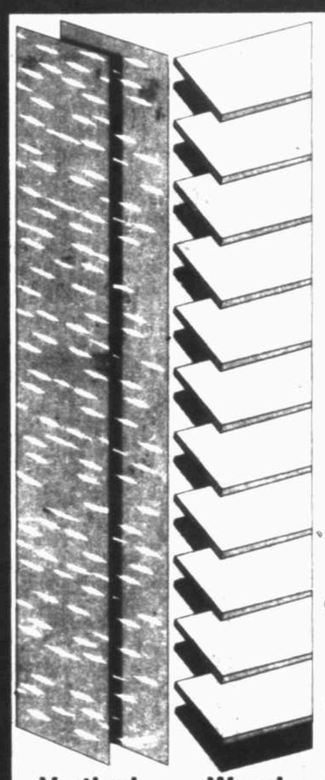

The restaurant built its reputation on traditional Yiddish cuisine and exasperating waiters. Many politicians have made the semi-obligatory campaign stop at Ratner's to be photographed eating a potato blintz.

Shannon's widow sues

LOS ANGELES — The widow of the late rock singer Del Shannon has filed a lawsuit against the makers of Prozac claiming that use of the anti-depressant led her husband to commit suicide, authorities said.

The civil suit, filed in Los Angeles by LeAnne Westover against Eli Lilly and Co. of Indianapolis, Ind., claims Lilly marketeted the generic anti-depressant, flouxetine, sold under the brand name Prozac without sufficient testing to determine potential ill effects, especially in users with a history of alcohol or drug abuse.

Commissioners consider redistricting

■ Midland County may find itself reassigned to districts other than Congressional District 21 and Senatorial District 25.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

With local, state and national redistricting almost a certainty after the release of U.S. Census Bureau figures last week, Midland County Commissioners considered their strategy during Monday's meeting.

They also drafted resolutions to U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith and state Sen. Bill Sims underlining the county's interest in staying in their respective districts.

With 16.9 million Texans in 1990, up from 14.2 million counted in the 1980 census, the state stands to gain three new seats in Congress, which could change congressional district boundaries.

County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer said there is a possibility that when congressional districts are redrawn, Midland County may find itself reassigned to districts other than Congressional District 21 and Senatorial District 25.

"It's important for Midland to stay in districts that don't include Lubbock," Seltzer said. "The cities of Midland and Lubbock are competing on a number of things, including Midland International Airport and the Lubbock airport, which are competing for a hub airport.

"Being in the same district could put representatives at odds over which city to back on the deal."

Seltzer said the county is happy with the work Smith and Sims have done on its behalf.

The city, school district, hospital district and Midland College district have discussed working together to hire a demographic consultant for breaking down census information.

According to census numbers, the county's population grew dramatically in the last decade, going from 82,636 to 106,661, a 29 percent increase.

The commissioners approved a suggestion by Seltzer that the county participate in the entities' joint redistricting effort.

The study will determine if and where minority populations shifted during the 1980s, based on more detailed census information due in May.

Precinct 1 Commissioner Durward Wright, a veteran of "five or six" redistricting projects since 1968, said the county could make its redistricting adjustments without hiring a demographer.

The county could solve its problems by simply equalizing populations between the precinct boxes, he said.

Newer single-member district entities may have to work harder to redistrict themselves, Wright said. Those entities' elections are based on county boxes.

"We set the boxes and their districts cut across them, using our boundary lines," he said.

Area officials study opinion on drug testing

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

A voluntary drug-testing program for Midland police may replace a proposal to randomly test officers, City Attorney David Reagan said Monday.

After reviewing a recent Texas attorney general's opinion that random drug testing violates the Texas Constitution, Reagan said the city may prefer a voluntary system.

Ex-Attorney General Jim Mattox, in an opinion signed Dec. 27 and released Jan. 3, stated that the testing was unconstitutional unless a "compelling governmental objective" is shown.

His opinion was requested by Robertson County Attorney Jimmie McCullough, who questioned a sheriff department's authority to require random drug testing through urine samples.

Reagan said a voluntary system may be introduced here if city officials determine that it would be about as effective as random testing.

However, he would not rule out the possibility that the city would implement random testing anyway, despite the attorney general's opinion.

"We disagree with the attorney general's opinion, but it is persuasive authority that can be introduced in a courtroom," he said. "We are still studying it. We're going to have to weigh it very carefully."

Midland city councilmen last month instructed city attorneys to draft a policy outlining random drug-test procedures for police officers.

Reagan said it appears that Mattox's opinion conflicts with rulings in a number of federal cases.

In the 1989 Guinev vs. Roache case, the 1st Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Boston Police Department's random drug-testing policy did not violate the U.S. Constitution.

There have not been similar cases in Texas, Reagan said.

Midland Police Department Chief Richard Czech said his officers strongly favor the proposed random testing policy.

In fact, police officials probably would overwhelmingly submit to voluntary testing, Czech said.

"I think it's 100 percent wanting to do it . . . but I'm going to have to check with all my people," he said.

Czech said it would be a week or two before police officials and city administrators decide whether to implement random or voluntary testing.

'We disagree with the attorney general's opinion, but it is persuasive authority.'

— David Reagan, City attorney

Reagan said that under the proposed policy, which was expected to be implemented within two months, officers would be randomly selected by computer for testing. Two or three officers would be tested weekly, he said.

The city now tests employees before they are hired and if they are suspected of using drugs.

Two different tests are used in some cases. If a first test is positive, a more sophisticated, costlier test is used, Reagan said.

City officials said it costs between $4,000 and $5,000 annually to test employees and prospective employees, with almost all of that pre-employment screening.

It would cost an estimated $7,800 annually to randomly test police officers under the proposed policy, officials said.

If that policy was challenged in court, the plaintiffs would be city employees rather than state officials, Reagan said. The employees likely would have to prove the policy violated rights guaranteed under the Texas Constitution, he said.

The Midland County Sheriff's Office randomly tests its personnel for drugs, and County Attorney Mark Dettman expects no changes in light of Mattox's opinion.

"I think his reasoning is unsound," Dettman said of Mattox.

Sheriff's office personnel have been subjected to random drug testing for about two years. They also undergo pre-employment drug screening.

Charles Pendleton, a self-employed drug-testing consultant in Midland, said random testing is becoming more common in the public as well as private sectors.

"The idea is to create a safer working environment for everybody," Pendleton said. "Everybody has an interest in safety and well-being."

A number of large businesses, especially oil companies, in the Permian Basin randomly test their personnel, he said.

"Random testing far and away is the most employee-sensitive way to test," he said. "It also is the most effective way to test in my opinion. Nothing else is a more definitive way to get the job done."

Terri Kent says hard work and discipline, not size and strength, are the keys to mastering the martial arts.

Learning tae kwon do easy, instructor says

By David Morris
Staff Writer

It's not size, strength, or athletic ability that counts in martial arts — it's hard work and discipline.

That's what Terri Kent — no Amazon herself at 5 feet 2 inches tall — tells the diminutive charges who populate her classes at The Midlander health club.

"Martial arts aren't really about fighting," said Ms. Kent, who teaches the classes alongside her husband, Bill Kent. "It's about discipline and mastery of a skill based on the individual's abilities.

"We feel it's the type of activity that anyone can learn and be successful as long as they make the effort to do so."

Ms. Kent, who concentrates her teaching efforts on the younger members of her classes, said children stand to benefit as much or more from studying martial arts as adults.

"Tae Kwon Do is an excellent activity for children," she said. "It takes body control and balance, hand-eye coordination, strength training and flexibility, and self discipline . . . It also builds self-confidence."

Besides, she said, children are natural martial artists.

"Little kids — they like to learn how to punch and kick. And scream."

Ms. Kent has made a point of introducing tae kwon do to physically challenged youngsters, evidence of her belief that anyone who is ambulatory can learn the skills.

"I teach at the Cerebral Palsy Center in the summertime," she said. "I've integrated a number of those kids into the program (at The Midlander) and they've done really well."

There's no special treatment for them once they're in class, either.

"They're going to have to get in there and work just like everybody else. And when they have success, it's their success."

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin Drug Task Force faces yet another funding problem, County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin told Midland County Commissioners at their meeting Monday.

Jarnagin said he was giving the officials advance warning that when the current Criminal Justice Division grant expires in May, the county may have to come up with $220,000 to continue funding the task force.

The situation results from the state canceling its funding of 25 percent of the grant — $220,533 — this year. Federal funds cover 75 percent of the grant — $661,601. The state gave no reason for no longer funding the program, but Jarnagin speculated that it had eliminated many task force grants in a belt-tightening measure.

In September 1990, the task force had its federal funds threatened by a crime bill that would have redistributed rural task force money to cities if Congress had passed it.

As the state scaled back its funding during the past three years, Midland County and 16 other counties and cities within the Permian Basin increased their contributions proportionally.

The county has paid its share of the grant out of drug forfeiture money, but Jarnagin said there may not be enough in the account to foot next year's bill.

"So far this year, we have not received as much funding from the other agencies (in the task force) as we should've," he said. "We've taken as much as $120,000 out of forfeitures and it looks like we may not meet the $220,000 goal.

"Not only are we fixing to bite off a bigger piece of this grant next year, Midland County is underwriting the entire cost of it."

He said the county is the grantee for the funding and has responsibility for its administration. Jarnagin is the fiscal officer for the task force account, a duty for which he has received no reimbursement in two years.

Jarnagin suggested that the commissioners consider getting the city of Midland, Odessa or Ector County to assume grantee and fiscal officer responsibilities in the next grant period, so that the county would not continue to shoulder the financial burden of the task force.

The commissioners decided to reconsider the problem during the Feb. 11 meeting, when a task force budget would be available for them to examine.

Sheriff Gary Painter said he talked with task force commander Tom Finley after the meeting and was told that "everything is in fine order."

"The state has reduced its portion so that the funding is primarily federal and local," Painter said, adding that he was not concerned about a shortfall.

"The task force generates some funds on its own," he said. "I don't see that we have a problem.

Painter also said that if Jarnagin will submit documentation of the time he and his staff spends on the task force's account, the Criminal Justice Division of the Governor's Office will reimburse him.

County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer said the discussion of the task force's funding should not be construed as criticism.

"I don't want this taken as a statement that we are opposed to the task force or don't think it's doing a good job," he said.

"The task force has made a significant impact on drug distribution and use. But we believe there should be cost-sharing and a rotation of duties."

Pregnancy of retarded woman prompts revision of policies

DALLAS (AP) — The rape and pregnancy of a profoundly retarded resident of the Lubbock State School has prompted the state to revise policies on sex and abuse at schools for the mentally retarded.

Debra Lynn Thomas, 33, who doctors say has the intellectual capacity of a 2-year-old, gave birth to a boy Jan. 1. Her brother-in-law, Jimmy Wooten, 40, was charged with rape. He has proclaimed his innocence.

Last week, the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation announced that it was changing its policies on sexual relations and investigations of sexual-abuse allegations at state schools.

The announcement came after 17 years of haggling in a Dallas-based federal lawsuit over treatment of state school residents.

A new "human sexuality policy" that prohibits sexual intercourse between unmarried residents of state schools and other state facilities for the mentally retarded took effect Friday, said MHMR Commissioner Dennis Jones.

State schools also adopted a "corrective action plan" to improve medical treatment and care of residents, he said.

"I'm very happy that some good has come out of the tragedy of Debra Thomas," said Philadelphia lawyer David Ferleger, who represents Ms. Thomas and other state school residents in the federal lawsuit.

Tips to Crime Stoppers help capture 67 fugitivies

■ Arrests represent the organization's best clearance rate in all offenses last year.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Midland Crime Stoppers helped take a bite out of wanted criminals in 1990.

The non-profit organization reported that 67 fugitives from the law, profiled in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, were captured last year. Two to four individuals are profiled in the newspaper about once a week.

The arrests represent Crime Stoppers' best clearance rate in all offenses last year.

"We've had a lot of emphasis on fugitives . . . the paper has played a big part in that," said Jim Hoisager, board president for Midland Crime Stoppers.

Narcotics-related offenses came in second with 52 arrests and 51 cases cleared.

As a result, more than $33,700 in narcotics were seized through information gained by Crime Stoppers.

"Whenever the media focuses attention on something . . . the publicity rubs off on our calls," Hoisager said.

Other criminal offenses — such as assaults, robberies and burglaries — did not fare as well in public attention. Other than fugitives and narcotics, only 16 arrests and 21 clearances were reported for all other crimes.

Hoisager said he hopes to see an improvement in other areas during 1991.

"We want to cover more on burglaries and oil field related (thefts) now that we got drug rates up," he said.

Hoisager said increased support from law enforcement agencies recently should help boost other areas.

Although solving burglaries may be low for Crime Stoppers, the program has had some success in recovering stolen property. More than $73,200 in goods were found as a result of Crime Stoppers' tips.

"Most of the stuff is stuff that wouldn't be recovered normally. It's good but should be a lot better," Hoisager said.

And some of the statistics reported may not reflect precisely the effect of Crime Stoppers, Hoisager said.

"Sometimes we turn in a tip (to a law enforcement agency); they make an arrest, then make two or three more arrests (as a result of the tip) that we don't see," he said.

"If you divide it out with the number of those arrested, manpower, tax dollars saved . . . the return is well worth it," Hoisager said.

Taylor Black

ABILENE — Services for Taylor Black, 85, a longtime resident of Abilene and father of a Midland woman, will be 1 p.m. Friday at First Central Presbyterian Church, with Dr. Roy H. Zuefeldt officiating and Dr. Murray Travis assisting. Burial will follow in Elmwood Memorial Park, under the direction of Elliott-Hamil Funeral Home.

He died Thursday at an Abilene nursing home.

Black was born in Barstow and attended Barstow public schools. His senior year in high school, he attended the Shriner Institute in Kerrville and was a member of the football and track teams. He also attended Hardin-Simmons University from 1926-28.

He was owner and operator of Black and Young Paint Co. and Black's Frame Shop. He was a former member of Barstow Masonic Lodge and the Abilene Rotary Club and a lifetime member of Bloys Camp Meeting Association of Fort Davis.

Black was preceded in death by his wife, Mildred Griffin Black. He was a member of the First Central Presbyterian Church.

Survivors include three sons: Taylor Black of Abilene, Bob Black of Miami, Fla., and Don Black of Lubbock; one daughter, Barbara Way of Midland; one sister, Mary Hall Jennings of Hemet, Calif.; 13 grandchildren; and 16 great-grandchildren.

Memorials should be directed to Bloys Camp Meeting, Fort Davis; Westminster or First Central Presbyterian churches in Abilene; or the Abilene State School.

Elmer G. Dendle

SAN ANGELO — Services for Elmer George Dendle, 75, were scheduled for 11:30 a.m. today at Johnson's Funeral Home Chapel with Darryl Smigh of Business Men's Bible Class and C.J. Poulter officiating. Burial will follow in Lawnhaven Memorial Gardens.

Dendle died Sunday in a San Angelo hospital.

He was born July 6, 1915, in Ebensberg, Pa. He was a retired member of the U.S. Air Force, for which he served as a fighter pilot during World War II. Dendle was employed by Charles Poulter and Sons in San Angelo.

Dendle married Billie Maxine Douglas on Dec. 22, 1945, in San Angelo. He was longtime member and past president of the Business Men's Bible Class.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Elmer Dendle Jr. and William Dendle of San Angelo; two daughters, Nancy Calk of San Angelo and Debbie Wade of Lamesa; three sisters, Sarah Jane Carpenter of St. Fernando, Fla., Dorothy Haroldson of Schohalie, N.Y, and Romayne White of Factoryville, Pa.; and six grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be George Poulter, Dub Izzard, Roger Cuellar, Leroy Zuehlke, Marion Rivers, and Ever Juhl. Honorary pallbearers will be members of the Business Men's Bible Class.

Lee Roy Napper

ODESSA — Services for Lee Roy Napper, 67, of Odessa, are scheduled for 2 p.m today in the Hubbard Kelly Funeral Home Chapel, with the Rev. H. Bailey Stone officiating. Burial will follow in Sunset Memorial Gardens.

Napper died Monday in an Odessa hospital.

He was born Nov. 28, 1923, in Lorenzo. He married Maxine Bowley on June 28, 1984, in Midland.

Napper lived in West Texas all his life. He was a World War II Marine Corps veteran and a retired owner of Lee's Paint & Decorating. He was a member of First Baptist Church in Odessa. He was preceded in death by his first wife, Donia Oletha Napper, in 1979.

Survivors include: Maxine Napper of Odessa; four sons, Steven Napper of Odessa, Butch Bowley of McKinney, Joey Bowley of San Antonio and Ted Bowley of Midland; two daughters, Teresa Napper Cates of Odessa and Gywna Crow of Midland; three brothers, Wallace Napper of Big Spring, Dub Napper of Brownwood and Bill Napper of Brady; two sisters, Belle Smith of Odessa and Suvee Martin of Lubbock; two grandchildren, numerous step-grandchildren and many nieces and nephews.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Assault charged

Staff Reports

An Odessa man was arrested Saturday evening on a charge of aggravated assault of a Midland police officer, police officials said.

Richard Dale Willeby, 28, was released from jail Sunday on a $3,500 bond, jail officials said.

During the arrest process, Willeby reportedly struck in the face, head-butted and bit police officer Paula Bynum, police said. She was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital where she was treated and released.

Murder warrant

ODESSA — A 35-year-old woman remained in jail Monday in connection with the Sunday evening shooting death of her estranged husband, police officials said.

The shooting was apparently the result of a domestic argument, police said.

Carlos Mario Castillo was found dead in the back yard of his home at 3606 N. Muskingum Ave. about 11:55 p.m. after police received a call in reference to a shooting. The victim had been shot once in the face.

A weapon believed to have been used in the incident was recovered. A description of the weapon was not available.

Judy Ann Rodgers Castillo, who resided at the same address, was arrested on a warrant for murder issued by Justice of the Peace Julian Pressly. Bond was set at $35,000 by Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly.

Youth burned

A 14-year-old Midland boy remained in the burn unit of Lubbock University Medical Center in serious but stable condition Monday after being accidentally burned in Midland Sunday evening, fire and hospital officials said.

The youth suffered second- and third-degree burns over 25 percent of his body, hospital officials said.

Firefighters were called out to a residence at 1407 S. Main St. about 8:48 p.m.

According to Midland fire officials, the youth was apparently burned when gasoline on his clothing accidentally caught fire. The boy and other youths were reportedly playing with the fuel when the incident occurred. Fire officials did not know the ignition source.

There was a small amount of fire damage to a bedroom, fire officials said.

BELT: Classes benefit children

(From 1B)

Lately, she said, she has been brushing up on her sign language so she can assist a deaf student.

"He came to me and said he wanted to get his black belt, and asked me if I would be willing to teach him in sign language and help him get it," she said.

Ms. Kent, who also teaches tae kwon do at Midland College, has come a long way from the day some seven years ago when she considered giving up after she suffered a shoulder injury while training.

She said it was her husband-to-be, Bill, who encouraged her to stick with it and earn her black belt.

Mr. Kent said he was glad his wife decided to stay in the course, since she became a valuable asset to his school once she received her black belt and became an instructor in 1986.

Mr. Kent, who married Terri later the same year, said, "The school really took off and became successful when Terri got involved. I didn't have the time to give to it like she does."

He said it was his wife who urged the inclusion of youngsters in the couple's tae kwon do classes. Under her direction, the children's classes have grown to about 70 pupils.

"She's very patient with them," said Mr. Kent, who owns the Kent Kwik Convenience Store chain. "They relate very well to her. I think sometimes the younger kids relate better to a woman."

Ms. Kent, a San Angelo native who moved to Midland in 1982, said she became interested in martial arts because it looked like a good diversion from a high-stress sales job she held at the time.

"I'd been playing racquetball ... but I needed something to challenge my brain as well as my body, that completely got my mind off my job," she said.

"Any martial art, you have to think about what you're doing. You can't have your mind wandering and thinking about other stuff ... You have to concentrate, stay focused."

269 died on KAL flight

In 1983, 269 people were killed when a Korean Air Lines Boeing 747 was shot down by a Soviet jet fighter after the airliner entered Soviet airspace.

COUNT: Strategy studied

(From 1B)

Wright explained that the county precinct boxes are set according to geography, voter convenience and the availability of voting places. Other entities use the same box numbers but in different district configurations for their elections.

Voter confusion occurs when a district splits a box, as the hospital district had to do in the rollback election Jan. 19.

Precinct 3 Commissioner Louisa Valencia said she hoped adjusting the boxes would solve the box-splitting problem.

In other county business, the commissioners:

■ Executed an agreement with the city of Midland concerning jury summonses. The county will use its data base to draw jurors' names for the city.

■ Approved additional repairs to the roof of the county exhibit building. Stanley Roofing Co. of Midland will build up the flat roof over the men's bathroom to improve rain runoff.

■ Approved increasing the supply of electricity to the district clerk's office, which has overloaded its current system. The rewiring will be done by county employees.

■ Accepted special right-of-ways for County Road 170 West and two one-block roads adjacent to the Permian Basin Sports Center.

■ Appointed Grant Thorton to perform the fiscal year 1990 county audit.

■ Authorized the county auditor to advertise for bids for three dump trucks for the Road and Bridge Department.

Fifth-grader Dustin Edwards looks over the letter he received from Donald Trump encouraging him to attend high school and go to college. Edwards, who attends Spring Shadows elementary in Houston, wrote to Trump about his ambitions to skip high school and travel and was surprised when Trump replied.

So he was surprised after writing the millionaire to not only get a response but also to get encouragement from Trump to stay in school and go on to college.

"He's a millionaire and all of that, he owns buildings and casinos and he's on the news," Dustin said Monday of his admiration for Trump.

Dustin's exchange with Trump was the result of a class letter-writing assignment.

Unlike his classmates, who wrote to Santa or grandma, Dustin wrote Trump.

"Dear Donald Trump," the letter began. "I am your biggest fan because I saw all of your casinos on the news. I am thinking about dropping out of high school. I am thinking high school will be a bummer. I want your advice before I get into high school because I think you dropped out and I want to know what it is like. If I drop out, I will travel."

A bit more personally, the student wished Trump a Merry Christmas and added, "I feel sorry for you because of your divorce. I hope you get another wife that likes you — not just your money."

He decorated the Dec. 11 letter with dollar signs, roller skates and a Christmas tree.

"We were surprised when we saw the letter," his teacher, Deb Sonner, at Spring Shadows Elementary School, recalled. "Our program is geared to 'at-risk' students (potential dropouts) in second to fifth grade. But we would have never thought that he would even think of that. He's bright and enthusiastic."

Dustin, who turned 11 Tuesday, confided he thought he'd have more time to travel if he didn't have to go to high school.

"I wanted to travel — all over the world," Dustin said. "I've never stepped out of the state of Texas."

Dustin changed his mind about high school last week after he received an 8-by-10-inch manila envelope from Trump addressed to Mr. Dustin Lance Edwards.

Trump reminded the youngster he indeed had completed high school and went on to college. Trump added a serious message.

"I truly believe that a good education was a key factor in my future success and I have ingrained this thought in the minds of my own three children," Trump wrote.

"I am rather disappointed to hear that you yourself are thinking of dropping out. Hopefully you will listen to the advice of the people that care about you when they tell you that this is one of the biggest mistakes you could ever make.

"Dustin, please reconsider your plans. I expect wonderful things from you and I hope you want disappoint me," Trump wrote.

"I was really surprised," said Dustin, who now is planning a college education to study "science — electricity and stuff."

"I thought he wouldn't write back. I thought he wouldn't have time."

Garment contractor drops charges against protesters

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — An apparel contractor has requested that prosecutors dismiss criminal charges against six women who chained themselves to sewing machines to recoup unpaid wages.

The six women were charged with criminal trespass last June and were scheduled to go on trial Tuesday morning. But owners of Diana Fashions, who filed the complaint, asked late Monday afternoon that the charges be dismissed, County Attorney Joe Lucas said.

One of the six women, Felipa Perez, was unsure what the trial outcome would be, but said Monday she knew her decision to fight was right.

"I don't know the law. I don't know anything. I just know he owes me and I just know that I did work and sew with my own hands," said Mrs. Perez, 35, who has lived in the United States for 10 years.

The protests are part of a long-festering controversy in this city's apparel industry, its largest employer, over conditions in its garment factories and the alleged nonpayment of wages by some garment contractors.

The allegations mostly have been lodged by members of La Mujer Obrera, Spanish for The Working Woman, a workers' rights group for El Paso's mostly Hispanic garment factory workers.

"Our goal is to establish a set of decent labor standards so that if anyone wants to come here and have work done here they should comply with a decent set of labor standards," said Cecilia Rodriguez, director of La Mujer Obrera.

"Having a building where you have a heater you can use in 20-degree weather is not unreasonable. That's what we call a decent set of labor standards," she said.

She said the women who were to stand trial were relieved and disappointed when they received news that the complaint had been dropped.

"They were ready to go in and fight. They weren't going to go in fearful or ashamed or hide. They were ready to fight," she said. "In that sense (the dropped complaint is) a letdown, because it doesn't allow us to tell the whole story.

In the June 1990 protest, the six women chained themselves to sewing machines at the El Paso International Apparel factory and had to be removed by police. The tactic marked the escalation of weeks of protests by La Mujer Obrera, a garment workers' rights group.

The workers contend they are owed back wages by an apparel contractor who hired them to sew garments for a women's clothier. They say they never were paid, and the contractor shut down the sewing room, moved the machines and reopened down the street as El Paso International Apparel.

Some contractors have said a declining textile industry in El Paso has undermined their ability to pay wages.

La Mujer Obrera says closing operations, moving sewing machines to a new location and reopening under another name is a common tactic of unscrupulous contractors and subcontractors. They have a number of other wage claims, liens and suits filed against other contractors.

The six women also have filed a complaint against the contractor, accusing him of theft of services.

The U.S. Labor Department said last August its own investigation had found about 1,000 workers were owed about $85,000 in back pay and overtime. The six women are in that group, but the Labor Department would not reveal the employers' names.

An El Paso grand jury also is investigating the complaints.

"I think it's going to be very difficult for the legal system to justify their lack of action on the employers who violated labor laws," Ms. Rodriguez said. "It's going to be a glaring contradiction."

The trials this week and a meeting planned on Thursday with the mayor, county judge and representatives from Gov. Ann Richards' office, go beyond the wage issue, Ms. Rodriguez said.

"It's a whole issue of civil rights and the rights of these women to what all the rest of us have — the right to complain, the right to protest and the right to legal redress," Ms. Rodriguez said.

Literacy council seeks $5.3 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Nearly one Texas worker in five will be unemployable in the future because most jobs will require a high school education, the Texas Literacy Council said Monday in seeking a funding boost.

"We've got a very serious problem here," said council Chairman H.L. Emanuel of San Antonio.

The council is asking state lawmakers to spend $5.3 million more over the next two years to combat illiteracy.

It wants to provide family literacy programs to help break the cycle of illiteracy; enhance programs at the workplace; and work with the criminal justice system to attack the link between illiteracy and crime.

State Sen. Cyndi Taylor Krier, R-San Antonio, and state Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, appeared with Emanuel at a news conference to support the literacy effort's funding boost.

The council's current two-year budget is $2 million, with the money coming from federal funds with restricted use.

"There is a human and economic cost to illiteracy," Colbert said.

The cost related to illiteracy in Texas is estimated at more than $17 billion a year.

Texas ranks 47th among the states in adult literacy. Thirty-three percent of Texans are functionally illiterate, and only 14 percent of future jobs are projected to require less than a high school education.

Seventy-five percent of prisoners are high school dropouts, Colbert said. And the cost extends beyond those who turn to crime.

For example, a 23-year-old insurance company employee paid a policyholder $2,200 rather than $22 because she did not understand decimals.

A 19-year-old feedlot laborer killed a herd of cattle by giving them poison rather than food. "I wasn't real sure what the package said," he explained.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will receive unexpected support from the folks at home. Recent trends show you what you should do next professionally. Make a major move in April. Business travel is an excellent investment next summer. A change of lifestyle will promote greater self-confidence in September. Keep your promises to loved ones. Socializing with prominent people could lead to exciting career benefits next December.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Wise choices put you in charge of your own destiny — at least for now. Bargains are available if you shop around. Let romance cool off and then see how you really feel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A project handed to you now is sufficiently complex to require all your finesse. Give it your best shot and you will emerge a winner! Share good news with your mate or partner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Running against the crowd could make you a hero in business today. A dazzling performance will solve any financial problems. A love relationship undergoes positive changes. You feel optimistic.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Given your track record, you will succeed at a new assignment. Others are anxious to join your team; welcome them if they will be an asset. Quit hiding the facts from a child.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Better cash management is the key to improving your finances. Keep spending under control and leave your options open. Romance looks more promising than in the recent past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Being extra cooperative on the job will almost certainly boost your popularity and prestige. An exciting project is part of the picture. Be more practical about a new romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A long-range financial plan merits your close attention today. You have considerable influence. Use it judiciously. A longtime relationship will respond to more nurturing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep an eye on your co-workers — there could be treachery afoot. Avoid getting caught up in office politics. Patch up a quarrel. Taking someone out to dinner will make a nice statement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A roadblock to career progress is removed, thanks to a new agreement or policy. Someone who enters your life now could be a source of financial backing. Be candid with a teen-ager.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are riding the crest of popularity now. VIPs gladly take you into their confidence. Be discreet. Something transpires behind closed doors that works to your advantage. Be upfront with your loved ones.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A large degree of cooperation is necessary to maintain rapport with your co-workers. Seek experts' advice about legal or financial matters. Domestic events could alter your social plans.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Curb a tendency to be extravagant. Ostentatious spending could mar your image. Become the sensitive person other people want to be around. A romantic encounter is best postponed.

TODAY'S CHILDREN need constant reassurance of their parents' love and approval. High-spirited and headstrong, these youngsters insist on having their own way. Caring adults will teach these Aquarians the benefits of cooperation. Although these children often daydream, they also work hard to make their dreams come true. Count on them to be more interested in collecting friends than riches. Agile on their feet, these Aquarians frequently display terrific athletic or dancing prowess!

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

Here's another opportunity for our readers to play bridge sleuths. We will give you the bidding and play of this hand. It is up to you to decide who, if anyone, committed transgressions, and what they were.

Certainly, the bidding can't be faulted. East had a very sound opening bid and South, with about nine playing tricks in hand, can't be blamed for jumping to four spades.

West led the jack of clubs, taken by dummy's ace as East contributed the deuce. The jack of spades lost to East's ace and the nine of clubs was returned. Declarer ruffed with the nine and West overruffed. Since East's plays in clubs showed interest in the lower of the unbid suits, West returned a diamond. East scored the ace and reverted to a club and, whether declarer ruffed high or low, West had to come to another trump trick for down one.

At first glance it might seem that nothing out of the ordinary had happened—declarer simply had to lose four tricks as the cards lay, so the outcome should be written off to bad luck. If you came to that conclusion, read on.

While the 4-1 trump break was rather unfortunate, it was not fatal. The proximate cause of the contract's demise was declarer's failure to break the defenders' line of communication.

Suppose that, instead of ruffing when East returned a club at trick three, declarer had discarded his losing diamond. Declarer can then ruff the club continuation low with impunity. West can overruff to complete the defensive book, but the defenders have shot their bolt. Declarer can win any return, draw the outstanding trumps and claim the rest of the tricks. In the trade, this loser-on-loser play is known as a "Scissors Coup."

Lean's mysterious illness forces halt to 'Nostromo'

PARIS (AP) — British film director David Lean has taken ill and postponed work on his latest epic "Nostromo," the story of an Italian adventurer starring Dennis Quaid, a producer said Monday.

Lean, 82, best-known for "Lawrence of Arabia" and "Doctor Zhivago," had planned to start shooting "Nostromo," an adaptation of the Joseph Conrad novel, in Nice on March 4.

French producer Serge Silberman said Lean traveled to London to undergo medical checkups, but declined to explain the nature of the illness.

Silberman emphasized the $44 million movie had not been canceled, just "postponed." Others starring in the movie include Christopher Lambert and Klaus Maria Brandauer.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Clint Eastwood and Diane Keaton are to receive Man and Woman of the Year Awards from Harvard University's Hasty Pudding Theatricals for their "lasting contribution" to the silver screen.

Eastwood

Keaton, 45, who made urban angst alluring with her Oscar-winning title role in "Annie Hall," will get a parade through Harvard Square and be presented with the traditional "Pudding Pot" at the Hasty Pudding Theater on Feb. 12, the theater group said Monday.

Eastwood, 60, who personifies macho excess in his "Dirty Harry" movies and also has won praise as a film director, is to get his award Feb. 19 at the premiere performance of the theater group's 143rd annual musical production, "Safari Sagoodi," the group said.

Keaton

Since 1951 for women and 1967 for men, two performers have been honored for their "lasting impressive contribution to the world of entertainment," the group said in a statement.

Past recipients include Katharine Hepburn, Lucille Ball, Glenn Close, Steven Spielberg and Kevin Costner.

DENVER (AP) — Willie Nelson's 44-acre ranch at the foot of Mount Evans outside Denver is to be sold Wednesday at an Internal Revenue Service auction.

The ranch, which contains a house that was Nelson's main residence in the 1980s, a caretaker's cottage and two guest cottages, was among several of properties seized in November to ensure payment of $16.7 million in taxes it says the Grammy award-winning singer owes.

The IRS will set a minimum price, probably between $550,000 to $800,000, said Dave Roller of Roller & Associates auctioneers. After the auction, Nelson will have 180 days to redeem the property by paying the tax bill or completing a sale for more than the auction price.

The ranch, 25 miles southwest of Denver, has been on the market since last summer, carrying a $2 million price tag.

Nelson, 57, has blamed his financial problems on Price Waterhouse and has sued the accountant firm for $15 million. The firm stands behind its service to Nelson, said spokesman Ken Koprowski.

In a television interview taped last week, Nelson said his problems with the IRS have been going on for years and expressed regret that "friends and fans out there who all of a sudden see my name in the paper (and reports) that I'm penniless, homeless and suicidal and all these crazy things."

NEW YORK (AP) — Cable News Network founder Ted Turner will receive a special Emmy award for achievement in television, the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences said Monday.

Turner

The award, formally known as the academy's Trustees Award, will be presented to the media tycoon in New York on Feb. 21. It reflects the academy's recognition of cable, now in 59 percent of the nation's TV homes, as a strong force in television.

Emmy awards for cable programs have been made for three years.

PARIS (AP) — An AIDS group promoting the use of condoms was ordered Monday to delete references in its posters to Elvis-style rock singer Johnny Hallyday.

A court fined the French Agency Fighting AIDS $200 for each of its posters, which show a condom identified as "Johnny, the condom that guarantees," above the caption "Ah, with me, a woman feels protected."

The court ordered the group to delete the words "Johnny" and "Ah," saying the hairstyle, the name and language used in the ad "inevitably led to identifying" Hallyday, one of France most enduring rock legends.

The AIDS group said it would not contest the decision.

Hobby steps into the classroom

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN — Last week Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby stepped out of state government and into the classroom, an environment he may find more suited to his intellectual bent than the Texas political circus.

Hobby

Hobby, 58, is teaching a seminar on government innovation at the LBJ School of Public Affairs in Austin and a course on legislative redistricting at Rice University, his alma mater, in Houston.

During his elected career, Hobby's strong suit was governing rather than politics. No lapel man, he disliked crowds, campaigning and small talk. He preferred such solitary pursuits as riding hunters, reading history, playing chess and doing math puzzles.

But he is perhaps the most respected state official of the past two decades.

Presiding over the Senate for 18 years, Hobby outlasted three governors, fellow Democrats Dolph Briscoe and Mark White and Republican Bill Clements. After his initial election in 1972, he never had a Democratic opponent and easily bested his Republican challengers.

He had an idealistic vision of the Texas Senate, where his father, William Pettus Hobby, served as lieutenant governor before becoming governor from 1917 to 1921.

Years before he was elected, Bill Hobby did an apprenticeship as Senate parliamentarian. His son, attorney Paul Hobby, is carrying on family tradition by serving as an aide to Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock.

"Hobby had a willingness and ability to see issues and deal with them in an affirmative way instead of waiting until the pot boils over," said former Sen. Ray Farabee, now legal counsel for the University of Texas System.

"He had a sense of the congeniality of the Senate, not as an inner club but as a deliberative body of a size where there could be reason," said Farabee, who was given top committee assignment by Hobby.

As the presiding officer in the Senate, a post which many believe to be the most powerful in state government, Hobby immersed himself in the administrative and financial details of state government with a long view, apparently inspired by his sense of history.

"Hobby doesn't have a big personal ego. He can allow somebody else to take credit. He will endure unintended slights," said Saralee Tiede, who served as his chief aide.

But Hobby's patience could be tried. He once threw representatives of the Texas State Teachers Association out of his office after they issued a news release saying that he betrayed them on a pay increase.

"He told them to get out and not come back," Farabee recalled. "I was shocked by it."

Hobby worked to keep peace on the Senate floor, requesting assurances that a senator had the two-thirds majority necessary to pass a bill before he scheduled a bill for a floor vote.

His greatest failure in Senate relations was the Killer Bees incident of 1979. A cadre of liberal senators, determined to defeat a proposal for a separate-day presidential primary supported by Hobby, disappeared for five days, leaving the Senate without enough members for a quorum.

A furious Hobby dispatched state troopers to arrest the senators and bring them back for a vote. Most were hiding out in the garage apartment of a Senate aide. The troopers never found them and the bill was scuttled.

Hobby's family fortune is estimated to be $500 million. The family owned The Houston Post until it was sold for $130 million in 1983. Hobby heads the family business that now controls six TV stations.

Gov. Ann Richards wrote in her biography: "He was the first man inside my immediate circle of friends who ever talked to me as if we were on equal footing. He had none of this 'I'm experienced and you're not,' 'Me Tarzan, you Jane' way about him."

Hobby did not leave state government discouraged about the potential of government to solve big problems. But he does concede that many state problems are running on a continuous loop.

For example, he notes with tongue poked firmly in his cheek:

"In 1973, right after the Sharpstown scandal, there was a lot of concern about ethics reform. So that's been solved. There was a lot of concern about school finance, driven by the Edgewood lawsuit, so that's been taken care of.

"Prisons were overcrowded. We've taken care of that.

"There was a scandal in the insurance industry, National Bankers Life. There was concern about the solvency of the industry. That's been taken care of.

"We've cleaned up just about everything."

Hobby says he has no plans for future races but concedes that if the opportunity arose, he would consider running for the U.S. Senate.

Senate approves freeze of state hiring, spending

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate unanimously approved a sweeping budget bill Monday that would freeze spending and hiring after Feb. 1 and set up procedures for auditing the financial status and efficiency of all state agencies.

Senate Bill 111 now goes to the House, and if amended there as expected, will come back to the Senate. If the Senate does not agree with all the House amendments, the bill will go to a joint House-Senate conference committee to work out differences.

Sen. John Montford, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and sponsor of the bill, said he expects the final version will be written in the conference committee.

Montford, D-Lubbock, said the bill would save an estimated $98.4 million in the current fiscal year, which ends Aug. 31.

State officials expect to fall $265 million short in meeting expenditures for the rest of this fiscal year. With $129.1 million in revenues on hand, a savings of $98.4 million still would leave a $37.5 million shortfall.

Montford said a spending freeze might save even more than expected, and he hoped the audit of state departments would help the Legislature account for the remaining shortfall without having to raise taxes.

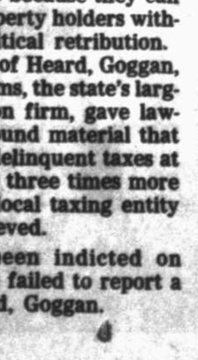

"We possibly need to try something new, and I personnaly like the basic concept in that we are going to have audits of all the agencies to determine if there are ways to have better and cheaper government," said Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo. "It's time to do something."

Officials also predict the state will have a deficit of about $4.5 billion for the fiscal 1992-93 two-year budget if the state just keeps the current level of services and does not raise taxes.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock is pushing Senate Bill 111 with the idea of solving the current budget deficit and then apprvoving a budget for only one year in this session of the Legislature. That would give the audit committees time to come up with a clear financial picture of how much money can be saved, and which services are essential and which can be cut or eliminated.

Bill on probes sent for review

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation that would cut into the tax collection business of a law firm that has been tied to indicted House Speaker Gib Lewis was sent Monday to a Senate subcommittee for further review.

Tejeda

The bill by Sen. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, would give local taxing entities the same chance as private law firms to collect a 15 percent penalty from delinquent taxpayers.

Tejeda requested that the measure go to a Senate Finance subcommittee.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, chairman of the Finance Committee, appointed Tejeda as the chairman of the subcommittee, which also will include Sens. Ken Armbrister, D-Victoria and Bill Sims, D-San Angelo.

Local officials were divided on the issue of whether it was more efficient for counties to chase delinquent taxpayers, or private law firms.

Some said that if local officials could collect the penalty, it would generate more revenue, while others said that private firms are more aggressive because they can go after big property holders without fear of political retribution.

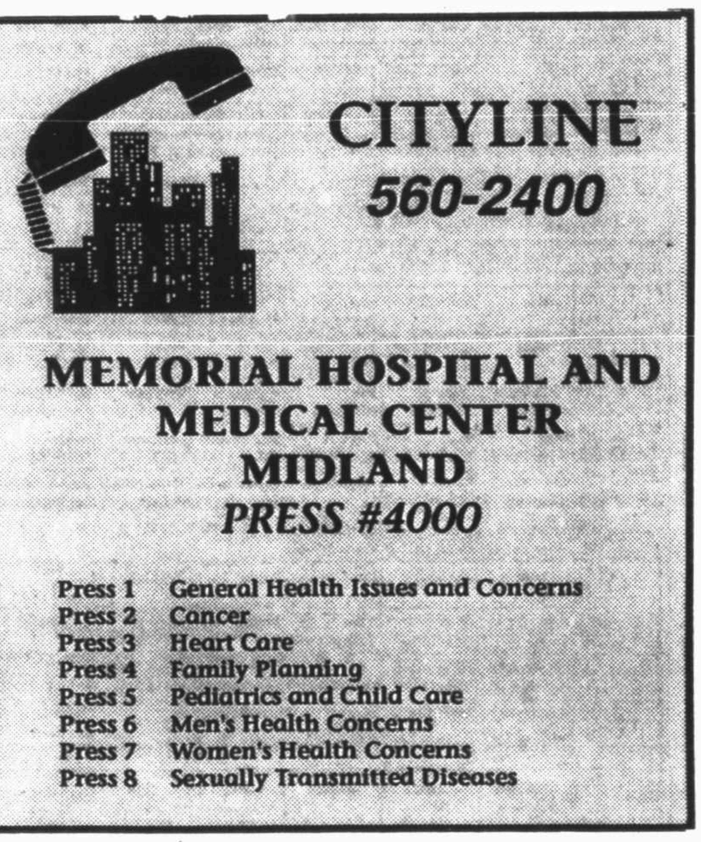

The law firm of Heard, Goggan, Blair and Williams, the state's largest tax collection firm, gave lawmakers background material that said it collects delinquent taxes at a rate of two to three times more than what the local taxing entity previously achieved.

Lewis has been indicted on charges that he failed to report a gift from Heard, Goggan.

CALL FOR REGISTRATION INFORMATION

Marriage Enrichment Seminar

February 8 & 9

Since 1974, this seminar has been presented to over 70,000 people in 30 states and 7 foreign countries.

In it, Drs. Brecheen and Faulkner, will help happily married couples by showing you many ways to enrich your relationship.

If you are planning marriage, or are newly married, you can receive the vital foundation upon which all successful marriages need to be built in order to flourish and grow.

Drs. Brecheen and Faulkner co-authored the book, What Every Family Needs, and the film series, Marriage Enrichment Film Series, which won the Best Film Series Award in 1982.

The seminar will be interpreted for the deaf. No child care can be provided.

SCHEDULE

Friday, February 8
Registration ..... 5:30 - 7:00 PM

Kremlin backers rally in Latvia

■ In Lithuania, ousted republic television workers demand their jobs back.

An unidentified Latvian mother with children cries during Monday's demonstration near the Soviet prosecution building in Riga. She and others demonstrated against the captivity of five National Latvian Front members by the Black Berets, including the woman's husband.

RIGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Hundreds of pro-Kremlin Latvian policemen jeered the republic's president Monday, reflecting the deep division in local law enforcement ranks over the issue of independence.

In the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius, about 1,000 of the republic's television workers rallied to demand their jobs back. The workers have been locked out of work because of the Jan. 13 Soviet military takeover of the republic's TV facility that killed 14 people.

The 500-800 Latvian police officers — mostly ethnic Russians, Ukrainians and Byelorussians — jammed an auditorium at the University of Latvia for a four-hour meeting with the Baltic republic's leaders, including their boss, Latvian Interior Minister Alois Vaznis, as well as President Anatolijs Gorbunovs and Prime Minister Ivars Godmanis.

The police whistled and hooted when Vaznis said he had tried to depoliticize the police force, which is part of the Interior Ministry, and they called for his resignation.

The raucous meeting reflected a sharp split between police supporting Latvia's pro-independence government and those loyal to the national government in Moscow and the anti-independence branch of the Communist Party in Riga.

That split was aggravated on Jan. 20 when elite "black beret" riot police loyal to Moscow attacked the Latvian Interior Ministry, killing four people, including two regular police officers.

On Friday, a similar gathering of about 500 Latvian police officers took a unanimous vote of no-confidence in Vaznis, who has supported the pro-independence forces and allowed volunteers to build barricades in the streets of Riga.

When Gorbunovs said the barricades had been erected spontaneously by Latvians fearing a Soviet attack, jeering arose from the audience. The 43-year-old president was unable to continue until a senior police officer called for order.

Gorbunovs said a "political battle" was taking place in Latvia between the pro-independence Popular Front, which supports him, and the Communist Party. The recent shootings, he said, show "this battle is now being fought not only with political means, but also with violence."

He called for all political groups in Latvia to renounce violence and sit down at a negotiating table.

Among grievances raised by police were understaffing, low pay, lack of housing and a recent law requiring officers to learn the Latvian language.

They also voiced anger over an order by Vaznis prohibiting police from engaging in Communist Party activity during working hours. Vaznis suggested that much of the dissatisfaction stemmed from his decision to forbid police from moonlighting as guards.

Godmanis defended Vaznis as a "professional." He invited anyone seeking the post of interior minister to apply in writing, but he did not appear serious about replacing Vaznis.

The Lithuanian TV workers had planned to hold their rally Monday in front of their broadcast center, which is still surrounded by Soviet troops and tanks, but they decided that was too dangerous and shifted their meeting to the teachers' union building in central Vilnius.

They said virtually no one has stayed on to work at the occupied facility, with the Soviets bringing in workers from other republics. They also appealed to workers at state-controlled central television in Moscow not to go along with the Kremlin line on the Lithuanian crackdown.

The views of the separatist government still are being aired via a TV transmitter in Lithuania's second-largest city of Kaunas, which reaches most of the republic except Vilnius. Several pro-government radio stations also operate.

Lithuania's parliament also denounced as "a crude human rights violation" two new Kremlin decrees that will institute joint military-police patrols in major cities and give the KGB and Interior Ministry sweeping search-and-seizure powers at sites where economic sabotage is suspected.

In Estonia, the leadership of the republic's parliament gave initial approval to holding a referendum on independence before a planned March 17 Kremlin-sponsored referendum on whether to leave the Soviet Union.

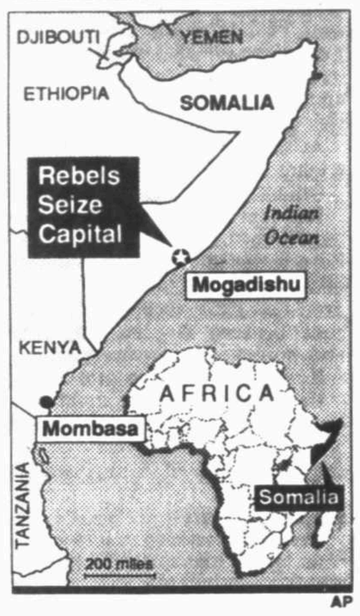

The national Supreme Soviet legislature has set a March 17 date for votes in each of the 15 republics on whether they want to stay in a newly federated union, which President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has proposed.

The three Baltic republics were independent between the world wars before they were incorporated into the Soviet Union.

■ More world news/4D

AP

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The whereabouts of longtime Somali leader Mohamed Siad Barre remained a mystery Monday, more than a day after he fled the presidential palace in a tank. Rebels appealed for calm in the war-ravaged capital of Mogadishu and promised a return to democracy.

According to a radio broadcast of the Somali National Movement, the oldest of the three major guerrilla groups fighting to oust Siad Barre, loyalist troops and officials from the old regime were giving up through much of the Horn of Africa nation.

"Reports reaching Radio SNM say that in various parts of our country, remnants of Siad Barre's soldiers and officials are surrendering en masse to the bases of the liberation movements," the broadcast said Monday.

The Somali National Movement, which draws its support mainly from the Isaaq clan in northern Somalia and controls most of the interior, has operated the radio clandestinely for years.

For the first time since the rebel offensive began Dec. 30 against Siad Barre, a spokesman of the humanitarian medical team Doctors Without Borders said his colleagues in Mogadishu reported no fighting overnight.

Rebels asked for foreign medical aid and issued an appeal for utility and other workers to come back to their jobs so the city can resume a semblance of normalcy. The guerrillas issued a statement saying new leadership is being formed to take over rule of this California-sized nation of 8 million.

Whether the workers would return quickly was uncertain. An estimated 50 people have been slain daily in guerrilla fighting against troops loyal to Siad Barre, ruler of Somalia since 1969 and accused of rights abuses and corruption.

In a statement broadcast by the new Radio Mogadishu — Voice of Somali People, the United Somali Congress (USC) said the country's future will be decided by an opposition "spearheaded by the rebel armed groups."

"The USC calls for the formation of a new republic based on justice, equality, unity and democracy," the broadcast said.

It said an interim government "drawn from many sections of the Somali people" will be formed pending "free elections." No date was announced.

Del Rio woman knows what it means to succeed

By Rick Smith

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Once, an 8-year-old girl moved with her parents and three sisters and two brothers from Mexico to Texas.

She spoke no English.

She had never attended school.

Because of her age, Texas school officials placed her in the second grade, with teachers who spoke little or no Spanish and with students who understood only English.

"I hated elementary," said Odilia Garza, 24. "I remember telling my mom I was sick so I wouldn't have to go to school.

"I remember that, when the other students would take spelling tests, I would just sit there because I didn't know what to do. I made straight Fs. I was a troublemaker all through elementary. That's all I was good at."

As she grew older, some of her friends turned to drugs.

Others dropped out of school.

But, because her parents had moved to the United States seeking a better life for their children, because they had taught their children that hard work leads to success, because she had ambition and intelligence, she hung on.

It was difficult, she said.

Her problems were complicated by her father's quest to find ranch work. During an 11-year period, the family moved from town to town, school to school, across southwest Texas.

Then, she met a special teacher.

'I've always known where I was going. When they (her peers) looked down on me, I looked right back at them.'

— Odilia Garza, school teacher, Del Rio, Texas

She helped Odilia with her English.

She gave her encouragement.

And, suddenly, it was as if a light came on in the girl's head.

"She showed me what was possible," Ms. Garza said. "She opened my mind."

"I just needed that special teacher. Once I found her, she showed me it's OK if I make a mistake. Nobody's going to point the finger at you. She helped me with my English, and I went from Fs to Cs to Bs.

"You need somebody you can hold on to. I never a teacher like that before."

Encouraged, the girl set a goal: She would make the eighth-grade honor roll, once.

She did. Then she made the honor roll again. And again and again.

In high school, she joined the choir, the band, athletics.

"I made a goal that I was going to make the honor rolls all through high school. And I did."

She made a decision: "I thought, 'I can do this. I will go to college.' "

As a high school freshman, she began working 20 to 30 hours a week after school to earn money for college. She cleaned houses, ironed, babysat, worked at a restaurant.

"I had to struggle. I would go to school, work, go to bed at 2:30 every morning, get up, go to school. But I still made the honor roll. Don't ask me how. I studied all the time. My mom thought I was going to go crazy, studying and working, but that's what I had to do."

Work was nothing new for Odilia Garza.

Though her father worked hard as a West Texas ranch hand, the expense of six children always strained the family's budget, she said.

"Since I was a little girl, if I saw a doll or coat at K-Mart and I wanted it, I knew I was going to work for it, and I would help my dad and do whatever it took until I got that doll.

"My dad would say, 'I don't have the money,' and I would say, 'How about if I help you?' I would help him hunt or trap animals."

Hoping to concentrate on school instead of odd jobs in college, she set another goal: She would win a Carr Scholarship that would pay her way to Angelo State University.

But, while she graduated in the top 10 percent of her class, she said she did poorly on her college entrance examination.

The low score, she said, may have kept her from winning the scholarship.

Disappointed, she set another goal: She would finance her own college education at ASU.

And, except for a $300 scholarship and a grant, she did.

People helped her along the way, she said. Several ASU professors gave her special help and inspiration; a San Angelo couple let her use a garage apartment in exchange for babysitting duties.

But, most of all, Ms. Garza helped herself.

"Sometimes, I felt other students looked down on me because I cleaned for them. But that's all right. I knew where I was going. I've always known where I was going. When they looked down on me, I looked right back at them."

She said she never considered quitting school.

"My mom would ask me how I kept going, and I would tell her, 'How can you quit when America has so many good things to offer? How can you quit when you have come so far?' "

Ms. Garza graduated from ASU in December with a bachelor's degree in elementary education.

She began teaching a fourth-grade class in Del Rio this spring.

"Ever since I can remember, my goal has been to be a teacher," she said.

"The teachers who helped me, they had a certain way with children. I think I have that in me. I'll know when students need special help. I can understand when a kid is confused and lost because I remember being there."

She said she will teach her students that "in America, if you want something, you work hard at it, and, with God's help, you will get it. If you want it. If you work for it. If you don't let anything or anybody get in your way."

And, she said, she will teach them something else.

"I will tell them that people will help you. They helped me. And, now, it is my turn to help others."

One of Texas' oldest pharmacies turns 100

By Dan Shine

KAUFMAN, Texas (AP) — The painted number on the facade of the two-story mint-green building, "1891," is a point of pride for Dave Greenslade.

Greenslade Drug Co. is the oldest operating pharmacy in the state, according to the Texas Pharmaceutical Association. A century-old building might be impressive by some standards, but no one raised an eyebrow on Mr. Greenslade's recent trip to England.

"I was in a pharmacy in London just watching the pharmacist work when he looked up and asked if I needed something," Greenslade said. "I explained that I was a pharmacist and owned the oldest pharmacy in Texas. He asked me what year and I told him, '1891.'

"He laughed at me and took me outside and pointed to the date on his building — 1790. He kinda put me in my place."

While Londoners may not be impressed with Greenslade Drug's longevity, its place in Kaufman history is secure. Its roots, and the roots of its owner, are firmly planted in the soil of this Kaufman County town of 5,550.

The building on the town square has been a drugstore ever since it was built in 1891 by R.C. Dansby and R.S. Gould.

In 1919, the store was sold to Smith E. Greenslade, Dave Greenslade's grandfather. The store was passed on to Henderson Greenslade, Dave's father, in 1946. David Greenslade purchased the store in 1967.

"We're kinda proud of being here for so long," Greenslade said. "We hope to be here for a long time to come."

Greenslade's son, Layne, 34, is the store's business manager. Layne Greenslade's 5-year-old son, John, is being groomed as the store's fifth-generation owner.

Layne Greenslade said he "never did think of anything else" when considering vocational pursuits. He said he thinks his son will follow him to the store.

"I'm sure that's what John will do," his father said. "I want him to join us, but I'm not going to press him on it."

Dave Greenslade said he thinks John will follow in the family tradition because "he's got it in his genes."

Greenslade said he has been sweeping floors and filling the Coke box at the drugstore ever since he was 9 years old. But unlike his son, Dave Greenslade was not sure what he wanted to do with his life. He holds up four fingers to symbolize his indecision.

"I changed my major four times in college," said Greenslade, a 1951 graduate of the University of Texas School of Pharmacy. "I wanted to do anything but be in the drugstore business. Eventually, I realized it would be foolish to do anything else."

Greenslade said the antiquity and history of the store has survived despite what he calls his "Cadillac and alligator shoes age," a time when young men want to impress.

"As a young man in my era, there was a movement afoot to tear everything down and redo it," he said. "I had that same feeling in me. But maybe through family influence, I was able to pass through that era without destroying the identity of the drugstore."

The top shelves around the store, as well as a display case, are full of old medicine bottles and old-fashioned medicinal remedies. A couple of the more interesting bottles include items such as a repellant called Chigger Chaser and the oddly named No One's Emerald Oil.

A couple of antique mortar and pestles are in the display case. The store also sold veterinarian supplies, many of which are on display.

"We don't throw many things away," Greenslade said. "We try to save and preserve the qualities of the past of the drugstore."

In 1968, the state historical committee designated the store as a Texas Historic Landmark. Greenslade said he is planning to have an open house at the store in June, in conjunction with the Kaufman Historical Society, to celebrate the building's 100th anniversary.

There is certain to be many old stories told at that celebration — like the one about the unusual request for a cherry Coke.

Back in the early days of the drugstore, Greenslade offered curbside service. Once, a man on horseback who had too much to drink at the local saloon decided he wanted a cherry Coke from the store's soda fountain.

"My father told me they wouldn't bring it to him so he rode his horse inside the store to the fountain and said, 'Now gimme a cherry Coke.'

"They gave it to him and he rode off."

Since the store doesn't have a computer or modern cash register, Greenslade said people call it antiquated. But he said people have come to appreciate old-fashioned, personal service. He said he knows "99 percent of the people who walk in the door."

"If you have a product that's close in price and you give people a smile, they'll come back and trade with you," Greenslade said.

Layne Greenslade said he foresees no changes in the tradition-laden drugstore.

"We're gonna stay with what we know," he said.

'Ghost' dies

Grange

Grange, who had been hospitalized since July and on the critical list for a week, died of complications from pneumonia about 3 a.m. EST.

Grange died a few hours after millions of people watched the New York Giants beat the Buffalo Bills for the championship of the NFL, a league that owes much of its present popularity to Grange.

A memorial service being planned will be open only to family, said Barrett Nelson of Marion Nelson Funeral Home, which is handling arrangements.

"He was a very modest person, always gave credit to the others who were involved with him on the football field," said Chuck Flynn, a former Illinois sports information director who knew Grange. "He was one of the greatest runners that football has ever seen — that burst of speed to get into the open when split seconds count."

Giants talk of next year

■ Bill Parcells will be back as coach, but Super Bowl MVP Ottis Anderson will surely be up for Plan B again.

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Bill Parcells almost surely will be back as coach of the New York Giants next season. Ottis Anderson almost surely will be exposed to Plan B for the third straight season despite his Super Bowl MVP award.

And the Giants hope they won't repeat the mistakes they made after they won their last Super Bowl, which led to their only losing season in eight years.

Parcells, who won his second Super Bowl when the Giants beat the Buffalo Bills 20-19 on Sunday, didn't exactly say he would return to the Giants. But he signed off this way on Monday:

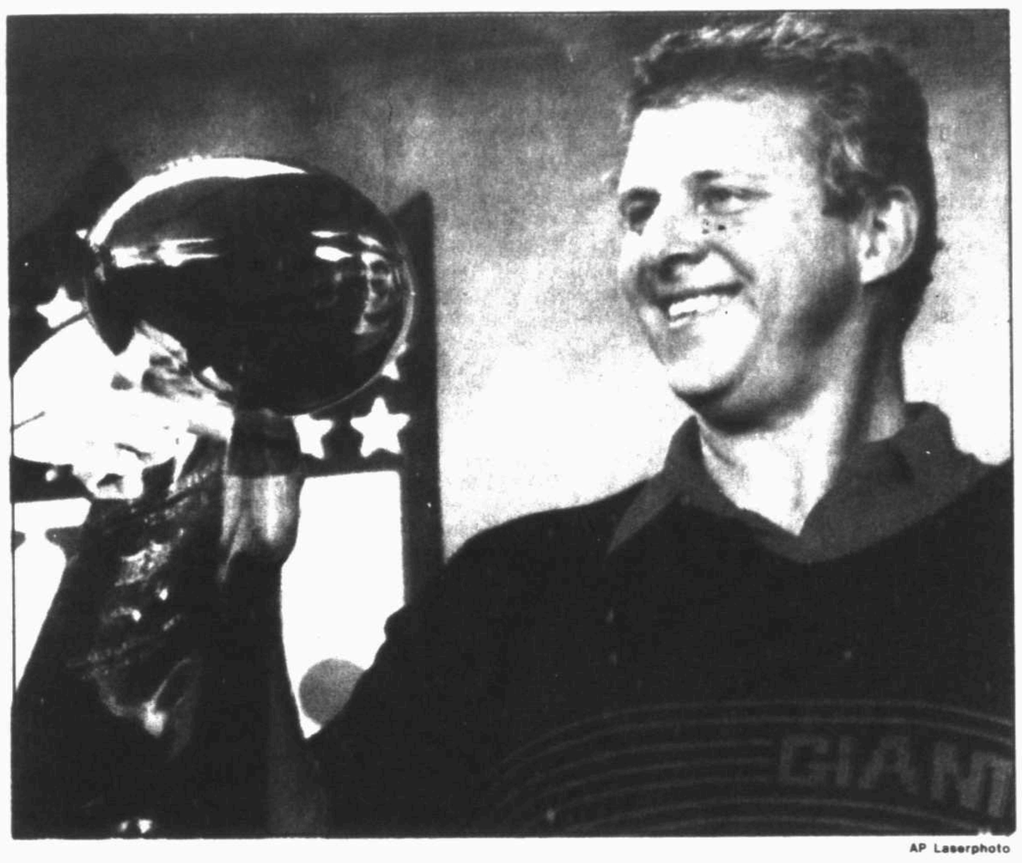

"To you New York writers, I'll see you in training camp next summer."

After the Giants won their first Super Bowl in 1987, Parcells was offered the job as Atlanta's general manager and coach. All this week, with the Super Bowl in Tampa, there has been speculation that he would resign after this game to take the same position with the Tampa Bay Bucs — one even said he would do it Monday.

"Everything that's been written about me is a fabrication," he said. "There no truth to any of those rumors. I haven't talked to anyone about anything. Last time after we won this thing I didn't give my owners or George Young (the general manager) any time to savor the victory. That's not going to happen this time."

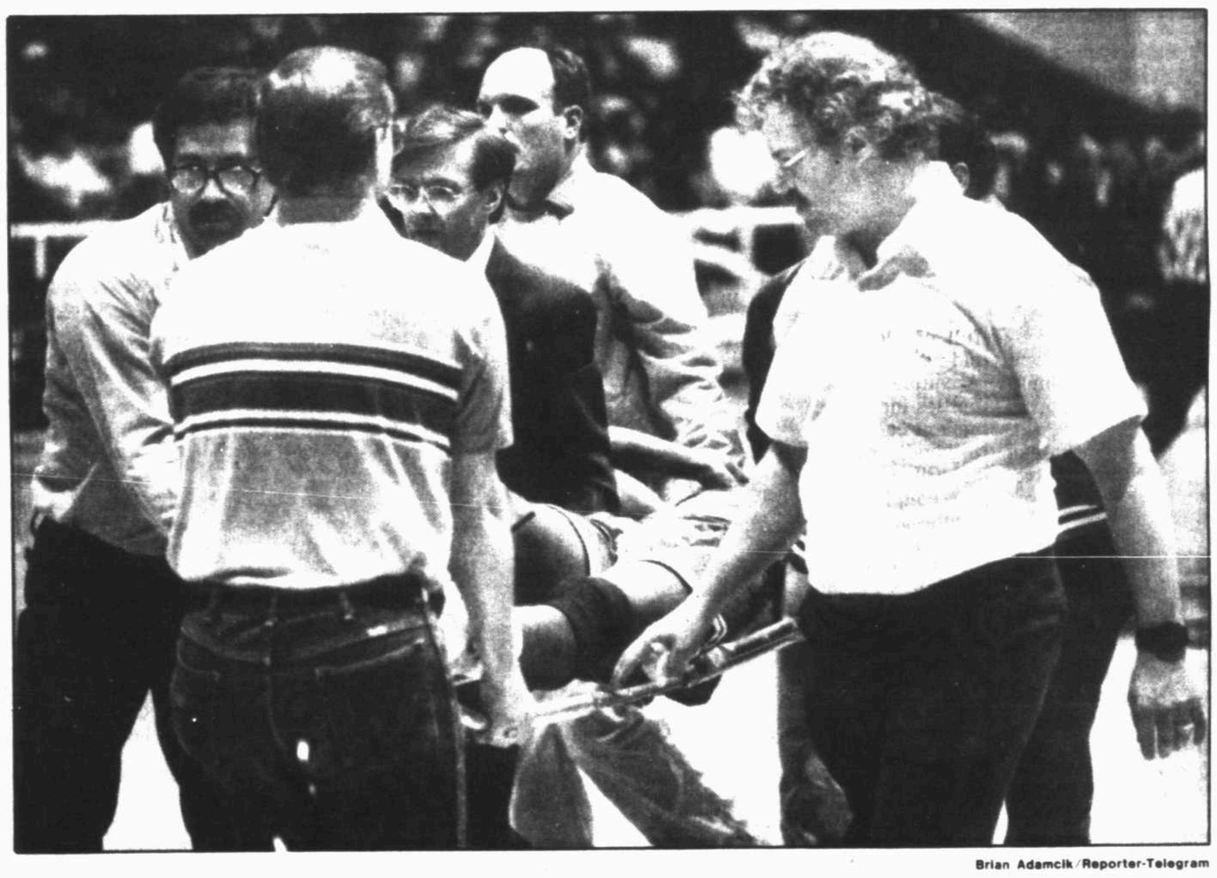

The hedge came when Parcells, who has one year left on a contract that will pay him $900,000 for the 1991 season, added: "Just like every year, I'll sit down and evaluate where I am and what I want to do."

Midland College player Marlon Jefferson is carried off the floor of the Odessa College Sports Center Monday night with a broken leg. The Chaparrals went on to lose to OC 100-79.

OC rides roughshod over MC

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — Officially, the Midland College-Odessa College game Monday night at the OC Sports Center will go down as a 21-point win for the Wranglers.

Unoffically, the score should read: OC 100, MC 79, Refs 53.

The two teams were called for a combined 46 personal fouls and seven technicals — six of which were called against Chap players and head coach Reggie Franklin.

Franklin and sophomore post Carroll Boudreaux were both ejected; Franklin after being called for a double technical with 1:37 remaining in the first half; Boudreaux after his third technical with 2:12 in the second half.

MC's Charlie Craine and OC's Nathan King were called for the sixth and seventh technicals late in the second half.

Even Pepe the Chaparral, Midland College's seven-foot, stuffed bird of a mascot, was ordered from the court — and in essence, ejected from the game by the grumpy official.

The good news for MC basketball fans is Franklin, Boudreaux and Pepe will return. The bad news is that Marlon Jefferson will not.

With just over four minutes remaining in the first half, the 6-6 MC freshmen suffered a compound fracture of his lower right leg. The break occurred when Jefferson, defending on OC's end of the court, came down after a Wrangler shot attempt and landed wrong on his leg. Jefferson reportedly told Franklin that while he was down, a Wrangler came down on his leg, resulting in a broken bone which tore through the skin in Jefferson's chin area.

OC came out of the chute Monday night looking more like the Wrangler rodeo team than cagers, riding the Chaps with an unrelenting pressure defense that didn't stop for the full 40 minutes.

The Wrangler defense accounted for 14 steals and five blocked shots, and forced 27 MC turnovers.

Jerry Taylor leaves OHS

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Jerry Taylor, whose fifth year as head football coach at Odessa High was both his most successful and his most turbulent, announced Monday that he would be leaving the school to accept the head post at Breckenridge.

"I have accepted the job at Breckenridge pending my release here in Odessa from my contract," said Taylor, who was offered a two-year deal at 3A Breckenridge following a special meeting of the school board there Sunday morning.

Two years remain on Taylor's current contract at OHS.

Taylor

He said he met with the OHS players before school Monday to fill them in on his decision.

"Well, there weren't any tears, but there weren't any cheers, either," Taylor joked, adding that the team took the news well.

Taylor will replace Bill Grisom, who left Breckenridge earlier this month to take over as head football coach and athletic director at Stanton. He also said his plans include taking a good portion of his OHS assistant coaches with him to the new post.

"We've learned over the years that we depend on them (assistants) heavily," Taylor said. "We plan to take several...two now and more at a later date."

Taylor refused to specify which assistants he would take.

John Wilkins, Director of Athletics for the Ector County Independent School District, said he, OHS principal Raymond Starnes and Superindendent of Schools Dr. Gene Buinger would comprise a search committee that would immediately seek a replacement for Taylor. He did

The most difficult thing that both Midland High and Midland Lee face tonight when the District 4-5A basketball wars resume is putting behind them last Friday night.

MHS defeated Lee by a 64-59 count in double overtime Friday. It was an emotional roller-coaster that could pose dangers for both the winner and loser.

The Bulldogs appear to be well on the way to a state playoff berth, owning sole possession of second place with a 6-1 record. However, MHS still has Abilene High, San Angelo and Odessa Permian on the road in a schedule that is full of reality.

MHS will host 2-5 Odessa High at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. today, but the Bronchos are coming off a big upset over Permian, all but dealing Mojo's playoff hopes total destruction. The Purple Pack is now among the hunted in the league and can't dwell on double overtime euphoria.

Lee, on the other hand, is 1-6 in league play and owners of sole possession of last place. The Rebels showed Friday that they can play on even terms with one of the league's best teams, but losing in dramatic double overtime can be the nail of doom for a team that has had a hard time finding the winning circle.

The Rebs hit the road for 3-4 Permian, a battered team that appears to be on the down swing with the loss to OHS and a couple of players to grades.

So, while MHS and Lee decide which direction the rest of the season is to take with these games tonight, District 4-5A's key matchup comes in San Angelo where the league leading 6-0 Bobcats take on 4-3 Abilene High.

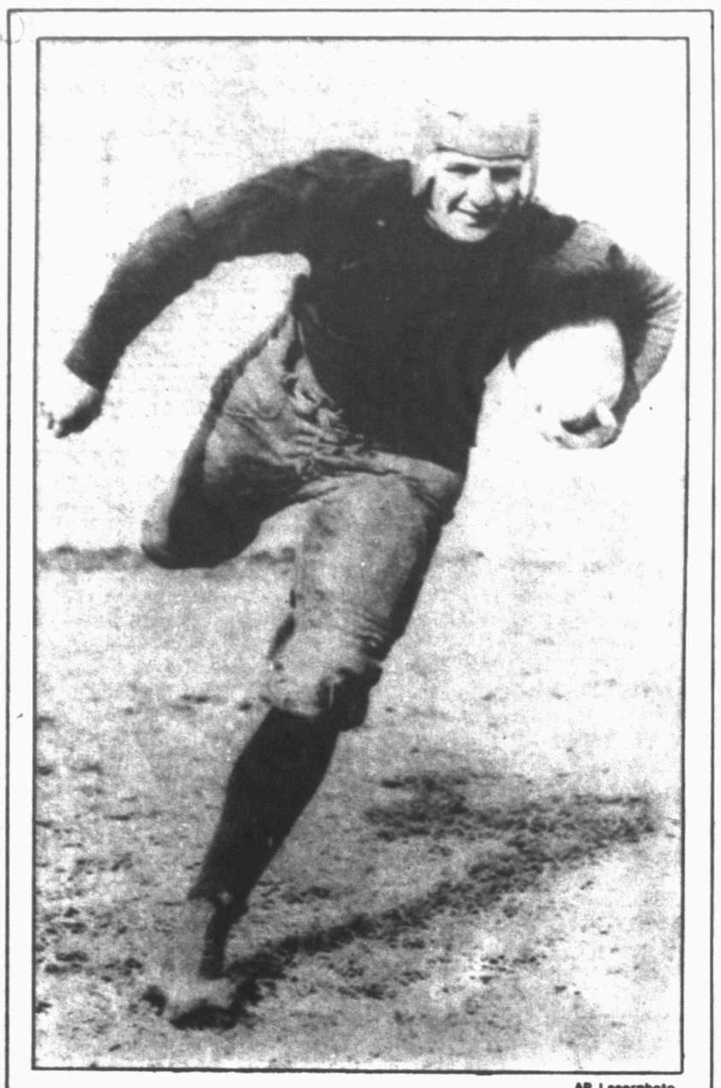

Abilene High seems to have the tools to make a playoff run, but it must start tonight in a key game. It is also important for MHS since the Bulldogs would like to see AHS lose to San Angelo, giving the Bulldogs breathing room in the race for the playoffs.

There is little drama left in the girls race in 4-5A. Abilene High, at a perfect 9-0, and Permian, at 8-1, appear to have a lock on playoff status.

Abilene High can nail down a playoff berth tonight with a win over San Angelo at home while Permian can step ever so close to that goal with a win over 3-6 Lee at the Lee gym at 8 p.m.

The Midland High girls, at 4-4, have slim hopes for the playoffs and could still be eliminated from the race tonight, even with a road win over 1-7 Odessa High. Any Permian victory or MHS loss at this point will eliminate the Lady Bulldogs from playoff contention.

'Galloping Ghost' made for football

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Harold "Red" Grange, the "Galloping Ghost" whose exploits popularized professional football, was remembered Monday as modest man who praised younger players, joked with his friends, and worked hard to pay for his education.

"I'll just use one word — humble ... the most humble person I've ever met," said former Illinois classmate Seely Johnston, who owns a Champaign sporting goods store.

Grange, who died Monday at age 87, was an electrifying collegiate athlete who ran for five touchdowns and passed for a sixth against Michigan in 1924. Later, Grange ignored the frowns of college coaches and joined George Halas' Chicago Bears, and his presence attracted thousands of fans.

"He'd make you feel at home, no matter who you were, and he never bragged. He always credited the other guys," Johnston said.

"Even the second-string players admired him. He'd tell them a tackle they made was the difference in the game."

Grange would put on his raccoon coat and ride around campus in Johnston's car. Students rushed over to meet the football star, but "he didn't ask for that — the social end of it," Johnston said.

Grange was born in Forksville, Pa., but after his mother's death, moved with his father to Wheaton, where he starred in four sports. Fraternity brothers at Illinois urged him to go out for the football team.

He wore No. 77 from 1923 through 1925, and was an All-American for three seasons.

There was no recruiting or athletic scholarships in those days. Grange worked summers delivering ice to pay for his education, earning the nickname "Iceman."

"He was the idol of all Illinois sports fans, from the day he ran wild against Michigan, and throughout his career," said Charles E. Flynn, a former Illinois sports information director.

"He did a great deal for the university ... through the inspiration he gave young people."

One was Howard Griffith, a high school running back from Chicago who also came to Illinois without a scholarship.

During the 1990 season — his last — Griffith broke Grange's 66-year-old touchdown records of five in a game, 13 in a season, and 31 in a career.

"He said he was thrilled to meet me and I was saying to myself, 'This guy has done everything and I've just done a few things in college.' To meet him and be able to come back and share that experience with my teammates was tremendous."

Grange left Illinois and coach Bob Zuppke at the end of the 1925 season for a $100,000 deal with Halas and the Bears, who had been averaging 6,000 fans a game. A crowd of 36,000, then a pro football record, saw Grange's first game, a Thanksgiving Day affair in which the Bears played a scoreless tie with the Chicago Cardinals at Wrigley Field.

Big crowds awaited Grange at every stop. On the New York stop of a 12-day, eight-game barnstorming tour, Grange's Bears attracted 73,000 to the Polo Grounds for a game with the financially troubled New York Giants. On Monday, a few hours before Grange died, the Giants won the NFL championship by beating the Buffalo Bills 20-19.

Syracuse holds off Connecticut

Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — Connecticut made just two field goals in the final 12 minutes, but it's the shot the Huskies didn't take Monday night that hurt them as their losing streak reached six games.

With the Huskies trailing No. 8 Syracuse 68-66 with 3 seconds remaining, John Gwynn took a pass from Chris Smith about 10 feet from the basket and was open for a second. But he opted to dribble instead and never got a shot off.

Gwynn said he didn't think Smith would pass it to him.

"At the very last second he passed me the ball and I had no shot. I had somebody on me," Gwynn said. "I knew how much time was left. But the play wasn't for me at all and I was shocked. I was going in for the rebound."

Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun, who saw the Huskies lose six straight for only the second time in his six years with them, declined comment on the final play.

The Huskies (12-7, 3-6) kept it close by making seven of eight free throws in the final 4 minutes. But Syracuse (18-3, 6-3) shut down the Husky offense, holding them to 29 percent shooting in the second half.

Dave Johnson led Syracuse with 27 points, while Billy Owens had 15 points and 16 rebounds and Scott McCorkle had 13 points. Smith had 25 points for Connecticut and Rod Sellers had 15.

Both teams had trouble shooting down the stretch with Syracuse going 3:59 without a field goal and Connecticut 8:47.

"Both teams were afraid to play basketball tonight," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. "It was like throwing passes to the other team. Nobody stole the ball tonight on either team.

"The kids are so concerned about everything they've been reading and hearing about how they can't play this or can't play that. But it's been only how many days since these two teams were playing great basketball? And it's because they're afraid to play and they're thinking about it too much."

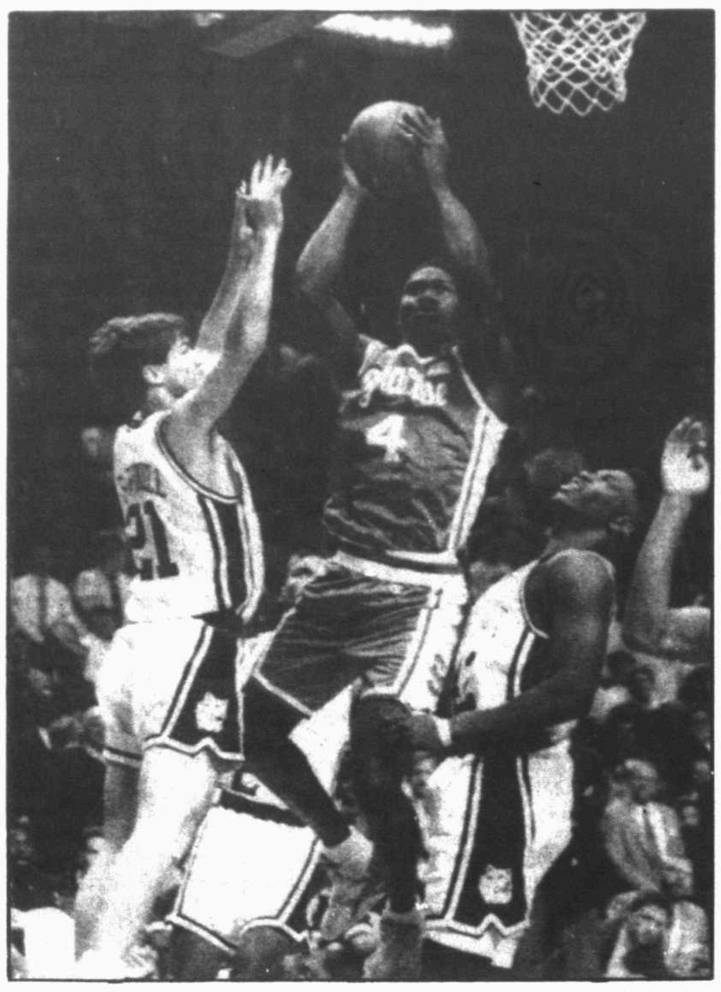

Johnson hit a 3-pointer with 3:08 remaining and converted the free throw for a four-point play to end Syracuse's field gal drought and give the Orangemen a 65-59 lead.

The six straight losses matches the Huskies' loss total for last season.

No. 16 E. Tennessee St. 99, Marshall 88

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. — Rodney English scored 24 points and Calvin Talford added 23 to lead East Tennessee State over Marshall in a Southern Conference game.

East Tennessee (16-2, 6-1) took its largest lead, 87-74, with 4:00 left to play after Trazel Silvers made two baskets and two free throws to cap an 8-0 run.

Marshall (9-12, 2-5) opened the second half with an 8-2 run to pull within 46-44 with 17:36 left to play. Marshall stayed close, trailing 60-59 with 11:41 left, but the Thundering Herd could come no closer.

Keith Jennings scored 15 points and handed out nine assists for East Tennessee State and Silvers added 12 points.

Brett Vincent, who led Marshall with 20 points, made six 3-pointers, five in the second half. John Taft added 17 points and was followed by Tyrone Phillips with 15 and Harold Simmons and Andre Cunningham with 13 each.

New Orleans, which started the season 0-3, had won 17 in a row.

Tulane's Michael Christian tied the game 68-68 with a 3-pointer at the buzzer in regulation. Each team then scored two free throws in the first overtime.

Anderson's 28 spurs Seattle

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Willie Anderson scored a season-high 28 points Monday night, including three straight baskets late in the fourth quarter as the San Antonio Spurs beat the Seattle SuperSonics 119-107 and extended their winning streak to five.

David Robinson added 25 points, 11 rebounds and eight blocked shots and Terry Cummings scored 24 points. Rod Strickland contributed 18 points, 12 assists and nine rebounds as the Spurs lifted their home-court record to 17-3.

The Sonics, losers of seven straight on the road, were led by Eddie Johnson's 21 points and Shawn Kemp's 15.

An 11-2 Seattle run, triggered by seven points from Olden Polynice, left the score tied at 100 with 3:37 to play. After the teams traded baskets, Anderson scored six consecutive points to give the Spurs a 108-102 lead with 1:48 left.

The Sonics came no closer than five the rest of the way as San Antonio finished with a 9-2 run, including a 3-point shot by Robinson at the buzzer, the first of his career.

Johnson scored 15 first-half points, including 11 in the second quarter to help the Sonics take a 57-50 lead.

Johnson hit three consecutive field goals midway through the second period, fueling a 9-1 run and leaving San Antonio in a 45-37 hole. But the Spurs outscored Seattle 37-21 in the third quarter to take a nine-point lead.

Pistons 87, Bullets 81

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — John Long made four free throws in the final 16 seconds and Joe Dumars scored 10 of his 27 points in the fourth quarter as Detroit beat Washington.

Long, signed to a 10-day contract after Isiah Thomas was injured, hit two free throws with 16.4 seconds left to put the Pistons ahead 85-81. He added two more with 7.7 seconds after getting fouled while rebounding Bernard King's 3-point attempt.

Dennis Rodman added 18 points Long had 10 as Detroit won its 15th in the last 17 games. The Pistons' 11th straight home victory made them 19-1 at The Palace, and Detroit is 27-3 when holding the opposition under 100 points.

King led Washington with 30 points. Harvey Grant added 10 as the Bullets lost to Detroit for the 13th time in 14 games.

The Pistons took control early in the fourth quarter with a 12-3 run that turned a one-point deficit into a 73-65 lead with 6:57 left. Rodman scored eight straight Detroit points during the burst.

NBA Roundup

Trail Blazers 116, Hawks 111

PORTLAND, Ore. — Terry Porter scored 23 points, including a key 3-point basket with 35 seconds left, and Portland beat Atlanta for its seventh straight victory.

Dominique Wilkins scored 21 points in the first half and finished with 34 for Atlanta. Spud Webb equaled his career-high with 26 for the Hawks.

Celtics 108, Timberwolves 87

MINNEAPOLIS — Brian Shaw scored 8 of his 23 points in the final 6 minutes and Boston made its final 11 shots to turn back a Minnesota rally.

Kevin McHale added 20 points and Kevin Gamble 19 for the Celtics, who are 5-6 without injured Larry Bird. Boston, which saw a 25-point lead shrink to 5 before its late surge, leads the NBA with a 25-1 record against the four most recent expansion teams.

The Celtics are also first in field-goal defense, limiting opponents to 44.5 percent. That came into play in the second quarter, when the Timberwolves shot 16.7 percent and tied a team record with just 10 points. Minnesota set a franchise record with only 31 first-half points on 25 percent shooting.

Kings 101, Nets 83

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Rookie Lionel Simmons scored a season-high 27 points as Sacramento defeated New Jersey.

Sacramento, 12-28 overall, won its fourth straight home game. Antoine Carr added 23 points for the Kings and Jim Les had a career-high nine assists.

Reggie Theus scored 18 points for the Nets, who had won two consecutive road games. Chris Morris had 14 points and Derrick Coleman 13.

Warriors 115, Knicks 106

The Warriors improved to 24-17, their best record at the halfway mark since their NBA championship season of 1975-76. Golden State has won eight of its last 10, with Richmond averaging 30 points per game in that stretch.

Nixon offers fishing tips

Staff Report

Larry Nixon, bass fishing's all-time leading money winner, brings his expertise to the Bass Fishing Techniques Institute being hosted by Midland College.

The program begins Wednesday from 7-9 p.m. Remaining classes are scheduled on Feb. 4, 7, and 11.

Nixon, from Bee Branch, Ark., has won the Bassmaster Classic, the B.A.S.S. Angler of the Year title twice and the $135,000 Megabucks title three times. He is one of only two anglers to win both the Bassmaster Classic and the B.A.S.S. Angler of the Year.

In all, he has won more than $900,000 in his sport and ranks first in all-time money winnings.

Nixon's winning edge in professional fishing, he says, has been his ability to keep his confidence and concentration high. He says the first step in doing this is to realize that the black bass is really a rather simple creature with basic needs for food, cover and comfort.

"The most sophisticated gadgetry on the market isn't worth anything until one learns to evaluate various areas in light of how well they satisfy those needs," Nixon says.

Many of Nixon's methods are standardized and he'll share them during the Institute. While Nixon is methodical in his search for bass, his approach seldom varies from one body of water to another. He believes the behavioral patterns of bass are basically the same and, as a result, techniques that produce well on one lake will generally continue to work elsewhere if conditions are similar.

Institute participants should be able to copy Nixon's techniques and experience increased success on their favorite bass water. Nixon makes no secret that he loves to fish the plastic worm. He will discuss plastic worm fishing from A to Z, including many of his favorite worm fishing tricks.

In addition to Nixon, others on the instructional staff will be top bass professional anglers Ken Cook, Randy Fite, and Dick Healey.

This program creates a classroom situation where participants can interact and learn from each instructor. The emphasis is on such techniques as flippin', pitchin', spinnerbaits, topwater, plastic worms, crankbaits and the new finesse baits. But each instructor has his own way of doing things and each will pass along the little things which help make a successful angler.

The cost of the four-session Institute is $53. Registration is handled in the Midland College Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. More information is available by calling (915) 685-4518.

Rebs fail to get all AP poll votes

Associated Press

UNLV continues unbeaten, but the Runnin' Rebels' dominance is no longer unquestioned.

For the first time in four weeks UNLV (15-0) failed to get all 64 first-place votes in weekly poll of sports writers and broadcasters.

In the poll released Monday, two voters picked Ohio State as No. 1. The Buckeyes moved from fourth to third after beating Indiana and Minnesota last week.

Ohio State (17-0) was one of four teams in last week's Top 10 which did not lose. The others were UNLV, a winner over UC-Santa Barbara and Louisville; Arkansas, which beat Texas A&M and Baylor and remained No. 2., and St. John's, which jumped from No. 10 to fifth with victories over Connecticut and Villanova.

UNLV, the defending national champion, is on a 26-game winning streak and has been No. 1 for 11 straight weeks. In the latest poll, the Runnin' Rebels got 1,598 points, 82 points more than Arkansas and 108 more than Ohio State.

Completing the Top 10 are No. 4 Indiana, St. John's, Arizona, Duke, Syracuse, North Carolina and Kentucky. Arizona dropped to sixth from fifth; Duke moved from ninth to seventh; Syracuse dropped from sixth to eighth; North Carolina dropped from No. 7 to No. 9 and Kentucky dipped from eighth to 10th.

Georgia Tech, which also beat Clemson and North Carolina last week, returned to the rankings after having missed four of the last six weeks. The Yellow Jackets had been as high as 14th earlier in the season.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — In the hour of their most devastating defeat, the Buffalo Bills may have actually validated their greatest triumph of the 1990 season.

The Bills swore all season that the "Bickering Bills" of 1989 were history, but it was a statement made in the euphoria of a 13-3 season. "Winning solves everything," said Jim Kelly.

The flip side — losing opens old wounds — wasn't addressed often, but more than a few skeptics wondered whether the stress of a big loss would destroy the chemistry and camaraderie forged in the course of this Super Bowl season.

Forget that theory. In the face of the most adverse conditions — a 20-19 loss to the New York Giants on Sunday when Scott Norwood missed a 47-yard field goal with 4 seconds to play — the Bills backed up all that team talk with the poise of champions.

"Just because we lost the Super Bowl doesn't mean we're going to start fighting," guard John Davis said Monday. "We've been a team through thick and thin. This is a different team. You all think we're still shades of 1989, but we're not. This is a totally different team and we've gotten our act together. And I think we've shown that."

The Bills were remarkably composed as their season faded into the Florida night with Norwood's kick. Many held hands along the sideline, a familiar sight to those who watched them do that in last year's playoff game in Cleveland when another last-minute drive ended unsuccessfully.

"There's no need to talk," nose tackle Jeff Wright added. "You don't have to talk."

The players, and owner Ralph Wilson, said they were convinced Norwood was going to win the Super Bowl for them.

"You give that kick to him 10 more times, he'll probably hit 10 of them," Pike said. "In my mind, I never thought we'd lose. That's the way it's been all year. The whole year I just knew if we had the ball last, we were going to win the football game."

"I thought we were going to win it," said Wilson. "But fate didn't quite blow our way last night."

When it was over, there was no finger-pointing, no angry locker-room confrontations, no crying about what could have been and no laying of blame beyond their collective responsibility in the loss.

"No one blew up. No one made a lot of stupid statements," linebacker Hal Garner said. "No one said, 'Hey, this is it, it's over.' Everybody's heads were up."

"I just don't have anything more to add," Levy said. "I talked myself blue in the face last night."

ABC, advertisers happy even with low TV ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC and a host of advertisers who bought commercials at $800,000 apiece were pleased with viewership of the Super Bowl, even though it could be one of the lowest-rated in 15 years.

Sunday's game averaged a 42.9 overnight rating in 25 major American markets. If that preliminary rating holds up in Tuesday's national count, it would be the third-lowest rating since the 1976 Super Bowl.

"We were encouraged to see how high the ratings were considering the state of the world," said Becky Madeira, a spokesman for Pepsi-Cola, one of the game's major advertisers.

The only lower-rated games in the past 15 years would be San Francisco's 55-10 victory over Denver on CBS last year (39.0), and ABC's 1988 game between Washington and Denver (41.9). The highest-rated Super Bowl of all time was the 1982 San Francisco-Cincinnati game (49.1).

"A year ago we had a 39 national over a 38.9 overnight, so coming off that, we should be doing pretty good," said Ron von Urff, an ad buyer for J. Walter Thompson in New York. "It could get into the 43s.

"Over the years, people have been given so much more to chose from, I doubt we'll ever see anything near a 50 rating again," said von Urff, whose company did not purchase any Super Bowl advertising this year.

The overnight returns are "about nine percent higher than last year," said Larry Hyams, an ABC's research director. Asked if the ratings lived up to ABC's expectations, he said: "Definitely."

National ratings generally are a little lower than the overnights, but this is not always the case. A ratings figure is the percentage of televisions in America. One national rating point is equal to about 931,000 homes.

When the final ratings come in, it is possible that the 1991 game might actually have been seen by more people than the 1982 game, despite its lower rating. In 1982, a ratings point represented 815,000 homes.

"Whatever the ratings were, I'm sure people watched longer than they usually do," Madeira said. "It was a quality audience.

"Besides, we really feel that the viewership of the Super Bowl is always under-reported because of the untraditional way in which it's viewed — in social settings with other people, in bars, and so forth."

PARCELLS: No quarterback controversy

(From 1C)

Parcells then talked about his plans for the next few weeks — making up his list of Plan B players; attending the pre-draft scouting combine in Indianapolis; and revamping his coaching staff, which has already lost receivers coach Tom Coughlin, the new head coach at Boston College.

It also could lose defensive coordinator Bill Belichick to a head coaching job in Cleveland or Tampa, and running backs coach Ray Handley, who has been accepted at George Washington Law School. Belichick and Handley would have been the two most likely candidates to suceed Parcells had he decided to leave.

As for Plan B, one of those on the Giants' unprotected list will undoubtedly be Anderson, who has been on it the last two years.

"I should be on it," said the 33-year-old running back, who won the MVP after rushing for 102 yards on 21 carries in Sunday's game.

Why?

Because the Giants have a stable of young running backs headed by rookie Rodney Hampton, who had moved ahead of Anderson until breaking his leg in the playoff victory over Chicago; all-purpose back Dave Meggett and second-year man Lewis Tillman.

Moreover, like most successful teams, the Giants tend to expose older players and protect younger talent — they lost nine players last season but picked up veterans such as Everson Walls, Dave Duerson, Matt Bahr and Lawrence McGrew to compensate.

Asked what Parcells had told him, Anderson laughed and went into a series of elaborate hand and facial gestures to simulate the conversation.

"Well ... you know ... it's like this," he said. "We talk for about 10 or 15 minutes and it sort of goes like that."

But Anderson, who hasn't even gotten a nibble the last two years, said that unless he gets an offer he can't refuse, he'd be back.

"I'd like to finish my career in New York," he said. "Am I ready to retire? No."

Parcells also said that as far as he's concerned, there's no quarterback controversy for next season. Jeff Hostetler, the 29-year-old who is 7-0 as a starter, led the Giants to three playoff victories in place of 35-year-old Phil Simms, who injured his foot Dec. 15 against Buffalo.

"I'll let you know at the start of camp next year," Parcells said. "Philip was 10-0 as a starter and that's not too bad."

Oil falls

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices slipped below $21 per barrel Monday in a futures market that has shown few signs of life since traders decided the war in the Persian Gulf posed no great threat to the world's crude supply.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in March closed at $20.96 per barrel, down 39 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude closed at $19.87 per barrel, down 13 cents, on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Part of the recent slow activity could be explained by the absence of some futures players who were stung by the collapse of oil prices, analysts said.

Home heating oil for delivery in February fell 1.09 cents to 68.28 cents per gallon. Unleaded gasoline for delivery in February fell .54 cent to 62.13 cents a gallon.

Natural gas fell 1.8 cent to $1.381 per 1,000 cubic feet, on contracts for delivery in March.

Dollar declines

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar drifted aimlessly lower in thin trading Monday, undermined by a lack of compelling news about the Persian Gulf war and continued worries about the recession, analysts said.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday, included: 1.4871 German marks, down from 1.4910; 1.2617 Swiss francs, down from 1.2628; 5.0515 French francs, down from 5.0685; 1,116.25 Italian lire, down from 1,120.50; and 1.1624 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1643.

Silver rose in New York, up 2.4 cents a troy ounce to $3.817 on the Commodity Exchange. The metal fell in London to a late bid of $3.81 a troy ounce from Friday's $3.82.

Stock market down

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market drifted through a mixed session Monday, levelling off after its rally of late last week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had climbed 56.19 points over the three previous sessions, slipped back 4.95 to 2,654.45.

Why oil prices fell when war started

■ Analysts are trying to answer the question of why oil prices crashed $10 after shooting began instead of jumping to $40 or even $100 a barrel.

By Dirk Beveridge

NEW YORK (AP) — During the weeks and months before the war with Iraq began, the world was deluged with predictions about how high oil prices would rise.

Experts were saying crude oil could hit $60, $80, even $100 per barrel once the shooting started. As the Jan. 15 deadline for Iraq to leave Kuwait drew near, some gasoline dealers started hoarding supplies. Some motorists began topping off their tanks.

Almost immediately after the bombs began falling on Iraq, several big oil companies said they were freezing gasoline prices. They called it a move to protect consumers from hyper-inflation.

Instead, prices collapsed, falling by a record $10.56 per barrel the next day at the New York Mercantile Exchange and raising the inevitable questions about how all the experts could be so wrong.

The answer lies largely in the psychology of trading in the futures markets, where the price of oil and many other commodities are determined.

In the case of oil prices over the past six months, the markets were moved by a "war premium," largely ignoring a global glut of oil that began building as more wells were put on line and demand fell off amid the higher prices.

"The one thing you can be certain of, is when all the analysts agree, they'll either put revolving doors on the millionaire's club, or we'll all be wrong," said Peter Beutel, an oil analyst with Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J.

Like others, he had expected oil prices to shoot higher, not make a record plunge in the hours after the war began.

"I was certainly caught off guard by it," Beutel said Monday. "I certainly didn't expect the reaction to be that swift or that violent."

The rise in oil prices after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait was initially rooted in uncertainty over the stability of the vital Middle East oil supply. At first, there were doubts about making up for the 4 million barrels of Kuwaiti and Iraqi crude that were taken off the world market each day, then there were fears that a war could threaten Saudi crude supplies.

Those fears kept the price of oil artificially high, even though the basics of supply and demand would have placed a much lower value on a barrel of crude.

Once the shooting started and oil crashed from above $30 per barrel to slightly above $20 per barrel, the analysts said they had been surprised by the apparent ease of the first allied attacks on Iraq. They also said they were calmed by perceptions that the Saudi fields would apparently face no threat.

The plunge should not have been a complete surprise, though, considering the nature of futures markets, where traders bet on the direction of a commodity's price by buying and selling contracts for future delivery.

Incomes don't keep pace with inflation

By John D. McClain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a robust 0.7 percent increase in December, Americans' incomes failed to keep up with inflation last year, government figures showed Monday.

The Commerce Department said incomes grew 6.0 percent during 1990. At the same time, inflation as measured by the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index jumped 6.1 percent. Incomes totaled $4.65 trillion after advancing 7.7 percent in 1989.

And Americans spent every bit of their added income. The report showed consumer spending rose an identical 6.0 percent last year. Consumption amounted to $3.66 trillion, following a 6.6 percent gain a year earlier.

The 0.7 percent income gain in December, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.75 trillion, came despite rising unemployment and was the largest since a similar 0.7 percent increase last March. It more than doubled last month's 0.3 percent inflation growth.

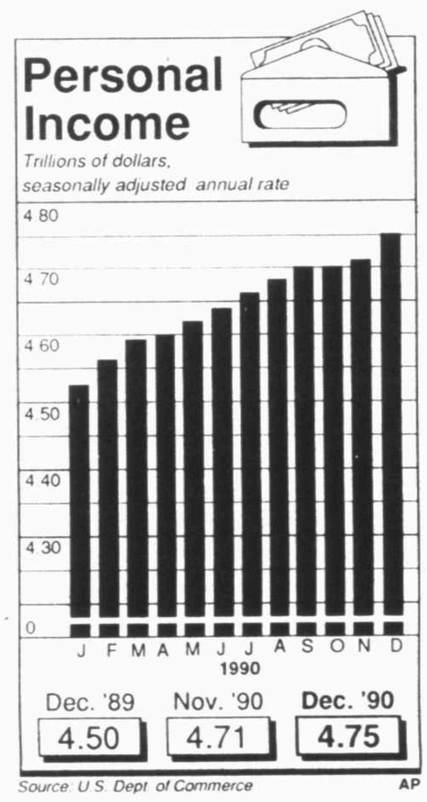

The December advance followed a revised 0.4 percent increase in November, which originally had been reported to be 0.3 percent. Incomes were unchanged in October.

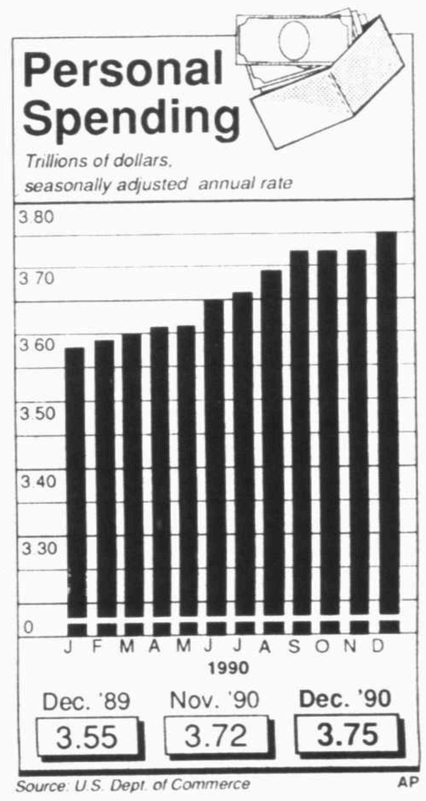

A key component of the income category — wages and salaries — jumped $26.8 billion after falling $2.2 billion in November. The November decline first was reported to have totaled $3.9 billion.

The December increase was a result of longer hours worked and higher rates of pay.

Southwest posts profit for 1990

■ Despite losing money in the first quarter, Southwest Airlines became the first major airline to report a profit in 1990 and credits its business practices for the profit.

By Evan Ramstad

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines Co. Monday said its profit was 34 percent lower last year than the year before.

But it still made money, the only major airline so far to report a profit in 1990.

Kelleher

Southwest's low-cost, short-haul structure helped it endure a fourth quarter of high jet fuel prices and onset of a recession.

The nation's eighth-largest carrier lost $4.6 million in the period and passenger traffic fell in December. Company officials have low expectations for the first part of 1991 due to higher fuel costs and lower consumer demand.

"Our traffic patterns continue to be erratic and, as a result, our first quarter 1991 revenue growth may not keep pace with 1990's growth rate," said Herb Kelleher, Southwest's chairman and president.

In the fourth quarter, Southwest's per-share loss was 11 cents on revenues of $301.6 million. In the same period of 1989, the company made $8.1 million, 18 cents a share, on revenues of $255.6 million.

For the year, Southwest earned $47.1 million, $1.10 a share came on revenues of $1.19 billion. That compares with the 20-year-old company's record profit in 1989 of $71.6 million, $1.58 per share, on revenues of $1.02 billion.

"Typically we do a little better during times of economic adversity than others," said John Denison, executive vice president of corporate services for the Dallas company.

Southwest said its average cost of jet fuel rose 31 percent from 59.5 cents a gallon in 1989 to 77.9 cents a gallon last year. The increase was much higher, 63 percent, in a comparison between the fourth quarter of 1989 and the same period of 1990.

"Had it not been for the rise in jet fuel costs, we would have recorded another record earnings year," Kelleher said in a prepared statement.

Fuel is typically the second-highest expense for an airline, after labor costs. Higher fuel costs, driven by the Middle East crisis, have been blamed for losses at other major airlines.

Fort Worth-based American Airlines, the nation's largest carrier, lost $39.6 million last year after a $215.1 million fourth-quarter loss wiped out three quarters of profits.

Delta Air Lines lost $154.0 million in the year after a fourth-quarter loss of $207.8 million, its worst quarterly performance ever. USAir lost $454 million in 1990.

Southwest is counting on air travelers flying shorter, lower-cost flights during the economic downturn, Denison said. "During times of less than robust economic growth, we've discovered people are typically looking around for greater value," he said.

The company has launched several fare promotions, some with one-way ticket prices as low as $20, during the first quarter, traditionally the slowest in the airline industry.

The threat of terrorism already is affecting international travel. And industry observers say higher fuel prices and possible air fair increases could impact domestic vacations.

"If you couple higher jet fuel prices with a recession, tourism could be in for something of a shock this year," said David Manuel, dean of the college of business at St. Mary's University in San Antonio.

Tourism is the second-leading industry in San Antonio, coming in only behind the military. In 1990, tourism generated an estimated $1.6 billion in direct spending from 10.5 million visitors. The Spanish missions, including the Alamo, draw millions of vistors each year.

JANE BRYANT QUINN

Gulf war may mean moderate recession

By Jane Bryant Quinn

NEW YORK–Two pieces of good economic news emerged from the Gulf War's opening days: The world will most likely continue to have an adequate supply of oil. And interest rates are lower now then they were a couple of weeks ago.

Quinn

This means lower inflation, easier credit and some debt relief. The recession is quite likely closer to its end than its beginning--passing, perhaps, as early as spring and no later than summer. "Worst-case scenarios don't make sense any more," says economist David Rolley of the forecasting firm DRIMcGraw-Hill in Lexington, Mass.

This good cheer, however, assumes that the hot war subsides within a very few weeks. If Saddam Hussein has an ace up his sleeve, or the ground troops get bogged down–in sand or in a chemical storm–the pain on the home front may be protracted, too.

In a long war, oil prices might move up again. Deficit spending on war production would telegraph more inflation ahead. The critical decline in interest rates would come to an end. Consumer confidence might take another dive.

Some war damage is already apparent in the economy, as worried travelers stay home, airlines and hotels lose customers and businesses put international deals on hold.

Nevertheless, it's hard to think of an industry that can't be helped by the current drop in interest rates and oil prices. Economist Roger Bird, a vice president of the forecasting firm, the WEFA Group, is especially optimistic about the manufacturing firms that produce for export (heavily concentrated in the Middle West). Europe has been a steady buyer of American-made machine tools, business electronics and other capital goods. Cheaper oil supplies will cushion Europe's downturn and increase its appetite for shopping in the United States, he says.

Oil prices may still jump around, but John Lichtblau, chairman of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, thinks they won't rise by much. The entire world stocked up on crude, for fear that the Saudi fields would close. When they didn't, the oversupply spilled into the market, driving prices–in just one day–from $32 a barrel down to $21, a historic drop.

At that price, gasoline at the pump should eventually fall by 20 cents a gallon, says Ben Brockwell, editor of the Oil Price Information Service. Heating oil could drop by 10 cents a gallon almost immediately and 45 cents by next September.

Slower inflation and easier money should lower interest rates even further, in the opinion of Jerry Jordan, chief economist at First Interstate Bancorp in Los Angeles. He puts the prime business lending rate at 8.5 percent by spring, down from 9.5 percent today.

If he's right, that means lower costs for businesses whose loan interest rates are pegged to the prime. Such a broad drop in rates should also bring out strong demand for home-mortgage money.

Jordan's interest-rate forecast falls on the optimistic side. Even so, most economists now believe that–barring a long and expensive war financed with vast amounts of deficit spending–the prospect of much higher rates is remote.

If you're living on income from your savings, consider switching some of your money out of floating-rate money-market mutual funds or bank accounts. The yield on short-term investments is likely to shrink. An intermediate-term Treasury or certificate of deposit, with a maturity of five years or so, is a better bet for protecting your income.

As for U.S. stocks, it's unknowable whether a new bull market has begun. At this writing, stocks have been strong since the day that the shooting started, reflecting the general expectation that lower oil prices and interest rates will soon show up in higher corporate profits. Doubters, however, point to the lingering recession as reason to think that stocks are likely to slide again.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broke.:

3) Once you've entered the numberical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key(*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:

- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key(*). Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.

* You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market chalked up a moderate gain today, following through on its rally of late last week.

Analysts said traders viewed the weekend news from the war in the Middle East as generally positive.

They also noted hopes that the economy might be faring a bit better than had generally been believed.

Last week the government reported that economic output contracted less than analysts had been estimating in the fourth quarter of 1990.

INCOME: Report cheers some experts

(From 5C)

"If wages and salaries keep growing at this rate, this recession will be a very brief one," he said.

At the same time, consumer spending increased 0.7 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $3.75 trillion, up from a revised 0.1 percent advance in November and a 0.2 percent decline in October.

Much of the boost was due to utility and new car sales. It was the biggest gain since a 0.8 percent advance last September.

Consumption in November first was said to have been unchanged from the previous month.

Consumer spending is considered a barometer of economic health since it accounts for about two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

Americans' savings rate — savings as a percentage of disposable income — slipped slightly in 1990, to 4.5 percent compared to a 4.6 percent rate in 1989.

The rate for December was unchanged from November's 4.2 percent, the highest since a 4.7 percent rate last July.

The spending and income figures were not adjusted for inflation. When adjusted, spending rose 0.5 percent after declining 0.1 percent in November and 0.9 percent in October.

Disposable incomes, when adjusted for inflation, also rose 0.5 percent, up from a 0.1 percent gain in November following a 0.8 percent decline the previous month.

Purchases of durable goods — items like cars and appliances expected to last more than three years — rose $4.9 billion. Spending on non-durable goods fell $2.1 billion. Spending on services jumped $19.9 billion.

OIL: Run-up psychological

trading is to "buy the rumor, sell the fact." That means prices are likely to rise on speculation about what could happen during future disasters, but once events unfold, they are usually not as bad as predicted and prices fall.

A favorite example of oil traders were various premature rumors that Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had died during the 1980s. The rumors moved the oil market more dramatically than the ayatollah's actual death.

The Persian Gulf war seems to have been nothing more than a huge case of a market moved by psychology.

"It was a classic example of buy the rumor sell the fact," Beutel said.

Nonetheless, it seemed like just about everybody was buying into the rumor that the war would bring high oil prices. Critics of the oil industry even started calling for the government to close the Mercantile Exchange during a shooting war, because they believed that would hamper any price run-up.

Even Big Oil miscalculated what would happen.

"The theory was that prices would spike immediately after the war began and at the point where it became clear about what would happen to supplies, it would begin to drop again," said Mike Libbey, a spokesman with Chevron Corp. "The theory worked. It's just that nobody thought military superiority would be achieved in 12 hours."

Chevron, based in San Francisco, was one of the majors that froze wholesale gasoline prices, in what was billed as an effort to help consumers avoid the shocks of skyrocketing oil prices.

"Our freeze was for at least seven days," Libbey said. "All of our projections were that the war spike would last at least seven days."

At Phillips Petroleum Co., in Bartlesville, Okla., there was no price freeze. But Phillips took steps to stop hoarding by gas station operators who tried to buy vast quantities and beat the rising prices.

"We'd seen a significant increase in the amount of gasoline being pulled from our terminals," Phillips spokesman George Minter said. "Initially, our thought was that it could get up as high as $60 per barrel in an armed conflict."

Mary Kay leaves Avon investors

NEW YORK (AP) — Chartwell Associates LP and Mary Kay Cosmetics Inc., dissident stockholders of Avon Products Inc., have terminated their partnership, apparently after a dispute over strategy.

Both sides denied there had been a disagreement, but they were vague about the cause of the breakup announced Thursday.

"We had our own reasons for determining that the partnership should end," said Lissa Perlman, a Chartwell spokeswoman.

Dwight Smith, a spokesman for Argonaut Partners I LP, the investment arm of Mary Kay, said the partners "each have their own visions as to how maximum shareholder value at Avon might be achieved."

"Those visions might be different and they might not necessarily be in conflict with one another," he said in a telephone interview.

A source close to Chartwell said the split resulted from a dispute between Mary Kay and the Internal Revenue Service.

Frozen fried potatoes win praise from testers

By Linda Anderson

Have you noticed the new "trendy" french fries? There's curly fries and spicey fries and fries in all kinds of shapes. The other day a friend of mine announced that she had heard of a new kind of french fried potatoes she wanted me to try — Fajita Fries (by Inland Valley, which is part of Universal Frozen Foods, a subsidiary of Universal Foods Corporation. See how complicated it gets?) — and it just so happened that these fries were on sale at a local supermarket.

Anderson

By coincidence (isn't it amazing), I ended up at that supermarket that very afternoon, and found the Fajita Fries in the frozen food section. By this time I was intrigued by french fries that were supposed to be flavored like fajitas, so I bought a bag to check it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

A 40-ounce bag (that's 2½ pounds, by the way) of frozen Fajita Fries cost $1.98. So did french fries in several other flavors and shapes, from the same food manufacturer. But fajita-flavored fries were what we wanted, so that's what we got. The curly fries and hot fries, etc., will have to wait for another time.

Label advertising claims these frozen fried potatoes have "South of the border Seasoning." Then it goes on: "Fajita Fries are cut from unpeeled premium russet potatoes grown in the rich volcanic soils of the Pacific Northwest. After a quick blanch (to seal in the natural potato flavors) they are crispy coated with a Mexican blend of natural seasonings and mild spices." Kind of interesting that potatoes grown in the Pacific Northwest should end up coated with South of the border Seasoning, don't you think?

Anyway, the taste-tests proved interesting. Everyone — adults and children alike (even a 5-year-old) like Fajita Fries. They were hot (they don't come with microwave instructions, only directions for preparation in the oven, broiler or deep-fat fryer), crispy, flavorful and delicious.

However (you knew there was going to be a "however," didn't you), they do not taste like fajitas. Fajitas are supposed to be marinated and then mesquite-grilled. These fries tasted like they had a chili-powder coating, but not a fajita coating. They tasted more like chili fries than anything else.

But they were good and a 40-ounce bag lasts a l-o-n-g time, so we got to enjoy them several times. The kids especially liked it when they got to dip the Fajita Fries in a (mild, of course) queso dip.

Early hours found to be best for exercising

Copley News Service

Exercise early for lasting results. A study by the Southwest Health Institute in Phoenix, Ariz., finds that three of four people who are morning exercisers continued their workouts one year later.

By comparison, only half of midday exercisers and one in four evening exercisers did. Excuses not to exercise are more likely to occur as the day progresses.

Consumer guide lists responsible companies

By Bobbi Ignelzi
Copley News Service

The next time you buy Fab detergent (Colgate Palmolive), Wheaties (General Mills) or Johnson's Wax (S.C. Johnson), you can be proud of yourself and your selections. The three manufacturers were rated the most "socially responsible" large companies by the 1991 edition of the consumer guide, "Shopping for a Better World."

Published by the New York-based public interest research group Council of Economic Priorities, the book rates 180 manufacturers of more than 2,000 household products on their practices.

Companies are rated on 12 issues: giving to charity, women's advancement, advancement of minorities, animal testing, disclosure of information, community outreach, investments in South Africa, concern for the environment, family benefits, workplace issues and policies, military contracts and nuclear power.

Top honors went to S.C. Johnson of Milwaukee, which contributes a generous 5 percent of pretax earnings to charity, offers family benefits such as financial aid for adoption and an expanded child-care facility, and has active community programs. The company has also significantly reduced the number of animals used in testing and has spent $300,000 to fund alternative testing methods.

Colgate Palmolive rated high because the company increased the number of minority officers to more than 10 percent, changed its plastic packaging to recycled materials and introduced new economical concentrated versions of popular products.

General Mills was commended for having two women on its board, two minority vice presidents and a new long-term insurance plan for employees' elder or disabled dependents.

Other large companies on the honor roll include Avon Products (makers of Avon cosmetics), Celestial Seasonings (teas), Hershey's (chocolate), Procter & Gamble (Cheer and Ivory), and Polaroid (cameras and film). There were also some small companies lauded, including Body Love Natural Cosmetics (Aroma Beads), Alexandra Avery (Alexandra Avery bodycare products), Dolefam (Monks Olive Oil), Cherry Hill Cooperative (Filomena's Marinara) and Imagine Foods (Rice Dreams).

The progressive practices contrast with the records of the poorly rated companies. One of those at the bottom is American Cyanamid (Fiber Con and Centrum vitamins), the third-largest emitter of toxic chemical waste in the United States, according to the guide. The company also has no women in upper-level management and refuses to disclose to the public information on its social initiatives.

Castle and Cooke (Dole Fruits and Sun Giant Raisins) also rates low because it has no women in top management, is a heavy user of pesticides and refuses to disclose safety policy information. Another low scorer, Abbott Laboratories (Murine Solution and Selsun Blue Shampoo), has no women or minorities in upper management and gives 0.3 percent to charity annually. Nesle, SA (makers of Baby Ruth, Fancy Feast, Mighty Dog) came in at the bottom because it uses animals in its tests, invests in South Africa and refuses to disclose information about their policies.

More than 800,000 copies have been sold since the first "Shopping for a Better World" guide was released in January 1989. The guide is published by Ballantine Books and is available in pocket-size paperback in most bookstores.

By Stephanie Turner
New York Times News Service

On a recent visit to a supermarket's overflowing cereal aisle, I counted 170 varieties, including such noteworthies as Cap'N Crunch's Christmas Crunch, Honey Teddy Grahams Breakfast Bears and Fruity Pebbles.

Ironically, the same companies that dole out sugar, artificial colors and cheap prizes to kids, claim to supply older breakfasters with enough fiber, vitamins and minerals to last the whole day.

Both ready-to-eat and hot cereals can be a superior choice for breakfast. No matter what type you choose, you ingest less fat and cholesterol than if you eat a breakfast of eggs, sausage and buttered toast. Most cereals have a mere gram of fat and no cholesterol. Cereals can also provide complex carbohydrates, fiber and iron.

Health experts recommend 20 to 35 grams of fiber a day. Though you should get it from a variety of sources cereals can make a definite contribution. The fiber content varies widely, from 5 grams for an ounce of Post Bran Flakes to 14 grams for Kellogg's All-Bran with Extra Fiber.

Look for dietary fiber content at the bottom of the nutrition label titled "Carbohydrate Information." Three grams or more per serving is a significant amount of fiber. Only rarely is the fiber broken down into soluble and insoluble types. Soluble fiber is the type shown to lower blood cholesterol. The cereals that included this breakdown show about one-fourth of the dietary fiber as soluble, usually 1 gram.

To figure out the amount of sugar a cereal contains, look at the "Carbohydrate Information" section for the words "Sucrose and Other Sugars." To determine the number of teaspoons of sugar, divide the number of grams by four, since a teaspoon of sugar weighs 4 grams. I consider up to 7 grams to be acceptable, although there are many cereals with less.

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — You can never be too careful, it seems, while choosing your bedding.

Sleeping beneath an electric blanket hasn't been proven to cause cancer or birth defects, but researchers ranging from scientists to epidemiologists are slowly gathering evidence that suggests a cause and effect might exist.

In December, the United States Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) Office of Health and Environmental Assessment drafted a report that addressed various scientific studies of the effects of electromagnetic (EM) fields emitted by power lines, video display terminals and the wires within electric blankets.

The findings of the EPA draft are, at best, ambiguous. The draft both acknowledges various epidemiological studies that have indicated an association between EM fields and certain types of cancer, and other epidemiological studies that do not substantiate an association.

Noting that there are "insufficient data to determine whether or not a cause and effect relationship exists," the agency called for further research.

To that end, the Nonionizing Electric and Magnetic Fields Subcommittee of the Science Advisory Board's Radiation Advisory Committee will meet in Washington, D.C., Monday through Wednesday to review the EPA draft and evaluate information.

"Electric blankets do (emit) large numbers of magnetic fields," said Bob McGaughy, an epidemiologist and member of the EPA's Research and Development Office. "You're exposed to much more magnetic fields than from any power lines. The exposure is the fact. The question is: 'What is the effect that it has?'"

Dlugosz compared 535 mothers who had used an electric blanket during pregnancy with 535 women who did not. The study revealed no evidence of risk. Dlugosz, however, remains unconvinced and said he plans to continue his research.

"It was a limited study," Dlugosz said. "It needs additional study because it is a physical force that has demonstrated biological effects. From a research aspect, we need to look at these appliances very carefully, and it will take a lot of research to settle the issue one way or another.

"My own personal feeling is that if I was going to procreate children, just to be safe, I would avoid electric blankets."

Scientists have been studying the effects of EM fields since 1979, but research has intensified in the past few years, Dlugosz said.

As a result, perhaps, low-magnetic-field electric blankets have begun to hit the market. Dlugosz recommends them if you're determined to buy an electric blanket.

Chicago-based Northern Electric, among the nation's largest manufacturers of electric blankets, began marketing only low-magnetic-field blankets in 1989.

The new blankets are made with a set of wires designed to cancel the magnetic fields of other wires. Low-magnetic-field blankets have been reported to emit less than 5 percent of the magnetic fields of old blankets.

DEAR ABBY

Obese woman finds contentment in life

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am an obese woman. I like the way I look and feel, so why can't other people accept me the way I am? I admit I am about 75 pounds overweight. I've tried all kinds of diets, diet doctors, fat farms, exercise classes — but nothing works for me. The weight comes off, but it doesn't stay off.

Van Buren

I work for a company that requires uniforms, so when I went to be measured for my uniforms, they had a man there doing the measuring. First he asked me to try on a jacket. It was very snug, so the man said, "Gee, lady, you really should do something about all that fat!" I love my job — that's why I chose to write to you instead of reporting that rude man to management.

I like myself the way I am. Being fat protects me from being raped, chased by dirty old men and getting AIDS because men aren't interested in fat women. So please ask people to lay off fat women. — HAPPY WITH MY SIZE

DEAR HAPPY: If you're really happy with your size, you have no problem.

People who make personal remarks about other people (too fat, too thin, too short, too tall, etc.) are rude. Ignore them.

Being fat does not protect you against being raped or chased by dirty old men — or dirty young men, for that matter.

I applaud you for accepting yourself as you are. There are others who share your attitude. They are members of the National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance — NAAFA. I have seen their newsletter. It's filled with pictures of good-looking, confident men and women attired in evening clothes, sportswear and swim suits — having fun, just being themselves with not even a hint of self-consciousness.

NAAFA is dedicated to improving the quality of life for fat men and women everywhere through education, research, advocacy and support. The organization is a godsend to people who are tired of being discriminated against because of their size.

For information about this national organization, write to NAAFA, P.O. Box 188620, Sacramento, Calif. 95818. It is a well-established, legitimate, non-profit organization, so please enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

DEAR ABBY: On Dec. 14, my husband and I were having dinner in a nice restaurant in Bakersfield, Calif. Across from us, at a table for two, a nice-looking, middle-aged man was sitting alone. We exchanged several friendly glances, and as he was leaving, he paused at our table, smiled, and said, "Good night." We replied in kind. A short while later, our waitress came to our table and told us that the gentleman who had just left had paid for our cocktails, steak dinners, wine, the tip — everything! She then added, "He asked me not to tell you until after he left."

We were speechless! What a lovely holiday surprise. We have no idea why a total stranger would want to treat us. Have you?

If that gentleman reads your column, we want him to know that we donated the money we would have spent at that restaurant to our favorite charity. — JOHN AND AUDREY IN BAKERSFIELD

DEAR JOHN AND AUDREY: I, too, am wondering why the gentleman wanted to treat you anonymously. It's possible that he was lonely dining alone, and after having exchanged several friendly glances, he had hoped you might invite him to join you.

Or maybe he just liked your looks and is the kind of person who enjoys treating people anonymously.

AT WIT'S END

Worry more about big minds than tiny waists

By Erma Bombeck

Oprah Winfrey has just made one of the most courageous statements of our times. She has said, "I will never diet again." That's a declaration that belongs right up there with "Give me liberty or give me death" and "Read my lips: no new taxes."

Bombeck

In a world of plastic food pouches, powders and pills, stationary rowing machines, treadmills to oblivion and stairways to nowhere, it's like a breath of fresh air.

Women in this country are not happy. Half of them are overweight and live in fear they cannot lose a pound. The other half are thin but terrified they won't be able to stay that way. They are resentful because they're starving and miserable when they eat, knowing every olive will leave a bulge in its wake.

Basically, dieters are incapable of admitting the truth to themselves. Monday's pledge turns into Tuesday's hedge; New Year's resolutions are February's disillusions. The rest of the time we beat ourselves to death with the feeling that we have failed at something. But if our weight is not a threat to good health, we have failed at nothing.

At some point in our lives we have to come to terms with the way we look. Eleanor Roosevelt did not have the body of a nymph who graces the pages of a Victoria's Secret catalog. What she did have was one of the finest minds of any century. I interviewed her once and was awed.

In the hall of first ladies in the Smithsonian, Eleanor Roosevelt is depicted as a size 10. All first ladies there are a size 10 because someone a long time ago decreed that all first ladies should be created equal and thin. Why?

The symbol of our country, the Statue of Liberty, has a 420-inch waist and she's breathtaking. Peter Paul Rubens' wife was termed "ample," but she was beautiful enough to appear in 19 of his famed canvases.

Susan B. Anthony and Golda Meir had a little meat on their bones. So do Barbara Jordan, Rosemary Clooney and Helen Hayes. But that is not what they will be remembered for.

They will be noted as women who had something more important in their lives to do than fall on their knees over a Dove Bar, beating their chests and chanting, "Forgive me my sins."

They are women of vision who one day saw a sparrow on their windowsill and said, "I have seen my future ... and you are not it."

If your work schedule is too hectic Monday through Friday to allow you time to take care of your dry cleaning needs, Comet Cleaners has a handy solution. Comet Cleaners dry cleans on Saturdays for your convenience. Just bring your clothes by any of the three Comet locations by 10 a.m. any Saturday and your clothes will be ready for pick up by 3 that afternoon.

Comet Cleaners is committed to customer satisfaction and convenience. Store hours are designed for the special needs of working people. Hours are 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

Production taken in by 10 a.m. will be out by 5 p.m. that day.

You'll see that the commitment ranges all the way from the counter personnel to upper management. For example, Paul Graves, manager of the three Comet locations in Midland, has been associated with the Comet franchises since 1982. He began his career with Comet Cleaners in Big Spring and has been involved with other stores in several Texas towns ever since.

Graves is responsible for employee training, plant management, equipment repairs and plant operations. His drive and enthusiasm for his job and the people he works with is apparent.

"We operate from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday for only one reason — our customers," Graves explained. "We stay open late because many of our customers are business people."

"If we have promised something to a customer, we won't leave here until it is done. We emphasize front end service and we have two expert dry cleaners on each shift. Customers can come in and expect professional advice about their clothes from front end managers Sylvia Esquivel and Rhonda Barnes." Sylvia and Rhonda are on duty at 3108 W. Cuthbert.

Graves added that Comet Cleaners is a member of the International Fabric Care Institute for the customer's benefit. "This provides the customer with answers to their questions. We are proud to be one of the few cleaners in this area which can provide this information."

You can depend on Comet Cleaners as have scores of Midlanders since the first location opened September 3, 1982. Owner Billie Jo Corbell opened her first Comet Cleaners at 2606 N. Midland Drive. That was the beginning of the famous "Drop your pants" specials which are designed to save money and give a chuckle or two. Comet Cleaners is West Texas owned and operated.

Other Comet Cleaners specials and services include:

- Handy drive through service at each location.
- Minor alterations (hems, zippers and mending) in before 9:00 a.m., out by 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday
- Major alterations and professional tailoring Monday through Friday
- Hand wash (professional finish)
- Leather and suede cleaning
- Draperies
- Free repairs on minor needs and a small charge on some garments
- Dress shirts .99 cents each
- Mens and ladies pants 3 pair dry cleaned for $4.99
- Same day service (every day Monday through Saturday) and one hour cleaning upon request
- Member of International Fabric Care Institute
- Free personal consultation upon appointment
- Deodorizing (no heavy solvent odor)

So come by any of the three Comet Cleaners locations and see for yourself the Comet difference. Stores are located at 3108 W. Cuthbert and 2606 N. Midland Drive (with one hour service available), and 2106 N. "A" Street (package mailing, UPS and gift wrapping available). For further information, please call the main office at 689-9723.

Paul Graves, left, and Sylvia Esquivel are just two of Comet Cleaners dedicated employees in the store located at 3108 W. Cuthbert. Comet Cleaners offers three locations to serve you in Midland Monday through Saturday.

Save up to 30 percent on all holiday and winter fashions at Lou's

Shop for spring and save on all winter and holiday wear as well as selected spring looks now at Lou's, in San Miguel Square. Standing in the doorway of her shop is owner Lou Peters.

Save up to 30 percent now on all holiday and winter fashions and a select group of spring looks from Lou's, located in San Miquel Square at Midkiff and Wadley. Owner Lou Peters and her staff are at your service to help you select a look that's just right for you at a reduced price. And you can take advantage of Lou's handy 90-day layaway plan during this sale.

You won't want to miss out on Lou's top notch selections in a variety of sizes. Lou's carries dresses and coordinates in Missy sizes 2 to 18, Junior sizes 1 to 13 and Petite sizes 2 to 16.

"We carry one of the biggest selections of dresses in town," assessed Mrs. Peters. "We offer the hard-to-find size 1 clothes," she added, noting that designers are finally beginning to make more of the smaller sizes.

Lou's is an exclusive shop in Midland for such well-known brands of dresses as Brenner, Rebecca-B, and Executives for the Career Lady. Other often asked for brands at Lou's include Vicky Vaughn, Toni Todd, Seret, Eileen Scott and dressy Missy suits by Park Square.

A large selection of dresses by many of these well-known dressmakers is on sale now. Great for work or for special occasions, these dresses are priced to boost your wardrobe at a time of the fashion season when you need a change.

Lou said that one of the greatest looks which took hold last year and is still very popular this year is "liquid leather." This shop carries liquid leather by Pierre Lamonte in slacks, jackets, skirts and matching t-shirts and blouses with liquid leather trims in a rainbow of brights such as turquoise, peach, red, black and jade. "You just have to feel it to know it isn't leather," said Lou. "They wash and dry like a dream." These selections are perfect for working women.

Many coordinating polyester groups are sale priced now. These can be worn year round. Choose from selections by Shirt Strings of California. For the petite lady are basic polyester gabardine separates by Kevin Stuart. These include skirts, blazers and jackets in black, red and magenta.

One hundred percent nylon parachute jogging suits in vivid colors by Clipper Bay in sizes small, medium and large are on sale at Lou's. These worry-free clothing look terrific!

Also choose from suedecloth suits by Boston Traveler, mix and match silk pieces by Jessica and Just Silk wash and wear silk separates. Various blends of sweaters are reduced. Select from famous brands as Sweater Bee, Northern Isles, Rochelle, Joyce and Eddie Dassin. You'll also like the savings on lined sweater jackets by Tamie of California.

If you are looking for a party dress or a mother of the bride dress, they are stored in the back of the shop, so don't hesitate to ask the staff for assistance.

Spring items are arriving now, so stop by soon and see what's in fashion for warmer weather. One-piece romper short sets with banded leg bubbles are a new spring trend. Walking shorts with matching tops are predicted to be a big hit for working women this spring and summer. And pastel to bright vivid are spring colors you'll be seeing at Lou's.

Lou, who has owned the shop in San Miguel Square for 13 years, has called Midland home for 34 years. She and her husband, Wayne, have three children, a foster child and two grandsons. She is a professional in the retailing field, and Midlanders trust her to carry quality and up to date fashions.

Lou's also carries a large selection of gorgeous costume jewelry in the form of earrings, scarf clips, bracelets, necklaces and more in pearls, gold and silverplate, woods and rhinestones.

Lingerie is also available at Lou's, such as pant liners and half slips for kulottes. Also in stock are full slips and camisoles.

Senior citizens are encouraged to shop at Lou's and to use their Midland Gold and Permian Gold cards for a 15 percent discount. Lou's also puts on style shows for club events. Just call for information.

It's easy to shop at Lou's, where your Visa, Discover, MasterCard and 90 day layaway (payments may be made at your convenience) are welcomed. Gift certificates are available for those in doubt on size or color. Shop during the store hours of 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Call 694-2821 for more information.

Death toll rises to 17 in Haiti

■ The Haitian army is blaming extremists for the weekend of bloody clashes which left 17 dead and 14 injured in Port-au-Prince.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The army on Monday accused extremists of stirring up street protests that led to violent clashes with soldiers and the deaths of at least 17 people.

In a statement broadcast by independent Radio Haiti Inter, the Army High Command said subversive groups, which it not identify, were trying to pit Haitians against its security forces and destabilize this poor Caribbean nation.

The army "reiterates its commitment to respect the constitution and the will of the people," the statement said.

Haiti Inter also said at least 17 people were killed and 14 wounded in Sunday's disturbances, seven higher than tallies of a day earlier.

Thirteen people, including a 5-year-old boy hit by a stray bullet, were killed in clashes between protesters and soldiers in the Carrefour and Cite Soleil slums, according to Haiti Inter and other radio reports.

Four others died when a mob burned the home of a reputed member of the outlawed Tonton Macoute militia during a birthday party, the reports said. Two of the dead were identified as blind musicians.

Government and military officials said the unrest was provoked by unfounded rumors of a plot to free Roger Lafontant and 15 other Duvalierists captured after a Jan. 6 attempt to overthrow the interim government of President Ertha Pascal-Trouillot.

Lafontant once headed the Tonton Macoutes, the dreaded private militia that enforced the 29-year dictatorship of Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier and his late father, Francois "Papa Doc." The dictatorship ended when the younger Duvalier fled to exile in France on Feb. 7, 1986, after a popular uprising.

The Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, a populist Roman Catholic priest who campaigned on an anti-Duvalierist platform, won two-thirds of the vote in the Dec. 16 election. He is to be inaugurated Feb. 7, five years after Duvalier's fall.

Aristide, who arrived Monday for a three-day visit to the French capital, said, "The events of the weekend showed that the will of the people is to install a real state of law in Haiti."

Aristide is to have breakfast in Paris with President Francois Mitterrand on Tuesday and then meet Premier Michel Rocard, Foreign Minister Roland Dumas and other officials to discuss French aid.

France is the second-largest donor of aid to Haiti after the United States, contributing $19.5 million in 1990.

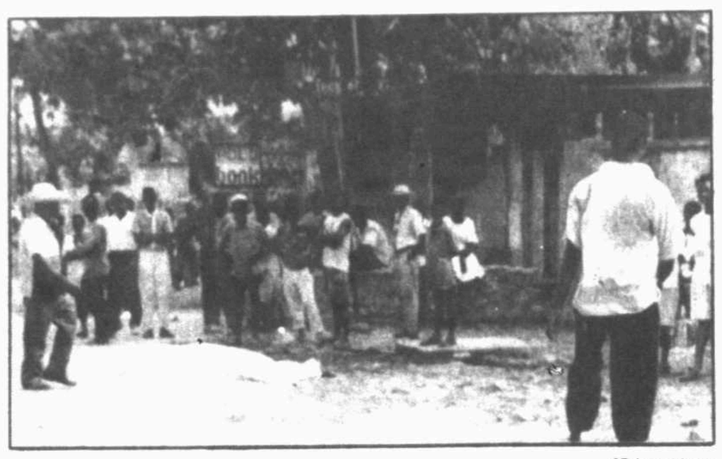

Speaking to reporters before his departure, the president-elect extended sympathy to the families of those killed Sunday and said the army would maintain order, working "hand-in-hand" with the people.

But he stopped short of condemning the violence, saying: "When there is impunity, we can expect terrorist acts." He was referring to the failure of previous governments to punish perpetrators of atrocities carried out during and since the Duvalier rule.

Aristide, expelled from his conservative ecclesiastical order in 1988 for allegedly fomenting revolution, has been criticized for ambiguous public statements regarding mob violence.

The coup attempt touched off a wave of reprisal killings, looting and pillaging that left at least 75 dead. Aristide denounced the violence but called for "vigilance without vengeance," which critics said could be interpreted as encouraging the masses to take justice into their own hands.

Haiti has a long history of violence and despotic rule dating to its independence in 1804 from France. Its 6 million residents are among the poorest in the Western Hemisphere.

Ousted East German leader's trial should be revealing

BERLIN (AP) — One of the most powerful men in East Germany's ousted Communist leadership goes on trial Tuesday in a proceeding that is expected to reveal a detailed look into a regime riddled with corruption.

Harry Tisch, a hot-tempered member of the now-ousted ruling Politburo and director of the 9-million-member state-run labor union, will be the first member of Erich Honecker's deposed government to be prosecuted in court.

For more than a year, authorities have alleged the hard-line Communists routinely plundered the country's meager finances, to provide luxuries for themselves, friends and family that went far beyond what was available to the masses.

Millions of dollars worth of money — perhaps tens of millions — allegedly was misused or smuggled out of the country, which was unified with Germany on Oct. 3. Much of the money has yet to be accounted for.

Tisch has been jailed in Berlin pending his court appearances. The trial is expected to last at least six weeks.

If convicted on all three counts of illegally appropriating money and breach of trust, Tisch could be sentenced to 10 years in prison from the Berlin Regional Court.

According to the indictment, Tisch misappropriated $1 million from the union for a hunting lodge and vacation compound for himself near the Baltic Sea.

As head of the Free German Trade Union Federation, Tisch used to boast that the organization did "what was right for the working class and all workers."

Defense lawyer Winfried Matthaeus said he will present the court with a medical report proving Tisch is unable to stand trial.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Two quakes hit New Zealand

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — Two earthquakes shook parts of New Zealand's South Island on Tuesday, damaging a main highway and toppling chimneys.

There were no immediate reports of injuries.

The earthquakes, measuring 6.0 and 6.1 on the Richter scale, were "quite strong by New Zealand standards," a Department of Scientific and Industrial Research spokesperson said.

The first temblor was centered almost directly under the town of Westport, about 150 miles southwest of Wellington. There were six or seven aftershocks before a slightly stronger quake hit about nine miles from Westport five hours later.

Chief seismologist Dr. Warwick Smith said there were reports of fallen chimneys in Westport, broken windows and merchandise falling off shelves in stores.

There were also reports of severe cracks in the main highway linking Westport with the town of Nelson.

Research center staff said Tuesday that New Zealand has about 150 earthquakes a year measuring 4.0 to 4.9 on the Richter scale, but few measure 5.0 or greater.

Meeting raises hope

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — After months of bitter quarreling, rivals Nelson Mandela and Mangosuthu Buthelezi are to come together Tuesday for a meeting that has raised hopes for reconciliation between warring supporters.

The meeting, however, is considered largely symbolic, and it's unclear how much time the nation's most powerful black leaders will spend alone together because each is traveling with a handful of delegates.

But a friendly encounter is seen as crucial to ending years of black faction fighting between backers of Mandela's African National Congress and Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party.

"We do not expect miracles from Tuesday's talks, but the mere fact these two leaders will be seen talking may cause sanity to prevail among their followers," said the black-oriented newspaper City Press.

Since 1986, about 6,000 blacks have died in fighting linked to the ANC-Inkatha feud.

Landsbergis unhappy

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said Monday he hoped that the postponement of next month's U.S.-Soviet summit would not encourage more Soviet military aggression in the Baltics.

The statement by U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh announcing the postponement did not mention the crackdown in the Baltics that has claimed 19 lives in Lithuania and Latvia. It cited the Persian Gulf war and troubled arms control talks.

Landsbergis said the United States could have put forth "a very clear position" in citing the violence in Lithuania.

Militia claims killing

The Ulster Freedom Fighters said Sean Rafferty, 44, was killed Sunday night becuase he was "deeply involved with the Provisional IRA in north Belfast."

Police late Monday said they were searching for three assailants, who reportedly drove away the shooting scene and set the car ablaze in the nearby Protestant-dominated Shankill district.

Neighbors said Rafferty was killed in the kitchen of his home. The killing was witnessed by his children, aged 11 to 21. His wife was upstairs at the time.
