Congress gets preview of budget

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan sent advance copies of his 1986 budget to an already skeptical Congress on Saturday and said his plan — which would cut domestic spending by nearly $40 billion next year — is "the most exhaustive effort ever made to rein in government's chronic overspending."

Reagan defended his call for increasing defense spending even while cutting or eliminating many popular domestic programs. "Every proposal is based on a careful review of what government should and should not do, what's worked and what hasn't, what we can and can no longer afford," he said of his $974 billion plan.

Under the proposed budget, defense spending would grow by nearly $30 billion.

Reagan used his weekly radio address to urge Congress to join in a "strong bipartisan effort" to enact his budget. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., replying for Democrats an hour later, pledged a "respectful" hearing for the recommendations of the newly re-elected president. But other Democrats made it clear they will seek additions for domestic programs while trying to reduce the president's proposed $277.5 billion Pentagon budget.

"It just isn't realistic at all to think that you can get your total savings, or make substantial reductions in these enormous deficits solely from domestic..." programs, said House Democratic Leader James Wright of Texas.

In the Senate, GOP leaders said they would push for a quick vote on a round of budget cuts, even while repeating their view that chances for passage were reduced by Reagan's refusal to accept reductions in the defense buildup.

Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico met with Budget Director David Stockman, who expressed optimism that the bulk of the president's proposals would be accepted.

"The initial reading is that a great majority of the freezes and cuts that we have in the budget will be acceptable," Stockman said.

"There are some problem areas," he added. "I'm not going to list them ... We're aware of defense."

The president's budget was due out formally Monday, and copies of the plan were distributed to Congress and to reporters on Saturday with the understanding that the material not be made public until 1:30 p.m. EST Monday. Even so, most budget details — ranging from a wage cut for federal workers to reductions in mass transit aid — were leaked well in advance. And Friday night, some reporters obtained access to an administration summary.

The summary obtained by reporters was not among the five books with gray covers containing Reagan's official fiscal 1986 budget presentation. Those gray-covered books were for formal release Monday.

Sources who asked not to be identified by name said overall spending for the year was pegged at $973.7 billion, with revenues of $793.7 billion and a deficit of $180 billion.

In all, Reagan's budget calls for a reduction of $50.1 billion in the deficit — nearly $9 billion from the Pentagon's original request for the year, $3.1 billion in savings from interest on the debt and the balance, nearly $39 billion, from domestic programs.

Reagan recommended no tax increase, and said he would submit legislation to Congress to simplify the income tax code.

Temperatures warm slightly

From Staff and Wire Reports

Saturday's sunny skies and warmer temperatures that opened runways for commercial flights at Midland Regional Air Terminal and both lanes of Interstate 20 are also the cause of more than 100 phone calls received by the city about broken water pipes.

Overnight freezing temperatures, including Saturday's low of -11 which tied the Tall City's all-time record low, were responsible for icy roads that resulted in the minor medical treatment of at least five people involved in traffic accidents.

According to police reports, Nellie B. Sharpe, 53, of 1110 Austin No. 19, suffered minor injuries after her 1979 Datsun two-door was hit from behind by a 1972 Toyota Celica in the 3300 block of Andrews Highway at 11:30 a.m. Friday. Ms. Sharpe was treated and released, according to a MMH spokeswoman. The driver of the other car, 19-year-old Lisa D'Ann Ramirez, was not injured.

A San Antonio woman and her three passengers were treated and released after a Friday afternoon accident in the 3200 block of Midkiff Road. Police reports indicate Lonzo Estell Settles, 31, was stopped at the Wadley Avenue intersection in her 1984 Dodge Ram van when she was struck from behind by a 1982 Chevrolet Blazer driven by 33-year-old Richard Vernon McCormick, 3204 Ma Mar.

Treated after the accident were Martha Louise Settles, 34, of San Antonio; Melissa Dickens, 11, of Route 4 Box 50R; and Karen Glover, 13, of San Antonio. McCormick was not injured.

A fire broke out Saturday morning after a Midland man tried to thaw frozen water pipes with a torch in the bathroom of his home. According to fire dapartment reports, firemen were dispatched at about 10:30 a.m. to the Winston Bell residence, 2604 Shandon. Reports indicate the fire, blazing on arrival, was extinguished with 60 gallons of water and confined to the bathroom.

Heavy damage was reported to the walls of the bathroom, according to reports.

Central Fire Department Dispatcher Joe Cutshall said Saturday afternoon that more than 100 phone calls about water pipes bursting as they thawed had been logged since 7 a.m. Saturday.

"This is one of those days I'd like to take the phone off the hook," he said with a smile.

Also on fire department reports were a couple of false alarms in which people had reported fires after seeing steam coming from local building furnaces.

The Department of Public Safety in Midland had a relatively quiet day with no major accidents reported Saturday. "The Interstate is clear," reported a jubilant dispatcher.

Cities show some cooperative progress

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

It has been one year since "Midland/Odessa: We're better together" was coined as the slogan of the cooperative movement to join these often adversary cities.

While there is still some space between the two cities philosphically and physically, the move for cooperation is proceeding.

Since the slogan was first plastered on billboards, displayed in newspapers and flashed across television screens last spring, some things actually have changed.

Shortly after the advertising campaign began amid much hoopla, State Highway 191 opened — physically connecting the two cities by a clear stretch of roadway.

About 9,000 Midlanders and Odessans are steering their vehicles down this northside link road on an average day.

The Northwest Texas Legislative Council, combining the pull of the Chambers of Commerce in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and Amarillo, has begun bending legislators' ears on issues of common interest.

The cities' legislators are working together to convince their colleagues and Southwestern Bell that a common phone exchange should be legalized for Midland/Odessa.

A new wave of advertisements from the campaign — to which area media donated $1 million in advertising — is to hit the area in late February. And local leaders continue dialogue on ways to effectively meld the interests of the two cities.

After a lull in late 1984, the movement was revived last week by the two cities' chamber representatives. The executives and elected leaders of the two bodies met at a midway point — Mission Dorado Country Club — to discuss future directions.

Border agent accused of smuggling aliens

Associated Press

EL PASO — A U.S. Border Patrol agent who was honored two years ago for helping rescue several illegal aliens from drowning has been arrested on charges he helped smuggle Colombians into the United States.

Joe Navarrette, a 9-year veteran of the Border Patrol, was arrested Friday in El Paso and charged with conspiracy to harbor, conceal and transport illegal aliens, said Joe Aubin, a Border Patrol intelligence operations chief.

U.S. Magistrate Phillip Cole ordered Navarrette held without bond at the federal prison in La Tuna pending a hearing Monday. Bail was denied after investigators alleged that Navarrette threatened a witness.

Navarrette was cited two years ago by the League of United Latin American Citizens after he helped rescue a group of illegal aliens who jumped into a canal as they tried to elude pursuing agents.

Navarrette is charged with helping smuggle at least three Colombians into the United States in two groups last week, Aubin said.

In a prepared statement, El Paso Border Patrol Chief Agent Larry Richardson said, "Situations like this are indeed discouraging to enforcement agencies."

Details of the alleged smuggling operation were not released by the Border Patrol. The investigation, which had been ongoing for about two weeks, was carried out by the Border Patrol and the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Federal prosecutor, DEA agent assigned

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A resident federal prosecutor is to be assigned to Midland, satisfying a five-year quest by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

And an undercover Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) agent has been assigned to the Midland area, which has been without benefit of a DEA office for 2½ years.

Bunton said a resident assistant U.S. attorney is to be attached to the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's sprawling Western District of Texas. The prosecutor, who will be the first assistant U.S. attorney permanently assigned to the division, also will serve the Pecos Division.

"The quicker we get it filled the better and the easier it will be for me to get along with the U.S. attorney (Helen Eversberg)," said Bunton, who has been urging the U.S. Department of Justice to place a prosecutor here since he entered the federal judgeship in November 1979.

The Midland-Odessa Division has been without a full-time prosecutor since its establishment here in 1967 and particularly since 1974, when the George Mahon Federal Building-U.S. Courthouse was built. Heretofore, visiting prosecutors, including Wayne Speck, Jim Bock and Mike McDonald, from San Antonio and El Paso have tried cases here.

Bunton is the first resident federal judge to serve the Midland-Odessa Division. Before his appointment, visiting judges such as Ernest Guinn, D.W. Suttle, Williams S. Sessions and John Wood had served the Midland-Odessa Division. The division's magistrate is Darrell F. Smith.

BUNTON ALSO noted that a DEA agent has been assigned to Midland. However, the agent requested to remain anonymous due to the secretive nature of his work.

The DEA closed out its Midland office in mid-1982 in a nationwide re-deployment move to curtail drug trafficking along the East Coast and particularly in Florida and New York. The DEA agent will be working with the Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, which has bolstered its force here, and with state (Texas Department of Public Safety and its Texas Rangers), county and city law enforcement officers.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said the DEA agent will aid the anti-drug-trafficking efforts in the Midland-Odessa-Big Spring area.

"We've got a lot of drugs here," Schorre said. "That's going to be a real help in the apprehension and prosecution of the cases." He also noted the agent will have access to the "federal computer," which will help make local narcotics agents more effective in their work.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said he's "looking forward" to working with the DEA agent and with utilizing "the power of the federal government to help curtail drug trafficking in Midland County."

"It'll be a great asset to the people of Midland County," Painter said. "Anyway we can help him, we will."

Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon also was pleased with the DEA assignment here.

"Of course, we were extremely disappointed when the DEA (in mid-1982) chose to close the office in Midland."

Gideon said drug trafficking has increased in West Texas and nationwide since then.

"WE'LL TRY TO stem the tide...We're doing everything we can to combat it."

Gideon said since the DEA closed up shop in 2½ years ago, "We have pressed to re-open the office."

Just when the federal prosecutor will be appointed and assigned here is uncertain.

"I'm assured that Helen Eversberg (the U.S. attorney for the Western District) is conducting interviews and is talking to people who may or may not be qualified for the job," Bunton said. "She's moving with all dispatch to fill the position."

Sheriff promises efficient office

Ex-DPS trooper satisfied with victory

STATE

James Wade

ORANGE (AP) — James Wade has faced his share of battles during his law enforcement career, but he's on the winning side now.

As a Department of Public Safety trooper, Wade bucked the system and accused the agency of setting informal quotas for issuing traffic tickets, a charge the agency denied.

He faced a grievance hearing after two men allegedly accused him of soliciting homosexual favors, and there were rumors in law enforcement circles, despite his denials.

Two years later, after 14 years with the DPS, he was fired for failing to show up for work. He challenged that in court, and lost.

So Wade took special pleasure this fall when he won a landslide victory to become sheriff of Orange County.

"It was extremely satisfying," he said, letting a smile play across his face.

He won't talk much about the problems the rumors gave him during the campaign, although he admits he received "death threats from two or three people."

"I really took them with a grain of salt. They didn't bother me that much," Wade said.

Wade defeated incumbent sheriff Ed Parker in the Democratic primary and then trounced Republican Fred Hill in November's general election by 78 percent of the vote.

It was the latest battle in a war that began in 1978, when he was a state highway patrolman.

In a suit filed last month in an Orange County state district court, the 39-year-old Wade contends he was harassed by his superiors in the DPS because he complained about an informal "quota system" for issuing traffic tickets.

Wade says he and other officers were expected to issue about 10 traffic tickets each shift.

Col. James B. Adams, director of the DPS, denies any such system ever existed.

"As far as I'm concerned, that's ludicrous," Adams said. "There's no way you can just set an absolute quota and be fair."

Nonetheless, Wade says his performance evaluations dropped lower and lower as he continued his complaints through the years.

And in March 1981, he was told of a report that threatened to end his career. Two men had accused him of soliciting homosexual favors, a DPS captain in Beaumont told him.

It is hard to exaggerate the impact of such a rumor in Texas law circles, Wade said. "It's just a death warrant,' he said.

The incident was supposed to have taken place at a roadside park along an interstate highway. Wade said he and his colleagues were frequently sent there to shoo coupling homosexuals out of the restroom.

"I guarantee a night didn't pass that I worked the highway without getting a couple of complaints" about homosexuals in that park, Wade said.

He still snorts at the accusation and admits he occasionally was guilty of "harassment, maybe," as he carried out his chores at the site.

Wade said he had heard through the grapevine earlier in 1981 that a 14-year veteran of an East Texas DPS office was about to be fired because he was a homosexual.

"I got to thinking, 'Well, who could that be?' There was only a couple of us that had been here that long," Wade recalled.

It was Wade. The complaint against him was affirmed at a grievance hearing in Austin even though neither of the two men were there to back up their accusation. He was suspended three days without pay and placed on six months probation.

Wade was transfered to a Garland drivers license station, but he fought the transfer, contending it was a demotion brought about by his allegations of a quota system.

Then he was fired in June 1983 for refusing to report to duty at the Garland station.

He challenged the firing in federal court, but got only moral support from U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher.

"I would hope some satisfactory solution could be reached that wouldn't require a trooper who has served 14 years to move to a position in a drivers license bureau," Fisher wrote in his opinion.

But the judge declined to find that the DPS had violated Wade's rights, calling the situation "an internal matter to be taken care of by the Department of Public Safety."

He has not put the fight behind him. Although Wade withdrew a civil rights suit from federal court last year, he refiled it in state court soon after, partly because he says the case has drained him of more than $50,000.

But Wade said he's looking to the future. He's promised to wage war against the increase in drug traffic in the Gulf Coast area, and run an efficient operation as sheriff.

Meter-busters put dent in city budget

DALLAS (AP) — Armed with pipes, thieves are smashing parking meters by the hundreds, lining their pockets with change — and leaving a large dent in the city's budget, officials say.

Since October, 350 meters — nearly 10 percent of the city's total number — have been broken, officials say. During the past week, at least 143 meters were smashed.

The bashers even had the chutzpah to destroy 56 meters right behind City Hall.

City officials say the carnage has a connection with the cold weather.

"That seems to be the pattern," said Sam Wilson, assistant transportation director whose office is in charge of parking meters. "We don't have too much problem during warm weather, but then that cold spell came in, and we started noticing it.

"I'm not sure why, unless people need something to stave them over until it gets warm again," he said.

Wilson said few meters contain more than $10, with the average take around $7 or $8.

But the loss of the meters themselves is the main problem, he said. Each costs taxpayers $165.50 to replace, bringing the total tab since October to almost $60,000.

"The meters on the street today are an alloy of several kinds of metal," said Tom Jones, city meter supervisor. "They're relatively strong for certain kinds of vandalism, but they just can't take a real impact from a large hammer."

Police report no arrests from the latest rash of meter-busting and city officials are considering the use of an armor-plated meter.

Donations help pay for Pole's burial

DALLAS (AP) — Paul Sitarz, a 16-year-old Polish immigrant who died after concealing his cancer, has been buried in his homeland, thanks to an outpouring of financial aid to the youth's parents.

Sitarz died Dec. 15 from a cancer that he hid from his friends and family out of concern that they could not afford his medical bills.

Friends say hundreds of letters from 37 states, as well as cards from Canada, West Germany and the Philippines have been forwarded since the youth's death.

Contributions from individuals and corporations, totaling almost $15,000, have allowed the family to pay medical bills and funeral expenses and bury their son in Poland.

Sitarz's father, a former leader in the outlawed Solidarity union, also has a full-time job for the first time in the United States.

"They have never asked for money and have never said they needed any," said Sister Mary Paraclete, who has been coordinating help for the family. "They still don't believe all this — what's been done for them. They're amazed, and the thing that surprises them is that it's from across the nation."

Sitarz's father, Longin, had been a Solidarity leader. After six months in a Polish prison, he and his family reluctantly left Poland in 1982 with only $30.

After arriving in Dallas in September 1983, Sitarz was unable to find full-time work as an electrician. He speaks only Polish. His wife works in housekeeping at the Westin Hotel, where their son also worked during the summer to earn extra money for his family.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

White: '85 'year of water'

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — "Just as 1984 was the year of education," Gov. Mark White told legislators as lawmakers opened their current session, "1985 must be the year of water."

Water has been a perennial topic for the Texas Legislature, and it remains to be seen whether 1985 will see significant action on that subject, which has been the subject of considerable discussion and planning in recent years.

White has seen to it that 1985 will be "the year of water" by designating legislation dealing with water matters as "emergency" items to allow for their consideration early in the session.

Apart from the budget, water probably is the focus of the most attention by legislators and political observers of the 69th Legislature.

Most of the attention thus far has been on legislation on water finance and water management.

But the Department of Water Resources is up for review under the "sunset" process, and not everyone is happy with all the changes that are being proposed for the agency.

Water Development Board members have dissented,by official resolution, from some changes recommended by the Sunset Advisory Commission, including the transfer of water and sewer rate-making responsibilities from the Public Utility Commission.

Board members say they don't favor such a switch "at this time" because DWR "has substantial responsibilities to regulate water matters that are critical to protection and development of the state's water resources and the additional responsibilities could delay and impair the continuation of existing duties an responsibilities of the department."

Basically, DWR just doesn't want the hassles which would come with rate regulation — and some agency members remember the problems with water rates which occurred before such rate authority was given to the PUC.

WDB members also objected to some other "sunset" changes being proposed — including expanding the board from six to nine members, with three "public members" to be added.

Board members have gone on record in support of the water legislation being proposed, and have made additional recommendations as well.

That legislation is being sponsored in the House of Representatives by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midlnd, and in the Senate by Sens. John Montford, D-Lubbock; Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, and Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso.

Among the provisions is authority for the WDB to issue $600 million more in Water Development Fund bonds — with $200 million each for water quality enhancement, purchase by the WDB of storage space in reservoirs, and loans to political subdivisions or additional storage acquisition.

WDB has called for another $200 million in authorization for flood control projects, something which should be appealing to area such as Houston where urban flooding is a major concern.

White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Gib Lewis have been promoting the water legislation with the idea that, as White put it, "water is a Texas problem," and not a problem limited to any particular region, industy or group.

In past years, White notes, Texas has seen an east-west split over water — sectionalism which the governor says must end.

But in recent years, there's also been a north-south split, with coastal interests unhappy over development plans which they argue don't give enough consideration to the needs of bays and estuaries.

White has promised to protect "the ecological health of bays and estuaries," but hearings by the House Natural Resources Committee show environmental and coastal groups aren't convinced the legislation being considered goes far enough in doing that.

That issue, during hearings, also showed that the basic differences on that and other aspects of water deveopment remain.

Trinity Improvement Association executive vice president I.M. Rice argued "no special precedence" should be given to bays and estuaries and that costs for any water released to maintain them "should be borne by those who directly benefit," or by the state as a whole.

The proposed legislation would appropriate 5 percentof the annual yield of reservoirs constructed by the WDB within 200 river miles of the coast for possible release to coastal waters, but just who would be responsible for any costs remains unclear.

And Rice had another complaint about the legislation: That it doesn't provide enough financing.

Whatever is done on water legislation, it appears the bay and estuary and financing issues won't be settled, any more than the efforts in 1984 settled education arguments.

What's hoped for is that 1985 will be the year when some progress is made on resolving Texas' water problems, which won't become any easier to deal with in 1986.

Bill Kidd is a columnist for the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Commercial flights at Midland Regional Air Terminal got off to a late start Saturday, but at least they got off.

"The first commercial flight landed at 4:31 p.m.," Tracy Lincoln, operations agent said Saturday night. "That was a Southwest 737. Then we had two Muse flights come in right after that, then an American. Now they've all come in and gone back out and they're flying tonight."

Lincoln urged travelers to check on flights this morning because of the overnight freezing conditions.

"They're expecting to fly tomorrow but it's supposed to get pretty cold tonight so people should check," he said Saturday. "We're taking the airline representatives out on the runways tomorrow to see if they pass their minimum standards. We will be flying tomorrow but it may take some time because it will freeze over."

Lines at the airport were long with stranded passengers trying to book new flights, Lincoln said. According to his supervisor, the airport was "pretty packed."

"No additional flights were added to make up for the ones missed," he said. "They're just going by the regular flight schedule."

Skies should be partly cloudy through tonight with cloudy skies in the forecast for Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Temperatures should climb near 40 today, dropping into the middle 20s tonight, and hitting the lower 40s Monday.

Saturday's high of 27 was 52 degrees below the record high for that date of 79, set in 1932. The overnight low of -11 was 21 degrees colder than the record low for that date of 10, set in 1972.

STATE

The mercury dipped below zero Saturday over West Texas as forecasters warned that more freezing precipitation may follow a vicious storm that dumped up to 8 inches of snow and caused at least three deaths.

Although sunshine began melting the snow Saturday afternoon, the National Weather Service said subfreezing temperatures after sunset would turn the slush into ice.

Travel advisories remained in effect Saturday for ice- and snow-coated highways which triggered a rash of accidents and rush-hour tie-ups the previous day. The weather service said the advisories remain posted Sunday.

Record low temperatures for the date were set early Saturday in Midland, Wichita Falls, Abilene, San Angelo, Waco and Dallas-Fort Worth, the weather service said.

Midland reported 11 below zero, while Wichita Falls recorded a reading of 8 below zero. The mercury dipped to 7 below zero in Abilene, while San Angelo reported 1 below zero.

Waco reached 4 degrees, while the thermometer at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport issued a 7-degree reading during the early morning hours.

Meese vote involves several factors

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The senators who will vote on Edwin Meese III's fitness to serve as attorney general this week may find themselves agonizing over what might be called the people-in-glass-houses dilemma.

Do the things that they do look improper to others?

That subplot developed during Meese's confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee last week.

If Tuesday's committee vote were to go strictly along party lines, approval of Meese's nomination would be recommended to the Senate by a 10-8 vote; there are 10 Republicans and eight Democrats.

Meese's chances remain uncertain, however. The two possible swing votes are among Republicans who have not made a decision. But one Democratic senator, who declined to be named, indicated he's leaning in favor of Meese.

On Saturday, Sen. Max Baucus, D-Montana, said he will vote against the nomination. "In my judgment, Mr. Meese does not measure up to the high ethical standards that the nation's chief law enforcement officer should possess," he said.

The spotlight swung to the senators themselves as they questioned witnesses — and sometimes themselves — about the ethical implications of donations from political action committees, speakers fees from special interest groups and congressional pay raises from themselves.

"I do think people have problems," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, a staunch Meese supporter. "It may be iconoclastic to say, but (they have them) even in the United States Senate."

All week long, senators critical of Meese pounded away at one point: Meese's financial dealings with associates who later landed positions in the Reagan administration had the appearance of impropriety, even if they were not criminal violations.

Hatch broached the potential for senatorial hypocrisy after getting David H. Martin, director of the Office of Government Ethics, to acknowledge that a number of congressional activities pose at least a potential appearance of conflict-of-interest.

The Utah senator did all he could to make that an issue.

"If you receive a PAC contribution and then vote a certain way, couldn't that be seen as having the appearance of conflict?" he asked Martin.

"In my view it would," the ethics director replied, "even if the vote was honest and well-intentioned."

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., reminded Hatch that "there is public disclosure of PAC contributions."

"Even with all of that, there is an appearance problem," Hatch shot back. " ... What about a (gift) Christmas basket. ... Pretty hard to disclose all of that."

He continued to grill Martin.

Hatch: "What if a member of Congress accepted a job on the outside from someone who had given him PAC money?"

Martin: "Yes, and maybe a criminal violation."

Hatch: "What about an honorarium from a trade association (which has an interest in legislation a lawmaker is mulling)?"

Martin: "That clearly raises an appearance of impropriety."

Hatch: " ... And if a member of Congress assists a constituent in getting a public job or secures an ambassadorship? ... All of these things happen around here ... It's nice to sit here and find fault ... but you could do that with anybody."

No new charges against Meese surfaced and the hearings focused on allegations dismissed last fall by an independent counsel as unworthy of prosecution. Still, he was questioned sharply about his ethics — a separate matter that independent counsel Jacob A. Stein said was not in his power to consider.

In particular, Meese was questioned about his participation in a White House personnel meeting involving discussion of a government job for John R. McKean, a San Francisco accountant who arranged $60,000 in loans for Meese and was named to the Postal Service Board of Governors.

He also was quizzed about his relationship to Thomas Barrack, a California real estate agent who contributed over $80,000 of his own money to help sell Meese's house in La Mesa — and subsequently got a non-presidential position at the Interior Department.

Meese testified that if he could relive the last four years, he would have done some things differently. He promised if he is confirmed he will devote "every ounce of my energy and every moment of my time" to living up to the high ethical standards expected of an attorney general.

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, one of the wavering Republicans, said he will not make a decision until Tuesday. Specter said he has been discussing the nomination with Republican Sen. Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland — also considered a swing vote. According to Specter, Mathias also has not committed himself.

"I intend to discuss it with Senator Mathias," Specter said. "I'm going to think it all through before the vote comes."

Specter said some Republicans believe the president should get the nominee he wants.

"That's a factor to be considered," he said. "The election does resolve some issues, but it does not resolve the ethical issues."

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said while he has not decided finally how to vote, "I have to give Meese credit. His own testimony and Martin's testimony enhanced his possibility of getting my vote. It resolved some questions that were lingering in my mind."

DeConcini acknowledged he's "getting a lot of pressure from Democrats to vote against him. But I have a greater charge. I haven't been convinced he's done anything unethical. He exercised some bad judgment."

C-SPAN audiences seem to choose hearings 'politically'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A growing audience is enthralled with a new daytime television drama — the proceedings of the House of Representatives and assorted hearings and conferences, live and colorful on the Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network (C-SPAN).

Last week, millions saw for themselves the confirmation hearings of Edwin Meese III before the Senate Judiciary Committee. They, like the senators, decided whether he should be confirmed as attorney general.

Judging from call-in shows on the network, what viewers saw depended largely on where they stood politically.

Pro-Reagan viewers appeared to take their cues from Judiciary Chairman Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and other Republican supporters of Meese, who described Meese as an honorable man who has devoted his life to public service, turning his back on opportunities to become rich in private life, impoverishing himself to the point where he couldn't make mortgage payments on time.

Several pronounced themselves "disgusted" with the performance of Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who led the attack on Meese, and ranking committee Democrat Joseph Biden of Delaware.

Viewers who said they were convinced that Meese had demonstrated a lack of ethics or propriety in financial dealings with individuals who later won political appointments echoed Biden's questions. Like Biden, they saw Meese's conduct as "beneath the office" he seeks.

It's impossible to know how many minds were changed or enlightened by the proceedings, but viewers certainly had the opportunity to decide for themselves without the filter or influence of commentators and columnists. Perhaps only strongly motivated listeners repeatedly dialed the phone numbers flashed on the screen to get through to express an opinion.

C-SPAN, whose moderators are studiously non-partisan, covers mayors' conferences, press conferences, scientific and cultural meetings, groups of highschoolers studying Washington life, and a variety of other events. Last Wednesday night, it treated the country to a closeup view of the Washington Press Club's "salute to Congress," the yearly event where publishers, bureau chiefs, reporters and politicians dress up and pay big bucks to dine together in an atmosphere of civility and fun.

C-SPAN'S coverage of House proceedings has become an issue, and may influence the Senate to open its chambers to television cameras.

Cameras in the House are controlled by House employees, not the network, and usually focus — in the best light — only on the member who is at the microphone. Only C-SPAN is authorized to broadcast live House coverage. Other networks, however, may take a "feed."

Last year, a group of junior House Republicans, led by Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., used a "special orders" period at the end of each legislative day to verbally slash the Democrats.

House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., angered by the tactic, retaliated by ordering the television cameras to pan the chamber to show viewers that the Republicans were emoting to empty chairs.

Several unhappy Democrats recommended a curb on time devoted to special-order speeches, limiting the time to an hour for each party, but the Democratic Caucus shelved the proposal when the House was reorganized last month.

Some members grumbled that it was expensive for the House to continue in session long after regular legislative business was completed. One estimate set the cost of the speeches at $10,000 an hour, to cover employee salaries, utilities and other expenses.

C-SPAN, an association of cable operators, pays costs connected with its broadcasts to systems across the country.

A national survey of C-SPAN viewers shows the number of Americans who watch the cable network has grown to as many as 20.5 million per month. A year ago, viewership was estimated at around 16 million people.

The survey, by Michael Robinson, director of the Media Analysis Project of The George Washington University, found that voter turnout is high among C-SPAN viewers; 93 percent in the 1984 presidential elections, contrasted with a national rate of 53 percent.

Also, Robinson found that C-SPAN viewers were slightly more likely than the electorate as a whole to vote Democratic.

C-SPAN viewers were found to be heavy consumers of news, better educated, wealthier and more politically involved than either the public or cable-TV subscribers at large.

ATTORNEY

"I told her 'fine' (about the prosecutor's appointment)," Bunton said. "As long as she does it within 90 days, she won't hear from me."

The Midland-Odessa Division serves the counties of Andrews, Crane, Ector, Martin, Midland and Upton. Bunton also presides over the Pecos Division, which takes in far Southwestern Texas — Brewster, Culberson, Hudspeth, Jeff Davis, Loving, Reeves, Pecos, Presidio, Ward and Winkler counties. He also presides in El Paso, and has worked dockets in Austin, San Antonio and Waco. The Western District of Texas, which has seven divisions, ranges from the San Antonio-Austin-Waco area to El Paso.

SINCE HE HAS been on the federal bench, Bunton has campaigned for a resident prosecutor but to no avail until Ms. Eversberg was appointed U.S. attorney last year. She succeeded Edward Prado, now a federal judge in San Antonio, and Jamie Boyd, now a U.S. magistrate in San Antonio.

"They (Boyd and Prado) said the statistics didn't warrant it," Bunton said. But the judge said a permanent prosecutor here will "increase the number of criminal indictments" for both divisions.

"The Pecos Division, statistics-wise, has more criminal indictments each year than the Midland-Odessa Division has had," he noted.

Most of the Pecos Division indictments involve illegal aliens from Mexico and controlled substances, such as marijuana, cocaine and heroin. The majority of the criminal cases in the Midland-Odessa Division are white-collar crimes, such as bank embezzlements, mail fraud and income-tax evasions. Criminal cases also have included violations of wildlife, drug and firearms laws, and bank robberies and con schemes.

Schorre said bank failures and the moving of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp (Corp.) into Midland probably prompted the assignment of a federal prosecutor and additional FBI agents.

"With the addition of an assistant U.S. attorney," Schorre said, "you'll see an increase in federal business. I think it's a real good idea."

Schorre said he suspects the prosecutor might be "somebody who is acquainted with the situation here, but that's just speculation."

John Hyde, former president of the Midland County Bar Association, said the assignment of a resident assistant U.S. attorney to Midland is great.

"It's long overdue," Hyde said.

Bunton, who is attached to the Executive Branch of government, said the selection of the resident prosecutor is up to the Justice Department.

"That's not my bailiwick."

CITIES

At the meeting, the civic leaders traded impressions of their city's needs and agreed to search for a common project encouraging more inter-city cooperation.

A Midland Chamber Liaison Task Force was formed by the Greater Odessa Chamber on the heels of efforts by former Texas Instruments site manager Jim Watson to bring the two cities together.

"We have not done a very good job accomplishing that objective," admitted President David Jenkins of the Odessa group. "You're not going to have everything turn over overnight."

From the meeting came a renewed interest in cooperation and a decision to actively look for a common project, he said.

In early January, the legislative council met with legislators in Austin. The Stacy Dam issue and appointments were high priorities at the meetings, said Jenkins.

Politically, little has been done, though both mayors emphasize their willingness to participate in cooperative efforts.

"There's a willingness on both sides," said Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins, noting he had spoken informally with Odessa city officials as recently as Thursday.

Talk of joint city council meetings has not progressed because "we needed an agenda to talk about," he said.

d "Jim Watson was the motivator in this whole effort and he is gone," said Akins. "He was the one that was really helping getting the two areas together.

"I don't know what's going to happen now," he said.

More important than cooperation politically is a move toward economic development, said Midland's mayor.

Akins' counterpart in Odessa, Mayor John Minor, said he would be unveiling a task force "in the very near future" to look at opportunities for Midland/Odessa business development.

Minor said he would provide proposals to Akins, suggesting formation of a similar group in Midland which could work with the Odessa task force.

"Other issues have developed and preoccupied both councils' time," said Minor of the failure to bring the two governing bodies together during 1984. "I don't think it ever died out."

Minor recalled hearing how the warring image of the two cities hurt the Petroplex in competition with other areas to attract major business developments.

"It's obvious that Midland and Odessa have got to work together to attract big industry," said Odessa's mayor. "Hopefully, we can orchestrate these committees and the exchange of ideas."

Selling the area as one with a population approaching 250,000, rather than two smaller, separate communities, is another plus in the marketing of the area for industrial development, said Minor.

Leonard Fisher of Fisher-Nichols & Associates, one of the area advertising agencies providing creative input in the campaign, said new material was to be on the market by late February.

A year after the push began, efforts toward bringing the two towns together are reviving.

Snow detains helicopters at site

KEAMS CANYON, Ariz. (AP) — Snow on Saturday delayed National Guard helicopters from their planned return to Phoenix after an airlift to aid residents of two Indian reservations, where one person apparently has died from the cold, officials said.

The body of a woman believed about 90 years old was found Saturday in her home on the Navajo reservation, 13 miles north of Keams Canyon, an apparent victim of exposure to the cold, tribal spokesman Duane Beyal said.

The five helicopters on Friday finished three days of delivering food and supplies to about 1,000 snowbound residents of the Navajo and Hopi reservations in northeastern Arizona. They had been expected to leave Keams Canyon on Saturday for Phoenix, 135 miles away, but their return was delayed until Sunday.

Scattered snow showers in central and northern Arizona were expected to drop 2 to 6 inches of snow and continue into Sunday, the National Weather Service said.

The helicopters were sent to the reservations after snow softened clay roads early last week, making the roads impassable and isolating residents and their livestock. Sixteen people were evacuated by truck or helicopter through Friday for medical reasons.

Temperatures dropped late last week, hardening the roads and allowing ground travel to resume.

On Saturday, 13 Humane Society volunteers trucked about 25 tons of hay and 3,000 pounds of dogfood to the two reservations for delivery to livestock and other animals that have gone without food because of the weather, officials said.

ALCO lays off 70 people

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Aluminum Co. of America, citing continued low demand, will idle 34,200 annual metric tons of primary aluminum smelting capacity at its Rockdale, Texas, facility, the company said.

About 70 employees will be laid off as the plant's operating rate is reduced from 89 percent to 78 percent, ALCOA said Friday.

"There has been steady improvement since the third quarter of 1984 in ALCOA's supply-demand balance and inventory position for primary metal," said ALCOA Chairman Charles W. Parry. "But the improvement rate has not been rapid enough to meet our corporate objectives," he said.

As a result of the Rockdale cutback, ALCOA's domestic smelting system will be operating at 87 percent of capacity, down from the current 90 percent.

Comanche Peak cited

DALLAS (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has cited the Comanche Peak nuclear power project for two violations, including missing welds and failure to adequately perform and inspect safety-related work.

A report released recently, which covered an inspection from July 16 through Sept. 28, said NRC inspectors based in Arlington found "significant numbers of deficiencies" in a limited sample of work in the reactor safeguards and auxiliary buildings.

The violations are classified on the next-to-lowest level in terms of severity.

Dick Ramsey, a spokesman for Texas Utilities Electric Co., said the utility, which is building Comanche Peak about 75 miles southwest of Dallas in Somervell County, would take the appropriate action, including some level of review and reinspection.

Officer shot in belt buckle

DALLAS (AP) — A city police officer's large Western belt buckle stopped a bullet and probably saved his life after a drug raid turned into a shootout that left one man dead, a police spokesman said.

The bullet caught Sgt. Don Woods "square in the belt buckle," knocking him down, but left only a large bruise after lodging in the buckle, Sgt. Harold Rice said.

"Without the buckle, he would have been gut-shot with a .45," said Capt. Donald Milliken of police internal affairs. "The bullet hit him right smack on the seam between the top and bottom of the bullet-proof vest."

Jose Luis Rubalcaba, the alleged assailant, died after being struck by four bullets fired by police, said a Dallas County medical examiner's spokeswoman.

Officers found 29 grams of a substance believed to be cocaine, with a street value of approximately $2,000, police said.

Judge sentences convicted killer to life in prison

RICHMOND (AP) — After a jury said it was hopelessly deadlocked in a Houston man's capital murder trial, state District Judge Charles Dickerson stepped in Saturday and sentenced the man to life in prison.

Jurors convicted Charles E. Goosby, 34, on Thursday in the shooting death of 4-year-old Christille Lakey. The girl was one of four people slain in a Sept. 18 shooting spree in a southwest Houston home.

But the jurors, who could have ordered Goosby killed by injection in the trial's punishment phase, reported Saturday afternoon that they were hopelessly deadlocked on whether he would be a continuing threat to society.

Dickerson then sentenced Goosby to life in prison.

Feud erupts over new DNC vice chairman

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Black Democrats are feuding over the selection of a Democratic Party vice chairman, a choice that provoked a bitter fight for the position traditionally held by blacks.

One prominent black Democrat accused the winner, Illinois Comptroller Roland Burris, of selling out the interests of the party's black caucus to defeat the incumbent vice chairman, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind.

Hatcher lost the position to Burris on Friday at the DNC's annual winter meeting. Paul Kirk Jr., a former aide to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was elected the new Democratic Party chairman.

Burris, the first black politician to win a major statewide office in Illinois, polled 198.27 votes to Hatcher's 148.727.

Democratic Rep. Mickey Leland of Texas, told reporters Burris should have withdrawn his bid for the vice chairmanship after the black caucus had voted 32-25 Thursday night to endorse Hatcher, a political ally of the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Burris decided to force a vote by the full party committee after failing to win the caucus' endorsement.

Leland accused Burris of undermining the interests of black Democrats, likening him to a black servant or black plantation overseer.

"The process that we have is protective of black people's interests," Leland said. "And when you violate the process, you violate the black people's interests.

"I think the classic term is 'Uncle Tom,'" he said.

Burris did not return the call of a reporter seeking comment on Leland's statement. But Ron Smith, an aide, quoted Burris as saying Leland's remarks were made in the heat of the battle. "'Congressman Leland is an honorable man,'" Smith quoted Burris as saying.

Some members of the black caucus were angered by the vote and by Kirk's decision to let the full DNC decide whether it wanted Hatcher or Burris. They argued the full committee should have deferred to the wishes of the black caucus, as in 1981 when Hatcher's selection as the group's choice was ratified by the DNC.

Hatcher, who reacted less bitterly than Leland, said nonetheless that Burris was "used" by forces intending to break down the ethnic caucus system. He included organized labor among those forces.

"I think quite clearly one of the major groups that supported Mr. Burris in this election were those elements of organized labor that are active in the Democratic Party," Hatcher commented.

Earlier, Burris had told reporters he was "not in any way watering down the authority of the black caucus" and pressed his candidacy because he thought he was better qualified to build coalitions of white and black voters.

Burris also denied making any deals with Kirk or other party officials to gain the vice chairmanship.

At a news conference, Kirk defended his decision to open the vote and also denied trying to undermine the caucus system.

"I did not think that I should ask the larger body of the party in voting on the vice chair of the party to say that others who were not part of the caucus could not exercise their franchise," he said.

Incumbent Vice Chairmen Lynn Cutler of Iowa and Polly Baca of Colorado were re-elected over challenger Alice McDonald, Kentucky schools superintendent.

Dorothy Bush was re-elected as secretary.

Sharon Pratt Dixon of Washington, D.C., won the treasurer's post without opposition, succeeding Kirk.

Doctor: It's too late to cut AIDS' risk

NEW YORK (AP) — An apparent change in sexual activity by homosexuals hoping to cut their risk of contracting AIDS may be coming too late, with some 300,000 people already believed to be infected with the deadly disease, a researcher says.

A drop in gonorrhea and syphilis among homosexuals suggests they are changing their sexual behavior, but the change may not slow the spread of AIDS, said Dr. James Curran, director of AIDS activities at the National Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"The behavior changes may be just keeping even with the problem," Curran said Friday.

He said several studies of the spread of AIDS have convinced him that some 300,000 people have been infected with the virus believed to cause the illness, and about 30,000 are likely to develop AIDS in the next five years.

"There's quite a lag between infection and development of AIDS," Curran said in a telephone interview. "There are many, many more people that have been infected than have actually developed AIDS."

The average time between exposure to the virus and development of the disease is three years, he said.

The CDC reported Monday that AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, had struck 8,057 people and claimed 3,863 lives in the United States since June 1, 1981.

Authorities regain control of prison

PENDLETON, Ind. (AP) — Authorities kept inmates in small groups and searched for weapons Saturday after regaining control of a maximum-security prison where armed inmates held two guards hostage for more than 15 hours to protest their treatment.

Five other guards from the Indiana Reformatory and one inmate remained hospitalized with stab wounds Saturday, but all were reported to be out of danger and stable.

The inmates freed the hostages unharmed shortly before midnight Friday after prison officials agreed to investigate conditions at the prison. A third hostage had been freed after 5½ hours in return for officials allowing an inmate to go to an infirmary.

"The Indiana Reformatory has returned to a more normal but still limited operating schedule. The inmates in J cellhouse are secured and their meals are being served in the cells," prison Superintendent Norman Owens said in a statement released Saturday afternoon.

Inmates in J cellhouse, where the disturbance occurred, were being searched for weapons, he said.

"All other housing units are being fed in the dining hall in smaller groups than usual," Owens said.

A woman who identified herself only as Officer Jackson read the statement by telephone and said she was not authorized to elaborate. Owens was unavailable for further comment, she said.

The disturbance began about 8:30 a.m. Friday during a weapons shakedown when inmates armed with knives grabbed three guards as hostages.

It ended with the release of the last two hostages after State Correction Commissioner Gordon Faulkner agreed to the inmates' demand for FBI and state police investigations of conditions at the prison about 35 miles northeast of Indianapolis.

Gov. Robert D. Orr said shortly after the hostages had been released that he was satisfied with the performance of Faulkner and other corrections officials.

"I'm grateful that there appears to have been no loss of life and that correction officers that were wounded seem to be out of danger," Orr said.

Orr said that his last four years in office have been "most difficult" regarding prison funding.

"The Legislature is fully knowledgeable of the need for expansion, and I'm confident they will continue to recognize their responsibility," he said.

The prison holds about 1,650 inmates but is under a U.S. District Court order to reduce its population and improve conditions. An appeal of the order is pending before the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In the agreement worked out between inmates and corrections officials, Faulkner will ask the U.S. Justice Department to have the FBI investigate alleged violations of inmates' rights. Faulkner also will ask state police to investigate alleged crimes by the prison staff and request members of the state General Assembly to hear the inmates' grievances.

Authorities said they did not grant the inmates' request for amnesty.

Reagan asks for budget support

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring that raising taxes would "boomerang" and that cutting defense is no cure for rising deficits, asked for public and congressional support of his proposed new budget.

In his Saturday radio address to the nation, the president decried what he called a deep-seated Washington policy of "Heads I win, tails you lose."

"When your families do well, government spends and borrows," Reagan said. "When you don't do well, government spends and borrows."

The president made a plug for the spending plan for fiscal 1986 that is to be delivered to Congress on Monday with familiar requests to slash government spending that he made throughout his first term.

"Our problem isn't that your're paying too little taxes, it's that government is spending too much money," Reagan said.

"Our future economic success depends on the economy growing faster than government spending," he continued. "That's why raising taxes would boomerang, economic growth would slow, revenues would decline, and the budget deficit would swell.

The president also defended his record requests for defense, saying they accounted for "less than 30 percent of our budget today, far less than 20 years ago."

"The second so-called solution ...is that lasting progress won't be made without deep cuts in defense — wrong again," the president said.

He said the administration had cut its planned defense buildup three years in a row, and cut it again this year.

In the Democratic Party's official response, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Reagan's budget will receive "a respectful and complete consideration" in Congress but the chief executive must himself tell the American people specifically what programs he wants to cut.

"I urge him to go beyond the generalities and tell the American people exactly what he had in mind for them," O'Neill said in his statement, broadcast after Reagan spoke.

"I want the president to make clear to the people what programs he wants to cut, to spell out what is wrong with these programs and why they should be cut or abandoned," the speaker said.

Reagan said his administration wants to cut government spending while allowing for long term growth. But he said he also needed support for three other long-desired programs: tax reform, a Constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget, and passage of a line-item veto.

He asked Congress for strong bipartisan support for his spending proposals, calling it the "most exhaustive effort ever made to reign in government chronic over-spending."

The president's budget calls for $973.7 billion in federal spending for the fiscal year 1986 that begins next Oct. 1, according to officials in Congress who spoke on condition they remain anonymous.

It would freeze total spending on government programs at current levels, but allow defense to rise by more than $29 billion with offsetting domestic cuts of around $39 billion.

The budget proposal is said to represent an increase of 1.5 percent over current spending.

Farming couple wins reprieve from foreclosure

GLENWOOD, Minn. (AP) — What was to have been a confrontation between rural activists and the Travellers Insurance Co. became a victory rally when the firm agreed to postpone its foreclosure on a family farm.

Word that Jim and Gloria Langman's Starbuck farm had won a reprieve came as 1,000 farmers gathered Friday at the Pope County Courthouse to block the sale. "My wife and I are at a loss for words," Langman told the crowd, which packed a basement meeting room and overflowed into the courthouse corridors. The foreclosure was postponed until March 18 at the request of Langman and Jim Nichols, state agriculture commissioner, said Allen Fletcher, a Travellers spokesman based in Hartford, Conn.

"We felt the postponement was needed to give the Legislature some time to develop legislation to help all the farmers," Fletcher said.

But Langman challenged Travellers' motives. "They were afraid they were going to get boycotted and they were afraid they were going have blood on their hands today," he said.

Leaders of the United Auto Workers union had threatened to ask members to boycott the lending and insurance company, which held the Langman's mortgage, if the farm were foreclosed. Similar messages were sent to the company by the Agriculture Movement, the Minnesota Farmers Union and other farm organizations, Langman said.

Bilingual, English-only students compared

By HEATHER DEWAR
New York Times News Service

MIAMI — Do children who don't speak English learn better when they're first taught the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic in their native language, and then taught English? Or should those children jump right into English on their first day of school?

The backers of bilingual education say children need to learn in their native language first. Members of the English-only movement hotly disagree. But until now, there has been little evidence to support either side in the controversy.

Dade school officials are looking for that evidence in a pilot program that compares the achievement of two groups of Spanish-speaking kindergarten students: 140 taught in traditional bilingual classrooms, and 136 in an English-immersion program.

The first results are in, and Dade school officials say they show that after the first four months of learning, there was no difference in what the two groups retained in most subjects. In math, the bilingual students scored a little better, but the difference was so slight that it may be just a statistical fluke, officials say.

"It's too soon to tell after just four months what the results mean," said Sylvia Rothfarb, the principal author of a school system study just released on the pilot program. "We're just getting the kinks out of the program now...By the time we've tracked these children through the second grade, we should have a much clearer picture of their achievement."

The three-year pilot program, begun last spring, involves one kindergarten classroom at each of 12 different schools. At Citrus Grove, Coral Park, Coral Terrace, Royal Palm, Shenandoah and Mae Walters elementary schools, kindergartners who spoke little or no English were taught in a mixture of Spanish and English. At Banyan, DuPuis, Fairlawn, Greenglade, Kinloch Park and South Hialeah elementaries, teachers used Spanish in the beginning of the semester only when it was absolutely necessary. By the end of the school year, no Spanish at all was being used. The children were given standardized tests before and after the start of the semester.

"At the end of the four-month pilot project period, no clear pattern of results has emerged to indicate that either of the two strategies... consistently leads to higher student performance," the study concluded.

The students in the English immersion program apparently were not troubled by being suddenly plunged into learning in another language, the study found.

"Teachers...felt that students' attitudes toward learning was positive and they had progressed in content subjects," the study said.

But the study did find that teachers in the English immersion program were slightly more enthusiastic about their program than the bilingual teachers were about theirs.

"I was a little surprised by that," Rothfarb said. "Some of the opinions they (the bilingual classroom teachers) expressed gave the impression that not everybody's convinced that the theories are correct."

West German companies' export licenses lifted for illegal shipments

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The export licenses of two West German companies were revoked after federal investigators alleged they illegally shipped U.S.-made high-performance helicopters to North Korea.

Export privileges were revoked for Delta-Avia Fluggerate Gmbh. and Kurt Behrens, the firm's managing director, as well as for Spedition Killewald Exportrans Gmbh., said Wayne Collier, a Commerce Department special agent.

Behrens and Delta-Avia acted as international distributors for Hughes Helicopters Inc. of suburban Culver City, the manufacturer, Collier said. Investigators believe the craft were exported to North Korea, with whom the United States has an embargo on most trade, without the knowledge of Hughes officials, he said.

Fifteen helicopters, worth $400,000 each, were at Van Nuys Airport on Friday, awaiting shipping instructions from Behrens, Collier said.

U.S. selling computers to France

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration agreed secretly in 1982 to sell advanced computers to France to upgrade nuclear missiles in exchange for greater French participation in the NATO alliance, Newsday reported in today's editions.

According to the Long Island newspaper, the supercomputers are aiding France in the deployment of missiles with multiple warheads. According to Newsday, U.S. nuclear arms specialists said the supercomputers were a key aid in refining the MIRV system, which uses multiple warheads that are targeted independently of each other.

Injured teen awarded $3 million

MONTVILLE, Conn. (AP) — A teen-ager left permanently impaired after being hit by a motorist who had been drinking and left the scene of the accident has settled his lawsuit for $3 million, an attorney said.

Stephen J. Scott, 17, was hit by a truck owned by Baily and Staud Inc., a New London awning company, on Oct. 15, 1982, and was left with speech, hearing and hand coordination impairments. The settlement, announced Friday, could total $4 million if Scott lives to age 72.

The driver, Richard F. Johnson III, of Uncasville, had a blood alcohol content of .20, double the level at which state law judges a person to be intoxicated, police said. He pleaded no contest to drunken driving charges and was given a suspended jail sentence.

ACLU to help student film-ban fight

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Michigan State University has brought the curtain down on the showing of X-rated films on campus, but the American Civil Liberties Union may help students fight the ban.

Revolver Cinema, which had planned to show the X-rated film "Cherry Truckers" in a school auditorium Friday night, has been banned from operating on campus, said Moses Turner, university vice president for student affairs.

The ACLU said it would decide this week whether to help the student-run film group fight to continue to show the films.

Turner said the university's decision to ban the film was based in part on its subject matter, which he said wasn't consistent with student activity goals and was denigrating to women.

Ship may have been smuggling pot

SEATTLE (AP) — A Panamanian ship that was scuttled after ramming the Coast Guard cutter Citrus on New Year's Day may have been linked to a local pot-smuggling operation, authorities say.

Federal drug agents here and in San Diego are exchanging information on the alleged smuggling of $200 million worth of "Thai sticks," a type of highly potent marijuana, said Steve Lough of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Federal agents seized more than 10 tons of Thai sticks with an estimated street value of $128 million on May 21 at the local SeaWay Express terminal, said Fred Peil, SeaWay Express general manager.

WARM SPRINGS, Ga. (AP) — A three-year, $61.5 million fund-raising drive will be launched in May to fund various research and capital improvement projects, including a memorial to President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The memorial by the Roosevelt Warm Springs Foundation will include a research, conference and patient recreation facility that could become the permanent headquarters for the Wheelchair Olympics, executive director Ellies Moran said Friday.

The building would include a rehabilitation museum, a swimming pool, a gymnasium, handball courts and rifle range. Track and field facilities would be located nearby, and dramatic productions based on the life of Roosevelt would be staged at an amphitheater.

Liberian oil tanker refloated

CAPE MAY POINT, N.J. (AP) — A Liberian tanker carrying more than 500,000 barrels of crude oil was refloated Saturday after running aground in the shallow waters of the Delaware Bay.

The 868-foot tanker owned by Mobile Transport Co. was undamaged, said Lt. j.g. Michael Farrell of the U.S. Coast Guard.

The Mobile Aladdin ran aground at 2 a.m. Friday in lower Delaware Bay. the crew and Coast Guard worked to lighten the ship by transferring oil to another tanker.

1982 World's Fair makes $57

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The 1982 World's Fair closed its books with a balance of $57, a far cry from the $5 million predicted at the time of the fair but even farther from the $110 million loss of the 1984 New Orleans version.

However, the city of Knoxville was left with a $46 million debt that was not mentioned in the report released Friday by Knoxville Foundation Inc., which organized the fair that ended Oct. 31, 1982.

Fair officials had anticipated a $5 million surplus midway through the exposition.

The 1982 fair's total revenues were $114,414,582 with expenses of $114,414,525, the report said. Ticket sales were $71.1 million on 11.1 million admissions.

Female firefighter told to cut hair

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — The city's first woman firefighter says she hasn't decided whether to cut her shoulder-length hair or fight a department directive that she must trim it by today or be suspended.

Cindy Mansker said she was hired Oct. 8 and thought that pinning up her hair, like she did during three months of training, would satisfy the Hollywood Fire Department regulation calling for hair no more than "one-half inch over the collar when the collar is buttoned."

"The way I read it is that as long as my hair is up over my collar, I'm OK," said the 22-year-old Ms. Mansker, adding that she wasn't told otherwise until Jan. 25.

Ms. Mansker was told again Monday to cut her hair. When she showed up at work with it in a bun Thursday, she said she was told to cut it by the time she returned to work on Sunday or she would be suspended indefinitely.

Two small airplanes crash

Associated Press

A twin-engine airplane crashed in the New Hampshire mountains, killing four people, and the bodies of two people were found in their seats after a small plane crashed in New Jersey, authorities said Saturday.

In the New Hampshire crash, a fifth person aboard the Piper Navajo escaped with a concussion and broken wrist.

The wreckage of the charter service plane was found Saturday morning about 1,200 feet below the peak of 3,554-foot Mount Martha, 3½ miles from the Whitefield, N.H., airport, some 12 hours after controllers received the plane's last transmission, authorities said.

Carol Lodi, 29, of Littleton, Mass., was "very coherent and communicating quite well," in Littleton Hospital in New Hampshire, said LeRoy Deabler, hospital executive director.

She was found "some distance from the plane" and was taken by helicopter to the hospital, said Deabler, through whom authorities funneled information on the crash.

Ms. Lodi suffered a concussion and broken right wrist, he said.

Among those killed in the crash was Pegge Kirschner, operator of the Garnet Hill clothing catalog company in Franconia, N.H., Deabler said.

A spokesman for Whitefield Airport said the pilot was identified as Larry Jenkins of Bath, N.H. Identifications of the other victims were not immediately available.

Deabler said Ms. Lodi, art director of Andrews Printing in Bedford, Mass., and Ms. Kirschner were returning from Montreal, where they had gone for "some artwork for a catalog."

The plane left Montreal on Friday night, refueled in Burlington, Vt., and headed for Whitefield, about 130 miles northwest of Boston, Deabler said.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said the wreckage was found 3½ miles southeast of the airport. The operator of the plane was identified as Ladco Air Taxi of Lebanon, N.H.

In New Jersey, an off-duty police officer found the twin-engine Beechcraft King Air plane burning Friday night near Lawrence Township, authorities said.

The plane crashed about four miles from Millville Municipal Airport, in the southern part of the state, authorities said. The bodies of two men were still in their seats when the wreckage was found, said police Sgt. Phillip Cornwell.

The plane was en route from Ridgeland, S.C., and was preparing to land at the airport when the crash occurred Friday night, said Eugene Carroll, a National Transporation Safety Board inspector.

The victims were identified as John D. Burns, 58, of Millville, and Matthew Macario of Pennsylvania, according to police Chief Rodney Willis. Macario's age and hometown were not immediately available, police said.

The aircraft was owned by the Lisa Flite Corp. of Millville, Carroll said.

Amnesia victim 'incredibly' survived

Woman leaves house, wakes up 13 days later in hospital

By WILLIAM McCALL
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Teri Williams went out for a pack of cigarettes Dec. 23. She woke up 13 days later in a hospital bed, lucky to be alive.

The 40-year-old musician can't remember what happened to her, and doctors say she probably never will.

Police found Ms. Williams nine hours after she left the apartment she shares with one of her two daughters. She was slumped unconscious against a power pole about a mile away, unsheltered from the numbing cold.

She suffered from severe hypothermia and internal injuries, but "did not have a single external mark on her body," said Dr. Gary Mundy, director of emergency medical services at Mount Hood Medical Center in suburban Gresham.

The internal injuries were consistent with a precise beating with a blunt object, most likely a fist, he said.

"It's just incredible that she survived," Mundy said. "Certainly there have been people revived with colder body temperatures, but there is nobody in American medical literature that cold with so many injuries who has survived."

Survive she did. After three operations, Ms. Williams is now recuperating at home, cheerful and confident

"I didn't realize I had three operations until it was all over and they told me...I had a lot of hallucinations during surgery, like these terrible images of battling demons, but I guess it was just from fighting to stay alive."

— Terri Williams

while trying to figure how to pay hospital bills that mounted to more than $50,000.

Police can't explain what happened to her.

Mundy was the first physician to treat Ms. Williams after paramedics brought her to the hospital, unconscious and without a pulse. Her blood had cooled to a core temperature of 72 degrees and into a "sludge," sparing her from certain death from internal bleeding, he said.

As Ms. Williams' body temperature gradually increased and her pulse gained strength, doctors discovered she was bleeding internally from a ruptured spleen, lacerated liver and bruised small bowel.

As soon as her temperature reached between 80 and 85 degrees, she was taken into surgery. Her spleen was removed.

A week later, damage from hypothermia forced another operation to remove her pancreas and adrenal glands. That surgery made Ms. Williams a diabetic, and she will have to rely on insulin injections for the rest of her life.

A third operation was necessary when Ms. Williams suffered a high fever and rapid heartbeat. Doctors could not find a specific cause, but treatment with steroids immediately improved her condition.

Thirteen days after she walked out her front door, Teri Williams woke up.

"I didn't realize I had three operations until it was all over and they told me," she said in an interview at her home last week.

She said she remembers bits and pieces of her hospital stay but nothing else after she left the apartment.

"I had a lot of hallucinations during surgery, like these terrible images of battling demons, but I guess it was just from fighting to stay alive," Ms. Williams said.

Hypothermia "is far and away the most likely cause of her amnesia," said Mundy.

Investigators have no suspects nor any motive that might have prompted an attack on Ms. Williams, said Gresham police Sgt. Kent Leary. She could "easily have become a homicide victim," he said.

"You can't kill me off that easy," Ms. Williams said. "I love life and I've got a lot of living to do yet."

Ms. Williams said she doesn't know of anybody who would try to harm her. She has worked as a singer and part-time drummer most of her life, along with occasional waitress jobs, and had been singing jazz and blues at Portland nightclubs at the time of her injury.

"I've got a lot of friends," she said.

But now she needs more than friends.

Her itemized hospital bill, not including physicians' and paramedics' fees, came to $51,512.96.

She said she has no insurance, and the state Adult and Family Services Division will pay only for medical expenses incurred after her hospital release.

She has been selling her few possessions and surviving with friends' help. "It will turn out all right in the end," she said.

Ms. Williams faces a long recovery, but Mundy said her long-term physical outlook is "excellent."

As for the cigarettes she went out to buy on Dec. 23?

Ms. Williams said she had planned to give up smoking as a New Year's resolution. Now she has.

"It's a hard way to quit smoking," she said.

Air force retrieves part of Soviet missile

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — An air force helicopter lifted the damaged engine section of a wayward Soviet target missile from a frozen lake near the Soviet border Saturday, Finnish Radio reported.

It said the engine and bent sections of the missile body were flown at once to the air force's main depot at Tampere, central Finland, for inspection.

The unarmed missile was launched during Soviet naval target practice in the Barents Sea and crashed in Lake Inari on Dec. 28 after crossing Norwegian territory into north Finland.

Soviet officials asked for the return of all missile parts, but Finland said it would not decide immediately on the request. The Foreign Ministry said Saturday it would "follow the search and wait for a report from the air force before any decision on the Soviet request...will be made."

A decision was not expected before Monday night, when President Mauno Koivisto is due to return from a two-week vacation trip.

Finnish Radio reports said the missile engine was about 15 years old and was damaged heavily when it crashed into 31-inch-thick ice covering the lake in Finnish Lapland.

The radio quoted air force experts as saying the missile "was powered by a jet engine and there was the distinct smell of kerosene around it."

Authorities said divers will keep searching for smaller missile parts.

Finland's biggest newspaper, the Helsinki Sanomat, said Saturday that the Soviet request for the missile parts gave Finland "the technical possibility of seeking compensation for the search for and retrieval of remnants of the missile."

On Friday, a Finnish air force helicopter tried to hoist the missile's tail section from the lake bottom. But the tail cover broke loose and the engine plunged back to the lake floor, possibly with the electronic gear that malfunctioned and sent the missile off course.

Frogmen could stay in the cold water only minutes at a time, but they reached the lake bottom, 33 feet down, and attached wires to the tail section.

Finnish military experts said they had enough evidence to prove the missile was not a cruise missile, as originally reported by Norway early in January.

Lebanese currency suffers depreciation

Banks blamed on money problem were bombed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami said in a radio address Saturday that the record depreciation of the Lebanese currency was the result of a market fever "without any justification," and the government would work to correct it.

Karami, speaking after an eight-hour Cabinet meeting, also said several battalions of Lebanese soldiers "have been prepared and are waiting for a green light to move immediately" into areas of southern Lebanon.

Israel is preparing to withdraw its troops from part of southern Lebanon, which it has occupied since the invasion in June 1982. Karami dismissed Israeli warnings of possible sectarian violence in southern Lebanon following the withdrawal of the occupation forces.

Israel Radio reported in Tel Aviv on Saturday that the army had completed dismantling equipment and positions and was ready to pull back to new lines as the first step in a three-stage withdrawal plan.

However, the radio, quoting military sources, said the army was not pressuring the government to advance the Feb. 18 withdrawal date.

Karami said he had received "positive signals" on security efforts and political reforms that could help improve the sagging economy, but he did not announce any new proposals on either topic.

The Lebanese pound fell to an all-time low Saturday against the U.S. dollar on local markets and a series of bombs in Beirut damaged three banks and wounded four pedestrians.

AP Laserphoto

A Lebanese army soldier inspects the Capital Trust Bank which was damaged by one of four bomb explosions in Moslem West Beirut Saturday. Four people were wounded in the explosions, which police said were aimed at banks suspected of "manipulating" the Lebanese currency market and contributing to the growing economic crisis.

The pound closed Saturday at 13.30 to the dollar, after dropping to a range of 12.45 to 12.60 to the dollar at Friday's closing. As late as 1981 the pound had held firm at between three and four to the dollar.

Economists have blamed the sharp drop in the pound's value on Lebanon's recession and the government' inability to restore law and order.

"The security and political situation has contributed, to some extent, to this lawlessness on the market," Karami said. However, he added: "The fever that struck the dollar market in Lebanon in the past several days has made it reach unimaginable levels without any justification."

Karami blamed the bank bombings on Israel and Israeli agents. "We regret that some people resort to such hypocritical methods which are part of this filthy conspiracy" against Lebanon, he said.

Later, the shadowy Islamic Holy War group asserted responsibility for the bombings in a letter delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut. But the group generally issues its claims and threats by telephone and has particular ways of starting and ending its messages that were not contained in the letter.

The letter said that "our strikes today were nothing but a final warning" and threatened action against "the highest institutions of government" if the currency problem was not solved.

Police said they believed the banks that were damaged, Capital Trust, Universal and Saradar, were the targets because of allegations that financial firms were manipulating the currency markets.

Lebanese newspapers have reported that executives of four banks have been called in by government officials investigating currency speculations, but the banks were not identified by name.

Bombs exploded on the fourth floor and at the entrance of Capital Trust. A carpet shop on the ground floor was damaged, and three pedestrians were wounded, police said.

A short time later, small dynamite charges exploded at the entrances to the other two banks, and one man was injured near the Saradar bank, according to police.

Opposition leader going back to Korea

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Korean opposition leader Kim Dae Jung said Saturday he has been told he won't be jailed when he returns to Seoul this week after two years in exile, but he believes his life will be in danger as long as a military dictatorship rules his country.

"I must go back," Kim said, however. "My people need me."

Kim, who leaves Washington on the return trip Wednesday, said he is worried he might be returned to house arrest.

"I have been informed from some American and Korean sources I will not be in jail, I won't be jailed," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "There is still a possibility of house arrest."

Kim, who was once sentenced to death by the government, will arrive back in Seoul on Friday in the company of a group of Americans, who hope to prevent any recurrence of the reception accorded Philippines opposition leader Benigno Aquino, who was murdered upon his return to the Philippines in 1983.

"I don't see another Aquino," said Kim. He said the South Korean government of President Chun Doo Hwan "has learned much from that case."

But he also said, "As long as the military dictatorship is in Seoul, my life will be put in constant danger, I can't deny."

The White House announced Friday that President Chun has been invited to the White House to meet with Reagan in April. The trip was not announced until after the administration was given assurances by the Korean government that Kim would not be imprisoned upon his return.

But aides to Kim expressed disappointment that Reagan would not also meet with Kim before his return. Kim had written Reagan asking for a meeting to thank him for helping save his life in 1980 and arranging his trip to the United States in 1982.

But the aide, Lee Keun Pal, said the White House replied on Thursday that Reagan was too busy to meet with Kim. The two did meet about a month ago at the White House, Lee said.

Kim said in the interview that the Chun government has begun to show "a reasonable attitude" about his return. He said he plans to "be very careful" to avoid doing anything to cause "instability or social chaos" after his return.

As recently as a week ago, a government official in Seoul said Kim would be arrested and made to serve the remaining 17½ years of a prison term. That statement was later disavowed, however, after the administration made clear that imprisoning Kim could delay plans for Chun's visit to the United States.

Kim's death sentence, imposed for allegedly fomenting anti-government riots in 1980, was commuted to life in prison and then 20 years in prison through the combined intervention of the Carter and Reagan administrations.

The State Department said at the time that the charges against Kim were "far-fetched." Kim said in the interview he was innnocent and that he should be given amnesty with his political rights restored, although he doesn't expect this would happen.

Kim, 59, who still has hip problems from injuries suffered in an assassination attempt, almost was elected president in 1971, the last year of fully free presidential elections in South Korea.

He didn't deny the possibility that he might run for president again in a free election.

"My goal is very simply to realize another West Germany in South Korea," he said in the interview. He said he envisions a democratic South Korea "confident" to confront communist North Korea.

Pope says Mass at foot of dormant volcano, will visit war-torn area

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Crowds chanting Spanish rhymes and waving banners welcomed Pope John Paul II as he arrived in the southern Peruvian desert city of Arequipa on Saturday to beatify a 17th-century nun and say outdoor Mass at the foot of a dormant volcano.

The pontiff arranged to return later in the day to this sprawling, decaying capital to address a youthful audience Saturday night.

John Paul, making his sixth trip to Latin America, traveled Saturday morning to Arequipa, 635 miles from Lima at the foot of the volcano Misti and snow-capped Chachani Mountain.

About 200,000 people from Peru and from neighboring Chile and Bolivia cheered, sang and hurled flower petals when the pontiff arrived.

"John Paul, our friend, Arequipa is with you!," throngs chanted as the pope rode through the streets. He appeared tired on the eighth day of his 12-day, four-nation journey.

Beatification of the cloistered nun, Sister Ana de Los Angeles Monteagudo, represents the last step before she could be made a saint.

According to historians, her body was intact and the coffin smelled of roses when it was exhumed in 1686, the year after her death.

Today, the pontiff was to take his pilgrimage to the Ayacucho region of the Andes, where four years of guerrilla warfare have killed about 4,000 people. The faithful were reported flocking to the area by foot and donkey Saturday in anticipation of his arrival, and authorities were tightening security.

The Shining Path, a Maoist group that says it wants to create an authentic Marxist state in Peru — a country five-sixths as big as Alaska — has been fighting the Peruvian government since 1981. Most of the combat has been in the militarily controlled state of Ayacucho, where Peru fought and won independence from Spain in 1824.

Two birds perch themselves on a wooden crucifix being carried by a man outside the Apostolica Nunciature in Lima, Peru, from where Pope John Paul II made a brief appearance.

In anticipation of the pope's arrival, tight security measures in Ayacucho, 350 miles southeast of Lima, were being increased. The government was prohibiting pilgrims from wearing traditional Andean ponchos or hats, saying terrorists frequently use both to conceal weapons and explosives. Cameras also were to be banned today.

The newspaper El Comercio reported Saturday that two bombs exploded but caused no damage Friday night in Ayacucho. A source in the city told The Assocated Press by telephone that the blasts were fireworks, which have been allowed by the military in some areas in honor of the pontiff's visit.

Police on Friday blamed the Shining Path for dynamiting two power pylons in the interior.

After the pope arrived Friday night, he addressed the issue of bloodshed by calling on Peruvians to seek peace through "dialogue insted of violence."

John Paul, who already visited Venezuela and Ecuador on this trip, was greeted by outgoing Peruvian President Fernando Belaunde Terry, who said the pontiff represented "hope" for this nation of 19.5 million.

Peru has been hit hard by the economic crisis that has struck all of Latin America, which holds a combined foreign debt of more than $350 billion. The average Peruvian worker earns the equivalent of $56 a month. The combined underemployment and unemployment rate is put at 50 percent.

Peru was a key stop on the pontiff's tour, which will also take him to Trinidad and Tobago, because it is a stronghold of "liberation theology," a mixture of Gospel teaching and Marxist formulas.

Throughout John Paul's trip, he has cautioned clergy against "alien ideologies" and urged the faithful not to be swayed away from traditional church doctrine.

Pinochet extends state of siege

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Ignoring U.S. pressure and objections by some advisers, President Augusto Pinochet decreed a 90-day extension of the state of siege Saturday to stifle opposition political activity throughout Chile.

The decree, published without comment in the Official Bulletin, maintained special curbs on the press and on public gatherings until May 6 because of what it called a "state of internal convulsion" in Chile.

Pinochet, an army general who toppled the Marxist government of Salvador Allende in a 1973 coup, imposed the clampdown last Nov. 6 to combat a surge of terrorism and mass demonstrations for a swift return to democracy. He has insisted on adherence to a constitution that prolongs his authoritarian rule at least until 1989.

A broad coalition of non-Marxist parties make up the main opposition to Pinochet. The Marxist opposition is led by the illegal Communist Party, the strongest in Latin America outside Cuba.

A debate inside the government over the crackdown coincided with pressure by the Reagan administration to lift the siege. The United States has twice delayed an Inter-American Development Bank vote on a $130 million loan sought by Chile. The vote by the Washington-based bank is set for Wednesday.

Banking sources here said Finance Minister Luis Escobar argued within the government that such political pressure might discourage private U.S. banks from lending their share of the $1 billion in loans he is seeking this year for Chile's troubled economy.

But according to a rightist party leader with access to the president, Pinochet was told by Justice Minister Hugo Rosende that Chile should resist foreign economic pressure at any cost.

With three months of repressive measures, Pinochet has weakened his foes to the inconspicuous role they played before big protests flared up in May 1983. Public criticism once permitted by the regime has been stiffled, leftist movements have gone underground, and attempts to organize new protests have failed.

But the government's chief spokesman, Francisco Cuadra, said this week that bombings by Marxist groups increased in November and December and terrorism was still a threat in this South American nation of about 11.5 million people.

Most Chileans, he told reporters, welcomed the "political detoxification" enforced by censorship and argued that "terrorist groups are a lot more controllable without an atmosphere of political conflict."

By scrapping a political liberalization that had defused the 1983 protests, however, Pinochet came into conflict with key civilian aides. Some reportedly argued that police already had enough powers to fight terrorism and that the broad restrictions, if continued, could lead to uncontrollable political tension. One close advisor, Monica Madariaga, a niece of the president, quit the government this week.

According to the decree, public gatherings are prohibited unless authorized by regional governors, who are all military officers. Dissidents can be held indefinitely without charge. During the past 90 days, 314 dissidents were arrested. They are still imprisoned at an army camp near Pisagua, a coastal fishing village in the north.

Six opposition magazines shut down in November will remain banned and a seventh one under prior government censorship.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Pilot, passenger killed in crash

TEPIC, Mexico (AP) — A single-engine Piper aircraft piloted by an American crashed in bad weather in mountains a few miles outside this Pacific coast town, killing the pilot and one of two Mexican passengers, the airport director said Saturday.

Absalon Reyes de Talamantes, director of the Tepic airport, identified the pilot as Park Dobson Jr. of Alliance, Neb., and the passenger as Jesus Lizarraga.

The second passenger, Antonio Tirado, suffered "minor injuries" and is being treated at a local hospital, Reyes said.

He said the plane was en route from the Pacific resort of Mazatlan, 104 miles northwest of Tepic, when it crashed about noon near the village of La Joya, five miles north of Tepic, the capital of Nayarit state.

Landslides kill 60 people in China

PEKING (AP) — Landslides set off by heavy rainfall have killed 60 people since December in north China's Shaanxi province, including 20 crushed under a collapsed ridge in their village and 14 buried alive at a farm, the government said Saturday.

Hundreds of peasants have been ordered to evacuate houses in Shaanxi, where many threatened villages lie on riverbanks surrounded by steep slopes, the Ministry of Civil Affairs said in a report published by the English-language newspaper China Daily.

The provincial government has ordered investigators to determine the extent of the threat and establish observation stations to detect early-warning signs of shifting earth, the report said.

Common Market shrinks in half

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — The land area of the 10-nation Common Market has shrunk to half its former size — but most of the world barely noticed.

Greenland, an 840,000-square-mile island territory of Denmark, left the market Friday. It is the first territory to withdraw from the European trading group in its 27-year history.

Greenland gained partial autonomy within the Danish kingdom in 1979. Denmark remains responsible for Greenland's defense and foreign policy, and thus its relations with the Common Market. But a 1982 referendum showed that most Greenlanders favored getting out of the European Economic Community, so Denmark began the negotiations on its behalf.

Marcos planning film festival

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Two years after Philippine first lady Imelda R. Marcos drew fire from religious and civic organizations for allowing sexually explicit films to be included in a festival she helped organize, she is working on another festival — but this time everyone has clothes on.

A presidential palace announcement said the "Manila Events '85" festival scheduled Feb. 14-24 would "upgrade the quality" of Filipino films, saying,"the first lady stressed that pornography and films with bad plots will not be part of the film festival."

Manila's Roman Catholic archbishop, Cardinal Jaime Sin, led the attack on the 1983 Manila International Film Festival, calling it a "river of filth and pornography."

Rome lake scoured for missing teen

ROME (AP) — Scuba divers searched an artificial lake in Rome all day Saturday but failed to find any trace of the missing teen-age daughter of a Vatican employee, Italian authorities reported.

The search was prompted by an anonymous phone caller who said Emanuela Orlandi's body had been dumped in the lake.

Emanuela vanished after a music lesson in Rome on June 22, 1983. She was 15 at the time. The pope has called for her release and a reward of $130,000 has been offered for information on the whereabouts of Emanuela and another girl.

Messages from self-proclaimed kidnappers have demanded the release of Mehmet Ali Agca, the papal assailant, in return for Emanuela's freedom, but the kidnappers have never publicly provided any proof they are holding her.

Grenades burst at Moslem meeting

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Two grenades exploded during a meeting of the rightist Moslem League in Khulna, 186 miles southwest of Dhaka, but no one was injured, police in Khulna said Saturday.

The grenades burst as party leader Jamir Ali gave a speech at a meeting in which he called for Bangladesh to become an Islamic republic, police.

Tass: U.S. charges meant to draw attention from 'Star Wars'

MOSCOW (AP) — Tass charged Saturday that the United States was trying to draw attention away from what it said were U.S. plans for "a crash militarization of outer space" by accusing the Soviets of arms control violations.

In a report to Congress on Friday, President Reagan accused the Soviet Union of three violations of arms control treaties, including construction of a radar system in Krasnoyarsk in central Siberia.

The two other violations were underground test explosions that Reagan said sent radioactive debris outside Soviet territory, violating a 1963 treaty, and changes in an intercontinental ballistic missile. He said the alterations created a second missile, called the SS-X-25, in violation of the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, or SALT II.

Reagan said the United States would go ahead with new arms control negotiations set to begin March 12 in Geneva, but that he expected the Soviet Union to correct what he said were its violations of existing treaties.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said Saturday: "The Washington administration has floated another anti-Soviet falsehood in advance of Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons." It said the United States has no facts to back up the accusations.

The Tass article, parts of which were read over Radio Moscow on Saturday night, made no mention of the Krasnoyarsk project, which Reagan said violates the 1972 U.S.-Soviet anti-ballistic missile treaty.

In a separate news analysis issued later, Tass military writer Vladimir Bogachev said Moscow "refutes most categorically these fantastic contentions made by Washington."

He said Reagan's report made it clear that the United States plans to violate the 1972 treaty by developing a space-based anti-missile system, dubbed the "Star Wars" defense.

"Each time Washington is going to derail another international agreement limiting the risk of outbreak of a nuclear war or to undertake military actions that would sap such accords, which has been happening too often of late, public opinion is offered another presidential report on 'the Soviet Union's violations of its arms control commitments,'" Bogachev wrote.

"It is usually possible to deduce unmistakably from the nature and contents of the charges against the Soviet Union which of the still-valid agreements Washington intends to sacrifice to the fulfillment of its militarist plans," he wrote.

The previous Tass report said Reagan's report to Congress was "clearly designed for 'public consumption.'"

"The Washington administration seeks to draw public attention away from its own, very unseemly record in the field of compliance with arms control commitments, while at the same time preparing the ground for their further violations by the United States," it said.

Tass said news analysts, whom it did not identify, had called attention to the "barrage of (U.S.) accusations" that the Soviets had violated the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

"And it is this treaty, signed in 1972, that has now become the prime target of attacks by the Pentagon, which views it as the main stumbling block in the way of its preparations for a crash militarization of outer space," Tass said.

Stalin nostalgia sweeping U.S.S.R.

By ANDREW J. GLASS
New York Times News Service

GORI, U.S.S.R. — Born here in poverty in 1879, Joseph Stalin rose to rule the Soviet Union as an absolute dictator for 29 years. After his death, he was denounced by his successors as a tyrant. Now, with 29 more years having gone by since he was vilified from a Kremlin rostrum for his terrible crimes, a wave of nostalgia for Stalin appears to be sweeping the country.

"I don't care what they say about him," says a visitor from Moscow to the modest Stalin shrine in Gori. "I like 'Uncle Joe.'"

The pilgrim from Moscow is still a bit tipsy from a lunch well lubricated with vodka and the local sweet Georgian wines. Now, as dusk gathers, he bends over to kiss the ground before the two-room house where Stalin entered the world, as the son of a failed village shoemaker, in this remote mountainous region of southwest Russia.

The Soviet pilgrim recounts that he never knew his father, who died on the Leningrad front in 1941, six months after he was born. It was a war in which 20 million Russians died, 10 million of them civilians, including Stalin's eldest son, Jacob, who was captured and killed by the Nazis.

The rehabilitation of Stalin's name under way within the Soviet Union seems to lack any official sanction. Thus, the Soviet state publishing houses have no plans to issue revised Stalin biographies marking the 40th anniversary of the end of the great war in Europe — a war in which Stalin led the Red Army to victory.

In Kiev, the capital of the Soviet Ukraine, the major war museum opened there in 1982 by Leonid Brezhnev severely downplays Stalin's central role in quashing the German invaders. But, so far as an American visitor could tell, the official cold-shoulder for Stalin hasn't kept ordinary Russians from pinning photos of the late dictator, clipped from aging magazines, in somewhat the same fashion as some Americans now venerate the Kennedy brothers as martyrs. Along with anti-American posters, such pictures can be seen widely in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital where Stalin's daughter, Svetlana Alliluyeva, lives with her 13-year-old American-born daughter, Olga Peters.

A 110-page guidebook to Soviet Georgia, published in Moscow, mentions Stalin only in one brief paragraph. Still, Georgia is perhaps the only place in the Soviet Union, a nation known for worshiping even its minor heroes, where Stalin's memory remains officially enshrined.

In Gori, 70 miles up a river valley from Tbilisi, Stalin's birthplace is covered by a protective marble and glass pavillion. It's possible to duck under a thin red ribbon and peer through the windows at his modest bed and metal washbasin. Behind the house stands a small museum which holds Stalin memorabilia, especially material from his revolutionary youth, when he took up the Marxist cause after being expelled from a Georgian Orthodox seminary. Down Stalin Avenue, near a small hotel, there is a 40-foot black marble statue of Stalin, the only such figure which still remains in the country.

In Tbilisi itself, a pleasant city of 1.5 million people located near the Turkish border and some 150 miles due east of the Black Sea, there is a street, a bridge, a factory and a 280-acre park, perched high above the city, which bear Stalin's name. A small plaque at the Museum of Georgian Art notes that Stalin studied there as a seminarian from 1894 to 1899, when he was expelled by the priests for failing to appear for an exam.

This is the city where Svetlana, Stalin's daughter by his second marriage, recently chose to return after the pressures of life in Moscow proved too formidable. As a double defector — she went to the United States in 1967 and earned a fortune there by publishing her memoirs, only to return to her native land last year — Svetlana occupies a unique position in Soviet society. She sent a visiting reporter a terse note saying she did not wish to see him.

Not far from Svetlana's modest apartment house in Tbilisi, people gather each morning to buy fresh hot loaves of flat bread, a staple of the Georgian diet. The bread is baked much the same way as when Stalin roamed these same streets: the ovens consist of huge clay vats set into the floor and heated from below by charcoal. The baker reaches down and slaps the dough as hard as he can against the red-hot sides of the oven. There the loaves stick until the baker's long-handled paddle scrapes them free when they are done.

The 51-year-old baker has pasted four snapshot-sized pictures of Stalin to the wall of the state-owned establishment. "Perhaps he made some mistakes," the baker concedes. "But he also earned our respect."

Richard Pipes, a history professor at Harvard and a former adviser to President Reagan on Soviet policy, notes that both among the Soviet elite and the less well educated public there is a good deal of nostalgia for the days of Stalin — not for his genocidal savagery, but rather for an idealized regime of order and discipline, when all did their duty and, unlike today, when corruption was pitilessly punished.

Says Pipes: "Such glorified Stalinism seems to offer a way out of the difficulties that Soviet society faces, without resort to dangerous reforms. But this is an idle fantasy. Stalinism cannot be restored for any number of reasons, the most weighty of which is the impossibility of running the country's present-day sophisticated industrial plant and military establishment by brute force and in isolation from the rest of the world."

Pipes suspects that those who recall the Stalin years so wistfully realize this and that "Stalinism is the last thing in the world they want or would put up with if it really returned."

Yet, in Soviet Georgia — unscathed by the severe Russian winter, a place where food is home grown and abundant — the mood toward Stalin remains mellow. Here, there is no talk of the tens of millions of peasants and workers who died in the frozen gulag on Stalin's orders.

Instead, there are but fond memories of a seminarian born as Joseph Vissarionvich Djugashvili, who embraced a revolution and changed his name to "Man of Steel."

Government says U.S.S.R. cracking down on Jews

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department says the Soviet Union is waging a major crackdown on Hebrew teachers and Jewish cultural activists in a campaign of "arrests and intimidation."

In the past six months, 11 Soviet Jews have been arrested and four sentenced to labor camps, according to a State Department report.

The arrests "were accompanied by a series of searches, beatings and threats which have sent shock waves through the Soviet Jewish community," the report said.

The crackdown, which the State Department said began in late July, was "a deliberate and ongoing campaign of arrests and intimidation targeted at the activist Jewish community in the Soviet Union by Soviet authorities," Deputy State Department spokesman Edward P. Djerejian said.

The report, which was delivered Friday, said that among those arrested was Aleksandr Kholmianskiy, a Moscow Hebrew teacher, who was detained July 26 in Estonia on charges of hooliganism. A pistol and ammunition reportedly were found in his parents' apartment. Kholmianskiy, who was on a hunger strike, was awaiting trial.

The following month, police arrested another Moscow Hebrew teacher, Yuliy Edelshtein, on narcotics charges. He was convicted Dec. 19 and sentenced to three years in a labor camp.

Relatives claimed evidence was planted by police in both cases, the report said.

A Kiev Hebrew teacher, Iosif Berenshtein, was arrested in November and sentenced to three years in a labor camp for resisting police. Following his Dec. 10 conviction, he was beaten and stabbed and lost sight in one eye, the report said.

Yakov Gorodetskiy, described as a leading activist in Leningrad, served a two-month work release sentence in late summer, and his telephone, along with the telephones of other activists, were disconnected, the report said.

About 20 Leningrad families have been threatened with the loss of their jobs if they do not give up plans to emigrate, the State Department said.

The report also cited stepped up anti-Semitic campaigns in the Soviet media.

Akins protests party line of mayor group

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Mayor G. Thane Akins went to Washington, D.C., two weeks ago and joined a protest movement.

Known for his staid, predictable, conservative philosophies, Akins hooked up with a group of dissident "radical" Republicans who threatened to pull out of the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

"I'm very radical in a lot of ways," the mayor said with a laugh. But protest movements are not his usual modus operandi. In this case, he solemnly nodded and said, "Yep. I was a part of that group."

The Republican mayors banded together and voiced their objections to the Democratic leadership in an organization which professes to be bipartisan.

"The conference is overwhelmingly Democratic and they're highly critical of the administration," said Akins. "They continually place the blame for their problems on the president and anyone who's had high school government knows the blame goes to Congress who passed these laws."

The Republican mayors, which comprise about a third of the membership, "have little or no voice in the conference" and rarely are assigned to head committees or to the executive board, he said.

The new conference president, Ernest Morial of New Orleans, "said the conference was bipartisan because he said it was in his acceptance speech," according to the recalcitrant Akins.

The revolt on the final day of the mid-winter conference was the culmination of several events, according to the mayor.

Back in November a week prior to the presidential election, Washington, D.C., Mayor Marion Barry held a news conference to present an urban studies report that was "highly critical of the president. This report hadn't been reviewed by the committee or the rest of the conference. The timing seemed highly political."

Another group known as the National Republican Conference of Mayors and Municipal Elected Officials held a news conference to rebut Barry's report and then asked the U.S. Conference of Mayors to appoint more Republicans to the executive committee or advisory board.

"They did none of those things," said Akins.

In retaliation, the Republican mayors banded together and staged their protest. "We said we were going to drop out and form a truly bipartisan group of mayors."

While some members have dropped their membership in the conference, Akins is waiting until the summer meeting. "I think it will be the last straw for some."

Heart Month features variety of health, fund-raising activities

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

February is a month for hearts. So it's only appropriate that Gov. Mark White recently proclaimed February as Heart Month.

"Heart and blood vessel disease will claim over 325,000 lives and is expected to cost our economy $72.1 billion in 1985," said the governor.

Locally, area students are jumping over the announcement. Literally.

"We are holding Jumprope for Heart in February," said Rita Nell, regional director for the American Heart Association. "It combines education and therapy and will be done primarily in the schools."

The event involves teams of six members each jumping rope for three hours per team.

"They get pledges and win prizes," said Ms. Nell. "It's sort of a jumprope-a-thon."

The marathon jumping sessions will be held the last week of February or first week in March, she said, and will be coordinated by physical education teachers in the community.

"All the teachers involved will receive a free educational packet for a three to four week unit on cardiopulmonary physical therapy and cardiovascular health. The packet includes a film, wall charts, instructions and the jump ropes," said Ms. Nell.

"We're also adding something new this year. There will be six cassette tapes with choreographed routines to songs that kids like, such as 'Ghostbusters'."

All proceeds go to the AHA, she said.

Also to be held in February are a blood screening, to be conducted at Wal-Mart Feb. 9 by the Midland College Student Nurses Association, and a telepledge campaign to previous donors to encourage future donations.

Life goes on for heart attack victims

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

"It felt like an elephant was standing on my chest," said Reese Thurston, 59, of the Midland Police Dept.

The heart attack woke Thurston at 5 a.m. 10 years ago. "At first I thought it was indigestion but after it kept bothering me for three to four hours I decided to go to the doctor," he said.

But after a change in diet (one meal a day, more vegetables, less meat), the airport officer pays little attention to the fear of another heart attack.

"I've done CPR on all sorts of people at the airport," he said. "I don't pay much attention to it anymore."

Thurston is typical of many who have heart attacks and survive them — life goes on.

While heart attacks are the leading cause of death in America, according to the American Heart Association, with 554,900 deaths per year, there are still a substantial number of victims who survive and do quite nicely.

According to statistics from the AHA, there are roughly 4,670,000 heart attack victims alive today.

A heart attack, said the AHA, occurs when part of the heart muscle does not get enough oxygen and other nutrients and begins to die. It is important to get to a hospital as soon as possible, said the AHA, since most heart attack victims die within the first two hours after the warning signals begin.

Jim Pryor wasted no time.

"I was in the doctor's office in 15 minutes," he said. "I drove my self."

"I was at our new home-site when I broke out in a cold sweat," said Pryor, a drilling superintendent for Kimball Production Co. "It didn't scare me to have a heart attack, but I was scared that it might be a stroke."

"I said 'good Lord, don't let it be a stroke'."

Pryor spent four days in the critical care unit at Midland Memorial Hospital, following the attack on Oct. 29, 1984. He stayed at the hospital for a total of 10 days and then was at home recuperating for a month before going to Houston for a quadrupal bypass.

"Dr. Cooley performed the surgery," he said. "I stayed there 10 days and then came home."

The interim of "rest" between the two hospitals was no waste of time for Pryor.

"I tiled two and a half baths in our new home," he said. "The doctor said that I could get up and work as long as I didn't tire myself. I hung and trimmed out a door and started trimming the windows at the new place."

Pryor is now working on finishing the home.

"I'm having no problems. I take a blood thinner and baby aspirin and remain on a special diet. I even gave up my pipe," he said. "I figured now is the time to give it up."

Mac McClure's recuperation was not so easy.

"I had a bypass in Lubbock and was given a pacemaker," said the 48-year-old field superintendant for Dinero Operating Co. "I felt very uncomfortable because the pacemaker was set at about 85 beats per minute and I naturally have very low blood pressure (65). It was making me very hyper."

McClure has had time since the attack occurred in 1978, to adjust to the pacemaker.

"I used to be afraid that I would open garage doors as I went by them and stuff like that," chuckled McClure. "But now my batteries are down and they would have to remove it surgically to fix it."

Like the other victims, McClure gives the attack little thought these days.

"I try not to dwell on it," he said. "I walked faithfully, two miles a day for four years. I still walk, but not as consistently.

Boy Scouts changing while maintaing ideals

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

As the Boy Scouts of America prepares to celebrate its 75th anniversary Friday, the organization is trying to change its methods to appeal to modern youth, while remaining true to the principles on which it was founded.

"We know society changes and we know the program has to change with it. But the basic ideals remain the same," says Doug Palmer, district executive for the Buffalo Trail Council in Midland. "Our objectives haven't changed in 75 years: character development, physical fitness and citizenship training."

Though 70 million people have been involved in scouting since 1910, the organization is serving fewer young people today than in the recent past, according to "Shaping Tomorrow Together," a handbook for Scout leaders: "While the system is sound, it is not working as well as it should."

To broaden its appeal, The Boy Scouts have decided to include more sports-related activities, increase the frequency of camping trips, and make it easier for disadvantaged boys to participate.

"In the early days, it was required that you know how to stop a runaway horse," says E.O. "Gene" Vaughan, trust development officer for the Buffalo Trail Council. "Today, kids learn about computers and aviation and things like that."

To celebrate the 75th anniversary of the national organization's founding, the Buffalo Trail Council is planning an open house for all scouters today from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Scout Service Center, 1101 W. Texas. On Thursday, the council will bury a time capsule on the service grounds, to be opened on Feb. 8, 2010, on the centennial of the Boy Scouts of America.

Planned for Friday is the Chaparral District Banquet for Midland and Martin county scouts, with Bob Bouse from the South Central Region office in Dallas as featured speaker.

The Buffalo Trail Council, which serves 18 West Texas counties, recently observed its 38th anniversary. It was founded when the late George Abell put up $25,000 to help buy the Scout Ranch in the Davis Mountains, and another $25,000 to help start the council's trust fund.

Today, in addition to the 6,000-acre Scout Ranch, the council is building an aquatic facility at Lake Colorado City for training in swimming, boating and canoeing. But new physical facilities aren't the only new developments.

Please see SCOUTS, Page 2B

The 6,000-acre Scout Ranch in the Davis Mountains is recognized as one of the outstanding Boy Scout camps in the nation, according to local scouting officials.

Film protest recalls old X-rated campus activities

There was a brief news item in the paper last week that read:

"ARLINGTON — A group of University of Texas at Arlington students has launched a petition drive to ban X-rated movies on campus, especially a French film scheduled to be shown in March.

"Greg Sullivan, president of the UTA Baptist Student Union, said Tuesday that he and other students will seek 300 signatures to 'show that most students don't want pornography shown on campus.'

"But Friday, more than 600 people attended each of two campus showings of the X-rated film, 'Emmanuelle: The Joys of a Woman,' making it one of the most popular films of the school year, UTA officials said.

"Sullivan said he and five other students picketed the film Friday and will continue similar demonstrations at future X-rated showings."

The story brought back fond memories of my freshman year at a small university in Wichita Falls where we too protested the scheduled showing of an X-rated movie. The only difference was the administration had banned our film and it was the students, Baptists included, who responded by taking over the office of the Dean of Student Affairs, though I never did find out which students were having the affairs. Nonetheless, because of the havoc, classes were disrupted for several hours.

What made the incident all the more comical was the film in question was not your basic X-rated flick such as "Deep Throat" or "Debbie Does Dallas," or even any of the more stylish Marilyn Chambers adventures.

No, this movie was an animated satire of television which used nude cartoon figures to score (a poor choice of words) points rather than nude human beings.

To say the least, it was anything but erotic. Tacky is a good way of describing it.

Still, this form of censorship offended the fertile minds of 18- and 19-year-olds and, as a result, a storm of protest overwhelmed our sleepy little campus.

Predictably, the local news media got word of the demonstration and rushed their crews to the dean's office where they filmed the takeover. And sure enough that night on the 6 o'clock news there was footage of several students, with fists in air, expressing dissatisfaction with the decision.

In hindsight it all seems rather silly, not to mention embarrassing. The Vietnam War was still raging and so was the civil rights movement, and yet the best "issue" we could come up with to protest was the banning of a mindless little flick making fun of TV commericials.

Let's face it, it wasn't the kind of overt action that gets you written up in J. Edgar Hoover's files. Abbie Hoffman, we weren't.

The protest did serve a useful purpose, however. If nothing else, it brought together a rather bizarre collection of campus groups, which, under normal circumsances, did not speak to one another much less unite behind a common goal.

For example:

There were the longhairs, mostly imports from places like South Orange, N.J., and Garden City, N.Y., whose idea of a fun afternoon was to shout anti-war slogans at the ROTC students as they marched through campus.

There were the fraternity boys whose idea of a fun afternoon was to shout pro-war slogans at the longhairs.

And, there were the ROTC students whose idea of a fun afternoon was to march through campus as though Gen. Sherman had been reincarnated and chosen our school as the site of his much-anticipated encore performance.

Yet, there they were, three opposing groups joining in protest against an administrative decision. It did the heart good.

My only regret is that the issue turned out to be so trite. X-rated cartoons. I mean, really. Che Guevara must have turned in his grave. Castro no doubt laughed at us. And with good reason.

When a conservative West Texas college decides to have its one and only protest it is imperative that the proper issue be chosen, something with substance, something that speaks to the times in which we live.

Why we didn't boycott the cafeteria food, as I recommended, is beyond me.

Teddy Stickney will present a slide program on "Rock Art of the Southwest." The presentation will focus on the different styles of rock art present in the Southwest rather than interpretations of the art. Methods of recording various types of rock art also will be discussed.

Ms. Stickney has been a member of the Midland Archeological Society for 18 years and also belongs to the Texas Archeological Society and the Archeological Society of New Mexico.

AKINS

If the Republicans pull out to start a separate group, Akins said he realizes it would be several years before the offshoot would be effective and have a voice to which others would listen.

The conference, organized about 50 years ago, primarily operates as a lobbying group for mayors.

"They are to influence the president and Congress. But they have no access at all to the president because of the way they have been in their criticism," said Akins, who was among a small group of Republican mayors invited to the White House during his visit.

Although he disagrees with the majority opinions, Akins said he attends the sessions to give the Energy and Environmental Committee an inside look at the petroleum industry. In that way, this committee influences the conference's membership to support legislation that is favorable to the industry.

Also pulling at the ripping seams of the conference is the fear by many of the Democratic mayors the federal government will be eliminating many of the programs which support those cities. Akins cited Revenue Sharing and Community Development Block Grant funds as two.

"Some of us would be tickled to death if they cut it all out. But, of course, leave the money here and let the cities manage their affairs sensibly," he said.

In comparison to the Democratic membership of the conference, Akins said he is, "indeed, a radical among that group of folks."

SCOUTS

"We're tailoring a lot of programs now to one-parent families," says Vaughan, citing mom-and-son campouts as an example. And there are programs for latch-key kids — "The kids that come home and nobody is there" because both parents are working.

While not neglecting outdoors skills, the Boy Scouts are now emphasizing programs such as the Explorers, which is coeducational and designed to teach career skills.

"It's very much like the Jaycees," Palmer says.

Despite the changes, Vaughan says the Boy Scouts are still fulfilling their original design, teaching scouts to be trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent.

"Scouting has a tremendous affect," he says. "Today's kids have a lot of pressure on them from a lot of things. If you get them in the right kind of gang...they learn self-reliance and team play."

Paper part of rare breed using Linotype

By WAYNE C. SELLERS

STERLING CITY (AP) — This ranching and oil community of 915 people midway between San Angelo and Big Spring has one institution that is now just about a part of history.

When Jack Douthit, editor and publisher of the Sterling City News-Record, sits down at the keyboard of a Linotype machine and sets the type for his newspaper, he is working at a job just about as rare as that of the village blacksmith.

A Linotype machine is now as rare in newspaper offices as a steam locomotive on railroads. It vanished almost overnight less that 20 years ago in newspapers large and small. The latest directory of the Texas Press Association lists only four weekly newspapers in the state which uses Linotypes.

The machine casts lines of type from molten metal. It revolutionized printing 100 years ago just as electronics and photo typesetting have revolutionized printing in the last two decades.

In a few years there won't be any newspapers like the News-Record left, but few would agree with Douthit's assessment that he "is an obsolete editor publishing an obsolete newspaper."

He begins his day with a trip to the post office, then a stop for coffee with friends at the bank. When he opens up the News-Record office, just across a gravel street from the Sterling county courthouse, he has with him The Dallas Morning News and The Wall Street Journal. If there is mail for Mrs. Douthit, a retired school teacher, he runs it by their home on the east side of Sterling City.

At the beginning of the week, Douthit is busy gathering news and advertising for the weekly issue which comes off the press Thursdays.

He sets the type for the advertising and news on the Linotype after trips about town and then makes up the pages, two at a time.

Wednesdays, he makes the first press run, printing the two inside pages. Thursday morning, he makes up the front and back pages and goes to press again.

His press is a two-page Campbell book press which has been turning out the News-Record 66 years.

The copies of the News-Record are folded by hand, then addressed by Mrs. Douthit, the circulation manager, who comes to the office on press day to help out.

But there's more involved than just getting out the paper every week. Friends drop by to leave news and advertising copy and just to visit.

Douthit is secretary of the Lions Club and has been Democratic chairman of Sterling county 35 years.

When he has to leave the office, he puts a notice in the front door announcing, "Gone to the Bank," "Gone to the Post Office" or "Gone to Lunch," as the case may be.

Douthit takes off from time to time, and with Mrs. Douthit takes extended trips. He has been to England three times to visit their son, Collin, who works in London for an American corporation. Collin was a Linotype operator when a student at the University of Texas where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees.

The Douthits also make trips to Colorado to see their daughter, Mary Lee Douthit, who has a doctorate in anthropology and archaeology from The University of Texas.

Douthit, 72, is the second owner of the News-Record since 1890. He bought the newspaper in 1945 from "Uncle Bill" Kellis, a legendary West Texas editor.

Then type was set by hand a letter at a time at the News-Record, just as it was by Gutenberg 500 years ago when he invented movable type.

He was probably the last publisher in Texas to convert his newspaper from "hand set" to Linotype composition.

Midland man accidentally shot in face with .22-caliber gun

From Staff Reports

A 39-year-old Midland man was undergoing treatment for a gunshot wound to the right cheek at about 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

James Williams of 1605 Golf Course Road was accidentally shot in the face with a .22-caliber gun by a woman, according to sketchy details from police.

The Midland Memorial Hospital house supervisor said Williams still was being treated at 10 p.m. and his status was not known.

No charges are expected to be filed in the incident, according to police.

Two Midlanders were treated and released from MMH after they were assaulted in separate incidents late Friday afternoon and early Saturday morning, according to police reports.

A clerk at Anthony's Department Store was bitten Friday afternoon by a woman being detained as a suspect in a shoplifting incident. Reports said the 36-year-old woman was caught trying to steal four suits from the store. Employee Terry Stevens, Rt. 6 Box 600 Space 22, was bitten on the right arm and kicked by the woman until another employee joined in the struggle.

Antoinette Anthony of 1905 W. Ohio, told police she was assaulted by a man early Saturday morning. An ambulance dispatched to 1708 N. Weatherford at 4:50 a.m. transported Ms. Anthony to the emergency room, where she was treated for wounds to the right arm.

Kenneth Cook, 3601 Andrews Highway No. 215, reported early Saturday morning seeing his pickup being driven from the parking lot at Redmen Lounge. According to reports, Cook left the engine running and the door to the 1979 Ford unlocked before leaving the lounge at 1:10 a.m. Police are looking for a man thought to be intoxicated who had entered the bar, requested a Tipsy Taxi and then decided to walk.

Billy Thompson of the Lamplighter Inn told police he was in the process of moving when an $800 stereo and a cable television converter box was stolen from 3513 Apache between 10 a.m. and 10:30 p.m. Friday. There were no signs of forced entry, reports said.

Girl videotaping commercial shot with derringer

ODESSA (AP) — A 16-year-old girl who was playacting for a homemade videotape commercial was shot to death with a derringer late Friday, police said.

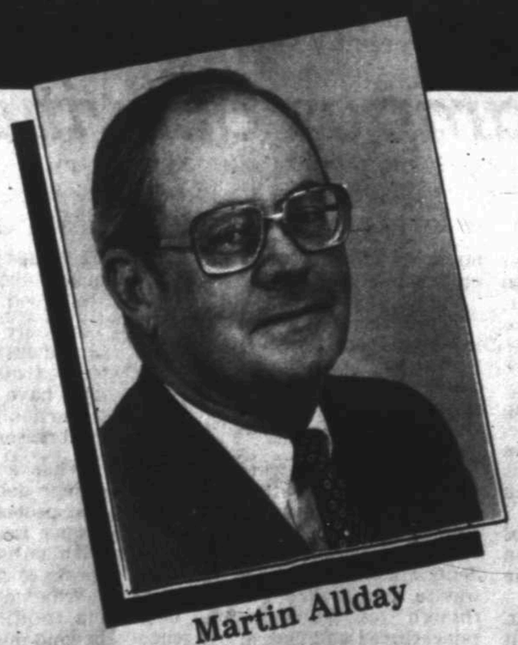
Kelle Hawley and two female friends were pretending to film a commercial at the northeast Odessa residence of one of the girls, according to police reports.

As one of the girls operated a video recorder, another girl picked up a .22-caliber derringer and pointed it at Miss Hawley. Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford said the gun discharged, striking Miss Hawley in the left shoulder.

She was rushed to the hospital, where she was pronounced dead on arrival at 12:15 a.m. Saturday, officials said.

Hungerford said he ruled the death accidental after viewing the videotape.

People of our community who make a difference.



Martin Allday

Midland is fortunate to have many dedicated citizens who are willing to get up early and stay late in order to make Midland a prosperous community. Attorney Martin Allday finds that in order to be involved in community service projects and keep up with the demands of his law practice he has to put in long days. He says, however, it is well worth the extra effort.

Mr. Allday moved to Midland in 1953 when he was working in the legal department of a large oil company. He was single and only knew three people in the entire community. It wasn't long until this young attorney had made many friends in Midland.

He joined the Jaycees and found that being co-chairman of the Sports Committee, which helped coordinate a wide variety of recreational activities in the city, was very time consuming yet rewarding. In 1956 Mr. Allday accepted the responsibility of being president of the Jaycees. That year the Midland club was recognized as the best Jaycee organization not only on the state level, but also on the national level.

In the midst of all his community activities, somehow Mr. Allday still found time for courting. Thus, when he was transferred he took his Midland bride away with him.

Being away from Midland for two years convinced the Alldays that Midland is a really unique community. In this city, Mr. Allday says, "People can be part of the community so much easier. They can see results from their efforts. That gives me a kick."

So that his family could return to Midland, Mr. Allday began his own law practice in 1959. (He joined the law firm which is now Lynch, Chappell, Allday and Alsup.) He also resumed his community service activities.

Mr. Allday was selected by the League of Women Voters as Midland's Outstanding Citizen in 1960. At various times he served as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, the Midland Industrial Foundation, and Midland Country Club. He also acted as director or trustee for Midland Memorial Foundation (Hospital), Museum of the Southwest, United Way, Salvation Army, and the Petroleum Club of Midland.

Mr. Allday is still very involved in the community. Not only is he a governor of Midland Memorial Foundation, but he is also on the the Centennial and Sesquicentennial Commision. In addition, this Midlander is the only Texan on the Board of Directors for the National Parks Foundation.

Mr. Allday makes a difference in Midland because he is commited to helping the community not just prosper but shine.

Two preliminary bouts and another bout after Blake's also are planned.

Few people realize how much work it takes to get ready for various events in Midland College's Chap Center. Last weekend, for example, they had a high school basketball game on Friday night. When the game was over, personnel had to clean the building and put down the protective floor covering so the boats could be moved in.

As soon as the boat show was concluded Sunday evening, the building had to be cleaned again and the floor covering removed in preparation for a Chap basketball game. This process is repeated each time the building is used for a different purpose.

Speaking of basketball, this week's schedule has the Chaparrals laying South Plains at 8 p.m. Monday in Chap Center. They'll be on the road Thursday against New Mexico Junior College in Hobbs. Both games are to be broadcast on KCRS Radio, 550 AM. The NMJC game won't start until 9 p.m. Midland time.

If you've been promising yourself — or your children — that you'd come to a MC game this season, there are only four more remaining. And that includes the South Plains contest.

When the list of fall semester honor students was published recently, the name of David C. Qualls was omitted. All David did was earn a perfect 4.0 Grade Point Average while taking a very heavy 2 hours. That earned him a place on the President's List ... and we regret his name was left off.

Continuing on display all this month is "Leonard Baskin: The Indian Drawings," an exciting display of impressionistic works done by Baskin primarily in the 1970s. The 54 drawings are being displayed in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, and are open to the public without charge. Coincidentally, Baskin's work and style are featured in the current issue of a national art magazine.

HOME LOAN SOURCES

Where do you go in the quest for mortgage money? For years, Savings and Loan Associations have provided mortgage funds for the majority of single family home sales. However, you still have alternative sources for financing a home.

Some commercial banks offer home mortgages. This is especially true of larger commercial banks who handle trust accounts for wealthy clients. Mortgages are good, save investments.

The regulations for credit unions have been relaxed in the last few years, allowing them to play a more active role in mortgage lending.

Mortgage companies have assumed an increasing role in the field of mortgage finance origination and servicing. Individuals, both sellers and private investors, continue to make first and second mortgage loans on single family home purchases.

If you put yourself in the hands of an experienced, professional Realtor, you can be assured that all appropriate financing options will be explored.

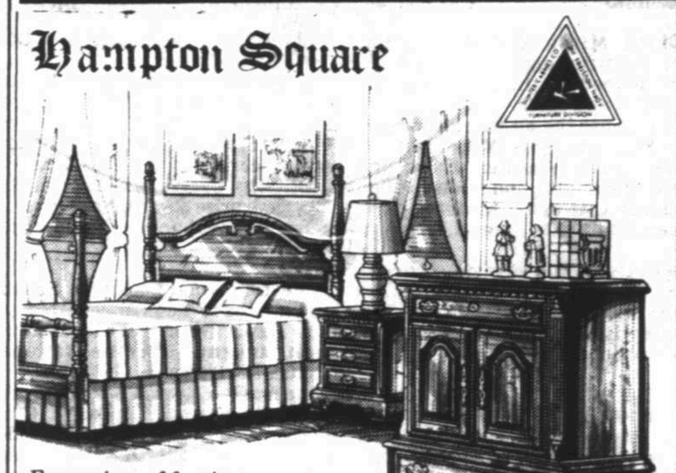
Hampton Square



Every piece of furniture the master designers of the 18th Century designed has an everyday, practical job to do...yet they designed with such grace, such perfection of taste, that their furniture took on the added responsibility of dressing a room with distinctive style and beauty.

Hampton Square, by Sumter Cabinet is designed in that tradition. Much of its appeal comes from the Northern Hard Rock Maple solids, and end panels of maple veneer over solid hardwood cores, in a rich cherry-finish, with many pieces to choose from in this vast collection.

WATER RETENTION AND WEIGHT GAIN

Have you recently put on weight, but have not altered your diet or exercise regimen? The answer may lie on the shelves of your medicine Cabinet. Several commonly prescribed over-the-counter drugs can actually cause a wieght gain through water retention. Many other drugs may also cause an increase in appetite, a craving for sugary foods and even slow down the metabolism. The problems usually stop when use of the drug is discontinued. These drugs include antihistamines, anti-inflammatory drugs, hormones, high blood pressure agents and anti-depressants. There are others as well so be sure to consult with a doctor if a wieght change is noticed when taking a prescription drug. It is also a good idea to ask the pharmacist about the ingredients of over-the-counter remedies.

When you're interested in knowing anything about the content of the medications you are taking, as well as information about drug interactions, allergies, etc., feel free to ask your friendly neighborhood pharmacist—at SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & SCHARBAURER (682-2519). We are also here to consult on diabetic problems, and we do free blood pressure checks. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa, Mastercard, charge accts. accepted.

HINT:

Antihistamines known as cyproheptadine and promethazine may cause water retention.

Need for water

Conflict between two competing water agencies that led to an eventual Supreme Court ruling which placed in jeopardy all the state's proposed lake-building projects is the best reason for a new Texas water plan — one that addresses the needs of the entire state.

The conflict between the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) and the Lower Colorado River Authority (LCRA), which kept the Stacy Reservoir project from proceeding over a period of several years, apparently was resolved earlier this week when the two authorities announced an agreement that spokesman say will allow the reservoir project to proceed as planned.

That's important to literally thousands of West Texans who rely on the CRMWD for either part or all of their water. Without the construction of the Stacy Reservoir at a point near Ballinger in Runnels County, the water future of West Texas would be bleak. Most residents of this dry region have lived here long enough to realize what that could do to the area economically and otherwise.

It took some heavy-handed tactics to resolve the dispute, in which the LCRA had refused to agree to construction of Stacy on the basis that there wasn't enough unappropriated water in the Colorado River to support the impoundment. The Supreme Court had agreed late last year, but then kicked the matter back to the Texas Water Commission.

Four West Texas legislators, including Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, who chairs the House Natural Resources Committee, refused to support the state water plan without the inclusion of Stacy Reservoir. That refusal was crucial to the final agreement reached between LCRA and the CRMWD which permits construction of the reservoir.

Not unexpectedly in a state the size of Texas the conflict was largely the result of regional interests. The LCRA was justified in one regard in opposing Stacy. It was protecting environmental concerns along the bays and estuaries of the Gulf Coast.

But the water needs of West Texans are of no smaller concern and without the reservoir project the future of this entire part of the state would have been thrown into question at best.

It's obvious that a water plan is needed that will not insure only the future needs of the Gulf Coast or bone-dry West Texas, but of the entire state. That won't be easy because Texas is a vast and ecologically diverse land. Still, a balanced water plan is a must because no group of Texans is expendable.

Craddick called the LCRA's vote earlier this week on the agreement with the CRMWD the key to West Texas having a part in the statewide water plan now being considered in Austin. That plan is being touted as the future and, thus, must balance all regions of the state in terms of water.

Where water is concerned, Nothing less can be accepted.

Plus for sports

Sports fans everywhere should cheer the Los Angeles Dodgers and jeer the Major League Players Association for their positions on mandatory drug testing.

Players' union officials got in a huff recently when they learned that the Dodgers had included a mandatory drug-testing clause in contracts signed by seven players. None of the athletes objected, but their union leaders certainly did.

Unfortunately, under pressure from both the union and weak-kneed owners of other teams, the Dodgers backed down and took the drug-testing clause out of one-year contracts. But they stood fast on the right to require the tests of players with multiyear agreements. That's a step in the right direction.

Drug use by athletes poses a threat to the integrity of every professional sport in America. Yet the various players' unions consistently oppose any mandatory drug testing, although their members would benefit from such a rule.

A drug-testing policy would assure owners and fans that athletes are neither impaired nor unfairly aided by drugs. Such a policy also would silence rumors that can damage the careers of non-users who for some reason are suspected of drug use. Users could be identified and given help.

Such a policy would be in the best interests of professional sports.

Another View:

Bad news gets worse

First the bad news: The Environmental Protection Agency disclosed that on 28 occasions between 1980 and 1984, the deadly chemical methyl isocyanate leaked from Union Carbide's plant in Institute, W. Va. An agency spokesman minimized the hazard, saying the leaks, including one of 340 pounds, were "absolutely minuscule" compared to the amount of the same chemical that killed some 2,000 people when it escaped from Union Carbide's plant in Bhopal, India.

Then, worse yet, came Union Carbide's own feeble attempts to reassure. "An erroneous calculation," it said, led the company to report an 840-pound leak on an occasion when no more than five pounds were actually involved. Yet the knowledge gained from this — that the EPA is so helpless to verify data provided by the companies it monitors — is more distressing than comforting.

Finally came the news that company safety inspectors at the Institute plant had warned last September that a "runaway reaction" involving methyl isocyanate could very well result in a "catastropic failure" of tanks storing the chemical. Union Carbide says now that it did not share the report with operators of the plant in Bhopal. There was no need to do so, it says, given different designs of the tanks there. But even that news upsets Rep. Henry Waxman, who made the safety report public. He rightly notes a contradiction that Union Carbide's earlier assertions that the same designs and procedures were employed at the plants in Institute and Bhopal and its statement now pointing out the differences.

The disclosures and responses to them raise disconcerting questions. The answers may be difficult and slow in coming but neither Congress nor the EPA, nor the public, should rest easy until they're found.

Apartheid foes urge sanctions

WASHINGTON — For several weeks now, members of Congress and other notables have been getting themselves arrested for illegal picketing outside the South African Embassy here. Their reason for demonstrating, they have told reporters, is to show their opposition to the South African regime's policy of racial segregation: apartheid.

Jack Anderson

As legislators, of course, the congressional pickets can have a significant impact on U.S.-South African relations — certainly far greater impact than your run-of-the-mill demonstrator. So I had my associate Vicki Warren query the members on exactly what specific steps they favor to make their displeasure with the South African government felt.

Essentially, what the anti-apartheid lawmakers support is legislation that would impose economic sanctions against South Africa: prohibition of new U.S. loans except for schools and hospitals, an end to importation of gold Krugerrand coins, a ban on further investment by U.S. companies not already established in the country, and a crackdown on the sale of militarily useful material and technology.

Would this legislation, if it is pushed through Congress and signed by President Reagan, accomplish what its supporters hope it will — a change in the South African government's apartheid policy?

Those who support the economic sanctions say that even if they don't work, they will at least put the United States on the right moral side — and eventually on the right practical side. When the black revolution comes, according to this view, the United States would not be considered an enemy for having stuck by the white-minority regime. This could avoid a replay of the horror in Iran, where U.S. support of the shah provoked the wrath of the Islamic revolutionaries.

Supporters of the South African government have a radically different view of the situation. Their basic argument is unsentimentally pragmatic. It is that the United States needs its trade with South Africa far more than the South Africans do, and that economic sanctions will hurt Americans (not to mention black South Africans) more than it will damage the minority regime.

The pragmatists aren't talking about Americans who work for U.S. companies in South Africa. They're talking about thousands of Detroit autoworkers whose jobs depend on the chrome and manganese their companies buy from South Africa.

The concern is that if the United States decides to punish Pretoria for its segregationist policies by restricting trade with South Africa, the retaliation — a cutoff of strategic materials to U.S. industries and defense plants — would wreak havoc with both the American economy and national security. In fact, a working group in the Cabinet Council on Natural Resources and Environment is studying that very threat.

Administration sources confirmed that a possible cutoff of strategic materials from South Africa has been discussed. But they said it's unlikely the effect of a cutoff would be as drastic as the South Africans claim.

Manganese, for example, is available elsewhere. In aircraft manufacture, where manganese is vital, the Pentagon and the airlines would simply have to pay the price increase caused by buying the material from other suppliers. And Detroit car makers would probably have to raise their prices.

"You can get anything if you are willing to pay for it," a Commerce Department official said. He added that "a critical shortage of chromium could be damaging" to the auto industry especially.

Lance Antrim of the congressional Office of Technology Assessment recently completed a study of ways to reduce U.S. vulnerability to political retaliation by countries like South Africa. He noted that supplies of chromium and manganese dried up once before, when the Soviet Union halted its exports in 1949 at the height of Cold War tensions.

The United States responded by helping India and Turkey develop their reserves of the metals. Antrim's main criticism of the Reagan administration is that it has not taken similar steps that would minimize the effects of a cutoff of South African strategic materials — and by minimizing its impact, persuade the South African government that such retaliation would be futile.

In Antrim's opinion, South Africa's need for the income from strategic material sales already makes the option of retaliation an unpleasant one for Pretoria. He believes that whatever government is in power in South Africa will want to maintain trade relations with the United States.

Grace report no magic formula

WASHINGTON — Remember the dressing-down King Arthur gave Guinevere in the nunnery? It was stern, but not more so than Steven Kelman's analysis of the Grace Commission report on government "cost control."

George F. Will

The commission gave Ronald Reagan the idea that there are 2,478 ways of eliminating "waste" and thereby saving, in just three years, $424 billion. Hence Reagan's belief that the budget deficit can be tamed by "growth and Grace" — by economic growth and by eliminating only things that no one wants.

The initial press release trumpeted: "Commission Discloses $424 Billion in Waste." But much of what it chose to call waste is just policy — the reasonably efficient operation of progress the commission considers unnecessary. (Hence the commission's assertion that $424 billion could be saved in three years "without in any way harming necessary social welfare programs.") Fourteen percent of the $424 billion ($58 billion) was to come (in years 2001-3) from cutting federal, civilian and military pensions.

Now, in the winter issue of The Public Interest — no liberal journal — Kelman, of Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, argues that the horror stories about waste "are almost always gross exaggerations." The commission specialized in such stories as: "The Pentagon has been buying screws, available in any hardware store for 3 cents, for $91 each."

Make your blood boil? Simmer down.

Pentagon acquisition rules stipulate that "overhead" expenses be allocated to each shipment at some fixed proportion of the value of the product. If the value is $5 million, the corporation might be entitled to add, say, 20 percent ($1 million) for overhead. Overhead includes costs above materials, machines and labor — costs of everything from legal departments to company headquarters.

The Pentagon orders many kinds of parts simultaneously. As an approved accounting convenience, many contractors allocate overhead on an "item" rather than "value" basis. Kelman illustrates this with an example of a $20 million order for 10,000 parts, some of which have a direct cost of $25,000 each and others of 4 cents each.

"Instead of apportioning the $1 million total overhead such that the $25,000 part gets a lot and the 4-cent part a little, the computer printout will allocate $100 to each part. This produces a charge to the government of $25,100 for the expensive part and $100.04 for the cheap one."

The Grace Commission charged that, "In comparison to a private sector company, managing comparable building space, the General Services Administration employs 17 times as many people and spends about 14 times as much on total management costs." Outraged? Do not be.

The commission committed two howlers. It compared GSA to an actual insurance company managing 10,000 buildings — but the company really manages only 1,000. Also, the commission said the company employs just 200 management professionals under contract. Kelman found that the company actually has 200 management firms under contract.

The commission charged: "The Veterans Administration spends $61,250 per bed to construct nursing homes — almost four times the $16,000 per-bed cost of a major private-sector nursing home operator." Kelman found that the commission averaged the cost of six VA homes, and the average was radically inflated by including a West Virginia home the cost of which included a related facility that was part of a whole medical facility built adjacent to it. The costs of three of the other five homes were significantly raised because of site difficulties. The sites were dictated by the VA policy of locating homes near VA hospitals.

Furthermore, VA costs are raised by government policies of providing certain quality features (such as balconies for the rooms) and giving preference to American-made products and minority and small businesses. The wisdom of such policies is debatable; but the policies are not "waste."

Kelman demolishes several other Grace horror stories, but mere facts are no match for the desire to believe politically convenient things. The Grace report, and especially the President's love of it, demonstrates the extraordinary things people will believe in order to avoid facing unpleasant facts, such as the fact that the deficit can not be substantially shrunk painlessly.

Do you really believe the government is paying $110 for a 4-cent diode, and that if it would just quit doing such things it could save $424 billion in three years? Remember in "Through the Looking Glass," when Alice says it is impossible to believe impossible things and the Queen (who should be the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors) says: Fiddlesticks, I've believed as many as six impossible things before breakfast. The Queen was no slouch, but not in the league with the Grace Commission and its believers.

ART BUCHWALD

Media bias 'buck' stops right here!

The thing I enjoy most about being a newspaperman is that the public holds me personally responsible for every sin committed by someone in my profession.

Art Buchwald

Lately I've found myself defending such varied media outlets as Time magazine, CBS and the Wall Street Journal.

What happens is that Americans tend to lump all journalists together, and when somebody goofs, anyone who carries a press card must answer to the charges.

Some years back, when I was on the road lecturing, I took the coward's way out by claiming I had nothing to do with a particular story that the public was enraged about. But I noticed how disappointed the people were when I pleaded not guilty.

So recently I decided to make people feel better by admitting I was part of the national media conspiracy to delude the American public.

My last trip to Arizona coincided with the Sharon-Time magazine libel suit verdict. While Time was found innocent of maliciously libeling General Sharon, the jury ruled it was guilty of shoddy reporting.

At a small dinner in Phoenix I was asked to explain how something like this could happen.

"We ran the story in good faith," I protested. "But the Israelis refused to let us see their secret documents. You have to realize that I write a column, and I can't read everything before it appears in Time magazine. In the past they have had a very good record about their facts, and I've accepted them. But I assure you when I get back home I'm going to make certain the Time editors get their act together."

I thought this would satisfy them, but they weren't going to let me off that easily.

"Where do you stand on the Westmoreland libel trial?" someone asked.

"I wasn't in Vietnam at the time," I replied. "But I have to assume the intelligence figures were fudged to make them acceptable to people on the homefront."

"You people at CBS should have checked before you libeled an American general."

"Since the trial is still going on I'd rather not comment any further about it, other than to say although I had nothing to do with the show, I will take full responsibility if CBS is found to be in error. When it comes to TV news, the buck stops here."

"Can you guarantee us," another person asked, "that it will never happen again?"

"You have my word on it," I assured the entire group. "I have given all three networks instructions that when they produce a documentary, I want to see not only what goes on the air, but what wound up on the cutting room floor."

"You people are drunk with power," a man told me.

"Not all of us," I said defensively. "Some of us are just drunk. But we have a job to do, and although we make mistakes they are never done with malice."

"One more question. Why did you permit a Wall Street Journal columnist to profit from inside information gathered on his job?"

"If he did it — and until his trial is over we have to presume innocence — then I will shake up The Wall Street Journal from top to bottom to see it never happens again."

I made a lot of people in Phoenix happy last weekend. Not only did they have a chance to voice their grievances to someone in the elite Eastern media establishment, but by my behavior I was able to reassure them that their perception of the arrogance and bias of the national press was justified.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1930, the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, William Howard Taft, resigned for health reasons. President Herbert Hoover nominated Charles Evans Hughes to succeed Taft.

In 1943, during World War II, four chaplains — the Rev. George L. Fox, Rabbi Alexander D. Goode, the Rev. Clark V. Poling and the Rev. John P. Washington — sacrified their lives so that four soldiers might live. The clergymen gave their life preservers to the soldiers on the American transport Dorchester moments before the ship sank in the North Atlantic.

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford submitted his budget proposal for fiscal 1976 to Congress. The spending plan, which totaled $349.4 billion, also included a deficit of $51.9 billion.

Thought for today: "Life shrinks or expands in proportion to one's courage." — Anais Nin, French-born novelist (1903-1977).

All of us occasionally need 'thought vacation'

There's a little of Walter Mitty in all of us.

And why not? Daydreaming, researchers say, is perfectly normal — if kept within reasonable bounds, which the movie character Mitty wasn't inclined to do. And with the pressures of daily life in the middle 1980s, people occasionally need a "thought vacation" simply to get away from it all and experience whatever it is hiding in the inner recesses of their minds.

I believe primary responsibility for what I term the "Walter Mitty Phenomenon" lies in the pace of society itself. Drive-time on tangled, confusing, dangerous streets is a contributing factor, as is the development of computer technology, the information explosion and complex social problems.

All those factors combine to become an overwhelming, stifling catastrophe — in the minds of modern-day workers — and many want to escape. It isn't always bad to want to escape a problem; it's definitely unhealthy to want to escape, rather than solve, every problem. Particularly in a society in which "problems" can comprise the "norm." I can think of a number of good reasons to want to escape reality, if only for a few fleeting moments:

— April 15th.
— The possibility of nuclear warfare.
— The cost of living today.
— The anticipated cost of living tomorrow.
— Eight o'clock traffic.
— Bill collectors.
— Obscene telephone calls.
— Prime-time television programming.
— Computers, all of which act as though they have minds of their own.
— The 5 o'clock race to get home.
— Generalizations offered as solutions to complex problems.
— Too little time to do too much too acceptably poor (Bane of a mass production society).

How do you spell R-E-L-I-E-F? More and more people, I believe, are spelling it D-R-E-A-M.

I don't find that disturbing. Oh, I'm certain there are all kinds of "experts" who could give their opinions that the dream escape syndrome will take society down the primrose path to doom. That's a bunch of horse malarky!

Daily life in a highly-structured society fits people into neat little molds. It obliterates individuality. It drives people to drink — literally — and to drugs and to a sordid assortment of pressures to get ahead, get a promotion, get a raise, get a new wife, get a new life and get a good old-fashioned heart attack.

Not in Walter Mitty's life, you don't. In Walter Mitty's life people trade the pressures of today for the fantasies of living unknown to them.

The business executive can escape to the carefree world of life's "bums."

The lonely housewife can whisk away on a Caribbean escape with the person who haunts her dreams.

There's something for everyone and it all lives in the subconscious.

But, some will argue, escape fantasies avoid the real problems of the real world. I agree. And it's true that as long as problems are avoided, they'll be around to make life miserable.

Still, from time-to-time, it's nice just to escape. For awhile. Walter Mitty-style.

We protest slur against Christian pro-lifers

We must protest your slur against Christian pro-lifers with the cartoon from Fort Worth in the Sunday, Jan. 20th paper.

Maybe (reading) the paper is not a viable source of unbiased, truthful information.

Think about it, we are.

Anti-abortion cartoon offensive to Christians

Just a note to say that I think the cartoon you ran of a person bombing an abortion clinic in last weekend's Reporter-Telegram is very offensive in that the caption said he was performing the act in God's name.

This kind of journalism is offensive to all true Christians and all anti-abortion proponents whom I know.

Media aren't ones to decide censorship

In an article printed Jan. 23, you ridicule Brig. Gen. R.F. Abel, director of public information for the Air Force, for his handling or mishandling of a news conference on Dec. 17 in which he told reporters "that details of today's space shuttle flight would be withheld..."

Obviously time and space do not permit me to address each point in the article on which I gagged. But I simply refuse to admit the validity of the reasoning that produced the paragraph which I quote verbatim:

"There certainly may be occasions in which the media may voluntarily choose to withhold information from the public in the interest of national security. But that decision must always be left to the media and not relegated to the military or the government. Press freedom is too vital to basic human freedoms to be entrusted to any branch of the government where it can be controlled."

You are saying to your readers that only you, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, the press as a whole, and the other forms of news media have the right, the knowledge, and the expertise to decide what they will be told. If we espouse this reasoning, the Soviet Union does not need its KGB; all it needs is a Hearst newspaper.

You used the ugly word "controlled", a word suggesting censorship which is sinsiter in all its implications but what is more "controlled" than the items appearing in this newspaper and all other means of news dissemination? Controlled not only by the limitations of time and space but also by the opinion of the editor who decides what is newsworthy and what is not.

If the feature writing that appears in the Reporter-Telegram is a fair gauge of their qualifications may God forbid that Gary Ott or William Modisett should ever be permitted to decide what is best for national security.

Energy industry once again unfairly taxes

As a royalty owner of oil and gas, I resent as unfair and discriminatory that the energy industry has once again been chosen as the key focus of a tax measure. This is contrary to the Republican Party platform I supported.

The current proposal by the U.S. Treasury Department would severely reduce domestic exploration and create further "beanruptcies" among the smaller operators. Repeal of percentage depletion for royalty interests would dry up capital currently propping up rural economies and many hard-hit farm and ranch operators.

Countless royalty owners would have no cost basis depletion considering most mineral and royalty owners, including me, inherited their properties. This depletion allowance for us is truly needed. We already pay windfall profits tax, county and school tax, severance taxes, minimum taxes, and our income is considered unearned, which puts us at an even higher tax level.

How much more is the federal government going to take out of my royalty checks? The oil and gas minerals I own are a depleting resource. I can't make another barrel of oil once it is taken out of the ground. All the computer industry has to do when it sells a computer is make another one. They can keep replenishing their product and are not constantly penalized by the federal government by countless taxes.

The computer industry is doing much better than the oil and gas industry because federal government is not trying to govern every phase of their business. The depletion allowance is the only "break" that the royalty and mineral owners have left and now Congress and the federal government are trying to take that away from us too!

If Congress is trying to cause the collapse of the oil industry and mineral and royalty owners, they are doing a good job! Wells not drilled generate no taxes and increase our dependency on OPEC.

Band members learn by setting high goals

Band members, directors and parents of such organizations all have goals Mr. Hintermaier!

An "extravagant" goal is an entertaining half-time show, which most people miss as they are talking, visiting with friends, getting a snack, etc.

A goal of "excellence" is earning high marks in competitions pitting band against band, squad against squad, player against player, not just locally but by regions and state.

An "attainable" goal of determination to be the best you can be which involves teaching and learning the meaning of hard work, long hours and teamwork which, Mr. Hintermaier, I am sure with your knowledge you, will recognize as being what "realism" is about.

These "immature and self-defeating" goals are why the Midland High Band was invited to the Rose Bowl Parade, why the Lee High Band was invited to Washington.

What lesson would you be taught, sir, if your employer told you that "excellence isn't worth anything for its own sake?" What would happen to you if you had no hope of upgrading yourself? Would you prefer that we teach our children to stagnate instead of reaching out and expanding themselves?

Setting extravagant, unattainable goals is immature and self-defeating, you say, yet our children in their youthful enthusiasm seem to have made their goals a reality! The majority of these same children have worked at paying jobs, sold various items, worked at car washes, garage sales, the list could go on and on to EARN the costs of their trips which for some is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

What I write of does not only pertain to our bands but the FFA, choir, language clubs, woodshops, etc. Self-esteem is the key word here, sir. People will travel many miles in any direction to watch and cheer for athletic teams, to bask in reflective glory of winners or replay the game 1000 times in defeat and not think of the costs to send the team to these events. But how many of these drive even to Odessa to see FFA, choir, etc., competitions? To cheer them on or replay a mispronounced word, an animal acting up during judging, a scratch on fine woodworking, a squeaky note sung, a misplayed note or stumble? These things are not noted in headlines, reported by TV or radio.

Only when an extravagant unattainable goal is reached resulting in a state winner, invitations to parades of national fame, is civic or hometown pride shown in media attention.

They may not all be first place or blue ribbon winners but these children know the meaning of hard work and how to earn their own way.

These things teach our children the reality of life and will probably keep them setting goals that can and will be attained by the majority, therefore keeping them from being the poor of the future.

So Mr. Hintermaier make your priority the poor and God bless you for it, I will still do my share in their regard but I will also encourage and do all I can to motivate our children to set high goals and with their hard work, help them achieve them.

Lee band expresses thanks to community

The Robert E. Lee High School Rebel Band and Orchestra would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation to each person in this community who helped to make it possible for us to attend the 50th Presidential Inauguration in Washington, D.C., last week. Each of us returned to Midland with a renewed sense of respect for our national traditions and leaders. The experiences which we had and their impact on us as young citizens of this nation will serve as an important milestone in each of our lives.

Congressman Tom Loeffler spent more than an hour with us at the Capitol Building, giving up the rare opportunity to sit in the seats occupied by the House of Representatives when they are in session. He explained to us the details of the legislative process as we sat in the very place in which that foundation of democracy actually occurs. He gave to each of us a sense of the importance of our informed participation in the political process and then arranged special tours of the Capitol for us. We emerged on the steps of that historic building with a great sense of pride in what our country has accomplished.

We were unable to march in the Inaugural Parade because of the weather, but we had the rare privilege of sitting in the huge Capital Center with thousands of other parade participants and listening to the vice president, the first lady, and, finally, the president of the United States. Many citizens of this country never have that experience, but thanks to this community, 200 high school students now have first-hand knowledge of the charm, the graciousness, and the warmth of our national leaders. Regardless of our personal politics, we each have greater respect for the office of president and a sense of kinship with those who lead our nation.

Our days in Washington, D.C., gave us the experiences of touring each of the impressive monuments to Jefferson, Lincoln, and Washington; of spending hours in the different buildings of the Smithsonian Museum; of watching the changing of the guard at Arlington Cemetery; of standing in awe before the graves of John and Robert Kennedy; of touring the Custis-Lee Mansion and Mount Vernon; of gazing at the Iwo Jima Memorial and the Vietnam Memorial. We came away from these experiences with new perspectives; we are not the same, for we have, in some small way, touched history.

We recognize the sacrifice made by members of this community in terms of time, effort, and money to provide this never-to-be-forgotten moment in our lives. We thank you, and we know that we will be better members of our community and our nation because we lived these days in our nation's capital.

Midland band's trip unequaled experience

The Midland High School Band recently returned triumphantly from California having sucessfully marched in the Tournament of Roses Parade on New Year's Day in Pasadena. The experience for the students was unequaled in our careers as band directors. The opportunity to perform for literally millions of people was awesome and thrilling. Not only the band, but the entire city of Midland was put in the spotlight and the people in California loved it. What a wonderful way to start the celebration of Midland's Centennial.

We are greatly indebted to countless people in Midland for their financial and loyal support. The entire operation could not have been possible without them. The Band Booster Club, lead by Chris Newman, rose to every occasion in raising the funds. Our projects chairman, Donna Campbell, worked tirelessly to make the projects succeed. Particular thanks go to Norm Frable for the car raffle, Francis Stapp for the spaghetti suppers, and David Schaefer for the fruitcake sales.

The news media was most cooperative and helpful in spreading the news of this super event. Our police department was most helpful in allowing us to practice on city streets and in donating their time and equipment as well. To all the people of Midland who found a way to help financially, we are grateful. There is not enough space here to list them all, but each and every one of them has our special thanks.

To the parents of these students, you can be proud of their performances and actions throughout the trip. The hotel, bus drivers and other people were highly complimentary of students behavior. The band earned their way into Disneyland by marching a parade down Main Street where a record crowd applauded their efforts. They were also invited to be one of the six bands to participate in the Rose Parade Band Fest where they performed their halftime show for a SRO audience at the Pasadena City College stadium. The band entertained superbly the 1¼ million people along the 5½ mile route of the Rose Parade. It took its toll but we were still playing at the end.

A special thank you to the school board, school administration, and faculty at Midand High School for their support. Their encouragement made the entire project a pleasure.

For those 48 chaperones under the leadership of Juanita Stokes, we thank you for your indispensible contribution. Without you we could not have done it. We hope you have caught up on your sleep!

Again, thank you Midland!

Accusers of Goetz, Meese barking up wrong tree

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Two cases have captured national attention, mine included, and the grumblers are certain to try to pump up their complaints even after losing verdicts are returned against them. There is the ongoing controversy over Bernhard Goetz, acquitted by a New York grand jury for shooting four young subway assailants trying to shake him down. He has only a misdemeanor charge facing him, that of carrying an unlicensed handgun. His voluble critics, principally black, accuse Goetz of taking the law into his own hands.

Now I submit that the accusers are barking up the wrong tree by insisting that Goetz's would-be assailants have been deprived of their civil rights. It's unfortunate that one of them lies in a coma after being shot. The others suffered minor wounds. Three were carrying sharpened screwdrivers in their pockets, wicked weapons and all had previous police records.

THROUGHOUT New York and the nation money poured into a fund for the 36-year-old engineer's defense. He was grateful but insisted on raising his own money for bail. What right do marauders have to plead civil rights when they prey on citizens? Goetz was fed up with subway crime and determined to fend it off, having been a victim of two or three previous underground holdups. He could have been killed and where would the bleeding hearts be in that case?

A parallel case was that of the Edwin Meese III confirmation hearings as attorney general.

These hearings of Mr. Meese have, I believe, dragged on longer than they should before a U.S. Senate Judiciary committee hearing testimony about his nomination to be attorney general. An earlier inquiry cleared him adequately.

This protracted hearing bout smacks to me of a vendetta, in much the similar vein that Goetz's critics seek to push their case. In both instances, I think, politics plays a big part — local in New York and national in Washington over Mr. Meese. The most prominent Democrat, well known around the capital for sounding off against the administration of President Reagan, is Senator Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio. Some of his own background is murky.

THERE HE is, though, lapping up publicity in the Meese case as the grand inquisitor who hardly is above groundless suspicion as behooves one going on the attack, citing ethics and impeccable decorum. Mr. Meese, conceding that he committed some boo-boos in the past hardly any of which I have determined are in the least heinous, declared that he had "met ethical as well as legal standards" to acquit himself well if confirmed. I fully believe him.

He has been special counselor to President Reagan during the first administration and was named by the president to succeed the incumbent, William French Smith, retiring to return to California, in the second Reagan term. The appointment was held up when allegations against Mr. Meese were made of impropriety, such as an $18,000 loan — repaid, by the way — from a friend who obtained a government job.

Mr. Meese waited for the results of a special investigation into the charges before asking that the Judiciary Committee hear his side and question him as well. The special inquiry, conducted by highly respected Washington lawyer Jacob Stein, gave Mr. Meese a clean bill of health. It has been a most difficult time for him during which one of his children was killed in a car crash.

SEN. J. STROM Thurmond, R-S.C., put it succinctly: "Let's get on with the proceedings — and confirm!"

I have been acquainted with Mr. Meese whose loyalty to President Reagan is of long standing. That's scarcely a reason to try to delay or bar a high-level appointment when the man has already been cleared after an exhaustive, separate investigation. I mentioned my acquaintanceship with Mr. Meese at the White House but I knew his earlier boss, the late J. Frank Coakley, much better. His brother, Tom, had a dance band in which I played the drums when we were in college at Berkeley. Frank became a district attorney in California later and Ed Meese served for years on his staff before being called to Sacramento by then-Governor Reagan. Mr. Meese's knowledge of the law became finely honed in California to which he added an astute perception of national politics, including civil rights.

That latter point is one around which the Rev. Al Sharpton in New York City has organized a group of black activists to demand empaneling a federal grand jury for the retrial of Goetz. I'm not a lawyer but I wonder if the Rev. Sharpton has ever thought about the age-old point in Anglo-Saxon law about double jeopardy. His followers invoke that legalism, or try to, whenever possible.

EQUALLY IMPORTANT as the national outburst favoring Goetz has been the favorable response in New York of black and white residents alike defending the slender engineer and praising the grand jury's verdict. Roy Innis, a black leader and director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), said: "I think that New York City, the black and white community, should be congratulated in general." Across-the-board, many blacks agreed, including those victimized by subway hoodlums. Goetz's lawyers declared bluntly: "Goetz is not a racist in any way. He's color blind."

Sen. Alphonse d'Amato, R-N.Y., who told a Senate committee that even his bodyguards were afraid to ride the city subways, said that he thought people wanted a criminal justice system that works, adding that he doesn't feel people are rushing out to get guns but warned sternly against "vigilantes." So do all Americans.

Studios pour film-sized funds into Oscar advertising

By DALE POLLOCK
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — And the winner is..."Places in the Heart."

Not for best picture, but for the most money spent in quest of this year's Academy Award nominations: more than $150,000, what with ads and mass mailings to academy voters, one including brochures and the other with gift sound-track albums.

It may not be possible to buy Oscar nominations, which will be announced Wednesday, but there's never any lack of trying. Especially this year. For the last two months, the major movie studios have flooded Daily Variety and the Hollywood Reporter with ads touting their films and the people who made them.

"This has been the biggest year (for Oscar advertising) since 1979," said Michael Malak, Daily Variety's director of marketing. "Last year everybody figured there was no way to compete with or beat the 'Terms of Endearment' phenomenon. This year the field is more wide open."

Lynne Segall, marketing director for the Hollywood Reporter, estimated that spending may be up as much as 30 percent, particularly by two studios, Warner Bros. and Columbia Pictures. "Twentieth Century Fox didn't spend much this year because they didn't really have any movies to push," Segall said.

The ads have ranged from the predictable (those hyping Sally Field as best actress for "Places in the Heart" and David Lean as best director of "Passage to India") to the poignant (a best supporting actor ad for comedy writer and sometime actor Bruce Vilanch in "The Ice Pirates," which was paid for by his mother and carried her signature).

A few pre-nomination favorites got no individual ads, including Albert Finney in "Under the Volcano" or Sissy Spacek in "The River."

There are no figures correlating dollars spent with nominations received, but the studios believe that backing a movie with trade ads certainly can't hurt.

"You've got to take a certain number of ads just to remind the constituency that you're in the race," said Lloyd Leipzig, a marketing consultant for "Amadeus," on which Orion Pictures spent more than $120,000 for awards advertising.

Even if nominations aren't achieved, the potential nominee is grateful for the attention, and more likely to work with the studio again on his or her next project.

"There are some things you do for relationships," said Steve Randall, senior vice president of marketing for Tri-Star Pictures. "A lot of these decisions are made on that basis. If you want to be involved with someone in the long haul, taking these ads doesn't hurt, and it represents a modest investment."

Not incidentally, the stars, directors and producers in these ads might remember that such costs are charged to each picture's publicity budget. That is, what they get is what they pay for.

A full-page black-and-white ad in Daily Variety costs $1,200. Color can cost an additional $400 to $650 for each color used, while a metallic sheen means shelling out another $800. A spare-no-expense single ad could cost as much as $3,200, according to Malak.

Rates at the Reporter are slightly less: $1,193 for a full-page black-and-white ad and a maximum of $2,800 for a four-color ad. About 70 percent of the ads sold use four colors, Segall said.

Malak claims that his paper gets more Oscar ads than the Reporter, and that its ads are considered more prestigious in the industry. Segall acknowledged that Variety received more "Amadeus" ads and also printed an expensive "Greystoke" insert that was too big to be used in the Reporter's smaller format.

Only the Variety ads were tabulated, since the same ones ran in the Reporter on different days. But as Segall insisted, with the exceptions of "Amadeus" and "Greystoke," "I can tell you that the totals are absolutely equal."

"Places in the Heart" had 28 1-2 full-page ads in Daily Variety between Dec. 3 and Jan. 25 (when the nomination polls closed). The other big spenders were "Amadeus" with 27 ads, "The Natural" with 21 1-2 pages and "Birdy" with 20 1-2 ads.

It is no coincidence that three of the four top spenders are released by Tri-Star Pictures, the newest major movie company and one seemingly determined to make an impression on the 4,100 voting members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

In all, Tri-Star spent close to $400,000 pushing "Places in the Heart," "The Natural" and "Birdy," along with a few lesser items such as "Runaway" (10 half pages), "The Muppets Take Manhattan" (4 half pages), and even "Supergirl" (3 half pages).

Another $75,000 to $100,000 was spent on three glossy color brochures on "Places," "Natural" and "Birdy" that Tri-Star mailed to all the academy members for which it had home addresses. The studio spent probably another $75,000 sending out the sound-track albums to "Muppets Take Manhattan," "Natural" and "Places in the Heart."

Magnum fans get wrong number

BOSTON (AP) — Fans trying to call television star Tom Selleck to wish him a happy birthday reached a Honolulu morgue instead after a local radio station announced the wrong phone number.

The snafu started when Joe Martelle and Andy Moes of WROR-FM came up the idea of having their listeners call Selleck in Hawaii and congratulate him on his 40th birthday last Tuesday.

The pair called directory assistance in Honolulu for Selleck's home phone number but were apparently given the number for the Honolulu medical examiner's office. The number was broadcast.

By Wednesday afternoon, the medical examiner's office reported receiving more than 1,000 calls from Selleck fans in Boston.

On Friday, Lorna Ozmon, WROR program director, read a statement on the air apologizing for the confusion and saying listeners would be reimbursed for any calls made to the Honolulu number on Jan. 29.

Charles Johnson, a producer of Selleck's popular CBS show "Magnum P.I.," said the star wasn't angry about the prank, but "he feels it's unfortunate that it happened because it wasn't good for the morgue."

Capra

Stewart

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Working with director Frank Capra was "one of the most wonderful things that ever happened to me in my life," Jimmy Stewart told an audience of admirers before a screening of the 1946 masterpiece "It's A Wonderful Life."

The 76-year-old actor delighted a crowd of 1,600 people Friday night as Brigham Young University wrapped up a weeklong tribute to him after he donated much of his personal movie memorabilia to the school.

Capra, 87, has "stood by standards, very wonderful basic standards — family, community, country and belief in God," Stewart said. "It comes to sort of a peak" in the Capra-directed film "It's a Wonderful Life," in which Stewart's suicidal character is visited by an angel who shows him how much poorer other people's lives would have been without him.

"It is my favorite picture and Frank Capra's," he said.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — The wife of John Ritter, star of the ABC-TV series "Three's Company" and its spin-off, "Three's a Crowd," has given birth to the couple's third child.

Actress Nancy Morgan delivered the 8-pound boy Thursday at St. John's Hospital, spokesman Larry Frank said Friday.

"Nancy and John are both very happy that he is here and healthy," Frank said of the newborn, who had yet to be named. "I spoke with Nancy today and she said that everything is fine."

Ritter, 36, and his wife have two other children, 4-year-old Jason and 2-year-old Carly.

Harrison

LONDON (AP) — Ex-Beatle George Harrison says he has no ambition for being a star — in fact, he's hasn't much ambition at all, except perhaps for living the life of "a normal human being."

"I don't want to be a film star. I don't even want to be a pop star. I just want to live in peace. But I would like...to get more of my ideas onto film," he said in an interview shown Friday by the British Broadcasting Corp.

Harrison, the 41-year-old "quiet" Beatle who became involved in Eastern mysticism, has rarely given interviews since the Fab Four parted ways in 1969.

He is now co-owner and an executive producer of a small, independent British film company, Handmade Films, and provided financial backing for its 1978 box-office hit "Life of Brian."

Asked about his ambition for Handmade, he said: "I don't have many ambitions at all, not for Handmade, not for anything really. I think ambition is something you have to try and get rid of."

Shaping Tomorrow TODAY Through Scouting
1910-1985 Diamond Jubilee

It is the mission of the Boy Scouts of America to serve others by helping to instill values in young people and, in other ways, to prepare them to make ethical choices during their lifetime in achieving their full potential. The values Scouting strives to instill are based on those found in the Scout Oath and Law:

SCOUT OATH

On my honor I will do my best
To do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout Law:
To help other people at all times;
To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight.

SCOUT LAW

A scout is:

Trustworthy
Loyal Helpful Friendly
Courteous
Kind
Cheerful
Thrifty
Brave
Clean
Reverent

Since 1910, Scouting has been a part of growing up for thousands of young Americans. Founded to provide an accessible youth program for community organizations, its emphasis steadfastly remains on building character, citizenship and physical and mental health.

The Buffalo Trail Council headquartered in Midland provides services to over 3,000 volunteer adult leaders and 200 sponsoring institutions, thereby enabling them to provide programs through the Boy Scouts of America to approximately 10,000 scouts each year.

SCOUTING ACTIVITIES

★The Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch, a 6,000 acre camp located in the Davis Mountains, is recognized as one of the outstanding Boy Scout camps in the nation.
★The Col-Tex Aquatic Camp is now being developed on Lake Colorado City. It will open officially on July 14, 1985.
★"Super Activities" such as Jamborees, Camporees, and Cub Day Camps.
★Summer Camps in addition to camping opportunities throughout the year.
★Training programs for volunteer leaders.
★Scout Service Center in Midland.

SCOUTING PROGRAMS

TIGER CUBS, for boys 7 years old and their parents; designed to strengthen the bond of the entire family.

CUB SCOUTS, for boys 8-10, offers activities aimed at personal growth that range from camping to crafts to citizenship programs.

BOY SCOUTING, for boys 11-18, focuses on personal development through group activities while it encourages exploration of individual interests.

VARSITY SCOUTING, is tailored for boys 14-18 who have an interest in team sports and high adventure activities.

EXPLORING is a co-educationed program for high school aged youth. Unlike Scout troops, Explorer posts are organized around the special interests of its members.

CAREER AWARNESS EXPLORING, co-education for High School students, provides opportunities to learn about careers and helps them make better decisions about their future.

SCOUTING AT WORK

INSURING SCOUTING'S FUTURE

Mention of the Boy Scouts of America normally elicits thoughts of camp fires, hiking, boating and countless other activities associated with scouting. While these things are of primary interest to the youth involved at the time, of far greater importance are the citizenship lessons learned as they continue their scouting career. A major goal of the Buffalo Trail Council has been to promote good citizenship and foster leadership qualities among its youth. The success of this effort is evident from the large number of former scouts involved in community activities throughout the West Texas area.

Scouting has and will continue to adapt to our changing times with new and timely programs while at the same time retaining and strengthening those time honored virtues of Love of God and Country. These objectives however can be realized only through the enthusiastic financial support of the entire community. Accordingly I would strongly urge you to help shape tomorrow by giving frequently and generously to the Buffalo Trail Council Trust Fund.

Permian girls end hex

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Midland Lee has dominated Odessa Permian in girls basketball ever since the sport was introduced to the two schools some eight years ago.

The Rebels had never lost a game to the Panthers. Never, that is, until Saturday when the two teams met to break the District 4-5A deadlock for first place at Mojo Gym. The Panthers came out on top, 45-39.

"This is the first time the Permian girls have ever defeated Midland Lee," said an elated Permian coach Nan Barber after the game. "We've been talking all along that we had to win the big ones and this was a big one."

For awhile it looked like Lee wasn't even going to make a game of it. Permian jumped out to a 7-0 lead but was unable to stretch the margin in the first half, leading by a 21-14 count at intermission.

Then came a tremendous Rebel onslaught in the third quarter that had Permian spinning its wheels. The Rebels scored nine points before Permian could get untracked for a 23-21 Rebel lead.

Becky White, who led Lee with 13 points, was fouled on her shot under the basket and turned the three-point play with a free throw to tie the game at 21 with 6:53 left in the period. A little over a minute later, White canned a four-foot jumper for Lee's first lead in the game.

The rest of the quarter was a race to the buzzer with each team dropping in field goals and free throws. The Rebels finished the frame with a 33-32 lead.

Permian immediately countered the lead in the fourth quarter, taking the tip and dishing the ball off to Sharee Itz who hit from 12 feet. The Rebels came back with a pair of quick buckets by Diane White and Valencia Wallace to take their final advantage, 37-34, with 7:04 left to play.

It took the Panthers nearly three minutes to overcome the three-point spread but they finally did it with a Sandy Houston 15-footer for a 38-37 lead, an advantage Lee could never overcome.

In the final seven minutes, Lee managed only two points on free throws from Diane White and Fonda Fields. Two points at the line out of 10 tries, 14 if you count the four consecutive missed shots in one-on-one situations.

"This wasn't one of our better overall games was it?" said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson. "I thought our press was pretty good but I don't know what the problem was. I guess we couldn't score and you can probably credit that to Permian's defense."

Barber, too, thought the Panther defense was a difference in the game.

"We played them in a zone the first time and Denise Hatch killed us from the corner," said Barber. "We went to a man-to-man for the first time this season and it stopped her."

Hatch was held to only four points in the game.

Barber was also impressed with the Rebel defense, saying, "As always they were so aggressive. They are by far the most aggressive team in the district. Megan Pace is always where the ball is. You have to play your best against Midland Lee."

Now, the Rebels have to return to the winning ways that carried them to an 8-0 record before hard times hit, dropping them from a first place tie with Permian at 9-2 down to a tie for third place at 9-3. For Stephen-

Davis' 31 keeps MHS in District 4-5A chase

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Midland High, fighting for its life in the District 4-5A basketball race, got 31 points from Darrell Davis here Saturday afternoon to pace the Bulldogs to a 74-68 victory over the Odessa High Bronchos.

The win lifted the Bulldogs to a 6-4 district record and 18-9 for the season while OHS fell to 3-7 and out of the loop race.

"We played well and Odessa played well," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We had a 12 point lead in the third quarter and they just chinked away at us. Odessa High has really improved."

In addition to Davis' 31 points, the Bulldogs got 11 each from Gil Brassard and Elvin Mackey.

"I thought Darrell played one of his best games," noted Stephenson. "He got everything together. He had 12 rebounds, six assists and 31 points and that's a pretty good night.

"I also felt like Tim Hickey played a good game for us. He had to pick up the slack when Roger Henderson was in foul trouble and he did. That's what I like about our team. We can get help off the bench."

Allan Bailey led OHS with 20 points while Tracey Blaylock and Keith Smith each had 12 and Mike Bunker 10.

Rebs 'kaput' Permian jinx

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Lee Rebels not only ended the Tall City's "Permian Jinx" at the Lee gym, 62-55, Saturday afternoon, but kept their feet at the top rung of the District 4-5A basketball ladder in the process of whipping the Panthers.

Odessa Permian went into the key 4-5A outing with a six-game winning streak over Tall City boys teams during the current school year with three victories in football and three in basketball.

But now Lee stands at the top of the league standings with an 8-2 district mark and a 21-6 season record. Permian is now in a survival role after falling to 6-4 and 16-9.

PERMIAN HAD beaten Lee by a meager one-point during the first half of 4-5A play, but the Rebels turned the table with a 49 percent shooting eye while proving they could rough-house with the best of them.

The reason you have to count football in the Permian winning streak is that this basketball meeting between the two rivals could have as easily been played on the football field. In fact, they may still be scraping up bodies at the Lee gym.

"It was rough under the boards and there was a lot of pushing for rebounds," said Lee's Raymond Morney, who scored 17 points.

LEE'S BRIAN Marczynski, who also had 17 markers, added, "There was a lot of banging going on in there. It was rough. That (Orlando) Ontiveroz and (Jimmy) Davis are really tough."

Lee point guard Tyrone Thurman said, "I kind of felt like we had gone back into football. I was on the floor a lot. I got knocked down on one play then my own teammate (Anthony Dickens) tried to kill me when he threw the ball at me."

Dickens countered, "I was just trying to save the ball from going out of bounds, but I got Tyrone pretty good."

Lee trainer Jeff Bass commented that the ball Dickens threw "was a bullet to the chest" of Thurman.

BUT THURMAN did recover to score six of his eight points in the fourth quarter to halt any attempt Permian had of staging a comeback.

Permian got off to a fast start, leading by an eight-point margin, 22-14, with 7:10 left in the first half. But the Rebels scored 23 points in the second period to take a 37-30 lead at the half. Lee's first lead came with 6:14 left in the half when Morney went inside for a basket, giving Lee nine straight points.

Lee went on to build that string to 14 unanswered points and a 28-22 lead with 4:33 left in the half. That was the deciding point in the game and Lee never trailed again, although Permian did close the gap to one, 39-38, in the third period.

Morney said the difference in this contest and the one Lee lost in Odessa was, "We were much looser this time. And we played the game in our own gym and this is where we practice. That's to our advantage."

THE GAME was switched from Chapparal Center because the snow forced postponement of the scheduled Friday outing to Saturday in the Lee gym. There were other committments at the Chap on Saturday.

Marczynski said of the turnaround, "We shot much better this time and I think the reason was that we played a man-to-man defense instead of a zone defense. The man-to-man keeps you busy and moving while you stand around a lot in the zone. It helped our fast break and helped keep our tempo moving."

Past may hint at Angels' future

El Paso won three divisional titles in 1970's

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

They didn't change the name of Cubs Stadium to This Halo-ed Grounds, a play on the title of a Civil War book by historian Bruce Catton, as was suggested, when Midland changed major league parents last fall.

I suppose it will come to be known simply as Angels' Stadium, but Bernard Lankford and Max Christensen, the co-owners of the Midland Texas League baseball franchise, are hoping that after a year with the Angels, fans will be referring to what goes on at the playpen in Hogan Park as just plain "Paradise."

After a 13-year Texas League affiliation with the Chicago Cubs, Midland is switching not only parent clubs, but major leagues.

THE CALIFORNIA Angels return to the Texas League from the Eastern League after a four-year absence. So what can the Midland faithful expect from the new tenants?

While Midland's relations with the Cubs didn't produce a glut of pennants, for the most part the teams were competitive on the field until the last couple of seasons when the bottom fell out.

Whatever the Angels field this season will be an improvement over the last two seasons and what Midland Cub fans could have expected this year, had Chicago stayed. Things were bad at Midland last year, but they were even worse at the level from where this year's team would have come.

But, they say, the future can often be forecast by the past, so perhaps a glance at the years from 1973 to 1980 when the Cubs and Angels were Texas League rivals might be enlightening.

Overall, the record for those years showed Midland with a .510 winning percentage. The Angels' farm club, the El Paso Diablos were .512, not much to choose on the surface.

Midland shared a Texas League pennant in 1975, tying for the championship in the rain-aborted playoffs 2-2. The Cubs, 16 games behind at one point in the season, rallied to take first in the West with an overall 81-53 record.

That was the team that had for a pitching staff future major leaguers Bruce Sutter, Mike Krukow, Donnie Moore and Dennis Lamp.

El Paso took first in the West with a 76-61, in the days before the split season, in 1974. And then added first place finishes in 1977 with a 78-52 record and an 80-55 in 1978.

Second baseman Jerry Remy (.338), John Balaz (.324), Dan Briggs (.352), Dave Collins (.352) and Ron Jackson (.328) were the backbone of the 1974 team.

In 1977, Carney Lansford (.332), Gil Kubski (.324), James Anderson (.285), Steve Stroughter (.336) along with pitchers Jim Dorsey and Daniel Boone are perhaps the most remembered names.

The 1978 champs were led by batting champion Danny Goodwin (.360-25 homers- 89 rbi), a one-time No. 1 baseball draft choice out of Southern University; Robert Clark (.316-31-111) and Floyd Rayford (.313-17-87 rbi).

The Diablos also had a 77-56 second place finished in 1976 and in 1973, the year Frank Tanana was 16-6 and Bruce Bochte hit .319, El Paso was a modest 69-71.

ACTUALLY, take away the disastrous 1979 (61-75) and 1980 (50-86) seasons and the Diablos TL winning percentage before departure to the Eastern League was .540.

During the Texas League years, El Paso produced six batting champions, which isn't too surprising, considering the dimensions of Dudley Field and the high El Paso altitude.

Remy was the Official Baseball Guide batting champion at .338, but after publication it was discovered that Dave Collins (.352) had enough plate appearances before being promoted to triple A to qualify. Fred Frazier won it in 1976, Smith in 1977, Goodwin in 1978 and Daryl Sconiers hit .370 to win the 1980 title.

Jim Tracy was Midland's lone winner.

While the 1980 team wasn't up to previous Angel AA standards, it did produce Sconiers and outfielder Tom Brunansky, the current Twins' outfielder, who hit .327 with 24 homers and 97 rbi that year. Highlight of the season for Brunansky was the night he poled out four homers at Cubs Stadium.

The 1976 team produced major leaguers Willie Aikens (.317-30-117) and infielder Rance Mulliniks (.315).

The old El Paso Diablos produced a lot of major league players over the years, but to find names like Ken Landreaux, Mark Clear, Lansford, Aikens, Tanana, Sconiers, Brunansky, Clark, Mark Brohart, Bruce Bochte, Paul Dade, Briggs, Collins, Remy, Mulliniks, Anderson, Boone, Rayford, Balaz, Jackson and Monge today, you've got to look at major league rosters other than the Angels'.

In college baseball it's no longer 'Pan Am who?'

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

EDINBURG — Pan American University baseball coach Al Ogletree still recalls a headline in an Austin newspaper in 1971 that asked the question, "Pan Am who?"

The Broncs introduced themselves to the college baseball establishment that year by winning a berth into the College World Series in Ogletree's third season at the Rio Grande Valley school.

Since then, Pan American has been to the NCAA playoffs 11 times in the past 16 years and Ogletree has become the fourth winningest active college coach in the nation with 835 victories.

They did it with adventurous road trips, sometimes playing twice in one day in different cities, and hosting a month-long string of tournaments.

ROAD TRIPS that started in a team bus could end up in rented cars when the bus broke down. There were occasional stern lectures, not from Ogletree, but from Lupe Garcia, the team's vociferous bus driver.

"We used to get calls from people thinking we were the airline," Ogletree laughed. "But over the years we've gotten letters from kids all over the country and they know who we are."

Ogletree's tenure at Pan American has been marked by triumph, travel and tragedy as shown by the memorabilia dotting his tiny office and the Bronc dressing facility at Jody Ramsey Stadium on the palm tree-filled campus.

A road sign reads "Pan American University, home of Champ Bronco Baseball team, demolished the "T" Sips (University of Texas), Congratulations, Texas Highway Department Dist. 21."

It is a reminder to Ogletree of his team's Cinderella march to the 1971 College World Series.

Another notation, "May 21, 1983, Victory No. 800," recalls the dramatic fashion in which Ogletree coached his 800th victory with a 19-9 decision over Wichita State, ranked No. 1 in the nation at the time.

PAN AMERICAN'S baseball field is named in honor of a former Bronc player who was electrocuted on the field when an irrigation pipe he was carrying came in contact with a power line.

"That was the bottom of everything," Ogletree said of the tragedy. "I called his Mom and Dad and I called his wife's family. It was the two worst phone calls I ever made."

The Broncs and Ogletree earned their 800-plus victories the hard way, with gruelling road trips and marathon homestands, inviting some of the nation's toughest competition to South Texas.

"We played Texas one day in Austin at 1 p.m. and after that game we stayed in our uniforms, ordered 60 hamburgers and 30 french fries and drove to San Antonio," Ogletree said.

After completing the 80-mile trip, the Broncs played St. Mary's University. Then it was another 60 hamburgers and 30 french fries. "We eat a lot of hamburgers," Ogletree said.

Road trips with the Broncs have been adventures. Bronc players piled into rented cars for a trip to Fort Worth for a game with Texas Christian when the team bus broke down in Austin.

And there is always the threat of Garcia, who isn't always easy to please. "Lupe is always telling the players if they don't win, they walk home," Ogletree said.

OGLETREE has three round-robin tournaments lined up in March. They are the Palm Valley tournament, March 4-9, Citrus tournament, March 11-17 and the Jody Ramsey tournament, March 18-23.

Twelve teams, many from frozen northern states, will come south to play in one or more of the tournaments. Ogletree has 12 teams lined up for this year's tournament series. The Broncs will play in all three events.

"We start playing games at 1 p.m. and play til midnight," said Jim McKone, Pan American's sports information director.

The Broncs had an off-year in 1984 with a 31-27 record but Ogletree is hoping for a return to something like the 1983 team that posted a 64-19-1 in 1983 and missed a trip to the College World Series in a disheartening regional tournament at Austin's Disch-Falk Field.

Despite the loss, even Garcia was impressed.

"Go out with your heads up," he said. "You did your best. You will always remember this — and so will I. I'm proud of each one of you."

George Archer chips to pin on 14th at Spyglass Hill in third round of Crosby Pro-Am.

O'Meara leads Crosby by two

Crosby Golf

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mark O'Meara, playing away from the milling mobs that followed golf's more famous names, coaxed a 4-under-par 68 from the windy promontories of Cypress Point Saturday and slipped into a two-stroke lead in the third round of the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

O'Meara, second on the money-winning list last season, completed one round over each of three Monterey Peninsula courses in 210, six shots under par.

Curtis Strange, who got off to an eagle-birdie start, had a 68 and a 212 total.

He was followed by Kikuo Arai of Japan and Jay Haas, each at 213. Haas had a third-round 70, Arai 71, both at Cypress.

IT WAS two strokes back to the group at 215 that included Australian Greg Norman, who four-putted in his round of 73 at Pebble Beach, West German Bernhard Langer, Lanny Wadkins, D.A. Weibring, George Archer and Larry Rinker.

O'Meara's effort came in something approaching privacy. Most of the merry-making gallery, as well the national television cameras, were concentrated at Pebble Beach where the celebrity field was on display beneath bright, sunny skies.

THERE THEY were treated to:

Tom Watson, playing on the course where he won the U.S. Open, going from a contending position to the ranks of the also-rans with a 40 on the back nine;

Jack Nicklaus agonizing over a putt that wouldn't fall and shouting to the ball "You can't do that to me;"

And defending champion Hale Irwin picking the ball out of the rocks on the beach on No. 18, rocks that returned his ball to the fairway on the 72nd hole last year and set up his victory.

None of them, however, really were in the hunt.

Almost all the contenders came from the group that played the rotation of Spyglass Hill, Pebble Beach and Cypress Point and got the best of the weather.

"We were pretty lucky with the draw," Langer, who led Europe's Order of Merit last year, said. "The scoreboard will tell you.

"Look at the guys up there — Strange and O'Meara and Brown. All played about the same time and on the same courses I did." Ken Brown of Scotland was in contention when Langer made the observation but finished poorly.

"The wind was pretty strong there today," Strange said. "I can't imagine, don't want to imagine, what it was like on Thursday."

WADKINS, winner of two of the three previous tournaments this season, came from well back with a 68 at Pebble Beach. Rinker had a 70 on the same course. Langer shot 71 at Cypress. Archer slipped to a 76 at Spyglass Hill. Weibring had a 73, also at Spyglass.

Johnny Miller, who led or shared the lead through the first two rounds, went to a fat 77 at Cypress Point and a 216 total.

Watson, who played the front side at Pebble Beach in 31, had a 71 and a 217 total. Nicklaus shot 73 and 221. Irwin was the same. Lee Trevino was one shot higher after a 74. And Masters champion Ben Crenshaw continued to struggle, shooting a 79 at Pebble Beach. He missed the cut for the final round with a 239 total, 23 strokes over par.

Sweden's Stefan Edberg upsets Connors, 6-1, 6-4

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Sweden's Stefan Edberg upset top-seeded Jimmy Connors 6-1, 6-4 in the semifinal round of the $315,000 U.S. National Indoor Tennis Championships Saturday.

Edberg, who is seeded ninth in the tournament, controlled the match throughout.

"I was a little bit lucky," Edberg said after his surprising victory over Connors. "You have to be lucky to beat him."

Edberg said he played one of the best matches of his career.

"He missed a lot of easy shots today. When he started to play so loose (in the second set) and started to come back, I lost my concentration. Then I got my confidence back," Edberg said.

Connors had, by his own admission, been struggling all week.

Carner slips to 74, but keeps Arden lead

LPGA

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — JoAnne Carner slipped to a 2-over-par 74 Saturday but still managed to stretch her lead in the $200,000 Elizabeth Arden Golf Classic to five strokes as the rest of the leaders also faltered.

Carner stood at 6-under-par 210 with one round to go. She enters Sunday's final round with a hefty lead over the foursome of Janet Coles, Jane Blalock, Alice Miller and Pat Bradley, who are all tied at 215.

Coles, with a 70, was one of only five players to better par on the 6,092-yard course. Patti Rizzo turned in the only sub-70 round, firing a 68 to put her at 218 for the tournament.

While many of the golfers has trouble with high winds Friday, the weather conditions were perfect Saturday. But Carner said the greens were set up much tougher.

"I think one of the differences (Saturday) was that the pins were all the way back," said Carner, who has won 40 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournaments during her career. "You couldn't get the ball as close and the rough is tough around the greens. Everybody else shot as bad as I did."

The pin placement didn't seem to bother Carner at first, as she ripped off three straight birdies to start the day. But her game did a quick turnaround at that point and she suffered through five bogeys and one double bogey the rest of the way.

"I started so hot, hitting and putting well," Carner said, 45, "Then I started relaxing unintentionally and I couldn't get going. In our group, everybody lost concentration. I was trying to get geared up, but I couldn't."

Carner shot a dismal 41 on the back side, double bogeying the 14th hole.

Pedroza retains title

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Eusebio Pedroza successfully defended his World Boxing Association featherweight title Saturday with a 15-round decision over his fellow Panamanian Jorge Lujan.

Pedroza, in defending his title for the 19th time — longer than any current champ — pounded his challenger's head with a strong, consistent left jab, and was in control throughout the bout.

The fight, held before 12,000 fans in this city's New Panama Gymnasium, was Pedroza's 19th defense of the title.

Lujan, 29, came on strong in the third round with a two-handed attack that made Pedroza back up, but during the rest of the fight the challenger was on the defensive. Lujan suffered two minor injuries and was knocked down once.

The referee and two judges gave Pedroza the fight 146-141, 148-139 and 147-140.

Pedroza, 31 years old, said he would seek a match against his World Boxing Council champion Azumah Nelson of Denmark, or go after the WBA lightweight junior title held by Rocky Lockridge. Pedroza has defeated Lockridge twice.

Raiders may become the good guys of sports

There may have been a smile on his lips when one of the Raiders, maybe it was Matt Millen, said it, but there was also a hint of pride in the term "degenerates" when used to describe the collection of football players Al Davis had assembled over the years.

The Raiders had worked long and hard to acquire a much-deserved reputation as the toughs, the hoods, the thugs of the NFL among rival fans and teams. It wasn't easy. It took years of dedication and sacrifice by the likes of Ben Davidson, Jack "Assassin" Tatum, Ken "Snake" Stabler, "Mad Stork" Hendricks, Dave Casper, Daryle "The Mad Bomber" Lamonica...the list goes on into the distant past and probably some highly deserving individuals have been unintentionally omitted.

Certainly, not all qualify as certified villians, as can be seen by the list above, but the indictment comes from mere association.

IT all began with owner Al Davis, whose motives were viewed as less than honorable by those with suspicious minds and who was darkly hinted as being a product of the Brooklyn fringe world.

The aspersions cast upon his good name never seemed to bother Davis. He appeared to thrive on it, like a Gaylord Perry. "If they want to believe I throw a spitter, I'll do all I can to convince 'em of it, whether I do or not."

If folks had known the real John Madden, back in his days as Oakland coach, before he was exposed as a good guy by tv, he'd have blown the entire image.

Tom Flores, the current Raider, doesn't really seem like the typical Davis henchman either. He probably survives out of sympathy, "How does he keep that menagerie under control?" You've got to credit Davis with a nice touch there.

But now, it may be over. The meanness and spitefulness, the name-calling, the uncalled for shove after the play, or the hearty calf chomp in the pileup may not be enough anymore. Despite all their efforts, the Raiders may wind up looking like the good guys in the world of sports by default.

LOOK AROUND, or just glance over the names that have made the news and how they've made the news in recent weeks. It's all very disillusioning.

Temper tantrums and eccentric behavior you expect from John McEnroe, Nasty Nastase, Jimmy Connors, Billy Martin, George Steinbrenner, maybe, Frank Kush...it's part of their personalities. People wouldn't know how to act, if they behaved rationally, with compassion.

But when the national heroes start getting their names in headlines, it's like Texans plowing through snow and sub-zero temperatures, it just doesn't and shouldn't happen.

Up in Iowa, a couple of college wrestlers were charged with assault. You wouldn't recognize the names, but somehow we come to expect more of college wrestlers. Out in California, Olympic hurdler Edwin Moses and Rangers' baseball pitcher Dave Stewart, innocent or not, were netted in the same area on suspicion of hanky-panky of some sort. Dallas Cowboys' back Timmy Newsome was present when some furniture was wrecked in a nighttime fun spot and an officer or two roughed up in the attempt to restore order.

THESE GUYS aren't Oakland-Los Angeles Raiders, who might possibly revel in such notoriety. These are the good guys, the ones everybody looks up to. This is as bad as accusing Roger Staubach of being merely mortal or spreading a rumor that he has never been to church. It just doesn't seem right.

Moses is most everybody's Athlete of the Year. I'm not sure he's done anything wrong, it sounds embarrassing in any case. He should be above suspicion.

Stewart was voted the Rangers Good Guy of the Year award. Again, the timing was unfortunate. A few days after Dave was picked up, he was to appear at the Good Guy banquet and receiver his award. Instead of an acceptance speech, he had to make an apology.

Newsome isn't just a football player, he's a member of America's Team.

Exoneration? It won't be enough. One shudders to think of the derisive fan reaction if Moses should lose a race.

The Cowboys last year had uncommon difficult scoring touchdowns from inside the 10, frequently settling for field goals. If Newsome is stopped on short yardage down close next fall, how will the fans react? Use your imagination.

And Stewart is in a can't win situation. A bad outing at home and you can hear the fans already. A good outing and the fans forget. On the road is another matter. Rival dugouts never forget and this is the kind of fodder with which bench foghorns will have a field day...all season.

McLain sells Cy Young award for court defense

DETROIT (AP) — Dennis McLain, facing racketeering, extortion and other federal charges, has paid for part of his defense by selling the Cy Young awards he earned while pitching for the Detroit Tigers, according to a report published Saturday.

"I didn't get very much" for the awards, which honored him as the American League's top pitcher in 1968 and 1969, McLain told the Detroit Free Press during an interview in Tampa, Fla.

The awards, replicas of those lost in a 1979 fire that destroyed McLain's Lakeland, Fla., home, were presented to him in 1982 during ceremonies at Tiger Stadium.

"I'm devastated," McLain told the newspaper. "I'm busted."

He said he planned to sell his 1982 Mercury station wagon next week, calling it "about the last thing we have to sell."

McLain, 40, went on trial Oct. 29 in U.S. District Court in Tampa on federal charges of racketeering, drug dealing, extortion, usury and bookmaking. Conviction on all the charges would be punishable by up to 90 years in prison and fines totaling $110,000.

Three other men are on trial with McLain, the last major league pitcher to win 30 games in one season. Another three charged in the case have pleaded guilty and have agreed to testify against McLain and his co-defendants.

McLain's lawyer, Arnold Levine, told the Free Press that he would try to prove that at least two of the men who changed their pleas, Barry Nelson and Melvin Kaplan, discussed giving perjured testimony.

"The government feels Denny has been involved in criminal acts ... Kaplan and Nelson have been involved in schemes all their lives," Levine told the newspaper. "These guys are in the perfect position to give the government somebody it wants."

Decline and Fall of New York Islanders dynasty

By BARRY WILNER

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — The whispers are becoming louder. The little annoyances are becoming major problems. The horizon, once bright and hopeful, is now cloudy and filled with doubt.

This season of inconsistency, injury and lost intensity has eaten away at the New York Islanders. Their optimism has been shaken, their confidence is wavering. All of a sudden, the Islanders seem to have fallen out of step with their National Hockey League competitors and settled at a level of mediocrity.

It might be a temporary malaise — when people such as defensemen Ken Morrow, Tomas Jonsson and Stefan Persson and forwards Mike Bossy, Pat LaFontaine, Clark Gillies, Bob Nystrom and Bob Bourne return to complete fitness, the Islanders might turn their season around.

BUT EVEN the players seem to be wondering if the team's disappointing performances will be forgotten in a late-season rush and another glorious playoff run.

"Can we make the kind of effort that's necessary? I certainly hope we can. I like to think so," said veteran left wing Clark Gillies, one of the team's major disappointments this season. "If we can get everybody going, we are capable of doing the things we always have. I'm not convinced we're finished yet."

Some of the competition apparently is. Bob Carpenter of the Washington Capitals, who have supplanted the Islanders as the power of the Patrick Division, called the Isles "older and slower." Several Edmonton Oilers claimed they had broken the mystique of superiority the Islanders carried when they took the Stanley Cup away from the New Yorkers last spring.

But many of the doubts about the team that dominated hockey from 1980-84 are coming from within.

"For some reason we can't seem to stand success," said Coach Al Arbour, who put off retirement to return for another year behind the bench — and, he hoped, one more Stanley Cup. "It's happened so often throughout the season. We get a comfortable lead and then all of a sudden we forgot what we are supposed to do and we let the other teams come back."

OR THEY never get started.

"We've been through some very bad slumps in the past and we always recovered," said Denis Potvin, whose inconsistent performances have been typical of the Islanders this year. "I don't know if we realize what it was that was winning for us in the past. Once, we were determined not to be outworked. I don't see that so much now."

The Islanders have nine players at least 30 years old, which often means beyond your prime in the high-speed NHL of the 1980s. Few of those elder statesmen have shown the inspiration or dedication they carried during the string of championships.

Defense, once the hallmark of the Islanders, has been Arbour's main worry. Morrow, the glue of the defense, has been sidelined all season after knee surgery, placing a large burden on Potvin and Dave Langevin, who also has tender knees. They haven't held up well and youngsters Jonsson, Kevin Dineen and Gerald Diduck have been erratic. Only third-year pro Paul Boutilier has been steady on the blue line.

Up front, the Isles have been carried by the All-Star line of Mike Bossy, Brent Sutter and John Tonelli, all having their finest seasons offensively.

BUT INJURIES in the middle to Bryan Trottier and LaFontaine and a severe falloff in production from the other forwards have made that trio work too hard.

The goaltending also has been suspect but Arbour said neither Billy Smith, the man who backstopped them to the four titles, nor rookie Kelly Hrudey, who seems to have supplanted Smith as No. 1 in the nets, are to blame.

"We haven't given them too much help," Arbour said. But Smith and Hrudey have not come up with the critical saves, either.

Perhaps the biggest concern among the players is that they have lost the edge, the aura of invincibility.

"I think the respect for what we did for so long was taken away in the finals," Potvin said.

Tiffany Chin shows championship form at Kansas City.

Chin skims to women's title

17-year-old on course for Calgary Games

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tiffany Chin took charge of her skating career and now she's in charge of the U.S. women's skating crown.

Chin, 17, one of America's bright hopes for the 1988 Calgary Olympics, won the women's title Saturday afternoon at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

She was fast and flawless on the ice, a far cry from the nervous teen-ager who made mistakes Friday night in the short program.

"Last night I wasn't happy at all with my skating. Today, I decided I would be on my own. My coach told me I had to be more independent," said Chin, runner-up at last year's nationals to 1984 Olympic silver medalist Rosalynn Sumners.

"I felt pretty aggressive going into it. I decided if I land a jump I'm really going to land it and if I fall, I'm going to do it aggressively," she said with a laugh.

"The great thing wasn't the way she skated today, but the way she came back after skating poorly Friday," her coach, John Nicks, said.

"I think that's a sign of a champion," he added.

Debi Thomas, 17, of San Jose, Calif., finished second to become the first black skater to win a medal at a national competition.

Caryn Kadavy, 17, of Colorado Springs, Colo., finished third in her first U.S. championship.

Chin, who nearly won a bronze medal at the Sarajevo Olympics, skated far more conservatively than she did last year at both nationals and the Winter Games, where she finished fourth.

HER CLASSY program included just two triples — a triple toe walley and a triple toe loop. Last year, she also landed a triple flip and a triple salchow.

Her technique, however, remains of championship caliber and her choreography was enchanting.

Figure Skating

Her marks ranged from 5.4 to 5.8 of a possible 6.0 for technical merit, but she got all 5.8s and 5.9s for style.

"There were some things I left out," she said of her program.

"She said she didn't feel comfortable going into a triple salchow and she left it out," Nicks said. "I thought that was extremely good judgement."

The 5-foot-1, 99-pound schoolgirl and Thomas will represent the United States at World Championships March 2-14 in Tokyo.

Chin, of Toluca Lake, Calif., got off to a shakey start in the short program when she missed a required combination jump and lost her balance during a spin.

BUT SATURDAY she got the standing ovation she enjoyed last year at Salt Lake City and at Sarajevo.

In October 1983, Thomas became the first black skater to win an international senior singles' competition when she finished first in a Tours, France, event.

She will be the first black singles skater to compete on a World team.

"It hasn't hit me yet. I'm still a little bit in shock," she said.

Thomas opened with a difficult double axel-triple toe loop combination jump, but stepped out of a triple salchow.

She later touched the ice while doing a triple loop for another deduction.

Kadavy landed two triples and a number of double jumps, including axels, a flip and a salchow.

Dodger Blue more like LA Arrogance

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — In Los Angeles, they talk of Dodger Blue. Elsewhere in baseball, they talk of Dodger Arrogance.

At the winter meetings , the Oakland A's saw an example of that arrogance. First, the Dodgers gave the A's an ultimatum in their trade talks involving Rickey Henderson: You have until 11 a.m. Tuesday to accept our offer, the Dodgers told the A's. Then, after the A's accepted an offer from the New York Yankees later in the week, the Dodgers complained that they could have given Oakland a better package than the Yankees' group of five players.

"Of course," an A's executive said at the time, "that was after the fact."

Billy Martin, whose earthiness leaves no room or tolerance for arrogance, was one of those watching the Dodgers during that week.

"The Dodgers think everybody loves their players," Martin said. "Then when they can't make a deal, they say, 'You don't want our players, huh.' They're teed off."

The Dodgers got people on both sides of baseball's labor fence upset last week with their unilateral inclusion of a mandatory drug-testing clause in players' contracts.

"They can't pre-empt a subject like this," said Tom Reich, a lawyer, who last week negotiated contracts with the Dodgers for Alejandro Pena and Candy Maldonado. "They have no right to do it. They had no restraints, no limits on their right to test. To do that at this time is amazing. In their arrogance, they're saying we're going to make something happen."

On the other side of the fence, some management people didn't like the Dodgers' action any better than the players and their representatives did. They weren't as vocal about it, but they were upset and concerned about the effect the action would have on negotiations for a new basic agreement.

Explaining the club's stand on the testing clause and the later agreement to eliminate the clause from one-year contracts, Peter O'Malley, the president, said in a statement: "Consistent with the previously stated club's position, the Dodgers believe that the testing clauses are both reasonable and proper. . . . The Dodgers continue to believe that testing plays an important part in the prevention of drug abuse, but we want to be supportive of the joint drug program."

Why did Bill Russell, a 16-year veteran, and Mike Marshall, one of the few young players who have succeeded for the Dodgers in recent seasons, agree to the clause that says, "The player agrees to submit to any test or examination for alcohol or drug use when such is requested by the club"?

Steve Freyer, Russell's agent, explained that he first saw the clause when the Dodgers wired him the guarantee language to be included in the two-year contract to which they had agreed. "I explained it to Billy and told him it was very unorthodox," Freyer related. "But he wholeheartedly endorsed it. He said anybody who gets in trouble with alcohol or drugs in baseball right now, after everything that's been said and done about it, shouldn't even be involved in the game."

Bob Teaff, a lawyer who works with Jerry Kapstein, Marshall's agent, said Marshall was "100 percent behind the Players Association's position that the matter is a subject for collective bargaining." However, Teaff added, "Mike had his own reasons for agreeing to the clause. That's what he chose to do."

Players Association people suggested that the Dodgers used the clause as a public-relations ploy when they discussed it at the news conference announcing Marshall's signing.

"They were saying, 'We're against drugs and the Players Association is for drugs,'" one association official said. "We were getting calls from people asking why are you in favor of drugs."

Lewis lectures press after win

DALLAS (AP) — Olympian Carl Lewis captured the 60-yard dash in the Dallas Times Herald Invitational Track Meet on Saturday night then gave a one-minute lecture on mistreatment by the media before leaving Reunion Arena in a huff.

Three-times Olympic gold medal winner Valerie Brisco-Hooks shattered the world indoor best in the women's 440-yard run in 52.99. The previous world best was held by Lori McCauley of Allston, Ma., who ran a 53.29 on March 5, 1983.

Lewis ran a 6.10 time, well off his world best of 6.02 established at this meet in 1983.

"I felt I ran a good race and I feel I was well received by the crowd," said Lewis, who was booed for not taking all of his long jumps last week at the Millsrose Games. "I'm flabbergasted by the continued media mistreatment. I don't feel very much respect for the media.

"Whether people like it or not I am what I am and I will continue to keep on truckin'."

Sister Carol Lewis, who increased her American indoor best in the long jump, said her brother was upset by an article but she doesn't know who wrote it.

"It was very unfair," said Carol Lewis of the story. "Carl strained a groin muscle in the Millrose Games and that's why he didn't continue to compete. Nobody asked about that."

She said the media treatment of her brother "makes me want to laugh. It's amazing how people can write stories about Carl and not know anything about him."

The Lewis pyrotechnics overshadowed a brilliant 60-yard hurdles time of 6.87 seconds by Olympian Roger Kingdom, whose clocking was the third fastest indoors.

The world best record is 6.82 by Renaldo Nehemiah which was set in Dallas in 1982.

Kingdom of Pittsburgh, Pa. was the Olympic gold medalist in the 110 meter hurdles. Greg Foster, the Olympic silver medalist, was a no-show because of Superstar competition in Florida.

"I had trouble the last three hurdles," said Kingdom. "But I thought it was a great time considering I'm using the indoor season for training."

Kingdom said he wasn't disappointed Foster didn't arrive.

Carol Lewis, who failed to win a medal in the Olympic Games, broke her own American indoor best in the long jump with an effort of 22-feet, 3-inches.

Lewis set the old record of 22-2 14 at this meet in 1984.

She beat out Olympic gold medalist Anisoaia Cusmir-Stanciu and silver medalist Valy Ionesai, both of Romania.

Doug Lytle won the pole vault on fewer misses at 18-feet, 1-inch.

The man-to-man showing had its effect on Permian since the high scoring trio of Terry Williams, Ontiveroz and Davis were held to eight points each. Curly Alford was the only Panther to hit in double figures with 12.

PERMIAN COACH Charles Patillo said of the game, "The game stunk and I'm referring to the officials. This was a much more physical game than the first time we played and that's because the officials weren't calling anything and a lot of banging was going on.

"Realistically, our best chance is to shoot for second place now. But anything could happen in this district."

Even though the Rebs now appear to be in good shape for the stretch run, Lee coach Paul Stueckler isn't ready to lay any claim to a premature title.

"No doubt, this was a big win for us, one we had to have, but if we go and lose to Big Spring Tuesday, this one won't mean a thing. We have to win every game we play if we want to win this thing," said Stueckler.

In JV action, Permian won a 44-42 decision as Darrell Gibbs and Jason Jackson each had 11 points for Permian. Mark Van Cott led Lee with 10. In sophomore action, Permian won a 57-50 decision with Ricky Yoakum scoring 20 points along with 10 from Chris Turner. Lee was led by 10 from Danny Allen.

MHS girls back in second

From Staff Reports

The Midland High girls basketball team jumped right back in the running for a state playoff berth at the MHS gym Saturday afternoon with a 69-35 romp over the Odessa High Bronchos.

The victory gave the Lady Bulldogs a 9-3 loop reading, moving them into a tie for second place in the 4-5A race with two games left to play.

"We've still got a shot at it (the playoffs)," said MHS coach Jane Young after the victory. "I know one thing, we'll be in there fighting for it."

The Bulldogs will host San Angelo, another team in the playoff hunt, at 8 p.m. in the MHS gym Monday. It may be the most crucial game of the year for the Bulldogs if they are to make a playoff push.

4-5A Girls

MHS will end the 4-5A schedule Friday against Abilene Cooper. If there should be a tie for the playoff berth, a playoff will have to be held to determine the 4-5A representatives.

"Monday will be a big game," said Young. "We're playing pretty well right now and I know the kids will be out there trying."

Against 0-12 Odessa High Saturday, MHS got a three-prong scoring attack from Denise Lanz (20 points), Tina Knight (17) and Nadine Hill 13. Risa King paced OHS with 14 points, but was the only Broncho in double figures.

In junior varsity action, MHS took a 60-25 win over OHS as Amanda Hendrickson scored 14 points and Brenda Rodriquez 10.

In another 4-5A game Saturday afternoon, 4-8 Abilene Cooper defeated 3-9 Big Spring by a 64-55 score. The contest had little bearing on the 4-5A race.

U.S. boxers decision Irish

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Randy Squires, Norris Grimes and William Dawson posted victories in the final three bouts to lead the United States to a 7-4 victory over Ireland in an international amateur boxing meet on Saturday.

Squires of Washington, D.C., knocked out Noel Magee at 1:33 of the second round in a light heavyweight bout to give the United States a 5-4 lead, while Grimes of Kansas City, Mo., clinched the competition for the Americans, scoring a unanimous decision over Jim O'Sullivan in the heavyweight bout.

The other American victors were Tim Curley of Stanwood, Wash. at 106 pounds; St. Louis' Eddie Cook at 112; Ricky Meyers of Port Reading, N.J., at 132 and Billy Bridges of Lincolnton, N.C., at 147.

Midland High will host San Angelo's Bobcats in a key district outing Tuesday at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m.

OHS won the sophomore game by 65-55 count, but MHS came back to ake the junior varsity outing by a 68-53 score.

In another 4-5A afternoon game Saturday, Abilene Cooper defeated 0-10 Big Spring by a narrow 70-68 margin. Big Spring came close to gaining its first 4-5A victory, but was outscored 19-14 in the final period to lose again.

JIM MURRAY

Despite age, he's still at full throttle

All his life, Bob Nordskog worked hard. At the age of 11, he was walking eight miles to work. Once there, he was sweeping out the hangar, running out for sandwiches, greasing airplanes and making wake-up calls to barnstorming pilots with hangovers.

At 13, he was an airplane pilot himself, a wing-walker, stunt flyer and parachute jumper. He was too young to drive a car but he was flying a plane.

He went to work repairing wrecked planes for Howard Hughes and designing new ones, then decided to go into business for himself.

He borrowed $7,500 from the banks and within three years was the biggest manufacturer of in-flight food equipment in the world. If you ever had a rare steak on an airplane, Nordskog's galleys kept it hot for you. If you ever had a hot cup of coffee, he heated it for you.

Naturally, when he got to be 70 years old, he wanted to take it easy, to enjoy life. Naturally, he got a boat. Lots of people do that. Get a nice sloop with a radio, a cabin with curtains on the portholes and cruise the Caribbean or anchor off the French Lido (cq) or party through the Greek Isles. Invite opera singers aboard. Moor it off Palm Beach or Oyster Bay.

ONLY NORDSKOG'S boat is not one of your weekend downwind sailers and, even though he could afford it, not something you'd need a crew of 10 and Liberian registry for. In fact, you can't even sit down in it, never mind hold a dance.

What it is, is a seagoing bullet. About as much fun to sail in as a U-boat in the North Atlantic, or a PT-boat cutting through the Japanese fleet at Manila.

There are no frills about Nordskog's vessel, no cocktail flag, nobody wearing a brass-button, double-breasted blazer and a yar cap. You buckle on a helmet and a life-preserver and open the throttle and hang on. Then, you start slapping the waves at 80 m.p.h. If you don't own a boat, you can get the same effect by falling down a flight of cellar stairs and standing under a cold shower for five or six hours.

It's hardly the retirement septuagenarian dream of. There are areas of the world where they use more humane methods than these to get spies to talk.

WHEN NORDSKOG checks in with the doctors, they are hard put to tell what he does for a living. If it's the day after a powerboat race, they might guess that he's a linebacker for the Chicago Bears. Or, maybe Larry Holmes has been practicing body shots on him in a gym.

First of all, there's that blood in the urine. Then, there are the body bruises, the soreness in the joints, the palm burns on the hands. He comes out of a race about in the condition of a guy who just came out of a 24-hour bombardment or was pinned down all night by machine gun fire.

Nordskog is proud of every lesion, every bloodclot and compound fracture. He's having the time of his life.

It all goes back to when he was a kid. He was having a swell time then, too, walking wings, diving into cornfields, looping-the-loop. Lots of people change planes in mid-airport. Nordskog changed then in mid-air.

He gave all that up because his mother wanted him to. In those days – 1926 – kids did what their mothers told them.

He gave up car-racing when he met the pretty brunette, Ellie, who was to be his wife. But, when he got to the age when most men were thinking of putting up the toys of youth and the recklessness of young manhood, Nordskog had some unfinished challenges to face. He began to buy powerboats at an age when most men are lucky to man golf carts.

THIS IS a sport where a simple ripple on a bay can snap an ankle and a broach can mangle a lung. The Japanese racer, Rocky Aoki, injured his heart, no less, in an overturn. It is a sport only for those who heal rapidly. But, at 71, Nordskog is the holder of more offshore powerboat championships, world records and racing trophies than anyone who ever went to sea. He has had more than 140 firsts in his career and 34 world speed records.

Some athletes boast of a high threshold of pain. Nordskog apparently has no threshold. He has had, by actual count: 1) a broken ankle, 2) three broken ribs, 3) a shattered elbow, 4) a punctured lung, 5) a ruptured kidney, 6) a ruptured spleen, and, 7) two brain concussions. Also, he has pulled both arms out of the sockets and once he broke his hip from socket to thigh and walked around on it for 30 months.

Nordskog intends to race boats. His body just has to do the best it can.

Nordskog and his boat, the cigarette-hull in which he broke the Canada-to-Mexico time record, will be on display at the Southern California Boat Show at the L.A. Convention Center for the next 10 days. It may be your last chance to see him. Since he is in the business of fulfilling childhood dreams at this time of life, he may next be the only 71-year-old in history to run away and join the circus.

Hagler vs. Hearns

Hype begins for no-hype needed fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — They call it a fight that doesn't have to be hyped, but Thomas Hearns and Marvin Hagler were at it once again Saturday, bringing their traveling publicity show to the actual site of their April 15 bout.

The fighters, accompanied by publicity agents, trainers, managers and hangers-on, made the host city of the fight their 11th stop in a 21-city promotional tour.

Little new was said at the midway point of what promoter Bob Arum modestly calls the "Magical Mystery Tour," and both fighters acknowledged they were getting a little tired of the road show.

"I think Tommy feels the same way I do and that's that we should stop this stuff and get into the gym and start training," said Hagler, whose undisputed middleweight crown will be on the line in the scheduled 12-round fight.

Caesars Palace executives used the latest press conference to unveil the actual tickets for the fight, which will be staged in the hotel's 15,000-seat outdoor arena.

The tickets, priced from $50 to $600 for a seat near ringside, are expected to sell out quickly, with one hotel executive predicting they would all be gone by the time the publicity tour ends.

A sellout would give promoter Bob Arum a live gate of $6 million, but the traveling caravan is being used primarily to boost closed circuit and pay per view TV sales across the country.

Arum said he is hoping to sell the fight to two million subscribers, which would break the previous closed circuit record of 1.6 million for the first Muhammad Ali-Joe Frazier fight in 1971.

No.1 Redmen beat Uconns

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — His team is ranked No. 1 in the nation, he scored a career-high 29 points and his team won by 33 points. What could be better for Walter Berry?

He says he could be better.

Berry, the junior college player of the year last season at San Jacinto College in Texas, admitted that his performance in St. John's 97-64 victory over Connecticut Saturday was his best so far.

Berry grabbed six rebounds and had 20 second-half points as the Redmen cruised from a 40-30 haltime lead to the convincing final margin.

Berry, who played only 29 minutes, made 9 of 12 field goal aettempts and 11 of 14 shots from the free throw line. All-American Chris Mullin added 20 points.

The victory improved St. John's record to 17-1 and was its 12th straight. The Redmen are undefeated in nine Big East games.

Connecticut fell to 8-10 overall and 3-6 in the conference.

Louisville 77, DePaul 73

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Junior guard Jeff Hall, shut down most of the game, hit eight of nine free throws in the final minute and a half as Louisville boosted its record to 11-9 overall, while DePaul fell to 14-5.

Mark McSwain led Louisville with 17 points and his two free throws ignited a 7-0 spurt midway through the second half that gave Louisville the lead for good at 53-45 with 10:26 to play.

DePaul came back behind senior forward Tyrone Corbin, who did not start the second half because of a blow he received to his broken nose, to cut the lead to 65-63.

The two teams exchanged baskets before DePaul began to foul intentionally with 1:49 left to play. Louisville made 10 of 11 free throws in the final minutes to seal the victory.

Oklahoma 83, Oklahoma St. 81

STILLWATER, Okla. — Tim McCalister hit a 20-foot jumper with two seconds remaining to give seventh-ranked Oklahoma a come-from-behind Big Eight Saturday.

McCalister — who made all seven of his field-goal attempts in the second half and finished with 20 points — had 12 of his points during a 10-minute span that saw Oklahoma erase a 58-48 deficit and take its first lead of the second half, 72-70, with 5:40 remaining.

Oklahoma State was led by Joe Atkinson, who tied his career high with 30 points. That total was set last year against Oklahoma.

Oklahoma remained atop the Big Eight standings with a 6-0 record and is now 17-4 overall. Oklahoma State fell to 11-8 and 2-4.

Two-time All-American Wayman Tisdale led Oklahoma with 27 points. Johnson had 12 and Anthony Bowie 10.

Memphis St. 91, Virginia Tech 82

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Senior forward Keith Lee scored 25 points and grabbed 12 rebounds as third-ranked Memphs State held on to first place in the Metro Conference. The Tigers, now 17-1 overall and 7-1 conference play, also got 18 points William Bedford and Vincent Askew.

Memphis State started slow as Virginia Tech, now 14-5 overall and 5-2 in the league, took a 10-4 lead at the 17:31 mark on two free throws by junior center Bobby Beecher .

College Basketball

Indiana 89, Minnesota 66

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Uwe Blab scored 26 points and Steve Alford 24 as Indiana broke its four-game Big Ten losing streak.

The Hoosiers, with a blistering 84 percent field goal percentage in the first half, boosted their record to 12-7 and 4-5 in the conference. The Gophers, losing their third straight and sixth in a row to Indiana, dropped to 11-8, 4-5.

Blab John Shasky with 18 points and Tommy Davis with 16 topped the Gophers. Minnesota starter Kevin Smith suffered a possible broken thumb in the first half.

Georgia Tech 72, Maryland 60

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Yvon Joseph scored 11 of his 20 points in the second half as eighth-ranked Georgia Tech held off a mild rally by 17th-ranked Maryland in the ACC Saturday.

The loss snapped a 16-game home winning streak for the Terps and created a virtual three-way tie for the ACC lead. Maryland remained at the top with a 4-2 record, followed by Duke and Georgia Tech at 5-3.

The Yellow Jackets are 16-4 overall and the Terps, 17-6.

Oregon St. 83, Stanford 73

STANFORD, Calif. — Forward A.C. Green scored a career-high 39 points for Oregon State as the 14th-ranked Beavers moved into a tie for first place in the Pacific-10.

Green, held to just 8 points two nights earlier in a loss to California, scored 22 points against Stanford in the second half.

UT delivers another blow to Tech

SWC

AUSTIN (AP) — John Brownlee and Mike Wacker combined for 12 points from the free-throw line late in the game to lead Texas to a 66-61 win over Texas Tech in a Southwest Conference basketball game Saturday.

After Tech cut Texas' 27-20 halftime lead to one point, 46-45, with 7:55 left, the Longhorns profited from Red Raider fouls and scored 16 of their last 20 points from the foul line.

Brownlee hit a game-high 23 points, and went 9-for-14 from the foul line. Wacker added 20 points, half of those on free throws, and grabbed 10 rebounds.

Bubba Jennings led Texas Tech with 22 points, most of them long-range jump shots.

The loss marked Tech's second straight defeat after upsetting Southern Methodist, then ranked No. 2, on Jan. 23 and dropped its record to 12-7 and 5-4 in conference play.

Texas, now 11-8 and 4-5, broke a three-game losing streak.

Texas Coach Bob Weltlich said the ball "seems to go in more" when Wacker and Brownlee get it.

"We did pretty much what we wanted to do, passing the ball around and when we didn't score, we often got them into foul trouble," he said. "We have to be happy with our free-throw shooting and maybe it is a sign that we are maturing as a team."

Brownlee said the Longhorn guards "were doing a good job of getting the ball into us. They were mostly in a man-to-man and Mike and I sure like that."

Tech Coach Gerald Myers said Texas "put on a heck of a demonstration of free-throw shooting."

"They got the ball inside early and they made it real tough on us," Myers said.

Jennings was quick to admit that Bronwlee "was the difference today."

"When you have 6-10 and 6-11 guys playing well inside, it makes it tough," he said.

Sabres stop Flyers; Islanders come alive

NHL

From Wire Reports

Sabres 6, Flyers 3

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Foglino and Craig Ramsey scored two goals each as the Buffalo Sabres held the Flyers scoreless in the first period while collecting three goals, one by Paul Cyr and two by Foglino, who also earned an assist on Cyr's goal.

Philadelphia cut the lead to one with two second-period goals while shutting out the Sabres. But Buffalo came back in the third period with three straight goals, including Ramsey's two, to put the game out of reach for the Flyers.

Red Wings 6, Nordiques 3

DETROIT — Linemates Bob Manno and Dwight Foster scored a goal apiece and Claude Loiselle added a pair to lead Detroit over Quebec in a game marred by a third-period bench-clearing fracas.

After defenseman John Barrett gave Detroit a 3-2 lead at 15:10 of the second period, Foster forced a turnover in the Nordiques' zone to set up Manno, who picked up the loose puck and slid a backhander past starting Quebec netminder Dan Bouchard for his sixth goal of the season.

The game was marred by frequent altercations and erupted with 8:13 left when Peter Stastny went after Detroit's Kelly Kisio, who had just completed serving a five-minute penalty for high sticking the Nordiques' Dale Hunter.

Both benches emptied and the ensuing fracas delayed the game for nearly 20 minutes. Referee Terry Gregson handed out 84 minutes in penalties to eight players after the brawl.

Jets 4, Bruins 3

BOSTON — Brian Mullen set up goals by Randy Carlyle and Dale Hawerchuk less than two minutes apart in the second period for Winnipeg and Paul MacLean nailed down the Jets' initial triumph in 10 visits to Boston Garden since joining the league in 1979 with his 29th goal at 8:05 of the third period.

MacLean's goal gave Winnipeg a 4-2 lead, and the Jets held off furious Boston challenges the rest of the way.

With Winnipeg holding a 4-3 advantage in skaters, Carlyle pounced on a rebound of a shot by Mullen and scored his 10th goal, putting the Jets in front to stay at 8:32 of the second period. Then, Mullen sent in Hawerchuk alone on Boston goalie Pete Peeters. Hawerchuk beat Peeters cleanly with a 15-foot wrist shot for his 33rd goal.

Ken Linseman tipped in a shot by Mike O'Connell for a power-play goal, his 16th, to pull the Bruins within one at 3:54 of the third period. MacLean then went around O'Connell, circled behind the net, and shoveled the puck past Peeters for a 4-2 Winnipeg lead at 8:05.

Oilers 5, Rangers 1

EDMONTON, Alberta — Mike Krushelnyski scored three goals and assisted on the game winner to spark Edmonton. Krushelnyski, who moved back to his familiar center spot from left wing several games ago, scored in the first period and then assisted on Glenn Anderson's goal in the second.

Honor Roll Report

MIDLAND IS NOW 100 YEARS OLD. Historians tell us that a few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a lone hunter, made what was later to become Midland his home. Researchers studying this area tell us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in this area. Early in 1880, R. N. Garrett arrived here with a flock of sheep being driven to market. Like many of those who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and settled here permanently. Shortly thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to service the growing community as depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established; 26 days later Midland was designated a city.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

If you have ever considered living in a high quality log home offered by one of the nation's leading log home manufacturers, you owe it to yourself to investigate Lincoln Log Homes' mortgage assistance plan. Requirement: Ability to purchase a minimum $15,000.00 log home.

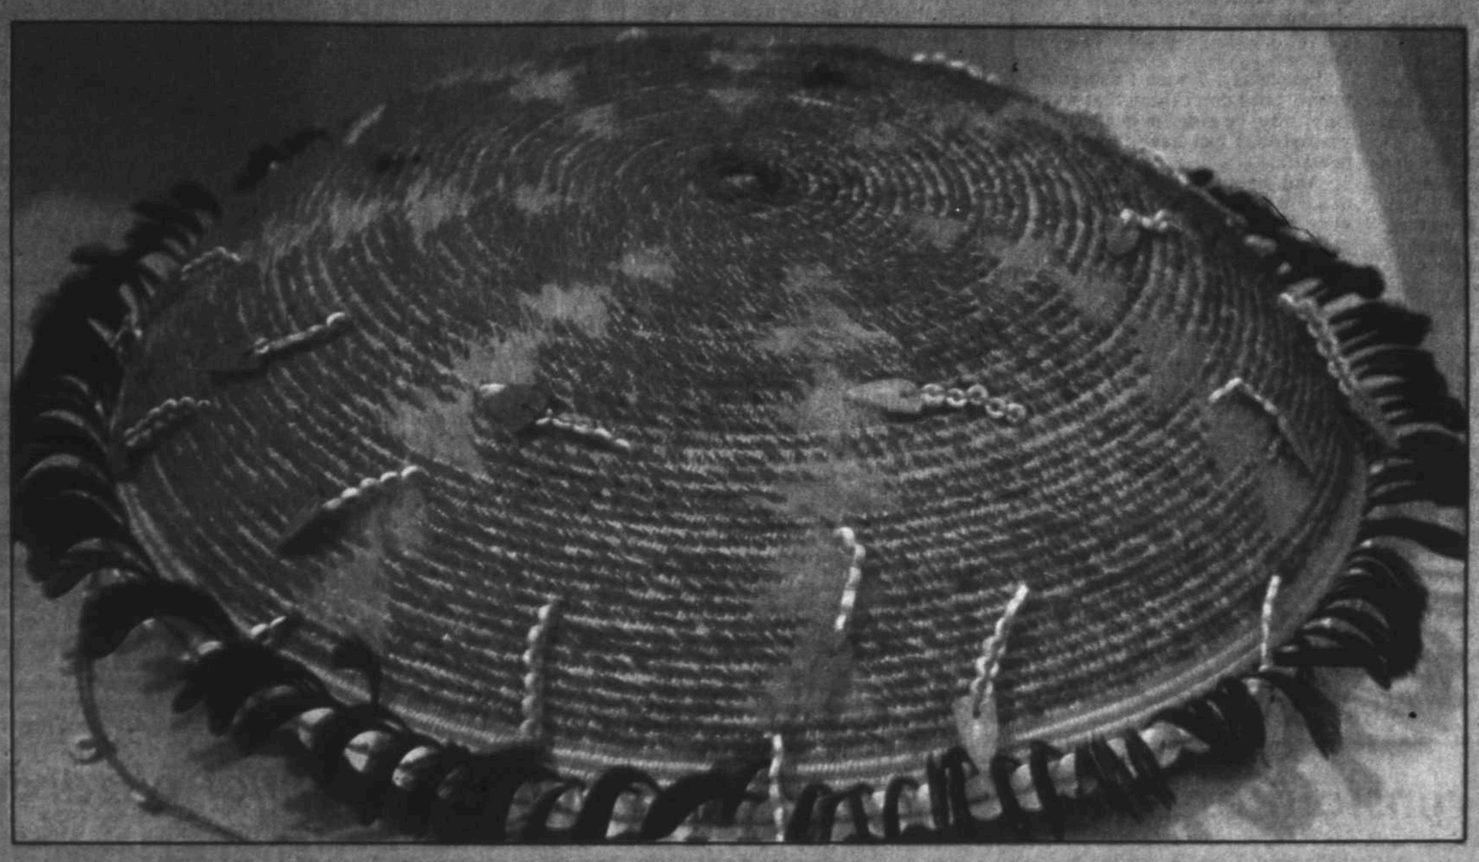
WOVEN ART



A ceremonial plaque from California was suspended from cords for use on special occasions.

The famed Lewis and Clark expedition in the early 1800s brought back this dome-topped hat from near the mouth of the Columbia River.

This 1,500- to 2,000-year-old trinket basket made by the Anasazi Indians, was found in Arizona with the necklace still inside.

Text by David Lee Forrest

The complex winding patterns beautifully woven into the old baskets have sinuous-sounding names, such as shdaaya.aakx'i ("spirit around the head"), tci'cmic chan ("wormtrack going to start") and cars-ops-to-man ("up across and down").

Most of the "Basketry Treasures from The Peabody Museum" now on display at the Museum of the Southwest are works of art which obviously required lavish amounts of time and care to make.

But for all their artistic merit, these North American Indian baskets were thoroughly practical household utensils.

"All the baskets were functional when they were made," noted Sue Devine, curator of the museum.

In contrast, it's hard to visualize future generations treasuring our burping Tupperware containers or Rubbermaid plastic canisters.

Judging from the exhibit, basket weaving was a technology as important to the Indians as plastic making is to our society. The Indians could weave a basket for almost any purpose.

Among those on exhibited are trays, bowls, jars, burden containers, carrying bags, a yarn holder, a water jug, a granary, a storage trunk, a yarn holder, a fish bag, a ceremonial plaque, a gambling device, a shaman's kit, a hominy sieve, a berry cider strainer and a basket used to make corn soup.

The display even includes once-fashionable basket-weaved hats.

For all their practical uses, baskets also had special symbolic significance for their Indian makers.

"A readily apparent connection to survival, productivity and fruitfulness is shown by the use of baskets as cradles to shelter and contain a new life, as ceremonial containers for rituals commemorating important changes in the stages of life , and as gifts to symbolize fruitful relationships," Joanne Segal-Brantford, the Peabody Museum curator of the exhibit, said in the display's catalog.

The exhibit covers a vast stretch of time and space in North America. The oldest work — an Anasazi trinket basket from Arizona found in 1915 with a necklace inside — is between 2,000 and 1,500 years old, while the latest was made in the 1940s.

The baskets were gathered from Novia Scotia to Palm Springs, Calif., and from the Aleutian Islands to southeastern Florida.

Two of the items — a dome-topped hat and a basket bag — were collected by the explorers Merriwether Lewis and William Clark during their famous trans-continental expedition in 1805-06.

The exhibit is from Harvard University's Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology's extensive holdings.

"They have over 3,000 baskets in their collection, which is just phenomenonal," said Ms. Devine.

The Peabody Museum is oriented more toward research than exhibitions, according to Ms. Devine, and this show is one of the first it has sent on the road to provide more people with the opportunity to see some of its collection.

"Basketry Treasures from the Peabody Museum" will be on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday and 2-5 p.m. Sunday through March 10.

This basket is part of an elaborate 11-piece nesting set made at the turn of the century by an Indian woman in southern Louisiana.

Artist says touching important in sculpture

CENTRE, Pa. (AP) — As Leonard Scott talks, he runs his fingers over the dark, bluntly angular face of the West Indies Man.

Over and over, he traces the same rhythmic, soul-satisfying pattern from forehead to chin and back again. He occasionally looks at the face; he never stops caressing it.

"You can't look at sculpture without feeling it," he says, "and they don't let you do it in museums.

"Feel this," he says, offering the West Indies Man. "It's green serpentine stone. Easy to carve, nice to feel."

Friend and poet Jack McManis of State College said, "Leonard goes to Philadelphia (Art) Museum, and he always touches the sculpture when he thinks the guard isn't looking. Of course, he always get reprimanded."

But recently in the Ross Library in Lock Haven, nobody was reprimanding the Mill Hall man for touching the sculpture. After all, they were his pieces of sculpture and his one-man exhibit, and he could do with them what he wanted.

Leonard Scott is 72, a lifelong resident of Clinton County and a retired house painter and stone mason who turned to sculpting 17 years ago. The Lock Haven exhibit is his first.

"It's something I wanted to do all my life," he says of sculpture. "I always thought I could do it, but I was always too busy. Didn't have the time, I told myself. And I didn't know anything about it."

He also spent, by his own estimate, the first half of his life in alcoholism.

"I was self-employed in the painting and decorating business, but I wasn't working a whole lot and the work I did was not the best quality," says Scott.

"I used to think of those 25 or 30 years as wasted, but I don't think that anymore. It took that long for me to decide I couldn't live that way any longer."

Sculpting did not turn his life around. It's something he worked on only after developing the strength of will even to begin working.

"I consider my recovery mostly spiritual," Scott says. "(Sculpting) helps me have a good sense of spiritual awareness, but I can't explain how or why. Sculpting seems to fulfill some deep personal need I have, but I don't think if I quit (sculpting), I'd start (drinking) again."

Scott insists he doesn't believe in talent.

"People say, 'I wish I had your talent,' but I don't think that way. Anybody could do it if they wanted to. I just have the desire to do it.

"And people talk about how much patience it takes. But I'm very impatient. If I have any patience at all, it's because I want to do it so badly.

"If I have any talent, it's God given, and I'd better do something with it.

"When I go to museums and see the stuff the great ones have done, I think I never want to work again. Then I go back home and get going."

Scott is famous in Clinton County for being the man who sculpted the panthers for Bald Eagle-Nittany High School in Mill Hill. They are his largest works.

"I started with pieces of limestone that were 1,000 pounds and 850 pounds and ended up with pieces of about 200 to 250 pounds," he says.

He did two panthers because the first was vandalized. "It was easier to make another one than to patch it up," he said.

Brass beds given sleek new styling

Copley News Service

HIGH POINT, N.C. — Nostalgia and romance still predominate in the design of brass beds, but manufacturers in this country and abroad increasingly are polishing their lines with sleek new contemporary designs.

Lines that once carried such traditional names as Matrimony, Chantilly and Victoriana are giving way to brassier designations like Monaco, Silhouette and — so much for romance! — Solitaire.

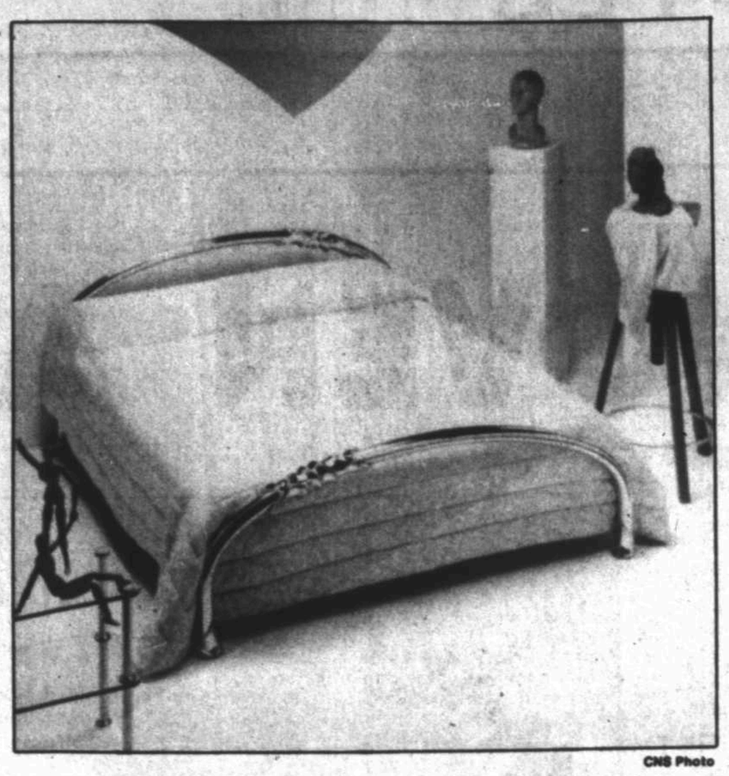
Instead of Victorian-era reproductions heavy with ornament and decorative curlicues, brass bed showrooms here at the nation's largest furniture market recently were filled with new styles reflecting Art Deco and Art Nouveau as well as the ultra-modern influences of New International Style. In short, brass beds are moving up in style, becoming more sophisticated and streamlined.

Goodbye, standard posts.

"It only makes sense but that the time has arrived for brass beds to go a stage further beyond antique reproduction into the contemporary," said Bella Ross, president of J/B Ross, a major U.S. brass bed manufacturer that showed 20 new contemporary designs at the Southern Furniture Market. Ross began making brass beds at the start of the antique reproduction boom about a decade ago and became a recognized leader in recycling historic designs with considerable pizzazz. But now the company is turning its focus almost exclusively to new styles.

THE BRASS Bed Co. of America — the country's largest manufacturer of solid brass beds (as opposed to plated brass) with annual sales averaging $10 million — also featured contemporary designs over traditional ones at the Southern Furniture Market. So, too, did Lipparini, Italy's largest maker of brass beds.

"Everybody thought that contemporary brass beds were going to be a fad that would go away," said Stefano Schiafina, area manager for Lipparini. "But we know now that they are an evolution and that the discovery of the contemporary is very much a part of current culture."



CNB Photo

This brass bed by Lipparini of Italy, called Belle Epoque, features sleek single carved arcs.

Schiafina said contemporary brass beds account for more than half of the company's present sales in Italy, and he expects the American market soon will be choosing modern brass over traditional as a more fitting complement to other postmodern furnishings, particularly lacquered pieces.

Lipparini several years ago was the first on the international scene to add contemporary styles to traditional antique reproductions of beds from England, Italy and France. The company currently manufactures about 18,000 brass beds a year in factories in Crespellano, about 100 miles south of Milan.

OF THE 30 different styles in the present line, the best seller is a slinky, low-slung model called Belle Epoque with a single curved arc at both the head and foot boards. A single, floral sculptural motif interrupts both arcs at the head and foot.

In High Point, Brass Bed Co. of America introduced low-slung and somewhat Art Deco-inspired styles similar to the Lipparini best seller.

"In the last year or so contemporary brass beds have become more a fashion point and we keep up with the times," said Morris J. Levin, vice president and sales manager of Albrass Enterprises, Inc., parent company of BBCA. "The Europeans are being noticed and making good fashion statements. There's no doubt but that some of our beds are influenced by this European styling."

Sales of traditional brass beds, however, continue to account for about 85 percent of BBCA's business. These represent variations of the Unsinkable Molly Brown brass bed that made its appearance at the turn of the century: A gleaming "gaslight" or "heirloom" number with standard posts and old-fashioned headboards and feet with a circus of shiny volutes.

SUCH BEDS launched the brass bed revival more than a decade ago when interior design was swept by a wave of nostalgia. The real antiques — some American versions dating to the mid 19th century — were hard to find. And, when found, they usually were badly discolored, hard to keep polished and too small for a modern-day sleeper accustomed to king and queen sizes. All this was taken into account by the companies who jumped into reproductions; they made beds in all sizes and gave them a hard, baked-on, clear enamel coating, guaranteed to let the brass shine through forever without the slightest swipe of a polishing rag.

The first brass beds were made in Birmingham, England, around 1830. They quickly caught on among the affluent, who were tiring of heavy wooden four-posters. In the Victorian era, brass beds took on added popularity. Doctors suggested they were "cleaner" than wood; furthermore, that brass beds designed for a single person were ideal for a good Victorian since sleeping in a double bed was unhealthy.

In 1844 the first brass bed to be exhibited in America was shown at a New York exposition.

Collector runs out of room

Charles Choset has such an imposing collection of first-rate contemporary art that he literally has nowhere to put it.

Some of his purchases remain with the artist from whom he bought them, according to an article in the February issue of Connoisseur, because he can't fit them into his fifth floor walk-up apartment in New York City's Greenwich Village.

Choset is a composer with an eagle eye for art who used to make his living proofreading mass market paperback books. Today, he makes an annual income of $15,000 to $25,000 by "deaccessioning" — reluctantly selling the paintings he has picked up at bargain prices thanks to his fine eye for fine art.

"I started collecting in 1974," he said. "I bought out of passion. The first piece was a drawing by George Segal. I'd never heard of him. The next was a tile by Helen Frankenthaler. I'd never heard of her, either.

"But that was what I loved about collecting. I was educating my eye, by myself."

Financing himself with the meager money he made as a proofreader, he learned quickly.

Walking into Choset's apartment today, the visitor is surrounded by art — nearly 200 pieces.

The artists include Mary Frank, Alexis Smith, Robert Motherwell, Paul Signac, Elaine de Kooning and Donald Judd.

The paintings and other works of art are literally to be found from floor to ceiling, from kitchen to bathroom. An untitled Frank Stella hangs in the bathroom. A Joe Neill construction in painted wood runs like convoluted train tracks around the overhead light fixture in another room.

There are paintings and prints in every corner, under the bed, in the closet, hanging from the bookcases, stacked on the floor.

He also owns nine Sean Scullys, seven of which have never left the artist's studio because Choset has no place to put them.

Art materials can pose potential hazards, chemist warns

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Artists are in daily contact with chemicals but they are among the least informed as to their proper use, according to chemist Allen Denio of the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire.

"Artists often studiously avoid any knowledge of chemistry," he told a meeting of the American Chemical Society here recently. "Yet painters work with organic solvents. Fiber workers use dyes and acids, and potters may be exposed to glazes that contain the metals lead, cadmium, and nickel."

For the sake of their own health, artists need to become more aware that many materials they use can have harmful effects, if used improperly, Denio says.

He adds that though this is especially important for professional artists, who tend to experiment with chemicals to achieve unusual effects, it is also important for amateurs, who may be unaware of the potential risks involved.

ASPIRIN AND TOOTHACHE - BEWARE
QUESTION: Are there precautions I should take when taking aspirin to calm a toothache before seeing my dentist?
ANSWER: Make sure you take the aspirin with plenty of water to prevent upsetting your stomach. Never place the tablet on the painful tooth or on the gum or let it dissolve in your mouth and swish it around the aching tooth. The aspirin can irritate the tissue seriously.
Never crush aspirin and place it between the cheek and the gum. Aspirin and related compounds are a common source of burns of the oral cavity. White lesions can develop where the medication touches the cheek or gum which could develop into a painful, raw, bleeding area.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Ten Midland couples enjoyed a recent weekend in the Big Bend National Park area, which was highlighted by a musical float trip down the Rio Grande River.

Those making the fun trip were Mimi and Jerry Langdon, Susan and Frank Tirey, Melinda and Mott Williamson, Lyn and Richard Dulaney, Connie and Rick Glasscock, Lynn and Louis Renaud, Kathy and Bill Wallace, Mary Kay and Geoff Barnett, Melnda and Henry Musselman and Kathy and Tom Wurster.

The group made their headquarters in Marathon at the historic Gage Hotel. Departing from their hotel early Saturday morning after Mimosas and a hearty breakfast, they headed for Lajitas, where they boarded rafts for the all-day float trip, which included a stop for a picnic lunch at noon. The music was provided by a singer-guitarist. Enjoying dinner back at the hotel that evening, the Midlanders returned home on Sunday.

CONNIE AND PAT DAY and their daughter, Charisse, recently welcomed a foreign exchange student into their home from Bogota, Colombia, Ana Marie Evan is attending Midland High School, where she is a senior and her host sister is a sophomore.

Ana already has begun to get accustomed to our busy U.S. lifestyle. Along with her host family, Ana attended the Altrusa Club's annual International dinner shortly after her arrival. She was honored last weekend by Charisse with a dinner party at a local restaurant in celebration of her 18th brithday. Ten of Ana's new friends attended.

The Days have planned several trip to points of interest throughout Texas, which should give Ana some excellent ideas to use in her hobby of painting.

Ana has completed her high school education in Colombia and plans to enter college when she returns in July. She lives in Bogota with her mother and two brothers.

TWO AREA GIRLS have recently pledged social sororities, according to an announcement by Sally (Mrs. Steve) Melzer, Midland Panhellenic rush chairman.

Tandee Thomas, daughter of Gwen and Harold Thomas of Midland, is a new pledge of Kappa Alpha Theta at Baylor University. Sandra Wheeler, daughter of Jeanene and James Wheeler of Stanton, has pledged Zeta Tau Alpha at SMU.

MARY AND JOHN STRINGER recently attended the wedding of Mary's nephew, Michael Hammer, in Tulsa. Michael has many friends in Midland, were he has resided on two different occasions since 1982 while in a training program with Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Prior to her marriage, the bride, the former Dru Mobley, was a personal instructor in Tulsa, going to individual homes to conduct exercise sessions.

After their January wedding in the First United Methodist Church and a reception at the Tulsa Club, the couple departed for an Acapulco honeymoon. They are now at home in Los Angeles.

Michael is the only grandson of Occidental board chairman Armand Hammer of Los Angeles, who was among the wedding guests.

It was a mini family reunion for the Stringers and other relatives, who shared an apartment Michael had obtained for them. In between the many wedding parties, they were able to continue their visiting nonstop.

BEFORE BEGINNING a new job in Granbury last month, Karen Moseley shared a holiday trop to London with her parents, Elloui and John Moseley of Midland, and her grandmother, Eugenia Moseley of Oklahoma City. A December graduate of UT —Austin with a degree in journalism, Karen is now a reporter-photographer for the Hood County News.

The family will long remember their 1984 Christmas Day observance, which included services at Westminister Abbey, dinner at the Charles Dickens Hotel, where they were staying, and the opportunity to hear Queen Elizabeth's televised speech to the British people. In addition to the city's many historical attractions and other places of interest, the Moseleys enjoyed the Royal Ballet's opening night performance of "The Nutcracker," a visit to Windsor Castle, and a train ride to the quaint town of Rochester, where they were awed by fabulous displays of china, silver and crystal at Reeves & Son.

Elloui also enjoyed a telephone visit with former Midlander Caroline Hankinson, who has been living in London for the past couple of years. Her husband, Jim, is with Mobil Oil there. Caroline relayed the news that their son, Dr. Steve Hankinson, and his wife, the former Gail Hawley, are back in Midland. An optometrist, Steve has established a new practice here, and Gail is an engineer with Exxon. Both are Lee High graduates.

DEAR ABBY

Ex-wife's offer intriguing

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am very much in love with a man I've known about a year. We have plans to marry soon. "Joe" is 41 and I am 29. This will be my first marriage and Joe's third.

Yesterday I received a letter from Joe's second wife, whom I had never met. She said, "If you want to meet me, I will be glad to tell you about my marriage to the man you hope to spend the rest of your life with. This letter comes from someone who wants only to help you. I am sorry that Joe's first wife didn't offer to meet with me before I married him."

Abby, her letter had a sincere and benevolent ring to it, and I want very much to meet this woman, but I don't want to be disloyal to Joe. — TEMPTED

DEAR TEMPTED: Don't be disloyal to Joe. Tell him about the letter from Wife No. 2, but don't expect him to be overjoyed. Should you see her? You have nothing to lose — except some illusions, perhaps.

DEAR ABBY: Recently I started attending Al-Anon meetings to help me cope with an alcoholic wife. I've been to five meetings and have benefited greatly, but there's a problem.

Some members resent my presence and make me feel unwelcome. Why? Because I suffer from asthma and am allergic to smoke.

I am 67 years old and my doctor ordered me to quit smoking 22 years ago. Smoke still brings on coughing spasms. Some longtime members of the group seem to resent the fact that I, a new member, have asked them not to smoke during the one-hour session. One member gets up two and three times during the hour to go out and smoke. I am sure this disturbs the group, and I feel guilty.

Numerous organizations ban smoking. Why not Al-Anon? I can't imagine anyone so addicted to tobacco that he can't go for one hour without a cigarette. Don't these people realize they have a health problem as serious (or possibly more so) than the alcoholic they are living with? — FEELING GUILTY

DEAR FEELING: Every nonsmoker is entitled to a smoke-free room. The smokers have the problem; they're addicted. There is no smoker who cannot quit if he really wants to.

DEAR ABBY: I am an attractive 26-year-old female. I've never been married, but I probably will marry when I fall in love.

My mother is pressuring me to get married and let a man take care of me. I have a college degree, a good position and am perfectly capable of taking care of myself. My father keeps reminding me that I am not getting any younger.

The guy I'm currently dating is considered a "good catch," but I don't love him. He's serious about me, but I like him as a friend. I'm not in love with him and I told him so.

My mom says I'm being foolish — that 99 percent of the women who marry don't marry for love, and it's time I grew up and faced reality.

Please give me your opinion. — OLD MAID AT 26

DEAR 26: You are not an "old maid." And you appear to be sufficiently grown up to chart your own course. I'm sure your parents mean well, but you're wiser than they are. Tune them out.

DEAR ABBY: What do you do when the grandparents forget their grandson's birthday? — WABASH, IND.

DEAR WABASH: Gently "remind" them of the oversight. (Better late than never.) And next year remind them about two weeks in advance of the date.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Money-saving coupon tips offered

Hearst Feature Service

Is there room in your life for Double-Stuffed Oreo Cookie wrappers and Maxwell House Instant Coffee labels? If so, you might want to start saving money through refunding. Coupon Queen Mary Anne Hayes offers these tips on how to get started.

1. Save every label, food wrapper and inner seal you use. Even if there is not a refund offer right now, there probably will be one in the future.
2. Purchase a supply of the least expensive envelopes you can find and a roll of first-class postage stamps.
3. Read all the refund offers in a refunder magazine or newsletter. Mark the ones of interest to you.
4. Check your label collection and cabinets to see if you have the labels needed for the refund. If you can use the product, put it on your shopping list. Try to plan menus around refundable products.
5. If you have the labels and the form, clip them together and mail them immediately to the correct address. If you don't have the form and the offer doesn't specifically ask for it, try sending it without the form. Companies usually pay, anyway. Using a plain piece of paper, print your name, address and ZIP code clearly, and request the refund.
6. Mail your refund request before the expiration date. Once the date is past, the offer is void.
7. Wait for your refund to arrive. It seems like an eternity for the first refund to arrive. Most refunds take from four to six weeks, but some have taken up to three months.
8. While waiting for your refunds, continue sending for more. If you mail one every day, in a few weeks you should receive dollars daily.

Tips favored over surcharge

Copley News Service

If tipping is ever replaced by a surcharge added to the customer's bill, the customer will be the loser, say restaurant owners, waitresses and customers.

"I don't think it would be fair to the customer," said Edna Jones, a waitress. "The waitress would think, 'Why bother with good service? I'm going to get my tip anyway.' If a waitress is good, she might get more than 15 percent. I think you earn what you get."

"I don't like the idea of adding 15 percent onto the bill," said Vea Albright, co-owner of a coffee shop. "I feel tipping is important, because I think the majority of waitresses realize that if the service isn't there, then the tip won't be."

Mary Littler, who has been a waitress at for 11 years, agrees.

"I'd rather take my chances and let the customer decide," she said. "I usually come out ahead. I do better than 15 percent."

Customers Millie Smith and Merrill Wilhelm said they'd rather have a choice. Both said there have been times when they've left more than 15 percent, and once in a while they've left a token tip because of poor service.

"I look for good service and friendliness," said Wilhelm. She wants a waitress who smiles and brings a second or even a third cup of coffee without having to be asked.

Tipping is a motivating force for waiters and waitresses, said Karen Filippone, co-owner of an Italian restaurant.

She is absolutely opposed to adding 15 percent to a check. She said it's an insult to the customer and to waiters and waitresses.

"You're going to get back what you give," she said. "The service could be just average, but if a waitress has a good attitude and approaches people right, she'll get a good tip. We have some people who tip 25 percent."

Once in a while there are people who don't leave a tip, she said. Then there are the weirdos who have left toothpaste, religious literature or stamps instead of cash. But they are in the minority.

Restaurant owner George Tribelhorn said service deteriorates when a percentage is added to a customer's bill to cover the tip.

"It gives the server second thoughts as to whether he's going to give good service," said Tribelhorn.

"If my restaurant would make the same profit whether I put in a little or a lot of effort, I guarantee you I would put in little work."

Terri Rotter, co-owner of a restaurant, said when a tip is automatic, the customer loses on the service he receives.

When Rotter eats out, she said, she doesn't hesitate to tell the server and the restaurant's manager if she receives poor service.

"I would tell the server why I was tipping poorly," she said. "I would be doing a favor to the profession of serving."

Rotter, however, was in the minority. Most people said they wouldn't tell the server that he or she would be getting a small tip because of poor service.

Although more people said men are the better tippers, working women were cited by waitresses and restaurant owners as tipping as well as men.

"It used to be that women tipped less, but only because they didn't know the custom," said Tribelhorn, adding that working women are used to entertaining for business now and "certainly know how to tip."

If a person's been drinking, the tip could be smaller than usual, said Jones, who's been a waitress for more than 30 years. "They forget where they are, or they spend more (on liquor) than they expected."

Wedding dress styles change

Hearst News Service

Your wedding dress can have a timeless, fairy-tale look in 1985, but it will be ruled by timely ideas. And if you will be a spring or summer bride, now is the time to choose it, for fairy-tale dresses must be ordered months ahead.

The biggest change is the return to tradition from the poetic simplicity of the '60s. This year, Italian embroidered organza or embroidered net is the leading fashion note. The trendiest touch is asymmetric detail, anything from embroidery on just one sleeve to an uneven waistline and embroidery that slopes upward across the bodice.

Newest of all is the touch of color: pink- or rose-dyed beads sewn onto the fabric, dyed silk flowers at shoulder or waist and, of course, pale ribbons at hemline or waistline.

Headdress and veil have their trends, too. Right now the dominant headdress is silk flowers on a cap or comb, often with the same asymmetrical approach the wedding dress shows. The newest detail is pearls spaced on fishing line — honest! — that droop or spray around the face.

French style is very country-oriented, with lots of eyelet lace and cotton fabric. Gowns are slender, with lots of attention to the hip. A 1920s influence now is prevalent in France.

English gowns have very full, bouffant skirts, but neither they nor French gowns employ the fine fabrics the Italians have mastered. Italian embroidered organza and net not only make fine gowns, but the embroidered details of the fabric can be appliqued on to unpatterned organza, net, taffeta, silk, satin or even cotton.

The Italian trend started in this country 18 months ago when the designer Illisa began importing Italian fabric and making dresses for America. Today, Italian fabrics are being copied everywhere, and every bridal designer offers at least one Italian embroidered gown.

Like the fashion world in general, the wedding gown also has its top designers and shoddy imitators. Priscilla of Boston, famed for making Patricia Nixon's White House wedding gown, is the oldest and most traditional. Gowns there can cost $25,000. Illisa is setting the most trends.

In the rarefied atmosphere of four- and five-figure wedding gowns, there is Atlanta designer Pat Kerr, reputed to have the largest collection of antique laces in the world, with which she makes wedding gowns with an average price of $10,000.

Italian embroidered dresses cost $1,100 and up, but the look is so popular that a designer such as Alfred Angelo, who makes the more affordable $400 to $800 gown, is also making the embroidered-look dress.

Price alone is not a guarantee of quality. A Jessica McClintock gown for $150 may be better-made than someone else's $500 gown. Look for finished seams which are machine overcast so that the fabric doesn't fray.

Marriage advice offered

Associated Press

There's more than hearts and flowers involved in making marriage work.

Common sense and compromise are among the secrets of a happy marriage, according to an article in the February issue of Cosmopolitan that offers guidelines for making marriage work.

The first rule: focus on the positive, not the negative.

"If people would only focus on what they like rather than what they don't like about a partner, the issues would fall into place differently from the beginning," said New York psychotherapist Anne Tully Ruderman.

It is a matter of emphasis, according to Donald S. Williamson, director of the Houston Family Institute.

"It's not a matter of what's true or false," he said. "Choosing the positive side is simply choosing a more effective way to live. There are always ambivalent feelings inside each of us about our most intimate relationships. From the beginning, one set dominates — but the other doesn't go away; it just recedes."

Dividing the work of a family fairly, efficiently and with consideration is another key.

"The keynote word is efficiency," therapist Ruderman said. "A certain number of things have to be done in a certain amount of time. Who can do what best? Deciding that way is better than labeling a job his or hers."

Marilyn Singleton Raji, founder of the Institute for Marriage and Human Relations in New York City, believes such decisions should be made early.

"In most new marriages, the wife is so interested in pleasing that she'll take on far more than her fair share of the work," the therapist warned. "So it's best to get down to the nitty-gritty of who does what before you're married."

Be aware that people do change and don't let it throw you.

"The common notion is that marriage is a one-time decision," Williamson said. "Not true. It's a constant choosing and rechoosing. You can neither force change nor stop it in your partner."

Raji advises marriage partners not to waste time blaming each other for changing, but rather find "new options that are harmonious."

New England fondest of potatoes

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Baked potatoes are more popular in New England than in other parts of the nation, according to a restaurant chain.

William Welter, executive vice president of Wendy's International, said the mid-Atlantic and West Central regions are second and third, respectively, in baked potato consumption.

He says that since Wendy's introduced hot stuffed baked potatoes to its menus nationwide in late 1983, the chain has sold more than 600,000 a day.

Computer picks wines

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When John A. Chunko, an advertising consultant, decides to select a bottle from the "state of the art" wine cellar going into his new home in Princeton, N.J., he will tell his IBM PC XT personal computer, "Do wine." The sole drawback of his custom-designed dBase III softwear program, he says, is that "it can't print out the label — but it can do anything else."

When Roman L. Weil, professor of accounting at the University of Chicago, wanted to survey his 4,000 bottles to find "a 1924 anything" to give a friend on her 60th birthday, he clicked on his Digital Rainbow and found a Pommard, a Burgundy, almost at once.

And when Richard C. Sears, an employee-benefits consultant whose Fort Lee., N.J., office is computerized, chose not to computerize his 2,000-bottle cellar, it was an act of principle: "I sort of enjoy the chaos." Serendipity in chaos pays off, as it did when he turned up a forgotten "delightful 12-year-old Moulin-a-Vent," a top Beaujolais.

The microcomputer, some wine buffs find, breaks the yoke of time-consuming written records, especially if their cellars run to hundreds or thousands of bottles. In addition to readily available data-base-management softwear that enables a wine lover to catelogue holdings according to need — it may take a lot of work — specifically wine-oriented programs are also on the market.

Whether the investment, despite efficiencies, is worth making is not wholly clear. For example, Todd Solomon, a Jerseyite who is a marketing manager for A.T.&T. Information Systems and who owns 500 to 600 bottles, is only semi-enthusiastic about using his Apple IIe to log in and out bottles bought and drunk: "Computers are terrific for massaging data, but my pleasure is in browsing — in looking over the bins instead of a screen and asking myself, 'Let's see what we'll have for dinner.' " He never records the cost of wine: "I don't what to know what I spend."

On the other hand a Manhattan editor who owns merely 150 bottles found recently that two hours is a lot of time to spend as he updated records under the pressure of two and a half cases of newly arrived 1983 German kabinetts and spatleses. He keeps duplicate penciled inventory lists: one in his pocket, one at home. He plans to buy a computer to simplify the job.

Another Manhattan resident who also prefers anonymity, a lawyer for an investment banking concern, keeps 70 cases in his Park Avenue basement and, with three other buyers, 1,450 more in a warehouse. The sheer volume forced him to buy a computer: "I submit reports — summaries — and used to do it weekly. But when I was at 300 cases the paperwork buried me." He turned to an Apple IIe, and now carries printouts of both cellars for ease of buying from his office.

Like hoary record systems — cellar logs, 3-by-5 cards, loose-leaf notebooks — computers can hold everything but glass and cork. Their chief benefit is, of course, ease of data injection, search and retrieval. For example, William R. Johnston, a broker at the New York Stock Exchange, and his family in New Jersey drink perhaps a bottle a night.

To decide which, his Apple IIe, with an application designed for DB Master software, "flips through" his 5,000 bottles filed under red Bordeaux, white Bordeaux, red Burgundy, white Burgundy, California varietals, Sauternes, German riesiings, Italian reds and whites, Australian wines, South African wines and port.

Using the Micro Wine Companion, $39.95 software created by Concept Development Associates (7960 Old Georgetown Road, Bethesda, Md. 20814), a collector can deal with 19 categories: bin location, appellation, producer, vintage, country, type (red, white), region, vendor, purchase date, price, current market value, quantity, occasion (banquet, picnic, etc.), food that matches, year wine is ready and when it should be drunk, breathing time, sweetness and a numerical rating. Versions of the softwear, which can all print out rating sheets for group tastings, are made for I.B.M. computers and compatible ones, most Apples and the Commodore 64.

Some data-base-management programs useful for wine are: pfs:file, retailing for abbut $140; dBase II, $495; IBM Filing Assistant, $149; and VisiFile, $149. Check for discounts.

In Princeton Chunko plans to use his software to store evaluations from Decanter, a British monthly magazine.

SHELF DISCUSSION

An unusually-shaped shelf or one in an eye-catching material, can stand in for a missing focal point. This is true when whatever is placed on it, such as an antique clock or a vase of flowers, is worthy of attention. Shelves can go around corners, bridge an alcove or the space between radiators, or connect two juts in a wall. A narrow shelf, running around the periphery of a room a few inches below the ceiling, can fill in for a crown molding that can show off a collection of plates. In a room with a long, uninterrupted wall, consider adding a table-height shelf the length of the wall. Remember, a shelf is what is on it. Avoid utilizing it as a "catch-all" for junk.

AT WIT'S END

Wives want piece of pay pie

By ERMA BOMBECK

For years, women tap-danced around their worth as wives.

Occasionally, someone came up with an impressive figure on how much you would pay a chauffeur, nurse, nutritionist, cook, mistress, laundress and bookkeeper. But it was all sorta light and amusing.

Until now.

A courageous woman, Diane Skomars Magrath, who is married to the new president of the University of Missouri, entered into a contract with her husband that would guarantee her $30,000 of his $100,000 salary for her contributions to campus life.

Ms. Magrath is not the only woman who has been a part of a package deal for too many years.

Let's hear it out there for a minister's wife who is in charge of bringing the house that came with the job up to code, teaching bible class, attending every pot-luck supper and bazaar, hostessing young people and women's guild in her home, raising children who are natural paragons of virtue and being a role model by smiling and looking holy every day of her entire life.

And what about the woman who stands at the right elbow of a school administrator? She's a staple at every sports event, glee club recital, graduation and variety show. She's a chaperone at every prom and shows up at every faculty dinner. In the early years she carpools the team, grades papers, sells candy for the band and hustles change to refurbish the Statue of Liberty.

Military wives should share in the loot. If it takes a uniform to command a little respect, then the government should outfit them, along with compensation for diplomatic service in foreign countries, PR with natives and the hostessing of a thousand parties for good will.

Plumbers' wives should be given a per diem for answering the phone six hours out of their day and taking messages. The wives of politicians deserve a trust fund for their part in campaigning, not to mention those five-minute speeches they are called upon to give when they represent their husbands. (Plus a bonus for every speech they've heard 85 times and remained awake.)

It would be hard to put a price on doctors' wives who live by microwaves and die by the ring of the phone in the middle of the night. It would be impossible to reward the wives of editors who must field everything from the controversial lead editorial to why the paper boy insists on wrapping their paper around the antenna on their roof.

In fact, it would be hard to come up with a split for all the wives who keep it all together while their husbands are out there trying to make it.

If Ms. Magrath sets a trend, don't be surprised to find out wives are a luxury that most men cannot possibly afford.

AT WORK

Listening, learning important

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

I listen to people talk about their work to each other and to me. I hear some wonderful stories, great lore about how things get done. But mostly these stories evaporate into thin air before they get told. Few think to tell, and fewer think to ask each other about real experiences and perceptions. Wisdom, alas, is not shared.

It's too painfully apparent. Watch interaction at a meeting where hope springs eternal for such sharing. What is the answer to someone who says his project is done or her sales quota is met? It's "Mine is too," usually. Not "Tell me how you did it. What were the danger spots (or the surprises or the turnaround point)?" So for anything to be shared, the burden is quite squarely on everyone, including the teller to tell and the listener to ask.

But most of us reject that from square one. Why? Because we are not supposed to boast. Yet over and over again, books on successful communication and excellence in management insist on shared lore as a basis for working together. So with nothing to lose, why not try out a few tactics at your next meeting?

If the project has just started, then go round and ask members to tell what they are looking forward to, or what direct experience each has had before that relates to the project as a whole. This way you can ferret out not only expectations but also anyone who has first-hand knowledge, even though he or she may not be working on that segment.

If the project is in midstream, then, similarly, go round robin and ask for successes so far, problems encountered, anyone's experience that can help, and a glance ahead to see if the project should continue on the exact path. This last is critical especially when the project is nearly done but there is too little time to finish it as planned.

Like the "Think Ahead" sign with the D falling off the page, our projects often get jammed and falter at the end. Taking time out to contemplate another way to finish it doesn't use up the time; it often allows for some genius to propose something not previously considered.

If the project has just been completed, then there is still so much to be learned. Again, going around the table, members of the group can tell what they would like to be acknowledged for, what they wish they could try over again, and what new role each would like to play on the next project.

In these structured, somewhat artificial rounds of talk, people who work together get to share what they did and learned. Typically they just gripe and get on with the next plan. The pattern is negative and unintelligent, wasting the most precious asset.— the ability to get smarter and more experienced each time.

The key is to want to tell and to hear — to bear witness to what the activity has meant to each as well as to the group. It starts with daring to think that what you do and what others do is important to talk about.

Dr. Scheele is the author of "Skills for Success" and "Making College Pay Off."

Doctor links gravity boots, eye damage

Copley News Service

Hanging upside-down from gravity boots and other equipment dramatically increases pressure on the eyes, and might be dangerous for people with glaucoma, according to a research study published recently by Dr. Robert Weinreb of the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine.

"The chronic process of hanging upside-down could very possibly cause damage to the eye," Weinreb said in an interview.

In recent years, inversion, or hanging upside-down while wearing boots attached to a bar, has become popular at gyms, health spas and homes. Advocates of the boots say the technique alleviates pressure on the muscles and skeleton, and can help such things as backaches.

Weinreb, however, said he was in a health spa talking with a woman while she hung upside down and noticed her eyes were bulging and turning red.

"Being an ophthalmologist, I started to wonder about the increase in venous (vein) pressure," Weinreb said.

The next day, Weinreb said he took medical equipment to the gym to examine the eyes of people as they dangled from gravity boots.

Pressure on their eyes increased "within seconds,' and after three or four minutes, Weinreb noticed pulsing veins and arteries within the eyes, the development of tiny hemorrhages.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Asthma treatment questioned

Dear Dr. Solomon: My nephew has asthma for which he is getting medication, and from what I can see, the results are mixed. Sometimes he has good days and sometimes not-so-good days. I have friends who have asthma and they are taking steroids, and they are hardly troubled at all. Is there any reason not to give steroids to a child who has asthma? If treatment works, why not use it? — Ms. N.D., Clearwater, Fla.

Dear Ms. D.: The two most common side effects in children receiving corticosteroid therapy are growth suppression and a form of cataract. Therefore, steroids are used only when there is no appropriate alternative.

Treatment with steroids may occasionally be indicated for childhood asthma. Because it is a chornic condition it is likely that treatment will be required for a number of years. In view of the possible side effects, other medications are preferred if the asthma is not severe.

Dear Sr. Solomon: When my husband gets up in the morning, he's usually bright-eyed and bushy tailed. I don't know what happens to him during the day, but by early evening when we have dinner, he's dragging. He becomes anxious and a nervous wreck, and everything seems to irritate him. How do you explain this? — Mrs. L.U., Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. U.: It may of course be that your husband's employment or other daytime activities upset him to the point where he becomes anxious by evening. However, it is also possible that the anxiety he exhibits in the evening simply reflects the different times of the day.

Dr. Oliver G. Cameron, of the Univerdity of Michigan School of Medicine in Ann Arbor, reports that the symptoms of anxiety fluctuate in a pattern that appears to follow a 24-hour period. That is, anxiety is experienced most intensely from about midafternoon to early evening.

Dear Dr. Solomon: There is a building for senior citizens in my neighborhood, and about once a month a podiatrist comes by to check on any foot problems the residents may be having. What I am wondering about is why so many older people have trouble with their feet. — Ed, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Ed: Some older patients may be unable to care for their feet properly because they have arthritis or possibly because of obesity. Many also delay seeking appropriate foot care when problems are still minor.

The people you describe seem to be practicing a valuable form of preventive medicine.

For Chalene, Portsmouth, Va.: A young woman who uses a diaphragm for purposes of contraception and who experiences recurrent urinary tract infections should make certain that the diaphragm is properly fitted.

In one study of 150 women with urinary tract infections, two-thirds were found to be using a diaphragm and, in many cases, the diaphragm did not fit properly.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column

PLANTS IN THE HOME

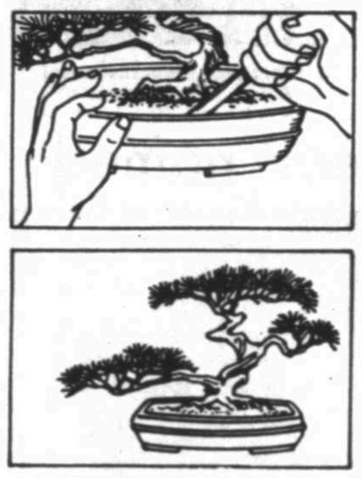
Chinese practiced bonsai before Japanese

By ELVIN McDONALD

Westerners thank the Japanese for bonsai, but hundreds of years before in China there was penjing. As horticultural art forms they are at once the same and entirely different. Being at the root, the beginning, penjing has a primitive quality that may well give it an even broader appeal than the possibly more sublime presence of bonsai.

Penjing has two divisions: The first corresponds with traditional bonsai — one or a few of the same woody species, shrub or tree, dwarfed by root and top pruning and cultivated for generations in the same size tray or pot.

The second is the miniature landscape or rock penjing, which affords considerable variety but can be typified by a very shallow tray garden, with features of water, rock outcroppings, several kinds of plants, and figurines to represent life. Bridges, barges, birds might be included, the largest up close in the design, the smallest as far away as possible, so as to increase spatial deceptions.



Chinese bonsai is known as penjing.

From the moment we began our present wave of tourism to China we have known and hoped that those who visited would bring back ideas that would enrich our gardening; in penjing we see that coming to pass. Beginning in the spring of 1985 visitors to the Montreal Botanical Garden will be able to observe up close a million dollars' worth of aged penjings recently donated by Wu Yee-sun, a 94-year-old Hong Kong banker.

And anyone interested can read a fascinating book on the subject: "Penjing: The Chinese Art of Miniature Gardens" by Hu Yunhua (Timber Press, Box 1632, Beaverton, Ore. 97075; $47 postpaid). If that price is too high, ask your town library to obtain a copy. Here are some of my favorite passages:

"In 1972 Chinese archaeologists unearthed a tomb in Shaanxi Province, built in 706 A.D. Murals on the walls depict ladies-in-waiting holding potted landscapes with miniature rockeries and fruit trees.

"... with a few stones and trees the miniature landscapist is able to recreate the complexity of nature.

"Stones are the main components, supplemented by grass, moss, boats, bridges and pavilions — a miniaturization of mountains and rivers."

Five-generation family

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Today's average American family consists of two parents and two children, with grandparents who live in another city.

But one local family doesn't believe in being "average," they believe in togetherness. Three family members are employed in the same profession at the same business establishment. And all the family members live in Midland — all five generations of them.

Even with modern medicine and healthier habits providing longer life spans, three-generation families are — well, average. "I don't know anyone else with a five-generation family," said great-grandmother Dorothy Derington.

And they haven't had such a family very long. The newest generation, Chase Allen Reed, was born Jan. 15 at Midland Memorial Hospital. About becoming a great-great grandmother, Lucy Beggs said, "I feel great. I don't feel a bit older, though."

A Texas family "from 'way back," the family moved to Midland from Abilene in 1948.

Mrs. Beggs, Mrs. Derington's mother, was born in Oklahoma Territory and moved to Texas when she was only a few months old. She grew up in Texas, married a rancher and lived in Colorado and Ford County in West Texas, where they raised their daughter. They moved to Midland when her husband retired.

Mrs. Derington's daughter Lynn Cooke, a baby when the family moved to Midland, was a member of the first class to attend Lee High School. She was 16 when she gave birth to her daughter Tammy.

On Jan. 15 Tammy, now Mrs. Reed, gave the family its newest member, Chase. Not only is he the fifth generation of his family, he is only the second boy born in those five generations.

In the past five generations, accepted methods of childbirth have changed. Mrs. Beggs had her two children at home without medication. "All I had was a little chloroform on a piece of cotton to ease the pain a little." At that time new mothers were expected to stay in bed several days after their babies' births.

Mrs. Derington's children were born in the hospital, but mothers were still expected to stay in bed for a while. "I stayed in the hospital one week," she said, and was required to have another week of bed rest after leaving the hospital — standard medical practice then.

But medical practices have a way of changing. "I had my babies at Midland Memorial Hospital," Ms. Cooke said. She went home three days later, and "went back to work 10 days after they were born."

Mrs. Reed also had her baby at MMH, and was released after two days. "He was born Tuesday morning and I was out Thursday morning," she said.

Childbirth is never without pain, but in the past 20 years, methods to help make it less traumatic have been established. One advantage today's new mother has is the opportunity to participate in prepared childbirth classes, Mrs. Reed said. "I knew more what to expect."

Her mother agreed: "She probably knows more about her body from Lamaze classes than I do. They make you more aware."

Another advantage for the mother is the changing role of the father. Today's new father is allowed — and encouraged — to participate in the birth of his child. "The main thing is the husband knows what's going on, too," Mrs. Derington said. Many new dads "coach" their wives through childbirth, instead of pacing around the waiting room, smoking packs of cigarettes and drinking pots of coffee while chewing their fingernails to their elbows.

But childbirth is only the beginning of parenting, and most new mothers and fathers have hopes and dreams for their children. "The only thing I care about is that he's happy," Mrs. Reed said about her baby. "I don't agree with trying to make your kids become something because that's what you want. That ought to be their decision."

Mrs. Reed, her mother Ms. Cooke and grandmother Mrs. Derington chose the same profession. They are hairstylists at Northland Beauty Salon in Midland. "My whole life has been in and around beauty shops," Ms. Cooke said. "My dad and husband both sold beauty supplies. It was the only thing I knew, the only thing I was ever around."

Although the career of hairstylist is becoming a family tradition, Mrs. Reed said her baby could be "whatever he wants ... His daddy says he's going to be President."

Grandparents' role changing with times

WASHINGTON (AP) — Longer life expectancies, higher marriage rates, varying birthrates and more women in the work force have changed the roles grandparents play, says Christopher Hayes, director of The Catholic University of America's Center for the Study of Pre-Retirement and Aging.

"Today's family patterns reflect decades of social and economic change," he says. "Consider a classic image from American folklore: several generations of a middle-class family gather at the dinner table as a white-haired grandmother, her husband beside her, proudly presents the Thanksgiving turkey."

Such Norman Rockwell portraits of harmonious, multigenerational family life may have been the norm 40 or 50 years ago, Hayes says. Then, many Americans spent their lives in the towns where they had been born and raised. But the picture has changed, he points out.

Today's grandparents include full-time Wall Street investment bankers, retired Detroit steelworkers and Sunbelt nursing home residents." All of them can make significant contributions to society, Hayes says.

"We've developed means of prolonging life. The challenge facing us is to improve the quality of that life by examining the role of the grandparent in the family and the role of the elderly in society."

"Baby boomers" will have to find ways to meet that challenge, he adds, because they will be elderly in the next 20 to 50 years.

"Families should discuss what part grandparents can, should and want to play in their grandchildren's lives," Hayes advises. "Parents are often too tired from earning a living to respond to all their children's needs. Grandparents, who may have more free time and patience than do parents, can fill the gap. Because parents are the disciplinarians, children may find it easier to talk to their grandparents than to their mothers and fathers."

Hospital tours spare siblings 'surprises'

CHICAGO (AP) — When Susan Stone was eight months pregnant with her second child, she didn't prepare her 2-year-old daughter for the newborn by telling her about the stork or the cabbage patch.

Instead, she took her daughter, Jessica, to the hospital and explained where she would give birth to the new baby.

"I was anxious about her reaction to the new baby and I felt like I wanted to do all I could to make it easier for her. It made me feel better that I was able to help her," Mrs. Stone said. "I feel that if you're a close family, you include them (the children) in everything, no matter how old they are."

Prentice Women's Hospital and Maternity Center, part of Chicago's Northwestern Hospital, now offers its "Tike Hike" hospital tour for young brothers and sisters-to-be.

The children listen to a recording of a baby's heartbeat, visit a nursery and view labor and delivery rooms, said spokeswoman Pat Miller.

Programs teaching children about the process of birth are now common nationwide. They help families grow closer and alleviate sibling competition that can cause trouble, especially in families with children close in age, said Michael K. Meyerhoff, administrative director of the Center for Parent Education in Newton, Mass.

"Sometimes it (sibling rivalry) can lead to a child scalding to death another child, or beating them to death," said Meyerhoff, who has led workshops nationally on infant and toddler education.

"These are freaky cases, but it's an extreme case of a common problem," he said.

Meyerhoff said sibling rivalry usually leads only to wild households as children vie for attention.

The Prentice program attempts to "remove the mystique and fear" felt by children at the arrival of a new brother or sister, Mrs. Miller said. "They see where mommy and baby's going to be."

People Finders magazine publishes listings of lost loves

By IVAN SHARPE
Hearst Feature Service

In the photograph in "People Finders," Cynthia Lynn Sumpter is a cute 6-year-old with blond hair and a mischievous grin. Her mother, Linda Hawks, will never forget her smile, although it has been 10 painful years since she last saw her daughter. One morning, Cynthia disappeared. Her mother has been looking for her only child ever since.

"As the years go by, it makes me feel stronger. If she were dead, I think they would have found her by now," said Hawks from her home in Pocatello, Ida.

"People Finders" is a new Batavia, Ill.-based monthly magazine compiled by technical researcher Blair Hallenstein and his brother, Craig, a clinical psychologist. They launched the publication after realizing the staggering number of people who are looking for lost children, runaways, birth parents, friends from the past and former lovers. The brothers spent months advertising their venture in the personal columns of newspapers across the country, and the slim, black-and-white $1 magazine went on sale this month.

"The results so far are exciting," he said. "We heard yesterday from three people who had found leads to people they were looking for through the magazine. We were sold out the first day, and all week long the phone's been ringing off the hook. The subscriptions are running real well. We're putting the second issue together right now, and it's going to be much bigger."

The pages of "People Finders" don't make exciting reading. Most of the advertisements are straightforward, fact-filled pleas for information.

Donna Hahner of Los Angeles, for instance, is looking for a lost love she met on vacation in Corfu in 1970, as well as a former classmate.

"It's a long shot, but it would be exciting to hear from them after so long," said the 32-year-old production manager for a rock magazine publisher. "I think the magazine is a very good idea."

A casual reader can find humor as well as pathos in the ads.

"Just because I'm married now doesn't mean we can't still be friends," Craig suggests optimistically to Debbie.

In another ad, Christine tells Barry, "Reading the Bible with you on our first date was a time to always remember."

The largest section is adoptees looking for their real parents, and vice versa. A woman, seeking information about her mother, pleads, "Do not want to disrupt her new family. Just want to let her know that I am OK and what a great person I turned out to be."

The most poignant section, however, because of its photographs of smiling youngsters — some barely out of infancy — is Missing Children.

"The cases of missing or exploited children have become a national tragedy," Hallenstein says.

Last year, Congress voted $10 million to set up a National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, with a toll-free hot line. Several organizations, such as Child Find, have been set up to help parents find their lost children. One insurance company is offering missing child insurance. For $288 a year, the company will provide parents who lose their children with a private investigator for up to 70 days, up to $5,000 for counseling, up to $50,000 in reward money and up to $10,000 for travel and living expenses as the parents search.

For anguished parents, as the months slip by in misery, the slim odds of seeing their offspring again are ignored. They take hope whenever a long-missing person turns up, such as Steven Staynor of Merced, Calif., who was kidnapped and held for seven years by child molester Kenneth Parnell. And this month, 13-year-old Robert Smith, whose photograph appears in "People Finders" next to Cynthia Lynn Sumpter's picture, turned up in Rhode Island after being kidnapped in April 1983 from his Long Beach, Calif., home. David R. Collins, an ex-convict with two dozen aliases, is charged with molesting him and keeping the boy as his "son" after reportedly luring him away from home by giving him money to play video games.

Peers play role in childrens' social skills development

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — As more and more preschool children enter day-care facilities, peer groups are expanding their roles as shapers of social skills, says a Purdue University child development specialist in the school of consumer and family sciences.

"As youngsters spend more time with their peers — and less with parents — they'll be more dependent on learning social skills away from home," says Dr. Gary Ladd, associate professor of child development and family studies.

Ladd believes peer acceptance is especially important for children: "Peer acceptance is not defined as 'popularity,' but merely a child's ability to get involved with a group, as well as the quality of interactions on the playground and in the classroom."

While a few youngsters seem naturally adept at such social skills, Ladd says everyday social give-and-take requires practice for most children.

One reason Ladd emphasizes the importance of positive peer relationships is that "many children with interpersonal problems tend to carry them into adulthood." Problematic peer relationships, in fact, are among the best predictors of later maladjustments, Ladd notes.

"Use of force or aggression is one of the main indicators of peer rejection," says the professor, who suggests this is one type of behavior parents should generally be concerned about.

"There are really two social behaviors to worry about in children," Ladd says. "The first is the child who is largely withdrawn and often neglected by other children; the second is the aggressive youngster who is abrasive to his peers — especially if the child uses physical force."

Children in the aggressive category, Ladd observes, seem to be at greater risk for various interpersonal problems in adolescence and adulthood, including juvenile delinquency. Youngsters who are consistently withdrawn or neglected by peers, on the other hand, are more likely to develop a pattern of school avoidance or truancy.

Ladd says one reason peer-group experience is invaluable is its role in teaching children lifelong social skills, such as assertiveness and conflict resolution.

"In our society, we don't allow children to 'argue' with adults, so the only way a child can learn some forms of assertiveness is through interaction with other children," he explains.

Ladd says peer groups also teach "affiliative skills" — developing and negotiating relationships.

"Childhood friendships are among the few places a child can learn to value another individual as a friend and learn to maintain a relationship," he says. In such a relationship the child can also learn about reciprocity, compromise and intimacy, he adds.

"Because of the strong academic focus that permeates the elementary and high school years," he points out, "this (preschool) may be one of the few times in the child's education where social development is explicitly fostered or promoted."

CHANGING

Hayes doesn't deny that grandparents have earned the right to their own time and space. The different generations of a family should candidly discuss what involvement each generation wants and needs from the others, he suggests. The family should discuss how the grandparents' roles would change after a disruption, such as divorce, illness, death or relocation.

Divorce can create serious problems for grandparents who have played a significant role in their grandchildren's lives, says Hayes. The grandparents related to the parent who does not gain custody may lose all contact with their grandchildren.

Several states recognize the legal rights of grandparents to maintain ties with their grandchildren.

"Families should foster the positive aspects of the grandparent-grandchild relationship. By associating with their grandparents, young children can see the potential of older adulthood. Through stories and photographs, grandparents can enrich their grandchildren's awareness of events such as the Depression, daily life in another country and immigration."

Grandparents can impart cultural, religious and social values to their grandchildren, Hayes points out.

"Immigrants who worked at skilled trades can pass on the lore of dying crafts such as stone carving and cabinet making to grandchildren raised with microcomputers and mass-produced furniture.

"Frequently, the children of immigrants are caught up in the race to become 'Americanized.' If ethnic and minority groups pass on their heritage to their grandchildren through oral histories, recipes and reminiscences, they perform a useful service."

For the grandparent isolated from family or for the elderly who are childless, homebound or institutionalized, foster grandparent and adopt-a-grandparent programs offer valuable opportunities for communication, Hayes says.

"The elderly adults in such programs develop vital links to the community, and the young people, many of whom have no other contact with the aged, often begin to question their parents about older adulthood and their parents' plans for it," Hayes says.

SIBLINGS

Meyerhoff said although it was important to ease a child's fear about what happens to mother in the hospital, he cautioned parents against expecting too much from sibling education programs for children under 3 years old.

For those children, Meyerhoff said, "all the explaining in the world won't make a bit of difference."

"For a child of 18 months, love and attention are very closely tied and no matter how much you explain, it's going to have virtually no meaning," he said.

Meyerhoff also explained that sibling rivalry problems often take parents by surprise because they tend to first appear months after a birth.

"A newborn child is no threat to the older sibling, but in about six or seven months, when the infant is crawling around and the parents have to spend more time with the new baby, that's when the older one feels neglected," Meyerhoff said. "All hell breaks loose and parents can't figure out what happened."

Meyerhoff advised parents to handle sibling rivalry by providing a half hour daily of undivided attention to the older child.

"A lot of parents feel like they're failures because there are problems, but in a way, sibling rivalry is normal because it means that the other child was given a loving environment," he said.

Group helps track missing children

MERCED, Calif. (AP) — A 12-year-old schoolgirl's essay about her greatest desires and fears prompted her mother to start an organization that could help track missing children.

"One of her fears was she would be kidnapped and would never see her mommy again," said Cindy Highfill. "That put a real fear in me."

The Merced woman's answer was to found Children of America. In addition to running public education sessions, volunteers take children's fingerprints and assemble files listing their physical characteristics, medical histories and other background.

"What we want to do is teach kids and parents to be aware of the problems that exist and what they can do," Ms. Highfill said. "People are very uneducated about the seriousness of this. They need to be educated."

Statistics show that about 2 million children are reported missing in the United States each year. More than 90 percent are runaways, about 100,000 involve parental abductions and another 50,000 are criminal kidnappings.

About 90 percent of the missing youngsters are eventually found, but the rest are never located.

The background information collected by Children of America is kept confidential and can be released only with written permission.

"All our files are private, and we keep them here in the office locked up," Ms. Highfill said. "A lot of people are worried if they register their children, anyone who wants to get their hands on the information can do so, and that isn't correct."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Halley's Comet is returning later this year, the first visit since 1910, with a celestial show that is expected to attract considerable attention.

Unfortunately, the comet will not be as spectacular at it has sometimes been in the past, but careful viewers in the United States will be able to get a glimpse of it starting in late summer or fall.

To help those interested in tracking down the sight, the editors of Sky & Telescope magazine have put together a booklet on the comet, discussing its history and telling how best to get a look at it.

Copies of the booklet, "Mr. Halley's Comet," can be purchased for $2 by writing to Mr. Halley's Comet, Sky & Telescope, 49 Bay State Road, Cambridge, Mass., 02238.

Epcot Center: Disney's theme park made for adults

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

CNS Photo

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The strangest thing about walking around Epcot Center, the 260-acre extravaganza of exhibits and rides on international and futuristic themes that is the latest addition to Walt Disney World in Florida, is not the bizarre sensation of being in a stage-set version of France one moment and Morocco the next. What is much stranger than that is how, after but a few minutes, all of this rampant architectural make-believe no longer seems so strange at all — how this place in which you prance from an English pub into a Chinese pagoda without missing a beat begins to feel almost normal.

And that is the real giveaway that this is a Walt Disney creation we are talking about, and not just any old place. For no organization has done better than Walt Disney at creating a potent fantasy architecture in our time, in convincing us that almost any kind of architectural setting is real and credible. If Disney's inventions at Disneyland in Anaheim, Calif., and at the Magic Kingdom, the theme park that is the heart of Walt Disney World in Lake Buena Vista, Fla., could be said to have made fantasy architecture viable, Epcot carries it one step further.

EPCOT IS A CURIOUS mix of two somewhat disconnected sections: Future World, a set of pavilions with rides and exhibits on the theme of scientific discovery and the future; and World Showcase, pavilions which are intended to display the culture, food and wares of 10 nations. Future World is essentially an expanded version of the old Tomorrowland in the Magic Kingdom, but more ambitious and more frankly educational; World Showcase is altogether new, and certainly from the standpoint of architecture is like nothing the Disney organization or anyone else has ever done.

It is probably like a World's Fair more than it is like anything else, but that does not really explain it either, for a world's fair generally has a certain chaos to it; no matter how rigid the overall guidelines, international pavilions always seem to operate more or less according to their own rules. At Epcot, on the other hand, there is only one set of rules, architectural and otherwise, and they are Disney's. There may be an Eiffel Tower over the French pavilion and a Mayan pyramid in the Mexican one, but there is still an eerie sameness that reverberates through the whole place.

NEITHER OF THE disparate parts of Epcot is precisely what the late Walt Disney had in mind when he envisioned the Environmental Prototype Community of Tomorrow as the next phase in the development of the 28,000-acre site the Disney organization owns in Lake Buena Vista. It was Disney's dream to create an actual town of the future — a full-time, living community in which the Disney organization's skill in adapting advanced technology could be demonstrated on a wide scale. The company that made the monorail work for mass transportation, Disney reasoned, ought to be able to do just as well with the latest ideas in housing, schools, shopping and office design — and the huge site in central Florida was just the place to try.

Disney died in 1966, before even the Magic Kingdom, the first phase of Walt Disney World, was complete. Planning for Epcot did not begin to reach a serious point until after the Magic Kingdom's opening in 1971, and by then, it was clear that Disney's dream was perhaps too visionary — and that what the Disney organization really knew best, even more than technology, was entertainment. And so the plan for the next phase of development of the Disney property shifted, keeping as its name the acronym of Disney's original idea as a memorial to him, but becoming something much more along the lines of a huge, permanent world's fair.

AND THAT IS WHAT opened on Oct. 1, 1982 — a $1-billion complex that is two-and-a-half times the size of the Magic Kingdom. Epcot Center has served, Disney spokesmen say, not only to attract significant numbers of new tourists but also to add at least a day to the average visitor's stay at Walt Disney World.

Although Epcot is far and away the most unusual work of architecture the Disney organization has ever produced — and Disney does most of its designing by itself, though outside firms occasionally provide backup for its staff designers — the initial impression the complex gives is stark. Instead of the Victorian fantasy of Main Street with a turreted castle beyond, which is the lively introduction to Disneyland and the Magic Kingdom, there is not much visible from the main gate of Epcot except a huge sphere of aluminum, rising 180 feet into the air and set 16 feet off the ground on six pylons. The sphere, which is called, with unacknowledged debt to Buckminster Fuller, Spaceship Earth, is solid, but its surface is made up of hundreds of triangular panels making a corrugated pattern.

THE SPHERE is so big it can be seen from miles away on the Disney property, and it is said to be visible on a clear day from a plane flying along either of Florida's coasts, a good 60 miles distant. Its main purpose seems to be symbolic — like much of the Disney architecture; it seems futuristic, although no one can say exactly why. The real future it seems to call to mind is a vision of it out of the past, sort of a Buck Rogers city.

Inside the sphere is one of the five ride-through exhibits in the Future World section of Epcot, this one a history of communication presented by AT&T and created by the Disney organization. It is technically brilliant, with superbly crafted audio-animatronic figures from cave men to computer operators. But it is so relentlessly rapid in its rush through history that it makes a Cliffs notes outline seem like reading all of Gibbon. One moment the Roman Empire is ruling the world, the next second it is over, and we are on to an audio-animatronic figure of Michelangelo on his back painting the Sistine Chapel ceiling — and from there to lasers, with the narration full of talk of destiny and uncharted seas.

MUCH FRESHER are some of the exhibits in some of the blander buildings — the almost warehouse-like structures that house the rest of the Future World pavilions. A pavilion called The Land, sponsored by Kraft, has a 13-minute boat ride through experimental agricultural areas set within the building itself; Journey into Imagination, presented by Kodak, has a remarkable three-dimensional film as well as a ride designed to explain the nature of the process of imagination — and, on an outside terrace, a set of fountains in which jets of water leap in great arcs, like flying fish, from one pool to another.

Other sections of Future World include pavilions on motion and energy, with a similar mix of rides, exhibits and films, and a pair of crescent-shaped buildings called Communicore, which is Epcot-ese for Community Core. Here are not only information facilities but also computer and video games on a high, which is to say educational, level.

The layout of Epcot, like that of the Magic Kingdom, is roughly symmetrical — Disney designers have always leaned toward traditional city planning, and it is blessedly easy to understand. The buildings of Future World, with Spaceship Earth always visible as an orienting symbol at the center, fill all of the near side of a large lagoon; the 10 pavilions of the World Showcase are set around the lagoon itself. The lagoon is so large that the promenade around it, connecting the pavilions, is 1.3 miles long. It can be walked or traversed by double-decker bus; there are also ferryboats crossing the lagoon.

THE PAVILIONS are really best thought of as a single phenomenon, different through each of them is, for they are all really stage sets more than they are actual works of architecture. (You can see this most clearly from the rear, the service entrances where visitors do not go. From this side the World Showcase looks like a mass of warehouses or industrial buildings, the only oddity being the occasional intrusion of a mock Eiffel Tower or some other such symbol into the vista.) If they have any direct ancestor, it is the Belgian Village from the 1964 New York World's Fair — one of the few times in recent world's fair history in which a national exhibit was conceived as a replication and summation of that nation's architectural identity.

To speak of these Epcot Center buildings as stage sets is not to denigrate them, for they are among the most remarkable stage sets ever created — indeed, at their best they are not only impressive but quite endearing, and they are the farthest thing in the world from cheap. No one does it as well as Disney; these buildings are done with enormous sensitivity to detail. The French building not only has a good restaurant with more of the feel of a real Parisian bistro to it than almost any such place in New York (and a lovely little neon sign that is precisely right); it also has an exquisite "street" of French facades that contains an Art Nouveau bookshop. The exhibit here is a multi-screen film of France, far better than most travel films not only because it is utterly spectacular visually but also because of its background of classical music by French composers.

THE MOROCCO PAVILION took nine tons of tile, most of it hand-carved by artisans brought from North Africa to central Florida. There is a replica of the Koutoubia Minaret, the famous prayer tower in Marrakesh, at the entrance; within are alleyways and a courtyard of a typical Fez building, once again done with startling accuracy. As in most of the pavilions, there is a restaurant, and it is worth noting that virtually all of the World Showcase restaurants, however exotic their cuisine, follow Disney policy and offer children's menus.

Japan is represented by a complex of buildings with a pagoda tower, a gate, a small courtyard and a large building based loosely on the Imperial Palace in Kyoto. Within are shops and restaurants ranging from a fast-food shop to a dining room, similar in concept to the Benihana restaurants.

For the United States, there might have been a problem in choosing a national architecture. Should it be the Spanish colonial of the Southwest? The Georgian colonial of the Eastern states? The Beaux-Arts of the nation's great public buildings, or, perhaps most uniquely American, the skyscraper style of its 20th-century cities? Georgian won hands down, it would seem — the style of Williamsburg is the architecture most easily packaged into a simple image, and so that is what makes up the building that houses the American Adventure, the only World Showcase Pavilion with a title rather than just a national label. Other things distinguish the American pavilion, too — it is right on the central axis of the lagoon, directly opposite the Spaceship Earth sphere, and it alone contains no retail shops, Disney officials presumably having wished not to tarnish the American image with commercialism. (For diners, however, this pavilion offers only fast food, a curious statement about the national cuisine.)

IT IS ALL SILLY, and it is all completely endearing. There is no question that all of this instant geography is glib in the extreme, and it enforces the mistaken asumption that a national culture is discreet, definable, and instantly graspable, not to mention that it is frozen at a particular point in time, and that culture has to do with objects and physical settings as much as ideas. None of these things are true, of course — if only culture were so definable, if only it were true that one could grasp the difference between China and Germany by thinking of one as a place where they drink tea and sit beside red columns and pagodas, and the other as a place where they drink beer and have Romanesque arches.

Why, then, if it is all simplistic and glib, is Epcot so pleasant anyway? Part of it is the sheer skill with which this whole place has been crafted. It may be soulless in a certain way, but it is stunning. And the Disney organization also understands the pleasure inherent in any make-believe, particularly make-believe based on miniaturization. It has a particular amiability that is like nothing else. It is real, much more real, say, than the utter fakery of a hotel lobby in Las Vegas. Yet at the same time it is not real at all; it is a kind of toy. The whole place has that toy-like quality of any perfect model — it is little and delicate, and its very closeness to the real thing comes off as cute.

New Las Vegas hotels opt for quiet elegance

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LAS VEGAS — What is Las Vegas without slot machines, blackjack, bingo, beautiful show girls and high rollers?

It's the Alexis Park, a splendid new hotel resort that's off The Strip, doesn't put on the dog with splashy dinner shows and is making out like Caesars only without the glitz.

Without argument, the Alexis Park is the peachiest resort hotel to appear in Las Vegas since the first high roller stumbled into town. Low-rise and low-key, it comes off like a stunning oasis smack in the center of jack rabbit land.

Before developer Robert H. Schulman of Agoura, Calif., made his entrance the site was a dust bowl, drier than Salt Lake City on a Sunday, the habitat of lizards as well as jack rabbits. Never mind that it is less than five minutes by car from The Strip and only a few minutes off Paradise Avenue.

All it took to transform it into a shimmering oasis was 40 million bucks. Schulman had workers cut channels for a series of streams that flow across all 19 acres. Then they fashioned waterfalls and trucked in a couple of hundred palm trees. To give it a sense of desolation, workers scattered boulders helter-skelter. The fact that they're plastic boulders makes no difference. Without a sledgehammer, who can tell?

SCHULMAN DESCRIBES his resort as a "Mediterranean oasis in a neon desert."

No flashing lights here, no electric polish. Just green grass and the relaxing murmur of waterfalls. What with low-rise, whitewashed buildings, it comes off like a slice of the Costa del Sol. The tallest unit stands two stories high and it is strictly the suite life. That is to say, there are no rooms at the Alexis. Only suites. Suites with Jacuzzi baths, mini-bars, fireplaces, satellite TV and vanities like those tucked away in a film star's dressing room. Some feature lofts with pedestals for the Jacuzzis.

Dazzling? I can tell you this: It's the first time I've visited Las Vegas that I'm not anxious to leave. Before, I've always parked the frame in one of those Strip hotels where I find it frightfully depressing, elbowing one's way across an immense casino to get to the restaurant or else back to one's room. The scene never changes. It could be the evening before. Or midnight. Or 4 o'clock in the morning.

And that's exactly why Bob Schulman decided to gamble on a hotel in Las Vegas without a casino. He figured there are legions of vacationers like himself who are looking for a place to relax after rolling the dice.

SCHULMAN WAS TIRED of the glitter, the noise, hotel employees hustling a buck.

"Even gamblers get sick of the old atmosphere," Schulman insists.

So far, it appears to make sense. The Alexis Park is 100 percent full most weekends. Schulman says his guests tell him they feel like they're in Palm Springs or Hawaii.

"I have absolutely no competition," he declares.

This isn't to say, of course, that Schulman won't buckle under one day and surrender to the temptation of establishing a casino. But right now it appears improbable. Vacationers who love Las Vegas but hate casinos are filling his suites. Moreover, The Strip hotels send their overflow business to the Alexis Park because they know the Alexis isn't competing for the gambling buck.

The Alexis Park employs a mostly young crowd. Nearly everyone from the bellman to the cashiers, and they are eager to please. It's a far cry from the impersonal approach one encounters at other Las Vegas hotels. From 5,000 applicants, the Alexis people chose 400 employees.

The coffee shop is about as garish as the hotel gets. And even it is subdued by Las Vegas standards. Green, white and rose awnings. A brass fan spinning in the ceiling. A scattering of planters.

For active types, the Alexis provides lighted tennis courts, an aerobics fitness center, spas, a jogging track and a nine-hole putting green.

THE ALEXIS IS particularly busy on weekends. The switchboard lights up like Fremont Street on Saturday night. A recorded voice with a pleasant British accent begs the caller to be patient. "All our lines are busy; please hold."

The cheapest suite goes for $70 a day, the highest costs $275. Or there's a "suite dreams" package that figures out to $84.50 per guest (double occupancy) and features free cocktails, in-room flicks and the choice of a rental car or a complimentary show at a Strip hotel.

For those who come to Las Vegas with stars in their eyes, a gazebo awaits in the garden for wedding ceremonies. All this and not a single slot machine on the entire 19 acres.

If the Alexis is sold out and you're turned off by lobbies with casinos, tell the cabbie to take you to the Golden Nugget. In downtown Las Vegas? Glitter Gulch? Affirmative. As anyone who has ever set foot in Las Vegas knows, downtown is not exactly Bel-Air or Palm Beach. It's more like Tijuana with roulette and blackjack. Enough neon is burned each 24 hours to light up a Third World nation. Signs that flash with names like "Trader Bill's," "Discount Souvenirs" and "Sassy Sally's."

The Nugget, though, is an exception. As the hotel's flack put it: "It's an oasis, a little island."

YES, OF COURSE he's paid to say those things, but this time he's on target. Earlier the Nugget was as tawdry as its neighbors. Gobs of neon. Low rollers crawling over each other. Bums at the door. But the big gun at the Nugget, Steve Wynn, is a classy dude and he hires classy people like Barry Shier, formerly of New York's Waldorf-Astoria and together they envision the Nugget as a five-star hotel. Not yet perhaps, but soon.

When Wynn took over the Nugget in 1973 there was only a casino, no hotel. So he built one. He started with 579 rooms; today there are only 527. This is because of his penchant for upgrading the Nugget by knocking down walls to expand the accommodations.

Last spring he added a $55 million tower that contains a cabaret, a gourmet restaurant, a theater-ballroom, a health spa and 27 luxury suites. At the same time he got rid of the neon blazing outside, replaced the tacky porte-cochere with one of those fancy Beverly Hills-style canopies and unveiled a lobby that smacks of wealth. No roulette, no craps tables.

There's not even a single slot machine in sight. Just tons of marble, beveled glass, Gay '90s chandeliers, banks of mums and a red carpet down which the likes of Frank Sinatra and Willie Nelson stroll to entertain the Nugget's customers.

THE HOTEL SPENDS $40,000 a month on flowers and operates a fleet of stretched limousines for the pleasure of whales (high rollers) who occupy those 27 spectacular suites in the new tower, and it's all on the house. Butlers, maids, bartenders. Just ring, baby. At the VIP desk in the lobby, a 20-year-old former beauty contestant from Virginia makes dinner and nightclub reservations for the hotel's big spenders.

Meanwhile, their wives are chauffeured around town to fashion shows hosted by the likes of Saks Fifth Avenue.

BARBADOS

The small pear-shaped island of Barbados, at the extreme eastern edge of the West Indies archipelago, is a friendly place. It is noticably British, with a long history of social and political stability. Of course, it also has the pink and white beaches, year-round 80-degree weather, warm, aquamarine waters and duty-free shopping that are the staples of a Caribbean holiday. However, Barbados is more than that. Anyone who ventures off to explore discovers fine Jacobean mansions, a pirate's castle, hilltop parish churches, limestone caves, botanical gardens and some of the most stunning coastal scenery anywhere in the West Indies. Ultimately, however, what impresses one most about Barbados is its friendly people.

Though customs may vary, climates differ and languages contrast, the joys, memories and excitement of any vacation are of different people and different places. Wherever your travel dreams take you, your pleasures can be enhanced with the attention to travel arrangements by the professionals at LONES TRAVEL SERVICE, 319 W. Texas, street level in the Permian Bldg. We are the friendly people with the travel experience to send you anywhere in the world. Tel. 682-8645. Open 8-5 Mon. - Fri., Sat. by appt.

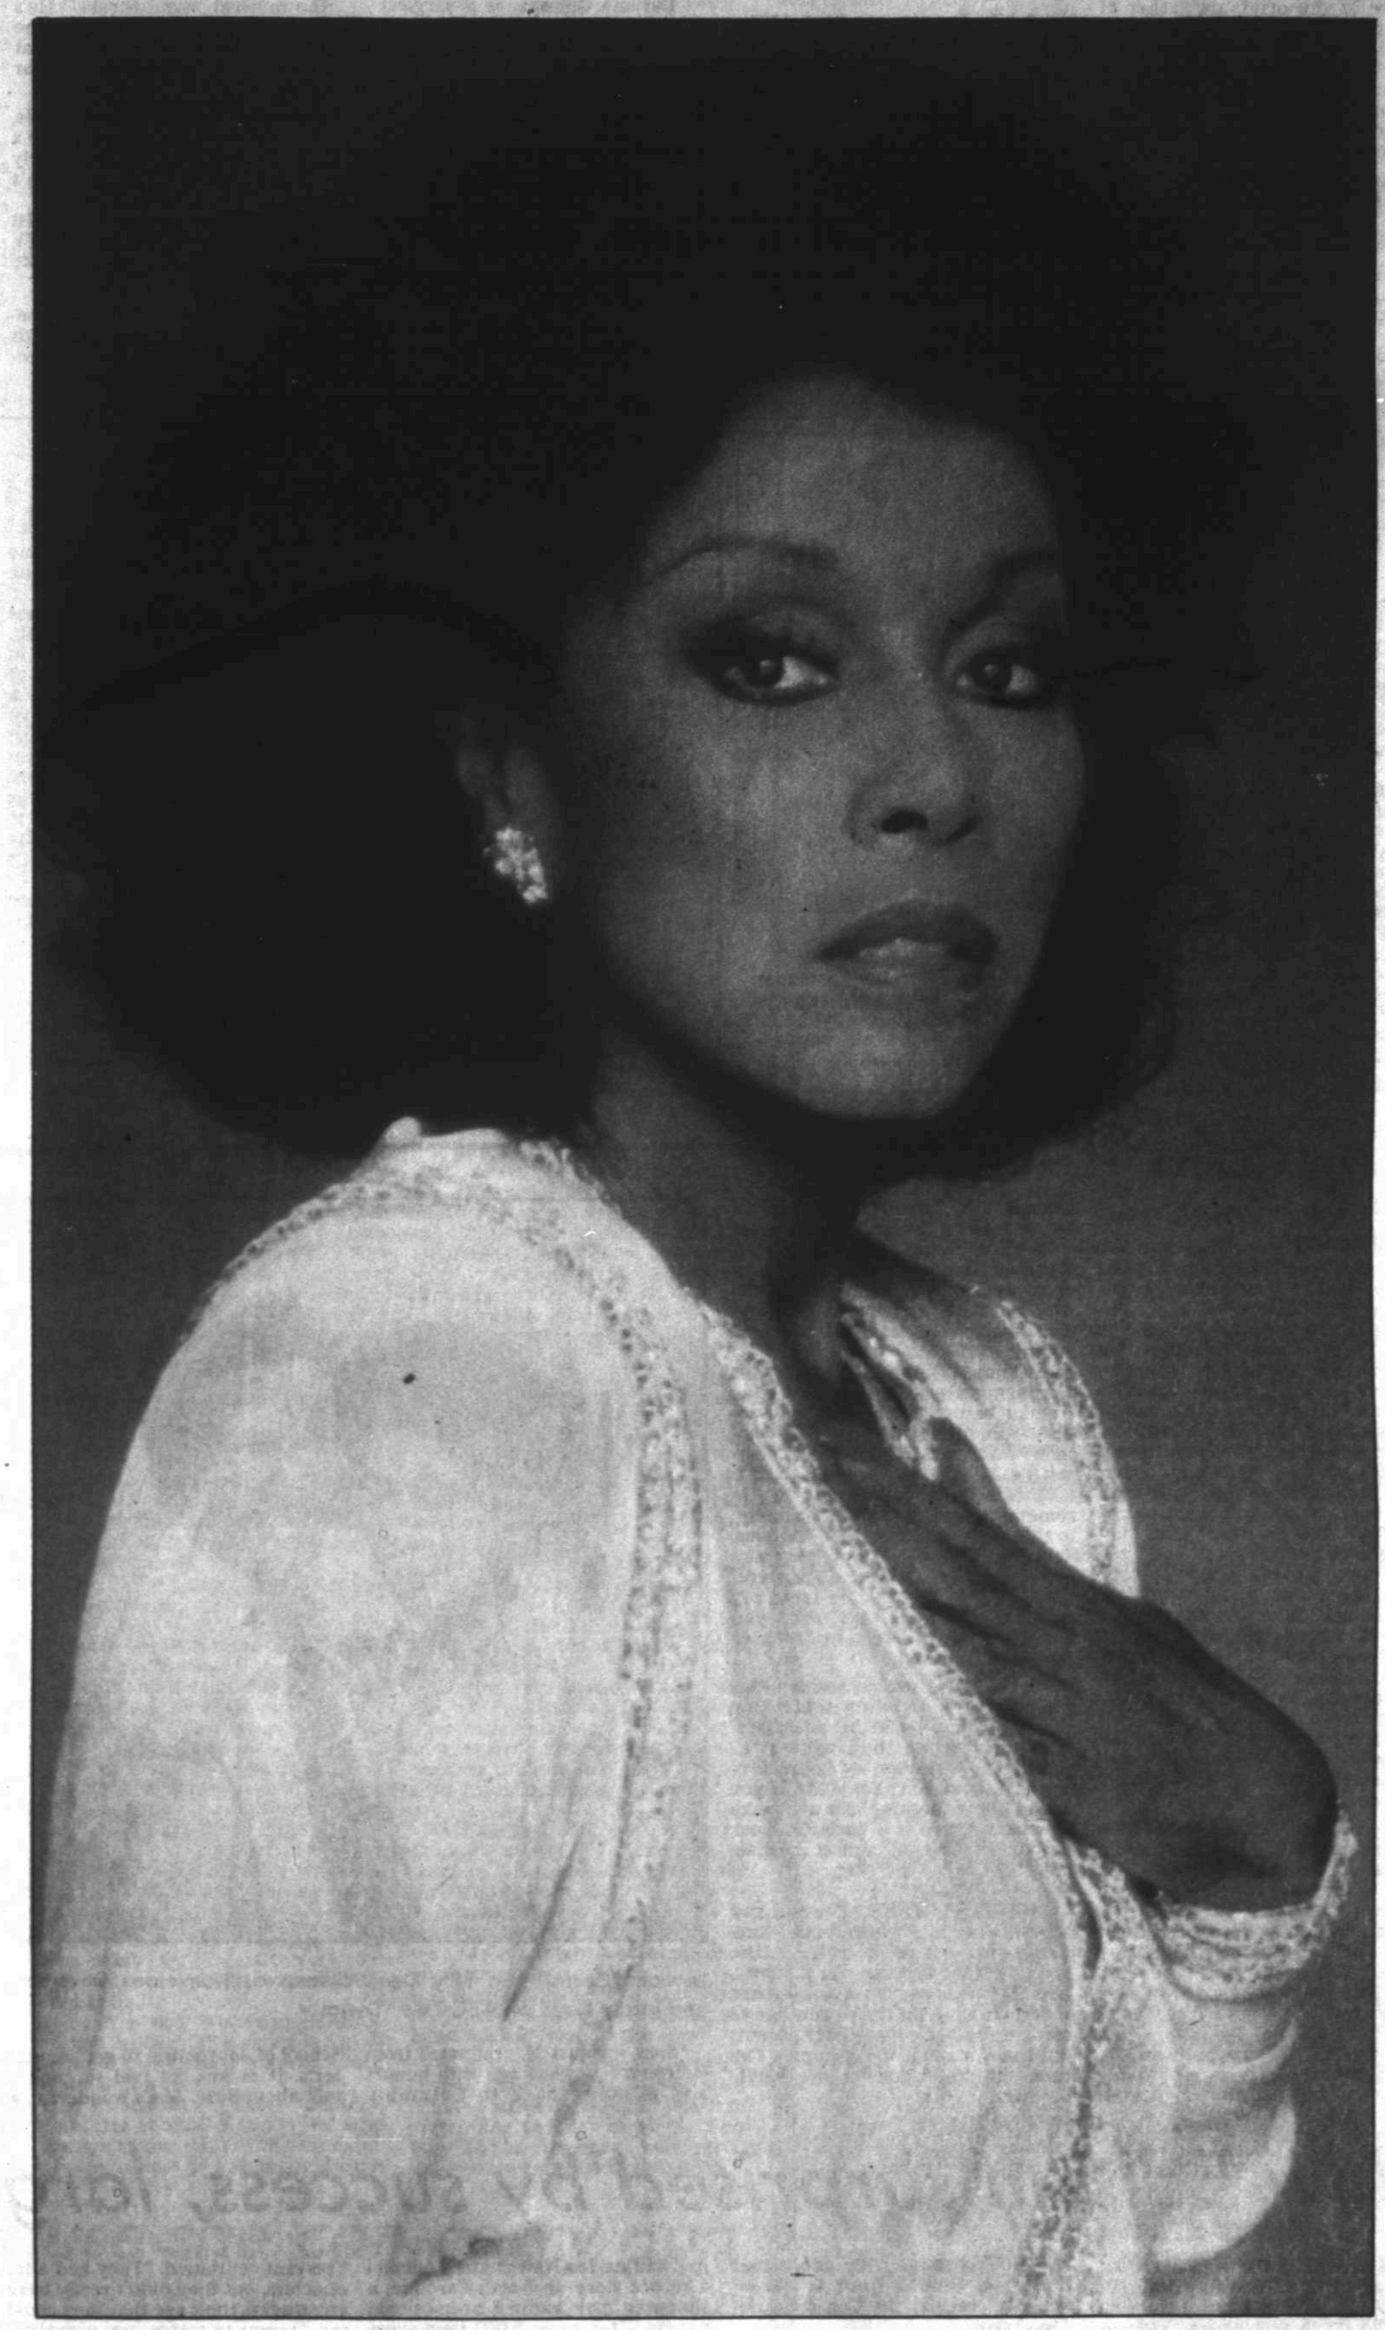
Carroll: Strong sense of self



Actress Diahann Carroll plays the role of Dominique Devereaux in ABC-TV's nighttime soap, "Dynasty."

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

She is a marvelously independent woman, Diahann Carroll, beautiful of course, but also intelligent, poised and capable of such feeling that her words tingle.

To begin with, there is her whole new career (she who has been an Oscar nominee, Las Vegas headliner and star of her own Emmy-nominated series, "Julia") on "Dynasty" as Dominique Deveraux, whom she herself dubs as "television's first black bitch." How does she like the role and the highly controversial series?

"I love it! They are giving this character such enormous credibility, I adore going to work. The show deals with a glamorous, interesting world and Dominique fits easily into that — thank God, and thank God the writers feel this way about her.

"It has now been revealed that I am John Forsythe's half sister — his father had an affair for many years with my mother — so her ambition to become powerful and wealthy is justified. Then, when she has become as powerful as anyone connected with the Carrington name and learns that her half-brother is in financial trouble, she has decided to appear.

"This is not difficult for me as an actress. I can identify with Dominique. I think there was something in my youth that made me feel it was necessary to be powerful and wealthy and to separate myself in dealing with a man's world, separate myself from my feminine mystique.

She continues, "I decided to deal with business on a very realistic level. I wanted to sing and be an actress and my original approach was deeply emotional. Then, when I began to realize that this was a money-making business, not just a means of personal expression (remember, I started in this business at 15) I decided to be a part of it in much the same way and for the same reasons as Dominique.

"ALSO, IN HER marriage, I can identify. She loves Brady Lloyd (played by Billy Dee Williams), but the struggle she has is that of so many women who have the brains and ability to work in the corporate world, as opposed to being a wife primarily concerned with the needs of her husband. That's not the way she operates."

It's not the way Ms. Carroll operates either. She grew up in a home with such loving parents, believing that every nice girl should be married. She stepped from being their child to being the wife of personal manager Monte Kay and completely missed the young-adult period of living on her own.

And when that marriage ended..."We grew in different directions. Also I traveled too much and I was very young and felt that something was wrong. It was not, even with our daughter Suzy whom we both adored, not the kind of family situation in which I'd grown up." She simply was caught up in the whirl of show business.

For several years, there was international speculation that she would marry David Frost, then the fair-haired boy of British broadcasting. Theirs was a romance hampered by the fact that they couldn't make a move without world-wide publicity. "We did not allow the world to influence our decision," she says, looking back, "and proof that we made the correct one is that we remained friends."

The man she did marry was the love of her life, Robert DeLeon, journalist and then-managing editor of "Jet" magazine. She spent two "heavenly years" with him, being the total woman.

"He'd never asked me to give up my career, which I thought very clever of him; but immediately after our wedding, we moved to Oakland, Calif. Can you imagine trying to book a club or make a film out of Oakland? So for the first nine months, I was a housewife.

"Robert had become executive vice president of a firm approving government contracts, Suzy was in school 35 minutes away. It was gorgeous. I don't know how it would have been, to live that way forever..."

She never had a chance to find out. They moved down to Beverly Hills, she did only her summer shows, became a gourmet cook, and a totally happy woman. Then this life was shattered when her husband was killed in a car crash on the way home from a late night business meeting.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Could you please tell us what the original Mouseketeers are doing now and where they are?

The Durens
Wolcott, Conn.

A. Every year in November, nine of the originals gather at Disneyland for a reunion show — and this year is the 30th anniversary of both the park and the Mickey Mouse Club, so there should be festivities and Mouseketeers around all year. But, otherwise, an update:

Annette Funicello, of course, continued to perform, notably in the Beach Party movies of the early '60s with Frankie Avalon.

Now, a mother of three, she's been doing commercials for Skippy peanut butter that you may have seen. She has also just recorded a country and western album and filmed a TV movie, "Lots of Luck," for the Disney Channel that should air this month. She and Avalon are also developing a "Beach Party" update in which they would play the parents of a beach-loving teen.

Bobby Burgess has been touring with the stars of the "Lawrence Welk Show." Before that, he performed for 21 years on that show. To further the Welk connection, he's married to Christie Floren, Welk accordionist Myron Floren's daughter. They have three children.

Bonnie Lynn Fields is still a dancer and for the last three years has run the Lynn Fields School of Tap and the Performing Arts in Santa Monica, Calif.

Cubby O'Brien continued as a drummer and has been working with a number of stars including Bernadette Peters, Andy Williams and, for eight years, the Carpenters.

Cheryl Holdridge, the widow of Woolworth heir Lance Reventlow, remarried and now lives in Aspen, Colo., mostly, when she isn't cruising on her yacht.

Darlene Gillespie is a surgical nurse in Burbank. She's divorced and has two children.

Doreen Tracy spent a lot of time in Vietnam, entertaining the troops, and then caused a bit of a stir by posing nude for a men's magazine, wearing her mouse ears. She's now performing in her own nightclub act.

Don Agrati, otherwise known as Don Grady, spent a number of years as Robbie Douglas on the series "My Three Sons." He still performs, but his career now is more one of writing and arranging music, particularly for Saturday morning television.

Lonnie Burr is still a performer; most recently, he was in the Los Angeles production of the musical "42nd Street." He's also a writer, the author of the book "Two for the Show: Great Comedy Teams" and dramas for radio.

Sharon Baird, at 4 feet 9 inches, the smallest Mouseketeer, is still a dancer. She performs regularly on the Disney Channel. She's divorced and lives in Burbank.

Tommy Cole is a makeup artist who won an Emmy for the TV special "Backstairs at the White House."

Sherry Alberoni is a homemaker, married to a doctor, with two daughters. She's also a collector of Disney memorabilia.

Annette Funicello

Q. Could you please tell me what Victoria Principal's background is? Her name seems Spanish and I heard that she was Mexican.

An avid reader
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. No to the question about being Mexican; her film break was the role of Paul Newman's Mexican mistress in "The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean," so that's probably where the connection came from. Her father's family is Italian; her mother's, Irish. To make it even more international, she was born in Japan, where her father, an Air Force man, was stationed.

Q. Could you please tell us how old Peter Jennings is, how many children he has, how long he's been married and whether or not he has ever been on U.S. TV before?

F.G. Nelson
Philadelphia, Pa.

A. He's 46, has been married to Kati Marton, a Hungarian-born writer and former ABC Bonn bureau chief, for six years (he was also married twice before). They met in the London bureau where he was based and got to know each other when he briefed her for a reporting assignment in Belfast.

Although she was initially put off by his superglamorous image, they married a year later. They now have two children, Elizabeth, 5, and Christopher, 2.

He was on U.S. TV before, as ABC's anchor of their evening 15-minute newscast in 1965, but was considered — and he considered himself — too young for the spot. So, in 1967, he asked to step down. In the years following, though, he gained enormous respect as a foreign correspondent, and by the time he regained the anchor chair recently, he felt that this time we was ready — and comfortable with it.

Q. Could you please tell me about Pamela Hensley. Is she married?

Laurie Ames
Burbank, Ill.

A. She's 34, born and raised in Los Angeles, the daughter of actress Gail Kent (who was a roommate of the young Marilyn Monroe) and veterinarian Dr. John Hensley, who looked after William Randolph Hearst's pets. As his daughter remembers, he "was always being whisked off to San Simeon in the middle of the night by helicopter if Hearst's dachshund was sick."

She always wanted to be an actress, trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London and with Lee Strasberg in New York, but as she explains it, she couldn't get an acting job because her looks weren't right.

She did finally land a job as a model on "The New Treasure Hunt" and then as a contract player at Universal, appearing in episodes of most of their series, such as "McMillian and Wife," "Owen Marshall" and "Ironside" and in regular roles as Princess Ardala in "Buck Rogers in the 25th Century" and as Steve Kiley's bride in "Marcus Welby." They led to "Matt Houston."

Regarding her personal life: She's single now but was married briefly to a music producer a few years ago.

Pamela Hensley

DIAHANN

SHE IS NOW putting her life back together. She spoke of their two delicious years together, her joy in being Mrs. DeLeon.

But she also said, "Let me tell you that I have no plans to repeat that performance. It was a dream — Camelot — that I never expect to happen again. For one thing, out of the tragedy I have discovered for the first time that I can operate very well alone. I date, but with a difference. I stop and consider: What am I doing here? What do I want out of this? What does he want? I am only willing to go so far."

She doesn't really know whether or not she'd ever want to give as much as marriage demands again. "What I'm speaking of," she says now, "is the amount of compromise that is necessary between two people because every relationship requires compromise. Just how much are you willing to give?" The man in her life is that gentleman of the beautiful voice, Vic Damone. She is delighted to speak of him.

"A gentleman is exactly what he is and we've been together seven months. But we met 20 years ago. We're in the same business, we both do the night club tour and we've known each other forever. I don't know how our current friendship began, but I suppose it's because we're both free and decided to have dinner one night and liked each other."

She laughs. "We're both on the road a great deal, which is probably one of the reasons we're still friends." Ms. Carroll is going to have to cut back on the tour now, because of her continuing role on "Dynasty." She has found herself flying back from weekends in Montreal, Toronto or New York, arriving at midnight and due on the set early the next morning.

Damone, of course, understands her schedule. "He's a very nice human being. Thoughtful, and we have something important in common — our backgrounds. I like hearing him talk about his mom and dad.

"Stability in your home life is something very important to anyone in this business. He has had that and so have I... I realize now that the strong sense of self, the dignity and enormous security came from my parents. You need that when you are making an effort in front of thousands of people.

"When one is not successful with a performance or when something doesn't work, I can be analytical about it rather than take it as demeaning rejection — because of my basic beginning home life. If you haven't that, nothing can ever take its place. There is a basis for your personality that is almost unshakable."

SHE CONTINUES, "I've had bad times, but I can always give one hundred percent of myself. I like myself. That's necessary in this business. It's necessary in any business. A woman must have the courage to stand up and be counted. My parents did that for me and I'm hoping I've been able to do that for my daughter Suzy.

Diahann Carroll and Billy Dee Williams as Dominique Devereaux and Brady Lloyd on ABC-TV's "Dynasty."

"Suzy was just 24, graduated from college a few years ago with honors and is going back to Columbia School of Journalism to get her master's. It makes me feel so good to talk about Suzy. She's wonderful, so interested in the world. She worked for the McNeill Lehrer Report and that really sealed her fate. A gorgeous girl, inside and out, a good human being. I have a great respect for her, aside from the fact that I love her to distraction. It's frightening to love someone this much."

Suzy spends most of her time in New York, which Ms. Carroll regards as home, although now, with "Dynasty," she's spending her time in California in her home high up in the Truesdale Estates. But Ms. Carroll goes East often.

"One of my favorite relationships is that with Suzy's father. I still remember the enormous difficulty I had accepting the fact that I was going to be a divorced woman with a child. Of course that was 20 odd years ago and the attitudes have changed greatly; but once I accepted the fact that I had to separate myself from that marriage, I know that raising the child was another issue."

She explains, "I wanted my child to have a father. Fortunately, her father felt the same way; so we've raised her together and I think she's a secure person. It's been very difficult but very beautiful and Suzanne knows she's lucky to have two parents who care so much.

"Right now she is beginning to pull away. I know what she is going through. I watch her trying to come out of her cocoon, out of the nest built by her 'intensely competitive parents' as she calls us. In another year, she'll be making a break, I'm sure, to be on her own."

Ms. Carroll reflects, "Watching her is a reminder of my own growing up, my own confusion. I'm sure we'll always be close, as I am with my own mother who lives 15 minutes away from me."

Her speaking of her mother reminds me that Ms. Carroll's parents have divorced.

"YES, AFTER 37 years of the most wonderful marriage. I don't understand it. I can only think it had to do with the fact that they had a child who was in analysis — me. I went into analysis during the first marriage. A lot of verbalization took place at that time that might not have taken place had I not been in therapy. Many feelings might have remained unsaid. I have a great respect for both my parents and they are individually adjusting well."

"I've always loved working in clubs because of the direct stimulation of the audience. But on 'Dynasty' there is also immediate feedback. If a scene goes well, everyone is so thrilled!

"We are all realistic about the fact that the curious public needs new input, we're aware that we need each other. We're all old war horses. Well, let's say we're two groups — the old war horses and the kids — and both groups are great.

"I know John Forsythe's background and all the others. We've been around. We've had our touch of reality in theater and bad films and good films. We didn't just fall into Hollywood; we're a very special group. We'd be foolish not to be in love with each other. We've survived!"

New Edition surprised by success, large number of fans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About four years ago, Ralph Tresvant recalls, he and four pals barely into their teens polished up their Jackson Five routine and entered a talent contest hoping to win some money "to go to the movies or to go out and eat pizza."

The scheme worked — perhaps too well. Today, Tresvant and his colleagues in New Edition are becoming as well known as their one-time inspirations. In fact, New Edition's 1983 hit, "Candy Girl," was No. 1 on music charts at a time when Michael Jackson's "Beat It" was No. 2.

With Tresvant's silky adolescent tenor on lead, "Cool It Now" recently cracked the Top 5 on the pop charts.

So pocket money is no longer a problem for the quintet — ranging in age from 15 years old to 17 years old — who grew up together in Boston's inner city Roxbury district.

But the pizza parlors and movie palaces where they once planned to spend their windfall are off limits, because their recent public appearances have drawn fans by the thousands and caused near-riots.

In Los Angeles, 2,000 people spent the rainy Saturday after Thanksgiving waiting for New Edition outside a record store. In North Carolina, a shopping mall banned promotional events after some 5,000 teen-agers showed up for a similar in-store promotion by the band.

New Edition mania has caught a lot of people by surprise, including the group's members. But in retrospect, Tresvant has an explanation.

"The kids our age really didn't have anyone to look up to, to idolize," he said, sitting at a hotel room table with bandmates Michael Bivins and Ronald De Voe.

"The girls didn't have a group that they could go screaming after," Tresvant continued. "They had a lot of actors, but they didn't really have any singers their age that they could say, 'I want to marry him someday.' So we came in at the right time."

"We never fantasized anything like this," added Bivins, who looks younger than his 16 years but has one of the deeper voices in the group.

"We just wanted to enter for the money part, to get the prizes. That's all we were heading for. We all wanted to be known around the Boston area — the regional action — but that's as big as we wanted it, really. Then it took off nationally and it still hasn't hit us just yet."

The New Edition story as told by Tresvant is the kind of show biz fairy tale that keeps beauty pageants stocked with pretty girls hoping to be discovered by movie moguls. Tresvant, Bivins, De Voe, Bobby Brown and Ricky Bell grew up in the same housing development as pop star Donna Summer. It was an atmosphere where group singing was as competitive as basketball.

None have formal musical training; New Edition's members only sing and dance on stage. The singing, they say, is self-taught. De Voe's uncle, choreographer Brooke Payne, helped out with the body English.

In the 1981 talent show where they got their big break, they were one of 82 acts that each had five minutes to impress the judges. Only the winner was supposed to get a record deal, and New Edition came in second. But producer Maurice Starr, who sponsored the show, saw in them as potential "Jacksons of the '80s," and he had them record the "Candy Girl" single and album for the independent Streetwise label.

However, Starr did not sign the youths to a multi-album deal, so they were immediately picked up by MCA Records.

'Peril's' topless girls monotonous

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Life is fairly simple for the female characters in "The Perils of Gwendoline." The screenplay has provided them with one simple solution to any problem they might encounter.

In the face of adversity, the women in "Perils" take their shirts off.

They're thrown off a ship, so they take their shirts off. They get caught in a rainstorm, so they take their shirts off. They're thrown in a dungeon, so they take their shirts off.

Even the most ardent admirer of the anatomy of Tawny Kitaen, who plays Gwendoline, may find this unimaginative topless tease a bit montonous after a while.

"Perils" is, to put it mildly, not a good film.

The movie, like the rather silly 1968 cult film "Barbarella," is a predominantly French production based on a comic strip with a female heroine.

The primary similarity between the two films, however, is that they both constantly contrive dumb situations to deprive its female characters of their clothing.

The sketchy storyline of "Perils" basically revolves around Gwendoline's search for her father, who disappeared while traveling through Asia in pursuit of the world's rarest butterfly.

A brawny and throughly obnoxious smuggler named Willard, played by Brent Huff, reluctantly aids Gwendoline.

At this point, "Perils" seems as though it's going to be just another rip-off of "Raiders of the Lost Ark" with a big chunk of "Romancing the Stone" thrown in for good measure.

If it had kept heading in that direction, it might have just been a run-of-the-mill lousy movie.

Instead, the film descends to new depths of terribleness by taking an incomprehensible plot twist into a subterranean kingdom of scantily clad, sado-masochistic women who are heavily into bondage.

Huff's performance is simply awful. Ms. Kitaen, who showed some promise in last summer's comic "Bachelor Party," fares even worse.

It may not be entirely their fault; no actor could have completely surmounted the film's incredibly dumb dialogue and hideous plot.

The main peril posed by "The Perils of Gwendoline" is its relentless assault on the taste and intelligence of viewers.

"The Perils of Gwendoline," rated R for violence, nudity and sexual content, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

David Lee Forrest is film critic of the Reporter-Telegram.

'General Hospital' launches singers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC's super soap opera "General Hospital" is fast becoming the launching pad for pop music stardom.

First, there was Rick Springfield, who started his musical career while on the show. He soon became a top singing star.

Patti Austin's first hit, "Baby Come to Me," was No. 1 on the pop charts after it became the soap opera's love theme.

Most recently, Jack Wagner has parlayed his role as singer Frisco Jones into stardom. His ballad single, "All I Need," is No. 2 on the pop list. It's unlikely the record would have been a hit without the show.

"All I Need" was released last May to indifferent results. It didn't take fire until July 10, when it became a love theme for Frisco and his girlfriend.

Rez Band to perform at Odessa College

ODESSA — Rez Band will perform at 8 p.m. Thursday at Odessa College.

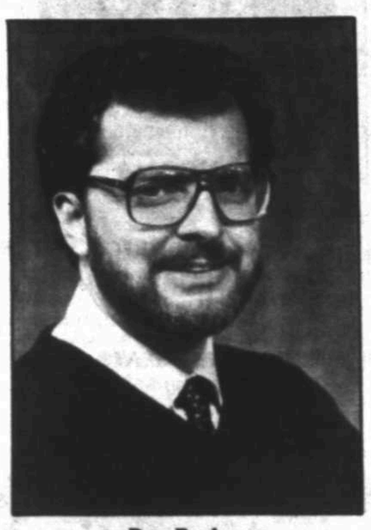
MCT offers well-balanced diet of plays

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer



Don Bachman

When the lights dim Friday at Theatre Midland for the opening of "Peter Pan," Midland Community Theatre's 1985 season officially begins.

"Part of what we're always about when we put together a season is to offer a well-balanced one to the public," says Don Bachmann, executive director for Midland Community Theatre. "That's part of the mission of any enlightened community theater."

It takes time and planning to organize a complementary season; one which reaches the largest audience. This year, MCT is offering eight major productions, including musicals, serious dramas and comedies, to subscription ticket holders.

"We've got contemporary plays, such as the noted award winner "Agnes of God," an American classic, "Harvey," a piece by Moliere and a classic musical, "Peter Pan," written in 1904, balanced against a Neil Simon musical and that makes two great musicals inside one season," Bachmann says.

A listing of the complete 1985 season includes "Peter Pan," Theatre One, Friday through March 23; "The Dining Room," Theatre Two, March 1-16; "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," Theatre One, May 3-18; "Agnes of God," Theatre One, June 7-22; "Greater Tuna," Theatre One, Sept. 6-21; "They're Playing Our Song," Theatre One, Oct. 4-26; "School for Wives," Theatre Two, Nov. 8-23; and "Harvey," Theatre One, Dec. 6-21.

This season's cost remains the same as 1984.

"Usually we only raise the prices every two years just to keep up with inflation," Bachmann says.

Available memberships include:

—a family membership for $90 which offers 24 admissions, good any time, up to eight admissions may be used on any musical;

—a regular A membership for $60 which offers 16 admissions, good any time, up to six may be used on any musical;

—a regular B membership for $50, also offers 16 admissions, good Sunday through Thursday, up to six may be used on any musical;

—an individual membership for $35 offers eight admissions and up to two may be used on any musical;

—sponsor membership offers 2 admissions and other priviledges for $200;

—sustaining memberships offers 48 admissions and other proviledges for $300;

—benefactor membership offers 60 admissions for $500 and special recognition of members;

—contributing memberships offers unlimited admissions for $1,000 and special recognition and privileges.

One of the most popular aspects of being a member is the fact that the box office opens to members three days prior to opening to the general public. A mail-in coupon is included in the newsletter Cues received by theater members, along with a calendar of box office openings and production performances.

In addition, members receive substantial discounts on other MCT affiliated programs, such as, 50 percent off on tickets to Midland College productions at Theatre Midland; 25 percent off adult acting classes; 20 percent off MCT's Cinema Series; and 17 percent off theatre school and dancing classes.

Bachmann compares the advantage in ticket price of being a member attending a production or buying single admission tickets.

The cost is $3.75 a ticket to get into a musical if you go on a Friday or Saturday night, he says. If you buy a single admission on a Friday or Saturday to see "Peter Pan," it's $10 a ticket.

"That's the cost for prime time (in the opening musical)," Bachmann says. "In 'They're Playing Our Song,' prime time cost for single admission will be $8 and for a straight (drama) play prime time cost is $6.50."

If there are six people in your group to see "Peter Pan," you're out $60, Bachmann says. If you have a regular A membership, six people can attend the musical together and the ticket holder still has 10 punches left for the rest of the season and can see anything he wants.

He pauses for a moment, then adds, "It's a fantastic buy."

People should pretend weather what they want

By ELISE BELL
King Features Syndicate

Mark Twain once said that everyone talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it. That may be true of Americans, but we have found as we travel that, in a lot of countries, people don't complain about the weather, they do something about it. They simply pretend that the weather is what it should be, not what it is, and live accordingly.

In northern Norway, for example, the sun doesn't set above the Arctic Circle during the summer months, so that there is virtually perpetual summer during most of June, July and August. But that doesn't mean there aren't many dark days with rain, gray skies and a dusky dimness that means you need a light in order to read, or even to see properly.

But in the Norwegian homes we were in, during the summer all the lights are removed from the rooms and there's not a lamp to be found anywhere in the house. On a gray overcast day, when you can't see to read, you are told, "It's summer. We don't need any lights in the summer."

No matter that everyone is groping around in the dark. Summer in northern Norway means sun all day even if it's not out.

There is the same attitude about bugs.

"We never need screens," the Norwegians say proudly. "We don't get any insects at all."

You point out the huge infestation of big black stinging flies which are invading the house through the open windows.

"They'll go right away," you are told. "That's just because of the direction of the wind at the moment. It's very unusual — but it's temporary."

The flies keep coming for days and the screenless windows remain open in fierce defiance of the facts.

In northern Norway they also close up all the indoor swimming pools during the summer, when you are supposed to swim outdoors in the lakes and fjords. The fact that the water is 57 degrees and the temperature of the air is not much higher has nothing to do with it.

Last summer we visited friends who were living in Paris. Temperatures were in the 90s and all of Paris sweltered in a heat wave. Our friend, who is not French, went to buy an electric fan for his apartment. He was unable to find one anywhere in Paris.

"We don't need electric fans," the storekeepers told him. "It never gets that hot in Paris."

Our friend pointed out that it was 94 degrees.

"Oh, that won't last. It's very unusual. Two or three days and it will get cool again.

Our friend pointed out that it had been in the 90s for a month and that there was no relief in sight. His words fell on deaf ears.

We deliberately went to Thailand during their winter — late January and early February. But we found it was in the high 80s in Bangkok and very humid. However, our Thai friends, in whose home we were staying, turned off all the air-conditioning.

"It's winter," they told us. "This heat won't last. We had a very cold day last week and it will soon be cold again."

It never was. Winter in Bangkok was on January 20. It reminded us of summer in northern Norway which is usually on July 5.

In Puerto Rico, where the temperatures remain high all year and the sun shines most of the time, the people will not go swimming during the winter months even though it is in the 70s and 80s. They look askance at tourists who plunge into the water.

They also put on dark clothes and carry black umbrellas around during what would be the winter months. A friend of ours who lived here for a couple of years has an explanation:

"It gets very boring to have sun and nice weather all the time, day after day. You begin to long for a dark, stomry, rainy day. So the people here pretend that it's winter by dressing and acting as if it were."

In England, the people simply ignore weather. They have to...so much of it is bad. Besides, the Brtish thrive on challenges. When we were in London we saw people playing tennis in the rain. I thought of how we always protect our tennis racquets carefully against any signs of the slightest dampness, but there they were, soaking wet, hitting the ball back and forth on the court.

So maybe Americans should change their attitude — stop complaining about the weather and start pretending that it's whatever they want it to be. It seems to work pretty well everywhere else in the world.

Harrold likes role because she can carry gun

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kathryn Harrold would like to be in a Western, but playing the schoolmarm or dance hall girl isn't what she has in mind.

Miss Harrold, who stars with John Getz in ABC's new cop show "MacGruder and Loud," is thinking more of being the fastest gun in the West.

Sitting in her dressing room, a badge pinned to her blue uniform, a gun on her hip, she said, "This is the first policewoman I've ever played. I've played a lot of doctors. But this was the closest I could get to a Western. I've always wanted to be in a Western. You get to carry a gun and swagger around."

In the new series, Miss Harrold and Getz are more than just police partners; they're married. The show is a blend of romantic comedy and police drama.

Working in a series is a new experience for Miss Harrold, who's starred in such movies as "Modern Romance," "The Hunter," "The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper," "The Women's Room" and "Yes, Georgio." She also played Lauren Bacall in "Bogie."

Miss Harrold said she had no intention of doing a series, but she liked the part. "I thought I could do something with the role," she said. "When they offered me the pilot I looked on it as a movie of the week.

"I didn't go into it blindly. I knew it could go to series. But there aren't that many good parts for women on television or in films. When a good part comes along you take it. What I like is that I get to do everything. When I'm a cop I can be tough and strong, all the things a feminist wants to be. In the apartment, I am warm and loving. And sexy."

The pilot was telecast following ABC's Super Bowl, and now runs as a regular Tuesday night series.

In that premiere episode Malcolm MacGruder and Jenny Loud met, fell in love and married, all of which lead to a complicated lifestyle as they hide the marriage so they can remain partners. Much of the comedy arises from their dilemma.

"I get to put more humor into a role than I've ever done before. The secret marriage gives us something to play off of," she said. "It gives us an inside joke. I think I like the idea of secret marriages. We have separate but adjoining apartments. A bookcase opens on a swivel so that we can move between the apartments.

"I have a bizarre sense of humor, but nobody seems to mind. Whenever possible John and I try to lighten things up. Cop shows tend to be so serious. So we're always looking for places to give it a little different slant. Those are the places that in another cop show would be real serious or real macho."

Prior to beginning her role she rode with a policewoman to get a feel for the experience.

"Many times cops do marry each other," she said. "They have a hard enough time making their marriages work. At least, another cop understands." She laughed and added, "One good thing about being partners — they're on the same shift."

Couple confers

John Hammond stars in the title role and Morgan Brittany offers him the temptation of "life in the fast lane," in World Wide Pictures drama "The Prodigal," playing Friday through Feb. 14 at UA Cine. The film, a modern-day allegory of the Biblical story, intimately probes the interactions of an American family. It also stars Hope Lange and John Cullum. The Midland showing is sponsored by a group of 35 churches and other local organizations. It is rated PG.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Could you please tell us what the original Mouseketeers are doing now and where they are?

The Durens
Wolcott, Conn.

A. Every year in November, nine of the originals gather at Disneyland for a reunion show — and this year is the 30th anniversary of both the park and the Mickey Mouse Club, so there should be festivities and Mouseketeers around all year. But, otherwise, an update:

Annette Funicello, of course, continued to perform, notably in the Beach Party movies of the early '60s with Frankie Avalon.

Now, a mother of three, she's been doing commercials for Skippy peanut butter that you may have seen. She has also just recorded a country and western album and filmed a TV movie, "Lots of Luck," for the Disney Channel that should air this month. She and Avalon are also developing a "Beach Party" update in which they would play the parents of a beach-loving teen.

Bobby Burgess has been touring with the stars of the "Lawrence Welk Show." Before that, he performed for 21 years on that show. To further the Welk connection, he's married to Christie Floren, Welk accordionist Myron Floren's daughter. They have three children.

Bonnie Lynn Fields is still a dancer and for the last three years has run the Lynn Fields School of Tap and the Performing Arts in Santa Monica, Calif.

Cubby O'Brien continued as a drummer and has been working with a number of stars including Bernadette Peters, Andy Williams and, for eight years, the Carpenters.

Cheryl Holdridge, the widow of Woolworth heir Lance Reventlow, remarried and now lives in Aspen, Colo., mostly, when she isn't cruising on her yacht.

Darlene Gillespie is a surgical nurse in Burbank. She's divorced and has two children.

Doreen Tracy spent a lot of time in Vietnam, entertaining the troops, and then caused a bit of a stir by posing nude for a men's magazine, wearing her mouse ears. She's now performing in her own nightclub act.

Don Agrati, otherwise known as Don Grady, spent a number of years as Robbie Douglas on the series "My Three Sons." He still performs, but his career now is more one of writing and arranging music, particularly for Saturday morning television.

Lonnie Burr is still a performer; most recently, he was in the Los Angeles production of the musical "42nd Street." He's also a writer, the author of the book "Two for the Show: Great Comedy Teams" and dramas for radio.

Sharon Baird, at 4 feet 9 inches, the smallest Mouseketeer, is still a dancer. She performs regularly on the Disney Channel. She's divorced and lives in Burbank.

Tommy Cole is a makeup artist who won an Emmy for the TV special "Backstairs at the White House."

Sherry Alberoni is a homemaker, married to a doctor, with two daughters. She's also a collector of Disney memorabilia.

Annette Funicello

Q. Could you please tell me what Victoria Principal's background is? Her name seems Spanish and I heard that she was Mexican.

An avid reader
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. No to the question about being Mexican; her film break was the role of Paul Newman's Mexican mistress in "The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean," so that's probably where the connection came from. Her father's family is Italian; her mother's, Irish. To make it even more international, she was born in Japan, where her father, an Air Force man, was stationed.

Q. Could you please tell us how old Peter Jennings is, how many children he has, how long he's been married and whether or not he has ever been on U.S. TV before?

F.G. Nelson
Philadelphia, Pa.

A. He's 46, has been married to Kati Marton, a Hungarian-born writer and former ABC Bonn bureau chief, for six years (he was also married twice before). They met in the London bureau where he was based and got to know each other when he briefed her for a reporting assignment in Belfast.

Although she was initially put off by his superglamorous image, they married a year later. They now have two children, Elizabeth, 5, and Christopher, 2.

He was on U.S. TV before, as ABC's anchor of their evening 15-minute newscast in 1965, but was considered — and he considered himself — too young for the spot. So, in 1967, he asked to step down. In the years following, though, he gained enormous respect as a foreign correspondent, and by the time he regained the anchor chair recently, he felt that this time we was ready — and comfortable with it.

Q. Could you please tell me about Pamela Hensley. Is she married?

Laurie Ames
Burbank, Ill.

A. She's 34, born and raised in Los Angeles, the daughter of actress Gail Kent (who was a roommate of the young Marilyn Monroe) and veterinarian Dr. John Hensley, who looked after William Randolph Hearst's pets. As his daughter remembers, he "was always being whisked off to San Simeon in the middle of the night by helicopter if Hearst's dachshund was sick."

She always wanted to be an actress, trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London and with Lee Strasberg in New York, but as she explains it, she couldn't get an acting job because her looks weren't right.

She did finally land a job as a model on "The New Treasure Hunt" and then as a contract player at Universal, appearing in episodes of most of their series, such as "McMillian and Wife," "Owen Marshall" and "Ironside" and in regular roles as Princess Ardala in "Buck Rogers in the 25th Century" and as Steve Kiley's bride in "Marcus Welby." They led to "Matt Houston."

Regarding her personal life: She's single now but was married briefly to a music producer a few years ago.

Pamela Hensley

SHE IS NOW putting her life back together. She spoke of their two delicious years together, her joy in being Mrs. DeLeon.

But she also said, "Let me tell you that I have no plans to repeat that performance. It was a dream — Camelot — that I never expect to happen again. For one thing, out of the tragedy I have discovered for the first time that I can operate very well alone. I date, but with a difference. I stop and consider: What am I doing here? What do I want out of this? What does he want? I am only willing to go so far."

She doesn't really know whether or not she'd ever want to give as much as marriage demands again. "What I'm speaking of," she says now, "is the amount of compromise that is necessary between two people because every relationship requires compromise. Just how much are you willing to give?" The man in her life is that gentleman of the beautiful voice, Vic Damone. She is delighted to speak of him.

"A gentleman is exactly what he is and we've been together seven months. But we met 20 years ago. We're in the same business, we both do the night club tour and we've known each other forever. I don't know how our current friendship began, but I suppose it's because we're both free and decided to have dinner one night and liked each other."

She laughs. "We're both on the road a great deal, which is probably one of the reasons we're still friends." Ms. Carroll is going to have to cut back on the tour now, because of her continuing role on "Dynasty." She has found herself flying back from weekends in Montreal, Toronto or New York, arriving at midnight and due on the set early the next morning.

Damone, of course, understands her schedule. "He's a very nice human being. Thoughtful, and we have something important in common — our backgrounds. I like hearing him talk about his mom and dad.

"Stability in your home life is something very important to anyone in this business. He has had that and so have I... I realize now that the strong sense of self, the dignity and enormous security came from my parents. You need that when you are making an effort in front of thousands of people.

"When one is not successful with a performance or when something doesn't work, I can be analytical about it rather than take it as demeaning rejection — because of my basic beginning home life. If you haven't that, nothing can ever take its place. There is a basis for your personality that is almost unshakable."

SHE CONTINUES, "I've had bad times, but I can always give one hundred percent of myself. I like myself. That's necessary in this business. It's necessary in any business. A woman must have the courage to stand up and be counted. My parents did that for me and I'm hoping I've been able to do that for my daughter Suzy.

Diahann Carroll and Billy Dee Williams as Dominique Devereaux and Brady Lloyd on ABC-TV's "Dynasty."

"Suzy was just 24, graduated from college a few years ago with honors and is going back to Columbia School of Journalism to get her master's. It makes me feel so good to talk about Suzy. She's wonderful, so interested in the world. She worked for the McNeill Lehrer Report and that really sealed her fate. A gorgeous girl, inside and out, a good human being. I have a great respect for her, aside from the fact that I love her to distraction. It's frightening to love someone this much."

Suzy spends most of her time in New York, which Ms. Carroll regards as home, although now, with "Dynasty," she's spending her time in California in her home high up in the Truesdale Estates. But Ms. Carroll goes East often.

"One of my favorite relationships is that with Suzy's father. I still remember the enormous difficulty I had accepting the fact that I was going to be a divorced woman with a child. Of course that was 20 odd years ago and the attitudes have changed greatly; but once I accepted the fact that I had to separate myself from that marriage, I know that raising the child was another issue."

She explains, "I wanted my child to have a father. Fortunately, her father felt the same way; so we've raised her together and I think she's a secure person. It's been very difficult but very beautiful and Suzanne knows she's lucky to have two parents who care so much.

"Right now she is beginning to pull away. I know what she is going through. I watch her trying to come out of her cocoon, out of the nest built by her 'intensely competitive parents' as she calls us. In another year, she'll be making a break, I'm sure, to be on her own."

Ms. Carroll reflects, "Watching her is a reminder of my own growing up, my own confusion. I'm sure we'll always be close, as I am with my own mother who lives 15 minutes away from me."

Her speaking of her mother reminds me that Ms. Carroll's parents have divorced.

"YES, AFTER 37 years of the most wonderful marriage. I don't understand it. I can only think it had to do with the fact that they had a child who was in analysis — me. I went into analysis during the first marriage. A lot of verbalization took place at that time that might not have taken place had I not been in therapy. Many feelings might have remained unsaid. I have a great respect for both my parents and they are individually adjusting well."

"I've always loved working in clubs because of the direct stimulation of the audience. But on 'Dynasty' there is also immediate feedback. If a scene goes well, everyone is so thrilled!

"We are all realistic about the fact that the curious public needs new input, we're aware that we need each other. We're all old war horses. Well, let's say we're two groups — the old war horses and the kids — and both groups are great.

"I know John Forsythe's background and all the others. We've been around. We've had our touch of reality in theater and bad films and good films. We didn't just fall into Hollywood; we're a very special group. We'd be foolish not to be in love with each other. We've survived!"

New Edition surprised by success, large number of fans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About four years ago, Ralph Tresvant recalls, he and four pals barely into their teens polished up their Jackson Five routine and entered a talent contest hoping to win some money "to go to the movies or to go out and eat pizza."

The scheme worked — perhaps too well. Today, Tresvant and his colleagues in New Edition are becoming as well known as their one-time inspirations. In fact, New Edition's 1983 hit, "Candy Girl," was No. 1 on music charts at a time when Michael Jackson's "Beat It" was No. 2.

With Tresvant's silky adolescent tenor on lead, "Cool It Now" recently cracked the Top 5 on the pop charts.

So pocket money is no longer a problem for the quintet — ranging in age from 15 years old to 17 years old — who grew up together in Boston's inner city Roxbury district.

But the pizza parlors and movie palaces where they once planned to spend their windfall are off limits, because their recent public appearances have drawn fans by the thousands and caused near-riots.

In Los Angeles, 2,000 people spent the rainy Saturday after Thanksgiving waiting for New Edition outside a record store. In North Carolina, a shopping mall banned promotional events after some 5,000 teen-agers showed up for a similar in-store promotion by the band.

New Edition mania has caught a lot of people by surprise, including the group's members. But in retrospect, Tresvant has an explanation.

"The kids our age really didn't have anyone to look up to, to idolize," he said, sitting at a hotel room table with bandmates Michael Bivins and Ronald De Voe.

"The girls didn't have a group that they could go screaming after," Tresvant continued. "They had a lot of actors, but they didn't really have any singers their age that they could say, 'I want to marry him someday.' So we came in at the right time."

"We never fantasized anything like this," added Bivins, who looks younger than his 16 years but has one of the deeper voices in the group.

"We just wanted to enter for the money part, to get the prizes. That's all we were heading for. We all wanted to be known around the Boston area — the regional action — but that's as big as we wanted it, really. Then it took off nationally and it still hasn't hit us just yet."

The New Edition story as told by Tresvant is the kind of show biz fairy tale that keeps beauty pageants stocked with pretty girls hoping to be discovered by movie moguls. Tresvant, Bivins, De Voe, Bobby Brown and Ricky Bell grew up in the same housing development as pop star Donna Summer. It was an atmosphere where group singing was as competitive as basketball.

None have formal musical training; New Edition's members only sing and dance on stage. The singing, they say, is self-taught. De Voe's uncle, choreographer Brooke Payne, helped out with the body English.

In the 1981 talent show where they got their big break, they were one of 82 acts that each had five minutes to impress the judges. Only the winner was supposed to get a record deal, and New Edition came in second. But producer Maurice Starr, who sponsored the show, saw in them as potential "Jacksons of the '80s," and he had them record the "Candy Girl" single and album for the independent Streetwise label.

However, Starr did not sign the youths to a multi-album deal, so they were immediately picked up by MCA Records.

'Peril's' topless girls monotonous

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Life is fairly simple for the female characters in "The Perils of Gwendoline." The screenplay has provided them with one simple solution to any problem they might encounter.

In the face of adversity, the women in "Perils" take their shirts off.

They're thrown off a ship, so they take their shirts off. They get caught in a rainstorm, so they take their shirts off. They're thrown in a dungeon, so they take their shirts off.

Even the most ardent admirer of the anatomy of Tawny Kitaen, who plays Gwendoline, may find this unimaginative topless tease a bit montonous after a while.

"Perils" is, to put it mildly, not a good film.

The movie, like the rather silly 1968 cult film "Barbarella," is a predominantly French production based on a comic strip with a female heroine.

The primary similarity between the two films, however, is that they both constantly contrive dumb situations to deprive its female characters of their clothing.

The sketchy storyline of "Perils" basically revolves around Gwendoline's search for her father, who disappeared while traveling through Asia in pursuit of the world's rarest butterfly.

A brawny and throughly obnoxious smuggler named Willard, played by Brent Huff, reluctantly aids Gwendoline.

At this point, "Perils" seems as though it's going to be just another rip-off of "Raiders of the Lost Ark" with a big chunk of "Romancing the Stone" thrown in for good measure.

If it had kept heading in that direction, it might have just been a run-of-the-mill lousy movie.

Instead, the film descends to new depths of terribleness by taking an incomprehensible plot twist into a subterranean kingdom of scantily clad, sado-masochistic women who are heavily into bondage.

Huff's performance is simply awful. Ms. Kitaen, who showed some promise in last summer's comic "Bachelor Party," fares even worse.

It may not be entirely their fault; no actor could have completely surmounted the film's incredibly dumb dialogue and hideous plot.

The main peril posed by "The Perils of Gwendoline" is its relentless assault on the taste and intelligence of viewers.

"The Perils of Gwendoline," rated R for violence, nudity and sexual content, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

'General Hospital' launches singers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC's super soap opera "General Hospital" is fast becoming the launching pad for pop music stardom.

First, there was Rick Springfield, who started his musical career while on the show. He soon became a top singing star.

Patti Austin's first hit, "Baby Come to Me," was No. 1 on the pop charts after it became the soap opera's love theme.

Most recently, Jack Wagner has parlayed his role as singer Frisco Jones into stardom. His ballad single, "All I Need," is No. 2 on the pop list. It's unlikely the record would have been a hit without the show.

"All I Need" was released last May to indifferent results. It didn't take fire until July 10, when it became a love theme for Frisco and his girlfriend.

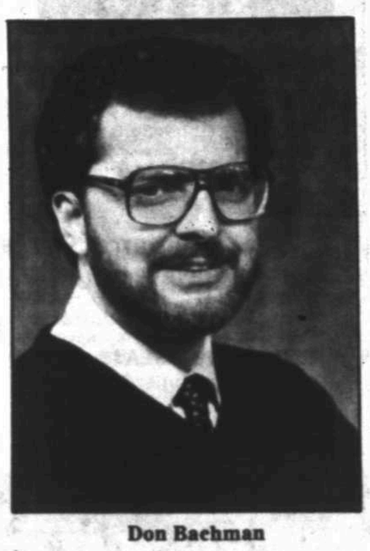
MCT offers well-balanced diet of plays

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer



Don Bachman

When the lights dim Friday at Theatre Midland for the opening of "Peter Pan," Midland Community Theatre's 1985 season officially begins.

"Part of what we're always about when we put together a season is to offer a well-balanced one to the public," says Don Bachmann, executive director for Midland Community Theatre. "That's part of the mission of any enlightened community theater."

It takes time and planning to organize a complementary season; one which reaches the largest audience. This year, MCT is offering eight major productions, including musicals, serious dramas and comedies, to subscription ticket holders.

"We've got contemporary plays, such as the noted award winner "Agnes of God," an American classic, "Harvey," a piece by Moliere and a classic musical, "Peter Pan," written in 1904, balanced against a Neil Simon musical and that makes two great musicals inside one season," Bachmann says.

A listing of the complete 1985 season includes "Peter Pan," Theatre One, Friday through March 23; "The Dining Room," Theatre Two, March 1-16; "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," Theatre One, May 3-18; "Agnes of God," Theatre One, June 7-22; "Greater Tuna," Theatre One, Sept. 6-21; "They're Playing Our Song," Theatre One, Oct. 4-26; "School for Wives," Theatre Two, Nov. 8-23; and "Harvey," Theatre One, Dec. 6-21.

This season's cost remains the same as 1984.

"Usually we only raise the prices every two years just to keep up with inflation," Bachmann says.

Available memberships include:

—a family membership for $90 which offers 24 admissions, good any time, up to eight admissions may be used on any musical;

—a regular A membership for $60 which offers 16 admissions, good any time, up to six may be used on any musical;

—a regular B membership for $50, also offers 16 admissions, good Sunday through Thursday, up to six may be used on any musical;

—an individual membership for $35 offers eight admissions and up to two may be used on any musical;

—sponsor membership offers 2 admissions and other priviledges for $200;

—sustaining memberships offers 48 admissions and other proviledges for $300;

—benefactor membership offers 60 admissions for $500 and special recognition of members;

—contributing memberships offers unlimited admissions for $1,000 and special recognition and privileges.

One of the most popular aspects of being a member is the fact that the box office opens to members three days prior to opening to the general public. A mail-in coupon is included in the newsletter Cues received by theater members, along with a calendar of box office openings and production performances.

In addition, members receive substantial discounts on other MCT affiliated programs, such as, 50 percent off on tickets to Midland College productions at Theatre Midland; 25 percent off adult acting classes; 20 percent off MCT's Cinema Series; and 17 percent off theatre school and dancing classes.

Bachmann compares the advantage in ticket price of being a member attending a production or buying single admission tickets.

The cost is $3.75 a ticket to get into a musical if you go on a Friday or Saturday night, he says. If you buy a single admission on a Friday or Saturday to see "Peter Pan," it's $10 a ticket.

"That's the cost for prime time (in the opening musical)," Bachmann says. "In 'They're Playing Our Song,' prime time cost for single admission will be $8 and for a straight (drama) play prime time cost is $6.50."

If there are six people in your group to see "Peter Pan," you're out $60, Bachmann says. If you have a regular A membership, six people can attend the musical together and the ticket holder still has 10 punches left for the rest of the season and can see anything he wants.

He pauses for a moment, then adds, "It's a fantastic buy."

People should pretend weather what they want

By ELISE BELL
King Features Syndicate

Mark Twain once said that everyone talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it. That may be true of Americans, but we have found as we travel that, in a lot of countries, people don't complain about the weather, they do something about it. They simply pretend that the weather is what it should be, not what it is, and live accordingly.

In northern Norway, for example, the sun doesn't set above the Arctic Circle during the summer months, so that there is virtually perpetual summer during most of June, July and August. But that doesn't mean there aren't many dark days with rain, gray skies and a dusky dimness that means you need a light in order to read, or even to see properly.

But in the Norwegian homes we were in, during the summer all the lights are removed from the rooms and there's not a lamp to be found anywhere in the house. On a gray overcast day, when you can't see to read, you are told, "It's summer. We don't need any lights in the summer."

No matter that everyone is groping around in the dark. Summer in northern Norway means sun all day even if it's not out.

There is the same attitude about bugs.

"We never need screens," the Norwegians say proudly. "We don't get any insects at all."

You point out the huge infestation of big black stinging flies which are invading the house through the open windows.

"They'll go right away," you are told. "That's just because of the direction of the wind at the moment. It's very unusual — but it's temporary."

The flies keep coming for days and the screenless windows remain open in fierce defiance of the facts.

In northern Norway they also close up all the indoor swimming pools during the summer, when you are supposed to swim outdoors in the lakes and fjords. The fact that the water is 57 degrees and the temperature of the air is not much higher has nothing to do with it.

Last summer we visited friends who were living in Paris. Temperatures were in the 90s and all of Paris sweltered in a heat wave. Our friend, who is not French, went to buy an electric fan for his apartment. He was unable to find one anywhere in Paris.

"We don't need electric fans," the storekeepers told him. "It never gets that hot in Paris."

Our friend pointed out that it was 94 degrees.

"Oh, that won't last. It's very unusual. Two or three days and it will get cool again.

Our friend pointed out that it had been in the 90s for a month and that there was no relief in sight. His words fell on deaf ears.

We deliberately went to Thailand during their winter — late January and early February. But we found it was in the high 80s in Bangkok and very humid. However, our Thai friends, in whose home we were staying, turned off all the air-conditioning.

"It's winter," they told us. "This heat won't last. We had a very cold day last week and it will soon be cold again."

It never was. Winter in Bangkok was on January 20. It reminded us of summer in northern Norway which is usually on July 5.

In Puerto Rico, where the temperatures remain high all year and the sun shines most of the time, the people will not go swimming during the winter months even though it is in the 70s and 80s. They look askance at tourists who plunge into the water.

They also put on dark clothes and carry black umbrellas around during what would be the winter months. A friend of ours who lived here for a couple of years has an explanation:

"It gets very boring to have sun and nice weather all the time, day after day. You begin to long for a dark, stomry, rainy day. So the people here pretend that it's winter by dressing and acting as if it were."

In England, the people simply ignore weather. They have to...so much of it is bad. Besides, the Brtish thrive on challenges. When we were in London we saw people playing tennis in the rain. I thought of how we always protect our tennis racquets carefully against any signs of the slightest dampness, but there they were, soaking wet, hitting the ball back and forth on the court.

So maybe Americans should change their attitude — stop complaining about the weather and start pretending that it's whatever they want it to be. It seems to work pretty well everywhere else in the world.

Harrold likes role because she can carry gun

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kathryn Harrold would like to be in a Western, but playing the schoolmarm or dance hall girl isn't what she has in mind.

Miss Harrold, who stars with John Getz in ABC's new cop show "MacGruder and Loud," is thinking more of being the fastest gun in the West.

Sitting in her dressing room, a badge pinned to her blue uniform, a gun on her hip, she said, "This is the first policewoman I've ever played. I've played a lot of doctors. But this was the closest I could get to a Western. I've always wanted to be in a Western. You get to carry a gun and swagger around."

In the new series, Miss Harrold and Getz are more than just police partners; they're married. The show is a blend of romantic comedy and police drama.

Working in a series is a new experience for Miss Harrold, who's starred in such movies as "Modern Romance," "The Hunter," "The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper," "The Women's Room" and "Yes, Georgio." She also played Lauren Bacall in "Bogie."

Miss Harrold said she had no intention of doing a series, but she liked the part. "I thought I could do something with the role," she said. "When they offered me the pilot I looked on it as a movie of the week.

"I didn't go into it blindly. I knew it could go to series. But there aren't that many good parts for women on television or in films. When a good part comes along you take it. What I like is that I get to do everything. When I'm a cop I can be tough and strong, all the things a feminist wants to be. In the apartment, I am warm and loving. And sexy."

The pilot was telecast following ABC's Super Bowl, and now runs as a regular Tuesday night series.

In that premiere episode Malcolm MacGruder and Jenny Loud met, fell in love and married, all of which lead to a complicated lifestyle as they hide the marriage so they can remain partners. Much of the comedy arises from their dilemma.

"I get to put more humor into a role than I've ever done before. The secret marriage gives us something to play off of," she said. "It gives us an inside joke. I think I like the idea of secret marriages. We have separate but adjoining apartments. A bookcase opens on a swivel so that we can move between the apartments.

"I have a bizarre sense of humor, but nobody seems to mind. Whenever possible John and I try to lighten things up. Cop shows tend to be so serious. So we're always looking for places to give it a little different slant. Those are the places that in another cop show would be real serious or real macho."

Prior to beginning her role she rode with a policewoman to get a feel for the experience.

"Many times cops do marry each other," she said. "They have a hard enough time making their marriages work. At least, another cop understands." She laughed and added, "One good thing about being partners — they're on the same shift."

Couple confers

John Hammond stars in the title role and Morgan Brittany offers him the temptation of "life in the fast lane," in World Wide Pictures drama "The Prodigal," playing Friday through Feb. 14 at UA Cine. The film, a modern-day allegory of the Biblical story, intimately probes the interactions of an American family. It also stars Hope Lange and John Cullum. The Midland showing is sponsored by a group of 35 churches and other local organizations. It is rated PG.

Mariel Hemingway has own identity

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mariel Hemingway, who has two new films coming up, is pleased at a new turn in her career.

"Do you realize they're now writing about me without adding 'the sister of Margaux' or 'the granddaughter of Ernest,'" she said.

Miss Hemingway, 23, added: "What I need now is a hit movie. I seem to be known, but most of the films I've made haven't been successful." Her last two pictures, "Personal Best" and "Star 80," failed at the box office.

"I don't want people saying, 'She's quite a good actress, but nobody goes to see her movies.'"

National Young Artists Competition held in Odessa

Performing winners in the National Young Artists Competition, held last weekend in Odessa, were pianist Lori Sims, Bloomfield High School, Bloomfield, Colo., and violinist Maya Iwabuci, The Community School of Performing Arts, Los Angeles, Calif., both secondary level; and violinist Lucia Linn, Rice University, and pianist Remi Fujisawa, the University of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio, both college level.

These young artists will return to perform with the Midland-Odessa Symphony March 12 in Midland at Lee High School and March 14 in Odessa at Bonham Junior High. The yearly competition is sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale.

Other winners, chosen from the 12 finalists out of a field of 41 competing entries, were Laurie Lane, Texas Tech University, voice; and flutist Adrienne Inglis, The University of Texas at Austin, winds divisions.

The 12 finalists split winnings of $7,000, the bulk going to the performing winners. The expenses of the performing winners when they return are paid in addition to their winnings.

The competition is held under the joint direction of the Midland and Odessa symphony guilds and rotates yearly between the two cities. Chairman for this year's NYAC was Pat Simmons of the Odessa Symphony Guild.

This is one of the few competitions in the United States that allows applications from students in secondary schools as well as those at the university level.

Judges for this year's competition were Edward C. Purrington, general director of the Tulsa Opera; Samuel Jones, professor of conducting and composition of the Shepherd School of Music, Rice University; Dr. Donald Portnoy, violinist, founder of the American Arts Trio, faculty member of West Virginia University and conductor of the University Community Symphony Orchestra; Nina Lelchuck, pianist, former professor at the Moscow Conservatory where she received a doctorate in music in 1965; and Michael Greenburg, music critic from the San Antonio Express.

Marine general gives his view of the Corps

"First to Fight: An Inside View of the U.S. Marine Corps" by Lieutenant General Victor H. Krulak, USMC (Ret.); Naval Institute Press; 233 pages; $18.95.

By MICHAEL SWEENEY
Copley News Service

A Review

When Lt. Gen. Victor H. Krulak speaks, Marines listen. His sobriquet, "The Brute," is as well known as that of another illustrious Marine, Lt. Gen. Lewis B. "Chesty" Puller, and is probably at least as appropriate. Prior to his retirement, Krulak was legendary for his blunt style, direct approach and limitless vision.

Commanders, many of whom were veterans of hard months of combat, have been known to grow extremely energetic and moistpalmed when informed of an impending visit by the general. The same forthright approach serves to make this splendid, tight book both believable and immensely readable.

Controversy and the Corps have been long-time bedfellows. More than a small measure of that often uncomfortable mating has been encouraged by members of the other services, especially when they have felt challenged by the constancy of the Corps and its seemingly limitless will to survive.

Dodging the blows of presidents like Theodore Roosevelt and Harry Truman and occasionally sheltering behind the skirts of congressmen, the Corps has fended off oblivion time and time again. Krulak was present and accounted for during the fierce inter-service wars of the 1930s, '40s and '50s, participating, listening and remembering.

He names people, places and times with the ease and confidence of a direct participant, needling his opponents and praising his allies. He points out that, although the Marine Corps of today seems a permanent fixture, the threat of extinction forever remains, primarily for the reason that "while the larger services may be able to handle the pressures of bureaucracy, the Marine Corps has neither the instinct nor the time for it. The Marines are an assemblage of warriors, nothing more."

Krulak is at his brutally frank best when recalling the conduct of the war in Indochina. He presents the Marine Corps' strategic case, their universally shared belief that the way to win the war was to control the densely populated coastal areas, providing a safe and secure environment for the civilian populace.

He is sharply critical of the U.S. strategy which involved finding the enemy, engaging him in a war of attrition, while ignoring the fact that "political commissars (were) speaking in the public squares of every small village and even in Saigon itself."

Krulak offers a perspective which will expand a Marine's view of his corps, introduce other citizens to a sense of the tenacity, flexibility and pride which makes the Corps work and provide veterans of the Vietnam War with a lucid explanation of the strategy which they served.

The Ten of Spades was appearing before the Adjudication Board of the Association of Playing Cards. It was his contention that he was being unfairly treated by another member of the Association, the Eight of Spades.

In an impassioned plea to the Board, the Ten stated his case. "It is seldom that we tens, the lowest of the honor cards, achieve something noteworthy in our own right. And I consider it unethical of my associate, the Eight, to claim credit for my play.

"Not that he and his owner did not play their part in the scheme of things. Indeed, I am prepared to admit that it was brilliant defense on the part of West that allowed me to play my role. Nevertheless, without me, there would have been no dazzling defense.

"Our opponents had reached four spades on the auction shown. There was nothing unusual about the auction—it would have occurred at most bridge tables. West realized that his partner was not going to produce anything in the way of high cards, so the only place to establish the setting trick was in the trump suit.

"Accordingly, West cashed his two top clubs and then did what many might consider a bridge crime—he gave declarer a ruff-and-sluff by leading a third club. Declarer ruffed on the table and led a trump to the nine, jack and ace. West continued with his brilliantly conceived plan by giving declarer another ruff-sluff, only this time my owner also ruffed with me—a classic uppercut. Declarer was forced to overruff with the queen, and now the Eight of Spades was promoted to the setting trick.

"After the game, the reporters hovered around the Eight's locker. The next day, the newspapers were full of his exploits—and not even so much as a passing mention of me.

"I do not begrudge the Eight his moment of glory. I only feel that he could at least have acknowledged my part in this affair, and I think a public apology is in order."

Book is study of 'effective persuaders'

"Influence: How and Why People Agree to Things; by Robert B. Cialdini; Morrow; $15.95; 302 pp.

By HARRY S. ASHMORE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A Review

Con artists are said to enjoy success because almost all of us have a touch of larceny in our hearts.

Not necessarily so, says Robert Cialdini, an experimental social psychologist who has devoted his career to a study of the "compliance practitioners" who permeate American society. Whether outright frauds or honorable pitchmen, he finds, the effective persuaders most often manipulate us by appealing to our better nature.

Successful salespersons exploit six basic behavior principles — consistency, reciprocation, social proof, authority, liking and scarcity. And the more or less instinctive responses they invoke are essential to human interaction in a complex world which no longer leaves time for rational consideration of myriad decisions we face each day.

Buying a product because it is advertised as best-selling may be a thoughtless reaction to the human instinct for conformity, but if the claim is valid, its widespread, repeated use also provides a reasonable test of quality. And if we do not assume that the assertions of advertisers or salespersons have some basis in fact, we would be hard-pressed to function effectively as consumers.

Only a practicing misanthrope could attain immunity from those who employ what Cialdini calls "weapons of influence" to sell us goods and services or those who use similar pressures to enlist us in public causes. Reciprocity comes in here: It is ungracious not to return a past favor. Or charm: It is hard to say no to someone we like. Or authority: If we respect a provider, public official or moral leader, we have reason to listen when he tells us what we ought to buy or do.

These responses are essential to a civilized society, but they also can lead us astray. We all have been conned into buying goods we do not really need or want, paying prices that have no relation to market value, or supporting undertakings that do not truly interest us. "Influence" is designed as a manual to tell us in homely detail why we were taken in, and how to avoid being had in the future.

To that end, Cialdini, a member of the faculty at Arizona State University, takes us beyond the case studies ground out in the campus behavioral science laboratories. For some years he has been a participant observer of the techniques employed by master manipulators — signing on as a trainee salesman of automobiles, encyclopedias, vacuum cleaners, real estate and dance lessons, and serving as an apprentice in advertising, public relations and fund-raising agencies.

Out of his experience on the firing line he concludes that the only relevant moral test is whether the presentation is reasonably close to the truth. If so, we have no right to complain — although we still may need the instructions in the "How to Say No" section with which he concludes each descriptive chapter.

He warns that we cannot expect to escape "the shortcut approach of narrowed attention and automatic response to a particular piece of information." But he urges that we fight back with any legitimate weapon at hand when a compliance practitioner tries "to stimulate a shortcut response by giving us a fraudulent signal for it." This otherwise good-natured chronicle of chicanery ends on a somber note:

"I don't consider myself pugnacious by nature, but I actively advocate such belligerent actions because in a way I am at war with the exploiters — we all are...The thing we cannot tolerate is any attempt to make their profit in a way that threatens the reliability of our shortcuts. The blitz of modern daily life demands that we have faithful shortcuts, sound rules of thumb to handle it all."

Blob overtakes golf course

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Like something out of a 1950s science fiction movie, a 4-foot-long blob appeared at the 16th hole of the Bay Hill Club golf course, startling the neighbors and bringing authorities rushing to the scene.

The clear, jello-like creature turned up one night last week.

The Orange County Sheriff's Office dispatched its emergency vehicles. People poked the blob with rakes as they tried to figure out what it was.

Sea World aquarium supervisor Rob Mottice said the blob was a Bryozoa, a harmless colony of single-celled animals that apparently came from the bottom of a nearby lake.

But this wasn't your everyday Bryozoa, according to Mottice, who said the colonies grow on the bottom of stones and stumps in lakes, and rarely grow larger than a grapefruit.

"Four feet — holy smoke!" said Vince Williams, a biologist with the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission.

New Mobil Oil president to tighten corporate belt

NEW YORK (AP) — Mobil Corp. has made its share of headlines by taking over non-oil businesses and engaging in sometimes acrimonious bidding contests for other oil companies, but it also has been quietly dismantling substantial parts of its business at the same time.

For Allen Murray, the new president of the nation's second largest oil company, that belt-tightening is a crucial responsibility inherited from his predecessor, William Tavoulareas.

Murray, 55, is a native New Yorker with the accent to prove it, like Tavoulareas, 65, who retired as president but remains with Mobil as a special consultant. There also are other similarities.

Both completed their education at night while working in Mobil's accounting department, both have had ties to Mobil's Middle Eastern oil operations and both have supported Mobil's outspoken position on controversial issues through advertisements in major newspapers. Both also have been involved in battles with the news media.

Tavoulareas sued the Washington Post for libel following a 1979 report that he had "set up" his son in the shipping business that then obtained many contracts from Mobil. A jury ruled Tavoulareas was entitled to $2 million, but a federal judge later threw out the award, a decision Tavoulareas is appealing.

Murray is supporting a boycott that Mobil launched against the Wall Street Journal following its publication of a story in November describing how the company planned to build a Chicago office tower in conjunction with a real estate firm that employs the son-in-law of Mobil's chairman, Rawleigh Warner Jr. Mobil refuses to advertise in the Journal or provide information or grant interviews to the paper's reporters.

But it is the restructuring of the company that Murray says is his biggest worry, after oil prices — something he has little control over these days.

He says each segment of Mobil's empire, from its Montgomery Ward department stores to its oil refineries, is being measured against the top competition in its field with a view to either giving the business the money it needs or getting rid of it.

"Only the top, the most efficient, are going to survive," he says.

When it comes to having a reputation as a street-smart fighter, Mobil is a name that stands out, and analysts say Murray fits that corporate mold.

"Mobil has more of a New York street mentality than a lot of companies," said Bruce Lazier, a former Mobil employee who now follows the company for the investment firm Prescott, Ball & Turben.

As for Murray, Lazier said: "He's got a big job ahead of him. He may look like a hero five years from now, but in the short term, there's a lot of slugging."

The first steps already were taken before Murray moved up from president of Mobil's oil operations.

"In the last four or five years, very quietly, we have sold over $1 billion worth of our assets. We've closed a lot more than that ... because these were things we felt didn't stand us in good stead in the long term and we were better off with the cash," Murray said in an interview.

"Dry Fork" proved to be a misnomer for Conoco's Pocahontas No.1. near Bluefield, West Virginia.

Rank Conoco wildcat hits Appalachian gas

Conoco has discovered natural gas on a prospect with the misleading name of Dry Fork in southern West Virginia, about 20 miles west of Bluefield. The Du Pont Company subsidiary reported that the Pocahontas Land No. 1 well has tested 1.75 million cubic feet of gas per day through a 17/64-inch choke. Conoco said six barrels of water per hour were produced in association with the test.

The Pocahontas No. 1 was drilled to a depth of 7,675 feet and was tested through a series of perforations between 7,110 and 7,508 feet in the Tuscarora sandstone. The well is considered a rank wildcat by the company because it is 75 miles from the nearest production in that formation.

The discovery has brought Conoco almost full circle. One of the company's pioneers, E.W. Marland, left Pennsylvania for Oklahoma to search for oil in the early 1900's.

Since then, Conoco has made its mark domestically west of the Mississippi and offshore, but has never drilled in West Virginia and has not been active in the Appalachians for more than 20 years.

Currently, Conoco is exploring in several states for itself and a group that includes AGIP Petroleum Company Inc. and Conoco's limited partners, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and New England Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Conoco holds a 79 percent interest in the discovery well, and the remaining 21 percent is held by AGIP and the limited partners. The group also holds leases on more than 35,000 acres immediately surrounding the well site.

Further drilling is planned to determine the extent of the discovery.

Moore Deep is exploration benchmark

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

In the annals of exploration certain fields stand out as benchmarks.

In the latest round of Permian Basin exploration, involving the search for deeper, smaller and prolific oil pays in the Midland Basin, Exxon's Moore Deep (Fusselman) field in Howard County stands out as a benchmark, against which other fields are measured.

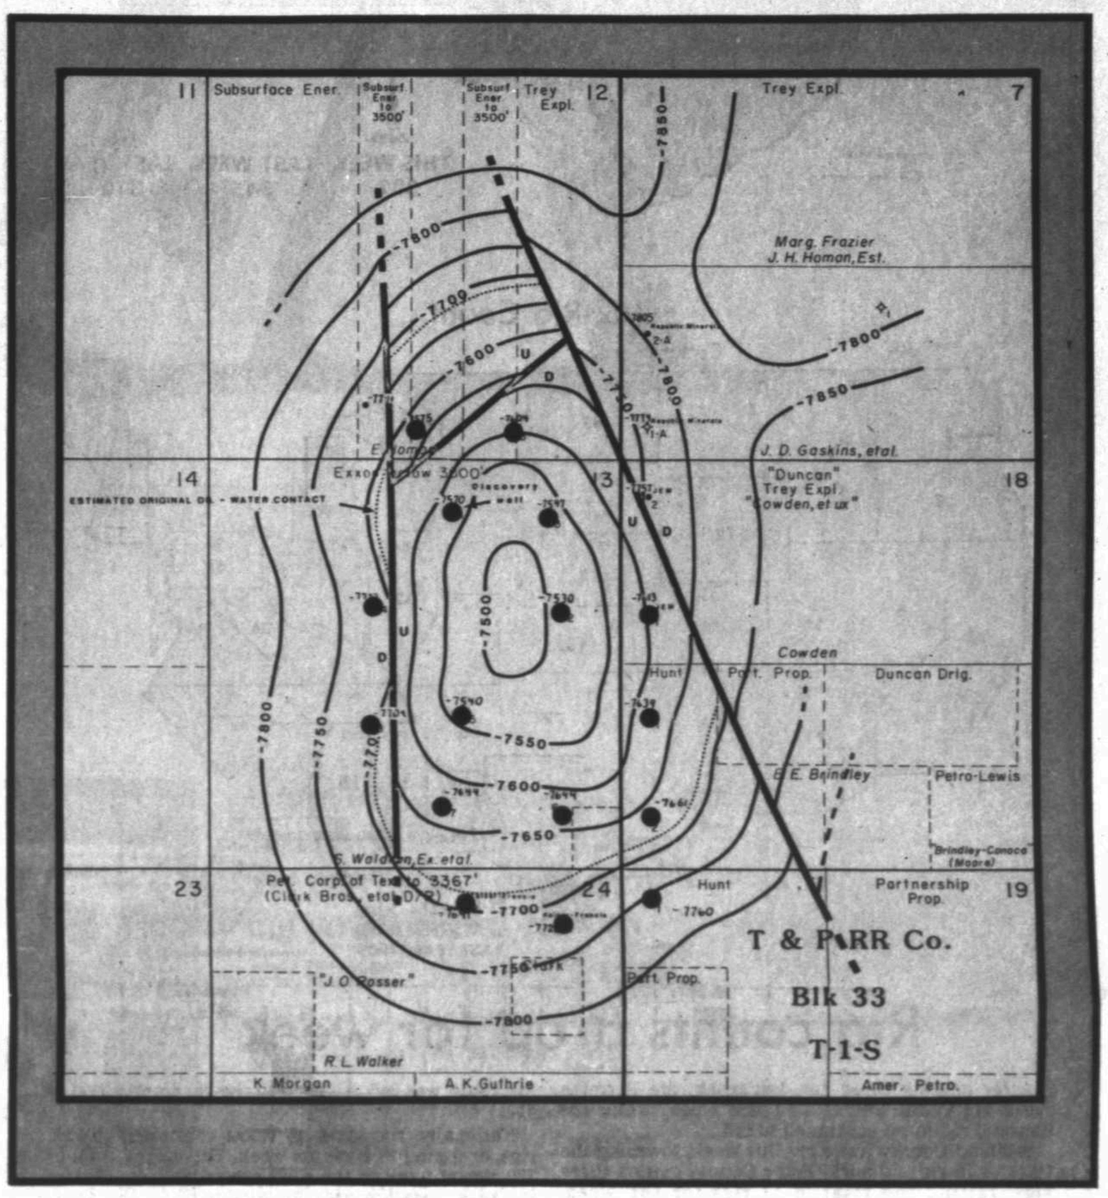
Operators working on deeper seismic anomalies in the Strawn, Fusselman and Wolfcamp will invariably tell you they are looking for another Moore Deep field. And why not?

Sometime this month the field should make its 2 millionth barrel of oil, to become one of the most prolific finds of the decade. Located about three miles southwest of Big Springs the relatively small, 900-acre field was discovered with the drilling of the drilling of the No.1 Shirley Waldron, which completed for 244 bopd, and continues to produce at 225 bopd, against an allowable of 300 bopd. Production began in March 1982 in the field and 25 months later it had produced its millionth barrel.

By September 1984 it had produced 1.5 million barrels having achieved peak production in February of that year with 14 producing wells and daily production of 3,437.

Dan Mendell, III, manager of Exxon USA's Midcontinent Division, here, said the discovery of the Moore Deep field was an excellent example of how the market drives Exxon exploration activity.

"With the decline in demand for new natural gas production, we focused our attention on improving production from existing oil reservoirs as well as stepping out to find new fields and getting them onstream as quickly as possible. In the Moore Deep we were able to drill ten 10,000-foot wells in 24 months and fully develop our acreage," said Mendell.



The Moore Deep is also a classic in that it lies directly beneath the Moore (San Andres) field, which produces from 3,100-3,200 feet and has yielded more than 10 million barrels since its discovery in 1937. To drill the deep prospect, Exxon secured leases from 3,500 down.

Mendell said that Exxon reservoir engineers had determined that the field could be produced at an accelerated pace without causing any damage to the reservoir, and that the conclusion has proven correct. Since development the field has produced at the rate of 2,700 barrels of oil per day or 270 barrels per day without channeling or coning problems in the strong water drive field.

However, several wells held by Hunt Oil on the east flank of the field are now beginning to make water and two Kaiser-Francis wells in the extreme southern flank of the field, near the water-oil contact have already gone to water, according to Exxon.

"It is the nature of this type reservoir to be high in production and recovery and short-lived," said Carol Primdahl, senior project engineer.

"We anticipate another three or four years of life to the field, and hope to recover about 80 percent of the oil in place. After that we'll have to take a look at the economics of recovering the other 20 percent." She said Exxon was basing its recovery rate on the fact that industry-wide the rate of recovery in strong water drive fields is 80 percent.

One of the economic pluses to such a reservoir, says Primdahl, is that one doesn't normally have to do a lot of infill drilling to drain the reservoir. "We think we can drain the field with 80-acre spacing."

As the rock goes in the reservoir, it is the kind geologists like to find according to Lance Jackson, Exxon geological supervisor for the field. The anticline structure consists of about 570 productive acres, containing an average pay thickness of 27.5 feet. Porosity in the rock is 8 percent and permeability is 22.5 millidarcies.

The Moore Deep is also a benchmark for Exxon. "Sure, we're looking for more Moore Deep fields. We can't say where or how, but we're looking," said Lance Jackson.

He added: "The Moore Deep has been a catalyst for a lot of exploration in the Midland Basin, as operators look for similar reservoirs and we expect it will continue to be a catalyst."

Jackson said the Moore Deep was a turning point for Exxon in that it marked a turning point in their exploration philosophy, going from a somewhat diminished exploration effort from 1972 to 1978 to a new, aggressive exploration company.

Construction begins on carbon dioxide pipeline

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Northern Natural Resources Co., a division of InterNorth, Inc., has begun construction activies on a 137 mile-long carbon dioxide pipeline that is expected to expand enhanced oil recovery activity in the Central Basin of the Permian Basin.

The $70 million Central Basin Pipeline will receive carbon dioxide from the Bravo, Cortez and Sheep Mountain pipelines in Yoakum and Gaines Counties in West Texas and transport it south through Andrews, Ector and Crane Counties.

Exxon has already committed to use carbon dioxide from the line in its Corona Lake Unit, a proposed tertiary project, near Crane. Other major operators have also signed agreements to utilize the pipeline for planned tertiary projects. Northern Natural Resources Co. will solely as a private contract carrier of gas on a per Mcf, per mile basis to users.

The Central Basin carbon dioxide trunk line will have an initial free-flow capacity of 600 million cubic feet per day and an ultimate capacity in excess of 1 billion cubic feet per day after addition of pump stations.

"Northern Natural Resources feels that once the trunk line is in place it will stimulate enhanced oil recovery throughout the Central

Decentralization of movie industry helps Texas

By ALAN SAYRE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas movie industry, which enjoyed more than $90 million worth of business from 30 major feature productions in 1984, should enjoy another good year as producers seek realism and shoot more on location, a state official says.

Joel Smith, director of the Texas Film Commission in Austin, says the recent trend away from California's total dominance of the industry shows no sign of slowing down.

"Movies are being made more and more on location because audiences demand realism," Smith said in a recent interview. "A location often is a co-star in the picture."

Texas provided more than a few varied locations for major productions during 1984 — many of which will be released during 1985, said Smith, whose duties include promoting Texas to filmmakers and assisting those who decide to film in the state.

Despite increasing competition from other states for out-of-California shooting, Texas is developing a "more well-rounded" industry, including a pool of Texas-based producers who are taking advantage of the state's increasing number of qualified actors and technicians, Smith said.

"What is beginning to happen in a very modest way is that independent producers in Texas are starting to make movies in Texas with the help of established entries elsewhere," Smith said. "That's a good sign."

Competiton from other states will help, he said.

Innovation drought in building under attack

When 50,000 of the nation's home builders met this week in Houston at the Astrodome complex to view new building trades exibits and hear noted speakers from the Reagan administration, Congress and the private sector, at the 41st annual convention of the National Home Builders Association, it was with much glitter and fanfare. Positive notes of prosperity rang from the podiums, but all is not well in the construction industry.

While the nation's home builders had starts of 1.74 million homes in 1984, for the highest production level in four years, the nation's construction industry is ailing, according to Dr. Richard L. Tucker, director of Construction Industry Institute at the University of Texas, Austin.

"The construtuion industry is by far the world's most archaic industry," said Tucker, who added that the industry was plagued by declining productivity and outdated construction techniques.

Tucker says present construction methods were originally developed to combat the high cost of building materials, but now labor costs make up the lion's share of the construction budget. Suggests Tucker: "The industry must change so that labor can be used more effeciently.

HE POINTS out that the industry is near the top, as a $300 billion per year activity that employs one-sixth of the nation's work force, and once made up 12 percent of the gross national product. But since 1975, productivity has declined in the industry, and today only 6 percent of the GNP is derived from the construction industry.

Some of the decline is blamed on larger, more complicated projects which often fall prey to outdated methods of construction and higher labor costs, in the view of the professor.

"In contrast to other industries, the construction field is fragmented," says Tucker. "It is composed of specialists, each of whom has a particular skill and performs a specificy job. All of these specialists must come to the building site and work in a temporary environment with temporary utilities and facilities."

The editor of one construction magazine, who pointed out that the biggest breakthrough in the past 100 years in the construction industry was electric motors on the saws, agreed that it was far behind other industries in innovation.

He pointed out, however, that significant innovation had been made in building materials, such as the use of reinforced concrete.

ONE NEED only visit a construction site where new homes are being built to confirm that not that much has been changed. Materials are brought to the site by truck, cut and nailed and made into a house by crews of specialists that come and go. It is highly labor intensive, and therein is the major element that continues to increase the cost of housing, with some help, of course, from higher material costs, record interest rates and soaring land costs.

Tucker and the Construction Industry Institute at Texas University want to turn that situation around. The Institute is comprised of 39 members of the construction industry who support the cause with $25,000 each annually in addition to volunteering employees each year to work full time on projects.

The Institute assigns task forces of academics, contractors and other industry personnel to address various problems within the construction industry and achieve innovation.

One of the problems recently considered was the feasibility of bending pipe instead of fitting pipe in construction projects. Another was the development of a Model Plant against which all innovation studies can be tested.

TO BE SURE, resistance from trade unions can be expected as labor-saving innovation is introduced into the labor intensive construction industry and jobs are threatened. The introduction of plastic pipe into the industry was delayed almost a decade, as plumbing trades sought to discredit it.

There is a historical conflict between innovation and labor, and the building industry will not be spared. Offset printing was resisted in the printing industry; robots in the auto industry. Still innovation in the construction industry is long overdue.

Tucker compared the construction industry to the health care industry and the agriculture industry which are comprable in size to the construction industry.

"These industries have made tremendous strides toward developing new technology," he said, "and they have put 100 times as much money into research as the construction industry."

It is his intention to turn the innovation drought around with research: "We want to provide a catalyst for doing more research in the construction area. Not only can Construction Industry Institute fund its own research, but it can support research done elsewhere by other agencies, such as the National Science Foundation."

Rig counts drop for week

After gaining three rigs last week, the Permian Basin rig count lost ground this week, while the national rig count continued to fall.

Midland County lost a rig this week, lowering the total to 10 rigs at work. Ector County gained three rigs, raising the total to 11 rigs for the week. Andrews County added two rigs, putting 28 rigs to work. Martin County added one rig this week, putting the total at 17 rigs.

Reagan County was the big loser this week, losing four rigs and lowering the total to 10 rigs working in that county. Lamb and Mitchell County each added a rig this week, each putting one rig to work this week.

For the week, the rig count was 332. A week ago the count was 345. A year ago the rig count stood at 312.

Nationally, the state of Texas continued to lose rigs, dropping 27 rigs this week. This puts a total of 789 rigs at work in the state presently. New Mexico lost seven rigs, lowering the total to 60 for the week. Louisiana lost four rigs, lowering the state's count to 343 for the week. Oklahoma added three rigs, raising the count to 297 for the week.

Canada remained steady, keeping 376 rigs working for the second week.

For the week, the rig count is 2,303. A week ago the count was 2,370. A year ago the count stood at 2,569.

IRS to apologize for erroneous violation notices sent to businesses

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service says human error is to blame for a computer glitch that had 10,000 companies in three states threatened with liens for taxes they had already paid.

IRS officials said Wednesday the agency would apologize to the businesses in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, many of which were threatened with seizure of assets or had their bank accounts frozen.

The error, which made it appear that $300 million in withholding taxes had not been paid to the federal government, was initially blamed on a computer foulup but later determined by the IRS to have resulted from human error, officials said.

The problem began when third-quarter records of 28,000 tax payments by an estimated 10,000 companies were not transmitted from the Philadelphia computer center to the IRS national records center in Martinsburg, W.Va.

The delay caused violation notices to be automatically sent to accounts that seemed short after companies filed their quarterly returns and another computer compared them with its records of receipts.

The mistake caused special problems for many banks which collect and transmit payroll withholding tax payments for corporate clients.

Mellon Bank in Pennsylvania was asked to seize an average of 40 corporate accounts daily within the past two weeks, more than five times the normal volume, a Mellon representative said.

"We are obligated to follow the IRS instructions even though we know, or may have evidence, that the customer has done the right thing," said Anne Buchanan, a spokeswoman for the bank.

"Everyone has been getting threats of liens and everything else," said Gerald Pacella, a senior vice president in the operations department of Fidelity Bank of Philadelphia. "Of course, the place that they want to ventilate their anger is the bank."

A series of errors consisted of inordinate delays in correcting a faulty computer tape and poor judgment as to the extent of the problem, said Daniel Seklecki, spokesman for the IRS's Philadelphia district office.

Seklecki said the IRS did not lose the payment records, but there was a delay in crediting many accounts because of "a number of things that went wrong at the same time."

He declined to comment further on specific errors and said he did not know if any action would be taken against individuals responsible.

All taxpayers affected by the mistake will receive letters of apology and reassurances that the tax bills have been corrected, the IRS said.

Companies which received the notices set out to produce records to prove they'd paid. Industrial Valley Bank & Trust Co. received so many corporate requests to reconcile their accounts with the IRS — about 450 — that it had to assign a member of its accounting staff to work full-time on the problem, a bank official said.

The IRS said it was reviewing all bills being issued by the Philadelphia service center to ensure no additional erroneous notices were sent out to taxpayers.

More governments want bartering system

WASHINGTON (AP) — International barter deals are becoming more numerous as governments insist on swaps of goods in order to hold on to hard-to-get dollars and other hard currency, according to a senior economist at the Commerce Department.

"Essential imports are sometimes obtainable in no other way and exports, especially of hard-to-sell items, are often boosted," said the economist, James I. Walsh. His report, dealing with trade in which the use of hard cash is held to a minimum, was published by Georgetown University's National Center for Export-Import Studies.

France, for example, lent money to Guyana to explore its reserves of bauxite, from which aluminum is made, Walsh said. Under a barter agreement, France is being paid back not in francs or dollars, but in bauxite.

"I think I'm on safe ground in saying that the volume involved in barter is going to keep on going up," Walsh said in a telephone interview.

But he emphasized the pitfalls, citing the case of Ecuador.

That country has a big surplus of bananas, but it imports nearly all its liquor. So in 1982 Ecuador decreed that any country shipping alcoholic beverages to Ecuador would have to take an equivalent amount of bananas.

But bananas were a drag on the market, and besides, they are perishable. The liquor exporters refused to take any. Within five months, Ecuador canceled the order.

In another example, Pepsi Cola made a deal with Poland to swap Pepsi syrup for malt. But the company lost out because the price of malt went down and Pepsi had to sell the malt for less than it expected to get.

Barter is usually thought of as a simple swap of goods, but it is often more complicated.

"Countertrade" is another word for much the same thing: a trade in which a government limits what it buys from another country in proportion to what it can sell to that same country. That achieves the main purpose of barter — to minimize the amount of money that has to change hands.

"Many estimates of the share of world trade covered by all countertrade arrangements range from 10 to 30 percent," Walsh wrote. "That would constitute a 15-fold increase from the estimated 2 percent share in 1964."

The International Monetary Fund says world trade in 1983 amounted to $2.3 trillion.

Those percentages would mean that between $23 billion and $702 billion worth of barter deals take place every year, many of them involving American goods, although Walsh made no estimate of how much.

Between World War I and World War II barter got a bad international reputation because Nazi Germany used barter deals to build up its military machine.

Barter is also used extensively by communist countries, which are chronically short of hard currency, and by poor countries.

Walsh found that 78 non-communist governments promoted and often required countertrade deals in 1983. In 1964, there were only 17.

One form of countertrade is a "domestic content" rule, in which a government says it will allow foreign-made products to be imported into its country only if a set percentage of the parts are made in the importing country.

The AFL-CIO sought passage of a domestic content law covering imported automobiles last year, but the bill failed. The Reagan administration vigorously opposed the measure.

Walsh estimates that about 40 countries have domestic content requirements. U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock has been threatening to use new trade weapons that Congress gave the administration last year against countries that enforce such rules against U.S. exports.

Revenues for the three-month period were $3.37 million as opposed to $2.72 for the same period in 1983. A net income of $8,000 was also reported, over a $38,000 loss in 1983.

There were no per share earnings for the 1985 fiscal quarter, which was an improvement over a one cent per share loss last year.

Dawson Geophysical, founded in 1952 in Midland, is engaged in contract reflection seismograph exploration primarily in the Southwest and Rocky Mountain regions.

PAUL H. ROGERS, who has completed 38 years of service with Texaco, retired from the Texaco USA, Midland Operations Division, of Texas Inc. at the Andrews office, said J.E. King, district manager, Hobbs, N.M.

Rogers, who retired Jan. 1, 1985, is a native of Clyde and attended Clyde High School. He joined Texaco at McCamey as a roustabout in 1946. He served as a roustabout in Fort Stockton and Penwell. In Midland, he served as a pumper, head roustabout and assistant drilling foreman. In Andrews, he worked as an assistant drilling foreman and foreman of both drilling and production. He became production supervisor on June 1, 1981, in Andrews.

Rogers, a member of the Masonic Lodge No. 1024 in Andrews, is the recipient of the National Safety Council President's Medal for saving Byrd T. Mooney in 1951.

WILLIAM F. GREENE, general agent in Midland for the Franklin Life Insurance Co., Springfield, Ill., has earned one of the company's topsales honors, said President William J. Alley, CLU.

Greene has been named "honorable mention" qualifier for Franklin's Centurion Club.

Warm autumn lowers heating bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — Last year's warm autumn, all but forgotten in the midst of a particularly chilling winter, nevertheless left its mark on heating bills in the eastern half the country.

Home heating bills for October to December averaged $28 below normal in the East and Midwest, the government reported Wednesday.

The savings benefited heating customers in all regions except the Mountain and Pacific states, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Assessment and Information Services Center.

The three-month savings were estimated at $20.20 for the average natural gas customer, $31.70 for homes heated with electricity and $44.26 for those burning oil.

The heating costs are calculated by region, using weather information collected by the National Weather Service and calculating the effect of price changes for the three main sources of heat and estimated conservation efforts by Americans.

The center estimated that the average home in New England cost $307.33 to heat in the October-December period, 9 percent below normal. For other regions the estimate for the average home in that period was:

— Mid-Atlantic, $323.43, 16 percent below normal.

— East North Central, $308.21, 10 percent below normal.

— West North Central, $251.28, 3 percent below normal.

— South Atlantic, $215.07, 19 percent below normal.

— East South Central, $145.01, 22 percent below normal.

— West South Central, $161.24, 13 percent below normal.

Soft housing market means wary buyers, builders say

HOUSTON (AP) — Rising unemployment could keep Houston home foreclosures a problem in 1985, with lenders owning about one-fifth of the used homes for sale in the city, a mortgage firm president said.

Richard Wilkes, president of North American Mortgage, said 58 new mortgage lenders entered the Houston market last year, but they processed only half as many loans as they did the year earlier.

"Many of those lenders have packed up their bags and gone home," Wilkes said Sunday, appearing on a panel at the National Association of Home Builders Convention.

In 1983, some 28,000 new homes were started in Houston. But a year later, that number was cut in half.

However, some panelists said the cuts brought the Houston home market "just back to normal."

The boom of the early 1980s brought virtually every major corporate builder into the city, leaving Houston overcrowded with builders and lenders, according to Michael Inselmann, president of American Metro-Study.

Inselmann, however, said Houston could remain one of the nation's largest homebuilding markets simply because of its size.

But Jeffrey Payson, president of General Homes Corp., predicted Houston will become a smaller housing market this year.

"It's up to the builders to excite these people and learn a new way to sell," Payson said.

He said the decline in the inflation rate means buyers are not so concerned with mortgage buy-downs.

Until recently, builders would add as much as $10,000 to the price of a new home to pay for lower mortgage interest rates offered by buyers.

"We just went too far," Payson said.

Prices in some cases have declined and builders said people now are cautious, viewing a home purchase not so much as an investment.

Son's sends structures to space center

Five truckloads of stainless-steel structures - some 35 tons in all - departed this week from Son's Fabrication, Inc., between Odessa and Midland, bound for the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral.

When assembled and installed at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) launch pads, the fabricated components will represent a new safety system for handling the liquid hydrogen that powers U. S. space shuttles.

Prime contractor for the $500,000 elevated flare-stack system is Flaregas eorporation, Spring Valley, New York with the bulk of fabrication completed by the Odessa firm as sub-contractor.

David Bahar, project engineer for Flaregas, explained that the system bears similarities to flare-stacks used in refineries and petrochemical plants, a field in which his company has logged considerable experience. He added that his organization had worked with Son's Fabrication on several projects in recent years.

"We knew from experience," Bahar stated, "that we could rely on Son's for pre-qualified code welders to meet critical standards as well as a demanding schedule that included penalties for late delivery."

Terry Lawson, president of Son's, said that actual cutting, forming, and welding of the various assemblies could not begin until the third week in November. The completion and shipment this past week was within the required time frame.

Once erected on site, the four 100-foot tall structures will include two flare-stacks and supporting towers for each of two launch pads. Their purpose is to contain and burn off highly flammable hydrogen gases before and during both fueling and lift-off operations at the space center.

Volatile liquid hydrogen must be maintained at or below minus 300 degrees Fahrenheit. Above that temperature, it "boils off" in the form of gases or vapors. Heretofore, the normal "boil-off" which accompanies fuel transfer at Cape Kennedy has been captured in a piping system and vented underwater into burnponds, where it was flared at the water's surface.

The new system will divert escaping gases into one or more of the four elevated flare-stacks, each one equipped with thre continuously burning pilots to ignite the gases before they escape into the atmosphere. The flare stacks are mounted within guyed derricks or towers, supported laterally by roller-guides, but allowed to move freely in a vertical direction. This arrangement protects the structural integrity of the assembly from heat expansion and contraction throughout a broad range of temperatures.

Advertising salesman distressed by ads that shout at people

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — John O'Toole dislikes bad advertising, and finds little comfort in knowing somebody else made it. He figures bad ads hurt the entire business, an industry he has worked in for 32 years.

The ads O'Toole is talking about are those that employ stereotyped characters or badger you about "problems" such as having a dirty shirt collar.

"Some people still feel you can shout a slogan at people and not be sensitive to what they are sensitive to," the sharp-featured chairman of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications Inc. said, shaking his head in a recent interview.

That type of commercial, he said, is frequently cited in consumer surveys that find many people feel television advertising insults their intelligence.

O'Toole prefers to heed the advice of his former boss, Fairfax Cone.

"He used to say there is no such thing as a mass mind. Every advertisement must speak to an individual and elicit an individual response. There is still a lot of advertising being done where people don't understand that," O'Toole said.

O'Toole, who just turned 56, was born in Chicago. His father held a clerical job for the electric company. The younger O'Toole attended Northwestern University, from which he was graduated in 1951 with a bachelor's degree in journalism.

After two years in the Marines, O'Toole found the advertising business appealing and headed to New York to pursue it.

But the Madison Avenue executives were not bowled over by his collection of stories and poems, and the best offer he had was to work in the mailroom for about $45 a week, he recalled. He went back to Chicago within several weeks.

He got a job as a copywriter for what is now the BBDO ad agency. His first assignment was to work on magazine ads for a line of men's suits by Hart Schaffner & Marx.

He switched in 1954 to Foote, Cone & Belding, the Chicago-based ad agency where he would be involved as a copywriter in virtually every account it handled for the next decade.

Among the campaigns he is proudest of during that period were the "It's-loaded-with-soap" ads for S.O.S scouring pads. In the commercials, an S.O.S pad was put in a mixer and soap soon poured out onto the kitchen floor. O'Toole said the ads contributed to a marked increase in the product's market share.

In 1964, O'Toole moved to Los Angeles to take charge of the creative work coming out of that office. Three years later, he returned to Chicago as the creative director for the entire agency. "I stopped copywriting then because it was my job to get other people to do the job at the same level or better than I would have done it, to get people to transcend themselves," he said.

He became president of the ad agency in May 1969 and decided to operate out of New York. A year later, he became head of the parent company, Foote, Cone & Belding Communications. He became chairman of the board on Jan. 1, 1981.

The company's billings have grown from $76 million when he joined it to more than $1 billion, he said.

The company ranked as the sixth largest advertising company in the United States and ninth largest in the world in 1983, according to the marketing journal Advertising Age. Its advertising operations were conducted in 30 countries and employed 4,468 people at the end of 1983.

O'Toole's climb from the creative end of the business to top management is rather rare, but he dismisses it as a cyclical phenomena.

"When I came into the business, the advertising men headed the big agencies — such as David Ogilvy, Fairfax Cone and Leo Burnett," O'Toole said.

But he said television stimulated tremendous ad business growth in the 1960s, and Madison Avenue frequently turned to people with more business experience to lead the agencies.

The pendulum is swinging back in the 1980s, and he said more and more graduates of the creative side are moving toward the top ad management jobs.

O'Toole makes his home in Greenwich, Conn. He has been married to the same woman for nearly 30 years, and he and his wife, Phyllis, have two daughters.

Although he is no longer involved in producing ads, O'Toole still writes.

His book, "The Trouble with Advertising," was published in 1981, and as chairman of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, he frequently writes or speaks on issues affecting the industry.

He is concerned, for instance, that a move toward advertising two products in the same 30-second commercial slot normally alloted for one will clutter the airwaves and make television less effective as an advertising medium.

He backs the notion of global marketing, which holds that there are some products — such as toothpaste, insecticides and all-purpose cleaners — for which a single advertising strategy can be employed across national borders at considerable savings.

Advertising's job, O'Toole said, is to show people how to improve the quality of their lives.

"We have to provide that link (between quality of life and a specific product) in a way that cuts through the mundane clutter of all the competitors in a way that makes the link fresh, exciting and compelling," he said.

MOBIL

In addition to selling $1.1 billion worth of assets between 1980 and 1984, Mobil has closed five refineries since 1981. Last year it reduced earnings by $110 million to reflect the expenses of closing an 8-year-old refinery in Wilhemshaven, West Germany.

The remaining refineries have a capacity of processing 2.1 million barrels of petroleum daily, but because of declining demand for oil products are operating at about 72 percent of capacity.

The cutbacks have also led to job cuts. Mobil's workforce, not counting Montgomery Ward or its recently acquired Superior Oil Co., has fallen 14.3 percent from the 110,486 people on its payrolls as of the end of 1981.

More cuts are likely.

But, Murray said, even if Mobil executives and outside financial advisers decide to sell a marginal business, the decision may not be carried out until a later date, when markets are more receptive to such a sale.

"I think you are going to see a continued shakedown in the oil industry, a continued consolidation, a continued closing of refineries, a continued closing of marginal service stations, withdrawals from certain areas," he said.

"When this shakeout ends, the efficient companies are going to come out very nicely because there's not going to be a tremendous increase in total world demand (for oil) but there's going to be more demand available for those who are around. So the key, of course, is for the companies to be around and be efficient."

Few doubt the ability of Murray, a father of five who began his career in the oil industry as a 75-cent-an-hour mail room clerk at Gulf Oil in 1949. He joined Mobil when he was turned down for a special trainfig program at Gulf.

Last year, he earned $830,000 in salary and short-term performance incentives and also received $220,000 in long-term incentive awards earned in earlier years.

"Murray is good," said Lazier. "He's a guy who is sharp, nimble."

Murray also is described as "down to earth."

He still rides a commuter train and subway to work in Manhattan from his home in the Long Island suburb of Syosset. A fan of the New York Islanders, his free time is sometimes spent watching the hockey team compete.

And although the image of a corporate brawler is not one that Mobil cultivates — the company is an active supporter of the arts — Murray is not apologetic.

"We're not exactly a company that has a reputation for not fighting," he said with a chuckle.

Mobil's agressiveness came up in a discussion of Mobil's plans to seek shareholder approval Feb. 22 of a defense against a hostile takeover. Murray said he was not aware of any such bid but that adopting the defense measures appeared to be "a prudent thing to do."

He dismissed the suggestion that Mobil was trying to send a warning to any potential suitor. "Do you really think anybody ever thought there would not be a fight with Mobil?" he asked.

Another area of concern for Mobil is the supply of oil.

Despite its idle refineries, Mobil is a partner with Saudi Arabia in a new refining and petrochemical venture, in a continuation of what has proved to be a costly strategy of securing ties to the oil-rich kingdom.

When prices were rising through the 1970s, long-term supply contracts with Saudi Arabia were highly profitable.

PIPELINE

Basin," said Doug Krenz, manager of transportation services for Northern Natural Resources. "We will have lateral lines going in a number of directions to serve adjacent counties, such as Ward, Winkler, Martin and Midland. The fact that a line is in place and carbon dioxide remains attractively priced will probably stimulate additional EOR activity." Ector County is considered to be one of the counties with the highest potential for enhanced oil recovery.

Northern Natural Resources has been actively purchasing right-of-way for the pipeline, and expects to begin ditching by July. No contracts have been awarded as yet on construction of the pipeline, but contracts have been signed with Japanese and Italian firms for a major share of the steel line pipe for the project. Mitsubishi International Corp. and Siderius Inc. will furnish most of the 16, 20, 24 and 26-inch pipe, with pipe production to begin immediately.

The line will be built in one stretch from north to south, beginning just southeast of the town of Crane and terminating three miles north of Denver City. The majority of actual construction should be completed by October 1985, with pressure-testing and start-up to take place by the end of the year. The first year of actual operation will be 1986. Volumes in the pipeline will not be significant until the late 1980s.

According to Krenz the pipeline has been in the planning stages since mid-1983.

GUIDE TO SMALL BUSINESS

Store owners should know of bills and due dates in advance

I'm always filling out forms and paying one kind of tax or another. Any suggestions on how to keep tax time from always sneaking up on me?

The owner-manager of a successful retail store or service shop takes care of bills by: Knowing in advance the amount and due date of bills. Making sure that funds are on hand for paying the bills. Paying bills on or before the due date in order to get the discounts offered by the suppliers and getting expert advice to keep abreast of new developments that may make bill paying more efficient.

The owner-manager of a small business plays two roles in managing taxes. In one role, he or she is a debtor. In the other, an agent. In the role of debtor, he or she is liable for various taxes and paying them is part of business obligations. For example, each year an owner owes federal income taxes which arepaid out of business eanings. In the role of agent, the owner-manager collects various taxes and passes the funds on to the appropriate government agency. For example, each pay day federal income and Social Security taxes are deducted from employee wages. Whether agent or debtor, the small business owner is responsible for paying his or her own taxes and those which are collected from others.

Manage taxes as you manage any other aspect of your business. Make sure that you file tax reports when they are due and pay the tax on time. Failure to file or pay taxes when due can bring penalties (fines and/or jail sentences) and interest on the tax money involved. Make sure that you have the cash on hand when a particular tax is due. Some owner-managers do it by putting the requiredfunds in a separate bank account on a systematic basis. Others do it by arranging for loans at the appropriate times.

I am interested in stating my own home business. But, I was told I need to file forms with numerous agencies. True?

A business operated from the home is subject to many laws and regulations that affect all businesses, large or small. Consulting an attorney is a valuable first step for anyone considering a home-based business.

Most political jurisdictions now have codes, a zoning board and an appeals board which regulate home businesses. Many localities have registration requirements for new businesses. You will need to obtain a work certificate or license from thestate. Your business name must be registered. Usually a saleseax number must be obtained. A separate business telephone and bank account are required. A business must keep accurate and complete financial records and is liable for all taxes. If you have employees, you are responsible for withholding income, social security taxes, workers' compensation and unemployment insurance. You must comply with minimum wage and employee health lasw. Also, there are various federal and state forms you will need to fill out to start a small business.

Many resources are available to those embarking on their own new enterprise. Your local library has publications and information on everything you need to know about home business. Chambers of Commerce often have contacts with local businesses who might use your services or can point out an unfilled need in yourcommunity. You can also contact the SBA and request publication 115A, Frer Publications listing or 115B, For Sale Publications, listing.

I am a small business owner. An insurance agent recently suggested I obtain business life insurance for myself on behalf of my company. Is this a worthwhile expense?

Business life insurance provides protection for the owner-manager of a small business. When an owner-manager dies, this type of insurance can provide a financial cushion for his or her family and employees.

When the life savings of an owner-manager are invested in a small business, what happens when he or she dies? Does the business close? Does the family have to stand by and watch those savings go down the drain? You can protect your business and family with business life insurance. Make sure that the insurance covers every aspect of your business.

Business life insurance can be written for numerous specific purposes. Chief among these are: A sole-proprietorship insurance plan to provide for maintenance of a business upon the death of the sole-proprietor. A partnership insurance plan to retire your partner's interest at death, and vice versa. A corporation insurance plan to retire your shareholder's interest at death or vice versa. Keyemployee protection. This insurance helps to prevent a setback that develops from the loss of a vital employee.

Once an owner-manager has set up an insurance program for his or her business,it should be checked periodically. Your agent or broker can provide technical advise about the arrangement of policies.

Should I, as a small businessowner, obtain an accounting service to assist me with the business' books?

Many small businesses have the potential for success. Yet, because of poor financial management, many small businesses fail. In some cases, the poor results are caused by inadequate financial records. In others, the records may be good, but the owner-manager lacks the ability or experience to use them. In achieving effective financial management, the services of a public accountant can be helpful.

An accountant can help design a system for recording the information which the owner-manager needs to control finances and make profitable decisions. The accountant, with the necessary facts and figures, sets up a system according to particular needs. The following systems can be set up: cash receipts, recordingthe cash which the business receives; cash disbursements, record and summarize monthly income; purchases, record the purchases of merchandise brought for processing or resale; payroll, record the wages of employees and their deductions; equipment, record the firm's capital assets; inventory, record the firm's investment in stock; accounts receivable, record the balances which customers owe the firm; accounts payable, record what the firm owes its creditors and suppliers.

Tan at Number One Mane Place

Are you dreading those first few weeks at the pool this summer? There's the embarrassment of being the last to get a base tan. Then you must endure the endless burning, peeling, and burning again.

Number One Mane Place's Suntana System can put and end to this summer drudgery. To make a good deal even better, during February they are offering two unbelievable specials. You can get ten visits for $50 or, for just $295 you will be entitled to unlimited visits for one full year.

There'll be no waiting for summertime heat, no sun, no sweat, and no burn. The system utilizes a tanning bed, which is not the same thing as a tanning booth. It's easy to burn and work up quite a sweat in boothes, just like out under the sun. Controlled tanning with the United States made Suntana System can eliminate the risk of burning and the unpleasant heat exposure.

Number One Mane Place is a full service salon, so they don't stop with just giving you a wonderful tan. You can get your tan, your perm, and your skin care products all in one stop. In fact, Number One Mane Place, in the Texas American Bank Building, is ready to meet all of your beauty needs. From their tanning beds to non-surgical face lifts, from hairstyles for men and women to manicures, from hair and skin care products to shoe shines and dyes, they have it all.

What's a non-surgical facelift? It's the ideal way for getting rid of all those telltale little wrinkles. Derma Magic has developed an all natural treatment which actually removes wrinkles.

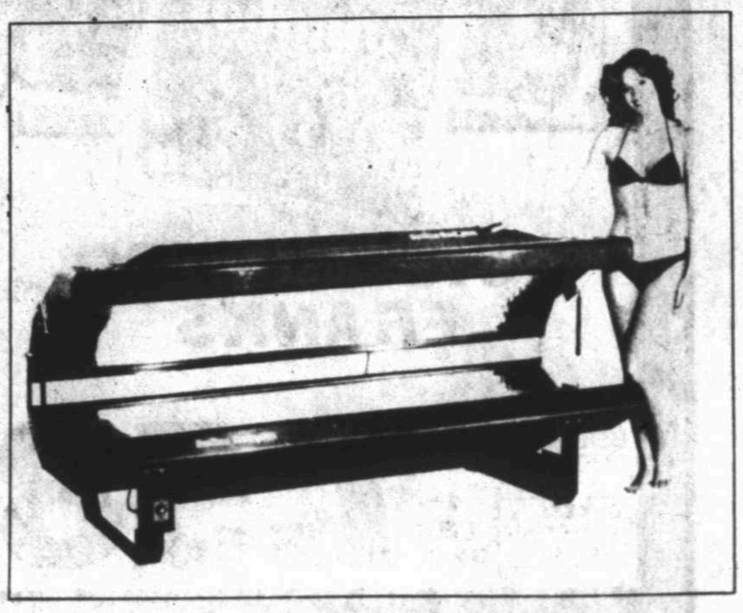
Hairstyles, hairstyles, and more hairstyles! Number One Mane Place will give you one that fits your personality. The men's and women's hairstylists at Number One Mane Place know more than how to do great hairstyles, they know how to listen to you. Vicki Crawford and Pam Anthony, along with Ronnie Y'Barra, and Vie Cross are well qualified to help you. They can do perms, cuts, trims, color treatments, frosts, lash/brow dyes and eye brow arches.

They also do special conditioning treatments for damaged hair. Depending on your need, they can use the K-Pack conditioner by Joico, the PPT or Climatress by Redken, or the Humectress by Nexxus. Ask one of these experts which conditioner is best for you.

These professionals don't forget anything, not even your nails. Karen is their manicure specialist, while Vicki Crawford is adept at applying sculptured nail tips.

Another pleasant suprise is that Number One Mane Place does not stop there. Their shoe artist, Otis Gilbert, says they have their customers' needs covered from head to toe. Speaking of toes, what about those scuffed up shoes you're wearing? Otis is ready to give them the best shine in town, while you relax. Wear 'em in or bring in a sack full, he'll do the job right. He also does an excellent job dying shoes. If you haven't met Otis, now's the time- he'll make your day with his pleasant personality and great shines.

Is there any question left in your mind about what it means to be a full service salon? Number One Mane Place serves you in ways other shops never dreamed of helping you. In fact, they are even open on Monday, just like Tuesday through Saturday 8:30-6:00. So whether you need a tan, non-surgical facelift, new hairstyle, perm, cut, manicure, or shoe shine give them a call at 683-2532 for an appointment or go visit them in the Texas American Bank Building. You'll see why they're called NUMBER ONE Mane Place!



Number One Mane Place brings the innovative Suntana System to Midland. Suntana is the perfect way to get a tan without burning. Call 683-2532 and ask about the incredible February special.

Manpower says 'Welcome' twice

1985 is a year of new beginnings for Manpower Temporary Services, the world's largest temporary service. First, Manpower extends a big welcome to Margie Marko as its new Midland manager. Margie's education and background bring a professional attitude and expertise to Manpower. She holds a B.S. degree from Texas A & I and an M.L.A. degree from SMU. Margie's background includes teaching, personnel, financial sales procedures and computer assistance. Manpower is proud to present Margie Marko as its new Midland manager.

A second welcome is to Manpower's new IBM-PC. After several years and thousands of research dollars, Manpower has made a new breakthrough in personal computer training. This exclusive program is "hands-on" training that will enable a temporary worker to eventually perform all the functions that support work stations use.

What does this mean to you, the customer? It means that Manpower's exclusive training program will enable them to expand the realm of office automation that is untouched by other temporary services. It allows Manpower to assist preferred employees on selected word processing and data entry programs. The training is "hands-on", and you can't get much better than that.

Manpower will continue its standards of excellence in offering temporary service that offers a QQS guarantee for all of your temporary help needs. Their QQS guarantee stands for Quality, Quantity and Service. MANPOWER IS COMMITTED TO QUALITY. Through scientific testing, we can match qualified employees with perspective employers and guarantee better performance and higher productivity. MANPOWER IS COMMITTED TO QUANTITY — Manpower professionals are willing to spend however many hours and make as many phone calls as it takes to satisfy a customer's needs. MANPOWER IS COMMITTED TO SERVICE – They are in business to serve you, the customer, and they do it with a smile.

Manpower's complete temporary service will meet your total temporary help needs. The Office Service Division offers qualified and guaranteed secretaries, typists, accounting cerks, data processing operators, draftsmen, and geo-technicians, etc. The Industrial Service Division offers guaranteed, hard-working laborers, furniture movers, welders, warehousemen, mechanics, cleaning people, etc.

Margie Marko, manager, and Vicki Hicks, service representative, are Manpower professionals that are commited to excellence. Call 683-4624 for all your temporary employment needs. Margie says, "Ask us. We'll answer with a smile."

Manpower's new Midland manager, Margie Marko, shows service representative Vicki Hicks how to utilize Manpower's new IBM Personal Computer. Call 683-4624 to find out more about Manpower.
