Energy deputy, Bush might be oil, gas hope

From Wire Reports

Now that President-elect George Bush has nominated a nuclear power expert to head the Department of Energy, oil and gas producers can only hope the department's No. 2 person will have expertise in their field.

Bush on Thursday nominated retired Adm. James D. Watkins, a former nuclear submarine commander, as energy secretary, a decision reached after what aides said was a tough choice between someone with nuclear energy experience and someone from an oil state.

"What we've got to do now is make sure (Watkins) understands the country's fossil-fuel energy problems so we can get a deputy, a No. 2 man, that has a total knowledge of the oil and gas industry," said Harry Spannaus, president of Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

"We realize he doesn't have expertise in the fossil-fuel energy business, but we also realize that President-elect Bush was interested in getting someone with a nuclear background so he could get on the immediate problems that we have in nuclear energy," Spannaus added.

In Thursday afternoon's nomination speech, Bush went out of his way to seek to reassure oil and gas producers about his choice of the retired admiral. Watkins won praise last year from AIDS activists for heading a presidential commission that issued a tough report criticizing government lethargy in dealing with the disease.

'I'll put it this way: They've got a president of the United States that came out of the oil and gas industry, that knows it and knows it well,'" said Bush.

"I don't want to send any signals that indicated less than a continuing interest in a strong independent domestic oil and gas business. ... Both Jim and I feel that a domestic oil and gas industry is vital to our national security needs."

Watkins pledged to draw into his department " oil and gas leadership that can work with me and give me that kind of initial strength I need."

Several trade associations representing independent producers have made formal endorsements of candidates for the deputy secretary job.

The Energy Department faces a multibillion dollar cleanup of the nation's aging and increasingly unsafe nuclear weapons plants.

But some in the Oil Patch said the choice of Watkins may indicate that the domestic oil and gas industry's continuing problems won't get top billing under Bush, who made his money in the Permian Basin oil fields.

"I hope that he doesn't feel those (nuclear power) problems are more important to the country," said John E. Watson, senior vice president of Mitchell Energy Corp. in Houston and president of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners. "I hope it's a good choice."

Jim Stafford, executive director of the National Association of Royalty Owners, said most Oklahoma royalty owners attending a meeting Thursday in Oklahoma City expressed disappointment at Bush's choice.

"We naturally would have preferred someone with experience in our area," said Stafford. "This most certainly does not address any of the issues affecting independent domestic producers."

Members of the Midland Lee band march down Midkiff in preparation for the inaugural parade.

Band tunes up in daily 'parade'

From Staff Reports

It's not everyday you a find a full-blown band marching down Midkiff Drive, but that's exactly what the Midland Lee High School Rebel band has been doing in preparation for the George Bush inauguration.

"We need a big street to practice on," said Lee Band Director Randy Storie, noting Midkiff is the closest thing width-wise to Washington, D.C.'s, Pennsylvania Avenue.

From now until President-elect George Bush's inauguration on Jan. 20, Storie says the band will be using a police escort and Midkiff Drive as its daily practicing route.

"We've been doing this every afternoon," said Storie, who along with the band, marches a two-mile route that requires local police to clear the way both behind and ahead.

To date, the band has raised more than $75,000. The 200 musicians need about $150,000 to cover travel and boarding costs, organizers said. Much of the band's travel fund was delpleted earlier this year for attendance at state marching contests. However, contributions continue to come in.

Storie says the band is prepared, but admits it still has plenty of work to do, including learning a new arrangement entitled "Inaugural Fanfare & Giant," an arrangement composed by former Midland Lee student Robert Rumblow.

In the meantime, it's "Dixie" at 4 p.m. and a little inconvenience for motorists on Midkiff Road north of Neely Avenue, where from now to Inauguration Day they will get a close and personal look at the band.

Local King events to take theme 'Rock of Ages'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A weekend of celebrating the life of American civil-rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. will focus on "The Black Family: A Rock of Ages," according to organizational sponsors of the "Rock of Ages."

The event, scheduled to celebrate King's Jan. 15, 1929, birth in Atlanta, Ga., will be celebrated tonight and Saturday in the Northeast YMCA at 2301 Butternut Lane off Scharbauer Draw and Sunday afternoon in a parade and church service in southeast Midland.

"Our emphasis this year is on the family — a solid 'Rock,'" said James E. Fuller, immediate past president of the Midland branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). "We feel that this is a very appropriate theme in that Dr. King was a very excellent family man."

The celebration is being sponsored by the NAACP, the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc., and the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance.

"We also are using this theme to underscore the fact that the black family is a very positive experience," Fuller said, "and to negate some of the negativism which has been not only spoken but written by sociologists and non-sociologists about the deterioration of the black family."

Books can be 'friends' in time of emotional need

EDITOR'S NOTE: In observance of "The Year of the Young Reader" programs being held this week in Midland, the Reporter-Telegram is publishing a six-part series detailing several issues that affect children and their reading skills. In today's last installment, the idea that literature may be used as a children's counseling tool is explored.

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

When things are going well in life and you're in a relaxed, couch-potato kind of mood, it's fun to read.

When things aren't going well in life, it seems the pain just won't go away and there is no solace in sight, it may be advisable to read.

Experts call the latter practice "bibliotherapy," or the use of literature as an emotional counseling tool.

Bibliotherapy can be a useful practice that lets children or pre-teens understand others their age share the same problems.

Maybe a hurt, confused child thinks his parents don't love him anymore because they are getting a divorce.

Perhaps a pre-teen feels instead like a walking hormone with big feet and can't understand why his face is covered with "zits."

Or the older high school student may not understand why his seemingly perfect best friend has just committed suicide.

THE YOUNG READER:
new words ... new worlds

Whatever the case may be, it's not unusual that children find themselves in situations of stress, pain and anger, explained Glenn Woods, Midland Independent School District's director of counseling and testing services.

"They feel, 'No one can understand how I feel,'" Woods said. "Turning a student to the right book can help him see that 'Someone has felt like I felt and they dealt with it'."

For a child suffering from mild emotional discomfort, reading can do two other things, Woods added.

Reading can entertain the child and take the pressure off his mind; "give him a time of peace."

Secondly, a child may read about a character in a book who displayed a certain strength and think to himself, "That's someone I would like to be."

"When I've had a problem with a broken heart or illness, I go to the library," added Dr. Philip Gough, a professor of psychology and reading at the University of Texas at Austin.

Gough said that it is sometimes better to get wisdom about life from a fictional book rather than from a scholarly text.

Problems that children go through are as diverse as they themselves, experts agree. A few of the more common ones include:

- Physical development;
- Moving into new social groups within the school;
- Relations within the family;
- Divorce or illness;
- Death.

Midland psychologist Harvey Durbin, whose practice includes children, said he has often suggested children read certain books to help them in their development.

"It gives him knowledge about what's going on and helps him identify with his problem," Durbin explained.

He warns that parents shouldn't pick up just "anything off the shelf," or neglect to scan the book before suggesting it to children.

OSHA dramatically rewrites workplace exposure limits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government today drastically revised standards for workplace exposure to hazardous materials, regulating 164 substances for the first time and reducing exposure limits for hundreds more in an action it said could prevent 700 deaths and 55,000 illnesses a year.

The new regulations, two years in the making, should significantly curtail the risk of illness to 21 million Americans who work in general industry and are potentially exposed to toxic and hazardous substances, the Labor Department said.

Of that number, 4.5 million workers currently face exposure to hazardous materials at rates above the new limits, the department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration said in releasing the regulations, the first large-scale changes to exposure standards in nearly 20 years.

The changes should cost affected establishments an average of $6,000 a year each, the government said. Those costs would range from $77,400 a year for petroleum refineries to $360 annually for auto dealers. The average per-worker cost is $150.

The department considered the limits for more than 400 industrial chemicals and substances in a single review, departing from a policy of case-by-case study that had produced new, comprehensive standards for just 24 substances in the past 17 years.

"We were able to make a 20-year leap forward in the level of worker protection in a relatively short time," said John A. Pendergrass, the assistant labor secretary who heads OSHA.

Flurry of mishaps follows snow

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A mixture of ice and snow is suspected to have caused a handful of minor automobile accidents today, which included two local school district buses. No injuries were reported.

It could have been much worse.

By 6 a.m. today, a mixture of ice and snow had moved into Midland-Odessa, dumping a trace of precipitation over a wide area that extended north to Lubbock and east to San Angelo, a National Weather Service forecaster reported from the agency's headquarters at Midland International Airport.

A winter weather advisory was to remain in effect through tonight for both cities. Forecasters were cautioning residents to take extra care while driving on slushy roadways.

The combination of cold air moving into the state from a large area of surface high pressure centered over northwest Colorado and an intense storm center over southwest New Mexico that was moving steadily east was expected to result in snow and sleet accumulations of 1-2 inches over portions of West Texas.

The Texas Department of Public Safety today said streets were wet with some icy patches and blowing snow. Icy roadways were being blamed for a few minor accidents. However, none of the fender-benders were serious enough to cause injuries.

Wes Washam, who heads up the Midland Independent School District Transportation Department, said two school buses were involved in minor accidents this morning. However, no students were aboard the buses when the wrecks occurred and no injuries were reported.

Midland Police Department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said only two other minor accidents had been reported within the city limits since 6 a.m. today.

Forecasters were calling for a 40 percent chance of snow tonight, with the possibility of precipitation ending after midnight.

Decreasing cloudiness is expected by Saturday morning and winds will blow from the east to southeast at 5 to 10 mph.

A warming trend Saturday will produce fair skies with a high temperature near 50 degrees. Winds will be out of the south at 10 to 15 mph.

Thursday's high of 50 degrees at midnight was 27 degrees cooler than the record of 77, set on that date in 1957. The overnight low of 25 was 18 degrees warmer than the record of 7, set on that date in 1969.

STATE

A winter weather advisory was in effect through tonight for the northwest half of North Texas and a winter storm watch was in effect for the south central portion of North Texas through tonight.

The combination of cold air moving into the state from a large area of surface high pressure centered over northwest Colorado and an intense storm center over southwest New Mexico that was moving steadily east was expected to result in snow and sleet accumulations of 1-3 inches over west and central portions of North Texas.

Snow fell in the San Angelo area early today and a mixture of sleet was reported south of Lubbock and ice pellets fell at Midland and sleet was reported at Stephenville. Some very light sleet was reported before dawn in some areas of Dallas and Fort Worth.

Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms were reported across South Central and Southeast Texas with patches of rain and scattered showers across the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

The State Highway Department said snow and sleet was reported on roadways in and around Lubbock, Abilene, Brownwood, San Angelo and Odessa. Some was formed on bridges in the Hill Country, including those along stretches of Interstate 10.

Forecasts called for a winter storm watch for the south central portion of North Texas and a winter weather advisory for the western half of North Texas through tonight.

There will be snow flurries over the Panhandle through tonight. It will be cloudy elsewhere with rain, sleet and snow over most of North Texas extending into the north portions of South Texas with isolated thunderstorms through tonight.

There will be clearing skies from west to east Saturday.

Lows tonight will be near 20 in the Panhandle and in the 20s over most of the rest of West Texas, in the 30s in North Texas and in the 30s and 40s in South Texas.

NATION

Californians were recovering today from 100-mile-an-hour Santa Ana winds that wrought havoc with traffic and travelers, while much of the South was getting out the umbrellas.

Thousands of truckers, campers and air travelers were stranded in Southern California Thursday when hurricane-force winds damaged buildings, turned over big trucks, forced authorities to close many roads and shut the Ontario International Airport for 10 hours.

High-wind warnings were posted this morning for the mountains of Southern California, as well as for the northern third of the Pacific Coast, Montana and parts of New Mexico.

Bush to take pre-inaugural fishing trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — With his Cabinet selections finally completed, President-elect Bush heads for the Florida Keys today for a weekend of fishing before returning to the capital for the whirlwind of events culminating in his inauguration.

Bush was bound for Islamorada, Fla., the self-proclaimed sportfishing capital of the world, to fish in the Everglades with buddies including Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady and Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.

The president-elect, who once hoped to appoint the whole Cabinet before Christmas, finally finished the task Thursday by naming former naval chief James D. Watkins as energy secretary and tapping former Education Secretary William J. Bennett to lead anti-drug efforts.

Bush had promised to bring "new faces" to Washington, but only three of the 14 departments will be run by newcomers to Washington. Bush wound up recruiting seven current or former Reagan Cabinet officers for top jobs and filling two others with retiring Republican lawmakers.

He also enlisted Edward Derwinski, an undersecretary of state and former congressman, to head the new Department of Veterans Affairs, and kept William Webster on as CIA director.

Labor Secretary-designate Elizabeth Dole will be the sole woman in the Cabinet. It will have two Hispanics — Lauro Cavazos at education and Manuel Lujan at interior — and one black, Louis Sullivan at health and human services.

Bush assembled his Cabinet at Blair House for an informal meeting followed by a dinner with their spouses. He told reporters beforehand:

"I'm going to tell them to think big. I'm going to tell them to challenge the system. I'm going to tell them to ... adhere to the highest ethical standards."

He also said, more in earnest than in jest, "I'm going to tell them I don't like kiss-and-tell books." He added that he wants them to "be on the record as much as possible."

"I'd rather see their name on the record than insidiously leaked to somebody," Bush said.

"I don't mind differences being aired. I want them to be frank. I want them to fight hard for their position, and then, after I make the call, I'd like to have the feeling that they'd be able to support the president," Bush said.

"I'll tell them to work with Congress. We're going to have some fights with Congress, but we're not going to approach it as though we're dealing with the enemy," the president-elect said.

Watkins, 61, the chief of naval operations until 1986 under Reagan, is a nuclear warfare expert who headed the presidential commission on AIDS that called last year for new legislation to protect the civil rights of victims of the deadly disease.

The retired admiral said he is determined to make sure that "safety is never subverted (and) the environment is adequately protected" while nuclear energy is developed.

Bennett, 45, a longtime two-pack-a-day smoker, said he would kick the habit before he is sworn in as director of national drug control policy.

Bush will be sworn in Friday.

However, Watkins' distinguished military career, which includes a four-year stint as chief of naval operations under President Reagan, drew praise.

"His military background may come to bear on the national security implications of the current non-energy policy," Stafford said. "That's a very positive signal."

Watkins, 61, has no background in the commercial energy field, but he has been associated with the Navy's nuclear operations since early in his career, which was capped by a four-year stint as chief of naval operations, the top Navy officer.

In 1958, Watkins studied nuclear engineering at Oak Ridge, Tenn., National Laboratory, one of the links in the nationwide nuclear bomb-making network. He later taught at Navy nuclear training centers and worked in the Naval Reactors Division of the Atomic Energy Commission, a forerunner of the Energy Department.

At a news conference following the announcement of his nomination as energy secretary, Watkins said grappling with the nuclear weapons plants problem would be his "first order of business" before his Senate confirmation hearings start.

Watkins' selection came just hours after President Reagan formally endorsed an Energy Department report recommending that $81 billion be spent over the next two decades to modernize the nuclear bomb factories. It acknowledged that budget constraints would make it difficult to carry out the plan.

One of the most immediate threats posed by the nuclear weapons plant problem is the possibility that the United States could run low on tritium, a short-lived radioactive gas that Energy Department reactors produce for atomic warheads.

Last year, the last of the tritium-producing reactors was shut down for safety reasons, leaving the country at least temporarily without fresh supplies of the gas.

The Pentagon has said the reactors must be restarted soon in order to avoid jeopardizing the nation's nuclear arsenal, but officials have not said just when the problem would become critical. No date has been set for restarting the tritium-producing reactors, although Reagan's report said it was unlikely before late 1989.

Although the nuclear problem is likely to give Watkins his most immediate headaches, the new energy secretary will face challenges on other fronts. Among them are:

- An emerging battle in Congress over whether to raise the federal gasoline tax as a way of curbing gasoline consumption and cutting the federal budget deficit. Debate over a possible tax on oil imports also is likely to heighten this year.
- A growing wave of oil imports that has increased concern about U.S. dependence on OPEC. Some economists and members of Congress have said the government should act now to insulate the nation better against a supply disruption — particularly in the volatile Middle East — that could force up oil prices.
- Calls by the natural gas industry for ending all controls on gas prices. Consumer groups are opposed.
- Deciding whether to open up more federal lands in Alaska and elsewhere for oil and gas exploration. Conservations are strongly opposed; the oil companies say such additional exploration is vital to halting a recent slide in domestic oil production.

German firm probed in chemical plant scandal

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A prosecutor today said he has opened a criminal investigation into the Imhausen-Chemie company, which the United States claims helped build a chemical weapons plant in Libya.

Werner Botz, chief prosecutor in Offenburg, said he opened the probe after reading a report on the dispute in this week's Stern magazine.

Stern, a nationwide news magazine known for its investigative reporting, said Imhausen-Chemie was involved in the Libyan plant, along with I.B.I. Engineering of Frankfurt and the Hamburg-based Pen Tsao medical material company.

Imhausen-Chemie has denied any connection to the plant in Rabta, 60 miles outside Tripoli. News reports and U.S. government sources have said Imhausen-Chemie provided much of the technical equipment for the facility, which U.S. officials said was built to manufacture poison gas.

Hans Frey, a spokesman for the prosecutor's office in Karlsruhe, near Offenburg, said the possible charge being investigated is "a violation of the export control law." He said he had no other information.

TOXIC

"We also have saved the American taxpayers tens of millions of dollars that otherwise would have been spent over a long period of time in individual rulemakings."

OSHA placed 164 substances under exposure limits for the first time, reduced allowable limits for 212 others and let stand existing limits on 52 substances. The new limits take effect March 1 and employers must be in compliance by Sept. 1. Exposure limits will remain unchanged for 169 additional substances not covered by the two-year review.

Included in the revisions were some of the most commonly used industrial substances, among them chloroform, carbon monoxide, hydrogen cyanide and perchloroethylene. Wood dust and grain dust are among substances subject to exposure limits for the first time. The limits for maximum workplace exposure to acetone, carbon disulfide and styrene also were among those reduced.

OSHA said it needed to conduct further review before setting limits for exposure to asphalt, fibrous glass dust and mineral wool. The agency said it is looking to strengthen worker protection further by considering rules on medical surveillance, respirators and exposure monitoring.

The new standards apply only to general industry but will extended, following additional proceedings, to construction and maritime industries as well.

The government said the changes should help reduce work-related incidence of cancer, liver and kidney ailments, and heart and respiratory illnesses by 55,000 cases each year. The tighter standards also should cut the number of lost workdays each year caused by exposure to hazardous and toxic substances, by 500,000 each year, OSHA said. It did not provide estimates of deaths, illnesses and lost workdays currently lost due to exposure.

New limits were first suggested two years ago and then subjected to 13 public hearings and a public comment period during which more than 90 companies, trade associations and labor unions testified and submitted documents for OSHA to consider.

KING

In the weekend celebration, emphasis will be on "the positive aspects of the black family and the fact that the black family still is very much alive and, for the most part, well," Fuller said.

Celebration activities will include:

— "Family-Fest 1989: A Celebration of the King," 7 p.m. to midnight today in the Northeast YMCA. The Family-Fest will include the sharing of family picture albums, a dramatic review of Dr. King's life, a visual record of King and, at 9 p.m., family-fun games "of a black persuasion."

— "Family-Fest 1989: A Celebration of the King," 10 a.m. to midnight Saturday in the Northeast YMCA. The segment will continue with the weekend exhibit of "family pride in photographs," a 10 a.m. Children's Story Hour, a 10 a.m. youth-in-dialogue program, 1 p.m.-4 p.m. YMCA open house; 5 p.m.- 7 p.m. exhibits reflecting the "community family"; 7 p.m.-9 p.m. readings on the black family; 7 p.m.-midnight, family fun games.

— "The Black Family: Rock of Ages" at 1:30 p.m. Sunday at the Federated Women's Club and Washington Gymnasium at 1600 E. Wall Ave. The parade of families will move from the gymnasium to the Greater St. Luke AME Church at 401 S. Adams St. Celebration will be at 3 p.m.

A major objective of the weekend is to demonstrate that the stereotyping of black families as deteriorating and without structure does not accurately reflect reality, Fuller suggested.

The Rev. Hadley Edwards, a Methodist minister who is president of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, said reports that the "black family is in demise" are inaccurate.

Even without the presence of a mother or a father in a family unit, "a lot of times there is still family," Edwards said. "The black family still exists."

"In female-only households, there are uncles and other males in the black community who serve as surrogate fathers," he said.

The theme of the "Rock of Ages" weekend will be centered around Psalm 144, which "talks about the strength of 'the Rock' " — the Lord.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

har-poon'

harpoon — (noun) When people hunt for large sea animals such as whales, the weapon they use is often a "harpoon." A "harpoon" is a stick-like weapon tipped with a steel barb. In the movie "Jaws," a "harpoon" was used to try and kill the Great White shark. "Harpoon" is probably derived from the Dutch word "harpoen," which can be traced back even further to Norse and Greek words meaning "stick."

Accelerator safer way to make weapons material, DOE says

WASHINGTON (AP) — An unreleased Department of Energy report concludes that a linear accelerator could produce one of the key ingredients in nuclear weapons more cheaply, quickly and safely than new production reactors could.

Such an accelerator would produce far less radioactive waste than a nuclear reactor and "should be more readily acceptable to the public," according to a draft summary of the report obtained by The Associated Press on Thursday.

The U.S. supply of tritium, a radioactive gas used to produce nuclear warheads, is threatened by the crumbling condition of the Energy Department's existing weapons plants and reactors.

The report, prepared by scientists at the Brookhaven and Los Alamos national laboratories and at Westinghouse-Hanford Co. in Washington state, concluded that an accelerator could produce enough tritium to meet all U.S. weapons needs.

An accelerator is essentially a long tunnel in which subatomic particles are whipped at high speeds until they crash into a target, in this case lithium clad in aluminium. The resulting collision produces tritium.

According to the report, using such an accelerator to make tritium would not produce any "long-lived" nuclear wastes and "costs associated with safety and environmental concerns should be minimal."

In addition, it said, an accelerator "does not have the licensing requirements associated with nuclear reactors and should be more readily acceptable to the public."

Last July, the department recommended building two new production reactors, one at the Savannah River complex near Aiken, S.C., and the other at the Idaho Falls National Laboratory in Idaho.

At present, the nation's only facilities for producing tritium are three reactors at Savannah River, but all three are shut down either for maintenance or because of safety problems.

Department officials have said that at least one of the reactors should be back on line this year, but the start-up date continues to slip as more problems are found.

The department's Energy Research Advisory Board looked "briefly" at using an accelerator to produce tritium, but ended up recommending construction of two new reactors, said Chris Sankey, a DOE spokeswoman.

"The board concluded that these technologies were not mature enough to provide new production capacity in the next 10 to 12 years," she said.

But the DOE report said that the nation's tritium needs could be met by using an accelerator "that could be in operation as early as 1996."

By comparison, the proposed new reactors are expected to take a minimum of 10 years to complete.

"The required accelerator technology has largely been demonstrated at the component level although some additional development work is desirable to effect cost reductions, improved performance and ease of operation," the report said.

The accelerator would take massive amounts of electricity to operate, roughly the entire output of a nuclear power plant. One potential site for it would be in the Pacific Northwest, which has the cheapest electric rates in the nation.

The report said "preliminary discussions" with the Bonneville Power Administration indicated that the federal power marketing agency based in Portland, Ore., would have enough electricity available to power an accelerator.

An accelerator could cost more to build, but because the cost of operating it would be about half that of a reactor, "total life cycle costs," including construction, would be about 25 percent less, said Pierre Grand, a scientist at Brookhaven.

The two planned new reactors would cost an estimated $6.8 billion.

Research shows blacks not getting proper medical care

CHICAGO (AP) — Blacks aren't getting proper medical care because they lack insurance, have poor health coverage or have been disappointed by doctors, studies published today indicate.

The studies also show that blacks are included in fewer tests of new drugs and, in at least one state, tend to get less aggressive treatment for heart disease.

They were published in today's Journal of the American Medical Association, a theme issue coinciding with the birthday Sunday of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

According to a nationwide survey of 10,130 U.S. residents, one in 11 blacks said they didn't see a doctor for economic reasons in 1986, compared with one in 20 whites.

Blacks were less likely to have health insurance, and those who did were less likely to be covered by private insurance and more likely to live in a state with limited Medicaid benefits, said researchers led by Robert J. Blandon of the Harvard University School of Public Health in Boston.

Their report said 37.2 percent of blacks overall had not seen a doctor in a year, compared with 31.7 percent of whites.

The disparity was greater for people in poorer health, with 32.2 percent of blacks going a year without a doctor's care, compared with 17.5 percent of whites, the researchers said.

"There continues to be a lack of parity in access to health care, and a consequent excess of unmet medical needs for blacks compared with whites," the authors said.

Blacks were more likely than whites to live in one-adult households, perhaps making it harder for them to get to a doctor, the researchers said.

"Blacks were more likely than whites to report that during their last visit, their physician did not inquire sufficiently about pain, did not tell them how long it would take for prescribed medicine to work, did not explain the seriousness of the illness or injury, and did not discuss test or examination findings," the study said.

This is true despite that blacks, on average, are in poorer health than whites, and continue to have a death rate 1⅛ times higher than whites of the same age as well as double the white infant mortality rate, the researchers said.

"Medicine in some ways is no different than getting your car repaired or deciding whether to spend the night in a particular hotel," Howard E. Freeman, chairman of sociology at the University of California at Los Angeles and a co-author of the study, said Thursday. "You're not inclined to do it if past experiences have been negative. Our data suggest there's a greater proportion of negative experiences for blacks and the poor in general than there are for the more affluent among us."

A related study in the Journal found few blacks included in trials of new drugs.

A review of 50 medical studies published from 1964 through 1986 showed that blacks were included in fewer than two-thirds of the tests, said researcher Craig K. Svensson of Wayne State University in Detroit.

Explanation for possible payroll padding demanded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the House ethics committee wants to know why the son of an Illinois congressman was on the congressional payroll while at the same time running for office in Chicago.

Thomas John Savage, son of Rep. Gus Savage, D-Ill., was on the payroll of Del. Walter Fauntroy, the District of Columbia's non-voting representative to Congress, at the same time he was running for the Illinois Legislature from Chicago.

Rep. Julian Dixon, D-Calif., who chairs the House ethics committee, has written Fauntroy demanding an explanation of the younger Savage's employment, a congressional source said Thursday.

A federal investigation into the case began last month after The Associated Press reported Savage was on Fauntroy's payroll although he had submitted a sworn affidavit to Illinois elections officials stating he had met state requirements by living continuously for two years in the legislative district he sought to represent. That period covered the time he was on Fauntroy's payroll.

House rules, meanwhile, require that a congressional employee report regularly to work.

Fauntroy first said the younger Savage had worked on a District of Columbia statehood bill, but Savage later conceded he rarely worked in Fauntroy's office and did little more than stuff envelopes when he was there.

Thomas Savage earned $21,398 while on Fauntroy's payroll from September 1987 through June 1988.

Dixon's letter asked Fauntroy to explain how he had come to hire Savage, what duties Savage performed, and whether Savage had regularly reported to work, the congressional source reported.

A Justice Department official who spoke on condition of anonymity said the FBI also is looking into any connection between Fauntroy's employment of the younger Savage and Rep. Savage's employment of Lezli Baskerville, a former Fauntroy aide.

A month before Fauntroy hired Savage, Ms. Baskerville had been ousted from a job Savage had given her on the House Public Works and Transportation Committee. Committee officials said she had not shown up for work.

After leaving the Public Works panel, Ms. Baskerville returned to Fauntroy's payroll, where she was directed to do legislative work on behalf of the National Black Leadership Roundtable, a private group of black businessmen that Fauntroy chairs, according to a memo provided by Fauntroy to his staff.

Fauntroy, in a statement released Thursday, said: "On the advice of counsel for the United States House of Representatives, while I have nothing to hide, I have nothing to say.

"It should be noted that no one on my staff has been subpoenaed by any law enforcement authorities, nor has anyone on my staff even talked to any law enforcement authorities."

The FBI officials investigating the matter do not have subpoena powers, according to sources familiar with the probe.

In addition, congressional sources and others familiar with the investigation said Johnny Barnes, Fauntroy's staff director, refused to meet with FBI agents who attempted to question him. Barnes refused to comment on the matter when telephoned by a reporter.

"I don't know nothing about no investigation," Gus Savage told reporters at Chicago's Midway Airport. "I haven't done anything to get investigated."

Accusing the assembled media of just wanting "to make a story," Savage testily pointed to one reporter and said: "Did you stop being a transvestite?"

Contacted by telephone in Chicago on Thursday, Thomas Savage said he was unaware of the investigation. He refused to comment further.

Congress is out of session, and Dixon could not be reached to comment on Thursday's developments.

The FBI conducts a "preliminary investigation" after an initial determination that the known facts in a case warrant a more detailed examination. Ordinarily, a report resulting from a preliminary investigation is sent to the U.S. attorney's office for review. A decision then is made whether to present the case to a grand jury.

In the Fauntroy case, the preliminary investigation will determine whether Attorney General Dick Thornburgh will seek the appointment of a special prosecutor, the procedure required when members of Congress are involved.

Two pilots killed in crash of Canadian cargo plane

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — A Canadian cargo plane crashed and exploded in a fireball near a row of houses Thursday, killing the two pilots aboard and setting nearby woods afire, authorities said.

"We thought we were dead. That's how close it was," said Dewey Meade, who was in his home a few hundred yards from the crash site. "We've got debris all over the roof and everything."

No one on the ground was injured, and no homes suffered serious damage.

Bruce Jonasson, manager of Bradley First Air, said pilots from Montreal and Ottawa were the plane's only occupants. Jonasson declined to release their names until families had been notified.

A small quantity of explosive and corrosive materials were aboard the plane, but they posed no environmental hazard, Jonasson said.

The twin-engine plane took off from Dayton International Airport and crashed at 4:45 a.m. in a heavily wooded area about a half-mile away, said James Francis, acting aviation director for Dayton.

Meade described it as "a fireball coming right at the side of my house."

The explosion set fire to about 100 yards of wooded area, said Lt. Jim Bowell of the Butler Township Fire Department. Several witnesses reported seeing a fireball in the air before the crash.

Several hours after the crash, broken limbs and branches surrounded the smoldering wreckage and small fires continued to burn, although they were later extinguished. Boxes and other cargo littered the area.

Two bodies were discovered at the site, one in the wreckage of the Hawker-Siddley turboprop and the other nearby, said Gene Brown, chief investigator for the Montgomery County coronor's office.

The plane, owned by Bradley First Air, of Ottawa, Canada, was carrying cargo to Montreal for Emery Air Freight Corp., an air freight courier service with a hub at the Dayton airport. It was at least 9 years old.

Gary Hess, an Emery employee, saw the plane go down as he was getting off work at the airport.

"It was kind of like just going across the horizon, and then it just blew," he said. "It was just a big ball of fire."

Defense says Nussbaum was mentally competent

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The defense in the murder trial of Joel B. Steinberg tried to portray Hedda Nussbaum to the jury Thursday as having been a mentally competent, functional woman immediately after the death of Lisa Steinberg and not the helpless, incoherent victim who the prosecution said was incapable of saving the life of the 6-year-old child.

Later, after the jury retired for the day, a prosecution-appointed psychiatrist continued an examination of Steinberg to determine his mental condition on Nov. 1, 1987, when the prosecution says he beat the child, Lisa, to death.

Under orders by Acting Justice Harold J. Rothwax, both sides in the trial in State Supreme Court in Manhattan were precluded from commenting on the examination.

Rothwax, who ordered the examination, said its results could only be used by the prosecution if Steinberg's lawyers introduced an insanity defense. The judge has been pressuring the defense to decide whether to do so.

The defense has accused Nussbaum of "faking mental illness and hiding in psychiatric hospitals to avoid prosecution for murder" in Lisa's death. Their accusations were largely made outside the presence of the jury.

On Thursday, the defense continued its direct examination of Dr. Azariah Eshkenazi, a psychiatrist at City Hospital Center at Elmhurst, Queens, who examined Nussbaum on Nov. 12, 1987, seven days after Lisa died of the blows that the prosecution says the defendant inflicted.

Under questioning by Ira D. London, Steinberg's lawyer, the doctor said he examined Nussbaum for 45 minutes and concluded that she did not have "any serious mental disorder that required psychiatric hospitalization."

He also testified that Nussbaum's mental state was "within a normal range," adding that "her emotional response was appropriate."

According to London, Eshkenazi's testimony was intended to counter prosecution statements that Nussbaum was so mentally and physically battered by Steinberg that she was incapable of inflicting the blows that killed Lisa or of taking any action afterward to save her life.

The jury has heard testimony that Steinberg and Nussbaum waited 12 hours before calling for medical help for the unconscious child, a delay that is central to the charges that they showed "depraved indifference" to Lisa's life.

Although the jury has not heard it as testimony, Dr. Samuel Klagsbrun, a psychiatric director at Four Winds, a private psychiatric hospital in Westchester County that has been treating Nussbaum since last March, has described her in interviews as a "concentration camp victim coming out of a deep freeze."

Though the judge said he intended to identify Nussbaum as an accomplice in Lisa's death, murder charges against her were dismissed in October.

OSHA inspectors cite military academy for 156 violations

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Army officials knew or should have known about health and safety hazards threatening civilian workers at the U.S. Military Academy that prompted inspectors to cite 156 violations, a federal official says.

Of the violations found by the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration, 107 were classified as "serious," meaning they held a "substantial probability that death or serious injury can result," John Tomich, OSHA's New York regional director, said Thursday.

Tomich said he was uncertain whether any serious injuries had resulted from the violations, which included bare electrical wires, a chlorine gas hazard and unsafe machines.

The military also clearly knew about 30 additional problems but failed to make a "reasonable" effort to rectify them, Tomich said.

In some cases, academy officials had hoped to remove the hazards but may have been hampered by budgetary restraints, Tomich said.

"A lot of the violations have to do with basic safety," said Tomich, whose Albany office headed the investigation. "For whatever purpose ... the conditions were allowed to exist. We were surprised at the number of violations and the severity of them."

West Point officials said the report, which was sent to the academy this week, still had to be reviewed by the school's superintendent, Lt. Gen. Dave Palmer, and they declined comment.

Bond denied for espionage suspect

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A former Navy chief petty officer facing espionage charges was denied bail Thursday after an FBI agent testified that he called himself smarter and more professional than Soviet spymaster John A. Walker Jr.

Craig D. Kunkle, 39, poses a threat to the community and might flee before his trial on an espionage charge, U.S. Magistrate Rebecca Smith ruled after testimony by FBI counterintelligence agent Robert Small.

Small recounted Kunkle's arrest Tuesday in a Williamsburg motel by two FBI agents posing as Soviet officials after Kunkle allegedly disclosed secret information that he recalled from his Navy duty as an anti-submarine warfare specialist.

As closed circuit television cameras secretly recorded the meeting, the agents gave Kunkle $5,000, Small said. "He accepted the money and signed a receipt," the agent said. "He was arrested at that time."

Small testified that Kunkle compared himself to Walker, a Norfolk private investigator who was sentenced to life in prison in 1986 for running a Soviet spy ring for 17 years.

Airlines being tested

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. airlines began testing Thursday for faulty engine warning systems in Boeing 737 airliners similar to one that crashed in England. A spokesman for one U.S. carrier said 80 percent of its 737s had been tested with no problems found.

Officials of other airlines said they were complying with the testing as a precautionary measure but expected to find no faulty wiring of fire and vibration warning lights that might mislead a pilot into shutting down his only good engine if the other one showed problems.

That is one possibility being investigated in England, where a British Midland 737 crash killed 44 people Sunday. Investigators said the pilot was trying to land with his malfunctioning left engine after his good right engine was shut down.

Tests on British-owned planes were completed Thursday under a Civil Aviation Authority order that grounded them until the systems were checked out. No problems were reported.

The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration "air worthiness directive" issued late Wednesday did not order any U.S. planes grounded. It gave airlines with 292 Boeing 737-300s and eight 737-400s until Sunday morning to conduct checks for possible cross-wiring. Each test takes about an hour.

Bush plans fishing trip

ISLAMORADA, Fla. (AP) — President-elect George Bush planned a long weekend in this self-proclaimed sportfishing capital of the world before the crush of ceremonies leading to his inauguration Jan. 20 begins.

The vice president and a crew of Washington fishing buddies planned to fly Air Force Two from Washington to Marathon Airport in today, drive 32 miles north, check into a townhouse, then head for the shallows of Florida Bay.

Fishing guide George Hommell, who has taken Bush out before, said he had his 17-foot skiff ready for excursions into Everglades National Park waters and the home of "bonefish, which is probably the fastest fish in the world."

Weather permitting, Bush will spend all three days of his weekend pursuing redfish, snook, sea trout, ladyfish, jack and barracuda, Hommell said.

"These are all fish that you use light tackle for, with 8- or 10-pound test line, and you cast in shallow water," he said.

Forged bail papers served

NEW YORK (AP) — An accused killer whose $100,000 bail was revoked last year after he allegedly threatened a witness was allowed to leave jail based on forged court papers that showed a new bail of $10,000, officials said.

George Suarez, 35, whose 1983 conviction in the murder of an elderly pharmacist and a customer at a Brooklyn drugstore was overturned on a technicality, left Rikers Island jail Dec. 17, but officials only found out Thursday when he failed to appear in court for his retrial, said Ruby Ryles, a Correction Department spokeswoman.

She said a woman, whose name was not released, had paid the $10,000 bail in cash.

Suarez' lawyer, Harold Weiswasser, said he learned of the escape when he walked into Brooklyn state Supreme Court Thursday and Justice Ronald Aiello asked him where his client was.

Quayle target of jokes

WASHINGTON (AP) — If elections came down to who was the butt of more jokes on late-night television, George Bush and Michael Dukakis would be sharing the White House and Dan Quayle would be president for life.

A study of monologues by Johnny Carson and David Letterman found that the score during the general campaign was virtually a tie: 51 jokes about Republican Bush to 50 about his Democratic opponent, Michael Dukakis.

The study by Robert Lichter and Daniel Amundson of the private, non-partisan Center for Media and Public Affairs found that the biggest target was Quayle, the vice president-elect. He drew 52 barbs — more than 10 times Democrat Lloyd Bentsen's total of five.

Bush known as 'Ellie the Elephant' after World War II rescue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surviving crew members of the World War II submarine Finback are looking forward to a nostalgic reunion with George Bush, the young Navy pilot they dubbed "Ellie the Elephant" after rescuing him from the Pacific Ocean more than 44 years ago.

Don Kohler, 64, of Rogers, Ark., the torpedoman who helped pull a grateful Bush to safety from his orange life raft onto the Finback's deck, remembers offering a smile and a hearty "welcome aboard," but recalls little else about the incident.

"At that time, he was just another downed pilot," said Kohler, a retired Chicago businessman. "Nobody back then knew he'd become president of the United States."

Rescued after his plane was shot down by Japanese fire, Bush eagerly took his turn at night lookout watches and other seagoing duties, watched Betty Grable movies in the wardroom and donned earphones to listen in awe as the submarine's torpedoes sank two enemy ships.

Former Finback officers remember the 20-year-old Bush as a gregarious jokester who earned the nickname "Ellie" for his comic wardroom imitation of a trumpeting elephant, they said in recent telephone interviews.

"I remember he was very lively, obviously intelligent and very personable," said retired Rear Adm. Lawrence Heyworth of Virginia Beach, Va., who was the Finback's torpedo and gunnery officer when Bush was hauled aboard on Sept. 2, 1944.

Said Heyworth: "All three pilots we rescued were bright, bright-eyed young men, but George seemed the most outgoing and had the most ebullient personality. He was the most entertaining, and he made us laugh a lot.

"We called him Ellie because of his outstanding imitation of an elephant trumpeting. Ellie the Elephant. It wasn't because we all sat around thinking we were Republicans. We must have seen one in a Tarzan movie. We just thought elephants were funny. We kept asking George to do it over and over again."

"He had a tremendous sense of humor," recalled W.E. "Bill" Edwards of Bay St. Louis, Miss., an insurance agent and retired Navy commander. As a bearded ensign aboard the Finback, Edwards filmed Bush's rescue with an 8mm Kodak movie camera.

Edwards said that at last count, nearly 30 surviving officers and enlisted crewmen of the Finback were planning to attend Bush's swearing-in at noontime Jan. 20 at the Capitol.

They and a few of Bush's former flying buddies plan to sit together in prime bleacher seats on Pennsylvania Avenue for the inaugural parade after Bush takes the presidential oath of office.

Inaugural officials reportedly were trying to arrange a reunion for Bush and his old submarine buddies at Blair House, the presidential guest quarters across the street from the White House, possibly next Wednesday.

Heyworth and Edwards have stayed in touch with Bush over the years. But most of the Finback veterans haven't seen or spoken to Bush since he left the submarine at Midway Island after a month-long combat patrol.

Bush won the Distinguished Flying Cross for completing his bombing run against a Japanese radio communications center in the Bonin Islands, about 600 miles south of Japan, after his Grumman Avenger torpedo bomber was struck by enemy fire and engulfed in flames. Bush bailed out over the water but his two crew members were lost.

According to his autobiography, Bush's only injuries were a gash on the forehead and a painful sting from a Portuguese man-of-war. He was picked up by the Finback less than two hours after his parachute hit the ocean.

"I'm proud of what I was able to do to help Mr. Bush on board our boat," said Kohler.

Man arrested for buying nerve gas for exportation

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A Korean-American businessman arrested in an alleged conspiracy to purchase nerve-gas bombs had contacts in Britain, South Korea and possibly Iran, but officials say it's still unclear who wanted the weapons.

Juwhan Yun, 48, was arrested Thursday and was being held without bail at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York City pending a bond hearing Tuesday.

A federal complaint accused Yun of conspiring to violate the Arms Export Control Act by seeking to ship bombs containing sarin, a gas that causes convulsions and death by attacking the central nervous system.

Yun negotiated with an undercover U.S. Customs Service agent posing as an arms dealer to purchase 500 quarter-ton bombs and other weapons, said Richard Mercier, chief agent at the federal agency's Newark office.

He described the gas as a "very rapid, odorless, colorless poison which can enter the body by inhalation, absorption or injection."

No weapons were ever delivered, officials said.

"I can't say that there was any indication there was ever any plan to use it or in fact there was actually an end purchaser who had plans to deploy it in any fashion," said Michael P. Chertoff, first assistant U.S. attorney.

At one point in the dealings, the purported destination for the bombs was Iran, but that has not been verified, Chertoff said.

Yun also contacted the undercover agent about the possible purchase of TOW anti-armor weapons and Stinger anti-aircraft missiles, apparently for delivery to Iran, the complaint said.

A Briton, Charles Caplan, also was charged in the case, which Chertoff called a "wide-ranging, trans-Atlantic conspiracy."

Concern over the potential spread of chemical weapons has intensified recently. At a United Nations conference in Paris on Wednesday, more than 140 nations reaffirmed the 1925 Geneva Protocol banning the use of chemical arms.

Yun's arrest came the same day the West German government reversed itself and said it suspected German companies helped build a Libyan plant the United States believes is a chemical weapons factory. Libya says the plant will produce medicine.

Yun was arrested when his wife dropped him off at Customs offices in Newark, where he believed he was to meet the undercover agent, Mercier said.

If convicted, Yun faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

He told U.S. Magistrate Ronald Hedges that his Short Hills home was worth $650,000 and that he also owns a $400,000 New York City condominium. He said he has three children and has been in the United States for 17 years.

The arrest followed a seven-month investigation that also involved the U.S. Department of Defense, the Army and Navy, and French and British customs officials.

According to the complaint, the undercover agent contacted Yun after Customs received a tip from a confidential informant that Komex International Corp. of Summit was seeking to buy ammunition for export to South Korea. Yun was identified as president of Komex, an import-export company that had engaged in legitimate arms dealings.

On Nov. 27, the complaint said, Yun telephoned Caplan, who operates Domino Associates of London. Caplan asked Yun if he could obtain 200 to 500 sarin bombs, and three days later Yun asked the Customs agent if he could obtain the ordnance, the complaint said.

2 killed, 1 injured in fighters' collision over German town

BREMEN, West Germany (AP) — A British Tornado warplane flew into a group of eight West German jet fighters today and collided with two of them, killing the two British crewmen and injuring a German pilot, officials said.

Several houses were slightly damaged on the edge of the northern village of Wiesmoor by debris from the Tornado but there were no civilian casualties, local police said.

The Tornado crashed into a field just outside Wiesmoor, while one German plane came down a few miles away, the defense spokesman said. The other plane involved in the crash managed to land safely, he said.

The pilot of the German jet that crashed was injured, he said.

The accident came amid growing complaints among the West German public about the dangers to civilians from NATO training flights over this densely populated country. More than 100 people were killed in military-related plane crashes last year in West Germany.

A spokesman at the West German Defense Ministry in Bonn said the British plane flew into a group of eight German Alfajet fighters preparing to land at Wittmund air base near Wiesmoor, 50 miles northwest of the port city of Bremen.

The Defense Ministry spokesman, who asked not to be identified by name, said the Tornado plane collided with two of the Alfajets. Earlier reports indicated the British plane crashed with only one German fighter.

A spokesman at the British forces headquarters in Rheindahlen confirmed the Tornado had crashed after the collision, killing the two-man British crew.

"We can confirm that a Royal Air Force Tornado jet from No. 14 Squadron at the Royal Air Force base Brueggen crashed near the village of Wiesmoor, killing the pilot and the navigator," the spokesman said.

Brueggen is near the West German border with the Netherlands, 210 miles south of the crash site.

The spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Tornado was on a routine training mission when it crashed.

A Wiesmoor police spokesman said the injured German pilot had been taken to a nearby hospital. It was not immediately clear whether the pilot sustained his injuries while ejecting from the airplane.

Identities of the British crew killed in the crash "will not be released pending notification of next of kin," the British forces spokesman said. He said a team of experts was traveling to the scene to investigate the crash.

East-West conference accepts rights accord

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — A conference of Eastern and Western nations today informally accepted a landmark accord on human rights and security, diplomats said. The pact calls for freedom of travel and religion in the East bloc.

However, a Greek-Turkish dispute still blocked a final agreement among the 35 nations that is to include a mandate for new European talks on conventional weapons, said the diplomats, who spoke on condition of anonymity. If the deadlock is broken, a final pact could be signed on Saturday, they said.

The disagreement between Greece and Turkey over a Turkish port in the eastern Mediterranean has prevented negotiators from the 16 NATO and seven Warsaw Pact nations from approving the new East-West talks on reducing conventional troops and weapons across Europe.

Twelve non-aligned nations are also attending the conference.

Agreement on the human rights and security accord came after more than two years of tough East-West bargaining at the Helsinki review conference, which opened in November 1986.

A copy of the accord, obtained by The Associated Press, showed landmark agreements on the freedom of East bloc citizens to travel, practice religion and monitor their countries' compliance with human rights.

Western diplomats called the Vienna document a milestone. Its key test, however, will be whether the Soviet Union and its allies actually stick to the new commitments.

The pact "refined and defined the humanitarian undertakings in far greater detail than ever possible before," said Canadian envoy William Bauer.

He and other Western diplomats said reforms in the Soviet Union played a major role in securing the agreement.

The diplomats also said the human rights provisions contained in the Vienna document are more specific than any others since the Helsinki process began with the signing of the Helsinki Final Act in 1975.

The document also provides a mechanism by which any two of the signatories can raise human rights issues. Western diplomats described that agreement as a major achievement.

The conference is scheduled to wind up next week with a three-day closing ceremony attended by foreign ministers from all the signatories of the 1975 Helsinki Final Act: the Soviet Union, the United States, Canada and all European nations except Albania.

But that ceremony was put in jeopardy today because of the failure to break the deadlock between Greece and Turkey. If the impasse is broken, a final document could be accepted in a public meeting on Saturday, diplomats said.

Turkey agreed with the Soviet Union that the eastern Mediterranean port of Mersin, which is close to Syrian border, should be excluded from the new East-West arms talks.

Teen dies of wounds; Arab memorial smashed

JERUSALEM (AP) — A 15-year-old Palestinian died today of head wounds suffered in a clash with troops, and assailants believed to be Jewish militants smashed a monument to Arab soldiers in east Jerusalem.

Mayor Teddy Kollek called the vandals in the capital's Arab sector "idiots" and expressed concern that their action might lead to retaliation by Arab militants and further fuel tensions in the city.

In the occupied Gaza Strip, merchants began a seven-day commercial strike after pro-PLO leaders of the Palestinian uprising called for the move in slogans painted on walls.

The strike is to protest the Israeli collection of taxes from Palestinians. Non-payment of taxes is a major tactic of the revolt against Israel rule.

The Israeli newspaper Maariv said today the PLO has foiled Israeli efforts to block its funding of the uprising by using Israeli-Arab businessmen, international organizations and ultra-Orthodox Jews to transfer money.

Mohammed Yaub Salhoub, 15, died early today at Mukassed Hospital in east Jerusalem, a day after being shot in the head by troops during clashes in the Nuseirat refugee camp in the occupied Gaza Strip, hospital officials said.

The army confirmed the death but said it was checking the circumstances.

The death brought to 352 the number of Palestinians killed in the 13-month uprising. Fifteen Israelis have also died in the unrest.

The monument to soldiers of the Arab Legion outside the Rockefeller Museum was partially smashed, said police spokesman Alex Lapidot. He said police had no suspects.

An anonymous caller told Israel army radio the monument was damaged by "lovers of the land of Israel and the Jewish people."

The caller said the attack was carried out to protest the dismantling by troops two days ago of a monument erected by Jewish settlers in honor of an Israeli taxi driver slain in the West Bank.

Settlers have vowed to erect additional monuments to Jews killed in the occupied lands in defiance of an army ban.

"The people who did this are stupid, they are idiots," said Kollek. He said the city would offer to repair the monument.

Police imposed a curfew in east Jerusalem's Silwan neighborhood after they arrested 14 people, including nine said to be firebomb throwers.

It was only the third time a curfew was clamped on a Jerusalem neighborhood during the uprising. Curfews are a frequent measure of control and punishment in the occupied lands.

In a newspaper interview published today, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir accused the United States of prolonging the uprising by opening a dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization last month.

"It gave a great push and great encouragement to people who perhaps had reached a point where they were considering desisting from this way (the uprising)," he was quoted as saying in the Jerusalem Post.

Nations seek meeting on explosives

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — Czechoslovakia and Britain will propose an international convention to control exports of plastic explosives, Czechoslovakia's ambassador to West Germany was quoted as saying today.

Semtex, a Czechoslovak-made plastic explosive, is believed to have been used in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, which blew up over Scotland Dec. 21, killing all 259 people on board and 11 on the ground.

Czechoslovak experts have traveled to Britain to help in crash investigation.

Ambassador Dusan Spacil, in an interview with the Cologne-Bonn Rundschau newspaper, was quoted as saying his country's rigorous controls prevented exports of Semtex.

Worldwide exports of plastic explosives should be regulated by an international convention, and Czechoslovakia and Britain plan to present such a proposal to the United Nations, Spacil was quoted as saying.

"Producers of such explosives should be obliged to make an annual report to the United Nations on the deliveries and the recipients (of plastic explosives)," the ambassador was quoted as saying.

Reagan's legacy a renewed America

Ronald Wilson Reagan addressed the nation for the final time while serving as president Wednesday evening, and for Americans it was a bittersweet moment. Reagan came into office eight years ago with a vision of what America should be at a time when many people were confused and bewildered. In eight years he gave back to the nation something vitally important it had lost — hope for the future.

When Reagan took office, America was still gripped by the "malaise" of the Jimmy Carter presidency, facing soaring inflation and interest rates, suffering under repeated abuses by Third World nations abroad, and afraid to look the world squarely in the face. Ronald Reagan saw in America a renewal of hope for world leadership, adherence to human rights and dignity, and a nation endowed with the courage of its convictions to recapture that spirit of greatness.

At a moment in history when many would have questioned the wisdom of a call to patriotism, Ronald Reagan did exactly that: challenging Americans to remember the greatness of America and soliciting their help in getting the nation back on the road to world leadership.

Reagan had an advantage, of course. He has been called the "Great Communicator" because of his ability to reach out across America via the television screens and to touch those around him with his words and vision. Reagan is a great communicator, but not so much because of the words he speaks or how he enunciates them. Rather, his message is so effective because of his ability to convince listeners that he, too, believes what he is espousing. He sold Americans mother, apple pie, and the red, white and blue when critics said it couldn't be done and, what's more, he even convinced a number of his harshest critics that his course was the correct one for the nation.

This isn't to imply that everything Ronald Reagan did worked or that he didn't ever fail. Every American no doubt can cite his shortcomings — a lackadaisical management style that allowed Iran-contra to develop in the basement of the White House, appointments that resulted in numerous officials stepping down in disgrace for illegal or unethical acts, a rampant national deficit that grew by leaps and bounds. He tried to cut the federal government down to size, but the bureaucracy continued to grow despite his efforts.

But for all his failures, Reagan captured the hearts of the American people and when he leaves office next week, will be missed as the nation's commander-in-chief.

On the international scene, Reagan's defense buildup and tough verbal assault on the Soviets helped to reverse the direction of the Cold War and in later years, even helped to start moving the two world superpowers away from the danger posed by nuclear war.

Before winning election as president, Reagan was revered by some Americans and feared by many others. He will now leave with the fondest wishes of most. He couldn't accomplish everything he attempted to do, as he noted Wednesday evening, but Reagan "made a difference." We would go a step further to say a big difference, one America can and should build on.

Pot traffickers ship by 'U.S. Mail'

WASHINGTON — More than 100,000 Americans are involved in the production of marijuana, and many of them deliver their illegal product to their customers the same way you send Christmas packages to cousin Nellie: They mail it or send it via commercial delivery systems.

Jack Anderson

According to a secret Drug Enforcement Administration report, which we have seen, "Various states have reported that many of their marijuana traffickers are distributing their products through the use of United Parcel Service, Greyhound bus parcel delivery and the U.S. Postal Service express mail service." The carriers do what they can to detect drug shipments, but in most cases are no match for the innovative drug dealers.

The most favored method for shipping pot in Idaho, Oregon, Alabama, Oklahoma and Arizona, according to the DEA, is the United Parcel Service. In Arizona, the secret report discloses, authorities "seized a 19 pound package (of marijuana) destined for Illinois." In Oklahoma, officials reported "that small amounts of marijuana are shipped through UPS from California."

Traffickers in Texas favor Greyhound, which is also a popular method of transport in Idaho and Oregon.

The report details an interesting wrinkle on the use of the mails to ship marijuana:

"A common technique is to purchase marijuana in Arizona and have it mailed to oneself at another location. If the package does not arrive within 24 hours, the sender assumes that the package may have been temporarily delayed because it was intercepted by law enforcement authorities. The package is subsequently not picked up."

The Postal Service is the method of preference for marijuana growers in Hawaii. The report estimates that "90 to 95 percent" of the pot grown in the Island state "is shipped to the mainland via U.S. mail, while the rest is consumed on the island."

Law enforcement authorities say that marijuana has become the No. 1 cash crop in Hawaii, and the DEA report provides some figures: "Of the 90,000 residents on the island of Hawaii, 15,000 are (believed to be) involved in some way in marijuana growing and trafficking operations."

A large share of these growers, the report states, "come to Hawaii from California for the express purpose of growing marijuana. When they have made what they consider enough profits, they move back to the mainland and are replaced in the cycle by someone else."

Meanwhile, law enforcement authorities in New Mexico have compiled a profile of "courier cars" used to carry drugs throughout the Southwest. According to a confidential drug intelligence report, the typical drug vehicle's occupants are usually resident aliens from Colombia, and the cars are not registered to them. The vehicles are usually scented with air fresheners and other deodorants.

When caught, the drivers normally admit only to being paid to drive the cars. They claim to have no idea of what is in the vehicle. They are allegedly told by those who hired them to leave the car at the Los Angeles airport and wait to be contacted or to call a beeper number.

TURMOIL IN TEHRAN — The failing health of Iranian strongman Ayatollah Khomeini has his subordinates squabbling over who will replace him, according to intelligence reports.

Currently at the top of the heap is the speaker of the parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani. He is a pragmatist who is seeking to end Iran's diplomatic isolation. He has even sent signals to the United States that he will use his influence to gain the release of American hostages being held by Islamic fundamentalists.

Rafsanjani is opposed by a fanatical faction that professes hatred for infidels, particularly Americans. They attempt to counter every move made by Rafsanjani and the moderates.

Meanwhile, the Iranian economy has ground to a standstill following the extended conflict with Iraq. Social upheaval is spreading, say the intelligence reports, as hundreds of thousands of soldiers return to the depressed cities.

MEDIA MOGULS — Well-heeled foreign investors are on the prowl for American communications companies. During the past three years, they have spent more than $12 billion for media properties in the United States. The world's largest media company, for example, is now buying up U.S. publishing houses. The company, Bertelsman AG, is controlled by a mysterious West German named Reinhard Mohn. He shines a huge spotlight but prefers to remain in the shadows himself.

Traffic can drive a New Yorker crazy!

NEW YORK — Millions of the nation's drivers are at war with snow or sleet on the roads. This is a no-man's-land with more than a million cars squeezing into Manhattan each day.

For all those fighting the snow, take comfort. This is organized anarchy on streets built for horses and carriages.

There are fewer parking lots than a decade ago. Those precious spaces have become soaring apartment buildings and skyscraper offices. Yet the cars keep coming — more, larger, faster.

It now costs an average of $300 for a monthly parking space — $10 a day for an apartment dweller and $15 daily for working commuters. All-day parking soars to $24 a day in midtown Manhattan plus an 8.5 percent city tax.

Free street parking is prohibited in much of the city. It's impossible to tow away all of the illegally parked cars. Often, double-parked autos block them. When someone is towed, it costs about $125 in fines and fees to get the car back — to say nothing of waiting lines.

Some areas of the city, like the narrow roads of Wall Street's financial district, forbid all parking. These are called 'blue zones' but drivers park any place they can fit a car there.

Some manage to beat the system — like city, state and federal government employees. All have special parking stickers that are so-called perks for government service. Others would gladly pay for these spaces which would become a source of city revenue.

Manhattan traffic is a free-for-all. Driving and walking are contact sports. Every pedestrian is a jaywalker. Mad bike messengers seem to drive by orders coming over their radio earphones. Drivers constantly run red lights and swerve madly to avoid sunken potholes in every street.

Some 250,000 new drivers are added to the city's total each year. These are often people over 30 years old who have never driven. Many could not afford a car earlier. The cost of owning and running a car in New York is more like paying for a mini-yacht.

Rush-hour traffic once brought semi-gridlock only to the city's five boroughs. Bumper-to-bumper standstills now stretch as far as 30 to 40 miles from Manhattan. To escape the crowded conditions of the boroughs, businesses moved to suburbs. Employees must now drive across suburbs to and from work — only there is no public transportation. They are forced to use choked streets that were built to serve small communities.

Experts are now trying to divine strategies to beat the suburban traffic swell. Of course, they are discussing more and larger roads. And the famous miracle cure: automatically routing computer-equipped cars around traffic jams.

There is one last exasperating aspect of all this that leads good men and women to the brink of the Brooklyn bridge — preferably during a rush hour to tie up traffic as a final act of defiance and anger. Car radios and stereos are stolen so often in New York that thousands of cars and trucks cruise the city with this sign in a window: No Radio Inside — None at All. One driver painted three more words: Honest to God!

Radios and stereos are the New York driver's last hope to beat stress — to listen to some soothing music while wading and waiting through one traffic jam after another.

When his radio is ripped off — and car window smashed to grab it — he then freezes through the traffic jams in silence.

One man, after hanging up a No Radio sign on his car, returned to see these words written in crayon on his window: "Get one!"

Battling snow and sleet must be easier.

CHARLEY REESE

Expecting Santa? Don't look for him in Bush!

This is the season when everyone seems determined to tell George Bush how he must spend his waking hours during the next four years. It's silly and really just an excuse for special interest groups to bray about their private agendas.

Charley Reese

It so happens only one man out of 240 million was elected president. Only one man has the responsibility. Only one man has the power, such as it is. That one man is Bush.

Now Bush is much too polite to tell people to stuff it, but that's what he should say, especially to those who opposed him vigorously during the campaign and now are so presumptuous as to demand that he adopt their agenda which a majority of Americans rejected.

Even in a kinder, gentler America a president need not suffer such arrogant fools. Losers don't dictate to winners — not in war and not in politics.

And before even more well-meaning Americans waste a stamp sending Bush their wish list, they should take the time to read their Constitution. They will find, if they do, that Bush has no authority to do what most of them want done.

A president cannot fund squash. Since so few in our society bother with the Constitution, it must be repeated that the president has no authority — that's none, zero, zip — over appropriations. The power to tax and the power to appropriate rest solely in Congress which is an independent branch of government not under Bush's control. He may request or beg, but he cannot order. He may veto an appropriations bill but he cannot pass one.

Nor, it should not need to be said, can he legislate. That power, too, rests solely with Congress. He can request, ask for or beg for a law but he cannot create it. He can veto a bill he doesn't like but if Congress overrides his veto, it becomes law anyway.

The Constitution created a weak president. He can conduct foreign affairs, though his appointed ambassadors must be confirmed by the Senate and he may negotiate treaties but they must also be ratified by the Senate. He can appoint subordinates in the executive branch and with the consent of the Senate, members of the federal judiciary.

That's about the extent of it. If you have a wish list, and it doesn't include treaties, ambassadors or federal judges, send it to Congress, not the president.

It puzzles me no end why grownup journalists, politicians and academians persist in acting as if the president were a dictator or a prime minister with vast powers to accomplish anything he wants.

It's more than puzzling. It's bizarre. It's as if everyone decided they would go on talking and acting as if the earth were flat and the moon were cheese even though, when pressed, they admit they aren't.

The deficit, defense, and law-making — anything that requires laws and appropriations — are all congressional responsibilities. The executive branch can only execute the laws Congress passes. It can spend only the tax money Congress appropriates and only on things Congress authorizes. The president can appoint a secretary of defense but the Defense Department was created by Congress and is governed by laws passed by Congress.

Yet in Washington some 1,600 or so journalists tag along behind the president and only a few pay any attention to Congress where all the power resides. That's dumb.

Hopefully Americans elsewhere are not as ignorant of their form of government as those inside the Washington beltway where probably no one, including Supreme Court justices, has glanced at the Constitution in the last 100 years.

Bush is not likely to get much of anything he asks of the Congress since these men have shown time and again they put selfish and partisan advantage ahead of even national security.

If you missed Santa Claus, you're in trouble. Bush has no sled.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

In unlikely event of disaster, don't be calm!

Thank the Lord another terrible air tragedy didn't occur when a hole blew open in the fuselage of an Eastern 727 during a flight from Rochester to Atlanta.

Grizzard

The pilot acted quickly and put his plane into a steep dive, back down to 10,000 feet where he, his crew and the passengers could get oxygen again.

The incident did, however, add to my fears concerning those oxygen masks that are supposed to fall down in front of you in — as a flight attendant always says — "the unlikely event of cabin depressurization."

I'm told about those masks every time I climb aboard an airplane. Then, one day, I was on a plane and the flight attendant was telling me about the masks, and I thought to myself, are those things really up there somewhere above my seat?

I'd never seen one fall and I didn't know anybody else who had seen one fall.

I used to believe in things that fell out of nowhere. When I was a child my mother read me the story of Chicken Little.

Chicken Little thought the sky was falling. That was good enough for me. I was 11 years old before I'd go out of the house without wearing my genuine Doak Walker football helmet.

But back to the oxygen masks. I've looked above my seat in 100 airplanes trying to figure out exactly where the masks are located. I've also tried to look and see what was going to open above my seat and allow them to fall.

But I still can't figure out any of that. Then there is something else that bothers me.

The flight attendant has her mask. It's the one she uses while demonstrating how ours, if they do exist, are supposed to be used.

Do you think she's going to be all that concerned about me if my mask doesn't fall during the unlikely event of cabin depressurization?

Of course not. She'll lock herself in the restroom with her mask while I'm outside turning blue.

And let me continue. Recall how you are always told to breathe normally after you put on your mask.

I'm at 30,000 feet in a large piece of machinery that manages to fly by some magic I still don't understand and suddenly I've got this mask over my face that may or may not save my life and I'm supposed to breathe normally? If that ever happens to me, rest assured I will not breathe normally. I will breathe as I please, like Secretariat down the stretch.

Anyway, all this to say that the oxygen masks did fall down for the passengers in the damaged Eastern 727.

But a number of the passengers said theirs didn't work. Didn't work? I'd never even considered that.

I'll be on a plane and a hole will blow open in the fuselage, and my mask will fall down but it won't work.

Or worse. Mine will work, but not the one for the guy sitting next to me, and he'll be Mike Tyson with a toothache.

On the other hand, if we are to believe Mr. Tyson's wife, maybe he'll leave my mask alone and go into the restroom and beat up the selfish flight attendant for her mask.

That's one thing I really like about myself. Even while considering such horrid, frightening circumstances, I can still look on the bright side.

Happy flying.

Local Palestinian leaders question wisdom of more violence

By JONATHAN BRODER
Hearst News Service

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank — One month after PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat renounced terror and recognized Israel's right to exist, conflicts within the Palestinian movement appear to be blocking his political offensive for an independent state.

With residents in the occupied territories facing another winter under harsh Israeli rule, some local leaders question the wisdom of further street violence which brings an increasingly lethal response.

At the same time, radical Palestinians in the territories have formed an alliance with Moslem fundamentalists that rejects anything but continued armed struggle against their Israeli foe.

Western diplomats say the split accounts for a mounting restlessness in the territories that has been aggravated by Israel's adamant refusal to deal with PLO.

"There is a growing sense of frustration," said a Jerusalem-based European diplomat who monitors events in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. "And Arafat is caught in the middle."

The unraveling Palestinian consensus has raised the specter of a bitter and possibly violent struggle between Palestinian doves, moderates and radicals — a prospect that analysts here often have predicted and which Israeli officials would welcome as proof of Palestinian political immaturity.

A number of respected Palestinians here contend that the recent political gains of the PLO — particularly its dialogue with the United States — reduce the need for violent protests against Israeli troops, who are killing more demonstrators now than ever.

Last month, dubbed "Black December" by Palestinians, Israeli soldiers shot to death 31 Arabs and wounded more than 400, one of the highest monthly casualty tolls since the uprising 13 months ago. More than 350 Palestinians and 13 Israelis have died so far.

"We are sending our youth into battle without a clear idea of what comes next," said "Abu Akram," the nickname of a senior organizer of the uprising.

Rather than more violence and strikes, Abu Akram and others are urging PLO leaders to accept a temporary truce that will allow Palestinians to rest and build the essential institutions of their declared state — a viable economy, schools and universities, and professional and political organizations.

"We must give people something they can touch so they can know that the state exists," said Samir, a Palestinian closely associated with the underground leadership of the uprising. "That doesn't leave much time for stones."

Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, one of the more moderate Palestinian notables in the territories, recently proposed a U.N.-sponsored truce in the territories for one year in return for Israel's agreement to release 3,500 Palestinians being held without trial, reopen schools and universities, cancel deportations and stop house demolitions.

Arafat rejected the proposal last week and warned: "Any Palestinian leader who proposes an end to the intifadeh exposes himself to the bullets of his own people and endangers his life. The PLO will know how to deal with him."

Such a response signaled an ominous turn in the debate. Soon after Arafat's warning, which was broadcast on Radio Monte Carlo and monitored here, slogans declaring, "Shame on Freij" and "Death to the Betrayers," appeared on the walls of Freij's municipal offices.

Last week, a PLO spokesman in Baghdad announced the formation of a "popular army" of West Bank youth loyal to Arafat's mainstream Fatah faction.

"The popular army is not a substitute for the Unified Leadership of the Uprising but is another method of struggle for the Palestinian people against Israeli occupation," the spokesman said, adding cryptically: "The popular army has been assigned to safeguard security and order, establish justice and law and embody the power of the people."

In the West Bank town of Nablus, groups of youths wearing homemade uniforms have held military-style parades.

Shiite conflict splits families in Lebanon

By MOHAMMED SALAM

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The fierce battle between rival Shiite Moslem factions for dominance of Lebanon's largest sect has split families and jeopardizes the strategic alliance between their masters, Iran and Syria.

Amid the carnage of Lebanon's 13-year civil war between Christians and Moslems and the country's myriad other mini-wars between feuding militias, the Shiite conflict has fractured Lebanon's largest sect.

Shiite sources said the battle has pitted brother against brother, father against son as they side either with the fundamentalist Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, or the secular, pro-Syrian Amal militia led by Lebanon's Justice Minister, Nabih Berri.

More than 500 people, many of them civilians, have been killed and about 1,500 wounded since the inter-Shiite rivalry broke into open warfare in April.

In Beirut's southern slums, a Shiite bastion devastated by the fighting, huge posters of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and Imam Mousa Sadr, Amal's charismatic founder who mysteriously disappeared in Libya in 1978, hang side by side, indicating a false unity among the 1 million Shiites.

The two sides have vied for years for control of the country's Shiite community, now one of Lebanon's most powerful sects.

Hezbollah, at the cutting edge of Khomeini's Islamic revolution abroad, seeks to create an Iranian-style Islamic republic in Lebanon.

It has built an impressive Tehran-funded social, educational and welfare network that has in the past few years been pumping an estimated $5 million a month into Hezbollah's coffers. This has wooed many Shiites from Amal.

The more nationalist Amal, armed by Syria, wants to reunite divided Lebanon under a multi-sect government in which the Moslem majority will share power equally with the traditionally dominant Christians.

"Any Moslem who willingly abides by the rules of a non-Moslem state is a traitor," says a Hezbollah slogan daubed on walls in the squalid slums of south Beirut.

"Traitors are those who kidnap foreigners and carry out acts of terrorism all over the world to serve Iran's interests at the expense of Lebanon's Shiites," said Amal's security chief in the southern port of Tyre, who identified himself only as Hamza.

Hezbollah is considered the parent organization for Shiite fundamentalist factions who hold most of the 15 Western hostages kidnapped in Lebanon.

Lebanese and Western intelligence agencies also blame Hezbollah zealots for the 1983 suicide bombings of U.S. and French targets in Lebanon, in which hundreds of people were killed, as well as other terrorist attacks in the Middle East and Western Europe.

"All Lebanon's Shiites are branded terrorists because of such acts," Hamza said. "Many Lebanese Shiites have been deported from foreign countries because of this."

Amal drove Hezbollah out of the Tyre region and most of south Lebanon in April in a crackdown that followed the Feb. 17 kidnapping of U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins.

The following month, the fundamentalists, trained by Iranian Revolutionary Guards based in the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon, seized large chunks of Amal territory in Beirut's southern slums.

They have repeatedly clashed since, despite efforts by Syria and Iran to cool tempers.

Several Amal leaders have been assassinated. Among them was Amal's south Lebanon commander, Daoud Daoud, and two senior lieutenants. Their car was riddled by unidentified gunmen as they drove through south Beirut in October. Amal blamed Hezbollah.

The fundamentalists accuse Amal of preventing them from carrying out the "holy duty of Jihad (holy war) to liberate Palestine from Zionist occupation."

To "liberate the holy city of Jerusalem and the rest of Palestine is the duty of every Moslem," Hezbollah's weekly magazine Al-Aahd said in a recent editorial.

Amal believes that the "liberation of Palestine is a collective duty of all Arabs and Moslems," said Abu Hassan Qobeissi, Amal's security commander in south Lebanon.

Speaking from his headquarters in the hilltop village of Zifta, 25 miles northeast of Tyre, he said, "Hezbollah will not be allowed back into the south to fire a missile into northern Israel...and provoke the Israelis into demolishing our villages and towns with their planes."

Body of U.S. pilot killed in 1986 raid on Libya arrives in Rome

ROME (AP) — Libya today flew the body of a U.S. pilot killed in the 1986 raid on Tripoli to Rome, where a Vatican representative turned over the flag-draped coffin to Italian officials.

The body was to be handed over later to U.S. officials.

The Libyan military plane, a white Soviet-built Ilyushin with a tiny green Libyan flag near one window, arrived at Rome's Ciampino Airport at 3:45 p.m.

The Libyan news agency JANA said Thursday that Libya was returning the body, but did not identify the pilot. However, JANA reported on Dec. 24 that Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi was offering to return the body of Capt. Paul Lorence, 31, of San Francisco.

Libya's gesture comes during increasing international debate over a suspected poison gas factory in Libya, and only nine days after U.S. warplanes shot down two Libyan jets over the Mediterranean Sea.

JANA also has complained that a Libyan Airlines plane en route from Tripoli to Istanbul Tuesday was buzzed over the Mediterranean by U.S. fighter planes. The Pentagon said it had no knowledge of such an incident.

At the airport, a delegation including two Vatican officials and several Italian diplomats and air force officers met the plane. No U.S. officials were present.

The white coffin, draped with an American flag and topped with wreaths of red and orange flowers, was carried off the rear section of the plane by the Italian air force officers in blue uniforms and Libyans in green fatigues.

The casket was set on the ground briefly before the air force officers transferred it to a blue police mortuary van. The body was to be taken to a morgue for identification.

One of the Vatican officials, Monsignor Francesco Mointerisi, said Italian officials would later turn over the body to the Americans.

The Vatican said it was acting as an intermediary for "humanitarian reasons." Vatican sources said the Libyans first approached the Vatican around Dec. 15.

JANA said Thursday that: "In the framework of the humanitarian initiatives to which the Great Fatah September Revolution (Libyan government) devotes a fundamental interest, the body of the American pilot will be handed tomorrow, 13th January, to the representative of the Vatican, representing His Holiness, the pope."

Lorence and Fernando Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Utuado, Puerto Rico, were in an F-111 that disappeared during the April 15, 1986, raids on Tripoli and Benghazi. Witnesses reported seeing an F-111 crash into the Mediterranean soon after the plane was hit during the raid.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Head of probe into deaths of 104 aborigines resigns

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — The head of a government probe on the deaths of 104 aborigines in police custody has resigned, and indigenous activists today called the decision a devastating blow to the inquiry.

Prime Minister Bob Hawke said James Muirhead, federal court judge since 1977, resigned late Thursday to become administrator of the Northern Territory.

Aboriginal groups called the decision a blow to their cause and expressed concern that the inquiry, set up in 1987 to investigate 44 aboriginal deaths in police custody since 1980, could be downgraded.

Since the inquiry began, the number of aboriginal deaths in police custody has grown to 104, and Muirhead had said the increased number would extend his work — expected to be completed last month — two years minimum.

Aboriginal activists have charged police brutality as the cause.

An interim report issued last month recommended aboriginal recruits replace white police officers suspected of racism and that drunkenness be abolished as a crime for aborigines.

Most aborigines have died in police cells by hanging after being picked up on charges of being drunk and disorderly.

Finger cut off in protest

TOKYO (AP) — A political scandal involving leading government officials has prompted one irate citizen to protest by chopping off part of a finger and mailing it to the prime minister, police said today.

A member of a rightist organization admitted severing the top of his little finger on the right hand and sending it to Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, along with a message protesting political corruption, a police official said.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the 47-year-old protester was a member of an extreme rightist group. But he refused to identify him "because the act was obviously aimed at seeking publicity."

A package containing the finger was delivered to Takeshita's official residence on Tuesday with a letter describing Japan's leaders as "dirty politicians" involved in a stock-profiteering scandal, the official said.

Leftists kill 5 policemen

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Leftist guerrillas killed five policemen in an attack northeast of Lima, bringing to 41 the number of people killed since Saturday in the intensified insurgency, the government said.

The attack by the Maoist Shining Path occurred Wednesday near Huaraz, 190 miles to the northeast, the government said Thursday. It did not elaborate.

The U.S. Embassy said Thursday the guerrillas likely sabotaged a train and caused a crash in the Andes Mountains that killed a New Jersey mayor's wife.

Anna Cucci was killed and her husband, Jersey City Mayor Anthony Cucci, was injured Dec. 1 when the rail car they rode derailed and tumbled down a ravine near Cuzco, 350 miles southeast of Lima.

The announcements came the same day as Prime Minister Armando Villanueva and the army commander, Gen. Artemio Palomino, moved to dispel speculation that the military might take over the government.

Beirut car bomb kills six

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb exploded today in a suburban district of south Beirut controlled by the pro-Iranian militia Hezbollah, killing at least six people and injuring 12, police said.

The blast came on the sixth day of fierce fighting between Hezbollah, or Party of God, and the rival Amal militia for control of south Lebanon. Police said two civilians were killed as the militias battled with mortars and machine guns, and another three were wounded.

The afternoon blast in Beirut's Bir El-Abed neighborhood came a half hour after thousands of Hezbollah supporters demonstrated against the Syrian-backed Amal, a police spokesman said.

Gramm wants world to cotton to local crop

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm is an economist who's got some ideas on beefing up the Texas economy — with a "touch of joy."

One notion is selling underwear, made of West Texas cotton, to the "teeming millions in this world who have never known the joy of wearing cotton underwear," he said.

"We've got to sell more cotton," Gramm told West Texas cotton farmers and ginners here on a cold windy Thursday afternoon.

As he talked about reviving the Texas economy from the Gulf Coast to the West Texas deserts, the Farmers Cooperative Cotton Gin was cleaning up harvested cotton, deseeding it, packing the soft white lint into layers and cranking out 500-pound bales.

"We have got to be looking for new markets — new ways to make American cotton competitive," the senator from College Station said.

"Just think of all the teeming millions in this world who have never known the joy of wearing cotton underwear," Gramm said. "What a great opportunity we have in going out and finding that market and making it possible for them to buy Texas cotton or, even better, Texas cotton underwear," Gramm said.

"The market is out there. People want our product. What we have got to do is work hard to see that they get an opportunity to get it."

The farmers' goal is to figure out how to sell cotton for fair prices in a competitive world market and, at the same time, to make cotton farming more profitable.

"WE'RE TRYING to generate new growth," Gramm said. "Cotton is important to Texas. We have got to grow it better. We have got to gin it better. And we have got to get out and roll up our sleeves and sell it on the world market...so that everybody gets it, and we (Texans) can make a lot of money producing it."

Gramm, a Republican who glad-handed the farmers, ginners, the county judge, the sheriff and others in a predominantly Democratic and rural setting west of Stanton, said prosperity hinges on honoring traditional industries and developing new ones.

"Prosperity in the future is going to depend, in part, on our traditional industries: the oil-and-gas business, cotton business, and agriculture in general," he said. "We want to broaden our economic base. We want new industry. But we are not going to walk off from the industries that we already have. Agriculture is important to Texas, and, obviously, cotton is important to Texas agriculture. We are going to produce a bumper crop this year. That's a blessing."

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm

And with that blessing comes a "real challenge" — developing a world market for Texas cotton and more efficiently producing and processing cotton.

Otherwise, he said, "There's not a problem in Texas that 500,000 new jobs wouldn't cure."

Gramm, who was a Texas A&M University economics professor before he entered politics, also was a conservative Democrat before he switched parties.

"I sometimes feel like I'm in the economic-development business," he said. "And given the state of the Texas economy in the last three years, that's the business I ought to be in."

AS SENATOR, Gramm said he has "worked hard" for a home port in Corpus Christi, for the Super-conducting Super Collider in the Dallas area, for Grumman Aircraft in Houston and for J.C. Penney Company in Dallas.

At Gramm's Stanton stopover in his survey of the Texas economy, he got a measure of West Texas hospitality and a dose of farmers' concerns from Danny Fryar, Stanton's farming mayor; Doug Church, co-op gin manager; Myrl Mitchell, Lenorah ginner, farmer, chairman of Plains Cotton Growers, and member of the Federal Crop Insurance Board; and Jerry Harris, Lamesa farmer and ginner.

"The health of the cotton industry is important to us," Harris said, "because it easily swings from prosperity to depression."

HARRIS SAID West Texans "know how to produce a product; we know how to gin a product."

Combest seeks seniors' support to repeal health-care bill

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — About 130 of Ector County's older citizens braved frigid temperatures Thursday morning to hear 19th District Rep. Larry Combest strongly condemn recently enacted catastrophic health care legislation and a proposed 50 percent congressional pay hike.

Senior citizens, nearly all members of the American Association of Retired Persons and the Northside Senior Citizens' Center, 1225 N. Adams, heard the Lubbock congressman, whose district includes Ector County, explain why it "was very difficult to vote against" the health care measure that had been strongly supported by the national AARP organization.

"I felt members of Congress and my constituents back home didn't know what was in it," he stated. Combest said that, in June 1987 while the proposal was still being considered, he mailed 65,000 letters to voters throughout the 19th district, in which he tried to explain why he believed the Catastrophic Health Insurance proposal was "a bad bill."

Not only does the law include catastrophic health care for AIDs victims, he said, but it places the cost of funding such coverage on the backs of all senior citizens drawing Social Security, while denying many of them coverage under the law.

Combest said that, although he believes the government should provide catastrophic medical care for AIDs victims, he does not believe the nation's senior citizens should be forced to fund it. Under the current law, senior citizens will be required to pay a surcharge (tax) on their income tax, whether they receive benefits or not.

Since passage of the catastrophic health care bill by Congress, and its subsequent signing by the president, Combest said members of Congress "are being inundated by letters" protesting the measure.

He is supporting legislation that would repeal the law so Congress could "go back to square one and start over." But, Combest added, it's "going to take a groundswell" of public opinion to force Congress to seriously consider changing the law.

However, he said, legal action is being explored by some opponents who contend the law is unconstitutional because it singles out a specific age group for a tax increase. He said he expects a lawsuit to be filed shortly.

"It's going to be an uphill battle," the Lubbock congressman said, because the chairmen of the two committees that handled the bill, Texas Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Senate Finance Committee, and Illinois Democratic Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, House Ways and Means Committee, have publicly made known they "are vehemently opposed to any change."

Combest urged those attending the AARP chapter meeting at the Northside Senior Citizens' Center to write letters of protest to Bentsen.

The Republican congressman also urged senior citizens to write letters to him, Bentsen and Republican Sen. Phil Gramm protesting the planned pay increase for members of Congress.

"At a time when we're going to be looking at deficit problems, and as we read President-elect Bush's lips and we're not going to have a tax increase, to have it proposed that we have a 50 percent pay increase "is absolutely ridiculous."

"Don't get me wrong," Combest told the senior citizen group. "I've got lots of places where I could use that extra $45,000. But we knew what the pay was when we ran."

As to the current pay level ($90,000 per year) discouraging qualified individuals from seeking congressional office, Combest said if he announced tomorrow he would not run again there would be no lack of people seeking to replace him in Congress.

Concerning President-elect Bush's appointment of retired Adm. James Watkins as Department of Energy secretary, Combest said he was reserving judgment on the admiral, but he believes anyone familiar with the fuel needs of the military will be keenly aware of the importance of a healthy domestic oil industry.

Regarding energy legislation, Combest said when Congress goes back into session at the end of this month we'll be "looking at and working with a number of other people an entirely new energy policy program." He noted previous efforts in this area "have not been successfully completed."

Gift will help anti-drug campaign to take off

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Texas Congressman Lamar Smith took part in a ceremonial presentation Wednesday that netted the 17-county Permian Basin Drug Task Force its very own airplane.

The U.S. Customs Service presented the Cessna 210 aircraft to the Permian Basin Task Force Wednesday because of its help in a drug bust last year.

Smith accepted the aircraft on behalf of the task force during a 3 p.m. ceremony at Midland Regional Airport. Art Van Dorn, coordinator, and Jay Silvestro, assistant special agent in charge in San Antonio, also were on hand for the presentation.

"This airplane is a tangible example of just the kind of good that we are doing," the congressman said.

"I think it's particularly appropriate thaf we are taking a tool that was used by the drug traffickers — in this case to haul 1,000, pounds of marijuana into the United States — and turning it into a tool to use against them," he added.

The aircraft was seized March 1, 1988, in Roswell, N.M., where it traveled after after leaving Kermit. The task force responded to a request for assistance from Customs officials and arrested three suspects and seized about 1,000 pounds of marijuana in the drug bust.

"This truly is a multi-agency cooperative effort in the finest sense," Smith said.

Dallas Together's report generates another split in racially divided city

DALLAS (AP) — A plan to curb racial tensions in Dallas has sparked controversy of its own in the minority community.

Dallas Together, appointed by Mayor Annette Strauss last March to study ways to reduce racial divisiveness in the city, Thursday released its final report. It suggests more minority participation in business, education and government.

"No one has been willing to say there was a race problem," said Pettis Norman, a former Dallas Cowboy and co-chairman of Dallas Together. "Once there is agreement that there is a problem, we can do it with a mixed chorus and go out to the community and ask the churches and the civic groups to get involved."

But other minorities say the proposals are a feeble attempt to stall discrimination lawsuits pending against the city.

"This is a red herring and the fox isn't behind this," said Roy Williams, a plantiff in a federal redistricting lawsuit that claims the city's election process for council members is discriminatory.

"I do not need the Anglo community to dictate to me what needs to be done in the black community," Williams said. "We've known all along that affirmative action is needed. When is it going to happen?"

Dallas Together chairman Tom Dunning announced Thursday that the group wants the City Council to appoint a charter review committee to consider changes to its combination at-large, single-member-district council election system to provide better minority representation. In addition, there are proposals for changes in education, private businesses and neighborhoods to reflect a more equalitarian community.

"Our mission began because of tensions between police department and the community, but it grew to address such issues as economics, education, housing, business and political participation," Dunning said.

"We want to emphasize that this is not the end, but the beginning," Dunning said. "The beginning of easing racial tensions in Dallas."

But Williams said minorities involved in the effort have been duped.

"This smells; I wouldn't trust it," Williams said.

Those involved are "those handpicked preachers they control because they hold the notes on their churches, or the Uncle Toms in the community," Williams said. "They're not the voices of the black community. (Council members) hear the right people down here every Wednesday. They just don't want to listen."

Dallas has endured growing racial tensions that peaked with several police shootings of unarmed, minority citizens and the killing of a record five Dallas officers in 1988. At one point last year, Dallas parole officers were not permitted to see clients in certain areas of the city because of neighborhood hostility.

City Council members themselves have exchanged heated words over minority issues. In fact, notably absent from Thursday's presentation were outspoken black council members Diane Ragsdale and Al Lipscomb and black county commissioner John Wiley Price.

At a council meeting last summer, Ms. Ragsdale shouted, "You are a racist!" to a member of a police advocacy group, saying the group was formed only after a white officer was killed and not after the death of a black officer earlier in the year.

Woman sues Upton County, ex-sheriff

From Staff Reports

Glenn Willeford, the deposed Upton County sheriff, and the Upton County government have been shouldered with a $10-million federal lawsuit lodged by a former Rankin businesswoman who claimed that Willeford's "stooge" had "planted" drugs in her grocery store.

The woman, Mary Turner, was tried in 112th State District Court in Rankin in 1987, but the case was dismissed in mid-trial before a verdict was rendered.

The lawsuit's petition says that Mrs. Turner was "innocent of (the) trumped up charges" but was unable to convince Willeford and Upton the alleged "stooge," Walter Woofe, had planted the drugs.

"Mrs. Turner had "voluntarily subjected herself to an out-of-court lie detector test," which, she alleged, indicated her innocence.

The lawsuit also charges that Larry Dale Jackson testified falsely to distort the truth.

The testimony of Jackson was "perjured" and obtained by Willeford in a "last ditch" effort to "destroy" Mrs. Turner, the lawsuit alleges.

Willeford later was deposed after he was charged with planting dope in a unrelated case to justify a search warrant on a couple who were allegedly operating a drug laboratory between Rankin and McCamey.

The Turner woman, who is seeking $2 million in actual damages and $8 million in punitive damages, is being represented by Midland attorney John Gunter.

Odessa attorney John Smith, who reportedly represents Willeford, has yet to file a response to the allegations in the civil case.

Willeford reportedly is working on a West Texas ranch, and Mrs. Turner has moved from Rankin.

Ex-KKK member gets 10 years for vandalism

DALLAS (AP) — A former Ku Klux Klan member received the maximum punishment for vandalism of a Jewish temple and religious leaders praised a state district judge for the sentence.

Daniel Alvis Wood, 19 and a so-called "skinhead," was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment and a $5,000 fine in the October attack on Temple Shalom in North Dallas.

Judge Joe Kendall told Wood he wanted to send a message that bigotry and racial violence will not be tolerated.

"It's not illegal to hate but it is illegal to act upon that hatred," Kendall told Wood, who had asked for probation.

Wood had pleaded guilty in the case. He admitted that he and two friends placed antisemitic slogans and swastikas on Temple Shalom.

Jewish leaders, who said that such vandalism is on the rise in Texas, called the trial the first serious prosecution of a skinhead in Texas. But defense attorney Larry Boyd questioned whether sending Wood to prison would have the desired effect.

"They may have created a martyr; I don't know," said Boyd. "I don't think it's going to stamp out racism."

After the verdict, Wood flashed Kendall a "Heil Hitler" salute. But Boyd said his client was "very hurt — I'm sure it was just an immature, emotional reaction."

The judge viewed the gesture differently.

"It confirmed that I did the right thing," said Kendall. "It confirmed I had not been fooled by his recantation."

Some of the almost 100 Temple Shalom members who attended the hearing in Kendall's court applauded at the sentencing.

Judicial panel considers complaints on Dallas judge

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Commission on Judicial Conduct began meeting in private this morning on a complaint filed against a Dallas judge who said he gave a light sentence to a killer because the two victims were homosexuals.

Commission chairman Judge William E. Junell told reporters before the meeting began that the commission would hear a staff investigative report on the matter of District Court Judge Jack Hampton.

Last month, Hampton said he sentenced a convicted killer to 30 years in prison instead of the maximum of life in prison in part because the two victims were homosexuals, whom he described as "queers."

Several gay rights and civil liberties organizations filed a complaint with the judicial conduct commission asking that Hampton be removed from office for his comments.

Junell said "the manner of those complaints will be taken up by the commission," but he said he doubted the case would be decided today.

He said Hampton had not been called to appear before the commission, which oversees conduct of Texas judges, but he said the judge could be asked to talk to the commission later.

The commission could dismiss the case. If the commission chooses to impose sanctions, those could range from a private warning to appointment of a special master by the Texas Supreme Court to conduct a removal hearing.

Junell would not comment on specifics of the case. "We're constitutionally obligated not to get into our feelings," he said.

The 11-member commission of judges and private citizens meets behind closed doors and does not discuss pending cases.

Asked about notoriety stemming from the case, which was reported nationwide, he said, "We are aware of the publicity. We have received a great deal of letters about the matter."

While the commission meets, protesters were expected today in front of the building at a rally.

In a letter to Junell released Thursday by U.S. Rep. Martin Frost in Washington, Frost said it is clear Hampton's words and actions indicate he is "unsuitable" to remain in that post.

"Legitimate fears of bigotry on the part of the judge would taint all cases brought before him," Frost wrote. "Further, his continued service would falsely suggest that in our state all human life is not considered of equal value and that equal protection under the law will not be guaranteed for all citizens."

Sweetwater clerk to get $1,200 for spotting fugitive

SWEETWATER (AP) — A supermarket clerk will receive $1,200 in rewards after calling police to arrest a fugitive wanted nationwide for allegedly cashing at least $150,000 in bad checks, a U.S. Secret Service agent said.

Mike Kincaid, a clerk at Lawrence IGA, recognized James Stanley Jennings, 51, from photos he had seen in fliers distributed by the Secret Service.

Kincaid cashed Jennings' $400 airline company check when Jennings entered the store at 11:30 p.m. Wednesday. Kincaid called police, who arrested Jennings within minutes in the parking lot.

R. David Freriks, U.S. Secret Service resident agent of Lubbock, said Kincaid will receive a $1,000 reward from the Secret Service and a $200 reward from the U.S. marshal's department.

Jennings had escaped in 1986 from the federal correctional institution in Big Spring, where he had been serving time on similar complaints.

"We've been chasing Jennings for 2½ years," Freriks said.

Freriks said Jennings "ran his operation from his car. We have confiscated his equipment with which he made false ID cards, including Texas drivers licenses."

Jennings was taken to federal court in Lubbock, where he will remain in custody while his case is processed, Freriks said. He said Jennings has used at least a dozen aliases and was wanted around the nation.

Gramm's grab angers some

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some Republicans are hopping mad over Sen. Phil Gramm's purchase of a large block of tickets to the Texas State Society's Black Tie and Boots inaugural party for President-elect George Bush.

Gramm, who is up for re-election in 1990, purchased 270 tickets at $50 each to the now-sold-out Jan. 21 gala celebrating Bush's inauguration.

Press Secretary Larry Neal said 90 tickets are being reserved for $1,000 contributors who join the Gramm Senate Club Advisory Board, with the rest going to longtime backers.

"People are outraged," said one of the party's organizers. "They feel like they are being blackmailed into making a $1,000 contribution to Gramm."

But Neal attributed the complaints to Texas Democratic chairman Bob Slagle and Ed Martin, party executive director.

"Poor Bob and poor Ed," said Neal. "They lost the election and they have to complain about something, and they are complaining bitterly today to any newspaper reporter who will listen to them. Bitterness is not uncommon among losers."

But Martin denied that he and Slagle had generated complaints about Gramm's ticket purchases.

"We haven't been sitting here creating an uproar about anything," said Martin.

The gala's sponsor said Gramm's block of tickets was by far the largest purchase. In fact, Gramm originally requested 300 tickets, but his allotment was reduced by 10 percent when organizers saw the demand for tickets.

Cross won't be erected

EL PASO (AP) — City Council has reversed itself and will not allow a cross to be erected temporarily at a city-owned downtown plaza Jan. 22.

Thursday's emergency council meeting was prompted by a lawsuit filed Wednesday by the El Paso chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. The suit accused the City Council of violating the Texas Constitution by permitting the cross to be erected on public property.

The cross, which had not yet been erected in the plaza, was intended to be a prayer stop during a procession by The Reverence for Life Ministry of the Catholic diocese. The group plans the march to mark the 17th anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in the Roe vs. Wade case that legalized abortion nationwide.

City Council approved the group's parade permit Dec. 27 after City Attorney David Caylor warned against allowing the cross at the plaza. The group still will be allowed to march, and apparently will be able to carry the cross onto the plaza as long as it is not erected there.

Injuries not serious, DPS says

From Staff Reports

No serious injuries were reported when a Chevrolet Suburban slammed into a tractor-trailer Thursday on Interstate 20 east of Midland, the Department of Public Safety reported.

A 34-year-old Big Spring woman, Belinda Corley, was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital and released, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

The accident occurred at 9:10 a.m. Thursday in the westbound lanes of I-20 about a mile east of Midland, DPS reported.

Ms. Corley was driving a 1985 Suburban in the outside lane when she passed a tractor-trailer driven by Lazaro Lopez of El Paso. The Suburban struck the tractor-trailer in the left rear and blew a tire, then slid under the trailer, according to the DPS.

Lopez was not injured, according to reports.

Ms. Corley was wearing a safety belt at the time of the accident, reports said.

COMBEST

Saying that he has not seen an outline of the policy, Combest said, "We've got to develop a policy that removes us from the hostage situation we're currently in with OPEC countries.

"The only thing we can do to reverse this industry is to provide stability in the marketplace at a level.

"We're not talking $45 oil, we're talking stability at $18, $20, somewhere at a level that is profitable" over the long term.

PLANE

"I feel that we have really accomplished something when members of federal, state and local law enforcement work together and succeed as these officers have done and continue to do."

Smith said the passage of national drug enforcement legislation in 1986, now allows federal agencies to share a lot more with local networks.

For example, federal laws permit the sharing of seized property with state and local law enforcement agencies that participate directly in operations that result in seizures.

Customs has awarded almost $5 million in assets seized during narcotics investigations to Texas law enforcement agencies.

Van Dorn said the task force will have a lot of uses for the aircraft in its war against drugs; primarily in the areas of aerial surveillance of vehicles, landing strips and cultivation fields.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, who was instrumental in organizing the task force, agreed.

"It's going to allow the task force a lot more flexibility and mobility," he said.

ROBBERY

The employee, an assistant manager, and another person were inside the restaurant at the time and were forced into a walk-in refrigerator by the men, White said.

Three bank bags were taken from the assistant manager's office, but White said the amount of money in the bags wasn't known.

All three men were described as black, and all wore dark clothing and ski masks or scarves. The one who wielded the double-barrel shotgun was described as 19 to 20 years of age, 5 feet 9 inches tall, weighing about 130 pounds.

The second man, who carried a baseball bat, was described as in his mid to late 20s, 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighing 160 to 170 pounds.

The third suspect was described as 6 feet to 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighing about 130 pounds. He was in his early 20s, according to witnesses.

COTTON

Farmers and ginners "depend on people like you (Gramm) to keep those international markets open for us so that we can find a place to go with this production."

Church noted that cotton is the "only crop" in this part of West Texas that "is very profitable. Cotton is our cash crop."

The Fryar noted that the senator "has lots of supporters" in Martin County and that he, as a farmer and mayor, "has a few" questions to ask the senator.

Mitchell told Gramm that "the interest you've showed us over the years is certainly appreciated.

"Just here on the Plains, this year we're making a bumper cotton crop. It's going to be a billion-dollar crop. Looks like we are going to make real close to three million bales."

But in hard times, Mitchell said, farmers "have to have something to fall back on when we do miss crops. We have disasters. As hard as it is to say, sometimes we have too much rain."

But rains have been "timely where we could make good production, and we're thankful for that."

Bonds likely to fund new prisons, lawmakers say

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas House and Senate leaders say they don't see much alternative to paying for prison construction with bond money, as proposed by Gov. Bill Clements in his criminal justice program.

Clements Thursday called for almost 11,000 new prison beds, which would require $343 million in general obligation bonds. He declared legislation authorizing the bond sale an emergency, allowing lawmakers to immediately begin work on the issue.

"Well, it's not the best idea, but it's about the only available one," Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, presiding officer of the Senate, said of the bond proposal.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said, "I've never been real 100 percent supportive of bonds, but at the same time, under the present circumstances and financial conditions of the state, I find that's the only way that we can do it."

The need for new prisons is crucial, Clements said in remarks to the Rotary Club of Houston.

"The critical need for new space is witnessed day in and day out by the judges and juries who hand down sentences only to have them served out on the street because of a lack of prison beds," he said. "This simply must not continue.

"If the Legislature acts quickly so that approval of these bonds can go before the voters on the May ballot, we can accelerate relief to packed county jails by months, and we can let counties know before their next budget cycle that we are committed to doing all we can to help them," Clements said.

Members of the Senate Finance Committee earlier criticized Clements' support of prison bonds. Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said taxpayers would pay more in the long run for financing bonds.

Clements said his plan "picks up where our last one left off" and noted that 13,000 prison beds are included in the current expansion effort. That expansion used general obligation bonds, he said.

But the governor also said the state can't build its way out of a crime rate. He said his package, presented for the Legislature's consideration, includes proposals designed to rehabilitate offenders and stop their tendency to slip back into a criminal pattern of behavior.

Clements' program — which has its foundation in recommendations by a special task force and includes some measures like those in a package announced Wednesday by Lewis — would:

- Make drug testing and counseling a condition of probation and parole.
- Allow all assets from drug sales to be seized and used by law enforcement agencies to enhance their resources.
- Provide mandatory flat prison time for major drug offenders, murderers and violent career criminals.
- Increase the penalty for aggravated assault of a peace officer from a second- or third-degree felony to a first-degree felony.

School shelters house eight on first night

HOUSTON (AP) — Public school officials who opened two school-based shelters for homeless students in a pioneer program offering beds, showers and meals hope the colder weather that whipped into Houston may prompt more needy pupils to seek help while it's available.

However, administrators of the program that began Thursday night say it may take more than weather to draw in youths living on the streets of the nation's fourth-largest city.

Of the eight youths served by the shelters on the first night of the pilot program, only one met the original guidelines drawn up for the Schoolhouse Shelters program, believed to be the first of its kind in the nation.

"I'm not disappointed," said school board President Melody Ellis. "It's going to take some time for the children to build up a trust factor with us, and you can imagine how frightened these poor little children are with all this attention."

A 12-year-old girl who had been sleeping under an abandoned house near a public school was the first child to enter one of the two inner-city schools seeking shelter, Ms. Ellis said.

"When she first arrived, the principal talked to her and she just broke down, and she just decided she was not going to interrogate that child any longer," Ms. Ellis said.

Officials in the district, the state's largest with about 190,000 students, set up the program after increasing reports of students living on the streets. The plan was based on the premise that students who feared seeking help elsewhere may turn to a more familiar environment.

Under their plan, only students enrolled in Houston schools would be eligible to stay in the shelters, which were not meant for families or children who should be served by other social programs.

Of those accepted at the shelters Thursday night, however, only one was a confirmed student living involuntarily without a home and without parents, officials said. A homeless mother brought in her five children, and two teen-age youths believed to be drop-outs offered names of schools not in the Houston district.

Houston Independent School District President Dr. Melody Ellis talks with reporters Thursday night at the Gregory-Lincoln Education Center about the one week pilot program set up to feed, house and clothe homeless schoolchildren.

Officials who had tried to discourage news crews from staking out the campus sites said later that four boys had arrived at the shelters, but left before entering after apparently fearing the attention they may draw.

Despite the problems, administrators who volunteered to staff the shelters overnight were happy with the results.

"If only one child shows up, the program's working because that's one child that's not on the streets," said area superintendent Kaye Stripling. "That's one of the things that the superintendent and I talked about. If we can keep one child off the street, then the program is worth it."

It is estimated Houston has 20,000 to 25,000 homeless people who live on the streets or in shelters, but it's uncertain how many of those are children. Ms. Ellis said Thursday that at least 14 Houston students had been identified as truly homeless, but would not speculate on a total number.

The Red Cross donated 75 cots and blankets for the schools and agencies and area residents volunteered to drive the streets in search of children needing shelter. The costs to Houston schools, which provided food, space and security officers for the campus, were described as minimal.

The program will remain in effect at the two schools until at least Jan. 20, when the superintendent will recommend to the school board that it be continued or modified.

One school is set up to handle children from kindergarten through the eighth grade. The other is intended for high school students.

Despite general support from social agencies — including Covenant House, a youth shelter whose vans cruised the streets Thursday night in search of homeless students — some officials have doubts about the severity of the problem.

Judy Hay, of Harris County Children's Protective Services, said use of the term "homeless" for the school program may be incorrect.

"I know there's children out there," she said. "But I certainly didn't think they were in school. These children (targets of the school program) have a home somewhere, but they either are abused or choose not to be at home."

Ms. Hay said programs already exist for "truly homeless" children, whose parents, for example, may be living out of their car.

Supporters of Schoolhouse Shelters disagree, and believe a cold front that swept through the Houston streets Thursday evening may help prove that. Balmy afternoon temperatures dipped to a windy 40 degrees by late evening.

"These children do not have homes. We have incidences reported where children have left school and gone home to find that there is nobody there anymore," Ms. Ellis said.

"People in the community have identified them, some of the teachers have identified them, and once some of the children have learned the services we are providing they may come forth themselves," she said.

Those youths who are not students may be referred to other social agencies, and officials expressed hopes that school-aged students who are not enrolled may find permanent shelter and return to school.

Hobby doesn't back education board chairman's statements

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Thursday he hoped new State Board of Education members — including the new chairman — would put "unfortunate" election statements behind them after the new chairman called for relief for local school districts from costly education reforms.

Hobby was among the lawmakers who listened to Monte Hasie, chairman-designate for the new elected board, propose relief for financially-strapped school districts from some of the 1984 reforms that ended up costing the districts more money.

Later, Hobby, who has resisted any changes in the reforms, said he hoped the new board members would "discharge their responsibilities well" despite "unfortunate statements" some of them — including Hasie — made during the campaign.

Hasie said he supports most of the education reforms and he hopes for a positive relationship with Hobby, but he also will push for flexibility on rules, such as one that limits elementary classes to 22 pupils.

In one Panhandle town, he said, the addition of three students forced the district to hire three more teachers and build three more classrooms the school district could not afford.

"What we've got to do is create some rules so if somebody gets in a bind, we could give them relief...on a temporary basis," Hasie said.

In the meeting with the Legislative Education Board, Hasie called on lawmakers to stop mandating programs without providing the money to pay for them. When they consider new programs, he said, they should "ask how it will affect the students and where the money is coming from."

House Speaker Gib Lewis, another member of the legislative board, replied, "The Texas Legislature is committed to quality education and excellence in every way and we will not deviate from that." He added, "We will give you all the support you need."

Gov. Bill Clements picked Hasie, a Lubbock Republican, as chairman of the 15-member board that was elected by regions and replaces an appointed board. Ten of the new members are Democrats. The board will organize today (Friday).

Carolyn Crawford, D-Beaumont and chairman of the board's personnel committee, said she expects the board will review the teacher career ladder program and the teacher appraisal system, but she added that the interests of the students must come first.

"All students will meet or exceed the expectations of the state: That really is our goal," said Ms. Crawford, one of four returnees from the appointed board.

Will Davis, a Democrat from Austin and chairman of the finance and programs committee, said the school financing system enacted with the education package in 1984 no longer provides equity in education.

The Legislature should not consider as a victory an Austin appeals court decision upholding the state in the Edgewood school district's lawsuit challenging the financing system.

"The court didn't disagree with the facts of discrimination," noted Davis, a lawyer.

"The court simply found that discrimination didn't arise from unconstitutional deprivation."

The current state allotment of $1,350 per child was established in 1985, Davis said. "It was too low then and it's too low now."

"If this condition is allowed to persist, then only those students in high-wealth districts will have access to quality education."

He suggested that a new funding plan be phased in over five or six years that would raise the allotment to at least $2,000 per student.

Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, advised the board members to remember that they are elected by districts, but they are responsible for the entire state.

FAMILY MATTERS

Sisterly advice well-meaning

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: I was over at my sister's for a Christmas Eve family gathering. Their kids had already opened their presents and were showing them to everyone. I was shocked by how much they had gotten. I have always felt that they give their children too much, but now it's even worse because my brother-in-law lost his job just before Christmas. We all think that (company name) was really rotten for doing that to him.

My brother-in-law has always had good jobs, but now I think that he should be concerned about his future. I just don't think that they should have spent that kind of money on Christmas gifts for their children. I wanted to say something to my sister, but I didn't. My husband tells me that it's none of my business. I think that it is. She is my sister and I think she is living in fairy land.

Should I say something to her? Do you think that she would be mad at me? CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: Whether or not your sister would welcome your opinion depends on your relationship with her. If you have a history of honest and supportive sharing, she may appreciate hearing about your concerns. If such concerns have offended her in the past, then sharing them now is probably not a good idea.

In any case, there are some things that should be considered.

People, especially male professionals, who have been accustomed to financial success often don't face job loss as directly as is necessary.

In the first few weeks after losing their jobs, they may carry on as if nothing had happened. In some cases, the person may insist on spending money unnecessarily on such things as a car, a vacation or extravagant toys, as part of a financial denial process.

If your relationship with your sister is supportive, sharing this information with her may help her confront ther husband about their financial situation. This family issue is best addressed with a positive action plan that focuses on financial realities.

On the issue of giving children too much, we parents often try to give our children all the things that we never had. But giving them so much robs them of the experience of waiting to get something, or the disappintment of not getting it all — lessons in real life that are learned more easily by young children than adults.

DEAR FAMILY: Christmas has turned into a nightmare. Our 3-year-old refused to leave the packages under the Christmas tree alone. He unwrapped every present that was there. I finally put all the presents up. Then he started screaming and crying so much that I had to put them back.

The week before Christmas, he had already unwrapped all his presents from his grandparents and cousins as well as most of my presents and my husband's presents. Now my husband is mad at me because I can't stop my son. It's easy for him to complain because he's not home all day with (child's name). I just can't put up with his whining and screaming. Do you have any suggestions? HOPELESS

DEAR HOPELESS: Being home with a child all day is a very tough job, but it seems to work best when parents establish clear boundaries for their children. Parents can establish these boundaries by explaining the rules of the house to the children in a family meeting. Although rules can be negotiated, the parents make the final decision.

For example, you and your husband could have had a meeting with your son and explained the "rules of the presents." A rule might be that he could open one present of his choice the week before Christmas.

Each rule, when broken, has a conesquence. The consequence for opening additional presents might be that he must stay in the "sit and watch chair" for one minute every time he opens a present without permission.

Screaming and whining can be dealt with at that same meeting. The rule is that screaming children will scream in the "sit and watch chair." Whining children cannot be heard.

I know this sounds difficult, but the child must know that you are in charge, not him. Establish rules and consequences together, and then enforce them.

Mannerly behavior differs by night, day

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — I was immensely startled (and secretly pleased) to arrive at a dinner party last week and be greeted, not by the usual peck on the cheek, but a deep bow by the host.

This seemed curiously obsequious, for a man who heads a major clothing firm. Then suddenly, I felt the glove on my right hand being pulled off, and replaced by two puckered lips and a few bristles of mustache.

"Good grief," I cried, "you're kissing my hand!"

"But of course," he said, rising to his full 5 feet 8 inches, and smiling — while his wife giggled in the background — "courtliness is back. Hadn't you heard?"

Frankly I hadn't, and neither had the half-dozen other stunned women guests who received the same greeting. But as the evening progressed, our host George, as red-blooded an American as ever swept the stakes in a wild poker game, explained:

"In 1989, we are entering the era of 'night manners' and 'day manners,'" he said. "In the workplace, you women want to be treated like equals, is that right?" There was light applause. "But in the evening, you want to be treated like ladies, correct?" Loud huzzahs. "That's what I thought," George said.

THE FACT of the matter is that's what George READ. He showed us a copy of an article (in the January "Self") titled "Night and Day: Timing Is Everything." It was written by a woman, naturally. In it, novelist Maggie Paley suggests that the new-fashioned equality standard of etiquette should be observed at work — but old-fashioned traditions must be returned at night.

"That way," she writes, "people would be sure to know the difference between work and love."

Paley insists it's only practical. "Men and women can compete with each other most efficiently during business hours, if they behave as if sex doesn't matter." At night, on the other hand, they will be happier reverting to masculine-feminine roles. I.e., men pull out chairs for women, hold their coats, smother them with kisses on lips or hands; women wait for men to open doors and order meals, defer to them and draw them out, make them feel important.

If a woman tried to use such traditional behavior, instinctive to femininity, in an office "she would more likely be considered for seduction than for promotion."

The concept of separate day and night manners seems, on the face of it, to benefit women far more than men. So why would men go for it?

George admitted that at first he felt that way, too. "When Jill (his wife) gave me the piece to read, my immediate reaction was this was another E.R.A. — meaning 'Equal Rights All Ways' for you women. It even sounded a little schizophrenic — how do you shift gears at sundown?"

"But then," Jill interrupted, "I told him to think some more about it. It makes a lot of sense. Ever since the 'movement' began, we (women) have gradually gained a lot of respect for our competence. But it's been a trade-off. We've lost a lot of the nice, really sweet customs that made romance and marriage so special. There's all this friction at my office," Jill sighed, "and I bring it home. The least little comment from George can make me flinch. We both need a little tenderness, but it's hard to change hats."

CHANGING HATS, or attitudes, is entirely possible if one follows Paley's "day-night" etiquette theory. "If everyone agreed that there should be different manners, then we could have the best of both worlds," she writes. "Day manners would be work manners, of course. A woman who learns work manners when she begins to care more about getting ahead than she cares about being treated like a lady. It's then that she stops hoping to be complimented on her appearance and starts wearing clothes that don't distract men. She talks finance, thinks net-net. She becomes, in fact, more like a man."

Men react accordingly. They no longer perform the "courtesies of ladies." They use four-letter words, without apology. They are wary. Carried onto the after-hours' scene, those manners are not conducive to romance or even friendship. They're more conducive, and may be responsible for, domestic incivility. If both men and women could switch gears and adopt traditional night manners, how different home life could be.

"Certain old-fashioned courtesies have become outmoded now that women don't have to be treated as the weaker sex," Paley writes, but "I don't know any woman who disapproves, at night, when men stand up for them or object if men bring them flowers."

As for men, they would welcome a return to traditional prerogatives — whispering sweet nothings, ordering the food and uncorking the wine, without feeling they are being looked on as patronizing.

"IT WAS a man, in fact, who suggested the night and day manners," Paley says. "'The women's movement has been great for office life,' he told me. 'Treating women just the way you treat men has made work easier for everyone. But after spending your days like that, it's a relief to get into your old-fashioned male role at night.'" After a day of work manners, everybody deserves to be loved.

"And that," George explained at the end of the party, "is why I took up kissing hands."

"It's a bit exaggerated," Jill added, "but isn't it romantic?"

As he bowed and backhandedly bussed us out, George said, pointedly, "Good night — ladies!"

Children's TV watched closely

By JOE STEIN
Copley News Service

American youngsters are getting fatter, according to a Harvard professor's study, and television is being held up as the main culprit. In releasing his findings, Steven Gortmaker, acting chairman of Harvard's department of behavioral sciences, told a group of dietitians recently that rates of obesity among U.S. children and adolescents jumped about 45 percent between 1960 and the early 1980s.

Gortmaker, who also cited 1983 research that indicated children spend an average of 25 hours a week watching television, says TV presents a two-edged sword: Kids vegetate in front of the tube, denying themselves the exercise they need, and, by being there, they expose themselves to barrages of commercials that induce feeding frenzies.

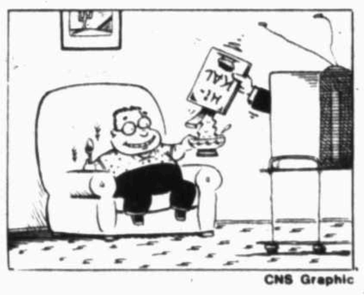
Television is a whipping boy that is blamed for everything from violence in the streets to the national deficit, but the Harvard study makes some sense. In particular, it was the second part of Gortmaker's indictment of television that intrigued me, so I conducted a little experiment one Saturday morning, logging the commercials on network cartoon shows between 8 and 9.

THE RESULTS certainly don't offer any conclusive cause and effect for youthful obesity, but they provide insights into the great Saturday-morning marketplace:

■ ABC, CBS and NBC combined for 60 commercials during that one-hour span.

■ All the ads were food-related or for toys.

■ In the food category, Kellogg's was the most active advertiser, pushing a variety of products, but McDonald's had the most individual commercials with six, followed by Rice Krispies (four), Kellogg's Raisin Bran (three), Corn Pops (three), Twix candy (three), Hi-C drinks (three), Chuck E. Cheese (two), Eggos waffles (two) and Cap'n Crunch cereal (two).



CNS Graphic

Many had one commercial each: beverages — Tang, the National Dairy Board; cereals — Super Golden Crisp, Smurf Magic Berries, Crunchberries, Trix, Honey-Nut Cheerios; cookies and pastries — Pop Tarts, Teddy Grahams, Chips Ahoy; snacks — Tang Fruit Box, 3 Musketeers candy bars, Fruit Slush; soups — Campbell's Meatball Alphabet with vegetables.

■ Amid the cascade of calorie-laden commercials, ABC apparently sought to mitigate the damage by airing a public-service message on how to make snacks by freezing fruit juices.

■ Even toys can have food tie-ins — notably the Play-Doh Burger King-Whopper play set. Although the burgers presumably aren't edible (they looked delicious), they have the power to whet young appetites.

■ Toys certainly have changed. Two especially come to mind — Purr-tenders, cuddly rabbits that purr when squeezed, revealing themselves, with the removal of masks, to be cats, and Fashion Star Fillies. The latter are horses that are outfitted in wedding dresses, evening wear and other fashions. Strange.

IT'S NOT just the sheer volume of commercials that can play havoc with young eating habits, but the manipulation that jumps off the TV screen. A few examples of the underlying messages that could inflate both stomachs and profits:

■ Snack after school — A youngster sees his classmates and teacher turn into Corn Pops, rushes home and is stunned as his dog makes the same transformation. All's well as the kid realizes it was merely "Corn Pops popping in my head" as he hungrily enjoys a bowl of the cereal. On a similar theme, Hi-C shows a youngster in a race to get home and enjoy some hula punch.

■ It's the "in" thing — "What do you do when a good time comes to an end?" asks the Twix commercial as kids dance up a storm. Obviously, the answer is to eat the sponsor's candy bar. A 3 Musketeers ad shows three teen buddies in a red convertible having a great time. Chuck E. Cheese bills itself as the place "where a kid can be a kid."

■ Trust us — Kids spend hours watching cartoons, so whom do you expect them to trust, Ricardo Montalban? Cartoon characters and Ronald McDonald give the pitches in most cases. Somehow it doesn't seem right to have the Smurfs and Winnie the Pooh, featured in their own Saturday-morning cartoon shows, used to hustle cereal.

■ IT'S GOOD for you — Not that it makes any difference to most kids, but Eggos (waffles) are termed "part of a complete breakfast," and Crunchberries are described as "part of a balanced breakfast." (Nutritionist Candy Cumming points out that "a lot of the really bad cereals that are very sugary are fortified, so they do have some extra nutrients — not that that makes the sugar part any better.") Healthy, happy, lean children frolic in commercial after commercial. In case you didn't guess, not one ad said, "Eat this and get fat."

■ Bet you can't forget — The songs and mottos are repeated to the point that they play on in one's head long after the television set is turned off. Over and over and over ... "Good time, great taste. That's why this is our place."

Sorry, I've got to wrap up this column. I have this uncontrollable urge to go to McDonald's — right after I have a bowl of cereal.

VDT terminals linked to eye focus problems

Some modern philosophers say computers have increased the intelligence of our species.

But that progress has come with a price.

Dr. James Sheedy of the University of California at Berkeley's School of Optometry says young people who regularly work with computers are losing the ability to focus their eyes.

Symptoms usually show up in people of advancing age.

But Sheedy says the phenomenon is spreading to 20- and 30-year-olds.

Of the 153 computer workers he has examined, more than half exhibited focus problems — and 50 percent of those affected were under age 40.

One thing the young people all had in common was a job or studies that forced them to sit in front of a video display terminal up to six hours a day the past four years or more.

This trend has every chance of growing worse.

According to UC-Berkeley, an estimated 70 million people could be working with computers in just two years.

In dreams, imagination gives direction

By ENID NEMY
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The petite woman is skiing swiftly down a slope somewhere in New England. Faster and faster she goes when suddenly, to her horror, she is in midair and heading over a cliff.

She cries out for help: the words that tumble from her lips are spoken in a Boston accent. That really terrifies her and with that, Dr. Ruth Westheimer wakes up, happy to realize that it was all a dream.

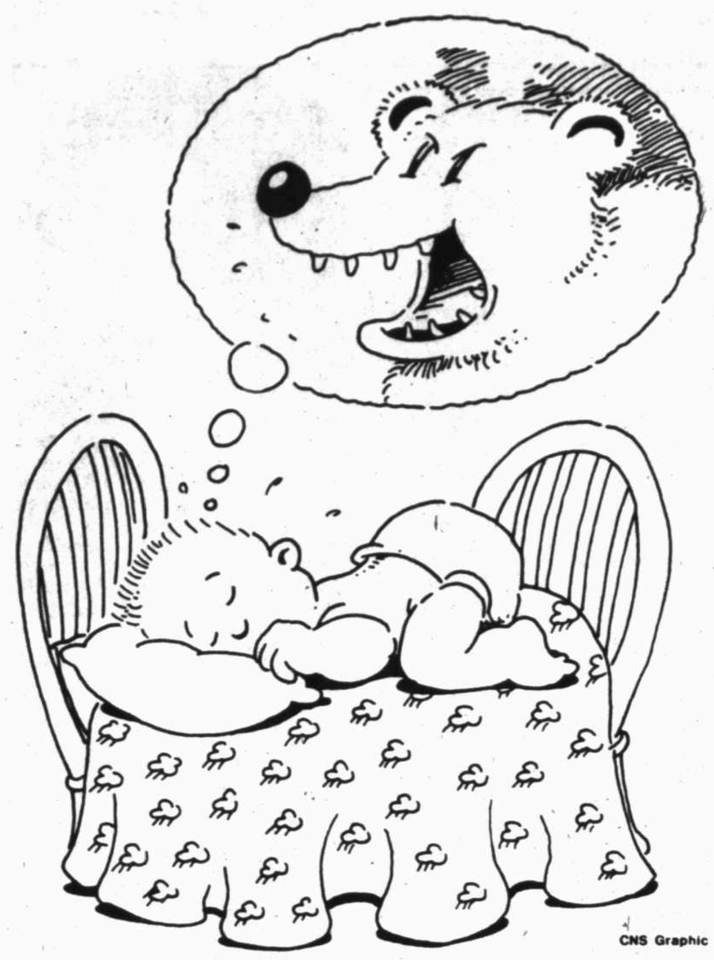
A few words to herself — "That would have been catastrophic!" among them — assures her she still has her "Grandma Freud" accent and she sighs in relief.

While not everyone claims to have a recurring dream, or even the one-night-only variety, there are certainly some curious goings-on in the land of Nod.

It is forever Christmas Eve in the dream Blaine Trump has several times a year. The hour is, in fact, 10 p.m. when Mrs. Trump realizes she hasn't even begun her Christmas shopping.

She dashes off seeking shops that are still open. She does not head for her brother-in-law's Fifth Avenue Tower. Instead, she goes to a New Jersey shopping center, the Paramus Mall on Route 4 to be exact.

There, the doors are still open (this, after all, is a dream) and there are lots of clerks to wait on her. They probably dreamed she was on her way.



CNS Graphic

MARIO BUATTA, one of the busiest men about town, says he uses his dreams to fulfill his social obligations. "I often dream that I've seen somebody, or phoned them, even had dinner with them," he said, "and I really think that I did do those things until I bump into them somewhere and they ask me when we're going to get together.

"Then I realize it's just been in a dream. It doesn't spill over into my business life but I sure see a lot of personal friends in my dreams."

Carolyne Roehm's strangest dreams take place, she is convinced, following a dinner which includes steak and red wine.

The scenario is pretty much the same: She is in a hurry to get someplace and, her feet are encased in blocks of cement, she can only walk in slow motion.

"Everything that shouldn't go wrong does go wrong," she said. "I can't get a taxi. My dog falls down a hole. I can't find the bottom of my skirt closet." All the time she's aware she's dreaming and is attempting to calm herself down.

The recurrent dream of Lisa Schier, Miss Roehm's assistant, is much more simple: "I'm eating a pretzel and my front teeth fall out."

George Peck is an actor-bus driver, currently starring on the No. 10 line (up Eighth Avenue, down Seventh Avenue). Passengers who have been on his bus are startled by his resemblance to Robert Redford and the fact that he greets everyone with a "Good day" or "Good evening."

He is known as "the singing bus driver," since he frequently bursts into song (his favorite is "All You Need Is Love").

And what is the singing bus driver's recurring dream? Certainly not gridlock. "I'm always accepting the Academy Award in my dreams," the aspiring actor said.

Which is a nicer dream than a great many musicians say they have. Consider the conductor Julius Rudel and the recurring dream he had during the 22 years he was general director of the New York City Opera: he would approach the theater only to find the front door barricaded by such obstacles as a brick wall or a wooden hedge.

He and the cast would then climb through a window to get into the theater to perform.

CHRISTOPHER KEENE becomes general director of the New York City Opera in March but in his dreams though he often shows up as Radames in "Aida."

He is in costume, the spotlight hits him, he opens his mouth and nothing comes out. The only sound comes from the sell-out crowd demanding a refund.

Mezzo-sopranos, it seems, have dreams as varied as their roles. Frederica von Stade often dreams of being in a field of beautiful flowers when suddenly the tranquility is interrupted by a thunderstorm. Definitely a dream that calls for color.

One of Marilyn Horne's recurring dreams resembles a 1940s movie. It is in black and white and she is being chased by the Nazis. As of the other night, the fleet-footed singer still hadn't been caught.

Consider composers: When John David Earnest was a youngster in Odessa, Texas, he would dream he was falling through the rooms of a dark, sinister Victorian house.

Today, the composer, whose most recent work includes "Tales of Terror and Murder" for soprano and chamber ensemble, still dreams of falling through a house, though it is no longer threatening.

"Recently, it's been ranch-style," Earnest reported.

The subject of Harold Brodkey's recurring dream is also dwellings. To be specific, "About finding a terrific space to live in," the author of "Stories in an Almost Classical Mode," explained.

"I hear this place is available and I go to see it. It has walls of glass, low rent and a moat, trees and good streetcar connections." He takes it.

The dreams of Pulitzer Prize-winning poets are not likely to be the stuff that the rest of us dream.

William Meredith, who won the prize last year and who recently had his 70th birthday, has this to say: "Poems are sometimes waking dreams, serious. They often work themselves into a poet's art as in my 'Trelawny's Dream,' where the swimmer is strong but feels the channel widen as he swims."

THE RECURRENT dreams of Malcolm Forbes are perhaps easier to identify with. He has two. In one, he is lighting a cigarette (he quit smoking 15 years ago). In the other, he is taking comprehensive exams at Princeton (something he did 50 years ago).

In the dream, though, he hasn't prepared and has to get friends to lend him their notes.

Further comparisons between Forbes and the rest of us is something to dream about.

Magazine features furry fashions

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — How much parody can dog and cat lovers take? Apparently issues and issues of it.

First there was Dogue, then Catmopolitan and now Vanity Fur, 95 pages filled with fashionable creatures, great and small, from Yves Saint Bernard, attired in a fez and a pouf, to Christian Laclaw, draped in satin ribbon and French veiling.

"Pawtrait of the Artist as a Young Dog," reads the headline of a satiric article bemoaning the treatment of animals by the art world.

The latest brainchild of Ilene Hochberg, the 33-year-old fashion designer who put together previous spoofs of Cosmopolitan and Vogue, Vanity Fur hits bookstores this month. Catmopolitan and Dogue sold between 750,000 and 1 million copies each, Mrs. Hochberg said.

A spoof of Vanity Fair, the magazine that chronicles the life and times of chichi Manhattanites, Vanity Fur features tongue-in-jowl articles about animals in high places, using cats and dogs as models in make-believe advertisements and presenting them in the same light as humans are portrayed in the real publication — as a band of literati and socialites.

Vanity Fur, like its predecessors, comes out only once. It costs $9.95.

Mrs. Hochberg, who designs clothing for animals, got the idea for the takeoffs in '82, after publishing a four-page brochure for the stores that carried her line. She called it Dogwear Daily — a play on Women's Wear Daily — and printed 20,000 copies.

She then decided to expand her original concept, working feverishly for a year to put out Dogue.

Mrs. Hochberg writes all the articles for her parodies, but bogus bylines appear under the stories, names such as Doberman Dunne, Marina Schnauzer and Gail Sheddy. She hires free-lance artists and designers to handle the graphics.

DEAR ABBY

Senior citizens discounts don't fare well with foes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Not There Yet" wrote of his resentment at being asked if he was entitled to a senior citizen's discount since he is only middle-aged.

I resent those discounts for another reason: In case you are not aware of it, senior citizens are the richest group in our population, and it appears that they are going to stay that way.

Why should a senior citizen get a 10 percent discount on drugs, forcing the less well-off single mother of an ill child to pay 110 percent of the cost of the drugs she needs?

If stores gave 10 percent discounts to blonds or red-haired people, this practice would be seen for what it is, and a quick halt would be brought to its use.

The worst example can be seen at our national parks where seniors in their multi-thousand-dollar RVs get into parks free, while the less affluent vacationers must pay up to $25 a year for a pass — all the while the parks are desperate for money. These parks may not even be there for my old age and my children's because of the heavy use they are getting now.

It's just not fair. — CHRISTINE IN ALBUQUERQUE

DEAR CHRISTINE: Begging your pardon, but where did you get the idea that our senior citizens are "the richest group in our population"? Please tell us where they are stashing their wealth, and about 10 million people of that group will begin a treasure hunt.

DEAR ABBY: I am a senior citizen, and the letter in your column signed "Not There Yet" made me absolutely furious! He or she wrote: "I, and many of my friends, have had days spoiled by that obnoxious question: 'Are you a senior citizen?' (Gag me with a cane!)"

The obvious hostility against senior citizens in that letter was very upsetting. I infer from the writer's comments that he or she feels that senior citizens are obnoxious or something on the level of a criminal.

My, how times and values have changed. When I was a child, older people were held in high esteem. According to "Not There Yet," aging is something to be ashamed of. "Not There" suggests that the best way to end the "prying practice" of asking if a person is a senior is to refuse to patronize establishments where they routinely ask such disgusting questions, and be sure to let the management know why.

How insulting! I think "Not There Yet" should have been signed ... "Not All There." — 74 AND "ALL THERE" IN RANCHO MIRAGE

DEAR ABBY: Just a note to "Not There Yet," who is unhappy with clerks who ask if she is entitled to a senior citizen's discount: If that depresses you, just wait until they give you a discount without even asking. That will be a real day-spoiler. By then you will be delighted to have them ask you. — JEAN WARD, SUN CITY, ARIZ.

Medical residents' sleep habits tested

Copley News Service

Lack of sleep is epidemic among on-call medical residents but doesn't seem to impair their mental or physical coordination or hamper their ability to take care of patients, a Wisconsin study suggests.

The "common assumption" that sleep deprivation among doctors-in-training is harmful to patient care is "not fully supported by objective data," the researchers said. Nor does the evidence to date support "arbitrary recommendations to limit working hours of residents," they concluded.

The new findings are not likely to end a longstanding and increasingly vehement debate over whether medical residencies — the hospitals' version of "boot camp" for young doctors — are good or bad for medicine. New York recently became the first state to limit residents' work hours, and several other states are considering such restrictions.

In the latest study, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, researchers from the Medical College of Wisconsin studied 26 medical residents who were on call every other night.

Stress relief day healthy

Copley News Service

If you think an occasional mental health day would do you a world of good, you're not alone.

In fact, 70 percent of personnel directors surveyed favor paid mental health days as a means to relieve stress and promote productivity.

But the bad news is less than half of companies provide paid "stress days" at this point.

That's according to a survey conducted by the Personnel Journal.

Despite the negative findings, editor Alan Halcrow says most companies are realizing that stress must be dealt with before it destroys the bottom line.

That's why he predicts that more companies will begin offering longer paid vacations and free counseling.

Actor keeps play in his mind with jottings

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — Taped to the mirror in David Dukes' dressing room at the Eugene O'Neill Theater are several pieces of white paper filled with scribbles. They are his lifeline to understanding the plot of "M. Butterfly."

But the jottings don't even tell the entire story of the complex and fascinating play. The actor says the scrawl pertains just to "my action" — what his character goes through, scene by scene, in this Tony award-winning Broadway hit about a bizarre, 20-year love affair between a French diplomat and a Chinese opera singer who turns out to be a man.

"It's the only way I can keep the whole play in my mind," says Dukes, who portrays the deluded, desperate diplomat. "If things start to go wrong on stage, I'll just stare at the paper for a while and try to track the character's development again. It's very easy in a long run to go in directions that you're not quite aware of and eventually find you're getting too serious or too comic or whatever."

For Dukes, a highly verbal, intense and quick-witted actor, the role has brought high praise, including cheers from New York theater critics who came back to see the play after he replaced its original star, John Lithgow.

You could describe the 43-year-old Dukes as "one of those New York theater actors who always works" except that he happens to live in California and works all over television and movies too.

TV audiences know him from a slew of miniseries: "Space," "Kane and Abel," "George Washington," and most recently, "The Winds of War" and "War and Remembrance," in which he played Leslie Slote.

Broadway theatergoers might remember him from runs in "Bent" and as part of the replacement casts in "Amadeus" and "Dracula." Dukes took over from Lithgow in "M. Butterfly" last August after only two weeks of rehearsal. But it's easier, he says, going into a play that already is running. In fact, he watches his predecessors for tips.

"I believe in selective theft," Dukes says with a grin. "There's a great advantage coming in and replacing somebody. You get to see the whole thing. John Lithgow, until he saw my dress rehearsal, never did get to see the whole production."

Dukes also talked extensively with Lithgow, who is an old friend, about the role. The conversations were invaluable.

John Dexter, the director, was ill and couldn't attend Dukes' rehearsals. So Stuart Ostrow, the show's producer, and the stage manager acted as his director. Lithgow also watched Dukes' last dress-technical rehearsal and used the occasion to tell his successor everything about the role that Dexter had told him.

Lithgow's most specific advice?

"Remember the music of the play," Dukes recalls. "The speeches do have a musical tone to them."

Ask Dukes for a description of the character he plays, and he'll quickly say, "a dork — an unromantic male who is lucky to have a wife.

"At the same time, the diplomat serves as the narrator of the play and must tell the story with confidence and assuredness," Dukes adds. "There are a lot of strange, conflicting colors in this play."

To conserve his energy for the marathon that is "M. Butterfly," Dukes hibernates much of the day. He'll do voice-over auditions for television commercials, since they don't require much physical effort, but not much else.

"There's no way around the fact," he says. "This role does you in." That's why he signed only for a six-month run and is eager to get home to California and his wife and 5-year-old daughter. His wife, Carol Muske, teaches at the University of South California and has a novel, "Dear Digby," coming out in April.

Still, Dukes will usually go anywhere for a good acting job. That passion wasn't always there. It wasn't until Dukes did a play his senior year in high school in Marin County, Calif., that he wanted to become an actor. He went to college as a math major, but by the end of his freshman year had switched to speech and drama because "girls like actors much more than they like mathematicians."

After graduating from college, Dukes acted and worked behind the scenes at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco, and never looked back. For ACT and touring companies that came through San Francisco, he also worked as a stagehand.

Dukes began jumping from repertory company to repertory company, working for the Alley Theater in Houston, the San Diego Shakespeare Festival, the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles, and then the Charles Street Playhouse in Boston.

"Theater work is what I think I do best," he says.

Yoko calls 'Imagine' definitive documentary

"I believe in fairies, the myths, dragons. It all exists, even if it's in your mind. Who's to say that dreams and nightmares aren't as real as the here and now? Reality leaves a lot to the imagination."

— John Lennon.

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Watching the new movie, "Imagine: John Lennon," was very painful for the late Beatle's wife, Yoko Ono.

"The only reason why I did watch it to the end is because I'm responsible for it, even though somebody else made it," she said. Cassettes, film footage and other elements of the acclaimed movie were collected by Ono.

She also took cassettes of interviews by Lennon, which were edited in such a way that he narrates the picture. Andrew Solt ("This Is Elvis") directed, Solt and David L. Wolper produced and Solt and Sam Egan wrote it.

"I think this is really the definitive documentary of John Lennon's life," Ono said in an interview. "What John was really about is depicted in this film, very accurately and without whitewashing.

"I did view it. I didn't have them take any footage out.

"I wanted the truth. In the sense you had to put a 40-year life into an hour and a half; balance is a very serious consideration. I think they did a remarkable job and very tastefully so."

There is a soundtrack album and a coffeetable book with comments primarily by Lennon, tied in with the film and using the same title.

"Imagine there's no heaven
"It's easy if you try
"No hell below us
"Imagine all the people
"Living for today. ..."

John and Yoko Ono

"Imagine" is more than a Lennon elegy. Though it fails to delve too deeply into the darker side of Lennon and the Beatles (drug use, abusive tempers, manager Brian Epstein's death), it does capture the music and the times in which Lennon lived.

One intriguing episode in "Imagine" shows cartoonist Al Capp ("L'il Abner") being antagonistic toward the Lennons during their bed-in, when they stayed in bed for a week to publicize their concern for peace.

"We were naive," Ono said. "A lot of things happened because we were naive. Maybe that was our strength. To us, Al Capp was just a cartoonist and you naturally assume a cartoonist is liberal, with a sense of humor. We didn't expect hostility.

"Al Capp is one incident that was filmed. In those days we did numerous interviews because of our stand for world peace...There were some very rough interviews. The hostility that was shown to us bluntly by reporters in those days was incredible. Each time, I think we were hurt."

Ono said Lennon wrote the song "Imagine" in 1969 or '70. "We did the bed-in, the Toronto Peace Festival, the 'War's Over' billboard. He was saying we need an anthem for this whole concept of world peace. I think it's one of the songs that will really go on forever in people's minds."

"Imagine there's no countries
"It isn't hard to do
"Nothing to kill or die for
"And no religion too
"Imagine all the people
"Living life in peace ...
"You may say I'm a dreamer
"But I'm not the only one
"I hope someday you'll join us
"and the world be as one."

Lennon was born Oct. 9, 1940. He was shot and killed outside his Manhattan apartment on Dec. 8, 1980.

Ono was a painter when Lennon met her. She later joined him in music and in public demonstrations for peace.

"I think that for somebody like me, because I feel that I'm an artist and a creative artist, that it is a very strange turn of events that I'm known as a widow," she said.

'Rain Man' battles 'Twins' for top box-office slot

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The new year at the box office began right where 1988 finished, with "Rain Man" and "Twins," a pair of films about brothers, battling for the No. 1 position in the nation's theaters.

First out of the gate was the poignant road movie "Rain Man," which led all other films with weekend ticket sales of $9.2 million.

For the second week in a row, "Rain Man," starring Dustin Hoffman as an autistic savant kidnapped by his scheming brother (Tom Cruise), finished ahead of the domestic comedy "Twins," according to figures released Monday by Exhibitor Relations Co.

"Twins," featuring Arnold Schwarzenegger and Danny DeVito as siblings separated at birth, finished second with $7.1 million.

The critically acclaimed "The Accidental Tourist," in its first week of wide release, landed in third place with $6.1 million. The film, an adaptation of Anne Tyler's bittersweet novel of the same name, stars William Hurt and Kathleen Turner.

In fourth was "Working Girl," the Wall Street success story with Melanie Griffith and Harrison Ford, which collected $5 million.

The comedies "The Naked Gun: From the Files of Police Squad!" and "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels" finished fifth and sixth, respectively.

"The Naked Gun," featuring Leslie Nielsen as a bumbling police detective, drew $4.7 million. "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels," with Steve Martin and Michael Caine as dueling con men, grossed $3.5 million.

In seventh place was Robert Towne's "Tequila Sunrise," starring Mel Gibson as a drug dealer trying to go straight, with sales of $3 million. Next was the animated film "Oliver and Co.," the Oliver Twist-inspired tale of a homeless kitten, which got $2.6 million.

Rounding out the top 10 were the Bill Murray comedy "Scrooged," collecting $1.5 million, and the horror movie "Hellbound: Hellraiser II," with $1.4 million.

'White Zulu' brings Afro-rock to U.S.

By PAUL RAEBURN

NEW YORK (AP) — In France, audiences jam into huge halls to stomp and shout when Johnny Clegg, clad in a striped costume resembling a brightly colored animal skin, kicks his leg impossibly high in a Zulu war dance.

Getting Clegg tickets in France is like getting Springsteen tickets in the United States. The same thing is happening in Montreal, where Clegg recently drew 60,000 people to a stadium concert. And now he is bringing his Zulu rock to the United States.

He was the opening act on pop songwriter Steve Winwood's recent tour, and he has performed twice this year as a headliner in New York.

Clegg — a 35-year-old white South African, fierce opponent of apartheid and leader of the integrated band Savuka — has created a unique blend of Western rock harmonies and Zulu rhythms. He is fluent in the Zulu language and sprinkles Zulu proverbs among his lyrics, which offer biting attacks on apartheid and a vision of a better Africa to come.

All of which makes Clegg a very unusual South African. South Africans call him "The White Zulu." His familiarity with both Western rock and pop culture and with traditional Zulu culture has led him to a true Afro-rock fusion.

It is the kind of music Paul Simon might have made on his successful African album, "Graceland," if Simon had grown up steeped in Zulu culture. Simon sampled Zulu music; Clegg makes it. Clegg rocks harder than Simon, and his music — although undeniably African — is immediately accessible to American listeners. Where Simon's lyrics are cerebral and intricate, Clegg's are spare and emotionally wrenching.

Clegg paints a dark image of the cruelty of South Africa's racial division. In the song "Human Rainbow," on his latest album "Shadow Man," Clegg sings, "An angry young man draws in the air, political equations. But time corrupts the fruit they bear. And leads to more desperation..."

HE ALSO SINGS of anonymous gray computers closing files on prisoners, of faceless managers manipulating events, of South Africa's desperate failure to rise above political confusion and see the long sweep of history.

Yet his songs, delivered in a strong, clear voice over irrepressible African rhythms, are uplifting, not bitter or cynical. He frames his criticism of apartheid with a shimmering vision of what could be.

In "Take My Heart Away," for example, he says: "Sing me the songs that won the battle. Sing me the first and the last man's glory. Sing me the songs that taste of freedom..." In the background, the musicians of Savuka chant, "Liyeza, liyeza, liyeza ilanga lami seliyeza," which is Zulu for "It's coming, it's coming, my day is coming."

In one of his most haunting compositions, the hymn-like "Asimbonanga," on last year's Capitol release, "Third World Child," Clegg laments the fate of South African black leader Nelson Mandela, who has been imprisoned for decades.

The song was banned from South African radio and television, but Clegg and Savuka performed it all over the country for 18 months, until it became one of the country's best known pop songs.

Savuka is Clegg's second band. Juluka, his first, had a more African sound. (A selection from Juluka's South African albums is available in the United States on "Juluka," from Celluloid Records.) Savuka is closer to the African-rock fusion Clegg has been seeking through most of this decade. Clegg plays what he calls "Zulu street guitar" and "Zulu street concertina" and has surrounded himself with musicians who are at home in both western and African musical styles.

Johnny Clegg, right, a 35-year-old South African and a fierce opponent of apartheid, performs with an unidentified member of his band, Savuka. Clegg has created a unique blend of Western rock harmonies and Zulu rhythms and is bringing it to the United States.

CLEGG, BORN in England and raised in Zimbabwe (then called Rhodesia), Zambia and South Africa, spoke Ndebele before he could speak English. When he was 14 years old, he was befriended by Charlie Mzila, a migrant Zulu worker who played guitar on street corners in Johannesburg.

Mzila took Clegg into the black neighborhoods and migrant hostels of Johannesburg and introduced him to Zulu dance and Zulu culture. In Johannesburg's white neighborhoods, Mzila cleaned apartments. Among the Zulu, he was a "shinga," or warrior. Clegg was fascinated. He taught himself to speak Zulu and began to study Zulu dance.

His fascination repeatedly brought him afoul of South Africa's severe segregation laws.

"I was arrested by the police for going into black areas without permission," he said in a recent interview. "This was under the Group Areas Act, which states that all the different race groups have their own areas of residence."

Clegg said he was too young to apply for permission to enter the black areas. "So I just went in and got arrested. I paid the fine." After the first arrest, he carried money in case he was arrested again.

In addition to learning to speak Zulu, he learned two styles of Zulu war dance. "They're all designed to train young men sequences of pattern behavior" with symbolic meanings, reminiscent of Japanese karate, Clegg said. Except it has rhythm and song, and is meant to be dance, while karate is not.

Before he became a full-time performer, Clegg was an anthropology student and was close to earning a master's degree for his studies of the language of Zulu dance.

Clegg now uses Zulu dances to electrifying effect in his live performances. With percussionist Dudu Zulu of his current band, Savuka, Clegg strips off his shirt, grabs a war club and performs stunning, athletic duets.

IN A PERFORMANCE on the cramped stage of New York's Bottom Line, Clegg's technicians rushed to clear away microphones and guitars when Clegg and Zulu crept, leopardlike, on to the stage to dance to a rollicking, Afro-pop backbeat.

The dance that ensued was itself worth the price of admission. This was no display of rock-star antics, but an extended series of movements which, said Clegg, are a cross "between training for fighting and being a dance with some very complicated rhythmic patterns."

Clegg is a product of the turmoil of South Africa and the exuberance of its people. His songs are an artful mix of good message and good music.

"We feel what we do is important, but we're not political activists," he says. We're not committed to a particular ideology or belief. If we have any belief, it's just essential basic human rights."

Maintenance supervisor leaves mark on county parks with trees

FRANKLIN, Ind. (AP) — Byron Pursifull says he's never seen a tree he didn't like.

And the 61-year-old building and maintenance supervisor for the Johnson County Parks and Recreation Department intends to leave his mark on the county in the form of greenery.

The founder of the Johnson County Garden Club, Pursifull has taught schoolchildren to plant crab apple trees and has designed landscaping and planted trees in the Johnson County Park.

Pursifull's devotion to tree planting has earned him the attention of the National Arbor Day Foundation, which plans to honor him April 29.

He is one of two people who will receive the Lawrence Enerson Award, named after a former trustee of the Arbor Day Foundation. The award honors those whose life work exemplifies commitment to tree planting and conservation as part of community improvement.

"When he's talking, they (children) listen to him and you can tell in their eyes how interested they are in what he has to say," said Don G. Wertz, science coordinator at Custer Baker Middle School in Franklin, who nominated Pursifull for the award. "When he talks about trees, he refers to them as 'little fellows.' He's such a nice gentleman to have around kids."

Los Angeles parking meters net $30 million

LOS ANGELES (HNS) — The city of Los Angeles, which last year extracted millions in dimes and quarters from patrons of its parking meters, is sitting on a $30.7 million surplus in its parking meter fund.

Los Angeles City Councilman Nate Holden contends the public is being "ripped off" and is calling for a citywide rollback of meter rates to 25 cents an hour unless city officials can devise a program for spending the accumulated money.

Last year alone, motorists fed $14.9 million into city meters, but the city spent only $5.2 million of the money, according to a city report.

By law, the parking money is supposed to be used to maintain and operate the city's existing network of on-street and off-street parking facilities. But since that only costs about $4 million a year, millions of dollars each year are allowed to sit idle in the parking fund kitty.

But Holden has a plan for spending some of the bundle. He wants to hire delinquent teen-agers to clean city streets with brooms and pushcarts.

Whoopi Goldberg, as Jamaican housekeeper Clara Mayfield, comforts young David Hart, played by Neil Patrick Harris, when the difficulties of growing up overwhelm him, in Warner Bros.' "Clara's Heart."

Whoopi saw 'Clara's Heart' because of bet

By JOEY BERLIN
Copley News Service

It's hard to discuss Whoopi Goldberg's film career with her because she hasn't seen most of her movies. Luckily, she did see her new movie, "Clara's Heart" — on account of a bet.

"I bet somebody that I wouldn't see it and so I did see it because I wanted to pay off on this bet," explains Whoppi, one of those rare entertainers who is unmistakably identified by just her first name.

"I had to give $100 to his favorite charity so I sat there and watched. Of course, I picked myself apart, but then I got over the fact that it was me and got into it."

Those who have seen Whoopi's earlier films (with the notable exception of "The Color Purple") can only envy her for missing them. "Burglar," "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Fatal Beauty" and "The Telephone" were some of the worst movies of the last few years, although her performances were usually the bright spots.

"None of the films lost money," notes Whoopi, fondling a pack of cigarettes in her New York hotel suite. "They were not hits like Eddie Murphy's films. My films will never make box office like Eddie Murphy's."

Why can't Whoopi Goldberg movies do Eddie Murphy business?

"Because Eddie's a better comic than I am," laughs Whoopi in all seriousness. "He does comedy with such a flair and such relaxation. He's got a lot more appeal in that way. People like me as a comic, when I'm doing my own material, and there, blow-by-blow we could neck-and-neck it.

"I would love to make a '48 Hours' or a 'Trading Places,' but there's nobody better in making film comedies than Eddie Murphy.

"Still, I've never been ashamed of anything that I've done. I've just been a little let down that they didn't let the material breathe on its own, i.e., trying to cut it to be funny when the things were fine as they stood. I guess the marketing folks said they weren't funny enough, so then you have people trying to piece it together — and it looks it."

In "Clara's Heart" Whoopi plays her first dramatic role since "The Color Purple," for which she garnered an Oscar nomination. Directed by Robert Mulligan, it's the story of the relationship that grows between a Jamaican housekeeper and a young boy whose parents are getting divorced. Clara is a vivid character, strong and independent, yet vulnerable and compassionate. How much of Clara is there in the real Whoopi?

"I'm not sure," says Whoopi. "It would be pretty brazen of me to say we're alike. She's a queen, sort of. A queen without a country at the moment. She's got a lot of grace and style. I have got a lot of style and on occasion I am quite graceful, but I'm not as wise."

Whoopi certainly hasn't shown great wisdom in selecting roles, but her current one is particularly intriguing. She has boarded the Starship Enterprise for a recurring role (six or seven episodes) on "Star Trek: The Next Generation." She plays Guinan, a humanoid bartender, "a cross between William Buckley and Yoda."

"I've always wanted to be on 'Star Trek,'" confesses Whoppi. "And I like this new series a lot. I thought the first season was pretty bold. They weren't married to the old 'Star Trek.'"

Speaking of not being married, Whoopi is planning to join that demographic category soon herself. She has filed for divorce from her husband of two years, cameraman David Claessen. It's her second marriage — and a third might be coming up. She's now going with the camera operator from "Clara's Heart."

Also coming up is another movie that Whoopi has wrapped up called "Homer and Eddie," directed by Andrei Konchalovsky. Then there's her new album, "Fontaine: Why Am I Straight?" performed as one of the characters from the acclaimed one-woman Broadway show that catapulted her to stardom just four years ago. And a wide variety of benefits, including the continuing "Comic Relief" campaign that she founded with Robin Williams and Billy Crystal, fill out her schedule.

If given a blank check, however, Whoopi's dream project is a cartoon show she's working on dealing with the issues facing children — and the fun stuff they're allowed to do.

"It takes place in Manhattan, in the projects," says Whoopi. "We have all kinds of kids, Puerto Rican kids, Vietnamese kids, kids in wheelchairs and a little me. One of the characters has a parent who is in jail. When you think of all the kids who have incarcerated parents — you want them to know that it's not them who did anything. All characters on children's programming are fine and normal. There are thousands of kids out there who are not represented anywhere on television. Why not?"

Down 83-75 with 51 seconds to play and the big crowd leaving in droves, Midland College came within a timeout, perhaps, of forcing Odessa College into overtime in suffering an 84-82 loss to the nation's No. 1 ranked junior college team at the Chap Center Thursday.

Kethus Hanks hit a three-pointer from the corner with 42 seconds left to start the stirring finish. After OC's Tony Jackson converted a free throw to make it 84-78, Louis Clay drove inside for two at the 25 second clocking and then Hanks hit a jumper off a feint that took him inside the 19-9 range.

THAT MADE IT 84-82 with five seconds left, but the Chaps were out of timeouts.

"I like to save my timeouts," MC Coach Reggie Franklin said, "But I had to spend one in the first half and another early in the second half to stop their momentum."

After trailing 40-39 at half, the Wranglers made a 13-2 run to open the second half for a 52-42 lead with 16:01 to play, an advantage MC never could erase and really never threatened until that last minute surge.

What really hurt was that 6-7 Larry Johnson, OC's franchise player, picked up his third foul with 11:49 to go and sat out a couple of minutes and then got No. 4 with 10 minutes left and spent most of the next five minutes on the bench.

IT WOULD have been a great time to make up lost ground, but Sammy Freeman, a sophomore from Montgomery, Ala., was one of the big reasons the Chaps couldn't, scoring all 13 points of his points in the second half.

"A year ago he spent his time on the bench," OC Coach Dennis Helm said, "And I didn't expect him to play much this year, but he decided he wanted to play and he became a starter."

But in Helms' eyes the difference for OC was defense.

"In the first half we were trying to win without defense and you just aren't going to do that in the Chap Center. Here was Midland leading with McCovery (Charles) on the bench with four fouls and a lineup of four freshman. Sure I was upset.

"In the second half we played defense and you can cover up when you play defense and that's what we did when Larry Johnson was out of the lineup in the second half."

OC WENT 19-0 for the season and 4-0 in WJCAC play going into Monday's showdown with South Plains at Odessa.

Midland is 11-7 and 2-3 in conference with Clarendon at the Chap Monday the next foe.

But even in defeat, it was another step in the right direction. Most wondered if MC could even stay on the floor with the Wranglers. And then there was the Chaps.

They made it close even without a big shooting night out of Kethus Hanks and Charles McCovery, who were a combined 7-of-23. Hanks hit two morale boosting three pointers, after OC took a 19-12 lead, to get then Chaps back in the game. McCovery's first basket came with 11:49 left in the game.

"OC saw what Hanks could do up in Hobbs Monday and they didn't give him much chance to shoot," Franklin said.

Fred Campbell, the freshman from Salisbury, N.C., worked the boards for 14 baskets in 22 shots to lead MC with 30 points, clearing 11 rebounds in the process.

Troy Taylor had another 14 and Hanks, despite the surveillance, still finished with 15 points.

"WE'VE got a little more growing to do," said Franklin, pleased with the Chaps effort and valiant last minute comeback, "We began to turn it around in Arizona and we've made big strides since early in the season."

"Fred (Campbell) was in double figures in scoring and rebounds out in Arizona and he is continuing to develop."

"I love to play Odessa, the rivalry, the crowd, the emotion....I'd just rather win than lose," said Franklin.

Helms mirrors Franklin's feeling, "Even though Midland lost here to Howard and South Plains, anybody would have to be a fool to think Midland wouldn't play a good game here tonight."

CHAPSTYQUES— Helms was concerned with the inches OC was giving away at the post, but Johnson outweighs the players trying to cover him by 40 to 50 pounds and Freeman, at 230, is only 10 pounds less than UNLV-bound Larry. That's a lot of beef inside..Johnson, incidentally, had a game high 14 rebounds. while Hanks' five steals were tops....Jerry Stone, former MC coach now helping out at McMurry, watched Thursday's game and is anxious to return to coaching...

Local cagers try to dodge 4-5A danger

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Friday the 13th has ominous overtones for some of the superstitious, but there is enough trouble in tonight's District 4-5A basketball schedule without looking for any further omens.

Midland High, 1-1 in district play and hoping to make its presence felt in the 4-5A race, hosts the hard charging Abilene Cooper Cougars at 8 p.m. in Chaparral Center while Midland Lee, 1-2 after consecutive 4-5A setbacks at the hands of Odessa High and San Angelo, travels to Abilene High to take on the league favorite, who many think will waltz through this league undefeated.

And if that isn't enough, Midland Lee's girls host Abilene High in an 8 p.m. tussle at the Lee gym in what could be the key decision for at least second place and a playoff berth. The Lee girls carry a 4-1 loop mark into the contest while Abilene High is 3-1 and it doesn't look like anyone else below them will make a strong run for the playoffs.

Midland High, off to an 0-4 start in the girls chase, could help both of the above teams with a road trip victory against league leading Abilene Cooper. Cooper is 4-0 and in sole possession of first place. A victory by the Lady Bulldogs would be a major upset in the league, but the Purple Pack is coming off a non-conference win against Carlsbad, N.M.

So it's easy to see that tonight's action will carry a lot of weight in the matters of playoff potential.

MHS coach Jack Stephenson is feeling good about his meeting with Cooper, even though he realizes this is a major task at hand. For one thing, his Bulldogs are coming off a narrow five-point loss to Hobbs, N.M., a team that the Bulldogs lost to earlier in the season by 44 points.

"If we can play at that level the rest of the season, we have a good chance to stay in this race," said Stephenson, "but I don't know if we can play at that level or not."

The Bulldogs didn't open the district campaign on an impressive note, losing to Lee in the opener and struggling for a victory against Odessa Permian, who is off to an 0-3 district start. But Stephenson is hoping his Bulldogs now are ready to take off.

Cooper, 2-1, dropped its opener to Abilene High, but has since beaten San Angelo on the road and Odessa High at home. The win over 2-1 OHS knocked the Bronchos out of a brief stay at the top of the loop.

Lee, on the other hand, needs a victory in the worst way and Lee coach Paul Stueckler knows he faces a tough task tonight. However, the Eagles looked to be near mortal with a meager three-point victory over Permian Tuesday in Odessa. In fact, Permian had a three-point shot at the buzzer that missed.

"I still think Permian is heads and shoulders above all the teams in the district," said Stueckler. "I just hope they can't play better than San Angelo did against us."

Former accounting student nabs coaching honor

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Don Nehlen enrolled at Bowling Green State University in 1955 on a football-basketball-baseball scholarship and thought he would study accounting.

In Nehlen's sophomore year, Doyt Perry arrived as football coach and everything changed.

"After six months of studying accounting, the only thing I knew was that I didn't want to be an accountant," Nehlen said Thursday upon being voted Kodak major-college Coach of the Year by the American Football Coaches Association for leading West Virginia to an 11-1 record and a No. 5 national ranking. "I didn't know if I wanted to coach and teach, but I knew I didn't want to be an accountant."

Nehlen went into coaching because of Perry, whose winning percentage of 85.5 (77 victories, 11 losses, 5 ties) trails only Notre Dame's Knute Rockne and Frank Leahy and is one of college football's best-kept secrets.

"Doyt brought Bo Schembechler as an assistant and brought just a great bunch of young coaches that were hustling, and their approach to football was so different," Nehlen said. "They had a little office and they were there every night. None of us could figure out what they were doing over there. None of the other coaches ever did that.

"Their approach to football was so different, so organized, so thorough. All of a sudden I wanted to be a football coach.

"But the guy that really pointed me in the right direction was Bo. I respect him so much. He's the epitome of a college football coach. He's so special for the guys who play for him and the guys who work for him."

Nehlen was an assistant under Schembechler at Michigan from 1977 through 1979.

Nehlen and the other division winners — Jimmy Satterfield of Furman in Division I-AA, Rocky Hager of North Dakota State in AFCA College Division I, and Jim Butterfield of Ithaca in College Division II — were honored Thursday night at the annual Kodak-AFCA Coach of the Year banquet.

Nehlen was one of five regional winners in Division I-A. The other three were write-in candidates who led their teams to national championships and won out over previously announced regional winners. Almost all the ballots were cast here.

West Virginia was 11-0, the first perfect regular season in the school's 96-year football history, and No. 3 nationally before losing to national champion Notre Dame 34-21 in the Fiesta Bowl.

"When I left Michigan for West Virginia, some of my friends told me I wasn't very smart," Nehlen recalled. "But I had been a head coach for nine years (at Bowling Green) before I went to Michigan and in three years with Bo I gained such great confidence that I just felt very strongly that West Virginia, sitting where it was geographically, could be a competitive football team.

Donnell named to All-State

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

GREENWOOD — One of Midland County's all-time greats capped an outstanding high school football career with the state's highest honor possible.

Greenwood senior defensive back Randy Donnell was named to the first team Class 3A All-State team, as picked by the Texas Sports Writers Association.

Donnell's no stranger to sports accolades after starring in three sports for the Rangers — football, basketball and track. But this was the topper for the six-foot, 170-pound Ranger star.

"I'm shocked and surprised," Donnell said. "I knew I had improved over the past two years, but..."

Donnell intercepted four passes and was in on 63 tackles for the District 4-3A champion Rangers last season, one year after posting 90-plus tackles and intercepting six passes as a junior. He was in on about half Greenwood's defensive plays in '88, however.

That's because he was the team's star quarterback, engineering the Rangers' wishbone offense. Donnell rushed for 1,042 yards and passed for 647 more.

Midland septet honored by scribe group

From Staff Reports

Seven players from Midland received Class 5A All-State honorable mention honors this week from the Texas Sports Writers Association.

Earning honorable mention status on the All-State list from Midland include Midland High players Dwane Roberts, running back; Brad Fortune, center; and Kevin Rychel at both defensive back and punter.

Lee players are Farris Strambler, running back; Quincy White, tight end; Chad Haney, offensive tackle; and Michael Pearson, linebacker.

The complete three-team All-State list was previously run in the Reporter-Telegram, but the honorable mention list was not released until this week.

Two players from District 4-5A made first team All-State with offensive tackle Jerrod McDougal of Odessa Permian and defensive lineman Jeff Grays of San Angelo. Permian running back Chris Comer was a second team selection and no 4-5A players were selected to the third team.

MHS' Rychel drew votes for two positions, just as he did on the All-District team. Permian's Lloyd Hill was another honorable mention choice at two positions, wide receiver and defensive back.

Roberts and Strambler were both 1,000-yard rushers and that duo set some local history since it was the first time Midland High and Midland Lee had 1,000-yard rushers in the same season. Strambler is a junior and returns next year to the Rebels.

For Fortune and Haney, the honorable mention selection is most meaningful since both players are "undersized." Fortune played at 176 pounds and Haney at 183, both small for the offensive line.

Pearson was the mainstay of the Lee defense at linebacker and is a two-time All-District selection. White could have been hurt in the voting since he had little receiving yardage and played the latter part of the season at fullback.

Other honorable mention selections from District 4-5A were Permian quarterback Mike Winchell, Permian defensive back Robert Brown and San Angelo defensive lineman Stephen Hicks.

Valvano quieter than usual; N.C. State still wins big

Associated Press

These troubled times, Jim Valvano is doing more listening than talking.

"My kids have been telling me things I've been telling them for 22 years. So far, they have been my support system," the usually effervescent coach said after No. 15 North Carolina State beat Coastal Carolina 97-69 Thursday night.

"(Brian D'Amico) gave me a hug after the game. Kelsey (Weems) told me to hang tough," Valvano said. "I probably feel most at home in the locker room with my players and at home with my family."

Valvano's concentration has been interrupted by charges, soon to be published in a book, of wrongdoing in the Wolfpack basketball program.

"The allegations are false. You're finding out part of that now," Valvano said. "Certainly it has been a major distraction, maybe more for me than for the kids."

The Wolfpack players have seen a difference in their coach.

"After Temple, he was really down," Chucky Brown said. "We just pulled him aside and told him we were behind him and supported him."

Brown scored 20 points as N.C. State easily defeated the visiting Chanticleers.

But No. 16 Kansas ran into problems at Miami. Joel Warren's foul shot with two seconds left enabled the Hurricanes to upset last season's national champions 87-86.

Miami ended the Jayhawks' 11-game winning streak with its first victory over a Top Twenty team since reinstating the basketball program four seasons ago.

"It was like in the movies — the kid that hardly ever scores gets in and makes one point to win the game," said Warren, a senior reserve. His first foul shot bounced off the rim before he swished the second try for his only point of the game.

Elsewhere, No. 2 Illinois swamped Wisconsin 103-80, No. 6 Michigan topped Wisconsin 98-83, No. 12 Arizona defeated Oregon State 85-64 and No. 20 Providence routed Central Connecticut State 105-56.

North Carolina State started out slowly, leading just 16-15 midway through the first half.

"I think all of us came out a little flat," Brown said. "It took us a while to find the groove."

The Wolfpack eventually put together a 12-2 burst and went on to win its eighth straight game.

"We haven't practiced well at all this week, and I think that showed early on," Valvano said. "I wasn't at all pleased with the way we opened up, but then we put together a nice spurt at the close of the first half."

Avie Lester scored 15 points and D'Amico had 11 for N.C. State, 10-1. Richard Scantlebury had 20 points for Coastal Carolina, 4-8.

No. 2 Illinois 103, Wisconsin 80

Kendall Gill was 7-for-7 from the field, including four 3-pointers, and scored 19 points as Illinois beat visiting Wisconsin in the Big Ten.

The Illini, 14-0, defeated the Badgers for the 16th straight time. Illinois, trailing 25-24 late in the first half, took command with a 20-6 burst.

Nick Anderson scored 18 points and Ken Battle and Lowell Hamilton had 17 each for Illinois. Trent Jackson had 19 points for Wisconsin, 9-3.

No. 6 Michigan 98, Minnesota 83

Glen Rice scored 31 points and Rumeal Robinson had 24, leading Michigan past visiting Minnesota in the Big Ten.

Sean Higgins, making his first start since a three-game suspension for a drinking incident, added 20 points for the Wolverines, 14-1. Higgins made a pair of 3-point shots during a 12-4 run as Michigan pulled away from a 50-all tie in the second half.

Willie Burton and Melvin Newbern scored 19 points each for the Golden Gophers, 8-4.

No. 12 Arizona 85, Oregon State 64

Anthony Cook scored 20 points and Jud Buechler 17 as Arizona overcame an early 11-point deficit and beat visiting Oregon State in the Pacific-10.

The Wildcats improved to 10-2 for the season and 5-1 in the Pac-10, while Oregon State dropped to 9-4 overall and 2-3 in the conference. The loss was the ninth straight for the Beavers against Arizona.

Arizona's All-American forward Sean Elliott moved into fourth place in Pac-10 career scoring with 11 points, giving him 2,079, six more than Chris Welp of Washington. Elliott barely extended his streak of 86 straight games of scoring in double figures.

Miami 87, No. 16 Kansas 86

Warren was fouled as he attempted a layup. His first free throw bounced off the rim but he swished the second try.

Dennis Burns scored 25 points and Eric Brown had 23 points and 10 rebounds for Miami, 10-6.

Brown steps from Mario's big shadow

Associated Press

In the past, Mario Lemieux's Pittsburgh Penguins linemates have been practically incognito.

You wouldn't make that mistake this season with Rob Brown.

"Rob is a great player," Lemieux said after his linemate chalked up six points in a 9-2 thrashing Thursday night of the Minnesota North Stars. "He was great in juniors. He was good for us last year and this year he is playing really well. He is great and getting better."

Teaming with the more illustrious Lemieux, Brown has given Pittsburgh one of hockey's top one-two punches. The second-year right wing's 29 goals and 46 assists place him fifth in the NHL scoring race. Lemieux, who had his 47th goal and three assists Thursday night, leads the league with 113 points.

"I always thought I could contribute, maybe be up in the top 10 scorers in the league someday," Brown said. "But I didn't dream I could do it when I was only 20 years old. I guess you gotta take it when it comes."

Sabres 6, Blackhawks 5

Ray Sheppard scored at 9:51 of the third period to lift Buffalo over Chicago.

The Sabres had scored three goals in 56 seconds early in the third period to take a 5-3 lead, but let the Blackhawks tie it before Sheppard came through with the game-winner. The loss was the 12th straight on the road for the Blackhawks.

The Sabres had taken a 5-3 lead earlier in the period on goals less than a minute apart by Jeff Parker, Rick Vaive and Mike Foligno. Chicago came back to tie when Steve Larmer, who had two goals, and Dirk Graham scored 1:15 apart.

"We didn't do anything different tonight," said defenseman Doug Bodger, who had three assists for Buffalo. "It's just a matter of getting the breaks ... and making the one great pass or shot."

Canadiens 5, Bruins 3

Stephane Richer scored one goal and assisted on two others as the Canadiens continued their domination of Boston.

Eliminated by Boston in the NHL playoffs last spring, the Canadiens improved their season record over the Bruins to 6-0-1 with their 11th victory in the last 12 starts.

Montreal built a 3-0 lead, survived a Boston comeback in a wild second period and held on in a mild third period.

Flyers 7, Nordiques 2

Ron Sutter had two goals and two assists and Mike Bullard scored twice as Philadelphia defeated Quebec, extending the Nordiques' winless streak to eight games.

Murray Craven added a goal and four assists for the Flyers, who won their eighth straight home game. In their last eight games, the Nordiques are 0-6-2.

Kings 7, Blues 4

Bernie Nicholls scored three goals, his third hat trick of the season, to lead Los Angeles over St. Louis.

The hat trick was the 13th of Nicholls' eight-year NHL career, and the goals gave him 43 this season, second in the league behind Lemieux.

Mavs drop 6th straight

Associated Press

Dallas traveled to Seattle. Listening to Mavericks coach John MacLeod talk, it was Dunkirk and Waterloo rolled into one.

"That was disgrace. That was surrender. They just gave us an old-fashioned whipping," McLeod said Thursday night after the SuperSonics beat the Mavericks 117-77.

"We didn't put in the effort tonight. Seattle took us behind the barn and gave us an old-fashioned whipping," said McLeod, who waved a white towel in the fourth quarter when Seattle first opened the lead to 40 points.

Dale Ellis scored 36 points, including four 3-pointers, and Seattle won at home for the 12th consecutive time. Dallas lost its sixth straight game.

"This is definitely an embarassment," said the Mavericks' Rolando Blackman, who shot 2-for-12. "We're a much better team than this."

Ellis ignited a 21-5 Seattle run during a six-minute span in the third quarter as Seattle turned a 14-point lead into an 88-58 advantage.

The 35-point victory was the largest ever over Dallas for Seattle. The SuperSonics beat the Mavericks 107-79 on Nov. 11, 1981.

"We didn't want to give them any type of life," said Alton Lister, who had a season-high 17 rebounds. "That's why the third quarter was so important. It's also nice to see Ellis back to his old self again."

Bullets 106, Heat 100

Bernard King and Jeff Malone scored 32 points each for Washington and Steve Colter scored 11 points in the fourth quarter to rally the Bullets, who have won six of their last eight home games.

Malone made four free throws in the final 13 seconds to seal the victory.

Miami led 88-85 with 8:41 remaining. Colter cut the lead to 88-87 and King put the Bullets ahead to stay 91-90 with 5:12 left.

Rony Seikaly scored 23 points for Miami.

Boston 106, New Jersey 103

Dennis Johnson made one free throw and Danny Ainge added two in the final minute as Boston sent New Jersey to its fourth consecutive loss.

Rockets 116, Trail Blazers 106

Akeem Olajuwon scored 32 points, including six straight baskets in the closing minutes.

Olajuwon, who grabbed 16 rebounds, scored 12 points in the fourth quarter. Mike Woodson scored 22 points for Houston.

With the Rockets trailing 93-92, Olajuwon scored on a dunk with 7:27 to play and sank two more baskets to regain the lead for good.

Knicks 106, Hornets 89

Charles Oakley scored six of his 12 points during a 15-0 spurt that opened the third quarter, sending New York to its 12th consecutive home victory.

Jazz 115, Spurs 91

Karl Malone scored 31 points and Thurl Bailey added 21 for Utah, which scored 17 consecutive points in the first quarter. Mark Eaton had 17 rebounds and blocked 11 shots.

John Stockton had 26 points, 16 assists and six steals for the Jazz.

Aggies hire two new grid assistants

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M Head Coach R.C. Slocum says he hopes the addition of two assistant football coaches will help him bolster the school's program, which has been rocked by NCAA sanctions.

UCLA co-defensive coordinator Tom Hayes and Oregon offensive coordinator Bob Toledo were hired as assistant football coaches, Slocum said Thursday.

"The head football coach's future and success is directly related to the quality of his assistant coaches," Slocum said. "I'm pleased these excellent coaches have agreed to join the group of outstanding young men already on my staff."

Named head coach in December after Jackie Sherrill resigned, Slocum has coached the Aggies to national Top 20 defensive rankings in the past two years. Sherrill was accused of paying "hush" money to a former player during an NCAA investigation.

The NCAA in September imposed two years' probation on A&M, along with a ban on post-season bowl appearances last year.

Toledo said he would not have taken the job if he thought the Aggies faced the NCAA's death penalty or other further serious penalties.

"In talking to their people, they feel very comfortable that's not going to happen," said Toledo. "They kind of assured me that nothing else will happen."

Hayes will become assistant head coach and secondary coach while Toledo will serve as offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach, said Slocum.

DeLoach still rides Seoul win

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press

Joe DeLoach is like the man who killed Jesse James, famous less for who he is than for what he did.

DeLoach owns a gold medal from the Seoul Olympics, significant enough for most 21-year-olds but lifted beyond that because of the man he beat — Carl Lewis.

The name turns heads. Lewis is the quintessential sprinter of our time, the world's fastest human, drug-free division. DeLoach raced him for 200 meters and finished first. The accomplishment was dramatic. Here, then, is the man who beat Carl Lewis.

DeLoach cringes at that description. "Everybody introduces me that way," he said. "Why don't they just say I'm the guy who won the gold medal in the Olympic 200?"

They don't because of Lewis, who carries an aura of invincibility about him. And King Carl isn't shy about it. He often is the last runner to arrive on the track, the last to slip out of his warmup suit and the last to reach the starting blocks. The rest of the faceless field stands and waits while he prepares himself with a theatrical, regal entrance that almost resembles a coronation. Let them peek over their shoulders at the man who won four gold medals in the 1984 Olympics. Let them think for a while about running against him.

Well, now maybe they'll start waiting for and peeking at Joe DeLoach.

"People are spooked by Carl because of who and what he is," DeLoach said. "What Carl did (at Los Angeles) was the greatest thing to happen to sprints in our time. So he uses it. That's just Carl being Carl. Everybody looks for an edge. That's what you should be doing. If I could get that edge, I'd do it, too."

He may have earned it at Seoul where he shifted into overdrive and won the 200 in an Olympic-record 19.75 seconds. That tied Lewis' American record and was only three-hundredths of a second off Italian Pietro Mennea's altitude-aided world-record 19.72.

That thrust DeLoach to his sport's next level. Suddenly, the underdog is an overdog with people peeking at him the same way they do at Lewis. DeLoach knows, though, that he can't stop there, not if he wants them to keep watching him.

"If I never win another gold, Lewis would still be greater in people's minds," he said. "But if I go out and break world records at 100 and 200 in Barcelona, then they'll remember me for that. Nobody will forget what Carl did. I want them to remember what I do, too."

For the moment, DeLoach is running the shorter 60 in the Mobil Grand Prix indoor season which starts this weekend with meets at Hamilton, Ontario, tonight and Dallas on Saturday.

The race requires a perfect start because it is over in the blink of an eye. The 100 is similar and DeLoach still thinks about making a mistake in the blocks of that race in the Olympic Trials and being unable to recover.

"If I were more experienced, I could have," he said. "I didn't know how to react."

He is still learning and his main teacher is Lewis, who is his friend, his training partner and the guy who recruited him to run at the University of Houston. That tether was severed slightly at Seoul.

"You want to win," DeLoach said. "He knows that. Once you do it, there's a breakthrough, a sense of relief.

The thrust and parry of a skilled defender battling an expert declarer is one of the most exhilarating sights at a bridge table. This hand is from the recent Blue Ribbon Pairs Championship at the Summer North American Championships in Nashville.

North-South were using a 15-17 HCP range for their one no trump opening bid, which explains South's jump to two no trump. South, young New York star Debbie Zuckerberg, decided that her intermediate cards and top honors in partner's suit warranted treating her hand as a maximum, so she accepted the slam invitation.

West made a neutral club lead and declarer cashed out the suit. East, Peter Nagy of Chicago, discarded one card from each major. Since declarer needed a spade trick for the contract, she cleared the ace-queen of hearts from dummy, then led a spade to the king, which held. Next, she took her queen of diamonds and two red-suit kings. Down to A-9 of spades and J-5 of diamonds, on the king of hearts Nagy discarded his ace of spades! Declarer had to be satisfied with 11 tricks.

Note that no other defense would have beaten the contract. Had Nagy clung to his ace of spades, declarer would have thrown him in with that card. Declarer would then have been forced to lead away from his J-5 of diamonds into declarer's A-9 tenace, giving declarer an extra trick and her slam.

Ah, well—just another of those hands where counting the distribution makes the winning defense easy!

Grammy nominations diverse

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A pair of idiosyncratic talents captured the bulk of Grammy Award nominations, with the feel-good sound of Bobby McFerrin's "Don't Worry, Be Happy" contrasting with the bleak poetry of Tracy Chapman's "Fast Car."

Miss Chapman's somber, haunting folk songs won her six nominations Thursday, including best song, record, album and best new artist.

McFerrin's ebullient vocals earned five nominations, including record, album and song.

The two symbolize the diversity of nominees for National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences trophies, and represent a break from the mainstream. The Grammy nominations — with an all-time high 76 categories — were culled from a record 6,800 entries released from Oct. 1, 1987 to Sept. 30, 1988.

Winners will be announced here Feb. 22 during a televised ceremony on CBS-TV with host Billy Crystal.

Miss Chapman's self-titled first album was a surprise hit in 1988 and its single "Fast Car," about a woman seeking to escape a cycle of poverty, was a No. 1 hit. The 24-year-old singer's song and record nominations, plus one for best female pop vocal performance, were for "Fast Car."

Her album also received a nomination for best contemporary folk recording. The Boston-based singer came to record producers' attention during nightclub performances while a student at Tufts University.

McFerrin, 38, whose "Don't Worry, Be Happy" was the first a cappella song to reach the No. 1 position on Billboard charts, received nominations for best song, record and male pop vocal performance for "Don't Worry." He also received an album nomination for "Simple Pleasures."

In addition, McFerrin, who records his works using only his voice, was nominated for best male jazz vocal performance for the song "Brothers."

Heavy metal and rap music made a Grammy debut, while past pop giants gathered nominations in relatively obscure categories — Bob Dylan and Van Morrison in traditional folk, Joe Jackson for motion picture score and Linda Ronstadt for Mexican recording.

Anita Baker received four Grammy nominations, all for "Giving You The Best I Got," the one song she had eligible for this year's awards. The song is a candidate in the best record, song, best female rhythm and blues performance and best rhythm and blues song performance.

Sting's "Nothing Like The Sun" received an album of the year nod and the song "Be Still My Beating Heart" was nominated for song of the year as well as best pop male vocal performance. Sting has four Grammys, all as a member of The Police.

Steve Winwood, a rock veteran whose career spans nearly 25 years, received record of the year and best male pop vocal performance nominations for "Roll With It" and an album of the year nod for the LP of the same title. Winwood has won two Grammys.

George Michael, whose smash album "Faith" sold more than 6 million copies and spawned six hits, received only two nominations, album of the year and best pop male vocalist for "Father Figure."

Michael Jackson, shut out at last year's awards, received a single nomination for his "Man In The Mirror" single as record of the year.

The Beach Boys, who have never won a Grammy and have not been nominated since 1966 for "Good Vibrations," received a best pop group performance nomination this year for their hit "Kokomo."

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Michelle Pfeiffer realizes people want to know more about her now that she's starring in several major movies, but that doesn't mean she likes it.

"I didn't become an actress so that my life could be exposed," Ms. Pfeiffer says in an interview in the February issue of Vanity Fair. "It's really the only thing that makes me contemplate quitting acting. I would give it up because I hate it that much."

In recent months, Ms. Pfeiffer has appeared in three major films — "Dangerous Liaisons," "Married to the Mob" and "Tequila Sunrise."

Meanwhile, her estranged husband, Peter Horton, has gained stardom on ABC-TV's "thirtysomething."

"I had a great marriage with a great man. They don't come much better than that," she said.

Why the breakup?

"It's very confusing," she said. "We got married really young. I think we grew up and our views changed."

• • •

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer-songwriter John Beland figures he has a small place in music history for singing the theme song to television's "The Brady Bunch" and writing the theme for the Morton Downey Jr. program.

"They both are kind of cult shows," Beland said Thursday. "Years from now, people will ask me, 'You did that?' "

Beland, a former member of the Flying Burrito Brothers country-rock group, said Downey was his manager in the early 1970s.

"I've known him for so long, I see a lot of him in that character on TV," he said, referring to Downey's on-air persona. "Eighty-five percent of what you see is what he honestly believes in. He's really a good guy."

Beland said he sang the theme song for "The Brady Bunch" some 20 years ago in Los Angeles.

"Between these two shows, I've got something to tell people," he said.

1988 wholesale prices up 4 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices, boosted by a 0.4 percent increase in December, rose 4 percent for all of 1988, the fastest pace since the nation began emerging from double-digit inflation near the beginning of the decade, the government said today.

The gain in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index for finished goods, one stop short of the retail level, was nearly double last year's 2.2 percent increase. It was the biggest gain since 1981, when costs jumped 7.1 percent.

The index was propelled upward by a drought-induced 5.7 percent increase in food prices. They had showed no change in 1987.

Meanwhile, energy prices, which had soared 11.2 percent in 1987, fell 3.4 percent in 1988. However, with the production agreement reached by the OPEC nations in November, analysts expect oil prices to head higher this year.

All other finished goods in 1988 rose 4.3 percent.

In December, food prices fell a slight seasonally adjusted 0.1 percent, energy costs edged up only 0.2 percent, but everything else jumped 0.6 percent, the biggest increase since September.

This is the third consecutive month of good news for grocery shoppers. Prices were unchanged in November after a 0.1 percent decline in October. However, that period of stability was preceded by seven consecutive months of increases from early spring through the summer.

With the end of unseasonably moderate temperatures in many parts of the country in December, fuel oil soared 8.5 percent and natural gas rose 3.3 percent. Gasoline prices, however, fell 3.5 percent, holding back overall energy gains.

For other items, a sharp 5.7 percent increase in tobacco prices and significant gains of 0.9 percent in automobile costs and 0.7 percent in women's clothing led the index.

The fall in wholesale food costs was led by a 17.1 percent drop in turkey prices. Fresh and dried vegetable prices fell 8.5 percent; fresh fruit, 2.7 percent; fish, 1.3 percent, and pork, 0.3 percent. There was a gain of 3.0 percent for beef, 2.5 percent for chicken, and 1.0 percent for dairy products.

The overall December increase left the Producer Price Index for finished goods at 110.0, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 in 1982 would have cost $110 last month, 30 cents more than in November.

The increase was close to, or slightly higher than, what most economists expected in advance of the report. In November, the index rose 0.3 percent. It was unchanged in October.

President Reagan, in his economic report to Congress this week, listed the taming of inflation as one of his proudest economic achievements. However, 1988 marks the second consecutive year of accelerating inflation. Wholesale prices actually fell 2.3 percent in 1986.

The administration is predicting a steady dampening of price increases through 1994, but most private economists forsee another modest acceleration this year. However, none expects a return to the days of 1979 and 1980, when wholesale prices surged 13 percent and 12 percent.

Satellite network links remote units

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The narrow band of secure radio frequencies available to commercial users for transmitting Supervisory Control & Data Acquisition (SCADA) information is becoming increasingly crowded.

With an effective radius of only 40 miles, these frequencies in the 900 megahertz range have been fully allocated to radio users in many oil producing regions. Producers and pipeline companies use two-way SCADA transmission to monitor and control operations at remote locations.

Although the radio bands are fully assigned, that doesn't mean they are being fully utilized, explained Paul Mayeaux, sales and marketing manager for Curry Communications Co.

Mayeaux and the two-year-old Houston company he represents have targeted that unused radio capacity, particularly in petroleum producing provinces, as their primary market.

By pooling excess radio channel capacity, Curry can provide satellite-linked SCADA data transmission to companies which currently do not have access to radio frequencies and at the same time enhance the capabilities of license holders.

Using VSAT — very small aperture terminal — satellite technology, Curry is able to provide secure data transmission from field locations to local offices or from regional offices to a headquarters location.

"Once the encoded data gets up to the satellite, it can be delivered anywhere there is a receiver with the proper protocol," Mayeuax said.

Curry has had a pilot operation of its satellite network in place in the Pecos-Monahans area for nearly a year and is ready to extend its capabilities across the Permian Basin, Mayeaux said.

Initial subscriber interest in the Denver City and McCamey areas will result in the first uplink VSAT locations to be built in those areas. Each VSAT installation — coupled with a Multiple Address Radio System (MAS) — will have a 40-mile radius effective coverage area.

IPAA tells action plan

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A former oilman sitting in the Oval Office could bring a high level of attention to the oil industry, but an uphill battle remains in resolving industry issues, say representatives of the Independent Petroleum Association of America who were in Midland Thursday to brief local members on upcoming issues.

"National security still remains the prime concern of the industry," said Deborah Rowell, IPAA statistical expert. She said the U.S. must act now to avoid a new "energy famine," caused by foreign policies and hostile military actions.

Outlining the history of consumption and production, Rowell pointed out the U.S. is losing marginal production daily, making it more dependent on foreign crude.

To address the critical issue of national security, IPAA has outlined a plan of action which includes: formation of a national energy policy; energy tax policies that will permit the generation of investment capital; total deregulation of natural gas; and opening public lands to oil exploration.

Specifics of an energy tax policy, outlined by Bill Newkirk, IPAA's resident tax expert, include tax credits for production and exploration. A production credit would apply to lease operating expenses incurred for oil and natural gas stripper wells, heavy oil and secondary and tertiary recovery.

IPAA proposes a sliding scale exploration credit that would allow a 30 percent credit for expenditures up to $1 million; 20 percent for $1-5 million, and 10 percent for expenditures over $5 million. Intangible drilling costs would be counted as expenditures.

"It has been said that incentive doesn't help the industry much without price," said Doug Francisco, IPAA senior government relations director. "But capital formation is also a great concern to the independent."

Western files new plan for reorganizing

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Western Co. of North America has proposed an updated financial reorganization plan that will leave its common stock holders with only a 3.25 percent ownership interest in the oilfield services after it emerges from bankruptcy.

The company's current preferred stockholders would hold a 4.5-percent ownership interest in a reorganized Western.

Western's reorganization plan would reduce the company's debt from about $669 million to $231 million. But under the plan, senior creditors — primarily large banks — would gain a controlling 70-percent interest in newly issued common stock of the reorganized company in exchange for agreeing to lower Western's debt greatly.

Such a "debt-for-equity" swap has become common in bankruptcy reorganization of oil companies in recent years. In most cases, the bankrupt companies have been unable to meet debt repayment scedules because of enormous reductions in revenues caused by declining oil prices and drilling activities.

Regulators close four Texas banks

AUSTIN (AP) — Four banks, ordered closed in the first Texas failures of 1989, reopen today as branches of other institutions, say federal regulators who also shut down a trust company.

Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth Littlefield and the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency on Thursday announced the year's first bank failures, with two closings in Houston and one each in Austin and Harper. A Dallas trust company was also closed.

The sole office of First State Bank in Harper reopens as a branch of Security State Bank and Trust in Fredricksburg, with its depositors automatically becoming depositors of the assuming bank, say regulators.

That bank, with total assets of about $9.7 million, was closed at 2 p.m. Thursday. An hour later, Commercial State Bank in Houston with deposits of about $52 million was closed. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was named receiver in both cases.

The agency approved assumption of Commercial State's deposits and fully secured liabilities by Channelview Bank, Channelview, Texas.

The comptroller's office declared Oak Hill National Bank, Austin, insolvent at 4 p.m. and appointed the FDIC as receiver. The failed bank's two offices were reopening as branches of Community National Bank, Austin.

The comptroller's office an hour later declared West Belt National Bank, Houston, insolvent and appointed the FDIC as receiver after saying problems with the institution's loan portfolio resulted from a real estate slump.

The FDIC board later approved assumption of West Belt National's deposits and other liabilities by Deposit Guaranty Bank, Dallas. The failed bank's sole office will reopen Friday as a Deposit Guaranty branch and customers will automatically become depositors of the assuming bank, subject to court approval.

Robert J. Herrmann, senior deputy comptroller for bank supervision, said Oak Hill National became a concern in late 1986 because of poor management and inadequate supervision by the institution's board of directors.

Retail sales surge 6.7 percent in 1988

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail spending shot up 6.7 percent in 1988, the fastest pace in four years, despite lackluster Christmas and automotive sales in December, the government reported today.

Sales for all of 1988 totaled a record $1.61 trillion, the biggest annual gain since a 9.8 percent increase in 1984, the Commerce Department said. Sales had increased by 5.1 percent in 1987.

December's retail sales of a seasonally adjusted $138.0 billion were led by a 1.9 percent gain over the previous month in sales at hardware stores. Overall sales had increased a revised 0.9 percent in November and 1.7 percent in October.

December's gain was the slowest since a 0.3 drop in September.

The figures are not adjusted to exclude the effects of rising prices.

While overall retail sales for the year were posting their best showing since 1984, the department store category rose by only 4.5 percent, the smallest annual gain since a 3.4 percent rise in the recession year of 1982.

This sluggish performance was offset by a 9.5 percent rise in auto sales for the year, up sharply from a 1.8 percent increase in 1987.

However, auto sales actually fell in December, dropping 0.3 percent from the previous month and posting the first decline since a 1.4 percent drop in September.

MARKETS

Traders still bullish on oil prices

From Staff and Wire Reports

After a volatile session Thursday, crude oil prices resumed their upward trend, with contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate gaining 14 cents to stand at $18.31 at midmorning.

Prices were little changed Thursday after a surge of late buying wiped out earlier losses.

Analysts said the market, which has surged higher in the six weeks since OPEC agreed to cut back its production, remained on a bullish track.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, WTI rose 3 cents to close at $18.17 a barrel after picking up 45 cents on Wednesday.

Jim Fiedler, a trader with ED&F Man International Futures Inc., said profit-taking set in early in the day.

However, he said of the market, "it just doesn't want to go down."

February WTI slipped as low as $17.87 a barrel before recovering.

"The volatile and highly nervous crude market we witnessed today is typical of an overbought bull market," said Nauman Barakat, energy investment specialist at Prudential-Bache Securities. "We can expect continued volatility around OPEC's current target price of $18."

Oil output is declining and imports are rising, Barakat noted. In 1988, domestic output fell by a million barrels a day, and imports rose by a like amount, he added.

As for the strike by Mexican petroleum workers, Barakat said it had had no impact on the domestic or global market thus far, aside from prompting some speculative buying.

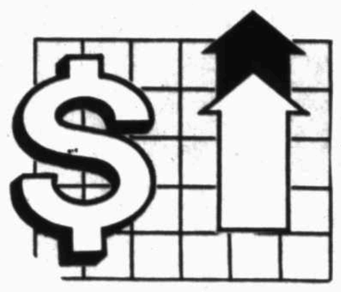
Dollar gains strength overseas



LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rose in European trading this morning as the market continued to react positively to comments in Washington by West German Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg, dealers said.

The stronger dollar depressed gold prices slightly.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar surged in Asian dealings and continued to rise in Europe in response to Stoltenberg saying he would like to see the dollar remain at around 1.80 West German marks.

Dealers in Frankfurt and Milan said the market's rally was being curbed by fears of central bank intervention.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.53 yen to a closing 126.65 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted higher at 126.75 yen.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.7730, compared with $1.7880 late Thursday.

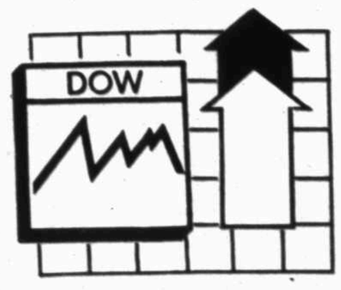
Gold opened in London at a bid price of $403.50 a troy ounce and at midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed the same recommended price. It was down from $404.50 bid late Thursday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $403.25, down from $404.20 bid late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.18 to close at a bid $405.18.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.90 a troy ounce, down from Thursday's $5.95.

Stocks roll up 16 point gain



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices rolled up their sixth gain in the past seven sessions Thursday, extending the early-1989 rally that has carried the market to its highest levels since the 1987 crash.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 15.89 points to 2,222.32 — less than 25 points shy of its close of 2,246.74 on Oct. 16, 1987, just before it took a 508-point drop on Black Monday.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 907 up, 586 down and 496 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 183 million shares, up from 148.95 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $10.20 billion, or 0.37 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks added .61 to 159.26.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose 1.70 to 327.99, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 1.16 at 283.17.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market gained 1.70 to 387.01. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 315.00, up 1.14.

Former SEC head offered Drexel post

NEW YORK (AP) — Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. has offered the chairman's job to the government official who first ordered an intensive fraud probe of the financial giant more than two years ago.

John S. R. Shad, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and now ambassador to the Netherlands, confirmed through a spokesman at the U.S. embassy there Thursday he had been approached by Drexel about becoming chairman, but did not say whether he would accept.

The nation's fifth-largest securities firm also said it had asked another ex-SEC chairman, Roderick M. Hills, husband of U.S. trade representative-designate Carla Hills, about serving on its board of directors.

Enserch makes offer to acquire Southern Union

DALLAS (AP) — Enserch Corp. has offered to acquire Southern Union Co. in a stock-swap deal, said Southern Union officials who will hire an investment banking firm to evaluate the takeover proposal and other options.

Southern Union, after a directors' meeting, said management and the investment adviser will explore all alternatives and proposals for maximizing shareholder values, including keeping the Dallas-based company independent.

The offer by Enserch was conditioned, among other things, on an opportunity to review Southern Union's books to determine whether the offer made was supportable. Enserch has asked the Southern Union board to respond to the offer by Jan. 14.

Both companies' officials declined to comment on the value of Enserch's stock offer. At the end of the nine months that ended Sept. 30, Enserch had 57,694,000 common shares outstanding. For the same period, Southern Union had 10,169,162 common shares outstanding.

Southern Union, a natural gas distributor, serves about 386,000 customers in Texas, the Oklahoma panhandle and northern Arizona. The company in the past year returned its emphasis to its core business by spinning off its savings and loan unit to shareholders. The company also plans to spin off its oil and gas exploration and production unit.

The parent of Lone Star Gas Co., Enserch operates a large, primarily intrastate, natural gas utility. It is also engaged in oil and gas exploration and production, oil field services and engineering and construction services.

Company earnings in recent years were hurt by low energy prices, but last September Enserch announced plans to dispose of its oil field services unit.

The match between the two Dallas-based companies makes sense, said Dave Smith, an analyst at Eppler, Guerin & Turner in Dallas. Both companies are involved in gas distribution, an industry that Smith termed "attractive."

OIL AND GAS DIGEST

Texaco consolidates natural gas divisions

HOUSTON (SWN) — Texaco U.S.A. announced the consolidation of its Natural Gas Plants (NGP) and Natural Gas Liquids (NGL) Divisions into a single business unit called the Natural Gas Plants and Liquids Division. Texaco also announced that Mauricio Salazar has been named vice president of the new division, located in Tulsa, Oklahoma, where the NGP and NGL Divisions have been headquartered.

The Natural Gas Plants and Liquids Division will be responsible for all aspects of Texaco's Gas Department natural gas liquids business activities. These will include the management of Texaco's natural gas plants, which have a processing capacity of 2.7 billion cubic feet per day, and its natural gas liquids storage and terminaling assets.

Pogo announces several positive developments

HOUSTON (SWN) — Pogo Producing Co. has announced several positive developments, including the replacement in 1988 of its domestic production with new reserves on an equivalent BTU basis.

"The 1988 results again, as in previous years of the current decade, allowed Pogo to maintain its domestic reserves at the approximate level of what they were at the beginning of 1980," observed William E. Gipson, president of the Houston-based oil and gas exploration-development company.

Gipson also announced the closing of the sale of Pogo's working interest in Block 44/23 located in the southern North Sea Gas Basin in British waters. The purchaser, CanadianOxy North Sea Petroleum Corporation, paid Pogo $36,052,000 for its 25 percent interest in the property.

In addition, Gipson said Pogo had received commitment letters for financing arrangements that will refinance outstanding loans under the company's existing bank credit facility.

Transco planning talks with pipeline customers

HOUSTON (SWN) — Transco Energy Company told analysts in New York and Boston that it would seek to enter into discussions with customers of its pipeline subsidiary Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corporation (TGPL) in an attempt to reach a negotiated settlement of certain rate issues currently pending before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Arch Petroleum acquires oil property interests

FORT WORTH (SWN) — Arch Petroleum Inc. has announced the reaching of a general agreement with the Carter Foundation Pr uction Company whereby Arch will acquire interests in various oil and gas properties. The properties, located principally in Texas and New Mexico, include both operated and non-operated working interests.

Panhandle Eastern sells Wyoming coal interests

HOUSTON (SWN) — Panhandle Eastern Corp. has sold its 50 percent interest in the North Antelope Coal Company joint venture to a subsidiary of Peabody Holding Company, Inc. for approximately $52 million. The sale will result in an after-tax gain of $19 million for Panhandle Eastern in the first quarter of 1989.

North Antelope has one surface coal mine operated by Powder River Coal Company, a Peabody Holding subsidiary which is a partner in the joint venture. Peabody and Panhandle jointly developed the mine during the 1970s and commenced deliveries to an electric generating facility in Arkansas in 1983. Located in eastern Wyoming, the mine currently produces approximately six million tons of coal annually.

Paramount, Cox Oil make Smackover discovery

HOUSTON — Cox Oil and Gas Inc. of Dallas and Paramount Petroleum Co. Inc., Jackson Miss. and Houston, have completed a significant new Smackover discovery in Conecuh County, Ala.

The discovery well, the Cox and Paramount No. 1 A.T.I.C. "7-13" flowed 1,118 bopd and 1.34 Mmcfd (1,342 barrels of oil equivalent daily) with no water and no hydrogen sulfide. Flowing tubing pressure was 1,785 psi on an 18/64 inch choke. The perforated interval was 13,162 to 13,178 ft. in the Smackover formation.

The discovery is located on the 1,440 acre North Range prospect, which was generated and assembled by Paramount. The nearest production is located four miles south at East Barnett field, located on the border of Conecuh and Escambia counties.

Pauley Petroleum announces $7.1 million loss

ROSWELL, N.M. — Pauley Petroleum Inc. has announced a pre-tax loss of $7.1 million for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1988, according to Pauley chairman and chief executive Robert O. Anderson.

The loss included a fourth quarter charge against earnings of $5.2 million resulting from an adjustment to the depreciation, depletion and amortization accounts.

Losses were incurred in both upstream and downstream operations, primarily as a result of deteriorating oil and gas prices. The firm's refinery operations were adversely impacted by the lack of vacuum distillation facilities at the Fletecher refinery. A new vacuum unit under construction at the facility is expected to materially enhance the plant's earnings.

Amoco annonces Gulf of Suez oil discovery

HOUSTON — Amoco Egypt Oil Co., a subsidiary of Amoco Production Co., has announced an oil discovery in the Gulf of Suez.

The GS 172-1 well, drilled north of the October field, flowed at a daily rate of 7,880 bopd of 29 degree API gravity crude during recent tests of the Nubia formation between 10,942 and 11,006 feet.

The well is the first Nubia well drilled in Block 172. A second well is planned for early 1989.

Amoco completes Oklahoma gas discovery

DENVER — Amoco Production Co. has announced a natural gas discovery in the Oklahoma portion of the Arkoma Basin.

The No. 1 Zipperer tested at a daily rate of 48.8 Mmcfd from the Pennsylvanian Spiro-Wapanucka section between 12,240 and 12,286 ft. A flow test was conducted for 12 hours through casing on a 48/64 inch choke with a flowing casing pressure of 3,400 psi.

A second test between 12,148 and 12,286 ft. evaluated the same formation through tubing and a smaller 20/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 4,200 psi. During the 10-hour test, the well flowed at a rate of 10 Mmcfd.

The well is located six miles southeast of Hartshorne in Pittsburg County and is about five miles southwest of the Wilburton gas field and some 20 miles southwest of the Red Oak gas field within the Ouachita Thrust Belt. It is shut in and further testing will be deferred pending pipeline construction connecting the well to a gas collection system.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Dollar averaging' tried-and-true investment method

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am a 23-year-old, male high school graduate. I am working for a construction company now, but I am fixing to get a state government job. I am worried about my retirement. I don't expect to become rich, but I don't want to be hurting for money after I retire.

I can spare approximately $80 a month to invest for the future and am leaning toward stocks and mutual funds. But there are so many different kinds available I don't know which to choose. What would you suggest?

Doyle

A. My recommendation is aggressive growth mutual funds, the kind that hold out potential for big gains in value but also the risk of severe loss. At your age, you can take on the risk.

Assuming you have been reading this column, you know I am talking about true no-load mutual fund — those with no commission charges when you buy, no rear-end loads when you cash in and no 12b-1 plans constantly eroding share values.

As an obviously serious young man, you should study the prospectus of a number of funds before making an investment decision. Then, your intention to make monthly investments should work out just fine.

By putting the same amount of money into the same security on a steady basis, you will be using the tried-and-true investment method of "dollar-averaging." You'll buy more shares when prices are low, fewer shares when prices are high and — unless the market value of the shares you pick drops and never, never recovers — you'll come out way ahead.

Dollar-averaging remains the best method I know for investing. Mutual funds are particularly well-suited for dollar-averaging because you can buy in dollar amounts — purchasing full shares and fractions of shares to the third decimal place.

Q. I opened a money market mutual fund account recently, and instructed the account to be made out as follows: "John Doe or Mary Doe, WROS." When I received my statement, I read: "John Doe and Mary Doe, WROS.

I contacted the mutual fund organization for an explanation and was told that rules and regulations require the use of the word "and." Can you elaborate on this?

A. When you opened the account, you bought shares of stock in that money market mutual fund. A share of stock represents a piece of ownership. When shares are owned by two people, dividend checks are made out to both, with the word "and" between the names; both owners must authorize the sale of jointly owned shares.

Transfer agents register shares of stock in owners' name and cancel shares when shares are sold. No transfer agent that knows its business will register jointly owned shares with "or" between the names. WROS, for "with right of survivorship" is virtually standard for joint ownership.

Q. Can you explain tax-exempt money market mutual funds? I have received some literature about them and they seem to be a good way to save on income tax and still have liquid assets available.

A. That type of mutual fund invests in short-term municipal debt securities issue, which pay interest not subject to federal income tax. After meeting its operating expenses, the fund passes that money along to shareholders as dividends, also free from tax.

Like all money market mutual funds, the tax-exempt type uses accounting methods that keep share values constant — at $1, for most such funds.

You can write checks on your account. Each time you do, you redeem some of your shares. If you reinvest your dividends, those reinvestments buy more shares.

In short, those funds accomplish exactly what the literature you received says. But they pay lower dividends than taxable money market mutual funds. Unless you are in the 28 percent federal income tax bracket, you can get more after-tax keeping money by investing elsewhere.

SALES

Excluding autos, retail sales were up 0.3 percent in December, following a 0.6 percent rise in November.

Consumer spending is closely watched as a barometer of the economy's health because it represents two-thirds of the gross national product. The holiday season is particularly important because it can account for half of a general retailers' annual profits.

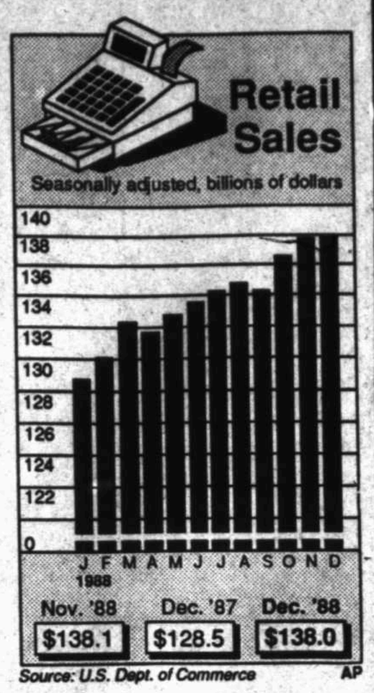
Sales by general merchandisers reached $15.76 billion in December, up 0.3 percent.

Other categories posting sales gains during December included furniture and home furnishing stores, service stations and bars and restaurants.

Sales decreased at food, clothing and drug stores.

Sales of durable goods, "big-ticket" items expected to last three or more years, rose 0.6 percent in December to $52.3 billion after a 1.6 percent rise a month earlier.

Purchases of non-durable goods dipped 0.1 percent to $85.7 billion during the month after a 0.5 percent gain in November.



BANKS

The agency said the Austin bank, which received a national bank charter in 1986, had total assets of about $16 million.

Littlefield also announced the closing of American National Trust Co. in Dallas. He found the company was insolvent and had engaged in numerous activities in violation of the Texas Banking Code and the Texas Trust Code.

At Commercial State, Littlefield said, a recent examination conducted jointly by the State Banking Department and the FDIC revealed loan and related losses of nearly $2 million that rendered the bank insolvent.

Commercial State Bank was in apparent violation of numerous state and federal laws and regulations, as several loans appeared to have financially aided an insider of the bank who received preferential treatment, said Littlefield.

Littlefield said a recent examination at the Harper bank had identified loan and loan-related losses that exceeded the institution's capital accounts. The bank had previously been identified as a problem institution and was under supervision by the commissioner.

First State Bank loan losses resulted from liberal and hazardous lending practices, including large out-of-territory loans, and inadequate board supervision over lending activities, said a statement announcing the bank closing. Efforts to recapitalize the 74-year-old institution were unsuccessful.

Security State will assume about $10.1 million in 1,700 deposit accounts from First State Bank and will purchase $9.5 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $2,196,000. The FDIC will retain the assets of the failed bank with a book value of $243,000.

PRICES

David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., anticipates no relief next year. He said tight labor markets and a squeeze on factory capacity will continue. The unemployment rate in December matched a 14-year low, while factories were straining in November at the highest operating rates in nine years.

"I'm expecting some further acceleration in prices particularly because the economy is so strong," Jones said. "I think we can say at best we had a slight breathing spell (in October and November) where we caught our breath after food prices were pushed up by the drought."

Inflation at the consumer level, which also includes services and has in recent years run at a higher rate than wholesale price inflation, was 4.4 percent for the first 11 months of 1988, the same as the annual rate in 1987.

But, Jones said, it's only a matter of time before pressures producing an acceleration in consumer prices rises. He predicted an inflation rate of 5 percent to 6 percent this year.

"You can't flout the laws of economics. The remarkable thing is we didn't had more acceleration last year," he said.

The Labor Department is due to release its December index for consumer prices on Jan. 19.

Francisco said there is a very good chance of getting some positive energy tax legislation through Congress this term, because the oil industry has finally united on its objectives.

"In the past the industry has been highly segmented with a lot of different bills going in different directions. This time we're all together." He added that the energy tax legislation now being studied by the Legislative Council will also be bipartisan.

He noted there would be a rank-and-file call-up of members of the oil industry Feb. 28, in which members of the oil industry from across the country would converge on Washington to call on members of Congress.

SATELLITE

Mayeuax said the company plans to install enough locations to cover the Permian Basin from Littlefield to Ozona and Colorado City to Hobbs in coming months.

The satellite system has built-in safeguards against system failure, interception of data and transmission accuracy, he explained.

In addition to connecting remote terminal units in the field with control personnel in a central location, companies can use Curry's network to replace conventional telephone lines as a means of inter-computer communication.

Incorporating Curry's satellite communications into a computer system modem provides the opportunity for data transmission without the traditional physical hazards of ground-line communications, Mayeaux said.

He added that cost of the transmission through the satellite network is comparable to other media, but that a particular operator's expense will depend on a multitude of qualitative and quantitative factors including: the number of remote terminal locations; the nature of data monitored and others.

With a typically large number of field locations, very remote operations and specialized data needs, the petroleum, pipeline and utility industries have been the primary users of SCADA technology, but applications are growing, said David Curry, president of the company.

Retailing, both within and outside the petroleum industry, is a prime area for expansion, Curry said, utilizing immediate two-way transmission of customer and sales information from the point of sale to inventory control and accounting centers.

Initially, however, Curry will concentrate on developing networks in petroleum producing areas. Beyond the Permian Basin, the company has its sights set on the Hugoton Field area of Kansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and other producing provinces in Texas, he said.

Despite record earnings, Texas banks face challenges

AUSTIN (AP) — Record bank earnings were reported in the third quarter of 1988 while lower losses returned to savings and loans, said a banking and thrift analyst who cautioned that challenges still lie ahead for the industry.

The nation's 13,179 banks reported a third-quarter profit of $8 billion compared with $5.2 billion in the second quarter and $4.8 billion for the first, according to Alex Sheshunoff, an authority on banking and S&L performance.

The banking industry, overall, earned $18 billion for the first nine months of 1988, a record profit contrasting with earnings of $232 million in the same 1987 period, when money center banks were making major loan loss provisions for loans to lesser developed countries.

"Banking is a reflective industry," Sheshunoff said, "simply reflecting what is happening in the economy served by the bank. The nation's economy as a whole has more than offset the problems in the Southwest and the lesser developed countries.

"Three major challenges lie ahead for the banking industry," Sheshunoff said. "First, the possibility that someday we might, just might, have another recession, which would negatively impact some LBO loans; second, high real estate values in some regions, particularly the Northeast, appear to be starting to deteriorate."

A third challenge, Sheshunoff said, is servicing a massive amount of government, corporate and personal debt that funded much of the past decade's economic growth.

The report said 87 percent, or 11,415, of the nation's banks were profitable in the first nine months of the year, earning $2.1 billion. Meanwhile, the nation's 1,764 unprofitable banks lost $3.1 billion for the same period, said Sheshunoff Information Services Inc., a leading provider of ratings on financial institutions.

Congressman says budget 'punitive toward agriculture'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's last-gasp budget plan to curb Agriculture Department spending by cutting farm commodity subsidies and rural development programs is headed for a chilly reception in Congress.

The budget proposals sent to Capitol Hill on Monday included a plan to cut USDA spending in fiscal 1990 by 19 percent to $42.4 billion from $52.1 billion currently. The new fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

Part of the blueprint included old plans that had been rejected before, such as a proposal to eliminate federal school lunch subsidies for children of upper-income families, requiring them to pay 26 cents more per meal. The savings would be more than $3 million a day.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said the final Reagan budget "appears to be deliberately punitive toward agriculture" and noted that Congress has already cut federal spending on agriculture by $30 billion since the administration came into office.

"I have never been one to pronounce any president's budget dead on arrival, but I am inclined to think that this one was probably dead before arrival," de la Garza said.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, called the Reagan budget "largely irrelevant" but added: "It might, of course, have been designed to make a Bush budget appear kinder and gentler."

Spending on the department's Commodity Credit Corp. programs, which includes wheat, corn and other major crop supports, would decline to a six-year low of less than $11.6 billion from more than $13.8 billion in 1989. The peak was $25.8 billion in 1986.

The budget for CCC spending included $1.1 billion of unspecified cuts that will be decided by the incoming Bush administration and Congress. Future spending reductions in CCC programs could be in the range of $2 billion to $2.5 billion annually for 1991 through 1994.

Leahy said the Reagan blueprint for cutting farm programs raises a question of whether the administration "actually means to disarm unilaterally just two months before the next round of trade talks."

The administration has urged under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that all subsidies and other practices that interfere with free trade be eliminated, but the idea hasn't caught on.

"Cutting farm programs before obtaining an agreement from our trading partners to do the same seems likely to undermine our GATT negotiating position," Leahy said in a statement.

Get people excited about Arbor Day

Kiker

It has been more that 100 years since J. Sterling Morton founded Arbor Day. His simple idea of setting aside a special day for tree planting is now more important than ever. So have an Arbor Day celebration.

Raise the flag, strike up the band and make Arbor Day a fun day. Make it memorable.

Organize a fun run; make it a real event. See if a local business will donate prizes. Have a poster or poetry contest. Get the local PTA to sponsor a children's pageant or play. Organize and train volunteers to help carry out Arbor Day ceremonies in local schools.

Get people excited. Show them things about trees they've never seen before; tell them things about trees they've never heard before.

Launch a 1,000 helium balloons with Arbor Day greetings inside and offering a free tree to anyone who finds and returns a message. Fill the air with music. Have an Arbor Day concert of songs about trees or with tree names in their titles.

Get people into action. Ask a civic or service group to promote a drive to gather newspapers to be recyled and save a tree. Use the proceeds to buy a special tree to plant in a park or other public place. Ask a local radio station to sponsor a tree trivia contest in which the prizes will be trees.

Conduct a tree search. Ask people to find large, unusual or historic trees in your community. Tell people to take a tree-identification hike.

Dedicate a forest, a tree or a flower bed in a park, and use the occasion to discuss stewardship. Get a local nursery or garden center to hold an open house or field day. Organize an Arbor Day Fair.

Get people together. Ask retirement homes to invite children to plant a tree on their grounds and give residents a chance to tell the children about Arbor Day when they were young. See if neighborhood organizations will hold block parties and get their members to adopt and care for trees in front of their homes.

Pass out buttons. Give away trees.

Make Arbor Day a real holiday. Make it special and make it an occasion to look forward to. Make it a day of wonderful memories and fill it with the promise of newly planted trees.

Celebrate Arbor Day in a personal way by planting a tree. It is an act of optimism and kindness; a labor of love and a committment to stewardship.

Anyone can do it. Start a tree seed in a cup or a seedling in a pot. If you have no place to plant it later, give it to someone who does and then watch it grow together. Find a place to plant a seedling, a sappling or any size tree you can handle.

Each and every tree which is planted stands as a living reminder that we all bear responsibilities of stewardship. We are living in a chain of humanity stretching from the dimmest past into an unknown future. We can help make that future more certain by performing the simple act of planting a tree.

Farmers union opposes decoupling payments

Under some versions of decoupling, federal payments targeted to farmers would gradually be reduced over four or five years and perhaps then be eliminated altogether as producers are weaned from federal crop subsidies.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Farmers Union says it will wage a lobbying battle in Congress against a proposal to let farmers collect federal subsidies without regard to the kind of crops they produce.

NFU president Leland Swenson said Wednesday that the idea, known as "decoupling," would be "devastating for farmers and rural communities, endanger the environment and destabilize the position of Third World farmers."

Swenson said at a news conference that decoupling would be a "short-term welfare program" and will be opposed vigorously by NFU lobbyists.

The idea of decoupling has been around for years but has not had great support on Capitol Hill. One of the early decisions by the incoming Bush administration will be whether to embrace decoupling as a way of containing government farm costs.

Under some versions of decoupling, federal payments targeted to farmers would gradually be reduced over four or five years and perhaps then be eliminated altogether as producers are weaned from federal crop subsidies.

The NFU's main rival, the American Farm Bureau Federation, at one time supported decoupling but since has backed off to give it a closer look.

One of the biggest advocates is the Heritage Foundation, a Washington-based conservative think tank, which recently issued a report saying that one of the first jobs of the Bush administration should be to cut subsidies and "get farmers off the dole."

Decoupling, the Heritage report said, would allow federal payments to farmers to be based on a flat rate and targeted to those most in need. As it has been for more than half a century, payments now are pegged to specific kinds of crops and levels of production — the larger the farm, the larger the subsidy.

Under decoupling, farmers would simply be given a cash payment and then be free to grow or not grow any crop they choose.

"Planting decisions would then be based on market signals — consumer demand for a product — rather than on what is required by Washington," the Heritage report said.

Charles Grizzle, who wrote the Heritage report, said in a telephone interview that decoupling makes sense as a way of getting crop programs away from government subsidies and into a market-oriented economic environment.

"In my judgment, it's a charade now to think that most of the production that is linked to subsidy payments is being grown for the marketplace," Grizzle said. "It's a mindset, almost like a crutch."

Swenson, however, called decoupling proposals a "cop-out" and released a report analyzing a decoupling bill introduced by Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., in 1985 as the Family Farm Protection and Full Production Act. Swenson said the bill continues to have some support in Congress, along with backing from big grain companies such as Cargill Inc.

"It's really a cop-out in addressing the real issue of adopting and implementing a farm program which enhances the market price for agricultural commodities," Swenson said. "It implies that the family farm structure of agriculture is not important."

The analysis used figures attributed to the Institute for Trade and Agriculture of St. Paul, Minn., showing that the Boschwitz bill would reduce federal price support loans sharply for major crops, including wheat to $1.60 per bushel from $2.06 this year, and corn to $1.30 per bushel from the 1989 rate of $1.65.

"Lowering of world prices, a result of decoupling, would aggravate the situation of Third World farmers, who are our best potential customers for U.S. food exports," Swenson said.

The NFU, he said, will draft its own alternative to decoupling to "assure consumers an adequate and dependable supply of food" and "enhance the market price of agricultural commodities."

Although Swenson did not disclose details of what NFU's plan might include, he said it would "reduce the budget impact of farm programs" and allow for continued expansion of agricultural exports.

The 1988 drought helped siphon off huge stockpiles of U.S. grain, boosting market prices for wheat to an average of $3.89 per bushel last month from $2.70 a year earlier. Corn in December, according to the Agriculture Department, averaged $2.54 per bushel, compared with the year-earlier mark of $1.72 per bushel.

1988 cotton crop reaches 7-year high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says the 1988 cotton crop will be at a seven-year high of 15.4 million bales, up 5 percent from the 1987 harvest and 2 percent more than forecast last month.

In a new estimate Wednesday based on Jan. 1 conditions, the department's Agricultural Statistics Board said production would be the largest since 15.6 million bales in 1981.

Orange production, estimated at 215 million boxes, is up 7 percent from last season but forecast at about the same level as in December.

The report did not include new 1988 production figures for other major crops such as wheat, corn and soybeans. An annual report on those commodities will be issued on Friday.

But the report said lack of moisture continued to be a problem through December for winter wheat in the central and southern plains.

Program to reclaim erodible land should do well under Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — The long-range program that lets farmers take fragile land out of crop production is turning into the Agriculture Department's main showcase for soil and water conservation programs.

Moreover, because the Conservation Reserve Program, or CRP, has had strong bipartisan support in Congress, there is a reasonably good chance that the program's spending blueprint offered by President Reagan may fare well when the Bush administration takes over.

The CRP was authorized by Congress in the 1985 farm law and had the support of many environmental, conservation and agricultural groups.

Under the plan, farmers can contract with USDA to take highly erodible land from crop production for 10 years. In return, they get initial federal assistance in establishing protective soil cover of grass or trees, and then receive annual rental payments for the term of the contract.

The goal of Congress was to get 40 million to 45 million acres in CRP by the end of 1990. Seven signups have been held so far, the most recent in July and August, and an eighth is scheduled for Feb. 6-24.

Thus far, CRP has about 28.2 million acres enrolled.

According to President Reagan's final budget sent to Congress this week, the CRP is firmly entrenched as the USDA's premier — and most costly — conservation program.

Overall, the department's soil and water programs are expected to operate at the level of almost $2.7 billion in the fiscal year that will begin Oct. 1, about the same as this year.

That includes $632 million for Soil Conservation Service technical assistance and other programs, and more than $2 bilion for the CRP, which is handled by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

A USDA budget report said erosion has been reduced by more than 90 percent on land already enrolled in the long-term program.

"Over 1.7 million acres of trees have been planted," the report said. "And, if the current trends continue, the CRP will likely become the largest publicly sponsored tree-planting program in the nation's history."

Stephen B. Dewhurst, the department's budget director, said the Reagan budget plan "provides enough funding to go to the 40 million acre level" of land idling in the coming fiscal year and that "there is enough money in this budget to keep the CRP on track."

Although CRP is the biggest gun in the department's conservation arsenal, there are other important programs that concern the nation's soil and water resources.

For example, the Reagan budget would continue Soil Conservation Service, or SCS, soil surveys at the level of $68.7 million in 1990, and snow surveys at $5.5 million. The snow surveys are important for gauging how much water will be available from snowmelt in the West.

Watershed planning and construction is another major item at $103.9 million, although that would be down from $181 million currently.

SPACE SHUTTLE

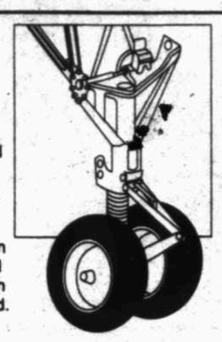
The new and improved NASA space shuttle

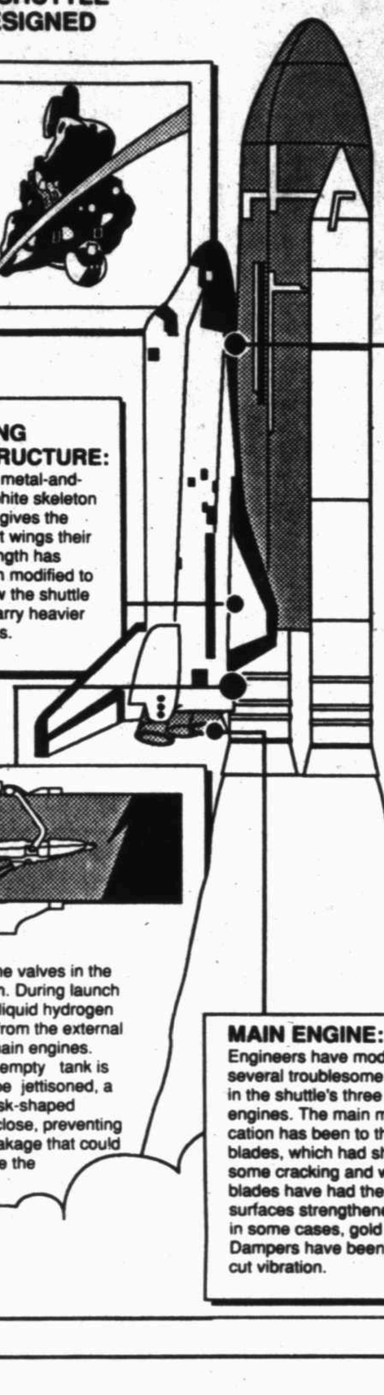
After the Challenger tragedy in January 1986, the space shuttle has gone through an extensive redesign. Efforts were made to improve areas that had been long suspected as being weak, as well as a completely new design for the booster joints.

PARTS OF THE SPACE SHUTTLE THAT HAVE BEEN REDESIGNED

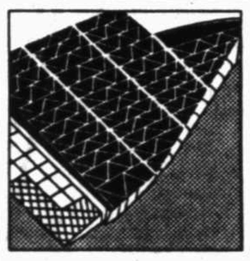
ESCAPE SYSTEM: NASA has installed a system that could save astronauts if a problem arises while the shuttle is in the atmosphere. A 12-foot aluminum-and-steel pole is extended from a port hatch enabling astronauts to slide down clear of the craft and parachute to safety.

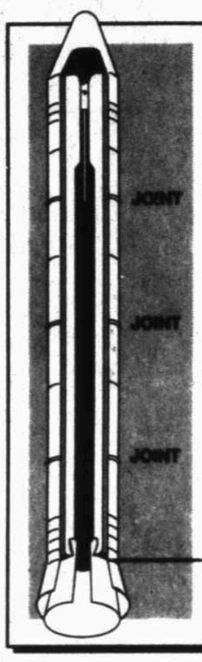
LANDING GEAR: The shuttle's landing gear – long a source of concern – has been beefed up. Sensors have been installed that monitor tire pressure and warn the pilot of a flat. The disc brakes have been greatly improved, with anti-skid brakes (similar to ABS brakes on autos). Brake linings and hydraulic fluid distribution have also been improved.





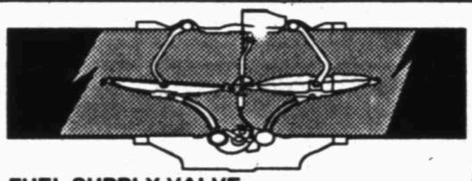
WING STRUCTURE: The metal-and-graphite skeleton that gives the short wings their strength has been modified to allow the shuttle to carry heavier loads.





BOOSTERS: The most significant weak points of the solid racket boosters are the joints between the four stacked segments. The new joint design has more overlapping metal surfaces than the previous joints which caused the Challenger disaster. A third O-ring has also been added to keep hot gases from leaking.

Another area where trouble might arise is in the joint between the main body of the rocket and the moveable nozzle. This joint has been reinforced with 100 new bolts and additional heat-shielding material.



FUEL SUPPLY VALVE: Latches have been added to keep the valves in the shuttle's propellant supply lines open. During launch two 17-inch diameter pipes transfer liquid hydrogen and oxygen from the external tank to the main engines. When the empty tank is about to be jettisoned, a pair of disk-shaped valves close, preventing fuel leakage that could damage the shuttle.

MAIN ENGINE: Engineers have modified several troublesome features in the shuttle's three main engines. The main modification has been to the turbine blades, which had shown some cracking and wear. The blades have had their surfaces strengthened and, in some cases, gold plated. Dampers have been added to cut vibration.

What kept the shuttle down

Getting the shuttle flying again has meant redesigning hundreds of parts and increased testing of the entire craft. In the almost three years since the Challenger disaster, several significant probelms have plagued the shuttle.

PROBLEMS THAT HAVE DELAYED THE SHUTTLE LAUNCH

1) BOOSTER: Stricter guidelines for the assembly of the soild rocket booster caused longer delays than expected.

2) FUEL LEAKS: Leaking valves and fittings used to transfer hydrogen and oxygen from the external tank delayed the test firings of the main engines.

3) MAIN ENGINES: Replacement of a malfunctioning valve in one of the main engines delayed testing.

4) STEERING ROCKET: Engineers had to cut through a bulkhead fix a a leaking valve.

5) NOZZLES: Heat-shielding components in the nozzle of the solid rocket booster failed during testing and required a new design.

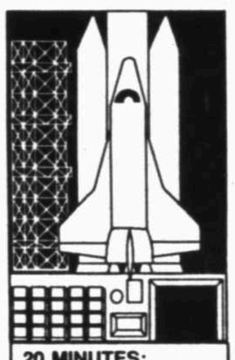
The countdown: last minutes before shuttle liftoff

Preparing a shuttle for launch takes several weeks, even under the best of conditions. The "new" shuttle has under gone extensive testing and careful loading onto the launch pad. After preparations are done, the shuttle reaches the terminal phase of the countdown and the anxious moments before the launch begins.

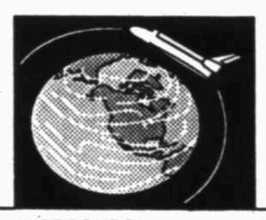
PRE-LAUNCH SEQUENCE OF THE SPACE SHUTTLE



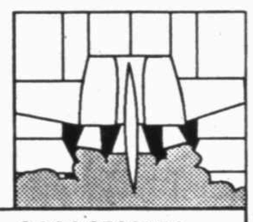
20 MINUTES: Shuttle's general purpose computers link with the ground-based launch processing system at Kennedy Space Center.

9 MINUTES: Countdown clock is put on a planned 10-minute "hold." After last minute launch preparations are made the countdown clock restarts.

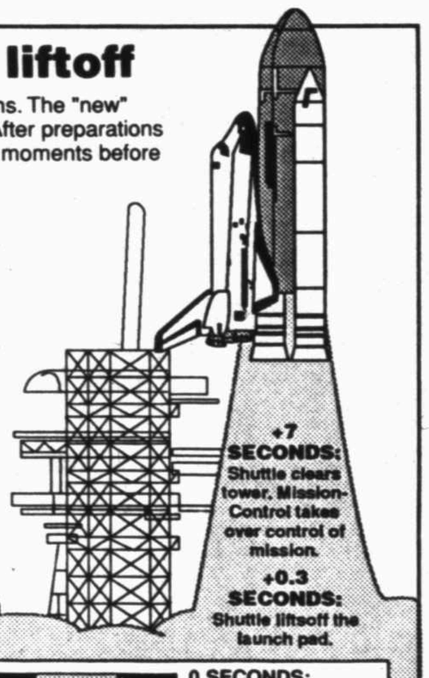
31 SECONDS: Shuttle's on-board computers activate automatic launch sequence. After this point computers control the countdown clock.



8 SECONDS: Shuttle's navigational gear undergoes final calibration check. Shuttle's precise location is fixed in relation to the Earth's position.

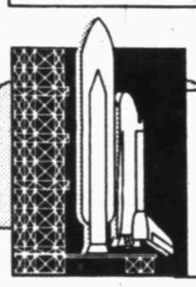


6.4-6.6 SECONDS: Within three-tenths of a second, all three of the shuttle's main engines ignite.

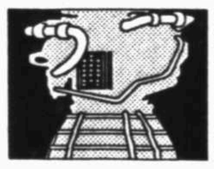


+7 SECONDS: Shuttle clears tower. Mission-Control takes over control of mission.

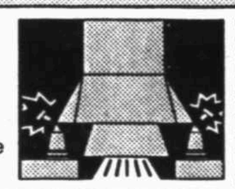
+0.3 SECONDS: Shuttle liftsoff the launch pad.



3 SECONDS: Soild rocket boosters are armed and the shuttle rocks forward 2.1 feet.



3 SECONDS: Main engine controller computer confirms all systems "go" in main engines. If a problem is detected, the main engine controller aborts launch.



0 SECONDS: Soild rocket boosters fire. Explosives blow off the bolts that have been holding shuttle to launch pad. Umbilicals are retracted.

Space shuttle at work

The Challenger had made the most flights of the four space shuttles in service (at 10) and had more manhours (at 8,978) before a hold was put on the shuttle program. This followed the explosion of the Challenger when taking off for its 11th mission.

HOUSTON — NASA is marching toward the Feb. 23 launch of its next shuttle mission, confident that the problem of tile and engine damage on last month's flight will be resolved, crew commander Mike Coats said this week.

Coats and four other astronauts aboard Discovery are to deploy a $100 million NASA Tracking and Data Relay System satellite and conduct scientific experiments during a five-day flight.

In many ways, the flight will be a replay of the flight Sept. 29. It will use the same orbiter, fly at the same 160-mile high orbit, rely on the same number of astronauts and last about the same time.

With Coats, 42, a Navy captain making his second spaceflight, will be pilot John Blaha and mission specialists James Buchli, Robert Springer and James Bagian.

Blaha, 46, an Air Force colonel; Spring, 46, a Marine colonel; and Bagian, 36, a physician; will be making their first spaceflights. Buchli, 43, a Marine colonel, is making his third.

Most attention on this mission, the 28th shuttle flight and the third since the fatal Challenger accident of Jan. 28, 1986, has been directed at concern over the unusually heavy tile damage and main engine bearing damage suffered by the shuttle Atlantis during its secret military mission early last month.

"All indications are that the people working (on) those two problems are confident they are going to come up with good answers," Coats told a news conference at the Johnson Space Center.

Discovery's liftoff could slip to March 14 before it would interfere with plans to launch the Magellan probe to Venus from the shuttle Atlantis during a flight to start on April 28.

However, NASA probably will not announce a firm date for Discovery until a review of mission preparations at the Kennedy Space Center on Feb. 8-9. Discovery will be moved to launch pad 39B on Jan. 26.

Engineers are continuing to evaluate the damage to the tiles on Atlantis' underside that protect the spacecraft from the fiery heat of re-entry, and small cracks in the bearings of a high-pressure pump that feeds liquid oxygen into a main engine combustion chamber.

Coats said experts may have traced the source of the tile damage to insulation on the nose cap of one of the shuttle's solid rocket boosters — material that came loose and struck the tiles. Another possibility is that the insulation from the large, rust-colored external tank separated and struck the tiles.

Though concerned about the tile damage, Coats said he is reassured that Atlantis landed safely even with damage requiring replacement of 200 of the orbiter's 28,000 tiles.

Though the approaching mission shares many similarities with the first post-Challenger flight, the public attention that surrounded the latter is absent, something that concerns the crew.

Shuttle flight passenger lists restricted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen, teachers, and Saudi princes will no longer be invited by NASA to be passengers on the space shuttle under a new policy that emphasizes completing the recovery from the Challenger accident in which two non-astronauts were killed.

The space agency announced a new category of "space flight participants" and said, at the same time, that flight opportunities for them "are not available at this time."

Before the Challenger exploded on liftoff Jan. 28, 1986, NASA had given minimum training to a senator, a member of the House of Representatives, a Saudi Arabian prince and Christa McAuliffe, the first "Teacher in Space." Mrs. McAuliffe was killed along with industrial engineer Gregory Jarvis and five astronauts.

"The Challenger accident marked a major change in the U.S. outlook and policies with respect to the flight of other than NASA astronauts," the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said in the policy statement Thursday.

"NASA and interested external parties, domestic and international, must re-examine previous understandings, expectations, and commitments regarding flight opportunities."

At the time of the Challenger explosion, the process of choosing a reporter to fly on the shuttle was in its final stages. Committees had winnowed down thousands of applications to 40.

When the shuttle does begin flying non-essential passengers again, NASA said, a teacher will be the first.
