NATO tests Serbs' will, sets deadline

■ Rebels show no signs of withdrawing; Western leaders say airstrikes could resume after 4 p.m. CDT today.

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The NATO allies reopened a crucial route into Sarajevo on Sunday and gave the Bosnian Serbs a deadline to remove heavy weapons and ease the capital's 40-month siege or face renewed airstrikes.

But the Serbs showed no signs of withdrawing, and Western leaders said the airstrikes could resume after 11 p.m. today (4 p.m. CDT), when they will assess Serb compliance with their demands.

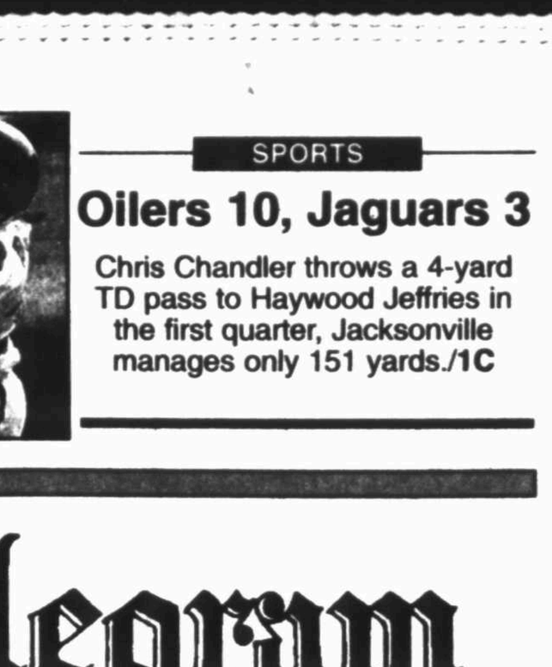

The United Nations also demanded that the Serbs halt all attacks on Sarajevo and three other U.N. "safe areas," reopen Sarajevo airport and restore complete freedom of movement for aid agencies and U.N. personnel.

"Failure to meet these demands will immediately result in airstrikes," said U.N. spokesman Chris Gunness.

The demands were sent in a letter to Bosnian Serb military commander Gen. Ratko Mladic on Sunday. The letter also said any attacks on Sarajevo or the three other "safe areas" — Tuzla, Gorazde and Bihac — would bring an immediate NATO response.

"The letter made clear to Gen. Mladic what needs to be done," Gunness said.

V-J Day weekend battle report: Memory takes many casualties

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press

HONOLULU — Remembering, someone once said, is a battle between forgetfulness and memory. If so, here's the battle report from V-J Day weekend:

The troops jitterbugged to '40s tunes and wept at the sound of "Taps." They paraded up the boulevard and swapped snapshots and stories and addresses. They even wheeled in Bob "The Big Gun" Hope. And still they lost ground.

It became clear in Bill Clinton's keynote commemorative speech Saturday, the anniversary of the signing of Japan's surrender on the battleship USS Missouri.

"Fifty years ago today, on the deck of the aircraft carrier Missouri in Tokyo Bay, freedom finally prevailed," declared the first president born after World War II.

Ex-crewmen from the famous — or once-famous — battlewagon had to cringe and wonder, and not just at slips of the presidential tongue.

NAFTA's promise of new jobs falls short, study finds

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The North American Free Trade Agreement's promise of new jobs and increased exports to Mexico isn't being realized — even by many of the corporate cheerleaders who were eager to see Congress ratify the pact in 1993, says a new study.

Public Citizen, which lobbied vigorously against the agreement creating a free trade zone from the Yukon to the Yucatan, contends that American workers are feeling the pinch.

Commerce Secretary Ron Brown took issue with the findings.

"NAFTA clearly has had a positive impact on U.S. jobs and exports," he said. "It's time to stop playing the 'blame NAFTA' game every time there is a 'shock' felt in the international financial markets."

Public Citizen examined the goals set by 81 companies before the pact's approval, then interviewed company officials this summer to find out if projections had been met.

Texas colleges face housing horrors

By Dean Stephans
Associated Press

SAN MARCOS — An on-campus housing shortage at several Texas colleges and universities that sent students to hotel rooms and dormitory basements appears to be waning, but is not yet over.

The 34 Southwest Texas State University students who spent the first two weeks of school in hotel rooms were scheduled to have housing on the San Marcos campus today.

However, the number of homeless students at Texas A&M University in College Station, which started at nearly 800, still stood at about 425 after three days of classes.

The University of Texas in Austin has said it expects to find normal on-campus housing in the next several weeks for the 100 students who started school without dormitory rooms.

In spite of the statistics, housing officials at the schools said the overflow was not unusual.

John T. White, SWT associate director of residence life, said he had expected about 100 more students to flood the school's 4,700-capacity dorm system. The school put 132 students in hotels last year.

Ron Sasse, director of housing at A&M, said his 11,000-bed system had about 800 over-assignments in 1992, also.

The schools generally offer dorm space to more students than they can house under the assumption that some students will accept on-campus housing and then cancel.

Weather to smile on holiday plans

Staff Reports

The Labor Day forecast looks good for those picnics, cookouts and last-minute swims, according to the forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Today looks to be sunny with a high in the upper 90s and south winds 5-15 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-60s. Tuesday should be sunny with a high in the mid-90s for folks returning to school and work.

After a high of 96, compared to the record high of 101 set in 1985, the temperatures dropped to 67. The record low for the day was 55 set in 1974.

STATE

Texans baked in the early September sun Sunday, and the forecast promises more of the same for today.

A few clouds developed Sunday afternoon across South Texas and even a couple of thunderstorms popped up near Victoria. Temperatures ranged from 103 degrees at College Station to 91 at Brownsville. Light breezes offered little relief from the heat.

Today's forecast for South Texas calls for a hot day, with early-morning lows in the low to mid-70s.

North texas remained under mostly clear skies Sunday with southerly winds at 5 to 10 mph. Temperatures climbed to over 100 degrees over much of the area.

\Skies were sunny in West Texas Sunday with highs in the 90s. Wind was generally southwesterly to westerly at 5 to 15 mph.

The West Texas forecast for today calls for mostly sunny skies with highs to near 102.

NATION

Thunderstorms, some loaded with hail, heavy rain and gusty winds, battered regions from the South to the West on Sunday.

The storms were strongest in southeastern Missouri, spewing golf-ball-size hail in Franklin County and damaging power lines in Callaway County. The heavy rain and gusty winds were expected to move on into Arkansas.

Showers and thunderstorms were possible from South Dakota and Nebraska into Kansas and Oklahoma, and rain was forecast for parts of Kentucky, Illinois, the Great Lakes, Appalachians and Florida.

It was cloudy across coastal Oregon and Washington, with rain falling along the Cascades in eastern Oregon, and storms were likely to intensify in Nevada, Utah and southern Idaho.

Thunderstorms, some heavy, with gusty winds and small hail, were forecast from southeastern California and Arizona into central Wyoming and southeastern Montana.

Out at sea, Hurricane Luis was spinning towards the Leeward Islands in the eastern Caribbean, heading towards Antigua, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. Hurricane Iris was about 465 miles south of Cape Race, Newfoundland. Hurricane Henriette was about 200 miles southeast of the southern tip of Baja California.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

NAFTA: U.S. workers feel pinch, group contends from company comments in National Association of Manufacturers and USA NAFTA publications or those made to government officials and Congress.

Of the 66 firms providing follow-up information, 89 percent said they haven't made significant progress toward fulfilling their job and export projections in the first 20 months of NAFTA's implementation, according to the study.

"The real-life evidence after a year and a half of NAFTA shows quite clearly that NAFTA is not working," said Lori Wallach, director of Public Citizen's Global Trade Watch.

"New jobs have not been created and a lot of existing jobs have been lost. And, U.S. wages are at their lowest point in 20 years and declining."

Mexico's economic woes, prompted by the abrupt peso devaluation, make it difficult to assess NAFTA's impact, critics of the study said.

"Is there some disappointment generally in the Mexican market? Undeniably, but that doesn't mean NAFTA is a bad idea. If anything, it means it is more important," said Judge Morris, the National Association of Manufacturers' senior policy director for international trade.

The Commerce Department agreed, pointing out that unlike 1982 — when Mexico's economy last suffered a major jolt — the country isn't slapping new tariffs on imports.

Wallach brushed off criticism that the analysis fails to take into account Mexico's economic problems. "You can't separate them out — and you shouldn't because ... this is the new peso reality," she said.

Reflecting the continued fallout from Mexico's troubles, the United States' traditional trade surplus with Mexico has vanished. For the first six months of the year, the U.S. trade deficit with Mexico reached $8.5 billion.

Public Citizen cited the toy manufacturer Mattel as one example of NAFTA's failure to deliver.

In 1993, a Mattel vice president told a House trade subcommittee that NAFTA would have "a very positive effect" on the more than 2,000 U.S. Mattel workers.

The Labor Department has certified that 520 workers at a Mattel-owned facility in Medina, N.Y., were laid off due to increased imports from Mexico. A Mattel spokeswoman didn't return a call seeking comment.

"Those companies that we have (surveyed) were the poster children of NAFTA," Wallach said. "Where the hell are the jobs?"

The Mattel workers were among the 38,148 people in 48 states who have been certified by the Labor Department as having lost their jobs because of NAFTA.

Despite the job losses, trade officials said NAFTA remains a net gainer for U.S. workers. Increased exports to Mexico and Canada will support some 3 million U.S. jobs this year, up some 500,000 from two years ago, according to the U.S. Trade Representative's office.

One of the few success stories cited by Public Citizen is Archer Daniels Midland, the huge food-processing conglomerate based in Decatur, Ill., whichi projects growing Mexican markets for U.S. foodstuffs.

"Everyone who's protectionist sees an evil," said ADM Chairman Dwayne Andreas, a staunch NAFTA-backer who added that the trade pact "can't be anything but beneficial."

While saying that ADM's exports to Mexico have increased, Andreas didn't offer any numbers. But, he added, "Things are working pretty well on NAFTA. Of course, the big adjustment of the peso was because it was overvalued ... but now that they are fundamentally on a sound basis, I think things are going fairly well in Mexico."

PULLOUT: U.N. issues nonnegotiable demands

(From 1A)

Mladic had earlier rejected similar demands, saying he would not negotiate until NATO stops its flights over Bosnia, and would stop attacking U.N. "safe areas" only when government forces stop attacking the Serbs from within the enclaves.

But the U.N. demands are nonnegotiable, Adm. Leighton Smith, the commander of the NATO air campaign, said Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"They have very little time in which to make a decision to start showing progress on this, and it's up to them when the bombing starts, if it should start again," he said.

Richard Holbrooke, an assistant U.S. secretary of state, said in Geneva that airstrikes were suspended to give U.N. officials time to meet with Mladic. But because Mladic refused to meet their demands, he said, NATO was ready to resume bombing.

"The result of the meeting was unsatisfactory," he said. "The package of bombing targets was not completed, and NATO is ready to complete them if necessary."

"If anyone doubts the resolve of NATO ... they should look at what happened last week," Holbrooke said, referring to the airstrikes.

The United Nations reopened one route into Sarajevo on Sunday — the dangerous Mount Igman road that crosses the airport and often comes under Serb fire.

The road has been closed to supply trucks and private cars for months, although some military vehicles have continued to use it. Last month, three U.S. diplomats were killed when their armored vehicle plunged off the road as they headed for peace talks in Sarajevo.

"We have agreed with the Bosnian government to ensure traffic can enter and leave the city without problems," U.N. spokesman Maj. Guy Vinet said in Sarajevo. "We don't believe we need Serb assurances at this moment. We don't have their assurances."

Momcilo Krajisnik, a Bosnian Serb leader, said the Serbs agreed to reopen the route but claimed the Bosnian army might attack traffic on the route to blame the Serbs, the Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA reported.

The first trucks, carrying watermelons and other goods, crossed the airport and headed into the besieged city Sunday afternoon. Drivers honked their horns as children gathered along the road, cheering and jumping into the air.

But the Igman road is little more than a dirt track, and the main roads in and out of Sarajevo are still in Serb hands. Officials said they may try to open one of those routes later, but the initial focus was on the Igman route.

The move appeared part of a more assertive U.N. presence around Sarajevo now that the rapid reaction force of British, French and Dutch soldiers is in place around Mount Igman. The force fired nearly 1,000 shells at Bosnian Serb targets around Sarajevo during the past week.

Camouflaged soldiers from the force patrolled front lines around Sarajevo on Sunday, apparently scouting Bosnian Serb gun positions. Aircraft were heard in the skies over the city, but there were no airstrikes.

After a quiet day, some sporadic gunfire and four or five explosions of unknown origin could be heard in Sarajevo Sunday night.

U.N. officials said there was no indication the Serbs were pulling back their weapons.

NATO launched the airstrikes Wednesday after U.N. investigators blamed Bosnian Serbs for the Aug. 28 shelling of a Sarajevo marketplace that killed 38 people. It was one of the deadliest attacks of the 3 1/2-year-old war in the former Yugoslavia.

MEMORY: Vets dance, weep, roll in 'big gun' Hope

war, or what Dwight D. Eisenhower's role was in the war, or what D-Day was. Memory, on all fronts, is in retreat.

Roy Linsenmeyer has his own solution.

"I wrote a long 12-page letter to my six grandchildren and said, 'Let me tell you what your grandpa did in the big war,' " explained the old Navy Seabee from Swarthmore, Pa., a veteran of the battle of Okinawa.

For the record, what Grandpa did, along with 15 million other servicemen and women, and tens of millions of Americans who stayed home to worry and pray and work, was to change the course of history, to eliminate a brutal brand of nationalism that imperiled democracy and freedom worldwide.

Clinton, in a more accurate vein, paid tribute to those millions as he stood before veterans on Saturday, flanked by the 33,000 graves of Honolulu's inspiring hilltop national cemetery.

"We honor the extraordinary generation of Americans who came together to meet the challenge of war and then ... worked together to seize the promise of peace," the 49-year-old president said.

It was the centerpiece ceremony of a weekend of events to help the nation remember its great sacrifice, and the "extraordinary generation" to celebrate its role.

For the 3,000 who poured into Hickam Air Force Base's Hangar 35 on Saturday night for a 1940s-style dance, the highlight arrived in a wheelchair — ageless Bob Hope, the living image of World War II entertainment.

Helped up on stage, the 92-year-old comedian quipped, ad-libbed and launched into his trademark song, "Thanks for the Memories." They loved it.

The memories. Every gray-haired ex-GI had a funny one, like how Bill Pearce's buddies flew a donkey back in their bomber from North Africa, fitted with its own oxygen mask, to turn it into a beer-guzzling mascot at their base in England.

"They called her Lady Moe. They thought it was a 'he' but it turned out otherwise," laughed Pearce, of Austin.

But dark memories overshadowed the light, like the mission over Germany when the 19-year-old bombardier Pearce blacked out — his oxygen cut off - and was saved at the last moment by a crewmate. They still exchange Christmas cards.

Or like when Navy gunner Brock Hudson, another Austinite, saw a kamikaze plane "coming right at me from portside" off Okinawa, and his starboard gun wouldn't swing around. "All I could do was stand and watch. And then it fell into the sea."

Or like when Henry Tanaka of Honolulu, a veteran of the Japanese-American 442nd Infantry Regiment, lost six good friends in the fight for Italy. When they blew "Taps" at the cemetery Saturday, he openly wept. "That was for them."

Or like when Marine flyer Elmer Glidden of Canton, Mass., looked around after the Battle of Midway and found half his squadron gone, shot down into the sea.

Or like when Fred Bristol picked up a "souvenir" chunk of something at Hiroshima after the bombing and quickly developed severe rashes. "I still have problems."

It seemed everyone's memory, jogged by recent headlines, led to Hiroshima and the bomb.

Veteran after veteran told all who would listen that dropping the atom bombs was the right thing to do, and those who question the decision today have no standing. "They weren't alive then."

Bristol of Sarasota, Fla., sees a problem, though: Memory is taking too many casualties.

"There will be fewer and fewer people with the knowledge that these bombs actually saved lives," said the ex-GI.

In fact, the 15 million are now down to 7 million, according to government figures. By V-J Day's 65th anniversary, just 2 million ex-World War II servicemen and women will survive.

Memory must simply outlive them, said one of the "extraordinary generation," Phyllis Murray of Honolulu.

"I hope the war will never be forgotten," the self-described "war bride" said as she stood beneath the balloons in Hickam's cavernous hangar.

"If memories stay bright, we might not repeat it. But if they're dim, then we could."

"It," for those who forget, was nothing less than history's most monumental human failure, a catastrophe that took more than 50 million lives.

As she spoke, the young Air Force band struck up a tune. "That's our music," the 75-year-old Linsenmeyer beamed at Mrs. Murray, 70.

It was a song about bluebirds and white cliffs and Dover. And "tomorrow, when the world is free."

FAT: Club promotes women who are Rubenesque

we are," said club founder Diane Ilic. "That's just not all we are. We're people too and, as a lot of men already know, we can be a lot of fun to be with."

Ilic started the club three years ago. Tired of sitting alone at bars, or being refused dances at clubs, she was sure there were men out there who didn't mind being with an overweight woman.

She rented out a hall, got a few friends to promise to come, then stuck handbills advertising a dance for large women on cars parked outside area nightclubs.

What happened surprised her.

"There weren't only guys who didn't mind big women; there are a lot who like them that way," Ilic said.

It was beach night one recent Saturday at the Kelly-Gazzaro Veterans of Foreign Wars Post. Beneath beach balls suspended from the ceiling, contestants participated in a limbo contest as the crowd cheered to the Caribbean rhythm.

"I really like it here, the people are very friendly," said Phil Seenstra, 43, a machine shop owner. "I prefer 'em packing a few extra pounds myself. Their anatomy is different in ways I like."

Seenstra, who stands 6 feet, 170 pounds, has his arm around Anne Marie Padula, who said she used to go out with thinner girlfriends.

"The women have their little spandex on and short skirts," she said. "The odds of meeting someone are slim in that environment."

Software engineer Tony Tavares, 33, said at other clubs, women seem more concerned with how much money he makes and what kind of car he drives. At this one, they're easier to talk to and have different priorities.

"The women aren't snobby here," agreed Frederick Brown, a 29-year-old maintenance man. "Going out, if you don't have muscles and tans they're not going to look at you. Here you get to dance and they appreciate you asking."

Fratus, who's got a bit of a paunch himself, said, "Skinny women think they're doing you a favor when they dance."

Once a size 5, Sandra Turner gained weight quickly after her divorce. She was having no luck finding a new companion. Then she dropped by one night.

"This club gave me back my self-esteem," she said. "You might not meet the love of your life, but you'll meet hundreds of people."

It can be a big boost for women who were snickered at while growing up and are ignored when they go out, Ilic said.

"Some come in, nervous, wearing ironclad polyester and no makeup, the next thing you know they're coming in all dolled up, with nice dresses and they're having fun," she said. "They're like butterflies."

HOUSING: State colleges grapple with dorm space shortage

(From 1A)

"Its just hard to predict," Sasse said. "This year we had a lot more students accept our over-assignment offers and fewer people cancelled."

Last year, however, A&M had extra on-campus space.

Sasse predicted that as more people leave school or fail to register, the school would find space for a majority of the students. But some would remain in temporary housing all semester, he said.

College students seemed to take the hassle in stride.

"I decided kind of at the last minute that I was coming here and so we kind of expected something like this," said Hillary Reinhardt, an 18-year-old freshman at Southwest Texas who was housed at the Holiday Inn.

"It's worked out OK. I'd rather have a dorm, have my own things, you know, my pictures, my bed, but I don't mind."

Kari Griggs, an 18-year-old A&M freshman from Houston, is sharing a converted TV room with five other students.

The room, which no longer holds a television, is furnished with three bunk beds, three cabinets and a number of large clothes racks. Tables have been stacked atop each other.

The worst problem, Griggs said, is the bathroom situation.

"The bathroom's way down the hall," she told the Houston Chronicle.

At the University of Texas, freshman Karen Yancy said recently that she was "not terribly unhappy" about being housed in a dormitory basement with 22 other women.

"I felt the university was taking care of us. We'll get used to it," she said.

Overcrowding is not quite so bad at some other universities.

The University of North Texas in Denton has had on-campus housing shortages before, but Director of Housing Betsy Warren said no problems are expected this school year.

Housing is right at capacity at Texas Christian University, said the school's vice chancellor for student affairs, Don Mills. The school has use of an old sorority house this year that's taken what might have otherwise been an overflow.

Some of the students who are inconvenienced are compensated for their trouble.

At A&M, students living in television and study lounges pay a lower housing rate. Those in triple rooms get a prorated discount depending on how long the extra people are in the room.

At SWT, the college is footing the bill for the hotels, which cost about twice as much per night as the regular dorm rate.

Meanwhile, some schools are looking into building new dorms or on-campus apartments to combat the overcrowding.

Southwestern University in Georgetown is completing a $4.5 million apartment project that will house 200 students.

The master plan committee at UT is considering a long-range plan that is likely to propose doubling dorm space.

Feminists will still try to fight erosion of hard-won gains

BEIJING (AP) — Its hopes for prestige undermined by a weekend of protests, China held a lavish ceremonial welcome today for a U.N. women's gathering amid complaints it is trying to keep private activists away.

To the strains of China's national anthem, top Chinese leaders and conference delegates assembled in the cavernous Great Hall of the People, hours before the formal opening of the 181-nation conference.

"Full and equal participation by women is indispensable to the fulfillment of the two major tasks facing the present world, namely peace and development," President Jiang Zemin, who is also Communist Party chief, told the gathering.

According to the United Nations, 3,000 delegates from its member states have registered, along with 2,500 journalists. The conference begins officially today afternoon.

On Sunday, delegates from a parallel meeting of private groups taking place outside Beijing staged their biggest day of protests yet.

The NGO Forum dropped its threat to send its 23,000 delegates home, even though China refused to loosen security that the women said was intended to harass and intimidate them.

Complaints that China is trying to silence the activists and limit their contact with delegates to the U.N. Fourth World Conference on Women have overshadowed the official meeting.

Tibetan independence activists said one of their members was shoved and chased from a meeting Sunday when she tried to hand out leaflets. Security guards also stopped a march by about 150 anti-nuclear activists.

Delegates also have complained of guards shadowing and photographing them, confiscating videotapes and breaking up meetings.

The Chinese did not interfere Sunday with Kuwaiti women demanding that Iraq free Persian Gulf War prisoners or Iraqis protesting the U.N. embargo. There also were protests by Muslim women whose use of a movie theater was pre-empted and by women from South Asia shouting "Peace now!"

The head of the U.N. meeting said Sunday it will have a double goal — pushing for equality of the sexes by the 21st century and fighting to keep social gains made in the 20th.

"We must struggle ... to come out with a document for the advancement of women," said secretary-general Gertrude Mongella. "We must watch out ... for conservative or backward-looking elements which want to keep the woman in a place where she has always been."

Mongella called on delegates to oppose attempts to roll back previous conference agreements on human rights, abortion and contraception.

Those issues are expected to dominate debate at the 12-day meeting, which first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will attend as honorary chief of the U.S. delegation.

Mrs. Clinton defended the conference Sunday, rejecting accusations by conservatives who have portrayed the conference as a radical, anti-family event that will endorse liberal stands on issues such as abortion.

"The composition of our delegation refutes that charge," the first lady said in her weekly newspaper column. "It is a broad-based, family-oriented group committed to the mainstream agenda of the conference."

The White House rebuked China for harassing delegates to the meeting of private groups.

"We very much regret the restrictions on free expressions and association which have been occurring in Beijing," said White House press secretary Mike McCurry. "We believe those are wrong and they are counterproductive to the work of a very important international conference."

Nafis Sadik, executive director of the U.N. Population Fund, expressed frustration that issues already decided at the 1994 U.N. population conference in Cairo and the 1993 U.N. human rights meeting in Vienna are on the Beijing agenda.

"It's because there is the desire to subjugate women in so many of the societies of the world. All kinds of spurious arguments are made, religious, moral — except the moral argument that everyone is equal. That is never used," Sadik said.

The three previous U.N. conferences on women were highly politicized by the Cold War, the Palestinian struggle and apartheid. With those issues either resolved or being negotiated, organizers had hoped to keep the spotlight in Beijing entirely on the issues confronting women.

But they hadn't factored in the conflict between China's fear of free debate and the women's demand for it.

Chinese authorities are closely watching participants of the forum in Huairou, 30 miles from Beijing. Its organizers dropped their threat of a boycott, saying China had reduced surveillance and improved transportation and facilities for the disabled.

Xu Zhijian, deputy chairman of the Chinese Organizing Committee, denied that a boycott was ever considered and indicated the government would not change its security arrangements.

When delegates get down to work Tuesday, they will debate the proposed conference's 120-page platform.

It includes proposals for governments, the United Nations and voluntary organizations to alleviate women's poverty and improve health care, education and job opportunities for women. It also proposes measures to reduce violence against women and make their voices heard in peace talks.

Plan to log untouched rain forest ignites bitter battle

ASIDONHOPO, Suriname (AP) — There's a new sound in the forest. To the squawk of parrots and the roar of rapids, add rumbles of discontent from native tribes that want to keep out the whine of chain saws.

Leaders of this small South American nation, struggling with a sluggish economy and reduced foreign aid, want to let foreign companies start cutting one of the world's largest undisturbed tracts of tropical rain forest.

"The chief and his people do not agree, and say to the government in Paramaribo that they cannot force the people to accept this," declared Chief Songo Aboikoni of the Saramaka tribe.

Asidonhopo, a remote cluster of palm-thatched Saramaka huts in a clearing no bigger than a football field, is separated from the capital by 130 miles of dense forest. With no roads, visitors arrive by river.

Yet in their opposition to the logging plan, the Saramaka have allies as far away as Europe and Malaysia, and as varied as conservationists and the Inter-American Development Bank.

Suriname, a sparsely populated country of 400,000 people on the northeastern shoulder of South America, encompasses about 100 million densely forested acres of the Amazon Basin.

The government of President Ronald Venetiaan wants to let loggers cut trees on nearly 10 million acres, offering a chance to inject money into the economy in a pre-election year.

Parliament is expected to approve the first contract later this month with the Berjaya Group Berhard of Malaysia. Companies from Malaysia and Indonesia are negotiating two more contracts.

Berjaya is offering to invest $100 million, and says it will open a sawmill and furniture factory and create 15,000 jobs, becoming Suriname's biggest employer.

But critics of Malaysian loggers say they have destroyed forests in their own country.

So conservationists and aid agencies were alarmed when Suriname asked the U.S. Agency for International Development last year to help draw up the contract with Berjaya.

Malaysian environmentalists accused Berjaya of ruining their country's environment. Others are urging Suriname to raise its proposed annual fee of $3 an acre, saying loggers in the Pacific Northwest pay 10 times that.

One member of Berjaya's board of directors, Surindra Mungra, is the brother of Suriname's foreign minister.

Legislators say personal ties will not affect their decisions.

Trying to persuade Suriname to reject Berjaya, the Inter-American Development Bank is offering to help finance the budget while it finds ways to make use of the forest itself.

Those could include more limited logging, tourism or the development of medicines from forest plants.

Venetiaan, the president, has not responded to the proposal or to the objections of the Saramakas or other tribes.

"None of the world's arguments have convinced us," said legislator Iwan Krolis, a forester who is negotiating logging contracts.

Mungra, the Berjaya director, accused the United States of using "bullying tactics" in "an economic competition between emerging companies that are the underdog" and U.S. importers of tropical wood.

He said Berjaya's 25-year contract to log 2.8 million acres would not destroy the forest because the company would be restricted to cutting only about 10 to 15 out of every 200 trees.

However, Krolis said the contract would allow logging of 55 percent of trees.

Russell A. Mittermeier, an environmentalist with the Washington-based group Conservation International, said the contract had so many loopholes that Suriname probably would make only $2 million a year, while the loggers made $28 million.

Berjaya would be forbidden from cutting trees within 4 1/2 miles of remote tribal villages.

But the government cannot even enforce the logging contracts it already has signed. Parliament and the forestry commission say another Malaysian company, Musa, is cutting more trees than allowed.

Musa is clearcutting vast stands of trees, leaving bare plains in the middle of the forest's carpet of green. The company takes logs out by river, which critics say would make it easy to hide excessive cutting.

"People say we have indigenous people and they have rights, and that's true," Krolis said. "But we have to look at it in comparison with the rest of the population."

Venetiaan's government will have to contend with tribes that have shown they are not powerless.

The Saramaka and other Bush Negro tribes, who make up 15 percent of Suriname's population, waged a guerrilla war in 1986, accusing the government of violating their rights with plans to develop the interior.

Unable to defeat the rebellion, the government gave in and signed a treaty in 1992 recognizing the tribes' rights to benefits from economic development in their regions.

Aboikoni, the Saramaka chief, said the government has not responded to a letter he sent April 20 asking what his people would gain from the logging proposal.

"A lot of promises were made, but nothing changes here. It just gets worse," he said.

In mid-August, Aboikoni and other chiefs from the four Indian and five Bush Negro tribes held a summit and declared they were setting up "The Highest Authority of the Interior" in a challenge to the government's authority.

The government said the chiefs, who represent 50,000 residents of the jungle, were being manipulated by "forces which want to create an atmosphere of rebellion."

In an interview with The Associated Press, Aboikoni said: "The companies must negotiate with us, because only we can ensure the forest is not destroyed."

If the government controls the contracts, he said, "the benefits will stay in Paramaribo and we will get nothing."

Book tour should reveal a lot about Powell's politics

WASHINGTON (NYT) — For months, Gen. Colin Powell has fended off reporters' questions, not only about his political intentions, or lack thereof, but also about his views on the pressing political issues of the day.

But in fact, more is known about Powell's views than is generally acknowledged. He has said enough, in interpolations into his standard speech and in answers to questions posed by members of his audiences, to suggest that he holds centrist views on such questions as affirmative action, abortion and social welfare, in contrast to his better-known conservative views on fiscal and foreign policy issues.

Whether that combination of perspectives would be palatable to Republican primary voters, who tend to be more conservative than Republicans as a whole, is a matter of some doubt in political circles. That, no doubt, is why the general is reportedly weighing the idea of an independent candidacy.

He says he will not be ready until November to tell people whether he has decided to run for president next year. But beginning next week, with the start of a publicity blitz for his memoirs, "My American Journey," Powell's political views will be difficult to avoid.

Time magazine will kick things off with a cover story and 7,500 words of excerpts from the book in the issue that hits the newsstands on Sept. 11. On Sept. 15, ABC will broadcast an hourlong interview with Barbara Walters. On Sept. 16, in the Washington suburbs, Powell is scheduled to begin a 23-city international promotional tour. On Sept. 17 he will be on Parade's cover.

News organizations plan to cover the 58-year-old general's tour on behalf of the book, for which he received a $6 million advance, as if it were a campaign tour. That will keep the presidential pot boiling, as did a series of speeches during the past year, for many of which he was paid $50,000 or $60,000.

In a speech to the American Bar Association's section on business law in Chicago on Aug. 8, for example, he was clear in his support for affirmative action programs. He did not spell precisely how far he would go in seeking to reduce past racial abuses, though he emphasized his opposition to quotas.

"Let's not deceive ourselves into thinking the playing field is equal," he said. "We should not deceive ourselves that we are a color-blind society."

Some programs "have outlived their usefulness and probably should be eliminated," the general conceded. Nonetheless, he argued: "People of color, particularly African-Americans in our inner cities, are getting further and further left behind. There's a bigger gulf. In the neighborhood I grew up in, we always had a sense of hope, even during the days of segregation. But some of that hope is now being lost in some of our inner cities."

In Salem, Mass., last April, Powell said it was appropriate, as President Clinton has done with affirmative action, to review any program to see whether it served society's interests. But he chastised those who say that affirmative action has outlived its usefulness and should be abandoned.

"I can remember very well being denied access to a lunch counter," he said at Salem State College. "This isn't ancient. It happened in our lifetime. Let's recognize that there are still racial problems in our country."

Although Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, the front-runner for the 1996 Republican presidential nomination, has said that Powell would be acceptable to him as a running mate, Powell's views on affirmative action run counter to the position of the party's dominant conservative wing; likewise, to the degree he has stated them, his views on social programs.

"We cannot walk away from those who are less fortunate," he said in Rockport, Maine, on July 19, alluding to federal welfare programs and Republican plans to cut them back.

In a speech to a group of mutual fund executives earlier this summer, Powell said of the Republicans' Contract with America, "Some of it I find a little too hard, a little too harsh, a little too unkind," and he added one of his favorite punch lines: "We do not yet have a level playing field in our society."

On other occasions, he has said he opposes abortion but that, in the end, he also opposes legislation to prohibit abortion. He has expressed tentative disapproval of the proposed constitutional amendment to ban flag burning.

"I'm still a New Deal kid from Harlem and the South Bronx," he said in an early speech. "Franklin Roosevelt's picture was in my home."

That context helps to illuminate what Powell has been driving at when he has talked repeatedly about restoring "a sense of family and society, sharing and caring."

On the other hand, much of what Powell has said so far has been difficult to weigh because it has been stated in such general terms.

Strikers delay morning news by 12 hours

STERLING HEIGHTS, Mich. (AP) — The management of Detroit's strike-bound newspapers got delivery trucks out of a suburban printing plant on Sunday morning after a protest managed to stop delivery for more than 12 hours.

"This has to be considered a complete victory," said Al Derey, chairman of the Metropolitan Council of Newspaper Unions. "We need to take this victory and move on and next week come back on the high side."

It was unclear how well management would be able to deliver the papers to readers Sunday after the late start. But the company that publishes the Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News expressed optimism.

Detroit Newspapers spokeswoman Teresa Licido said over a million copies were printed. "We expect to continue to deliver all day as long as it takes to get the papers out," she said. "Home delivery has first priority."

About 50 delivery trucks left the gate of Detroit Newspapers' Sterling Heights plant about 8:30 a.m., as about 15 police were on hand to let them pass.

About 50 strikers and their supporters shouted "scabs" and other angry slogans as the trucks left the plant.

The strikers enjoyed a major success Saturday night, when about 1,200 people blocked entrances to the plant, preventing delivery of Sunday's combined edition of The Detroit News and Detroit Free Press.

But the dwindling number of pickets cleared the way for the trucks to leave later in the morning.

Striker Michael Varnadore, a Teamsters union member and 18-year employee of the newspapers, said he felt let down by those pickets who left.

"Some of our brothers should have stayed around longer," Varnadore said. "If we would have kept up the numbers, they never would have gotten through."

Late Saturday, police used pepper gas to quell demonstrators who were blocking the plants gate.

Trucks normally begin leaving the printing plant at 8 p.m.

"We not going to give up," said Susie Ellwood, a vice president at Detroit Newspapers, the company that oversees the newspapers' business operations.

Conference can't allow intimidation

China's ludicrous effort to restrict demonstrations at the U.N. conference on women broke down almost as soon as non-government participants assembled on Thursday at a site 40 miles from Beijing. Women accustomed to fighting for their rights were not about to be intimidated by the bureaucrats and security guards of a communist police state.

There is no place for censorship at an international conference like this. The women know that. The Chinese do not. If the Chinese fail to lift the restrictions entirely, the participants should make enforcement of them as exasperating to the authorities as possible.

Originally, China ordered public political activities confined to a small area of the forum site and prohibited any criticism of Chinese policies and practices. But on the forum's first day an overflow crowd of 4,000 women crowded around a movie theater that showed the Burmese Nobel Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi on videotape denouncing her country's ruling junta and all other authoritarian regimes. A Tibetan women's group also managed to screen its videotape after security officers unsuccessfully attempted to confiscate it.

Meanwhile, Amnesty International displayed images of female political prisoners, including two held by Beijing — Gao Yu, a prominent Chinese journalist, and Phuntsog Niydrou, a Tibetan nun serving a 17-year sentence. After the Amnesty group deliberately marched outside the area allotted to demonstrations, Chinese authorities retreated, announcing that the less restrictive rules used by the United Nations would apply throughout the forum site. More tests are sure to come, with the main conference opening on Monday in the heart of Beijing.

China's leaders remain determined to prevent discussions about individual rights and social and political change from seeping into their own tightly repressed society. Coverage by the official Chinese media has been highly selective. But having sought the international prestige of playing host to this conference, Beijing is obliged to drop its attempts to censor the participants. Instead it should let its own people benefit from the ideas and experiences that will be discussed at the meetings.

At first China saw its role in the conference as a way to advertise its recent economic gains and its determination to take a more active place in international affairs. That seemed even more important after human rights problems cost China its chance to stage the 2000 Olympics. But later Chinese leaders began to panic about what might happen as tens of thousands of experienced political activists and representatives from the world's press descended on Beijing.

The clumsy and repressive steps that followed reinforce the view that the Olympic site selection committee made exactly the right call. U.N. authorities, for their part, should have stepped in earlier to challenge China's approach to conference planning.

It makes good sense to hold the Fourth World Women's Conference in a country that is home to one-fifth of the world's women — provided those women get a chance to hear and see the proceedings.

Kantor stays focused on workers' rights

WASHINGTON — When federal authorities freed 74 Thai immigrants recently from a virtual slave camp in Southern California — replete with razor-wire, attack dogs and armed guards — most of the country was shocked.

Anderson

One exception was U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor.

"You would think this would be impossible," he told us. "I'm surprised, but I'm not shocked. People will take advantage of workers if they are allowed to do so. If it can happen here, is there any doubt in anyone's mind that in less vigilant democracies and less developed economies this is taking place?"

On this Labor Day, the California case and many more such examples of deplorable working conditions around the world stand as the unfinished business of the labor movement. In the late 1960s, Kantor — who was then a young attorney — fought to end child slavery in the citrus fields of South Florida. Children as young as 7 were living behind barbed wire in shacks with dirt floors and no electricity.

How much progress has really been made? Consider these examples from around the world:

■ In China, where first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will soon arrive for a women's conference, 12-year-olds work 15-hour shifts in textile plants for as little as $10 per month. Children even younger work in fireworks factories, which are set-up to produce exports for the United States.

■ India is perhaps the world's most notorious nation for child labor abuses. An estimated 55 million children work under extremely exploitive conditions. Children working in the carpet industry often earn less than a dollar a day. When they make mistakes they are punished by beatings and torture.

When a child cuts a finger during weaving, some employers scrape sulfur into the wounds and set the wounds on fire to prevent the child from bleeding on prized carpet fibers, according to Senate testimony last year.

■ In Peru, 12-year-olds can work 12-hour shifts in the mines for $3 dollars a day.

■ In the Ivory Coast, the average age of a child laborer is 7.

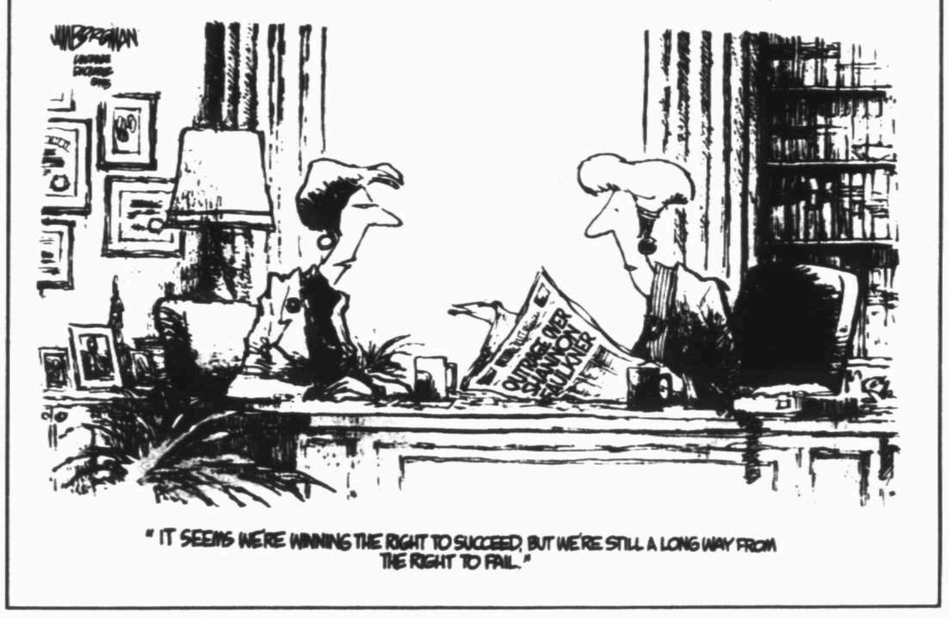

"I talk about it in almost every speech I make, and I will continue to talk about it," Kantor says. "I think 10 years from now no one will doubt you should negotiate workers' standards, environmental rights and anti-corruption agreements."

But now it's a completely different situation for Kantor. His message is often jammed by an array of odd bedfellows ranging from Cabinet colleagues to businessmen to prominent Republican congressional leaders.

Kantor is scornful of the alliance between conservative politicians and business leaders, and believes it is guilty of a double standard. "They just tend to be very articulate and outspoken about supporting democracies and market economies," Kantor says. "They ought to be the ones most supportive (of workers' rights) because that's how we're going to grow stability, grow market economies and grow democracies in the world. I'm just curious about why there is this failure to connect on this issue."

Scientist's hypothesis tests understanding of AIDS

There's a book you ought to read if you are curious about AIDS and especially if you or a loved one has been diagnosed as having HIV virus antibodies.

The book is "Why We Will Never Win the War on AIDS," and it has been published by Inside Story Communications, 1525 E. Noble St., No. 102, Visalia, CA 93292.

Reese

The authors are Bryan J. Ellison and Peter Duesberg. Ellison did graduate work with Duesberg, who is a professor of molecular and cell biology at the University of California at Berkeley.

Duesberg is one of the world's experts on retrograde viruses and was in thick with the biomedical establishment until he began to question the theory that AIDS is caused by a virus.

The book is two things. One, it is a popular history of medicine and the medical bureaucracy in the United States, based now in the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the National Institutes for Health. Two, it is an explanation of Duesberg's hypothesis that AIDS is not caused by the HIV virus and that the AIDS epidemic is essentially a fraud.

Duesberg's break with the bug hunters has caused rage and a campaign of vilification. He must now contend with pressure to keep him from publishing and efforts to withdraw his grants.

That's understandable. If Duesberg is right, then AIDS victims, their families, the taxpayers and the general public have been done a great wrong by the biomedical research establishment. The AIDS epidemic has generated billions of dollars, both public and private, and reputations, egos and fortunes are at stake.

To summarize Duesberg's arguments as presented in the book, he doesn't deny, of course, that people are dying from infections or that there is an HIV virus. He believes, however, that the virus is a harmless passenger virus and has nothing to do with the infections, the suppression of the immune system and the subsequent deaths.

He marshals some powerful arguments. HIV flunks all three of Robert Koch's postulates — logical rules devised by one of the pioneers in bacteriology in order to establish that a certain organism causes a disease. It has not spread as predicted and as it would have if in fact it were an infectious disease. The people with the HIV antibodies have not developed the AIDS syndrome (AIDS is not a disease) in the numbers and in the time sequences predicted.

Duesberg believes that the AIDS epidemic was created, not necessarily intentionally, in the minds of an army of virologists who were desperate for a public epidemic to justify their existence. When homosexuals began to die of various infections, they leaped to the assumption that there was some common viral agent causing the deaths.

Duesberg, on the other hand, believes that the deaths can be attributed to one of two causes. The first is heavy recreational drug use and the stress of multiple infections that is a common characteristic of the "fast track" homosexuals who first began to die of various opportunistic infections.

The other cause of death? AZT, the powerful drug used to treat people who show HIV antibodies. In other words, Duesberg's hypothesis is that the problem is probably toxic chemicals, not a virus. The authors accuse the CDC of expanding the definition of AIDS to make up for the shortage of real cases.

This is a terribly important issue for people with HIV. I'm certainly not qualified to say whether Duesberg is right or wrong. But he is a legitimate scientist and he needs to be heard.

If he is wrong, the huge AIDS bureaucracy should be able to prove him wrong. So far, it can't. And it has tried to silence him and bury his arguments with specious lawyer-style replies. That's always a tip-off that someone is trying to protect a vested interest rather than engage in honest debate. It is, to put it mildly, unscientific.

MIKE ROYKO

Who needs a medal to tell war story?

A suburban judge is being bashed from all directions because he falsely claimed to have been awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Royko

He contritely says he did it during a period of his life when his brains were addled by booze.

Whatever his reasons, I don't know why so many people are upset. Telling tall war stories has always been a popular pastime among some veterans — especially those who never heard anything louder than a drill sergeant's voice.

A pretty good measure of how much or how little danger a guy faced was how much or how little he talked about it.

Those who talk the most usually did the least. And those who did the most say the least.

A few years ago, when there was a big gathering and parade of Vietnam vets in Chicago, several of them wound up in a bar near the newspapers.

One of them, in old Army fatigues and a scraggly beard, loudly went on about all the hell he had been through, the slacker hippies who had taunted him upon his return, and the nightmares he still had every night.

A very big guy who had said almost nothing, finally asked the beard what outfit he had been in.

The beard tossed out an answer.

The big guy nodded and said: "Oh, yeah, you guys were in that operation at ..." And he gave the name of a Vietnam jungle or village or whatever it was. "Your outfit got torn up bad there. But you did a heck of a job."

The beard nodded solemnly. "Yeah, that was a tough one, a real tough one."

The big guy laughed and said: "Hey, you phony, there's no such place. I made that up. You're full of ..."

The beard was out the door.

Then there was the downstate Illinois politician who had actually won the Medal of Honor for singlehandedly taking on a bunch of German tanks and troops.

He not only didn't talk about it, but when I once wrote about the specifics of his amazing heroism, he got so angry he threatened to punch me out.

Some time later, I was talking to a Downstate judge who was a lifelong friend of the hero-politician. When I expressed awe at his exploits and puzzlement at his anger, the judge said:

"I'll tell you why he reacted that way. You didn't know the whole story of how he won the medal. The night before that battle, his outfit liberated a village where they found a big supply of cognac. He got drunk as hell. He was still loaded during the battle. He would have never done all that crazy stuff if he was sober."

And I remember meeting a hero who was one of my heroes: Col. Frank Gabreski, one of the leading fighter pilot aces of the air war in Europe.

He landed at our base for a stop over and my job was to bring him and his luggage to the transient officers quarters.

When we got to his rooms, I put his luggage down and started to say something like: "Colonel, sir, I'd just like to say that I've read about what you did and you are ..."

I didn't finish. He glared at the floor, glared at me, and said: "Get somebody in here to clean this dump up — now!"

So I learned a valuable lesson from my elders who had been in World War II about talking or clamming up.

When the Korean War ended, I came back without having done any harm to the enemy. And they were nice enough to have done nothing more than give me a few nervous moments.

"How was it over there?" a friend or a relative would ask.

While squinting into the distance, I'd take a deep breath, exhale slowly, and wearily shake my head.

Then I'd rub my eyes and quietly say: "Look, I'd rather not talk about it, OK? I just don't ... want ~~to~~ ... talk about it."

"Sure, sure," they'd nervously say, "I understand. Just take it easy."

So the judge didn't have to go to all the bother of buying a medal and trying to get a hero's license plate.

The old "I don't want to talk about it" trick worked every time. And if you could master the distant squint, young ladies were always impressed. There was something to be said for being nearsighted.

I prefer to do my own corrections and clarifications.

In Wednesday's column, I wrote about a man who called to bawl me out for an earlier column about military schools.

The man said he was a graduate of the Virginia Military Institute and that VMI and the Citadel were great and produced outstanding leaders. And he said I was a wimp and he'd fight me in the street.

The public relations director for VMI saw the column, checked his records, and said the guy never went to that school and sounded like a jerk.

Actually, I thought the guy sounded pretty good, but VMI wants the matter corrected. So here it is. I didn't want to fight the guy in the street anyway.

ANOTHER VIEW

Sen. Dole's campaign is not likely to catch fire

He's still the grizzled lead dog in the Republican mush for White House glory, but Sen. Bob Dole's campaign is catching fire like a wet match in a blizzard.

In (the recent) straw poll in the early primary state of Iowa, he failed to strike a spark and finished in a chilly tie with Sen. Phil Gramm.

His picture is next to the dictionary definition of "Washington insider."

He's the career politician many voters ran out on greased rails in the 1994 election.

He's a compromise walking down the middle of the road.

Dole is 72. Many wonder: Should a man born during the Harding administration be president in year 2000?

Dole is CEO of the Senate, which is moving slower than the O.J. Simpson trial.

If Dole can't wake up and move the Senate, he won't move the public, and his fizzling 1996 campaign will attract voters like a rained-out campfire.

Arsonists burn forests for profit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Arsonists are torching America's national forests for profit, making money on everything from fire equipment leases to burned timber.

And legislation passed by Congress last month could add even more fuel to the billion-dollar fire sale, critics say.

Americans don't realize the extent of arson in forest fires, says Michael Francis, director of national forest programs for the Wilderness Society in Washington.

"They think most fires are accidental, or caused by lightning. They'd be shocked," he said.

In the Southeast, 90 percent of the forest fires on federal land are deliberately set, says Allen Polk of the U.S. Forest Service. The figure is lower in the West, where lightning is a major factor — but that doesn't tell the whole story.

In California only 12.8 percent of fires on state-controlled land are arson — but they account for 71.5 percent of the dollar damage, said Karen Terrill of the state forestry department.

"They are the most destructive," she said. "Typically they set their fires where they do the most harm."

Some arsonists light fires for the thrill, and farmers touch off many others with illegal burns to clear their land, especially in the Southeast.

But some federal law enforcement officials are convinced there are many more arson-for-profit fires than reported.

"It's a nightmare for law enforcement," says U.S. Attorney Charles Stevens. "And regulatory agencies might be inclined to err on the side of a low number because people might infer they are not doing the job,"

Forest fires are a big industry. The nation spent $757 million fighting fires on federal land last year, and hard-hit California spent $60 million more on state lands.

Large blazes generate contracts for everything from water tankers and bulldozers to fire crews, food and toilet paper — and generate them fast.

Stevens says money was the dominant factor behind a series of fires in his district's extensive federal forest lands. "Based on our observations, the overwhelming majority of the fires there were arson-for-profit, 80 to 90 percent," he said.

The most glaring example, Stevens says, was a string of blazes in 1992-93 in the Trinity and Shasta county areas of Northern California.

Ernest Earl Ellison, 33, pleaded guilty to helping set the fires, and was sentenced last month to 15 1/2 months in prison. Ellison owned a water tender truck — which he leased to the U.S. Forest Service to fight the fires he set.

Stevens said he believes there are many other Ellisons out there.

Another source of arson fires are the very people who fight them, says Patrick Lyng, who trains criminal investigators for the Forest Service.

"Unfortunately, one of the first places we look at are firemen — that's been a problem in the past," he says. "Volunteer firefighters aren't paid until they have a fire."

On Aug. 29 in the Mount Shasta area of Northern California, the 60-year-old mother of a firefighter was arraigned on 11 counts of arson. Prosecutors charge she was motivated by a desire to create work for her son.

The financial motives, already strong, may be getting stronger.

A "salvage logging" provision slipped into the $16 billion budget-cutting bill approved by Congress and signed by President Clinton in July makes it easier for timber companies to cut otherwise exempt trees after a fire.

In May, U.S. Magistrate Thomas Coffin in Portland, Ore., underscored the danger of the policy in ruling for the Sierra Club's suit to prevent logging after a 1991 arson fire in the Warner Creek area near Eugene.

The Warner Creek blaze followed a controversy over its designation as a spotted owl nesting area. Loggers opposed the designation, which — until the fire — had prevented them from cutting trees in the area.

Environmentalists sued to stop logging after the fire, arguing it rewarded the likely arsonists. The magistrate agreed.

"The effect of selling arson fire-damaged timber could be future acts of arson," the magistrate wrote in May. "Allowing salvage logging after arson in areas where the removal of timber has been limited may provide an economic incentive ..."

Increasingly, environmentalists and many within the Forest Service itself question whether most fires should be fought at all. While people and their dwellings clearly must be protected, fires are a natural part of forest ecology.

Whether or not firefighting policies are changed, arson will be a likely outgrowth of looser laws and dwindling resources, says Charlie Ogle, the Sierra Club's forest expert in Oregon.

"In the past there were lots of logging opportunities — you didn't have to go out and create them," says Ogle. "But that's changed now. You have areas that are set aside for reserves — except after fires."aj

Latinos mix English, Spanish, compu-jargon on Internet

AUSTIN (AP) — In cyberspace, se habla Spanglish.

Latinos around the world are creating their own high-tech terminology by combining English computer jargon with Spanish conjugation.

"Surfing the Internet" becomes "surfear la Net." "E-mail" turns into "e-mailear."

"A lot of these words don't exist in Spanish; so, we're inventing new terms as we need them," says Yolanda Rivas, a University of Texas graduate student in the College of Communication.

Even when there are appropriate Spanish words, wired Latinos often prefer English words because they're easier to say.

"When it's a choice between 'la Telarana' or 'el Web,' we'll choose 'el Web,'" she says.

Latinos in the United States have long combined the two languages to make their own blend known as Spanglish.

Debates have raged about the proper place of English and Spanish in classrooms and even homes. Now, as more people around the world are plugging into the Internet, some people are happy to see English terminology take on a Spanish twist. Others say the practice poses a threat to the Spanish language.

Rivas grew up in the highlands of Peru and learned to speak English from scientists at an international potato research center where her mother worked as a guest house supervisor.

'It's a pity our own language is so rich yet we have to import English words.'
— Yolanda Rivas, Student, University of Texas

She discovered "la Net" when she started at UT last fall and got an Internet account. During late-night surfing sessions, she realized that techies across Latin America were inventing their own hybrid computer terms instead of translating them into Spanish.

After thumbing through a Spanish-language technical dictionary, Rivas, 26, realized why.

"I had never heard of these words," she says. "It was like a foreign language that I couldn't use even if I wanted to."

At the same time, she says, some Latinos see Spanglish as a corruption of the language. "If my mother knew about this Spanglish, she would kill me," Rivas says.

Still, she sees no alternative. "It's a pity our language is so rich yet we have to import English words," she says. "But we've got to get the words somehow, whether we have to borrow or steal them."

She and her colleagues use Spanglish in e-mail correspondence and in their postings to Internet newsgroups. The terms also have become part of everyday speech. "Voy a hacer un backup" is for many the simplest way to say "I'm going to make a backup copy."

Rivas put her observations online. Last January, she posted messages on a dozen Spanish-language newsgroups seeking opinions on whether Spanglish was harmful. She also asked for Spanglish submissions.

In six months, she received 300 Spanglish terms and very little opposition from Internet users in countries such as Peru, Argentina, Mexico, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Japan and Finland.

Inspired by the response, Rivas created an electronic dictionary on the World Wide Web that lists the English terms, their Spanish translations and the Spanglish hybrid.

Not everyone is supportive.

Leticia Molinero, who translates hardware manuals for AT&T, Intel and Digital Equipment Corp. in New York, was troubled after visiting the Spanglish Web site and has corresponded with Rivas about it by e-mail.

"A lot of young people on the Net will read this and think these are the proper terms," Molinero says. "The truth is there are Spanish words for these terms, but it isn't cool to use them."

Molinero believes accepting Spanglish terms as standard usage is dangerous because Latinos who don't know English will be left out.

"A Chilean might not know what 'mouse' means when he reads a computer manual, but he will understand 'raton,'" Molinero says. "Why call it a mouse?"

Spanish, of course, is not the only language being infiltrated by English.

Since the 19th century, the French have complained about English words worming their way into the French language.

The National Assembly last year passed a law that bans the use of English or any language other than French in commercial or official contexts unless there is no French equivalent of the word.

Linguists are more philosophical.

"All cultures borrow words from other languages," says Scott Baird, an associate professor of linguistics at Trinity University in San Antonio. "We seldom create words out of nowhere."

It all comes down to feelings about change, he says. "People who don't like change say it's corrupting the language, and people who like it call it innovation."

Rivas, who is using her Spanglish Web site in her graduate thesis on Latino virtual communities on the Internet, notes that when computer commands are in English, it's inevitable that those using them will use English, too.

"A lot of Latinos use computers with English keyboards and English-language software," she says. "When you're staring at a delete button all day, you're not going to say 'borrar'; you're going to say 'deletear.'"

Dave's Top 10

Ways the World Would Be Different If It Were Covered with Water

10. Packwood putting the moves on a manatee.
9. Top prize on "The Price is Right": Towels!
8. Kevin Costner makes hideously expensive movie about life on dry land.
7. It would be "The Blowfish and Hootie," my friend.
6. Cab drivers would be forced to bathe whether they want to or not.
5. Lots of talk on Court TV about O.J.'s "Bloody Flippers."
4. Michael Jackson would have plastic surgery to look more like a sea bass.
2. I'd host the show wearing nothing but a Speedo.
1. All Mets games rained out.

Late Night Lines

"Bob Packwood said the other night on "Dateline NBC," 'Guilt is not a reason to expel someone from the Senate.' You know, I've got to agree with him. Hey, here in LA, guilt isn't even enough to get you convicted."

"The Russian Church is calling for the burial of Vladimir Lenin's body. His body has been kept in a glass coffin in Moscow, where they pump in fresh air everyday. Think of how strange it must be. Russia is the only country in the world where the food is stale, but they keep their dead leaders fresh and crispy."

"And the Pentagon says Iraqi troops are moving in an unusual direction. So I guess that would be forward."

"At the 'United We Stand' conference, they had [illegible] speaking the whole weekend. And all the politicians' speeches were translated for the hearing impaired. Boy that has got to be tough for the translator! How do you speak out of both sides of your hand?"

— Jay Leno

"Archaeologists in Kenya uncovered the remains of a man that is three-to-four hundred million years old. The only thing they know about the person is that it probably at one time was married to Anna Nicole Smith."

"President Clinton is vacationing in Wyoming. He's going to be out there for two weeks with his lovely wife, Hillary, and Chelsea, his lovely daughter. He'll be hiking, camping, swimming, horseback riding, fishing, playing tennis. You know, all the stuff O.J. said he was doing the night of the crime."

"A couple of weeks ago marked the 18th anniversary of the death of Elvis Presley. I would have like to have been there when Jerry Garcia arrived in heaven and said to Elvis, 'Hey, guess who your daughter married?'"

"People around the country continue to mourn the passing of Jerry Garcia. There is some good news. Thanks to some really good drugs, it looks like he will still be able to tour with the band."

"Yesterday Japanese Prime Minister Tomichi Murayama apologized for Japan's part in World War II. I thought that was nice. However, he still hasn't mentioned anything about Kareoki."

"This is really getting out of hand. Earlier today Disney purchased the O.J. Simpson trial."

"Newt Gingrich is on vacation this week. That's right, he staying at a lovely Desk & Breakfast place."

If I were in charge of the world ...

'A Milky Way would be a vegetable'

■ Fourth-graders at Rusk Elementary outline ways they'd change the world if they had the final say.

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff Writer

For the typical 9 and 10 year old, it appears Barney and broccoli are definitely passe, and ice cream and world peace are still quite popular.

That's at least according to a sampling of comments taken from Joann Sipko's 4th-grade class at Rusk Elementary.

Students were asked to fill in the blanks and essentially rewrite a large portion of "If I Were in Charge of the World," a poem by Judith Viorst.

The students' creations seem to indicate what's on younger minds these days.

"If I were in charge of the world, I'd cancel Barney, kids that smash pumpkins, broccoli and wars," wrote Mark Hershberger. Mark adds later in the redone poem that some of the things he would want if he ran the show would be "free toys, computers for a dollar, and juicier sno-cones."

Jessica Tracy said she would want her Cheez-Nips "cheesier" and she would order up "snow for every city, state and country in the world at Christmas."

Fourth-graders also appear to be well aware of the world around them — negative as well as positive. Of the 33 responses received, 18 students say they would eliminate violence, killing, guns or drugs; eleven mentioned the world would be a better place without wars, and 14 mentioned social issues, such as smoking, pollution, racism and homelessness.

A perfect world for Heather Hall would mean "You wouldn't have guns, killing, smoking, onions or milk."

Hunter Hanks wrote that if he were in charge of the world, "I'd cancel detention, study hall, homework and mean teachers." Hunter would also see to it that "all gangs would be in jail" and "you wouldn't have bullies, chocolate sundies, brothers that agervate, and drugs."

Hunter joined several other students in saying that "A person who sometimes forgot to flush the toylet would still be allowed to be in charge of the world."

Jeremy Sessions says he'd cancel "racism, pollution and violence; summers would be longer, there would be no cursing and all homeless people would have a home." To make the world completely perfect, Jeremy said, "A Milky Way would be a vegetable and all people would be happy."

For Jenny Holzer, a perfect world would consist of "candy for breakfast, candy for lunch and candy for dinner" and "You wouldn't have homework, chores, sisters or vegetables."

Jacob Baccus said if he were the top guy, he'd cancel "early bed times, vegetables, haircuts and church clothes.

"A milk shake with pecans would be a vegetable and all milk would be Coke," Jacob wrote.

"If I were in charge of the world ... a person who sometimes forgot to kiss their mom and sometimes forgot to say thank you would still be allowed to be in charge of the world," Jacob added.

Laura Nelson said if she made all the decisions, "I'd cancel the dentist, sweet pickles, doctors and movie stars." Laura also wrote "You wouldn't have pollution, homework, airplanes or hair bows."

Chris Dale said if he were in charge, "You wouldn't have pretty girls" and "All boys would be smart."

Helping preserve history

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

While the collection of ranching history and lore of the Great Southwest is the primary focus of the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, archivist Christi Ray Callicoatte's role is to whet the public's interest — one person at a time — in Western ranch heritage.

"The main goal here is to preserve Western history and to preserve our (ranching) heritage," said Mrs. Callicoatte, the center's newsletter editor and archivist.

The older, seasoned generation that peruses the library's collection appreciates the heritage, which many of the old-timers have experienced or lived through their forefathers.

But the happy challenge, which Mrs. Callicoatte gladly accepts, is attracting the interest and exciting the passion of younger people for the heritage of the land and things Texana.

"A lot of people in town know it is here, but they really don't know what's in it," she said of the library.

The 25,000-volume collection of Texana and Southwestern history includes collections of J. Evetts Haley, the 94-year-old historian-cowman who established the library in 1976 in memory of his first wife, Nita Stewart Haley; Clayton Williams, the Fort Stockton author-historian-rancher who specialized in Old West military and ranching; Dan Thrapp, who wrote on Indians of Arizona; Robert Mullins, who studied and wrote about the Lincoln County Wars in New Mexico; Erwin Smith, Old West photographer, and Harold Bugbee, sketch artist.

The core of the collection is Haley's 6,000-book collection, which includes his many manuscripts and published works, including the biographical "Charles Goodnight," the definitive work about the legendary pioneer rancher-

Life teaches abled comic about laughs

By David Cuthbert

NEW ORLEANS, La. — "I'm a polio survivor," Marion Wikholm says. "I hope that's politically correct. I've gone from 'crippled' to 'handicapped' to 'disabled' to 'differently abled.' Pretty soon I'll be cured!"

The audience laughs and applauds, both amused and relieved. Wikholm is in a wheelchair and with a few words has dispelled the uneasiness that hung in the air like an unasked question.

"I'm not a victim, I'm an opportunist," she insists in her honeyed voice. "If something goes wrong, I learn from it, correct it, or blame it on my husband."

Wikholm is a psychotherapist who's been in private practice for 15 years. "People pay me to assure them that their problems are worse than mine," she says.

She is also a public speaker, conducts personal development seminars, serves as a resource therapist for employee assistance programs and operates a nursing home consultation service.

But lately, she has branched out into another area. "I call myself an 'inspiration humorist,'" she says. "I feel very strongly that there's something to be gained from the obstacles and losses we face in life, and we all have plenty of them."

Her topics include "How to Enjoy Life in Spite of It All" and "Bitter or Better — It's Up to You," which is the title of a book she's writing.

She's also taken Mike Parnon's stand-up comedy class at the University of New Orleans; the first disabled person to do so. "It's a sit-up comedy when I do it," she says.

"I do a lot of material about my disability, because, as Mike says, I have the license to do it. But I don't want to just tell jokes, I want there to be something a little uplifting ... I use my life, myself, to make a point.

"I don't put myself down, or anyone else, either. I don't malebash. I can't because my husband took the course, too, and helps me write my act. You see, I have this theory that everyone has a disability, but it's not always so visible.

"I think finding the light side to some of these dark areas is healthy. Humor is a vary valid therapeutic tool. Making a

71-year-old skateboarder thrills tourists

By Jeff Wilson
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — For the celebrated Skateboard Mama, Venice Boardwalk is simply a counterculture stage where she feels right at home among the carnival cast of local Bohemians.

"Oh, I fit right in. Everybody knows me. There's no place like this place in the world," says gray-haired Liz "Skateboard Mama" Bevington after a skateboarding session. She's been doing it for two decades.

The 71-year-old widow is just as much a part of the eclectic Venice scene as the chainsaw juggler, New Age healers and steroid-enhanced Muscle Beach freaks. And she's famous, too.

"I did a Coors Lite commercial in 1984, then Pepsi in 1990 and the California Lottery in 1993. I also advertise for B.U.M. Equipment," she says with a thick German accent.

Balancing on pink hightop athletic shoes, fashionably laced only part way, Liz gives a push and cruises the 1 1/2-mile boardwalk each day aboard her custom-built skateboard. She adds a colorful sail if the wind blows.

"Skateboarding can get kind of boring. You have to push all the time," Liz says, explaining her preference for sail skating. "I can go real fast with my sail, but

Closets a reminder of what a geek you were

She had that look in her eyes. It was quite unmistakable. I'd seen so many times before, and each year at about the same time. I walked in the house last weekend and darned if it wasn't there again. After all these years, The Look still unnerves me.

Patterson

You've seen The Look, too. Not on my wife's face, of course, but on yours. The Look tells you it's time to turn back around, get in the car, drive down the street, and do something more interesting and productive with your time, like watching street crews lay seal coat.

What is The Look?

It's that "I'm-in-a-closet-cleanin'-mood" look. A look best described as a cross between a woman on a mission and a deer caught in headlights, it isn't complete unless it comes accompanied with an "I'm gonna get it done and I'm gonna get it done today" attitude.

As a typical guy, I've thought all these years that going through my sock and underwear drawer and throwing out anything with holes in it constituted a thorough enough cleaning job. I have just recently been informed otherwise.Therefore, as I saw it I had two options last Sunday:

A.) I could sit around leisurely munching on corn chips while watching sports on TV, or, B.)I could drag my backside into the bedroom, swallow my pride, and clean my closet

It goes without saying that, as a typical guy, if you opt for Option "A" you will be fed constant glares each and every time she walks through the TV room to fill up the bucket with clean water. If you're still sitting there chippin' 'n flippin' when she's done, your head may very well be on the recieving end of a dirty water bucket on her last trip through. She'll figure "Why waste a perfectly good bucket of filthy water pouring it down the toilet when I can use it to drown my lazy husband with it?"

If you opt for Choice "B," you'll willfully surrender what would've otherwise been a perfectly good day. But hey, who wants to watch the first football game of the season when you can spend your time sifting through clothes that haven't fit in 20 years?

I, of course, chose Selection B. And for the next three hours, plaid shirts, bright blue pants and white shoes lurched out at me. The skeletons in my closet were free. My past was "outted" and I suddenly realized what a hideous dresser I used to be.

Not that I'm that much better today. The disturbing thing I learned about myself in this clean-out procedure is that virtually every article of clothing I own today is some shade of gray. I have dress grays, dark grays, light grays and gray shoes. The pin stripes in my dress shirt are gray, the band around my shorts is even gray. Even my computer screen at work is gray.

I opened the sock drawer and to my relief found that my socks were still either brown or black.

Continuing to sift, I had time to think, and it suddenly dawned on me: I need some serious help. I wonder, is there such a thing as a wardrobe therapist?

Clean out your closet once every so often and it becomes painfully obvious to you what you once were and what you have evolved into.

So the next time she gets The Look in her eyes, tell her to stay out of your closet: The plaid pants and white shoes have to stay so it will at least look like you have more to wear than all those dreary grays that scream to the world how old you're getting.

COMIC: Making a fool of yourself good for the soul

total fool of yourself is good for your mental health.

"Whatever you focus on in life expands for you. And when you're so much more focused on funny things, guess what? Life is more fun! And what I do is what comedy is supposed to be: adversity, plus time."

"If something bad happens, make it temporary. If it persists, make it impermanent. ... At some point, maybe you say, 'Well, I'm going to give up and wallow in it for awhile.' That's a choice. You're choosing to be a victim. I say, 'Get through it and get on with it!

"Listen, what you look for is what you find."

Wikholm didn't find much fun in contracting polio when she was 8.

"I was a very physical little girl," she said. "I roller skated, I was the jump-rope champion of the second grade in Bird Island, Minn. From 8 to 18, I never joked about having polio. In fact, I would burst into tears if anybody mentioned it.

"I've always been hard-headed and determined. I saw pretty clearly that I would have to use my mind if I was going to do something with myself.

"When I went to the College of St. Catherine in St. Paul, Minn., they didn't seem to care about my disability, so I didn't care about it so much. My education started opening doors for me. Of course, I still had to walk up three flights of stairs to get to the doors...

"Coming here from Minnesota was like two different worlds. The only similarity was that they were both flat. Minnesota was meat and potatoes; New Orleans was wine and mint juleps. People called me 'Honey' and 'Sweetheart,' and they were a lot less inhibited.

"And it was here that I found my greatest challenge — my husband, Ronald Wikholm. We met at the state hospital in Mandeville. We've been married 21 years and have two children: Olivia, who's 16, and Brent, who's 11.

"I don't want to give up my practice, but I'm hoping that I'll be doing more talking for a living. ... We could re-make my favorite movie, 'Gone With the Wind.' I mean, what would it be like if I played Scarlett O'Hara? The whole movie would be about Rhett trying to get me up the stairs. Instead of 'Gone With the Wind,' it could be 'Stuck on the Landing.'"

Wikholm paused, her eyes glittering. "Forest Gump's mom was right. Life is like a box of chocolates — sometimes sweet, usually hard, but mostly just plain nuts."

Putting a gauge on urban mentality

By David Grimes
Sarasota (Fla.) Herald-Tribune

The city of New York is spending $40,000 to have its head examined.

According to an Associated Press story, a team of mental-health experts will subject this city of 7 million people to a psychiatric examination in an attempt to find out what makes New York — and New Yorkers — tick.

While New York doesn't need to shell out $40,000 to have someone say it's crazy (I'll do it for much less), I think the basic concept of psychiatric evaluations of American cities is a sound one or, at the very least, a more entertaining way to throw away taxpayers' money than building a new nuclear submarine or aircraft carrier.

Sure, everybody has their own idea of how crazy their city is, but it's not the same as having an expert make an official pronouncement.

People who live in Boston, for example, might think their city is totally bonkers, but when the experts compare notes, it may turn out that Boston is no nuttier than Philadelphia or, for that matter, Cleveland.

It might even turn out that the cities we think of as gibbering whackos are not so nuts after all. For example, I have always thought of Las Vegas as the kind of city somebody needs to throw a net over and haul away in a straitjacket. But once the shrinks stretch Las Vegas out on a couch and get it to open up, they may discover that Las Vegas simply suffers from a mild inferiority complex and should be no danger to itself or others so long as it's kept away from sharp objects and Wayne Newton.

Compiling a mental-health index of American cities could be useful in many ways. For example, local Chambers of Commerce could use the information for promotional purposes. A sample slogan might be "Visit Sarasota: Nine out of 10 of Us Aren't Nuts" or, perhaps, "Sarasota: The City That Doesn't Forget to Take Its Medication."

And since it is obvious that a certain percentage of the population prefers living in a city that has gone over the edge (i.e., the 7 million people who live in New York), a mental-health index could help them find just such a place. Possible come-on lines for these cities might include "Detroit: Home of the Muggers Hall of Fame" or "Los Angeles: Blurring the Line Between Crime and Entertainment."

There are many things that could contribute to a city's mental health or lack thereof. Any city that is home to a professional sports team is bound to be a hotbed of neuroses, insecurities, wild mood swings and unpredictable behavior. The city of Baltimore, for example, has been a basket case ever since the Colts slunk away in the middle of the night in 1984.

The Boston Red Sox traded Babe Ruth to the New York Yankees in 1920 and Boston has been sitting alone in a dark corner, rocking slowly back and forth, ever since.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers took the field for the first time in 1976 and ... well, you know the rest.

The seasonal aspect of a city's mental health should also not be overlooked. Tourist towns like Sarasota have two distinct personalities: one "in season" and another "out of season."

"In season," Sarasota is a hip, sophisticated place catering to an international mix of tourists with a taste for art, theater, ballet and the symphony. "Out of season," Sarasota is a steamy, malarial pit that you visit only if your idea of a literary event is reading the instructions on a can of insect repellent.

So that makes Sarasota half-crazy, which by today's standards is not too bad.

(David Grimes writes for The Herald Tribune in Sarasota, Fla. His column is distributed by The N.Y. Times News Service.)

WIDOW: Sons have gotten used to eccentric mom

you have to slow down if cars are coming."

Street performers, card table merchants and seers line the funky beachtown promenade each weekend to entertain up to 300,000 people lured to the oddball spectacle.

Strollers meander past food joints selling vegetarian fare and duck sausage sandwiches as daredevil in-line skaters and bicyclists thread the crowd on jaunts between Santa Monica and Marina del Rey.

And there's Liz, who really knows how to work a crowd. Wearing bicycle stretch pants and a blouse reading "Skateboard Mama," she weaves a path around people or a paper cup obstacle course alongside the boardwalk.

"I don't slalom much anymore, there are too many cracks in the boardwalk nowadays," Liz says. Asked if she's ever run into anybody, she says, "I can jump off the board so I don't run into anybody.

"One time I got quite a bit of speed and fell. I've had a few raspberries, but no broken bones," she says.

Liz started skating the boardwalk when she was 52 and she's been on a roll ever since.

"I took it up from my son. I used to take him to the skateboard parks, we had skateboard parks then, and I got into it," she said. Her two adult sons have gotten used to her eccentricities.

"They are used to it now. They know that that's what I do," she says."

trailer driver who bridged two centuries; the "XIT Ranch"; "Rough Times — Tough Fiber," and "On His Native Heath ... In His Natural Element."

The books, manuscripts, arts works and artifacts in the library reflect much of the old-fashioned ranching, where much ranch work is done on horseback and cooking is done at campfires near the chuck-wagons. Those elements reflect much of the romantic side of ranching.

While The Haley Library is open to the public for scholarship research and perusal, it is an independent operation and is a "classic example of the rugged individualism and independent enterprise that developed the American West," according to a library statement.

In acknowledging that Haley "left a legacy to follow," Mrs. Callicoatte said that if original research into the West isn't started "early enough, you lose a lot of it whether it is Western history or anything else. You have to get it while it is there. If you wait too long, it's too late."

The Haley Library is "focused on Western history" and is "a rare institution," Mrs. Callicoatte said. "We focus on the Southwest and, especially, the cattle industry and its people. All the time we are bringing in new collections ... in broadening our base."

Racism of rouge officer casts suspicion on police nationwide

ATLANTA (NYT) — Ever since white police officers battled black rioters and demonstrators in the streets of America's cities in the 1960s, police departments around the country have struggled to shed their reputations as enforcers of the prevailing white culture.

Nearly 30 years later, the audiotaped bigotry of a former Los Angeles police detective, Mark Fuhrman, reverberated last week not only through the Los Angeles courtroom where O.J. Simpson is on trial on murder charges but also through the nation, convincing many Americans that the police still have a long way to go.

While many police officials have sought to portray Fuhrman as a lone rogue, race has also played a part in recent police corruption investigations in Philadelphia, New Orleans and New York, lending credence to the notion that the problem remains serious.

That is particularly disturbing to police officials and other law-enforcement experts, who maintain that police departments have made remarkable strides since the late 1960s.

Using tools like affirmative action programs, community policing techniques, civilian monitoring boards and diversity training, police departments have worked aggressively to see that racist attitudes do not germinate into racist behavior, police officials said in dozens of interviews last week.

But they also said it was unrealistic to expect that racism could be stamped out in law enforcement when it remained so prevalent in society. "It's an evolutionary process," said Dr. Martin Reiser, who served as chief psychologist for the Los Angeles Police Department for 25 years.

"It takes a long, long time, almost like getting genetic differences in new generations of people."

The problems of racism and corruption in law enforcement are complicated these days by the inability of the criminal justice system to stanch the flow of drugs and guns on the streets.

As Fuhrman's taped comments so graphically demonstrate, officers confront a powerful counterforce when they leave the classroom to pursue the dangerous mission that politicians like to characterize as the war on drugs.

"Once you get that war mentality, anything goes," said Joseph D. McNamara, a former police chief in San Jose, Calif., and Kansas City, Mo., who writes about criminal justice issues at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University. "But these are peace officers, not soldiers. And the police chiefs have to make sure they know that they're not an occupation army."

Hubert Williams, president of the Police Foundation, a nonprofit research and support group in Washington, said, "The perception that the criminal justice system does not work makes some police officers feel they have to take special measures to deal with the criminal element. That leads to the mind-set of a Mark Fuhrman."

Some minority officers say officers like Fuhrman are able to survive because white people want them to. "A great segment of the public thinks Mark Fuhrman is their hero, that he's protecting them against a black scourge," said Sgt. P.K. Gilstrap, a black police officer in Dallas.

Fuhrman, the detective who testified that he had discovered much of the key evidence against Simpson, used the word "nigger" 41 times in taped conversations with a professor who interviewed him as part of her research for a screenplay.

He also spoke repeatedly about beating crime suspects and disregarding constitutional requirements for collecting evidence.

Dr. Gayle Fisher Stewart, project manager for training at the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives, said she had been struck by Fuhrman's assertion to the professor, Laura Hart McKinny, that police officers did not need probable cause to search suspects because "you're God."

"We have forgotten that our right to enforce the law comes from the people, and a lot of time police officers confuse the fact that the law is not theirs," Dr. Stewart said.

In many cities, criminal justice experts credit police chiefs with trying earnestly to address issues of race and excessive force. The chiefs and their bosses, the mayors, have great incentives to do so because many cities have large proportions of minority voters and because city budgets can be strained by civil rights lawsuits.

The resistance to change, many criminologists say, is found at lower rungs of the police hierarchy, where officers spend more time on the streets and where careers are often protected by civil service rules and strong unions.

"It's this bureaucracy and this culture that's protective of those who abuse minority citizens," Williams said. "It's a culture of officers who are bonded together because the life of one depends on the other."

That police culture is so strong that it often infects minority officers as well, several police officials said.

"I've worked in eight forces, and sometimes the blacks and Hispanics are worse than the whites," said the Charleston, S.C., police chief, Reuben M. Greenberg, who is black.

Most police forces now have policies that strictly prohibit racist language or behavior, under threat of suspension, or termination if the behavior persists. Sixty-five cities have civilian review boards that enforce rules against racism and excessive force, up from 20 in 1985.

A study for the Police Foundation found that blacks filed 42 percent of the complaints about excessive use of force in 731 city departments in 1991, a year when they made up 21 percent of the population in those cities.

Most forces also have special classes for both recruits and veterans that teach about cultural differences in their communities. "We try to get them to think about their cultural baggage," Dr. Stewart said.

In recent years, police departments in most large cities, often spurred by court orders and consent decrees, have increased the percentages of black and Hispanic officers in their ranks and in positions of authority. But few of the 10 largest police departments have minorities in uniform in the same proportions that minorities make up in their communities.

Interestingly, Los Angeles is one that does. Blacks made up 14 percent of the population and the Police Department in 1992. The department was only 9 percent black in 1983, a study for the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics found. But in New York, where 29 percent of the population is black, only 11 percent of the Police Department was black in 1992, up from 10 percent in 1983, the study said.

Many leading black law-enforcement officials said the integration of police forces has not been enough.

Dr. Lee P. Brown, who served as police chief in Atlanta, Houston and New York before becoming President Clinton's drug policy chief, said police leaders had to "change the culture of law enforcement" by emphasizing that it is as important for officers to protect individual rights as to make arrests and that their job is "to help and not hurt."

"Traditionally, we reward police officers for the big arrest, for the shootout," Brown said. "We need to also reward them for being a part of the community."

That community may be suspicious for a while, thanks to the sins of Fuhrman and of police departments in Philadelphia, New York and New Orleans.

In Philadelphia, officers have pleaded guilty to planting drug evidence, stealing money and falsifying arrest reports. In New York, the 30th Precinct in Harlem and 48th Precinct in the Bronx have been rife with corruption. In New Orleans, a police officer has been charged with murdering three people, including another officer, and a second officer is a suspect in a string of killings.

Criminal justice experts worry that black jurors will give less credence to police officers who testify in trials and that black residents will be less willing to report crimes.

Man jumps 50ft. to save his fiancee's dog

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — Johnny Johnson Jr. didn't even stop to think before taking a 50-foot dive off a bridge to save his fiancee's dog.

"Animals are like your children. I just flipped off my flip-flops and dove in," he said.

He and Lisha Lee stopped their car on the James River Bridge on Saturday while the span opened to let a boat pass, then got out with her 5-year-old miniature collie, Cosmo, to look over the side.

Cosmo tried to jump up on the railing, but sailed right over.

Johnson paddled over to the dog but had to release Cosmo after a few minutes: "He was pushing me under trying to get on my head."

The two floated downstream for about 15 minutes before a passing boat fished them up, Ms. Lee said.

Man, woman and pooch were reunited at a nearby pier. Ms. Lee, who plans to marry Johnson next year, said she wished she could have thanked the people who pulled the bedraggled pair from the river.

"It could have been the most tragic day of my life," she said.

Honorary pallbearers will be John Green, Chris Whigham, Jim Hansen, Vicente Villarreal Jr., Bobby Stillwell and Gary Stillwell.

Texas juries awarding less in damages

DALLAS (AP) — There's at least one thing plaintiffs lawyers and defense attorneys agree upon: Texas jury awards aren't what they used to be.

The state's reputation — deserved or not — for outlandish awards in lawsuits appears to be suffering a backlash in some jury rooms.

This summer, jurors hearing a case where a woman was sued over a 1991 Dallas traffic accident tried to award her damages because it considered the lawsuit frivolous.

In late June, a jury found Occidental Chemical Corp. grossly negligent for releasing potentially toxic irritants into the air in Robstown near Corpus Christi. But the first 12 of almost 8,600 people who sued didn't get the $120 million they were seeking. Instead, jurors said seven plaintiffs should get nothing and gave five others only $300 to $1,000 in actual damages.

Rather than let that same panel reconvene to consider punitive damages, the two sides settled everything — about 15 separate cases — for $65.7 million. That's far below some predictions, given the number of plaintiffs.

Last year, Texas plaintiffs won 42 percent of the time, compared with 46 percent in 1991, according to Jury Verdict Research, a Pennsylvania-based legal data firm. Across the nation in 1994, plaintiffs won 55 percent of the time, about the same as in 1991.

'Tight now we are on a conservative bent, and there is nothing we can do about it.'

— Pat Maloney jr. attorney at law.

Meanwhile, the median compensatory award last year fell 36 percent to $31,736 from its 1991 level. Nationally, they rose slightly to $57,250.

"A new era is here," said Houston attorney Morton L. Susman, who successfully defended a complex insurance fraud case in Maverick County last month. He said his victory was the first in memory for a corporation there and that it illustrates "a new way of thinking that is fair and good."

Attorney Pat Maloney Jr., who filed the Maverick County lawsuit, senses a change across Texas.

"Right now we're on a conservative bent and there's nothing we can do about it," Maloney said.

"The public has bought the message" that there are too many lawsuits, he said.

While defendants can't suddenly expect to skate away free and a jury tomorrow could produce a new megaverdict, Texas lawyers and those tracking legal statistics said civil juries seem to be siding with defendants more and giving away less in damages than a few years ago.

Rising political conservatism and an extended business-led publicity drive against lawsuits and lawyers are cited as the reasons.

In Harris County, where campaigns against personal injury suits and lawyers have been waged by ads, billboards and other means, personal injury lawyers won about 44 percent of their cases, down from 57 percent in 1991, according to Jury Verdict Research. The median compensatory damages in victories also were down — $26,415 compared with $47,500 in 1991.

Preliminary data suggest 1995 awards are running even lower.

"As soon as people start to think money is coming out of their own pockets in insurance premiums or the price of products, it preys on their minds," said Brian Shenker, editorial director of Jury Verdict Research.

While some worry that frequent criticism of could make potential jurors overly suspicious of the system, no one suggests defendants or anti-lawsuit groups should be prohibited from informing the public about their views.

Even some plaintiffs' attorneys are a bit philosophical about the trend.

DEAR ABBY

Little help from friends helps ease woman's recovery after surgery

DEAR ABBY: You recently printed a letter from a woman signed "Wiped Out," whose husband was now home after a four-month hospital stay. She said she was annoyed by people who say, "If there's anything I can do for you, please let me know." (She felt that they should have offered specific services.)

Van Buren

Here's how I handled that situation: After my surgery, I was home alone, weak and unable to drive. Many friends told me, "If there's anything I can do for you, please let me know."

I thanked them all, recorded their names and telephone numbers in my little black book, and when I needed something, I telephoned one of them.

One neighbor, bless her heart, left her dinner preparation, put her daughter in the car, and picked me up at the emergency room. Someone else had dropped me off on her way to a meeting. Another person drove me to my hair appointment, and I called someone else to pick me up when I was done. A dear lady went to the department store to buy a skid-proof bath mat for me, etc.

Each one was delighted at the chance to help me.

I suggest that "Wiped Out" tell her pastor that she needs volunteer housekeeping help for a while. A church circle might take her on as a project. — YOUR READER IN OMAHA

DEAR READER: I agree. It's a good idea to speak up if help is needed. Your technique of listing friends who had offered their services, then asking for one favor apiece, was wise; that way each person could help without feeling burdened. And your suggestion that she tell her pastor about her situation is well worth repeating.

DEAR ABBY: I have a beautiful, bright, 18-year-old niece who is starving herself. Last year, "Lila" got it into her head that she was fat, so she went on a starvation diet and lost a lot of weight. She won't say how much, but she looks like she just came out of a concentration camp.

A typical day's food for her is one piece of fruit and a couple of fat-free pretzels. She also exercises for two hours every day. Her parents (my brother and his wife) are not doing anything to help her. Her mom cries all the time and says, "I can't deal with this." Her father just makes threats, such as, "If you don't eat, you can't drive the car." Then he ends up giving her the car anyway.

My daughter, who is a year older than Lila, says all the kids at school keep asking why no one is doing anything for this girl. I have tried talking to Lila and her parents, but no one is listening to me.

How can we help her? I just can't stand by and watch my niece starve to death. — HER AUNT IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR AUNT: Your niece has a serious eating disorder called "anorexia nervosa." It's usually found in young women in their teens and early 20s and is characterized by a pathological fear of gaining weight (even though their weight is normal, they perceive themeselves as fat.) This leads to faulty eating patterns, malnutrition and excessive weight loss.

Lila needs to see a doctor immediately. For a free packet of information and referral to a therapist in your area, write to the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa (ANAD) at P.O. Box 7, Highland Park, Ill. 60035. Please enclose a long, business-sized, self-addressed, stamped (78 cents) envelope.

The hotline is (708) 831-3438. Please write again and let me know how your niece is doing.

Seals' southward migration worries scientists

By Joe Ungaro
Associated Press

HAMPTON BAYS, N.Y. — Melvin Moss cut the engine on his 55-foot commercial fishing boat when he saw what he thought was a black Labrador swim across the bow. It wasn't a dog, though. It was a seal.

That sighting 12 years ago was the first seal Moss had ever encountered in the waters he works off Long Island. Now, seals are so common that Moss sees them on a daily basis.

Seals are moving south. They have been migrating over the past few years through New England, New York, New Jersey and now as far south as the Carolinas.

The presence of the cuddly looking but wild carnivores in waters off some of the world's most populated shoreline has not created big problems yet. But scientists, conservationists, fishermen and government officials all worry about the potential impact on people, the fishing industry and the ecosystem.

"I'm very concerned," said Sam Sadove, a marine mammalogist who is research director of the Okeanos Research Institute, located in this village on Long Island's Shinnecock Bay.

"One hundred to 150 years ago, seals were numerous but the (human) population in the New York metropolitan area was much less. There was not a great risk for negative conflict," Sadove said.

"But we now have a wildlife species repopulating the same area in numbers that existed 150 years ago but you have millions more people."

Specifically, Sadove says he worries about seals biting humans and seals spreading such diseases as rabies to dogs.

Reasons offered for the southward migration of seals range from overpopulation waters to depletion of fish stocks on which they feed to a reduction in natural predators such as sharks.

Many of the seals seen in East Coast waters are harbor seals returning to areas where they were once common. Harbor seals now inhabit waters from Greenland in the summer to the Carolinas in the winter.

Ice seals — a class which includes hooded, harp and ring seals — have also increased over the last four or five years. And gray seals, which usually live north of Cape Cod, have occasionally been sighted off Long Island.

"We now have pupping on Long Island, which we didn't have in the past," Sadove said. "We might have historically, but not in the recent years."

The move south "may be a function of population growth," said Dean Wilkinson, national marine mammals' stranding coordinator with the National Marine Fisheries Service. "It used to be fairly unusual to get a hooded or harp seal stranding but we are seeing more and more every year."

Seals strand themselves because they are suffering from disease, exhaustion or injuries.

Wilkinson said harbor seal strandings have been recorded as far south as North Carolina, where there were about eight cases last year. Strandings used to be so rare that his department did not keep records on them.

Wilkinson credits the population growth to the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972. Prior to its passage, seals were regularly shot for bounties because they were competing with fisherman for the same fish.

Sadove gives partial credit to the end of baby seal clubbing. Until about seven years ago, between 200,000 to 400,000 baby harp seals where killed each year in Newfoundland and Labrador for their fur.

> 'One hundred to 150 years ago, seals were numerous but the (human) population ... was much less. There was not a great risk for negative conflict. '
> — Sam Sadove, marine mammalogist

Harp seals have not moved as far south as other varieties but they compete for the same fish and might push other species south.

"In theory, 200,000 more baby seals are getting a chance at reproducing that weren't a few years ago," Sadove said. "Because of age, sexual maturity, it takes a three to four years to show. That's one explanation."

Michael Sutton, vice president of the World Wildlife Fund, believes a more important reason is expansion of shark fishing over the last few years. Shark meat is sold, the skin makes good leather and the fins are very popular in Asia.

"Sharks are their principal predators," Sutton said. "A lot of us suspect it may be the removal of seal predators that is responsible for the increasing seal population."

The increase in seals can be compared to the burgeoning deer population in areas where their primary predators — wolves and bear — have been eliminated, Sutton said.

In addition, the overfishing of northern fisheries may have forced some seals south in search of food.

He is concerned that the increasing seal population will cause problems with fishermen, who are competing for the same fish.

"If the seal population continues to increase, you could easily run into problems with fishermen. We need to have the government ... take a look at how the fishing industry is affecting the seal population," Sutton said.

In fact, a federal task force has been authorized to study the interaction between seals and fish in the Gulf of Maine.

Another potential problem is with beachgoers. Seven people received minor bites from seals on Long Island beaches last year, Sadove said.

All seals spend most of their time in the water but "haul out" from time to time. Haul out sites are generally areas that are inaccessible or difficult for people to reach but convenient to a good fishing hole. However, in densely populated areas, remote sites may be hard to find.

Drive across America: Turbulent times hit voters from coast to coast

Editor's note: This is the second and final part of a 3,901-mile drive across America, talking to people about their hopes and fears at the cusp of a new campaign season.

By John King
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — These eight are special.

In turbulent economic times, they are among the finest Birmingham Southern College has to offer. And in turbulent political times, when many in their generation favor apathy over activism, they are eager to get to work — teaching, social work, some in politics.

Yet for all this idealism, something is sadly missing. They have no political heroes.

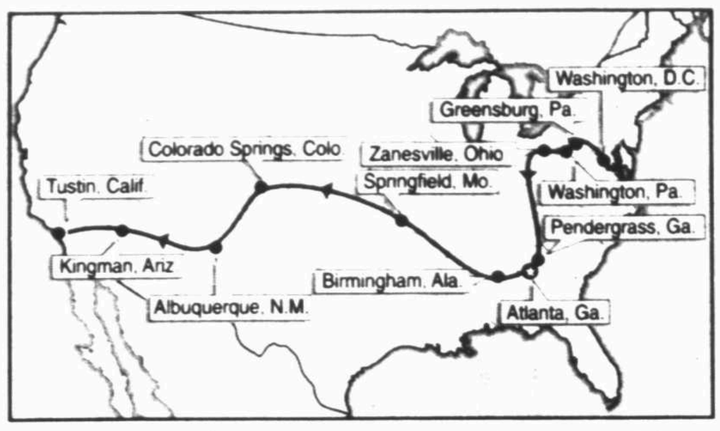

"I can't think of one," says Louisa Carlile, a political science and writing major. "I don't have any," says Jason Pinyan, a recent political science graduate. "It just seems foreign to me that a president could actually inspire people," says Michelle Bowen, a 1994 graduate training for social work.

In their lives, nothing much good has been said of government, either in Washington or the state capital in Montgomery that all eight consider corrupt and blind to the state's education crisis.

Their sense that the system is rigged against them extends far beyond politics.

"We are resented in the work force by middle-aged people already feeling the pressure of competition and downsizing," says Pinyan. "There is no way I am going to be where my parents are economically."

"And what about OUR kids?" says Bowen. "Are they going to make less and have less than we are? I think our country is in a very scary situation."

Abortion Politics

New resorts are changing the character of the Ozarks and the surrounding plateau, but more often than not, the towns are still anchored along the old railroad tracks.

This is conservative country, and a place where 28-year-old supermarket clerks like Dave Plemons can emerge as unlikely political powers.

His maps divide Springfield into six districts, with 3,300 homes marked by dots, phone numbers at hand. On a moment's notice, Plemons can saturate a community with literature, or a lawmaker with telephone calls.

In the old days, this might have been the local Democratic or Republican headquarters. Instead, it is the Springfield Right to Life Committee chapter; today's best organizers work around issues, and there is none more intense than abortion.

After years on the defensive, anti-abortion forces are making gains in the new Republican Congress. With little fanfare, this momentum has extended to the states: eight adopted new abortion restrictions this year.

Plemons is determined to make Missouri the ninth. In September, the legislature will try to override the governor's veto of a measure requiring women to receive counseling before an abortion.

His work highlights not only the evolution of political organizing but another critical transformation: a growing acceptance of incremental gains, such as ending federal funding of abortions or requiring parental notification.

"Many used to consider it immoral to accept anything short of outlawing abortion," says Mary Kay Culp, the Missouri Right to Life president. "My view is that you can't throw a touchdown pass if there is nobody in the end zone to catch it. So why not stick to a steady ground game and see if you can't win more fans over along the way?"

The Culture War

Ground Zero in America's culture war sits 170 miles west of the Kansas border, where the prairie collides breathtakingly with the jagged, snowcapped Rockies.

Colorado Springs is home to some 40 Christian right ministries and groups, including James Dobson's nationally potent Focus on the Family organization as well as Colorado for Family Values, the state group that spearheaded passage of a ban on laws protecting homosexuals from discrimination.

But it is home to Amy Devine, too, guaranteeing a two-way debate in the values war.

Three years ago, Devine founded Citizens Project to fight what she viewed as the Christian right's intolerance. The early battles taught a valuable lesson: "We were carrying our own stereotypes."

So Devine is trying to turn down the volume.

Over dinner.

A year ago, she got the idea for "Dialogue Dinners," suppers at which opposing players in the community's fights over gay rights, sex education, and other subjects meet in small groups and discuss their differences. About 100 people have participated, and some groups formed a year ago still meet.

"There is more common ground than people expected," says Devine.

She offers it as a model to liberals who Devine says share blame for the harsh tone of today's cultural and values skirmishes.

"I cringe when I see a lot of stuff coming out of people I support," Devine says. "We need to try to express our views in a reasoned way and in a non-inflammatory way."

Not that her approach always works.

Devine hasn't been able to convince Dobson to co-sponsor the dinners. To him, Colorado Springs is "the Gettysburg of the civil war of values."

Term Limits

A few skyscrapers compete with the adobe and Indian structures that give Albuquerque its tranquil character. And just as this historic city is not immune to growth, neither can it escape political unrest.

"People need to take back control of their government," says Zoe Ciscon. Putting that attitude to work, she helped pass a 1994 ballot initiative imposing two, four-year terms on the city council.

But the victory could turn to ashes after an appeals court ruled the measure unconstitutional.

"It just took the wind out of my lungs," Ciscon says. "We worked so hard and it was just so casual how the judges disregarded the will of the people. But we will not quit."

Neither will Alan Armijo.

"I have never believed in term limits," said Armijo, a second-term councilman. "The people have a chance to get rid of politicians in elections."

Armijo is undaunted by the 71 percent who backed term limits. "It is an important principle to defend."

Partners in Anxiety

Voting Republican is a big tradition here in the wealthy Pacific hills of Orange County, one Karin Reynolds used to proudly defy.

Not any more.

Over the past three years, she has switched from Democrat to independent to Republican, changes born of the challenges of raising three children while working as a physical therapist and watching her husband struggle to get a small business into the black.

She and her husband both have advanced degrees, yet voice the same economic strain — and resentment — of Randy Payton, the service station hand encountered 3,000 miles ago in rural Georgia.

Work, schools, soccer games, dinner, sleep, work. It is an exhausting cycle that, for all the talk about angry white males, has made Reynolds and working women like her perhaps the electorate's most volatile voters.

These emotions drove her away from Democrats who "think everybody deserves a free ride." Independent Ross Perot benefited in 1992; Republicans in 1994.

But the GOP isn't guaranteed her vote in 1996.

Or her husband's.

A "small-business fiscal conservative," Ed Reynolds owns an environmental engineering firm that finally got some traction last year.

No thanks, in his view, to the government.

"I keep losing bids to less qualified minority firms," he says. And when he finally landed one, Orange County filed for bankruptcy protection, leaving Reynolds in the lurch to the tune of $50,000.

The Roman Catholic family attends church regularly and says grace before meals. God is welcome in the Reynolds' home, but not in their politics. "The religious right scares me to death," Ed Reynolds says.

So he, too, is no predictable vote these days. Across America, the Reynoldses and many suburban people like them are the biggest commodity in a new politics, born of a reassessment of so much of what had become so accepted.

Economics. Race. Illegal immigration. Crime. Declining values. These often overlapping issues blend into powerful emotions, which in turn compete with the inherent optimism that so many people are determined not to surrender. The result is an anxious America, in unpredictable economic and political turmoil.

"We work our tails off to make it work," Karin Reynolds says, venting the frustration of a nation.

"We have to buy insurance. We have to pay taxes. And someone else gets health care and services and pays no taxes because they are in this country illegally. How is that fair?

Bookshelves a militia man's dream

KINGMAN, Ariz. (AP) — At Archie's Bunker, the bookshelves are a militia man's dream.

There's "Ammo Forever." A variety of manuals explaining how to operate military ordnance. And one last copy of "Unconventional Warfare Devices and Techniques."

But, Valerie Hilton laments, there aren't many buyers. "You see, we are still under surveillance."

The military surplus store, operated for the past eight months by Hilton and her husband, George, was a favorite of Michael Fortier, who has admitted he knew of plans to bomb the Oklahoma City federal building. The FBI believes chief bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh shopped at Archie's too.

As a result, suspected FBI surveillance is scaring away local militia types and other gun enthusiasts who once bought fatigues and other supplies at Archie's.

So Hilton is moving the store off the beaten track, hoping the locals will return.

"They don't want to be photographed coming in here," Hilton said. "People have become paranoid."

But by no means willing to give up their guns.

"People in Arizona are free thinkers," she said. "You are not going to take my rights away."

That sentiment runs deep among visitors to Steve Rusiecki's gun shop in nearby Bullhead City.

Its speciality: certifying people who want to carry concealed handguns, legal under a year-old Arizona law. Rusiecki has certified 800 people; more than 28,000 permits were issued statewide.

The bombing — and subsequent focus on militias — is a major reason momentum to repeal gun-control measures has stalled in Congress. But it hasn't hurt Rusiecki's business. "The politicians always overreact," he says. "Guns and independence are part of our tradition here."

Cuba experts question exiles' flotilla protests

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Cuban exiles called the failure of their latest seagoing anti-Castro demonstration a minor setback, while Cuba watchers questioned the effectiveness of the protest in which a boat sank and a man died.

"The sinking indicated the organizers have not focused on organization or the safety of their own members," said Jim Whisenand, publisher of Cuba Report, a newsletter focusing on economic and social issues on the communist island. "I think it will affect future participation."

The 25-boat flotilla set off from Key West on Saturday to stage a protest off the coast of Havana. The group turned back after the Sundown Two sank 10 miles out of Key West. The Coast Guard is investigating the accident.

The 47 people aboard were rescued by some of the other boats and Coast Guard ships and helicopters. A 59-year-old man had a heart attack and died soon after he was rescued.

"I feel sad," flotilla leader Ramon Saul Sanchez said Sunday. "It's a tragedy. However, I feel more committed to this non-violent movement today than ever before."

The next flotilla will be in New York City's East River when Cuban president Fidel Castro visits the United Nations on Oct. 22, Sanchez said.

The first flotilla ended with three people injured after two Cuban gunboats sideswiped the lead boat, which had crossed into Cuba's territorial waters.

Considering the outcome of both expeditions, some questioned the value of the flotillas.

"They should consider other alternatives that may be more effective — in the human and material costs — at reaching the same ends," said Juan Clark, a sociologist at Miami-Dade Community College. "The ultimate question is, 'What good did it do in Cuba?' Did it promote reaction in the population? Or did it bring more oppression for the dissidents?"

Some passengers complained that the Sundown Two had been taking on water in 6-foot seas well before the crew radioed the Coast Guard for help.

The boat's captain said Saturday that the boat was in fine shape before leaving the marina.

Miguel A. Sanguily of Miami, who along with two brothers pulled six Sundown Two passengers onto his boat, blamed organizers for the tragedy.

"We needed more organization when leaving," he said. "There were so many people. There were not enough boats."

But Rose and Rafael Palacios, passengers on one of the flotilla's largest boats, were inspired.

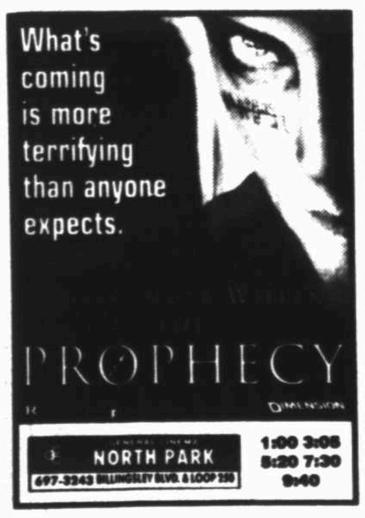

"It's sad and it was expensive, both morally, emotionally and in dollars," Mrs. Palacios said.

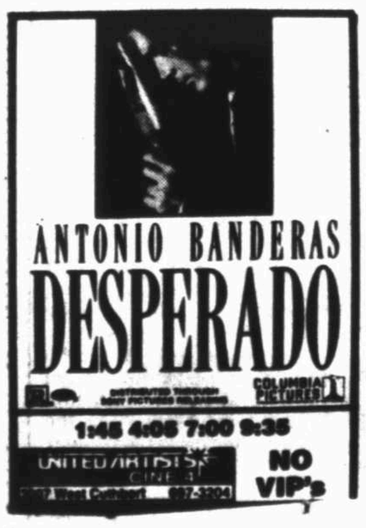

"But you sit down, you are sorry for the man and you go forward," said her husband.

Angels take Game 3, beat Wichita 4-3

Staff Report

WICHITA — Pedro Guerrero's bat was something the Midland Angels needed if they were going to advance to the Texas League championship series. Sunday they got it as Guerrero delivered the game-winning hit in Midland's 4-3 win over Wichita in Game 3 of the Western Division Playoffs.

Now, only three days after getting blown out 8-1 in the first game of the best-of-five series, the Angels to find themselves one win away from a Texas League Championship playoff with Eastern Division winner Shreveport. The Angels would play games one through three of that best-of-seven title series in Midland on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Guerrero, a World Series MVP with 22 years of professional baseball experience, broke an 0-for-10 slump in the playoffs with a line drive to right-center field to score shortstop Tim Harkrider in the top of the eighth inning. Wichita threatened to score in its last two at-bats, getting men as far as third base in the eighth and ninth innings. But Angel closer Mike Schooler got three Wranglers to groundout in the last frame as Midland took a two games to one lead in the series.

It was the second one-run win in a row for the Angels, who scored in the bottom of the ninth Saturday for a 4-3 win.

The Angels will pitch Geoff Edsell today at 6: 15 p.m. in Game 4 against the Wranglers' Jeff Granger, a former Texas A&M quarterback. Korey Keling and Kris Ralston, who three-hit Midland to win Game 1, are probable starters for Game 5 if it is necessary. Both games are in Wichita.

Wichita scored all three of its runs in the fourth inning to take a 3-2 lead. The Angels came back with their second solo home run of the game in the fifth when Ty Boykin led off with his eighth of the year to tie the game at 3-3. In the eighth, Harkrider got on base with his fourth hit of the game and Guerrero took reliever Allen McDill to a 3-2 count before getting his game-winner.

Wrangler pinch runner Ryan Long moved to third on Sal Fasano's base hit in the eighth. But Jeff Schmidt got Rod Myers to groundout to end the inning. Schooler, who now has a win and a save in the series, got into some trouble in the ninth when Mandy Romero led off the frame with a single and pinch runner Long moved to third on groundouts by Rueben Smiley and Lino Diaz. The Wranglers contested Diaz being called out on a close play at first on George Arias' throw.

Felix Martinez grounded out to second baseman Orlando Munoz to end the game.

The Angels took a 1-0 lead in the third when Ty Boykin

Houston makes it by expansion Jacksonville in season opener

By Paul Newberry
AP Sports Writer

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The wait wasn't worth it.

Jacksonville, which first sought an NFL team in 1979 when Bob Irsay decided to move the Colts out of Baltimore, finally had a team to call its own Sunday. But the Jaguars, even with a better talent pool to choose from because of free agency and the salary cap, showed they aren't going to be much different than past expansion teams.

Houston, the worst team in the NFL last season, ruined the Jaguars' coming-out party, scoring the game's only touchdown on its first possession and making it stand for a 10-3 victory.

After watching the Jaguars manage only 151 yards despite a quarterback change in the third quarter, the crowd of 72,363 must have wondered why it craved an NFL team for so many years.

"As disappointing as it is for everyone out in the stands, it's more disappointing for the team," said Steve Beuerlein, who was just 7 of 17 for 60 yards before he was replaced by Mark Brunell. "We felt if we went out and played well, we had a shot to win."

Instead, the Jaguars found they have a long way to go, especially on offense. Brunell opened up some holes with his scrambling, but it's not good when a quarterback ends up as the leading rusher with 36 yards. As for passing, Brunell was only 3 of 9 for 15 yards, including an interception in the final minute to seal the victory for the Oilers.

"It gets frustrating," said Jaguars defensive end Jeff Lageman, one of the players picked up through free agency. "I thought we did everything we could possibly do on defense except get turnovers. We've got no reason to hang our heads."

The Oilers will take any victory, even one over an expansion team. After all, Houston was 2-14 last year and endured a tumultuous preseason that included highly publicized talks about a possible move to Nashville, Tenn., and the cancellation of an exhibition game because of a poor playing surface.

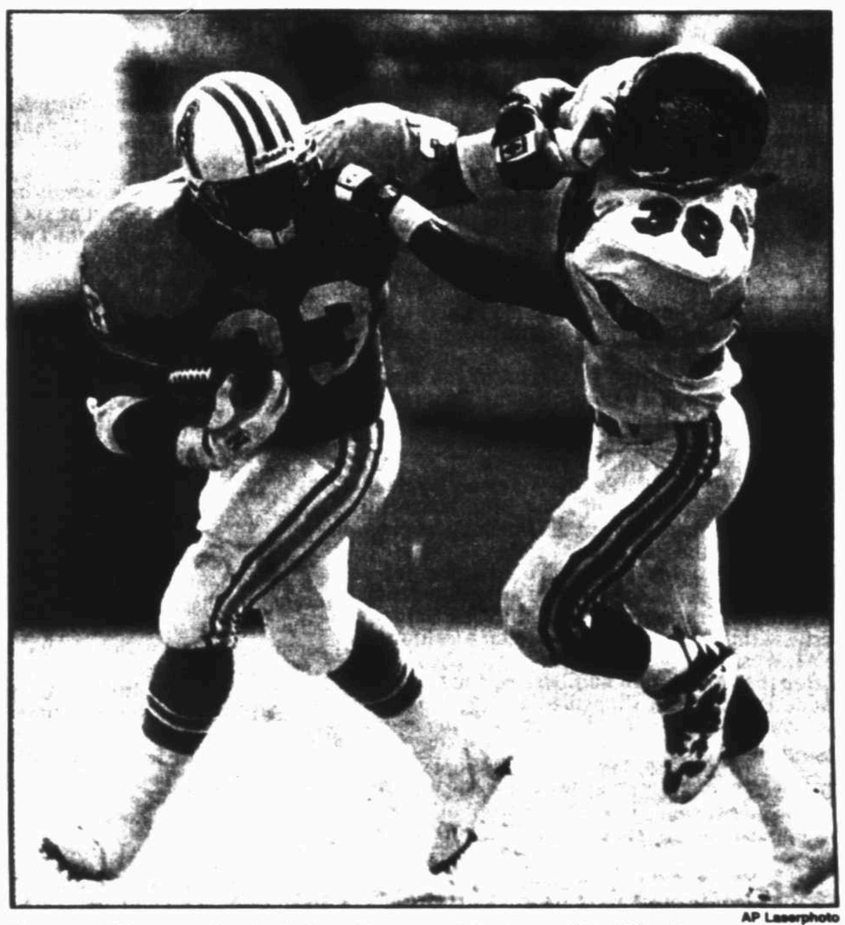

"In a lot of ways, this is our fourth preseason game," Houston coach Jeff Fisher said. "I don't mean any disrepect to Jacksonville, but this is our fourth game of the year."

Gary Brown rushed for 45 of his 101 yards on the only touchdown drive of the day, which was capped by a 4-yard pass from Chris Chandler to Haywood Jeffires 6: 43 into the game.

MIDLAND LEE VOLLEYBALL PREVIEW

Lee has new coach, new beginning

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

As the Midland Lee volleyball team began working for the District 4-5A season, the Lady Rebels found themselves in the same position as their crosstown rivals — starting over with a new coach after a down year.

That's not the only way Lady Rebels would love to imitate their rivals at Midland High. Making the playoffs in coach Carol McCann's first season — like the Lady Bulldogs did last year in coach Terri McColloch's first year — would be a perfect way to finish 1995.

"The new stuff, they've picked it up more quickly than I thought they would," said McCann. "There may be a few more glitches but we should have them worked out by Tuesday (today)."

The Lady Rebels, who finished fifth in district last year in what was to be the final of a four-year tenure by Anita Corder, host the Lady Bulldogs in the district opener Tuesday at the Lee gym at 7: 30 p.m.

Midland Lee went to the playoffs twice and stayed home twice during Corder's turn at the helm and McCann is expecting her team to continue to keep the Lady Rebel volleyball line going strong.

"They finished fifth last year," said McCann, who has led varsity teams at Lewisville and Abilene Cooper. "That's not going to happen this year."

The backbone of Midland Lee's run for the playoffs are seniors Kasey Wolters and Amber Willis, who as juniors started every game for Corder on a senior-dominated team.

"I can count on Amber all the way around," said McCann. "Backline, frontline, whatever I need she can deliver. She's my anchor. The same for Kasey. I never worry about anything that is coming to her at all. She's very positive. But they're definitely my anchors.

"When we opened the gym this summer for the players to work out on their own, Kasey and Amber were here all the time and they looked like they we're having fun," said McCann.

Willis is probably Lee's most powerful hitter at 5-foot-9. But don't let Wolters 5-6 frame fool you. She packs a whallop, too. As juniors, both contributed greatly to a team that was coming off two-straight playoff trips and had four seniors in the starting lineup.

Two others, seniors Ida Molina and Julie Seibold, were both on the varsity last year but saw less playing time than Wolters and Willis. But all four seniors (Lee's only seniors) say that having a new coach has actually made the players come together in a more team-like fashion.

Seibold admitted there was a loss

De Ferran takes 2nd at Molson Indy

■ Driver for Midland's Jim Hall Racing team gets best finish in Indy car action, losing by only 14.97 seconds.

The Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Midland's Jim Hall's Racing team got a shot in the arm Sunday. Its driver Gil de Ferran got a best-ever Indy car finish, placing second at the Vancouver Molson Indy behind Al Unser Jr..

Unser breathed life into his hopes of catching Jacques Villeneuve in the PPG Cup championship race, racing away with the title.

Villeneuve, who could have clinched the title with one race remaining by finishing sixth or better, had a frustrating afternoon that wound up with the 24-year-old point leader fading to 12th after late-race contact with fellow Canadian Scott Goodyear.

Meanwhile, Unser, the defending series and race champion, knew coming into the 16th of 17 races this season that the only way he could stay in the title hunt was to win. He passed Michael Andretti for the lead on a restart on lap 60 and went on to his third victory of the season and the 30th of his career, matching Andretti for the most victories among active drivers.

Sampras can not be beat at own game

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

NEW YORK — With a drumbeat of 42 aces and heavy groundstrokes echoing from one end of the court to the other, Pete Sampras survived an attack by a younger, bigger, stronger version of himself Sunday in the finest match of power tennis so far at the U.S. Open.

Sampras, who thumped 27 of those aces, saw his own image in 18-year-old Mark Philippoussis and barely avoided an upset with a 6-7 (7-5), 7-5, 7-5, 6-3 victory that took nearly three hours.

Steffi Graf and Gabriela Sabatini made quicker work of two heavily hyped teen-age girls for whom Grand Slam stardom is still a fuzzy dream.

As precocious as Chanda Rubin and Martina Hingis are, they have neither one big weapon nor the consistency yet to beat the top players in major tournaments.

Graf swept into the quarterfinals with a 6-2, 6-2 victory over 19-year-old Rubin, and Sabatini contented herself from the baseline, wearing down 14-year-old Hingis 6-2, 6-4.

Philippoussis, a 6-foot-4 Australian who shares Sampras' Greek ancestry, brought back memories of Sampras when he won the first of his two Open titles at 19 five years ago. It could be seen not only in Philippoussis' serves but in his leaping over-

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Winston Cup wizard Jeff Gordon finally tamed Darlington, coming back from an early spin to hold off Dale Earnhardt and Rusty Wallace in the Southern 500 on Sunday.

Gordon's Chevrolet Monte Carlo was four seconds up on the field, but had to survive a 10-lap sprint with Earnhardt and Wallace after the race's 12th caution flag.

Schmidt pitches first shutout as the Atlanta Braves defeat the Chicago Cubs 2-0

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA— Rookie Jason Schmidt pitched eight shutout innings in his first major league start Sunday as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Chicago Cubs 2-0.

Schmidt, pressed into duty because Kent Mercker had a sore back muscle, allowed six hits, struck out seven and walked five before Mark Wohlers came on to earn his 21st save.

The Braves ended a two-game losing skid and reduced their magic number to 12 for winning the NL East.

Ryan Klesko hit his 17th homer in the second inning, and Chipper Jones' sixth-inning sacrifice fly gave the Braves their other run.

Pirates 7, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Orlando Merced's three-run homer highlighted a five-run fourth inning that led the Pittsburgh Pirates over the Cincinnati Reds.

The Pirates batted around for the second time in two games to take three out of four in the series from the NL Central-leading Reds.

Dan Miceli retired the last five batters for his 19th save.

Rockies 5, Cardinals 4, 11 innings

ST. LOUIS — Joe Girardi's two-out single in the 11th gave Colorado a win over the St. Louis Cardinals, keeping the Rockies atop the NL West.

The winning rally started with a leadoff single by Andres Galarraga off reliever Jeff Parrett (4-4). With runners and first and second, Girardi lined a single to left to score Galarraga.

Darren Holmes (6-1) pitched a scoreless 10th for the victory, and Bruce Ruffin retired the Cardinals in their 11th to earn his ninth save.

Marlins 8, Astros 7, 11 innings

HOUSTON — Pitcher Craig McMurtry, forced to bat when Houston ran out of hitters, struck out with the tying run on third base in the 11th inning, and the Astros lost to the Florida Marlins.

The loss dropped the Astros one-half game behind Los Angeles in the wild-card race.

Quilvio Veras tripled off Jim Dougherty (8-4) to start the Florida 11th. Chuck Carr singled and Jeff Conine hit an RBI single.

■ NL Roundup

McMurtry relieved with the bases loaded and Greg Colbrunn hit a sacrifice fly.

In the bottom of the inning, John Cangelosi drew a leadoff walk from Aaron Small (1-0) and Yorkis Perez relieved. Cangelosi stole second, Derrick May walked and, after Mark Gardner relieved, James Mouton sacrificed the runners into scoring position.

Dodgers 6, Expos 3

LOS ANGELES — Eric Karros put Los Angeles ahead with his 26th home run and Ramon Martinez made it stand up, leading the Dodgers over the Montreal Expos.

Martinez (14-7), who gave up a home run to Tony Tarasco to start the game, won his third straight decision.

Martinez allowed three runs and four hits in seven innings, striking out six and retiring 13 of his last 14 batters. Todd Worrell pitched the ninth for his 26th save, and first since blowing two chances.

Karros hit a two-run homer for a 4-3 lead against Jeff Fassero (13-11).

Phillies 3, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Paul Quantrill recorded his first win in more than a month and Gregg Jefferies drove in two runs to lead the Philadelphia Phillies over the San Diego Padres.

Quantrill (10-9) allowed two runs on nine hits in seven-plus innings to pick up his first win since July 26. Quantrill, who struck out three and walked three, had lost his last three decisions.

Mets 11, Giants 6

SAN FRANCISCO — Carl Everett drove in three runs and Chris Jones two as the New York Mets stopped a three-game losing streak by beating the San Francisco Giants.

With the victory, the Mets avoided their first series sweep by the Giants since Aug. 23-25, 1991.

The Mets took the lead for good in the seventh when Ryan Thompson's grounder bounced past Giants reliever Carlos Valdez (0-1), scoring Jones.

Wakefield gets another win as Boston wins 8-1

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — The AL West-leading California Angels lost their ninth straight game Sunday as Tim Wakefield pitched the Boston Red Sox to an 8-1 victory.

California has its longest losing skid since it dropped 10 in a row in July 1993. The Angels' lead over Seattle was cut to 5 1/2 games.

Wakefield (15-3) won for the first time in four starts, allowing four hits and one run in eight innings. The knuckleballer lowered his league-leading ERA to 2.44.

Chuck Finley (13-10) gave up six runs and six hits in 3 2-3 innings.

Athletics 10, Yankees 9

NEW YORK — Tony Fernandez hit for the cycle for the Yankees, but Rickey Henderson's home run in the 10th inning gave the Oakland Athletics a victory that stopped New York's five-game winning streak.

Fernandez became the 10th Yankees player to hit for the cycle and first since Bobby Murcer on Aug. 29, 1972.

Fernandez scored the tying run in the ninth on Wade Boggs' sacrifice fly off Dennis Eckersley (4-4). Henderson led off the 10th with a home run against John Wetteland (1-5).

Mariners 9, Orioles 6

BALTIMORE — The Seattle Mariners applauded Cal Ripken for playing in his 2,128th consecutive game, then went out and put the finishing touches on a victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Rich Amaral hit a three-run homer for the Mariners, who rebounded from a three-run deficit to win their seventh game in the last 10. The victory got Seattle within 5 1/2 games of first-place California in the AL West.

After the 10-foot high numbers on the warehouse outside the stadium flipped to 2-1-2-8, the Orioles shortstop recognized the cheers by waving and nodding his head.

Indians 9, Tigers 8, 10 innings

DETROIT — Jose Mesa blew his second save in 10 days against Detroit, but Omar Vizquel's RBI single in the 10th inning lifted the Cleveland Indians over the Tigers.

Mesa (3-0) relieved with one out in the ninth with the bases loaded and an 8-4 lead but immediately surrendered a grand slam to Ron Tingley, tying the game.

■ AL Roundup

Albert Belle hit his major league-leading 35th homer and added a two-run double for Cleveland. Belle drove in three runs and gave him 101 RBIs, his fourth 100-RBI year.

Brewers 7, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Pinch-hitter Matt Mieske's grand slam in the seventh inning stopped the Milwaukee Brewers' skid at six games and gave them a win over the Minnesota Twins.

Mieske hit Milwaukee's ninth grand slam this season. It also ties the San Diego Padres for the most in the majors this season.

Rob Dibble (1-2) was the winner and Mike Fetters got his 21st save.

Royals 8, Rangers 5

ARLINGTON, Texas — Gary Gaetti's 400-feet drive to center popped out of Otis Nixon's glove and fell over the center field fence for a three-run homer in the eighth inning Sunday night, giving Kansas City a victory over Texas.

The victory was the ninth in 11 games for Kansas City, including five of seven against the Rangers, and kept the Royals percentage points atop the AL wild card race. Texas, which has lost eight of 10, dropped a game behind Kansas City and Seattle.

Gregg Olson (2-1), Kansas City's third pitcher, got the victory after surviving a harrowing seventh inning, his only action. Jeff Montgomery pitched two innings for his 26th save.

White Sox 6, Blue Jays 5

CHICAGO — Robin Ventura and Lyle Mouton hit back-to-back home runs Sunday night to lead the Chicago White Sox to their fifth straight win, 6-5 over the slumping Toronto Blue Jays.

Ventura also hit an RBI single and Ozzie Guillen added his first home run since June 23, 1994 for the White Sox heads, his crushing forehands and backhands, his killer volleys and fearless play.

When Philippoussis slammed a second-serve ace into the corner to take the tiebreaker in the first set, a roar rumbled through the packed stadium at the prospect of an upset by a young player the fans didn't know. They know him now and will not soon forget him.

But Sampras didn't win his U.S. Open and Wimbledon titles by fading easily, and he bore down to break Philippoussis for the first time in the tournament for a 3-1 lead in the second set. With that little crack into Philippoussis' game, Sampras charged ahead to lead 4-1.

Philippoussis, however, handed Sampras his first break of the tournament at 4-3 to put the set back on serve. Sampras shrugged off one of his 14 double-faults to hold to 6-5, then took the set when he broke Philippoussis with a backhand return that the Aussie netted.

Sampras pumped his fist twice at the end of that set and thought he was on a roll when he broke Philippoussis twice again for a 4-0, 40-love lead in the third set. That's when Sampras surprised himself and everyone else, double-faulting six times in a nine-point stretch to let Philippoussis back in the match.

But the set wasn't over until Sampras broke him at 15-40 with a crisp backhand that Philippoussis netted off a half-volley as early evening shadows covered the court.

Sampras didn't so much wear down Philippoussis in the fourth set as he beat him with a greater variety of shots, spins and angles that showed his experience.

Sampras next plays another big server in Todd Martin in the fourth round.

Graf advanced to the quarters, accepting the gift of seven double-faults by Rubin in the first set, two on break points. Graf, who dropped only one set in the first round, served with authority and closed out the first set with a 105 mph serve.

Graf next plays Amy Frazier, who followed up her upset of No. 6 Mary Pierce by beating No. 12 Natasha Zvereva 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

Sabatini stuck to the baseline, feeding soft balls at Hingis. A counter-puncher, Hingis had thrived off the faster shots of her earlier opponents. Against Sabatini, Hingis had to provide the pace and couldn't do it.

In other men's third-round matches, No. 3 Thomas Muster beat Francisco Clavet 0-6, 6-4, 6-3, 7-5; No. 8 Michael Stich defeated Scott Draper 6-3, 6-0, 6-3; No. 14 Jim Courier downed Kenneth Carlsen 6-3, 6-4, 6-2; and No. 15 Todd Martin beat Mauricio Hadad 6-2, 6-1, 6-4.

when McCann replaced Corder.

"It changed a lot, a lot of the things that Coach Corder used to do, things that were sort of like traditions, but I like her (McCann) a lot," said Seibold.

Wolters added, "But the positive part is that it was good experience for us to have a new coach and a new system. Nothing is the same and that kind of makes the whole team grow together."

The experience of the four seniors should be a positive, they said.

"I think it has made a difference," said Willis. "And we know that what we want is to go farther than we did last year."

Molina said, "It's helped. By watching them last year, it made us want to get in there and show what we have learned."

McCann will certainly rely on her two returning starters as well as Seibold and Molina, who have earned their position in the starting lineup.

"Ida is so calm, so steady," said McCann. "There's not much that gets her frustrated."

Seibold probably has the most difficult task on the team — filling the shoes of two-year all-district setter Roseann Sullivan.

"When I saw them (Lady Rebels) play last year, I remembered Sullivan," said McCann. "But Julie is filling them (shoes) and doing it well. She's our cheerleader and she's very positive. She doesn't seem to doubt what she is capable of doing."

Seibold said, "I was scared of filling in for Roseann but it hasn't been as bad as I thought because we have a new coach and she doesn't know to compare her to me. It's been a lot easier."

Filling up the remaining two starting positions are three newcomers: juniors Tracey Ryan, Allison Bradshaw and La Saundra Christian.

Ryan, who McCann said was "born to play on the back row" will probably rotate with Bradshaw in one of the positions — Ryan playing the back and 5-10 Bradshaw substituting in when Ryan rotates to the front row.

The other position goes to 5-6 Christian, who McCann says despite her size and inexperience, can "put dents in the floor" when she's hitting.

The rest of the roster is made up of juniors LaToya Strambler, Michelle Primeaux, Vanessa Mosley, Aleena Smith and Amanda Smart. Strambler was on the Lee track team last year while Primeaux played for the state semifinalist Lady Rebel softball team.

"These kids don't come into the game cold just because they're on the bench," said McCann. "They yell and scream on the sidelines and get into the game so they're ready when they get the call."

MONEY WATCH

The shirt off your back

If your company has T-shirts or baseball caps with the corporate logo, don't give them just to customers and suppliers — make sure your employees get them, too. That's the suggestion of Entrepreneur magazine, which calls the freebies a morale booster for workers. "Giving employees free company-logo T-shirts and hats shows them they're appreciated," the magazine says in its September issue. The shirts and hats are also team builders, and the free advertising the company gets when employees wear them to the supermarket or discount store doesn't hurt.

Happy birthday

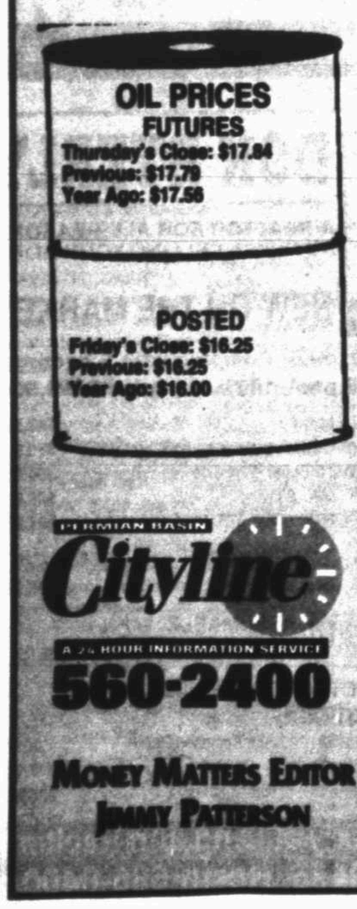

This year is the 100th anniversary of the coupon, according to the Promotion Marketing Association of America, which offers a few factoids about the little paper darlings that millions of shoppers clip and redeem each week. The PMAA says 6.2 billion coupons were redeemed last year, more than three times the number redeemed in 1974. But the number redeemed was just a fraction of the 310 billion coupons distributed via newspapers, mailings and other methods. Seventy-one percent of Americans use coupons on a regular basis. And they're most popular in Boston, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Syracuse, N.Y. The most popular item bought with coupons is cereal.

The work ethic

Americans are almost evenly split over which is more important, work or leisure time, says the polling firm Roper Starch. In a survey, Roper Starch found that 39 percent of Americans believe work is more important, while 37 percent said leisure was. Another 20 percent said both are about equal in importance, while 4 percent said they didn't know which was more important.

Tired, obsessed

Many people who took a vacation this summer didn't leave the office completely behind, finds a survey commissioned by Steelcase Inc., the office furniture maker. Twenty-three percent of the working people polled did some kind of job-related activity while they were away. Of those people, 40 percent did some work-related reading, and 34 percent checked in with the office. Another 29 percent did paperwork, and 27 percent handled problems at the office and client matters. And 18 percent, looking to stay competitive when they get back to work, used vacation time to learn a new skill.

Fund splits no cause for commotion

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — If you owned 250 shares of the Stein Roe & Farnham Capital Opportunities Fund at the close of business on Friday, Aug. 25, now you have 500.

But don't let that news, which arises from a 2-for-1 split announced by the fund's managers in Chicago, excite you unduly.

In practical terms, its impact is zero. It makes nobody either richer or poorer, requires no action on the part of any investor, brings no tax liability or tax saving, and has no effect whatever on the investment merits of Capital Opportunities.

The same statements hold for any other fund that decides on a share split — which could well become a fairly common occurrence after the strong gains in the stock market this year.

So why bother? Well, Stein Roe & Farnham had some perfectly sensible reasons from a marketing, administrative and, well, psychological point of view.

"Capital Opportunities Fund's share price has reached a level roughly double the average for equity mutual funds," explained Timothy Armour, president of the 18-member SteinRoe Mutual Funds family, in a press release.

"By splitting, we'll bring the price more in line with that average, and into a range that facilitates comparison with other funds and is more in line with investors' expectations."

When any company splits its stock, it effectively cuts its ownership interests into smaller slices without changing anything about the size, shape or ingredients of the pie itself.

For each share owned at, say, $50 apiece, investors get two worth $25 apiece — or three at $16.666 apiece, or four at $12.50 apiece, depending on the degree of the split. The aggregate $50 investment is still worth $50, pending the next market development that pushes the price up or down.

DIFFERENT LIVES, DIFFERENT CHALLENGES

Women from eight countries talk about juggling work, family

By The Associated Press

In Atlanta, Gwendolyn Manto awakens at 5:30 to spend time with her three children before leaving for work as an executive at three department store chains. With relatives living nearby and enough money for an au pair, Manto is able to have a family and a successful career.

In many other countries, women are not as fortunate. While they comprise half the work force and half the educated public, they still struggle for any but the lowest-paying jobs. They still struggle against prejudice, for salaries comparable to working men and for adequate child care.

In early September, women from around the world will assemble in Beijing to compare their everyday realities at work and home, and discuss problems they confront in the areas of health, education and human rights.

The United Nations conference on women is to be held in the Chinese capital Sept. 4-15.

In advance of the conference, The Associated Press asked a random sampling of women about their lives in four nations: the United States, Russia, Mexico and South Africa.

The women were asked who does the housework and looks after the children in their families? Who makes the important family decisions? They were asked to compare their situations with those of other working women in their countries.

We also asked whether they felt they had choices about their families and jobs and about the image of the working woman in their nations.

UNITED STATES

In Atlanta, Gwendolyn Manto, 40, a senior vice president at the department stores Rich's, Lazarus and Goldsmith's, is married with three children.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: We share the responsibility and have a woman come in weekly to do the heavy cleaning. An au pair looks after the children. Still, although men participate more than they used to, women still have the ultimate responsibility for their children.

FAMILY DECISIONS: All major decisions are made jointly.

WOMEN IN THE UNITED STATES: I probably have a premium situation. I'm a top executive and have a high income, which affords me better child care, and a very supportive husband. Combined with that, my family lives here. That's something many people in the U.S. are missing, the extended family network to help them in the care of their children.

CHOICES: I have choices, but my situation is a little different. I was married for 10 years before I had children and my energy went toward my career. I had grown in my position from a sales girl earning $3.65 an hour and took a lot of pride in what I was able to accomplish. When I finally had children I didn't want to leave work. Still, they were new on the scene and I had to carve out time. I don't feel, however, like I made a conscious decision to cut back on work, but I changed how I worked. I became a strong time manager, a better delegator and I cut out lunches. That meant I could leave work in time to be with them. That involved bringing home work.

IMAGE: I think working women are viewed positively. It's become an integral part of how families operate and economically it's almost impossible to operate without both incomes. I personally think I am treated equally but women have to perform at work at a higher level than men in order to be successful.

RUSSIA

In Moscow, Irina Yurna, 38, works in three blue-collar jobs to try to make ends meet. She and her husband have an 8-year-old daughter and live in an apartment in the Russian capital.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: When (my daughter) was little, of course I did it all. It's not seen as proper for men to do that. I started working when she was 2, and for a little while we put her in a kindergarten. Now I try to find baby sitters, but it's very hard. (The division of housework is) about 50-50, because I don't have time to do it all. But of course, (my husband) thinks he's doing more than that.

WOMEN IN RUSSIA: I'm atypical in that my husband actually makes an effort to help. It's not usually acceptable for a man to do any work around the house. Russian women in general support this idea too. I think it's compensation for our lack of power outside the house. We take revenge inside the home, by controlling everything there.

It's also unusual that we don't have a grandmother living with us to help with child care. That's the only way most of our women survive.

CHOICES: I feel I have choices in my life. I feel very lucky. But of course I don't have the choice not to work. That has never been a choice.

IMAGE: Under socialism, we were just other comrades, and we all had to work to create this socialist dream. We weren't distinguished as working women or working mothers. After perestroika, some tried to return to the old patriarchal model, with women staying in the home. But of course that's only in theory, because in reality most families simply can't afford to free themselves that way. I would say Russian women always have and always will work hard. I see those "nouveau riche" Russian women whose husbands won't let them work. They don't know what to do with themselves, and they get depressed.

SOUTH AFRICA

In Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg, Angeline Leshope, 59 and the mother of four grown children, earns the equivalent of about $140 a month as a laundromat attendant. Such unskilled, low-paying service jobs are typical for South African black women — they clean houses, raise babies, wash dishes at restaurants, sell vegetables on the street corners.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: I do, no one else. You know, always the woman does more than the man. It's our culture, we're used to it. You've got to see to the children, have got to see they get clothes, that they have money for school.

FAMILY DECISIONS: My husband and I share decision-making.

WOMEN IN SOUTH AFRICA: When we moan, it's about the same things. Everyone complains about the Lower interest rates give homeowners new chance

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Happy news for any property owner still locked into an old, high-interest mortgage: Declining interest rates have opened the door to refinancing once again.

As long-term rates in the bond market have dropped by more than 1.5 percentage points since the start of the year, rates on fixed 30-year mortgages have fallen in most major markets to the 7.5 percent to 8 percent range.

On 15-year fixed loans, many lenders are now offering rates of between 7 percent and 7.5 percent.

That's not quite as low as mortgage rates got in 1993, when a mighty wave of home-loan refinancings crested before the Federal Reserve Board began a year-long campaign of credit-tightening in 1994.

Also, because many old high-rate loans were liquidated in '93, financial analysts don't expect nearly as many refinancings this time around.

Still, the current market offers a second opportunity for anyone who could benefit from refinancing, but for one reason or another hasn't acted so far.

"It's not every day you get a second chance at a good deal you missed the first time around," says the Institute of Certified Financial Planners, a professional association based in Denver. "But that is what is happening with the refinancing of home mortgages."

The decision to refinance usually requires crunching some numbers, simply to determine whether the benefits you can gain are worth the costs of switching to a new loan.

men. And about money — money is the most important thing.

CHOICES: What choices? You couldn't live without working. You know, most of the people now, they haven't got money. People are so poor now, they've got no work, everybody is moaning about jobs.

IMAGE: Working women are respected. I get respect, anyway.

CHINA

In Beijing, Tang Kai, 41, a maid, is married with one 14-year-old child.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: We both do the housework. If (my husband) gets home from work early, he makes dinner. He also does the laundry and such, everything. If I get home early, I do it. There's no system of "you do this, I do that."

As for looking after the child, when she was little, she went to nursery school. Because of my work, I couldn't get home for lunch, so most of the time he was responsible for making lunch and looking after her.

FAMILY DECISIONS: Everything is discussed. If I'm right, then we do it my way. If he's right, then we do it his way. (If we each think we're right) then we try to find a reasonable solution.

I think that China has come a long way in this regard. In the past, in a feudal society, this would have been impossible. At that time, the man always made the decision. I think that today, (all men) are like (my husband).

WOMEN IN CHINA: I think everyone's situation is like mine. If a woman has family matters to attend to, her work unit will make allowances for her. The situation is improving all the time in China. For instance, when we have children we get maternity leave but we won't lose our jobs. We can have a half-year or a three-month maternity leave, with pay. Now, men can also get leave to look after their wives.

CHOICES: Everything is up to the individual. For instance, if you want to leave your parents and set up your own happy little family, you can get married. It's not like the family forces you and says that when a daughter grows up, she has to get married. Whether you have children after you get married, that's up to each person as well.

In China, our education teaches us that men and women are equal. If you're able to, then you should work. It's not that I feel pressured to work. At home, we share the housework, so I have the time to go and work.

IMAGE: The status of women in China, I think, is pretty high.

AP Laserphoto

Malu Santora, with daughter Emma, is a restaurant promoter in Mexico City. Santora says working mothers face the challenge of being women in a male-dominated society.

So the image is a rather lofty one. Today, a lot of the leaders in the central government are women. And the same is true in business. There doesn't seem to be any difference between men and women.

JAPAN

In Tokyo, Mayumi Ito, 44, works for a major Japanese trading firm and is married with three children.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: My mother-in-law does the housework, while she and her husband, who live with us, take care of the children from Monday to Friday. I take over on weekends. When my husband, who works for a subway company, gets 1 1/2 days off every four working days, he does the housework and takes care of the kids.

I don't usually eat at home. On a typical weekday, my husband and I meet after work and have dinner or a drink on our way home. The first thing I do when I get home from work is to take a bath, and then spend couple of hours with my children before sending them to bed.

FAMILY DECISIONS: Usually my husband and I discuss things and make decisions together. Maybe my husband makes the decision 60 percent of the time.

WOMEN IN JAPAN: I think I'm very fortunate considering how difficult it could be to be a working mother in Japan. I have an understanding husband and great support from his parents. In Japan, the majority of people still think women should do all the housework even though they work, but my husband is different.

The biggest setback for working mothers in this country is a lack of child care facilities that can offer extensive services, including medical care. Every time our children get sick we have to rush home in the middle of our work. The situation not only makes us nervous, it's inconvenient for our colleagues and gives employers an excuse not to give us responsible tasks!

CHOICES: No. It's pretty unrealistic to change jobs at my age. It is impossible to find a company that is willing to hire a woman of my age. If a different job would give me to spend more with my family, I wouldn't want to do less responsible work than I am given now.

IMAGE: My typical image of the working woman is a cheerful, enthusiastic professional. But women are still seen as assistants for male colleagues. It is really unfair that our salary is substantially lower than our male counterparts just because we are women. I really want to make clear this one thing. We are working just as hard as the men, getting the same job done. Why should our salaries be lower?

MEXICO

In Mexico City, Malu Santora, 35, works in public relations, is divorced with an 8-year-old daughter.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: We have a maid who comes in a few times (a week) to help with the housework and take care of my child when I can't or she is not in school.

FAMILY DECISIONS: Me, alone. When I was married we shared the decisions. Now I make them all.

WOMEN IN MEXICO: It's very difficult for all working women in this country now because of the economic crisis. The tuition for school has gone up, and I work on my own. My income varies from month to month. But I get by as I can. Sometimes I can't buy clothes or other things.

IMAGE: There is a lot of unemployment. And even if you have a career, for example, if you are an architect and a woman, (if you're out of work) you have to find a job in sales or whatever you can. We are definitely worse off than a year ago. Before, I could work a few days of the week, but now I end up working a lot more to make ends meet.

GERMANY

In Neuruppin, Cornelia Giese, 33, has five children ages 3 to 15. She previously held jobs as janitor and grocery store clerk, but is now unemployed.

HOUSEHOLD CHORES: She does nearly all the housework and child-rearing. Her husband works at a concrete-mixing center in Werder, more than an hour's drive. He's up at 4 a.m. and not home until 10:30 p.m. "I can't even wake him at 8 a.m. Saturdays and ask him to help. He needs to sleep."

"If he (asks to work fewer hours) there are lots of others waiting in line. Jobs are not easy to come by."

WOMEN IN GERMANY: Her life was easier before the Berlin Wall fell. Everything was provided automatically: child care, jobs, training. "We didn't have much of a choice of what we could buy in the stores, that was the downside. But we could drop off our kids (for day care) without any problem and pick them up when we were finished working. That is no longer possible."

As in most of former East Germany, after-school programs shut down in her town 40 miles northwest of Berlin for lack of funds.

"I have lots of depression because I don't have the contact with people any more. Back in the old days, everyone knew their place. Things were certain. Now it's precious money that everyone must be after."

"More and more women are being forced back into the kitchen and we don't want it."

CHOICES: Giese would like to get retraining and find a job as a florist. Her chances of getting a job that could co-exist with the demands of family are "almost nonexistent. A six- to seven-hour-a-day job, the only one I could manage, is extremely difficult to find."

IMAGE: To be a working mother in the east today is a constant battle of nerves. You must be psychologically fit and in top physical shape. From 6 a.m. until 8 p.m. you are going full tilt.

Expatriate workers find job has many drawbacks

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — In 1992, Pepsi Co. sent John W. Rindlaub Jr. to Dubai to help teach local bottlers about marketing their product.

After 2 1/2 years, however, Pepsi pulled Rindlaub, his wife and two children back to corporate headquarters, where he was caught in a restructuring and eventually lost his job.

Rindlaub's experience reflects some of the drawbacks of working overseas for a U.S. company.

Many expatriate employees aren't getting the cushy packages of years past, replete with allowances for everything from travel to their children's education. And there's a significant, out-of-sight, out-of-mind risk to moving abroad for companies, many of which don't sufficiently value their workers' foreign experience.

"Most companies have not thought well enough about what to do with the expatriate when they return," said Fortunat Mueller-Maerki, a partner at Egon Zehnder International, an executive search firm.

Still, the lure of foreign lands and exotic experience is strong for many. And contrary to anecdotal evidence, U.S. companies are sending Americans to represent them abroad in growing numbers in response to new markets and the increasingly global focus of U.S. companies.

From the mid-1980s through the early 1990s, the number of Americans working abroad for U.S. companies grew from 75,000 to about 250,000, estimates Reyer Swaak, vice president of the National Foreign Trade Council, Inc. Most of that increase has been in the past five years, he said.

A recent report by the NFTC showed 71 percent of companies surveyed expected an increase in expatriate employees this year, while only 8 percent expected a decline. Last year, 61 percent expected an increase.

Increasingly, U.S. talent is being sent to open new markets, rather than London or Brussels, popular overseas stations in the past. China, Russia, India, Japan, Mexico, Singapore and Hong Kong were among more frequent new assignment locations mentioned in the NFTC survey.

"The trend is to send expats to emerging markets," said William Pendergast, dean of the International Management Division at Monterey Institute of International Studies.

The cost of sending an American abroad to fill a position is typically three times greater than hiring someone locally, Swaak and others said. One manufacturer told the consulting firm Foster Higgins that employing an expatriate in China cost 2,000 percent more than hiring a local Chinese.

Part of the expense comes from the special allowances, designed to let American employees abroad live in the same fashion they did at home.

They often include adjustments for cost of living, hardship, education, housing and travel home. Then, there are the not-insignificant one-time costs such as moving expenses.

In Asia, generally considered among the most expensive regions to send someone, the costs are astronomical. Rent for a two-bedroom 2,000-square-foot apartment in Tokyo, Hong Kong, Shanghai or Beijing can run between $7,000 and $10,000 a month, said Emily S.L. Spencer, a partner with Paul Ray Berndtson, the international executive search firm.

Education for a child at an international school in Hong Kong runs about $10,000 annually, Spencer said. In Shanghai, meanwhile, it costs $100,000 to get a child into the only school for foreign students, she said.

Extra salary and other benefits can provide a cushy life that includes maids, nannies, a big house and the glamour that comes with being a "big fish in a small sea," Spencer said.

But that is starting to change. Some companies are altering the way they calculate allowances and others are eliminating some of them altogether, said Roger Atkins, manager of the international consulting practice at Watson Wyatt Worldwide, the human resources consulting firm.

"Increasingly, the goal is to have expatriates live like their local counterparts," Atkins said.

But while companies are sending more ambassadors abroad, many are not adequately considering how best to use them upon their return, Spencer said.

SPLIT: Stimulating demand through a stock split may help fund's growth

(From 4C)

In the face of such hard, cold numbers, splits are still traditionally considered bullish events in the stock market because they tend to broaden the prospective demand for a given stock.

Many investors who buy and sell stocks directly like to deal in "round lots" of 100, 200 shares and so forth, in part because trading costs are lower that way than when you deal in odd lots of less than 100 shares.

If a $60 stock is split three for one to $20 a share, the basic cost of a minimum round lot is lowered from $6,000 to $2,000. That could encourage some people to buy the stock who previously viewed it as too rich for their blood.

Such an effect can be very real in the stock market, where the price is determined by the flow of buy and sell orders, and an increase in demand may tip the scales toward a higher price.

But the net asset value of a standard open-ended mutual fund, which issues new shares and retires old ones as needed to fill buy and sell orders from investors, is not determined in the same supply-and-demand setting.

Rather, the per-share NAV is arrived at on any given day simply by adding up the market value of a fund's investment portfolio, and then dividing the sum by the number of fund shares outstanding.

If you stimulate demand for a fund through a stock split, in other words, it may help the fund grow. But it can have no direct benefit to the NAV.

Furthermore, fund investors seldom concern themselves with dealing in round share lots. Fund shares may be bought and sold, to the nearest one-hundredth of a share, without any extra charges or market price concessions for odd lots.

So fund investors typically buy and sell in whatever dollar amounts suit them, subject to the minimums set up the funds. Whether $5,000 fetches 5,000 shares at $1; 500 shares at $10, or even five shares at $1,000, really doesn't matter much.

But it may make a difference emotionally or psychologically, from an investor's viewpoint. For one thing, splitting the shares may "freshen" the fund in investors' minds, reducing any sense that they have missed out on previous gains.

And maybe an investor feels happier or more prosperous owning 200 or 300 shares at a lower price than 100 shares at a higher level.

As in most any other industry you could name, mutual funds certainly aren't in business to discourage their clientele from feeling happy and prosperous.

Brain still required to use Windows 95

By Bill Husted
Cox News Service

ATLANTA — Kicking your car when it won't start is intuitive. But all it does is mess up your toes.

Trying to be intuitive with computers works just as poorly — except they mess up your mind instead of your toes.

I thought a mouse was intuicF 1/4Q'vWiW, 3/8,ZY2 a friend use one for the first time. He held it straight out from his body and pointed it at the computer. Then he clicked. Rolling it on the table never occurred to him.

I tell you all this to put the "intuitive" ease of Windows 95 into perspective. The program is intuitive compared to Windows 3.1, which it replaces. But compared to scratching your nose, it's not intuitive at all.

Let's spend some time figuring ways to set up Windows 95 to make it as intuitive as possible. Think of it as making the best of an awkward relationship between you and your computer.

The place to start is the Windows 95 Start button. You'll be hearing a lot about this button. Heck, even the Rolling Stones will be singing about it in Microsoft ads.

Here's how it works. When you install Windows 95, it'll search out the programs installed on your computer and list them on a menu that pops on the screen when you press Start.

You're going to like that. Unlike Windows 3.1, you won't have to click the mouse twice to start a program. That may sound like a small thing, but I've run into many folks who have trouble clicking the mouse fast enough.

But there are ways to make the Start button work even better. Until you tinker with it, you'll have to wind your way through several menu levels before you get to your programs.

To run a program, you first select the menu item called programs. That calls up another menu that organizes your programs according to groups you created when you ran Windows 3.1. On my computer, for instance, there are listings called Communications, Microsoft Tools, Word Processing, Work (where I keep the programs that I use at the office), and so on. To reach the programs themselves, I have to click on one of these groups. Still another step.

I have to go through several menu items to finally reach the program I want to run. It works fine for software I use occasionally — my spreadsheet, for instance. But there are some programs I run several times a day. Let me show you a simple way to run these programs without going through all the menu layers.

We'll use that same Start button to make the changes.

Press Start, then select Settings. Under settings, select Taskbar. There's no need to double click; one will do fine. A window will pop open. Near the top, you'll see a tab labeled Start Menu Programs. Click on that.

Select the tab called Advanced (don't be afraid; hey, it's just a word). Now you'll see your program groups on the right side of a split-screen window. Find the programs you use daily by opening the correct group.

When you finally get to the icon for the program itself, click it with the left mouse button and — holding the button down — drag it to the folder labeled Start Menu on the left side of the screen. That folder will turn gray when the program is positioned correctly. Let go of the mouse button when that happens.

Next time you use your start button, the program itself will appear at the top of the menu listings. Now, to start the program, only one step is needed. Just press the start button and click once on the program. You'll skip three, four, maybe more, layers of menus.

That still isn't intuitive as kicking a balky car. But it is less painful.

(Bill Husted writes for The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.)

CHANCE: Tax considerations can't be overlooked

(From 4C)

"There are many rules of thumb — e.g., when interest rates are 2 percent or more below your current mortgage rate," notes the big accounting firm of Deloitte & Touche in Wilton, Conn. But "the only sure way of knowing whether it is advantageous to refinance is to make all the necessary computations and comparisons," the firm says.

For instance, says the ICFP, you can cut your monthly payment by $110 if you replace a 30-year fixed mortgage for $90,000 at 9 percent with an identical loan at 7.25 percent.

But you have to weigh that gain against the costs a lender might charge on a new loan, including points, title insurance charges, and fees for such things as processing the application and appraising the property.

Dividing the total of these costs by the monthly mortgage saving gives you your "payback period" in months. For instance, if it cost you $3,300 to switch loans, it would take you 30 months, or 2 1/2 years, of mortgage payments to recoup that investment through a $110 savings on the monthly payment.

Thus, most refinancing decisions involve trying to gauge how long you expect to keep owning the property in question. "The longer you own your home after refinancing, the better the deal," says the financial planners' group.

"If you plan to sell within the next two or three years it's probably not worth it."

Many mortgage refinancing strategies go far beyond simply reducing the monthly payment. They offer some people a chance to switch out of a variable rate mortgage, with its future uncertainties, to a fixed-rate loan at a relatively attractive rate.

Or refinancing may be used to switch to a loan that is paid off sooner, sharply reducing the ultimate amount of interest that must be paid.

Tax considerations can't be overlooked. Most mortgage interest is still tax-deductible, and so Uncle Sam will effectively take a share of any interest savings you realize.

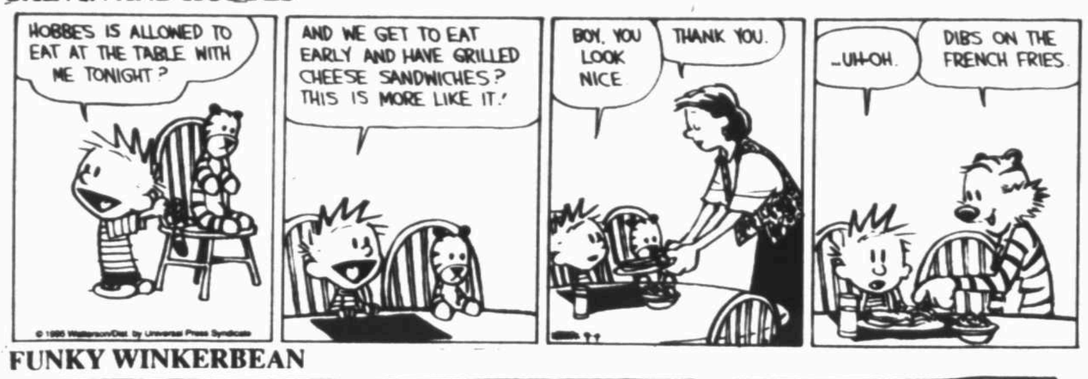

Points you pay to refinance are generally deductible too — but only stretched out over the life of the loan, not as a lump sum in the year you pay them.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your self-confidence will see you through several tricky challenges. Get ready for a big career boost in November! A passionate love affair will reach the now-or-never stage in December. People you meet while traveling give you valuable insights. New financial success follows. Continue to practice the thrift so typical of your sign. Save money for investment purposes.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: golfer Tom Watson, dancer Mitzi Gaynor, swimmer Dawn Fraser, food author Craig Claiborne.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Know people well before you go into business with them. Put an old argument to rest without further delay. A gloomy attitude will hamper progress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Casual get-togethers with friends and family are favored. Observe all traffic and water safety rules. Dining outdoors can sharpen appetites. Avoid overindulgence in food or drink.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make this an almost labor-free day by sharing cooking and entertaining chores. Meet at a park, by the water or in someone's backyard. A gentle, casual approach breaks the ice with someone shy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Tact and discretion will help you bridge a generation gap. Someone sees you in a new light. Plan recreational activities that everyone will enjoy, then keep your camera ready to record those happy moments.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could be happily surprised by your kinfolk today. Have fun reminiscing about other family gatherings. Your popularity is on the rise. Do not forget sun lotion and a hat if spending time outdoors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A wonderful day for communing with nature. Take a walk with your favorite canine companion. Puttering in the garden may hold more appeal than an end-of-summer beach party. Do your own thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Plunge into festive diversions, cooking a meal on the barbecue or playing games with the small fry. Avoiding controversial subjects will help keep the mood upbeat!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make the most of this carefree holiday. Refuse to rush or fuss. A picnic in the backyard may be the most attractive option for stay-at-home types. Heed a loved one's advice regarding money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A fish fry, backyard barbecue or potluck supper can be lots of fun provided loved ones lend a hand. Put your best foot forward. Be the kind of host or guest that everyone admires.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your energy level should be high on this fun-packed day. Eating tasty fruits and vegetables will keep you from packing on unwanted pounds. Stand firm. Calmly tell interfering parents not to meddle anymore!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take advantage of a special sale to purchase back-to-school clothes. Small social gatherings are favored over larger ones later today. Spend time with those nearest and dearest to your heart. Exchange confidences.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Soothe frayed nerves by indulging yourself. Read a good book or listen to music. A midday phone call brings wonderful family news. Some will become engaged. Sharing secrets with that special person makes everything seem worthwhile.

WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ ANSWERS

Q. 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A Q 4 ♡A K Q ◇5 4 3 2 ♣A 10 2
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A. - You have a very fine hand indeed, but have no idea yet where to place the contract. While it looks as if your side is going to declare in spades, possibly at the slam level, diamonds or no trump could be equally viable. To leave as much room as possible to explore, bid two clubs.

Q. 2 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A 6 ♡Q 8 3 ◇K 7 6 ♣A K 10 7 3
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
A - When your holding in opener's suit is a doubleton ace, a one-no-trump overcall is not appealing. The question is whether you should double despite the fact that you would like to hold a fourth heart, or bid two clubs, which tends to suggest a better suit and an unbalanced hand. We prefer the double.

Q. 3 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A J 6 ♡A 8 ◇J 9 6 5 ♣A K J 6
The bidding has proceeded:

EAST	SOUTH	WEST	NORTH
1 ♡	Dbl	2 ♡	3 ◇
Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. - Don't bid three no trump. On the auction partner must be bidding on distributional values and cannot possibly have a suit that will run opposite your jack. To show your strength without bypassing three no trump, we suggest you cue-bid three hearts.

Q. 4 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A Q 6 4 2 ♡A Q 10 7 3 ◇8 5 ♣8
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
Pass	1 ◇	Dbl	?

What action do you take?

A. - It depends on your methods. If you play that a response at the one-level would be a force, then bid one spade now and follow with a jump in hearts. If not, the only way to convince partner of your strength is to redouble.

Q. 5 - East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A 10 2 ♡10 7 4 ◇J 9 7 6 ♣A Q 9
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1 ♡	Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. - A surprisingly difficult hand because of the flat shape and no source of tricks. The accepted way to show this type of hand is to start with a cue-bid of two hearts and then consider raising any suit partner bids. Don't be surprised if that gets you overboard, or tortures partner into declaring a 4-3 fit.

Q. 6 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠5 4 ♡J 10 9 8 7 3 2 ◇Void ♣K J 10 8
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1 ◇	1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. - Had partner opened the bidding with one no trump, you would have responded four hearts. Since partner's overcall shows the same type of hand, albeit with a greater possibility of wasted values in diamonds, there is no reason not to make the same bid now. Bid four hearts.

Emma Thompson thinks Grant's notorious liaison was 'wonderful'

LONDON — Emma Thompson to Hugh Grant: good job, old boy!

Thompson thinks Hugh Grant's behavior was "wonderful."

The Academy Award-winning British actress said Grant's notorious liaison with a Sunset Boulevard prostitute was "wonderful, absolutely wonderful" in an interview published Sunday.

"I don't think it was a mistake at all," she told The Independent on Sunday newspaper. "I thought, thank God, you know, you've broken out."

Grant pleaded no contest to lewd conduct in July after Los Angeles police arrested him in his car with a prostitute. He plays Thompson's love interest in "Sense and Sensibility," due out in December.

Thompson won the best actress Oscar in 1992 for "Howard's End."

LONDON — Princess Diana wouldn't last long at a Pavarotti chow down.

Luciano Pavarotti hinted twice to the princess at a New York dinner party that he wouldn't mind sampling some of her shrimp, the opera tenor recounts in an extract from his biography, "My World," published in the London Sunday Times.

"Finally, I said, 'Listen, I tried twice with no success. Now I ask you directly. May I have one of your shrimps?' She got very flustered and apologetic. 'I'm so sorry ... I didn't realize.'

"Then she smiled in a shy way and said: 'I am not accustomed to sharing my food.' If that is true, she would have a terrible time at my family table."

LEIPZIG, Germany — Conductor Kurt Masur says he intends to bring the Gewandhaus Orchestra to peak performance before leaving in 1998 to devote himself entirely to the New York Philharmonic.

Masur, 68, announced this summer that he would give up the Gewandhaus baton in three years.

He told a news conference Saturday marking his 25th anniversary with the Gewandhaus that in the late 1980s he had thought of quitting, but decided to stay after the collapse of East Germany in 1989-90 posed new challenges to the orchestra.

Leipzig's most famous citizen said he aims to make the 252-year-old Gewandhaus even better so that he will feel satisfied when he leaves.

"When it's most beautiful, one should say auf Wiedersehen," said Masur, who has led the New York Philharmonic since 1991.

WICKENBURG, Ariz. — Merv Griffin has bought a second Arizona resort property — a 150-acre dude ranch in the high desert about 60 miles northwest of Phoenix.

Griffin paid $3.25 million Friday for the Wickenburg Inn, Tennis and Guest Ranch about eight miles north of here, acquiring it from Petroleum Inc. of Wichita, Kan.

In December, the Atlantic City casino owner and former TV talk-show host paid $14 million for the 232-room Scottsdale Hilton Resort and Villas in Scottsdale.

HUAIROU, China — Sally Field says working with poor women and children in Nepal has made her think twice about her priorities.

Sally Field says she now thinks twice about her priorities.

The actress told the world's biggest women's conference in China on Sunday that she'll keep crusading for more clout for women in Hollywood, even though her recent humanitarian work has made that fight seem less important.

"How can I talk about women in film now?" said the Academy Award winner. "It seems such a great luxury to be able to talk about the arts."

ROME — Computer software mogul Bill Gates finally got a chance to see what he wanted so badly: a Leonardo da Vinci manuscript he bought by telephone for nearly $31 million.

Gates got his first look at the 72-page compilation of ideas and inventions on Saturday in Venice, where he attended the annual film festival.

"I think da Vinci was the most amazing scientist of all time, and so I'm pleased to have the codex and really was very happy with the way it was put on display," Gates said Sunday at a news conference to announce plans by the Bank of Rome to use software from his company, Microsoft Corp.

San Francisco looks sluggish in 24-22 win over the Saints

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Are the San Francisco 49ers that good, or are the NFL champions as close to disaster as they looked in beating New Orleans 24-22 on Sunday?

A case could be made for either as the 49ers opened defense of their Super Bowl title with more mistakes than they usually make in a half-season.

Steve Young, who missed the end of the first half with a neck sprain, threw for 260 yards and two touchdowns, one a classic 50-yarder to Jerry Rice, and Tim McDonald returned an interception 52 yards for a touchdown.

Young, who finished 21 of 27 for 260 yards, returned and led the 49ers 86 yards in 14 plays to start the second half.

So it was 24-22 when Everett, 23 of 35 for 266 yards, completed a 29-yard TD pass to Haynes with 5:43.

Patriots 17, Browns 14

FOXBORO, Mass. — Drew Bledsoe led New England on an 85-yard drive in the last five minutes, capped by Martin's 1-yard scoring leap with 19 seconds left, as the Patriots came from behind for a win over the Cleveland Browns.

Bledsoe started his third pro season by completing 30 of 47 passes for 302 yards and had help from a vastly improved running game. Martin, a third-round pick from Pittsburgh, gained 102 yards on 19 carries.

Curtis Martin ran 30 yards on New England's first play from scrimmage, longer than any run by a Patriot last year. But the 1 yard he traveled with his decisive dive into the end zone was much bigger.

The Browns, meanwhile, relied on quick strikes to take a 14-6 halftime lead. They had the ball for just four plays in the first quarter, but one was Vinny Testaverde's 70-yard touchdown pass to Michael Jackson.

Bengals 24, Colts 21, OT

INDIANAPOLIS — Bracey Walker had two of Cincinnati's three interceptions off Craig Erickson, and Doug Pelfrey kicked his fifth field goal 2:36 into the extra period as Cincinnati beat the Colts.

The Colts sent the game into overtime with a 5-yard touchdown pass from Jim Harbaugh to Flipper Anderson and a 2-point conversion pass to Floyd Turner with three seconds left in regulation.

In the overtime, the Bengals drove 54 yards in six plays, but 34 of those yards came on an interference call on the Colts' Ray Buchanan, who hooked Carl Pickens' arm as he tried for a catch at the Indianapolis 33. Four plays later, Pelfrey's 47-yard field goal won the game.

The Bengals, whose defense stymied the Colts most of the game, had trouble stopping Harbaugh, who replaced Craig Erickson early in the final period. A 34-yard pass to Marshall Faulk and two short passes to Lamont Warren set up the tying touchdown.

Falcons 23, Panthers 20, OT

ATLANTA — Morten Andersen's 35-yard field goal 6:17 into overtime lifted Atlanta past Carolina in the Panthers' NFL debut.

Lester Archambeau stripped Carolina quarterback Frank Reich of the ball and recovered on the Panthers' 31 on the first series of overtime. The Falcons ran conservative plays to get in field-goal position, where Andersen made his third of the game.

The Panthers tied it with only 26 seconds remaining when Willie Green hauled in a 44-yard scoring strike from Reich as defender Terry Taylor fell trying to break it up.

Carolina lined up for a 2-point conversion, but ditched that idea when a false-start penalty pushed them back 5 yards. They settled for John Kasay's tying extra point.

Buccaneers 21, Eagles 6

PHILADELPHIA — Second-year quarterback Trent Dilfer threw two touchdowns and Tampa Bay got five sacks as the Bucs spoiled Ray Rhodes' coaching debut with a 21-6 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles on Sunday.

Dilfer, making only his third pro start, finished 11 of 19 for 215 yards, with touchdown passes to Jackie Harris and Horace Copeland. Copeland finished with 155 yards on five catches.

Errict Rhett, who rushed for 1,011 yards in only eight starts last season, ran for 85 yards on 26 carries, including a 19-yard TD run.

Randall Cunningham completed 25 of 36 for 191 yards. But the Eagles had to settle for Gary Anderson's two field goals in the first quarter.

Ricky Watters was limited to 37 yards on 17 carries and had a crucial fumble.

Rams 17, Packers 14

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The Rams, who fled Anaheim, Calif., last winter and replaced coach Chuck Knox with Rich Brooks, picked off Brett Favre three times and snapped a seven-game losing streak with a victory over Green Bay.

In his first NFL start, Isaac Bruce blocked a punt in the second quarter, recovered it and then hauled in a touchdown pass five seconds later for a 7-0 halftime lead.

Charles Jordan made a leaping 11-yard catch for a touchdown that pulled the Packers within 17-14 with 1:36 left, but the onsides kick failed and the Rams ran out the clock for St. Louis' first NFL victory since the Cardinals bolted to Phoenix following the 1987 season.

Sacked four times, Favre, who had cut his interceptions from 24 to 14 last year, clearly missed left tackle Ken Ruettgers (back), who protects his blind side, and Sterling Sharpe.

Steelers 23, Lions 20

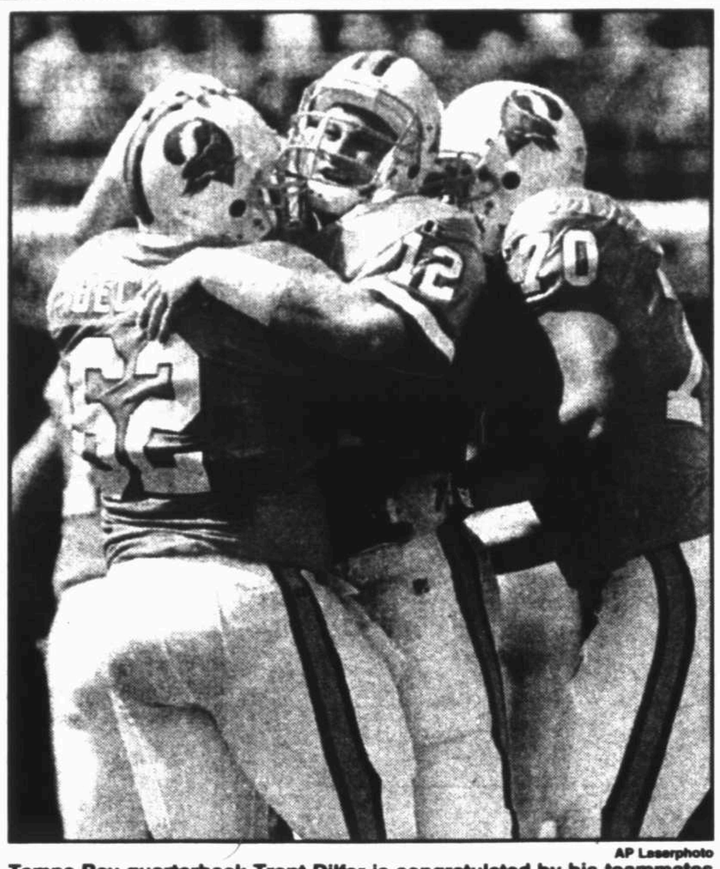

PITTSBURGH — Norm Johnson, grabbed off the waiver wire two weeks ago, kicked a 31-yard field goal as time ran out, his third of the game, and the Steelers withstood interceptions and injuries to beat the Detroit Lions 23-20 Sunday.

Backup quarterback Mike Tomczak, successfully coming off the bench for the fourth time in less than a year, directed two second-half touchdown drives. Tomczak's work put the Steelers up 20-10.

But in a game of shifting momentum created by the turnovers and injury substitutions, Tomczak was a perfect 6-for-6 for 54 yards on a game-ending 64-yard drive finished by Johnson's field goal.

Chiefs 34, Seahawks 10

SEATTLE — Steve Bono showed the Kansas City Chiefs he was ready to replace Joe Montana and ruined Dennis Erickson's NFL coaching debut in Seattle on Sunday. Erickson watched helplessly as Bono, a 10-year reserve — most of it behind Montana — with only 11 previous career starts, passed for three touchdowns as the Chiefs beat the Seahawks.

Tampa Bay quarterback Trent Dilfer is congratulated by his teammates after throwing a 64-yard touchdown versus Philadelphia.

Willie Davis, a fourth-year pro, caught touchdown passes of 60 and 40 yards in the first half. Lake Dawson was on the receiving end of a 16-yard TD pass in the third quarter that put Kansas City ahead 34-3.

Tamarick Vanover ran the second-half kickoff 99 yards as the Chiefs won their sixth straight opener.

Bono went 18 of 23 for 278 yards. Davis caught six for 155 yards and Greg Hill had a career-high 109 yards rushing.

Bears 31, Vikings 14

CHICAGO — Knocked out of Chicago's starting quarterback job in an embarrassing loss to the Vikings last September, Erik Kramer threw three touchdown passes Sunday as the Bears opened the season with a 31-14 win over Minnesota.

Kramer looked superb Sunday in completing 19 of 28 passes for 262 yards.

He threw first-half touchdowns of 73 and 5 yards to Curtis Conway and also had a 2-yard scoring pass to Keith Jennings that gave the Bears a 21-14 lead in the third quarter. Kramer's 29-yard pass to Jeff Graham on the Bears' next possession set up rookie Rashaan Salaam's 3-yard TD run.

Raiders 17, Chargers 7

OAKLAND, Calif. — Using a new ball-control passing attack, solid defense led by free agent Pat Swilling and a makeshift kicking game, the Raiders celebrated their return to Oakland with a 17-7 win Sunday over the San Diego Chargers.

Jeff Hostetler threw a 5-yard scoring pass to Tim Brown to complete a 14-play, 99-yard drive that epitomized the Raiders' revamped offense. Stan Humphries had a 39-yard TD toss to Shawn Jefferson for the Chargers. Hostetler was 14 of 25 for 136 yards. Humphries went 23 of 46 for 300 yards, including six completions to Jefferson for 120 yards. Means had 61 yards on 15 carries, but gained just 9 on eight carries in the second half.

Dolphins 52, Jets 14

MIAMI — The Dolphins opened the season looking like the Super Bowl contenders they're supposed to be, overcoming early mistakes Sunday to beat the Jets 52-14.

Dan Marino threw for three touchdowns and Troy Vincent scored on a 69-yard interception return for Miami, the preseason favorite to win the AFC.

Marino completed 16 of 26 attempts for 250 yards in three quarters of play. He needs 11 more touchdown passes to tie Fran Tarkenton's NFL career record of 342.

New York's Boomer Esiason completed 19 of 35 passes for 173 yards with three interceptions.

Miami's Bernie Parmalee lost two fumbles but compensated by scoring on runs of 24 and 4 yards.

Broncos 22, Bills 7

DENVER — John Elway passed for 317 yards, helping set up Jason Elam's field goals, as Denver beat Buffalo in Mike Shanahan's debut as Broncos head coach.

The offense brought from San Francisco to Denver by Shanahan shredded a Buffalo defense coordinated by Wade Phillips, Denver's head coach the past two seasons, for 439 yards. Shannon Sharpe caught 10 passes for 180 yards, and Davis ran for 70 yards on 20 carries.

Denver's suspect defense, rebuilt after ranking last in the NFL in 1994, limited the Bills to 234 yards and mounted a crucial goal-line stand in the third quarter, holding the Bills scoreless to preserve a 12-7 lead.

Redskins 27, Cardinals 7

WASHINGTON — Michael Westbrook, the Redskins No. 1 draft choice who held out for all but three days of training camp, darted his way downfield for a 58-yard touchdown on one reverse, threw a key block on another and even did a nifty somersault into the end zone on a play that didn't count Sunday as Washington routed Arizona 27-7.

While Westbrook was feted by the sellout crowd at RFK, second-year quarterback Heath Shuler was booed for every errant pass until he was knocked out of the game on a blind-side hit by defensive end Clyde Simmons with 1:08 left in the first half.

Newcomers lead Texas to opening 38-17 victory

The Associated Press

HONOLULU — There were moments when Coach John Mackovic and his staff wanted to "pull their hair out," but, when it was all said and done, newcomers Ricky Williams and Shon Mitchell did just fine.

Williams, the first true freshman to start at running back since 1974, and junior college transfer Mitchell provided a solid ground game Saturday night that carried No. 18 Texas to an easy 38-17 victory over Hawaii in the season opener for both teams.

Williams totaled 95 yards on 10 carries and scored twice, once on a nifty 65-yard stumbling run, while Mitchell added another 76 yards. Williams also caught one pass for 48 yards.

On Williams, a highly recruited first-year player, Mackovic said,

The Longhorns also got a strong offensive game from quarterback James Brown, who completed nine passes for 210 yards and one touchdown. On the receiving end of Brown's aerials was Mike Adams, who had five receptions for 98 yards and a score.

Texas didn't waste any time in taking control of the game and had a 31-3 lead at the half.

On the game's first play from scrimmage, Williams raced 20 yards and on the second, Brown hit Adams for 41 yards.

The drive resulted in a 22-yard field goal by Phil Dawson and the Longhorns added two touchdowns on Williams' 7-yard run and the Brown-Adams hookup before the end of the period to make it 17-0.

On the Longhorns' first offensive series of the second half, Williams turned in the night's most spectacular run, going 65 yards after stumbling 8 yards past the scrimmage line and then outracing the Rainbows' defense with a sharp cut to his right.

At that point, with 7:35 left in the third period, Coach John Mackovic went with most of his reserves the rest of the way.

Scott Hoch wins GMO with 65 in final round

The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Scott Hoch rebounded from a bogey on his first hole Sunday to shoot a 6-under-par 65 and win the Greater Milwaukee Open by three strokes, his first PGA Tour victory this year.

Hoch, who took a one-stroke advantage into the final round, had a four-day total of 15-under 269 at Brown Deer Park Golf Course. He had seven birdies, including one on the final hole that padded his victory.

Marco Dawson was second at 272. Jeff Sluman (66), Joe Acosta (68) and Jim Gallagher (67) took third at 274. Joey Sindelar, Steve Lowery, Lee Rinker and Duffy Waldorf were at 275.

Hoch entered the GMO 25th on the PGA money list with $487,338. The GMO victory adds $180,000 to his winnings and boosts his top-10 finishes to six this year.

European Masters

CRANS-SUR-SIERRE, Switzerland — Mathias Groenberg earned his first PGA tournament victory Sunday by shooting a three-under-par 69 to win the $1.07 million European Masters by two strokes.

The 25-year-old Swede, leading by one stroke after the third round, finished with a four-round total of 18-under 270. He held off England's Barry Lane, who shot a final-round 64, and Italy's Constantino Rocca, who shot a 66.

Defending champion Eduardo Romero of Argentina was one stroke behind after three rounds, but shot a final-round 71 and finished in a tie with Sweden's Joakim Haeggman at 273.

Romero lost concentration over the closing holes after his third bogey at the 13th put him out of the running.

Lane's eight-under round included six birdies in the first nine holes.

Rocca, runner-up to John Daly at the British Open at St. Andrews, scored a mixed round of two bogeys, six birdies and an eagle.

Franklin Quest Senior

PARK CITY, Utah — Tony Jacklin won his second Senior PGA Tour title Sunday, closing with a 5-under-par 67 for a one-stroke victory over six players in the Franklin Quest Championship.

The English star, who won the 1969 British Open and 1970 U.S. Open, had a 10-under 206 total on the 7,026-yard Park Meadows Golf Club course. Defending champion Tom Weiskopf and 1993 winner Dave Stockton were in the group at 207 with John Paul Cain, Rives McBee, Bruce Summerhays and Simon Hobday.

Jacklin survived a three-putt bogey on the par-4 18th and watched as several players failed to tie or win on the closing hole.

Jacklin, who earned $90,000 to move to increase his season total to $330,345, birdied Nos. 10-12 and eagled the par-5 14th.

Dick Rhyan won the Super Seniors competition for players 60 and over Saturday, parring the first hole of a playoff with Dick Henrickson.

LPGA Rail Classic

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Hall of Famer Betsy King and rookie Emilee Klein shot their second consecutive 5-under-par 67s on Sunday to share the second-round lead in the LPGA Rail Classic.

King, the tournament winner in 1985, 1986 and 1988, won the ShopRite LPGA Classic in June for her 30th career victory and a berth in the LPGA Hall of Fame. Klein, 21, who left Arizona State last year after winning the NCAA championship as a sophomore, had never shot a 67 in competition until Friday.

Beth Daniel, who needs to win three regular tour events or a major to enter the Hall of Fame, was two back after a 67 on the 6,403-yard Rail Golf Club course. Leta Lindley followed at 137 after a 66.

Colleen Walker, Tina Paternostro, Meg Mallon and Eva Dahllof were tied for fifth at 139. Walker and Paternostro shot 68s and Meg Mallon and Dahllof had 71s.

Magic act keeps Hall Racing's De Ferran in rookie series hunt

Special to the Reporter-Telegram

VANCOUVER, Canada — The mechanical magic act of the year was performed by the Midland-based Pennzoil Hall Racing crew here Sunday to get Gil de Ferran into the Molson Indy race so he could place second, his best finish of the year.

At the race's start de Ferran, a Brazilian rookie, tangled with Al Unser Jr. and wound up parked in the wall with a broken left front suspension. The accident brought the red flag to stop the race so that Jim Hall's crew could replace the damaged car with a backup racing machine. The crew rebuilt the backup car in 28 minutes, including salvaging the steering wheel and driver's seat from the crashed car.

De Ferran then worked his way up from eighth to fifth, dropped back to 18th after the first pit stop and then picked off drivers one by one on his way to his runner up finish to Unser. He moved up in the point standings from 20th to 17th, but more importantly drove into contention for rookie of the year. A win next Sunday by de Ferran at Laguna Seca, the last race of the year, combined with a 13th place finish by Christian Fittipaldi and a second place finish by Andre Ribeiro would give de Ferran the rookie championship.

INDY: De Ferran finishes a solid 2nd

(From 1C)

It was the fourth straight top-three finish for Unser, the two-time series champion whose season was badly marred by his failure to qualify for the Indianapolis 500, a race he has won twice, and by his disqualification after an apparent victory in June at Portland, Ore.

That disqualification, for an alleged technical violation on his Penske-Mercedes, has been appealed and will be heard Sept. 18, eight days after next week's season finale.

GORDON: Winner takes sixth race

(From 1C)

Earnhardt.

It was Chevrolet's 18th victory in 23 races.

Gordon, who led 54 of the 367 laps, had an average speed of 121.231 mph in a race slowed by several accidents over the last 120 laps. He extended his Winston Cup points lead to 217 points over Sterling Marlin.

Wallace was third, followed by Ward Burton and Michael Waltip.

Gordon has had his headaches at NASCAR's oldest superspeedway, with only one top-10 finish in five previous races. But he swept past Hut Stricklin to take the lead 34 laps from the end.

Gordon's crew wanted him to come in during the final caution. But when the driver saw Earnhardt and Wallace were staying out, Gordon jerked the wheel back behind the pace car.

He bolted out at the restart, leading by up to 20-car lengths.

Gordon, who started fifth, struggled to rejoin the leaders after a spin in lap 137 dropped him from second to 13th. But the numerous caution periods gave him hopes of reeling in Earnhardt, who had built a half-lap lead on the field.

Earnhardt, bidding to tie David Pearson's mark of 10 victories at Darlington, had the dominant car for the first half of the race. Earnhardt led for 208 laps and was up by 13-second lead by lap 242.

However, three multi-car accidents and six caution periods slowed him down. Earnhardt finally lost the lead when he stopped for fuel during the eighth of 11 yellow flags.

Racers moved quickly for the first two-thirds of the race, running caution-free from laps 158-242. But the tight straightaways and quirky corners of the 1.366-mile track eventually caught the drivers.

OILER: Brown rushes for 78 yards pain," Fisher said of Chandler. But X-rays showed no serious damage.

There was nothing physically wrong with Beuerlein, but Tom Coughlin fueled talk of a quarterback controversy by benching the man who worked with the first team all through training camp.

Coughlin did little to silence the talk he might turn to Brunell next week against Cincinnati.

Brunell directed the first scoring drive in Jaguars history, a 26-yard field goal by Mike Hollis with 11:58 remaining in the game.

Even when Jacksonville got the ball back on its 18 with 55 seconds remaining and a chance to tie, many of the fans were on their way to the exits, sensing an 82-yard drive was too much to expect. They were right, as Brunell's first pass was intercepted by Darryll Lewis.

The Oilers, who averaged only 14 points a game in '94 after abandoning the run-and-shoot, simply ran the ball at the Jaguars on the first possession. Brown carried eight times on the 13-play, 78-yard drive.

Hollis missed a 36-yard field goal on Jacksonville's only other serious scoring drive, and Al Del Greco padded the lead to 10-0 on a 19-yard field goal in the third period.

The game was especially disappointing for a couple of Jaguars with Houston ties.

Ernest Givins, dumped by the Oilers in the offseason despite being the leading receiver in team history, managed only two catches for 19 yards against his old team. And Kevin Gilbride, Houston's former offensive coordinator, watched his offense flounder after first-round draft pick James Stewart suffered a sprained shoulder on the Jaguars' first possession.

Rate & Credit Policies
Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classified categories require payment in advance. Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available. The Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to correctly classify and edit all copy or to reject or cancel any advertisement at any time.

Cancellations
The price of your ad will be based on the number of days published according to our rate structure. Call (915) 682-6222 - ask for your cancellation number. This is your record of cancellation and it is important that you have it in the event of any misunderstanding or adjustment. "Super Seller" and "Real Wheel Deal" ads may be cancelled, but are non-adjustable and non-refundable.

Errors and Adjustments
Please check your ad the first day that it appears to be sure that all of the information is correct. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. Call us the first day if you find an error at 915-682-6222. To report an error in Saturday's edition call Saturday morning between 8a.m. and 10a.m. Errors in Sunday's edition should be reported on Monday morning after 8:00 a.m. We must limit our financial responsiblity, if any, to the charge for the word or space, and cannot be held responsible for incorrect ads after the first day of publication.

Omissions of Ads
The Midland Reporter-Telegram assumes no financial responsiblity in an ad beyond the cost of the ad itself, and no responsiblity for the omission of an ad.
