COMING SUNDAY

Looking up

Tonight's commencement exercises are viewed by the valedictorians and salutatorians as just another step along the way. They are not looking back, only ahead. Read in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram about what they see in the future for the Class of '82.

Cheering up

The national nursing shortage hit Midland's public hospital to the point that beds were closed and morale was low. But within three weeks a newly appointed vice president, Al Keim, spread cheer through the hospital. Read Sunday how incentives bring results.

Adding up

That cut of aged beef lying nicely wrapped and highly priced on your grocer's meat counter may be more of a bargain that you think. It took a lot of effort — from the mother cow to the cowboy to the butcher and meat cutter — to get it to the nation's beef-eaters.

Rain, wind, hail march through Permian Basin

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Severe thunderstorms savaged West Texas late Thursday evening, hail as large as baseballs pummeled some areas, heavy rains left streets and low-lying sectors of cities flooded, and funnel clouds roamed the skies with at least one touching down.

The initial report of severe weather was received by the National Weather Service at 2:32 p.m., when marble-sized hail began pelting Wink. At 3:35 p.m., funnel clouds were sighted near Notrees in Ector County and 10 minutes later another tornado was reported five miles west of Goldsmith, prompting the first of several tornado warnings issued for West Texas during the afternoon.

At 4:30 p.m. golf ball-sized hail began pounding Kermit, while seven minutes later Odessa Civil Defense spotters pinpointed a funnel cloud two miles west of U.S. 385 and Texas 158 in Ector County.

As the series of storms moved eastward, the magnitude of the accompanying hail and rains increased. At 3:03 p.m. ¾-inch hail was reported at Gardendale east of Midland, but within four minutes the falling hailstones were of golf-ball size.

The most severe hail of the day occurred in Ector County, where baseball-sized stones hammered the area just northwest of Odessa at 5:17 p.m.

By 5:24 p.m. golf ball-sized hail was falling at Wall Avenue and Andrews Highway in Midland, while at the same time, heavy winds blew a roof off a house and damaged barns at Gardendale. Heavy hail fell in the Gardendale area for more than half an hour.

Damage to barns was reported in that community at 5:52 p.m.

Golf ball-sized hail also struck other areas of Midland during the afternoon, with the NWS receiving reports of such from the intersection of Midkiff Road and Mariana at 5:53 p.m. and from east Midland at 5:54 p.m.

Hailstones the size of baseballs struck portions of Odessa again at 5:59 p.m., though a police department spokesman said his office had received no reports of injury or damage.

Fording the Illinois River

A tornado, numerous funnel clouds, hail and more than an inch of rain — the Permian Basin had just about everything in the way of weather Thursday evening. Numerous waves of heavy storms flooded many Midland streets, causing many vehicles to stall. Here, two cars wade through Illinois Avenue near the F Street intersection about 8 p.m. after the severe weather had moved through the area.

State legislators trying to complete special session today

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A spurt of Senate action, including completion of its main business, put legislators in position today to finish a special session in five days.

Most of the work shifted to the House, which scheduled a 10 a.m. opening, an hour earlier than the Senate.

The goal was to adjourn by Friday night and get home for the Memorial Day weekend.

Senators approved four proposed constitutional amendments Thursday, including one to repeal the state property tax, and voted to spend $50 million to speed up construction of state prison cells.

It was estimated that 4,600 additional prison beds would be ready by the end of 1982.

Money for college construction and settling differences in what senators and House members want to spend at once to ease prison overcrowding appeared to be the major items of unfinished business.

The House, however, still had to approve three of the constitutional proposals that cleared the Senate to put them on the Nov. 2 general election ballot.

Clements called the special session to repeal the 10-cent per $100 valuation property tax, but he also said he wanted legislators to find construction money for 17 colleges that had relied on the tax.

On Monday, he authorized lawmakers to see what they could do about overcrowded prisons and a few other issues.

The Senate defeated an attempt by Sen. Carl Parker on Thursday to substitute a 3-cent property tax, which would be phased out in building a $2 billion college construction fund for colleges outside the University of Texas and Texas A&M University systems.

Parker, D-Port Arthur, said senators had told him privately that his proposal was the "easiest" and "best" way to finance college construction, but they feared political opponents might use a tax vote against them in November.

"I want to serve notice to the people of Texas that what you're about to witness is a case of politicians rising above principle for the sake of politics," Parker said, then watched as his measure failed 23-8.

The Senate approved the proposal to repeal the tax, 30-1, with Peyton McKnight, a lameduck Tyler Democrat, casting the lone "no" vote.

House members had adopted the measure, 132-14, on Tuesday, and it now goes on the November ballot.

The state property tax has not been collected since 1979 when the Legislature tried to eliminate it by lowering the assessment ratio to such a negligible figure.

A pending lawsuit contends that the tax could only be repealed by a constitutional amendment, which requires a statewide vote.

Senators also voted Thursday to raise the legal limit on interest rates for certain government bonds, to allow the state to take over sole funding of some welfare programs if federal funds are withdrawn and to exempt farm tools from property taxes.

The bond proposal would raise the maximum interest rate from 6 percent to 12 percent, or even higher by a vote of the Legislature.

Suit alleges wrongful death due to toxic shock

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The death in Odessa last August of a 30-year-old woman has resulted in a second toxic shock syndrome suit to be filed this year in federal court in Midland.

The death of Mary Frances Loudermilk in Ector County Medical Center Hospital on Aug. 26 allegedly was caused by her use of Playtex feminine tampons, or so alleges a lawsuit filed this week by the paternal grandparents of the woman's child, Jennifer Darlene Loudermilk. Plaintiffs are A.J. and Lucille Loudermilk of Curry County, N.M.

The suit claims that Ms. Loudermilk, a divorcee, was admitted to the hospital on Aug. 14 and suffered "symptoms of nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, low blood pressure," and ran fever of 105 degrees Fahrenheit and "was generally in a state of shock." She died 12 days later.

Defendants in the suit, which was filed under the Texas wrongful death and survivors statutes, are International Playtex and Kimberly-Clark Corp., which manufactured, marketed and/or distributed the tampons, alleges the plaintiffs.

The Loudermilks are complaining of the alleged "defective condition" of the tampon and of Playtex's "failure to warn (of the 'propensity' of the tampon) to cause infection in its users and increase the risk of its users' contracting toxic shock syndrome."

The lawsuit accused the tampon's makers and marketers of "heedless and reckless disregard of the rights" of the users in distributing the allegedly "defective" product. Furthermore, the lawsuit says that the defendants, by their product, indicated a "conscious indifference" to the rights, welfare and safety of the users.

Attorney for the Loudermilks is Austin's Bob Gibbins, who is also representing Shari Lynn Holliman Davis, 20, of Odessa and her husband, Steve, in a similar suit in federal court. Ms. Davis, a secretary, was hospitalized in 1980 with symptoms similar to those of Ms. Loudermilk but survived.

Trial times for the cases have not been set by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland's housing bond program remains on a life support system, gasping for breath, but the plug hasn't been pulled yet.

A deadline for submitting papers for a bond rating to the rating agencies in New York passed at 5 p.m. Wednesday without the Midland County Housing Finance Corporation obtaining any more lending participants. But Fred Kester said Thursday that the program "is still on hold."

"We're still negotiating with some possible lenders and with the two who offered to participate," said Kester, who is a member of the MCHFC board. On Tuesday, the corporation reported it had commitments from two lenders of $7.5 million. However, the corporation has sold $20 million in bonds and must have lenders willing to handle the process of loaning out that much money.

Jackie Johnson Mortgage Co. has agreed to take $2.5 million while Mortgage & Trust Co. will take $5 million.

Kester said that the rating agencies require all paperwork be submitted one week in advance of the bond rating hearing. Midland's hearing is scheduled for June 2 in New York. But, he added, the housing corporation could gather enough participants by Tuesday and then appear at the hearing Wednesday. The difference is that it would take a longer period for Midland to receive a bond rating.

If Midland fails to get the full $20 million committed by Wednesday, "I'd say we call off the hearing," Kester said.

Board President Steve Davidson said in a joking manner, "We're using CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) on it. The program is still alive. We're still attempting to locate people to help us place loans."

This bond program differs from the previous ones in that the regulations must conform with guidelines established by the federal government.

Money will go to first-time homeowners, or applicants who haven't owned home for the previous

Pontiff begins British tour with prayer for peace

LONDON (AP) — Pope John Paul II launched his historic trip to Britain today, praying for peace in the Falkland Islands and then meeting Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace.

The head of the Roman Catholic Church began his six-day tour of this Anglican nation by declaring he was deeply moved to set foot on English soil and said he would pray for an end to the Falkland Islands conflict "at each step" of his pastoral visit.

"We cannot forget that an armed conflict is taking place — brothers in Christ fighting in a war that imperils peace in the world," he said in a homily at Westminster Cathedral. "In our prayers, let us remember the victims of both sides."

As he spoke, British troops were fighting to expand their beachhead on the Falkland Islands, seized by Argentina April 2.

The 62-year-old pontiff, who nearly canceled his visit because of the conflict, was applauded by the cathedral congregation when he said: "Today, for the first time in history, a bishop of Rome sets foot on English soil. I am deeply moved."

Against a background of 450 years of sectarian strife between Catholics and Protestants — continuing to this day in Northern Ireland — John Paul said, "My deep desire, my ardent hope and prayer is that visit may serve the cause of Christian unity."

He later met the queen at Buckingham Palace. The monarch, whose predecessor Henry VII broke with the Holy See in 1534 over its refusal to sanction his divorce, is temporal head of the Church of England, Britain's officially established church.

Extreme Protestants have objected to the meeting — billed by both London and the Vatican as "informal" — citing the queen's formal title as "protector of the faith."

Earlier, arriving at Gatwick Airport south of London to a low-key reception, John Paul recalled his repeated pleas for a Falklands truce:

"As I stand here today, I renew my heartfelt appeal, and I pray that such a settlement of the dispute will soon be reached."

Cardinal Basil Hume, primate of England and Wales, led a select party of 2,500 Britons invited to the airport to greet the pope under bright, sunny skies. The Duke of Norfolk, Britain's senior lay Catholic, represented the royal family.

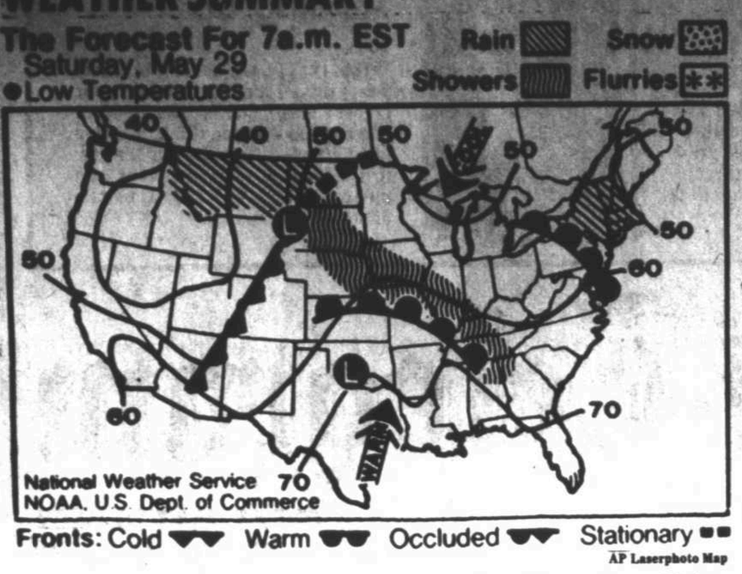

The public was barred from the arrival area, an example of the stringent security precautions being taken by Scotland Yard to safeguard the pope, who has twice been the target of assassins. A Spanish priest lunged at him with a bayonet in Fatima, Portugal May 12, a year after an attempt on his life in Rome by a Turkish terrorist.

Police refused to give an overall estimate on English crowds, but they appeared smaller than on his other trips abroad.

There was no open motorcade. The pope used his bullet-proof limousine for the short trip from the runway to the train station. There he boarded British Rail's royal train, the same one used by Prince Charles and Princess Diana on their honeymoon, for the 30-mile journey to Victoria Station.

Although his reception was generally friendly, the pope encountered protesting Protestants as he traveled

British troops launch new offensives

By The Associated Press

British marines and paratroopers launched new offensives on the Falkland Islands today, 24 hours after breaking out of their beachhead under heavy Argentine air attacks, the Defense Ministry in London announced.

It said two Argentine Skyhawks were downed Thursday when they attacked the British beachhead at San Carlos Bay, and that a British Harrier jet was shot down over the Falklands capital of Stanley — the apparent target of the British drive.

"Offensive land operations" by the British are under way today, the Defense Ministry said, adding that Harrier jets were flying reconnaissance missions for the ground troops. He gave no other details.

British commanders were maintaining radio silence to avoid giving their positions away, British sources said. The advancing troops, outnumbered by the Argentines, were relying on surprise and mobility, they said.

The British Broadcasting Corp., citing unofficial reports, said British troops ran into stiff Argentine resistance Thursday as they pushed toward Darwin in a bid to secure one leg of their two-pronged assault on Stanley.

The BBC said paratroopers opened fire from high ground on the estimated 600 Argentine troops at Darwin, about 20 miles south of San Carlos, and at nearby Goose Green, site of a key island airstrip.

THE TIMES of London said helicopters ferried troops under cover of darkness for a "big push" to Darwin and Goose Green. Another British press report said the attackers might try to bottle up the Argentine defenders and push on to the capital, 50 miles to the northeast.

While the paratroopers were advancing on Darwin and Goose Green, the BBC said Royal Marines with Scorpion light tanks and artillery moved directly east from the beachhead toward Stanley in the main thrust of the pincer assault apparently aimed at gaining the high ground overlooking the capital garrison.

The British are expected to use positions overlooking the capital to pour 105mm artillery fire down on the estimated 7,000 Argentine defenders entrenched in a wide arc reportedly stretching from Green Patch to Bluff Cove.

The British Defense Ministry imposed a blackout on official news of troop movements after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Thursday afternoon that British forces had pushed out of their beachhead in a drive to recapture the South Atlantic colony from Argentine forces who seized the islands April 2.

"Our forces on the ground are now moving forward from the bridgehead." She declined to be more specific, saying, "Too much discussion about timing and details of operations can only help the enemy."

Argentine military sources denied the reports that the drive to retake Stanley was under way. They said British forces have been "halted and stabilized," and the military command in Buenos Aires said an offensive was improbable because the British had taken heavy casualties from Argentine bombing Wednesday and early Thursday and were short of supplies.

THE ARGENTINE sources also claimed the British were hampered by cold, wind, rain and spongy island terrain as well as by Argentine artillery and mortar fire, bombings and infantry attacks.

"The battle is going very well for us," Brig. Gen. Basilio Lami Dozo, commander of the Argentine air force, told foreign reporters in Buenos Aires Thursday. "We have our capacity intact."

An Argentine military communique Thursday night reported British air raids on Stanley, Darwin and Howard, which is on West Falkland Island across the strait from San Carlos. The communique claimed a British Harrier jet was downed, bringing to 22 the number of British planes Argentina claimed to have downed since the fighting began. Britain has admitted the loss of five planes and nine helicopters and claims 68 Argentine aircraft destroyed.

A British Defense Ministry spokesman in London said he had no information about the reported Argentine air attacks.

Both Britain and Argentina have barred foreign reporters from the battlefield in their week-old undeclared war for control of the windswept archipelago now in the grip of a chill South Atlantic winter.

The official British toll in the conflict so far was put at 109 dead. Argentina acknowledges 92 dead and says 309 men are missing, including 301 missing and presumed dead in the sinking May 2 of the nation's only cruiser, the General Belgrano, by a British submarine.

U.S. support for the British came under sharp attack Thursday from Latin-American nations at a meeting in Washington of the Organization of American States. Despite a conciliatory speech by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., the OAS was expected to adopt a resolution today supporting Argentina and calling on member states to take "measures they deem appropriate" to help the Argentines.

Reagan administration sources said the United States is providing the British with Sidewinder air-to-air missiles and ammunition.

The U.S. Embassy in Buenos Aires said 12 to 15 nonessential personnel and 60-70 dependents had left Argentina by Thursday under State Department orders.

Pope to make historic visit to Canterbury

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

CANTERBURY, ENGLAND (AP) — Kings and saints, martyrs and murderers, Chaucer's merry band and tourists by the thousands, Canterbury has seen it all in a millenium and a half, but nothing so strange under the English sun as a pope of Rome coming as a pilgrim of peace.

Pope John Paul II's visit Saturday to Canterbury Cathedral and his working lunch with various church leaders will make instant history in a gray gothic town drenched with 15 centuries of gore and glory.

This is the mother church of the Anglican communion, which had its beginnings in a bitter struggle between papal authority and the royal will 450 years ago when Pope Clement VII refused to annul King Henry VIII's marriage to Catherine of Aragon so he could wed Anne Boleyn, whose daughter Elizabeth I was excommunicated and branded a heretic by another pope.

Although the old fears of popery have not died among Protestant extremists threatening to make trouble during the visit, John Paul is being welcomed to these once-unwelcoming shores by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the primate of the Church of England and the first peer of the realm, and by Queen Elizabeth II, the temporal leader of Britain's established church.

So "Bell Harry," the thunderous bell that gives its name to the cathedral's massive central tower, will be pealing for a pope for the first time in its noisy 500 years.But while the pontiff is at services inside the cathedral, another tinier bell hanging outside the Warrior's Chapel will sound the knell of Britain's modern woes.

Every morning at 11 a.m., a soldier strikes the bell of the destroyer Canterbury and turns a page from the Book of Memory, listing those who died for their country in British wars. Now the war for the Falkland Islands has added new heroes, and the destroyers Sheffield and Coventry and three other ships have joined the Canterbury in history's grave.

Canterbury has been the center of religion in England since Pope Gregory the Great at the end of the 6th century dispatched St. Augustine to convert the people who first fascinated him when he saw blue-eyed Roman slaves and asked where they came from.

"We are Angles," a boy answered.

"You have the faces of angels," said the pope and forthwith sent his best missionary.

Augustine built a chapel on the site of the present cathedral and called it Christ's Church, and so it remained until King Henry II, in an earlier confrontation over church vs. royal authority, assigned four hit men to murder Thomas Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury, in his cathedral in 1170.

Thomas was canonized, the cathedral renamed for him, and penitent Henry came on bleeding feet in a hair shirt to the shrine and bared his royal back to five strokes of the whip from each bishop and abbot present and three from each of the 80 monks mourning Thomas.

For 400 years Canterbury was among the holiest and most popular shrines in Europe, a place to seek remission of sins and deliverance from the plague. As Chaucer wrote:

"And specially, from every shire's end

Of England to Canterbury they wende

The holy blisful martyr for to seke

That them hath holpen when thet they were seeke."

Henry III was crowned here. Henry IV is buried here, beside his queen, Joan of Navarre, and is the only monarch in the crypt. To dispel rumors his coffin had been dumped in the Thames on the way down from Westminster, Henry's tomb was reopened in 1832 and "the skin of his chin" was found to be "entire," the beard thick and matted, of a "deep russet color."

Canterbury's archbishops have long had leading roles in the historical pageant of this sceptered isle.

Archbishop Lefranc, who began construction of the cathedral in 1070, came over with William the Conqueror. Dante put his successor, Archbishop Anslem, in his "Paradise." Archbishop Stephen Langton, who was the first to divide the Bible into chapters, preached liberty to King John and forced him to sign the Magna Carta at Runnymede.

Before the divorce row, Henry VIII visited Canterbury with his first wife, Catherine of Aragon, and the monks broke out "three kilderkens of new beer." Ironically, when Catherine was married to Arthur, Henry's older brother, his father wanted him to take Holy Orders and eventually become Archbishop of Canterbury.

Instead, Henry VIII wound up destroying Becket's shrine, carrying off its jewels and relics "in 26 ox wains" and trying and convicting the archbishop 400 years dead for "rebellion, treason and contumacy." Becket's bones were burned at the stake "as a lesson to the living not to oppose the royal will."

The same fate befell the living Thomas Cranmer, Henry VIII's choice for Archbishop of Canterbury, who crowned Anne Boleyn queen and was tried before the high altar in the cathedral during Mary Tudor's Catholic backlash reign, stripped of his episcopal robes along with his consecrated fingertips and burned at the stake.

When the first Queen Elizabeth visited Canterbury, the cathedral again was Protestant and had regained its old name of Christ's Church.

Archbishop Laud, who used to brand schismatics on the cheek with a hot iron, was hanged by the Puritans, led by one of his victims bearing the "stigmata Laudis." Cromwell's troops smashed the great stained glass windows, which were considered finer than those in Chartres, and used the cathedral as a stable and an armory.

The cathedral had the first organ of any church in Europe, back in the 7th century. Its stout central steeple inspired the design for the Houses of Parliament that grace the banks of the Thames.

Among many strange sights it has witnessed was the arrival 500 years ago of the Patriarch of Antoich, fleeing from the Turks and parking two camels and four dromedaries in the cathedral close.

Now comes John Paul II in a "popemobile," with helicopters overhead, attended by pilgrims, both Protestant and Catholic, from every shire's end, surrounded by armed guards and poised on a delicate diplomatic tightrope in Anglican Britain, whose troops are at war with Catholic Argentina.

Body found in closet

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Police are trying to identify a man's body discovered in a bedroom closet by a couple returning home from a six-month vacation.

The body, with a bullet wound in the head, was found sitting in a closet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Marks, police said.

Police were called to the scene at 8:40 p.m. Tuesday after the couple entered their home and discovered "a strong stench."

nado which touched down. The Department of Public Safety spotted the twister on the ground at 6 p.m. north of Kermit, though apparently no injuries or damages to facilities resulted.

Still another funnel cloud was sighted by a NWS spotter 10 miles south of Midland at 7:10 p.m., while golf ball-sized hail hit Big Spring at 8:35 p.m.

Although the NWS at Midland Air Terminal recorded only an official 1.10 precipitation, rainfall in downtown Midland was much greater, as streets became torrents and cars were left stalled in high water at several locations. The storm deluged the Holiday Hill Road area with 2.12 inches, the Midkiff and Dengar sector of the city with 2.30 inches and Gardendale with 1.55 inches. Texas Electric Service Company's Midland East station recorded 2.35 inches of rain.

A severe electrical storm that sent several lightning bolts crashing into downtown sectors also disrupted electrical service to parts of the city. A TESCO official this morning said that the service interruptions were scattered and of a minor nature. Power restoration time varied from a few minutes to three or four hours, the official said.

Elsewhere in the area, funnel clouds were reported near Lamesa, Stanton and Rankin, while hail struck Welch in Dawson County. Rainfall was widespread, with showers occurring in most locales, including Garden City with .70 of an inch, Andrews, Lamesa, Stanton, Big Lake, Big Spring and Crane.

West Texas should receive some respite from the vicious spring storms at least through Saturday, as fair skies are expected for the next couple of days. The NWS has issued a chance of afternoon thunderstorms for the remainder of the Memorial Day weekend, however.

Tornadoes rip through Hobbs, N.M.

HOBBS, N.M. — Twin tornadoes ripped through Hobbs Industrial Park in the northwest edge of this city at approximately 5 p.m. MDST Thursday, severely damaging at least five trailer houses, several aircraft hangars and various equipment.

The tornadoes remained on the ground approximately three minutes in this lightly populated sector of Hobbs, while elsewhere in the city 50 mph winds overturned several more mobile homes. Heavy rains and large hail added to the damage estimated at about half a million dollars.

No injuries were reported by late Thursday, according to a Hobbs Police Department spokesperson, though several residents were forced to evacuate overturned mobile homes.

Primary damage to residences, mobile homes and vehicles resulted from falling limbs, with windows, roofs, storage buildings and fences bearing the brunt of the storm's fury.

Off-duty police officers, municipal employees and Red Cross volunteers were called out during the storm and were to survey the community today for additional damages.

The tornadoes and powerful winds were preceded at 2:48 MDST by marble-sized hail just north of the city, according to the National Weather Service.

A third tornado touched down between Hobbs and Jal late in the afternoon, causing major damage to two oil well service rigs.

Mechanic solves tombstone mystery

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Auto mechanic A.J. Pagnozzi has solved the mystery of Shoal Creek's Mississippi tombstone.

Pagnozzi said he picked up the marker on a trip to Columbus, Miss., last year from a collection of tombstone rejects. He stored it in a shed, but it was washed away by the Memorial Day flood last year.

The 1968 tombstone noting the death of Mississippi school teacher Wisdom Martin did not surface until May 13, when an auto salesman discovered it in Shoal Creek.

Since Martin's widow said her former husband's tombstone was still in place at a Kosciusko, Miss., graveyard, the appearance of a second stone was a mystery.

Pagnozzi says he'll use the stone to "slice meat on" at his barbecue restaurant after the lettering is scraped off.

Pedestrian struck down by gunfire

BALTIMORE (AP) — An 18-year-old woman was critically injured by gunshots fired from a passing car as her mother watched in horror, authorities said.

Kathy Thomas was listed in critical condition at Johns Hopkins Hospital, where she was being treated early today for gunshot wounds to the mouth, neck and spine, said police Detective Joseph Segretti.

Ms. Thomas was carrying her 2-year-old daughter at the time she was hit by gunfire Thursday night, but the toddler was not injured, police said.

"We have a woman walking down the street shot. Twice. And she was walking with her child," Segretti said. "She was probably an innocent bystander."

Segretti said seven shots were fired from a car carrying four or five men. He said police have not been able to determine a motive.

Hospital emergency room supervisor Elizabeth Gilpatric said Ms. Thomas' mother, Catherine, was being treated for a possible heart attack.

three years, Kester said.

The interest rate will start at 13¾ percent, compared to a conventional loan rate of 17-plus percent. However, that monthly payment will increase by 3½ percent each year for the next 10 years. And the loan will be paid out in 15 years.

"I think people will still want the payments, even though they go up 3½ percent each year, and the lenders think so, too," Kester said. "The average person expects his income to go up more than 3½ percent a year."

One benefit of the program is that if the interest rate on conventional loans drops significantly, a homebuyer can take out another loan to pay off this one with no penalty, according to Kester.

Other regulations state that an applicant can make no more than $48,500, which is a higher top limit than previous bond issues. The rule causing problems for Midland is that a new home purchased under this program can't cost any more than $87,207. And top price for an existing home has been set at $65,932.

Kester said other bond issues had set a top limit on the mortgage amount. The change to purchase price was made by the federal government.

"Despite the change in regulations made by the federal government, I think there would be a market for this type of program because people are so anxious to get out of those high, high apartment rentals, or even house rentals. They're just out of this world," said Kester.

Davidson pointed out that the yearly increasing payment plan is no different than what can be obtained on the regular market today. "You can't go out and get a conventional 30-year loan at a set rate. Adjustable rate mortgages are what's in the market place. I think people would jump at this program."

Kester said the corporation was placing its emphasis upon attracting local lenders, although at this point the board will accept commitments from outside financial institutions.

Southwest won't get Great Lakes relief

TORONTO (AP) — Although the Great Lakes contain nearly a fifth of the world's fresh water, there isn't a drop to spare for dry regions of the southwestern United States, says an International Joint Commission study.

For years, Canadian provinces and states in the United States around the Great Lakes have been urged to sell their water to the U.S. southwest, but the study says there won't be enough water in the lakes to satisfy the demands of the population that will be living around it in 50 years.

The study, presented to the U.S.-based Great Lakes Commission at a meeting set up by Ontario's Ministry of Transportation and Communications on Wednesday, said by the year 2035, the levels of Lake Michigan, Huron and Erie could fall by more than a foot if projections based on water consumption in 1975 are met.

Lower volumes of water mean hydro-electric power stations wouldn't be able to produce as much electricity, massive dredging programs would have to be undertaken to keep shipping channels and harbors open, cottagers around the lakes would find it hard to use their docks and vital wildlife preserves on wetlands would dry up.

Frank Kudrna, chairman of the Great Lakes Commission, said "hell no" to proposals to ship Great Lakes water to parcher areas.

Flooding caused by the torrential rains that have fallen in Honduras in the past four days destroyed this highway near Choluteca. Honduran officials estimate the storm's damage to roads and bridges has reached at least $2.5 million.

Tropical storm kills at least 177

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — With 177 dead and 55,000 homeless reported in Nicaragua and neighboring Honduras, relief workers fear the toll from Tropical Storm Aleta will increase as communications are restored to communities isolated by the flooding.

"We think the number of victims is higher because many communities lie isolated, and we don't know what the situation in them is," Red Cross spokeswoman Graciela Rappacciolli said Thursday.

Troops were trying to get food and medicine to areas isolated as a result of the storm's four days of heavy rains in the two Central American nations. But continuing rains hampered them, and the weather bureau forecast little relief for at least another day or two.

The storm hit the Pacific coast Monday with 40 to 50 mph winds.

Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordoba said the situation was "very serious" and called on friendly nations and international relief organizations for help. The leftist Sandinista junta in Nicaragua made a similar appeal after declaring affected areas a disaster zone.

Ismael Reyes, president of the Nicaraguan Red Cross, said he sent an urgent request for help from the International Red Cross in Geneva.

"Nicaragua urgently needs foodstuffs, blankets, medicines, portable hospitals and tents to meet this emergency," he said in an interview.

The Red Cross said 77 dead and 50,000 homeless were reported in Nicaragua, but flooded rivers swept away 50 bridges, and at least 31 communities were cut off. Attempts were being made to reach them by helicopter.

In Honduras, the Red Cross said 100 people were dead and 5,000 were homeless, but more than 20 towns and villages with a total population of about 20,000 were isolated in an area of 270 square miles.

Zaire aid trimmed by committees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Zaire, an African nation denounced by one senator as "a classic example of corruption," is coming up a loser in the battle over foreign aid.

The Reagan administration, citing Zaire's wealth of strategic minerals, wants to increase its share of military aid from the current $11.6 million to $36.3 million.

On Thursday, however, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee trimmed aid to Zaire to $11.3 million as part of a worldwide aid authorization of $10.73 billion for fiscal year 1983.

Earlier, the House Foreign Affairs Committee, in its $10.8 billion version of the aid measure, slashed Zaire to $4 million, less than an eighth of the administration's request.

The full House is tentatively scheduled to take up foreign aid on June 7. The Senate will vote later.

"Zaire is a classic example of corruption," said Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., who proposed the cut. "It is a country ready to collapse."

"I think it is time this country held Mobutu to some kind of standard," he added. "There are stories that have been going around for years about Swiss bank accounts that may contain up to $3 billion."

Tsongas read from a report by members of the committee staff who visited Zaire in preparation for hearings on the aid request.

They said that on a visit to a military airfield to inspect seven C-130 transport aircraft provided by the United States, they found that one had been destroyed in a crash and only two of the remaining six were able to fly.

One, they said, was Mobutu's personal plane. The other was loading a cargo of cattle for livestock breeding. They said they were told the breeding stock was probably being flown to Mobutu's own ranch.

"Had there been a military crisis at some distance from the capital, two C-130's would have landed," Tsongas told the committee. "Out of one would have come Mobutu. Out of the other would have come cattle."

The administration proposed $20 million in grants to permit Zaire to buy military hardware, primarily spare parts for the C-130s. It also proposed a new $15 million program designed to bolster the country's troubled economy.

The Senate panel cut the military grant in half and the House committee pared it by 80 percent. Both panels eliminated the economic support funds.

Tsongas' amendment left intact a request for $1.3 million to train military personnel for Zaire, an increase of $300,000 over the current level.

At a Senate hearing in April, James L. Buckley, under secretary of state, testified that security aid to Zaire and other southern African nations was needed "to help ensure continued Western access to key strategic minerals."

Southeastern Zaire is rich in cobalt, a vital alloy in aircraft manufacture, as well as copper and zinc.

The overall foreign aid bill was approved 8-1. Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., who favored deeper cuts in aid, voted against it.

The bill includes $6.74 billion in direct grants to foreign countries. The balance of the money is in the form of commitments by the United States to guarantee loans.

It would provide $1.47 billion in military grants and economic support funds to Israel, compared with a little over $1 billion requested by the administration.

It reduced military aid and economic support funds for El Salvador from the requested $166 million to the current level of $66 million.

The measure authorizes funds for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The money will have to be appropriated by separate legislation.

Iran's Khomeini calls for Iraq's 'repentance'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini says Iran's battlefield victories in the Persian Gulf war spell the end of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and that Iraq's Arab supporters "are digging their own graves."

Khomeini warned the oil-producing Gulf states to "repent and return to Islam today. Tomorrow will be too late."

The statement by the 82-year-old patriarch of Iran's revolution was read in Tehran Thursday by his son, Ahmed, and broadcast today by Iran's state radio. It was his strongest warning to the Arab regimes of the Gulf since his forces recaptured Iran's southwestern port city of Khorramshahr and drove the invading Iraqis back to their border on Monday.

"The reactionary regimes of the region have become slaves of the United States, and worse than that, of Israel," Khomeini said, charging that these governments were planning to return Egypt to the Arab fold as a military counterweight to Iran. Ironically, Israeli officials have recently confirmed that they have supplied arms to Iran.

"Saddam (Hussein) will not be freed from his trap. He and his (Arab Socialist Baath) party have no other alternative but to leave," Khomeini said in reiterating Iran's demand that the Iraqi president must be removed as a pre-condition for a negotiated settlement of the 20-month-old war.

Soviets to be held in Switzerland

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Three Soviet soldiers who were captured by Afghan rebels arrived here today for internment in neutral Switzerland.

They were the first of an unspecified but small number of prisoners being flown to Switzerland under an accord arranged by the International Committee of the Red Cross, Soviet authorities and representatives of the Afghan resistance groups.

Foreign Office spokesman Othmar Uhl said the prisoners would remain "under the care of Switzerland" until the end of hostilities in Afghanistan or a maximum of two years.

Uhl said Switzerland agreed to accept them as a "humanitarian gesture" and that the action was a "direct consequence of our policy of neutrality."

They will be held at an undisclosed location, Uhl said, adding that their movements would be restricted.

The International Committee of the Red Cross was ordered to leave Afghanistan late in 1980 but has long requested permission to resume its activities in the strife-torn country.

"Our request still stands," ICRC spokesman Jean-Jacques Kurz said when asked whether the humanitarian organization hoped that the prisoners accord might be followed by Red Cross delegates returning to Kabul.

Kurz said the Soviets were captured between four and seven months ago. He declined to give their identities or ranks.

The Soviet Union sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1980 to aid the Marxist Afghan government in its ongoing war with anti-Communist Moslem rebels.

Arizona physicist challenging Einstein

On Wednesday, Henry A. Hill went on the defensive at the New York Academy of Sciences, where he met with Einstein's defenders.

"A very prominent physicist told me I'd better be right, because if I was wrong I'd be finished in physics," Hill said.

"I've been a heretic ever since I've been in grad school," Hill said. "It's a painful way of life."

Hill said he has been nearly thrown out of other physicists' offices and has written controversial scientific articles he was never able to publish.

The latest controversy began April 6, when he announced to the Royal Astronomical Society in Dublin, Ireland, that careful observations of the sun had led him to conclude there was an error in Einstein's General Theory of Relativity.

If Hill is right and Einstein is wrong, much of 20th century physics will collapse in a heap. Physicists who have invested their lives building on Einstein's theory are not going to take that lightly.

Since 1916, when Einstein published the theory, physicists have tried every measurement and calculation they could think of to try to prove or disprove it.

The theory has passed every test, and as a consequence has become one of the most important underpinnings of modern physics.

One of the theory's triumphs has been its explanation of a slight deviation in the orbit of Mercury, the planet nearest the sun. The orbit — a giant oval path around the sun — precesses, or rotates, ever so slightly. Before Einstein, scientists were unable to say why.

The detailed calculations of relativity provide a neat mathematical explanation for the precession of Mercury's orbit, but those calculations assume the sun is perfectly round. If the sun should turn out not to be round, Einstein's theory would be in trouble.

Hill has made detailed observations of waves of hot, glowing gases rolling across the burning surface of the sun, and calculated that the sun is rotating and its north and south poles are slightly flattened.

If his calculations are correct — if the sun is indeed flattened at its poles — then Einstein's theory is wrong.

Jorgen Christensen-Dalsgaard, a physicist at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Colorado and an Einstein defender, said Hill's measurements were correct but his interpretation of them was in error.

Another physicist, Edward Spiegel of Columbia University, argued Hill's findings might make it necessary to tamper with relativity, but that the overall theory would remain intact.

NEW YORK (AP) — No librarians shushed the laughter when humorists Peter DeVries, Fran Lebowitz, Russell Baker, Nora Ephron and Calvin Trillin read from their works at the New York Public Library's annual literary luncheon.

DeVries, speaking Thursday in the library's south reading room, offered epigrams of modern life, such as "God is love" and "If a man answers, hang up."

Miss Lebowitz told of looking for an apartment in New York, and calling a friend in a highly desirable building to learn whether anyone had died overnight. Told no, she considered the possibility that "high ceilings and decorative moldings prolong life."

Baker told of his problems writing a play, which at one point was about a "Chicago flower girl who falls in love with Marconi and inspires him to invent radio." Miss Ephron read from a work in progress, describing a man so neat that he "put hospital corners on the newspaper he used to line the hamster cages."

Hartford

NEW YORK (AP) — Multimillionaire A&P supermarket heir Huntington Hartford has lost his bid to block fellow co-op apartment owners from evicting him from their posh Beekman Place building.

Hartford's neighbors at 1 Beekman Place voted in March to evict him as "undesirable." Hartford sought a temporary injunction from Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Allen Murray Myers blocking the eviction while he tried to invalidate the vote.

But Myers denied the injunction motion Thursday, clearing the way for Hartford's neighbors to commence eviction proceedings in Housing Court. The judge also ordered a speedy trial of the legal issues concerning the eviction vote.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed in court papers that Hartford has listed the luxury duplex for sale.

Lawyer Victor Kovner, representing 1 Beekman Corp, the co-op corporation, said in court papers that the other apartment owners will move to evict the 70-year-old multimillionaire unless the co-op is sold within "a reasonable period."

The co-op board voted to evict Hartford after deciding that he had violated a provision of his lease forbidding people of "dissolute, loose or immoral character" from entering the premises.

Hartford, who has lived in the 20-room East Side apartment for 28 years, has charged that the board's action was motivated by social prejudice against his ex-wife and others he associates with.

Charges are pending in Manhattan Criminal Court against Hartford's fourth and most recent ex-wife, 29-year-old Elaine Kay, and her 17-year-old roommate, Ariana Adereth, who were accused of assaulting another young woman and shaving her head in the Hartford apartment in January.

Both were charged with unlawful imprisonment, assault and criminal possession of a weapon.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor George Segal's wife is suing him for divorce, citing irreconcilable differences, a Los Angeles Superior Court clerk reports.

Marion Segal filed a petition with the court last week to dissolve her 25-year marriage to the actor, a clerk for the court's indexing division said Thursday.

The Segals have one child, 16-year-old Polly Segal, who lives with her mother in Beverly Hills.

Mrs. Segal's suit seeks custody of their daughter, support for herself and the girl and an undetermined amount of property.

Segal starred in "Blume in Love," "A Touch of Class" and "Fun with Dick and Jane."

Space monkey celebrates 25th birthday

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Miss Baker, one of the first two animals recovered alive from an American space flight, celebrates her birthday and the 23rd anniversary of her historic journey today, literally a museum piece but still adored by the nation's children.

Miss Baker, at 25 the oldest squirrel monkey in captivity, gets an average of 100 letters a day at the Alabama Space and Rocket Museum, where she lives in a plexiglass home amid space-age exhibits and replicas of flying machines.

A delegation of preschoolers and other well-wishers are getting cake today for Miss Baker's birthday, but the 1-pound monkey is getting her own favorite meal — strawberry Jello and bananas. She is the equivalent of 100 human years old.

Miss Baker "delights visitors every day with her energy and antics with husband Norman," said Space Center Director Edward Buckbee, adding that she is doing well.

"We believe she is well rested for a space shuttle mission the next time NASA needs a space veteran for a special project," Buckbee said.

Miss Baker and a female rhesus monkey named Able blasted into space on May 28, 1959, in a tiny capsule atop a Jupiter rocket. The rocket reached a speed of 10,000 mph and flew higher than 300 miles.

When the monkeys' capsule parachuted safely into the ocean after a flight lasting 1⅛ hours, it proved to American space officials that animals can survive outside the Earth's atmosphere and gravity.

The two monkeys made headlines throughout the world. Earlier attempts by the United States to send animals aloft in rockets had resulted in the animals' death. The Soviet Union also experimented with sending animals up in rockets, beginning in 1949.

Able died shortly after the flight, apparently from the effects of an anesthetic administered prior to removing an electrode embedded in her skin. Miss Baker outlived her first mate, Big George, and now lives a life of celebrity with her current mate, Norman.

Every one of the letters to Miss Baker is answered. Children "send little things like feathers, balloons and pictures of themselves," Sentell said.

"One of the most poignant letters recently was from a little girl who said her mother had died and she didn't have any friends, so she asked Miss Baker to be her friend," he said.

Miss Baker's birthday is celebrated on May 28, although it's not the exact date. "It's a little arbitrary, but it's within a few weeks either way," Sentell said.

The monkey was brought to the United States from Peru for space flight training at an early age.

She was moved to the museum from the Naval Aerospace Center in Pensacola, Fla., in 1971.

At 25, she has already outlived by 10 years the life expectancy of squirrel monkeys. Buckbee attributed her continued good health to a carefully controlled diet, an enclosed environment and regular visits by a veterinarian.

Fans seem relieved Marlena isn't dead

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fans of the NBC soap opera "Days of Our Lives" heaved a sigh of relief after four anxious days when they learned that Dr. Marlena Evans was not the victim of the Salem Strangler.

More than 1,500 avid fans had telephoned NBC in New York and Los Angeles since the apparent murder of Marlena on Monday to protest her death.

After Thursday's show 250 persons called New York and another 230 called here, said NBC publicist Carol Fleisher. In addition, executive producer Al Rabin said calls at the rate of one every 30 seconds were coming in directly to the production office.

Actress Deidre Hall, who plays Dr. Evans, was on the telephone several days to console her worried fans. After Thursday's show she got back on the telephone to talk to some of the people calling in to the production office.

Miami-based cargo carrier winner in FAA lotteries

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tiny Miami-based cargo carrier collected the biggest bonanza in a lottery conducted by the Federal Aviation Administration to allocate the rights to 276 daily landings held by Braniff International Airways.

Of the series of 37 random drawings Thursday for slots at airports in 19 states and the District of Columbia, Fleming International Airways won first place seven times and finished in the top four 12 times.

"Fleming is a cargo carrier. But there isn't any restriction. They can fly cargo if they wish," said Dick Stafford, an FAA public affairs spokesman.

Continental Airlines, Delta Airlines, New York Air, Northwest Orient Airlines and Frontier Airlines fared best among carriers planning to offer passenger service in time slots formerly held by Braniff.

In the drawings that lasted 2½ hours, Continental was the first selected in the draw at three airports, second at one, third at four and fourth at six airports. That gave the line a total of 14 finishes in the top four.

Each carrier submitted requests for Braniff arrival times at an airport. If more than one arrival time was available at an airport, airlines besides the one selected first for that airport could get landing slots.

Delta, New York Air and Northwest Orient won top-four selection rights at nine airports each, while Frontier was in the top four at eight airports.

Pan American World Airways and U.S. Air were top-four picks in the lotteries of seven airports apiece, while United Airlines finished in the top four at six airports.

The number of landing "slots" up for grabs varied from one at some airports to as many as 57 at Dallas-Fort Worth, where Braniff has its headquarters.

Braniff had an allocation of more than 400 arrival slots when it suspended its operations May 12 and filed for court protection from creditors under the bankruptcy laws.

Many at the FAA auditorium for the lottery had never heard of Fleming and had not expected a cargo carrier to compete for the landing rights.

Whispers of "Who's Fleming?" spread across the room after the carrier was picked first twice in a row early in the lottery.

Midland Regional Airport among those in FAA lotteries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here, for each of 37 airports, are the first airlines selected Thursday in a series of FAA lotteries Thursday to get first pick of flights formerly operated by Braniff Airways. Subject to FAA review next week, the carriers will have priority for up to two slots in airports where one to 10 slots are available, three slots where 11 to 30 slots are available, and four slots where 31 or more slots are available. Number in parentheses indicates slots available:

Midland-Odessa, Texas (6) — Western, American, New York Air, Delta. (One or more slots might be available if a carrier operating out of Midland-Odessa on an emergency basis alloted after Braniff's suspension gave up the slot in order to be eligible for more slots in Thursday's drawing.)
Amarillo, Texas (4) Continental, Transamerica Airlines, Frontier, Southwest Airlines.
Austin, Texas (5) — Southwest Airlines, Delta, Northwest Orient, U.S. Air, Continental.
Nashville, Tenn. (3) — Piedmont, Delta, Capitol Air, Continental.
Corpus Christi, Texas (3) — Fleming International Airways, Northwest Orient, Continental, Pan American World.
Washington National (6) — Fleming International, New York Air, Frontier, Coastal Airlines, Eastern.

Officials seek disaster declaration

FALFURRIAS, Texas (AP) — Officials here have asked Gov. Bill Clements to declare Brooks County a disaster area because of $3 million in property and agriculture damage from Monday's heavy rains and flooding.

Brooks County Judge Joe B. Garcia asked for the disaster declaration Thursday.

Duval County Judge Gilberto Uresti estimated $1 million in losses in the adjoining Southwest Texas county.

An estimated 100 families fled their homes when water reached depths of 2 to 3 feet following a 10-inch downpour Monday. The ground already was saturated from earlier rains.

Watermelon and sorghum crops suffered at least $350,000 in damages, said Brooks County extension agent Terry Lockamy. About 300 of the 2,000 acres of watermelon and 1,000 of the 3,000 acres of grain were lost to flood waters.

The damage was worse than that from Hurricane Allen, when 25 percent of Brooks County was under water, Garcia said.

An estimated 2,000 acres in watermelon and sorghum crops in Duval County were damaged by rains, said Ramon Garcia of the Soil Conservation Service.

Standing water in the fields also threatens to destroy between 3,000 to 5,000 acres of Cameron County cotton in the Rio Grande Valley.

Senate approves $50 million in prison appropriations

By KATHY BAKER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Senators have approved a prison appropriation of about $28 million less than recommended by a House committee.

But that difference could be resolved today as the special session winds down.

The Senate voted 28-1 Thursday in favor of Sen. Bill Meier's $50 million appropriation for the overcrowded Texas Department of Corrections. On Wednesday, the House Appropriation Committee, coming much closer to the amount sought by the TDC, approved a $78.6 million package.

That committee was to look at the Senate bill today and decide which version the full House should debate.

TDC Director Jim Estelle told the Senate Finance Committee on Thursday that the prison system has been gaining 500 new inmates a month and must embark on a $630 million construction program over the next four years.

With utilities and extra staff added, the program would add up to about $1 billion, he said.

Estelle said the $85 million sought by prison officials would be used to start up construction of 13 1,000-bed units, speed up current construction and adapt existing building for inmate housing. The House package includes those items.

Gov. Bill Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Bill Clayton all favor an appropriation close to the $50 million approved by the Senate.

The $50 million Senate package includes $34 million for new construction, speed-up of current construction projects, and adaptation of existing buildings for inmate housing. The remainder would go for additional staff, staff housing and increases in parole and probation services.

Estelle said the limited funding probably would be used to build two 1,000-bed dormitories, rather than more expensive and time-consuming cellblocks.

After the meeting, Estelle said it would be risky to house inmates in dormitories rather than cells, because accelerated release programs designed to ease overcrowding "further distill the prison population down to the type of inmate that requires that kind of housing."

TDC board Chairman T.L. Austin said the system needs more cellblocks and insisted legislators eventually will have to face spending more for prisons.

"I think this state is going to have to spend a billion dollars on prisons," Austin said.

At his news conference Thursday, Clements would not back down from his refusal to make a "premature" commitment to the $630 million TDC building program.

He said he wants a task force to study the prison problems before taking any major steps.

"We're going to have to give consideration to building different types of prisons than maximum security," Clements said. "I don't know of anyone who wants to embark on a $1 billion program of maximum security prisons. That's no answer."

Men sentenced to death

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A Pima County Superior Court judge imposed the death sentence Thursday on two Texas men convicted of the March 1980 kidnapping, rape and murder of a Tucson woman.

Judge Michael J. Brown told Joe Lambright, 34, of Orange and Robert D. Smith, 33, of Pearland that the protection of society and the provisions of state law demanded the death penalty.

Lambright and Smith were convicted in March of the first-degree murder, kidnapping and rape of Sandra K. Owen.

They had been accused of picking up the 29-year-old woman as she was hitchhiking in the city and killing her in a remote desert area about 20 miles south of Casa Grande.

Authorities in Texas and Louisiana began investigating the case after hearing reports that two men in Houston were talking about a murder they had committed in Tucson. The men were arrested near the Texas-Louisiana border in March 1981.

Brown termed the slaying a "totally unnecessary adjunct to the assault and kidnapping," committed more for "personal gratification" than for any other purpose.

The judge also sentenced each man to two, consecutive 21-year prison terms for their rape and kidnapping convictions.

MMH board discusses expansion plans

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Future expansion plans, resignations and appointments were featured at the Midland Memorial Hospital board of trustees meeting Thursday.

Ray Branson, MMH president, told the trustees that the hospital received a copy of Parkview Hospital's certificate of need application for a $17.5 million, 110-bed general acute care hospital Wednesday.

And it looks as though MMH will be in competition with Parkview. Branson said MMH's certificate of need application for a $14 million, 77-bed expansion will be hand-delivered to the trustees and board of directors on June 4. They will have until June 9 to look over the application, and then give a recommendation on whether or not to submit it to the state and local health agencies.

"What affect will theirs have on ours? What will be our chances?" asked Douglas Scharbauer, trustee.

Branson explained that the chances have to do with bed need.

"We have done a bed need study and we must meet the needs of the community," he said, adding that a deciding factor would be testimony by the "experts" to the Texas Health Facilites Commission.

Dr. Henrie Mast, MMH director chairman, asked Branson if Parkview's project cost included the price of land, and Branson said yes. Mast then asked how the difference in the cost of the two projects could be justified.

"Ours is $14 million for 77 beds; theirs is $17 million for 110," Mast said.

John Dorn, trustee and chairman of the planning and building committees, told the board that the MMH project includes more than just rooms and it could be less than the projected $14 million.

"We might be coming in with less money than you're thinking," Dorn said.

Branson added that another factor for the difference could be Parkview's square footage per bed was less than what is usually allotted, making its cost less.

In other board business, Roy Campbell announced that two board members — Richard Gibson whose appointment would have terminated in 1985 and Robert Bledsoe who should have continued until 1984 — have submitted their resignations. This brings the total appointed trustee board down to 15 members.

Campbell told the board that Gibson had too many demands on his time and Bledsoe wanted to leave the administrative capacity to continue in direct patient contact, which he does through weekly patient visitations.

Campbell also announced committee appointments.

Eugene Abbott was appointed chairman of the Image and Public Relations committee, while also serving on the executive committee, building and planning committee.

Martin Neill, former MMH director, was appointed to the trustees in April. Because of his expertise in finance, Neill was asked to serve on the finance committee, while also serving on the executive and joint conference committees.

And Tom Bruner, one of the newer trustees, was appointed to serve the quality assurance, finance and joint conference committees.

In the board of directors meeting, which began more than an hour late because of a long trustee executive session, the directors briefly gave their reports and went on to financial matters.

The board accepted a bid from the House of Carpet for $3,650 and signed a $18,697.77 check to pay for indigent care.

The board members also discussed the legalities of how an amendment to the budget should be displayed.

Ted Kerr, MMH attorney, adivised the board that as long as the amendment is approved, the board could display, or attach a separate page to the original budget.

"As long as the variances stay within the guidelines, we just have to take note of it," Edwin Magruder, director, said. "If you're constantly amending the budget, you lose sight of where you started."

In other financial matters, the patient revenues totaled $2,160,261, a favorable variance from budget of $378,888 and expenses exceeded the budget by $96,258.

Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance, stated in the financial report that items contributing to the variance were prior period salary adjustments of $46,113, and overtime of $52,320.

In addition, for the month of April the excess of revenue over expense from operation totaled $205,294, a favorable variance of $247,257.

Bad debts turned over to collectors for April totaled $104,217 bringing the amount to date to $1,117,536.

House failure to pass budget 'stuns' leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cracks in Republican ranks and a surprise rejection of Medicare savings for next year left stunned leaders of both parties watching their budget strategies crumble in the House early today.

"We're going to march into the sea. ... The Pharaoh's army is breathing down our necks," House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said jokingly Thursday just before the full House began voting down budget plan after budget plan.

When it was over early today, legislators had rejected carefully crafted blueprints from Republican leaders — carrying President Reagan's endorsement — from Democratic leaders and from a bipartisan coalition of moderates.

Even a dramatic last-ditch appeal to legislators from House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., to let the American people "know that Congress did its job and passed a budget" failed.

But House Republican leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, who had been expressing confidence earlier in the week that he could piece together a narrow victory, said that perhaps the House would have to try "moving just a few more degrees to the right" to find a budget that can pass.

The action left weary legislators no choice but to try again to come up with a spending plan that can gain a majority in the rebellious House.

House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla., announced that his panel would meet informally later today to try to pull the process back together.

Rejection of the Republican plan, on a 235-192 vote, was a blow to the president and his House supporters. It followed on the heels of Senate passage Thursday night of housing subsidies over a veto threat, making it Reagan's second legislative defeat in the day.

After five days of slogging through dozens of amendments and seven budget alternatives, the House finally rejected the three main rival budgets along with the amendments that had been attached to them.

The coalition plan backed by moderate Republicans and Democrats was rejected 289-137. Defeated 253-171 was a Democratic leadership-endorsed plan drafted by Jones' committee and carrying floor amendments.

The critical blow that brought down the process came when Republican conservatives, upset at the record-breaking deficits under consideration, revolted and joined with Democrats in passing an amendment by Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, that called for full financing of Medicare at the expense of Reagan's planned defense buildup.

Food stamp program called 'subsidy for Puerto Ricans'

DALLAS (AP) — J. Peter Grace triggered demands for his resignation as head of President Reagan's spending watchdog committee when he said here that the food stamp program is basically a "subsidy for Puerto Ricans."

Grace, head of Reagan's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control in the Federal Government, made the comment Thursday to a meeting of the American Feed and Grain Manufacturers Association.

Puerto Ricans are getting more than their share of food stamps, said Grace, the chief executive officer of W.R. Grace & Co. of New York.

Puerto Rico not only gets a share of the money allocated for food stamps, but a greater number of Puerto Ricans living in the United States are on food stamps as well, he told the businessmen.

Resident Commissioner Baltasar Corrada, who represents Puerto Rico in Congress, urged the administration to publicly reject the comments and to demand the immediate resignation of Grace.

"J. Peter Grace's comment to the effect that the federal food stamp program is basically a subsidy for Puerto Ricans is an affront and insult to Puerto Ricans both on the island as well as on the U.S. Mainland," Corrada said in a telephone interview from Washington.

Corrada said the food stamp program currently serves 23,036,722 Americans. He said if participants from Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam were excluded, the program would still serve 21,169,130 people on the U.S. mainland.

"It is unfortunate that Grace was speaking in his official capacity ...," said Corrada. "His remarks are totally out of touch with reality and reflect a complete lack of sensitivity towards the needs of poor Americans as well as Puerto Ricans who are U.S. Citizens whether they reside on the mainland or in Puerto Rico."

Senate ditches tax break

WASHINGTON (AP) — Without a voice raised in objection, the Senate is ditching the politically unpopular tax break that gives members of Congress an audit-proof $75-a-day deduction.

But the fate of the special deduction will rest with a House-Senate conference committee that could overturn the Senate's 70-23 action late Thursday.

By that vote, senators adopted an amendment by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., to repeal the tax break of nearly $20,000 a year, a deduction that generated a public outcry. Congress voted to give itself the break last year.

Proxmire's tax-break repeal was attached to an unrelated funding bill which was then passed and sent to the conference committee. Since the House-passed version of the bill does not deal with the congressional tax break, conferees could vote to cancel the Senate's action.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Depressed child should be treated

Dear Dr. Solomon: I knew something was wrong with my daughter. She is always so sad. Normally a top student, her grades in school have dropped markedly. Now she hardly talks at all. Our doctor has diagnosed her as being depressed. What do I do now? — S.R., Akron, Ohio

Dear S.R.: Discuss therapy with your doctor and the possibility of having a psychiatrist help your daughter through this difficult period. There has been some success in the use of tricyclic antidepressants for severely depressed children. Discuss with your doctors the benefits your daughter might receive from these.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I waited until my niece gave birth before writing to you. While she was pregnant, she was operated on for appendicitis. Fortunately, the operation did not cause any damage. What I would like to know is whether there isn't some way to postpone an operation of this kind when a woman is pregnant. It seems to me that doing so would be a better idea. — Ms. V.T., Newport, R.I.

Dear Ms. T.: Unfortunately, conditions do not always permit the luxury of postponing surgery until the ideal moment. If certain circumstances require the need for surgery in a nonpregnant woman, the same circumstances would dictate surgery in a pregnant woman.

Dr. Robert D. Croom III, of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, notes that the diagnosis of appendicitis becomes more difficult as the pregnancy advances, and that delay in diagnosing and treating the condition can have serious consequences. Gangrene, for example, tends to occur more often as the length of the pregnancy increases.

On the other hand, the risk of an abortion if exploratory surgery proves negative is relatively small. And finally, the appendicitis itself can cause spontaneous abortion, premature labor and serious harm to both the mother and child.

Abdominal surgery should not be undertaken lightly in any patient, but sometimes neither the patient nor the physician can afford to wait.

Dear Dr. Solomon: In your recent column of Jan. 20, 1982, you quoted the American Academy of Pediatrics statement that oral contraceptives are "safe" for lactating women as an answer to the mother who wanted to know if there were any reasons she should not take the "Pill" while breastfeeding. However, even the AAP statement acknowledges that the quantity and ingredients of breast milk may change as a result of oral contraceptive use. The real issue which must be addressed concerns the possible long-term harmful effects on the infant as a result of his mother's use of oral contraceptives while breastfeeding. These effects on the infant have not been well researched and therefore, remain largely unknown. Moreover, the research which purports to have studied the effects of oral contraceptives taken by lactating women differs vastly in its methodological design, use of controls, geographic locations, size and make-up of samples, timing of administration of the oral contraceptive and subsequent collection of human milk, method of human milk collection, measures which indicate "adequate" or "inadequate" infant growth, and measurement of the amount of hormone which affects the infant. — Mrs. Joseph Blumen, La Leche League International, Newport, R.I.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D, 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Cutting salt may do more harm than good

Copley News Service

At a time when the federal government is pushing sodium reduction as a national health goal, an increasing number of scientists are saying that the results not only won't be helpful, but may be detrimental.

The issues involved are staggering.

Sodium intake has long been accepted as a key factor in the development of high blood pressure, which in turn is a major contributor to cardiovascular disease — the single most important cause of morbidity and mortality in American society.

Yet, in fact, says Dr. David McCarron, chief of the Hypertension Clinic at the University of Oregon, the development of high blood pressure is the result of a complex set of factors of which sodium is only one — and not the most important one at that.

Contrary to the popular emphasis on dietary factors, the primary contributors to hypertension are genetic predisposition, obesity, age, lack of exercise and smoking, said McCarron.

While diet plays an important role in hypertension, he takes exception to singling out any one nutrient in the American diet as the villain.

"There have been clues lurking in the background for years that people with high blood pressure have problems with calcium balance," McCarron says.

Crime of sexual child abuse uncovered

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — More than a year after teacher David Garcia's arrest, the city of Las Cruces, N.M., is still divided over whether he is guilty of molesting pupils in his second-grade class.

Garcia's wife, Marie, contends he is a victim of an unexplained plot by 18 of his pupils and that none of the allegations against him are true.

Parents of the pupils who claimed to have engaged in sexual activity with their teacher say the children still bear the wounds of Garcia's actions. They say Garcia is getting off light by pleading no contest to three counts of a 35-count indictment against him. The other 32 counts were dropped.

Other teachers at Valley View Elementary School, where Garcia remains employed in a non-teaching job, are supporting Garcia and have collected $2,000 to help with his defense.

Meanwhile, Garcia's future lies in the balance. His lawyer says the teacher was coerced into pleading no contest and will appeal once he is sentenced.

Garcia's case was one of several documented in a four-day series of articles on sexual abuse of children by The El Paso Times called "The Betrayal of Innocence."

The dark crime of sexual child abuse has surfaced in three southern New Mexico cities in the past 13 months. Former Alamogordo mayor Frank Carr Jr. — a youth counselor — admitted 35 incidents of fondling young girls and was sentenced to four years in prison. Last month, Thomas McKeg, 37, operator of a day care center in Roswell, was indicted on 37 counts of sex crimes with children aged 4 and 5.

IN EACH case, the accused was in a position of responsibility in dealing with children. But researchers are discovering that sexual child abuse most often goes undetected and is more prevalent than earlier believed.

The case of Garcia perhaps is the most unusual because it involves a group of children — classmates under his care.

Parents said the children told them Garcia showed the class photographs of naked people, some performing sex acts, and got the students to rub his back and his legs.

The parents quoted the children as saying Garcia got some pupils who crawled under his desk for the leg rubs to fondle him and had some of the girls sit on his lap while his pants were unzipped.

One parent, identified in the articles by the fictitious name George Kilgallen, called other parents after his 7-year-old son told him Garcia exposed himself in class.

Parents went to the school en masse April 8, 1981, and related the stories to principal Fred Burgess. Garcia said he could explain everything, but he never got the chance because Kilgallen already had called police.

A grand jury later indicted Garcia on 35 sex charges ranging from criminal sexual penetration to providing offensive books and pictures to minors.

On Oct. 23, Garcia agreed to plead no contest to three counts of providing pornographic literature to the students. The other charges were dropped in a plea bargaining agreement.

ATTORNEY GRACE Duran says Garcia was pressured into the plea bargaining agreement and that she will appeal the arrangement after Garcia is sentenced. A sentencing hearing was held Jan. 13 and more than 50 letters supporting Garcia's character were presented to the court. Sentencing was postponed until Garcia completes a psychiatric evaluation.

Among the teachers supporting Garcia is Barbara Davis, who insists the entire incident was created by the children's imaginations following reports of a child molester in the area.

"Children tell a story enough times and pretty soon, they begin to believe it themselves," she said.

But Lisa Barry, a sex abuse counselor at Southwest Community Mental Health Services in Las Cruces, discounts the possibility that the stories were a plot by the students.

"Children simply don't fantasize about things like that," Ms. Barry said. "It's always easier to believe the child lied than to believe an adult is capable of such things."

Ms. Barry said the response of the teachers is typical in sexual abuse cases and is one of the reasons it is difficult to research or halt sexual abuse of children, including incest.

"People don't like to talk about sex with their children," she said, "and no one wants to think that the nice old man down the street is abusing children."

BUT WHILE the problem is kept in the closet, as many as one girl in four will fall victim to sexual abuse before she reaches 18, the Times reported. Half as many boys will suffer the same fate.

New Mexico's best statistics show 40 percent of the sex crime victims who went to the state's mental health offices in fiscal year 1981 were under the age of 18. In El Paso in 1981, more than 26 percent of last year's reported sexual assault victims were 17 or younger.

But sexual abuse is one of the country's least reported crimes and Ms. Barry said parents often never know when their child has been abused because the child fears he will be ostracized if he tells.

Susan Cave, co-director of the Northeast Forensic Teams in Santa Fe, N.M., said the child who keeps the abuse secret and doesn't receive therapy often has problems as an adult.

Ms. Barry said girls who have been abused often fall into a destructive pattern where they either become promiscuous because they equate sex with affection or grow up repulsed by sex.

Worker's moment in limelight didn't pay off

By SARA RIMER
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

BALTIMORE — Now, Bruzzy Willders is back to being just another factory worker, making $5.75 an hour on the graveyard shift, with 30 minutes for lunch, two 15-minute breaks and one week of vacation. But he was a big man on his block for a little while during the campaign days of 1980, when the Republican Party, seeking to change its fat-cat image, plucked him from the unemployment line and put him on national television as the Unemployed American Factory Worker.

He was so cool and believable on the tube that his friends said he was Hollywood-bound. The media sophisticates of the GOP loved him as well, or at least said they did. They said that his commercial — the one where he was seen walking through his closed-down Baltimore plant in blue jeans and a T-shirt and heard saying, "If the Democrats are for the working man, how come we're not working?" — was one of the best of the year. It was seen by tens of millions.

But the fame was fleeting, followed hard by disillusionment. He thought the pols who discovered him and fussed over him would help him get a job at the post office.

"They said, 'Yeah, we'll see what we can do. We'll let you know,' " Willders recalled the other day. "I felt like I was bothering them. I went down and took the test. I was put on a list and I never heard no more about it."

He thought he would get a special invitation to Ronald Reagan's inaugural festivities. All he got was an 11-by-14-inch card that warned, "Please Note: This is a commemorative invitation and does not constitute admission to any of the inaugural events." At first Willders, known in his working-class northeast Baltimore neighborhood as the man who was inauguration-bound, thought the invitation was real.

"I SAID, 'Yeah, I got one, I really got one!' Then I looked at it and I said, 'What is this?' I was really disappointed. Here I am telling everybody I'm going to the inauguration."

He showed the commemorative invitation to his father, a Democrat who worked 26 years for Armco Steel and died last fall of diabetes. "I said, 'Look what they sent me, pop. This is the president.' He said, 'That's your man. You worked for him.' "

Willders' friends are equally unsympathetic. A lot of them are still out of work — more of them than ever, in fact — and they now find Willders a convenient scapegoat for their condition. "They tell me, 'Hell, it's your fault 'cause (Reagan's) in there. Talk to your buddy, Ron. Tell him to help us out,' " he said. "They think I go over to his house or something. I say, 'Hey, I'm on the outside, too, looking in.' "

Willders, a 34-year-old bachelor, is a Democrat who voted Republican for the first time when he cast his ballot for Ronald Reagan. The former movie star from California won't get his vote a second time, Willders says. "He had his shot. The first year I said, 'Give him a chance.' But around here, A&P and Pantry Pride are closing up. General Motors: no work. Bethlehem Steel: no work. Big layoffs. Something's gotta be done."

The most recent Baltimore unemployment figure, for March, is 10.8 percent — higher than the national 9.4 percent — with 117,700 people out of work. When the commercial was released in September 1980, the figure was 7.3 percent, with 76,889 unemployed.

Willders joined the ranks of the unemployed two years ago when Weyerhauser Co. closed its Baltimore plant, where he made $5.75 an hour, the same salary he makes today, for printing labels on corrugated cardboard boxes.

The National Republican Congressional Committee found him by asking the local unemployment office to call plant employees who had been laid off and offer them a tryout for a $50-an-hour job in the commercial. Willders was a natural. But a day or two before the commercial was shot, he found a $4.10-an-hour job at Moldcraft, the plastics factory where he works today. The party decided to go ahead with the commercial anyway.

FOR HIS role, Willders, a long-haired, bearded, nonsmoker, cut his hair, shaved his beard and stuffed a pack of Lucky Strikes in the pocket of his T-shirt. "Everyone was congratulating me on my poise," he said.

Steve Sandler, the committee's communications director, said at the time: "We wanted a real slice-of-life commercial, not actors, but the real feelings of a person who's actually out of work." Willders earned $3,465.62: $550 for the shooting, plus residuals he collected each time the ad was broadcast.

"They showed it on Monday Night Football, and then it all started happening," he recalled. "All the TV stations came around and interviewed me. A lady in Atlanta did a magazine article on me. A lot of people came up to me and said, 'Hey, you did great.' I was in the bank and a lady said, 'Hey, didn't you do that commercial?' A few people asked me for autographs. People said it could be my big chance, people said it might lead to Hollywood. ... I was waiting to see what would happen. But nothing ever came about."

Disappointed though he is by the Republicans, Bruzzy Willders is exactly what they were looking for during the campaign. "Just a simple guy," he calls himself. He enlisted in the Army after high school and is a Vietnam veteran. He plays in the outfield for the Garden Beef and Beer slow-pitch softball team. His big fling after the television commercial was an overnight trip to Ocean City. He does not own a car. He rents a two-bedroom cinder-block house for $220 a month.

He got his first job when he was 15, cleaning windshields at a gas station for 90 cents an hour, and has worked ever since.

"I feel like I'm wasted if I'm not working," he said. He daydreams about finding money. "I always look around. You hear stories about kids finding briefcases full of money. I found a wallet one time, but it was empty. I turned it in, and the guy accused me of stealing the money. That's gratitude."

His hobby is drawing cartoon characters, his favorite being Spiderman, the misunderstood hero. "I can relate to him. He's always getting kicked around."

THAT'S HOW the Republicans treated him, Willders says. "After it all went down, I said, 'That's politics.' I was just a pawn in their chess game."

Rich Galen, press secretary for the National Republican Congressional Committee, says no one promised Willders anything, not a job or an invitation to the inaugural festivities.

"You can't promise a job. It's against the law," Galen said. "The closest anyone can remember is a sort of discussion during the shooting, something like a job at a printing plant is what they can remember. It was back a couple years ago and nobody's too clear anymore. They went so far as to call and find out the procedure. ... By the time we got back to him, he seemed happy with the job he had."

Willders said he never mentioned a job at a printing plant. As for Willders' inaugural hopes, Galen said: "Nobody can remember anything about that. He might have said, 'Well, I'd like to go to the inauguration' and somebody may have said, 'We'll see if we can handle it for you. ... ' Some of these discussions happen in passing."

The Republicans did give him a 1980 Christmas gift: a paperweight and key chain engraved with a picture of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Building (headquarters of the Republican National Committee) and a letter from then-Republican Party campaign chairman Bill Brock that said: "During this Holiday Season, the Republicans have a lot to celebrate and much to be thankful for. ... You have my sincere thanks for an outstanding job well done!"

A lot of (Willder's friends) are still out of work...and they now find Willders a convenient scapegoat for their condition.

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — People dazzled by the potential of tax shelters such as those owned by Attorney General William French Smith should remember that similiar kinds of deals are almost exclusively for the wealthy.

Most shelters, which generally aim to provide a quick tax deduction that is larger than the initial cash investment, pay off only for people in the 50-percent tax bracket.

That means, typically, couples with gross income in the $120,000 range and single persons earning more than $60,000.

Smith's widely publicized tax shelters are in oil and gas drilling. His investment of about $60,000 is designed to produce a deduction three times that large — including a first-year writeoff of $4 for each $1 invested.

Disclosure of the shelters owned by Smith, a millionaire, and President Reagan's defense of them, has again focused attention on investments in tax-avoidance devices.

In the broadest sense, a tax shelter is any investment that lowers a person's tax bill; a popular shelter for middle-income people is an Individual Retirement Account.

But usually a shelter means an investment that offsets taxes on unrelated income, such as a doctor's or a lawyer's fees.

Most shelters are complex arrangements, often involving limited partnerships and loans which individuals are not liable to repay.

But here is a simple one — rejected by the Internal Revenue Service — which shows how a shelter works for a wealthy investor and why it won't work for someone of average means.

A promoter sells a shipment of Bibles for $5,000 "wholesale" and assures the buyer that if they are held for a year, they can be donated to charity and valued at $15,000 "retail." That would produce a $15,000 tax deduction for the buyer.

A typical four-member family with income of $120,000 a year could invest in this tax shelter and cut its tax bill by $10,862 — a saving of $2.17 for each $1 spent on the "wholesale" Bibles.

But a $40,000 family could make the same investment and reduce its tax bill by only $3,457 — a loss of $1,543. Whatever the charitable benefit of such an investment, it offers nothing as a tax shelter for this family.

The reason is the "progressive" nature of the tax system — higher tax rates as income rises. On deductions, the system works in just the opposite fashion; any deduction — whether for medical expenses, mortgage interest or a tax shelter — is worth more to a high-bracket taxpayer than to one at the lower end.

The Internal Revenue Service identified nearly 264,000 tax returns last year on which investments in tax shelters were reported. The three largest kinds are real estate (20 percent of the total), movies (just under 20 percent) and oil and gas (10 percent).

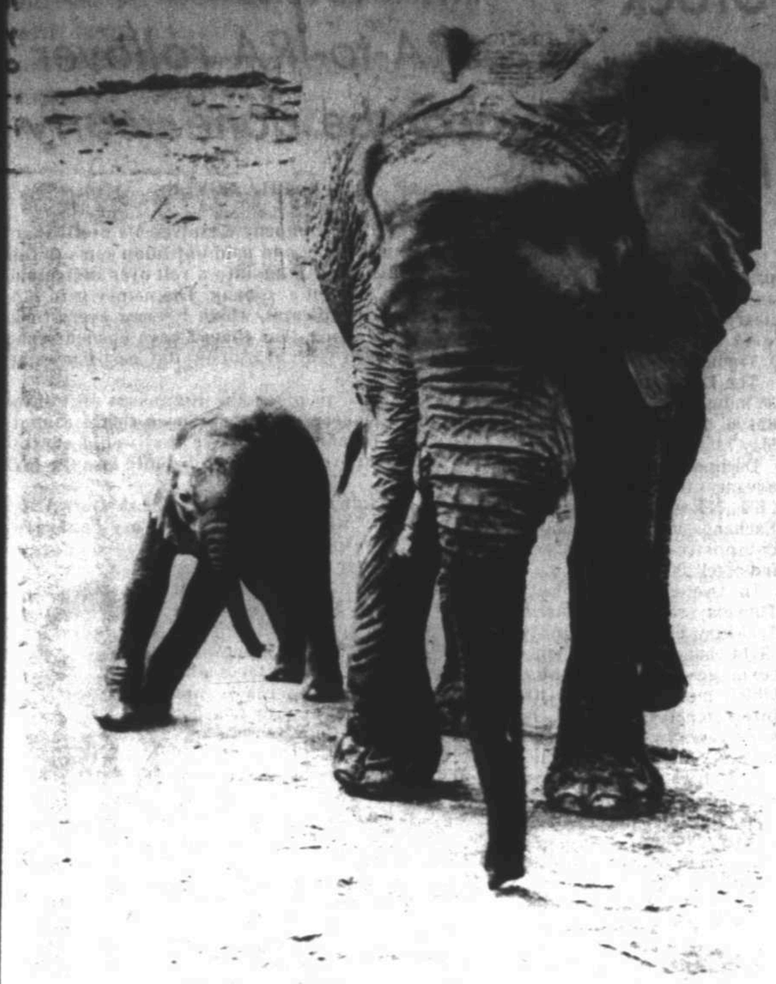

IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. estimates "abusive" shelters cost the government $3.6 billion in revenue a year.

What's the difference in an acceptable shelter and an "abusive" shelter? IRS generally considers an abusive shelter to be one that produces benefits beyond what Congress intended. But that is a matter of judgment.

For example, the law generally allows an investor in an oil well to deduct certain drilling costs immediately, rather than over the years as oil is produced.

Investors in shelters can take advantage of that law. But if IRS thinks the first-year deduction in a given case is too large, it challenges the deal. The taxpayer must justify the deduction or fight IRS in court. Roughly 8,500 shelter cases are pending in U.S. Tax Court.

During the seven months ending on April 30, IRS completed audits on 33,383 tax-shelter returns and reached final agreements on one-third of them, producing $31.3 million in extra taxes. Another 20,229 disputed IRS audits, which involve revenue of $428.2 million, or almost $20,000 per return.

Danger of TV may be in ignoring motor skills

By CARL RITTER
Copley News Service

Watching television hour after hour on a daily basis has had a devastating effect on many young lives, but not in the way critics have led some parents to believe, a Canadian researcher says.

It is not so much the content — with all the violence being shown — as it is the inordinate amount of time children devote to staring at the tube, said Dr. William Arthur Hurst of Gravenhurst, Ontario.

"The real damage may be to the physiological motor functioning within the body," he said. "This is due to the intense 'sensory input only' quality of the instrument, with no active motor response by the viewers.

"Motor skills are therefore ignored. And if long hours from infancy to five years of age are spent in front of the television screen — these being formative years — irreparable damage may be done."

Hurst, a doctor of optometry who has researched the learning disability area for 15 years, pointed out that Scholastic Aptitude Test scores rose steadily from 1950 to 1963, then fell in a pronounced trend reversal.

"At that time the first generation of TV children arrived. SAT scores then dropped for 12 straight years," Hurst said. He reported that the rate of decline doubled finally in a single year.

Hurst went on to comment:

"From the multitude of research accumulated, there is no doubt in my mind and the minds of other researchers that school failure produced by learning disability, coupled with excessive use of television — itself causing illiteracy-induced failure — are major primary causes of juvenile crime."

Learning disability spawned by TV may very well lead to emotional disturbances, alcoholism, drugs and even broken homes as the afflicted individual's sense of self-worth disappears, Hurst said, adding:

"Learning disability — a neurologically impaired base — is the inability of apparently normal children to cope with school, home and society in general. These children have a short attention span, are impulsive and emotionally unstable.

"They have normal or higher than average intelligence but have a specific deficit in one or more motor skills."

The former University of Toronto researcher, who worked with the late Marshall McLuhan, said motor aberrations may be reflected in lack of hand skills such as in printing or in reading, writing, spelling or general body action.

> "Motor skills are therefore ignored. And if long hours from infancy to five years of age are spent in front of the television screen — these being formative years — irreparable damage may be done."

"Ten to 20 percent of the entire population may be affected, and to wait until school age of 5 or 6 years to act upon it is too late for many children, since brain pathways are formed in the first three years of life," he said.

He noted a Colorado study revealed that between 80 and 90 percent of inmates in penal institutions there have a learning disability.

"Within society as a whole," Hurst went on, "92 percent of those with learning disability are male" and he suggested that females are so far ahead of boys in early schooling "that it might be wise to segregate boys for the first three grades."

He would eliminate TV from the preschooler's life and severely restrict elementary student viewing. He summarizes:

"Excessive TV viewing poses the greatest threat to literacy in our Western world...McLuhan intimated that TV is returning us to the tribal aural state...The widespread use of the media may well destroy our literate culture built up over the last 2,700 years."

Industry says summer gas supplies adequate

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the peak driving season beginning this Memorial Day weekend, the oil industry says there's no call for concern about gasoline shortages this summer. But prices are rising again.

The industry's upbeat outlook for summer gasoline supplies comes despite declines in refiners' stockpiles, reimposition of allocations by several oil companies and speculation that motorists may travel more between now and Labor Day than they did last summer.

Meanwhile, analysts say retail prices for gasoline at the pump have been increasing but they still are not as high as last year.

The American Petroleum Institute, the industry's chief lobbyist here, said there will be no shortages because there are still surpluses of unrefined crude oil and plenty of refinery capacity to convert it into gasoline if needed.

"We know of no motorist in any part of the country who will have trouble buying gasoline during normal business hours this summer," Charles J. DiBona, the institute's president, said Thursday.

DiBona said U.S. oil companies now have a 50 million barrel excess of crude oil that could be processed into an additional 40 million to 80 million gallons of gasoline a day by refineries now running at only 65 percent capacity. Those refineries are now producing about 250 million gallons of gasoline a day.

He also cited the 255 million barrels of crude that the government has in its Strategic Petroleum Reserve — something that didn't even exist in the last summer shortages of 1979.

Only a major political disruption such as the 1973 Arab oil boycott or massive breakdowns at the nation's refineries could cause serious problems, he said. But he also noted that the nation is now importing only half the oil it was in 1978.

The institute reported earlier this month that refineries in April increased their shipments of gasoline to wholesalers by 1 percent, the first time in three years that demand has been greater than year-before levels.

But DiBona said that doesn't mean that consumer demand is up. Because of price increases the past month, the nation's 10,000 wholesalers and 190,000 gasoline stations may be stockpiling gasoline in anticipation of further price increases, he said.

"There's a lot of speculation that people are going to go out and do a lot more driving this summer, but we don't know that," DiBona said. "It's very competitive out there and that suggests there's plenty of gasoline available."

The nation's primary stocks of refined gasoline have dropped from a 41-day supply in May 1981 to a 31-day supply as of last week. The normal refinery stockpile going into the summer driving season is a 30-37 day supply.

Because of the decline, several oil companies — including Gulf, Shell, Chevron, Conoco and Cities Service — have begun in the past two weeks putting limits on how much gasoline wholesalers can buy from them.

Oil industry officials say the recent "run" on refineries by wholesale jobbers is reflected in the recent upturn in gasoline prices after months of declines.

Retail gasoline prices dropped from an average of $1.35 for a gallon of unleaded regular a year ago to $1.18½ a gallon in April. But by last week, they were were back up to an average of $1.22 a gallon.

But Rep. Richard Ottinger, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Comittee's subcomittee on energy and power, has accused the oil companies of using up their stocks to set the stage for shortages and higher prices.

Ottinger, D-N.Y., noted that four major oil companies — Exxon, Mobil, Amoco and Chevron — last week announced price increases of one cent to three cents a gallon.

"These companies are sacrificing our national security through a concerted effort to reduce oil stocks," he charged Wednesday. "They are seeking short-term profits at the consumer's expense."

DiBona said it is a "a natural economic phenomenon" to use up the stocks. "These stocks have just been out of line to demand the past year or so," he said, explaining that gasoline consumption in the past year dropped 15 percent while refinery stockpiles declined only 4 percent.

Coastal to divide company

HOUSTON — The Coastal Corporation has filed with the Internal Revenue Service for a tax ruling on its proposal to divide the company into three separate entities, each with its own listed securities.

Coastal officials reported on the restructuring plan at the annual stockholders meeting, held May 14, Chairman and chief executive officer Oscar S. Wyatt Jr. said the plan "calls for distribution of all common stock of two subsidiaries as tax-free spin-offs."

The two subsidiaries are the natural gas pipeline system of Colorado Interstate Gas Company, (CIG), which would become part of a new company called Colorado Interstate Corporation, and Coastal's oil, gas and coal operations, which would become part of Coastal Oil and Gas Corporation.

Operating profits for the first quarter of 1982 were $42.3 million for CIG, up from $36.5 million a year ago, said Coastal President Harry L. Blomquist.

The gas transmission company is participating in the new Trailblazer pipeline system, which will transmit natural gas from the Overthrust Belt to consumer markets in the East. Trailblazer was approved by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in March and is expected to go on stream in October, 1982.

Pennsylvania discovery finaled

DENVER (SWN) — American Frontier Exploration, Inc. reported preliminary results from the Carter No. 1 well in Washington County, Penn.

On May 19, 1982, drilling was completed at 6,660 feet on the first well in a 15 well program being drilled on prospects and acreage put together by American Frontier. While drilling at 1,430 feet, the well penetrated a 55 foot thick sandstone of Pennsylvanian age that yielded a prolific untreated flow of natural gas. Although it was not possible to gauge the rate of flow due to physical circumstances, it is estimated that the rate was between six and 10 million cubic feet per day.

K & C Industrial-Developers offer new concept in office ownership

A new concept in office ownership has been introduced to Midland by K & C Industrial-Developers. They have recently completed their new office building at 1603 N. Big Spring, and are selling office condominiums ranging in size from 250 sq. ft. to 2,000 sq. ft.

The white, one-story stucco building is designed so that each office has an outside view, as well as a view of the central atrium. This design has resulted in office space that is light and roomy, giving you the feel of being outdoors. The architect for the building is John Wesley Jones of San Antonio.

Tom King and Bill Chancellor, owners of K & C Industrial-Developers, invite those interested in the benefits of office ownership, complete with covered parking away from the congestion of downtown traffic, to come by or call them at 682-6000 and 683-2040.

K & C Industrial offers owner financing with a low down-payment to qualified buyers.

K & C Industrial-Developers have many projects in progress now. They have purchased two square blocks on S. Marienfeld nnd Florida, which they plan to develop commercially, as well as 27 acres bordered by I-20 and S.H. 158. Although this land is still in the planning stage, King says one possibility is developing part of it for low-cost housing.

King points out anoher project currently being developed is in Crestgate, north of Midland Park Mall, where K & C Industrial has purchased 57 townhome lots.

K & C Industrial-Developers began their industrial development in Industrial Park, near I-20 and Francis Street in 1977. During the past five years this facility has grown to accommodate many warehouse and office buildings. K & C Industrial has some space still available and will build to suit, either for sale or lease, and can complete the building for you in approximately 60 days.

Marie Moore, hypnotherapist, believes hypnosis is one answer to obesity and other personal disorders. Moore, located at 1603 N. C St., will be happy to discuss her methods of behavior modification with you. Call her at 683-4235 for an appointment.

Psychologist suggests hypnosis to deal with personal disorders

Each year millions of overweight Americans flock to the bookstores and spend their money on the latest diet books, all guaranteed to "take it off" easily and effortlessly. However, most of these diets end in failure as the urge to go back to their old eating habits cause most peonle to gain it all back.

There is a method, however, which works. It's hypnotheraphy, as practiced in Midland by Dr. Marie Moore. This method of weight reduction does not depend on fads, gimmicks, expensive equipment or special diets to succeed; it's based on hypnosis and the power of suggestion to change your eating habits so that the weight you take off stays off.

Moore, a psychologist, believes in hypnotheraphy as a form of behavior modification. In fact, it is this self-induced altered state of conciousness which can ultimately correct, eliminate or control personal disorders such as obesity, smoking, poor memory, social and marital problems, and problems of childhood, such as bed-wetting, nailbiting and stuttering.

Hypnosis has been around for hundreds of years, yet many experts today believe that man has only grazed the surface of the unlimited regions of the mind through the practice of hypnotheraphy.

In the earlier years of its history, hypnosis was condemned by some of the leading medical authorities of that time; therefore, it took many years to undo many of the misconceptions about hypnosis. It is now coming of age, and today many physicians are using hypnosis, and many medical schools are offering it in their cirriculum.

Moore says, "One popular misconception about hypnosis is the notion that the hypnotist has full control over the subject's mind. There is nothing further from the truth. No one can be hypnotized unless they want to be. The subject is fully aware of what is happening around him at all times, and only accepts those suggestions he wishes to accept. The subject will reject any suggestions which are against his nill or moral principles."

Moore further explains that almost anyone can be hypnotized, and that those who are the most susceptible have the ability to concentrate and have strong imaginations. Cooperation also plays an important role in how successful the results are with hypnosis.

Moore says, "A subject has to have a positive attitude and a real desire to quit smoking, or to diet before hypnotheraphy will succeed."

Her office is at 1603 N. C Street in a building located behind her home. Call her at 683-4235 for an appointment to discuss hypnosis as a solution to your particular problem.

House members want to set steel quotas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying the nation's steel industry and thousands of American jobs are at stake, 54 members of Congress are sponsoring legislation to set strict quotas on foreign steel imports.

The bill, introduced Thursday by members of the House steel caucus, would immediately cut imports from all countries and shut them off completely if unemployment in the U.S. steel industry exceeds 15 percent.

The measure is backed by the domestic steelmakers, who along with some members of Congress, have been unsuccessfully pressuring the White House to implement quotas by executive order.

Rep. Adam Benjamin, D-Ind., the bill's chief sponsor, said that allowing continued import of cheaply priced foreign steel would destroy the already shrinking U.S. steel industry within a few years.

Imports currently account for about 22 percent of domestic steel consumption.

Patrick Lott of North Attleboro, Mass., a senior at Boston's Northwestern University, speaks on the phone Thursday inside a cage where he has imprisoned himself on campus to protest Reagan administration cuts in student aid. Lott sleeps in the makeshift cell and eats only bread and water during his "incarceration."

Chicken farmer loses tax case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bert Junior Wilson, who shut down his Solomon, Kan., chicken farm to protest his federal income taxes, has won the sympathy and understanding of the U.S. Tax Court. But he lost his case.

The court, in a decision made public Thursday, held that the Internal Revenue Service was correct in billing Wilson an extra $33,763 in taxes over two years. Congress has since repealed the law that was at issue, but the change was too late to help Wilson.

It wasn't exactly chicken feed that Wilson was earning from the farm operation. It produced net income of $195,733 in 1976 and $239,359 in 1977. But Wilson earned it all by the sweat of his brow, Goffe commented. He spent as much as 18 hours a day at work, doing most of the labor, mixing the feed, hauling the eggs to market in his own tractor-trailer rig.

"He had to pump out the large quantities of chicken manure which collected under the cages. The smell was unbelievable," the judge wrote. "The chickens consumed all of...(Wilson)s time and energy; he unfortunately had none left for his family. As a result he is now divorced."

When Wilson filed his tax returns for the two years, he treated all his income from farming as if it were from wages and salaries. The maximum tax on wages and salaries is 50 percent.

But IRS ruled that under the law, because Wilson had made a substantial investment in farm equipment and machinery, only 30 percent of his income could be considered wages and taxed at 50 percent or below. The remaining 70 percent was considered investment income and subject to a 70-percent rate.

AFL-CIO urges SALT II ratification

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL-CIO executive council, voicing doubts about the advisability of a proposed nuclear freeze, is exhorting the Senate to ratify the nearly 3-year-old SALT II treaty.

"The SALT II treaty still before the Senate provides an immediate opportunity to move quickly forward toward the control and reduction of strategic arms," the policy-making body declared in a resolution approved at Thursday's concluding session of its spring meeting.

"The AFL-CIO shares the heightened concern of millions of Americans that the unchecked growth of nuclear arsenals poses a threat to civilization," the council said.

"The AFL-CIO joins with those who seek serious negotiations leading to mutual, balanced and verifiable strategic force reductions" which both the United States and the Soviet Union have a compelling interest in observing, it said.

The resolution on the arms talk treaty passed 17-4. Federation President Lane Kirkland said those voting against it — William Winpisinger of the Machinists, William Wynn of the food workers union, Murray Findlay of the Textile workers and Gerald McEntee of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees — favored proposals for a nuclear freeze now circulating in Congress.

But, expressing the majority council view at a news conference at federation headquarters here, Kirkland said:

"We believe it is most useful to direct our attention to getting SALT II out of the way, to get this (arms reduction) process back on track."

Administration sources said earlier in the day that President Reagan soon will announce the United States intends to observe the 1979 SALT II accord provided the Soviets also live up to its terms.

Kirkland said the AFL-CIO leaders preferred ratification of SALT II to "non-binding Senate resolutions" calling for a freeze.

The executive council urged that the Senate approve SALT II "with such updating modifications as may be required by the delay in the ratification process."

He said the policy-making body was concerned that any freeze assuming current parity in U.S.-Soviet strategic nuclear forces "would perpetuate the existing theater nuclear force imbalance in Europe."

Amtrak unions sign contract

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration and members of Congress are praising Amtrak's management and labor unions for agreeing on a wage concession contract designed to improve rail passenger service.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said in a statement Thursday that the new 39-month accord demonstrates "a welcome commitment to allow Amtrak to be more efficient with less subsidies from the federal government."

Rep. Adam Benjamin, D-Ind., chairman of a House transportation appropriations subcommittee, said the pact is "really a mark in history, certainly one that's going to be remembered."

Benjamin said, "I think that it really guarantees the future of Amtrak. I mean taking Amtrak through the era of the '80s."

And Rep. Norman Lent of New York, ranking Republican member of the House transportation subcommittee, said that "in spite of the many difficulties faced by Amtrak in the first 10 years of its operations, Amtrak is now on its way towards becoming a more viable and efficient passenger carrier."

Amtrak president Alan S. Boyd and the leaders of six of its 15 unions signed a new contract on Thursday limiting wage gains for some 14,000 of the system's 18,000 workers between now and mid-1984. The unions had been operating without a contract since Jan. 1, 1981, so the new pact is retroactive to that date.

Under the agreement, a typical worker's wages will rise by 18.7 percent between now and July 1984, not counting cost of living protection. This is far below the 30 percent rise in wages won by unionized employees of the railroad freight industry in national contract bargaining last year.

Boyd said that if similar accords can be reached with nine other unions, the savings in labor costs could amount to $132 million by the time the contract expires. He said negotiations are under way now with the other unions.

But Boyd said the cost-savings was not the most significant achievement in the new contract.

"This is all about growth, which will mean more extended and extensive service to the American public," he told a Capitol Hill news conference.

Boyd said the new agreement, under which the unions permitted changes that give more management flexibility in the area of work rules and encourages heightened productivity, "signals a new era of mutual labor-management cooperation and progress."

Richard I. Kilroy, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks (BRAC), the largest of the unions signing the new contract, said the accord "sends a message to Congress, the administration, the traveling public and the taxpayer at large that Amtrak's labor unions are committed to the future of Amtrak. We've made these concessions as an investment in the future."

The workers involved in the new contract do not actually run the trains on the 23,000-mile Amtrak system. The National Rail Passenger Corp. does not directly negotiate with train operating unions.

The unions signing the new accord besides Kilroy's BRAC were the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and the Joint Council of Carmen, Helpers and Coach Cleaners.

Stop the freeloaders

If Social Security Commissioner John Svahn is right, then $4 billion a year in government waste can be saved by cutting off disability payments to people well enough to work.

Svahn said a recent study of disability payments for July, August and September 1980 found slightly over $1 billion in payments were made in error. That is a payment error of about $4 billion a year.

A study of 24,000 cases revealed that 27.8 percent of payments were in error. Of faulty payments, more than half were made to people who did not report their conditions had improved or that they had returned to work.

The Social Security disability program pays $18 billion a year in benefits to 4.6 million people, all presumed to have physical or mental conditions that keep them from working. They are not supposed to get the money if their physical or mental condition does not keep them from working and if they go back to work.

The obviously large numbers of freeloaders are helping themselves to other people's earnings drawn off by the government as taxes. They are crooks engaged in large-scale fraud. Four billion dollars is not chicken feed.

Svahn has been taking a lot of heat from critics who charge the Reagan administration is too harsh in its campaign to rid the rolls of freeloaders. Some heat is justified. There is a 2.5 percent error rate in those being dropped and Svahn admits it.

The clean-up error rate is not high considering the hundreds of thousands of cases involved, but for a sick person dependent on a disability check, Svahn acknowledges, loss of payment can be "extremely traumatic."

Agreed. And agreed Social Security should speedily rectify mistakes and get checks out to the eligible.

But one thing is wrong. The heat should not be on Svahn and the administration. It should be on the freeloaders who are robbing their fellow citizens of $4 billion a year and on the irresponsible politicians and bureaucrats who set up a program so prone to error and fraud.

The heat should be on arrogant scofflaws, posing as angels of compassion, who are against putting an end to this wholesale thievery.

In almost every area of government that goes under sharp review, swarms of freeloaders of every class and income bracket are uncovered. The stealing and waste costs billions of dollars.

If all the conduits of this gigantic swindle were plugged up — who knows? The savings might be enough to balance the federal budget.

China to lobby Baker

Chinese leaders are making the most of that open door between Washington and Peking. It has been swinging wide to welcome American officials who want to get acquainted with China's new government hands and discuss mutual problems.

One of those problems is Taiwan, and the extent to which the United States should provide military aid to the Nationalist Chinese.

Vice President George Bush recently spent four days in Peking, trying to convince the Chinese officials the Reagan administration has a one-China policy despite a decision to sell $60 million in military spare parts to Taipei. In a few days Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker will walk through the open door at the invitation of Peking.

Senator Baker is scheduled to stay on the Chinese mainland for 10 days, during which time Peking will continue its lobbying efforts on the Taiwan issue. He is sure to tell his hosts the United States helps Taiwan because of a long-standing alliance with the island. His hosts are sure to tell the Tennessean they would prefer to see military aid to Taiwan dropped altogether, for Taiwan is not considered an independent nation.

As majority leader, Howard Baker has proven himself to be one of the ablest and most diplomatic of senators. Although not widely experienced in international diplomacy, he can be counted on to represent his country well in Peking and give the Chinese a few insights into the workings of the American legislative process.

Another View:

A question of judgment

President Reagan, in a brief exchange with reporters Monday, gave his support to two embattled members of his Cabinet. They are in quite different situations. Serious charges against Labor Secretary Donovan are now being investigated by a special prosecutor. Not everyone may have nodded in assent when Mr. Reagan said that the bringing of these charges has not "reduced my confidence" in Donovan. But everyone should agree that there is no basis for reaching a judgment until the investigation is finished.

We were more disturbed by what the president said — and didn't say — about Attorney General Smith. On the matter of Smith's tax shelter — in which a 1981 investment of $16,500 made him eligible for $66,000 of deductions on that year's taxes — Reagan was wrong on the facts. Reagan suggested that the investment was made by the managers of Smith's blind trust. Smith's own spokesman said two weeks ago that the attorney general's investment was made by him personally.

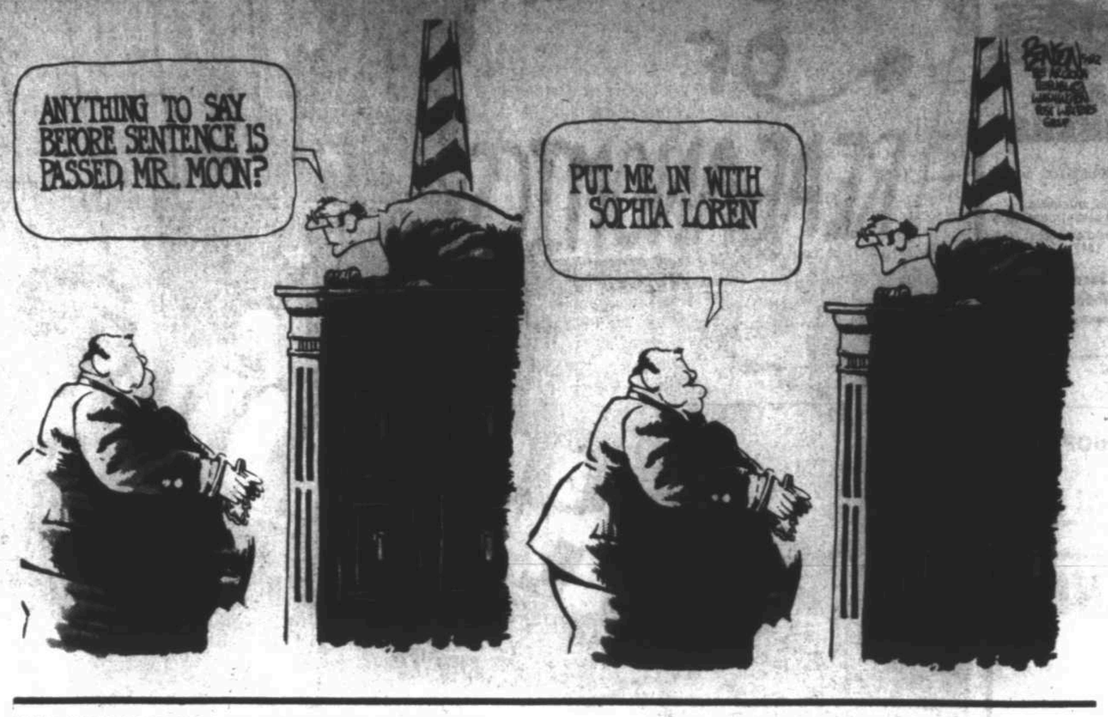

Is the discrepancy important? As we wrote nearly two weeks ago, it was insensitive for the attorney general to participate personally in a tax shelter investment such as this one, which is far enough out of the ordinary so that the Internal Revenue Service has questioned the deductions claimed. Does Reagan's confidence in the attorney general rest on a mistaken notion that Smith was not involved personally in this transaction?

Reagan was not asked about and did not comment on another aspect of Mr. Smith's finances: the $50,000 severance payment he received when he left the board of directors of the Earle M. Jorgensen Co. Federal law prohibits outside payment to federal officials, including Cabinet nominees, except when the payments are part of ordinary compensation for past services. This $50,000 seems to fall squarely within the proscription. Smith's ordinary fee for attending directors' meetings was $500; the Jorgensen firm did not give any other resigning director a cash severance payment (one got a gold watch, and another was named director emeritus and received directors' meeting fees for life regardless of attendance). Mr. Smith had already been designated attorney general by the president-elect when the payment was made — eight days before the Reagan inaugural. That the payment was labeled as a reward for past services, rather than as a supplement to his federal salary, seems unimportant. It had the effect of supplementing his federal pay, which is what the statute prohibits.

The director of the Office of Government Ethics, J. Jackson Walter, said the $50,000 fee "just flashed off the page" of Smith's disclosure report. His office now has the matter under review. If it rules that the payment violates the law, Walter can recommend "appropriate action."

Whatever the result, we think that an attorney general knows or should know the law. He should avoid acts that raise an issue of propriety in the minds of reasonable people. Nothing we know about Smith leads us to suspect that he intended deliberately to violate the law. But he has raised a question about his judgment.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Pensioners treated with no compassion

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Determined to make good on Ronald Reagan's campaign promise to cut chiselers and undeserving malingerers off federal benefit rolls, the Social Security Administration's bureaucrats have been treating disability pensioners with all the compassion of a Dickensian workhouse administrator.

New and tougher standards of disability have been set up, and those who don't qualify find themselves abruptly thrown off the benefit rolls and told to go to work. Many of them are in their 50s and 60s and haven't held a job in years because of their disabilities, yet they're expected to compete with younger, able-bodied workers in a time of widespread unemployment.

Consider one shocking example that was uncovered by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio:

Russell Beard, 46, had been drawing disability benefits for eight years when he was notified last October that his status was being reviewed.

One month later, Beard was notified that he was no longer entitled to benefits. More than that, he was told that the bureaucrats had somehow decided he hadn't been properly qualified since August 1981. The ruling had been made retroactive by two months.

Beard's wife, Sue, called Social Security's Columbus, Ohio, office and offered to submit evidence from her husband's doctor. She told my associate Vicki Warren that Social Security officers said the agency doctors' finding that Beard was no longer disabled would not be changed by evidence to the contrary.

The Beards appealed the decision, but on Jan. 13 they were notified that Beard, a former press operator whose heart condition prevented him from lifting more than 10 pounds, was able to do sedentary work that didn't require standing or walking more than four hours at a stretch.

Beard was in the hospital when the rejection of his appeal arrived. Five days later he was dead.

The insensitivity of SSA bureaucrats didn't end with Beard's death. Incredibly, they demanded that his widow repay the government for the two months' disablity checks he had been sent between November and December. Only the action of a Social Security administrative law judge kept the agency from hounding Mrs. Beard further in her bereavement.

The robot-like reviews now being conducted of hundreds of thousands of disability pensioners are hardest, of course, on those who are judged to be no longer disabled under the new criteria. But even those who manage to survive the review process with their benefits intact have been robbed of their dignity, pushed around by officious bureaucrats and even subjected to physical hardship in some cases.

The General Accounting Office, asked to investigate disabled pensioners, found, for example, that in many states, the disabled were ordered to report at 9 a.m. on a given day for a physical exam to see if they were still disabled. They were told not to eat anything for several hours before their appointment.

What the pensioners weren't told was that everyone had been ordered to report at 9 a.m. This meant that sick, crippled and elderly people were made to wait as much as five hours — without food — for their examinations.

The GAO investigators discovered that only about half of the more than 170,000 disability pensioners who were cut off since March of last year had actually shown medical improvement. The rest just didn't meet the tough new standards for disability.

Footnote: Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., has asked the GAO to check into a disturbing report he got from a Social Security employee — that the agency has set a quota that regional offices must meet by dropping a certain number of disability pensioners one way or another.

N-EPA-TISM REPORT — While the Environmental Protection Agency's professional staff has been decimated by budget cutbacks, EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch managed to find a $23,950-a-year slot in the payroll for her children's live-in babysitter.

The Gorsuch protege is Mary Wigginton, 26, who came with the Gorsuch family from Denver last July, taking charge of the relocation and the hiring of a housekeeper. This accomplished, Wigginton joined EPA in November as a special assistant to the administrative officer.

Her job was created during the Gorsuch reorganization of EPA, and is one of the "administratively determined" positions that can be filled by an agency head without regard to civil service requirements.

Wigginton has known Gorsuch for five years, and said she was offered a job at EPA as soon as Gorsuch learned of her own nomination to head the agency. Gorsuch's neighbors in Alexandria, Va., consider Wigginton part of the family; she represented Gorsuch at a homeowners' council meeting in January.

A call to the Gorsuch home elicited the information from one of the three children that Wigginton acts as sitter when the housekeeper is not there. Wigginton said she's not really a sitter, but is simply "there" in the housekeeper's absence. "The children can take care of themselves," she said.

Wigginton's background in computers and internal management was vigorously defended by her boss, acting deputy chief-of-staff Joseph Foran, a career civil servant. He said she "tracks decisions inside the agency and is helping to update its computer facilities."

INSIDE REPORT:

Will negotiations pacify guerrillas?

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — While daily awaiting a new surge of leftist terrorism, El Salvador's government is launching a peace offensive aimed at talking guerrillas into giving up and, in time, perhaps negotiating with them. Newly-elected President Alvaro Magana is about to select a "peace committee" aimed at "pacification" — offering amnesty now and perhaps negotiations later to the guerrillas. Simultaneously, the army is about to offer money in return for arms turned in to the government.

Although such schemes are uncomfortably reminiscent of the Vietnam War's many pacification plans, they reflect the optimistic mood prevailing here since Salvadorans braved threats and bullets to vote in the March 28 election. El Salvador may never be truly pacified so long as Nicaragua remains a gun-running, Marxist-Leninist state, but the Salvadoran guerrillas could be sufficiently demoralized to win a measure of peace here if the opportunity is seized.

Accordingly, Dr. Magana's peace committee is an attempt to use the current pause in violence for an initiative aimed at preventing total communization of Central America. High government officials believe the guerrillas, regrouping the last several weeks after their failure to disrupt the election, soon will begin a new wave of terrorism. Magana confirmed this, telling us: "I have the impression that they have to do something soon."

In an interview at the presidential palace, Magana revealed for the first time "my own idea" of a committee composed of representatives of the Catholic Church, the Red Cross and two political parties — one unnamed minor party and, most significantly, the dominant conservative party: Maj. Roberto D'Aubuisson's National Republican Alliance (ARENA).

The president wants D'Aubuisson himself to serve on the committee to start "a real process of pacification." That would give conservative coloration not only to offering amnesty to individuals but to broader negotiations that Magana and the government have barred themselves from initiating.

Could the peace committee really turn from mere amnesty to full-scale negotiations? "If they decide that something has to be done," Magana replied. "In case it is needed, they could make the contact." The president twice emphasized "they," as contrasted to "me." Roberto D'Aubuisson, the fire-eating anti-communist, and not Alvaro Magana, the urbane international technocrat, would be making the overtures.

The arms-buying plan is strictly a project of the army high command, which often functions independently of the government. Gen. Jose Garcia, the powerful minister of defense, told us small guerrilla groups voluntarily have been turning in themselves and their weapons since the election, and he wants to hasten the process by offering cold cash. The Salvadoran army scheme, based on Bolivia's successful program, would offer 1,000 colones ($400 at the official exchange rate) for one automatic rifle.

These are not last resorts of desperation but initiatives born of the confident afterglow following the March 28 election. Magana contends that the Socialist International (the organization of democratic socialist parties) "is not as enthusiastic as before" about the Salvadoran insurgency. The Mexican charge d'affaires here showed up for Magana's inauguration, the first sign of thaw in Mexico's frosty attitude toward El Salvador's government.

The odds have tipped slightly toward the democratically-elected government and away from the revolutionaries in the hills — a change that could be critical in deciding the fate of all Central America. Whether it really is may depend on the success of the peace offensive submerging the anticipated wave of leftist terror.

CHARLEY REESE

Remember fallen with due respect

This Memorial Day, if you have children, gather them around a table and explain what the day is all about. If there is a ceremony in your town, take them to it.

Charley Reese

For small children, you might explain it this way:

We live in a wonderful and beautiful land and we are a free people. You don't understand now what it means to be free because you've never been unfree. When you get older, you will understand that it means you can make your own decisions about how to live your life without a government telling you what those decisions should be.

Most people on our planet today are not free. For most of the years in the past, most people have not been free. That's why it's so special to be an American. A long time ago, some Americans fought a war to make us free and since then, many other Americans have fought other wars to keep us free.

Peace is a great blessing and it is good and right to love other people. But because you do love people, you sometimes have to fight when those you love are threatened. War is a terrible thing, but a wise man once said there are some things worse than war and they all come with defeat.

In our country, the people who fight are members of the armed forces — soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen. They are good and brave people — the best because they stand willing to die to protect you and your family from any foreign army which might want to harm you or make you a slave. A great teacher once said there is no greater love than that of a man who will give his life for another.

Memorial Day is the day for remembering all of those who demonstrated that kind of love. They were people just like us. They were young, full of hopes and dreams. They were people who loved peace, but when the threat came, they had the courage and the integrity to face it.

There are so many of them. Over a million. Some lie at the bottom of the seas, entombed in ships or planes. Many are buried in foreign soil, but every single one of them deserves to be remembered with love and respect because all that we are and have today is possible because of them.

They left us not only a free country, but also an example of a human being at his best: brave, determined, disciplined, but also compassionate.

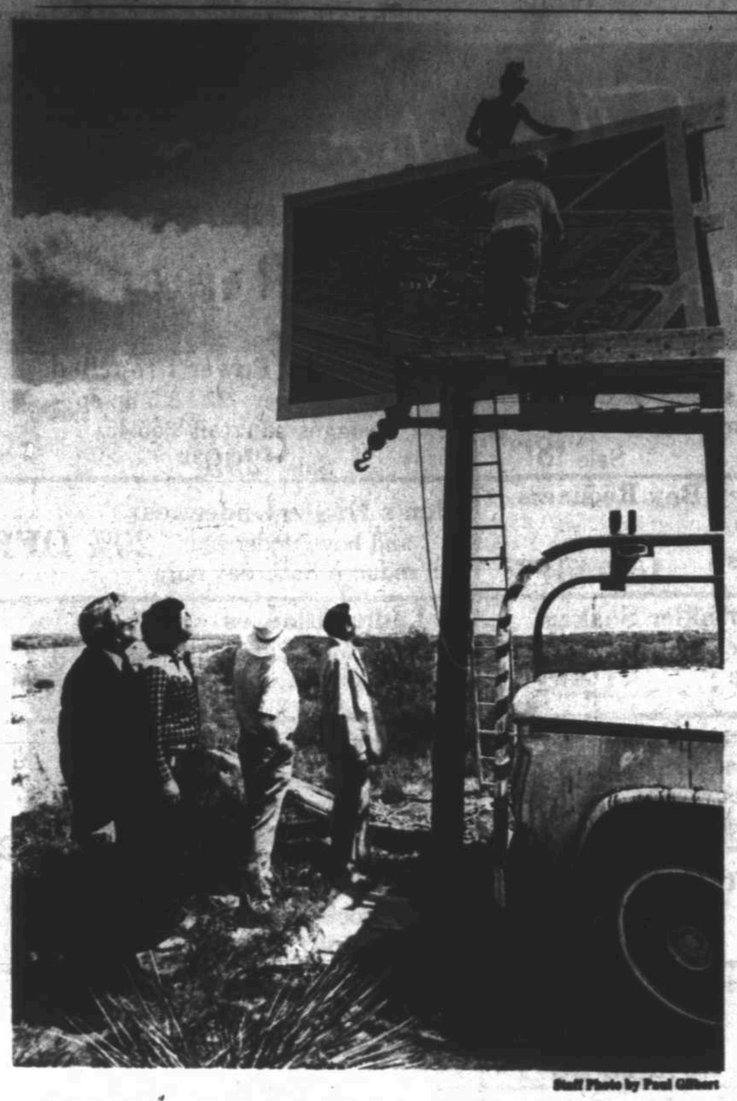

Sometimes you will hear people tell you that it is never right to fight, but they are wrong. It is impossible to love someone and to stand aside and let them perish. People who are willing to do that are false lovers, and are in fact selfish and self-centered and cowardly.

We must do more than just remember our fallen comrades. With freedom comes responsibilities. One of those is to preserve and to protect what those men and women died for. You see if we lose what they died to keep, then we will have betrayed them and turned their deaths into a wasted sacrifice. It is always wrong to betray people who love you.

Another responsibility we have is to learn the history of our country and to show the same dilligence and courage in our civic work as they did in their military duty. We have a responsibility to honor their memory by showing respect for the uniforms of our services and for the flag of our country. We have a responsibility to prepare ourselves to defend this land and to take a turn on the watch when we are needed.

Americans are known the world over as a people who are idealistic. We have always fought for ideals, not for kings or loot. We are a noble nation and on Memorial Day, we remember and honor the noblest of us all.

Jurors at Hinckley trial view movie 'Taxi Driver'

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jurors at the federal trial of John W. Hinckley Jr. today watched a showing of "Taxi Driver," a movie closely linked with the presidential assailant's fantasies.

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker previewed the movie and decided it should be shown to the jury. A few minutes later, a half-dozen television sets were wheeled into position facing the jury, the defense tables, Parker's bench and spectator seats, and a videotape of the movie was shown.

The defense team told Parker the movie was important for jurors to see because Hinckley assumed the role of the main character, Travis Bickle, when he shot President Reagan on March 30, 1981.

In the film, Bickle stalks a presidential candidate and tries to rescue a young prostitute played by Jodie Foster, the actress with whom Hinckley had a one-sided romance.

Government prosecutor Roger M. Adelman argued that defense psychiatrists told jurors everything they need to know about the movie, but Parker said from the bench, "I'll permit the jury to see the movie."

But the prosecutors, trying to prove that Hinckley was sane when he shot Reagan and three other men outside a Washington hotel, won their bid to prohibit the jury from seeing an electronic scan of the defendant's brain.

Parker told Hinckley's lawyers Thursday they could not introduce results of a CAT scan, which they hoped would support the conclusion that the defendant was suffering from schizophrenia at the time of the shooting.

Jurors spent the day outside the courtroom, but Parker summoned them in the late afternoon to tell them the defense has called their last witness.

"Defense counsel have completed their testimony," Parker said. "Then you will hear testimony from the government on the issue of insanity."

Radio station WTOP-AM reported here this morning that Hinckley threatened Miss Foster in March when she gave videotaped testimony that was played at the trial.

The station quoted unidentified "court sources" as saying that Hinckley threw a pen at her and said, "Jodie, I'll kill you."

While the defense has attempted over the last two weeks to show that Hinckley was insane, and thus innocent, the prosecution will argue that the defendant knew what he was doing when he wounded Reagan and three other men outside the Washington Hilton Hotel.

Prosecutors have said they will call several witnesses, including law enforcement officers who were at the Hilton when Hinckley fired six shots from his .22-caliber revolver.

Before hearing testimony on the CAT scan, Parker called Hinckley to the bench to discuss his absences from the courtroom.

Head down and hands clasped in front of him, Hinckley told the judge: "I just had a problem listening to testimony yesterday. I feel today I can sit through the remainder of testimony."

The words were the first the defendant has spoken publicly since his trial began exactly one month earlier.

He had boycotted his trial Wednesday, watching the proceedings on closed circuit television in a cell behind the courtroom. But he told Parker he realized he could not "come and go" from the courtroom at will.

According to Hinckley's lawyers, the CAT scan — computer assisted tomography — showed Hinckley's brain had shrunk. But three experts in psychiatry testified Thursday that studies statistically linking the test to schizophrenia are too new to be conclusive.

In a ruling from the bench, Parker agreed.

"I think, running consistently through their testimony, was the lack of general acceptance of the CAT scan as a diagnostic instrument in connection with the disorder of schizophrenia," he said.

He added he was not convinced that CAT scans are "a creditable and generally accepted supportible element within the diagnosis. I don't think the defendants have made an adequate and sufficient showing."

But Dr. Daniel Weinberger, of the National Institute of Mental Health, testified the X-rays are useful for detecting "structural" faults like tumors that can produce mental illness but that "evidence is not such that a conclusion of cause and effect can be drawn."

He said: "schizophrenia is not diagnosed from CAT scans" and "I would not use this to make a diagnosis of schizophrenia."

Charges against reporter may be dropped

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Felony charges filed against an investigative reporter who pretended to be an illegal alien could be dimissed as early as next Tuesday, a federal prosecutor says.

"There is no question that I can dismiss this case at any time," Assistant U.S. Attorney David Almaraz said. "I just want to have all the facts before me before I make that decision. I would say probably Tuesday at the latest next week."

Almaraz said earlier this week that he might want to question San Antonio Light reporter Danny Garcia about his investigation into alien smuggling before deciding whether to pursue the charge.

But Almaraz said Thursday that discovery of a federal rule protecting investigative reporters may preclude such questioning.

"There's been a new quirk," Almaraz said. "Yesterday, I was informed by various officers that apparently there was a section in the Code of Federal Regulations that states that we, the Department of Justice, cannot talk to, subpoena, indict, summons a reporter who is charged ostensibly with something that arises out of an investigative type story without prior approval of the attorney general.

"So, rather than going through that process, which I think would be very time-consuming, I am probably going to try to settle the matter by discussing it fully with INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service) officials in San Antonio," he said.

The 27-year-old Garcia said he arranged with San Antonio INS officials to have himself deported to Mexico for a story on illegal aliens.

But, Garcia said, he got separated from the aliens he was trailing.

Instead of following the aliens in Mexico, he said he paid $80 to have two Mexicans float him across the Rio Grande on an inner tube, and then paid a "coyote" — or alien smuggler — more than $100 to transport him to San Antonio.

But the coyote insisted that Garcia drive five real illegal aliens to San Antonio in a rundown car because Garcia did not have the full $250 fee, the reporter said.

Twelve miles outside of Laredo, the Border Patrol stopped the car and charged Garcia with five counts of transporting illegal aliens, punishable by up to five years in prison on each count.

The alien smuggler was arrested later and Garcia said he was concerned that he would have to testify against the man, fearing "retaliation."

"He (Garcia) could have very simply come back to the bridge and asked to come back into the United States, and simply have said, 'I'm an American citizen. I'm Danny Garcia from San Antonio.' He didn't have to swim the river. He got a little carried away," Almaraz said.

California's freestanding emergency centers have some worried, some resting easier

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

When Mary Jordan's 2-year-old grandson, Jason, was hit in the eye with a baseball bat one Saturday evening, the first place she thought of going was the Emergency Medical Group of Torrance, Calif., located in a new medical building on a busy intersection near her home.

"It seemed the easiest place to go," said Mrs. Jordan, sitting on a stylish rattan sofa in its waiting room, which looks like a typical doctor's office. "I got the brochure and read that it was cheaper than the hospital."

She was not overjoyed with the $95 bill that was payable on the spot for a doctor's exam and four X-rays. However, she was pleased to hear that it was at least one-third less than she would have paid in a hospital emergency room, and her grandson was seen right away and found to have only bad bruises.

WHAT MRS. JORDAN experienced was part of a movement that is new to California in the competitive world of medical care: specialized "emergency centers" that treat minor injuries and ailments, undercutting the price of hospitals.

Hundreds have opened in the East and Midwest in the last few years, and their numbers have begun to swell rapidly in Western and Sun Belt states. The National Association of Freestanding Emergency Centers, which was formed last year, estimates that there are about 30 in California.

The freestanding centers are at the opposite end of the spectrum from trauma centers for the critically injured, which are being considered for some areas of the country, including Los Angeles.

The freestanding centers promise quick treatment of cuts, sprains and sore throats at prices lower than hospital emergency rooms, spawning the label "medical McDonald's." No appointments are necessary. Most are open 12 to 16 hours a day, seven days a week.

Proponents say they offer a lot of the services available at hospital emergency rooms at a fraction of the cost and waiting time.

"Because physicians were not available at all hours, people started using hospitals for cuts, snotty noses and other things that don't belong in a hospital emergency room, and have had to wait two hours for treatment because they're put behind major trauma," said Gary Stevenson, executive director of the association, which claims 67 members.

Critics argue that centers are ill-equipped to handle life-threatening emergencies and pose a danger to the gravely sick or injured who may go to them expecting that they can.

Hospitals and family doctors also fear they will lose patients to them.

"They're good for anything that involves minor illnesses or injury, but I could foresee a number of dangerous circumstances," said Dr. Robert Rothstein, chairman of the department of emergency medicine at Harbor-University of California, Los Angeles, Medical Center.

"The danger is with any kind of trauma that appears to be insignificant on the surface," he said. "A young female with lower abdominal pain may have a ruptured pregnancy and bleed to death because she spends extra time at an emergency center and then is transferred to a hospital."

CENTERS DO NOT HAVE the blood banks, sophisticated laboratory equipment, surgical rooms or the monitored intensive-care beds of hospitals. Their operators, however, say they can stabilize the vital signs of a seriously hurt or ill patient who is able to walk in and then send him to a hospital by ambulance.

Critics say the delay could make the difference between life and death.

"The whole trauma center concept is that you have a golden hour from the time of an accident to surgery, so that the main objective is to get something definitively done within the hour," said Dr. Gail Anderson, chairman of the department of emergency medicine at Los Angeles County-University of Southern California Medical Center. "Time will be eaten up with this so-called stabilization and with transfer.

"If I was in an accident and had major injuries and the hospital was 10 miles away while the center was three, I would still take my chances and want to go to the hospital," Anderson added.

Paramedics by law cannot take major trauma cases to the centers: They must go to hospitals. So cautious medical authorities say their main concern about emergency centers is the public's perception of what they can do and how they advertise themselves.

"When lay people see an 'emergency' sign, they think it includes everything, 24-hours a day," Anderson said.

Harbor-UCLA's Rothstein said, "People already have a hard time deciding when to go to the hospital and when to go to the doctor, and this adds another level for them to have to consider."

Some centers are careful to stress that they want only minor emergencies.

"Eighty-five percent of the time, we're the right place for an emergency," said Dr. Robert DuRoy, owner of three Orange County, Calif., centers called Medi-Stop, "but 15 percent of the time it's beyond us, when people need surgery, elaborate blood exams or blood transfusions. It's dangerous to imply that you can do anything an emergency (room) can do."

DuRoy is critical of claims like one in a brochure of Emergency Doctor's Office in Newport Beach, Calif., which proclaims it is "A Fully Equipped Medical Office for All Emergency Care." The owner, Dr. Roy Levin, argues that is not misleading.

"We're not a trauma center, but we'll see any ambulatory emergency," he said.

FOR EXAMPLE, IF SOMEONE came in with a full-blown heart attack, Levin said, he could start treatment, stabilize the patient and get the patient to a hospital.

According to center administrators, several patients have been transferred without incident to the nearest hospital, 10 miles away, including two with heart attacks, one with a broken hip and a fourth with a tubal pregnancy that ruptured.

Centers are generally better equipped than family doctors' offices. They stock supplies to fix broken bones, have drugs and shock equipment to treat heart attack victims and have tools to open the airway of someone whose breathing is blocked. They also have X-ray machines and X-ray technicians on duty and small laboratories for simple blood and urine tests.

In California and elsewhere, hospitals that claim to provide emergency services must be licensed by the state. Most hospitals are licensed for either comprehensive or basic emergency services which require physicians on duty 24 hours a day, sophisticated laboratories, blood banks and radiology equipment. A comprehensive license requires a burn center, dialysis equipment, psychiatric- and coronary-care units and affiliation with a medical school.

Medical choices' presentation may make difference

BOSTON (AP) — Patients are more willing to accept medical treatment if doctors tell them the chances they will survive, not the odds of death, a study shows.

Researchers asked people hypothetical questions about whether they would choose radiation or surgery if they had lung cancer. Radiation alone is safe, but the long-term odds of survival are relatively poor. Surgery carries a 10 percent risk of immediate death, even though the long-term outlook is better.

People are much more likely to be scared away from surgery, the researchers found, if they are told there is a 10 percent risk of death instead of a 90 percent chance of survival.

The study, directed by Dr. Barbara J. McNeil of Harvard Medical School, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The questons were asked of men with chronic problems in a veterans hospital, radiologists taking a postgraduate course at Harvard and graduate students at Stanford Business School.

If they were told about the chance of death, 42 percent chose radiation over surgery. But if the odds of survival were emphasized, only 25 percent preferred radiation.

"We attribute this result to the fact that the risk of perioperative death looms larger when it is presented in terms of mortality than when it is presented in terms of survival," the doctors wrote.

They said they were surprised that this tendency was just as strong for radiologists and business students as it was for patients.

"We suggest that an awareness of the effects of presentation among physicians and patients could help reduce bias and improve the quality of medical decision making," they concluded.

Acid rain subject of inquiry

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Is enough known about "acid rain?"

This week the Senate Environment Committee called on a panel of prominent American and Canadian scientists for advice on a bill designed to regulate industries that produce "acid rain," which pollutes air, land and water. Acid rain is believed to be the cause of contaminated water in lakes and of damaged vegetation in both Canadian and northern U.S. territories.

The panel, including Dr. Volker Mohnen of Albany, N.Y., presented a wide range of opinions to the committee.

Some proposals made by the panel asked Congress to delay legislation on the issue. Others contended that immediate action is necessary to put controls on sulfur dioxide emissions from utilities and factories.

Acid rain is created when sulfur and nitrogen oxides — emitted by power plants burning coal and by factories and automobiles — combine with moisture in the air to form sulfuric and nitric acids.

Dr. Mohnen, director of the Atmospheric Science and Research Center at Albany, appeared before the committee to urge a slowdown in impending legislation until more research is completed.

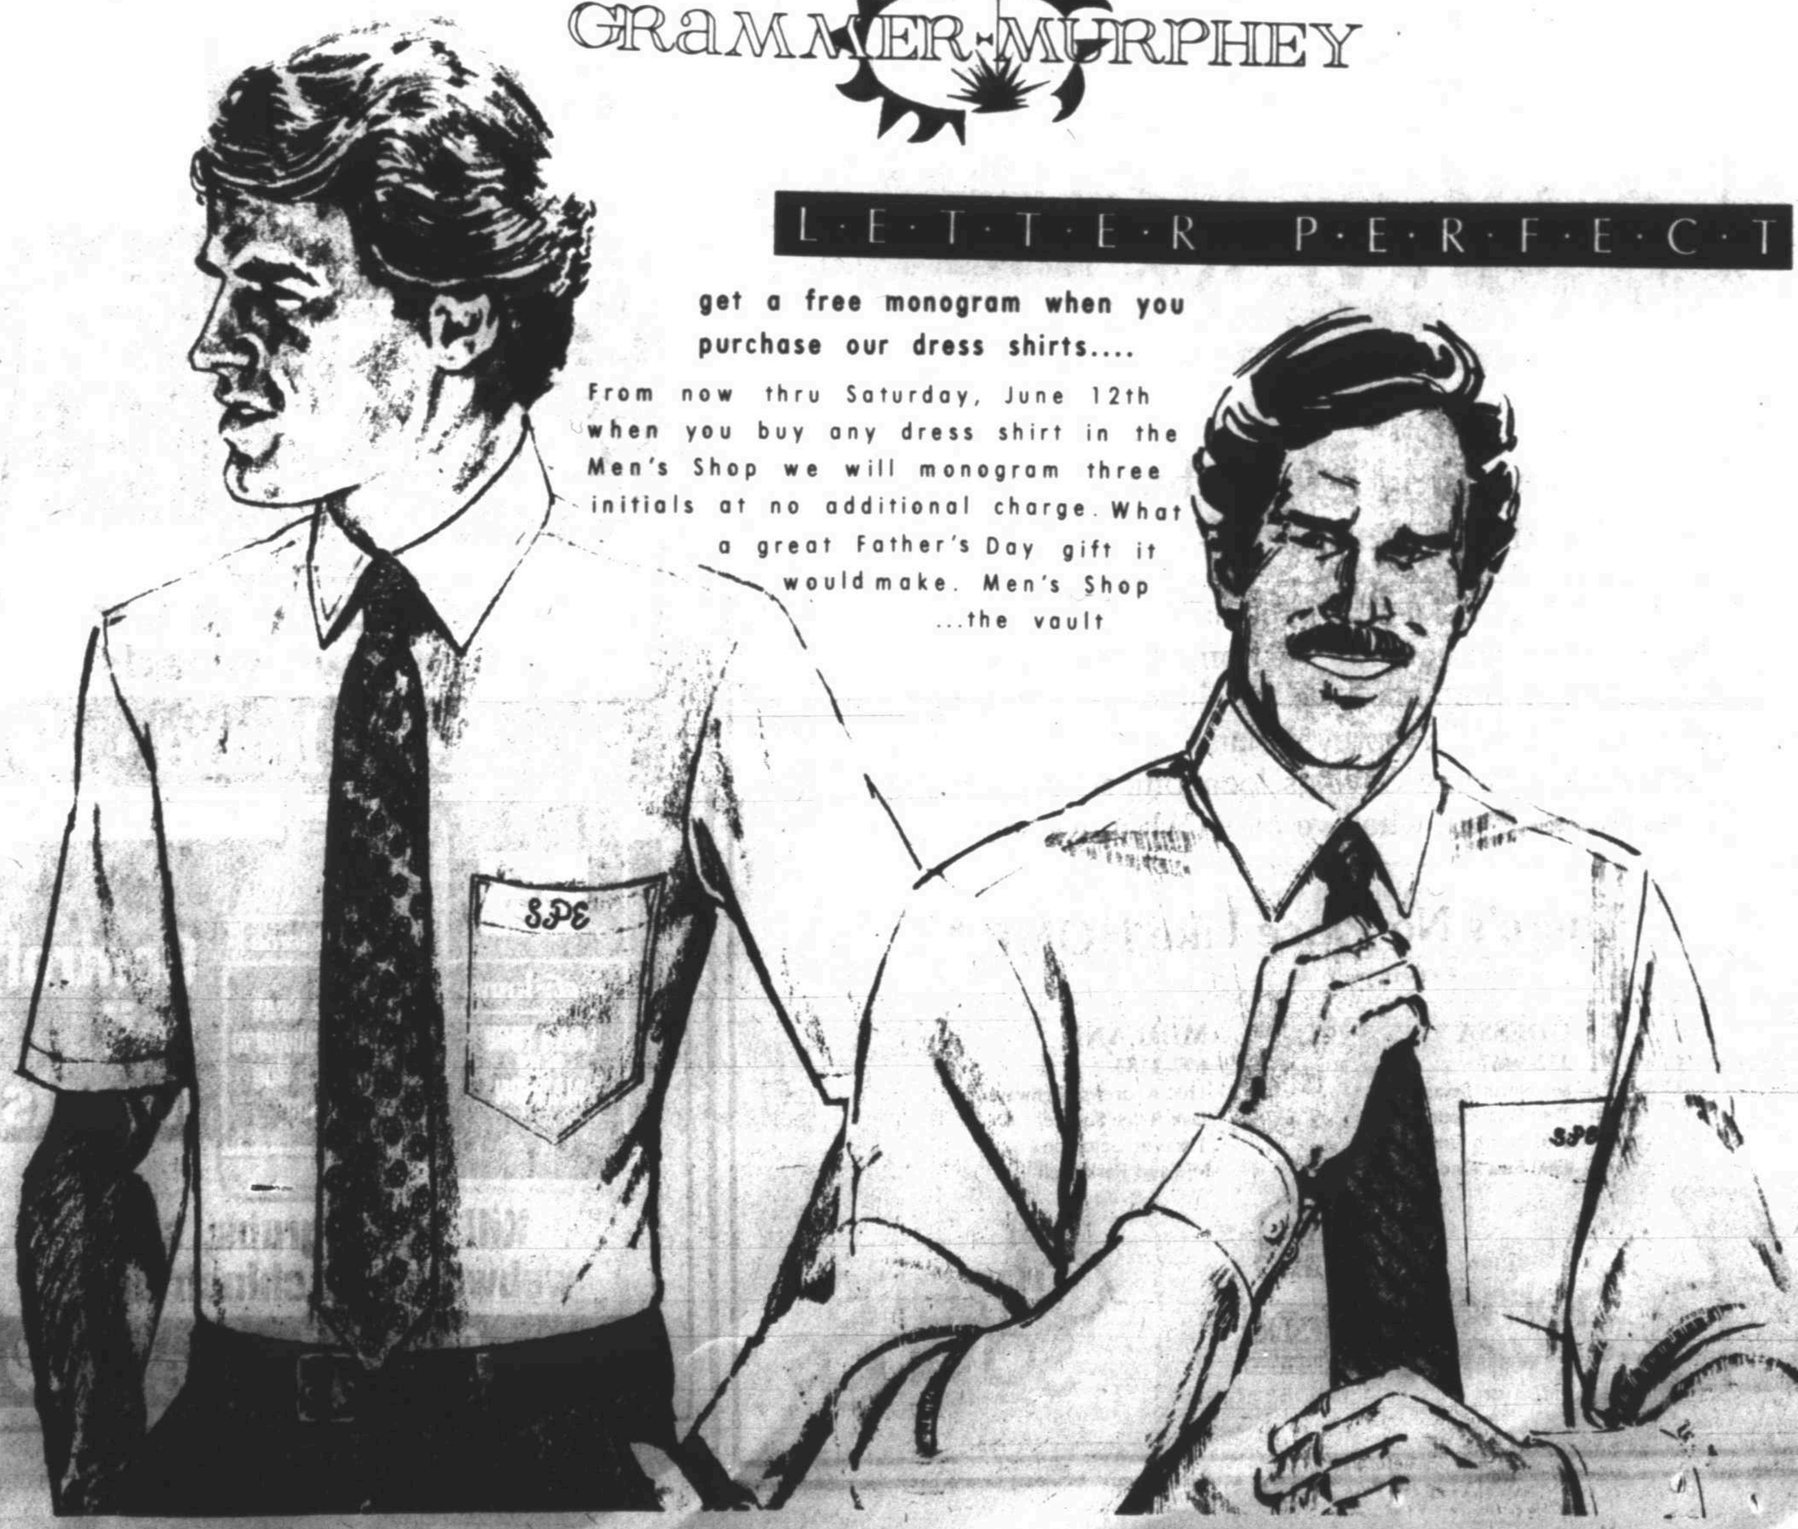

"Harold Macmillan once observed that politicians have to run hard to catch up with scientists," Mohnen added, apparently referring to the late British prime minister. "But in this instance it is the reverse. Politicians better slow down and let the scientists catch up with them."

Cycle of self development

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

"It's important for us to keep expanding and enlarging our comfort zones," said Carol Straughan, a Dale Carnegie instructor, in a program on self development at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Occasion was the Seminar for Business & Professional Women sponsored by the Uptown Chapter of Business and Professional Women and the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Ms. Straughan, a Dale Carnegie instructor for eight years, was one of the first seven women instructors worldwide. Her varied industry experience includes being associated with her husband in an automobile agency for 18 years, managing a supermarket, and being a newspaper correspondent.

She is currently director of instruction for Ben E. Straughan & Associates, representing the Dale Carnegie courses in Southwest Texas and New Mexico.

There are 2 1/2 million graduates of the Dale Carnegie courses and they all had one thing in common," she said. "They wanted to be better at what they do."

"All of us live well within our comfort zone—that is, people with whom we are comfortable, places at which we are comfortable and circumstances with which we are comfortable," explained Ms. Straughan.

"We need to keep expanding this comfort zone, but take it by small steps, " she said. We have to stretch ourselves. Otherwise, we're not growing any and, first thing we know, we find that we resist change of any kind.

"This self expansion is called the 'process of becoming.'"

Ms. Straughan said that the cycle of self development can be applied to many areas of our lives. Som of the changes an individual may want to change are: to become more effective in dealing with other people, gain a greater self confidence, become more enthusiastic, improve memory, set meaningful goals, become a better communicator and to become more efficient in time management.

She explained the four cycles or phases of self development:

(1) ATTITUDE. "It's not going to do any good to make a change of any kind unlss we change our attitudes," said Ms. Straughan. "We must develop the attitudes which begin with 'I need to,' to 'I want to,' 'Show me how to,' 'I can,' and 'I will.'"

"We get more positive in our attitudes," she added. She explained that it is important to acquire a positive attitude before we can make any change in our life.

(2) KNOWLEDGE. The three areas essential to obtaining knowledge are fundamentals, concepts and principles.

"Psychologists have shown us that people can be trained in three ways-only—knowledge, attitude and skills in dealing with others. It's called the triangle of success," said Ms. Straughan.

But she added that Dale Carnegie studies have shown that 95 per cent of a person's effort goes into acquiring knowledge and only five percent of a person's effort goes into the other two areas—attitude and skills in dealing with others.

"And studies also show that 85 per cent of a person's financial success comes from the areas of attitude and skills in dealing with others. Only 15 per cent of success results from knowledge."

(3)PRACTICE. Third step in the cycle of self development is practice.

"We need to practice getting along with unders in social situations, at home, at work, and under coaching situations," said Ms. Straughan.

(4) SKILL, the fourth step in the cycle of self development. "This is done by developing receptivity, positive reenforcement and continuous application," advised Ms. Straughan.

She explained nine ways that Dale Carnegie recommends to get along with people. This is taken from his best-selling book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

(1) Don't criticize, condemn or complain.

(2) Give honest, sincere appreciation.

(3) Arouse in the other person an eager want—find out what motivates them.

(4) Become genuinely interested in other people.

(5) Keep a smile and be pleasant.

(6) Remember that a person's name is to that person the most important sound in any language.

(7) Be a good listener.

(8) Talk in terms of the other person's interest.

(9) Make the other person feel important—and do it sincerely.

WARDROBES THAT WORK

By MARY T. MILLICAN
Fashion Consultant

Dear Mary,

I've been job hunting! This may not sound like much to the average person, but all I've done for the past 10 years is raise children! After taking a few night courses to brush up on my office skills I thought I was ready to conquer the job market. Then, I looked in my closet and it seems that all I own are jeans and "work around the house" clothes. I read some of your past columns, but until I get a job, I won't be able to afford a suit. However, I do have one white cotton jacket and one beige jacket. What would be inexpensive and yet give me some mileage?

YOU CERTAINLY ARE industrious! The job market has really changed in the last 10 years, and women are becoming more and more competitive in their different fields. The two jackets you already have will do nicely for interviewing, and your first week of work. You also may have a few blouses that might work well for you to begin with. One thing to remember is that you will be seeing different people all the time so you can wear the same outfit for several days and simply change your blouse. The first purchase I would suggest is a navy blue skirt. This can be worn with both jackets and also year-round. A navy blue blouse and beige belt also will help. A red blouse and a print blouse with beige and navy in it also will coordinate with what you have.

As for accessories, a long strand of pearls and a long strand of navy or lapis-colored beads will tie your looks together. Both can be purchased at very little cost in any store where costume jewelry is sold.

None of your blouses need to be solid, although a solid color allows more interchanging. So, here are some of the outfits you'll have: 1. Navy skirt, navy blouse, beige jacket and belt 2. Navy skirt, red blouse, beige jacket and belt 3. Navy skirt, print (or plaid) blouse and beige jacket 4. Navy skirt, navy blouse, white jacket and pearls 5. Navy skirt, red blouse, white jacket and pearls 6. Navy skirt, plaid blouse, white jacket and navy beads.

You now have a minimum of one full week's total outfits, and a good looking wardrobe for interviewing. I hope finding a job is as easy as putting together your new wardrobe.

Send your questions as well as requests for further information on wardrobe consultation to Mary T. Millican, P.O. Box 8878, Midland 79703.

By LYNN SMITH
Los Angeles Times -
Washington Post News Service

GARDEN GROVE, Calif. — Ah, the prom. Remember? Two decades ago, it was probably called something like "Camelot" or "Tropical Paradise."

Little squares of colored light swam around the high school gym. Exercise bars had been strewn with miles and miles of crepe paper dripping in woeful imitation of fountains or palm trees.

You and your date shuffled to the music, clinging like koala bears, each hoping the other would not notice the sweaty hands, bad breath, growling stomach or throbbing heart.

Proms today, like those of 20 years ago, are still reserved for the more sentimental and less skeptical members of the junior and senior class. Like other examples of establishment-approved fun, they ebbed during the early '70s only to return in recent years with the tidal force popularity of preppies, tea dancing and bridal registration.

BUT DESPITE THEIR REVIVAL, the last formal flings of high school are marked by customs and costs that might astonish the class of '62. Last week, two couples agreed to let a reporter follow them through their double date — from the preparations to the dinner to the dance.

GARDEN GROVE HIGH School, an average if traditional 1,800-student high school in the flatlands of Orange County south of Los Angeles, held its prom Friday, May 7.

About the time it was starting junior Darin Geringer was in a restaurant reaching for the check after a dinner he had shared with his friend Mark Means, a senior, and their prom dates Jan Kaanoi and Susie Sagara. He had just glanced at the check when Jan snatched it. She blanched. The lobster, steak, scallops and virgin pina coladas — complete with paper umbrellas — came to a total $91.37.

Twenty years ago, a prom ticket costing as much as $13.50 would have included dinner. Today, tickets cost about $25. Couples go out to eat before and sometimes after. Girls need formal dresses. And boys, who still foot the bill, also pay for their tuxedos, flowers, pictures and transportation, which in the more affluent areas frequently means a $35-an-hour limousine.

Limousines have become so popular in recent years in these places that they have even been used for junior high school dances and must be reserved a month in advance for spring proms.

Even at Garden Grove, where limousines are the exception rather than the rule, the cost of a prom averages about $200 per couple. Renting a limousine can raise that average to $400. For the extravagant — like the boy who last year flew his date to San Francisco for dinner before the prom — the cost is limited only by the imagination.

Some extras cited by students are: breakfast, harbor cruises, a hotel room for champagne parties or a chauffeured ride to Beverly Hills instead of attending the prom at all.

(IN 1962 A FELLOW could buy a dinner, ticket and orchid corsage, rent a tuxedo and fill the gas tank of Dad's Buick for under $50).

The evening is now so expensive that one boy said he had been working all year in order to afford it. Others simply do not go.

Mark, a senior, has two part-time jobs and Darin's mother slipped him a few crisp bills with the faces of unfamiliar presidents before he left. Susie, who works as a hostess, made her dress. Jan, who works as a waitress, borrowed one. Neither had her hair done professionally.

To earn extra money or a free tuxedo, some boys work as walking advertisements by wearing tuxedos to school weeks ahead of time. Others think up eccentric schemes like renting a bus for a group or borrowing an 18-wheel cab truck.

Their parents, joined by Susie's parents, gathered — as parents in any decade seem wont to do — to snap pictures of their children dressed up in formals and flowers for the dance. This time, amid the barking dogs, ringing telephones and older and younger sisters, their images were also captured on videotape.

Standing before the camera, the boys clutching the girls' waists from behind, Jan suddenly laughed out loud. "His hands are sweating!" she shouted.

THE TWO COUPLES have been dating steadily. Mark and Darin have known each other since they were 8-year-old Little League players. At dinner, they talked about that afternoon's baseball game and how the coach let the players who were going to the prom leave the game early.

They appeared much more comfortable with one another than other prom goers at the same restaurant. Flushed in their tight tuxedos, or fiddling with long white gloves and flowers, the others glanced at the walls and ceilings as if the intensity of a stare could make social cue cards materialize.

However, most of today's seniors, unrestricted by the rigid sex roles of yesteryear, are usually less stilted and more open with one another, say high school activity directors. The boys still pay for the prom, but the girls at Garden Grove pick up all the costs, except pictures, at a girl-ask-boy winter formal.

The boys are still supposed to ask for the date at the prom though. "I wouldn't ask a boy," said one attractive girl who on prom eve remained dateless. "I'm still old-fashioned when it comes to that." She spent Friday night at the movies with another unasked girlfriend.

It used to be that unasked girls, humiliated and crying, wanted to crawl in a cave and die.

But back then, girls also wore contoured bras and tight girdles, toreador pants instead of jeans, white lipstick instead of red lipstick or no lipstick at all. They teased their hair bouffant-style instead of adding rainbow colors or letting it fall naturally.

THEY THOUGHT A LOT about getting married, as evidence by ads for silver, china and wedding rings in a 1962 issue of Seventeen magazine. Today, college and career bound, they laugh at the idea of marriage upon graduation.

But in earlier days, proms were often the occasion for a couple to announce their engagement, recalled Dick Beem, 48, a Garden Grove photographeer who has attended 10 proms a year since 1948.

Proms then were usually held in gymnasiums, said Beem. In the '60s, they evolved to dinner at a restaurant, before the dance in a rented hall, a country club or hotel. The move was a "godsend" for advisers who had had to spend all night Friday and all day Saturday helping the prom committee decorate the gym, he said.

AFTER THEY DROVE up to the Disneyland Hotel, where the prom was being held, Jan and Darin had a moment to remember. The key to his neighbor's Cadillac stuck in the door lock. Bent, it appeared useless. After placing one unanswered call home for help, they decided to call later and meanwhile enjoy the dance.

Upstairs, only a few candle lamps decorated the Magnolia Room's round tables. A band played songs from '60s rock to new wave and romantic ballads while the boys and girls bobbed up and down or hugged on the dance floor. Some sat at tables paying mild attention to the crowning of a queen and king, the winners of a popularity contest held that evening.

The boys were wearing tuxedos, of all colors, sometimes coordinated with the girls' formals. Mark and Darin were among the few following the trend of recent years to wear tennis shoes. Most other boys had pushed their feet into hard, shiny shoes.

Jan and Susie wore simple dresses, which hung loosely from spaghetti straps and eleasticized tops to the floor. But most girls were arrayed in an eclectic range from Grecian gowns to costume-like imitations of the strapless tuk net "uniforms" of proms 20 years ago. Some tottered on strappy heels; others wore ballet slippers.

"They're so dressed up and look so nice, you don't recognize 90 percent of them," said Jerry Pfefer, student activities director at Garden Grove High School.

Ten years ago, the school eliminated dress codes. But at the prom, one girl raised eyebrows and school officials' concerns over "suitability" when she arrived in a leotard, white tights and a tuxedo jacket. At the other end of the spectrum, others came in Old South hooped skirts and parasols.

AH, YOUTH. IN HINDSIGHT, the concerns of kids 20 years ago seem as innocent and simple as song lyrics compared to the supposed sophistication and sexual awareness of kids today. For example, at this year's prom, one girl was worried, not about a good night kiss, but about being seen entering a hotel room.

During prom season, Disneyland Hotel security officials said, rooms are rented eiher by kids over 18 or, if they are younger, by their parents. Tacit policy dictates leaving them alone unless the parties become too rowdy, they said. There are always a few who drink more than they can handle, they added.

GROWING UP, IT SEEMS, can't always be rushed. In front of the photographer, couples obviously not acquainted responded stiffly to an assistant's attempts to pose them cheek to shoulder. Smiles twitched.

"They're just as self-conscious now as they ever were," said one veteran chaperone. "They just spend 20 times as much money."

Of about 800 juniors and seniors at Garden Grove, 195 bought tickets. Since some brought non-student dates, probably less than half those eligible went to their prom. "I feel sorry for those missing out," said Myron Orleans, associate professor of sociology and human services at California State University, Fullerton.

Because the prom is a ritual that ties people to high school tradition and the larger American culture, it can be a "potent and meaningful" process for those who go, he said. Those who don't go by choice are alienated from the system and are not making lifestyle or political statements, said Orleans, who regrets having missed his own prom 22 years ago.

Those who wish they had gone to their own proms and did not, he said, can make up for it by going to reunions.

AT MIDNIGHT, SUSIE AND Mark were sitting knee to knee, his cutaway on a chair, his top hat on her head. They laughed over a secret joke. They said they might go to the beach later or maybe back to Darin's house.

Meanwhile, Darin and Jan were outside in the parking lot, solving the car key problem. His older sister and her boyfriend had arrived to help. Together, they decided to bend the key back to its original form. It worked.

Doctor warns too much sun dangerous to skin

NEW YORK (AP) — "The skin has a memory, and the memory of past summers and past exposures when sun worshippers soaked up the rays is both life-giving and life-threatening," says Dr. Perry Robins, president of the Skin Cancer Foundation and associate professor and chief of chemosurgery at New York University Medical Center.

At a recent seminar, "The Sun and Your Skin — What's New?" for science and health writers, he pointed out that chemicals and X-rays caused only a small fraction of the total number of skin cancers diagnosed. Instead, he said, the primary factor was the sun.

Among other points made by Robins were these:

—More than 90 percent of skin cancers are found on parts of the body that are regularly exposed to sunlight.

—People whose occupations expose them to prolonged periods of sunlight are most vulnerable.

—Fair-skinned people who freckle and sunburn easily are more vulnerable than dark-skinned people who have more protective pigment in the skin.

—The sites of 90 percent of all skin cancers are the protruding lower lips, lower eyelids and ear rims, normally unprotected parts of the body.

—In England, where cars are equipped with right-hand drive, drivers tend to develop skin cancers on the right side of their faces, whereas in the United States, where there is left-hand drive, facial cancers appear more frequently on that side.

—Skin cancer is linked not only to an individual's exposure to UVR, but to the color of the skin. All normal skin contains melanin (dark coloring matter) to some degree. Dark skins absorb only 20 to 25 percent of UVR that would penetrate light skin. Thus, the incidence of skin cancer among blacks and Asians is relatively low.

—More women than men develop malignant melanoma; estrogen levels are suggested as a reason for this difference.

—The most common kinds of skin cancer are basal cell carcinoma, squamous cell carcinoma and malignant melanoma, the most lethal kind.

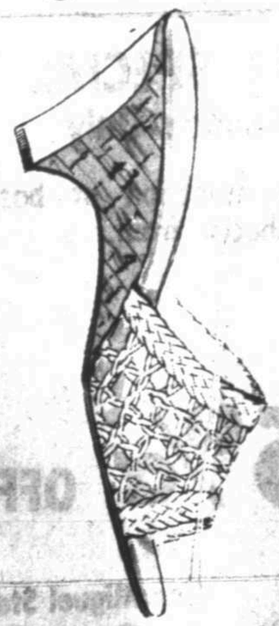

—Of all skin cancers, 5 percent are melanomas, but this 5 percent accounts for two-thirds of all deaths from skin cancer, with 14,000 deaths from it annually in the United States.

"The difference between early and late detection is the difference, in many cases, of life and death or disfigurement," says Robins, author of a forthcoming book, "Skin Cancer."

"Treatment has a high success rate when begun early," he adds.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Removing glass sediments

DEAR HELOISE:

Please tell me how to get caked sediment off the inside of glass bottles and vases.

The bottle necks are quite narrow and no cleanser I've tried seems to work. Only water has been put in the containers, so it must be lime buildup. — Beatriz Persistence pays off here. Pour a little vinegar and water along with some sand for abrasion into the vase. Allow it to stand awhile, then shake vigorously. This should remove any sediment from the sides.

+++

If not, repeat the process, letting the vinegar stand a little longer.

Many readers have written to say they've had great success cleaning stained decanters and vases by dropping a denture tablet into the container filled with water and letting it stand overnight. Won't hurt to try! — Heloise

I've tried cooking oil but no luck so far. Do you or your readers know of any other way to split up this twosome? — Frances Z.

+++

Must be the season, 'cause I've had other complaints of just this occurring. If you can remember school days and studying in science about heat expanding and cold contracting, you're on the right track.

Fill the top pan with ice and put the bottom pan in hot water. If that doesn't do the trick, then you've got me stumped too. — Heloise

MAKING DO

Dear Heloise: My daughter-in-law bought an expensive highchair for the first baby. By the time the second baby came along, the plastic on the seat had deteriorated. There was no way to recover it.

One day she thought of trying to use a fluffy toilet seat cover with elastic casing, and it fit perfectly.

LETTER OF LOVE

Dear Heloise: When I had my leg in a cast, I tried to remain as independent as possible. My family and neighbors were most helpful. I soon learned to manipulate myself to a degree too.

I've learned life is a two-way street. You help people and they will help you. It's as simple as that.

But you have to give as well as take. You do it by your column every day as your mother did before you. God bless you both. — June R.

SERVING TRAYS

Dear Heloise: For do-it-yourselfers who want to redo a serving tray, prepasted wallpaper is an easy, yet decorative way to do it.

A washable type works best. The choices of sample pieces are endless.

Use a sharp razor blade to cut the edges straight and smooth and get a clean fit.

It's extra nice if you can use a scrap of leftover wallpaper that matches your wall. — Patricia See

FRESH TRAVELER

Dear Heloise: To keep my husband's clothes smelling fresh on business trips, I put a couple of fabric softener sheets in his suitcase.

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: I was always looking for the plastic trash can liners when I needed a new one and this caused me added steps and added to an already hectic routine.

Now I place the box of refills in the bottom of my tall trash can, putting the new liner over it.

No more looking. It takes up little room and is always there when I remove the old bag to discard it.

Thanks for a good column that I have read since I was very small. — Dave Fisher

DEAR ABBY

Woman's case opens a can of worms

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 22-year-old woman who has worms. How can I get rid of them without going to a doctor? My husband is in the Army, and when I go to the doctor on the base, I have to tell him what's wrong with me in front of a bunch of people. It's kind of embarrassing to say I've got worms.

How did I get worms anyway? Please write back and tell me all you know about worms. Thank you. — COVER UP MY LOCATION

DEAR COVER UP: Dr. Jaime Paris, my chief medical consultant, said it is unwise to assume that you diagnosed your case correctly without having been examined by a physician. Therefore, he hesitated to give me much information about worms. However, this is what I wormed out of him:

PINWORMS, the commonest type of worms, are transmitted by personal contact. Pinworms are often epidemic in schools; children bring them home to their families.

TAPEWORMS can be transmitted by eating raw fish, or being in close contact with pets — particularly dogs. They can also be transmitted through water or foods — especially lettuce.

Please see a doctor. And tell his nurse you would appreciate some privacy.

DEAR ABBY: With summer here, please call your readers' attention to the danger of automobiles equipped with power windows. Who knows how many young lives you could save?

In just one day I heard of two incidents where two drivers inadvertently pushed the rear-window button while a child's head was out the window! Even the children themselves can accidentally push the button with their knees — unless the driver can lock the window at his seat. I hope you think this is important enough to print. — MILLIE H. IN HARRISBURG

DEAR MILLIE: I do. Now, meet Lloyd Kleckner, who has another lifesaving suggestion for automobile drivers:

DEAR ABBY: My sister-in-law, Margaret, was going to ride along with two other women who came by for her. When they pulled up (both sitting in front) Margaret started to get into the back, when they said, "There's plenty of room for three in front."

As she started to get in, the woman on the right moved to make room for Margaret, and she accidentally stepped on the gas pedal. The car lurched and Margaret was thrown to the pavement and broke her leg. It was a nasty break, which will take a long time to heal. Please warn your readers to always shift into "park" when people are getting into and out of a car. — LLOYD KLECKNER

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem a lot of kids my age have, so I hope you will come up with an answer and print it. I'm 17 and a junior in high school. I'm an average student and I guess you could call me an average guy.

People are always asking me what I am going to do with my future. And my problem is, I don't know yet.

When I tell them that, they look at me like I am weird or stupid, so please tell me how I am supposed to answer that question so I won't feel embarrassed. — FUZZY FUTURE

DEAR FUZZY: You need not feel embarrassed for admitting that at 17 you don't know how you want to spend the rest of your life.

You are very wise, not "weird or stupid," to defer such an important decision until you are reasonably certain. Hat's off to you for your honesty and good judgment.

Real estate market showing upward trend

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

No, it's not an illusion. For the first time in years, we can see a bright, positive prognosis for the real estate market in the coming months.

As the overall cost of living is actually taking a dip (at this writing), prices of homes are dropping in some areas of the country. And interest rates on mortgage loans are edging down a bit.

Also, a new breed of home mortgage loan instruments is making it possible for more families to qualify for, and obtain financing for, purchase of a home.

These factors, and others, are beefing up home sales activity throughout the country. Families who had almost given up the idea of owning their own residences are now zeroing in on that dream home.

Jack Carlson, executive vice president and chief economist for the National Association of Realtors, who usually expresses a gloom-and-doom view of the real estate market, has finally taken an optimistic turn.

"The outlook for home sales and construction calls for an upturn in activity this summer and should continue to improve gradually throughout 1983 and 1984," Carlson said.

"Slight declines in mortgage interest rates should bring existing home sales up to the 3 million-unit level during 1983. However, new housing construction starts will not exceed the 1 million-unit level until 1984," he predicted.

Carlson expects no more than 6.5 million new homes will be produced during the first five years of this decade. "That's significantly short of the 10 million new units needed to house the increasing number of households in this country."

He predicted the median price of existing single-family homes will be $76,300 in 1983 and $83,700 in 1984. Median prices of new homes will be $80,800 in 1983 and $88,800 in 1984.

Things are slowly but definitely improving in the area of home sales. This will help home sellers and buyers, as well as brokers and salespeople, achieve their desired goals in the months and years ahead.

Q. Does private home mortgage insurance cover all or just part of a mortgage loan?

A. Until recently, private mortgage insurance covered only the top 15 or 25 percent of the loan. Now, at least one company — American Mortgage Insurance Co. (AMIC) — is offering a 100 percent coverage plan. It guarantees the entire loan balance, including negative amortization.

This new development makes the loans more secure for the lender and more attractive to "secondary" buyers of those mortgages. Thus, it will help make more loans available to home buyers.

Q. Is more money from pension funds being used for real estate investments? What types of companies are the biggest investors in real estate?

A. Managers of pension funds are definitely becoming more interested and involved in real estate investments. Of the top 20 institutions with the largest real estate investments, 16 are major life insurance companies with funds totaling about $100 billion, according to the Real Estate Research Corp.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, May 29, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The ever-popular and oh-so-busy Bob Hope celebrates this birthday with you, and so does Anthony Geary of TV'S "General Hospital." Also born on this date: the late President John F. Kennedy. Those of you in the arts or communication fields are in for a wonderful year. Make the most of any unusual opportunities. You will make greater financial progress by staying put than chasing after new employment offers. Romance becomes more much satisfying when you show that you are able to accept criticism. Channel your restless energies into creative or artistic projects. A special hobby brings you and loved one closer together.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Family members have a better understanding of your situation after spending some time with you today. Seek romance where you find it and be discreet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In order to know what you can spend this weekend, balance your checkbook and figure out what is owed to you. It will be difficult to reach someone for a decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may want to get away by yourself this weekend and think about where you are heading. Other family members will help you get your wish. Romance can wait.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): After receiving a check in the mail, plan a gala gathering or buy yourself a nice gift. Member of opposite sex demands answers. Include mate or partner in your plans.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Business negotiations enjoy favorable influences. Tie up loose ends at work. A long-standing dispute is settled to your satisfaction. Reduce household expenses.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Business meetings that take place in unfamiliar surroundings will have disappointing results. Limit the amount of money you spend on your friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The week ends on a quiet note. Talk with people behind the scenes about a future deal. Postpone signing legal documents until you consult banker or accountant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not attempt to push through big business deals. Influential person is in a generous mood. Pay more attention to your relatives' wishes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Flexibility is a necessity today. Someone who speaks a foreign language plays a major role in your affairs. The truth is available regarding a personal relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Adjustments within the family circle are indicated. Candor becomes a valuable commodity. Money requests are made. Be direct when discussing romance, finance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friendship and romance are in the spotlight. Correct past mistakes and you win new respect! Someone who once snubbed you does a complete about-face.

PISCES (Feb. 19—March 20): Travel, publishing and philosophy are featured. You are changing, growing, maturing. Member of opposite sex, you once found intriguing, now appears childish.

Success in war often depends on lines of communication. That is also true of the battle over the green baize!

With his balanced hand and collection of "quacks" (queens and jacks), North might have passed his partner's one spade opening. Once North responded there was no stopping South — he even made a slam try with his club cue-bid.

Sitting South was former U.S. internationalist Bill Grieve. He was not thrilled with his dummy, since he faced the possibility of losing a trump, two diamonds and a club. His immediate problem was to find entries to dummy — declarer would need two entries to the table to take two finesses in diamonds.

Instead of hoping that one of the defenders held a singleton king of spades, declarer led a low spade at trick two. While that conceded the trump loser, it did make sure of two entries to the table regardless of who held the king of trumps. West took his king and returned a heart, ruffed by declarer.

Now dummy's trumps were put to good use. A low spade to the ten provided the entry to run the eight of diamonds to West's king. Declarer ruffed the heart return and re-entered dummy with a trump to the queen. He led the jack of diamonds to repeat the finesse. When East turned up with the queen, the contract was home.

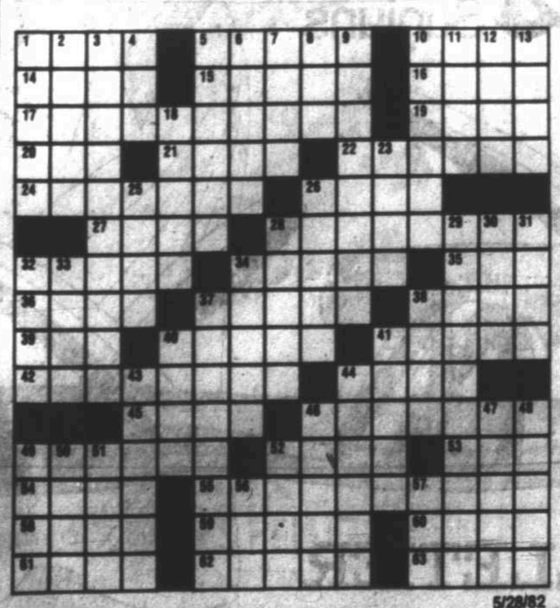

Grieve's mathematics were impeccable. The chances of finding a bare king of trumps were slight indeed. Giving up a trump trick in exchange for two entries to dummy would succeed whenever East held at least one of the two missing diamond honors, and that was better than a 3-to-1 chance.

Improved farmworker aid asked

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — If Texas farmworkers are to stay off welfare rolls, they need collective bargaining rights and a higher state minimum wage, a government-funded study of migrant worker problems has concluded.

David Hall, executive director of Texas Rural Legal Aid, released a 170-page report Wednesday produced after a year-and-a-half study by the Farmworker Policy Impact Project and funded by the Community Services Administration.

Collective bargaining rights could produce higher wages and improved working conditions without government assistance, Hall said.

Collective bargaining in California raised farmworkers' pay to $6 to $8 an hour, Hall said. In Texas, he said, "we're doing well if we achieve anything approaching the federal minimum wage."

Infected pot connected to salmonella outbreak

BOSTON (AP) — Dirty marijuana can cause bacterial infections, and a contaminated batch of the drug spread food poisoning germs across the country last year, researchers say.

Doctors found that marijuana laced with the bacteria salmonella caused an outbreak that affected people in at least seven states. Salmonella bacteria is a common cause of intestinal illness, but it is almost always spread by tainted food.

Researchers at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta tracked down the germ-laden pot after several cases of apparent food poisoning were reported in Ohio and Michigan in January 1981.

Eventually, they found evidence that the same batch of the drug also caused illness in Alabama, Arizona, California, Georgia and Massachusetts.

"There have been other salmonella outbreaks that have affected a similar age group in the past, but this is the only time that we have found an association with marijuana," said Dr. David N. Taylor, who directed the research.

In all, the doctors found 101 people who were affected by the marijuana-linked outbreak. However, Taylor said that ordinarily the federal disease center analyzes only about 1 out of every 100 cases of salmonella poisoning, so as many as 10,000 people might have been sickened by the contaminated pot.

The doctors described their search for the cause of the outbreak in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

When they tested the pot, the researchers found that it had been contaminated by animal manure, and it contained as many as 10 million salmonella bacteria in each gram. They said producers of the marijuana may have mixed it with dried dung to make it weigh more.

Symptoms of the infection included diarrhea, fever, abdominal pain, nausea and vomiting. The illness lasted an average of eight days, and 62 percent of the victims had to be hospitalized.

The doctors tracked down the source of the outbreak by asking people whether they used drugs. In Michigan, they found that 76 percent of the victims were exposed to marijuana, and they were younger than salmonella victims usually are. They questioned healthy people for comparison purposes and found that only 21 percent admitted marijuana exposure.

The doctors also studied the genetic makeup of the bacteriam, finding that the germs were slightly different from other kinds of salmonella. This allowed them to show that the outbreaks in different states were linked.

Other researchers have found that marijuana reduces levels of stomach acid, and they theorize this may make users more susceptible to bacterial diseases.

The doctors believe that people became infected when they touched the marijuana to their lips or put their fingers in their mouths after handling the pot.

Children and other family members who did not use the drug also got sick. The doctors said they probably had contact with flecks of marijuana or picked up the illness from users.

Hypertension, kidney problem link in black people explored

BOSTON (AP) — There may be a link between black susceptibility to hypertension and a high rate of blacks seeking kidney dialysis, according to an editorial in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The editorial accompanied a report saying blacks in Birmingham, Ala., sought dialysis treatment for kidney disease at a rate four times greater than whites.

"The rate for blacks, 18.8 per 100,000 population, was 4.2 times greater than that for whites, 4.4 per 100,000," said the report in Thursday's Journal.

The study covered patients referred between 1974-1978 to the dialysis programs of the University of Alabama and the Veterans Administration medical centers in Birmingham.

Much of the difference in the black and whites rates "is related to the finding that rates of hypertensive renal disease in blacks were 17 times rates in whites" and that rates of other varieties of kidney, or renal, disease was higher in blacks, the survey authors said.

Of 76 patients with hypertensive renal disease referred to the two hospitals, 67 were black, according to survey figures.

"The greater relative risk of blacks for end-stage hypertensive kidney disease, coupled with the distribution of blacks in the population, may explain why hypertension is one of the major causes of end stage renal disease (ESRD) in the United States, whereas it is of minor importance in Europe," said the authors, who noted Europes' black population is small.

The authors said 196 blacks, 98 whites and two patients of unknown race were referred for treatment in the two Birmingham hospitals between 1974 and 1978.

"When these data were tested for lack of fit with the expected census proportions, we found that 199.7 whites and only 94.3 blacks should have been referred...," they concluded.

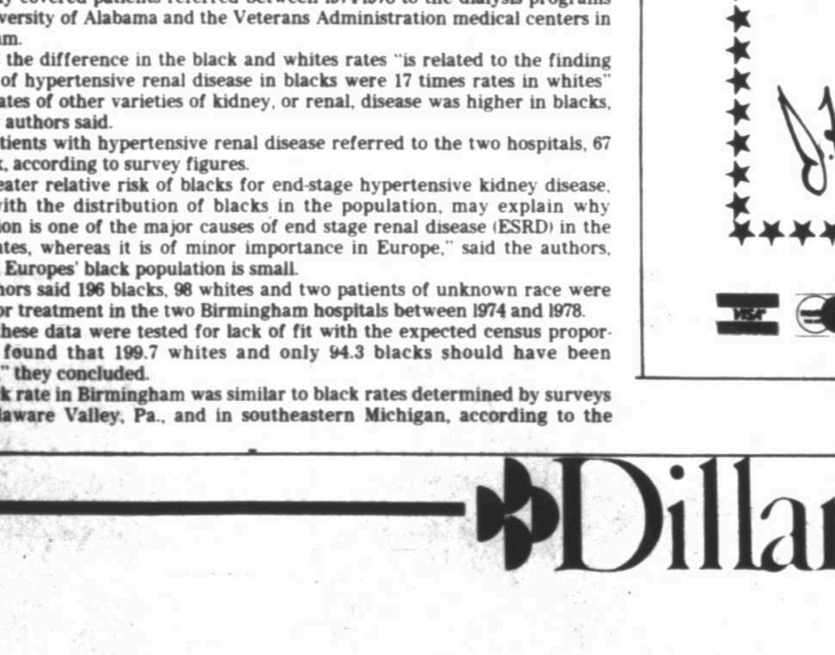

The black rate in Birmingham was similar to black rates determined by surveys in the Delaware Valley, Pa., and in southeastern Michigan, according to the report.

Memorial Day time to remember heroes

By HUGH MULLIGAN

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Down the road a piece from my house is a tiny cemetery, less than a half acre, bordered by old stone walls and with weathered tombstones dating back to colonial times sprouting among the weeds.

It's called the Selleck cemetery, after Squire Selleck who operated a lime mill nearby.

Somebody, probably from a local veterans organization, visits this otherwise forgotten burial ground every Memorial Day to place brand new American flags and some flowers on the graves of Joseph and Nephi Whitlock.

I don't know who the Whitlock boys were — brothers, I'm sure, but I pay them a quiet visit every now and then, when I feel the need to escape into yesterday. I have been curious about them ever since moving to Ridgefield nearly five years ago.

Their twin white granite headstones stand at rigid attention at the far end of the graveyard, overlooking the lake, as if they were still on guard duty with the Seventeenth Regiment of the Connecticut Volunteers. The 2½-foot high stone nearest the lake reads:

Civil War
Joseph H. Whitlock
Co. C 17th C.V.I.
Died July 16, 1863

That would have been two weeks after the battle of Gettysburg, and I have often wondered whether he was among the 38,000 casualties of that murderous meeting of George G. Meade and Robert E. Lee on another cemetery ridge.

NEPHI'S STONE is similarly lettered, except the last line notes that he died on May 2, 1912, at the age of 68, which means he was 19 when Joseph died. I hope Nephi was the younger brother, but boys went off to war very early in those days. From what I can gather in the local chronicles, the Whitlocks were people of some substance in this southern Connecticut town. The land the Congregational Church of Ridgebury stands on was donated by a John Whitlock in 1762, for "the love and respect I have and do bear unto said Discenting (sic) Society."

For many years the Whitlocks had a livery stable down in the town, under the sign "careful drivers always furnished." Around the time of the Civil War, a Henry Whilock operated a stage coach from Ridgefield to the train station at Branchville, a half dozen miles away, a service that would certainly come in handy these days for the town's energy conscious commuters.

I don't suppose the family's apparent prosperity kept the Whitlock brothers, if they were brothers, from accepting the $200 "bounty" that the town voted to pay each Civil War volunteer. Records show the town treasurer was authorized to borrow up to $16,000 to finance the bounties, but since 209 men from town served in the war, there must have been a sizeable deficit.

Memorial Day, I hope, still signifies something more to people across the country than the opening of the beach and picnic season and the combustion noises of te Indianapolis 500. When I was a kid growing up in Long Island City, just across the East River from Manhattan's skyscrapers, we always put on our Boy Scout uniforms on Memorial Day and marched off to hear Taps played over a local square named for some World War I veteran. Then there would be solemn speech by some politician, prayers by an ecumenical sprinkling of the local clergy, a recitation of a Joyce Kilmer poem containing the line "knapsack lie easy on my back," and hot dogs and soda pop down at the American Legion Hall, which was the bounty they paid to us for showing up.

I'D LIKE to be in Evanston, Ill., some Memorial Day and pay a visit to the monument in Calvary Cemetery honoring Col. James A. Mulligan, a Civil War hero who must be a relative back there somewhere. Someone recently sent me a clipping from the Irish American News, a Chicago paper, telling about the dedication of the Mulligan memorial on Decoration Day, as it used to be called, May 30, 1885. They ran a special train out from Chicago to accommodate the dignitaries, who included Milligan's widow and three daughters.

The tall granite shaft, adorned with a Celtic cross, contains the inscription: "In memory of James A. Mulligan, Colonel, 23rd Illinois Volunteers, Irish Brigade. Born, Utica, N.Y. June 25, 1830. Wounded in Battle at Kernstown, Va., July 24, 1864. 'Lay me down and save the flag.'"

I have been curious about the brigade ever since receiving as a Christmas present a replica of a Civil War recruiting poster that still hangs on the wall of my writing den:

"Mulligan's Brigade!
Last Chance to Avoid the Draft!
$420 Bounty! to Veterans!
$302 to all other Volunteers! ....

"All able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 45 ...

"All who wish to Join John Mulligan's Irish Brigade, now in the field, and to receive the munificent bounties can have the opportunity by calling at the headquarters of Capt. J.J. Fitzgerald, of the Irish Brigade. 23rd Regiment Illinois Volunteers."

Were John Mulligan and James Mulligan brothers or did the printer goof? They both could not have commanded the brigade. According to Carl Wittke's "The Irish in America," the 23rd Illinois "was recruited by Col. James A. Mulligan, editor of Chicago's first Catholic newspaper, the Western Tablet, and included Irish companies from Springfield, Rockford and Galena."

ANYHOW, OF the 2,800 men Mulligan, James or John, recruited, only 30 were on hand to see his monument dedicated 20 years after the war ended. Few had survived the severe mauling the regiment received in two bloody engagements with larger Confederate forces.

"Lest we forget," wrote Kipling. Some say the world would be better off if we forgot heroes and concentrated on the living. Maybe. But the habit of patriotism is too ingrained for me not to remember on Memorial Day.

Sex business leads to rampant crime

By SIEGFRIED NIEBUHR
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

FRANKFURT, West Germany — For more than a decade, West Germany has been one of the few countries in the world where sex businesses could flourish legally and unhampered.

But widespread sentiment is growing against the plethora of porno shops, sex bars and brothels in the large cities.

It is not prudry, however, that is turning more and more Germans against sex as a business, but rather the related crime spinoff. They oppose the growing traffic in drugs and prostitution, the increasing incidence of violent crimes and the social consequences of entire neighborhoods degenerating into squalor.

In the once respectable business and residential area surrounding the central railway station, there are no less than 26 brothels, 364 bars and scores of pornographic shows and sex cinemas. About 1,500 prostitutes ply their trade day and night in the district, which comprises only one-fifth of a square mile.

Crime in the district is rampant. Hardly a night goes by without shots being fired, dealers peddle hashish and heroin, and pimps ruthlessly exploit hundreds of foreign prostitutes, many of them illegal immigrants from Asia and Africa.

The former German residents in the area have long since left. In 1960, about 7,500 persons lived there, drawn to the area because of its convenient location and its peaceful ambiance. Now there are only about 3,000, two-thirds of them foreigners.

Frankfurt's city government has declared war on the sex trade and related crimes, to prevent further deterioration of the city. In line with the crackdown, police frequently raid the area, and foreign prostitutes with no resident visas are promptly sent home.

In their first move, Frankfurt's vice squads close down a number of peep shows, where nude girls dance in enclosed rooms while voyeurs watch through coin-activated peepholes.

West Germany's Supreme Administrative Court recently ruled that such "automatic sex" cubicles were immoral. The court's ruling has given use to crackdowns on such shows by authorities in other West German cities, including West Berlin, where the encroaching sex businesses and kindred crimes are even threatening to spoil the former German capital's renowned boulevard. The "kurfuerstendamm."

City administrators in Berlin stress that they have no intention of attempting to ban the sex trades as such, but rather to prevent urban decay.

Frankfurt's mayor, Walter Wallmann, recently ordered the sex businesses to move to a designagted area on the city's outskirts. The bawdy houses, peep shows and porno bars are expected to begin moving out of the central district in a few months.

Within two to three years, Wallmann says, the notorious central station area will return to what it used to be, namely a bustling business and residential district — safe for everyone.

The Newspaper BIBLE

WHAT'S YOUR EXCUSE?

"THE HEAVENS ARE telling the glory of God; they are a marvelous display of his craftmanship. Day and night they keep on telling about God. Without a sound or word, silent in the skies, their message reaches out to all the skies, their message reaches out to all the world. The sun lives in the heavens where God placed it and moves out across the skies as radiant as a bridegroom going to his wedding, or as joyous as an athlete looking forward to a race! The sun crosses the heavens from end to end, and nothing can hide from its heat." (Psalm 19:1-6)

"Since earliest times men have seen the earth and sky and all God made, and have known of his existence and great eternal power. So they will have no excuse (when they stand before God at Judgment Day).

Yes, they knew about him all right, but they wouldn't admit it or worship him or even thank him for all his daily care. And after awhile they began to think up silly ideas of what God was like and what he wanted them to do. The result was that their foolish minds became dark and confused. Claiming themselves to be wise without God, they became utter fools instead. And then, instead of worshipping the glorious, ever-living God, they took wood and stone and made idols for themselves, carving them to look like mere birds and animals and snakes and puny men." (Romans 1:20-23)

Psychologist: People like to be scared

By MAUREEN KARLY
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Couples clutch each other as evil reigns at the Bijou. Readers shiver to spine-chilling yarns. Terrifying tales of the supernatural have always attracted an audience. But never as much as now.

The horror genre has grown swiftly this past decade. What grosses us out grosses well at the box office, leading Hollywood to churn out more and more gore. Since the mid-70s, in fact, production of horror movies has more than doubled. According to Variety film critic Larry Cohen, about 50 a year were produced in the mid-'70s, and more than 300 from the period of 1979 till now. "It is now possible to release two new horror flicks every week," he says.

Harvey Greenberg, a psychoanalyst and author of "Movies on Your Mind," labels this genre "cruel cinema." Although there are a handful of horror film classics — "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Dracula" and "Frankenstein" — he says Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho" was the benchmark movie "responsible for legitimizing the display of violence to large general audiences."

Book publishers, too, are accelerating their output of scary novels. "It is one of the hotter genres working right now," says Marty Asher, editor in chief of Pocket Books. "The Exorcist," says Asher, did for books what "Psycho" did for films. "It was probably the first breakout horror novel of recent times," he says, "and it spawned a lot of other books like it." Since then, he says, the genre has widened so much that it now includes subdivisions. And he lists three: the spooky kid genre (such as "Flowers in the Attic" which sold 11 million copies); the classic, subtle type ("Ghost Story"), and your basic blood and guts ("Blood Sisters"). "That's quite a range — the field has grown a lot."

THE ATTRACTION of a good novel of terror? It has the ability to connect us with our dark subconscious as few things can, say Stan and Joan Kaminsky, authors (under the name Brooks Stanwood) of "The Glow" and "The Seventh Child." "It allows us to think the unthinkable and actually enjoy it," says Kaminsky. "It's almost like directing one's own nightmares."

But why do we like to scare ourselves out of our wits?

—Some people get an erotic pleasure out of it, says Robert Hoffman, assistant professor of psychology at Adelphi University on Long Island. "If you said that to very proper people, they would deny it, but it's true on a subconscious level. Freud and other psychoanalysts believe that sex and violence are connected."

—It's fun because you know it's not true on one level and the bad guy gets it, says Asher. Morton Kissen, a psychoanalyst at Adelphi's Institute of Advanced Psychological Studies, agrees. It's nice to be in a scary environment — as long as it's controlled and you know you are safe, he says. "You titillate yourself with a fantasy, but you're always aware it's a fantasy."

—It relieves the pressures of everyday life. "We are inundated every day with news of senseless brutality, killings and terror," says Stan Kaminsky. "When we read or see a thriller, we do get frightened, but because there is a plot which gets resolved, we are also allowed to feel relief — a feeling we don't often get in real-life situations of terror."

—It's a matter of personality, says Kissen. There are phobics, he says, and counter-phobics. Phobics are fearful people, often conditioned by their parents to be so. These people would avoid seeing or reading anything frightening. Counter-phobics, he says, more often say, "I dare you to frighten me; I want to see the scariest movie I can see. I want to risk feeling fgrightened." "Counter-phobics like risks," he says. "They're daredevils. They're the type that love riding roller coasters."

Movie directors, too, see the correlation between roller coasters and horror films. John Irving, director of "Ghost Story," notes, "They both have the crucial ingredients of shared terror and incipient panic." And Sean Cunningham, who directed "Friday the 13th," once told a reporter that if a director gives his audience the thrills of a perfect roller-coaster ride, they will support his film.

IS THIS current popularity a barometer of the times we live in? Yes, says Kissen. "We live in a very escapist time. People don't want to deal with the real serious problems of the age." But Hoffman feels that the popularity of horror films and books can also be traced to modern mass-marketing techniques and technical advances in special effects. "Now they can make horror films more graphic than ever before." A good example, he says, is "American Werewolf in London." In the original with Lon Chaney Jr., the transition to werewolf was done with stop action. In the modern version, the facial structure changes before the audience's eyes.

Another change in the horror genre: We are taking evil more seriously. From a religious standpoint, Hoffman says, "The Exorcist" showed the devil as the devil is, arousing deep-rooed fear in some people. Until then, the devil had been portrayed lightheartedly — "as Sebastian Cabot in a tweed suit."

Is all this violence turning us into a nation of shock absorbers — so that we become inured to it in everyday life? Hoffman defends it. "Violence is in there for a reason," he says. "It's good to let the heart beat fast and let the adrenalin flow. Being scared, being concerned about one's safety, is a part of life — a normal emotion you should experience. There are people who never get stimulated or scared or excited. That's unhealthy!"

Psychologist Joyce Brothers, too, says it's healthy. "When your own life gets very complex and scary," she explains, "and you feel you can't handle it, it is easier to escape ito a fearul story so absurd you know it is not a real threat. Then you can go back to your own frightening or threatening situation better able to handle it."

But leave the kids at home.

Hundreds of studies have shown that vetwing violence, whether on TV or in movies, not only makes children overaggressive, but also, says Hoffman, "they'll have nightmares."

AS FOR the sickies in our society, it's true that crazy people get ideas from watching horror shows, Hoffman says. But they are few. "There will always be that subset of the population who will do those kinds of things. But fear is a normal human emotion that people should express, like love, anger, rage. Whenevr people hold their emotions inside, it is not healthy. Letting them out does not make them more violent."

Gypsy moths may cause allergies in some people

BOSTON (AP) — Last spring, people complained that gypsy moths made them break out in a rash. Just in time for this year's caterpillar invasion, doctors have discovered why: It's the bugs' hair.

Two medical reports published today show that the caterpillars' bristly hair stick into people's skin. The result is an itchy rash that looks like a series of mosquito bites.

"For most people, I would classify this as a nuisance," said Dr. Steven K. Shama of New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston. "But some people are terribly bothered and simply cannot walk out of their homes during May and June. They get intensely itchy and have to seek a physician's care."

Shama's study in today's New England Journal of Medicine theorizes the bug hairs may cause a rash in two ways: The sharp hairs alone stab the skin and cause irritation. And they are covered with the chemical histamine, which also causes a reaction in some people.

People who got the rash last spring may have even more trouble this year.

Shama said such outbreaks usually get worse with repeated exposure. Since many people got the rashes for the first time last spring, "I think we will be seeing much more significant reactions this year."

The rash may appear within a half hour of exposure to the caterpillars, or it may break out a day or two later. It can last for two weeks. And that's not all.

"Some people just get a blotchy rash. Others might get hives, and some have itchy eyes, wheezing and sneezing," said Shama. "We are alerting allergists that they may be seeing more of this, and they should ask people about their exposure to gypsy moths."

People get the rash if the caterpillars fall onto them from the trees, but bug hairs blowing in the breeze may also cause it, the doctors say.

Doctors from Allergy-Immunology Associates of Chelmsford, Mass., conducted an experiment to show that caterpillar hairs cause the rash. Drs. W.N. Beaucher and J.E. Farnham taped the bug hairs onto the arms of eight people who had suffered earlier suspected gypsy moth rashes.

All of them got the expected rashes, which itched so badly that some of the subjects had trouble sleeping at night.

These doctors suggested that the caterpillar hairs become imbedded in clothing and then work their way into the skin.

U.S. asked to twist arms in arms shipments

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

LONDON — The United States has been asked by Britain to use its influence with South Africa and Israel to stop them from shipping arms, particularly guided missiles, to Argentina.

Informants here said Britain was "dissatisfied" by official denials in both Pretoria and Jerusalem that weapons were being supplied to the Argentine air force for its strikes against the British fleet off the Falkland Islands.

A source explained that British defense ministry information was that Argentina had been re-supplied since the outbreak of hostilities with some essential armaments, despite United Nations condemnation of Buenos Aires as an aggressor.

While there is apparently no incontestable evidence that Israel and South Africa were the suppliers, the British are said to believe they are the likeliest sources.

Britain lacks both political and economic leverage with them to halt the suspected traffic. Recent British governments have imposed an arms embargo against South Africa. In numerous other ways, they have adhered to an anti-South Africa policy to mark their opposition to the latter's racial laws.

Anglo-Israeli relations have long been cool because of Britain's alleged pro-Arab stance. If anything, their relations have tended to worsen since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher came to power.

In the circumstances, the British have turned to the Reagan administration as the only one with the kind of influence that could twist arms in both countries.

"They hope especially that President Reagan's friendliness toward South Africa will pay off in this situation," a diplomat explained. "American goodwill is priceless to the South Africans, far more valuable than their economic links to Argentina."

Informants here stressed that if, as suspected, Israeli weapons like the Gabriel missile and spare parts for the Israeli-made version of the Mirage fighter were reaching Buenos Aires and that South Africa also was keeping up a flow of arms, this was not because the two governments were out to spite Britain. Instead, they said, their motives were undoubtedly essentially commercial.

Argentina was a long-standing customer and trading partner whom they felt should be kept happy in the interests of future dealings. Even anti-semitism in Argentina had not been allowed to affect commercial considerations as far as Israel was concerned, so the Falklands was hardly like to do so.

As an informant put it, "The war in the Falklands will end sooner or later, but trade with Argentina goes on forever."

The Falklands crisis had pointed up a grave complication in the burgeoning international traffic in arms, particularly as it affects smaller nations, he said.

"Smaller countries like Israel and South Africa, which are producing a steadily increasing quantity of high quality arms for export are unwilling to put at risk their long-term markets by suspending contracts or imposing embargoes unless their own vital interests are involved," he asserted.

He added, "The major arms exporters like the United States, France and even the Soviet Union are likelier to do so. In the first place, almost any war anywhere in the world touches their national interests. In the second place, they produce weapons that their customers can't obtain elsewhere. Secondary arms suppliers are far less self-controlled and in a conflict like this one more dangerous.'

Reports abound that Argentina is conducting a worldwide search for "black market" Exocet missiles, the French-made long-range weapon that has been responsible for sinking two key British ships off the Falklands. According to one of these reports, Argentina has made a standing offer of $1 million per missile to dealers who can come up with what the Argentinians seem to believe could be the war's decisive weapon.

France's customers for the Exocet include about 25 nations, among them several in Latin America. But nearly all these are said to be the ship-launched version, not the aircraft-launched type needed by Argentina. France has refused to sell any to Argentina for the duration of the war.

British officials had been saying that Argentina had only two remaining Exocets, at least one of which was fired to sink the supply ship Atlantic Conveyor — apparently mistaken for an aircraft carrier — this week. Now they admit they are not so sure and that the Argentine air force may possess two or even three more.

Kurt Rambis of the Los Angeles Lakers, center, shows his peek-a-boo attack as he peers out from between Philadelphia's Darryl Dawkisn, rear, and Andrew Toney in the first game of the NBA championship series Thursday night. The Lakers lead the series 1-0 after the victory.

Lakers 'spurt' to victory

76ers crumble in last 26 minutes of play

"We're a team of spurts," said Riley after the Lakers' 124-117 triumph over a Sixers' team that crumpled in the last 26 minutes Thursday night.

The Lakers trailed, 83-68 with 5:59 left in the third period. In the next 10½ minutes, Los Angeles outscored Philadelphia, 40-9, to turn that 15-point deficit into a 16-point lead.

THAT MADE it 108-92 with 7:35 left in the game. The 76ers never got closer than the final margin of seven points, and most of that came at the end on two three-point goals by Andrew Toney and another by Steve Mix.

The second game in the best-of-seven series is here Sunday, with the third and fourth at Los Angeles Tuesday and Thursday.

The victory was the ninth straight in the playoffs for the Lakers, breaking the NBA record of most consecutive playoff victories in one season. The 1950 Minneapolis Lakers won their first eight.

The Lakers, who hadn't played in 12 days, previously eliminated the Phoenix Suns and San Antonio Spurs, each in four straight games to win the Western Conference title.

They've been waiting since for the winner of the Eastern final between Philadelphia and Boston, which went seven games.

JAMAAL WILKES and Norm Nixon led seven Lakers in double figures, each with 24 points. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar collected 23.

It was the 100th of 105 career playoff games that Abdul-Jabbar scored 20 or more points.

Nixon also had 10 assists and two steals, while Earvin "Magic" Johnson contributed 14 rebounds and nine steals. Wilkes also had 10 rebounds, seven off the offensive boards.

Philadelphia, which reached the final with victories over Atlanta, Milwaukee and Boston, was led by Julius Erving's 27. Erving had nine rebounds, three assists and three steals.

Bobby Jones had 19, Toney 20 and nine assists, and Darryl Dawkins 16 points. Maurice Cheeks scored 12, handed out nine assists and made three steals in a' losing cause.

Philadelphia started fast, leading 61-50 at halftime. The Lakers appeared flat from their long layoff.

But Los Angeles adjusted, caught up at 1:27 of the third period, 87-87, and took the lead for good on a fastbreak layup by Mike Cooper. It was 91-89 after three quarters.

Wilkes scored 16 of his points in the third period, with Nixon getting 11 and Abdul-Jabbar 10.

WILKES SAID the turnaround was due to the pride and character of the Western champions.

"We got our defense going and the opportunity shots and made them," said Wilkes.

"If we can can keep Doc (Erving) at 25 points or less we ought to win," said Wilkes. "Another key to our second half was our defense off the offensive boards. It triggered our fastbreak and turned the game around," Wilkes said.

Coach Billy Cunningham of the 76ers said his team played well for 2½ periods, then broke down at both ends of the court.

"They used traps to limit our inside game. They kept us to one shot and were able to run and get their transition game going.

"They're a great team, but I'm confident we'll bounce back," Cunningham said.

"If we won it in a breeze today, we probably wouldn't know how to act. Now we have to do it the hard way. In the third period they came at us in waves.

"We were beaten tonight but now we feel we can come back and do the beating on Sunday."

Erving said that "with Magic (Johnson) on the boards and Nixon with the ball, and Kareem (Abdul-Jabbar) just being Kareem the home court won't mean that much."

Erving said the Lakers gamble a lot.

"That's the kind of team they are. They're going to kill you if you let them. They can be very opportunistic."

And the 76ers let them.

Texas speedsters go after the big bats

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The 1982 NCAA Regional Baseball Tournament could be billed as a battle of speed versus strength.

University of Texas baseball coach Cliff Gustafson says his team is not worried about some of the big bats they'll face in the tournament beginning today at Disch-Falks Field.

Though powerhouse Florida State has slugged 131 home runs this year, Gustafson says his team's speed could mean the difference as the Longhorns defend their title.

"Home runs are not a big part of our game," Gustafson said at a pre-tournament press conference Thursday. "We don't depend on them. I don't care if we don't get any home runs as long as we score more runs than the other team."

Longhorn short stop Spike Owen, who is tied with teammate Mike Brumely for the team's base stealing lead, thinks the fleet-footed Texans don't have to worry about any heavy hitters.

"Our game plan is to get on the bases and make things happen with our speed," Owen said.

FSU, Metro Conference runner-up, will open the tournament with a 1 p.m. game against Mid-America Conference winner Eastern Michigan. Oklahoma, 33-23 on the season, will meet Ohio State, 45-12, in the second game. The Longhorns, the tournament's top-ranked team, will meet Hardin-Simmons in Friday's nightcap.

The Longhorns, 53-4, have hosted the tournament for the last three years and claimed the title in both 1979 and 1981.

The Gators, 55-15-1, home run attack has been paced by outfielder Jeff Ledbetter who holds the NCAA mark for single-season home runs at 42. Though only a junior, Ledbetter also has holds the NCAA records for RBI in a single season with 122 and career RBI with 344.

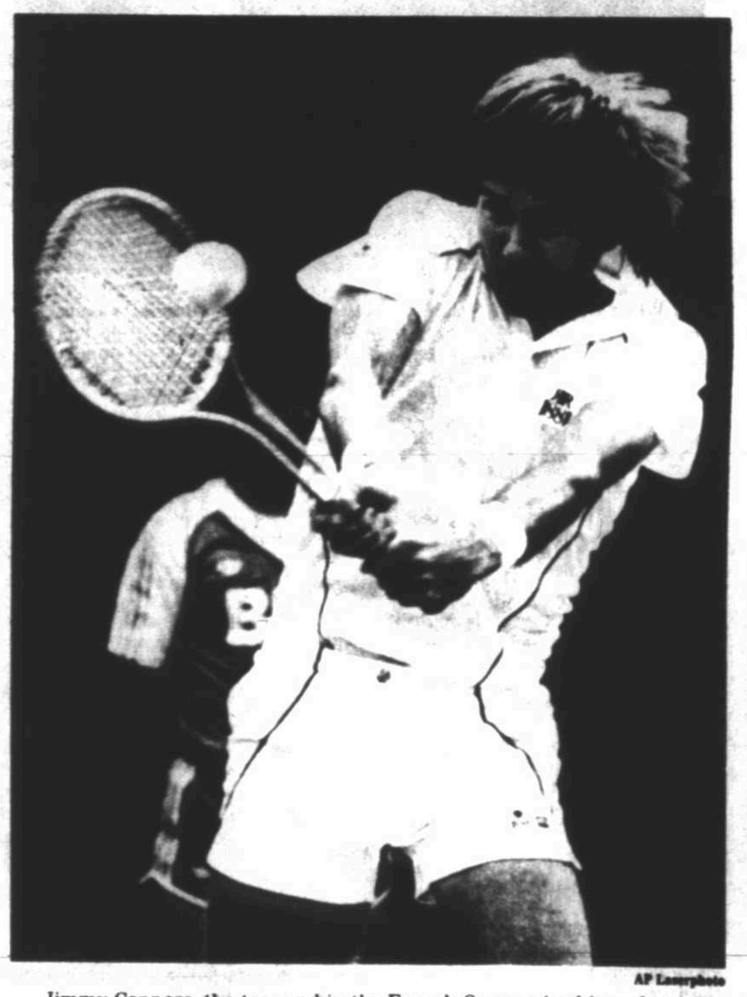

"We're used to playing in smaller yards," Gator coach Mike Martin said Thursday, "but if Jeffery hits one, it will go out of Yellowstone."

Eastern Michigan, 36-21-1, shook off a mid-season slump and won the Mid-American conference tournament in three straight games.

HARDIN-SIMMONS, 23-28, finished the season strong and won the Trans-America Athletic Conference Tournament.

Though losing three key players to injuries and one to illness, Oklahoma still managed to take second place in the Big Eight Tournament.

Ohio State, the Big 10 Divison winner has relied on good pitching and steady hitting this season, said coach Dick Finn. Junior pitcher Doug Swearingen complied a 9-0 record and threw 80 strike outs and freshman pitcher Bill Cunnigham went 8-0 on the season and threw a no-hitter.

Money flows at Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Money is seldom discussed around the Indianapolis Motor speedway — at least among the people who have it.

Sure, the total purse of the 66th Indy 500 is expected to approach $2 million spread among the winner, lap leaders and what have you. But there is money to be made at the speedway and in Indianapolis without even finishing the race.

The source of that money is as mysterious as the amounts.

THE TRACK gets its money from the hundreds of thousands of people who crowd onto the grounds for two weekends of qualifying and race day, from concessions, television and entry fees.

A day watching qualifying costs at least $5. The 350,000 or so people who attend on race day will pay from $10 to $65. A small soft drink is 75 cents.

Plus, there are souvenirs to be purchased, parking to pay for and the drive to the track. Money is at the middle of the whole thing.

The amount of money the track takes in, and the amount that is disbursed, is not the same. The Speedway is a privately owned corporation and is reluctant to discuss what it makes.

"Suffice to say it is not a not-for-profit organization," says Joseph R. Cloutier, speedway president and treasurer.

THE OTHER folks who spread the wealth are equally reluctant to talk in dollars and cents. They fall into a couple of general categories.

First and foremost, there are the sponsors of the race cars. For the most part, they foot the bill for campaigning the car, not only at Indy but around the entire championship car circuit.

The cost of such an undertaking, predictably, is not generally discussed.

Then there are the subsidiary sponsors, businesses such as Goodyear Tires and Valvoline Oil. Goodyear, for example, provides tires for all cars at Indy, whether they make the final starting grid or not.

Even if you wanted to, you couldn't go out and buy one of those tires. If you could, it would cost just under $200. According to Dave Harrison, a company spokesman, about 1,800 of those tires were shipped to Indy this year.

"It is serious business for us," Harrison said.

Valvoline provides lubricants and fuel to 25 of the 33 racers. That too, is free. Sort of.

What do these companies get in return?

HARRISON notes the publicity which comes when national television cameras focus on the Goodyear logo plastered on cars, bodies, hats and virtually everything else around the track, animate and inanimate.

Valvoline, like Goodyear, will begin an advertising campaign featuring the 500 almost immediately after the race ends Sunday.

The advertising actually begins during the race itself. John Barr, a Valvoline spokesman, said the company once authorized a study of how many "impressions" (advertising talk for how many times something can be seen) the product receives during the race.

"There were something like a half-million," Barr said. It is difficult to put a price on such exposure, he notes.

At the bottom of the list are the contingency sponsors. For a fee, racing teams will slap a decal on the car, wear a hat or use a product.

According to Deke Houlgate, a public relations specialist who has worked auto racing for many years, contingency sponsors can get a piece of the action without having to fork over large sums of money. But it is still not cheap.

"The only way you get on our car is to pay," said Houlgate, who is working this year for Pennzoil, sponsor of Johnny Rutherford's car. It is not, he says, a small sum.

Contingency sponsors come out of a real mixed bag. There are beer companies, motel chains, insurance companies, junk food manufacturers, camera manufacturers, bread makers and soft drink companies.

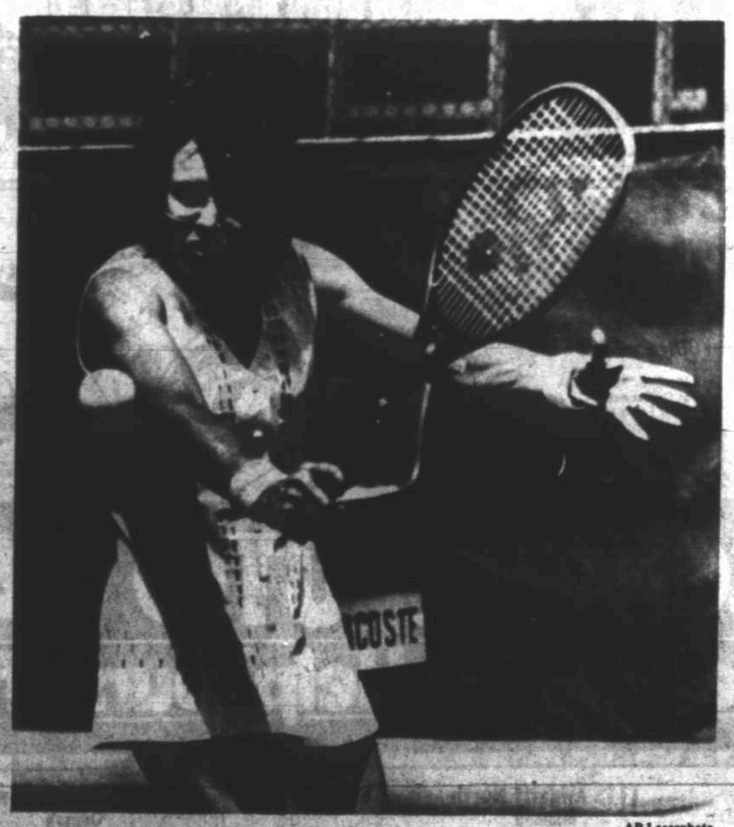

There are also companies manufacturing virtually everything that goes on a car, from piston rings to batteries to shock absorbers.

The exposure afforded those companies often could not be purchased through an ad on the broadcast of the race.

Robert Palmer, an economic researcher for the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, said the city realizes between $20 million and $45 million from race visitors.

"There's no way to keep a tab on it," Palmer said. Most of the money is spent at motels, restaurants and retail establishments. There also is a fair amount spent on entertainment, beverages and the catch-all, miscellaneous.

Billie Jean King makes this return against Lucia Romanov in French Open play Thursday, but fell from competition in a 6-3, 6-4 loss to the Romanian in the third round.

Youngsters make French bid

The 15-year-old Rinaldi made tennis history a year ago when she upset two seeded players to become the youngest competitor to reach the quarterfinals in French Open since the prestigious clay court tournament admitted foreigners 56 years ago.

Her opponent today in the battle for a fourth round berth in the $917,000 event was 16-year-old Kathy Horvath, the 1980 French Open junior champion, who three years ago became the youngest player ever to qualify into the U.S. Open.

THE TWO blonde schoolgirls advanced Thursday with straight set victories.

Rinaldi, a dentist's daughter from Jensen Beach, Fla., eliminated fellow American Julie Harrington, while Horvath, who attends high school in Brandenton, Fla., overcame France's Corinne Vanier 6-3, 6-3.

Rinaldi, who was unheard of when she burst upon the tennis scene at the French Open last year, is the No. 15 seed this year and ranked 20th worldwide. Horvath is ranked 31st.

The winner of the Rinaldi-Horvath match will meet the winner of today's match between two other Americans — No. 2 seed Martina Navratilova and unseeded Lisa Bonder.

In third-round matches among the men today, No. 2 seed Ivan Lendl played India's Ramesh Krishnan. No. 4 seed Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina met France's Bernard Fritz and No. 5 seed Vitas Gerulaitis of the United States faced Switzerland's Heinz Gunthardt.

In other women's third-round matches, No. 3 seed American Tracy Austin played Hungary's Andrea Temesvari, while defending women's champion Hana Mandlikova, the No. 5 seed from Czechoslovakia, took on Britain's 36-year-old Virginia Wade.

Wade advanced with a 6-3, 6-3 win over American Suzan Mascarin and Mandlikova ousted Holland's Betty Stove, 6-3, 6-4.

Top seeds Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert Lloyd both advanced Thursday with straight set victories and were expected to see action again Saturday or Sunday.

The 27-year-old Lloyd, vying for a fifth French Open title, downed her American compatriot Kim Steimetz 6-2, 6-1 in a third-round match.

The French Open is the only Grand Slam title that has eluded the 29-year-old Connors. He moved into the third round with a 6-2, 6-0, 6-2 triumph over 19-year-old Swede Jan Gunnarson.

John Lloyd, the British husband of Chris, also advanced with a 6-1, 6-0, 7-5 defeat of Klaus Eberhard of West Germany.

No. 3 seed Guillermo Vilas of Argentina was expected to play his third-round match Saturday against Spain's Juan Avendano.

Vilas, a 29-year-old seeded third, won his match Thursday against Colombia's Jairo Velasco, 6-1, 6-2, 6-1. Avendano survived his econd-round outing Thursday with a 6-1, 6-0, 7-5 win over American Lloyd Bourne.

There were two upsets Thursday. Billie Jean King and Balazs Taroczy, the No. 10 seeds among the women and men, were eliminated in the fourth day of play at this two-week tournament.

It's double up time for Cubs

Stormy weather, which hit the Tall City Thursday night, forced yet another postponement of Midland Cubs baseball, this time a doubleheader against the Arkansas Travelers.

Thursday's doubleheader was scheduled to help make up for two rainouts in Little Rock earlier this year and since the Cubs and Travelers now have three make up games on the docket and no more scheduled meetings after this series, the two clubs will meet in three consecutive doubleheaders at Cubs Stadium starting tonight at 6 p.m.

Saturday and Sunday doubleheaders will be played, also at 6 p.m., if the weather holds for three days to accommodate the two teams.

Chaps' net ranks dwindle in Florida

OCALA, Fla. — No. 3 singles player Luis Zavala and the No. 2 doubles team of Barry King and Monty Saul are all Midland College has left alive here in the National Junior College tennis tournament after Thursday's play.

The Chaparrals have 12 points and can only win five more at the most, eliminating MC from the running for the team championship.

Seminole, Fla., as expected, is leading the team race with 22 points and is followed, as expected, by Tyler, Tex. Others in the running are New Mexico Military Institute with 18 and 17 each by Jefferson State, Ala., and Central Florida. Anderson, N.C., owns 16.

Zavala stayed alive Thursday with a 4-6, 6-1, 6-2 win over Herny Vargus of NMMI, but Zavala will have to face the top seeded No. 3 player in the tournament today when he faces Swenson of Seminole.

King and Saul reached the semifinals in the No. 2 doubles with a 6-3, 6-4 victory over Sahee and Casey of Gadsden, Ala. Their opponent today is not known.

MC's No. 1 doubles unit of Tony Macken and Zavala won a 6-1, 6-1 match over Witkowski and Williams Thursday, but later fell from tourney action with a 6-3, 7-6 loss to Oscioli and Wilder of Tyler.

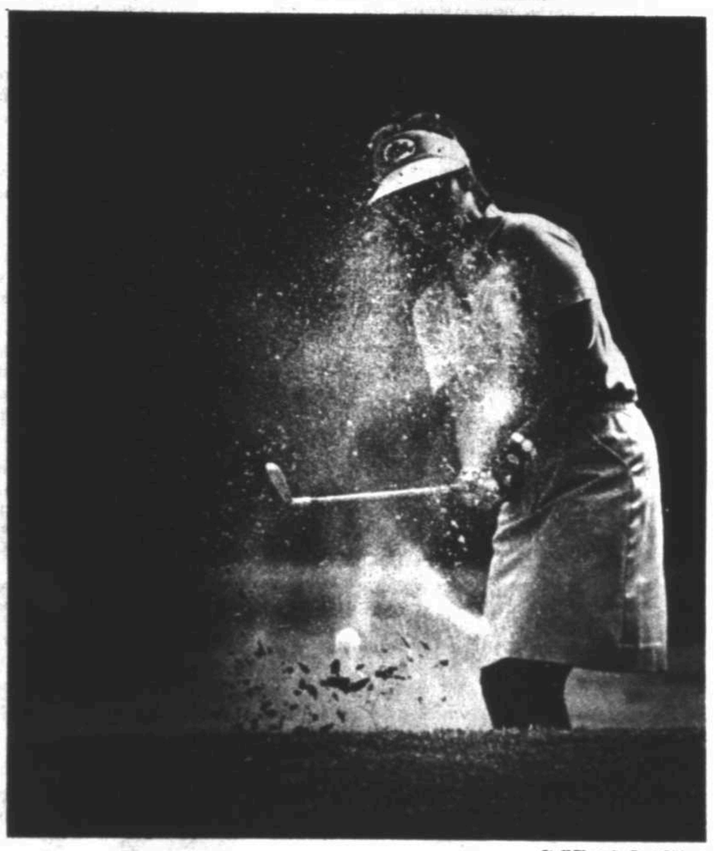

Macken also fell from singles action Thursday in a 6-4, 0-6, 6-2 match with Houruchi of NMMI, a match that spanned two days because of rain.

In the No. 4 singles play, Saul fell from competition with a 6-3, 6-7, 6-3 loss to Sitek of Henry Ford, Mich.

Andre Peters also fell in the No. 5 singles action when he dropped a 6-1, 6-2 decision to Craig Miller of Seminole, the No. 1 seed in that division.

In the No. 3 doubles, Peters and Norm Weber fell to the NMMI duo of Gonzales and Cordoba, 6-2, 6-3.

Play is expected to end sometime today, but the Chaps will not return home until Saturday.

Liz White-Hoffman of Oklahoma City, formerly of Midland, comes out of a sandtrap Thursday at the Midland Country Club during play in the annual Par-Tee Invitational golf tournament. Players from five states were represented in the tournament.

Nowotny, Kennedy win MCC's Par-Tee golf title

HARRISBURG, N.C. (AP) — David Pearson returned to Charlotte Motor Speedway after a two-year absence to capture the pole for Sunday's World 600 NASCAR race with a qualifying speed in excess of 162 mph.

The Spartanburg, S.C., veteran, driving a David Ifft-prepared Buick Regal, broke his own World 600 qualifying speed record Thursday with a four-lap average of 162.511. Pearson had set the record at 161.435 in 1977.

"We didn't know how we would run," Pearson said after winning the $16,200 pole prize, NASCAR's biggest ever. "We didn't get a chance to run yesterday morning because we were changing engines and stuff like that."

Pearson, 47, known in racing circles as the "Silver Fox," said his absence from the 1.5-mile Charlotte oval would have no effect on his performance in Sunday's race.

"I'll be ready to run 600 miles," he said. "I ain't been absent from racing, I just ain't been here."

Pearson edged Buddy Baker for the top starting position, with Baker pushing his Buick to an average speed of 162.396 mph. Rookie Geoff Bodine, entering his first World 600, qualified third fastest in a Pontiac at 161.971. Harry Gant, in a Buick, took the fourth spot with a speed of 161.962 mph and Cale Yarborough, also in a Buick, grabbed the fifth position at 161.932 mph.

What kind of reception awaits Garry Templeton?

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Shortstop Garry Templeton returns tonight to Busch Stadium, and the reception which awaits the San Diego Padres shortstop has even his former teammates curious.

"I don't think it will be good," predicted St. Louis Cardinals second baseman Tommy Herr. "He did give St. Louis good years of baseball, and fans here should be appreciative of that. But I don't think they'll remember."

What fans will remember, probably, was the scene the tempestuous Templeton created last August.

Booed when he failed to run on a dropped third strike, he responded with obscene gestures. He was physically removed from the field by Cards Manager Whitey Herzog and afterward fined and suspended.

Templeton returned 16 days later and helped St. Louis in its bid for a second-half National League East title but, following the season, asked to be traded.

Herzog obliged by exchanging him for shortstop Ozzie Smith of San Diego. So far, Herzog has looked good. Smith is hitting .279 and Templeton .246.

Ticket director Mike Bertani says a crowd of 32,000 may be on hand for the opener of a Padres-Cards series, with the three games expected to draw 100,000 overall.

Borg wants an apology

NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis star Bjorn Borg wants "something that amounts to a personal apology" and for the French Open and Wimbledon to, in effect, withdraw from the Volvo Grand Prix, the Men's International Professional Tennis Council says.

"Since it appears that the MIPTC decision with respect to Bjorn Borg for 1982 will continue to receive wide attention ... it has become necessary to fully set forth the relevant facts," Marshall Happer, administrator of the Pro Council, said in a statement.

Borg, a six-time winner of the French Open, including last year, and a five-time Wimbledon champion, recently announced that he will not compete in any Grand Prix tournaments this year.

Last September, the Pro Council, which administers the Grand Prix, a $17-million circuit comprising 87 tournaments in 31 countries, asked for commitments from the world's top 200 players to sign up for a minimum of 10 tournaments. Under the rules, an Allocation Committee was authorized to change up to three of these selections per player to balance the fields and ensure every tournament of a representative field.

Borg signed up for 10 tournaments. Happer said, "but requested a special exemption so as to reduce his commitment from 10 to seven tournaments with the additional provision that no changes be made by the Allocation Committee. The basis of his request was that he planned to take a vacation from tennis the first three months of 1982."

The Swedish star then decided to begin his hiatus two months earlier, pulling out of three tournaments in November and December in which he had agreed to play. In January, Borg asked the Pro Council to allow him to play in only seven tournaments.

"This request never included any provision that the only tennis Borg planned to play in 1982 was these tournaments," Happer said. "On the other hand, Borg reserved the right, and his agent freely admitted, that he planned to play in other tennis events..."

The Council, noting that he had nine months and 21 tournaments remaining in 1982, "excused Borg from his agreed commitment to complete his three 1981 tournaments," but ruled there was no reason Borg could not play in 10 tournaments in 1982.

"It should be noted that 10 tournaments take 2½ months to complete," Happer said.

Borg refused to commit to 10 events and said he would play in the qualifying rounds of any tournament he entered, as permitted by the rules. He reached the quarterfinals at Monte Carlo in April, his first tournament after his vacation, then was eliminated during the qualifying round at Las Vegas, Nev.

Texas Rangers' catcher Jim Sundberg looks like he has a stomach ache as Baltimore's John Lowenstein slides across the plate safely in the eighth inning at Arlington Stadium Thursday night. Sundberg had reason to be sick — the Rangers lost again, 6-0, as they fight to become the worst team in baseball.

Rangers make Murray well

By The Associated Press

Baltimore's Eddie Murray missed nine games with tendinitis in his left hand — and he's making up for it in a hurry.

Rebounding from his recent hand injury with a vengeance, Murray has picked up right where he left off. In his second game back in action Thursday night, he lashed four hits, including a home run, and drove in three runs as the Orioles stopped the Texas Rangers 6-0.

"I don't feel like I can hit well with my left hand right now," said Murray, who did his damage Thursday night with virtually one hand. "It feels bad — I'm just trying to use my left hand as a guide hand. I'm not swinging with it at all.

"It's only hitting — swinging the bat — that bothers it," he added. "I can play the field fine now."

In addition to his sixth homer of the season, Murray clouted two singles and a double. His performance backed the five-hit pitching of Sammy Stewart, who got his first complete game of the year, his first career victory over the Rangers and his first career shutout in the majors.

"It's beautiful," Oriole Manager Earl Weaver said of Stewart's performance. "He's doing the things he's capable of doing. I'd like to see him do it six straight times and if he throws the ball like that, he's got a shot to do it."

Murray's two-run homer in the first inning produced all the runs Stewart, 5-3, actually needed. The Baltimore starter struck out two and walked one.

Brewers 4, Angels 3

Paul Molitor homered on the game's third pitch to put Milwaukee ahead to stay and Cecil Cooper unloaded a two-run blast in the third inning to lead the Brewers over California.

Molitor belted his fifth homer of the season leading off against loser Ken Forsch, 4-4. Cooper's blow, his fourth, gave the Brewers a 4-0 lead and they hung on to cool off the streaking Angels, who had won nine of their last 11 games.

"We've been struggling," said Cooper of the Brewers' .500 record so far. "We know we're a better team than we've shown recently. I'm hopeful tonight will get us going."

Mariners 10, Red Sox 6

Gary Gray belted a three-run homer and Todd Cruz and Rick Sweet added solo shots to power Seattle past Boston. Winner Gene Nelson, 3-6, scattered 12 hits before needing last-out relief help from Ed VandeBerg.

When Sweet homered off loser Mike Torrez, 3-3, in the first inning, he extended his consecutive hit streak to six — matching a Seattle club record.

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON
AP Sportd Writer

Suddenly, reports of the New York Yankees' demise seem to have been slightly exaggerated.

"We're still struggling," says All-Star second baseman Willie Randolph. "We've got so many bodies out of action. But we're getting consistent pitching, and the hitting is coming around."

Last Saturday, the Yankees reached the .500 mark for the first time since April 21, when they were 5-5. An 8-0 victory over Toronto Tuesday gave the Yankees a 21-19 record, and was the last in a string of six straight triumphs that heralded the Yankees' resurrection.

"A lot of times, good hitting is contagious," says Randolph, whose .318 batting average tops the Yankee regulars. "There is too much talent here. We should have been doing this all along.

"Aa soon as we getting playing consistently in some warmer weather and get some people healthy, we'll be OK," Randolph says.

THE YANKEES currently have five players on the disabled list, including pitcher Rick Reuschel (shoulder), who has yet to appear in a game this season. The other disabled players are pitcher Doyle Alexander (broken hand), catcher Rick Cerone (broken thumb), and outfielders Jerry Mumphrey (broken thumb) and Dave Winfield (hamstring).

Pitching has been one of the Yankees' strong points during their revival. In the six-game winning streak, New York pitching allowed only eight runs, while hurling two shutouts. Lefthander Dave Righetti got back to the .500 mark at 3-3 when he combined with Goose Gossage on a 1-0, five-hit victory over Minnesota last Saturday, and Tommy John blanked Toronto 8-0 on five hits to complete the skein Tuesday.

JOHN NOW has won four of his last five decisions, while Ron Guidry is off to a 7-1 start.

"This team is ready to make its move," says outfielder-designated hitter Oscar Gamble. "This is the time of year you've got to start winning. Boston's going good, and we can't afford to get too far behind."

After Wednesday night's 7-0 loss to Toronto, the Yankees were 6½ games in back of the American League East-leading Red Sox, who had a five-game winning streak snapped Tuesday night.

In the past several weeks, Yankees' owner George Steinbrenner has improved his club with some trades. The Yankees acquired three players from Minnesota — pitcher Roger Erickson, catcher Butch Wynegar and shortstop Roy Smalley. Wynegar, playing for the injured Cerone, is hitting .478 with the Yankees on 11 hits in 23 at-bats, while Smalley, who took Bucky Dent's job, has 12 runs batted in.

Smalley says that coming from the Twins to the Yankees was "like night and day. And now, I come to the park anxious to play the game. I come to the ballpark expecting to win."

"I can't wait until we get into July and September, and we're involved in a real pennant race," Smalley says.

The Yankees even showed some signs of reviving the long ball as a fixture at Yankee Stadium during their winning streak. They hit five home runs in those six games, including two by Gamble.

"We're going to hit some home runs to win games, and we're going to win some games 2-1 with our pitching," Gamble says.

"We're not the type of team anymore that has to wait on the long ball to score, though. We can score some runs with speed.

"If we continue to play the type of baseball we're capable of playing, we can beat anybody," Gamble says. "This is a great position to be in. We have so many guys who can play."

Diablos stretch streak to 12

By The AP

Mark Schuster's solo homer in the bottom of the ninth inning powered the El Paso Diablos to a 6-5 Texas League baseball victory over the Tulsa Drillers.

In other Texas League action Thursday night, Amarillo beat Jackson, 8-6, and Shreveport and San Antonio split a doubleheader. Shreveport won the first game, 9-4, and San Antonio took the nightcap, 7-4. Arkansas' scheduled game at Midland was postponed because of rain.

A three-run homer by Luis Quinons gave the Amarillo Gold Sox an 8-6 come-from-behind victory over the Jackson Mets.

Jackson held a 5-0 lead until Amarillo tied the game with a five-run rally highlighted by a two-run double by George Hinshaw and a two-run single by Randy Kaczmarkski.

The winning pitcher was Bob Long, 3-6. Doug Sisk, 5-3, was the loser.

Catcher Bob Cummings and second baseman Doug Wabeke provided the hitting power as the Shreveport Captains beat the San Antonio Dodgers, 9-4, in the first game of their doubleheader.

Cummings had a three-run homer in the first inning and Wabeke drove in four runs with a homer, a double and a single.

Chuck Luster, 2-2, was the winning pitcher. Tagged with the loss was Tom Klawitter, 2-3.

Tony Brewer had a three-run homer for San Antonio in the 7-4 victory in the second game of the doubleheader.

The winning pitcher was Chris Malden, 4-2. The loser was Jim Dunn, 3-3.

Williams in first test of wills

SAN DIEGO (AP) — After two months on the job, San Diego manager Dick Williams is in his first test of wills with Padre management.

Flannery has been subjected to harsh criticism from Williams since the utility infielder replaced the injured Juan Bonilla, who is out for the rest of the season with a broken wrist.

It all began with the aborted signing of former Montreal second baseman Rodney Scott. When Bonilla was injured two weeks ago in a collision while covering first base, Williams wanted to sign Scott after he was released by the Expos.

But the Padre management, apparently concerned about reports Scott tried marijuana and his personality conflicts with the Montreal coaching staff, vetoed the idea.

"I leave all the ballclub's personnel decisions up to Jack (Padre General Manager Jack McKeon) and Dick, with the exception of the two areas where I must become directly involved," club President Ballard Smith said in an interview with the San Diego Tribune.

"Naturally, one is the player's salary," he said. "And the other is when there are any factors involved regarding a player which might have a negative impact on the rest of the club and what we're trying to accomplish here."

While he was in Montreal, Scott was an unhappy utility infielder. He complained when he didn't play and when he did, coaches said he sometimes ignored signals from the third base coach.

At least once, Scott was caught sleeping in the clubhouse while a game was in progress.

But Williams, who managed the Expos until he was fired late last season, was untroubled by Scott's turbulent past and was upset when Smith scrubbed the plan to acquire Scott.

Ever since the aborted signing, Williams has had harsh words for Flannery's play.

During the May 21-23 homestand against the Pittsburgh Pirates, Flannery conributed six hits, scored four runs and had two RBIs to help San Diego win two of the three games.

After Saturday's first game against the Pirates, in which Flannery had three hits, he told reporters he thought he could handle the job at second base until Bonilla returns if the team would give him a chance.

Williams responded by saying by saying Flannery played well, "but one day doesn't make a season."

In Sunday's game, Flannery, who hasn't played regularly in 1½ years dropped a pickoff attempt by pitcher John Curtis and the error led to two unearned runs by the Pirates. The Padres went on to lose the game 4-2, even though Flannery got both runs back with an RBI and scored once.

After the game, Williams blamed Flannery for the loss.

"He's put the monkey on his back, and he cost us a ball game," Williams said. "He (Flannery) has hurt us twice in four games. One we came out of; one we didn't."

Arkansas' Holtz denies salary of $226,000

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Arkansas head football coach Lou Holtz won't say how much money he makes a year, but he says the figures a Miami newspaper compiled are preposterous.

The Miami Herald reported earlier this week that Holtz's annual income at the University of Arkansas is as much as $226,000. The newspaper said the figure was from a survey of earnings of college head football coaches.

Holtz issued a statement through the sports information office at the University of Arkansas on Thursday. He said he hoped that would end the speculation.

"When I was a youngster, my father taught me it was bad manners to ask how much something costs or how much money a person makes," Holtz said. "This was good advice then and is as practical today as it was 40 years ago."

Holtz said when he came to Arkansas in 1977, his salary was $40,000 plus a $10,000 housing allowance and $25,000 for his television show. "I have received the normal raises over the past five years but that was the extent of my financial arrangements," Holtz said. "I do not presently nor have I in the past received or been promised revenue from outside sources for coaching at the University of Arkansas."

He said no matter how much money he makes, it will still cost 10 percent more than he earns to raise a family. He said money cannot make a person happy, and a man with $20,000 is as happy as a man with $19 million.

"I am very pleased with my financial conditions at the University of Arkansas as the school has been more than fair to me," Holtz said.

"I hope this will put an end to the speculation about my income," he said. "I can assure you the printed figures are false. I hope my wife doesn't believe the salary she read in the paper or I will have a lot of explaining to do and I sure hope I can catch her before she goes shopping."

SWC considers women's play

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Conference officials will discuss creation of a women's athletic division at their annual spring business meeting Saturday through Tuesday at Columbia Lakes, southwest of Houston.

SWC commissioner Cliff Speegle said a committee on women's athletics, headed by Dr. L.O. Morgan of The University of Texas, will report on suggested sports to be included in the conference program and on procedures for holding conference competition for women.

Women's championships have been held for two years under the name of the SWC, but have not yet been an official part of the conference athletic program.

Conference officials also will hear a report on a women's post-season basketball tournamment.

Mears' crew passes test

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rick Mears and his Gould Charge Penske-Ford crew proved Thursday that they are not only fast on the track at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, they can move pretty well in the pits, too.

In the sixth Annual Miller High Life Pit Stop competition, Mears' crew changed both right-side tires and simulated filling the 40-gallon fuel tank in 13.93 seconds. You'll never find that kind of service at your neighborhood gas station.

The crews of the four top qualifying cars are automatically entered in the competition. The remaining four entries are chosen from time trials the crews themselves have to undergo.

Included in this year's competition were pit teams from Mears, Foyt, Mario Andretti, Gordon Johncock, Tom Sneva, Bill Alsup (who did not even qualify for the race), Bobby Rahal and Bob Frey.

The teams split $43,750, with the winning team receiving $20,000. Foyt's Valvoline-Gilmore March-Cosworth crew won $10,000 for 18.05 seconds' work.

"They want to win everything here," said car owner Roger Penske, whose operation, including crew chief Peter Parrott, has already claimed the pole position for Sunday's 500-mile classic in record time.

John Woodard, a veteran crew member who changed the right-front tire during the competition, said the winning is nice and the $20,000 is even nicer.

But the real race is Sunday.

"A pit stop during the race is nothing like this was," Woodard said. "Sunday is what we're here for. But they're putting up the money so why not take advantage of it."

Ironically, the complicated electronic timing mechanism set up to record the event misfired during Mears' first run. On the second try, the crew members completed their tasks in 14.94 seconds, highest among the qualifiers.

Mears, who is shooting for his second Indy title, appeared to be the most serious among the eight drivers. He roared into the work area on each of his three tries and roared out again, screeching rubber and smoking tires.

"They do this day in and day out," Mears said of his backup team. "This just shows what kind of crew we've got. This is the way they get their recognition."

Final Indy 500 practice produces no surprises

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — After three weeks of frenzied preparation, the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's 2½-mile track is silent. The next time the 33 gleaming race cars are wheeled from their Gasoline Alley garages will be on race day.

The next time all of the powerful engines are brought to life, three-abreast in 11 rows along the main straightaway, will be on Sunday at the start of the 66th running of the Indianapolis 500.

Thursday's final practice session for the world's richest automobile race again offered glimpses of the speed that produced the fastest Indy starting lineup in history. Again, front-row teammates Rick Mears and Kevin Cogan were above 200 mph, and car owner Roger Penske pronounced their identical PC-10s as race-ready.

"We got both cars at 202 early in the practice. They were running great, so we took 'em back to the garage. There wasn't anything else we needed to do," said Penske.

Also leading the speed assault at more than 200 mph were teammates Mario Andretti and Gordon Johncock, both former winners who will start from the second row. Cogan, who will start between Mears and four-time winner A.J. Foyt on the front row, had a lap at 202.292.

Two of the 33 starters failed to take advantage of Thursday's practice session.

Rookie Chet Fillip, who has yet to drive his first lap in an Indy-car race, did not practice because of a clutch problem. The only other no-show Thursday was two-year Indy veteran Dennis Firestone, whose race engine was being rebuilt.

Foyt, who qualified at more than 203 mph for a record 25th Indy start, failed to get his March-Cosworth over 170 mph in a brief appearance on the track. The only four-time Indy winner gruffly said the car had "some sort of problem" and took it back to the garage for work.

Foyt still likes rocket ride

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Someday, A.J. Foyt will decide that he's had enough of this dangerous business of racing automobiles that travel like rocket-powered missiles.

Someday, he will grow tired of squeezing his body into the cockpit of his car for that breakneck trip around the turns and through the straightaways.

Someday, the joy of competition, the zest for one more trip through Victory Lane, the thirst for one more checkered flag, will be finished.

And, when that day comes, Foyt will walk away from the races — once and for all, with no looking back over his shoulder.

"When I quit, that will be it," Foyt said before his 25th Indianapolis 500. "The day I quit, you can be sure, I won't ever step back into a racing car."

Foyt admires racers who can do that. "That was what Jackie Stewart did," he said. "They offered him all kinds of money to come back but he wouldn't race again. That's what I'll do."

And, how will he spend his spare time when that happens?

"I'm going to go off and learn to fish," he said. "I've always wanted to do that. Get away from everybody."

For now, though, the flounders and flukes will have to wait. Foyt will spend his Memorial Day weekend as he has spent so many others, negotiating the asphalt track at Indy, bidding for a record fifth victory in this spectacle that lures some 350,0000 fans to the Speedway.

SUNDAY'S RACE will be Foyt's first Indy car event since a crash at last July's Michigan 500. He damaged his right forearm in that race and it gontinues to give him trouble. "My arm won't be 100 percent anymore. I'm lucky to have it," he said nonchalantly.

Foyt qualified at 203.332 mph for Sunday's race and will start on the outside of the first row, alongside Rick Mears and Kevin Cogan. All three were on the oval Thursday for their final practice runs, this time in race day configuration with full loads of fuel. Foyt had mechanical problems and clocked 167 mph. Cogan's 202.292 was the fastest single lap time.

A jubilant crowd sat through intermittent showers which halted the racers several times. Many fans wore buttons supporting Foyt, who has logged 9,045 miles at Indy, some 2,500 more than anyone else. Some said "Fifth for Foyt." Others were labeled, "A.J. 25th Year at Indy." And, some simply carried "5th" with no further explanation needed.

Foyt doesn't need his last name for instant identification. A.J. is sufficient at Indy, the best known track in the business. Nobody's been here longer than the feisty Foyt.

"Twenty-five years was not a goal for me," he said. "I might be here another five. I don't know if I'll be here another 25."

Why does Foyt come back year after year?

"Because every year you race, you might win," he said.

And A.J. thinks he stands an excellent chance to win in his March-Cosworth.

"I feel pretty good," he said. "It's a good car, very capable of winning this race with any luck at all."

Luck, of course, almost always plays a part in the outcome at Indy. Still, Foyt has a strategy plotted to help his chances.

"I think you've got to play your cards right," he said. "You can't fall way behind. You can't set a blistering pace. You have to figure to run 500 miles. You've got to stay on your toes all day long. The car has to be running perfect all day."

Another factor in the 66th renewal of this race could be the inexperience of a number of the drivers.

Troubled duo leads Corning

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Neither Patty Sheehan nor Nancy Lopez has played much golf this month. Lopez skipped the first three tournaments in May while filing for divorce, and Sheehan took a rest to prepare for her most frustrating tournament.

But their differing motives gave them something in common — the lead — after one round of the $125,000 Corning Classic.

Each shot a 5-under-par 67 Thursday to share a one-stroke lead over Kathy Young entering today's second round of the 72-hole Ladies Professional Golf Association event.

"I had it in my hands, and I let it slip," Sheehan said of her third-place finish here last year — one of the few bad things she experienced en route to $118,463 in winnings and 1981 the LPGA rookie of the year designation.

"And the way that it slipped out of my hands was just really a heartbreaker for me. It took me three weeks to recover," she said.

Sheehan, 25, double-bogeyed the 360-yard 17th hole to drop the two strokes by which she lost to Kathy Hite. An intense competitor, she said she planned her 1982 schedule to allow for two weeks off psyching up for the Corning tournament.

LOPEZ HAS filed for divorce from sportscaster Tim Melton, ending a three-year marriage many fans considered the tour's strongest. She returned to action last week, tying for sixth, but said her spirits were soaring with her best round of the year.

"I feel my confidence is up," she said. "My confidence is better than it has been in these past two years. Today, I didn't really feel like I was going to hit the ball that well. I mean, I wasn't hitting it crooked or anything — just not real solid — but when I got on the golf course, everything came together."

Lopez bogeyed the first hole but then birdied three of the next four. On the back nine, the 25-year-old star birdied Nos. 11, 14 and 17 and narrowly missed a birdie on the last hole.

Maltbie finds his way back

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — First-round Memorial Tournament leader Roger Maltbie knows why his golf game deteriorated after the last of his three PGA Tour victories here in 1976.

"When you're playing poorly, it hurts," he said after his 4-under-par 68 Thursday. "You know your performance is substandard, but it was not enough to drive me back to the practice tee. I found out the problem wouldn't correct itself."

The fun-loving Maltbie earned a combined $112,000 in the four seasons following 1976, when he won $117,000. He dipped as low as $9,796 three years ago.

The facts support him. He won $75,000 a year ago and has $34,000 already in 1982.

Why is Maltbie on a comeback?

"She's right there," he answered, pointing to his wife, Donna. They were married in November 1980, shortly before Maltbie began to rediscover his game.

There were other reasons, too.

"I worked harder and corrected some of my nocturnal habits. I'm making strides, but once you lose your ability to play, it's hard to recapture it," he said.

One stroke back, at 69, came defending champion Keith Fergus, former tennis pro Frank Conner, Steve Melnyk and Bruce Fleisher. At 70 was an even bigger cluster, led by Tom Kite, Hale Irwin and Johnny Miller. They were joined by Jay Haas, John Cook and Greg Powers.

The $380,000 tournament's host, Jack Nicklaus, was five shots behind on the course he designed and built eight years ago. But he warned: "I will play better. I am playing too well not to. I am still playing aggressive golf."

Nicklaus wasn't the only big name at 74. Also there were Masters champion Craig Stadler, Tom Watson, Jerry Pate and Ray Floyd.

And then there was Gary Player at 75, Lee Trevino at 78 and Sam Snead at 81 on his 70th birthday.

The best field in this seven-year-old tournament is battling for a first prize of $63,000. Portions of the last two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by CBS.

Even though he was only at par-36 after nine holes on this testy 7,118-yard layout, Maltbie liked his position.

"I got off to a fairly smooth start and that's important here," he said. "If you don't, you can get defensive."

Then the 30-year-old Californian found the birdie touch. He posted four birds on the closing eight holes and then saved a par on the 18th to preserve his lead.

"I was saving par today," he said, "which suddenly has become one of the better parts of my game. But this is only the first round. It all counts on Sunday."

The collection of second place golfers was a weird one.

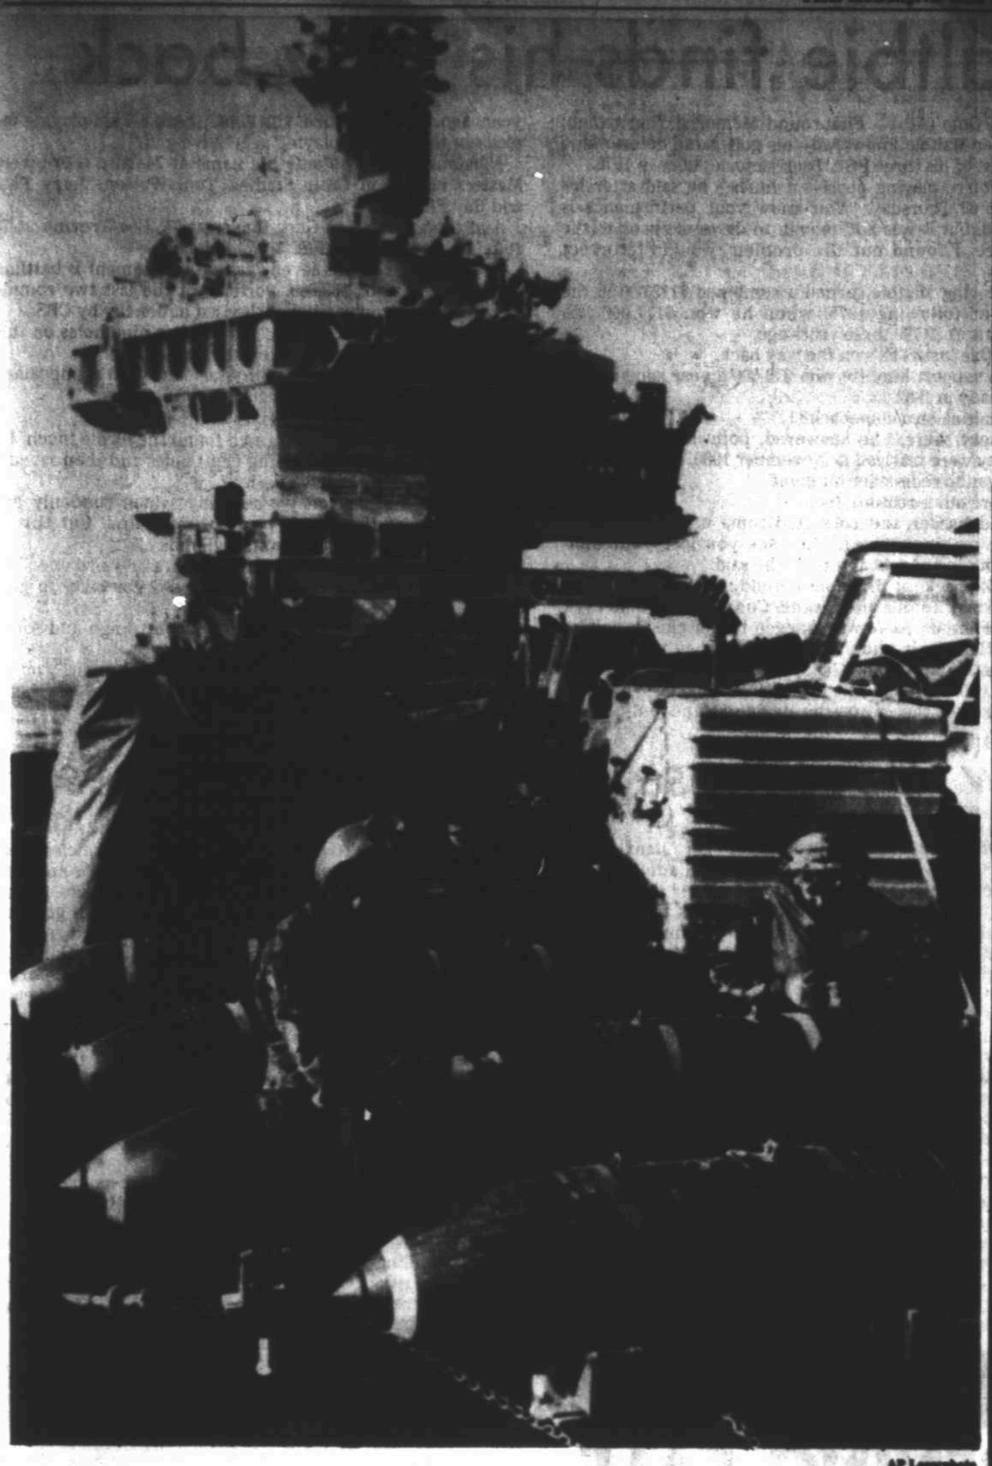

Conner is a former tennis pro who did not take up golf until he was 24, 12 years ago.

Melnyk broke his right elbow four months ago and some said he would never play again.

Fleisher, the 1968 U.S. Amateur champion, has not won in 11 seasons. And Fergus has won just twice in four years, here last year and at Atlanta last week.

OAS prepares resolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite U.S. objections, the Organization of American States appeared ready today to approve a resolution that would hand Argentina a diplomatic victory in its war with Great Britain over the Falkland Islands.

Argentina apparently had the two-thirds majority required for approval of a strongly-worded pro-Argentine resolution, although some diplomats cautioned that the final version might be somewhat watered down.

At Thursday's opening session of the special OAS foreign ministers meeting, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. suggested the OAS could aggravate the crisis by going beyond a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire and Argentina's withdrawal from the islands.

But the pro-Argentine, Spanish-speaking majority appeared inclined to ignore Haig's advice and to go along with an Argentine-sponsored resolution condemning Britain's "armed aggression" against Argentina and demanding that Britain cease hostilities immediately.

The draft also called on the United States to lift the economic and military sanctions which it imposed against Argentina a month ago. In addition, all member states were invited to take "measures they deem appropriate" to assist Argentina — which Argentina hopes will encourage other hemispheric nations to provide military assistance.

The resolution, if approved, would do much to neutralize European Common Market action last Monday extending indefinitely the economic sanctions it applied against Argentina a month ago.

In his speech, Haig made no mention of the Reagan administration's decision to support Britain but that issue clearly was a sore point with the Latin countries.

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez accused the United States of "turning its back" on Latin America by supporting Britain and said his government views the U.S. action with "utmost gravity."

Nicaragua's delegate said the United States was "coresponsible" for the bloodshed in the South Atlantic and said the OAS charter should be revised to ensure Latin American — and not United States — interests are protected.

"There are two aggressors" in the South Atlantic conflict, Great Britain and the United States, he said.

Venezuela proposed that any future OAS foreign ministers meetings on the Falklands crisis be held in Panama and not in the capital of a country which, it said, was encouraging British aggression.

Haig had canceled a speech in Pittsburgh to attend Thursday's meeting, and his address was an attempt to repair the damage that the Falklands crisis has caused to U.S.-Latin American relations.

He emphasized that the United States, despite its support for Britain, has not taken a position on the substance of the conflict.

"We are completely neutral on the question of who has sovereignty," Haig said.

But he said it would be a mistake to suggest, as many Latin American countries do, that the Western Hemisphere self-defense provisions contained in the 1947 Rio Treaty are applicable in the Falklands crisis.

Italian premier defends Falklands decision

ROME (AP) — Premier Giovanni Spadolini today rejected as "unkind, unjust," criticism of his government's refusal to go along with the European Economic Community sanctions against Argentina in the Falkland Islands dispute with Britain.

"Our position (over the sanctions) does not harm in any way our European solidarity," Spadolini told reporters aboard a naval vessel taking part in maneuvers in the Gulf of Gaeta north of Naples.

Spadolini said, however, Italy has met all the obligations as a NATO member, citing as an example Italy's consent to the stationing of cruise missiles in Sicily.

According to government figures, Italy has contracts worth $7 billion under negotiation with Argentina. In addition, there are 1.3 million Itallian citizens in Argentina who would be eligible to vote in Italian elections if a pending bill for absentee balloting is approved by Parliament.

Pausing between rolls of the dice to discuss the new "War in the Falklands" board game is co-inventor Bill Fawcett. Fawcett says the game, created "over a glass of wine or two," presents a carefully researched order of battle played on a strategic map of the South Atlantic. The game went on sale in Chicago Thursday.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS DALLAS DIVISION
SOUTHWEST AIRLINES COMPANY, Defendant.
CIVIL ACTION NO. CA3-80-0680-G
NOTICE OF PROPOSED CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT
TO THOSE MALES WHO APPLIED OR WHO OTHERWISE FORMALLY SOUGHT EMPLOYMENT AS TICKET AGENTS OR FLIGHT ATTENDANTS WITH SOUTHWEST AIRLINES COMPANY PRIOR TO NOVEMBER 1, 1981.
This notice is to inform you of a proposed settlement of the class action case of Wilson v. Southwest Airlines Co., No. CA3-80-0680-G (N.D. Tex.) which was brought to challenge defendant's policy of hiring only female ticket agents and flight attendants. In June, 1981, the U. S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas found that the defendant discriminated against males, as alleged. Subsequent to this holding, the parties have entered into a proposed settlement which provides generally as follows: The defendant will eliminate its female-only requirement for the positions in question and its maximum height requirement for its flight attendant jobs. Defendant has further agreed to goals of 15% and 12% male for the flight attendant and ticket agent jobs, respectively. This is greater than defendant's male applicant flow, and male hiring must be at least 1/3 male until this goal is met. Those males who applied for flight attendant or ticket agent jobs with defendant will receive their actual backpay losses, less interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence as determined under the decree. Those who otherwise sought employment, as defined in the proposal, will receive $250. If the amount claimed exhausts a backpay settlement fund of $1 million, claims will be prorated. Nothing other than backpay will come from the fund until all claims are fully paid. Disputes regarding claims or amounts due will be referred to U. S. Magistrate for final determination. In addition to the backpay fund, defendant will pay attorney fees of $275,000, and various named individual plaintiffs will receive amounts in addition to their class backpay claims.

You might squeeze more than a few suitcases into some other wagons. But try squeezing those same wagons into a tight space. Or out of a tight spot. Volvo wagons are designed to handle more than just luggage. They come with the rack-and-pinion steering and 4-wheel disc brakes more common to sports cars. And without skimping on either head room or cargo area, they can still sneak into many a sedan-sized parking space.

Volvo wagons come in several versions: the popular DL wagon, the prestigious GL wagon, the Diesel wagon and the sporty Turbo wagon. Whichever you choose you'll find the same workmanship, comfort, durability and safety engineering that have made all Volvos famous.

So test drive a Volvo wagon. Once you've sized up its relative merits, you'll be pleased to know something it won't take. An exorbitant sum.

VOLVO A car you can believe in.

By REX DALTON
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — The well-tanned stewardess was going through her promotional spiel in the meeting room at the Pacifica Hotel in nearby Culver City when she reminded her small audience:

Since the U.S. Food and Drug Administration doesn't approve of the canthaxanthin or beta-carotene tablets for human consumption, they are marketed as food coloring, thereby sidestepping federal control.

And promoters are selling the tablets with direct marketing techniques based on the pyramid principle where the more people you get to sell the product, the more money an individual distributor makes.

The stewardess, who sells the pills on the side, says she has had no problems from them during the three months she has been taking them.

"I don't even take aspirin," she said, to emphasize her concern about health habits.

But the FDA has concerns.

"We are telling consumers not to use these products until the manufacturers can demonstrate they are safe, which they haven't done," said Jim Greene, an FDA spokesman in Washington, D.C.

Greene said he wasn't aware of any particular health problems related to the tablets.

But, he said, "Our problem is we don't know the long-range effects they have. There is nothing to prove they aren't harmful."

Take tennis tips from a master

By JESSE SLOME
Copley News Service

Improving your tennis game isn't that difficult if you follow a few basic suggestions offered by Tony Palafox, who has been John McEnroe's personal coach for the last five years.

A former Davis Cup competitor who played with the Mexican team for over a decade, Palafox is now one of the game's most outstanding teachers. His students range from the world's No. 1 pro to dozens of juniors eager to become future Wimbledon champions.

"Good tennis habits must be developed from the inception of play," Palafox advises. "In John McEnroe, we are seeing one of the most artful players of all time in terms of technique and court sense and all could do well to learn from his strengths."

McEnroe is recognized as being faster around the court than perhaps any other current player. "His smooth, fast footwork gives him an outstanding advantage," Palafox states. "As a schoolboy, John played a lot of soccer which, with its demand for quick movements and reactions, was terrific training for tennis — something other youngsters should consider."

The 23-year-old champion also possesses remarkable hand-eye and hand-foot coordination which enables him to maximize virtually every shot. "His impeccable timing is indeed a natural gift," Palafox explains, noting, however, that all tennis players can hone their skills through continual play and practice.

For those looking to improve their game, Palafox recommends a return to the fundamentals — particularly regarding ground strokes. A minimum of 30 minutes each week should be spent under the guidance of a professional, just coordinating the fundamentals of stroke production. "Of paramount importance during the learning stage," he points out, "is making the racquet a natural extension of your arm through which you actually feel the ball."

amount of alcohol (not more than 15 ozs. of alcohol a week) and a well-balanced diet are important. If you eat under 1,600 calories a day, you may need a vitamin supplement.

By ANDREAN CARPENTER
Copley News Service

It's a fact of life. As you get older, your body changes. Metabolism slows, the fat-to-lean ratio changes, immune responses weaken. And, you're more likely to have chronic conditions that must be treated with medication.

According to Dr. Frank McGlone, president of the American Geriatrics Society, "The body reaches its peak at approximately age 30 and declines from there. Aging is a slow and gradual process with the most perceptible decline beginning in middle age at about 45 years. Acceleration of the process occurs at age 65 and older."

The healthy, active older adult may be dismayed to learn that he has a condition, like high blood pressure, for which he'll have to take medication for the rest of his life. He probably doesn't realize that the over-the-counter (OTC) products he self-medicates with may interfere with his successful treatment.

Working with your doctor

The first step toward treatment of an illness is understanding that illness. If its treatment involves medication, the consumer must understand how to properly take that medication.

Because the older consumer may be preoccupied with his illness, he may not hear or understand its treatment or his medication regimen. McGlone offers simple advice to help overcome that communications gap. "Write it down," he says.

"Review with your doctor a complete list of all the drugs you already take — prescribed and OTCs — and ask specifically about side effects and possible interactions with the new ones," McGlone said.

Tell him about any reactions you have had to other drugs. Then ask him to explain and write down the schedule you should follow when taking the new medication. This information should include:

— When to start taking the drug,
— Dosage,
— Time of day to take it,
— With (or without) certain foods,
— Whether alcohol may be consumed,
— Activities (if any) you should avoid,
— Side effects,
— Will it interact with other prescription drugs and OTCs.

Working with your pharmacist

While the physician prescribes the medication, the pharmacist dispenses the prescription. Double check to make sure your prescription is labeled with the medicine prescribed by your doctor.

Go to the same pharmacist with all your prescriptions. Many pharmacists will keep a record of your medications, indicating the dates and dosages of each. This enables him to spot potential drug interactions between your prescription drugs and to advise you on self-medication.

Ask your pharmacist to review instructions on when to take the drug, how to store it and what side effects, if any, to expect.

The consumer's role

Once you're home with your medication, you are responsible for taking it correctly. Follow directions and take all your medication. If you stop when your symptoms are relieved, the illness could reoccur. If you experience adverse effects, call your doctor immediately. Throw out old drugs. They can lose effectiveness by increasing or decreasing in potency.

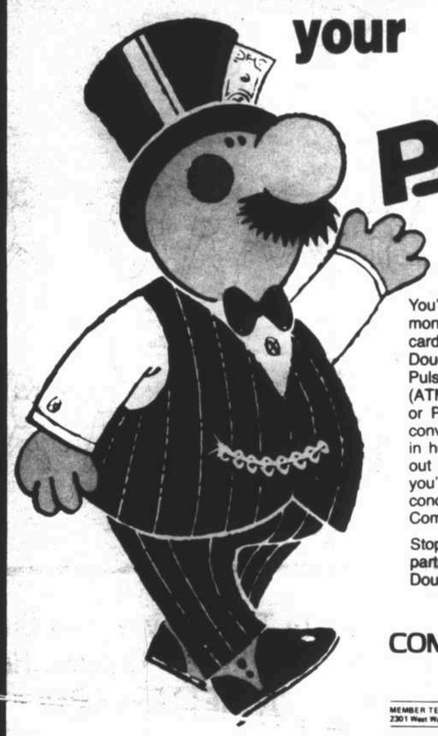

Be careful about self-medicating. A drug as common as plain aspirin may interfere with the action of several prescription drugs. Since it is an ingredient in several OTC products, read the label carefully before you buy. Many physicians recommend aspirin-free acetaminophen like Tylenol for pain relief because it rarely interacts with other drugs. Ask your doctor or pharmacist if it would be better for you.

Bifocal wearers not longer have to but up with annoying lines. Varilux 2 progressive lenses are ground from a single piece of galss to provide the proper degree of magnification at all distances, without distortion.

By LANA McCARTHY
Copley News Service

When Benjamin Franklin invented the bifocal in 1785, he won the hearts of over-40-year-olds who needed one lens for gazing into the sunset and another for reading the evening papers.

But for today's active, health-conscious adult, bifocals simply don't provide adequate clear vision, especially in the middle-distance range.

Experimentation which began some 20 years ago led to the first-stage progressive lens, a single piece of optical glass which successfully did away with unsightly lines. But the lenses contained so much distortion that only the vainest spectacle wearers considered them worth the trouble.

Finally, some 200 years after that first bifocal was created, the progressive lens has been perfected. Called Varilux 2, the second-stage progressive lens provides clear vision at all distances, without distortion, without lines.

The lens is good news for some 65 million Americans who suffer from presbyopia, a weakening of the eye affecting nearly everyone over the age of 40. The condition inhibits the eye from focusing on near objects while leaving far vision unaffected. A special multi-focal lens is required to correct the problem.

In the past, bifocals or trifocals were the only options for people with presbyopia. But wearers found the lenses annoying, confusing and frustrating — especially when shifting their eyes across the lines from near-distance focusing to far. And the lines were a dead giveaway to the wearer's age.

Unlike bifocals or trifocals which have one or two more powerful lenses set into the main lens, Varilux 2 uses an advance technique to grind a single piece of optical glass with correct magnifications for all focal lengths. These progressive lenses look just like single vision lenses.

Varilux 2 is considered the state of the art progressive by ophthalmologists and optometrists who are prescribing it for patients whose occupations, sports and hobbies require frequent eye shifts from one distance to another.

"From physicians to skiers, first-time multifocal wearers are finding Varilux 2 very effective," said Dr. David Thier, a San Francisco ophthalmologist. "Of all multi-focal lenses, Varilux 2 has the greatest patient acceptance because of its success in solving the distortion problems of earlier progressives."

While only about 1 million Americans currently wear progressive lenses, some 10 million Europeans have already made the switch from bifocals and trifocals.

Industry sources, such as Ralph Drew, author and editor of Optical Management magazine, are predicting that progressive lenses will claim 25 percent of the multi-focal market in the United States over the next three years.

Olivier Mathieux, president of Multi-Optics, U.S. marketer of Varilux 2, expects broad acceptance of the lens based on its overwhelming popularity in Europe and Japan where one-third of all multi-focals worn are Varilux 2.

Take creative steps, improve your sleep

By PAUL NEIMARK
Copley News Service

Success is making the most of your 17 or so waking hours a day, right? Well, yes and no.

The fact is, those six or seven or eight hours of sleep that you take for granted, if used creatively and channeled to your individual needs, can more than double your productivity, improve your physical health and catalyze a positive attitude.

If you would like to sleep less and get more out of it, here are seven guidelines:

1. Motivate yourself upon awakening.

Combat the drowsiness that usually accompanies waking up, by forming the habit of thinking about some high-interest activity you can pursue.

2. Sometimes, do go to sleep with a problem on your mind.

The old cliche about going to sleep with a problem and waking up with the answer has a solid basis in modern psychology. This is not to say that sleep is apt to solve some continuing difficulty that is an integral part of your existence, but it does work well with problems that may be "blocking" you.

A writer I know is a good case in point. When he gets stuck on a certain part of a story he's writing, he sometimes takes as many as 12 naps a day (some as minimal as five minutes) — and this practice has proven to be very successful for "unblocking."

3. Train yourself to be drowsy for brief periods without sleeping.

The "natural" tendency is to fall asleep when we become drowsy. However, studies of non-domesticated animals, particularly the more active ones, reveal that they are masters in the art of short periods of what might be called "half-dozing."

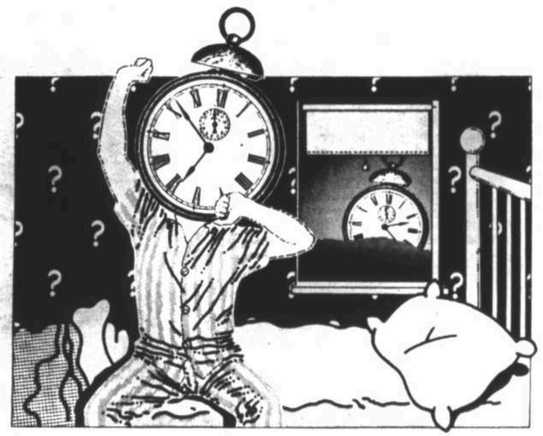

4. When productivity lags, change your activity pace.

The trick, according to activity experts, is a creative change of pace, but what that constitutes depends on the individual.

A friend of mine, an accountant, finds it refreshing to work math riddles in between complex corporate tax returns. Other people may need a physical change of pace.

For example, instead of sitting in a chair or in a car for six hours at a time and becoming overly fatigued, it would be wise to break up such periods with two-, three- or 10-minute transitions.

5. Begin using light rests and creative breaks instead of other tension-cutters and diversions, such as alcohol, cigarettes and even "get-away-from-it-all" weekends.

A few simple steps can help you make the most of your day by making the most of your night. Researchers say sleep can be used creatively, chaneling energy into an individual's life.

Keep hair healthy

By LAUREN WATERS
Copley News Service

Healthy hair makes anybody look good. But eventually those blow dryers and heated rollers take their toll. What's left is dull, lifeless hair. Sure, heavy conditioning may help, but only temporarily. The best way to restore radiant-looking hair is by paying careful attention to your diet.

A balanced supply of protein, carbohydrates, fats, vitamins and minerals provides the starting point for great-looking hair. The absence of any of these will have a visible effect on the way you look and feel. A proper diet consists of the "Basic Four" — milk, vegetables and fruit, meat (or chicken and fish), bread and cereal.

In addition, the Rave Hair Care Center, an authority on the subject of hairstyling and care, offers this advice to keep your hair in great shape year-around.

Winter does the most damage to your hair because you are constantly moving from one environment to another. Your home thermostat may be set at 65 degrees Fahrenheit while the outside may register 15 F. The change from hot to cold makes your hair expand and shrink and expand.

Fitness craze jogging nation

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

If you've been wondering about the extent of the fitness boom in this country, consider these statistics:

Seventy-two million Americans bowl, according to the National Bowling Council.

Forty million jog, reports the National Jogging Association.

Twenty-four million play tennis, says the National Tennis Association.

Eighteen million belong to the U.S. Racquetball Association.

Thirteen million non-professional golfers (who play once a week) and 3 million casual golfers (who play once a month) partake in this sport, according to the U.S. Golf Association.

This rabid interest in physical fitness and health has created an exercise and weight-loss industry estimated at $15 billion a year. The concept of keeping fit through your place of work also is expanding. Today 300 companies belong to the American Association of Fitness Directors in Business and Industry which was established by three dozen companies just six years ago.

One of these companies is going further today, by coming out with a free booklet called "Fitness 3 ... Your Way to Better Health," dealing with better health through exercise, proper diet and good health habits. Hoffman-La Roche Inc. of New Jersey, a company heavily into nutrition, education and vitamin research, sponsored the new booklet following results of a national survey the company commissioned on exercise and nutrition. (The booklet can be obtained by writing to Fitness 3, P.O. Box 203, Wood-Ridge, N.J. 07075.)

That survey doneFDz by Trost Associates of Connecticut showed that Americans "have great interest in physical fitness and quality of life. However, their perceptions of what exercise, good diet and good health habits mean differ greatly from their practices."

The survey of 1,000 representatives of both sexes from 18 to over 55 years of age turned up these facts, among others:

— Eighty-one percent of those surveyed felt that exercise was important to health. But only 45 percent exercised regularly, 36 percent exercised on an irregular basis.

— Sixty-two percent of both regular and irregular exercisers considered nutrition important, but many had difficulty identifying two of the basic four food groups — (1) fruits and vegetables, (2) meat, fish and poultry, (3) grains and cereal and (4) dairy products.

— In economic status, 53 percent of regular exercisers had attended college, and 51 percent had an annual household income of $20,000 a year or more.

— Parents preferred their children to participate in such sports as swimming, baseball, basketball and tennis. Parents rated boxing, football, wrestling and mountain climbing as the least preferred sports.

— Only 30 percent of those surveyed rated themselves in excellent nutritional condition.

Working with these results, Hoffman-La Roche formed a "Fitness 3 Council" of national nutrition, exercise and aerobics experts to produce the booklet. Included on the council are exercise physiologist Dr. Jack Wilmore, a former consultant to three professional Los Angeles teams (the Rams, Dodgers and Lakers), and Dr. Kenneth Cooper, sometimes called "the father of aerobics" who is founder and director the Aerobics Center in Dallas. Others are Dr. George Christakis of the University of Miami's School of Medicine, basketball Coach Bill Russell, football quarterback Roger Staubach, and Gail Weldon, former UCLA trainer and two-time Olympic trainer.

Weldon, who lives in Los Angeles, says the purpose of the program is "to make people more aware of their total quality of life.

"Exercise is just not enough," she said. "We need to develop good health habits and debunk all the old myths, such as eating a lot of protein or about the quality of sleep.

"The amount of sleep (it's a myth that going to sleep an hour before midnight is best; sleep is sleep), the amount of alcohol (not more than 15 ozs. of alcohol a week) and a well-balanced diet are important. If you eat under 1,600 calories a day, you may need a vitamin supplement.

The National Jogging Association reports that more than 40 million Americans jog.

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Forget the steak cokouts, the post-ball game hamburgers and malts, the hot dog roasts, the fish fries and summer barbecues. From the time Monique Talkington was a sprout, so to speak, she's been suspicious of any food that hasn't grown out of the soil.

Not that she's missed anything. Or that life has been a bowl of cherry tomatoes.

She hasn't had a cold in almost two years. Or a piece of fried chicken in almost 13.

Talkington has been raised on health foods, most of them raw. She has learned to fast for nearly two weeks at a time, subsisting on juices and vitamin supplements, yet has the energy to dance, ride her bike and work 20 hours a week at a health food store.

How did this 5-4, 108-pound bundle of discipline pass in one fell swoop through the sweet-tooth and junk-food stages of childhood and adolescence?

By choice.

"When I was 6," she said, "my mother became a vegetarian for health reasons. She had a deteriorating disc in her neck, and her doctor was prescribing five aspirins a day.

"A friend got her interested in a vegetarian diet, and she felt much better."

It was a case of like mother, like daughter.

"I gave up things I liked, such as fried chicken and shrimp," said Talkington. "And there were never any sweets around the house."

She suffered an ear infection once, she said, because of a mineral deficiency, adding, "I overcame it by taking alfalfa."

Socially, Talkington's unusual regimen has represented no problems, she said. An extra helping of salad and-or veggies easily makes up for passing up the meat at a friend's house or a picnic.

"I've never starved," she says of her strict diet. "Last summer I got up to 116 pounds by eating too much."

She often goes on fruit-juice fasts for three or four days, supplemented by vitamins.

"I do it to clean out the system," she said. "I feel good when I'm doing it because I don't eat too much before going on a fast or coming off it — a mistake some people who get sick make.

"Your body knows when it's hungry. Sometimes a half-piece of fruit is enough to keep you going on a fast."

Cosmetic dentistry makes people smile

By MARY O'CONNOR
Copley News Service

Imagine looking forward to hearing these words: "The dentist will see you now."

But there are, in fact, thousands of people eagerly awaiting their next trip to the dentist.

Thanks to recent developments in cosmetic dentistry, these patients know their next appointment will be relatively short and inexpensive. Better still, the vast majority of these patients won't need anesthesia. None of them will feel even the slightest pain. Many patients whose teeth were healthy, but unattractive, before cosmetic treatment will report feeling a new sense of self-confidence in addition to having brighter smiles.

Cosmetic dentistry is a special service that aims to improve the appearance of essentially healthy teeth. Although specific procedures and treatments vary, one of the more common cosmetic treatments involves the use of pre-formed veneers. In this kind of treatment, the dentist bonds thin acrylic shells to the surface of discolored or disfigured teeth with a bonding agent shaded to match adjoining teeth or to complement the patient's complexion.

Preformed veneers, similar to caps and crowns used in general dentistry, become part of the patient's dentition.

MASTIQUE pre-formed veneers are a fairly recent innovation, introduced to dentists in 1978. Since then, more than 15,000 dentists have adopted this painless cosmetic procedure. It is an economic, conservative method of restoring disfigured teeth to a more natural appearance and, in some cases, a good alternative to caps and crowns.

To cap or crown a tooth the dentist must remove tooth structure. In many cases the discolored tooth is still healthy and structurally sound, and many dentists would rather not remove the tooth structure by cutting. No anesthetic is required with veneers since the original tooth is not filed or ground down as in other restorative procedures.

Patients treated with veneers get additional benefits in the form of substantial savings in time and money. The six upper front teeth can be restored in one visit lasting 30 to 60 minutes, compared to three visits generally required for one crown.

And a veneer treatment will probably cost the patient 30 to 50 percent less than a traditional crown. Veneers can also be replaced easily, should that be necessary.

Who can take advantage of cosmetic veneers? Likely candidates include children and adults whose teeth appear discolored or mottled for any number of reasons, such as root canal work, incorrect formation of tooth enamel, diseases or reactions to certain prescribed drugs. Fractured teeth can also be restored, and an abnormally large space between the two upper front teeth can be corrected.

Patients of any age can benefit from this kind of cosmetic dentistry, but it may be particularly helpful to teen-agers and young adults. They are growing physically and emotionally; self-image is a central issue in these years, according to David R. Burns, M.D., a Philadelphia psychiatrist specializing in the problems of young people.

"Young people are deeply concerned about their appearance because they have a special need to be accepted by others their own age. As a result, they often dwell on their physical imperfections and downplay their good qualities," he explains.

"People in this age group tend to make quick, harsh judgments about themselves and others. Unfortunately, these judgments make lasting impressions that may become the focus of emotional problems later in life.

"Young people often seem to be in a constant emotional crisis. This is really a reflection of the difficulty they have in expressing the difference betweeen a transient preoccupation and a persistent problem. Parents should be aware of this difficulty and take corrective action if their child's appearance causes personality, behavior or adjustment problems," says Burns.

Chemicals seep into U.S. water supply

By DENNIS SULICK

Have you ever stopped to consider the content of the water you have been drinking? It may, in fact, be threatening your health.

Benzene, trichloroethylene (TCE) and toluene are among the toxic chemicals that seep into the nation's groundwater supply every day.

In recent years, environmentalists have become increasingly alarmed over this new family of pollutants that have contaminated and threaten to contaminate the municipal and private sources of drinking water for hundreds of thousands.

Some of the chemical pollutants, like the industrial degreaser TCE, are so potent, that only two glassfuls of the chemical can contaminate 27 million gallons of water.

Many have been identified as possible carcinogens and are blamed for causing skin rashes, kidney disorders, birth defects, sterility or leukemia — even when found in minute concentrations.

Many were buried as industrial wastes and forgotten, as was the case in Southington, Conn., where hazardous wastes from a solvent disposal operation contaminated the area's groundwater with chloroform, TCE and carbon tetrachloride, causing the city to close three of its six wells.

Other sources of groundwater pollution include accidental chemical spills and leaks, misuse of pesticides and herbicides, and leakage of mining wastes contained in slurry ponds.

Water is naturally filtered as it passes through the ground, but this filtration is not enough to reliably screen out complex organic chemicals. Consequently, thousands of polluted wells have been closed throughout the country.

The most numerous discoveries of groundwater pollution have been in the industrial Northeast, where chemical dumping is considered a primary cause, and in California, as a result of wide use of agricultural chemicals.

Each day more than 100 billion gallons of water are pumped from public and private wells, providing roughly half the nation's drinking water supply. According to Jay Lehr, executive director of the National Water Well Association, "Scientists have known that groundwater was being polluted for nearly 30 years and tried to catch the attention of the public — with very little success.

"Unfortunately, the average citizen has a very poor understanding of groundwater. What he sometimes reads about groundwater is too often that which is contained in articles about local water witches. The concept of a fellow finding water with a forked stick is false and leads to a misunderstanding of groundwater and an extremmely low level of confidence in groundwater as a valuable and continually renewable natural resource."

In fact, more than 95 percent of the earth's freshwater supply is groundwater; that is, water which has be absorbed in rocks and porous layers of the earth's crust. These vast underground reservoirs, called aquifers, flow slowly, sometimes taking an entire lifetime to move only a mile.

Thus when chemical contaminants permeate an aquifer, it sometimes takes years for the polluted "plume" to reach a drinking water supply well. Such was the case when several miles of a shallow aquifer near Denver were discovered polluted. The source was traced to an unlined lagoon that leached pesticides and other toxic liquids 30 years before.

Because of the slow-moving nature of groundwater, it is often hard to predict where pollution will turn up. But the first step to finding groundwater pollution is testing.

Legislatively, there is no U.S. national policy regarding testing for toxic organics in municpal wells. Likewise, there are not U.S. enforceable standards requiring the purging of groundwater contaminated by toxic organics.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has encouraged states to set their own standards regarding chemical contamination of groundwater, but currently no states have completed this task.

Without the legislative push for groundwater testing, many discoveries of groundwater pollution are made accidently. In some cases, testing for toxic organics came only after residents repeatedly complained of unusual occurances of sickness in certain areas.

In other cases, such as Rockaway Borough, N.J., testing groundwater for toxic organics was done in response to a discovery of chemical contamination of wells serving nearby Rockaway Township. When two of the borough's three wells were found to be contaminated, officials warned the 6,800 borough residents to stop using the water. Emergency steps included the use of Army and Civil Defense water trucks which were brought in to supply water for the community.

Residents of Rockaway Borough, N.J., hauled bottled water anyway they could — including by "little red wagon" — while awaiting installation of a system to filter out chemical contaminiation.

Flavor enhancer may pose health threat

By JUDITH NEUMAN
Copley News Service

The name itself is a mouthful, and what monosodium glutamate does is fill your mouth with flavor. Or perhaps what resembles flavor.

Somehow — no one knows the body chemistry involved — monosodium glutamate (MSG) causes your taste buds to think they're getting more pay for less work.

An experiment in which 300 people were fed several common foods with and without MSG found that they preferred food with the flavor enhancer. They felt, for example, that it increased the "mouthfulness, impact, mildness and thickness" of beef consomme.

That's a lot of lip-smacking from a few sprinklings of a white granular-looking substance that resembles sugar physically, and like sugar, is a plant derivative.

Glutamate (the key ingredient in MSG) appears in a natural form in many foods from Parmesan cheese to tomatoes; it also takes the form of a naturally occurring amino acid, which means it is part and parcel of the body's chemical network whether or not we add extra amounts of it to our food.

Japanese cooks have been throwing it into their cooking pots for centuries in the form of sea tangle, a common seaweed used to impart a distinctively savory taste to their food.

Today, Americans consume some 20,000 tons of it every year, with per capita consumption now about 350 mg. per day and rising by 2 to 5 percent each year.

Which is all well and tasty — maybe.

Maybe, because there are some scientists who fear that glutamate in certain forms may be toxic and who think one of the very worst things we can do to our children is feed it to them.

These scientists are often scoffed at by their peers for being alarmists, waving red danger flags where no danger exists.

There is a solid basis for the differences of opinion, for the research that has been done on MSG seems to lead in opposite directions at the same time.

Some researchers using mice, rats, hamsters and other lab animals were disturbed by what they found: brain lesions, disturbances in growth and reproductive functions, some behavioral abnormalities (such as those demonstrated by the mice who started eating their own tails after being injected with high doses of MSG).

The key, say those who want to speculate, seems to be whether the MSG was offered with food or was somehow forced into the body — either by injection or gavage (directly entering the stomach via tube).

For example, several researchers have induced mouse endocrine system abnormalities with high-dosage injections of MSG. The mice have become grotesquely overweight and stunted in length and have had very dull coats.

Others have fed mice a diet containing 4 percent MSG "without any untoward incidence, reinforcing the safety-in-use of MSG," according to one researcher.

Perhaps the best-known researcher who frets about the potential dangers of MSG use in children is Dr. John Olney of the Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis, Mo.

Olney — and just about everyone else — agrees that MSG probably poses no danger to adults. "The most critical point to be understood," he says, "is that most of the brain is protected by blood brain barriers that prevent substances circulating in the blood from penetrating the brain. The blood passes through the brain, but the blood brain barrier doesn't let anything toxic or damaging through.

"There are a few very small areas at several points where there is no barrier. It's not known why, but it has been demonstrated that a number of substances do pass out of the blood and into the brain in these regions. They are vulnerable.

"Glutamate is known to be toxic for nerve cells if brought in at certain concentrations to direct contact with the cells," he explains.

"If glutamate becomes present in the blood in large amounts, it is transferred directly to these brain regions.

"In adults, there are secondary defense mechanisms in these regions of the brain which compensate for the lack of the blood brain barrier. But these mechanisms are not fully developed in infants and children," he says.

One portion of the brain that is vulnerable, Olney says, is the hypothalamus which controls the functions of the pituitary gland, and thus growth and several other vital body processes.

On the other hand, there are people such as Richard Cristol, executive director at the Glutamate Association, a trade group comprised of glutamate makers and their industrial food processing customers, who say of Olney: "His peers have rejected his studies" and "his research is irrelevent."

Cristol says flatly, "There have been at least 10,000 studies with about 20 or 30 species, and even at levels 19,000 times higher than human use, you only get a reaction by injection or by forcing food past the esophagus with a tube."

Cristol is not a scientist, but he gets scientific support from Switzerland in the form of a monograph written by a researcher named K. Anantharaman who says, "In the case of MSG it would be reasonable to argue that the oral route of administration, especially when admixed with the diet of the animal, represents the only true logical approach to an investigation of its long-term safety."

Anantharaman works for the experimental biology laboratory operated by Nestle Products, which uses MSG in several of its products, including its Souptime line of instant soups.

One serving of Souptime cream of chicken soup contains 780 mg. of MSG, more than twice the amount the Glutamate Association says a person usually consumes in a whole day.

And therein lies the crux of Olney's concern. Although MSG hasn't been added to baby foods since 1969, when manufacturers voluntarily removed it in the face of public pressure, youngsters are still eating it in their table food.

"When mothers wean their very young infants," he says, "they don't all use baby food. They use other commercial foods, and hash them up for the baby, and sometimes they think they're doing this wonderful, nutritious thing.

"What they don't know is that they can add as much as 1300 mg. of MSG in a bowl of soup."

That's a lot of MSG — almost exactly equal to the amount of MSG the Joint Expert Committee on Food Additives of the Food and Agricultural Organizational World Health Organization (FAO-WHO) would allow a 20-pound 2-year-old to ingest under its acceptable daily intake standards of 153 mg. per kilogam (2.2 pounds) of body weight.

The FAO-WHO standards include all the MSG a person would eat from every source — including all the naturally occurring free glutamate that appears normally in food.

If MSG is even potentially harmful to children, why would the food industry continue to use it?

"The grandma at the stove can render her chicken fat for five hours, and she doesn't need MSG because she knows she will get a lot of flavor in her soup.

"But the food processors, who, in order to make a profit on their product, must cook their chicken quickly, must use MSG so their product has some flavor."

Then, too, there is that substantial amount of research showing that MSG really doesn't harm anyone, baby mice included.

Much of that research was presented at an international conference on glutamates held in Milan, Italy, and later published in book form. Excerpts from the book appear frequently and prominently in literature distributed by the Glutamate Association.

It represents a large part of the research on MSG quoted by a select committee reviewing "generally recognized as safe" food ingredients for the federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

That committee last year concluded that "there is no evidence in the available information on (glutamates) that demonstrates, or suggests reasonable grounds to suspect, a hazard to the public when they are used at levels that are now current and in the manner now practiced."

That statement was hedged significantly, however, by another that said, "It is not possible to determine, without additional data, whether a significant increase in consumption would constitute a dietary hazard."

According to Emil Corwin, an FDA spokesperson, "They must feel there is a significant increase because more studies are going on."

In its official opinion, the select committee also said that, because some portion of the public suffers from MSG-induced symptoms known as "Chinese restaurant syndrome," "there should be some constraint placed on the addition of MSG to processed foods."

Symptoms of the syndrome include numbness, general weakness, palpatations and dizziness.

At the moment, there is none. At the end of last year, MSG was included in a list of 415 food additives that the FDA continued to classify as "generally recognized as safe" and thus without need of control.

"It just takes a one-time ingestion of a large amount of glutamate to destroy brain cells in a small child," Olney says. "That's all it takes — one time."

Olney feels very strongly that the research presented at the Milan conference was, for the most part, biased.

"That conference was staged by the glutamate industry," he charges, "and the people invited there were carefully controlled. The only reason I was there was because they couldn't hold a conference without me."

The question of a food industry bias, both in research and in relationship to the FDA's decisions has been raised before, perhaps most prominently in the agency's long intransigent stand on Red Dye No. 2, formerly used in everything from soft drinks to pill coatings. It was shown to impair reproduction and raise infant mortality in lab animals.

That substance eventually was removed from American food products, but only after concerted efforts by consumer groups.

No such battle is under way regarding MSG. In fact, according to Michael Jacobson, executive director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a prominent Washington-based group now leading a fight to get the sodium content of processed food listed on labels, "MSG is a dead issue."

Spa takes losses seriously

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

LAKE ELSINORE, Colo. — At The Grove at Lake Elsinore, there is no visible evidence that the 40-room spa with the same pampering services of expensive health resorts is really "a budget spa."

A look around shows typical spa activities:

— Cosmetologist Ilah Stocker gives a facial in the small beauty salon which spa visitor Robin Daly says is "Fabulous! It makes you feel good about yourself."

— Tom Merwarth leads an exercise session in the mirrored, carpeted gym. "It's a good workout," says Nancy de Varennes, a researcher with Rand Corp., who has visited several other spas and finds them good, safe places for a woman alone to visit.

— In the brightly lighted boutique, Lea Krischke, wife of general manager Fred Krischke, packages a purple velour caftan for a chubby customer. Meanwhile, Maurice Meltzer relaxes briefly in the lounge, contented with his pound-a-day loss of weight.

But The Grove is a place where men and women can come to lose weight and get in condition without putting the body in hock for spa expenses, says developer-director Gene Morgan.

In the main lobby of the new "budget spa," Morgan surveys his kingdom with complacency. His dream began to take shape at age 10 when he ran away from his Tennessee home, working in restaurants and hotels to learn about the industry. Now dressed in a blue business suit, buttoned vest, shirt and tie, he projects "the authority figure" he has in mind for his new spa.

The spa is there, Morgan says, to help men and women lose weight safely. As a former manager with 25 years' experience in the hotel business before creating the spa, Morgan is a man who matches big vision with a desire to help people.

Morgan can run the spa so inexpensively, he says, "because it is a much tighter, more efficient operation than the expensive spas, accomplishing all the spa services with less personnel — by design, of course." About 25 workers (some trained on the job) make up the spa staff. They hold the licenses required by the county for their work, Morgan says.

The Grove consists of 40 rooms bordering a large, central courtyard shaded by walnut trees — 20 rooms, each with color television set and phone, on either side. Indoor and outdoor pools, Jacuzzi, sauna, beauty salon, dining room and lounge complete the layout.

The spa operates every day — even holidays — and has a program of morning and afternoon exercise sessions and low-calorie dieting. But participation in these programs is voluntary. What's more, higher-calorie meals are available for those who don't want to lose weight but do want to accompany their spouses to the resort.

Incoming guests fill out a medical questionnaire and have blood pressure and weight checked by an Elsinore physician. They also choose their calorie intake plan of 500, 750 or 900 calories a day. Recipes and menus were created by Morgan, who learned about foods working with the head chef and baker of the Westward Ho Hotel in Phoenix for five years. Morgan says he also has developed menus for convalescent hospitals.

To aid in weight loss, Morgan has developed a line of low-cal salad dressings, a butter substitute and dessert delicacies such as a low-cal cake with icing which he wants to market nationally next year. Copies of his recipes are made available to guests so they can continue dieting after leaving the spa.

"I get more satisfaction out of this than anything I've ever done," says Morgan, 57.

"When guests are here, it means they want their size and shape altered, and I can help with that. I can help them become the person they want to be, to go that step beyond the present to a better future. I like these people; I don't look at them as overweight, and I tell the people who work here to have empathy, not sympathy. The pleasant atmosphere we have created here comes from management on down.

"We all relate to overweight people here. I think that most of them are depressed and some of them are timid. I think overeating is treating your body like an automobile; it needs fuel to go on, but you should only take it to the filling station when it needs fuel. Some people manage to overstuff their gas tanks, you know."

Rolf your way back to good health

By FRANCES NELSON
Copley News Service

Many of us have felt, at one time or another, that we were meandering through life at a level of health far below our potential for well-being.

Unfortunately, too many of us continue on this course until we become seriously ill. That nagging ache or pain evolves into something we can no longer ignore.

Research now shows that a simple procedure called Rolfing can help those of us who want to help ourselves.

Rolfing, or structural integration, as it's called, is based on the manipulation of the body's connective tissue. These tissues, or fasciae, often become shortened and thickened during the lifetime of an individual. Contributing factors may be physical trauma, poor posture or stress.

This is where the Rolfer comes into play. This person uses his fingers, knuckles and elbows to change the shape, location and density of these tissues.

His goal? To realign the body in a field of gravity. He is, in fact, restoring order to a disordered body.

The technique was developed by the late Ida Rolf, PhD, in the 1940s and has been refined in the last three decades.

Rolfing is appropriate for people of all ages, and is particularly beneficial to children.

Although it can relieve such non-pathological symptoms as lower back pain and aches from old injuries, it is intended primarily to bring "healthy" individuals to an improved level of functioning.

Rolfees say they stand straighter, have more energy, feel more "comfortable" with their own bodies and the world around them.

After undergoing the 10 one to one and one-half hour sessions, Rolfees report feeling more confident and better about themselves in general, not just physically.

Many Rolfees also report improved performance in sports. In fact, Harold Solomon and Brian Teacher, two top players on the men's pro tennis tour, are among the professional athletes who have been Rolfed.

Ms. Rolf understood that the physical aches and pains of adults have their roots in childhood patterns of development. By working with children, she was able to demonstrate that these early patterns, whether learned or inherited, can be improved and the children developed in ways that produce more stable and flexible adult bodies.

Supermarkets get into health food act

By CAROL FLINDERS
Copley News Service

Natural foods are rapidly finding a place in ordinary supermarkets. In some stores they are shelved higgledy-piggledy with their conventional counterparts: herb teas next to the coffee, and so on. In others the "store-within-a-store" idea is being tried out: open bins full of nuts, seeds and noodles — the works.

What is the impact of all this on the smaller, usually independent health and natural foods stores? The question is one every natural-foods consumer should be thinking about. Where and how we spend our food shopping dollars this week may well determine the options that are open to us in the years and even months to come. I've been canvasing store owners in my own area, and the response has been interesting.

No one can really tell yet what kind of competitive inroads the "big guys" are making on their own sales. Pricing, so far, doesn't appear to be the biggest issue.

Since the chain stores have their own trucks and drivers, eliminating middlemen, they would presumably be able to set their prices lower. The retailers I spoke to haven't seen that happening yet. So far the threat seems to have more to do with convenience. Nearly everyone does some shopping at the supers, and if the wholewheat noodles and tofu are right there. ...

A local store manager expressed an ambivalence echoed by many: "You know, I'm so pleased that the general public is finally getting exposed to good food. Because obviously a lot of those people would never find their way into a health foods store. At the same time, I feel a twinge of jealousy. I mean, we've been at it for so long. Ethically, I guess I just don't feel like they should be doing this, even though I know it's inevitable...."

Some soul-searching is going on. Suppose we can't beat the big stores for convenience or even prices. What can we offer that they can't? Four factors come up, no matter whom you talk to.

Information is the first. You pull a package of brown rice from the shelf and wonder — is my family ready for this? And how should I fix it? Comes the reply: "Here's how we like it" — and a recipe.

Variety is the second factor. New and intriguing products are being introduced all the time now in health and natural foods stores. Convenience foods, for example, that actually measure up nutritionally but taste good, too, pricey though they are. Or cosmetics whose manufacture involves neither cruelty to animals nor the use of dubious chemicals. Supermarkets aren't likely to carry new, untried products like these because their close profit margins don't allow for taking chances. Shelf space goes to proven big sellers. The computer decides, and "volume" is the magic word.

Please pass up the salt

By JAMES RYAN
Copley News Service

"Please pass the salt."

Before you use the salt shaker to season your eggs or add flavor to your cooking, consider this: Sodium is a major contributor to hypertension, a serious health problem for one in five Americans. In fact, medical research has found that we consume 10 to 20 times the required amount of sodium.

"Since salt, or more specifically its key element sodium, is found naturally in virtually everything we consume, it is easy to exceed the recommended intake, especially with today's increased consumption of processed foods," states Dr. Howard M. Shapiro, a well-known specialist in weight control, behavior and nutritional medicine and a consultant to Perrier Mineral Water.

According to the Food and Nutrition Board of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences, 1,100 to 3,300 milligrams of sodium per day is a safe and sufficient supply for an adult. Most nutritionists recommend 2,300 mg. a day, which translates to only one teaspoon of table salt.

One often-overlooked source of sodium according to Shapiro, are the beverages we drink.

"Many of us could get ourselves down to the recommended daily intake of sodium by changing our beverages," he says.

"One of the problems for those who are trying to diet and cut down sodium intake is that many low-calorie diet stand-bys are high in sodium. In fact, many of the beverages frequently recommended as good drinks while you're dieting — such as club soda, low-calorie sodas, even tomato juice — contain a significant amount of sodium. Perrier is a low-calorie and low-sodium alternative, and patients who drink it tell me they don't feel deprived, which is the key to sticking to a diet."

— Use table salt sparingly in food preparation and try to keep it off the table.

— Spice up the taste of food with such flavorings as basil, chives, dill, garlic, ginger, Florida lime, lemon, mint, oregano, parsley, pepper, rosemary, sage, thyme and many others with negligible sodium content.

— Read labels. This is a learning experience in itself. The words to look for are salt, sodium, brine, mono-sodium glutamate (MSG) and other sodium-containing additives such as sodium propionate or di-sodium phosphate.

— To avoid being tempted at a sumptuous buffet, have your spouse, friend or waiter fill your plate with low-sodium food or try to eat before going to the party.

Make the most of visit to dermatologist

By WENDY ARCHINE
Copley News Service

Whether you're fighting athlete's foot, acne, poison ivy or plantar warts, you may need a professional's help. When a trip to the dermatologist is in order, these tips on what to ask (and tell) your skin specialist should help you make the most of your visit.

It's easy to forget important points when you're worried about an ailment and seeing a new doctor. So before you go, ask yourself these basic questions — which the dermatologist will ask during the consultation:

— When did you notice the problem?

— Have there been recent changes in your stress level, physical activity and/or diet? Any of these can cause skin problems.

Nutritional excesses, as well as deficiencies, can trigger skin problems.

"Kelp — a health faddist favorite — is high in iodide," points out Carlton L. Carpenter Jr., M.D. — a Baton Rouge, La., dermatologist and clinical professor of dermatology at Louisiana State School of Medicine in New Orleans. "Too much iodide," he warns, "can cause skin eruptions.

"Although vitamin E capsules are not intended for topical use," says Carpenter, "many people break them open and rub the contents directly on affected areas in an attempt to 'treat' their skin condition. This can cause a serious contact dermatitis and worsen rather than improve troubled skin."

— Are you wearing new jewelry, using a new soap, cosmetic toiletry (such as bubble bath) or hair coloring?

— What medications are you taking?

Some medications have dermatological side effects. For example, certain diabetes medications, fluid pills (diuretics often prescribed for high blood pressure) and antibiotics can cause an allergic skin reaction when the body is exposed to the sun.

"In addition," notes Carpenter, "many women do not perceive the birth control pill as medication. But it is, and not without possible side effects. Some women experience hair loss three to five months after discontinuing use of oral contraceptives."

Your visit to the dermatologist should bring about a two-way exchange of information. Some key questions the doctor should answer:

Tetracycline, an oral medication often used to treat acne, should not be taken with some dairy products. "The tetracycline," explains Carpenter, "combines with the calcium in milk, lowering the effectiveness of the medication."

Ask whether the prescription can (or should) be renewed without seeing the physician again. Usually a prescription can be refilled for no more than five or six consecutive months without another office visit.

— Ask about non-prescription medications.

"Government, more and more, is allowing proven prescription medicines to be sold directly to consumers — usually at less cost," says Jack Walden, senior vice president of the Proprietary Association. "Consumers should ask their dermatologist about non-prescription medicines to meet their needs."

One product can help you tan with healthy skin

By JACK WILLIAMS

Face the facts: Wrinkles and aging of the skin are as inevitable as sunshine on a summer day.

And no amount of skin gels, moisturizers, facials or tanning lotions will forestall the effects.

Ah, but there is a product that will enable you to have your tan — albeit, not a radiant one — and healthy skin, too.

Sunscreen.

Dr. Stephen Mandy, a clinical professor of dermatology, is convinced sunscreens are the only way to go.

Preferably the water-resistant type that remains in effect all day, no matter how profusely you sweat or how many times you immerse yourself in water.

— There is nothing on the market that will prevent wrinkles despite certain ambiguous advertising claims.

Said Mandy:

"If there were a Fountain of Youth, I'd be the first one to jump in.

"We're researching again, and because it is more accessible we can study the skin better than the effects of aging on the heart."

An active runner and skin diver in Miami, Fla., Mandy insists he would look considerably older than his 34 years were it not for the extensive use of sunscreens. He also would be more prone to skin cancer, he said.

"The sun and over-bathing accelerate aging of the skin," he said. "But it is a fallacy to think that dry skin is prone to wrinkle. The skin-care industry has done a good job of convincing the public of this so that it can sell moisturizers.

As for the moisturizers, said Mandy, they have no value.

Suntan lotions?

"By and large, they are weak.

"Their SPF (sun protection factor, which the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has recommended be put on all sunscreening products) — is two on a scale of 10. Sunscreens can range from two to eight. Oils promote sunburn rather than diminish it."

(A sun protection factor of six, for example, means that a person can be exposed to the sun for six times 15 minutes without getting red. Sunscreens are available for various skin types, with varying degrees of protection.)

Sun protection is vital from late May through October, said Mandy. The most crucial hours: 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

"Generally, unless you have the most sensitive of skin, you don't need a sunscreen except during those hours," said Mandy.

"You can do more damage in one day from 11 to 1 than you can every day of the week from 4 to 5 p.m."

If you're sailing, said Mandy, you're getting an additional 60 percent to 70 percent exposure reflected off the water.

"One hour in the water or on the white sands of the beach is equal to several hours in your back yard," he said.

INTERNATIONAL
Skin Correction Center
Owner - Kathy Harrison

Jeneal skin layering is the answer to skin problems that are not considered diseases. Patients who felt they were trapped for life with problem skin can look forward to a beautiful complexion. Unless the patient has an existing medical problem that interferes; skin layering will correct cosmetic disorders such as, pimples and acne type conditions, pitts, scars, wrinkles, large pores, stretch marks, and most scarring.

The skin problems outlined above are not diseases and therefore have been of little interest to the medical profession. Dermatologists are beginning to take another look at skin layering and nurses are being trained to work in their offices or in adjoining centers.

Skin layering is not only exfoliation of dead cells and cleansing of the hair follicles, but also rejuvenation of the replacement cells. Unlike skin peeling with (phenol) or abrasives that are painful, the enzymes affect only dead cells and have no effect on live tissue, therefore some patients sleep during treatment.

Many cosmetic disorders are associated with mild hormonal imbalances, nutritional deficiency and improper diet. A simple hormone index is suggested and in some cases a Urinalysis for pregnontriol (progesterone). Skin problems seem to appear when the superficial cell count is below 50% and many times as low as 5%.

A formulation of vitamin & minerals, including trace minerals is suggested daily. Especially when dark circles under the eyes are noted and appear to be familial (inherited). This condition disappears from the outer edges first and the right eye responds faster than the left.

The time required to correct skin problems will vary from patient to patient, but in most cases the depth of the condition and the patient's own chemistry balance influences the results.

We ask your cooperation in maintaining a regular routine so that faster results may be expected.
