UTPB effort revived

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A new two-pronged proposal to expand the University of Texas of the Permian Basin has emerged from discussions among Midland political leaders and higher education officials, sources close to the proceedings confirmed Thursday.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, said he has revived legislative efforts to expand the Odessa school from an upper-level and graduate institution to a full-fledged four-year university.

The legislation would allow for four-year status if UTPB was allowed to utilize existing Midland College facilities, or if a UTPB center is constructed in Midland.

Midland College officials, who are on record as supporting the latter proposal, would make the final decision.

"I think we have a good chance of doing something if we have a concept that is agreeable to everybody," Craddick said. "But the governor won't even consider putting it on the call unless both cities are in agreement."

Craddick, who had opposed the four-year expansion of UTPB when it first was presented this past summer, said Midlanders have not yet presented the package to Odessans.

But he added that Gov. Bill Clements might expand the call of the current special session to include UTPB legislation if the two communities can reach an accord.

Midland College officials are backing a proposal to build a $2.5 million UTPB center in Midland for upper-level and graduate students.

The 40,000-square-foot building would contain 20-25 classrooms, and be built north of Midland College on land the college either would sell or lease long-term to the UT System.

Midland College Board President Ralph Way said at least 51 percent of the building costs would be absorbed by private sources and foundations in Midland, with remainder paid for by the University of Texas System.

The second proposal — submitted by former Midland Mayor and Republican National Committeeman Ernest Angelo, would merge Midland College into the UT System.

Under Angelo's plan, the UT System would be given title to the campus and facilities of Midland College and would make the campus a full-time part of a four-year and graduate level university at Midland-Odessa.

The UT System would assume all outstanding debt and ongoing operating costs and, with local input, would offer a full program of vocational-technical courses on the Midland campus.

Eleven killed in violent storms

Associated Press

Violent storms caused widespread wind damage and flooding in the Northeast and claimed at least 11 lives, including seven children killed when a wall collapsed on them as they ate in their upstate New York school cafeteria.

Thursday's storms came from the system that spun off tornadoes in eight states in the South and Midwest on Wednesday. The two-day toll: at least 29 dead and hundreds injured, including 17 dead and 1,000 homeless in Huntsville, Ala., and a death in Canada.

President Bush today issued a disaster declaration for tornado victims in Huntsville, making the city eligible for federal relief programs, said Gov. Guy Hunt's press secretary, Terry Abbott.

Authorities and witnesses in Newburgh, N.Y., about 60 miles north of New York City, said it appeared a tornado was responsible for the death and destruction at East Coldenham Elementary School, but the weather service said it probably wasn't a twister.

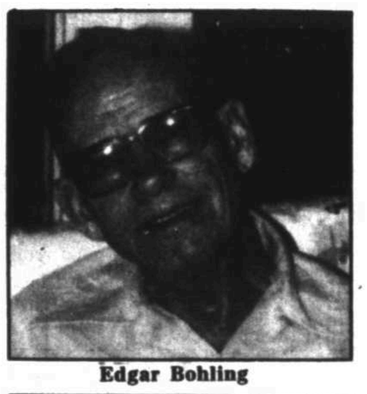

The brick, cinder block and glass wall, about 30 feet high and 50 feet wide, caved in on as many as 125 first-, second- and third-graders as they were eating lunch, said Town of Newburgh Police Chief John Kulisek.

Besides the seven killed, 18 children were injured, two critically. All the victims were 6 to 9 years old.

Town of Newburgh police Lt. John J. Mahoney said he arrived 10 minutes after the wall collapsed to find children calling out from under the rubble.

"Some were screaming, some were lying there very quiet," Mahoney said. "You could hear them under the debris calling for help, calling 'Take me home, take me home.'"

Edgar Bohling

Body of missing man found in field

By BRIAN PEARSON

A traumatic wait ended Thursday for the family of an elderly Midland man who disappeared from a nursing home in September.

A ranch hand found the body of Edgar Bohling, 75, lying in a field near State Highway 158 about five miles west of the city, said Lt. Earl Luckey of the Midland Police Department.

The 5:04 p.m. discovery ended a 1½-month search for Bohling, an Alzheimer's disease victim who had been missing from the Terrace West Nursing Center since Sept. 30.

Bohling's nude, semimummified body was found by the ranch hand's son Sunday, but the unbelieving father did not search the area until Thursday, Luckey said.

Luckey said Bohling died possibly from dehydration or natural causes. No foul play is suspected, he said.

"He probably died within a day or so after he came up missing," Luckey said.

He said it appeared that Bohling thought he was back in Terrace West and was readying himself for bed before falling asleep in the field. His clothes were found several feet away, he said.

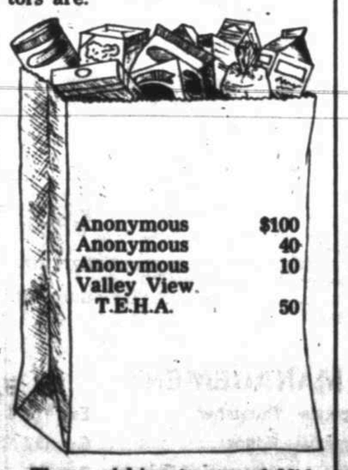

"After he took off his clothes, he then walked a short distance like he was walking to his bed in the nursing home," Luckey said.

After Bohling's disappearance, public and private helicopters and airplanes scoured areas north and west of Midland for several days. The former pipeliner was last seen alive Sept. 30 on the Button Estes Ranch north of the city.

Lutheran workers detained following massacre of Jesuits

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Fears of renewed repression spread today following the slaying and mutilation of eight people, including six Jesuit priests, and the reported detention of a dozen Lutheran Church workers.

Another member of the Jesuits, a Roman Catholic order, quoted witnesses as saying government forces shot the priests and their cook and her daughter. The government denied responsibility and said the murders were "savage and irrational."

Hours after the slayings, uniformed security officers arrested a dozen Lutheran missionaries, a Canadian diplomat said, and another Lutheran missionary fled the country.

The slayings occurred amid the biggest leftist rebel offensive in the nation's 10-year-old civil war.

The fighting continued today between members of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, and government troops. Flares lighted the predawn sky and the sound of mortars, rockets and machine guns shattered the quiet.

El Salvador only recently emerged from a period of repression during which death squads and rightist elements of the military were accused of killing thousands of people.

Allday roasted at local benefit

Money raised for Texas Society to Prevent Blindness

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

They poked fun all night at Martin Allday, but they never lost sight of their purpose.

Confirmed this week as chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and a prominent Midlander, Allday was the brunt of many a joke before 450 people at the Thursday's Texas Society to Prevent Blindness dinner.

But beyond the formal dress, champagne and prime rib, there was a deeper purpose behind the dinner at Green Tree Country Club. The event, which raised about $40,000, will fund the society's budget for the year.

"I'm happy to be back in Midland," Allday said at a pre-dinner press conference. "I'm overwhelmed really with the crowd."

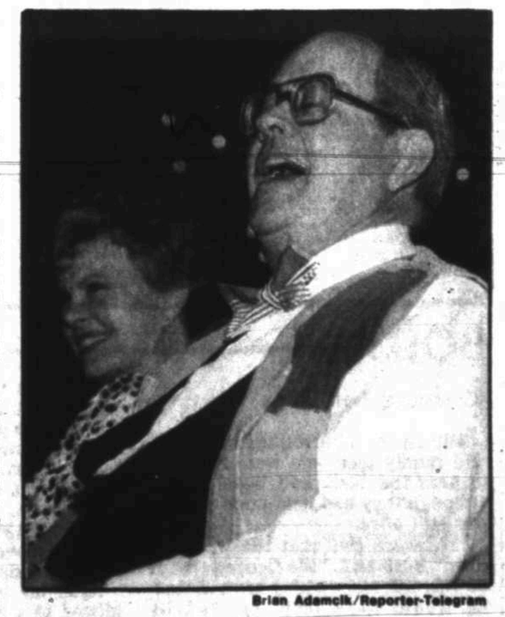

Allday, who will be sworn in Tuesday as commission chairman, said he wants to bring his knowledge of the oil industry to his new position.

"I think it's a heck of a lot better to understand what you're regulating," he said. "I intend for the American people to receive power at a reasonable cost."

Allday said the primary power source in coming years could be natural gas, a move that would mean stiff competition from Canada.

"It's clean and environmentally sound," he said of the resource, whose use would be an economic benefit to Permian Basin residents.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Via Associated Press GraphicsNet

Cold temperatures expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and cold temperatures are expected tonight, according to forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the lower 30s and winds will be from the east at 5-10 mph.

Saturday is expected to continue partly cloudy with the high in the lower 50s with winds from the east at 5-10 mph.

Thursday's high of 59 was 27 degrees cooler than the record high of 86 set for that date in 1963. The overnight low of 36 was 18 degrees warmer than the record low of 18 set on Nov. 17, 1959.

STATE

Cloudy skies and cool temperatures covered most of the state this morning as an upper level storm system approached Texas from the southwest.

Isolated light rainshowers had developed near Brownsville and over the coastal waters 30 to 40 miles northeast of Port Isabel. Patches of light rain were scattered from near Del Rio to Uvalde and Devine.

Winds blew most of Texas from the south and southeast at speeds of 5 to 15 mph.

Early morning temperatures were in the 20s over the Panhandle while south Texas temperatures hovered around the 50- and 60-degree marks. The rest of the state had readings in the 30s and 40s.

Skies will increase cloudiness over south Texas tonight, bringing an increasing chance for rain. The chance for rain will spread into north Texas tonight and Saturday.

Fair to partly cloudy skies are predicted through Saturday for the rest of the state. Winds will blow across the state at speeds mostly ranging from 5 to 15 mph.

Temperature readings around the state this morning had Amarillo checking in at 22 degrees, Lubbock at 31, El Paso at 35, Midland at 41, San Angelo at 38, Wichita Falls at 32, Fort Worth at 36, Waco at 40, Austin at 43, San Antonio at 49, Brownsville at 67, Corpus Christi at 64 and Houston at 42.

NATION

Snow fell in the Midwest early today, hours after a powerful storm system brought strong winds and heavy thunderstorms to the Northeast.

Violent storms Thursday caused widespread wind damage and flooding in the Northeast and claimed the lives of seven children when a wall collapsed on a school cafeteria near Newburgh, N.Y. There were three other weather-related deaths Thursday in New Jersey and New York.

Storms knocked over trees and ripped roofs off houses in West Virginia, caused flooding in Washington, D.C., blew the windows out of skyscrapers in Philadelphia, destroyed a house in Piscataway, N.J., and overturned cars and blew the roof off a shopping mall in Quebec.

There were reports of damage from strong thunderstorms and gusty winds in eastern Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania and eastern New York state. Winds gusted to 65 mph in Baltimore, 76 mph in Lancaster, Pa., and 100 mph in Philadelphia.

Tornadoes touched down at King of Prussia, Pa., Lakehurst, N.J., and Peekskill, N.Y.

Temperatures dropped into the 20s and 30s throughout the Midwest as snow fell in North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Michigan today. Rain out West dampened parts of Oregon and Washington.

Colder weather also extended into the South, with temperatures in north and middle Georgia dropping into into the 20s today. Workers at homeless shelters across the state prepared for a busy weekend.

More than a foot of snow fell Thursday over parts of northeast and south-central upper Michigan, including 14 inches at Marquette.

Snow also fell Thursday evening over southeast Minnesota, northern and western Wisconsin, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, northeast Alabama, western North Carolina, western Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and western New York.

BODY

Bill Bush, Bohling's son-in-law, said family members were relieved to hear the body had been found, although they had held hope that he was still alive.

"We were glad that the wait was over," Bush said. "We figured that if he was still out walking around then he would have been spotted by now."

He said the wait has been agonizing for the family.

"Every time a false sighting was made or the phone would ring late at night, it caused tremendous anxiety," Bush said.

Bohling, a former Northern Natural Gas Co. superintendent in the 1960s and 1960s, retired in the mid-'70s and moved from Hobbs, N.M., to Hooker, Okla.

After his wife died in 1983, he was moved to a New Orleans diagnostic center. He moved to Midland this year to be with his daughter.

UTPB

Speaking to UTPB professors Thursday, Angelo said expansion to a four-year program without provisions pertaining to Midland College could have a "damaging effect" on Midland College — drawing off academic students, reducing state funding and potentially increasing the tax burden.

Angelo said backing from both communities is seen as crucial to the success of any proposal making the Odessa school a four-year institution, adding that "nothing will happen unless Midland has a role in the institution."

Even with legislative and gubernatorial endorsements, additional OKs would have to come from the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board and the UT Board of Regents.

Midlander Frank Cahoon, a coordinating board member, said Thursday that he is relatively certain that the coordinating board would endorse the plan if the two cities exhibit a sense of unity.

During this year's regular and special sessions, Odessa Rep. Gary Watkins' efforts to expand UTPB without Midland support were thwarted first by a Clements veto of a regular session UT-Dallas bill with a UTPB Amendment attached, then by the clock, which ran out on his last-minute filing of a special session bill to add freshman and sophomore classes on the Odessa campus.

The latter effort came just days after the governor's rejection of another "historic compromise proposal" which had the backing of UTPB and Midland College trustees.

The joint Midland Midland-Odessa proposal was unveiled July 7, one day before leaders from both cities met in Austin.

Less than a week later, the plan was dropped after Clements, unimpressed by the building proposal, denied Craddick's request to consider UTPB legislation.

Florida woman turning 115

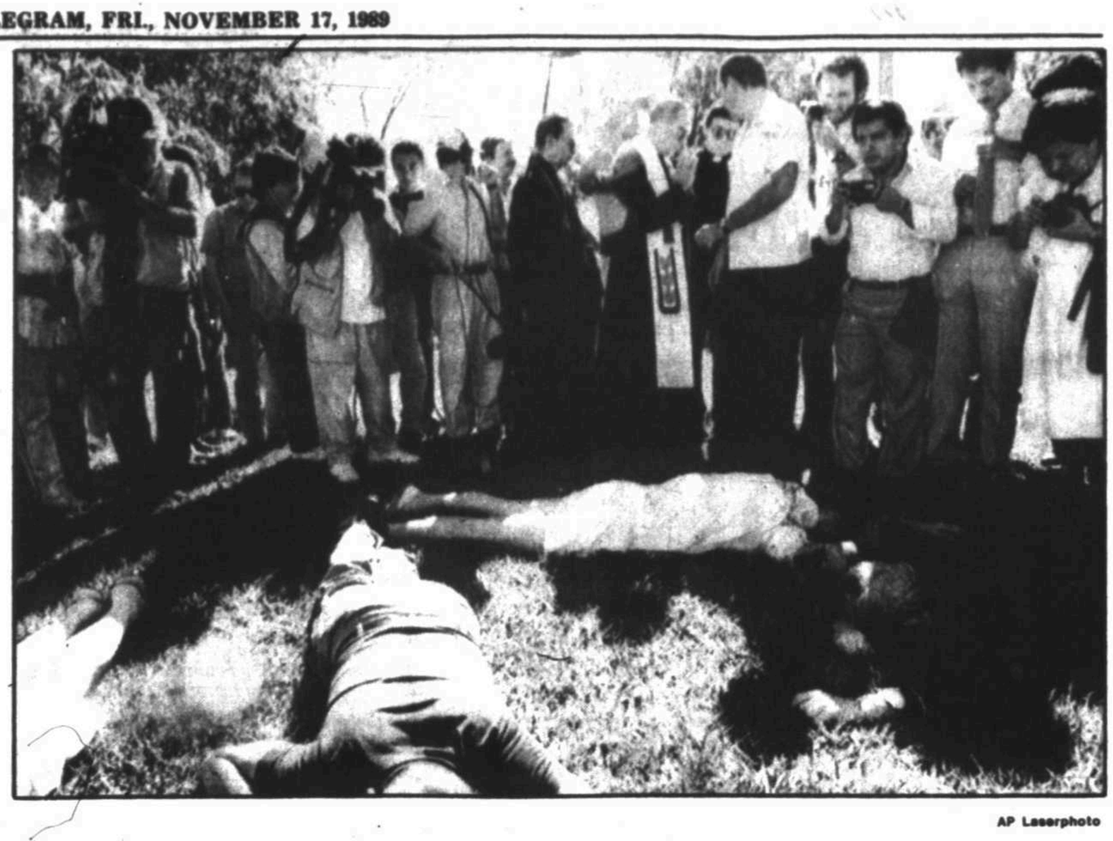

PALATKA, Fla. (AP) — A big birthday bash is planned for Carrie White, who turns 115 Saturday and is recognized by the Guinness Book of World Records as the oldest living person on Earth.

As many as 800 guests are expected at the party planned for Monday at Putnam Memorial Nursing Home, where Mrs. White lives, and there will be a big cake, nursing home adminstrator Paul Allen said.

When she turned 114, Guinness representatives gave Mrs. White a gold embossed certificate declaring her the oldest person alive, though she was not listed as such in the 1989 edition of the record book because hospital records certifying her age had not been authenticated in time.

Most of Mrs. White's life is a sad mystery. She spent 75 years in a mental institution.

She was born Carrie Joyner on Nov. 18, 1874, in Gadsden County near Georgia. She lived and worked near Tallahassee and married John White, who was a blacksmith or farmer.

The Archbishop of San Salvador, Arturo Rivera Dama, center, and journalists view the bodies of six Jesuit priests murdered Thursday. The leadership of the local Jesuit university and two employees were killed and mutilated by a squad of assassins. They had received death threats. Please see related stories, Pages 7A and 3B.

SALVADOR

The Salvadoran right considers church activists and church intellectuals to be subversives.

President Alfredo Cristiani, who took office June 1, said at a news conference Thursday that the government was not involved in the priest slayings and that he had ordered an investigation.

"The killers will jeopardize further the critical situation in our country," he said.

The United States, which backs the Salvadoran government in the civil war, will call for a full investigation into the "horrendous act," State Department spokesman Margaret Tutwiler said in Washington.

The FMLN, in a statement given to The Associated Press office in Mexico City, called the murders an "absurd massacre."

It also said: "We condemn energetically the genocide against the Salvadoran people that the government and army are carrying out on a grand scale, through indiscriminate bombing in neighborhoods in the capital and major cities of the country."

The FMLN said it supported a cease-fire, which the government has opposed.

The six priests — the leadership of the local Jesuit university — were slain in the predawn hours Thursday. Their cook and her daughter were slain as well.

The Rev. Jose Maria Tojeira, head of the Jesuit order in Central America, said two witneses saw about 30 men in army uniforms entering the grounds of their residence at the university just before the shooting started.

He said the massacre was carried out with "lavish barbarity."

"For example, they took out their brains," Tojeira said.

He said the terrified witnesses had gone into hiding and did not trust authorities because troops were implicated in the killings.

Uniformed security officers later raided a downtown office of the Lutheran Church and arrested 12 missionary workers, said Michel Gagne, a consular officer at the Canadian Embassy.

He said they were being detained at Treasury Police headquarters. Police refused to confirm the report.

The Rev. William Dexheimer, a pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, said he had received a telephone call Tuesday threatening him with death if he didn't leave. After the murders Thursday, he flew home to Florida.

"They're killing everybody who in any way — no matter whether moderate or radical — anybody who speaks out or even just says what they saw happening," Dexheimer said in an interview.

At the Vatican, Pope John Paul II today decried the murder of the Jesuits, calling it an act of "abominable violence" in a telegram to the archbishop of San Salvador, Monsignor Arturo Rivera Damas.

The pope said e prayed that everyone would "reject violence and respect the lifes of their brothers to bring peace and reconciliation to this suffering country."

Rivera Damas Thursday compared the killings to the slaying of his predecessor, Oscar Arnulfo Romero. The assassination in March 1980 marked the beginning of years of killings and kidnappings by right-wing death squads.

"If this spiral of violence continues, death and destruction will sweep away many, especially those who are of most use to our people," said Rivera Damas after leading a prayer over the mutilated bodies.

On Dec. 2, 1980, troops killed U.S. Maryknoll nuns Ita Ford and Maura Clarke, Ursuline sister Dorothy Kazel and lay worker Jean Donovan.

There have been two bombings at the rectory of the Luthern Church, which is active among the poor and war refugees.

An armed forces spokesman, Col. Arturo Lopez, earlier this week accused "some denominations" of evacuating wounded rebels from battle zones in the guise of civilians.

The Lutheran detainees included four U.S. citizens, a Canadian, and a Spaniard. The rest were West Germans.

The Americans were identified as Paula Brentlinger, a physician from Seattle; Thomas Gabriel, a nurse from Seattle; Bradley Fields, a social worker from San Diego; and Paul Fitch, a U.S. volunteer whose hometown was not known.

Also among the victims was Brian Rudd, a Canadian pastor from the Canadian Evangelical Luteheran Church.

STORMS

District schools were closed today, and school officials were assembling counselors to help pupils when classes resume Monday.

Kulisek said an investigation would begin today into why the wall collapsed.

A tornado knocked over trees and ripped roofs off houses in West Virginia's Eastern Panhandle, the National Weather Service confirmed. Storms also caused flooding in Washington, D.C., blew windows out of skyscrapers in Philadelphia, destroyed a house in Piscataway, N.J., and overturned cars and blew the roof off a shopping mall in Quebec.

The weather service also confirmed a second tornado Thursday, in Montgomery County in southeastern Pennsylvania. It ripped the roof off a building housing federal offices in King of Prussia, causing four minor injuries.

A truck driver died when his tractor-trailer overturned in high winds on a bridge connecting Elizabeth, N.J., and New York City. A New York City woman died after being hit by a steel beam blown off a water tower. A Camden, N.J., man died when winds picked him up and smashed him to the ground, authorities said.

Quebec provincial police suspected a tornado was responsible for widespread damage in St. Hilaire, a small community southeast of Montreal.

Winds of more than 124 mph blew the roof off a shopping mall, overturned cars, shattered windows, knocked down trees and hurled mailboxes hundreds of yards in the center of St. Hilaire, a town official said.

In Richmond, just east of St. Hilaire, a man was killed when his car was hit by a school bus during the high winds, Quebec provincial police official Bertrand Fortin said.

The storm system, churning around a collision of record warm air and extremely cold air, also was blamed for one death Wednesday in Alorton, Ill. Gov. James R. Thompson said Thursday he would seek federal disaster aid for the southern Illinois town.

In Huntsville, the tornado covered between eight and 10 miles with wind speeds as high as 250 mph. "It's like taking six to 10 city blocks and putting them in a blender and putting it on liquefy," said rescue worker Bob Caraway.

Winds of up to 100 mph blew out windows in Philadelphia skyscrapers and tore a hole in the roof of the Overseas Terminal at Philadelphia International Airport.

Winds brought down power lines and damaged generating stations, leaving at least 180,000 customers temporarily without electricity in Pennsylvania, New York and eastern Connecticut, utility officials said.

ALLDAY

Allday, an attorney, is a decorated World War II veteran. He was legal examiner for the Texas Railroad Commission Oil and Gas Division from 1951 to 1953 before moving to Superior Oil Co.'s legal department, where he worked until 1959.

From 1959 until this spring, he was a partner of the Lynch, Chappell, Allday and Alsup law firm. He moved to Washington, D.C., where he was confirmed as solicitor of the U.S. Department of the Interior.

He was nominated for chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in October and was confirmed Monday.

Allday also served as state chairman for President George Bush's bid for senator in 1964. He served on Bush's presidential race finance committee in 1980 and 1988.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams, who attended the Thursday dinner, noted that Allday is Midland's highest-ranking politician.

"He is a man of unquestionable vision," Williams said. "He's been a leader in many, many categories."

But Williams did not take long before unleashing his first strike on Allday.

"Do you know what's black, tan and hangs good from a lawyer?" he asked. "A Doberman."

Jeannette Bryant, executive director for the society, said she was pleased with the event's turnout.

"This is our one fund-raiser for the whole year," Ms. Bryant said. "That's our budget. It was a wonderful turnout."

She noted that the society uses the funds for its free programs, such as preschool vision screenings, glaucoma screenings for adults and eye safety and health programs.

Reagan's documents subpoenaed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Reagan is under orders to turn over documents by Wednesday to John Poindexter, who says his alleged crimes in the Iran-Contra affair were authorized by the president.

In an order issued Thursday, U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene said Poindexter "may serve upon former President Reagan and upon the archivist of the United States the subpoenas ... submitted to the court."

The archivist has possession of presidential records of the Reagan administration. Reagan took his diary with him when he left the White House.

Greene's ruling marks the first time in the Iran-Contra scandal that a judge has approved a subpoena for documents from Reagan.

Poindexter's lawyers say they want Reagan's diary as well as notes he took at key meetings with his national security adviser, but it is unclear what the subpoenas demand, since Greene did not disclose their contents.

The judge ruled last month that Poindexter, who was Reagan's national security adviser, is entitled to subpoena "specific, relevant documents" bearing on the criminal charges against him.

Reagan's lawyers are almost certain to challenge the subpoenas, but the Justice Department may be less likely to step into a legal battle.

Reagan, asked by reporters in Cincinnati about the subpoena, said, "Cases like that before the law, I don't comment."

The Justice Department will examine the Reagan subpoena in light of the 1974 Supreme Court ruling on the Watergate tapes, said a Justice Department source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We are in the process of reviewing" Greene's order "to determine what action we should take, if any," said Justice Department spokesman David Runkel.

During the Watergate scandal, the court ruled that President Nixon had to comply with a subpoena from the special prosecutor to produce tape recordings of 64 conversations.

Mosbacher says dismantling of U.S. tariffs to be slow

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union is nearing final passage of historic legislation establishing the right to travel, but U.S. trade barriers will give way only gradually.

Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher said Thursday the Soviet travel legislation will not lead to an immediate dismantling of tariffs erected by Congress 15 years ago in behalf of Soviet Jews.

He said the Soviets, at best, would get only a year-to-year waiver while restrictions on trade credits would remain in place.

"We'll review it to see if it is sufficient," Mosbacher said of the Soviet legislation that is expected to clear its final hurdle by December. "We can't prejudge that."

He did not spell out the U.S. conditions at a joint news conference with Konstantin F. Katushev, the Soviet minister of foreign economic affairs. But he said the process could take "a lot longer" than his initial guess of one to three months.

Besides, Mosbacher said, a new trade agreement with the Soviet Union would have to be negotiated first. The last accord was nullified by Moscow in 1975 in retaliation for the erection of tariff barriers to Soviet goods a year earlier.

Mosbacher and Katushev signed commercial agreements designed to boost U.S. investment in the Soviet Union and to launch negotiations on a new tax treaty. Also, they set up a working group to consider a new trade agreement "on a preliminary basis," Mosbacher said.

But, he added: "We want to make clear that we are not beginning negotiation of a trade agreement. This can come only after the Soviets codify their emigration legislation and after a waiver under the Jackson-Vanik amendment becomes possible."

The legislation imposed tariffs against Soviet goods that are not applied to the exports of most other countries. The restriction on trade credits, known as the Stevenson amendment, was adopted in a parallel move by Congress.

Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., who has pushed for wider Jewish emigration, said in a statement: "The Soviet Union is making real progress. But going all the way toward granting most-favored nation (MFN) status strikes me as premature.

"There are several issues that need to be cleaned up. There are 600 long-term 'refuseniks' who should be freed before we extend the carrot of MFN."

The National Conferece on Soviet Jewry said, meanwhile, in a statement: "We welcome the initiative by the Soviet government in bringing before the Supreme Soviet a draft law providing for freedom of entry and exit."

The conference lists 51,336 Jews as emigrating from the Soviet Union by the end of October. The exodus surpasses the all-time high of 51,320 reached in 1979.

Anticipating U.S. action to facilitate trade, Soviet Ambassador Yuri V. Dubinin told reporters at the Soviet embassy: "We are expecting some positive steps from the U.S. side." He called the Soviet legislation a breakthrough and evidence of "new thinking."

The legislation establishes the right of all Soviet citizens to travel abroad — permanently or on visits — and reduces or eliminates most restrictions in effect now.

"The Soviet Union measures its words with deeds," Dubinin said as he detailed some of the major provisions, and Moscow's expectation of a positive U.S. response.

Dubinin linked the legislation, which is bound to accelerate an already quickening pace of Jewish, ethnic German, Armenian and Pentecostal emigration, to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's effort to restructure the Soviet economy.

Two-way trade now amounts to about $3 billion. American grain sales to the Soviet Union account for about $2 billion.

Walesa says better to tickle Russian bear than pull moustache

WASHINGTON (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa sums up his philosophy in dealing with the Russians in a line: "There is no point in pulling the bear by its moustache."

Pausing to let a gentle wave of laughter subside among his American listeners, he then said with the finesse of a professional comedian, "It is better to tickle him."

His audience, a group of experts on the Soviet Bloc, erupted in laughter.

Walesa, whose walrus moustache, twinkling eyes and beak-like nose are familiar to American audiences, showed many faces during his triumphant visit to Washington this week, and in this city of politics, he cemented his place as one of the premier politicians of the 1980s.

Asked why he had turned down the offer to become the first Solidarity prime minister — an honor he bestowed on his adviser Tadeusz Mazowiecki, Walesa acknowledged: "I'd like to be prime minister. That way, wherever I went, they would play the national anthem.

"But to have a prime minister who was chairman of a trade union? That would be worse than communism," he said.

When Walesa addressed the AFL-CIO convention, he was the consummate trade union leader. He even taped a television advertisement for the labor federation, closing with the slogan, in English, "Union, yes."

When he spoke to Congress, he was a Polish statesman, invoking geopolitical imagery that Housing Secretary Jack Kemp likened to that of Winston Churchill, the fiery orator who led Britain during World War II.

Those speeches were carefully crafted by Walesa's team of advisers, and like all his remarks in Washington, delivered through an interpreter.

But a few times he threw away the text and showed off the cagey wit and graphic imagery that enabled him to lead the strike that forged Solidarity in 1980, steer the banned union through martial law and create the first non-communist government in the Soviet bloc.

"He's a real politician," said an admiring Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was President Carter's national security adviser. He shared the dais with Walesa at a conference sponsored by Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe, the U.S.-financed radio stations that have broadcast to the Soviet Bloc since the depths of the Cold War.

Addressing the experts on Eastern Europe, Walesa showed a far more relaxed and more nimble persona than while speaking before a joint meeting of Congress or at the AFL-CIO convention.

Walesa, a regular Radio Free Europe listener, was asked whether the station had influenced him.

"The degree cannot be measured. Would there be land and earth without the sun?" he said, to a very grateful audience.

Walesa, who in his darkest days received unswerving support from Polish-born Pope John Paul II, not only attended Mass every morning of his stay in Washington, he genuflected to the church in his public remarks.

Asked how he liked dealing with his former adversaries, the communists, Walesa responded: "Of course, I am a good Christian, as you know. Therefore, I forgive.

"And secondly, if there were no adversaries, I wouldn't exist, as well. Ladies and gentlemen, if I lived in a normal, civilized country, I ... would never get a Nobel Prize. So I have gained something because of other people's stupidity," he said, invoking laughter and then applause.

His wit can be acerbic. To convey his displeasure at the level of aid that Canada has offered Poland, Walesa said: "If things keep going at this rate, they will give us a beautiful necktie — but we can only wear it in the coffin."

Walesa was asked what he would say to Gorbachev if they met.

"Dzien dobry," a friendly Polish greeting which is very close to the Russian phrase for "good day," he said without missing a beat.

"I'd ask him what language we should speak," said Walesa, again drawing laughter.

"I do have a lot to say to Mr. Gorbachev," Walesa said, weaving between gravity and humor. "Such a conference would be prepared beforehand by specialists and we would only move our lips.

"I do understand the terrible problems that Gorbachev has," he said.

"He is like a juggler who has a hundred balls in the air, and somehow he is catching all of them," said Walesa, making a juggling motion.

"Fantastic," he laughed, using the English word.

"We shouldn't show off. We should solve problems," he said, leaving his audience to guess whether he was praising or criticizing the Soviet leader, a technique Walesa perfected in the days when a wrong word to could send him to jail.

Vietnam Memorial appropriate tribute

Another nail was driven into the coffin of that controversial war called Vietnam last weekend in Dallas. It wasn't the first, of course, and it won't be the last as this nation plods along the pathway to full understanding of why the war was conducted in the first place, why it was so divisive to Americans, and why its valiant fighting men returned home to insults and jeers instead of heartfelt thanks and cheers.

President George Bush, who dedicated the Texas Vietnam Veterans Memorial, told those present for the event that the 3,172 Texans who died in the rice paddies and the jungles did not die in vain. The principles and values that they were upholding have gained new life throughout the world.

"Look at the very heart of Europe, to Berlin" said the president, "and you see a great truth shining brighter with each passing day: The quest for freedom is stronger than steel, more permanent than concrete."

Among the names inscribed on the memorial in Dallas are those of individuals from cities such as Midland, Lamesa, Big Spring and hundreds of others. The fighting men of that war were the sons of Texas and the rest of the nation. That is the ultimate truth of Vietnam; it touched virtually every American family in some manner.

Over the years, since the final American troops were withdrawn on March 29, 1973, this nation has grappled with the problem of how to close the wounds left in the body of its national life by the war. It has wrestled with the lingering health problems of Vietnam veterans brought on by use of Agent Orange, the moral dilemma of the illegitimate children of American servicemen and Asian women, even the emotional difficulties suffered here by former prisoners of war.

Meanwhile, the POW-MIA issue, unresolved 16 years after the Americans left Vietnam, lingers like a ghost of the hated war.

It's doubtful whether Vietnam can be removed from the national conscience for years to come. Many will question whether it would be wise to attempt to remove it, arguing that it serves as a reminder to Americans never to abandon their fighting men and women again.

Memorials like the one dedicated in Dallas, the one recently completed in Big Spring and the one planned for Midland in 1990 give the nation an appropriate way of accomplishing both goals: Honoring the memory of the Americans who paid the ultimate price in the interest of defending liberty while at the same time reminding all Americans of their obligation to support those who serve.

JACK ANDERSON

Gorbachev not tolerant with drinkers

WASHINGTON — Soviet populist Boris Yeltsin would do well to watch his alcohol intake. The Soviet premier he opposes, Mikhail Gorbachev, has twice knocked competitors out by exposing them as heavy drinkers while he stayed sober.

Jack Anderson

Yeltsin was the target of a KGB smear campaign during his visit to the United States in September. The issue was dear to the heart of every Soviet — booze — and the story was that Yeltsin drank too much of it. A wild account of Yeltsin's escapades in the United States was planted by the KGB in an Italian newspaper and reprinted in the Soviet paper Pravda. Pravda later apologized, but the "party animal" image may linger around Yeltsin. Then recently, Yeltsin didn't help his cause when he turned up at a Soviet police station disheaveled and confused, claiming he was accosted by thugs. He later retracted his statement and apologized in front of the Supreme Soviet.

Central Intelligence Agency sources tell us that the alcoholic smear is an old standard for Gorbachev. Twice before — when he was a student and when he rose to be Soviet premier — Gorbachev cleverly stepped over his opponents by denigrating them for drunkenness.

The college story comes from Fridrikh Neznansky, who went to Moscow State University Law School with Gorbachev in 1950. He emigrated to the United States in 1978 and told this story in a classified Pentagon debriefing.

One night in 1950 at a bar, Gorbachev plied a friend named Nikitin with so much liquor that he became falling-down drunk. Nikitin was the leader of the local Komsomol, or Communist Youth League. During the night, Gorbachev stayed sober.

The next day, Gorbachev neatly dissected his friend at a Komsomol meeting for being an embarrassing drunk. Gorbachev was promptly hailed as the next leader of the Komsomol chapter. "That's when his path to the Kremlin began," Neznansky told U.S. officials.

As the young Komsomol leader, Gorbachev eliminated "unpatriotic cosmopolitans" — Stalin's code word for Jews — from the chapter with gusto, Neznansky remembered. The account paints a picture of a man on the way up.

Another contemporary, Lev Yudovich, who graduated two years before Gorbachev, confirms Neznansky's impression. Yudovich has taught at the U.S. Army's "Russian Institute" in West Germany. He said, according to another secret Pentagon report, that Gorbachev was anti-Semitic during the Stalin era, but it was less a heart-felt belief than a proper stance for an upwardly mobile communist.

He is somewhat kinder to Jews today, but has no more tolerance for drinkers than he did as a youth. In 1985, when Gorbachev was jockeying for the top spot as premier, he denounced his chief opponent, Grigory Romanov, as an alcoholic, according to secret CIA reports.

Romanov was forced to resign from the Politburo, and the CIA gives part of the credit to Gorbachev's allegations.

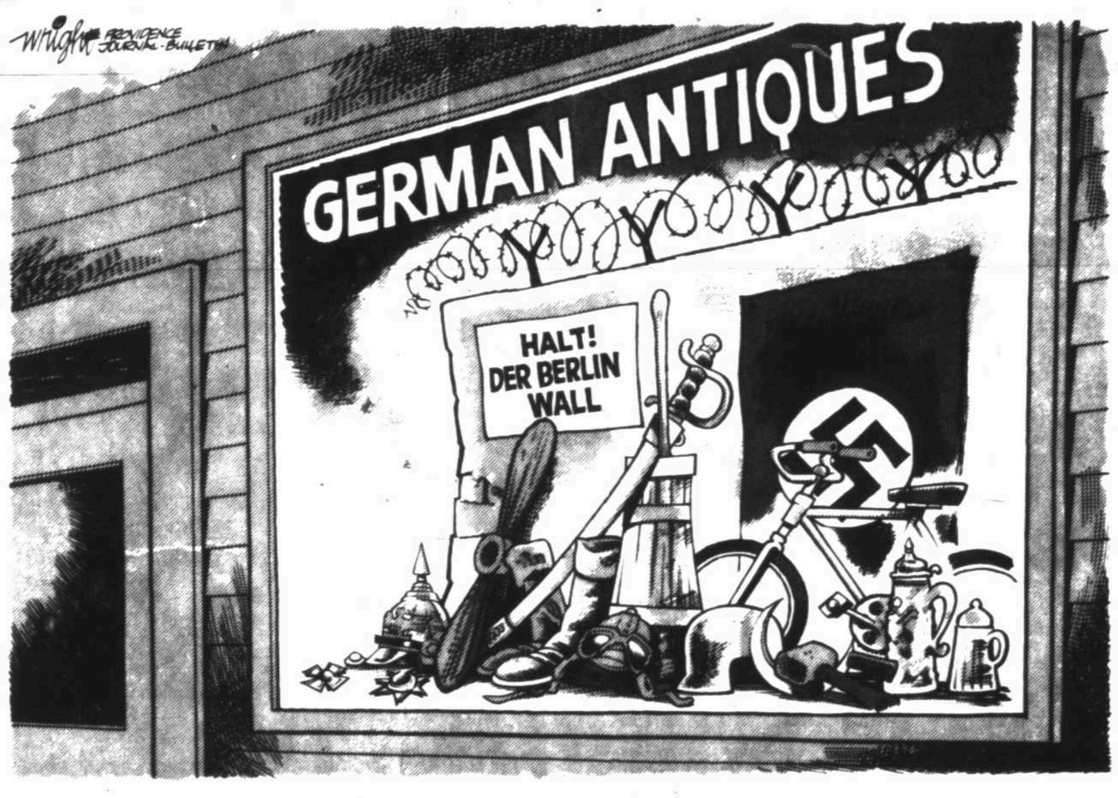

The CIA says Gorbachev is indeed the near-teetotaler that he makes himself out to be. He has earned the nicknames "Gen. Juice" and "Mineral Secretary."

The CIA got a transcript from a speech Gorbachev gave to a group of 30 prominent writers in 1986. It shows how serious he is about irradicating the problem of alcoholism in the Soviet Union.

He called drinking "the national tragedy," and said he had heard about the grumbling in the long lines at liquor stores when he cut back supplies. "All kinds of epithets reach us from the queues," he said. And he parrotted the song of the drinkers: "We'll keep drinking like before, we'll exhume Brezhnev once more."

Gorbachev vowed that he would not give up his temperance campaign. "I know that letters reach us from the queues with threats, but we will not give in to these sentiments. We won't leave this path."

Norville can't believe she's 'Today' co-host

Deborah Norville's new schedule:

— 1:30 a.m.: Alarm goes off. Pinch myself to make certain it's really me and I'm really co-host of the "Today" show with what's-his-face.

Lewis Grizzard

— 1:35 a.m.: Call Jane Pauley and wake her up. Say, "Hi, Jane. This is Deborah. How does it feel to be a has-been?"

— 1:40: Get into shower.

— 1:42: Get out of shower to answer phone. It's Jane Pauley saying, "Wake me up one more time like this, sister, and I'll call a press conference and say you had a boob job."

— 1:45: Put on make-up.

— 3:00: Finish make-up. Admire myself until 3:25.

— 3:30: Dress. I think I'll wear the blue dress.

— 3:35: Maybe I should wear the white blouse and green skirt.

— 3:45: Who cares what I wear? I look great in anything.

— 4:00: Call Jane Pauley back. "Say I had a boob job and I'll say you had a tummy tuck after the baby was born."

— 4:15: Limo arrives.

— 4:16: This is a limo? Where's the fresh flowers, manicurist and Perrier and crushed ice for breakfast?

— 4:17: Pout until driver either commits suicide or promises on his wife and children there will never be another such oversight.

— 4:45: Arrive at studio. Gumbel has slaves strewing rose petals in his path as he walks in. Make a note to demand same treatment, bigger slaves.

— 5:15: Retouch make-up. Remark to make-up artist, "You must really be good at what you do. Anybody who could make that toad Jane Pauley look half-way decent is a miracle worker."

— 5:30: Hair.

— 5:35: Hairdresser remarks, "Gosh, Deborah, here's a gray one."

— 5:36: Stop choking hairdresser. She's beginning to turn blue.

— 5:50: Be five minutes fashionably late for staff meeting.

— 6:00: Yawn a lot everytime Gumbel has something to say.

— 6:50: Make a nasty remark about Willard's jacket. Say, "Who's your tailor? Omar the tentmaker?"

— 7:00: Show opens. Look sexy, adorable, cute, as well as intelligent. Wink at the camera and say, "I may look sexy, adorable and cute, but I know the capital of Pennsylvania."

— 7:01: Say, OK, so I was wrong, but Pittsburgh is in Pennsylvania. I'm sure about that."

— 7:30: Interview best-selling author. Begin with probing question like, "So, tell us what your book is about."

— 8:05: Interview president of the American Chastity Association. Begin with probing question like, "So, were you chastized as a child?"

— 8:45: Intro Willard's last weather update. Begin with probing question like, "So, Willard, what do you have in store for us this weekend?"

— 8:59: Promo Monday's show. "On Monday, 'Do you need a tummy tuck?' With special guest, Jane Pauley."

— 9:01: So, nothing to this job.

CHARLEY REESE

Declining courage striking feature of West

Sir John Glubb, a British professional soldier who organized Jordan's Arab Legion, once wrote a monograph on the rise and fall of empires. A sure sign of an empire's imminent fall, he wrote, was the rise of feminism.

Charley Reese

What he was saying was that a nation with a lot of bold women and timid men is going to get knocked off the stage of history and the problem is not the bold women, it's the timid men.

That is something we should consider in this era of a kinder and gentler nation. Kindness and gentleness have usually been considered feminine characteristics when they predominate to the exclusion of aggressiveness and harshness when the situation warrants it.

You can see by the longevity of such despicable people as Libya's Qaddafi, Nicaragua's Ortega, Cuba's Castro and Panama's Noriega that kinder and gentler diplomacy, plus 75 cents, will get you a lukewarm cup of weak coffee.

A decline in courage may be the most striking feature that an outside observer notices in the West today. "Such a decline in courage is particularly noticeable among the ruling and intellectual elites." So said Russian author, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in his famous Harvard commencement speech. That speech, by the way, was so truthful and on target that Solzhenitsyn quickly became persona non grata among those ruling and intellectual elites.

In the hand-wringing, finger-pointing aftermath of the failed coup in Panama, it pays to remember the televised comments of one of Panama's leading dissidents to a Panamanian audience. "I told you the United States would not intervene. It is like a dog which barks but does not bite."

Or the comment of a Turkish colonel who said, "The trouble with being an ally of the United States is that you never know when it's going to decide to stab itself in the back."

Or the words of Mikhail Gorbachev's hero, Lenin: "The capitalists of the whole world will close their eyes...and will become blind as well as deaf-mutes. They will extend loans which will provide us with the equipment and technology we lack and will thus help rebuild our military industry which we need to launch subsequent victorious attacks against our suppliers. In other words, the capitalist nations will always work to prepare their own suicide."

Are we willing to spend the amount necessary to modernize our strategic forces and equip our conventional forces with the means necessary to accomplish the missions we've assigned them? No. Are we willing to overthrow twits like Noriega? No. Are we willing to deploy a strategic defense system at least equal to the Soviet's present system? No. Are we willing to take harsh measures against countries which harbor terrorists who murder our citizens by the hundreds? No.

That's feminine passivism. You can play the feminist game and talk about battered spouses, but the truth is the spouses battered are wives, not husbands. I've never heard of a battered husband. Have you? Sometimes a woman will be driven to shoot the sorry so-and-so, but all the battered spouse shelters I know of are full of women.

As a nation, we need the masculine characteristics of aggressiveness, assertiveness, and a willingness to use force wherever and whenever it is necessary. You don't wage peace, no matter what that bonehead cable mogul, Ted Turner, believes. You achieve peace by preparing to win a war. Conflict resolution and pseudo-group therapy techniques are fine when a few urban upper middle-class types want to play cuddle-up with each other but they don't work very well with the kinds of people who cut off heads and use them for soccer balls.

Remember. No people on earth are more peaceful and loving than Tibetans. There is now no Tibet and 80 percent fewer Tibetans.

MARIANNE MEANS

Bush shortsighted by backing Quayle for '92

WASHINGTON — President Bush's premature endorsement of Vice President Quayle as his running mate in 1992 takes the cake.

Marianne Means

After the president blurted out that Quayle would certainly be on the Republican ticket next time, he stressed that he really meant it. "It was the prudent and right thing to do," he said. "I said he's my choice. Period," Bush added testily when asked if Quayle might be just a momentary choice, open to change later.

This rush to give Quayle a free ride may be kind and gentle, but it isn't very good politics.

The president meant to end any speculation that Quayle, who remains low in the polls, might eventually be dumped. But Bush's compulsion to publicly commit himself to Quayle with more than three years of his term left to go is short-sighted.

It abruptly eliminated one of the few puzzles with which presidents can keep the public amused and the most ambitious members of their Cabinet in line.

By inference, the president also wiped out speculation about his own plans for 1992. He seemed to realize belatedly that he'd blown a psychological advantage. Reporters laughed when he feebly noted, "I'm not saying whether I'm running right now."

His unqualified embrace of Quayle cannot have thrilled Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp, who has thrown himself energetically into his new role and been viewed by conservatives as a potential Quayle substitute. Ditto drug czar William Bennett, whose difficult, crucial task has given him instant national identification.

And the president unnecessarily complicated his own flexibilty to judge Quayle's performance later and tactfully make a replacement if political necessity warrants.

There is no political imperative that he stick with his vice president a second time around, if Quayle stumbles or someone else could be more help in winning the election. Yet now he's put himself in the position of reneging on a promise if he changes his mind.

Furthermore, Quayle is a long way from proving himself the wave of the future that Bush originally hoped he would be.

He blindly clings, for instance, to the old conservative communist-bashing rhetoric that is out of step with reality.

Quayle warned recently that the Soviet Union remains expansionist and contended that Mikhail Gorbachev is increasing his military expenditures, not reducing them as he had promised. A few days later, the Berlin Wall crumbled with Soviet approval and U.S. government analysts confirmed that overall Soviet defense spending in real terms had indeed declined last year.

He is also missing the beat on the abortion issue. After several anti-abortion GOP candidates were defeated at the polls last week, he called on the Republican party not to soften its all-out opposition to abortion. So many officials disagree with him, however, that he canceled plans to offer further stand-pat advice in his speech at the Republican Governors Conference.

ITEM: The bright side of two more black barrier-busting firsts is that white voters are increasingly willing to ignore color in picking political leaders.

The down side is that the advance of one black politician is automatically viewed as a blow to another, as though there is no room for competing blacks at the top.

The election of David Dinkins to be the first black mayor of New York City and L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia to be the first black governor in the nation in the birthplace of the Confederacy, no less, represent a watershed in American politics. But many Democrats interpret their victory as crippling Jesse Jackson, the nation's best-known black politician.

This sounds like wishful thinking, since Democratic leaders yearn for the day when Jackson is supplanted by a black whose message is more mainstream and unthreatening to whites. They blame Jackson's two fire-breathing presidential campaigns at least partly for the party's failure to win the White House in recent years.

They speak enough truth, however, to make it virtually certain Jackson will run for mayor of the District of Columbia next year.

Jackson insists he will not run against controversial incumbent Mayor Marion Barry, a longtime Jackson supporter. And Barry still says he will seek another term. But a convicted drug dealer recently testified that he sold drugs to Barry and few Washingtonians believe Barry can hang on much longer.

Dinkins and Wilder only heighten Jackson's longtime need for a national forum to maintain his visibility and popularity. If he is to reach out to white voters, as Dinkins and Wilder have, Jackson must also counter criticism that he is just an emotional windbag. He has never won an election nor held responsible office, peculiar omissions that give white voters genuine pause.

Jackson's star is supposed to be fading because he is too militant to build coalitions with whites. But this assumes that he is incapable of moving toward the middle from his original base, as do white politicians interested in expanding their horizons. City hall in the nation's capital offers him an excellent opportunity to show whether he can, and will, do that.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Nov. 17, the 321st day of 1989. There are 44 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Nov. 17th, 1889, the American West became more accessible as the Union Pacific Railroad began direct, daily service between Chicago and Portland, Ore., as well as Chicago and San Francisco.

On this date:

In 1558, Elizabeth I ascended the English throne upon the death of Queen Mary.

In 1800, Congress held its first session in Washington in the partly completed Capitol building.

In 1869, the Suez Canal opened in Egypt, linking the Mediterranean and the Red seas.

In 1917, sculptor August Rodin died in Meudon, France.

In 1925, actor Rock Hudson was born in Winnetka, Ill.

In 1934, Lyndon Baines Johnson married Claudia Alta Taylor, better known as "Lady Bird."

In 1948, Britain's House of Commons voted to nationalize the country's steel industry.

In 1962, Dulles International Airport, outside Washington, D.C., was dedicated by President Kennedy.

In 1968, NBC outraged football fans by cutting away from the final minutes of a New York Jets-Oakland Raiders game to begin a TV adaptation of "Heidi" on schedule.

In 1970, the Soviet Union landed an unmanned, remote-controlled vehicle on the moon, the Lunokhod One.

Clergy urges halt of military aid to El Salvador

Associated Press

U.S. clergy decried the murder of six Jesuit priests in El Salvador as an unspeakable atrocity, with the National Council of Churches urging Congress to halt delivery of military aid to El Salvador.

"We fear for the lives of our brothers," said the Rev. Joseph Berra, a fellow member of the Roman Catholic order who knew the victims and worked in San Salvador before moving to Texas in August.

The Bush administration, readying a new shipment of arms to confront a rebel offensive, said it will press for an investigation, and congressmen are threatening cuts in military aid unless the murderers are brought to justice.

"If the government does not bring to justice those responsible, we would have no choice but to try to severely limit Salvadoran aid next year," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee with jurisdiction over foreign aid.

William Walker, U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, called the slayings "a barbaric act," and compared them to the 1980 killings of three nuns and a laywoman. Five former Salvadoran national guardsmen were convicted of those killings.

"It is obviously going to have a negative impact on the government of El Salvador," Walker said.

The Salvadoran government denied responsibility and condemned the slayings as "savage and irrational." President Alfredo Cristiani said he had ordered an investigation.

In Austin, Texas, Berra held a news conference with two other Jesuits who also worked in San Salvador before coming to the University of Texas.

The Rev. Doug Marcouiller said fellow Jesuits in El Salvador told him 30 armed, uniformed men carried out the killings.

"Their bodies were riddled with bullets, and their heads had been smashed," he said. "This while an attachment of 80 soldiers was encamped about 100 yards away."

Marcouiller said the Jesuits had been denounced "as sources of subversion" on Salvadoran radio and subjected to threats. The Jesuits' house was bombed, but no one was killed.

The extreme right, now in power, has for more than a decade accused local Jesuits and their university of fostering subversive ideology.

The National Council of Churches' governing board, holding its semiannual meeting in Pittsburgh, unanimously approved a resolution urging the Bush administration to halt military aid to El Salvador and do everything possible to end the 10-year-old civil war there.

"We certainly hope the action we have taken will help prevent further atrocities happening there," said the Rev. Syngman Rhee, installed Thursday night as the council's president-elect.

The resolution also calls on El Salvador's government and rebel forces to protect civilians and cooperate with humanitarian agencies, and asks that churches and religious groups have unrestricted access to endangered civilians.

The council, America's largest ecumenical body comprising 32 denominations with a combined membership of 42 million Christians, including most major Protestant denominations, also advised members to be ready to provide emergency aid to churches in El Salvador.

Propane gas fire still burns

JASPER, Mo. (AP) — A propane gas fire that forced evacuation of about half the residents of this southwestern Missouri community Thursday night was still shooting flames high into the air today as experts made plans for snuffing it out.

"I would say the flames are 100 to 150 feet in the air," said Charlotte Coates, a dispatcher with Jasper emergency services. "You can see it from all over. It's like in the movies."

She estimated that about 500 residents of Jasper, a community of about 1,100, had been evacuated. She said there was a possibility that more people might have to leave their homes.

No injuries had been reported.

The fire began about 10:20 a.m. Thursday at the Williams Pipe Line Co.'s Carthage terminal, about two miles south of Jasper.

The fire was feeding on a 17-acre underground storage cavern, burning propane at the rate of 300 gallons an hour, said Ray Pullen, an official from Williams headquarters in Des Moines. He said a barrel contains 42 gallons.

An attempt was made late in the afternoon to stop the fire by injecting 2,000 gallons of water into the cavern, but the gas erupted again to shoot flames 200 feet into the sky. Officials then decided to order the evacuation and let the fire burn through the night until gas and oil fire control experts from Texas could reach the scene and help plan the next step.

Child care bill postponed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic congressional leaders are postponing sending President Bush a child care bill because they couldn't resolve a dispute among members of their own party on how to provide the new aid.

"The child care legislation will be a priority matter early in the next session," House Speaker Thomas S. Foley told reporters Thursday. "I am absolutely confident that a historic child care bill will be passed, sent to the president and signed into law in this Congress."

House and Senate negotiators from the relevant education committees reached agreement last week on a version of the bill that would have increased direct subsidies through new programs by $1.2 billion in fiscal 1990.

In response, Foley had put the bill on a fast track in the hope of getting a compromise package approved by both the House and Senate and to Bush's desk before Congress adjourns for the year next week.

But Reps. Thomas J. Downey, D-N.Y., and George Miller, D-Calif., authors of a competing measure with less money but better able to withstand future whims of deficit-conscious lawmakers, said they still intended to press for their own measure if the bill came to a floor vote.

Thousands walk bridge

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge was to reopen to cars tonight at midnight after a celebration of the quick repair job on the span that was damaged in the Oct. 17 earthquake.

Singer Tony Bennett belted out "I Left My Heart in San Francisco" at the close of an open party on the bridge Thursday, but changed the line about "coming home to you, San Francisco," to make it "Oakland-San Francisco."

The ceremony featured speeches by Gov. Deukmejian, San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos and Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson, lauding the repair job on the 53-year-old bridge, which took exactly one month.

Deukmejian called the bridge's reopening "the first major event of the rebuilding process" for Northern California, which was struck by a 7.1 magnitude quake that killed 66 people and caused $7 billion in damage.

Nominee draws fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats say they have the votes to defeat President Bush's controversial nominee for a top natural resources job and will prove it if Bush doesn't withdraw the nomination.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said Thursday that he would seek a vote before Congress recesses for the year unless Bush acts.

Leahy, who has led the opposition to James E. Cason, said he would like withdrawal or a promise that Bush would not appoint Cason during the recess.

Malta will use summit to promote tourism

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — This Mediterranean island that held back the Turks in an epic 16th-century siege and withstood heavy bombing by the Germans and Italians in World War II is now bracing for an invasion by today's superpowers.

Officials making land arrangements for the Dec. 2-3 offshore summit of President Bush and Mikhail S. Gorbachev are expecting an army of some 2,000 people between delegations and journalists — or about three times the size of the Maltese armed forces.

For an island more accustomed to putting on horse-and-armor medieval costume parties for British and West German tourists than catering to the security and communication needs of such a gathering, the summit came as a shock.

"When I heard the news I thought the moon had fallen from the sky," said Arthur L. Pace, the government's director of information.

But Malta, which had a 2,000-year history of foreign domination until it achieved independence from Britain in 1964, sees the summit as an opportunity to make its contribuition to world peace as well as promote its tourist facilities and ambitions to become an offshore banking center.

And the summit is seen as a dry run for the first visit by Pope John Paul II to the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic island in May.

With history the stuff of Malta and politics considered the national pastime, summit followers will get a dose of both. The opposition party is promising a protest against nuclear-armed warships.

As the site of offices of the U.S. and Soviet delegations and the international press center, organizers have chosen the Mediterranean Conference Center, a monumental complex built as a hospital by the Knights of Malta in 1574.

It was the knights, mobilized to defend Christian Europe, who held onto the island during the long siege by the Ottoman Turks in 1565. Malta came under British rule in 1800.

The complex, with its vaulted ceilings and religious reliefs, suffered heavy bombing damage in World War II, when King George VI of Britain awarded the population the George Cross for bravery and Winston Churchill referred to Malta as the "unsinkable aircraft carrier."

The building was completely restored and repaired again after a 1987 fire in its main auditorium. Maltese organizers hope to keep the onshore activities within the confines of the center while the leaders meet aboard ships.

There has been no official confirmation, but Maltese expect the warships to be anchored in Marsaxlokk Bay, within sight of fishing villages on the island's eastern end.

Last year, at the time of a visit by the British aircraft carrier Ark Royal, Parliament adopted a resolution saying Malta expects that visiting ships won't be carrying nuclear weapons.

The conservative government of Prime Minister Edward Fenech Adami hopes the Soviets and Americans will take heed. But the leftist opposition plans a demonstration if assurances are lacking.

"Bush and Gorbachev are absolutely welcome, they will be welcomed by all Maltese people," said Joseph Brincat, deputy leader of the Malta Labor Party, adding "Is it necessary to have a nuclear warship in Grand Harbor?"

Diplomats say the island's improved ties with Washington and loosened links with Libya, its central location in the Mediterranean and its official policy of neutrality and nonalignment apparently played a role in the decision to hold the summit off Malta.

One of Fenech Adami's first official acts was to scrap part of a 1984 friendship treaty with Libya calling for exchange of military and security information. It was under this pact that Malta gave advance warning to Libya of the U.S. air raids on Tripoli and Benghazi in April 1986.

Libyan officials are due here in coming days to renegotiate the pact and the military clause is expected to be formally dropped.

Although trade with Libya is flourishing, officials stress the government is trying to change the direction of Maltese foreign policy from 16 years of Socialist rule. Says Austin Gatt, secretary general of the Nationalist Party:

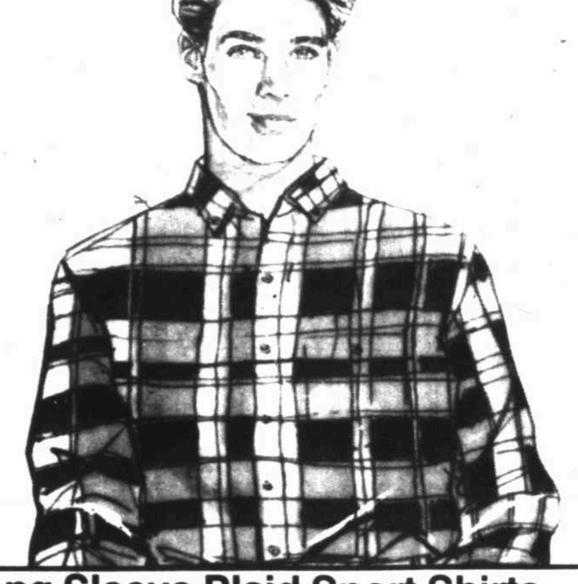

"We want friendly relations with everyone (and) look to the Western world as a natural ally."

Organizers also believe the visit of Bush's brother, William, to September ceremonies marking the 25th anniversary of Maltese independence played a key role in the choice of Malta.

Hobby's workers' comp bill goes to Senate

Insurance rates go up 22 percent

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A Senate panel Thursday evening advanced Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's worker compensation reform package to the full Senate, after state insurance regulators approved a 22 percent increase in insurance rates for 1990.

The new rates, which the State Board of Insurance approved Tuesday morning, would raise an estimated $600 million in insurance premiums from businesses, effective as soon as the staff can implement them.

The three board members expressed hope that legislative efforts to reform the $4.4 billion system of compensating injured workers would allow the board to reconsider rates next spring.

But board Chairman Paul Wrotenbery warned that, even with a legislative overhaul in the current special session, businesses should not expect substantial premium reductions for at least another year, since the rates are based on the past year's experience.

Roy Wood, a spokesman for the insurance industry, which requested a 34.9 percent increase, said he was disappointed in the board's decision. He said the 300 companies that write compensation insurance in Texas will reconsider their position.

Ron Bordelon, who represented insurance consumers as deputy public counsel, said his office's actuaries believed the insurance companies would make a profit with a 17.5 percent increase.

"Whether an insurer decides they can make more money in another state or not is irrelevant to whether or not this rate is adequate," Bordelon said.

The board staff had recommended a 13.5 percent increase.

Board member Richard Reynolds said the board had little choice but to raise the rates, citing rising medical costs as a major factor in his rate decision. He suggested that lawmakers rein in those costs as well as the costs of litigation.

Board member Jo Ann Howard pleaded for legislative reform of the "baroque workers compensation system" so it could be explained to an employer without the help of actuaries.

Rick Gentry, a spokesman for Texas insurance companies, said dramatic changes are required to stabilize the system, which he said lost $585 million in the past year.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said the board action underscores the crisis in a system that has seen rate increases totaling 149 percent over four years.

"For five consecutive years, Texas businesses have been subjected to double-digit increases in their workers compensation insurance rates," he said. "The system is begging for change and the time has come for all parties involved in reform to put their self-serving interests aside."

Lewis, a businessman, has endorsed Hobby's plan, except for Hobby's provision for mandatory insurance coverage. Lewis said the reforms must include an increased emphasis on workplace safety, assurances that an injured worker will receive fair benefits within a reasonable amount of time, the means to reduce soaring litigation costs and predictable premiums for businesses.

State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, gives testimony during Thursday's Senate Economic Development committee, which was considering workers' comp proposals. Sen. Cyndi Krier, R-San Antonio, and Sen. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, look over Montford's shoulder during the hearing.

Hobby wrote the business-oriented bills in an effort to resolve the impasse between the House and the Senate in two previous sessions.

Supporters of rival bills characterized the Economic Development Committee hearing Tuesday evening as an effort to railroad Hobby's bills, but the committee heard three and one-half hours of testimony before it moved Hobby's bills to the full Senate on votes of 9-1 for the main bill and 10-0 for a separate insurance reform bill.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, the lead Senate sponsor of Hobby's package, said he believed the two bills, which are designed to stabilize rates instead of bringing about reductions, are the best hope to relieve the workers compensation crisis.

An actuary hired by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, said their bill, which concentrates on tougher safety regulations and insurance reform, would result in an overall cost savings of 13.7 percent, despite an 11 percent increase in benefits to injured workers.

The cost savings would come from medical cost controls, reductions in the workplace accident rate to the national average and insurance reform, said Donald Bashline, a consulting actuary from Massachusetts.

Hobby said the Caperton-Parker bill would increase rates by 120 to 205 percent, although his actuary did not consider the effects of the safety regulations.

In the Senate debate, expected Monday, Parker said he believes the votes will be close on amendments to change the schedule for impairment payments and safety provisions. Several other senators indicated they also would try to amend the bills.

Montford said he would consider amendments on their merits. "I'm not engaged in holy matrimony with this bill, but I believe in it," he said.

Clements looking for new chairman of insurance board

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says he is searching for a new state insurance board chairman and may make a selection before the March 1 deadline set by outgoing chairman Paul Wrotenbery.

Wrotenbery announced his decision to quit Monday, saying he had lost faith in the state's current system for regulating the insurance industry.

"We will move as quickly as is prudent," to replace Wrotenbery, Clements told reporters Thursday.

Wrotenbery took over as chairman six months ago. He said he will urge the Legislature to enact management reforms that strengthen the powers of the insurance board chairman and commissioner, and streamline the rate setting procedures at the board.

Americans don't know their place, or anyone else's, test results show

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Could you locate Brunei on a map of the world?

If not, you are in good company — most other Americans probably couldn't find it, either.

To combat geographic ignorance, the National Geographic Society and the U.S. Congress have for the third year in a row designated this National Geography Awareness Week.

"We at the Geographic feel it is very important for all Americans to know and understand geography," Society spokesperson Jane Tully said in an interview Thursday.

A 1988 international test of geographic knowledge sponsored by the society showed Americans scoring in the bottom third of the nine countries participating. Americans aged 18 to 24 came in last in their age group behind Sweden, West Germany, Japan, France, Canada, the United Kingdom, Italy and Mexico, according to the survey.

Soviet 18- to 24-year-olds also scored better than their American counterparts in a survey this year.

"We were the only country in which the younger people surveyed knew less than the older people," Ms. Tully said. This indicates a serious deficiency in geography education, she said.

Despite heavy U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf and Central America, 75 percent of Americans surveyed could not find the gulf on a world map, and 45 percent could not find Central America. Only about one-third located Vietnam.

Fewer than half were able to identify the United Kingdom, France, South Africa and Japan. One in seven Americans could not locate their own country.

"I think it is a situation in which if we don't know geography, we won't be able to compete in foreign markets," Ms. Tully said. "In order for our country to continue to be a major player in world politics, we just have to know our geography."

In observance of Geography Awareness Week, geography classes in schools throughout Midland have been working on special projects.

At Lee High School, Teresa Kerley's geography students presented projects on topics ranging from earthquakes and population growth to weather patterns and the flow of drugs from South America.

Ms. Kerley said there is more to geography than learning the names of state capitals.

"Geography is the study of the physical environment of the earth and how man relates to that physical environment," she said. It includes analysis of the greenhouse effect, global warming, deforestation, pollution and a host of other environmental concerns, she said.

Ms. Kerley said a knowledge of geography is more important now than any other time in history.

"The world is growing smaller," she said. "All of our actions are interrelated. What happens in a remote area of the world has a direct effect on us, whereas 100 years ago it didn't."

At Midland High School, geography teacher John Ford's classes concentrated on environmental themes.

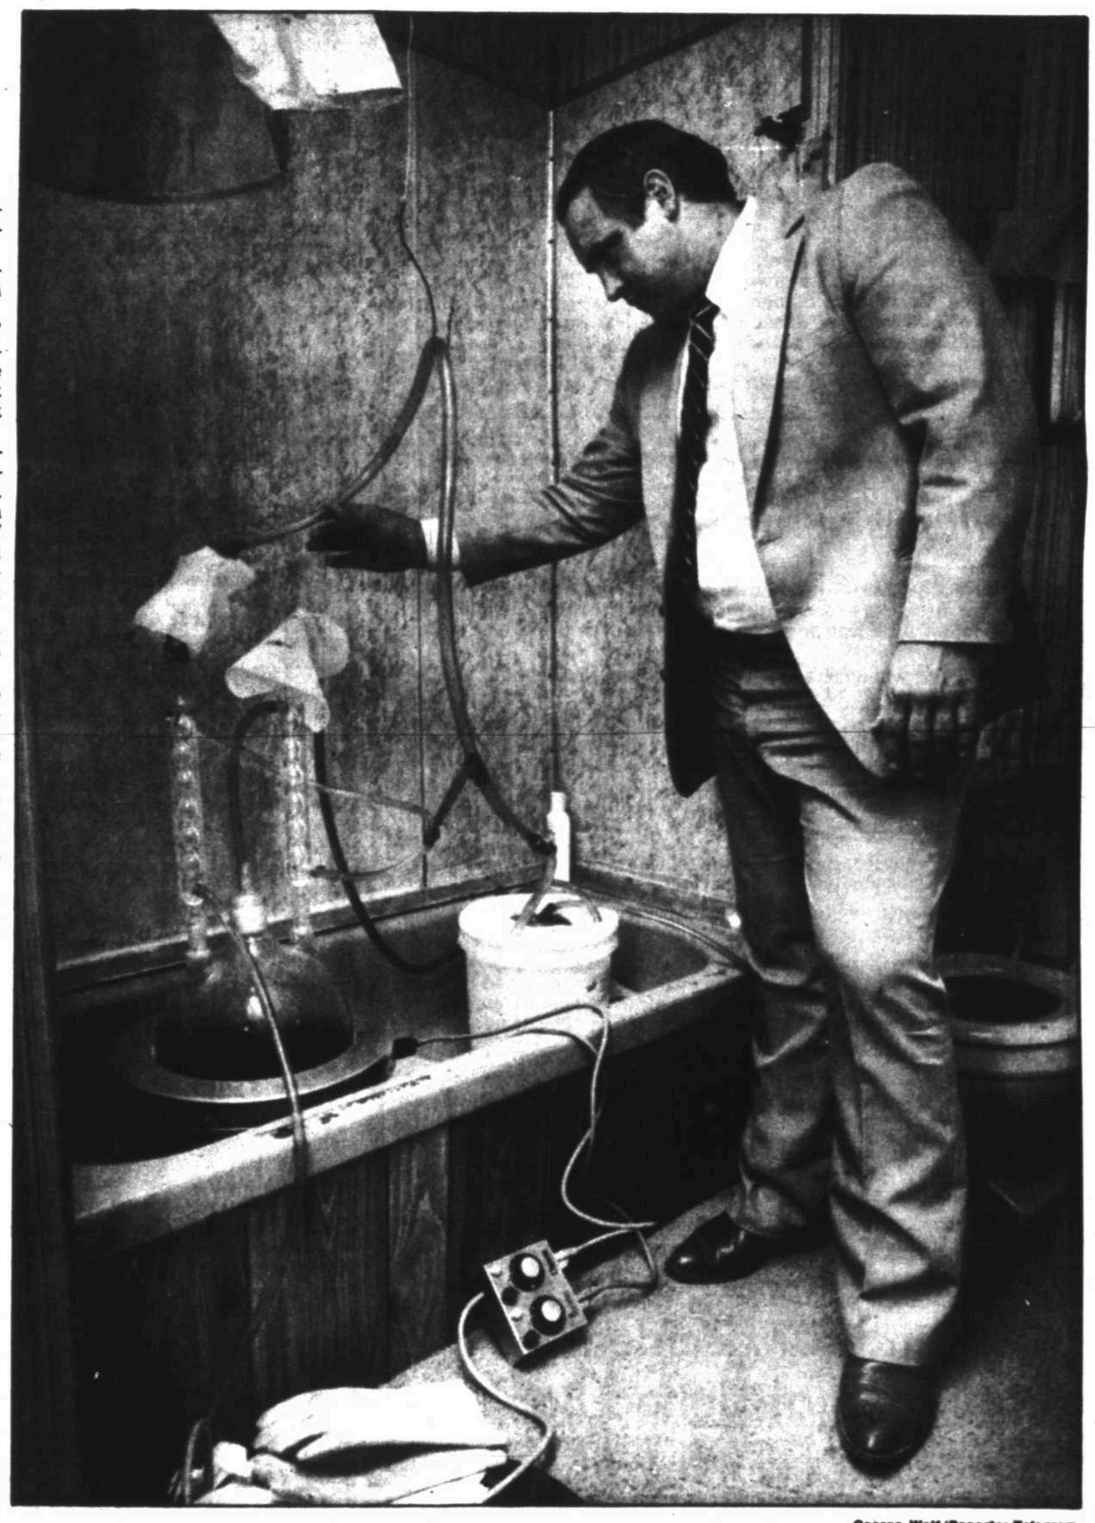

His students did projects which emphasized the local application of geographic principles. Students paid visits to area landfills, water treatment plants and sewage processing facilities.

He said he was encouraged by the renewed interest in geography education in this country.

"I think a lot of the studies as to geographic illiteracy scared educators," he said. But educators are not the only ones who need to improve their geographic knowledge, he said.

"To be competitive in a global marketplace, you have to have a knowledge of other cultures in which you want to do business," he said.

"It's not that the Japanese are better businessmen — they're better geographers in conducting their business."

Seized lab

Tom Finley, Permian Basin Drug Task Force commander, inspects equipment of a suspected "speed lab." The apparatus was seized Thursday in a raid on the Odessa trailer home of Joe Townson, 37. Finley said enough liquid to make one to two pounds of methamphetamine with a street value of at least $120,000 was seized in the raid. Townson was arrested on charges of aggravated manufacture of methamphetamine.

Three local crack dealers sentenced

From Staff Reports

Three Midlanders who were arrested Aug. 31 in a roundup of crack cocaine dealers were sentenced Thursday to a total of more than 30 years in prison by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Bunton sentenced Robert Marshall, 37, to 210 months in prison, Evelynn King, 32, to 108 months and Ramona Carol Davis, 24, to 51 months.

The three defendants, who earlier had pleaded guilty to dealing in crack, were arrested following a three-month investigation by Midland police and by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

Testimony in a Sept. 7 bond hearing before U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes indicated that Marshall previously had been convicted of armed robbery, narcotics dealing, and forgery.

Abilene's tidy reputation picking up city's image

ABILENE (AP) — The people at Zero Population Growth say pure, clean Abilene is the tidiest city they've ever seen.

The national environmental organization says Abilene; Roanoke, Va.; and Winston-Salem, N.C., have the best environments among 192 U.S. cities with populations of 100,000 or more.

Houston, on the other hand, ranked among the worst.

The environmental rankings were part of an overall study of how U.S. cities cope with their problems. The environmental portion of the study focused on waste management, according to the November-December issue of Garbage Magazine.

"If environmental factors are important to people, then Abilene is one of the best places to live," said Dianne Sherman, communications director for Washington-based Zero Population Growth.

"People would be wise to look at the study when they are looking at places to move," she said. "Abilene should feel proud of itself and the way it handles its urban population and its environment."

Abilene residents throw out about 150,000 tons of trash annually, said Drew Sleeper, superintendent of refuse collection.

"We are totally automated, with state-of-the-art equipment in our residential and commercial trash collection," he said.

The four criteria used for the study were quality of water and air, hazardous waste management and sewage system management.

The top five urban areas for environmental quality were Abilene; Roanoke, Va.; Winston-Salem, N.C.; Berkeley, Calif.; and Billings, Mont.

The bottom five, starting with the worst, were Phoenix; Salt Lake City; Houston; Jersey City, N.J.; and Philadelphia.

Abilene officials said they were pleased, but not surprised, with the ranking.

"The environment is an important factor in our job," said Bob Whitehead, director of the city's public works department. "We're concerned about the environment, and we work to improve the quality of waste water and storm water."

Lubbock man, associate charged with defrauding crop agency

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A Texan and his associate were indicted Thursday for allegedly defrauding the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. by inflating the amount of premiums and losses they handled for the government agency.

Paul Thompson Buchanan Jr., 44, of Lubbock, Texas, was accused of six criminal charges — conspiracy, wire fraud, two counts of theft and two counts of making false statements.

Dennis Welliver, 40, of Lexington, Ky., was accused of 14 criminal charges — conspiracy, three counts of wire fraud, three counts of mail fraud, three counts of theft of government money, and four counts of making false statements to a government agency.

Welliver and Buchanan will be ordered to appear for arraignment Dec. 12 before U.S. Magistrate David Piester in Lincoln, U.S. Attorney Ron Lahners said.

Welliver is owner of Omaha All Risk Insurance Services of Lexington, and Buchanan is branch manager of the company in Lubbock, Lahners said.

The company entered into a reinsurance agreement with the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. to sell and service multiple-peril crop insurance, Lahners said.

Under the agreement, FCIC reimbursed Omaha All Risk a percentage of premiums written for expenses incurred by the company and also reimbursed Omaha All Risk for payments made to farmers claiming losses, the prosecutor said.

Lahners said that between November 1984 and last June, Welliver operated a series of schemes to defraud FCIC and conspired with Buchanan to carry out some of them.

As a result, FCIC made premature payments of $2.23 million to Omaha All Risk, causing an actual loss of $61,177 to the government, Lahners said.

The grand jury also said that in February or March 1987 Welliver developed a computer program that would permit Omaha All Risk and its branches to submit 1986 policy information as 1987 policy information and receive reimbursement before the 1987 information actually was ready.

Welliver involved Buchanan in that scheme, and Buchanan sent false information to the company's Lexington office, the grand jury said.

In other instances, Welliver sent inflated figures to FCIC, the grand jury said. Between March 17 and April 14, 1988, he reported insurance sales and losses paid that were twice and, in some cases, triple the actual amount, according to the indictment.

Lahners said U.S. Agriculture Department investigators used computer programs to analyze information from private insurance companies to find the irregularities.

The theft charges each carry a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine; the fraud and conspiracy charges each carry a maximum of five years in prison and a $250,000 fine; the false statement charges carry a maximum of two years and a $250,000 fine.

DEATHS

Manuel Villasenor

Services for Manuel Villasenor are set for 1 p.m. Saturday at Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Paul Garcia, pastor of Emmanuel Baptist Church, officiating, assisted by the Rev. Pedro Estrada. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Villasenor

He died Wednesday at a local hospital.

Villasenor was born May 11, 1915, in Mexico City where he grew up. He came to the United States in 1937. He married Ofelia Rodriguez in Detroit on May 22, 1937.

The couple moved to Midland in 1960. He worked with Ben Olive Plumbing until his retirement in 1979.

He was a member of Emmanuel Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Efrain Villasenor and Javier Villasenor; six daughters, Grace Ramos, Enedina Martinez, Maria Bara, Imelda Costilla, Nancy Vina and Ofelia Villasenor, all of Midland; five brothers and two sisters in Mexico; 22 grandchildren; six great-grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

Horace L. Berry

Services for Horace L. Berry of Midland were to be at 1 p.m. today in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Zane Haun and Jerry Rotan officiating. Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Berry was born on Jan. 25, 1922, in Northfield to Johnny James and Edith Booth Berry. He was a World War II U.S. Army veteran.

He was married to Viola Coy Looper on Jan. 5, 1949, in Amarillo.

Berry was a homebuilder in Amarillo before he moved to Midland in 1958. He was a real estate broker for 27 years and a member of the local, state and national boards of Realtors and served two terms as a director of the Midland Board of Realtors.

He was the area management broker for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and was a Federal Housing Administration-approved appraiser and home inspector for several years. He also worked with the Midland Housing Authority to rehabilitate homes for the low-income elderly.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Gary H. Berry of Midland; two brothers, Don Berry and Stanley Berry, both of Lubbock; four grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers were to be Burleigh Andrews, Brent Berry, Ronnie Berry, Lynn Berry, Perry Taylor and Forrest Taylor.

Honorary pallbearers were to be Weldon Taylor, Don Harvey, Roy Rotan, Roger Crabtree, Charles Ferguson, Woody Woods, Joe Homola and John Kramer.

Lindell Burkett

KERMIT — Funeral services for Lindell Burkett, 68, of Jal, N.M., were to be at 10 a.m. (MST) today at the First Baptist Church in Jal with the Rev. Jim Green officiating. Burial was to follow in Jal Cooper Cemetery under the direction of Cooper Funeral Home.

Mrs. Burkett died Wednesday at her residence.

She was born May 4, 1921, in Bowie County and was a housewife, a member of the First Baptist Church of Jal, and a 36-year resident of Jal.

She was preceded in death by her husband Charlie Burkett in September 1973.

Survivors include three sons, David Burkett of Midland and Bobby Burkett and Morris Burkett, both of Jal; a daughter, Dorothy Cozens of Odessa; a brother, Willard Wooley of Texarkana; two sisters, Inez Ainsworth of Texarkana and Magdoline Hodgson of Austin; 8 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Bobby Lee Scott

CRANE — Funeral services for Bobby Lee Scott, 38, of Dallas, are set for 2 p.m. today at the Richard W. Box Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Jim Hester officiating. Burial will follow in the Crane County Cemetery under the direction of the Richard W. Box Funeral Home.

He died Tuesday at his Dallas home.

He was born May 24, 1951, in San Angelo and graduated from Crane High School in 1969. He served in the Air Force from 1971 until 1980. He was a member of the First United Methodist Church and working as an electronics technician for Tidel Systems Inc. in Dallas at the time of his death.

He is survived by his mother, Norma Scott of Midland; one daughter, Jancy Scott of Midland; and one sister, Sandra Matthews of Midland.

Edgar Carl Bohling

Funeral services for Edgar Carl Bohling are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

His body was found Thursday on a ranch west of Midland.

Chance Gaona

Funeral services for Chance Gaona of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Thursday at a local hospital.

M.D. Anderson to study cancer risk of pipelines

HOUSTON (AP) — The University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center today announced the start of a $2.8 million five-year cancer risk reduction study that involves more than 18,000 workers at gas pipeline and electric power companies in 19 states.

"Our goal is to evaluate the effectiveness of a comprehensive health promotion and cancer prevention program in an effort to modify the dietary and tobacco use habits of primarily male, blue-collar field workers employed in the energy transmission industry," Dr. Michael P. Eriksen, director of behavioral research at the cancer center, said.

"We are excited about the challenge of working with this population, which has been difficult to reach with traditional health promotion messages."

The 18,095 workers are employed at 36 natural gas pipeline work sites and 37 rural electric cooperatives. The pipeline firms include Houston-based Enron Corp., The Coastal Corp., Transco Energy Co., and Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. The rural electric cooperatives include some members of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

Smoking and nutrition habits are to be the focus of the study, officials said.

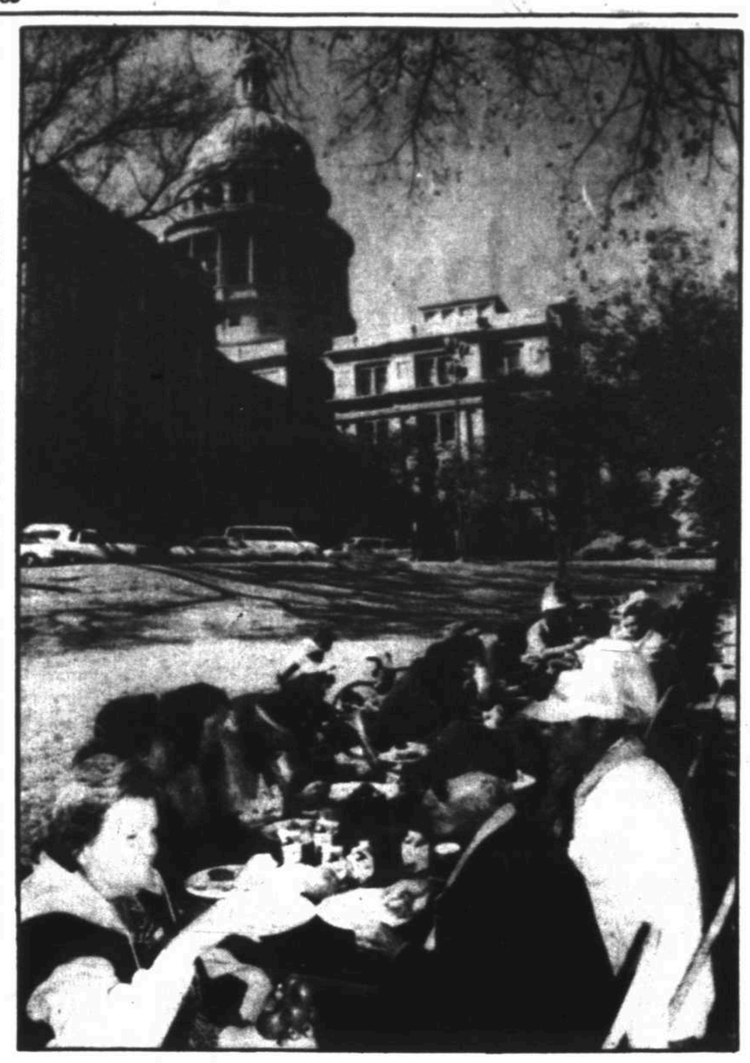

Eriksen said a preliminary study of Enron workers showed field workers are more likely to be cigarette smokers than office workers and thus have a higher risk of cancer.

The first year of the study will include surveys to gather information about current smoking and eating habits, he said.

"We believe that the intervention program will result in a reduction of tobacco use, as well as an increase in work-site policies that support positive dietary and non-smoking behaviors," Eriksen said. "In addition, we hope to reduce the amount of fat in the diet and increase the amount of fiber consistent with the National Cancer Institute's dietary recommendations."

The project includes 19 sites in Texas, nine in Georgia, six each in Florida, Louisiana and Kansas, five in Mississippi, three each in Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky, two in Oklahoma, North Carolina and South Carolina, and one in Nebraska, Wyoming, New Mexico, Missouri, Indiana, Virginia and Alabama.

"People who live in rural areas are less likely to have systems for health education and programs for preventive health care," Eriksen said. "Programs in cancer risk reduction that target this population can play an important role in reducing the incidence of cancer in the future."

Mattox isn't laughing at Clayton Williams' joke

HOUSTON (AP) — Gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams says Attorney General Jim Mattox sought a campaign contribution from him with the implication that the state might get involved in a lawsuit to help Williams' telecommunications company.

But Williams, in an appearance this week before the Harris County Republican Party's executive committee, said nothing happened and he might as well not have sent the $1,000 contribution to Mattox, who is running for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Williams spokesman Bill Kenyon said the candidate's remarks about Mattox were made as a "partisan joke."

Republican Williams has been under fire because of contributions his political action committee made last year to Democrats, including Mattox and State Treasurer Ann Richards, who also is seeking the governor's nomination.

Mattox spokeswoman Elna Christopher Thursday labeled Williams' remarks as "absolutely hogwash" and said Mattox never made a fund-raising call to Williams.

"Clayton Williams is lying, because he gave money to Democrats and he is trying to deal with that in a Republican primary," she said.

Kenyon said Mattox did ask Williams for a contribution, but did not suggest he could help Williams with a lawsuit.

Williams told the GOP gathering he was hoping Mattox would file suit against AT&T because he believed the long-distance carrier was charging the state too much for service.

At the time, Williams owned Claydesta Communications, a competing long-distance telephone company, that was competing with AT&T for state business. AT&T won the bid. No suits were filed by the attorney general's office.

Murray-O'Hair's daughter sues county over juror's oath

AUSTIN (AP) — The daughter of the woman who helped take prayer out of public schools has filed a $12 million federal lawsuit against Travis County officials, alleging she was wrongfully jailed for refusing to take a juror's oath.

"We have atheists who are afraid to go to jury duty because they don't know what'll happen to them," Robin Murray-O'Hair, daughter of Madalyn Murray-O'Hair, said Thursday. To object to taking the oath, she said, "you must draw attention to yourself."

"Atheism is not a popular position in our culture. A lot of people are afraid of the social repercussions of doing such a thing," said Ms. Murray-O'Hair, who is Mrs. O'Hair's biological granddaughter and adopted daughter.

Madalyn Murray-O'Hair, an atheist, initiated a lawsuit that resulted in a 1963 U.S. Supreme Court ruling banning prayer in public schools.

A simple declaration of truthfulness, without any religious reference, is all that should be required of any juror, said Ms. Murray-O'Hair.

Ms. Murray-O'Hair initially objected to the words "so help me God" in the oath required of prospective jurors when she was called for jury service in December 1987.

County Court-at-Law Judge Guy Herman waived the oath, but held Ms. Murray-O'Hair in contempt after she refused his offer that she take an affirmation without a reference to God.

Ms. Murray-O'Hair, after being jailed for several hours, was released on bond. An appeal of the contempt order later was declared moot, because Herman commuted the contempt sentence to time served, according to the lawsuit.

In filing the lawsuit, Ms. Murray-O'Hair contends she was illegally punished for exercising her freedom of conscience, "psychologically manhandled" by the judge and "thrown into jail with criminals."

Named as defendants in the suit filed Wednesday are the Travis County court system, Herman and the county judge, clerk, sheriff and court bailiffs. It seeks $2 million in actual damages, $3 million in punitive damages, attorney fees and $500,000 from each person who was involved in her incarceration.

"It is our opinion that Judge Herman followed the law, and in fact was very gracious and accommodating to her," said Travis County Attorney Ken Oden of the lawsuit. "There was just no pleasing her."

"I suppose it'll ultimately be up to a judge. We'll handle it like any other case," he said. "I don't think the allegations have any merit."

In the lawsuit, Ms. Murray-O'Hair said she represents a class "comprising all individuals eligible for jury service who have deep-seated convictions against mouthing any religious dogma as a condition to jury service, much less judge-dictated religious statements constituting a religious exercise."

East Texas cities upset over highways' omission from plan

LONGVIEW (AP) — Officials from East Texas cities say they're concerned about the state highway department's omission of several East Texas roads from a highway network similar to an interstate highway system for local roads.

State highways officials wrapped up the last of 10 hearings in the state with a meeting of East Texas officials Thursday.

About 150 mayors, county judges, chamber of commerce officials and business leaders attended the hearing. Twenty-nine people spoke, some in praise of the 9,000-mile plan, and others blasting it for what they say it lacks.

Among the most criticized exclusions were State Highway 31 from Tyler to Longview, U.S Highway 271 from Gilmer to Tyler, and State Highway 19.

The trunk plan includes a four-lane SH 31 only from Tyler to Waco, U.S. 271 north of Gilmer and no plans for SH 19.

"Highway 31 should have four-lane designation from Longview to Waco. East Texas is a feeder for the whole state of Texas," said Oscar Sjervin, Tyler, president of the State Highway 31 Association. "A good share of overland freight originates in East Texas."

An East Texas Council of Governments official said several projects were omitted that "should definitely be included."

Joe White of Kilgore read a resolution approved by the ETCOG executive board asking for reconsideration of excluded projects like SH 31 from Tyler to Longview, U.S. 79 from Carthage to Henderson, U.S. 69 from Tyler to Mineola, SH135 from Interstate 20 to U.S. 271 and SH 19 from Paris to Huntsville.

"Some arteries have been omitted and (the plan) is frankly a little shortsighted," White said. "I hope (State Highway) Commission will hear the truth and re-evalutate the situation."

Palestine Chamber of Commerce President Mike Murphy criticized SH 19's exclusion, saying a Wal-Mart distribution center, the Murray Corp., and Texas Department of Corrections facilities generate a lot of truck traffic around Palestine.

He also said a former Alcoa Co. plant for sale has had difficulty attracting buyers, "because, in their opinion, they don't have adequate access to their markets. This is a transportation problem."

Kilgore City Manager Ron Cox supports SH 31 from Tyler to Longview. Mount Pleasant Mayor Jerry Boatner spoke on behalf of U.S. 271, and Rusk County Chamber of Commerce representative Landon Alford and Jacksonville Mayor Gene Brumbelow both proposed inclusion of U.S. 79.

Bill McCool of the Highway 19 Association in Sulphur Springs, said not including SH 19 leaves a void with no north-south access from Tulsa, Okla., to Houston, a major commercial route.

State transportation planning engineer Al Luedecke says the department will take suggestions from the hearings and put together a plan.

Girl's partial liver transplant will make medical history

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 21-month-old girl suffering from a life-threatening disease is expected to make medical history when she becomes the first American to receive a partial liver transplant from a living donor.

Teri Smith, 29, will donate part of her liver for transplantation to her daughter, Alyssa.

The tot is afflicted with biliary atresia, an often-fatal liver disorder that is the leading reason for pediatric liver transplants. The disease blocks liver bile ducts, backing up bile in the bloodstream and the liver.

Alyssa's father, John Smith, 27, and brother, Ricky, 4, will accompany the mother and daughter to the University of Chicago Medical Center for the historic procedure Nov. 27.

"We feel very confident," Ms. Smith said Thursday. "We're confident about the surgeon's ability. They've provided us with all the statistics."

Insurance will help pay for the procedure, and local groups are raising money for the family as well.

While living donors often give one of two kidneys — and recently, some pancreas segments — transplanting part of a living person's liver is a new step. Doctors at the University of Chicago Medical Center have been working for more than a year planning the procedure.

Alyssa will receive the right lobe of her mother's liver, a medical center spokesman said.

The six- to eight-hour dual operation has been performed only three times in the past — twice in Brazil and once in Australia. One of the Brazilian patients reportedly died earlier this year.

John Smith said he is confident about the operation's success, but a little afraid of the plane flight to Chicago.

"That scares me the most," he said. "But I have complete faith in the hospital and doctors."

Trust fund for accident victims established at United Bank

From Staff Reports

A trust fund has been established to help defray medical costs of Michelle Demaray and her 6-year-old son Jeremy.

The two were involved in a two-car accident at the intersection of Garfield and Michigan streets three weeks ago. Midland police were pursuing a suspected stolen vehicle at the time of the collision.

Ms. Demaray remains in critical condition in the intensive care unit of Midland Memorial Hospital, according to spokeswoman Sue Ristom.

Jeremy is in the pediatric ward of the hospital in satisfactory condition.

Contributions should be directed to the Demaray Family Trust, Account No. 151 132-7, at United Bank of Midland.

Bases with C-5 cargo planes warned

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — San Antonio Air Logistics Center officials are warning bases with C-5 cargo planes to replace four hydraulic system lines, in the wake of a fire on one of the planes at Kelly Air Force Base.

Air Force engineers determined the aluminum return lines on the plane permitted hydraulic fluid to feed the fire once it erupted, said a statement issued by the Air Logistics Center.

"Bases are instructed to remove the four aluminum return lines and replace them with stainless steel lines which will be manufactured at each base," the Kelly statement said.

No cause of the Nov. 7 fire has been pinpointed, and an Air Force Mishap Investigation is probing the incident.

Seven base employees, including civilian workers and firefighters, were injured in the C-5A blaze. All were released from hospitals by the following day.

Hydraulic fluid activates flight controls, flaps and landing gear aboard the aircraft. Return lines carry hydraulic fluid to reservoirs for storage until it is needed.

The message was sent Wednesday to 100 Air Force bases with C-5 aircraft. The replacement was directed for all 127 C-5A and C-5B aircraft and will cost an estimated $2,300 for all the planes, the statement said.

The San Antonio Air Logistics Center has engineering and technical responsibility for all C-5As and C-5Bs.

INS forced to finance return of Guatemalan

HARLINGEN (AP) — Seven months after deporting Efrain Martinez Cabrera back home to Guatemala, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service paid for a $390 plane ticket to bring him back to South Texas.

He will get a second chance to apply for political asylum in his effort to stay in this country, because a federal judge found he was deported improperly.

"It feels good to be here," Martinez, 24, said Thursday at his lawyer's side in the Proyecto Libertad legal aid office in Harlingen.

His case will start from the beginning, as if he had never been here, his lawyer said.

"His case is back at ground zero," his attorney, Mark Schneider said. "He'll be able to go and ask for asylum, have a full hearing before a judge, represented by a lawyer and he can appeal if denied asylum."

Political asylum is granted to those able to show they are fleeing persecution.

Martinez applied for political asylum in Harlingen near the southern tip of Texas on Feb. 15, and was denied. A deportation hearing was set for March 31, when judge Charles Auslander with the Executive Office of Immigration Review ordered him deported. Martinez admitted having entered the United States illegally and waived his right to appeal.

Deportation was set for April 6, but by mistake, INS officials took him back to the immigration court on April 5.

Because he already had been ordered deported, his file was not at the court when Martinez appeared again before Judge Auslander. The judge, working a heavy case load, apparently did not remember Martinez, Schneider said.

The judge at the April 5 hearing saw no evidence to support the government's case for deportation, so he ordered Martinez released.

When Martinez asked the judge for legal advice, Auslander instructed him to talk with Proyecto Libertad legal aid worker Robert Koulish, who was present in the court room at the time.

INS agents, however, pulled him out of the courtroom before he could speak with Koulish, and kept him from speaking with lawyers, Martinez said.

"They held me by the arm and took me away," Martinez said.

INS officials flew him to Houston the next day and then put him on a plane to Guatemala to be deported as originally scheduled on April 6.

Proyecto Libertad attorneys appealed on Martinez's behalf. U.S. District Judge Kenneth M. Hoyt in Brownsville found on Oct. 3 that in preventing Martinez from speaking with the legal aid worker, INS officials "engaged in contemptuous conduct in removing (Martinez) from the hearing room against the judge's instructions; in secreting (Martinez), thereby preventing his attorneys from communicating with him; and in deporting (Martinez) the following day."

Judge Hoyt ruled that the immigration judge's decision to reopen the case had the legal effect of suspending the previous deportation order. Hoyt found Martinez's constitutional right to due process therefore had been violated. The judge ordered the INS to pay for Martinez's trip back and give him a new hearing.

Priests in Austin 'fear for lives of our brothers'

AUSTIN (AP) — Three Jesuit priests called on the United States to pressure the Salvadoran government for an investigation into the murder of six priests by armed men in San Salvador.

"We fear for the lives of our brothers" who remain in El Salvador, Father Joseph Berra said Thursday. He worked in San Salvador before coming to the University of Texas at Austin in August.

"They have asked us to do what we can and make this message known, to ask for protection, to ask the U.S. Congress and State Department to bear down on the Salvadoran government so that these type of attacks are looked into," Berra said.

The United States said it will ask for an investigation into the killing of the priests.

Berra was joined at a news conference by Father Doug Marcouiller and Father Jose Idiaquez, who also worked in San Salvador before coming to Austin to attend UT.

The three men said they knew the six Jesuit priests, a housekeeper and her daughter, who were killed Thursday after armed men entered their house at a leading university. A witness said uniformed government troops were involved.

The government denied responsibility, condemned the slayings as "savage and irrational" and said an investigation was under way.

The United States said it will ask for an investigation into the killing of the priests.

"We've been in contact with our Jesuit brothers in Central America," said Marcouiller. He said he was told 30 armed, uniformed men carried out the attack on the priests and women.

"Their bodies were riddled with bullets, and their heads had been smashed," he said. "This while an attachment of 80 soldiers was encamped about 100 yards away."

There has been "a series of threats" against the Jesuits, including placement of a bomb at the house, Marcouiller said. He said Jesuits have been denounced "as sources of subversion" on the radio.

The Jesuit house was not in a rebel-held zone, Berra said.

"We feel that as much international pressure that is brought to bear on the Salvadoran government will certainly benefit ... those people who are coming under fire," he said.

El Paso judge vows legal action to halt radioactive dump

AUSTIN (AP) — El Paso County Judge Luther Jones vowed legal action after a state board narrowed its search for a low-level radioactive waste dump to 3,000 acres in far West Texas.

The area chosen unanimously Thursday by the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority board is near Fort Hancock, in southwestern Hudspeth County, about 40 miles east of El Paso.

After a hearing in Hudspeth County, the board will select a disposal site within the 3,000 acres, said board Chairman Elbert Whorton.

But Jones guaranteed that dump opponents will continue their battle.

"El Paso County will be pursuing multiple legal remedies in the coming months, and we're supremely confident that we'll be successful if this insane process is not aborted by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission," Jones said.

Jones declined to specify the legal remedies. He said congressional help has been sought to obtain a review of the site selection process by the federal commission.

Whorton said he believes a license for the low-level radioactive waste dump — the state's first — will be granted by the Department of Health's Bureau of Radiation Control after an application is submitted next year.

"The area that we have designated, in our opinion, is a very, very credible site," he said.

Jones said the site is unsafe because it is susceptible to earthquakes "far in excess of the severity of the San Francisco quake"; is in a flood plan; and poses damage to ground water.

The authority's staff said the mesquite- and creosote-covered area is well-suited for the dump, which could open as soon as June 1993.

The staff had proposed the same site in February 1987, but El Paso County obtained an injunction from a state district judge to stop the designation process. The injunction later was overturned by an appeals court.

Ruben Alvarado, chief engineer for the authority, acknowledged the potential exists for earthquakes. But he said quakes do not happen often, and that they would not affect operations at the site.

The waste will be encapsulated in massive concrete canisters and will be stable for centuries, the agency said. Studies show the depth to water at the site is more than 500 feet and rainfall is less than 10 inches per year, according to the staff.

STATE IN BRIEF

Mexican pollution to be monitored

EL PASO (AP) — Government agencies will put dust monitors along the U.S.-Mexican border to find out how much pollution Mexico is sending into the United States.

The monitors — part of a government study — will help scientists determine how much of the "brown cloud" over El Paso is coming from Ciudad Juarez in Mexico.

Results should help revise state and federal air-pollution control plans for El Paso, said Jesus Reynosa, director of the Air Pollution Control Office for the El Paso City-County Health District.

Reynosa says the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has finally accepted the theory that Juarez contributes to the brown cloud that hangs over El Paso.

"Now, we have to prove that," he said.

El Paso's air frequently exceeds federal standards for the amount of particulates in the air. It also regularly exceeds federal standards for carbon monoxide and ozone.

103 farm families honored

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Agriculture is saluting 103 Texas families who have maintained their farms and ranches for a century or more.

"These 103 families, representing the full ethnic diversity of Texas, are symbols of the year-in and year-out stamina, the pioneering spirit, and the entrepreneurial drive that has made Texas the enduring and innovative state it is today," Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said Thursday.

"At a time when the average person moves at least five times and makes three or more career changes during a lifetime, we celebrate 103 Texas families who have maintained their farms and ranches in continuous agricultural production for 100 years or more," he said.

Hightower's comments came during the TDA's 16th annual Family Land Heritage Ceremony.

Fifty-eight farms and 45 ranches from 60 counties were honored this year.

The oldest property honored this year was the Cameron Ranch in Zapata County, founded in 1833 by Pedro Jose and Maria Bustamante.

Soviet speaks in Tyler

TYLER (AP) — The world is witnessing "dramatic" changes in the foreign policies of the superpowers, changes that have left the Cold War era behind, a high-level Soviet policymaker says.

Dr. Georgii Arbatov, director of the Institute for the Study of the USA and Canada at the USSR Academy of Sciences and member of the Central Committee of the USSR, spoke before a packed house at the University of Texas at Tyler.

Arbatov's speech focused on the military, political and economic reforms under way in the Soviet Union.

Farmers get cents from meal

AUSTIN (AP) — The effects of a prolonged drought helped keep down prices to farmers for commodities used in producing a Thanksgiving dinner, agricultural officials said Thursday.

A Texas Department of Agriculture survey showed farmers will earn only 2.8 cents this year for producing a single serving of dinner that includes turkey, stuffing, rice, corn, salad, milk and dessert.

"Texas farmers in many areas for 1989 have had to contend with a drought stretching into its third year," said Mary Mahoney of Texas A&M University's Department of Agricultural Communications.

"The cost of feeding their animals — birds, turkeys, etc. — and particularly beef cattle has increased tremendously for them."

Ms. Mahoney said the drought has caused higher feed grain prices and farmers are getting less money at auction for cattle and turkeys.

The survey shows ingredients for a 10-item Thanksgiving dinner will cost Texas consumers an average of $2.46 per serving, or 12 cents more per serving than it did in 1988.

Jury may end bus probe

EDINBURG (AP) — A grand jury will reconvene next Tuesday and may wrap up its investigation into a school bus accident that killed 21 students.

The jury recessed Thursday after two days of deliberations.

Hidalgo County District Attorney Rene Guerra said he originally expected the grand jury to spend only two days on the case, but the panel came up with important questions that merited investigation.

He said the grand jury heard from three witnesses Thursday, with more planned for Tuesday.

Ethics committee hiring outside counsel to probe five senators

WASHINGTON (AP) — An outside counsel will investigate five senators who intervened with banking regulators to help a political contributor, a source says, indicating an intensified probe by the Senate Ethics Committee.

Keating

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity Thursday, did not say whether a counsel had yet been hired to investigate the senators, who aided Charles H. Keating Jr. when he was the chairman of the failing Lincoln Savings and Loan of Irvine, Calif.

But the New York Times reported today the committee had decided to hire prominent Washington attorney Robert S. Bennett for the investigation, as well as for an unrelated review involving Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y. A source says the Senate Ethics Committee is reviewing allegations that D'Amato violated rules in the Department of Housing and Urban Development scandal.

Until now, the Ethics Committee's only known interest was a letter asking the five whether Keating's contributions — $1.3 million to the senators' campaigns or political causes — prompted them to question regulators about their examination of Lincoln.

The senators are Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; John McCain, R-Ariz., and Donald Riegle, D-Mich. Cranston responded to the committee Thursday as DeConcini and Riegle did earlier, all denying any improprieties. Glenn and McCain have not yet filed formal responses but have denied wrongdoing.

Also on Thursday, federal regulators handling the Lincoln S&L failure seized a luxury resort and a hotel in Arizona owned by Keating.

Bennett earlier this year was selected by the committee to investigate accusations that Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., laundered $100,000 in campaign contributions through a book contract.

The Ethics Committee does not formally announce a decision to proceed from an initial expression of interest to the first formal stage of a case known as a preliminary inquiry. The inquiry determines whether there's a "reason to believe" rules violations occurred.

If the committee so decides, it would begin an initial review to determine whether there is "substantial credible evidence" of violations.

The final step is a full investigation to decide if there is "clear and convincing evidence" that standards were violated, and whether discipline should be recommended to the Senate.

A standing Senate order says that Ethics Committee investigations "shall be conducted by outside counsel ... unless the select committee determines not to use outside counsel."

The congressional watchdog Common Cause had urged the outside counsel so that the results of the inquiry would be credible and accepted by the public.

Cranston, the Democratic whip, told the committee Thursday that "no further action ... is warranted," in a formal response prepared by his attorney.

In an accompanying letter to committee Chairman Howell T. Heflin, D-Ala., and Vice Chairman Warren B. Rudman, R-N.H., Cranston said his inquiries to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board about Lincoln were "nothing more and nothing less" than what he has done for other constituents "with credible complaints about their treatment by a federal agency."

"I am not responsible for loss of taxpayer funds through a delay in shutting down Lincoln or the losses of innocent California bond investors," Cranston said.

Cranston's spokesman, Murray Flander, said he had no further comment on the decision to hire a counsel adding, "We have no firsthand knowledge of it."

McCain's office issued a statement saying, "I am confident that an investigation will vindicate my repeated statements that I never abused my office nor took actions that were improper."

Telephone calls to a spokesman for Riegle were not answered.

Regulators fire Arizona resort manager

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators have fired Arizona millionaire Charles H. Keating Jr. as manager of a luxury resort owned by his failed thrift institution, Lincoln Savings and Loan Assocation.

Keating and 23 family members and associates were dismissed Thursday from positions at The Phoenician Resort near Scottsdale and from posts at the 344-room Crescent Hotel in Phoenix.

Regulators, accompanied by FBI agents, Phoenix police officers and private security guards, seized the properties at 1:30 a.m. local time, according to Resolution Trust Corp., a new agency created this summer to handle failed S&Ls.

Congressional pay raise issue heads for Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A hot-potato decision on a big congressional pay raise and ethics package rests in the lap of a skittish Senate with only a few days left before Congress plans to adjourn for the year.

"Formidable, but possible," was how Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole described the task of getting his sharply divided chamber to act before Thanksgiving on the plan approved 252-174 Thursday in the House.

The House approved a plan to raise its pay, and that of other top government officials, by more than 35 percent in less than 14 months. House salaries would soar from the current $89,500 to more than $120,000.

With the higher pay, House members would be barred beginning in 1991 from pocketing honoraria checks for speeches before interest groups. They also would be subject to other new rules in the first major overhaul of its ethics rules in 12 years.

The House plan doesn't include a raise for the Senate unless the Senate votes to include itself.

Enemies of the pay raise were trying to turn up the pressure against it. Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate who helped kill a proposed 51 percent pay raise just 10 months ago, called the new plan a "legislative pay-grab wolf in a minor ethical reform sheep's clothing."

Dole and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, scheduled an unusual caucus of both parties, behind closed doors, to hash things out this morning. Everyone agreed there was a wide divergence of views.

The Senate could vote to give itself no raise but let the House and others get theirs. Or it could buy into the whole deal, kill it or choose something in between.

"The leadership is pushing hard for us to adopt the House package," Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., said Thursday. "Apparently, it must be a close vote."

Mitchell has said he favored the House plan but speculated the Senate might go for a more modest pay package and a more gradual elimination of honoraria.

Senators now may keep speaking fees equal to 40 percent of their salaries, compared to 30 percent in the House, so the House plan actually could be an income cut for some senators. The Senate also has its own ideas about ethics rules, including restrictions on lobbying after lawmakers leave office.

The House plan would raise salaries in a series of steps, for a total minimum 35 percent raise by Jan. 1, 1991. On top of that, lawmakers and the other officials would get whatever cost-of-living adjustment is given to rank-and-file government workers on that date.

President Bush, eager to raise pay for his top staff and the federal judges, has already said he'd sign the bill.

House members who took the politically unpopular plunge and voted for the pay raise Thursday were watching the Senate's moves carefully, for fear the other chamber would kill it.

"The Senate in the next 24 hours needs to think about what is politically possible," said Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., co-chairman of the task force that drafted the House plan.

Another House Democrat said the pressure his chamber would put on the Senate would approach "white heat."

In a similar situation seven years ago, the Senate let the House scoot ahead in salary. But senators reconsidered six months later and gave themselves a catch-up raise.

Besides the ban on keeping honoraria, the House bill includes a broad range of changes in its rules and in federal ethics law.

Outside earnings besides honoraria would be limited to 15 percent of salary and severely restricted in scope. Rules governing the acceptance of gifts and travel from people outside the immediate family would be tightened.

The rules also would require more detailed disclosure of personal assets.

East German health care system in critical condition

By FERDINAND PROTZMAN
New York Times News Service

LEIPZIG, East Germany — After waiting 5½ hours in the hallway of the emergency clinic at the St. Georg Hospital in Leipzig with her broken ankle in a fresh cast, Elfriede Volkel's mood was turning sour.

"No one is concerned about us," the 73-year-old Leipzig housewife complained to other patients waiting in the sunlighted hallway.

"No one here has any idea what's going on. They haven't even registered that woman over there, who has been here three hours. Rather than get sick now, I'd just as soon pass on. This just isn't working anymore."

While the others who were waiting took a less severe stance, they agreed that East Germany's public health service, once the nation's pride, is in crisis because of a shortage of doctors, nurses, technicians and even unskilled health workers.

While that personnel deficit has existed for years, it has been drastically worsened by the exodus of East Germans to the West over the last few months.

New regulations allowing the nation's people to travel freely that were announced last week could accelerate the departure of medical employees. Government officials say as many as 1,000 doctors have already emigrated to West Germany. They fear more will soon follow.

"It's purely a question of economics," said Dr. Rudolf Weiner, the medical director and chief administrator at St. Georg, a teaching hospital that is the largest in Leipzig.

ETHICAL questions have, unfortunately, a lesser place in today's society. The doctors in West Germany are among the best paid in the world."

He said a surgeon in West Germany earns an average of at least $4,400 a month, compared with about $75 in East Germany under current exchange rates.

While Leipzig, a gritty industrial city, has been particularly hard hit, Dr. Weiner said, the situation is little better in the rest of he country.

"Waiting times are rising," he said. "We still handle acute cases around the clock and can operate on cancer cases within a week. But for noncritical surgery, such as gall bladder problems, the wait is now four or five months. Things like varicose veins have no priority any more."

While the government has yet to release exact figures on the personnel losses, it is publicly addressing the issue, a major change from the stolid silence of Erich Honecker's government.

The situation in health services is becoming more complicated because of the exodus, Prof. Christoph Bruckner, chairman of the health committee in Parliament, was quoted as saying by the official East German press agency ADN.

Health and social care in some areas of East Germany have reached the pain threshold, he said. The burden on doctors and mid-level health care workers is unusually high and urgent measures are needed.

Foremost among them is guaranteeing primary care services, Edgar Haring, East Germany's deputy health minister, said, adding that routine examinations must be canceled for the time being.

ALL DOCTORS are to be put to work providing medical care, and additional help for the state health system will be gained by using doctors from the nation's sports medicine program and transportation service, said Bodo Schonheit, East Germany's deputy higher education minister.

To guarantee sickroom care, nurses from the ambulatory service will be employed in stationary clinics.

Nonmedical students should forego civil defense training and instead help out in health centers, he said, either in providing care or operating services. Third-year medical students are already supporting work in clinics, he said.

But Dr. Weiner said the government's plans are only partly realizable.

"Some of these sports doctors really aren't capable of treating our patients, they're too specialized on sports," he said. "And many other doctors are really bureaucrats who haven't treated a patient in years. They need training which we would be glad to give them, if we had time."

A 33-year-old laboratory director at St. Georg's was more succinct.

"We need help and the hospital needs money," he said, standing on a path between a building that was being gutted and another where renovation was proceeding at a snail's pace.

His statement summed up the hospital's history. The center, which has 1,024 beds and 12 main buildings, was opened in 1913, when it was only half completed. That was because the government of Kaiser Wilhelm II needed the funds for the military buildup preceding the First World War.

DURING WORLD War II, the hospital broke new medical ground when Prof. Ernst Heller pioneered new surgical techniques. But it also suffered physical damage.

"It was bombed, although there were large red crosses on the roofs," Dr. Weiner said. "But really, there has been no new construction of medical facilities here since 1913. We have renovated some buildings and built new living quarters for some of our staff, but we need new facilities badly."

The centers are useless without trained staff, he said.

"We reached the point where we were going to begin closing nursing stations because of the loss of personnel," he said.

The hospital has lost 50 people from its staff of 1,600, he said, many of them in crucial areas. Though he would not give a complete breakdown, he said critical losses had been surgeons and operating-room nurses.

"We had five operating theaters running simultaneously 18 months ago," said Dr. Weiner, a surgeon, urologist and biophysicist. "Now it's two and one half. It's the young surgeons and nurses who are leaving.

Because of the new regulations, Dr. Weiner said he believed, the number of staff leaving will slow for a while. But only because they can now afford to carefully scout out jobs and places to live before emigrating, he said.

Money is not the only motivation for leaving, however. In the egalitarian world of East German communism, a factory manager enjoys much higher social prestige, and pay, than a doctor.

Israeli soldiers relax after patrolling along Israel's border with Jordan in a Jeep, taking a break from their continuous monitoring of the border area, which is an attempt to keep Palestinian operatives from crossing into Israel.

Arab guerrillas, Israeli troops threaten border residents

By JOHN RICE

ADASSIYEH, Jordan (AP) — Hassan Humayed and his 10 children were sleeping on his rooftop one hot night when a Katyusha rocket hissed over and ricocheted off the concrete roof through a stone wall without exploding.

"The people who launch the rockets don't hurt the enemy," Humayed fumed. "They hurt us."

The people who fired the rocket were Palestinian guerrillas in a mountain above town. It was aimed at Israel, 1½ miles west of Humayed's house on the northern end of the border. A second missile exploded harmlessly in an Israeli field.

A few days later, Humayed said, Israeli troops fired a flare onto the Jordanian side of the Yarmouk River, apparently to burn brush guerrillas could use for cover. But instead the resulting fire burned 60 of his family's orange trees.

The missiles and several recent guerrilla attacks on Israel have interrupted years of relative calm along Jordan's 300-mile border, prompting veiled Israeli threats of retaliation if they continue.

The Palestinian attacks pose a security problem for Israel. But for Jordanians the issue has wider, strategic implications — survival against a more powerful foe.

A senior military official, who cannot be identified because of Jordanian army regulations, said the Jordanians are doing their best to stop the Palestinian attacks.

Twelve members of the Syrian-based Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine were arrested after the rocket attack.

Military officials said the guerrillas who fired the Katyushas crossed from Syria, which takes a militant stand against Israel and sponsors hardline guerrilla factions.

At the same time, the guerrillas are hostile to efforts by Jordan and Yasser Arafat's mainstream Palestine Liberation Organization to reach a diplomatic settlement with Israel.

"We don't believe this sort of action will solve the Palestinian problem," the Jordanian military official said. "If the Israelis retaliate, it might hurt our citizens."

He suggested Syrian-backed radical Palestinians were trying to undermine Arafat's peace initiative.

Jordanians are alarmed by right-wing Israeli calls to establish a Palestinian state in Jordan or for Israel to take control of Jordanian territory under what they consider to be biblical precedent.

"We take every word said by the Israeli leaders seriously ... because we've learned they mean it," the senior officer said.

West, East Berliners get to know each other

By STEWART M. POWELL
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

BERLIN — With Berliners crisscrossing their city once again after 28 years, Germans are voicing long-whispered dreams of a tale of two cities becoming one.

The talk is sweeping across a city of 5 million that has been divided against itself by a serpentine prison wall that soured the taste of freedom in West Berlin as well.

Hopes for a new Berlin are flowing with the force of dammed water freed to run its course. Gerhardt Blaurock, 43, a native of West Berlin, sees a chance to fulfill a childhood fantasy of living in the countryside outside Berlin and commuting to work at his engineering firm in the West.

Yoachim Hahn, 59, a baker in neighboring Potsdam, counts on the opportunity to shop regularly in the well-stocked stores of the western sector after being locked out since his early 30s.

And Angela Ratke, 18, an apprentice in a flower shop in nearby Brandenburg, looks forward to working for a week or two periodically at a florist shop in West Berlin, where the flowers — like so much else — are more plentiful and varied than in her native East Berlin.

"We're just getting used to the idea of the city being one," West Berlin Mayor Walter Momper said last weekend as more than 2 million East Germans carpeted the streets and sidewalks of his city of 1.9 million. "No one really knows what will happen."

Area residents would just as soon postpone the touchy questions of German national reunification in order to speed the workday integration of the two Berlins. As West Berlin's chief executive likes to put it: "We shouldn't bother our neighbor with ideological arguments. Let's have them in peace."

Authorities are working to stitch together a public transportation network sundered on Aug. 13, 1961. Police departments are beginning to cooperate.

East Germans are being allowed to pay for West Berlin public transportation in their own currency on the basis of a 1-for-1 exchange rate, leaving until later the politically charged question of the two Germanies agreeing to an exchange rate between the West's powerful Deutsche mark and the non-convertible East German currency worth about 8 percent of its West German equivalent.

An atmosphere of long-awaited reunification grips this one-time German capital where Prussian kings and later Chancellor Otto Von Bismarck forged a patchwork of 19th century German principalities into one of the most powerful nations on earth.

Blaurock, for example, his wife and three children, stood beaming at Checkpoint Charlie last weekend passing out candy to East Germans as they drove through into West Berlin.

"For us this is the end of isolation," Blaurock explained. "We can go there, they can come here are one again. Adds his wife Anna, bundled against the autumn chill with a parka and wool scarf: "We hope that it stays like this. We have waited so long."

The dream of living in Berlin's East German suburbs still may take five more years to fulfill, the engineer says, but its now feasible.

The couple's children, Angela, 7, and twins Sven and Julien, 5, hardly take a break from reaching into the arriving cars from East Germany to pass out candy to children from the other side.

Not far away, Hahn and his wife Edith, 54, are standing at a bus stop in West Berlin's teeming shopping district where East Germans are elbow-to-elbow looking into shop windows. The couple prepares to return home to Potsdam, once a royal retreat for Prussian kings and the site of a crucial East-West summit at the end of World War II.

"We hope that it stays this way," says Hahn, a broad smile creasing his ruddy face. "We want to come back like we used to."

Mrs. Hahn can't believe the availability of cosmetics. Hahn's priority is to see a quick remedy to the currency question so that he can buy additional West German marks at an inexpensive rate after his 100 Marks ($54) in West German "welcome money" runs out.

"We can't expect West Germany to support us for the whole time," Hahn says. "But we can't go on very long with a 12-to-1 exchange because that would wipe out all our savings."

Around the corner in the shopping district, the Deppe family from Brandenburg, East Germany, clutches blankets and a bag of blue jeans bought with part of the "welcome money" provided by West Germany.

"It's so much at once it's difficult to comprehend," says a beaming, bewildered Gudrun Deppe, 41, a saleswoman dressed in a fashionable herringbone wool cape and multicolored scarf for her first venture into the west. "This is dream. It's like electricity going through me."

Her husband, Gunter, 44, holds a blue and white blanket with muscular hands stained by his work as a steelworker back home in Brandenburg. He was a lad of 16 when the wall went up and never dreamed this day would come.

"This is overwhelming," he says quietly. "It's too much all at once. I haven't gotten used to it." What strikes this family is the variety of stores filled with consumer goods.

Few of the East Germans that visited the western sector in recent days have opted to register as refugees in order to remain in the West. West Berlin authorities said only slightly more than 5,000 of the more than 2 million visitors last weekend asked to stay.

Fear that Berlin might become a mecca for refugees is giving way to the realization that residents here merely want the freedom to enjoy their city. To some, it is like that day in 1945 when U.S. forces from the West and Soviet forces from the East finally met on the Elbe River in what is now East Germany to shake hands and signal that peace was finally at hand.

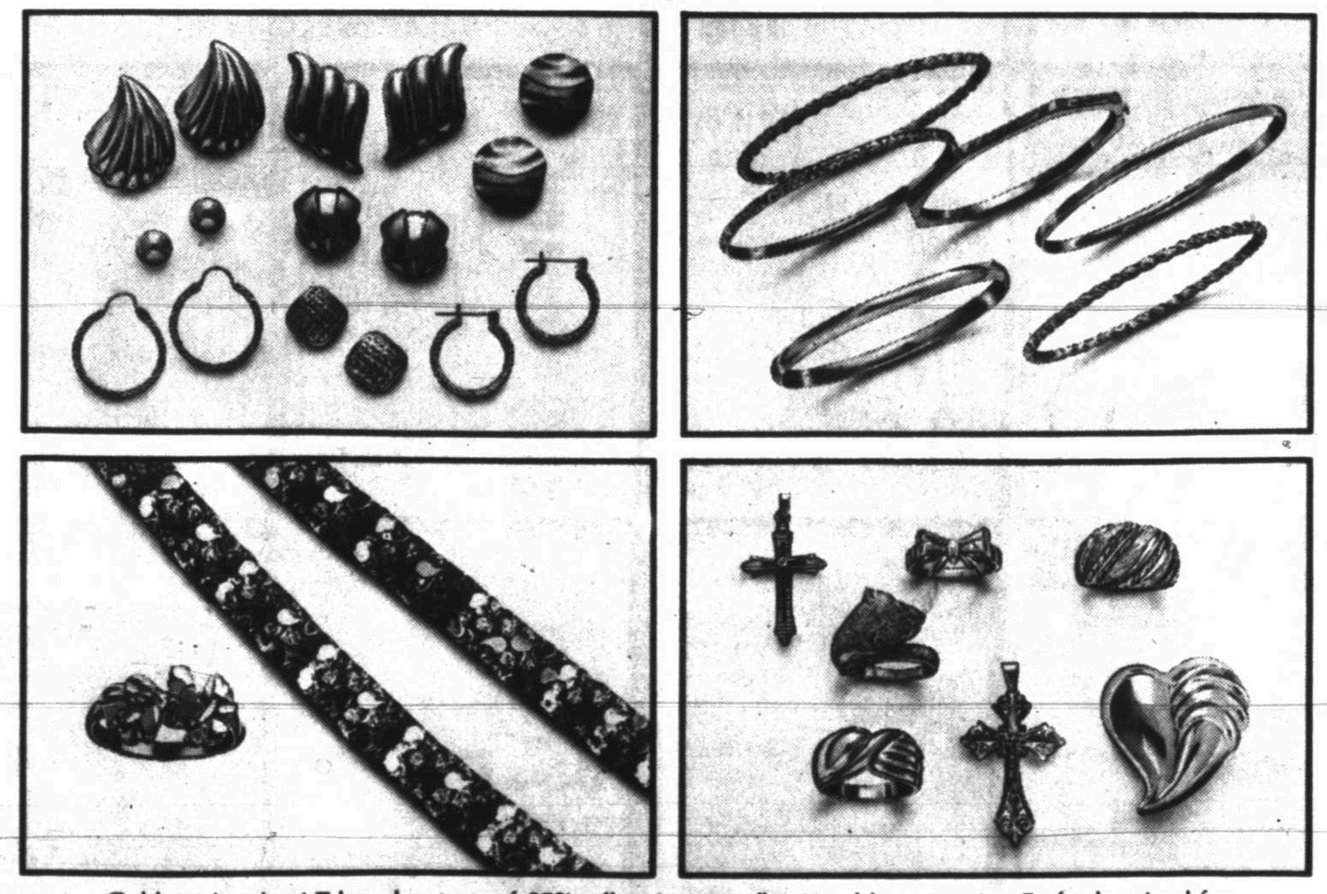

"That was the end of a long, sad tale of war and destruction," says Hans Friedrich Muller, a West Berlin official. "What we see now is only the beginning of a new story."

Glacier park 'endangered' because of oil drilling

EDITOR'S NOTE: In man's continuing hunger for energy, he is pushing the boundaries of exploration to the limit. Now he has come to the edge of a national park, and some say he has gone too far.

By SUE O'CONNELL

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, Mont. (AP) — Just west of the rushing whitewater river that marks the western boundary of Glacier National Park stands a 150-foot oil derrick, a thorn in the side of environmentalists.

This well is no longer a threat to the ecology of the park. After months of controversy, drilling was abandoned in late October and the well was capped. Not out of concerns for the environment, but because no oil was found.

Now the oil exploration companies have their eyes on other drilling sites in the region, and that has environmentalists worried.

National conservation groups have observed for years that environmental problems seldom observe man-made boundaries. They've warned that the national parks are threatened from development both inside and outside their boundaries.

The Wilderness Society last year listed parks it considered endangered because of development. Glacier National Park was on that list, with oil drilling cited as a major worry.

But the Board of Oil and Gas Conservation in September voted unanimously to OK the project after 2½ days of hearings in which four wildlife experts testified that drilling would affect grizzly bears, wolves and bald eagles.

The board also heard from 9-year-old Shinnah Sullivan of Whitefish, Mont., who said she represented a group called Children for Wildlife.

"Animals have rights, too," she told the board. "I bet they would say a lot if they could talk about this. I worry and wonder if there won't be a place for them in the North Fork when I grow up."

But supporters of the well pointed out that it was on private property.

"When a private landowner can't do lawfully what he wants to on his land, then we have the true endangered species: the free American," said Dan Blomquist of nearby Columbia Falls.

The board issued a new permit with some conditions covering public safety and pollution. Board chairman Jim Nelson said the hearings were not in vain.

"It's clear now that this board has a duty to ensure protection of the environment," he said. "That's one of the criticisms we've had on this: that we don't know what is going on."

Now the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management have approved two more wells south of Glacier for next summer.

"All the oil development scenarios have an impact," says Riley McClelland, a Park Service eagle expert. "A dry hole would have the least impact; however, with each incremental step in oil field development, the degree of risk to bald eagles increases."

"The industry thinks that no place should be out of bounds or off limits, but that's not true," says Jim Jensen of the Montana Environmental Information Center. "There are places on the earth where dangerous development, where any kind of industrialization doesn't belong. This beautiful corridor is one of them."

The MEIC and another environmental group filed the suit challenging the state's initial decision to issue a drilling permit, contending public participation laws were ignored.

"Animals have rights, too. I bet they would say a lot if they could talk about this. I worry and wonder if there won't be a place for them in the North Fork when I grow up."

— Shinnah Sullivan, Children for Wildlife

The well, reachable from a gravel road where deer are a common sight, is just half a mile from the North Fork of the Flathead River, Glacier's western boundary and a designated wild and scenic river.

It is the first well to actually be drilled in recent years near the park. Three others have been proposed but delayed by environmental challenges.

Cenex, the exploration company, received speedy approval of its July application for the test well because it is located on private land and not subject to the review process required for drilling on public lands.

Islanders live with legacy of world war

ST. SAVIOUR, Guernsey (AP) — The Rev. Leslie Craske is worried. A crack in the north aisle of his 14th century church has traveled up to the apex and down the other side. Outside, two large graves show signs of collapsing.

The Church of England minister suspects the church and grounds may be sinking into a network of munition and rail tunnels the Nazis dug under the church during World War II.

The problem is not unusual in Guernsey, one of Britain's Channel Islands off the coast of France. Using foreign slave labor, the Germans dug 41 tunnels on the 25-square-mile island.

The tunnels are the war's most troublesome legacy in the Channel Islands, the only British soil occupied by the Germans.

In May, the government evacuated two elderly couples from state-owned rental houses because a tunnel underneath was crumbling slightly.

"We're not taking any chances," said Brian Castle, the islands' housing administrator.

A couple of years ago, a bowling green collapsed overnight in Delancey Park. Before that, a garden fell in Fort George. Every now and then a field will subside, and the lawn in front of the St. Saviour's rectory undulates because of air raid shelters below.

"The Germans just tunneled like rabbits," said Gerald Przenislawski, who operates La Valette Underground Military Museum. "There will always be a problem as long as they (the tunnels) are there."

The Channel Islands were occupied from June 30, 1940, to May 9, 1945, and were among the last places in Europe to be liberated.

"There's quite a bit that the occupation left," Castle said.

Constant reminders are the unsightly German fortifications and the cemetery for German soldiers. And there are the descendants of Germans who came back after the war and married Guernsey women.

Guernsey's young brought back a variety of accents from England, where they were evacuated during the occupation. For many, there is still pain from having spent such a large chunk of life apart.

"I got one Red Cross message from my parents" during the entire five years, recalls Roydon Falla, a politician.

But not all memories are bitter.

Owen Le Vallee, president of the Liberation Day Committee, said his mother found a starving German in the outhouse during the year after D-Day, the 1944 Allied invasion of Europe.

"Mother felt a great deal of compassion for him and gave him some food, the little that she had," Le Vallee said.

At St. Saviour's parish, Craske frets. "We have an impression that the crack is lengthening," the minister said.

Pointing to the large graves, which date back to 1860, he said: "They buried whole generations in these. You've got as many as 24 bodies piled one on top of the other."

The parish's 2,300 taxpayers are responsible for the church.

"In Guernsey law, everything that is under your ground is yours, which is not a comforting thought as far as this is concerned," Craske said of the tunnels.

"We don't know whether it will be five years or five centuries. Ultimately, they will collapse," he said. "They are bound to."

Teen aging prematurely

By LORRI DENISE BOOKER
N.Y. Times News Service

WARNER ROBINS, Ga. — Nearly 20 years ago, Gertrude Mercer Bernard had the baby she always had wanted. She reached through the opening of an isolation tent and touched the tiny knee of her firstborn child. She named him Gregory Louis Mercer, but by then he had been christened by the hospital staff.

Gregory was known as "the monster in the nursery," his mother said, a 4-pound baby boy with bruised limbs, bulging hazel eyes, a partially formed skull and a sad, sallow face just 3 inches wide.

"I knew he looked strange," Mrs. Bernard said of her first glimpse at Gregory. "But to me he wasn't a monster. He was the baby I always wanted."

Although only 19, her son already is an old man. His soft, jaundiced flesh stretches taut over 18 pounds of misshapen bone. His almost sightless eyes wander freely around the small living room in his parents' home. He can neither walk nor talk except to say "Mama," and his chief modes of travel are a baby stroller and his parents' arms.

Gregory has progeroid syndrome — a rare disease that is related to progeria, the premature aging disease that strikes one in 8 million seemingly healthy babies. Most die of old age by 13. Only 18 children worldwide, 12 in the United States, are known to suffer from progeria or a progeroid syndrome. Also called Hutchinson-Guilford syndrome, the disease is so rare that only a handful of doctors study it exclusively.

GREGORY, WHO suffered brain damage at birth, sleeps in a baby bed in the Bernards' bedroom and eats 62 jars of baby food a week. When he is frightened, the light-brown fuzz on his head turns gray.

"We think it is caused by a genetic mutation," said Dr. W. Ted Brown, a pediatrics professor at Cornell University Medical College who every year attends a reunion of progeria victims. "It's a disease that is similar to other diseases, but so far we don't know the gene that causes it. It's a difficult disease to work on and it's not been easy to study."

When Gregory was born, doctors knew little more about progeria than they did when it was first identified in 1886. Mrs. Bernard took her son from pediatrician to specialist. She queried her family and her friends. Doctors and friends predicted that her son would not live longer than a year.

"I try not to think about it anymore," Mrs. Bernard said firmly. "All the things the doctors told me he'd never do I've tried to make a lie out of them.

"It used to make me mad when people would say, 'He'd be better off dead.' God gave him to me, and when he's ready he'll take him back," she said.

Meanwhile, though a healthy daughter was born 10 months after Gregory, the young man's father blamed his wife for their son's mysterious condition and eventually left the family. A few years later, Mrs. Bernard married her present husband, Harley, a restaurant cook.

AS YEARS PASSED, Mrs. Bernard watched her son drag himself on his elbows instead of learning to crawl. She watched his light brown hair turn wispy; she waited for his first words. And she was there, holding him, when he had his first stroke. He was 2 years old and had added just three pounds to his birth weight.

"I didn't know what was wrong with him," Mrs. Bernard recalled, as her son wriggled in her arms. "He just wouldn't wake up. Finally, the doctor said he suffered a mini-stroke."

Again, doctors were skeptical about her son's recovery, but his mother was making plans. "I had three dreams for him: that he would have an 18th birthday party, that he would get a high school diploma and that he would have a class ring."

Gregory Mercer's disease was not diagnosed until he was 11. His parents attributed his lack of speech and growth to the brain damage and the strokes. They — and most of his doctors — had never heard of progeria before.

"There's no prenatal test or diagnostic test that predicts (the disease)," said Dr. Brown, of Cornell. "It's just one of those accidents of nature that puts every (expectant mother) at risk."

Progeria victims usually share physical features, such as a small face in relation to head size, thin skin, a pinched nose and tooth overcrowding. Ordinarily, they are of average or above average intelligence.

At an early age, the boys and girls begin balding and develop age spots. The children also suffer from hardening of the arteries, arthritis and other ailments associated with age.

GREGORY MERCER attended a day-care center from ages 9 to 14, until another stroke affected his ability to relearn simple skills. No other schools would take him. "They'd say, 'Look lady, we can't accept him. What you need is a baby sitter,'" Mrs. Bernard said as her son lay on the floor doing flexing exercises with one of his legs. "People are scared to keep Greg, so I stay pretty much shut-in.

"One of his doctors told me keeping him happy was one of the things keeping him alive. It doesn't take much to make him happy. He doesn't seem to need all those things that other kids want. He's happy with the little simple things in life."

TONI HAYES, a neighbor of the Bernards, said when her two young sons play with Gregory they do not seem to notice his physical limitations. Gregory perks up at the sound of Mrs. Hayes's voice in the room and makes his way over to her. She holds him gingerly and looks apprehensively at Mrs. Bernard when Gregory starts twisting in her arms to give her a hug. "At first, I was scared to death to hold him," she said, gently pulling her hair from his fingers. "When he moves around like this, I'm so scared I'll drop him or something. But you get used to Greg. He's a sweetheart."

Mrs. Bernard said she was resigned to rearing Gregory and Denise alone until she met her second husband, who on one of their first dates, changed Gregory's diaper without being asked and without saying a word. "I was shocked," said Mrs. Bernard, looking at her smiling husband. "Some of my own people wouldn't do that for Greg. I knew (Bernard) was something special."

And in the small community of Warner Robins, Gregory Mercer is something special. About 100 out-of-town relatives, church members and friends gathered last year for his 18th birthday party at a local Shoney's restaurant, and an employee donated a tiny 1988 Peach County High School class ring. High schools "don't give out diplomas, but I can't complain," Mrs. Bernard said. "He got two out of three things."

ONE OUTING each year that cheers Gregory is the annual reunion of children with progeria sponsored by the Sunshine Foundation. The children and their families — from as far away as Argentina — meet in the United States for a week of recreation and medical seminars. The Bernard family has attended since the charity began the event eight years ago.

"These kids live for that week," said Mrs. Bernard, as she thumbs through a scrapbook of photographs from past reunions. "For that week, they don't have to put up with being talked about. For one week a year they can be themselves. That week I don't know Greg. He doesn't want me to sit and hold him. He wants to be as big as those other kids.

"It's like they've known each other all their lives."

Japanese corporations help employees to relieve stress

By MAYO ISSOBE
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — Japanese corporations, which have always showed a family-like interest in the ailments of employees, are trying to help workers relieve stress with methods that range from basic counseling to "amenity rooms" with magnetic fields.

In a Health and Welfare Ministry survey conducted last year a little more than 50 percent of adults polled said they felt stress of some kind and 45 percent of the men under stress said that it was due to their work.

Both workers and counselors agree that much stress felt by employees is the result of a quick-paced city life, long working hours, cramped and long commuting hours and increasing use of computer terminals and high-tech equipment.

But over the past two years Japanese companies have been using some of that high-tech equipment to make their employees feel better.

The wooden amenity room, which is just 2 meters wide, 2 meters long and 2.3 meters high (6½ by 6½ by 7 feet), enables two to four people to enjoy nature in the middle of one of the world's most crowded cities.

There, the run-down office worker can view a scene of green, sprawling woods, listen to chirping birds and babbling brooks while the aroma of the deep forest is pumped in.

In addition, a magnetic field, which has proved to ease physical fatigue, can be set up within the room, according to Yoshiyuki Kuboshima of Sanwa Tekki Corp. The company has been marketing the device since last year. He said the room sells for about 2 million yen ($14,000).

Workers at Hitachi Ltd. have been using the device since summer at one of the company's plants, north of Tokyo.

The more gruff steel workers at NKK Corp., a steel maker that employs some 23,000, use more tried-and-true methods to relieve stress.

NKK has long concentrated on educating their employees in managerial positions to be aware of the importance of mental health of their subordinates. The company also has a counseling program run by professionals and a research program on mental health. In fact, NKK in 1988 became the first private corporation to adopt mental health care programs for its workers.

"This trend of companies taking care of the mental side of their workers is probably unique to Japanese corporations," said Takashi Sato, a clinical psychologist employed by NKK Corp.

And the methods can also be unique.

Sanyo Securities Co., for instance, since May 1988 has provided its workers in its trading room in Tokyo with "bodysonic" chairs. The devices, in which a worker sits in a reclining position, includes a hood that covers the face to shut out the outside world and a system in which vibrations from new age music — music written to relieve stress — massage the body.

The chair has proved so popular that even NKK has purchased one, Sato said.

Abnormal brain activity linked to panic attacks

BALTIMORE (AP) — The discovery of a possible link between abnormal activity in the brain's right half and panic attacks may help scientists pin down the cause of sudden bursts of irrational fear that plague 5 percent of Americans.

Dr. Marcus E. Raichle, professor of neurology at the Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis, says people who are prone to panic attacks show greater blood flow and chemical activity in the right brain than in the left hemisphere when they are feeling no panic at all.

Whether this sets the stage for a panic attack is still not known, Raichle said at a briefing at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine. But he said the discovery may put researchers on the right path toward unraveling the mystery of panic attacks.

"This allows us to focus on this area and not a myriad of others," Raichle said.

The research into why the brain produces panic in some people and normal anxiety in others has stirred particular interest.

Panic attacks are sudden bouts of fear often accompanied by rapid heart rate, shortness of breath and chest pain. The effects are so pronounced that 20 percent of the people reporting chest pains to cardiologists suffer from the panic disorder, not a heart ailment, Raichle said.

Scientists at Washington University observed the right-brain, left-brain imbalance in panic-prone volunteers with a sophisticated device called a positron emissions tomography, or PET, scanner. Color-enhanced PET images displayed the imbalance when the patients were at rest, feeling no fear whatsoever.

This imbalance, which was not observed in volunteers who did not have the panic disorder, may be the physiological difference that separates the two groups of people, Raichle said.

After recording the "at rest" brain activity, scientists induced attacks in the panic-prone group by giving them doses of sodium lactate, a chemical that has been measured in the bloodstream in high proportions during attacks. The scientists also aroused normal anxiety in the other group by attaching electrodes to their fingers and threatening to subject them to electric shocks.

The PET scans showed exactly the same brain activity in both groups, increased blood flow and higher electrical activity in the tips of the temporal lobes, the part of the brain that lies behind the eyes.

This finding reinforced the idea that a physical abnormality present in the brain when patients feel calm somehow sets them up for panic attacks when they feel threatened.

DEAR ABBY

Television takes it on chin from folks eager to knock it

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Trish in Easley, S.C." and others among your readers who have chosen to live without television.

Did you know that there is an organization for people who do not have a working television set in their homes and are interested in ridding our society of television dependency?

The Society for the Eradication of Television (SET) believes that TV "retards inner life, destroys human interaction, squanders time and draws viewers into abject addiction." Please spread the word. — SET FREE IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR SET FREE: You rattled the wrong cage. If you, or others, choose to live without television, it's all right with me, but to crusade in an effort to "rid others" of what you call "television dependence" by doing away with all television sets strikes me as un-American.

The television set may provide some folks with the only human voice they hear for days. It provides news and entertainment for millions of people who cannot — or chose not to — leave the comfort, privacy and safety of their homes.

Granted, there's an excess of garbage on TV — but there are also many educational and worthwhile programs. So, please don't work so hard to "free" me. Enslaved, I'm not.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, you said that both men and women need to hear that they are needed, wanted and loved.

I'd like to submit the following proverb I read somewhere many years ago that might help solve this eternal man-woman misunderstanding.

"Men must give love to get sex.

"Women must give sex to get love."

— CARL H. YOUNG, ALLENTOWN, PA.

DEAR CARL: I believe that both men and women give sex to get sex, but in order to get love, they must both give love.

DEAR ABBY: I need help and do not know where to get it. I have been both bulimic and anorexic on and off for about four years. I have coped and dealt with the problem in the past, but bulimia, which I have now, is an ongoing illness, something I turn to whenever I am down.

I am too ashamed to tell my family, and the career I am in (modeling) does not help. I know of many other models who are in the same or similar situations.

Abby, I can't deal with this anymore. I don't have the money for extensive counseling, and I don't know how to find a counselor whom I can trust to really help me. There are a lot more like me out there — more than any of you know. Maybe this will encourage others to get help, too. — NEEDS HELP IN ORANGE COUNTY, CALIF.

DEAR NEEDS: In order to overcome this eating disorder, you will need professional help. You need not feel ashamed to tell your family. It is also important that they understand the nature of your problem so that they can be supportive.

For a referral, write to ANAD (Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders), P.O. Box 7, Highland Park, Ill. 60035. Please enclose a long, stamped (45 cents), self-addressed envelope for the information. Good luck!

DEAR ABBY: I would like to know if it is proper etiquette to put on a wedding invitation, "Adult Reception Only" and also, "Monetary Gifts Preferred." I think that is so tasteless and would like to know if things have changed since I married. — APPALLED OUT EAST

DEAR APPALLED: Nothing has changed. Only those whose names appear on the wedding and reception invitations are invited. And to suggest that "monetary gifts" are preferred is in the worst possible taste.

"How to Be Popular" is for everyone who feels left out and wants an improved social life. It's an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person. To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.

FAMILY MATTERS

Workaholic suffers addiction

By JIM MAY, Ph.D.

May

DEAR FAMILY: My husband works all the time, he never seems to stop. I have become accustomed to raising the children by myself and going to our children's school, sports and social functions by myself. I'm sure that most people just assume that I am a "single mother!" I have talked to my husband about his work habits over and over. He even went to work for part of the day on the day of his father's funeral.

I could put up with his work habits until recently. He has started to complain some about constant headaches and being tired all the time. I try to get him to take time off, but last month he took a long weekend (Friday afternoon to Sunday) to go to the lake and he carried cases with him to work on. I try to get him to go to the doctor and he won't do it.

I think that he is killing himself and I get very angry at him for not taking better care of himself. I can't seem to tell him anything that makes a difference. He just won't stop working all the time. Do you know anything that I might try? STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Your husband is addicted to work. Most workaholics learned very early in their childhood that what they do is more important than who they are, so work becomes the way they establish worth and value. Workaholics overwork because they are obsessed with a need for approval. They get a "high" from work and accomplishments.

Your husband carries his briefcase full of work like an alcoholic carries his bottle. A work addiciton may be more socially acceptable than alcohol, drug, food or sex addictions; but still, it is an addiction. And it is just as hard to break. Furthermore, the workaholic's denial system may be the strongest one of all because "hard work" draws lots of applause from others — never mind that it destroys self and relationships.

What can you do? Refuse to support your husband's addiction. Purchase a copy of Bryan Robinson's book, "Work Addiction." He suggests that the steps to recovery from a work addiction include attending a 12-step program. Since most of the workaholics that I know are adult children of dysfunctional families, I have found the Adult Children of Alcoholics 12-step program to be very helpful.

Don't expect an overnight change. Barring a physical or mental collapse, he's not going to suddenly "see the light." Recovery begins with acknowledging, and then understanding the problem. You and your husband deserve a better life than living with the tyranny of an addiciton. Good luck.

DEAR FAMILY: Communication in our home is zilch. No one talks to anyone. My husband and I are constantly at odds over the children. I think that he is too hard on the kids and he thinks that I am too soft. Do you have any easy ways to help him see that he is just too critical of our boys? EASY

DEAR EASY: An efficient technique in resolving differences in parenting styles is the "family meeting." If your children are at least 3 years old, the family meeting format will work.

Once a week the family meets to discuss the events of the past week and plans for the coming week. Each meeting has a set agenda. First, everyone thanks every other family member for something he or she did that week. Then any problems are discussed. Each person has the right to bring up any problem. Parenting issues can be discussed during this time (assuming your husband agrees first). Review specific events of the week and let the children say how these events "felt" to them. Your husband will have a safe forum to learn from the children how his parenting style effects them.

After problems, discuss any special requirements of the coming week. Close the meeting with a "group hug." Communication within the family is a key ingredient to a happy family, and the family meeting is a great way to facilitate family communications.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Quiz reveals Southerners

By DAVID GRIMES
N.Y. Times News Service

Many people think that you can become a Southerner simply by moving to the South, but this is not true.

The South is a place but a Southerner is a state of mind. You can live in the South for years and never become a Southerner, just as it is also possible to be a Southerner and not live in the South.

How can you tell if you're a Southerner or not? There's no sure-fire way, but there are clues. For example:

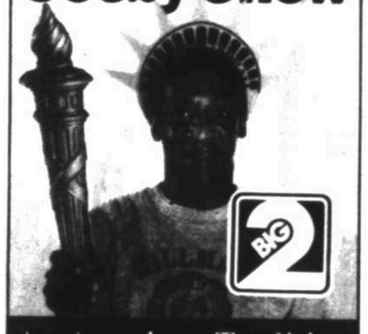

You might be a Southerner if:

- You think the three major food groups are catfish, hush puppies and sweet iced tea.
- Your idea of a fancy restaurant is one that has a sign on the door that reads "No shoes, no shirt, no service."
- You own two or more cars that don't run
- You wouldn't want to move to Atlanta because it's "too cold."
- You think a misspelled tattoo is better than no tattoo at all.
- You're concerned by the rising cost of ammunition.
- You are 28 years old and still living with your mother.
- You have ever participated in a spitting contest.
- Your bass boat is worth more than your house.
- You drive around in your truck with the air conditioner on and the windows rolled down.
- Your idea of a formal party is a party at which someone barbecues a whole pig.
- You call your mother "momma."
- You call your wife "momma."
- You call every woman you meet "momma."

FAA plans no change in retirement rule

By ROBERT BYRD

ATLANTA (AP) — To hear Capt. Jack Young tell it, just when you've reached the peak of your abilities flying a jetliner, they kick you out of the cockpit.

"When a pilot reaches 60, he has gotten there because he's healthy and proficient," said Young, 69, who was forced by 30-year-old Federal Aviation Administration rules to quit flying airliners after 35 years in the cockpit.

Despite mounting pressure and the heroics of veteran pilots, the FAA sees no reason to change its ruling that commercial pilots and co-pilots hand over the controls at 60, or at least get in the back seat as flight engineer.

"It should be optional to continue or retire at 60 or any other age. If a man is physically fit and functionally able and motivated to continue flying, he should be able to do so," said Young, a former Eastern Airlines pilot and the founder of the "Gray Eagles" — formally the Pilots Rights Association.

He hopes to draw on public admiration for veterans like Al Haynes, 58, the United Airlines captain who landed in Iowa in July with no hydraulic controls, and David Cronin, 59, the United pilot who safely landed in February, on his second-to-last commercial flight, after a section of fuselage blew out.

The FAA developed the rule because statistics showed "a significantly higher incidence of incapacitating events" after age 60, said John Leyden, a spokesman in Washington.

"That has been the basis for 30 years."

THE AGENCY has never satisfied itself of a way to separate healthy 60-year-olds from those showing their age, Leyden said.

"Making it 60 may not be the best way to go, but we don't know of any better way."

The rule, which took effect March 15, 1960, has been challenged repeatedly at the FAA and in the courts.

Numerous pilots have sought exemptions but all have lost — most recently in a May decision on a request by 24 pilots.

The FAA noted that while a number of older pilots oppose the rule, others — and their union, the Air Line Pilots Association — support it.

"We're opposed to changing the rule," said Dick Stone, 57, a Delta captain and ALPA executive chairman for aeromedical resources.

Health and safety aside, he said, it "ensures promotion for younger pilots. If we changed the age to an older age, it would stall the careers of some pilots."

Each side can cite studies supporting its point, but the FAA said in May that a performance probably starts diminishing past 50, and "the experience of pilots age 60 and over does not outweigh the danger they present from sudden incapacitation or otherwise diminished mental or physical performance."

The FAA said it is willing to look at any scientific evidence that will help find "a way to discriminate between those who contribute to the adverse trend of increasing accidents (involving older pilots) and those who do not."

"AGE, IN and of itself, should not be the criterion," said Dr. Herbert Karp, a professor of medicine and neurology at Atlanta's Emory University and medical director at the Wesley Woods Geriatric Hospital.

"We know that as we get older, there are certain physiological changes that do occur.

"But there's a great variability in the occurrence of these changes."

Mandatory retirement based on age has "very little justification," and even if there were such a cutoff, 60 is probably as much as a decade too soon, he said.

"We can't say, but it would be likely to be in the seventh decade."

"We really think of problems emerging at 75 and above," said Dr. Robert N. Butler, Brookdale professor of Geriatrics at New York's Mount Sinai Medical Center.

"There is an increased incidence of cardiovascular disease in the late 50s and 60s but there's no sort of arbitrary jump at a magical age called 60."

Besides, Butler said, in a jetliner there's at least one other crew member to fly if the pilot suffers a heart attack.

But the Age 60 Rule applies only to airline pilots; nothing says a 100-year-old can't fly a Cessna anywhere.

"There are people over 60 flying airplanes all the time," he said. "It's only passenger carriers that they haven't been flying."

BUTLER, A former director of the National Institute on Aging, once proposed letting some pilots fly past 60 under a test program.

The FAA declined. "We do need experienced pilots, and it's a shame they haven't gotten to test it."

Meanwhile, a group of about 30 pilots fighting the rule has filed an appeal in the Seventh U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago, which is expected to hear the case sometime next year.

The Gray Eagles are waiting anxiously — as many as 1,000 veteran pilots who aren't quite ready for a life of fishing and golf.

"It's one of those things," said Young. "Unless you're a pilot, you can't understand the magic of flying and the hold it has on you.

"These are guys who feel they can continue making a contribution, and they want to continue doing so."

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Moodiness indicates depression

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Depression can strike at any age, but an adult child should know how to tell if his parent is suffering from the affliction and needs help. Most physicians suggest watching for noticeable weight loss and social withdrawal in an elderly person. Excuses such as "I don't feel like seeing anybody" or "I'm not in the mood for company" may indicate depression.

Seek a physician's advice. In some instances, "not feeling good" may have a treatable physical cause. But if the doctor can find no physical cause for the sadness or depression, it's no help to have the doctor merely pat the patient on the back and tell him to stop worrying. Likewise, tranquilizers are not a problem solvers, either. When suffering from emotional turbulance, an individual needs the care of a good psychiatrist or professional counselor to help him deal with inner problems in a positive and healing way.

Too often, adult children do not wish to intrude on a parent's intimate feelings. Although this feeling is understandable, adult children should realize that such statements as "what is life all about?" or "it isn't worth living" signal the need for professional help.

Grief-related problems may cause many older people to seek relief through drug or alcohol abuse, or even suicide; thus, individuals caught in depression need counseling as well as medical help.

The decision to intervene in a parent's life brings up role change — the adult child taking on responsibility for the parent's treatment.

Many elderly people experience depression. Their lives are full of change which can be difficult to deal with, especially when the changes occur in a short period of time. But a person can be helped in dealing with these problems. Caring families seek and arrange for help for those suffering from depression.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Retirement brings extra benefits

Associated Press

Almost half of the elderly people who qualify for federal Supplemental Security Income (SSI) assistance aren't getting it, according to a study for the American Association of Retired Persons, usually because they either haven't heard of the program or have misunderstood its eligibility requirements.

Under SSI, low-income individuals (people with unearned income generally under $4,650), and couples, who are 65 or older, or who are blind or disabled, can receive monthly checks from the federal government. For more information on SSI, call the social security office or the national AARP number, 800-234-5772.

Other diseases mimic Alzheimer's

N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX — Many other diseases and conditions show symptoms similar to those of Alzheimer's disease, and are treatable, say those who work with caretakers and persons with the disease.

Moreover, minor memory difficulties can be normal and temporary among older people, rather than early signs of the onset of serious disease.

A complete physical, psychiatric and neurologic evaluation should be done by a physician experienced in these disorders before any decision is made, said Joy Rasmussen, program director for the Greater Phoenix chapter of the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association Inc.

"Never accept a cursory examination and diagnosis," she advised.

Alzheimer's disease is defined as "a progressive, degenerative disease which attacks the brain and results in impaired memory, thinking and behavior." Its cause is unknown, and little treatment is available, according to the association, which provides an array of services and resources for both the caretakers and victims of Alzheimer's disease.

From 2.5 million to more than 4 million Americans over the age of 65 may suffer from Alzheimer's disease, according to a comprehensive study published in the most recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

IN FACT, until recently, the label "senile" was commonly used to describe anyone age 65 or older who showed signs of mental decline. Senility used to be considered a normal part of aging.

Today, physicians recognize that it is not normal and is instead the result of some disease.

Illnesses showing symptoms similar to Alzheimer's are strokes and vascular disease, Huntington's, Parkinson's, Pick's and Creutzfeldt-Jakob diseases, according to ADRDA.

Also similar are a number of conditions such as depression, drug reactions, thyroid disorders, nutritional deficiencies, brain tumors, head injuries, alcoholism, hydrocephalus and infections such as meningitis, syphilis and AIDS.

A complete evaluation for Alzheimer's should include a detailed medical history to determine progressive intellectual deterioration and memory loss and to identify personality changes and difficulty with daily activities. It should include a thorough physical and neurologic examination, testing of sensory and motor systems, psychiatric assessment, neuropsychological testing and a mental status test.

LABORATORY TESTS should be made, including blood work, urinalysis, chest X-ray, an EEG (electroencephalogram), a CAT scan (computerized axial tomography) and an EKG (electrocardiogram).

Even these evaluations are considered only 90 percent accurate, according to the association. The only sure way to be certain it is Alzheimer's disease is to examine brain tissue after death.

An autopsy will show tangles of fibers and clusters of degenerating nerve endings in areas used for memory and intellectual faculties. It also will reveal reduced production of certain brain chemicals, especially acetylcholine and somatostatin, which are vital for normal communication between nerve cells.

Scot Styren, a research associate at the Institute for Biogerontology Research in Sun City, Ariz., explained, "For reasons we don't yet understand, an abnormal number of plaques and tangles form in the brain as the disease progresses, leading to increasing loss of memory and mental stability."

Styren referred to the plaques and tangles as "the hallmarks of Alzheimer's disease."

"A plaque is thought to be where nerve endings in the brain have become damaged and non-functional," Styren said, "whereas a tangle is formed when the cell itself is damaged and becomes clogged with fibrous material produced by the cell's own machinery."

INCREASED PUBLIC awareness of Alzheimer's and its devastating effects can cause many older adults to believe that forgotten names or misplaced keys may be early signs of the disease, states the association. However, for most of these people their brief memory lapses are merely symptoms of age-associated memory impairment. Its symptoms are quite different from those of Alzheimer's.

Minor memory difficulties come with aging. They usually result from fatigue, stress or attempting to remember too much information at one time. They also may be caused by alcohol, various medications or problems with vision or hearing.

The condition is neither progressive nor disabling, and the person eventually remembers the information.

Not so with Alzheimer's disease.

Alzheimer's patients forget a whole experience and rarely remember it later on. They gradually are unable to follow directions, work with figures, solve problems or use abstract thinking. They become disoriented in place and time and exhibit changes in mood, behavior and personality. Eventually, they become unable to care for themselves.

Alzheimer's 'a living funeral'

N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX — They are the care givers — and they are often called "the hidden victims" of Alzheimer's disease.

They are the spouses, children and family members who care for a stricken family member, and for them, the emotional, physical and financial stress can be devastating.

"This is not my mother."

"The person he was is gone — but the body's still there."

These are the responses of care givers as Alzheimer's disease gradually takes over the mind of their loved one.

"The brain is slowly being destroyed, and the creative thinking becomes bizarre thinking," says Dr. Robert Kellogg in describing the degenerative process taking place. Kellogg is a psychologist who leads a care givers support group at Desert Sunquest Rehabilitation Care Center at Desert Samaritan Hospital in Mesa, Ariz.

"You are used to having them behave in a certain way, and then they get into this bizarre behavior and it's very, very difficult," he says.

"The disease finally goes into the primitive area of the brain which controls respiration, heartbeat and breathing and the person becomes a vegetable," says Kellogg, whose mother is in the final stages of the disease.

"Finally, there is no longer life.

"This is a living funeral that never ends."

JOY RASMUSSEN explains this ongoing plight of the care giver.

"The bereavement process begins when the victim is still alive because the person they knew is no longer there," she says. "That is the hardest thing the care giver faces."

Rasmussen is the program manager for the Greater Phoenix Chapter of the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association Inc. The association provides information and services to Alzheimer's patients and care givers.

Most frustrating for care givers is the lack of treatment for Alzheimer's.

"There is nothing that can stop this disease. It has taken over," says one of Kellogg's support group members who asked not to be identified. Many members ask for anonymity because of the stigma society still attaches to anyone exhibiting strange behavior.

"This is more devastating than cancer," says the group member after six years of caring for her mother. "With that (cancer) there is treatment, and you can see something happening. And either you're cured or it lasts only a short time. It will end."

Alzheimer's disease, on the other hand, averages eight years and has been known to last 25 years.

Another stress for the care giver is coping with the ever-changing behavior of the Alzheimer's patient.

"I was always behind the curve and unprepared for the next stage, so not the best decisions were made," Kellogg says.

For example, a patient may exhibit repetitious behavior for a while, asking the same questions over and over. This may be followed by a period of refusing to eat. Next, there may be phantom visitors in the home.

In each of these situations, the care giver must learn new coping mechanisms.

MAKING DECISIONS has been one of the most difficult effects of the disease for one of the group members who asked to be identified as Liz.

"Ours was a 49-year marriage," she says of her husband who is now in a nursing home and in the final stages of Alzheimer's.

"We always made decisions together. Now I have to make decisions alone — decisions like where to put him (when he reached the nursing home stage) and should he be force fed."

"You and your spouse become prisoners in your home because you don't want anybody to see him doing these crazy things," she says. "Friends are afraid of the disease, and they stay away."

Drug effective in slowing down Parkinson's Disease

BOSTON (AP) — A drug recently approved for Parkinson's disease appears to be the first to slow down the crippling disorder and may be the first effective treatment for a degenerative brain ailment, a major study today confirms.

The study conducted on 800 people began in 1987 and was scheduled to continue until late next year. But because of the drug's dramatic effect, the researchers ended the study in February in order to provide the medicine to the patients in the control group, which received placebos.

The drug, deprenyl, helped prevent people from becoming sick enough to require levodopa, the standard medicine for symptoms of the incurable disease that afflicts about 500,000 Americans.

"It does not stop the disease," said Dr. Ira Shoulson. "But it may well slow the disease. This may be the first treatment for a neurodegenerative disorder that actually slows the disease."

Until now, levodopa had been the main treatment, easing symptoms but not slowing the disease. Doctors usually refrain from prescribing levodopa until relatively severe symptoms develop because it loses its effectiveness after about a year.

The study, published in The New England Journal of Medicine, was conducted by members of the Parkinson Study Group at 28 medical centers in the United States and Canada.

The researchers wrote that "the results translate into a delay in the development of disability of nearly one year and an extended capacity for full-time employment."

"Over 12 years, this might buy 50 percent more time of less impaired disability," said Shoulson, who directed the study at the University of Rochester Medical Center.

In the research, 399 people with early, untreated Parkinson's were given deprenyl, while 401 others received another experimental medicine or dummy pills. During the followup, 97 of those who got deprenyl worsened enough to need levodopa, compared with 176 in the comparison group.

The doctors are not sure how the deprenyl prevented the patients from reaching their need for levodopa.

The disease attacks the brain and results in symptoms such as shuffling gait, shaking and difficulty talking. It typically strikes people in their 50s and 60s.

Mojo set to face resilient Sandies

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

Saturday's Class 5A bi-district football playoff between Odessa Permian and Amarillo High is a replay of week three in the 1989 season, when the Panthers knocked off the Sandies by a 28-0 count.

But Gary Gaines, head coach of second-ranked, 10-0 Permian, has a feeling that Amarillo will be a different team this time around when Mojo meets it for a 2 p.m. game at Texas Tech's Jones Stadium in Lubbock.

"They've had some personnel changes since we played them and have really come on in the second half of the season," he said of the 7-2-1 Golden Sandstorm. "They have pretty good balance between the run and pass."

That balance Gaines refers to is what enabled AHS to come back from a 20-3 half-time deficit and force a 20-20 tie with Amarillo Palo Duro, District 3-5A's No. 1 seed in the playoffs.

"Amarillo is predominantly a running offense and has a line that averages 210 pounds a man if you count the tight end. But last week they threw one touchdown pass and got another to the 4-yard line, setting up another score," Gaines said. "Another one of their offensive strengths is their kicker, Scott Ferrell."

According to Gaines, Ferrell's toe has yielded at least two field goals of more than 50 yards, the longest of which was 57.

Amarillo's leading ground gainers are senior Ernie Evans, a 5-4, 140-pound scatback who has rushed for 921 yards, and junior Mick Byers. At 5-10, 170 pounds, Byers has gained 627 yards and scored 10 touchdowns while splitting duty with Evans.

AHS also uses the quarterback tandem of Robert Cavin and Jason Lynch. As the senior starter, Cavin has completed 35-of-100 passing for 419 yards, but has thrown no TDs while giving up 10 interceptions. Lynch, a junior, comes off the bench for the Sandies and has completed 17-of-49 (34 percent) for 265 yards and a pair of scores. Lynch engineered both touchdown drives in the AHS comeback with Palo Duro.

Defensively, The unit's leading tackler is Scott Dome, a 195-pound linebacker, who averages 12.6 takedowns per game. Jason Montgomery, a 209-pound defensive tackle, follows Dome in the stats with 10.2 tackles per game.

Gaines cites Amarillo's quickness as its main strength, with a line that averages about 200 pounds a man.

"They run a 5-2 defense, but they do a lot of things off it. They have good quickness and pursuit. As far as the size, their line is pretty close to what our offensive line is so I don't think size will be a factor."

What does concern Gaines is the Panthers' performance against 2-8

Rangers aim for Ponies

Area Football

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

ODESSA — There will be football in Ratliff Stadium, even though Odessa Permian plays out of town this weekend.

Ratliff will be the site of small-school playoff games both tonight and Saturday.

The District 4-3A runnerup Greenwood Rangers will take another crack at the ninth-ranked Denver City Mustangs in Class 3A bi-district action tonight, while the District 5-2A bridesmaid Iraan Braves square off against the 6-2A champ Wall Hawks on Saturday.

Greenwood, 5-5, won its last two regular-season games to edge Kermit for second place in 4-3A. The Rangers will be going up against Denver City for the fourth time in two seasons tonight, but came up empty in their first three tries.

Denver City blanked the Rangers 17-0 in the opening week of the season, just nine months after the Mustangs crushed Greenwood hopes in a 14-6 bi-district win at Ratliff.

The Rangers have been led by junior quarterback Cody Mebane, who has run the Rangers' option offense with increasing effectiveness during district play.

Mebane is supported by senior fullback Brian Aylor and senior halfback Randy Marquez. The trio likes to run behind right guard Mike Bradford and right tackle Jason Gardner, who also anchors the defensive line.

Tonight's winner will face either Childress or Tulia in area playoff action next weekend.

IRAAN AND WALL are two more teams that know each other well. Wall won the first meeting between the two teams this year, 31-17. Iraan pulled out to a 17-0 in that meeting, but seven lost fumbles hurt the Braves.

Iraan is coming off a disappointing 38-7 loss to McCamey and it was only through the good fortune of a coin flip that the 6-4 Braves qualified for the playoffs.

Braves coach Mickey Finley said his team must almost certainly get the early lead to be competitive Saturday.

"If we get behind, it takes us out of our game plan," Finley said. "We throw well when we don't have to, but we're in trouble if we get into a situation where we have to throw."

Iraan's game plan — pure and simple — is to run up the gut. The Braves will try to wear Wall down with the likes of sophomore fullback Riley Malone, the team's leading rusher with 930 yards in only eight games; halfbacks Jesse Rivero, Jason Holifield and Clint Cooper; and quarterback Jay Kent, a former tailback who was the team's leading ground-gainer in '88.

Wall features a more balanced attack led by quarterback Shawn Box, who has thrown for 1,200 yards and 14 touchdowns. The Hawks' ground game is paced by halfback Brandon Braden, who has several 100-yard plus outings.

The Braves defense will counter with a tough group led by middle backer Rito Gomez and Kent at safety.

The Iraan-Wall winner will face the Stamford-De Leon winner next weekend. If Iraan wins, the game will probably be in the San Angelo area.

Giants reel in Bass from Astros

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It took less than three weeks of the offseason for the San Francisco Giants to fill their only lineup hole going into 1990.

If General Manager Al Rosen can acquire a healthy pitcher or two in the time it took him to land Kevin Bass to play right field, he'll be entitled to take the rest of the winter off.

Bass, the first of the 90 free agents to switch teams, ended a seven-year stay with Houston on Monday by signing a three-year contract containing $5.25 million in salary and the no-trade clause the Astros refused to give him.

A switch-hitter with good speed, power and a .275 career average, he's already been told by Rosen that Manager Roger Craig plans to bat him second after Brett Butler and just ahead of the National League's most potent 3-4-5 combination: Will Clark, Kevin Mitchell and Matt Williams. That should add considerable offense to a lineup that finished second in the league with 699 runs.

"This is pretty much like a dream come true for me," said Bass, 30, who rooted for the Giants while growing up in nearby Redwood City. "I had to jump at the opportunity. ... I looked at that ballclub and said, 'Golly, if these guys can't win, who can?' "

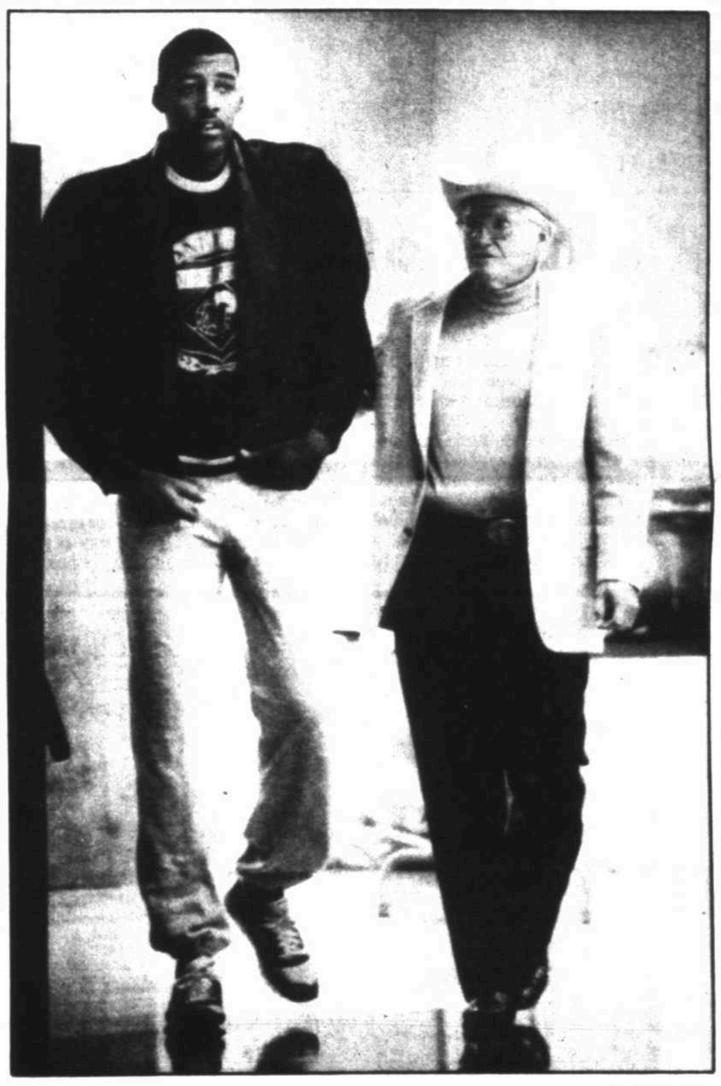

Try NL West contenders San Diego, Los Angeles or Cincinnati, all of whom could take deeper pitching staffs into next season if Rosen doesn't do something to counter the Giants' two-year cycle of pitching injuries.

"We know there are other things we'd like to try to accomplish," Rosen said during a telephone conference call with Bass at Candlestick Park. "If we're able to, we're going to. If not, we feel very comfortable that Kevin Bass will be playing right field for us."

Mark Langston, however, will not be pitching for the Giants. Rosen ruled out the possibility of acquiring the high-priced left-hander, although he said they might pursue another free-agent pitcher.

"The dollars involved (in signing Langston) have a way of magnifying things on our ballclub that I don't want to get into," Rosen said.

Roy Tarpley (left), here with Dallas Maverick owner Don Carter, was arrested Wednesday for driving while intoxicated.

Strike 3 for Tarpley

DALLAS (AP) — Roy Tarpley will be losing some $15,000 a game starting tonight and it isn't certain when, or if, the 7-foot forward might return to the Dallas Mavericks.

"Roy has a disease and we're never going to know if his aftercare has really changed when the day comes we take him back," Rick Sund, vice president of basketball operations for the Mavericks, said.

"We'll be looking at him under a new set of lights," owner Donald Carter said. "We won't ever look at him the same again."

Tarpley, who was supposed to make some $1 million this season, was suspended indefinitely without pay on Thursday by counselors in his after-care program, one day after he was arrested on charges of driving while intoxicated and resisting arrest.

In a telephone hookup from the ASAP Family Treatment Center in Van Nuys, Calif., Dr. David Lewis said that Tarpley would be suspended and that, if a blood test taken by police is positive for cocaine, he will be out of the NBA.

Tarpley, who twice has been treated for drug and alcohol abuse, was arrested Wednesday night for driving his car too close to another. He is also charged with trying to pull away from a woman police officer who attempted to arrest him.

"It is clear that alcohol was involved and that is in non-compliance with his after-care," Lewis said. "Roy will be suspended until he is fully in compliance with his personal aftercare program. He must understand the gravity of this kind of incident and how alcohol contributes to it."

Tarpley has not commented on the incident. He practiced with the Mavericks Thursday morning, then called Lewis before the suspension.

A positive test for alcohol would be a violation of Tarpley's after-care program but not necessarily the "third strike" that would result in a lifetime suspension from the NBA with an opportunity to apply for reinstatement after two years.

But Lewis said if a blood test taken after the arrest turns up cocaine, Tarpley would be suspended for life. Test results may not be available for up to two weeks, police said.

Asked if he advised Tarpley to tell his side of the story, Lewis said, "I don't have any advice for Roy in that regard. I hope he will spend time and energy on himself and his aftercare."

Norm Sonju, chief operating officer and general manager for the Mavs, said Tarpley "was hurt because he felt he let the team down. He was sick about it."

Carter said flatly that Tarpley wouldn't be welcome around the Mavericks' facilities any time soon.

"We won't have any relationship with him," Carter said. "We won't pick him up. We won't give him food. We will have nothing to do with him until the time he is sent back to us to play basketball."

Mavericks coach John MacLeod said, "We want him to be sober and comply and we don't even want him around for any of our meetings. We would take him back and I think our players will have him back someday but he'll have to be rehabilitated."

TERRY WILLIAMSON

A case for two-point conversion

The start of the playoffs is like the start of a new season, and for the 64 teams involved, the excitement starts all over again.

However, that excitement can end quickly as Lee found out last year with the sudden death format. Win, keep playing. Lose, pack the gear. The annual ritual of schools across the state.

Williamson

It's interesting to note that the only way both Amarillo Palo Duro and Amarillo High could make the state playoffs was to play to a tie. That happened, 20-20, last Saturday.

Some may wonder if Amarillo athletic director Sonny Lang found a way of arranging that finale to keep all the playoff money in Amarillo. Of course, that's absurd thinking. Just try to think of Midland High and Midland Lee deciding to play to a tie game. Teams just don't think like that.

Still, one Amarillo High fan told me that he thought his Sandies made a mistake by electing to go for the tie instead of the win. Here's his story:

"I think we should have gone for two points and the win. If we tie, and we did, we were behind in first downs and became the No. 2 seed. That means we have to play No. 2 state ranked Odessa Permian.

"If we had gone for two points, one of two things could have happened. We win the game and play Lee as the No. 1 seed, or we lose and are out of the playoffs. Either way we don't have to play Permian."

The tie did keep Palo Duro's playoff string alive at six straight, but last year was the first time the Dons won a bi-district game during that span of time. Here's hoping they didn't like that experience as much as most teams do.

Doug McCutchen, who left Midland High after a 9-1 season a year ago for Duncanville, is in the state playoffs this year. However, Duncanville has a 4-5 record. Maybe this is the "Justice Factor." McCutchen didn't make it into the playoffs at MHS with a 9-1 record, but he did with a 4-5 team. Anyway, we wish him luck — up until, and if, his team makes it out this way. I still have a hard time considering him an outsider.

Another record has been found for Lee's Farris Strambler. His 150 points on 25 touchdowns scored leads all Class 5A scorers this year. He lost the state 5A rushing title to Andre Session of El Paso Jefferson by 16 yards, but won the scoring title over Session by four points.

Lee quarterback Vince Henderson had scored only two touchdowns (both against Odessa High) going into the last game of the year. Suddenly, against Cooper, he found himself wide open on a 27-yard TD romp off the option where the Cougars all collected around Strambler.

But Vince, were my eyes deceiving me or not? It sure looked like he thought he had already scored at the five-yard line. That final five-yard waltz was a little premature. Saturday, just run to Cuthbert Street before you stop. And if Henderson is running for Cuthbert, Lee fans can start thinking about El Paso.

For once, this corner picked the final outcome of District 4-5A, picking Permian to win and Lee to finish second. Now let's hope that the two teams can meet again. If they do, I don't care how it comes out. I just want to see these two teams battle again. As far as I am concerned, there's not a better show in the state.

Here's how the first round will come out Saturday:

Midland Lee 28, Amarillo Palo Duro 7: No bus ride. A 1 p.m. game to make an early and long trip for Palo Duro. And the "Pay Back" factor. In 1986, Lee lost to Amarillo High by a 14-0 margin. In the "Pay Back" game of 1987, Lee won 35-7 over the Sandies. That's the only "Pay Back" game in Lee playoff history. This is No. 2.

Odessa Permian 40, Amarillo High 7: That wag from Amarillo was right. The Sandies should have gone for two.

Chaps lose to Army team

From Staff Reports

LEVELLAND — Nicknamed Cannoneers, the Fort Sill, Okla., basketball team proved to be a bunch of sharpshooters as they knocked off Midland College 91-88 here Thursday.

The Chaps were beaten in the opening game for the third consecutive tournament event of the young season. MC plays Northern Oklahoma, a 118-80 loser to Western Texas Thursday, at 4 p.m. today, then finishes its appearance at the South Plains College-McDonald's Classic here at noon Saturday against Cisco Junior College.

The Chaps lost to Wilson Optical of El Paso in the opener of their own Chaparral Classic and then dropped a heartbreaking overtime game to the Hutchinson Blue Dragons in the opening of Hutch's Quarterback Classic.

Although outsized by MC, the soldiers from Fort Sill proved their quickness as they jumped to a 6-0 lead. The Chaps finally settled down and got to a nine-all tie. MC trailed 17-19 when the Cannoneers went on a 10-0 spree that was triggered by Sill's James Morris, a 6-4 jumper from Newark, N.J.

A technical foul called against MC's coach Reggie Franklin came in the middle of that run. The Chaps then hit seven unanswered points, kept battling and got within a point before the artillerymen found the range again. At the half, Midland was down by six, 51-45.

Chaparral sophomores Fred Campbell, Darryl King, and Kethus Hanks led a charge of their for MC in the second half. A couple of three-pointers by freshman guard Ron Johnson helped the Chaps' cause as they clawed their way back. Two three-pointers, one each by Johnsn and Hanks, plus a alley-oop pass to Gerald Woods for a basket gave Midland a lead, 68-66, with 10:35 to play.

But six consecutive free throws and a basket pushed Fort Sill back in front 74-68. Midland made one more strong charge as Johnson got a basket and two free throws, Campbell added a basket and Tim Owens hit a running jump shot and a bonus free throw for a foul on the shot. That made it 77-all with 6:16 left, but Fort Sill grabbed control at that point.

Melven Jones hit a basket and blocked shots on successive possessions by Tim Owens. Meantime, Otis Weir was nailing a three-pointer and and three of four free throws for the Cannoneers. Johnson answered with a basket and Campbell had two free tosses to keep MC within three. But Patrick Stevens iced it for Fort Sill with three of four free throws. Kethus Hanks hit a three-pointer for Midland with 11 seconds left.

Owens grabbed a rebound off Stevens' missed free throw and Midland had the ball and a time-out with seven seconds left. But Hanks missed the three-point attempt that would have tied the game with two ticks left. MC's record dropped to 4-3 with the loss.

Judge to hear Carter case today

DALLAS (AP) — As attorneys for disgruntled schoolboy football fans press their case today for participation in the state playoffs, another school district is vowing to fight the move, perhaps by halting the championships.

A state district judge in Austin was to hear arguments this morning from Dallas Carter High School fans for a temporary restraining order that would allow the school to defend its Class 5A state title.

The University Interscholastic League's rulings that barred South Garland High School and Eastland High School from championship play were upheld by two judges on Wednesday.

Lawyers for interested Carter fans, in the third legal challenge to the UIL, prepared to seek a temporary restraining order to reinstate the school into the playoffs.

Thomas G. Jones, a Dallas Independent School District board member, said interested Carter fans were retaining an attorney to file the motion in the school's behalf. Carter was banned from the playoffs for playing an ineligible player Oct. 13.

"Whatever happens needs to happen tomorrow morning," Royce West, a Dallas attorney, said late Thursday. "We are just in a holding pattern."

An attorney for the Duncanville Independent School District vowed that if the Carter motion were filed, he would seek a court order that could halt the championships.

"The minute we find out, we will take action," Duncanville ISD attorney Earl Luna said. "What we will first try to do is to intervene and try to keep the TRO from being granted.

"But it could be granted before we know about it. We would in that case ask the judge to hold up on the playoffs until there is a hearing."

If Carter receives a temporary restraining order, Duncanville will request an expedited final ruling and the district is prepared to take legal measures to postpone the playoffs until a final ruling is issued, said Luna.

Texas law provides that a temporary restraining order is effective for 14 days, beginning the day after it is granted. But a final ruling could take months.

In a similar case involving Carter during last year's playoffs, a judge granted a temporary restraining order in November.

Rangers offer Pettis $1.5 million

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers have offered a free-agent contract to Detroit outfielder Gary Pettis, who won his fourth Gold Glove last season and carried a .375 on-base average.

With the reported $1.5 million, two-year offer, the Rangers become the sixth team to express interest in Pettis. Pettis earned $440,000 last season in Detroit and the Tigers have said they will try to re-sign him.

Ray Anderson, Pettis' agent, said Texas is one of the most appealing teams to the player.

"More so than money, the primary concern is the team and the environment," Anderson said. "The prospects of the team challenging in their division is important because Gary has said he would like to play on another playoff-bound team.

"Texas has some horses. If they can put it together, it certainly is Gary's feeling that Texas has as good of a shot as anyone to knock off Oakland."

The Rangers made the first offer to show that they are serious about signing Pettis, Grieve said.

"We look at him as a top-of-the-order guy based on his improvements from last season," Grieve said. "Besides that, he may be the premier defensive center fielder."

Among the other teams believed interested in Pettis are Los Angeles, Kansas City, San Diego and the Chicago White Sox.

MOJO

San Angelo a week ago, when Mojo romped 37-0 over the Cougars.

"I certainly hope we don't take Amarillo High lightly. Because of we do, we'll get beat. Amarillo High has a good program with a lot of tradition. A lot of that tradition goes back to the 1950s or before, but it's still there and they use it. They play hard.

"Also, if we play like we did last week we'll get beat," he said. 'I'm not planning on making any strategic changes. We will run what's been successful so far, we just need to execute better," he said.

A legendary Jaguar XJ6 for only $39,700* would be wonderful. But a new XJ6 at this price, with a number of very significant improvements, would be quite an accomplishment. Introducing the 1990 Jaguar XJ6.

Our list of improvements starts with a larger, more powerful, 4-liter engine. Our new electronically controlled automatic transmission not only channels our powerplant's energies effortlessly, it enables the driver to switch to "sport" mode for more spirited response.

We've also installed a new Teves anti-lock (ABS) braking system that provides safer, surer stopping, improved fade resistance and a 25% increase in power assistance.

Inside our spacious cabin you'll relax in the rich warmth of hand-polished walnut and soft, supple leather.

But perhaps the most distinctive characteristic found in every Jaguar is its styling, developed by a company with a fifty-year history of building one classic automobile after another.

We invite you to test drive the 1990 Jaguar XJ6. And at just $39,700, give thought to not only raising your standards, but to raising your spirits as well.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your friends will be willing to help you, but only if you lay all your cards on the table. Speak up; holding back will only delay the inevitable. Travel in February. Take a loved one along for a mini-vacation. A telephone call from a former employer in May could lead to a new job. Young people will play a major role in your happiness and financial success next summer. You have a message others want to hear.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Linda Evans, auto racer Tony Bettenhausen, pollster George Gallup, actor Jameson Parker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Write influential people who can be helpful in the near future. Discard outmoded methods at work. A long-term romance works out better than you thought possible. Loved one shares an important secret.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An opportune day for making special requests and seeking bank loans. Romance will surprise you. Look for evening entertainment that will not put a crimp in the family budget. Potluck suppers are fun.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A tricky personal or financial problem demands your utmost discretion. Originality will bring the results you want. An unusual encounter arouses your curiosity about an attractive stranger.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Seek professional advice before signing documents. This is no time to get involved in other people's disputes. Scheduling appointments could prove frustrating. Wait for another day. Romance looks great.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give full rein to your creative talents. Romance is exciting. Do not be afraid to ask old friends for advice. Accept a last-minute invitation with enthusiasm. You are apt to have a ball!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your ego gets a big boost when you come into contact with an old flame. Write to someone influential if you are in need of advice. An unexpected letter could contain a check.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Negotiations should be undertaken with caution. Think twice before signing your name on the dotted line. Stay within your budget. You risk alienating an older person if you fail to observe protocol.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A former love returns. Reject an offer that has too many strings attached. Although the financial picture improves, you should not go overboard when shopping. Cash in an I.O.U. to help your mate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Before tackling a monumental task that will rob you of time with your children, put things into proper perspective. You need to spend more time relaxing with those you love.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Singles need to slow down and look where they are headed. You could find that you are on the wrong track. Call someone you have not talked to in a while. Family life beckons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Treat yourself with more respect and your relatives will follow suit. A contest is fun if you don't take it too seriously. Work on projects that will benefit the whole family.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Those who work with their hands can earn a nice bonus today. Creative endeavors enjoy highly favorable influences. Keep your ears and eyes open at social functions. You could meet someone very special.

We have a correspondent whose bad luck is legendary. Every time a contract seems to be in the bag, some wicked distribution sounds the death knell. True, our friend is accident prone, but the fates are not always to blame.

North-South ended in three no trump after a routine auction. North checked on a major fit, then settled in the no trump game when South turned up with four cards in the "wrong' suit."

West led the jack of diamonds. Declarer won in dummy and made the instinctive play of the club finesse. That lost, and back came another dimond. Declarer won in hand, cashed the ace of clubs and received the bad news. He had only eight tricks, and needed a heart trick for his ninth. Unfortunately, West won the first heart and forced out the last diamond stopper, then got in with the other high heart to cash two diamonds for a one-trick set.

Triply unlucky. Had East held four clubs to the king, declarer would have been home even though a long club could not be set up. And West could not have established and run his diamonds without both heart entries. But South could have made the contract had he stopped to count the tricks available.

Declarer could take three spade tricks, three diamonds and a club on top, so only two more were needed. The heart suit would provide those in perfect safety. Declarer should win the first trick in dummy and immediately lead a heart. No matter how West defends, declarer can establish two heart tricks before the defenders can get anything going. There's just one more trap to avoid—declarer must forgo the club finesse and cash out once the game-going heart tricks are established.

Crumbling of Eastern bloc doesn't mean spies out in the cold, author says

LONDON (AP) — Novelist John Le Carre, whose best-known books powerfully evoke the Berlin Wall, said the breach of that Cold War symbol has left the West uncertain about how to react.

Le Carre

"The West, having got what it's been saying it wanted all those years, doesn't know from Adam what to do with it," he wrote in Thursday's Guardian newspaper.

But Le Carre said the changes in the East bloc present no obstacles for spy writers: "Don't imagine for one second that, just because the Cold War's over, the spooks aren't having a ball."

The 58-year-old Englishman, whose real name is David Cornwell, said his first best seller, "The Spy Who Came In From The Cold," emerged from the anger he felt on first seeing the Berlin Wall. In it, his two main characters are shot to death as they try to get over the wall to West Berlin.

Le Carre said "The Russia House," his latest novel, "drew on the Cold War in order to show that it was over for everyone except the professionals. That the wall should be coming down while my book is still around fills me with quiet joy."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A rock 'n' roll extravaganza to aid earthquake victims will unite some of music's biggest movers and shakers in a daylong, three-site marathon, promoter Bill Graham announced.

Graham

"Here in Northern California, we always thought we had the best vibrations anywhere, until Oct. 17," said Graham, who compared the disaster to "a 15-second war."

The Nov. 26 concerts will feature John Fogerty, Carlos Santana, Sheila E., Crosby, Stills & Nash, Neil Young, America, Eddie Money, the Chambers Brothers, Taj Mahal, Bonnie Raitt, Etta James, Ten Years After and Tower of Power.

The shows will be held at the Henry J. Kaiser Center in Oakland, the Cow Palace, and the Watsonville High School football field.

A separate show, featuring the Grateful Dead, will be held at the Oakland Coliseum on Dec. 6.

Meanwhile, entertainer Bill Cosby will stage benefit performances Dec. 8 and 9 at Harrah's Tahoe in Stateline, Nev., to raise money to aid earthquake victims, a spokesman for the hotel-casino said Thursday.

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — An attorney for Indian activist Leonard Peltier, who was convicted in the 1975 slayings of two FBI agents, says he hopes a film by director Oliver Stone may help get his client out of jail.

William Kunstler, who heads the legal team handling Peltier's appeals, said Stone, whose film credits include "Platoon" and "Wall Street," is working on a movie about Peltier. Kunstler said Wednesday he has been paid as a consultant.

"It's a valuable adjunct to a long cause and a very valuable cause, and I hope it has something to do with getting Leonard out of jail," the New York attorney said.

But Lynn Crooks, an assistant U.S. attorney in Fargo who was one of the prosecutors in the Peltier trial, is not enthused about the prospect of a movie — especially one in which defense lawyers are paid consultants.

"It doesn't take any rocket scientist to figure out where the bias is going to be," Crooks said.

Peltier, a Chippewa from North Dakota, is serving a life sentence for the 1975 murders of two FBI agents on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota.

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Cooper's daughter, Maria Cooper Janis, says her father started out wanting to be an artist, while painter Pablo Picasso fancied himself a hand with a six-shooter.

Cooper

Cooper, hero of many a horse opera in his 98-movie acting career, was always sketching and "was frustrated that he never had the time to make good paintings," Maria Cooper Janis wrote in a remembrance of her father in next week's Parade magazine.

"Picasso and his wife, Jacqueline, were friends of my parents, and we often visited them in the south of France," she said.

"On one visit, Poppa presented the painter with a six-shooter and the white Stetson he had worn in 'Saratoga Trunk.' Picasso was thrilled, and the two of them spent the afternoon firing at beer cans they set up as targets.

"Picasso was far more accurate with a brush than with a gun, it turned out, but Poppa, in his gentlemanly way, deliberately missed shot after shot and the two men had a grand old time."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rap musician Tracy Lynn Curry of The D.O.C. was in stable condition after losing control of his car on the Ventura Freeway, authorities said.

Curry, 21, suffered injuries to his face, including damage to one eye and his nose, said California Highway Patrol Officer David Grajeda. He was in stable condition Thursday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said spokesman Ron Wise.

Grajeda said Curry had alcohol on his breath after the accident Tuesday and was arrested but released before being booked so he could get medical attention.

The D.O.C.'s song "No One Can Do It Better" was No. 12 on this week's rap single's music charts compiled by Billboard magazine.

NEW YORK (NYT) — Whether a long spritz, a short spritz or a steady spritz, the court papers do not say.

No one is even suggesting that it was a malicious spritz.

And the spritzer is still at large.

But a few facts are clear. Someone sprayed Deborah Martorano with perfume on the afternoon of April 30, 1984, just as she entered Bloomingdale's in Manhattan.

The spritzer, hired by a perfume company and trained by the store to demonstrate the latest fragrance, did not get permission from Ms. Martorano before spraying.

Thursday it was disclosed that Ms. Martorano, now 36, had accepted a $75,000 settlement from the department store. The perfume apparently caused Ms. Martorano, a lifelong sufferer of asthma and allergies, to become seriously ill.

She spent 10 days in New York Hospital, where her lawyer said she was treated for "respiratory distress." Her medical bills, he said, ran to $12,000.

Martina outlasts Seles in 3 sets

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — It was a match that evolved into an ordeal, as the embattled Martina Navratilova, who at this stage of her career finds herself fighting off opponents half her age, held fast against an uninhibited challenge from Monica Seles.

Navratilova finally subdued Seles on Thursday night, 6-3, 5-7, 7-5, in a 2-hour-20-minute confrontation between players who, at this juncture of their professional lives, are not expected to be such equals.

"I want a stretcher," said Navratilova who, unlike Seles, did not fall prey to cramping as the tension of the match heightened.

"Survival of the fittest," Navratilova added, not quite in jest, after advancing to the semifinals of the Virginia Slims Championships for the first time since 1986.

She will face the winner of Thursday's match between Arantxa Sanchez Vicario and Manuela Maleeva.

The second singles quarterfinal was also a prolonged battle. Gabriela Sabatini, the defending champion, who is famous for her unpredictable motivation level, blundered through the second set but recovered in time to defeat Zina Garrison, 6-3, 5-7, 6-3.

Although Sabatini won the first set handily, Garrison, seeded fifth, struck back in the second set, primarily by outwitting her rival.

Garrison countered Sabatini's airy topspins with an assortment of responses. Drop shots drew Sabatini breathlessly toward the net and were followed up by devious lobs, and Garrison's fleetness around the net foiled Sabatini's passing attempts.

The final set was a meanly paced sprint in which the 19-year-old Argentine proved the meaner player. When Sabatini lost her serve in the third game, she retaliated by breaking Garrison.

Sabatini, aided by her own down-the-line forehands and Garrison's overhit forehand at break point, then claimed a critical ad vantage by breaking Garrison in the eighth game. Sabatini then served for the match and gained the chance to meet, in the semi finals, the victor of Thursday's match between Steffi Graf and Helena Sukova.

The Navratilova-Seles match began as a seemingly mild battle of wills between an upwardly mobile 15-year-old rookie from Yugoslavia and a 33-year-old veteran intent on proving she need not look backward to gaze on her better days.

Seles applauded when Navratilova came onto the Madison Square Garden court.

Navratilova smiled indulgently when Seles ventured away from the base line to test herself in a duel at net.

Navratilova jumped out to a 4-0 lead by sniping away at Seles' serve and fighting hard to hold her own.

But Seles was unbowed by that development, held serve in the fifth game, then broke Navratilova in the sixth to ease her way into the set at 4-2.

When Navratilova served for the set at 5-2, Seles spoiled her plan, breaking her with a searing cross-court backhand.

Although Navratilova broke Seles to claim the set, 6-3, she did it without a presaging of dominance, and with an increasing shadow of alarm on her face.

In the second set, where Seles staged an improbable comeback, winning six consecutive games to even the match at a set apiece, Navratilova paused after one showdown with Seles' bullwhip forehand and reassessed her competitor.

"It's like playing a cannon," she said she had told herself, as if clearing up the matter of her opponent's identity might make it easier to fathom a game plan against her.

Seles held serve just once in the first set. She did not hold it again until the eighth game of the second set, right after she had broken Navratilova as she served for the match.

"It had never happened to me before," Seles said of her unreliable serving. Seles also said she had never had cramps before in a match,

"But for exhaustion, this was the hardest match I've ever played," she said.

When Navratilova tried again to seal the match in the ninth game, Seles broke her again, then held serve to gain a 5-5 stalemate in a set where she had trailed, 5-1, just minutes before.

In the 11th game, instead of serving for the match, Navratilova was merely serving to reverse a terrible trend and take some steam away from her resurgent challenger.

But she got into trouble, stymied by Seles' booming service returns, and after using an ace to erase a double-break point against her she was ambushed at midcourt by another passing shot.

Seles quickly took advantage of Navratilova's wavering confidence and, given her first lead of the match, the youngster served impeccably to close out the second set at love.

"I don't think she had any unforced errors, and if she did, they were inconsequential," Navratilova said of Seles's play in the second set.

"It was like a bazooka," Navratilova said of a Seles cross-court shot that "mercifully" strayed a few inches out of bounds. "I just hope she doesn't start to hit the ball too much harder. She's going to blow us all off the court."

Navratilova said she steeled herself to win the first game of the third set and put a crimp in Seles's momentum.

Navratilova broke Seles in the second game. But instead of re-establishing the pattern of the first two sets, she let herself down in the third game and allowed Seles to even the breaks.

Navratilova held her serve for a 6-5 advantage.

Then, finally, Seles appeared to suffer a lapse of will power.

She double-faulted to 5-40, launched a poor first serve at match point, got her second serve across, then took a helpless swing as Navratilova's bold forehand return plummeted deep in to the corner and ricocheted off the handle of her racquet.

Title on line for Yale in 'The Game'

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — The Yale Bulldogs, who were first taught nearly a century ago and given a fresh reminder a decade ago that an undefeated Ivy League record means little in "The Game," will be playing for the Ivy title Saturday against a Harvard team eager to play the role of spoiler.

Yale clinched a share of its 12th Ivy League championship in 34 years by beating Princeton last week, and can have the title to itself if it can beat Harvard. Yale could lose and win the league crown outright if Princeton, 5-1 in league play, loses to lowly Cornell.

Yale (8-1, 6-0 Ivy) suffered its only loss of the season to Connecticut. Harvard (4-5, 4-2) has won three of its last four games following the return of running back Jim Reidy.

Pro players took cash in college

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Nearly one-third of current and former NFL players responding to a survey said they accepted illegal payments while in college; 53 percent said they saw nothing wrong with breaking NCAA rules to get extra cash.

The study also found cheating to be most pervasive in major conferences, particularly the Southeast Conference, where 67 percent of the league's former players said they accepted under-the-table payments to augment their scholarships.

The study by Allen L. Sack, a sociology professor at the University of New Haven, was based on responses from 1,182 active and retired NFL players — roughly a third of the 3,500 contacted.

"For me, the results said that it's far more than what they say at the NCAA — that it's not just a renegade institution or the deviant player. There's a substantial underground economy that's likely to be unstopped," Sack said.

"I think the problem with the system is that it's humiliating for athletes and degrading for higher education," he said Thursday, in a telephone interview from the New Haven campus.

David Berst, NCAA assistant executive director for enforcement, said he had not seen the study, but expected that someone at the NCAA would review the findings.

"I don't know how to react for sure," he said.

Sack said the respondents indicated that the "vast majority" of illegal payments were made by alumni, although coaches also reportedly made improper payments. Payments were made by sliding cash under dormitory doors, or in congratulatory handshakes after games, Sack said. One player said he typically found cash in his helmet every Monday before practice.

An important source of illegal cash was derived from the sale of complimentary tickets each player receives, the survey showed. Sack said one player admitted getting as much as $1,000 per ticket. NCAA rules prohibit players from selling game tickets.

Most players who admitted accepting illegal payments said they received a total of about $1,000 over four years. In addition to cash, they accepted free meals and clothing, Sack said. A new suit was a popular payoff among older players, the study found.

One player, however, said he received a total of $80,000 in illegal payments over his college career. Another said he was offered part interest in an oil well but refused, Sack said.

Under NCAA rules, a player can only be awarded enough scholarship money to cover room, board and fees. A college player who accepts payment to play can be forced to forefeit his scholarship, and his school could face disciplinary action by the NCAA.

Seventy-eight percent of those responding said they thought the financial aid provided student-athletes under existing NCAA rules was inadequate.

Sack said the NFL Players Association provided him with the names and addresses of 3,500 former and current NFL players, each of whom was mailed a questionnaire. The respondents ranged in age from 22 to 83.

He said the players association agreed to participate because it wanted to learn how widespread the use of agents was among college athletes. Sack said 17 percent of those surveyed said they had been approached by agents while undergraduates — another NCAA violation.

The survey found that 83 percent of former SEC players who responded knew of athletes who took illegal payments, while 67 percent of the former SEC players admitted to receiving payments, Sack said.

Fast-start Bucks tie record

Associated Press

The Milwaukee Bucks showed the expansion Orlando Magic what fast starts are all about.

The Bucks tied an NBA record with 50 points in the first quarter Thursday night and went on to romp 132-113, sending the Magic to its fifth straight loss.

Orlando opened the season by winning two of its first three games. But since then, the Magic has struggled.

"We definitely jumped on them from the beginning," said Ricky Pierce, who finished with 28 points. "We weren't underestimating this team. They'd played Detroit to the wire."

In other games, Houston beat the Los Angeles Clippers 94-82, Seattle stopped Washington 111-96 and New York defeated Sacramento 121-102.

The host Bucks raced to a 13-0 lead. They made 21 of their 24 field-goal tries, including all three of their 3-point attempts, in the first quarter.

Milwaukee matched the mark for points in an opening quarter, set by Syracuse in 1962 and tied by Boston and Utah in 1982. The record for points in any quarter is 58, set by Buffalo in 1972.

"We moved the ball around and got a lot of easy shots in the first half and that enabled us to get the early lead," said Alvin Robertson, who, along with Jay Humphries, got 10 points in the first quarter. "From that point on it was pretty much a fun game."

Orlando was held without a basket until Reggie Theus scored 3½ into the game.

"We came out and fizzled the game away. We took a step backward," Theus said. "We were tentative. What have we got to lose? A game? We have to be overachievers."

The Bucks led 77-58 at halftime and were ahead 112-89 after three quarters.

"We didn't have a book on them so we cautioned our guys to play hard early and they did," Milwaukee coach Del Harris said. "After that, the game settled down and was pretty even the rest of the way."

NBA Roundup

Rockets 94, Clippers 82

Otis Thorpe had 27 points and 10 rebounds as Houston beat Los Angeles, shortly after the Clippers made two major moves.

The Clippers traded holdout Danny Ferry, the second overall pick in this year's draft, and Reggie Williams to Cleveland for Ron Harper and three high draft choices. They also re-signed Benoit Benjamin, who had hoped to join Ferry in Italy, to a one-year contract.

Akeem Olajuwon had 18 points and 10 rebounds for the Rockets. Mike Woodson scored 16 in his first game off the injured list.

Gary Grant scored 21 points and Tom Garrick had 16 for the visiting Clippers.

Knicks 121, Kings 102

Patrick Ewing scored 32 points and New York ended Sacramento's nine-game home winning streak that started last season.

Ewing, who had 43 points Tuesday night in a loss at Portland, shot 15-for-26 from the field and grabbed 11 rebounds.

Gerald Wilkins scored 25 points and Charles Oakley had 17 rebounds for the Knicks. Johnny Newman had seven points during a 9-2 burst that made it 115-95 with 2:07 left.

Wayman Tisdale scored 25 points and Rodney McCray 23 for the Kings.

SuperSonics 111, 111, Bullets 98

Rookies Dana Barros and Shawn Kemp sparked a 17-2 spurt in the third quarter that sent host Seattle over Washington.

The Bullets, playing for the fourth time in five days, led 68-67 with 6:42 left in the third period. Barros, a 5-foot-10 guard from Boston College, scored seven points.

Payton wants a team

By R.B. FALLSTROM
AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Former Chicago Bears running back Walter Payton, who holds the NFL career record for rushing yardage, wants to be the league's first black owner.

Payton on Thursday became a full partner in the St. Louis NFL Partnership, which is trying to acquire an expansion franchise for the city. Payton joined Fran Murray, minority owner of the New England Patriots, and Jerry Clinton, owner of Anheuser-Busch Inc.'s largest distributorship, in St. Louis County, in efforts to bring the NFL back to the city.

St. Louis lost its NFL franchise when the Cardinals left for Phoenix after the 1987 season.

"Walter's participation in this project is like our proposed stadium itself — bigger than life," Clinton said. "As a player, Walter was in a league by himself."

"The St. Louis application will be second to none and no one could provide our fans with the prospects for a great football like Walter will," Clinton said.

Payton, 35, who rushed for 16,726 yards in 13 seasons and also holds the league record with 110 touchdowns, said he has been looking for a chance to get into ownership since retiring after the 1987 season.

"When I left the NFL one of my dreams was to be an owner of an NFL franchise," Payton said. "At that time, St. Louis was not available, so I made my rounds and did the things I needed to do to get myself prepared and situated.

"St. Louis to me was the key city for expansion. It stands head and shoulders above the rest of the cities that are looking for franchises simply because of what it has to offer."

Payton said he was looking forward to working with Murray and Clinton, who formed the St. Louis NFL Partnership in February.

"They are a group that has the same ideals and the same philosophy in terms of getting a franchise that I have," Payton said. "I agreed to join this partnership on the basis that I would be an owner to fulfill my dreams and take that team to the Super Bowl."

The partnership also announced the completion of its financial structure, appointing Public Financial Management Inc. of Philadelphia as its chief financial agent.

Public Financial will be responsible for obtaining the $350 million needed to get the team and the proposed 70,000-seat domed stadium off the ground.

STRIKE

"I am embarrassed and frustrated," Carter said. "Have you ever wanted to haul off and hit your head against a wall?"

"We'll go on with or without him," Mavericks guard Rolando Blackman said. "We're not going to ride that emotional roller coaster anymore."

"It seems like every time we get things set up around here, we get a disruption," assistant Richie Adubato said.

The arrest came less than 48 hours after Tarpley's best performance of the season — 26 points and 20 rebounds in a 113-109 overtime victory at Seattle on Tuesday.

Tarpley also was arrested on four traffic charges, including tailgating, and an improper lane change, and failure to have his driver's license and proof of insurance with him.

Driving while intoxicated and resisting arrest are Class B misdemeanor charges, punishable by up to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Tarpley took a blood test instead of a breathalyzer test, police reported.

In October 1987, Tarpley admitted seeking counseling for alcohol and cocaine problems, constituting his first strike under the NBA's anti-drug policy.

The second strike came in January, when he told drug counselors at the ASAP Family Treatment Center which administers the NBA's treatment programs that he needed help to control a drug problem. He was suspended without pay and went to an ASAP center in Van Nuys, Calif.

He returned to Dallas March 16, began practicing with the team April 6 and played on April 12. In the 49 games Tarpley missed, the Mavs went 17-32. With Tarpley, the team was 21-12.

On Oct. 27, Tarpley disappeared for 24 hours, missing a Mavericks practice. Under the NBA's anti-drug policy, Tarpley could have been fined or suspended. The Mavericks fined him $250.

Tarpley, the seventh pick in the 1986 draft, leads the NBA in rebounding with a 16.8 average in six games this season.

"It's going to take this young man a long time to lick his problem," Sonju said. "Obviously, he hasn't licked it in two years."

NIT team likes treys

NEW YORK (AP) — Lou Carnesecca at one time had as much use for the 3-point field goal as for a three-piece suit.

With the addition of Prop 48 sophomore Chuck Sproling and the obvious need for an outside game to go with a strong front line, Carnesecca has switched rather than fight the long jumper as a focal point of the St. John's offense.

The 25th-ranked Redmen set a school mark for 3-point shots and nearly equalled another Thursday night in a 64-57 victory over North Carolina A&T in an opening-round game in the preseason NIT.

Playing without co-captains Jayson Williams and Boo Harvey, Carnesecca knew that the Aggies' well-packed zone would mean the Redmen would need a big game from the 6-foot-6 Sproling.

"He gave us a little lift and this was his first college game," Carnesecca said of the Denver native, who scored 12 points and made three of six 3-point attempts. "We talked about the shot before the game. We're trying."

Last season, the Redmen averaged two 3-pointers and six attempts per game. St. John's took 15 shots against North Carolina A&T, three more than the school record, and made six, one short of a school mark.

"Coach Carnesecca has a lot of confidence in me and I feel comfortable about taking it," said Sproling, who also had five steals, four rebounds and three assists.

St. John's was never able to feel comfortable about the game even after taking a 50-35 lead with 13:03 to play.

The Aggies, facing a two-inch height disadvantage per man on the front line, hung tough with zone defenses, getting within 59-57 with 55 seconds to play on a 3-pointer by Glenn Taggett, who led North Carolina A&T with 14 points.

Malik Sealy, who led St. John's with 22 points and 11 rebounds, then scored on a drive with 22 seconds to play.

"I knew there were four seconds left on the 45-second clock and I saw a hole in the zone and started to drive," Sealy said. "As soon as I felt the man I started the shooting motion. It was close."

Aggies coach Don Corbett didn't think so.

"There is no continuation in college. He was fouled on the floor," he said. "I don't want to talk about it. I'll dream about it but I won't talk about it. That was a big play."

Sealy missed the free throw but the Aggies couldn't connect and three free throws by the Redmen accounted for the final score.

"I expected to win. I didn't play to be close," Corbett said. "They were under some hardships but we had a mental lapse and poor shot selection that caused us to go down by 15."

The 6-10 Williams is out indefinitely with a displaced fracture in his right foot. Harvey, the point guard, was sitting out a one-game suspension handed down by the NCAA for playing in an unsanctioned summer league game.

"Without Jayson and Boo, I didn't feel I had to score more but I felt I had to raise my game to another level of intensity," Sealy said.

St. John's sophomore center Robert Werdann had a tough night.

Wichita State's John Cooper dribbles past Houston guard Chris Morris in first round action of the Dodge NIT.

Houston 67, Wichita St. 66

Wichita State turned the ball over with 49 seconds to play and Smith ran out the shot clock to leave the Shockers just a few seconds of working time. Aaron Davis missed a 10-foot shot.

Lance Kroll connected from the lane to give Wichita State a 66-65 lead with 1:33 left, its first advantage since early in the game. The Shockers missed their first four shots of the second half and trailed by nine points before rallying, cutting the deficit to 63-62 on John Cooper's basket with 4:02 remaining.

Smith led all scorers with 29 points, including 19 in the first half as the Cougars built a 41-37 lead. Cooper led the Shockers with 15 points and Davis had 11. Houston's Carl Herrera had 13 points and Craig Upchurch had 10.

Former Sooners convicted

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Former Oklahoma football players Nigel Clay and Bernard Hall were convicted Thursday night of first-degree rape, and jurors were to return Friday morning to decide the fate of Glen Bell.

The jury was split 9-3 on a verdict for Bell, a jury foreman said, but he did not indicate which way it was split on its deliberations.

The jury assessed 10-year sentences and $10,000 fines for Clay and Hall.

Hall, of Detroit, Clay, of Fontana, Calif., and Bell, of Muskogee, Okla., were accused of raping an Oklahoma City woman on the night of Jan. 21 at the athletic dorm.

After two days of testimony, the jury began deliberations Thursday morning and reached a verdict on Clay and Hall about 11:10 p.m.

Several friends and relatives of the men cried when District Judge Preston Trimble read the guilty verdicts, after about 11¼ hours of deliberations.

Hall, dressed in a rose-colored sports jacket, had a tearful embrace with his mother and father before he was handcuffed to Clay and led out of the courtroom.

"I'm pleased with the jury's verdicts on the two defendants," District Attorney Tully McCoy said. "It was a very difficult case. We presented the evidence to the jury and justice was done."

Fred Schaeffer and Joel Barr, defense lawyers for Hall and Clay, left the courtroom with commenting.

A solemn Bell, the only defendant who did not testify in his defense, was hurried out of the courthouse after the verdicts.

"I was shocked, to say the least," said Charles Cox, Bell's lawyer. "It was obviously a disappointment to co-counsel and to their clients."

Cox said that although the jury could not indicate how it was leaning in Bell's case, he assumed they were leaning toward conviction, based upon the verdicts in the other two cases.

He said noting how long the jury had been deliberating, however, he felt the three jurors holding out were "pretty strong."

Jurors were to reconvene at 9 a.m. Friday. Trimble sent them home and admonished them not to see, hear or read any news accounts of the two convictions.

Hall, Clay and Bell were suspended from the team and the university when charges were filed in February, one of a series of off-field incidents that rocked Oklahoma's football program.

McCoy said in final arguments Thursday that he believed the evidence was conclusive that a rape occurred and that Clay, Hall and Bell "did it."

Shaeffer told the panel the only way they could find any of the defendants guilty is to make a guess.

"Don't guess these guys guilty. Don't guess them into the penitentiary. It's not the American way," he said.

Assistant district attorney Irby Taylor earlier urged the jury not to be influenced by the fact that the defendants had once played for Oklahoma.

Shaeffer and Cox attacked the credibility of the state's key witness, Jimmy Fennell.

Fennell, a former teammate, testified Wednesday that he saw the three defendants rape the woman.

"Jimmy Fennell is a liar. He's lied from the beginning. He's even lied in this courtroom," Shaeffer said.

Clay and Hall testified Wednesday that they were not in the dormitory room when the woman allegedly was attacked.

On Tuesday, the 20-year-old woman recounted the events of the night of Jan. 21. She told the court she could not identify her attackers because it was dark in the room.

Hardin-Simmons restarts football

ABILENE (AP) - Football returns to Hardin-Simmons University next fall, but it will be a far cry from the glory years when Sammy Baugh coached the Cowboys.

The school dropped football in 1963, two years after the Border Conference folded and three years after Baugh returned to the National Football League as a coach.

Dr. Jesse C. Fletcher said Thursday the football team will be non-scholarship and will play against similar programs. They will compete in either NCAA Division III or the NAIA, he said.

As part of the switch in athletic programs, all sports except baseball will become non-scholarship and the school's will drop out of the Trans America Athletic Conference. The university was a charter member of the TAAC and the final conference competition will be this basketball season.

Fletcher said it is possible that the school might eventually join another conference that competes with non-scholarship athletes.

Dr. Merlin Morrow, H-SU's athletic director, said that scholarship commitments for existing students would be honored, but emphasized that the focus would now be on recruiting students who simply want to play intercollegiate sports as part of their collegiate experience.

The school's rifle and cross-country teams will be dropped as part of the transition, Morrow said.

BASS

The only other free agent to sign so far is Doug Bair, who returned to the Pittsburgh Pirates on Tuesday for one year at $325,000.

Bass called it a "once-in-a-lifetime" opportunity to play for both a pennant winner and his hometown team. He also is happy about rejoining Rosen, who traded for Bass when he ran the Astros. Rosen is so enamored of Bass that he offered him the Giants' first-ever, no-trade clause, calling it a sign of changing times.

"I'm a great believer in chemistry on a ballclub," said Rosen, who has known Bass since he was in the minors. "He plays hard, he plays every day, he gives you everything he's got. He's a fine person, and I know he'll fit in great with this club."

Bass thinks so, too.

"Look who I'm hitting in front of," he said from his home in Sugar Land, Texas. "Hey, there won't be any attention on me. The attention's going to be on Brett being on first base and Will hitting behind me."

Bass has 78 home runs and 111 stolen bases in seven major-league seasons, including an 18-game stint with the Milwaukee Brewers in 1982. He will get $1.75 million in each of the next three seasons. A portion of his 1990 salary will be paid up front as a signing bonus, but the amount has not been determined.

He hit .300 with five home runs and 44 RBIs in 1989.

Texas jobs grew by 134,800, report says

AUSTIN (AP) — The number of non-farm jobs rose by 134,800 in Texas in the 12-month period ending in August, lifting the total of non-agricultural jobs in the state to a record 6.8 million, the state comptrtoller's office said.

Border areas recorded the highest rate of job growth, with the Gulf Coast metropolitan areas accounting for more than one-third of all new jobs in Texas, Comptroller Bob Bullock said.

"Chemical industry expansion and increased trade and manufacturing along the border have been leading the job growth in Texas over the past year. Overall, the state's economic expansion remained on track providing new jobs, higher income and more state revenues," Bullock said Thursday.

The Plains region, covering the Panhandle and much of West Texas, was hit by oil company consolidations and reported job losses.

Twenty of the state's 28 metropolitan areas gained jobs during the 1989 fiscal year. The five metro areas with the highest rates of job growth were Laredo, up 5.2 percent; Brazoria, up 4.2 percent; Texarkana, up 4 percent; El Paso, up 3.4 percent, and McAllen, up 3 percent.

Although manufacturing growth continued to drive the Texas economy in 1988, the job growth during the past year has been more diverse, Bullock said.

Maquiladora-related businesses, including manufacturing of components and trucking and warehouse operations, prospered along the border.

Petrochemicals, metals, plastics and electronics industries expanded on the Gulf Coast, and high-tech expansion continued in the central corridor. Transportation and telecommunications led job growth in the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex.

Housing starts surge 12 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing starts rebounded 12 percent in October to their highest level in nearly three years after falling in September to their lowest point since the 1982 recession, the government reported today.

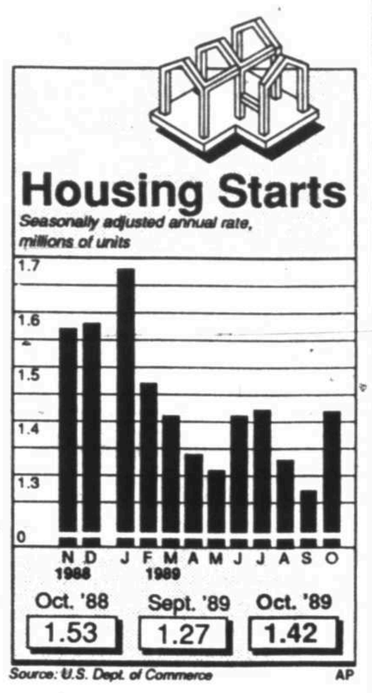

The Commerce Department said new homes and apartments were built at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.42 million units last month, up from a revised 1.27 million units in September. Starts had fallen 4.6 percent in September and 6.4 percent in August.

The October gain was the largest since a 13 percent advance in December 1986.

September's 1.27-million-unit pace was the most sluggish rate since new homes and apartments were being built at an annual rate of 1.17 million units in October 1982, during the depths of the 1981-82 recession.

The housing construction industry has been one of the economic sectors slowed by high interest rates caused by the Federal Reserve's grip on credit as it strives to cut inflation.

Kerr-McGee looks to expand in Basin

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Kerr-McGee is looking to improve its position in the Permian Basin and plans an increase of approximately 25 percent in its 1989 drilling budget, according to Frank A. McPherson, chairman and chief executive officer.

McPherson and an entourage of Kerr-McGee were in Midland Thursday as honorees at a Midland Wildcatters Reception.

Following the acquisition of Flag-Redfern Oil Co., McPherson said the company was looking to make similar acquisitions to improve its position in the Permian Basin, which now accounts for about 10 percent of its production in the lower 48 states, including offshore.

"Consolidation of Flag-Redfern into Kerr-McGee is complete," said McPherson, "and only a handful of leases acquired in the purchase have been sold."

He said the Permian Basin was one of the areas the company had targeted for increased activity.

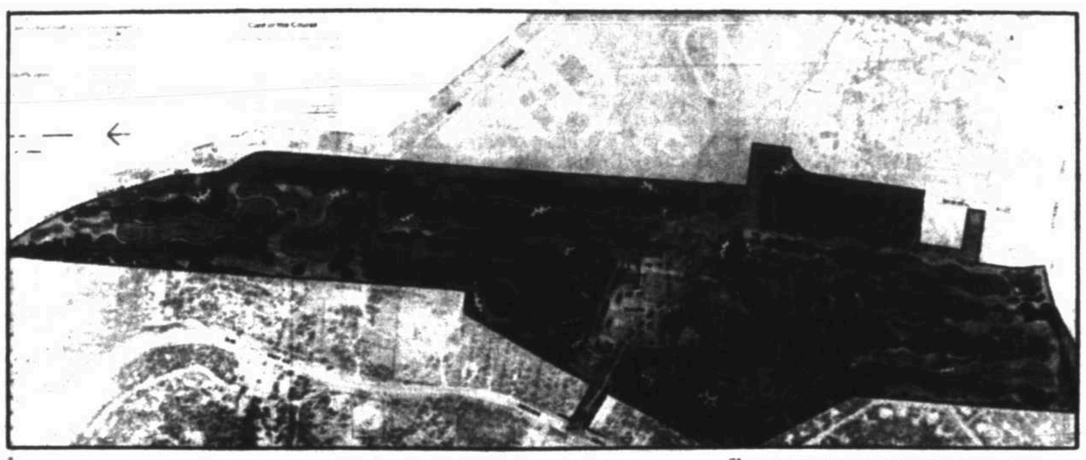

The Tulsa-based Kerr-McGee first opened an office in Midland in 1953; closed it 1959 and did not reopen an Midland office until 1983.

Ruidoso working on expansion

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Construction on an $11 million project designed to position Ruidoso as a year-around resort is underway and plans are to open by July 1991, according to the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce.

Over the next two years, construction crews will work to complete an 18-hole golf course, 200-room resort hotel and civic events center. As part of a masterplan for the former Ruidoso Valley Municipal Airport site, all of the new facilities will be located on the 160 acres off U.S. Highway 48.

In addition to the $11 million in commercial developments, construction on a $10 million performing arts center will begin in the summer.

"When we were making plans for the old airport site, one of our main criteria was to create a major resort that would increase our tourism appeal and conventions and business meetings," according to John Underwood, Village of Ruidoso city attorney. "The addition of these facilities really allows us to better compete for more tourism and convention business."

Ground has been broken on the Sierra Bianca Golf Club, which is estimated to cost $3.5 million, according to Tracey Moran, marketing director of the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce. Jim Colbert Golf Inc., of Las Vegas is in charge

Bank closings raise Texas total to 126

DALLAS (AP) — Two more Texas banks failed Thursday and federal regulators approved assumption of their assets by other institutions.

Customers of Love Field National Bank, Dallas, and Executive National Bank, San Antonio, automatically became depositors of the assuming financial institutions.

With the latest closures, regulators reported 126 bank failures and one assistance transaction this year in Texas. Nationally, 186 banks have failed.

Love Field National's sole office reopens Friday as a branch of Hibernia National Bank of Pflugerville, Texas.

Hibernia National also assumed the deposits and secured liabilities of Executive National in San Antonio.

Love Field National, with assets of about $31 million, and Executive National, containing $8 million in assets, were closed by the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was named receiver of both institutions.

Comptroller's office examinations in 1986 and 1987 revealed problem loans at Love Field National and Executive National.

Prosecutors take gentler approach

By VERA HALLER

NEW YORK (AP) — Rudolph Giuliani went in like a lion and came out like a lion, parlaying a crime-busting record as U.S. attorney into a run for New York City mayor. His successor, Otto G. Obermaier, doesn't roar much.

No one is calling Obermaier a lamb, at least not until it becomes clear whether the new chief federal prosecutor for Manhattan intends to continue Giuliani's historic assault on Wall Street crime.

Obermaier clearly has a different background. Before taking office last month, he specialized in defending white-collar criminals. In fact, he represented several professionals targeted in the government's three-year insider trading investigation.

Legal experts say Obermaier won't abandon criminal securities fraud cases — more than 30 people and four brokerages were convicted or pleaded guilty in cases started under Giuliani — but they do envision a kinder, gentler approach.

To wit, don't expect Otto Obermaier to hold news conferences trumpeting indictments or to arrest stockbrokers in handcuffs.

"With Obermaier, I think you will see a little less aggressiveness and a little more care before cases are brought, but I expect him to be very effective," said Harvey J. Goldschmid, a securities law professor at Columbia University.

Critics asserted that Giuliani was overzealous and publicity-hungry, especially during the wave of insider trading cases that followed guilty pleas by investment banker Dennis Levine and stock speculator Ivan Boesky in 1986.

"No taking it away from him — Giuliani had a spectacular prosecutorial career — but I think he went too far," said Arthur Mathews, attorney for former corporate raider Paul Bilzerian, who was convicted of fraudulently concealing stock ownership, or "parking."

Giuliani's regime expanded the use of criminal laws to prosecute stock parking for the first time and employed the powerful Racketeer Influenced and Corruption Organiza-

Oil futures decline 7 cents

From Staff and Wire Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil futures declined 7 cents this morning from Thursday's close for a mid-morning rate of $19.79 per barrel for West Texas Intermediate .

On Thursday energy futures prices advanced, led by a surge in demand for home heating oil.

The December contract for heating oil soared 1.66 cents to 58.79 cents a gallon in New York Mercantile Exchange trading as colder weather was predicted for many parts of the country. Subsequent contract months also posted strong gains.

Heating oil prices are sensitive to changes in the weather. On Wednesday, warmer weather in the East sent the December contract 0.32 cent lower.

Crude oil futures also moved higher. The December contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude, picked up 19 cents to close at $19.86 a 42-gallon barrel, following a 17 cent gain Wednesday.

And wholesale unleaded gasoline for December delivery rose 0.70 cent to settle at 51.31 cents a gallon, compounding a 0.30 cent rise the previous session.

Andrew Lebow, an energy market analyst with E.D.&F. Man International Futures Inc., said a rally in European markets set the stage for Thursday's domestic gains.

Speculation that heating oil would be in short supply in the Soviet Union sent prices higher overseas, and the momentum carried over to U.S. trading, where seasonal factors also came into play, Lebow said.

Dollar rises on interest rate guesses

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was higher in calm European trading this morning, with investors uncertain what direction U.S. interest rates will take. Gold prices also were higher.

Although traders said the dollar reacted positively Thursday to a smaller-than-expected U.S. trade deficit in September, the outlook for the currency was still unclear.

"There's no real trend," one analyst in Milan said.

Traders in Frankfurt said the dollar's failure to rise decisively underscored the market's preoccupation with interest rates.

Because of this, they said, today's release of U.S. housing starts data also probably would have little impact.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.13 yen to close at 143.98 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a higher rate of 144.345 yen.

In London, the dollar gained against the British pound. It cost $1.57485 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.5805 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $392.25 a troy ounce, down from late Thursday's $393.00. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a higher recommended price of $393.85.

In Zurich, the bid price was $393.00, up from $392.50 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.50 to close at a bid $392.21.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.65 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $5.60.

Stock market churns in place

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market churned in place Thursday, getting little benefit from news of a smaller-than-expected U.S. trade deficit.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.08 to 2,635.66.

But declining issues slightly outnumbered advances in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 735 up, 748 down and 498 unchanged.

The business day began with a report from the Commerce Department that the nation's trade deficit contracted to $7.94 billion in September from $10.10 billion the month before.

The margin by which imports exceeded exports was the smallest in nearly five years, and well below most advance estimates.

The news helped the dollar post gains against leading foreign currencies. But the response in the domestic bond market was less enthusiastic.

And stock-market observers said the decline in imports that showed up in the trade data could be interpreted as evidence of weakening consumer spending, at a time when many investors are worried about the outlook for corporate profits.

SEC may halt stock trading in emergencies

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee has passed a market reform bill that would allow the Securities and Exchange Commission to halt trading during stock market emergencies — with the president's approval.

The proposed Market Reform Act of 1989, passed Thursday, would give the SEC authority to take temporary emergency action in response to a major market disturbance. But the president would be required to state that he does not disapprove of any such action before it could take effect.

Texas Air buys 40 foreign-made jets

NEW YORK (AP) — Financially struggling Texas Air Corp. said its Continental Airlines subsidiary has agreed to buy 40 foreign-made Airbus jets in a deal valued at about $4.5 billion.

Houston-based Texas Air, the nation's largest airline company, said Thursday the new A330 and A340 planes would allow Continental to develop new markets and replace other planes in its fleet. The company said it was the largest single order ever for both aircraft types.

Texas Air said up to 10 of the new jets may be assigned to Miami-based Eastern Airlines, its other airline.

Guber, Peters may leave Warner

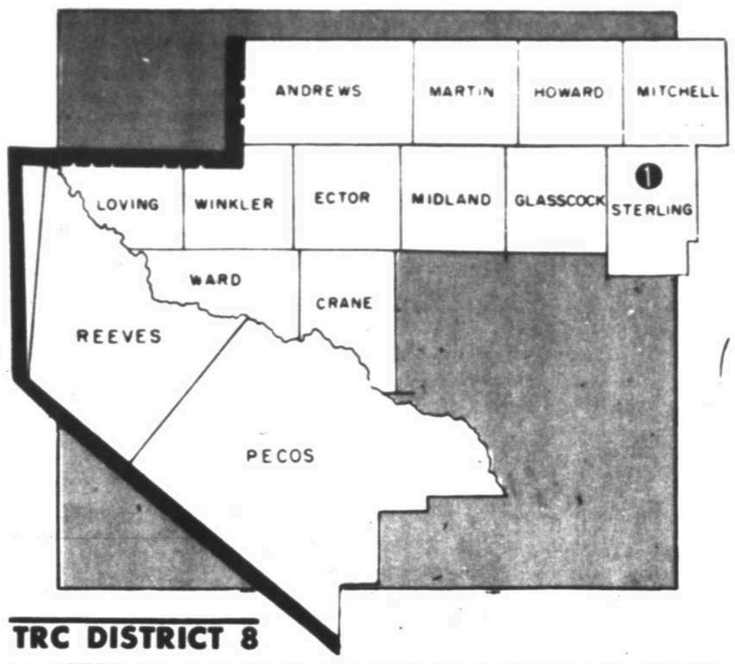

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sony Corp. and Warner Communications Inc. reached a settlement that allows hot Hollywood producers Peter Guber and Jon Peters to leave Warner and head up Sony's Columbia Pictures, the parties to the dispute said.

The settlement Thursday includes several joint business arrangements and ends all litigation stemming from Guber's and Peters' acceptance of Sony's offer, according to an announcement issued from New York by Warner Bros., Sony USA and The Guber-Peters Entertainment Co.

Guber and Peters were producers of the highly acclaimed and box-office hits "Batman" and "Rain Man."

OIL AND GAS DIGEST

Oryx announces horizontally-drilled discovery

DALLAS (SWN) — Oryx Energy Co. has announced a horizontally drilled discovery well in the Austin Chalk formation of South Texas that tested at a rate of more than 3,200 barrels of oil per day (B/D) and 2.2 million cubic feet of natural gas (MMcf/D).

The Heitz No. 1 well, in Zavala County, was drilled to a measured depth of 8,910 feet with a horizontal displacement of 2,860 feet. A 24-hour production test was completed from the pay zone at depths between 6,216 and 8,910 feet. The test produced 3,262 B/D and 2.2 MMcf/D through an 44/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 650 pounds per square inch.

Oryx Energy is the operator with a 100-percent working interest in the discovery. The Heitz No. 1 well is located three miles southwest of a previously announced horizontal discovery in the Pearsall Field — the E.B. Jones "B" No. 3, which tested at a combined rate of more than 2,000 B/D and nearly 1.2 MMcf/D from three intervals in the Austin Chalk.

Union Texas announces Gulf gas discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Union Texas Petroleum Holdings, Inc. announced that its Union Texas Petroleum Corp. subsidiary has discovered natural gas in a well drilled on West Cameron Block 554 in the Gulf of Mexico.

Located about 166 miles southeast of Houston, the West Cameron Block 554 No. 2 found more than 100 feet of gas pay in four zones below 11,600 feet. The well is the second drilled on the block. Additional drilling will be necessary to determine the block's reserve size.

Union Texas serves as operator of the block and has a 50 percent interest. CNG Producing Co., a subsidiary of Consolidated Natural Gas of Pittsburgh, has the remaining 50 percent interest in the tract, which was purchased at the May 1985 federal offshore lease sale.

Mississippi find completed by Oryx Energy

DALLAS (SWN) — Oryx Energy Co. announced a deep gas discovery in Jones County, Mississippi, that tested more than 4 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcf/D) and 1,200 barrels of condensate (BC/D) from the Lower Houston formation.

During a 24-hour test, the 1 Frankie Smith well, located about seven miles west of Laurel, MS, flowed 4.4 MMcf/D and 1,224 BC/D through a 32/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 1,745 pounds per square inch from perforations between 15,906 and 16,200 feet. The discovery well has a total depth of 16,984 feet. The 1 Frankie Smith is on trend with Oryx Energy's 1987 discovery of the W. W. Speed 1 in adjacent Covington County. The company holds substantial acreage in the Mississippi Salt Basin.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

True 'no-load' shares sold directly to investor

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Agreeing with your advice, I have been trying to guide my son into investing his surplus cash in true no-load mutual funds.

After showing him some of the columns you wrote on this subject, he said, "OK, Dad, you say that no-loads have no commissions, etc., etc. Then, how does the stock broker make a profit?"

That stumped me. Can you explain?

Doyle

A. The broker doesn't make money, because you do not buy shares of true no-load mutual funds from brokers or other sales people. You buy them directly from the no-load funds. That way, those funds can sell shares directly to the investing public. No sales people; no commission charge — known as a "load." Your son should have no difficulty understanding that.

This does not mean that the people who run a no-load mutual fund do not make money. They are paid for their efforts. They get their money from the fund's management fee, also called an "investment advisory fee."

Like all other companies, mutual funds have operating expenses. At a well-run mutual fund, those expenses run less than 1 percent of the fund's assets per year. Let's say XYZ Mutual Fund has $500 million in assets and keeps a reasonably tight rein on expenses. Those expenses should be less than $5 million annually.

At the average mutual fund, the largest expense is the management fee. It's typically about one-half of 1 percent. Staying with the example of the $500 million XYZ Mutual Fund, the fee would amount to $2.5 million per year — to be spread among the people who run the fund. They are well compensated, even by Wall Street's standards.

Explain to your son that all mutual funds — load and no-load — have management fees. Those fees pay the people who run the funds. Commission "loads," pay brokers and other sales people.

Some mutual funds do not charge loads when an investor buys shares but do have rear-end loads when shares are redeemed and/or levy continuing 12(b)1 distribution fees as high as 1.25 percent per year. Those are not true no-load funds.

Make sure your boy steers clear of such funds. There are plenty of true no-load funds available.

Q. After reading about it in your column, I sent $1 to the 100-Percent No-Load Mutual Fund Council, 1501 Broadway, Suite 312, New York, NY 10036 for a copy of the membership directory of true no-load funds. I have not received it. What say you?

A. Irving L. Straus, executive director of that organization, assures me your copy is on its way to you. He says, with thousands of requests pouring in, his staff fell as much as two weeks behind in mailing out the directories.

Q. I invested about $40,000 in three mutual funds. A commission was taken right off the top before anything was invested. I have sold the shares of two of those funds. Can I include the commission when figuring the basis of each fund for determining my loss or gain?

A. Of course you can. The commission paid when buying mutual fund shares or other securities increases your basis-cost for tax purposes. The difference between that basis and the proceeds you received when you sold by redeeming the fund shares was your capital loss or capital gain.

For example, if you put $10,000 into a load mutual fund with an 8.5 percent commission, you bought $9,150 worth of shares. $850 of your purchase price went to pay a commission. When you report the sales on Schedule D of your federal income tax return, you list your basis as $10,000.

You'll probably put a "Kick Me" sign on your rear end when you realize you could have avoided that fat commission by investing in a true no-load mutual fund.

SCANDAL

tions Act against investment firms and Wall Street pros.

Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. officials have said the threat of the law persuaded the firm to plead guilty to felonies rather than face crippling asset seizures. Princeton-Newport Partners LP went out of business shortly after being hit with RICO charges last year.

Six defendants were convicted in the Princeton-Newport case and sentenced last week to short jail terms.

In the largest racketeering case of its kind, former Drexel junk-bond financier Michael Milken and two others face charges with billions of dollars in potential penalties.

Former prosecutors defend the office's aggressive reputation.

"For a long time this activity wasn't actively prosecuted and perhaps people grew to expect that," said Bruce Baird, who headed the U.S. attorney's task force on securities and commodities fraud from 1987 until earlier this year.

"That never seemed like a good enough reason not to prosecute a case," said Baird, now in private practice in Washington.

One of the most vivid scenes from Giuliani's term remains the February 1987 arrest of Richard Wigton, a Kidder, Peabody & Co. trader who was handcuffed and frisked in front of stunned co-workers.

An indictment alleging insider trading by Wigton and two other prominent traders was quickly dropped, however, and the case was closed two years later without charges against Wigton or co-defendant Timothy Tabor. The third man, Robert Freeman, pleaded guilty to one count of mail fraud.

The case prompted accusations that Giuliani never really had the goods on the three and hoped to pressure them into striking plea bargains like many other Wall Street figures.

Indeed, many attribute the decision of numerous defendants to plead guilty and cooperate with prosecutors in part to their fear of civil liability or asset forfeitures that could follow a criminal conviction.

STARTS

In addition to its effect on construction jobs and the building materials industries, the housing industry has an impact on other housing-related businesses such as home appliances and furnishings.

But fixed mortgage rates had fallen from their March peak of 11.22 percent, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., or Freddie Mac, and some analysts have been looking for an increase in construction. Freddie Mac said fixed rates stood at 9.82 percent at the end of October.

Economist Michael P. Niemira of Mitsubishi Bank in New York said builders seem less concerned by interest rates than the pace of new sales.

Niemira noted that while new home sales had fallen 14 percent in September, existing home sales had risen 4.3 percent.

"This seems to suggest that home buyers are looking for more affordable houses, which builders are not providing," he wrote in the bank's "Weekly Economic Indicator Report."

Total housing starts during the first 10 months of the year are down 6 percent from the same period of 1988.

Construction of single-family homes in October rose 6.9 percent to an annual rate of 1.03 million units.

RUIDOSO

of the golf course. Architect is Golf Scapes of Arlington.

Construction on the 200-room hotel is projected to begin in the Fall of 1990. Sierra Blanca Resort is planned to have a restaurant and meeting facilities and is estimated to cost $6.5 million. SWD Motels Inc., of Tempe, Ariz., is contractor.

Bids and proposals are being considered by the Village of Ruidoso for the civic center, Moran said. The 12,000 square-foot building is estimated to cost $668,497 and construction is targeted to begin in April. The civic center will be architecturally compatible with the hotel and civic events center, Moran said.

"The excitement behind this project is phenomenal," Moran said. "We are receiving inquiries from other hoteliers. People are beginning to think of ways to piggyback off this project."

Underwood also said the Village of Ruidoso is involved in negotiations with a major airline commuter service, which would start service into Ruidoso's Sierra Blanca Regional Airport beginning in the summer of 1990.

Also, A.N. and Jackie Spencer of Alto, N.M., have committed to donate $10 million for the construction of a performing arts center which will be located on property contiguous to the airport property. Upon the completion of the center, the Spencers will deed the land and the performing arts center over to Ruidoso. Construction is slated to begin this summer, with a completion date of July 1991.

Ruidoso, with a population of 8,000, has long been known as a two-season resort because of its popularity with skiers in the winter and horse racing fans in the summer.

"We're hoping to diversify our appeal by establishing Ruidoso as a resort for all seasons," Moran said. "We already have some of the top-rated golf courses in the country and the addition of this new golf course will be a big draw — plus the new performing arts and civic centers will give us new opportunities to bring in major attractions and conventions."

KERR

McPherson noted that the company had no major enhanced oil recovery projects on the drawing board at this time, but added that the Foster field which is still under secondary recovery might be a candidate.

Among the major projects planned is a drilling program to drill 32 Canyon sand wells in the Ozona area. The company plans no horizontal wells in the Permian Basin in the coming year.

McPherson said Kerr-McGee was taking a positive long term view of the domestic oil industry and would spend about two-thirds of its 1989 budget in the U.S. "We are not one of those companies that have written off the U.S.," said the chairman.

He said about 45 percent of the company assets would remain devoted to oil and gas production.

Asked about the biggest issue facing the oil industry, McPherson said there was no doubt about it, that it was the environment.

Holiday turkey prices down but hams more expensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prices of holiday turkeys will be down from a year ago, but hams are going to be more expensive, the Agriculture Department says.

"Consumers will find adequate supplies of turkey and ham for the holiday season," the department's Economic Research Service reported Tuesday. "Prices likely will be lower for turkeys but higher for hams than last year."

Turkey production in the fourth quarter may be up about 12 percent from a year ago, with frozen inventories up slightly. Ham supplies are expected to decline slightly despite an increase in cold-storage stocks.

"Total red meat and poultry production is expected to set a record in 1989 and again in 1990," the report said. "Among the major components, only beef production may decline in 1989, reflecting the reduced cattle inventory."

Looking to 1990, the report said beef production may increase somewhat because of more cattle going into feedlots before slaughter, resulting in more "fed" beef.

"In both years, pork output could remain relatively large," the report said. "Broiler output will continue to grow" because of improved profits in recent years.

"Turkey production also is expected to grow, but at a lower rate than broilers because returns are being squeezed."

For producers, the report said more meat and poultry in 1990, along with "weaker growth in per capita income," could put downward pressure on market prices.

"Increased red meats will be about offset by population growth," the report added. "As a result, prices of choice-grade steers and (market hogs) should be a little above 1989's average. However, with higher per capita output, wholesale poultry prices are expected to decline moderately."

Exports of beef and veal in 1989 could rise to a record of 1 billion pounds, up 46 percent from 1988 due largely to liberalization of the Japanese market, the report said. An additional increase of 12 percent to 15 percent is expected in 1990.

Comparatively, total U.S. beef production in 1989 is forecast at 22.8 billion pounds, and pork at 15.8 billion pounds.

Imports of beef and veal, mostly from Australia and New Zealand, are expected to decline about 8 percent this year from their 1988 level, mostly due to smaller supplies in Australia. Declines are likely in 1990 because of smaller New Zealand shipments.

Pork imports in 1989 are indicated at about 950 million pounds, down 16 percent from 1988, but those may rise to about 1 billion pounds in 1990 if Danish production continues to increase, the report said.

U.S. pork exports, mostly to Mexico and Japan, are expected to be about 240 million pounds this year, up from 195 million in 1988. Those may decline to around 205 million pounds in 1990.

Broiler exports may rise to a record of around 937 million pounds this year, up 22 percent from 1988. Most of the sales are commercial rather than under foreign aid and subsidy programs. Exports could decline slightly in 1990.

Poland almost self-sufficient in food supply

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new analysis by the Agriculture Department says Poland is close to providing enough food for itself and that aid from the United States and other countries may be needed for only a brief period.

"Despite the much-publicized long food lines and empty food shelves in Polish shops, Poles are not starving," the report said. "Annual per capita meat consumption, at 63 kilograms (about 139 pounds) in 1988, is approximately the same as in Norway, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom."

It added: "Total caloric intake, nearly 3,300 calories a day (per capita), is close to that of western Europe, but markedly below that in the U.S. (3,500). The country is close to becoming self-sufficient in food, and may face only a short-term need for food assistance."

The latest U.S. food aid for Poland was formally signed on Friday, providing up to 10,000 metric tons of pork bellies. The meat is part of a $100 million package of U.S. food aid pledged by President Bush this fiscal year.

Ambassador Jan Kinast of Poland said the $10 million worth of pork "helps us to meet our immediate needs" and that his country has many complex reforms underway that are aimed at boosting farm output.

If there is additional U.S. aid in Poland's future, Kinast said he hoped it would include "such products which would help us stimulate the agricultural production" of his country.

World grain production increases with good U.S. harvest

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Agriculture Department analysis shows total U.S. grain production is so huge that year-to-year changes in the pattern send tremors throughout the world.

When U.S. crop production falters, there is a good chance that global figures also will show a decline. And when there are bumper U.S. harvests, particularly of feed grains, the world stockpile is fatter.

Last week the USDA estimated this fall's corn harvest — the keystone of total U.S. grain output — at 7.59 billion bushels, up 54 percent from the drought-savaged 1988 harvest.

Put into international terms, the U.S. corn crop was 192.8 million metric tons. Allowing for about 2,205 pounds per ton, there are approximately 39.4 bushels of corn in each ton — or 36.7 bushels of wheat or soybeans.

A related supply-and-demand report showed total U.S. grain production this year at more than 283.8 million metric tons, which includes corn output. That is up sharply from 204.1 million tons in 1988.

The total includes wheat, coarse grains such as corn, sorghum, oats and barley and milled rice. It does not include U.S. soybean production, estimated at 52.7 million tons this year.

According to the analysis, global production of grain in the 1989-90 year — a composite of dates for various crops — is projected at about 1.671 billion tons, of which the U.S. share of 283.8 million would represent about 17 percent.

Last year, when world grain output was 1.559 billion tons, the U.S. share was 204.1 million, or 13 percent, which reflected the drought reductions of 1988.

After totaling all production and deducting how much grain will be used in the year ahead, the USDA report said that by the end of the current season in 1990 the world will have about 292.4 million tons of grain left over.

That would be down from 308.7 million tons left in the global pantry this year and 403.9 million tons remaining in inventories in 1988.

Of the total year-end grain stockpiles, the United States is expected to have almost 74 million tons in 1990, or about 25 percent of the world total.

This year, with a global inventory of 308.7 million tons of grain, the United States accounted for 86 million tons, or 28 percent. And in 1988, with a world inventory of 403.9 million tons, the U.S. share was 169.4 million tons — 42 percent of the world's total.

As the figures show, the United States has borne the brunt of grain stockpile reduction, while inventories in other countries have dropped only slightly.

This year, for example, the global reduction in year-end stocks from 1988 was about 95.2 million tons. The United States accounted for 85.4 million tons of the year-to-year decline.

If the 1990 projection holds true, there will be a further global reduction of 16.3 million tons, with the United States accounting for 12 million.

Brazilian conservative leads; Left talks of unity

By JORGE MEDEROS

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Conservative Fernando Collor de Mello took a strong lead in the initial round of Brazil's first free presidential vote since 1960, but two leftist rivals vowed to join forces against him in a runoff.

Partial returns from Wednesday's voting indicated that Collor de Mello would fall short of capturing the majority he would need to avoid a second round of balloting against the runner-up.

The solid showing by the left raised the possibility of a leftist victory in a runoff, which would be held Dec. 17.

Wednesday's balloting marked the return of full democratic rights after 21 years of military rule. About 82 million Brazilians voted and Brazil's Superior Electoral Court said the count will not be completed until Saturday.

As of Thursday night, Collor de Mello led with 27 percent of the vote. Radical leftist Rep. Luis Inacio Lula da Silva was second with 17 percent. Populist Leonel Brizola, another leftist, followed with 16 percent.

Those numbers were based on 21 percent of the vote.

However, a large number of votes from Brizola strongholds in the heavily populated South had not been counted, the Electoral Court said in a statement.

An unofficial tally by Brazil's largest TV network, Globo TV, also gave Collor de Mello 27 percent.

But it put Brizola, of the center-left Democratic Labor Party, in second with 18 percent of the vote and da Silva, of the Marxist-oriented Workers' Party, in third with 16 percent.

Sen. Mario Covas of the left-of-center Brazilian Social Democracy Party had 12 percent of the ballots.

The network said its tallies were based on 60 percent of the vote.

Brizola and da Silva promised to join forces to battle Collor de Mello in a runoff.

"We have to forget our differences and unite. If the people's choice falls on Lula, I will be the first to campaign for him to defeat the right," Brizola said Thursday at a news conference.

Da Silva said his party would form alliances with "whichever progressive force goes to the second round."

"All the different points of view between us, Brizola and Covas are minor when compared with our differences with Collor de Mello," da Silva, a 44-year-old former union leader, said at a press conference in Sao Paulo.

Collor de Mello refused comment until all the votes were counted.

The left's strong showing and the prospect of it winning a runoff shook financial markets in Rio and Sao Paulo, Brazil's biggest city.

Panicky investors rushed to buy gold and dollars. The black market dollar rate soared 10 percent Thursday afternoon to 14 Brazilian cruzados to the dollar.

The new president will succeed Jose Sarney, a civilian who gained office in 1985 through an electoral college vote supervised by the military. The winner of the new presidential election will serve a five-year term.

In Washington on Thursday, the State Department said it was "a truly significant day" for Brazil. Spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said, "In considering the spread of democracy into other regions such as Eastern Europe, we should also take note of what occurred in Brazil yesterday."

Brazil's last free presidential election was in 1960, when Janio Quadros won. Quadros quit after seven months and threw the nation into a political crisis that ended with a 1964 military coup.

After Wednesday's vote, Brizola criticized the slow vote counting by the Electoral Court and spoke of possible fraud by Globo TV. Its owner, media tycoon Roberto Marinho, is backing Collor de Mello.

Brizola sent a formal complaint to the Court asking it to bar the network's round-the-clock election tallies. A decision on the complaint was expected today.

Collor de Mello campaigned on a clean-government platform that appealed to many poor Brazilians.

The 40-year-old former governor of the tiny northeastern state of Alagoas has called Sarney corrupt and incompetent and has blamed him for Brazil's 1,300 percent annual inflation. Sarney, who by law cannot run for reelection, said he will sue for slander.

Hungary, first in Eastern bloc, asks to join Council of Europe

By CHRISTINA MACKENZIE

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — Hungary has become the first East European country to apply for membership in the Council of Europe, a Western European political organization.

Yugoslavia and Poland also indicated they would apply.

Hungary applied for membership Thursday. Foreign Minister Gyula Horn said membership would provide "a very good basis that will enable us in the near future to enter into close cooperation with the European Community."

The 12 nations belonging to the European Community trading bloc also are members of the Council of Europe, but the organizations are not formally linked.

Horn, who met Thursday with foreign ministers attending a regular meeting of the council in Strasbourg, said he hoped that Hungary "might even become a member of the European Community."

He said he expected his country to join the Council of Europe "within six to nine months, or at all events in 1990."

Catherine Lalumiere, secretary-general of the 23-nation Council of Europe, said if Hungary maintains its pace of political reform, it could become the organization's first East European member in a year or so.

Set up in 1949, the Strasbourg-based council is particularly active on the issues of human rights and legal and cultural cooperation.

Horn said membership would not be incompatible with Hungary's position in the Warsaw Pact, the Soviet-led military alliance.

"We don't want to break away from that alliance or even want to call our membership of that alliance into question," Horn said.

Foreign Minister Budimir Loncar of Yugoslavia said he had outlined his nation's reforms to the council.

Asked if Belgrade planned to apply for membership next spring, he replied, "It will most likely be as you predict."

Poland's foreign minister, Krzysztof Skubiszewski, said, "Poland has the intention to apply, but we did not file any formal demand today."

He said it was difficult to say when Poland could seek membership, addding,"I think it's too early for us to do it."

Membership is open only to European countries with democratic, multiparty parliaments.

Hungary plans multiparty elections for next year. In August, Poland formed the East Bloc's first government led by a non-Communist since they consolidated power in Eastern Europe after World War II.

East German leader seeks Cabinet changes

WEST BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's new premier today asked parliament to approve a Cabinet in which more than a third of the members would be non-Communists, and he called for more private enterprise.

Premier Hans Modrow also rejected talk of reunification with West Germany, which began last week after East Germany lifted travel restrictions and opened its borders, including the Berlin Wall.

The Communists would still dominate the 28-member Cabinet presented to the 500 lawmakers in the People's Chamber.

Modrow said Thursday 11 Cabinet members would not be Communists. Their names were not immediately disclosed today.

In his first address to parliament since he took over as premier Monday, Modrow outlined several main points, including a "reform of the political system," legal reforms and steps to clean up one of the most polluted countries in Europe.

He also called for "increasing individual responsibility of the economic units" and allowing East Germans to engage in private enterprise to produce goods and offer services in the shortage-plagued economy.

However, he rejected a "free-market economy."

Modrow also told his listeners East Germany will remain a "socialist" and "sovereign" nation, and he appealed to citizens to support the new government.

East German leaders have been struggling to retain a basic socialist system in a nation swept by pro-democracy activism and tempted by offers of aid from West Germany in return for free-market reforms.

"We must have unwavering political and ideological tolerance," Modrow said today, apparently referring to Western appeals for East Germany to accept some capitalist reforms.

"By means of a new reality of life in the German Democratic Republic (East Germany), the dangerous and unrealistic talk of a reunification will be clearly rejected," he said, drawing a long round of applause from the lawmakers.

The Cabinet proposed by Modrow would contain several holdovers from the former hard-line leadership of Erich Honecker, including Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and Planning Commission chief Gerhard Schuerer.

Three women — all Communists — were nominated, including Christa Luft as deputy premier for economic affairs and Uta Nickel for finance and prices.

Parliamentary Speaker Guenther Maleuda opened the two-day session by reading the agenda, which included a vote on the Cabinet.

Communist Party leader Egon Krenz approved the Cabinet makeup on Thursday, according to East German media, and no serious opposition was expected.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Explosion interrupts Siberian gas service

MOSCOW (AP) — An explosion on the Siberian gas pipeline caused by a sharp drop in temperature destroyed 2½ miles of pipe, the Tass news agency said Thursday.

Tass said there were no injuries in the blast, which occurred Tuesday night near the Siberian city of Norilsk, 1,600 miles northeast of Moscow.

Apartment houses in the region were being heated by alternate fuel supplies and the operations at the Norilsk mining and metallurgical works were cut to a minimum, Tass said.

Repair teams have been flown to the blast site, but cold weather was hampering efforts to fix the pipeline, Tass said.

In June, a gas pipeline leaked and exploded in the Ural Mountains as two passenger trains were passing. More than 600 people were killed.

Venezuelan cocaine seized

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Authorities seized nearly 5,000 pounds of cocaine and arrested five Venezuelans and Colombians in the largest cocaine bust in the nation's history, officials said.

The cocaine, which was confiscated by national guard troops, was being stored in trucks near Valencia, about 100 miles west of Caracas, guard spokesman Col. Gerardo Marquez said Thursday.

Along with the estimated 4,840 pounds of cocaine, the national guard also confiscated $17,380 from the suspects during Wednesday's raid.

The identities of the suspects were not released. Marquez said authorities believe they are linked to Colombian drug cartel operations.

Venezuela and neighboring countries have been increasingly used as alternative smuggling routes for the Colombian cartels since Colombian authorities launched a U.S.-backed crackdown in August.

Outages common in Manila

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A radio announcer chattered away until he was cut off in midsentence. A few moments later, he was back on the air with an apology: "Sorry folks, it's a brownout."

Power outages are nothing new for Manila's 7 million inhabitants. But since October, they have occurred daily, fraying the nerves of residents, who also must cope with rising crime, horrific traffic and uncollected garbage.

Some officials and newspaper commentators say the brownouts also are threatening the economy.

When the electricity problem worsened last month, President Corazon Aquino ordered the state-run National Power Corp. to "end the brownouts."

But the corporation, which generates power for sale to private distributors, announced Thursday that brownouts will increase because of the deplorable state of the Luzon island electricity network.

Norwegian heirs pursued

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Some Norwegians may dream of a rich American aunt leaving them $1 million. Someone's fantasy came true this week, but the question is whose.

The Foreign Ministry is searching for the nieces or nephews of the late Olga Johnson, a widow of Norwegian descent from Glasgow, Mont. She died and left an unclaimed million-dollar fortune.

"We often get cases like this, but this is an unusually large amount," said Kjell Breit of the Foreign Ministry.

He said the Ministry had some leads.

Breit said he expected possible heirs to be extremely cooperative in contacting the ministry, which has publicized the case through newspapers.

Cocaine found off Vieques

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The Coast Guard said it recovered about 200 pounds of cocaine Thursday floating in three ice chests near the offshore island of Vieques.

The cocaine was stacked in bricks inside each ice chest, the Coast Guard said in a statement without indicating the street value of the drugs.

It said the recovery was made by the Coast Guard cutter Attu during a patrol. Officials searched beaches in Vieques for more cocaine but found none, it said.

The statement said so far this year the Coast Guard has seized 7,548 pounds of cocaine in waters off Puerto Rico.

Storms hit eastern Canada

ST. HILAIRE, Quebec (AP) — The violent series of tornadoes that hit the eastern United States Thursday crashed into Quebec just after noon, leaving one person dead, police said.

The tornado first touched down in the town of Richmond, just east of St. Hilaire, police said. A man was killed when his car was hit by a school bus during the high winds in Richmond, Quebec provincial police official Bertrand Fortin said.

The victim's name has not been released, said Fortin. None of the children in the bus were injured.

Winds of more than 124 mph blew the roof off a shopping mall in the center of St. Hilaire. The back wall of an office building behind the mall was demolished before the tornado moved down the main street, shattering windows and knocking down trees.

Bulgarian leader ousted during broadcast meeting

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Parliament advanced its purge of old guard party members today in an unprecedented nationally broadcast session by ousting former Communist leader Todor Zhivkov as head of state.

It replaced him with Petar Mladenov, who took over as party leader from Zhivkov on Friday. Zhivkov, who had served in that spot for 35 years, was accused by one lawmaker of living lavishly.

It was the first live television broadcast of a parliament session in the history of the Communist state and came a day after the party's Central Committee ousted three hard-line Politburo members and promoted four liberal Communists.

The new members are considered likely to back Mladenov in carrying out reform.

Mladenov has moved quickly to secure his position in the party. Informed sources said further top-level changes were expected in the party and government to clear Communists loyal to Zhivkov's rule.

The 400-member National Assembly, or parliament, voted unanimously by a show of hands to oust Zhivkov as head of state and to replace him with Mladenov.

Deputies praised Mladenov for his "enthusiasm" for perestroika, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of reform. They also leveled unprecedented criticism at Zhivkov.

Deputy Slavcho Trnski delivered a scathing attack on Zhivkov to the stunned deputies, accusing the former leader of having led the country into deep economic crisis while leading a "flamboyant lifestyle."

He called for the "real truth" to come out about Zhivkov, who he said owned 30 homes around the country. "Not even the richest countries in the world could stand those expenses," he said.

He also charged that Zhivkov was "hungry for fame" and held on to power by pursuing a policy of "divide and rule."

Zhivkov often carried out personnel changes in the top party and government echelons to consolidate his power.

Trnski called for an investigation into what he described as misuse of funds by Zhivkov's son Vladimir. He was purged from the Central Committee Thursday and was rumoured to be involved in several scandals.

BTA, the official news agency, said speakers at a Central Committee meeting Thursday described their remaking of the Politburo as a step "without which onward progress is hardly possible."

They expressed the party's resolve to "pursue the watershed policy of renewal of socialism ... on the basis of democratization, openness and responsibility of everyone," the agency said.
