Britain, France trade explosive allegations

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's office today blamed an overzealous, low-level French official for the planting of explosives at the residence of the French ambassador to test British security during the visit of the French president.

But in Paris, French officials said it was the British police's idea to plant the explosives — and that Britain's complaint about the incident was apparently intended to embarrass French officers in an ongoing feud between the two security services.

The tiff over the explosives quickly became a major embarrassment for both countries, coming in the middle of French President Francois Mitterrand's visit to Britain, which ends Friday.

Police with trained sniffer dogs found the "inert, unarmed" explosives Tuesday night at the French ambassador's residence shortly before a reception was to be given there by Mitterrand, who arrived in London earlier in the day. Scotland Yard said one of Mitterrand's bodyguards planted the explosives to test British security measures.

A statement released by Mrs. Thatcher's office today supported Scotland Yard's view of the events and said, "It appears to have been a case of excessive zeal on the part of a very low-level French official."

The British Foreign Office said it was "seeking clarification on one or two points from the French."

A French government official in Paris, who spoke on condition of anonymity, today termed the affair "slightly ridiculous" and denied there was any attempt to test British security.

But a Paris newspaper, Le Parisien, quoted the unidentified bodyguard as saying he wanted to test his British colleagues.

And French officials in Paris who were authorized to discuss the issue but also spoke on condition of anonymity, said British police had suggested that a bomb expert who travels with Mitterrand should plant the explosives in a garden to test the effectiveness of Scotland Yard's explosives-sniffing dogs.

The officials in Paris said the feud between the security services began last June when British security men forced two of Mitterrand's bodyguards to surrender their weapons during an economic summit conference in London.

City Council, Airport Board meet to discuss financing

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The dream of a new Midland Air Park took on more of a definite shape Wednesday when the Midland City Council approved one of five proposals which had been submitted by a consulting firm and proceeded with the concept of short term financing.

In that $27 million financing package, the council separated it into $17.4 million for constructing a new Air Park and $4.1 million for improvements and additions to Midland Regional Airport. The remainder would go for engineering fees, contingencies and interest payments.

The meeting with airport officials, Airport Board members and financial experts in City Hall Council Chambers covered five proposals for new Air Park facilities with estimated costs ranging from $28 million to $15.2 million. The council also explored options for longterm financing under the worst economic picture.

It was almost a year ago — in November 1983 — that the council accepted 2,665 acres northeast of the city that was owned by Jerry Smith and JDS Development in exchange for 92 acres of Air Park and Regional Air Terminal tracts. The new site is bordered on the west by State Highway 349 and part of it lies in Martin County.

THE REMAINING 540 acres of Air Park will be sold once the new facility is operational and that money applied to paying off the loan.

The council chose Option C for the new Air Park. This plan calls for a north-south runway 7,500 feet long, an east-west runway 6,000 feet long, both runways fully lighted on each side, relocating all existing buildings at Air Park to the new site, fencing and landscaping, and installing water, sewer and other utility lines, according to Aviation Director Vic White.

Two additional airlines to serve Permian Basin

From Staff Reports

Midland Regional Airport will be gaining two new airlines within three months, according to Jon Mathiasen, assistant director of aviation/administration.

Mesa Air will be taking the place of Air Midwest, which is pulling out Nov. 15. Mesa is a New Mexico-based commuter line, Mathiasen noted.

Pride Airline, beginning Jan. 1, will take over a route where service has been deficient since Continental Airlines quit serving Midland.

Mathiasen said Pride will be flying from Midland to San Antonio and New Orleans. The Midland-San Antonio route had been profitable for Continental.

Pride Airlines is being started by former employees of Continental and the company will be using 727-200s. They have received certification from the Civil Aeronautics Board and have signed a sublease agreement with American Airlines at Midland Regional Airport, according to Mathiasen.

But they may have to wait in line to find a parking space. The assistant director said that starting late this week or early next week, some airlines will be changing their schedules and seven planes will be on the ground at one time. Midland Regional Airport has only four jetways, he noted.

"It will be first come, first served. The last one to land will have to use ground boarding," he said.

Mondale campaigns in Midwest while Reagan takes break

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

President Reagan is pausing from the campaign as Walter F. Mondale appeals for votes in the industrial Midwest after telling the region's farmers "these last four years have been the worst in the history of the American family farm."

Twelve points down in one new poll with as many days to go, and even further down in another, Mondale was invoking the name of the patron saint of political underdogs, Harry S. Truman, at every stop Wednesday.

In emotional appeals, the Democratic presidential nominee said he expects to repeat Truman's surprise victory of 1948 on this Election Day, Nov. 6.

"I am asking you to trust me, to believe me," Mondale said.

Reagan was back in the White House today after returning on Wednesday from a four-day campaign trip to attend a ceremony commemorating today's first anniversary of the U.S.-led invasion of tiny Grenada.

Reagan heads back out on the campaign trail Friday when he will venture into New Jersey, New York and Connecticut.

Mondale was starting the day in Milwaukee and appearing before audiences later in Cleveland; Toledo, Ohio; and Flint, Mich.

A new ABC News-Washington Post poll said Reagan is still leading Mondale by 12 percentage points, 54 percent to 42 percent, the same margin as last week before the second presidential debate.

A new Harris Survey showed Reagan leading 56 percent to 42 percent. Last week, the margin in the Harris Survey was 9 points.

"I'm announcing a new plan tonight," Mondale said. "I'm not going to comment on any polls between now and the election. The question is not polls, the question is ideas, the question is of the future and of who can best lead us forward."

Mondale pollster Peter D. Hart said his polling results were similar to the ABC-Post numbers. He said what "amazes me is the remarkable consistency in Reagan's numbers over the last five months. Our challenge remains to convert some of those weak Reagan voters, and we have less time."

Mondale campaigned in farmland from before sunup to sundown Wednesday, saying the Reagan administration has brought the worst of times to agriculture.

"If rural America rises up and throws Mr. Reagan out and elects me, the message will be out: Don't mess with these farmers. They are dangerous. Don't mess with them," Mondale said.

He also tried hard to repair the damage he apparently has suffered from the 1980 grain embargo imposed by President Carter, whom Mondale served as vice president:

"I did everything I could to oppose it. The president made his choice. It was a mistake."

Vice President George Bush, meantime, was heading back out on a two-day trip to New York, Kentucky and Ohio after offering his explanation for the harsh heckling that has cropped up this week at the president's campaign stops.

"Left-wing kids ... an entirely out-of-it group of people," Bush said of the hecklers, adding that the protesters "don't believe in strength for the United States."

Reagan was faced with heckling at Ohio State University in Columbus on Wednesday, a day after facing the worst disruptions of his campaign at a stop in Portland.

Are they costumes or political statements?

By SUZANNE SPRING
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — Forget ghouls and goblins. This Halloween, the owner of the country's largest costume shop says Reagan and Nixon masks are selling like crazy, along with Michael Jackson gloves at $14.95 a shot.

Mr. T and his gold chains are very popular, but remarkably few customers want to look like Walter Mondale or Geraldine Ferraro.

"Reagan is a very, very big seller. I say we sell about 12 a day, even more than that," David Bertolino said Wednesday at his store, Little Jack Horner, Inc. "The other day someone from Mondale headquarters came down and bought a Reagan mask. Don't know what they plan to do with it.

"And Nixon is hot. Easily as popular as Reagan," Bertolino continued. "I guess people still love to hate him. Sometimes they come in and buy the Nixon mask and then buy handcuffs or a ball-and-chain to go with it."

This year is Little Jack Horner's 50th year in business in downtown Boston. As usual, says Bertolino, political costumes are making him money. The masks of President Reagan and former President Nixon sell for $25 to $40, depending on the amount of detail in the disguise.

The store has sold out its 1,200 masks of Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy, but still has a few John F. Kennedy masks available.

On Wednesday, one went to a professional-looking young man who refused to identify himself. He told Bertolino he planned to spend Halloween as "Jack Kennedy for Reagan."

"I got the idea while I was watching the news last night," the man said, referring to a recently publicized letter from Reagan to Nixon written in 1960. In the letter, Reagan compared Kennedy's ideas to those of Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler.

"I'm going with two friends who are dressing up as Marx and Hitler," said the man. "It's a joke — get it? Kennedy for Reagan."

Threats against U.S. up, officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says there is an "across the board threat" by terrorists against all Americans in Lebanon and that it may be part of a campaign to isolate Lebanon from the West.

President Reagan's national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, said Wednesday the increased threats were "up a piece from the ones we have had before." Apparently the threats are for actions "in the days ahead."

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said the threats are "new information" that has been uncovered in the past couple of weeks. He renewed a warning for U.S. citizens against traveling there.

McFarlane, speaking to reporters in Columbus, Ohio, where Reagan was campaigning, said he did not believe the threats had anything to do with the Nov. 6 election but were from groups opposed to U.S. policies in Lebanon and the U.S. presence in Lebanon.

He said security was being increased as fast as possible. Asked if security was now at 100 percent, he said, "I can't say that it is. No."

An informed State Department official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said there is an obvious effort by radical groups in Lebanon to drive all Americans and other Westerners out of the embattled country.

"That seems a reasonable interpretation of what these guys are trying to do," the official said. "I think there's got to be some objective in what all of these terrorist attacks are aimed at."

The U.S. Embassy staff has been pared in the last week to just a few diplomats following the terrorist bombing of the embassy annex in East Beirut last month and because of the continuing threats.

"The threat of terrorist attack is very real," said one official. But the State Department has insisted it won't close the U.S. Embassy, even though the facilities have been shattered by two deadly terrorist bombs in the past 18 months.

Embassy operations are now being conducted at the residence of Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew, and all dependents of American diplomatic personnel have been evacuated. Nevertheless, officials said construction work is continuing on a new embassy building in West Beirut.

Hughes said American diplomatic posts worldwide are being subjected to increased numbers of threats, all of which are taken seriously. Like McFarlane, he didn't link the threats to the U.S. election. "The volume of those threats has been high for the past year," Hughes said.

The New York Times and ABC News quoted unidentified intelligence sources as saying the United States is now receiving 100 terrorist threats a week, with the largest number being lodged against American facilities in the Middle East.

Hughes said the threats are accumulated in various ways, including by U.S. embassies and intelligence agencies, foreign intelligence agencies and local law enforcement officials. "The amount of information that flows through U.S. and other channels about potential terrorist acts is very substantial," he said.

Hughes noted that an advisory issued last May, warning Americans of the dangers of traveling to Lebanon, is still in force.

"Our belief is that newsmen, too, should exercise prudence," the official said.

In another development, U.S. officials said the visit by Lebanese President Amin Gemayel to Libya, where he conferred with Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, was an "adverse" development that further erodes U.S. efforts to isolate Khadafy internationally.

An official who spoke on condition of anonymity said he hoped it was just a coincidence that Gemayel was visiting Libya on the same day as the Oct. 23, 1983 anniversary of the bombing of the U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut in which 241 Americans died.

AP employees released unharmed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Four Lebanese employees of The Associated Press were released unharmed today, more than 30 hours after being abducted off a Beirut street.

The four men arrived at the AP office in mostly Moslem west Beirut shortly after one of them, radio monitor Khazen Abboud, telephoned the office to say they had been set free.

U.S. praises Marcos' 'swift action'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is praising the "swift action" of Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos in ordering the prosecution of a close associate and 25 others implicated by a fact-finding body in the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino.

Marcos' apparent decision to allow the investigative body to conclude its work unhindered and to abide by its findings seemed to come as a relief to U.S. officials, who have feared that any attempt to limit the probe could produce widespread turmoil.

On Wednesday, Marcos ordered that those implicated by the commission be prosecuted by a special civilian court, and State Department spokesman John Hughes hailed this as a "positive development."

Among those accused was Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the armed forces chief of staff and a close confidant of Marcos. Marcos accepted Ver's request for a leave of absence.

Hughes said it was noteworthy that an independent civilian board was empowered to investigate the allegations of criminal activity on the part of the military. He credited the board with an "impressively thorough investigation."

"We trust that, as President Marcos has promised, those responsible for Senator Aquino's murder, no matter who they may be, will be held accountable for their crime," he said.

Although members of Aquino's family and other supporters expressed outrage that Marcos himself was not named in either the majority or minority report submitted by the commission, the administration seemed convinced that the investigation has been carried out well.

Seldom has a judicial proceeding in a foreign country been scrutinized as closely by the State Department as the one involving the Aquino assassination.

The reason is the unusually close ties between the two countries, dating back to the 50-year period when the Philippines was an American colony. Aside from close cultural and family links between the two countries, the U.S.-operated bases in that country are among the most important American facilities overseas.

With over 7,000 U.S. military personnel, Subic Bay Naval Base is the key logistical center for the U.S. 7th Fleet. Clark Air Base is the largest U.S. Air Force-operated installation outside the United States.

The importance of these bases' support functions is underscored by the vast geographic distances covered by the 7th Fleet: the Western Indian Ocean to the Northwest Pacific, including Southeast Asia and the Southwest Pacific.

Thus, the United States is extremely sensitive to potentially destabilizing political developments. After Aquino's assassination and the widespread anti-Marcos protests that followed, the United States began disassociating itself somewhat from Marcos. One sign of this was President Reagan's decision to scrap a planned visit to the Philippines last fall.

A former U.S. ambassador to the Philippines, David Newsom, has expressed concern that the great disparity between wealth and poverty in the Philippines could make that country ripe for a Latin American-type revolution, such as occurred in Nicaragua.

Reagan voiced the same concern in his debate Sunday night with Walter F. Mondale. But the State Department took the unusual step of correcting Reagan's suggestion that the "large communist movement" in the Philippines was the only alternative to Marcos.

Argentine guerrilla to be tried

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The country's most notorious guerrilla and the former military leaders who failed to catch him will be tried at the same time for crimes allegedly committed during Argentina's bloodiest decade.

The coincidence offends both sides, although the trials will be in separate civilian courts.

Mario Firmenich, who led the leftist Montonero guerrilla group in the 1970s, was extradited last weekend from Brazil to face charges of assassination and kidnap for ransom. While his lawyers prepare his defense, he sits in a police jail cell just a few blocks from the downtown prison where four of nine former military junta members are confined to await trial.

The military men are being tried on charges linked to the abduction, disappearance and death of thousands of people during a military anti-subversion campaign designed to eliminate the Montoneros and other guerrilla groups.

"To condemn the repressor for the same reasons and with the same intensity as the Marxist subversive terrorist presupposes equating defense with aggression and what is right with what is wrong," said Gen. Jorge Videla, a former president and one of the junta members facing trial. "By condemning both you justify both."

A statement published in the name of Firmenich's two top aides, Fernando Vaca Narvaja and Roberto Perdia, said: "To put in the same bag those who looted, tortured and made people disappear in order to destroy the economy of the country and starve its people with those who tried to prevent it is — at the least — an insult to morals, a lack of ethics."

Vaca Narvaja and Perdia, both still fugitives, said the situation amounted to "equating genocide with resistance."

Civilian President Raul Alfonsin ordered the civilian-court trials of the ex-junta members.

In the same order, he called for the prosecution of Firmenich and other top guerrilla leaders.

The junta trials were handed originally to a military tribunal, but two weeks ago the Federal Court of Appeals took over jurisdiction because of the tribunal's failure to reach verdicts. Since then the appeals court has interrogated defendants on an almost daily basis, vowing to move ahead with the cases as quickly as possible.

The English-language Buenos Aires Herald said in an editorial "it is fitting that the trials...should start at roughly the same time."

It added: "For their respective supporters, Videla or Firmenich were partly responsible for the fact that Argentina is a democracy today: Videla by overcoming terrorism, Firmenich by resisting military rule. Both these arguments are unconvincing. If Argentina is a democracy today it is despite the efforts of Videla and Firmenich, not because of them."

Videla is being tried along with the two other members of the junta that seized power from President Isabel Peron in 1976, Adm. Emilio Massera and Gen. Orlando Agosti.

Others facing trial are Gen. Roberto Viola, also a former president; Adm. Armando Lambruschini, and Gen. Omar Graffigna, all of the junta that governed 1978-81; and Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, president during the Falklands war with Britain; Adm. Jorge Anaya, and Gen. Basilio Lami Dozo, all of the 1981-82 junta.

So far Videla, Massera and Viola have been ordered confined to a civilian jail pending the outcome of the trials. Agosti also is jailed, but could be released conditionally pending a verdict.

A government commission has said it has documented 8,961 cases of people who disappeared and presumably were killed during the military government's anti-subversion campaign. It added that the actual total may be much higher because some witnesses to the repression were afraid to come forward out of fear of reprisals.

The commission called the disappearances the "greatest tragedy in our history — and the most savage."

German leader resigns

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Rainer Barzel, president of the West German Parliament, resigned today following allegations that he accepted $566,000 in payoffs from the Flick industrial concern.

Alfred Dregger, parliamentary leader of Barzel's Christian Democratic Union party, officially announced the resignation at a special caucus of the party's members in Bonn.

Party officials had earlier leaked word of the resignation after an emergency meeting of the party leadership, including Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Barzel once led the Christian Democratic Union and was the party's candidate for chancellor in 1972. He was defeated by Willy Brandt of the Social Democratic Party. He later resigned as head of the party, but made a comeback in 1983 when he was named president of the Bundestag, the lower house of Parliament.

Barzel's resignation letter said political and psychological pressures on him had become "unbearable" and that Parliament should select a new president so that it could resume normal duties, Dregger told reporters. Barzel has denied taking any payoffs.

The letter also was read at a caucus of the centrist Free Democratic Party, the Christian Democrats' junior coalition partner in the government.

The 60-year-old Barzel did not immediately release any statement to the press, and it was not clear whether he would retain the Bundestag seat he has held since 1957.

"Mr. Barzel is sick, and I cannot imagine that he will make a statement soon," a spokeswoman at his office said.

Barzel did not attend today's leadership meeting.

Barzel underwent four hours of questioning by a parliamentary subcommittee Wednesday about a prosecutor's document that says he received $566,000 from Flick, a Duesseldorf holding company, and that the money was laundered through a Frankfurt legal firm for which he worked between 1973 and 1982.

Although Barzel is not suspected of breaking the law, the committee is investigating how much influence Flick may have been able to buy in Bonn over the years through cash payoffs to all political parties.

Flick obtained a $150 million tax break from the Bonn government in the 1970s. The Bonn prosecutor has charged two former economics ministers with corruption and former Flick manager Eberhard von Brauchitsch with bribing them to get the tax break.

Barzel denied he had ever tried to influence the government on Flick's behalf. He confirmed that Flick had been a client of the Frankfurt legal firm he worked for, but said there was no connection between the fees paid by Flick to the legal firm and the salary he received.

The legal firm where Barzel worked is headed by lawyer Albert Paul, who in 1974 became Flick's top economic and tax adviser.

Barzel, 60, read a long list of legal topics he said he had worked on for Paul. But when asked if he was prepared to present the committee with proof of his work, he said that would be up to Paul.

Testimony continues in mob crackdown

Associated Press

NEW YORK — FBI agents posed as crooked businessmen and bugged a pasta importer's offices to get indictments against the "entire top echelon" of one of the city's five major organized crime families, authorities esaid.

Meanwhile, hooded witnesses testifying anonymously told the President's Commission on Organized Crime eon Wednesday that a new crime society, the Japanese Yakuza, is moving into the United States.

U.S. Attorney General William French eSmith, who told the commission eTuesday that law enforcement eefforts had traditional U.S. criminal eorganizations on the run, said eWednesday that organized crime ehad been "mortally wounded" eby the indiictments against ethe Colombo crime family.

It was one of the few times in law enforcement history "that the entire top echelon of a major organized crime family has been charged in a single federal indictment," Smith said ein a news conference.

The 51-count federal racketeering indictment returned Wednesday named e11 men, including Carmine Persico, Gennaro Langella and Thomas eDiBella. Federal authorities edescribed Persico as the Columbo efamily boss, Langella as underboss eand DiBella as adviser and ea former family head.

The Colombo family "controls no fewer than seven key union organizations" in New York and "strongly influences both the construction and erestaurant industries in this city," Smith said.

The indictment alleges "extortion and payoffs, mob control of labor unions, embezzlement of union funds, etrafficking in heroin and other edrugs, multimillion-dollar thefts, eillegal gambling, loansharking and bribery."

Meanwhile, in the second day of testimony before the commission, witnesses edescribed the Yakuza as a enetwork of groups whose members ecover their bodies with tattoos as ea sign of discipline and chop off fingers eto atone for mistakes.

The 100,000-member network is moving einto Hawaii, California, Nevada, eColorado and New York, said James Harmon, the commission's edirector. Yakuza crimes include egambling, murder, extortion eand gun- and drug-running, he said.

e The Colombo family indictments resulted from a three-year investigation called Operation Star Quest that was conducted by a joint city-federal eOrganized Crime Task Force and einvolved two undercover operations, eauthorities said.

In one operation, an FBI agent posing as a buyer of stolen goods and another agent posing as his girlfriend entertained suspects aboard a yacht docked at Staten Island.

In the second operation, the FBI bugged the offices and warehouse of D&M Enterprises in New York's Little Italy, where "Colombo family people ewould come in, hang around and just talk," said U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani.

The Colombo organization is not the biggest of New York's crime families ebut "it might be the one most similar to a corporate conglomerate," Giuliani said.

Persico, 51, Dominic Montemarano, e46, John J. DeRosa, 47, and Frank Meili, 42, were at large today. Vito Pitta, 57, was expected to surrender today, said Jane Parver, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's eoffice.

Warmer temperatures due, but rain still in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperatures should warm Friday although rain is still in the forecast, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight forecasters are calling for a 60 percent chance of rain and the possibility of a few thunderstorms. Lows are expected to be in the mid-40s accompanied by southeasterly winds at five to 10 mph.

Forecasters are predicting a 40 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms Friday with highs in the middle 60s. Winds will be from the southwest at five to 15 mph.

The record of 92 set in 1933 was 42 degrees above Wednesday's high of 50. The record low of 34 set in 1955 was 14 degrees below the recorded 48 reached this morning.

STATE

A flash flood warning was issued today for Brazos County after heavy rains caused flash flooding on Texas 30 near the Navasota River in the Central Texas county.

The National Weather Service also issued a flood watch and a flash flood watch for portions of Central Texas and and the coastal plains and a flash flood watch was issued for the eastern third of North Texas.

The flash flood watches were issued after a warm front moved inland into Central Texas during the night and heavy thunderstorms formed along the front.

The flood watch and flash flood watch for Central Texas and the coastal plains was enclosed within a line from College Station to Palacios to Beeville to Austin and back to College Station.

Polish man arrested in kidnapping

By MATTHEW C. VITA
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — Poland's Communist authorities have arrested an employee of the Interior Ministry, which controls the nation's police and internal security, in connection with the abduction of a pro-Solidarity priest six days ago.

The official PAP news agency said Wednesday authorities had detained five people who were thought to be driving cars similar to the one used by abductors of the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko. It said four of them were released after they explained where they had been.

It identified the man authorities were holding only as "Grzegorz P. from Warsaw, an Interior Ministry functionary."

The news agency also reported that two militiamen from the Baltic port of Gdansk were arrested for providing "information on Poland's security" to "underground structures."

The report did not indicate whether the underground was affiliated with Solidarity, the banned free trade union; whether the arrests were connected to the investigation into Popieluszko's kidnapping; or some other organization was involved.

Arrest of the Interior Ministry employee came as Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and Solidarity's underground leadership issued a statement condemning the activities of the Polish police.

"A state in which law and order is commonly broken, in which security forces serve only the interests of the authorities and are not submitted to any social control" may lead to "unpredictable results," the statement said.

"Victims of martial law, killed or repressed by alleged defenders of righteousness in strikes, peaceful manifestations in churches, are now joined by a priest kidnapped by 'unknown' perpertrators," it added.

The Solidarity statement said Communist authorities bear responsibility for the abduction of the Warsaw priest.

"This kidnapping is not an isolated event," it said. "The responsibility for the results of the existing situation will lie with the authorities."

There still was no word Wednesday on the whereabouts of the 37-year-old Popieluszko, one of the most outspoken priests in Poland who frequently defended the ideals of Solidarity in his sermons.

The Interior Ministry worker was "placed under provisional arrest for willfully absenting himself from his job ..., for falsifying an entry in the record book of his official car, and for failing to provide an alibi" for missing work last Friday, the day Popieluszko disappeared, state-run television reported.

An earlier television report said Popieluszko was kidnapped Friday night on a highway near Torun, about 125 miles northwest of Warsaw, by a group of men, one of whom was wearing a police uniform. The kidnappers pulled the priest's car over on the pretext of administering a sobriety test to the driver.

The report Wednesday said authorities had impounded the car believed to have been used in the abduction.

Correction

In Wednesday's edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, a story on the Midland Independent School Board meeting stated the key issue as a new grading system giving students below 70 a "D." The issue was how the school district handled a state law requiring any grade below 70 to be an "F."

The story also states that board members presented a three-part study comparing grade flucuations in Midland with other districts. The study only compared those flucuations in Midland schools.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Piano playing brings elderly man, his two sisters together

By PETER COY
Associated Press Writer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — At age 82, Albert Hyde was accustomed to living alone in a log cabin and riding his bicycle four miles a day to fetch water from Jim Bryant's barber shop.

He thought he would live his final years without a family — until one day this month, when he heard some piano tunes played in a way he hadn't heard them played in 62 years.

There were songs like "Till We Meet Again," "Down By the Old Mill Stream," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "The Old Rugged Cross."

Plunking out the old standards in unforgettable style on a grand piano at a church hall was the younger sister he had not seen since 1922, when she was 13 and he called her "Pumpkinseed."

"Her features changed a little bit, but otherwise I recognized her right there by the way she looked and the way she was playing," Hyde said this week.

"I'm Albert. I'm your brother," Hyde told Mary McKnight, of Rochester, his voice cracking. Then they embraced in tears as others at the senior citizens' luncheon in the town of Central Square looked on in astonishment.

"I think it was a godsend," Hyde said. "I figured, 'They're all gone. I'm alone and that's it.' I never dreamt of this."

Hyde, who had lost track of his family after his parents separated around 1920, soon found out from her that he had three other sisters and a brother living.

Now plans are being made for some of the family to reunite at Thanksgiving in Central Square, 17 miles north of Syracuse and about 10 miles west of Constantia, where Hyde lives.

"Things are supposed to reach out that way, some cause or other, I don't know," said Hyde, a Bible-reading man who friends say wears a jacket and tie even when riding his bicycle.

Hyde's two daughters died in infancy and his wife, Doris, died in 1977 after a series of strokes.

Early this summer he said he made one last try to find his family. He traveled to his boyhood home in Chateaugay, a tiny village halfway between Adirondack Park and the Canadian border, but found the residential hotel where the family once lived had been boarded up for years.

On Oct. 9, Mrs. McKnight happened to attend a senior citizens' luncheon at United Methodist Church in Central Square while visiting their sister, Myrtle Nesbitt, 73, who lives in Central Square.

That was when she met Albert.

"You could have knocked me over with a feather," Mrs. McKnight said. "I had 'em all crying in there." After lunch she took him home to meet their sister.

"I didn't know how to feel," Mrs. Nesbitt said. "It felt so funny, not seeing him for so long, and just thinking about him, and wondering where he was..... He looked a bit like my father."

Mrs. Nesbitt said she and Hyde had probably seen each other at senior citizens' luncheons several times before without recognizing each other.

Hugging after their recent reunion are Myrtle Nesbitt, 73, and Albert Hyde, 82. They and another sister were reunited when Hyde recognized her piano playing.

AIRPORT

If plans move along on schedule, the new facility could be ready by the first quarter of 1987, according to Jon Mathiasen, assistant director of aviation/administration. One step in those plans is a public hearing that is scheduled for 3 p.m. today in City Hall Council Chambers. The consulting firms of Daniel, Mann, Johnson & Mendenhall (DMJM) of Houston and Cress & Associates of Lexington, Ky., will outline their work in preparing a master plan for Air Park.

That plan should be done in six months and must be approved through the Federal Aviation Administration before construction can begin, he said.

THE MOST expensive option for a new Air Park, as outlined by White, would have cost $28 million and would have been an "executive class airport...a fully marketable airport to corporate business traffic."

The two options on the bottom of the list and which cost the least failed to meet specifications set by the FAA, nor would they have been comparable to the current facility, he said.

White said the estimates given by DMJM were "just a shade high. We don't want to low-ball this." When the council chose Option C, they noted if the costs came in lower than these estimates they might upgrade some of the plans.

Councilman David Godfrey, however, complained about the fees of DMJM, and the council will negotiate that area.

The $4.1 million at Midland Regional Airport is designated for two more gates to the concourse area, expanding the ticket counter space and lobby area, moving the Pliska Airplane museum indoors and replacing the terminal building's roof, which has been leaking in the recent days of rain, White noted.

"We've tried patching the roof with anything known to man," said White. But still the buckets have to be brought out and placed throughout the building during rainy days.

THE COUNCIL is attempting to get short-term financing for this project, but the money must be obtained by Dec. 31, when that option ends. In deciding to investigate this option of financing a few months ago, the council noted it hoped to pay off the loan through the sale of Air Park land.

During the meeting, financial experts looked at the alternatives in case no one buys that 540-acre tract between Wadley Avenue and Loop 250.

City Finance Director Troy Gifford projected how much could be paid with increasing airport revenues. He estimated that improvements to the terminal building could be paid by the airlines serving Midland. A new contract with them calls for them to pay on a dollar for dollar base what it costs to operate that facility.

In addition, Texas Commerce Bank has agreed to give the city a $30 million letter of credit in case the notes can't be repaid after five years or if no longterm financing elsewhere can be obtained, according to Gifford. It allows the city to get a AAA rating on the notes, the highest rating possible.

Delbert Morrow of Dallas said the city would have other options of refinancing, including longterm revenue bonds or a combination of revenue and tax bonds.

Philip Scheps with Shearson Lehman/American Express Inc., which is arranging the short-term notes, said he doubted if the city would need Texas Commerce Bank's letter of credit. But all notes usually are backed with such a letter, he said.

"People wouldn't lend the money without having that letter of credit. But we don't want that letter to be exercised. That will mean something very bad has happened to Midland's credit," Scheps said.

He said later that the alternatives of longterm financing probably won't be necessary. "If you sell that land and pay off those notes, it's all a wash. It depends on what happens to the land sale."

Texas State Board of Insurance approves decrease in premiums

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas motorists are going to get a $100 million present from the State Board of Insurance.

The three-member board Wednesday unanimously approved a 3.8 percent decrease in auto insurance premiums for passenger cars and light trucks, effective next Feb. 1. In Midland County, the average decrease would be $37 per year.

The decision came after a four-hour non-stop hearing at which the insurance industry argued that it needed a 5.5 percent increase to remain profitable.

The board also voted 3-0 Wednesday to study closely a proposal that owners of automobiles built before 1965 be given a one-time $20 refund if they install a "collision avoidance light."

The lights, to be standard on all cars after 1966, are mounted at eye level on the rear trunk of the car. The light would blink when the car's brake is applied in an effort to avoid rear-end collisions.

Going rough in murder investigation

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Although death squad killings have trailed off since President Jose Napoleon Duarte took office four months ago, he faces serious obstacles in trying to get investigations going into four murder cases involving the slayings of 23 civilians.

Duarte and Attorney General Jose Francisco Guerrero are at odds over who should carry out investigations into the killings, including the assassinations of two American labor advisers in 1981 and the Roman Catholic archbishop of San Salvador in 1980.

Guerrero, saying his judicial branch should do the probing, has announced he will investigate a special commission Duarte has established to examine the four cases.

Duarte, a moderate Christian Democrat who was inaugurated June 1, has made the probe of the killings one of his top priorities.

GUERRERO'S decision to investigate Duarte's commission is indicative of the problems Duarte faces on human rights issues, even from within his own government.

"That commission is not going to do anything," Guerrero said in an interview at his office.

Even top government aides acknowledge there is only a slight chance Duarte will succeed in his attempt to solve the four cases the commission is charged with investigating.

Despite this, the aides say the message sent out by Duarte's formation of the commission — and by his own denunciations of human rights abuses — has contributed to a substantial decrease in violence by rightist death squads that are blamed for the majority of the 53,000 civilian deaths during the civil war.

"There is only a minimal chance there will ever be justice in these cases," said a high Duarte aide. "Our intention is to prosecute those responsible."

The aide, who spoke on condition he not be named, added, "But there is no way that (Guerrero) is ever going to send some scared little prosecutor out to bring in an army officer."

Guerrero said he plans to conduct his own investigations into the deaths, but complains his budget has been cut so much that gasoline for prosecutors' cars has to be bought on credit.

DUARTE AND Guerrero are currently fighting over the control of some $3.5 million in U.S. Agency for International Development funds for a Judicial Reform Project.

Duarte wants the project carried out by his Cabinet, but Guerrero says it should be under the judicial branch.

Conservatives took control of the judicial system last June, in a post-electoral political deal among the four rightist parties that control 34 of the 60 National Assembly seats.

The four cases Duarte has ordered the special commission to investigate are the March 1980 assassination of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero in his San Salvador church, the January 1981 slayings of two American labor advisers and a Salvadoran land reform official, the February 1983 massacre of 18 Indian farmers in Sonsonate Province, and the killing this past August of the daughter of a Christian Democratic leader.

But only the last case appears to stand a chance of leading to a prosecution.

Investigations into the Romero murder had barely begun in 1980 when the judge in charge of the case received death threats and left the country. It is unclear how new evidence could be brought to a case whose clues have been cold for four years.

Guerrero said the attorney general's office is looking into the case, in which his close friend and far-right political leader Roberto d'Aubuisson, has been implicated. Duarte defeated d'Aubuisson in a May 6 runoff election.

Guerrero, in the interview, said he is "impartial" in the case, adding "I am absolutely sure that Roberto had nothing to do with this."

WHILE AN ARMY colonel has admitted to ordering the attack on the 18 peasants in Sonsonate, court prosecutors have not subpoenaed him to testify. Three civil guardsmen accused of having informed on the victims to the army are in jail.

Despite heavy pressure from the United States for an indictment of higher-ups in the Jan. 3, 1981, murders of Michael Hammer of Potomac, Md., and Mark D. Pearlman of Seattle, and Salvadoran land reform leader Rodolfo Viera, gunned down at the Sheraton Hotel, two former National Guardsmen corporals are the only individuals in jail.

Skepticism is so high about Duarte's commission, which is scheduled to have five members, that several lawyers have turned down offers to join, according to a lawyer close to Duarte.

The commission's only known member, coordinator Benjamin Cestoni, has refused requests for interviews.

Despite all this, human rights abuses are on the decline, if the statistics of human rights groups are any indication.

Since Duarte took office, death squad killings — linked in the past to security forces — have fallen from about 100 a month in the first five months of this year to about 20 a month since June, according to the Roman Catholic Church's Legal Aid Office.

Bishop criticizes Sandinistas

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A leading Roman Catholic bishop has harshly criticized Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, saying it uses violence and repression and disregards "the fundamental rights of man."

Monsignor Pablo Antonio Vega, head of the national bishops' conference, said his statement Wednesday reflected his personal opinion, and he was not speaking for the church or the bishops.

Vega, the second most influential religious leader in the country after Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo, described his 16-page statement as "an invitation to Christian reflection."

"Nicaragua, after five years of euphoric illusions, revolutionary myths and painful deviations, is now a living lesson for the whole continent," said Vega. "It has been proved once again that ideological dogmatism and materialistic schemes do not fulfill human needs. They are mechanisms for domination...which disregard the fundamental rights of man."

He called the Sandinistas' slogan "Power to the Workers" a myth, and condemned their alleged use of "violent and repressive methods."

"To what imperialism belong those who internally impose a regime that plunders, imprisons and constantly calls people to arms?" he asked.

Relations between the church and the Sandinistas, who came to power in 1979 after toppling the rightist government of Anastasio Somoza, have grown increasingly tense in recent months. They reached a low point when the ruling junta expelled 10 foreign priests in July for allegedly participating in anti-government activities.

In another development, ABC News reported that a Bulgarian ship began offloading sensitive military gear, perhaps high-performance aircraft, at a Nicaraguan seaport Wednesday. The network quoted unidentified State Department analysts as saying unusually heavy security precautions were taken for an unloading at the Atlantic port of El Bluff.

The Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington issued a statement Wednesday night denying that "MiG airplanes" were being unloaded. The ABC report did not specifically mention MiGs but quoted the analysts as saying there's "some chance" that high-performance aircraft were included in the shipment.

Nicaraguan Defense Minister Humberto Ortega said last month that his nation "will not renounce its right" to acquire Soviet MiG-type fighters, despite U.S. opposition. Ortega said negotiations were under way to such planes but he provided no details.

In New York, Nicaragua charged Wednesday in the U.N. General Assembly that a CIA manual advising Nicaraguan rebels on subversion and assassination was not an isolated incident but a confirmation of U.S. intent to overthrow the Sandinista government.

"Is this or is it not state terrorism?" Nicaraguan Ambassador Javier Chamorro Mora asked delegates.

Chamorro asserted that the CIA manual, disclosed last week, was evidence that the "secret dirty war" against his country was not aimed at halting arms traffic to El Salvador but at toppling the Sandinistas.

The Nicaraguan government on Tuesday announced it sent a letter to Secretary of State George Shultz accusing the United States of promoting "cruel and inhuman acts" against Nicaragua through the manual.

The government said Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto in Managua gave the letter to U.S. Ambassador Harry E. Bergold Jr.

However, the U.S. State Department denied Bergold had received the protest and said the ambassador learned about it from newspaper accounts.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale shakes hands with supporters following a campaign rally Wednesday night in the Milwaukee suburb of Cudhay, Wis.

Reagan masterful at managing events

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Although Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale is trying to capitalize on controversies he claims call into question the president's leadership abilities, President Reagan's masterful management of selective events seems to immunize him from such charges.

The leadership issue was pushed repeatedly by Mondale in the debate with Reagan last Sunday.

But despite controversial developments such as the CIA manual telling the U.S.-supported Contras how to destabilize the Nicaraguan government and a newly-revealed 1960 Reagan letter comparing John F. Kennedy's policies to Karl Marx and Adolph Hitler, Mondale is hard put to make any headway between now and Nov. 6.

This has much to do with Reagan's skills at detaching himself from trouble and the impenetrable nature of his protective shield. Reagan simply emphasizes the positive and ignores the negative.

And a close examination of Reagan's three-day, four-state campaign tour shows how effectively that strategy is maintained by top Reagan aides.

Although yesterday, for instance, was the first anniversary of the deaths of 242 Marines in the terrorist bombing of their barracks in Lebanon, Reagan ignored that issue on the campaign trail. He took no note of the hundreds of mourners at Arlington National Cemetery and elsewhere who marked the anniversary. Instead, he talked about the invasion of Grenada two days after the bombing last year, and won roars of approval every time. At an Ohio State rally, nearly 12,000 persons cheered when he said he was meeting later Wednesday with 85 of the 600 medical students evacuated from Grenada. Then they broke into patriotic chants of "USA! USA!"

Only when back at the White House for the Grenada ceremony did Reagan mention the Beirut bombings, saying the Marines who died there were "heroes every bit as much in their peacekeeping mision as were our soldiers in their rescue mission in Grenada."

Privately, White House aides acknowledge that Lebanon was deliberately downplayed, calling it smart politics to reinforce their strengths and ignore their failures.

Aides also noted that the ceremony for the medical students from the University of St. George's in Grenada fit neatly into the major Reagan campaign theme of patriotism.

"During the latter part of the 1970s," Reagan said, "America passed through a period of self-doubt and national confusion. We talked and acted like a nation in decline and the world believed us.

"Many questioned our will to continue as a leader of the Western Alliance and to remain a force for good in the world," he said.

"I believe this period of self-doubt is over," Reagan said. "History will record that one of the turning points came on a small island in the Caribbean where America went to take care of her own, and to rescue a neighboring nation from a growing tyranny."

Even the pickets and hecklers which greeted Reagan in Portland, Seattle and Columbus, could be turned to his advantage, his aides feel. They contend that they reinforce Reagan's in-charge image, which they feel was restored in the Sunday debate, after having been shaken in the first debate.

The basic campaign strategy is to keep Reagan detached from potential controversy. Top of the avoidance list is the CIA briefing manual, which gave the Contras thinly disguised encouragement to kill and harrass Nicaraguan officials.

In the debate, Reagan misspoke and said that a CIA chief in Nicaragua had approved the manual, then corrected himself minutes later. He insisted that all offending language such as "neutralizing" of opponents had been deleted by the CIA in Washington although somehow 12 copies had slipped through.

Bush calls hecklers 'left-wing kids'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush, carrying President Reagan's re-election drive into several toss-up states, says the hecklers who have begun to dog their campaign are "left wing kids...an entirely out-of-it group of people."

Bush said the protesters "don't believe in strength for the United States."

The vice president was heading for New York, Ohio and Kentucky today on a two-day trip aimed at bolstering the Republican campaign effort in the swing states.

Recent polls have shown Reagan leading in Kentucky and Ohio, but Walter F. Mondale has been gaining ground. New York carries 36 electoral votes, the second largest prize in the nation, and the race there is seen as a toss-up.

Bush spokesman Peter Teeley said Wednesday they view the race in Ohio to be "in good shape," but New York is "tight," and that "Kentucky has always been tough" for the Republicans.

On the eve of his trip, Bush said in an interview in Washington with WAFB, a television station in Baton Rouge, La., that the campaign is not worried about the hecklers who have appeared recently at Reagan-Bush rallies.

For the second day in a row Wednesday, several dozen demonstrators interrupted the president, denouncing his Central American policies. The latest incident occurred at a rally attended by 12,000 at Ohio State University.

An Analysis

Mondale invokes image of Truman's upset win

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Walter F. Mondale is brushing aside polls that suggest his campaign surge has stalled and invoking the image of Harry Truman's upset victory instead, declaring he's not "just another politician putting out the bull."

"I'm announcing a new plan tonight," Mondale said late Wednesday as an ABC News-Washington Post nationwide poll was released showing Reagan with a 54-42 lead less than two weeks before the election.

"I'm not going to comment on any polls between now and the election. The question is not polls, the question is ideas, the question is of the future and of who can best lead us forward," the Democratic presidential nominee said.

He added later at a campaign rally, "On Nov. 6, the people of this country will decide, not the public relations directors, not people who take polls, not the manipulators, the people of this country will decide where they want to go."

Another poll, a new Harris Survey, put Reagan's lead at 14 percentage points, 56-42. That's compared to a 9-point Reagan lead in a Harris Survey a week ago.

The surveys suggested last Sunday's second and final presidential debate hadn't changed many minds, unlike their first debate, which triggered an improvement in Mondale's standing in the polls.

By all accounts, he had succeeded in cutting Reagan's lead after their first debate on Oct. 7. His aides hoped the surge would continue after the second encounter, paving the way for an upset victory over Reagan.

But the ABC-Post margin of 12 percentage points for the president was the same margin as in a pre-debate ABC-Post poll.

The news came near the end of a campaign day that seemed picture perfect for Mondale — large, friendly crowds at every stop along a three-state bus tour of Mississippi Valley farm country and a cheering evening rally in Cudahy, Wis., outside Milwaukee.

House chairman claims FEMA documents show 'misconduct'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financial documents suggest "an extensive pattern of misconduct and mismanagement" in the nation's disaster relief agency, including improper payments to two contractors, a House chairman says.

Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., chairman of the House Science and Technology investigations subcommittee, released the subpoenaed documents Wednesday, declaring that the situation at the Federal Emergency Management Agency "is, in a word, intolerable."

Gore said one contractor, the Washington-based Triton Corp., spent $2,000 at a fund-raiser for the Republican Party's private club on Capitol Hill and passed the bill on to FEMA as a "conference and luncheon expense."

Agency Director Louis Giuffrida, one of his top aides and their wives were among guests of Triton at the fund raiser, Gore said. He said it apparently violated rules against accepting gratuities.

Triton spokesman Bill Kelly acknowledged that the agency was improperly billed. But he attributed it to a bookkeeping error and said Triton immediately corrected the error after discovering it last month.

"Whether or not it was appropriate, the invitations were extended on a strictly personal basis without any improper intent," Kelly said.

Gore said the documents show Giuffrida's wife, Genevieve, accompanied him at government expense on visits to Mexico, Belgium, Italy and Israel and that much of her schedule called for "sightseeing."

FEMA spokesman James L. Holton said the agency agrees there have been problems. But he said FEMA that started the investigation in cooperation with the Justice Department. He said Gore's action jeopardizes that probe.

Holton declined to discuss Gore's remarks about Triton and another contractor, IMR Corp., of Falls Church, Va.

The congressman said a FEMA inspector general's report showed IMR "double, triple and quadruple billed the agency for $55,000." A receptionist who answered the telephone at IMR told a reporter that no one was available to discuss the matter.

Holton said it was inappropriate to discuss specifics concerning the two firms with the agency's internal investigation under way. He said Mrs. Giuffrida went along on two of the director's 12 overseas trips and that Giuffrida picked up many of her expenses in Europe. He said she was needed as a hostess at some stops.

Gore said the documents indicate "that favors and gratuities may have been provided by some contractors to top FEMA officials."

"And it looks as though in return special treatment may have been provided to the contractors," Gore told a subcommittee session boycotted by Republicans. They said he released the documents to promote his Senate candidacy.

Rep. Joe Skeen, R-N.M., the panel's top Republican, said in a statement Gore's action was "inexcusable...a clear violation of both House and committee rules...a total disregard of individual rights."

FEMA officials said in a letter to Gore that release of the documents could undercut investigations by the agency's inspector general and by the Justice Department. The agency cited an Oct. 5 statement by the congressman that the documents "will be kept under lock and key" to avoid "irresponsible handling."

U.S. fishermen hurt by decision on Georges Bank

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Paydays for David Gregory used to be a big deal: $1,700 for 10 days of hard work aboard a fishing boat. But poor catches have cut the figure in half in recent months, and now Gregory thinks his paycheck is about to take another tumble.

"It's the decision," says the 38-year-old fisherman. "It's going to hurt everybody."

Gregory isn't alone in his fears. From the busy docks of New Bedford to the lobster piers in Maine, fishermen are holding worried discussions about "the decision" — a World Court ruling that denies them a fertile swath of the North Atlantic's Georges Bank they have fished for generations.

The court's ruling goes into effect on Friday.

"We fish there very heavily. I don't know if we can make it up," said Tom Brancaleone, a 43-year-old Gloucester captain who has been going out to the northeast peak of the Georges Bank since he was a 17-year-old boy on his father's ship.

"The impact is very hard. It's brought a hardship to the whole industry," he said.

The World Court's Oct. 12 ruling ended a boundary dispute over a 30,000-square-nautical-mile area that began in 1976 when the United States and Canada extended their territorial claims to overlapping areas 200 miles out to sea.

The two countries agreed to submit the dispute to the international court after the U.S. Senate refused to ratify a 1979 treaty that called for joint management of the Georges Bank.

The international court's decision gave the United States a major portion of the disputed area. But when the international jury drew new boundary lines, Canada received a section of shoals rich with scallops and an abundant spawning ground for finfish.

The impact may be significant. According to the National Marine Fisheries Service, 55 percent of the pollack caught by New England fishermen — and 25 percent of the total U.S. pollack harvest — comes from the area now off limits to Yankee fishermen.

The section also accounts for 35 percent of the yellowtail flounder and scallop brought back to New England's fish piers. The loss could cut U.S. catches in those categories by as much as 20 percent, the fisheries service said.

The boundary changes will affect those who traditionally fish closer to the U.S. shore. John Rittgers, executive director of the National Marine Fisheries regional office in Gloucester, said the new restrictions will crowd U.S. fishermen into a smaller area, increasing competition for the already dwindling supplies of fish.

The boundary change comes at a bad time for New England fishermen who have seen boom turn to bust in recent years.

The fishing industry grew rapidly in the late 1970s when the extension of the 200-mile limit barred foreign fishing fleets from Georges Bank. But New England's fish harvest has been dropping since the early 1980s. Fishery officials say the catch at major New England ports is down by 25 million pounds this year.

Second Reagan term called 'nightmare' for U.S. environment

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading conservationist in the House says America faces an environmental nightmare if President Reagan is re-elected, charging the president "has abandoned the tradition of careful stewardship in favor of giveaways."

Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the Interior Committee, said in a speech prepared for delivery today at the National Press Club that Reagan has undercut or ignored most of the environmental gains made under both Republican and Democratic administrations in recent decades.

The only initiative by the administration, said Udall, is Reagan's program to correct safety hazards in the national parks.

Balanced against the program, Udall said, were Reagan administration efforts to sell coal and oil drilling rights "fast and cheap." Toxic waste dumps were left untended, he said, strip mining laws ignored and acid rain studied to death.

"President Reagan keeps saying that if people knew the facts, they would find his environmental record laudable.

"Well," Udall said, "there he goes again...

"Look at this president's resource policies and you'll see a president who has abandoned the tradition of careful stewardship in favor of giveaways," Udall said. "This president is literally selling America short."

Reagan-Bush campaign depends on 'Checkwriter's' solitary pursuit

By MAUREEN SANTINI
AP White House Correspondent

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Among the huge entourage that accompanies President Reagan on his political travels is a young man who never listens to Reagan's speeches or worries about his performance.

They call him The Checkwriter.

While traveling reporters are always engineering ways to question the president, and political aides are assessing the local landscape, and White House aides are hovering expectantly, young John Moloney is engaged in a quite solitary pursuit.

After the presidential party — Air Force One plus two press planes — arrives in a city, the 22-year-old cost-control assistant at Reagan-Bush '84 rushes out to either pay the bills or, if he thinks someone is trying to bilk the campaign, put up a fuss.

Having written about 900 checks since the general election campaign began Sept. 1, Moloney can tell you from memory about the costs of politics:

— About $1,500 to mail out tickets to a rally.

— Between $4,000 and $15,000 to install the sound system, including Reagan's microphone and speakers set up in the hall.

— Between $3,000 and $15,000 to light the hall and stage. For instance, lighting a B1-B bomber assembly hangar at Rockwell International in Palmdale, Calif., on Monday cost $14,000.

— Between $1,000 and $15,000 for construction of the platform from which Reagan speaks and another platform, usually 70 feet away, used by the media.

— $500 to rent five to 10 portable toilets to make sure the crowd stays happy.

— $300 to buy and blow up hundreds of red, white and blue balloons that have become a trademark at Reagan's rallies.

— Perhaps $300 for a band and/or entertainment.

— Undisclosed costs for electricity, without which the sound system, lights and band would not work.

Moloney said that the electrical system at Reagan's rally in San Jose, Calif., last month, was tampered with and a back-up generator happened to be available. Ever since, there is always a back-up generator handy in case of sabotage or other mishap.

Moloney was selected for the job, which pays $17,000, partly because he's single and able to travel extensively.

A political science major with no accounting experience, Moloney gets angry when suppliers try to rip off the campaign.

And so the College of DuPage in Illinois, which by Moloney's standards submitted quite a creative bill for construction and labor in connection with Reagan's rally there last week, will have to cool its heels before it gets paid.

"If I get hit with an exorbitant bill, I will not pay it. I will take it home and talk to my superiors," said Moloney.

Nor does he have patience for advance men who organize the rallies but don't take seriously the campaign's legal need to document every expense to the Federal Election Commission.

It is the advance men who present the bills to Moloney.

"I have had it out with a number of advance men," he said during an interview aboard the press plane on Tuesday.

"I said, 'If I am not clean, it's going to get in the papers and make us look bad.' "

Taking out his pocket calculator, Moloney adds up the costs on each bill, in case a mistake has been made in the original addition, makes sure each invoice is the original since the FEC won't accept photocopies, and writes the check — about 40 or so per event — after he is satisfied the costs are justified.

It costs about $50,000 every time the president leaves town, but some of the bills aren't paid immediately, like air fare and daily food allowances. Still other costs aren't paid

John Moloney, a cost-control assistant with President Reagan's re-election campaign, is known to his co-workers as "The Checkwriter." The 22-year-old, pictured Wednesday at the Reagan-Bush offices in Washington, pays the bills for the president's political travels.

Reagan takes day off from campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan takes a day out from campaigning after marking the first anniversary of the U.S. invasion of Grenada with a campaign-style ceremony the White House insisted was "strictly non-political."

Some 75 of the students evacuated from St. Georges Medical School on Grenada a year ago were at the White House Wednesday for the ceremony.

They cheered and applauded as Reagan, adapting rhetoric from campaign stump speeches, said the Grenada invasion marked a shift in America from a "period of self-doubt and national confusion" after the Vietnam war.

"We talked and acted like a nation in decline, and the world believed us," Reagan said. "History will record that one of the turning points came on a small island in the Caribbean where America went to take care of her own, and to rescue a neighboring nation from a growing tyranny."

The White House event was billed as non-partisan. But requests for information about the students' activities were referred to the House Republican Study Committee.

Reagan planned a low-key day today after a continent-spanning political swing that began in Kansas City, Mo., with his last debate with Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale Sunday night.

He scheduled a staff meeting, a luncheon with Vice President George Bush and a signing ceremony in the Rose Garden for the omnibus Trade Bill.

Ferraro: Voters can admire Reagan, but not back him

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro is telling voters in Ronald Reagan's home state that they can still like and admire the president while voting to deny him a second term in the White House.

Criss-crossing California Wednesday for a series of large, enthusiastic rallies, the Democratic nominee for vice president told voters they should make their decision on specific issues, not the personalities of Reagan or Democratic challenger Walter Mondale.

It was a message tailored to a state in which the Republican president has been enormously successful despite heavy Democratic majorities. He was elected governor twice and won the state's presidential election in 1980 by 4.5 million to 3 million votes despite a 2.1 million registration advantage for Democrats.

"This is more than a contest of personalities. You can like Ronald Reagan, but don't vote for him," the New York congresswoman told part of a crowd of 10,000 or more that jammed the Hollywood Palladium for a rally where she was accompanied by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"It's more than Ronald Reagan. (The election) is a referendum on the arms race. It's a referendum on the environment. It's a referendum on our trade policy. It's a referendum on human rights, both here and abroad. It's a referendum on civil rights."

"Let others say this election cannot be won. I say it can be. I say it must be, and with your help it will be," she added.

Ms. Ferraro's current three-day, eight-city tour, which ends today with appearances in San Jose, Stockton and San Francisco, is her fifth in two months, and Mondale is scheduled to return Friday for his fifth California campaign trip since Labor Day.

During a meeting with reporters, Ms. Ferraro conceded that she and Mondale are still underdogs in California, but argued that the state's history of suport for a nuclear freeze and strong environmental safeguards should swing voters to the Democratic column.

"I know there are a lot of people who like Ronald Reagan personally. There are a lot of people who don't associate the president with his policies. They're with us on the policies," she said.

Reagan's lead in California, which ranged from 16 to 18 percentage points in September polls, is now about 10 points, according to the most recent polls.

At the Hollywood Palladium rally, the campaign's biggest to date in California, both Kennedy and Ms. Ferraro castigated Reagan for comparing his goals to those of the late President John F. Kennedy.

"Ronald Wilson Reagan has no right to quote John Fitzgerald Kennedy," Sen. Kennedy said. "Ronald Reagan was a Democrat for Nixon in 1960. I wonder why Reagan doesn't quote Nixon now. When he changed parties, he should have changed quote books."

Ms. Ferraro criticized Reagan for a letter he wrote in 1960 comparing some of President Kennedy's economic proposals to ideas espoused by Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler.

"He's out of step with the American people, and frankly, I find it frightening. Why doesn't he stick to his own heroes. Leave ours alone and quote Richard Nixon, Herbert Hoover and Spiro Agnew."

Ms. Ferraro's current trip has taken her to each major region of California, and in each area, she has attracted large and enthusiastic crowds.

Age-old issue

Ever since President Ronald Reagan quieted Walter Mondale's insinuations that the nation's chief executive might be a little too old to handle the demands of the job, the Democrats haven't been attacking on the age issue.

Could it be that the age issue got "old" in a hurry?

Yes. But, then, the decision to attack Reagan as too elderly and, therefore, too incapacitated to serve effectively as President was a thin limb for the Democrats to venture out on in the first place. It's a little like saying Geraldine Ferraro wouldn't be capable of handling the duties of Vice President if she and Mondale were to be elected Nov. 6th.

It was naivete talking and the American people wrote it off for what it was truly worth — a good laugh shared after Reagan's remark about not taking political advantage of Mr. Mondale's youth and inexperience.

What would Mr. Mondale propose we do in this country, set an abritrary limit on the age at which a person can no longer serve in the nation's highest elective office? What about setting limits on the oldest age at which doctors can treat patients? Or lawyers can defend clients in court? Or police officers can protect the public?

Or the age at which journalists have to quit writing editorials that poke fun at public policies and politicians' silly comments?

The issue, which was fully explored in years gone by, isn't so much a matter of age as it is a matter of the ability of one to do one's job effectively regardless of age. Americans put Ronald Reagan into the White House nearly four years ago and, if the polls are accurate, likely will put him in for four more this November.

How has he performed? Well, not without his slip-ups, for certain. But, depending on which polls one chooses to believe, a lot of Americans apparently think President Reagan has been doing a better than average job in the Oval Office.

As for the "young whippersnapper" attempting to take away President Reagan's job, that "old guy" in the White House tossed the age ball to him in last Sunday's debate.

The young man dropped it.

Another View: The debate windup

Walter Mondale was very much on the attack Sunday night, though he was careful not to trample on the dignity of the presidency.

He was able to use the latest news — the CIA's Nicaragua manual, the developing record of the administration's Lebanon travails — to advantage.

President Reagan, however, came back hard on some of the old Carter policies and did his best to tag his challenger with "a record of weakness second to none."

There was a lot of vigor and some genuine strong feeling: at one point a flushed Reagan, twice (and fairly) challenged on his knowledge of arms control detail, declared he would not respond further to Mondale's "repetitions of falsehoods."

We thought Mondale put on a presidential performance. He had a theme — the requirement for alert, knowledgeable and responsible leadership — and he illustrated it deftly as the debate went along in respect to military programs and arms-control proposals alike. His pursuit of the president on personal knowledge of and commitment to arms control was sure.

Mondale's particular purpose was to rebut the notion that he would be soft in standing up to the Russians. He was pretty skillful in putting the best face on his past opposition to so many military programs.

He would apply a nuclear freeze, for instance, only when it was mutual and could be verified with assurance. This helps get him off an unfortunate wicket, i.e., the freeze.

His explanation that he voted earlier to slow down the F-14 because of bugs in the plane made the necessary point that, in national defense, money isn't everything.

We think he was wrong to oppose the immigration bill, but he made about the best case for his opposition that is available.

Reagan made a notable gaffe by unwittingly acknowledging the previously known but unacknowledged CIA role in Nicaragua. His explanation of the Nicaragua manual was, to be charitable, lame. His suggestion that it was not he but the military commander who put the Marines in the Beirut barracks allowed Mondale to cite Harry Truman tellingly: "The buck stops here."

Yet the president has plainly come a long way from the simplicities of his campaign of four years ago. He tried hard Sunday night to reach out to those who have been unnerved by some of his policies, and who doubt his devotion to peace and, specifically, to arms control.

He was right when he said that all human rights are lost when a country goes totalitarian. He was easy and avuncular, and scored well in response to a question on his age.

Reagan did much better than he had done in the last debate. He has had some successes in foreign policy; his administration has done some things well. In certain respects we would say he even had a better case than he made. Factually, he was weak. We would give the edge to Mondale.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 25, the 299th day of 1984. There are 67 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One year ago, on Oct. 25, 1983, U.S. Marines and Rangers, assisted by soldiers from six Caribbean nations, invaded the island nation of Grenada. The Reagan administration said the action was taken to keep some 1,100 U.S. citizens on Grenada from being taken hostage and to restore order following the overthrow of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop.

On this date:

In 1812, the U.S. frigate United States captured the British vessel Macedonian during the War of 1812.

In 1854, English forces conducted the Charge of the Light Brigade in Russia during the Crimean War.

In 1954, for the first time, a session of the U.S. Cabinet was televised.

Five years ago: Chrysler Corp. reached tentative agreement with the United Auto Workers union on a three-year contract aimed at saving the ailing automaker some $200 million a year. Chrysler also agreed to nominate UAW President Douglas A. Fraser to the company's board of directors.

Today's birthdays: Actor Whit Bissell is 75. Country music star Minnie Pearl is 72. Former baseball player Bobby Thomson is 61. Actor Tony Franciosa and actress Marion Ross are 56. Singer Helen Reddy is 43. Actor Brian Kerwin is 35.

Choppers shrouded in mystery

WASHINGTON — A year ago today American troops landed on the Caribbean island of Grenada — yet the public still doesn't know the full story of the invasion.

Jack Anderson

Not only were reporters barred from Grenada for three days, but the Pentagon has yet to release after-action reports on the operation.

How did the Marines and Rangers perfosm in combat? Were they properly led, or were they hampered by poor intelligence and command confusion? Did their weapons work the way they were supposed to?

The American public may never know. All we have to go on, even after a year, is the Pentagon's assurance that the Grenada operation was carried off brilliantly in every respect.

One illustration of the military's secretiveness is the case of the mysterious helicopters used in the invasion. Eyewitness accounts — confirmed by photographs — told of several Hughes 500-MD scout helicopters used extensively on Grenada. Film footage shows one of the choppers crashing and exploding.

The mystery is this: The Hughes 500-MD helicopter is not part of the Army's inventory. In response to a congressional inquiry, Gen. John Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, did not list the Hughes craft as part of the Grenada invasion force, despite the eyewitness and photographic proof that some were indeed used.

Officially, the Pentagon hasn't bought any Hughes helicopters since 1969, and those were the older OH-6 model. But my associates Donald Goldberg and John Dillon found the Hughes choppers listed on the Army's internal master inventory. They include the OH-6 and newer, improved versions as well.

There are at least three different, specially equipped models of the Hughes helicopter, loaded with classified electronic surveillance equipment, as well as three MH-6 versions believed to be modified for night missions.

According to sources, the mysterious helicopters used in Grenada were based at Fort Bragg, N.C., home of the Army's Special Forces.

The Hughes choppers have roamed farther afield. They have shown up in Central America — in the hands of CIA-backed contra guerrillas fighting the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. Eden Pastora, leader of one anti-Sandinista faction, had three of the helicopters. They were among the aircraft stolen from Pastora a few months ago — by Pastora's rival, Alfonso Robelo, according to a Pastora aide.

More recently, two Alabama National Guard volunteers died in the crash of a Hughes helicopter during a raid over Nicaragua. It was the same type that was on Grenada.

Congressional sources suspect the CIA supplied the Hughes helicopters to the contras. If so, this may have been done in violation of congressional restrictions on aid to the guerrillas. The fact that the aircraft isn't listed in the official inventory makes it difficult to tell whether there was a violation or not.

Did the CIA supply the Hughes choppers seen on Grenada? If so, why? Or does the Army have helicopters that aren't listed on the inventory? Again: Why? Those are just a few of the many unanswered questions about the Grenada operation.

What else hasn't the Pentagon deigned to tell the American people?

This raises some questions I have been asked lately. Is President Reagan's age a legitimate issue? Has he really slipped a few cogs because of advanced age? If not, why has the press focused so much attention on his age?

I'll tell you what I think. Reagan seems able to float placidly above such squalls as mere reporters can stir, secure in the esteem of a majority of voters. In part, this is due to the conjunction of an appealing personality and a need by the public for patriarchal reassurance after two decades of turmoil.

In part, it's due to Reagan's unfathomable genius for projecting a steady, competent, sincere, above-petty-politics image. Some reporters believe he deserves more press-ragging than he is getting. They are frustrated that he remains unscathed by their stories. Out of sheer frustration, they focus on his vulnerabilities — sometimes fairly, sometimes unfairly. The age issue is unfair.

It's Walter Mondale, not Reagan, who requires daily medication. The drug Mondale takes to control his high blood pressure, doctors say, won't affect his ability to run the government. So happily, both Reagan and Mondale are healthy and alert. That ought to settle the matter.

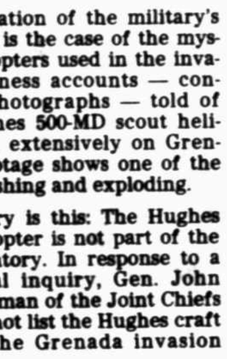
GEORGE F. WILL

Questions remain after debates

WASHINGTON — In my disgracefully checkered past I was, briefly, a professor of political science. The profession was, and doubtless still is, infested with persons who were happy only when counting things. Some persons practiced "content analysis," whereby they would read, say, the works of Lenin and count the number of times and the spirit in which he used the word "imperialism." Then they would come to the thunderous conclusion that Lenin talked a lot about imperialism and did not approve of it.



George F. Will

Applying that scalpel of scholarship to Walter Mondale's debate performance reveals — are you sitting down? — that he likes strength and knowledge. Subtract the questioners' time from the 90 minutes, and divide by two: Mondale probably spoke for 40 minutes. Into those minutes he crammed at least (I may have missed some) 39 uses of the words "strength" and "strong" and 21 uses of the words "knowledge" and "know."

Early on he said: "Strength requires knowledge." In his closing statement he referred to strength and knowledge 14 times. He understands this about communicating to the masses: Keep the message simple ("Coke is it!") and repeat it relentlessly.

But the remarkable discipline he brought to the debate was not sufficient to solve his problem. He reached age 56 and the October of his longed-for campaign with problems that were too numerous and too intractable to solve.

Ronald Reagan went to Kansas City — the scene of his heartbreaking but toughening near miss at the Republican convention eight years earlier — with the support of more than one-fifth of registered Democrats. These include a high proportion of conservative, blue-collar Democrats who helped elect him. Mondale had to try to pry a lot of them loose by convincing them that he is personally strong, that he understands national strength, and that Reagan lacks the knowledge to make his instincts and values safe and effective. But Mondale's checkered past caught up with him — mildly, because Reagan referred only briefly to Mondale's Senate record.

When I quit being a professor I worked on the Senate staff, where I watched Mondale and kindred spirits having fun — and it was jolly fun for them — voting against the military systems that today are the sinews of America's strength. The Mondale who was senator from Minnesota was the Mondale who reportedly resisted Jimmy Carter's conversion when Soviet behavior convinced even Carter of the need for rearmament.

And that was the Mondale on display from January through June this year, competing with Gary Hart to see who could seem most indiscriminately ardent for arms-control agreements and most reluctant to contemplate the use of force. As Mondale says, he has a long record in public life it is too long to erase, even with 39 incantations of the words "strong" and "strength."

Reagan made a hash of some answers and statements in this year's debates, but he botched nothing as badly (and nothing as important) as Mondale did when asked by two questioners to explain what would be frozen and how verification would work under the "mutual and verifiable freeze" that is the centerpiece of his campaign. Mondale repeated what has become the main theme of his campaign. He implied that "we have an arms race under way" because Reagan is President, an interpretation of postwar history too perverse to merit confutation.

In Kansas City, yet again, he said, in effect, "we have a runaway arms race" because Reagan will not agree with the Russians. Mondale could have said "strength" 1,000,039 times and his clear message still would have been the one identified by Jeane Kirkpatrick in Dallas, in the best speech of this campaign: Democrats always blame America first.

Reagan, for his part, said "we seek no (military) superiority," thereby repudiating, again, an important part of his 1980 platform. And he said of the Soviets, "We're not going to change their system." This recurring theme of his administration (last week Secretary of State Shultz said, "We mean no threat to the security of the Soviet Union") raises this question: Why are we participating in the "Helsinki process," given that compliance with the Helsinki agreements on human rights would require fundamental change in the Soviet system, and would mean fundamental insecurity for the Soviet elite?

And if Reagan means what he recently has said about restoring "full independence" to Eastern European nations, his aim is incompatible with what the Kremlin considers its essential security interests. Someday someone should ask him about this.

ART BUCHWALD

Watch out for 'press terrorists!'

There has been some slight consternation in Washington about a CIA manual written for rebel forces fighting the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. I called up my mole at the Central Intelligence Agency to find out how they were taking it.

Art Buchwald

"We're all cool," he said. "The problem is you just can't find good proofreaders any more."

I asked, "What was the purpose of the manual?"

"To help our freedom fighters overthrow the Marxist government of Nicaragua by kidnapping, assassination and blackmailing civilians," he said.

"What is the difference between a freedom fighter and a terrorist?"

"A freedom fighter is financed by the CIA. A terrorist is supported by the KGB, Khadafy and Khomeini."

"But according to your manual the methods used in achieving the goals are the same."

"They might seem that way to the uninformed reader. While freedom fighting requires using tactics similar to terrorism, we part company with terrorists when it comes to which ends justify which means."

"I thought the United States was against all terrorism. President Reagan has ordered an investigation to find out who put out the manual. He was shocked to hear we were making our freedom fighters into terrorists."

"Why was he shocked?"

"Because he obviously didn't know about it."

"Why didn't the CIA tell him what it was doing?"

"If the president knew what we were doing he couldn't be shocked, could he? The United States does not condone political assassinations nor the overthrow of a legitimate government by force."

"But the CIA does?"

"Somebody has to stand up for America."

"How can the United States protest acts of terrorism in Beirut and condone them in Nicaragua?"

"You have to differentiate between apples and oranges. In Beirut we see examples of wanton terrorism against innocent people, while in Nicaragua our freedom fighters use their skills against despots and dictators."

"Every terrorist thinks of himself as a freedom fighter."

"That doesn't make him one in our eyes. He has to pass a test."

"What's the test?"

"Does the terrorist act he commits have the sanction, if not the financial support, of the CIA? If it does, the terrorist is officially certified as a freedom fighter."

"And then he is permitted to read the manual?"

"That's correct. It says right on the cover of the manual, 'For Freedom Fighters Only.'"

"Suppose it is read by a terrorist?"

"Then we'll pull his teeth out."

"Are any heads going to roll at the CIA for embarrassing the president? Will you do anything to the guy who wrote the manual?"

"Not at the moment. But when things quiet down, he'll probably get a medal and a promotion."

"How is Director Bill Casey taking it?"

"He was even more shocked than the president."

"Because of the contents of the manual?"

"No, because somebody in the agency leaked it. If there is one thing that sends the director up the wall, it's having a freedom-fighting textbook fall into the hands of a ruthless terrorist press."

Anti-labor group claims AFL-CIO doesn't back pro-defense candidates

WASHINGTON (AP) — When it comes to helping congressional candidates with strong pro-defense records, the AFL-CIO has failed to put its money where its mouth is, the head of a private anti-labor group maintains.

Steve Antosh, director of the Center on National Labor Policy, says a study of labor political contributions shows "a wide gulf between the (labor) leadership's public pronouncements in support of a strong military deterrence to war, and where they put their money."

Antosh based that conclusion on a survey by the American Security Council of the defense-related voting records of candidates in the 1982 congressional elections.

Antosh said his organization's study, released Wednesday, showed that "70 percent of all AFL-CIO PAC (political action committee) money went to 1982 congressional candidates who voted in support of pro-defense issues less than 39 percent of the time."

The group reached its conclusions based on an analysis of Federal Election Commission records of contributions by union PACs, he said. The center, based in Springfield, Va., a suburb of Washington, describes its purpose as "curbing excessive union and governmental power."

Members of Congress who earned a zero American Security Council rating on the defense scale (of voting for defense legislation) received an average contribution of $36,285, while those with the highest pro-defense rating of 100 received an average contribution of only $2,510, the study said.

AFL-CIO unions have given political action committee money to candidates the labor movement believes will be sympathetic to issues affecting unions and workers, and these donations are based on a person's overall voting record or perceptions of how the person would vote if elected to Congress, according to labor officials.

CBS' claim muddied by variables, officer testifies

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS' claim that Vietnam War enemy troop strength was purposely undercounted to make the war seem winnable is muddied by the variables that go into such reports, the top U.S. intelligence officer in Vietnam says.

Gen. Phillip B. Davidson, testifying Wednesday in retired Gen. William C. Westmoreland's $120 million libel suit against CBS, said, "It's difficult to apply sheer mathematics."

CBS lawyer David Boies asked Davidson why reports appeared to show the number of enemy troops killed, wounded or captured in the January 1968 Tet offensive was greater than the total number of the reported attack force.

Davidson said some of the wounded may have been hit more than once, that 10,000 of the 45,000 killed were civilians, and that the number wounded was estimated at 1.5 injured for each enemy killed.

He also noted that the 84,000 reported attackers was the number at the outset of the month-long January 1968 onslaught, not the total.

Westmoreland sued CBS over a 1982 documentary, "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception," which accused him of intentionally giving falsely optimistic enemy troop reports that left President Lyndon B. Johnson unprepared for the size of the Tet offensive.

Boies also asked Davidson why civilians and 5,000 so-called "political cadre" members were killed, in light of other witnesses' claims the civilian troops were no great danger.

"They were trying to incite the people of South Vietnam to revolt," Davidson said.

"Were they armed and shooting?" asked Boies.

Davidson replied that some were, and that as a rule civilians were not shot unless they were fighting. "An artillery shell or an aerial bomb doesn't make those distinctions," he added.

CRIME STOPPERS IS WORKING

Burglaries and narcotics are targets of a successful new program called Crime Stoppers. Dallas Smith began this new program in January, 1984.

Crime Stoppers allows any person calling with information on crimes such as burglaries and narcotics to remain anonymous. This program has been responsible for the arrest of 42 felony offenders.

Burglaries have declined 14.2% in 1984 in rural Midland County as a result of good management by a proven professional.

Traffic tickets cost driver $55,000, possible jail term

MIAMI (AP) — A Porsche-driving man who received at least 70 traffic tickets since 1973 has been fined $55,000, and faces 12 years in jail if he drives in the next four years.

"I think the Guinness Book (of World Records) would have to go far and wide to find a bigger amount than this in a traffic case," said Dade County Judge Harvey Baxter, who sentenced Nathaniel James under a plea bargain agreement.

"I need to get a message to him that he is not to touch a steering wheel," said Baxter. "By holding 12 years (in prison) over his head, I'm telling him it's a lot cheaper to hire a chauffeur."

James, 28, has been cited four times just since May, three for driving without a license and one for running a stop sign in his 1983 Porsche. Court records show he has been cited at least 70 times in 11 years, and has twice had his license suspended.

Truck's tilt tips off police

COACHELLA, Calif. (AP) — Police noticed a pickup truck with a camper top tilting sharply when it negotiated a turn 150 miles east of Los Angeles, and found 27 undocumented aliens stuffed inside the camper.

The 27 aliens and a man riding in the truck's cab were deported to Mexico, but the driver fled through a field, Gordon Schneider, a supervisory U.S. Border Patrol agent, said Wednesday.

"This was pretty obviously an organized smuggling case," Schneider said of the incident Tuesday. "The inside of the camper was gutted so they could get as many people in as possible."

Judge: Man can't intervene

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A man charged with shooting a woman may not intervene in a decision on whether to remove her from life-support equipment, in part because he's not acting in her best interest, a judge has ruled.

Justice John Tenney of the state Supreme Court, which is a lower trial court in New York, on Wednesday rejected Harold Hall's request for an order preventing the removal of the equipment from Sandra Sweeting, 26, who is comatose.

Prosecutors say they'll file a murder charge against Hall, 26, if Ms. Sweeting, with whom he lived, dies. Hall was charged with assault in the Oct. 15 shooting.

Airline's fares drop to $19

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — One-way fares on four East Coast routes drop to as low as $19 today, People Express Airlines Inc. has announced.

One-way fares between Newark International Airport and Baltimore, Boston, Hartford, Conn., and Washington's Dulles Airport will be $29 during peak hours and $19 in off-peak periods. The fares were $45 peak and $29 off-peak.

The decrease is a response to lower fuel costs and a bid to spur air travel during the slow winter months, the no-frills carrier said Wednesday.

Bulldogs, Cougars bring in 'Air Force'

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ABILENE — Abilene Cooper is No. 1 in District 4-5A passing statistics, Midland High is No. 3. The Cougars have the top-rated quarterback, Midland High the fourth. Cooper has three receivers ranked in the Top 10, Midland High four.

With statistics like these, it's almost a sure bet both teams will throw the football in Friday night's 8 p.m. game at P.E. Shotwell Stadium. However, no matter how they go about moving the football, both teams desperately need a victory.

The Cougars and Bulldogs are currently tied with Abilene High for fourth place in the 4-5A standings at 2-2. Odessa Permian is the only unbeaten team at 4-0 while Midland Lee and San Angelo occupy second place at 3-1. A third loss for any of the fourth place teams and they can all but mathematically kiss their playoff hopes goodbye.

IT'S THE passing attack of both teams that has opposing head coaches Mike Garrison and Doug McCutchen worried.

"I figure (Matt) Marcum will be back," said Cooper's Garrison. "Midland High can throw the ball real well. We'll have our hands full with them."

Marcum, who missed the last two football games this season because of a bruised hip, is expected to play but "we don't know who will start the game," said McCutchen about Marcum or his recent replacement Jeff Alsup. "Probably both will see some action."

Also worrying Garrison is Midland High's tight end, Darrell Davis, the No. 4 receiver with 20 catches for 326 yards.

"Davis is a fine football player," said Garrison. "We could use him. If they get tired of him in Midland, we'll take him."

Davis is Midland High's leading receiver this year, followed by halfback Keith Byrd (No. 7 in 4-5A) with 11 catches for 119 yards and Flanker Allan Foret and halfback Jake Madrid tied for eighth with 10 catches for 146 and 125 yards respectively.

McCUTCHEN'S CONCERN centers around Cooper quarterback Doug Hadley and his favorite targets Scott Anderson (No. 1 in 4-5A, 26 catches, 448 yards), Chris Cromely (No. 3, 23-385) and D.C. McDonald (No. 5, 16-341).

"I think their passing game is the thing that scares you the most," said McCutchen. "Their quarterback is an excellent passer and he's throwing to three fine receivers. Against Permian, Cooper was down 14-0 and could have given up. But they came back to score nine points to get back into the ball game. That's what can scare you about Cooper. They're never out of it."

McCutchen also has a lot of respect for Cooper's running game, especially in the district's No. 3 running back Jay Tollison, rushing for 702 yards so far this season on 156 carries for six touchdowns.

"Tollison is an excellent running back and Cooper has an excellent running game," said McCutchen. "It's even more productive with the pass."

Offensively, Midland High has a slight rushing edge, covering 1,106 yards to Cooper's 1,046. The Bulldogs' big guns on the ground are Keith Byrd, No. 6 with 493 yards on 100 carries; and Jake Madrid, No. 11, 86-388.

Defensively, Midland High is rated fourth in the 4-5A while Cooper is rated sixth. The Bulldogs have allowed 1,471 (882 rushing, 589 passing) to the Cougars' 1,939 (1,431 rushing, 508 passing).

"They're exceptionally strong defensively," said Garrison. "Davis is a fine linebacker and those big ole tackles (Brad Edgar, 225, Steve Mizzles, 205) are good football players. Anybody who thinks Midland High doesn't have a good football team is crazy."

A LOT of Midland High's tough defense has come through necessity. The Bulldog offense has been plagued by turnovers all year, 31 to be exact, 11 interceptions, 20 fumbles.

"It was a credit to our defense the other night against San Angelo," said McCutchen. "We never got San Angelo back on their end of the field — turnovrs, bad punts and a lack of offensive execution. San Angelo was on our end of the field the whole first half and we only gave up 21 points and 14 of those came late in the game."

Both coaches say their team is coming into the game in healthy condition, few injuries to players. That's a good position to be in considering neither team can afford a loss at this stage of the season if they want to continue their playoff hopes.

Bowls hunger for BYU power

By HANK WESCH
Copley News Service

Could Brigham Young University win the Western Athletic Conference football championship and wind up in a bowl game other than the Holiday Bowl?

Could an undefeated and nationally top-ranked Cougar team pursue a pot of gold and national prestige at one of the major New Year's Day contests instead of making the Holiday Bowl journey to San Diego for the seventh time in the seven years of the game's existence?

The scenario begins thusly:

BYU, currently 7-0, goes through its next four games undefeated. As usual, the Cougars secure the WAC championship and the resultant berth as the host team in the Holiday Bowl on Dec. 21 in San Diego. They do so by Nov. 17, one week before the NCAA deadline for bowl committees to render invitations to at-large teams.

BY CONTINUING what is currently the longest major college winning streak in the nation (18 games), the Cougars would probably increase their national ranking from its present No. 4 (UPI) or No. 5 (AP). Depending on the fortunes of teams ahead of them like Washington (7-0), Oklahoma (5-0-1) and Texas (4-0-1) it is within the realm of possibility BYU could be No. 1 or No. 2.

Now back to our scenario.

One of the three major bowls that has an at-large berth to offer — Orange, Cotton or Sugar — wants the Cougars in order to turn its game into the showcase of Jan. 1 and take the mythical out of the mythical national championship. The New Year's Day bowl comes bargaining with money by the briefcaseful and strikes an agreement to take the Cougars away.

Sounds fascinating, but what's the possibility of it happening?

"My response is we have a contract," said John Reid, Holiday Bowl executive director. "Everything else is speculation. Would we be willing to let them out of the contract? What if somebody came along with an offer?

"It's hard to respond to those things because it's like dealing with a puff of smoke. You never say never, but I can't foresee any possible case of that (BYU going elsewhere) happening.

"We have no decision to make because no one has come to us to say we'll take BYU off your hands for $1.5 million or something like that. Right now we're responding to air."

For the scenario to come to pass, it must happen through Reid. According to Reid there are no loopholes in the WAC's contract with the Holiday Bowl — an initial five-year agreement with built-in two-year extension options through 1990 — that would allow BYU or the WAC to extricate themselves.

"It says the WAC champion will play here — except by mutual consent," Reid said. Neither BYU nor the conference has made any overtures.

THE ONLY time the subject came up, Reid said, was when he and BYU athletic director Glen Tuckett compared notes last week about the questions they had received on the subject from the media. Reid and Tuckett were among those at a meeting to discuss the terms of the extension of the WAC-Holiday Bowl contract.

"We'd be committed as conference champion to play in the Holiday Bowl," is Tuckett's response.

Dallas quarterback Gary Hogeboom watches from the sideline with wrapped hand as backup Danny White takes his job away against New Orleans Sunday.

White becomes Dallas 'Band-Aid'

DALLAS (AP) — Quarterback Danny White says getting to start Sunday doesn't answer his questions about what kind of future he has with the Dallas Cowboys.

"This is kind of a Band-Aid and not really a cure," White said after hearing the news about his return to a starting role on the radio driving home from practice.

Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said Wednesday that White, replaced by Gary Hogeboom as Dallas' No. 1 quarterback at the beginning of the National Football League season, would start Sunday against the Indianapolis Colts.

Landry said he was impressed with White's performance against the New Orleans Saints last Sunday, when White came off the bench to rally Dallas to a 30-27 overtime victory.

"We thought after the game the other night that he deserved a chance to start," Landry said.

It was the third time in a row White has replaced Hogeboom, who injured a hand in the Saints game.

Earlier this week, Landry said he wanted to see how Hogeboom threw with a bruised hand before deciding whether to change starting quarterbacks.

After practice, Landry said Hogeboom will probably be able to play Sunday. He said his decision to start White hinged on the veteran's performance, not Hogeboom's injury.

"I said all along, since the start of the season, that we need both quarterbacks to win," Landry said.

Landry said Hogeboom was "disappointed" about not starting Sunday. He said he had not spoken with White.

"I guess I have mixed feelings," White told The Associated Press. "I'm happy for the opportunity. But its not a solution to the question that I've been trying to deal with."

That, he said, is what's going to happen on a permanent basis.

"That's really what I'm interested in. I don't know when he'll (Landry) make that decision or even if he'll make it before the end of the year," said White, who was backup to Roger Staubach until 1980.

"I'm interested in getting with a team that wants to pay the price to get to the Super Bowl. I certainly hope it's the Cowboys. But I'm not at a point in my career where I'm willing to sit on a bench or alternate," White said.

Also on Wednesday, starting middle linebacker Bob Breunig was listed as doubtful for Sunday.

Cowboys spokesman Doug Todd said Breunig began having back spasms when he bent over to tie his shoelaces. He said rookies Eugene Lockhart or Steve DeOssie will play for Breunig.

Todd also said wide receiver Doug Donley and running back Timmy Newsome have been upgraded from questionable to probable for Sunday. He said both worked out Wednesday.

About 6,000 tickets for Sunday's game remained unsold on Wednesday. If the game hasn't sold out by noon Thursday, it will be blacked out on Dallas area television.

Badgers, Rangers face shootout

Area Football Roundup

Time is running out in the 1984 season, especially in District 8-AA.

In a district with only six teams, two losses are the measure of failure. Teams with two losses can just about kiss their title hopes goodbye, although in a district as balanced as 8-AA, anything can happen.

At the midway juncture in the district schedule, five of the six teams are still in the running, and even the sixth, Stanton, has a shot at the playoffs.

Eldorado has been the only survivor thus far with a 2-0 record in the league. Wall, the defending district champ, and McCamey, 11-4 a year ago, are tied with Greenwood and Reagan County at 1-1 in the loop.

WHEN McCAMEY visits Greenwood Friday night, the loser will know that they will have two losses with two tough games yet to play. Also, both teams are 6-1, and this game has the makings of a serious rivalry. The Rangers haven't lost a home game since the second game of the 1983 season, and that was to class A power Wink.

McCamey was a state quarterfinalist with an 11-4 record a year ago.

"We're looking forward to playing them," said Ranger coach Joe Longley. Longley has had a better year than most expected of him. Greenwood's first year of Class AA ball was supposed to be a rebuilding process. But the Rangers gelled quickly and are now challenging pre-season favorite McCamey.

"They're a good football team. It will be a real challenge, but they're all a challenge."

The district's balance is such that it's likely both playoff entrants will be determined on the season's final day. "Each game, you're playing with a loaded gun," Longley said.

McCamey's recent problems have proven the district is solid. After a 5-0 non-district start, the Badgers were stunned 15-14 in Big Lake. A week ago, they had to come from behind to earn a 15-12 home win over Wall.

"It's the most balanced district around. Any team can beat any team," said second-year McCamey coach Buster Leaf.

IN GREENWOOD, Leaf must counter an offense that has at times been overpowering and a defense that has already posted five shutouts.

"They stress defense like we do but they have a much better offensive attack," Leaf said. The Ranger backfield tandem of quarterback Chad Longley, fullback Roger Smith and tailback Terry O'Steen have keyed Greeenwood's 24.4 points per game average. That figure leads the 8-AA, as does the Rangers' 5.3 defensive average.

"There hasn't been anybody stop them yet," said Leaf. "They can put points on the board."

Stanton travels to Reagan County, and the Buffs hope to throw another wrench in the district standings by posting their first district win against the Owls. A week ago, the 2-4-1 Buffs moved the ball at will for a quarter, but could never penetrate the end zone in a 15-0 loss at Greenwood.

The Owls (4-3), meanwhile, dropped a pivotal ball game at Eldorado. The Buffs would be the first team to face elimination from playoff contention if they lost to the Owls.

Lamesa's "Killer Fleas" defense continued its strong showing in last week's 20-8 win at Snyder. Granted, the Tigers aren't Nebraska but the Tors are still cruising at 5-1, 2-1 in District 2-AAAA.

The Tors get a home game this week against Lakeview, and the Chiefs have been truly awful this year. They are 0-6.

ANDREWS VISITS Fort Stockton, and the Mustangs need a win to postpone an early exit from the playoff picture. After a 33-6 embarrassment at home against Sweetwater last week, Andrews faces a good team in Fort Stockton, 5-1. Stockton needs to win also, because Sweetwater and Monahans are still ahead of them in the district race.

Crane has been having a rough year at 1-6. The Cranes are too young too compete in the rough and tumble 7-AAA. This week they visit Ozona, and the Cranes have a good chance of getting to taste victory again. The Lions are also inept this year, but they have given up twice as many points as the Cranes are.

Rankin faces Grandfalls, and both teams have been having long seasons. Rankin is 1-5, Grandfalls is 2-4 after a 52-0 whipping sustained from Wink.

Oilers' streak climbs to eight

NHL Roundup

Associated Press

The Edmonton Oilers are still unbeaten — barely — thanks in large part to a high-scoring rookie.

Gord Sherven, the only rookie to crack the lineup of the Stanley Cup champions, scored a pair of goals Wednesday night to boost his season total to six in eight games, tops among first-year National Hockey League players.

And Sherven was credited with a crucial assist on a third-period goal that brought the Oilers from behind and into a 3-3 tie with the Washington Capitals.

"Things just seem to be going my way right now," Sherven said. "I was getting my shot away quickly. I've been working on that in practice, about a half hour or so."

The tie maintained Edmonton's status as the only unbeaten club in the NHL with six victories and two ties.

Devils 5, Penguins 2

Don Lever's goal at 16:53 of the second period snapped a 2-2 and New Jersey went on to its first road victory of the season. Lever's second goal of the season was a backhander from 10 feet that beat Pittsburgh goalie Michel Dion.

Rick Preston was credited with a goal at 5:54 of the third when his shot was deflected into the net by Pittsburgh defenseman Randy Hillier, and Joe Cirella's power-play goal at 15:16 accounted for the final score.

Maple Leafs 6, Red Wings 1

Bill Derlago, scoreless in six previous games this season, scored three goals as Toronto snapped a four-game losing streak. John Anderson added a goal and three assists for the Maple Leafs.

Detroit center Darryl Sittler suffered a cracked cheekbone in the second period when he was boarded by Toronto forward Jim Korn. Korn wasn't penalized on the play, but Sittler was given a roughing penalty when he chased after Korn and threw a punch.

Jets 8, Whalers 4

Center Thomas Steen scored two goals and added four assists as the Winnipeg Jets slowed the fast-starting Hartford Whalers. Despite the loss, Hartford remained in a first-place tie with Montreal in the Adams Division.

Steen scored in the second and third periods and set up a pair of goals by Doug Smail, as well as others by Randy Carlyle and Bengt Lundholm, as the Jets won their second consecutive game.Robert Picard and Morris Lukowich also scored for Winnipeg and Smail added two assists.

Sylvain Turgeon scored twice for the Whalers.

Bruins 4, Blues 1

Ken Linseman scored two goals as Boston snapped a three-game losing streak. Geoff Courtnall and Tom Fergus each had a goal and an assist. The Bruin defense, meanwhile, limited St. Louis to only 16 shots on goal.

The Bruins jumped ahead 1-0 on Courtnall's second goal of the year at 15:41 of the first period on a backhander from 15 feet out. Linseman scored 55 seconds later on a tap-in in front of the goal.

St. Louis broke Boston goalie Pete Peeters' shutout bid at 14:01 of the third period when defenseman Jim Pavese scored his first goal of the year by tapping in a pass from Bernie Federko.But Linseman then iced the game by scoring a shorthanded goal into an empty net with 1:13 left.

Black Hawks 9, Canucks 3

Defenseman Behn Wilson collected a pair of goals and center Denis Savard scored once and picked up two assists as Chicago moved into first place in the Norris Division.The Black Hawks scored three goals in the first period in handing the faltering Canucks their sixth consecutive defeat.

Early in the first period, center Ken Yaremchuk intercepted a pass and connected on a 20-foot blast from the left faceoff circle. Savard and Wilson then scored within a 36-second span later in the period. Wilson's second goal of the night gave the Black Hawks a 6-2 margin after two periods and control of the game.

Meyer fires Rust, Pats fire Meyer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Ron Meyer was fired today as coach of the National Football Leagu's New England Patriots and will be replaced immediately by former Baltimore Colts receiver Raymond Berry, a former Pats' assistant coach, team spokesman Tom Hoffman said.

Berry, a member of the NFL Hall of Fame since 1973, was an assistant coach for the Patriots from 1978 to 1981. He earned his place in the Hall of Fame as a receiver for 13 years with the Baltimore Colts.

Meyer was hired as head coach in 1982, replacing Ron Erhardt.

Meyer's firing came the day after the coach stunned his team and defensive coordinator, Rod Rust, by firing the popular assistant in an unexpected move, citing "unreconcilable differences" in defensive philosophies.

Rust's wife, Jean, said today that her husband had been re-hired and would attend the morning news conference.

"What's best of all," she said, "He's going to have a new boss."

It appeared that Meyer's unilateral decision to fire Rust was instrumental in his own ouster. Meyer said Wednesday that he had not discussed his move with General Manager Pat Sullivan or Player Development Director Dick Steinberg.

Meyer said he told Sullivan of his decision Wednesday morning and Sullivan interrupted his trip to National Football League meetings in New Orleans and rushed back to meet with Meyer Wednesday night. Sullivan refused comment at that time.

Meyer's firing follows Sunday's 44-24 loss to Miami, which dropped the Patriots' ranking to 5-3.

The move also came 19 days after Sullivan met with players who spent part of the session complaining about Meyer. On Wednesday, players flocked to the defense of Rust, praising him as a coach and a person.

"I really don't know what happened. All I know is he's not here any more and I can't see a reason why," said cornerback Raymond Clayborn. "It kind of hurt me a little bit because Rod was an excellent guy on and off the field. You could talk with him."

Meyer came to the Patriots after six years as head coach of Southern Methodist University, where he had turned a losing program into a consistent winner. He orchestrated a similar turnaround in his three years as head coach of Nevada-Las Vegas from 1973-1975.

In his first season with the Patriots, Meyer assumed control of a team that had gone 2-14 the previous year and led them into the playoffs with a 5-4 record in a strike-shortened season.

New England was 8-8 last year and was eliminated from playoff contention on the final day of the regular season.

MEYER, WHO concentrated on offensive planning and gave Rust freedom to run the defense, said changes in defensive tactics "are going to be subtle. They'll gradually grow and involve more of my thinking defensively."

He said he had detected "an overall regression of our defensive performance for some time."

Meyer said Rust, whom he described as "an outstanding, respected football coach throughout the league," wasn't being made a scapegoat for last Sunday's loss to Miami in which the Patriots set club records by allowing 552 yards of total offense and 32 first downs.

Meyer said his differences with Rust, Kansas City's defensive coordinator from 1978 through 1982, began before this year's preseason camp. He added that he rarely discussed them with Rust.

Sutter may deal out Cards

Associated Press

Bruce Sutter, a former Midland Cub, has declared his intention to offer his split-finger fastball to the highest bidder, filing for free agency from the St. Louis Cardinals. It could help make him the second $1-million reliever in baseball.

Sutter's agents say there still is a chance he could re-sign with the Cardinals before the re-entry draft Nov. 8, but his declaration of free agency Tuesday probably gave him whatever leverage he needs to push his salary over that magic mark.

"Now, at least in a preliminary way, we can explore the interest in him with other teams," agent Jim Bronner says.

Sutter, 31 years old, reportedly was paid $3.5 million for his four-year contract that expired this past season. So, he needs an another $125,000 a year to join Rich Gossage of San Diego as baseball's only $1-million relievers. Gossage makes an estimate $1.25 million per year.

SUTTER'S numbers speak eloquently on his behalf. He set a National League mark and tied the major league record of Dan Quisenberry with 45 saves in 1984. He had a 1.54 earned run average and a 5-7 record. Sutter now has 260 lifetime saves for an average of nearly 29 in each of his nine major league seasons.

Sutter was one of three players who filed on Tuesday. The others were Jim Gantner, Milwaukee Brewers infielder, and pitcher Dave Rozema of the World Series champion Detroit Tigers. Today, Oscar Gamble, outfielder and designated hitter for the New York Yankees, became the 41st player to signify his intent to participate in the re-entry draft. Players have until Monday to file for free agency, and clubs may continue to negotiate with their free-agent players until Nov. 5.

On Monday, Sutter's agents, Bronner and Robert Gilhooly of Northbrook, Ill., made the Cardinals a counter-offer in their third round of negotiations. The offer was given to Cardinals executive committee member Lou Susman, who normally speaks for club owner Gussie Busch.

Susman expected Sutter to file as a matter of form and said that "while differences remain," the Cardinals still wanted to sign their pitcher to a longterm contract.

"Obviously, there still are some differences, or he'd be signed," Bronner said in a telphone interview from his office.

"I wouldn't characterize the negotiations at all except to say we're still negotiating," Bronner said. "The fact that Bruce filed for free agency is not an indication of anything more than that he filed for free agency. Our intention is to continue to negotiate with them and, as I understand it, theirs is to continue to negotiate with us."

SUTTER JOINED pitcher Rick Sutcliffe of the Chicago Cubs and designated hitter Andre Thornton of the Cleveland Indians as the top names to file for free agency. Sutter and Gantner, along with Sutcliffe and Thornton, will be rated Type A free agents if they go through the draft.

If a Type A free agent is signed by another club, the team that loses him can select from a special pool of professional players for compensation. Ratings are based on a player's performance level at his position over two seasons.

Wednesday's filings brought to 44 the number of players signifying they intended to go through the re-entry draft.

BYU

"Under the contract, we have no option. If someone wanted us badly, I'd refer them to the Holiday Bowl."

"Glen Tuckett and I have talked and agreed that, a deal's a deal," Reid said.

Reid has certainly become familiar with the scenario and the questions it prompts. As early as the third week of September, when BYU had posted victories over Pittsburgh and Baylor to jump into the top five of the national polls, media representatives from the Salt Lake City area projected an undefeated season for the Cougars and called to present the scenario to Reid.

Earlier this week it was the subject of telephone calls from representatives of the New York Times, USA Today and ABC-TV network.

If the Cougars march on, as they figure to do, Reid expects the scenario to crop up with increasing regularity.

"The thing the media is always trying to do is orchestrate a national championship (game), which they should," said Reid. "The bowls are violently opposed to the idea of a (national championship) playoff system, but we love the arguing about who's No. 1. Speaking for the bowl system, the years we enjoy best are the ones where there is no clear-cut champion. Where you have three or four (teams) arguing at the end that they should be No. 1."

FOR THE sake of conversation, Reid will address the scenario.

"The people who have been calling from around the country have said, "If the price were right, would you consider some kind of offer," Reid said. "Well, there's the old saying that everything's for sale.

"I don't know at what point you would perhaps prostitute your principals and say that the cash, whatever it might be, would offset the obvious dangers of doing something like that.

"The first question you have to ask yourself is who would you replace that team with? After you've worked years to build your game up to a certain level, if you sell it (national prestige team) and take a second place team you're all the way back down to a horsebleep ballgame.

"The one exception to that, I guess, would be if the (San Diego State) Aztecs were to finish second (in the WAC) at 7-3-1 or something. That would be great locally. I don't know what that would do to our image nationally. And I don't mean that as any disrespect to the Aztecs." San Diego State (3-3-1, 3-1-1 WAC) is currently second in the conference behind BYU with three WAC and two non-conference games remaining.

Holding BYU to the contract might deny it a chance at a national championship, and the $2 million payoff that the major bowls offer compared to a payoff in the $400,000 range for Holiday Bowl participants. But Reid listed several factors that must be considered.

"Our first obligation is to our own ticket buyers. They are the ones who have made the game survive as long as it has. If we were to say that the champion is for sale to another bowl, then we would have a tough time living with our constituency. They buy their tickets based on the WAC champion being here.

"I would be the first to admit that there has been an interest in more variety in the WAC representative — especially from the San Diego State boosters who'd like to see their team here. But the fact that BYU as a WAC champion would almost certainly come in with a lofty national ranking this year enhances the game to our people.

"We take a WAC champion good, bad or indiffesent. Theoretically we would take one with a 6-5 record if, for some reason, that set of circumstances worked out. We would stick by the WAC in the bad years. We want to enjoy the good years."

THE WISHES of the Mizlou network, which televises the Holiday Bowl, would also have to be taken into consideration. Their pitch to potential advertisers has certainly included BYU's potential ranking and time has been sold on that basis, Reid said.

Reid, whose experience in bowl administration includes several seasons with the Fiesta Bowl prior to his six here, is skeptical that one of the major bowls would come forward with an offer to purchase the rights to BYU. But he doesn't consider it impossible.

"I guess if I were (executive director) Jim Brock at the Cotton Bowl, I guess I'd have to weigh it against who else was available," Reid said. "If BYU were clearly the best candidate for me and there was a huge gap to the second best, then I might start thinking about it.

"But if I've got BYU at 11-0 and a Boston College with Doug Flutie at 10-1 and ranked just a notch or two behind them, I'm probably going to go with Boston College because I don't have to pay anything extra for them. But again, that's all hypothetical."

The reality of the BYU situation is that it has put the Holiday Bowl in an enviable position for an event that is young by bowl game standards. Reid considers the possibility of the game acquiring a stronger opponent for the Cougars than its payoff might merit to be infinitely greater than the Holiday Bowl dealing away rights to the Cougars.

"We don't have the money to stage a national championship type game right now," Reid said. "But a game like we might be able to put on with BYU this year might accelerate the growth of the Holiday Bowl toward the day we could be in that kind of position."

AL reaches parity with NL

American League closes talent gap

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

Take the Detroit Tigers this year and the Baltimore Orioles last season. Take young players such as Cal Ripken, Don Mattingly and Frank Viola, along with proven stars such as Jim Rice and George Brett.

What does it add up to?

The American League, after years in arrears, appears to have caught up with the National League in prominence and talent.

Not since the 1948 Cleveland Indians and the 1949 New York Yankees have two different AL teams won the World Series in consecutive years, as have the Tigers and Orioles. And no World Series triumphs have been as decisive of those by Detroit and Baltimore since an overpowering Cincinnati Reds team swept the Yankees in 1976.

What does that mean?

LISTEN TO Bob Howsam Sr., current Cincinnati president and the man who helped put together the "Big Red Machine" that won World Series championships in 1975 and 1976.

"At that time, there were those thoughts that we were better," Howsam said of the National League. "Again, we were more competitive in every front office. And some of the play by some of the teams may have shown that."

Now, a decade or so later?

"There has been a spreading out of talent," Howsam said. "All teams have become more aggressive in finding talent.

"I haven't seen enough of the American League to say for certain, but from all indications there's been a narrowing of the difference that existed back then."

One of baseball's charms — and the thing that leaves many questions unanswered — is that the two leagues do not play each other until it's Series time.

They do meet in the All-Star Game. The NL has won 12 of the last 13, with the AL's triumph coming in 1983. "The All-Star Game isn't a true test," Howsam said, "although it has had some effect in displaying depth of talent."

It's hard to gauge overall strength based on the best-of-seven World Series, although the convincing victories by the Tigers and Orioles have left no doubt as to which team was better that year.

Baseball statistics leave everyone groping, especially because the designated hitter skews the numbers.

For instance, of the 12 players who hit 29 or more home runs this year, 10 played in the AL. Two of them, Dave Kingman of Oakland and Andre Thornton of Cleveland, were full-time DHs, while some of the others took turns there.

The AL has more home runs, more stolen bases and more of everything else. Chalk that up to another hitter in the lineup.

Tony Gwynn of San Diego led the major leagues in hitting, followed by Mattingly and Dave Winfield of the Yankees.

IN THE last couple of years, Rod Carew has led a parade of AL hitters with high averages. Bill Madlock and others paced the NL.

Sports Analysis

For every young star such as Kent Hrbek and Alvin Davis in the AL, there's a Gwynn, Ryne Sandberg or Dwight Gooden in the NL. Each league has its veterans, guys such as Rice, Eddie Murray and Dan Quisenberry in the AL and Mike Schmidt, Dale Murphy and Bruce Sutter in the NL.

Again, what does it mean?

"There is a parity that has been achieved in our sport," said Murray Cook, who spent the 1970s in the Pittsburgh Pirates' front office, was the Yankees' general manager in 1983-84 and has now become the Montreal Expos' GM.

"The draft on the free-agent level, the college level and the high-school level, along with increased player mobility has seemed to balance things out," Cook said.

Free agency opened up avenues in the last decade that were never open to players, and stars such as Winfield and Rich Gossage have been able to criss-cross leagues. Before, players often were branded as type "AL" or "NL" and tended to stay within their leagues, even when traded.

That's another reason why the leagues look homogenized and even.

Not that things were always that way. Go back to the mid-1970s, when line-drive-hitting, slick-fielding, fastball-pitching teams like Cincinnati, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh characterized the NL, while traditional slugging-and-slower clubs such as Boston and New York fared well in the AL.

The exception in the AL was the Kansas City Royals, who at that time had the league's only artificial-turf stadium.

"The one thing that the National League had more of then was speed," John Schuerholz, the general manager of the Royals, said. "The National League had more fields with artificial turf.

"They needed speed. And there are two things fans like to see — home runs and guys running around the bases."

Howsam and his NL counterparts knew that.

"In those days, we had more speed," he said. "We used that speed."

In 1974, Oakland's Bill North stole 54 bases, the only player in the AL with more than 40. Meanwhile, Lou Brock of St. Louis set a record with 118 steals and was one of five NL players with 50 or more. A similar pattern followed the next couple seasons.

Schuerholz says he's not so sure the NL was better than the AL in those days. He thinks the faster-paced games in the NL may have merely created that illusion.

Springsteen may outdo Olympics

Springsteen

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rocker Bruce Springsteen's seven-night stand beginning today at the Sports Arena could "double the volume... that we did for the Olympics," says a ticket broker who sold ducats for as high as $400.

"The demand for tickets is unprecedented," and much of it is from those who want to see "The Boss" more than once, said Fred Ross of Front Row Center Ticket Service. "At least 50 percent of the people who bought tickets for us were going for more than one night, and I would say 10 to 20 percent were people who were going more than two nights."

Nearly 110,000 seats for Springsteen sold out in less than nine hours.

Schmidt

LEXINGTON, Va. (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon "was a great strategist" in foreign policy, but "leadership has decreased a little" since then, says former West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

"The world needs some more leadership. I very much hope it will be brought about by your country next year, after the election," Schmidt said Wednesday in a lecture at Virginia Military Institute.

However, Schmidt, 66, a member of the West German Parliament and co-editor of a weekly news magazine, wouldn't say whether he thinks President Reagan or Democratic candidate Walter Mondale could best provide that leadership.

VENICE, Italy (AP) — The first visit ever by Britain's Queen Mother Elizabeth to this northern Italian city and her first trip to the boot-shaped country in 25 years will probably not include a gondola ride.

A ride on one of Venice's famed canals had been planned, but was ruled out "mainly for security reasons" because "a gondola trip is a slow, exposed kind of thing," Gordon Pirie of the British Embassy said Wednesday.

The 84-year-old mother of Queen Elizabeth II plans to visit several monuments restored with the help of the British-backed Venice in Peril Fund, including the Church of Saint Nicholas of the Mendicoli and the Church of Sts. John and Paul.

The Queen Mother set sail Wednesday for her four-day Italian visit.

ATLANTA (AP) — Responding to a lawmaker's criticism that inner-city youths were being left out of Victory Tour concerts, superstar Michael Jackson and his brothers have spent $30,000 to buy tickets for 1,000 poor children.

State Rep. Hosea Williams blasted the tour Tuesday for neglecting poor youths and not bringing business to black promoters.

But the Rev. Al Sharpton, chairman of the Jacksons' traveling community relations committee, said Wednesday the tour was left open to criticism because Mayor Andrew Young had failed to announce the ticket giveaway.

A Young aide said the mayor only knew about 250 tickets provided by tour sponsor Pepsico Inc.

Kennedy

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — David Kennedy caused "an incredible uproar" in his family by trying to visit his ailing grandmother while intoxicated by alcohol and cocaine, according to documents detailing the days before his drug-related death.

Kennedy, found dead in a hotel room April 25, told a drug counselor that security guards asked him to leave the family's Palm Beach estate April 24.

Kennedy in a telephone conversation "admitted to having had up to nine or 10 drinks in combination with extensive cocaine use," said Cal Scheidegger, who treated the son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy at St. Mary's Rehabilitation Center in Minneapolis.

Scheidegger's recollection of his conversation with Kennedy was included in an 18-page report released by authorities Wednesday.

By MOIRA BAILEY
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Truman Capote either never finished or destroyed his long-awaited book "Answered Prayers," but the flamboyant author left behind a "beautiful, beautiful story" that rivals his most-acclaimed work, his aunt says.

The 38-year-old unpublished manuscript is about Bud, a bachelor cousin who lived with his three spinster sisters in Monroeville, Ala., where Capote spent much of his youth, said Marie Rudisill. "I think it's more beautiful than 'A Christmas Memory,'" one of the late author's most-praised stories, she said.

Capote, who died last month at age 59 of liver disease complicated by drug intoxication, probably never wrote more than the four chapters of "Answered Prayers" that appeared in Esquire magazine in 1975, Mrs. Rudisill, 72, said Wednesday. She said he abandoned the expose of his jet-set friends because he didn't want to lose their companionship.

Bud, the subject of the 9,000-word unpublished manuscript, was the brother of Sook Faulk, who is deceased, but was the inspiration for "A Christmas Memory."

"This thing poured out of Truman. He regarded Bud as his grandfather," Mrs. Rudisill said. "It expressed the grievous lack or loss in his life of the companionship of Bud."

When Capote gave Mrs. Rudisill the manuscript in 1946, "he said, 'I am giving you this story because you loved Bud the most and I loved Sook.' He wrote this to give to me.

"I think there was more of Truman's heart in this story."

She said she will send it to a literary agent in New York "because I want the proper disposition of the manuscript. I don't intend to keep it and hang it on the wall. I think it should be published.

"I'm not going to give it to a museum. It's a beautiful, beautiful, story."

"Answered Prayers" caused Capote "a great deal of unhappiness," Mrs. Rudisill said. The "La Cote Basque" segment, which told of the dishy doings of his celebrated crowd, cost him a few friendships.

"If he did (finish it), he's destroyed it," she said. "...He did not know what he was getting into.... Those things you never know. What the reaction is going to be in your family and the general public, that's something you can't tell."

Joe Fox, Capote's editor at Random House in New York, said Wednesday that the publishing company did not have a complete manuscript. "We haven't yet found anything, but we haven't given up hope," he said.

But Capote's close friend, Joanne Carson, said the author had been working on "Answered Prayers" before his death at her Bel-Air, Calif., home.

"He always said this would be the last book he would ever write," she said. "It was by far his most difficult. He was letting his barriers down in this book and writing from his heart and soul."

Capote championed the "non-fiction" novel in such highly acclaimed works as "In Cold Blood," in which he used a novelist's style to relate the story of a Kansas family's slaying.

Mrs. Rudisill wrote a biography of her nephew that created rifts in the family. But the ties to Capote were renewed, and apparently were strengthened before his death.

"I am the one person in the world who knew Truman Capote inside and out," she said.

'AfterMASH' loses TV's ratings war

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "AfterMASH," a postscript to television's long-running, popular comedy about the Korean War, is a casualty of TV's ratings war.

The show, which followed the characters of "MASH" after the war ended, was canceled by CBS in its second season, with four of this year's nine episodes yet to air, executive producer Burt Metcalfe said Wednesday.

"I think ultimately there was this inevitable comparison with "MASH," and, naturally, by those standards, we were going to suffer," Metcalfe said.

"MASH," a sardonic situation comedy set in a Korean War Army hospital base, ran for 11 years.

Mexican artist to be honored in California

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A statue of the late composer Agustin Lara was shipped recently to Los Angeles, where it will be placed in Lincoln Park, the government news agency Notimex reported.

It said Los Angeles was the site of Lara's final performance, in June 1966. He died Nov. 6, 1970, at the age of 73.

Lara's music recently was spotlighted by an error at the Summer Olympics. During the final ceremony, his song "Granada" was played during a commemoration of the Mexico City Olympics of 1968.

Although the composer was Mexican, "Granada" is in Spain.

Notimex — which did not refer to that controversy — said the statue of Lara by Mexican sculptor Humberto Pedraza will be unveiled Nov. 11 in Lincoln Park. Lara generally is considered Mexico's most famous composer of the 20th century.

'Old Faithful,' although irregular, keeps faith

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Reports of the demise of Old Faithful geyser, which became irregular after an earthquake last year, are, in the words of Mark Twain, greatly exaggerated.

Before the 1983 earthquake, Old Faithful erupted every 69 minutes on the average. By this spring, the average time between eruptions was 77 minutes. Now it's down to 75 minutes, Ranger Naturalist Jeff Selleck said Wednesday.

The changes sparked rumors the geyser might be drying up, but park spokeswoman Joan Anzelmo cautioned that even that gradual change should not be misconstrued.

Opening lead: Eight of ♠ Most players take a finesse because it's there. South, declarer at four spades, realized that, if the finesse were going to succeed, he did not need it!

Since he was a passed hand, North had just about enough for his jump to three spades. However, odds are his side would have reached the same contract no matter what he responded.

West led a trump and declarer saw at once that, if the diamond finesse were going to succeed, his contract was impregnable. Being a confirmed pessimist, he decided to see what he could do if the diamond finesse were going to fail.

He won the queen of trumps and, with no pause for thought, he led the eight of diamonds from hand. West, a player who liked to boast that he played "by the seat of my pants," followed with the seven, the card nearest his thumb. Declarer rose with the ace and returned a low diamond from the table.

East was in a quandary. After stewing for a few minutes, he elected to play a low diamond. Declarer's jack won the trick and the contract was home. Note that if West had the king of diamonds, the contract was still safe. West could not attack hearts without setting up declarer's king, and if he didn't lead a heart declarer would get rid of two of his hearts on dummy's good diamonds.

Good defenders would know what to do when declarer led a low diamond from the table. On the first diamond lead, it was West's duty to give his partner a count of the diamond suit. With an odd number of cards, West should play his lowest; with an even number, he should start an echo by playing the highest he can spare. On this hand he should have followed with the deuce, and East would know that declarer had to have a second diamond. Therefore, he could rise with the king and shift to a heart to defeat the contract.

Friday, October 26, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Jaclyn Smith, France's Francois Mitterrand, Yankee third baseman Toby Harrah, basketball's Dave Cowens, former Massachusetts Senator Edward Brooke, Montreal's Steve Rogers and the Seattle Mariners' Ed VandeBerg celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: the late Jackie Coogan and Mahalia Jackson. Stop ignoring loved one's overtures and respond in kind. Better money management will enable you to do things you never thought possible. New technology reduces your workload. Keep careful notes on important conversations with clients and higher-ups; you could be questioned later on. Get financial and business promises in writing, even when dealing with friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take advantage of a temporary lull at work to get better organized. Budget matters need review. You may not know what to expect at a financial meeting.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Business and financial lessons learned in the past serve you well now. A long-distance call sheds new light on an old problem. Foreign travel is possible; have your passport handy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Careful career planning is essential for lasting financial security. The mail brings welcome news, perhaps even a check. Attractive member of opposite sex issues a special invitation. Accept at once!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be careful what you sign today. The news from abroad is encouraging. Be very discreet about a secret liaison. Double-check all messages. The emphasis at work is on encouraging cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use the morning to review the facts and figures that will help you make an important decision. Your relations with a special group could become strained. A new romance brings joy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Slow down before you make a big mistake. You need to be diplomatic putting your point across. Use your creative and artistic talents to boost your income. Family members offer backing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A friend or relative urges you to make a financial commitment. Listen to your intuition. Social events enjoy highly favorable influences. Do not let wishful thinking interfere with your creative efforts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Beautify your surroundings at home and work and you will become more productive. Postpone putting a new plan into operation until the opposition has had its say. A compromise will reduce tension.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do everything you can to resolve a conflict between home and work. Creative projects will be highly lucrative if you protect your original ideas. Review your investments; higher returns may be possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An element of confusion surrounds today's activities. Check travel schedules, especially if going away for the weekend. A Virgo will pleasantly surprise you. You learn something new about yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take stock of your investments. You cannot afford to rely on other people's generosity. Loved one tries your patience but has your best interests at heart. Give mate the benefit of the doubt.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accept the end of a relationship. Family connections bring you good luck. New doors open up where employment is concerned. An Aries may prove unreliable.

Cotton Bowl may house USFL's Chicago franchise

DALLAS (AP) — If a group of Dallas investors has its way, a new football team will be playing in the Cotton Bowl by next year.

Jody Tallal, owner of a personal finance management firm, said negotiations are under way to purchase the financially troubled Chicago Blitz United States Football League franchise and move it to Dallas.

"We are very close, but there are a few problems to be worked out that could cause it to fall through," Tallal told The Dallas Morning News.

"I would say we could finalize it in six or seven days," he said. "We have a letter-of-intent with Mr. Einhorn and have reached the terms and conditions of the contract."

Blitz owner Eddie Einhorn said Dallas is the strong contender in a bid for the team, which would be the fifth professional football team in Texas.

"I can't comment directly," Einhorn said. "But we have met with a group of Dallas businessmen and are working out the final problems. It is a very serious proposal and I can confidently say that something should be worked out by the end of the week."

Three groups — one each in Dallas, Charlotte, N.C., and Honolulu — are bidding for the Blitz, which finished last in the USFL Central Division.

Einhorn said he was selling the franchise but would retain partial interest until the fall of 1986, when he will divest himself and buy a new Chicago franchise for the USFL's first fall football season.

Dallas Cowboys Vice President Gil Brandt said the National Football League team would welcome another football team in the area.

"We welcome the competition," Brandt said. "It can only make for a better product all the way around. I just hope the owners know what they are getting into because running a football team takes a lot of money."

Tallal, who has been working on the purchase for two months, said he already has received a letter of commitment from the State Fair Board for 1985 spring dates in the Cotton Bowl.

"A group of Dallas businessmen approached me, and I was very interested," Tallal said. "I've always wanted to own a football team ever since I was a little kid. One of my long-term goals in life — if I was ever successful — was to own a football team.

"And we aren't worried about buying a team that finished in last place," he said.

The USFL has teams in San Antonio and Houston and the National Football League has teams in Dallas and Houston.

OF MIDLAND's HOMES

In 1983 we were proud the Midland Reporter-Telegram was being read in 79.3% of Midland's homes. But the latest Audit Bureau of Circulation audit has been completed and the figures released. We're prouder than ever.

This year our penetration in the Midland market has climbed to 82.4%, an impressive gain!

We know other media boast about their "gross rating points"... their" listening audience"...their "cume"... but we're proud of the results we get for our advertisers. Your advertising message in the Reporter-Telegram gets results and we know one reason is because it is now reaching more people than ever before... 82.4% of all Midland households.

And that's not all. During this past August more than 450 different retail businesses chose the Reporter-Telegram as their advertising vehicle...a whopping 26.5% increase in accounts over August a year ago. September is looking even bigger.

In 1983 your Midland Reporter-Telegram was a great advertising investment... In 1984 It's even better!

Mobil price cuts no problem yet

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

The 75 cent reduction of Mobil's posted price for West Texas intermediate crude oil Wednesday will not have a profound effect on current production, according to Ed Thompson, executive vice president, Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Thompson said the cut in the posted price was made simultaneously with the announcement that Mobil would remove its recent 75 cents per barrel transportation charge.

The Mobil cut brings the price of West Texas intermediate crude, the benchmark for domestic crude prices, to $29.25 a barrel, and is the first cut in the posted price by a major oil company in recent months.

Locally producers will wait to see if other majors will join Mobil in price cutting or stick to the recently-imposed, controversial transportation charge.

Many producers given a choice between transportation charges and price cuts would prefer the price cut, since Windfall Profits Tax is charged on produced crude before the transportation charge is deducted. On the other hand, producers with large reserves immediately have the price of their oil in the ground reduced by 75 cents per barrel, decreasing assets, collateral and borrowing power.

Mobil, yesterday, played down the price cut, saying it wasn't intended to influence OPEC but merely reflected an erosion of prices over an 18 month period.

While the Permian Basin may not have immediate cause for worry, the Mobil action may be the crack in the price dike, that could bring about a new round of price cuts that would bring crude prices to a $25 per barrel level, where many suspect it should be in relation with the supply.

Ed Thompson, however, does not think the price will drop to those levels at anytime in the near future.

Opec is going to have to hold the line on production," he said. "If they don't they are cutting their own throat."

ClayDesta National reveals expansion plan

Staff reports

Claydesta National Bank announced today its plans to build a $1.1 million operations center to be located at 2408 N. Big Spring St., and to open a full-service remote banking facility in the downtown Gulf Building.

As a result of the opening of the downtown banking facility, the 25-year-old Gulf Building will be renamed ClayDesta Center Downtown. The new remote facility will occupy the first floor of the Gulf Building, while ClayDesta Communications, a long distance discount telephone company,will occupy the second and third floors.

Expected to be completed by mid-March 1985, ClayDesta National's two-story operations center will house the bank's primary operating departments including audit and accounting. The facility will also offer a full service teller lobby.

In addition, the 18,800 square-foot facility will house the bank's main offices as well as corporate offices for ClayDesta Bancshares Inc., an approved Texas bank holding company with the same management as ClayDesta National Bank.

Ronnie D. Henry, executive vice president and chief operating officer, said changes in th Texas Banking Code had enabled the expansion.

"The downtown facility was made possible as a result of Chapter IX, Article 3 of the Texas Banking Code, which was amended to allow financial institutions to operate remote facilities within 10,500 feet of the home office."

With the location of the main office on Big Spring, the two ClayDesta Centers will be within the mandatory 10,500 feet.

Said David N. Jones, president ClayDesta National Bank: "It became apparent very early that growth needs of the bank would collide with leasing at ClayDesta Center and more space would be needed, that's when the decision was made to construct the operations center on North Big Spring. Branching was a by-product of that decision.

"The downtown market is another significant financial center we want to enter," continued Jones, "primarily because our clients and prospective clients asked us to. Our downtown clients will have access to their oil and gas lenders, as well as other lenders in that facility, just as they do in our present location. Banking as our clients have come to know it will not change."

The ClayDesta Center Downtown, is expected to be completed by the end of the second quarter of 1985, making for three ClayDesta locations in the city.

Said Jones: "Our primary concern is our customers. They are the reason we exist and the reason we go forward. What considerations we make, we make for our customers."

ClayDesta National Bank opened October 29, 1982, with $4 million in capital, the largest organizational capital in West Texas banking history, and now listsassets of $123.3 million, deposits of $112.2 million and a loan portfolio of $61.9 million.

Oil trader found guilty

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A jury shown evidence that Paul L. Heatley made a fortune in mislabeling price-controlled oil while claiming income of near-poverty levels has found him guilty of fraud and tax evasion.

The 16-count indictment against the 65-year-old Tulsa businessman charged him with helping to run a complex oil-pricing scheme through Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana.

The scheme profited him in 1978-79 when oil of different sources had widely varied controlled prices. In that period, if lower-price oil could be simply relabeled into higher-price oil it could be resold for immense but illegal profits.

Following the guilty verdict Wednesay federal Judge James O. Ellison set Heatley's sentencing for Dec. 7. Heatley was found guilty of charges of wire fraud, income tax evasion and fraudulent pricing of 7 million barrels of crude oil.

Prosecution testimony and exhibits showed Heatley claimed an income of $13,600 for 1978-79 while accumulating $1 million in corporate stock, a $147,000 home and a luxury car in those two years.

When he took the stand in the eight-day trial, Heatley accused Billy Ray Jones, a principal in Southwest Petrochem of Houston, of luring him into the crude oil business to make him accountable for illegal oil dealings.

Jones, who was granted immunity from federal prosecution, was one of the state's 39 witnesses against Heatley.

Braniff president resigns, drastic cuts announced

DALLAS (AP) — Huge losses are forcing struggling Braniff Inc., born of the 1982 bankruptcy of its predecessor, to eliminate service to 10 cities, sell 20 if its 30 airplanes, and lay off employees, airline officials say.

In addition, Braniff president William D. Slattery has resigned, and Braniff will sell nine of its twelve gates at its home base, Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, to rival American Airlines.

"We really have no alternative at this point but to implement these changes," Chairman Jay Pritzker and vice chairman Patrick Foley told Braniff employees Wednesday night.

The executives said Braniff has lost more than $80 million since resuming service in March. They said the austerity measures are designed to head off additional losses of $4 million to $7 million a month.

"Obviously, that level of loss cannot be sustained indefinitely by anyone, no matter how committed," Foley and Pritzker said.

They made the announcements at a hastily-called meeting of Braniff employees, many of them veterans of the 1982 bankruptcy of Braniff's predecessor, Braniff International.

The meeting at Dallas Love Field was closed to news, media and the public, but copies of an announcement and a joint letter from Pritzker and Foley were obtained by The Associated Press.

The gate transfer, which Braniff officials described as a key element in their plan to save the troubled airline, raises $20.5 million in cash, officials said.

Effective Nov. 5, Braniff will suspend service to Austin, Texas; Detroit; Houston; Kansas City, Mo.; Miami; Newark, N.J.; New Orleans; Oklahoma City; Philadelphia; and San Antonio, Texas, said the statement, prepared for release today to the general public.

"We are hopeful our actions will enable Braniff to survive and succeed," the announcement said.

Braniff will reduce its fleet from 30 to 10 airplanes and reduce the work force "consistent with the overall reduction in our operations," the statement said. No specifics on the number of workers to be laid off were given.

An agreement with American will let Braniff passengers who bought tickets on or before Wednesday fly on American without paying additional charges, officials said.

Financial health has proved elusive for Braniff. Braniff International folded on May 12, 1982, under a $1 billion debt.

At that time, the airline grounded its fleet, laid off its 7,000 employees and filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

A $70 million bailout by the Hyatt Hotel chain enabled a resurrected Braniff to inaugurate service out of Gate 13 at Dallas-Fort Worth International in March as a premium carrier aiming at business travelers.

Under mounting losses, Braniff last month became a discount airline, a move that required barebones fare cuts, layoffs among its 2,500 employees and reductions in in-flight services.

Foley and Pritzker said even those steps "have not brought us to a level of losses that we can continue to sustain.

"We tried, we all tried, but even our best efforts never brought our load factor within 10 percent of breakeven," they said.

Most of the Braniff employees leaving Wednesday night's meeting refused comment. Those who did were doubtful about the airline's future.

A 10-year employee of the airline, who declined to give his name, said there were "several hundred" people at the meeting, which he described as "somber."

The man, a flight attendant, said: "You walked in and they gave you a sheet of paper, a press release, and then they started answering questions."

Foley and Pritzker left through a back entrance and were not immediately available for comment.

Employees of Braniff Airlines walk through the rain on their way to a meeting where company officials announced new austerity measures to stem company losses. For most employees, it was the second time to hear about company cutbacks. Braniff fild Chapter 11 bankruptcy and later resumed flying, but has been unable to turn a profit.

White says one-third share offshore fair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Mark White says a one-third share for Texas would be a "fair and equitable" solution to a continuing dispute over dividing offshore oil revenues with the federal government.

White previously had suggested that the state and the federal government split the revenues 50-50.

Over $5 billion in revenues from leases off the shores of seven coastal states is being held in escrow because of the dispute. Congress decided in 1978 to create a new class of offshore leases, with the revenues to be shared jointly. But Congress didn't specify how to divide the money.

Interior Secretary William Clark has suggested giving the states one-sixth of the "bonus" fee companies pay for the leases.

"I think somewhere in the neighborhood of a third (of the total revenues) would be fair and equitable," White told a news conference on Wednesday. He was in town to testify at a congressional hearing on voter registration.

White said he was speaking for himself and did not know what figure the other governors would agree to.

White and the governors of Alabama, Mississippi and Florida had written Clark asking for a meeting on Wednesday, but Clark suggested instead that their staffs get together to iron out an agenda first. White said he expected that to happen "shortly."

Court to review Manges loans

SEATTLE (AP) — The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has given permission for a federal grand jury investigating the financial woes of Seattle-First National Bank to review documents of Clinton Manges, a millionaire borrower from Texas.

In its ruling Tuesday, the appellate court upheld an earlier decision that four boxes of Manges' records could be reviewed by the grand jury.

Federal prosecutors have been trying to determine whether laws were broken by Seafirst's lending policies before the bank merged with BankAmerica Corp. in July 1983.

Manges, a Texas oilman and rancher, obtained five Seafirst loans totaling about $35 million.

Because of poor energy-sector loans, coupled with declining oil prices, Seafirst, the state's largest bank, ran into financial difficulties in 1983 and ultimately merged with BankAmerica.

The case is unusual because the government was forced to go into open court to obtain the Manges' documents, thus acknowledging that a grand jury investigation was under way. Grand jury probes normally are kept secret until indictments are issued.

Company attacking rumors

CINCINNATI (AP) — Rumors that Procter & Gamble Co.'s moon-and-stars trademark is a sign the company is in league with the devil are as ridiculous now as they were two years ago, a company spokesman says.

The Cincinnati-based company has launched a direct-mail campaign against the current rumors and is prepared to file lawsuits to halt their spread if it can figure out who to sue, said Robert Norrish, director of public relations.

In 1982, P&G enlisted the aid of religious leaders like the Rev. Billy Graham, the Rev. Jerry Falwell and Roman Catholic Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, and columnist Abigail Van Buren, to squelch the stories and a boycott.

The current rumors also say company President John G. Smale allegedly went on a national television talk show and said some profits were going to Satan.

"It's goofy, it's a ridiculous rumor. It's libelous. The whole thing is just absolutely without foundation," Norrish said Tuesday. "It dignifies the rumor by denying that there's any truth to it.

"It's amazing that in 1984, so many people can get caught up in talking about Satan."

The company, which does $13 billion worth of business worldwide each year, has received about 3,000 calls so far this month about the rumors, Norrish said. In July 1982, the peak of the earlier rumors, P&G got 15,000 calls on its toll-free telephone lines.

Most frustrating were fliers that urged "good Christians" to quit buying Procter & Gamble products. A series of lawsuits resulting in public apologies by two defendants caused the stories to subside but not disappear.

The rumors have been revived in leaflets distributed in churches and shopping malls, Norrish said.

"It's almost unbelievable that there are still persons who could swallow such a cock-and-bull story," Falwell said Tuesday from Lynchburg, Va. "Procter & Gamble is an outstanding company and an asset to the nation ... I'd be very happy to do anything I could to help them."

The P&G direct-mail campaign, started early this month, is aimed at areas where the rumors are cropping up, including California, Nebraska, western New York, Wisconsin, Chicago, Minneapolis-St. Paul and western Pennsylvania.

The mailings explain the history of the century-old trademark of a "man-in-the-moon" face and a cluster of 13 stars, and reiterate that the company has no affiliation with the devil.

The trademark evolved from 1850s markings on crates of "Star" brand candles, according to the company's authorized history, "Eyes on Tomorrow; The Evolution of Procter & Gamble."

In those days, many riverboat hands along the Ohio River could not read, so wharf bosses painted black crosses on candle crates to separate them from soap crates.

Texas firm to acquire airline

ST. LOUIS (AP) — An agreement in principal has been reached in which a Texas firm will purchase controlling interest of Air One, officials with the St. Louis-based airline said Tuesday.

Under terms of the agreement, the Southern Express Corp., of Austin, Texas, would acquire controlling interest of Air One, Inc., for "a multi-million investment," said Mark G. Morris, president and chief operating officer of Air 1.

The Texas firm also "will provide additional required capital to maintain Air One, Inc. as a viable entity for the foreseeable future," he said.

Under the proposal, Scott Spencer, president and chief executive officer of Southern Express, will become chairman and chief executive officer of Air One. Paul J. Rogers will be vice chairman and chief industry relations officer, Morris said.

Builders, contractors host area politicians

The Permian Basin Chapter of Associated Builders & Contractor, Inc. will host six area political candidates at the chapter's meeting at 6:30 p.m. today in the Odessa Holiday Inn Centre.

Scheduled to appear and speak at the meeting are Larry Combest and Don Richards, both of Lubbock and candidates for U.S. House of Representatives, 19th District.

Others are Texas State Representative, 75th District, candidates The Honorable Jay Gibson and Kelly Godwin, both of Odessa. The 76th District candidates The Honorable Tom Craddick of Midland and David Smith of Odessa.

During the program segment of the meeting, each candidate will be allotted five minutes to make a statement to the membership. After each candidate has had an opportunity to speak, questions will be accepted from the floor.

Seventy-three foreigners granted U.S. citizenship

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The "continual re-birth" of the United States again was realized on Wednesday when 73 aliens, ages 5 to 76, were admitted to U.S. citizenship in federal court in Midland.

The new citizens renounced their allegiance to any foreign powers and pledged their loyalty to the U.S.

"We are fortunate today," said U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, "to have some 70 new citizens."

Among the 73 was Tuan Duc Nguyen, a 50-year-old Vietnamese refugee to whom the judge, from his elevated bench, led the "Happy Birthday" song. Wednesday was his 50th birthday.

"I'm very happy," Nguyen said afterward. "I have been here 10 years." He lives in Crane and works for Crane County. "I am happy today. I have citizenship. Next time, I go vote. I am very happy."

Nguyen apparently had been impressed with remarks by the ceremony's featured speaker, Odessa lawyer Jack Tidwell. He had talked on the privilege of voting and mentioned his friendship with the judge and the judge's kinship to former President Lyndon B. Johnson.

"This is the first time I have looked forward to it (appearing in federal court) and enjoyed it."

Casondra Rudlaff, 5, yawns during her naturalization ceremony in Midland, while her adoptive mother seems intent on the proceedings.

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

WITH THE "privilege of citizenship," Tidwell said, come responsibilities. He exhorted the new citizens to learn to read and to converse in the English language so that they might understand political issues better.

"You've got to decide for whom you're going to vote."

Tidwell said he was "embarrassed" by the many native-born Americans who decline to vote. He described voting as the "greatest privilege" of citizenship.

"This (voting) is your highest responsibility." He suggested that the new citizens, excluding 5-year-old Casondra Rudlaff of Andrews and another, a 17 year old, register to vote even though they would be ineligible for the Nov. 6 general election. By law, a person must be registered at least 30 days prior to an election before he can vote.

"Politics makes our country work," Tidwell said.

He told the 73 new citizens from 12 nations that they "have a great heritage."

"There are very, very few native Americans...except American Indians."

Tidwell lauded President Johnson who was born "as poor as poor can be" but who rose from a schoolteacher to a congressman to president of the United States.

"HE DID MORE than any living American in 1964 when he signed into law the Civil Rights Act of 1964." That act proclaimed that no one can be discriminated "against in any way."

Tidwell said he and Bunton attended the Democratic Party National Convention in Chicago in 1968, observed the protesting and were alarmed by it, "but I would have fought for their right to protest."

Tidwell told new Americans that they are "free to make your own choices and decisions. "Some may be wrong. They'll be your decisions, but they'll not be dictated to you."

In urging the citizens to honor and work for their country, Tidwell cited President John F. Kennedy's classic lines in his 1961 inaugural address: "...Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country."

Afterward, Bunton zeroed in on 5-year-old Casondra, a Korean native, who was sitting with her adoptive mother, Jackie Rudlaff, in the crowded courtroom.

He described Casondra as "one of the prettiest girls you ever saw" and said her beauty rivaled that of his grandchildren.

Law Clerk Steve Hershberger picked up the girl and held her high for all in the courtroom to see.

"Now, isn't that a beautiful little girl?" Bunton asked.

LATER, THE JUDGE noted that the oldest naturalized citizen in the ceremony was 76 years old. But he quipped he would not ask that person to stand to be recognized "because we're too close to the same age, and it might embarrass you." Bunton is 59.

Then, he instigated the singing of the "Happy Birthday" song to Nguyen.

The naturalized citizens were from Mexico, Mainland China, the Republic of China, Egypt, El Salvador, Great Britain, India, Korea, The Philippines, Colombia, Indonesia, and Vietnam.

In closing out the ceremony, the judge allowed family members and any others to take photographs.

"We've got people that will pose," he joked. "Mr. (Antonio) Hernandez (examiner for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service) has been practicing doing handstands."

Bunton noted the gurgling, crying, yelling and screaming of the babies and young children in the courtroom gallery. The sight and sound of those toddlers warmed his heart. Their sounds, he said, simply was their "way of welcoming" the former aliens to U.S. citizenship.

After the picture-taking session, the new citizens one by one were issued their certificates of citizenship. The judge had asked them to come forward "as your name is called or mispronounced by Mr. (Larry) Bick," U.S. District Clerk deputy. Instead, Hernandez read off the names of the new citizens.

They then filed out of the courtroom with miniature U.S. flags, compliments of the Daughters of the American Revolution, in hand.

Carnival fun

Becky McWilliams and son, Ron, were among those attending the recent Halloween carnival at Bowie Elementery School. Other schools throughout Midland will be hosting their carnivals during the coming days. For time and places, see related story, page 2C.

Chancellor discusses space program

Dr. Hans Mark, the new chancellor of the University of Texas speaks before a group in the student lounge of UTPB Wednesday. Mark, a former administrator of NASA and secretary of the Air Force, presented a slide show on NASA's plans for a space station.

Dr. Hans Mark, the newly-appointed chancellor of the University of Texas System, spoke to a large crowd at the University of Texas, Permian Basin Wednesday on the inside operations of the country's space program.

Mark, a former deputy administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and secretary of the Air Force, delivered a slide presentation on NASA's planned space station. The presentation revealed an inside look at communication between NASA leaders and U.S. presidents during the space program years and showed how the idea for the space station has evolved.

The purpose of Mark's lecture at UTPB was "to meet people at the campus and in the community." Mark assumed the chancellorship Sept. 1.

"I decided it was time to do something different," said Mark of his new position. "But I had been involved with a university before, in California."

Mark jokingly apologized at the beginning of the presentation for not speaking on matters concerning the University of Texas.

"In all jest," said Mark, "I just don't know enough about the University of Texas yet to give a lecture on it."

Mark's presentation began with the writings of Edward Everett Hale, a turn-of-the-century author who introduced ideas for space travel that bear some resemblance to today's methods. "The Brick Moon," a collection of short stories by Hale described how firebrick would be required for re-entry into the earth's atmosphere. Mark compared it with the tiles being used on today's space shuttles.

Victim takes stand for fifth time

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — For the fifth time in less than one year, an Odessa housewife took the stand in Ector County district court Wednesday to recount the burglary and sexual assault she suffered in November 1983.

During her testimony, the victim recounted the beating she sustained and pointed out Tommie Coleman, 20, as one of the black men who beat and raped her Nov. 11, 1983, after breaking into her home.

Coleman has been in the county jail for all of 1984, unable to make bond since his arrest shortly after the assault. In two previous trials, juries have been unable to come to a verdict, prompting District Judge Joe Connally to declare mistrials.

Prosecutors are attempting to prove Coleman entered the Odessa residence about 1:30 a.m. Nov. 11 with Anthony Crawford, who has already been sentenced to life in prison for the attack.

Court-appointed defense attorney Jimmy Edwards used the same tactics in this third proceeding on the same facts, attempting to discredit the young housewife's ability to identify Coleman.

Edwards pointed out that Coleman did not fit the description given originally to police, which did not mention a mustache Coleman testified to having had continuously for the past several years. The attorney also stood Coleman in front of the all-white jury and demonstrated that his client did not have a crooked nose as the victim had described.

He intends to convince jurors that the victim was lying when she testified to having gone to school with blacks, using yearbooks showing the sparcity of black students in her classes in pre-desegregation days at Odessa public schools.

The victim could have been mistaken in her identification of Coleman, contends Edwards, because there were few blacks with which she has associated during her life. Her 1979-80 class included three blacks, according to the yearbook.

Coleman also testified again Wednesday. He claimed to having been asleep or with his girlfriend during the time the assault took place. Coleman also said he lived with Crawford when police came and took the two black men for questioning.

The victim picked Coleman from a four man line-up. Edwards criticized the fairness of the line-up, which included Coleman, a policeman wearing glasses (Coleman does not) and two other black men not at all resembling the defendant.

Coleman's first two trials ended in mistrials after jurors could not agree on whether or not the defendant was guilty. The first panel was split at 8 to 4 for not guilty in April and 8 to 4 for guilty in August when Connally determined there was no chance of them reaching a verdict.

Crawford's first trial also ended in a mistrial when a police officer testified that Crawford was under investigation for other rapes not related to the case on trial.

Connally told jurors before excusing them about 4 p.m. Wednesday that they could expect to begin their deliberations about noon today.

Holidays not too far away

Halloween is upon us, Thanksgiving is looming, and Christmas is not that far away.

I never cared much for Halloween mainly because I don't like being spooked and am still afraid of ghosts and other unseen creatures who fly and crawl by night. The real truth, though, is that I never mustered the courage to pull off any of those inventive pranks associated with Halloween.

I was afraid of being caught, embarrassed and spanked. That's the truth.

Besides, on those occasions when I did dress up (or down) like some warlock or elf, knocked on a porch door, waited for a friendly response and said "trick or treat," I always hoped they'd treat. I had no tricks.

I was lucky. I think most all "treaters" gave something, though I remember hightailing it from a porch after pulling off some inglorious trick. It was so lackluster that I've forgotten what I did.

I've always enjoyed Thanksgivings even when there wasn't much to eat. I've had enough grand Thankgivings at home, with friends and at the Grandparents that a meager meal on Pilgrim's Day won't — and hasn't — bothered me. I'm thankful for the country. Period.

Now Christmas is the "Big One." It's the hassle.

When I was a kid, it seemed all I ever lived for, at least from Thanksgiving to Christmas, was Christmas morning and finding just what Santa Claus had left under and around the tree and in the stockings hung from the fireplace mantle.

Receiving and giving was such a joy, but I think I got the biggest thrill out of receiving. I'm a selfish lot.

Today, though, I worry more about what to give and take little thought about what I might receive.

I ponder that off and on throughout the year, but, with few exceptions, still wait 'til Christmas is almost over before I actively search for gifts and spend money.

And more and more, as the years advance, I wonder what Christmas is all about, to whom do I should pay homage and give gifts? I wonder if the fanfare of Christmas has been made a detour.

Jurors expected to begin deliberations in Odessa trial

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Jurors should be able to begin deliberations this morning in the murder trial of a 55-year-old Odessa man charged with shooting his ex-daughter-in-law to death.

Harold Eugene Wells, 55, Odessa, is on trial for the slaying of 25-year-old Frankie Wells, who was shot to death at her apartment on E. Second St. on March 16.

Ms. Wells was married to the defendant's son until about five months before her death. Testimony indicated she had been in a running dispute with her ex-husband and the grandparents over custody of the son since the divorce.

The ex-husband, Harold Wells Jr., testified that she had threatened him that night when he and his father went to pick up the three-year-old, according to visitation arrangments. His father had already started home with the child in his truck when they parted company that night, said the son.

Ms. Wells was shot as she was putting groceries into her refrigerator, said Freddie Lang, who said he had lived with the woman at the Park Motel apartment since the divorce.

Lang testified he heard shots and pulled the three-year-old girl to the floor of the apartment, but Ms. Wells was hit by gunfire he said must have come through the apartment's open door.

Guns, television set stolen from residence

From Staff Reports

Police Round-up

About $2,500 worth of guns and a television set were reported stolen Wednesday from the Don Lindsey residence, 514 Brownwood.

According to reports, entry was gained through an unlocked kitchen window between 7:15 a.m. and 5:15 p.m. Taken were a television set, five gun cases, four rifles, a rifle scope, a shotgun and a pistol. Total value was placed at $2,765.

Two go-carts valued at $750 were reported stolen from the westside yard of the Jerry Inman residence, 1615 W. Pine. The go-carts were taken sometime between 10 p.m. Tuesday and 9 a.m. Wednesday.

Six hundred dollars worth of items were recovered and three suspects were arrested after a theft at RepublicBank First National of Midland, 300 W. Wall. According to reports, David Stevens, security marshall, saw three suspects standing near employees' desks on the first floor of the bank. When they spotted Stevens, they ran for the elevator.

Stevens caught them and found a $300 mini-tape recorder, $200 calculator, $35 belt buckle and two clocks worth $60 in the elevator ashtray. When police arrived, several pens and pencils belonging to the bank were found in a pocket of one of the suspects, reports said. The three were arrested.

Mariano Flores Olgin, 1111 S. Camp, reported items worth $500 were taken from his home Wednesay morning. Among the items were a $45 ice chest and a tool box containing $400 worth of assorted tools.

Alicia Bonilla, 301 E. Hickory, reported a $250 cable television converter was taken Wednesday from her home. Also missing were $15 in cash. Entry was gained through an unlocked back door.

Connie Mancha, 1907 B N. Tyler, also reported a $250 cable television converter was taken Wednesday from her home. Entry was gained by kicking open the front door, causing minor damage to the lock and frame of the door.

Eight firemen responded to a housefire at 2220 Cimmaron, owned and occupied by FLoyd Ingram. Blazing on arrival, the fire was confined to the kitchen. Preliminary cause was believed to be from grease left on a kitchen stove.

The kitchen sustained heavy damage and smoke damage throughout the house was reported.

Walker critical after accident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A Memphis, Tenn., man remained in critical condition this morning with head and other internal injuries after being struck by a car on 42nd Street in Odessa about 11 p.m. Wednesday.

Mark E. Coffelt, 27, was struck head-on by a car driven by Coleen Mary Toppe, 24, Odessa, reportedly as he attempted to cross the main road about 400 feet west of its intersection with Andrews Highway.

He was listed in critical condition this morning at Odessa Medical Center Hospital. According to reports, Coffelt hit the hood and then the windshield before landing about 50 feet from where he was struck.

Neither Ms. Toppe or her passenger was injured, according to police reports. The report indicated Coffelt was at fault for crossing the intersection without a crosswalk or intersection.

A concert by the rock group Quiet Riot ended about 11 p.m. at the Ector Coliseum at 42nd Street and Andrews Highway. The report did not indicate any connection between the accident and concert.

Pedestrian fatally struck by driver

From Staff Reports

An unidentified woman was killed late Wednesday night as she walked along the shoulder of Interstate 20 about 13 miles west of Odessa.

The white female, believed to be between 25 and 30 years old, was walking on the northside shoulder of the highway when she was struck by a 1972 two-door Toyota, driven by Johnny Lee Brooks of Monahans, according to a Department of Public Safety spokesman.

Brooks, no age available, was traveling west straddling the outside lane and the shoulder when his vehicle struck the woman at about 11:30 p.m. His car had dim lights, probably due to generator problems, according to the DPS.

Teen may face 'death' in capital murder case

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 19-year-old Midlander could be facing the death penalty in a capital murder case set to begin this morning in an Ector County district court.

Pablo Madrid Galindo, 19, Midland, could be put to death by lethal injection if jurors chosen in two weeks of selection find him guilty of murdering a 29-year-old Ector County man in his bedroom and attempting to rape the man's wife.

Galindo has been in Ector County jail since his arrest about a mile from the Pleasant Farms home of Mark and Kelly Defee. Defee, 29, was shot to death about 3:30 a.m., March 24 at the couple's home in the south part of the county.

According to sheriff's department reports, Defee was slain after he struggled with a man his wife awoke to find in bed with them. She escaped the attacker's attempt to sexually assault her and ran to a neighbor's home.

Galindo was arrested when deputies responded to a call from another residence reporting a bloodied man knocking at the door. He was arrested for unlawfully carrying a weapon, but charges of murder and attempted sexual assault were added after bullets in his weapon matched those that killed Defee.

If found guilty of the capital offense (murder and attempted sexual assault), Galindo will either be sentenced to death or life in prison. He remains in the county jail, with bond set at $100,000.

Attorneys Michael McLeaish and Tony Chavez have suggested during the jury selection they will attempt to prove that Galindo's altered mental condition (he apparently was intoxicated) as a mitigating circumstance, lessening his punishment.

Testimony was to begin this morning in the trial expected to take about four days to complete.

CHANCELLOR

Mark quickly painted a chronology of events leading up to NASA's space station plans. Engineering calculations as early as the 1920's, advancement of rocketry during World War II, the early space flights and the moon landing were presented as evolutionary to a manned station in space.

"NASA had a space station in the back of its mind when it was set up in 1958," said Mark.

Showing slides of several proposed space station plans, including drawings of the space shuttles (not yet built) docking, Mark commented on how the ambitious NASA plans were whittled down by then-President Nixon from a $24 billion budget to $6 billion.

"We knew that we could not build both the space shuttle and the space station so we had to decide which to do first," said Mark. "The space shuttle was our most logical choice for three reasons. One, the shuttle was technically more difficult. Two, the building of the shuttle would give us a time scale on which to build the space station. The last reason was most important. Once we had the shuttle, enough public attention would be had to gain support (and funds) for the space station."

Mark, the man who has actually "pushed the button" on all the shuttle missions, will continue to be involved with the space program during his chancellorship at UT. The chancellor was enthusiastic about "becoming a Texan."

"The space station will be built, managed and operated in and from Texas," said Mark. "It's an exciting place to be."

Mark had praise for UT as well.

"The University of Texas System can become the the best public university in the country during the coming decade," he said.

Academy graduate still wants induction into Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The son of a Mexican immigrant who says he wants to repay the U.S. for what it gave him is trying to join the Navy, a decade after he graduated from the Naval Academy but was rejected for service because he had leukemia.

Doctors at Bethesda Naval Hospital diagnosed leukemia and gave Saul Zavala two to three years to live when he graduated with a degree in aerospace engineering in 1974.

Zavala, 34, is now cured and for the past two years has been programming computers for Intercom Systems Corp. in Cerritos, Calif.

"I never got to the point where I have the responsibility I would have had as an officer," Zavala said at a class reunion in Annapolis last weekend. "And I know it may sound corny, but I also want to repay this country for what it gave me."

Zavala enlisted in the Navy after graduating from an El Paso, Texas, high school in 1968. He did well on exams, and enrolled in the Naval Academy Prep school in 1969 before entering the Naval Academy the following year.

TRIAL

He said he looked out the door and saw the defendant getting into a pick-up truck in a parking lot across Second St. (The portion of Highway 80 that passes through Odessa) and the divorced couple's son in the truck.

Defense attorney Howard Hunt attempted to dispute Lang's ability to see across the four-lane road after dark. But two neighbors confirmed hearing shooting and seeing a truck speeding from the parking lot across the street from the motel after the shooting. They did not identify Wells.

Under questioning by prosecutors, Wells' son and wife denied telling police a rifle was missing from their home, insisting that one of the family's rifles had been stolen and the other had been pawned.

Restraining orders were issued against the grandparents following what the ex-husband admitted was a "messy divorce." Prosecutor Anthony Foster suggested the grandfather was motivated by anger that Ms. Wells was living with Lang on the child support check provided by his son.

Prosecutor Richard Davis questioned why the son had spoken with Hunt and his parents about the case despite District Judge Gene Ater's order not to talk with other witnesses about the case. Hunt insisted the discussion did not concern the answers the son was to give, but strategies the district attorneys would use and the proper way to answer the questions.

One witness was to testify this morning, with both sides then allowed to give rebuttal evidence. Wells is free on bond, but faces a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and a $10,000 fine if found guilty of murder.

Tanker spill closed highway

From Staff Reports

Texas Highway Patrolmen from Odessa and Crane were on the scene of a tanker spill this morning south of Farm-to-Market 1233, just west of U.S. Highway 385.

According to the Department of Public Safety, a Stemwell Services of Andrews truck was involved in an accident at about 6:30 a.m. today in which 4,500 pounds of hot chloric acid solution was spilled.

Because of fumes and winds from the southwest, the southbound lane of U.S. Highway 385 was closed for about three hours. It was re-opened by 10 a.m., a DPS spokeswoman said.

She said it appeared all of the load as well as fuel would be lost.

No further details were available.

Muddy mess

Construction worker in College Station, Kevin Banks shows his displeasure as he sinks into the mud at a local hotel construction site. An inch of rain fell Tuesday, bringing this month's total to 10½ inches. That total is less than two inches from the 1925 record of 12.3 inches.

Nurse to appeal child injury conviction

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The prosecution's heavy reliance on circumstantial evidence may form the basis of an appeal of former nurse Genene Jones' conviction on a child injury charge, her attorney says.

"There were lots of people around that could have done it," defense lawyer Royal Griffin told reporters after Ms. Jones was convicted and sentenced to 60 years in prison.

"There was no dripping needle," he said.

State district judge Pat Priest Wednesday, ruling in a non-jury trial, told Ms. Jones, "From the evidence before me, I find that this child received a massive dose of heparin during the 3 to 11 shift Jan. 9, 1982, and that Genene Jones did it."

The charge was filed in the overdose of 4-week-old Rolando Santos with the blood-thinner heparin. The incident occurred while he was hospitalized for pneumonia in the pediatric intensive care unit at Medical Center Hospital.

The child has since recovered and been released.

The former nurse will serve the 60-year term concurrently with a 99-year sentence she drew for murder in the death of a 15-month-old Kerrville girl. That child was killed with an injection of a muscle relaxant.

She still faces seven other child injury charges in Kerr County.

Genene Jones

Special prosecutor Nick Rothe said he expects no more indictments against Ms. Jones in connection with dozens of mysterious infant deaths at Medical Center Hospital.

However, he said a grand jury investigating the suspicious deaths will continue its probe.

Priest made his ruling after the prosecution rested its case early Wednesday and the defense presented no witnesses.

During final arguments, prosecutor Ray Fuchs recounted the Santos child's stay in the hospital, pointing out the baby suffered cardiac arrests twice, dehydrated dangerously once and bled seriously on the 9th.

"Four times this woman brought him near his death," Fuchs told the judge.

Rothe, in his final statement, called the crime horrifying and said, pointing at Ms. Jones, "This person's got a real problem. Why (injury occurred) is something we'll never know."

Rothe recalled a Centers for Disease Control investigation of infant deaths at Medical Center report which showed baby mortality rates increased 178 percent while Ms. Jones worked there.

"The CDC report has determined there is a disease and that disease is sitting right there," he said, again pointing at Ms. Jones.

In his final arguments, Griffin told the judge, "The state has done absolutely nothing to prove Genene Jones did anything. Does the mere presence of the defendant at the scene of the event have any probative value at all. The answer is obviously 'no.'"

In testimony earlier Wednesday, the nurse's former cellmate at the Bexar County Jail said Ms. Jones admitted killing babies.

Kathy Engelke, 20, testified she was jailed for drunken driving Oct. 10 and was placed in a cell with Ms. Jones.

"She asked me why I was there. I said DWI (driving while intoxicated). I asked her why she was in and she said, 'I'm Genene Jones, the nurse that killed those babies,'" Ms. Engelke said.

Also testifying Wednesday was nurse Suzanna Maldonado, who told the court she received a death threat after she began investigating a link between infant deaths, cardiac arrests and Ms. Jones.

Ms. Maldonado said when she came to work March 16, 1982, she checked her nursing assignment sheet. On the sheet, she said, was a note written by Genene Jones.

The note, she said, said, "Check your box."

Ms. Maldonado said when she looked in her mailbox, "There was a piece of paper in it that said 'Your (sic) Dead.'"

She said she got another note in her box the next day, but Priest refused to allow the second note — which read "Soon" — to be entered into evidence after defense attorneys objected.

Drought over, but water rationing continues

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Officials said recent heavy rains have helped end the drought for farmers and ranchers in Nueces County, but Corpus Christi residents will continue to have water rationed because little of the torrential downpour reached the watershed serving the city.

At least 90 percent of Nueces County agriculture land no longer suffers from drought, but the rains came too late to help parched corn, milo and cotton crops in 1984, said County Agricultural Agent Darwin Anderson.

He said milo and cotton yields were sharply reduced and half the corn harvest was lost to the drought. Pastures and hay were devastated and livestock produces were, in some cases, forced to sell their animals faster than they would have liked.

Anderson said the county had "pretty much reached an end to the drought" and was on the way to recovery.

Although farmers and ranchers felt relief from the rain, city residents will have to continue watching the amount of water they use, said Water Superintendent Paul Werner.

Heavy weekend rains in San Patricio County – which caused extensive flooding in Sinton and Odem – did not help fill Lake Corpus Christi or the Choke Canyon Reservoir north of town.

Lake Corpus Christi provides water for most Coastal Bend cities.

Lake levels have risen because of heavy rains about two weeks in the Nueces watershed, Werner said.

New Supreme Court justice stirs controversy

DALLAS (AP) — The newest appointee to the Texas Supreme Court has fellow court justices alarmed after he wrote an emotional anti-abortion opinion in dissenting to a court decision last week, officials say.

Justice Raul Gonzalez has been on the state's highest court for less than a month, but his attack on pro-abortionists in his dissenting opinion has caused consternation in the governor's office, angered pro-choice activists and has led others to say they feel he may not be rule impartially in similar cases.

Gonzalez was appointed earlier this month by Gov. Mark White. The dissenting opinion was issued Oct. 17 in a "wrongful birth" case only nine days after he was sworn in.

"It would obviously have been better if he had not gone out of his way to inject himself into the abortion issue," a governor's aide who declined to be named told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Gonzalez' opinion "talked about murder and killing kids" until other justices prevailed on him to tone it down, court insiders said. The sources said there was concern that the opinion would be interpreted as Gonzalez being ruled by his religious beliefs, the newspaper reported Wednesday.

The opinion proves Gonzalez cannot be an impartial justice in possible future abortion cases, said Janet Friese, executive director of the Texas Abortion rights Action League.

"I was extremely surprised to see a Supreme Court justice make such a biased statement," she told the Houston Chronicle.

The opinion might draw attention from fundamentalist political organizations to future Supreme Court races, some sources said.

"They didn't want him to do it because it will draw all these single-issue people into judicial races," an unidentified source told the Star-Telegram. "That is bad in Supreme Court races. Then you get them on gay rights, school prayer and all the rest."

"Opinions speak for themselves," said Gonzalez, the state's first Hispanic Supreme Court justice.

"I have no comment on any of my judgments beyond what is in the opinion," Gonzalez told the Chronicle.

The opinion drew praise from Robert Powell, vice president of the Texas Right To Life Committee.

"We certainly applaud that decision, because we feel all human beings, whether they are handicapped or not, deserve the same right to life," he told the Houston newspaper.

Baylor University president's son Hollywood 'hot property'

WACO (AP) — In Hollywood, sometimes it's better to be lucky than it is to be good. Sometimes it helps even more to be both. Although he'd probably disagree with either assessment, Kevin "Hal" Reynolds is both.

Reynolds, the son of Baylor University President Herbert H. Reynolds, is what is commonly known as a hot property in Tinseltown these days.

His first script, "Red Dawn" is packing 'em in down at your neighborhood theater. His first film as a director (and writer), "Fandango," was bankrolled by Steven Spielberg and should be out soon. And he's already in preproduction on his next film, set in South America.

But to hear Reynolds' soft drawl from his California office, you'd think the jump from Waco high schools to Hollywood was the most natural progression in the world.

"After I graduated from the Baylor Law School in 1976, I went to work down in Austin for Mark White for a couple of years," Reynolds said. "I took a film couse or two at UT and that's when the bug bit. So in 1979, I went to film school at the University of Southern California and graduated with a master's degree in cinema production in 1981."

"My thesis script was titled "Ten Soldiers," and I was lucky enough to get an agent interested in it pretty quick. It floated around Hollywood for about two years. The original executive producer of what was to become "Red Dawn" held on to it and took an option out for two years.

"Fortunately, life went on during that time. Steven Spielberg saw a student film I did at USC, liked it, and we got together. We talked awhile and he gave me a deal to write and direct: "Fandango."

Reynolds said he had mixed emotions about getting a film from Spielberg so early in his career. He said it brought a lot of undue attention to the project at a time when he was still trying to figure out Hollywood's complex "buddy system" of film making.

Despite good early reports, "Fandango" has been delayed several times after the initial shooting began in Austin last year.

"Well, we're still working on the music now, but that's it," he said, with a hint of exasperation. "For a while we had to reshoot a couple of early segments, and the whole thing has taken too long. I think part of the problem is that the studio never really set a release date to adhere to, and they just kept tinkering around with it.

"The story is about five close friends who have just graduated form school and are about to be separated. The time is 1971, and they want one last fling. There's all kinds of subplots going on: one of the guys has just backed out of a marriage, a couple others have just been drafted and another never wants to grow up — like Peter Pan. It's a coming-of-age thing, set in Texas.

In the meantime, Reynolds' script to "Ten Soldiers" finally got off the ground as "Red Dawn," with John Milius directing and rewriting the screenplay. The new, more violent film is attracting big crowds, much to Reynolds' dismay.

"Oh I hate it, I'm so disappointed how it came out," he said. "I really liked the original script. It was a 'Lord of the Flies' kind of thing with the impact of war on innocents and how it changes them into animals. As John did it, there are no characterizations, no way to differentiate between characters. There's more attention to the pyrotechnics than people.

"The end result is that it is not very real. For fantasy to be effective, it has to be grounded in something real. I wanted the whole thing to be more like "The Deer Hunter." Obviously, that's not what happened."

Reynolds' yet-unnamed next film is still in the early stages. He said the script is finished and he's only waiting on final approval to begin filming. Although he wouldn't talk about its specifics, he said it was a mixture of "Chinatown" and "The African Queen," set in South America.

WHY?

Why do some city policemen say the Midland County Sheriff's Office is not cooperative?

I would not go along to get along. I would not close my eyes to organized prostitution, illegal gambling or criminal violations by certain police officers in the city of Midland.

We have worked numerous cases with the Midland Police Department. We have been cooperative and are willing to cooperate.

We have worked numerous cases with the Texas Rangers, State Criminal Intelligence, State Narcotic Service, Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission and other state agencies — they will not say we are uncooperative.

We have worked numerous cases with the F.B.I. and other federal agencies — they will not tell you we are uncooperative.

If the price of being called "cooperative" by Chief Gideon and some of his officers with the Midland Police Department means closing my eyes to selected illegal operations and illegal actions, they will never call me cooperative.

I will not go along just to get along. But, the Midland County Sheriff's Office will continue to enthusiastically and unselfishly work with any law enforcement agency which truly wants to enforce the law.

White: GOP trying to thwart registration

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Gov. Mark White and Reagan administration official Donald Devine met face-to-face for the first time, White thanked Devine for making him a "hero."

After White received a Sept. 24 letter from Devine, head of the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, suggesting that the state risked losing federal funds because it uses state employees to register voters, White went on the offensive, calling openly for more registrations.

On Wednesday, the governor testified at a congressional hearing chaired by partisan compatriot Barney Frank of Massachusetts and called the letter part of a Reagan administration "coordinated attack ... to reduce voter turnout."

Similar letters were sent to the governors of Ohio and New York.

"No instance of illegal activity was brought to Mr. Devine's attention, but he saw fit to single out Texas with only two other states as the object of thinly-veiled threats," White testified before Frank's Government Operations Subcommittee on Manpower and Housing.

"It is now apparent that his effort was part of a coordinated attack by this administration to reduce voter turnout," White said.

He told Frank the GOP had "suggested we might not be registering the right kind of people."

As White left the hearing room, he passed Devine, who was on his way in. Devine introduced himself.

"You've made us quite a hero down there. We appreciate it," White said.

"Glad we could help you out," Devine replied.

Devine said he was just obeying the law when he sent the letters.

"I must confess, Geraldine Ferraro made me do it," he said.

Devine said Ms. Ferraro had requested tighter supervision of the Intergovernmental Personnel Act in 1982 as chairwoman of the OPM's oversight subcommittee.

The letters in question were sparked by a Sept. 18 editorial in the Wall Street Journal questioning the propriety of New York's voter registration system, Devine said.

During an acrimonious exchange, Frank replied, "Now, if I was governor, I'd say, 'Gee, anytime I get the Wall Street Journal upset, I may get this letter from some federal official saying they're going to cut off aid to the blind if I haven't satisfied the Wall Street Journal.'"

Devine said he had sought to have the Intergovermental Personnel Act abolished. He declined to say whether he thought any of the states had violated the law, saying such an investigations are "very long processes."

"This is the most trumped-up proposal I've ever seen," Frank said. "You're just trying to spare yourself the embarrassment of having to take it back before the election."

Knowledge of sites may breed opposition

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A widespread campaign to educate the public on nuclear waste disposal could backfire since the more people think they know about dump sites the more opposition they feel, according to a study conducted for the state agency regulating disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

Texas A&M University's Public Policy Resource Lab surveyed by telephone 998 people living in 12 Texas counties under consideration as waste disposal sites.

Eighty percent of those polled opposed locating a dump in their county.

The survey was commissioned by the Texas Low-level Nuclear Waste Disposal Authority.

Results of the survey were analyzed and summarized by Dr. David B. Hill and Dr. James A. Dyer to help state officials determine public attitudes and decide which method of disposal would be most acceptable to Texans.

The margin of error varied from county to county because an unequal number of interviews were done each, but "when you're talking about 80 percent, margins of error aren't too important," Dyer said.

Respondents feared environmental contamination that could lead to cancer and other public health problems, according to the survey summary published by the Laredo Times.

The concerns expressed by those surveyed extended to every segment of the population, male and female, young and old, Anglo and Hispanic, high and low income groups, Dyer said.

He said a similar survey conducted statewide last summer showed attitudes consistent with those revealed in the 12-county study.

The study summary suggested that "given the depth of opinion on the issue, it is doubtful that any public information campaign can reverse the tide of opposition..."

The survey found that those who think they know the most about radioactive waste are the most strongly opposed to locating a dump in their county.

The analysts noted "...the perception of being informed is not systematically related to the support for the site, but it is related to opposition. The more the respondent thinks he knows, the more likely he is to oppose the site."

STATE IN BRIEF

Second museum painting defaced

DALLAS (AP) — The second painting to be defaced this month at the Dallas Museum of Art was found damaged Wednesday morning, museum officials said.

The eyes in a 1923 portrait entitled "Judson Smith," by American painter Andrew Dasburg, evidently were penetrated by someone using a pen, a museum official said.

Museum director Harry S. Parker said Dallas police have been asked to investigate.

"We believe the damage was likely to have been inflicted by a museum visitor," Parker said. "The puncture of the eyes is a classic format for this type of vandalism."

On Oct. 2, a 12-inch gash was discovered in a 1936 painting by French impressionist Pierre Bonnard valued at more than $1 million.

A museum employee was fired in the wake of an investigation into the damaged Bonnard. Parker said it was unclear whether the two incidents were related.

"We are unable to rule out the possibility that the damage was inflicted by a person or persons associated with the Bonnard incident," Parker said.

He said the Dasburg painting, which is valued at $25,000, will be restored.

Task force wants new airport

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin should replace its municipal airport with a $353 million facility on 5,300 acres of land, a city task force recommended Wednesday.

The panel, in a 9-1 vote, also said an airport authority should be established to operate the new airport.

The present Robert Mueller Municipal Airport in East Austin is considered outdated by some. Area residents have mounted a "move it" campaign.

Task force members said improving Mueller and building a reliever airport for general aviation should be considered as a "fall-back position" if a new airport proves infeasible.

No site was recommended for a new airport, but task force members have said a location east of nearby Manor is preferred.

The lone dissenting vote came from John Cutright, who said a new airport is not needed. He recommended putting the question to voters.

The task force plans on bringing a report to the Austin City Council on Nov. 15.

Substance possibly bean sprouts

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Health officials have ruled that "worms" found by elementary school children in school lunches last week were "possible bean sprouts."

A worried parent called the Laredo Morning Times newspaper complaining that children at a local elementary school had been finding "worms in the food and bugs in the lettuce."

Rumors of the worms caused a shipment of food to be thrown away last Thursday and a new lunch, pizza, prepared for students later in the day, school officials said.

Tests run on food samples revealed that the questionable substance in a bean dish and in chile con carne was "vegetable cells, possibly bean sprouts," according to Victor Oliveros, chief sanitarian with the Laredo-Webb County Health Department.

Parents complained that children had been suffering from "stomach pains and diarrhea" and had been suspicious of school lunches for about 10 days before tests were run.

Private labs report more cholera cases

HOUSTON (AP) — Private laboratories have confirmed four more cases of cholera, bringing to six the nummber of Houston residents afflicted with the malady, city health officials say.

Dr. Gordon Reeve, chief of the Houston Health Department's epidemiology section, said several "private, reputable" laboratories reported Wednesday finding a vibrio cholerae bacteria in samples submitted by four other Houston residents to their private doctors last week.

The city department earlier diagnosed two cases of cholera in people who had eaten raw oysters at Houston area restaurants.

Reeve said the new four cases had not been confirmed by his office, the Texas Health Department or the federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The city department earlier diagnosed two cases of cholera in people who had eaten raw oysters at Houston area restaurants.

Reeve said he was uncertain whether the four were among 83 who called the department last week complaining of diarrhea after eating raw oysters. However, he said, that none of the four — three men ages 39, 26 and 47 and a woman, 30 — required hospitalization.

Dr. Lynn M. Little, chief of laboratory services for the department, denied that the six cases amount to an epidemic.

"At the moment, we have a few people who ate some bad food and developed diarrhea," he said. "The interesting thing is, we're growing vibrio cholerae (the bacteria that causes cholera) from all of their stools."

Department Director James Haughton was out of town and could not be reached for comment on the latest cases.

His department announced last week that the disease had been confirmed in a 22-year-old Houston man and suspected in two others. All three said they had eaten raw oysters, which were traced to Louisiana's American Bay.

The department confirmed Monday that the illness of another of the trio was also caused by a bacteria identified as vibrio cholerae type non-01. The bacteria, not to be confused with the vibrio cholerae type 01 that causes true cholera," is found frequently in warm sea water, officials said.

Brew without clouds brightens tea lover's day

By LINDA ANDERSON

I am not a coffee drinker. And I have to admit I occasionally pat myself on the back and tell myself how wonderful it is not to be dependent on the popular beverage.

But when I am enjoying at attack of the smugs, it's easy to overlook the fact I am nearly as addicted to tea as many folks are to coffee. I love tea hot or iced — and I drink it both ways all year long, whatever the weather.

Luzianne tea is advertised in commercials (starring Burl Ives) as being always clear, "never cloudy." That may not sound like much of a claim, but those who drink a lot of tea know when it is clear it usually tastes much better — and fresher.

We tested Luzianne tea for taste, price, advertising accuracy and clarity. Testers were adults, teenagers and children, but as the chief tea-drinker in my house, I did most of the testing.

Luzianne tea cost $2.99 for a box of 100 tea bags. (Orange pekoe and pekoe cut black teas "Especially blended for ice tea" according to label information.) A 100-tea bag box of Lipton tea costs $2.69 and the same size box of Nestea costs $2.89. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising claims "Taste Tests make Luzianne the clear winner!" and "Refreshing Luzianne. Overwhelmingly preferred by iced tea drinkers in blind taste tests. Because Luzianne is made with special tea leaves, a unique blend of full bodied aromatic Orange Pekoe teas and other fine teas ... all blended together to make an iced tea that is always clean, never cloudy with plenty of real tea flavor."

Luzianne, like Lipton, features a double tea bag with four sides. The label claims the bags allow for more flavor and less brewing time than two-sided bags.

Luzianne sun tea — a gallon of water with six to eight tea bags brewed for for several hours in the sun — was delicious. And, believe it or not, it was clear after brewing. Even after setting in the kitchen for a couple of days, it remained clear.

We also tested Luzianne kitchen tea — prepared in the same method as sun tea but instead brewed in the kitchen. Kitchen tea takes longer to brew than sun tea and normally doesn't taste as good (just more convenient — it can brew overnight with no trouble). The kitchen tea was also delicious and remained clear for two or three days.

The all-important "in the refrigerator" test to check its resistence to clouding involved a jug of tea stored overnight in the refrigerator. (Tea kept in the refrigerator often turns cloudy.) Even the refrigerator tea was clear and delicious.

I was impressed with Luzianne tea. I'll probably switch brands because even though Luzianne costs more than I'm accustomed to paying, the quality and flavor are worth the extra cost — at least it is for this tea drinker.

Christmas parcels face hefty mail competition

From Staff Reports

The weeks between Thanksgiving and Christmas are busy for the U.S Postal Service.

Holiday cards and packages face stiff competition for speedy handling and delivery during those four weeks, but these tips from Royal V. Craig, director of Postal Service Relations for Pitney Bowes, maker of mail and parcel handling equipment (Craig also said because of the use of automated sorting and handling, there are new procedures to observe in addressing and packaging mail):

— Set Dec. 15 as personal deadline for mailing packages. Parcels mailed by this date should beat the holiday crunch. Send cards and letters early too.

— Mail early in the day. Even during the holiday season most mail is business mail which hits the post office about 5 p.m. Mailing early means avoiding the rush.

— Use ZIP codes on all mail. In addition to speeding up mail delivery, ZIP codes are also used to figure package postal rates.

— Type or print addresses on envelopes and use the two-letter state abbreviation to speed sorting and handling cards.

— Avoid odd-sized Christmas cards which will be rejected by automatic mail sorting equipment. Use cards larger than 3-½x 5-inches or smaller than 6-⅛x 11½-inches, and no thicker than ¼-inch. Non-corforming cards will cost a nine-cent surcharge on each piece and will have to be processed manually.

— Avoid cards with dark envelopes, which make it difficult to see the address and slows down sorting.

— Use Christmas postcards — and save seven cents postage on each one mailed.

— Most post offices set up sorting bins in their lobbies — use them for fastest service for cards.

— Always use a return address.

— Use the correct size container and proper padding material to keep gifts from breaking.

— Consider sending gift certificates as practical presents.

— Use wide reinforced plastic tape, not string, to seal packages. Reinforced plastic is strong but lightweight, saving postage. String can catch in new mail equipment, disrupting mail handling and possibly damaging the package.

— Put a duplicate address label inside the package before sealing. If outside label is damaged the package can still be routed.

— Put address label on only one side of a package. Because postage will only be on one side, clerks might reject a parcel if they see a mailing label but no postage.

— Take advantage of different rates. Mail early and use parcel post (Fourth Class) instead of Priority (First Class). If mailing books, records or tapes use "Special Fourth Class Rate" for economy.

— U.S. Postal Service size limitations are: 70 pounds maximum weight and no more than 108-inches, length and girth combined. Girth is measured around the thickest part of the package.

"If, in spite of last year's New Year's resolutions to have all your Christmas shopping and sending done early, you are stuck with that last-minute gift to send, consider using the U.S. Postal Service's Express Mail," Craig suggested. A two-pound package can be delivered overnight for no more than $9.35.

BETTER BUSINESS

Lease/purchase plans federally regulated

By LINDA TRUITT

A lease/purchase agreement can be a satisfactory way to buy a washing machine, television or furniture. For people who do not have established credit or have not handled their credit properly in the past, leasing may be the only way to obtain needed appliances.

Occasionally the Better Business Bureau receives a complaint from someone who is having problems with his lease, such as not being able to have the terms in writing and having to make unexpected additional payments.

To help consumers avoid these problems, a federal law, the Consumer Leasing Act, was passed which requires leasing companies to tell consumers the facts about the cost and terms of their contracts.

The information can be used to compare one lease with another or to compare the cost of leasing with the cost of buying the same property.

The law applies only to personal property leased by an individual for a period of more than four months for personal, family or household use. It does not apply to property leased to companies or to individuals for business use.

Before agreeing to a lease, the law requires consumers obtain a written statement of its costs, including:

— The amount of any advance payment, such as security deposit;

— The number, amount and dates of regular payments as well as total amount of those payments;

— The amount which must be paid for license, registration and taxes and for any other fees such as maintenance.

The statement does not have to include any explanation of finance charges as required in installment contracts. Some people have been upset when they realized they were not given this information.

Customers must also be told certain terms of the lease, including:

— Who is responsible for maintaining and servicing the property;

— Any penalty for default or late payment;

— Whether or not customers can buy the property and, if possible, when and at what price.

One decision that will affect leasing costs and terms is whether "open end" or "closed end" lease is chosen.

In an open end lease consumers run the risk of owing extra money depending on the value of the property when it is returned. This payment is often called a "balloon payment" which must be explained before the lease is signed.

In a closed end lease the consumer is not responsible for the value of the property when it is returned and will not have to make a balloon payment, but the monthly payments may be higher.

If the leasing company does not give the required information or does so improperly, customers may sue for 25 percent of the total of the monthly payments (but not less than $100 or more than $1000) plus any actual damages. If the customer wins he is also entitled to court costs and reasonable attorney's fees.

For more information on this law, call or write the BBB/Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland 79711.

Family of Year nominations sought

Nominations for Family of the Year are being accepted through Saturday. Sponsored by the Midland Wards of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the award is given to families active in church and community who have high moral standards and who exhibit family solidarity. Members of the sponsoring organization are not eligible for nomination.

To nominate a family send the name of the nominated family, their telephone number, address and qualifications to "Family of the Year," P.O. Box 80232, Midland 79709. Persons making nominations should also include their own name, address and telephone number.

Mayor Thane Akins will present the award Nov. 16 at the chapel at 2101 Tarleton Street. The program, "Families in Action," will begin at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited to attend. The presentations will begin observance of "National Family Week" activities.

Asbestos danger found in homes as well as schools

Copley News Service

Look up from your newspaper at your ceiling.

Look in the cupboard for that old box of patching compound.

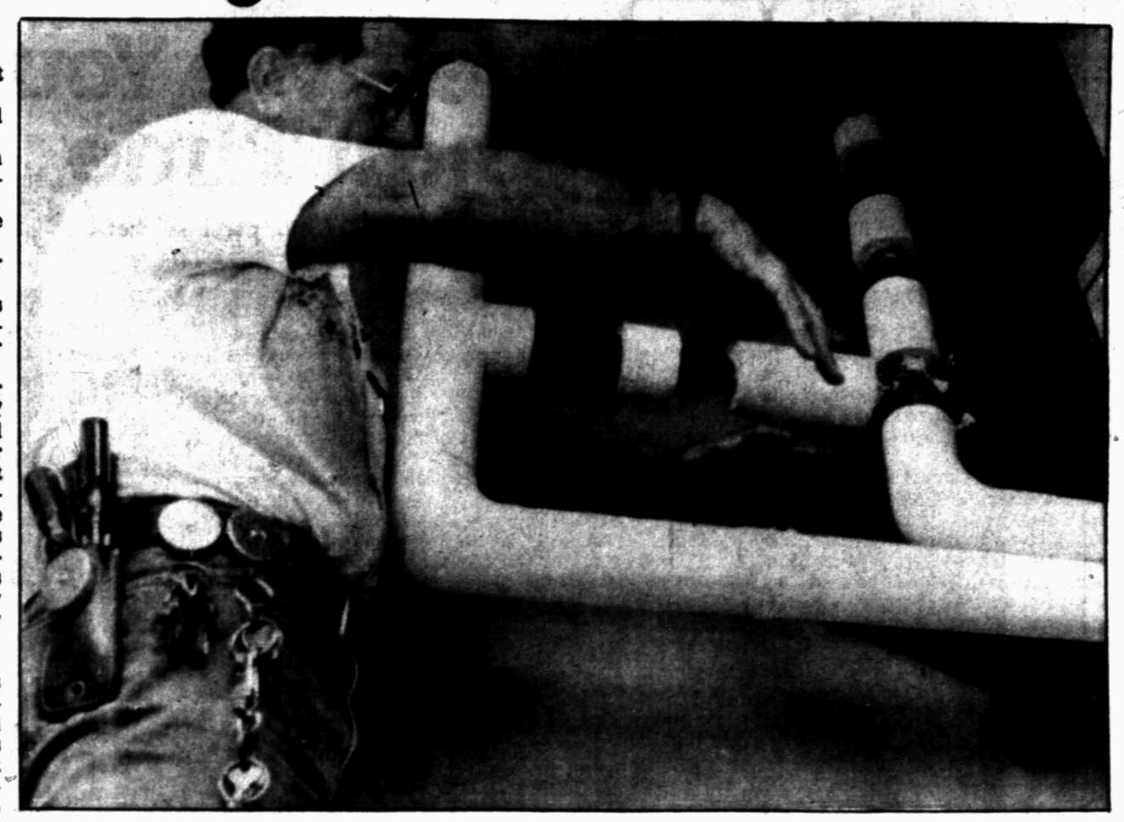
Check the old composition tiles on the roof or the slate tiles on the kitchen floor.

Do you have an old furnace wrapped with insulation?

Still use an early model hair dryer, toaster or popcorn popper?

Public attention, as youngsters returned to school, was concentrated on classroom inspections for evidence of asbestos.

But parents need go no farther than their own homes to find bits of asbestos in walls, floors, ceilings and consumer products — even in car brakes and clutches — that might pose serious health problems. Scientists even warn that the damage already may have been done to one's lungs or affected the body sufficiently to cause cancer 20 years hence. But they admit they can't say who is most vulnerable, or how much exposure is hazardous.



CNS Photo

Rick Estrada checks the new insulation at a junior high school, where asbestos material was replaced to comply with safety standards set since the dangers of asbestos became clear.

ON THE OTHER HAND, asbestos is a naturally occurring mineral — magnesium silicate mined like gold from serpentine rocks — and has been known to exist since ancient times. Pliny the Elder, a Roman naturalist, recorded its use. Marco Polo brought it back from China. And Bing Crosby (in "White Christmas") and Judy Garland (in "The Wizard of Oz") sang as it fell from the sky, when moviemakers thought it made great artificial snow — not knowing it could also be deadly.

"Asbestos became very cheaply mined around the time of World War II and was installed in thousands of products and buildings for insulation, acoustic protection, heat protection and fire retardancy," said Frank Goss, president of Building System Evaluation Inc. of Sierra Madre, Calif.

As early as the 1930s, Goss said, the asbestos industry knew that asbestos could cause health problems. But dangers remained unknown to government regulators and the public.

"Concern came about when we started getting deaths in great proportions among people who worked with asbestos — miners, millers, manufacturers," Goss said.

THROUGH MEDICAL RESEARCH, it was found that microscopic bits of asbestos could become lodged in the lungs and over time clog up membranes to cause suffocation. Certain kinds of cancer also were linked to asbestos.

However, there is no way to predict how much exposure is necessary to cause cancer or lung problems and the same exposure does not lead to the same problems in all people.

"There is no way to know who needs to be careful and who doesn't," Goss said.

But research has shown that the younger the person, the quicker that exposure leads to health problems. That is why schools are being inspected to make sure any asbestos used in construction decades earlier poses no health hazards today.

In the private home, no such inspection requirement exists. You cannot ask for an "asbestos audit" as you can for an "energy audit" from the gas and electric company.

Jo Ann Semones, the western regional asbestos coordinator for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, said recent industrial standards and regulations have forced most asbestos-containing products off the market.

"There probably are many more homes that were built prior to 1979 that still contain asbestos material," she said. "But if the material is in good condition, typically, there is no hazard."

THE KEY WORD in asbestos monitoring is "friable," that is, crushable — as when you rub your hand along an acoustical ceiling and bits of material flake off and drift to the ground.

If a material made with asbestos is hard and therefore non-friable, it can be left alone. That applies to such things as old cement floor tiles and water mains made with concrete mixed with cement and asbestos.

"There really isn't a hazard until they are broken, sawed or bumped into enough to break the fibers loose," said Gene Erwin, technical director of the Association of Wall and Ceiling Industries.

The most dangerous state of asbestos is clouds of particles — possibly from broken bags of insulation material — that float in the air, propelled about the house by air conditioning, heating or natural ventilation.

During demolition work, asbestos particles can be loosened. Contractors who do such work are required to notify health or environmental officials and take precautions to minimize danger.

Disposal of asbestos material also is regulated as a hazardous material. It is unlawful simply to place loose asbestos in a trash can and have garbage workers haul it to the dump.

Special equipment and training are needed to deal with this form of asbestos and experts warn do-it-yourselfers to hire professionals rather than to tackle the cleanup job.

The "gray area" in handling asbestos includes many products and materials that are safe as long as they are not disturbed, broken or tampered with.

Cords on some consumer appliances, such as old irons and toasters, are insulated with asbestos. Older hair dryers were given asbestos insulation. Some patching compounds contained asbestos to improve bonding. Even some textured paints contained some asbestos.

In residential construction, asbestos was widely used in the post-World War II building booms in the housing industry (and everywhere else, for that matter) for roofing, flooring, siding, insulation and in stoves and furnaces.

DEAR ABBY

Dressing room policy questioned

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A friend told me that the best department stores in Boston have installed two-way mirrors in their dressing rooms so they can watch for shoplifters.

I think this is terrible! I would feel very uncomfortable undressing to try on clothes knowing that a detective (male or female) was watching me. And when I think of trying on bathing suits and lingerie, it really disturbs me.

Is this practice legal? I can't believe it's really going on in Boston. — APPALLED IN BOSTON

DEAR APPALLED: I checked with the best department stores in Boston and was assured that there are no two-way mirrors in their dressing rooms. Your friend is full of beans.

DEAR ABBY: I nearly fainted when I read the letter signed "Needs Advice." Our situations were identical! I was a 21-year-old girl, dating a 23-year-old guy who told me he was living with "Diane," a 30-year-old woman, but it was just a platonic relationship. He told me he loved me, but he didn't want Diane to know he was dating anyone else because she had a crush on him, and he felt he "owed" her.

He also told me if I called him and a woman answered to hang up. I did as he asked until one day instead of hanging up, I talked to the woman, told her who I was and asked if we could meet and talk. She invited me over, and I found out in a short time what a fool I'd been.

This so-called "30-year-old woman" who had a crush on him was a beautiful 27-year-old woman to whom he had been married for four years! They had three children — the baby was 3 months old.

She told me her husband had a bad drinking problem and she was seeking help for him and their family. It was very plain to me that she really loved this man.

The next time my "boyfriend" called me, I told him I had met his wife and saw his children and he never should come near me again. I also told him what I thought of him for cheating on a beautiful family like his.

I am very thankful to Diane for inviting me over and opening my eyes. — NEVER AGAIN

Study finds children's needs often forgotten

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Two 5-year-olds played on the escalator in the subway station because they had no other place to play. Other children were found lying listlessly on cots. Still others wandered in dark hotel hallways or were sent out to heavily trafficked streets.

These are among the observations reported in a new study of the hotels and shelters in New York City where 7,000 children of homeless families live.

The study was conducted by the Citizens Committee for Children, a private, nonprofit children's advocacy group. Volunteers interviewed 88 families in eight hotels and two temporary shelters.

They are among the 3,100 homeless families housed by the city, at a cost of $97 million a year, in 50 hotels and motels and four large temporary shelters. They became homeless because of eviction for nonpayment of rent or because their building turned co-op. Some of them had been doubled up in apartments and were eventually forced to leave by the primary tenant. A smaller number are victims of fires or other disasters.

"OUR FINDINGS," the report states, "reveal a pattern of disrupted young lives because of long periods of 'temporary' shelter in strange and sometimes dangerous neighborhoods," because of "negligence by public and voluntary service agencies" that seem to have overlooked the needs of the children, and until recently "the almost wholesale disregard by the city for the physical and psychological conditions" under which the children and their families live.

This is the second report to come out within three weeks on the problems of homeless families housed by the city in hotels. Last month the Community Service Society issued a report on conditions in the Martinique Hotel, at 32d Street and Broadway. While many of the findings in the two reports are similar, the latest study focuses on the plight of children.

Robert Jorgen, deputy administrator for crisis intervention services at the City Human Resources Administration, said the agency was already instituting several of the recommendations in the report.

He said those included developing day-care programs, putting out a new brochure for each hotel informing clients of the goods and services in the area, and making sure that each family is seen by a Human Resources Administration caseworker.

"We don't pretend these are hotels we would want to be in," Jorgen said. "All we say is that no family will be without a bed. The real problem is lack of permanent housing for these families and the tremendous need for federal funds."

THE CITY WILL ALWAYS have families who are temporarily homeless because of fires or other disruptions. But Jorgen estimated that the current caseload of 3,100 homeless families could perhaps be reduced to 200 to 400 in the summer and 900 in the winter if enough permanent low-cost housing could be built.

The Human Resources Administration has moved 1,500 homeless families into apartments in renovated, city-owned buildings this year and hopes that a total of 4,000 families will be moved by the end of the year.

The study, which was coordinated and written by Nancy Wackstein, a staff member at the Citizens Committee, found that as late as June, when the study was conducted, most families did not know what their children were going to do during the summer.

Half of the families with school-age children said that no one had told them about any summer camp or recreation programs, even though there were such city programs and programs under the auspices of private groups, such as the Fresh Air Fund and the Coalition for the Homeless.

"The specter of thousands of hotel children wasting away in poorly ventilated and excruciatingly hot and overcrowded hotel rooms and barracks shelters during the summer of 1984 became real to our volunteer monitors in June," the study states.

AMONG THE STUDY'S recommendations were these:

— Most of the hotels being used to shelter homeless families with children are inappropriate for this purpose and should be vacated immediately.

— The use of temporary, barracks-type shelters for families is also unacceptable, and these facilities should be closed quickly. Until this happens, the city should take immediate steps to provide partitions or curtains in sleeping areas, install curtains on showers and doors on bathroom stalls and provide storage facilities for each family.

— The city and state should build temporary shelters with discrete apartment units for homeless families.

— A full-time staff member should be in every facility that shelters more than 100 children to see that they receive necessary services, such as schools, day care, summer camp and recreation programs.

— No infants, children with health problems or pregnant women should be placed in hotels that do not have refrigerators for food and medicine.

CURIOUS SHOPPER

Catfish by any other name is still catfish

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. We are confused about the packaging of some fish fillets in our area that are labeled "ocean catfish." My husband, a fisherman from Missouri, says that there is no such thing, that catfish come from ponds. We have eaten catfish fillets before that were sold fresh from a meat counter, but we are afraid this fish might be something other than what it is labeled.

Incidentally, this "ocean catfish" is quite a lot cheaper than the other type we have purchased. The only other information on the label is "Product of Canada." Can you help us with this? Steve & Doreen Kemna, Alamo, Texas

A. There are many different kinds of catfish, some of which are freshwater and some of which are saltwater. Apparently you are familiar with the freshwater variety, of which there are 28 species, some edible and some not. The most edible freshwater catfish are channel catfish, white catfish and blue catfish, also called Mississippi catfish. They can be found in ponds or rivers.

Ocean catfish, explains Dr. Robert Price of the Marine Advisory Program at the University of California at Davis, is a deepwater fish from the North Atlantic weighing up to 30 pounds with firm, sweet-tasting flesh. Sometimes it is used as a substitute for genuine Dover sole. A single fillet is cut from the lower side of the fish, which is always boneless. Many of them are imported from Canada, Norway and the United Kingdom.

Ocean catfish may also be labeled as Atlantic catfish, blue sea cat, northern wolffish, spotted sea cat or Bering wolffish. To add to the confusion, common names for these fish are rock turbot, rock salmon, rockfish, sea wolf, sand scar, swine fish, wolf and woof.

Q. I have a set of cookware lined with Silverstone Teflon. The Teflon is coming off in huge flakes. Is it safe to continue to use the pans? Gladys Rose, Modesto, Calif.

A. The Food and Drug Administration believes the pans are safe for conventional kitchen use. In a brochure on this subject the FDA says:

"In the past few years there has been a great boom in sales of cookware with non-stick coating. They have been marketed under various trade names such as Teflon, T-fal and others. These utensils are coated with perfluorocarbon resin, which makes it possible to fry foods without, or with very little, oil or fat. While the resin may decompose in heating and particles may chip off, this is an inert substance and poses no health problem."

Q. I believe your reply about Hershey Kisses being made originally by Wilbur and called Wilbur Buds, to be incorrect. Wilbur Buds are still being made by Wilbur's Cocoa Company in Lititz, Pa., and are entirely different and, in my opinion, much better than the foil-wrapped Hershey Kisses.

A. When I said, in a previous column, that Hershey Kisses were first made in 1893 by a manufacturer named Wilbur, I should have said that a similar type candy called Wilbur Buds originated in 1893 and is still being made today. Hershey began making their chocolate kisses in 1907. Thanks for your help.

Q. What's the difference between white vinegar and cider vinegar? When a recipe calls for vinegar, how do I know which to use? I've asked a few of the older generation and they know what they use each for but they don't know why. D. Cunningham, Chesterton, Ind.

A. White vinegar is made from distilled alcohol which comes from either corn, rye or barley. Cider vinegar is made from apple cider which has been fermented into hard cider. The processing cycles for each liquid are different but what emerges is vinegar, each with its own distinctive flavor.

Paula Capsambelis of the H.J. Heinz Company, makers of five different vinegars, says that there is no rule of thumb as to which vinegar to use with what. It's simply a matter of individual taste.

Overstuffing of luggage causes most damage

NEW YORK (AP) — Overpacking checked luggage is the most frequent cause of luggage damage, according to airport baggage handlers.

In a national survey of 1,000 handlers, some 72 percent blamed overstuffed baggage for most damage.

Another 19 percent also noted that poor quality luggage, whether it is hard or softside luggage, is most vulnerable to damage caused by normal wear and tear of handling.

The survey, conducted by Samsonite Luggage, found 87 percent of the baggage handlers recommended the 24- or 26-inch suitcase as the most functional size to check when traveling.

Sixty percent said they preferred hardside luggage with molded shell exteriors when they themselves travel.

Bravos, applause greet Thouvenel Quartet

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

"Bravos" and a standing applause from many fans greeted the Thouvenel String Quartet at the close of its opening concert.

Once again, any fears longtime fans had that a new member would unfavorably alter the quartet's sound were erased as the players moved with relative ease through Mozart's Quartet in B Flat Major, K. 589 and Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings in C Minor, Opus 60.

New to the Thouvenel this season is Keith "Robbie" Robinson, who replaces cellist Jeff Levenson. Levenson is now with the San Diego Chamber Orchestra, San Diego, Calif.

Robinson, who is from a musical family — his parents are with the Houston Symphony and his two brothers and two sisters (one his twin) are all musicians — has been playing since he was a child. He is a recent graduate of Curtis Institute.

At one point in the second movement of the Mozart, Robinson's enthusiasm almost carried him in too soon. Almost. Also during this movement, the four were slightly off for the briefest of moments; the recovery being so quick it could have been perceived as imagined. But, it wasn't.

Robinson's playing adds youthful enthusiasm to the group's charm. His extraordinary facial expressions coincide with the music, keeping the flavor some fans feared would be lost when Levenson left.

Due to a wrist problem faced by violinist Edmund Stein, a guest artist was brought in for the performance. Stein, who has been with the Thouvenel for two seasons, feels his wrist will be in good condition for the next Thouvenel performance, set for 8 p.m. Nov. 17 at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. Stein did play the Mozart, but not the Brahms.

Guest artist for the performance was pianist Greg Allen of the University of Texas, a gold medalist in the 1980 Rubinstein Competition in Israel, a silver in the two 1978 competitions — the Queen Elizabeth Competition in Belgium and the Washington International Competition.

Due to complications in storing at Midland College the Grotrian 9—foot concert grand, on loan to the Midland-Odessa Symphony for this season, Allen used the 7-foot baby grand at MC. The German hand-crafted Grotrian is temporarily being stored at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The Brahms was perfect for the occasion. Brahms, a true romantic composer, wrote poetic, emotionally charged music designed within the traditional forms he studied and loved.

However, it would have been such a treat and have added additional excitement to an already electrically charged evening for those in the almost full house to have been able to hear that magnificent instrument in such an intimate setting.

Nonetheless, the Brahms was well executed and warmly received.

This season, a new organization, Friends of the Quartet, has been formed to help promote the quartet.

Dick Dunbar, chairman of the Thouvenel String Quartet Committee for the Midland Symphony & Chorale Association, announced the formation of Friends at the performance, by saying, "We are helping to promote chamber music in Midland."

Thouvenel members will hold an open forum for Friends prior to each performance to discuss the composers and their works on the upcoming program. Interested parties are asked to call the symphony office, 563-0921.

Amy Grant moves 'Straight Ahead'

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Amy Grant's "Age to Age" album has been certified gold, which means it has sold more than 500,000 copies. The unusual thing is that it's a religious album — they don't often go gold.

In October, Miss Grant sold out 6,000-seat Radio City Music Hall in New York City. She had a seven-piece rock band, in which her husband, Gary Chapman, plays guitar, three backup singers and a sophisticated lighting system. The songs were mostly loud, with a rock beat. Miss Grant, her long, curly hair loose and trendily dressed, is 23, pretty, wholesome-looking, and projects a likable sincerity.

Her eighth album, out last spring on Myrrh Records, is "Straight Ahead." In an interview, she says, "I can't imagine anybody who isn't at least interested in what I'm singing about rushing out and buying a bunch of Amy Grant records. But people will tell me after a concert, 'I never heard of you until tonight. A friend suggested I come.'

"It's rare that one circumstance, like one concert, will change a person's entire life. But in a concert I think I have an opportunity to present a realistic picture of God alive and working in our lives today, that some young person might not have seen.

"With every song, my goal is to say I believe that God is who He said He is and there's an eternal scheme of things we've got to plug into.

"For two and a half hours, every person there is in a circumstance where they can choose to decide who God is instead of society or parents or school or peer pressure choosing for them."

Lyrics of songs she writes and songs she chooses to sing don't deal with such topics as drugs, Miss Grant says. "I would say I'm not dealing with the resulting problems, but dealing with the symptoms. My songs talk more about our self-esteem and who we are in God's sight. If you don't feel like anybody gives a flip about you, it's hard to care that much about yourself.

"It's hard for anybody to grasp that, 2,000 years ago, God loved me enough to come in the form of man and die for me. Jesus is saying, right in the midst of whatever bad stuff you're doing, I love you.

"I just want to tell kids they're important. I need that myself; I need to feel like somebody cares.

"It's funny the things that insecurity will make you do — draw attention to yourself, do stupid or self-destructive things. Hopefully my songs deal with more the root instead of saying you've got to live by my rules."

Miss Grant, born in Augusta, Ga., youngest of four girls, grew up in Nashville, in a religious household. "We went to the Church of Christ. It had a lot of heart but a lot of rules. There were no instruments in the church; all music was vocal. I stood next to Kathy, who's eight years older, and she told me there are notes on the page. If I wanted to sing with the rest, I should figure them out and follow them. By about fourth grade everybody knew a little how to read music.

"When I was a freshman in high school, I started going to a different church, downtown, with friends. I think, even if you grow up in a Christian home, each child has to feel like he's venturing out on his own and find out his life, even if it ends up being the same as his parents'.

"I was pretty much a good kid. But when I left my parents' church and when searching on my own, I thought I was rebelling in the biggest way. It felt good. When you're young and discover any sort of truth, it suddenly makes you want to tell your parents how to live. They must have been trying to keep a straight face; every parent must go through it.

"That church, Belmont, is on Music Row. It came out of the hippie movement of the early 1970s. A magnetic preacher came in. Kids started going in droves."

All four Grant sisters sang. "For some reason I was the one who started writing," Miss Grant says. She was 15. "I just was interested in telling other people about Jesus. I was thinking there are a lot of kids out there that are so wrapped up in not wanting to go to church they're not understanding that God is a whole lot bigger than church.

"I felt like saying, we've talked about sex and let's party, now let's talk about the eternal significance of the fact we're here."

Word Records, the largest company recording Christian music, signed her to its contemporary label, Myrrh.

Writer to hold workshop on 'Great American Novel'

Writer and teacher P.M. Fielding of Tulsa, Okla., will conduct a one-week workshop beginning Monday on "Writing the Great American Novel."

"You don't have to spend years writing a book before you sell it," Ms. Fielding says. "If it isn't going to sell, you might as well find out before you waste a great deal of time on a project."

Many of her students, she says, sell books by proposal or by writing a partial. They sell magazine articles by query letters.

"Someone has to get rich writing, and it might as well be you," she tells writers. "It isn't mysterious or difficult, but you have to know what is expected of you and produce good quality manuscripts."

A night and afternoon session will be offered in this course, which is sponsored by The Professional Writers Workshop. Seating is limited.

While she is in Midland, Ms. Fielding will speak to the Texas Nightwriters at its regular meeting at 1 p.m. Saturday. The group, which is composed of writers from Texas and New Mexico who are interested in writing to sell, meets at the Artificial Lift Efficiency School.

For more information on either the workshop or the writers group call Ginger Rawlins, 685-3568 or 685-3232.

'Barchester Chronicles' uneven 'Masterpiece'

By TOM JORY

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Barchester Chronicles," starting Sunday night on public TV's "Masterpiece Theater," is a regrettably uneven adaptation, in a single story, of two 19th-century novels by Anthony Trollope.

The 1982 British Broadcasting Corp. production, completed a century after Trollope's death, was drawn from "The Warden" and "Barchester Towers," the first two of six novels set in Barchester, a fictitious cathedral community in the west of England.

Though Trollope's own inclination was satiric, "The Barchester Chronicles" seems reluctant to exploit that comedic objective. It is not until the third or fourth of seven episodes that the author's biting wit is allowed to flourish.

Until then, the story relies heavily, sometimes excessively, on the Rev. Septimus Harding's vulnerable goodness for a momentum that is sluggish at best.

Donald Pleasance plays Harding, the honest and gentle warden of Hiram's Hospital, and the series' slow start should not detract from the delightful characterization.

Harding is a man who suffers, his bishop says, from "persistent bouts of Christianity." Rather than challenge John Bold, a successful surgeon and passionate reformer who complains that Harding is being overpaid for his limited responsibilities, the meek churchman tends to agree, and resigns.

Harding is defended vehemently by his son-in-law, the Rev. Dr. Grantly, archdeacon of Barchester (Nigel Hawthorne), who sees his own standing in the church threatened, and emotionally by his daughter, Eleanor (Janet Maw), who is in love with Bold (David Gwillim).

All of this takes the better part of three episodes, but hang on. The action picks up in the fourth, and "The Barchester Chronicles" becomes a new, and thoroughly entertaining, tale of ecclesiastical intrigue.

The old bishop is dying, and Dr. Proudie (Clive Swift) is appointed by the new government to take his place. But who really runs the diocese, Proudie's wife (Geraldine McEwan) or Slope (Alan Rickman), the bishop's ambitious and devious chaplain?

"Doesn't all the world know Mrs. Proudie is the bishop of Barchester, and Mr. Slope is her creature?" inquires Mrs. Quiverful, who is in for a rude awakening.

No wonder the good woman is confused. No one in this show, with the possible exception of Harding, is precisely what he or she seems to be. All protest noble intention, but few are above scheming for money and power.

Self-taught guitarist made it to the top

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — He's just a self-taught guitarist who hated lessons, but Steve Cropper has been involved in some top music projects for three decades.

In the 1960s, he co-wrote Wilson Pickett's "In the Midnight Hour," Otis Redding's "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay" and played on the instrumental hit, "Green Onions."

More recently he's played on the Blues Brothers' albums and for the past few weeks he's been writing songs with country music singer Razzy Bailey.

His achievements may sound like he took hours of expensive music lessons beginning at age 5, but that's not so.

"Lessons bored me," he recalled. So a friend took lessons and Cropper learned in turn from the friend.

"I'm sort of self-taught," he said.

The 41-year-old Cropper has learned well because he's been a deluxe musician, songwriter and record producer since his high school days in Memphis, Tenn.

"In the Midnight Hour" and "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay" are considered classic American rock 'n' roll songs from the mid-1960s, when U.S. rock music was dominated by the Beatles and other British groups.

"Green Onions" is a 1961 instrumental standard from Booker T. and the M.G.s — a four-piece band that was the rhythm section for Stax Records in Memphis.

Cropper and Pickett co-wrote "In the Midnight Hour" in 1965. The song was recently redone in a country style by Bailey, Cropper's current associate.

"He (Pickett) was always saying the phrase 'midnight hour' and I said that's got to be the title of the next song," Cropper said.

"He had a piece of the song written and I had a groove here and there and it all turned out as 'In the Midnight Hour,' " Cropper recalled.

The two wrote that song, plus "Don't Fight It" and "I'm Not Tired," in one night and Pickett recorded the three eventual hits the next day.

Redding and Cropper co-wrote "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay" about a week before Redding and four members of the Bar-Kays were killed in a plane crash in 1967 near Madison, Wis. The song was released posthumously and became Redding's last record.

"Otis came up with the idea of the bay and tide coming in," Cropper recalled. "All he had was the first introduction to the song. We sat in the studio (in Memphis) and finished it. I wrote the second verse and the bridge and we cut (recorded) it the next day.

"He whistled at the end of the song because he forgot what to sing, so he whistled as a fadeout."

Cropper said he and Redding planned to return to the studio to add instrumental work to the recording, but Redding died before it could be done.

"We thought we'd make it a little more polished," Cropper said.

"A lot of people said his death helped the record, but I don't think so. When we were in the studio, we looked at each other and said, 'We've got a crossover hit.'

"To me, the song summed up what he was about. It described him. He was a sincere person."

In 1961, Cropper was guitarist on "Green Onions," which he and the other three members of the group wrote.The title was "the funkiest thing we could think of," he recalled.

"The song stands alone," he said about its appeal. "It's still played today as an 'O-G' — oldie but goody."

In the past five years, Cropper played on three albums by the Blues Brothers and was "the colonel" in the movie "the Blues Brothers" starring the late John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd.

Since 1970, he has produced or played on albums by Ringo Starr, Jose Feliciano, Poco, the Temptations, Rod Stewart and others.

Cropper, raised in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, said his songwriting has been a money-making venture.

"I've made and spent a few dollars, I guess. I saved a little; the water level would have to be high to drown me now," he said.

His remarkable career may have unfolded simply because he earned money setting up bowling pins in an alley before automation came along. He took his earnings and bought a guitar.

"I ordered an $18 guitar right out of the Sears, Roebuck catalogue," he said.

Television writer thinks medium gets bad rap

Parent

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Television, says novelist Gail Parent, gets a bum rap.

She should know. Her television writing credits are stellar — she was one of the creators of "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," a main writer on "The Carol Burnett Show" and she's written for such stars as Mary Tyler Moore, Bing Crosby, Don Rickles and Ann-Margret.

But when she moves away from television, as she has done with screenplays, novels and Broadway productions, the powers that be want her to forget Fernwood and the Burnett characters that kept audiences rolling in the aisles and the money rolling into the networks.

"It's 100 percent unfair," Ms. Parent, 42, said of the disrespect shown to TV and anyone connected with it. The unfairness extends "to the point where if you're doing a Broadway show, they suggest you don't put in the credit line that you've done television because the critics will say that it's 'television-y.' That's a pejorative, meaning it's sketch-like, not deep enough."

In her new novel, "A Little Bit Married" (G.P. Putnam's Sons, $14.95), she tackles subjects as serious as abortion and infidelity, comes to some sobering and unexpected conclusions, and yet finds the comedy in those situations and the funny angle in a lot of day-to-day situations.

"Writing a book there are no rules," she said, contrasting it with the 32 to 36-page requirements of TV, and its emphasis on one character and his or her problems.

"In a book, you're in anybody's head or heart...It's actually easier that way. It's more free flowing."

Every character she creates reveals something of herself, Ms. Parent said, and "A Little Bit Married" is no exception.

The husband is an idolized, 42-year-old Jewish cardiologist who cherishes the routine of his life and compares himself to God.

"I'm scared of change," Ms. Parent said in an interview, explaining the similiarities between herself and Dr. David Weissman. "If you gave me a contract tomorrow that said I would be the same the rest of my life like I am now, I would sign it immediately — that nothing would get worse or better."

The wife, Marjorie, is a 38-year-old frustrated actress yearning for some excitement. Ms. Parent, too, has sought to expand her career to include acting and won't let age dictate her goals.

The daughter, Julie, is an unhappy, overweight teen-ager who resembles Gail Parent as a heavy adolescent who wasn't very popular.

The daughter of a former Miss Atlantic City and a Wall Street executive, Ms. Parent grew up on Long Island with two sisters.

She worked as an English teacher until Joe Hamilton, Carol Burnett's husband, heard a comedy album Ms. Parent had made with a college chum, Kenny Solms. Hamilton brought Solms and Ms. Parent to Hollywood to write for "The Carol Burnett Show."

Ms. Parent is of the school that believes comics are made from adversity.

None of the comedy writers she knows "were cheerleaders or football heroes," she said.

"Nobody had a great time in high school...You're not the most beautiful or the most popular. I think you attract people to you by developing a sense of humor. It's a way of getting attention."

The author of the novels, "Sheila Levine Is Dead and Living in New York" and "David Meyer Is a Mother," Ms. Parent noted that with her latest book, she at last is writing about someone who is married.

Ms. Parent is married to a dentist, and they have two sons, ages 19 and 14.

When her children were born, Ms. Parent said she was "horrified" they might lack a sense of humor. She decided to begin early and teach them some of the rudiments of comedy.

"There are rhythms," she said. "It's funny if you say it once. It's not funny if you say it twice. It's funny if you say it three times."

Whether through teaching, environment or genetics, Ms. Parent said her sons came through the Parent School of Humor with flying colors. "They are both the big mouths in class," she reported.

The oldest son is studying to be an electrical engineer and the youngest wants to be an architect. If only they would consider changing their ambitions, Ms. Parent sighs.

"Electrical engineering is a very noble profession," she said. "But I think once he comes to his senses and settles down, he'll really want to become a comedy writer. Why is he doing this to me?"

Yale will salute Cole Porter

NEW YORK (AP) — Yale will salute one of its most famous alumni — Cole Porter, class of '13 — in a Carnegie Hall gala on May 20, 1985.

The concert, entitled "From This Moment On..." will be a benefit for the Yale School of Drama.

Porter was a member of the Dramat, an undergraduate theatrical club, and in 1912, he wrote his first musical for it. Later he went on to write such Broadway blockbusters as "Anything Goes," "Kiss Me, Kate" and "Can-Can."

An Asian lioness awaits dinner at the Knoxville Zoo, which leads the effort to save her breed from extinction. The zoo has 13 of the world's remaining 250 Asian lions.

Zoos will try to send animals back to wild

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dozens of zoos across the country are forming a collective Noah's ark so that thousands of rare animals eventually may be returned to the wild.

The animals, whose habitats have been destroyed by encroaching humans, would become extinct without the zoos' temporary refuge.

"There will be places where certain animals' natural habitats will disappear for long periods of time. That's where the ark analogy is particularly appropriate," said Dr. Thomas J. Foose, conservation coordinator for the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums.

The association is managing 34 "species survival plans," or SSPs, in which highly endangered species are selectively bred to ensure their survival for at least 200 years, when it is estimated that human population will stabilize and the animals' habitats can be restored.

Zoo managers hope that by the end of the century, 1,500 species will ride the "zoo ark," Foose said. His vision is that "virtually all species at zoos will be SSP animals in the next century."

Roughly 5,000 animals in about 100 zoos across the country are part of the species survival program, which started nearly four years ago with a pilot program to save the Siberian tiger.

The Knoxville zoo participated in the effort, and soon led the program to breed Asian lions.

Other zoos — such as the San Diego Zoo, which has 28 of the 34 species in its zoo and Wild Animal Park — joined in the breeding program.

Knoxville's zoo, which has some 750 animals and yearly expenditures of $1.1 million, coordinates the Asian lion program. It has helped make the zoo "one of the more prominent institutions" in the "ark," Foose said.

Sometimes called the Indian lion, the Asian lion is a slightly smaller cousin of the African lion and the most endangered of the big cats. Only 180 Asian lions still exist in the wild, and the only place they are found is on a peninsula in northwest India.

Guy L. Smith III, director of the Knoxville Zoological Park, said that if the program did not exist, "We wouldn't have any Asian lions here or in the wild."

The zoo owns 13 Asian lions of the estimated 250 left in the world — eight of them here and five on loan for breeding at other zoos, Smith said.

Smith's job is to ensure that there isn't too much inbreeding among the animals in the program. Animals that are too closely related often are unhealthy and sometimes won't reproduce, he said.

Breeding records kept at zoos are scrutinized, and Smith keeps a detailed computer printout that shows how inbreeding would affect offspring for each combination of the 149 captive male and female lions in the survival plan.

Smith has made several trips to Europe in an attempt to find Asian lions with bloodlines different from those in the United States.

After two years of negotiating with the East German government, Smith said he was able to get "a very important male" Asian lion to breed with one of three females in Knoxville.

But perhaps Smith's biggest victory has been getting permission from the government of India to bring in three wild male lions. The lions will come to Knoxville at the beginning of the year, he said.

Smith's personal involvement with lions dates back to 1969 when he bought Joshua, an African lion cub which soon became too large for him to keep at home.

Scandal's shadow hangs over town

JORDAN, Minn. (AP) — Townspeople are rallying around the Jordan High School football team this month, and not just because the Hubmen seem headed for a second state championship.

Their games also provide welcome escape from a year spent under the shadow of child sexual abuse allegations that last week twisted grotesquely into reports of murdered children.

Last week, as the Hubmen defeated Montgomery-Lonsdale 31-8 for the conference championship, there was little talk of the scandal that has plagued the town of 2,660 people for the past year.

"You bet we're proud! Sure they'll go all the way" to win the state championship, said Cindy Janssen, a second-grade teacher who was among more than 300 people who traveled 17 miles to Montgomery to cheer the team.

"We've gone to games in the rain and all. It's nice to have this side of the story (about Jordan) told. These kids have really worked hard and they deserve a little recognition," Ms. Janssen said.

The publicity about Jordan, a farming and commuter community about 35 miles southwest of Minneapolis, began in October 1983 with the arrest of James John Rud, a 27-year-old garbage collector who pleaded guilty to 10 counts of first-degree criminal sexual conduct against children. Ninety-eight additional charges were dropped in a plea bargain agreement.

As the investigation continued, 24 other people were arrested and charged in connection with what Scott County authorities believed were two connected child sex abuse rings.

What followed for many townspeople was a year-long nightmare. Scores of children thought to be molestation victims were taken from their parents and placed in foster care; the exact number has never been disclosed. A seemingly endless stream of reporters and television news crews deluged the town to document each lurid development.

Town residents were split: some felt Jordan's problems were caused by an overzealous prosecutor. Others saw the alleged sex abuse as a disease infecting the town.

Jonathan Lee, a hardware store owner in Jordan, said last year when the first arrests were made that the sex abuse charges affected the community "like a cancer."

"The bucket was dumped and we got a helluva black eye," Lee said, "but out of adversity comes strength. They're tough on a community," he said of the charges, "but it's like a cancer. We've got to get it all."

A fan raises a banner as other Jordan, Minn., residents cheer on the Jordan High School football team. There has been a recent sex abuse scandal which has given the community a bad name.

The first trial came last month; Robert and Lois Bentz, charged with sexually abusing their 5-year-old son and four neighbor children, were acquitted, and Scott County Attorney Kathleen Morris, who had led the investigation, withdrew from prosecuting the next case.

Last week, the case took a stunning, unexpected turn when authorities dropped criminal charges against all remaining defendants except Rud.

Ms. Morris said the charges were dropped partly to avoid compromising a separate investigation into allegations by some of the children that they had been used as pornography models — and had seen children murdered.

State and federal agencies have joined the investigation, which authorities say centers around testimony from three children that as many as six children were slain after being forced to pose for pornographic pictures. No children from Jordan have been reported missing.

People in Jordon have grown weary of the negative publicity and the unending investigation. They'd rather concentrate on more wholesome things, like cheering their football team.

"We've had terrific fan support all year long," said Coach Jim Trapp, who has been in the Jordan school system for 10 years. "They're real proud of what we've accomplished and they just enjoy watching the kids play."

But references to the investigation still seeped into the conversation as fans watched Jordon trounce second-place Montgomery-Lonsdale.

One man joined a friend on the sidelines saying he had come to see if the Hubmen — who got their name years back when Jordan was considered the hub of Scott County — "are as good as you say they are."

"It ain't like they say on TV, that's for sure," his friend retorted.

"This is very much like any small town in Minnesota," said athletic director Ken Hanson. "I think we have a good school system and we're close to the metropolitan area, which I think is a plus for the community.

"I've been here 28 years. If I didn't like it I wouldn't be here. But I would sure like to hope the town's image will change."

The sex scandal has not affected school children "to the point where they're not going to perform well in the classroom or on the field," Trapp said. "They discuss it and they're concerned, but I don't think it affects their performance one bit."

The shadow on the town's honor will remain for some time. The child sex abuse charges, while dismissed in criminal proceedings, will be pursued in family court, out of the public eye, and the murder and pornography investigation will continue.

"I think it's going to take awhile for the community to get over this. I don't think it's possible to just push this aside and not think about it or be concerned about it," Trapp said.

"It's been about a year since the whole thing broke. Who knows? Maybe by this time next year we'll be going for our third state football championship and things will be all straightened out.

"But it's not fun," Trapp said.

French sociologist takes rumors seriously

PARIS (AP) — Heard any good rumors lately? Pass them along to Jean-Noel Kapferer.

Not the whispers about your neighbor beating his wife or your boss being eased out, but big rumors — the ones that cause serious financial losses, damage reputations, have widespread racial overtones, or lead to national psychoses.

Kapferer, a 35-year-old professor at the School for Advanced Business Studies, the French equivalent of Harvard Business School, has just established the Foundation for Study and Information about Rumors to check this sort of thing out.

"What I want to do is to start taking rumors seriously," said Kapferer, a sociologist who received his doctorate from Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill. "We want to be a sort of rumor clinic. We want to create a task force for rumors."

The goal of the new foundation, currently made up of four researchers and started with a small grant from the business school, is to study rumors in order to better understand and control them, detect and follow the evolution of rumors, and to alert public opinion to the danger of rumors.

"In spite of what anyone says, people will still believe rumors," Kapferer said in an interview. "Psychologically, people believe that reality is not that which is apparent. That the truth is hidden. People believe more in rumors than in official information."

According to Kapferer, rumors respond to people's need for mystery. "It is the other side of reality."

His first major study, which will be continued by the foundation, is the "rumor of Villejuif" which has raged unchecked since 1976.

Basically, the rumor is that dozens of food additives currently in use in France contain cancer-causing agents. Tracts continue to circulate around the country, citing the name of the famous cancer hospital at Villejuif outside Paris.

Numerous denials by the hospital, medical authorities, government ministries or consumer groups have been unable to lay the rumor to rest.

Kapferer's studies indicate that at least one-third of the households in France have heard the rumor and that 68 percent of those that have heard it believe it, including half of the doctors questioned in a survey.

"Of 100 people who believe a rumor, perhaps 40 percent can be swayed by presenting the facts," the researcher says.

In order for rumors to succeed, there must be an element of believability. For example, there were rumors for weeks this summer that Finance Minister Jacques Delors would leave the government. In July, he did.

The current big rumor in France is that if the right-wing opposition wins the 1986 legislative elections, President Francois Mitterrand, a Socialist, will take former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, a centrist, as his premier.

Kapferer says that stems from the fact that people are tired of the unending struggle between the right and left and would like to believe there will be harmony.

Rumors often revolve around French presidents. Kapferer says those stories usually take three forms — the president is taking payoffs, he is dying, or he has an extraordinary sex life on the side. "The last one is not such a big deal in France."

The only president to have largely escaped the rumor mill was Charles de Gaulle.

"He was such a major figure. He was too credible," Kapferer said.

"The only rumor about de Gaulle was that he was not a general — that he gave his two stars to himself."

The most widespread rumors, however, appear to be those concerning food, a result of a basic fear among people that today's industrially produced food is unsafe — a derivative of the old poisoned well rumor.

Kapferer said the foundation plans to study one or two major rumors a year. He is collecting them now through his "Hello Rumor" telephone line and later will take a nationwide poll asking people what they have been hearing lately.

Solomon

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Non-smoker pens letter of thanks

Dear Dr. Solomon: Somewhere, as I write this, and all beause of you, there are more than 4,000 cigarettes that I have NOT smoked. Visualize about 200 ashtrays each containing 20 smelly old butts — that's what there would be if I had not heard about your smoking cessation program.

I had hypnosis twice and three acupuncture treatments, not to mention all the self-programmed tapering off and cold turkey efforts of the last 42 years.

Since I learned of your treatment from another successful patient whose letter appeared in your column, I would like to share with your readers my own experience.

Since March 24, I have not had more than the mildest occasional urge to smoke and this was easily overcome each time with the use of medication.

Here are just a few of the things no longer a regular part of my life since my visit to you:

Avoiding close personal contact because of unpleasant cigarette breath; worrying two miles from home that I may have left a live cigarette somewhere in the house and set the place on fire; quickly turning the page to avoid reading any new articles or news report linking cigarettes to cancer and other illnesses; getting out of breath at the top of the stairs or after any strenuous physical effort; feeling guilty about my smoking making others miserable but panicky and jittery without the cigarettes; hobnobbing with folks I don't really enjoy simply because they were smokers and wouldn't mind, or missing the enjoyment of fine friends because they were not smokers and I would offend; to name only a few.

I no longer offer to "go get the car" so as to grab a chance for a quick, necessary smoke or make unnecessary trips to the powder room or to the garage or the corner store for the same reason. I don't cringe anymore at the "No Smoking" signs that kept me busy estimating how long it might be before I could light up again. And, best of all, I don't have to function poorly at mental tasks because of the slump that was part of my withdrawal symptoms.

It is impossible to describe the true wonder of the last 140-odd days. My addiction has turned into aversion. I have put a cigarette between my lips and found it impossible to make myself light it. The whole idea of cigarette smoking is repulsive to me, and I know I shall never smoke again. Best of all is the gift of a new, healthy self-respect and a new freedom from that awful and harmful old habit.

May God bless you and give you joy and good health all your days. — Ellen D. Parker, Norfolk, Va.

Dear Mrs. Parker: Thank you for your kind words and I congratulate you on being a non-smoker.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I heard a doctor say that if a person has to get some form of cancer, Hodgkin's disease is the one to get. I suppose he meant by this that it can be treated. My nephew is now being treated for Hodgkin's disease, and I would like to know if there are any statistics that show how many people are cured. — Jody, Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Jody: The results of one study indicate that a combination of drug therapy and radiation therapy produced either complete or partial remission of Hodgkins's disease in all 57 patients in whom it was tried. I would not conclude from this that everyone who gets Hodgkin's disease will be cured. But the results of this study are promising.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My niece has some sort of rash on her arm and her doctor prescribed steroids. The place where she applied the medicine is now lighter in color. It is on a part of her body that is not terribly conspicuous, but it is not normal and I would like to know if this is a permanent condition. — Mrs. T.R., Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. R.: The use of steroids for an extended period of time may result in loss of color from the skin; however, this begins to change within a week or two after treatment with the steroid is discontinued. It may take several weeks before the skin returns to its original color.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was told that I need gallbladder surgery but that the operation is not an emergency and that there is no rush in getting it scheduled. I would have done it already, but I've worried about this AIDS scare. Suppose I need blood during the operation and I get an infection? I'd be worse off than if I left the gallbladder alone. Do you see anything wrong with my line of reasoning? — Dale, Cedar Rapids, Iowa

Dear Dale: According to Dr. Paul R. McCurdy, director of the American Red Cross Blood Services, the risk of getting the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) as the result of a blood transfusion is about one in a million. The question you should ask yourself and that you should discuss with your physician is the risk of postponing your surgery. My guess is that postponing needed surgery carries a greater than a one in one million risk.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband has some bleeding when he goes to the bathroom, but he says there is nothing to worry about because the blood is bright red and that means that it comes from hemorrhoids. Is that true? If it is, I won't say anything more about it. — Mrs. T.U., Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. U.: Bright red bleeding from the rectum is associated with hemorrhoids in most cases. But "most" does not mean "always."

Anyone who bleeds from the rectum should see a physician for an evaluation of the case.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son-in-law has cirrhosis of the liver and I know it is not from drinking. In fact, he hates the stuff. Yet when anyone hears about cirrhosis of the liver, they immediately think of alcohol. Would you please help set these people straight? — Mrs. K.W., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Dear Mrs. W.: Cirrhosis of the liver has many causes, including hepatitis and drug reactions. In children, cirrhosis may be the result of a variety of inherited disorders.

In brief, chronic alchoholism is not the only cause of cirrhosis of the liver.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would appreciate some information on bed-wetting, and when it is primary and when it is secondary. A school nurse tried to explain this to me but I did not understand her. — Mrs. J.J., Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mrs. J.: Enuresis (bed-wetting) is said to be primary if the child never achieved dryness or did so for only brief periods of time. Primary enuresis is suggestive of some delay in the child's development and maturation.

Enuresis is secondary when it occurs following a period of successful toilet training. It suggests some emotional regression, possibly as the result of a traumatic event in the child's life.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My skin gets so dry during the winter months that I constantly seem to be scratching myself. Aside from the annoyance, it can be very embarrassing. I don't know if you discussed this last year, but with the winter coming up, can you give me some idea about what I can do to ease the situation a little? — Ms. W.P., Bloomington, Minn.

Dear Ms. P.: Dr. Stephen B. Webster, of the University of Wisconsin Medical School in Madison, says that winter itch and dry skin can be helped by minimizing water loss from the skin. One method of accomplishing this is to use a humidifier to raise the humidity in the house.

Extended bathing should be avoided since soaking in hot, soapy water washes away protective oils from the skin. Warm water is preferable to hot water, and a shower is preferable to a bath. It is also important to make certain to rinse all of the soap from the body.

For Augie, Brooklyn, N.Y.: If a man experiences erections while he is asleep but not while he is awake, it is likely that his impotence has an emotional basis.

(Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write to Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. He will not give personal replies, but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

AIDS research may take 10 years

By STEPHEN J. SIMURDA
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Researchers may spend "10 or more years" trying to find a cure for AIDS, and heterosexual men and women may eventually be in as much danger of catching the deadly disease as homosexual men currently believed to be most at risk, surgeons say.

A panel of doctors at the 70th annual congress of the American College of Surgeons also said Wednesday that more prudent use of blood transfusions would minimize the risk of AIDS, and that doctors who treat AIDS patients are not in danger of catching the disease.

"For the person with AIDS now, we're no more likely to be able to cure him than we were three years ago," said Dr. Paul A. Volberding of San Francisco General Hospital, a center of AIDS treatment.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome will persist as a "major clinical problem for the next 10 or more years," Volberding said.

The panel's statements coincided with publication of a study in the New England Journal of Medicine that said efforts to rebuild AIDS victims' wrecked immune systems will probably be futile until doctors find a way to kill the virus that causes the disease.

The disease attacks the body's immune system, rendering its victim susceptible to a variety of fatal diseases. It is most common among homosexual or bisexual men, but intravenous drug users, Haitian immigrants and hemophiliacs also have been identified as high-risk groups.

The doctors whose study was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine found they could partially restore a patient's disease-fighting blood cells, but he still died — apparently because the virus attacked the new cells. According to the Centers for Disease Control, more than 6,300 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States since 1981. Nearly three-quarters of the victims are male homosexuals, and experts believe the disease is spread through intimate contact with body fluids, such as blood and semen.

But the surgeons here said recent studies in Africa and Haiti show that the disease is predominant among heterosexual men and women in roughly equal numbers, causing them to question theories about the spread of the disease.

"The suspicion previously has been that it's easier to spread through anal intercourse," said Volberding.

But now, he said, doctors are questioning whether the disease can spread through vaginal intercourse as well, adding that the disease has begun appearing in prostitutes. Men catching it from prostitutes may eventually spread it to heterosexual women.

"I think what matters is how many partners you have and their exposure, not the type of sex you have," Volberding said.

Dr. Charles E. Huggins, director of blood transfusion services at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, said that of the 81 AIDS patients who are believed to have gotten the disease from transfusions, half are women.

Huggins says doctors should avoid blood tranfusions for patients whenever possible. "That's good medicine," he said, adding that the procedure has become routine in many cases where it is not needed.

On another matter, Dr. Donald A. Trunkey of San Francisco General Hospital said that despite the concerns of some doctors, "it's an unreasonable fear that they might get AIDS" from treating a patient with the disease.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved on Wednesday a drug for treating a rare and usually fatal kind of pneumonia that frequently strikes AIDS victims.

The drug, pentamidine, is used to treat Pneumocystis carinii and will be sold under the brand name Pentam 300 by LyphoMed Inc. of Melrose Park., Ill.

Victims of AIDS suffer a breakdown of their immune systems that makes them susceptible to a host of opportunistic diseases, including Pneumocystis carinii.

Pentamidine is administered directly into muscles or veins, ususally in a hospital. Adverse reactions from this potent drug include severe low blood pressure, decrease in blood sugar, irregular heartbeats and kidney impairment.

Key to success may be killing AIDS virus

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — Efforts to rebuild AIDS victims' wrecked immune systems are probably "doomed to failure" unless doctors can find a way to kill the virus that causes the fatal disease, a study published today concludes.

Doctors found they could partially restore a patient's disease-fighting blood cells, but the patient still died — apparently because the virus attacked the new cells.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, destroys a variety of white blood cells called helper T lymphocytes. They form an important link in the body's defense against germs, and researchers at several labs have tried to counteract the disease by somehow stimulating the patient to produce these cells again.

Among the approaches to this have been lymphocyte transfusions, bone marrow transplants and doses of the hormones interferon and interluken-2.

"All of these may be able to do something, but I think that unless we can get at the etiology — namely the virus — we're not going to be successful in curing anyone," said Dr. H. Clifford Lane. "Eliminating or paralyzing the virus is the key to successful therapy, and that's where we should direct our research efforts."

Lane's research, conducted at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The doctors treated a 35-year-old man with AIDS by giving him transfusions of lymphocytes as well as bone marrow from his genetically identical twin.

The therapy at first seemed to be working. After the transplant, the number of his helper cells rose steadily for three months. He also showed an allergic reaction to an injected protein, suggesting that immunity had been transferred from the twin.

But then his helper cell levels began to fluctuate wildly, and 10 months after the marrow transplant, he died with multiple infections.

"You can imagine how excited we were during those few months," Lane said. "Then to see the disease recurring made us think that those additional lymphocytes were being attacked in the same manner" by the AIDS virus.

The research showed that partially restoring natural immunity and replacing the destroyed blood cells cannot reverse AIDS.

"We had a glimmer of the fact that what we did had some major effect on the immune system, and that major effect was inadequate to make the patient better," said Lane.

"I surely don't think we have any major therapeutic breakthroughs on the horizon," said Lane.

Scientists are searching for anti-viral drugs that might be useful against AIDS. One potential candidate is suramin, a medicine used to treat African sleeping sickness. In the test tube, at least, suramin halts the reproduction of HTLV-3, the germ thought to cause AIDS.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, more than 6,300 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States since 1981. Nearly three-quarters of the victims are male homosexuals, and experts believe the disease is spread through intimate contact with body fluids, such as blood and semen.

Drug used to treat AIDS-linked pneumonia

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A drug for treating a rare and usually-fatal kind of pneumonia that frequently strikes victims of AIDS will be available in the United States soon, the Food and Drug Administration says.

The drug, pentamidine, is used to treat Pneumocystis carinii and will be sold under the brand name Pentam 300 by LyphoMed Inc. of Melrose Park., Ill. Its sale was approved by the FDA on Wednesday.

But treating the pneumonia successfully is not the same as curing AIDS — Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Victims of AIDS suffer a breakdown of their immune systems that makes them susceptible to a host of opportunistic diseases. Pneumocystis carinii and a form of cancer known as Kaposi's sarcoma are the most frequent ailments. They may occur alone, together or along with some other illnesses in AIDS patients.

This form of pneumonia is nearly always fatal if left untreated.

Pentamidine is not a new entity. It has been sold by one manufacturer in Europe and the Centers for Disease Control has been making it available upon request as an investigational new drug. Now, general marketing will begin within the next few weeks.

Pentamidine is administered directly into muscles or veins, ususally in a hospital. Adverse reactions from this potent drug include severe low blood pressure, decrease in blood sugar, irregular heartbeats and kidney impairment.

The FDA and the Centers for Disease Control recruited a manufacturer to produce the drug to ensure a continuing supply of it. The recruitment occurred under terms of the Orphan Drug Act of 1983, which provides tax incentives to companies that produce drugs of little commercial value.

Scientists were able to identify AIDS in 1981 in part because of an increase in the number of Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia cases and thus a jump in the number of requests for supplies of pentamidine.

Before AIDS was recognized, it was thought that this form of pneumonia struck patients whose immune systems were compromised, usually cancer patients and premature infants.

As of Oct. 22, there have been 6,447 cases of AIDS in adults in the United States, and 3,006 of the victims or 47 percent have died, according to the government. In addition, there have been 70 reported cases of pediatric AIDS cases, including 49 deaths.

Some 3,469 AIDS victims have contracted pneumocistis carinii and 54 percent of this group — 1,723 persons — have died. There have been 395 cases where AIDS victims contracted both the pneumonia and Kaposi's sarcoma.

The overwhelming number of AIDS cases still occur among homosexual or bisexual men. Some 4,702 of the victims or 78 percent have been male homosexuals or bisexuals.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Police raid ends in shootout

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A police raid on an apartment to arrest two suspects triggered a three-hour shootout in which two officers, both suspects and an unidentified elderly neighbor died.

At the height of the gun battle Wednesday, 150 officers were at the downtown apartment building. In the final assault, police hurled tear gas grenades through windows that had been shattered by gunfire.

Two officers were seriously wounded in the gunfight, which broke out when federal police raided a 10th floor apartment to try to arrest a couple suspected in the abduction and murder of a shopkeeper, police said.

The couple, Jorge Bonica and Elba Carrizo, opened fire on police, the police statement said.

Ex-Gestapo officer acquitted

HEIDELBERG, West Germany (AP) — A former Gestapo officer has been acquitted of charges that he fatally beat a Yugoslav resistance member in 1942. The court ruling said the death may have been caused by an "unfortunate kick."

Clemens Druschke, 68, was accused of whipping and kicking Lavro Azman, treasurer of the Slovenian Resistance Front in 1942. At the time, Druschke was head of the Nazi secret police office in Jesenice, a town in northern Yugoslavia.

Azman died in prison of kidney failure caused by the beating, according to testimony.

Judge Georg Weidner, in delivering the verdict Wednesday, said that while "an unfortunate kick" by Druschke could have caused Azman's fatal kidney injury, Druschke had not intended to kill him. The prosecution had demanded life imprisonment for Druschke.

Mexican criminal dies in prison

IRAPUATO, Mexico (AP) — Maria Gonzalez Valenzuela, one of Mexico's most notorious criminals three decades ago, was found dead in her prison cell, police report.

She had not been seen out of her cell since Sunday, and guards found her body Tuesday.

Miss Gonzalez Valenzuela and her two sisters were members of a gang blamed for the deaths of at least 12 women after forcing them into prostitution.

Miss Gonzalez Valenzuela had been jailed in Guanajuato state since 1968. One of sisters is jailed in Celaya, and the other died 15 years ago. The gang has been a subject for crime novels and films.

People die in bus accident

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — At least 11 people were killed in central Brazil when a bus went out of control and flipped over, police said.

Divino Batista de Paulo, a state police trooper, said in a telephone interview that the bus overturned outside the farming town of Itumbiara, 700 miles northwest of Rio. The cause of the crash was not known.

The bus had been en route from Santo Andre, a southeastern industrial suburb of Sao Paulo, to the resort town of Caldas Novas, 91 miles from Itumbiara.

Peace group member arrested

MOSCOW (AP) — Authorities arrested a member of Moscow's only known unofficial peace group, members of the organization told Western reporters.

The group members said the arrest Wednesday was the third time Nikolai Khramov, 21, has been arrested since he joined the unsanctioned group six months ago. The earlier arrests were in connection with his refusal to be drafted into the Soviet military, said members of The Group to Establish Trust Between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A.

Khramov was arrested in a public square by a militiaman and a plainclothesman and taken away in a car, the group members said. They were unsure what charges were made or how long he would be held.

Book: Space war could lead to war on Earth

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The science fiction image of wars confined to outer space masks the possibility that a war in space could trigger nuclear war on Earth, says a new book by a Swedish research institute.

The book "Countdown to Space War," published today, says there could even be a disaster by accident if enough of the sophisticated space hardware envisioned for military use were put into orbit.

With military forces relying more and more on satellites as their eyes and ears, accidental damage to or the failure of a spy satellite "could, in a crisis situation, lead to war," said Indian space expert Bhupendra Jasani, one of the book's authors.

"The killing of satellites that gather vital military information would make a nuclear holocaust more likely," he said.

Jasani and Christopher Lee, defense correspondent of the British Broadcasting Corp., co-authored the book for the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, where Jasani is a research fellow.

Space weapons and space-war scenarios became a topic of international interest in March 1983 with the "Star Wars" speech by President Reagan. He said he wanted the United States to develop technology to shoot down intercontinental ballistic missiles in flight, thus making them obsolete.

Jasani told a news conference that he and Lee wrote their book in order to spread knowledge of how space is being used today and what is likely to follow in this decade.

He said satellites have many positive applications ranging from weather-forecasting to monitoring peace agreements.

However, he contended that three out of every four satellites have a military application. By using them for command, control, communications and intelligence, he warned, military commanders are nearing a point where they would be "struck deaf, dumb and blind" if the satellites failed.

To avoid disaster, the authors suggested treaties banning testing or possession of antisatellite weapons, along with a declaration that neither side would be the first to use them.

Also, they suggested a mandatory and detailed registration of all spacecraft, and limits on the number of military satellites a country could launch each year.

They urged establishment of an international agency to "use satellites to verify multilateral arms treaties as well as to monitor crisis areas."

19 Business Opportunities

FOR Sale: PotPourri Snackbar. 108 Vaughn Building, $21,000 firm, long-term lease. 682-3942.

To Lease or Not To Lease

Reasons To Lease:

1. Leasing is convenient – you only pay for what you use and not for the full price of the car.
2. There is no used car to dispose of at lease end.
3. Leasing frees your cash and you can use your available bank line of credit for other purposes.
4. Lessee – leasing for business purposes will have the benefit of simplified tax records.

Red Carpet Lease Program

	Monthly Lease Payments	Number of Months	Security Deposit	Cash Due at Lease Inception	Total Mileage Allowed	*Mileage Penalty	Total Payments
Topaz	$178	48	$200	$378 & TT&L	60,000	6¢ mile	$8,544
Lynx	$132	48	$150	$282 & TT&L	60,000	6¢ mile	$6,336

The Red Carpet Lease Program lessee may have the option to purchase the car at lease-end at a price to be negotiated with the dealer at lease inception, however, lessee has no obligation to purchase the car at lease-end. (With approved credit.)

* Mileage Penalty occurs if mileage exceeds 60,000 miles in the 48 month lease period. The penalty is 6¢ per mile.
