County delays decision on buildings purchase

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A decision to buy four downtown buildings was delayed Monday by Gray County commissioners after County Judge Carl Kennedy voted against his own motion to make the purchase.

Commissioners voted 3-2 against buying three buildings across the street from the courthouse and one next to the White Deer Land Museum.

Kennedy said the issue will be placed on the commissioners' Feb. 12 agenda. Commissioners may discuss appointing a citizen committee to study the problem.

About a dozen citizens, most of them opposed to the purchase, were on hand for the decision, which came after about four months of private negotiations and 90 minutes of public discussion Monday.

Commissioners are concerned about having to spend about $3,000 per month to rent office space for the district attorney, probation department and state health nurse.

But Kennedy said Monday that the biggest area of concern is the prospect of building a new jail within the next five years. He said the Texas Jail Standards Commission has told commissioners they will have to build a new jail when Sheriff Rufe Jordan leaves office.

Simmons

Arrington

Were it not for that decree, he said, commissioners wouldn't be considering any land purchases.

The buildings under consideration are:

- the former Federal Land Bank building, 115 W. Francis Ave., appraised at $31,000 and offered to the county for $45,000;
- attorney Rick Harris' office, 216 N. Russell St., appraised at $15,000 and offered to the county for $110,000;
- the Corral Century 21 real estate office, 125 W. Francis Ave., and the former Car Clinic building, 124 S. Cuyler St., owned by developer Gail Sanders, appraised at $42,000 and offered to the county for $160,000.

Total cost of the purchase was to have been $315,000, but Judge Kennedy said commissioners were looking into the possibility of the M.K. Brown Foundation footing $100,000 for the building next to the museum.

Kennedy said future plans for the lots across from the courthouse may include tearing down the three buildings and constructing a jail and additional office space.

The county would use a surplus fund of about $4 million left over from the sale of Highland General Hospital for the purchases and possible construction, Kennedy said.

Most of those opposed to the purchase said commissioners should reconsider buying the original Hughes Building at Somerville Street and Kingsmill Avenue, which has been offered to the county for $840,000, about $10 per square foot.

Bill Arrington, president of Pampa Properties Corp., owner of the Hughes Building, said commissioners could spend twice the money for half the space of the Hughes Building if they decide to erect a new building across from the courthouse. With the Hughes Building, he said, commissioners could rent the additional space.

Arrington said he also envisions putting the school district and appraisal district offices under one roof with the county at a savings to taxpayers.

"It just doesn't appear to me that there's been enough long-term planning," Arrington said. "You just haven't done your homework, and I would urge you to table this until you go ahead and get it done."

Judge Kennedy responded that the county shouldn't be in the rental property business.

Support for the Hughes Building on the court was led by Commissioner Ted Simmons, who provided figures showing the county would spend about $1.4 million more to buy the lots near the courthouse and construct a jail than to refurbish the Hughes Building.

"My feeling, my heart's in that Hughes Building, and I think it's the best buy for the county," Simmons said. "Looking at the year 2000, I think we'll have that thing full."

'Teen court' proposal tabled for more study

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A proposal to establish a countywide "teen court" was tabled for further study Monday by Gray County commissioners.

Commissioners told Justice of the Peace Wayne Roberts to meet with County Judge Carl Kennedy about the proposal to make sure the county doesn't get into legal trouble if the teen court is adopted.

Under Roberts' proposal, teen-agers accused of minor offenses would go before a jury consisting of other teen-agers, who would set punishment for the juvenile offender. Roberts said juveniles would be referred to the teen court by either the municipal judge or county magistrates.

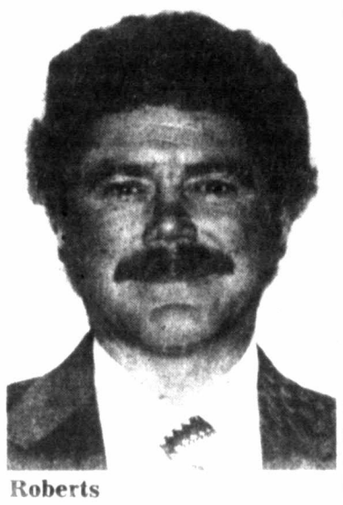

The proposal is based on teen courts set up in Plainview and Midland, Robert said. He said he hopes to hold the first teen court by the end of the month.

Commissioners were generally favorable toward the proposal. Commissioner Ted Simmons said he likes the concept, but wants to be sure of the legalities involved.

Those who would be involved with the teen court also reacted favorably to it Monday.

Pampa Municipal Judge Pat Lee said teen-agers who appear before her are often unemployed, meaning their parents usually pay their fines. Under the teen court, she said, teens would be punished by others their own age and would receive realistic, workable punishments.

She also said the court provides an opportunity for young offenders to clear their records if they successfully complete the teen court sentence.

Roberts

Pampa High School Principal Oran Chappell called the teen court positive and educational.

"I think it's a great idea," Chappell said.

In other action Monday, commissioners:

- approved the annual office space lease with the Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service at the Gray County annex for about $10,000 annually, the same amount as last year;
- voted not to sell a used sweeper at Perry Lefors Airport, and tabled a request to change a ground lease for space under a hangar owned by Bill Arrington and rented by Ronnie Poole from private to commercial use;
- appointed Suzanne Lane of Pampa to the Mental Health and Mental Retardation local committee; and
- allowed Roberts' secretary to attend a seminar in May.

Branscum appeal argued in Amarillo

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

AMARILLO - The attorney for a former Pampa man convicted last year of killing his wife 23 years ago said today the case should be dismissed because authorities never intended to prosecute until the woman's family threatened them last year.

Arguing before the 7th Court of Appeals in Amarillo, John Mann, attorney for Albert Branscum, 57, said the state was "worst than negligent" in not prosecuting the case.

"They never intended to prosecute; the facts lead us to that conclusion," Mann said. "There was simply never any effort on the part of the state to follow through with prosecution."

Mann noted that after Branscum was originally indicted in 1964, he was never arraigned and never appointed a counselor. Mann said the state planned for Branscum to "go home to Oklahoma and die or remain a vegetable."

Mann blamed Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan and then-District Attorney Bill Waters for intentionally allowing the case to languish.

Mann also argued that the delay prevented Branscum from the possibility of using an insanity defense in the shooting.

"Had I been defending the case in 1964 ... one of the first things as a defense lawyer that I would have wanted would be a psychiatric evaluation. Mr. Branscum was deprived of that," he said. "He was never given the opportunity to find out what the testimony would have been with regard to his defense of insanity."

Mann said Branscum has suffered stress and anxiety while waiting more than two decades for his case to come to trial.

"There's simply nothing fair or right about bringing a man to trial 22 years after the occurrence," Mann added.

Comer

Mann

Assistant District Attorney Harold Comer argued that the state did not deliberately prolong the case for any advantage.

He said the state was laboring under the "mistaken but innocent impression" that Branscum was left a "mental vegetable" by a suicide attempt immediately following his wife's death.

Comer admitted the state was negligent in not making more diligent efforts to determine Branscum's mental and physical

Board OKs 3.9 percent auto rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Insurance has approved a statewide average 3.9 percent auto rate increase, but it has not yet announced specific increases for the state's 52 rating territories.

Gaylon Daniel, the board's actuary, said Monday that drivers in many of the territories will see rate decreases despite the overall statewide increase of $134 million.

The board voted 3-0 Monday for the 3.9 percent increase. Its staff had recommended a 2 percent average statewide increase that would have added $68 million a year to premiums.

The insurance industry, citing increased medical costs as a result of auto wrecks, asked for a 10 percent, or $344 million, increase.

Lee Jones, board spokesman, said specific rates for the 52 rating territories should be available later today. The new rates go into effect May 1.

The rates vary by territory, type of vehicle and coverage, and driver history. Insurance companies also are allowed to sell auto coverage at reduced rates.

According to the board, about 67 percent of the policies now in effect were written at a discount below the board-approved rates.

The average discount is approximately 12 percent.

Under the 2 percent increase, drivers in 40 of the 52 rating territories would have seen decreases in their auto rates, according to Daniel.

"I'm hopeful that even with the decision (Monday) we still will get a lot of reductions on the typical car and the typical driver," Daniel said.

Rick Gentry, manager of the Insurance Information Institute in Austin, said the 3.9 percent increase was welcomed by the industry, although it had sought more.

"Obviously we have to have adequate rates in this state if we are going to attract and maintain the capital necessary for us to provide the insurance product to the Texas consumer," Gentry said.

The change from the staff-proposed 2 percent increase resulted from the board's decision on the limit the industry can claim for increases in any single component of their expenses.

The 33 percent cap recommended by the industry was approved by board members David Thornberry, James Nelson and Edwin Smith. The board staff had recommended a 25 percent limit.

The board decision in the rate case was rapped by several consumer groups that last week asked that the decision be postponed until Gov. Bill Clements appoints a public counsel to represent ratepayers in insurance rate cases.

The 1987 Legislature created the post, but Clements has not named an appointee.

"It is absolutely outrageous that consumers of this state should have to pay higher rates when there was no public counsel to represent them in the process," said Carol Barger, Southwest director for Consumers Union.

Pampa Credit Union merger adds new services to branch

Pampa Federal Credit Union began its operations Monday as a branch of Amarillo Federal Credit Union in a merger plan recommended and approved by the National Credit Union Administration.

Charlene Morriss, manager-treasurer of the Pampa branch, will continue as manager of the Pampa FCU branch.

She said the Pampa branch will expand its services to provide lending opportunities and new services never before offered to the Pampa members.

The Pampa branch will offer checking accounts, Pulse Automatic Teller Cards, Individual Retirement Accounts, MasterCard and certificates of deposits, all services that were not previously provided by Pampa Federal, Morriss said.

All previous services currently available will continue, she added.

The merger will allow Pampa members to earn higher yields on savings and pay less on loans than in the past, Morriss added.

Morriss explained that the merger will help strengthen the Pampa economy by making loans to Pampa residents who are or become members.

Margaret Arnold, vice chairman of the board of directors at Amarillo Federal, said, "We are looking forward to joining with our friends in Pampa through this merger. It will enable them to utilize services they may not have had before."

The merger will extend the Pampa office's lending ceiling to $75,000 and reduce interest rates on new cars to 10.5 percent, increasing the availability of automobile loans to Pampa members, according to Amarillo FCU officials.

The merger, proposed by the National Credit Union Association after the Pampa unit had exhausted its lending reserve, was effective on Jan. 1, with the Pampa office beginning its operation as a branch of Amarillo Federal on Feb. 1.

In statements released in Amarillo, Bert O'Neall, Amarillo Federal president, said the Pampa credit union would have ulti-

From Staff and Wire Reports

It's winter again.

After a weekend of early spring-like warmth, Pampa area residents found themselves bitten by a cold snap Monday as temperatures dropped below freezing, with sleet and freezing rain chilling their noses and fingers.

Temperatures today showed little promise of awaited spring, with highs forecast no higher than the mid-20s. Lows tonight are expected in the mid-teens.

The freezing temperatures and light drizzle laid just enough ice on city streets to prompt city of Pampa road crews to sprinkle sand at intersections. A spokesman for the Pampa Street Department confirmed that workers and sand trucks were out early this morning. He added that so far streets have not been bladed.

Slightly warmer temperatures are expected Wednesday with the highs in the mid-30s and lows in the teens. A chance of freezing drizzle is expected tonight.

Freezing drizzle and light snow fell across the South Plains from Lubbock to Midland, and freezing drizzle was reported across other portions of Northwest Texas as winter returned to Texas.

A slow-moving cold front was located at dawn today along a line from Texarkana to Austin westward to between Midland and El Paso. The front was easy to locate based on early morning temperatures. It was 44 at 5 a.m. in Austin and 66 at the same time in San Antonio.

Forecasts called for cloudy and cold conditions to prevail across the state through Wednesday. Scattered showers are possible statewide through tonight, but the freezing precipitation was expected to be limited to Northwest Texas, the South Plains and western portions of North Texas.

Lows tonight will be in the upper teens in the Panhandle and in the 20s and 30s over the rest of West Texas, the 20s and 30s over North Texas and in the 30s in the Hill Country and the 40s and 50s over the rest of South Texas.

Highs Wednesday will be in the 30s in the Panhandle.

DALE EVERSON

Dale Everson, 57, died Monday. Services are to be at 10:30 a.m., Thursday, in Carmichael-Whatley Colonial Chapel with the Rev. R. G. Tyler, pastor of the Calvary Assembly of God, officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Mr. Everson was born Jan. 11, 1931, at Crowell. He moved to Pampa in 1948 and married Nancy Kelley on March 4, 1949, at Crowell. A member of Calvary Assembly of God, he retired from Energas Company in March 1987.

Survivors include his wife of the home; two daughters, Malena Baten and Delpha Cates, both of Pampa; one son, Kelly Everson of Pampa; one sister, Lois Boren of Crowell; two brothers, Dayton Everson of Crowell and Gene Everson of San Diego, Calif., and eight grandchildren.

JOHN (LUKE) SAVAGE

Services for John (Luke) Savage, 82, are pending with Carmichael-Whatley Funeral Directors. Mr. Savage died Monday.

A longtime Pampan, Mr. Savage moved here in 1938 from Swearington. He married Katherine (Kat) Sears on Dec. 25, 1932 in Altus, Okla. He was a member of First Christian Church and was once a cowboy for the Matador Ranch. He was a member of Masonic Lodge #966 AF&AM and the El Paso Scottish Rite Consistory. Mr. Savage was employed for Allen Service for 16 years and was a pumper for Henry Urbanczyk for seven years before retiring in 1976. He and his wife Kat had recently celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary.

Survivors include his wife of the home; one daughter, Boyce Carter of Dumas; one sister, Bertie Hopper of Wichita, Kan.; three grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

The family requests memorials to be made to the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's Hospital in Dallas, the Shrine Burn Institute in Galveston or to the American Heart Association.

LUCILLE GLASS

MANY, La. - Funeral services for former McLean resident, Lucille Glass, 51, of Vernon, are to be at 10 a.m. Wednesday at Full Gospel Church of Hornbeck, La., with the Rev. Purvis Chance officiating. Burial will follow in Oxley Cemetery in Fisher, La.

Born in Louisiana, Mrs. Glass married Joe Glass in Amarillo. She moved to Vernon seven months ago from McLean. She was a member of the Church of Christ.

Mrs. Glass is survived by two daughters, one son, four brothers, three sisters, her mother and three grandsons.

County

Commissioners Jim Greene and O.L. Presley disagreed. Presley said he doesn't want to overspend for something the county won't need for several years, and neither do taxpayers.

"We had better listen to them," he said. "They're the ones that are going to pay for it."

Commissioner Gerald Wright said the county can't please everyone, and added that, after spending hours looking at various options, commissioners had agreed to make a unanimous decision.

He told Simmons the last thing the county needs is grandstanding by a commissioner.

"I'm not (grandstanding)," Simmons replied. "I just told you my position on the thing."

In the end, Kennedy moved to make the purchase, then joined Wright and Simmons in voting against the motion. The judge said his vote was based on commissioners' previous decision to make any vote unanimous.

Commissioner Greene said he opposes a suggestion by Gray County Republican Chairwoman Susan Tripplehorn to let a citizen committee study the feasability of buying either the corner offices or the Hughes Building.

"We're kind of a committee," Greene said of the commissioners, "and we've studied it ... since September."

In a related matter, commissioners tabled action on whether to approve a Gray County Appraisal District request to purchase the building it currently leases at 815 N. Sumner St. If the Hughes Building is purchased, commissioners may ask the appraisal district to move back to the facility.

The appraisal district must have the approval of at least eight of its 10 supporting taxing entities for the purchase to go through.

Morrison in serious condition

AMARILLO — Roberts County Commissioner Don Morrison was listed in serious condition this morning at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo, where he is being treated for back injuries stemming from a one-car rollover Monday.

According to a report submitted by Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Danny Pierce, Morrison, 58, of rural Pampa, was crossing the cattle guard at his ranch about six miles north of Pampa early Monday morning.

The 1984 Jeep Wagoneer he was driving reportedly got one of its tires stuck in the guard, causing the Jeep to roll over one and a half times.

DPS troopers responded to the call at about 6 a.m. Monday.

Morrison was taken to Coronado Hospital in Pampa, then to Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo for treatment of back injuries.

Morrison, a rancher in southwest Roberts County, was elected Precinct 3 County Commissioner in 1984. A Republican, Morrison is unopposed in his bid for re-election to his position.

8 die in trailer fire in Silverton

SILVERTON (AP) — Eight people, including six children, died this morning when a butane heater blew up and their trailer home caught fire in the southern Texas Panhandle, officials said.

Briscoe County Sheriff Dick Roehr said four others escaped the blaze.

The victims included a 25-year-old mother and five of her children, her 25-year-old sister-in-law and the woman's daughter. The children ranged in age from 5 months to 7 years.

The women's husbands escaped the fire and rescued two children, Roehr said.

"They (the fathers) indicated the thing just blew and that was it," Roehr said. "They didn't know what was going on. It just happened and it was all in flames before they realized what was going on."

"We're convinced it was purely an accident," Roehr said. "I suppose we'll make more inquiries to be absolutely certain."

A spokesman for the Silverton Volunteer Fire Department said firefighters responded to the blaze about seven miles south of Silverton shortly after midnight, but found the trailer engulfed in flames when they arrived.

Roehr said Fracisco Palacio, 28, and Samuel Davila, 28, escaped from the fire with two of Davila's children and went to a nearby ranch home, where Palacio works as a foreman, and phoned for help.

The two men and the children, Samuel Davila Jr., 6, and Isma Davila, 4, were treated for smoke inhalation at Swisher Memorial Hospital in Tulia, where they were in stable condition this morning.

Roehr identified the dead as Odilia Palicio, 25, and her children, Francisco, 7, Janet, 6, Cynthia, 4, Daisy, 2, Reynaldo, 5 months; Patricia Davila, 25; and her daughter, Nancy, 3.

Gunmen hold students hostage

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Two gunmen wearing ski masks invaded a private Christian school today and took a teacher and about 60 children hostage, authorities said.

The two men entered the school around 8:40 a.m., seized the teacher and a class of grade school students and demanded to see Mayor Al DuPont, according to Wyatt Rhone, assistant headmaster at West End Christian School.

Police Chief Jerry Fuller and Assistant Chief Ken Swindel were seen outside a door attempting to talk the two gunmen into surrendering. The lawmen could be seen opening and closing the door as they talked, witnesses said.

The Tuscaloosa News reported that the mayor, wearing a bullet-proof vest, was also at the school.

Police spokesman David Hartin said about 60 children were taken hostage.

No further information was available about the captors' specific demands, and it was not immediately known which teacher was taken hostage.

Merger

mately failed had the NCUA not approached Amarillo Federal on the merging of the two units.

O'Neall said the NCUA had seen that the merger would be beneficial and had actually proposed the merger.

The merger will increase the lending capacity for Pampa Federal, O'Neall said, adding that Amarillo Federal will put more money into Pampa.

Pampa Federal entered the merger with 424 members and $309,000 in assets. Amarillo Federal has 20,300 members and more than $41 million in assets.

O'Neall did not reveal any plans for expansion of the Pampa office but said Amarillo Federal expects to use Pampa's resources and to increase membership in the Pampa branch to 15,000 within 10 years. He added that goals are high for the Pampa area.

The Pampa branch will be open to residents of Pampa who live within a 5-mile radius of the city and who are not members of another credit union.

John Horst, former chairman of the board for Pampa Federal, said the immediate impact of the merger will be the increase in services available to the Pampa area members.

Horst said Amarillo Federal has a strong interest in new car loans, adding that may stimulate sales of automobiles in the Pampa area.

Melinda Hunter, marketing director for Amarillo Federal, said the capability for growth in the Pampa area is large. She said the merger will be followed by a campaign to promote the credit union and the community.

Amarillo Federal covers 165 employee groups, with membership restricted to member companies, their employees and families.

condition. Comer also said that Branscum had failed to assert his right to a speedy trial.

"He can't just sit back," Comer said. "He has some duty to protect himself."

The prosecutor said that Mann presented no evidence of insanity or of anxiety over the case. He said Branscum has never been incarcerated for the murder. "He's been allowed to go about his business in Konawa, Okla., where his family lives," Comer said.

Following the hearing Mann said he felt "pretty good" about the court's pending decision, expected in several months.

"I hope they see it for what it is — a trial that came about in the heat of political pressure seized upon by (former prosecutor) David Hamilton," he said.

Later he told Branscum: "I hope these people are decent enough to give us an answer pretty quick, regardless of what that answer is."

Prosecutor Comer said he thought the case could go either way.

Branscum was accompanied to the courtroom by several of his children and other relatives. Also seated on the opposite side of the courtroom were several of Mrs. Branscum's relatives, including several of her children that have not sided with their father.

Mrs. Branscum's brother, Jerry Hollon of Amarillo, was confident about the judges' decision. "I think they'll go for us," Hollon said.

Last March, Branscum now of Konawa, Okla., was convicted by a Gray County jury of murdering his wife "with malice aforethought" in October 1964 at his Farley Street home, just outside Pampa. He was sentenced to five years in prison.

Mann gave immediate notice of appeal, vowing to fight the case "all the way to Washington, D.C."

223rd District Judge Don Cain allowed Branscum to remain free pending appeal. Branscum returned to Konawa, where he runs a tiny salvage lot.

The jury ruled that Branscum had fired three shots at his wife, Glenna, at 1242 Farley St. before turning the gun on himself. Authorities — including Jordan and Waters — believed the suicide attempt had left Branscum a "mental vegetable" incapable of standing trial, but testimony last year indicated that Branscum was never mentally incompetent.

The original murder charge against Branscum was dismissed by 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhany in 1972 for lack of prosecution by the state. The district attorney's office re-indicted him in 1986 when, after acting on a tip from Glenna Branscum's family, investigators found him operating a small salvage business in Konawa.

7 injured in crash of Greyhound bus

LAS ANIMAS, Colo. (AP) — Seven of the eight people aboard a Greyhound bus were injured late Monday when the bus spun on icy U.S. Highway 50 east of here and rolled onto its side, the Colorado Highway Patrol reported.

The eastbound bus driven by Clinton Eugene Allison, 59, of Grand Junction, went out of control seven miles east of this southeastern Colorado town, crossed both lanes of the highway then slid backward into the barrow pit and tipped onto its right side, said patrolman Nate Valdez.

Inmates denied parole getting second look, officials say

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Board of Pardons and Paroles is running out of short-term, non-violent offenders to release to relieve the overcrowding crisis in Texas prisons, authorities say.

The situation has forced officials to take another look at nearly 4,000 inmates who have recently been denied parole, officials say.

The panel is also considering other measures, including possible release of more convicts directly from county jails, an increase in electronic monitoring of risky parolees, an increase in the number of facilities for inmates who are within six months of release, and an expansion of the number of halfway houses for parolees, officials say.

"The reality of lack of capacity in the penitentiary system means that to abide by the federal court order, for every inmate admitted to the system, one must be released," Rider Scott, the governor's general counsel and corrections expert, told the Dallas Times Herald Monday.

"This has placed an increasing burden on the Board of Pardons and Paroles to find individuals who would be the least threatening to society when released," he said.

State officials devised a plan that limits admissions to the Texas Department of Corrections to 150 inmates per day and requires the parole board to release the same number each day. This allows the TDC to stay within court-ordered population guidelines and avoid repeated closings of the prison system to new admissions.

The number of non-violent prisoners eligible for release has steadily declined since the plan was put in place, forcing the parole board to both re-examine those denied earlier for parole and expand its other programs to house and supervise offenders.

Chris Mealy, vice chairman of the parole board, said Monday the panel was attempting to "build in safeguards" to ensure that public safety is not jeopardized by the release of prisoners who would not have been freed a year ago.

"Compromising public safety is the uppermost concern among the board members in setting any kind of release policy," Mealy said.

Before the overcrowding crisis, the parole board normally reviewed inmates again a year after they were denied parole. Now, the panel has begun re-examining potential parolees more frequently.

"That is taking place to supplement our regular caseload," Mealy said.

Although all of those undergoing a second consideration are legally eligible for parole, they were denied release on previous reviews for several reasons, including the severity of their crimes and their behavior while in prison.

The board is also stepping up a program in which prisoners are paroled directly from county jails.

As a result of overcrowding in TDC, there is a backlog of prisoners awaiting transfer from local jails to the prison system and some inmates are eligible for parole by the time they arrive at TDC.

By releasing inmates from jail, the parole board helps the prison system by diverting some offenders from TDC and aids sheriffs by reducing the amount of time they are required to keep some offenders.

Woman judge joins court

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Midland Judge Barbara Culver, described by a woman colleague as a role model who thinks for herself, has been sworn in as the second Republican in this century on the Texas Supreme Court.

Ms. Culver, 61, said Monday after her swearing-in that protecting and defending the Constitution and laws of the United States and Texas "will be my way of life and daily goal."

She was administered the oath of office by outgoing Justice Robert Campbell, whose resignation led to Ms. Culver's appointment.

Gov. Bill Clements, who appointed Ms. Culver, sat on the front row in the Supreme Court chamber. The chamber seats about 100 but held at least three times that many in a standing room-only crowd for the swearing-in.

Campbell, 52, had resigned a term that extended to 1992, saying he needed freedom to campaign for retaining an elected jusicial system.

Ms. Culver joins Chief Justice Tom Phillips, another Clements appointee, as the second Republican on the nine-member court. Phillips succeeds former Chief Justice John Hill, who also resigned.

Houston State District Judge Ruby Sondock, who previously served on the Supreme Court justice as a Clements' appointee, introduced Ms. Culver. Except for a brief period in the mid-1920s, they are the only women to serve on the high court.

Ms. Sondock described Justice Culver as "one who proved she is an independent thinker in the true Texas tradition. She is a trailblazer and role model for many, many young women.

"She comes to this court on the silver anniversary of her first appointment to the bench. She has paid her dues."

Ms. Culver's two sons assisted her in donning her robe. She noted that her husband, father and uncle, all deceased, were lawyers.

She was elected county judge in Midland in 1962, becoming the first women Republican elected judge in Texas. She was appointed to fill a vacancy as state district judge in Midland in March 1978, and ran unopposed for that court in 1978, 1982 and 1986.

She has filed as a GOP candidate for the Supreme Court in the March 8 primary. Her Democrat opponent in November will be former congressman Jack Hightower.

"All of the honored justices on this court must know how inept I feel as I assume my duties," she said. "Beginning a new job is always a challenge — only this is definitely more so."

Campbell said he would practice law in Daingerfield with Harold Nix, a former law school classmate at Baylor, as well as assisting other lawyers around Texas — "sort of a have briefcase, will travel sort of thing."

Judge rules evidence can't be used against singer-actress

AMARILLO (AP) — A judge has ruled that two ounces of marijuana found in the purse of singer-actress Michelle Phillips can't be used as evidence against her.

Potter County Court at Law Judge Morris Overstreet ruled Monday that Texas Department of Safety troopers didn't have a right to search Phillips' purse after the car she was riding in was stopped for going 70 mph in a 65 mph zone.

Phillips, who is most widely recognized for her role on "Knots Landing" and for her part in the 1960s singing group The Mamas and the Papas, told the Amarillo Globe-News she was pleased with the ruling.

"I'm just very grateful we were able to find an attorney whose basic purpose was to show that the law had not been upheld and my right to privacy had been ignored," Phillips said.

The ruling means Phillips will not have to go to trial next week for possession of less than two ounces of marijuana, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum sentence of a $1,000 fine and up to six months in jail.

Troopers Wayne Williams and Michael Moser arrested Phillips, 43, and her boyfriend, Geoffrey Tozer when the two were about two miles west of Amarillo on Interstate 40.

The stop started out as routine, according to the two officers. But when Williams saw what he said was a marijuana seed on the floorboard of the car, it turned into something more.

Tozer gave written consent for the officers to search the car. Williams said he overheard Tozer tell Phillips they were going to search, and right after that he said he saw her put something in her purse.

"Something went off in my head that said something's not right," Williams said, "I told her I needed to look into her purse to check for weapons and contraband."

When he checked, he said he found a plastic bag of marijuana.

Phillips was arrested and later charged with a misdemeanor, but Tozer was never charged.

Overstreet said that the seed, Phillips' gesture and Tozer's consent weren't enough to allow the search.

Jeff Blackburn, Phillips' attorney, agreed.

"People have integrity and privacy rights," he said, "They can't consent away people's privacy."

Blackburn argued that Williams was not able to tell that the seed was a marijuana seed or something he recognized as illegal.

To prove his point, he brought out five carpet samples similar to the color in the car they were driving with 14 different samples, ranging from spinach seeds to pebbles, newsprint and marijuana.

Williams was unable to correctly identify the marijuana seeds and the ones he did identify as marijuana were something else.

But Assistant County Attorney David Kemp said the time Williams' accuracy counted was when he pulled Tozer's car over.

"The best argument to the experiment is that he did it," Kemp said during his closing argument. "He said that's a marijuana seed and it turned out to be a marijuana seed."

But the seed was never tested because of restrictions in testing seeds and it wasn't brought to court.

Kemp indicated he may appeal the judge's ruling.

Agencies beginning industry checks for radiation leaks

DALLAS (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has ordered 3M Corp. to suspend distribution of a device blamed for leaking radioactive particles and health officials are inspecting some Texas factories that use the device.

The NRC ordered 3M to suspend distribution of its air-gun ionizers last week after reports of leaking polonium-210, a naturally occurring radioactive isotope of polonium, at plants in Dallas and Easton, Pa., said Joe Gilliland, a spokesman for the NRC in Arlington.

Polonium leaks were later discovered at a plant in Carrollton and at three sites in California.

"The NRC's concern is that, while this doesn't appear to be a great health hazard to workers or to the public, it does represent radiation that has gotten out of control," Gilliland said.

The air guns use polonium-210 to produce small amounts of radiation to neutralize static electricity charges and remove small particles of dust in applications where a high degree of purity is needed. The polonium is encapsulated in tiny ceramic spheres which are chemically bonded to the device.

Bob Free, an investigator for the Texas Bureau of Radiation Control, said the 12 Texas sites are being checked to determine if widespread inspections or a product action are necessary. He would not identify the plants being checked.

"We're concerned primarily with industries that are making containers for products that are ingested," Free said. "That's the thrust of this first effort."

Polonium-210 is dangerous when taken internally, such as through inhalation or ingestion, but not externally, officials say.

A 3M spokesman in Austin, Ted Pickens, said the microscopic ceramic spheres 3M uses to encapsulate the polonium are too heavy to be inhaled and pass through the body when ingested because they cannot be absorbed.

3M is also testing ionizers at various industrial locations across the country, Pickens said.

He said approximately 20,000 air gun ionizers are in use by several thousand companies.

"What we've put together is a testing program to go to a variety of customer applications and find out under what circumstances there is a problem and to quantify that these (leak) incidents are isolated situations," Pickens said.

The first Texas leak was found at an Ashland Chemical Co. plant in Dallas on Jan. 23, Gilliland said.

Regulators inspected that plant after a polonium leak was discovered at an Ashland plant in Easton, he said.

Ashland's Dallas plant tested 37 workers for contamination, but the initial tests proved negative, said Richard Ratliff, director of the compliance and inspection program for the Texas Bureau of Radiation Control.

Tests were ordered for seven workers at KTI Chemicals Inc. in Carrollton following the detection of polonium near ionizers at that plant last week.

Radiation levels at the Ashland and KTI plants were lower than levels of some medical X-ray procedures, Ratliff said.

"Still, the device does have the nuclear element," Pickens said. "We want the device to work as its supposed to work."

The three California firms where polonium leakage was found included a Xicor semiconductor plant in Milpitas and another KTI Chemicals plant in Sunnyvale. Officials did not identify the third plant.

Bond set at $1 million for teen charged with killing grandparents

BONHAM (AP) — A 17-year-old high school senior, charged in the shooting deaths of his grandparents, was being held in the Fannin County Jail on $1 million bond.

Thomas James Slusher was arraigned Monday in Bonham by Justice of the Peace Don Jones, and charged with two counts of murder.

The Rev. Charles Slusher, 63, and his wife Sudie, 64, were found by a church member Wednesday in the Bonham First Church of the Nazarene.

Preliminary autopsy results indicate that Mrs. Slusher was shot in the head, chest, and shoulder with a .357-caliber Magnum pistol. Her husband appeared to have been shot at least twice with the same gun.

The teen-ager was arrested Thursday by U.S Customs officials at the Mexican border in Del Rio. Jailer Jim Robinson said the teen had taken his grandmother's car.

Slusher gave a statement to police about the shooting, but Fannin County officials would not disclose details.

The teen-ager had lived with the couple since his parent's divorce about three years ago. He was to graduate from Bonham High School in May.

Principal Nolin Ashmore described Slusher as an average student with no record of disciplinary problems.

More college students pursuing liberal arts degrees, dean says

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Rapid growth at Texas A&M's College of Liberal Arts dispels the myth that the field is a useless pursuit, says dean Daniel Fallon.

"CEOs really need liberal arts students and that message is getting out. I'm encouraged by it," said Fallon, liberal arts dean.

"There is no contradiction between material success and spiritual growth. What liberal arts students develop are problem solving abilities, an understanding of human values and a set of skills that equips them well to adapt successfully to changing circumstances. They are life-long learners who enjoy challenge."

Texas A&M's College of Liberal Arts has swelled by 139 percent since 1982, the school announced Monday. In contrast, Texas A&M's College of Business Administration has grown only 18 percent.

Fallon said the 1970s myth of liberal arts being a "fuzzy and meaningless field" is just as wrong a decade later.

"I think students are increasingly discovering the vast opportunities open to liberal arts majors and that's why we have this phenomenal increase in enrollment," Fallon said.

More students than ever want to become wealthy in business careers, a national survey of college freshmen recently revealed.

The survey done by the American Council on Education and UCLA found that 24.6 percent of freshmen — more than double the total 20 years ago — wanted rewarding careers in business. A record 75.6 percent of freshmen said that "being very well off financially" was one of their top goals, compared with 39.1 percent in 1970.

At Texas A&M, students majoring in liberal arts departments such as economics have grown by 278 percent, sociology by 196 percent, modern languages by 157 percent and philosophy by 148 percent.

Students who succeed most spectacularly in business are those with majors in liberal arts, statistics show. More than half of Forbes magazine's roster of 774 chief executives were liberal arts majors, Fallon said.

The most common undergraduate degree among U.S. senators is in liberal arts, he said.

Research on liberal arts graduates has revealed that two to five years after graduation, they are earning good salaries, many are in challenging and influential positions, and about half are in jobs they never planned on holding or often hadn't heard of when they graduated.

High school probe brings 22 arrests

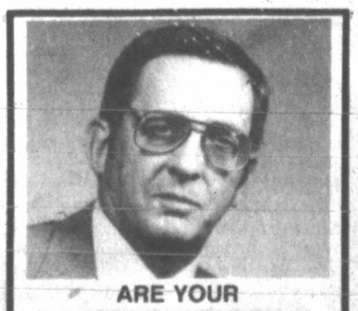

ROUND ROCK (AP) — Twenty-two people faced drug charges today after a four-month investigation in which an undercover police officer posed as a student at Round Rock's Westwood High School, authorities said.

Williamson County Attorney Ken Anderson said drugs purchased by the female undercover officer included cocaine, methamphetamine, marijuana and 275 tablets of LSD.

"I feel we did a good job of shutting down a large source of LSD to Westwood and probably other high schools," Anderson said.

Officers began making their first arrests Monday morning. At 10 a.m., several squad cars arrived at the high school. Sheriff's deputies entered classrooms and arrested three students.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Perhaps DOE can stay out of school

When Ronald Reagan stormed into Washington seven years ago, he promised to eliminate the Departments of Energy and Education. But both are still thriving, and Reagan just backed the creation of yet another federal department, for veterans' affairs.

Last month his administration proposed an increase in the Department of Education's budget to a record $21 billion. When Reagan came to office many moons ago, Education's budget ran to under $15 billion. Even considering inflation, that's still a big boost. True, Education Secretary William J. Bennett can take credit for slashing the number of bureaucrats in his department, but his budget can scarcely comfort taxpayers.

Reagan now says that the Education Department is different, that it's no longer a menace to American education. He seems to think that his presence in the nation's capital has tamed the dragon. Wrong. Federal financing and control remain the major cause of education stiltification throughout the land. Our schools need to be freed to launch creative programs on their own, completely independent from the heavy hand of regulation from distant Washington bureaucrats.

It's hard to see how our schools could do any worse. Five years after a presidential panel issued a report, "A Nation at Risk," that identified a problem most people already knew existed, students are more miseducated than ever.

As colomnist Don Feder notes, a recent federal survey found that, of 8,000 17-year-olds tested, "68 percent didn't know when the Civil War was fought, one in three thought Columbus discovered America after 1750; and substantial majorities could not identify the authors of Crime and Punishment, The Canterbury Tales, or Leaves of Grass. ... The analysis comes on the heels of reports that Johnny can't read, do simple math, or find the United States on a world map."

It should be obvious by now that we've all been had. When the federal government first stuck its snout on a big scale into education 30 years ago, it promised to bring enlightenment to educationally depressed areas, to raise standards for all American students. Now it's obvious that the federal government has perpetrated a fraud on the American people. We should be reducing the disease, federal funding and control (the two always go together), not getting more of it.

Long ago, before he became a part of the problem, Reagan used to tell a joke about bureaucratic largess. With a few changes, we can adapt the story to his very own Department of Education: It seems a bureaucrat at Ronald Reagan's Department of Education spent his days taking one stack of papers on his desk and placing it on another stack. When the second stack got too high, he reversed the process. So it went, hour after hour, day after day. One day, his fellow bureaucrats found the man weeping at his desk. Seeking to console him they asked what the matter was. He replied: "My student graduated and got a job."

Kennedy using anachronism

Stephen Chapman

When a newspaper attacks a politician, it isn't news. The Boston Herald can refer to the senior senator from Massachusetts as "the nation's oldest juvenile delinquent" without anyone paying much attention. When a politician attacks a newspaper, not just with words but with government powers, it is news.

So Sen. Edward Kennedy's use of the law to punish the Herald's owner has earned him a lot of unwanted attention. But it has yet to raise questions about the law he used, which is an anachronism as well as an abuse.

The Federal Communications Commission, fearing media monopolies, forbids any company from owning both a newspaper and a TV station in the same city. Some companies that had acquired such holdings before 1975, when the regulation was adopted, are exempt. But it occasionally waives the policy for good cause. Right now the only media company enjoying a waiver belongs to Rupert Murdoch, the Australian-born press magnate who owns both a newspaper and a TV station in Boston and New York.

From that arose Kennedy's chance to exact vengeance. He quietly attached an amendment to a huge appropriations bill forbidding the FCC from permitting waivers or changing the regulation, which Congress passed without noticing. When the current exemptions run out this year, Murdoch will be forced to get rid of two of his properties.

"Kennedy's vendetta," as the Herald called it, exposed him as malicious and heavy-handed, willing to trample the Constitution to punish an enemy. New York Mayor Edward Koch, himself a favorite of the New York Post, rightly lamented Kennedy's "sneak attack on the 1st Amendment." The senator might have been able to win an open fight on the rule, but his underhanded methods will probably rouse Congress to reverse itself.

But the scrutiny shouldn't end with this flagrant abuse of the FCC regulation. The regulation itself is an affront to the 1st Amendment, and one that technology and competition have made increasingly hard to justify.

Murdoch's case shows the irrationality of the policy. His chief option in New York, he says, is to simply close down the unprofitable and unsalable Post. Thus a policy aimed at promoting competition would reduce it. Will New Yorkers really be better off if, to prevent an imaginary monopoly, they lose a newspaper?

More absurd still is that without the waiver, Murdoch will be unable to do something his competitors in New York already do, namely combine publishing and broadcasting. Besides putting out a newspaper, The New York Times owns two New York radio stations (which are also covered by the "cross-ownership" rule). The Tribune Co., publisher of the Post's chief rival, the Daily News (as well as the Chicago Tribune), owns both a TV and a radio outlet in New York.

Why the different treatment? Murdoch's competitors assembled their holdings before the rule was enacted, so they were allowed to keep them. But applying different rules to him is like forcing one sprinter to run a race wearing leg weights.

The point of the rule was to prevent any single owner from gaining the dominance needed to restrict the flow of information. But its application here rests on the droll idea that in New York City — home to five major daily newspapers, uncounted weeklies and several dozen TV and radio stations — there is a danger that Rupert Murdoch will control too many sources of news.

The danger of excessive media concentration is not much greater outside the big cities. No less than 96 percent of Americans can get at least five TV stations over-the-air, which would be adequate to ensure a diversity of views even without the thousands of newspapers and radio stations that also deliver news. Nearly half of the homes with sets also get cable TV; all of them have access to the hundreds of specialized publications published in this country.

Only in the smallest towns, which may have only a single newspaper and radio station, is the rule even theoretically defensible. But these are the same places that may be too small to support both operations unless the owner can stretch his dollars by, say, pooling the news gathering resources of the station and the paper. Instead of having only two local news outlets, with the same owner, the alternative may be none.

Any rule that regulates the press by deciding who may and may not own media properties brings the government uncomfortably close to the kind of state control the 1st Amendment was meant to prevent. The benefits of the rule are elusive and doubtful. Its dangers, as the clash between Kennedy and Murdoch shows, are anything but.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Feb. 2, the 33rd day of 1988. There are 333 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 2, 1893, the first motion-picture close-up was filmed at the Edison studio in West Orange, N.J. Cameraman William Dickson photographed comedian Fred Ott sneezing.

On this date:

In 1536, the Argentine city of Buenos Aires was founded by Pedro de Mendoza of Spain.

In 1653, New Amsterdam — now New York City — was incorporated.

In 1848, the Treaty of Guadelupe Hidalgo, ending the Mexican War, was signed.

In 1870, the "Cardiff giant," supposedly the petrified remains of a human being discovered on a farm in Cardiff, N.Y., was revealed to be nothing more than carved gypsum.

In 1876, the National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs was formed in New York.

In 1882, Irish novelist and poet James Joyce was born near Dublin.

Whites should learn answers

Lewis Grizzard

Today, a new Sniglet:

It is "Earlbutzatosis" (pronounced Earl-butts-a-toe-sis), which is the condition that occasionally strikes white people and makes them utter remarks about black people that cost them their jobs.

The latest example of someone suffering from this condition is Jimmy (The Greek) Snyder, oddsmaker and former CBS television football analyst, who apparently dabbles in a bit of anthropology, too.

Mr. Snyder, whose contract with CBS called for $400,000 a year, was asked why he thought there weren't more black people in managerial positions with professional sports teams.

This is what is known as a hot topic, which may be better defined as the issue currently being beaten to death in the media.

What Mr. Snyder, who is white, should have said when he was asked to comment is, "I have absolutely no opinion on that matter. Please ask me what the point spread is going to be on the Super Bowl instead."

But, no. Mr. The Greek said blacks already control the field of play and if they take over the coaching jobs, too, "There won't be anything left for the whites."

If that weren't enough, he went on to mention the word "bred" in a sentence about black athletes' thighs.

"All I said," pleaded Massuh Greek, in his own defense, "was the truth."

Or, what he thought was the truth.

It didn't matter anyway, because CBS punted him out the door even before Jesse Jackson could issue a statement, which is flat moving, baby.

Didn't Jimmy The Greek hear what happened to Al Campanis, former general manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers baseball club?

It was all in the papers.

Ted Koppel of ABC's Nightline asked Al the same question about blacks in front office jobs. Al should have said, "You got me, Ted."

Instead, he spoke about blacks lacking "certain skills" for managerial positions, and then became slightly delirious and began to talk about how blacks made poor swimmers because they lacked buoyancy.

I'll tell you who lacked buoyancy — Al Campanis, who sunk straight to the bottom when the Dodgers kicked him overboard for his remarks.

How long is it going to take white people to get the message? If you're asked to comment on a matter involving black people — especially if you are in the public eye — keep your mouth shut.

If you must talk, then learn the correct responses to black-oriented questions.

If you are asked, "Who would you like to see replace Billy Martin as Yankee manager, as soon as George Steinbrenner fires him?" answer, "Bill Cosby."

If you are asked, "Who would you like to see replace that racist scum Jimmy The Greek Snyder on CBS?" answer, "Oprah (The Mouth) Winfrey."

If you are asked, "Who are you supporting for the Democratic presidential nomination?" and can't think of Jesse Jackson, answer, "Ahmad Rashad."

If white people would follow these guidelines, nobody would lose his or her job and perhaps we finally could achieve perfect racial harmony.

I'd like to see the odds The Greek would give on that one.

Let's call a truce for child care issues

By SARAH OVERSTREET

It's a never-ending truth I keep proving and proving and proving: You can take the daily newspaper, subscribe to seven magazines and listen to National Public Radio faithfully, and still be caught napping more often than you like to admit.

Such was the case recently when news broke of several new child-care bills, sponsored by both liberals and conservatives. OK, I admit I was momentarily distracted by Pat Robertson, who lamented that abortion may destroy the tax base, and Jack Kemp, who suggested that the answer to the Social Security crisis may lie in getting the baby boomers to produce another boom. ("I have four," he told reporters, with emphasis.)

If liberal and conservatives have narrowed the gap separating their philosophies on child care, they must have been talking behind my back. (Happens all the time. They don't write, they don't call.) Somewhere, at lunches and in congressional offices, they must have been talking more about the crisis than whether the child-care situation will either (a) prove the ruination of the family as we know it, or (b) drive women back into the home and keep men firmly in power. When it comes to protecting America's children, liberals and conservatives are sounding more like each other all the time.

Personally, I'll have to acknowledge I don't care how they arrived at the compromise. I don't care if the right-wing faction finally threw up their hands and said, 'All right, already! We just can't deal with any more mothers staying on the public dole because they make more money on welfare than they do by working." Nor do I care if the left-wing faction is getting the hint that people are sick and tired of the idea of "entitlements" being a birthright. It's enough that both sides recognize that in our economy, lots of parents — both single and married — need to work just to make ends meet.

But I am encouraged by one particular conservative who seems to understand the problem, as I see it everyday among the people I know and work with. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah has introduced a plan to get the government more involved in child care, and in ways that reward parents for their work, instead of penalizing them. His proposal would give parents tax and insurance breaks. That's precisely what I would want if I were a working parent: Just a hand up, a way to stay at my job and provide the best quality child care I could find, and not be punished for trying to rear the next generation in today's economy.

I'll also admit to a certain liberal bent when it comes to child care. My parents both worked, and I liked nothing better than to get away from them for an afternoon at my teenaged baby sitter's house. My parents found good, competent care for me when the idea of child care being a problem wasn't something you read about in every women's magazine.

Of course, the economy was different then, and the luxury of their double salary gave my parents some latitude that even two-income families might not have now. I came away with from my upbringing convinced not that all children need cookie-baking mamas to greet them when they come home from school, but that all children need to be cared for by competent people.

Orrin, you did good. You have an understanding that is simple, pragmatic and appropriate for the times. If there's one economic principle that holds true no matter what the conditions, it is that qualified people don't want to work for nothing. And they won't. Good care providers won't provide care unless we pay them enough to go into the business, and many of us can't afford them without some economic help.

FBI domestic surveillance under growing scrutiny

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI evidently "abandoned" government guidelines for conducting domestic surveillance when it spied on Americans opposed to the Reagan administration's Central America policies, says the head of a congressional panel.

Rep. Don Edwards, chairman of the House Judiciary civil rights subcommittee, said Monday that he plans to hold public hearings on the FBI's conduct in about two weeks.

In addition, the Senate Intelligence Committee was to receive a closed-door briefing today on the FBI investigation from the bureau's director, William Sessions.

The FBI's conduct is coming under increasing congressional scrutiny following release last week of FBI documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by the Center for Constitutional Rights, a New York-based civil liberties group. The documents revealed the existence of the bureau's surveillance campaign, which was active from 1981 until last year.

The principal target was the Committee In Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, or CISPES, but the FBI documents indicated that the surveillance eventually expanded to include more than 100 groups and individuals opposed to administration policies in Central America.

Edwards, D-Calif., said he began asking the FBI about the CISPES investigation more than four years ago, and was told "they felt there was a possibility that terrorist activity could have taken place in the U.S."

Edwards said that under Justice Department guidelines on domestic security operations, the FBI has to end an investigation when it finds no criminal conduct. Guidelines for international operations are not as precise, Edwards said.

"The criminal standard appears to have been abandoned in the CISPES case, particularly in the monitoring of political meetings. Even if there were legitimate grounds for beginning an investigation, it should never have extended to the monitoring of legitimate political activity," he said.

"The documents raise again the old questions about the bureau's tendency to focus on political expression in lieu of more reliable evidence of criminal activity," Edwards said, referring to FBI abuses in the past.

"A most disturbing allegation is the claim that the FBI investigated CISPES and other organizations because they were publicly opposed to President Reagan's policies in Central America."

FBI spokesman Ray McElhaney said the bureau could not directly respond to questions about the investigation, because much of the information that might be involved is classified. He added that the bureau is a defendant in two lawsuits related to the probe.

McElhaney said investigations involving domestic security, counterterrorism and international terrorism are conducted pursuant to U.S. law and attorney general guidelines.

They "are only instituted when sufficient predication exists under these laws and guidelines," he said.

Edwards said his subcommittee will use the recent revelations as a starting point to examine the FBI's conduct of terrorism investigations in general.

Edwards said he is drafting legislation that would prohibit FBI monitoring of legitimate political activity.

U.S. pushing for Mideast peace talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is stepping up contacts with Israel, Jordan and Palestinian Arabs to see if they can agree on a formula for Middle East peace negotiations.

Presidential envoy Philip C. Habib returned Monday from talks in Jordan with King Hussein, and the White House said his secret mission did not produce a breakthrough.

Habib reported to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who is in the midst of evaluating a proposal by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to hold Arab-Israeli negotiations on Palestinian autonomy.

The goal would be to provide the 1.5 million Palestinian Arabs who live on the Israeli-held West Bank and Gaza with self-rule under the 1978 Camp David agreements but not control over security and foreign affairs, two basic attributes of statehood.

Another U.S. diplomat, Wat Cluverius IV, moves between Israel and Jordan, keeping in touch on day-to-day problems in beginning negotiations. Morris Draper, the U.S. consul-general in Jerusalem, is the primary contact with Palestinian Arabs in Israel and on the West Bank.

Israel, meanwhile, has sent two emissaries, Eliakim Rubinstein and Nimrod Novick, to Washington over the last two weeks.

Hussein has been reluctant to enter negotiations, while Shamir is balking at any conference that might permit the Soviet Union to play a significant role in the outcome.

Phil, the weather forcasting groundhog in Punxsutawney, Pa., is held up to Jim Means, president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club, this morning.

Spring is just around the corner

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil, a groundhog with a knack for weather forecasting, today predicted an early spring for only the ninth time in 101 years.

After the furry legend was plucked from his luxury burrow at dawn, he looked around at a crowd of reporters, photographers and several hundred Groundhog Day celebrants. But he couldn't see his shadow in the rain.

That's a sure sign of an early thaw, according to the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club.

Phil's closest friends in this western Pennsylvania town of 8,000 say his forecasts haven't been wrong in the 101 years he's been making his predictions.

"He's been right every time — according to us at least," said William Null, secretary of the Groundhog Club and director of the town's Chamber of Commerce. "Some people have challenged that, but that's OK."

Groundhog Day tradition has it that if a groundhog sees its shadow after crawling out of its burrow, six weeks of winter follow. If it doesn't, spring is just around the corner.

Phil has predicted an early spring only eight other times in the history of the celebration, Null said. They occurred in 1890, 1902, 1934, 1950, 1970, 1975, 1983 and 1986.

Indians free hostages after governor agrees to make investigation

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Two armed American Indians who took a newspaper staff hostage freed their captives after the governor agreed to investigate charges of corruption in local law enforcement agencies.

Eddie Hatcher, 30, and Timothy Jacobs, 19, members of the Tuscarora faction of the Lumbee Indians, surrendered to FBI agents Monday night, 10 hours after invading the offices of The Robesonian, a daily newspaper in Lumberton.

Hatcher and Jacobs threw out two shotguns and a .38-caliber revolver and released the last seven hostages of 17 people they had held in the building.

"Their prime concern was that somebody would shoot them," said Paul Daly, FBI special agent in charge for North Carolina.

Gov. Jim Martin's chief of staff, Phil Kirk, signed an agreement with Hatcher and Jacobs just before they surrendered. It calls for a review of the Indians' allegations, to be conducted by Kirk; Jim Trotter, general counsel to Martin; and Joe Dean, state secretary of crime control and public safety.

The agreement calls for investigation of the Robeson County sheriff's department, district attorney and local and district offices of the State Bureau of Investigation. It also calls for a thorough investigation of the death of a black jail inmate and for the transfer of a Lumbee Indian from the Robeson jail to one in another county.

"None of these are the kinds of demands that could not be met," Martin said at a news conference in Raleigh.

Hatcher accomplished what he set out to do, said his attorney, Bruce Cunningham, who aided in the negotiations: "He's satisfied. He's relieved and glad it's over."

Daly said Hatcher and Jacobs were charged with the federal crimes of hostage-taking and possession of sawed-off shotguns. They were taken to a jail in another county, which officials refused to identify.

Sheriff Hubert Stone said he was not worried about the hostage-takers' allegations.

"That was just two people out there on their own," Stone said. "Anybody can get up and make accusations."

Stone has been the subject of criticism by Indians since Nov. 1, 1986, when an unarmed Lumbee, Jimmy Earl Cummings, was shot to death by Deputy Kevin Stone, the sheriff's son. A coroner's inquest jury ruled the shooting "an accident and-or self-defense."

The black inmate, Billy McKellar, 27, died Jan. 13 after what authorities described as an "asthmatic cardiac attack" while in the jail run by Stone.

As for the transfer of the Indian prisoner, the inmate, John Hunt, who is charged with armed robbery and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, does not want to leave the county jail, Stone maintained.

George Fain, general manager of the newspaper, said 17 people were taken hostage at his office.

Reagan lobbies nation, house members on eve of vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional Democrats are voicing confidence that they will defeat President Reagan's request for $36.2 million in new aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, despite last-minute personal lobbying by the president.

Reagan was meeting with undecided House members today and making a televised, primetime sales pitch to the nation tonight, but House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., predicted it would be a hard sell.

"The president has his greatest influence when he speaks in behalf of a position supported by the American people," Foley said. "The president is not speaking for the American people" on Contra aid.

"It is my very firm belief that when the House acts on Wednesday, it will reject the president's proposal," he said.

American-made missiles found aboard sunken Iranian boat

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — American-made Stinger anti-aircraft missiles were found aboard a sunken Iranian speedboat raised by U.S. Navy divers. The military said Iran could use such missiles in attacks on U.S. helicopters.

In another development, salvage crews worked to save a disabled Greek-owned freighter in the northern Persian Gulf on Monday after the 22 crew members apparently were rescued and taken to Iran, shipping sources said.

There were conflicting reports on whether the ship was attacked by Iraq or Iran, enemies in a 7-year-old war. Iraq hits Iranian-chartered vessels and Iran has raided ships doing business with gulf countries it considers Iraqi allies.

Also in the northern gulf, another U.S.-escorted Kuwaiti tanker arrived safely on Monday, the U.S. Navy said. It was the seventh such convoy this year and the 28th since the operations began in July to prevent Iranian attack.

The Navy said the latest convoy to reach Kuwait included the U.S. frigate Reuben James and the 46,723-ton liquefied gas carrier Gas Princess.

Several Stinger missiles and one launcher were found on a Swedish-built Boghammar boat sunk by U.S. helicopters Oct. 8, discovered in the northern gulf with sonar equipment and recovered earlier this month, U.S. sources said.

The gulf's depth in the area ranges from 80 to 160 feet.

Iran's Revolutionary Guards use Boghammar boats for attacks on neutral shipping. This one was sunk by American helicopters after a U.S. aircraft was fired on near Farsi Island, a Revolutionary Guards base.

Two other boats, both similar to Boston Whalers, were captured along with six wounded Iranians, two of whom died soon after being taken from the water. The four survivors were repatriated.

U.S. officials said at the time that materials related to the Stinger were found in one of the boats, but not the weapons themselves. Stingers are infrared-guided missiles fired from the shoulder. American military officials have described Iranian possession of Stingers as potentially serious, mainly because of the vulnerability of relatively slow, low-flying helicopters.

Moslem rebels in Afghanistan have used them against Soviet helicopters with devastating effect. U.S. officials have said the Stingers in Iran's possession evidently were seized from Afghan rebels.

None of the American officials will say whether Stingers were fired during the Oct. 8 encounter. But Navy sources told The Associated Press in November that American pilots at the scene reported seeing the distinctive trajectory of a Stinger, indicating at least one was launched and missed its target.

The latest report was made by a CBS television correspondent and provided to other members of a Pentagon news media pool covering the Navy in the gulf. The report quoted unidentified officias as saying at least one Stinger was fired but did not hit anything.

Officials who provided the information did not say how many Stingers were found in the recovered boat or whether the launcher had been used. According to the report, the speedboat was put aboard the Mount Vernon, an amphibious landing support ship that left the gulf for the United States this week.

A U.S. military spokesman with the pool group, Marine Lt. Col. David Titus, refused comment on the story.

Sweeping price increases

Two Arabs killed as settlers try to enter Arab village

JERUSALEM (AP) — Armed Jewish settlers chased Palestinian youths and tried to force their way into an Arab village in a day of clashes in the occupied lands that left two Arabs killed and at least seven wounded by Israeli gunfire.

Five soldiers were injured by stones in the army's battles with Palstinian protesters throughout the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip on Monday.

More than a dozen Arabs were hospitalized with beating injuries, and an American complained to the U.S. Consulate in east Jerusalem that he was beaten by Israeli troops on Sunday.

Armed Jewish settlers from the settlement of Ofra, 10 miles north of Jerusalem, tried to enter the nearby West Bank Arab village of Ein Yabrud but were stopped by Israeli troops, the army said without elaborating.

The move was in apparent retaliation for a car firebombing Sunday in which a 35-year-old Jewish settler was badly burned.

Leaders of the Gush Emunim settlement movement on Monday said during a meeting with Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin they will not be able to restrain their followers if such attacks continue, Israel Television said.

The involvement of Israeli civilians was a prominent feature of Monday's violence, which occurred as the United States renewed initiatives to bring about temporary self-rule for 1.5 million Palestinians living under occupation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip since the 1967 Middle East war.

In the most serious incident Monday, Israelis opened fire to rescue soldiers and civilians trapped by a crowd of Arab stone-throwers near the West Bank town of Anabta, killing two Arabs and wounding three, the army said.

Textile agreement limiting Chinese textile imports in U.S. is signed

BEIJING (AP) — China and the United States today signed a four-year agreement that limits to 3 percent the annual growth rate for China's textile exports to the United States.

The accord was signed in the Great Hall of the People by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and Zheng Tuobin, China's minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

China, a relative newcomer to the textile export industry, has become America's largest supplier of textiles and apparel in terms of volume.

Shipments in major import categories — such as cotton, silk and ramie — have been growing at an annual rate of 19 percent, far outdistancing growth by more established suppliers such as South Korea and Hong Kong.

Chinese exports to the United States are estimated to be worth at least $2 billion annually.

With the agreement, the United States has in the past 20 months renegotiated textile accords with its five major suppliers, the U.S. Embassy said. The other four — Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong and South Korea — all agreed to limit growth of their exports to the United States to about 1 percent.

The five countries supply 50 percent of American textile and apparel imports. Taiwan is the largest textile importer in terms of dollars.

Yeutter, making his first official visit to China, also conferred with Zheng about overall trade between the two countries, which reached an estimated $10 billion last year, according to U.S. figures.

Who listens to SHCBWLHSLKLLRHLFDSLRGHWHNSTH?

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The securities firm born of Wall Street's latest megamerger has announced what it will call itself: Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

Those three names, long familiar to Wall Street and investors in the securities market, suggest the diverse origins of the new company. But they leave a lot out.

Indeed, if the firm had kept the names of its prominent predecessors from just the past two decades, it would be known as something like:

Shearson Hammill Cogan Berlind Weill Levitt Hayden Stone Lehman Kuhn Loeb Loeb Rhoades Hentz Lamson Faulkner Dawkins Sullivan Lerner Rheinholdt Gardner Hornblower Weeks Hemphill Noyes Spencer Trask & Hutton Inc., a majority-owned subsidiary of American Express Co.

In microcosm, that's a chronicle of Wall Street life from the late 1960s to the late 1980s: Mergers born of trouble, partnerships turned private corporations turned publicly owned companies, mergers born of deregulation, takeovers born of prosperity, and mergers born of trouble once again.

If it was a stable environment you were looking for, you picked the wrong place.

The first stage of this period of unpheaval arose from problems of the Street's own making. A booming bull market in the 1960s nearly overwhelmed the capacity of many brokerage firms to handle the order flow.

And as they fought to cope with a paperwork crisis, the stock market turned down in 1969 and 1970, leaving several prominent investment houses on the brink of insolvency.

Some, in fact, went under, while others were rescued in mergers popularly known at the time as "shotgun weddings."

Even many of the healthiest firms in an industry made up mostly of partnerships decided they couldn't function successfully without an infusion of capital from outside. So in the early 1970s, firms began to transform themselves into corporations and sell shares of themselves to the public.

Congress and regulators in Washington soon added to the tumult with moves to change the rules of the business and open it up to increased competition.

A new wave of mergers followed "May Day," May 1, 1975, when a long-standing schedule of fixed commission rates on securities transactions was abolished.

In 1981, which was aptly described by journalist Tim Carrington in his book "The Year They Sold Wall Street," four big-name investment firms merged with or were acquired by outside businesses.

The blue-chip buyers included American Express (Shearson Loeb Rhoades), Prudential Insurance (Bache) and Sears Roebuck (Dean Witter Reynolds). Salomon Brothers in effect incorporated, diversified and went public in a single stroke by merging with Phibro Corp.

Now the crash of October 1987, following on the heels of a five-year bull market, has put the Street through another sudden turn. Six weeks after Black Monday on Oct. 19, Shearson and Hutton announced their betrothal.

This near-constant consolidation might suggest the image of an industry being compressed into a group of fewer and fewer, larger and larger firms. But it hasn't worked out that way.

As old names disappeared, new ones popped up, attracted by the aura of riches on Wall Street that never quite seems to wear off. At the end of 1970, the New York Stock Exchange had 572 member firms. Seventeen years later, the total was 596.

While the players keep changing, the game goes on.

Arizona pilot gets ticket after foggy landing on Texas interstate

EASTLAND (AP) — An Arizona man got a ticket on Interstate 20 near this West Texas town in an area known as a "speed trap," but the ticket wasn't for speeding.

Charles Wilford of Tucson, Ariz., wasn't even driving on the highway Monday. He was flying over it. Or at least trying to.

The ticket was for something Texas Department of Public Safety officers described as "aircraft maneuvering or landing on a public highway."

Wilford told officers he ran into thick fog and had to land his plane in the westbound lane of the highway near Olden.

Trooper Richard Treece of the Department of Public Safety said several vehicles had to veer to keep from colliding with the small, yellow airplane when it landed. No one was injured during the mishap, and everyone was ready to help after Wilford's landing.

Troopers and road crews from the Texas Department of Highways helped Wilford take off from the north service road.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

New 'Fat Magnet' Diet Pill Guarantees Fast Weight Loss

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special) — An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose fat by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

No Dieting—Eat Normally

Best of all, "you can continue to eat all of your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You will start losing fat from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

There has never been anything like it before. It is a totally new major medical breakthrough for weight loss (worldwide patent pending).

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in fat particles. Then, all that trapped fat is naturally "flushed" right out of your body because it cannot be digested.

Within 2 days you will notice a change in the color of your stool as the fat particles are being eliminated.

"Pills Do All the Work"

According to the doctors, the fat-magnet pills do all the work while you quickly lose fat with no starvation diet menus to follow, no calorie counting, no exercising, and no hunger pangs. It is 100% safe. You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

The fat-magnet pills have just been offered to the American public and are already sweeping the country with record sales and reports of dramatic weight loss. It's the "lazy way" to lose weight for people who enjoy eating.

Now Available to Public

If you need to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these new highly successful fat-magnet pills (now available from the doctor's exclusive manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$2 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), cash, check or money order to: Fat-Magnet, 7095 Hollywood Blvd., Dept. W992, Hollywood, CA 90028. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800)527-9700, ext. W992.

After initial skepticism, Texas wineries gaining respect

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Skeptics at first laughingly dubbed it "Chateau Bubba" and "Cactus Blanc." Indeed, some of the early stuff was so bad that one vintner recently hired a bulldozer to crush more than 1,500 cases of his early vintage stock.

"The brash, frontier image of Texas is not consistent with the production of fine wine," concedes John Lowey, president and chief executive officer of Llano Estacado winery near Lubbock.

But a burgeoning number of Texas vintners are now producing wine to please even the haughtiest of palates, although winemakers in Napa Valley and Bordeaux don't seem to be wringing their hands yet.

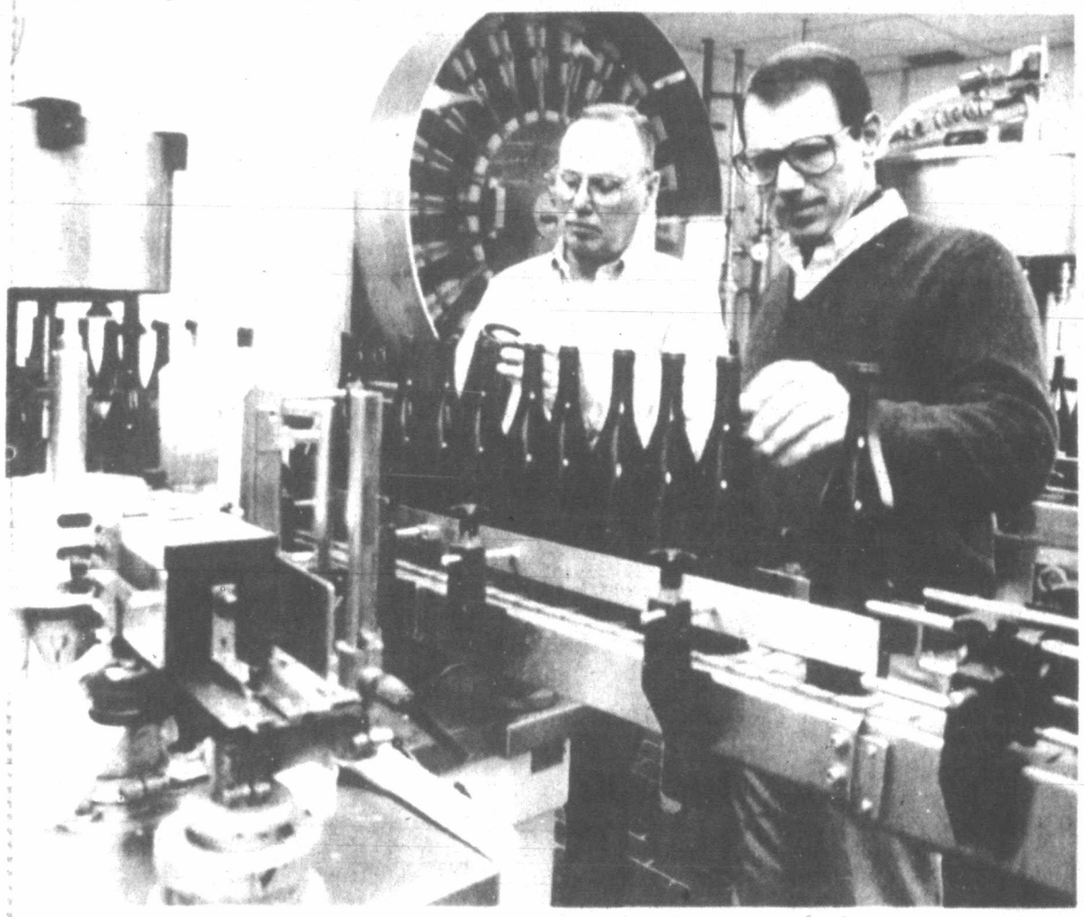

Texas wine production has skyrocketed from 50,000 gallons in 1982 to 750,000 in 1986, state Department of Agriculture figures indicate.

Due to a late spring freeze, 1987 production, still being tabulated, is projected at about 500,000 gallons. But 1988 should yield more than 1 million from the state's 22 wineries.

Quality, too, is on the increase, but the state's young industry has suffered its growing pains.

Oddly enough, the state's winemaking hotbed is in Lubbock, a dry city where residents have to drive five miles to get a six-pack of beer. One winery can't even sell its wine on its premises due to the liquor laws in its precinct.

In the Lubbock area, two wineries with established reputations will be joined by two more in the next year or so. But wines also are flowing from Fort Stockton, Tow, Driftwood, Ballinger, Bryan and other areas.

(AP Laserphoto)

Llano Estacado, founded south of the city in 1975, has seen its sales increase almost tenfold in five years, last year notching its first year in the black — ahead of expectations.

Lowey credits the addition in 1986 of Walter Haimann, the retired president of Seagram Distillers Co., with more than doubling Llano Estacado's sales in the past two years.

The winery, which produced 117,000 gallons in 1987, recently got a seven-figure capital infusion from its 52 investors and plans to expand its facilities space this year, Lowey said.

Llano Estacado, which makes 10 varieties, currently markets its wines primarily in Texas, but plans to push outward in the next few years as it is able to produce more of certain varieties.

"In another two years we'll have plenty of Cabernet and Chardonnay to take to (East and West coast) markets," Lowey said. "And I think we'll be well-received."

Keeping up with demand is also a problem at Lubbock's Pheasant Ridge, but for different reasons.

Bobby Cox, Pheasant Ridge vice president and winegrower, recently tried to convince a top-flight customer to buy only 35 cases of his dwindling stock of Cabernet Sauvignon instead of 50.

"It's painful not to be able to sell when the market is there, but 45 will wipe us out," Cox said.

He said his winery's cash-flow problems and lack of sufficient financing won't allow him to keep pace with demand, despite a stock offering held a year ago.

"But there are worse problems," he said.

A winery is not for the impatient or cash-poor, winemakers say. Operating a winery requires large amounts of capital, and return on investments comes slowly. Bankers tend to look askance at a break-even period of more than a decade, vintners say.

"Wineries have a strange cash flow, not like cotton or grain," said Lowey. "Nine of 10 bankers didn't even want to talk about it."

The obstacles have proved too much for several Texas wineries, which have been forced to retrench drastically or file for bankruptcy.

The assets of Ste. Genevieve winery in Fort Stockton, formerly the state's largest and long regarded as Texas' wine leader, were repossessed in October 1986 by the Bank of America. Squabbles among the former owners has spawned multimillion-dollar litigation.

Under new ownership and operation, the winery, now called Cordier Estates Inc., is struggling to regain its footing, last year producing about 100,000 gallons of its 1.2 million gallon capacity.

"The last crop was very weak and small because of the late frost," said John Collet, president of Cordier Estates.

Cypress Valley Vineyard in Round Mountain filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in fall 1986, owner Dale Bettis said. The winery continues to operate without additional financing, producing 27,000 gallons last year, he said.

"We've really had to tighten our belts," Bettis said.

A key to the success of the state's wine industry is the size of the home market. Texas is the nation's third largest wine market, according to industry estimates, so vintners can do a good business without ever crossing the state border.

In keeping with the Texas spirit, the label of Llano Estacado's best-selling blush touts the wine's suitability for "fajitas, fresh fruit, barbeque and chicken fried steak."

The current Southwestern cuisine craze has helped fuel the market for homegrown wines. Dean Fearing, who as chef of the Mansion restaurant in Dallas is the cooking style's guru, has placed an array of Texas wines on his menu, as has Los Angeles' Spago restaurant.

"I think they're fabulous," said Fearing.

Students learn to stretch minds

CORSICANA (AP) — It's pretty quiet on Planet X, the purple planet where, of course, everything is purple. Purple ground. Purple air. Purple rocks, lots of them.

Even the food, which comes in a tube and tastes terrible, is purple. The quietness is probably a help to the students in Space Surfing School, where if they make straight Z's it could mean a scholarship to the University of Pluto or Venus U. The latter would really be the last choice because, after all, the spaceball team scandal has destroyed the sports program.

Okay, the planet may have changed since you were last there, but, then, it only exists in our imagination. And there anything can happen.

"Imagination Studies" was the curriculum for 46 fifth-grade students at Corsicana's Lincoln Elementary last week. Their instructors, tour guides of the mind, were Catherine and George Cisneros, San Antonio artists-in-education brought to Corsicana by the Navarro Council of the Arts. Cisneros is the brother of San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros.

In Room 404, Monday through Friday the students and the Cisneroses created the Lincoln Space Colony on the Purple Planet X.

Cisneros cloaked the room in dark gauze to imitate space and created a video to show images of the galaxy. The students built space costumes, molding papermache over large balloons to create their silver space helmets.

Using their imagination, eyes closed and Cisneros' "space music" in the background, they experienced traveling through space, weightlessness, flying past stars and planets. They discussed the organization of the colony what form of government, what rules they would live by, what they would eat, if the children would have homework. They created a new alphabet and numerical system.

And they composed letters home to their parents telling of their experiences. One student wrote: "Mom, Dad, I'm in space. Nobody can bother me. I'm left alone to enjoy the unknown. As I lifted off just a few days ago I experienced something unexpected. I experienced the pull of gravity, but as I reached orbit I became weightless. It is wonderful. Anything can float up here. I want to stay up here forever.

"P.S. The food is terrible."

"The guest artists have taken us through mind experiences," said Sharon Goodman, one of two fifth-grade teachers whose students were part of the colony. "Both art and emotion. We've tried to go beyond the limits of essential skills."

Researchers say that flu may cut sense of smell for months

By JOHN NOLAN
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI (AP) — If you recently suffered the flu and have not recovered your sense of smell, you aren't alone, researchers say.

Some patients complain they are unable to smell things or to taste food after suffering a bout of influenza. Researchers at the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Connecticut first reported the problem and have been looking into it.

It has also come to the attention of researchers at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine, where patients who come in for treatment at a center for taste and smell disorders have complained of the malady.

It can happen to people who suffer flu or upper respiratory infections, said Robert Frank, a University of Cincinnati psychophysicist. It is common for sufferers with colds or the flu to lose their sense of smell — and, as a result, their ability to taste — briefly during the time of the ailment. But, Frank said, some people do not regain their sense of smell for months, or longer.

"These people are seeing us six months after the flu has passed, and they still don't have their sense of smell," he said in an interview. "We still don't even know if it's permanent or not ... We don't know for sure right now, but we think there may be people who permanently lose their sense of smell after this kind of episode."

After a period of time, some victims report sensing a persistent, strange odor. Researchers have not determined what that means, Frank said.

"There's some indication in some people we've seen that they get this persistent odor," he said. "We hope that when people report these smells, that's a start of recovery."

About 25 percent of the patients who come to the taste-smell center complaining of a loss of smell have a strain of flu that appears to be the culprit, Frank said.

He said specialists have a theory that the flu viruses may take away the victim's ability to smell by damaging the olfactory epithelium — the skin on the inside of the nose. But, he said, "We really don't know what happens."

University of Cincinnati researchers are preparing an application for a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services public health grant to study the problem. They would like funding to follow the progress of people with the loss-of-smell problem, Frank said.

The work could include taking samples of tissue from inside the noses of victims for analysis to determine whether flu viruses cause damage, he said.

Researchers hope to develop treatment methods. "As it stands right now, for a person like this, we really have little idea of what to do," Frank said.

Victims often complain that they have lost their sense of taste, because they cannot taste food. But inability to taste is commonly caused by loss of smell, Frank said. A true loss of taste is rare because three different nerves bring smell information to the brain and it is unusual for all three to malfunction, he said.

Babies not welcome at woman's table

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Roger's Mom" wrote of her experience in a restaurant with Roger, her 6-month-old colicky boy who became fussy and cried a lot. The waitress politely informed "Mom" that some customers were leaving because her baby was disturbing them, whereupon Mom and her husband canceled their dinner order and left with the crying baby. She asked if you thought the waitress could have approached the situation in a different way.

You rightfully replied, "How else could the situation be approached? I think the waitress acted appropriately."

Hooray for you, Abby. Last week, my husband and I hired a baby sitter so we could dine out on our 10th anniversary. Our children are 1, 5 and 8. Seated at the table next to us was a couple with a baby who appeared to be about 10 months old. The baby first whimpered, then cried, and finally screamed during most of the meal. The mother tried unsuccessfully to quiet the child — meanwhile the screaming continued. The place was filled, or we would have asked for another table. Needless to say, it ruined our evening.

How I wish the waitress would have approached those people and suggested that they take the crying child out until it settled down. Everyone around us was upset. One couple left without finishing their meal.

I think it is the height of insensitivity for parents to allow a child to carry on that way in a public dining room.

DISGUSTED IN DENVER

DEAR DISGUSTED: I am pleased to know that someone agreed with me. Read on for someone who did not:

DEAR ABBY: I am not quibbling about your reply to "Roger's Mom," whose party left a restaurant when the waitress told them that people were leaving because Roger's crying was disturbing them. However, it did make me think about the increasing intolerance our society seems to have for its youngest members.

I'll never forget when my son was 4 months old, and having no one to leave him with, I took him with me to a lecture given by poet and writer Maya Angelou. He began to fuss in the middle of her lecture — then the people around me started giving me dirty looks. I was getting up to walk out with him when Ms. Angelou noticed. She interrupted her talk to say, "Let the child speak. That noise that is disturbing some of you is music to me — I'm sorry that more children aren't here today. Children are our future. Don't teach them they're not wanted. Don't teach them to be silent. Let the child speak!"

I sat down and people turned their attention back to Maya Angelou, who then told us that due to a traumatic experience she had had in her own childhood, she was unable to speak for several years.

Having spent much time in West Africa and South America, I have come to think that our society is the only one in which the "right" to undisturbed pleasure overrides the concern for its children — the future of our society. That's why I can't argue with your reply that the waitress's action was appropriate. It was, given the situation. But it's a sad and shameful situation.

CYNTHIA WARD,
STANFORD, CALIF.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a person who would send a gift (wedding, Christmas or whatever) with the sales slip inside, or even the price tag on it? She writes a little note saying, "If this isn't to your liking, you can exchange it."

I couldn't believe my eyes!

APPALLED IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR APPALLED: Why are you "appalled"? I think it's a very considerate gesture.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I am a 30-year-old woman with a problem. It may be a problem that cannot be solved, but I would like to know one way or the other, so here goes: My stomach looks like a road map! I've had three major surgeries that left "major" scars, and I can't stand to look at them.

Along with this, my skin stretched during my pregnancy. I can't wear shorts, and a bathing suit is out of the question.

Please, Abby, is there a doctor who specializes in this sort of plastic surgery? If you saw me, you would know that I am not just being vain. I really look pathetic.

Please help me. I'm desperate! Sign me ...

ROAD MAP

DEAR ROAD MAP: Ask your family physician to recommend a board-certified plastic surgeon who specializes in repairing the kind of scars you can't bear to look at.

Body cosmetic surgery has come a long way. You shouldn't need a road map to find a competent surgeon.

Seniors phone latch key kids

NEW YORK (AP) — Volunteers in the Tel-a-Friend program of the Starrett City Jewish Association for Services for the Aged (JASA) call area latch key children daily to make sure they are okay.

The project is co-sponsored by JASA, P.S. 279 and the office of City Council ppresident Andrew Stein. A similar program has also begun at the JASA center in Throgs Neck for students of P.S. 72, and a third program is planned for the JASA Broookdale Village Housing Facility in Far Rockaway.

The senior citizens meet the children at the beginning of the school year. Then they call them each day between 3 and 5 p.m., offering reassurance, help with homework and help in case of minor accidents or other problems.

You will have some exciting opportunities in the year ahead that will take you into areas you've never explored. Each one will give you a new window on life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Partnership arrangements you enter into today should be lasting and bountiful, especially if there is an Aries or Sagittarius involved. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Matchmaker set can help you understand what it might take to restore the relationship. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be especially attentive today to people whose fields of endeavor are similar to yours. They could bring new opportunities for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't ignore your social obligations today, even if they are a bit demanding and you have to attend more than one event. Each gathering could be fortuitous.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If conditions lend themselves to closing an important matter today, jump on it. Lady Luck will be waiting for you at the finish line.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Encouraging news will be coming your way at this time from two different sources. It looks like you might hear some bits and pieces today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your possibilities for personal achievement look very promising today. Focus on objectives that are meaningful to you where your career and reputation are concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Today you could be the person who ends up on the winning side of the ledger in situations that have both elements of chance and competition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be patient because significant breaks that aren't completely visible yet will be coming your way. Matters will eventually evolve in ways that meet your expectations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You are better equipped at this time to handle major ventures than you are to deal with smaller ones. Shelve unimportant little things until later.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You should be very lucky today in any dealings you have pertaining to your finances or career. Think positive, and conduct your affairs with victory in mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Situations that you personally direct today should work out fortunately for you as well as for other parties involved. Your luck has a broad reach now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) People in general are likely to treat you in a more generous fashion than usual today. Reap your harvest while the getting is good.

Redskins typical NFC team

Getting physical

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

SAN DIEGO — Washington Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs begs off the question and other NFC officials tred gingerly over it for fear of riling up the other conference.

But Washington's 42-10 rout of Denver in Sunday's Super Bowl underlines what has become obvious — the NFC, where the good teams prefer physical play to finesse, has become superior, at least at the top, to the AFC.

That fact will probably be underlined again next year when the Chicago Bears, San Francisco 49ers, New York Giants, Minnesota Vikings, New Orleans Saints or perhaps even the Philadelphia Eagles, hand the Broncos their third lopsided Super Bowl loss. The Redskins, of course, won't be back because no team this decade has repeated.

Gibbs declined Monday to address the domination theory.

"Each of those games are totally separate," he said. "I don't see it as AFC-NFC. Each of those teams got hot for a day. What takes over and contributes to a lopsided game is difficult to understand."

General Manager George Young of the Giants noted that the AFC won eight of the 10 Super Bowls played in the 1970s.

"It goes in cycles," he said. "This is one of those cycles."

But there's a difference between the two decades.

Six of the eight AFC victories in the 1970s were posted by Pittsburgh and Miami — four by the Steelers and two by the Dolphins, who went to three straight Super Bowls.

The NFC has had four different one-sided winners — the 49ers by 22 points, the Bears by 36, the Giants by 19 and the Redskins by 32. None of the four scored less than 38 points and the composite was 165-56, with 14 of the losers' points coming on throwaway touchdowns near the end.

A lot of that has to do with defense. All those NFC teams played it and the AFC teams didn't.

"I think it's that we're just more physical," offensive tackle Mark May of the Redskins said. "We're used to getting beat on and beat up every Sunday and we can wear smaller teams down."

It also has to do with front-office talent.

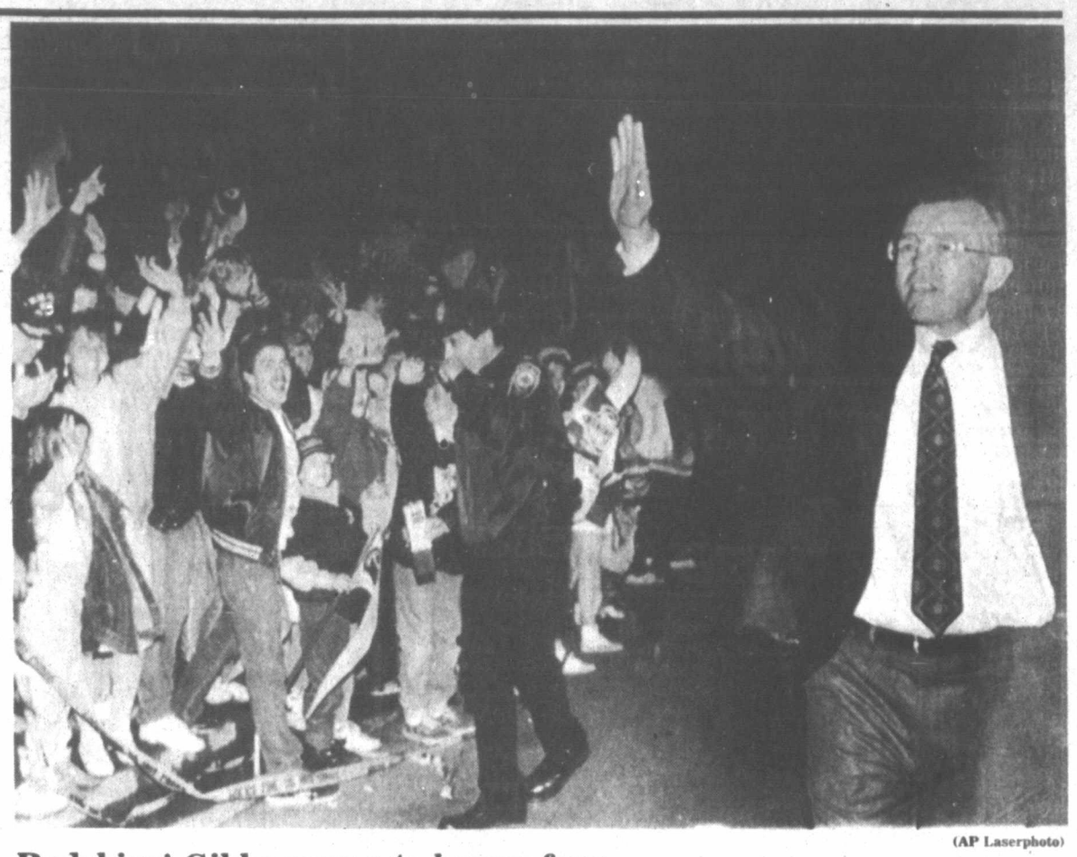

Redskins General Manager Bobby Beathard was director of player personnel for the Dolphins of the 1970s and Young was there, too. Jim Finks, who helped build the current Bears, is now doing the same at New Orleans, and San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh has earned his reputation for more than coaching.

Moreover, the NFC has most of the league's improving teams, like the Vikings, Saints and Eagles, all building punishing front sevens on defense.

The most physical AFC teams, the Seattle Seahawks and the Los Angeles Raiders, are saddled by quarterback problems.

Of the emerging AFC teams, Buffalo seems closest to emulating the NFC model — a solid quarterback in Jim Kelly and three potential All-Pros up front on defense — end Bruce Smith and linebackers Shane Conlan and Cornelius Bennett.

Indianapolis also has a physical front seven, led by linebacker Duane Bickett.

Ditka chosen for grid hall

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Chicago Bears Coach Mike Ditka and three NFL standouts of the 1970s — Fred Biletnikoff, Jack Ham and Alan Page — were selected today as 1988 inductees into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Ditka is the first pure tight end ever elected to the Hall. Biletnikoff, a wide receiver, is the fifth Raider to be inducted. Ham, a linebacker, was the second player from the Pittsburgh Steelers' "Steel Curtain" years to be honored, following "Mean Joe" Greene. Page, a long-time defensive tackle for Minnesota, became the second Viking to make the Hall, joining quarterback Fran Tarkenton.

Ditka, 48, was the No. 1 draft pick of the Bears in 1961 out of the University of Pittsburgh. He was named NFL rookie of the year after catching 56 passes for 1,076 yards and 12 touchdowns.

The 6-foot-3, 225-pound native of Carnegie, Pa., did not miss a start in 84 games with the Bears and earned All-Pro honors his first four seasons. In 12 seasons, he had 427 receptions for 5,812 yards and 43 touchdowns.

After being traded to the Philadelphia Eagles in 1967, Ditka finished his career with four seasons at Dallas. In 1971, he had 30 receptions and scored the clinching touchdown in the Cowboys' 24-3 victory over the Miami Dolphins in the 1972 Super Bowl.

He coached the Bears to a 46-10 victory over New England in the 1986 Super Bowl.

Biletnikoff, who will turn 45 later this month, spent 14 years catching passes for the Oakland Raiders. The 6-1, 190-pound flanker caught 589 passes — seventh best all-time — for 8,974 yards and 76 touchdowns.

The native of Erie, Pa., caught 40 or more passes for 10 straight seasons, and his 70 catches for 1,167 yards and 10 touchdowns in 19 postseason games were records at the time of his retirement.

Biletnikoff caught four passes for 79 yards to set up three Oakland scores in a 32-14 victory over Minnesota in the 1977 Super Bowl and was named the game's most valuable player.

Ham, 39, was an immediate starter for the Steelers, and missed only four games in his first 10 seasons in the NFL. The outside linebacker from Penn State finished a 12-year career with 25½ sacks, 21 fumble recoveries and 32 interceptions.

Ham, considered somewhat small for a linebacker at 225 pounds, played in Super Bowls in 1975, 1976 and 1979, but had to sit out the 1980 game because of injuries.

The Johnstown, Pa., native was named to eight straight Pro Bowls.

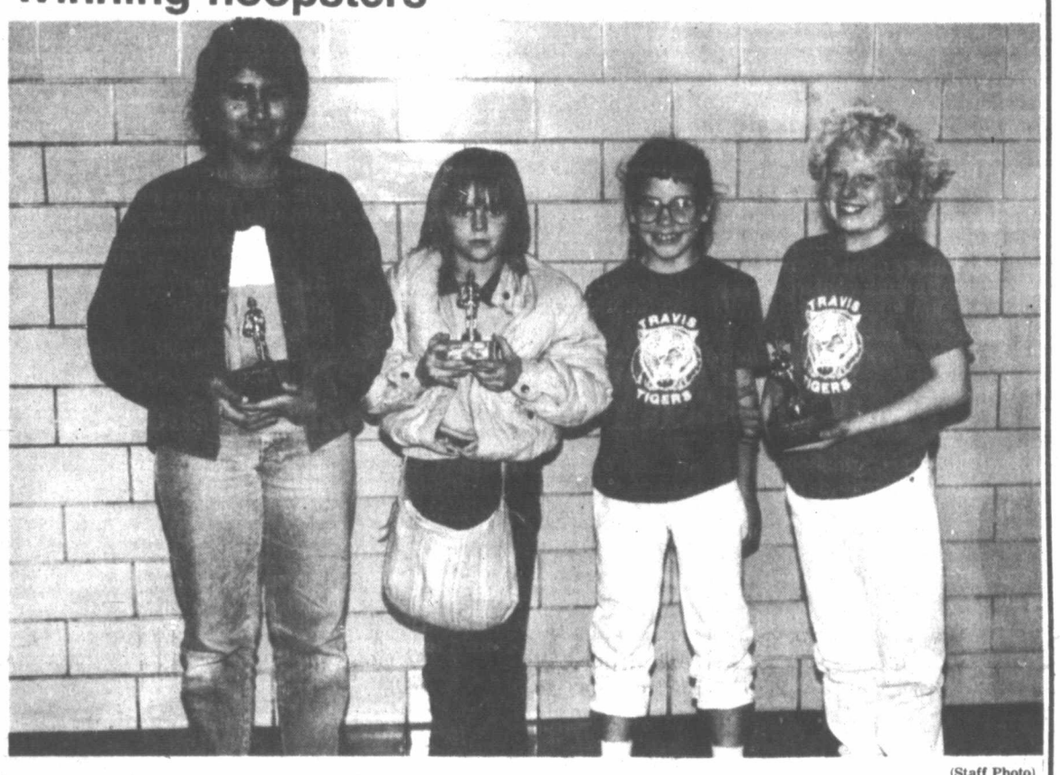

Page, a 42-year-old native of Canton, home of the Hall of Fame, in 1971 became the first defensive player to be named NFL most valuable player.

A graduate of Notre Dame, Page was the Vikings' second pick in the first round of the first combined AFL-NFL draft in 1967.

Unofficial statistics show Page blocked 28 kicks and had 164 sacks during his 15 seasons. In 1976, he had a career-high 21½ sacks. Page never missed a game during his career.

New members of the Hall of Fame are elected annually by a 29-member board of selectors, made up of media representatives from every league city and the president of the Pro Football Writers of America.

Broncos may undergo revamping after lopsided Super Bowl loss

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — In the aftermath of his team's still largely incomprehensible collapse in the Super Bowl, Denver Broncos Coach Dan Reeves talked of a thorough off-season re-evaluation and virtually promised there would be personnel changes among the players and even the coaching staff.

Reeves offered his post-game analysis Monday in San Diego before the Broncos returned home to a downtown parade, cheered on by up to 15,000 fans in 15-degree weather.

Reeves withheld specific judgments until he could study film of Sunday's 42-10 loss to the Washington Redskins. But a few obvious observations were in order.

"We need to evaluate everything," Reeves said. "We'll make whatever moves it takes to make us a better team.

"There's a difference between success and excellence, and we're not ready for excellence. But we didn't all of a sudden become a bad team, either.

"I don't think we need to make wholesale changes. We'll look in various areas of our personnel, but we'll also look at our coaching. When you get beat that badly, it's not just the fault of the players. We got outplayed and we got outcoached."

The defense, in particular, will get a hard look. The Broncos, who lost to the New York Giants 39-20 in last year's Super Bowl, now have surrendered 81 points in the last two Super Bowls.

Responding to suggestions that Denver needed bigger players up front on defense, Reeves said, "It's nice to have big guys, but you've got to cover people in the secondary, too. We didn't make any plays. They had four long scoring plays against us."

Reeves admitted the outcome might have been different had the Broncos scored a touchdown instead of a field goal on a possession inside the Washington 10 in the first quarter; had they not suffered a sack that took them out of field-goal range later; had they been given possession of a Washington fumble on a kickoff.

"I don't think we need to make wholesale changes. We'll look in various areas of our personnel, but we'll also look at our coaching. When you get beat that badly, it's not just the fault of the players. We got outplayed and we got outcoached."

— Dan Reeves

The Broncos dominated early, but squandered scoring chances and took only a 10-0 lead. Washington then roared back with five straight touchdowns in the second quarter.

"Washington was struggling and then all of a sudden they caught fire," he said. "They got seven points very easily (on an 80-yard pass from Doug Williams to Ricky Sanders). After that, we couldn't seem to slow them down."

Denver left the door open, Reeves said, when quarterback John Elway suffered a one-yard loss on a quarterback draw on third-and-three from the Washington 6, forcing the Broncos to settle for a field goal.

"It was a bad call," Reeves said, explaining that Washington had shifted into a defense prone to stop the play.

"Then we were in field-goal range again and we called a play where we thought we could get rid of the ball quickly. John pulled the ball down and started to scramble and he got trapped (sacked). He tried to make the big play. You can't take that out of his hands. But it took us out of field-goal range."

After Denver went up 10-0, Sanders fumbled the ensuing kickoff and Denver appeared to have recovered. But when the officials uncovered the pile, the Redskins had the ball.

Denver was unable to mount an effective counterpunch to the Washington flurry because the Redskins kept Elway on the run, Reeves said.

"More than anything else, the pressure they put on John kept us from matching them offensively. He couldn't really set his feet because he was on the run all the time."

Championship bike meet set at Lake McClellan

The World and National rounds of trials motorcycle championships will be held April 16-17 at Lake McClellan, south of Pampa.

The event is jointly-sponsored by the American Motorcyclist Association and the North American Trails Council.

The races are scheduled to start at 10 a.m. with the championship class scheduled to get underway an hour later.

Over 100 entries are expected and the public is invited to attend the two days of race competition.

Bernie Schreiber, who became the first American to win a world championship trial, will lay out the course. Schreiber is now retired from racing and operates a trials school.

All riders who complete the trial will receive finisher pins. In addition, each class winner will receive a trophies.

Harvesters meet Canyon in second-place skirmish

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

The District 1-4A basketball season has been almost like a roller coaster ride for the Pampa Harvesters, going from the top to the bottom, but never quite making it over that one big hump.

Pampa has gone from winning three straight to losing three straight, from a first-place tie to a fourth-place dip. Now, the Harvesters are chugging back toward the top again.

The Harvesters play at Canyon tonight and a win would give them a second-place tie with the Eagles. Coach Robert Hale is feeling good about the Harvesters' chances.

"Playing Canyon is like going home from school. You know how to get there, but the key is finding the right road," Hale said.

Hale is referring to Pampa's 66-52 win over Canyon to open the district season back in mid-December.

"We've been up and down all season, but now we're headed in the right direction again," Hale said. "We've had several big games this year, but this is probably the biggest one yet."

Canyon stands alone is second place with a 7-3 record after consecutive wins over Hereford and Lubbock Dunbar. Pampa has a 6-4 league mark with its 74-56 victory Friday night over Hereford to snap a three-game losing streak.

"Right now we're in a position where we don't have to have anybody help us," Hale said. "We can get there on our own."

A key to a victory tonight is rebounding, which helped the Harvesters roll over the Eagles in the first meeting.

"We're going to have to get on the boards again," Hale said. "It should be a very physical game."

Zac Parker, a 6-4 junior, is the player the Harvesters will have to stop. Parker scored 15 points in the first game between the two teams.

"He's their leading scorer and we'll have to do a good job on him," Hale added.

Eagles' guard Jimmy Dawson could also give the Harvesters trouble.

"He's probably their best outside shooter," Hale said.

Dustin Miller, a 6-4 junior, and Jason Farmer, a 6-2 senior, are Pampa's top two scorers. They combined for 52 points in the win over the Whitefaces. Miller is averaging 20 ppg and Farmer 14.4 in district play.

The girls' game tips off at 6:30 p.m., followed by the boys' tilt.

Wichita State upsets Bradley

College basketball

By The Associated Press

It was one of those nights for Wichita State, a night that could make Bradley's appearance in The Associated Press Top Twenty a brief stay.

"We could not have played any better offensively than we did tonight," Wichita State Coach Eddie Fogler said.

Dwayne Praylow was the perfect example.

Known as a defensive specialist, a player who comes off the bench to guard the opponent's leading scorer, Praylow was given only his second start of the season Monday night. The 6-foot-5 junior scored a career-high 24 points and grabbed nine rebounds to lead the Shockers to a 116-92 upset victory over 18th-ranked Bradley and into sole possession of first place in the Missouri Valley Conference.

"Tonight we just made everything," Fogler said. "You have to when you play Bradley or they will take the ball and break."

Only two other Top Twenty schools played Monday night, No. 4 Duke crushing Clemson 101-63 and Villanova upsetting No. 14 Georgetown 64-58.

Wichita State's victory gave the Shockers a 12-7 record overall and 5-2 league mark. Bradley fell to second place in the MVC at 4-2 and 13-3.

Praylow snapped a 67-67 tie with a 12-foot jumper with 12:17 left. Sasha Radunovich scored on a fast break and John Cooper hit a 13-footer. Suddenly, Wichita State was ahead 73-67.

Bradley's Hersey Hawkins, the nation's leading scorer, cut the margin to 76-73 with 9:34 remaining, but Radunovich scored four points and Lew Hill added three to give the Shockers an 83-73 lead with 6:50 left.

Hawkins scored 37 points before fouling out with more than four minutes remaining.

Radunovich and Hill scored 21 points apiece for the Shockers, who hit 19 of 23 free throws in the final seven minutes.

No. 4 Duke 101, Clemson 63

Sophomore Phil Henderson scored 18 points to lead No. 4 Duke over Clemson, enabling the Blue Devils to remain in first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Duke, 4-1 in the ACC and 14-2 overall, used a 26-8 scoring spurt to build a 54-26 halftime lead.

Henderson and Danny Ferry, who scored all of his 13 points in the opening 20 minutes, were the leaders as Duke pulled away after leading just 22-18 with 8:43 left in the first half. Henderson scored four points during a 10-0 run that made it 32-18 lead with 7:07 left in the half. Ferry scored eight points in two minutes as Duke made it 48-26 lead with 2:05 remaining in the half.

Freshman Donnell Bruce scored 15 points and Tim Kincaid added 13 for Clemson, 11-7 overall and 1-5 in the ACC.

Villanova 64, No. 14 Georgetown 58

In Philadelphia, Villanova's 7-foot-2 Tom Greis scored 21 points as the Wildcats built a 16-point lead early in the second half, then held on to upset Georgetown in a Big East Conference game. Mark Plansky scored 14 points and Gary Massey and Ken Wilson had 10 each for Villanova, which boosted its record to 15-6 overall and 7-3 in the Big East.

Mark Tillmon had 24 points and Charlie Smith 15 for Georgetown, 14-5 and 4-4.

Groom begins search for coach

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

GROOM — The search for a new coach is under way in Groom, as school board members met Monday night in an attempt to find a replacement for outgoing head coach and athletic director Terry Coffee and assistant Gary Rambo.

The board met with Lazbuddie coach C.W. Williams and Newcastle principal Jimmy Branch. Prior to becoming principal at Newcastle, Branch had coached at Dawson and Woodson, both six-man programs.

Groom principal Kenneth Sweatt did not offer any specific comments on either candidate, only to say that both have, "outstanding backgrounds and a lot of qualifications."

Sweatt did say the board is leaning toward eliminating one coaching position at the school and hiring a coach who has a background in both six-man football and basketball. He did, though, quell rumors that the school — with its drop to six-man football — would shift its athletic emphasis to basketball and away from football.

"There's no truth to that at all," Sweatt said. "Probably what has been heard is that we now have more basketball talent than football. We're sure not shifting the emphasis. We hope to keep it equal. We hope to move to six-man and make it work and we're pretty sure it will. The board is is looking for the best football coach it can find."

Rambo and Coffee announced their resignations in November, citing "outside influences" as hampering their abilities to coach well. The Tiger football team finished with a 6-3 record after winning four straight to open the season.

Rambo's boys basketball team, meanwhile, has compiled a 9-6 overall record this season. With a 5-1 district mark, the team is currently in a first place tie with the Claude Mustangs. The two teams were scheduled to meet tonight in the second of two district matchups, weather permitting.

In a non-board matter, Sweatt said superintendents of District 2 six-man schools are now leaning away from playing a round-robin type schedule in the upcoming football season.

Although an official decision cannot be made until later this month, superintendents from the six schools in District 2 had scheduled a meeting Wednesday in Amarillo to informally discuss the matter.

As early as last week, the consensus of the superintendents was a round-robin format would be favored, whereby the six schools in the district would play each other twice, with the first meeting between the two teams not affecting the outcome of the district standings.

The move to round-robin would enable schools to cut down on their travel expenses in scheduling non-district opponents.

"My guess is that it'll never happen," Sweatt said. "There have been several against it. For travel purposes, though, it would be great."

Six-man schools in the newly realigned District 2 include Groom, McLean, Miami, Lefors, Silverton and Higgins.

Bass requests salary increase

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros General Manager Bill Wood held a three-hour meeting with the agent for right fielder Kevin Bass to discuss a new contract.

Wood said the Astros began negotiations Monday on a multi-year contract for Bass, whose salary arbitration hearing has been scheduled for Feb. 15 in New York.

Bass, who could be eligible for free agency at the end of the upcoming season, has requested a salary of $930,000 for 1988. The Astros have countered with a salary offer of $730,000. Both parties can avoid the arbitration process by reaching an agreement in the next two weeks.

The Astros are expected to reach agreement with utility man Jim Pankovits before his scheduled Feb. 12 arbitration hearing. Pankovits has requested $150,000. The Astros offered $135,000.

Pampa netters place second in Amarillo JV tournament

Pampa's junior varsity girls tennis team finished 2nd in last weekend's Amarillo J.V. tournament, 51 points behind 1st place Amarillo High. The Sandies' J.V. racked up 68 points for the runaway win.

The boy's J.V. team finished 5th in the six team field with 34 points. Again, AHS also won in the boy's bracket with 66 points.

The Harvester girls were led by Janee Thompson and Shannon Simmons who finished 3rd and 4th in singles competition.

Thompson defeated Palo Duro's Pam Erwin in the quarterfinals, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 but went on to lose 2-6, 2-6 in the semifinals to Hereford's Kirsten Abeux.

Simmons beat Tascosa's Cathy Culver 3-6, 6-2, 6-0 in the quarters, but was defeated in the semis, 3-6, 4-6, by eventual champion Kim Clark of Amarillo.

The girls doubles teams of Jennifer Byrd and Tanya Ruff, and Mitzi Hupp and Brandie Poore finished 5th and 6th.

For the boys, Pampa's Kenny Smith placed 3rd in singles. Smith beat Hereford's Matt Keenan 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 in the 3rd place match.

Also, Justin Eddins placed 11th in singles; Brad Chambers and Edward Dunnigan finshed 9th in doubles; Whit White and Jacob Prater placed 10th.

"Kenny Smith is going to be a very good player to watch for," Harvester tennis coach Jay Barrett said. "He really showed a great desire to win tennis matches any way he could, whether from the baselines or at the net.

"From watching what the J.V. did in Amarillo, I can only see the tennis program getting stronger. By this time next year, I think 'Pampa tennis' will be the watch words as far as Panhandle tennis is concerned."

Teams involved in the Amarillo J.V. tournament included AHS, Tascosa, Caprock, Palo Duro and Hereford.

Shockers down Herd

Greg Fergerson tossed in 22 points to lead the Pampa Shockers to a 66-49 win over Hereford in a junior varsity basketball game Friday night.

It was Pampa's first win over Hereford in three tries this season.

Pampa JVs will play next at Canyon Friday night.

Turkey hunts are slated

AUSTIN — Hunters are reminded that completed application forms must be received by Feb. 15 for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department's spring turkey public hunts in April.

The gobbler-only hunts will be conducted on selected days during the April 2-24 spring turkey gobbler season at six state wildlife management areas.

Prospective hunters may obtain application forms by writing TPWD headquarters, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, Tex. 78744, or by calling toll-free 1-800-792-1112.

Application cards are found on the back of the "Hunting Opportunities" booklet for Type I WMAs.

A total of 380 permits will be issued, and a fee of $20 will be charged hunters whose names are drawn to hunt. The bag limit will be one turkey gobbler.
