WOMAN FLIES OCEAN BUT IS SHORT OF GOAL

By United Press
Mrs. Beryl Markham, 31-year-old London society woman, landed Saturday at 12.30 p. m. in a rough field in a fishing village in Nova Scotia after piloting her monoplane over the Atlantic.

Mrs. Markham was the first woman to complete an east to west flight alone.

Her low-winged monoplane came down when her fuel supply ran out, and she was wrecked. Mrs. Markham had only minor injuries. She was considerably tired and disappointed because she did not reach her destination at New York.

Mrs. Markham took off from London Friday.

Wells Near Here Deepened, Cleaned

The Texas & Pacific Company's No. 17 Copeland, five miles north of Ranger, which is being deepened to some pay horizon expected between 3,550 and 3,900 feet, Saturday had been taken to 3,750 feet.

The well, located on the J. P. Rohms survey, was brought in about 15 years ago for some oil production.

After being acidized, Dorothy Oil Company Saturday was cleaning out its No. 1 Holcomb Heirs, located three miles east of Eastland in section 1, block 4, H&TC survey. The well came in recently between 1,485 and 1,508 feet for initial production of 20 barrels of oil and 1,250,000 cubic feet of gas.

The exhibit will be under the supervision of Otis Lerner of Abilene, district screw worm specialist with the U. S. Bureau of Entomology and who cooperates with the state extension service.

Lerner, urging farmers and stockmen to see the exhibit, pointed out that the pest costs livestock raisers of Eastland County hundreds of dollars each year in labor, drugs and losses.

H. C. Davis of Eastland, fair superintendent, has promised a choice location for the screw worm exhibit. Lerner will be ready to answer any inquiry and explain methods of control at the exhibit, it was stated.

Seventeen Cars 'Jump' Rails Near Cisco Saturday

Seventeen refrigerator cars on a Texas and Pacific freight train from California were derailed Saturday afternoon three miles and one-half west of Cisco.

The accident, officials stated, was caused from a broken flange on one of the cars.

A delay of 16 hours until noon today, in passenger and freight service of the company's trains was predicted as a result of the accident.

Four cars separated the 17 from the engine.

No injury was reported.

Ready to Guard Government's Bullion Billions

Soon to receive into its impregnable, underground vaults the $10,600,000,000 hoard which Uncle Sam will ship across the nation in 50 or more armored trains, the federal gold depository at Fort Knox, Ky., is pictured above, near completion. At each corner can be seen one of the machine gun turrets which, with every scientific device from torch-proof steel to "electric eyes," will be used to guard the federal strongbox. Visible, also, are the two moats circling the building which, at the touch of a button, can release their water to flood the bullion-laden vaults.

The following directors were elected to three year terms for the period beginning Oct. 1: Frank T. Crowell, Rev. Charles W. Estes, J. E. Lewis, Sr., T. E. Richardson and Lucas.

Tradition that Degree from Harvard Is Aid to Graduates In Business Is Shattered By '11 Class Survey

BY HARTZELL SPENCE
United Press Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK—Harvard graduates are no better off than other college men 25 years after commencement, John R. Tunis concludes in a new book, "Was College Worth While?" published by Harcourt, Brace.

Hard as this may be on the dignity of America's oldest educational institution, it is no less painful to Tunis, himself, a member of the class of 1911. It was his personal interest in that class, 25 years after graduation, that led the author into the revealing if confounding bypaths of his classmates.

He found 541, or 86 per cent, of the living graduates of Harvard 1911. Their status, for men launched into the world with educational silver spoons in their mouths, is disconcerting to the author. "For these men have contributed no more to the world, made no more money, and certainly are no happier, than the 1911 graduates of Nebraska or Siwash.

But Tunis cannot answer the title question of his book. Measured by contributions to the world of those Harvardmen of 1911, their education was not worth while. Speaking for themselves, however, the men from Cambridge say their schooling was of incalculable esthetic and social value, even if it didn't help them earn a dime.

But collectively, Tunis woefully admits, his class has "done little for the world at large beyond the fact that many of us have been good citizens, raised families, and paid taxes."

The author excuses his generation somewhat because, six years out of college, these men were thrust into the World War, and 10 years after they returned home and made a new start, the depression overtook them and uprooted their lives anew.

What is the Harvard graduate like after 25 years? From this book we get the following picture: Mr. Harvard is 46 years old, vigorously healthy, with an income of $4,400 yearly. He is proud of his wife, a graduate of Wellesley or Radcliffe who earns her own spending money outside her home. He has two children, and his sons are now at Harvard, or in private preparatory schools.

He is a vehement Republican, a bitter anti-New Dealer, but does nothing to correct government abuse except to criticize. He goes to church and is fundamentally religious. He reads 10 books a year, the Saturday Evening Post, and the newspaper sports pages. His radio tunes out symphony, tunes in Eddie Cantor.

In summer he plays a good game of tennis, and miserable golf. In winter he skis and pursues energetically a hobby such as stamp collecting. He works 13 hours a day and in the evening likes to drink whiskey with his friends. But he cannot even write a business letter with correct grammar, punctuation and spelling.

The book runs along interestingly, not statistically. It tells of the Harvard graduate of 1911 who, a hobo, hasn't slept in a bed in five years, and of courageous battles of these Harvardmen to start new professions after losing their shirts in the depression. Now 14 per cent of the class of 1911 is on relief, and fully 50 per cent is dissatisfied with its life work.

One salient fact is that more graduates of Harvard in 1911 became bona fide dirt farmers than did graduates of the University of Nebraska the same year.

The author draws of statistics from several other schools to show that Harvardmen, after all, are not untypical of a whole generation.

VANGUARD OF DEMOS ARRIVE FOR MEETING

By United Press

FORT WORTH, Sept. 5.—Texas Democratic leaders went into activity tonight and laid the groundwork for their bi-annual meeting. Controversial matters, they hoped, would be settled Sunday and Monday before the main group arrive.

A committee will meet Monday to recommend a program for the Tuesday session.

Whether the convention will last one or two days had not been decided. A Fort Worth member said the most favored proposal was for a two-day session. Nearly every prominent Democrat of the state and many from out-of-state planned to attend.

Indications are that the platform will be progressive. The convention leaders indicated, will probably endorse the federal labor amendment defeated four times in the legislature.

Every effort might be made to have the convention favor a special session of the state legislature to raise revenue for pensions. Such a procedure would help the responsibility of the cause from Governor Allred.

The Girls soft ball team from Eastland defeated the Powell Grocery girls of Ranger in a fast game at the Ranger Municipal Soft Ball field Friday night to the tune of 6 to 5. The defeat of the Powell team Friday leaves the two teams in a tie, each having 500 game each. It has been announced by the management of the Powell team that a challenge has been issued to Eastland for a playoff.

Robinson Grocery defeated Gorman 10 to 9. Robinson scored 4 runs in both the first and second innings and Gorman two. The seventh inning rally by Gorman had the fans on their toes and it looked as though the game might go into extra innings.

Landon's Fundamental Principles

The only possible explanation for Gov. Alf M. Landon's strict adherence to what he called "fundamental principles" in his second major campaign speech delivered at Middlesex, Pennsylvania, is that he was not yet ready to discuss details. A full month after his speech of acceptance and ten weeks after his nomination, he displayed a definite determination not to commit himself on a single issue of the campaign.

That this is true was demonstrated in the blunt comment in the Old Guard newspapers on the governor's long-heralded effort. Some of it revealed a degree of disappointment that bordered on disgust. For example in the orthodox Washington Post we read:

"It was disappointing to those who expected a discussion of specific issues or an explanation of how he would go about attaining certain objectives and remedies which he recited, such as those contained in his assertion that 'The American remedy for unemployment is real work at good wages,' and again, 'The remedy for monopoly and special privilege is to do away with them.'"

"It is no longer a secret that several of Gov. Landon's close advisers wished him to be more specific."

And truly the human mind is incapable of conjuring anything more "general" than were his remarks. "We see men, women and children living in the home," he asserted. "We see that the family and the home are the foundation of national life," he continued. This merely served as a reminder that more than two million such rural and urban homes were saved from immediate foreclosure by direct loans from Roosevelt recovery agencies and as many more by the restored credit of private lending agencies. "We also see," he rambled on, "the heads of families assuming responsibility for their (the families') support." All of which we can recall having seen. And we can remember even more vividly that heads of families continued with that normal responsibility until 12 years of reactionary control in this country forced the responsibility upon the credit of the Federal government.

Naturally the independent press could find nothing creditable in the essay. The Scripps-Howard papers treated the candidate kindly: "Our readers will give us credit for being patient with Gov. Landon," they said, "but this major speech of this major party's candidate is so utterly nothing that it is an affront to the American people who are asked to elect him President. There is nothing in it to take hold of. And we tried to foist a second-class candidate upon them. This apology is due first from that little group who built up the myth of the man Landon. It is due then from those ponderous personages who, one after another, made the pilgrimage to Topeka and returned home saying 'He'll do.' Because, on his performance to date, he simply won't do."

Another interesting point was brought out in the Washington Post's review of the effort in the coal and steel center, where coal and steel were not mentioned: "Gov. Landon's address was similar to that delivered before the Republican National Convention by former President Herbert Hoover. In essence, the Landon speech and the Hoover address of last June closely paralleled each other, with the exception that the Republican nominee placed a greater emphasis on the imperfections of the present system."

THE COUNCIL IN JERUSALEM

Text: Acts 15:1-35; Galatians 2

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D.

Editor of Advance

THE coming into the early church of Gentile converts brought problems that might have seemed easy of solution, but were difficult because the Jewish converts brought with them into their new faith in Jesus the faith and forms of Judaism.

Paul did not think of himself as less a Jew because he was a follower of Jesus. On the contrary, he believed that, in accepting Jesus as the Messiah, he was following out the teachings and prophecies of the religion in which he had been trained. Thus he said that he worshiped the God of his Fathers, though it was in the way that his former associates called heresy.

The most acute problem that confronted the church concerned the matter of circumcision. This was a rite that occupied much the same place in Judaism that baptism has occupied in the Christian church; and if we think of the Jewish converts as narrowminded and attaching undue importance to forms in ascertaining that the Gentile converts to Christianity should be circumcised, we need only imagine what would happen even today if someone proposed that baptism should not be insisted upon.

THE council at Jerusalem decided that it was not necessary that the Gentile converts should be circumcised. All that was required of them was that they should fulfill the moral law. The momentous nature of this decision can hardly be overemphasized. It meant that, in the first great issue that faced the church, the decision was for reality and not for form. It meant that the new religion was to be as broad as humanity in its scope, and not merely a new sect of Judaism.

It would be well if the church had always met similar issues with the same sanity of vision, and with the same largeness of view.

Again and again through less wise decisions of churches and church leaders, things "too grievous to be borne" have been imposed upon new converts, things that had little to do with the fundamental matter of true character and loyalty to Christ. Christians learn slowly to put first things first. The history of the church is a history of elevating creeds, forms, practices, and sometimes prejudices to the place that only Christ should have in the Christian heart and mind and in the Christian fellowship.

Clipper Planes Not Ships By Ruling

By United Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Pan American Highways' three trans-Pacific flyers, the China, Hawaiian and Philippine Clippers, will have exemption from taxation on the grounds that the transoceanic clippers were vessels and thus exempt from taxation under a section of the state constitution.

Webb ruled, however, that clippers are to avoid taxation in California, according to the latest ruling of state taxation authorities.

Attorney General U. S. Webb has ruled that the clippers are taxable in California if they are habitually at the Alameda airport. The company had demanded exemption from taxation on the grounds that the transoceanic clippers were vessels and thus exempt from taxation under a section of the state constitution.

Webb ruled, however, that clippers are to avoid taxation in California, according to the latest ruling much as most of their travel is in the air. He also expressed doubt that when California legislators in 1914 enacted the present taxation law as regards vessels that they were farsighted enough to have foreseen and intentionally included trans-Pacific airplanes within the exemptions of the law.

The tax fight now hinges on the interpretation of what is meant by the word "habitual" as regards the amount of time the clippers spend at their Alameda base.

Quins' Work Never Done, Even on Labor Day

There are labor difficulties at Calander, it appears. While Marie and Yvonne sharpen their appetites with setting-up exercises, Cecile and Emilie, at left, and Annette, right, apparently wait their noon lunch. A few moments later, and all the tiny laborers appear concerned about the delayed viands. Maybe that bottom scene portrays a sidown strike in protest.

New Rules For Exhibits In Women's Department of Fair Are Explained

Mrs. James Horton of Eastland, chairman of the women's department of the Eastland County Centennial Fair, Sept. 16-19, released the following statement Saturday. Committees for the Women's Department of the County Fair have been working for the past several weeks. It is the plan this year to make this department bigger and better than ever before. This is Texas Centennial year and Eastland County women want to show their loyalty to this celebration.

President of the County Federation, Mrs. Brown of Cisco is busy urging women of her town to contribute to this fair. Other towns are doing likewise.

There will be no prizes in this department, but blue, red and white ribbons will be awarded for 1st, 2nd, and 3rd places respectively. In the past our Wednesday night and Saturday night exhibits have been very unsatisfactory, due to late entries and early withdrawals. The new rules are that:

"Exhibits will be accepted from 3 P. M. Tuesday, Sept. 15th till 6 P. M. and from 8:30 A. M. till 12 noon Wed., Sept. 16th. Nothing will be accepted after this hour."

"All exhibits will remain in place through Saturday night and can be called for Monday morning."

"There will be competent disinterested judges in each department who will judge and place ribbons as awarded between the hours of 12 and 2 on Wednesday. Thereafter all exhibits will be on display."

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

DESSERTS made in ring molds always look attractive.

They're popular, too, because it's so easy by varying the center filling to make the dish seem different each time it's served.

"Hungarian Cream," made with sour cream, is a delicious ring mold pudding that never fails.

Fresh fruit, strawberry jam, and peach preserves are all delicious as a center filling. If you do not have a ring mold or prefer some other form, the pudding will turn out just as successfully.

Here is the recipe:

Hungarian Cream for Six
1-2 pint sour cream, 2 eggs, 3 tablespoons sugar, 1-2 teaspoon vanilla, fruit or preserves.

First, beat the whites very stiff. Next, beat the yolks with the sugar until light and fluffy.

Mix the egg yolks, sugar and stiff whites with the sour cream. Soak the gelatin in 1-2 cup of cold milk (use a tin measuring cup for this) for 5 minutes and then place the cup over a little boiling water until the gelatin dissolves completely.

Add the dissolved gelatin to the other mixture. Mix well.

Add the vanilla.

Pour the pudding into a mold lined with cold water and chill in the refrigerator about 1-2 to 2 hours, minimum.

Unmold, and if a ring-mold is used, fill the center with preserves, strawberry, peach, cherry or any other filling you choose.

Another variation is to add 1-2 cup of preserves to the pudding before chilling.

This gives a pretty effect when unmolded because the preserves will force a ring around the top of the pudding.

Monday's Menu

BREAKFAST: Uncooked cereal with sliced peaches and cream, boiled eggs, toast and coffee.

LUNCHEON: Nut bread and cream cheese sandwiches, minced ham sandwiches, salad of celery, pineapple and dates, cookies, tea, milk.

DINNER: Melon balls, breaded veal cutlets, succotash, salad of mixed greens with Roquefort dressing, Hungarian cream ring mold with raspberries and sliced bananas.

This Hungarian Cream is lighter and much more delicate than any custard or cornstarch pudding.

Here's another recipe to dress up a simple meal—chocolate whipped cream to be used on left-over cake or as a substitute for frosting on a fresh cake.

Chocolate Whipped Cream
1-2 cup whipping cream, 1-3 cup sugar, 1-2 tablespoon cocoa, 1-4 teas. vanilla.

Mix all these ingredients together gently with a spoon. Don't beat them.

The cocoa should be somewhat dissolved.

Let stand in the refrigerator for at least one hour and then whip the mixture with a beater until it is stiff enough to spread.

Spread over slices of left-over cake, thus disguising it as a very different and delicious dessert.

If the weather is warm, put the cream on the cake shortly before serving so that it will not make the cake soggy. This also prevents the cream from melting.

Improvements Add Much to Comfort Of Rail Travel

Installation of improved lighting facilities, air conditioning, and many other improvements, practically all of which are designed to add comfort to the traveling public, has resulted in a greater demand for electricity on trains to day than ever before. How to in- crease the amount of electric pow- er available for such purposes and adequately meet a demand that is constantly growing is a problem that is being seriously studied by the railroads of this country.

Due to the fact the general pub- lic is becoming more and more ac- customed to a higher intensity of illumination in their homes and places of business, the railroads are being called upon to provide illumination of comparable inten- sity in passenger cars. The trend to artistic effects in illumination also requires an increased amount of power.

Some idea as to the amount of electrical power required for a passenger car is indicated by the fact that a standard Pullman car moving in a train generates for its own use enough electrical power to light approximately four ordi- nary homes. These cars have from 80 to more than 100 electric lights. In addition, there are elec- tric fans and other electrical ap- pliances. Facilities are even pro- vided so that a female passenger can make use of an electric curling iron. In the club cars, toasters, coffee kettles, drink mixers and various other appliances are op- erated by electricity. A few railroads also use electricity for cooking.

Present-day passenger trains constitute mobile generating plants. Each Pullman or other pas- senger car must produce its own electricity. This is done by means of belts that connect generators with the axles of the car wheels. As electric power can only be produced by this means when the train is in motion, storage bat- teries under each car are available for emergency purposes or to keep the lights bright when the car is standing still. These storage bat- teries are capable of supplying electricity for from six to eight hours on the average car.

To meet the increasing demands for electricity, the output of axle generators on passenger cars has in recent years been greatly in- creased. In some cases the output has been doubled while in other cases it is three and four times greater than a few years ago. At the same time, the capacities of the storage batteries have also been doubled and in some cases trebled.

The greater volume of electrical power required on the newer trains for improved lighting and air conditioning equipment is being obtained in different ways. Where a car must at times act as an individual unit and supply its own electric current, the largest axle generator equipments so far found suitable for such purposes, and batteries are being used. Where the train remains intact throughout its run, a steam turbine or Diesel engine driven power plant is being used at the head end of the train, the current being transmitted to each car by means of heavy wires run- ning the length of the train. Al- ternating current is usually used with a transformer on each car in order to furnish the current at the proper voltage. Where batteries may be required on such car, means are being provided for changing the alternating current to direct current suitable for charging these batteries.

Black Eye of State Official Is All that Remains of Incident

AUSTIN—Apologies have been made and a black eye is clearing up rapidly so there will be no trace left of an East Texas in- cident that for a time threatened strained relations between county and state officials.

The state official was driving through an East Texas sheriff's county when an automobile with two passengers crowded him off the road. The state official remon- strated. The other car crowded him to a standstill. One of the two men in the car was the sheriff—the other his chief deputy. Out- come was that the state official landed in an East Texas jail. There he received a black eye.

To assuage his feelings he has the personally autographed mem- oranda from the chief deputy sheriff that the official's arrest was not justified and his assault in jail "totally unwarranted."

"I regret the incident ever oc- curred and take this means of ten- dering my apologies, personally and officially," he wrote.

Closer Checks On Tree Fires Possible

By United Press

WASHINGTON—To help in de- termining the degree of fire haz- ard, plans for a cumulative humid- ity record have been adopted at Grand Teton National Park, Wyo., the Interior Department has an- nounced. The region Four Fire Control Manual of the United States Forest Service will form the basis of the project.

Daily humidity records were started on June 11, using 37 per cent relative humidity as the normal average. Readings for an eight-day period thereafter indi- cated a slight excess of moisture over normal years. Further con- clusions will be announced from time to time.

Two CCC camps are assigned to Grand Teton National Park and are available, at the first reports of forest fires, to carry out the technique of suppression and fire control which are among the duties in which all enrollees are drilled.

Infra-red panoramic photo- graphs, taken for forestry tech- nicians of the National Park Service, also are helpful in early detection of forest fire, says the department.

These photographs sharpen all outlines, clearly define the hori- zon, regardless of any ordinary haze present when the picture is taken, and provide a panoramic picture by use of which, check- ing with a map, the fire lookout can may quickly determine the location of suspicious smoke.

"Where Did You Get It?"

Sometimes, in a friend's house, you see a partic- ularly handsome rug or lamp, a new vacuum cleaner, an attractive chair or table. Or per- haps it's a new coat or dress, or some delicious new food-product.

You ask: "Where did you get it?"

Your friend says: "I got it at Blanks."

You don't ask: "How did you know Blanks had it?"

There is no need to ask; there is no mystery about that. You know your friend reads the ad- vertisements in this paper. You merely sight en- viously, and think: "I must have missed reading the ads that day."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JUDITH HOWARD, engaged to STEPHEN FOWLER, for four years, breaks the engagement because Stephen is unwilling to marry her and let her continue with her job. Judith is encouraged in this move by her friend, VIRGINIA HENT.

Lonely and unhappy, Judith goes for a walk and steps in front of an approaching automobile. To avoid hitting her, the driver swerves and strikes a fire hydrant. He is injured and taken to a hospital. Judith, feeling responsible, goes along.

At the hospital young FR. EDEN HARRIS tells her the motorist's injuries are not serious. Later Dr. Harris takes her home. In a burst of confidence Judith tells him about her broken engagement.

The next day Judith goes to the office of FRANCIS JARVIS, the thoughtless, several days pass and Dr. Harris invites Judith to dinner. Later he is obliged to break the engagement.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER IX

JUDITH'S murmured regret gave no real indication of how deep her disappointment really was.

For weeks she had been practically alone with her thoughts. Those had been weeks whose monotony was broken only by the occasional visits of the Bents; and even those visits had become unwelcome, for they only reminded her of Steve Fowler.

Since the night she had met Dr. Eden Harris she had recalled him often, remembering his sympathetic manner, but remembering best of all his gaiety. His telephone invitation tonight had been like a ray of sunlight breaking through dull gray skies. And now he was being called away on an emergency case.

She had eaten many a dinner alone, but none had seemed more lonely than this one. Fortunately the food was excellent, but with every bite Judith wished that this evening Harris could have been spared from a call. She was just finishing her dessert when a waiter brought a telephone, plugged it into the wall of the booth.

"For you, Miss." It was Harris. "I'm awfully sorry, Judith. But I'm stuck—and probably until dawn. I'll phone you again soon, if I may."

"Oh, I'm sorry, Doctor Harris. I'd hoped you might be able to come back."

SLOWLY she replaced the instrument in its cradle, stared at it malevolently as if somehow it were responsible for the spoiled evening. It was just as she was leaving the restaurant that she ran into Mrs. Jerry Macdonald, the young wife of one of the junior executives in the office where she worked.

"Hello—there, Miss Howard!" Judith extended her hand gaily.

"Where's Steve?" Once Steve and Judith had gone to dinner at the Macdonalds, and Mrs. Macdonald was still firmly convinced that they were to be married.

"Steve had to work tonight," Judith fibbed.

Mrs. Macdonald smiled. "I suppose Steve is going to join you later. I'm awfully glad to know he's doing so well. I saw him the other day in that new car of his! And I think it's wonderful he should get in on that new city contract, don't you?"

"Yes," Judith faltered. "I really must be getting along. I'm sorry I can't accept your invitation." Behind the effusive woman she glimpsed Jerry Macdonald pushing his way through the crowd. With a departing smile for Mrs. Macdonald, she hurriedly fled.

On the street car Judith's mind was filled with bewilderment and conflicting thoughts. She had heard nothing of "getting in on" a new city contract—but then, she reminded herself—there was no real reason now that she should have heard it.

In the days that followed she said nothing to the Bents about the news intimated by Mrs. Macdonald. But through the newspaper she learned that the city was putting in a vast new water system north of town, and she concluded that it was in this deal that Steve must have figured. One of the leading manufacturers of his firm was a patented pipe, and for long time Steve had been working to get it approved by the city engineering department. Apparently he had at last succeeded.

SHE found herself waiting for a telephone call from Steve, telling her of his good fortune. To whom else would he tell it, if not to her?

Then one evening, after Judith had washed and put away the few dinner dishes she found necessary for a lone meal, there was a rap at the door. It wasn't the knock of either Bob or Virginia, and Judith could think of no one else who would be behind that door but Stephen Fowler. Feeling the blood mount to her temples, she discarded her apron and went into the little hallway opened the door with a trembling hand.

There stood Francis Jarvis, hat and stick in hand, smiling pleasantly.

"Good evening, Miss Howard. I hope you won't mind my calling unannounced like this. Matter of fact, I tried to telephone you this afternoon."

"Please sit down," Judith said. "I hope you've quite recovered from your accident." She held out a box of cigarettes.

From behind a gray cloud of cigarette smoke he studied her. Then: "You know, I've thought about you a great deal since you were in my office."

"Yes?" Judith said, not knowing what else to say.

"Yes," he repeated. "A great deal. You—you intrigued me."

It was then that Judith noticed something she hadn't detected when he first appeared. A faint thickness in his speech, an odd glint in his dark eyes, told her that Francis Jarvis had been drinking.

"Indeed, yes," Jarvis was saying. "You intrigued me very much. I—" He stopped, looked at her. "You know, of course, that I'm not married."

Judith laughed pleasantly. "I must confess I didn't know it, Mr. Jarvis. It's something I hadn't thought about."

"Of course not," he agreed. But plainly he was nettled by the remark. He leaned forward suddenly.

"Look here. You can't make me believe you came to my office that day just for the purpose of taking responsibility for the accident."

Judith's face suddenly paled with anger. "For what other purpose would I come?"

"Well . . . Jarvis smiled. "It's interesting to speculate upon that. A number of possibilities occur to me. For instance—"

"I'd rather not hear of the possibilities," Judith told him, rising from her chair. "I was in your office for the purpose I stated."

Jarvis held up a hand. "Oh, it's merely speculation. For instance, I was thinking that you'll soon be taking your vacation. And that I might possibly arrange to have you away at the same time. Had you thought of a really exciting vacation—something like Honolulu or Bermuda? Or you might consider Alaska or California. Somewhere that—"

"Please get out," Judith said quietly, her lips dry and bloodless. "Please get out of here. Now!"

Jarvis only smiled. "Can't we dispense with all the prolog, Judith Howard? Let's just pretend we've been through all that. Let's—"

He stopped at the sound of a knock on the door. Clearly Judith said slowly, facing Eden, "this is Francis Jarvis. You recall him, don't you? I've just asked him to leave—but he seems to feel that I'm not serious about the invitation."

TURNING TO THE GENTILES

Text: Acts 14:8-13, 19, 20; Romans 10:8-13

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

THE method of Paul's ministry in his missionary journeys seems to have been to get in touch with those of his own race whenever he visited an ancient city.

Sometimes his Jewish brethren accepted Paul's interpretation of the fulfillment of the Old Testament visions and prophecies in Jesus of Nazareth; at other times they were so opposed to Paul and his new teaching that they met him in the spirit of persecution in which he himself had at first confronted Stephen and the early Christian disciples.

But Paul did not confine his ministry and mission to the Jews. It quickly became evident to him that the Gospel was not limited to any race or nation, but that it was the power of God unto salvation to all who believed.

IN our lesson we find Paul in the city of Lystra, outside the immediate Jewish circles. There sat a cripple, unable to walk, who had been that way from birth. This cripple, hearing Paul speak, apparently had faith to be healed, and Paul, perceiving this, commanded him to stand.

The cripple leaped up and stood. And when the multitude saw what had happened, in the terms of their own pagan religion, they were convinced that the gods had come down to their city in the likeness of men.

So they called Barnabas "Jupiter," and Paul "Mercury." And the priest of Jupiter brought even and garlands to the gates of the city to do sacrifice in honor of the gods who had come among them.

But Paul and Barnabas protested. "We also are men of like passions with you and bring you good tidings that ye should turn from these vain things unto the living God."

It was the only thing that Paul and Barnabas could do. Nevertheless, it required very great courage, for in a sense they were rebuking the religious ideas of these dwellers in the pagan city. They were exposing themselves to the danger that quickly arises when a mob is diverted from its purpose; when praise may be changed in a moment to misunderstanding and hate.

THE two Christian missionaries made the event the occasion for telling the story of the living God and of Jesus, the Savior of men, with the result that some were brought under the power of the new religion.

But how quickly the attitude of a mob can change! Jews who came from Antioch and Iconium, where Paul had been, so effectively misrepresented Paul and Barnabas that the multitude stoned Paul and dragged him out of the city, believing he was dead. Barnabas escaped and the next day Paul and Barnabas went on to Derbe.

Thus we see, in the beginning, the course of Paul being shaped by persecution. He was fulfilling in very truth the command of Jesus to his disciples. "When they persecute in one city, flee to another."

But the necessity of preaching the Gospel had laid such hold upon him that no form of persecution could defeat his purpose.

"Even though the alfalfa was sown late, it was effective in raising the elevation of these strips," Mr. Goodloe states. "Deposits of dirt around the alfalfa plants range from a quarter of an inch to six inches deep," was another statement made by Mr. Goodloe.

Mr. Goodloe prefers fall planting of alfalfa due to the fact that weed infestation appears in spring plantings. He used a weeding hoe to get rid of the weeds this spring. The rate of seeding was 18 pounds per acre.

Cotton is rotated with wheat or oats between the alfalfa strips.

Alfalfa Planted As Soil Conserver Is Paying Dividends

WAXAHACHIE, Tex. — Approximately $17.70 per acre is the income to date from alfalfa grown on the R. G. Goodloe farm, a Soil Conservation camp co-operator in the Red Oak community. The alfalfa was planted March 23 in strips which are used instead of terraces for erosion control.

Ten acres of these strips yielded 5 tons the first cutting and seven tons the second cutting. Mr. Goodloe expects two more cuttings this year if the droughty conditions do not continue.

Mr. Goodloe states that the two rows of cotton nearest these alfalfa strips are taller and more productive. He estimates the cotton in this strip cropped field at from a quarter to a half bale per acre.

Based on present prices the income from alfalfa should be greater than from cotton. Soil improvement payment will be made on the alfalfa acreage.

Gifts May End the Chautauqua Deficit

By United Press
CHATAUQUA, N. Y. — The Chautauqua institution, entering its 63rd year, appears well on the way to financial recovery after three years of indebtedness under receivership.

Led by Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas who telegraphed a contribution of $50, supporters of the institution have donated more than $55,000. In addition, leaders have the promise of a third of the $95,000 yet to be raised, on condition the other two-thirds of that amount is contributed.

Highlights of support in addition to Gov. Landon's gift included an unexpected donation by Mrs. Mina Edison Hughes of a $10,000 memorial to her former husband, the late Thomas A. Edison. Mrs. Hughes is a daughter of Lewis Miller, co-founder of Chautauqua.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph H. Norton, Chicago, have offered to pay $1 for every $2 contributed, up to $35,000, which would more than make up the deficit. They announced "the additional subscription is given on the condition that the entire $150,000 . . . shall be subscribed."

Eastland's football players were small last year. But compared to Ranger's this year they were "Cardiff Giants."

"Say, you 'thought Eastland's players were small last year, didn't you?" asked a Ranger friend last week as he invited us to see the Bulldogs working out under Coach Baker Wright.

With possibly two exceptions, all the boys working out were of junior high school size. One fellow, about 14, was on the field. The Ranger fan explained humorously, however, that he wasn't working out.

Rankin Britt, who will likely visit to the public. Classes and departments for all ages. Strangers and visitors welcome.

Morning worship, 11 o'clock. Subject, "Old Age Pension." This is a timely topic. Help make this a special day for the aged people of the community.

Anyone wishing to attend and having no conveyance, call 26 and someone will come for you.

Much concern in the hearts of those growing old with age. We desire to help create new courage and hope in everyone.

This promises to be a wonderful service. Come thou with us, and we do thee good.

All members of this church are urged to be present. All friends interested in the future welfare of the Presbyterian church kindly invited.

All our services were well attended last Sunday. We appreciate your presence at any or all of our services. Our Sunday school showed a large increase, and we are expecting to see new faces each Sunday. Our mid-week prayer meetings are growing in numbers and interest. For the past two weeks we have had more than 40 present. For the prayer meeting next week, read the third chapter of St. John. After reading this chapter sit down and write two questions that you would like to hear discussed at the meeting, from this chapter. Hand your questions to the pastor at the prayer meeting.

We extend a cordial invitation to all.

SATISFACTION IN OWNING YOUR OWN HOME....

This week a friend of ours to whom we recently sold a nice home place dropped by the office to say that he was well satisfied with his purchase.

"It is worth 50% of my monthly payment in the satisfaction I get out of living in my own home," he said.

How true this is! Some folks don't figure 'satisfaction in the deal. But this man did, and satisfaction is always worth the price paid.

Aside from satisfaction the owner has, there are many other factors that should be counted in buying a home.

We have for immediate sale a number of nice home places, close to the schools, or in any part of the city that you would like to live. We invite you to let us show you these homes and quote you prices, either on terms or cash.
