Bond bid soundly defeated

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County voters, who apparently are more concerned about the sagging economy than enlarging the courthouse, cast a resounding "no" to a proposed $11.69 million courthouse-jail expansion program Saturday.

The issue failed 4 to 1, as only 9 percent of the 43,646-member electorate cast ballots: 841 for expansion and 3,025 against the issue. That figured out to 78 percent against the bond issue and 22 percent in favor of it.

"I can't believe it," County Judge Bill Ahders said Saturday night. Neither he nor any of the county commissioners showed up at the Elections Administration Building to monitor the returns. "I'm shocked. So, I don't know what we are going to do next."

The bond issue, suffering from a low-key campaign, focused on more than doubling jail space by increasing inmate capacity from 85 to 250 prisoners and increasing courtroom space for a growing judiciary.

The proposal called for building a five-story addition to the 1930-vintage courthouse.

The judge, who had promoted the bond issue, said he doesn't have an alternate plan to absorb the jail population, which now is about 90 — five counts over the legal limit allowed by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

"I DON'T KNOW; I really don't know," Ahders lamented. "I don't know what to do next."

Federal courts mandate that "decent" jail lodging be provided to ensure inmates are free of "cruel and unusual punishment" and that their constitutional rights are not violated. Ahders noted the federal courts could force the county to provide adequate living quarters for prisoners.

Commissioner Durward Wright, who opposed the bond issue although he voted to submit the proposal to the electorate, has a jailhouse plan.

"We need to build a two-story jail down by the Tax Office," said the commissioner. A jail, to lodge up to 150 prisoners, could be built for about $2 million on the Tax Office parking lot at Front Avenue and Pecos Street. The jail would be raised — built on piles — to allow vehicle parking below the envisioned jail.

Reagan honors bombing victims

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — President Reagan solemnly welcomed home the bodies of 16 Americans killed in Beirut with a vow Saturday evening that the "cowardly, skulking barbarians" who killed them "will not have their way."

Speaking in front of a large American flag before wooden coffins draped with precisely folded smaller flags, the president quoted the Sermon on the Mount in tribute to the victims of one of the worst attacks on a U.S. embassy in the 200-year history of the foreign service:

"It is written, 'Blessed are the peacemakers,' and they truly were the peacemakers."

Members of the families of the dead sat solemn-faced, some wiping their eyes, on three long rows of folding chairs on the other side of the coffins lined up on a black-draped catafalque.

The entire proceedings took place beneath the stark steel beams of Hangar No. 3 at this Air Force base near Washington, forced indoors by rain. A military honor guard stood facing the audience at the president's right beside the caskets.

Reagan was accompanied by his wife, Nancy, and Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his wife, Helena, in what he earlier called "one of the saddest journeys of my presidency" by helicopter from the White House.

Lebanon's ambassador to the United States Khalil Itani, and secretary general of the Lebanese Foreign Ministry, Faoud Turk, also attended.

At the opening, Turk extended to the president and to all Americans "the deep sorrow we in Lebanon have felt as the result of this crime." The dead, he said, perished "in the service of American ideals" — ideals that will "win in the end."

Calling the bombing of the Beirut embassy a "dastardly deed, an act of unparalled cowardice" and "an attack on all of us and the values that we hold dear," the president said of the dead:

"They knew first hand how an afflicted mankind looked to us for help, with faith in our strength, our sense of justice and our deceny. ... Let us in their presence serve notice to the cowardly, skulking barbarians in the world that they will not have their way."

As the ceremony closed, the president and Mrs. Reagan walked among the bereaved families, speaking to each person, shaking hands, sometimes kissing. Some sobbing family members could not speak. The president at one point wiped his cheek; Mrs. Reagan wiped her eyes several times.

Two young girls weeping in each other's arms managed a smile for the president and first lady when their turn came.

The president was so affected that later, at the annual dinner of the White House Correspondents' Association, he rose and said "just didn't feel" he could give the customary presidential speech.

An Air Force band played ancient hymns, "God of Our Fathers," and "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," as well as the national anthem and "God Bless America" and "America the Beautiful."

The chiefs of the services and agencies whose employees were killed or injured in the embassy attack stood in ranks in a roped-off area at the side.

The 16 caskets were fronted with wreaths of red and white chrysanthemums tied with red, white and blue silk ribbons. A 17th wreath represented another victim whose family chose to bury him in Lebanon.

The State Department identified him as Albert N. Votaw, an employee of the Agency for International Development.

An Air Force C-141 Starlifter transport, its fuselage mottled in green and gray camouflage, landed at 4:48 p.m. under pewter-gray skies carrying the coffins from Lebanon.

Undersecretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger, who escorted the flag-draped wooden coffins on the long flight from Beirut, led a party of Marine officers off the plane in silence moments after the landing.

In his weekly radio address earlier in the day, the president said: "I undertake this task in great sadness, but also with a tremendous sense of pride in those who sacrificed their lives in our country's efforts to bring peace to the Middle East and spare others the agony of war."

On Sunday, Shultz is to leave for the Mideast. Reagan announced on Friday he is dispatching the secretary on a mission to help secure an agreement on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon.

In an interview published in Sunday editions of The Washington Post, Shultz was quoted as saying Arab leaders may now be regretting the refusal by King Hussein of Jordan to negotiate with Israel along the lines proposed by Reagan last September.

"It does seem to me that there's a certain shock that has taken hold, as I read the cables from the various Arab capitals, in which people are saying to themselves: 'Are we really going to pass this up? Maybe we can't afford to do that.

"I think it's well for them to talk among themselves and see if they aren't missing the boat," Shultz said.

Reagan proposed a self-governing Palestinian entity on the West Bank associated with Jordan. Hussein said he could not negotiate without the approval of the Palestine Liberation Organization, which he thought he had won but which was withdrawn at the last minute.

In his radio address, Reagan reaffirmed his pledge not to be deterred from pursuing peace in the Middle East.

The unknown terrorists who carried out the bombing, he said, had "failed in their purpose.

"They mistakenly believe that if they're cruel enough and violent enough they will weaken American resolve and deter us from our effort to help build a lasting and secure peace in the Middle East."

Embassy workers' dedication praised

DENVER (AP) — The United States is fortunate for the "dedicaton" of the U.S. Embassy workers killed in last week's bombing of the embassy in Beirut, Lebanon, Vice President George Bush said Saturday.

Bush also said at a news conference that talking to some of the families of the victims was one of the most difficult tasks he ever has had to perform.

As he spoke, the bodies of 16 Americans were being flown to Washington, D.C., aboard an Air Force cargo plane. They were among the more than 50 people killed Monday by a car-bomb.

"I felt so lucky for our country and that kind of dedication," Bush said in describing his telephone contact with the family of State Department foreign affairs analyst Deborah Hixon, 30, one of the victims.

Miss Hixon, whose family lives in Castle Rock, Colo., was on temporary assignment in Beirut when she was killed, and had planned to return home to this weekend.

Bush came to Denver Friday for the state Capitol dedication of a bust of the late Sen. Peter Dominick, R-Colo., a former colleague of Bush. He addressed about 800 Republicans at a fund-raising dinner Friday night and traveled to Colorado Springs after Saturday's news conference.

Bright, solar-powered future forecast

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's use of renewable energy will double by the year 2000 when the sun, wind and water will be supplying power equal to the amount of energy obtained from oil, a study predicted Saturday.

Despite sharp cutbacks in solar programs by the Reagan administration, the Worldwatch Institute forecast a bright future for all forms of renewable energy.

In 1980, 18 percent of the world's energy was obtained from renewable sources, primarily wood and hydropower. This percentage should grow to 26 percent by the year 2000 as renewable energy use doubles and oil supplies decline, the non-profit research institute said.

During this period, oil use will decline from its current 38 percent share of total world energy to 26 percent, the institute said.

The institute forecast even more dramatic increases for renewable energy sources in the next century, predicting that they could be supplying as much energy as the world uses today before running into resource constraints.

The predictions were contained in a new book, "Renewable Energy: The Power to Choose," written by Worldwatch researchers Daniel Deudney and Christopher Flavin.

Everywhere they looked, the researchers found signs of a boom in renewable resources. Among examples cited:

—California is leading a global breakthrough in harnessing wind power. In the last year, 1,000 wind machines have been hooked into the state's electric power grid with another 1,700 machines planned for 1983.

—Eleven percent of the homes in Japan and 33 percent in Israel have solar water heaters. The Israeli total should hit 60 percent by the mid-1980s and by the end of the decade the Japanese total will double.

—Wood, the leading renewable fuel, is already used for cooking by 1.5 billion people in developing countries and energy from wood will increase another 33 percent by the year 2000.

It just might be later than you think

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you didn't reset your clock early Sunday morning, it may be later than you think.

The annual switch to daylight saving time is 2 a.m. Sunday, except for those in Arizona, Hawaii and portions of Indiana.

Clocks and timepieces everywhere else are supposed to be turned foward an hour, in accordance with the crusty mnemonic "Spring forward, fall back."

Liver transplant patient improving

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Brandon Hall's second transplanted liver in 10 days appears to be working better than the first, and doctors said Saturday their resilient 13-month-old patient is improving.

The Walnut, Miss., boy who early Friday became the youngest patient to survive a second liver transplant, was listed in critical but stable condition Saturday in Le Bonheur Children's Medical Center intensive care unit.

But hospital officials said Brandon's vital signs — blood pressure, pulse, breathing and temperature — were good, and that he was not receiving any blood transfusions or drugs to maintain his blood pressure.

"He's alert," officials said in a statement. "He had a good night, his color has improved and he's taking a pacifier. He's responding to his mother and others around him.

Mrs. Hall, who is separated from her husband and unemployed, has refused to give up hope for her son.

Recession, oil prices bring harm to banks

DALLAS (AP) — Bad banking practices, the economic recession and the surprise slump in oil prices are having a rippling effect on some large Texas and national banks, with some bank presidents resigning and the federal government putting the lid on.

One federal banking regulator warned, however, there is no long-term serious problem as long as the public doesn't stampede into panic withdrawals.

Energy-related loans during the glory days of the oil and gas industry are the main reason for the current banking blues, banking experts say, prompting banks to increase their loan reserves.

"It's basically a matter of a boom in the oil industry — and people didn't predict a downturn in demand for oil. There's a lot of people with more money tied up into it than there should have been," said Clifton Poole, district deputy comptroller of the currency for the Dallas regional Treasury Department office.

In the past week, National Bank of Odessa chairman Kenneth Jumper, Permian Bank president Max Malone and Texas National Bank president Larry Melton resigned. Last month, the head of a fourth Odessa institution, Homer Stewart, president of Western National Bank — also quit, effective June 15.

In the latest development in the industry, Southwest Bancshares Inc. of Houston filed a report with the FDIC, saying it had made a $7 million capital infusion to cover losses at Dallas Bank & Trust Co., a subsidiary, the Dallas Times Herald and Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The bank reported loan losses of $9.7 million in 1982, $400,000 more than its reported $9.3 million in capital, the newspapers said.

Southwest Bancshares, with 37 member banks, is the eighth largest bank holding company in Texas. On March 31, it reported assets of $7.1 billion. For the first quarter of this year, the firm reported net income of $9.8 million, down from $16.5 million a year earlier. It reported that nonproductive loans to private Mexican companies exceeded its problem loans to energy firms.

Poole acknowledged most banks involved in large lending to the oil and gas industry are increasing their loan reserves, but added, "It may be that they are gearing in expectation of greater losses, just so there won't be any big surprises."

He said it was a bank's obligation "to analyze their own credits and come with adequate reserves of their own." He claimed regulators "were not getting tougher" and predicted strong banks will end up in good shape.

He said there is "no doubt" that there are serious problems with some banks in Oklahoma and Texas that deal heavily with oil and gas companies. In addition, he said, the support industries and the merchants who depend on the oil and gas industry are suffering, which can affect their bank loans.

He said depositers will be protected by insurance or by troubled banks being taken over by large holding companies.

But the Wall Street Journal painted bleaker picture in a story earlier this week, reporting that the FDIC's "problem list" has soared to 425 banks. The paper said this is up 23 percent from Jan. 1 and 10 percent above the peak of the 1973-75 recession.

Perhaps the bank that has taken the biggest beating to date is First National Bank of Midland, Texas' largest independent bank, whose chairman, Charles Fraser, abruptly resigned April 6.

According to the Journal, the bank had suffered a $300 million run on its deposits late last year.

Hobby says there is a need for a tax bill; Lewis believes lawmakers can get through the session without raising taxes. The two are shown during a joint session of the Legislature Wednesday.

Most firearm owners favor gun control

HOUSTON (AP) — A majority of residents of the Bayou City support limitations and controls on nuclear arms and firearms, even though 70 percent of Houston residents own at least one gun, a University of Houston poll shows.

Three out of every five Houston residents favor requiring those who wish to buy firearms to get a police permit first, a poll conducted by UH political scientist Richard Hofstetter found.

Hofstetter, chairman of the department of political science at UH, directed the poll in the fall of 1982. Interviewers working under Hofstetter questioned 239 adults by telephone.

Nearly 70 percent of those polled report having at least one firearm in the house and 44 percent say they have guns for personal protection. Slightly less than 60 percent report having at least one rifle.

Heroin supplier sentenced

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon ordered a man considered one of the top heroin suppliers in the Fort Worth area to serve a 13-year prison term for a federal narcotics conviction.

Willie Charles Price was sentenced Friday and ordered by Mahon to spend another 10 years on parole after he completes the sentence.

Price said he worked as a professional gambler.

Mission Country Club.

Never has so much been so easy to attain.

The most beautiful, well-planned, comprehensive golf and country club in West Texas is on its way toward completion. And now, for a limited time and as little as $1500 down, you can be on your way to enjoying the most desirable membership opportunity Midland-Odessa has ever seen.

With its man-made lakes, waterfall, hundreds of trees, and magnificent clubhouse, Mission Country Club is destined to be one of the most dramatic social and athletic gathering places within the Permian Basin.

As part of Mission Dorado, a totally planned residential, commercial and business center sprawling over 2,262 acres, Mission Country Club has been carefully designed to provide an open and comfortable center of activity for members and their families.

Its clubhouse was conceived by world-famous architect O'Neil Ford. And in addition to an excellent championship golf course, Mission Country Club's plans also include a separate Athletic Center, with tennis, racquetball, steam room, exercise room and swimming pool.

Mission Country Club's new 18 hole course is opening in July of this year. An initial payment of $1500 now will secure your private or corporate membership, and entitle you to the immediate use of all existing facilities. Once your initial corporate membership has been acquired, subsequent memberships will be available at a substantial reduction.

Mission Country Club promises to be the most exciting country club in our part of the state. Call us today, or take Highway 80, then exit north to Old Bankhead Highway.

There's never been anything like it. And there's never been a better way to attain such a quality membership.

$2.3 million cowboy museum opens in Hill Country

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A national organization of artists salutes the storied tradition of Western art with Sunday's opening of a $2.3 million museum complex nestled in the heart of the Hill Country.

Artist Gordon Snidow, whose work focuses on the contemporary cowboy, hitched his fingers in his jeans and cocked his cowboy hatted-head to one side as he surveyed the scene.

"It's an understatement to say this museum is more than we could dream for," Snidow said. "But we hoped."

CAA members say the museum is unique because it houses works by contemporary, living Western artists and marks the rugged path for aspiring young artists to follow.

"The art world just stands there with its mouth open that a bunch of artists, tempermental artists, can get together for something like this," said sculptor Grant Speed of Lindon, Utah.

"In Taos, artists can't even have coffee together and we have a bunch of guys who banded together out of friendship in the '60s," he said.

The museum complex, which encompasses 10 acres, includes a cottage and working studio so visiting artists can sculpt or paint in the peaceful, pastoral surroundings about 50 miles northwest of San Antonio.

Later, in perhaps a year, the CAA Museum will begin workshops to teach basic techniques and principles to aspiring Western artists.

"This museum is not to soothe our egos, or build our egos," said Snidow, who lives in Ruidoso, N.M. "It would be really shallow if this was just a place to hang the art."

The CAA started in Sedona, Ariz., in 1965 and now stages an art sale every October in Phoenix.

The group's 25 active members may be artists by trade, but they're all cowboys — at least at heart.

Most, like Speed, who grew up in West Texas, have lived the cowboy life they depict in their art. All of them plan to hop on their horses after the museum's opening for a trail ride to the 0-6 Ranch in Alpine, about 260 miles due west.

The museum was just in the talking stages almost four years ago when a group of Kerrville-area ranchers, including Robert Shelton and L.D. Brinkman, approached the association with the idea of bringing it here, heart of the cattle drives decades ago.

Local resident Bill Roden donated the land for the museum, and he, Shelton, Brinkman, John Duncan and Bob Parker committed $1 million to the project in July 1980.

The 14,268-square foot museum is constructed of native fieldstone, copper, plastered walls and adobe tile. Bricked bovedas, or domes, were painstakingly installed in the ceiling by Mexican artisans. The walls and exterior are cream-colored.

The main gallery will showcase changing exhibits of works by each CAA member and the five emeritus members of the group. Another gallery will house CAA memorabilia, and a third, smaller gallery will be used for one-man shows and regional Western exhibits.

Snidow said the museum will illustrate to collectors the standards that Western art, good Western art, must meet.

And, of course, it provides a central location for people who just want to walk through and look at a body of art that before was scattered across the country in varied galleries and studios.

"We want people who are truly interested in the West, the way it was, the way it is and the way it will be," Speed said.

"Western art has always been popular with the people," he said.

Congress organizes conference committee

Austin — A $50 million difference of opinion between the House and Senate on college funding must be worked out by a 10-member conference committee. The Senate has approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would dedicate $125 million a year to state-financed colleges outside the University of Texas and Texas A&M systems, starting in September 1985, with provisions for higher appropriations in future years to keep up with inflation. The House-approved measure was for $75 million and includes no automatic increases to offset inflation.

PUBLIC EDUCATION — White has said he is "prepared if necessary" to raise taxes to win a 24 percent pay raise over the next two years for schoolteachers. His request clashes with legislative votes that would hold the line on teacher spending, except for much smaller increases already in the law.

Both the House and Senate have proposed spending more than $500 million to equalize poorer and richer school districts, and the Senate's working budget includes a "wish list" $628 million for higher teacher salaries and other spending.

PARI-MUTUEL WAGERING — A Senate committee sought to make pari-mutuel betting on horses attractive to more senators by approving a bill to legalize betting on a local-option basis — only if the concept wins in a statewide referendum in November 1984.

WELFARE INCREASES — The main issue is proposed increases of payments in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, a move that was approved by voters last November in a constitutional amendment removing a spending ceiling.

White recommends the current average payment of $36 per month per child be increased to $53 per child. The Legislative Budget Board suggested $43.69 per month, and House and Senate budget-writing panels adopted that amount.

Donald Carlton keeps on drawing while Garry Trudeau is away. Carlton is a freelance artist who for 11 years finished the drawings in Garry Trudeau's Doonesbury comic strip. Trudeau started a 20-month sabbatical in January.

Trudeau's partner has things to do

NEW YORK (AP) — While Joanie Caucus delights in her new baby and Zonker Harris zeros in on the perfect tan, Donald Carlton will just keep on drawing.

Carlton is the freelance artist who for 11 years finished the drawings in Garry Trudeau's award-winning Doonesbury comic strip. Trudeau started a 20-month sabbatical in January, but Carlton is not idle.

"I'm a freelance artist in town and I have other jobs," Carlton, 46, said in a telephone interview from his home in Kansas City, Kan. "Of course, nothing else I do has quite the impact of 'Doonesbury.'"

Carlton, who also draws for the National Catholic Reporter, met Trudeau at the corporate headquarters of Universal Syndicate in Fairway, Kan., in 1971 while the cartoonist was still a student at Yale University.

"Garry was on his way driving back to New Haven for graduate school and needed someone to help him with the strip," Carlton said. "He sent me some penciled drawings to, quote, practice on. We were going to practice as long as possible, but Garry was busy in school, so we started right away."

It usually takes Carlton an hour or two to finish a daily strip, but the Sunday comic strips "seemed to take forever."

Carlton said he didn't feel abandoned with "Doonesbury" suspended. "He'll be back, at the latest, by fall of next year," he said of Trudeau.

A native of Fort Worth, Texas, Carlton majored in art at Texas Christian University. He went into the Army and moved to Kansas City in 1966.

"I'm not an art hobbyist," he said. "My hobby is theater. I do some amateur acting."

"Doonesbury," he continued, is a "play-like environment." And if he were to give advice to would-be cartoonists, he said he'd tell them to become playwrights first and then learn how to draw.

Trudeau won a Pulitzer Prize for "Doonesbury." Carlton shared vicariously in the glory.

"This probably sounds terribly self-effacing, but the reward in 'Doonesbury' comes in just working on the strip," he said. "I was very happy for Garry to get the award. It was a natural pride in what one does. ... I believe in it very much."

The 34-year-old Trudeau took a breather from the strip because he said his characters — Zonker, Joanie, Mark Slackmeyer, Michael J. Doonesbury, the Rev. W.S. Sloan Jr. and Uncle Duke — had remained mentally in another era.

Prosecutor wants drug test conducted

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A prosecutor involved in the investigation into the "suspicious" deaths of infants at San Antonio and Kerrville said he wants to send tissue samples taken from a 15-month old girl to a Swedish toxicologist.

Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton said the difficult and expensive test could help determine if Chelsea Ann McClellan of Kerrville died of poisoning from succinyl choline, a drug that paralyzes muscles and can lead to respiratory failure.

A Kerr County grand jury investigated the child's death for six months, but did not issue an indictment.

Instead, the panel decided to wait for a grand jury in San Antonio to continue its investigation of infant deaths at the Medical Center Hospital in San Antonio, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday, quoting a source close to the investigation.

The separate investigations are being coordinated because the physician and nurse who treated the McClellan child worked at the Medical Center Hospital during a period when several infants died mysteriously.

Sutton, who returned Thursday from a four-day trip to Philadelphia to meet with toxicology experts, said a Swedish scientist has developed a test to trace succinyl choline.

"I want to go to the man who wrote the book," Sutton said, adding that the test is available in the United States, but "has not been refined to a definable level."

Chelsea McClellan died suddenly last September from respiratory failure after receiving what her parents had been told were routine immunization shots in her pediatrician's office.

Sutton told the Times Herald on Friday that the tissue sample is available from an autopsy performed last fall, but said he would not rule out the possibility of seeking a court order to exhume the child's body.

Dr. Kathleen Holland, her physician, and Genene Jones, a licensed vocational nurse, are named in a $7 million wrongful death suit filed by the McClellan child's parents.

The suit alleges that "an inappropriate and dangerous medication" that causes respiratory failure was used on the child.

Both women have been called before the grand juries, but Ms. Holland has declined to appear before the panel in San Antonio.

Cleanup to cost some $262,000

DALLAS (AP) — City officials have told two lead-smelting companies that it will cost $262,000 to clean up lead contaminations at schools, parks and day care centers in South Dallas.

City Health and Human Services Department Director Callie Struggs says RSR Corp. and Dixie Metals Co. are expected to pay for the cleanups and have agreed in principle to "do whatever we ask them to do."

City staff estimates place RSR's share of the costs at $206,000 for the area within a half-mile of its West Dallas smelter, and Dixie Metals' share at $36,440 for work within a half-mile of its East Oak Cliff facility, the Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

Those figures do not include more than $17,000 for cleaning two city parks, said city parks director Jack Robinson. Not included in the estimate are costs for decontaminating the Dallas school district's Thomas Edison Academy or for cleaning private property near the smelters.

Ms. Struggs said the firms have until May 25 to reply officially to the city's request for cleanup funds.

Ken Beat, a lawyer for Dixie Metals, told the News that Dixie has agreed to remove soil from the sites the city has requested. Diana Parsell, a spokeswoman for RSR Corp., said Friday she did not know the details of the agreement with the city and was unable to comment.

Meanwhile, the parks and recreation department discovered Friday it had no place to take lead-contaminated dirt removed from a West Dallas park. Robinson told the Dallas Times Herald a Fort Worth landfill refused to take the soil when told it contained high levels of lead. Robinson said tests are being run on the soil to see if the toxicity level will require that it be disposed at a hazardous waste site.

He said if the lead levels are dangerously high, the soil will have to be shipped to hazardous waste sites in Houston or Baton Rouge, La.

State and federal laws classify soil with a lead content of 5 parts per million as hazardous.

In a related development, the Texas Department of Water Resources ordered RSR Corp. to furnish all records relating to the disposal of several tons of lead-contaminated soil that was stripped in 1981 from two West Dallas playgrounds, said department spokesman Tom Milligan.

The order came after the Dallas Morning News asked officials of the lead smelter, the state water resources department, and the federal Environmental Protection Agency where the soil was dumped.

Ms. Parsall, RSR spokeswoman, told the News, "It's on RSR property. That's as specific as I can be."

Both Fred Barnes, manager of the air pollution control section of the Dallas Department of Health and Human Services, and Eddie Lee, spokesman for the Dallas EPA office, told the News that RSR officials have said the dirt was dumped at its West Dallas smelter site.

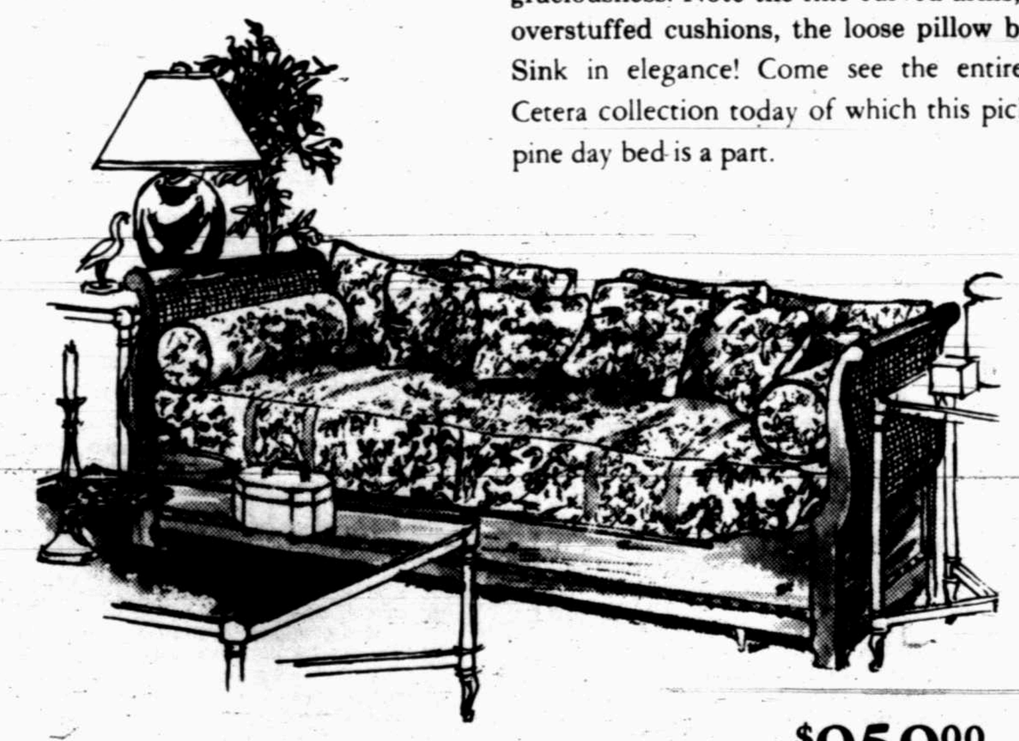

RSR filed a report with the EPA in 1981 saying the dirt removed from the playground contained less than 0.62 parts per million of lead and was not hazardous by the EPA's definition.

The latest cleanup efforts began after a Feb.1 report released by the EPA showed 5.6 percent of the preschool children living near RSR's smelter had potentially harmful levels of lead in their blood. Exposure to lead can cause learning disabilities and a variety of physical problems in children.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The Forecast For 7 p.m. EST Sunday, April 24
•High Temperatures

Fronts: Cold Warm Occluded Stationary
AP Laserphoto Map

Clear skies over much of the nation, along with warmer temperatures for the Southwest, are forecast for today by the National Weather Service. Rain is expected for the Northwest and Northeast.

Fair sky, warm temperatures due

With the pleasant weather the National Weather Service office at Midland Regional Airport predicts for today, Midlanders may wake up glad they lost an hour of sleep overnight so they might enjoy today's weather just that much sooner.

The NWS is predicting fair skies and warm temperatures today, when the high should reach the upper 70s and winds should clip along at 5-15 mph. Tonight and Monday should also be fair, with the low tonight dipping into the low 50s and the high Monday reaching the upper 70s.

Saturday's high of 74 dropped 25 degrees shy of the record 95 set in 1965.

With no precipitation expected, monthly and yearly rainfall amounts should hold steady at .06 of an inch and 1.67 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 7:24 p.m. Central Standard Time; sunrise Monday comes at 7:09 a.m. Central Daylight Time.

Midland statistics

FORECAST

Fair and warm today with the high in the upper 70s and southeasterly winds at 5-15 mph. Fair tonight and Monday with the low in the upper 50s and the high in the upper 70s.

Orange County hit by rockslide

SILVERADO, Calif. (AP) — Boulders as big as automobiles cascaded down a hillside in Orange County, partially blocking a road and temporarily forcing 50 people from their homes, county fire officials said Saturday.

There were no injuries or damage, said Leo Scheider of the Orange County Fire Department.

The rockslide, possibly caused by late-season rains, tore away about two-thirds of a hill Friday night, blocking a road and briefly threatening six or seven homes.

Bomb shatters embassy's routine

EDITOR'S NOTE: Two Lebanese men were among the first to notice it — a black pickup truck driven by a man in a leather jacket. They watched it crash through a barricade and then erupt into a thunderous explosion. A normal, routine day at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut became a nightmare of death and horror. Here is how it was before and after it happened.

By TERRY A. ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The wide, pleasant promenade along the edge of the Mediterranean was quiet. A few dozen people idled along or sat on the concrete benches across from the U.S. Embassy in the grey, cool lunch hour.

Some of the Embassy's recently enlarged staff had gone to lunch in nearby coffee shops and restaurants. Others were in the basement cafeteria. But most were still in their offices, running late for lunch or eating at their desks.

As people recounted it later, Monday, April 18, seemed to be a quiet, routine day at the United States Embassy in Beirut, a city that has seen war and death almost constantly since 1976.

Two Lebanese men standing across the street, waiting for friends who were applying for U.S. visas, saw a black pickup truck and its driver in a leather jacket speeding up the Embassy driveway. It crashed through a barricade.

On the top floor of the Embassy, U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon was busy on the telephone in his office, simultaneously trying to change into a T-shirt to take a lunch-hour jog.

Dundas McCullough, a consular officer, was behind in his schedule because of the crush of visa applicants in the first-floor visa section in the north wing. Five to 10 people were still waiting.

Political officer Ryan Crocker and his wife and secretary, Christine, of Spokane, Wash., were at their desks on the fourth floor. Ryan was editing a telegram; Christine was finishing a cheeseburger.

In the third-floor information office, press officer John Reid of Staunton, Va., was working on a report for Washington.

Marine Lance Cpl. Robert McMaugh, 21, of Manassas, Va., was on duty at the main entrance, standing in a bulletproof glass booth in the lobby, behind a waist-high counter. Armed with a pistol, he was checking people into and out of the building, logging their names in a book.

It was 1:05 p.m. The truck exploded in a thundering blast of fire and smoke.

The front half of the Embassy's center wing disintegrated, and parts of seven floors collapsing onto the main entrance and lobby, crushing Lance Cpl. McMaugh and others.

Front walls of the bottom offices in the east wing and some in the west wing were blown in. Windows and doors throughout the building exploded in showers of glass and shards and pieces of wood.

More than a dozen cars parked in front of the building, in a vacant lot across the street and on the boulevard were smashed and thrown aside. Some burst into flames.

The driver of a Lebanese army personnel carrier panicked or miscalculated, crashing the heavy vehicle through the guard rail along the boulevard. It fell upside down into the edge of the Mediterranean Sea.

At last count by the Embassy, 47 people were killed. Embassy officials listed 17 of them as Americans — three U.S. Army personnel, Marine Cpl. McMaugh, a visiting freelance journalist and the rest Embassy staffers. The remaining 30 were Lebanese who worked in the Embassy. The Embassy count, however, does not include pedestrians and motorists passing by. Lebanese police put the total number of dead at 52, and two more Lebanese victims' bodies were recovered Saturday.

Judging by the damage to the building, the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency suffered huge material losses in addition to a human toll that included at least one known CIA official.

While senior Embassy officials refused to comment on the exact location of CIA offices in the building, U.S. sources plus a general knowledge of the building indicate most if not all offices were in the grotesque tangle of concrete and plaster that broke off the front of the building and pancaked into the floors below.

CIA offices are said to have been on the Embassy's seventh floor, flanked by the communications room and the Defense Department offices, directly under the rooms housing the Marine guards and the ambassador's office.

In the Embassy itself, most survivors said they first heard a sound like thunder and rushing wind. Then came the blast.

"I realized my chin was on the counter and there was a big flash of light in front of me," said McCullough, the 25-year-old consular officer from Berkeley, Calif., whose office was just a few dozen yards from the explosion.

"Then the wall separating the file room from the waiting room fell on me and my interpreter.

"There was complete darkness, lots of dust. I struggled to stand erect. I thought what might kill me, aside from the explosion, was suffocation," he said a few days later, his voice trembling slightly.

The front part of the east wing, where his office was, had been blown open. "I had to make sure I didn't step off the edge."

A dead woman was buried in rubble. A badly wounded man was pinned down by a filing cabinet. As McCullough helped the man up, a Marine in a gas mask appeared in the hole where the stairs had been — part of the rescue crew that was gathering. What happened to the others in McCullough's office is unknown.

Stairs were still intact, all the way to the top floors. In smoke and dust so thick they could not see the people beside them, Embassy staffers made their way down, coughing, crying and helping the injured who could not walk. Marine guards helped them out a door on the back of the building.

Ambassador Dillon was pinned beneath rubble. His aide and his deputy used the staff of an American flag to pry him out and found him unhurt except for small cuts.

Both side wings in the front of the building were a mass of flames, spewing out greasy black smoke.

Students from the American University of Beirut, which is immediately behind the Embassy, were among the first to arrive. They and others began pulling people out of the carnage. Taxi drivers on the rubble-littered corniche stopped and the wounded were loaded into their vehicles and rushed to the university's hospital.

Most of the bodies were found in these areas, in the lobby and the basement cafeteria.

The grim search began. Most of the injured were found in minutes. The last live person was dragged out of the wreckage at 5 p.m., four hours after the blast.

"He was very glad to see us," commented one Red Cross worker.

Marines in the cordon around the building picked up the American flag from the ground and raised it on the flag pole, which survived the explosion.

The bodies continued to be found — for more than four days — as the tons of debris were slowly and carefully searched.

The Crockers, who had been on the fourth floor, and Miss Piasik, on the fifth for her Arabic lesson, were not injured, except for a few small cuts from flying debris.

Four days after the bombing, the 43-year-old Reid looked up at the place where his office had been and marvelled that he was still alive.

"You see where the searchlight has been put on the balcony? That's Maggie and Beth's office," he said, referring to his administrative assistant, Beth Samuels, and his secretary, Maggie Tin, neither of whom was seriously injured.

"Then that next balcony, just behind that is the front of my office. And the next one that's gone is the back half of my office. That's where I was."

Cpl. McMaugh's body was recovered Thursday. Fellow Marines, refusing to allow Lebanese rescue workers near it, carefully draped it in an American flag and carried it away.

Trial sought in grenade attack

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Lebanese member of a radical Palestinian guerrilla group was charged Saturday with the March 16 grenade attack that wounded five U.S. Marines on Beirut's southern outskirts.

Military Prosecutor Assad Germanos asked the military court to schedule a trial for Nazmi Sakka, a 30-year-old member of the Syrian-backed Saika guerilla organization, a statement from Germenos' office said.

A spokesman for the military court said the court would take up Sakka's case in the next two weeks and decide whether there was sufficient evidence to put him on trial.

The prosecutor's statement said five witnesses had testified that Sakka "answered to a considerable extent" the description of a man they saw sprinting away from the scene of the attack, limping slightly as he ran.

The statement said Sakka lived with his family in the Bourj el-Barajneh area of southern Beirut, which once was a Palestinian guerrilla stronghold.

In another development, military sources said the Lebanese army confiscated one machine gun, five pistols, two bomb detonators and 22 machine-gun rounds in a raid Saturday on the Palestine Research Center in west Beirut.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the army made no arrests during the raid.

The director general of the center, Sabri Jiryis, said that four armored personnel carriers, a pickup truck and a jeep full of Lebanese soldiers raided the facility, which is a branch of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Voters oppose county bond issue

"That (jail) is what we have got to take care of," he said.

Had the bond issue passed, the county would have levied an additional 4.4 cent tax increase to pay off the $11.69 million indebtedness over a 15-year period. The proposed tax hike would have been a 25 percent increase and would have raised taxes from 18.03 cents to 22.43 cents per $100 valuation.

"Obviously, the people don't want to spend that kind of money," said Wright, who is commissioner of Precinct 1.

VOTERS IN THE 29 precincts in the city and county rejected the bond issue. The margin of defeat ranged from 1 to 14 to 1 to 1¼ but averaged 1 to 4. Of the 440 absentee voters, 73 favored the bond proposal and 367 rejected it.

Precinct 2 Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig noted, "Obviously, we still have the same (jail-courtroom) problems, but what we do about them I can't be sure."

If the "light" turnout of voters represents a consensus, then it's apparent the electorate doesn't "want to spend any money, at least that kind of money," said Craig. "I'm not sure a Band-Aid approach would be advisable."

C. DeWayne Davis, commissioner of Precinct 3, said the "apathy and indifference (of the electorate) is pretty well governed by the state of affairs — the economy."

"It's just common sense," he said of people's absorbing concern with the sagging economy and their personal finances in these depressed times.

"We can live with the (jail) situation, and we will," Davis said, "...until we are boxed in and have to act rather positively...by other means to alleviate our problems. Our big concern is the jail."

Meanwhile, Davis noted "the economy is on the upswing. We'll hold our own for awhile."

"WE'LL GO BACK to the drawing board," said Precinct 4 Commissioner Win Brown.

Like Wright, Brown tendered a suggestion to solve the jail problem. The Commissioners' Court, however, last year nixed a proposal to build a jail at site of the Tax Office.

Brown proposed that the city and county merge jail-building efforts.

"We need to get together with the city," he said. "The city needs a jail. I personally would like to see the jail at a location mutually acceptable to the city and the county, and they (too) are having their problems."

Brown even hinted at building a common headquarters for the sheriff, the county's top lawenforcer, and police chief and their staffs. "Why don't we have law enforcement together?"

A joint city-county jail complex would allow for expansion of the courthouse's judiciary by removing the jail from the fifth floor of the courthouse and the sheriff's, constable's and peace justices' offices from the courthouse basement.

"This is something," Brown said of the bond issue's defeat. "There's not been a margin (of defeat) like this before. I bet you won't find such a resounding margin." The election was called primarily "to get a very strong expression from the people," he said.

In December 1970, 30 percent of the 25,340-member electorate passed a $1.95 million county bond issue with a vote of 4,409 for and 3,272 against. That year, during a recession similar to the current one, the key issue was a new jail. But unlike 1983's bond plan, the Commissioners' Court, other political groups and civic organizations and the Midland Chamber of Commerce publicly endorsed passage of the issue.

Though the apparent issue among the commissioners in this year's election was courtroom and jail expansion, the voting citizenry apparently had other interests.

Actor Buster Crabbe dies at suburban Phoenix home

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Buster Crabbe, a former Olympic swimming champion who went on to star in movies as Tarzan and Flash Gordon, died Saturday at his home in this Phoenix suburb. He was 75.

He had "had a little heart problem over the years," but five minutes before he died he was making plans to attend an arthritis telethon in Nashville, Tenn., and "didn't have any pain anyplace," said his wife, Virginia.

Crabbe, who called himself "King of the Serials," once remarked that he made only one A picture, "King of the Jungle," in which he portrayed the Lion Man. He said the rest were sub-Bs or serials, including his movie roles as "Buck Rogers" and "Flash Gordon."

"I made nine of them, more than anyone else in talkies," Crabbe once boasted of his serials. "Only William Desmond made more — 10 silent serials. I did three 'Flash Gordons,' two 'Tarzans,' a 'Buck Rogers,' plus 'Pirates of the High Seas,' 'Red Barry' and 'Sea Hound.'

"We knocked off 13 chapters in five to six weeks and didn't allow for much dramatic skill. Some say that my acting rose to the point of incompetence and then leveled off."

Crabbe said in a 1980 interview that neither he nor the legendary Johnny Weissmuller, moviedom's first talking Tarzan, ever gave a successful rendition of Tarzan's jungle call.

"At first it was three voices," he said of the Tarzan yell. "The studio put together a baritone, a bass and a hog caller ... Finally they settled on a version by Tom Held, a film cutter who happened to be my father-in-law."

Crabbe began his movie career in 1933 after winning an Olympic gold medal in the 400-meter swimming event in the 1932 Summer Games in Los Angeles and a bronze medal at the 1928 Games in Amsterdam.

During the 1932 Games a talent scout from Paramount Pictures selected 40 athletes for screen tests. Crabbe was the only one to make it to the screen.

Crabbe starred in "Tarzan the Fearless" in 1933, his only full-length screen appearance as Tarzan. Other movies include "Nevada" 1936, "Queen of Broadway" 1943, "Caged Fury" 1948, "Gunfighters of Abilene" 1959, "Arizona Raiders" 1965 and many more.

One of his final appearances on television was as an aging astronaut on the NBC series "Buck Rogers in the 25th Century." Gil Gerard played Buck Rogers in the series.

His real name was Clarence Linden Crabbe, but he was called Buster since a child and was also known as Larry. Crabbe was born Feb. 7, 1908, in Oakland, Calif., grew up in Honolulu, attended the University of Hawaii and was graduated from the University of Southern California in 1932.

Ex-Supreme Court Justice jailed

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Texas Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough, in prison on a five-year perjury sentence, is scheduled to appear Monday on a charge that he jumped bail.

Yarbrough spent the weekend in Travis County Jail after being brought from state prison at Huntsville.

He began his prison term last month after officials brought him to Texas from the Caribbean island of Grenada.

He moved with his family to Grenada while his conviction for aggravated perjury was on appeal. He became a fugitive when his appeals ran out and he did not return to Texas for sentencing in August 1981.

Washington fined for contempt

HOUSTON (AP) — State Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, has been fined $1,400 for a contempt of court citation after he did not appear for a client's trial on gun-smuggling charges.

Washington had been scheduled to appear Monday with client Miki Exe Onu, accused of smuggling guns. His partner, Melvin Lampley, did appear with Onu, but the judge said Washington was listed as attorney of record and no arrangement had been worked out in advance for a substitute.

Marshals went to the senator's Austin office, but left when Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox telephoned the judge to ask him to delay Washington's court appearance because of pressing legislative business.

Washington said he signed a request for a delay of Onu's trial April 9, but the document was not filed until April 15. Singleton said he did not see it until last Monday, the scheduled trial date.

Washington has filed papers in court asking to withdraw as Onu's attorney and saying that Onu has failed to pay his $25,000 legal fee. Washington said Lampley probably will represent Onu.

Youth sentenced to center

CONROE, Texas (AP) — A 14-year-old who confessed to the killings of his father and uncle has been sentenced to a juvenile detention center.

Montgomery County Court-at-Law Judge Jerry Winfree sentenced Shane Cantrell to the most severe punishment allowed in juvenile cases.

The boy's lawyer, Jimmie P. Price said his client may be held until his 18th birthday, but could also be released earlier if authorities saw fit to do so.

Cantrell was arrested April 7, hours after the bodies of his father, Riley Cantrell, 34, and uncle, Denton Cantrell, 35, were found at a rural shack on a contruction site seven miles east of Willis in Montgomery County.

The youth told authorities he shot Denton Cantrell with a .410-gauge shotgun, then hit him in the face with an ax, and killed Riley Cantrell when he arrived about 10 minutes later.

Price said the boy signed the confession after being "deprived of food, water and sleep for several hours." But Price said Cantrell did not want him to ask that the court suppress the statement, or to seek a continuance in his case.

Trained patrol dogs adopted

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) - Ciudad Juarez plans to adopt a trio of specially trained patrol dogs for police duty from neighboring El Paso, Texas, officials in this Mexican border city say.

The adoption of three binational patrol dogs trained in El Paso "is a cooperative effort, because we have many common problems," Juarez Police Chief Alfonso Mayoraga Valenzuela said.

Criminals often take advantage of the shallow Rio Grande to cross the border, or escape detection by smuggling narcotics or weapons across checkpoints, Mayoraga said.

"The dogs can sniff out (drugs and) arms, which criminals try to bury or throw away ... and they are used in the control of masses," he said.

The German shepherds and three specially trained Juarez officers to patrol with the dogs are being trained at no cost by the El Paso Police Department, and will be ready for duty in June, officials said.

Female charged in stabbing

AUSTIN (AP) — The one-time leader of an Austin girls gang was charged Saturday with retaliation in the stabbing of a high school student who testified against her in a 1982 murder trial.

Ruby Fuentes, 19, and another woman were arrested Friday and held overnight in city jail, but Police Sgt. Don Martin said the second woman was not charged and was released.

Martin said he talked with Ms. Fuentes Saturday but did not know if she was still the leader of La Familia, which was identified in numerous published reports last year as a gang of lesbian teen-agers.

The victim was the state's key witness against Ms. Fuentes, her 18-year-old brother, Oscar Fuentes, and a 19-year-old youth in the stabbing death of James Bailey, 19, on Jan. 29, 1982.

11-year-old boy committed

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — An 11-year-old boy who shot and seriously wounded a man in a liquor store robbery has been committed to the Texas Youth Council, authorities say.

County Court No. 2 Judge Ron Wilson heard almost three hours of testimony Friday before ordering the youth sent to TYC in connection with the Feb. 21 shooting of Bill Biaggne, 68, at a La Marque liquor store.

Glenn: Now we have a confusing tax policy

HOUSTON (AP) - The Reagan administration has a confusing taxnnng policy filled with uncertainty, Sen. John Glenn said Saturday as he brought his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination to Texas.

"We have a very confusing taxing policy right now," said Glenn, who announced his presidential race on Thursday.

"The administration put through the 25 percent (tax) reduction and when that didn't work ... the Republican leadership in the Senate took the lead in a $100 billion tax increase bill.

"So you've got a one-quarter reduction in federal revenue over three periods, a $100 billion increase the next year, and now the proposal for a standby tax in case all of the above doesn't work.

"Now that's got to be about as confusing a tax policy in creating as much uncertainty as any series of events you could possibly indicate.

Glenn, 61, was a pioneer astronaut who trained six years at nearby Johnson Space Center. He hopes to raise campaign funds and to influence future Texas delegates at the national convention.

"Texas will be very important just by the number of delegates to the convention," Glenn said. "I believe there is something like 200 delegates. We will be putting in lot of effort here."

Glenn accused Reagan of taking a backward approach to solving the country's problems.

"What this election comes down to is a choice between the future and the past," the senator said.

Dallas bank 'sound', says holding company

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Bancshares Inc. of Houston says a Dallas subsidiary is "on strong ground" after getting a boost of $7 million to cover losses that exceeded existing capital, two Dallas newspapers reported.

"The issue has been dealt with. The bank is strongly capitalized, well-managed and on strong ground," Southwest Bancshares spokesman George McCane said. "The bank is sound and with good management."

The holding company did not identify the bank, but the Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday that Southwest Bancshares filed a report with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., saying the money was needed to cover losses at Dallas Bank & Trust Co. that exceeded existing capital.

The bank reported loan losses of $9.7 million in 1982, $400,000 more than its reported $9.3 million in capital, the newspapers said.

The Times Herald also reported Friday that the FBI began checking transactions at Dallas Bank & Trust after Southwest Bancshares filed its report with the FDIC.

An FBI official in Dallas who asked not to be identified said he could neither confirm nor deny the report of an investigation. Dallas Bank & Trust President Robert Burns told The Associated Press Friday night that he would not comment on the story.

FDIC legal counsel Ann Graham told the Times Herald she could neither confirm nor deny that Dallas Bank & Trust, or any of its employees, were the subject of a federal investigation.

Last month, Southwest Bancshares said that the company would report a 40 percent drop in first-quarter earnings, largely because of "extraordinary loan losses at one of its smaller banks, which made loans outside of the company's established credit policies." The bank was not identified.

Southwest Bancshares also said it has filed a claim under its blanket bond insurance to cover a loss. Blanket bond insurance repays a bank for losses from employee malfeasance rather than loans that are not repaid.

Burns was named chairman of Dallas Bank & Trust after N.L. Lester resigned that post at the end of 1982. Burns previously was chairman of Allied Lakewood Bank in Dallas.

Lester told the Dallas Times Herald he retired last year to have heart surgery. He had been president of Dallas Bank & Trust from 1976 through its sale to Southwest Bancshares in 1979. Lester said he had not been contacted by the FBI and "knew nothing" about Southwest's filing of a claim with a bonding company.

Dallas Bank & Trust reported total assets of $134 million at the end of 1982, down from $146 million a year earlier. Its deposits totaled $113 million at the end of last year.

Do fewer teenagers mean less crime?

BOSTON (AP) — New FBI statistics showing a two-year decline in violent crime mark a trend that could last a decade as the "baby boom" generation ages and there are fewer adolescents to commit street crimes, a criminologist says.

The trend could mean smaller prison populations, fewer police officers on the beat and reduced apprehension about the threat of crime, said James Fox of Northeastern University.

The FBI said in a report issued last week that figures from police departments throughout the country showed a 4 percent drop in serious crime in 1982 from the previous year, the sharpest decline in the past five years. The decline included both violent crime and crimes against property.

Fox said the same statistic showed a drop of nearly 2 percent from 1980 to 1981.

"It's very simply a matter of numbers," said Fox, whose 1978 book "Forecasting Crime Data," predicted a decline in crime this decade. "Those between the ages of 14 and 21 commit a disproportionate amount — about half — of street crime."

Fox said the surge of crime in the 1960s was attributed to social ills ranging from drug abuse to the decline of the family and the impact of the Vietnam war. But he said all other causes are overshadowed by demographics — the post-World War II baby boom created a large number of adolescents at that time.

"It was no surprise to the people in education who were dealing with overcrowded schools, but for some reason it escaped the criminologists," he said.

Fox said his research also showed that unemployment has little impact on the crime rate. Crime dropped during the Depression, he said, and increased in the 1960s, a period of low unemployment. Inflation affects crime statistics, but mostly in the area of property crime, he said.

As the baby boom generation grows up, "most outgrow assaultive behavior and stealing cars and there are fewer adolescents to replace them," Fox said.

"You have to be wary of politicians who take credit," he said. "People are going to say the death penalty is working and that mandatory sentencing did it, but this trend was going to happen anyway."

As the generation moves into the world of business, there will be an increase in such white collar crimes as forgery, embezzlement and computer theft, Fox said.

Fox also expects a decline in the prison population by the 1990s as baby boom-era criminals finish their sentences.

James Fox, a criminologist at Northeastern University in Boston, points to a graph which indicates a decline in serious crime in the United States. Fox says that FBI statistics showing a 4 percent drop in serious crime in 1982 confirm theories that crime would fall as the post World War II baby boom generation ages.

Judge sets opening date for trial of gas producers

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — U.S. District Judge David K. Winder of Salt Lake City has set Sept. 26 as the opening date for trial of an antitrust lawsuit involving natural gas producers as defendants.

Winder has ordered the trial moved to Denver.

Southern Union Co. officials said earlier this month they filed a lawsuit joining more than 100 natural gas producers as involuntary defendants in the case.

The Dallas-based company is one of three defendants in three pending antitrust price-fixing lawsuits that have been combined.

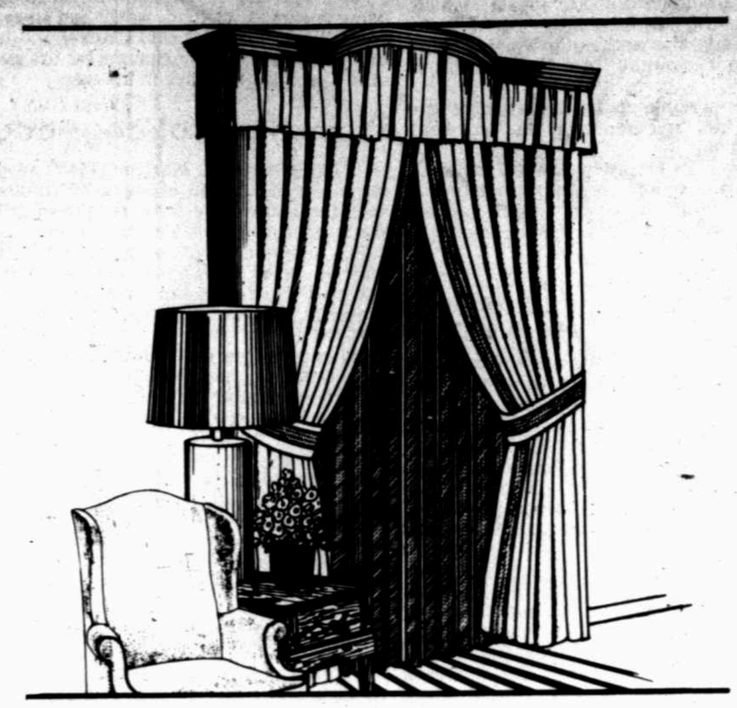

The lawsuits allege the company, which buys natural gas for its gas utility operations in New Mexico, illegally conspired to set the price of wellhead natural gas bought from producers in the San Juan Basin of northwestern New Mexico.

Southern Union said April 11 it was necessary to join the producers because the company faced possible conflicting claims between the allegations of its utility customers in the antitrust cases and the contractual obligations of the company to the gas producers.

The firm also said it had joined the residential customers, Public Service Company of New Mexico and state agencies who are plaintiffs in the pending antitrust litigation.

The company has requested a declaratory judgment from the court as to which parties are entitled to more than $850,000 Southern Union paid into the court when it filed its interpleader action joining the plaintiffs in the antitrust cases and the producers in the disputed gas purchase contracts.

Reagan to pay tribute to victims of terrorism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today he was preparing to embark on "one of the saddest journeys of my presidency" to pay tribute to 16 Americans killed in the bombing attack on the U.S. embassy in Beirut.

Reagan planned to fly later in the day to nearby Andrews Air Force Base to be on hand when an Air Force jet returned to the United States with the bodies of the Americans.

"I undertake this task in great sadness, but also with a tremendous sense of pride in those who sacrificed their lives in our country's efforts to bring peace to the Middle East and spare others the agony of war," said Reagan. "Greater love hath no man."

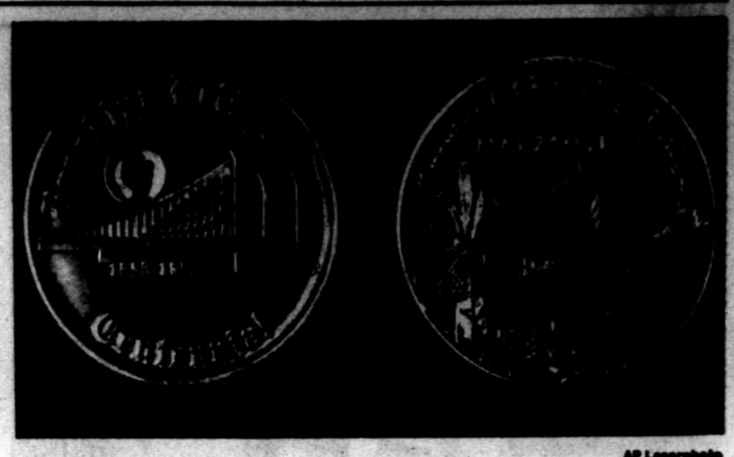

The death toll from the bombing attack last Monday now totals 52, according to Lebanese police. Forty-seven people were killed in the embassy and the others who died were pedestrians or motorists.

In his weekly radio address, Reagan reaffirmed his pledge not to be deterred from pursuing peace in the region.

"We don't know yet who bears responsibility for this terrible deed," said Reagan. "What we do know is that the terrorists who planned and carried out this cynical and cowardly attack have failed in their purpose.

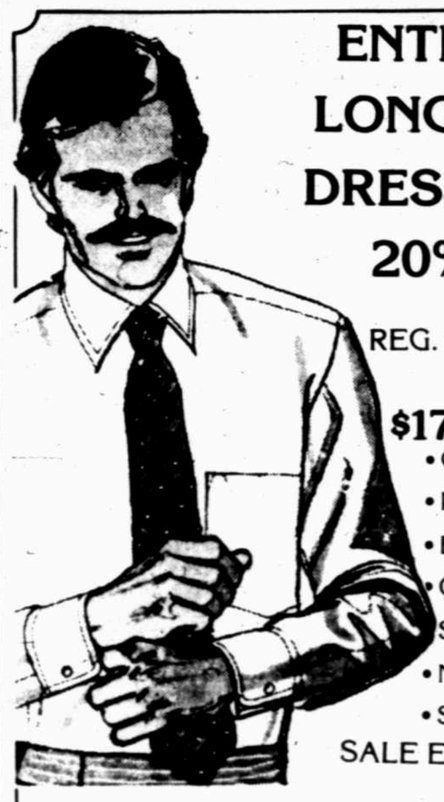

"They mistakenly believe that if they're cruel enough and violent enough they will weaken American resolve and deter us from our effort to help build a lasting and secure peace in the Middle East.

"Well, if they think that, they don't know too much about America," the president said. "As a free people, we've never allowed intimidation to stop us from doing what we know to be right."

Women runners ready to compete with men

By The Associated Press

Not many years ago, women were considered too fragile, too frail, too feeble to run the marathon.

Last week in Boston, a short, shy 25-year-old woman from Maine not only ran a marathon faster than any woman ever had, but also came within 3½ minutes of qualifying for the men's Olympic marathon.

"This really frightens me," said John Chew, director of the 1984 men's Olympic marathon trials. "If she keeps this up, she'll qualify for the men's trials."

Ms. Benoit's time chopped 2 minutes and 47 seconds off the women's world record. Until the last few miles, her pace translated to a finishing time of 2:15 to 2:18. The cutoff for the men's trials is 2:19.04.

As extraordinary as it was, Ms. Benoit's performance was just the latest step in a methodical assault on the record books that women runners have been staging for the last two decades.

At Boston this year, 27 other women also finished under the Olympic trial qualifying time of 2:51.16.

Barbara L. Drinkwater, an exercise physiologist in the Department of Kinesiology at the University of Washington, said there was a very practical reason for the strides female runners are making.

"Women were not encouraged to race until the '70s," she said. "As a result, they were not trained to the level of world times.

"An individual runner's dream in a marathon often is just to complete 26 miles. The feeling of women has been, 'I just want to finish.' I don't think they knew what they had in them...We are learning that they are capable of much more than just finishing."

Consider this:

In 1964, the men's record for the marathon was 2:13.55. The women's record was 3:27.45. In the 19 years since, the men's record has been lowered five times, by a total of less than six minutes. The current mark is the 2:08.13 posted by Alberto Salazar in the 1981 New York City Marathon.

But the women's record has been lowered almost every year, by more than one hour and five minutes altogether.

The three-hour barrier was broken Sept. 29, 1971, by Elizabeth Bonner of the United States, who posted a 2:55.22.

Two months later, American Cheryl Bridges lowered the mark almost six minutes, to 2:49.40. By 1975, women moved the record below 2:40 with Jacqueline Hansen of the United States timed in 2:38.19 on Oct. 12. It took four more years to crack 2:30. That happened Oct. 21, 1979, when Grete Waitz of Norway ran 2:27.33 in New York.

Mrs. Waitz lowered it to 2:25.41 in 1980. A year after that, Allison Roe of New Zealand cut it to 2:25.29.

The day before the Boston race, Mrs. Waitz, running in the London Marathon, tied the record. But before it could be suggested that women had reached their marathon limit, Ms. Benoit shattered the Roe-Waitz mark.

Cleanup begins at dump

VILLE PLATTE, La. (AP) — The water is proving much cleaner than expected at Tate Cove, the state's most notorious hazardous waste dump. The real nasty stuff in rotting drums and bottom sludge may be another matter.

Under supervision by the state's Department of Natural Resources, an Ohio cleanup company began last week pumping and filtering the levee-trapped water that surrounds an island of rusting drums.

"Based on early reports, it looks like our effluent standards are being met so well that we're extremely happy," said Bill DeVille of DNR.

"It's in the low parts-per-billion — the untreated water, even before we treat it — is about 73 parts per billion."

"The contaminated water, per se, was not that contaminated. But we had to get that out of the way before we could get the stuff off the bottom," he said.

"Coming out of treatment, it's about in the hundredths of the allowable set by us and the Environmental Protection Agency," he said.

There were fears that hazardous chemicals, dumped at Tate Cove more than 11 years ago, might become more concentrated as water levels dropped, making it harder to filter out the poisons before pumping the water into nearby creeks and bayous.

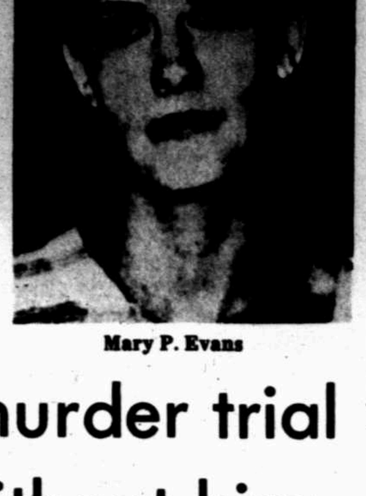

That hasn't happened, said DeVille.

Nor did he believe that the concentrations remained low because the poisons had already seeped into the ground beneath the pit.

Barring heavy rains or unforeseen problems, workers should be able to get after the drums and leaked chemicals in a matter of days, he said.

William Timothy Kirk

Mary P. Evans

Convict's murder trial to begin without him

WARTBURG, Tenn. (AP) — A convict who escaped with his female court-appointed lawyer is making American legal history as he goes on trial in absentia, charged with murdering two fellow inmates at Tennessee's most violent prison.

Prosecutors, a legal scholar and defense lawyers for William Timothy Kirk say they know of no previous U.S. case in which a suspect facing the death penalty has missed his trial.

Kirk's lawyers said they couldn't adequately defend him if he weren't there to help, and Creed Daniel, appointed to replace the lawyer who vanished with Kirk, complained that he has never even seen his client.

"I wouldn't recognize him if he walked in now," Daniel said.

But Criminal Court Judge Lee Asbury said Kirk waived his right to attend by escaping, and opening arguments begin Monday in a courthouse in the Tennessee mountains.

Kirk, 36, has been on the run since March 31 with Mary P. Evans, the 26-year-old daughter of a University of Tennessee assistant vice president.

Ms. Evans obtained a court order to have Kirk taken from Brushy Mountain Penitentiary, where he was serving 65 years for robbery with a deadly weapon, to undergo tests at the Oak Ridge office of psychologist Gary Salk.

The tests were held the day before Ms. Evans was to leave the Knoxville law firm of James A.H. Bell and join the public defender's office in London, Ky. Kirk's trial was to be her last case in Tennessee.

During a break in the tests, authorities say Ms. Evans apparently slipped Kirk a small pistol, which he used to disarm three guards. While Ms. Evans held the gun, Kirk bound and gagged Salk and the guards with fiberglass tape and took the guards' service revolvers and $25 from Salk's wallet, officials say.

Salk said the tall, blond lawyer appeared "cool as ice," holding her chin high and tapping her foot to rock music that blared from a radio she turned on.

As afternoon rush-hour traffic began pouring from the federal government's nuclear factories at Oak Ridge, Kirk and Ms. Evans sped away, triggering a nationwide search by the FBI. The two are charged in identical nine-count indictments with escape, armed robbery and aggravated kidnapping.

Attorneys who know Ms. Evans described her as a skilled, intelligent lawyer and said they were shocked by her alleged actions. The psychologist said he thinks Ms. Evans fell in love with the scruffy, bearded convict during the many hours she spent with him in prison conference rooms preparing for his defense.

Kirk is one of seven white Brushy Mountain inmates accused of killing two black prisoners and wounding two others during a 45-minute shooting spree on Feb. 8, 1982. Authorities say the seven broke out of their cells, took four guards hostage and roamed cellblock B shooting black prisoners before surrendering.

Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty for all seven inmates, who are charged with first-degree murder, assault and kidnapping. Kirk was given a separate trial after his escape, and prosecutors say he should be tried first because he allegedly was the triggerman.

Bell and Daniel had urged Asbury to delay the trial until Kirk was found. Neil Cohen, a University of Tennessee law professor, testified that his extensive research found that nobody in the United States had ever been tried completely in absentia for a capital crime.

Key West celebrates rebellion

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — More than 7,000 revelers packed onto this tropical isle 98 miles north of Cuba on Saturday to celebrate the first anniversary of the Conch Republic, established in a mock revolution sparked by a traffic jam.

"Is there anywhere better to party?" asked Laurie Nelson, 19, of Miami, as she joined beer-chuggers at Sloppy Joe's Bar, one of novelist Ernest Hemingway's favorite watering holes. "If anyone knows how to have a revolution, it would be Key West."

Residents of the 130-mile archipelago that arcs southward from Miami toward Havana became restive one year ago when the U.S. Border Patrol, voicing concern over illegal narcotics and undocumented aliens, erected a roadblock near Florida City.

As agents checked motorists' papers, a 19-mile-long line of cars backed up on U.S. 1, sole artery of the Florida Keys.

Riled at what they labeled government "tyranny," Key West residents hauled down the American flag and replaced it with the symbol of the newborn Conch Republic — a sea-blue banner festooned with a radiant sun and a bright pink conch shell.

Conch Republic Prime Minister Dennic Wardlow, who also is mayor of Key West, vowed he'd declare war on Washington, "then we'll surrender and ask for $1 billion in foreign aid."

The display of anger wasn't all in jest. Hotel occupancy dropped. Key Largo lawyer David Hartfield Jr. filed a class-action lawsuit on behalf of the Keys' 40,000 permanent residents. The American Civil Liberties Union claimed U.S. agents were engaging in "terrorist activity."

Utah man finally goes to jail for hitting Supreme Court judge

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Newton Estes has begun serving a 10-day jail sentence here for slugging U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White during an appearance in Utah last year.

Estes, 57, was taken to Utah County Jail on Friday to begin serving his sentence. U.S. District Judge David Winder imposed the jail term on Estes last month and placed him on two years' probation. Estes also was fined $500.

Estes, a construction materials estimator, was convicted Dec. 10 of hitting White three times around the head as the justice was preparing to address the Utah State Bar at a Salt Lake City hotel July 15.

Rejected suitor convicted

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (AP) — A student has been convicted of attempted murder for trying to mail what he thought was a bomb to his ex-girifriend's new suitor.

Richard Levy, a 23-year-old graduate student at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, was convicted after jurors deliberated nine hours. He faces up to 25 years in prison when he is sentenced May 23.

Suffolk County police said Levy asked a fellow student to help make a bomb when he discovered his ex-girlfriend was dating someone new, but the associate went to the police, who asked him to build a fake bomb. Levy was arrested Nov. 15, shortly after he put the package in the mail.

Blacks plan to select nominee

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Black clergymen from throughout California will meet in Sacramento next month to begin selection of a black Democratic presidential nominee for 1984, a clergy leader said.

"We are disappointed with our return on investment in the Democratic Party," the Rev. H.H. Brookins said Friday. "We are tired of being taken for granted."

Brookins, a black community leader in Los Angeles, said that of 14,000 elected public officials in California, fewer than 200 are blacks. The meeting at the state capital will take place May 5 and 6, Brookins said.

Chinese want American pigs

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Most American pigs exported to China haven't survived but the Chinese want to keep trying, says Zheng Peiliu, the director of the Institute of Animal Husbandry at Peking and a graduate of the University of Wisconsin.

The director, along with Zhao Zhilong, deputy director of the institute and Fang Zhangming, a swine breeding specialist, visited farms and swine facilities in Nebraska last week.

Bureaucracy traps Chinese immigrant

CHICAGO (AP) — Like an insect touching flypaper, David Tom was snared — trapped by a fleeting brush with a bureaucracy that unwittingly condemned him to a maddening world of squalor and silence.

The young immigrant spoke only Chinese, but within months he had mastered enough English to ask, "This nuthouse, why am I here?"

Thirty-one years later, his entire adult life wasted away in mental institutions, the frail 53-year-old man is asking the same question. This time, he's looking to the courts for answers.

Through his county-appointed guardian, Tom has sued current and former officials of the state Department of Mental Health for at least $5 million, charging he was unnecessarily confined and then neglected for decades because no one assigned to care for him could speak his native language.

The guardian, Patrick Murphy, who is also Tom's attorney, said he'd like Tom to live in an apartment with a nurse to care for him. Legally, Murphy can take Tom out of the institution, but he wants the money award from the court to pay for his client's support.

THE SUIT WAS FILED four years ago and goes to trial Monday.

"To me it's the most literal case I can imagine of putting a guy in and literally throwing away the key," said Cindy Farenga, one of Tom's attorneys in Cook County's public guardian office.

Ms. Farenga said there was no evidence in psychiatric documents that any effort had been made to get a Chinese-speaking person to treat Tom.

Don Neltnor, a spokesmen for the mental health department, has declined comment on the case. But court records show the state argues Tom has been cared for and that his rights have not been violated.

Tom, now living at the Elgin Mental Health Center, probably is unaware of the battle. A tiny man with rotting teeth, graying hair, a vacant stare and a shuffling gait, Tom mutters incoherently and laughs to himself. He can follow commands and mimic simple English words.

The tragedy began in early 1952 when Tom, who had been a baker in China but was working as a dishwasher after immigrating here about two years before, contracted tuberculosis.

At a TB hospital, he exposed himself, threatened nurses and roamed around nude. Records are unclear what may have caused this behavior; Murphy suggests it was an isolated psychotic episode or perhaps, simple bewilderment.

WITHIN WEEKS, TOM was packed off to a mental hospital — the beginning of a life of institutions and labels. Mentally retarded. Schizophrenic. Autistic. Manic-depressive.

AP Laserphoto

Chinese immigrant David Tom, 53, sits in the cafeteria at Elgin Mental Health Center in Elgin, Ill., where he is confined. Tom, through his guardian, is suing the state, charging unnecessary confinement and neglect. Tom was institutionalized as psychotic 31 years ago after behaving strangely during a period of hospitalization. Years later, after the institutionalization had taken its toll, it was discovered that Tom spoke no English, only a Chinese dialect.

Because Tom could not speak English, a mental examination was impossible. Other than on infrequent visits from his brother, "No one spoke Chinese to this man from 1952 to 1978," Murphy said. "It's all Catch-22. How could you make a diagnosis when you couldn't even talk to him?"

Marvin Schwarz, a psychiatrist and defense witness, said that whether Tom was sick was not the issue.

"If he was sick, they did not treat him. You can't treat psychological patients without talking to them," he said. "And if he wasn't sick, why was he there? Either way, it's hard to understand their motivation."

No one really knows exactly what kind of man Tom was in the early 1950s. But his attorneys have pieced together some of his early years.

Tom and his brother, who asked not to be publicly identified, entered the United States from China in about 1949. His brother remembers him as "extremely normal" and "fairly bright."

Early records at the mental institution also show Tom was quiet and cooperative but became more irrational and hyperactive.

"THE MORE THEY institutionalized him, the more institutionalized he got," Murphy said. "He adapted himself to the culture of institutions."

In his first years in the institution, Tom tried to escape, often running to Chinatown. "Unfortunately his brother...felt he had to bring him back," Murphy said.

Tom's brother has visited over the years but apparently made no effort to get him out of the hospital. "I think he (the brother) was frightened they would be sent back to China," Murphy said.

Murphy said Tom began collapsing, mentally and physically, after being hospitalized for about 15 years. He urinated on the floor. His clothes were filthy. He eventually was sent to Manteno State Hospital, about 75 miles from Chicago, where he ate garbage, got into fights and at times was tied to his bed for leaving the unit, according to court and hospital documents.

In 1977, a quarter of a century after he was committed, a Chinese doctor examined Tom. They spoke different dialects, but the doctor also examined Tom's writing and said it was highly advanced.

A year later, some Manteno workers took Tom to a Chinese restaurant. A cook spoke to Tom and said he was fairly intelligent and wrote well.

MURPHY DISCOVERED Tom's case in 1979 and got Tom transferred into an experimental program at the Illinois State Psychiatric Institute.

"David improved dramatically," Murphy said. "He was clean...He was happy. He just really blossomed."

But the program was too small to keep Tom on and he had to leave. Over Murphy's objections, the state moved Tom to Elgin. Murphy filed suit.

At Elgin, officials contacted a Chinese volunteer, Jack Shaw, who met weekly with Tom for a year, taking him to the zoo, shopping, restaurants and his home.

"When he was in my house," said Shaw, a supervisor at the Department of Children and Family Services, "he gradually opened up. He would joke with my wife and make everyone laugh. Nobody in my house was afraid of him."

Tom had memory lapses but he "was very happy to go out with me," Shaw said. "He would hug me and pat my back. He doesn't know how to describe his happiness."

Shaw eventually recommended that Tom be placed in a halfway house, but the state returned him to Elgin. In recent years, Tom has deteriorated severely.

"He seemed like someone who lived 30 years in one of those horrible zoos," said Schwarz, who visited him last year. "What an institution does is make you a non-person. What you're trained to do is be a vegetable."

"I think the best I can hope for is for David to try to live as decent as possible," Murphy said. "He's living like an animal now. He'd be better off in a zoo."

Lake Arthur has no lake; People don't recall Arthur

LAKE ARTHUR, N.M. (AP) — There's no lake in Lake Arthur and residents in this little New Mexican community can't remember who Arthur was.

"A lot of people want to know where the lake is, but we just tell them there isn't one. And when they ask who Arthur is, we have to tell them we just don't know," said town meter maid Trudy Evans.

"Sorry, no lake," Echoes Ray Jones, operator of Lake Arthur's only grocery store. "But we have lots of beachfront!"

The beachfront is two miles away on the banks of the Pecos River, which is the only place now where water can be found. At the turn of the century, Lake Arthur had three lakes, but when the local artesian wells were tapped by farmers, the lakes dried up, town clerk Gerrie Bain said.

"Now, there's even some dispute about who Arthur was," she said.

Residents of this southern New Mexico town of 375 can't make up their minds whether Arthur ever existed.

"One elderly lady insists Lake Arthur was named for her father, and another in town says the ones who platted the town originally came from Port Arthur, Texas," Mrs. Bain said.

The New Mexico Place Names guide says the town was named for Arthur Russell, who settled on a ranch near the town in 1893.

Rivalries cripple war on drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is throwing some of the Pentagon's fanciest gadgets into its war against drug smugglers, but skeptics in Congress fear that the effort may be crippled by broken promises and bureaucratic rivalries.

Acting under orders from Vice President George Bush, the Navy made its sophisticated E-2C Hawkeye radar reconnaissance planes available 85 hours a month to help the Customs Service spot low-flying planes landing in South Florida with illicit cargoes of marijuana and cocaine.

But Customs Commissioner William von Raab said the Hawkeyes have averaged far less flying time than that in the past six months, with only 20 hours logged in February and less than 10 in March.

The Navy was ordered to help in South Florida because most of the Customs Service's 65 planes are hand-me-downs confiscated from drug smugglers, say Customs officials. The planes generally lack the long-range radar and high-speed maneuverability required for the task of spotting and grounding airborne smugglers.

At one point, say congressional investigators, the military decided it could reduce reliance on Navy air support by using a large Air Force radar balloon tethered at Cudjoe Key off the Florida coast.

BUT VON RAAB SAID the balloon did not begin supplying usable surveillance data on illicit drug flights until March — a full seven months later than promised. A second radar balloon at Patrick Air Force Base, Fla., won't be ready until next August.

Such is the news from the battlefront more than one year after President Reagan, amid much fanfare, created a multi-agency task force under Bush on Jan. 28, 1982, to "reduce and, hopefully, eliminate" crime and illicit drug trafficking in South Florida.

Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., chairman of a House subcommittee studying the air war against drug smuggling, says the government has misled the people of Florida about the extent of military air support provided under Bush's orders.

"The fact of the matter is, it appears the emperor has no clothes," English said during subcommittee hearings in Miami last February.

In a recent interview, English described the situation as: "an awful lot of bluff by the end of the year and not much coverage — not much protection..."

The government has seen evidence lately that with the spotlight on South Florida, air smugglers are seeking alternative routes of entry across U.S. borders. The military, goaded by English's subcommittee, is responding with a promise to commit a new fleet of aircraft to help Customs in the widening war.

ENGLISH, HOWEVER, said problems with the Navy planes and Air Force balloons in South Florida had made him cautious about taking the government at its word. "I'll believe it when I see it," he said.

The congressman is worried, too, about the threat of renewed interagency rivalries resulting from the creation of new anti-drug task forces to conduct long-term investigations of the drug-dealing hierarchy and its financial operations in a dozen major cities — Baltimore, New York, Boston, Atlanta, Houston, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego.

Unlike South Florida, where the anti-drug effort is unified under Bush's control, the urban task forces will operate under the Justice Department. But Justice has no direct authority over agencies like the Customs Service, which are responsible for intercepting smugglers at the border.

English is concerned about relations between the Customs Service and the Justice Department's Drug Enforcement Administration, which will play a key role in the dozen task forces.

"I don't think it's any secret that in the past there's been a lot of bad blood between Customs and DEA," said English.

Christian delegates say no to nuclear weapons

UPPSALA, Sweden (AP) — Christian delegates from more than 60 nations on Saturday condemned nuclear warfare and called for the elimination of nuclear weapons within five years.

But at the end of a four-day Christian World Conference on Life and Peace, the 120 participants failed to agree if possession of nuclear weapons went against their beliefs.

The delegates came from Protestant, Roman Catholic and Russian Orthodox churches, including those in the Soviet Union.

"Some of us are willing to tolerate nuclear deterrence only as a temporary measure in the absence of alternatives," a final conference statement said. It added:

"To most of us, however, even the possession of nuclear weapons is inconsistent with our faith in God, our concept of creation and with our membership in Christ's universal body."

Most participants favored a condemnation of possession of nuclear weapons as a deterrent, "but as the majority was unwilling to impose its will on the minority, efforts were made to agree on a compromise statement," conference chairman William P. Thompson told a news conference. He is a Presbyterian from New York.

The conference statement said, "Nuclear deterrence is essentially dehumanizing, it increases fear and hatred, and entrenches confrontation between 'the enemy and us.' Most of us believe, therefore, that the existence of these weapons contradicts the will of God.

"For all of us, however, obedience of that will demands a resolute effort within a specified time limit for their total elimination."

'We'll polka our way to heaven'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — St. Peter's Basilica bounced Saturday to the sound of a toe-tapping polka Mass celebrated by a Minnesota priest who declared, "We'll polka our way to heaven." He almost didn't make it past the Vatican guards.

Hundreds of curious tourists gathered for the Mass said by the Rev. Frank Perkovich, who brought Joe Cvek and The Polka Masters to the Vatican for a first-ever "polka Mass" complete with accordian, drums and vocalists.

Perkovich, who also brought 80 Midwestern pilgrims with him, persuaded the Vatican to let him celebrate the Mass after giving officials a demonstration tape last fall. But because of a misunderstanding, the group almost didn't make it past the Vatican guards.

"I was frantic this morning — the guards met us at the doors and said no instruments were allowed into the church," Perkovich said. "But I made a quick phone call to a certain monsignor, and they finally let us in."

The medium-paced "Under The Skies of Blue" and other tunes drew hundreds of visitors to one of the church's most prominent altars.The Italian state television network RAI filmed the event.

The band also performed last Wednesday in a general audience for Polish-born Pope John Paul II, who congratulated Perkovich and accepted a recording of the liturgical music. Two of the polka "hymns" are adapted from traditional Polish songs.

The music originated in Bohemia in the 1900s, and later became popular in the upper Midwestern states and other areas.

"Why have beer hall music in church? Because church music is anything that raises your minds and hearts to God," Perkovich said.

"The polka Mass didn't come from the hierarchy to the people, but from the people all the way to Saint Peter's," he added. "We do it in good taste though — no dancing and nothing frivolous."

Egyptians: Don't get frustrated

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly said Saturday the visit to the Middle East by Secretary of State George P. Shultz would be a "very constructive step" if it gains Israeli concessions on Lebanon.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Aly blamed Israel for the breakdown in talks between Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization on a joint strategy for peace talks on the basis of President Reagan's plan.

But Aly said Egypt still believed Reagan's plan for Palestinian autonomy in association with Jordan was viable and urged the United States not to become frustrated in the search for Middle East peace.

"This will be a very constructive step if Secretary Shultz will be able to smooth the Israeli position vis-a-vis the Israeli-Lebanese-American talks about an Israeli withdrawal (from Lebanon)," Aly said.

President Hosni Mubarak said he too hoped the Shultz visit would help bring about an agreement on the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and PLO forces from Lebanon.

Asked whether he expected such an agreement soon, Mubarak replied, "No, not yet. But I think that the...secretary is capable of using his influence on Israel."

Mubarak made his remarks in El Arish during celebrations marking the return of the last of the Sinai to Egypt by Israel on April 25, 1982.

Shultz is scheduled to arrive in Cairo Monday on the first leg of a tour of Middle East capitals aimed at breaking the deadlock in U.S.-sponsored negotiations on troop withdrawals from Lebanon.

Israeli forces have been in Lebanon since invading last June to smash the PLO. They refuse to leave until they are sure the guerrillas won't be allowed back into the southern border region. Syrian units have been in Lebanon since they entered under an agreement ending the 1975-76 Moslem-Christian civil war and refuse to discuss withdrawing until the Israelis are out.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly says the upcoming visit to the Middle East by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz will be constructive if it brings about Israeli concessions on Lebanon. Shultz is due in Cairo Monday for talks with Aly and other Egyptian officials.

He said Israel's demand for a residual military presence in southern Lebanon was an unacceptable infringement on Lebanese sovereignty.

Bedouin leaders air complaints at celebration of Sinai's return

EL-ARISH, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak got an earful of shouted complaints from Bedouin leaders Saturday after he flew to El Arish for what he thought would be harmonious celebrations of the first anniversary of Israel's return of the last of the Sinai peninsula.

Mubarak snapped, "That's enough for the television and press" recording the complaints and broadcasting them nationwide, and ordered reporters to leave the room.

About 300 people, among them Bedouin tribal chiefs and local government officials, remained behind for a private session with the president.

Mubarak flew to this capital of the province of North Sinai for celebrations marking the return last April 25 of the last third of the desert peninsula that Israel conquered in the 1967 war.

Before Mubarak spoke, however, Mohammed Saleh Nasrallah, chairman of the local provincial assembly, said he wanted to discuss "certain issues and make certain demands."

Mubarak interrupted him and said, "I have come here to celebrate the recovery of Sinai and there is no room whatsoever to air only demands. This is not the place."

Some members of the audience, however, began shouting that they too had grievances to air. One Bedouin tribal chief shouted: "Our palm trees have died, Mr. President," referring to irrigation problems in the arid region.

Mounir Shash, governor of North Sinai, spoke of the numerous achievements since regaining the territory but added that some projects were lagging, among them irrigation.

Mubarak then interjected: "OK, I'm apprised of the demand."

"We don't have enough money," Abu-Zeid said.

Israel returned about 7,500 square miles of Sinai last April, completing a phased withdrawal that began in 1974. The final stages took place under the Camp David accords, signed by the United States, Egypt and Israel in 1979.

Thousands protest missiles

TORONTO (AP) — An estimated 10,000 people marched though downtown Toronto Saturday to protest the proposed testing of U.S. nuclear missiles in Canada.

In another demonstration against the plan to test the cruise missiles, about 3,000 people paraded in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Organizers called it the largest protest march ever in Saskatoon.

Toronto police, who gave the estimate on the number of marchers here, said two officers were injured and six people were arrested when pro-nuclear demonstrators and anti-missile protesters scuffled.

Angela Browning, a spokeswoman for the Anti-Cruise Testing Coalition, said the marches were held because they were the only way to get the national government to refuse to test the weapon's guidance system in Canada.

Vietnam 'in the driver's seat' in Cambodia

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States believes Vietnam is "in the driver's seat" in its occupation of Cambodia and that a military reversal of the situation there is unlikely, a senior State Department official said on Saturday.

And as long as no political settlement is reached on Cambodia's future, he said, the Soviet Union and the Peoples Republic of China are likely to remain "at loggerheads" because it is one of the three or four biggest issues that divide them.

But U.S. diplomats continue to hope Vietnam can be persuaded that withdrawing is in its best interests. Until then, the official said, the U.S. strategy of isolating Vietnam economically and politically will be maintained.

In an interview with a small group of reporters the official discussed U.S.-Asian policies with an emphasis on Vietnam's activities inside Cambodia. He spoke on the condition he not be identified by name.

The United States, the official said, has told the Vietnamese and its principal backer, the Soviet Union, that the reward flowing from a political settlement in Cambodia would be more normal relations internationally and, in particular, with the United States.

For Vietnam, he said, the benefits are those of trade, stability and "presumably getting the benefits of aid programs."

He said he does not expect resistance to the Vietnamese occupation by a coalition of Cambodian factions to rise much beyond the current level of harrassment and skirmishing.

And he said that, for the present, Vietnamese troops have pulled back from the Cambodia-Thailand border, making renewed clashes with Thai forces guarding Cambodian refugee camps less likely.

The official was asked what the United States could realistically do to bring pressure to bear on Vietnam to produce a political settlment.

"I think the Vietnamese are in the drivers seat on this one," he said. "...I don't think anybody is under any illusions the Vietnamese are going to be defeated militarily and retreat...What is needed (for a political solution) is a fundmental change in Vietnamese attitudes."

He said that although he detects some Vietnamese nervousness about the solidity of their Soviet backing, "I find it hard to see a deal struck over Vietnamese heads unless somebody gives up his position."

Hitler wanted to send Jews to sea, diary says

LONDON (AP) — Adolf Hitler considered drowning Jews at sea and also had contempt for his top aides, calling Gestapo chief Heinrich Himmler a "deceitful small animal breeder," according to the first published excerpts of Hitler's purported diaries.

The Nazi leader denounced his chief propagandist, Joseph Goebbels, for his "love affairs" and wrote at one point that Goebbels was "up to his old tricks again with women," the Sunday Times said in publishing the excerpts.

Hitler also called the German army leaders who tried to assassinate him in July 1944 "bunglers" and said: "Ha! Ha! Isn't it laughable," the Sunday Times said.

On Saturday, its sister paper, the Times of London, said Hitler "never hints that he had any direct knowledge of or hand in organizing the Holocaust" deaths of 6 million Jews. But it said he wrote that if the Jews "could not be resettled in the East and since no other country would accept them, they should be sent to sea and the boats sunk."

A panel of experts assembled by a West German magazine said it had determined the diaries were Hitler's own. But other experts on Hitler have said they might be forgeries, including West German scholars Professor Helmut Krausnick, Professor Eberhard Jaeckel and Dr. Werner Maser, who said, "Everything speaks against it."

THE SUNDAY Times, which bought the British and American rights to the 60 volumes of diaries from West Germany's Stern magazine, published 760 words of excerpts from the documents Saturday evening in its early Sunday editions.

The paper also wrote how West German journalist Gert Heidemann reportedly took a clue from Hitler's pilot and tracked down the diaries, which it said had been hidden in a hayloft by an unidentified former German army officer 38 years ago. It said the officer turned them over to a West German researcher 2½ years ago.

Undated excerpts being published Sunday quote Hitler as writing of Goebbels: "The little Dr. Goebbels is up to his old tricks again with women. Shall issue a secret instruction that I do not wish to have any more of these love affairs by my closest collaborators, and the party leaders in the Reich."

Of Himmler, Hitler purportedly wrote: "This deceitful small animal breeder with his lust for power, this unfathomable little penny pincher, will find out what I am about."

The authenticity of the diaries has been supported by British historian Hugh Trevor-Roper, sent by Winston Churchill to discover the truth about Hitler's death in 1945, and American handwriting expert Ordway Hilton of the University of South Carolina, The Sunday Times said.

"I have concluded that these documents were written by Hitler," the paper quoted Hilton as saying.

TREVOR-ROPER, author of "The Last Days of Hitler," wrote in Saturday's edition of the Times of London: "I am now satisfied that the documents are authentic...and that the standard account of Hitler's writing habits, of his personality, and even, perhaps some public events may, in consequence, have to be revised."

The documents, which run from 1932 when Hitler began his rise to power until days before he shot himself in a Berlin bunker in April 1945, are currently in a Swiss bank vault, according to the reports.

In an entry dated Nov. 19, 1932, the Sunday Times said Hitler wrote: "From now on, I shall record my political actions and thoughts in notes, in order to preserve them for posterity like every other politician."

His last undated entry was written from the bunker as the Allies encircled Berlin, probably April 16, 1945, the paper said. "The long-awaited offensive has begun. May the Lord God stand by us," Hitler was quoted as saying.

A few days before Hitler killed himself, the Sunday Times said, the diaries were flown from Berlin on a Junker KT-VC plane which crashed near Boernersdorf, near Dresden, in what is now East Germany.

THE PAPER SAID Hitler told the pilot, Gen. Hans Bauer, who is still alive, "In that plane were all my private archives that I had intended as a testimony to posterity. It is a catastrophe."

Heidemann, 51, began searching for the diaries in 1980. Bernersdorf villagers told him someone had retrieved a metal box labeled "Property of the Fuhrer" from the downed Junker, the Sunday Times said.

Heidemann "adamantly refuses to disclose the route which led from Boernersdorf to the eventual discovery of the diaries, claiming that if he did so he would endanger people still living behind the Iron Curtain," the paper said.

Heidemann learned the identity of the German army officer who had taken the box from the wreckage and hidden it in a hayloft, the Sunday Times reported.

It said Heidemann persuaded the officer, who now lives in Switzerland and refused to be named, to part with the documents for an undisclosed sum of money and an assurance that the documents would eventually be placed in the German Federal Archives at Koblenz.

The Times of London reported that the paper in weeks to come would report that Hitler personally approved the secret solo "peace" flight by his deputy, Rudolf Hess, to Scotland in 1941 in hopes that Hess could negotiate a peace treaty with Britain before Germany attacked the Soviet Union.

When Hess was captured, Hitler declared he was insane, which was part of a plan to have Hess feign insanity and remain silent should his mission abort.

China claims frontier guards kill 17 more Vietnamese troops

PEKING (AP) — Chinese frontier guards have killed 17 more Vietnamese troops in fighting along the China-Vietnam border, raising the toll to 37 in a week, the official Xinhua news agency said Saturday.

Chinese television also showed border battle scenes for the first time, with footage of damaged houses, Chinese artillery in action and wounded Chinese civilians.

One of the wounded was a 19-year-old girl who said she had seen three people killed by a "sudden, frenzied" Vietnamese shelling in a Yunnan village market last Sunday.

Xinhua said Chinese frontier guards killed eight Vietnamese and wounded two Friday when the Vietnamese attacked villages in Yunnan province's Jinping county, site of another reported clash on Wednesday night.

The Chinese also "destroyed the enemy's surface fortifications with artillery fire," Xinhua added.

Walesa continues to walk 'a slippery tightrope'

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa's scheduled return to work in the Gdansk shipyards Monday sets the stage for a new confrontation with the government in his struggle for free trade unions in Communist Poland.

Walesa is walking what he calls "a slippery tightrope" — pressuring the government to revive his outlawed union while trying to avoid a serious clash with authorities that could land him and his followers in jail.

The government of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, the premier and party chief, has warned that a government-Solidarity confrontation (such as the May 1 demonstrations called by the Solidarity underground) could force postponement of the June 16-22 homecoming of Pope John Paul II.

"The people are counting on me, and they won't be let down," Walesa said Friday after officials at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk told him he could return to work.

Walesa, an electrician, was dismissed from the yard in 1976 for his union activities, but was restored under the accord that ended the August 1980 strikes and created Solidarity as the first independent union in the Soviet bloc.

An Analysis

He has not explained how he will continue his struggle for independent unions once he resumes his electrician's job, but he told a news conference last Wednesday that he "stands by the August accord."

The surprise decision to readmit Walesa to the shipyard came after he apparently pushed authorities close to their limit of tolerance by meeting with fugitive Solidarity strategists and then tacitly endorsing their call for May 1 demonstrations.

By putting Walesa back in the yard, authorities will be able to keep track of his movements more carefully — at least during the workweek — and thereby restrict his contacts with the Solidarity underground.

But allowing Walesa back into the sprawling complex also puts him into direct contact with his strongest constituency, the 17,000 men and women who work at one of the hottest spots of labor unrest in Poland.

Authorities have not yet announced their plans for official marches on May 1, a major Soviet bloc holiday when thousands of workers traditionally take part in government-sponsored demonstrations.

Poland's powerful and independent Roman Catholic Church has so far issued no statement on Solidarity's May Day protest call.

Catholic primate Cardinal Jozef Glemp, however, chastized the government last Sunday for "humiliating" Polish society, and then met alone for 30 minutes with Walesa, underscoring church support for free trade unions.

Last May Day, Solidarity supporters peacefully took to the streets of more than a dozen Polish cities in the first major demonstration against the Dec. 13, 1981, declaration of martial law, which suspended the union and sent most of its leaders, including Walesa, into internment.

Walesa was freed in November 1982, after Solidarity was outlawed, and used up his accumulated leave time before trying to return to the shipyards in mid-January.

He was placed on the payroll, but blocked from entering the yard for allegedly failing to follow correct procedures.

Police responded to Walesa's recent underground meeting by interrogating him three times, and also by questioning his wife and driver.

Major defects to China

PEKING (AP) — A Nationalist Chinese army major flew his warplane from Taiwan to mainland China and defected to the Communist government, Radio Peking said today.

In Taipei, the Defense Ministry said one of its light military reconnaisannce aircraft was reported missing Friday, but the Foreign Ministry said it had no information on any defection.

Li, who was the second Nationalist pilot reported to have flown to the mainland in 20 months, landed his plane Friday at a "certain" field on the coast of southeast China's Fujian province, across the Taiwan Strait from his homeland, the radio said.

It added that he expressed his dissatisfaction with Taiwan authorities and denounced Taiwan society as corrupt. He said he believed that only the mainland government could make China strong and prosperous, the radio said.

It said Li reported that he often listened to mainland China's radio broadcasts and knew about the defection of former Nationalist air force Maj. Huang Zhicheng.

Huang, 31, flew a jet trainer to Fujian in August 1981. He was given a reward of $325,000 and made deputy chief of staff at a Chinese flying academy.

Huang's defection was the first reported by a Taiwan pilot in more than a decade.

But China has been reporting an increasing number of defections of civilians from Taiwan, many of them mainland natives returning to rejoin relatives.

Brazilians try to move Libyan jets

MANAUS, Brazil (AP) — Military technicians searched for ways to move three arms-filled Libyan jets away from the Manaus airport Saturday to protect the passenger terminal "from the risk of an explosion," officials said.

"They penetrated the three planes and verified that all the cargo they transported was made up of weapons, explosives and ammunition," presidential spokesman Carlos Atila said of the jets, detained here en route to Nicaragua.

After confirming the presence of explosives, air force technicians studied the hydraulic brake system of the Soviet-built Ilyushin transports to find a way to move the three aircraft away from the passenger terminal.

The Libyan crew had refused "an invitation" to accompany the air force crew, according to Atila. Officials said without elaborating that the planes had to be moved to avoid "the risk of an explosion."

The technicians were unfamiliar with the Ilyushins, since most planes in this country are U.S.-made, the officials said.

Poll reveals Americans don't consider Japan reliable ally

TOKYO (AP) — A poll commissioned by the Japanese Foreign Ministry found that only 44 percent of Americans consider Japan a dependable ally, the lowest level since a 1970 survey with similar findings, Japanese newspapers reported Saturday.

The survey, conducted in January by Gallup, found that 33 percent of the 1,574 Americans questioned said Japan was not reliable, while 23 percent declined to answer.

Forty percent of those surveyed named Japan as the United States' principal Asian partner, compared with 23 percent who named China.

The Foreign Ministry concluded that the poll reflects Americans' "dissatisfaction stemming from the Japanese export drive, the closed nature of the Japanese market, the sluggish U.S. economy and the high U.S. unemployment rate," the English-language Asahi Evening News said.

Protestors march for jobs

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — About 60 protesters set off in the rain Saturday on a 400-mile trek to London that the opposition Labor Party billed as a "People's March for Jobs."

"I hope this march is going to help to awaken the conscience and understanding of the British people as a whole," Labor leader Michael Foot told the send-off rally in Glasgow Park.

The protesters are to be joined along the way by marchers from six other British cities. Organizers said they expected the total number of marchers to reach 400 by the time they arrive in London on June 5.

Unemployment in Britain has risen to a post-Depression high of 3.17 million, or 13.6 percent of the workforce, under the Conservative government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Japanese vote in local elections

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese vote today in the second round of local elections that some observers say may give Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone impetus to call for general elections this summer.

Voters will choose 99 city mayors, 314 town and village chiefs, 11,989 assembly councilors in 383 cities and 20,112 members of 1,514 local assemblies.

Nakasone's Liberal-Democratic Party lost two key gubernatorial posts in the first phase of local elections April 10, but swept 11 prefectures and increased its strength in 44 prefectural assemblies.

The loss of gubernatorial posts in Hokkaido and Fukuoka prefectures to reformist parties was considered a major setback for the prime minister and further losses may prompt an election.

Sandinista leader charges U.S. pushing Nicaragua into war

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Sandinista junta leader Daniel Ortega has charged that the United States is pushing Nicaragua toward war with Honduras by proposing "military solutions to the problems of Central America."

In an interview Friday night with The Associated Press, he also defended his left-wing government's attempt to receive weapons from Libya's Col. Moammar Khadafy. Brazilian authorities detained four Libyan cargo planes that landed there last week with documents saying they were carrying medical supplies. On Saturday, Brazilian authorities inspected the planes and a government spokesman said they contained "weapons, explosives and ammunition."

In battle reports issued Saturday, the Defense Ministry said government soldiers killed eight rebels in two clashes in Nicaragua's northern provinces.

State-run television reported heavy fighting in Matagalpa province, near the town of El Carmen, 130 miles northeast of the capital. Military sources said about 300 guerrillas attacked the town a week ago "with numerous casualties on both sides."

In the interview, Ortega repeated his charge that the United States is supplying and financing armed groups of Nicaraguan exiles invading his country from Honduras. He called such actions "truly a threat to the stability of Nicaragua."

"This attitude of the United States and Honduras proposes a military solution to the problems of Central America," he added. "That is very dangerous."

The Nicaraguan government claims the rebels are led by former members of the late rightist President Anastasio Somoza's national guard. But the groups say they represent a wide sector of Nicaraguans who have grown disenchanted with the leftist government. The Sandinistas directed the war that ousted Somoza in July 1979.

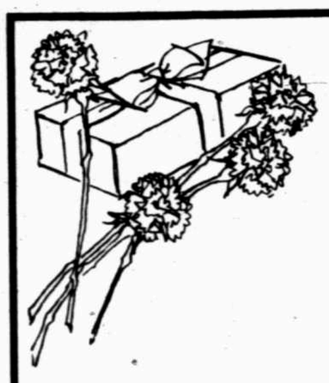

Ortega described the cargo of the four Libyan planes detained in Brazil as "a donation for Nicaragua."

"We are seeking all kinds of help," he said. "Col. Khaddafy supports the Nicaraguan revolution and it is not illegal for Nicaragua to receive this donation. We are forced to seek rifles for the people."

Two major rebel groups are challenging the Nicaraguan government. The Nicaraguan Democratic Force has moved from staging points in Honduras to northern Nicaragua, where it has clashed frequently with government troops.

Other rebels, some based in Costa Rica, operate in the south.

'Old speed cop' was as good with gun as with his fists

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midlander in Profile

His hearing may not be what it used to be. He might not hunt, fish or box much anymore.

And maybe as an 86-year-old great-grandfather he can't get around like he did when he was stalking Bonnie and Clyde back when Al Capone was running the streets of Chicago.

But R.M. "Captain" Bob Hammett is still in pretty good shape for "an old speed cop" who says he misses police work yet wouldn't do it again under the restraints placed on police today.

"An officer now is more apt to get prosecuted than the criminal," he says, leaning back in a living room chair and lighting his pipe. "I couldn't do it. I'd probably be an electrician"

BEFORE BECOMING city marshal of Gorman in 1921 — his first official jab at what would become 50 years of law enforcement work that included 15 years as boxing and judo instructor for the Department of Public Safety — he helped string the highline between Leon Lake and Ranger, where he later became chief of police.

From 1923 to 1932 he was with the Eastland County Sheriff's Department as a "speed cop" — back when sheriff's deputies worked traffic on Texas roads. In 1932, he went to work for the DPS, then known as the Highway Patrol, and retired with the rank of captain on Nov. 1, 1967.

Dec. 23, 1927, is a day Hammett will never forget. That's the day the so-called "Santa Claus" gang hit the First National Bank of Cisco, killing the chief of police and another police officer during a shootout that also left one of the four robbers dead.

The other three — including ringleader Marshall Ratliff, who wore a Santa Claus mask because his mother owned the cafe across the street from the bank — escaped with $30,000.

But not for long.

After a 10-day chase that "was a whole lot like Bonnie and Clyde" — a case Hammett would find himself working eight years later — the gang was captured following a shootout near Breckenridge.

RATLIFF HAD BEEN shot in the back and appeared to be paralyzed, but Hammett suspected he was faking it: "I was carrying him in my arms and pretended like I was going to drop him. Sure enough, he stiffened right up."

Hammett told an elderly Eastland County jailer by the name of Uncle Tom Jones that Ratliff wasn't really paralyzed, but Jones didn't believe it — a mistake that proved fatal.

Jones — who had been feeding Ratliff by hand for a month — left his cell door open one day and Ratliff managed to get a gun. He then killed Jones when the old man refused to give up the keys to the jail.

Later that night Hammett refused to participate in hanging Ratliff — sans trial — from a pole outside the jail. There was little or no sympathy for Ratliff, and none of the law enforcement officers involved in the hanging was even criticized, let alone prosecuted.

A third member of the gang died in the electric chair for his part in the robbery. The fourth robber, a man by the name of Robert Hill, served 20 years before being released from prison.

"I'VE BEEN TOLD he's now living in West Texas under an assumed name," said Hammett, the third of 10 children raised on a farm near DeLeon.

His father was a Commanche County deputy sheriff and it was from him that Hammett gained his early law enforcement training.

Noting a lifelong avocation as a boxer who once won $50 by knocking out former lightweight champion (1910-12) Ad Wolgast in the third round of a 1921 exhibition match at Gorman, Hammett said:

"I've been lucky. I never had to shoot anybody. I had quite a few guys jump on me — drunks — but I didn't have any trouble knocking 'em off. Every police officer should be a boxer. It saves havin' to kill people."

As good with a gun as he was with his fists, Hammett won a $20 gold piece for taking first-place honors in the 1928 state law enforcement pistol championship at Abilene. And he did it with a gun borrowed from the reigning champ, Ranger Chief of Police Jim Ingram, whom Hammett bested by two points.

"I wish I had kept that gold piece," he sighed. "No tellin' what it'd be worth now."

Although the Cisco bank robbery made national headlines, the most famous case he worked was that of Bonnie and Clyde, who were gunned down in a police ambush outside Arcadia, La., in mid-1934.

SOME 10 DAYS earlier, Hammett, stationed in Austin with the DPS, was assigned to the case after the pair shotgunned two troopers to death near Grapevine.

"I broke one of those patrolmen in," he said, shaking his head.

Hammett initially was to have been in on the ambush, but he wound up having to stay in Austin: "I'm glad I didn't go. I never did want to kill anybody. The back of their car looked like a pepper shaker. It had a hundred holes in it — at least."

His final assignment sent Hammett to Midland in 1957, where he spent the last 10 years of his law enforcement career as head of the DPS motor vehicle inspection division.

"I was 70, but didn't wanna retire," he said wistfully. "It was mandatory. Yes, I miss it."

To be a good cop, Hammett said, "You have to be honest and treat people right — no more bangin' around than necessary. But with the restrictions on the police now, I don't know how they can do their job."

One last thing. Did he ever see the movie version of Bonnie and Clyde?

Bosses: Pay tribute to secretaries

Joyce O'Bannon, executive secretary for the president of HNG Oil Co., is one of many secretaries whose work will be honored during Professional Secretaries Week, which begins today and continues through Saturday.

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

8:01 a.m.... "Polly, get me all of yesterday's messages, the Acme Framitz file and a cup of your wonderful black coffee."

"Yes sir, Mr. Peterson."

"Check with Cummings about changing today's lunch to tomorrow's breakfast. Cancel the two o'clock with Granger. Give me 14 copies of this morning's presentation. Get me some cigarettes. And if Porter calls, tell him I'm in Dallas all day."

"Yes sir, right away sir."

Since the Industrial Revolution sent men into the nation's cities, stuck briefcases in their hands and laced wing-tips on their feet, you've had your bosses and then you've had your secretaries.

What would a boss be without a secretary — a girl (or boy) Friday, Monday, Tuesday...? The old-fashioned character spouting orders above would probably admit he'd be a quivering lump of disorganized disaster.

As society progresses, technology advances and the demands on secretaries change, the important role of these sometimes unsung professionals remains a constant.

Wasting time is 'kind of like eating an elephant'

The No. 1 saboteur of life is the finely — or coarsely — honed art of wasting time. It's so common it's ordinary. It should be treated like the plague, herpes and gout — avoided.

It's defeatism at its worst and goes by such euphemistic terms as malingering, procrastinating and indecisiveness and the excuses "I'll start tomorrow," "I can't decide" or "I don't have enough time."

Who does? So, while time's wasting, you might consider approaches toward fulfilling your life-time goals — if there be such things in your life.

It just doesn't happen at once. It's sort of like walking to the grocery store: You don't get there in one leap but rather by taking one step at a time. That may sound simplistic and so basic that it's hardly worth mentioning, but it's a means which pays off and a means which often goes neglected. Otherwise, you'll be wallowing around in the murk of idle time.

There's an art to attaining goals, but first you've got to set them and get into action.

"It's kind of like eating an elephant: You don't have a chance unless you cut the sucker up into bits."

That's the straight-forward advice of economist Dr. Dennis Fisher of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. Fisher, Dr. Donald Stebbins and other Aggies from Texas A&M University's TAEX last week were trying to tell Midland County employees and officials how to cut through and unravel the mind-boggling red tape at work and in their personal lives.

The county workers, including clerks, sheriff's deputies and elected and appointed officials, made lists of time-wasters on the job and at home:

On The Job

—Phone calls.
—Running errands for the brass.
—Waiting for return calls.
—Daydreaming.
—Running personal errands.
—Transporting in-company personnel as if you were running a taxi service.
—Worrying — being paranoid about things.
—Drinking coffee on the job.
—Attending unnecessary meetings.
—Listening to complaints of inmates.
—Procrastinating decisions.
—Griping.
—Needless arguing.

(See WASTING, Page 9B)

Doctor pioneers Reye's treatment

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Dr. Morris Levinsohn

Dr. Morris Levinsohn, a pediatric neurologist, remembered that February morning in 1975 during an interview Friday. He is in Midland for the West Texas Epilepsy Association's Golf Tournament.

Although the soft-spoken South African native doesn't think of himself as a pioneer in the treatment of Reye's Syndrome, he said: "I'm a genuinely, very, very interested party trying to combat this disease. With any disease there are many people involved."

Levinsohn recalled sitting with the neurosurgeon, "just deliberating." That morning was a turning point in treating the disease, which was killing 55 percent of its victims.

"It used to be when you met with such a patient (of Reye's), you pulled out the Bible, Koran or Torah and prayed with the parents," Levinsohn said. "We had to find another way."

The doctors knew if they could not stop their patient's brain from swelling inside her rigid skull, she would die.

"I had read about a group of Virginia doctors who monitored pressure (swelling) in the brains of adult patients who had suffered head trauma," Levinsohn said.

Levinsohn, along with a colleague, accepted the hypothesis that monitoring pressure in the brain could help pinpoint the proper drug to fight the swelling produced by Reye's.

"There wasn't any formal protocol set up because this was a new approach," Levinsohn said.

He and the neurosurgeon talked to the girl's parents. They agreed to let the doctors insert a catheter, or tube, in their daughter's brain. The other end of the catheter would be attached to electronic equipment monitoring the pressure.

"We felt this method of monitoring the pressure was the only way to know what kind of drugs to give," Levinsohn said.

"Before, we were giving the drugs at random. We knew the drugs would bring down the pressure (in the brain), but we had no way of knowing when to give them."

Since that early morning at Cleveland's Rainbow Babies & Children's Hospital, Levinsohn has used the "intracranial" method on 23 Reye's Syndrome patients. The mode of treatment has become nationally recognized.

Before this therapy 80 to 90 percent of Reye's patients died; now the mortality rate is 25 percent, Levinsohn said.

The young girl survived but, more importantly, she and other Reye's Syndrome patients have not suffered any side effects.

Levinsohn said greater public awareness about the disease, an intensive care setting and "a multi-discipline approach in the treatment has lowered the mortality statistics".

The treatment requires a medical team including a pediatric intensivist, a neurologist, a neurosurgeon and critical care nurses.

Levinsohn said this approach "gave us a glimmer of hope, but follow up on these patients is also extremely important."

He and three other doctors studied 16 survivors of Reye's Syndrome who were treated at the Cleveland hospital. According to Levinsohn, all the children — except two who were diagnosed as mentally retarded at the onset of the disease — were doing average or better than average in school.

The study also included the parents reactions to the illness. Levinsohn said 14 of the 16 mothers interviewed showed emotional problems, such as anxiety and depression, and overprotective behavior as long as five years after the child's illness.

"When a Reye's Syndrome patient is admitted to the intensive care setting, tubes are put in the brain, throat, almost every orifice of the body and it's very frightening," Levinsohn said.

"We are physicians. We are used to this," he added. "I believe in the total treatment, not only the patient, but also the parents.

"Outside the intensive care setting two parents are worried and scared. We tend to forget.

"The doctor needs to spend time with these parents. If the doctor doesn't have the time, a nurse who is associated with critical care or a social worker must spend time with the parents and appreciate their concerns. This is a traumatic experience.

"I'm a doctor, but I have to apply sensitivities. What effects does this disease have on not only the children, but the parents?" Levinsohn asked.

Levinsohn, who was recognized last year as the best professor at the Cleveland hospital, has presented his Reye's Syndrome treatment and studies at an international meeting in Japan.

DEATHS

Services will be Monday at 3:30 p.m. in Emmanuel Baptist Church. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Gamboa died Friday in a Midland hospital after a lengthy illness.

He was born Feb. 8, 1893, in Fort Stockton. He spent his early life in San Vicente. He married Gabriela Hinojos in 1919. He was a rancher and worked on ranches in Brewster County until he retired. In 1968, he moved to Midland. He was a member of Emmanuel Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; seven sons, Anastacio Gamboa of Ozona and Ventura Gamboa, Bernardino Gamboa, Cruz Gamboa, Angel Gamboa, Francisco Gamboa and Telesfor Gamboa, all of Midland; three daughters, Juliana Bernal of Midland, Begnina Ortega of LaUnion Coah, Mexico, and Oralia Rodriguez of Midland; a sister, Adelaida Rivera of Acuna Coah, Mexico; 66 grandchildren, 82 great-grandchildren and a great-great-grandchild.

Janet Thomas

Services for Janet Thomas, 67, of Snyder, will be at 1:30 p.m. today in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Ray White, of the Main Street Church of Christ, officiating. Burial will in Fairview Cemetery.

Mrs. Thomas died Thursday in a Snyder hospital.

She was born April 3, 1916, in England and lived there until moving to the United States in 1940 after marrying a soldier. The couple later moved to Colorado City and Snyder. She was a security guard for 20 years and was a security guard in Snyder at the time of her death.

Survivors include a son, Wm. Lee Thomas of Montegut, La.; and two sisters, Agnes Hallman of St. Joseph, Mo., and Mary Wynne of Oldham, England.

B.T. 'Tom' Webb

Services for B.T. "Tom" Webb, of Midland, will be at 9:30 a.m. Monday in the Primitive Baptist Church. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Webb died Thursday in a Big Spring hospital after a long illness.

He was a retired employee of West Texas Utilities Co., where he began work in 1928 in the service departent in Munday. For the next 13 years he served as a serviceman in the Marfa, Alpine, Winters and Junction areas. He retired as local manager of the Paint Rock, Talpa and Valera areas.

He had lived in Midland for three years and was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church. He served as a Scoutmaster in Knox City, president of the volunteer fire department in Junction and was an active member of the Ballinger Lions Club. When he retired, he was serving as chairman in Zone 4, Region 2, District 2A-1 of Lions International.

The family requests that memorials be sent to the Midland Primitive Baptist Church or the American Heart Association.

Survivors include his wife, of Big Spring; two daughters, Sue Guy Horn of Big Spring and Mrs. M.R. (Ann) Christian of Odessa; a son, B.D. "Spider" Webb of Pensacola, Fla.; six grandsons, a granddaughter and five great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Nelson Mahurin, Dennis Walker, Clyde Marshall, Bob Drummond, Leon Handley and Raymond Kirkpatrick. Honorary pallbearers will be Webb's grandsons.

Roberta Regan

Services for Roberta Regan, 68, of Sun City, Ariz., will be at 11 a.m. Monday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Dr. F. Ray Riddle, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Regan died Thursday morning in a Sun City hospital.

She was born Oct. 31, 1914, in Chavez County, N.M. She was married to the late U.S. congressman from Texas, Ken Regan. During sessions of Congress, they lived in Washington, D.C., where Mrs. Regan was prominent in society and was once voted among the city's 10 most beautiful women.

After he retired from congress, they moved to Santa Fe, N.M., but kept a home and business headquarters in Midland. Following her husband's death in 1969, Mrs. Regan moved to San Francisco where she lived for several years. She lived in Sun City for the past four years.

Survivors include her brother, Edward McGary of Merced, Calif.; a half-brother, Herschell McGary of Anacortes, Wash.; and an aunt, Mrs. Foster Denney of El Paso.

Pallbearers will be Dave Smith, John Healey, Irby Dyer, Kelly Bell, Cowden Oliver and Murray Fasken.

Ruth Morgan

BIG SPRING — Services for Ruth Morgan, 65, of Casper, Wyo., will be at 2 p.m. Monday in the Primitive Baptist Church with Elder B.R. Howze and Elder Dan Simmons, officiating. Burial will be in Trinity Memorial Park directed by Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home.

Ms. Morgan died Friday afternoon in a Lubbock hospital.

She had lived most of her life in Lamesa and Ackerly and was retired from Dotty Dan Factory in Lamesa. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church.

Police look for robbers

Midland police are looking for two men in connection with an attempted armed robbery Friday night at the Trinity Place Apartments, 3600 N. Midland Drive.

Susan Eloise Merkle told police two men knocked on her apartment door about 10 p.m. Friday. When she opened the door, the men, wearing ski masks and nylon hose over their faces, reportedly entered her apartment.

Ms. Merkle told police that one man, armed with a shotgun and wearing overalls, held her at gunpoint while the second man searched her bedroom.

According to police reports, Ms. Merkle later struggled with the men before they fled her apartment without taking anything. She reportedly followed the men and saw them drive off in a maroon or black pickup.

Police reports describe one of the suspects as a white male, about 30, approximately 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighing 160-180 pounds and wearing a black T-shirt with red writing on the front. The second suspect is also a white male, about 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighing about 140-150 pounds.

Doctor gets prison term

DALLAS (AP) — A 64-year-old Dallas physician has been sentenced to five years in federal prison for illegally prescribing the stimulant Preludin.

Kendall H. Moore pleaded guilty Dec. 21 to prescribing 30 Preludin tablets Feb. 16, 1982, without a valid medical reason.

Cowboy artist dies

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — George B. Marks, an internationally known cowboy artist, has died at age 59.

Marks was a member of the Cowboy Artists of America and had planned to attend a special cowboy artists exhibit in Kerrville just before he died Thursday.

His work has been exhibited at the Royal Academy in London, the Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, and in museums in Phoenix, Ariz., Houston and Midland. His paintings also were in a traveling show that toured China.

Marks was born Sept. 10, 1923, in Conrad, Iowa, and received an art degree from Iowa University.

He was a staff artist for 14½ years at Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque, which conducts various national security and energy projects for the federal government.

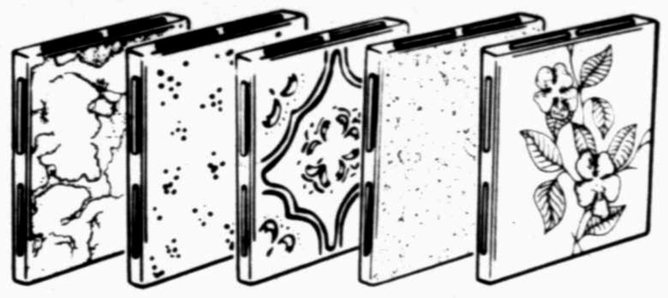

He is to be buried in Eldora, Iowa.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Council to consider zoning changes

Midland City Council will once again study purchasing the yearly wrecker service for the police department and also consider three changes to the city zoning code during its meeting Tuesday at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

During its April 13 meeting, the council delayed action on purchasing a wrecker service. The council is deciding whether to continue with the present wrecker system, which rotates duties among eight wrecker companies, or contract with a single company.

Some wrecker operators say the single-wrecker system would create a wrecker monopoly in Midland. According to Midland police, the one-wrecker system is preferable because it would be more efficient than the present method.

At 2:45 p.m., the council will hold a public hearing to consider three possible zoning changes. The changes would permit the sale of self-service gasoline and liquor for off-premises consumption within an NS, or Neighborhood Service District. Another alteration would create use classifications for private elementary and secondary schools.

The council will also consider an ordinance on second reading concerning a request by West Texas Consultants, representing I. David Porras, for vacation of Kentucky Avenue, between Marienfeld and Big Spring streets, along with a resolution contracting with Porras for the relocation of certain water and sewer lines.

A public hearing will be conducted on a request by Jay R. Peck Construction Co. for a specific use permit to sell alcoholic beverages at an establishment on the southeast corner of Big Spring Street and Palmer Drive. A hearing also will be held on a request by Isidro Trevino for a specific use permit to operate a nightclub on the south side of Franklin Avenue at Crestview Road.

Also up for review will be a request by Carolyn Mitchell for a temporary permit to place a mobile home in her backyard at 1105 W. Missouri Ave. She is seeking the permit so she can give her handicapped son his own living quarters.

A request by Discovery Operating, Inc., for a permit to drill an oil well inside city limits will be considered, along with a resolution appropriating funds for laying a water line at Paul Davis Well Field.

The Midland Softball Association's request to construct a three-lane park road at Hogan Park also will be considered, along with a motion to set a date and hire an auctioneer for the city's annual auction.

Construction plans for the Instructional Materials Center will be reviewed.

Gifts to be accepted include a copying machine from Carver PTL and chairs from the Midland High School Booster Club.

The trustees will look at a request from In Full Bloom Productions to rent Midland Memorial Stadium for a concert by the Jacksons, including Michael Jackson, to raise money for the United Negro College Fund. Performances would be at 8 p.m. May 28 and 29. About 15,000 persons are expected for each performance.

In addition, the board will appoint a financial auditor and consider a comparability statement.

County Commissioners

Midland County Commissioners will resume their discussion of the proposed employee manual in the 9 a.m. Monday meeting of the Commissioners' Court in the Midland County Courthouse.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Consider a report by Albert Stewart, superintendent of the county's Road and Bridge Department.

—Discuss Midland County employee management workshop, which was conducted by the Texas Agriculture Extension Service.

—Consider a joint county-city-school public auction Aug. 13.

—Consider accepting maintenance of County Roads 126 West, 1283 South, 1284 South, 1285 South, 1286 South and West Industrial Avenue.

MISD Board of Trustees

Plans for programs and new buildings will dominate the agenda when the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees meets at 1:30 p.m. in the Administration Building, 702 N. N St.

The board will hear plans for expanding the gifted and talented program and a plan for computer literacy. The MISD Comprehensive Special Education Plan for three years will be considered, as will a district security plan.

MMH Governing Boards

Midland Memorial Hospital governing boards will meet Thursday in the MMH medical staff conference room.

Agenda for the 12:30 p.m. trustees' meeting includes an update on the 77-bed expansion.

During the 2 p.m. directors' meeting, the five publicly-elected officials will set a date for issuing revenue bonds for the $15 million 77-bed expansion.

Other agenda items include committee reports and financial statements.

Bosses should pay tribute to secretaries

Beginning Monday morning, many of the nation's bosses will pay tribute to the men and women who pull order from the confusion of daily business activity.

During Professional Secretaries Week, today through Saturday, secretaries in Midland and across the country will step out from behind their desks to accept both gifts and gratitude.

"The concept of 'secretary' is continually changing," said Mrs. O'Bannon, who was selected 1981 Energy Secretary of the Year by the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

"I remember very clearly having to make eight to 10 copies of a letter with carbon paper on a manual typewriter," she said, noting that manuals have since given way to electrics, correcting electrics and word processors.

Because of changes in technology, the idea of a message-taking, copy-making "girl" has given way — in many cases — to administrative assistants, executive secretaries, men and women who serve as valuable confidants to their employers.

"Machines still depend on people to do the thinking and planning," she said. "Machines will not replace management-oriented individuals who are capable of making wise decisions."

Employers who fail — or refuse — to allow their secretaries enough freedom and responsibility may only be hurting themselves, according to Mrs. O'Bannon.

"If you look around and find a woman who has surpassed the role of clerk-typist, receptionist, secretary, most of the time you will find that she has had a mentor to encourage and help her," she said. "A career-oriented secretary can be an invaluable working partner."

After moving to Midland in 1968, Mrs. O'Bannon was hired as a secretary by an independent oil company. After about two years, she and her husband opened their own secretarial-printing-telephone answering service.

Since 1972, after they sold the business, she's been executive secretary to the same oil executive and has taken courses in oil and gas law, petroleum land and public relations to aid her in the work.

Mrs. O'Bannon said her experience has revealed that while shorthand and typing skills are important, a good secretary complements those talents with initiative and the ability to handle people.

She conceded that young women today are more likely to pursue a greater variety of careers than the "nurse, secretary or housewife" pattern followed by many in her generation.

But she added that because secretarial work is increasingly challenging and rewarding, many women will be "perfectly happy in that role."

Mrs. O'Bannon said employers should bear in mind this week that while flowers and candy are nice signs of appreciation, "that doesn't replace compensation."

And the most important advice she could offer an employer is to keep a secretary "informed and involved. Your job is much more interesting when you're aware of what's going on. You can use your initiative, you can anticipate and be more involved."

Forgiveness Week nets library 140,000 books

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Thousands of anonymous patrons of the Philadelphia Free Library taking advantage of "Forgiveness Week" returned 140,000 overdue books worth $1.4 million by Saturday, far exceeding library expectations, officials said.

Library officials expected to receive about 75,000 books during the week, when patrons were allowed to bring in overdue publications without paying fines. The grace period ends today.

"We figure the books are worth $1.4 million. The equivalent of three medium libraries were returned," Milner said.

He said the library anually loses about $500,000 worth of items patrons fail to return.

A similar program in April 1974 netted about 62,500 books. Library officials say the second Forgiveness Week might be the last. With computers, the library now keeps track of patrons with overdue books and turns their names over to a collection agency.

A tattered 1910 copy of Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor was the most valuable item the library recovered this week, Milner said.

The score was checked out 31 years ago and returned with a typed letter of apology that urged the library to "keep it under lock and key and never, never, never let it out again," Milner said.

While patrons brought back an average of three books apiece, one woman returned 300 romance novels and came back the next day with 30 more, he said.

The most overdue book was "Maker of Opportunites," which was checked out in 1922 from a library branch that no longer exists, Milner said. At the current fine of 5 cents a day, the patron would have owed $1,113.

Milner said the returned books were an average of 2½ years overdue and that the majority were non-fiction.

"They were in surprisingly good condition," he said.

LHS student to be cadet

Stace Bradshaw

Stace Bradshaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Bradshaw of No. 4 Stutz Court, received an early appointment to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in December.

He will receive the equivalent of a full undergraduate scholarship which includes room, board, medical and dental care, travel expenses and monthly pay.

The valedictorian at Lee High School, Bradshaw was nominated from a field of 800 candidates statewide by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. He reports to West Point July 1.

TEA to sponsor curriculum seminar

Recommendations on public school curriculum and course requirements will be discussed in a workshop at the Region 18 Education Service Center on LaForce Boulevard from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. Thursday.

The workshops, sponsored by the Texas Education Agency, will included proposed recommendations developed in each of the 12 subject areas the Texas Legislature wants included in the public school curriculum, according to Dr. Tom Anders, deputy commissioner for Planning, Research and Curriculum.

The workshop will familiarize persons with the materials in preparation for public hearings later this year, he said.

Workshop materials are available for review at each of the state's 20 education service centers. For more information, contact Vernon Stokes at 563-2380.

Orientations open to sixth graders

Sixth grade students attending private schools in Midland are invited to attend their neighborhood junior high school orientation programs from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Tuesday or Wednesday.

Students will view different elective areas open to them during their seventh-grade school year. Registration materials may also be picked up at this time.

Local student receives grant-in-aid

Sul Ross State University geology graduate student J.D. Rathjen was awarded a $600 grant-in-aid by the Southwest Section of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists. The grant will be used to help pay costs of field work, equipment and transportation associated with his thesis work.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. David H. Rathjen, of 2510 Dengar, he received the bachelor of science degree from Texas Tech University. His thesis involves reconstructing and interpreting the depositional environment of the Word Formation in the vicinity of the Hess Ranch in the Glass Mountains.

LHS student wins piano competition

Robert Rumbelow

Robert Rumbelow, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Rumbelow of 3618 Sinclair, recently won the District I Senior Piano solo competition in Lubbock. He is eligible to perform in state competition at the Texas Music Teachers Convention in San Antonio June 11.

A senior in the Lee High School band orchestra, he has been named in Who's Who in American High School Students and Musicians and has received the Kappa Kappa Psi Citation of Excellence. He is a member of the Texas Music Educators Association All-State Band and has won six first places in the Midland Music Teachers Association's Sonata, Sonatina, Concerto Contest; four first places in the Lubbock Music Teachers Association's Contest; and three medals in the Whitlock State theory exam. He has won the local TMTA competition three times and was a district alternate twice.

Midlanders elected school's officers

Rim Watson and Stephen Post, both of Midland, were chosen as officers in recent student elections at Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

Watson will serve as president of the senior class while Post will serve as congressman.

Watson is the son of Jean Bevel of 2301 W. Shandon, and Post is the son of Melton Post of 4601 Illinois.

VOE banquet slated for May 3

A VOE Advisory meeting was conducted by Gayle Reeves of Gulf Oil Corp. at the Petroleum Club Thursday. During the business session, the 16th annual Employer-Employee Banquet was scheduled for 7 p.m. May 3 at Midland Country Club. The banquet will be sponsored by the Midland and Lee High School Chapters of Office Education Association.

In other action, a fall get-acquainted function was set for October and elections were held.

Steve Holt of First City National Bank was elected to chair the board and Shirley Edwards of Lee High School was named secretary.

House passes hospital board bill

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House of Representatives has passed and sent to the Senate legislation by Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, relating to composition of a county hospital board of managers.

HB 777 is co-sponsored by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland.

The bill, which was approved on the House local and consent calendar, provides for appointment of between six and 12 members, and allows the county commissioners court (which appoints the members) to stagger terms "so that as near as possible to one-half the members' terms expire each year."

Local student receives fellowship

Richard C. Beveridge, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Beveridge of 2900 Racquet Club Drive, has been awarded a Pulliam Journalism Fellowship.

As one of 10 students selected in the 10th annual nationwide competition, Beveridge, a student at the University of Oklahoma, will receive a cash grant of $2,250 and will participate in a special internship program at The Indianapolis Star and The Indianapolis News from June 13-Aug. 14.

Midlanders make NTSU honor roll

Three students from Midland were named to the fall semester honor roll at North Texas State University.

Midlanders named to the list were Bradley L. Stickney, son of Mr. and Mrs. B.J. Stickney of 2610 N. L St.; Peter Allen Whitman, son of Allen Whitman of 2001 W. Missouri; and Tanya Lynn Wilkerson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas L. Wilkerson of 2505 Harvard.

UTPB receives check from Exxon

ODESSA — Richard J. Kartzke, a division engineering manager for Midcontinent Division of Exxon Company, USA, presented a check for $2,500 to Dr. Robert Reeves, dean of the College of Science and Engineering at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The check represents an unrestricted gift which may be used for scholarships, special equipment, faculty recruitment or other uses for which state funds may not be used.

Doctor joins Odessa Center staff

ODESSA — Jim Bob Brame, M.D., has joined the faculty of the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC) Regional Academic Health Center (RAHC) in the Permian Basin.

Brame, an associate professor and associate chairman of family medicine, will be responsible for developing a family medicine residency program for the Odessa Center.

Midlander wins WBU award

Midlander Craig Easley, a student at Wayland Baptist University in Plainview, was among three WBU students to receive major awards in state competition at the Phi Beta Lambda Leadership Conference in Fort Worth recently.

Easely won the competition in economics.

Monahans students elected at UTPB

ODESSA — Two Monahans students have been named to the top posts in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin student senate.

Consultant to discuss use of computers in libraries

Computer consultant Bob Walton of the Texas State Library in Austin will speak on "Microcomputers in the Library" in the 7:30 p.m. Monday annual meeting of The Friends of the Midland County Public Library in the lobby of Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Walton, 30, is the state library's automation consultant.

Business, corporate, public and private libraries are converting to computers in their daily routine, Walton said.

Automation of a library will help increase services, will make information "more accessible" to the library patrons, will speed up processes and, for example, will give the librarian "better control" in ordering materials.

The printed page won't be obsolete, though the electronic storage of information has put a fright into book buffs and paper mills.

Some technical journals, such as those in engineering, are stored in computers and read on terminal screens. "The data changes so fast," Walton said, "they don't put it on paper."

Walton said books won't become antiques despite the proliferation of computers. "It's awfully hard to crawl into bed with a terminal."

He foresees the computerization of libraries.

"Computers and libraries go together," Walton said. "We still are suspicious of these animals."

Children and young people, however, are accepting computers as readily as their parents accepted radio and television a generation ago.

"They are not at all inhibited. They have no fear of technology."

Texas A&M to expand research into guayule plant

FORT STOCKTON — Texas A&M's Agriculture Experiment Station has acquired a five-year lease of Firestone Tire and Rubber Company's Guayule Research Station at Fort Stockton.

The lease will allow A&M to expand its study of guayule, a native West Texas shrub from which rubber is produced.

The agreement, developed with the assistance of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, will be renewable in 1988 for an additional five years.

The Firestone lease includes 180 acres of guayule and 220 acres available for guayule cultivation, as well as support-related buildings, laboratories and equipment.

Dr. Jaroy Moore, head of A&M's research station in Pecos, will serve as administrator. Dr. Jimmy Tipton pioneer guayule researcher at the El Paso station, also will be intensely involved, said an A&M spokesman.

Major research objectives will be to determine the growth and rubber production response of guayule to various cultural practices, select the most desirable plants, document guayule survival and regrowth rates after clipping, ascertain insect problems, and determine after-effects of selected insecticides.

An industrial and agricultural economic feasibility study has indicated guayule holds a strong potential as a commercial rubber-producing crop in the Southwest.

Clinic has new quarters

ANDREWS — Andrews City-County Health Clinic has opened new quarters at 211 NW First St.

New facilities include a pe-natal care clinic, according to nurse Chris Cohn.

The clinic is the first of the county annex buildings to be occupied since their purchase from United Medical Corporation in October 1982 for $500,000.

Wasting time like eating an elephant

—Fatigue.
—Poor planning.

Wasting Time At Home

—Watching bad television shows.
—Dawdling.
—Total disorganization.
—Balancing the checkbook for your wife.

Time-wasting remedies ranged from "just don't do it" in reference to griping and daydreaming and to good nutrition, spiritual meditation, rest and exercise in reference to fatigue. To avoid the paper-stacking habit and cluttered desk, only handle a piece of paper once.

"Tell me," asked an office deputy, "is resting wasting time?"

"No," Fisher said without comment.

The Fisher-Stebbins approach to purging your life of time-wasting habits starts with identifying gremlins in your life: "If you don't zero in on what the problem is, it's going to be hard to fix it."

The key is simple, said Fisher, but "I don't think it's too easy to use." First of all, "You make a list of what you have to do," set your priorities toward your goals, re-evaluate them from time to time and re-set the priorities.

It's simple. The hard part is the "doing" and developing the habits of putting "first things first" and doing one thing at a time.

"Most of us go through life so busy...(and) fill our lives with activity rather than purpose," observed Fisher.

The time counselors offered some advice:

—Think before you act.
—Turn a crisis into an opportunity, and your confidence will grow.
—Finish what you start. Don't procrastinate.
—It's your job to be interrupted but keep those interruptions short.
—Be ruthless with time but gracious with people.
—Time is your most important asset.
—"Effective time management," said Stebbins, "usually has nothing to do with hard work."

"If you don't have time to do it right the first time," remarked Deputy Constable Hugh "Buzz" Buzzell, "when are you going to find time to do it again?"

Study links stress, high blood pressure

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A discovery about the way mental stress appears to affect the kidneys may help explain the link between stress and high blood pressure, a researcher said Saturday.

A study conducted by researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and published Friday in the journal Science says psychological stress appears to reduce the kidneys' ability to remove excess sodium.

The study was the first to demonstrate that stress can influence the retention of sodium in humans, Dr. Paul Obrist, a psychologist at the university who assisted in the research, said in a telephone interview.

Obrist said the report indicated a link between the heart and kidneys in regulating blood pressure, but he said more work was necessary to firm up the evidence.

Dr. Kathleen Light, a UNC psychiatrist and principal investigator in the study, agreed that the research shed new light on high blood pressure, or hypertension.

"This work is new in that it ties together what many people have said are two separate environmental factors that contribute to high blood pressure — stress and salt in the diet," she said in a statement. Sodium is a component of salt.

Ms. Light said 40 healthy male students, ages 18-22, participated in the five-hour experiment.

Sixteen students served as control subjects, while the remaining 24 were divided into "high risk" and "low risk" groups.

"High risk" subjects showed borderline high blood pressure or had parents with high blood pressure. "Low risk" subjects had no personal or family history of hypertension.

Students drank a liter of water in the first hour and a fifth of a liter every 30 minutes for the next four hours. Their urine was analyzed for sodium every hour.

In the fourth hour, students were given competitive reaction time tests designed to increase their heart rates. Small awards of money for beating opponents increased stress, measured by electrocardiographs and remote-control blood pressure cuffs.

"High risk" students who had especially fast heart rates during the tests produced signifigantly less urine that the others and excreted signifigantly less sodium, the study showed. The other students showed slight increases in sodium excretion during stress and no change in fluid volume.

"We found that low-risk subjects (for high blood pressure) don't retain any sodium, while high-risk subjects did only if they were reactive with heart rate and blood pressure," Obrist said.

Two fires being probed

Midland County Sheriff's Office is investigating two Friday night fires that may be related and possibly were the result of arson.

According to fire deparment reports, about 8:20 p.m. Friday, Midland firefighters responded to a fire that damaged a living room wall and carpet inside a house on South Midkiff Road, the seventh house south of Interstate 20, owned by B.R. Courtney.

At 10 p.m., firemen answered an alarm on a fire that did minimal damage to a trailer at Mario's Trailer Park, located at Midkiff Road and County Road 130.

A spokesman from the Midland Fire Marshal's Office said Saturday that the two fires may be related and an arson investigation by sheriff's investigators continues.

Engineers may be licensed

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Two Midland area residents have been approved for licensure as professional engineers by the State Board of Registration for Professional Engineers.

Robert John Leibrecht, P.O. Box 1959, Midland, and Thomas Ray Mangrem, P.O. Box 28, Alpine, will be licensed by the state upon filing a copy of their official Texas engineer's seal with the board.

Midlanders elected

Joe A. Kloesel will be chairman of the board; C.W. Barclay will be vice president of District VI; and Larry Turner will serve as a director.

Inmates escape

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two men serving sentences for narcotics distribution scaled a fence at the Federal Corrections Institute at Terminal Island and escaped in a small speedboat, authorities said Saturday.

Energy, agriculture symposium slated

FORT STOCKTON — The inter-workings of petroleum and agriculture and their impact on the economy will be discussed in a symposium which begins at 9:30 a.m. Thursday in the Pecos County Large Community Building here.

The symposium's theme will be "Co-existence: Agriculture and Energy Producers."

Speakers will include:

—Gregg McKenzie speaking on well site damage.

—Tom Linberry, Winkler County rancher, on oil-damage problems.

—Dr. Darrell Ueckert, Texas A&M University associate professor, discussing reclamation of land which has been disturbed by oil and gas development.

—Barney Hightower, Midland-based Exxon USA right-of-way agent, and C.F. Lawrence, Midland energy producer, on "Contracts and Conservation."

—George Finley, lawyer, on legal procedures of negotiating oil and gas contracts.

—Jim Morrow, director of the Texas Railroad Commission's oil and gas division, on the commission's responsibilities.

—O.B. Orr of University Lands in Midland, on the UL's views on the co-existence of petroleum and agriculture.

The symposium is being co-sponsored by the Pecos County Livestock and Natural Resources Committee and by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Chairing the symposium's sessions will be Pecos County ranchers Louis Woodward and Bill Honaker.

Program can kill weed problems

Johnson grass, pigweed (carelessweed), barnyard grass and shattercane all are common yield robbers in Texas milo fields, but a program of good management and flexible herbicide use can help reduce or eliminate these weed problems.

Johnson grass probably is the biggest weed problem along the Gulf Coast, while both Johnson grass and shattercane plague milo fields in northern parts of the state, according to a Monsanto Agricultural Products Co. news release. Any milo grower unlucky enough to have these dense stands of either of these weeds in his field can count on yield reductions.

"Our research indicates that a medium to high infestation of shattercane and Johnson grass can reduce yields by up to 65 percent," says Dr. Allen Wiese, professor weed control at Texas A&M University's Agricultural Experiment Station at Bushland.

Since Johnson grass and shattergrass are closely related to milo, they are difficult to control by old-line herbicides. But planting safened seed — seed which has been treated with a substance which helps protect the milo seedling against injury from the herbicide — makes it possible to use acetanilide herbicide, such as Lasso, on milo. As an additional weapon against Johnson grass, Wiese recommends rotating milo to wheat.

Farmers take loss from crop sales

COLLEGE STATION — Texas farmers got about $800 million less from crop sales last year than they did in 1981, as cotton sales took the sharpest nosedive — from $1.4 billion to $875 million.

Estimated crop sales, which totaled almost $3.8 billion in 1982, were down due to poor prices caused by huge stockpiles of most farm commodities, sagging domestic demand and decreased exports, said Dr. Carl Anderson, a Texas Agricultural Extension Service economist.

Weather losses were heavy in some areas, particularly in the South Plains, where more than half the cotton acreage was lost to hail.

Despite these heavy loses, cotton was still the leading cash crop last year. The South Plains led the state in its more than $270 million in cash receipts.

Decrease expected in wheat harvest

AUSTIN — Texas wheat producers expect to harvest 136.3 million bushels this year, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

The production estimate suggests a 5 percent drop from a year ago. Although harvested acres are down due to the Payment-in-Kind (PIK) program, yield prospects for the 1983 crop remain good.

"Moisture conditions have been very favorable this winter and early spring," said Doug Murfield, state statistician, "and statewide condition of the crop has improved with the warmer weather."

Wheat fields are making excellent growth across the state, and some stands in South Texas are beginning to head out.

Although the PIK program took 3 million acres out of production, Texas producers could still harvest a good crop. If the current production estimate is realized, the crop would be 26 percent below the record 1981 production but 5 percent avove that of 1980.

Livestock sales total $5.1 billion

COLLEGE STATION — Sales of livestock products which totaled some $5.1 billion made up more than half of Texas' agricultural receipts last year, according to Dr. Carl G. Anderson, economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Overall, cash receipts from meat animals were down about $300 from 1981, while dairy products receipts increased a little and poultry and egg receipts dropped $10,000. Cattle and calves sold for $3.8 billion; sheep, $54 million; goats, $11 million, and hogs, $113 million.

4-H Club to sponsor carnival

Proceeds from the carnival will be used for 4-H programs.

March's milk yield largest since 1938

AUSTIN — Texas' 365 million pounds of milk produced in March is the largest March milk month since 1938, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

The production was up 6 percent from last year.

A meeting of interest for both agricultural producers and oilmen will be held Thursday in the Pecos County Large Community Building in Fort Stockton. The theme for the symposium is, CO-EXISTENCE: AGRICULTURE AND ENERGY PRODUCERS. Speakers include Dr. Lawrence B. Stevenson, speaking on Oil Intoxication; Dr. Darrell Ueckert, Revegetation of Range Land Disturbed by Oil and Gas Development; Gregg McKenzie, Site Damages; George Finley, Legal Procedures of Negotiating Oil and Gas Contracts; and Jim Morrow, Responsibilities of Texas Railroad Commssion.

The morning session will begin at 9:30.

Sales of livestock products which totaled some $5.1 billion made up more than half of Texas' agricultural receipts last year. Overall, cash receipts from meat animals were down about $300 million from 1981 while dairy product receipts increased a little and poultry and egg receipts dropped $10,000. Cattle and calves sold for $3.8 billion; sheep, $54 million; goats, $11 million; and hogs, $113 million. Traditionally, Texas ranks first in sales from marketing of cattle and calves, sheep and wool and goats and mohair.

Texas farmers got about $800 million less from crop sales last year compared to 1981, with cotton sales taking the sharpest nosedive — from $1.4 billion to $875 million. Estimated crop sales totaled almost $3.8 billion in 1982, but were down due to poor prices caused by high stockpiles of most farm commodities, together with sagging domestic demand and decreased exports. Also, weather losses were heavy in some areas, particularly in the South Plains. Grain sorghum was the second leading cash crop with receipts of $619 million followed by wheat at $499 million.

It's time for gardeners to stop gardening and start "farming." Gardeners are, in reality, "urban agriculturists" and therefore should relate to farming. Conservative estimates indicate that about half of Texas' populations is involved in growing fruits and vegetables at home. These urban agriculturists should look at their backyard plot as a small farm. They encounter many of the same problems as do farmers, and they make many of the same decisions regarding varieties, planting dates and other matters.

We are currently publishing a monthly horticulture news release that includes urban agriculture. Call our office if you would like to be on our mailing list.

The Midland County Pest Management Steering Committee has decided the contributions for this program would be based on 1983 certified cotton acreage at 40 cents per acre assessment. All producers are encouraged to participate in the Midland County Pest Management program.

U.S. farmers look to market in Southeast Asia

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is looking with growing interest at five countries in Southeast Asia as a potentially huge market for American farmers.

Collectively, the five countries represented in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations — ASEAN — are "the fastest growing market area in the world," according to a report in this month's issue of Foreign Agriculture magazine.

The countries are Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

"As a group, the five members of ASEAN are already a billion-dollar-plus market for U.S. agricultural products," the report said.

"The market of 270 million consumers is now about as big as the Canadian and U.S. markets combined — and is more than double that of Japan, the largest U.S. overseas agricultural market," it said.

Of course, the report added, the purchasing power of the five nations is nowhere near that of Japan now, but their potential "is perhaps the greatest in the whole of Asia." The personal disposable income in Singapore, for example, is the third largest in Asia.

"The region has a bountiful endowment of natural resources and raw materials, including natural petroleum, rubber, tin, timber, rice, sugar, palm oil and coconut products," the report said.

U.S. farm exports to the region have climbed gradually in recent years, despite a general downturn in overall export value. Total shipments in 1983 are projected at nearly $1.24 billion, compared to $1.2 billion in 1982 and $1.18 billion in 1981.

LET'S DANCE
If you like to dance, but are tired of the bar scene, we would like to extend to you an invitation to join and help form a country and western singles dance club. The club will be very similar to the current Road Runner C&W Dance Club and will be strictly a non-profit organization. Other than a nominal door charge, there will be no hidden cost.
The club will sponsor at least six dances with a live band at a location large enough to accomodate the membership. Beer and set- ups will be furnished. On alternate months the club membership will meet at a public facility such as the Stardust. The membership will be kept informed via a newsletter. To fund the club we are seeking 150 ladies membership at $15.00 and 150 men's memberships at $25.00. If you are interested in joining please send a check or money order for the appropriate amount to: P.O. Box B-9-C, Midland Reporter Telegram Midland, Texas 79702 and include your name, age, address, home and work telephone number along with a self addressed stamped envelope. Any monies raised above the amount needed to fund the club will either be refunded proportionately to members or applied to the benefit of the club. In the event that there is not sufficient interest to secure the necessary membership and funds, all monies will be refunded to the applicant. If anyone wishes to serve as a sponsor, any contribution will be very much appreciated with appropriate recognition given.
Yours truly,
Susie Hitchcock

Gary closes concert series in usual style

When John Gary sticks to what he knows best — singing, playing and joking around on stage — the spell cast over his audience is complete. When he doesn't, it isn't.

Gary's Friday performance for the final Midland Community Concert of this season clearly identified him as a master showman. He worked the 4- to 70-plus-year-old audience with equal agility beginning with his opening statement when he finished singing "Love is in the Air" and "Begin the Beguine:" "I see a lot of young folk here who are saying, 'What's a beguine? Well, it's the kind of music I grew up with — undiscofied.'"

Then he says, after studying the crowd, "I believe I'm older than anyone here."

Part of his charm is his ability to poke fun at himself. When he isn't playing this act off his musical director, pianist and harmony partner, Frank Brenner of Denver, Colo., he carries it solo.

His several references to being a boy soprano tickled the crowd, especially when he, after saying he was from New York state but grew up in Savannah, Ga., asked, "Can you imagine the voice of a boy soprano surviving out here?" Then he quipped, "It was good for kids like me; (dramatic pause) the girls trusted me."

His selections represented a potpourri of decades of American popular tunes. From Johnny Mercer songs ("Moon River" and "Days of Wine and Roses") to those performed by the Sons of the Pioneers ("Tumbling Tumbleweeds" and "Cool Water"), his voice was equally at home, sliding into "The Gambler," "Lucille" and "Sometimes When We Touch" with consummate ease.

He explained his song selections to the audience: "I only sing love songs. I hope you weren't here looking for a light show."

Often he told interesting tidbits about the numbers, such as "Days of Wine and Roses" which written in less than five minutes, contains two sentences and won an Academy Award.

John Gary

A Review

But then, as Gary said, "He (Johnny Mercer) only wrote 1,500 songs."

But for indecision, his performance would have rated a 10.

Gary has performed on stage in a number of musicals, and he aptly sang selections from several of these productions.

In prefacing his medley of songs from "Camelot," he delivered the lines where Arthur tells about the legend that has made him king.

The role was not an unfamiliar one for him. As he said, "I've played King Arthur almost 500 times." Still, he couldn't decide whether to be Gary saying the lines or King Arthur acting the scene. It was most distracting and took away from what could have been a perfectly delivered performance.

Barbershop singers sought

All men interested in singing four-part harmony are asked to be at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave., at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

"Any man who likes to sing, regardless of his age — we'll take them 12 years old — is asked to come," said Bill Shaner. In addition to serving as Republican County chairman, Shaner has been active for a number of years in Midland Community Theatre productions.

"We hope to use this as a foundation to start anew the now defunct SPEBSQSA (Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America)," he said, adding that the organization has 300 chapters worldwide with a membership of 50,000 men.

The local women's chapter is called Sweet Adelines.

Tom Roberts, minister of music at First Presbyterian, will be director for the new group. The organizational meeting will be held in the choir room at First Presbyterian.

MC art show begins Tuesday

The spring semester Student Art Show at Midland College begins Tuesday with a free public reception from 7:30 to 9 p.m. in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building.

"We feel that the exhibits this year have been varied, thought-provoking and interesting to the entire community," said Warren Taylor, MC art instructor and chairman of the McCormick Gallery exhibits committee.

"This semester's students have created interesting works in a variety of mediums. Some of the students are extremely talented."

The exhibit, which includes watercolors, oils, mixed media, ceramics, weaving, sculpture and photography, remains on display through May 6. Hours are Monday-Thursday 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Sunday 1-4 p.m.

Austin group will perform

The Austin-based group records for Chrysalis Records. The group's latest album is "T-Bird Rhythm."

The Fabulous Thunderbirds have played back up for, among others, The Rolling Stones during the Texas part of the Stones' last national tour and Eric Clampton.

Group members have just returned from a 2½ month tour of the United States and Europe.

The group, which has been organized as such for seven years, is also a participant in the Miller High Life "Rock Network" Music Series.

Former Midlander Ron Riley will be performing this weekend at a local restaurant.

Former Midland man to appear at restaurant

A native of Goldsmith, Riley graduated from Midland's Lee High School and attended Texas Tech University on a tuba scholarship. While there, he played bass in the first Texas Jazz Festival in the late 1960s.

Since that time he has become proficient on the guitar and harmonica. He plays a wide variety of music, specializing in country jazz that he describes as "high-energy country swing."

He began working in the Midland-Odessa oilfields at age 16 as a roustabout and began roughnecking at 19. He "played music for fun and worked in the oilfields for money" until July of 1977, when a hook on a laydown line crushed the frontal bone in his forehead. At the time he was working near Anton.

"You might say that little accident knocked some sense into my head," Riley says.

Since that time he has played as a single and in groups in clubs and restaurants here, in Lubbock, Dallas, Phoenix and Flagstaff, Ariz., Taos, N.M., and Telluride, Colo. He has opened shows for Roseann Cash and John Prine and will open Wednesday and Thursday in Dallas for Kris Kristofferson.

Midland College musical groups to perform wide-ranging program

Concerts today by two Midland College musical groups feature entertainment ranging from rock music to country and western.

The rock group Wizzard starts the 3 p.m. program in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at MC, followed by the country-western Roadrunner Band at 3:30 p.m. Both groups are directed by MC commercial music instructor Ron Franklin.

When Franklin joined MC's staff this year, he organized these groups. Wizzard came into being in January and Roadrunner was organized in September.

Members of Roadrunner include Rusty Chambers, guitar and vocals; Biff Eaton, guitar and vocals; Bill Jones, drums; Sherry Shankle, piano and vocals; and Steve Spear, bass and vocals.

Singing career spans 33 years

Roberta Peters to make Midland appearance

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Roberta Peters had been working toward her vocal debut since she was 13 years old. When she was 19, the late impresario Sol Hurok heard her sing in her teacher's studio. He immediately signed her and arranged an audition with Rudolf Bing, then in his first year as general manager of the Metropolitan Opera.

Roberta Peters

She was signed by the Met; her debut set for The Queen of the Night in Mozart's "The Magic Flute."

At least it all seemed set, but things do not always work out as planned.

"My debut was very unusual," Miss Peters said in a recent telephone interview. Laughing, she recalls that incredible day and night 33 years ago:

"I was supposed to sing three weeks after I really made my debut.

"This lady fell ill the day of the performance of "Don Giovanni" by Mozart and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Bing called me and asked me if I would be able to sing that very night.

"I had never had any experience on stage. I had never sang with an orchestra before. I had no costumes of my own, no shoes of my own, nothing."

Pausing to think for a moment, Miss Peters continues: "I guess I said 'Yes.' I was very numb. I'm sure I said, 'Yes.'

"He said, 'Well, take a taxi home and tell him he's got precious cargo.'" Almost as an aside, she adds, again laughing, "I'd never been called precious cargo before.

"Before I knew it, I was being pushed out onto the stage of the Metropolitan Opera. That's how I made my debut."

Miss Peters credits her success that night (she received rave reviews) to living "in New York City where we have the best, best teachers" and to following good advice.

"I was very fortunate. I had a wonderful man named Jan Peerce, who was a famous tenor, who heard me at the age of 13 and said that I should get with a good teacher, not be a child prodigy, study hard, that he would come occasionally to hear my progress. And, when he thought I was ready, he would send me through the right channels. And indeed he did."

Since that debut, Miss Peters has performed (over 500 times) with the Met during 33 consecutive seasons, including 53 Saturday afternoon Texaco broadcasts. She made an unprecedented 65 appearances on the Ed Sullivan Show and an impressive 25 on the the Voice of Firestone.

In addition, she has sung an average of 40 recitals each season. It is one of these recitals which brings her to Midland for Tuesday's 8 p.m. performance at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The concert is the final one in Renwood Inc.'s Select Series and will benefit of the Midland Jaycees.

Miss Peters says of her Midland performance: "I'm going to be doing some famous operatic arias which I'm sure a lot of the public in Midland knows from "Rigoletto" and from "Barber of Seville" — the ones that I've been singing that people seem to want to hear me sing. And then I'll be doing a group of Viennese songs which are just so lilting and so beautiful. And some Mozart arias. It's going to be mostly arias and then some lighter things."

Tickets, priced at $65, may be purchased by calling the Jaycees, 694-4621, or Renwood, 687-5812. Doors open at 7 p.m. for the complimentary hors d'oeuvres and champagne served before concert time. Coffee and dessert will be served at intermission. Midland Community Theatre will provide a cash bar.

Miss Peters' career has been a long one, especially for a female opera singer. She holds the longevity record for female singers at the Met. And she receives rave reviews today as she has throughout her career.

How does she keep her voice in such excellent condition? She laughs as she responds, "Practice, practice, practice.

"I study every day — almost every day. For me it's not a chore. I love to practice as I love to sing. And if you want to sing a long time, you really must work very hard on your voice, especially this light coloratura voice that I have."

She adds, the enthusiasm apparent in her voice, "I'm always learning new music. There's so much beautiful music to learn in this world, you can't learn it all in one lifetime."

'Trenchcoat' just doesn't fly

A Review

After flying as high as Margot Kidder ("Superman") and Robert Hays ("Airplane") have these past few years, that first forced landing can be rough. "Trenchcoat," in a no wind situation, is planted somewhere in Malta, the scene of this abortive comedy-mystery. And when the doors swing wide on the plane and Hays steps out, his first words to the stewardess are, "Do you know Elaine Holder?"

She says, "no" — a clue that maybe he is in the wrong movie (Elaine was his girlfriend in "Airplane" and the sequel.)

Directed by Britisher Michael Tuchner ("The Likely Lads" in 1976) and written by Jeffrey Price and Peter Seaman, "Trenchcoat" is the cloak and dagger story of court stenographer Mickey Raymond, who yearns to become a mystery writer (yes, baffle-buster exemplar Mickey Spillane should come to mind, they hope) and decides only an exotic location will serve for her on the job training.

Once ensconced in an ancient hotel patronized by equally ancient, though suspect people, Mickey sets about sightseeing, and inadvertently ends up the target of an international spy scramble for 10 kilograms of plutonium.

The Arabs, Germans, Irish and Americans (in the guise of Hays as Terry Leonard, jewelry salesman) are after it. And when Mickey has had enough of being kidnapped, drugged and deceived, she decides to take the offensive and solve the mystery of the missing plutonium.

Dressed in the stereotypical sleuth suit of trenchcoat (with enough doo-dads on it to stay caught on doorknobs for life) and dark felt brimmed hat, Mickey finally tracks down the only real mystery of this movie, Madame Aida.

Ingeniously, character actor Ronald Lacey transforms himself into Madame Aida in less time and with more subtlety than the host of past year's transvestite tries. In fact the only web of mystery "Trenchcoat" can weave is around him.

"Trenchcoat" is intended to be funny and but for a few sight gags, is not. Ms. Kidder does, however, do a nice job of showing just how humorous the truth and nothing but the truth can be when she is drugged with "truth serum." And Hays gets a few laughs when hedge shears just miss separating him from his "manhood." But for the most part, "Trenchcoat" is jumbled with an abundance of minor characters and is none too plausible as a mystery.

Rated PG, "Trenchcoat" even lacks a good view of Malta (the filming location), located in the Mediterranean, but the movie does have one redeeming feature — it is just 90 minutes long.

Rebels' post-season future looks bright

Victory over Big Spring guarantees Lee tie for second

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee Rebels secured at least one post season game Saturday behind another strong pitching performance as they defeated Big Spring 11-3.

Craig Ray and Kerry Robertson fanned 11 Steers while holding the defending District 4-5A champions to six hits.

"Mathmatically that ties us for second," Rebel coach Ernie Johnson said. "Two teams go to the playoffs this year and three teams have still a chance. That gives us a little breathing room."

"I knew our pitching staff would be strong this year," he said. "But I thought it would be stronger than it is. Our problem has been control, we're consistently wild."

"I felt good and loose out their today," Ray said. "My ball was alive and moving around a lot."

"I didn't think I needed to be pulled, but with our staff having two or three guys that can come and throw the ball, it was probably a wise move," he added.

"I thought he lost his stuff," Johnson said. "I probably should have pulled him a little earlier, when he lost his fast ball."

"We have no excuse for not having a strong staff this year with the experience we have."

ROBERTSON REPLACED Ray in the sixth and immediately fanned two Steers.

But, the Steers rallied again with two outs as Matt Warren drew a walk and scored when Adam Rodriguez smacked a line drive double off the chest of a diving Rob Walker at first.

That closed the gap to 5-3 but the Rebels tallied six runs in the bottom half of the sixth to put the game away.

"I'm happy the way you battled them off after they came back at you," Johnson told his team. "Relax, enjoy this one but be ready, I still want to win them all."

THE REBELS scored at least one run in each inning but only five of their 11 tallies were earned as Big Spring committed seven errors.

Lee pounded Adam Rodriguez for four hits in the sixth but the key was the Steers' defense which had four miscues.

"The big inning. That's been the story of our season," Steer coach Frank Iberra said. "We're very weak up the middle. We're inexperienced and of the seniors we do have, no one has shown the leadership."

Lee spread the offensive glory around as eight different batter had at least one hit and eight had at least one RBI.

Sergio Ochoa, still limping noticably from a pulled ham string, went 2-for-4, scored twice and had a game high two RBI.

Designated hitter Darren Webb was the only Rebel that went hitless, but even he had an RBI on a sacrafice fly. Berry Blackwell fell short of getting an RBI but he was 2-for-5 and scored three runs.

With two games left, Lee and San Angelo (9-3) hold a two-game lead over Abilene High (7-5).

The Rebels can secure a playoff spot Tuesday when they take on Abilene Copper in Abilene and Midland High hosts Abilene High.

'Cats beat Bulldogs in 9

Smith's Slam saves San Angelo

The Midland High Bulldogs came within one strike of giving Midland Lee sole possession of first place in District 4-5A baseball Saturday.

Instead, San Angelo's Mark Smith punched a two-out, 0-2 bases loaded pitch out of the park to tie the game in the bottom of the eighth inning. The Bobcats went on to win the game in the ninth, 12-11.

Smith, who came to the mound in the ninth from first base, shutdown the Bulldogs in the final inning and then recorded the pitching victory when Kurk Thompson scored on a single to left field by Zane Hoppe.

The victory gives the Bobcats a 9-3 record to remain tied with Midland Lee while Midland High falls to 3-9.

IN OTHER 4-5A action, Abilene High kept its slim playoff hopes alive by defeating Odessa High 8-5.

The Eagles trail Lee and San Angelo by two with two games remaining on the league schedule. Victories by Lee and San Angelo on Tuesday or a loss by Abilene High and the two state playoff berths will go to the Rebels and Bobcats.

Odessa Permian, leading 8-6 in the top of the seventh inning, was awarded a victory by forfeit over Abilene Cooper by home plate umpire Steve Byrd.

Cooper coach Andy Malone was ejected from the game in the sixth inning and was the cause for the team's forfeit because of a play in the top of the seventh.

With Panthers Tommy Tyler and Eddie Fowler on second and third respectively, Cooper pitcher Jody Bowers threw a wild pitch that hit home plate and bounced over the back stop and out of the field of play.

Both Permian base runners were awarded home plate on the play even though Fowler should have been allowed only one base. Malone came into the game to argue the call and Byrd called the game a forfeit, giving Permian the victory.

Wind doesn't stop runners

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Park Mall's Tall Town Run was greeted by gusty winds and frustrated runners, but the show went on anyway.

Most of the runners complained about the windy conditions, a factor of little control in the West Texas spring. However, the wind didn't keep Midland's Steve Hooper, Odessa's Tom Bowmaster or 12-year-old Brad Sewell from taking top honors.

Hooper, who botched the Miller Lite 10K run last fall by taking a wrong turn on the course, got a taste victory in this 10K division with a winning time of 34:32.

Hooper, 22, is a former distance runner for Coach Sam Volpe's Midland Lee Rebels. He won over John Harris, also 22, by a five second margin.

"It was really windy, but I felt good today. It's nice to win anytime," Hooper said.

Bowmaster, 23, posted a fine wind hampered 10:12 to win the two-mile run over Stanton's 30 year-old Steve Stallings, who had a 10:14.

"I've won five or six races, but mostly at the 10K level," Bowmaster said. "I ran the two-mile today because I have a softball tournament to play in."

Midland's Carol Gephart, a distance fixture in West Texas, took another 10K women's title with a 36.38, finishing a remarkable seventh overall. Gephart is untouched at this distance among the women. She was only two minutes and four seconds behind Hooper, the overall winner.

In the two-mile, Midland's Teri Valero, 31, was the top woman finisher with an 11:53 and she was 15th overall. Debra Jarner, 26, was second with 12:51 and was 21st overall.

Over 200 runners competed in the races that started and ended in the parking lot of Midland Park Mall.

Gators take 6-5 win from Midland Cubs

BEAUMONT — Midland pitcher Ron Richardson, despite giving up two runs, was working on a one-hitter going into the bottom of the seventh inning. Then the roof caved in on him.

Beaumont Gator Pat Casey led off the inning with a double and it looked like he might be stranded until, two outs later, Richardson walked Steve Johnson and then threw away an inning-ending grounder back to the mound by Steve Garcia, allowing Casey and Johnson to score.

A double and a single later off reliever Ken Pyrce and Midland's 4-2 lead was gone. Beaumont went on to win 6-5.

The Cubs came up with their fifth run in the top of the eighth when Bruce Chaney opened with a double. One out later Bill Hatcher collected an RBI single off reliever Marty Kain.

Hatcher advanced to second with his fourth stolen base of the game but was stranded. He was the last scoring threat the Cubs would have as Kain put them down 1-2-3 in the ninth.

The pitching victory went to Beaumont's Walt Vanderbush, 4-0, and Kain was credited with a save, his fourth of the year. Richardson fell to 0-2 with the loss.

Bill Hatcher, Rick Baker and A.J. Hill led the Cubs at the plate with two hits each in the team's eight-hit effort. No Beaumont batter collected more than one in the four-hitter Midland pitching threw.

Midland has four more games to play in Beaumont before traveling to San Antonio to complete the 10-game road trip. The Cubs will be back home on May 3.

Texas beats Tech twice,

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Texas pitcher Calvin Schiraldi gave up just two hits in the opener of a Southwest Conference doubleheader with Texas Tech that the Longhorns swept 9-1 and 8-2 to clinch at least a tie for the conference championship.

Arkansas 4-10, TCU 3-5

FORT WORTH, Texas — Arkansas pitcher Charlie Corbell went the distance in the first game and Razorback batters slugged 18 hits on the afternoon as Arkansas handed Texas Christian its eighth and ninth consecutive SWC losses, 4-3 and 10-5.

Baylor 3-2, Houston 0-1

WACO, Texas — Baylor pitchers Steve Smith and Alan Koonce held Houston to just 10 hits Saturday as the Bears swept both ends of a doubleheader with the Cougars 3-0 and 2-1.

Did You Know?...

Babe Ruth, with 10 hits in 16 at bats, batted .625, a record, in the 1928 World Series between the Yankees and the St. Louis Cardinals.

Shrewd deals can be disguised as dumb trades

The trading game isn't what it used to be. Nowadays, players can declare free agency and sell themselves to the highest bidder. But, it's still a fascinating part of baseball and some of the "dumbest" trades wind up looking like some of the "shrewdest."

Sometimes what seemingly is the most insignificant segment of a transaction turns out to be the only part that really counted.

Sain, of Spahn and Rain fame, was the kind of pennant campaigner the Yankees needed to run up yet another flag.

It was a common practice of the Yankees. Somehow New York could always land the help needed in the dog days of August, much to the consternation of foes. There were supposed to be trading deadlines and waiver rules designed to prevent such machinations, but the Yankees always found a way.

In the Sain deal, all they had to give up was a minor leaguer...who turned out to be Lou Burdette. Without Lew, the Braves couldn't have won a couple of National League flags a few years later.

IN 1966, the Chicago Cubs sent Bob Buhl and Larry Jackson, a couple of established pitchers, to the Phillies for outfielder Adolpho Phillips and first baseman John Herntein, whose fame as a baseball player was easily exceeded by his exploits as a University of Michigan football player.

Oh, the other guy sent along to Chicago was a struggling pitcher, a modest 6-8 won-lost the year before, kid from Canada, named Jenkins, Ferguson, that is.

Does anybody remember who the Chicago Cubs got when they traded outfielder Lou Brock to St. Louis? Seems like he was a pitcher.

Successful as a Cub in his early days in the majors and later a mainstay with Catfish Hunter and Vida Blue on Oakland's American League champions of the 1970s, lefthander Ken Holtzman languished for two years unused in the Yankee bullpen...or as far away from the dugout as Billy Martin could get him.

Chicago wanted him back and all they had to give up was a minor leaguer. Al Rosen, the Yankees GM at the time, remembered a kid the Cubs had at Pompano Beach. "Damned sidearmer is what he was," Rosen said in answer to the "how come that kid?" query. "I never could hit sidearmers and hated them with a passion."

So the Yankees plucked Ron Davis off the Midland Cub roster and the lean kid from Houston is now one of the top relievers in the American League.

LAST WINTER, the Chicago White Sox sorcered the Cubs into a trade by threatening to grab Ferguson Jenkins. The Cubs gave up third baseman Pat Tabler and Randy Martz, the team's leading pitcher in 1982. As a throw-in, the White Sox grabbed a minor league infielder named Scott Fletcher, who once had a string of 15 hits in 16 at bats while playing for Midland.

With Ron Cey and Larry Bowa at third and short, Fletcher had no future in Wrigley Field, at least, not in the foreseeable future.

It's still too early to be making any judgments, but again the afterthought may be the key to the deal. The White Sox have already sent Tabler to Cleveland and Martz has been shuttled off to the minors.

Fletcher, he's starting at shortstop for the White Sox. The other night he spoiled a no-hitter by the Tigers Milt Wilcox by getting the only two hits.

With legs that bend like rubber bands and feet that move in directions reserved for those under 20, another Saturday of football, European style, begins for the kids who make up the Midland Soccer Association.

Since its inception in 1977, MSA has grown from approximately 200 participants to this year's high of 1,510.

Explanations for the popularity of soccer in Midland are as varied as the players involved. But one thing is sure: Soccer is here to stay.

"It's better than baseball," Falcon coach Rich Scharfenberg said. "It's more of an individual sport, it helps these kids develop."

But for Kathy Snyder, whose 7-year-old son Paul plays for the Blue Terrors, it's not the individual concept that is important.

"For Paul, I like the team activity," she said, "The idea of collectively being someone."

Development, be it individual or team, is an abstract concept that escapes most of the participants. But they too have their reasons for playing, perhaps best expressed by Andy Jones.

"I like making goals," he said. "It's fun."

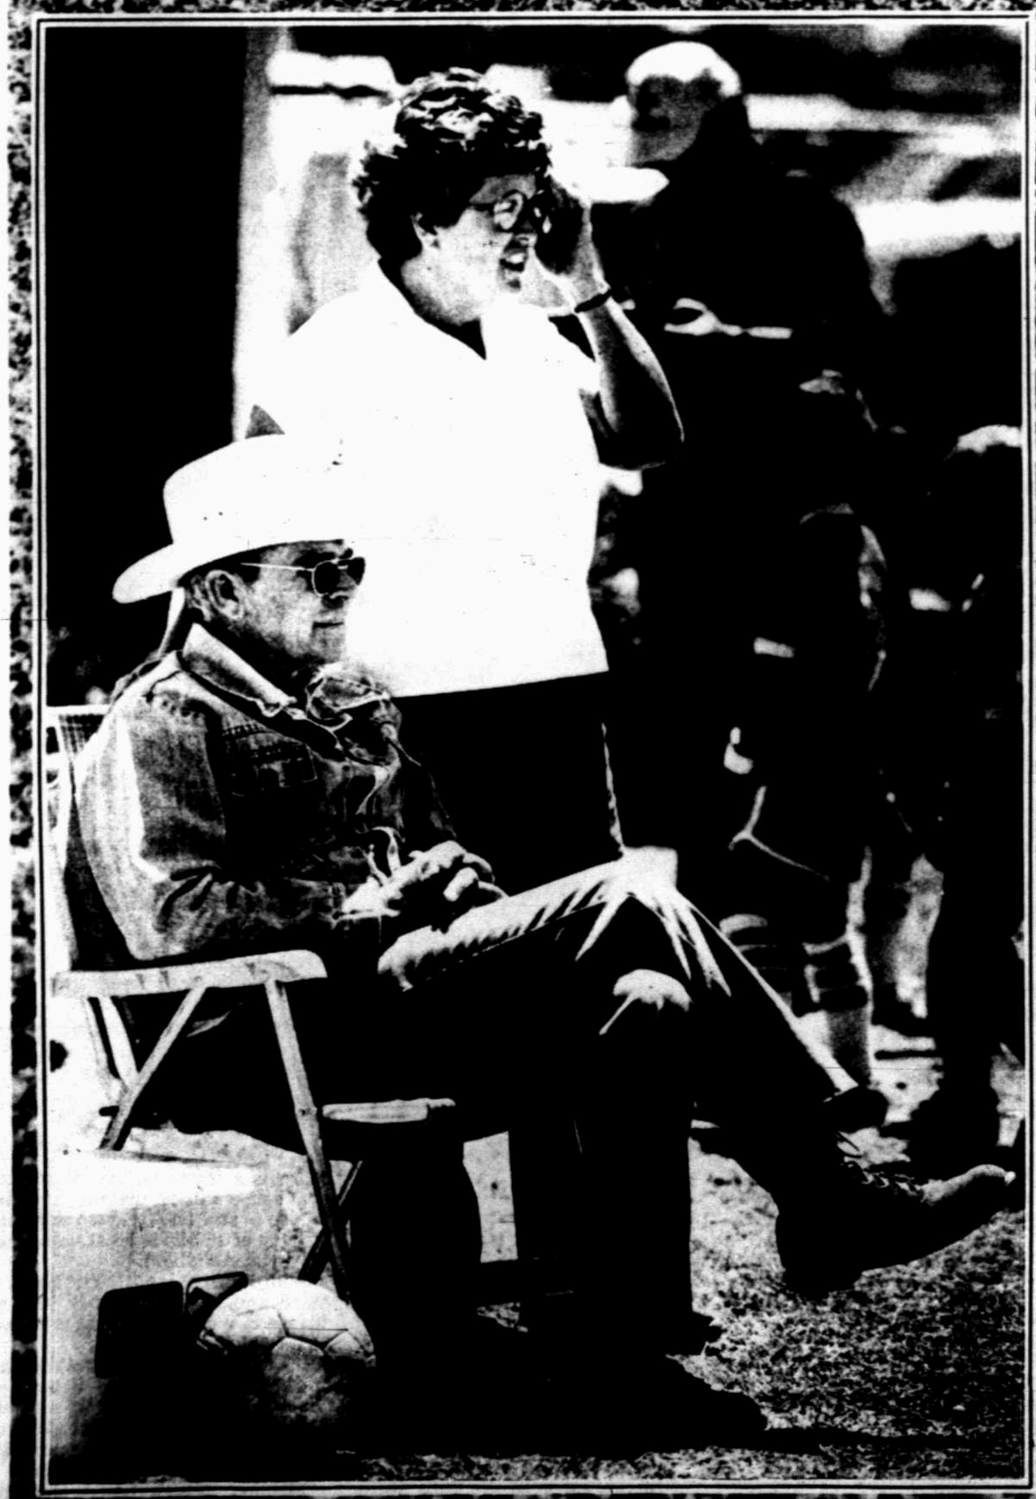

MSA offers competition for boys and girls in seven age groups from kindergarten to 18-year-olds.

All games are played on a 10-field, 1,510-square-foot complex on north Lamesa Road near Cubs Stadium. It's a far cry from the humble beginnings when the kids used available public school yards.

"The city gives us the use of the land with the understanding that we develop it," Gigi Carlisle, MSA public relations director, said.

"We have installed a complete underground sprinkling system and we just finished a concession-restroom facility," she said. "Our next major project is lights, so we can extend our playing schedule."

For the numerous players who make up the 97 teams and the 275 volunteer coaches, team mothers and parents, soccer is the best way to get a "kick" out of life.

AP Laserphoto

Defending champion Lanny Wadkins holds a one-shot Tournament of Champions lead after three rounds of play.

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) -Hal Sutton three-putted the final hole and let hard-working Lanny Wadkins escape with a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 MONY-Tournament of Champions.

Sutton, who took the Tournament Players Championship earlier this season and is making his first appearance in this elite, winners-only event, had a share of the top spot until the last-hole bogey.

Wadkins, the defending champion in the tournament that brings together only the winners of PGA Tour titles from the last 12 months, was in the clubhouse discussing his one-under-par 71, which gave him a 208 total, when Sutton fell out of a tie for the top.

"Well, surprise, surprise," said Wadkins.

"I am surprised to be leading, considering the way I played today," he continued. "It was very hard work. The golf course played hard, with the last few holes into the wind."

Sutton, who matched par 72 on the 6,911 yard La Costa Country Club course, completed 54 holes in 209, seven under par, and tied with Jay Haas. Haas shot a 69 in the cool, breezy weather.

Gary Hallberg, with a 68 that represented the best round of the day, was next at 210, only two strokes back going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

Gary Koch and PGA champion Ray Floyd were next at 212, four under par and four off the pace. Koch had a 69 and Floyd 72 despite a double bogey-6 on the final hole, where he broke a club coming out of tree trouble, failed to reach the green in regulation and eventually 3-putted.

Jack Nicklaus, a 5-time winner of this event and tied for the lead at the start of the third round, shot himself out of it with a 77 that put him at 214.

Nicklaus said the back problem that forced him to withdraw from the Masters wasn't to blame.

"My back had nothing to do with it," he said. "I just didn't play very well. I played about as well as I scored."

When a small boy came out of the gallery and asked Nicklaus for a golf ball, the golfer replied "I lost them all."

Maybe he didn't lose them all, but he put one in the water on the fifth and made double bogey. He once made a 12-footer for bogey and seemed to be in various forms of trouble all day.

"Well," he said, "it won't be the last bad round I play."

Tom Watson, holder of the U.S. and British Open titles, shot a 71 and was at 219, well out of the hunt.

Wadkins started poorly, with bogeys on the first two holes, but got one of the strokes back with a 60-foot birdie putt on the third.

He reached the par-5 12th in two and 2-putted for a birdie, then bogeyed the next after driving in the rough.

He holed a 15-footer on the 14th for birdie, then made a critical save from a bunker on the 16th.

Wadkins flipped a 9-iron third shot to about six feet and made birdie-4 on the 17th just about the time that Sutton bogeyed the 16th from a bunker.

The 2-shot swing gave Wadkins the lead alone, but Sutton followed with a tap-in birdie on the 17th and tied him again.

Wadkins played a long, difficult bunker shot to about 12 feet and curled in the par-saving putt on the 18th to retain a share of the top spot. Sutton's bogey on the last left Wadkins in sole control.

Stacy ignores wind, rain to take S&H lead with 69

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Defending champion Hollis Stacy outbattled gusting wind and a steady rain that created havoc with a red-hot LPGA field to post a 3-under-par 69 and take a three-stroke lead after three rounds of the $150,000 S&H Golf Classic.

Stacy, an 11-time tour winner, finished the day with a 54-hole total of 11-under-par 205 while second-round leaders Janet Coles and JoAnne Carner fell three and five shots off her pace, respectively.

Jo Ann Washam was six shots behind the leader at 5-under 211 and Lori Huxhold was next a 212. Deedee Lasker, Debbie Meisterlin and Alice Miller were bunched at 213.

The adverse weather caused scores to soar on the 6,023-yard Pasadena Golf Club course that yielded the lowest cut ever on the women's tour Friday — 2-over-par 146.

Stacy and Alexandra Reinhardt, who shot a 68, were the only golfers among the 79 surviving the cut to break par Saturday. Three players — Brenda Goldsmith, Bonnie Bryant and Huxhold — shot par 72s.

Thursday's opening round saw 67 players match or break par and 62 were at par or lower after 36 holes of the 72-hole event.

Stacy, Coles and Carner played in the same threesome Saturday and made the nine-hole turn tied for the lead at 9-under-par for the tournament.

Stacy, who was one shot behind Coles and Carner when the day began, made her move with birdies on No. 14 and 18, while the second-round leaders faltered.

Carner managed par on each of the first nine holes, but started to flag with a bogey on the par-4, 369-yard 10th.

Genalo beats Haskell in Long Island bowling

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Don Genalo jumped out to an early 22-pin lead and went on to stop streaking Roger Haskell 215-189 Saturday in the title match of the $110,000 Long Island Open pro bowling tournament.

The 25-year-old Genalo, a right-hander from nearby North Merrick, N.Y., entered the championship round Saturday as the top seed, but had to sit back and watch Haskell steamroller three opponents on the way to the final match.

Haskell, a 22-year-old second-year pro out of Renton, Wash., started the day as the fifth-seeded player, but averaged 234 in beating Dale Eagle of Santa Maria, Calif., 225-156; Ernie Schlegel of Vancouver, Wash., 212-159, and Gary Shultis of Mineola, N.Y., who led the tournament most of the week, 266-245.

Rent It or Own It
by Bob Howle

The most important and difficult part of painting the exterior of an older home is properly preparing the surface to accept the paint. Be certain that all chipped and peeling segments of the old paint are removed and that the surface is smooth. This usually requires hours of arduous scraping with a hand-held scraper. However, an easier, more thorough method is available at a rental center. A portable sandblaster can be rented that will remove every layer of old paint on clapboards or shingles. Ask the rental expert to advise you as to the proper nozzle bore size and pressure for your particular job.

Many jobs have unusual problems which can be handled efficiently and effectively with the proper and specialized equipment. Obviously such tools are too costly to buy for one-time use. The logical answer is to rent. At BOB'S RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294, we rent efficiency, effectiveness and proven tools and equipment that allow for a safe and professionally looking job. Come in and see us today. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HELPFUL HINT:

Injuries give underdogs high hopes

NBA Playoffs

By The Associated Press

Injuries to Philadelphia's Moses Malone, Los Angeles' Bob McAdoo and James Worthy, and Phoenix' Maurice Lucas have given their teams' underdog opponents high hopes for Sunday's National Basketball Association playoff games.

Malone, the league's leading rebounder, is suffering from tendinitis in the right knee and an inflammation of the left knee, and is not expected to be at his productive best for the 76ers against the New York Knicks in the opening game of their best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal series at Philadelphia.

McAdoo, a three-time NBA scoring champion, is recovering from recent toe surgery and his availability is questionable as the Lakers, defending league champions, begin their best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series at home against the Portland Trail Blazers.

Lucas, Phoenix' leading rebounder and second-leading scorer, suffered ligament damage in his left small toe during the Suns' loss to Denver Thursday night and is not expected to play against the Nuggets in the finale of their best-of-three Western Conference opening-round series at Phoenix.

IN SUNDAY'S other NBA playoff game, the finale of an Eastern Conference first-round series, the Boston Celtics entertain the Atlanta Hawks.

The winner of the Phoenix-Denver series will face San Antonio in the second round, and the winner of the Boston-Atlanta series will meet Milwaukee in round two.

MALONE, WHO averaged 15.3 rebounds and 24.5 points in leading the 76ers to a 65-17 record, the best in the NBA during the regular season, has not played since April 10, missing the final four games.

"We wanted to give him as much of a chance to get ready for the playoffs," said Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham.

Malone, the NBA's most valuable player in two of the past three seasons, practiced briefly with the 76ers Friday in the team's final workout.

Afterward, Cunningham said, "If Moses feels like playing, he will start."

"We're hopeful he will be all right," said Philadelphia General Manager Pat Williams. "He has the green light to play, but he has irritation and pain in both knees."

MEANWHILE, MCADOO, who suffered the broken toe during practice Feb. 16 and underwent surgery March 13, hopes to play against Portland, but his chances are slim.

"It's getting better," he said, "but it's still sore. My toe is the size of two toes, and there are only certain shoes I can wear."

His teammate, Worthy, will be using crutches for about three months.

The Lakers also have two injured starters — guard Norm Nixon, who is bothered by tendinitis in his knees, and forward Kurt Rambis, with an ailing left ankle.

THE TRAIL Blazers, who finished fourth in the Pacific Division during the regular season, 12 games behind the Lakers, are coming off a surprising two-game sweep over the Seattle SuperSonics in the opening round of the playoffs.

Denver tied its series against Phoenix 1-1 by beating the Suns 113-99 Thursday night, as Lucas limped off the court 37 seconds before halftime.

Lucas was hurt as he was backpedaling and reached for a pass from teammate Dennis Johnson. He doubled over in pain and fell to the floor.

"Something popped, I don't know what," said Lucas.

"The injury is to soft tissue," said Dr. Paul Steingard, the Suns' team physician. "Whether he can play depends on how he responds to treatment."

"He's our biggest, strongest player," said Phoenix Coach John MacLeod. "We don't have another player like him, so obviously his absence will be a factor."

"Lucas is very important to them," noted Denver Coach Doug Moe.

THE BOSTON-ATLANTA series also is tied 1-1 after the Hawks edged the Celtics 95-93 Friday night at Atlanta.

"We still feel we've got the best team and we're still in control," said Larry Bird, Boston's high scorer who shot a horrendous 4-for-18 from the floor against the Hawks in Game 2. "They've got to come up to Boston and beat us. If they can do that, they've got a better team."

MHS, Lee girls' track season comes to end

LUBBOCK — The 1983 girls' track season came to an end for Midland High and Midland Lee this weekend at the Region I meet here on the Texas Tech campus.

Midland High junior long distance runner Claire Hardy came the closest of all Tall City athletes to gaining one of two state berths available with her third place finish in the 3,200-meter run with a time of 11:49.0. She finished seventh in the 1,600.

"I was not disappointed in Claire at all," said Bulldog head coach Brenda Mitchell. "She felt she ran a good race, also. Of course, she would have liked to have won but we both agree she ran about as well as she could."

Midland Lee took only one athlete to the meet, high jumper Felicia Farias. She finished in a tie for seventh place with a jump of 5-foot-1.

"She's been jumping 5-2 all year and she just couldn't get it, physically, not mentally. Mentally she was ready, said Lee coach Linda Caraway."

Even 5-2 wouldn't have made any difference. The winning jump was 5-6.

Greenwood girls second

LEVELLAND — The Greenwood girls finished second in the Region I Class A track meet here Saturday at South Plains College with 45 points, five less the winner New Home.

Whitharrla finished third with 38 followed by Nazareth, 36; Booker, 34, and Klondike, 32.

Individually, Renvy Evans fared the best with two second place finishes, in the triple jump at 35-feet-2¾ and in the 100 hurdles in 15.66.

Triple Jump: 2.Renvy Evans, 35-2¾. Shot Put: 4.Kay Wallace, 33-3. 400 Relay: 5.Greenwood, 52.22; 100 hurdles: 2.Renvy Evans, 15.66. 800 Relay: 2.Greenwood, 1:48.81; 400 Dash: 6.Marla Morgette, 1:07.1 200; 200 Dash: 4.Amy Franks, 26.66.

MC women win tennis

Going into the tournament, MC had scored a perfect 36 through the season's play (points which count in the tournament) and finished with a perfect 48. South Plains took a distant second place with 16 while New Mexico Military Institute and Odessa College tied for third with 12.

Odessa College overcame a one-point NMMI lead coming into the tournament and finished with a 53-50 victory. Midland College placed third at 21 and South Plains fourth with 11.

The next step in the teams' quest for the national tournament will be the Region V playoffs at Midland College next weekend. Play begins both days at 9 a.m.

The four conference teams plus Grayson, Weatherford, McLennan and Cooke will compete for the national berth.

Brewers shut out Rangers, 3-0

Major League Baseball

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Milwaukee's Mike Caldwell shackled Texas on five hits and Gorman Thomas and Paul Molitor scored unearned runs on outfielders' throwing errors Saturday night, giving the Brewers a 3-0 victory over the Rangers.

The Brewers added a run in the eighth. Molitor walked and moved to third when Robin Yount's single to left was bobbled by Billy Sample. Cecil Cooper brought Molitor home with a sacrifice fly. In the ninth, Don Money doubled and pinch runner Marshall Edwards scored on a single by Molitor.

Rick Honeycutt, 2-1, who scattered eight hits in 7 2-3 innings, was the loser. It was his sixth career loss against the Brewers, a team he has never beaten.

Caldwell, 2-2, permitted two singles to Bucky Dent and one each to O'Brien, Jim Sundberg and Buddy Bell. He didn't allow a runner beyond first base until the eighth inning. He struck out two and didn't walk a batter.

Tigers 4, Mariners 0

DETROIT — Larry Herndon knocked in three runs with a first-inning triple to back the six-hit pitching of Dan Petry as the Detroit Tigers blanked the Seattle Mariners 4-0.

Petry, 3-0, improved his lifetime record against Seattle to 6-2. In his last 40 innings against the Mariners, Petry has allowed just two runs. Petry struck out four and walked two as Detroit beat the Mariners by a 4-0 score for the second straight day.

Yankees 7, Twins 4

NEW YORK — Butch Wynegar, Willie Randolph and Roy Smalley delivered RBI doubles in New York's six-run third inning and Shane Rawley scattered eight hits for his third straight complete-game victory as the Yankees defeated the Minnesota Twins 7-4.

Indians 6, White Sox 3

CLEVELAND — Pat Tabler drove in five runs with a bases-loaded triple and a bases-loaded single while Len Barker and Ed Glynn combined on a six-hitter as the Cleveland Indians downed the Chicago White Sox 6-3.

Barker, 3-1, gave up four hits, struck out eight and walked two in 7 1-3 innings before Glynn came on to finish up.

Blue Jays 5, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Willie Upshaw's RBI singled capped Toronto's five-run eighth inning that lifted the Blue Jays to a 5-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals Saturday night.

Phillies 7, Astros 3

HOUSTON — Greg Gross drove in three runs with a tie-breaking fourth-inning triple and John Denny scattered six hits as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Houston Astros 7-3 for their fourth consecutive victory and ninth in the last 10 games.

Gross' triple highlighted a four-run fourth inning. A double by Mike Schmidt and singles by Tony Perez and Bo Diaz produced the first run of the inning and tied the score 3-3.

Two outs later, Denny singled to load the bases and Gross tripled off the right field wall to give the Phils a 6-3 lead.

Philadelphia took a 2-0 lead in the first inning when Gross and Gary Matthews opened the game with singles off loser Joe Niekro, 0-2. Perez drove in both runners with a double.

Houston struck back with three runs in the second inning. Phil Garner singled and Jose Cruz was safe on shortstop Ivan DeJesus' error on an attempted forceout. Ray Knight slammed a two-run triple and scored on Alan Ashby's sacrifice fly for a 3-2 Houston lead.

After the Phillies went ahead in the fourth, Garry Maddox singled in the fifth, stole second and scored on a single by DeJesus to make it 7-3.

Philadelphia's Pete Rose stretched his streak of consecutive games to 635, 16th on the all-time list, although he was not in the starting lineup for the first time since July 25, 1980. However, Rose entered the game at first base in the bottom of the eighth.

Rose has not missed a game since Aug. 31, 1978, when he played for Cincinnati. Rose, who has missed just 80 games in 21 seasons, put together baseball's 12th longest string of 678 games in 1973-78.

Cardinals 9, Padres 5

ST. LOUIS — Keith Hernandez blooped an RBI single to center to cap a three-run rally in the fifth inning and belted a two-run homer two innings later, bringing the St. Louis Cardinals from behind to a 9-5 triumph over the San Diego Padres.

George Hendrick hammered two home runs for St. Louis, his fourth and fifth of the year. Hendrick, who had four hits, belted a two-run homer in the fourth inning to trigger the Cardinals' comeback from a 4-0 second-inning deficit.

Giants 5, Cubs 0

CHICAGO — Atlee Hammaker pitched a three-hitter for his second straight shutout and Chili Davis drove in three runs with a homer and a sacrifice fly to lead the San Francisco Giants to a 5-0 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Hammaker, who pitched seven perfect innings against Cincinnati and finished with a two-hitter in his last start, did not allow a hit for five innings against the Cubs until Larry Bowa led off the sixth with a bloop single to center.

Dodgers 3, Pirates 2

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pinch hitter Jose Morales doubled in the winning run in the seventh inning and Pedro Guerrero contributed a two-run home run as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the slumping Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2.

Bill Russell opened the seventh with a walk off loser John Candelaria, 2-1, and Steve Yeager laid down a sacrifice bunt to move Russell to second.

Bob Welch, 1-2, worked the first six innings for his first victory as the Dodgers sent the Pirates to their seventh loss in their last eight games.

Panthers post 34-24 victory over Express

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Quarterback Bobby Hebert threw touchdown passes of 26 yards to Anthony Carter and one yard to Mike Cobb to lead the Michigan Panthers to a 34-24 United States Football League victory over the Los Angeles Express Saturday night.

Novo Bojovic kicked a team-record four field goals to help ice the Panthers' victory, their third in a row.

Los Angeles led 3-0 with 4:32 remaining in the first quarter when Hebert, who entered the game as the sixth-best passer in the league, found Carter alone at the 6-yard line, and the former Michigan All-American sidestepped a tackler to give the Panthers a 7-3 lead.

Martin fined

NEW YORK (AP) — Manager Billy Martin of the New York Yankees has been fined $5,000 by Lee MacPhail, American League president, for a heated exchange with an umpire and for comments about umpiring in the Yankees' season opener.

How to succeed

Christmas in April, Midland's volunteer housing repair project, has enjoyed success during its 11-year history. That success hasn't come because the program has received national exposure and acclaim or because President Ronald Reagan recognized the value of the project, although he did.

The project's success stems from the fact it is people helping people. Recipients of the generosity of volunteer workers are elderly or handicapped residents who cannot help themselves. Their help comes in the form of good deeds showered on them by other residents of the city.

Last year marked the program's most successful year to date. A total of 152 homes were repaired by approximately 2,500 volunteers. This year's program already is well under way, largely due to the fact the program is operated year-round now rather than on only one weekend in the year as in the past. But the major Christmas in April workday this year will occur next Saturday when volunteers combine their skills to repair 119 homes. Repairs will range from installing new roofs, to repainting and virtually rebuilding entire structures.

With only a week remaining, all but four of the houses on the repair list have been chosen and preparations are well under way for Saturday's community effort.

Individuals can and do help with Christmas in April in a number of ways. Probably the most visible workers are those who actually devote their skills to repairs. But there are others who spend the day loading supplies at the program's warehouse at 1001 E. New York, preparing lunch for volunteers and publicizing the event in any number of ways.

Of course, there is another type of volunteer Christmas in April cannot do without. Those are the many Midlanders who offer financial support in the form of contributions. Without financial support, the program's benefits would be drastically reduced and the needs of hundreds of Midlanders would go wanting.

You can get involved this year by calling 694-4907 to volunteer your services or by sending a tax-deductible contribution to Christmas in April, P.O. Box 3744, Midland, Texas 79702.

Get involved and find success.

Setting the rules

The Supreme Court this week handed down two decisions on nuclear power plants, and both of them make good sense.

One ruling assured the various states that they possess the right to ban nuclear power plants within their boundaries — that the big utility companies cannot force the states to accept nuclear plants if the states don't want to.

In the other decision, the Supreme Court announced the Nuclear Regulatory Commission need not take psychological stress into account before it permits nuclear operations to start up once again at Three Mile Island, near Harrisburg, Pa.

The Three Mile Island decision means the NRC need consider only the environmental impact on the physical surroundings when asked to approve a nuclear operation.

The states' rights decision was hailed by environmentalists and was a disappointment to power plant officials. The Three Mile Island decision, on the other hand, pleased utility officials and upset such environmental groups as People Against Nuclear Energy, composed of residents of the Harrisburg area.

Both decisions by the high court were unanimous and are commonsense rulings.

Replacing Volcker

For three and a half years Paul Volcker, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has served this country with immense skill and steady nerve. His term expires in August, and there is talk at the White House of replacing him then.

President Reagan is said to be inclined to appoint a candidate of his own. That's fair enough. But a change of chairmen usually means a change of policy.

The list of possible candidates is not a long one. The nominee needs to be a person of high standing in Washington and in the financial world. The next chairman will need to be as astute as the present one in dealing with Congress, for much of the country's economic policy is now being made there.

The new chairman will need to know a good deal about the technical side of central banking and the international money system. This is unusually important at present, for the Treasury Department has less international expertise and experience at the top levels in this administration than at any previous time in memory.

The only Reagan appointee on the Federal Reserve Board is its vice chairman, Preston Martin. It is no derogation of Martin to say that his qualifications do not self-evidently seem to be those required for the chairman's job. His previous career was in the savings and loan industry.

There are prominent Republicans who are equipped for the chairmanship, but most of them support Volcker's present policies.

It is quite true that in the Volcker years the Federal Reserve has risen to great political prominence. But that isn't Volcker's doing. It is the result of Reagan's failed economic strategy, and the budget deficits.

It is fair to say that far too much political responsibility has been pushed onto the Federal Reserve by the elected officials who ought to be carrying it. By refusing to deal with the consequences of its deficits, the Reagan administration has forced on the Federal Reserve decisions that far transcend the normal reach of an independent appointive agency.

It has left to the Federal Reserve the terrible choices between inflation and unemployment. Under Volcker, the Federal Reserve has brought the inflation rate close to zero. The cost in unemployment has been substantial, but the signs of economic recovery are now appearing.

If Reagan thinks the Federal Reserve ought to follow a different course, he would do well to be explicit. If he does not want it to follow a different course, he might usefully reconsider the wisdom of replacing the chairman.

Justice doesn't have a prayer!

The Reagan Justice Department has been criticized for foot-dragging when it comes to prosecuting wrongdoers. But in fairness to the people who put in their time, there is just so much they can do to uphold the law of the land.

Art Buchwald

I had a discussion recently with an attorney who works at Justice, and he told me, "We cannot prosecute every law violation on the books. Each administration has to set priorities when selecting cases."

"What are this administration's priorities?"

"We're concerned with the laws that will harm the country and hurt innocent people. For example, the Canadians tried to sneak in two films on acid rain, and one on the medical hazards of nuclear war. The law specifically states the films had to be labeled as propaganda, and were produced by a foreign agent. So we put all our best people on it and won our case. That was a high priority item."

"We can all sleep safer because of it," I said.

"Another priority we have is to narrow the Freedom of Information Act, to make sure the public does not get access to government documents they have no business reading. We also have been directed by the president to make sure that anyone in the government who leaks classified documents is prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. You can imagine how much time the department has to spend on this. But it's worth it, because if an administration can't keep its secrets, it's impossible to govern the country."

"What happens if a government secret covers up a crime?"

"I didn't understand the question."

"Let's take the EPA scandal," I said. "Apparently a lot of crimes were committed there. Documents were destroyed, sweetheart deals were made with chemical companies, consultants to the agency were on the payrolls of polluters who were being investigated, and an awful lot of officials may have perjured themselves under oath. People could be dying because of what they did. Is this a high priority item?"

"We're obviously looking into it, but the department can spread itself just so thin. Many of our lawyers are tied up writing briefs as friends of the court concerning all the bleeding heart laws now on the books. These briefs must take precedence over a few misdemeanors committed by a handful of zealous people in EPA who were only trying to do their jobs. We're not going to become a vigilante organization because of publicity-seeking environmentalists."

"I don't imagine antitrust prosecutions and SEC violations have high priority in this administration?"

"We have a very active antitrust department. But our philosophy is that it's much better to settle white-collar crime quietly. We refuse to tie up the courts with cases where no violence has been committed, since we have bigger fish to fry."

"Such as?"

"We supported the State Department's decision not to permit the widow of Chilean President Salvador Allende to come to the United States to lecture. The McCarran Act of 1950 specifically gives us the right to deny her entry if it is prejudicial to the public interest. Mrs. Allende has been involved with Soviet peace groups, and is a definite threat to our national security. That certainly has more legal significance than going after some poor guy who used inside information to make a killing in the stock market."

"It didn't until you explained it to me," I said.

"Nobody is happy with any administration's Justice Department, and we've been getting a bad rap by the press, because the cases we work on may not jell with their idea of what laws we should enforce. But our first loyalty is to the president of the United States, and we have to see that his wishes are carried out, even if it means going to the Supreme Court and trying to get them to reverse themselves on the bad decisions they have made in the past."

"What are you personally working on now?"

"Prayers in school. It's the big one, and if we win it, it will be the greatest legal victory in our department's history."

Soviets winning battle for minds

WASHINGTON — A little-publicized area of U.S.-Soviet rivalry is student exchange. There is evidence that the Soviets are winning the battle for the minds of future leaders of the Third World.

Jack Anderson

Even the traditionally hardware-oriented Pentagon recognizes the importance of bringing foreign students to the United States for education. The most recent military-posture statement by the Joint Chiefs of Staff declares that the funding of foreign students at U.S. military schools is "possibly the most cost-effective of all U.S. security assistance programs in many regions of the world."

The Joint Chiefs' report includes some astonishing figures on the subsequent careers of foreigners trained in our service academies up to 1980: Twenty-five had become presidents or heads of state; 160 were cabinet members, legislators or ambassadors; 258 had become military chiefs of staff, and 1,834 had become generals or flag officers in their own countries.

One area of particular concern is Central America and the Caribbean. A landmark report prepared for the National Security Council concludes that the Soviets have taken a "most disturbing" lead in the numbers of students it trains from that region.

The study was done by an inter-agency team from the CIA, Defense Intelligence Agency, Joint Chiefs and Commerce Department. My associate Dale Van Atta has obtained a copy of the group's findings which are classified "Secret."

"In the Third World," the report says, "the Soviets have placed heavy emphasis on academic exchanges as an instrument of policy." Meanwhile, it adds, the United States is missing an important opportunity by failing to expose "upcoming young foreign leaders during the formative years of their careers ... to American ideas, political philosophies and social patterns."

Such exposure could "stimulate a lifelong interest in and understanding of the United States," the report notes, adding: "Most important, such an exposure to our society also can create an orientation to Americans, their institutions and their technology once the foreign students have returned home to pursue their careers in their own countries."

The secret study estimates Soviet expenditures on foreign scholarships worldwide at $1 billion over the last 25 years. Of the 68,000 students trained in the Soviet Union, only about 2,600 were from the Caribbean-Central American region.

But that relatively small number is deceptive, the report warns: Soviet programs in the area have been growing consistently. By the end of 1979, an estimated 1,100 working-class students from the region were studying in the Soviet Union — most of them at Patrice Lumumba University in Moscow, which numbers among its alumni such notorious terrorists as Carlos the Jackal (Ilyich Ramirez Sanchez).

In addition, 800 Latin American students were studying elsewhere in the Soviet bloc. The report cited a "vigorous" exchange program between East Germany and the three Caribbean basin countries of Nicaragua, Grenada and Guyana.

Furthermore, the report adds, "Cuba seems to have some 2,000-3,000 Caribbean and Central American students enrolled in technical and academic programs, and 1,200 secondary students from Nicaragua studying on the Isle of Youth (formerly the Isle of Pines)."

The inter-agency group found it next to impossible to arrive at comparable figures for U.S. programs. Though immigration records showed 20,613 students from the Caribbean Basin in this country in 1979, the report notes that "a large number of these visitors were not enrolled in real training programs, and may not have been studying at all."

After bringing the figures for all U.S. government and private exchange programs down to reality, the study concluded: "In terms of gross numbers, (U.S. programs) provide only about two-thirds of the places available in the U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe, and when the large Cuban effort is added, the comparison becomes overwhelmingly disproportionate."

The secret report also faults the U.S. effort on grounds of quality, calling the programs "unfocused in objective and scattered in coverage."

Finally, the report concludes, the concept of student exchanges as a security measure could be applied to other critical areas of the world as well as the Caribbean.

DNA: Plotting course of mankind

WASHINGTON — Not all revolutions are heralded by such rhetorical drumrolls as "When in the course of human events" and "A specter is haunting Europe." Thirty years ago, on April 25, 1953, a revolution was announced by this bland sentence in the British science journal, Nature:

George F. Will

"We wish to suggest a structure for the salt of deoxyribose nucleic acid (DNA)."

The world shaken by that deceptively downbeat announcement was the narrow one inhabited by a few scientists competing with the intensity of athletes in a race to discover the structure of the chemical that controls heredity in all living things. But history is the history of ideas, perceptions, values — in a word, mind. So the wider world has been, and will continue to be, changed by the aftershocks of the intellectual earthquake that had its epicenter at Cambridge University.

The authors of the letter, Francis Crick and James Watson, won the Nobel Prize. Several dozen others have subsequently won for related work. The benefits from DNA research already include new medicines and agricultural hybrids. Many more blessings will flow from it. The potential danger is to something ancient: mankind's estimation of itself.

Nineteenth century biology, and especially the theory of evolution, seemed to suggest that mankind is not the apex of Nature's pyramid, but rather is a bead on a string — an early bead on a long string. Twentieth-century biology threatens to make problematic the concept around which liberal societies are organized. It is the concept of the "self," the "expression" of which is the supreme liberal value. What is this self?

A 19th-century poet insisted, "I am the master of my fate; I am the captain of my soul." But what does mastery mean if so much is foreordained by a genetic code?

Darwin, Marx and Freud suggested that various kinds of change — biological, personal, social — are autonomous processes. Now biology opens the prospect of willful intervention in the chemical engine of existence. Some may view this as a reassertion of human autonomy, and hence of human dignity. But is it achieved by conceiving of the self as something reduced to chemistry? By affirming a radical materialism?

In 1980 the Supreme Court ruled that a living microrganism — a work of human artifice, a genetic engineering product with industrial uses — was patentable matter. It was a technical ruling of statutory interpretation (of the patent law). But the Court held this: The fact that the manufactured product was alive was irrelevant to its patentability because it was a "composition of matter," just like a shoe or a better mousetrap.

Professor Leon Kass of the University of Chicago wondered: Are, then, human beings just "compositions of matter?" By teaching that matter is the only reality, the Court, said Kass, is teaching "the homogeneity of the given world" and "the absence of any special dignity in all of living nature, our own included."

Liberal societies assume that individuals are self-constituting creatures, manufacturing themselves by free choices, assembling purposes and values from a limitless cafeteria of possibilities. The great novel of the great modern nation is about a work of art: Jay Gatsby's creation of his "self."

But is our autonomy an illusion dispelled by the deciphering of controlling genetic codes? When science seems to paint a demoralizing portrait of man reduced to a mere composition of matter, and when science seems poised to extend its manipulative conquest of nature to human nature, modern societies may wonder about their faith in the necessarily beneficent outcome of science.

Kass notes that modern political thinkers have anticipated a coupling of progress in science and morality: Science would liberate mankind from the chains of necessity, and hence from defects. Defects are caused by neediness, which makes laws, religions and other oppressions necessary. Science would banish neediness.

Political thinkers of an older tradition trusted to law and morals to make men better. Those thinkers, Kass says, were skeptical about the benefits of unfettered inquiry. They feared that modern science would undermine the beliefs and conventions that hold man's passions in check. They argued that science would produce material progress, then luxury, then the unbridling of all appetites and the degradation of morals and taste. The conquest of nature around man would enslave man to the turbulent nature within him.

Which thinkers were right? Time will tell whether technical proficiency can be matched by prudence, whether scientific virtuosity can be controlled by virtue. Because a certain hubris is a by-product of the permanent revolution of modern science, it is well to remember that, as Kass says, our inventiveness is not our invention, and nature is commanded only as she is obeyed.

Some promises made toward Latin American aims

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Secretary of State George P. Shultz is back home after having frank talks with high Mexican government officials. He had long sessions with Mexico's Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda, who failed to agree with him on the means to peace in Central America. Undisturbed on the outside — the British use a great word, "unflappable" — Secretary Shultz exacted from his counterpart a pledge to promote processes of dialogue and negotiations.

Mexico claims concern about U.S. arms assistance to beleagured governments like that of El Salvador ripped by communist-supported guerrilla depredations. It also shies away from hard and realistic insights into the communist-run junta of Nicaragua. But four Libyan planes just landed in Brazil to refuel, presumably with medical supplies for Nicaragua. Tipped off, Bralizian authorities boarded the planes and discovered cargoes of bombs and guns instead.

In that context, it's useful to remember that Libya is a Soviet client state and its erratic strongman, Moamar Khadafy, is a sworn enemy of the U.S. and godfather to terrorists. That episode should be an eye-opener for the Mexican foreign minister.

Yet from all I hear and read, I don't expect Mexico to resolve basic foreign policy differences with us although her own national integrity might well come under guerrilla guns in the near future.

EDITOR'S REPORT

Just wait and see, revolutionary forces will soon attempt to exploit the sad state of the Mexican economy for the sake of general upheaval. It accounts for the first-tier U.S. economic cabinet officers Secretary Shultz had with him to seek solutions to stem the plummeting Mexican economy where today inflation runs at the rate of about 100 percent annually.

The Reagan administration is all for negotiations to settle disputes but not at the barrel of a gun. From Moscow have come dark hints that the Soviets might try another missile crisis like the Cuban one of November, 1962, by installing some of their nuclear armory in the Caribbean and Central America. Clearly, should the Russians act secretly now as they did over 20 years ago, it would create an intolerable situation for us, for our neighbors, for the Western Hemisphere and the world.

Recognizing the perils involved, nine Latin American foreign ministers hurriedly began peace talks in Panama City. They selected three of their colleagues from Colombia, Panama and Venezuela to head for Moscow where they were scheduled to arrive on the weekend. Mexican Foreign Minister Sepulveda briefed his fellow ministers on the no-nonsense views of Secretary Shultz in Mexico.

Besides the aid requests of President Reagan for El Salvador in a military-and-credits package of $136 million, cut back by Congress by $50 million, conversations apparently zeroed in on the Nicaraguan regime's pro-Moscow tilt. Secretary Shultz, authoritative sources report, said Nicaraguan junta personalities don't even bother to hide links with the guerrillas in El Salvador.

Nicaraguan defense minister, Commandante Humberto Ortega, for instance, was quoted as making this remarkable declaration:

"We have no choice. Of course we are not ashamed to be helping El Salvador (guerrillas). We would like to help all revolutions. But we do not have enough weapons for our own people. So help must be mainly moral and political. The amount we can give compared to the extent of U.S. help to the Salvadoran government is puny."

Besides the self-serving views in the last part of his statement, Ortega coyly overlooked the steady logistical supply provided by Cuba, PLO terrorists and Bulgar deep-sea shipping specialists dredging and building massive port facilities. Does Ortega think these are freebies? And why are all these "exotic" foreigners surfacing so suddenly in Nicaragua? The answer is, of course, the Soviet Union always uses proxy satellite regimes to try to avoid confrontations with us when they can use others in their debt.

So I find it most appalling that some of our national legislators carp at providing funds for American national safety or think that even half a loaf will do the job. It can't and it won't.

Either the Soviet threat which has spread right into our backyard is real or it isn't. The doubters in Congress must ask themselves that question and answer it out loud. National preservation is at stake and a wrong answer won't permit second-guessing.

Next Wednesday, President Reagan will address a televised joint session of Congress to detail his view that the crisis in El Salvador is a threat to our interests and warrants immediate emergency military assistance. His speech will be a rare appearance, usually reserved for such important occasions like a State of the Union message.

Don't miss it.

SPEAKING OUT:

Clinical depression takes tragic toll

By JAN DRAKE

Jan Drake is staff artist for the Midland Reporter-Telegram. A native of Houston and graduate of Texas A&M University, she lived in Nebraska for a time prior to moving to Midland two years ago.

On April 29th I will celebrate another year of life. To most people that will not mean as much as it does to me. April 29th is not my birthday. It is the date on which, intending to commit suicide, I checked into a hospital and chose living instead.

I will never know why I did it.

I longed for death the way an exhausted runner longs to stop running. I was driven toward it, wracked by feelings of selfishness and guilt. I had so much to live for, but I was suffering. It wasn't really that I wanted to die, it was just that it hurt too much to live. I was in a nightmare of mental and physical anguish that had finally become unbearable. I could take no joy in the brilliant and beautiful April. Everything around me was being reborn, while within me something was dying. I wanted only to complete the final act that I thought could give me peace.

Now, one year later, I understand what was happening to me. I had a psychiatric illness known as clinical depression, which affects millions of Americans every year. I am still being treated for it. Unlike a reactive depression which stems from a major life event, such as a death, clinical depression seems to begin insidiously, with no apparent cause. It is a biochemical imbalance in the brain which affects the entire body. Emotions run rampant and eventually, in severe cases, lead to thoughts of suicide and death. I was lucky. I did not take my life. Every year victims of clinical depression try it and tragic numbers of them succeed. The long nights of insomnia, the profound feelings of sadness and guilt, and the terrible thought that one might be going insane all conspire to make life into a living death or earthly hell.

I am writing this because I know I am not alone. Whenever I read the obituary of someone who died in their home, I always wonder if they took their own life. It is no idle curiousity. Experts believe that a tremendous majority of suicides were clinically depressed, a tragic fact since depression is the most common and treatable type of psychiatric illness. It is believed that, at any given time, one in 10 Americans suffers to some degree from it. But I am living proof that severe depression need not be fatal.

Medical science has made tremendous strides towards recognizing and controlling this illness, particularly in the past three decades. Prior to that, shock treatments were the most effective form of therapy. Now powerful antidepressant drugs are able, in a large number of people, to correct the chemical imbalance in the brain. This allows formerly incapacitated people to rejoin the mainstream of life, on a vastly improved level. Psychotherapy is available to deal with underlying problems and help cope with stress. But most important of all is the fact that the stigma of shame and secrecy formerly attached to mental illness as a whole is fast disappearing in the face of increased knowledge and acceptance. This giant step forward is inabling many a present or former victim to come 'out of the closet' and enjoy life without fear of censorship.

Someday it is hoped that all psychiatric illnesses will be as controllable as diabetes or any other physical illness, and as generally accepted.

I owe a lot of the fact that I am alive to many people, none of whom I will ever forget.

I am grateful to the Midland Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center (MH-MR) for so swiftly recognizing my desperation and working me in. One day later, in my case, would have been too late.

I am grateful to Terry and Irene, the social workers who first saw me. Sam Guyton, the counselor who urged me into Midland Memorial for "a few days rest," and Dr. Howlett, the psychiatrist who kept me there until I finally passed the crisis stage and realized that I wanted to live. I will never forget them or the Two-West nursing staff who saw me through some of the darkest hours of my life and gave me hope. All of these people believed, when I could not, that my life was infinitely worth saving. And to all of them I offer heartfelt thanks for everything. I'm glad I am here to say it. This is, in effect, a love letter to them all.

I won't tell you it's been totally easy since last spring. I've had my times of anger and frustration about the illness and its place in my life. And I've still had times of guilt, confusion and sadness. No one survives suicidal depression unchanged. I wanted to take my own life. I can never forget that. Thanks to God and some intensely caring people, I did not do it.

I did not swallow a lethal dose of pills as I had intended. I was not buried at 31, leaving behind bewildered, guilty and grieving survivors, including two young children who would always have thought I did not love them enough to live.

I am going to have another April 29th, hopefully a whole succession of them. And I don't know exactly how I will celebrate. I only know that I will. I would like to do something truly special, but I think I already am. I'm glad to be alive, one year later, and I'm accomplishing good things with my life. That is a celebration in itself. I really couldn't ask for more.

Clinical depression may be identified by some or all of the following symptoms.

— Marked change in appetite with significant weight loss or weight gain.

— Loss of energy, constant fatigue.

— Stomach upsets, especially constipation.

— Physical agitation and restlessness or an overall physical slow down.

— Sleeping disturbances, too much or too little with early morning waking (about two hours) being common.

— Diminished ability to concentrate and difficulty in making simple decisions.

— Greatly decreased interest in sex.

— Feelings of profound sadness, worthlessness, self-reproach and/or excessive guilt.

— Recurrent thoughts of death and suicide.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Using the lake

To The Editor:

Stacy Dam looks like it will be started before too long. It will be built by Colorado Municipal Water District and operate like Lake Spence if nothing is done to prevent it.

I have always been of the opinion that lakes built on Texas rivers were first to conserve water or control floods and the second use was for recreation. CRMWD does not look at them this way. Leasing of the lake land that is not covered by water is given priority over recreation by them. Public roads have been closed to Lake Spence to prevent the public from reaching the lake, one after the other. This tax free land is leased to several ranchers who run stock on it, mostly sheep. Mr. Ivey, CRMWD manager, said that his lawyer told him, the public would be tresspassing if they got out of their boats to eat lunch on this land. Lake Spence is only 60 percent full. This leave 5,960 acres of land to run sheep and other stock on.

I would like to point out some of the results of this policy. The most important thing is pollution. One rancher told me he saw more than 20 dead sheep rotting in the lake at one time. It is only reasonable to assume that there are many more if this many was seen at one time. These sheep bogged down in the mud trying to get a drink from the lake. Lakes built for municipal water are receding more than 90 percent of the time from the pumping of the water to the cities. This leaves a soft muddy streak of land around the lake, this makes it hard for the sheep to get to the water without bogging down. It is also reasonable to assume that many of these sheep that die are diseased and sick because the weak are the first to get stuck. I can think of nothing more repulsive than a flock of dead wormy sheep rotting in our drinking water.

The second thing is fence in the lake. These pastures that are leased to the rancher are divided by fences running down into the lake. Many are now under water and are a definite hazzard to the people using the lake for recreation.

The closing of the roads on the side of the lake especially the road near the center of the lake, causes the people to have to travel long distances by boat to reach the best fishing area. This is a real hazzard when anyone is down there and a high wind comes up.

I think it is urgent that all who read this contact our state representatives and senators and try to get a law passed to prohibit the closing of any public road to any reservoir or lake on any Texas river and prohibit the grazing of any live stock on any part of any reservoir used for drinking water, and require all fences removed from new lakes before they are completed and from older lakes where possible.

Commendation

To The Editor:

I would like to commend the Reporter-Telegram on carrying the excellent Associated Press story on page 14B of the Sunday, April 10th edition entitled "Texas Town Better Prepared for Tornado Season."

This article appeared very factual. However, I would like to document the fact that the American Red Cross spent $1,500,000 in the rehabilitation of Paris, and there were many, many Red Cross and Mennonite volunteers (and vehicles — some from Midland) on the scene. I would further state that the American Red Cross still has staff and volunteers in Paris.

Thank you.

Enterprising

To The Editor:

Private enterprise is on its deathbed. Fifty years after FDR started the U.S.A. down the road to socialism, the American public has finally begun to accept and want it.

What? You doubt it? Recently the American public has started petitioning the Congress to establish stricter controls on toxic waste disposal, on additives to foods, on poisons in pharmaceuticals. Trucking companies are begging to have regulation re-established, due to fear of rate wars. The advertising industry wants federal intervention in case of public backlash against them. The insurance companies demand federal limits on the size of lawsuits emanating from product poisonings. The fishing industry on Long Island asks for federal standards on shellfish purity. The drug industry wants federal regs on safe packaging. Some money experts blame financial de-regulation for soaring interest rates laggardly investment rates, for the recession in general. Even some gas producers and the IPAA are opposed to gas de-regulation.

Regulation is on the way back! Surprised? You shouldn't be, after 50 years of Big Brother watching over us, the present situation is reminiscent of the released longtime prisoner, who begs to return to the safety and solace of his cell. He just can't cope with freedom.

Yep, looks like private enterprise is on its deathbed. And the cost of the funeral is going to tax all of us. R.I.P.

Puppy love

To The Editor:

On April 11, 1983, our puppy was missing from the backyard. Being a typical American family who loves their pets very much, we began the process of trying to locate our animal. April 12 we called Animal Control here in Midland. No, they hadn't seen the dog, but I could come down and check to make sure they hadn't picked her up.

Again April 14 I checked with Animal Control, but this time I asked some questions about how to go about getting an animal back. They were very courteous, extremely interested and helpful. They not only took down information on our puppy, but spent time trying to match the description of our pet with ones that they had from people who had reported finding a pet.

To make a long story short, they called the people who had reported finding a dog in our neighborhood and made an appointment for me to go by and see if it was my dog. I feel that this was very helpful and thoughtful of them. Later I learned that around 7 p.m. they phoned the people who had found the dog to make sure that I had made it by and that the puppy was mine.

I feel such consideration and effort shouldn't go unnoticed. We have just moved here from a small town, and I had not expected to find such genuine interest and "going the second mile" from city employees in such a large town. Midland can be proud of the service the Animal Control of Midland is performing.

Let's hear it

To The Editor:

Here is a case that only a mind so full of Zionist propaganda as to have lost the power of reason would deny.

When hundreds of Palestinian high school girls became violently ill, "Doc" Menachem Begin diagnosed the cause as mass hysteria without taking a pulse or looking at one tongue. Considering many peoples' inability to vomit regardless of how sick, the probability of 800 girls to regurgitate on cue is like one man said of evolution: The probability is about that of a tornado passing through a junk yard and coming out with a properly built Boeing 747.

Next a crew of pro-Israel doctors rushed in and concluded that the illness was caused by a bacterial infection. Without Begin's record as a bloody terrorist and consumate liar and counting on public faith in the medical profession it was expected that their hypothesis would prove more palatable. Yet, a first year medical student at the bottom of his class would, hopefully, reject the idea of a bacteria or virus of such virolence as to become almost overnight an epidemic yet confine itself to Arabs, girls, a small area and not be transmitted to other members of those families.

The one logical answer is that, as charged by the Palestinians, the girls were poisoned while on the way to or at school. The intent of such deliberate poisoning was to create such panic as to cause large numbers of Palestinians to flee their homes, leaving them to be seized upon by Jews.

If some apologist for Israel has a more fitting theory based on reason rather than emotionalism or pseudoreligious copouts, then let's hear it.

Let's be honest

To The Editor:

This is in reply to Gordon S. Clark's letter in your April 10th edition.

Clark's bias is showing. The Nazis not only imprisoned people without trial, they sent millions (gypsies, resistance fighters, priests and others, as well as Jews) to concentration camps. They not only tortured suspects, destroyed homes and expropriated land; they killed 10 people for each soldier killed by the resistance in many places. They destroyed a whole town in Poland and sent its people to a concentration camp.

If that isn't your definition of "modern times," how about the Pol Pot government of Cambodia? They drove all the people out of the capital of Phnom Penh, even hospital patients. They killed anybody with a shred of education. They killed not only the officials and soldiers of the La Nol government, but their families as well.

The above, not to mention Joseph Stalin and Mao Tse-tung, did all that which you have accused the Israelis of and more besides.

I, too, believe that the Israelis act high-handed at times; however, that is no reason to engage in such extreme exaggeration as to call them the most brutal repressors of modern times. By all means, be critical, but be honest.

State political season begins with Krueger's near-announcement

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — With budget-balancing and other concerns clamoring for attention, legislators may have missed a minor but significant political event at the State Capitol: arrival of the first official press release of the 1984 Senate campaign.

That release was from Bob Krueger, former U.S. representative and former special ambassador to Mexico, and currently — as proclaimed by his press release, "Krueger of Texas, Democrat for U.S. Senate."

Actually, the press release — concerning the first statewide "grassroots organizational meeting" for his campaign — noted that Krueger hasn't yet formally announced for the seat held by Sen. John Tower.

But that announcement is indeed a formality.

Krueger has been much in evidence in Austin recently, visiting with various politicos, and making the rounds of receptions.

At his meeting here with supporters, Krueger reminded them than in 1978, he lost to Tower by less than 13,000 votes — less than half a percent of those cast.

Two more votes per precinct would have resulted in a victory, Krueger contends.

And Krueger says he's confident that next year he'll settle what he calls the "unfinished business" from 1978.

First, however, Krueger must win the Democratic nomination, and while he enjoys some advantages there, there could be a fairly tough battle.

Also interested — and in fact all but officially announced as a candidate — is State Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin.

Doggett has been making appearances in various areas, with the theme that Tower can be beat —but not by a "look alike, warmed over, Republican-type candidate."

Also reported interested in the race is U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, who was reported by associates to be "thinking about" the possibility.

But at the moment, it appears Doggett and Krueger are the two contenders most likely to be involved in a Democratic primary battle.

Doggett already is reported to be soliciting funds, and money is likely to be a key factor — although not the only factor — in the race.

Tower outspent Krueger by some $2 million in the 1978 race, and Republican officials are figuring $4.5-$5 million will be needed for the 1984 battle.

POSITIVE THINKING

Imaging: You can see yourself successful

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

An important factor in positive thinking is the mental process called imaging or holding a picture of a desired goal. Let me tell you an exciting story. A young girl is bending over a metal washtub. She is one of eight chilren, the daughter of a miner. She is washing her father's overalls.

Staring now and then out the grimy window at the bleak, familiar symbols of poverty that surround her, an image comes to her. She has had daydreams about her future before, but this is more than a daydream. Crystal clear in her mind is the picture of a college campus, tranquil green lawns, ivy-covered buildings. Graduation ceremonies are in progess, and she sees herself in cap and gown receiving a diploma. She feels the soaring happiness, the sense of achievement, the pride.

But what kind of impossible dream is this? No member of her family has ever gone to college. There was no money for such things. The Great Depression has the country by the throat. There is barely enough food on the Crowe family table. Her strange vision must be just a young girl's wistful fantasy, nothing more. And yet, the image of herself receiving that diploma was so vivid, so real.

Consider, now, what happens next. Mary Crowe receives a summons; her parish priest would like to see her. Puzzled, she goes to the rectory, where the good father opens a desk drawer and takes out an envelope. "Mary," he says, "quite a while ago one of our parishioners gave me some money to be used to educate some deserving young person. I've been watching you, and I've decided you are the one. These funds will make it possible for you to have a four-year scholarship at college. I know you'll make a wonderful record there."

She studied hard and got top grades. She began to think about a career. She decided to become an insurance salesperson.

In those days there were almost no women selling insurance. It was a man's world. But Mary Crowe "saw" herself as a successful producer.

The man in charge of hiring turned her down. Flat. Women on his staff? "Go away," he said to MaryCrowe, "you're wasting your time. And mine."

Finally the man was impressed with her dogged determination. "All right," he said. "We'll take you on. But no salary. No drawing account. Commissions only. So go on out and starve."

Mary Crowe went out and started selling, door to door. People listened, because she made them feel that she was primarily interested in helping them — as indeed she was. And she didn't starve. Far from it. She became the number-one salesperson for that company. She became a member of the Million Dollar Round Table — the exlusive group of insurance agents who sell more than a million dollars' worth of insurance in a single year. She became, in other words, just what she had imaged herself to be — a stunning success.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Mastectomy not only choice of treatment

Dear Dr. Solomon: I may be overreacting because of what happened to a friend of mine recently. But what's the good of saving someone's life by doing a mastectomy if the woman is then too upset to enjoy living? Don't doctors ever think of something like this? — Evelyn, Hagerstown, Md.

Dear Evelyn: Physicians very much realize the importance of a patient's quality of life as well as its length, but a doctor is not going to ignore a life-threatening condition because of the possible consequences of treating it. There are instances, however, in which a disease may be treated a little differently if there is serious question about the patient's psychological reaction to a special form of treatment.

In regard to breast cancer, Dr. Jennifer Hughes, of the University of Southampton Faculty of Medicine in England, has suggested that treatment other than mastectomy may be more appropriate for women to whom loss of a breast would be psychologically damaging. Dr. Hughes reports that a 60-item general health questionnaire can be used to predict women who would experience severe depression following a mastectomy. These women might benefit from an alternative form of treatment. There is also the possibility of reconstructive surgery, best discussed pre-operatively.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My college roommate was treated with radiation for Hodgkin's disease. I have not seen her for a couple of years, but she is getting married and has invited me to the wedding. What I'd like to know is if there is any danger that any children she might have might be defective in some way. — Ms. W.J., San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Ms. J.: I assume you are asking whether the radiation therapy she received might result in birth defects. According to Dr. Anupam Routh, of Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago, the treatment your friend received should not affect any children she might have.

Dr. Routh says that the dose of radiation reaching the ovaries of women who are treated for Hodgkin's disease is very small, and radiation treatment in these women has little effect on the incidence of birth defects.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My allergy seems to get worse when it's windy outside, but I've had friends tell me that they feel better at such times. How do you account for this contradiction? — Jerry, White Plains, N.Y.

Dear Jerry: I've heard the same stories from a number of my patients. Winds tend to spread pollen and this aggravates the allergic symptoms in some patients. On the other hand, winds also act to clean the air. A person's reaction will depend on the type of allergy and his or her specific response to windy conditions.

THE SWITCH IS ON
Thousands of bottled water users have already changed to Reverse Osmosis (RO) Drinking Water Systems. At present there are over 5,000 Reverse Osmosis (RO) Systems in use in homes and offices in the Permian Basin. Why are so many turning to RO? The process of Reverse Osmosis has the remarkable ability to remove almost all pollutants from water and produce for you and excellent tasting drinking water at an affordable price. Water pollution is an age old problem. Today there are thousands of new toxic chemicals introduced into the environment and many have or will contaminate our drinking water sources. Some of these chemicals can cause cancer, genetic mutations and birth defects. Recently scientists from The World Health Organization and The National Cancer Institute estimated that up to 90% of all cancer is caused by chemicals in our air and drinking water "Safe Drinking water in this country can no longer be taken for granted", (L.A. Times January 2, 1980). Today after several decades of research and development costing many million of dollars reverse osmosis is reguarded as the most effective, efficient and economical of method of water purification. Little wonder thousands of people in West Texas are turning to these marvelous systems to provide for themselves and their families pure great tasting drinking water. At Pure Water Reverse Osmosis we are bringing to the Permian Basin the very best reverse osmosis systems at the best price. Best product, Best price. Our guarantee: Quality Product at the Best Price in the Permian Basin. To find out just how inexpensive a Pure Water Reverse Osmosis System is call 699-7378. Or when a pure water representative knocks on your door invite him in. You will appreciate the information he has to share with you.

LIVE-IN TAX SHELTER

LUXURY FAIRGATE TOWNHOMES FOR $92,500

If you're like most renters, the tax man's got you down and you're ready to cry uncle. You have no interest to write off, and, to make matters worse, you don't own a home. Each month those rent dollars go out the window with no hope of retrieval.

LIVE-IN TAX SHELTER

At Fairgate you'll enjoy a beautiful home and tax relief. You can deduct a considerable amount of interest expense from your income tax, and because our homes are priced below market value but presently sell for $92,500, you have built-in equity.

DISTINCTIVE 2 & 3 BEDROOM FLOORPLANS

To visit Fairgate in northwest Midland, take Wadley Avenue west to Midland Drive; then north to Fairgate and the models.

Adoption: A give-and-take situation

Text by David Lee Forrest

The Midland office of Lutheran Social Services of Texas has a bulletin board near the front door covered with snapshots of smiling children and sleepy-eyed babies the agency has placed in adoptive homes.

Many of these children were placed in "open adoption," which until a few years ago was an almost unheard of innovation.

The agency is now concerned about the effect the voluntary registry bill (SB 777) in the state legislature will have on the adoption options it can offer.

The bill proposes to establish a system for an adoptee, at age 21, to return to the agency from which he was adopted and register if he wishes to contact his biological parents. The biological parents also could register when the child is 21 if they want to make contact. Both parties must register before the agency would arrange for them to contact one another.

Present legislation requires a court order to open adoption records if one party trys to seek the other without the cooperation of intermediaries.

LSST IS THE second largest adoption agency in Texas; the largest is the Edna Gladney Home and Adoption Service, according to Lael Cordes, director of LSST Permian Basin area office. It is also one of the major proponents and pioneers of the open adoption concept.

Cordes said the LSST Permian Basin office placed a total of 30 children last year, 21 of which were infants. Of those infant adoptions, approximately 75 percent were open in some way and 25 percent involved face-to-face meetings between the adoptive couple and the biological parents.

"Any kind of communication between the birthparents of a child and the adoptive parents of that child" is the definition of open adoption given by Janet Cravens-Garner, another area director of the agency in Texas. She fears the bill could hinder these communications, which she said can be very beneficial.

Nearly 10 years ago, Cravens-Garner said, LSST began making the first "baby steps" toward open adoptions. The steps included allowing the biological mother to select the adoptive parents of her child by reading four or five "social histories." The histories, written anonymously by adoptive couples, describe their education, religion, occupation, physical description, health and attitudes about adoption.

ANOTHER EARLY STEP was to arrange for the adoptive parents to provide photographs of the child for the biological parents if both parties approved of the idea.

"It's been a slow evolution to where we are now," Cravens-Garner said. "The latest innovation in open adoption for us was the face-to-face meetings that started two years ago."

The face-to-face meetings are arranged by mutual consent. Normally, the biological mother meets with the adoptive couple in the agency's office and no last names or addresses are exchanged. Most participants meet only once or twice.

The adoptive parents...

Midlanders Marylyn and Dave Leonard's adoption of their son, Russell, was called "an out-of-control open adoption that turned out very well" by Lael Cordes of Lutheran Social Services of Texas.

"This one was extremely much more open than most," she said.

At first, the Leonards had no intention of participating in an open adoption.

"Most definitely not," Mrs. Leonard said. "My first reaction was that I just don't want to do that because there is no guarantee for the future."

The couple began discussing open adoption after Cordes mentioned the possibility to them. According to Mrs. Leonard, she and her husband are deeply religious and, she added, they believe God guided them to their decision.

After serious thought and prayer, she said, "We felt the rightness of it."

They agreed to meet anonymously with the pregnant girl, then not quite 19 years old, who was seeking a couple interested in an open adoption.

"When we began this, we were going to see her face-to-face, but we were going to use our middle names, we weren't going to tell the town we lived in or anything like that(—). But as the circumstances started unfolding that got to be just silly."

When they met the expectant mother, Mrs. Leonard said, "Immediately we felt such an affinity for her and felt that we were sharing an experience together. It was very, very open. It was very loving.

"We expressed our philosophy of parenting. We expressed complete acceptance of her and a positive outlook toward her future.

"I feel like when you go into this kind of thing there has to be an atmosphere of trust. We could find her in two minutes; she could find us in one minute, but there is a mutual trust.

"The reason she wanted an open adoption was because she loved this baby with a very unselfish love and she wanted to be completely sure that the family this baby was living with met the standards she wanted.

"I think she had a very unselfish motive in meeting us."

After the initial meeting, Mrs. Leonard said, she still felt an intense curiosity and concern about the girl. The two women met several more times and "talked for hours."

The Leonards took her out to dinner along with their five-year-old daughter, Jennifer.

"Jennifer had the opportunity to feel the baby kicking in her tummy and to know her. I explained to Jennifer that she did not have a husband and she wanted this baby to have a complete home, to have a daddy and a big sister, too."

Mrs. Leonard attended the mother's last Lamaz class with her and enjoyed it.

"We just had a great time. We laughed and talked and then we went for a pizza afterwards.

"I look back on that with a warmth in my heart. It was just a real, real special time.

"Part of my feeling was that she was carrying a baby that was going to be my child to raise, but I also felt very motherly towards her and I still do."

When the girl went into labor, Mrs. Leonard was notified and immediately went to the hospital because she wanted to be in the delivery room with the mother.

"I went through the Lamaz experience with her. I was not there for the actual birth because of a difference with the gynecologist, but I decided it was easier to have a baby than to go through it with someone else.

"It was just the most unique experience to watch someone you love and have shared in the most unusual way and to know that this child is probably going to be the child that you'll mother."

Mrs. Leonard said she told the biological mother, "You have to do what's right and if you decide to keep this baby, then you don't worry about us. You do what's right for you because God is going to take care of us."

The day after the baby's birth, the Leonards returned to the hospital to meet the biological mother's own mother and to visit with the girl.

"I remember we went in the room and she was breast-feeding the baby and then she said, 'Do you want to hold him?' and I held him. I looked up and saw the look on her face and I thought it was time for us to...," Mrs. Leonard paused as her voice choked with emotion, "I knew it was time for us to make a separation."

She did not return to the hospital because she felt the biological mother should "have her time alone with him," she said.

It had been agreed that the girl could keep the child for two weeks, Mrs. Leonard said, since the mother had told her, "This would be the only time in my life I'd get to mother this child."

Within a few days of the birth, on Easter Sunday of last year, the adoption agency called the Leonards and said the mother had decided the time was right to relinquish the baby. She and the Leonards had previously decided to make the placement in person at a church.

The girl was waiting in the church when the couple arrived there after signing the official adoption papers.

"She was sitting there with the baby with tears running down her face and he was all wrapped up and quiet. We visited for about 15 minutes, then she said, 'I think it's time for me to go.'"

Mr. Leonard took the baby and hugged the biological mother and he also had tears in his eyes, said Mrs. Leonard, "and she gave me some diapers and a diaper bag and she embraced me."

The girl then left with some friends who had accompanied her.

"I remember as they walked off they were silhouetted against the sun," Mrs. Leonard said, "and I'll never forget the sobs as she walked off."

Since that dramatic meeting, the two mothers have exchanged letters three times. The Leonards plan on having one more dinner with the biological mother to talk and give her a set of photographs of her son's first birthday.

"And then when the time is right, we'll say goodbye," Mrs. Leonard said.

As for the future, Mrs. Leonard doubts that when Russell is grown he will seek out the woman who bore him.

"My feeling is that he'll be so loved and so much apart of our family that I don't anticipate him needing that as part of his self-image. It

The biological mother...

She found out she was pregnant on her 18th birthday.

Beth (a fictitious name) had just ended a serious four-year relationship with her boyfriend and moved to Midland. She no longer knew where he was.

"The first thing that entered my mind was to get an abortion so no one would ever have to know about it," she said. She went to Planned Parenthood for counseling.

"They (Planned Parenthood) said, 'Are you sure this is what you want? We have other options you can take.'"

After counseling and careful consideration, Beth said she decided against abortion. Planned Parenthood referred her to Lutheran Social Services of Texas.

During the following two months she debated whether to keep the child after it was born or place it for adoption.

LSST provided her, she said, with mental "exercises to do on the pros and cons of keeping him and of giving him up for adoption. It was really a hard time for me because I wanted him so bad, but yet I knew I couldn't raise him the way I wanted to. I thought he deserved more than that and I still feel that way."

Beth said she wanted to maintain a conservative approach to the open adoption issue.

"I just wanted a picture or two so I could remember him," she said.

She did not help choose the adoptive parents because she felt the agency could make the choice better than she.

"Just me looking on a piece of paper," she said, "that just wasn't good enough."

She also decided against meeting the potential adoptive couple, she said, "because it would have been harder on me and I feel like if I was an adoptive parent and I met the birthmother I would be more afraid that she would come looking for me later."

During her pregnancy, Beth decided to serve on a panel of biological mothers as part of an educational seminar for people who were interested in adopting a child. She is glad she did.

"To me, it was hard to place faces with people who adopted and so it helped me a lot. Also, I had a couple of fathers come up and tell me that they really admired me and that their image of a birthmother was completely wrong.

"I guess they expect some little sleazy streetwalker or something. It made me feel good that they changed their opinions."

Her baby was born in May of last year.

"When I was in the hospital in labor, the nurse asked me if I wanted to see the baby when he was born. I said, 'No, I don't.' I was going to be so hard about that, old toughie here, you know.

"But when I heard him cry, I just couldn't resist and I held him right after he was born. The next day I went down to the nursery with my mom and some of my friends and I got to hold him and feed him.

"Some people asked me if that wasn't hard on me. And it was hard at the time, but I look back now and I wouldn't have changed it for the world.

"At least I got to hold my son twice. That means a whole lot to me."

The main open aspect of Beth's baby's adoption since his placement has been an exchange of letters between her and the boy's new family through the agency. Beth does not know their name or address and prefers not to know.

"I get letters from the adoptive parents telling me how he's doing. And I get pictures. Then I write them letters, and they'll keep the letters and, when he gets old enough to understand, he can read them.

"I wrote him a letter so when he gets old enough, he'll understand the reason I did give him up for adoption.

"The parents who adopted my baby have just been so super. I feel like they care a lot for me and they wrote the letters just to let me know that he's doing okay and that they're proud of him and that he's well-loved.

"I've gotten some beautiful letters from them and I'll always cherish them. When I start getting lonely, I read them and it makes me feel better."

Receiving the photographs of the son she held twice is especially important to Beth.

"It makes me feel super because I see how healthy he is, how happy he is, and it makes me realize I did do the right thing.

"Sometimes I look at the pictures and I miss him real bad, but then I get to thinking, 'Look at him! He's healthy. He's fat. He eats well.'

"A lot of people don't understand, like they say, 'Pictures? Isn't that kind of hanging on?' To some people they may just be hanging on, but for me, it makes me feel better."

Beth's own mother was also an adopted child. Beth said her mother can remember a social worker approaching her adoptive mother to request photographs for the biological mother, but the adoptive mother refused.

"My mother looks back now and tells me, 'Now I know how important those pictures are. I wish my mother had given my birthmother pictures because I see how it helps you.'

"It helps my mother too, because that (——) was a grandson she lost."

A supportive family has helped Beth tremendously in dealing with the emotional stress of having a baby and giving it up for adoption, she said.

"He's part of our family. Not physically, but mentally he is part of the family.

"He'll always be with me in my mind, but you can't live in the past. You can back to it every once in a while, but you can't live in it.

"My life will continue. I'll get married and have other children, but those other children will know about my son. They'll know they have a half-brother."

Despite her deep feelings toward her son, Beth does not intend to actively seek him out after he is grown. She does plan to keep the adoption agency updated on her current addresses to ensure that he can find her if he wishes.

"If he wants to come find me, it's up to him, because I gave up my right when I gave him up for adoption. I feel like if I go looking for him, he'll say, 'Why do you care now, 25 years later, when I'm all grown?'

"But I figure if he wants to see me that's totally up to him. I would love to see him and I hope he does come looking looking for me some day."

Adoption...

"It's still a confidential adoption, but it's not a secretive adoption anymore," said Cravens-Garner.

"We present it to the clients as a one-time thing," she said. "Most people are satisfied with that. There are occasions when people decide they want some kind of ongoing friendship, but it's pretty rare. That's up to them. It's not the agency's policy."

Biological mothers are also asked to write their anonymous social histories with complete medical information, details of why the baby was placed for adoption and other background information. The history is given to the adoptive parents who can later share the information with the child if they wish.

"WE'RE REAL concerned as an agency dealing with people's lives, about adoptees growing up with identity problems," Craven-Garner said. "There are lots and lots of adopted people now, as adults, who are coming back to the agencies, who are searching, spending great amounts of time and money in order to have contact with their biological relatives.

"It does not mean in any way that they had a bad adoptive placement or that they don't love their adoptive parents, but it does mean they need information about who they are.

"We realized that if we didn't do something for this generation of adoptees we're placing right now, every day, this problem would just be perpetuated.

"We want to give adoptive parents answers to those questions we know the children are going to ask. We know those children need to know."

Cravens-Garner is concerned the registry bill may prevent those questions from being answered.

"We agree absolutely with the intent of the bill," she said, "we have a lot of questions about what follows. I think the registry is a great idea. I think the registry needs to really strive to accomplish what it says is its purpose, and my impression of the way the original bill was written is that it would preclude that from happening.

"THEY WROTE IN (to the bill) so many conditions."

As she interprets the bill, Cravens-Garner said, it requires both the adoptee and all the adoptee's siblings to be age 21 or over before any of them could register and that the biological father — who may be unknown, missing or denying paternity — might have to register before contact could be made.

Cravens—Garner is worried that the bill might actually outlaw the agency's acting as an intermediary by approaching one party at the other's request to ask if they would consider making contact.

A better bill, she believes, would have a younger registration age of 18, would involve only the adoptee and the parent he wishes to contact and would ensure that intermediaries could still check with a parent or child to see if they want to be contacted.

Cravens—Garner is concerned not only about possible legislation, but also about popular misconceptions she feels many people have about open adoptions.

"We're not talking about ongoing visitation," she said. "We're not talking about co-parenting. We're not talking about the birthmother coming over every Sunday for dinner. We're talking about a protected situation.

"WE DON'T recommend or advocate contact between minor children and their birthparents. Naturally we don't want them to be confused. There's no question about who the 'real parents' are; the real parents are the adoptive parents.

"Adoption," she said, "needs to be more humane and more responsive to the needs of everybody in the adoption triangle."

Not just the adoptees benefit from open adoption, she said, because the adoptive parents can be relieved of a great deal of anxiety by knowing more about the biological mother. "Adoptive parents who don't know anything about the birthmother are privy to all kinds of fantasies about her, like, she's lurking around the schoolyard or she's sitting in her car on the corner every day," Cravens-Garner said.

"It's just fear of the unknown."

When given more information about the biological mother or perhaps even meeting with her in person, she said, the fear disappears because then "she's a known quantity to them."

Biological parents can have their own fears.

"Birthparents fear that adoptive parents really aren't nice people," Cravens-Garner said.

"Traditional adoption is so much a psychological amputation. If you're a birthmother it can be like, 'Sign on the dotted line, my dear, and forget about this child and don't ask any questions and go on with your life.'

"IT'S NOT TRUE that birthparents forget about their kid. They don't."

"Probably the most common questions that birthparents have," Anna Courtney, a LSST social worker, said, "are 'How is my child now? Is he alive? Is he dead? Is he healthy? Will he hate me for doing this?'" may not be that easy. We'll never hide or inundate him with information.

The LSST workers believe that open adoption may reduce at least some of the psychological stress an adoption may cause biological parents, adoptive parents and, eventually, those children on their bulletin board.

"If, at a time in the future, he wants to make contact with her, she'll welcome him with loving open arms. I can't say that it'd be easy for me, but I could handle it. It may be part of God's plan that we'll all be reunited some day.

"You'd think having met her and knowing her would decrease our security. It's increased our security just many, many times.

"I think there's a whole depth and security to this relationship. I can say to Russell without a doubt, 'Your mother was a wonderful person. I loved her. She loved you.'

"Never would I have planned it this way. At this time, never would I change a single thing about it. The more I love Russell, the more I love her. She's very much part of my life."

Mrs. Leonard proudly displays a photograph of the smiling, wide-eyed baby boy.

"I not only have a commitment to raise him," she said, "but I have a commitment to her. It's a double responsibility."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

One of the loveliest graduation gifts we've heard about was the Caribbean cruise given by Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert to her granddaughter, Pat Humes. Flying to Miami, the two boarded the cruise ship, the M.S. Southward. Ports of call were Puerto Plata, Dominican Republic; St. Thomas, the U.S. Virgin Islands; San Juan, the Spanish influenced capital of Puerto Rico, and British influenced Nassau, where they enjoyed the white sands of Cable Beach and the world's largest straw market. They also enjoyed the many events on board ship during their 2,000 mile cruise, ranging from a masquerade party to Country and Western Night with Texas barbecue.

Pam, the daughter of Pat and Parker Humes, is a senior at Midland High School and plans to attend Midland College.

EIGHT STUDENTS from Trinity School had a once-in-a-lifetime experience when they traveled to France over spring break. Organized by their French teacher, Richard Catania, a native of France, and his wife, Andrea, the trip included visits in the homes of French families and other places that are off the tourist's beaten path. Their trip began and ended in Paris, where they enjoyed sightseeing, museum touring, shopping, the ballet and dining in the city's many fine restaurants.

Those making the trip were Sharon Graham, Andrea Comola, Gene Nivens, Sonya Henderson, Joey Gourlay, Bill Rulla, Chris Jauz and Bobby Monaghan.

Their itinerary also included Caen, the major city in Normandy, where they enjoyed the crepes and cider which are the area specialty; a drive along the Apple Cider and Cheese Route, which included stops at area farms for sampling and learning about the products; Honfleur, a picturesque harbor city, where they enjoyed the sea food; a drive along the coast to view the invasion beaches and a visit to the D-Day Museum at Arromanches and then to the American cemetery at Saint Laurent, followed by a stop at Mont-Saint-Michel, the famous abbey and fortress built on a rock off the Normandy coast, which is considered one of the man-made marvels of the world.

But the most exciting part of the trip for the students occurred when they arrived at Laval, a city 250 miles west of Paris, where Richard's parents, Col. and Mrs. Andre Catania, reside. Here they met their host families and gained a new understanding of the French language. Even though some of the hosts speak fluent English, the ground rules had been established that only French was allowed. Richard's parents organized a costume party to celebrate the Americans' arrival, and the students learned many of the traditional French dances at that time.

JANE AND AL DILLARD returned Saturday from Acapulco, where Al participated for the fifth year in the Mexican Seniors Golf Association's international tournament. They stayed at the Pierre Marquez Hotel, which was also the site for the tourney.

FORMER LONG-TIME MIDLANDER Erma Underwood returned to the city recently for a visit, the first since her move to Albuquerque a year ago to be near her daughter, Elizabeth (Mrs. Earl) Mixon and family. Her trip was timed to coincide with the AAUW World Affairs Study Group's April meeting, at which she had been invited to speak on her 1982 trip to Paris and its environs. A veteran world traveler, Erma takes at least one major trip per year. This summer she plans to visit Italy and Sicily before going to Nairobi in Kenya for a visit with her granddaughter, a Peace Corps volunteer.

Erma's arrival in Midland immediateluy sparked a continuous round of informal social festivities that included luncheons, dinner parties and theatre going. She also had the pleasure of being with several groups with which she has had long associations, including the Friendship Sunday School Class, which she taught at First United Methodist Church for 20 years; the Shakespeare As We Like It Reading Group, and the Midland Couples Garden Club.

Erma was a houseguest of Annaliese and Charles Hyde while here. She planned to visit in Dallas with former Midlanders Ann and Larry Matthews and Nell and Mike Mitchell and in Houston with more ex-Tall City residents, Kalpana and Jugjit Yadav, before returning to Albuquerque.

HOLLY AND BARRY WILLIAMSON, who were united in marriage April 16 in St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, will return to Midland today following a week's honeymoon in Acapulco. Holly is the daughter of Joanie and Bobby Holt. Barry, an attorney with the firm of Turpin Smith Dyer and Saxe, is the son of Alice and Ashlin Williamson of Elaine, Ark.

A number of courtesies were extended the couple prior to their marriage. These included a cocktail party in the home of Margaret and Burgess Wade, with members of Barry's law firm as guests; a party in the home of Peggy and David Eckley, where guests were asked to "bring your favorite spirit to stock Holly's and Barry's cellar"; a cocktail party in the home of Barbara and Don O'Shaughnessy, with Ricki and Charles Perry and Tommie and Dr. Dean Strack as co-hosts; a weekend bachelorette party for Holly and a group of close friends given by Marion Lindley at Possum Kingdom Lake, and a "Honey Do" shower given by Marion and her mother, Mary Anne Lindley, in their home.

Also, a kitchen and recipe shower in the home of Myna (Mrs. Jack) Young, with Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish, Paula (Mrs. Frank) Cahoon, Joann (Mrs. John) Foster, Nancy Hull and Patti (Mrs. Watson) Laforce as co-hostesses; a party in the home of Betty and Charles Dean with Lucy and Steve Yancy as co-hosts, and an old-fashioned birdseed bag making party and luncheon in the home of Eloise (Mrs. Robert) Davenport, with Suzy (Mrs. Jim) Boldrick, Jeanie (Mrs. Coley) Cowden, Barbara (Mrs. Ed) Magruder, Jane (Mrs. Howard) Parker, Frances Metcalfe and Marjorie Wiseman as co-hostesses.

Festivities the day preceding the wedding included the bridesmaids' luncheon given by Mary Lou (Mrs. Findley) Holbrook and her daughter, Britt Donnelly of Fayetteville, Ark., in the Garden Room and given by the groom's parents, and a Mexican dinner party for the out-of-town guests hosted at the Racquet Club by Johnna and Sid Curle, Mary and Bill Kennedy, Liz and Tom Fowler, Spooks Starr and Dorothy Faye Kimsey, aunt of the bride.

A wedding day brunch was held in Margaret Hillin's home, with Barbara and Bob Duke and Charlene and John Waddill as co-hosts. The afternoon wedding was followed by a reception at the Holt home.

Every Friday morning Joe Schindler heads for Dellwood Lanes with his bowling bag and cream-colored bowling shoes in tow to bowl a few games with his senior citizes bowling league, "the Rock 'n Rollers."

Although he admits he has his good days and bad, he is proud of a recent game in which he bowled four strikes. "I get a kick out of seeing the pins fall," says Joe Schindler.

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

Ninety-year-old Joe Schindler still wants to do a lot, but acting his age is not among one of his choices.

"You got to keep moving," Schindler said. The two-year Midland resident's goal is to keep active, exercise and keep going. "I am still enjoying life."

Every Friday morning Schindler heads for Dellwood Lanes with his bowling bag and cream-colored bowling shoes in tow to bowl a few games with his senior citizen bowling league, the "Rock 'n Rollers."

He is the eldest of 42 active league members, ages 60-90, according to Helen Pokky of Dellwood Lanes, who said he never misses a Friday.

Schindler took up the sport two years ago after moving here from San Antonio to be closer to his family.

The senior citizen retired in 1960 after working as an instrument panel repairman for the US Air Force at Kelly Field.

He had not picked up a bowling ball since he played on a church bowling league in San Antonio 40 years ago, but he wanted to give it a shot.

Schindler took lessons and said he considered throwing in his scorecard more than once but he did not give up. "I was in the gutter half the time," he chuckled and added, "I am getting better every day."

But he wanted something to occupy his time and to socialize with people his own age, so he kept at it. Now he would not dream of quitting. He has missed only one bowling day since he joined the team.

His enthusiasm rubbed off on his son, Bill, whom he lives with, and they both joined the senior bowling league about six months ago.

Although he admits he has his good days and bad, he is proud of a recent match in which he bowled four strikes.

Lane-side fellowship is a big attraction, too, he said. "There are mostly women on the league," the widower said, winking.

While Schindler enjoys socializing with his teammates, he takes his game seriously. Concentration is the key, he said. "It is real important to concentrate." He does not appreciate distractions from those around him.

Schindler, who does not look his age, fingered his wire frame glasses and smoothed back a few loose strands of his steel gray hair with his fingers. He walked over to pick up his maroon, marbled bowling bowl. He slipped his two weathered fingers into the ball and the slight man who stands approximately 5 feet six inches tallstepped cautiously into his windup.

His bowling teacher, Karen Jordan, gives her former student nothing but high marks. "All the younger students would take breaks during the lessons," she said. "He never stopped to take a break. He is very, very dedicated. It was a pleasure to teach him. He really makes my heart feel good."

The senior citizen bowling league began five years ago with eight bowling enthusiasts, said Randy Isenbery, owner of Dellwood Lanes. The league now consists of approximately 40 regular players.

Isenberg marvels at the seniors who show up every Friday to bowl. Many of them have never stepped into a bowling alley before. But, Isenberg said, he especially admires Schindler. "Here you have got somebody who lives to be 90 years old, can still get around and flirt. I mean what can you say?"

Schindler's bowling chums recently held a birthday party for him. Friends and family turned out to share cake and punch at the bowling alley before regular league play.

As his great-grandchildren gobbledthe cake, Schindler's granddaughter, Patrice Allen, said his vitality amazes her. "I never thought I would be giving my grandfather bowling shoes for Christmas at 89 years of age."

As Schindler enters a new decade, he does not show any indications of slowing down. "I am going to try to improve on life in my 90th year."

Track trainer gives running tips to keep joggers on healthy path

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 36 million Americans are now running their way to fitness, says Fred Thompson, who for more than 20 years has been training girls and young women in track and field.

Thompson, Operating Meet Director of the Colgate Women's Games, offers these running tips for novices and experts alike:

— Always check the weather report to determine how to dress. If you're running in very cold weather, remember to protect your extremities; wear gloves and, especially, a hat. If you're going to be running for at least 15 minutes, don't pile on too much clothing, even in cold weather. Loose clothing is always best, in hot or cold weather.

— Running shoes should have good arch support and fit properly with socks. Be sure to check the sole and heel for wear every two weeks. Good running shoes are expensive, but it's better to discard shoes with a worn-down heel than to have to pay to treat a foot injury.

— If you're running for the first time, start slowly. Get a medical checkup, just as you would before starting any exercise program. Run a half or three-fourths of a mile for the first two weeks. Then, every two weeks, increase distance by adding a quarter or half mile to your run — whatever feels most comfortable.

— Learn to take our pulse and check it after every run. Your medical exam will tell you what your normal pulse rate is. Your pulse should return to its normal rate soon after you stop running.

— Many runners like to do stretching exercises just prior to running, but there's no need to overdo it with excessive stretching. Instead, it's better to warm up a bit by running a short distance, then do flexibility exercises before your main run. Or, do your exercises at home, before you go out.

— Your goal should be total body fitness. Pushups, situps and light weight training will make your a better runner and a healthier person. Vary your exercise so that every day you're doing more than just running.

— The beginner should run every other day. After three or four weeks, you can be running five or six days a week. If you're interested in fitness, and not training for competition, you should be running about 12 or 14 miles a week, spread out over three or four days. Beyond that could be counterproductive, and might even cause muscle and joint injuries.

— If you're running at night, wear reflective clothing and run in pairs or groups. Don't run in parks alone when they're likely to be empty.

Revised lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Effects of caffeine many and varied

Copley News Service

Caffeine — what can it do to you?

No one seems to know exactly how good or bad it really is yet, but more studies are now indicating that it may indeed by quite harmful in excessive amounts. Recently, it has been linked to birth defects, pancreatic cancer, and fibrocystic breast disease. The FDA's Bureau of Foods has called it "a potent biologically active material."

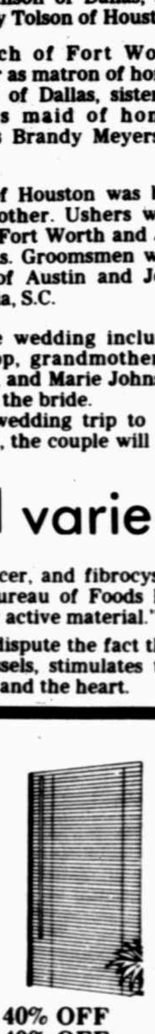

Proven or not, no one can dispute the fact that caffeine constricts blood vessels, stimulates the kidneys, brain, testes, ovaries and the heart.

Her fiance is a graduate of Austin High School and Southwestern University. He is attending the LBJ School of Public Affairs and the University of Texas School of Law.

Theme parties

NEW YORK (AP) — Every party should have a theme, an idea that ties everything together, says party consultant Anne-Stuart Hamilton.

For invitations Ms. Hamilton advises buying or making potholders, then using a felt-tip pen to write out the details of the party. Dish towels can be used as table coverings, she points out, while small empty boxes of household detergent can be used as vases for flowers.

WEDDING COSTS

NEW YORK (AP) — A wedding shouldn't cost more than you can afford, advises Barbara Tober, editor-in-chief of Bride's magazine. One way to keep costs down, she says, is to start the planning early. When money is a factor you'll have time to shop around and find the best prices or single package price.

The next meeting will be held in the home of Patsy Herrington with members of Xi Pi Kappa as guests.

Demand for vitamins up, say healthy sales figures

Hearst Feature Service

TUSTIN, Calif. – Manufacturing vitamins and other nutritional supplements has become a remarkable growth industry in the United States, with sales in health food stores more than quadrupuling in the last decade. And with chain drugstores and supermarkets selling an increasingly wide selection of nutritional aids, the boom shows no sign of abating.

Though millions of Americans take vitamins, the actual process of creating a vitamin remains something of a mystery: What does a gram of zinc look like? How do they make vitamin C? What gives vitamins their color?

Linwilco Laboratories produces 40 million to 60 million vitamin tablets and capsules a month. Founded in 1954, Linwilco's business expanded 33 percent last year, according to company president Tom Tierney.

Linwilco does not market its own line of products. Instead, the company makes vitamins for health food stores – 85 percent of its business – as well as medical centers and pharmacies, which sell them under various brand names.

The raw materials for vitamins and nutritional supplements come from all over the world – Hoffman-LaRoche of Switzerland, Takeda Chemical of Japan and the People's Republic of China are three of Linwilco's largest suppliers. The materials arrive at the plant in powdered form, generally shipped in 25- to 50-kilogram containers.

Vitamins are formulated from a variety of materials, including plants, fruits, vegetables, animals, minerals and chemicals, said Dr. Michael Nassar, Linwilco's chief of research and development. Natural vitamins A and D, for example, are largely composed of fish liver oil; vitamin E is derived from soybeans; most forms of vitamin B come from yeast.

The most commonly-used vitamins – A, B, C and D – are combinations of various substances. The typical vitamin C tablet swallowed by Americans is made from a compound derived from corn, tapioca root and palm starch, Tierney said. Citrus fruits, he noted, don't contain sufficient doses of the vitamin for use as a supplement.

Frequently-consumed minerals such as zinc or iron are manufactured by chemical companies, which synthesize them into a powdery substance for use as dietary supplements. The molecular structure of the minerals is generally altered by combining it with amino acids that make it easier for the body to ingest.

Linwilco also carries such exotic botanicals as bocchu leaves, asparagus powder, blue-green manna, almond meal and hundreds of others, all of which possess supposedly beneficial qualities.

Vitamins come in an assortment of colors, depending on their primary components. Vitamin B-12, for instance, has a pink shade because it contains the element cobalamin found in such vegetables as cabbage, while vitamin B-2 (riboflavin) is yellowish green because it's initially derived from alfalfa.

After testing for purity and potency in Nassar's lab, the ingredients are sent to the plant's warehouse. There, workers dressed in white surgical outfits – including plastic gloves and caps – divide the products into smaller quantities which are placed in plastic bags and later mixed with other substances to create the vitamin.

To hold the mixture together – Linwilco's most complex multivitamin contains 63 separate elements – liquid corn protein is used as a binder. Some vitamins are mixed with a "base" usually consisting of alfalfa, parsley, watercress or garlic – allegedly sources of trace minerals.

The vitamins are blended together in giant steel vats that look like cement mixers. Next, the granulated mixture is ground up into specific grain size and poured into dies, then compressed into tablet form by presses using as much as 10 tons of pressure. Tablets are created at the rate of 1,100 every minute, Tierney said.

The vitamins are placed in huge vats containing 400 pounds of tablets. Linwilco coats its vitamins with a non-allergic corn protein that makes them shinier and easier to swallow, and increases their shelf life.

Finally, a small number of tablets are brought back to Nassar's lab, where they are placed in a churning solution of gastric juices that simulate the environment of the stomach. The vitamins are tested to determine how long they take to dissolve. The average tablet takes roughly one hour to disintegrate in the stomach; newer "sustained release" formulas take as long as three hours.

As with other pharmaceutical-related industries, vitamin manufacturers have been affected by the Tylenol poisoning scare, particularly in the areas of plant security and "tamper-proof" packaging. "Consumer pressure has intimidated all of us," Tierney said.

Seattle: abundant rainfall keeps 'emerald city' lush

Copley News Service

Should you get lost in Seattle, the old-timers will tell you, "Just walk to the nearest body of water and taste it. If it's fresh, it's from mountain-fed lakes and you're east. If it's salty, you're west." So, getting your bearings among Seattle's seven hills is novel, at least.

The Emerald City's reputation is tarnished only by its weather, though people here are quick to claim only 35 inches of rain, slightly more than San Francisco. And it seems to come in drizzles.

When it is clear, people say, "The mountain is out." That means the Cascades are visible and Mount Rainier becomes part of the skyline.

Seattle has the largest ferry system in the United States — 22 of them crisscross the Sound carrying 1.5 million passengers a year.

People here love the water — one out of every six owns a boat. There's even a waterfront hotel — The Edgewater — that equips the rooms with fishing poles so you can angle out the window.

You may not hook a big salmon there but you'll find them everywhere else. They will even come to you by way of a fish ladder.

At the Hiram Chittenden Locks — also called the Ballard Locks — salmon climb 21 steps to fresh water and spawning grounds from June through late September. There is viewing through underwater windows of the fish ladders and a taped narration of their long trek followed by the finale of leaping salmon that have conquered the ladder or drifted through the locks with boats. There's good viewing all day long and no charge.

Livelier sight-seeing is found in Pioneer Square — Seattle's birthplace. What missed the wrecking ball is pure 20th century Americana in the form of old brick buildings that house boutiques and honky-tonk bars. But nightlife is as wild as ever. Locals crowd the colorful taverns to hear entertainers who perform and pass the hat. Skid Row originated here. At least the name did. Logs were skidded down a road to the waterfront and the road became know as "skid row." Only one of 12 mills is still open.

Underneath the square is what's left of old Seattle. Not much. The new city was rebuilt 18 feet above the old one. Underground tours of musty corridors are offered for $2.75 but the half-hour history lesson given before and above ground is better than the tour itself. There's not much to see — unless you like dirt.

If there's time for only one sight, it should be the Pike Place Market, built on stilts on the edge of a bluff overlooking Elliot Bay. The two-block complex of rambling stalls, restaurants, produce and fish markets is where Seattle shops. Salmon and vegetables are fresh and 10 percent lower in cost than in markets. What began in 1907 as a farmers market with 10 stores, peaked during the Depression to 600 stalls. Today, it draws 130,000 visitors a week, more than any other activity in Seattle.

And you can take some of it with you. Fish markets will filet and pack any of five species of fresh salmon for airline carry-ons. You can return with fresh silver salmon to feed six for less than $20. And don't forget Washington's answer to Maui onions — only these are from Walla Walla. Pike Street Market is open 9 to 6, except on Sunday.

There are many sight-seeing trips around Seattle. The Seattle Center and Space Needle from the 1962 World's Fair are easily reached via monorail from downtown. It runs one mile and costs only 35 cents.

To see how Seattle works from aloft, a seaplane excursion lifts off Lake Union daily (10 minutes from downtown) — skims the city's hills, dips along pontoon bridges over Lake Washington and you can get your bearings by sighting the Space Needle. A 30-minute flight tour costs $25.

For rail buffs a trolley runs along the waterfront from Pike Street Market to Pioneer Square every 20 minutes and costs just 60 cents.

Taxis, on the other hand, are high. The cabs were deregulated and fares from downtown to the airport, for instance, (25 miles) vary from $16 to $29. The best rates around town are found by using Yellow, Farwest and Gray Top cabs.

It's hard to beat the city buses. They are free. Seattle's hotel rates are expensive but drop 30 to 40 percent on weekends. Top hotels include the Westin Plaza, 875 rooms in twin towers. Quiet rooms, good service and excellent restaurants. An ideal downtown location. Rates are $90 to $115.

The elegant Four Seasons Olympic, recently restored, is in a good location and offers superb dining. Rates are $85 to $135.

The charming little Sorrento Hotel with its European feeling and decor has 76 rooms, half of them suites. Rates are $69 to $135 and there's a good restaurant.

For indoor or outdoor recreation, Seattle has it all.

The Denver Post

BROOKYLN, N.Y. — Bridges have always held a fascination for travelers and some — like London's Tower Bridge and San Francisco's Golden Gate — have even become tourist attractions in their own right.

But no bridge is closer to the hearts of Americans than the Brooklyn Bridge. The bridge, which has been "sold" innumerable times to gullible hicks, was the world's longest suspension bridge when it was built a century ago; they called it the "eighth wonder of the world" in princely overstatement.

On the day it opened — May 24, 1883 — President Chester A. Arthur led state and national dignitaries and military bands to the dedication ceremonies and more than 14 tons of fireworks boomed over the night skyline of Manhattan and Brooklyn, joined by John Roebling's magnificent design.

And now, 100 years later, the mile-long Brooklyn Bridge, which took 14 years and 20 lives to build, is being celebrated once again as one of the world's greatest eenginneering triumphs. Despite the cynical observation of vaudevillian Eddie Foy — "All that trouble just to get to Brooklyn?" — the bridge and the borough which it serves are important parts of Americana.

The centennial celebration will begin May 24 with a huge parade (President Reagan is expected to lead it) and, like its opening day a century ago, a massive fireworks display.

That night a sound and light show, called "The Eighth Wonder," will be unveiled. The 20-minute presentation of lighting, dramatic narration, music and special effects will tell the compelling story of the planning and construction of the bridge. It will play nightly through Oct. 10 and will cost $2.

The Brooklyn Anchorage Show, which is located in the massive anchorage for the bridge on the Brooklyn side, will run daily from noon to 7 p.m., showing the art and technology of the bridge and its building. In addition, the Brooklyn Museum will present "The Great East River Bridge," a celebration of the span in photos, paintings, documents and costumes. The exhibit will run through June 19.

Even artist Andy Warhol is getting into the act by designing the official Bridge Centennial poster ($1,500 for an original lithograph signed by the artist; $150 for a limited edition of the poster; $25 for the mass-produced version).

And like those poor rubes of the past you can even buy the bridge, or at least a part of it, for $10. Pieces of the original cable and the old wooden pedestrian walkway have been set in commemorative medallions and are being sold as part of the celebration.

Brooklyn, as natives are quick to point out, would be the fourth largest city in the United States if it were not already incorporated into the largest, New York, as one of its five boroughs.

Behind the scenes in New York-getting to know the real city

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Tagging along after Howard Goldberg as he leads a rhapsodical exploration of midtown Manhattan's once-notorious Hell's Kitchen area, where he lives, you are apt to end up talking to his neighborhood grocer. Which, in fact, is what he intends, since he considers his fellow New Yorkers — the people themselves — the city's untapped tourist attraction.

Most visitors to the nation's leading city wind up meeting only cabbies and hotel clerks, perhaps out of a misconception that New Yorkers are unfriendly. In truth, says the native-born Goldberg, they can be very helpful and love to talk about their hometown. For the past 20 years, he's been leading walking tours up and down his island introducing visitors to the everyday folks who live there.

His firm, Adventure on a Shoestring, is one of a number of sightseeing services that offer specialty tours of New York City for behind-the-scene glimpses of what makes it the nation's capital of theater, art, fashion, design, food and finance. Talk to a ballet star, watch a Seventh Avenue fur designer create a coat before your eyes, discover the real Brooklyn and Flatbush, sample the Lower East Side's delis on a day-long noshing jaunt from pickles to pastries. There's even a once-in-a-while tour down the city's "mean streets."

As the lyrics go from "On the Town," Broadway's ode to itself, "The Bronx is up and the Battery's down," and a whole lot is happening everywhere in between.

Frequently the specialty firms are one- or two-person operations in which a professional in the design, theater or art world supplements income by leading very personal tours to the lofts, studios or stage productions of friends and acquaintances. As such, they provide an opportunity for an insider's view not ordinarily available to most tourists. As one painter-tour leader says, "If I meet an artist friend on the street, I introduce her to my group."

AFTER YOU'VE seen New York's top 10 attractions, "then what?" asks Shoestring's Goldberg, who answers by scooping up groups and heading for such diverse neighborhoods as the Lower East Side, Chinatown, Greenwich Village, artsy SoHo, the Broadway theater district, Wall Street and Roosevelt Island. They are mostly two-hour walks that end at a local restaurant, where his charges soak up the ambiance while he answers questions.

On a recent ramble through the midtown area once known as Hell's Kitchen (roughly between 30th and 59th streets and 8th Avenue west to the Hudson River), Goldberg, 53 and at no loss for words, arranged for chats with a clergyman, a worker in a settlement house and one of the countless residents of the area who make their livelihood in the theater. The storekeeper was a spontaneous sidelight.

"It's much more interesting to talk to people who have lived in the place," he says. By the end of the tour, visitors "have an idea of what it was like — past, present and future." One stop was at St. Malachy's Church on West 49th Street, an actors' chapel, where one-time stars Don Ameche and Pat O'Brien were members of the parish.

Though once a rough gangland neighborhood of distilleries, factories and slaughterhouses — and home of the famous Stillman's Gym, where as a kid Goldberg watched top-name boxers working out — it is rapidly undergoing major redevelopment with hotel, office and theater construction. At the same time, it is a community. "People know each other," he says. "That's why I chose to live there."

Like Goldberg, many of the speciality sightseeing firms aim for groups of at least 10 to 12 people (though occasionally an individual tourist by asking can hitchhike along). The groups arrive in the city as conventioneers, or part of a package tour set up by a travel agent, or students on a class outing.

Nogales a bargain border town

Hearst Feature Service

When you've run out of places to see and things to do in Tucson, consider the twin cities 60 miles to the south — Nogales, Ariz., and Nogales, Sonora, Mexico. Few tourists make more than a service station stop on the Arizona side because they're after shopping bargains, good restaurants, off-track betting and bullfights (March through October) south of the border.

If you haven't been cautioned about sleezy border towns, Nogales will give you instant culture shock. On the other hand, if you remember Tijuana 25 or 30 years ago, you'll know exactly what to expect and will look on the visit as a lark. Nogales isn't a Guadalajara, La Paz or Manzanillo — not even an Ensenada without a beach. The setting in a mountain cleft is a little more attractive than Tijuana's, but the houses of fading paint, the tacky merchandise and the persistent peddlers haven't changed an iota.

Yet Nogales can be an entertaining outing, and the four-lane highway is excellent. It's typical high desert country, with sharp, rocky outcroppings erupting from the cactus-covered terrain. The moody coloring can be beautiful, whether it's sunny or showery.

If you enjoy bargaining, the Nogales merchants, many of them in open-air stalls, will welcome you. Little of what I saw was irresistible, but the sales pitches and the resulting conversations were worth the trip. Liquor prices were fairly good, and some of the leather jackets and Mexican crafts seemed worth investigating.

One member of our group found hand-embroidered cotton sun dresses for about $20, and some of the serapes were worth a second look, but when I stopped to consider traditional glass and brass trinket boxes which I've bought in Mexico several times before, I was disappointed to discover they're now embellished with needless machine etching or fake stained-glass flowers. I didn't buy.

At the off-track betting office, we asked for restaurant recommendations, and with a cherry-cheeked nino of about 10 as our guide, we headed for La Caverna, first on the list. Everyone else had heard about La Caverna, too, and the line was intimidating, so we retreated to La Roca, also recommended, in a handsome old stone building built into a rocky cliff. Just one problem, the door said "cerrado" — closed.

Ignoring our appetites momentarily, we were attracted by the inviting windows of a shop featuring hand-woven, hand-carved furniture just off the courtyard of the same old stone building. We headed up the stairs for a closer look, and there, on the second level, two more doors, huge and beautifully-carved, were open. Behind them, like a hidden hacienda, was La Roca, a grand restaurant with strolling musicians, waiters in black tie and a menu written in Spanish on an old-fashioned blackboard. It was busy, but didn't have a line.

Margaritas all around, we settled down to a large, graciously-served meal of Mexican delicacies, the best I can remember. But be forewarned, even with the devalued peso, the price was high.

Specialized tours for New York view

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The best bet for a specialized tour of New York is to form a group of a dozen or more and make reservations at least several weeks in advance. Many firms will customize tours to suit the groups. Several Washington bus firms charter buses, and many New York hotels offer group discounts. Individuals can join some group tours if space is available, or if they have the money they can hire a guide for a private tour.

Below is a selection of specialty sightseeing firms in New York. A more complete list can be obtained from the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau, 2 Columbus Circle, New York, N.Y. 10019 (212) 397-8222.

— Adventure on a Shoestring, 300 W. 53rd St., New York, N.Y. 10019 (212) 265-2663. Neighborhood walking tours for groups of 15 or more, $6 per person. Sometimes open to individuals. Almost daily visits to offbeat attractions.

— Art Tours of Manhattan, 63 E. 82nd St., New York, N.Y. 10028 (212) 772-3888. From $10 per person for a half day to $35 for a full day (with lunch), depending on group size. Custom tours for individuals and families at $300 a day.

— Backstage on Broadway, 228 W. 47th St., New York, N.Y. 10036, (212) 575-8065. Monday through Saturday, meeting at 10:30 a.m. at the selected theater. $5 adults, $4 students and senior citizens for 60- to 75-minute visit.

Raggedy t-shirts are Japanese fashion rage

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — In most American households ripped T-shirts end up as paint rags or dust cloths, but some women are spending $50 for artfully torn T's that are the hot new fashion from Japan.

These designers are in the limelight now partially because their generally loose, voluminous styles contrast sharply with the sleek, svelte designs shown by most of their European and American counterparts.

In Paris last month, 12 of the 68 designers presenting their lines were Japanese. Three years ago there were none.

Fashion writers have hailed as "inventive" the avant-garde styles of Tokyo-based designers Rei Kawakubo, Issey Miyake, Yohji Yamamoto, and Mitsuhiro Matsuda. Fans call them "a breath of fresh air," although critics label them "bag lady" dressing.

Their creations eschew the "Oriental" style of heavy quilting, bright colors, and appliqued designs adapted by some American designers and concentrate instead on natural fabrics and textures and neutral shades of black, white and gray. Their lines start at an average of $50 for the torn T-tops to $600 for the more elaborate layered and wrapped dresses.

The designers are not new — some have been around for 15 years — but the attention is. Their names, already well-known in the industry, are helping make Tokyo a rising influence in the fashion world.

That influence is expected to become more evident as lesser American and French designers begin to copy the Japanese designs, characterized by uneven hemlines, frayed edges, and shirts with torn armholes and necklines.

If designer Mary McFadden is any indicator of how the fashion bigwigs feel, they aren't all that concerned.

"The way the fabric is cut makes a woman look like a tent and the American woman is just too concerned with her body today to dress that way," Miss McFadden says.

Dressy spring suits, fall will soften look

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — The square, padded shoulders and tightly fitted suit look that is expected to dominate executive female dressing this spring will give way to a softer "more ladylike" look this fall, if the fashion house of Joseph Picone has its way.

Picone's fall line, designed by Mario Forte, is a mixed collection ranging from a traditional vertical, stripped herringbone, double-breasted suit to a sporty double-row, button-down skirt teamed with a swirling gray and pink silk blouse and topped with a soft, hand-knit gray, peplum cardigan.

Judy Capra, sales representative for Picone, said the collection is designed for the executive woman working her way up the corporate ladder. It is considered moderately priced for designer clothes with blouses ranging from $100 to $160 and jackets selling for $190 to $350.

"She can afford to spend more for her clothes and she wants something a little more special, not the usual mass merchandise," Ms. Capra said of their buyers.

Picone's something special comes in the form of a lemon, amethyst and pumpkin-checked dirndl skirt. The large and colorful checked boxes are softened by a touch of mohair woven throughout the wool skirt. Matched with a deep amethyst, silk-tie blouse and a neat, single-breasted, hip-length, rounded jacket, the look, if women buy it, will brighten offices throughout the land.

A red and burgundy district check suit is another colorful addition to the working woman's wardrobe. Paired with a burgundy, abstract floral print, silk blouse, the small-checked suit will help push dull gray and navy business "uniforms" worn by many female executives to the back of the closet.

Although the line is aimed at female executives, Ms. Capra said it also suits "the wife of a member of the board." The soft shapes and bright and traditional earthtone colors found in the collection appeal to the down-to-earth woman.

Wild beast motifs bring clothes to life

From the litany of beats that have made their way into Mariuccia Mandelli's life, you'd think she's either a descendant of P.T. Barnum or the overseer of some bizarre menegerie. Actually, though, all the animals live and breathe not in the flesh but on the intricately worked sweaters and dresses that have become the signature of Krizia, the Milan-based ready-to-wear firm that Mandelli launched in 1954.

But while her whimsical wee-beasties have made this former grade-school teacher famous, they represent just a fraction of the 500 styles — from sweaters to sportswear to evening clothes — that Mandelli turns out each season for Krizia and its five licensees. And while she has been "hooked" on animals ever since the first lamb showed up in her collection 15 years ago, she hastens to point out that she prefers only those of the knit variety.

"I think you should know that I'm scared to death of all animals — even ants," said Mandelli, laughing at the little irony that's underscored by the outfit she's wearing: a pullover festooned with a brawling rhinoceros and bear; black pants made of eel skins and leopard-spotted sandals.

Although the animal motifs are unfailingly beautiful — a single sweather blends as many as 500 colors and takes more than 20 hours, by machine, to knit — what makes them particularly interesting is what they reveal about Mandelli's philosophy of design. Unlike Coco Chanel, for example, who sprinkled her collections with lions because they represent Leo, her astrological sign, the point behind Mandelli's often-whimsical use of a different animal each season is often-whimsical use of a different animal each season is to help poke the hot air out of fashion's balloon.

"I find the idea of the women who is extremely elegant boring," said Mandelli, speaking through an interpreter during an interview in her showroom here. "I think a little masquerading, a little sexiness is always fun, and it knocks out all the ideas of super-elegance. . . . I'm a very serious woman, of course, she adds, looking not-too-serious with her blue eyes and Buster Brown haircut. "But I don't feel so close to the middle class, who has to show an appearance of less fun and more seriousness."

Winter style preview no single trend seen

Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — No single overall trend or look evolved from the first winter 1983 European ready-to-wear previews just concluded. But certainly, new lines and lengths, silhouettes and details, cuts and color use were seen in collections presented in Milan and Paris — which, in this world of instant communication, will be duplicated in cities, towns and hamlets all over the globe. In many cases, you're likely to see the copy before you set eyes on the high-priced originals.

Just a sleeve style, for example, can start a ripple effect that reaches even to the workrooms of mass-market fashion production. The dolman sleeve — or batwing, or whatever you choose to call it — will most likely be next season's going thing. It was seen on hundreds of garments paraded before international retailers and press — and the industrial spies no doubt sitting right beside them.

Crystal sparkles at High Sky Girls Ranch benefit

For the first time in its history, Steuben glass will be auctioned at the annual Crystal Ball, a benefit for the High Sky Girls Ranch.

The Mal Fitch Orchestra of Dallas will provide music for dancing at the black-tie ball, May 4, 8 p.m. at the Midland Country Club. The evening will be followed by an auction and a breakfast buffet. Seating is limited to 400.

Waterford, Orreford, Lalique and Saint Louis are some of the crystal items to be auctioned.

Steuben pieces to be auctioned include an eagle, a spring hen and a rose vase.

Waterford pieces featured will be a period piece oval centerpiece bowl , a diamond cut decanter, a powder box, footed claret decanter with a faceted stopper, an 8-inch covered bowl, a 10-inch bowl and a 10-inch tripod bowl.

A champagne glass set, liquer decanter with glasses and silver tray by Saint Louis are also featured.

Proceeds of the items, to be auctionedby Joe Skeen, benefit the High Sky Girls Ranch, a shelter home for girls from eight to 18 years of age. The home is pursuing a lisence from the state to enlarge the facilities to house 56 girls. Presently housing 30 girls, the home employs one social worker and seven child care workers, according to Dorothy Stovell, one of the benefit committee chairmen.

Chairman of the ball is Al Boudreaux and co-chairman is Alice Johnson. Other chairmen include Jan Swallow, Juanita Goolsby and Devereux Brunner.

Risk factors rise with heat

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Athletes of all kinds — from weekend golfers to daily tennis enthusiasts — should approach exercise more cautiously in the summer than during the rest of the year, advises a leading sports nutritionist.

When the temperature and humidity go up, so do certain risk factors, says Ann Grandjean, nutrition consultant to the U.S. Olympic Committee Sports Medicine Division here and to M&M-MARS. A registered dietician, she is responsible for developing and implementing nutrition programs for the American athletes.

One problem associated with summer sports is dehydration, Ms. Grandjean points out. Heat illness is not uncommon among football players, runners, tennis players and anyone who exercises in high temperatures.

"Children are especially susceptible to dehydration," she adds. "Many coaches of high school and Little League teams restrict their players' water intake. This can be dangerous. Children should be encouraged to drink plenty of water in the summer, even if they say they are not thirsty."

Many adults who are preparing for summer tend to go on crash diets, but this is not an effective way to shed pounds, according to Ms. Grandjean, who has written and lectured extensively on nutrition and sports medicine.

"The best diet for the summer is three moderate, well-balanced meals a day with two or three high-carbohydrate snacks," she said. "This is better for the active person than three large meals with no snacking."

Ms. Grandjean offers these guidelines for exercising in the summer months:

— Avoid exercising during the hottest part of the day.

— Rest periods of 15-30 minutes should be taken for every hour of exercise.

— Wear loose, white, porous clothing to reflect heat and permit evaporation. Maintain as much skin exposure as possible.

— Remember, temperature and humidity, not the sun, are the important factors. Heat illness can occur in the shade or in a hot building.

— Be aware of early warning symptoms of heat illness: dizziness, grogginess, dry skin, rapid heart beat, muscle cramps, extreme fatigue, loss of coordination, throbbing pressure in the head, unsteadiness, and nausea.

If these symptoms occur, cool yourself or the victim with cool fluids, ice packs or a cold shower. And get medical help immediately. This can be a true medical emergency.

"It is imperative that the previously inactive person get a complete medical checkup before starting any kind of fitness program," Ms. Grandjean says.

"If you plan to jog this summer, for example, start by walking, progress to a slow jog and increase your distance as your stamina picks up. Try to exercise at least every other day, not just on weekends, for optimum health and fitness."

Vaccinations fight measles

ATLANTA (AP) — The national Centers for Disease Control has urged college students to get vaccinated against measles, saying thousands of unnecessary emergency vaccinations at Indiana University cost more than $225,000.

"It is more cost-effective to prevent measles outbreaks than to attempt to control them," the CDC said Thursday in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. "Colleges should consider establishing immunization requirements as a condition of registration."

Other colleges also had measles outbreaks this winter, including the University of Houston.

Overweight adults are unhealthy

CHICAGO (AP) — Moderately overweight adults face a significantly higher risk of dying than do people of normal weight, doctors say.

"This finding is contrary to the widely held view that moderate overweight carries no increased risk," doctors reported in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

Healthy tan can be dangerous

Copley News Service

It's getting to be fun-in-the-sun time.

And it's also time for the annual warning that too much exposure to sun rays can cause wrinkles, cancer and various types of ugly wartlike growths (keratosis) on the skin.

However, that warning from people like the Health Insurance Institute does little to keep tanners from lying in the sun to obtain that annual "healthy" glow associated with the world-famous Southern California tan.

— Schedule outdoor activities for early morning or late afternoon since the sun's rays are usually most severe between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

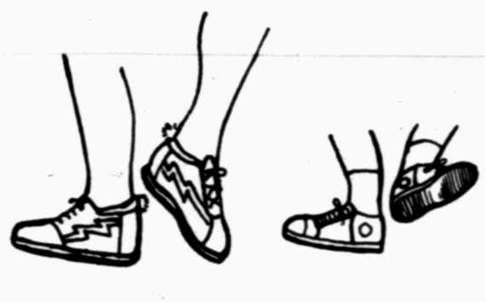

— Use sun-screening lotions generously. Containers are marked with numbers that indicate how long you can remain in the sun safely. One marked 8, for example, means you can stay in the sun 8 times longer than you normally could without getting a harmful sunburn.

— Wear a hat or scarf — or one of those silly hat umbrellas — if you plan a long day at the beach.

— Beware of sun reflectors used for tanning since they concentrate harmful doses of ultra-violet rays.

— Be careful and don't expose sensitive babies to the sun unnecessarily. An infant is far more susceptible to sunburn than an adult, so his or her sunbaths should be short. Babies rely upon the good judgment of parents and other adults since they have no say in the matter whatsoever.

FABRIC SECRETS

When making shoulder shapes or inserting featherboning, it is advisable to shape as you stitch. Hold the garment sections in a curved position so that the bottom layer has greater length than the top layer. The jagged teeth of the feed dog will then cause more length to be stitched onto the botton layer. When making a custom garment, use this same technique when setting the under collar to collar, a cuff facing to the upper cuff, facings to the garment or linings to the pockets.

Join the many amateur and professional seamstresses throughout the area who already rely on LEGGETTS FABRICS for their patterns, material and notions. We have everything, that is needed to complete your project. If by chance you are looking for something that we do not carry on a regular basis we will be happy to place a special order for you. We are located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No.9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. Visa and Master Card. "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain". Hours: Mon. Sat. 10-6.

HINT:

Plain seams are stitched with the right sides together so that they are on the wrong side of the finished garment.

Leftover zucchini, rice and cheese from the refrigerator team up to make a light and nutritious vegetarian meal. This quiche makes a meal that is not only delicious but economical.

Tasty, economical vegetarian entrees

Copley News Service

Wondering what to make for dinner? If you've got a few assorted vegetables in the fridge, and a hunk of cheese, you've got the makings for any number of dishes.

Cheese and fresh vegetables are a winning team, and they can be combined in so many tasty ways — satisfying to the palate and nutritious as well. Mix them together in a casserole, or whip up a cheese fondue and dip in the veggies for an elegant and easy meal.

A vegetarian diet makes good sense financially as well as contributing to your health. You get a lot more food for you dollar when you're not buying high-priced meats.

But even if all you have on hand are a sack of potatoes and a little cheddar cheese — and with the economy the way it is, that might well be the case for some — don't despair. You can still prepare a hearty vegetarian meal. Make Stuffed Baked Potatoes your main course, and serve a simple salad on the side.

What to do with a head of cabbage? Try Creamed Cabbage with Cheese. If you have four zucchinis, an onion, and only one egg you're on your way to Stuffed Zucchini Boats. These last two recipes call for bread crumbs, so don't throw out those pieces of toast which often linger, uneaten on the breakfast table. Toast, or bread which has dried out, can be salvaged and grated into crumbs for many such recipes.

For those whose larder is a little better stocked, Broccoli Mushroom Scallop is a delicious casserole dish, just right with a serving of pasta or rice. Or experiment on your own using what you have on hand. You'll find that the veggie-cheese combination goes a long way.

STUFFED
ZUCCHINI BOATS

4 zucchini squash, medium size
½ cup bread crumbs
1 tsp. salt
½ tsp. pepper
½ tsp. thyme or sage
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 egg, beaten
1 cup cheddar cheese, grated

Wash the squash and cut off both ends. Cook in small amount of boiling saltd water 15 to 20 minutes or until tender. Drain. When cool, cut in halves lengthwise and with a teaspoon scoop out the center. Combine chopped centers of squash, bread crumbs, salt, pepper, thyme, onion and egg. Mix thoroughly. Fill squash shells with mixture. Place stuffed squash on a shallow pan. Sprinkle tops with grated cheese. Broil 8 to 10 minutes, until cheese is melted and filling is heated thoroughly. Serves 4, allowing 2 halves per serving.

BROCCOLI MUSHROOM
SCALLOP

1½ pounds fresh broccoli
2 tbsps. butter
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
2 tsps. grated onion
2 tbsps. whole wheat flour
¼ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
1 cup milk
¾ to 1 cup grated sharp cheddar cheese
Paprika

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Cook broccoli until tender; cut into 2-inch pices. Melt butter over low heat in a saucepan. Saute mushrooms and onion in butter 5 minutes. Blend in flour and seasonings. Cook over low heat, stirring until mixture is smooth and bubbly. Remove from heat. Stir in milk. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly for 1 minute. Spread broccoli in 1-quart casserole. Pour mushroom sauce over broccoli. Sprinkle with cheese and paprika. Bake in a preheated oven at 350 degrees for 20 minutes or until tender and golden brown. Makes 4 servings.

Cafe drink

Copley News Service

Does wine go with coffee?

There are many recipes that call for brandy — a distillate of wine — to be mixed with coffee.

One of the best recipes is for Cafe Brulot (pronounced brew-low), and although it takes a bit more preparation than plain ol' coffee, it can offer a wonderful meal-finisher.

CAFE BRULOT

2 tbsps. orange zest
2 tbsps. lemon zest
1 cinnamon stick
6 whole cloves
3 tsps. sugar 6 ozs. cognac or brandy, warmed
1 quart strong, hot coffee

In a heated metal or heavy glass punch bowl or chafing dish, place the orane zest, lemon zest, cloves, sugar and warmed cognac or brandy. Using a long wooden match, ignite. Stir with long spoon until sugar dissolves. Continue stirring and add coffee slowly. Ladle into demitasse cups, leaving the zest, cloves and cinnamon behind. Serves 8.

Some may like to lighten this drink, and heavy whipping cream is the ultimate touch. For a real treat, serve with a snifter of fine cognac alongside.

Notice that the brandy aroma and taste will be in Cafe Brulot, but not the alcohol, which was burned off in the flaming process.

Delightful pineapple fresh from tropics

Copley News Service

May is busting out all over. Spring is here: the season of new growth, of light after the long winter. It's time for a bit of frivolity, so go ahead — splurge at the supermarket. You owe it to yourself. After all, the vegetarian's food budget does not include high-priced meat items, so what you save in that department should occasionally go toward a treat: some fresh asparagus, a whole pound of mushrooms, a pineapple!

When you buy a pineapple, don't save it for several days thinking that it will ripen further. Unlike many other fruits and vegetables, the pineapple does not continue to ripen after harvesting. Any change in color, or softening of the fruit simply reflects deterioration, so you should plan to use it as quickly as possible after purchase. Fresh pineapple will stay fresh a few days longer if the shell is cut away and the fruit refrigerated in plastic wrap. And it freezes well too, for later use.

Look for large, plump pineapples with healthy, deep-green leaves at the crown. A ripe pineapple will be fragrant, and sound with a dull thud when thumped. The eyes should appear flat and lustrous, also an indication of ripeness.

A good source of manganese, the pineapple also contains the enzyme bromelain. This enzyme breaks down protein in a manner similar to digestion.

'Plain Jane's' workout regimen no work, no sweat, no results

Copley News Service

It's the kind of exercise book you can sink your teeth into — along with a hot fudge sundae: a regimen designed for the woman who wants everything, including the pretense of a fitness program.

"My version of diet mania features no effort, no sweat and no results," said Linda Sunshine, author of "Plain Jane Works Out" (Bantam Books, $3.95). The book was out less than two weeks and when it the New York Times best-seller list. The first printing of 500,000 is going like hot fudge sundaes, and bookstores are asking for more.

The book is an exercise in comic reflection. It's Jane Fonda's world of fitness as seen through the eyes of Linda Sunshine. If Fonda can offer tips on eating and exercise, Sunshine figured she could present hers, too, including the refrigerator lunge.

Fonda offers philosophy: "Exercise regularly." So does Sunshine: "Never set a regular time to exercise; if you must, make sure you can easily avoid it."

"I've tried the other health and fitness books," she said. "I bought the Jane Fonda exercise book, and even the videotape, record, and red-and-black-striped leotards. And I gained 10 pounds. I thought that anyone who worked that hard deserved extra food to keep going."

A New York resident (her idea of fresh air is rolling down the window in a cab), Sunshine said she noticed several years ago that the West Coast fitness epidemic had traveled as far east as Manhattan. What's more, an alarming number of Sunshine's friends had been bitten by the exercise bug.

"Most of my friends were into daily exercise routines. Suddenly I was the only one without a sport," Sunshine said. "I tried ballet ('I quit — the pink tights made my thighs look like two California redwood trees'); aerobics ('I worked through the warm-up, took my pulse and headed for the door'), and even golf ('people start playing at the crack of dawn!').

"I quit it all and came up with my own individual program."

Sunshine, who said her favorite outdoor sport is going to the movies, is just over 5 feet 7 and places her weight at "a hundred and too much."

She insists she has read all the diet books by models ... "but I decided that if I started tomorrow and exercised twice a day for the rest of my life, I would never catch up. It's too late for me. Besides, what's wrong with being 15 pounds over the model's weight charts?"

Sunshine admits the idea for the book came to her as she finished off a pepperoni and mushroom pizza with extra cheese. "And, of course, like every other diet-conscious American, I washed it all down with a diet cola."

She laughed heartily, wiped the tomato sauce from her chin and hit the typewriter, she said. A week later, "Plain Jane" was finished.

There are certain necessary requirements for anyone wishing to take her health and fitness plan to heart:

"First, you must begin with warm-ups which are done to the musical accompaniment of 'the Watergate tapes.' Next, find a comfortable place to exercise, like the bed."

Your complete devotion to the task of exercise isn't required under Sunshine's plan. "It's OK to doze off," she said.

Then there's the proper dress. "Plain Jane's one iron-clad dress code is you must wear leg warmers," Sunshine said. "It's permissible to exercise naked, but only from the knees up."

And she's a stickler for the Plain Jane diet, too: "The diet must include one or more of the four basic food groups — white bread, white sugar, soda pop and candy."

Sunshine has spent the last 10 years as a book editor, working for several major publishers, including Simon and Schuster. "My greatest challenge was editing the 'Nothing Book' series," said the 34-year-old woman.

"You know, it can be quite challenging to work with blank page after blank page. The biggest decisions were in selecting the proper binding and page colors. And then there was the promotion — you can't say a whole lot about nothing."

Then she turned to filling blank pages in her typewriter with love and lust. "My first romance novel was 'Constant Stranger,' and, of course, the heroine was a slim blonde, what else? It sold well, but don't they all?"

Now comes her success with "Plain Jane." "I didn't expect this — neither did my publisher. I guess there's a real need out there for women to laugh at the way they are. Just about every morning, noon and night talk show has contacted my publisher about setting up interviews. I've even hired a comedy writer so I can meet this challenge."

Exotic illness hard to catch

By ERMA BOMBECK

Just once, I'd like to get a virus that everyone in town doesn't have.

Nothing serious, mind you. Just a little bug that makes people stop eating the chip dip and offer a little sympathy. When I tell people I'm sick, it's for one reason only. I crave attention. I want everyone (including my doctor) to sit at my right hand and occasionally make notes as I trace the route of my malady from my chest to my throat to my head. I want just one person to say, "That sounds serious. Maybe you should go to bed."

It'll never happen. In 30 years, I have always been the last adult female in North America to get the bug that "everybody's got and there's no cure for it and so what! You might just as well stay on your feet and work it off." Why doesn't this make me feel better?

A couple of weeks ago I felt like my chest had been wound too tight. Pain tap-danced across my forehead. My eyes felt like round razor blades. I saved up my coughs for a time when I felt adventurous. Fever racked my body, my lips were dry and parched and food held no interest for me.

"I don't feel well," I said to my husband.

"Nonsense," he said. "You're just bored."

"Then you CAN die from it," I said.

"Look," he said, "everyone in the office has what you have. There's a lot of it going around and the diagnosis is they probably just need a job change."

"You could be right. I don't want to be married anymore."

"Sometimes," he continued, "it's just an attitude where you tell yourself you're sick, when in reality you are generally discontented with yourself. I've seen a million cases of this in the office."

"Will you stop coughing like that?" he cautioned. "You're scaring the kids half to death."

The word "virus" has become synonymous with We-don't-know-what-it-is-or-how-to-cure-it-but-you're-certainly-trendy. I don't know how we all got to be so "ordinary." Maybe it happened a long time ago.

Whatya wanta bet when Eve complained of not feeling well, Adam said, "There's a lot of it going around. You're the 15th person I've talked to this week with the same symptoms. No sense dwelling on it. It'll just make it worse. Here, have a piece of fruit. Remember, an apple a day keeps the doctor away."

DEAR ABBY

Family up in arms

DEAR ABBY: What can parents do or say to get some response from their sons or daughters in the military service far from home? We love them, and when we don't hear from them, we worry and our hearts ache.

We know "Dear Abby" appears in the Stars and Stripes, the newspaper read by almost everyone in the armed forces, so please write a paragraph asking them to please drop a line to their families so we will know they are alive and well. Thanks a million. – EMPTY MAILBOX IN YORBA LINDA

DEAR EMPTY: Will this do?

To Whom it May Concern, Wherever You Are:

The way to get a letter is to write one. It doesn't have to be a literary masterpiece. A postcard will do.

If you have nothing to say, write and say you have nothing to say, but you want Mom, Dad, Sis, Buba, Grandma, Gramps and the dog and cat to know that you are still among the living. Send your love and sign your name. It will take you approximately five minutes.

Do this at least once a week and you will light up the lives of those who love you like you wouldn't believe possible. Deal? Deal!

DEAR ABBY: I have a terrific marriage. It's the second time around for both of us, and we couldn't be happier.

There is only one problem. Dick still has "Amy Beth" tattooed on his arm. She is his ex-wife. It bothers me, and I have asked him to have it removed several times. He says he will, then it's forgotten until I mention it again.

Why do you think Dick hasn't removed it? He says he never gives Amy Beth a thought. Any suggestions? – NO. 2

DEAR NO. 2: There could be several reasons: (1) He may not know where to go to have the tattoo removed. (A dermatologist could help him.) (2) He may think it's painful. (In some cases it is.) (3) He may think it's expensive. (See answer to No. 2)

Raintree home helps rebuild lives

Copley News Service

The giant raintree is a familiar symbol in great Southern fiction. Now, the raintree is also the stage for the drama of real life.

At Raintree House in New Orleans, troubled teen-age girls find counseling for and respite from the family and personal problems that have disrupted their lives. The girls live, eat, study and sleep in a century-old house owned by Raintree Services Inc., a non-profit, private social services organization.

Raintree Services has undertaken the task of helping the girls rebuild their lives. And the girls' home is undergoing a similar renovation, courtesy of Georgia-Pacific Corp. and several other companies.

The ravages of time and weather have taken their toll on Raintree House, leaving a dilapidated ghost of the former structure. As the staff at the home helps rebuild young lives, the very house around them is being restored to its former beauty.

"I don't know much about renovation or painting or anything like that," says one teen resident, "but I've become fascinated with what's taking shape. We're watching rooms that were cold in nature — nice, but not cozy — become warm and inviting. I can't wait until it's all done."

Gwen Martin, executive director of Raintree House, explains the concept of the group home. The girls at Raintree range in age from 12 to 18, but all have chosen to live there for various reasons.

"We have some girls who come here who have no family at all," says Martin. "We have many who have plenty of family, nice families. But for some reason, there's friction and the girls can't live at home. Then again we have kids who are neglected, mistreated or badly abused by their families. We've seen them come here with hair yanked out, broken bones, disfigurement serious enough to require plastic surgery. Much of it is not pretty at all. But they are human beings who need help. And we're going to help them as best we can."

The girls at Raintree attend regular school in the community. What they learn at Raintree is values, according to Martin.

"We try to make the girls understand that there are consequences for their behavior. They actually sign a contract when they come here. And we never ask them to do anything they don't agree to do when they first arrive. If the rules are broken, there may be no phone privileges, or something like that. But that's a lesson of life. That's the way life works. It carries over well."

It certainly does. Girls from Raintree have gone on to become restaurant managers, cashiers, salespeople, florists and cosmetologists. Many have married and are raising families of their own, thanks to the rebuilding of their young lives while at the group home.

Canadian delicacy: olive spread

By The Associated Press

Olive cheese spread on thin slices of homemade bread, makes delectable sandwiches for teatime.

Or spread on whole wheat bread and layered with lettuce and crisp slices of bacon for sandwiches can be enjoyed with hot tomato soup for lunch.

It can also be used as a stuffing for the tender inner ribs of celery. The stuffed celery can be cut in short lengths and served as an hors d'oeuvre.

Or, heat a few packaged tacos to crisp them, fill them with some of the Spread and top them with shredded lettuce and diced tomato.

PROCESSOR OLIVE CHEESE SPREAD

½ cup pimiento-stuffed green olives (3 ounces)
½ cup walnuts (2 ounces)
8 ounces cheddar cheese (sharp or extra-sharp)
½ cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard

In a food processor, with the metal blade, coarsely chop the olives and walnuts, pulsing 6 or 7 times — the walnuts should be the size of small peas. Remove only the metal blade.

Insert the medium shredding disc and shred the cheese; turn cheese, olives and walnuts into a 1-quart storage bowl that has a tight fitting cover. Add mayonnaise and mustard; with a spoon, mix thoroughly. Store, covered, in the refrigerator. Makes about 2 and 1/3rd cups.

Legion fever still lurking in plumbing

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Almost seven years ago, 4,500 American Legionnaires gathered in Philadelphia for their annual convention and made medical history.

The disease they contracted there is still called Legion fever. But it is now found far beyond Pennsylvania in perhaps hundreds of the nation's hospitals and large buildings, dispersed via the fine spray from hot water taps, shower heads and air-conditioning systems.

More than 30 official outbreaks have been recorded, claiming victims from Vermont to California. Two of these outbreaks have claimed more lives than were lost in Philadelphia.

Legionnaires' disease is more than a isolated occurrence of America's Bicentennial year. Its age-old bacterium, introduced into modern plumbing, still strikes at least 25,000 victims each year.

The tragic story of the Legionnaires' peculiar new kind of pneumonia began Wednesday, July 21, 1976, when the Pennsylvania American Legion gathered in downtown Philadelphia. Before the four-day convention ended, dozens of Legionnaires were beginning to feel sick. By the following Monday some had high fevers, chills, chest and joint pains, dry, racking coughs and labored breathing. Within a few days, one said, he thought the "Grim Reaper was cutting the grass at my feet."

By Friday, more than 70 victims lay in scattered Pennsylvania hospitals with serious pneumonia, and the first few victims had died. Pathologists found their lungs filled with a bloody froth that choked off air.

Doctors began phoning health officials to report these suddenly fatal pneumonias. The Centers for Disease Control, the nation's "epidemic fire-fighting outfit," received its first call Monday morning. By evening, the death toll was 15. More deaths occured until the number reached 26, for a 14 percent fatality rate among 182 victims.

Before long, 31 CDC epidemiologists were working with 400 other researchers in Pennsylvania and Atlanta, scouring Philadelphia streets, hotels, restaurants, kitchens, refuse heaps and trees. But it wasn't until two days after Christmas that the germ was found.

A CDC bacteriologist, Dr. Joseph McDade, decided to take another look at some Legionnaires' lung tissue. Months before, he had shrugged off a few rod-like shapes on some slides as a contaminant. Now, 15 minutes after he started looking, he saw a fat colony of them.

An entirely new genus and species of bacteria had been discovered. They were named Legionella pneumophila or "lung-loving" Legion bugs.

Legion fever is a disease of technology, caused by an entirely new class of deadly bacteria that thrive in the sophisticated plumbing of the late 20th century. A life form older than man himself, Legionella usually lives quietly in soil, lakes and ponds. It is almost dormant unless its habitat is disturbed, either by construction or the inadvertent heating of its home.

Then it can be wafted into the air, where it may live in the warmth of a cooling tower or plumbing pipe and, in time, travel again through the air to be breathed into another warm environment: the human lung.

The Legion germ, scientists recently have learned, lives in the ordinary drinking and washing water of what could be hundreds of buildings, especially hospitals.

At times in some hospitals, Legionnaires' disease has been the commonest cause of "hospital pneumonia," that caused by organisms that live in hospitals and hospital personnel. It also causes 1 to 3 percent of all pneumonia and a far larger share of the one-third usually labeled "of unknown cause."

Many Legionella victims are smokers whose lungs have been weakened by years of exposure to cigarettes. Many are older than 50. Most persons infected in hospitals have immune systems impaired by other diseases or by treatments such as cancer chemotherapy. But the young and well sometimes are hit, too.

Upholstery can be tough, attractive

Copley News Service

There used to be two kinds of living rooms. There were the ones where everything was upholstered in beautiful, delicate fabrics, then covered in plastic until company arrived. Then there were the real "living" rooms, where the furniture wore like iron and looked like it, too. Today's living room is lived in day in, day out by every member of the family. So it's essential that consumers know how to chose upholstery fabrics that combine that "just for company" look with long-term durability and ease of care.

Thanks to advancements in man-made fiber technology, fabrics such as rayon, olefin, nylon, polyester, acrylic and acetate can have the look of fragile cottons, silks, wools and linens, but hold hidden advantages. These include superior colorfastness, excellent shape retention, resistance to abrasion, shrinking, moths and mildew and ease of care.

Since today's man-made fibers can be engineered to create virtually any texture, it's important to know what to look for when shopping for upholstery fabric. The experts at the Fiber Information Center (a service of the Man-Made Fiber Producers Association) offer these tips:

Check the fiber content label on the back of fabric swatches when selecting upholstery from the book of samples at a store. A velvet, for example, may be offered in olefin, cotton and silk, and all three may look identical. But the olefin can be sponged clean and is extremely durable, despite its soft texture. Cotton or silk would tend to be more delicate and require professional cleaning. Many upholstery fabrics are blends of man-made and natural fibers alone, and are often chosen for their interesting mix of textures.

Consider the weave of the fabric in terms of its intended end-use, as well as how it fits the decor.

JACQUARD weaves are extremely popular today, since these strong yet elegant fabrics have the pattern woven right into the fabric (instead of printed on the surface).

VELVETS are also good choices for looks and performance. Velvets of man-made fibers such as olefin, acrylic and rayon resist matting and are available in textures from short, suedelike pile to more formal "crushed velvet" or sculptured patterns.

HANDWOVEN LOOKS — tweeds, slubbed fabrics, multi-toned plaids and stripes — add softness to the geometry of modern interiors. These fabrics are notable for their thick-and-thin yarns or nubby areas. For longest wear, such fabrics should be closely woven to avoid pulling at stress points such as cushion seams. Strong fibers such as polyester and olefin are good choices in handwoven-type fabrics, for surface softness combined with strength.

PRINTS, such as florals, wallpaper stripes and geometric layouts, are popular because of the trend toward decorating with matched drapery and upholstery fabrics. These fabrics are actually the least sturdy for frequently used upholstered pieces, however. For this reason, it's more practical to choose an upholstery fabric of another type, and coordinate it with related prints for throw pillows, draperies and wall coverings.

The last word in upholstery fabric is price. When buying a piece of upholstered furniture, the consumer is usually given several books of fabric samples that are more or less suitable for the particular piece. These samples are grouped into price classifications, so that the same basic sofa ranges from $1,000 to $2,000 depending on the fabric selected. But choosing the most expensive fabric does not guarantee the consumer will get the most durability. Fiber content and weave are much better guidelines than price when it comes to practicality.

Birds and flowers across the walls of this bedroom enliven the background to create a pleasant atmosphere. Companion fabrics in a stripe pattern are used at the window and for the table skirt to help coordinate the fabrics used in the decor.

Johnston family American yogurt pioneers

Copley News Service

You've probably heard her on radio, softly persuading you to try a food that she says both tastes good and is healthy. And from looking at her, you'd easily be convinced that yogurt has magical qualities.

You might also be led to believe Conky Johnston is just another good-looking actress hired to be the fictional "Betty Crocker" of the yogurt industry. Not so.

There really is a Conky Johnston — she heads Johnston Foods, the California company that started pushing yogurt way back in 1962.

Johnston, who started working in her family's market in Texas at age 10, counts nearly four decades in the food retailing industry.

She was introduced to yogurt when she and her husband arrived in California to help run his uncle's dairy business.

The uncle, Edwin Johnston, also produced Johnston Pies. He'd encountered the dairy food in Europe and envisioned a yogurt revolution.

"Yogurt was a new idea," she explained. "A new concept in health and nutrition."

There was initial consumer resistance to the product, but Johnston launched a sampling campaign in California supermarkets.

"All I had to do was get them to try it and the product sold itself," she said. "We created a new image for yogurt and changed negative public opinion."

Johnston Foods has changed since the days when yogurt was something only health fanatics ate. The pie division has been sold to Ward Baking Co. The remainder was sold to Beatrice Foods in 1971 and today has sales of about $7 million.

Beatrice Foods, she said, likes to buy more than a company.

"They buy management. They wanted us to continue to run the company," Johnston said.

Decks give room and add beauty

Copley News Service

Need more living space, but lack the money for a room addition? You can add extra living space to your home easily, inexpensively and beautifully — by adding a deck.

A flat wooden deck is one of the easiest do-it-yourself projects and requires very little experience and just a few basic tools for construction.

For most decks, a crosscut saw and hammer will do the trick, although you may want to drill the nail holesnear the ends of yourboards to prevent splitting.

There are a number of do-it-yourself deck-building guides available, or you can make your own design to suit your lifestyle and your home.

Depending on the weather in your location, you can choose redwood lumber or pressure-treated wood for your deck. Either choice will provide a low-maintenance deck that you'll enjoy for generations.

Be sure to avoid any potential moisture problems by allowing for air circulation under your deck. Provide a little airspace between deck boards, also, and treat all cut ends with some type of preservative.

Hot-dipped, galvanized nails and non-ferrous metal fastenings will avoid rust streaks that could mar the beauty of your wood deck. But don't worry about protecting your wood from ground contact. One of the major advantages of pressure-treated wood is that it is highly resistant to decay and termites, just as redwood is.

The pressure treatment is applied to a variety of softwoods, like pine and hemlock. Preservatives are forced deep into the wood fibers, so the lumber can be used safely in direct contact with the ground. Other than that, there is no change in the characteristics or beauty of the wood.

You can stain or paint pressure-treated wood, but you don't have to. Depending on the preservative used, pressure-treated wood ranges from natural wood tones to various shades of brown and green.

Let your imagination be your guide in designing and building your deck. Add trees, shrubs, screens or other attractive view-blockers to accent your addition and provide privacy for dining or relaxing. In colder climates, you may want to add walls of some sort so you can enjoy the out-of-doors living space for a longer period of time.

A deck is a satisfying project and perfect for the beginning do-it-yourself home owner. A deck-building party is a delightful excuse for a gathering of family and friends. You can do all the work yourselves, but if you have problems you can check your local advertisements for a carpenter. Many can be hired for an hour or a day and can lend expertise where needed.

Ortho Books offers a splendid how-to for "Designing and Building Decks and Patios." With chapters on design basics, selecting lumber and materials, information on building permits, balancing load factors and a variety of special feat5res such as gates and benches, the illustrated book is perfect for the beginning or experienced builder.

Available at many hardware and retail stores, the book sells for under $5. It is also available through Ortho Books, Chevron Chemical Co., Consumer Products Division, 575 Market St., San Francisco, Calif. 94105.

London captivates tourists from a variety of angles

Copley News Service

If you like big cities, you'll love London, at one time the world's largest. But even if you're a small-town boy or girl at heart, London can and should be seen from a variety of angles.

First, it's a great walking city, as are most of the capitals of the world. Whether touring in castles and museums, shopping, or just mingling with the people, a comfortable pair of walking shoes will be your best friend.

Another excellent and inexpensive way of getting around and seeing many of the most famous sights is on the familiar red, double-deck buses. A route map and the friendly conductors will get you where you're going and back again.

The No. 11 bus from Victoria Station is perfect for the "must-see" sights. For 40 pence (about 60 cents) you ride past Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament and famous Big Ben, Downing Street, the mounted guards in Whitehall, Trafalgar Square, the National Gallery, the Strand, Fleet Street, St. Paul's Cathedral and Mansion House, residence of the lord mayor of London.

A bus route map shows where each is located. Of course, you can get off the bus for close-up looks and tours and back on again, wherever you like.

The route terminates at Liverpool Station, where you are within walking distance of the Tower of London, the historic ships at St. Katherine docks and Dickens Inn, a picturesque pub at the edge of the Thames River.

A marvelous way to see the back streets and unusual attractions of the city is to hire a London taxi. Tell the driver what you want to see, or leave it up to him and you can cover the city in a two-hour tour for 25 pounds (about $37) or a three-hour tour for 40 pounds (about $60). Sharing the cost with another couple makes it quite affordable and there is plenty of room for four in the taxi's spacious back seats.

Some highlights you might see in a taxi tour are the apartment building where Princess Diana lived before marrying Prince Charles; the homes of Oscar Wilde, Capt. Bligh ("Mutiny on the Bounty") and Charlie Chaplin and the Imperial War Museum where the weapons of World War II may be viewed.

Naturally, touring works up a thirst and an appetite, which, naturally, leads to one of greater London's 7,000 public houses, better know as pubs.

Pub fare is limited but always hearty and good. For $1.50 to $3 (United States) you can buy steak and kidney pie or similar meat and chicken dishes, plus coleslaw. A pint of bitters or lager usually is less than a dollar.

The pubs' signs, themselves, are objects of interest. The pub tradition is centuries old and originally flourished during time when most of the population could not read. Thus, pubs such as "The Swan" or "The Raven" have signs picturing the appropriate birds in addition to the words, solving any problems for non-readers.

Pubs range from the U.S. equivalent of the neighborhood tavern, where darts leagues meet to compete, to large and rather fancy establishments such as The Albert at 52 Victoria St. This Victorian pub is named for Prince Albert and is the only pub ever visited by Queen Victoria.

Hardy holiday goers seek adventures

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

I've always thought that people who book cruises to Bermuda or drive off to the same beach cottage for two weeks every year would not have been — in a century past — among those souls who boarded covered wagons and headed for a new life in the West. And who could blame them? It was a dangerous and arduous undertaking.

But human nature being what it is, there are large numbers of people today paying fairly hefty sums to put danger and hardship in their lives — and they call it a holiday.

Vacationers, it seems, are divided between those who relish certainty and revel in nothing more than uninterrupted hours of dozing under a seaside sun, and their hardy opposites who shun cozy comfort in pursuit of the unknown.

Those in this latter group are the adventure travelers, a fast-growing breed. In times past, I think, they would have signed up first for the wagon trains pushing along the Oregon Trail.

Idle afternoons at a Paris sidewalk cafe? Not for them, or anyway not by first choice. Their idea of fun is to load up a backpack with 40 pounds of food and equipment, heft it to their shoulders and tramp off into the highest mountain around — wind, cold and rain be damned.

I know, because I am one of them. Touring Paris has its delights, to be sure, but real joy comes in slogging up a rocky path where every slow step brings the thrill of a new vista, and the satisfaction of having made it against the elements, at least this far.

To many (if not most), relaxing is collapsing on one's back; to us, it's moving out to someplace new or something different, where uncertainty carries an element of danger to be conquered by brawn and brain, and one's capabilities are stretched and expanded.

By day, drip in sweat under a scorching sun on a dusty Sierra trail; by night, shiver around the tiny flame of a portable stove when the high mountain air drops to freezing. Ah, that's the life.

Around the world Americans are seeking adventure: by foot, bicycle, Jeep, canoe, rubber raft, sailboat, skis, horse, mule, camel, covered wagon (even today), sled, airplane, balloon or any other conveyance they can think of. Down the river, up the peak, into caves, across the desert, through the jungle, under the sea, in the sky, over the tundra, atop a glacier.

Think Olympics '84 get tickets, rooms

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles are more than a year away, July 28 to Aug. 12, 1984, but sports fans who want to attend the big events should start thinking now about tickets and accommodations.

Within a few weeks, the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee will announce the nationwide distribution (probably through a department-store chain) of mail-order forms for tickets. And already, international travel firms are booking large blocks of rooms in major hotels.

Because of the expected demand for tickets to such popular events as the colorful opening and closing ceremonies and the finals in gymnastics, cycling, swimming, diving and other sports, a random drawing will be held once order forms have been returned. Other tickets will be sold on a first-come, first-served basis.

During the games, 21 competitive and two demonstration sports (baseball and tennis) will be represented. With preliminary matches included, there will be about 352 different events, to which about 7 million tickets will be available for sale. The average ticket price will be $18, though 3 million tickets will sell for $10 or less.

Because Los Angeles is a major tourist destination, visitors should be able to find a place to stay during the Olympics, says Bill Arey of the Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau. But it may take some searching; so far, there are no plans for a central reservation service.

In addition to travel firms' snapping up accommodations for foreign visitors, the Olympic committee itself already has reserved 20,000 rooms in 51 of the city's major hotels for officials, the media and other members of the "Olympic Family."

He's stalking growth in the drilling game

Staff Photos by Ron Jaap

Bruce Burrow

FOCUS:
Bruce R. Burrow

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Bruce Burrow lowers his body into his seat and leans into his desk. His steel blue eyes focus intently on the subject at hand — how to operate a small company starting out in the oil business.

"I believe in walking softly and keeping my eyes open, like a panther," he says. "I don't want to turn heads.

"I believe if you can conceive of an idea, you can perceive it — how to get it done."

Burrow's idea is quite simple. He wants to generate drilling prospects by studying geology, and raise money by finding investment partners. The goal is to drill successful wells. He says all this can and must be done on a pay-as-you-go basis.

SINCE HE formed B & G Energy in May 1980, he has quietly participated in wells throughout the Permian Basin, but never for more than a 26 percent working interest. "Good Lord, you've got to spread the risk around," he says.

Last year, there were 18 wells. Since January of this year, B & G has been involved with 15, according to one of Burrow's lists. Another list records 10 or so wells that are in progress, and eight or nine potential wells Burrow is looking at. His wife says he loves making lists.

"It's just hard work," he says of the oil business. "I get down here at seven o'clock in the morning and I don't leave until 5:30. There is no glamour story here."

"We're just trying to grow as conservatively as we can and be as fine an oil company as we can, and through our work, be recognized."

IN THE BEGINNING, Burrow and his wife Gretchen were the company. But, stealthy stalking in the oil patch jungle has led to many bottles of crude oil — and they sit on a shelf in his office, like trophies from a hunt resting above a mantle piece.

Now, some expansion of B & G is possible. Last summer Burrow hired a geologist, and next month, a second geologist is joining the staff. Since B & G has grown to eight people, the company plans a move to larger quarters in the next week or two.

For Burrow, any move is carefully considered and then quietly executed, much like a panther stalking his prey. It is one reason why he says he resisted the temptation to expand rapidly during the oil boom of 1980-81.

He says he operates on cash flow only, and will not get involved in any drilling deal which won't pay for itself in two years' time.

"IF IT ISN'T first class, I'm not going to touch it. If you're going to build a first class company, you have to have first class deals," he says.

Burrow says since drilling leases are cheaper to obtain now than they were a year or two ago, opportunities to participate in wells will present themselves, especially if an operator has cash available and doesn't need to go to the bank first.

"I think a lot of people got in trouble last year," he says, "because they over-extended themselves."

He was not tempted to expand. He claims his background with Paine Webber Inc. made him analytical. As an investment broker in Dallas in the late 1970s, he learned how to pick apart a deal before acting on it.

"I WAS ALWAYS LOOKING at numbers," he explains. "I always calculated the return on investments."

The biggest influence on Burrow though, is still his friendship with two ex-Humble Oil hands in East Texas. "They sort of taught me the ropes — the assessment of risk and the knowledge of certain areas of geology and engineering."

In day-to-day operations, Burrow leaves geology up to Doug Wight, his geologist. He believes he should be quiet and listen to what Wight says. Burrow handles the business and financial part of the company.

His academic background is not in technical areas. He has a B.S. in political science and a B.A. in French literature. Yet, the oil industry has touched his life. His grandfather Worsham was active in the business in West Texas.

WHILE A sophomore at Chapman College in California, Burrow invested in a tiny working interest in his first well, which was drilled by a family friend. It was a dry hole.

"A geologist told me, 'Oh Lord, a dry hole shall make you humble,'" Burrow says with a laugh.

Still, Burrow was not sure what he wanted to do with his life. After graduation, he stayed on at Chapman to be an assistant soccer coach while he thought about the future. He decided on Dallas, and became a stock broker. For five years that was his life, yet at the same time, he continued to invest in drilling deals.

"What really set me free was the Minzenmayer field in Runnels County," he says. "One day while I was still a broker, I got involved with a working interest in a well with some investors and friends, and it came in. We discovered the field, in the northwest quarter of Runnels County. I owe that discovery to my friend in Dallas, the ex-Humble guy, who found it. This was when oil was $11 a barrel, in late 1977."

He left Paine Webber in 1980 and decided to come to Midland.

"I moved down here with the idea it was a better place to provide opportunity. I thought if I was going to be in the oil business, the really good deals would take place in Midland.

"If you're going to work the Permian Basin, you should be in Midland."

At first, B & G Energy concentrated on Taylor, Coke, Runnels and Concho counties, but since Doug Wight came on board, "He's got me scattered all over the Permian Basin," Burrow says.

THE PAIR MET while working near each other in Concho County last year. When Wight lost his job in a corporate cutback, he called Burrow.

"He asked me if I wouldn't need a geologist, and that was a big step for me," Burrow recalls. "I said, 'Maybe.' But he handles the geology and I handle the finance, and I guess we stay out of each other's hair that way.

"I told Doug that if we can't get the very best we can, let's not participate (in a well). It's all done on merit."

Being a young company, B & G started with a lot of wildcats, some rank and some a little tamer.

Activity today is evenly divided between wildcatting and drilling development wells. About half the wells are prospects B & G developed on its own; the other half Burrow learned about "on the street," where participation in oil deals is sold.

RAISING MONEY IS tougher today than in the past, Burrow says. "Money is harder to come by, but if you have a first class project, you can sell it. The promote is coming way down."

By that, he means the percentage interest a person will take in order to get in on a deal.

Promotion used to be a one-third interest for one-quarter profit and as Burrow says, these deals would sit on the shelf. "If the promoter agrees to accept less, the deal will sell faster," he says. "Now, a lot of deals have a one-eighth interest carried to the casing point of the well, or 10 percent working interest rather than 25 percent."

The costs of acquiring leases and drilling a well have come down considerably.

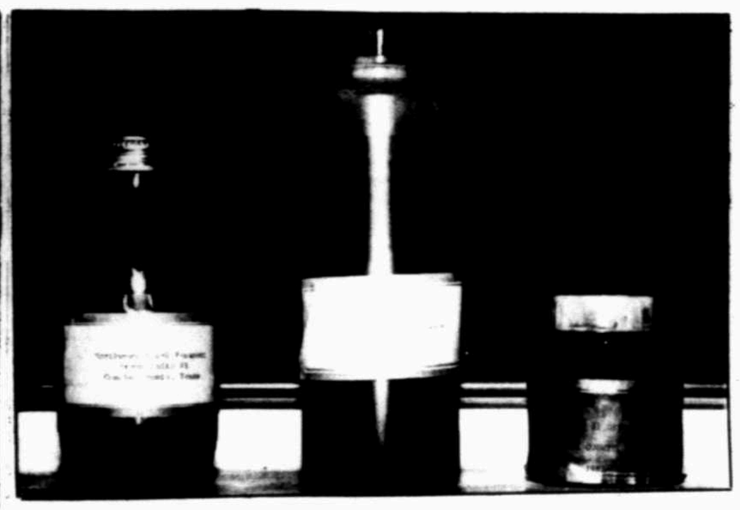

"WE DRILLED A DRY hole last year for about $14 a foot. I understand we have a bid now for $7.75 in the same area, for a hole of similar depth. Your prices of doing business are coming down."

Burrow tries to develop properties based on B & G's revenues; he hopes to avoid bank loans.

B & G has what Burrow calls "a pretty fair sized" acreage position in Glasscock, Borden, Concho and Reeves counties.

"The odds are the same in this industry no matter how big you are," he says. "The odds are one in 10, and there's nothing you can do to change them. We're just trying very hard to build a good acreage position, a quality lease position, get quality ideas."

America's dream of energy freedom not reached

Energy for the U.S.

A Reporter-Telegram series

This is the first article in a six-part series — special to the Reporter-Telegram.

It has been 10 years since the Arab oil embargo, and six years since President Carter declared the quest for U.S. energy self-sufficiency the "moral equivalent of war."

This series, continuing until Friday's edition, focuses on the overall picture and also on development of all kinds os energy resources.

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A decade after an Arab oil embargo shook the financial foundations of the Western world, America's goal to create a domestically owned energy industry, protected from the vagaries and whims of foreign suppliers, remains little more than a dream.

Three years ago, energy legislation was the top priority of President Carter's administration and the Congress. Today, only a few energy bills are simmering on a back burner and the Reagan administration is not anxious to turn up the heat.

With world oil supplies plentiful, the federal budget extremely tight and memories of gasoline lines long gone, neither Reagan nor Congress show interest in continuing Carter's "moral equivalent of war" campaign which was to give this nation energy independence and end U.S. oil imports before the year 2000.

The nation's synthetic fuels industry, started with great fanfare and billions of dollars three years ago, today stands demoralized, its future jeopardized by falling oil prices, soaring construction costs and the Reagan administration's early determination to leave energy development almost entirely to the free market.

The administration, which would rely mainly on encouraging private domestic development of synthetic and alternate fuels, appears to have decided that oil is no longer an issue of paramount strategic importance.

ITS EFFORTS IN the last couple of months to spend money on synfuels development also appear too late to convince the industry that the administration intends to involve the government in a costly, long-term exploration process or that it has abandoned it long-held policies. Those policies stress the view that:

Nuclear power is a "safe, economical and environmentally acceptable energy source," with the government responsible for the proper disposal of nuclear wastes and development of breeder reactor technology.

Synthetic fuels should be developed with more reliance on private investment and less on government subsidies, an attitude which has driven most of America's industry out of the synfuels development market.

Renewable fuels, such as solar and wind energy, will be aided by the elimination of subsidies for conventional fuels, such as coal, and the general increase in energy prices. Direct federal spending on renewable fuels will decrease.

Energy conservation also will benefit from increased energy prices and will be determined by the marketplace, not the government.

This belief in America's can-do philosophy is keeping afloat — at least among some Americans — the cherished earlier vision of an energy self-sufficient nation..

SUBSCRIBERS TO the theory — including the conservative Heritage Foundation and the Congress' analytical Office of Technology Assessment — claim that self-sufficiency will result from three trends: unprecedented domestic energy conservation, soaring oil drilling rates at home and motor vehicles that get up to 55 miles per gallon of gasoline.

This may be so. But no one believes any longer that energy independence, which has been a subject of national discussion since the Mideast oil embargo rocked the world economy with a surge in oil prices in 1973, will be achieved with the help of synfuels.

The other given is that alternative energy sources, including solar, biomass, geothermal, fuel cell, wind and fusion, will play only a small part — at least for a time being — in achieving this dream of independence.

This is so because, as the nation closes in on the mid 1980s, the United States is awash with oil thanks to the disarray within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), whose insane pricing policies in the 1970s threw this country as well as the rest of the world into economic chaos.

AS A RESULT, America's oil supplies are ample, excess capacity is substantial, with about 100 days' supply of oil sitting in storage, and projections that even with the long-awaited economic recovery expected — the three-year slide in energy demand will continue.

The oil glut has also resulted in the loss of urgency at the White House about the nation's strategic energy supply.

The White House insists its decision to slash crude oil purchases for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve program, plagued by cost overruns and already years behind schedule, makes good fiscal sense.

More than 300 million barrels of oil — 70 days' U.S. supply — are now stored in underground caverns in Texas and Louisiana for emergency use. Congress wants to complete the 750 million barrels reserve by the end of the decade. But only 16 million barrels — costing $600 million — are scheduled to be delivered in fiscal 1984.

Hurt by the continuing market slump, the oil and gas industry have also adopted extremely cautious spending plans. Industry officials say the 1983 capital and exploratory spending will be flat or moderately lower than in 1982, after years of unprecedented growth fueled by oil shortages and sharply increasing prices.

HOW MUCH OIL remains to be found in the United States? No one knows with any degree of certainty. Since oil was developed in this country, 127 billion barrels of the 153 billion barrels of discovered recoverable oil have been produced. The balance, some 26 billion, constitute a remaining reserve that is recoverable under existing technologies and economies. Enhanced techniques are likely to produce another 20 billion barrels.

Also, fears, widespread a decade ago, that the world would run out of oil by the end of the century have turned out to be unfounded. Today's debate on the remaining life of the oil industry has turned more to the question of whether resources will last into the second half of the next century or into the 22nd century.

The Scientists' Institute for Public Information projection for undiscovered oil in the United States ranges from as little as 20 billion to 450 billion of recoverable oil.

According to Department of Energy (DOE) statistics, energy consumption in the U.S. currently amounts to the equivalent of 35 million barrels of oil per day, accounted for by oil (43 percent), natural gas (27 percent), coal (22 percent), and nuclear, hydropower and other forms (8 percent).

In 1981, the U.S. produced 88 percent of the energy it consumed, the highest level of domestic energy reliance in a decade. The remaining 12 percent was imported, mainly as oil — an import level significantly below the peak in 1977 when the U.S. imported 24 percent of its energy needs.

FOR 1982 AS a whole, imports were 53 percent lower than the peak level in 1977.

The decline in imports, the DOE said, is the result of both a large drop in domestic energy consumption and an increase in domestic production.

"Americans have learned to make a barrel of oil go much farther than anyone predicted," says an energy expert.

Most industry experts now see sustained downward pressure on prices for at least the next two years, barring a major disruption in the flow of Middle East oil which represented 12.4 percent of total U.S. crude oil imports last month.

The United States imported 4 million barrels of oil in February, as compared with 8.5 million in Oct., 1979 when we imported 48.7 percent from the Middle East.

THE DROP WAS even more dramatic for the four-week period ending on April 8 when net imports of crude oil and petroleum products averaged 2.7 million barrels a day, about 24 percent below their average a year ago.

On April 8, stocks of crude oil stood at 357.5 million barrels. Stocks of product stood as follows: total motor gasoline at 222.3 million barrels;distillate fuel oil at 113.4 million barrels, and residual fuel oil at 44.5 million barrels.

Over the remainder of the century, American energy consumption is expected to increase by about 30 percent, while domestic energy production increases by about 35 percent.

But though they are not as loud as they once were, warnings abound that the country is still dependent on imports, especially from the volatile Middle East.

The American Petroleum Institute (API) warns that the loss of only a small amount of oil could bring about shortages because the shortage of 1973 was the result of the loss of only six percent of oil supply and the shortage of 1979 was caused by the loss of only three percent of supplies.

"AT PRESENT, Arab crude oil imports account for 15 percent of the U.S. total supply," said the API. "This is no time for complacency about our energy situation. It certainly has improved over what it was a few years ago, but we are not out of the woods."

Speaking before a recent convention of the Western Association of Food Chains, Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, warned that if the nation continues on "this hands-off course of leaving energy to 'market forces' the next oil shock will be even more traumatic than our last one."

Matsunaga termed greater national self-sufficiency in energy a "critical economy objective for the '80s which we must strive to attain by exploiting our resources."

Credit casualty insurance examined

By Bill Kidd
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Credit casualty insurance — a subject that has come in for study by the Legislature in previous sessions — is being considered once again by the House Insurance Committee.

HB 1839 by Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, was supported in testimony from the South Texas Association of Furniture Retailers and Dial Duncan & Associates, Harlingen.

Mike Braun, representing the furniture retailers, said the coverage would protect against a borrower becoming unemployed and being unable to pay his or her debt.

As a result, he said, some "marginal" borrowers would no longer be marginal and additional credit and sales would result.

The states of Washington, California and Illinois have such programs, and retail sales there have increased, he said.

Bill Brooks of Dial Duncan said charges in other states run $2-$3 per $100 and are a one-time charge.

Harlingen banker Bill Maples said lenders need "some type of insulation now" on debts, and such coverage would provide that.

Coverage would be "strictly voluntary," he commented — and told the committee he doesn't feel coverage would become a requirement, as credit life insurance has on some types of loans.

Jim Boyle, Texas Consumer Association, said TCA doesn't oppose offering such insurance — if the bill makes it clear the State Board of Insurance has authority to regulate premiums through "presumptive rate setting."

• • •

House Financial Institutions Committee continues struggling with the complex area of lien laws — with its latest effort including six bills by Rep. Don Lee, D-Harlingen, which he describes as an attempt to "bring the lien laws into the 20th Century."

San Antonio Donald Ferguson called the current laws an "enigma" — and told the committee the laws may be manipulated in an effort to prevent recovery by persons who have legitimate claims.

As an example, he cited an instance where a contractor believed he had a lien against a building for work performed on it — only to discover, when the matter went to court, he had been furnished a legal description of the adjoining property.

Lee's proposals include an attempt to prevent that sort of subterfuge against contractors, Ferguson explained.

The State Banking Board — which has been involved for over a year in a dispute over sharing of automated teller machines by banks — is looking over another aspect of electronic funds transfer systems: point of sale terminals.

Department of Banking general counsel Archie Clayton reports he has received "several inquiries" regarding use of point of sale (POS) terminals under Texas' unmanned teller machine statute.

Specifically, he reports, the questions have involved whether the statute prohibits a bank customer from using an unmanned teller machine to transfer funds from the customer's account to someone else's account, either in the same bank or in some other financial institution, to cover — for example — a retail sale.

Clayton's conclusion, which he presented to the board, is that the statute "appears to prohibit" use of a POS device "when it is used solely by the customer."

But, he reported, "I believe the principle of the customer tansferring money to the retailer is permissible under Texas law ... so long as the device is not capable of being operated soley by the customer."

Clayton recommended the board consider adopting a rule on the subject.

Texas savings and loan associations appear to be recovering from their prolonged period of economic distress, according to figures from the Federal Home Loan Bank of Little Rock, which serves Texas and four other states.

Figures from FHLB show that 214 Texas associations (out of 284) which made reports for March showed net new savings for February of $875 million, with over $2.455 billion for the first two months of 1983.

The agency reports than in the five-state region, the February gain was 32 percent less than the January amount, but was the largest net new savings figure on record for the district for February — and that liquidity ratios for associations remain at record highs.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, incidentally, has approved moving the Little Rock office to Dallas — but that action is being attacked in a lawsuit.

American Express ads carding women

By LAURIE ITOW
Hearst Feature Service

The American Express card — previously targeted as a businessman's credit card — is courting the women's market for the first time on television.

In one of two 30-second spots, a woman tells her husband she's taking him out to dinner. He asks: "Are we celebrating something?" And she replies: "Well, I just got an American Express Card and I want to break it in."

In the second commercial, a woman is in a restaurant with her two sons and a daughter. The daughter says, "Hey, mom, did you know you can buy 10-speed bikes with the American Express Card?" The mother answers, "At this point, there's nothing I don't know about 10-speed bikes."

"Hey mom," one of her sons says, "someday I'll take you to dinner." The daughter says, "Oh, he'll forget." The mother says, "I'll remind him."

Both commercials end with a narrator saying: "The American Express Card. It's part of a lot of interesting lives."

The commercials are purposely void of pointed statements about the financial or social status of women. The company doesn't want to sound patronizing to women, or turn off its traditional male customers. But in making the ads completely inoffensive, the American Express has molded a message that's bland.

Nonetheless, American Express says the ads are big hits, based on test runs in San Francisco, Houston and Washington. Jerry Welsh, senior vice president of consumer marketing, said the ads began airing in the test cities in November.

In each city, Welsh said, 300 consumers — women and men, including those with and without cards — were interviewed before the campaign ran and then again in February. Welsh said that after those interviewed saw the ads, the number of women who said they'd apply for a card was double the rate measured in the company's other campaigns.

A magazine version of the ads with a mail-in application also got a response from women that's 20 percent better than a previous print ad. Within the next three months, American Express will select other cities in which the women's campaign will run, Welsh said.

Ogilvy & Mather, the New York ad agency that made "Do you know me?" and "Don't Leave Home Without It" household phrases, created the new campaign. May Ling Dodgen, an Ogilvy & Mather account supervisor, said the ads try to portray women realistically and convey that women can be successful on their own terms, no matter what they choose to do.

Bankers: Midland economy on even keel in '83

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Midland's business climate isn't booming, but it is on an even keel, according to the city's bank executives.

They say this although deposits citywide in the first quarter ended March 31 were down $24.8 million from the same time a year ago.

Their optimism rests on two points: gauging today's activity at each of Midland's nine banks with a year ago, and comparing the economy here with the rest of the nation.

"You've got to look at the whole, and not just the parts," cautioned Robert Southerland, president of Texas American Bank Midland.

"The banking community is a mirror image of the whole community. If the community's economics are down, the banks' deposits will be down."

A closer look at the data shows deposits were up at seven of the city's banks from the first quarter a year ago. But the deposit loss at two Midland banks, First National ($140 million) and Texas American ($1.2 million), was enough to force the total down.

When these two banks are omitted, the first quarter total for the remaining seven banks rises by $113.3 million from the same period a year ago, indicating growth in Midland's economy.

"This community is sound," according to Tony Martin, chairman and chief executive officer at First City National Bank, where deposits were up $47.3 million.

"The business climate is better now than it was 90 days ago, and I think people feel better pyschologically."

Comparing Midland banking figures for the first three months of 1983 with those of 1982 is like comparing apples and oranges; business conditions are different today.

"If you compare everything to the peak, you are just kidding yourself," Southerland said, "because you only peak once in every business cycle."

The boom of 1980-81 gained its own momentum and exaggerated itself, according to Bill Parker, president of Western State Bank. "It semed to have a lot more velocity than it had. Hopefully, we've learned a lesson."

Southerland said he thinks Midland is in as good shape as can be expected, and in better shape than other areas in the country.

"The people I talk to, from California to New York, from Florida to Denver, all say, 'You think you've got it bad...'"

People in business take the city's economic pulse by watching the ups and downs of the banks. By law, banks report their financial condition at the end of each quarter in what is known as a call report. Changes in deposit and loan totals are what most people watch.

Banks with a high concentration of deposits from energy companies, and loans to them, are the ones most affected by the downturn in the economy now, banking sources say.

Banks which rely on retail and wholesale trade for their deposit base are less likely to be affected. Even they are probably seeing a change in their deposit activity, howver, as the recession continues in Texas.

Retail activity has apparently dropped off. Midland-Odessa sales tax receipts are down by about 27 percent from this time a year ago, Texas Comptroller Bob Bullock said April 14.

Some deposits are down, or changed in nature, because ever since the stock market started to rally in August, investors have pulled thousands of dollars out of banks and jumped on the stock band wagon, one banker pointed out.

First National Bank of Midland, known for its heavy involvement in the energy business through its loans and deposits, suffered a $140 million drop in deposits from March 1982 to March 1983.

The Wall Street Journal called it a run caused by big investors outside of Midland who lost confidence in energy-related banking, rather than by local depositors withdrawing funds.

Deposits fell slightly, by $1.2 million, at Texas American when Midland Independent School District withdrew its bond money to build new schools here, according to Southerland.

Deposits at other Midland banks, which rely less on the energy industry, have grown.

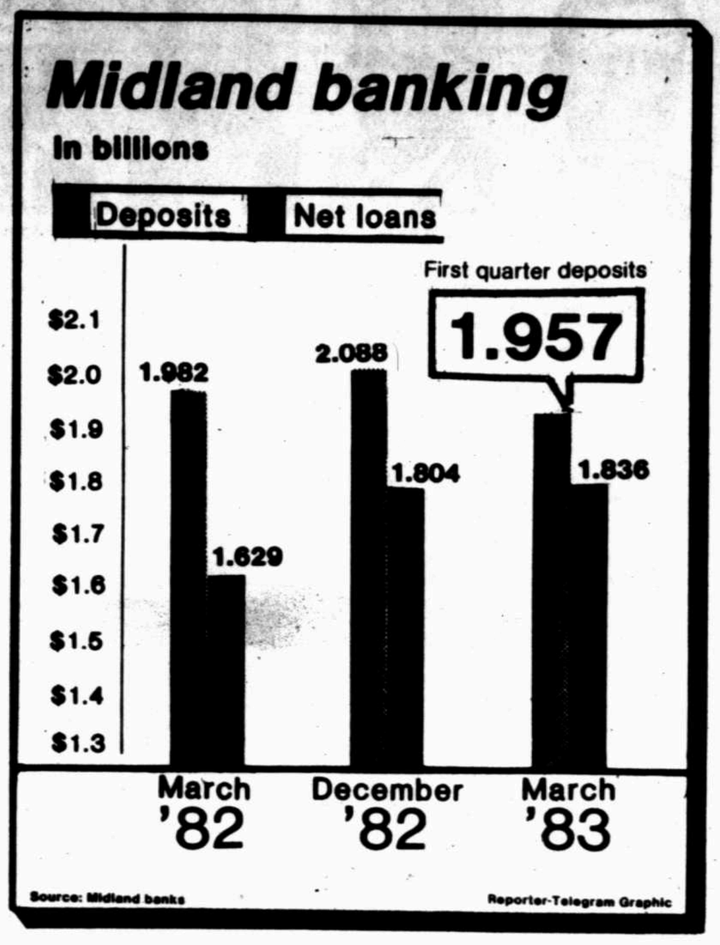

In the 12-month period from March 1982 to March 1983, deposits at First City rose $47.3 million. They were up by $12.1 million at Republic-Bank Midland (known as Texas National until April 1).

Metro Bank deposits were up by $9.1 million in the same period, and Western State Bank reported an increase of $2.6 million.

ClayDesta National Bank has grown the fastest of Midland's three new arrivals on the banking scene, with deposits of $30.9 million as of March 31. Security National Bank reported deposits of $7.6 million, and deposits were $3.7 million at Midland American Bank.

Western State's Parker thinks 1983 will be slow year, but he is pleased with deposit growth at his bank, and says he has seen a deposit spurt in the last 30 days.

"A good positive attitude will help us all," he said. "I think all financial institutions will see a better third and fourth quarter this year."

"If you compare everything to the peak, you are just kidding yourself, because you only peak once in any business cycle."
— Robert Southerland, president, Texas American Bank

Oil finds: 89, Gas discoveries: 95

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace announced that Texas operators reported 95 gas and 89 oil discoveries in March 1983.

One year ago, 157 gas and 42 oil discoveries were filed with the state's energy regulatory agency.

Gas discoveries in March included 37 in deep South Texas, 15 in West Central Texas, 14 in refugio area, 13 in Sutheast Texas, five in North Texas, three in the Midland area, and two each in the Panhandle, East Texas, and the San Antonio and San Angelo areas.

Oil discoveries included 16 in West Central Texas, 15 in the San Antonio area, 11 in the San Angelo area, ten each in North Texas and the Refugio areas, 11 in San Angelo area, six in the Midland area, four in deep South Texas, three each in Southeast Texas and the Panhandle, and two each in East Texas and East Central Texas.

In March, operators reported 575 exploratory and field tests wound up as dry holes. New applications for permits to drill oil and gas tests totaled 2,621 in March compared with 3,154 in the same period of 1982.

Applications to drill deepen, plug back and for service wells in March amounted to 3,002 against 3,529 a year earlier.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

WOOD STOVE INSTALLATION SAFETY

Heating with wood is making a comeback. This is evidenced by the booming business in woodburning stoves. However, burning wood can also be hazardous. In Massachusetts alone, there are an average of 25 woodstove fires a month resulting in property damages of about $100,000 a month. Many of the fires could be avoided if stoves were properly installed.

Proper clearances around the sides and botton of a stove are critical for its safe operation. A woodstove must be at least 36 inches from a combustible wall. This distance can be reduced by protecting the wall with sheet metal or asbestos millboard. The non-combustible material must be spaced at least one inch from the wall to assure free air circulation behind the shield. This ventilated space is essential for keeping the wall from getting too hot.

The stove must be placed on a non-combustible surface (brick, concrete, sheet metal) extends at least 18 inches in front of the stove and 12 inches to the sides and rear. Never place a stove in an alcove, or a stairwell or other cloistered area.

Oft sold bridge 100

Hearst Feature Service

If the Brooklyn Bridge, which will be 100 years old next month, came with an owner's manual, it would probably recommend a complete overhaul at least every hundred years.

According to an article on the Brooklyn Bridge's engineering in the May issue of Popular Mechanics, the City of New York is currently earmarking $100 million for minor repairs — a paint job, replacement of some suspender cables, minor road resurfacing and the like — that will carry the famous structure to its next hundredth birthday in great shape.

Although the bridge connecting Brooklyn and Manhattan was called by some the "Eighth Wonder of the World" when it was built, others named it the "Grand Boondoggle" and claimed it wouldn't last more than ten years.

While the bridge has survived the naysayers, it hasn't survived efforts to sell it. According to the Popular Mechanics article, a New York City official told a recent gathering of civil engineers that New York might consider selling the bridge to a private company. "With tolls, it could be a great business for someone."

Court locks gold firm's doors

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Sales offices of International Gold Bullion Exchange in Florida, Texas and California did not open for business Friday following an extraordinary late-night court order that sealed the company's Fort Lauderdale, Fla., headquarters.

The privately owned company, one of the nation's major sellers of precious metals, recently claimed to have $80 million sales annually and more than 150,000 customers.

A county judge in Fort Lauderdale late Thursday ordered the operation there closed down and named a receiver to take control unless the company files for bankruptcy by Monday. Company attorney Tom Tew told the court that International would halt business immediately and prepare a bankruptcy filing.

Owners William Alderdice and his brother James were ordered by Judge Robert L. Andrews of the Broward County Circuit Court to surrender their passports.

Later Thursday night, state agents observed International employees carrying records out of the building. They sought out a judge and obtained an order sealing the building.

Government officials in California and Texas said the Los Angeles and Dallas offices of the company never opened Friday, and no one answered phones at those offices throughout the day.

New gas pipeline association formed

AUSTIN - The Association of Texas Intrastate Natural gas Pipelines, a new industry organization, has been formed to represent intrastate gas pipeline companies operating within the state of Texas.

Headquartered in Austin, the objective of the association is to promote and advance the welfare, progress and development of the natural gas pipeline industry in the State of Texas.

The directors of the association are M. T. Belvin, Jr., chairman (president of United Texas Transmission Company); Ellis E. Wind, vice chairman (executive vice president of Valero Transmission Company); and Robert C. Lyon (president of Clajon Gas Company). Patrick J. Nugent has been appointed executive director of the association and will serve in that capacity full time.

The current members of the association include United Texas, Valero, Clajon, Southwestern Gas Pipeline Inc. and El Paso Hydrocarbons Company.

'OIL' revising plans

BIG SPRING — Eighty-six employees have been laid off by Oilfield Industrial Lines in what company officials described as a manufacturing plan revision.

Chief operating oficer Richard Fackler indicated that OIL's manufacturing plan has been altered from stock manufacturing to prior ordering manufacturing, in response to a need for specialty rig units.

He added that "OIL is alive and well and is not closing it's Big Spring facility."

OIL is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Kidde Corp. and manufactures oilfield equipment and drilling rigs. Layoffs initially occurred in April 1982 when the oilfield industry began to experience a slowdown.

Interest Rates Going Up...Or Down?

These days nobody knows for sure. But one thing is certain, whatever happens, First Federal can provide a means for you to make the most of your money.

If you think interest rates will go up, First Federal has Money Fund Accounts or short-term certificates that provide early maturities . . . giving you the option of withdrawal if rates escalate.

If you think interest rates will continue to fall in the future, First Federal has Money Market Certificates with long-term, fixed rates that will safely lock up high interest rates now. And, if you like, interest from these can be distributed to your First Federal savings or checking account. With the safety of FSLIC insured funds, you can't go wrong whether you choose long-term or short-term certificates at First Federal Savings.

Many pitfalls in economic path

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Many pitfalls lie ahead that could prevent the U.S. economy from making a full and robust recovery in the years ahead. Many of them are tied to the fate of the rest of the world, which shows only feeble signs of reviving.

Every week, statistical indicators provide more proof that the U.S. economy is gaining strength although somewhat more tentatively than some had predicted.

President Reagan, quoting the economic upturn as vindication that his supply side tax-cutting policies finally worked, has backed away from any new taxes — even those he proposed in January to help force down the estimated $200 billion in budget deficits that will remain after the current recession ends.

The fact that moderate Republicans do not share his optimism prompted their revolt last Thursday on the Senate Budget Committee when four GOP moderates joined 10 Democrats in supporting $30 billion in new taxes to force the deficits down — a move they contend is essential to getting lower interest rates.

The schism in Republican ranks over taxes and new spending cuts could paralyze Congress for months to come — and could traumatize Wall Street which had thought the bipartisan agreement on resolving the Social Security crisis spelled similar harmony on the equally difficult deficit-reducing steps such as tax increases, spending cuts and defense-growth slowdowns.

Even without the budget-impasse crisis, economic analysts say there are many trouble signs ahead.

Dozens of interlocking factors will dictate the strength and durability of the current recovery — not the least being the destabilized foreign trade situation which not only tests the ability of the United States to stay competitive in a much tougher trade climate but the fact that most countries are so debt-ridden that they can't buy any foreign products anytime soon.

Although most analysts are more heartened today than three months ago, they see many potential glitches before the United States, let alone the world, is on sure footing again.

Economic recovery will be a costly, time-consuming process — with no guarantee that all wounds of the deepest recession since the 1930s will have healed by the presidential elections of November, 1984.

Here are some of the core questions:

— Interest rates: If they decline, it could set off an explosive buying and investment cycle, the "pent-up demand" so fondly and frequently invoked in the past 18 months by Reagan administration and Wall Street economists; if interest rates stay at today's high levels, it would insure a slow recovery; if they rise, it could abort the recovery altogether.

— Strength of the dollar: Partly because interest rates have stayed so high, the strong dollar has priced U.S. products out of billions of dollars of overseas sales and will cost the domestic economy an estimated 3 million jobs tied to exports. It rose a devastating 70 percent compared to the Japanese yen in the past two years. What to do about it is unclear and some analysts fear the dollar will remain strong (crippling U.S. competitiveness abroad) even if interest rates drop because the country has become a "safe haven" for foreign investors — International debts: These are at monumental heights, with crash austerity programs in dozens of countries rapidly lowering the standard of living for billions of people — and, in the process, stifling prospect for any immediate pickup of U.S. sales there and raising the risk of political instability. For now, international bankers are too afraid of the consequences not to keep the money-line open to these nations.

— Old industries: Steel and autos are at depression levels, despite the good profit news from auto industry leader General Motors. Further decline in steel is seen because the decay and stagnation in the giant integrated steel mills is too entrenched; autos will bounce back — but at what level is an open question that has much to do with the shape of the industrial heartland — New industries: The post-recession years may be make-or-break ones for the U.S. high technology industry in its race to hold its own against Japan, testing U.S. competitive ability in a cutting edge survival issue that is reviving debate about the need for an industrial policy to "target" high-potential markets.

— Agriculture: Minimal or no growth is predicted between now and 1984 for the devastated Farm Belt, which suffered its worst two years since the 1930s. The Reagan administration's belated crisis-relief plan to take cropland out of production (originally estimated to cost $2 billion but now conceded to cost $21 billion) enables the Farm Belt economy to bottom out, narrowly averting all-out catastrophe, but the enormous domestic surpluses and drying up of overseas markets dictate a rough road ahead

Monterrey Cocina Mexicana has become an integral part of the dining scene in Midland over the past 30 years by offering family service, cooking, and hospitality. They feature live mariachi music every Tuesday night and offer other specials during the week. Try Monterrey tonight. They are located at 2501 N. Big Spring in Midland.

Monterrey Cocina Mexicana offers home-cooked Mexican food

Perhaps the very best cooking in the world is good old-fashioned home style cooking. If someone were to ask you over to eat home-style cooking, it would be almost impossible to refuse. You would probably reschedule any other appointments you might have just to taste one delicious home-style meal. In today's world of fast food, nothing can compare with a specially prepared home-style meal. Well, tonight you can have as much of mama's good old-fashioned cooking as you want, right at Monterrey Cocina Mexicana.

Since 1953, when Manuel and Feliz Veloz first opened their doors to diners in Midland, Monterrey Cocina Mexicana has served the finest home-cooked Mexican food available. Monterrey is the oldest Mexican food restaurant in Midland, and one trip to the cozy little restaurant makes it easy to see why. The atmosphere is not that of a big, fancy, stuffy restaurant; but rather a warm, cozy, family atmosphere, just as if you were dining in the home of Manuel and Feliz Veloz.

Present owners George and Gloria Veloz take extra care to see that the high standard of excellence for quality and service remains as much a part of Monterrey Cocina Mexicana today as it was 30 years ago. Recipes used in the restaurant today are the same ones used 30 years ago, and Manuel and Feliz Veloz still prepare the food fresh when you order it. With the family supervision at Monterrey, you know that each meal is as delicious as the first one 30 years ago. You couldn't get a better meal if you went home with the Veloz family.

Because of the family supervision and cooking at Monterrey, the business has prospered well over the years. Expansion from their original cocina on Illinois to their present home at 2501 N. Big Spring came in August of 1979. Plans for future expansion are in the making. Monterrey Cocina Mexicana will grow with Midland in the future, just as it has in the past. The cocina has become a vital part of the dining scene in Midland over the years.

As the seasons come and go, thus does everything change. At Monterrey, there is a constant search for ideas to enhance the atmosphere and a constant endeavor to please each and every guest that walks through the door. Some special additions have been made to enhance the family atmosphere and make each meal enjoyable. First, on Tuesday evenings, you'll be pleased to dine to the music of live mariachi music. All day Thursdays, magaritas from Monterrey's bar are only 99¢. Mondays also mean 99¢ margaritas, but the restaurant closes at 2:00. In the tradition of the 99¢ margarita, all day Wednesday brings 5¢ beer to Monterrey with purchase of any dinner. One only needs to dine at Monterrey Cocina Mexicana one time to become addicted to the good old-fashioned home-cooked Mexican food.

If your whole group enjoys the fine dining at Monterrey, they have a special room which may be reserved for parties, small banquets, or receptions. For more information on reservations, call managers Rick Hearon or Gili Lopez at 684-9447. Monterrey Cocina Mexicana is open from 11:00 until 10:30 Tuesday through Saturday, and 11:00-until 2:00pm on Monday. They are located at 2501 N. Big Spring in Midland. If you have never eaten at Monterrey, try it. You're in for a special treat. If you have eaten there before, you already know.

Stained glass solves decorating problems

Unique! Exciting! Beautiful! These are just a few of the words that describe the works of art that are made at Midland Stained Glass Center. Stained glass from Midland Stained Glass Center makes the perfect gift, is ideal for any difficult decorating spot, and is easy for you to learn. All you have to do is let us show you how.

At Midland Stained Glass Center, we have many ideas for ways to use stained glass pieces made either by us or you, and our customers are constantly coming up with new ways to adapt or create a stained glass piece to suit their own needs. We have new ideas for spring and summer decorating, birthday gifts, anniversary gifts, and other gifts for any occasion. In addition, room dividers and custom mirror or picture frames are becoming an increasingly popular use for stained glass. You can even make your own party decorations and keep them after the party to decorate almost any difficult spot in your house.

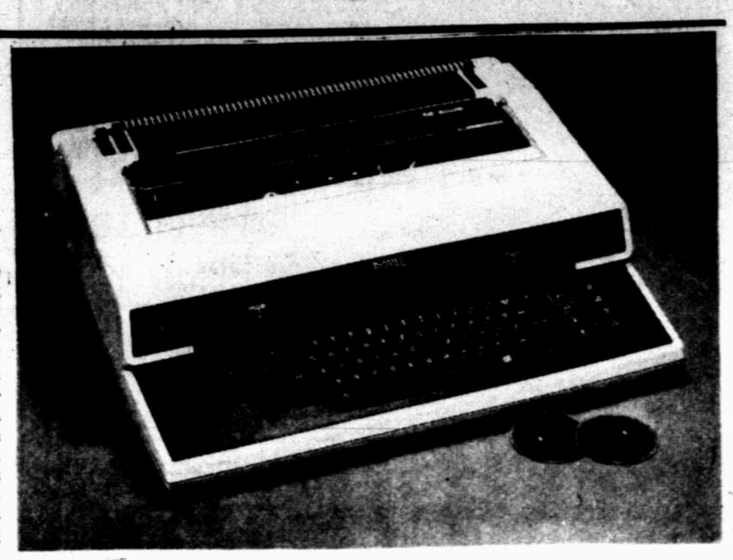

Midland Stained Glass Center has recently received a new book with new ideas for you to choose from. Included in this book are door and window decorations, table decorations, candle holders, and clocks. Beautiful lamps and lamp shades for you to make may also be found in the book. Ideas for remodeling, and new construction, such as cabinets, jacuzzis, and whole windows may be found in the many art books at Midland Stained Glass.

If you are interested in any of the various types of classes offered at Midland Stained Glass Center, call Mary Richardson and express your interest in that particular class. New classes are continually forming in areas such as beginners, intermediates, lamps, and sun-catchers. A new beginners class began March 3rd, and if you are interested in learning the exciting stained glass hobby, call Mary immediaely to register. Other classes will begin when enough hobbyist express an interest in any one area.

Midland Stained Glass Center offers the perfect solution to any difficult decorating spot. If you have a large bare spot on your wall or table, in your window, or anywhere else inside or outside your house, call Midland Stained Glass Center. They can custom-make the perfect solution, or can teach you the fine art of stained glass so that you may create your own beautiful design to be proud of. Midland Stained Glass can also create beautiful custom beveled glass to fit any need. They are located at 4312 W. Illinois. Midland Stained Glass Center is open from 10:00 to 6:00, Tuesday through Saturday.

Stained glass is the perfect way to solve even the most difficult decorating spot in your house. If you would like to learn the fine art of making stained glass, or if you would like to purchase some beautiful glass decorations, call on Midland Stained Glass at 697-0322.

The Royal 5005 is the ideal bridge from yesterday's electromechanical machines to the world of microprocessor controlled electronics. Although highly advanced in technology, it's completely simple to operate.

Faulkner's introduces electronic breakthrough

So your office needs a new typewriter and you would like to switch to an electronic machine. However, all the models that you have looked at are just "too fancy."Well, look no further. Faulkner's Office Machines is proud to announce the newest addition to their Royal line of electronic typewriters—the 5005. It still has the features that you want while eliminating the "fancy" automatic features that you say you don't need.

The Royal 5005 is the ideal bridge from yesterday's electromechanical machines to the world of microprocessor controlled electronics.Although it's highly advanced in technology, the Royal 5005 is completely simple to operate. It's keyboard is thoroughly familiar to any typist, so training and adjustment time are eliminated. No other brand offers an electronic office typewriter that is this easy to operate.

The 5005 has the electronic advantages that you would expect over the " old fashioned" ball machines. It uses interchangeable daisy wheels for laser sharp, whisper quiet printing. The daisy wheel also allows typing up to twice as fast without the problem of flicking (unexpected dashes). Since there practically nomoving parts, the maintenance on the 5005 is greatly reduced.

To accomodate the variety of print wheels offer, the Royal 5005 switches pitch instantly from pica to elite. An indicator light reminds the typist which pitch is in use. It's almost like having two machines in one.

Errors are cleanly and quickly removed with one touch of the correction key. The exceptionally large 132 character correction memory allows you to delete as much as two complete lines.

The 5005 offers all these advantages at a price which is no higher than the " ball" machine that you are probably using now. Of course, Faulkner's still carries the complete Royal line should you need a more sophisticated typewriter. Faulkner's, which has been serving the Permain Basin for more than 21 years, is a full "writing instrument" specialist. They carry the full line from portables and manual typewriters to the newest in electronic to full-blown wordprocessing.

Their seven trained technicians service everything they sell as well as a wide variety of other commonly found machines.

For all of your office needs call 563-0030 for information, supplies, free delivery and in-office demonstration or consultation.

Faulkner's offers sales, service and rentals on a full line of new and reconditioned typewriters and calculators. They repair office machines with professional competence.

The scars of an abused child can stay with us all his life.
Many teenage drug addicts and teenage prostitutes report being abused children. Many juvenile delinquents also report being abused as children.
And because we pay to respond to those problems, we are all victims of child abuse.
Yet child abuse, and the results of abuse, can be prevented.

ARC Truck and Auto Body offers highest quality at best prices

With the oil industry at its lowest level in years, many people in Midland and surrounding areas are finding that they simply cannot afford many of the luxuries that they have been able to in the past. One of the most visible examples of this is in the cars that we drive. The average age of cars on the road today is considerably older than only a few years ago. With the economy at a low level, you need to make sure that you take care of your car... you are going to have to drive it just a little longer.

Special attention is what your car gets at ARC Truck and Auto Body. ARC is the largest independent body shop in town. They really give your car special attention during the repair process to insure you of the best job possible. The craftsmen are highly skilled, and they take pride in doing the highest quality repairs available. From frame straightening to fitting decorativetrim, every operation must meet the highest standards. Every car at ARC is treated as if it were the personal property of owner Allen Frasier.

When it comes to the painting of your car after the repair work, or simplt that time for a new paint job, you are once again assured that your car will be receiving the highest quality and best job possible. The highly skilled craftsmen at ARC take the painstaking steps to make sure that your car looks as good or better when it leaves there as it did when it left the showroom floor. Customizing your car or personal pinstriping is no problem at ARC either. Gary Friss is a true professional dedicated to giving you the best pinstriping you can find anywhere. Even if you want to have your rig customized, truckers, call on ARC. The paint room is large enough to accomodate even a large diesel rig.

In addition to the expert body repair and painting, Allen Frasier operates a 24 hour wrecker service. If you have the unfortunate chance to meet another car bumper to bumper, let ARC tow your car for you and begin immediate repair work. ARC handles all types of insurance claims, and they give free estimates. Even you sports car enthusiasts can trust your fiberglass body to ARC with Roger Steinle, one of he best Corvette specialists in the state.

ARC Truck and Auto Body is staffed to handle any problem, from the smallest to the most difficult. Due to the high request for windshield repair, ARC has purchased Sav-a-Shield to save you even more money on your car repair. By eleiminating the small cracks or chips in your windshield today, you eleiminate the cost of replacing it later. Replacing your windshield would cost many times more than a simple repair. Call ARC today for prices on windshield repair.

Even with the new facilities, you still get the same high quality and low prices at ARC. So for any need you may have for repair of your automobile, come by ARC Truck and Auto Body. They are located at 2700 W. Francis, and may be reached at 682-9722.

At Texas National Bank of Midland we're making a new name for ourselves.

For years you've known us as Texas National Bank of Midland. Now, though, we're RepublicBank Midland. The reason for the change? We're proud to have become a member of RepublicBank Corporation, and want you to know that. Because now we're backed by $17-billion in assets, plus a statewide network of thirty-five other banks. And that gives us the resources to make a new name for ourselves, not only as a strong financial partner for you, but as RepublicBank Midland.

Guest artists to perform 'Cinderella'

In its upcoming performance of "Cinderella," the Permian Civic Ballet will host three guest artists.

Dancing key roles in the performance at 8 p.m. Thursday in the Lee High School auditorium will be Lisa Myers, Kirt Hathaway and Michael Job.

Miss Myers has trained with noted instructors Maggie Black, David Howard, Nina Popova, Ann Cheselka, Sallie Whalen and Hector Zaraspe. In 1972, she was awarded a Joffrey Ballet School scholarship and worked with Meredith Bayliss.

Major roles performed by Miss Myers have included "Don Quixote Pas de Deux," "Graduation Ball," "Romeo and Juliet," "Les Patineurs," "The Lesson," "Facade" and "Parades." She has danced with the Houston Allegro Ballet, Houston Ballet, Joffrey II, Poughkeepsie Ballet Theatre, Joffrey Ballet, New Jersey Ballet and Ballet de Grande, Theatre de Geneve.

She taught in Berkley, Calif., and Dallas before joining Permian Civic Ballet as assistant rehearsal director and has conducted company workshops in the abscence of Anne Burton, artistic director.

Miss Myers has been contracted as artistic director for this year's performance of "The Nutcracker," scheduled Dec. 2 and 3.

Kirt Hathaway, as a high school junior, began training with Margo Marshall of the Greater Houston Ballet. His first professional roles were with the Dallas Ballet; other companies with which he has performed are Chicago Lyric Ballet and Pacific Northwest Ballet, Seattle, Wash.

Lisa Myers

Michael Job

With these companies and during guest performances with Delta Festival of New Orleans, Denver Civic Ballet, Ballet Arkansas in Little Rock, Chicago Ballet and San Antonio Ballet he has danced leading roles in "Swan Lake," "Nutcracker," "La Corsair Pas de Deux," Balanchine's "La Aonnabula," "Concerto Broco," "Four Temperments," "Salome" and "The Miraculous Mandrine."

Hathaway has worked with choreographers George Seibine, James Clouser, Peter Astos, Author Mitchelle and Fleming Flint and dancers Yoko Ichino, Andrea Vodenhal, Colleen Neary and Anne Burton.

Michael Job began his dance training in Oak Ridge in 1972 with Joan Kunsch and Leslie Swayzee of Dance Arts Inc. For six consecutive summers, he studied in Arlington with Bill Martin-Viscount and the faculty of Southwest Ballet Center.

In 1974, at the age of 17, he joined Pittsburg Ballet Theater and the following two season danced with the Houston Ballet. He worked with choreographer James Clouser and his Houston-based company SPACE/DANCE/THEATER for two years and returns as a frequent guest artist. He also has danced with the Dutch National Ballet in Amsterdam, Joffrey II and the Dallas Ballet.

He currently serves as principal dancer for Atlanta Ballet.

Job has worked with directors George Seibine and Fleming Flint. Major roles have included "Swan Lake," "Cinderella," "Nutcracker," "The Firebird," "Don Quixote Pas de Deux" and the works of contemporary choreographers George Balanchine, Author Mitchelle, Rudi Van Dantzig, James Clouser, Choo San Goh, Fleming Flint, Rael Lamb, Ben Stevenson and Carlos Carvajal.

He has taught in workshops and in residence at Southwest Ballet Center, Arlington; Harlingen Ballet; Sam Houston State University, Huntsville; Texas Woman's University, Denton; Texas A&I University, Kingsville; Corpus Christi State University; and Dallas Ballet Academy.

Ballet association organized in 1967

The Permian Civic Ballet Association, devoted to furthering community interest in the dance, was organized in 1967 at the urging of Robert Mann, then music director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

The group's first performance, "Pandora," was an orginal ballet by Mann, staged with full symphony orchestra. It was presented as part of the symphony's subscription series in 1969. Since that time, PCBA has annually presented two productions.

Dance instructors from both Midland and Odessa have been instrumental in the development of the PCBA program, as have various guest choreographers.

PCBA to conduct workshop in August

Since its inception, the Permian Civic Ballet Association has maintained a commitment to training youngsters toward careers in dance and promoting a performing ballet.

To that end, PBCA will conduct a summer workshop in Midland Aug. 1-11. In addition to Artistic Director Anne Burton, instructors will be Linda Divin, Kirt Hathaway and Tom Pazik.

Anne Burton became artistic director of the ballet in 1980 following several guest performances with the company. That year, she stated the group's first full-length production of "Sleeping Beauty." In 1981, she staged PCBA's first production of "Coppelia" and danced the lead role of "Swanilda." The 1981-82 season included Miss Burton's first staging of the traditional "Nutcracker," and "Giselle," in which she danced the lead.

Miss Burton began her training at the Atlanta School of Ballet with Dorothy Alexander, Merilee Smith and Robert Barnett. At 16, she studied with Robert Joffrey and later received a Ford scholarship to Balanchine's School of American Ballet in New York City. She has a bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of Utah and has been on the faculties of Atlanta School of Ballet, Dallas Academy and Tuzer School of Ballet in Richardson. In 1982, she taught classes at Southwest Regional Ballet Festival in Baton Rouge, La.

She has staged and choreographed ballets for Carolina Ballet Theatre, Greenville, N.C.; Ballet Arkansas, Little Rock; Harlingen Concert Ballet; Corpus Christi Concert Ballet; and the Anchorage Civic Ballet.

Dancing as a member of the New York City Ballet, Ballet West, Atlanta Ballet and Dallas Ballet, and as guest artist with numerous civic companies, Miss Burton has performed the roles of "Sugar Plum Fairy," "Swan Queen," "Sleeping Beauty," "Juliet," "Coppelia," "Firebird" and "Giselle." In 1982, she danced "Swan Queen" with Compania Nacional de Danza in Mexico City.

Anne Burton

Linda Stuart Divin

She has performed as with such partners as Tanju Tuzer, Gennadi Vostrikov, Bojan Spassoff, Sergiu Stafanschi, Bill Martin-Viscount, Kirt Hathaway and Michael Job. In 1981, she danced "Giselle" with Patrick Bissell of the American Ballet Theatre in a guest appearance for Ballet Arkansas.

Miss Burton is married to Ed Avery and has three children; Brent, Jennifer and Jason. Her husband, who performed as "Albrecht" in PCBA's "Giselle," is a senior commercial analyst field support representative with IBM Corp. Avery was transferred from Dallas to Atlanta, Ga., last summer and Miss Burton has been commuting to Midland from Atlanta to conduct PCBA workshops.

She will retire from her PCBA post at the end of this season, which concludes with the performance of "Cinderella."

Guest instructor Kirt Hathaway began dancing with the Greater Houston Ballet during his junior year of high school. He began his professional career with the Dallas Ballet and has performed with the Chicago Lyric Ballet and Pacific Northwest Ballet.

He has danced leading roles in "Swan Lake," "Nutcracker," "La Corsair Pas de Deux," Balanchine's "La Aonnabula," "Concerto Broco," "Four Temperments," "Salome" and "The Miraculous Mandrine" and has performed with Yoko Ichino, Vivi Flint, Andrea Vodenhal, Colleen Neary and Anne Burton.

He has worked with choreographers George Seibine, James Clouser, Peter Astos and Fleming Flint. He has taught at PCBA workshop and choreographed several pieces for the company.

At age 5, Harlingen resident Linda Stuart Divin began her study of the dance with Frances Jennings Schofield, now of Brownsville. When she was graduated from high school she began Harlingen Ballet Center and, in 1976, was inducted into Dance Masters of America.

She has studied the past seven summers at Southwest Ballet Center in Fort Worth with teachers Bill Martin-Viscount, Susanna Benavides, Violette Verdy, Joyce Cuoco, Anne Burton and Lois Smith. She also has studied in New York with Melissa Haden, Patricia Wilde and JoJo's Dance Factory.

Miss Divin is director of Harlingen Ballet Center and serves as president and artistic director of Harlingen Concert Ballet, Inc. She was assistant rehearsal director for PCBA last season and has performed several guest soloist roles with the company.

Also serving as guest instructor will be Tom Pazik, resident director of the Maryland Ballet.

He began his dance training in Detroit and later studied in New York, where he was a dancer with the New York City Opera.

Pazik has extensive teaching credits, including Master Classes conducted while touring with the Atlanta Ballet. He was staff member of the Atlanta School of Ballet and has Been guest teacher for Boston Ballet, Sacramento Ballet, Gainesville Civic Ballet in Florida, and the Dance Arts Company in Houston.

In addition, he has been guest instructor at PCBA's summer workshop the past two years and has choreographed several PCBA productions.

Other aspects of Pazik's carreer include a background in both technical theater and musical comedy. He has taught costuming for Columbia University, New York University and the National Association for Regional Ballet. One of seven finalists in the 1978 Choreography Competition, Pazik's work is represented in the repertoires of many companies.

Volunteers help ballet association fulfill its purpose

The Permian Civic Ballet Association has very firm ideas about its purpose.

According the the group's bylaws, PCBA's goals are "to promote the art of dance in its highest cultural form, to encourage and promote interest in and enjoyment thereof, to furnish and to provide facilities for instruction therein; and to present concerts of high artisitic and professional standards."

PCBA produces two performances each year in which internationally known guest artists and local dancers perform. Since 1978, the Midland/Odessa Symphony Orchestra has provided music for most productions.

The association and its volunteers make all arrangements for the productions, taking on such tasks as sewing and fitting costumes, designing and building sets, collecting props and babysitting. Volunteers, who make productions possible, need not know anything about ballet — they don't don tutus.

PCBA also sponsors fall, spring and summer workshops in ballet, modern dance and character dance. Each is presented for junior, imtermediate, senior and senior adult levels. Most junior level students are 8 to 9 years old and have had some ballet training. Summer workshops are open to all interested dancers, with enrollment in spring and fall workshops reserved for PCBA members.

Auditions for membership in PCBA are conducted by the artistic director in fall and spring. Dancers are required to attend workshops and classes at local ballet studios. Some scholarships are available.

Local dancers to be featured

Featured in the upcoming Permian Civic Ballet Association production of "Cinderella" will be 20 young Midland women.

"Cinderella," the PCBA season finale, will be presented at 8 p.m. Thursday in the Lee High School Auditorium.

Kira Boyd, 14, will dance the waltz. She is also an eighth-grader at Goddard.

Dancing the role of Naughty Cat will be Sully Hunt, 15, a sophomore at MHS.

Appearing as Hungarian Princess and fairy will be Carolyn Britton, 16, an MHS sophomore.

Xan Cook, 16-year-old sophomore at MHS, will dance the role of Horse.

MHS junior Rebecca Russell, 17, will portray Irish Princess.

Performing the waltz and appearing as Horse will be Andrea-Lynn Comola, 13, an eighth-grader at Trinity School.

Also performing the waltz will be Tracy Logan, 16, and Jana Marburger, 16. Both are sophomores at MHS.

LHS junior Marsha Goodson, 17, will dance the role of Spanish Princess.

Dancing the waltz and Crystal Fairy will be Sandra Huxman, Texas Christian University graduate and Felmont Oil Corporation employee.

Also taking the role of Crystal Fairy will be Nancy Sumner, 14, a student at Midland Freshman High School.

LHS senior Karen Eberly, 17, will dance the roles of Scotch Princess and fairy.

Ballet actually two organizations

The Permian Civic Ballet is actually two separate organizations: Permian Civic Ballet Association and Permian Civic Ballet Guild.

The association was chartered in 1968, with the guild formed under association charter in 1975. PCBA, through its board of directors, is the administrative and technical arm of the organization. There are 35 persons on its board of directors.

The guild's purpose is to promote the growth of PCBA by providing organized volunteer services to foster interest in ballet, assist directors with their operations and raise funds. Among the services provided by guild members are fund-raising events; hospitality functions, such as housing guest artists and providing luncheons and receptions; mailing brochures; and selling tickets to performances.

The guild has 68 active members and 65 patrons.

Planned bor the 1984-85 season is a Christmas Bazaar. This fund-raising project, new to the Midland area, is scheduled for the fall of 1984.

Merchants and craftsmen from the Permian Basin, United States and several foreign countries will be invited to participate. This will provide a showcase not only for local merchants, but will provide shoppers with merchandise not readily available in this area.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Wizzard, Roadrunner take stage

By H.A. Tuck
Public Relations Director
Midland College

Both "stompers" and "rockers" should enjoy the concert that's scheduled this afternoon by two Midland College musical groups.

The Midland College Roadrunner Band, which plays country and bluegrass music, and MC's rock group, Wizzard, will perform in the Allison Fine Arts Building recital hall at 3 p.m.

There's no admission charge and the public is invited to attend. Commercial music instructor Ron Franklin is leader for both groups. The Roadrunner Band has been playing in a lot of places recently, following its formation last fall. Wizzard was put together this spring at the request of students.

Some folks might want to put together a picnic to enjoy the campus after that concert so they can be on hand early for Wayne Newton's Las Vegas show in Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. tonight.

Congratulations to Jack Moore, who teaches Defensive Driving Courses frequently for Midland College's Community Services Department. Jack was selected by the Texas Safety Association as the state's outstanding DDC instructor for the past year. Now retired from the City of Midland, Moore probably has taught more Defensive Driving Courses for MC than any other instructor...and he also periodically takes a continuing education course.

Final speaker for the 1983 Free Enterprise Lecture Series will make his presentation at 7 p.m. Thursday evening in the Allison Fine Arts Building Lecture hall. Dr. Drew McCoy, assistant professor of history at the University of Texas at Austin will speak. His topic is "Commerce, Virtue, and 'Free Enterprise': The Legacy of the American Revolution." Following his presentation, there will be a question-and-answer period and then a reception honoring Dr. McCoy.

The series has been interesting and informative. Thanks go to Dr. Will Morris, chairman of the cultural studies division, who served as series chairman. Working on the committee were Dr. Jay Dee Martin, Connie Ladd, Ed Poulter, and Ron Sweatt.

ACT IX, Theatre Midland's hard-working support group, is hosting its annual Antique Show and Sale Friday and Saturday in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. Past shows have included breath-taking exhibits of furniture, jewelry, oriental rugs, silver, crystal, and accessories. Even the manner in which ACT IX decorates Chap Center is exciting. The show is open both days from 10 a.m. until 8 p.m. and you can even enjoy their tea room for lunch or a light supper.

To see rare jewels of a different sort Friday and Saturday on the campus, just wander over to the tennis courts and watch the talented young players competing in the Region V junior college tennis tournament. In addition to the powerhouse teams from MC, Odessa College, South Plains College, and New Mexico Military Institute in this conference, there are strong teams entered from McLennan College, Cooke County College, and others in the Northern Conference. All of them will be vying for the top two team positions that will send them on next month to the National Junior College tennis championships in Ocala, Fla.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I watched Olivia Newton-John's special last year and I just loved her. Can you give me some information about her birthplace, age, background and future projects? Ricky Ellis, Pulaski, Va.

A. "Livvy" as she's known to her pals, was born in Cambridge, England (her father was teaching at the university there), but moved to Australia at the age of 5, so her father could take the job as headmaster of Ormond College in Melbourne. He was, naturally, less than thrilled when his daughter decided to drop out of school at 16.

She had a fairly unhappy childhood, stemming in large part from her parents' divorce when she was 10. But she had an outlet — singing.

She had to be pushed into entering her first talent contest, but she won — leading to a stint as "Lovely Livvy" on "The Happy Show," an afternoon TV show in Melbourne, when she was 15. Newton-John spent five years in England singing in clubs and on TV. The rest you probably know.

Her first hit record here in 1973, "Let Me Be There," won her a Grammy as Best Female Country Artist. She made her film debut here in 1978 with "Grease" and made her second film, "Xanadu," a flop, in 1980.

Olivia Newton-John

Because "Xanadu" was such a bomb ("I think I knew it was going to be while we were making it," she says, "but at that point, I couldn't do anything about it"), she wanted to be particularly careful about what film to go into next, so she's waited.

Now, later this spring, the 34-year-old Newton-John should start filming a romantic comedy, "Second Chance" with John Travolta. Then, perhaps she'll get to another project that's been on the boards for awhile — "Kangaroo," an adaptation of a D.H. Lawrence novel in which she would play a Sydney housewife in the 1920s opposite actor Bryan Brown. Otherwise, no new specials or albums planned at this point.

Elizabeth Taylor

HOW TO SPEND MONEY, LET ME COUNT THE WAYS...

Grandmothers are notoriously extravagant when it comes to gifts for their grandchildren and Elizabeth Taylor is certainly no exception — her gifts are just, naturally, that much more extravagant.

The first gift to daughter Maria's daughter Elizabeth was a huge stuffed elephant which had to be placed facing east — a superstition guaranteed to ensure success, Taylor believes. Maria thought it was swell, but she asked whether, maybe, she could get more practical presents: a sweater, a coat, that type of thing.

THIS WEEK'S MARLON BRANDO MOVIE FEE AWARD:

Sean Connery, who, fresh from earning his $5 million fee for his new James Bond film "Never Say Never Again," stopped off in Marseilles to put in an appearance in the film-in-production "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight." He played the Green Knight, but obviously didn't take that much time doing it: six days, $1 million.

Q. With the end of "M.A.S.H." I'm wondering what Alan Alda is going to do next. M. Ziegler, Torrington, Ct.

A. Don't worry, he plans to keep himself busy. First is a TV series which he's developing with producer Martin Bregman, based on his film "The Four Seasons," the story of the ups and downs in the friendship of three middle-aged couples. At this point, though, his participation will be strictly behind the cameras.

"The only member of the cast of the movie to repeat his role in the series should be Jack Weston," according to a spokesman for Alda. After that, he plans to act in two movies, which he's also planning to write and direct. Plots and titles haven't been decided yet.

Alan Alda

Q. Can you tell me how Debbie Allen got started in singing and dancing and what advice she would give anyone who wants to break into the business? Carmen Escabar, Decatur, Ill.

A. Debbie didn't originally plan to go into singing-dancing; she originally trained for ballet, joining the Houston Ballet at 14, and then, while studying classics at Howard University, the National Ballet School in Washington D.C.

While performing at the New London Dance Festival during her college years, however, she saw Alvin Ailey's modern dance troupe, realized there was more to dance than just classical ballet, and tried to leave college and join Ailey.

Her father, a dentist, wouldn't let her. But upon graduation, she moved to New York, tried out for chorus jobs in Broadway shows, got a few — in shows "Raisin" and "Purlie" — and gradually worked her way up into the starring roles in shows. Her "Anita" in "West Side Story" a few years back was praised as a real sizzler.

One thing also about Debbie is that she's earned a reputation as a bona fide trouper — a few years back, in "Purlie" in Philadelphia, she was hit by a car while going out for a sandwich during intermission and rushed to a hospital, was treated, and was back on stage by the finale.

That's basically how to sum up her advice: "My mother always told us we were talented," she says, "and with that talent, that there are no limits or boundaries. But it's more than that — you have to work for what you get, work hard for it and all the time. So take advantage of any theatrical situations to practice — community theater, church productions. Study as much as you possibly can, know where your strength is and then develop it, work."

piper as descendants of this hardy race. In cold climates, too, adipose was an advantage for survival.

Why is dieting difficult for some, while others manage to have their cake and eat it too... including second helpings? The answer may lie in a theory known as "set point." Your set point is the weight your body hovers about when you're not dieting.

A high set point may doom you to perpetually losing the battle of the bulge, but it's comforting to be able to shrug off the guilt of gluttony and blame your metabolism.

Carefully designed field research has documented, for example, that no differences exist in eating style between obese and normal-weight women. In 1980, Dr. Stunkard studied the eating styles of both groups eating identical meals in a fast-food restaurant. His researchers found no differences between the two groups in terms of speed of eating, number of chews and amount consumed.

Set-point regulation may reside in a portion of the brain known as the hypothalamus. Other factors also influence body weight, including a whole host of physiological mechanisms. Some are: proportion of brown fat tissue, production of the hormone insulin, deficiency of an enzyme known as ATPase, gut hormones that send signals of satiety (a mechanism that turns off hunger), brain chemicals called neurotransmitters, and the number and size of body fat cells. Exercise and the consumption of amphetamine drugs, on the other hand, can act to reduce the set point.

A team of M.I.T. researchers, Richard and Judith Wurtman, have run experiments that lead them to speculate that high-protein diets may actually generate carbohydrate cravings by lowering levels of brain serotonin (a neurotransmitter). High-protein diet plans — Atkins, Scarsdale, Stillman are popular examples — thus may bear the onus for those midnight trips to the refrigerator.

Dieting can be dangerous, too. Lean body mass is lost, in addition to fat, on very restrictive regimens. Liquid protein formulas have been cited in the past for resulting in some deaths due to heart arrhythmias.

Dr. Theodore Van Itallie, of the St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital Obesity Research Center in New York, observes that one patient lost nearly 19 percent of his lean body mass on a diet of 600 calories a day.

With fat activists publicizing research statistics that show diets don't work, it seems inevitable that we should begin to cast our eyes back in time to a period when all belles were buxom. For nearly 400 years (1500 to 1900) fat femmes ruled the roost. Remember Lillian Russell? Her glamorous hourglass figure tipped the scale at over 200 pounds.

Native peoples of primitive lands still think flab is flattering. In Africa and some South Sea islands, status and wealth have long been synonymous with obesity. You can bet throne sizes come wider than airline seats!

Americans are gradually growing fatter, too. Metropolitan Life Insurance Company publishes tables of "desirable" weights based upon pooled industry statistics on policy holders. The company published revised tables in 1983 that are 10 to 15 pounds above the weights listed in its 1959 tables.

The fashion industry is not one to miss a trick capitalizing on a trend. When an industry survey disclosed that there were 30 million fat women out there with nothing to buy but cheap "bullet-proof" polyester pants suits, designers scurried to make amends... and big bucks.

When Nancye Radman opened a large-size boutique in New York City five years ago, she called it The Forgotten Woman. Now Radman has six branch stores. She billowed from a size 4 to a size 20 after a pregnancy, and decided to stay that way. "My customers trust me," she says. "We eat, drink, and we're merry. Did you ever try to laugh on a diet?"

It no longer seems shocking to flip through a feature on fashions and spot a size 20 model, but when Mary Duffy opened an agency devoted exclusively to extra-large models, it was a first in the industry.

"Why are large women told to wear only vertical stripes and dark shades?" asks Duffy. Large women can wear any style or color. "Dark shades won't make you look thinner, just dull or depressed."

Pat Swift is a large, striking woman who owns the Plus Models Agency. She started out working as a store detective. While prowling for shoplifters, she was "discovered" by some Jonathan Logan reps who asked her to model their woman's line on location. The location turned out to be St. Thomas, and it was December in New York. Swift didn't take long to think it over. Swift's agency now employs 35 voluptuous "plus" models, and she just co-authored a beauty book for the full-figured woman.

Carole Shaw is another big woman with big ambitions. The biggest was publishing a magazine called "Big Beautiful Woman." "BBW" just celebrated its fourth anniversary with a circulation of 300,000. Shaw also sells a line of BBW-label fashions through J.C. Penney, has published a book, and has just finished a pilot for a coast-to-coast TV talk show.

Shaw weighs 200 pounds and wears a size 22. "After 30 years of dieting," says Shaw, "the only thing that stayed thin was my hair." Shaw describes her book, "Come Out, Come Out Wherever You Are," as a "survival guide" full of "snappy comebacks to dumb cracks."

When it's time for a positive portrait for "plus"-sizes, "It's Me" has the photos. The magazine, started by the Lane Bryant retail chain in 1981, was recently acquired by a Texas publisher.

"It's Me" specializes in fashion, food and beauty pointers for big women and runs an ongoing contest to select a reader-cover girl for future issues. Editor Bruce Clerke reports that each contest announcement draws over 2,000 photographs.

Big women continue to apologize for their girth. "Would you be flattered to resemble Marilyn Monroe?" asks author-therapist Kim Chernin ("The Obsession," "Reflections on the Tyranny of Slenderness"). Yet, Chernin observes, when M.M. filmed "Some Like it Hot" in 1959, "she was voluptuous, as large as a woman in a painting by Renoir... She was, by modern standards, fat."

Since dieting usually doesn't work, at least let the fatties of this world unite in the splendors of the full-figured woman celebrated in the paintings of Rubens and Renoir, the Mae Wests and Marilyn Monroes, and the big beautiful models of newsstand glossies.■

Free To Be Fat

By Frances Gallogly

How many times have you been on a diet and failed? Do lost pounds just seem to roll back on despite the cottage cheese and mountains of celery sticks? Do you envy friends who pack away cheesecake and never gain a pound, while you put five or six on just nibbling one chocolate chip cookie?

If this describes you, take heart. You're not alone out there. Buried beneath that avalanche of diet books and pill and powder panaceas promising to make you look like Cheryl Tiegs in three weeks or "guarantee your money back" (but don't try to collect) are statistics that show that 95 to 98 percent of all diets fail.

"The failure rate for diets is about the same as for heroin addiction," says Cornell University psychologist and nutrition researcher David A. Levitsky.

The health risks of obesity have also been overrated. Studies by Dr. Ancel Keys, a nutritionist at the University of Minnesota, and Dr. Reubin Andres of Johns Hopkins University suggest that people who are 10 to 20 percent above "desirable" weight may be the healthiest.

Dr. Albert J. Stunkard, psychiatrist and researcher at the University of Pennsylvania, concurs that the widespread emphasis on dieting has been unfortunate for most overweight people and "for a small number it has been disastrous."

Now some fat people have decided to dump out the diet books and pass on the pills. It's welcome, once more, to the hearty appetite — let's pick up the fork and knife and resume eating.

They're donning buttons that read "Fat Power," "Fat People Unite — You Have Nothing to Lose," and buying XL-sized T-shirts inscribed, "No person should be discriminated against because of the shape of her skin."

Some have joined an organization called NAAFA, National Association to Aid Fat Americans. Founded in 1969 by William J. Fabrey, a thin man who admired fat people, the organization has over 1,500 members in chapters scattered throughout the U.S. and Canada.

"A person's worth and ability cannot be measured with a scale and tape measure," Fabrey declared in a speech marking his group's 10th anniversary in 1979. "Fat is not a four-letter word. It is an adjective like short, tall, thin, or blond." Society gives it a derogatory connotation.

NAAFA offers members support, health information, social events, pen pals, a dating bureau, even anthropometric (seating measurements and comfort) research. It also serves as a lobby to back legislation and fight discrimination in such crucial considerations as employment, college admissions and insurance policy criteria.

Shoulder to shoulder with organizations like NAAFA stand militant fat feminist groups preaching big can be beautiful too. Fat oppression is "looks" discrimination, say these feminists, who place the blame squarely upon a patriarchal society's penchant to keep women small and powerless.

"Fat people are an oppressed minority exploited and persecuted by the food, diet and medical industries which profit from our socialized feelings of inferiority," writes Connecticut feminist and fat activist Vivian Mayer. "We are brought up on the old principle that you have to suffer to be beautiful," she continues. "The amount of pain is a matter of degree."

Berkeley feminist artist Judith Masur painfully recalls getting diet and thyroid pills at eight years of age to lose weight. Now, Masur celebrates the beauty of fat women through a line of note cards she markets in women's bookstores. Her "Big Woman" notecards depict fat women dancing, cooking and celebrating social occasions.

Masur reports that San Francisco's fat feminist activists sponsor theatricals, swim clubs, "Fat Fridays" for the arts, and participated in a conference held last October at the University of California at Berkeley called "Fear of Fatness" where an all-woman panel discussed the issues of body weight, self-esteem and eating disorders.

Carole Shaw, editor of "Big Beautiful Woman" Magazine

Why the emphasis among feminists on dieting when obesity is not a gender-related characteristic? While both men and women are fat, militant weight watching seems to be a female obsession. Weight-watching groups are predominantly female. So, too, are the victims of the eating disorders, anorexia nervosa and bulimia. Both are believed to stem from obsessive fear of fatness and, as such, are really the "flip" side of obesity.

Anorexia, or self-starvation, peaks in late adolescence. Nearly 90 percent of its victims are female. Bulimia is a syndrome of binge-eating followed by self-induced vomiting or laxative or diuretic abuse. It is epidemic among women on college campuses. Bulimia is often preceded by dieting.

Dr. Susan C. Wooley, co-director of the Clinic for Eating Disorders at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine, treats obesity, anorexia and bulimia through psychotherapy, not dieting. Weight is probably distributed normally in a bell-shaped curve like all other physical characteristics, explains Wooley. The trouble is that "everyone wants to be in the lower 10 percent."

Cornell professor Levitsky agrees with Wooley. People diet to conform to a super-thin image we're bombarded with, he protests. "Maybe instead of pointing the finger at fat tissue, we should point the finger at Madison Avenue."

Scientists once believed that emotional problems produced obesity. Now they think that those problems themselves can actually stem from continuous dieting with its repeated failures and what is known as the "yo-yo" syndrome, the ups and downs of weight loss and gain. Yo-yoing may actually lead to additional weight gain and contribute to hardening of the arteries.

Some of us may inherit a tendency to be fat. Anthropologists theorize that storing up fat helped our ancestors survive precarious periods of famine. We now pay the

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, April 25, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Singer extraordinaire Ella Fitzgerald, Supreme Court Justice William Brennan Jr., Academy Award-winning actor Al Pacino, basketball's Meadowlark Lemon, actress Talia Shire and golf's Jerry Barber celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: inventor Guglielmo Marconi, Oliver Cromwell, baseball great Fred Haney and newsman Edward R. Murrow. Someone else's bad luck gives you your big break. A job opening could be the chance of a lifetime. Do your best! When you volunteer to tackle the big problems, you win the boss' respect. Skip the middlemen and deal directly with those in charge. A carefully thought out romantic alliance brings lasting happiness.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your concern over a new job assignment is natural, but unnecessary. Use all of your skills and you will be successful. Selling a family heirloom alleviates financial stress.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your style wins you new converts. Avoid too much self-analysis. It slows you down and provides few if any answers. Follow your heart where family matters are concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Travel leads to changes in career and lifestyle. A break with tradition may make business more successful. Find practical applications for bright ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your productivity rises when you stick to a schedule. Part-time work helps pay household bills. Romantic games prove fun. Set aside time to reflect on what you are doing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Love becomes a top priority now. You are happiest when with mate. A phone call brings information that helps you achieve greater financial success.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep careful expense records. If questioned, you will have the answers you need. A lunch with business associates produces interesting ideas.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put business ahead of personal needs this week. The energy you expend on your career now will bring rewards for years to come. A new love enters your life at dinner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The financial outlook brightens. Rely on those who have been loyal through thick and thin. Your business interests change. Do not be swayed by the words of an insincere co-worker.

When Your Teen Falls in Love

By Antonia van der Meer

You remember what it was like the first time you fell in love... the heady feelings, the fun times, the little disappointments. Now you're married and your children are growing up and suddenly you see them going through some of the same things you did — first dates and first love.

It's an exciting time for you and for your son or daughter. It can be a time for sharing and closeness. It can also be a time of worry and uncertainty for you.

Questions and doubts come to mind from the first time you send your child out on a date. "Is he good enough for her?" "Should I set a curfew?" "Will my child become sexually involved with his or her date?" "If I try to talk to my child about her feelings, will she think I'm prying?"

All these things and more worry the parent. But there are things you can do to lessen the worries and lessen the likelihood of your child being hurt by that first romantic relationship.

Open the lines of communication. Your child should feel free to come to you with any questions or problems. It's important to be open to their needs.

"When I was a teen, my mother was very closed about love and sex," says a 45-year-old woman from Massachusetts. "I didn't even know what menstruation was until I got my first period." Then she goes on to say, "So now I try to be very open with my kids. No matter what questions they ask or what subjects they want to discuss, I listen to what they say."

It's wise to leave the lines of communication open this way. If your children feel that they can talk with you about anything and everything, they're less likely to be confused about the family's values.

"Sex and other topics should be brought up freely in family situations," says Dr. Lucille K. Forer, a clinical psychologist in Los Angeles. "These topics are on TV and in magazines. You should be there to answer their questions as they see and hear about them."

Sometimes, though, even if you've kept the lines of communication open, you may have to wait patiently for your child to come and confide in you. Says one New York City mother, "My daughter keeps saying that I don't tell her what's on my mind about her boyfriends. But when I do try to say anything or ask questions, she backs off."

"It can be a ticklish situation," says Dr. Selma Miller, a family therapist in New York. "You have to listen to what the teen is saying and go at her speed." The mother in the above situation is going to have to be patient and wait silently. "Given the chance, most kids will eventually come out with what's on their minds," says Miller.

When your child does decide to talk, listen carefully. Set aside a quiet time when the two of you can talk and not be interrupted. "If you've got 10 people to dinner and can't take time out, be sure that you make it clear that you're interested and concerned. Plan to chat later when you can concentrate on what's being said," advises Miller.

During the talk ask yourself what she's saying to you and what she's asking you. Be guided by that. She may only want you to lend an ear. If so, don't make the mistake of trying to solve her problem.

One New York teen complains, "Whenever I have a problem with with Greg, Mom jumps right in with the solution. And the solution is always that Greg has acted like a jerk and that I'm beautiful and smart and can get any guy I want.

"Somehow that doesn't help. I'd rather that she would just hear me out. Usually it's only a small problem that disappears by the next day anyway." As in this case, help from a parent is not always needed. Listening sympathetically can be enough.

It's also important that both parents be involved in communication with the child. Frequently a girl feels more comfortable talking with her mother about love and sex. Likewise, a boy may prefer to chat with his father. But both parents, when possible, should be there for the kids. "Sometimes one parent is just easier to talk with than the other," says Miller.

experienced discrimination in my life, I'm a lot more at home preaching to this congregation because of the personal meaning of the themes of liberation.

"God cares for those of us who are powerless people in so many arenas — politically, socially, economically. For disenfranchised people, God has the word of hope. But to the powerful people, God's word is not hope as much as it is judgment.

"It's two flip sides of the same coin. When you're preaching to the 'haves,' it seems that God's word is 'to whom much is given, much is required.' "

Mary John Dye is as direct on this topic from the pulpit. Her eyes shine as she warms to the subject. "It is one of the blessings of preaching to the black people here who have been through these tremendous experiences of oppression and who still experience what it means to be put down and devalued on such an irrational basis as color of skin: You don't have to build a case for the need for God. Who needs God when you've got everything you want?

"I feel like I'm working with more finely tuned spiritual sensitivities. Because of so many unfortunate situations, there's a great receptivity and a hunger among us because we want to know what God is doing next.

"On the other hand, people who have power may not be so eager to know what God wants them to do next because its more likely to cost them rather than to free them."

Dye's sensitivity to the problem of discrimination is genuine. It hasn't been easy as a minority in her profession. She is strong-willed and outspoken, traits that have been threatening to some male clergy, in her seminary years and beyond.

Her father, who is a Methodist minister in Kentucky, has been a challenge. "He supports me because I am his daughter, but I still don't think he's convinced that women ought to take on the ministry as senior pastors. He was just as skeptical about the value of my sister's tuition to medical school."

Mary John Dye's husband of 12 years, Millsaps, is a campus minister at Delta State University in nearby Cleveland, Mississippi. His support has been crucial to Mary John. The couple lives next door to Millsaps' office near campus, so he often takes primary responsibility for their two daughters, Cristi, 8, and Mary Allen, 5.

The Dyes have worked together in a joint appointment as campus ministers at Mississippi State University, but Millsaps is quick to admit that separate churches for each of them has worked best, leaving the possibility for conflict exclusively to the home front.

Several times a week, Mary John drives the 25 miles to Indianola alone, through pecan groves, alongside broad, cultivated fields dotted in the distance by ramshackle houses where the field laborers live. The familiar Delta scene is broken occasionally by a manicured lawn surrounding the expansive brick or colonial home of a farm owner.

She does not worry for her own safety as the representative of a new order in a community still marked by brittle poverty and the patronizing attitudes of the old Southern way of life.

"People don't miss my comings and goings when I'm out in the community visiting my members. When I get out of the car, I can see curtains drawn back from windows — people watch me come down the street. Among the whites in town, most people have either been too polite or too disturbed to say anything.

"One white lady did ask me if I was some kind of missionary. I thought that was pretty tacky. On the whole, though, I feel protected by my high visibility." The red clerical outfit is not easily missed either.

"I believe that generally, women are less afraid of life than men," says Prentiss Gordon, the Methodist official who took the risk and responsibility for Dye's ground-breaking appointment to the all-black church.

Gordon is a native Mississippian in his late 50s. He is candid and visionary in his approach to this delicate issue. "The appointment poses a double whammy. It puts a white in a black environment, and it puts a woman in a traditionally male-dominated position.

"But actually it presents a double opportunity for us. It gives the children in this church who are not so wounded by the long history of racism here, to see a white person in a benevolent leadership role. And, it gives us a chance to incorporate the female side of life into our Christian belief, which we have not yet successfully done in the Protestant Church.

"Mary John has the strength of personality, the sense of her own self-worth, to disagree when she needs and to take a stand, but she is also able to be genuinely compassionate and concerned with the lives of her people. It is not a sweet, overcompensating approach which I see many white male preachers affect in order to present what we have traditionally thought of as the 'female side' of a personality.

"In the next 30 to 40 years — because that's how long its going to take — you're going to see women have an enormous influence in the Methodist ministry. And we need that influence desperately to be whole persons."

According to Prentiss Gordon, the precedent set by Mary John Dye in Indianola will require that similar and reciprocal appointments follow. A black minister may soon be serving a white congregation in this region that was once torn by a degree of conflict that made such a possibility unthinkable.

Somehow it seems paradoxically fitting that such a quiet miracle should happen in this land of stark contrasts and historical conflict. The church's daring appointment was no mistake. But certainly, it took a special person with the sensibility and fearlessness of Mary John Dye, and an open-minded and tolerant group like the people of Rasberry Chapel to make the match work.

Reverend Dye and her small group of 68 church members are proud to be pioneers. Mary John will finish her first year at Rasberry in June. The congregation has asked her to stay, pledging to double her part-time salary. She plans to continue her work in Indianola. "I wasn't born a minute too soon — not a minute!" she says with grace and a lingering measure of amazement. ■

French book investigates myth of American people

PARIS (AP) — In a country where feelings about the United States range from envy and admiration to fascination and contempt, a book on the American way of life has been on France's best seller list since it first appeared in early March.

"Les Americains," by French journalist Leo Sauvage, is a 766-page book which takes on everyone from late vice president Nelson Rockefeller, a symbol of American capitalism, and the late actress, Marilyn Monroe, a sex symbol, to the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Ku Klux Klan.

The voluminous work touches on such obvious and odd tidbits of American life as ice water being the national beverage, and teen-age girls yearning to become drum majorettes.

"Les Americains" has earned high praise from French literary critics, and some have even compared Sauvage to Alexis de Tocqueville, the 19th century French politician and man of letters whose writings on America have become a classic.

Subtitled "Investigation Into a Myth," the book avoids generalizations. Sauvage, who's spent 30 years as a correspondent for the Figaro, Paris' leading conservative daily, lets the facts and figures of more than 800 vignettes speak for themselves.

Along the way, he entertains his French readers with a variety of funny, poignant and serious stories. He writes about how New Yorkers in 1968 crowded onto Wall Street during the noon hour to try to catch a glimpse of Francine Gottfried, a 23-year-old key punch operator with a 43-inch bust. He tells the story of how in 1953, National Guardsmen broke up a Mormon community in Arizona.

He also writes that French descendants in New Orleans were big contributors to the Ku Klux Klan, and that the sister of a former president is a faith healer.

For Sauvage, the United States is the land of smiling cheerleaders, hamburgers and cars. But he also sees it as a place of union corruption, factory recalls, unmarked bus routes and dangerous subway systems.

But some French critics familiar with the United States say Sauvage, a 63-year-old resident of Manhattan's Upper West Side, is sometimes off the mark.

"His background as a leftist militant caused him to completely misunderstand the American Civil Liberties Union," Le Monde wrote, referring to Sauvage's emphasis on the ACLU's defense of American Nazis and the Klan.

While many French readers have criticized Sauvage for his "lack of indulgence" for the people he claims to love, others have been shocked by the book's emphasis on money, a subject which is considered taboo among the French.

But the author who calls Mark Twain his inspiration, tells his readers that the truth about money in the United States is that "the dollar provides a measuring stick which is applied to everything and everyone — beauty, health, intelligence, scientific merit and even patriotism."

Minister Mary John Dye:
More Than a Pioneer

Methodist minister Mary John Dye

By Georgann Eubanks

Mary John Dye doesn't look like a minister. She's an attractive 5-foot-2-inch, 32-year-old mother of two. She's fond of sky blue eyeshadow and deep red fingernail polish which matches the bold red clerical blouse she often wears under a sweater jacket woven in a wild, South American Indian motif. She's been kidded about the flashy fashions, but the wardrobe is small testimony to the colorful nature of her ministry.

Mary John Dye is white. Her predominantly middle-class congregation at the Rasberry Chapel United Methodist Church in Indianola, Mississippi is entirely black.

Women serving as ordained clergy are a relatively new phenomenon in most denominations in this country. Out of a total of 35,000 Methodist pastors in the United States, less than five percent are female. Cross-racial appointments are practically unheard of, and for Mississippi, Mary John Dye is more than a pioneer.

Indianola, Mississippi has been in the news before. At the peak of civil rights activity in the '60s, a black plantation worker named Fannie Lou Hamer risked her livelihood and her life to register to vote in Sunflower County, which is also home to Senator James O. Eastland, who fought desegregation with a fervor.

Mrs. Hamer's cause received national attention at the 1964 Democratic convention where she spoke with eloquent passion about the plight of blacks who sought and were denied their right to representation in the Mississippi delegation. Today, Fannie Lou Hamer is a legend in Indianola. So is B.B. King, who returns to his hometown every year to give a musical lesson in the blues at the local high school or at Club Ebony, a sagging speakeasy just around the corner and down the street from the contemporary brick building where Mary John Dye preaches.

Indianola is the seat of Sunflower County in the poorest congressional district in the nation, surrounded by the flat, fertile, and easily flooded land of the Mississippi Delta. Catfish and cotton are the main industries. The contrasts between rich and poor, educated and illiterate, laborer and boss, and between neighborhoods divided by the proverbial railroad tracks are stark and halting. It is foreign territory to those on the outside looking in.

And it is here that Reverend Dye has found herself welcomed with a graciousness and eagerness among her black parishioners that would not likely be duplicated were the racial configuration reversed. Dye has raised some eyebrows. But ironically, most of the comments have focused on her gender and not her color — among both blacks and whites in Indianola.

A senior layman from the white Methodist church in town, speaking as a guest at Rasberry Chapel just before Dye took over, said to the congregation, "You all are so much ahead of us. I still need to pray about having a woman for a preacher."

And Robert Love, a lay leader in Dye's church, said that a few of the older ladies in the congregation expressed some doubt about having a woman take charge, but their rumblings subsided when the new pastor took the pulpit and demonstrated her abilities.

Sitting in her tiny office behind the sanctuary, Dye laughs about her initiation: "On my first Sunday here I taught the children a song called 'God is a Surprise.' I told the adults that God is not always predictable. I said, 'If you think you're surprised to have a white lady pastor, believe me, I'm just as surprised!' And so we started in this together, with a healthy sense of humor."

"Reverend Dye is a very strong leader," Robert Love explains. "And I think because she is a woman, she has an especially deep concern for the lives of our people on a day-to-day basis.

"Some male ministers we've had seemed to approach their work beyond Sunday services as just 'doing their duty' — setting up a routine for running by the hospital and visiting the jail. But Mary John is sincerely concerned with the total lives of her parishioners, and that is what I believe the church is all about."

Reverend Dye has already ruffled some political feathers. When a member of the church was struck by an automobile on the street, she complained to local government about the blatant absence of sidewalks in the black neighborhood around her church.

"We have children walking down these streets in droves on school days, and there are no sidewalks at all. It really gripes me!"

Another animated member of Rasberry, Isabel Lee, drew attention to her pastor's political efforts: "She devoted tremendous energy, lobbying on behalf of a bill in the Mississippi State Legislature which just passed in December of last year." The law provides for statewide kindergartens, creates a reading aid program, furnishes a substantial teacher pay-raise and makes schooling mandatory.

"The law will go a long way in pulling Mississippi out of last place in these categories in the nation. She encouraged us to write and call our representatives. She must have written a hundred letters herself."

Dye, in fact, encouraged the bishop in Mississippi to phone and write every Methodist legislator just prior to the vote. A crucial tie was broken in subcommittee by one of these contacts.

By stirring the consciences of some members of the local community, Dye found a prominent white businessman who was ready to help in her ministry beyond the altar. This merchant has donated $5,000 to start a tutoring program for disadvantaged school children. All the tutors are members of the Rasberry congregation who work as teachers and administrators in local public schools.

"She looks at church as more than preaching on Sunday," says Eugene Snipes, a handsome young man whose children sing in the new children's choir Dye directs. "She campaigned for Robert Clark when he ran for Congress last year." Robert Clark, a black educator and state legislator, lost to a white Republican, Webb Franklin, in a close contest fraught with racial overtones.

Mary John Dye's brand of theology is appropriate to her circumstances. "You know there's not a person in my church who has not been overtly discriminated against. And as a woman who has

Dr. Lucille Forer gives an example of the need for male and female perspectives. "My son once asked his dad, 'I know what we like about girls, but what do they like about us?' " When both parents have input, the child gets a balanced view.

Get to know your child's date. Some parents prejudge their child's choice and may dislike the person for no real reason. Marie, a California mother of two teens, says, "My husband and I didn't really know Donald's girl but for some reason, we weren't too fond of her. My husband used to call her 'the pipe cleaner' because she's so skinny.

"Then we had dinner with her and found out she's really quite nice." Then Marie adds, "I'm glad we took the time to find out."

It's extremely important that you do take the time to find out about your child's choice. In Marie's case, spending some time with her son's girlfriend helped to change her opinion of the girl. Invite the girl or boy over for a meal or at least have a chat before the two head off on their date.

"You don't have to pursue this intensely, but you should meet and talk with the girl or boy you're child is dating," says Dr. Miller. It will help you later when you try to talk with your child about the relationship. And you'll feel better knowing something about the person your child spends so much time with.

Don't be overly critical. Of course you have to say something if you think that your child's choice is a bad one, but you should do so carefully. Don't harp on the subject or you could destroy the lines of communication you worked so hard to create.

One teen, Susan, found herself backed into a corner by sharp criticism. "My mom says only negative things about Tom. His grades are poor; he drives too fast; he doesn't dress well. She has a point but I'm not going to give in to her and quit seeing him. After all, he has some good qualities too."

People do not like to have their taste criticized. In fact, "open criticism will only make the teen rebel or close you off," says Dr. Forer.

You may inadvertently push the child to the point where she will continue seeing the person you dislike even if she agrees with your opinion of him. To break up with him would be to lose the battle against you and admit she was wrong. You may end up pushing the child deeper into the relationship you'd like her to get out of.

"Instead of trying to push opinions down Susan's throat, Susan's mother should have simply pointed out her reservations about the boy and then asked Susan, 'Do you have any of the same feelings?' " advises Dr. Miller. This way, the teen has the chance to come around by herself.

"After you've put some questions in the teen's mind, leave her alone to think things out by herself," says Dr. Forer. "Sometimes you have to sit back and let your child experiment. Eventually, she'll return to the values you've instilled in her."

In general, asking questions is a good way to let your child know that you're worried about something without having to use accusatory or condemning remarks. For example, instead of saying to Susan, "John gets lousy grades. I'll bet he never studies," say something like, "How does John feel about school and how do you feel about it?" Once the conversation has begun in a non-threatening way, you can talk freely.

Be willing to share your past experiences with your child. When it's relevant, it's nice to share some of your own memories of past romances with your son or daughter. It helps to let them know they're not alone in their feelings.

"When I was 14, I was stood up by my date for a school dance," says Terri, now in her early 20s. "The only thing that salvaged the evening and my ego was my mother.

"She told me about the time a boy stood her up. She even remembered what dress she wore — a green-and-white summer dress. She told me that she didn't wear the dress again for a long time after that because she thought it might be bad luck. That made me laugh and I felt better," she says.

"A teen in love is doing something pretty basic," says Dr. Forer. The feelings you had when you were a teen are still pretty relevant today. "But remember, you are of a different generation," says Dr. Forer. "In your day, falling in love may have entailed a little kissing, while today it can mean sex, or at least having to consider it."

There are, of course, times when it's better not to bring up your own experiences. If you're not careful, you may end up doing all the talking and reminiscing and not enough listening.

"By saying 'I know how it feels,' you may be switching off your youngster's feelings and only addressing your own," says Dr. Miller. Be careful how and when you bring up the past.

Don't belittle the hurt at the end of the affair. A teen's first love is very important. You should be careful not to treat your child's feelings lightly or superficially. After all, you still remember your first love, don't you?

"First love changes your self-image," says Dr. Miller. "During the experience, you begin to get a sense of yourself and your sexuality."

If you help your child through this time with as much happiness and as little hurt as possible, it will do a lot to help her face her next relationship with confidence. The most constructive thing you can do for your son or daughter is to simply let them know you're there for them.

"Tell them you feel badly and wish you could take the hurt away but that you can't," says Dr. Miller. Just being there to bake some cookies with your daughter or catch a movie with your son will make them feel less alone.

Actually, "They have plenty of company! Falling in and out of love is a part of growing up — for everyone," says Dr. Forer. ■

Check tires before 'going on road again'

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

The Tire Industry Safety Council notes that recommended pressure is printed on the side of tires, and they should be kept fully inflated. Using a vehicle with soft tires will mean a trip to the dealer for repairs or replacement sooner than planned, the council says. And soft tires can be dangerous.

When you check the tires, if one needs a lot more air than the others, have a dealer check for a leak, a bent rim or possibly a damaged valve.

Consumers are being warned to use caution if solicited to invest in oil and gas lease lotteries.

High pressure telephone sales pitches for these investments have been reported in 33 states, according to an alert from the Better Business Bureaus and the North American Securities Administrators Association.

The federal Bureau of Land Management operates lotteries six times a year on leases for the mineral rights under federal land. Any citizen can participate for a $75 filing fee.

News to Use

Some firms are charging as much as $300 to make a filing for an individual, suggesting they can pick areas others may not be aware of.

However, the securities warning notes that the majority of the leases have little or no market value, and hundreds of bids are received for the more promising ones.

For example, when mineral rights were offered for 500 parcels of land last November, 120,000 entries were received.

If contacted by a firm offering such a service, the securities group suggests checking your state securities commissioner for background on the company before making an investment.

They also urge asking for as much detail as possible, in writing, such as the number of customers of the firm who have participated in lease lotteries, and how many have succeeded in winning leases. Also ask why the firm thinks it can find a good, overlooked, property to lease and beware of firms with names that try to sound like government agencies.

Biofeedback: An Update

By Anne C. Highland, Ph.D.

Dismissed by some as an expensive toy, its greatest use now is to treat stress-related ailments.

When biofeedback first made headlines, it generated high hopes. It seemed as if technology had at last come to rescue us from pain and suffering. When these hopes crashed, as all unrealistic hopes must, then biofeedback was dismissed as just another expensive toy.

Meanwhile, serious research was going on, with unglamorous data analysis and follow-up studies. Now we can evaluate what biofeedback is and what it is not. Contrary to popular belief, biofeedback instruments do not change the body's functioning; instead, they monitor it. Biofeedback is a form of teaching.

Using biofeedback, we can become sensitive to subtle body signals arising from very slight changes in our own physiology. Once we are aware of these signals, we can learn to control certain body functions so as to lose a painful symptom or to regain a lost ability.

Although biofeedback has proven effective in helping people gain control over a variety of physiological functions formerly thought to be purely involuntary, its greatest use at present seems to be in treating stress-related ailments.

Research suggests that people who have headaches, high blood pressure, jaw clenching (bruxism), or muscle spasms as a result of prolonged stress are likely to be helped by biofeedback therapy if they are willing to take an active role in regaining and maintaining good health.

Biofeedback alone teaches the person how to gain voluntary control over the symptom, and the therapeutic procedures that often accompany biofeedback help the person become aware of why the problem occurred and how such problems might be prevented in the future.

There are several types of biofeedback equipment, all of which monitor body signals and feed information about extremely small changes in body functioning back to the patient either by an auditory signal, consisting of a variable tone or set of beeps, or by a visual display, which is often a light bar that fluctuates with the body signal being measured.

The most common biofeedback instrument is the electromyograph, or EMG, which measures muscle tension. Three electrodes, two active electrodes and one ground, are placed on the surface of the skin, held in place by adhesive tape or an adjustable band.

For headache control, electrodes are usually placed either on the forehead or near the back of the neck. For other problems, such as spasms in the lower back, electrodes may either be placed on the particular muscle or be attached to both wrists, where they monitor the tension in a large group of muscles of the torso.

EMG biofeedback is usually used to teach a person how to relax a muscle or muscle group when excessive tension causes unpleasant symptoms. However, it also is being used in some rehabilitation centers for the opposite problem: In cases of paralysis, when there is some residual function in the muscle, biofeedback can help the patient learn how to increase the tension of the muscle and sometimes even regain use of the muscle.

Another common biofeedback instrument is the temperature trainer. A small sensor is fastened by adhesive to the body, usually to a fingertip. The temperature trainer is sensitive to temperature changes of hundredths of a degree, so the patient can become aware of extremely slight changes in finger temperature. This sensitivity makes it easier to learn to warm the hands.

Changing the temperature in parts of our bodies may sound impossible until we consider that our blood vessels are surrounded by tiny muscles. If they are contracted, the blood flow to that organ or part of the body is reduced; if they are relaxed, the blood flow increases.

The tension in these tiny muscles is not usually under voluntary control, although there are scientifically documented reports of the ability of certain Indian yogis who have gained this kind of control over parts of their circulatory systems. Temperature training with biofeedback can give a person voluntary control of this normally involuntary function.

People under chronic stress may find that their hands are often cold; "cold feet" is an expression based on the same physiologic pattern. For people troubled with excessively cold hands and feet, temperature training alone may be indicated.

Some migraine sufferers report that their hands get cold just before the headache starts, so learning to raise the hand temperature can help them abort the headache. Temperature training is often used in addition to EMG training for people with problems arising from muscle tension and with general emotional hyper-arousal.

Other biofeedback instruments measure other physiological changes. The Galvanic Skin Response or GSR measures changes in sweat gland activity and is the best-known instrument in lie-detector testing. The EEG monitors brain-wave activity, and other instruments monitor heart rate and blood pressure. In some cases, special instruments are developed to treat unusual disorders like poor sphincter control.

The majority of biofeedback patients seek this therapy because they have ailments resulting from prolonged stress. When our ancestors had to fight for their lives or flee, those who had responsive bodies were more likely to survive.

Today, when the dangers we face are usually threats to our emotional well-being, we still respond with the same physiological changes. This pattern, called the "fight or flight response," produces changes in our hormone balance and affects a cluster of body processes including heart rate, digestive system activity, blood pressure and breathing pattern.

The stress we face today is less likely to be a brief, focal situation; the stress and its physiological effects may continue for days or months — far beyond what our bodies can tolerate and still remain healthy.

We may not be aware of the destructive effects of long-term stress on our bodies until we develop a stress-related ailment, perhaps colitis in one person and high blood pressure in another. It seems likely that inherited predispositions play a part in determining what symptoms we develop from prolonged stress.

It is possible to learn a pattern of response that counteracts the debilitating effects of stress on our bodies. This has been named the "relaxation response" by Herbert Benson, M.D., who has used his Harvard laboratory to investigate it.

Benson finds that the relaxation response is evoked by a cluster of techniques with which we all have some familiarity, such as deep relaxation, meditation and certain yoga practices.

Dr. Benson lists four requirements that all techniques for relaxation have in common: (1) a quiet place, (2) a comfortable position, (3) a passive attitude, and (4) the repetition of a peaceful word or phrase to reduce the chatter of the mind.

Dr. Benson recommends practicing the relaxation response for one or more 10- or 20-minute periods every day to counter the effects of unavoidable stress.

Biofeedback could be considered an alternative path to achieving the relaxation response for people who have not succeeded in other methods.

At the conclusion of therapy, people continue the benefits of deep relaxation by some form of daily practice, which may be a routine of tensing and relaxing certain groups of muscles, imagining a flow of warmth progressing up the body from the toes, meditation, or some other relaxation technique.

While biofeedback can give a person voluntary control over a distressing symptom like a headache, and deep relaxation can counter the effects of stress on the body as a whole, psychotherapy can augment the treatment by focusing on how the person came to be under so much stress and what alternatives exist to reduce the stress.

A woman may find that she achieves success in her career, but is disabled by headaches that vanish when she recognizes that she has ignored her need to be nurtured. Another woman may discover that a muscle spasm in her shoulder ceases to trouble her when she realizes how angry she is at her husband's expectations of her.

Biofeedback plus psychotherapy can be a powerful pair of techniques giving the patient and the therapist the flexibility to move between the two as needed. ■

'Dobie's' alter ego still in comedy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's been 20 years since "Dobie Gillis" pined for his many loves. But his alter ego, Dwayne Hickman, is still involved in comedy at CBS, and still has a yen to act.

Hickman, who starred for four years in "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis," is the program executive at CBS who oversees "Alice," "The Dukes of Hazzard," new Walt Disney shows like "Zorro and Son" and "Gun Shy" and, until recently, "M*A*S*H."

Five years ago, an attempt was made to revive "Dobie Gillis," the series originally created by humorist Max Shulman. A half-hour pilot was taped in which Dobie had entered business with his father, married Zelda Gilroy and had a teen-age son. Maynard G. Krebs, the 1950s beatnik played by Bob Denver, was also on hand.

"It didn't turn out," Hickman recalls. "It wasn't well done. Max didn't write it. You have to have a feeling for the show. It's special and has a style of its own and takes a special feeling. Usually, when people don't look at a program, it's the fault of the program. The public knows what it wants to see. In the case of my pilot, the public didn't want to see it."

Hickman at 48 looks like a slightly grownup version of Dobie. His hair is still short, and his face is unlined and youthful. He has retained his membership in the Screen Actors Guild and admits to a desire to act now and then.

"I wouldn't do just any acting," he says. "It has to be something special. I feel I have a certain credibility in the business now that I need to maintain."

In the early 1970s, when his acting career began to wane, Hickman looked for other ways to remain active in the entertainment industry. First he was entertainment director for Howard Hughes' Landmark Hotel in Las Vegas. Then he joined CBS as a program executive.

"I felt by spending some time here I'd learn more about an area I really knew little about," he says. "I'd like to produce and I'd like to act some more. I've learned so much about scripts and casting and production. I had no idea how little I knew.

"My background as an actor helped me in the job. Producers tended to know that I wouldn't criticize something unless my suggestions were practical and constructive. What I do is supervise the shows from the idea to the development of the script to the filming.

"I'm sort of a general nuisance," Hickman says. "I suppose we're a liaison."

Hickman began acting when he was 7, appearing in such movies as "Heaven Only Knows" and "The Boy With the Green Hair."

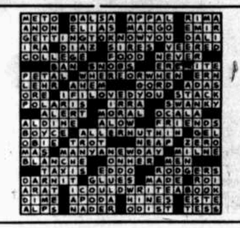

"Those early days were really the golden years of Hollywood," he remembers. "A lot of movies were being made. I remember seeing Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy on the MGM lot. It was an exciting time to work."

During high school, he didn't act at all. Then, while in college, he was on Bob Cummings' series, "Love That Bob."

"A friend called me and asked me if I wanted to go for an interview for the pilot," he says. "I said I didn't really want to act but went along anyway and talked to the producers. I did the pilot, got paid $200 and went back to school. Then they said the pilot had sold and I did the show for five years."

His brother Darrell also is an actor and starred in the movie "Leave Her to Heaven" and the TV series "The Americans."

PUZZLE ANSWER

'Videotape freaks' record everything

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WHITTIER, Calif. — By their own admission, Bob and Diane Halderman, who had spent their own childhoods glued to the TV set, are your bona fide young "videotape freak" couple of the 1980s.

Who else, they said, would:

—While away their evening hours before the set, watching delay-taped chapters, back to back, of the daytime soaper "General Hospital"?

—Escape to the great outdoors, gather their two children and friends around the campfire under the night stars to watch a rented videocassette of "Ordinary People"?

—Capture by videotape camera their every family vacation from Disneyland to Sequoia National Park and the weddings, anniversaries, even soccer games and Tupperware parties of relatives and friends.

"Our friends thought we were nuts at first. Yeah, how can we sit before the tube all that time? Now some of them understand that this is what's happening, this is the future five or seven years down the road," said Bob Halderman, a heating and air-conditioning specialist whose 200-tape library is a testament to his lifestyle.

There is no other way to describe the Haldermans and their children, ages 6 and 12, as anything else but creatures of the video age, one more American household that finds so much of its pleasures, knowledge and life's reaffirmations on the living room screen.

Bob Halderman, 34, has been obsessed with all things futuristic since being smitten as a boy with the Tomorrowland exhibits at Disneyland. He was weaned more on early television ("I was crazy about Berle and Durante and Caesar") than on the usual family treks to the local movie houses.

His father, a cash-register company employee, bought a four-bedroom tract house here in 1958, immediately installed a black-and-white TV set in the living room and a few years later bought the neighborhood's first color set ("We lived on 'Bonanza' and all those musical revues").

Diane Halderman, 31, whose postal clerk father had moved the family from New Jersey to Lompoc, Calif., when she was a small girl, remembers a family no less gathered around the set. "We weren't wealthy and, my gosh, television had everything. I must have seen every 'Bonanza,' every 'Mickey Mouse Club' show. I loved them."

At first Bob Halderman was a run-of-the-mill camera bug. Then he became smitten again, this time with the newly marketed videotape recorders. His first: a $1,200 model with a videotape playback capacity of up to four hours.

That was five years ago. "I remember the first show we taped, 'Roller Derby,'" said Diane Halderman, a legal secretary. "We loved it. We couldn't get over all the other shows we could tape. We couldn't take our eyes off them."

At first they led much of the old existence: nights out to the local movie houses, to the musical theater in Los Angeles, to local restaurants, and hosting gin rummy and backgammon parties for their friends. But the card parties were now topped off with showings of Hollywood movies on videotape.

"Pretty soon," Diane said, "people came over just for the movie, the heck with cards. They started to phone us and ask, 'Hey, what's the movie tonight? We'll bring the beer and chips.'"

This became the Haldermans' weekday ritual: dinner at 6:30; show time for the children, Bill and Rhonda, until their early bedtime; the night left for the parents to watch a previously taped late-late movie (such as "Bridge on the River Kwai"), a new film just out on store-rented cassettes (such as "The Elephant Man") or delayed back-to-back viewings of "60 Minutes," "Barney Miller" and a "Twilight Zone" rerun.

Weekends were the true marathon: "We could be nine to 10 hours by the set, mostly watching the (taped or rented) backlog," Bob said. "Funny, you can lose your sense of time. We'd see a newscast (tape-delayed) from the day before and say, 'My, did that happen again?'"

Halderman bought a second videotape recorder, this one able to record up to eight hours on a cassette. He had two 19-inch sets, a 12-inch set and a new five-inch, battery-operated one. He had just bought his first videotape camera, a model costing $1,200.

And Halderman personally refitted the living room of his house (he bought the old family home from his parents) into a video screening room — wood-paneled walls, ceiling raised to 14 feet with beams and skylight, enlarged fireplace, bar and sofa areas, new window shutters and at the center of it all, the big color set.

At the rear, he hopes, will be the small studio that can be used for Circle H Action Video Productions, his own venture into the video age. Thus far he has hired out to record local seminars, weddings and dance recitals.

Today the Haldermans' marathon viewing is a bit less. "We got a little burnt out from the first years," said Diane. This year they hooked onto the local cable system but have since dropped ON, Home Box Office and the other special services, settling instead for the cable system's standard 20-channel format.

But they depend on television as much as ever, their goings-out minimal ("We did go out to see 'E.T.,'" Diane said), their access to news almost solely that of the nightly telecasts ("I just read our local daily but Bob doesn't read any of the papers").

And the Haldermans give no apologies for being a "video freak" family, a lifestyle that has cost them — by Bob's estimates — $7,500 in video equipment and $1,000 to buy and rent cassettes.

"We've saved more than that just in what we would have put out in going-out costs. I mean, movie prices alone are big bucks. And we can see shows when we want, in our own comfort and in our very own prime time," Bob said.

Above all, there are moments like these:

"Three Christmases ago, Bob had the camera set up so it could catch our kids tippy-toeing down to the tree and gifts Christmas morning," Diane recalled. "Our camera caught them sitting there, all big-eyed, for two hours. They were so cute, so sweet.

DR. KURIANSKY...ON SEXUALITY

Sex between stepsiblings incest

By Dr. Judith Kuriansky

SEX WITH STEPSISTER

"I'm 16 and my stepsister is 17. All the boys at school want to go out with her. One day I walked by her bedroom and saw her undressing. She invited me in and we let everything happen. We've done that several times in the past few months. Now I'm sure I love her. Should I tell my friends and father?"

A stepfamily is a family. Sex between stepsiblings is incest. Incest is not an appropriate way to express love in a family. It may not seem like incest because you don't have blood ties. But you overstepped psychological boundaries that allow a family to feel safe and trust each other. Your liaison should not continue.

It is understandable how sexual exchanges occur in reconstituted families. Newly remarried parents may create a rush of affection and romanticism at home. The sexual climate is intensified with teens around who are just discovering their sexuality.

Another reason for temptation: Having experienced the pain of a family dissolving, stepfamily members may look to a sexual bond to insure this family will stay together.

You sound proud that this popular young woman (your stepsister) chose you over all other suitors. Why do you want to tell others? To brag? To obtain their blessing to continue? Or are you looking for permission to end it?

Sexual thoughts and fantasies about family members are normal, but not the same as actions. Set limits for yourself. Talk with your parents about what love is. Explore your fears about the family's stability. Seek counseling all together, to examine how the incest came about, to prevent such incidences in the future, and to insure the integrity of the family.

DAUGHTER'S RAPE AFFECTS SEX DRIVE IN FATHER

"Six months ago my 14-year-old daughter was raped by a boy her same age. There was a jury trial and he got off free because he was a juvenile and there wasn't enough evidence to convict. He's guilty but walking the street. My daughter seems fine. She's sees a psychiatrist twice a week. But since the act, I have no sex drive. I enjoyed sex before that for 18 years, but now all I have in my mind is getting revenge. What can I do?"

I am glad you are speaking out because families of women who are raped have just as strong reactions and require just as much emotional support as the woman herself.

Your anger is understandable. You love your daughter yet you could not protect her from that violation. Then you were both further violated by the legal system. Anger is one of the prime culprits interfering with sexual functioning.

Studies show that women who are raped may have sexual problems for years after the tragic event. We are just now recognizing that close relatives and husbands may also develop sexual problems. Some, identifying with the woman as victim, feel powerless, weak and depressed. This dampens their sexual ardor and they withdraw.

Others identify with the victimizer. Men who have sexual fantasies of dominating a woman, taking her despite her protests, become overwhelmingly guilty about these normal fantasies when faced with the reality of rape.

Husbands, who are particularly sensitive, withdraw from sex anticipating their wife's fears or mental flashbacks which might occur during lovemaking. Fathers and sons may fear their masculine aggressiveness will damage any female they're with.

You may also blame yourself and feel you are less of a man for not protecting your daughter even if realistically there was no way you could have prevented the rape. Dissociate your sexuality from rape. Rape is not an aggressive expression of sexuality, but a sexual expression of aggression. Recognize that anger, feelings of powerlessness and self-blame decrease sex drive and impair ability to have an erection.

Share your feelings with the entire family, including your daughter, in order to release their intensity. Seek professional help for family sessions. Find a socially acceptable way to channel the intensity of your emotions: form a group for families of rape victims.■

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
© 1983 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I open four-card majors. What constitutes a biddable major suit? And what do you need to raise opener's major when it might be only four cards long? Please don't cop out on me by saying it depends on partnership agreement. I would really like to get an honest and open answer.—J.M., Norwich, Conn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—There is no need to cop out on either of these questions. My answers are those that I have stated as long as I have played this game.

Normally, a biddable major suit should contain at least 4 points in the suit itself. There is one exception: a suit as good as Q-J-10-x can be opened. Note that this restriction does not apply to a minor suit. You might have to open a four-card minor that does not contain a single honor card. Indeed, you might even be forced to make a convenient bid in a three-card minor.

You should try to avoid raising partner's major-suit opening bid unless you have either four-card support or three-card support headed by one of the three top honors. Don't worry about the possibility that partner has only four cards in the suit — that is his problem. Just because you open four-card majors doesn't mean that partner isn't allowed to hold five or more cards in the suit that he bids! By making your natural response, you will find that, in the long run, you will get to the best spot.

More interesting is what to do if you open one of a minor and partner responds in a major. Consider these hands after you have opened one diamond and partner has responded one spade:

a) ♠Kxx ♡xx ◇AQxxx ♣Axx
b) ♠xxx ♡Kx ◇AQxxx ♣Axx

Both have the same point count and distribution. The difference is only the location of the honor card in the major suits. With hand a), you don't want to rebid one no trump without a stopper in the unbid major, and you should avoid rebidding a five-card suit if possible, especially one of such poor quality. The obvious rebid, therefore, is to raise partner to two spades.

Hand b) is different. This time your support consists of three low cards and you have a stopper in the unbid major. Now I prefer a rebid of one no trump.

The strength of the hand also has a bearing on your rebid:

c) ♠Kxx ♡x ◇KJxxx ♣Axxx
d) ♠Kxx ♡x ◇KJxxx ♣AKxx

With hand c), raise partner's spade response to two spades. But with hand d) rebid two clubs, intending to support spades at your next turn. The difference between the two sequences is that the latter shows extra values.

It pays to know how much it costs to heat/cool the house.

With electric bills up these days, it'll pay you to know how much you're spending to use electricity all around the house. For example, how much does it cost to cook a meal ... to dry a load of clothes ... and to heat and cool the house? It all adds up.

At Texas Electric, we're doing everything we can to hold down the cost of electricity. We use the cheapest generating fuels available to us — natural gas and lignite coal. And we're building a plant to use uranium, a cheaper fuel.

You can help hold down your electric bill by conserving everywhere you can. We've included a list of approximate operating costs on this folder to help you estimate the costs of using your household appliances.

And remember. It pays to know ... because it all adds up.

PUZZLE ANSWER

Mariette Hartley: Her Career Is Taking Off

By Jane Ardmore

The tall talented lady has a timing all her own. In the first episode of "Goodnight, Beantown," Bill Bixby, as the Tom Brokaw-type of hard-nosed newsman, signs off the air. "Goodnight, Beantown," he says in that sonorous Bixby voice; and Mariette Hartley, playing the anchorwoman he doesn't want on his show — he doesn't fancy the idea of a lady journalist brought in to up the ratings — is left with nothing to say.

She turns those lively blue eyes toward the camera, lifts her hand and wiggles her fingers at the audience in farewell — the sort of thing she does in Polaroid commercials.

The 43-year-old Hartley has always had the twinkle, the talent and the timing. She was headed for stardom in the theater at 13 and for super-stardom on film when she was 19. What is interesting now is that the time is right.

She is an '80s woman. As a matter of fact, on the day of our interview, her one worry was that she might compete with herself back-to-back with "M.A.D.D." (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) on NBC and "Beantown" on CBS. In the film, which aired recently, she played the tragic story of Candy Lightner, mother of Cari, the 13-year-old girl killed by a hit-and-run drunken driver as she walked in a bicycle lane en route to a church carnival on a beautiful day in May 1980.

As Candy, Hartley experiences the anguish, the anger, and embarks on a long hard fight against this useless slaughter of children by drunks who should not be on the road. The result: a whole new set of laws for which Lightner has fought and won.

In the series, on the other hand, Hartley is playing a spunky, witty journalist who reports the news the way she sees it and exchanges amusing banter with co-anchor Bill Bixby, who off-camera is a good friend.

"I think the series is going to be wonderful," she says. "Bill is a very special guy; we're close personal friends. We've been through a lot together and I'm very very glad to see him coming through after a rough year (his son died and his ex-wife Brenda Benet comitted suicide.)

We have a lot of chemistry together like Jimmy Garner and I; I've always wanted to work with Bill and nobody would hire me because I am so tall.

"We were kept away from each other for years. The only time we ever did work together was on the episode of 'The Incredible Hulk' which kicked off the '78 season."

A reviewer remarked,"If this is the quality of the 'Hulk' this year and that quality is maintained, this show can go on forever. Mariette Hartley is brilliant." She played the nurse on that two-hour show and won an Emmy. So now she and friend Bixby are back together again and looking forward to the year.

"The only thing that worries me is the time factor," says Hartley. "I won't do an hour series and I've turned down every half-hour series offered me in the last four years because of my children.

"But they're a bit older now. Justine is 4½. If the series goes, she'll be in school for six hours. Sean is 7 and he's into soccer.

"We have a housekeeper and I have a wonderful associate, Catrine, who came to be with me for a week and has been there a year. Mornings she's working on a film production of her own, but afternoons she helps me with everything: answering the phone, shopping for groceries, doing the little extra things so I can have undiluted time with my children.

"It really does work out that way. Catrine will be at the house afternoons and Bill has promised me that we're getting out of work every night at 6. We work so well together I don't forsee any problems after the first couple of episodes as we work out the kinks.

"Ours is a four-day shooting schedule so I won't miss Justine's performances at music school. And I won't miss Sean's soccer games. He's a Shark and they've just finished an undefeated season... until the last game.

"That was a devastating Saturday. They had to do a penalty play-off. Here is this super-team and they lost on a penalty kick; the child who missed the kick, a terrific little player, just sobbed. The playing is fun and its given our son a lot of confidence, but this sort of competition for championships is tough for 7-year-olds.

"Believe me, if I had to miss the soccer games and the recitals, I'd give up acting, but if I can have both worlds... the time has come for me to do a series. I know that, and my husband (Patrick Boyriven) knows. We've talked about it a lot.

"As a matter of fact, Patrick and a friend of ours have written a series called 'Mariette et Moi' (my husband, you know, is French) and they'd taken it to Warner's where I was under contract; but that studio countered with 'Beantown' and having already agreed that it was time for me to get a series under my belt, Patrick and I didn't hesitate a moment. The ingredients were so wonderful.

"A.J. Cruthers is the writer and executive producer. They have two of the 'M.A.S.H.' writers working on scripts as well. And I know we'll work out the time element. I'll just keep my evenings free. We'll have family time together and our weekends always are free.

"The children understand. I started weeks ahead of time talking with Justine and Sean. 'I'm going to start working in two weeks. I want you guys to promise me that if you have any feelings about it, you'll start talking now.' They know Bill, of course, and they didn't come up with any negative feelings.

"I've invited them, and they know they're welcome to come to the set whenever they wish after school. Catrine will bring them. They've always been good set kids. They sit in the Winnebago and watch television. They're been on the set, both of them, since they were born. When they're on the set they're very quiet. They know the rules.

"Patrick is working on a very big series now. He's associate producer of 'V,' a four-hour mini-series, but he may not be working when we get into our stride and that would be great, too, for the kids."

Hartley didn't have these children to let someone else raise them. She's a passionate mother, which proved invaluable in filming "M.A.D.D."

"I had been aware of Candy Lightner," Mariette explains. "Like everyone else in the country, I had read of her daughter Cari's death and was aware that this Fair Oaks housewife who had absolutely no previous knowledge of politics or public affairs, had gone out to fight for stricter laws on drunken driving. But playing her was something else.

"Meeting her was something else. She was a little nervous about me. She didn't know whether I could be trusted with her life and her emotions. We had a very warm, a very good time together when we met. I like her very much, and I am grateful that she was willing to be open with me and to share her grief.

"I went up with her to Sacramento for a convention of MADD and heard about 2½ hours of testimony from people who had lost their kids. I stayed with her overnight and watched her relationships with Serena and Travis, the two remaining children. Travis is the younger. He also has had an accident.

"Candy has been affected by a series of car accidents. She is still bitter and yet, by God, you see her at work and she is phenomenal. She controls these women like Lena Horne controls an audience.

"There was a day on the filming that was especially rough for me. The death that has affected me so deeply in my own life was my father's, and I was able to draw my grief from that experience," Hartley recalls.

She can be flip and funny, but she's also coming into her own as an actress.

"Now I was facing the scene where, as Candy, I receive a paper bag with Cari's clothes. I didn't know if I could get through that morning. They had handed me a paper bag, too, in an elevator at UCLA Medical Emergency. My father had died two or three minutes before and these were his clothes. I had told Patrick how I felt the night before the scene and he said, 'If you have any trouble, give me a call and do the takes over again.' "

Hartley got through the scene, but there is no mistaking the very real grief and horror she was feeling. "Oh, and to make the filming even more poignant... an accident occurred while they were shooting on Fair Oaks Avenue where Cari was killed. An elderly gentleman was hit by a drunken driver. All the paramedics on the film were actually paramedics, and they ran out and did their best, but he died.

"Candy Lightner has brought the drunken driving deaths down to the lowest figure they've been since 1948," Mariette says. "I guess she has saved 300 to 500 lives a year, but that's still not enough and she's not through.

"What she has done is raise public consciousness. There is a restaurant in the area that has a sign on the door: 'Excuse us. But if you have had too much to drink, please let us call you a cab. It will be on us.'

"And over the holidays you saw ads from cab companies offering to pick up anyone and drive them free if they had over-imbibed. MADD had received a Presidential Commission on drunk driving.

"It's really ironic. The end of the film shows Candy at the cemetery visiting Cari's grave, and her friend comes up with a letter from the President asking her to come serve on the Presidential Commission for drunken drivers. But that doesn't bring Cari back. And the man who killed her — last time he was in jail he was found with a bottle of liquor. He's been out on parole, has broken that parole, and always finds parole officers and psychiatrists who think of him as a poor, confused soul."

What are the answers? Some people turn to God. Some people wonder why, if God exists, these tragedies can happen. How does Hartley handle a subject like this with her youngsters? "I have a rough time," she admits. "You know Sean lost his very best friend when he was 5, Bill Bixby's son, Chris.

"Sean had a heck of a time living through that. We all did. I went into therapy to see what I could do for myself and how I could help; then I called in a family therapist to help us all.

"It was a very very hard time for us, but we got through. Sean is a sensitive little boy, and he had some rough reactions. It has come out in drawings, dreams, in his writing. I know from my own experience that living people have to live with and accept death, and I think memorials and those sorts of things are very important. I disagree with people who don't have them.

"It's important to say goodbye to those you love. I was cheated with my dad, and I have valued the opportunity since to be with friends when we've suffered the loss of someone.

"And of course, we go to church. I've always gone to church, and it is wonderful to go together as a family. There's a feeling of life and unity and love. No matter where we are we have that. When we're in the mountains or at the sea, there's always a feeling of solidarity, or shared living."

This talented lady can be flip and funny when the occasion warrants; but Mariette Hartley's also a caring, feeling human being. And now she's coming into her own as an actress.■

Denver, Muppets get Rocky Mountain high

Copley News Service

John Denver

But don't let that start loose talk. They're just good friends. And, besides, they were well chaperoned by the rest of the Muppet gang plus a television crew on hand to film a special for ABC-TV.

The resulting show is called "Rocky Mountain Holiday" and will air May 12.

"And we have some flashbacks," John points out, "that show a little bit of the summer in the mountains and also the winter and the spring.

"The special is about a camping trip. We wrote some special material for it, a song we do when we're hiking and when we find things in the woods. I wrote one new song for the show, and then we do a couple of pieces of material I've done before. 'Grandma's Feather Bed' which Kermit sings and some songs people usually sing around campfires. 'Home on the Range.' Stuff like that."

The upcoming special is the third venture co-starring Denver and the Muppets.

"I was a guest on their show," he remembers, "and we all hit it off so well that we came up with the idea of doing a Christmas show together. That was so successful that about a year ago I approached them and said, 'Let's do another special. Here's an idea I have.'"

Thus, "Rocky Mountain Holiday."

While Denver enjoys working in an occasional television special, he wouldn't consider starring in a weekly show, "because I don't want to do that much television. In this business, overexposure can be a problem."

"Also, if I worked more on television, I'd have less time to do recordings and give live performances and travel around the world and have my private time in the mountains."

Because of his concert schedule, John has had to postpone production of a television special on a subject almost as dear to his heart as the "Rocky Mountain Holiday" theme.

A daring and enthusiastic pilot who'd love to go with the astronauts into space and who's been invited to fly (as a passenger) with the Blue Angels, John is planning a special to be called "John Denver's Flying Circus."

The special he has in mind would feature antique aircraft and stunt flying, some to be done by Denver himself. He admits that those with a vested interest in his future are not as thrilled by these prospects as he is.

He'd hoped to get his "Flying Circus" into and onto the air this year, but heavy, international demand for his singing talents will make this impossible.

Just back from Europe, he left today for a six-week tour of Australia, Hong Kong and Manila, and in October he'll go to Europe again. It's likely he'll even do a couple of concerts in Russia.

"That's pretty exciting," he says in regards to the possibility that he'll sing for the Soviets.

Denver will have a new record album out in May called "It's About Time." He wrote its 11 songs himself, but he claims that was no chore. For songs simply come to him.

But, if he'd like one at The Grand Ol' Opry, Minnie Pearl is ready.

"I fell in love with Gavin McLeod," says she, reminiscing about her second voyage on "The Love Boat," an adventure which will air Saturday.

She has sailed, loosely speaking, with McLeod and crew twice but, she regrets, during her first guest turn, she didn't have a chance to get acquainted with the skipper.

The verb "sail" and the noun "voyage" apply only in the roughest way to Minnie's "Love Boat" excursions, because neither show in which she was a guest star was shot on a real boat or on real water. Both times she worked on a mock-up.

The episode finds "The Love Boat" loaded with country stars. In addition to Minnie, passengers include Mel Tillis, Misty Rowe, Tanya Tucker, and Dottie West.

Minnie doesn't appear as her Grand Ol' Opry character but as a woman closely related who sells patent medicine.

"I don't have a romance in the show," she sighs. "I would have liked to have had one with the captain, but unfortunately Henry was there."

Henry is Henry Cannon, husband of Cousin Minnie Pearl in private life a stylish and cultivated lady who doesn't wear a price tag on her hat.

Minnie Pearl has done well by Mrs. Cannon and vice versa, but sometimes the latter would like to get away from the former long enough to play a guest role in a dramatic show.

She's told producer Earl Hamner that, if his pilot for NBC-TV, "Boone," spins into series, she hopes he'll let her appear in a cameo as a character new to her fans.

"I'd like to do a 'Fantasy Island,'" Minnie says. "If I could go to a real Fantasy Island and have a drama come true, I'd find a part I could get my teeth into."

Minnie would also like to star in a television special, possibly one built around a book she wrote in 1963 called "Christmas at Grinder's Switch."

"It's a dear little book," she says. "It's not about the Grand Ol' Opry but more about my childhood. It's about the universal country Christmas."

After the success of her autobiography, Simon and Schuster suggested that Minnie write a book of country humor, but she's hesitated, because she's not sure her version of country humor would translate into a popular volume.
