Two more hostages taken in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen today kidnapped two men in Moslem west Beirut and one witness said they were foreigners. Police said they had no indication that a group claiming to hold three Americans and an Indian carried out its threat to kill a hostage.

Police said four gunmen snatched the two latest kidnap victims from an office equipment store in the Sanayeh residential district of west Beirut at 11:30 a.m. Police did not identify the victims or their nationalities.

A witness who spoke on condition of anonymity said two gunmen "jumped out of a white Mercedes-Benz, pointed pistols at the two men and dragged them out of the Najjar Continental Store." The witness said the victims spoke broken English.

An employee at the store who also spoke on condition of anonymity said the two victims were "definitely foreigners."

"They are familiar to me, they used to pass by us to photocopy documents, they always spoke broken English, but I do not know their names or nationalities," she said.

She said one victim was "blond and has blue eyes, the other has dark hair. Both appeared less than 23 years old."

The two were kidnapped as students of Beirut University College demonstrated outside Prime Minister Rashid Karami's office, a few blocks from the Najjar Continental Store, to protest the kidnapping Saturday of four professors from the school.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station said it received two calls Sunday claiming responsibility for the teachers' abductions in the name of the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, a pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group.

Administration condemns seizure of hostages in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration today condemned the seizure of foreigners as hostages in Lebanon as a declaration of war against civilization, but told Americans there to get out, warning that "there's a limit to what our government can do" for them.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said the government "will not make concessions to terrorist groups despite their threats."

He said it would only endanger other Americans "to yield to their demands."

Speakes said President Reagan met with his advisers, including Chief of Staff Don Regan and national security adviser Frank Carlucci, to discuss the seizure of three more Americans over the weekend in Lebanon and "certain decisions" were made. But he declined to go into specifics.

Speakes said the U.S. embassy in Beirut would not be closed. Some members of Congress proposed such a measure in view of the danger to Americans.

The spokesman said the United States has continually warned Americans in Lebanon of the dangers of staying there and said there are limits to what the government can do for people who are seized.

"Americans who ignored this warning clearly did so at their own risk and their own responsibility," Speakes said.

Officers not satisfied with injury policy

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A new policy that requires city workers to use sick time to supplement workers' compensation for on-the-job injuries is drawing criticism from police and fire departments.

Jerry Cowin, president of the Midland Police Officers Association, said there is "a lot of dissatisfaction and mistrust" with the policy, which city administrators hope will give greater incentive for workers to return to work after being injured.

"What we're trying to do is get them to see our point of view," Cowin said. "We had no input in the final decision. We needed to be involved in it and have some input in it."

Patrolman Leonard Hendon, president of the local chapter of the Fraternal Order of Police, said under the new policy, officers on the street are approaching potentially dangerous situations differently.

"It is causing officers to take a bit more care when they are out there," he said. "You tend to sit and think before you get involved in certain situations."

According to a memorandum issued to workers Dec. 23, "time entered as injury leave will reduce an employee's sick leave by a proportionate amount...All employees who miss more than one week due to an injury and receive workmen's compensation checks will be allowed to keep them. Sick leave will then be used only to supplement such payments and insure that the employee does not suffer a reduction in total income."

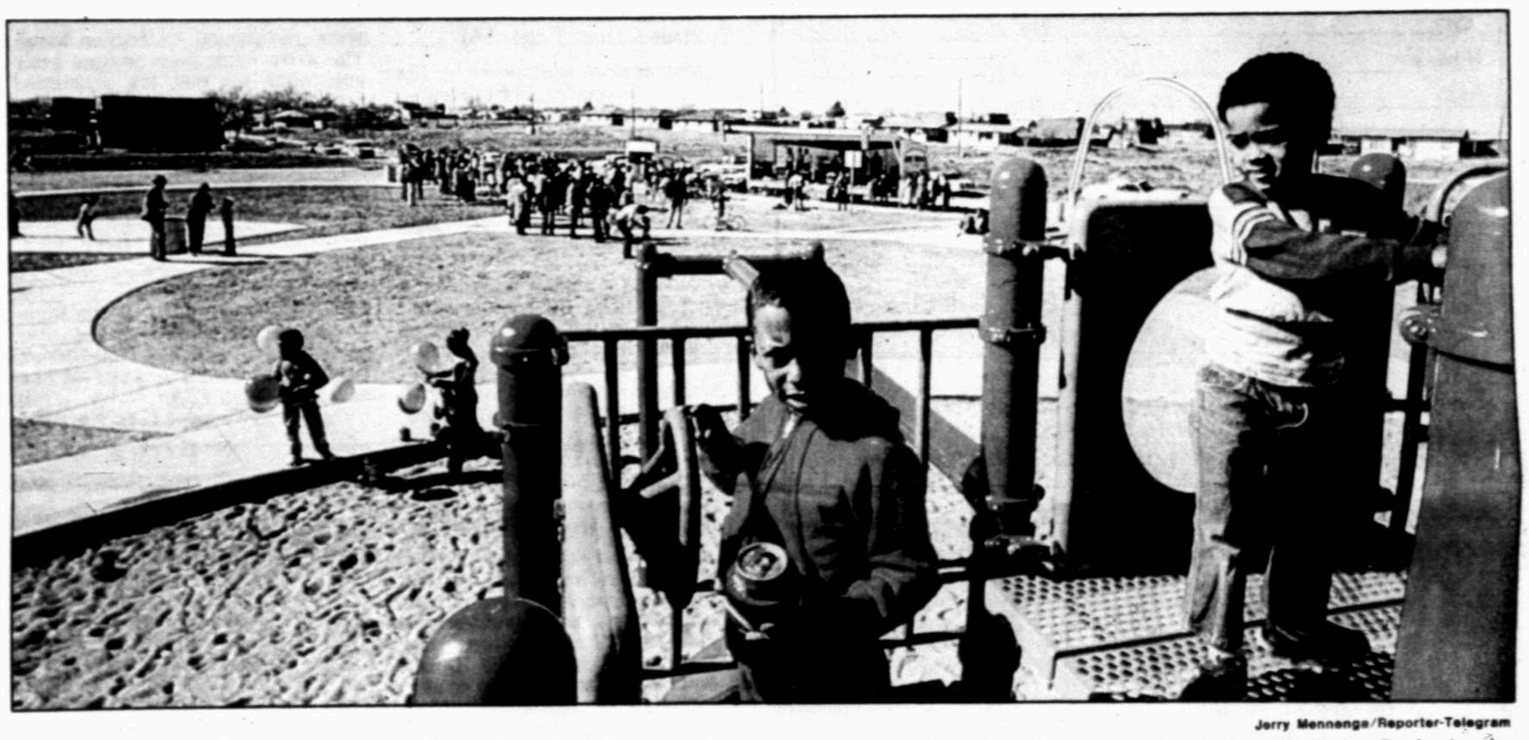

Under the old policy, the city would supplement indefinitely that portion of a workers' salary not covered by workmens' compensation (workmen's compensation pays a maximum of $224 weekly). That, city officials say and employees admit, has led to some abuses by employees who have suffered on-the-job injuries.

But, since the memo was issued, the chiefs of police and fire have each sent their own memo to City Manager James Brown urging review of the policy.

"I feel an obligation for people that were injured during job performance — they should be taken care of by the city," said Fire Chief James Roberts.

"Frankly what this new policy would hurt is a new employee that was seriously injured, and had no sick time already. But, even in those cases, I think the philosophy of the city would be to take care of the new employees. It always has been.

Community leaders dedicate King park

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

With the happy patter of playing children in the background, city officials and black community leaders Sunday dedicated a new park to the memory of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., nobel laureate and civil rights leader.

The Rev. Joe Williams of the Greater New Life Baptist Church brought shouts from the crowd of more than 200 in his address that tied the slain leader's life and preaching to the present day racial experience.

"I think the park is symbolic of the dream that burns in the hearts of not only those that are on hand today," Williams said after his speech. The Midland minister referred to what many people consider King's greatest speech — the "I have a dream" sermon he delivered to early 1960s civil rights marchers in Washington D.C.

"It's the dream of love that ignites such a spirit of enthusiasm," Williams said. "Our prayer is that the park will serve as an instrument to perpetuate the dream — to keep it alive and not just as a mere monument," he said.

Kay Scott, 39, 1204 E. Magnolia Ave., perhaps spoke for many of those gathered at the park, which is located near the intersection of Carver Street and Hemlock Avenue. "It's a spiritual blessing to be here," she said. "Dr Martin Luther King's dream is still alive in our hearts today."

From a younger perspective, Donna Irving, 16, 1616 E. Magnolia Ave., said, "I think it's good that they named it after him."

Also addressing the congregation gathered at the park Sunday was Mayor Carroll Thomas and City Councilmember Oralia Corrales.

James Bradford, chairman of the Social Sciences Department at Lee High School, told the crowd of the history of the park's establishment.

Bradford said that northeast side community leaders saw a need for the park after facilities at Hogan Park became mostly softball-oriented. The closing of the Hogan Park pool also led leaders to lobby for a new facility on the northeast side, he said.

Clements faces different Texas in 1987 than he did in '79

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The times have changed and the problems are worse, but longtime Bill Clements watchers of both parties say the state's new governor will bring the same hard-nosed business skills to work on Texas 1987 as he did on Texas 1979.

Eight years ago, a freshly inaugurated Clements stood on the south steps of the Capitol flanked by his wife, Rita, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby. Mrs. Clements and Hobby joined Clements on the inaugural platform again Tuesday, but the Texas they viewed was far different from the one they saw in 1979.

Some examples:

— In his official revenue estimate to the 1979 legislative session, Comptroller Bob Bullock predicted, "There is every reason to believe that in the coming three years Texas will continue its enviable record of outstripping most of the nation in economic growth." Two weeks ago, Bullock stated simply, "Texas is short of money."

— In January 1979, the Texas unemployment rate held steady at 4.4 percent, two points below the national average. Last month, the U.S. average was once again at 6.4 percent but the Texas jobless rate had climbed to 8.7 percent.

— Eight years ago, Texas prisons were smoldering but their problems had yet to erupt. Today, a federal judge threatens to fine the state $24 million a month unless it acts fast to comply with his reform orders.

— Bullock told lawmakers in December 1978 they would have $14.8 billion in major funds to work with, up 18.8 percent from the 1978-1979 period and including a $743 million surplus from fiscal 1979. For 1988-1989, Bullock says, the Legislature may spend $24.1 billion, down 3.9 percent from 1986-1987 and not including a $1 billion deficit from fiscal 1987.

Many of Clements' staff know way around Capitol

AUSTIN — A new governor took office last week, bringing with him a new staff, although many of Bill Clements' new team members — like the governor — know their way around the Capitol.

Early this month, then-Gov.-elect Clements notified 63 of Mark White's 170 staff members that they would stay on at least temporarily when he came aboard. The remaining 107, including most of White's top aides and political appointees, were told to look for employment elsewhere.

Clements' key staff includes several holdovers from his 1979-1983 administration, a few associates from Dallas and a number of men and women who worked on his election campaign.

"Working together as a team, they will do a super job," the new governor says of his staff. "We're off to a great start, and the quality is high."

The new faces include:

— Secretary of State Jack Rains, a 49-year-old Houston businessman who was statewide co-chairman of Clements 1986 campaign and Houston area chairman of the governor's unsuccessful 1982 race. He replaces 54-year-old Myra McDaniel, who will join an Austin law firm.

Border Patrol using sensors to catch illegal aliens

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first sensor will tell the Border Patrol that illegal aliens have likely crossed into the United States. The second may give an indication of their route. The third may tell exactly which road they're going to take.

Their pictures may even appear on a Border Patrol television monitor.

Hundreds of these sophisticated sensors, including some that trigger television cameras, are part of the Border Patrol's high-tech war against illegal aliens as the new immigration law takes hold.

But the chief of the patrol, Hugh J. Brien, said all the state-of-the-art equipment that money can buy won't stop illegal immigration if undocumented workers can still get jobs in the United States.

The immigration law signed by President Reagan on Nov. 6 is based on the theory that illegal border crossings will slow down when jobs dry up.

Beginning June 1, employers hiring illegal aliens will be subject to heavy fines if they knew any of their workers hired after Nov. 6 were ineligible for employment in the United States. For the first year of the program, employers will be given only warnings for the first offense.

"Even if we had people arm to arm on the border, unless we reduce the magnet, they're still going to come for the economics," Brien said, referring to the ease which which illegal aliens have been hired in this country until now.

In a recent interview, Brien added, "We believe if we can cut off that magnet, the numbers would diminish. If there were no jobs, the magnet drawing them up here would diminish."

For that reason, the Border Patrol is combining its new equipment with old-fashioned public relations. Its agents are speaking to employers to inform them of the sanctions program and dissuade them from hiring undocumented workers.

Border Patrol statistics measure illegal crossings by comparing apprehensions with captures at the same time a year ago, a process that permits seasonal factors to be taken into account.

Report says freeing hostages motivation for arms deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Intelligence Committee is preparing a report which says freedom for American hostages was one of the main goals motivating President Reagan's approval of U.S. arms sales to Iran, according to congressional sources.

Reagan has maintained that his chief motivation was an attempt to reopen U.S. dealings with a strategically important nation and that gaining the release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon was only a secondary goal.

At the same time the report is being readied, Reagan was scheduled to meet today for the first time with a commission he appointed to examine the National Security Council in the wake of the Iran arms-Contra controversy.

Reagan appointed the three-member commission Nov. 26 after the administration announced that arms sales profits had been diverted to the Nicaraguan rebels. The NSC played a central role in what has become the most serious crisis of Reagan's presidency.

Reagan's interview was to be the first time he answered questions from White House outsiders on the controversy. White House officials, however, said Reagan's comments at the meeting would not be released.

Nor will a verbatim transcript or recording be made of the discussion, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said last week. He said the commission believed it would be "somewhat beneath the dignity of the office" to take a transcript during the interviews with Reagan and former presidents Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. Nixon and Carter were interviewed last week.

Reagan has made no public mention of the Iran-Contra affair since before Christmas and has not answered any questions about it since a news conference Nov. 19.

The Senate report is being prepared by the staff of the Democratic-controlled committee and will be circulated to panel members later this week, said the sources, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The conclusion that freedom for the hostages held by Iranian-influenced groups was a major goal is similar to statements made by legislators who have looked at the evidence. But the report would be the first time that an investigating body has concluded that freedom for the hostages was a high priority.

"It is clear that getting the hostages back was one of the main concerns and was a higher priority than the White House has been willing to admit publicly," one source said.

Several investigations of the controversy are under way, including the NSC review, which is headed by former Republican Sen. John Tower of Texas. Also investigating are two separate select committees in the House and Senate, the House Intelligence Committee and special prosecutor Lawrence Walsh.

But thus far, the Senate Intelligence Committee has done the most complete investigation. The panel interviewed several dozen witnesses last month, when it was controlled by Republicans.

A draft report done at that time had little information about Reagan's role in the controversy, but the latest document contains more detail about the president's actions, the sources said.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III told the panel last month that Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, the fired National Security Council aide who oversaw both the Iran and Contra programs, said Reagan was preoccupied with the release of the hostages, the sources said.

North has cited his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination and has refused to testify or publicly talk about his knowledge of the controversy.

Meese is the only high government official to talk to North about North's role in the deals. Those talks, including North's comments about Reagan's worries about the hostages, came several days before the link between the two programs was publicly announced by Meese on Nov. 25.

North was fired and his boss, National Security Adviser John Poindexter, resigned after the controversy became public.

Walsh, the special prosecutor, has asked the select committees not to grant immunity to North or Poindexter, but lawmakers said Saturday it was too early to decide on that request.

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., a panel member, said he would continue to oppose giving immunity, while Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., said he favored immunity on ground it would speed the day when the full facts came to light.

HOSTAGES

One caller said a hostage would be killed if West Germany did not release a Lebanese hijacking suspect by midnight Sunday. The suspect was not released and police said today they found no bodies and had no reports any hostage was killed.

Gunmen disguised as police kidnapped the American and Indian professors Saturday from the campus of Beirut University College. School officials said today they had not been contacted by the kidnappers.

The abductions brought to 23 the number of foreigners missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon. Eight have been seized since Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite arrived in Beirut on Jan. 12 on a mission to free hostages.

Waite remained out of sight today for the seventh straight day. His Druse bodyguards said he was negotiating in secret with Islamic Jihad, captors of two Americans held in Lebanon since 1985 — Terry Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, and Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut.

In London, the Anglican Church said Sunday that Waite was in "good hands" and pursuing his negotiations.

The Voice of Lebanon said the first call it received Sunday said the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth would kill a hostage if the hijacking suspect, Mohammed Ali Hamadi, is extradited

U.S. officials want to try Hamadi on charges of air piracy and murder in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut.

REAGAN

Eight Americans are being held by terrorist groups, including three kidnapped on Saturday. There were reports today that two more foreigners had been seized, their nationality unknown.

Asked by reporters if the United States was considering military action against the kidnappers, Speakes sidestepped the question. "We have resorted to military action in the past," he said. "There are many options at our disposal, but I will not speculate..."

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said Sunday he would favor military action if there were evidence that a government was behind the hostage-takings.

Speakes was also asked if elements in Iran might be able to use their influence to gain the release of the hostages. He said "the direct influence of the Iranians over those who hold Americans and other hostages has ebbed and flowed...I can't speculate any further about what the Iranians might be able to do."

The spokesman reiterated previous warnings about Americans traveling to Lebanon. To back up that warning, Speakes raised the possibility that passports will be made invalid for travel to that country.

But, in response to questions about why the U.S. embassy would not be closed, he said there had been "no particular problems" for American diplomatic personnel.

"We will not allow terrorists to run the U.S. government out of the Middle East," he said.

On Sunday, Treasury Secretary James Baker said it was his "personal view and I think that's the administation's view as well" that U.S. citizens should not be in Lebanon.

Pell agreed, saying "we really should not have American citizens there."

But, Pell added, if the kidnappers carry out their threat to kill one of the Americans, "It would give grounds, if there's clear evidence of a connection (with a government), and I don't think the evidence is clear yet, if there's clear evidence, for a military response."

The officials spoke in the aftermath of the weekend kidnapping of three Americans from the campus of Beirut University College in west Beirut.

Baker, a member of the Natonal Security Council who was interviewed on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," said, "We're not sure who took them."

In Beirut, the Christian-controlled Voice of Lebanon radio reported Sunday that responsibility for the abduction had been claimed by a group of pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists calling themselves the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth.

Baker also declined to say what the administration would do.

Asked if the U.S. Embassy in Beirut should be closed, Baker answered, "I don't think that that's a step that necessarily has to be taken, but I think we ought to be very careful that particularly private citizens are no longer roaming around Lebanon."

Pell, on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley," said there wasn't much Reagan could do. "I don't envy the president, the situation he's in now."

But if a definite link between the kidnappers and Syria or Iran can be established, Pell said, Reagan should consider "pretty hard" action against either nation.

However, "If it's a group without any government connection," he said, "there really is no good solution."

Asked about links between the kidnappers and Iran, Pell said, "In this case, I'm not sure it's established."

Unless that tie is clear, he cautioned, "I don't think it would be advisable'" to use force.

Pell said America's anti-terrorism policy is "basically non-existent" because strong U.S. warnings to allies against dealing with terrorist nations have been contradicted by the U.S. arms sales to Iran.

PATROL

Apprehensions were down by 17.5 percent in November, 24.8 percent in December, and 29.6 percent for the week of Jan. 4-10, the last figures available. The numbers have been down every week since the bill was signed, compared with the same time a year ago. In the 1986 fiscal year, 1.6 million illegal aliens were caught at the border.

In contrast with the recent numbers, the October figures show that captures increased by 29.2 percent for the month before the bill became law.

The decline came about even after additional Border Patrol agents were re-assigned to border areas. The extra manpower became available when the new law prohibited officers from entering open fields on private property without a warrant or the owner's permission.

Heavy rains may have caused some of the drop, but it's also possible that people have heard it's now illegal to hire undocumented workers, Brien said.

"There's a seasonal decline at this time. The Rio Grande is pretty high. But our perception is there was some apprehension, a kind of wait-and-see attitude" following passage of the new law, Brien said.

The Border Patrol covers a 2,000 mile area on the Southern border, stretching from Brownsville, Texas, to San Diego.

When one of the sensors is tripped, it's registered on a computer. Some of the sensors trigger television cameras that can operate in low light.

"It's a game of cat and mouse," Brien said, that still allows or or two illegal aliens to get through for every one caught.

"We're trying to enhance the computer and sensors to tell the difference between people and animals," Brien said.

More sophisticated equipment is on the way.

The chief said the patrol hopes to buy five helicopters with infrared night scopes to go along with the agency's 40 fixed-wing aircraft. He hopes to buy 10 all-terrain vehicles with infrared night telescopes to complement the single truck now in use with the equipment.

The new law also orders a 50 percent increase in Border Patrol personnel. The current force of 3,240 agents will increase by 1,050 over the next two years. Nearly 90 percent of the officers are on the Southern border.

Instead of averaging one agent per eight miles on the border, the number will drop to one per five miles when the manpower is increased.

— Chief of Staff Hilary Doran, 50, held that same position during the final two years of Clements' first administration. A four-term Democratic House member from Del Rio, Doran will oversee the new governor's lobbying team, budget office and legal staff. He replaces Jim Nelson, 40, whom White appointed in October to the State Board of Insurance.

— Executive Assistant George Bayoud Jr., 31, managed Clements' 1986 campaign and was an active member of his 1978 and 1982 campaign staffs. Bayoud, a Dallas real estate executive, will manage the "political side" of the office, handling press relations, appointments and administration. He replaces Clif Drummond, 43, who will become an executive with an Austin high-tech firm.

— Appointments Secretary James Huffines, a 35-year-old Dallas banker, will screen all potential appointees to state boards and commissions. Huffines was Clements' 1986 Dallas County campaign chairman and a 1984 delegate to the national Republican convention. He replaces Dwayne Holman, 43, who is joining an Austin bond house.

— Legal Counsel Rider Scott, a 37-year-old former assistant district attorney in Dallas County, has extensive experience working with the Legislature on law-and-order issues. Scott replaces Leslie Benitez, 39, who will enter private legal practice in Austin.

— Budget Director Bob Davis, a 45-year-old Irving attorney, served 10 years in the House, including a four-year stint as chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee. Davis replaces Bill Hamilton, 38, who served in Clements' first administration and has no announced plans yet.

CLEMENTS

Clements firmly recognized Texas' problems in Tuesday's inaugural address. And though he didn't refer back to his first inaugural speech, he obviously had greater plans in mind than 1979's "Now is the time for us to set firm limits on our government."

But, those close to him say, the 69-year-old new governor reacted in typical Clements style when he called today's woes an opportunity for Texas.

"The suffering of our people can and will be cured if we muster the courage and discipline to seize the opportunity at hand and move forward," he said. "Now is the season and time for us in Texas to take advantage of our opportunity and create a new Texas."

Sitting behind Clements on the dais Tuesday, Midland oilman and Republican National Committeeman Ernest Angelo predicted the self-made Dallas millionaire will carry his business success over into the statehouse. "The fact that he considers this a great challenge rather than a time to dread is an indication of the kind of man he is," Angelo said.

State GOP Chairman George Strake says the former oil-field roughneck represents "new hope" for the state. "By virtue of the fact that we're in this sag right now, it gives him the opportunity to be one of Texas' great governors," Strake says.

The Texas Constitution greatly limits a governor's powers, and Senate Economic Development Committee Chairman O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, says Clements is a master at one of the unwritten powers: persuasion. "He's a strong advocate, strong leader, strong for his positions," Harris says. "He's not hesitant to take one and stick by it."

But only if the Legislature responds to the agenda he sets will Clements have a chance to bring his as-yet unrevealed program to fruition. Lawmakers of both parties say Clements learned that lesson the hard way in 1979, when the 66th Legislature rebuffed Clements' desire to run the state like a chief executive officer with a board of directors. By 1981, they say, he had figured out how the system works.

"He finally understood that he couldn't tell everybody how to run their business, that he had to work with people," says Sen. Bill Simms, D-San Angelo.

Although both Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis are Democrats, Senate Criminal Justice Committee Chairman Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, says the Republican governor shares a "mutual respect" with the legislative leaders that will allow them to work together.

"There's obviously going to be differences on budget approach, perhaps, and other matters," McFarland says. "But as long as a cooperative attitude exists, I think we can move forward."

Such a cooperative attitude will require Clements to loosen his no-new-taxes stance for the Legislature to solve the state's $6 billion budget shortfall, says Senate State Affairs Committee Chairman Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls. "I'm not sure how realistic it is to think that you're going to resolve these economic problems — such as $400 million on prisons — and not have any new taxes," Farabee says.

"If for no other reason than mathematics. Two and two still equals four, and I don't expect that to change in the next 140 days."

Legislators of both parties expect Clements to work with the House and Senate better than his Democratic predecessor, Mark White, did, for two reasons. "It's in large measure because of the people he picked and put in charge," says Senate President Pro Tem Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur.

"With Clements you knew to whom you could go if you had a particular problem, and it was the same person throughout his tenure in office...White never had a single person to whom we could go consistently and he reserved too much of that kind of dialogue and communication with the Legislature to himself."

Secondly, legislators say Clements was less overtly partisan than White, adding that his early decision not to seek re-election in 1990 should mean he will rely even less on polls and politics. McFarland says Clements had no choice but to play down party differences.

"The majority of the House and Senate were Democrat," McFarland says. "If he was going to make it partisan, he wasn't going to get anywhere...That still exists."

"We worked with Clements before and we'll do it again," says House State Affairs Committee Chairman Pete Laney, D-Hale Center.

"I'm sure it will be just as good as it was four years ago," says Hobby, who described their earlier relationship as "very good."

But some liberal lawmakers are hesitant, particularly because Clements won't outline his specific proposals until his Feb. 4 state of the state address. "Bill Clements campaigned on a plan, and I guess everybody else has waited just as eagerly as I have for Clements to disclose it," says Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont.

Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, found it "interesting" that Clements promised to "leave no one behind" in his move to create a new Texas.

"We'll just wait and see," Collazo says. "We'll just have to wait and see."

POLICY

"I have sent a memo and talked to Mr. Brown," Roberts said. "We have had a series of meetings with the officers, and we've tried to talk about it logically. In feedback from them, I get the feeling everybody is concerned about the fact that a new employee might get injured."

Police Chief Richard Czech said members of his department are "concerned."

He said one of his officers fell on the ice a week ago and broke his shoulder assisting at an accident scene. Czech said the officers' accrued sick time will enable him to collect a full salary, but, like Roberts', he said that would not be the case with a new employee.

City employees earn 10 hours of sick time per month.

Personnel Director David Hunter said the policy was modified after complaints were received from other city departments.

"We were getting complaints that departments were having a hard time getting (employees) back to work" following on-the-job injuries, Hunter said. "The police and fire departments have been the most vocal by far," he said. "I've been kind of surprised by their reaction. I can see the concern but I don't see that it will be a problem."

Hunter said he plans to meet with Roberts and Czech in the next few weeks to discuss the policy.

"We will certainly take another look at it; there might be some modification necessary."

The memo contains a provision that "in the case of a disastrous injury where an employee may exhaust his sick leave, the City Council may elect to make an exception to this policy and continue to supplement such an individual's pay. Such decisions should be expected to be made on a case-by-case basis."

Hunter said last fiscal year, only 29 "lost time" injuries were recorded by the city among almost 1,000 employees. He said if the new policy was in effect, only three of those employees would have exhausted their sick leave.

White supremacist vows to oust Forsyth officials

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — A white supremacist vowed to oust the politicians who welcomed 25,000 civil rights marchers to white Forsyth County as civic leaders fretted over the community's image as home to "fire-breathing racists."

"The politicians and system stooges are through here," Frank Shirley of the militant White Patriot Party was quoted as saying in Sunday's Forsyth County News. "We're going to put our own candidates in in the next election."

Meanwhile, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference has asked for a federal probe of racial discrimination in housing and employment in the county, said the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the civil rights group.

Community leaders, intent on showing the world that most of the county's residents are not racist, had strung a "Welcome To Forsyth County" banner across the route of Saturday's march.

The Cumming-Forsyth County Chamber of Commerce installed portable toilets around town and set up telephones and a vacant storefront for use by reporters; members of the City Council and county commission, local religious leaders and others welcomed the march leaders at the courthouse.

But about 1,000 Ku Klux Klan members and sympathizers jeered the marchers, waving Confederate flags and chanted racial slurs.

A march a week earlier by about 75 people through the rural county where blacks were terrorized and driven out in 1912 was cut short by rocks and bottles hurled by a mob of about 400 whites.

That prompted the second demonstration, on Saturday, when about 600 police officers and 1,700 National Guardsmen protected the marchers. Three people were treated after being hit by flying objects, and 56 counter-demonstrators were arrested.

Forsyth County will have to overcome the publicity if it wants to attract industry and jobs, said Roger Crow, president-elect of the Cumming-Forsyth County Chamber of Commerce and community spokesman during the disturbances.

"I'm glad it's over. It was a nightmare for this community," Crow said. "The media has painted a picture that our community is 40,000 fire-breathing racists. That is not true."

George Berry, commissioner of the state Department of Industry and Trade, said, "It would be foolish to think that it wouldn't have a negative effect. What we sell is the image of Georgia as a state of harmony. This is definitely a setback."

But he added, "I think Forsyth County has too many things going for it to have any long-term negative impact. We'll overcome it, especially when the good folks of Forsyth County demonstrate to the world that they are good folks."

The SCLC has written the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to investigate discrimination in Forsyth County, Lowery said Sunday night.

He said the SCLC also asked the Justice Department to investigate any findings.

One surrogate mother loves to be pregnant

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Erin Brotman says she loves to be pregnant.

The 24-year-old bank worker loves it so much that after giving birth to her daughter three years ago, Mrs. Brotman wanted to become pregnant again even though she and her husband weren't ready for another child.

So she became a surrogate mother. The experience was so fulfilling, she's decided to have another child for the couple for whom she was artificially inseminated and bore a healthy 6-pound, 8-ounce girl on July 14.

In the meantime, Mrs. Brotman is pregnant with a child she plans to keep.

"Everyone looks at me like I'm weird," she said last week in an interview from her Ontario, Calif., home. "I can't really describe it. I like to be pregnant. It doesn't slow me down. I go through my normal routine. I even feel better, physically, when I'm pregnant."

Surrogate motherhood has gotten publicity recently because of a case in New Jersey state court in which a woman decided not to give up the baby she had agreed to bear for a childless couple for $10,000.

But officials who arrange surrogate motherhood contracts say it is Mrs. Brotman's experience that is typical among the approximately 500 women who during the past decade have agreed to bear babies for a fee.

Mrs. Brotman said she developed a close relationship with the couple who hired her for $12,000. Her husband, young daughter, family and co-workers were all supportive. And she said she had no problems giving the child up to the biological father, a physician, and the adoptive mother, an interior designer.

Mrs. Brotman fondly recalled the day the baby was born, with the infertile couple and Mrs. Brotman's husband in the delivery room.

"The emotion in the delivery room was greater than anything I've felt," she said. "I can't even describe it. The emotion and the feeling of accomplishment. And then to see them as parents was just something I can't even describe."

The experience was different for Mary Beth Whitehead of Brick Township, the surrogate mother in the New Jersey court case. The 29-year-old housewife said she decided in the delivery room not to give up the baby, now 10 months old.

Superior Court Judge Harvey R. Sorkow heard two weeks of arguments this month on whether the contract between Mrs. Whitehead and William and Elizabeth Stern is valid. Next month, the trial in Hackensack will focus on who should have custody of the child, and Sorkow will rule on both questions.

"Mary Beth Whitehead is the exception," said Beth Scholten, who like Mrs. Brotman worked through the Center For Surrogate Parenting in Beverly Hills, Calif. "We're not all like her. There have been about three dozen surrogate mothers at our center and not one case turned out like Mary Beth Whitehead's."

She added: "We all feel very comfortable with what we've done and we don't have any regrets."

Dr. Hilary Hanafin, who interviews women for the center, said a number of factors can make a woman want to become a surrogate.

"She's usually the type of woman who feels that being a mother and having children is very important to society and one's life," Ms. Hanafin said. "Therefore, she feels a great deal of empathy for couples who can't have kids."

Some women become surrogates to deal with unresolved feelings, such as the pain felt after having an abortion or giving up of a child for adoption, but most enter into a surrogate arrangement out of a desire to accomplish something, Ms. Hanafin said.

"They're typically bright women, but often not able to fulfill career goals or more grand things," she said. "Being a surrogate mother is an opportunity to do something very special with their lives."

Giles Thompson, 16, shown here with his mother, Ann Holaday, lost both legs below the knees after almost freezing to death on Mount Hood last May. Now, he can even ski with the help of artificial lims.

Teen back on slopes less than year after tragedy

LONGVIEW, Wash. (AP) — A teen-ager who lost his lower legs in a whiteout blizzard that killed nine fellow hikers on Oregon's Mount Hood last May can now walk and even ski with the help of artificial limbs and months of therapy.

"I set my own pace for recovery," Giles Thompson, 16, told the Longview Daily News in a copyright series of stories earlier this month. "People wouldn't listen to me when I said, 'I'll do it when I want to do it.'"

The high school student's recovery included nearly two months in the hospital, 20 operations, a major chest infection and hours in a pressurized oxygen chamber in an attempt to save one of his knees.

Thompson was a sophomore at the Oregon Episcopal School, where he played soccer and was on the ski and track teams, when he and 19 other students and faculty members set out on May 12 to conquer 11,235-foot Mount Hood.

The expedition, a requirement for the sophomore class, began at 3 a.m. with light snow falling at the 5,960-foot level. The hikers turned back in two groups as the wind and snow picked up.

Four days after the climb began, a searcher's probe struck a pack and a tarp four feet below the surface in a snow cave where several hikers had dug in and huddled for warmth.

Rescuers dug in and heard the moans of Thompson and Brinton Clark, 16. Their eyes were open slightly.

Miss Clark suffered only minor frostbite. Six others who had taken shelter in the cave died, and three hikers were found dead on the mountainside, making it the worst hiking accident in the mountain's history.

Unable to restore circulation in Thompson's lower legs, doctors amputated his right leg above the knee and his left leg 6 inches below the knee. His kidneys also had shut down because of the cold, and he had to undergo dialysis.

After leaving the hospital July 9, Thompson struggled to learn to walk with artificial limbs and regain strength in his arms, depleted by nerve damage from the cold.

He began swimming and in December went to the Winter Park ski resort in Colorado, which runs a program for handicapped skiers. His fifth time down the beginner's slope, he didn't fall once.

"Can you imagine standing on a foreign object, his prosthesis, and being as graceful as that?" asked Hal O'Leary, head of the Winter Park program. "That's amazing."

NATION IN BRIEF

Pennsylvania official gave hints of impending suicide

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — State Treasurer R. Budd Dwyer told reporters in May that when his federal trial ended, he would give them "the story of the decade."

Last week, a month after he was found guilty of conspiring to award a contract in return for a bribe and one day before he was to be sentenced, Dwyer kept his promise in a way no one would have dared imagine.

He called a news conference, proclaimed his innocence and, at the moment when everyone in the room thought he would announce his resignation, pulled a gun from a manila envelope and committed suicide.

Dwyer, whose funeral was scheduled today in Meadville, gave a number of signs of his suicidal intention, but apparently no one noticed them before he fired a single bullet through his mouth and skull and slumped to the floor of his office.

There was Dwyer's handwritten letter Dec. 23 to U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter, also a Pennsylvania Republican, asking for a presidential pardon and saying that without it or a reversal of his convictions by Jan. 22, "my family will be destroyed even though I've done nothing wrong."

The date referred to in the note was the day Dwyer killed himself.

Hart speaks on education

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former senator Gary Hart, in a major policy address on education, is calling for competency tests for all school teachers, a longer school year and sharp increases in federal spending on education.

He proposed tacking a $10-per-barrel fee on oil imports to help pay for his multi-billion-dollar program to elevate literacy levels and renew an education system he said is "racing toward obsolescence."

The former Colorado lawmaker, an undeclared candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination next year, had been scheduled to unveil his education blueprint today in a speech at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville.

After a snowstorm swept the Mid-Atlantic states, the speech was postponed until Tuesday. Hart's campaign office released the text of the speech in Washington in advance.

Hart said education is "the key to unlock the 21st century for America."

Asian-American honored

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A granite sculpture of a Japanese lantern was dedicated Sunday as a memorial to space shuttle Challenger astronaut Ellison Onizuka, the first Asian-American to enter space.

Onizuka, 39, died Jan. 28, 1986, with six other Challenger astronauts when the shuttle exploded moments after takeoff.

The $3,000 sculpture, which stands nearly 7 feet tall and weighs about 1,500 pounds, is a symbol of eternal life to Asian-Americans, said William Wong, president of the Asian-American Federation of Florida.

Many Asian-Americans feel Onizuka, a native of Kealakekua, Hawaii, has not been recognized properly for being the first Asian-American in space, Wong said. Onizuka first entered space on a Jan. 24, 1985, shuttle flight.

About 100 people, some dressed in traditional Asian clothing, attended a 45-minute memorial sponsored by the federation to honor Onizuka, an Air Force lieutenant colonel.

Prejudice abounds, poll says

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Americans, black and white, believe that the United States is still plagued by racial prejudice, but disagree on the reasons for it and the way to remedy it, according to a Time magazine poll.

Ninety-two percent of blacks questioned last week, and 87 percent of whites, agreed that "racial prejudice is still very common in the U.S.," the magazine reported.

Scientists flood 7,000-year-old site

TITUSVILLE, Fla. (AP) — After three years of digging, archaeologists who unearthed human brain tissue and bones 7,000 years old from a drained pond are flooding the site even though most of its clues to the past are still in the ground.

"We never want to remove everything," said Madeleine Carr, spokeswoman for the Windover Archaeological Research Project. "We want to leave it.

"It's sort of a nice feeling to know that at least half of it is still there. People can come back in the future, if they ever need to, and continue where we left off."

Jefferson, Adams try to end Barbary pirates' hostage-taking

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Friday, Jan. 26, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The weather was still with a morning temperature of 35 and light rain.

The Philadelphia Street Commissioners met, all six present, and paid Michael Wartman 50 pounds on account for cleaning the streets, as scavenger for the Northern District. Stable-keeper, local official and diarist Jacob Hiltzheimer reported today that he and five others, including Wartman, had met with the street commissioners in Front Street below Dock yesterday evening, perhaps to determine the value of the work Wartman had done.

Philadelphia brewer Thomas Morris brewed 60 bushels of malt and 86 pounds of good hops and produced 15 barrels of keeping beer and nine barrels of small beer.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Delegates from five states and Arthur St. Clair of Pennsylvania continued to wait for a congressional quorum. New York appointed new delegates for 1787 — John Haring, Melancton Smith, Abraham Yates Jr., Egbert Benson and John Lansing Jr.

John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, commissioners for negotiating a treaty with Morocco, wrote Congress enclosing the treaty, reporting a lack of information on the status of the treaty with Portugal, and noting that money was so scarce that they would spend no more on the Barbary business, not even to ransom American seamen, without further orders. They also wrote His Excellency Sidi Hadq Taher Ben Abdellack Fennish, secretary to the emperor of Morocco, to thank him for forwarding the treaty.

DELEGATES TODAY

Connecticut's William Samuel Johnson reported it was foggy in New York. He spent the day reading and writing, paid Barrows room rent of 52 shillings and had daily expenses of 13 shillings. Madison and Mr. Griffith left Mt. Vernon after breakfast; the former for New York and his seat in Congress. George Washington then rode to his plantations, starting the ditchers at work on the boundary between the home and Ferry plantations.

Benjamin Franklin paid John Hall 40 pounds on account for carpentry and Benjamin and Enoch Taylor 35 pounds on account for laying brick — all at the houses he was building on Market Street.

LOOKING BACK

Morocco and the Barbary Pirates

In 1787, the United States had treaties of friendship and commerce with France, the Netherlands and Spain, and was about to ratify one with Portugal, and had signed one with Morocco. What put Morocco ahead of Prussia, the Italian states, Russia, Denmark and Turkey?

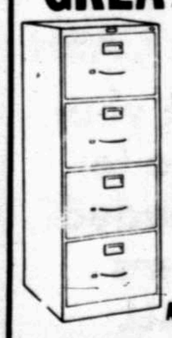

The reason was hostage-taking by countries along North Africa's Mediterranean coast. In 1787, the Barbary states — Algiers, Morocco, Tripoli and Tunis — supplemented their revenue by seizing foreign ships and holding the crews for ransom. On Jan. 26, 1787, Algiers was holding two captains, four mates and 15 seamen. The estimated ransom, at $6,000 for each captain, $4,000 for each mate and $1,500 for each seaman, totaled $50,500.

One of the negative side effects of winning the Revolutionary War had been the loss of British naval protection in the Mediterranean. Pirates from North Africa subsequently began to prey on American ships and sailors. Jefferson had suggested an international expedition against the Barbary states, but Congress refused to provide a frigate. While Thomas Barclay negotiated a treaty with Morocco in June 1786, Algiers, Tripoli and Tunis continued to devastate United States merchant shipping.

Thomas Jefferson was able to secure the freedom of American sailors for $400 a piece. Yet, the payment of ransom did not solve the problem. Between 1786 and 1800, the United States paid $2 million to the North African countries, which, on the average, drained one-fifth of the nation's annual revenue.

The problem with the Barbary pirates was finally solved when the American Navy won a decisive victory in 1804.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1053 ♡86 ◇873 ♣AQJ106
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?

A.—In terms of point count pure and simple, you probably should pass. This, however, is the time to let logic prevail over points. Your hand rates to produce four or five tricks for partner, which makes it a better hand than many 10-pointers. We would gamble on three no trump.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ73 ♡J65 ◇K95 ♣KJ3
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Do not fall into the trap of bidding some number of no trump because you have a balanced hand. Partner's rebid virtually guarantees a six-card suit, so his hand is unbalanced. Jump to four hearts.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ63 ♡AQ952 ◇76 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Would we try to trap you? There is no reason not to make the bid that describes your hand best. You have not yet told partner that you have five hearts, so go ahead—bid three hearts.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K85 ♡9 ◇KQ762 ♣KJ63
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Even if you play four-card majors, North's two no trump rebid does not necessarily deny a five-card spade suit—he might just be saying that he has a balanced hand suitable for no trump play without three-card diamond support. However, it is your job to probe for the best game contract, and you can do that by bidding three spades now.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠7 ♡AKQ852 ◇A93 ♣KJ7
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
A.—Your hand is too strong for an overcall of two hearts. The correct action is to double first, intending to bid hearts next over any bid your partner makes.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q762 ♡873 ◇964 ♣1042
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What action do you take?

A.—Even if your range is 22-24 points, your combined total at most is 26. While that is usually enough for game, that is not the case when the weak hand is possibly entryless and you have to keep leading from the strong hand. Pass.

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A free-lance writer and teacher working on an unauthorized biography of "Lake Wobegon Days" author Garrison Keillor says he's having problems gathering material.

Michael Fedo, 47, who lives near Anoka, where Keillor grew up, said last week he's been hampered by refusals to comment from Keillor and people who are important to the life and career of the host of American Public Radio's popular "A Prairie Home Companion."

Keillor, who lives in St. Paul, is not listed in the telephone book and could not be reached for comment.

Fedo said recently he is doing the book for St. Martin's Press in New York and has received an advance of between $5,000 and $8,000.

"I wouldn't be able to feel that I had done any kind of justice if I only did a puff piece, but at the same time, I don't think that I'm going anywhere near the direction of the tabloids, either," Fedo said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Jazz drummer Buddy Rich was in stable condition Sunday at Mount Sinai Medical Center, where he was admitted for treatment of an undisclosed ailment, hospital officials said.

Rich, 69, checked in Saturday and asked that the nature of his illness be kept private, said hospital spokeswoman Nancy Mensch. The drummer was listed in stable condition, said Calvin Montgomery, the administrator on duty.

Rich, scheduled to appear in concert Sunday in Wilmington, N.C., is known for his fiery, aggressive style of drumming and carefully constructed solos.

"Playing a drum solo is like telling a story," he once said. "It has a beginning, a middle, and...a punch line. I try to play a drum solo constructed along a line. What comes out is what I feel."

Rich was born in Brooklyn in 1917 and began his career as a performer in his parent's vaudeville act. At age 4 he appeared on Broadway in "Pinwheel."

As a musician, Rich has appeared with such jazz greats as Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey and Harry James.

He has received numerous jazz awards and in 1974 was named to the Down Beat Hall of Fame.

No apologies

State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland has nothing to apologize for in the wake of being stripped of his chairmanship on the House Natural Resources Committee last week. While serving in that capacity he tackled several major issues, including the controversial reform of state water programs. But he's never been one to walk away from controversy.

There was considerable concern voiced when Speaker Gib Lewis announced committee assignments and more than a few legislators let it be known that some of Lewis's choices smacked of political retaliation. One of those was Craddick's Natural Resources chairmanship.

But that move should come as no surprise when a state has two active political parties with sharply different ideologies, which has been increasingly the case in Texas in the last few years.

Craddick is no beginner in the legislative arena. And even if Lewis's reshuffling of him off the Natural Resources Committee wasn't a response to the Midlander's political views, the fact that he was given a position on the powerful Ways & Means Committee signifies that the speaker recognized that merely stripping Craddick of a chairmanship with no subsequent utilization of Craddick's legislative talents would be a political mistake.

Over the years Tom Craddick has built a degree of expertise and political influence that virtually insures he will not fall prey to political sabotage. In this instance, the loss to the Natural Resources Committee, although understandably regrettable, will be more than justified with the ability gained by Ways & Means. That commitee will tackle the question of taxes this session and Craddick's influence on the committee could prove crucial to the outcome.

Of course, all of this is not intended to imply that we are always in agreement with Craddick on every issue. Even good friends disagree from time-to-time. But after the committee assignments were announced, Craddick speculated the change may have resulted from his failure to support Lewis's stance on more issues. "I'm just not going to vote for things that I don't think are right," said Craddick.

After being sent to Austin for 19 years to represent this district's interests, Craddick can rest comfortably in the knowledge that he is meeting the expectations of his constituents regardless of what Gib Lewis thinks.

Different attitude

The Greek government headed by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, ıce overtly hostile to the Unit-l States, seems to be pulling in ɜ horns.

In a 180-degree policy reversal - influenced, no doubt, by Gree-'s economic difficulties — Pa-ndreou has indicated to an merican visitor that he is will-g to consider the continuation U.S. military bases in his coun-y and has given solemn assur-ıce that "Greece will always be ith the West."

The opportunistic Papandreou bviously has discovered that his ountry has been going no here by turning its back on the .S. and making overtures to the oviet Union and to the tinhorn ictators of the Middle East.

In a symbolic olive branch offering, the Papandreou government has also told John Plumides, head of the American-Hellenic Educational Progressive Association, that it will take steps to restore the statue of former President Harry Truman which was dynamited off its pedestal in an Athens square by leftist terrorists almost a year ago.

The Papandreou government was at first indifferent to this outrage. But the sentiments of a majority of the Greek people who have always revered Harry Truman for the assistance he gave them in their civil war with the communists, are finally registering with the Papandreou clique.

Another View:

Defensible budgets

The Reagan administration calls its proposed defense budget for fiscal 1988 "very modest," and compared to requests of the past few years, it is.

Even so, the temptation will be strong among House and Senate members to take large chunks out of it. Congress would be making a mistake to let itself get carried away.

The defense budget has presented a fat target lately because Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger's tactic each year had been to ask for much more than he expected to get. This year, under pressure from the White House, the Pentagon has taken a more realistic approach.

The proposed defense budget still is mammoth: $312 billion. But then so are the needs of national security.

Actually, the $312 billion is $8 billion less than the Pentagon asked a year ago. Congress slashed nearly $30 billion off last year's request. A reduction anywhere near that magnitude this time could be dangerous and clearly should be out of the question.

Using the $292 billion authorized by Congress for fiscal 1987 as a starting point, the Pentagon has asked for an increase of only 3 percent after accounting for inflation. To arrive at the $312 billion figure, the Pentagon had to stretch out many procurement programs. The goal of a 600-ship Navy won't be achieved by 1989, as had been planned, and neither will the target of 40 Air Force fighter wings.

Some items in the defense request undoubtedly will get sharp scrutiny in Congress. One is a proposed $2 billion increase to accelerate research on President Reagan's controversial Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars). Another is a request for $660 million to begin work on two more nuclear-powered aircraft carriers; some in Congress believe it would be better to buy more smaller ships. A third is a request for more funds for controversial MX and Midgetman nuclear missiles.

It is reasonable to expect that Congress will do some juggling among Pentagon spending accounts and perhaps make some modest reductions. But the legislators would be remiss if they engage in wholesale cutting of a defense budget that appears to meet the nation's minimum security needs.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 26, the 26th day of 1987. There are 339 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

One hundred and fifty years ago, Michigan became the 26th state with the signing of a statehood bill by President Andrew Jackson.

On this date:

In 1784, in a letter to his daughter, Benjamin Franklin expressed unhappiness over the choice of the eagle as the symbol of America. Franklin's own preference: the turkey.

In 1942, the first American expeditionary force to go to Europe during World War II came ashore in Northern Ireland.

Thought for Today: "Habit is habit, and not to be flung out the window by any man, but coaxed downstairs a step at a time." — Mark Twain (1835-1910).

Sultan didn't intend money for contras

WASHINGTON — The Sultan of Brunei says the State Department lied when it claimed he had donated $10 million to aid the Nicaraguan contras, according to sources speaking for the Southeast Asian ruler.

Jack Anderson

State Department officials insist that a "third country's" money was intended for "the Nicaraguan resistance." But they maintain that Brunei has never been officially identified as the country that was importuned to help with U.S. efforts in Central America.

In numerous published reports, however, Foggy Bottom officials have said that Hassanal Bolkiah, sultan of the tiny, oil-rich country and the world's wealthiest man, was told that any donation he made would go for non-military aid to the contras. But Bruneian officials told us emphatically that the U.S. request was for humanitarian aid to the needy of Central America.

If the sultan had known that the $10 million was to be used to help the anti-Sandinista rebels, he would not have given the money, the Bruneian officials told us. Though he is a dedicated anti-communist, the sultan does not wish to prolong the fighting between the leftist regime in Managua and the contras supported by the Reagan administration.

Dale Van Atta flew to Brunei last month to check into the donation, which has figured in the uproar over secret funding of the contras at a time when Congress had forbidden any official U.S. aid. The press-shy ruler was indisposed and unavailable for a personal interview, but he met with his top officials to prepare a statement for us to explain his role in the burgeoning scandal.

The carefully worded statement, amplified by Bruneian officials on a background basis, made clear that the sultan and his advisers feel they were "stung" by U.S. officials and resent their innocent involvement in the Reagan administration scandal.

The statement stated: "His Majesty the Sultan and Yang DiPertuan of Brunei Darussalam (Brunei, Abode of Peace) said that he had made a personal donation to the United States to be used for humanitarian purposes in Central America."

According to a secret report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the sultan was asked to put $10 million in a secret Swiss bank account controlled by Lt. Col. Oliver North, deputy national security adviser. North was fired from his post after it was discovered that profits from the sale of U.S. arms to Iran may have been diverted to the contras through a Swiss bank account.

The sultan's aides confirmed that he did donate $10 million. But they insisted that the sultan had no idea the money was going to the contras. They compared it to the $500,000 that the sultan gave to New York Mayor Ed Koch in 1984 for the city's meals-on-wheels program, in accordance with his desire as a devout Moslem to follow the Koran's injunction to the rich to care for the poor.

"The donation was made at the request of the United States secretary of state, Mr. George Shultz, in the summer of 1986," the Bruneian statement said. Shultz, who has denied that he personally asked for the donation, met with the sultan for 45 minutes in the course of a two-hour visit to Brunei last June 24. U.S. Ambassador Barrington King, who was present at the meeting, refused to comment when we asked if the donation was solicited at that time.

"It was his majesty's understanding from the personal representative of Mr. Shultz that the donation would be devoted to welfare purposes, and his majesty assumed that it had been so applied," the statement continued. "Once the money had been paid it was beyond his control."

Bruneian officials told us that Shultz's "personal representative" was Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs. The final paragraph of the sultan's statement reflects his feeling of betrayal:

"His majesty was given to understand that the United States was approaching other countries ... for donations. On this basis, he agreed to accede to this request in good faith as a gesture of good will and friendship to the United States."

STEALTH SLEUTHS: The Air Force has gone to great lengths to keep its super-secret Stealth airplanes super-secret. But the Pentagon's security people did not reckon with the skill and curiosity of the nation's ham radio operators, who've been busy figuring out ways to track the airborne ghosts. For example, the first clue that a Stealth plane had crashed last year came when a ham overheard a disaster investigator, apparently unfamiliar with the project, report that the wreckage was "something special." Radio buffs have now put together a list of frequencies they can track Stealth planes on, and they're vying to be first to monitor a test flight.

Foreign relations lunch not open to Helms

WASHINGTON — In a 90-second telephone conversation congratulating Sen. Jesse Helms on his election as Republican leader on the Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State George Shultz did not propose continuing the weekly luncheon that he had with Sen. Richard Lugar.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The omission suggested that beneath the surface cordiality, the peace pipe was certainly not burning between Shultz and Helms. The State Department was openly rooting for Lugar to keep the top GOP spot on the committee against Helms.

The luncheon invitation might yet be made, but friends of Shultz and Helms say privately that the personal animosity between them is just too great to bridge. Shultz deeply resents Helms' ferocious flanking actions against his ambassadorial choices and his ideological criticisms on South Africa, Chile and arms control.

HARD-NOSE BUSH

Shortly after he declared his presidential support for Rep. Jack Kemp, Rep. Beau Boulter of Texas was visited by an emissary of the vice president who strongly suggested that Boulter's choice had clouded his future in George Bush's home state.

"You owe George Bush," political operative Ron Kaufman told the congressman. "You have made enemies who will never forgive." The vice president himself called another Kemp endorser, Rep. Robert C. Smith of critically-important New Hampshire, to try to change his mind, but made no threats.

A footnote: Sponsors of Chicago's St. Patrick's parade were surprised when Senate minority leader Robert J. Dole solicited an invitation. Desiring to thwart an invasion of presidential hopefuls, the parade sponsors set to work on a soft rejection. Meanwhile, Kemp was able to coax a South Boston St. Patrick's parade invitation from its Democratic sponsor, State Senate President William Bulger.

DICK & PAT

Contrary to reports spreading in the political community, Richard M. Nixon did not talk his former aide, Patrick J. Buchanan, out of becoming a candidate for president.

Nixon had told others he hoped Buchanan would not run but did not say so directly in their telephone conversation four days before he decided not to run. Instead, he posed a series of questions he thought Buchanan should consider.

Friends who know Nixon's indirect methods best say he would not even have done that much had he thought Buchanan had decided to enter the race. Once Buchanan's choice was announced, Nixon congratulated him on a wise decision in a second telephone conversation.

ON TO BULGARIA

In an unannounced addition to his Eastern European trip, Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead will stop in Bulgaria — angering conservatives in both parties who oppose an official visit to a country still implicated in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II.

The rule of thumb for official visits to Soviet satellites has been no visit unless the country has reduced Moscow's political influence or made a breakthrough in human rights. Bulgaria falls far short on both counts.

Whitehead's visit, approved by Secretary George Shultz, may be intended to test communist waters in the midst of Mikhail Gorbachev's claimed efforts at reforms within the Soviet bloc. But realists in and out of the administration view it as a concession that makes the U.S. look dangerously eager for a new arms-control breakthrough and another summit.

MISSING NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans was so much the first choice of Democratic National Chairman Paul Kirk for the 1988 national convention that he unsuccessfully tried to get site selection committee members to pick the Louisiana metropolis and preempt the Republicans.

But committee members insisted on carrying out the regular procedure previously announced, arguing it would offend other cities making a serious bid. As a result, the Republicans shook hands with New Orleans, with the stipulation that Democrats could not also meet there.

Houston was virtually assured the Democratic nod when Klu Klux Klan members and their supporters attacked civil rights marchers in Forsyth County, Ga. Atlanta had been a serious rival of Houston, with a good chance of winning out, but racial violence 30 miles away had a major impact on site selectors. Besides, several of the committee feel Houston, as an economically depressed area, helps frame the '88 campaign theme.

CHARLEY REESE

'Against All Hope' explores human courage

Until I read "Against All Hope," the prison memoirs of the Cuban poet Armando Valladares, I did not understand why the book had caused such a worldwide reaction.

Charley Reese

Valladares, after all, is not the first man to emerge from the gulag of Fidel Castro's Cuba and tell the world the truth about it. Some of the stories he tells I had heard before, either in person from Cubans or in written accounts.

But Valladares' account of his long ordeal in Castro's gulag, "Against All Hope," is one of those rare books that can alter the lives of readers. It is a phenomenon because Valladares is a great man with the gift of eloquence. It is a testament, like the works of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, that the value of the writer is the ability to tell the truth in a way than can pierce the intellect and strike the heart.

There are several elements that make Valladares a great man. One is his humility. Another is his courage. There are several orders of courage but the highest of all is the courage of those who, totally in the control of their captors, with hope of neither mercy nor deliverance nor even the opportunity to strike a symbolic last blow, nevertheless stand in naked defiance of their tormentors.

There is the element of strength to endure torture, degradation, insult, beatings, malnutrition, and despair and yet not break. Yet Valladares has more than even those qualities. There have been men who had the courage of defiance and the strength to endure but who emerged from their hellish ordeal so bent by hate and bitterness as to be almost a reverse image of their tormentors.

Valladares survived with his humanity intact. He writes and speaks not as an opponent of Fidel Castro, but as a proponent of humanity and the human spirit. It is not Castro's ideology he opposes — though he wryly remarks no ideology in history was ever more wrong about human nature than Marxism — but his cruelty and inhumanity.

"Man is Nature's most wonderful creature," Valladares has written. Torturing him, crushing him, murdering him for his beliefs and ideas is more than a violation of human rights — it is a crime against all humanity.

"Against All Hope" paints in vivid strokes the dark side of a communist society that has nothing to do with ideology or economics or politics. It is an irrationally malicious society in which the worst elements of human nature are empowered to brutalize and to kill on the flimiest whim. It kills not just those opposed to it, but as the frenzy to conformity builds, kills even its own supporters who voice the mildest disagreement over the most inconsequential matter to even the most minor of bureaucrats.

Another element of Valladares that has been ignored in the reviews of his book that I've read is his strong religious faith. Time and again, when Valladares is shaken to his bones by terror, almost destroyed by despair, it's his faith on which he relies for survival. Of all the remarkable and brave men whose portraits he paints, one of the most poignant is the man they called the Brother of the Faith, who, as he died from a burst of gunfire, cried out, "Forgive them, Lord, for they know not what they do."

Like other gulag books, "Against All Hope" is a mosaic of light and shadow, a gallery of examples of the very worst that humans can be and of the very best they can be. Some may see only the shadows, but I came from the book with a new list of men with Cuban names whom I shall never know but whom I shall forever admire and cherish.

To miss "Against All Hope" is to live in ignorance of your own time and of the essential epic conflict that has shaped and will shape the very earth itself.

I'm not worthy to shine Valladares' shoes. That's why I say if you can read "Against All Hope" and not be moved to tears, I don't want to meet you but if I do, I will be your enemy.

Helmut Kohl, Christian Democratic Party re-elected

Kohl

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl's conservative coalition was elected to another four years in office despite his party's worst showing since 1949 and impressive gains by the anti-NATO Greens.

Kohl's conservative Christian Democrats and their Bavarian allies, the Christian Social Union, won just 44.3 percent of the vote in national elections Sunday, down 4.5 percentage points from 1983.

It was an embarassing setback for the party that guided West Germany out of the ashes of World War II under Chancellor Konrad Adenauer.

"It's like a wedding where the bride doesn't show up," said a commentator on ZDF television.

The official results showed the opposition Social Democrats also slipped from their 1983 returns, winning 37 percent of the vote compared with 1983's 38.2 percent.

The business-oriented Free Democratic Party, part of the governing coalition with the Christian Democrats and Christian Social Union, received 9.1 percent of the vote, up from 7 percent in 1983.

The Greens, which first entered Parliament four years ago as a loose coalition of pacifists and former student radicals, received 8.3 percent of the vote, well up from the 5.6 they got in 1983.

A few independents picked up the remaining seats in the 497-member Parliament.

Kohl, 56, who had campaigned on West Germany's buoyant economy and loyalty to the NATO alliance, said his party's results were "gloomy" and marked a "painful loss."

WORLD

But he said in a nationally televised address, "We reached our goal of continuing the coalition, and that is the important thing."

Kohl, chancellor since October 1982, has been riding high in public opinion polls. He was encouraged by the healthy economy and an upbeat national mood that seemed little affected by the terrorist kidnapping of two West Germans in Lebanon this month.

The losses in the conservative camp, however, were a big blow to Bavarian Gov. Franz Josef Strauss, who had hoped his Christian Social Union would perform well enough to catapult him to Bonn as Foreign Minister.

The feisty Strauss did not try to hide his distress on national television, and complained that the Bonn coalition was to blame for losses in his state.

"We are being made reponsible for Bonn policies," he said. "We were dragged into these losses."

Christian Democrat camapaign manager Heiner Geissler indicated that sniping among members of the governing coalition may have hurt the conservatives.

"One should spend more time shooting at the enemy and not in one's own camp,' he said.

Social Democrat Johannes Rau, 56, the popular state governor whose race for the chancellor's office had been viewed as doomed, smiled as he spoke to reporters at his party headquarters.

"Of course, we were the losers," Rau said. "But these results are a warning sign for the government."

Rau's campaign had called for a gradual end to nuclear power plants, the removal of U.S.-built nuclear missiles from Europe, increased social welfare protrams and less money for defense.

"The result is worse than what we had hoped for at the beginning but much better than we had feared at the end," said Peter Glotz, the Social Democrats' general secretary.

Greens member Lukas Beckmann said the erosion in support for Kohl signaled a clear rejection of the "right turn" that Beckmann claimed the chancellor was prepared to make in domestic and foreign policy.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, a leading member of the Free Democrats, said he interpreted the results as a vote of confidence in his foreign policy.

His insistence on pursuing detente with East Germany had been sharply criticized by several members of Strauss' party during the campaign.

The official voting results give each party the following representation in the new 497-member Parliament: the Christian Democrats-Christian Social Union, 223 seats, down from 244; the Free Democrats 46 seats, up from 34; the Social Democrats 18? seats, down fron 193; and the Greens 42 seats, up from 27.

The governing coalition now holds 53 percent of the seats in Parliament, down from 55 percent before the election. Officials said 84 to 85 percent of West Germany's 45 million eligible voters cast ballots.

Iran says its forces kill, wound 3,000 Iraqis

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said today its forces killed or wounded 3,000 Iraqi troops while capturing Iraqi positions during an overnight attack in the southern sector of the Persian Gulf war battlefront.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the newly captured positions were west of Fish Lake along the Dual Canal and west of the Jasim River in the Shalamcheh region.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Iranian forces also destroyed a bridge over the canal. "Water entering Fish Lake and lakes west of Shalamcheh is fully controlled by the Iranian forces," the report said.

But an Iraqi war communique issued late Sunday said Iranian forces east of Basra were besieged in a narrow strip of land. It said Iraqi artillery and tank fire repulsed Iranian advances Saturday and Sunday south and east of Fish Lake, six, miles east of Basra.

It was not clear if the two sides were referring to the same battlefield actions.

Both sides restrict foreign correspondents' access to the battlefront, and independent verification of war reports was impossible.

The Iranian news agency said the 60-yard wide canal, also known as the Feeding Canal, had served as an Iraqi barricade.

Sources in Iran, who commented on condition of anonymity, said Iraqi forces have dug several canals in an effort to impede any eventual Iranian thrust to take Basra.

IRNA said the latest push was a continuation of an offensive across the Shatt-al-Arab waterway south of Basra, Iraq's second largest city and its most important port.

The offensive, named Karbala-5, was launched Jan. 9 in an apparent attempt to capture Basra, a city of 1 million. The two countries have been fighting for more than 6 years.

IRNA also said that in addition to the 3,000 casualties inflicted by Iranian forces, 78 Iraqis were taken prisoner.

The agency quoted an Iranian army commander as saying Iranian forces crushed an Iraqi attempt to counterattack from three directions in the Shalamcheh region.

The unidentified commander said the Iranians turned the area west of Fish Lake into a "graveyard for the Iraqi forces and a dump for enemy munitions."

Twenty Iraqi tanks were destroyed and five others were seized during the new phase of the offensive, IRNA said.

Police question Winnie Mandela, detain her daughter

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police questioned black activist Winnie Mandela for about 5½ hours, seized documents belonging to her and briefly detained one of her daughters, a lawyer for the family said.

A police spokesman would say only that Mrs. Mandela was not formally in custody and had not been arrested. However, he said his comments did not rule out that she was questioned.

Mrs. Mandela, 52, called a news conference for later today. She is the wife of jailed former African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela and one of the nation's most outspoken anti-apartheid activists.

Her lawyer, Ismail Ayob, said police took Mrs. Mandela from her home in the Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg, at about 5 p.m. Sunday and brought her to the Protea police station in Soweto. They returned an hour later for Mrs. Mandela's daughter, Zinzi, he said.

Both women later were released.

Ayob said he was not present during the questioning but that Mrs. Mandela told him afterward it seemed to be "routine."

Police took a filing cabinet filled with documents belonging to Mrs. Mandela but later returned it, he said, adding that no documents seemed to have been taken.

Reporters said Mrs. Mandela delivered a powerful address Saturday at a funeral in Soweto for a member of the outlawed African National Congress guerrilla movement.

Icebreakers rescue about 1,100 people from ice floes

MOSCOW (AP) — Helicopters and icebreakers rescued about 1,100 people from two huge ice floes that cracked off the shoreline under hurricane-force winds and floated out into the Gulf of Riga, a Latvian rescue official said today.

None of those on the floes Sunday, mostly fishermen and their families, were killed or injured, the sea rescue official in Jurmala, Latvia, told The Associated Press by telephone.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said about 1,100 people had gone onto the ice for weekend ice fishing. The ice extended from the shore into the gulf, which empties into the Baltic Sea.

At about 11 a.m., the ice began breaking off as the weather turned bad and winds began blowing at what news reports described as "hurricane force."

Three icebreakers were dispatched, the Latvian official said, along with seven military helicopters and teams from seven local rescue organizations.

Rescue workers found 1,100 people stranded on two adjacent ice floes that were a total of about 2.2 miles long and between 300 yards and about a mile wide.

"They used the icebreakers to push the ice floes back to shore, so some people could just jump off."

China expelling American reporter

PEKING (AP) — The Foreign Ministry today ordered the French news agency Agence France-Presse to transfer from China one of its reporters, an American who allegedly accepted information from a Chinese student.

The reporter, 32-year-old Lawrence MacDonald, has been in Hong Kong for the last few days and it was not clear if he would be allowed to return to Peking.

The action against MacDonald, announced by the official Xinhua News Agency, came one day after the government said a Chinese student was arrested for alleged "secret collusion" with MacDonald.

Xinhua on Sunday quoted the State Security Bureau, China's intelligence agency, as saying that the student, Lin Jie of Tianjin University, had provided intelligence information to MacDonald. Tianjin, a port city east of Peking, was one of at least 11 cities where students held prodemocracy demonstrations in December and early January.

The agency did not give details of the information Lin allegedly passed on. MacDonald had reported extensively on the student demonstrations, which have led to a crackdown on pro-Western intellectuals.

Xinhua today released a Foreign Ministry statement saying MacDonald was required to leave his Peking post "as soon as possible."

"The Chinese Ministry of State Security has obtained conclusive evidence of MacDonald's recent activities which did not accord with his status as a journalist and were harmful to friendship between the Chinese and French people," the statement said.

MacDonald, from San Luis Obispo, Calif., had been in China for two years and is fluent in Chinese. He had planned to return to Peking on Sunday but remained in Hong Kong after learning of Lin's arrest. He could not be reached for comment.

The AFP office in Peking said it had no immediate comment.

The government move appeared linked to government criticism of the Western press for its recent reporting on China's political situation.

Foreign news organizations have quoted Chinese sources extensively in reports on the student protests and on links between the protests and the Jan. 16 ouster of Hu Yaobang as Communist Party chief.

The official press has criticized Voice of America, the U.S. government-funded radio station, saying its reporting on student unrest has been "inflammatory."

WORLD in brief

Kenya students attacked

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — At least 200 university students went on a window-breaking rampage in downtown Nairobi after six classmates were beaten up, police and newspapers said Sunday.

Police Commissioner Bernard Njiinu said nine students were arrested after the Friday night fracas but were released Saturday pending charges.

University of Nairobi students rushed into the streets from their dormitories after learning six classmates were attacked by a group of civilians in a main business district, Njiinu said. It took police more than an hour to quell the disturbance.

Witnesses, including taxi drivers, said the six students had argued with street salesmen selling food.

Daniel Chome, one of the injured students, was quoted as saying in an interview with the Sunday Nation that he and the others were attacked with wooden planks and clubs as they walked back to the campus from a hotel bar.

Japan's Diet reconvenes

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's parliament, the Diet, returned today from a month-long New Year's recess to discuss the 1987 budget and a proposed increase in defense spending.

The Japan Socialist Party and other opposition parties have said they will seek to block a government plan to increase defense spending by 5.2 percent to $23 billion, slightly exceeding a decade-old self-imposed ceiling of 1 percent of the gross national product.

However, the governing Democratic Party holds a majority in the Diet's main chamber, the House of Representatives, and the budget is expected to win approval.

Another major issue will be a tax reform bill that calls for reducing individual and corporate income tax rates, taxing the interest on savings and introducing a levy modeled on European value-added taxes. Opponents say it would hurt consumers.

Mexico plans bridge

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government newspaper El Nacional said Sunday there are plans for the construction of an international bridge along the border in Nuevo Leon state.

The report said the bridge would be constructed in Columbus which is located about 20 miles northwest of Nuevo Loredo.

The newspaper said the project has been approved by President Miguel de la Madrid and now needs only the approval of U.S. officials. No estimate was given on when the project might be completed.

A storm tracking the East Coast churned snow and gusty winds today, raising fears of blizzard conditions, a foot-deep snowfall and bone-chilling cold.

Snow was falling from the Tennessee Valley across southeast Pennsylvania and New Jersey to southeastern New York and southern New England.

Elsewhere, snowshowers dotted the central Rockies, central Plains and lower Missouri Valley, and a snow advisory was posted for the northern and central mountains of Colorado.

A storm off the northern Pacific Coast sent rain into western Oregon while rain and snowshowers were scattered across the intermountain region. Gale warnings were issued for the coasts of Washington and Oregon.

Blizzard conditions were likely to develop today over eastern Long Island, much of New Jersey and southeast Pennsylvania.

Snowfall amounts could range up to a foot or more the hardest-hit sections, the weather service said.

Winter storm warnings were in effect across much of New England, southeast Pennsylvania, most of Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, sections of West Virginia and the northern mountains and foothills of North Carolina.

Snow and icy roads also prompted travelers' advisories for broad sections of Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Tennesee and North Carolina.

For love of animals

Doing pregnancy examinations on horses or sticking tubes up their noses to deworm them may not be everyone's idea of fun, but two area vets say they wouldn't trade places with anybody.

A love for the outdoors and animals keeps 30-year veteran Henry Tillett and newcomer Robert Cobb working as "country vets."

Robert Cobb, who set up a vet service about a year ago, and Henry Tillett, who has been working on cattle and horses in Midland for 30 years, are two of approximately seven vets in Midland working with large animals.

Cobb makes house calls in a refrigerated mobile veterinarian clinic, set up in the back of his double-cab pickup, in which numerous medicines and vaccines are kept cool in the summer and heated in the winter.

Unlike Cobb, the 65-year-old Tillett now restricts his services mainly to caring for small animals and checking cattle for brucellosies or "bangs disease" at the Midland County Auction.

Every Tuesday Tillett draws blood samples from adult cows at the auction to test for the bacteria that makes humans sick if they drink raw milk.

Despite his 30 years of having to give shots and perform other painful procedures on horses and cows, Tillett says the only injury he has gotten on the job is a broken arm, suffered when it got caught between two cattle.

"You learn to use a lot of precaution," he said.

But he did have a close call one time at the auction when a wild cow was challenging every man that came near her.

Some ranchers chided the doctor about his reluctance to approach the animal.

"I have a fear of her," he told them.

"Why, she has no fear of you," one rancher jibed.

Cobb said animals are "just like little kids" and will always try to pull something on you.

Both men attended Texas A&M University, the only vet school in the state.

When he first got out of vet school in 1950, Tillett spent a year in central Mexico trying to wipe out the "hoof and mouth" disease that was weakening many Mexican herds.

Tillett spent a year in the Jalisco and Michoacan states south of Guadalajara, going into rough terrain and vaccinating cows.

Please see VETERINARIAN, Page 2B

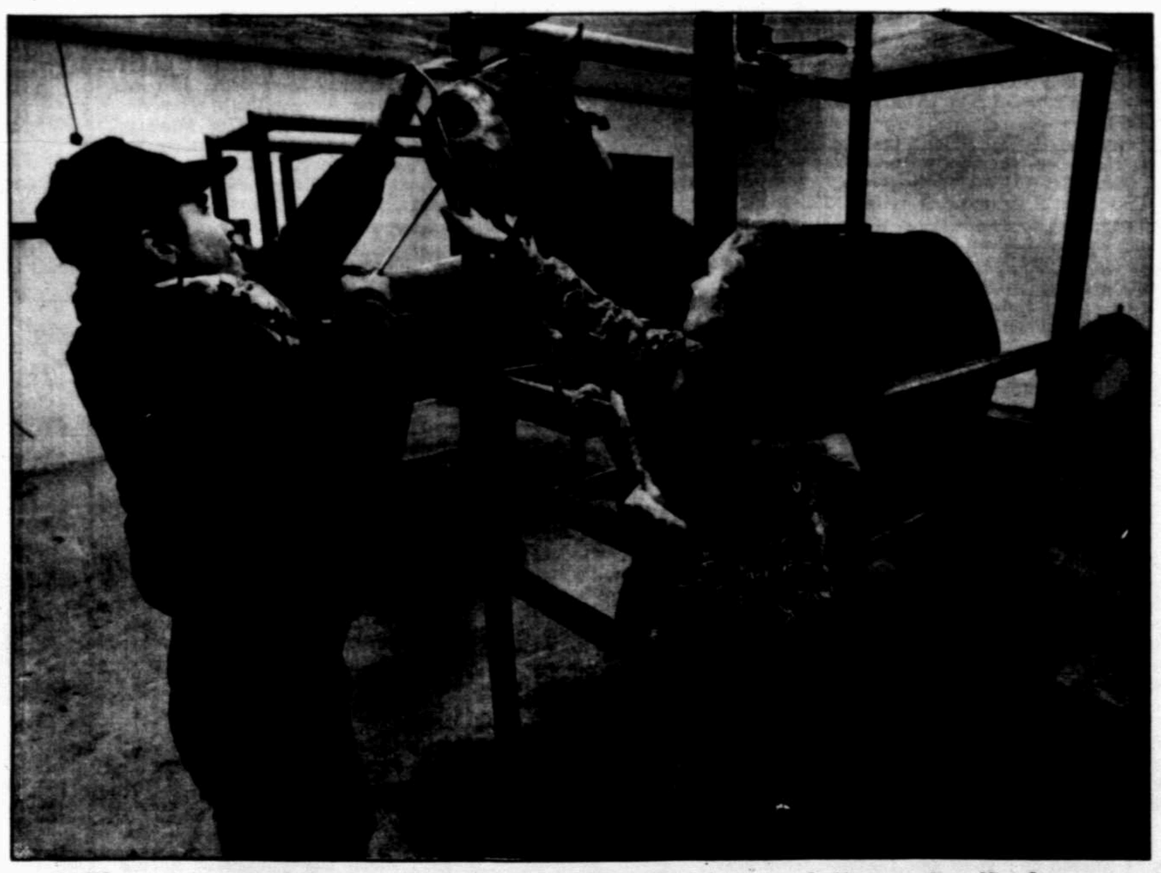

Veterinarian Robert Cobb takes a break between appointments at the clinic where he both lives and has his practice.

Cobb, said a love of the outdoors and animals, and riding rodeo horses, enticed him to become a veterinarian.

On house calls Cobb works out of the back of his double-cab pickup where the mobile vet clinic unit keeps his vaccines refrigrated or heated.

A "humane twitch" is used to grasp a horse's nose and "attention," above, as Cobb files down sharp-pointed teeth.

Joanne Rott, national grand madam president of the Fraternal Order of Eagles Auxiliary, visited the Ranch Sunday as part of a nationwide tour of the auxiliary's philanthropic projects.

The tour included an inspection of the entire ranch, its cottages, recreational facilities and staff. Residents also met with Ms. Rott, a Jamestown, N.D., native, during the informal visit.

The ranch has been designated the official state project for Eagles Auxiliary members in Texas this year.

Gail Huggins, director of development at the Ranch, said the Eagles Auxiliary has been a major supporter of High Sky since it opened. The organization contributed $85,000 to the construction of the first cottage in 1966, she said.

Ms. Huggins said the auxiliary — comprised of thousand of members nationwide — has continued its monetary support over the years, contributing 10 percent of the total revenue of the ranch last year.

"High Sky Children's Ranch is very grateful for the caring support of the Eagles," Ms. Huggins said. "It has helped make it possible for the Ranch to care for more than 600 children during its 23 years of providing a home for abused and abandoned youth."

Texas A&M tentatively approves research center

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University regents tentatively awarded a contract to design a new $24 million research center on the site of Houston's Shamrock Hilton Hotel.

The regents planning and building committee approved Sunday a $550,000 architectural contract with the Bernard Johnson architectural engineering firm for the Institute of Biosciences and Technology Building.

The contract is expected to be approved today in a full meeting of the board of regents.

The new building is planned for the parking lot and tennis court areas next to the landmark hotel, now owned by the Texas Medical Center.

Construction is scheduled to begin by May 1988 at an estimated cost of $22 million with another $2 million for research equipment. Plans call for the building to open in May 1990.

A&M officials said they hope to work with other universities in Houston to advance biotechnology research projects.

A&M officials plan to create endowed chairs at $2 million each for professors to head research in molecular genetics, molecular pharmacology and toxicology, virology, nutrition, biotechnology protein chemistry and enzymology.

David Eller, chairman of the board of regents, said a second building also might be planned.

A&M plans to build the center with money from bond sales. The Texas Medical Center, which bought the 22.6-acre Shamrock site for $14.9 million, must approve the center's location.

Ex-Midland economist to speak

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A former Midland economist will be the featured speaker at the Permian Basin Economic Club's first meeting of 1987 Tuesday noon at Mission Country Club.

Dr. Michael Williams, former vice president of RepublicBank First National Midland, now senior vice president of at MBank Austin, will discuss growth opportunities in the Texas economy.

Williams was one of the founders of the local economic club and served as president of the organization until he accepted his current position with MBank early last year.

Jim Williams, current president of the club and co-founder with Williams, said Dr. Dennis O'Brien, chief economist for Caltex Petroleum, will be the featured speaker during the club's meeting Feb. 24. O'Brien is scheduled to discuss the world oil outlook.

Williams said reservations for Tuesday's meeting can be made by calling 563-5553. Tickets for the luncheon meeting are $9 for members and $15 for non-members.

Charity seeks reusable clothing

From Staff Reports

Midlanders can help their needy neighbors by donating reusable clothing, furniture and household items to St. Vincent de Paul Society.

"A spare lamp, warm coat or an extra bed is of great value to a needy family," said Faye Higgins.

St. Vincent de Paul can "reach and help the single mother, discouraged father, the poor, the handicapped, the elderly," she said. But the society needs help from the more fortunate, who may donate items to the society to help the needy.

"Please take a moment to sort out your reusable goods, then call St. Vincent de Paul," she said. "They'll put them in the right hands."

Those interested in donating to the society may telephone 687-2343 between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, she said.

The St. Vincent de Paul Store at Lamesa Road and Garden Lane is to be relocated by February to Lamesa Road and Orchard Lane, Ms. Higgins said.

Odessa police seeking robbery suspect

ODESSA — Police today were seeking a suspect who robbed the Beer Loft, 1900 Andrews Highway, late Sunday night for the second time in three days.

Valentine Flores, a clerk at the Beer Loft, told investigating officers he was in the store's office when a man armed with a lockblade knife came up behind him, told him not to look back, and ordered him to empty the store's cash registers.

According to Flores, the robber was the same man who held him up about 10:15 p.m. Thursday and fled with about $200.

Flores described the man as a black male in his mid-20s, about 5-feet 7-inches tall, weighing about 180 pounds. The man was wearing a ski cap, a panty-hose mask, a brown or green jacket with a fur collar, blue jeans and tennis shoes. The man sought in the Beer Loft robberies also is wanted for questioning in the robbery of the Party Express, 200 W. University, Jan. 19, police said.

Police also continue to seek two men who attempted to hold up the Busy Bee Meat Market, 1201-A N. Texas St., and the Parkway East Motel, 3071 E. Highway 80, Saturday.

Two men, described as black males, 5-feet 6-inches to 5-feet 9-inches tall, each weighing about 150 pounds, entered the Busy Bee Market about 3:30 p.m. Saturday. According to Sgt. Tommie Morris, a clerk picked up a knife and ran the two men off.

Less than an hour later, two men entered the Parkway East Motel and held up manager Barbara Allen, escaping with her purse and about $300 from the motel's cash register.

Police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon said the description of the two men in this robbery was somewhat vague.

A man also robbed the Merle Norman Cosmetics store, 207 W. 6th St., Thursday at about 11:05 a.m. and fled with an undetermined amount of money.

According to McAhon, there have been about "a dozen or so robberies and the suspect descriptions are all very close."

Man in custody after attempted robbery

A 28-year-old man is in custody at Midland County Jail after he threatened to kill a store clerk and then robbed the store of several hundred dollars.

According to the Midland County Sheriff's office, the man walked into the Cottonflat Grocery on the corner of Cottonflat Road and County Road 114 about 6:45 p.m. Sunday, went to a cooler and picked up a six-pack of beer. He walked to the cash register, paid the clerk for the beer, then displayed a gun and told her to give him all the money "or I'll blow your brains out."

He took between $300 and $400 cash and coins, then fled on foot. He was arrested shortly after the robbery by investigators.

The man is expected to be charged with aggravated robbery today.

Police Roundup

In other reports, police have a suspect in custody in connection with the burglary of a residence in the 100 block of East Francis Avenue. Police said a videocassette recorder valued at $299, several silver dollars, and several Mexican coins were stolen about 1 a.m. Sunday.

The suspect in the burglary was described as a black male, 18 years old, about six feet tall, weighing 120 pounds and wearing a black jacket.

A videocassette recorder also was among the items stolen in a residential burglary in the 1700 block of East Pine, according to reports. Police said the VCR, valued at $300, a 19-inch color television set valued at $600, and three remote control units valued at $15 were stolen.

A block away, in the 1600 block of East Pecan, a cable television converter box valued at $200, and several pieces of meat valued at $30 were stolen. Reports said the burglary occurred Sunday between 1:30 a.m. and 9 a.m.

VETERINARIAN

Over the past 30 years, Tillett said like human medicine, veterinarian medicine has become specialized. Many vets now restrict their practice to small animals and some have even gone as far to restrict themselves to eyes, heart and the respiratory system of an animal, Tillett said.

Another change in veterinarian services is that more women are becoming vets, with more than half of the vet students at A&M being women, he said.

"I think that's a healthy change. I think women do a good job of practicing veterinarian medicine," he said.

While he works on both small and large animals, Cobb says most of his work involves horses. And riding in rodeos is one thing that drew Cobb to practice veterinarian medicine, he said.

"Most of the horses I work on are not farm-ranch horses. We're going into a society where more and more people have a horse for entertainment and not livelihood," Cobb said.

January is worming season for Cobb, who performs the procedure three times a year on horses to prevent them from getting colic. If not controlled, parasites can twist and rupture a horse's intestines, he said.

Unlike dogs and cats, deworming a horse is a more complicated procedure. A hose is stuck down a horse's nose and a solution is pumped into his stomach.

A "humane twitch" which looks anything but humane, is clipped onto a horse's nose to hold him still.

"What the twitch does is similiar to acupuncture. It takes the horse's mind off what we're doing to them," Cobb said.

Despite the complicated procedure, Cobb and an assistant can worm a horse within minutes and once said they did 26 head in 50 minutes.

While both men work with horses and cows, they insist they aren't really country vets.

"There has never been a lot of farm type work in this vicinity," Tillett said.

"Ranchers do most of the work for themselves. They're quite competent taking care of their own," he said.

6-year-old boy fatally injured in accident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 6-year-old boy riding a skateboard suffered fatal injuries Sunday afternoon when he apparently darted into the path of a pickup truck near the intersection of East University Bouldvard and Grandview Avenue.

Chad Alonzo Dokter, 1701 Royalty Ave., died about 4:30 p.m. while undergoing emergency surgery at Medical Center Hospital.

The accident occurred about 3:45 p.m. when the youngster darted from the parking lot of the Texaco service station on the southwest corner of the intersection on his skateboard into the path of a pickup truck driven by Steve D. King, 1524 Beverly St., according to police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon.

McAhon said investigating officers indicated no charges would be filed in connection with the accident. According to King, the youngster appeared in front of his truck so quickly he had no time to stop.

STATE

Prison system remains near maximum capacity

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system narrowly avoided a repeat of having to close its doors as population figures showed the prisons at 94.93 percent of capacity, 27 inmates short of the mark that would trigger closing.

Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles Brown said the system anticipated 130 admissions Friday and about 80 releases. The exact figures, however, will not become official until today.

State officials will determine if admissions and releases of inmates put the system's population over a 95 percent cap.

The latest official count at midnight Thursday showed 38,343 inmates, Brown said.

Brown could not be reached at his office or home Sunday to determine if inmates had been paroled this weekend, as they were last weekend, to head off a possible prison shutdown.

The department received some leeway this weekend since no new inmates are accepted on Saturday and Sunday.

Officials had predicted the population numbers would be extremely close to the 95 percent capacity, but releases from Thursday were a bit higher than anticipated.

As of midnight Wednesday, the system held 38,288 inmates, 94.80 percent of capacity and just 80 inmates shy of the 95-percent ceiling set by law.

The 26-unit system closed its doors to new inmates Jan. 16 after the population exceeded the cap set by the Legislature in 1983 to avoid overcrowding. The Legislature had acted after a federal judge ordered the state to take steps to reduce crowding.

Private network dishes up special school districts

EL PASO (AP) — Space age technology is allowing isolated rural school districts in West Texas to receive courses not normally available and taught by teachers smaller districts cannot afford to hire.

School officials in towns such as Dell City, Fabens and Fort Hancock are using educational television on a private, satellite-fed network. The system also is being used to train teachers, administrators and school board members.

The districts are using TI-IN Network facilities in suburban Houston that transmit live educational programming from San Antonio to 150 schools and education centers in 14 states from coast to coast.

"We've just scratched the surface of its capability and what it can do," said Dell City School Superintendent Joe Spaulding.

Students enrolled in "distance learning programs" learned the content and material just as well or better than students in regular classes, according to the preliminary findings of a study commissioned by the Texas Education Agency.

The system makes courses such as creative writing, foreign language and advanced math courses available to high school students in Dell City, a small farming community 90 miles east of El Paso.

Students monitor the lessons on a television screen and have the option of using a cordless telephone to communicate with the instructor.

"The network allowed us to meet the demands of House Bill 72 (the 1984 school reform legislation) without the astronomical personnel costs," Spaulding said.

"It gives us a lot more flexibility," Spaulding said. "We can offer courses that five years ago were totally out of the realm for these youngsters."

In addition to high school credit courses, the network also offers student enrichment programs, staff development programming and college credit courses.

The investment is worthwhile, especially for a district that has trouble recruiting specialized teachers, Spaulding said.

The districts pay $15,000 to cover the cost of installing a satellite receiving dish, additional hardware and a basic subscription and programming fee. Districts also pay an annual subscription fee estimated at $4,000.

Ex-teacher acquitted of marijuana possession

HOUSTON (AP) — A former high school teacher, fired in 1985 after being charged with possession of marijuana, has been acquitted of the charges.

Arnold Houston, 35, was cleared Saturday of the misdemeanor charge of possession of less than 2 ounces of marijuana by a county criminal court jury.

The former teacher's attorney, Kent Schafer, said Houston Independent School District security officers in 1984 asked police to investigate the teacher. Houston police juvenile narcotics officers responded by placing a youthful-looking undercover officer in Houston's class.

The attorney claims officers lied by saying Houston bought a small bag of marijuana.

"Not only did we accuse the cops of lying, I guess we proved it," Schaffer said after the verdict was returned.

Houston was a social studies teacher at Lamar High School until he was fired in March 1985, about five months after he was arrested.

He is now unemployed and Schaffer says he cannot get a teaching job because of the criminal charges and firing.

Houston's case was the subject of a 12-hour hearing before the school board after he appealed his firing.

At the hearing, a school attorney said there was a drug problem at the school and Houston was part of the problem. A student also testified he purchased marijuana for Houston from an off-campus dope dealer.

Probe reveals sexual misconduct

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County sheriff's officers say an investigation revealed that jailers obtained sexual favors from female inmates in exchange for cigarettes.

Three county detention officers allegedly received sex from as many as 10 inmates in an elevator at Lew Sterrett Justice Center, sheriff's department spokesman Jim Ewell said Sunday.

One jailer resigned Sunday and two other jailers were put on administrative leave pending a departmental hearing today, Ewell said.

"As far as we're concerned, this violates departmental conduct regarding the care and control of a prisoner," said Ewell.

Sheriff Jim Bowles said Sunday he would not release details of the investigation until he confirmed that the inquiry had been completed.

Drug obsession considered cause of many crimes

By JAMES V. GRIMALDI
Copley News Service

Former heroin addict Mike Franz says he used to wake up mornings with a sick, desperate feeling that soon turned into an obsession. He needed a fix.

"The obsession — just the complete mental obsession," Franz said, "before you wash your face, before you brush your teeth, that needs to be taken care of."

Franz would grope for a telephone book and pick phone numbers of homes in nice neighborhoods and dial them. If there was no answer, he'd go visit the area and knock on the door. If no one was home, he'd wheel his car around the corner to a clandestine spot, break into the house and steal televisions, silverware, cameras — whatever valuables he could find. Then he'd sell the goods for drugs.

Franz, now rehabilitated after serving jail time for some of his crimes, is an example of what law enforcement officials say has been obvious for years — that a significant percentage of crimes are related to use or sale of narcotics.

And as the number of crimes, from burglaries to murders, continues to increase, so grows the number of those crimes that are related to drugs.

HOWEVER, MOST police agencies don't keep statistics on whether drugs had an effect on certain crimes because there is no objective way to gather those statistics, law enforcement officials say.

Deciding whether a crime is drug-related is a personal, subjective judgment, they say.

Crime reports filled out by law enforcement officials are usually designed to limit information to objective information, such as where the crime occurred, the point of entry, what the suspect did, what he or she looked like and what the witnesses remembered about his or her demeanor.

There are a number of questions that can't be answered on a simple form. For instance: Was the suspect or victim under the influence of a drug? Did the crime occur because the suspect wanted the means to buy a drug? Did the crime occur because of a drug transaction that was taking place? Did the crime occur as a result of some sort of high-level drug trafficking?

The first scientific study done on how drugs affect crime was funded by the National Institute of Justice and conducted in Washington, D.C., and New York City, said NIJ Director James K. Stewart.

Urine tests were given to about 6,000 prisoners who had been arrested on felony counts to determine the amount of dangerous drugs in the bloodstream and study that in relation to recidivism.

STEWART SAID the study showed that prisoners who were released and who continued to use drugs were 50 percent more likely to commit crimes again before their trial than those who stayed off drugs.

"It (the study) doesn't mean that everyone using drugs is committing crimes," Stewart said. "It shows that people who are using drugs are committing a whale of a lot more crimes."

Since that study, the courts in Washington have begun testing everyone arrested on a felony charge at $11 a test, Stewart said. Last month, 70 percent of those arrested on felony counts were under the influence of dangerous drugs.

After the prisoners take the tests, they frequently stay off drugs — which is a benefit to the community and to the defense's case, Stewart said.

If the suspect stays off drugs, he is less likely to commit another crime.

And if he stays off drugs, the defense attorney often can use that as evidence of rehabilitation and have cause to ask for leniency, Stewart said.

"If we can keep these guys from buying drugs, you can cut crime and you can cut back the demand for drugs and the profit of the drug dealers," Stewart said.

OTHER STUDIES have relied on interviews of the suspects and prisoners about their drug use.

A recent Rand Institute study stated that most prisoners in Michigan, Texas and California who had multiple convictions also had been users of more than one dangerous drug at a time, Stewart said.

Stewart cited another study of heroin users over a nine-year period that showed when they were using heroin they were likely to commit crimes an average of 244 out of 365 days a year.

While they were off heroin, they committed crimes an average of only 40 days of the year.

Even though these studies show there is a relationship between drugs and crime, they do not show why the crime is committed, Stewart said.

CNS Graphic

It is not clear from the studies whether the crime is committed to gain the means to purchase the drug or if the drug is used to alter a mental state to give users the "courage" to commit the crime.

Even Dade County, which has been called a drug capital of the United States because of the amount of illegal drugs that go through Miami and the South Florida county, doesn't keep statistics on how drugs affect crime, said Barry C. Lynch, a research and planning analyst for the Dade-Miami Criminal Justic Council.

The Dade-Miami Criminal Justice Council conducted a study between 1979 and 1985 to gauge the effect drug traffic and the Mariel boatlift of Cuban criminals in 1979 had on crime, Lynch said.

IN THAT report, the only crime in which it could be determined that drugs had an effect was homicide, Lynch said.

The study was done looking at homicides retrospectively and determining whether there was a drug connection to the slaying. And in some cases it was impossible to make that determination from reading the case studies, Lynch said.

While law enforcement officials said that it may be difficult to pin down a motive in many crimes, most agree that a substantial number of home and car burglaries and petty thefts are committed by drug users and addicts.

"They have to steal, burglarize cars and homes several times on a daily basis to sell enough to buy drugs — to put $200 to $300 a day in their arms," said Sgt. Arnold Botts of the Chula Vista, Calif., Police Crime Suppression Unit.

Oceanside, Calif., Police Sgt. Bill Krunglevich said that police raids of crystal methamphetamine labs and of middle-level drug dealers often net large caches of stolen televisions, videotape recorders, jewelry and other property.

"They're trading property for drugs," Krunglevich said. "They're using it for barter."

Stolen property generally sells for about a quarter of its value, Krunglevich said.

OCEANSIDE POLICE have uncovered burglary rings in which drug users pay juveniles to commit the burglaries to feed their habits because of the comparatively lighter sentences that juveniles receive, Krunglevich said.

Franz, who was rehabilitated from heroin use two years ago and now works to save other drug addicts as the program manager for the McAlister Institute for Treatment & Education Inc. in El Cajon, Calif., said burglary is a way of life for many drug users.

Franz, 37, said he lived that way of life for 18 years. He grew up in Orange County, Calif., and after leaving jail he moved to San Diego five years ago.

He said he was raised in a middle-class family that taught him values and morals that soon were overcome by his addiction to heroin.

Franz said he would try to limit his drug use by devising plans to use less serious drugs, such as marijuana, on weekdays while waiting to shoot heroin on weekends. Soon, though, those plans failed and he found himself shooting up daily.

The desire for drugs clouded his morals and allowed him to ignore his conscience, Franz said. During a burglary, all he could think of was injecting heroin into his arm.

"When I'm done with this, I'm going to get loaded," Franz said he thought. "I'm going to get some dope. I'm going to feel good."

He often worked in teams: "We would do a house, we would spend a day fencing the stuff, we'd get loaded and usually do another house at night."

Franz said it was no trouble selling the stolen property.

"Our productive members of society who scream real loud about the crime rate" were often his buyers of stolen property, no questions asked. "If they were going to get a play (bargain) on a TV or if they were going to get a play on a VCR, then they turned their heads."

Eventually the effects of the addiction got to be so great that Franz made mistakes.

"The longer I was on the run, the more mistakes I made, the deeper I got," Franz said. "It was almost like I wanted to get arrested. ... It got to be a sigh of relief because sometimes I got crazy with it."

Cocaine use linked to infant brain disorders

NEW YORK (AP) — Pregnant women who use cocaine have an increased risk of bearing children who suffer seizures and who have smaller-than-normal head size, suggesting abnormalities in brain development, a new study suggests.

Dr. Ira Chasnoff, a pediatrician at Northwestern University Medical School in Evanston, Ill. said he has found that cocaine-affected infants are excessively jittery, experience rapid changes of mood, and are extremely sensitive to noise and other external stimuli.

All these findings suggest the possibility of brain abnormalities, he said at a symposium sponsored by the Greater New York Chapter of the March of Dimes.

In a separate report at the symposium, Diana Dow-Edwards, a researcher at the State University of New York Health Science Center in Brooklyn, said her experiments with rats suggest that cocaine use during pregnancy can produce infants with long-term abnormalities in the brain systems that control sensation, movement and emotions.

This occurs despite the frequent absence of any physical defects in the offspring, she said.

In studies with about 30 rats, Dow-Edwards found that rats exposed to cocaine during early development mature into adults with marked hypersensitivity in the brain's motor system, its sensory system and in the limbic system, which governs emotions and such functions as eating and sleeping.

Chasnoff said that Dow-Edwards' research could explain some of the defects he is cataloging in the infants of cocaine-using mothers.

For example, the finding that such babies probably have an increased rate of seizures could be due to a hypersensitivity in the brain similar to what Dow-Edwards has observed in rats, he said.

The report that infants of cocaine-using mothers have a significantly smaller head size than normal infants likewise suggests that cocaine is altering brain development, he said.

The smaller head size could indicate a retardation in brain growth and foreshadow future brain deficits, he said.

Chasnoff has previously reported that pregnant women using cocaine are more likely than others, even heroin users, to have spontaneous abortions and that the infants of cocaine-using mothers have an increased risk of sudden infant death syndrome, or crib death.

His more recent studies have considerably broadened the list of abnormalities associated with cocaine use.

CNS Graphic

Among his other findings:

- Cocaine can be passed to infants through breast milk and can remain in breast milk for up to 60 hours after the mother uses it.
- Cocaine-using mothers have a 17.3 percent chance of going into labor prematurely, compared with a 2 percent risk in the general population.
- Cocaine users also have a 17.3 percent chance of the placenta ripping away from the wall of the uterus, causing severe complications for the fetus, including death. The risk in non-drug-using mothers is 1 percent to 2 percent, he said.
- Measures of fetal stress are much greater in the infants of cocaine-using mothers.

Dow-Edwards said her findings in rats suggest "that cocaine exposure during pregnancy produces long-term and perhaps permanent alterations in brain function activity."

The hypersensitivity she found in the rats' brains is apparently due to the excessive build-up of certain chemicals called neurotransmitters that are used by brain cells to communicate with one another, she said.

For 10 days after the rats were born — a period that parallels the third trimester of human pregnancy — she gave the rats a daily dose of cocaine equivalent to a human dose of slightly more than one gram of cocaine. "This level of abuse is, I believe, quite common among the abusing populations," she said.

The drug produced no change in the growth of the young rats, nor did it produce obvious physical defects.

But studies to assess the brain development of the rats when they were young adults, 60 days old, showed that their brains had excess levels of three neurotransmitters — dopamine, norepinephrine and serotonin.

The surplus of these substances probably accounts for the hypersensitivity in the rats' brains, she said.

Mail brightens holidays for service men

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Don Grimes, chairman of the America Remembers Campaign, asked me to help America remember their men and women in uniform who would be away from their homes during the holidays. "We'll call it 'Operation Dear Abby II,'" he said.

I said, "Yes! Dear Abby readers are the nicest people in the world." Well, you didn't let me down. Don called to say that when he arrived in Germany and visited the offices where our servicemen were working, they were inundated with bags of mail. Handmade cards and decorations sent by school children covered walls and hung from Christmas trees.

These young men were 18, 19 and 20 years old, and many of them had never been away from home before. Shouts of laughter filled the air as they opened the envelopes, exchanging with others so each would get mail from their home state. After working a long hard day, they were still up until 3 a.m. opening mail!

The avalanche received in Korea was so voluminous that they had to ship some of the mail to our troops in Japan! Read on:

DEAR ABBY: A great big thank-you from all of us on Okinawa. I'm assistant charge nurse of the Newborn Nursery at the U.S. Naval Hospital here, and cards and letters made their way up to our ward.

Being away from family and loved ones during the holidays is extremely difficult, but that mail assured us that we had not been forgotten. A heartfelt thanks to all who participated. — CONNIE PENNELL, LT., U.S. NAVY

DEAR ABBY: I am a sergeant in the U.S. Air Force stationed at Osan Air Base, Korea. You cannot imagine the excitement that mail created when it hit this base! I hope that everyone who wrote to us receives a response. Thanks, Abby, for making this the best possible Christmas the troops could have so far from home. — TOM CASTLE

DEAR ABBY: The men and women of the 122nd Signal Base in Korea want to express our sincere appreciation for all the wonderful letters and cards that came our way because of Operation Dear Abby II. It made us all feel closer to home during the holidays. — GINNY PARKER, CAMP CASEY

DEAR ABBY: When you printed the addresses of remote bases, I decided to write to someone just for fun. Since then, I've been corresponding with Cpl. Ken Jones. He's stationed in Cuba now, but he'll be out in April and I'm sure we will meet. My own brother goes into the Army in a few weeks and I hope somebody writes to him. Thanks, Abby, for making sure our troops were remembered. — KELLY ROGERS

DEAR ABBY: I am on a ship overseas. I have a beautiful wife and two lovely children back home, and I miss them very much. I couldn't believe the sacks of mail from good-hearted people from all over the U.S.A. Our ship alone got at least 10,000.

The outpouring of love and support was unbelievable. Please tell your readers how grateful we are. — TIMOTHY WOODS, ON THE U.S.S. VINSON

DEAR ABBY: Just a note to say thank you! I haven't been in Seoul, Korea, long enough for my own family to send cards and letters for Christmas. But when I went to the recreation center yesterday, there they were — stacks of mail! I picked out those from my home state, and one of those letters contained the warmest holiday greeting I had ever received.

Tell your readers that this was the most wonderful thing they could have done for all of us serving our country so far away from our loved ones. — PVT. J. JOHNSON, SEOUL, KOREA

P.S. And now I am hearing from readers saying they were delighted and surprised to receive letters of warm gratitude from our men and women in uniform who were the recipients of their holiday greetings. Aren't people wonderful!

Crack users risk dire results, including death

Associated Press

People who use crack, the recently introduced smokable form of cocaine, risk dire results, including sudden death; and the potential perils increase with repeated use of the drug, which has rapid impact on both body and brain, warns an emergency-medicine specialist at New York University Medical Center.

"Crack is purer, cheaper, and far more dangerous than the powdered form of cocaine," said Dr. Neal A. Lewin, assistant professor of clinical medicine at the medical center. While both forms are taken to achieve a state of euphoria, or "high," cocaine sniffed in powder form takes effect gradually, over a 10-or 15-minute period; crack's impact occurs within seconds.

"When the drug is smoked," explained Lewin, who is also assistant director of emergency services at Bellevue and University Hospitals, "it is rapidly absorbed through the lungs, and a high concentration in the bloodstream is quickly achieved. There is an instant, though short-lived, euphoria — a 'two-minute high.' But other effects may take place just as quickly."

Among the latter, he lists life-threatening seizures, body temperature soaring as high as 115 degrees, hallucinations, psychosis, extreme blood-pressure elevation leading to brain hemorrhage and stroke, and heart attack due to intense spasm of the coronary arteries.

'Jersey' cowboys rope, brand Broncos

By FRANK LITSKY
N.Y. Times News Service

PASADENA, Calif. — The Giants won the Super Bowl Sunday.

The Giants, who in the 1970s could hardly win anything, who hardly seemed to care if they won or lost, who played so badly that their fans held a public burning of tickets, are champions.

They have become an inspired, well-coached team with a relentless defense, and Sunday they played inspired football in trouncing the Denver Broncos, 39-20.

This was Super Bowl XXI, the championship game of the National Football League. It attracted a screaming crowd of 101,063 in the Rose Bowl and millions of television viewers in the United States and 40 foreign nations.

The most super of the Giants was Phil Simms, the 30-year-old quarterback. For his eight years with the Giants, he has been maligned by the news media and the public, who said he was not good enough to win. Here, he was good enough and more.

Of the Giants' five touchdowns, Simms passed for three: 6 yards to Zeke Mowatt, 13 yards to Mark Bavaro and 6 yards to Phil McConkey, who caught a pass that bounced off Bavaro's hands. In addition, Simms set up one touchdown with a 44-yard pass to McConkey and one with a 22-yard run. His passing statistics were stunning: 22 completions in 25 attempts for 268 yards.

"That's as good as Phil has ever played," said Coach Bill Parcells of the Giants. "This dispelled for the last time any myth about Phil Simms. He was absolutely magnificent today."

SIMMS WAS a unanimous choice as the game's most valuable player. He and the other Giants were invited by President Reagan to reap the traditional reward of America's sports champions, a visit to the White House.

Parcells reaped his traditional reward, too. This was the Giants' 12th consecutive victory, nine in the regular season and three in the playoffs. In the dying minutes of each previous victory in that streak, Harry Carson, the Giants' 33-year-old linebacker and defensive captain, doused Parcells with a bucket of icy Gatorade.

The dousing has become so much of a tradition that television cameras home in on Parcells and Carson at game's end. They homed Sunday, and Parcells, a 45-year-old coach who is unusually close to his players; took his bath with his usual grin.

Jim Burt and McConkey, two emotional Giants, ran into the stands after the game to celebrate with Giants' fans. Pepper Johnson and William Roberts danced on the 50-yard line. Parcells and Wellington Mara, the Giants' president, joined Pete Rozelle, NFL commissioner, in the Giants' locker room for the presentation of the Vince Lombardi Trophy.

ROZELLE handed the trophy to the 70-year-old Mara, whose late father, Timothy J. Mara, bought the Giants' franchise from the league in 1925 for $500. Wellington Mara handed the trophy to Parcells, who led the team to its first NFL championship since 1956.

In 1983, Parcells' first year as the Giants' head coach, the team had a 3-12-1 record, and he almost lost his job. Since then, he has led the Giants into the playoffs every year.

"Bill Parcells," he said, "is the luckiest guy."

In the legalized betting parlors in Nevada, the Giants were favored by 9½ points. The bettors who supported the Giants had anxious moments early in the game because John Elway, the Broncos' talented young quarterback, was getting enough time to pass and was capitalizing on it.

Elway earns $1 million a year and seemed worth every penny. He completed six out of six passes in the first quarter and scored on a 4-yard quarterback draw, a running play that surprised the Giants.

Elway's touchdown gave the Broncos a 10-7 lead in the first 13 minutes of the game. By the time the Broncos scored again, the Giants were leading, 33-10. The Giants had shut down the Broncos' running game with an aggressive defense led by Carl Banks, Carson, Leonard Marshall and Lawrence Taylor, and the Broncos' one-dimensional offense was not enough.

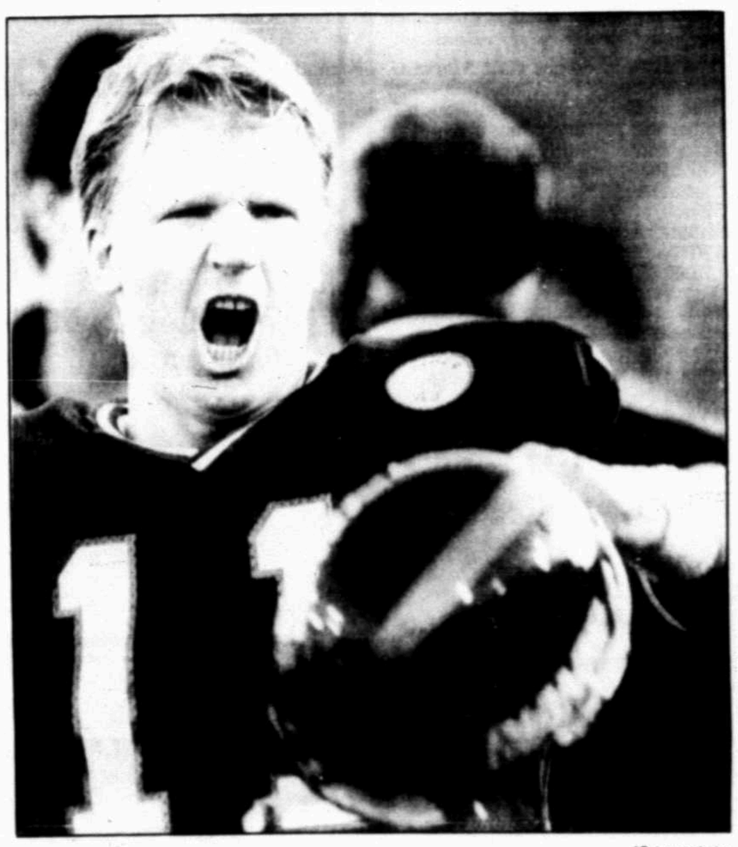

IN THE second quarter, the Giants scored a safety when Elway dropped back to pass from his end zone and George Martin, the Giants' 33-year-old defensive end, tackled him there, reducing the Giants' deficit to 10-9 at halftime.

In the second half, the Giants scored the first four times they had the ball, and the game was settled.

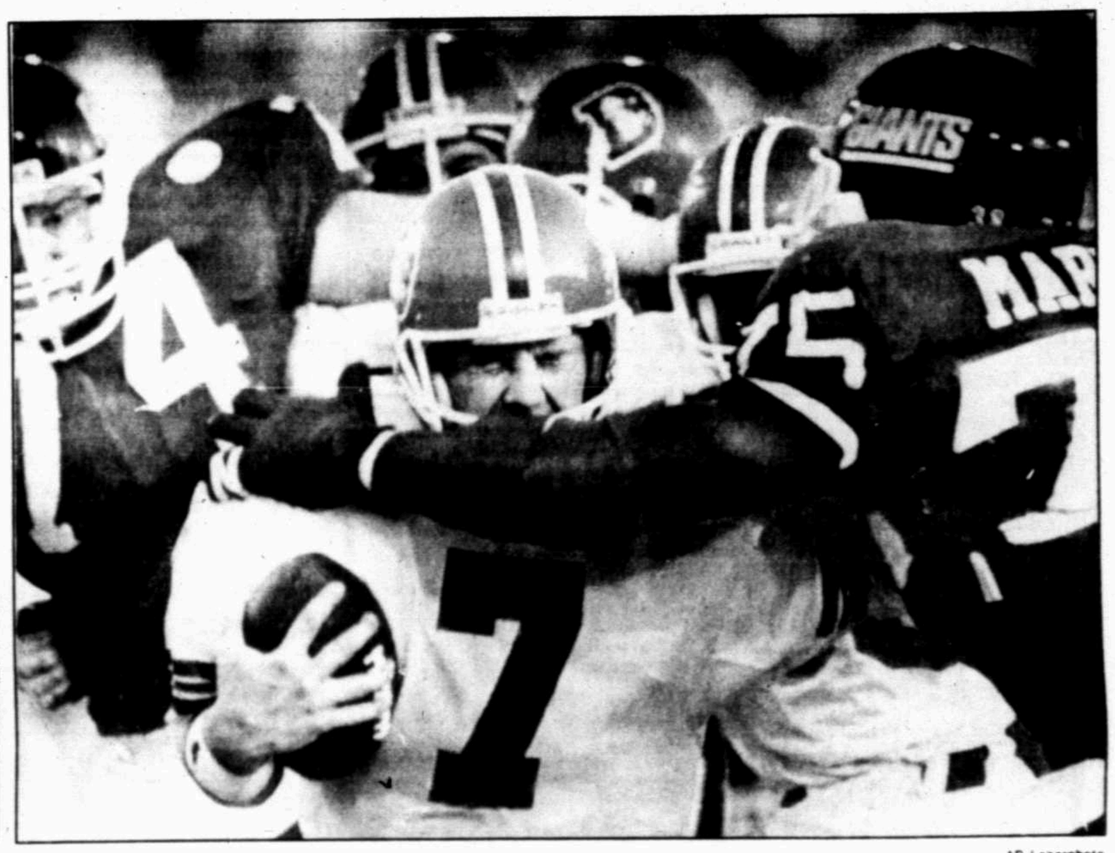

Earlier this season, the Giants trailed the San Francisco 49ers by 17 points at halftime, scored three touchdowns in the third quarter and won, 21-17. Here, in a span of 15 minutes, 4 seconds in the third and fourth quarter, the Giants scored 24 points.

Stereotypes live long, and the Giants, once a team that played conservatively, are often criticized for still doing that. Actually, Parcells likes to use surprises, not as much as the Broncos do, but enough to upset opposing defenses. He tried two trick plays in the third quarter, and both led to touchdowns.

Story of Two Quarterbacks

While Simms was enjoying phenomenal success, Denver's John Elway was a marked and bruised man as the Giant defense made him a negligible threat.

Reeves showed lack of faith in quarterback

By HAL BOCK

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — When Dan Reeves took the ball away from John Elway, the New York Giants grabbed the Super Bowl from the grasp of the Denver Broncos.

This Super Bowl turned midway through the second quarter when, with Denver leading 10-7 and working on first-and-goal from the 1-yard line, the Broncos did little to take advantage of Elway's abilities.

Elway's running had the Giants worried. As if to punctuate that, the Denver quarterback ran for 10 yards on the Broncos' first offensive play.

"John had us snakebit," All-Pro linebacker Lawrence Taylor said. "He ran the first play for 10 yards and then he started completing a lot of passes. When they run, at least you know where it is. When John drops back, it's a double play. That's their best offense, him running or throwing."

Later, Elway scooted four yards for the game's first touchdown. Just a little something to keep Taylor worried.

So, with the ball at the New York 1, Taylor had every reason to expect Elway to keep the ball.

And on first down, he did, and the Giants handled it well, throwing Elway for a 2-yard loss on a rollout to the right.

But Taylor had to know Elway would try another rollout, right?

Nope. Instead, Gerald Willhite went up the middle, into the teeth of the toughest defense in football, and was stopped for no gain. Then Sammy Winder lost four yards when Carl Banks destroyed a sweep to the left.

Goodbye, ground game.

"I called those three plays," Reeves said. "I felt good about each one of them.

"John had an extra blocker and they wiped it out. We came back with a trap play up the middle and they stopped that. Then we tried a sweep and they stopped that."

The Broncos came away with nothing — except proof positive that Willhite and Winder didn't hold the secrets to victory in the Super Bowl.

Goodbye, ballgame.

Instead of facing a substanital deficit at halftime, the Giants trailed only 10-9. And New York turned that deficit into a 23-10 lead so quickly in the third period that Elway's considerable offensive tools were rendered almost useless. The final read 39-20.

Over one stretch, Elway threw on 23 straight plays. The next running play came when the Giants were leading 33-10 midway through the fourth and plotting the Gatorade assault on Coach Bill Parcells.

"We felt we could run the ball against them," Elway said. "We felt we could run the ball against anybody."

Not on this day. Not when you don't try, even once, for some 28 minutes, from midway in the second quarter until midway through the fourth. Other than Elway, Denver's runners managed 25 yards on 13 carries. They were invisible.

That first drive, a balanced package of five runs and three passes, produced a field goal. Denver ran only two more times in the quarter — the second a four-yard draw by Elway that produced a touchdown.

In the second quarter, Elway passed on seven of nine plays as the Broncos moved to the 1. Then came the three failed runs and it was bombs away after that.

"They weren't making much on the run," Banks said. "That's a tribute to our defense that he threw as much as he did. We closed the off-tackle hole and made them run over the middle. Those are tough yards there."

"We felt we could take advantage of their zone defense," Reeves said, explaining the air attack. "I do whatever I can to move the football."

"I felt I did everything I could," Elway said. "That's all I can ask of myself."

Elway finished 22 of 37 for 304 yards but the production was distinctly unbalanced. He passed for 187 of those yards in the first half but just 13 in the third quarter when the Giants took the lead on a drive that included a fourth-down run from a fake-punt formation. The next time Denver ran came after the Giants pulled a flea-flicker in the fourth quarter and the Super Bowl trophy had passed the Broncos by.

Azinger wins first victory on PGA tour

Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Paul Azinger, who had let so many get away from him, had a little talk with veteran Andy Bean before the final round of the Phoenix Open golf tournament. "I told him I'd learned a lot from his last year at Kapalua (in Hawaii, where Bean won), the way he played his own game and didn't worry about anyone else," said the lanky young man called "Zinger" by his fellow pros.

"He told me, 'Play your own game, kid. Shoot at the middle of the greens, take what it'll give you, and go,' "Azinger said.

The result was a 67—268 and a single stroke win over Hal Sutton, Azinger's the first victory of a slow-developing pro career. Sutton shared the lead until missing a 5-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

"I don't want to sound like I'm making an excuse, but I was putting through my shadow," said Sutton, "I put a good stroke on it, but I just didn't have it lined up right. There was nothing wrong with the stroke. Something about the shadow. I never got it lined up right."

Sutton, who blitzed the front with a 30 and scored an eagle-3 on the 15th, was second alone at 269 after a closing 64.

DePaul Loses

LANDOVER, Md. — Reggie Williams' 3-point field goal with 28 seconds remaining highlighted a 13-1 run that gave Georgetown a 74-71 win over previously unbeaten and No. 6 DePaul. No. 15 Georgetown trailed 70-61 with 2:44 remaining, but guard Mark Tillmon connected on a pair of 3-point baskets to cut the deficit to 70-67. A free throw by the Blue Demons' Dallas Comegys made it 71-67, but Tillmon hit a running one-hander to put Georgetown within two. After DePaul's Rod Strickland missed the front end of a one-and-one, Williams hit his game-winning shot from the right corner.

After a DePaul turnover on a botched inbounds play, Williams made two free throws with 16 seconds remaining...

Jayhawks romp

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Manning scored 30 points and claimed 14 rebounds as Kansas powered past North Carolina State, 74-60. "Danny was great," Kansas Coach Larry Brown said. "A lot of guys would have gotten 40 points, but he wanted to see his teammates do well." Manning scored 16 points in the first half for the Jayhawks, 13-5.

Celtics on top

BOSTON — Boston's Kevin McHale scored 30 points, including 14 in a third-period surge, as the Celtics whipped the 76ers 111-96 for their fifth straight. With their 55th straight Boston Garden victory over an NBA Eastern rival since losing to Milwaukee during the 1985 playoffs, the Celtics reached the halfway mark of the season with a 30-11 record, seven games ahead of the 76ers in the Atlantic Division.

With Larry Bird scoring 9 of his 17 points in the first period, as the Celtics led 54-45 at half.

TED BATTLES

Another Super Bowl bites the dust

Battles

As usual, I missed the best part of the Super Bowl Game. I fell asleep and didn't tune in until the pregame show had ended.

Nevertheless, I decided to watch anyway. But it was no good. Even when it was still a game, it was hard to enjoy something when you knew about all those cars out there.

Of course, it wasn't a game for long. Ahead 10-7 with first and goal on the Giant one, Denver admitted it was licked by running three plays to set up a fourth down field goal, which the Broncos blew. It was a concession to strength that only strengthened the Giants' resolve.

But it ended long before that for me.

I'VE PROMISED myself that one day I'm going to play the Brookside course. That's the muny course just outside the Rose Bowl.

What a setting. A golf course nestled away in the Arroyo Seco with the smog-shrouded mountains as one back drop and the world's most famous football stadium just a tee shot away.

But watching the game and knowing that the course was serving as a parking lot was just too disturbing to the sensibilities of what is right and what is wrong.

It was bad enough when they used the Granddaddy-of-Them-All once or twice a year for a big game, the Rose Bowl and in recent years a Super Bowl game every so often.

Now, UCLA uses it as its home field and one can imagine what kind of shape the course must be in with all that abuse.

It only makes you wonder what kind of a school UCLA is. The Bruins left the Los Angeles Coliseum in a huff, as I remember, because of the poor trolley service.

So now you've got a school that plays its games in Pasadena and is located in Westwood, yet they call it the University of California at Los Angeles.

IT WASN'T always that I had a genuine concern for the well-being of golf course.

Football fields were hard to find as a kid, so we'd sneak onto the rough along the 17th fairway at Glen Ridge Country Club until some annoyed course employee would chase us off.

The option was a furrowed gridiron, that sagged in the middle, next to a corn field. Going east, you had to run right to avoid an uphill end sweep and once you got to midfield, coming from either direction, the goal line was located atop a hill.

The GRCC rough was thick, but flat...and soft. So we took the scoldings in good spirits, fully aware, our tormentor would soon head back to the clubhouse. Perhaps in desperation or exasperation, one of the guardians of the course confiscated our football.

In retaliation, we took big rocks and threw them on the 17th green, creating some ugly divots.

IT WASN'T until taking up golf years later that I realized the enormity of our sin.

In retrospect, the act was reprehensible, irresponsible and downright criminal. If I were to sit in judgment of such behavior today, the sentence would be five years, after first serving life.

However, the danger inherent in playing football in the 17th rough wasn't dramatically illustrated until I became old enough to caddy at Glen Ridge.

As a weekend caddy, showing up at 5 a.m. meant you'd be picked after all the regulars had gotten bags.

It also meant, as exclusive as GRCC might have been, you usually wound up with some short-fused spray hitter who was continually asking what club to use. All caddies are supposed to be good golfers. I didn't know the difference between a niblick and a giblet, but had to advise a redneck who could get into enough trouble on his own without my help.

Thanks to Lee, MHS moves into tie for first place

From Staff Reports

After seven weeks of the District 4-5A girls basketball season, only two games separate the top four teams in the standings and the race for the two playoff berths, if anything, is getting tighter.

The Midland Lee Lady Rebs are to blame for the current situation, a fault they are happy to accept after knocking off previously unbeaten San Angelo Friday night, 61-48.

The loss dropped the Lady Bobcats into a tie for first with Midland High at 6-1 while Lee trails at 5-2 followed by Abilene High at 4-3.

While Lee was busy getting back into the 4-5A playoff picture, Midland High was pounding out a 61-45 victory over Odessa High and Abilene High was fighting for its life against Abilene Cooper, 53-51.

For Lee, things are going to get tougher before they can get a break. Tonight, they have to travel to Abilene High where a loss to either could prove deadly to playoff aspirations.

On Friday, the Rebels cross town to MHS Gym where they meet the Bulldogs for the third time this year. Lee won the first meeting 72-70 in the finals of the Del Rio tournament and lost the rematch in 4-5A play, 43-41.

For Midland High on Monday there should be little trouble as they host Abilene Cooper (2-5) at Chap Center. Also on the agenda is Odessa Permian (1-5) at San Angelo. All games are slated for 8 p.m. tipoffs.

MIDLAND HIGH has the strongest one-two-three punch in the league this year with Amy Cumings leading the way with a 17.5 per game average followed by Brenda Rodriquez, 14.3; and Sebrenia Finch, 12.7. Also, Kim Jackson is adding another 6.5 points to the totals.

While Lee doesn't have as many high average shooters, it has more depth with five girls making heavy contributions each game and better efforts off the bench. Dominating individuals haven't been seen in the Rebel lineup for three years but it doesn't keep Lee from winning.

LaVette Wallace is the top Lee shooter this year at 11.1 per game while Roz Eaden and Melissa Hart add 9.7 each, Regina Calicutt 7.3 and Piette Mayfield 6.6.

TCU shows poise of champ on road

Associated Press

The Texas Christian Horned Frogs are off to their finest Southwest Conference basketball start in history and don't have to go on the road again until Feb. 4 against Baylor.

"It looks like TCU will be tough to catch," said Houston Coach Pat Foster. "Their poise makes the difference. They have a lot of seniors who don't make many mistakes and Carven Holcombe, who never makes a mistake."

Foster should know. The Frogs beat the Cougars on Houston's own court.

SWC

The 19th ranked Horned Frogs' 62-56 victory over the Houston Cougars on Saturday was only their second in 18 tries at Hofheinz Pavilion.

It was TCU's 12th consecutive victory which ties a school record set in the 1952-1953 seasons.

Holcombe scored 25 points to increase TCU's record to 7-0 in the SWC and 16-3 overall.

TCU got two big road victories at Lubbock and Houston last week.

The Frogs' victory over Tech in Lubbock Wednesday was only their second on the road against the Red Raiders.

The Horned Frogs, who have a two-game lead on the field, don't have a rigorous schedule this week, hosting the Rice Owls Wednesday night and Arkansas on Saturday night.

The SWC week gets underway Monday night with Baylor at Houston.

Other games Wednesday night, include Baylor at Texas A&M, SMU at Arkansas, and Texas at Houston. The time of the Texas-Houston game has been changed to 7 p.m. so it can be televised on USA cable network.

Arkansas blasted Texas A&M 87-69 Sunday in the Aggies worst conference loss of the season. However, the Razorbacks scored the win without head coach Nolan Richardson, whose 15-year-old daughter, Yvonne, died last week after a two-year battle with leukemia.

Arkansas improved to 12-8 overall and 3-4 in the SWC. Texas A&M fell to 12-6 and 4-3.

Southern Methodist snapped a six-game SWC losing streak with a 63-43 victory over Rice and Tech whipped Texas 56-46 in Austin on Saturday night.

TCU Coach Jim Killinsworth said the Horned Frogs were a long way from being crowned champions.

"You never know," he said. "We could still be 7-9. You get into trouble when you start looking ahead. We're fortunate to have a two game lead but we could lose it in two nights."

"It was the biggest win we've had since I've been at TCU," said Holcombe.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss said he was happy the Mustangs' losing streak was over.

"I've been through losing streaks before but this one was different because we have a good team," Bliss said. "This one was a mystery. We kept losing close games."

Texas' continuing problems also are baffling a puzzled Longhorn Coach Bob Weltlich.

"We're just missing a lot of easy shots," he said.

Tech's tough defense held Texas to 34 per cent shooting from the field.

Kentucky survives Robinson, Navy

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — David Robinson's best wasn't good enough to lead 18th-ranked Navy over a balanced effort by the Kentucky Wildcats. Robinson equaled a career-high 45 points, hitting 17 of 22 shots, but a quicker Kentucky prevailed 80-69.

"I thought it was the best game he's ever played," said Navy Coach Pete Hermann. "That was his best overall game."

Robinson, a 7-foot-1 senior center, also grabbed 14 rebounds and blocked 10 shots in a splendid performance. He also surpassed the Rupp Arena scoring mark of 37 points, set by Portland State's Freeman Williams on Dec. 16, 1977.

Happy Giants

Giants Brad Benson gives quarterback Phil Simms a bear-hug after New York's 39-20 win over the Denver Broncos Sunday.

Oates couldn't believe fake punt

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Center Bart Oates couldn't believe it. Here it was, early in the third quarter. The New York Giants were behind by a point and Coach Bill Parcells called a fake punt from their own 46-yard line.

"Man, I'm going, 'We're going to run a fake here?' " Oates said. "I looked over at Bill and said, 'Are you touched?'

"Usually you run it from the other team's 30 or 35-yard line. But it worked."

It sure did. On fourth-and-one, the Giants shifted from punt formation to a T-formation with backup quarterback Jeff Rutledge, in at blocking back instead of Gary Reasons, moving under center.

Rutledge followed Oates, veering slightly to the right, to sneak two yards for a Giants first down.

That put the Giants at their own 48-yard line. They needed only four plays to negotiate the next 52 yards for a touchdown, putting them ahead 16-10. And the rout was on.

"We've had that in all year," Parcells said of the fake punt call. "We've practiced it for at least 15 weeks. It's a gut feeling.

"Rutledge is a real heady guy. If he thinks it's going to work, he runs it. If he doesn't, he's going to take the delay of game. He looked over at me and I nodded my head so he ran the play."

Said Denver Coach Dan Reeves said: "That was a big field position swing. We could have been in great shape. Our field position in the third quarter was terrible. We had none."

Thanks mainly to quarterback John Elway, the Broncos drove from their own 20-yard line to a first down at the New York 1. It seemed only a matter of time before they increased a 10-7 advantage.

Instead, they went backwards. First, Elway lost a yard on a rollout to the right. Then, Gerald Willhite was held to no gain. Finally, Sammy Winder tried to sweep left end and lost four yards.

That left Denver at the Giants' 6-yard line. They still seemed a good bet to extend their lead, but Rich Karlis was wide right on a 23-yard field goal attempt.

Later in the period, the Giants got a safety when George Martin sacked Elway in the Denver end zone. The Broncos had still another scoring opportunity, but Karlis was again wide right on a 34-yard field goal attempt with 13 seconds left before halftime.

Said Karlis: "I let the momentum shift."

Nobody liked bright lights more than Leo

This report might properly be titled, with apologies to the playwright, "The Lion in Winter."

Nobody ever loved a bright light, a face card, a pretty ankle, a natural seven or an 8-ball in a corner pocket any more than Leo Ernest Durocher.

Nobody liked noise, turmoil, confusion, dissension any better. No one liked the bottom of the ninth, the bases loaded, a capacity crowd standing and the World Series or the pennant on the line any more than Leo.

It was his life's blood. It was, as the cliche, has it, what Leo was all about.

Leo couldn't stand quiet. He couldn't stand to be bored. Where none existed, he invented a feud. Leo had the outlook of a guy with his own deck, boiled dice or two aces down. He considered the world a sucker.

He was a wise guy before the term came into common coinage. He was the original Broadway Joe. He got his shoes shined and his hair cut every day, he was immaculately groomed. He never bought a suit off a rack or a hat out of a window in his life. He wore so many jewels, he came into a room like a train into a tunnel. He always looked as if he were leading a parade.

HE HAD a voice that was a cross between a ship's whistle and an air horn on a 16-wheel rig. Leo never whispered in his life. He always talked as if he were announcing the room was on fire.

He was a brash rookie when he broke into the game – and he remained one till he left it. He had no patience with losers. And not much with winners, either, for that matter. Patience was a vice to Leo.

Leo wanted action. Leo was a "Shut up and deal!" guy from the go. Nothing awed him. He yelled at Babe Ruth the first day he ever showed up in the big leagues. He cursed at three generations of umpires or commissioners of baseball. When all the world, including his wife, referred to Branch Rickey as Mr. Rickey – even years after his death -- Leo always called him Branch.

He considered world famous movie stars his equals and once almost forcibly kept Spencer Tracy from a European trip because the actor's arrival coincided with the team's winning streak. Someone once said if Leo went to heaven, the first thing he would do would be to try to get God in a gin game.

LEO didn't have a shy bone in his body. Modesty was not his long suit. His style was to attack. Leo went out to meet trouble. He wanted to get the first punch in.

Replay creates instant controversy

By RICK WARNER
AP Sports Writer

As many feared, the instant replay rule created instant controversy in its Super Bowl debut.

In the second quarter Sunday, with the Denver Broncos leading the New York Giants 10-7, Denver quarterback John Elway threw a pass to tight end Clarence Kay that was ruled incomplete.

The Broncos claimed he made a diving catch, but the field officials said the ball touched the ground as Kay grabbed it.

After reviewing replays in the booth, replay official Art McNally upheld the original decision. CBS later showed a replay from a different angle that seemed to indicate it was a catch.

The play was significant because a catch would have given the Broncos a first down at their 25-yard line. Instead, on the next play, Giants defensive end George Martin tackled Elway in the end zone for a safety.

The Giants went on to crush the Broncos, 39-20, but Kay insisted afterward that the disputed pass play was the turning point.

"I thought the instant replay would reverse the call," he said in a postgame interview. "That was probably the biggest play of the game right there. When they got that sack, it changed the momentum of the game."

"I don't care how they looked at it, whether from every angle or just one, I had the ball all the way," Kay said.

Denver Coach Dan Reeves was also angered by the call.

"Clarence Kay caught the football," he said. "I don't care what the instant replay said. I wear glasses ... but he caught the ball."

McNally, who is the NFL's supervisor of officials, said the replays were inconclusive. Under the instant replay rule, which was used for the first time this season, a replay must be clear-cut in order to overrule the call of a field official.

McNally said he talked to head linesman Terry Gierke and field judge Pat Mallette at halftime, and they said they saw Kay grasp the ball while it was on the ground.

"By rule, that's an incomplete pass," McNally said.

The instant replay was used again later in the game to uphold an official's ruling that a pass from Elway to running back Steve Sewell was incomplete.

Will the replay rule return next season? That's up to NFL owners, who will vote on the issue this spring.

The officials may have missed a call, but CBS's broadcast of the Super Bowl was right on the mark.

Pat Summerall and John Madden, the NFL's top announcing team, lived up to their reputation by providing clear play-by-play and pungent analysis of football's biggest game.

Madden was quick to point out trends and strategy, including the Giants' critical decision to go for a first down on a fourth-and-one while trailing 10-9 early in the second half.

When Madden spotted substitute quarterback Jeff Rutledge in the game, he correctly predicted that the Giants would shift from punt formation and try for the first down. Rutledge made it on a quarterback sneak, keeping alive a touchdown drive that gave the Giants a 16-10 lead.

Madden also gave the telecast a light touch with his offbeat sense of humor.

When Denver defensive back Louis Wright tackled Giants tight end Mark Bavaro in the end zone to prevent a touchdown pass, Madden quipped: "That should be more than a flag. That should be an arrest."

Madden and Summerall weren't the only standouts on the telecast. CBS cameramen captured the action and emotions of the day with timely and vivid pictures like the one of Giants receiver Phil McConkey proudly clutching the ball on the sideline after catching a touchdown pass.

Koch wants own team

KRAKOW, Poland (AP) — Mayor Edward Koch on Monday called the Giants' Super Bowl triumph a "regional victory" for New Jersey and New York, but added New Yorkers deserve their own team.

"We're looking for a new team," said Koch, who has angered Giants fans with his criticism of the team for leaving New York for Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J.

"We definitely want a team," said Koch, who said he would not be surprised if the Giants "renamed themselves the New Jersey Giants" after their Super Bowl victory. If they did it it would just be truth in packaging," he said.

The Mayor, who is on a five-day trip to Poland, was asleep during the Giants' 39-20 victory over the Denver Broncos Sunday. He learned of the result at his hotel Monday morning.

NY Giant fans paint Big Apple Red and Blue

NEW YORK (AP) — As the city painted the town red for the Big Blue, some people had something else to celebrate ... the end of the football season.

That came shortly before 9 p.m. when the New York Giants' won their first NFL championship since 1956, a 39-20 victory over the Denver Broncos in the Super Bowl on Sunday.

"It'll be nice to have my husband back and the TV set off for a change," said Rhonda Palazzo, 34, a teacher from North Jersey and a self-proclaimed football widow.

Palazzo's husband celebrated the New York Giants victory at a party with his pals. She toasted the end of the season with her friends at the Old Homestead Restaurant in lower Manhattan.

There bandleader Herb Sherry hosted the fourth annual football widow's party to "keep the women who hate football occupied during the Super Bowl," he said.

Palazzo's husband won't be miserable to live with until the next football season because his team won. But she still had a complaint.

"Now he'll talk about nothing but football for the next two months," she said.

But some former football widows were cheering on the Giants with the best of them.

"You learn to live with it," said Charlotte Sackler, of Jericho, L.I., who celebrated her 40-plus birthday with her family while watching the game on 12-foot television screens at Sports, a new bar on Manhattan's Upper West Side.

American bald eagles spending winter in Texas

By BOB GWIZDZ
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

They're here.

American bald eagles, which symbolize everything from bourbon to national pride, are wintering in Texas. Experts estimate from 500 to 900 bald eagles spend November through March in the Lone Star State. And anyone with the desire to see one and a willingness to expend a little energy can do so.

Eagles can be found wintering along major river systems and big reservoirs across the state.

"More of them seem to winter in the Panhandle and along our East Texas lakes than we ever see in South Texas," said Floyd Potter, a wildlife biologist with Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. "But I think that's because there's more water in East Texas and the Panhandle than in South Texas.

"The larger lakes in East Texas are most assuredly the best place to see bald eagles," Potter said. "I flew around the shoreline of Toledo Bend one time and I counted more than 40 of them. They're also fairly common along the major river systems, particularly in East Texas."

THE EAGLEs arrive over about a three-week period in November from their distant and not-so-distant summer homes.

"There are two subspecies of bald eagle, the Northern and Southern," Potter said. "They are very difficult to distinguish just by looking at them. The ones that nest in the South, in the wintertime, are the Southern bald eagle. The Northern bald eagle nests in the North. However, they both come south.

"We have more Northern bald eagles wintering in Texas than we do Southern bald eagles."

Potter said nesting activity is the principal means of identifying the subspecies.

THE NORTHERN subspecies nests and summers well to the north. They are so numerous in some northern states (Michigan and Minnesota, for instance) that they are not listed as endangered species, though they are protected by federal statue. "They're fairly common along the northern tier states," Potter said. "They go all the way to Canada."

The southern strain, which nests along the Gulf Coast — roughly from Rockport to Houston — also migrates northward, though biologists are not exactly sure where. TP&W biologist David Mabie is beginning his third year of a tagging program designed to find out.

The birds are wing-marked and leg-banded when they are about 7 weeks old or older, said Mabie, who has tagged 28 eaglets over the last two winters.

Mabie's eaglets are decked out with a yellow wing marker on the right wing (which indicates the bird is from the Southeast) and light blue on the left wing (which indicates it's from Texas). They are also leg-banded with various colors to determine which year they were tagged.

THE MARKERS — four-inch wide, six-inch long nylon strips attached with a pop rivet around the portion of the wing close to the body — are visible only when the bird is in flight. So far, Mabie said, his banded eaglets have a 100 percent survival rate.

Eaglets hatch one to three young. "Three birds is fairly rare," Mabie said. "Two is common." Survivorship is good, he said.

In captivity, bald eagles will live up to 50 years, Mabie said. "It may even be a lot longer than that."

Young bald eagles are brown; they develop their characteristic white head and white tail at sexual maturity, around 4 years of age. When mature, a bald eagle — despite an impressive seven-foot wing-span — weighs only about 8 or 9 pounds, Mabie said.

So far, Mabie has confirmed five sightings of his eagles, in Montana, Nebraska, Arizona, Ontario (Canada) and Texas. So far, the data are insufficient to decipher any migration pattern.

WHAT IS known, however, is that the eagles have an extraordinary homing instinct.

"Basically, the bald eagles that nest in Texas come back to the same nest every year," Potter said. "But they have an alternate nest. We check about 30 nests a year. We check every one we can find and the only time they go off our lists is if the nest is destroyed. So we check about 30 nests a year but only half of them active."

Potter said ant infestation, human encroachment and predator problems are reasons that eagles will give up a nest. But part of the reason they use the nests is probably became its takes so much energy for them to build them," Potter said.

"Nests are spectacular. They may weigh up to three quarters of a ton."

Exactly what triggers the migration instinct in bald eagles — or in other creatures for that matter — is a matter of speculation. Biologists theorize that photo-period — the number of daylight hours — is the stimulus.

"They come south before the rivers freeze," Potter said. "They are physiologically tuned in so that they can survive winter, if they've got a food supply."

Their food supply is basically fish, although they will eat carrion, Potter said. "I've seen a bald eagle feeding on a dead rabbit where there would be a ring of vultures around him of, say, 10 to 15 feet away."

That habit of feeding on carcasses — especially duck and goose carcasses — is behind the push to ban lead shot for waterfowling. Some eagle deaths have been traced to lead poisoning, caused by ingesting lead-poisoned waterfowl.

THOUGH MOST biologists are willing to accept photo-period as the trigger mechanism for migration, the eagle's habit of returning to the same nest is explained less easily.

"We theorize a whole number of things of why animals return to certain areas, but there is some kinds of imprinting," Potter said. "Some kind of chemical, magnetic field has been theorized or it could be that they have a photographic memory when they get close to a certain place. A lot of researh has been done on trying to find out how an animal finds its way back to the place it was born."

Eagles have some parental guidance in finding their way, too. They migrate with the parents their first year and sometimes their second. As they approach sexual maturity, however, they strike out on their own, pair up and migrate as couples.

The National Wildlife Federation, in conjunction with state game and fish agencies, conduts an annual survey of bald eagle sightings each winter.

Maurie LeFranc, director of the institute for Wildlife Research with the National Wildlife Federation, said there are an estimated 1,400 nesting pairs of bald eagles in the lower 48 states. Ten times that many may live in Alaska.

Eagles are significantly more numerous now than they were 15 years ago, when DDT pollution contributed heavily to poor reproduction. The DDT, which found its way into the waterways and the eagle's food chain, caused the birds to produce weakened eggs. Egg shell thinning, as it's known, caused the eggs to break under the pressure of an incubating adult.

Part of the recovery can be traced to the tough criminal sanctions levied against those who kill eagles. Similarly, it is illegal to harass them or their nests.

It is perfectly legal, however, to look at them.

MURRAY

Rickey, in exasperation, once explained that Leo was "a mental hoodlum with the infinite capacity for taking a bad situation and making it infinitely worse."

But the owners, the press and the sporting public loved Durocher. He got the game in the papers. He was no 9-to-5 guy. He was a .247 hitter who swaggered like a triple crowner.

Pitchers loved him. That was because, when they threw a ground ball, Leo went out and got it. Leo was a marvelous fielder. There isn't a pitcher in baseball who wouldn't rather have a great shortstop than a great hitter in the lineup, and Leo was one of the greatest who ever went after a double-play ball. He stayed in the big leagues 17 years on his glove and brains.

Leo was part of the most raucous, romantic, rowdy bunch of ballplayers ever in one lineup. The St. Louis Cardinals' Gas House Gang of the 1930s was a packet of underpaid superstars who were the best team in baseball during that gaudy period, when they could keep themselves from self-destructing. Leo led the merry-making.

WHATEVER the secret of top managing in the big leagues is, Leo had it in abundance. He won more than 2,000 games as a manager for four different teams. He piloted three of them into World Series.

There was never a dull moment on a Durocher team. He was the skipper of the out-manned Giant team that won on the Little-Miracle-of-Coogan's-Bluff home run by Bobby Thomson in 1951. He was the manager of the Dodger World Series team that lost when Mickey Owen dropped the third strike and final out in 1941. His '54 New York Giants crushed the Cleveland team that won 111 games, more than any other team in the history of the major leagues.

And what he is doing outside the Hall of Fame is something for the shamans of baseball to explain, not me. It's a historical injustice of the first magnitude.

If Leo Durocher doesn't belong in the baseball Hall of Fame, neither does Ty Cobb. If Leo Durocher doesn't belong in the Hall of Fame, what are Joe McCarthy, Bill McKechnie, Bucky Harris and Larry McPhail doing there?

They gave a dinner for Leo. The Westwood Shrine Club honoring him for "lifetime achievement in sport." Bobby Thomson, Willie Mays, Tommy Lasorda and all the greats who touched his life will on hand for the festivities.

I visited the old lion in winter at his lair in Palm Springs the other morning. He's 81, the hair is gone and the eyes are fading but the voice is still piercing, the dugout growl intact. Leo still yells into a phone as if it were an umpire who just missed an easy call at second. The stomach is still flat, the tone firm. Leo doesn't need any shots from life. He still plays it from the back tees.

A huge picture of Babe Ruth with his arm around him festoons Leo's den. There are pictures of Herbert Hoover, Will Rogers, Ernest Hemingway, Judge Landis.

THERE ARE no pictures of former commissioner Albert B. (Happy) Chandler.

Happy Chandler, you will recall, is the commissioner who once barred Leo from baseball for a year. The circumstances were the least bit blurry.

In 1947, a pair of notorious gamblers showed up at a Dodger-Yankee exhibition game in Havana. Subsequent investigation showed that they were the guests of Yankee management but their appearance set off a chain of bewildering reactions that led, somehow, to Durocher's being suspended from baseball for a year.

Any storefront lawyer could have broken the judgment and maybe recovered damages today. But in 1947, baseball was a law unto itself.

Maybe it still is. Friends of Leo Durocher in the councils of baseball have suggested that former commissioner Chandler, now on the veterans' committee handling the admission of old-time baseball players into the Hall of Fame, may be settling old scores by blocking Leo's accession.

It makes Leo feel young again. Like old times. One more ninth inning. One more row with the nabobs of the game. One more shouting match with an arbiter. One more "Where was the pitch, ya bleep?"

Leo belongs in the Hall of Fame. But you wouldn't expect Leo the Lip to go in there quietly and with dignity like a Pope getting elected, or like Stan Musial or Lou Gehrig or Joe DiMaggio now, would you?

That's not Leo's style. He's got to go in there arguing and spitting and kicking dirt and yelling, "Stick it in his ear!"

That Hall of Fame looks as if it could use a little shaking up. And now you're talking Leo's game.

Only 67 arrests mark Super Bowl game

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The 67 arrests made at the Super Bowl game were mostly for such relatively minor offenses as pickpocketing, officials say.

"It's been a good crowd," said Mary Schander, assistant to the Pasadena police chief. "To the best of my knowledge, there were no violent crimes, no serious injuries — just some bee stings."

Put another way, the number of arrests was less than a hundredth of a percent of the Rose Bowl stadium crowd of 101,063.

GIANTS

On the fourth play of the quarter, the Giants were on their 46-yard line, with fourth down and a foot to go for a first down. They sent in Sean Landeta, their punter. They also sent in Jeff Rutledge, their backup quarterback who does not play on the punting team.

LANDETA lined up to punt and Rutledge was in a blocking-back position. Suddenly, Rutledge jumped behind the center to take a snap and Landeta ran laterally in motion. Rutledge took the snap and sneaked for 2 yards and the first down. Five plays later, Simms passed to Bavaro for the touchdown that put the Giants ahead for good.

"Jeff could take a delay or run," said Parcells. "He looked over at me, I nodded my head and he went for it. We went for it because we're trying to win the game. This is for the world championship. I have a lot of confidence in our guys."

Late in the third quarter, with the Giants leading by 19-10, they were on the Broncos' 45-yard line. They tried a play known as a flea-flicker, something every American youth had done on sandlots.

Simms took the center snap and handed the ball to Morris. The 5-foot-7 halfback ran a couple of steps, stopped and threw the ball back to Simms.

The idea was to convince the defense that it was a running play and thus the defensive backs could forget about the pass receivers they were guarding and come up to stop the run. Some were convinced because McConkey was wide open. He caught Simms's pass on the 20-yard line, was hit on the 5 and dived to the 1. Morris scored on the next play.

"We've run the flea-flicker in practice for I don't know how long," said Simms. "When that play got to the 1, I knew that was the game."

ONCE THE Giants led by 33-10 with 10 minutes left in the game, the Broncos had too much ground to make up. By then, they had dissipated too many opportunities.

Rich Karlis kicked field goals of 48 and 28 yards for the Broncos, but unaccountably missed from 23 and 34 yards. That 23-yard miss came after the Broncos had a first down on the Giants' 1-yard line, only to have three running plays stopped for losses or no gain.

"We knew going into the ball game," said Dan Reeves, the Broncos coach, "that if we didn't take advantage of every opportunity we had, we would be in tough shape."

And then there was the tramping around in the woods for lost balls, which I never had any hope of finding, yet I never had any trouble locating poison ivy. I got it so bad that I'd miss a week of school at a time.

Still, the caddy experience brought a new understanding of why the course personnel was so concerned with our playing football in the rough.

There's no doubt about it, with guys like I caddied for out there on the tee, our very lives were in danger.

Dollar renews slump

LONDON (AP) — The dollar renewed its slide today, losing most of the gains it made on Friday. Gold gained in Europe after falling in Hong Kong.

Dealers in Tokyo and Frankfurt said markets were nervous about possible concerted action by financial powers to stem the fall of the dollar, which is hurting Japanese and European exports.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell 0.50 yen to a closing 152.75. Later, in London, it was quoted at 152.30 yen.

Tokyo dollar-selling eased as traders grew cautious about possible coordinated U.S.-Japanese intervention in currency markets to support the dollar, which closed last Monday at 150.45 yen, its lowest since 1949.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—1.8152 West German marks, down from 1.8215

—1.5245 Swiss francs, down from 1.5320

—6.0595 French francs, down from 6.1925

—2.0465 Dutch guilders, down from 2.0585

—1,290.75 Italian lire, down from 1,298.50

—1.3567 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3605

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.5325, compared with $1.5230 Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $404.60 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $403.00. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $405.35.

In Zurich, the bid price was $405.10, up from $402.00 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.49 to close at a bid $405.67.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.54 a troy ounce, up from Friday's $5.49.

Baker-Hughes merger opposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Baker International Corp. executive said he was optimistic about a proposed merger with Hughes Tool Co. despite opposition from the Department of Justice.

The Justice Department said Sunday it would sue to block the merger of the California firm and Hughes Tool, two of the world's largest oil-well drilling equipment producers.

The proposed merger would violate the Clayton antitrust act by lessening competition in two major markets of the drilling industry, said Charles F. Rule, acting assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's anti-trust division.

The Justice Department had indicated it would drop its opposition to the merger if Baker were to sell off its rock bit and pump operations, said Max Luken, vice president and chief financial officer of the Orange, Calif., firm.

"We're still in the negotiation process and we're very happy and optimistic about the eventual outcome," Lukens said in a telephone interview from his California home. He wouldn't say how the company was willing to change the merger agreement to meet the department's objections.

Calls to Hughes Tool Co. in Houston went unanswered on Sunday.

The firms, with combined total sales of $3.2 billion in 1985, are two of four major producers of tri-cone rock bits and electric submersible pumps used in oil wells, officials said.

"If this merger is allowed to proceed there will be only three significant competitiors in each market," Rule said.

The merger would force up prices within the oil industry, he said.

The two struggling oil-field services companies announced Oct. 22 they planned to merge in a stock-swap deal valued at $456.5 million.

The agreement, approved by both companies' directors, would create a new company named Baker Hughes Inc. to be headquartered in Houston.

To lock up the deal, each company granted the other the right to buy 18.5 percent of the other's stock, and Borg-Warner Corp., which owns 18.6 percent of Houston-based Hughes Tool's stock, agreed to vote in favor of the deal.

Under the agreement, each share of Hughes Tool would be exchanged for four-fifths of a share of the new company. Each Baker share would be swapped for one share in the new company.

Justice Department spokesman Mark Sheehan said Sunday that the value of Hughes stock is $450 million and Baker stock is worth $750 million.

Hughes has about 55 million shares outstanding. Baker has about 70 million shares outstanding.

Both companies have been hurt by the depressed oil industry and combined have layed off more than 25,000 employees in the past two years.

Texas refineries report better profits in 1986

DALLAS (AP) — Texas crude oil refineries finished 1986 with an average profit margin of 36 cents per barrel, according to a petroleum industry analyst.

The average Gulf Coast refinery had to cope with falling wholesale prices for refined products, Purvin & Gertz analyst Robert Hermes said.

In addition to negative operating margins, most refiners also suffered losses from inventory write-downs in the first quarter, Hermes said.

But after the fall in crude prices that occurred in the first quarter, demand for petroleum products picked up strongly, Hermes said.

The increase in demand and the relatively low crude price led to an enormous jump in the average operating margin to $1.66 per barrel in the second quarter. It also led to a big increase in operating capacities.

"During the second quarter, U.S. refineries operated at higher utilization rates than have been seen in a number of years in order to meet gasoline requirements," Hermes said.

But while the product demand remained strong, the trend could not be sustained.

"In the third quarter, it was just too much of a good thing," he said.

Operating margins for the Gulf Coast refiners remained in the black for the second half of the year, but leveled off significantly to an average 11 cents in the third quarter and 4 cents in the fourth quarter.

American Petrofina spokesman Don Miller said his company's performance generally followed the industry trend in 1986.

"The second quarter of 1986 was the best, the third was OK and the first and fourth not too swift," he said.

Investors nervous after wild stock market ride

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors braced for the unknown on the stock market today with one of Wall Street's wildest days, and one of the market's biggest losses, fresh in their minds.

Investors already nervous about how much longer the market's phenomenal climb this year can continue are wondering whether Friday's roller-coaster session was a temporary setback or the start of a sustained downturn.

That session opened with the rally apparently heading to new highs as the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials soared 64 points by midafternoon. Yet within about an hour, the average plunged more than 110 points. Then it recovered its losses and plummeted again.

The result: a 44.15-point loss for the session to 2,101.52, the average's fourth worst slide ever, and record trading volume of 302.39 million shares on the New York Stock Exchange, nearly 50 million more than the previous record set Jan. 15.

Sharp, sustained advances by the market are often followed by abrupt setbacks, or "corrections," as Wall Streeters call them, and the Dow industrials were still up about 11 percent over just the past three weeks.

But the pullbacks have grown even more severe recently because the market keeps going higher and trading volume keeps getting larger.

In addition, the use of computerized "program trading" by many professionals added a strong element of volatility to the market because it enables them to trade huge baskets of stocks in an instant.

The current rally has had people nervous because they knew that in light of the huge gains, little more than a hiccup by the market could send investors rushing to sell shares and lock in their profits.

Still, the reversal Friday was unexpectedly awesome and lightning-quick.

Many people are perplexed that the market's rally has come amid several economic trends that seem to weigh against it, such as the U.S. budget and trade deficits and sluggish economic growth.

Market optimists say other factors support stocks, including low interest rates and inflation and the dollar's decline.

The lower dollar not only helps the stocks of U.S.-based multinationals and other American companies that compete against foreign imports, but also makes U.S. stocks cheaper overall and thus more attractive for foreign investors, many analysts say.

Still, the market's "herd instinct," not economic fundamentals, could decide investors' actions.

"It's an emotional thing," said veteran market analyst Eldon Grimm of Birr, Wilson & Co. in San Francisco. "Buying begets buying, and selling begets selling."

As Iran-Iraq war intensifies, worries about oil prices grow

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Oil specialists in the United States are deeply concerned that the escalation of the Iran-Iraq war could ultimately cause a significant shift in world oil supplies. Such a shift, by its very abruptness, could cause unsettling movements in price.

If there is a disruption in the supply of oil from the Persian Gulf, crude oil prices could be driven sharply higher at a time when the United States has greatly increased its oil imports, the specialists say.

On the other hand, if hostilities cool and exports from the region increase, prices could be forced down sharply, exacerbating the problems caused by the price crash of last year. Those included a sharp decline in United States oil production and severe financial difficulties for many oil companies and banks with large energy-related loans.

As yet, the surge in fighting has not greatly affected activity on the world oil market, where prices have settled at about $18 a barrel. Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, a consulting firm in Cambridge, Mass., attributed this to the "jaded attitude" the oil community has developed toward what seemed to be an unending war.

However, Yergin added, the oil industry is now watching the battle for Basra, Iraq's second-largest city, "with increasing anxiety," because the seven-year-old war appears to be nearing a turning point.

A NUMBER OF executives, analysts and consultants in the oil business said the lack of reliable information about the fighting makes it impossible to determine which country is gaining the upper hand.

Edward L. Morse, managing director of the Petroleum Finance Co., a Washington-based consulting firm, said, however: "The next two months are the most critical since the outbreak of the war. Iraq is beleaguered, and Iran is stretched extremely thin. This either will develop into a final offensive by Iran or set the stage for a negotiated settlement."

The oil specialists said there are many ways the war's outcome could affect oil supplies, depending upon whether Iran or Iraq gains a conclusive victory, whether there is a negotiated settlement and whether the conflict continues at a low intensity.

For example, the chief executive of one large United States company, who asked to remain anonymous, said that an Iranian victory, or a negotiated settlement forced by Iran, could lead to higher oil prices.

He pointed out that Iran has long urged the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to substantially reduce its crude oil output in order to raise prices. "They've consistently been much more hawkish on price than the OPEC moderates," the official said. "Twenty-five to twenty-eight dollars a barrel — that's their view of a right price for crude oil."

THE MORE moderate OPEC states, such as Saudi Arabia, have indicated that, for the time being, their optimal crude oil price would be in the low $20s.

The Persian Gulf states have recently become more accommodating toward Iran, while at the same time continuing their considerable support of Iraq. William B. Quandt, acting director of the Foreign Policy Program at the Brookings Institution in Washington, said that the Arab states have sought to play both sides against the middle during the conflict.

They fear that an unfettered Iran would foment fundamentalist uprisings within their borders. But they also dislike Iraq, which in the past has claimed that part of Kuwait is actually its territory.

Iran, with a population of 46 million, and Iraq, at 16 million, have substantially higher populations than Saudi Arabia, with an estimated 11.5 million, and other neighbors.

Quandt said that Iranian gains in the war would induce "a very strong inclination to appease Iran" among the Persian Gulf countries.

In other words, three of OPEC's and the world's key oil producers — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and the United Arab Emirates — would almost certainly acquiesce if Iran were to pointedly recommend that they reduce their crude oil output.

"Basically, they could dictate what the other countries' quotas would be," said Bryan Jacoboski, an oil analyst at Paine Webber Inc., "and that possibility is very worrisome to the oil industry."

LAWRENCE GOLDSTEIN, executive vice president of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, an industry group, said that if Iran were able to control Iraq's output, which has been exempted from the OPEC quota, American oil companies would have to consider accepting the long-term contracts for crude oil at fixed prices that some OPEC countries have been offering, rather than the month-by-month contracts they prefer.

On the other hand, a negotiated settlement of the war that left Iraqi production largely unaffected could contribute to a decline in prices, according to Morse, the oil consultant.

The reason is that an end to the fighting would halt Iraqi air attacks on Iranian export facilities in the Persian Gulf. In the last eight months, those attacks have cut Iran's crude oil exports by as much as a third.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

November machine tool orders up 2.6 percent

NEW YORK — New orders for American-made machine tools rose 2.6 percent in December from November, but orders for all of 1986 dropped 16 percent compared to 1985, according to a report to be released on Monday by the National Machine Tool Builders' Association.

The trade group and industry analysts attributed the overall decline to a sluggish economy and to uncertainties created by the new tax law, in particular by provisions eliminating the investment tax credit and lengthening depreciation schedules.

Consumer spending, personal income rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans, buying big-ticket items to qualify for the sales-tax deduction, pushed spending up 2 percent in December while consumer incomes rose 0.8 percent, the government says.

The Commerce Department said Friday the spending increase followed a 0.6 percent November advance and a record decline of 1.9 percent in October. The new gain was the largest for one month since a 2.5 percent rise in May 1975.

Economists said the rise in incomes resulted mainly from an increase in government subsidy payments for farmers.

Car sales off 36.9 percent from 1986 levels

DETROIT (AP) — Domestic automakers' U.S. sales fell 36.9 percent in mid-January from a year ago, when sales were boosted by a heavier round of cut-rate loan financing, the companies reported.

All except American Honda Motor Co. Inc. and Nissan Motor Corp. suffered substantial drops in sales from Jan. 11-20 compared with the year-ago period. Sales by the Big Three — General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. — were down 38.4 percent, according to figures released Friday.

U.S. makers sold 125,774 cars during the period, compared with 199,246 during the same period last year.

U.S., economic allies arranging talks

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States and its biggest economic allies are negotiating arrangements for a meeting to discuss the dollar and the ways their economic policies affect it, European and Japanese officials said Sunday.

They said a promising date for the meeting, probably in Paris, was Feb. 7, when Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III is scheduled to be on his way back to Washington from a visit to Saudi Arabia for discussions that the Treasury says are routine.

"Very soon there'll be a G-5 meeting," said a European diplomat, referring to what has become known as the Group of Five. "It's clearly in the air," added the diplomat, who like others here declined to be identified. He and others said the timing and location were uncertain because the countries — the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain and France — had not yet agreed on arrangements. They cautioned, however, that any one country could prevent a meeting.

Japan's government-owned television station, NHK, reported Sunday that the Group of Five would meet in Paris, probably on Feb. 7, but the Tokyo government did not confirm it. A Japanese official in Washington said he expected a meeting soon but added, "I can't confirm the exact date." The French Finance Ministry refused to comment.

The Treasury declined to comment. Margaret D. Tutwiler, its chief spokesman, said she had checked with Baker Sunday. "Mr. Baker does not comment on G-5 meetings, one way or another," she said.

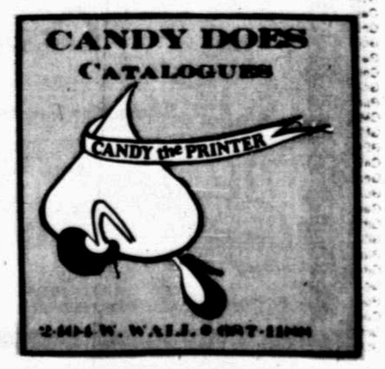

Baker, appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program Sunday, said the dollar's decline had been helpful, but he added that he was concerned about "excess" volatility in the stock market. He said the government should study such volatility. The Securities and Exchange Commission already has a study under way.

On Friday, the Dow Jones industrial average closed 44.15 points lower after gyrating wildly in an unusually tumultuous day. The stock market, according to Wall Street analysts, is likely to need at least a few days before recovering from Friday's session.

An administration aide said on Saturday that Baker and the chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Beryl W. Sprinkel, would tell President Reagan Monday that Friday's stock market activity caused them little worry.

The Group of Five, which is made up of finance ministers and central bankers, meets irregularly, three or four times a year. It normally gathers secretly and rarely announces its plans, but some of the countries see it in their interest to alert reporters — and thus the markets — ahead of time.

In merely letting it be known that they were trying to plan a meeting, the countries could be attempting to calm the currency markets. Assurances of a meeting might imply that a multilateral effort was under way to stabilize the dollar and therefore suggest that the administration could soon try to keep it from declining much further. Such efforts often fail, however, if the momentum of the financial markets is pushing the other way.

Stock Market Loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were mostly lower this morning.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which see-sawed 115 points inside of an hour Friday and tumbled on record volume, vacillated in a narrow range and was up 1.26 by noon EST to 2,102.78.

Among broader market indicators, the New York Stock Exchange composite index fell 0.95 to 153.07. The American Stock Exchange's market-value index fell 1.81 to 293.64.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange totaled 71.24 million shares during the morning session, vs. 115.05 million Friday morning. Losing issues outran gainers by nearly a 3-1 margin, with 1,052 down, 389 up and 376 unchanged.

Among today's most notable NYSE issues, Upjohn rose 1⅞ to 112⅜. An article in the Wall Street Journal said the company's new anti-baldness drug Minoxidil has been found to be generally safe by the Food and Drug Administration, though final approval has not been given yet.

Exxon rose ⅞ to 80⅛. The oil giant's quarterly earnings were better than expected. Minnesota Mining, which reported stronger earnings, gained 1¾ to 128½.

Interest-sensitive stocks generally were lower, including Citicorp at 57⅝, down 1; Chase Manhattan at 39¾, down ⅞; and Morgan Stanley at 72, down 1⅛.

Home Shopping Network, a rapidly expanding cable television-shopping operation, led the most-active list on the American Exchange, up 1⅜ to 41⅜.

On Friday, the Dow Jones industrials tumbled 44.15 points to 2,101.52, capping a day of unprecedented swings in the widely watched barometer of stock trading.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange soared to a record 302.39 million shares, against 188.66 million in the previous session. The old record volume of 253.12 million was set Jan. 15.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

1982 rules can help eliminate death taxes on savings bonds

By BILL DOYLE

Q. If I redeem my Series E and EE, U.S. Savings Bonds, I will receive their "redemption values" — the price I paid and the accumulated interest. I know that the interest is subject to federal income tax, but is exempt from state and local income tax.

Under what circumstances are U.S. Savings Bonds subject to federal and state inheritance taxes?

Doyle

A. Savings bond redemption values are included in the estate for "death tax" purposes. If you own savings bonds when you leave this vale of tears, the bonds' redemption value as of the day you die is counted as part of your estate. That might make your estate large enough to be subject to death taxes.

The federal government has an estate tax. All states except Nevada have estate and/or inheritance taxes.

However, a spouse can leave everything he or she owns to his or her surviving spouse free of federal estate tax. And, besides that "unlimited marital deduction," you can leave up to $600,000 to others without any federal estate tax bite.

These rules, in effect since Jan. 1, 1982, eliminate federal estate taxes on what most people leave.

State estate and/or inheritance tax rules vary widely. Some states pattern their death tax rules after the federal estate tax rules. Many don't. There's not nearly enough room here to print the death tax rules of all states.

Q. Since the birth of our son in 1972, we and various relatives have purchased U.S. Savings Bonds to be used for his college education.

The bonds are in co-ownership form, in our son's name "or" one of our names. I read it is wise to have the bonds in beneficiary form — in child's name, payable on death, to the parent. Is there a way to change this registration?

A. Yes. A change in savings bond registration from co-ownership form to beneficiary form can be accomplished by filling out Form PD 1938, then sending the bonds and the form to your district Federal Reserve Bank, which will reissue the bonds.

However, there is no need to have your son's bonds reissued in beneficiary form. They can be left as they are.

When savings bonds are bought as gifts for a child, the recommended procedure is to have the bonds issued in the child's name, with a parent as beneficiary.

But savings bonds can be purchased for a child in co-ownership form. Either co-owner can redeem the bonds. As long as the child's Social Security number is used, the tax liability on the accumulated interest is the child's.

Q. We have 73 Series E bonds and 10 Series EE bonds. What is the difference between Es and EEs?

A. The difference has been blurred, as a result of the many changes in the savings bond program.

E bonds were issued from May 1941 through June 1980. Their purchase price was 75 percent of their guaranteed face value at maturity. For example, the lowest priced E cost $18.75 and was guaranteed to be worth at least $25 on its maturity date.

EE bonds have been issued since January 1980. Their purchase price is 50 percent of their guaranteed maturity value. The lowest priced EE costs $25 and is worth at least $50 when it matures.

This seems simple enough. But complications set in, because of changes in original maturity periods, extended maturity periods, guaranteed interest rates and variable "market-based" interest rates.

The upshot of all the changes has been to make EE bonds similar to E bonds. Life would be much simpler for savings bond investors if the U.S. Treasury Department hadn't tampered with Es and renamed them EEs. The bureaucrats added to the confusion by changing the designation of Series H bonds to Series HH.

Q. A newsletter recommends using stop loss orders on mutual funds, as "insurance against market declines." Sounds like a great way to prevent losing any money. How does it work?

A. It doesn't. That newsletter writer must have been hitting the joy juice, along with the word processor keys.

For openers, there is no such thing as a "stop loss order." There are "stop orders" and "stop limit orders," which can be used in stock exchange trading — but not with mutual fund shares.

You cannot specify the price at which you buy or redeem mutual fund shares. Mutual funds are required to use "forward pricing," meaning the price you pay when you buy or receive when you redeem is determined after your order reaches the fund.

Every mutual fund "prices" its shares at least once every business day, at 4 p.m., Eastern time. That's done by adding up the values of all the securities and other assets the fund holds, subtracting any liabilities and dividing by the number of fund shares "outstanding" — owned by investors.

The resulting number is the fund's "asset value per share," also called "net asset value."

Let's say you own shares in XYZ Mutual Fund, which currently has a $10 per share value. Let's also say you're concerned that the stock market in general and XYZ Mutual in particular might take a big tumble.

If you want to cash in your shares, you have to place a redemption order and accept what ever price is established after your order arrives. You cannot place an order to redeem your shares at $9.75 or any other specific price, in an attempt to "insure" against a big loss.

Q. I invest in a "family of mutual funds," which allows me to move my investment from one fund to another. I have been more than happy with the results, providing I watch closely the prevailing market trends and make switches when necessary.

I'm pretty well keyed in as to when to move, except for my bond fund. Is there a general rule of thumb or indicator that should trigger my selling this fund? I know that a period of rising interest rates is the time to sell Ginnie Maes. What about bonds?

A. It's the same story. When interest rates go up, the market prices of bonds already issued and outstanding go down. So do the values of mutual funds holding bonds. Conversely, when interest rates go down, the market values of bonds and mutual funds holding bonds go up.

If you can figure out, in advance, which way interest rates are headed, you can make a bundle moving in and out of bond mutual funds and individual bonds. That's quite a trick, which no one — repeat, no one — has completely mastered.

• • •

Q. We have a large certificate of deposit coming due soon. With interest rates on new CDs so low, we are considering putting the money in a high income government bond mutual fund. How do you feel about such funds?

A. Most of them have been good long-term investments. They do provide higher yields than is available on newly issued CDs. However, you should be aware that the values of shares in those funds can fall from time to time.

As long as you know you are taking on some risk in exchange for higher income, I can't fault your investment in that type of mutual fund.

• • •

Q. The mutual fund in which we are thinking of investing pays dividends monthly. If we leave the dividends to accumulate, will the value of our investment increase?

A. Yes, unless the investments the fund holds decline in value, thereby reducing the value of the fund's shares.

In the normal course of events, when you reinvest your dividends to buy more shares, the total value of your investment does increase.

'Typical' American executive fits several generalizations

By MARYBETH NIBLEY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — No one has come up with an easy method for climbing the corporate ladder, but a few generalizations about those on the upper rungs may help people interested in getting there decide if the trip is worth the effort.

A hypothetical "typical" American executive is a white male, 51 years of age who grew up in the Midwest, earned at least an undergraduate degree, is married and has children.

This executive is Protestant, politically conservative and a registered Republican.

He makes $215,000 a year, but he earns it by working a 56-hour week, spending 49 work days away from home on business each year and annually taking only 14 days vacation. And he intends to retire early — perhaps due to years of lengthy workweeks. He has been with his current employer for 17 years.

The profile is based on responses to a survey by the big executive recruiting firm Korn-Ferry International and the Graduate School of Management at the University of California at Los Angeles.

They sent questionnaires to 4,350 senior executives with companies on Fortune magazine's lists of the country's 500 biggest industrial and 500 biggest service corporations. Answers came back from 1,362 people, a 31 percent response rate.

The responses indicated that, old sayings aside, it is not so lonely near the top.

Ninety-four percent of the executives who responded were married and less than 1 percent had never been married. Only 7 percent of those married had been married more than once.

The "top of (the) corporate ladder is no place for single people," Korn-Ferry surmised from its findings.

The senior managers had an average of three children. Five percent reported having no children, while 26 percent had more than four.

More than 90 percent said they grew up in a traditional two-parent home.

"Stable family life appears to play an important part in the scenario for executive success," Korn-Ferry commented.

More of the executives grew up in the Midwest than any other region in the United States, with 35 percent originally from Midwestern states. The next most popular breeding ground was the Northeast, which supplied 33 percent of the corporate talent responding to the survey. Eleven percent came from the Southeast, 9 from the far West and 6 percent from the Southwest. The remaining 6 percent came from other parts of the country.

The study also found that 79 percent of the executives grew up in an urban or suburban setting and only 17 percent traced their upbringings to rural environs.

On educational background, 94 percent of the executives reported having earned a college degree, up from 85 percent in a similar survey conducted in 1979.

Just over half, 51 percent, of the respondents held advanced degrees, compared with 42 percent in 1979. The most popular graduate degree was a master's of business administration, and Harvard Business School was the most frequently attended graduate school. Law degrees were the second most widely held.

On career spans, the study said that the typical executive's 56-hour week was longer than the 53 hours put in on average in the 1979 survey. In 1979, the executives also took two more days of vacation a year than the average of 14 they reported in the latest survey.

Hard work was singled out as the most critical factor in achieving executive success, Korn-Ferry said.

The executives perceived the biggest threats to their careers to be corporate reorganizations due to mergers or acquisitions. Age discrimination and technical obsolescence were of minor concern.

Bankruptcy law may dry up loans for farmers

FORT WORTH (AP) — Analysts predict a new provision in federal bankruptcy laws designed to help farmers stay in business may have the negative effect of scaring away agriculture lenders.

Congress established Chapter 12 of the bankruptcy code in November to give farmers last-chance protection from creditors while the landowners reorganize their debts.

But some industry observers say the law may cause bankers to shy away from making new loans to farmers.

The Chapter 12 provision forces lenders for farmers with up to $1.5 million in farm-related debts to write off the difference between the face value of the debts owed and the depressed value of today's farm assets.

Experts say the write-offs probably will run in the tens of thousands of dollars, often into the hundreds of thousands of dollars on each loan.

"We definitely will take a stronger look at repayment ability," said Gary Vaughn, vice president for loan administration at the Federal Land Bank of Texas in Austin. "And that's not to say we haven't already been doing so in the past."

The Federal Land Bank has $2.5 billion in farm real estate loans and is one of three Farm Credit Banks of Texas, the largest single lender to farmers in the state.

Chapter 12 will not necessarily cause his institution to refuse farm loans, Vaughn said. But provisions of the chapter might cause the system to set limits on farm loans based on the Chapter 12 write-downs for the value of the collateral, he said.

Only seven of about 50,000 borrowers in the Farm Credit Banks of Texas have filed Chapter 12 petitions, Vaughn said.

About 30 West Texas Farmers are said to be in the process of filing Chapter 12 petitions, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday. Officials at the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Fort Worth say only two Chapter 12 petitions have been filed there, both from Wichita Falls-area farmers.

Bruce Magness, a Lubbock lawyer who specializes in farmers' legal problems, says only about 5 percent of the nation's bankrupt farmers have been able to get the required creditors' approval to reorganize and continue under the Chapter 11 bankruptcy code.

Chapter 11 is the common route for troubled businesses seeking protection from creditors.

Chapter 12, like Chapter 11, forces the farmer to develop a plan to reorganize debt, to pay off secured debt, to try to pay off unsecured debt and to continue business.

One of the major differences is that Chapter 12 doesn't allow the lenders to vote on the farmers' reorganization plan, Magness said. Lenders have been angered by the lack of a vote, the cut in value of collateral and prolonged loan recovery, Magness said.

Under Chapter 12, farmers will still need the lenders to finance continued operations and commercial lenders are likely to be reluctant, Magness said.

He said that in order to continue farming, farmers will have to turn to what's left of their government crop subsidies, loans from their suppliers, off-farm income and income from custom work for other farmers.

A rush will be on by next year by farmers to file Chapter 12 petitions, Magness predicted. He said he has sold about 120 videotapes explaining Chapter 12 to farmers at $25 each.

"Farmers hate to get into bankruptcy of any kind," he said. "They are waiting to see how the first cases go."

Religion professor could be involved in 'death penalty'

DALLAS (AP) — Lonnie Kliever devoted his life to the study of religion — but his leading role in the investigation of wrongdoing in Southern Methodist University's athletic department may bring him face to face with the secular sins of the gridiron.

Kliever serves in the precarious position of faculty representative to the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

It's a high-stakes role. If allegations are proven that SMU football players received illegal payments SMU could become the first school to receive the so-called "death penalty."

Under provisions of the "death penalty" the Mustangs would be banned from gridiron competition for up to two years.

Kliever, whose integrity is on the line, is up front about where he stands on the issue of college athletics.

"Even a university as monochrome as SMU reflects a remarkable...diversity," he said. "One of the things that a credible athletic program can do for a university is serve as symbolic center and unifying force."

And, he says, athletes aren't just attending school to make touchdowns.

"I simply reject the caricature...that all student athletes are simply crypto-professionals who have absolutely no interest in getting an education."

Kliever acknowledges that some see him as a "dupe of the athletic program."

"There are some members of the faculty who really see me as having sold out to the enemy," Kliever said. "There are some people on this campus who believe any support of athletics is a denial of the best interests of a first-rate university."

Others, he said, have expressed fears that he might "go too far" with the investigation to the detriment of SMU.

Such emotions don't surprise Kliever, who has studied the role of sports in modern society.

"I would not go so far as to say that football is a religion in Texas," he said. "But it comes close."

He has concluded that "sports plays a more central role in defining personal identity and shaping social values than the traditional churches do, in the lives of many."

Trevor Pearlman, president of the SMU student body, said he does not question Kliever's integrity. But he's concerned that Kliever's interest in athletics could undermine confidence in the investigation.

"Where you have a preconceived notion of how you would prefer the outcome to be — even if you are purely objective — the perception created is that it is impossible for you to be objective," Pearlman said.

David Freidel, an SMU anthropology professor and vice president of the Faculty Senate, said the senate wants its athletics committee, representing the "interests of the faculty," to have greater oversight responsibilities. Before Kliever's appointment by the SMU president, the senate selected the faculty athletic representative.

Despite the criticism, Kliever said he is determined to continue the job that has brought him both visibility and headaches.

"Being a tenured professor allows you to pursue controversial ideas and to undertake unpopular causes," he said. "As a matter of personal and professional conscience, I was compelled to accept the responsibility."

Mexican truckers competing unfairly, Customs agent says

HARLINGEN (AP) — American chambers of commerce are helping Mexican truckers gain an unfair advantage over U.S. truckers along the border, says a veteran U.S. Customs agent.

Mexican trucks with Mexican drivers are allowed to range freely along the border trade zones, Brownsville customs supervisor Ernest Tijerina told a small business conference in Harlingen last week.

He said even twin-plant operators must either have a Mexican union driver in the cab or pay an extra Mexican driver's salary when taking material to their Mexican plants.

But when attempts are made to impose similar regulations in the United States, chambers of commerce become alarmed over potential loss of trade, Tijerina said.

The twin plants, or maquiladoras, straddle the U.S.-Mexico border where Mexican workers assemble American parts into various products.

Tijerina said allowing Mexican trucks to make deliveries along the border unfairly competes with local truckers because Mexican drivers are paid only about $3 a day. And their trucks aren't subjected to the same rigid safety inspection requirements as U.S. trucks.

Until 18 months ago, Tijerina said, the Mexican trucks weren't even required to have insurance.

Rudy Perez of Central Freight Lines, which has offices in three Rio Grande Valley cities, said that besides safety hazards from bad brakes and improper lighting, the trucks are often overloaded. Perez said the Mexican trucks also do not contribute license fees to help repair damages to local roadbeds.

Tijerina, who has spent most of his 17-year career along the border, said the Mexicans need to do business in the U.S. worse than Americans need to do business in Mexico. He said the Mexicans would adjust to regulatory changes much like they do to bridge toll and fee increases, which also are usually opposed by border town chambers of commerce.

Tijerina said when bridge tolls are increased or users' fees imposed, traffic falls off up to 30 percent for about a week. After that, it inches back to normal, he said.

Woman who interrupted 'Platoon' jailed in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — A woman who interrupted a showing of the movie "Platoon" by yelling about the Vietnam War and spraying three people with Mace was held Sunday for investigation of assault, police said.

The crowd of 1,400 patrons at the Northpark Theater dove for cover Saturday when someone cried out the woman had a gun. The weapon turned out to be the Mace can, police said.

Lilia Charters, 32, was held at Lew Sterrett Justice Center in lieu of $1,500 bond for investigation of aggravated assault, jail spokeswoman Gidget Neroes said Sunday night.

Billy Charters, 50, who was accused of trying to prevent officers from arresting his wife, was fined $213 for disorderly conduct, Neroes said.

Two theater security guards and a man seated near Mrs. Charters were hit by the chemical irritant, police said. No one was seriously injured, authorities said.

"People were running out in a panic," doorman Scott Spenser said. "I was scared to death."

Theater-goers said Mrs. Charters had been shouting throughout the movie, apparently irate at the actions of American soldiers fighting the Viet Cong.

Vic Schubert, who was sitting in the row ahead of Mrs. Charters, quoted her as saying, "'You've got to see how the war started. They're doing this today.'"

Shari Wilson, who also had been sitting in front of Mrs. Charters, said she heard her shout, "'If anyone tries to take me out, I'm armed.'"

After Mrs. Charters was subdued, about half of the crowd returned to their seats and the movie resumed 20 minutes later. Others accepted rainchecks offered by the theater.

STATE IN BRIEF

Man takes bus without leaving driving to firm

DALLAS (AP) — A Tennessee man was behind bars today because he heeded only part of the message of an old television commercial for Greyhound buses.

He took the bus, but he didn't leave the driving to Greyhound. He drove the bus himself, after swiping it from a Louisiana station, authorities allege.

Allen Dean Grant, 19, of Memphis, was arrested in connection with the theft of a 47-passenger Greyhound bus that was driven 482 miles from Baton Rouge, La., to Dallas.

At the end of his journey, Grant allegedly pulled up to the Greyhound bus terminal in downtown Dallas and told employees, "Fill 'er up."

"He had a lot of nerve," said George Shawyer, assistant terminal manager in Dallas.

Grant was being held in lieu of $2,500 bond.

Woman victimized twice

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi woman recovered more stolen property than she set out to recover, but it wasn't easy.

Police said the woman called Sunday to report that she had found a stereo tape player and headphones that had been stolen last week at a local shoeshine parlor that doubles as a pawn shop.

The woman rode her bicycle to the shop to meet a police investigator so she could recover the stolen property.

After recovering the property, she and Police Sgt. Homero Guerrero were leaving when the woman saw a man riding away on her bicycle which had been parked outside.

"That guy just stole my bike," Guerrero quoted the woman as saying.

Guerrero chased the suspected bike thief for several blocks until the man crashed the bicycle into an empty lot.

A 38-year-old man was wrestled to the ground and was being held today. Charges were pending, Guerrero said.

Houston seeks uniform law

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston city officials are considering pushing a bill in the Legislature to block private security companies from using uniforms that look like the blue uniforms worn by Houston police officers.

"There is a proliferation of uniforms out there similar to ours," Assistant Police Chief John Bales says. "The public needs to know who the police are and who the police aren't."

The specifics of the bill still need to be ironed out, but Bales said it would stipulate that non-police uniforms be easily recognized by an average person.

The 5,000 private security companies in the state are regulated by the Texas Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies. Current rules require guards who carry guns must wear a uniform with a shoulder patch emblazoned with the name of their company and that the word "security" be displayed.

Austin lawmaker honored

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, has been chair of the Assembly on the Legislature of the National Conference of State Legislatures for a term extending through November.

"Serving in the leadership of the AOL will provide me with a greater opportunity to discuss state issues with state legislators and legislative staff from throughout the country," Ms. Delco said.
