Baby deaths

TOKYO — A 38-year-old mother charged with killing her eight babies said she turned against the newborns because she thought they would be too difficult to raise, police in northern Japan said Tuesday. The tiny bodies, wrapped in vinyl bags or other coverings, were recovered near and under the home of Kazuko Hatayama in Honjo, about 280 miles north of Tokyo, police said. A police official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Mrs. Hatayama told investigators she killed the babies immediately after they were born, beginning around 1982. She and her husband have three living children. The official said Mrs. Hatayama told police she was given money by her husband during each pregnancy for an abortion, but instead bought clothes for her children. Her 44-year-old husband told police he did not know the babies were born because he thought his wife had abortions.

FBI reprimand

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department reprimanded FBI Director William S. Sessions for "taking advantage of the government" to finance extensive travel and ordered him to reimburse the Treasury, according to documents released Tuesday. Before he left office last week, former Attorney General William P. Barr reproached Sessions for repeatedly using FBI aircraft for personal trips and justifying billing the government by arranging to attend functions of "trivial, if any, value to the government."/2D

School plan

AUSTIN — Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, introduced a constitutional amendment and a companion bill on Tuesday to legalize the current school finance system that shares local property taxes with school districts on a countywide or multi-county basis. Funding for local schools would not change dramatically during the next biennium because they would continue to operate as in 1992 and 1993./1B

Dolly's birthday

SEVIERVILLE, Tenn. — Dolly Parton received birthday wishes Tuesday from Bob Hope, Chet Atkins, James Woods and Eddie Rabbitt among others. Parton celebrated her 47th birthday and WSEV-WDLY, the radio station she partly owns, solicited birthday wishes from celebrities who called the station throughout the day. "James Woods said she's the best kisser in the world," said Gary Voss, general manager at the station. Woods and Parton co-starred in the recent movie "Straight Talk."

Winter storm blankets basin

Today's forecast calls for temperature to reach 50s

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

Nasty weather and a winter storm advisory greeted the Permian Basin Tuesday as an Artic cold front kept skies drizzly and temperatures in the 30s.

Nearly an inch of rain fell in the area after an moist upper level system stalled 100 miles west of the Permian Basin, according to the National Weather Service in Midland. Coupled with the cold front, which reached the area about 3 a.m., temperatures dropped and road conditions became hazardous.

The high for Tuesday only reached 38.

Although no major accidents were reported in Midland or Odessa, several fender benders were reported, including at least two that involved five cars on Highway 191, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety in Midland.

Schools were open Tuesday and students shouldn't get their hopes up today as the rain was predicted to end this morning, with skies becoming sunny by noon and a high reaching into the upper 50s.

The winter weather did not affect flights in or out of Midland International Airport.

The Midland-Odessa area fared better than the Panhandle where as much as 5 inches of snow fell and ½-inch of ice covered the area from Canyon to Childress as the storms moved through.

A winter storm warning was in effect through the night for the Panhandle, South Plains and northwest North Texas.

Sleet, snow and dense fog made roads slick in Lubbock, where police worked about 15 traffic accidents by 2 p.m., a spokeswoman said.

Airports in Lubbock and Amarillo reported several flights delayed and canceled — some hindered by bad weather in Dallas.

Schools in Hereford and Canyon were closed.

Passing the torch

Bush spends last night at White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — As darkness fell on a capital awaiting his leave-taking, President Bush exhorted the nation Tuesday to "faith, courage, hard work and inspiration."

Bush, unwilling to intrude on Bill Clinton's limelight, made no speeches on his final day in the White House and stayed out of the public eye.

He bade farewell to groundskeepers and bodyguards and summoned the Rev. Billy Graham to share his final night in the executive mansion.

And he sent Congress his last National Security Strategy Report that sounded a valedictory note.

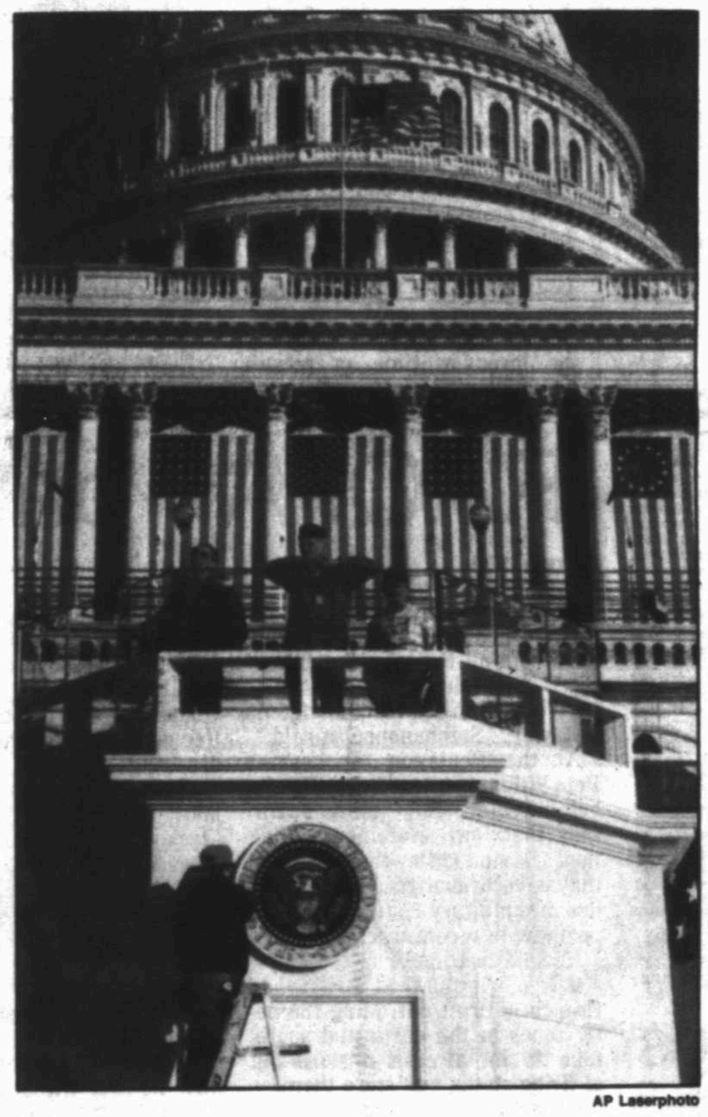

"America must lead," he said in a written statement. "We cannot be strong at home if we are not strong and engaged abroad."

"To succeed, our strategy must be more than words on a piece of paper," said Bush. "We must have faith, courage, hard work and inspiration. ... As a nation, let us work together to lead the world toward the 21st century, the Age of Democratic Peace."

He and Barbara Bush sat for a television interview on what it was like living in the 200-year-old executive mansion. But it was for a National Geographic special that won't be aired until 1994.

The White House provided a last peek at Bush's personal wealth, publishing a financial disclosure statement that showed

Clinton hopes he'll 'make a difference'

WASHINGTON — On the brink of his presidency, Bill Clinton pledged Tuesday to inject a spirit of innovation in government and said, "I desperately want to make a difference." A mood of excitement and high expectations filled the capital.

Half his Cabinet received preliminary approval, and Clinton filled out his State Department team to confront a rash of global crises, in Iraq, Somalia and Bosnia.

Asking the prayers and support of friends and foes alike, Clinton said, "I face daunting challenges too great for any person's mind to comprehend or wisdom to judge or strength to meet alone."

More U.S. ships sail for Mideast

■ Iraqis will stop firing at allied planes, Saddam says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Fresh air battles erupted over northern Iraq on Tuesday and additional U.S. warships sailed to the region as the Bush administration prepared to hand its troubled relationship with Iraq to President-elect Clinton.

As George Bush's presidency moved into its final hours, his spokesman said the White House wanted to see action backing up the Iraqi offer to cease firing at allied planes in its "no-fly zones." The incoming Clinton administration, too, said it wanted more than words.

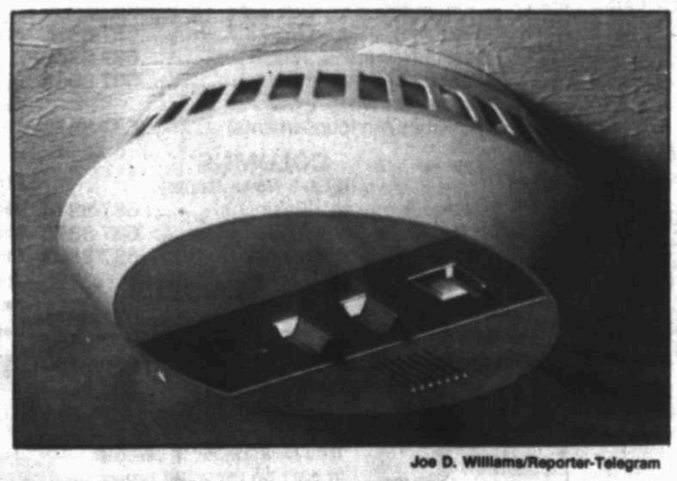

Iraq's ruling Revolutionary Command Council — headed by Saddam Hussein — said there would be no attacks on U.S., French or British planes in a gesture of good will starting at midnight on Clinton's Inauguration Day.

The move came after Iraq asked Clinton to abandon the allied air raid campaign, asserting that continued attacks would not force cooperation by Baghdad.

"There is a cease-fire regimen in place in U.N. Resolution 687, and if Iraq complies with that, then there should be no problem," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

George Stephanopoulos, Clinton communications director, said Iraq's offer did nothing to Smoke alarms are the "cheapest protection a person can get," Fire Marshall Jerry Petree said.

Petree: Smoke alarms help reduce fire-related deaths

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Fire Marshall Jerry Petree said Tuesday the fire department has not determined the cause of the blaze Monday that killed two young boys nor whether the deaths could have been prevented by a smoke alarm.

"The home was burnt so bad that it's not known if they had a smoke detector," he said. "But certainly one would have helped."

House fires last year accounted for about 4,500 deaths in the United States compared to as many as 12,000 deaths 10 years ago. Petree attributes the decline to the widespread use of smoke alarms.

Battery-operated smoke detectors can be purchased at local discount, hardware and other stores and easily installed in the home. Popular models at Wal-Mart include First Alert — which costs between $10 and $18 — and Family Guard — which sells for as little as $7. Kmart

BRIEFLY ...

- Fire officials recommend that smoke detectors be placed on ceilings near bedrooms, away from ventilation and at least one foot from the wall.
- Batteries should be replaced annually, preferably at the same time each year, such as on daylight savings days.
- Popular models – including First Alert and Family Guard – range in price from $7-18.
- Two-story homes should have detectors on each floor.
- Heat detectors are preferable for dusty places like attics.

WEATHER SUMMARY

STORM: High to hit 50s

(From 1A)

Near Abilene, the Department of Public Safety reported heavy glazing of roadways and powerlines from Sweetwater to Aspermont. Ice ½-inch thick accumulated at Abilene Regional Airport.

Moderate weather will return to the Midland-Odessa area today as the cloudiness decreases and skies become sunny. The high will be in the upper 50s and winds will be southwest to west at 10-20 mph. Tonight will be clear and cold with a low near 40s, according to NWS.

Thursday will be sunny with a high near 60.

After an overnight low of 31, Tuesday's high reached 38, compared to the record high for that date of 74 set in 1986. The record low was 11 set in 1985.

STATE

Varying extents of rain pelted the state Tuesday, with several areas placed under flash flood and winter storm warnings. Many of the storms are expected to be gone by the middle of the week.

The northern Texas Panhandle faced a winter storm warning until midnight Wednesday and a winter weather advisory threatened the northern Permian Basin and the South Plains much of Tuesday.

Some sleet and snow hit the region while other rain showers were scattered across the area. There also was some dense morning fog across most areas east of the mountains.

A strong storm system from New Mexico moved into West Texas before noon, causing heavy rains, some of which was frozen.

Morning lows were mostly in the 20s and 30s although a few 40s were reported across southern and far western sections.

The wetness was expected to end overnight and Wednesday's highs could reach the 40s and 50s for much of the area.

A late-morning cold front between Corpus Christi and Brownsville was dividing temperatures from the 40s and 50s to the north and the 70s in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

The forecast calls for the cold front to become stationary with widespread showers and thunderstorms to the north and scattered showers south of the front.

However, the rain is expected to stop by Wednesday night.

Highs will be in the 40s and 50s in the northern sections and lower 80s in the Valley.

North Texas also got pounded, with continual rain, low clouds and fog. Some freezing rain was seen and a winter weather advisory was posted for the northwestern sections through Tuesday night.

Rain or freezing rain should end in the west by Wednesday with a good chance of rain and a few thunderstorms elsewhere.

Lows were to be in the lower 30s northwest to the upper 40s southeast, with highs expected to be between 45 to 56.

NATION

Snow fell on the mountains of the West on Tuesday and rain, snow and ice were scattered across the Plains, with rain blowing into the South.

At midday, snow extended over much of the Rockies and at higher elevations of the Pacific Northwest. Rain fell at lower elevations of the Northwest and the central Pacific Coast.

Winter storm watches were in effect for Wednesday for the Cascades and Siskiyous in Oregon, northeastern California and the mountains of Idaho, the National Weather Service said.

The next storm for the northern Pacific Coast was expected today, with strong wind and higher temperatures. Temperatures reaching the 40s over the lower Columbia Basin in Oregon was expected to cause rapid melting of snow and local flooding.

The wet weather system that gave the Southwest its latest deluge moved into the southern and central Plains. Damages from 13 days of rain were estimated Tuesday at $164 million in southern California, Arizona and northwestern Mexico.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

First U.S. troops leave Somalia

By George Esper
Associated Press writer

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The first American combat troops flew home from Somalia on Tuesday with excitement, relief and a feeling that they brought some stability to this far-off ravaged land.

The chief U.S. military spokesman, Marine Col. Fred Peck, said he did not know when more of the 24,715 American troops would be withdrawn.

The United States has been stymied in its efforts to transfer military control of Somalia to a U.N. command because the Security Council has not yet acted on a required resolution. The top U.N. envoy to Somalia, Ismat Kittani of Iraq, indicated Monday that the U.S. deadline of Feb. 1 would not likely be met.

The 556 Marines who left for Camp Pendleton, Calif., were jubilant as they departed, many of them cheering loudly, happy to be out of harm's way and the heat, disease and dust of Somalia. More than 500 troops were scheduled to leave today, reducing Marine strength to less than 9,000.

Another spokesman, Army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter, told the daily briefing that U.S. strength had probably reached its peak in numbers, but about 430 support troops, mostly from the Army, will be arriving as part of the logistics task force. The United States reportedly will provide logistics support to the U.N. command once it is set up.

The Marines are providing security for aid workers trying to break through the famine, disease, lawlessness and civil war that have taken 350,000 Somali lives in the past year.

"I'm excited to be leaving Somalia," said 1st Lt. Anne Christenson, 25, of Vancouver, Wash., looking forward to a reunion with her husband, who is in the Navy. "It's a pretty hard place to be living in, the heat, the dirt, being shot at. I've only been here for five weeks. It seems like a year, though."

Christenson, an intelligence officer who tracked Somali gangs and bandits, said Mogadishu is much more secure than when the first Marines arrived Dec. 9.

"Some of the schools have started up again," she said. "Some of the police forces have started taking control of the city. They're trying to take the city back from the gangs and bandits."

"I'm feeling real good now," said Lance Cpl. Brandon Stevens, 21, of Blue Earth, Minn. "I think we did them a lot of good. We helped them out a lot, got the food to the places where it needed to be."

"We've accomplished so much here," said Lt. Col. Jim Walsh, 46, of San Francisco, commander of the 3rd Battalion, 9th Marine Regiment, the first combat unit to leave.

"When we arrived this country was on its back, and since we've been here we've gotten it back up on its feet," Walsh said. "It's a real pleasure to see all the food flowing in, kids going back to school, the towns fairly stable again. The elders in the towns are starting to form a government again on their own."

Even as the battalion was leaving, other Marines providing security for relief workers in the countryside came under sniper fire but there were no casualties. Two Somalis were captured and turned over to local authorities.

Since American forces arrived in Somalia, one Marine has been killed and one Marine and one Navy corpsman wounded.

As the first American troops departed, representatives of Mogadishu's two major warlords, Ali Mahdi Mohamed and Mohamed Farrah Aidid, tore down the barricades along the capital's embattled Green Line in a symbolic gesture of reconciliation.

The two warlords were among the leaders of 14 factions who signed a cease-fire last week in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

The representatives, escorted by American Marines and Italian paratroopers, drove along the shell-shattered and bullet-pocked Green Line removing the barricades, often little more than small piles of stone, that marked the line dividing the two halves of the capital.

sooner would not be feasible.

"This issue has been under advisement for some time," Daniel said. "We want very much to have competitive athletics for women at Midland College."

Daniel said after weeks of discussion with individual board members, there was no opposition to the new sport. Giving what he called an "educated guess," and citing certain factors that could effect the overall expense, Daniel said he expected the sport to cost the college in the area of $75,000 a year.

Daniel said "some months will pass" before a new coach is in place. The president said he would wait until the outcome of discussions with athletic director Delnor Poss and Raymond Yell, assistant to the president, before suggesting that a coach could be in place as soon as the beginning of the fall 1993 semester. Daniel did say, though, that the new coach would "certainly be hired in time to recruit effectively."

"I think there'll be a tremendous amount of interest," Daniel said. "And I refer to Howard College and Odessa College where they have successful programs.

"And at the high school level, the programs here are very much improving and interest is growing."

With women's basketball coming to MC, New Mexico Military Institute in Roswell, with an enrollment that is approximately 80 percent male, is now the only Western Junior College Athletic Conference school that does not offer women's basketball. Western Texas, in Snyder, dropped men's basketball after the completion of the 1991-'92 season, but continues to support a women's program.

The WJCAC, effective with the '94 season, will be a seven-team league with teams from MC, OC, Howard, WTC, South Plains College in Levelland, New Mexico Junior College in Hobbs and Frank Phillips College in Borger.

If conducted in the same manner as other conference schools that have both the men's and women's sports, women's games at Chapparal Center would begin at 6 p.m., and the men would follow at approximately 8 p.m.

The school will not take on the burden of building additional on-campus housing for the women athletes, instead choosing to house them in the existing athletic dormitories or at any number of off-campus apartment complexes near the school.

Women's basketball, Daniel said, was the most feasible of any women's sports offered on junior college campuses.

Although no formal talks were held, Daniel said he had looked in to the possibility of women's softball and volleyball, as well.

"The other sports don't justify the competition and travel," Daniel told the trustees. "Softball would take some years, and volleyball, while popular in other parts of the country, hasn't penetrated this area yet. There's not the evidence I had hoped might be there in volleyball and softball. Those are some time off.

"With women's basketball, there's no problem in scheduling conference teams and other teams in this part of the world.

"In terms of our abilities, in my best judgment, basketball is it."

Daniel said MC, which has been without a women's sport since the board voted to disband the men's and women's tennis programs last spring, has not been under any active pressure to meet Title IX requirements, which state a college must offer women's sports if it offers men's sports.

"There's no question we must show equality in opportunities for our students," Daniel said. "We know about Title IX, but we haven't been pressured.

"The board is going on record as saying we believe in opportunities for women and men even in this time of fiscal constraint."

IRAQ: Air battles are continuing change the fact that the new administration expects "full compliance with all the requirements of the U.N. resolutions."

(From 1A)

"We need to see Iraq change its behavior," Stephanopoulos said.

At the Pentagon, spokesman Pete Williams termed the offer "a helpful sign." But "more important than any statement is action," he said, citing the two issues that have drawn Iraq and the allies into military confrontation repeatedly in recent weeks.

He said Iraq must:

■ Stop firing on U.S., British and French aircraft patrolling the no-fly zones in the north and south, take its anti-aircraft missiles out of firing status and store them.

■ Agree to the weapons inspections demanded by the United Nations.

The United Nations on Tuesday night accepted an Iraqi offer to allow weapons inspections to resume without conditions. The flights have been delayed for two weeks because of several Iraqi conditions, including a demand, later dropped, that the inspectors use only Iraqi planes.

Both Williams and Fitzwater denied the Bush administration would steer clear of force against the Iraqi military if provoked in the final hours before Clinton is sworn in at 11 a.m. CST today.

"We continue to watch Iraq's behavior. We certainly would not hesitate to respond if necessary," said Fitzwater.

Tuesday was the third consecutive day of skirmishes over northern Iraq.

About 1:30 a.m. CST, Iraqi missile and radar installations "locked on" a U.S. F-4G "Wild Weasel," which fired a anti-radar HARM missile at the site, located some 14 miles east of the city of Mosul, Williams said.

"We're not certain of the results," he said.

About an hour later, a U.S. Air Force F-16 drew Iraqi anti-aircraft artillery fire, but did not return the fire, Williams said.

In a third incident at 4:30 a.m. CST at a different location, two F-16s were fired on by Iraqi anti-aircraft artillery. They dropped four cluster bombs at the Iraqi weaponry, but Pentagon officials "don't know the results," Williams said.

He also denied any cracks had developed among the allies, saying "they remain united" on the two critical points: Saddam must comply with U.N. resolutions and Iraq must not interfere with allied flights in the no-fly zones.

Williams said that Iraqi jets are continuing to fly just across the 36th parallel that forms the southern border of the northern no-fly zone in an attempt to lure allied aircraft into air defense traps.

"This is sticking a toe over the line," he said, indicating that the Iraqi flights are designed only to draw allied planes close enough to surface-to-air missile batteries to try to shoot them down.

At the White House, Fitzwater called Tuesday's skirmishes over northern Iraq "a defensive attack."

Meanwhile, the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy and several other warships were moving into the eastern Mediterranean, said a senior defense official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Accompanying the Kennedy and its complement of 85 warplanes were two Aegis-class cruisers, the USS Leyte Gulf and USS Gettysburg, both of which are capable of firing Tomahawk cruise missiles, the official said.

The guided missile cruiser USS Belknap — the command ship of U.S. Sixth Fleet commander Vice Adm. T. Joseph Lopez — left a Portugal port call to enter the Mediterranean, the official added.

The officials who disclosed the ship movements said the additional Navy firepower was a triggered by the escalation of hostilities in Iraq in recent days.

Tuesday's action came one day after a coordinated allied attack on Iraq's southern defense network.

Also on Monday, American and British planes reported being fired on by anti-aircraft artillery or targeted by air defense radars in the northern zone patrolled by U.S. and allied aircraft.

On Sunday, Navy ships hit a nuclear weapons-related industrial plant eight miles southeast of Baghdad with 37 Tomahawk cruise missiles, a strike senior U.S. military officers said destroyed or damaged seven buildings at the site.

In other developments Tuesday, Saddam's spokesman urged Clinton in an open letter to stop allied raids and adopt a more conciliatory approach to Iraq. He said his nation "is not an enemy of America and does not want to be."

■ U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali asked the Security Council to send 3,650 armed peacekeepers to reinforce 353 observers monitoring the demilitarized zone along the Iraq-Kuwait border.

■ In Rome, the Vatican said it would press for talks at the request of Iraq.

FIRE: Smoke alarms serve as early warnings

(From 1A)

also sells the First Alert model. Most models have a five-year warranty and require a single nine-volt battery.

"When a battery gets weak, the detector will beep for up to 10 days to let the owner know it should be replaced," Petree said.

People in the market for a smoke detector should make sure the device is stamped UL approved or Factory Mutual approved.

"The brand or price doesn't matter as long as it has an Underwriters Laboratories sticker on there," Petree said. "And it's worth it. It's the cheapest protection a person can get."

Several years ago the Midland Fire Department obtained funding through Community Development Block Grant money to purchase 3,000 smoke detectors for needy families.

"It took several months to put them in the homes but we feel it has been worth it," he said. "Since that time we have been called to fires in homes where we installed alarms and the people got out all right. We can't say whether they would have got up and out anyway but you never know."

Smoke alarms should be placed initially in hallways leading to bedrooms and in each bedroom if desired.

"The main benefit of detectors is to serve as an early warning device to wake people up when asleep," he said. "And I would suggest smoke detectors rather than heat detectors — at least in the homes."

Smoke detectors should be installed on the ceiling away from ventilators and at least one foot away from the wall to avoid air pockets, Petree said. If the alarm has to be placed on a wall they should be at least eight to 12 inches from the ceiling.

"More deaths from fire in the home occur between midnight and 6 a.m.," he said. "In a two-story house, there should be one placed at the top of the stairs."

"And don't put them in the kitchen. They will be set off from cooking all the time and that's a hassle," he said.

Fire extinguishers are also recommended for insurance purposes, said Midland Fire Department Inspector Patrick Repman.

"Some insurance companies will give you a break for having extinguishers if there is a fire," he said. "Depending on the house I suggest a 2½ pound to five pound size."

Since smoke detectors can malfunction in dusty areas, heat detectors are recommended for attics and garages.

Apartment complexes are required by federal law to install detectors in each dwelling. Hotels and motels must place a detector in every room.

There are no specific laws regulating smoke detectors in single-family homes.

Parliament cancels ban on PLO meetings

JERUSALEM (AP) — Lawmakers on Tuesday abolished a 7-year-old law barring Israelis from meeting with PLO members, raising hopes that Arabs may agree to resume Middle East peace talks.

The vote was 39-20 in the 120-member parliament. The reason for the low turnout was not immediately clear.

The decision could give a boost to Israel's negotiations with Palestinians and Arab neighbors. The Palestinians have vowed to boycott the talks until Israel allows the repatriation of more than 400 alleged Muslim extremists expelled last month.

Israel had considered the Palestine Liberation Organization a terrorist group and barred any contacts by Israelis. Recently, some officials have urged dropping the ban to counter the rising influence of Muslim fundamentalists.

Israeli liberals also have said that open direct negotiations with the PLO could strengthen Palestinian moderates who support Middle East peace talks.

The PLO holds considerable influence over the Palestinian delegation to the talks, which also include Jordan, Lebanon and Syria.

A statement from PLO spokesman Bassam Abu-Sharif in Tunisia said "the move will pave the way to set up an independent Palestinian state living side by side will Israel."

He also appealed for a summit between PLO chief Yasser Arafat and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who opposed lifting the ban.

But a recent survey showed nearly half of Israeli legislators favor direct negotiations with the PLO, including two-thirds of the lawmakers from Rabin's Labor Party.

Rabin staunchly opposed the idea, arguing that such contacts would force Israel to deal immediately with Palestinian demands for establishing an independent state in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Government officials have acknowledged Israel is already indirectly negotiating with the PLO.

Tuesday's vote annulled a 1986 amendment to Israel's anti-terror law which barred Israelis from meeting with members of terror organizations.

Violators faced up to three years in prison, and several Israelis have served time for the offense. Among them was peace activist Abie Nathan, who was imprisoned for more than a year for meeting repeatedly with Arafat.

Several Israeli legislators also have met with Arafat and other PLO officials, but were protected from prosecution by their parliamentary immunity.

Earlier Tuesday, a special U.N. envoy arrived in Israel in his second attempt to win concessions on the 415 Palestinians deported to south Lebanon.

"I have come to make one more final attempt," said the envoy, Chinmaya Gharekhan after his arrival.

The U.N. Security Council has demanded the Palestinians be repatriated, and U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has hinted he would push for sanctions if Israel didn't show flexibility.

Israel expelled the alleged Muslim extremists on Dec. 17, arguing they endangered Israeli security and the peace talks. The expulsions came after Muslim militants killed six Israeli troopers in a 10-day period.

Gharekhan's visit coincides with Supreme Court hearings on the legality of the deportations. The high court was to reconvene Wednesday.

Americans offer advice to 42nd president

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — "Keep your promises."

Asked to offer one bit of advice to Bill Clinton the day before he becomes president, Americans repeatedly urged that he be true to his campaign rhetoric. Also: Keep smiling, and "wear nicer ties."

At a McDonald's in Wausau, Wis., Kathy Smith was having breakfast with her 5-year-old daughter. She voted for Clinton and said she hopes now that he will "be a man of his word. That's why people voted for him, for the things he was promising."

"Please, don't become a typical politician," added Mattie Mixen of Lawrenceville, Ga.

In other cases, the advice of people questioned by The Associated Press was a bit more personal.

"Wear nicer ties," urged Leila Lugo, a clerk in a men's clothing store in Dallas. "Not something wild, but better than what he's been wearing."

"Keep that natural smile," said Melba Mauldin, a florist in Ardmore, Okla. "Don't let the presidency get to him and make him old and sour."

"Stop talking about jogging and McDonald's and gala hoopla and start talking about the issues," said Kelly Treadway, a 25-year-old retail manager in Pierre, S.D. Treadway said she hopes Clinton will seek outgoing President Bush's advice.

"Take his daughter out of that private school," urged Andre Williams, a 17-year-old from Detroit.

"He needs to listen to Hillary," said Deun Shonowo, a clothing designer in Little Rock, Ark. A very different view of the next first lady came from JoAnn Holbert of Harrisburg, Pa.: "Speak more and shut Hillary up."

Much of what Americans wanted to say to their new president was predictable. Farmers want better prices for their crops; the poor want more attention and so do the operators of small businesses. Most people want their taxes to go down rather than up.

Pay more attention "right here at home," said Arnold Jones, 33, a supervisor at City Union Mission in Kansas City, Mo. But many people also echoed Dwaine Hibbs of Boise, Idaho, who urged Clinton, "Don't let that guy (Saddam Hussein) push us around."

"Kick Saddam out," said William Curtis, 51, of Elizabeth, N.J. "Don't stop until he doesn't exist anymore."

On the other hand, Percy McClain of Detroit said, "I don't think he should follow the foreign policy of the current administration, going around the world blowing up folks."

"Help the farmers," said Mae Justice, who operates a dairy farm with her husband Robert in Buncombe County, N.C. "Get some expertise on what the farmers need," said Andrew Brevig of Herman, Minn.

"My advice would be to steady the course, not do anything in haste," said Ben Carson, 59, of Columbus, Ohio. But others urged Clinton to move quickly, especially on the deficit. "Show the American people that he's serious about the problem," said Judy Decker, of Toledo, Ohio.

Tom Galbraith, a graduate student at North Dakota State, has partisan concern for the first Democratic president in 12 years. "Don't screw up," he said "because we'll never get another Democrat in there if you do."

"Counter the impression that is building up that he is not the comprehensive president that he claims to be," said Prof. Marcus Smith of Loyola University in New Orleans.

Dianne Zucker, who works at the YWCA in Hartford, Conn., offered as her advice the title of the Fleetwood Mac song that became the theme of the Clinton campaign: "Don't stop thinking about tomorrow."

For a different view, hear John Cook, a 33-year-old television producer from Orlando, Fla.:

"Lose the Fleetwood Mac song. I'm tired of it."

HOPES: Clinton wants to bring 'spirit of innovation' its feet.

Music blared and champagne corks popped throughout Washington at parties given by animal rights activists, gay and lesbian advocates and the homeless as well as the high and the mighty. Police reported an enormous traffic snarl downtown as rush hour coincided with the cordoning off of streets to make way for motorcades.

At 11 a.m. CST today, before an audience of hundreds of thousands of people, Clinton will recite a 35-word oath and become America's 42nd president. Fifteen minutes earlier, Vice President-elect Al Gore will be sworn in. Both men will begin the day worshipping at the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church, a prominent black church.

Clinton's last day as a private citizen was filled with celebration and reflection, last-minute preparations and final rehearsals. He spent several hours polishing his inaugural address.

Spokesman George Stephanopoulos said the speech would run about 20 minutes and sketch broad themes rather than specific policies.

After criticism of the slow pace of Clinton's appointments, Stephanopoulos said the incoming president had 110 sub-Cabinet nominees ready to go. He also said Clinton would sign executive orders.

Aides said Clinton would create a national economic council and formalize previously announced standards of ethical conduct. Other orders are expected Friday — the 20th anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark abortion decision — to rescind Bush administration restrictions on abortion counseling at federal clinics and lift the ban on fetal tissue research.

Thousands of people paid between $100 and $1,000 for tickets to a presidential gala featuring such stars as Elton John, Barbara Streisand, Aretha Franklin, Chuck Berry, Judy Collins and the Alvin Ailey Dance Troupe. The rock group Fleetwood Mac reunited for the performance.

Sidewalk vendors did a brisk business selling souvenir buttons, shirts, plates and cups. Inaugural stores had waiting lines of customers.

Clinton began his day by paying solemn tribute at the graves of the two slain Kennedys. He placed a white rose at each burial site and bowed his head in silent prayer. About 20 members of the Kennedy clan joined him.

President Bush, meanwhile, held a farewell lunch with Vice President Dan Quayle and said goodbyes to his aides. Bush invited Rev. Billy Graham, who will deliver the invocation and benediction at Clinton's inauguration, for dinner and a night at the White House.

White House walls once filled with pictures of Bush stood bare, spruced up with a fresh coat of paint. Workmen toiled outside to touch up the inaugural parade stand.

At the Capitol, stand-ins for Clinton and Vice President-elect Al Gore, with white name tags draped from their necks, went through the motions of today's ceremony at the west front of the Capitol as photographers and broadcasters checked camera angles. Chief Justice William Rehnquist inspected the stand where he'll swear in Clinton at the stroke of noon.

Clinton invited past and present governors to lunch, and he spoke to them about his vision of the presidency.

"My goal as president will be to bring to this city a new spirit of innovation," Clinton said. He quoted Franklin D. Roosevelt, another former governor who became president in a time of economic trouble: "We ought to be about bold experimentation."

Reciting a long list of objectives, he said he wanted to fix the economy, create jobs, reduce the huge federal debt, control health care costs, improve schools and "reinvent our national government." He promised to eliminate unnecessary bureaucracy and work for campaign finance and lobbying controls.

"I did not run for this job just to warm the seat," Clinton said. "I desperately want to make a difference."

He said the government must find a way to experiment, to embrace what works and reject what does not. "It doesn't work that way in government," he complained. "We have to find a way to make the exception the rule."

LAST: Bush's mood is 'good,' Fitzwater says

(From 1A)

he accepted more than $52,000 worth of gifts in the past eight months.

His final day was clouded — but not consumed — by the standoff with Iraq.

There were skirmishes overnight in Iraq's northern no-fly zone. Baghdad later announced it would stop firing at allied planes as a goodwill gesture towards the new American president.

Bush's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, suggested Iraq just live by the United Nation's original cease-fire resolution.

This was a day when White House deputies were worrying not about affairs of state, but getting their desks cleaned out on time.

"His mood is very good," the spokesman said of the president, who gave his press secretary a parting gift of nine blue caps from the Florida Marlins, the new Miami baseball team.

Fitzwater distributed them to his own disbanding team, the press office staff.

Bush got his daily intelligence briefing from CIA Director Robert Gates, as well as a national security briefing. He signed some paperwork, including a measure providing six months' Secret Service protection for Vice President Dan Quayle.

He posed for pictures in the Rose Garden with the groundskeepers and in the Oval Office with the head of the space agency, and had a final lunch with Quayle.

THE CLINTON PRESIDENCY: DAY ONE

Clinton seeks to inspire with address

By Stewart Powell
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Since he met President John F. Kennedy in 1963, Bill Clinton has fantasized about his own inaugural address as a ringing call to action.

Clinton's speech today may turn out that way but, just as important, it will mark the end of a messy transition period for the incoming 42nd president. Clinton hopes his swearing-in at noon and his inaugural speech will end the controversies over campaign promises that he has fudged, broken or blurred during his rocky 11-week transition to the presidency.

Those promises include pledges to push for a middle class tax cut, complete a 100-day legislative package and reverse the Bush administration's policy of forcibly returning Haitian refugees.

"I think all of us are going to be relieved to have the transition end," Clinton adviser George Stephanopoulos said Friday. "There've been some bumps in the road in the transition but we're looking forward to a great inaugural, an inspiring inaugural and getting ready to work on day one, Jan. 21st."

Clinton's speech will "set out a call to the country" and indicate "the direction of his presidency," Stephanopoulos said. "This (controversy) will all be put behind us very quickly."

Clinton, who has dreamed of the presidency since meeting Kennedy in the Rose Garden as a 17-year-old high school student, is drafting his inaugural address in long hand, writing on yellow legal pads.

His aides said Clinton is drawing inspiration from speeches delivered by presidents from Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln to John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon. He also is telephoning friends and politicians to solicit ideas.

Clinton's aides were unwilling to specify who was contributing drafts to Clinton and they went out of their way to portray their boss as a hands-on executive who writes his own speeches.

"Bill Clinton has been thinking about this speech since he was 15 years old," said Paul Begala, an ex-campaign aide who provided Clinton some ideas. "The notion that any of the rest of us will have much to do with it is not true."

Added Stephanopoulos, who was named White House communications director on Thursday: "I don't think this is something he's going to delegate."

Clinton was crafting his remarks at the Arkansas governor's mansion as household belongings were loaded aboard two moving vans. Aides said their boss, a perennial night owl, was getting most of his writing done in the evening.

"I'm not doing it on a laptop (computer)," Clinton said last week. "I wish I could say that I have mastered that."

Clinton said he was drawing on the centrist Democratic themes that he campaigned on, as well as historical references to enliven a speech that he hoped would be remembered as long as Kennedy's call in 1961 to "ask now what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country."

After reading through a variety of speeches "to sort of get a feel for it," Clinton said his favorite remained the speech Lincoln delivered near the end of the Civil War in 1865. The wartime president told his countrymen shortly before his assassination: "With malice toward none, with charity for all. . . . let us strive to finish the work we are in to bind up the nation's wounds . . ."

That inaugural address "said the most in the least time," said Clinton, calling it "an awesome speech."

Clinton aides say they hope the long-winded chief executive will deliver a short, swift address highlighting the themes of his incoming administration.

"Short and sweet is always the goal," said Lorraine Voles, a transition aide. "The question is how close can we come."

Clinton missed that goal by a mile last July at the Democratic National Convention in Madison Square Garden. He used his time in the limelight by delivering a detail-laden, 54-minute acceptance speech. A week later, no one could recall a memorable expression or thought.

Saying more than necessary has been a life-long habit for Clinton, however. It eroded his standing as the top student in his elementary school, pushing him down to third because of his grade for "citizenship," he recalled for his biography, "The Life and Career of Bill Clinton: The Comeback Kid."

"I could never keep my mouth shut," Clinton said.

Clinton is no newcomer to inaugural speeches. He delivered five as governor of Arkansas. His first, on a bitterly cold day on the steps of the hilltop Arkansas capitol to barely 200 people in 1979, pledged to improve the poorly ranked public education system and pursue economic development to boost per capita income beyond $6,183 — 20 percent behind the national average.

Clinton called for "a new era of achievement and excellence" to give Arkansans "a life that will be the envy of the nation."

Arkansas journalist Stephen Buel said Clinton's inaugural speeches as governor were often long as he tried to "reach out" to friends and foes alike.

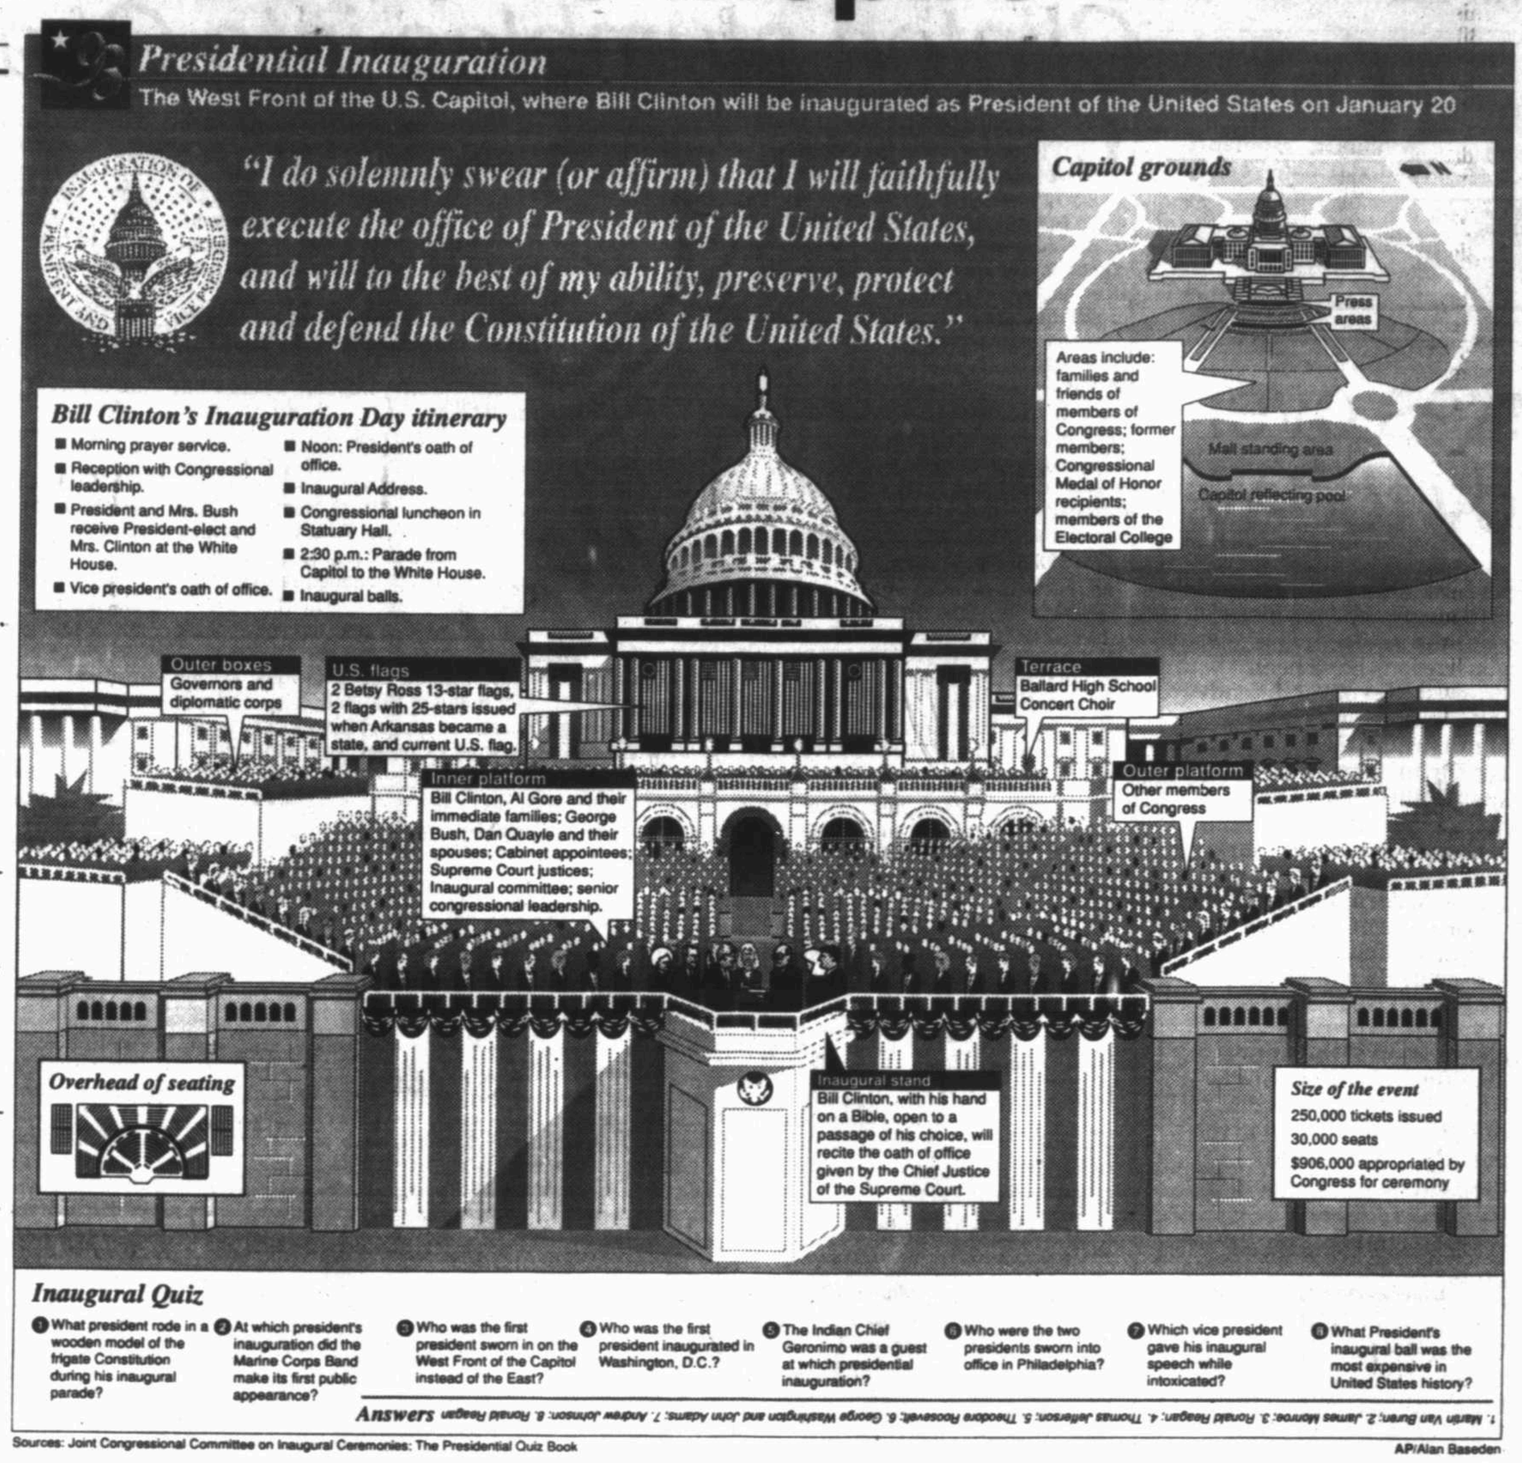

"He's kind of like a sales manager trying to focus attention on the central goal and getting everyone to keep their eyes on the ball," said Buel. "His words are often eloquent when you read them but his delivery isn't necessarily that eloquent."

Aides said they expected the restless, energetic chief executive to tinker with his speech until he steps to the podium on inauguration day.

"This is a very personal statement and I think he's taking that responsibility seriously," Stephanopoulos said.

Clinton planned several dry runs of his delivery, aides said. The president-elect also planned to videotape his delivery and critique it before inauguration day.

"It's just a question of having enough time," Voles said. "It's going to be such a busy week."

INAUGURATION ODDS & ENDS

■ Hispanic gala among abundant events

WASHINGTON — The first-ever Democratic Hispanic Inaugural Gala is among a myriad of unofficial events crowding this week's calendar.

The black-tie gala Tuesday night honored cabinet nominees Henry Cisneros of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and Federico Pena, the transportation secretary-designate, as well as 16 Democratic Hispanic members of Congress.

"This gala is a way of recognizing the impact of our vote in Clinton's election and to send that message to the nation," said Jack Otero, vice chair of the National Democratic Committee for Voter Participation.

Organizations ranging from gay rights activists to MTV are also hosting unofficial inaugural week events.

Invitations to the Environmental Inaugural Ball were printed on recycled paper, of course, and fur coats are not allowed at the Animals Ball, sponsored by People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

■ Conservatives counter with anti-ball

WASHINGTON — It will cost $150 a couple to commiserate with the conservative losers at the Counter Inaugural Ball.

While the Democratic winners are waltzing at the balls, tuxedoed Republicans will gather across the Potomac River in Alexandria, Va. Members of the Counter Inaugural Ball Committee include Rep. Dick Armey, R-Texas, former Education Secretary Bill Bennett, Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and conservative fund-raisers Richard Viguerie and Howard Phillips.

■ Hillary's gown: Violet and lace sheath

NEW YORK — A designer in business for less than two years won the plum assignment of creating Hillary Rodham Clinton's inaugural gown.

Sarah Phillips, 37, was set to fly to Washington Tuesday and present her violet-and-lace creation to the next first lady.

Both designer and dress were a secret until Thursday, when a sketch of the gown appeared on the cover of Women's Wear Daily.

The sketch showed a long sheath in violet leaf-patterned lace with a fitted bodice and long sleeves, finished off with a big overskirt of blue-violet chiffon that opens at the front.

Phillips' spokesman, Andrew Plesser, said Clinton officials had asked her not to comment on the dress. But Friday afternoon, she issued a brief statement saying: "This is the most flattering of assignments any designer could receive, and for someone just starting out, it is truly special."

Texans 'earn' visit to White House

By Lynn Bulmahn
Associated Press writer

WACO — Twenty years ago, Ken and Kay Mueller became involved in George McGovern's presidential campaign.

The Waco couple had some young campaign volunteers stay overnight at their house on Athens Avenue. Because the house was small, one of the workers, a state campaign coordinator named Bill Clinton, ended up sleeping on the floor.

"Even back then, there was something about him that Ken and I knew was special," Kay said. "He had a deep concern for America and for the American people. He was so articulate and so personal."

Through the years, the Muellers kept bumping into their friend Bill. Several times, the couple says, he recalled their former home, mentioning its one wall painted black as an accent for a 1960s psychedelic poster.

Last August at a campaign rally at the Waco Suspension Bridge, he kiddingly invited them to stay overnight at his new house if he moved — and said they could sleep on the floor.

He did invite them to share all the celebrating in Washington this week.

Buddies on and off for two decades, the Muellers say they're ecstatic about Clinton's win. They worked in his campaign, where Ken was McLennan County campaign coordinator and Kay was the local volunteer coordinator.

"We ran the campaign solely out of friendship," Ken said.

The couple — now living in Hewitt, where she teaches sociology at Baylor and he is a Shaklee products distributor — say they had signed up early. Real early.

"When we met Bill in our campaigning 20 years ago, we made the promise, 'When you run for president, we'll campaign for you,'" Ken said.

Ken said Clinton reminded him of that pledge in October 1991, when he called to ask if the Muellers would be local workers in his campaign. He had not yet announced his run for the White House, Ken said.

Support grew locally, and the Muellers say they were pleased that many young people got involved with an enthusiasm reminiscent of the 1960s.

The Muellers ran Clinton's local campaign from Ken's office on Speight Avenue until the Arkansas governor won the Democratic nomination.

Early in the race, when people wrote off Clinton's chances, Ken said he told them they didn't know the candidate — or how hard he would work.

"I told them this guy loves to campaign and he does not stop," Ken said. "He's going to campaign 24 hours a day, whatever it takes."

The couple say the high point of the campaign for them occurred when Clinton, Al Gore and their wives visited Waco.

"Watching the four up there was a tremendous emotional experience," Ken said. "It was so powerful."

Snapshots of the Suspension Bridge rally show the Muellers with the Clintons and the Gores.

"When the Clintons got off the bus, and Bill came over, Kay said, 'You owe us a night in the White House,'" Ken said. "Bill replied, "Yeah, and you can sleep on the floor.'"

Clinton wanted to stop and visit with the Muellers for several minutes — much to the consternation of his security force. "The Secret Service men complained that he's difficult to manage because he likes to meet people," Kay said. "They say it's too hard to guard him."

She said Clinton made efforts to shake everyone's hand. "It's a humbling experience to know someone in that high of a position who wants to stay in touch with the people," she said.

The Muellers say the upcoming inauguration isn't the first celebration they've attended on behalf of the Clintons. They were present at the Little Rock election night party. Kay says she first realized Clinton had won when she saw ABC's Ted Koppel walk in.

The Muellers say they rubbed elbows with all sorts of people — from jet setters to common folk — that night. They have a snapshot album showing Kay with actor Richard Dreyfuss and socialite Bianca Jagger — and, of course, Bill and Hillary Clinton.

What are their impressions of the Clintons? Ken compares the president-elect's old-fashioned campaign rally style to Lyndon Johnson's, and says both men have an unbelievable recollection of names.

"He's a very thoughtful person," Ken said. The Muellers say they've received numerous birthday cards and invitations to Clinton's gubernatorial inaugurations over the years.

The couple say they met Mrs. Clinton more recently, during the campaign, but are equally impressed with her.

Kay credits Hillary's campaign appearances with helping win many votes in McLennan County.

Clinton kicks off big day at Metropolitan AME Church

By Faith Keenan
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — President-elect Bill Clinton will become the first president to attend a historically black church for his Inauguration Day prayer service when he and his family worship at Washington's Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The size of the expected throng of official guests and news reporters means that regular church-goers in the 2,000-member congregation in downtown Washington won't be able to get near the building this morning.

"I'm preparing them for the coming," said the Rev. William DeVeaux, the pastor, in an interview. "I tell them our ministry is wider than ourselves; I tell them that the second principle of love is hospitality. 'I was a stranger and you took me in' is clearly one of the great mandates."

Clinton adviser Vernon Jordan is a member of the church.

Clinton's focus on diversity for his inauguration is reflected not only in the selection of the church, but also in the choice of scripture readings.

One, from Chapter Five of the Gospel of Matthew lists the beatitudes. The meek, the poor in spirit, the merciful, the peacemakers and all the other "blessed" will be remembered.

Another selection that the Clintons approved — from Isaiah, Chapter 58 — seems to put a biblical spin on the president-elect's campaign promises:

"Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens and to let the oppressed go free and that ye break every yoke?"

The Clintons personally selected the readings and the hymns for the service, said Angela Hunter, who is coordinating the church event for the inauguration committee.

At least three choirs will sing arrangements of "America the Beautiful," "This Is My Song, and "Holy, Holy, Holy," and other hymns.

Metropolitan AME was built in 1881 and the original brick structure is now squeezed between glass and concrete office buildings near Washington's business district. The church's founders hid slaves who fled slavery to freedom on the "Underground Railroad."

Known as "The National Cathedral of African Methodism," Metropolitan AME has hosted such notable speakers as the abolitionist leader Frederick Douglass, first lady Eleanor Roosevelt, Vice-President Hubert Humphrey and civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

Clinton takes over presidency today

Bill Clinton is scheduled to take the oath of office at noon today as the 42nd president of the United States of America. When he does, he will assume the most important leadership role in a world beset by regional warfare, ethnic conflicts, and unsettling economic problems.

He'll also be taking the reins of the U.S. government at a time when domestic difficulties are particularly worrisome — unemployment, the mushrooming federal deficit, corruption in government, moral decay in the cities, and an economy only now beginning to show signs of a turnaround.

There's no question that Americans have been looking for new leadership. Although President George Bush was gifted at working the complex personalities on the international stage, domestically he lacked the interest and the foresight to truly address the problems Americans believe are so critical to their well being.

Bill Clinton was elected to provide the vision, the leadership that the United States needs to recover its might economically so that it can provide a vision for the post-Cold War world.

In the 1992 campaign, Clinton was fond of quoting President John F. Kennedy and recalled that president's words in his inaugural address in 1961:

"During the long history of the world, only a few generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility. I welcome it."

Events in Iraq, the former Soviet Union, on the plains of Africa, and the city streets of America will test Clinton during his term. He will be challenged to rise to statesmanship, to provide a clear vision of the future awaiting all Americans. He will be pressed to define this nation's role in the post-Cold War and to map out its relationship with other nations.

For years Clinton has prepared for the office he accepts today — as a Rhodes scholar at Oxford University and as governor of Arkansas. He has the youthfulness and the vigor necessary to tackle the many problems facing the nation and the world. He has shown through his past actions that he is capable of insightful leadership. Of course, he will need the assistance of those in the Congress and the support of all Americans.

Clinton's tasks will not be small nor his burdens light, but the wishes of the American people and many others around the world will be with him as he takes this nation boldly into the future.

Chelsea's schooling is private family decision

Much ado about nothing is being made of the decision by President-elect Bill Clinton and his wife, Hillary, to enroll their daughter, Chelsea, in a private school in Washington, D.C.

Critics claim this is a slap in the face of public school for which the Clintons have expressed support. Some have said the Clinton's choice is a vote of no-confidence in urban education.

In plain English, this criticism is a bunch of hogwash! Because of security problems alone the decision by a president to have their child or children attend private school is justified.

In addition, this is a private decision and many people in our country seem to forget that our elected officials are still entitled to some privacy without having their personal decisions second guessed.

Let's save our remarks about Clinton on how he performs as president.

Separate education tracks appear to be out of date

For decades, America's high schools have encouraged students who are preparing for college to take calculus, chemistry and other advanced math and science courses, while those on the vocational track are taught auto repairs and woodworking.

This approach is out of date for the emerging workplace. A high school graduate seeking a well-paying job with good career potential needs technical skills and knowledge to use computers, robots and other technologies of an information-based economy. Knowing how to operate a drill press is inadequate. The new employee must be firmly grounded in math, science and a range of analytic and problem-solving skills.

Our schools need to start preparing graduates for the emerging workplace. All high school students, not only those going on to college, must be required to do well in math and science. Vocational tracks should include geometry, trigonometry, physics and other science courses. In fact, it may be time to get rid of these separate tracks.

Clinton stumbles into Oval Office

LOS ANGELES — One week before taking power, Bill Clinton made his first foreign-policy blunder, weakening U.S. policy toward Saddam Hussein. He then made it worse by claiming falsely to have been misinterpreted when the record plainly showed the opposite. That is a sure-fire way to create a credibility gap.

Safire

Bush policy toward Iraq has been clearly stated a hundred times: Only if you get rid of your bloody-handed dictator will we begin diplomatic discourse. The purpose of worldwide sanctions is to induce the overthrow of Saddam's genocidal regime.

Last week, in an interview with New York Times reporters, Clinton temporarily broke with that policy. No slip of the lip; on five separate occasions, the Clinton reversal of the Bush policy was articulated.

"(1) I wouldn't rule out reviewing our options. . . . (2) If you want a different relationship with me . . . change your behavior. . . . (3) My job is not to pick their rulers for them. . . . If he wants a different relationship with the U.S. and the U.N., all he has to do is change his behavior. (4) The issue here is not personalities. . . . (5) All I can do is deal with what I can see, and that is his conduct."

Five times did Clinton offer Saddam the chance to let bygones be bygones, if only he would behave himself in the future. Mass murder was forgiven: "I'm a Baptist; I believe in deathbed conversions."

This dismaying display of calculated weakness, imputing "obsession" to his predecessor for wanting to punish Saddam, was accurately reported as a call for a "fresh start" by Tom Friedman of The New York Times. Friedman, winner of two Pulitzer Prizes, knows a news lead even when he is not handed it five times over.

As soon as this sudden and unconscionable forgiveness of past war crimes appeared in print, however, Clinton began to have second thoughts. At a moment that called for national unity and bipartisan support for military action (feeble as it was), Clinton was undercutting Bush by offering to do business with a "converted" Saddam Hussein. That was unseemly.

At a subsequent news conference, Bill Clinton denied reality. Asked about his indication of "the possibility of normal relations," Clinton replied heatedly: "Everybody who heard those conversations was astonished that such a conclusion could have been drawn . . . nobody asked me about normalization. . . ." (The truth is that the reporters did use the words "normal relations" and "normalization" in their questions.)

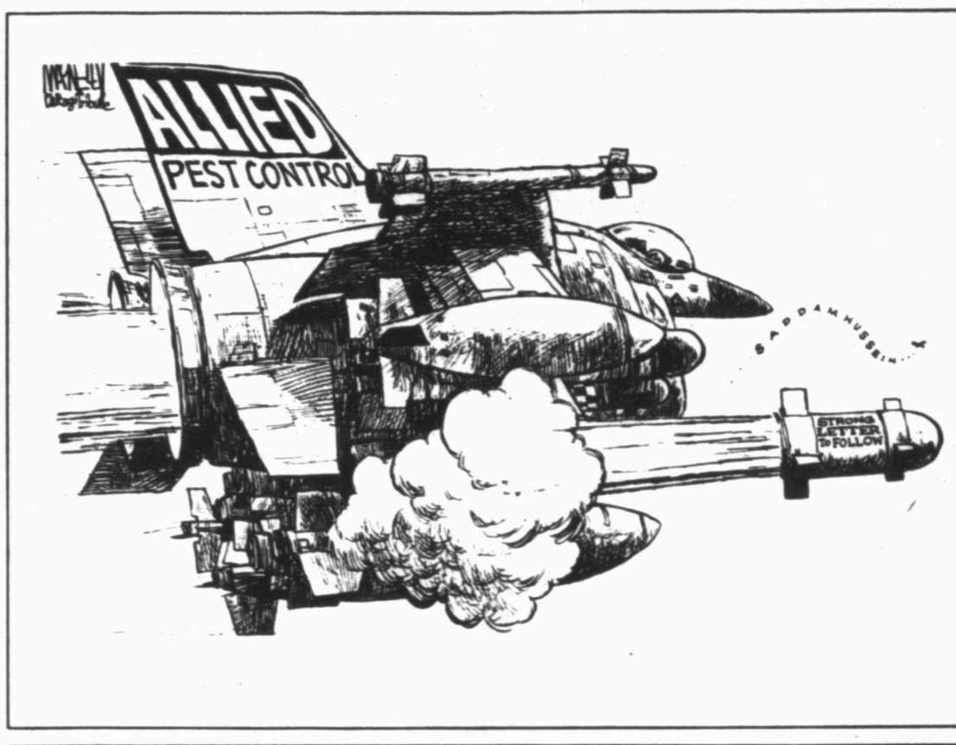

After this outburst of self-deceit, Clinton's press aides read the transcript of the original interview and saw that his position was untenable. George Stephanopoulos said his boss "inadvertently forgot that he had been asked that specific question about normalization and he regrets denying that it was asked."

Let's stretch charity to accept that excuse about forgetfulness. But there is no escaping his deception: "There is no difference between my policy and the policy of the present administration." The truth is that Bush policy was to freeze out Iraq as long as Saddam stayed in power, and for three terrible days Clinton's policy was to offer a "different relationship . . . all he has to do is change his behavior."

More important than his admitted mental lapse was his judgmental lapse that placed Clinton's 1993 Iraq policy back with Bush's 1989 Iraq policy: forgiving past sins and hoping to induce good behavior. Thanks to Clinton's demeaning demarche, Saddam Hussein almost succeeded in splitting the seam of our transfer of power.

The only good in this embrace of pretense was the timing: Because he was caught out so soon, Bill Clinton learned before it was too late that not even the president of the United States can force his wishes to be truths.

President-elect hopes to convert Saddam

George Bush's policy toward Iraq was faulty because it always left Saddam with the initiative. Bill Clinton's could be worse if he is seriously thinking about trying to convert Saddam into a "good guy" and revive the idea of Iraq as a counterweight to Iran.

Iraqi diplomats are peddling that idea again — to increasingly receptive audiences. But it is as flawed today as ever, even with mounting threats from Iran. Iraq cannot counterbalance Iran unless Baghdad once again arises as the monster that challenged the world to war two years ago.

Iran and Iraq hold swords over U.S. access to Persian Gulf oil. Both will remain hostile to U.S. interests. And neither is responsive to U.S. influence.

So no president will find it easy to safeguard U.S. concerns in the gulf. The only promising U.S. strategy is to reduce reliance on gulf oil through higher gas taxes and conservation and to convince Arab states to take more responsibility for their own security.

The occasion for this sermonette is the president-elect's interview last week with The New York Times, held only hours after U.S. bombers had struck Iraq. Under the circumstances, Mr. Clinton should have restricted himself to blessings for President Bush and U.S. pilots.

But no. Mr. Clinton is an exceedingly intelligent man with a storehouse of knowledge, who just cannot resist the temptation to show how much he has thought about almost every problem. It appears not to have dawned on him that it is often permissible and even wise for presidents to be evasive and even boring.

Under prodding by Times reporters, he began thinking out loud, something presidents should do only with mute best friends. He said he was not "obsessed" with Saddam, implying Mr. Bush has been. "I believe in deathbed conversions," he continued. If Saddam "wants a different relationship" with the U.S. and the U.N., he added, "all he has to do is change his behavior" and live up to U.N. requirements.

Predictably, once Mr. Clinton saw his words in cold print the next day, he and his aides hopped around denying their plain meaning. The Clinton administration would not normalize ties with Saddam nor change current U.S. policy, they bleated.

The denials were half true. Mr. Clinton and his team do plan to fashion a new policy, one that will wrest the initiative from Saddam. But that policy will not include a fresh start with Saddam. If for no other reason, they know this would mean political suicide.

But there are others around the world who entertain notions of coaxing Saddam into deals — his good behavior for their help in rebuilding a united Iraq under his authority.

This idea can be heard once again among some Arabists in the State Department, in West European foreign ministries and among political leaders in Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and elsewhere.

What binds them in thinking the unthinkable is their gathering dread of Iran and their belief that only Baghdad can keep the more dangerous Teheran at bay. It is scary to contemplate Iran's growing military might and support of Islamic fundamentalists seeking to subvert moderate Arab regimes.

But playing Dr. Frankenstein and pumping new juices into the Saddamite Monster is not the solution.

Iraq cannot balance off Tehran unless Baghdad regains its stranglehold over Kurds and Shiites. That would mean new and more horrible repression, which the West should not and would not tolerate.

And given Iran's manpower advantages and potentially greater military arsenal, Baghdad could compete only by developing nuclear and chemical weapons. All of which would make Iraq, yet again, more predator than savior.

Arab and Western prayers for stability in the gulf cannot be answered in Baghdad. If the Saudis, Egyptians and others fear fundamentalism, the best place to counter that problem is not in Teheran, but in their own countries — with better care for their own people.

If the gulf states fear attacks by Iraq and Iran, the best way to respond is with collective security arrangements — with the U.S. still by their side.

If the U.S. wants to free itself from having no choice but to fight endless wars in the zany and unfriendly Persian Gulf, the only course is to reduce its dependence on gulf oil.

Fresh troops march to different beat

Once again the nation prepares to swear in a new President. It's called the "Changing of the Guard," and it is Washington's most stirring ceremony. When one regime leaves and another takes its place the old guard lines up to march out the gate, and the fresh troops march in to the beat of a different drummer.

Buchwald

I have seen it many times and it always moves me.

I have watched hardened veterans of an administration stumble out in the street handing out their resumes to anyone who would take them. I have seen men once charged with handling billions of dollars trying to get enough change from tourists to take the bus home.

I always stand by the White House gate when the "Changing of the Guard" takes place, waving an American flag to show our boys in the trenches that we were grateful for what they had done for their country.

This time the scene was even more somber as the long line of White House staffers shuffled slowly out of the building carrying their notes and diaries in their knapsacks. Most of them were crying. The drum roll continued as they shuffled out to Pennsylvania Avenue.

Suddenly, I saw a friend, Stephen Disson, whose only job had been to decide what the President knew and when he knew it.

"Steve," I yelled, "It's good to see you out here with the people again."

"They wouldn't even let me keep my fax machine," he said bitterly.

"That's the way it is in the government," I told him. "One day you're ordering 50 bombing missions over Desert Storm, and the next you can't even get a job selling lottery tickets in an Army PX. What are you going to do, Steve?"

"I have to find a literary agent. I have an expose that will blow the lid off every branch of the government."

"How did you get a story like that?"

"I tapped everybody's cellular phone in Washington."

"You did this while working for the President?"

"On my own time. I still gave 10 hours a day to the White House Ethics Committee. If I can't get a publisher for my book, I'll do the next best thing and become a television talk show host."

"But you always claimed to have hated the media and called them responsible for everything that was wrong with the country."

"I know what I said. At the same time, TV is good exposure and will get me on the knife and fork circuit now that the rats have taken over the sinking ship. I'm good at asking questions in such a way that there's no time left for anyone to answer them."

While Steve and I were talking, a White House veteran came up to us and asked, "Can you spare a quarter for a Help Wanted ad?"

Suddenly I heard a stern Clinton transition officer say to his men, "Fall in, left face, forward march."

The long line went through the gate — young men and women barely out of their teens — baby boomers who had never fired a budget in anger. They all marched with purpose toward the portico.

I waved my flag. Steve said, "Poor souls. They don't know how much fertilizer it takes to cultivate a Rose Garden."

Bosnian Serb assembly debates peace plan

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — A self-proclaimed parliament of Bosnian Serbs met Tuesday to consider trading land and the right to their own borders for an end to Bosnia's bloody civil war.

Bosnia's Muslim and Croat factions have accepted the proposal by international mediators. Rejection by the Serbs could doom peace talks and lead to foreign military intervention in a conflict that has killed at least 17,000 people.

Bitter debates dragged on for hours before the session in Pale, just east of Sarajevo, adjourned. It was scheduled to resume at 9 a.m. (3 a.m. EST) Wednesday.

Supporters and opponents of the plan appeared to be about equally split. Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said the outcome would be close and he could not predict which way it would go.

Seventy-one of the assembly's 81 members opened the plenary session with the old Serbian national anthem, "God of Justice," and a moment of silence for dead comrades.

The proposal by mediators Cyrus Vance of the United Nations and Lord Owen of the European Community would divide the former Yugoslav republic into 10 autonomous provinces.

Under pressure from Yugoslav leaders, Karadzic accepted the plan a week ago in Geneva on condition that the Bosnian Serb assembly approve it.

"On the one hand, the international community is rattling its sabers," he said in his opening address. "On the other hand, it has made possible a political solution of the crisis. That is why the Geneva conference represents the only hope for the war to end."

Karadzic has said he will resign if the plan is rejected.

The draft includes boundaries drawn partly along ethnic lines and nine constitutional principles. It would mean the Serbs would have to give up their demand for a separate state within Bosnia and an eventual merger with neighboring, Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

The international community has warned Serbs to accept unconditionally or risk military intervention.

English Heritage group unveils plans to restore Stonehenge

SALISBURY, England (AP) — The keepers of Stonehenge unveiled plans on Tuesday to restore the dignity of Europe's greatest prehistoric monument by ridding it of modern clutter.

"I want to see the end of the horrendous road, the horrific car park, the ghastly shop and the awful underpass," said Jocelyn Stevens, chairman of state-run English Heritage which looks after the ancient stone circle and nearly 400 other historic properties.

The plans won immediate endorsement from Rollo Maughfling, Arch Druid of the Glastonbury Order and Stonehenge officer for the Council of British Druid Orders.

English Heritage exhibited the $18 million plans in Salisbury, the cathedral city 10 miles south of Stonehenge and 80 miles west of London.

Stonehenge had 788,000 paying visitors last year. But visitors are often disappointed by the nearby traffic and by the fences that keep them at a distance from the stones on the grassy chalkland of Salisbury Plain.

The stones are a magnet for druids and other cults and a headache for English Heritage and the National Trust which owns 1,500 acres around the stones.

In past years there were running battles at summer solstice between police and hippies who invaded the stone circle, lit camp fires, painted their names and made love on the huge fallen stones.

The builders of Stonehenge, who left no other record of themselves, oriented it to the midsummer sunrise and midwinter sunset and are believed to have used it as a temple and for fixing times to plant crops.

Stonehenge, built between 3100 B.C. and 1100 B.C., is recognized as a World Heritage Site by UNESCO, the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Kuwaitis melancholy as Bush departs

KUWAIT (AP) — On George Bush's last day as president Tuesday, a veiled Bedouin woman bustled into the gold market to collect a heavy belt named after the American leader.

Although Um Abdullah al-Utaibi knew Bush would be in office only a few hours more, she spent $10,000 on a belt incorporating the missile-shaped fingers of gold that designers call "The George Bush."

"He's a hero because he hit the one over there," she said, adjusting the black veil that showed only her eyes, and pointing over her shoulder toward Iraq with her henna-dyed thumb.

"Hopefully he will live 200 years. And God willing there will be more like him," said the 45-year-old mother of nine.

The casual visitor might think Kuwait was losing its own president.

"Even children are sad despite the fact they are unclear who Bush is. To them the word Bush means security in Kuwait," said Mohammed Al-Hayan, a 28-year-old civil servant.

Al-Anba daily published a 14-page supplement on Bush's career, with such titles as "Bush: We Love You" and "Day by Day: George Bush from the Occupation to the Liberation."

The English-language Arab Times trumpeted "Loose-Ends Strike In Bush Final Hours" over a bold "Bomb Voyage" headline borrowed from the New York Post.

The al-Anba supplement brimmed with melancholy. Kuwaitis have never quite recovered from the shock that their man in the White House was tossed into the street by American voters. They would prefer to have him as president for life.

An old woman only identified as Umm Jarah told the paper: "My son Bush, I wish I weren't blind so that I could see you, but it's old age. May God protect your children for you so that they become sheiks of America."

A week of attacks on Iraq capped by the change of administration in Washington has resurrected Kuwaiti questions about the country's security, a nagging concern since the coalition Bush cobbled together drove the army of Saddam Hussein out in February 1991.

The presence of 2,000 American troops with Patriot missiles has allayed fears. But some doubt whether Washington will remain preoccupied by the fate of 650,000 Kuwaitis, with so many other concerns in the region.

Yet if Clinton sticks to his current hard line on Saddam, he may get equal devotion from Kuwaitis.

Haitians apparently heeding Clinton's plea

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Bill Clinton appears to have succeeded, for now, in averting an exodus of Haitian boat people, based on interviews with refugee and Coast Guard officials, ordinary Haitians, and an aerial survey of the coast.

But without the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, it remains unclear how long Haitians, desperate for a better life, can be dissuaded from attempting the dangerous voyage toward American shores.

Clinton's decision last week to continue the quick return of boat people, coupled with a U.S. naval deployment off Haiti and a U.N.-brokered agreement among rival Haitian groups, appears to be discouraging Haitians from taking to the seas.

Since Saturday, after the Coast Guard sent 22 ships to surround Haiti in Operation Able Manner, just one small boatload of 49 refugees has been picked up.

Cutters were intercepting more than 1,000 Haitians a day last May, when President Bush first ordered the immediate repatriation of all boat people found at sea.

In a three-hour aerial survey of part of the coast Monday, two Associated Press journalists found little to support earlier Coast Guard claims of massive boat-building. Some officials had said up to 250,000 Haitians would take to the sea after Clinton took office.

The only substantial boat-building was found on La Tortue, where 14 broad vessels were lined up along a stretch of the southern beach. Nine other big boats were being hammered together along the west coast of La Gonave.

Hoping to give Haitians hope for a better future at home, Clinton and Bush have pushed jointly for Haitian commitment to United Nations-brokered talks on restoring democracy.

Cities share sharp drop in serious crime

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

Serious crimes were down in both Midland and Odessa during 1992, according to data released by both cities' police departments.

Serious crimes, classified by police as Part I crimes, were down overall by 5 percent in Midland and 18 percent in Odessa.

Part I crimes in Midland include murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft over $750, theft under $750 and auto theft.

In Odessa, Part I crimes include murder, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, burglary, theft, auto theft and arson.

Midland experienced declines in five of the eight Part I crime categories. Murders dropped by 40 percent, robbery by 24 percent, burglary by 22 percent, theft by 2 percent and auto theft by 2 percent.

However, reports of both aggravated assault and rape increased, 16 percent and 3.9 percent, respectively.

Odessa saw a reduction in five of the eight categories. Murder decreased by 47 percent, rape by 52 percent, theft by 26 percent, auto theft by 1.7 percent and arson by 24 percent.

Categories that increased in Odessa were aggravated assault by 13 percent, robbery by 6 percent and burglary by 1.3 percent.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said he is concerned about the increase in sexual assaults, but that it is a crime that really can't be controlled.

"Sexual assault statistics are very unpredictable," he said. "They really can't be controlled."

He credited the drop in burglary with the increased work by the Midland Police Department in narcotics and crimes against persons divisions.

Odessa Police Chief James H. Jenkins said increased police involvement in the community contributed to the city's sharp drop in overall serious crimes.

"Our programs, such as Park and Walk and our directed patrol programs have helped us get to know the community," Jenkins said. "Our objective is to present an omnipresence of law enforcement in the community."

Although Jenkins said he is pleased that the overall serious crime statistics dropped by 18 percent, he added that he is still not comfortable with the city's overall total of serious crimes.

"Our goal is to reduce crime and one of the objectives in accomplishing that is getting the numbers into the 7,000-9,000 range," he said. "Our total of 10,538 puts

Judge finds officers had probable cause in broken-arm case

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Two Midland police officers acted reasonably on July 6 when they mistakenly apprehended a mentally ill man, whose arm was broken as a result, a federal judge ruled.

A lawsuit against the officers, Police Chief Richard Czech, the police department and the city of Midland was dismissed by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton, who issued a 21-page explanation of the judgment filed Tuesday.

An attorney for Celia Gonzales, the guardian of the injured man, Selestino Jasso, said the judgment would be appealed.

Jasso, 46, was mistaken by police officers David Beatty and Alvin Navarette for an intoxicated suspect involved in a disturbance in the area earlier on the night of July 6.

When the officers drove toward the man's residence at 1407 Walnut St., Jasso, who was smoking a cigarette near the roadway about 11 p.m., went into the house. The officers pursued the thinly built man and during his apprehension, Jasso's right arm was broken.

"We believe officers Beatty and Navarette acted reasonably under the circumstances they were presented," said Steve Selbe, with Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson, which represented the officers.

In the ruling, the judge stated that the officers "reasonably believed" Jasso was the suspect.

Among various considerations, Bunton recognized the defense of qualified immunity, which allows police officers to be protected from liability in certain cases where reasonable action is taken.

Furthermore, that immunity "when applied to a charge of constitutionally unlawful arrest, prevents suit against officers who 'reasonably but mistakenly conclude that probable cause is present.'"

A claim of excessive force — examined within the "totality of circumstances" and from the perspective of a reasonable officer at the scene — was essentially unfounded, according to the judge's ruling.

Bunton's findings were further substantiated by several matters of law.

In response to the ruling, one of Jasso's attorneys, Glen Aaron II, made a general statement of what he perceives as an erosion of the meaning of the Fourth Amendment — which allows individuals to be secure in their homes and protects against unreasonable searches and seizures.

The definition of probable cause (for legal searches and seizures) has expanded in the last several years in light of the war on drugs, Aaron stated.

Although this has helped in the apprehension of drug dealers, the judicial interpretation has narrowed individuals' Fourth Amendment rights, he stated.

In defending the officers actions, City Attorney Keith Stretcher and Selbe praised the professionalism of the Midland Police Department.

"We think we have a first class police department," Stretcher said.

Illustrating that point, Selbe added that local officers are required to have twice the minimum 20-hour annual training required in Texas.

The dismissal of the federal suit doesn't clear the officers and the city entirely though. A second lawsuit is still pending in state district court alleging negligence and a violation of the right to privacy.

MC adds programs to retrain workers

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Midland College is adding programs to retrain geologists and oil field workers to diversify into hydraulics and environmental sciences.

"An advisory board was formed in June (1992) to see about retraining people into studying environmental sciences and oil field contamination," said advisory board member Bruno Hanson in a presentation to the MC board Tuesday afternoon.

Bruno said some local oil companies have requested the college train non-degreed people to work on contamination in oil fields.

"Companies need trained people to meet EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) regulations," he said.

MC President David E. Daniel said the advisory committee "identified a need and prepared to respond to it . . . I thank them for being aggressive in finding what we need and addressing it."

"Some regulations have been built on a lack of knowledge," board trustee Ken Peeler said. "There is a lot of work to be done (in this field.)"

Daniel announced that MC registrar Sharon McCrary has resigned effective at the end of February due to taking another job as personnel director.

MC Associate Dean of Services Don Cates announced that the college's enrollment as of Tuesday was 3,626. "Enrollment is still increasing and is down about 12 students from this time last year," he said.

Cates noted that Midland Independent School District graduated the lowest number of seniors in 15 years last year. "The district is expecting about a 4 percent increase this year over last year," he said.

Other administrators said they were encouraged — by expanding enrollments in lower grades and junior high schools — that the local trend will be for senior classes to increase in coming years.

Camille Duchesne, MC director of continuing education, reported that the college's south facility has nice enrollments in two classes — English composition and rhetoric, and small business management.

"The GED (General Equivalency Diploma) course began last week and we only had eight report to class," she said. "However, last year we were up to 28 before the semester was over."

Ms. Duchesne said an ESL (English as a Second Language) class would begin next week. Computers are being installed into the facility in order to teach computer programs including a course on operating Windows software.

The director said she talked about the facility to parents at a Parent Teacher Association meeting at South Elementary School recently.

David announced that the college would hold a news conference Feb. 10 to announce tightening requirements for the Abell-Hanger Scholarship program.

Senator introduces school finance bill

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, introduced a constitutional amendment and a companion bill on Tuesday to legalize the current school finance system that shares local property taxes with school districts on a county-wide or multi-county basis.

Funding for local schools would not change dramatically during the next biennium because they would continue to operate as in 1992 and 1993.

But funding would decrease because there will be less money for schools and other government services in the next budget. Ratliff said all districts would be "sharing the pain."

Also, several special measures that comprise the "weighted average" per student are scheduled to expire in September this year. Schools that will lose money as a result are those receiving large amounts for special education programs and districts that have a small number of students by choice rather than because they are located in sparsely populated areas.

The plan retains the 188 County Education Districts, or CEDs, formed by combining some of the state's 254 counties.

Midland Independent School District funding would increase from $3,271 per pupil in 1992 and $3,530 this year to an estimated $3,612 in 1994 and $3,716 in 1995.

For the same period, revenues at Greenwood ISD would be $3,956; $4,095; $4,288; and $4,391.

Ector County's estimated funding would increase from $3,270 and $3,420 to $3,481 next year and $3,585 in 1995.

Ratliff is the new chairman of the Senate Education Committee, which will begin hearings on the plan today. The committee could send it to the Senate this week or early next week.

Sales tax payments increase this month

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Sales tax payments to the city and county this month increased by a small percentage from the same period last year, according to recently released figures from State Comptroller John Sharp's office in Austin.

The January payments are taxes collected on November sales that are reported to the comptroller in December by businesses filing monthly returns. Sales taxes are reported to the comptroller by businesses on either a monthly, quarterly or annual basis.

The city received a payment of $615,042 this month, a 2.96 percent increase from $597,371 paid in January 1992. Because this was the first payment for the year, the amount paid also reflects the year-to-date total.

Last month, December payments to the city for October sales totaled $568,756, a 3.71 percent increase from $548,425 the year before.

Year-to-date payments in December were $9,013,211, up 2.15 percent from the $8,823,708 from the first 10 months of 1993.

Meanwhile, the county also saw a gain for the first payment of this year.

Midland County was paid $355,690, a 3.71 percent jump from the $342,967 received the same month last year.

Last month, December payments to the county for October sales added up to $361,168, a 13.56 percent increase from $318,029 paid during that period a year earlier.

Year-to-date payments at that time were $5,088,748, down 2.16 percent from the $5,201,076 the last month of of 1991.

Statewide, a total of $98.7 million in sales tax payment were dispersed this month to 955 cities and 109 counties. That figure shows a 3.7 percent increase from payments a year ago.

Broken down, the cities received $88.2 million, a 3.2 percent increase from the $85.5 million paid out in January 1992. Counties were given $10.4 million in payments, a 8.3 percent increase from the $9.6 million paid the same month last year.

Inauguration to be combination of Super Bowl, New Year's Eve

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The traffic is horrendous, the crowds are a fire marshal's nightmare and the ticket scalpers are having a field day. But no one seems to mind.

For Texans attending President-elect Bill Clinton's inauguration, the quadrennial transfer of power is a celebration combining elements of a Super Bowl, a political convention and a raucous New Year's Eve party. It is a chance for the rank-and-file to rub elbows with the high-and-mighty, and for the high-and-mighty to cut loose.

"What do I want to accomplish while I'm here? I want to buy a lot of stuff," Texas Gov. Ann Richards joked.

At the top of Richards' shopping list is a special inaugural-edition gimme cap with a brim that splits apart to reveal pop-up likenesses of Clinton, Vice President-elect Al Gore and their wives, plus the White House and the Capitol.

"You know, like those cards when you open it up and everything jumps up? The bill on this cap has all these little things exactly like that," Richards said enthusiastically. "It makes you look like a walking float. I know men in Texas who would kill for that."

State District Judge Michael Schattman of Fort Worth has also found opportunities to shed his official demeanor.

Schattman, who usually wears the traditional somber robes of his profession, turned more than a few heads last weekend when he strolled onto a Washington subway wearing a tuxedo, cowboy boots, a black leather vest, a bolo tie and a black cowboy hat.

"Some folks were kind of looking at us a little askance," said Schattman, who took the underground train to Saturday's Black Tie and Boots Ball, a party sponsored by transplanted Texans in Washington. "One fellow yelled, 'I like the hat!'"

One of the biggest surprises for Texans at the inaugural is how often they run into home-state friends in the nation's capital.

"Everywhere we've been we've seen fellow Texans," said Rosie Moncrief of Fort Worth. "The enthusiasm is just incredible."

One Texan Moncrief hasn't seen is her husband. State Sen. Mike Moncrief got stuck in Austin on state business.

"This is awful," Rosie Moncrief said Tuesday. "We had planned this trip for at least two months and we were so excited because neither of us had ever been to an inauguration."

Well, maybe it's not that awful. After all, Moncrief is being squired around the city by two Fort Worth friends with unique insight to Washington, former House Speaker Jim Wright and his wife, Betty.

"It's been really wonderful," she said. "The enthusiasm is like that of a Super Bowl. You know it's going to be wonderful, but you really can't get that sense of it until you arrive and feel the electricity."

Toska Medlock, who works for the Texas Department of Human Services in Arlington, said Texans who attended Clinton's kickoff gala at the Lincoln Memorial on Sunday had two reasons to celebrate.

"The Cowboys had as much pull as the president on that day," she said. "There were people with portable Watchmans actually watching the football game."

SHARE: School funding to decrease needed constitutional amendment.

(From 1B)

Sen. Ratliff said he believes his plan can gain House approval because it does not contain statewide recapture as the Fair Share plan did.

It also would meet court mandates for equal financing in the future by setting a cap on how much rich districts could raise. This would prevent property-rich districts from increasing local rates and once again "running away" from the rest of the system, he said.

The court ruled the state's system of financing its school was unconstitutional in 1989 and has overturned two attempts by lawmakers to fix the problem.

Ratliff's plan comes in two parts. If voters approve the constitutional amendment, the current system would remain in effect. The amendment would set the CED tax rate at 90 cents per $100 property valuation.

School districts could tax up to an additional 60 cents more, for a total tax rate of $1.50. The state would guarantee that, up to a total tax rate of $1.30, all school districts would get $3,470 per weighted student. The state would make up the difference for property-poor districts.

If voters reject the amendment, the separate bill would require residents to vote on authorizing a tax rate of from zero to 90 cents. In CEDs where voters set a rate of less than 90 cents, no school district could raise taxes to get revenues above the amount the state guarantees poor school districts.

The bill would need only a majority vote in the Legislature, while the constitutional amendment needs a two-thirds majority. Republicans, with 58 members in the 150-member House, can block an amendment.

Ratliff said he had described the plan to some House members and the new speaker, Rep. Pete Laney, D-Hale Center.

He also said he briefed representatives of groups that filed the original lawsuit against the system and "they did not throw me out of the room."

Stanton continues evaluation of chief

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

STANTON — The Stanton City Council late Tuesday night was continuing its executive-session evaluation of Police Chief Michael Adams, following the firing of one of the city's three officers last week.

Mayor Lester Baker said that the council has not evaluated Adams in his six years on the job and is doing that evaluation, which comes on the heels of the firing of Dwain Dempsey last Friday.

Adams worked for the police department in Lamesa and Midland before taking over the three-member force in this community of 2,400.

Also meeting in executive session with the mayor were Mayor Pro-tem Gene Wheeler and council members James Jenkins, Dennis Kotasek, Jimmy-Epley and James Johnson.

Adams was in the session along with assistant city administrator Nelda Turner and Midland attorney Bill Clifton, who is counsel for the city council.

City administrator Danny Fryar is in Austin this week, along with Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport, attending a Texas Water Commission conference on rules governing sanitary landfills.

us in a category with much larger cities, such as a Amarillo and Lubbock."

Midland's overall total of serious crimes was 6,372, which Czech said could be reduced by continued increases in community involvement.

"We need the help of the citizens," he said. "The bottom line is that more community participation and help will reduce crime."

Low-fat recipes improve traditions

By Linda Franklin
Associated Press

Think of black-eyed peas, fried chicken, jambalaya or cornbread, and you know the problem with Southern eating has never been taste.

But fat? There's always been plenty — salt pork or bacon grease to season the peas, shortening for the fried chicken and fried okra, and sausage for the jambalaya.

What's a Southerner, or anybody else with a passion for this satisfying, fill-your-gut food, to do?

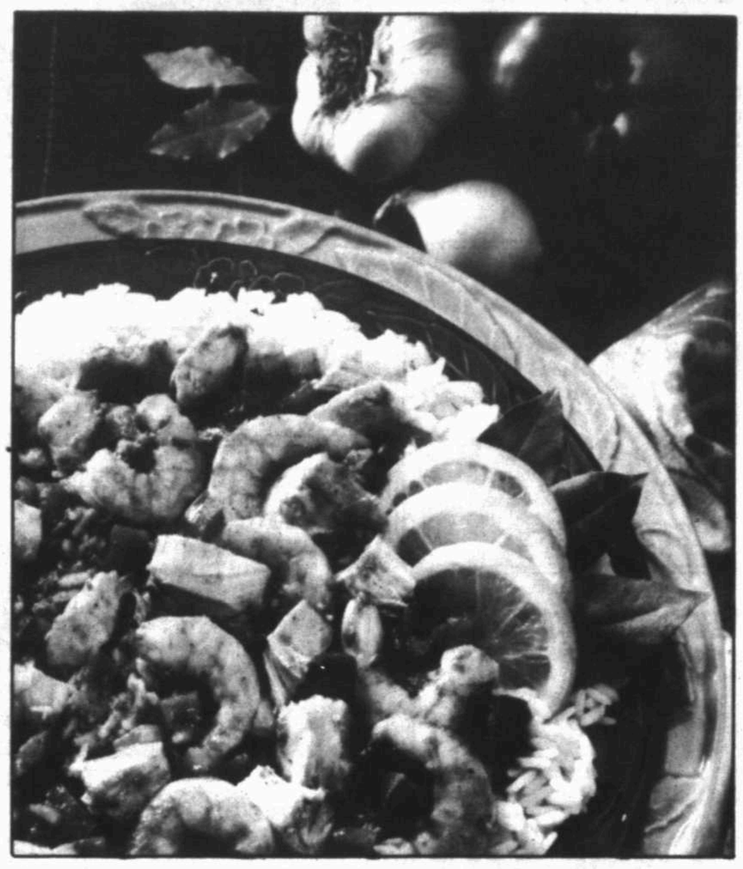

Courtney Parker has a solution, though it might make traditionalists squirm.

"It's really kind of a nouvelle technique applied to Southern food," she says. "It's just thinking about it in a different way, sort of like a puzzle."

Parker has written a cookbook, "How to Eat Like a Southerner and Live to Tell the Tale," aimed at providing healthy alternatives — less fat, less cholesterol — to Southern favorites.

The 200 recipes she re-created in her Natchez, Miss., home rely on lots of spices, rich broths and herbs to add flavor and make "sensibly healthy" alternatives.

The recipes don't include breakdowns for calories, fat and cholesterol per serving, but that isn't necessary: One look at the new recipe, and the cook knows the meal is a big change. One bite, and you can't imagine why you didn't change sooner.

Southern food, including such dishes as chicken and shrimp creole, is known for its wonderful taste. A new cookbook called "How to Eat Like a Southerner and Live to Tell the Tale" features recipes designed to keep the taste, but eliminate fat, from Southern cooking.

'As long as the taste is wonderful, people are willing to try new ways.'

— Carol Daily
The Everyday Gourmet store

A RECIPE for sour cream biscuits, for example, forgos the oil and butter and relies on yogurt and sour cream to create the feathery light style of that Southern table staple.

To make fried chicken, cooks traditionally dip the chicken in a mixture of milk and eggs, dredge it through a blend of flour, salt and pepper, and then fry it in vegetable shortening or lard. But Parker's recipe cuts back on the whole eggs and uses more egg whites. The chicken is oven-fried, so there's no shortening, lard or vegetable oil.

While most recipes for black-eyed peas call for them to be cooked with salt pork, Parker substitutes her defatted chicken stock or water and uses a tablespoon of olive oil. Bell peppers, basil and jalapeno peppers give the peas added zest.

And the sweet potato pie that is almost mandatory at Southern holiday dinners also gets a makeover, with a graham cracker crust instead of the usual pie crust. Egg whites take the place of eggs in the filling, and the milk and butter of other recipes are removed.

Parker's publishers have made the South the primary target for her book, and it is finding an audience.

Elizabeth Terry, whose Elizabeth on 37th restaurant in Savannah, Ga., is known for its innovative Southern cooking, finds people want a more healthful Southern meal with a "brighter, cleaner taste."

Terry's black-eyed peas may be served in a salad with red peppers to go with duck or quail. Instead of cooking the peas with fat-back on the back of the stove all day, they are cooked with garlic and onions and then a bit of country ham is added to give the dish a Southern flavor.

THE RESTAURANT has an herb garden, which allows for an added dimension to the flavor of the foods.

"Southerners are very good at putting lots of things on the plate," Terry said. "We do that with a lot of fruit relishes, spiced peaches with ham mousse. Again, making two or three vegetables and one meat certainly does help cut calories."

"With all that we've learned about health and cooking, we have to lighten up our cooking," said Carol Daily of The Everyday Gourmet store in Jackson, Miss. "It's just something embedded in the public consciousness."

Daily doesn't see any resistance to reinventing recipes. "As long as the taste is wonderful," she said, "people are willing to try new ways."

Parker says in the forward of "How to Eat Like a Southerner" that she didn't want to see the foods she grew up with fade away. They shouldn't, with her book's help.

One sign of the willingness of Southerners to adapt to Parker's style is evident in The Everyday Gourmet, Daily said. The book is a big seller as a wedding present, she said, with older women buying it for brides — a one-volume version, perhaps, of something old, something new.

While Parker's recipes are seasoned with herbs and spices, the cookbook itself is flavored with remembrances of growing up in the Deep South and the simple pleasures of cooking, fishing and eating.

Each recipe is introduced with a short note from Parker that makes for a bit of conversational style for cooks familiar with the food and a bit of background for cooks who aren't.

PARKER EXPLAINS why a dish is such a part of the Southern culture, and even how Southerners love to eat their fried chicken.

A number of recipes are named for her great-grandmother, affectionately called Mama Lady, who Parker credits with teaching her about cooking and life.

The vegetable chapter was Parker's favorite to create, with recipes that include field peas with fresh tomatoes; okra, corn and tomatoes; and honey-stewed tomatoes. Standouts for her include sweet potato souffle and turnip-green pot pie with a cornmeal crust.

Taking the recipes that people remember growing up eating and adapting them to a new way of life wasn't easy, Parker said.

"I think I agonized over almost every one," she said. Adapting the chicken and beef were the hardest; she worried about the oven-fried chicken because "it so difficult to duplicate that wonderful flavor."

One section of the cookbook is geared toward hunters, with venison and quail dishes. She said she would love to do a game cookbook someday, although she knows the audience would be more limited.

"Some of the things we grew up with, we don't know how to cook," Daily said. "She has updated the recipes so they lend themselves to the type of cooking we do."

DEAR ABBY

Open-door policy is quickly closed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your letter about the woman who locked her doors when leaving the house to go to the mailbox brought back some painful memories.

Van Buren

We have always kept our front door locked day and night. One day, when my wife was out raking leaves in the front yard, she left the back door unlocked. While she was outside, someone slipped into our house, went directly to our dining room buffet, took $2,000 worth of silver, then went into my wife's purse and took $200 of her money and $250 of her sister's money. Then the thief went to a bookcase drawer where I had hidden $1,700, which was to be deposited in the bank that day.

Believe me, Abby, from then on, when we take a nap, work in the yard or do anything outdoors, we lock our doors!

I was 27 years old before I slept behind a locked door, but these days, you can't be too careful! — HOWARD CHILDRESS, MURFREESBORO, TENN.

DEAR HOWARD: One doesn't have to be a Sherlock Holmes to deduce that the thief was familiar with your house and knew exactly where to find your money. And you're right, one can't be too careful these days.

As a parting shot, the best place for one's cash is in the bank. Banks also rent safe-deposit boxes where clients can keep valuables, important documents, and irreplaceable photographs and memorabilia. There they are safe from fire, floods and thieves.

DEAR ABBY: We work for a small company of 10 employees, all female except for the owner. The director, whom we'll call Betty, got married recently. She invited everyone in the office to her wedding, except for three of us. Although the three of us probably wouldn't have attended the wedding, we were offended and hurt that we weren't invited. To top it off, she paraded her wedding dress in front of us at the office and continually spoke of her wedding arrangements.

Abby, please let us know what the proper procedure is for wedding invitations when working in a small office like this. — NOT INVITED IN CINCINNATI

DEAR NOT INVITED: Nowhere is it written that a bride must invite all of her co-workers to her wedding. You say that you and the others would not have attended had you been invited, in which case you should have felt relieved that you weren't.

DEAR ABBY: The poem you attributed to Dorothy Parker was written by Ogden Nash. It was slightly misquoted; here's the correct wording:

"Candy is dandy
"But liquor is quicker."

However, it was Dorothy Parker who wrote:

"Men seldom make passes
"At girls who wear glasses."

My own contribution:

"Avoid death if you can;
"It can kill you." — YOUR TENNESSEE FAN

DEAR FAN: Add this:

"Men who seldom make passes
"At girls who wear glasses
"Are asses." — VAN BUREN

New line of frozen Tex-Mex foods good, but not great

By Linda Anderson

Out here in West Texas we tend to take good Tex-Mex food as our heritage and our right. But out here in West Texas, like most other places in this country and in this decade, we are pressed for time and energy. Many family cooks are also family breadwinners, so cooking "from scratch" is a luxury we don't always have time for.

Anderson

Still, we want Tex-Mex food, but we want it fast and we want it convenient — and most of all, we want it good. Frozen food manufacturers try to keep up with these "wants," but they have to take into consideration that not every customer in this country likes these foods the way we do — the definition of "hot and spicy" varies by region.

El Charrito has introduced a line of frozen foods called Fiesta Lunch, which are supposed to be smaller than dinners but still supply the desired Tex-Mex taste. We bought three different kinds — Beef and Cheese Enchiladas Combo, Beef Enchiladas Con Queso and Beef Enchiladas — to check out for taste, price and advertising accuracy. Fiesta Lunches also come in other flavors — Chicken Enchiladas Suiza, Chicken Enchiladas Monterrey and Cheese Enchiladas Monterrey — but we haven't had a chance to sample them yet.

Price for all three varieties was $1.49. Each lunch contained two enchiladas and a side dish, either rice or beans.

Label advertising went like this: "All El Charrito Mexican food is made from original recipes, perfected by many years of experience. We choose only quality ingredients, from the stone ground corn for our tortillas, to the beef, chicken, zesty cheese and authentic spices. Together they create a taste that's uniquely El Charrito. Bueno appetito!"

The lunches can be prepared in either a conventional oven or a microwave oven, which is nice. The label also carries a nutrition information panel, which lists calories, fat, etc. I'm ready for all processed foods to carry one — they make healthy eating much easier. (The Beef and Cheese Enchiladas Combo is listed as containing 310 calories, 10 grams protein, 43 grams carbohydrates, 11 grams fat (or 99 calories from fat) and 1300 milligrams sodium. The nutrition contents of the other two varieties were similar. None of the three were outrageously high in calories.)

In the taste test, Fiesta Lunches turned out to be OK. They aren't wonderful and they aren't terrible, but certainly are edible and will do in a pinch.

They still aren't quite the real thing though, so the search for the perfect frozen enchilada goes on.

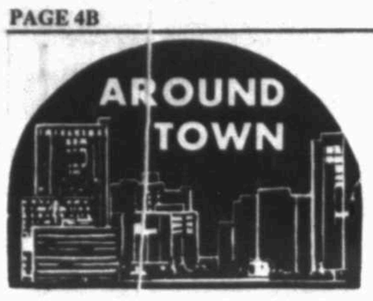

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Armchair chefs enjoy reading about delights

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

Some epicures would rather read about food than cook. Here are current book selections for those armchair chefs.

"Epicurean Delight: The Life and Times of James Beard" by Evan Jones (Fireside, $14). This biography of one of America's culinary Big Three (Julia Child and Craig Claiborne round out the trio), was first published in 1990, but for those who didn't want to pay for the hardcover, the paperback allows a second chance to better know this American original.

What emerges in Jones' portrait is a complex man who was at once a dear friend and a pasha who reveled in the Byzantine manipulations of his court.

Born in what was then frontier Portland, Ore., Beard died 81 years later in the midst of America's rediscovery of the joys of the table. In between, he was expelled from Reed College (for his homosexuality, he believed), traveled the world in response to his passion for food, wrote (or put his name to) articles and books about food and amassed a following of fans and friends.

Jones, married to Judith Jones who was editor to both Beard and Julia Child, has done extensive research on his subject. Those who think the food world is run by sweet middle-aged women in aprons will find several revelations in these pages.

■ "Like Water for Chocolate" by Laura Esquirel (Doubleday, $17.50) is a novel in the style of "How to Make An American Quilt," including a recipe with every chapter.

The tale is the story of Tita, born prematurely on the kitchen table while her mother was chopping onions. That birth marked her tie with the food of the affluent Mexican household. As the youngest daughter, Tita was forced to forgo marriage to care for her mother in her old age. To make sure that Tita would stick to tradition, her mother arranged the marriage of Tita's beloved to her sister. But while baking the wedding cake, Tita cries bitter tears into the batter, affecting the family for generations.

The recipes take some work (amounts are given in kilos and grams) but the lyrical story is a breeze.

■ "Elements of Etiquette: A Guide to Table Manners in an Imperfect World" by Craig Claiborne (Morrow, $15) is a vital tool for baby boomers moving up in the business world.

In the 1960s and 1970s, manners often got the rap of being an establishment tool, so there's a generation out there that doesn't know which fork to use or what sort of conversation to make at the dinner table. Etiquette, instead of being a crippling structure, can grease the way to an enjoyable evening when one knows how to dress for a party and to graciously thank the host afterward.

Claiborne, retired food writer for The New York Times, clearly explains the rules in this small volume.

Thank goodness someone has the nerve to say "As adults we are not obligated to dine with children. Dining with adults is still a privilege children earn." And that in a restaurant "unless you are a physician on call, beepers and cellular phones are woefully out of place." Not all of us will have this worry but Claiborne writes that "formal silver at a casual dinner is vulgar, rather like showing off one's jewelry."

There are some nits to pick with statements like "I find it too casual when a guest sits with legs crossed under the table." Excuse me, but does the polite host check out his guests' legs under the table.

State in brief

■ Circle K fires clerk for shooting assailant

AUSTIN — A convenience store clerk was fired by Circle K after shooting and wounding an armed robber who had shot at him first.

Judy States, of Phoenix-based Circle K, confirmed Tuesday that the clerk had been fired for breaking the company's policy against employees having guns in the stores.

"We believe very strongly that violence begets violence ... Arming employees is not the answer," Ms. States said.

The clerk, 49, spoke on the condition that his name not be used, according to the Austin American-Statesman.

He said that early Monday he had just made a deposit in the store's safe when he looked up and saw a man wearing a ski mask. The man pointed a gun at him and demanded money.

The clerk said the man shot at him, and that he felt the bullet zing past the right side of his head.

"The bullet barely missed me. I figured I was dead anyway. I had nothing to lose. I figured he was going to kill me," he said.

The clerk then reached for his gun in the back pocket of his jeans. "I pulled out a .25-caliber and fired three rounds at him," he said.

A 21-year-old man was later arrested in nearby Round Rock after seeking treatment at a hospital for two gunshot wounds in the right arm.

■ Man shoots 3 people after near-collision

HEREFORD — Police have charged a Hereford man with attempted murder after a near-miss car collision led to a chase, fistfight and shooting that wounded three people.

Edward Martinez, 23, remained jailed Tuesday on $50,000 bond.

Police arrested Martinez at 6:17 a.m. Monday, about five hours after they found three people shot at their home.

Consuelo Avila, 49, shot in the face, was listed in satisfactory condition Monday night at Deaf Smith General Hospital.

Her son, Alfredo Avila, 27, was shot in the left leg. His cousin, Reuben Avila, 29, of Canyon, was shot in the right arm. Both men were released from the hospital Monday.

Capt. Pat Michael of the Hereford Police Department said Tuesday the trouble began at about 1 a.m. when Martinez drove a Pontiac Grand-Am through a stop sign, narrowly missing a car driven by friends of the Avilas.

Michael said Martinez and his passengers began gesturing at the Avilas' friends, then chased them about 1.5 miles to the Avila home.

Witnesses told police a fistfight broke out in the driveway, then Martinez pulled out a small-caliber handgun and shot Alfredo Avila outside. Martinez shot Consuelo Avila and Ruben Avila through a front window after he tried entering the home, witnesses said.

Police are investigating, Michael said.

■ Naked homeowner helps catch burglar

POTEET — A burglary suspect has been captured after a naked homeowner awoke, got in his truck and chased the suspect through three counties.

Miguel Angel Hernandez, 27, of the state of Nuevo Leon, Mexico, was charged with burglary of a habitat and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle after the incident early Sunday. He was held in the Atascosa County Jail in Jourdanton in lieu of $50,000 bond.

Frio County Sheriff Carl Burris said the burglar, allegedly carrying a woman's purse and a stereo set, fled the house and sped off in a stolen car,

The homeowner, ignoring his lack of attire, dashed to his pickup truck and gave chase, Burris said.

"I think he just reacted extremely quick and didn't take time to put his clothes on," the sheriff said. "It was the durndest thing I ever saw ... they told me if you stick around in this business long enough, you'll see everything."

The episode began about 1 a.m. Sunday when the sleeper was awakened by his wife's screams after she saw a man walking along the hallway of their home in rural Atascosa County, south of San Antonio.

The husband, described only as in his 40s, chased the suspected burglar for 30 minutes along two farm roads, a state highway and an interstate expressway through Atascosa, Medina and Frio counties before crashing into a guardrail along Interstate 35 about two miles north of Pearsall.

The burglar fled on foot into a brushy area. The naked man did not pursue him. He asked a passing motorist to call authorities while he watched the area.

■ Police rule scalded boy's death homicide

SAN ANTONIO — A 17-month-old boy reportedly left by himself in a shower stall has died of scalding burns in what authorities are classifying as a homicide.

An autopsy ruled that Joel Anthony Muerillo died over the weekend of scalding burns suffered over 50 percent of his body, authorities said Monday.

Officers were called to the home Saturday morning, and the child was pronounced dead early Sunday at Brooke Army Medical Center.

Police Detective Anthony Muro said police were continuing to investigate. No charges have been filed.

The baby's mother had been staying at the home for about two months with her 16-year-old boyfriend, Muro said.

On Saturday, the woman went to the store and left the boy in the care of the boyfriend. The boyfriend told police he placed the toddler in the shower and left to answer the telephone. When he returned, he discovered the child had been injured.

■ Officials seek suspects in carjacking, assault

FORT WORTH — A woman says she was raped and sexually assaulted by men who had hijacked her car outside a nursing home.

The abductors were later joined by two other men Sunday night. They repeatedly assaulted the 24-year-old woman and threatened to shoot her before leaving her alongside a road.

The woman was blindfolded and taken on an hourlong drive after her car was commandeered by a gun-wielding suspect.

After the victim said she would surrender the car, one of the suspects told her, "Get over; you're not getting out."

When the pair picked up the two accomplices, the men took cash and valuables from the woman's purse and drove down a dead end street near Loop 820 where she was placed in the car's back seat and molested.

When one of the abductors said he wanted to rape her, another said, "Shoot her when you get finished." But the first answered, "I don't have the guts."

No arrests have been made in the carjacking and attack.

Deliberations begin in murder trial

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal jury began deliberations Tuesday in the trial of three members of a radical polygamist sect accused of killing a young girl and three former members as part of an alleged plot to bring on "the kingdom of God."

Prosecutor Terry Clark called the defendants "murderous missionaries" who killed for God and the promise of obtaining worldly possessions for following their father's religious teachings.

But defense attorneys claimed if their clients killed, they did so as an act of revenge for years of abuse they suffered as children at the hands of three of their victims.

The trial in U.S. District Judge Simeon Lake's court began last Monday and included testimony from Cynthia LeBaron, who took the stand against her half-siblings.

William Heber LeBaron, 28, Patricia LeBaron, 27, and Douglas Lee Barlow, 31, were indicted in the July 27, 1988 fatal shootings, which were carried out almost simultaneously in three locations. If convicted, they face up to life in prison.

Jennifer Chynoweth, 8, her father, Duane Chynoweth, 31, were gunned down in a Houston driveway, while his brother, Mark Chynoweth, 36, was killed in his Houston appliance store. Ed Marston, 32, was murdered in Irving.

The men had abandoned the Church of the First Born of the Lamb of God, founded by the late Ervil LeBaron. Patricia and William are natural children of Lebaron, and Barlow is his stepson.

Prosecutors claim Ervil LeBaron's writings demanded that those who left the church must die to bring about the "kingdom of God."

"These people killed in the name of God Almighty," prosecutor Mike Shelby said during closing arguments Tuesday.

And the spoils, or tangible goods, went to those who brought on the kingdom, he said.

"This man (Ervil LeBaron) was obsessed that these people die because they left his church," Shelby said.

In the 14-count indictment, the three are accused of various charges, including murder-for-hire in the men's deaths and tampering with a federal witness in the girl's slaying.

Prosecutors claimed the promise of gaining worldly goods constitutes murder-for-hire.

But Tom Berg, William Lebaron's attorney, argued the slayings were an act of revenge for years of abuse the defendants suffered while their father was in prison. LeBaron died in 1981 in prison.

The defendants were "enslaved," forced to work long hours and threatened with death if they disobeyed, he said.

"They were murdered for what they did to these children and their families," Berg added.

Defense attorneys also questioned the testimony of Cynthia LeBaron, who was granted immunity and is part of the federal witness protection program.

Three others also were indicted last summer, including Aaron Morel LeBaron, 24, and Jacqueline LeBaron, 26, who are believed to be in Mexico.

Last October, Richard LeBaron, 21, pleaded guilty to charges of tampering with a witness and interstate travel to commit murder for hire in Duane Chynoweth's death. His sentencing is set for Jan. 26.

As part of a plea agreement, federal prosecutors have agreed to recommend Richard LeBaron for the federal witness protection program.

Man wounds 2 in courthouse shooting

DALLAS (AP) — A man opened fire outside a Dallas County courtroom Tuesday, shooting his estranged wife and a teen-age bystander before turning the gun on himself as dozens of others ran for cover.

The shooting was the second in six months in a Metroplex courthouse, renewing concerns over security measures in public buildings.

The 30-year-old man, Van Huynh, and Dang Lee, 26, were in critical condition at Parkland Memorial Hospital with single gunshots to the head late Tuesday afternoon, spokeswoman Michelle Raglon said.

Rogelio Gutierrez, 16, was in fair condition with a gunshot wound to the left leg, Ms. Raglon said.

Officials and witnesses said the man approached the woman in the hallway outside the 304th state District Court about 9:30 a.m.

"I was sitting outside the courtroom at the juvenile court," Robin Presley said. "I heard a shot and I looked to my right. I heard another one so I didn't know whether this person was shooting at someone or if he was just running through shooting."

Added Ms. Presley's husband, Don, "He just came out of nowhere. There were attorneys sitting around talking with people about their cases.

"All the sudden you just heard a gunshot. I kind of turned and looked to see what it was. Then you heard two more gunshots, and everybody was running," he said.

Sheriff's Lt. Larry Forsyth said the couple were on Tuesday's docket for a custody hearing when the shooting broke out. But Sheriff's spokesman Jim Ewell later said authorities were unsure about the nature of their case.

"The guy just walked out in the hallway and shot his wife in the head," Forsyth said. The gunman used a .38-caliber revolver, he said.

Forsyth added that about 25 people were in the hallway outside District Judge Hal Gaither's courtroom.

"I went immediately and locked the courtroom door and herded everybody into the jury room," Gaither said. "Then I went through the back way to see if any of my staff were injured. I saw this young man limping down the hall. I brought him into the courtroom."

Security in the George Allen Courts Building, near the John F. Kennedy Memorial, is light. The only security measure in Gaither's sixth-floor juvenile court when the shooting began was one bailiff, said Ms. Esquibel.

Concerns about court security had been fresh on the minds of judges since last July, when two attorneys were killed and several others injured at a courthouse in neighboring Tarrant County.

George Lott of Arlington is charged with capital murder in the shootings and jury selection in his trial is taking place in Amarillo.

Following the Dallas shooting, Judge Gaither said he would immediately urge Dallas County commissioners to take security measures similar to those in Fort Worth.

"Whatever's going (on) over there they are going to quit right now and get us some security," Gaither said.

Commissioners went into closed session Tuesday afternoon to discuss the shooting. Afterward, County Judge Lee Jackson said the panel would vote Tuesday night on a proposal to add metal detectors and security personnel at all the county's court buildings at a cost of about $900,000 a year.

"The things that we're going to authorize later today are interim improvements," Jackson said.

Forsyth said the shooting should provoke a prompt county response.

THIS IS THE FINEST PUMPING UNIT IN THE OIL INDUSTRY

When it comes to oil, these people know their business. From dry holes to gushers, they understand the business from the ground up, and inside out. And when it comes to United Way, they know the ins and outs and why it's so important to their business. That's why they devoted so many hours in the 1992 campaign to see a record number of dollars flowing down the line to United Way.

The dollars gathered from fellow employees stay in Midland helping Midlanders get back on line. It provides character-development programs for youth, drug recovery support groups, counseling to help families stay together and care for abused and neglected children.

United Way–with this pumping unit in charge, it's a gusher. Thanks to all these employees who worked to make it a top producing year.

Texas United Ways scramble to cope with shortfalls

By Susan Fahlgren
Associated Press writer

United Way affiliates throughout Texas, faced with a tight economy and fallout from a financial scandal involving the national United Way president, are struggling to reach their 1992 fundraising goals.

In Houston, where the United Way's annual drive is in its final two weeks, the agency is $9 million short of its pledge goal. It's the first time the area has fallen below projections since 1986, the height of the oil bust in the state.

Dallas's United Way office reported it fell about $3.5 million short of its goal for the year. Likewise in San Antonio and Austin, officials believed they would fall $700,000 to $800,000 short of their goals.

In the Rio Grande Valley, United Way leaders said the collection would be only slightly off from previous years, while Lubbock officials say they narrowly have met their goal in a tough economic season.

In Midland, the annual fund drive missed its goal by $220,000 — an 8 percent shortfall from the goal of $2,755,000.

"We have made adjustments in our budget. We cut the budget by 8 percent and employees took a pay cut," said Jane Wolf, executive director of the United Way of Midland.

"We also allotted the money to the different agencies equitably, so that everyone experienced some type of cut. We simply made the proper adjustments internally and with the agencies," Ms. Wolf said of how the local group coped with the fund reduction.

Some fundraisers have noted the effect of the financial scandal that wrecked the agency's national office in early 1992. National president William Aramony resigned after it was reported that he was paid a $463,000 salary and received numerous benefits and perks, including a chauffeur and travel on the Concorde.

A recent survey by The Chronicle of Philanthropy of completed United Way campaigns in 25 urban areas found that 15 had taken in less than the year before. Only two, chapters in Miami and Wichita, Kan., showed increases larger than the inflation rate of 3 percent.

"I'm sure there was some impact (from the scandal), but in the Houston community I really don't think it was a major one," Judith Craven, president of the United Way of the Texas Gulf Coast, said.

Instead, she blamed unemployment, particularly the loss of some 25,000 employees in downsizing at companies that traditionally have been good donors.

Ms. Craven said the chapter, which has a $67 million goal, would make an unprecedented public appeal at shopping malls, movie theaters and service stations during the Jan. 29-31 weekend, the final days of its campaign.

Without the money, she warned that the 79 agencies and 280 programs that receive United Way money would face "very painful" cuts.

In Dallas, spokeswoman Jill Elson said the campaign fell about 10 percent short of its $43.5 million goal.

"It was a fairly significant shortfall because the agencies were already on bare-bones budgets," she said. "This shortfall did necessitate across-the-board funding cuts in agencies."

She said big layoffs hit some of the largest corporate contributors.

Newspaper: DWI money is being spent in other areas

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A newspaper reports that little of the money given to the Texas State Troopers Association to fight drunken driving is actually being used that way.

An investigation by the Wichita Falls Times-Record News of TSTA's business records showed that Telcom Productions keeps 75 percent of almost $6 million the telemarketing firm raises each year using TSTA's name.

The TSTA gets 25 percent of the money — but only about $126,000 of that was spent for "attempts to influence public opinion about legislative matters" in 1990, the newspaper reported.

The records also showed that the salaries of TSTA officials rose from about $348,000 in 1989 to about $360,000 in 1991, or almost three times as much as the organization spent in 1990 to "influence legislative matters."

Claude Hart, TSTA president, told the Wichita Falls newspaper he will not talk to reporters by telephone. He was not in his Austin office Tuesday when The Associated Press stopped by.

Steve Roblow, Telcom manager, referred all questions to Hart.

The Better Business Bureau in Wichita Falls said it has been receiving complaints about the TSTA for two years.

The complaints allege that TSTA sends "unsolicited invoices for advertising," which means businesses have received bills for advertising they never agreed to buy, a Better Business Bureau spokeswoman said.

People who donate to TSTA are encouraged to give up to $35, which entitles the donor to window decals flashing the TSTA name.

But there seems to be no benefit to buying a window decal since the donation is not tax-deductible because of the group's classification as a labor organization, according to the Better Business Bureau.

And state troopers in the Wichita Falls area told the newspaper that they treat speeders with the window decals the same as other lawbreakers.

TSTA has also been accused of sending bills to people who never ordered the window decals. Other callers complain about the organization's "high pressure tactics," the spokeswoman said.

A Better Business Bureau report noted that TSTA has been "responsive" to the complaints, but the group still has not eliminated the tactics that caused the complaints.

Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman Mike Cox said the TSTA is not affiliated with the DPS.

Barkley tirade

NEW YORK — Charles Barkley will have to wait another day to hear what the price of his latest breach of the NBA's behavior code will be — a fine, a suspension, or both.
Rod Thorn, the league's vice president of operations and dean of discipline, deferred any action Tuesday after Barkley's post-game tirade and pursuit of official Jim Clark following Phoenix's 106-103 loss to the New York Knicks on Monday.
Barkley vaulted over the scorer's table to chase after Clark at the end of the game. Perturbed by calls all game long, he complained loudly that he had been fouled by Anthony Mason on an last-gasp 3-point shot that turned into an airball. When Clark warned that the outburst would cost him money, Barkley went wild.

Pats' coach

FOXBORO, Mass. — The low-achieving New England Patriots search for a high-profile coach is likely to end this week, with Buddy Ryan and Bill Parcells heading the list of candidates.
There are no indications either is being considered for the other two NFL coaching vacancies, with the New York Giants and Denver Broncos.
Chicago filled its opening Tuesday with Dallas defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt, and Denver apparently is leaning toward San Francisco offensive coordinator Mike Shanahan.

MC women add to league

■ When Midland College begins women's basketball in the 1994-95 season, coaches say the already competitive WJCAC should be enhanced.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

Coaches at the three Western Junior College Athletic Conference schools with nationally recognized women's basketball programs all agree on one thing: The addition of the sport at Midland College will do nothing but improve the conference, and the sport, in West Texas.
On Tuesday, MC's Board of Trustees unanimously agreed to begin the women's hard court game, effective with the 1994-95 season.
Ken Hefner, head coach of the No. 9 ranked Odessa College women; Lyndon Hardin, 10-year head coach at No. 18 South Plains, and Royce Chadwick, in his fourth season at the helm of the No. 1 ranked Howard College Lady Hawks, all feel women's basketball will not only be better in these parts, but more competitive. And they see it happening almost immediately after the MC women first take the floor.

BIG SPRING — When Midland College begins women's basketball in 1994, it would do well to match the feats of the Howard College Lady Hawks and head coach Royce Chadwick.
Chadwick's accomplishments as head coach of the Lady Hawks almost defy description. Literally, his teams have met with virtually nothing but success.
Chadwick's teams posted 27 wins in each of his first two seasons of coaching at Howard. Last season, the Lady Hawks won 26, and Saturday when Howard defeated the Odessa College Wranglers, Howard ran its 1992-93 mark to a 20-0.

■ Dallas' appearance in the Super Bowl adds to an already storied franchise.

By Mike Cochran

DALLAS — In the beginning, 1960, America's Team was just barely Dallas' team.
Back then, the Cowboys weren't even the only team in town. Remember the old Texans of the fledgling American Football League and the zany Dallas football wars?
In 1963, Lamar Hunt took his Texans to Kansas City and renamed them the Chiefs.
In 1960, the Cowboys were just a long-suffering coach named Tom Landry with a dwarf named Eddie LeBaron at quarterback and 40-some-odd castoffs from around the National Football League.
Does Tom Braatz ring a bell? How about Nate Borden or Gene Cronin?
The Cowboys were 0-11-1 that first year, the highlight a 31-31 tie with the New York Giants.
In the long ago loneliness of Cotton Bowl Sundays, a crowd generously estimated at 10,000 showed up to see the 1960 Cowboys lose to the San Francisco 49ers, 26-14.
Last Sunday, a sellout crowd of 64,920 and millions of television viewers watched the Cowboys splash to a 30-20 victory over the 49ers in Candlestick Pond.
That earned America's heroes a Super Bowl date with the Buffalo Bills.
In 1960, there were no Super Bowls and not a whole lot of fans.

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bears dipped into Dallas for another hands-on, emotional coach Tuesday, picking Cowboys defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt to replace Mike Ditka.
Ditka turned the Bears into Super Bowl champions after he came from Dallas 11 years ago, and now the Bears want Wannstedt to work the same magic. That job starts after the Cowboys play the Buffalo Bills in the Super Bowl on Jan. 31.

Lendl ousted in first round

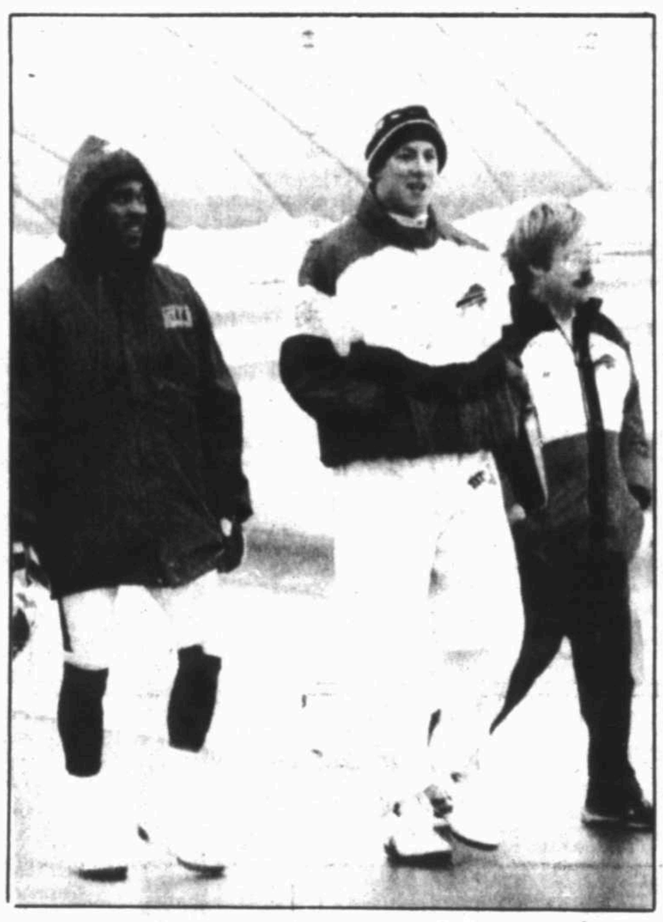

Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia — His glory years gone, his hopes of more Grand Slam victories waning, Ivan Lendl is looking and sounding like a player ripe for retirement.
Lendl faded fast from the Australian Open, disappearing in the first round Tuesday, 6-4, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4 against Christian Bergstrom in a match that showed how far Lendl has sunk and how far he must come back to win again.
The thought of him quitting the game arose not so much from the way he played — awkward, tentative, his strokes out of synch after a long layoff from a groin injury — or from the fact that he hadn't lost in the first round of a Grand Slam since Wimbledon in 1981.

■ AUSTRALIAN OPEN

Rather, it was the realization that, as he approaches 33 in March, his only real goal in tennis, winning Grand Slam events, is slipping away from a combination of age, aches, a growing family, and stronger, faster, younger players.
"I'm moving but I'm not moving fast enough," he conceded. "It's partially due to loss of muscle strength and partially due to the instinct or reaction. The mind says go, and the body says no."

Bills opt for low profile

By John F. Bonfatti

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The Buffalo Bills will try anything to change their Super Bowl luck — even the silent approach.
Unlike past seasons, when their penchant for speaking first and thinking later got them in trouble, the Bills are allowing others to talk while they concentrate on winning.
The Bills, losers of the last two Super Bowls, said trash talk by playoff opponents Houston, Pittsburgh and Miami helped motivate them on their path to a Super Bowl matchup against Dallas on Jan. 31.
"We learned a lot last year in the Super Bowl," nose tackle Jeff Wright said, referring to the Bill's 37-24 loss to Washington. "You can't talk a good game. You've got to show up. Maybe we talked too much and didn't show up."

Seventy-six ask for at least $1 million in arbitration

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Seventy-six of the 100 players who filed for salary arbitration asked for at least $1 million Tuesday in what owners hope will be the final year of the current system.
Rafael Palmeiro, a big winner in arbitration last winter at $3.85 million, leads the list this year at $4.85 million. He is seeking a $1 million raise following a season in which he hit .268 with 22 home runs and 85 RBIs for Texas, while the Rangers offered $4.25 million.
Last year, the 137 players who filed for arbitration averaged a 100 percent increase from $710,000 to $1,425,000 — whether they won, lost or settled. In fact, only 20 players went the full distance to hearings, and 11 of them lost to owners.
World Series MVP Pat Borders was among nine eligible players who settled Tuesday before the exchange of figures. The catcher got a $5 million, two-year contract from Toronto.
In another deal Tuesday, free agent Jeff Reardon, baseball's career saves leader, agreed to a minor-league deal with Cincinnati.
Owners contend they lose in arbitration no matter what happens, claiming players ask for big numbers that almost automatically assure big raises. Last winter, Chicago White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell saw his salary increase 814 percent from $175,000 to $1.6 million, even though he lost in his hearing.
This week, Boston first baseman Carlos Quintana is asking for a raise from $340,000 to $850,000 — even though he was injured in an auto accident before the season started and did not play a single game. The Red Sox offered the same $340,000.
Last week, owners and the players' union began negotiations on a new labor agreement. The owners were the ones who re-opened the talks. Even though the arbitration system is set in place for this season, teams want to change the struc-

MCS jumped out to a 21-9 lead after the first quarter, but by the end of the third quarter, Rankin had closed it to three, and trailed 49-46. Rankin outscored MCS 29-23 in the final eight minutes for the win.

Terps upset Sooners

Associated Press

■ TOP 25 ROUNDUP

BALTIMORE — Maryland shut down No. 12 Oklahoma's high-powered offense and Evers Burns scored 22 points as the Terrapins halted a four-game losing streak with an 89-78 victory Tuesday night.

Maryland (9-5) never trailed after limiting Oklahoma to just 31 points in the first half. The Sooners (12-4), who came in with a nation-best 97.2 points per game average, made only 22 of 63 shots (35 percent).

Half of Oklahoma's losses have come against Atlantic Coast Conference foes. Two weeks ago, Duke beat the Sooners in overtime.

No. 2 Indiana 74, No. 13 Purdue 65

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Calbert Cheaney scored 33 points and No. 2 Indiana held Big Ten scoring leader Glenn Robinson to three points in the last eight minutes in beating the No. 13 Boilermakers.

Robinson's last basket cut Indiana's lead — once as big as 15 — to 62-57 with just over three minutes to go. But the Purdue sophomore picked up his fourth foul seconds later, and the Hoosiers scored 10 of their final 12 points on free throws.

After a basket by Matt Painter brought Purdue (11-3, 2-3 Big Ten) within 66-59, the Boilermakers fouled Indiana (16-2, 5-0) on every possession.

No. 9 Cincinnati 103, Chicago St. 43

CINCINNATI — Corie Blount turned his first home-court appearance of the season into a personal practice session, scoring a career-high 20 points as No. 9 Cincinnati overwhelmed Chicago State.

Cincinnati (12-1) used its talent mismatch to work on its half-court game, which has sorely missed Blount. The 6-foot-10 senior center rejoined the team Saturday after the NCAA restored his eligibility.

Blount, a centerpiece of Cincinnati's Final Four team last year, became the focal point again as the Bearcats had an easy time against a 2-14 team known for losing big — Chicago State has eight losses of 40 or more points in the last three seasons.

No. 10 Seton Hall 66, Villanova 61, OT

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Seton Hall made just three field goals over the game's final 15 minutes, but the 10th-ranked Pirates made 12 of 14 free throws in overtime to hold off Villanova.

The game was Seton Hall's first since having an 11-game winning streak snapped by Pittsburgh on Saturday night. The loss was the fifth straight for the Wildcats, all Big East Conference games.

The game was played at a slow, methodical pace that was reflected in the scoring. Arron Bain's layup with 4:46 to play brought the Wildcats (5-7, 1-5) into a 50-50 tie.

Coogs down Baylor, 83-77

■ SWC ROUNDUP

HOUSTON — Charles Outlaw scored 21 points and Derrick Smith added 16 of his 18 points in the second half as Houston fought off Baylor's 3-point barrage for an 83-77 Southwest Conference victory Tuesday night.

The Cougars (10-2 overall, 3-0 in SWC games) won their fifth in a row and snapped the Bears' (10-3, 2-1) five-game winning streak.

Houston kept pulling away from Baylor, but the Bears wouldn't stay down. They stayed close in the final minute when injured Aundre Branch hits two of his four 3-pointers.

Texas 79, Murray St. 74

MURRAY, Ky. — Michael Richardson scored four of his 35 points in the final 45 seconds to lead Texas to a victory over Murray State.

Murray (8-7) went up 74-73 with 2:29 left on a free throw by Maurice Cannon.

But the Longhorns (6-7), breaking a five-game losing streak, regained the lead at 75-74 on two free throws by Richardson with 45 seconds to go. After a turnover by the Racers, Tommy Penders also hit a pair of free throws.

Mavs win third game

■ NBA ROUNDUP

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks, on a pace to finish with the worst record in NBA history, won for the third time in 33 games Tuesday night, surprising the Detroit Pistons 113-103.

Spurs 121, Nuggets 110

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson, coming off a 52-point game on Saturday, scored 29 points as the San Antonio Spurs defeated the Denver Nuggets for their seventh consecutive victory, one shy of the franchise record.

Hawks 102, Hornets 100

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Jon Koncak's only basket of the game — a tip-in at the buzzer — gave the Atlanta Hawks a victory over the Charlotte Hornets.

Pacers 116, Bullets 96

INDIANAPOLIS — Reggie Miller scored 12 of his 25 points during the decisive third quarter, lifting the Indiana Pacers to a victory over the Washington Bullets.

Blazers 119, Bucks 92

MILWAUKEE — Clyde Drexler scored 21 points and Terry Porter and Cliff Robinson 20 each as the Portland Trail Blazers broke away in the second quarter and sent the Milwaukee Bucks to their seventh straight defeat.

WOMEN: MC wants West Texas talent to fill team good for us as far as scheduling goes," Hefner said. "If MC puts a lot of thought into it, like they do all their sports, it'll be a first class program.

(From 1C)

"I think if they hire someone familiar with the conference and in-state recruiting, they'll be competitive in their first year. If it's someone outside of the conference, it might take a couple of years."

Hefner said he felt the number of applicants to head the program will be "surprising," saying that he felt at least "two or three" present WJCAC coaches would throw their name in the ring.

"What'll be amazing," Hefner added, "is how the girl's sport can enhance the attendance of the boy's games."

Hardin mirrored Hefner's thought that at least two, maybe three WJCAC coaches would apply.

"Abundant," is how Hardin desribes the number of applicants MC can expect. "It'll be a big choice to choose from all of them."

In addition, Hardin feels the new sport, "will be good for Midland public schools. It can be a two-way street. It's been good here in Levelland for us.

"It just creates more interest in the sport. It'll give the girls the opportunity to go across town and see some quality basketball."

"The thing with Midland coming in," Howard's Chadwick said, "is that it adds power to our league. OC, South Plains, Howard, New Mexico JC, they all have a commitment to succeed. Now you've added Midland to that."

And what of the facility, Chaparral Center?

" 'Sports Illustrated' says it's the No. 1 JC facility in the country," Hefner said. "When you have that in the town, and everything else Midland has, then it's a plus."

No coaches are known to have officially declared their interest in becoming MC's first women's coach. But the qualities Hardin, Hefner and Chadwick possess would seem to fit the criteria of MC president Dr. David Daniel.

"We'd like to have someone who has coached," Daniel said. "Someone who'll recruit from our region. We'd very much like to have talent from West Texas on this team. And (the coach) has to keep in proper perspective the student athlete, with an emphasis on the student."

Added MC head coach Steve Green of the inclusion of the women's sport: "I don't see one negative at all. Not one single one."

CHADWICK: Lady Hawks climb to top ranking has won 100 games in less than four seasons.

(From 1C)

In addition, the Lady Hawks' 91-90 win over OC Saturday moved them from a No. 4 ranking to No. 1 in the country in the latest junior college women's basketball poll.

He knows the game of women's basketball. And he knows it well.

"Women's basketball helps make a rounded athletic program on any campus," Chadwick said. "It helps the whole college atmosphere. We do a great service for our school over here."

Chadwick feels the growth potential for the sport in the region is enhanced after Midland College voted Tuesday to establish the sport effective with the 1994-95 season.

"There's a place in every junior college for women's basketball," Chadwick said. "It adds to the females on campus and it gives people the opportunity to go and root for their team. It brings new life and new blood to the campus to have female athletes, and there are a great number of girls basketball players in high school capable of playing in college."

Chadwick, who also serves as the athletic director at Howard, is a West Texas native who started his coaching career at Olton. His roots in the area have led him to recruit heavily in West Texas.

His approach to the game is probably not entirely unique, but it is a breath of fresh air. Until this season, Chadwick's wife, Lisa, served as his assistant for eight years. Mrs. Chadwick finally gave up the bench for the classroom when she accepted a job as an elementary school teacher in Big Spring.

"It was a family operation," Chadwick said of his program. "She was picking them up, dusting them off. And it was very beneficial to go to a high school kid's home and say, 'Look mom and dad, we're going to have your girl in a mom and dad program.' "

When Mrs. Chadwick stepped down, Terry Gray took over the assistant's job. Gray, prior to coaching at Wharton High School, was an assistant when Chadwick was the head coach at Sam Houston State University, a Division I program in Huntsville.

Much like it runs through the family of Steve Green, MC's men's coach, coaching is in the Chadwick family. Before retiring to Arizona, Chadwick's father, Kelly, served as a women's coach at Amarillo College and Western Texas, where the junior Chadwick beat his father in all nine meetings the two had.

His teams' successes, Chadwick claims, come not entirely from his own coaching expertise, but from the backing he has received in Big Spring.

"One of the main reasons at Howard we've been successful was the commitment we've had from the administration," he said. "In this league, you're only as good as your administration will allow you to be. If you're gonna do it, do it the right way. If they'll give you the resources and you work hard and do the right thing, you'll have a good program."

Not only was Chadwick selected the Western Junior College Athletic Conference Women's Coach of the Year in each of his first three years at Howard, but last year he was named National JUCO Coach of the Year among the women's coaches. Although the conference honors were very nice, Chadwick said, it is the national trophy that takes front-row honors in his trophy case.

BASEBALL: Salaries rise

(From 1C)

ture by next winter.

Overall, 154 players have won their cases and 186 have lost since the salary arbitration system started before the 1974 season.

For now, though, there's not much relief in sight. Kansas City relief pitcher Jeff Montgomery is seeking $4.3 million, the second-largest amount asked for, and Toronto relief pitcher Duane Ward wants $4.2 million.

Others asking for at least $4 million are Chicago Cubs first baseman Mark Grace, Cincinnati pitcher Tim Belcher and McDowell.

Atlanta pitcher John Smoltz, the MVP of the National League playoffs, is among 23 players asking for at least $3 million. He wants $3.5 million and the Braves offered $2.9 million.

Last year, 87 of the 137 players (64 percent) asked for $1 million or more. Twenty players wanted at least $3 million.

Cecil Fielder led last year's list with a record request of $5.4 million, and he eventually settled with the Tigers at $4.5 million.

COWBOYS: '66 began win streak

(From 1C)

Cotton Bowl as the Los Angeles Rams trimmed the Cowboys, 38-13. Another 18,500 were there when Philadelphia beat Dallas, 27-25.

Only 23,500 witnessed the team's first victory, a 27-24 thriller over Pittsburgh in the '61 season opener.

That same year, Dallas used its first draft pick to get Bob Lilly, a defensive tackle from Texas Christian. He would be a seven-time All-Pro selection and the team's first inductee into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Even before receiving its NFL franchise, Dallas signed a quarterback out of Southern Methodist named Don Meredith and a running back from New Mexico named Don Perkins.

Perkins, the NFL's rookie of the year in 1961, was a six-time Pro Bowl selection and among the top 10 rushers in each of his eight seasons.

Meredith, who usually played hurt and always with heart, took the Cowboys to their first winning season and first NFL championship game in 1966. They lost to Vince Lombardi and the Green Bay Packers in the Cotton Bowl, 34-27.

Still, the 1966 campaign was the beginning of a streak unmatched in NFL history: 20 consecutive winning seasons and 18 trips to the playoffs.

Meredith led the Cowboys back to the championship game in 1967 for the infamous Ice Bowl in Green Bay. The Packers' won it, 21-17, but the seeds of America's Team were sown.

Meredith's lusty lifestyle and charisma contributed mightily to the emerging Dallas presence but more important were events dating back to 1964.

That was the year Landry, Tex Schramm, Gil Brandt and Co. drafted defensive back Mel Renfro and wide receiver Bob Hayes, who, with linebackers Chuck Howley and Lee Roy Jordan, would make Dallas a powerhouse for years to come.

But 1964 was also the year they named quarterback Roger Staubach as a future draft choice.

Staubach did not join the Cowboys until 1969 after completing his naval career. But before retiring in 1980, "Captain Comeback" would lead Dallas to six NFC championship games and four of tis five Super Bowls, winning two.

In 1985, he followed Lilly into the Hall of Fame. Landry and Schramm would be so honored in the 1990s.

With his health on the decline, along with his team's fortunes, owner Clint Murchison Jr. sold the Cowboys in 1984 to a group headed by Dallas businessman H.R. "Bum" Bright.

Dallas won its 13th division title in 1985 but lost to the Rams in the playoffs and began a steady slide toward NFL obscurity.

The Cowboys were 3-13 in 1988, Landry's last campaign. Arkansas multimillionaire Jerry Jones bought the team in 1989 and brought in his pal Jimmy Johnson as coach.

Jones and Johnson survived the shakiest of starts, including a public relations fiasco and a 1-15 season, and guided Dallas back into the playoffs in 1991.

The breakup of the Soviet Union has had a dramatic effect on the World Bridge Federation. Several of the newly independent states applied for membership and will be playing in the 1993 European Championships. This hand is from Estonia's Trials to select a team for that event.

South's one club opening was artificial and forcing, showing 16 points or more. The rest of the auction proceeded naturally, although it would appear that North-South need a mechanism for penalizing the opponents at low levels. A double of one heart would have paid handsomely and there was nowhere for East-West to run, let alone hide.

Against three no trump West led a fourth-best spade. Declarer played low from dummy and, had East won the king, it would have taken double-dummy defense to defeat the contract. East must shift to the jack of clubs, covered by the queen and taken with the ace. East overtakes West's club return and declarer must hold up. Now a diamond shift nets the defenders five tricks.

All that turned out to be mere speculation—East followed with the eight of spades to the first trick! Declarer won and, not surprisingly, continued by taking the "marked" finesse of the jack of spades. When it lost, not even Houdini could conjure up nine tricks.

New York mayor negotiates to keep 'Letterman' in city

NEW YORK — Mayor David Dinkins' aides are talking with producers of David Letterman's nighttime talk show in hopes of keeping the program in the city.

Letterman, who recently announced his show would move from NBC to CBS in August, said he wanted to remain in New York but would consider moving production to the West Coast.

Robert Morton, Letterman's executive producer, said he was contacted by Richard Brick, the head of the mayor's Office of Film, Theater and Broadcasting, according to a New York Post story Tuesday.

"I made an offer to help," Brick told the Post. "I, as a city official, am deeply concerned about the decision the Letterman people still have to make.

"David Letterman is New York," he said. "His show is the quintessential New York show."

Brick said they'll meet again Wednesday, but would not discuss any proposals offered to keep the show in the city.

WILLISTON, Vt. — Jerry (as in Ben & Jerry's ice cream) wants to enter politics.

Jerry Greenfield said he plans to run for a seat on the Williston Board of Selectmen in March. Town elections in Williston, a suburb of 4,800 people east of Burlington, are nonpartisan.

"I've been very active in the town and have been going to gobs of select board meetings, and I thought if I'm that interested I ought to try to run," Greenfield said this week.

Greenfield and partner Ben Cohen parlayed their ice cream shop in an abandoned Burlington gas station into a huge ice cream manufacturing enterprise that now boasts annual sales of about $100 million.

Greenfield is a member of Williston Citizens for Responsible Growth, which has fought plans for a shopping mall and a Wal-Mart store, both of which would have been built on farm fields.

Greenfield said if he wins a seat in the March 2 election, he will resign from the group.

LOS ANGELES — Bill Clinton and pro golfer Tommy Bolt have been linked since the early 1960s, when the future president was a teen-ager in Arkansas.

"I probably met him way back when he was a kid, because he told me that he caddied in the same group with me in the Hot Springs Open," Bolt said Monday at Riviera Country Club.

"That's why I voted for him, because he was a caddy."

The two were playing partners a couple of times in recent years — at the Tommy Bolt Invitational and in the Phillips Pro Celebrity Tournament in 1991 Arkansas.

"He plays every chance he gets and he's about a 10 or 12-handicapper," said Bolt, the 1958 U.S. Open champion. "He played most every weekend when he was governor."

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Alan Arkin stars in the made-for-TV movie "Cooperstown" as a mediocre ex-baseball player who dreams of being immortalized in the Hall of Fame anyway.

Any local flavor in the film will be purely Hollywood magic, though.

The story is set in the upstate New York village that is home to the National Baseball Hall of Fame, but it was shot entirely in Los Angeles, said Jeff Matteson, a spokesman for Turner Network Television.

Hall of Fame associate director William Guilfoile said he read an early version of the script and relayed some comments to the producers.

"I think they contacted us out of courtesy, and probably to check some factual content, but actually I don't have a very good idea of what the final product will be like," Guilfoile said.

The two-hour film, directed by Charles Haid of "Hill Street Blues" acting fame, will be broadcast on TNT Jan. 26. It co-stars Graham Greene, Hope Lange and Josh Charles.

LOS ANGELES — Nancy Reagan's anti-drug foundation awarded nearly $500,000 this month in grants to organizations across the country.

The nonprofit Nancy Reagan Foundation has awarded more than $3.7 million since January 1989, for drug education, prevention and treatment. Fifteen recent recipients got $473,510.

The largest grants of $50,000 apiece went to The American Council for Drug Education in Rockville, Md.; Ohio Parents for Drug Free Youth in Columbus, Ohio; Optimist International in St. Louis; Partnership for a Drug-Free Community Inc., in Huntsville, Ala.; and the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville, Ark.

Second Genesis Inc., a drug treatment program in Bethesda, Md., got $25,000.

"We are delighted and honored that Mrs. Reagan continues to support this program. In our times of most serious need, she has always been there with assistance," said Sidney Shankman, executive director of Second Genesis.

The foundation was established by Mrs. Reagan to continue the anti-drug crusade she began as first lady, highlighted by her "Just Say No" campaign.

Prices fall

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, energy futures fell across the board amid perceptions of lessening tensions between the United States and Iraq.

West Texas Intermediate for February delivery settled down 29 cents at $18.58 a barrel.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian and Navajo Refining lowered their posted price 25 cents to $17.25 per barrel.

February natural gas contracts slipped 5.2 cents to $1.551 per 1,000 cubic feet.

The market has been suffering from abundant supply, and word from Saddam Hussein that Iraq is imposing a unilateral cease-fire in a no-fly zone in the country's northern and southern regions raised the possibility of a rapprochement with Western nations and resumption of oil shipments.

T-bills fall

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities fell in Tuesday's auction to the lowest level since October.

The Treasury Department sold $11.6 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.03 percent, down from 3.07 percent last week. An additional $11.7 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.13 percent, down from 3.19 percent last week.

The three-month bill rate was the lowest since they sold for 2.97 percent on Oct. 26. The six-month bill rate was the lowest since they averaged 3.10 percent on Oct. 19.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar retreated against most currencies Tuesday, a decline traders attributed to an adverse tax proposal in Germany, a record loss at IBM and rising skepticism about the Clinton administration's credibility.

In late New York trading the dollar fetched 125.50 yen, down from 125.55 yen late Monday.

The New York the British pound fetched $1.5465, cheaper than its $1.5510 value late Monday.

Stocks fall

NEW YORK — A late round of selling pushed blue-chip stock prices lower Tuesday, keeping the market in the sluggish pattern that has prevailed so far in 1993.

But bank stocks bucked the trend, advancing strongly on upbeat earnings reports as the industry continues its comeback from the credit crunch of the early '90s.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 18.92 points to 3,255.99.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 12 to 11 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Nasdaq composite index slipped 1.32 to 696.81. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .05 at 403.84.

Bentsen may alter methods

■ By changing how it borrows money, Treasury Department can bring down long-term interest rates and stimulate the ecomomy.

By Jonathan Fuerbringer
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — With the inauguration of the Clinton presidency today, the bond market should find out soon if the Treasury Department under Lloyd Bentsen will fiddle with its debt-management levers to stimulate the economy and cut the record federal budget deficit.

By simply shifting billions of dollars of long-term Treasury borrowing to shorter maturities with lower interest rates, the government could lower its borrowing costs by billions of dollars a year, some analysts argue.

And by doing so, according to some theories, the Treasury could also bring down the level of long-term interest rates, which economists agree are still restraining the economy's recovery.

No decision has been made yet, said Jack R. DeVore, who is press secretary to Bentsen, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. But there is talk about such a shift in the mix of borrowing.

The idea was discussed at the economic conference that President-elect Clinton held in Little Rock, Ark., in December. And Clinton's own campaign program outline, "Putting People First," includes savings of $2 billion a year in fiscal 1994, 1995 and 1996 from reform of debt financing.

Such reform is an attractive option for a new administration struggling to get a sluggish economy moving enough to create millions of new jobs and to find any way — especially if it is painless — to drain off some red ink.

But it is not all that easy, as is made clear by the division over the plan on Wall Street, the home of the biggest participants in the $2.3 trillion government securities market.

If Bentsen does shift the mix of Treasury borrowing, traders of 30-year bonds will be happy. They believe that a reduction in the supply of these long-term bonds will help push up the price, bringing a little more profit to Wall Street.

Traders say that the price of the 30-year bond has already moved higher in anticipation of such a move.

But a lot of their colleagues are going to be asking if the promise of lower borrowing costs as a way to cut the deficit is just more smoke and mirrors from Washington and wondering how effective the new administration will be in reining in the deficit.

Economists on and off of Wall Street will be debating how much long-term interest rates are likely to come down and what kind of impact that will have on the economy. And everyone will be wondering if this kind of manipulation of the government securities market is worth it.

"I'd rather have a steady stream of maturities here," said James S. Fralick, principal senior economist at Morgan Stanley & Co.

The reluctance on Wall Street is not merely based on analyses. Change is not popular there. What would help long-term debt traders would hurt others. The Treasury and the Federal Reserve, which have studied this issue a lot, acknowledge that there could some small benefits in shifting the mix of borrowing toward shorter-term rates.

But they are reluctant to tamper with markets, especially with the kinds of shifts that some argue would mean big savings in borrowing costs.

IBM reports $5 billion loss for 1992

NEW YORK (AP) — IBM on Tuesday reported a 1992 loss of nearly $5 billion — the biggest in U.S. corporate history.

The financial disaster at the pioneering computer company included double-digit sales declines of core products and a quarterly loss from regular operations — IBM's first ever — in the last three months of the year.

Like other big companies that dominated an industry, the 79-year-old International Business Machine Corp. has been battered by a huge bureaucracy and a failure to innovate quickly enough to embrace new markets and technologies.

IBM's net losses of $5.46 billion for the fourth quarter and $4.97 billion for the year both were the worst in U.S. corporate history. Without a $1.9 billion benefit from accounting rules changes, IBM would have lost $6.87 billion.

But Ford Motor Co. is expected to report an even bigger loss for 1992, $7.5 billion, because of required accounting rules changes lowering earnings. IBM made those changes in 1991.

IBM's annual loss exceeds a $4.45 billion decline in 1991 at General Motors Corp. The worst previous quarterly loss was $4.87 billion at American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in 1987.

IBM's sales fell for an unprecedented second straight year, while job cuts totaled 40,000 and will reach nearly 100,000 over three years by the end of 1993.

IBM's stock, above $100 a share last summer, has fallen to levels unseen since 1975. On Tuesday, IBM closed down another $1.12½ at $48.37½ in heavy New York Stock Exchange trading of more than 5 million shares.

"Our financial results are not acceptable to us or our shareholders," IBM Chairman John F. Akers said.

"We are taking aggressive actions to improve our competitiveness and profitability by addressing the accelerating changes that are sweeping our industry, while adjusting for weakened business conditions throughout the world," he said.

With a smaller work force, big equipment reductions and new structure giving its 13 business units more autonomy, IBM said it planned no further changes. But it warned that prospects for 1993 were not good, particularly overseas, where operations lost $560 million last year.

Analysts said IBM's quarterly and annual results were consistent with or slightly worse than expectations. IBM reduced fourth-quarter earnings by $7.2 billion before taxes to pay for its latest restructuring, up from $6 billion estimated when the cuts were announced in December.

Midlander opens special-care facility

By Mella McEwen

Midlander Tommy Baxter has opened UNLIMITED CARE, offering constant medical care. The company has recently been licensed by the state of Texas as a special care facility.

McEwen

"What we do," he explained, "is buy a house and hire a caregiver. We only care for three patients in one house, so we usually buy a four-bedroom house where each one can have their own private room. And we provide all levels of care, from minimal assistance in daily living to deeper levels of care."

He said the company already has a house in Midland and will open additional houses as present houses are filled. He also has facilities in Odessa.

He said Unlimited Care was started because there was a need seen for the facility. He added that he had talked with a friend in Plainview who went to Fort Worth to meet with a woman there who started the special care facility concept seven years ago, which is how he came in contact with the concept. "This is locally owned," he said, "but it's kind of a franchise. The concept came out of Fort Worth, but we're implementing it locally."

The company is located at 601 N. Marienfeld, Suite 200, 570-6619.

Hours are from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

BLESS YOUR HEART, with two restaurants in Midland, has expanded its menu to include over 250 meal combinations. Hours have also been expanded so the restaurants — located in the Texas National Bank building, Wadley and Midkiff, and at 508 W. Wall — will be open for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

In addition, the restaurants have computerized their menu items to be able to provide a computer-generated diet that includes information on various activities and how many calories they use up and a week's worth of menus, complete with nutritional information. For those who eat four or meals a week at either location, the diet plans are free; cost is $5 for those who eat there fewer than four times weekly. The diets can be customized to account for food allergies or dietary requirements or preferences.

In a similar vein, THE DIET CENTER at 2034-A W. Cuthbert offers the "Exclusively You Weight Management" program.

■Student may have acted out King plot

GRAYSON, Ky. (AP) — An honor student accused of fatally shooting a teacher and janitor at a high school had written a book report on a Stephen King novel in which a student shoots a teacher and holds a class hostage, a classmate said.

Classes were canceled Tuesday at East Carter High School, while authorities tried to figure out what provoked the student, who held a class hostage during Monday's rampage.

Scott Pennington, 17, was charged with two capital murder charges and 22 counts of kidnapping in the 15-minute standoff.

Police said Pennington walked into his senior English class Monday afternoon, pulled a .38 caliber revolver and fired a shot over the head of teacher Deanna McDavid. Pennington then stepped closer to McDavid, 48, and fired another shot that struck her in the temple.

East Carter senior Crystal Dyer, who said she witnessed the shooting, said Pennington may have been influenced by a King novel, "Rage," in which a deranged student shoots a teacher and holds a class hostage. Dyer said Pennington had earlier written a book report on "Rage."

■Carlsbad cavers discover new passage

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK, N.M. (AP) — An eight-day expedition into remote Lechuguilla Cave has mapped the cave at 61.5 miles, about a mile and a half longer than its previously known length.

More than a mile of new passage was mapped in the cave's far east section and additional finds were mapped in the northwest passage, said Carlsbad Caverns National Park Superintendent Frank Deckert.

Eighteen cavers from eight states, led by Miles Hecker of Wyoming, took part in the expedition that ended Jan. 10.

Lechuguilla is the eighth-longest cave in the world and the deepest in the United States at 1,593 feet.

■Man gets 80 years for family murders

SEATTLE (AP) — A man convicted of hacking his wife and two children to death, then stashing their bodies in a storage locker for 12 years, was sentenced Tuesday to 80 years in prison.

Mark James Bender Jr., 50, pleaded guilty in December to three counts of first-degree murder in the April 1980 deaths of his former wife, Barbara, 35, and sons Mark, 15, and Brian, 8.

Bender's current wife, Anna, and stepdaughter, Tracy, wept when the sentence was read. They had asked King County Superior Court Judge Anne Ellington for a lenient sentence.

Bender had told Ellington when he pleaded guilty that he didn't want to subject his family to the ordeal of a trial.

The locker's contents were discovered last summer after Mrs. Bender stopped making rental payments on the storage space without Bender's knowledge.

■Former judge begins serving sentence

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A former Colorado judge surrendered to federal authorities Tuesday in El Paso, Texas, to begin serving a sentence for taking $143,000 from five clients of his financial investment business.

George M. Bollinger, 53, of Albuquerque arrived at the minimum security federal prison camp at Biggs Army Air Field about 12:30 p.m., said Michael Ginster, community corrections manager for the federal Bureau of Prisons in El Paso.

U.S. District Judge James Parker on Dec. 4 sentenced Bollinger to a year in prison on a federal mail fraud charge and ordered that he surrender Tuesday to begin serving his sentence.

Bollinger had entered a pre-indictment guilty plea to the charge in September.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Bob Baca said Bollinger obtained between $15,000 and $50,000 from five people, supposedly for investments in 1989 and 1990. Baca said Bollinger used the money for himself.

Investigators try to determine cause of crash

GARY, Ind. (AP) — Like motorists after a car crash, both engineers in a deadly commuter train collision claim they had the green light, according to published reports.

Federal investigators were trying to determine on Tuesday whether both engineers were right and a signal malfunctioned, or one of them made a mistake and caused the crash that killed seven people and injured 69 on Monday morning. Two of the injured remained in critical condition.

One train sideswiped the other near a narrow trestle where the two tracks converge and overlap. The "gantlet" trestle is marked on both sides by signal lights.

The signals were working when tested hours after the 9:30 a.m. crash, and other signaling equipment was being checked Tuesday, authorities said.

Both crews — an engineer and conductor on each train — said they had the green light, an unidentified railroad official told the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Sun-Times in reports published Tuesday.

Investigator Michael Benson of the National Transportation Safety Board replied: "It's too early for us to have anything on that." NTSB officials arrived at the crash site Tuesday morning.

The signals are designed to give the right of way to the first train to reach the bridge, said Gerald Hanas, general manager of the Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District, which operates the trains that crashed.

The eastbound train was carrying about 35 people on two cars from Chicago to Gary, about a 30-mile trip. That train normally carries about 180 people; ridership was down because of the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

The westbound train was carrying about 65 people on three cars from South Bend to Chicago.

"We look at two factors here: either human error or signal error," Hanas said.

The engineers and conductors from both trains were suspended with pay while the crash is investigated, Parsons said.

The engineer on the eastbound train, David Riordan, had been disciplined for his role in 1985 crash in Gary that injured 85 people, Hanas said.

Riordan was a dispatcher during that crash and was demoted afterward to engineer, said Hanas, who wouldn't elaborate.

The two engineers and two conductors weren't seriously hurt. Results of routine drug and alcohol tests done after the crash weren't available Tuesday.

Kidnapped girl gives account of 16-day captivity

BAY SHORE, N.Y. (AP) — Ten-year-old Katie Beers said in a detailed statement that her captor threatened to hang himself shortly before telling police about the underground dungeon where she was held for 16 days.

A source close to the case read The Associated Press excerpts from a transcript of the girl's statement she gave police hours after her release.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Tuesday that Katie sat informally, snacking on soda and potato chips, as she gave her statement to a female detective Wednesday.

"Last night, I told John that I was sick and I had to see a doctor. He said, 'You're going to have to wait,' and he left," said Katie.

"Before he left, he told me that he was going to hang himself and leave a note on him and the police would find me today."

Instead, John Esposito, 43, went to his attorneys, and eventually led police to an elaborately concealed, underground vault beneath his Bay Shore home, where Katie was found.

On Tuesday, a prosecutor told a judge that a Suffolk County grand jury had returned an indictment against Esposito on charges that were not immediately made public.

A source familiar with the investigation said the indictment includes kidnapping, sex abuse and other charges.

Katie told police that on Dec. 28, she and Esposito had bought a doll and gone to a convenience store and then to his house, where she played a "Home Alone" video game.

"Then he started kissing me. . . . He started unrolling the rugs and then I was in like a cave. I was in a tunnel. . . . John was pulling me through. He said he was going to kidnap me," she said.

She said Esposito told her "to make a recording to play to Aunt Linda. . . . He told me to say a man kidnapped me and he has a knife."

Instead, "John went upstairs for something, so I made another tape telling Aunt Linda Big John had me," she said, referring to her godmother, Linda Inghilleri.

When Esposito heard what she'd done, he made her re-record the message, she said. "I was crying because I wanted to go home."

Beginning two days after her abduction, "He would handcuff me and had a chain around my neck. He did this because I was banging on the ceiling."

At another point, Katie told police that Esposito touched her in a sexual manner on several occasions during her captivity.

Katie is now in foster care awaiting the outcome of a custody battle between her mother, Marilyn, and the county.

Allen, Farrow agree to therapy for daughter, visitation for son

NEW YORK (AP) — Woody Allen and Mia Farrow have agreed to resume therapy for the 7-year-old adopted daughter he is accused of abusing and to resume visits between Allen and their 5-year-old son, sources said Tuesday.

Both sides in what has become one of the nation's most public custody suits agreed that the daughter, Dylan, should again undergo the therapy from which Farrow withdrew her about six months ago.

The staffers at Yale-New Haven Hospital who spoke to Dylan to determine whether she had been sexually molested approved of the therapy, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity. They said Farrow will choose the therapist but Allen has final approval.

Allen's visits with Satchel, 5, the former lovers' only biological child, will be scheduled by agreement, perhaps by next week, the sources said.

They said the filmmaker will ask for visits with Dylan some time in the near future, when he feels it is in her best interests.

The therapy for the girl and visitation with both children were among Allen's requests in motions argued last week in Manhattan's state Supreme Court. Sources said Allen has withdrawn those particular petitions.

Allen, 57, and Farrow, 47, are in a custody fight over Satchel, Dylan and an adopted son, Moses, 14. The actress, who had been Allen's lover and favorite leading lady for 12 years, accused him in August of sexually abusing Dylan.

Connecticut and New York authorities are investigating the abuse charge.

Farrow, who has 11 adopted and biological children, learned last January that Allen was romantically involved with her oldest daughter, Soon-Yi Previn, 21, after finding nude pictures of Previn taken in Allen's apartment.

Farrow adopted Previn while married to Andre Previn.

Farrow moved in court to void the adoptions of Dylan and Moses, charging that Allen "defrauded" her and the court because he hid his "virtually incestuous relationship" with Previn.

Justice accuses FBI head of 'taking advantage' of position

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department reprimanded FBI Director William S. Sessions for "taking advantage of the government" for extensive personal travel and ordered him to reimburse the Treasury, according to documents released Tuesday.

A report by the agency's Office of Professional Responsibility said it found a widespread pattern of misconduct that was "inconsistent with that expected of the head of the nation's premier law enforcement agency."

Before he left office last week, former Attorney General William P. Barr sternly rebuked Sessions in a letter for repeatedly using FBI aircraft for personal trips and justifying billing the government by arranging to attend functions of "trivial, if any, value to the government."

Barr's letter said he was "most troubled" by Sessions' effort to avoid paying taxes on the use of a government-supplied limousine that takes him to and from work.

Sessions obtained a law-enforcement exemption to paying the tax by relying on what Barr called a "transparently wrong" legal opinion that he could carry a gun in his briefcase.

OPR also found that Sessions:

■ Routinely set up speaking engagements or other official appearances to justify personal trips at government expense.

■ Improperly billed the FBI nearly $10,000 to build a wooden privacy fence around his house against the advice of bureau experts who said that only one made of wrought-iron would improve security.

■ Spent nearly eight times the $5,000 limit to redecorate his FBI office without consulting the agency's legal counsel. He ordered bureau technicians to build a handmade cabinet for his office, which took the employees 892 hours to construct.

■ Jeopardized his security by giving rides to friends in the FBI limousine and routinely ignored procedures set up for his security detail.

■ Violated counterintelligence regulations by failing to report contact with Soviets when he gave two Kirov Ballet dancers a ride in an FBI car.

"The notion that you could convert an executive chauffeur-driven limousine into a tactical police vehicle by keeping an unloaded gun in the trunk does not even pass the 'red face test."

—Attorney General William P. Barr

In his Jan. 15 letter disciplining Sessions, Barr said "the evidence supporting the report's conclusions is overwhelming and your explanations, where provided, are wholly unpersuasive."

Justice Department officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, predicted that Sessions would have difficulty remaining in office in the wake of the report's findings. By law, the director serves a 10-year term and can only be fired by the president.

In a statement, a defiant Sessions charged that "this process has been conducted without the barest elements of fairness, and marked by press leaks calculated to defame me."

Sessions said he would follow Barr's order to pay the taxes for the use of the limousine "if it is true that the exemption was not warranted."

But Barr's order was described by department officials as a "final agency action" that Sessions must obey.

Barr left little doubt that he regarded the tax exemption was inappropriate, saying: "The notion that you could convert an executive chauffeur-driven limousine into a tactical police vehicle by keeping an unloaded gun in the trunk does not even pass the 'red face test.'"

Barr also ordered Sessions to pay the government nearly $10,000 for the installation of the wooden privacy fence. OPR concluded that Sessions ordered the FBI to build a wooden fence to accommodate his wife Alice's "aesthetic considerations" rather than legitimate security needs.

The report described Mrs. Sessions as haughtily informing a bureau official that her husband had placed her in charge of the project and that she should therefore be copied in on all FBI memos about it.

Sessions was also ordered to repay the government for the cost of trips he made solely for personal reasons. Those trips would be identified by OPR, Barr said.

The report found that Sessions and his wife traveled each of four Christmases to San Francisco, where their daughter, Sara, is a ballet dancer. On each trip, Sessions arranged to give a speech or to tour a government laboratory or to attend some function that government investigators determined were arranged to give each journey an official justification.

In 1990, the one Christmas holiday that Sessions did not go to San Francisco, the director's daughter spent the holiday in Washington, the report said.

Senate clears 7 Cabinet choices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven of President-elect Clinton's Cabinet choices cleared committees on Tuesday and Senate leaders made plans to confirm at least a few key officials within hours of Wednesday's inauguration of the new president.

Senate committees voted approval for Warren Christopher as Clinton's secretary of state, Donna Shalala to head the Health and Human Services Department, Richard Riley as education secretary, Robert Reich as labor secretary, Rep. Mike Espy, D-Miss., as agriculture secretary, Hazel O'Leary as energy secretary and Mickey Kantor to become U.S. trade representative.

In addition, Carol Browner was cleared for Environmental Protection Agency administrator and Roger Altman was approved as deputy secretary of the Treasury, a position below Cabinet level.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen was approved previously by the Finance Committee and endorsement of Defense Secretary-designate Les Aspin was slated for Wednesday.

Officials said final details on the appointees to be confirmed by the full Senate on Wednesday were still being sorted out.

Others named to the Clinton Cabinet faced confirmation hearings Tuesday, including Bruce Babbitt, named to head the Interior Department; Hazel O'Leary, tapped for energy secretary; and Zoe Baird, who apologized before the Senate Judiciary Committee for having hired two illegal aliens to work in her home.

"It was a violation of the law," Baird told the panel, which still appeared inclined to approve her nomination. "Our decision to hire the couple was wrong, and I deeply regret it."

Babbitt was questioned closely on his ties to environmental groups, and one conservative Republican warned he risked "war on the horizon."

Members of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee were looking for assurances that Babbitt would strike a balance between environmentalists, park users and the industrial concerns of miners, ranchers and timber companies.

"I am not enthusiastic about what I see coming down the road," said Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., noting that Babbitt used to head the League of Conservation Voters.

Babbitt has said he favors moving land policy away from "multiple use" because of concerns that it unfairly favored mining, timber, and oil and gas industries.

In his prepared remarks, Babbitt, the former governor of Arizona, said he would work to balance the needs of industry with the need to protect the land for future generations.

"Charting this balance on a national scale will not be easy or without pitfalls, but it is the most important challenge that we will face together in coming years," Babbitt said.

O'Leary told her hearing she was "committed to changing the culture" at the Energy Department, which over the years has been criticized for being overly secretive, especially on environmental issues involving its nuclear weapons program.

She pledged to encourage fuel conservation programs, adding, "I have learned first-hand how much efficiency and conservation efforts can reduce reliance on foreign oil."

In other developments:

■ Christopher's vote from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was 19-0, although Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, the ranking Republican on the panel, voiced reservations. "He's a personable gentleman but nice guys are a dime a dozen," Helms said.

■ Reich and Riley both won unanimous voice votes from the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. Shalala got voice vote approval, without opposition, from the Finance panel.

■ The vote on Kantor, who chaired Clinton's campaign, came after a friendly hearing in the Senate Finance Committee. He was quizzed on a range of topics from the Uruguay Round of free trade negotiations to Canadian restrictions on the sale of American beer.

Man shoots ex-wife at daughter's gravesite while TV camera rolls

MIAMI (AP) — The TV crew was filming Emilio Nunez placing flowers on his teen-age daughter's grave, grieving over her suicide. Then, his former wife showed up unexpectedly.

As the camera rolled, Nunez lunged at the woman, put a 9mm semiautomatic handgun to her head and pulled the trigger. She fell to the ground and Nunez stood over her, firing again and again into her head, killing her.

The videotape of Monday's shooting was broadcast Tuesday evening in Miami on the Spanish-language Telemundo network program "Ocurrio Asi," or "It Happened Like This" — a program like "Current Affair" and "Hard Copy." The shooting later was broadcast on at least one network.

Nunez, 34, remained at large Tuesday, though his car was found. The Delray Beach man left his current wife and stepson behind at the cemetery in suburban North Lauderdale; it wasn't clear whether they saw the shooting of Maritza Martin Munoz, 33.

Joandra Nunez, the 15-year-old daughter of Nunez and Ms. Martin, fatally shot herself in the chest on Thanksgiving.

On the videotape, before the shooting, Nunez told reporter Ingrid Cruz that his ex-wife abused the girl. He alleged that the girl killed herself after her mother slapped her when she disclosed she was pregnant.

While cameraman Jorge Delgado filmed the interview and Nunez placing flowers on the grave at Queen of Heaven Cemetery, Ms. Martin, off camera, showed up in a car.

Nunez' current wife and stepson were sitting in his car, and, also off camera, he apparently told them to leave the area on foot, Delgado said.

Nunez got into his car and moved it to block his ex-wife's car on the cemetery road, the reporter and cameraman said. Ms. Martin then got out of her car, scribbled Nunez' license plate number on a piece of paper.

While the tape rolls, Ms. Cruz and Delgado approach Ms. Martin in her car. Nunez also apparently is nearby, and Ms. Cruz, wanting to interview Ms. Martin, tells him, "Go away."

Ms. Martin starts walking into the cemetery, followed by Ms. Cruz, holding out her microphone.

The shooting starts suddenly.

The gunman comes from behind Ms. Cruz and bumps her out of the way. The video shows Nunez quickly raise the gun to the back of Ms. Martin's head and fire. She falls to the ground, and Nunez stands over her, continuing to fire. Ms. Cruz screams and runs.

The camera turns away before Nunez is finished firing, but in all, 12 shots can be heard.

The video doesn't show Nunez getting back into his car but does show it driving away.

Moody adolescents experience more distressing events, study suggests

NEW YORK (AP) — Memo to moody adolescents: If you think everything has been going wrong lately, you may be on to something.

Researchers have found new evidence that one reason life is so unhappy for many young adolescents is that they face a bumper crop of distressing events.

Evidence for this double-whammy in early adolescence is presented in January's issue of the journal Developmental Psychology by Reed Larson of the University of Illinois in Urbana and Mark Ham of the Human Development Center in Duluth, Minn.

The work supports earlier studies, commented child development expert Jeanne Brooks-Gunn of Columbia University in New York, adding that even positive events may contribute to an adolescent's emotional turmoil.

Puberty and the transition to junior high also generally contribute, noted Dr. Daniel Offer, director of adolescent research at Northwestern Medical School. He called the Larson-Ham study "excellent."

He and Ham studied 483 students in fifth through ninth grades. They were drawn from four predominantly white neighborhoods in two Chicago suburbs that Larson declined to identify.

The students wore a beeper for a week. When it beeped at random times, they recorded their moods on scales ranging from happy to unhappy, friendly to angry and cheerful to irritable.

Researchers recorded the percentage of times each child's overall mood was negative, and compared that to the number of "negative life events" each kid had reported experiencing over the prior six months.

Negative events included things like worsening relationships with parents and siblings, being suspended or otherwise disciplined in school, changing schools, breaking up with a boyfriend or girlfriend and falling out with a close friend or group of friends.

Adolescents — defined as seventh through ninth graders — were more likely than younger students to have dealt with seven or more negative events, 35 percent to 24 percent. And among all students in this hard-luck group, adolescents felt "down" about 23 percent of the time they were beeped, versus about 13 percent for younger students.

Perhaps adolescents are more affected by a pileup of bad events because they worry about the past and the future and things outside their immediate environment, while younger children live more in the here and now, Larson said in a telephone interview.
