Midland College President Jess Parrish, right, Wednesday discusses the role he believes his campus should play in the expansion of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. MC Board President Ralph Way, left, concurs.

How would MC, UTPB roles mesh?

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland and Odessa community leaders were meeting with area lawmakers today in Austin to hash out the "remaining differences" over Midland College's role in the expected expansion of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Rep. Tom Craddick confirmed today that an "indebtedness buyout" plan and the construction of a 40,000 square-foot building on the Midland College campus both were options Midland and Odessa leaders were considering.

"Hopefully we can come up with something that we all can agree upon," said Craddick, a Midland Republican.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said today, "I'd like to see what's best for the Permian Basin region. I think that would be a four-year school."

On Thursday, Midland College trustees threw their support behind planned construction by the University of Texas System of a 40,000 square-foot building for use in teaching lower- and upper-level courses on the Midland College campus. The same programs would be available on the UTPB-Odessa campus.

MC Board President Ralph Way said this would allow Midland students to attend classes at both Midland College and at UTPB-Midland while working toward a four-year degree. It would also leave intact the Midland College associate degree programs.

Another option is that the University of Texas System could assume Midland College's $5 million bonded indebtedness and merge the campus into its organization.

However, MC President Dr. Jess Parrish said Thursday that trustees won't even consider that proposal because of its threat to the integrity of the community college process.

To incorporate Midland College into the UT System would wipe out 27 vocational and technical programs not offered by senior universities.

"If we did something like that, then I believe that we would have to go back in five to 10 years and try to form another community college district to offer these things to our community," Parrish said.

"We still maintain that the real need in the Permian Basin is for qualified, skilled work force. And we feel that (educating) the skilled work force is the role designed by community colleges," he added.

Way said the plan Midland College trustees endorsed would keep Midland College programs intact while allowing for a four-year institution that would meet the higher educational needs of the area.

It also would narrow the commuting range for students from 25 miles to 100 yards and offer opportunities for baccalaureate-level degrees and masters-level degrees through a transfer system.

At the same time, MC would be able to maintain its community college district, offer all of its occupational-technical programs and maintain the integrity of the program for the 2,000 people enrolled in them.

Way said the estimated cost of the 40,0000 square-foot building — about $2.5 million — would equal the cost of building additional facilities on the UTPB-Odessa campus.

The board president stressed that MC trustees desire to follow the state education master plan by developing a study of the educational needs of the area and present the data to the Higher Education Coordinating Board for approval.

While local civic and business leaders continue their discussions in Austin, MC trustees say they want to give other residents of the two communities time to react.

Several proposals discussed

By JANE MARLER DEES

Odessa and Midland legislators still haggling over the proposed expansion of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin do agree on two things.

They are running out of time and it is about time "the great compromise on our own little personal workers' comp bill" is reached.

Sen. John Montford's simple suggestion during the regular session that UTPB expand its engineering and energy departments sailed a successful but choppy path through the House and Senate.

But Gov. Bill Clements, at the urging of House Republican leader Tom Craddick of Midland, vetoed the UTPB measure which had been attached to a similar expansion measure for UT-Dallas.

Midland College officials loudly voiced their opposition, believing the move would consume freshman and sophomore students who likely would have attended their junior college.

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, who'd sponsored the House expansion measure, decried their claim and charged that Midlanders were still angry because the university was built in Odessa in the first place.

But former Midland mayor and Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board member Ernest Angelo disagreed.

Abortion may be debated in fall session

AUSTIN (AP) — Abortion opponents say they are encouraged by Gov. Bill Clements' comments that an abortion bill might be placed on the agenda if another special legislative session is called later this year.

"This is entirely consistent with the promise he made to our group and the people of Texas to do everything within his power to stop abortion on demand," said Bill Price, president of the Dallas-based Texans United for Life.

Clements, who opposes most abortions and controls the agenda for any special session, said Thursday he won't add abortion to the agenda of the current session, which began June 20 to address workers' compensation reforms.

But the governor also said abortion could be included if another special session is called later this year.

"The speaker, the lieutenant governor and I, we've all been considering when we might have another session — might, I said.

"If we do, then probably a study group would report in the interim. We'd be prepared then to consider what we might do with respect to our particular (abortion law) situation," Clements said.

The governor said he doesn't favor holding the session next spring, because it would come during the 1990 primary elections.

Anti-abortion leaders immediately hailed Clements' statement, but House Speaker Gib Lewis said he thought it "foolish" to put the topic before lawmakers until the U.S. Supreme Court has considered its several pending abortion cases.

"You don't just run in and start passing laws when the issue has not been finally resolved," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

"I think it's an issue that's still very cloudy. There's still decisions to be made, court opinions to be rendered. I think until all that's cleared up it would be very foolish to run out and try to introduce some type of abortion bill. I just think it would be very unwise," he said.

Clements acknowledged that concern, saying, "There are some pros and cons and differences of opinion ... We haven't made our mind up."

Lewis earlier said he thought the next regular session of the Legislature, in 1991, would be the time to consider any abortion measures.

The Supreme Court this week upheld a Missouri abortion law, a ruling that gives state legislatures added powers to regulate abortions.

Texas' abortion laws require annual reporting of abortions to the state health department and disallow abortions during the last three months of pregnancy unless the mother's life is in danger, according to the attorney general's office.

Clements has said he opposes all abortions, except in cases of rape, incest or when the mother's life is endangered.

The Legislature is in special session until July 20 trying to reform the state's workers' compensation system. But Clements has insisted a reform bill be passed — and a House-Senate deadlock hasn't been broken yet — so workers' comp might require another special session.

Other possible topics for another session include restructuring of the controversial Public Utility Commission and overhaul of the school finance system if the Texas Supreme Court rules against in a pending case.

Local groups preparing for fight

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Sixteen years after a controversial Supreme Court ruling legalized abortions, those standing left or right of the issue's center have been pumped with a legal transfusion.

The Supreme Court earlier this week gave states more power to restrict abortions, limiting women's constitutional right to the operation. But justices, in a split vote, stopped short of overturning the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision which legalized abortions.

Now that the controversy has been tossed into the state political arena, local groups, including some in the Permian Basin, have a renewed interest in the fine line between what defines life and what constitutes freedom.

Local pro-abortion and anti-abortion officials called the ruling a triumph for pro-life activists, but both sides have vowed to continue fighting for their causes.

Mark Mosely, Midland coordinator for West Texans for Life, said Thursday his organization has already begun a figurative arms buildup for the assault on legislators.

Mosely said the Supreme Court decision was the spark pro-lifers needed to ignite a new anti-abortion campaign.

Warsaw Pact talks open with East bloc friction

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his squabbling East bloc allies today opened a Warsaw Pact summit that is expected to bring more arms control initiatives.

The publicity-conscious Soviet president was tight-lipped about his expectations for the two-day meeting in the Romanian capital. Asked by reporters what he expected, Gorbachev said only: "I'll tell you after we finish."

Gorbachev is attending the meeting with Soviet Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. Romanian officials said reporters would be allowed no access to them and the other Soviet bloc leaders during the closed-door meetings.

Gorbachev arrived in Bucharest late Thursday from Strasbourg, France, where he announced that Moscow and its allies could agree on unilateral cuts in Soviet short-range nuclear missiles in Eastern Europe if NATO is prepared to negotiate reductions on those weapons.

This meeting may produce numbers for those cuts.

The Western Alliance patched up a divisive row between West Germany and the United States over such negotiations six weeks ago. President Bush on May 29 proposed drastic reductions in conventional forces of both military blocs in Europe.

Speaking Thursday at a news conference in Washington, Bush spurned Gorbachev's call for swift negotiations on short-range nuclear missiles.

Bush noted that NATO leaders, at the summit in Brussels six weeks ago, agreed to begin negotiations on such weapons only after an East-West agreement had been reached to reduce conventional forces and reductions were actually under way.

"I don't want to get off the track by re-opening the short-range nuclear forces package," he said.

West Germany was pushing for quick talks on short-range nuclear weapons but agreed to delay them until after preliminary agreements are reached on conventional arms reductions at East-West talks in Vienna.

Bonn signaled, however, it hopes agreement will come within the year deadline proposed by Bush. Other Western nations call that optimistic.

Gorbachev said in Bonn last month that the Warsaw Pact summit could deliver a detailed response to Bush's proposals to reduce the armed forces of East and West in Europe to 275,000 on each side and agree on further cuts in weaponry and combat aircraft.

Romanian officials said the Pact will not announce a decision until after the summit ends Saturday.

Romania's tightly controlled state media announced no firm agenda for the meeting.

The state news agency Agerpres announced only that Eastern European delegations arrived to a welcome from President Nicolae Ceausescu, the East bloc's most resolute foe of Gorbachev's moves toward more democracy and market-oriented economies.

Bush rejects call for immediate arms negotiations

By CRAGG HINES
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush rejected Thursday the renewed call of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev for immediate U.S.-Soviet negotiations to reduce short-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Bush, who leaves Sunday for his first presidential visit to Eastern Europe, stressed that NATO had agreed to his plan to first seek cuts in non-nuclear forces.

Bush said, "I don't want to get off-track" by reopening debate over negotiations on short-range missiles.

Gorbachev, in an address to the Council of Europe in Strasbourg, France, offered to make additional unilateral cuts in Soviet bloc nuclear forces if NATO would agree to negotiations on short-range nuclear armaments.

Gorbachev, in apparent slap at U.S. reluctance to negotiate immediately on the missiles, contended that "only Europeans" were threatened by the weapons.

"If it becomes clear that NATO countries are ready to join us in negotiations on tactical nuclear weapons we could ... carry out without delay further unilateral reductions in our tactical nuclear missiles in Europe," Gorbachev said. "The ultimate objective is to completely eliminate these weapons."

Bush's response came in answers to questions from a group of reporters interviewing the president Thursday about his upcoming trip.

Bush said his visit to Poland and Hungary will celebrate the nations' "unprecedented efforts toward economic and political reform." The president will meet in both countries with representatives of the Moscow-backed Communist governments as well as insurgent leaders, such as Solidarity founder Lech Walesa.

State Senate to take up debate of workers' compensation plan

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate today was scheduled to take up a proposed overhaul of the state workers' compensation system, but a key senator said the votes aren't there to approve the bill.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, said Thursday he believed there were enough votes to block Senate approval of a House plan.

If the House plan is not adopted, the bill would go to a conference committee where House and Senate members would hammer out the differences in the two plans.

Gov. Bill Clements said changes to the workers' comp system, along with a number of other issues, may necessitate a fall special legislative session.

Lawmakers are currently in special session after having failed to reach a compromise on the method of compensating workers who are injured in on-the-job accidents.

Clements met with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis briefly during the Senate session to discuss another possible special session.

Clements said Hobby told him he was "reasonably optimistic that we'll have a (workers' comp) bill reported out at this time next week."

But Clements also said, "I'm not sure if the workers' comp thing is going to get settled. We'll just have to wait and see."

Lewis, D-Fort Worth, has said if a conference committee is needed, lawmakers would not have enough time to resolve their differences during the special session that expires July 19.

The major dispute between the House and Senate is over jury trial review of disputed workers' compensation claims.

The House, backed by business, has been trying to eliminate jury review of workers' comp disputes, claiming litigation costs have driven up the price of employer-paid workers' comp insurance.

But the Senate, supported by labor and trial lawyers who represent injured workers, says jury trials are a fundamental right and are needed to offset what could be an unfair award.

The House version would allow jury trial review of workers' comp disputes concerning death benefits, severe injuries, and whether the injury was incurred during the course of employment.

Caperton, D-Bryan, described the proposed limitations on jury trials as "an absolute farce." He said that few of those cases are actually ever contested.

In related action, the Senate on Thursday approved a bill that would allow political subdivisions, such as cities, counties and school districts, to allow their employees to supplement their workers' comp benefits with accrued sick leave.

Weekly workers' comp benefits are two-thirds of an employees' salary with a maximum of $238. Under the bill, the employee would have the option of whether to use sick leave to supplement his salary while he is recovering from an injury.

The bill by Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, was sent to the House on a 22-0 vote.

"I'm excited about the opportunity to resolve this question in a manner that has community support," said Grant Billingsley, former executive vice president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. "I only hope that a solution can be worked out that benefits our taxpayers as much as it benefits our institutions and the people they serve."

Midland Chamber Chairman Steve Davidson said he would favor any proposal that would further economic development in Midland-Odessa and maintain the integrity of its community colleges.

"We need to keep our community colleges viable because they serve a critical need in our business community. If this proposal will allow us to address that situation then I'm all for it," Davidson said.

Odessa College President Dr. Phil Speegle doesn't fear that a UTPB-Midland campus would have a deteriorating effect on OC programs, but wondered what effect it would have on UTPB-Odessa.

"I'm sure it will have some negatives," Speegle said.

However, UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach has described the proposal as "a workable plan if both institutions wanted to make it work," according to Parrish.

Although discussions between Midland-Odessa area business and civic leaders have reflected a local desire for Midland to be included in the expansion of UTPB, Montford said he doubts that the Legislature would back legislation in this special session.

Craddick disagreed. "If we can have an agreement and there doesn't appear to be any controversy, then I believe the governor would allow it to come up before the Legislature during this special session.

"Likewise, if we're together, then I believe the chances are good that the Legislature would pass it," he said.

In the regular 1989 Legislative session, Gov. Bill Clements vetoed a proposal that would have authorized the lower-level expansion of UTPB's engineering and energy departments.

Last month during the 1989 special session, Craddick introduced a resolution authorizing the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board to study the status of the UTPB and the effects that may be had on area junior colleges.

Three days later, on June 26, Montford introduced a bill "relating to the courses and degrees offered" at UTPB.

Montford's bill Thursday was being heard by the Senate Education Committee, while Craddick's resolution passed Tuesday through the House's Calendar Committee, a body which Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen chairs.

The calendar committee controls the flow of House measures.

An attempt by Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, Thursday to attach a UTPB expansion measure to a bill pertaining to creation of a Central Texas University at Killeen was disallowed by Speaker Gib Lewis as not germane to the bill.

ARMS

During Bush's first European trip in May, NATO agreed at its 40th anniversary summit at Brussels to seek reductions in conventional, or non-nuclear, forces before U.S.-Soviet talks on cutting short-range nuclear arms.

Bush called the NATO plan "a good package that has wide support."

The president, strongly backed by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, refused the plea of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl for an early beginning to short-range missile talks. Most of the West's missiles are in West Germany, meaning that most of the East's missiles are aimed there. Kohl, facing a tough re-election campaign next year, is under public pressure to get talks started to get rid of the weapons.

"I think as long as we have a solid front in NATO, as long as the Germans have joined in with the other countries in NATO behind this common position, we should go forward to try to implement that common position," Bush said.

Gorbachev's speech in Strasbourg came at the end of a trip to France that was successful, but failed to generate the tremendous enthusiasm he evoked during his visit last month to West Germany.

Bush again professed indifference to Gorbachev's seeming public relations coup.

"You know something, I don't really care about that," Bush said. "I'm not interested in that. I am delighted that he enjoys popularity in Europe. I am delighted when he goes to Germany. I am pleased when he goes to France.

"It is good for world peace that he takes those trips, and I expect he will be delighted when I go to Poland and when I go to Hungary, for we will be well received in those countries."

PLANS

"That's what makes it so difficult without it sounding so petty. Just because you've got some past bad feelings doesn't mean you ought to let your throat be cut. ... "

Watkins Wednesday again attempted to attach a UTPB expansion amendment to a bill pertaining to the expansion of the Central Texas Community College (CTCC) in Killeen.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, however, struck Watkins' proposal from the special session agenda ruling it was "not germane" to the CTCC bill.

Three main expansion alternatives remain, though legislators are quick to point out they are open to just about anything at this point.

The three ideas belong to Montford, Craddick and Parrish.

Montford, a Lubbock Democrat, suggested UTPB rent classroom space from MC for upper-level instruction.

Midland College authorities don't like the idea because "Midland isn't gaining anything," Parrish pointed out.

Craddick has drafted a plan outlining a merger between MC and the UT System.

UT would pay off the junior college's estimated $5 million bonded indebtedness and take over the campus.

Parrish believes that situation would harm the "integrity" of MC, subject students to higher tuitions and disallow the granting of vocational and technical degrees.

University systems such as Texas' may only deliver academic degrees, the junior college president noted.

While the merger would cost nearly double that of the proposed construction of a 40,000-square-foot UTPB classroom facility on the MC campus, it would remove the Midland Junior College District from the county tax roll, supporters would concur.

Nonetheless, Parrish says, a merger would wipe out the degree plans of 2,000 students studying for a vocational or technical degree.

Local input regarding the academic needs of the community's future workforce also might be threatened, MC Board President Ralph Way added.

"Skilled workers are the guts of the community," the president said.

The plan MC supports is the proposal its president created.

Under Parrish's plan, the UT System would either lease or buy acreage from the college. A new $2.5 million facility would be built to house 225 classrooms.

UT would pay for the construction and land purchase.

Students would take lower level subjects under the auspices of MC and transfer — across campus — to UTPB classes in their third year.

MC officials like the idea because Midland and Greenwood students would remain eligible for Abell-Hanger Foundation scholarships and the campus' 27 vocational and technical programs would be secure.

There also would not be a threat of losing freshman and sophomore students to the Odessa university, supporters said.

The two campuses would divide the teaching of subject sections currently offered only at UTPB-Odessa.

"If they build a new building ... the rivalry would be eliminated and MC would maintain its integrity," Parrish said.

Montford said today, however, he truly wonders whether the Legislature would approve a financial outlay for the new UTPB building.

"I'm not sure we can get the construction through the House and Senate."

Montford holds that the issue facing the two cities isn't partisan in nature.

Watkins' administrative aide Candy Warren suggests civic pride may be clogging the process.

Twenty years ago, Rep. Ace Pickens of Odessa and Rep. Dick Slack of Pecos pulled what some called "a fast one" over Midland and its freshman State House Representative, Tom Craddick.

The two men wrote successful legislation that undercut a Midland-Odessa vow to locate the site of a new upper-level university an equal distance between the two West Texas cities.

But Ms. Warren pointed out the times have changed and her boss — a freshman House representative himself — is ready to compromise.

Of Craddick's influence, she said: "It's the only ball game in town now for both communities that won't hurt others.

SUMMIT

Just last week, in a speech pointedly distributed to foreign journalists covering the summit, Ceausescu rejected any return to private ownership and insisted, "We must take a firm attitude against any attempts to denigrate socialism."

"We think that the concern with a better development of socialism in various countries should not bring a negation or underrating of the might of socialism," he added, in a clear swipe at recent developments in Hungary, Poland and the Soviet Union.

Political reforms in those countries have divided the once monolithic East bloc, with Romania most staunchly opposed to change and East Germany, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia also still dominated by orthodox communists.

A Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said a meeting was expected to be held on ideology Saturday after the Pact summit formally ends.

"Very little is expected to come out of it," he said, alluding to the deep divisions within the Soviet bloc.

Ideological quarrels have exacerbated traditional nationalism and centuries-old rivalries between the diverse ethnic groups of Eastern Europe.

Neighboring Hungary and Romania are engaged in the fiercest feud, a war of words resulting from Romania's alleged mistreatment of its 1.7 million-member ethnic Hungarian minority.

Hungary has also antagonized neighboring Czechoslovakia with political reforms and a decision to halt work on a joint Danube River dam project.

Bulgaria is isolated from its Pact allies over its treatment of its Turkish minority, who are leaving the country by the tens of thousands following the death of at least eight Turks in violent protests against a Bulgarian assimilation campaign.

Couple gets $15,000 for manure dive

SOMERVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Although eating worms was a crowd-pleaser, a dive into a pile of cow manure put a couple over the top in two "outrageous behavior" contests sponsored by Alabama radio stations.

For their troubles, Michael and Sonya Nau won $15,000 from two radio stations recently.

"We've been renting all of our married lives and we wanted to buy some land and build a house," Mrs. Nau said.

Their act began with Mrs. Nau leading her chain-clad husband on stage on a leash. After tearing off his shirt, he wrapped himself in flypaper, drank from a mixture of egg yolks and honey and poured the rest over his body.

Nau then rolled in Fruit Loops, dumped flour over himself, ate a green-tinted oatmeal mixture and then chomped on regular and extra-large fishing worms.

Mrs. Nau said the worm-eating stunt brought screams from the audience. "He just left them dangling out of his mouth and they were wiggling," she said.

For his finale, Nau donned a diving mask and snorkel, bounced on a pogo stick over to a trampoline, and dove face-first into a wading pool full of manure and rotten vegetables.

ABORT

The organization will again push for the same changes included in abortion bills killed in the recent legislative session, Mosely said. Pro-lifers are asking for laws requiring parental consent for minors wanting abortions and banning abortions sought because of a baby's sex, he said.

"Right now we're going to keep the ball rolling," Mosely said. "We don't want anybody to sit back and say this was it with this (Supreme Court) victory."

Scot Northern, president of Planned Parenthood of West Texas, said his group "has no definite game plan" yet for a local and legislative counterattack. Members in the next three weeks will meet to discuss possible strategies to maintain the status quo, Northern said.

"We haven't gotten together on it yet," he said. "But we still believe that it's (abortion) an individual freedom that could be taken away."

The pro-choice supporter said financially disadvantaged women will suffer the most from the Supreme Court ruling. The women could be kept from turning to public facilities, he claimed.

Northern also criticized Midland and Odessa school districts for not offering sex education classes. He added that West Texas usually has a higher teen pregnancy rate than other parts of the state.

Mosely said West Texans for Life will continue its public awareness campaigns through newsletters and speaking engagements.

"Our whole basic philosophy is adoption for life," Mosely said. "Abortion should not be a solution to our social problems."

He said pro-life activists also will continue picketing the office of one Odessa doctor and plan to hit another in coming months.

They have been protesting outside Dr. Jabez Marshall's office weekly for the past three months, he said.

Marshall, when contacted by telephone, had little to say on the matter.

"I don't have any comment," he said. "It only fuels the fire."

Mosely claims Marshall and another Odessa doctor are the only physicians who practice abortion in the twin-city area. The other doctor could not be reached for comment.

Dr. Jim Humphreys, Midland County health authority, said that to his knowledge an abortion has not been performed in Midland in about the past 10 years.

"I don't think it's likely to start," Humphreys said. "I don't know anyone in the obstetrical community who has a desire to change that."

Humphreys said that although some Midland physicians support pro-choice, they prefer not to mire themselves in an unresolvable social issue.

"As a practical matter, a person involved in the practice of obstetrics has to worry about pickets or firebombs in their office," he said. "No physician in his right mind would want to be put in the position of being treated like a criminal."

Alice Brown, director of the Problem Pregnancy Center of Midland, said her counselors neither recommend nor discourage abortions.

"We just give the facts," Ms. Brown said. "They (mothers) usually have their minds made up before they come in here."

The center acts as a referral agency, gives free pregnancy testing, offers counseling and loans of baby and maternity clothes.

Ms. Brown said referrals are made strictly to Midland organizations, not to Odessa doctors who handle abortions.

Of the 1,675 who used the center's service in 1988, about 10 percent said they would seek an abortion, Ms. Brown said.

Of those requesting help, 67 were between 13 and 15 years old, 265 between 16 and 17, 578 between 18 and 21, 289 between 22 and 25, 267 between 26 and 34, 46 over 35 and 163 were unknown.

Ms. Brown said those who indicated they would get an abortion said they would do it mainly for social reasons, such as fear of telling their parents, peer pressure at school and the social stigma of pregnancy.

State tries to shut down hazardous-waste handler

By KEVIN McGILL

AMELIA, La. (AP) — A little company on a steamy bayou, Marine Shale Processors, raked in millions using what it said was a revolutionary process to turn toxic waste into glassy black rubble it sold for construction projects.

Last year, it handled wastes from more than 2,500 companies in 48 states.

Meanwhile, residents of St. Mary Parish accuse the company of cancer-causing pollution. State environmental officials have levied over $5 million in fines and last month halted sale of its black "aggregate." Sen. John Breaux, D-La., held hearings on Marine Shale last year and two federal grand juries reportedly have studied it.

IN JUNE, the company laid off nearly a fourth of its 400 employees.

Competitors, who call the process a sham, say the end is near.

But Jack Kent, Marine Shale's fiery-tempered president, vows he won't shut down without a long and costly fight. "Anybody with half-way brains would know this is a much better process to handle this material than any other method in the country today ... or in the world today," he said.

"As far as we're concerned, Marine Shale is on death row. It's just a matter of hooking up the juice," said Richard Fortuna of the Hazardous Waste Treatment Council, a Washington-based lobbying group for Rollins Environmental Services and other waste handlers whose prices were undercut.

Marine Shale began burning hazardous waste in its 275-foot long kiln in 1985, charging up to $300 per 55-gallon drum to take toxic materials from those who produce them. Kent says that's about half what others charged. It sold its aggregate, as fill for roadbeds and boat slips, for $1 a ton.

"MSP gross revenues for the first quarter 1989 are the highest ever!" boasts a flier in the office. Kent said that translates to roughly $22 million.

PROFIT ORDINARILY would run 15 percent, he said, but millions in legal fees are making a healthy dent. And business has dropped off 50 percent, he said, since the May 26 order banning sale of Marine Shale aggregate.

The Hazardous Waste Treatment Council says the huge, computer-monitored kiln is nothing more than a glorified incinerator. Fortuna said Marine Shale skirted environmental laws by calling itself a recycler instead of a disposer.

Marine Shale countered that it was operating under some of the nation's strictest air and water permits — stricter than those for a Rollins incinerator at Baton Rouge. Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality officials backed that claim, though the agency has accused the company of frequently violating the permits and is trying to have them revoked.

The state has complained of sloppy storage, violation of air quality standards and refusal to move an allegedly dangerous storage barge off Bayou Bouef alongside the plant. Marine Shale has complied with some DEQ orders and has appealed others, including one revoking its permits because it allegedly treated waste from a foreign country, Canada, in violation of state law.

Company vice president and general counsel George Eldredge has repeatedly accused DEQ of delaying administrative hearings on orders, some dating to 1986. Kent is eager to get DEQ hearings over with so he can take matters to court. Miriam Price of St. Mary Parish is just as eager as Kent, but for different reasons. "I see a long road ahead for those of us who would like to see Marine Shale closed. And we're looking to DEQ to do the job."

Mrs. Price claims a personal stake. Her granddaughter, Nicole Price, is one of six children afflicted with a rare form of cancer, malignant neuroblastoma.

THE MOTHER of one child who died from the disease has filed suit against Marine Shale, blaming it for the cancer. Mrs. Price points out that all six were diagnosed after the company began operations.

Nonetheless, she said, "I cannot accuse them — I have no proof."

A Louisiana State University study of the neuroblastoma cases notes that the cancer is usually thought to originate before birth and that three of the stricken children were born before Marine Shale began operating.

In almost four years of study, the Environmental Protection Agency has yet to say whether Marine Shale has done anything wrong or if it should be allowed to keep operating. "We really can't make additional comments on Marine Shale, because of the legal complexities of the case," said spokesman Roger Meacham.

More than a year ago, the EPA did say Marine Shale's aggregate posed no "imminent or substantial endangerment to the public health or environment."

THE STATE halted sales because of evidence that rain, especially acid rain, could cause lead and other metals to dissolve out of the material in higher amounts than the EPA allows, said DEQ attorney Elizabeth Megginson.

Megginson cited tests revealing lead levels of .55 parts per million to 1.5 ppm vs. an EPA standard of .5 ppm. Eldredge, however, said standards that apply to Marine Shale's product allow up to 5 ppm.

Kent said he would not immediately fight the DEQ order in court, but would hold up shipments of the aggregate and try to work out an agreement with state officials to test the product and ensure its safety.

As Marine Shale's appeals drag on, its giant kiln, resembling an elongated cement mixer, continues to turn and aggregate continues to tumble out.

Wastes poured into the kiln are heated to 2,000 degrees for 2¼ hours while vapors from the process run through two giant buildings lined with scores of filters and rise into the air through a smokestack 140 feet high.

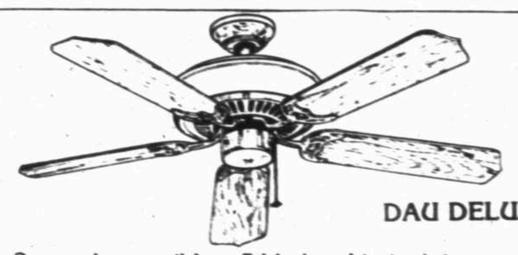

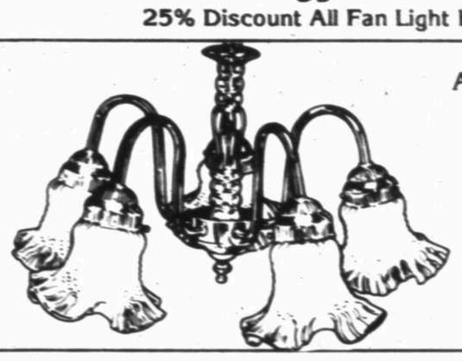

Meanwhile, Marine Shale continues negotiating with DEQ over the complicated issues surrounding its process. If that fails, Eldredge said, "It won't be decided until it gets to the Louisiana Supreme Court."

Senate rule may have aided flag filibuster

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator got help from a Senate rule today in staving off passage of a resolution to exempt desecration of the U.S. and Texas flags from the constitutional protection of freedom of speech.

After the clock moved past 12:01 a.m. what under the rules had been a "House bill day" became a Senate bill day, and the House flag resolution was declared ineligible for further consideration.

The rule was not used, however, until Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, had talked until 1:40 a.m., for a filibuster of 12 hours and 20 minutes.

It appeared uncertain today how much rest he would get.

Senate dean Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, said the resolution could not be considered until Monday. But Senate sponsor J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said a two-thirds vote could bring up the resolution again today.

"Every hour we can delay it is an opportunity to keep it from passing," Washington said. "I was prepared to go the rest of the night. I don't think I could have gone much longer than noon."

"I'm ready to go again," Brown said.

The resolution passed the House last week, when members stood and recited the pledge of allegiance, in response to a 5-4 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court in which it was held that flag burning is protected under the First Amendment.

The case on appeal to the court involved the burning of a flag by Gregory Johnson at the 1984 national Republican convention in Dallas.

Washington said the difference in Johnson and Oliver North — who was fined $150,000 for his crimes in the Iran-Contra affair — is that Johnson "hid behind the Constitution and desecrated the flag, and Oliver North hid behind the flag and desecrated the Constitution."

Washington, who said he opposes flag burning, had urged his colleagues in the filibuster to stay clear of the issue of flag burning lest they be burned themselves. He said the other 22 Democrats in the 31-member Senate should vote for the resolution so the vote could not be used against them politically.

His filibuster effort appeared to be a futile one since a test vote went against him 23-2.

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, told Washington, "You are a brave man, and may you wave as long as Old Glory."

A few House members supported Washington's effort by standing or sitting near him in the Senate Chamber to keep him company.

At one point, Rep. Senfronia Thompson, D-Houston, got on her knees and massaged Washington's legs.

Rep. Larry Warner, D-Houston, was at Washington's side for hours. "He has a lot of courage. He has taken on physical strain and political heat for this," Warner said. "I would not burn the flag, but I don't think I'd change the First Amendment over one flag burner."

Washington, wearing small American flag stickers on both lapels, said the issue is not flag burning but protection of the First Amendment. He wiped tears from his eyes as he spoke of his deep respect of the amendment and its guarantee of free speech.

Brown said, "The American flag ... may have no meaning to some people when it is hoisted above a battlefield after the military forces of this country have defended freedom and have defended liberty throughout the world."

"It may have no meaning to some people when that same flag is draped over a coffin of our fallen soldiers when they return from representing freedom throughout the world," he added.

"And it may have no meaning when it's held in the hands of a small child on the Fourth of July. ... But it does have meaning to those who believe this country represents the last best hope for freedom and democracy throughout the world."

Fire ants attack fawns, young animals

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Fire ant populations being sustained by South Texas drought conditions are chewing away at white-tailed fawns and other wildlife, leaving them maimed, disfigured and even dead.

Since mid-April, the Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation has treated more than 170 white-tailed fawns and other young animals, the San Antonio Express-News reported.

But the fire ant siege continues, and so do the agency's daily treatments.

Young deer arrive with skins shredded and eyes swollen. A young raccoon suffered bites so severe that workers thought an eyeball was gone. Both paws were stripped of flesh.

Two turtles were brought in, their cracked shells filled with the ants. Also under treatment are two litters of skunks, two gray wolves and a red fox.

"The ants are literally eating the little animals alive," Lynn Cuny, director of the wildlife refuge, told the Express-News. "The fire ant problem is the worst I've ever seen. We're doing the best we can, but many animals are being lost.

"The fawns have been stung all over their bodies, but the damage is most severe on their eyes, nose and mouth," Ms. Cuny said. "Usually, the fawn's entire mouth becomes so rigid, because the skin is completely stripped by the ants, that it can barely suckle. The fire ants had made their way inside the turtles and were eating the reptiles alive."

Fire ants crawled into the Hill Country in the early 1980s and have been on the increase ever since. But they are worse this year because of the drought, experts say.

According to Roger Mulder, a pest management specialist for the Texas Department of Agriculture, fire ants number up to 600 colonies per acre in rural areas.

"There are far fewer things living out in the country now, so the ants are having an impact on snakes, lizards, mice and other wildlife," he said.

Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation, a private organization that has gained a nationwide reputation for the care it gives orphaned and injured wildlife, resembles a hospital ward this summer, with one building designated as an intensive care unit for animals attacked by the ants.

Diane Pinedo, a volunteer assistant at the refuge, said that fire ants break down blood cells and tissue. The ants, which also are ingested, traumatize the animals, causing a high fever.

Often a doe will instruct her fawn not to move from where she leaves it while she feeds with the rest of the herd. "When the mother comes back, she'll find the fawn covered with ants. She realizes there isn't much she can do for it, so she abandons it," Ms. Pinedo said.

Statute would make it impossible to burn flag

AUSTIN (AP) — A state lawmaker said he wants a constitutional amendment to make the official United States flag have 50 stars, 13 stripes and nonflammable.

State Rep. Harold Dutton said Thursday his idea would bring an end to the controversy over whether people should be protected under the U.S. Constitution if they want to burn a flag.

"It would be impossible to burn. It would solve 95 percent of the problem," said Dutton, D-Houston, who added he would introduce a resolution on Friday.

Dutton explained his idea while state Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, spoke during a filibuster against a resolution asking Congress to exempt desecration of the flag from the constitutional protection of free speech.

He said he opposes a constitutional amendment to abridge free speech.

Elderly housing program third victim of probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing Secretary Jack Kemp is suspending a program designed to provide apartments for low- and moderate-income elderly people, the third program canceled or frozen at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Kemp's decision Thursday follows a highly critical audit of the program by HUD's inspector general that said many of the projects were approved despite warnings by agency analysts that they were unnecessary or too large.

The program already has cost the government $119 million in direct payments to cover defaults on HUD-insured mortgages, Kemp said. The cost is likely to grow, he said, because defaults now total $250 million and are expected to continue.

Kemp also said the program was not serving those it was created to help, citing a HUD-backed project in Palm Harbor, Fla., that he said charged $2,100 a month rent for a two-bedroom apartment.

He promised to revive the Retirement Service Center Program after rewriting its guidelines to target resources to low-income elderly.

"Insured housing programs administered by HUD must by their nature take risks," Kemp said. "With this program costing $120 million to date, I would rather take these risks by targeting resources ... to lower-income people."

Kemp is reviewing HUD programs as Congress and law enforcement officials investigate allegations of widespread mismanagement during the Reagan administration.

Testimony and other evidence shows influential Republican consultants were hired by developers to win favor for HUD projects.

Also Thursday, an aide to the House subcommittee investigating HUD said several prior witnesses will be recalled, including former HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce.

Pierce earlier told the subcommittee he had no direct role in funding decisions. But a former agency official, Shirley McVay Wiseman, since has said Pierce ordered her to approve funding for a North Carolina project involving a longtime Pierce associate.

Also among those to be recalled are Thomas T. Demery, former assistant secretary for housing; Lance Wilson, Pierce's former top aide; and Republican political consultant Paul Manafort, who has admitted "influence-peddling" to secure HUD funding for a New Jersey project.

The congressional investigation has focused largely on three programs: HUD's acquisition and sale of single-family property, its funding for rehabilitation of rental properties and its co-insuring of mortgages for certain housing developments.

A dozen private closing agents contracted for the single-family program are under investigation for allegedly bilking the agency of $20 million or more.

Kemp has suspended the rehabilitation program and canceled another program in which HUD backed loans for such projects as a golf course-residential complex. Both involved lobbying by prominent Republicans.

The five-year-old elderly housing venture involved 150 developments. Kemp said he suspended it because 30 percent of the projects whose mortgages were fully backed by HUD and another 12 percent of those in which HUD guaranteed 80 percent of the loan were in default. The second default rate is expected to climb, officials say.

Cholesterol level for many in U.S. remains too high

CHICAGO (AP) — About 60 million Americans 20 and older — more than one-third of the nation's adults — face the risk of coronary disease because they have high blood cholesterol levels, a study has found.

"What's especially disconcerting is that high cholesterol levels are often seen in association with other risk factors — hypertension, smoking, or being overweight," says Christopher Sempos, one of eight authors of the study published in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"And for many people, most of the desired changes could be achieved through a change in routines like diet and exercise," Sempos, a nutritionist and epidemiologist with the National Center for Health Statistics in Hyattsville, Md., said in a telephone interview Thursday.

"Even though we've made great strides in alerting the public to the dangers of cholesterol and heart disease, there's still too large a segment that is putting itself unnecessarily at risk."

The federal center lists coronary disease as the nation's leading killer, claiming 521,000 lives in 1986, the last full year for which statistics are available.

In the study, researchers examined data from 11,864 adults 20 to 74 years old who participated in the Second National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey from 1976 to 1980.

Alabama agency may face charges

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Prosecutors are considering possible criminal action in the loss of $2 million of federal housing funds in Alabama that apparently were used to buy luxury items such as a Mercedes, a speedboat, jewelry and furs.

Department of Housing and Urban Development documents obtained by The Associated Press allege that Montgomery real estate broker Cy Walker spent the money over a three-year period by using a stack of blank wire transfer authorization forms.

HUD's Birmingham office, without a system to double-check on the receipt of funds from HUD closings, thought the $2 million from 63 sales closings went to its central office account, according to agency records. In fact, the money was in a First Alabama Bank account controlled solely by Walker, according to a HUD audit.

Housing officials in Alabama tightened controls over HUD money on Nov 9, 1987, after they discovered the money was missing. That same day Walker closed out the First Alabama account, withdrawing the last $136.54.

The FBI has turned its fnvestigative file over to the U.S. attorney for possible prosecution. U.S. Attorney Jim Wilson said he plans to meet with HUD officials this month to discuss possible criminal cases.

Officials with HUD and First Alabama Bank in Montgomery declined comment on specific allegations in the case. However, bank official Dave Gordon said it appeared that First Alabama "has done nothing wrong, nothing out of the ordinary."

Gromyko left U.S. legacy of 'steel'

Andrei A. Gromyko's grim countenance and uncompromising attitudes mirrored the Soviet Union's inflexible foreign policies for nearly three decades. The former Soviet president and longtime foreign minister, who died in Moscow Sunday at age 79, was a figure from the Soviet Union's discredited past. He rose from service under Stalin to become a master of the Kremlin's unbending diplomacy.

With a debating style that matched his somber suits, Gromyko earned the epithet "Mr. Nyet" for the 26 vetoes he cast in the Security Council during the formative years of the United Nations. Nonetheless, even adversaries respected him as a skillful spokesman for his country's interests.

For nearly four years, Gromyko served as Soviet president, then a largely ceremonial post. He is best remembered as the Kremlin's career foreign-policy chief, a position he held during the tenures of five Soviet leaders and nine American presidents, from Franklin Roosevelt to Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Gromyko's loyalty to a succession of Soviet leaders was legendary. That, and his professed lack of ambition for higher office, enabled him to survive several Kremlin purges. His subservience to the party line was at no time more evident than during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis. Two days before it erupted, he told President John F. Kennedy the Soviets had no missiles in Cuba. The reality was that one-third of the Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal was deployed in Cuba at that time, and another third was aboard ships bound for Cuba.

Ironically, Gromyko was eased into retirement by the very man he nominated in March 1985 to take over the Kremlin, a Communist Party upstart named Mikhail Gorbachev.

"He may have a nice smile," Gromyko told the party leaders, "but he has teeth of steel."

Quite so. That warning could well be Gromyko's unwitting legacy to the West.

Batty — over Batman

Have you been able to turn on your television lately without encountering movie critics or news reporters discussing Batman? Have you been to your favorite shopping mall? Batman is probably already paid for with the amount of paraphernalia being sold. You could buy posters, sunshades, buttons, T-shirts, dolls, keychains, or several other items.

I have now surmised that Batman is the biggest thing since Star Wars. I personally am a fan of Michael Keaton, Jack Nicholson and Kim Basinger. I also fully intend to go see the movie. I am not, however, willing to stand in a line for 11 hours, or even two hours, nor do I wish to share the auditorium with 14,000 of my closest friends. Being able to hear the dialogue would be nice. It seems reasonably certain Batman will still be here a couple of weeks from now. Top Gun was here for a year before it finally ended up at the dollar movie, where everyone saw it again.

I do not want to leave the impression that the promotion and publicity are offending me. They are not. My rage lies in the slip of the tongue of one of our local TV reporters. On Batman's opening night, Big 2 News did a spot based on the turnout at the theater. The reporter that covered the event saw the movie I assume, because in his excitement, he made one slick comment that indicated the outcome of the very conflicts which was most promoted.

Now, those of us who have yet to see Batman have had the wind let out of our sails to say the very least.

This is not the first time I have felt the media has either shown too much or said something that was not entirely tasteful, or has hurt someone's feelings, but it was the first time it has directly affected me. I just wish our media would be a bit less presumptuous.

What price news?

I would like to comment on the guest column by Charlie Vetter concerning the "secret balloon bombings" of the western United States by the Japanese near the end of World War II.

The information of the bombings was immediately released by the Associated Press to the news media with a "Request this news not be released in the interests of the War Efforts — For Your Information Only" header on the stories. The withholding of this information had a two-fold effect. First, the Japanese never did find out how successful the balloon bombs really were. Several thousand acres of western forest lands were burned. Secondly, mass hysteria by U.S. residents was averted.

This whole scenario was played out before the "me first" journalists were born. Reporters and their families were trustworthy people who could keep a confidence. I know this as a fact. I read the report directly from the teletype machine of the Japanese bombings and the fires that were burning in the forests of California, Oregon and Washington. My father, a radio news reporter, saw what I was reading and swore me to secrecy at the young age of eight years. I still respect privileged information and feel that it should be kept in confidence until formally released by the person in authority to do so.

It is too bad that during the recent Chinese uprising, the news media could not have used this same restraint in reporting. Maybe the faces of rebellion seen on ABC-TV News would still be alive today! News at any price, even human lives?

Thanks for JTPA

The Midland Spirit is alive and well! We wish to congratulate the "Partners in Education" which consists of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of commerce, Mobil Exploration & Production, Inc., and the JTPA Program on a job well done.

On Saturday, June 10, a "Step Up to Success" Youth Conference was held at Midland College and provided much needed workshops and counseling for approximately 165 young high school participants in the summer youth program.

The Summer Youth Program in an Annual event that JTPA sponsors and provides jobs and training for high school students that come from low-income families.

The "Step Up to Success" Conference kicked off the six-week work and school program.

Special thanks to Mobile, JTPA, Coca-Cola and Midland College for their support and for their interest in the youth of Midland.

"Partners in Education" is the beginning of many projects geared towards encouraging students to not only remain in school but continue on to higher education and become viable citizens in our community.

OSHA napping while workers at risk

WASHINGTON — Canaries once were sent into coal mines to detect lethal gases. If the birds died, the miners were kept out. Today, the American worker may be acting as the canary, unwittingly the subject of unsafe workplaces.

Jack Anderson

America is dotted with toxic time-bombs. But the Occupational Safety and Health Administration — the watchdog of the workplace — is napping. Ironically, one of the most blistering assessments comes from the trade group of the industry that is most culpable.

We have reviewed an internal consultant's report prepared last year for the Chemical Manufacturers Association (CMA) that echoes warnings sounded by many authorities: The chemical industry's record on revealing dangerous ingredients is poor.

Federal law orders chemical makers to complete a form for everything they produce. The CMA study, focusing on 10 dangerous chemicals, found that companies are providing vague and confusing information on how to store and handle the chemicals, and inadequate first-aid instructions in case of exposure. The report charges that problems with the forms "raised red flags about the ability ... to adequately convey information and warnings, and about the effectiveness of training programs."

When OSHA commissioned Harvard University to conduct a study on hazardous chemical data sheets used in auto repair and body shops, the September 1988 study also found the information inadequate and in violation of federal standards.

Yet John Pendergrass, OSHA director during the Reagan administration, rejected the notion that it was his agency's job to monitor chemical company reports for accuracy. Pendergrass was no rogue; he reflected the hands-off approach followed by the deregulation proponents of the Reagan administration.

A government effort to develop an independent chemical information file was spiked by Pendergrass, who told our associate Scott Sleek that federal agencies ought to rely on data supplied by chemical producers. Last year, Pendergrass scrapped an independent information service, which OSHA had acquired to assist agency inspectors.

The current flap over data disclosures is only the latest chapter in a sorry story of how OSHA has abdicated authority for workplace health and safety. While OSHA boasts about imposing fat fines on firms that violate worker-safety rules, it has cut deals with those same firms for about half the original fine.

"A company official who willfully violates federal OSHA laws stands a greater chance of winning a state lottery than being criminally charged by the federal government for workplace safety violations," concluded one recent Senate investigation.

PENSION PERIL — Pension funds — a bedrock of retirement security — could be headed for a scandal that would rival that of the savings and loans.

Almost a million separate pension plans hold the life savings of more than 77 million trusting pensioners. Is that trust misplaced? Just as fraud has looted the thrift industry, so too are pension plans falling prey to unscrupulous businessmen. The latest headline speaks of five New Mexico businessmen indicted for conspiring to embezzle more than $9 million from their company's pension plan.

Unfortunately, the Labor Department is outmanned and outgunned. It has only 300 auditors and investigators to protect $1.6 trillion currently invested in pension plans. Labor must rely on audits from private accountants hired by the same people who are under suspicion. The same cozy relationship between rip-off artists and accountants prevailed during the thrift crisis.

Could pension funds require the next big taxpayer bailout?

MINI-EDITORIAL — In the spirit of "If I can't have it, you can't either," a cluster of defeated congressmen is trying to limit the perks they unwillingly surrendered when they were defeated. Since more than 95 percent of incumbents were re-elected in 1986 and 1988, the Coalition to End the Permanent Congress wants a constitutional amendment to limit representatives and senators to 12 years in office. The Coalition also seeks a law prohibiting contributions from PACs and abolishing honoraria. It wants to end mass congressional mailings at public expense, too. The non-partisan Coalition held its first meeting in Kansas City, Mo., in May.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 7, the 188th day of 1989. There are 177 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 7, 1981, President Ronald Reagan announced he would nominate Arizona Judge Sandra Day O'Connor to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court. O'Connor became the high court's first female justice.

On this date:

In 1754, King's College in New York City opened. (The school would be renamed Columbia College 30 years later.)

In 1846, U.S. annexation of California was proclaimed as the Stars and Stripes were raised at Monterey after the surrender of a Mexican garrison.

In 1865, four people were hanged in Washington, D.C., after being convicted of conspiring with John Wilkes Booth in the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln.

In 1887, artist Marc Chagall was born in Vitebsk, Russia.

In 1898, the United States annexed Hawaii.

In 1930, construction began on Boulder Dam (later renamed Hoover Dam).

In 1941, during the World War II, U.S. forces landed in Iceland to forestall any Nazi invasion.

In 1946, Italian-born Mother Frances Xavier Cabrini was canonized as the first American saint.

Thought for today: "When men are ruled by fear, they strive to prevent the very changes that will abate it." — Alan Paton, South African writer (1903-1988).

Northerners like our grits, but won't admit it

A nationwide competition ended the other day when Sears announced that it's moving part of the company to a Chicago suburb. Previously, the company had considered moving 6,000 of their employees from Chicago to Charlotte. At that point, an anonymous comedian concocted a two-page "Application to Live in North Carolina" and circulated it amongst Sears' employees in Chicago.

Lewis Grizzard

There was a section where the applicant was asked to identify his or her "Daddy." That was followed by, "If unknown, attach list of three suspects."

There were blocks to identify the applicant's neck color, and there was also a section that asked the applicant to put down how many teeth were exposed in a full grin.

What the application amounted to was an exercise in trite Southern stereotypes that indicated all Southerners were illegitimate, toothless, ignorant rednecks.

The application went on to ask how many empty beer cans were on the floor of the applicant's truck. The applicant was asked to define such terms as "chitlins" and "fatback," and to name favorite vocalists from Donna Fargo to Conway Twitty.

There also was a section asking whether the applicant could count over 10.

My office has received dozens of copies of the application, which was published in the Charlotte Observer.

Those who sent the copies all asked I write a rebuttal to the application and "defend the South."

I really don't think the South needs any defending just because some yahoo in Chicago thinks Southerners don't know who fathered them.

And if Sears had moved some of its people out of Chicago to Charlotte it wouldn't have taken them long to realize we now have paved roads and indoor plumbing, and nobody marries his sister.

But, because I am a strong believer in getting even, I would like to offer a listing of a few things North Carolina residents might have expected of Sears' employees from Chicago if they had been tranferred south.

Stereotyping is such fun:

■ They dress funny. A favorite summer outfit of Northern men tends to be a pair of knee-length Bermuda shorts, a pair of sandals and black stretch socks they attempt to pull all the way up to their armpits.

■ The women have fat, hairy thighs.

■ Someone ought to open a reptile farm. Yankees love to actually pay to go inside one.

■ They all talk louder than you do.

■ They tend to be on the obnoxious side, and whenever they become confused, they all say, "This ain't duh way we did it back in Chicaga."

■ They eventually will like grits once somebody points out grits are actually very good if you put cheese and butter on them.

■ But they won't admit it.

■ They pick their noses in church.

■ They have greasy hair.

■ They don't use deodorant.

■ They belch loudly in public places.

■ They never have heard of Richard Petty.

■ They do not believe it when you tell them Michael Jordan was a North Carolina Tarheel long before he became a Chicago Bull.

■ They do not believe it when you tell them it was two guys in North Carolina who invented the airplane.

■ And they would never go back to Chicago.

Telephone calls assert Bakerton isn't dying

A couple of years ago when I had a chance to roam around Pennsylvania and Ohio, I wrote a column about a small coal town, Bakerton, Pa., not far from Johnstown.

Charley Reese

It seemed to me a dying town and I said so. I had talked with some people, one of whom said something unflattering about Bakertonians, and I quoted them. I will not repeat all of what the person said but one thing was that Bakerton was a close-knit community and that certainly proved to be true.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration should visit Bakerton, because Bakertonians can teach NASA something about the rapidity of communications. The column had hardly made the trip all newspapers make — from the front lawn to the bottom of the canary cage or kitty litter box — before telephone calls from irate Bakertonians from the far corners of the earth rained down on me. And Bakerton is a small place: A sparrow with black lung disease could fly over it and never get winded.

I even shortly received a large manila envelope containing individually signed hate letters from a Troop of Girl Scouts.

The short of the matter is that Bakertonians, wherever they may now live, are a proud people and didn't take at all kindly to an out-of-town newspaperman commenting on their village and their manners.

Well, I don't blame them really. These days nobody likes journalists, including other journalists. I had written the column with sympathy and stand by every word of it as the truth as best I could see it at the time, but what you write and how people interpret what you write are not always the same.

At any rate, I am happy to report that I was dead flat wrong about one thing — Bakerton isn't dying. For three days, beginning June 30, Bakerton, Pa., proudly celebrated its 100th birthday with bands, food, special events, and fireworks.

In conjunction with the centennial, Mary Frances Inzana wrote a book about Bakerton and she did a good job putting together a lot of the history of this stubborn little coal town, the name of which was created from the names of the two owners of the first coal mine.

A resident kindly arranged for me to get a copy and wrote an unsigned letter to go with it.

He (or she) proudly points out that the book contains congratulatory messages from the president and vice president as well as from the governors of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

I will let the Bakertonian speak for himself:

"Now, Mr. Reese, we come to a section of the book with memoriams. Here I find statements such as 'we can always come home to Bakerton, Always a place you call home... ' does it strike you as strange, the addresses range over the country from California and Oregon to Maryland, New York, New Jersey and Florida? All have one sweet sounding word in common: home.

"You could possibly be correct when you say Bakerton may someday cease to exist physically, but as long as the citizens of Bakerton, wherever they live, continue to carry the love they have in their hearts for their home, Bakerton can never die."

Well said.

And, no, it does not strike me strange that those addresses are scattered around the country because I believe I received irate phone calls from all of them.

I am happy to join in wishing Bakerton and Bakertonians a happy 100th birthday. I hope the village doesn't die, even physically. If it were up to me, I'd ban the import of foreign coal and oil in a minute and reactivate our coal industry and to heck with the greenhouse effect. There are some parts of the world that deserve to be under water anyway.

But Bakerton isn't one of them.

NATION IN BRIEF

Homosexual partner may keep apartment

NEW YORK (AP) — About a month after Bernard Braverman's lover of 20 years died of AIDS, he found an eviction notice on the door of the rent-controlled Greenwich Village apartment they had shared for 15 years.

On Thursday, after the state's highest court ruled that a partner in a long-term homosexual relationship can take over their apartment when the leaseholder dies, Braverman said:

"It means I won. A major burden is off my shoulders now."

The case considered by the Court of Appeals involved another man in the same situation, and the ruling may affect thousands of homosexual men and women and their lovers — their "life partners" or "spousal equivalents," in the legal lingo that has developed.

Fiske withdraws name

Fiske

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert B. Fiske Jr. says he withdrew from consideration for the No. 2 job at the Justice Department to avoid a lengthy confirmation battle threatened by conservative Republican senators.

The withdrawal marked a setback for Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, who had lobbied conservatives on behalf of his choice for deputy attorney general.

Fiske's letter to Thornburgh taking his name out of consideration was released Thursday by the Justice Department.

Last month, 14 mostly conservative Republican senators, objecting to Fiske's role as chairman of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary from 1984 to 1987, urged President Bush not to nominate him for the Justice Department post.

Bomb detectors ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is ordering airlines to install expensive bomb detectors at 40 American and foreign airports, but officials say it will take two to three years to put them all in place.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner on Thursday announced draft Federal Aviation Administration rules requiring the devices capable of detecting plastic explosives in checked luggage.

The order is one of several steps taken in response to the Dec. 21 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland that killed 270 people. Investigators concluded the bomb was a plastic device hidden in luggage, although they have not determined who planted it.

Screening devices currently used at airports cannot detect such plastic explosives.

Ship regulation sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal safety officials want the Coast Guard to be allowed to regulate luxury cruise ships that are owned by Americans, carry Americans and use American ports but fly under foreign flags.

"We're not in a position to protect the lives of an American citizen in these types of vessels, and something's got to be done about it," said Jim Burnett, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board.

The NTSB on Thursday issued several recommendations that would affect more than 80 cruise ships that dock at U.S. ports.

Only two or three such cruise ships are registered in the United States, board investigators said.

Fund-raiser sentenced

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public relations executive convicted in the Iran-Contra affair must perform 120 hours of community service and serve two years' probation.

Richard R. Miller, one of the first defendants convicted in the scandal, was sentenced Thursday for his guilty plea to illegally using a tax-exempt foundation to collect donations for the Nicaraguan rebels.

Conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell, who pleaded guilty to the same charge, faced sentencing today by U.S. District Judge Stanley S. Harris.

Channell and Miller both cooperated with independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh's investigation of the Iran-Contra affair and testified as prosecution witnesses at the trial of former White House aide Oliver L. North.

They both entered guilty pleas early in the investigation to charges of conspiring to defraud the Treasury by using a tax-exempt foundation to raise money for the non-deductible purpose of buying weapons for the Contras.

Senior Taggart testifies

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The father of two former PTL aides testified in their tax-evasion trial that they gave him and his wife a Cadillac, jewelry and furs, and trips to Paris, New York and Northern Ireland.

David and James Taggart, friends of PTL founder Jim Bakker, are charged with failing to pay $487,000 in income taxes from 1984 to 1987.

Federal prosecutors say they diverted $1.1 million of ministry funds to their personal use by taking cash advances on PTL credit cards and using blank ministry checks to pay the credit card bills.

Henry Taggart's testimony established that the claims of family wealth recalled by his sons' co-workers at PTL were false.

"Let me put this to rest once and for all," Henry Taggart said. "I do not and never did own seven Cadillac dealerships.

"I did not and never did own one Cadillac dealership. I worked for a Cadillac dealer. That's it."

Both Taggarts joined the ministry in the late 1970s as pianists. Within a few years, David Taggart, 32, had become Bakker's top aide and James Taggart, 35, was the ministry's interior designer. Both were fired after Bakker resigned in 1987 amid a sex and money scandal.

If convicted, they each could face 25 years in prison and fines of more than $1 million.

AIDS found in plasma

CHICAGO (AP) — Scientists have found the AIDS virus in blood plasma supplies that had slipped through standard blood screening procedures, according to a study released today.

The discovery means that plasma tainted with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, could infect recipients of transfusions, said Dr. Jean Pierre Allain, an author of a study published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Allain, of Abbott Laboratories in North Chicago, and fellow researchers have developed an HIV-antigen test that they say can cut the detection time in half, which can help minimize the number of HIV-infected blood plasma from leaking into commercial supplies.

China accuses U.S. of helping dissident students flee country

BEIJING (AP) — China intensified its assault on Washington today, saying the United States has repeatedly violated the human rights of its own people and therefore has no right to criticize China's handling of demonstrators.

"During the process of quelling the recent counterrevolutionary rebellion the American government and Congress under the pretext of 'protecting human rights' meddled with China's domestic affairs," said the People's Daily, the official publication of the Communist Party.

"When the Chinese government on June 4 used firm methods to quell the counterrevolutionary rebellion, the U.S. government became furious and was the first to impose 'sanctions' on China to exert pressure on us," the newspaper said in a commentary.

"But everybody can still remember (U.S. Sen. Joe) McCarthy's notorious anti-communist, anti-China legislation," the paper said. "And 100 years after the declaration of the emancipation of America's slaves, the discrimination faced by blacks and people of other colors is still serious."

Washington suspended military sales and high-level governmental exchanges after the Chinese army's bloody suppression of protesters seeking democratic reforms. China says 200 to 300 people died; Western sources and Chinese witnesses say up to 3,000 people were killed.

In addition to the sanctions, the Chinese government has been angered by U.S. protection of dissident Fang Lizhi, who with his wife, Li Shuxian, took shelter at the American Embassy shortly after the crackdown.

Noting U.S. criticism of South Africa and its involvement in Korea, Vietnam and Grenada, the paper said Washington "has never stopped its interference with other countries' internal affairs. This is the reality of the American 'guardians of human rights'."

In a separate piece titled "How America Tramples On Human Rights," the Communist Party mouthpiece printed a chronology of civil rights and antiwar protests in the United States, complete with numbers of arrests and deaths of demonstrators.

In another story, the People's Daily said student leaders passed on state secrets to foreign journalists and received foreign passports so they could escape from China.

"The autonomous student union, through the help of foreign powers, even obtained passports for some 40 of their members, so they could flee the country in the event things turned for the worse," newspaper said.

It did not name any countries that provided passports but said considerable financial support came from the United States and France and said people from Hong Kong operated from rooms at the Beijing Hotel near the square to distribute money to students.

"The student leaders maintained illicit relations with traitorous organizations overseas, and themselves were traitors and collaborators," it said.

The People's Daily also repeated charges that students received money from overseas, saying: "When the student leader 'masterminds' finally went underground, each had tens of thousands of yuan (thousands of dollars)."

Major Chinese papers also gave prominent play to a lengthy speech by Beijing's conservative mayor, Chen Xitong, attacking a wide range of intellectuals for contributing to the political environment that fostered the democracy movement.

Palestinian said to have planned attack

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Palestinian who grabbed the steering wheel of a bus and forced the vehicle into a ravine, killing 14 people, rode the route several times to choose the moment for the attack, newspapers said today.

The bearded attacker, identified only as a Palestinian refugee camp resident, told investigators he was avenging beatings of family members by soldiers, Israeli newspapers said.

National Police Commissioner David Krauss announced a second injured suspect was detained in connection with the bus crash Thursday, the bloodiest assault since the Palestinian uprising began 19 months ago. Army radio identified him as the attacker's father, but a police source denied that.

Anger in Israel brought calls for imposing the death penalty on terrorists.

Arab newspapers hailed the attack.

At the funeral of one Israeli victim in Jerusalem, security forces rescued Finance Minister Shimon Peres from hundreds of people shouting and pounding on his car. Peres heads the center-left Labor Party, which calls for giving up occupied land for peace.

Police on horseback dispersed supporters of the anti-Arab Kach movement at a Jerusalem rally after 200 attacked officers arresting six unruly protesters.

"Kill those who come to kill you!" American-born Kach leader Rabbi Meir Kahane told 1,000 supporters who screamed back, "Death to Arabs!"

At another victim's funeral, Cabinet Minister Avner Shaki of the National Religious Party demanded harsh measures.

"We must make supreme efforts at the next Cabinet meeting to ... look for new, stubborn, non-routine and harsh ways so this filthy Arab terrorism will end," said Shaki, who has no portfolio.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said the attack was "the fruit of a disgusting mind, wracked with hatred."

Jerusalem's daily Haaretz said the attacker "planned in detail," riding buses several times along route No. 405 from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, studying the road and drivers' behavior.

The daily Hadashot said the suspect "caused the bus to swerve at a point in the road where the security barrier is the lowest and the drop is dozens of meters."

Pro-government newspapers in the Persian Gulf praise the attack.

Bahrain's Akhbar al-Khaleej said it was a "unique and bold operation ... affirming that the Palestinian people will not be broken."

Qatar's al-Raya said, "The bold guerrilla operation by a young Palestinian man affirmed to the Zionist enemy that ... the Israelis cannot continue with their repressive practices and brutal oppression without a Palestinian response."

A senior Palestine Liberation Organization official in Tunisia, Bassam Abu Sharif, said the attack was "a human reaction by someone who has had his children killed, seen families deported, houses demolished."

The crash Thursday was the worst attack in Israel since a PLO assault on a bus on March 11, 1978, that killed 33 people and wounded 82.

The crowded state-owned bus plunged Thursday into a 200-foot ravine and exploded in flames after the attacker, shouting "God is Great!" grabbed the steering wheel. The phrase is a rallying cry for the uprising.

Police said two of the dead were Canadians, the first foreigners killed since the uprising began. They were identified as Shelley Halpenny, a dentist in her mid-30s from Vancouver, British Columbia, and Fern Rykiss, 17, of Winnipeg, Manitoba. Ten other fatalities were identified as Israelis.

Bunton awards lawyers $677,127 in fees

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A team of lawyers who were successful in waging a class-action civil-rights suit against the Federal Bureau of Investigation was awarded $677,127 in fees by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton and not the $1.35 million which the counsel for FBI Special Agent Bernardo "Matt" Perez and other Hispanic agents had sought.

In exhaustive trials before the court, Bunton found that the bureau had discriminated against Hispanic agents, who maintained that they were adversely treated in employment practices, opportunities for promotion, and in disciplinary policies and practices. Additionally, Bunton found that Perez, who lodged the class-action suit in 1987 in El Paso, suffered retaliation from the FBI hierarchy.

Bunton made recommendations — institutional reforms — for the FBI to correct policies and procedures which he said might tend to disfavor Hispanic agents.

In his findings, Bunton in Midland had issued a 21-order ruling to correct FBI personnel-related flaws. And FBI Director William S. Sessions, who preceded Bunton as chief judge of the Western District of Texas before he was appointed FBI director in November 1987, had noted that he was pleased Bunton "took cognizance of the changes I have made in the FBI's Career Development, Language Services, and Equal Employment Opportunity programs."

"Of course," Sessions added, "we are carefully considering the specific changes in FBI programs and policies mandated by the court to assess their impact on the overall operations of the FBI."

Bunton presides in Midland and Pecos but also handles cases in Austin and El Paso, where the Perez-versus-FBI case originated.

In his finding on fees for the class-action attorneys, Bunton noted that the 10 attorneys, headed up by Antonio "Tony" Silva of El Paso and Hugo Rodriguez of Miami, Fla., claimed they had expended 8,000 hours on the complex case.

The U.S. Department of Justice counsel, which defended the FBI, held that the $1.35-million request was too steep and reflected excessive time and redundant motions by the Silva-Rodriguez team. Further, the FBI's lawyers held that some of the opposing counsel's affidavits of expenses contain "cryptic and anemic" entries.

"There is no evidence to support a finding of lack of diligence or dilatory tactics to prevent a speedy and just determination by this court," Bunton penned.

And Bunton ordered that the costs of paralegal and secretarial work "shall be borne" by the Perez-class-action counsel rather than by the government.

In his ruling, Bunton noted that Rodriguez's legal "skill and experience would compare favorably ... to senior partners practicing at the highest level" of civil-rights practice.

Crime Stoppers not hurt by new law's restrictions

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

It's business as usual for area Crime Stoppers' programs, despite fears a controversial law halting release of crime victims' names might damage the agencies' operations.

The three-week-old law, which the Legislature is speeding to repeal this week, appears to prohibit the release of the identities of felony victims. The law prompted Midland police and sheriff's departments to reverse policy and decide to withhold names in all felony cases, even in the case of a homicide.

At the time the law was distributed, officers expressed concern that Crime Stoppers programs, which advertise details of crimes to attract information, could be harmed.

But Paula Alvarez, assistant program coordinator for the Austin-based Crime Stoppers Advisory Council, said the law has had little effect. Initial fears were fed by a mass misinterpretation of the law by police agencies, she said.

In Odessa, the law at first threatened to undermine Crime Stoppers, according to the assistant coordinator.

"Initially it did," said Odessa Detective Cpl. Dean Johnston. "But we had our legal people look at the fact we have victims sign releases before any information is given out. We were going beyond a reasonable means to get the victims' permission. They determined we were within (legal) bounds to do it."

No cases were affected by the law, Johnston said.

Midland Crime Stoppers also has a policy that requires victims sign a release before any identifying information is given to newspapers or television stations that advertise the "Crime of the Week" feature, said Officer Belinda Abila, assistant coordinator of the program.

"It (the law) really hasn't affected us," Ms. Abila said. "As long as we have permission from the victims, it's OK."

Midland's police spokesman said confusion about the law must have generated the misconception the programs would be hurt.

"Crime Stoppers is manned by commissioned officers, so the release (of information) has not been impaired by the decision," Cpl. Jim White said. "There is no information going outside the agency."

White, who was on vacation when the dispute erupted, said he has since read the legislation.

"It only deals with releasing the information to outside sources," White said. "I don't see how it would affect Crime Stoppers."

Grass fire

Bruce Baver, Serge Eberhard, and Jim Gillard watch Thursday afternoon's brush fire that scorched 1,000 acres and came within 50 yards of Clearview Hospital. Fire Chief James Roberts said the facility was never in danger from the blaze, which burned Scharbauer Ranch property west of the intersection of Loop 250 and Thomason Drive. No injuries were reported. Two youths who sped off in a white Jeep pickup truck were seen setting the blaze by a city employee, Roberts said.

Justice Department program grant will aid crime victims

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Persons who have suffered injuries and expenses resulting from criminal offenses will be eligible for more than $6 million which the United States Department of Justice's Office for Victims of Crime has awarded the state of Texas, according to U.S. Attorney Helen Eversberg of San Antonio.

Rather than from taxes, the funding comes from federal criminal fines, penalty assessments and bond forfeitures collected by her office, other U.S. attorneys' offices and the federal courts. The money is deposited into the Federal Crime Victims' Fund.

The $6 million represents 40 percent of the amount paid by Texas to crime victims in the 1987 fiscal year, Mrs. Eversberg said.

Under the grant, the Texas Industrial Accident Board's Crime Victims Compensation program reimburses victims of state and federal crimes those costs that result from a crime. The board's headquarters are in Austin at 105 W. Riverside Drive.

Expenses may include medical costs, lost wages, mental-health therapy and funeral expenses.

"I think it is a very worthwhile project," U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton said today. "It's a goal that the government has set out to compensate those who are unable to help themselves" after they suffer losses from criminal offenses. Bunton, chief judge for the Western District of Texas, presides over the district's Midland-Odessa Division.

Victims of federal crimes may be assisted in obtaining funds from the Crime Victims Compensation fund through Mrs. Eversberg's victim-witness coordinator, Beverly Cox. Ms. Cox may be contacted at 512-229-4420 in San Antonio.

"I think it has been long overdue," U.S. Probation Officer Richard Russell of Midland said of the compensation program.

The program was enacted under the Victim-Witness Comprehensive Act of January 1983. And the federal courts started assessing criminal defendants mandatory fines after November of 1984, Russell noted. Those convicted of felony crimes are assessed $50 on each court, and defendants convicted of misdemeanor offenses are assessed $25 per count.

"It seems that our (criminal-justice) system has been set up to protect the rights of defendants, which is good, absolutely good and necessary, under our system of justice," Russell said today.

"But what about the victims? I think Congress and the state governments finally realized that legislation was needed to protect the victims, too."

Victims of crimes prosecuted in the state-court system in Texas cities may receive assistance through victim-witness coordinators in district attorneys' officees. In Midland, Tedda McAnear, is director of the Victims Assistance program in District Attorney Al Schorre's Office.

Mrs. Eversberg emphasized that the funds are derived from "federal criminals and not from law-abiding taxpayers."

Funds are collected by her Financial Litigation Unit which, she said, recently received monetary awards from the U.S. Department of Justice in connection with an award from the U.S. Attorney General for her office's "effective" collection work.

That unit, which includes Patsy Ybarra, Betty Carson, Mildred Alexander and Katy Valdez, was only one of two in the nation to be so recognized.

"The Justice grant program is a good example of federal-state-local partnership designed to make sure crime victims are not forgotten in the justice system," Mrs. Eversberg said, "and that criminals must pay for their damage to individual citizens."

Odessa man arrested by Border Patrol

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Border Patrol Thursday announced the arrest of a 34-year-old Odessa man south of Alpine and seizure of marijuana valued at more than $200,000.

Richard Franco Trejo was charged with possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, according to Border Patrol spokesman Lewis Reynolds. Bond for Trejo, a former Marfa resident who is being held in the Reeves County Jail, was set at $100,000, Reynolds said.

Trejo's 1978 Cadillac had been stopped Wednesday on State Highway 118 about 20 miles south of Alpine by Border Patrol agents. The car was searched by K-9 dogs who found 261 pounds of marijuana in the trunk wrapped in 10 plastic bags, the spokesman said. The marijuana has a street value of $209,000.

Trejo was turned over to agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Alpine.

United Way seeks same financial goal as last year

From Staff Reports

United Way of Midland officials Thursday announced their financial goal for the 1990 campaign which commences Aug. 1.

The $2.26 million goal for the coming year reflects the same amount of money raised last year by volunteers.

That figure was more money than has ever been raised before, said Michael Cook, 1990 campaign chairman.

Officials hope to secure an administrative underwriter to offset that estimated $250,000 expense, added Jane Wolf, United Way of Midland executive director.

Last year, an underwriter wasn't found and the administrative expenses were paid out of donations.

One new agency — the Freewill Foster Home — brings the number of groups served by United Way to 18.

Freewill Foster Home is a nonprofit organization that provides foster care to abused and neglected children referred by the Texas Department of Human Services.

Other agepcies that will be served by United Way in the coming year are the American Red Cross, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Boy Scouts of America — Buffalo Trail Council, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Camp Fire — Petro Plains Council, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services, Council on Alcoholism, Family Services, Midland/Lee Youth Services, Midland Rape Crisis Center, Midland Need to Read, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Permian Basin Girl Scouts, Salvation Army and the YMCA.

LULAC accuses GOP of ducking meeting

By ROB REHG
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Leaders of the League of United Latin American Citizens opened their convention here Thursday by accusing the national Republican Party of ducking the session — a charge denied by a GOP spokesman.

Jose Garcia De Lara, president of LULAC, also used the term "brown warts" to describe Hispanic members in the Bush administration who he accused of trying to block the organization's access to senior level government officials. De Lara repeatedly declined to specify who he was talking about, except to say that they were "a handful" of mid-level bureaucrats in various agencies, cabinet departments and the White House.

The attacks were made during a press conference as about 2,000 LULAC delegates opened a four-day convention to discuss political issues of concern to Hispanics. LULAC, with about 110,000 members nationwide, is considered the largest Hispanic political organization in the United States and is intended to be bipartisan in nature.

Convention organizers acknowledged, however, that there were few if any Republicans in attendance at the convention.

"There's been scuttlebutt that the Republicans are boycotting our convention," said De Lara, an outspoken San Antonio businessman who is seeking re-election Sunday to another one-year term as LULAC president.

"I hope that they are not. But there are some indications that in some segments of the party this may be true."

Although two Bush cabinet members — Jack Kemp, secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and Elizabeth Dole, secretary of the Department of Labor — are scheduled to address the group over the weekend, De Lara said he is angry that LULAC was unable to arrange a debate between leaders of the national Democratic and Republican parties.

Ronald Brown, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, will speak Friday to a LULAC audience in a session that originally was intended to be a debate on the topic: "Are Hispanics really wanted?"

Lee Atwater, Republican National Committee chairman, said that he could not take part in the debate because he was already scheduled for a trip to California.

That's where agreement ends on what happened next.

Arnoldo Torres, LULAC's national political director, said that he urged the RNC to send a stand-in for Atwater but that the RNC declined.

"We really did everything we could to make it clear that if (Atwater) could not come we wanted a backup because we did not want to go into this session without having a fair discussion on the issue by both Republicans and Democrats," Torres said.

But Daniel Schnur, a RNC spokesman, said Thursday Republicans did offer to send a replacement for Atwater and Torres declined to accept anyone else.

The debate was "obviously something that we would be very interested in participating in," Schnur said. "We pretty much gave them an open field (of people to select from) but that offer was refused."

Torres was unavailable for comment on Schnur's response.

Meanwhile, both De Lara and Torres said Thursday they are finding it increasingly difficult to arrange meetings between LULAC representatives and administration officials because of interference by lower-level Hispanic officials who consider the organization to be too liberal. De Lara said members of the Hispanic community have taken to calling those Hispanic Republicans "brown warts."

Cisneros urges Hispanics to fight 'retrenchment'

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros Thursday urged Hispanic politicians to lead the fight to reverse "a retrenchment" by the federal government on affirmative action programs and said the United States is headed for a period of increasing racial tension.

In the keynote speech that opened the 60th anniversary convention of the League of United Latin American Citizens, Cisneros said Hispanics cannot afford to tolerate a recent Supreme Court ruling that curbed the ability of minorities to use employment statistics in discrimination lawsuits.

"Retrenchment need not be our fate," Cisneros told a cheering audience of about 300 people who attended the convention's opening general session. "...Our children don't deserve it. We owe them a fight."

Cisneros, who declined to seek the Democratic nomination for governor of Texas or a fifth two-year term as San Antonio mayor after disclosing last fall that he was having an extramarital affair, was enthusiastically received by the convention crowd. Many gathered around the 42-year-old former politician after his speech to seek autographs and pose for photographs.

While stressing that he had no immediate plans to return to the political arena, Cisneros, who left office on June 1, said there are enough Hispanic political leaders to greatly expand their political clout at state and federal levels.

But many of those in the audience were predicting that Cisneros would soon return to politics as a candidate.

"The Democrats will embrace him again in another two or three years," said Sally Reyes, a 37-year-old public relations executive from Chicago, Ill.

"It will take that long to rehabilitate his image and for people to realize that he is an honest politician who admitted to doing what everybody else does," she said.

Enrique Medina Ochoa, a 35-year-old employment training center executive from Phoenix, Ariz., agreed that Cisneros still has a promising political future.

"He's still very much in the political arena," Ochoa said. "He's smart by taking time off to reorganize his private life and to give the people time to decide whether they will judge him on his personal life or on his abilities as a leader."

Meeting with reporters after his speech, Cisneros described his brief time away from political office as "37 days of freedom." Having started his own investment firm, Cisneros also is producing a daily two-minute radio spot for 40 stations across the country in which he discusses, in Spanish, political and economic issues that he deems to be most important to the Hispanic community.

Cisneros said the time away from political office will allow him to re-evaluate his own political thinking, adding that he misses not having "the position to influence" people politically.

"You do it for 14 years and it gets in your blood," Cisneros said of his time as a council member and mayor of San Antonio. "But I've done a pretty good job of staying out — for 37 days. ... Now I have to pick my shots more carefully."

Missile's demise marks end to weapons class

KARNACK (AP) — For the first time, an entire class of American nuclear weapons has been made extinct after the earthshaking destruction of the country's last Pershing 1A missiles at an East Texas munitions plant.

"This is indeed a momentous occasion," Maj. Gen. Marvin D. Brailsford said Thursday, after the flames and smoke faded from the firing of the 169th and last Pershing 1A to be destroyed under the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty.

"We all should be mindful ... that we have moved forward in our relationship with the Soviet Union," said Brailsford, commander of the U.S. Army Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command in Rock Island, Ill. "This also indicates a giant step toward reducing the risk of war."

Gen. Maj. Vladimir Medved'ev, director of the Soviet Nuclear Risk Reduction Center, watched from a visitors area, peering through binoculars. He later presented to American officials a trophy-like piece of a Soviet missile destroyed under the treaty.

"This has been possible due to the new political thinking," he said. "This is a major step in the direction of peace."

The INF treaty — signed in December 1987 by President Reagan and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev — requires elimination of 859 U.S. intermediate-range and shorter range missiles and 1,752 similar Soviet missiles within three years.

Some of the Soviet observers watched the operation Thursday from a concrete bunker near the firing site. Another contingent was about 1,000 feet away in a second observation area.

The final 5,500-pound Pershing 1A was destroyed in two separate ignitions Thursday — one for each of two rocket motors — while it was strapped on its side to reinforced stands.

The first burn lasted about 40 seconds and consumed one rocket stage. After about a 30-second wait, the second stage was fired for another 40 seconds.

After the missile stages cooled, the remains were crushed.

"Then we throw the pieces in a landfill," said George Huffman, production director at the plant.

The missiles marked for destruction, which have a range of 300 to 3,400 miles, were not armed. Nuclear warheads and electronic guidance systems were removed, with the warheads stored by the Department of Energy.

"Pershing 1A helped keep the peace. We hope now that its passing will help preserve peace," said Brig. Gen. Larry Capps, deputy commander of the U.S. Army Missile Command at the Redstone Arsenal in Alabama.

Thursday's operation, 10 months after the first Pershing 1A was destroyed at Longhorn, was conducted under a government contract awarded to Utah-based Thiokol Inc., which built many of the Pershing motors at Longhorn.

The more powerful of the two rocket motors carried 4,400 pounds of propellant, capable of hurtling a 3,000-pound car, for example, about 150 miles in just 45 seconds.

Telephone poles and netting shade Austin's poisoned Treaty Oak from the harsh Texas sun Thursday. City employees put up the special rigging to protect the historic tree, in the hope that it will recover from the herbicide that was poured around it a few months ago.

Entrepreneurs root for Treaty Oak

AUSTIN (AP) — The historic Treaty Oak's battle against a poisoning attack has moved entrepreneurs to set up a T-shirt stand near the centuries-old tree, which has attracted a steady stream of well-wishers.

A shirt with a drawing of the oak superimposed on a big red heart is $15, with half the money going to a fund set up to defray the costs of treating the tree, said Juan Vega, vice president of McOne USA, the T-shirt design company.

After two days, 150 shirts had been sold, Vega said Thursday.

"It's been incredible. For an hour and half today, we had no shirts while we were printing new ones. We're really looking forward to hopefully contributing quite a bit to this fund," he said.

Meanwhile, police worked toward finishing their investigation into the poisoning, which occurred when the herbicide Velpar was poured on the soil around it.

"There are still a few odds and ends we have to tie up on it. The next step is presenting it to a grand jury," said Sgt. John Jones.

Police last week arrested Paul S. Cullen in connection with the poisoning. Cullen, 45, of Elroy, was charged with felony criminal mischief.

In the effort to save the tree, which is about 50 feet tall, a shade screen was being erected to reduce stress from the sun. The tree's foliage also is being sprayed with spring water to fight the summer heat.

Besides the fund for the tree, money has been pledged in the effort by Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot.

That kind of support — which also is demonstrated by get-well cards left in front of the tree that is adorned with a yellow ribbon — prompted the T-shirt design by John McElhenney, McOne president, Vega said.

Officials probe credentials of dead Abilene 'hero'

ABILENE (AP) — When Floyd L. Stephens was buried here last month the chest of his white uniform was decorated with eight rows of ribbons.

Among the badges of honor was the Navy Cross, a symbol of valor second only to the Congressional Medal of Honor.

But officials have learned Stephens made up his military record and served just a little more than two years in the Marines in World War II.

Stephens died June 1 from a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the chest with a .357 Magnum handgun, which he had purchased under a false name, authorities said.

"This guy was a complete and total impostor," said Justice of the Peace Chuck Griffin.

But a police officer says an investigation so far has found that while Stephens may have deceived friends, he probably did nothing illegal.

Friends knew Stephens as the four-time commander of the American Legion and a member of every other veteran's organization in Abilene.

After his death, investigators discovered several altered government documents that indicate Stephens wasn't a military officer.

The Veterans Administration found no record of Stephens' retirement from the Marines. Stephens' altered records to show he had retired from the Marines in 1963 after serving more than 26 years. Marines Corps records show he actually served only two years and four months in the 1940s, Griffin said.

Taylor County Veterans Service Officer Dan Garcia, Griffin and police Sgt. Danny Spohn have started an investigation of Stephens.

FBI records show Stephens was arrested four times, including a 1953 arrest for altering an operator's license. Investigators are waiting for documentation of his rank at discharge and whether the discharge was under honorable conditions.

Glenn Woodard, second vice commander of the American Legion, said, "He did an awful lot of good for this post and the veterans in Abilene, but I don't think there's anyone who has served this country for 20 years under honorable conditions who would condone what he did, if he did."

BUNTON

"Antonio Silva's litigation experience is substantial and proved necessary to the successful organization and presentation at trial of this cause," Bunton wrote.

A breakdown of fees ordered by the judge include: Hugo Rodriguez, $35,675 in-court and $316,030 out-of-court; Antonio Silva, $20,250 in-court and $189,652 out-of-court; and out-of-court fees of $63,240 for Jose A. Silva and out-of-court fees between $13,640 and $728 for Rudy Martin, Orlando Quintana, William F. Davis, Daniel Behles, Nicholas Rodriguez, Leopoldo Ramos and Richard Yerby.

Approximately 310 Hispanic FBI agents were in the class-action suit brought against the 1908-founded bureau, which has about 9,400 special agents, including 400 Hispanics.

"The court's findings demonstrate that in fact the bureau does not have in place the means to properly determine the most qualified person for promotion," Bunton said in his findings.

Further, the judge found that "contributions made by Hispanic special agents were undervalued by the bureau."

Orders in Bunton's 21-point findings include:

- No awards of back pay or determination of promotional quotas for members of the class will be ordered by the judge.
- No class-wide award of seniority will be made.
- Individual hearings will be held before a three-member Special Masters Panel for the "sole remedy of a 'rightful-place seniority' for individual members of the class who occupy GS-13 or higher ranks. The GS-13 rank is the last "brick-" or "street-level" rank before an agent takes on administrative duties.
- FBI Career Board meeting "at every level within the Bureau" will be tape-recorded for review.
- Special Agents-in-Charge (SAC) of FBI field offices will not be permitted to select persons for promotion "other than the person chosen by the Career Board."
- Plaintiff Perez's request for "systematic interviewing of candidates for promotion by the Career Board" was denied by Bunton.
- The bureau is to commission a study of whether "shifting program priorities since 1975 require changes" in the FBI valuative dimensions.
- Bunton denied the plaintiff's request to enjoin the bureau from "calling upon the language skills of its agents." Perez and other Hispanic agents had complained that non-Spanish-speaking Anglo agents often had used Hispanic agents as interpreters and thereby took away from the Hispanic agents' investigative missions.
- The judge did not award Perez monetary compensation relating "to the retaliation."
- The judge ordered Perez to be promoted to GS-17 with the "relative compensation and privileges attendant to that rank."

Following Bunton's ruling, Perez said Hispanic agents only wanted "an equal chance. Now we are going to get it."

And Silva said the Hispanic agents were only seeking "the rightful place" within the FBI.

The day before Bunton's ruling last May, Silva cited the "immense interest in this case" and said that the judge "absolutely" has the "courage to order changes" within the FBI.

"He is a conservative judge," Silva said of Bunton, "but he has been fair to us." Silva and co-counsel Hugo Rodriguez of Miami, Fla., had sought $9.2-million in damages for Perez and other class-action clients and the $1.35-million in legal fees. Perez was seeking $500,000 in damages. Bunton denied any class-action money awards.

"In fact," Bunton said in his 55-page ruling, "this suit has not primarily been about monetary damages" but about "unfair conditions of employment" within the FBI.

LULAC

"That doesn't come from me," De Lara said, when reporters pressed him on who was using the derogatory term. "I'm hearing it from people who are upset that we can't get in to see people."

De Lara praised Bush for having two Hispanics serving in the cabinet — Manuel Lujan as Secretary of the Interior and Lauro Cavazos as Secretary of Education — and said neither of those cabinet officials has proven to be an obstacle to LULAC.

In other conference developments:

- De Lara said LULAC will oppose any attempt to raise salaries for Supreme Court justices because of the court's recent rulings to curb affirmative action.
- "We feel in good conscience that if (Supreme Court justices) are not going to support affirmative action ... or our employees, then we're not going to support them," De Lara said.
- De Lara said LULAC will not take an immediate position on the Supreme Court's ruling this week that gives states greater authority to regulate abortions. Instead, the organization will poll its members to get a reading on how the Hispanic community views the abortion ruling.

PROGRAM

Sensitive information actually is safer in the hands of Crime Stoppers, White said.

"Crime Stoppers actually is more confidential than we as a police agency are, at least in the gathering of information," he noted.

Only Crime Stoppers programs that give out information without requiring victims to sign releases could be hurt, according to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter.

"The perception was incorrect, because Crime Stoppers here has always had a policy of requiring releases," Painter said. "Now, I would imagine most of them will require a release."

CISNEROS

During his speech, Cisneros sharply criticized President Bush for vetoing a bill that would have increased the minimum wage by $1.20 over three years, and for not including in his budget request more money for education.

He also warned the audience that Hispanics must protect their political base by making sure that their growing population, now estimated at 19 million in the United States, is accurately reflected in the census count that will be conducted in 1990 and that they are fairly treated by the redrawing of congressional districts.

Talking to reporters afterward, Cisneros said U.S. political forces were destined for a collision. The growing popularity of conservative values — "which may actually solidify as we see America aging" — are running headlong into the needs of a burgeoning minority population, he said.

"We are setting ourselves up for some very tumultuous times as large minority populations grow but remain poor, undereducated and underproductive," Cisneros said.

Midland College's late registration begins Monday

From Staff Reports

Late registration for Midland College's second summer session begins Monday for four days. Summer II classes also begin meeting Monday.

Persons wishing to take credit courses during the second summer session should visit the Student Services Office, Administration Building, between 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

"We had a big enrollment Thursday for Summer II courses," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. "Lots of students are interested in avoiding the TASP exam, while others just want to get a class or two out of the way."

Many first-time students are enrolling this summer to beat the fall deadline for the TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) exam. The Texas Legislature in 1987 mandated a test of English, writing, and math for all college students during the first semester of their enrollment. The exam goes into effect during the 1989 fall semester. However, students who have completed three hours of credit courses do not have to take the TASP exam.

Courses being offered during the second summer term include: Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling, Biology, Business Administration, Chemistry, Computer Information Systems, Economics, English, Government, Legal Assistance, Mathematics, Music, Office Education, Physical Education, Physics, Psychology, Real Estate, Spanish and Speech Communication.

For information about classes which still have openings, you may call 685-4501.

LUBBOCK (AP) — Kenneth May, 59, associate editor of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, has died after a lengthy bout with cancer.

May died in Lubbock Methodist Hospital Monday, three weeks before he would have observed his 40th anniversary of the Avalanche-Journal.

He was remembered at a memorial service Thursday for many contributions in Lubbock and other Panhandle communities.

"I know no good cause in this city during the past 36 years I've been here that Kenneth did not give unqualified support to," said the Rev. Dudley Strain.

British rights group finds slavery still flourishing

By SHEILA RULE
New York Times News Service

LONDON — In a faded brick building in south London, a little-known organization that was established 150 years ago to abolish slavery is busier than ever at its task.

The Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights was founded in 1839 to spread the intent of Britain's laws against chattel slavery to the rest of the world.

Where it once campaigned against the bondage that brought black Africans in chains to the New World and inspired William Wilberforce and American abolitionists, its work today primarily involves battling the gross exploitation of bonded laborers and children forced to work in appalling conditions for little or no money.

THE SOCIETY SAYS that servitude of one type or another continues to cast a wide shadow of oppression over more than 200 million living in unyielding poverty in the developing world.

"British schoolbooks still say that slavery was abolished in 1833, with no qualifications," said Alan Whittaker, the society's coordinator.

"The fact that we are here proves that it hasn't been. But people on the street are not aware. They've been told that slavery was abolished and it's penetrated their minds and we can't budge it. We suffer from what is perceived as success.

"We are the world's oldest human rights organization, and we are literally unique. Nobody else in the world does what we do. Nobody else fights the whole range of slavery every single day. But we have no illusions about our power."

With only 1,200 members worldwide, three fulltime employees and coffers in desperate need of more than $750,000 in contributions, the society uses the politics of embarrassment to persuade nations to enforce their laws as well as rights conventions.

MOST GOVERNMENTS at the outset vigorously deny allegations by the society, which more than once has been characterized as neo-colonialist.

Nonetheless, the organization pushes and prods, gathering information about possible rights abuses from press reports, conversations in the halls of the United Nations and other sources.

When it believes a situation requires firsthand investigation, it tries to arrange a visit to the country in question by someone from its network of contacts who understands the particular culture.

It reports its findings to the United Nations, where it has consultative status, as well as to other international bodies, national governments, the press and many others.

"The society has been quite diligent in looking after those aspects of human rights that are often neglected in more glamorous human rights debates," said Asbjorn Eide, chairman of the U.N. Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery and director of the Norwegian Human Rights Institute, in a telephone interview.

"It deals with those who are most extremely exploited and marginalized," Eide said. "There are no dramatic changes but gradual change following increased attention to these phenomena, which makes governments ashamed they haven't done more to prevent them from happening."

THE SOCIETY is concentrating its efforts in South and Southeast Asia because child labor there is "really horrendous," Whittaker said.

In small shops near the main railway station in Bangkok, for example, children are sold for as little as $100 — receipts are provided on request — and then put to work in back-street sweatshops.

In India alone, an estimated 50 million children are working in exploitative conditions, according to the society, which recently organized a meeting in New Delhi to discuss child labor.

"In one Indian state in the north, Uttar Pradesh, there are 100,000 boys making carpets in poorly lit, badly ventilated loom sheds scattered in the remoter rural areas," said Whittaker, who formerly campaigned for animal welfare.

"The wool and conditions affect their lungs and their eyesight is also affected. They often sleep at the loom after working 12 to 14 hours a day six and, not infrequently, seven days a week."

The society also tries to ease the plight of bonded laborers, those impoverished, illiterate people who work for appallingly low wages, borrow money from their employers and pledge their labor as security.

BY PUTTING their thumbprints on a contract or entering into a verbal agreement, neither of which they may understand, they practically give their lives away. They may still be trying to pay off a loan of $20 or $30 decades later, as the interest climbs and their wages stay the same. The debts can last generations.

The society originally organized as the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. It merged in 1909 with the Aborigines' Protection Society, which was formed in 1837 to try to prevent the massacres and deprivation of land, culture and religion faced by the world's indigenous people.

One year after the merger, the society lost royal patronage because of its opposition to the proposed constitution of the Union of South Africa. It had forecast the disfranchisement of black South Africans.

Some critics say that for the society to keep the word slavery in its name is disingenuous. Having redefined slavery, they say, it should search for a new title. But Whittaker passionately disputes such assertions.

"You ask someone who has been 'redefined' if he is a slave or not," said Whittaker, seated at his desk in his cramped office. He turned to a wall poster of a wide-eyed little girl.

"That is a three-and-a-half-year-old girl chained in a cellar in Bangkok and packing opium. If she is not a slave, what is she?"

Insect Invasion

Black Fly

The black fly first emerges in early May and swarms in full swing until the end of November. The flies swarm around your head and bite where clothing is tight. They can be found throughout all northern states, the Midwest and parts of the West.

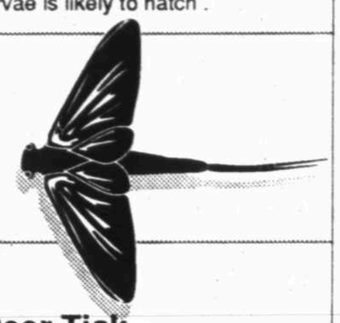

Mosquito

Mosquitoes are uncommonly dense in New England this spring due to the heavy rains of April and May and the sudden onset of spring. As the current crop dies off in two months, another round of larvae is likely to hatch .

Shad Fly

The largest yearly emergence of the shadfly occurs in early June along the Ohio River.

Deer Tick

Ticks found on deers were determined to cause Lyme disease in 1975. Ninety percent of the nation's cases occur in the Northwest.

Women take bull by horns in farm economy

By SALLY LEHRMAN
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It's a rare farm woman who has time to bake pies anymore.

Today's farm woman is more likely to be busy scouting new markets, testifying before Congress, driving a tractor or taking care of the kids.

Long a quiet necessity in her husband's business, the farm woman is starting to stand up and be counted.

The economic crisis that hit agriculture earlier this decade pushed more than half of the nation's farm wives into second jobs. Global market pressures and concerns about food safety and the environment have drawn women further into the public arena.

"It's extraordinary the way things have changed," said Mitzi Ayala Perdue, president of American Agri-Women, a national women's trade organization based in Maryland.

"At one time, (farm women's) vision of the world didn't extend beyond the farm gates. Now they're following the market in the Soviet Union."

There are no recent figures on the number of women who operate their own farms, but according to the 1982 Census of Agriculture, 9.4 percent of all farmers in the United States were women.

Of the women-operated farms, 13 percent were run by Hispanics and 45 percent by blacks and other ethnic minorities.

Women are climbing over legal roadblocks and social convention to demand recognition as partners in agribusiness.

And they are extending their reach by learning to give speeches and lobby senators, taking on a new role as voices in a traditionally male-dominated industry.

In a survey of Minnesota farm women last year, a full quarter of the 513 respondents considered themselves equal partners on the farm.

Almost as many said they were highly involved in decision-making, though they called their husband the farm's primary operator. Only 6 percent said they had little or no contact with the farm.

Nearly half of the same group of women also said they held jobs off the farm, most working there 40 or more hours a week.

"Women really are working three jobs: on the farm, off the farm, and as primary caretakers of the family," said Sharon Danes, the study's author and a University of Minnesota assistant professor.

Historically, women have been critical to the success of a farm. In the mid-19th century, women worked alongside their husbands, processed all the farm's products and nurtured the family. Later, they invented an off-season cash flow by selling eggs and milk in town.

Today, as farm women take on leadership roles, they are demanding more recognition. Though they serve on Farm Bureau boards, women's committees still bake cookies, raise money and sponsor picnics.

Said Catherine Baranek, who with her husband owns a vineyard in Courtland in California's Sacramento County,

"We're trying to change Farm Bureau so that it will change also as society has."

USDA research entomologist Raymond I. Carruthers said the fungus — Entomphaga grylli — can stand about 100 degrees Fahrenheit for six to eight hours before starting to die. Grasshoppers in laboratory tests have been shown to "actually cure themselves by basking in the light," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's that time of the year when the Agriculture Department's bug writers turn out reports about the creepy, crawly, hoppy things that chew on crops and livestock.

Some of the reports turned out by specialists in the department's Agricultural Research Service involve space-age technology, foreign entomological recruiting and even sex, one of the favorite weapons of pest managers.

And when a fierce insect predator attacks a lace bug ... well, the details aren't for small children.

Take the common grasshopper, a notorious villain with an appetite for almost anything in the plant world. Or nematodes, ticks, weevils and sundry other kinds of critters that make farmers, ranchers and home gardeners fret.

"Grasshoppers like to sit in the sun," says USDA research entomologist Raymond I. Carruthers.

"If it's cold, a grasshopper can't develop quickly. It might not develop to adulthood at all during its growing season — from May into September."

Don't feel sorry for the hopper, though. Millions of them chew on pastures each year, destroying almost a fourth of the forage grasses in 17 of 22 Western states. And migrating grasshoppers also ravage potatoes, alfalfa and other crops.

The internal body heat of the sun-loving hoppers serves the insects another way, by protecting them against certain diseases. For example, Carruthers said one fungus — Entomphaga grylli — would show promise as a biological control if it could stand the heat.

Carruthers said the fungus can stand about 100 degrees Fahrenheit for six to eight hours before starting to die. Grasshoppers in laboratory tests have been shown to "actually cure themselves by basking in the light," he said.

But a type of E. grylli from Australia can stand greater heat exposure and may be introduced on Western rangeland as early as this summer, Carruthers said.

In parts of Texas and other rangeland areas of the West, snakeweed and other unwanted brush is a costly and persistent problem for livestock producers. Maybe two South American insects will help.

A weevil named Heilipodus ventralis and a moth called Carmenta haematica attack the roots of snakeweed, a plant that infests 143 million acres in western states.

Entomologist Jack DeLoach, who works for the USDA agency in Temple, Texas, said federal approval has been granted to introduce the weevil into the United States. But the moth is still being tested, he said.

Agency scientists are looking at biological controls for brush because chemicals are too expensive in areas where it takes 20 to 50 acres to provide grazing for one cow for a year, he said.

Besides snakeweed, which can cause pregnant cows to abort, targeted brush includes saltcedar, which infests about a million acres along Western streams, and baccharis, a willow-like shrub found from Florida to California.

Other possible brush enemies are being looked at, including some from Argentina and Brazil, and at least a dozen insect species from Asia.

But sometimes a natural ally shows up no farther away than a potted azalea at the USDA's main research center in Beltsville, Md. In this case, it was a natural enemy of lace bugs, the most serious enemies of azaleas.

Entomologist John W. Neal and colleagues discovered an insect predator — Stethoconus japonicus — in 1985 on a U.S.-grown potted azalea. Studies since have shown that a single female predator, which has a needle-like snout, can consume five or six lace bugs each day. The slightly smaller male handles two or three.

"The lace bug doesn't have a chance," Neal said.

"The predator sidles up, undetected, and gives its unsuspecting victim a lethal injection through its long, needle-like mouth. Holding onto the lace bug with front legs, the predator then withdraws all body fluids and tissue, leaving an externally intact but completely drained shell."

Down in the Caribbean, researchers have released 5.6 million hybrid cattle fever ticks on St. Croix Island in the U.S. Virgin Islands to see if they might be used to keep cattle tick fever from spreading into the United States along the U.S.-Mexico border.

The hybrid male ticks are sterile and do not produce sperm, said entomologist Ron Davey. The females are fertile but pass on the sterility to male offspring.

"The result is a population crash," he said.

Cattle fever, or babesiosis, kills up to 80 percent of adult cattle that are infected by it. All U.S. breeds are susceptible, Davey said, but humans do not get cattle tick fever and are not bitten by the ticks.

One of the most encouraging bits of news for many soybean farmers is a new bean variety that could be available next year. The variety, Cordell, will be the first commercial soybean resistant to "Race 5" nematodes, microscopic worms that infest as much as 70 percent of the soybean acreage in the mid-South and Southeast.

The so-called cyst nematodes are designated as specific "races" because of the types of soybeans in which they reproduce.

Lawrence D. Young, a USDA plant pathologist at Jackson, Tenn., said Cordell could be suited for planting in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, southern Missouri, Arkansas, northern Mississippi, Alabama and parts of South Carolina.

Those green grass clippings can yield big dividends in black gold

Summer rains in many areas would make lawn grasses grow rapidly. That means more mowing and more grass clippings. Save those clippings and put them to use in a compost pile.

Kiker

Besides being a good source of organic matter for gardens and flower beds, composting is an excellent way to dispose of garden debris, leaves and similar plant materials and reduce the amount of landfill space needed.

The compost pile should be 4 to 6 feet wide and any length, depending on material and space available.

A simple composting method is to alternate 4 to 6 inch layers of plant matter, such as leaves or grass, with 2 to 4 inches of good garden soil. Add manure to the soil layer if it's available, and sprinkle commercial fertilizer on each layer of plant matter to hasten decomposition. Use a cupful of fertilizer with a 1-1-1 ratio per 10 square feet.

The compost pile's top layer should be soil and should form a basin to hold water. Then water each layer of organic matter before adding the soil layer.

Water the pile thoroughly when completed. Add water as needed to keep the material moist but not soggy, since leaves decompose slowly if too dry. Turn compost every three to four months to aerate the material and speed decomposition. Within six months to a year, it will be ready to use, and you'll be glad you saved those grass clippings.

Texas has more farms, more cattle and more sheep than any other state, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Texas had 156,000 of the more than 2.1 million farms in the United States in 1988. This was 43,000 more than second place Missouri and 49,000 more than third-place Iowa.

Of the more than 9.9 million acres in farm for 1988 across the country, Texas again led the nation with 132,000 acres. Montana was second with 60,700 acres and Kansas was third with 47,900.

The total value of Texas' farm real estate in 1988 was $62,113 million of the $563,265 million in the United States, including land and buildings. In second place was California with $43,701 million and Illinois was third, with $31,850 million.

Texas also leads the nation for 1989 in the number of cattle and calves and the number of sheep and lambs, with 13.7 million head and 1.9 million head, respectively. The national total is 99.4 million cattle and 10.8 million sheep.

Based on 1987 figures, Texas also led the nation in total cash receipts from marketing livestock products with $6.05 billion of the U.S. total $76.2 billion.

Environmentalist has global perspective

By PETE SZILAGYI

AUSTIN (AP) — The Dutch freighter at a wharf near Sao Paulo, Brazil, might as well have been docked outside Tani Adams' airy West Austin office for all the concern it caused last week.

Adams was on the phone coordinating efforts of Brazilian and Dutch environmental activists to prevent the unloading of the ship, carrying toxic waste from Italy and Belgium. Finally, Brazilian government officials were sent to the wharf to ensure that the cargo would not leave the ship.

It was a satisfying victory for Adams, accomplished by telephone from thousands of miles away. But it was still a minor victory for what she sees as a planet under assault from chemicals, pollution and overpopulation.

Adams, 34, is an active player in the international environmental movement. The former Westlake High School student body president is a board member and former chairwoman of Greenpeace USA, the world's largest environmental organization with about 1.4 million members. She resigned the chair last year to manage the Latin American and Caribbean regional program for Amsterdam-based Greenpeace International.

Greenpeace has gained international exposure for members' acts of civil disobedience and the July 1985 bombing of its protest trawler, Rainbow Warrior, in New Zealand. More recently, the group's research helped lead to the U.S. government admission that in 1965 the military had lost a hydrogen bomb in the ocean near Okinawa.

DESPITE GRAVE threats to the environment, Adams does not view her work as futile. "Understanding how grave the situation is doesn't lead me to conclude we shouldn't act. What choice do we have?"

When not traveling, which occupies about half her time, Adams directs the program by computer and telephone from a modest office, provided by Greenpeace, near the Shoal Creek greenbelt. Adams, who describes herself as "a child of two countries," was born in Guatemala and moved to the United States as a young child.

The family settled in Austin when she was in the third grade, but they returned annually for summers on Lake Atitlan in Guatemala. If she could save just two of Earth's natural splendors, Adams said last week, they would be Lake Atitlan and Barton Springs.

Her father is Richard Adams, director of the University of Texas Institute for Latin American Studies. Betty, her mother, is from a third-generation German immigrant family in Guatemala.

Tani Adams, who is married to novelist and UT professor Arturo Arias, speaks Spanish, German and English and is learning Portuguese. She graduated Phi Beta Kappa from UT's Plan II honors program and received a master's degree in anthropology from the University of Chicago. Even in high school Adams was a "quiet leader with a lot of strength of conviction," said longtime Westlake counselor Toody Byrd. "She was real smart and real mature, an outstanding person."

Peter Bahouth, executive director of Greenpeace USA, calls Adams "very serious, professional and completely trustworthy" and the perfect person to take on the complex environmental problems of Latin America.

WITH NEWS of atmospheric ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect, and the Alaskan oil spill, worldwide concern about the environment is deepening and interest in Greenpeace and other groups is growing commensurately, according to Adams.

"I think the change in public sentiment the last five or 10 years has been extraordinary. The change in the last six months in the U.S. has been unbelievable. It's been so fast that I think the U.S. public has been making (demands that) go far past the ability of environmental leaders to lead. People want answers that aren't out there yet."

Environmental issues in Adams' area of interest, Central and South America, are complicated by the fact that "a lot of people are basically fighting for their lives either because they are hungry or because of war, and the poverty levels are much higher."

Compared to the United States, "there is a more visceral sense of crisis but much less ability to do something about it because there is so much less flexibility in what they can do. They have so little ability to change things because they have so little power themselves."

Adams sees the region under environmental assault by outside forces exploiting the area's natural resources, cheap labor, political strife and need for hard currency. She offers the ship docked near Sao Paulo last week as an example — ostensibly, the Italian and Belgian toxic waste aboard was to be recycled in Brazil. But Greenpeace suspected much of it would be dumped instead.

MEXICO CITY, which Adams calls a time bomb, is of particular concern.

"There are higher lead levels in children's blood from the air pollution than one can imagine. Probably not a person in Mexico City doesn't know they're in trouble, the situation is so extreme," she said.

"Sao Paulo is the same. Levels of infant mortality (are high), and there are strange kinds of deformities that are just extraordinary.

"When you look at World Health Organization statistics, Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, they're always the worst case. There is more DDT in mothers' breast milk in Guatemala than any other country in the world, and those countries tend to be at extreme levels at all things."

In Central America, "you see crop-dusters flying over with people working in the fields, spraying with very, very toxic organo-phosphates, which kill immediately," said Adams, who established the Texas Center for Policy Studies in 1983 and has done considerable work on pesticide issues.

Developing countries are "under an enormous amount of pressure to accept toxic and municipal waste from the United States. Various big cities have gone down to ask governments to accept their waste — trash has been sold disguised as fertilizers, disguised as building blocks for highways, however they can cover it up."

She said the "garbage crisis in the United States puts enormous pressure on countries in such economic straits that they sometimes are tempted to receive it just because it gives them immediate cash."

Adams sees irony in the fact that many problems faced in Latin America have been long-fought by U.S. environmentalists. "It's like a see-saw, solve it here and it pops up there."

PERHAPS THE highest profile South American environmental challenge is preserving the Amazon Basin rain forest, which is "going to take a concerted effort by all sectors of society to solve. The Amazon is in eight or nine countries, not just Brazil. As many interests as there are involved, it's going to take that many people to solve it. Everyone's going to have to pull back — the lumber interests, the mining companies, the trans-national companies pushing for hydroelectric plants."

Adams calls the Amazon Basin a laboratory for U.S. environmentalists.

"We're going to have to learn how to be respectful to countries that don't have as much economic power and understand that less economic power doesn't mean that they're not smart or that they are not people with vision. There are plenty of ideas in Brazil; proposals exist galore."

In fact, because Latin environmental problems are so linked to social and economic ills, environmentalists in Latin America can teach valuable lessons to the somewhat insular U.S. environmental movement, Adams said.

Highway 101 takes fast lane to success

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Highway 101, the hottest vocal band in country music, took its name after roads in California and Minnesota and its style from the pop group Fleetwood Mac.

The four-piece band, voted group of the year in 1988 and 1989 by the Academy of Country Music, formed in California in the mid-1980s with the idea of becoming the Fleetwood Mac of country music.

Highway 101 hasn't sold 15 million albums like Fleetwood Mac's "Rumours," but the energy of its music and the vocals of Paulette Carlson have drawn comparisons to Fleetwood Mac's Stevie Nicks and Christine McVie.

In a rapid rise to the top in country music, Highway 101 has turned out three No. 1 records: "Do You Love Me Just Say Yes" last September; "Cry, Cry, Cry" in 1988; and "Somewhere Tonight" in 1987.

Four other singles made the Top 10 of the country charts. The band's two albums, "Highway 101" and "Highway 101 2," also did well. They performed 140 concerts last year, doing shows with country stars such as Hank Williams Jr., the Judds and Reba McEntire.

"I think it was the right time for a band situation like this," said Highway 101 guitarist Jack Daniels. "We have kind of a style, an approach, that's carefree and dynamic as opposed to playing it safe and smooth and slick."

Said lead guitarist Curtis Stone, "It was definitely a musical adventure we all participated in."

Scott "Cactus" Moser, the band's drummer, rounds out the four. The men are all from the Los Angeles area and Carlson is from Minnesota, calling both tiny Winsted and equally small Moose Lake her home.

In a rapid rise to the top in country music, Highway 101 has been voted group of the year by the Academy of Country Music in 1988 and 1989. From left are Paulette Carlson, Cactus Moser, Curtis Stone and Jack Daniels.

Borrowing from roads in their home states, the four decided to call themselves Highway 101.

"It was the link between the guys on the West Coast and Paulette in Minnesota," said Daniels. "But in our travels, we've seen several others in the country. It's sort of a network."

All four members had solid professional experience before forming Highway 101. Moser had played drums for Johnny Rivers, Jennifer Warnes and others. Daniels hit the road at age 17 with country performer Freddie Hart. Carlson had recording experience as a solo singer. Stone, the son of a song publisher, had written songs for Crystal Gayle, Juice Newton and others.

"We had put in time in various other bands," Stone said. "I think we paid our dues individually."

Just as the band was getting together, Moser and Stone even appeared briefly in the movie "Back to School" with Rodney Dangerfield and did the soundtrack to the film.

"I sang the first verse to 'Twist and Shout' and Cactus played the drums," Stone said. "Rodney took the mike away from me and that was about it."

Their configuration is unique among country music recording artists: a woman lead singer who also plays guitar, with three accompanying musicians who share vocal responsibilities.

"It's helped," Stone said of the arrangement. "We're the first band that did it; we're the first that had a female singer."

Said Daniels, "We are all musicians and all singers. It's nebulous why it all works. If anyone knew the answer, everyone would be lining up doing it.

"We did a few things experimentally to find our groove, our niche. It wasn't necessarily what would sell to the public. It was what do we do best together. It took us a little bit to discover that. Once we did, we felt good with it and fortunately, people liked that.

"We have kind of a style, an approach, that's carefree and dynamic as opposed to playing it safe and smooth and slick."
— Jack Daniels, guitarist

"When we first came out, other musicians said we were playing raw energy. I think that sometimes music gets homogenized in the recording process. To be clean and safe, it loses its humanism. Our records were more live sounding."

Stone agrees.

"There's a lot of spontaneous things that happen in our music that you don't hear a lot on record (elsewhere)."

There's a good-natured tiff among the group about numbering their albums. The guys think it's clever but Carlson doesn't.

"We went with 'Highway 101 2' and got a lot of flak from Paulette," Stone said. "But we thought it was pretty cute because it could be Highway 101 2, Highway 101 squared, Highway 101 to the second power, whatever you want to say. But she's adamant about fighting it."

Stand-up comedian longs to sit down after 72-hour marathon

LAS VEGAS (AP) — T.R. Benker may not be the funniest comedian in the world. But he has staked a claim as the most persistent.

Benker capped a 72-hour joke-telling marathon Tuesday night back where he began it three days earlier — onstage at Bally's Catch a Rising Star comedy club.

In between, he told jokes on the radio, outside a casino and over breakfast in coffee shops.

The Guinness Book of World Records lists 50 hours as the longest continuous joke-telling session.

It was the Chicago comedian's sixth joke-telling marathon. And it was most likely his last.

"Never, ever again," Benker said Wednesday. "I can't even remember my mom's name today." He didn't sleep the entire time and had a five-minute break each hour.

Audience reaction depended on the audience.

"I might tell a joke one hour and people would just kind of stand there and do nothing," he said. "An hour later I'd tell it again and people would laugh their buns off."

Benker said he hoped his marathon did something to his career.

"This was the big one for someone to discover or manage me or else to put me away," he said.

'Batman' flies; Disney comedy expands profits

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — More summer box-office records were rewritten during the long Fourth of July weekend on the strength of the hit movies "Batman" and "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids."

"Batman," starring Michael Keaton and Jack Nicholson, grossed $43.6 million over the five days, setting a mark for any movie over the holiday period, according Exhibitor Relations Co.

The film has sold $113.7 million worth of tickets in less than two weeks.

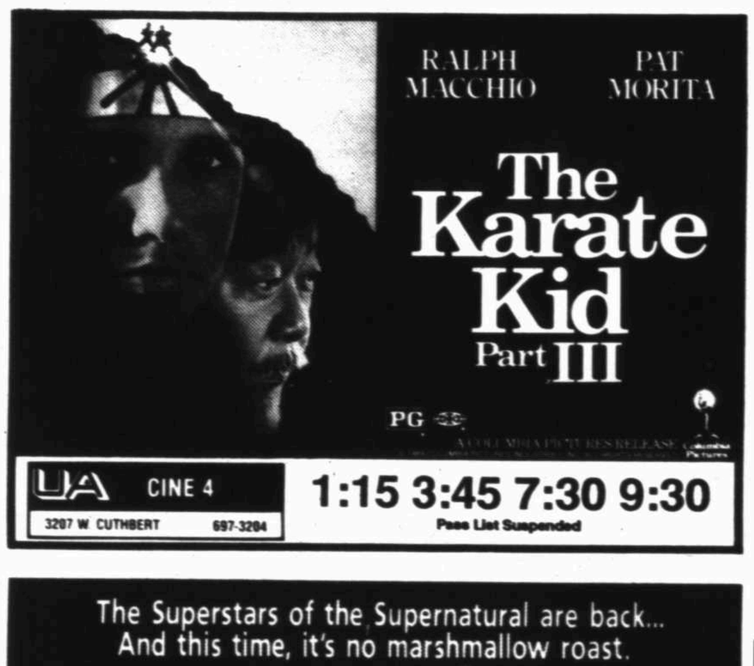

The Disney comedy "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids," was No. 2, earning $20 million from Friday to Tuesday. It also had the best Independence Day in Disney history for a single title, $3.1 million. The earlier Disney mark was held by last summer's "Who Framed Roger Rabbit."

"Karate Kid III," the latest sequel in the wimp-turned-martial arts champion saga, came in third at $14.3 million.

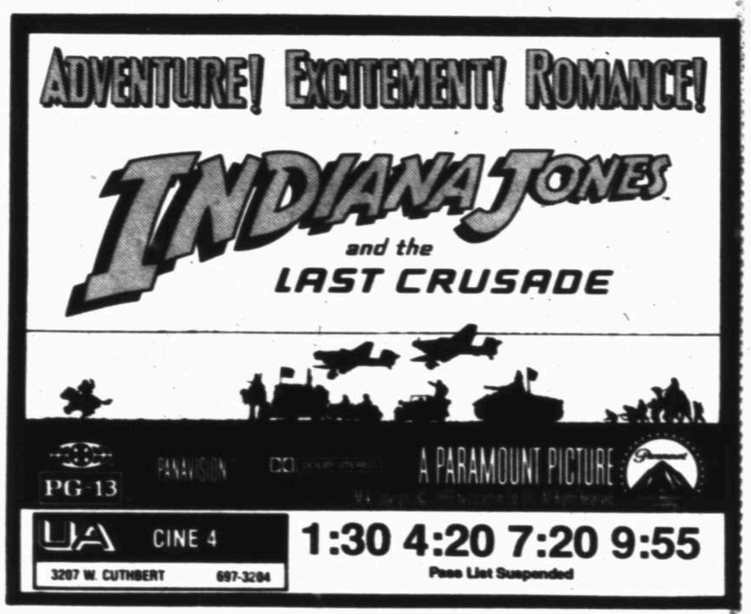

In fourth place was "Ghostbusters II," the comedy sequel starring Bill Murray and Dan Aykroyd, with receipts of $13.1 million. In fifth was "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," which grossed $11.1 million.

"Dead Poets Society," a modern-day version of "Goodbye Mr. Chips" featuring Robin Williams, was sixth with $10.1 million.

'Actor-bat' takes flying leap for success

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — Jeff Gordon calls himself an "actor-bat."

Eight times a week, he dives, jumps, spins, leaps, falls and tumbles into the orchestra pit at Broadway's St. James Theater.

And audiences gasp. His stunts provide some of the funniest — and most unexpected — moments in "Largely New York," a comedy without dialogue written by, directed by and starring clown Bill Irwin.

In the 65-minute entertainment, Irwin battles video technology — recalcitrant remote controls, temperamental television sets, malevolent minicams — and loses hilariously. But the show also features Gordon, two break dancers named Leon Chesney and Steve Clemente, a ballerina named Margaret Eginton and a gaggle of dancers dressed like academics in cap and gown.

"Bill Irwin is a pioneer in proving to the show business establishment that clowns are very talented people," Gordon says. "They are not just buffoons. They reflect human nature. There is a pervasive American attitude that clowns are the underbelly of show business, second-class performers. Bill is proving that you can have roots in the circus and physical comedy and still be a thinking-man's clown."

In the show, Gordon plays a character called the Dean, an officious authority figure who leads this rubber-legged band of graduates around the stage. His speciality is a swoon from the stage. He plunges some 8 feet into the pit.

"So far, I haven't been hurt," says the performer, knocking on the makeup table for luck in his St. James dressing room. But don't worry. His dive is cushioned by a thick mat that covers the floor of the pit. He also wears kneepads and elbow pads.

Gordon jumps with the expertise of a high diver, which is what he was in school. Back at Allegheny College in Meadville, Pa., he was a four-time All-American springboard diver and an NCAA Division III national champion.

But what do you do after you get a degree in sociology and find that jobs are scarce?

"I became a clown," says the 35-year-old Gordon, who grew up in Pittsburgh.

He was tending bar on the Delta Queen, the famous riverboat that still makes the journey up and down the Mississippi River. On the boat, he met several clowns who had worked with the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

They inspired him to apply for the circus's Clown College in Sarasota, Fla.

"I had an advantage over other applicants," Gordon says. "I was a little older and already had gymnastics, but the training in Sarasota was incredibly rigorous."

At the school, Gordon learned clown makeup, how to sew his own costume and to create his own clown character as well studying the history of circuses and the fine art of clowning.

After graduating, Gordon got a job jumping over elephants in the Red Unit, one of two troupes Ringling sends out to tour the country. It was hard work. There were 11 shows a week, nearly half of them packed into a weekend. Gordon did that for a year before leaving and joining the Big Apple Circus in New York in 1981.

"The Ringling Bros. circus was a three-ring circus," Gordon says. "The Big Apple Circus is one ring and much more focused. It uses changes in lighting and music to create a mood rather than spectacle."

In the Big Apple Circus, each performer gets a featured spot, according to Gordon, and because of this individual focus, the audience is drawn into the show rather than overwhelmed by three rings of action.

For the Big Apple Circus, Gordon created a special, very physical red-nosed clown who talks in monosyllables. His name is Gordoon, a variation on his creator's last name.

"Talking is not one of his featured talents, but he's been known to lip-sync to the Supremes," Gordon adds. "Gordoon is like my best pal. Since I've been in 'Largely New York,' I haven't played him in about five months and I miss him."

But the performer says he is still working on new routines for his clown character.

"I have a little idea book I keep by my bed," Gordon says. "I always jot down these seemingly silly ideas. They tend to pile up and influence one another and something comes out of that."

"There are basically three kinds of clowns," he explains. "A white-faced clown who is more of an effete, a kind of a straight man; an "auguste" clown who is a bumbler and does a lot of slapstick like Gordoon, and a character clown like a hobo or a little old lady."

It was at the Big Apple Circus that Irwin first saw Gordon perform.

Nolan Ryan enjoyed a homecoming of sorts Thursday night. See story, page 2C

Ryan earns Star berth; Sierra may start in RF

NEW YORK (AP) — Nolan Ryan is coming back to Anaheim as good as ever.

Ryan, 42, was one of 10 pitchers selected to the American League All-Star team on Thursday.

The league presidents and managers Tony La Russa of the American League and Tommy Lasorda of the National League filled out the remaining reserves and pitching staff for the midseason classic to be played Tuesday night at Anaheim Stadium.

The starting squad, selected by the fans, was announced on Wednesday.

On Thursday night, Ryan pitched a three-hitter and struck out 12 as visting Texas beat California 3-0.

Ryan, who still holds most of the Angels' career pitching records, had last pitched at Anaheim on Sept. 24, 1979.

On Tuesday, he'd like to pitch there again and is even willing to start.

"I look forward to coming back here for the All-Star game," Ryan said. That'll be a special game for both me and my family. I look forward to that more than my other All-Star games, just because of the circumstances.

"If they want me to start the game, it'll be an honor."

The Oakland A's and Texas Rangers will each send four players to the All-Star Game, while St. Louis and Los Angeles head the NL with four players apiece.

Ryan, 10-4, leads the major leagues with 148 strikeouts and threw his 56th career shutout against the Angels. For Ryan, it's his seventh All-Star selection and first since 1985.

Joining Ryan on the AL staff is teammate Jeff Russell, one of four relievers on the squad. The other relievers chosen are Detroit's Mike Henneman, Cleveland's Doug Jones and Milwaukee's Dan Plesac.

Other pitchers on the team are Mike Moore and Dave Stewart of Oakland, Chuck Finley of California, Mark Gubicza of Kansas City and Greg Swindell of Cleveland.

Houston's Mike Scott, 14-4, heads the NL pitching staff and is joined by starters Orel Hershiser of Los Angeles, Rick Reuschel of San Francisco and John Smoltz of Atlanta.

For his selection, Scott gets an additional $150,000. The right-hander receives a $50,000 bonus and will have $50,000 added to his base contract for the next two seasons, making it worth a guaranteed $2 million per year.

"Everything has been going great for me so far this season," Scott said. "The team is scoring runs for me and I hope it continues. You need some help."

All-Star Game

Dwight Gooden, who started last season's All-Star Game in Cincinnati, is sidelined for at least a month with a muscle tear in his right shoulder. Gooden was 9-4 for the New York Mets at the time of the injury.

The NL staff has five relief pitchers: Tim Burke of Montreal, Mark Davis of San Diego, John Franco of Cincinnati, Jay Howell of Los Angeles and Mitch Williams of Chicago. Franco leads the majors with 22 saves.

On the AL squad, 11 players were selected for their first All-Star Game.

On the pitching staff, Finley, Henneman, Moore, Stewart and Swindell are going for the first time. Willie Randolph and Steve Sax, second basemen who exchanged uniforms, were selected as reserves.

Randolph, a five-time All-Star with the New York Yankees in the AL, signed as a free agent with the Dodgers and is hitting .289.

Sax, who helped the Dodgers to a world championship last season, signed with the Yankees and is hitting .324. While a member of the Dodgers, Sax was a member of the NL All-Star squad three times.

"I wasn't sure what to expect this season, but so far everything has worked out great for me," Sax said. "It's an honor."

Don Mattingly of the Yankees was selected to back up Oakland's Mark McGwire at first base. The other AL infield reserves are third basemen Kelly Gruber of Toronto and Gary Gaetti of Minnesota, and shortstop Tony Fernandez of the Blue Jays.

It's the first time since 1982 that the Yankees do not have a starter on the AL team.

Toronto first baseman Fred McGriff, who has 20 homers, and Seattle first baseman Alvin Davis, who is hitting .314, were not selected.

In the outfield, Boston's Mike Greenwell, Chicago's Harold Baines, Texas' Ruben Sierra, Seattle's Jeffrey Leonard and California's Devon White were selected as reserves. Sierra is hitting .334 with 13 homers and 62 RBIs.

Baltimore's Mickey Tettleton, who has 20 homers and 51 RBIs, is the reserve catcher.

Dissident owners block Finks appointment

NFL

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Finks spent one endless day waiting to become NFL commissioner, but now faces what could be an endless summer.

The endless day was Thursday, when Finks spent 12 hours in a hotel near O'Hare Airport waiting for the expected unanimous vote of the owners ratifying the unanimous choice of a six-man screening committee.

Instead, after a 6 hour, 25-minute meeting, a group of 11 dissident owners blocked the election by abstaining in order to get "further information" about Finks and other candidates.

Finks finished with 16 votes, three short of the 19 needed for election. Now he'll have to wait until the owners reconvene sometime later this summer. The owners will be given seven days' notice of a meeting by outgoing commissioner Pete Rozelle.

"This was not a vote against Jim Finks," said Norman Braman, owner of the Philadelphia Eagles and one of the three men who, according to several sources, led the revolt against the NFL's old guard that made up the selection committee. "We felt we simply did not have the relevant information necessary to make such an important choice."

"I still feel, speaking for the committee, that our candidate is definitely Jim Finks," said Lamar Hunt, co-chairman of the six-member group that unanimously recommended the New Orleans president and general manager for the job Rozelle had held for 30 years.

Finks was not available for comment.

In fact, the move was something of a rebellion of the new guard against the old, represented by the six members of the committee. Each of the six had been in the league for at least 20 years and there was grumbling even when they were appointed on March 23, the day after Rozelle announced his resignation.

The dissidents were mostly newcomers, like Jerry Jones of Dallas, Victor Kiam of New England and Ken Behring of Seattle, all of whom entered the league in the past year, or owners like Georgia Frontiere of the Los Angeles Rams and Robert Irsay of Indianapolis, who rarely have been included in the NFL's inner circle.

According to sources, the group was put together during a meeting Wednesday night by Braman, Mike Lynn, president of the Minnesota Vikings, and Edward DeBartolo Jr., owner of the San Francisco 49ers.

Braman, who came into the league in 1985, and Bowlen, who entered in 1984, are considered closest of the dissidents to the league's decision-makers.

The 11 dissidents handed Rozelle a statement about an hour before the meeting began, saying they weren't prepared to vote "at this time" on a new commissioner. In fact, they threatened at first to boycott the meeting, but finally agreed to come.

Trivia Teaser...

Friday's Question— In response to complaints that these questions are just getting too doggone tough, who won last week's Canadian Open?

Thursday's Answer— Ann Jones, 1969, is the only lefty besides Martina Navratilova to win the Wimbledon Women's Singles.

On This Date...

1923 — Lefty O'Doul, pitching for the Boston Red Sox, gave up 13 runs in the sixth inning to Cleveland in a 27-3 loss. In 1928, O'Doul returned to the majors as a hard-hitting outfielder and in 1929 he set the still-standing National League record with 254 hits.

1936 — The National League won its first All-Star game, 4-3 at Braves Field in Boston.

1937 — Lou Gehrig drove in four runs with a home run and a double to pace the American League to an 8-3 victory over the National League in the All-Star Game at Washington's Griffith Stadium. In attendance was President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

1959 — At Forbes Field in Pittsburgh, the first of two All-Star Games played that season was won by the National League, 5-4. The NL scored the tying and winning runs in the bottom of the eighth when Hank Aaron singled in a run and scored on a triple by Willie Mays.

Martina, Steffi ready to rumble

Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — It's the third edition of the ultimate showdown. Whatever happens this time, it will make tennis history.

"I want it badly and Steffi wants it badly," Martina Navratilova said Thursday. "This is what you live for. It should be a great match."

"It" is the women's singles title at Wimbledon, something Steffi Graf holds and Navratilova wants back.

After Chris Evert's probable farewell to Wimbledon's ivy-covered walls and six rounds of toil and sweat, the goal is in sight for Navratilova and Graf.

The men's finalists were to be decided today.

John McEnroe, in the last four for the first time since 1984, takes on defending champion Stefan Edberg in the first semifinal. Then comes a rematch of last year's semifinal between two-time titlist Boris Becker and Ivan Lendl.

McEnroe carried a damaged left shoulder into the match. He received laser, ultrasound and muscle stimulation treatment for a tear in the posterior rotator cuff of his left shoulder Thursday. Trainer Bill Norris said the injury would hinder McEnroe in his semifinal match against defending champion Stefan Edberg.

"If he had to play today, forget it, he wouldn't have been able to," Norris said Thursday.

Edberg won the first two sets today 7-5, 7-6 (7-2). Final results were unavailable at press time.

Navratilova, a 32-year-old from the United States, and Graf, just turned 20 from West Germany, have split the last two women's singles titles here. Last year, Graf won 5-7, 6-2, 6-1.

When they meet again on Saturday, it will be the first time since 1921 that the same women have met for the championship three years in a row.

Navratilova is aiming for an even greater landmark.

If she beats Graf, Navratilova will become the winningest Wimbledon singles champion of all time, beating the eight titles she shares with Helen Wills Moody.

"I don't think it makes any difference what happened last year, two years ago or 10 years ago," Navratilova said. "I have been in more finals than Steffi but she has been in all of them lately."

Both had straight-set semifinals victories Thursday, Navratilova 7-6, 6-2 over unseeded Swede Catarina Lindqvist and Graf 6-2, 6-1 over three-time champion Evert in what the American said was "90 percent" certain to be her last appearance here.

However many dramas are still to unfold, this year's championships will be remembered for the day Chris Evert got trounced on Centre Court and then waved goodbye.

"I'd be really shocked if I came back next year," Evert said. "It would take a transplant or something ... a couple of different parts."

With the Centre Court dripping with sentimentality and searing heat, Evert made one final effort to win the grass-court title for a fourth time.

But Graf, upset in the final of the French Open by 17-year-old Arantxa Sanchez after five straight Grand Slam tournament titles, was in no mood for nostalgia. She made her intentions clear from the start as she dropped only one point in the first two games.

Evert had six break points in the match but couldn't convert any of them, and wilted under Graf's fearsome forehand.

"There were a lot of close games but I always managed to win the big points," Graf said. "That used to be Chris' strength. Now it's mine."

As Evert left the court to a rousing ovation, a ball boy stopped her and asked for an autograph. Evert obliged, in the same way she has thousands of times before.

Later, she said time finally had caught up with her.

"I was out of breath a few times with those long rallies," Evert said. "Obviously, I'm past my prime, past my peak. I'm not young any more. I'm not fresh and I don't have much in reserve."

Evert, the winningest player in Wimbledon history with 96 singles victories, said that if Thursday's match turned out to be her last here, she was pleased Graf was her opponent.

"She's probably the best player I've ever seen," Evert said. "She's so strong and she's getting stronger all the time."

Evert said she would never forget playing at Wimbledon.

Ollie and Barry get the heave-ho

Patterson

Barry Sykes and Oliver North, great Americans both of 'em, have a lot in common.

There it was, the Fourth of July. A baseball game. Everyone mad at the ump. What else could be so American? And if Linda Ronstadt ain't the epitome of the true blue American songstress, I don't know who is.

I can understand an umpire getting upset because someone plays a Madonna song when a controversial call is made. But throwing ol' Bear out because he plays lovely Linda?

Seems to me we're talking a violation of Barry's right to Freedom of Speech here. What's this world coming to?

The words "I've been cheated, been mistreated" have upset Texas League umpire Brian Owen before. Last year in El Paso, Mr. Owen gave the Dudley Field P.A. man the heave for playing the same song.

Come on, ump! What's the problem?

We're talking a little humor from the truly humorous Barry Sykes, the press box's own Jay Leno. Instead, ol' Bear gets the thumb.

"Maybe they'll ban Linda Ronstadt at all ball parks," Sykes wondered. "Maybe (Owen) has a Linda Ronstadt dart board at home on his wall. Maybe he had a girlfriend named Linda one time that jilted him, I don't know."

Barry can laugh about it now. Heck, Barry was laughing the very moment he got booted.

The day after Barry got the thumb, Oliver North gets sentenced to three-years out of prison and 1,200 hours of community service. Not to mention the fact he won't be able to hold public office, which is the worst part of the deal for Ollie.

Maybe judge Gerhard A. Gesell and Mr. Owen had a conspiracy before the game. Sentencing two great Americans the way they did. There's just no justice in this world.

Next thing you know, Ollie will have to spend his 1,200 hours of community service being the P.A. man at games umpired by Mr. Owen. Or better yet, Ollie will have to umpire 1,200 Texas League games while Barry's in the booth.

"In retrospect, it's kind of funny that it happened once," Barry said. "But, I don't want it to happen again."

Jokingly, Barry added "I don't want it to destroy my Texas League pension."

Since Linda Ronstadt is off limits, the next time a questionable call is made, Barry can play George Strait's "What's Going On In Your World?"

Oh, by the way, Mr. Owen will return to Angels Stadium for an encore August 4-8. And he'll call the final homestand of the season, Aug. 24-28.

Maybe we can get Linda to sing the national anthem for one of those games ...

Collins canning fuels plenty of speculation

CHICAGO (AP) — Doug Collins lost his job, and although the Chicago Bulls won't say exactly why, the unexpected move has led to plenty of speculation.

The 37-year-old Collins, who in the third season of his first head coaching assignment led the Chicago Bulls to the NBA Eastern Conference finals last season, was fired Thursday. The team cited "philosophical differences."

"We know this will be an unpopular decision, but we truly believe this will be in the best interests of all parties," team owner Jerry Reinsdorf said in a statement released by the club.

The club quickly moved to squelch speculation that superstar Michael Jordan, who had locked horns off and on with Collins, was behind the decision, a scene reminiscent of Magic Johnson's role in the firing of Los Angeles Lakers coach Paul Westhead.

"There is totally no truth to that. Michael has had nothing to do with our decision regarding Doug's position. I want to firmly put that to rest," general manager Jerry Krause told reporters Thursday evening.

Jordan, interviewed at a basketball clinic in his native North Carolina, said he and Collins "were getting closer and closer as time went on."

As always, deserving players left off list

From Staff Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — They will be on vacation during next week's All-Star Game but Toronto's Fred McGriff and San Francisco's Robby Thompson and Brett Butler are stars right now in the eyes of their respective teams.

"I knew (Oakland's Mark) McGwire beat out (New York's Don) Mattingly, so it was going to be tough to make the All-Star team." McGriff said. "They could hardly go with three first basemen. But I'm not too disappointed. As long as I can contribute and keep my concentration, the All-Star Games will come."

McGriff tied All-Stars Bo Jackson of Kansas City and Mickey Tettleton of Baltimore for second place in the American League by hitting his 20th home run Thursday night, a three-run shot that gave the Blue Jays a 4-1 victory over the Orioles. It was the first home run hit to dead center field since the spacious Toronto SkyDome opened a month ago.

If McGriff has any complaints, he may find a sympathetic listener in Milwaukee's Rob Deer, the league leader with 21 homers, who wasn't selected, either.

McGriff homered off Jeff Ballard, who wasn't selected for the All-Star team despite a 10-4 record. Only three AL pitchers have more victories than Ballard.

"Sure, I was disappointed at not being selected," Ballard said. "I felt I deserved to be there as much as anybody. But a lot of other factors go into it. I haven't been around very long. I'm not a big name and I'm not a power pitcher. Maybe they all played a part.

"I thought I put some good numbers on the board, and I'm pleased with my first half. When you put up those kind of numbers, you want to make it (the All-Star team) because you may not get another chance. Hopefully, there will be more years like this, but a lot of times you don't put the numbers up. I may pitch this well again next year but only get five or six wins in the first half because of the breaks."

San Francisco first baseman Will Clark and outfielder Kevin Mitchell were voted to the starting National League team and Rick Reuschel was one of the pitchers picked by Los Angeles manager Tom Lasorda.

The Giants trailed the Pittsburgh Pirates 1-0 Thursday night until Thompson homered with two out in the eighth inning to tie the score. Butler homered in the 10th to win it.

"I was more disappointed for (Houston second baseman) Bill Doran than I was for myself," said Thompson, who was second in the fan voting but was bypassed for the Dodgers' Willie Randolph, who finished third.

"Was I trying to send Tommy Lasorda a message (with his home run)? Absolutely not. I go out there and try to play the same every day. There are no messages there.

"It wasn't an easy decision to make. You had Doran and Willie Randolph, who's been real consistent. It so happened I didn't make it. I'll try again next year."

Butler said the Giants "were ragging Robby that maybe he should have called Tommy Lasorda," adding: "We have three representatives in the game, and they'll represent us fine. There's always someone who thinks they should make it, but doesn't. I knew my chances were slim."

Butler is the National League's fourth-leading hitter at .297. The only other top-10 hitter not on the All-Star squad is Montreal's Tim Raines, sixth at .294.

Other National League no-stars with impressive numbers include Cincinnati outfielder Paul O'Neill, third in RBIs with 56; Montreal's Dennis Martinez, whose 9-1 pitching record gives him the best winning percentage in the majors, and Jose DeLeon of St. Louis, who has a league-leading 105 strikeouts.

Nine of the top 10 hitters in the American League made the All-Star team. The lone exception was Oakland third baseman Carney Lansford, the league's sixth-leading batsman at .322 and the top hitter on a team that had three players voted into the starting lineup — catcher Terry Steinbach, first baseman McGwire and outfielder Jose Canseco, who won't play because of an injured wrist.

"I'm not disappointed," Lansford said. "I didn't expect to make it. I'm just happy for Stew (pitcher Dave Stewart). He should have made it last year. I hope he and the rest of our guys go there and have fun."

Detroit second baseman Lou Whitaker, whose 18 home runs are fifth-best in the league, wasn't picked, but Whitaker had asked out, explaining that his wife is undergoing a difficult pregnancy.

Others left off the AL team include outfielders Joe Carter of Cleveland and Mike Greenwell of Boston, who are tied for eighth in RBIs with 52; Kansas City relief pitcher Jeff Montgomery, who has a 1.59 ERA and a 6-1 record; Oakland outfielder Rickey Henderson, who leads the league with 34 stolen bases; two pitchers who have won Cy Young Awards, Boston's Roger Clemens and Minnesota's Frank Viola, and Seattle's Mike Schooler, third in the league with 20 saves.

"I don't get disappointed in the All-Star voting," Henderson said. "It's the fans' decision. I had a very slow start, and a lot of guys are having outstanding years and deserve to go."

The Athletics announced Thursday that Canseco, who hasn't appeared in a major-league game this season, would not play in the All-Star Game.

Canseco, who is 6-for-27 during a rehabilitation assignment with the Huntsville Stars of the Class AA Southern League, said he spoke Thursday to Oakland's Tony La Russa, who will manage the AL team.

"He said I was not going to play in the All-Star game," Canseco said. "That's it."

Probers seek alleged bookie

CINCINNATI (AP) — Baseball's investigators want to know more about the mysterious bookmaker in the New York area who supposedly took bets on behalf of Pete Rose.

The bookmaker used the code name "Val" and accepted bets for the Cincinnati Reds manager over a two-month period of 1987, including bets on Reds' games, a former Rose associate has told baseball investigators.

Authorities are declining to say whether they believe Val was one of the 34 people indicted last October as part of a major bookmaking ring in Staten Island, Brooklyn and Queens.

However, they did say that Rose isn't under investigation there because he's not relevant to the case against the gambling ring.

"It has nothing to do with Pete Rose or baseball at this juncture," David Lehr, the chief assistant district attorney in Staten Island, said. "It's not part of our case, not part of the evidence we have to prove. We have to prove these people were promoting gambling."

According to published reports, Val was a code name for Richard Troy, 33, one of those indicted last October. Troy has pleaded innocent and is free on his own recognizance awaiting trial.

Lehr declined to say whether authorities believe Troy is the bookmaker linked to Rose. Francis T. Vincent Jr., baseball's deputy commissioner, also declined to say whether baseball had any information that Troy was the Val referred to by Paul Janszen, who claims to have run Rose's bets.

Vincent confirmed that baseball's investigators are looking into the alleged link between Rose and the Staten Island bookmaker. The bookmaker's identity wasn't revealed in a report by baseball investigator John M. Dowd that was made public June 26. Dowd's investigation is continuing.

Vincent said Thursday that several leads are being tracked down, including information about the Staten Island bookmaker.

"That's one (lead) among others that have come to us," Vincent said. "We're pursuing whatever information has come up since the report (by Dowd)."

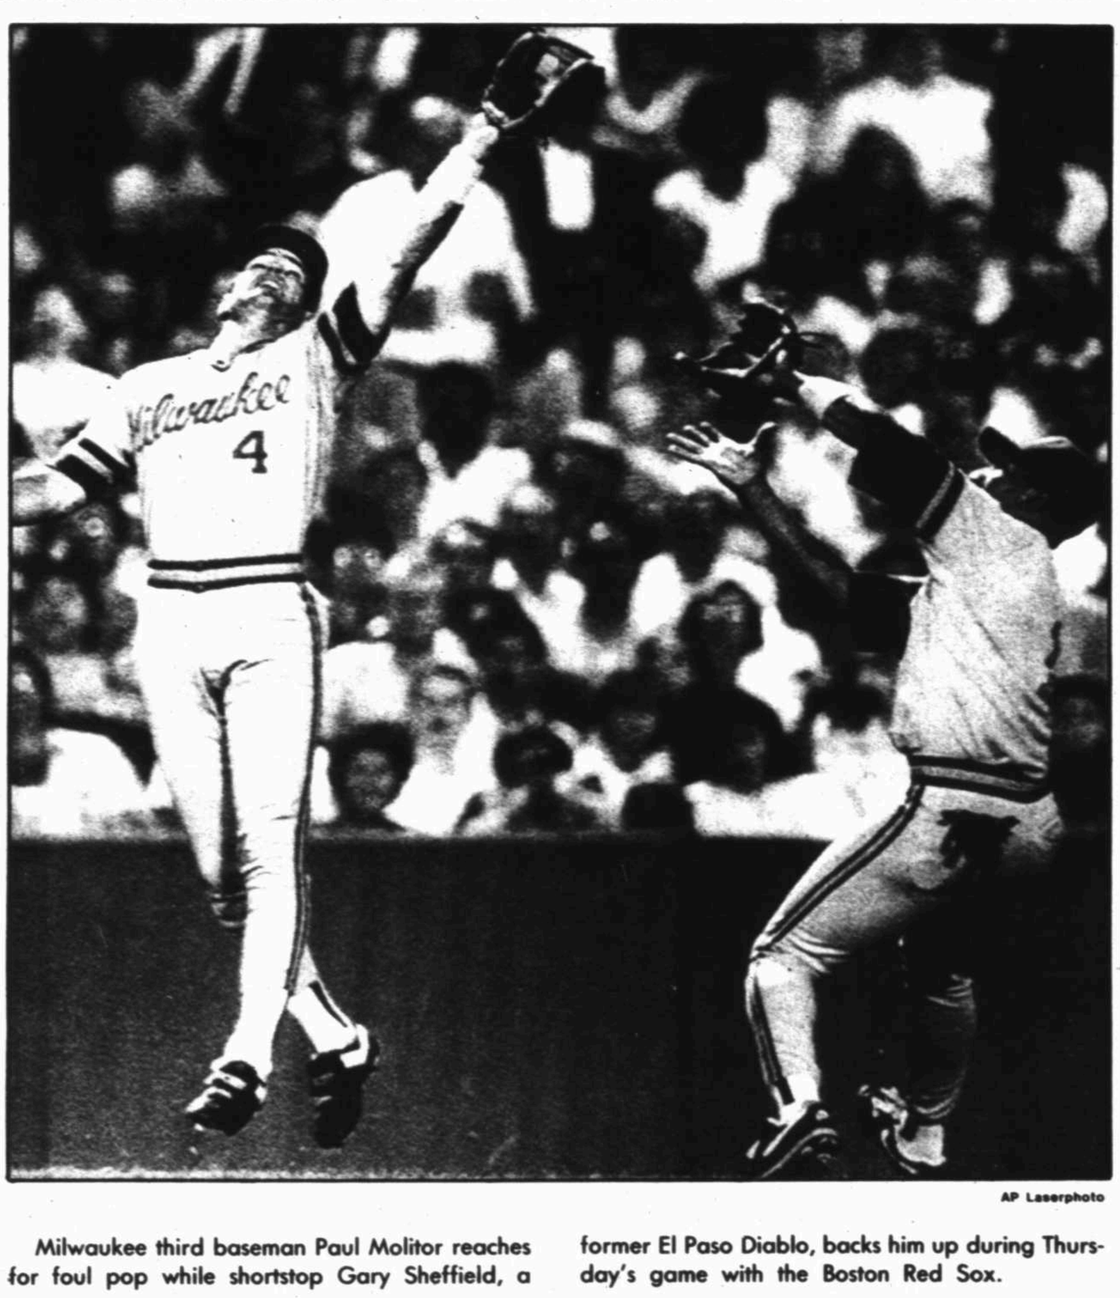

The identity of the New York bookmaker was one of the questions left unanswered in Dowd's report of May 9.

"Janszen never knew his last name, but his nickname was Val, and he was located in Staten Island, New York," Dowd said in his report.

The phone number that Janszen used to reach Val is revealed in Dowd's report. However, a woman who answered the phone at that number Thursday said she didn't know Troy or anyone named Val. The woman, who declined to give her name, said she had been given the telephone number less than a year ago.

Rose could be banned for life from baseball if Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti concludes that he bet on his own team. Giamatti's handling of the case is on hold for two more weeks while a U.S. District Court judge in Columbus, Ohio, decides whether Rose's lawsuit over the investigation should be heard in state or federal court.

Janszen told baseball investigators he placed bets for Rose directly with Val from April 1987 until mid-May, 1987. Janszen said the bookmaker stopped taking Rose's bets because the manager wouldn't pay his debts. Rose lost $67,900 as a result of his bets with Val, according to Janszen.

Canadians revolt after checks late

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — This time, the line about the check being in the mail wasn't good enough.

Citing another late payday, the Vancouver Canadians, top farm club of the Chicago White Sox, walked out Thursday night rather than play a scheduled Pacific Coast League game against the Albuquerque Dukes.

The players left the Albuquerque Sports Stadium about 1½ hours before the scheduled 7 p.m. MDT start of the game, returned to their hotel and held a meeting, and then issued a statement.

"The reason for the walkout is delinquent salary payments out of Chicago," the statement signed by the players said. "We have in the past tried to resolve this issue through complaints to management and the Major League Players organization."

The walkout spiked "Bob Feller Night," but the Cleveland Indians' Hall of Fame pitcher was understanding.

"I wasn't paid on time, I wouldn't have played either," Feller said. "In the big leagues, if you're not paid on time, you're a free agent the next day. In the minors, you could be out of a job."

Canadians vice president and general manager Brent Imlach said in a telephone interview from Vancouver that the checks — due June 30 — had been mailed but apparently had been delayed by the July 4 holiday.

"My understanding is that they were sent on Friday for delivery on Saturday, the first," Imlach said. "The checks were sent out when they were supposed to be sent out" from Chicago.

Imlach, in his first year as general manager, said team officials would track down the checks and have them delivered Friday.

Ryan overpowers Haloes in Big A homecoming

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan has never pitched a perfect game, but he had a perfect homecoming.

Ryan pitched a three-hitter for his 56th career shutout in his first appearance at Anaheim Stadium in nearly 10 years as Texas beat California 3-0 Thursday night.

A crowd of 37,867 gave Ryan a standing ovation as he left the bullpen following his pregame warmups.

Ryan, 42, pitched for the Angels from 1972 through 1979, leading the American League in strikeouts seven times during that span. Earlier in the day, he was selected for the All-Star team for the seventh time.

Ryan, who still holds most of the Angels' career pitching records, last pitched in Anaheim on Sept. 24, 1979.

"It all turned out pretty well," Ryan said. "These fans have always treated me special. It was a special feeling. I was really pumped up after that reception."

The All-Star Game is scheduled July 11 at Anaheim.

"I look forward to coming back here for the All-Star game," Ryan said. That'll be a special game for both me and my family. I look forward to that more than my other All-Star games, just because of the circumstances.

"If they want me to start the game, it'll be an honor."

Ryan, 10-4, walked two and struck out 12 in his fourth complete game and first shutout of the season. The 56 shutouts tie Ryan with Bob Gibson and Bert Blyleven for 12th place on the all-time list.

It was the 189th time in his career that he struck out 10 or more batters. Ryan leads the majors with 148 strikeouts and now has 4,923 in his career, the all-time high.

"The first couple of innings, I was too pumped up. I was rushing, trying to overthrow. It was only appropriate that I would walk the first guy," Ryan said.

"But then I settled down. I didn't feel as strong in the ninth as I have in other games."

Kirk McCaskill, 9-5, matched Ryan pitch for pitch until, with one out in the seventh, Steve Buechele hit his fifth homer. Buechele's homer was the first by the Rangers in 11 games, snapping a 98-inning drought.

The Rangers added two runs in the ninth on Ruben Sierra's 13th homer and Jeff Kunkel's RBI double.

A's 3, Royals 1

Mike Moore, named a first-time AL All-Star earlier in the day, allowed four hits in seven innings and struck out a season-high 12 as Oakland beat Kansas City at the Coliseum.

Two other Athletics' All-Stars, starters Mark McGwire and Terry Steinbach, drove in all the runs Moore needed in the first inning against Luis Aquino, 3-4.

Todd Burns pitched the final two innings for his sixth save, allowing no hits.

Yankees 6, Tigers 5

Jesse Barfield tied the score with an 11th-inning homer and Steve Sax hit a sacrifice fly for the game-winning run, lifting New York past Detroit at Yankee Stadium.

Lou Whitaker's 18th homer, on the first pitch by Eric Plunk, 3-1, in the 11th, gave the Tigers a 5-4 lead, but Barfield homered off All-Star Mike Henneman to tie the score.

Plunk relieved Dave Righetti to start the 11th and Whitaker, who has never hit more than 21 homers in a season during his 13-year career, reached the lower deck in right field.

Blue Jays 4, Orioles 1

Fred McGriff, snubbed for the All-Star team, hit his 20th home run as Toronto beat Baltimore at the SkyDome.

McGriff, who has 51 RBIs, hit a three-run homer in the third off Jeff Ballard, 10-4, to give the Blue Jays a 4-0 lead.

Todd Stottlemyre, 1-4, allowed one run and four hits in six innings as the Blue Jays salvaged one of three games against the first-place Orioles. Duane Ward finished for his sixth save.

Red Sox 5, Brewers 4

Mike Boddicker retired 15 straight batters before needing relief help in the sixth inning as Boston held on to defeat Milwaukee. The Brewers have lost 17 of their last 20 games at Fenway Park.

Mariners 7, Twins 5

Darnell Coles hit a two-run single off reliever Jeff Reardon in the eighth inning as Seattle rallied to beat Minnesota at the Kingdome

Mike Jackson, 3-2, pitched 2-3 innings for the victory

Jackson takes heat off skipper

Associated Press

Danny Jackson came off the disabled list, moved Pete Rose out of the spotlight for a night and dropped the New York Mets into fourth place in the National League East.

The left-hander looked like the pitcher who won 23 games last season as he threw six shutout innings Thursday night while Cincinnati pounded the Mets 10-2.

"It's always nice to get a lot of runs early, especially after coming back from the DL," said Jackson, 6-9, who was bothered by shoulder and wrist problems and had not pitched since June 17. "If it had been a tighter game, who knows what would have happened."

What did happen was that attention usually aimed at Rose, the Reds manager embroiled in a gambling investigation, turned toward Jackson. It came on national television and in New York, a city in which media is known to target those in trouble — like the Mets' starting pitchers.

The Mets, 3½ games behind division-leading Montreal, lost their third straight and seventh in 10 games and again saw a starter get pounded. This time it was highly touted rookie David West, who gave up seven runs in four innings and lost his first major-league start of the year.

The last three Met starters — Bob Ojeda, Ron Darling and West — have given up 21 runs on 24 hits with seven walks in 9 1-3 innings.

National League

"Three in a row like that puts a strain on the bullpen," Mets manager Dave Johnson said. "They have to turn it around in the second half or it's going to be a long second half."

It may have gotten longer when the Mets announced after the game that ace Dwight Gooden, his right arm ailing, will miss even more than the month originally announced.

"Five weeks from tomorrow would be optimistic," Johnson said of Gooden, who went on the disabled list Sunday with shoulder problems. "He needs complete rest."

Rose, who has been the center of attention since spring training, sounded like a manager whose problems have been lessened.

"He threw it well, got some support and that makes everyone's job easier," Rose said of Jackson, who allowed three hits. "It worked so well, I'll probably go with the same lineup tomorrow."

Cubs 7, Padres 3

Ryne Sandberg and Andre Dawson homered as Walt Terrell lost his seventh straight decision and the Cubs completed a three-game sweep of the Padres.

Sandberg hit his 11th homer leading off the seventh and Dawson hit his eighth one out later to give Chicago a 6-3 lead.

Greg Maddux, 8-7, allowed seven hits and three runs in six-plus innings for the Cubs.

Giants 2, Pirates 1

Brett Butler homered with two out in the top of the 10th to hand John Smiley another tough defeat.

Smiley, 7-4, who lost 1-0 to Los Angeles in his last start, led 1-0 when Robby Thompson homered with two outs in the eighth.

Phillies 4, Braves 0

Bruce Ruffin, who had been sent to the minors just after the season started because of wildness, missed a complete game shutout by one out.

Ruffin, 2-3, allowed eight hits, struck out six and walked three. He had entered the game with a 7.89 ERA.

Ruffin, who had not thrown a shutout since Sept. 23, 1987, got two quick outs in the bottom of the ninth before giving up singles to John Russell and Oddibe McDowell.

Cardinals 14, Dodgers 2

Terry Pendleton and Vince Coleman each drove in three runs and Dan Quisenberry got his fourth save and first major-league hit as the Cardinals swept the three-game series from Los Angeles.

Ken Hill, 5-4, and Quisenberry combined on a six-hitter as the Dodgers lost their fourth straight. They have 22 hits in that span.

Tim Leary, 6-6, who allowed five runs over the first three innings, was the loser. The Dodgers are 1-7 against St. Louis this season.

Supplemental draft offers better chance

NEW YORK (AP) — Quarterbacks Timm Rosenbach and Steve Walsh are looking for NFL homes, and a new supplemental draft system gives them a better chance to land on a team that really needs them.

Rosenbach and Walsh, along with running back Bobby Humphrey, are the top prospects among 12 supplemental hopefuls in today's draft. Teams must surrender a pick in the same round of the regular 1990 draft if they take a player in the supplemental draft.

For the first time, only the nine teams with six or fewer victories will get the first chance at the big names.

Rosenbach, from Washington State, and Walsh, from the University of Miami, are considered the plums of the supplemental draft as two of the most accurate passers in college last year. Humphrey, from Alabama, could fall out of the top tier because of a foot injury that sidelined him last year.

"I wouldn't say we have no interest in Humphrey, but we do not have as much interest in him as we might have in Rosenbach or Walsh," said general manager Carl Peterson of Kansas City, one of the nine entrants in the first tier of teams. "I don't want to play our hand before we get a chance to play it. It might be a moot point anyway. We might not have a pick. By the time it gets to us, they all might be gone."

Peterson said both quarterbacks would have benefitted from another year of college football.

"But they elected not to, for obvious reasons," he said.

The order of the first nine choices will be determined by picks from a drum in which there are 28 slips for Dallas, 3-13; 27 for Green Bay, 4-12; 26 for Detroit, 4-12; 25 for Kansas City, 4-11-1; 24 for Atlanta, 5-11; 23 for Tampa Bay, 5-11; 22 for Pittsburgh, 5-11; 21 for San Diego, 6-10, and 20 for Miami, 6-10.

After those teams make their choices or pass, the second nine is then determined by the same process, starting with 19 slips for Phoenix, 7-9, down to 12 for New Orleans, 10-6. Then comes the third tier, the 10 playoff teams.

A team making a pick in the first round of the supplemental draft loses its pick in the first round the next year.

Green Bay, Detroit, Kansas City and San Diego are in dire need of a starting quarterback, but that doesn't assure interest in Walsh and Rosenbach because of the forfeiture of the 1990 No. 1 pick.

Davies faces short tourney

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) — The first round is usually the worst round for Laura Davies.

Davies, a notoriously slow starter in 72-hole tournaments, will have 18 fewer holes to catch up this weekend as she defends her title in the LPGA's Jamie Farr Toledo Classic.

This year, the tournament will be 54 holes instead of its customary 72 and will also be played on a different course. Another dramatic change might be the absence of the tournament's namesake.

Farr could miss at least a portion of the tournament because of back spasms. The former star of television's "M-A-S-H" was in stable condition Thursday at Toledo's Parkview Hospital. Farr has improved since being admitted Wednesday and was undergoing physical therapy, but a spokesman said it was likely that Farr would miss some of the action.

Rodriguez goes for 4 straight

CONCORD, MA (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez wants to be the first golfer in 60 years to win the same tournament four years in a row.

If he succeeds, he'll have overcome physical ailments as well as a field of PGA Seniors competitors.

Rodriguez tuned up for today's opening round of the $300,000 Digital Senior Classic with a treatment for pinched nerves in his neck, a round of pro-am play and a promise.

"My back is in good shape. I've had the pinched nerves in my neck for a long time," Rodriguez said as he prepared to chase a standard established by Walter Hagen, who the PGA Championship from 1924 through 1927.

"I've been working hard and not taking care of my posture," Rodriguez said after an hour of treatment in the senior tour's medical trailer. "I will be in good shape in a month. I can live with it; there is no excuse for playing bad."

BULLS

"Doug and I were great friends. I'm in the dark as much as anyone," said Jordan, NBA scoring champion the past three seasons and the league's most valuable player in 1988.

Collins also had run-ins with other players, as well as with Krause and Reinsdorf.

"Doug and I had our differences," forward Horace Grant said, "but there's no other coach I'd love to be playing under."

Collins didn't always see eye to eye with management, and he gave the team's 1988 top draft choice, Will Perdue, the fewest minutes on the court of any first-round selection in the league.

Collins, who replaced Stan Albeck before the 1987 season, had one year remaining on his contract. He had a 137-109 record in regular-season play and was 13-17 in the playoffs.

The Bulls led eventual NBA champion Detroit 2-1 in the Eastern Conference finals before losing the series in six games. It was only the third time in team history, and the first since 1975, that the Bulls had gotten as far as the conference finals.

The Bulls said the team hoped to be able to offer the job "to our first choice in the near future."

Club officials declined to comment further on hiring a successor, but speculation centered on Phil Jackson, a Bulls assistant who has been mentioned as a contender for the head coaching job with the New York Knicks.

WIMBLE

"The Centre Court is the greatest court in the world," Evert said. "I'll always remember it. I'd still like to be a part of it in some way, even as a spectator."

Navratilova had to work hard to overcome Lindqvist, the first unseeded player to reach the women's semifinals in six years and the first Swedish woman ever to get that far.

Lindqvist broke serve for a 4-3 first-set lead and, although she dropped her serve in the next game, she looked the most likely player to take the set.

Lindqvist gained the upper hand in the tiebreaker by taking a 5-4 lead with two serves to come. But she lost them both and once Navratilova won the set, there was no challenge from Lindqvist.

In the second set, the former champion broke serve twice and finished with an ace, her net-rushing tactic at last taking its toll on the Swede.

And so to Saturday, the first time Graf and Navratilova have met since the final here a year ago.

"I think I am in perfect shape," said Graf, who went home to regroup after Paris and hasn't dropped a set at Wimbledon this year. "It doesn't make any difference if you play her, once a year."

"It certainly would be very, very satisfying when not too many people expect you to win any more," Navratilova said. "She has won everything in the last two years. (But) it's what you do tomorrow or the next day. You are only as good as your last match."

STARS

Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt, who retired last month, was voted the NL's starting third baseman but will not play.

Howard Johnson of the New York Mets, Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh and Tim Wallach of Montreal were selected as the the NL's reserve third basemen.

Johnson, who was picked for the first time, is hitting .290 with 22 homers and 54 RBIs.

"It's always a surprise when it finally happens," Johnson said. "I said a few weeks ago that I would be happy just to make the team. I still feel that way, but if I start, that would be icing on the cake."

The rest of the NL infield reserves include Glenn Davis of Houston and Pedro Guerrero of St. Louis at first base and Barry Larkin of Cincinnati at shortstop.

Tony Pena of St. Louis and Mike Scioscia of Los Angeles are the backup catchers.

In the outfield, Vince Coleman of St. Louis, Eric Davis of Cincinnati, Andre Dawson of Chicago and Von Hayes of Philadelphia were selected. Coleman leads the majors with 38 steals.

The NL starting team has Will Clark of San Francisco at first base, Ryne Sandberg of Chicago at second, Ozzie Smith of St. Louis at shortstop and Schmidt at third.

In the outfield, Kevin Mitchell of San Francisco, Tony Gwynn of San Diego and Darryl Strawberry of the New York Mets were selected by the fans. Strawberry, however, will not play because of a broken toe.

The NL's starting catcher is Benito Santiago of San Diego.

In the AL, McGwire will start at first with Texas' Julio Franco at second, Cal Ripken of Baltimore at shortstop and Wade Boggs of Boston at third. The starting outfield has Bo Jackson of Kansas City, Kirby Puckett of Minnesota and Jose Canseco of Oakland.

Ripken joins Ryan as a seven-time All-Star.

Oakland's Terry Steinbach, last season's All-Star MVP, is the starting catcher.

La Russa and Lasorda will announce the starting pitchers and lineups on Monday.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The spotlight will be on those things you most enjoy. Home, children and travel will often be on center stage. Stay on your toes! Make the most of opportunities for career and financial growth. Although money is not as plentiful as you would like, eventually the tide will turn in your favor.

Rockefeller, ABC News boss Roone Arledge, singer Steve Lawrence, comedian Marty Feldman, ballerina Cynthia Gregory, architect Philip Johnson, comic A. Whitney Brown, singer Jerry Vale, actress Kim Darby.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Refine a plan before putting it into action. Do not succumb to a fly-by-night financial proposal. If you are shopping and spot a bargain, buy it! Watch your diet this weekend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Outings with children are the best entertainment today. Invite a good friend along. Become a reliable source of information and expertise and watch your income grow. Your skills are more valuable than you think.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Today's events show you how much you are loved, admired and appreciated. Do not be surprised if developments at work delay certain travel plans. Influential people will be getting together this weekend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could sign an agreement with long-range benefits before the sun goes down. Stick to ventures already under way rather than starting a new one. You cannot afford to scatter your energies too widely.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keeping your composure today will help seal an important relationship. Seek out previously helpful employees and clients if starting a new partnership or business. Their input could make a big difference!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do household chores early in the day so you don't miss a golden opportunity later. Major, lasting changes are just around the corner. Adopting a positive attitude will influence your loved ones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A weekend romance could lead to a long-term relationship. A child or pet lights up your life. Catch up on personal bookkeeping and overdue correspondence. People at a distance need to know your plans.

Opening lead: Eight of ♠

Some people complain bitterly that they don't get their fair share of high cards. Others feel they can simply afford to throw them away. Look at what happened on this hand from a team event.

At one table, North-South played a normal five diamonds. After a spade lead, declarer won, cashed the ace of diamonds and then took three rounds of hearts, discarding a spade. Dummy's last spade went on the fourth heart as East ruffed, and declarer's only other loser was the king of trumps—making five-odd.

At the other table South found the rather unusual bid of four hearts, and met his just deserts. Afraid that East held five spades for his free bid, he won the opening spade lead with the ace, as East signalled enthusiastically with the king. (Holding up one round would have assured the contract as the cards lay.) A diamond finesse lost to the king and back came a spade.

East won the queen and jack and West had to find a discard. Most of us would discard our remaining diamond, but only an East with great peripheral vision would return a diamond, playing declarer to have suppressed four-card support. Some of us in the East seat would try to score a club as the setting trick, but that would not work.

At the table, West made life easy for his partner—he discarded the ace of clubs! Now East could see that a club was a waste of time and a diamond shift also would be futile. So he continued with his last spade. That promoted West's jack of trumps to the setting trick.

'Ghostbuster' Dan Akroyd makes call on 'speedbuster'

GASTONIA, N.C., (AP) — Actor Dan Aykroyd went from ghostbuster to speedbuster when he was stopped for driving 83 mph, but his demeanor would have made Sgt. Joe Friday proud.

Aykroyd knew the routine from his role in the movie "Dragnet." Just the facts, please.

"He said he'd become hypnotized by the road after driving so long," said state Trooper L.J. Pitula, who stopped Aykroyd about 6:40 a.m. Thursday, for exceeding the 65 mph speed limit on Interstate 85 in Gaston County.

Aykroyd, one of the stars of "Ghostbusters II," was one his way from Atlanta, where he was filming a movie, to his home in Massachusetts in his gray 1984 Mercedes. He told the trooper he had been driving for most of the night.

Pitula said when he realized the driver was Aykroyd, he got a small case of stage fright himself.

"He was absolutely 100 percent a gentleman," Pitula said. "He used no influence whatsoever."

After Aykroyd autographed the ticket, the actor followed the trooper on the 10 minute drive to the Gaston County Courthouse where he posted a $56 bond, promising to appear when his case comes up.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature has more listings for Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis than any other living American woman, but many of her friends say most of what's written about her is inaccurate.

Onassis

Mrs. Onassis, who turns 60 on July 28, is most often portrayed as "snooty, spiteful, greedy ... the original material girl," wrote Edward Klein, who interviewed more than 60 of her friends for a profile in the August issue of Vanity Fair magazine.

"The Jackie they know has managed to preserve her dignity through an ordeal by the press such as no other woman in this century has had to undergo, and she has also — whatever her faults — triumphed as a mother and as a professional person."

Klein, who has known Mrs. Onassis for 12 years, wrote that she is still concerned about her appearance: She exercises, has her own private yoga instructor, and had a face lift last April.

He also said she has amassed a fortune estimated at close to $200 million.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Jordanaires, whose harmonic voices backed Elvis Presley, Ricky Nelson and others on thousands of recordings, are among 10 finalists for induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

The Country Music Association announced Thursday that the four-man quartet will be joined in the open category by Tennessee Ernie Ford, the Louvin Brothers, George Morgan and Hank Thompson.

Nominated in the non-performing category are Don Law, Ken Nelson, Jack Stapp, Cliffie Stone and Irving Waugh.

One from each category will be inducted Oct. 9 during the nationally televised Country Music Association awards show.

The Jordanaires were formed in Springfield, Mo., in 1948. Initially a barbershop quartet performing mainly gospel material, the group began a long and extremely successful association with Presley in 1956.

Ford, "The Ol' Peapicker," is known for his hit record "Sixteen Tons" and his long-running TV program.

The Louvin Brothers were country music's top brother act from 1951 to 1963, when they broke up.

Morgan, who died in 1975, was a Grand Ole Opry star known for his hit "Candy Kisses."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Dalai Lama, the religious leader revered by most Tibetans as a living Buddha, celebrated his 54th birthday with a party in Malibu.

The exiled Tibetan religious leader is on a 17-day visit to Los Angeles to address followers of the 2,500-year-old faith and conduct religious ceremonies. Though respected by all Buddhists, to some followers he carries no religious authority.

A group of Buddhist monks and others celebrated his birthday on Thursday with birthday cake, a tree planting ceremony, luncheon and traditional Tibetan dancing in Malibu.

"We even sang 'Happy Birthday' to the Dalai Lama, although they don't do that in Tibet," said Betty Rogers, spokeswoman for the religious leader's trip to Los Angeles.

TORONTO (AP) — For Britain's queen mother, it was deja vu.

She rededicated the same highway, made a royal departure in the identical Lincoln LeBaron convertible, and was presented again Thursday to the youngest reporter to cover the royal tour across Canada in 1939.

Reliving a part of the first tumultuous visit by a reigning monarch and his consort on a five-day trip that began in Ottawa on Wednesday, the 88-year-old Queen Mother Elizabeth expressed disbelief that half a century had passed.

"When I arrived at the International Airport yesterday evening, I could hardly believe that it is some 50 years since the royal train pulled into north station, and the king and I had our first sight of this exciting city," a beaming queen mother told hundreds gathered on the lawn at the Ontario Legislature.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer-songwriter Bob Dylan has been awarded the highest cultural honor France can bestow upon an individual.

The minister of culture informed Dylan last week that he has been awarded the title of "Commandeur Dans L'Ordre des Arts et Des Lettres," said Dylan's publicist, Elliot Mintz.

Dylan has been touring in Europe, performing in nightly shows that draw from his collection of more than 600 songs, said Mintz. Joining him on stage in Dublin was U-2's Bono. Van Morrison joined him in Athens.

Feds fear recession, not inflation

Seek middle ground solution for slowing economy

By LOUIS UCHITELLE
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — With every day bringing new evidence of an economic slowdown, the danger of a recession has abruptly replaced inflation as the chief threat to the economy in the minds of many economists and even at the Federal Reserve.

Reflecting this new focus, the stock market had its worst decline last week in the past six months. And the bond market has rallied, as it often does when the prospect of hard times seems to indicate that interest rates will come down.

This is all happening even though few economists are actually predicting that there will be a recession this year.

And the annual inflation rate remains above 5 percent, the level that prompted widespread concern earlier this year that the economy was too strong.

But even those economists on Wall Street who had been most concerned about the inflation threat are backing off.

"Everyone had assumed that we would not have a recession this year because the early signs weren't there," said Peter L. Bernstein, an economic consultant. "But this slowdown is turning out to be so widespread that it cannot be ignored."

Paul Samuelson, the Nobel laureate in economic science, has also reversed his position.

"I could offer myself as one who was advising the Federal Reserve from the spring of 1988 until a couple of months ago to tighten, to raise rates," he said. "Now it is true that the possibility of a recession has increased."

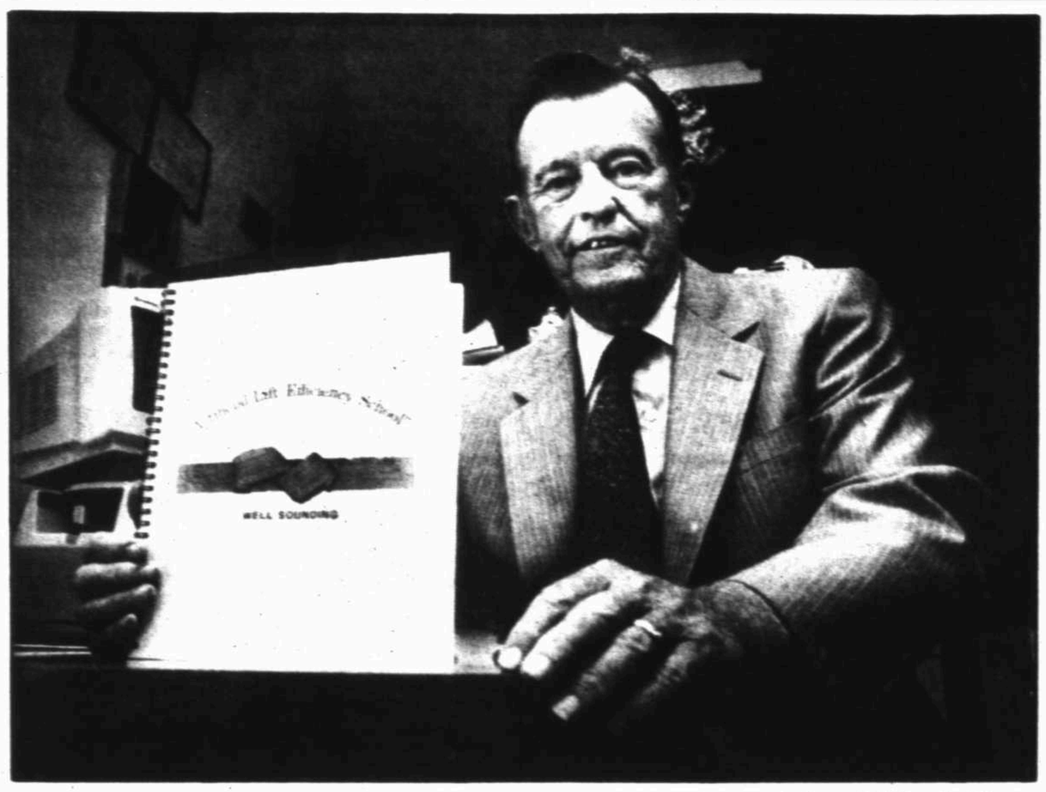

The Federal Reserve, in particular, appears to be responding to the recession concerns, after a long period in which it increased interest rates, trying to hold down inflation. Higher rates discourage borrowing and thereby force people to cut back on their spending, reducing demand for goods and with it pressure on prices.

At a two-day meeting of its governors and regional bank presidents that ended Thursday, the Federal Reserve probably decided to let interest rates fall slightly. That, at least, was the expectation of numerous economists and of the financial markets.

The Federal Reserve's meeting ended without an announcement of what was decided — the central bank's usual practice for these closed-door policy sessions. But a decline in rates would show up soon in the amounts of money that the Fed makes available to the banks for lending.

The employment statistics, to be released Friday by the Labor Department, might also affect the Federal Reserve's actions.

A rise in the June unemployment rate from May's 5.2 percent level, or another month of weak growth in the number of jobs held by Americans, could hasten a decline in rates.

A Midland engineer and noted authority on pumping problems, Joe Chastain, has compiled a lifetime of diagnosing well problems into a two-volume treatise for the oil industry.

Book diagnoses sick oil wells

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Well sounding is an oilfield diagnostic technique that goes back almost to the date of first oil production. By knowing the fluid level in a well and how it varies, production engineers and supervisors are able to determine a number of oilwell ailments and how much the well should produce.

"Well sounding is sort of like a doctor doing a test on a patient," says Joe Chastain of Midland, "it helps them detect sickness in a well."

Now, Chastain has written a book, which he claims is the first ever on well sounding. It's a book that will help oilmen save thousands of dollars on expensive workovers and pumping problems, says Chastain.

Chastain says his two-volume, 200-page tretise, based on his years of findings related to prevention of expensive workovers and pumping problem analysis is a compliation of what he has been teaching to the oil industry for years and is now available for everyone.

He says the manual, which sells for $160 was printed at his own printing plant, will be sold mainly by mail order. "I have over 5,000 former students that are likely prospects for the book," he notes.

"Sonic readings used to determine the fluid level are often misread and misinterpreted," Chastain said. "The fluid level measurement of an oil well, (the height of the oil above the bottom of the drilled hole), is generally measured in feet of depth below the surface. Many operators subtract this footage from the depth of the well to determine the feet of fluid above the bottom of the well to estimate the potential daily producible volume."

Chastain, who founded the Artificial Lift Efficiency School in Midland, Texas, in 1968, says he has been working on the book for over 10 years. He began work on it after realizing there was insuffi-

Jobless number increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate edged up a notch to 5.3 percent in June as businesses created a modest 180,000 new jobs, the government said today in yet another sign that the economy is slowing.

The civilian jobless rate was up from May's 5.2 percent, the Labor Department said.

The report said the bulk of the 180,000 new non-farm jobs added last month came in the service sector, and the government revised its May job-growth total to 205,000, more than double the total given in a preliminary report last month.

There were clear signs in the report of a slowing economy and an indication as well of an easing of wage inflation that has troubled some analysts.

The Labor Department said the average factory work week slipped 0.1 of an hour to 40.9 hours last month, the first time this indicator has fallen below 41 hours since September 1987.

Average hourly earnings of production and supervisory workers were essentially unchanged. For the first five months of the year, hourly wages had grown on average by 0.3 percent.

Many economists had expected an upward revision of the May payroll expansion totals, but the 180,000 figure for June was below most predictions. Still, it was likely not low enough to raise fears that the economy has slowed to the verge of recession.

For the past four months business added an average of just below 200,000 jobs a month, well below the average monthly gain of the past year.

The June unemployment report — the first comprehensive look at economic activity last month — showed that the service sector continues as the source of the overwhelming number of new jobs while manufacturing continues to struggle.

Service-producing industries added 231,000 new jobs last month, with business and health services and wholesale and retail trade all posting modest gains.

Car makers ponder asbestos ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Auto industry officials say the jury is out on whether a government ban on most remaining uses of cancer-causing asbestos will translate into higher prices for consumers.

"The substitute material and system are relatively more expensive. I can't quote you a figure," Toni Simonetti, a spokeswoman for General Motors Corp., said Thursday shortly after the government announcement.

But many companies, including General Motors, have been substituting other materials for asbestos in products such as brake pads and linings for several years. Consumers, therefore, have already paid the price for the change.

"We have known that we should be eliminating asbestos from various parts of our products," said Fred Bowditch, vice president for technical affairs at the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association of the United States.

The industry official also said he did not believe the switch to substitute material would be considerably more expensive.

In the face of widespread criticism, the Environmental Protection Agency ordered a ban on asbestos used in a range of items from automobile brake parts to roof shingles. The prohibition is to be phased in over the next seven years.

The ban will reduce the number of asbestos-related cancer deaths by at least 200, the EPA said.

The ban, however, does not affect existing asbestos-containing products. EPA officials expressed concerns that replacing the hazardous material might be more dangerous than a phase-out.

The agency first listed asbestos, a natural product that has a strength 10 times of steel but can be woven like cotton, as a hazardous air pollutant in 1972 and urged it to be banned in 1979.

"The first question I had was why has this thing been around so long," said EPA administrator William Reilly in announcing the ban. Critics have charged that the Reagan administration prevented earlier EPA action on asbestos.

Nevertheless, use of the material has declined significantly. In 1987, 85,000 metric tons of asbestos was used for a wide array of products, down from the 240,000 metric tons used in 1984.

Asbestos has been linked with various forms of cancer, including lung cancer.

Auto makers have been phasing out asbestos for use in brake pads and linings, and many said Thursday that the EPA decision came as no surprise.

"A company-wide program to remove asbestos from our disc brake pads, drum brake linings and other components began in the early 1980s. Since that time, considerable progress has been made," said Victor H. Sussman, an official at the Ford Motor Co.

Progress seen on Mexican debt reduction

N.Y. Times News Service

There are signs of progress in the negotiations between Mexico and its banks on a debt-reduction package, as the talks have moved from the committee level to the top echelons in an effort to reach a compromise, bankers said Thursday.

The talks are focusing on a new proposal, favored by many American banks, that would offer Mexico a 35 percent debt reduction.

"The talks are moving along in the right direction, and the differences are narrowing," said one banker who asked not to be identified.

The high-level meetings this week, called by John S. Reed, chairman of Citicorp, include the finance minister of Mexico and his chief negotiator and top executives of the 15 banks on the advisory committee.

The two-month-old negotiations are the first test of the debt-reduction plan offered by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady.

The Brady plan is the first government approach to include debt forgiveness as an option for cutting the $1.3 trillion debt burden on developing countries.

In comments to reporters Thursday, Brady stressed that an accord with the banks was not certain and that he did not want the negotiators to rush to a bad agreement.

But he also acknowledged that he had been engaged in intensive discussions with both Mexican officials and the banks to move the talks along.

Perhaps as a result, the negotiators appear to be concentrating on reaching the general outlines of an accord before the economic summit meeting in Paris this month, saving the details for later.

The Treasury had indicated that it would like to have at least an agreement in principle to take to the meeting to ward off any criticism of the Brady plan.

E. Gerald Corrigan, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, has also increased his involvement in the negotiations recently, bankers said, using both his influence as a regulator and his knowledge of the debt issue to encourage the American bankers to a compromise with the Mexicans.

Bankers said they were now discussing a new proposal that would offer Mexico a choice between a discount of 35 percent on the face value of existing loans, with no change in interest rates, or a fixed interest rate of around 7 percent, far below current rates, with the loan principal remaining the same.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Futures prices today continued to linger above $20 a barrel, firing speculation that the posted prices could increase today. Mid-morning quotes listed WTI at $20.49 or 19 cents above Thurday.

However, energy futures prices slumped Thursday as labor problems in the North Sea showed signs of easing.

The August contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 46 cents to close at $20.33 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. On Wednesday, the contract rose 52 cents.

The August contract for home heating oil fell 1.17 cents a gallon to close at 49.89 cents after rising the same amount on Wednesday. Wholesale unleaded gasoline for August delivery dropped 1.15 cents to settle at 56.27 cents a gallon after falling 0.35 cent Wednesday.

Richard Redoglia, an analyst with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures, said reports that British oil maintenance workers in the North Sea would end a strike and return to work sent prices lower.

The New York market had rallied in recent sessions on concerns that the walkout would cut oil supplies. But prices began falling in Europe when it appeared the strike was ending, giving U.S. traders the cue to sell, Redoglia said.

Stocks take third straight gain

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market eked out its third straight gain in another quiet session Thursday as traders awaited the latest monthly report on employment.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.88 to 2,462.44, bringing its gain since the start of the week to 22.38 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 965 up, 530 down and 503 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 140.45 million shares, against 127.70 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 166.37 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Jefferies spared jail term for cooperation

NEW YORK (AP) — Boyd L. Jefferies, who admitted to an illegal stock scheme with inside trader Ivan Boesky, was spared a jail term by a federal judge who praised his cooperation but called Wall Street greed "absurd and probably obscene."

U.S. District Judge Morris Lasker sentenced Jefferies on Thursday to five years probation and fined him $250,000. Jefferies, who pleaded guilty to two felonies, provided information and testimony in the government's continuing securities fraud investigations in exchange for leniency.

Consumers win in coffee marketing

NEW YORK (AP) — Coffee drinkers could be the winners of a possible marketing war among roasters following this week's suspension of coffee bean export quotas, analysts say.

The International Coffee Organization's decision to suspend quotas will enable smaller coffee producing countries severely restricted under the quota system to export high-quality coffee beans to willing U.S. customers, observers said Thursday. It also could mean lower retail prices by year's end.

Transwestern Pipeline OKs inventory charge

HOUSTON (SWN) — Transwestern Pipeline Company announced today that it has accepted its gas inventory charge certificate. The company has requested approval from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to implement the gas inventory charge on Oct. 1, 1989.

"This is an important development for Transwestern in that it establishes a mutual obligation between the pipeline and its customers," said Terence H. Thorn, president of Transwestern.

BOOK

alizing there was insufficient information for field personnel to do a good job of determining accurate fluid levels and a general lack of understanding of the theory of sonic vibrations.

Says Chastain: "The practice of well sounding goes back to the days when an operator would drop a rock down the well and use a stop watch to determine how long it took to hit fluid."

His book is intended to be a practical, problem-solving manual and provides case studies of 18 wells. One volume contains actual field charts, drawings and photographs and the other a detailed explanation of the well bore events.

"Understanding these examples in the book and accompanying charts can greatly expand the information the operator can derive from a chart," Chastain said. "That knowledge can be translated to improved operating efficiency, specifically to dollars made or saved."

A noted authority on well pumping problems Chastain says he created the Artifical Lift Effeciency School in Midland in 1968 at the urging of Mobil and Exxon: "I had been working for them as a consultant, and they wanted me to start a school to teach their people."

A graduate of the University of Oklahoma with a degree in petroleum engineering, Chastain began his career with Phillips Petroleum as chief engineer in Argentina for three years, helping oversee Argentine petroleum reserves for the war effort.

After World War II, he returned to Midland with Larkin Packer, eventually established his own bottomhole pressure testing company before becoming a consultant.

Valdez no threat to bay, officials say

New York Times News Service

SAN DIEGO — Coast Guard and National Steel & Shipbuilding Co. officials recently said they are confident that no threat to the ecology of San Diego Bay will be posed by the arrival next month of the crippled oil tanker Exxon Valdez.

The tanker, which created the nation's worst oil spill when it ran aground in pristine Alaskan waters last March, is due to arrive here for repairs at the NASSCO yard on July 11 or 12.

"We are absolutely confident that the ship will be clean and won't pose a pollution problem," said Fred Hallett, a NASSCO vice president.

The Exxon Valdez, which dumped nearly 11 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound after hitting a reef, left Alaska six days ago for several months of repairs at NASSCO, where it was launched in 1986.

Before the Exxon Valdez left Alaska, all remaining crude oil in its cargo tanks was removed and the ship's interior and exterior were scrubbed clean with high-pressure water jets, Hallett said.

While still in Alaskan waters, the ship was inspected for seaworthiness by a team from NASSCO and several agencies including the Coast Guard, the Canadian Coast Guard and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Coast Guard and state Regional Water Quality Control Board officials plan to meet Monday to discuss means of ensuring that pollutants are not discharged into San Diego Bay when the ship arrives.

The two agencies also intend to iron out differences over whether fuel oil used to operate the Exxon Valdez should be removed from the ship's fuel tanks before it enters local waters, a move the Coast Guard and NASSCO say is unnecessary.

Both agencies said the differences are minor and should be resolved before the Exxon Valdez arrives in San Diego.

"I think the Coast Guard's aims, at least in part, are the same as ours, so I don't think there will be any problem," said Art Coe, staff engineer for the Regional Water Quality Control Board. "I think we are both working in the same direction."

Although the Exxon Valdez is being towed to San Diego, the pilot who will take the 987-foot-long ship into the harbor wants to do so using the ship's own engines — assisted by tugboats — to ensure maneuverability, said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Don Montoro.

The Exxon Valdez is carrying about 228,000 gallons of fuel in tanks in its undamaged stern section and is using about 2,500 gallons of fuel a day, Montoro said. The ship has no oil in its cargo tanks, he stressed.

Even if the ship were to break in two, the stern section would continue to float and would immediately be taken in tow, added Montoro, who said the danger of a fuel oil spill is minimal.

Coe said the Water Quality Control Board became concerned about a fuel oil spill after viewing videotapes of the extensive damage to the hull of the Exxon Valdez.

However, conversations with Coast Guard officials eased agency concerns about the potential danger posed by the fuel oil, Coe said.

Exxon responds to Alaskan official

HOUSTON (SWN) — Exxon Company, U.S.A. released a letter its Associate General Counsel today sent to the Attorney General of Alaska. The text is as follows:

"In response to your comments as reported in today's press, I want to note that Exxon's attorneys first discussed the loss of computer backup tapes with your office late Monday July 3. This occurred by phone, and there was an agreement to discuss the matter further on Wednesday. The first written communication from your attorneys to which Exxon might reply was not received until yesterday, Wednesday afternoon, apparently after your public statements. Given the lack of a specific request on Monday, the short time elapsed, and the intervening holiday, it is hardly surprising that we were not able to reply earlier.

"In the Monday discussion, our attorneys explained that no primary records regarding the Exxon Valdez oil spill were lost in the inadvertent writing-over of computer system backup tapes. These tapes are not intended to serve as a permanent archive for any records, but rather are only to be used to restore the computer system in the event of damage to the system's primary disk storage devices. Thus, their loss in no way compromises compliance with the court-ordered document retention requirements. All relevant primary records and documents on the Exxon Valdez oil spill have been retained in hard copy or on disk storage and will be kept as long as needed. Much of this information has already been given to state and federal agencies.

"I can assure you of Exxon's continued cooperation in assisting your office to fully understand the circumstances and insignificance of the computer backup tape matter."

As background, in a separate statement, Exxon said:

"After the Exxon Valdez spill, Exxon took the initiative to instruct its employees to save related documents and records. Subsequently, in late April 1989, a federal court issued an order that required Exxon and the other parties to retain records and documents pertaining to the spill and cleanup. This order was later modified, in May 1989, to provide that parties had to retain only one copy of each document. Exxon has complied with this order.

"The computer tapes of the type in question contain backup copies of all the information on the primary disk storage devices in the computer system used for office automation. These backup tapes contain documents dealing with all subjects — not just the Exxon Valdez oil spill — and are used only to restore the office computer system to operation in the event of damage to the system's primary disk storage devices. These backup tapes normally would be recycled every few weeks and are not intended to serve as a permanent archive of Exxon documents. A small number of these backup tapes were written over, but documents pertaining to the Exxon Valdez incident subject to the court order are on primary disk storage or in hardcopy form and were not affected. They will be retained as long as needed."

Ford is aiming for a total phase-out of asbestos in its North American passenger cars by 1993 for 1994 models.

General Motors, meanwhile, produces front disc brakes that are almost all asbestos-free. However, 75 percent of the company's cars and half of its small trucks have rear drum brakes with asbestos pads and liners.

Under the ban, the use of asbestos in some products, including roofing material, pipe wrap and sheet products will be prohibited next year. Use in brake pads and linings will be banned in 1993, and its use in auto replacement parts, cement water distribution pipes, roof shingles and a variety of other products will end in 1996.

The agency estimates that the cost to consumers for the phase-out will be about $460 million over the next 13 years.

Among the substitute products are kevlar, a synthetic fabric used with resin, and some types of metallic fiber, industry officials said. One manufacturer, who requested anonymity, said he prefers the substitute.

"Most of us would rather sell metallic pads, anyway. They cost more," he said.

The ban does not cover guided missile liners, acetylene cylinders and some sealing tapes. The EPA said it was difficult to find adequate substitutes and the hazards involved were minimal.

American National to aquire Heath Petra interest

HOUSTON (SWN) — American National Petroleum Company announced Thursday the signing of an agreement to acquire a 50 percent interest in Heath Petra Resources, Inc. a North Carolina-based independent gas market company with offices in Charlotte, North Carolina; Atlanta, Georgia and Houston, Texas.

The principals of Heath Petra are Brian N. Heath, Douglas D. Morgan and Scott C. Gaddis. Heath Petra focuses on small to mid-size industrial end users and municipal gas distribution companies by combining a high level of services along with competitive natural gas purchases. Heath Petra also manages the purchasing activities for numerous municipal gas distribution companies in North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky and Virginia.

Gas volumes total approximately 100,000 Mcf per day. Heath Petra has recently consummated a long term marketing contract with AEDC USA, Inc. for gas production located in Mississippi Canyon Block 486, Federal OCS Waters, Louisiana. AEDC estimates the field will be ready to produce in the first quarter of 1991.

In discussing the acquisition, Andrew F. Loomis, chairman of the board, indicated that Heath Petra would remain an independent gas marketer focused on maintaining and developing strong relationships with producers and purchasers while expanding its share of the dynamic gas marketing business. Heath Petra would also provide assistance to ANPC in marketing its gas in an increasingly competitive environment. This acquisition, together with the acquisition of an interest in Blake Drilling & Workover Co., Inc., announced earlier this week, reflects ANPC's increasing involvement in energy-related businesses which represent attractive niches of opportunity and provide synergy with ANPC's production and other activities.

ANPC has approximately $10 million in cash which is available to fund acquisitions and fuel the company's growth program.

American National Petroleum Company is engaged in the acquisition of oil and natural gas companies and producing properties and other energy related transactions. ANPC is also involved in oil and gas exploration and production for its own account and also for the account of managed limited partnerships in Colorado, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Wyoming.

'Blind trust' turns assets over to another person

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A television report said President Bush's investments in a "blind trust" netted him a 15 percent return. The actual figures were given, but I don't remember them. That brings up two questions.

What is a blind trust? Can ordinary people with moderate amounts to invest safely — not speculate — do likewise with a blind trust and realize a 15 percent return? The best I have ever been able to do is about 10 percent on some certificates of deposit. And rates on new CDs are lower.

Doyle

A. A blind trust is an arrangement in which you turn your assets over to someone else to manage and you don't know what investments are made. Hence, the word "blind."

Many public officials set up blind trusts to stay away from conflicts of interest. If they all did, the stench of scandal would not hang so heavily over Endsville-on-the-Potomac.

In theory, anyone can set up a blind trust. In practice, you need a rather large amount of money. Bank trust departments and other investment managers generally aren't interested in handling small blind trusts.

President Bush's latest financial disclosure statement shows the value of his blind trust was $998,000 at the end of 1988 and that the trust earned $156,000 last year. That works out to 15.63 percent.

Naturally, the investments in the Bush blind trust were not revealed. However, it was impossible to get that kind of return on safe investments such as CDs last year. It's obvious that its managers took some risks with the trust's money and were successful in producing a higher return for the First Family.

Even so, the 15.63 percent return was not a 1988 world-beater. Assuming reinvestment of dividends, the Dow Jones Industrial Average — the most popular measurement of stock performance — had a 16.58 percent total return last year.

Q. When my daughter was finishing high school, I put $24,000 into a CD in a gift to minors account — in my name, as custodian for her — to cover her college tuition should something happen to me. Fortunately, I was able to pay her college costs without touching the CD. She will be graduated and the CD will mature next year.

The CD is under her Social Security number and she has paid income tax on the interest. When the CD matures, I would like to transfer the $24,000 and the accumulated interest to me and start paying income tax on the interest.

Will this create any problems with the Internal Revenue Service?

A. Not if it is handled properly. However, you cannot transfer that money to you. Your daughter has to do it.

The original $24,000 and the accrued interest belong to your daughter — not you. When you put that money into a gift to minors account, you made an irrevocable gift. There's no legitimate way for you to recover it on your own.

If your daughter so decides, she can give that money to you. To steer clear of complications, she should give you no more than $10,000 annually. Otherwise, she will be required to file federal gift tax returns. That's something you should have done when you made the $24,000 gift to her.

Q. If my daughter inherits from me stock valued at $10,000, what will be her "basis" — cost for tax purposes? And will my final income tax return have to include a capital gains tax on the stock's appreciation in value?

A. Your daughter's basis will be $10,000, assuming that's the value put on it when your estate is settled. In almost all cases, the basis of inherited assets is the market value on the date of death. In rare cases, an alternate valuation date is used.

There will be no need for income tax to be paid on the stock's gain in value when your final return is filed. From time to time, some wild-eyed, left-wingers in Congress have proposed slapping such a tax on everything left behind. But more sensible heads have prevailed.

One man made strides for civil rights

By JEANNE FREEMAN
Copley News Service

Nearly three decades in the cold river of time may have polished James Meredith's exterior to a pinstripe, eliciting from bankers and lawyers a welcoming warmth.

But he retains the hard, flinty core that enabled him, one autumn morning in 1962, to walk across the campus of the University of Mississippi — past the smashed windows and the overturned cars of the previous night's riot — and register for class.

Meredith currently lives in Cincinnati, where he has held a visiting professorship at the University of Cincinnati and, more recently, run a financial consulting company. But in 1962, he became a black civil rights hero, the man who defied the governor of Mississippi and broke the 115-year-old color barrier at that bastion of Southern white tradition, Ole Miss.

On Sept. 30, 1962, while 24 federal agents stood guard outside the door to Meredith's room, the campus of Ole Miss erupted in riots in protest of his enrollment. Angry crowds smashed windows, overturned cars, threw rocks and bottles. Ole Miss' administration building was protected by 123 deputy marshals, 316 border patrolmen and 97 federal agents. But it took tear gas and the deployment of Army troops to regain order.

The night's toll: 160 marshals injured, 28 shot. Two men — one a French reporter shot in the back at close range — were dead. Two hundred people had been arrested.

UNDETERRED, PROMPTLY at 7:55 a.m. the next morning, Meredith walked across campus to register.

Meredith graduated from the University of Mississippi and went on to earn a law degree from Columbia University in New York.

Now 55, he says that originally 12 students at all-black Jackson State College had talked about transferring to Ole Miss. But he was the only one who went through with it.

He already had a reputation for being tough. At Jackson State, Meredith remembers, "In 1960, I had a Castro beard in Mississippi."

Once word spread that he had applied to Ole Miss, Meredith recalls, other black students steered clear of him.

"Three-fourths of the students, when they'd see me coming, would change sides of the sidewalk."

They were afraid to be thought of associating with him, he says. "They were afraid their mamas would lose their jobs."

Well, Meredith has always followed his own path, anyway. "You read through the histories," he says, "and you always find, 'Meredith, a loner ...'"

He would argue that it was not so much that he was a loner as he was rarely what people expected.

"I am a product of the mass communication media," Meredith asserts flatly. "And I'm also a victim of it."

His name is written in history books. Before they even shake his hand, "Everybody either already has an opinion of me or thinks they should have an opinion of me."

Those opinions are often wrong.

"It used to be that people didn't know my position until they were sitting in an audience and heard me," Meredith notes.

FOR ONE thing, Meredith says he was never a part of any organized movement for black civil rights. He was acting on his own, simply seeking that to which he was entitled as a citizen: education at a state-supported institution that his tax dollars helped finance.

He labels himself a conservative and a Republican who believes in what he calls "traditional, moral values," and who intends to work on behalf of the Republican Party.

"My objective is to switch the black race from the Democrats to the Republicans."

Which, on the surface, would appear to be exactly the kind of statement that would delight Republican National Committee chairman Lee Atwater. Atwater has stated he would like to increase black membership in the Republican Party.

Except Meredith thinks he and Atwater are talking about two different things. "They don't want the black race," Meredith contends. "They want the (black) middle-class elite."

A mistake, in his opinion. "Their representation in every level of government is declining and will continue to decline until the urban element is brought into the party."

And what will bring blacks to the Republican party, Meredith thinks, are the same solid, conservative values that bring whites in.

"There shouldn't be a double standard," he insists.

Right now, he says, liberal Republicans "are trying to out-liberal the Democrats on the black question. It simply won't work."

Meredith is convinced that he represents the majority view among blacks. "Ninety percent of the ones arguing for the liberal position would vote my position if they didn't have to explain it to their friends."

BIG, FEDERAL programs aren't the answer to problems among blacks, he feels. "Success and effectiveness have only ever come one step at a time, one person at a time. That's the way the black race did it for 7,000 years until 25 years ago."

He offers up school busing as an example. "The liberals sold blacks a bill of goods that all the black children had to do was to get themselves in a seat beside a white child.

"That ain't never been the situation.

"There are very few people today who are fooled. They simply don't know what to do. If you don't have a clear option, you stick to what you know."

FAMILY MATTERS

Columnist now understands his father's strength, courage

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR READERS: Independence Day is special to me because it reminds me of the good things about my alcoholic father and about the sacrifices he made during World War II to help preserve freedom.

My father was a hero, although he never talked about his war experiences at all. When he came home form the war, he gave me (a 3-year-old) all his medals. Sadly, I lost all of them, but the memory of playing with that box full of war medals is one of the few happy images of my childhood.

Other people had to tell me about what happened to my father during the war. My mother, aunts and uncles told me of his pain at being the only surviving member of his scout group, the loss of friend after friend, buddy after buddy. He was wounded twice and carried the remains of at least one bullet in his arm.

I was told of the terror he experienced at night as he fought an unseen enemy; a terror that caused him to wake up grabbing my mother and screaming. He was a different person during those times.

I also was told of how he made rank, only to be demoted because of his drinking. One of his sisters delighted in telling of his drunken exploits when he wasn't around. The stories were funny then, but they aren't now.

My father returned home from the war an alcoholic. I don't know what happened because virtually everyone in the family is dead now, but somehow my mother insisted he stop drinking. Miraculously enough, he did — he just stopped. I didn't think much about that then, but I do now. He was a courageous man.

Unfortunately, taking away the alcohol doesn't alter the alcoholic's behavior. We never knew what was going to happen next. We knew nothing about alcoholism. His behavior became a random variable in the house — you just avoided him if at all possible. Meal times were worst.

Through my work with veterans of the Vietnam War, I have learned that my father suffered from a chronic shock syndrome, which alcoholism added to.

This column is in memory of my dad. Although he didn't physically die during the war or from alcoholism, both wounded him and my family. Mom died young, and my sister and I are both in recovery. With the grace of God we will remain in recovery.

I thank my dad for fighting for freedom. I have been held hostage by the same chronic shock that he experienced. If he had only known about the recovery process, he could have found his own freedom; the freedom to know he was special and important, to take responsibility for his actions, to be a loving, caring person.

I can only promise that I will continue to help others find recovery. Dad fought for freedom, and his battles continued long after the war ended. He sacrificed for us all, and for that, Dad, I thank you.

Research shows high chromium diet has edge

Copley News Service

If athletic rats are any indication, human athletes may be able to endure a little longer and compete a little better with a little more chromium in their bodies.

Marathoners and other long-distance athletes prepare for competition by eating a high-carbohydrate diet to stockpile all the glycogen their muscle tissue will hold. But how fast the glycogen disappears during competition may determine who finishes first — or finishes at all.

At the U.S. Department of Agriculture Human Nutrition Research Center in Beltsville, Md., rats fed adequate chromium for five weeks lost significantly less muscle glycogen during strenuous exercise than those fed a low-chromium diet.

Good sources of chromium are fortified breakfast cereals, cheese, liver, whole wheat, beef, beer and wine.

Aging baby boomers grow old in new ways

By NOEL OSMENT
Copley News Service

Baby boomers are not disappearing. They are just getting older.

But don't look for headlines announcing the graying of the boomers. They simply won't allow themselves to turn gray, says a marketing consultant.

Instead, baby boomers will grow old in new ways, creating a growing demand for products and services that will allow them to lead active lives far into their latter years.

While Ken Dychtwald's fellow boomers have been averting their eyes from distasteful images of old age, the 38-year-old entrepreneur has looked the aging phenomenon head on and has seen dollar signs, which he has transformed into a 3-year-old marketing company in Berkeley, Calif., called Age Wave.

His clients, for example, include media companies such as CBS, which has consulted with him on ways to sell time based on the likelihood of an older audience. He also offers seminars for businesspeople, helping them find ways to serve an older market in the future.

Dychtwald, who has a doctorate in psychology, has a new book out, also called "Age Wave." He said he first became aware of the problems of the aging when he was working in a government program on preventative health in Berkeley.

"I became more and more fascinated with the phenomenon of aging as a whole social trend," he said.

And he soon realized that as baby boomers aged, ours would no longer be a youth-oriented society. It's a matter of sheer numbers.

"Boomers have been the center of our culture because they are in the majority," he said. "As the boomers grow old and out of the youth stage of life, there will be a shift economically toward the needs and concerns of middle and later years of life."

Thus, he said, boomers will continue to hold power from the far side of 50.

"And that is exactly the stage of life they've always avoided and neglected and denied."

Thus, as Dychtwald sees it, the boomers won't grow old in an old-fashioned way, and their needs and concerns won't fit the stereotypical needs of the aged.

People who have been absorbed with fitness, they will continue to be physically active and be up for "adventure, exotic travel and free-spirited romance and sexuality," he says.

Boomers have never been good at making up their minds, says Dychtwald, who sees them continuing a pattern of behavior that includes an "incredible amount of job and marriage changing."

"I think we'll be nutty — I do think my generation is not all that much together in some ways," he said. "But being unable to accept aging as it has been in the past is a mark of the boomers.

"And that's neurotic."

All this freedom to change lifestyles to say nothing of exotic adventures sounds fun and madcap, but what about the aged who are less mobile and even poor?

Well, Dychtwald countered, current figures show that older people have more disposable income than believed.

The 1986 U.S. Census Bureau figures he uses in his book show that no more than 12.5 percent of those older than 65 live below the poverty line. Figures for those living below the poverty line for other ages are: 21 percent, under 16; 16.6 percent, 16 to 21; 10.8 percent, 22 to 44; 9 percent, 45 to 65.

Dychtwald also cites other census figures showing that people over 65 have $5,633 per year in discretionary income as opposed, for example, to those ages 35 to 44, whose household income is almost double that of those over 65, but whose discretionary income is only $3,701.

Thus, most of the future aged will lead active lives within their means and will best be served by business, Dychtwald predicted, explaining his own transition from the social services to businessman.

"Most people of my age thought you could either care and be involved in social causes or not care, and make a lot of money. When I sat down to think that through, it didn't seem to make any sense to me. I decided that if there would be a transformation having to do with aging in America, it would not likely come from the government — their primary concern is the underclass elderly, and it ought to be — but rather from the business community."

As a consultant — his clients include McDonald's restaurants and Time magazine — he tries to help companies understand the self-image of the burgeoning older population.

In his book he describes changes as reflected in older people pushing aside the stereotypical limits of old age — 80-year-old college students, for example — and in the types of activities now common in retirement communities, "everything from pinochle to yoga to motorcycles."

For retirement communities of the future, he suggests such choices as an Olympic village for athletic activities featuring a year-round Club Med-type program; a "longevity complex" with health-food restaurants and high-tech exercise equipment; a residential Esalen-type community complete with meditation rooms, Zen gardens and visiting philosophers, psychologists and religious leaders; or a high-tech community with computer work stations in every neighborhood.

"It's not that I believe everyone will be living in retirement communities," he said. "Actually only about 4 percent of the elderly live in them now and many people would rather live in a mixed community."

But, he says, many who do live in mixed communities experience loneliness and fear.

Dychtwald predicts that the needs of this older population will be met with the new products designed to help them live better — everything from attractive "grab" bars in bathrooms to better lighting in movie theaters.

But, he tells his clients, aging people must be seen as vigorous and youthful in advertising. "Go with a John Forsythe rather than a Clara Peller."

Dychtwald said baby boomers will soon have to come face to face with the future.

"Within the next 10 or 15 years we will be confronted by old age in our families, watching our parents go through the trials and tribulations. I hope this book will get people discussing ways to become old better."

DEAR ABBY

Teen-ager discovers her lost ring decorating wrong person's finger

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am in a quandary as to how I should handle the following situation: Last December, my daughter (I'll call her Bonnie) was involved in a single-car accident on our neighbor's lawn. During the accident, Bonnie lost her ring. It was a small sapphire, which is her birthstone.

At the time of the accident, Bonnie told the neighbor on whose lawn she landed that she had lost a ring with a blue stone in it. (We'll call the neighbor Mr. Jones.) He said he would keep an eye out for it in the spring after the snow melted.

Well, yesterday, Bonnie bumped into Mrs. Jones in the drugstore, and guess what she was wearing on her finger? Bonnie's ring! Bonnie said she was too flabbergasted to say anything to Mrs. Jones at the time, but our problem is how to handle this.

To complicate matters, Mr. Jones is a deputy sheriff with the local sheriff's department. This bothers me because I thought if anyone would be honest, it would be a civil servant.

What should we do — if anything? — SMALL TOWN IN OHIO

DEAR SMALL TOWN: Call the deputy sheriff and tell him that perhaps his wife was not aware that Bonnie had lost her ring last winter on their property during an accident. Then advise him that Bonnie had seen Mrs. Jones wearing the ring — and name the place and time.

After that, I doubt if Bonnie's ring will be "missing" much longer.

DEAR ABBY: It happened today. And it will happen again and again and again.

When a mother has lost a child to death — whether it was yesterday, last year or many years ago — if someone asks her how many children she has, what should she say?

If she includes the child she's lost, there are more questions to answer — then the person who has inquired looks as though she is sorry she asked. If the mother doesn't include the child she lost, was his or her life of no consequence — and not worth mentioning?

So how should the mother answer that question? — FAITHFUL READER IN FLINT, MICH.

DEAR FAITHFUL READER: Obviously, only those who don't know the mother very well would ask how many children she has, so unless the mother is fully prepared to answer some follow-up questions about her tragic loss, she should count only those children who are living.

Neglecting to mention the child or children she has lost in death in no way diminishes their importance.

DEAR ABBY: Whenever a woman writes about her drinking problem, you recommend that she seek help from Alcoholics Anonymous, which is a wonderful organization. But, Abby, A.A. doesn't work for everyone. I speak from experience. I attended a few meetings and left feeling depressed and alone. Then I heard about a group for women called Women for Sobriety. They have weekly meetings, so I attended one. I felt so at home with these women and was able to open up with them far more easily than in the A.A. group with both men and women.

I have had a happy sobriety for six years now. Women for Sobriety concentrates on mind power, making the best of the present instead of dwelling on the past. Interested women can write for information to this address: W.F.S. Inc., P.O. Box 618, Quakertown, Pa. 18951. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope, as this is a nonprofit organization. — SOBER AND HAPPY

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem I need your help on. Every night my husband sets his alarm clock for 5 a.m. He doesn't get out of bed when his alarm goes off; he just turns on his snooze alarm, which goes off every nine minutes until 6:30 — when he actually gets out of bed.

I have my own alarm clock, which is set for 6:30 a.m. When his alarm goes off at 5 a.m. and then repeats every nine minutes, it wakes me up and keeps me awake. So I either holler at him (which doesn't do any good), or I leave the room and go to sleep on the couch, or I just stay up.

We both work full time, and he goes to bed anywhere from two to three hours ahead of me, but he just can't seem to get out of bed in the morning. There are times when he wakes me up in the middle of the night for lovemaking, and when I tell him I'm too tired, he thinks I'm a terrible person.

Abby, how can I resolve this? He wasn't like this when I married him. We've been married 14 years and have three kids. I love him dearly, but I'm tired of this snooze alarm business. — TIRED IN ST. CLOUD, MINN.

DEAR TIRED: The "terrible person" in your marriage is the selfish party who wakes up his wife at 5 a.m. when she could sleep for an additional hour and a half. As long as you put up with it, nothing will change.

Give him a choice: Either knock off the snooze alarm, or arrange for separate sleeping quarters.

Baby-boom parents learn baby massage

New York Times News Service

MESA, Ariz. — An Arizona therapist says the method he uses to soothe athletes who are banged up from practice or worried about the big game works just as well for babies.

In other words, a nice rubdown could be just what your infant needs.

Kevin Wrathall, a certified massage therapist who specializes in muscle, ligament and tendon injuries for the Center for Sports Medicine here, teaches a baby-massage course at the center for parents who want to learn the proper way to rub down their young ones.

"Babies have stress just like adults do," says Wrathall. "And massage gives babies a sense of physical contact that is very important."

Wrathall also promotes baby massage as a means of bonding between parents and children. "I especially recommend it for fathers," Wrathall says. "A study showed fathers spend an average of five minutes a day with their infant. Massage can develop a bond between them."

In addition to its emotional benefits, massage also can improve an infant physically, Wrathall says. "Babies who are massaged are more relaxed. They're happier babies."

According to Wrathall, massage improves circulation in infants and improves the bloodstream's ability to clean itself out. Rubdowns increase the amount of nutrition muscles receive and have a sedative effect.

The method used for massaging babies, Wrathall says, does not differ significantly from massaging an adult. "The techniques are the same because the muscle structure is the same. Babies are just smaller."

Wrathall taught a six-week sports massage course at Arizona State University for five years that included a class on infant massage.

Wrathall also says he consulted with three pediatricians before his current massage class and although they said there was no scientific evidence that massage is physically beneficial for babies, they agreed there was potential benefit for infants through improved bonding.

"There's no real medical information on the subject," says Dr. Joe Becker, a Mesa pediatrician. "But if it provides a way to interact with your child, that's great."

Another pediatrician, Dr.Glenn Watercotte, questions the physical benefits of infant massage. "As a form of therapy, it would seem to be useful only in certain situations," he says, such as in the case of disabled infants.

Iron-on IDs offer child protection

Copley News Service

Iron-on identification labels are a great idea, but Rom and Lauri Johnson, founders of the Child Keep label company, added a new twist hoping to make them even better.

The company already offers labels to be worn inside kids' clothing listing name, address and phone number. Along with them, Child Keep is marketing a second set of iron-on decals, Identifind transfers, to be worn on the outside of clothing to alert emergency-care providers that there is identification on the inside.

With increased security awareness, police warn parents to keep a child's identification out of public view. The Johnsons agree with this recommendation, but they are afraid police or hospitals may overlook the labels or tags on the inside of clothing. Their double heart Identifind logo is small enough to be worn inconspicuously on the outside.

"Whenever emergency providers see this little symbol, on a shirt sleeve, collar, lapel or cuff, they are notified to look inside for label information," said Lauri Johnson. "We suggest the labels themselves be applied inside the outerwear, and outside the underwear."

Labels are available in sets of 36 for $6.20, 48 for $7.80, or 100 for $14.80. For more information, write Child Keep, P.O. Box 297, Vista, Calif., 92083.

East German leaders uneasy with reforms

BERLIN (AP) — As Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was heralding improved East-West relations in Bonn recently, East Germany was exhorting its young people to defend socialism "with weapons" if necessary.

East Germany's aging leadership is growing increasingly uneasy over the momentum of reforms in other Warsaw Pact countries, and over the warming of relations between the Soviet Union and West Germany.

"East Germany's leaders aren't having a very good time right now," said Heinz Timmermann, a foreign affairs expert at Cologne's Institute for Eastern European and International Studies.

"Everywhere they look there are changes going on that threaten them," Timmermann said, referring to political and economic reforms in the Soviet Union, Poland and Hungary.

East Germany's state media gave scant attention to Gorbachev's June visit to West Germany, where he was enthusiastically received by citizens.

Better relations between Bonn and Moscow mean more headaches for East Berlin, which has suffered for years from an identity crisis in the shadow of its prosperous western neighbor.

Gorbachev's popularity in East Germany also has posed increasing problems as public dissatisfaction mounts over the lack of reforms in the nation.

Many East Germans look to Gorbachev in the hope that he can help bring change to their rigidly controlled society.

But East Berlin, once the Kremlin's staunchest ideological ally, has begun a campaign to reinforce its orthodox communist views and has vehemently attacked advocates of change at home and abroad.

While Gorbachev was being feted in Bonn and Beijing, Margot Honecker, East Germany's education minister and the wife of the party Erich Honecker, urged the nation's youth to be prepared to fight for socialism.

"This is a time of struggle," Mrs. Honecker told delegates attending an education congress in East Berlin. "The times need a generation of young people who are willing to struggle to defend socialism ... with weapons in their hands if necessary."

East German leaders promptly defended China's June 3-4 crackdown on the pro-democracy movement, saying violence was necessary to stop a "counterrevolutionary overthrow of people's power in China."

Former Cuban officers net death for drug trafficking

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A Cuban military court today condemned a former army general and three other former officers to death by firing squad for drug trafficking, the official Cuban news agency Prensa Latina said.

The tribunal handed out sentences ranging from 10 years to 30 years in prison to seven other defendants, Prensa Latina said in dispatches monitored in Mexico City.

The news agency said all were convicted of collaborating with Colombia's Medellin cartel, the world's biggest cocaine trafficking outfit, in a scandal that reached into the highest ranks of the military and the Interior Ministry.

The verdicts were issued early Thursday by the special three-man military tribunal, Prensa Latina said.

All the defendants are former military officers who were stripped of their ranks and thrown out of the Cuban Communist Party in June.

The tribunal gave the death penalty to former Division Gen. Arnaldo Ochoa, the alleged ringleader of the smuggling ring, and to ex-Col. Antonio de la Guardia, ex-Capt. Jorge Martinez and ex-Maj. Armado Padron.

Ochoa fought alongside President Fidel Castro in the Sierra Maestra in the 1950s and earned the prestigious Hero of the Republic of Cuba medal for his command of troops in Ethiopia in 1978 and in Angola in 1987-1988.

Ochoa was head of a group of Cuban military adviser to Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government in 1985-1986.

The tribunal sentenced Eduardo Diaz, Antonio Sanchez and Alexis Lago to 30 years in prison. The prosecutor had asked for the death penalty for them.

Patricio de la Guardia, Rosa Maria Abierno and Miguel Ruiz also were sentenced to 30 years in prison, five more than the prosecution had requested.

Antonio Rodriguez was sentenced to 10 years in prison, the agency said. The prosecution had requested a 15-year sentence for Rodriguez.

U.S. loses out in extradition bid

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — The European Court of Human Rights ruled today that a West German accused of killing two people in Virginia should not be extradited to the United States because he could receive the death penalty.

The court said the threat of the death penalty is a violation of the man's human rights. He is now being held in Britain.

Rulings by the court do not technically bind the members of the Council of Europe, but they are rarely ignored. Britain said it would study the ruling.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Copter crash kills GI

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter crashed east of Seoul Thursday night, killing one U.S. soldier and injuring two others, U.S. military officials said.

The military also said a Korean civilian was killed and two others injured Thursday while U.S. troops were training at a firing range.

The helicopter was on a routine night training mission when it crashed about 10 p.m. Thursday about 8½ miles east of Seoul, according to a statement the military issued Friday.

It said the cause of the crash was under investigation.

Kissinger offers debt advice

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Industrial nations should join banks in writing off up to 50 percent of the Third World debt, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said.

"Realistically, banks alone cannot bear the burden of what creditors have to do," he said Thursday.

Kissinger, who came to this country on Wednesday for a three-day visit at the invitation of President Carlos Andres Perez, denied reports he would be paid by Venezuela to help it renegotiate the terms of its $33 billion foreign debt.

Perez's efforts to impose austerity measures in this country, backed by international creditors, prompted riots in February that killed about 300 people.

Pamplona bulls on the run

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — The bulls once again thundered through Pamplona's cobblestone streets today, and police said 30 of the 1,000 daredevils who ran ahead of the animals suffered minor injuries in the race made famous by Ernest Hemingway.

This year's running of the bulls came a day after two bombs exploded in the city, wrecking two cars but injuring no one.

During the run, 29 people suffered bruises and scrapes after falling or being trampled by the bulls and the steers guiding them through a half-mile of narrow streets in Pamplona's old quarter.

The weeklong festival is held annually from July 6-14 in honor of San Fermin, Pamplona's patron saint.

Hemingway's 1926 novel, "The Sun Also Rises," describes in detail the rowdy, round-the-clock festival that starts daily with the morning runs of the bulls.

AI worried about Sudan

LONDON (AP) — Officials of Amnesty International said today they are worried about the fate of Sudanese leaders who were toppled in a military coup last week.

The London-based human rights group said it was seeking assurances "that all those detained are not being ill-treated and that they are being allowed prompt access to legal counsel, relatives and independent medical examiners."

WILLIAM MOORE, et al. v. EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, et al.
No. 88-034911, 295th JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

TO ALL PRESENT OR FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE REXENE CORPORATION, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, REXENE PRODUCTS COMPANY, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, (FORMERLY KNOWN AS EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, INCLUDING ITS PREDECESSOR, A TEXAS CORPORATION), OR ANY OF THEIR DIRECT OR INDIRECT SUBSIDIARIES (COLLECTIVELY, THE "COMPANY") WHOSE DESIGNATED EMPLOYMENT LEVEL AT ANY TIME FROM JANUARY 1, 1984 THROUGH APRIL 13, 1988, INCLUSIVE, WAS GRADE 9 OR BELOW (THE "CLASS");

Your rights may be affected by a lawsuit pending in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, William Moore, et al. v. El Paso Products Company, et al., Civil Action No. 88-034911 (the "Class Action Lawsuit"), and a proposed settlement of the Class Action Lawsuit. The three named plaintiffs, Messrs. William Moore, Michael Gibson and Richard Siler, are the designated Class Representatives (the "Class Representatives"). Class Counsel are Ronald G. Franklin and Gregory N. Jones of Hill, Parker, Franklin, Cardwell & Jones of Houston, Texas, and Jacks C. Nickens and Justin M. Campbell III of Miller, Bristow & Brown also of Houston, Texas (the "Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives, Class Counsel and all but two of the Defendants have agreed to the proposed settlement, and they recommend that all Class members accept the proposed settlement.

William Moore, Michael Gibson, and Richard Siler commenced the Class Action lawsuit on behalf of themselves and the other members of the Class on June 16, 1988. The defendants are Rexene Corporation, El Paso Products Company (now known as Rexene Products Company), Ellen W. Noel as Independent Executrix of the Estate of W. D. Noel, deceased, O. R. Clements, John B. Mason, Bobby E. Seltz, Val G. Bennett, Patrick E. Munn, Andrew J. Smith, Werner F. Goeckel, Miller C. Hawkins, and Fred S. Valles. The plaintiffs allege that the individual defendants, on behalf of themselves and the Company, in an effort to induce the Class to contribute their labor to the Company and join them in the struggle to save the Company, promised the Class stock ownership in the Company. The Class alleges that the defendants misrepresented their intent, failed to satisfy their promises, and made other fraudulent misrepresentations and omissions through which they obtained the benefits of the Class' commitment to the Company and profited at the expense of the Class.

Defendants deny the Class's allegations of wrongdoing in all respects. They deny having made any misrepresentations or material omissions, and they affirmatively contend that the Company was employee-owned and that they satisfied any obligations to the employees by establishing a Stock Bonus Plan pursuant to which all participants shared in the ownership of the Company.

On June 8, 1989, the Court determined that this lawsuit should be maintained as a class action on behalf of all present and former employees of the Rexene Corporation, Rexene Products Company, formerly known as El Paso Products Company (including its predecessor, a Texas corporation) or any of their direct or indirect subsidiaries whose designated employment level at any time from January 1, 1984 through April 13, 1988, inclusive, was grade 9 or below. The court has preliminarily approved a settlement between the Class and the settling defendants. If you are a member of the Class, you may be entitled to a portion of the Settlement Fund. Also, if you are a member of the Class, you have the right to exclude yourself from the Class or to object to the settlement. In either event, you will be required to mail certain information to the Committee of Counsel.

Persons who have been identified as possible members of the Class are being advised by mail of their rights with respect to the lawsuit. This Notice is being published because some Class members may not receive the mailed notice either because they have not been identified as members of the Class or the mailing information is inaccurate or otherwise incorrect. If you are (or may be) a member of the Class but do not receive individual notice of your rights by June 30, 1989, you should notify immediately the Committee of Counsel, Rexene Products Company Litigation, P.O. Box 53353, Houston, Texas 77010, giving your correct name, telephone number, current address and social security number. You will then be mailed a more detailed explanation of your rights in this litigation and be placed on the mailing list for any future notifications regarding this suit.

A hearing for final approval of the settlement is scheduled in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, on August 2, 1989, 8:00 a.m. If you have not received notice by mail, you should notify the Committee of Counsel immediately at the address listed above. To exclude yourself from the Class or object to the settlement, you must do so in writing and mail your exclusion request or objection to the Committee of Counsel postmarked no later than July 26, 1989, or you may forfeit and lose forever valuable rights.
