As a result of Congressional inaction many Americans may be paying 10 to 20 percent higher for natural gas to heat their homes this winter.

Nuclear arms debate continues 'The Day After'

By The Associated Press

The horror of nuclear war, interrupted only by commercials, swept into millions of homes with "The Day After," raising the tempo of the nuclear arms debate across America today, from schools in New York to town halls in Oregon.

ABC-TV's movie Sunday night was used as a focal point for anti-nuclear groups, while the Reagan administration, led by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, called on Americans to "rally around and support" a policy of deterrence and negotiation with the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear arms.

An estimated 75 million people watched the 2½-hour movie, many of them gathering in churches and neighbors' homes. Network affiliates said their switchboards lit up with hundreds of calls during the show, with most of the calls to ABC's New York headquarters supporting the showing of the film.

"The Day After," a $7 million project, depicted a Soviet nuclear strike on Kansas City, and the grim aftermath for survivors in nearby Lawrence, Kan.

"We saw our community destroyed this evening," Lawrence Mayor David Longhurst told about 500 people at a candelight vigil near a hilltop war memorial after the show. Several hundred people also gathered for a candelight ceremony in Kansas City.

"We saw all of the nightmares come true. We got a glimpse at what is really at stake in a nuclear war," said Longhurst, who called a town meeting for today to discuss the nuclear arms race. A nuclear disarmament rally was planned at City Hall in Kansas City.

Elsewhere today, teachers across the country said they would discuss the movie with their pupils and people planned to gather in student unions, libraries, banks and churches to talk about the movie and the prospect of nuclear war.

Even before the movie began, picketers in front of ABC offices in New York City, Los Angeles and Lynchburg, Va., protested what they said was the pro-nuclear disarmament theme of the program.

In New York, ABC-TV said it received 1,075 telephone calls during and immediately after the broadcast. Of those, 662 "expressed support" for the movie, 393 gave "negative views," and the remainder were asking for information about followup programs, ABC spokesman David Horowitz said.

Viewers don't think film lived up to publicity

From Staff Reports

The day after "The Day After," a controversial movie about the aftermath of nuclear attack, Midlanders questioned in a random telephone survey indicated the program did not live up to its pre-show publicity.

Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority, blasted the movie and urged Midlanders not to watch it and to boycott its advertisers. Trinity School in Midland sent letters to parents telling them the program was unsuitable for viewers under 16.

"I think it (controversy) was rather stupid," Dorcas Reed, 2300 N. A Street, said. "It was a movie, that's all. I don't know why anyone would want to bring it down to a political aspect of the U.S. I looked at it as a movie like any other movie. I didn't have any adverse reaction to it at all."

"I really didn't feel one way or another that it had any political overtones," agreed Nancy Abrams, an employee of the Permian Basin Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation. "I don't see why some people made such a big fuss about it — like the Moral Majority and William F. Buckley Jr. There was so much buildup about it."

She added that the movie did not trigger any calls to the organization's suicide prevention line.

"I thought it was well done and not as shocking as we were led to believe," added Ed Hooper, Midland consultant geologist. "I thought a lot of it (controversy) was unfounded — especially about children. They're growing up in the nuclear age, why not let them be aware of the facts? I think they should have seen it."

Protesters sprayed by police

Helmut Kohl

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Riot police turned water cannons on angry protesters outside the Parliament building today and made 100 arrests as Chancellor Helmut Kohl reaffirmed his government's plans to deploy U.S. nuclear missiles this year.

"If negotiations remain unsuccessful, the alliance will establish the readiness of the first Pershing 2 missiles and cruise missiles by year's end," Kohl said in a 70-minute speech starting a two-day debate on deployment.

Several thousand police sealed off streets around the Parliament building with steel barriers to prevent thousands of anti-missile demonstrators from approaching closer than 100 yards.

About 100 demonstrators were arrested by late morning, said a Bonn police spokesman who declined to be named. He said the 2,000 to 4,000 anti-missile protesters were unable to carry out a threat to blockade Parliament and prevent the debate.

Reporters said a mixture of water and tear gas from five water cannons was sprayed on 400-500 protesters who tried to block traffic on a busy boulevard on the edge of the government district. However, the police spokesman denied that tear gas was used.

Hans-Jochen Vogel, floor leader of the opposition Social Democrats accused Kohl of failing to represent the West German interests in Washington.

Vogel said opinion polls showed a majority of West Germans oppose the deployment. "In the deployment question, the majority of our people stand against you," he said.

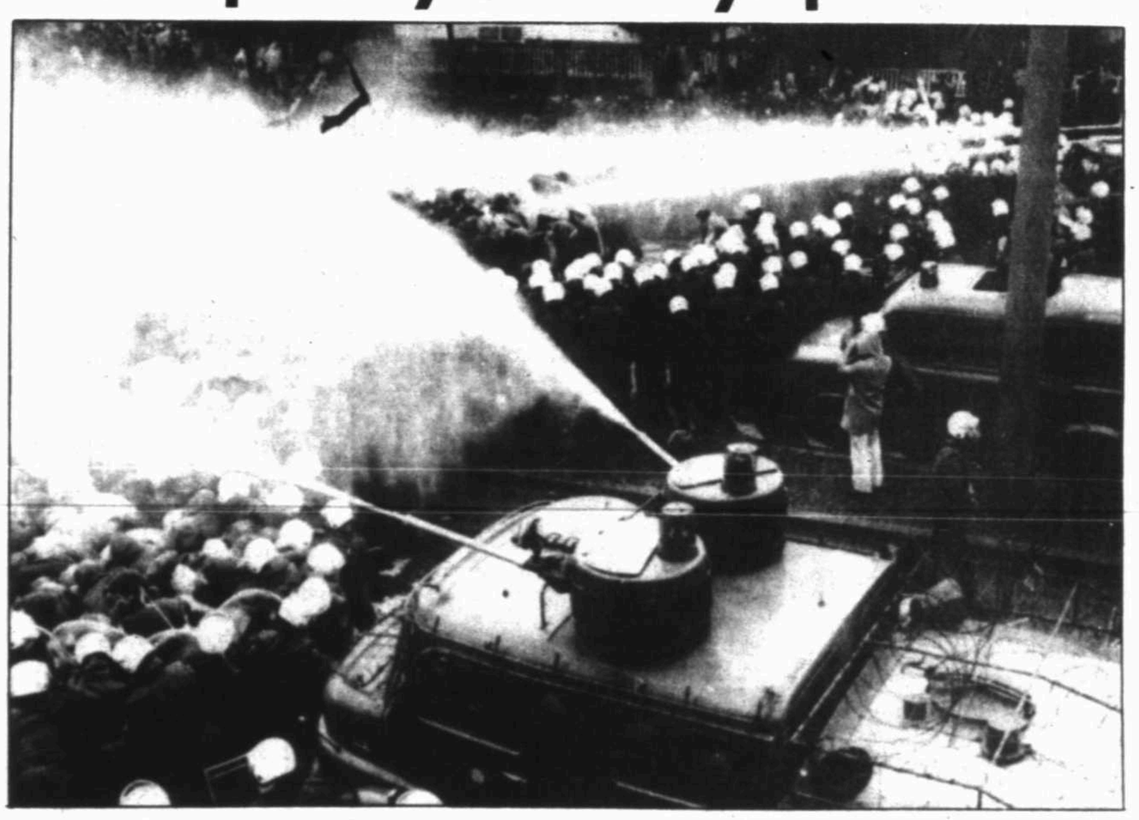

NATO plans to station 572 Pershing 2 and cruise nuclear missiles in Western Europe over the next five years, including 204 in West Germany, and says they will go into place unless Soviet and U.S. negotiators work out an agreement to limit nuclear arms.

Kohl's right-center coalition government has a 58-seat majority in Parliament, so the missile plan is expected to win endorsement in a vote Tuesday.

An hour into Kohl's address, a half dozen deputies of the small anti-NATO Greens faction stood up and walked toward the podium carrying large posters showing victims of the Hiroshima atomic bomb. Parliamentary President Rainer Barzel called for order and the deputies were herded back to their seats by guards.

Referring to U.S.-Soviet arms limitation talks in Geneva, Kohl appealed "anew to the Soviet leadership not to persist in rigid principles but rather to make a result possible."

Lady lands plane against 20,000-1 odds

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A 78-year-old woman with no flight training and "a dead man" beside her followed hand signals from other airplanes and instructions from the back seat to land a small plane safely against "20,000 to 1" odds, officials said.

"I sure had a mouthful of cotton when we got down, and I did an awful lot of praying," Edith Merrill said Sunday after landing the single-engine plane at Luke Air Force Base near Phoenix.

The trip began Sunday morning when Bruce Turner, 57, and his wife, Jane, 59, invited Mrs. Merrill and Dorothy Mathews, 65, to fly with them to breakfast in Sedona about 115 miles to the north.

Mrs. Merrill took the co-pilot's seat because, "I was very interested in looking at all the instruments and finding out what they were all about. I found out."

But Turner lost consciousness while piloting the plane. Mrs. Merrill said she was "panicked all the way through" but realized it was up to her since the plane's cockpit was so small she couldn't change seats in midflight.

"I had a dead man beside me and his wife in back of me with one hand on each shoulder," she said. "It was kind of hairy."

"The odds against successfully carrying out this operation are phenomenal, I'd say 20,000 to 1," said Jack Seeley, a Sedona flight instructor who helped guide the plane in. "I figured the best we'd get away with is that they'd bust it up, and we'd have some broken arms and legs and no one killed."

When her husband collapsed, Mrs. Turner made "a panicked plea for help" over the radio, said Lt. Col. Dalton Smith, chief of staff of the Arizona Wing of the Civil Air Patrol.

"Jane thought he had fallen asleep because he was tired, and she patted his face and tried to wake him up, but he did not wake up," Mrs. Merrill said.

But Turner, who had been taking medication for a heart ailment, was unconscious, and was pronounced dead at Luke base hospital, officials said. An autopsy was planned to determine the cause of death.

Mrs. Turner then leaned over her husband and operated the throttle and propeller control as Mrs. Merrill steered the plane.

Within three minutes, Capt. Forrest Kline of the Civil Air Patrol flew within sight of the women.

Edith Merrill

"It was very frightening, believe me," said Mrs. Turner, the only passenger with any flight training — six hours of a "pinch-hitter" course taken as a Valentine's Day gift for her husband. "It was a matter of survival."

Smith said Kline and air patrol Maj. Thomas O'Connell steered the women through a ragged turn to avoid nearby mountains.

"To put it in layman's terms, the feeling would have been like you were in a roller coaster that jumped the tracks, hurling through space without any control," O'Connell said.

Seeley heard about the incident and took off with Bob Baker, a retired American Airlines pilot.

"Jack...got them to settle down," O'Connell said.

Luke was chosen for an emergency landing because of its 10,000-foot-long, 150-foot-wide jet runways, emergency equipment and nearby hospital.

The base cleared the runways while Mrs. Merrill prayed as she made the final approach.

"I said, 'God help us, God help us,'" she said. "And Jane says, 'He's right at your shoulder.' And right about then we hit and we didn't bounce."

Seeley said, "I let out a blood-curdling scream that just about knocked Baker out of my plane. I'm amazed that we pulled it off."

Gunmen kill three in attack on Protestant church

DARKLEY, Northern Ireland (AP) — The killers who burst into a Protestant church and sprayed machine gun fire on hymn-singing worshipers Sunday night were linked to a guerrilla gang led by Ireland's most wanted gunman, police said.

Three church elders were killed and seven wounded when masked gunmen burst into the Mountain Lodge Pentecostal Church in Darkley, deep in a stronghold of the outlawed Irish Republican Army in County Armagh near the Irish border.

A police spokesman, who declined to be named, said an examination of the spent shell casings scattered around the bullet-riddled church showed they came from a weapon used in three attacks claimed by the Irish National Liberation Army, a Marxist offshoot of the mainly Roman Catholic IRA.

The spokesman linked the weapon to the murder of two police officers in Markethill, near Dalkey, a year ago and two ambushes on police patrols in Dungannon, County Tyrone, in May and August.

Police sources said Dominic McGlinchey, 29, an INLA leader, was involved in at least one of the Dungannon attacks. A senior officer said McGlinchey, known as "The Mad Dog" was wanted for "between 20 and 30 murders."

"This evidence puts the chicken home to roost where it belongs," he said.

An unknown group calling itself the Catholic Reaction Force claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement to Belfast news organizations.

But police suggested the name was a cover for the INLA, which like the IRA is fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite it with the Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

Police and troops today sealed off a 40-mile stretch of the border around Darkley as they searched for the gunmen. A full-scale manhunt was delayed until this morning because of fears of a night ambush by guerrillas.

The murders sent a wave of revulsion throughout Ulster and sparked fears of a new cycle of sectarian bloodshed. At least 17 people have been killed and scores wounded since Nov. 1, Northern Ireland's bloodiest month this year.

Cardinal Tomas O Fiaich, Roman Catholic primate of all Ireland, branded the attack "a direct attack on God."

The IRA issued a statement disavowing the "blatantly sectarian shooting" and saying its guerrilla attacks were targeted at British-operated security forces.

Church officials identified the dead men as Harold Brown, David Wilson and Victor Cunningham. The massacre raised the known death toll from 14 years of feuding between Protestant and Catholic extremists to at least 2,334.

A police spokesman in Belfast, Sgt. Cyril Davidson, said two of the elders handing out Bibles and welcoming late-comers at the door of the wooden church were killed as the gunmen stormed in, firing from the hip.

The third elder was cut down inside beside the wooden altar as the gunmen fired long bursts into the congregation, which included about two dozen children and a 7-month-old baby. Police said no children were hurt.

Blood-stained Bibles were strewn across the floor of the single-story building as the gunmen fled in a car driven by a third man, firing two more bursts through the church's thin walls, police said.

The Rev. Bob Raines, the church's pastor for 20 years, told reporters, "One man from the welcoming party ran into the hall, collapsed and died there on the floor. The two others died in the porchway."

Police sources said the attack may have been a reprisal for the Nov. 8 assassination of a Catholic, Adrian Carroll, 24, who was shot in the head on the doorstep of his home in nearby Armagh.

Responsibility for that killing was claimed by a shadowy extremist group called the Protestant Action Force, believed to be a cover name for the outlawed Ulster Volunteer Force.

Carroll's brother, Roddy, was killed along with another known INLA gunman at a police roadblock near Armagh last December.

The attack on the church in South Armagh "bandit country" three miles from the border with Ireland was condemned by church and political leaders on both sides of the border.

"To those who perpetrated this atrocity, I say 'don't dare to claim the name Catholic for your band of evildoers,'" O Fiach said.

Nuclear film shocks Denver family

DENVER (AP) — By the end they sat very still, the whole family, silently watching a man on his knees in the dusty, contaminated rubble of his house.

The Jeremy Shamos family, like millions of others, gathered Sunday in front of their TV to watch "The Day After," a graphic depiction of a nuclear strike on Kansas City and its devastating aftermath.

They began with popcorn and light jokes. They ended in silence.

And somewhere in between, somewhere among the images of nuclear desolation, it struck this American family that the horror of nuclear war is not that so many people would die — but that so many would live.

"It wasn't real until the end when the girl has no hair...and she was so pretty before," said 16-year-old Suki Shamos.

Her 13-year-old brother, Jeremy, agreed: "Even if you survive, how could you really live if your family is dying and your son is blind?"

Jeremy Shamos is 46, a lawyer with a neat salt-and-pepper beard, a lover of art, opera and the Denver Broncos football team. And on Sunday night he and his wife, Susan, and both children chose to watch ABC's television movie of "The Day After" as a family.

It was not a casual decision. Like many others, they had read the newspaper and magazine articles about its graphic nature, and the school had sent home a note recommending that children watch with their parents.

"Daddy, I have to sit with you, for your arm," said Suki, heading for the TV room.

The show began slowly. For nearly an hour the characters made themselves known: a doctor, a farmer, an airman, a young woman preparing for her wedding day.

Young Jeremy missed much of this. His youth choir had performed that day in Estes Park and he arrived home shortly before the missiles struck. He sank into a chair and took up what remained of the popcorn.

His father filled him in: a blockade of Berlin, Moscow evacuated.

On the screen bombers took off, and in the controlled frenzy of military control rooms, the locks were taken off controls to fire U.S. missiles.

"It's like the beginning of 'WarGames,'" said Suki, settled on the couch between her mother and father.

The beginning of the end came rapidly. The launching of Minuteman missiles on bright, white pillars of flame. A sudden flash and two slow, rising, dusk-red mushroom clouds. Cars stalled and lights gone out. Firestorms, the vaporization of people and buildings.

Finally, a vast and unutterable silence.

"Why does everything go off at once?" asked Suki. Her father explained the enormous disruption of a thermonuclear bomb's electromagnetic pulse.

Susan, at the end of the couch, pulled her legs under her. A farm girl on the TV screen was weeping in the storm cellar. The land was littered with dead cattle.

Jeremy put his arm around his son. "One thing that shocked me," he would say later, "was how close the (Minuteman missile) silos were to the farms. Somehow I hadn't expected that."

Survivors, irradiated and dying, gathered in the torchlight of gypsy camps. Thousands of the stunned and helpless filled a gymnasium floor in Lawrence, Kan.

Susan, her feet curled under her, looked into the blank and hopeless faces on the screen.

Outside, where a huge blue spruce stood sentinel, the Shamos' yard was silent and bright with snow. On screen, Jason Robards rummaged through the rubble of his home. His hair had fallen out and radiation sores marked his face.

In the last scene Robards, the surgeon, knelt with a stranger in the dust of his home.

Everybody at Denver Academy had been talking about "The Day After" all last week at school, and both Suki and Jeremy knew it would be a topic of discussion Monday morning. But now, in the numbing silence of the TV room, the whole family sought to make sense of what they had just seen. It was not easy.

Suki was stunned that "in 30 minutes what can happen. All of a sudden, everybody's car stops and people start dying and everything changes."

"It was real sad," said her brother, "to see the babies being born and the animals dying."

Both children looked at their father, as if for some clear answer, some easy solution. And there wasn't one.

"Clearly, it does make you want to do something to stop nuclear war," their father said. "But since it doesn't tell you what you should do, I'm just as baffled as before. What's the best way of avoiding this, whether a freeze or an adequate nuclear deterrent, I don't know. I wish I did."

Arms debate continues 'The Day After'

A hotline set up in Troy, N.Y., for people upset by the movie received several dozen calls, one from a 23-year-old woman who was "very distressed," said hotline spokeswoman Cathy Shea. "She was crying, having a very difficult time seeing the animals and children dying. She wanted to know was this what was going to happen if there was nuclear war."

"I think it is a disaster to show a film like that on American television," said retired Army Lt. Col. Gary Hartel, in Harvard, Mass. "It makes Americans fearful of standing up against the Soviets."

In an interview with ABC's Ted Koppel after the movie, Shultz said U.S. policy, "for decades now" has been "based on the idea that we simply do not accept a nuclear war, and we've been successful in preventing it."

The movie, Shultz said, "certainly dramatizes the unacceptability of nuclear war. It says to those who have criticized the president for seeking reductions, that really that is the sensible course to take, and what we should be doing is rallying around and supporting...trying to reduce the numbers of these weapons.

"Of course, to do so means that we have to persuade the Soviet Union to come down along with us."

In a panel discussion with Koppel, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger criticized it as "a simple-minded notion of the problem. Are we supposed to make policy by scaring ourselves to death?"

Former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara supported the showing of the movie, and said more could be done in arms negotiations than the Reagan administration is doing. "We've got to be more daring," he said.

"Some have voiced doubts about the president's commitment" to arms reduction, Vice President George Bush wrote in an article written for the Op-Ed page of The New York Times today. "I, who see him daily, know that it is deep, sincere and abiding."

Reagan previewed the film, but spokesman Larry Speakes declined to discuss the president's reaction.

Democratic presidential hopefuls George McGovern and Sen. Alan Cranston said they hoped the movie would spur a change in U.S. nuclear arms policy.

Cranston, who watched the film with 1,000 other people at Riverside Church in New York, said he hoped "the millions of Americans who watched will continue to demand that our country and the world change the direction we're heading."

McGovern, who saw the film in Ann Arbor, Mich., said he hoped it "moves us toward sanity. My only criticism of the film is that it implies that people will survive and be able to put civilization back together. They won't."

The commander in chief of the Strategic Air Command in Omaha, Neb., predicted the nation's strategic forces "will continue to prevent the horrors depicted" in the movie. That effort will continue, said Gen. Bennie L. Davis, "by keeping our nuclear adversaries convinced that we will meet their strength with our strength."

Viewers don't think film lived up to publicity

Several of those interviewed said they were aware of the movie and the controversy surrounding it, but decided against watching it. "We made a conscious decision not to," explained Midland homemaker Charlene Bunnell. She said her decision was based on a letter from Trinity School.

"I wouldn't watch it...I think it's a bunch of junk — a waste of film, a waste of people's time and a waste of trying to make people scared," said Mrs. John Nelson, 401 E. Wadley, adding she isn't afraid of nuclear war because "I'm a born-again Christian and I won't be here when it happens."

Other reactions were favorable. "I think it was good as far as it went," asserted Mark Lindsey, manager of the Fraternal Order of Eagles club in Midland. "I think you need to go a little farther and show a little more to wake American people up. I think it was a step in the right direction."

"I liked it," said Leslie McDaniel of the Suicide Prevention Center in Odessa. "I think it probably was realistic." While she had taken no calls related to the show, Ms. McDaniel said that she had not checked the with the group's answering service.

"It was a good show," said Donna Rodriguez of Odessa, adding that she felt the portrayal was realistic.

Still others were indifferent. Mrs. Kenneth Williams said no one watched it at her home. "My husband slept through it while I read. I felt like they had too much publicity and I didn't really want to watch it."

Carol McDonald, 2206 Wydewood, said she was "not surprised...because of the other movies, books and eduation I've had about atomic warfare."

Charles Mason, a Vietnam veteran visiting in Midland, said, "I went through that type of thing in the service. I was more or less prepared because we saw films like that in boot camp."

He added that he and his younger brother, also a Vietnam veteran, had "very little reaction to the film because we both knew the effects of nuclear war. I do think about it quite a lot but, sadly but true, I'm not scared about it."

"I can only sum it up in one way," commented Pat Terk, an Odessa homemaker, "You're just as dead with a conventional weapon as an atomic weapon."

"It's possible. It could happen," said John Smith of Cable Television West of Odessa, "It was unbelievable the way things keeled over and the way people acted after it happened."

"I sort of agree with what Kissinger and some of the others said about reducing arms rather than showing what's going to happen," said Debbie Green of Bill Rogers Trucking Co. in Odessa, "I'm sure the show was not near as bad as it would be."

Of the 15 Odessans contacted, 10 had not seen the show.

Of the 17 Midlanders contacted, six had not seen it.

Winter dumps snow on West; More forecast

By The Associated Press

Winter roared into the West a month early, leaving over a foot of snow in Nevada and Utah today and blasting Arizona with 70 mph winds, while the South reeled from tornadoes and lightning-laced storms that left at least three people dead.

In Pennsylvania, six other people died when their twin-engine plane lost power and slammed into a hillside during a rainstorm Sunday night, officials said. The cause of the crash had not been determined.

Winter storm watches were in effect throughout the West today as snow continued to fall in Nevada, Utah, Arizona and Colorado.

In the central mountains of Arizona, the state Department of Public Safety on Sunday reported winds gusting up to 70 mph, ice-slick roads and visibility reduced by blowing snow. Forecasters predicted up to 10 inches of new snow by Tuesday.

The South and Midwest were battered Sunday by twisters, high winds and drenching thunderstorms that demolished homes and knocked out power to thousands of residents.

One person died when he was hit by a bolt of lightning, another was electrocuted by a downed power line and a Boy Scout trying to clear a road died when he was hit by a truck.

In Utah, the National Weather Service reported that a major winter storm developed overnight, with snow falling across most of the state. Ski resorts at Alta and Snowbird reported 16 inches of new snow Sunday, and more was dropping early today.

One to two feet of snow fell in the Sierra Nevadas around Lake Tahoe, Nev., the National Weather Service reported.

A travelers' advisory was in effect today in the Colorado Rockies, where up to 7 inches of snow was predicted. Significant snowfall was anticipated in the mountains through Tuesday, when a slow-moving cold front was expected to move east over the foothills and eastern Plains.

A winter storm watch was also posted today for central and southeastern Wyoming.

In Florida on Sunday, more than 15 mobile homes were damaged and several carports destroyed when a tornado touched down at an Ormond Beach trailer park, scattering debris for a quarter-mile, officials said.

Another tornado damaged six houses and downed power lines and trees in northwestern Bay County, about 15 miles north of Panama City Beach, causing at least $15,000 in damage, said sheriff's Lt. John Davis.

High wind, hail and twisters also moved across Louisiana over the weekend, and authorities in Lincoln Parish said a home near Dubach was demolished by a tornado, leaving 12 occupants huddled safely in the rain.

"It was hard to look at that house and believe they all got out safe," said Lincoln Parish Sheriff Wayne Houck.

A sheriff's office spokesman in East Carroll Parish, La., said a man was killed near Lake Providence when lightning struck him as he stepped out of a truck.

Officials said the Federal Aviation Administration would investigate the crash of a small plane in western Pennsylvania during a rainstorm Sunday night. The plane was en route from Plattsburgh, N.Y., to Youngstown, Ohio, said officials in Franklin, Pa.

Winds up to 53 mph, rain and what witnesses called a funnel cloud slashed through a shopping mall in Lafayette, Ind., heavily damaging two stores and several nearby homes and apartment buildings. No serious injuries were reported.

In Michigan, winds up to 80 mph lashed Ottawa County in the western part of the state, leaving behind an estimated $100,000 in property damage and knocking out power to more than 500 residents for more than two hours.

Riot police spray German protesters with water

Kohl accused the Soviets of trying to pressure West Germany into abandoning the North Atlantic Treaty Organization deployment decision, but said he would never bow to threats.

"Whoever knuckles under to the pressure of a dictatorship because he does not stand up to its power always encourages new extortion and use of force. No democratic politician can allow himself to get into the position of not being able to decide freely," Kohl said.

The government announced Sunday that Kohl had received a letter from Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov.

Chancellery spokesman Alexander Allardt declined to reveal what Andropov said in the letter. But the conservative Hamburg newspaper Bild am Sonntag said the Soviet leader warned that West Germany must be prepared to "take the consequences" if it goes through with the missile deployment.

The first battery of Pershing 2 missiles could be placed in West Germany as early as Wednesday. There have been indications both from the West and from Moscow that the Soviets may walk out of the U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile talks in Geneva once the first Pershings are deployed.

Kohl wrote to Andropov on Oct. 29 to ask that the Soviets make a new proposal at the Geneva talks, which are scheduled to resume Wednesday.

Kohl has said that the Parliament's 1981 approval of the deployment was sufficient and that the new vote is not necessary. But there were so many calls in Parliament for another debate and vote that Kohl finally agreed to submit his government's missile policy for a last stamp of approval.

At a Social Democratic conference Saturday, the opposition party voted to reject the missiles, over the protests of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. He argued that the new deployment was the best way to convince the Soviet Union to stop what he called "one-sided, unprovoked armament."

Schmidt, who headed a coalition government from 1974 until late 1982, was one of the architects of the 1979 NATO plan to counter Soviet medium-range missiles.

Today, the Soviet Union, in a report in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, applauded the Social Democrats' vote and denounced Schmidt for supporting the deployment.

Polls have shown consistently that two out of three West Germans oppose the deployment, and 1 million protesters demonstrated against the missiles in West Germany last month.

In Duesseldorf, an explosion smashed windows of state police headquarters Sunday and another bomb was defused in front of an American company. Police did not rule out political motives and refused to identify the American company. There were no injuries.

Israel may consider further extraditon attempts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's first effort to extradite an accused Nazi war criminal from this country may open the door for speedier ouster of other alleged Nazis now in the United States.

A federal court in Cleveland will hold a hearing Jan. 23 on Israel's request to extradite 63-year-old retired autoworker John Demjanjuk for trial on charges of killing tens of thousands of Jews at the Nazi death camp in Treblinka, Poland.

Meantime, Israel is weighing whether to request extradition of Bishop Valerian Trifa, according to Neal Sher, director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations. Sher said he discussed the Trifa case and others with Israeli officials on a visit to Israel last summer.

The Israeli request for Demjanjuk last week "certainly marks a new dimension for us. We're going to push the extradition vigorously," Sher said in an interview Sunday.

Trifa, a Romanian Orthodox archbishop in Detroit and a former leader in Romania's Iron Guard, which worked with the Nazis during World War II, surrendered his citizenship and agreed to deportation in 1980.

Sher said Trifa asked to be sent to Switzerland but the Swiss refused to take him. The U.S. government asked West Germany to take him "because the Nazis took him...to Germany during the war when he was wanted in Romania. But the West Germans declined to accept Trifa; they are willing to accept only people who are German nationals."

Rebels fight their way to PLO camp edge

TRIPOLI, Lebanon (AP) — Palestinian rebels using Syrian-supplied tanks seized the northern entrance of Tripoli today and battled to within 1,000 yards of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's headquarters.

The overnight push, accompanied by heavy artillery bombardment on central areas of Tripoli, severed Arafat's supply lines with his Palestine Liberation Organization loyalists fighting the rebels at the southern edge of the Baddawi refugee camp.

Arafat, meeting with reporters at his headquarters, said the rebel forces for the first time had crossed into areas of the city that had been controlled by Lebanese authorities.There was a lull in the fighting, and Arafat was asked if a cease-fire had been declared.

"No ceasefire, no ceasefire," he said, "They want to invade the city, they want to control the city.

As the rebels closed in on Tripoli from the north and east, residents were fleeing toward Beirut, 50 miles to the south.Cars packed with suitcases, plastic bags and mattresses sped out of the port city.

The rebels pushed into the Mallouleh traffic circle that forms the northern entrance to Tripoli in T-54 and T-55 tanks. They set up mortars and multiple rocket launchers on the roofs of highrise apartment buildings overlooking the circle.

Mallouleh is about 1,000 yards from Arafat's headquarters in Tripoli's Zahrieh neighborhood. Lebanon's state radio said the rebels mounted hit-and-run grenade attacks on Arafat's defense line in and around Zahrieh.

"Fighting was fierce," said Arafat. "They used all their artillery and cannons and pushed some tanks to these areas, trying to advance to the city."

The rebels are demanding that Arafat leave Tripoli, Lebanon's second largest city, as a precondition for a cease-fire. But Arafat has said he would not leave unless he receives guarantees for the safety of his loyalists and his local Lebanese militia allies.

In Israel, meanwhile, the government warned it was prepared to stage more retaliatory raids.

Army nurse recalls years as Japanese war prisoner

state

JEFFERSON (AP) — Retired Lt. Col. Hattie R. Brantley joined the Army Nurse Corps in 1939 because she "wanted to travel and see the world."

She got her wish, but not until she had spent almost three years as a Japanese war prisoner.

Stationed on Luzon, the largest island in the Philippines, Miss Brantley was among a group of nurses who lived from May 1942 until February 1945 in a civilian prison camp.

More than 40 years later, the Jefferson native recalled the start of her years in captivity.

The day she learned the Japanese had bombed Pearl Harbor, Miss Brantley spent the morning on a golf course.

"Our chief nurse said, 'Now girls, things will be all right. The Japs will never bother us.' A friend and I went out and played nine holes of golf," she said.

Luzon was bombed about noon.

"I don't believe anybody believed war would come," Miss Brantley said. "Certainly not young nurses enjoying a tropical duty.

"The word was 'unprepared.' Nobody recognized the war clouds. They did, but they didn't face reality."

By Christmas Miss Brantley and the others were retreating from the north end of Luzon to the southwestern Bataan Peninsula where they set up field hospitals.

Daily bombings and constant artillery fire became routine. Instead of treating malaria and tropical infections, the nurses found themselves faced with critically wounded soldiers.

Despite faulty ammunition and the unexpected attack, U.S. troops managed to hold off the Japanese for five months, Miss Brantley said.

"We did it with blood and guts," she said. "It was a question of sheer courage."

On April 9, 1941, the troops surrendered. Miss Brantley and the nurses were evacuated the night before to the nearby rock island of Corregidor, but the troops remained.

About 10,000 U.S. troops and thousands of Philippines were forced to head north to a prison camp. Hundreds died in the 60-mile death march to the camp, Miss Brantley said.

The men were weak from living on half rations since January. Many were sick with malaria and dysentery, but their Japanese captors forced them to march continuously.

"They marched without food, water or rest," Miss Brantley said. "If someone fell by the wayside, they bayonetted them."

The nurses remained on Corregidor until May 6, when the troops there surrendered. This time the nurses were taken east to a civilian prison camp in Manila.

The camp was on the Santo Tomas University campus and the other prisoners included businessmen, professors, teachers and their families.

The 50-acre campus was enclosed by a brick and wrought-iron fence, which prevented people from seeing in or out. The prisoners were forced to bow to the Japanese guards.

Living quarters were dirty and food and medical supplies scarce. A typical morning meal was watered-down coconut milk and worm-infested cornmeal mush. Supper usually consisted of rice and a thin stew.

Occasionally the internees were given bananas or native citrus fruit. Toward the end, Miss Brantley estimated the daily food intake at 500 calories per person.

During the first year of her imprisonment, Miss Brantley was listed as missing in action. Her family didn't know if she was dead or alive.

In August 1944, the prisoners finally received mail from home. Miss Brantley received a Christmas card from her mother in September. She learned her father had died in August 1943.

Although they were prisoners, Miss Brantley said she and the others were not afraid of being killed. At least, she recalled, there was no bombing in Manila.

Protesters make plans for Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Representatives of anti-Reagan groups from 26 states gathered in Dallas over the weekend to plan "creative civil disobedience" at the Republican National Convention next year.

The 45 organizers who completed a three-day conference Sunday predicted that at least 30,000 and as many as 250,000 protesters would be in Dallas during the August convention.

The organizers said some of the acts they called "creative civil disobedience" would include:

— The dumping of two truckloads of lead-contaminated soil from a West Dallas neighborhood on the grounds of the Dallas Convention Center to dramatize chemical waste contamination.

— The planting of small white crosses to symbolize killings in El Salvador.

— Lying down in roadways to prohibit access to the convention.

— Decorating cars with papier-mache "missiles" and driving them around the convention center to protest deployment of medium-range missiles in Europe and nuclear war.

— "Nothing-a-plate school lunches" including ketchup and relish, which the Reagan administration argued at one point should be considered vegetables, as a counterpoint to the lavish fund-raisers planned for the convention.

City officials remained skeptical that many protesters would show up for the convention, saying there had been no indication that any significant number will come.

Less than a quarter of the 200 people predicted for the planning conference attended the sessions, which were held at a South Dallas warehouse.

"When the city invites Republicans, it can't be so naive to think they aren't inviting protesters," said Ben Masel, a representative of the Wisconsin Marijuana Political Action Committee.

"People are already motivated," said John Adams, a member of the Youth International Party — Yippies — from Arkansas. "The thing is to convince them why Dallas is important."

The planners said their job was to convince groups ranging from anti-war to pro gay rights that the convention should be a focus of a coordinated protest against President Reagan.

"All those afflicted by Reagan's politics should come here," said Hans Georg Behr, a member of West German's Green Party. "No one should say, 'I had the chance to protest and I didn't do it.'"

Behr said his group, which helped organize recent anti-war protests in Europe, would "take an active role" in the Dallas protests and said simultaneous protests would be held in Europe.

Also sharing your birthday: tennis great Billie Jean King, actor Robert Vaughn and comedian Rodney Dangerfield. Forget about past mistakes and look to the future. A new job becomes yours by accident. Do what you know to be right. You need not justify your actions. Romance is often memorable. Make a special effort to keep a love relationship from growing stale.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You cannot afford to be sidetracked by petty disputes. Deal with unpleasant matters as they arise. Travel could change your mind about wanting to move. Do not overanalyze someone's actions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your words become more powerful when followed up by decisive action. Be very political when handling a challenge from a group of people who work behind the scenes. Protest unequal treatment in business.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Children need a sympathetic ear, not lectures. A bold approach helps you win a new job or contract. Sudden acceptance by a previously indifferent group should give you pause.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not hurry a project. Quality, not speed, is what counts. Pay attention to good friends. They truly want to help you. Long-distance communications boost business profits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel arrangements should be reconfirmed. A mistake could prove both embarrassing and costly. Wealth does not guarantee success. A long-distance romance is frustrating but very worthwhile. You regain something that was lost.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New financial conditions relieve much of the tension that has caused trouble at home. A salary increase is likely. Loved one needs reassurance. Hide your emotions from someone who does not understand.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An unusual job offers you a rare opportunity in a completely new field. Merge old ideas with fresh ones. A date could introduce you to the ideal companion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pleasure trips prove fabulously lucky. Do not discuss your personal life with a stranger. Loved one's confidence spurs you on to greater heights. Your appearance influences your level of success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend shows true loyalty. Those who try to hide something will be found out. Keep your business dealings strictly aboveboard. Romance benefits from the suspense a phone call creates.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Not a good time to start new career ventures. Wait until early in the new year. Passion returns to make love strong again. Gossip is not worth repeating.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be a bit vague when describing a new product or service. You must be sure of your listener's loyalty before going into detail. Others sense you will get the job done.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not ignore your intuition just because you do not want to believe it. A disappointment can be turned into a plus. A phone call ignites a fiery romance.

Short story to be told on radio

NEW YORK (AP) — Over the frightened protestations of his innocent and pink-beribboned wife, Faith, Young Goodman Brown insists upon a nighttime journey through the woods. It's sundown on the Sabbath, in colonial Massachusetts.

And what he encounters in the darkened forest is enough to shake his ... faith:

"Is that the deacon over there, with one of the girls of doubtful reputation who frequent the tavern more than is good for them? And is that not the goodly reverend there, cavorting with those savage Indians? Have they all gone mad?"

The scene is from a new production of Nathaniel Hawthorne's short story, "Young Goodman Brown," to be broadcast Saturday on the American Public Radio Network.

The program is the sixth this season in "The Spider's Web" radio-drama series. The focus for the show is on classics of 19th-century American literature, and O. Henry's "The Cop and the Anthem" follows "Young Goodman Brown" on Sunday, with "Little Women" by Louisa May Alcott scheduled for broadcast in eight parts over four weekends in December.

In "Young Goodman Brown," Our Hero knows it's wrong to leave his "dear and innocent" wife, who pleads, "Prithy, put off your journey ... tonight."

"A wretch am I," he says to himself, "to leave her on such an errand. ... After this one night, I'll cling to her skirts and follow her to heaven."

Not far into the forest, Young Goodman bumps into the Devil, who declares:

"Wickedness or not, I have a very general acquaintence here in New England. The deacons of many a church have drunk the communion wine with me. The selectmen of the towns make me their chairman. A majority of the great and general court are firm supporters of my interests. The governor and I, too ... but these are state secrets."

Young Goodman, pious to a fault, can't believe what he has heard. Too bad for him, it gets worse — much wOrse.

"Oh, my Faith is gone," he is inclined to wail before long. Or is it faith, in the lower case?

The dialogue sounds rather dated, and it is — presumably true to the original. Hawthorne died in 1864.

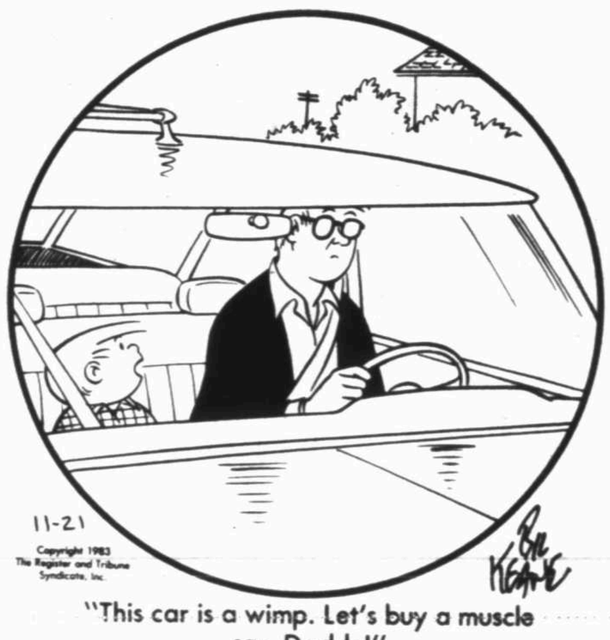

Daniel Earnshaw plays the lead in this superior production, with Ginny Mazur as Faith and John Drabik as the Devil.

Everett Frost, a professor of English at California State University at Fresno, is executive producer of "The Spider's Web," now in its 13th season on public radio.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠62 ♡987 ◇AK8 ♣A8643
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You are about to get rich. Double. From the auction you know that your partner cannot have more than one club, and is probably void. You intend leading the ace of clubs and giving your partner a ruff, getting back with the king of diamonds and giving partner another ruff. On a good day, the ace of diamonds will be an entry for a third club ruff.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠98742 ♡10653 ◇J98 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	1 ◇
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With his cue-bid of the enemy suit, partner has shown a hand just about good enough for game. Actually, you have a pretty fair hand for him—it is only a question of which major to bid. Why guess? Cue-bid three diamonds and let partner make the choice.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q98 ♡AK872 ◇853 ♣K6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a hand worth an opening bid facing a partner who has opened and then jumped. Ergo, you are in slam territory. It is a close decision between a bid of five hearts or four spades. We slightly prefer the latter, since it will give partner a better idea of the trick-taking potential of the hand.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ10762 ◇AK85 ♣AJ10
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	Dble	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—There are times when, with a six-card major, a void in the enemy suit and a good hand, we will be inclined to override partner's low-level penalty double. This is not one of those occasions. Partner is probably short in spades, and our suit is not good enough to play in game opposite a possible singleton or void. We have considerable defensive strength so, despite our void in the enemy suit, we pass.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K107 ♡8 ◇AK72 ♣AQJ62
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Dble
Pass	4 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—It is tempting to look for slam, but that course is fraught with danger. Partner had other options he could have exercised with a good hand. It is quite likely that he has a long spade suit and little else. At best, slam will depend on a finesse. At worst, you will have no play for five spades. Pass.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K9 ♡AQ ◇AKJ93 ♣10762
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—You have a perfectly normal one no trump overcall, so go ahead and make it. You can't double because of your spade shortage, and to overcall two diamonds does not do justice to your fine hand.

Midlanders care

When the last dollar had been counted from this year's United Way campaign in Midland, directors beamed with pride because the goal had been reached. But that isn't the whole story.

Of the 27 United Way organizations in Texas, Midland's agency was number one in per capita giving. But how much could individuals and corporations be asked to give in an economic time plagued with uncertainty?

As they first debated the 1983 goal, United Way directors talked of setting it just at the amount of money raised during the preceding year's campaign. Then they even talked of setting the goal lower than the amount raised that year.

Finally, though, they decided to set the goal 12 percent above the goal for 1982. They did ... and then went to work.

It wasn't easy. As they suspected, the economy prevented some individuals and corporations from giving as they had in the past, but hard work and diligence — and the caring spirit of a community of selfless people — resulted in the United Way not only reaching the goal but exceeding it by some $100,000.

Ironically, the sum raised in this year's campaign in Midland actually exceeded sums raised in other, larger cities. Of course there will be some who will say that because Midland's populace is more affluent than those in other communities, we have a civic responsibility to give more.

Now we can say truthfully, "We do."

Losing a battle

The United States has lost another battle at the Paris assembly of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The single American vote was the only one cast against a $13 million increase in UNESCO's budget, bringing it to $374.4 million. A whopping 126 votes were on the other side.

These figures, 126 and 1, raise serious questions about the wisdom of continuing to give financial assistance to UNESCO. The United States now provides 25 percent of the total. A number of other nations, including Britain, Germany, Holland and Israel, wanted a freeze on UNESCO spending, but abstained in the final voting. In the end the 126 carried the day, which prompted the United States Ambassador to UNESCO, Jean Gerard, to say:

"We must say to the majority of countries that if they want our money they must at least listen to our arguments."

The budget is not the only bone of contention. Freedom of the press is another. Although the clamor for a politically controlled press has been somewhat muted in Paris, the effort continues to create a "new world information order," which when stripped of this fancy phrase means censorship.

With moves such as that afoot, the United States will gladly stay on the losing side while it fights to win the war.

Another View:

A week in the Orient

To the extent that personal diplomacy between heads of friendly governments — especially those that are military allies — is a valuable foreign policy tool, President Reagan's visit to Japan and South Korea a few days ago can be viewed as a success. This country's Far Eastern allies often feel the need for reassurance that the United States stands behind them. Although one might quibble with the prudence of the gesture, given the hair-trigger tension along the DMZ and North Korea's apparent responsibility for the recent murder, in Burma, of several South Korean Cabinet ministers, nothing could have symbolized such a commitment more than the president's dramatic visit to one of the world's most dangerous frontiers — the demilitarized zone separating the two Koreas.

Mr. Reagan made other reassuring gestures in his private meetings with Japanese and South Korean leaders, and in speeches to the parliaments of both countries. Among other things, his presence may be of benefit to Japanese Prime Minister Nakasone in parliamentary elections next month. Korean President Chun has no such inconvenient domestic electoral problems, and the mild pressure exerted by the administration on the question of Chun's treatment of political dissidents resulted in no more than an oblique commitment in the joint communique at the end of the visit to the importance of "defending and strengthening freedom and the institutions that serve freedom, openness and political stability." (Meager as that is, though, it was more than Jimmy Carter was able to coax from Chun's late predecessor, Park Chung Hee.)

On specific issues, nothing substantive was expected to result from Mr. Reagan's meetings with Nakasone. Trade relations between the two countries remain difficult, with this year's U.S. trade deficit with Japan expected to exceed $20 billion. Moreover, the scope of Japan's future role in defending itself, and the region, has yet to be worked out. Because of these lingering problems, the warm glow left by the president's visit and the warm personal relations he apparently has with Nakasone must ultimately give way to hard government-to-government negotiations whose success is by no means assured.

Nor should the president allow his recent foreign policy successes — if his rise in domestic popularity in the wake of the Granada invasion can be called a success — to blind him to the fact that the really difficult issues abroad are as far from resolution as ever — the Middle East, Central America, arms control and the broader range of relations with the Soviet Union, not to mention our increasingly restive allies in Western Europe. Mr. Reagan will need more than his personal charm, and his remarkable luck, to guide this country through a minefield of international issues whose outcome literally could determine the fate of the planet.

HUSTLER OF THE MONTH

CHARLEY REESE

Kennedy's Camelot didn't exist

The 20th anniversary of the tragic murder of President John Kennedy was commercially exploited by the communications industry. It was one of those vulture-like touches that help put us two points below Congress in public esteem.

Charley Reese

As an antidote to the nostalgic goo, I would like to remind you that, for all his charm, Kennedy was an inept President who made several dangerous and damaging blunders.

The Bay of Pigs was a disaster. Kennedy let his Ivy League let's-play-spy boys poorly plan and badly botch an invasion of Cuba. Then he betrayed the brave Cubans who had landed on the beach by denying them air support which had been promised. Without air support, even an ROTC freshmen, would know such a landing must fail.

He compounded this national disaster and international embarrassment by succumbing to Fidel Castro's blackmail and buying the freedom of the men his own failure of nerve had put in Castro's prisons.

Kennedy, until he was supercededby Jimmy Carter, was the most ill-prepared man ever to reach the White House. He was a playboy with a not very impressive record in the Senate.

Kennedy's next major blunder was withdrawing U.S. support from Laos. This naturally opened up the soon to be famous Ho Chi Minh trail into South Vietnam as well as betraying the brave Laotians who had risked their lives, at our request, to fight the Pathet Lao.

Kennedy then condoned the coup which murdered President Ngo Diem and delivered South Vietnam into chaos. Diem's principal sin was that he was adamant about keeping U.S. troops out of south Vietnam. Kennedy put 16,000 troops into South Vietnam.

When the soviet Union built the infamous Berlin Wall in blatant violation of the Four-Power Agreement, Kennedy blustered, ordered a partial mobilization, and then watched them build it.

Even the Cuban missile crisis, which Kennedy myth-makers have painted as a victory, was a blunder tarnished with partisanship.

In the first place, the Soviets would not have put the missiles in Cuba if Kennedy had not shown such mind-boggling weakness. It's no surprise they thought they could get away with it — and in fact they virtually did.

Knowledge of the missiles surfaced in the summer but Kennedy saved the crisis until the eve of the Congressional elections. His demands for on-site inspections ended up being reduced to taking aerial photos of something under canvas in exchange for repeal of the Monroe Doctrine.

The Russians may or may not have removed the missiles but in exchange Kennedy promised to protect their client, Fidel Castro, from the Cuban people. He also dismantled U.S. intermediate range missiles in Turkey and Europe. To this day, the FBI and CIA spy on and occasionally arrest free Cubans opposed to Castro.

Cuba has naturally become a Soviet fortress anchored 90 miles off our coast and bristling with offensive weapons. Today it would require the equivalent of an Okinawa campaign to remove this threat from our underbelly.

Kennedy also muzzled the American military on the advice of UAW Chief, Walter Reuther, and forbad them from talking about how bad Communism is.

It's no wonder the Ivy League sycophants who surrounded Kennedy have spent the last 20 years creating the myth of Camelot. It was not Camelot. It was the Peter Principle — a group of men propelled to their highest level of incompetence and led by a rich playboy who posed as a family man while pursuing every girl in sight.

The postwar decline of the United States began with the inauguration of John Kennedy. I'm as sad as anyone that he was murdered by a little Marxist twit, probably on orders of the Soviet Union, but let's not rewrite history in our sadness.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

DeLorean 'bait' for bigger game

WASHINGTON — Government documents in the John DeLorean case show that the Justice Department's undercover "sting" operators had a compelling reason to keep the automaker from pulling out of a cocaine distribution deal. If DeLorean had backed out, it could have jeopardized the G-men's case against a major drug trafficker they had been pursuing for months.

Jack Anderson

DeLorean claims he stayed in the cocaine deal only because of threats against his daughter by the government's chief informer, James T. Hoffman. I have little sympathy for DeLorean, but it would be illegal for the government to coerce anyone into committing a crime. A taped conversation, not yet scientifically authenticated, suggests this may have happened. Other circumstances also support DeLorean's claim.

Still other documents and tapes reviewed by my associates Tony Capaccio and Indy Badhwar explain why the government undercover agents might have been desperate to keep DeLorean in the case: The big fish they'd been playing so carefully, drug trafficker William Morgan Hetrick, might have pulled out of his part in the transaction, too.

Originally, the sting operations against DeLorean and Hetrick had "proceeded on separate and unrelated tracks," according to one government document. But in August 1982, "it became apparent that since DeLorean was looking for narcotics, while Hetrick was offering to provide cocaine, the investigation could be conveniently combined."

This joint "sting" operation began with a secret government videotape of a conversation on Sept. 14, 1982, between Hetrick and an FBI undercover agent involved in both investigations. He was known as James Benedict.

The undercover agent tried to rope Hetrick into the DeLorean deal. "Apparently DeLorean approached Hoffman," Benedict said. "He knows Jim (Hoffman) is in the dope business and said, 'Here's what I need.'"

Hetrick was reluctant to deal with Hoffman, however, explaining that Hoffman had once cheated him out of $10,000:

"Jim Hoffman victimized me for his personal gain. Therefore, how can I trust him? To put it bluntly, I think he'd (expletive) his mother if he'd get a quarter for it.

"He's just not a trustworthy type .... He's got talent. I've seen it. He can sell ice to the Eskimos ... (but) with him you always got to watch your back."

So Hetrick demanded payment in advance of the $2 million DeLorean supposedly had raised for the cocaine deal. Benedict said it was supposed to be delivered the next day, Sept. 15, 1982.

Besides untrustworthy associates, Hetrick voiced another complaint about the professional dope dealer. "Reagan's drying things up," he said, mentioning the government's use of ships, helicopters and radar to track drug smugglers.

"It's heavy," he complained. "Their apprehension rate after detection by the radar ships is 100 percent."

Hetrick was also leery of Benedict's offer of stock in the U.S. distributing company for DeLorean's Northern Ireland-made sports car. "People are staying away (from the car) by the thousands," Hetrick said. "And I can see some reasons. The Irish are better at making whiskey and digging potatoes than building cars. Every one of them I've seen looks like s—."

Hetrick then expressed doubt that Hoffman had a distribution ring for the cocaine. "We've got real problems if after all the risk Hoffman can sell three ounces to a couple of friends," he groused.

Eventually, Hetrick did agree to provide cocaine to DeLorean. He was indicted with DeLorean and has since pleaded guilty.

BOONDOGGLE OF THE WEEK: The Office of Management and Budget whacks away at other agencies' spending proposals with a meat ax, but it apparently won't use so much as a cheese parer when one of its own pet programs is involved. Take "Reform '88," described by OMB as a bold initiative to streamline government operations in the name of economy.

To save members of Congress and editorial writers the time and effort of making up their own minds on the subject, OMB flacks have been cranking out ready-made press releases for the lawmakers and editorials for the opinion merchants, extolling the wonders of Reform '88 and pledging support for it. All the recipient has to do is fill in the appropriate blanks.

OMB might start saving money under Reform '88 by halting the propaganda.

INSIDE REPORT:

Choice of Shultz shows concern

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's selection of Secretary of State George Shultz to respond to "The Day After" shows the depth of administration concern over public reaction to the ABC anti-nuclear film.

Rowland Evans

The administration's calm public posture is exemplified by Reagan pollster Richard Wirthlin. After viewing the film several times, he said it was something everybody should watch. In fact, the president and his men are worried about the political impact of the emotionally-draining film on public support for nuclear deterrence.

Robert Novak

Shultz was picked by Reagan to explain the necessity of deterrence on Ted Koppel's ABC panel show following "The Day After." But White House aides insisted that Shultz appear first — and he will do so from his living room at home — and that he appear alone.

JEANE FOR OAS?

Friends of Jeane Kirkpatrick, who know that she will quit as ambassador to the United Nations after the current General Assembly session, are trying to keep her in the Reagan Cabinet as U.S. representative to the Organization of American States (OAS).

That would satisfy Kirkpatrick's complaints about the horrors of commuting between New York and Washington. It also would be a bell-ringer in Latin America, where she is the favorite American diplomat.

Actually, the OAS job is a middle-level post not close to Cabinet status. But by so elevating it with a stroke of the pen, President Reagan could with a single action satisfy Kirkpatrick and place a higher priority on Western Hemisphere affairs.

JESSE'S ANGER

Jesse Jackson exploded in anger when a nationally- known Democratic operative informed him of reports that a deal had been cut for his eventual support of Walter F. Mondale for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Word is circulating in the black community that hands have been shaken between the Mondale and Jackson camps for a future alliance. Besides angering Jackson, such talk undercuts his credibility as a presidential candidate.

A footnote: Although most elected black officials support either Mondale or Jackson, Sen. John Glenn may soon make a bid for backing from Chicago's Mayor Harold Washington. Never enthusiastic about the Jackson candidacy, Washington is not pleased that his enemies in the city's regular Democratic organization are all backing Mondale.

CHAOS IN CONNECTICUT

Having won control over Ronald Reagan's re-election effort in Connecticut, liberal Sen. Lowell Weicker is now barring enemies — including some of the president's best friends in the state — from the campaign.

That includes anybody who participated on behalf of Prescott Bush, the vice president's brother, in his aborted campaign against Weicker's re-election to the Senate last year. It also includes conservative Republicans who ran Reagan's Connecticut campaigns in 1976 and 1980.

Apart from ideology, Weicker's ambitions to run for governor in 1986 may be at the root of his exclusionary tactics. He does not want the Reagan campaign to build up such potential rivals as former state senator Gerald Labriola, the party's nominee for lieutenant governor last year.

GLENN SPREADS OUT

Eyebrows were raised last week when lobbyist Robert Keefe, who has taken operating control of Sen. John Glenn's presidential campaign, was seen dining in a downtown restauant with pollster Patrick Caddell.

Until recently, Caddell had been active in seeking an alternative to both Walter F. Mondale and Glenn and was a key force in the brief boomlet for Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas. But Caddell, who never has kept secret his low regard for Mondale, might now consider Glenn as the only substitute to the front-running former vice president.

Keefe's meeting with Caddell is part of his effort to broaden political advice for the struggling Glenn campaign. He also conferred last week with former Democratic national chairman Robert Strauss, who is neutral, and West Coast political consultant Joe Cerrell, who organized a California swing for Glenn last January but has been ignored since then.

Search for missing teen-agers turns up shredded bits of cloth

PLEASANT HILL, Iowa (AP) — A search through the rubble left when a dynamite-filled storage building exploded turned up only shredded bits of cloth, the only sign of two missing teen-agers thought to have touched off the blast with rifles.

Polk County Sheriff Bob Rice said Sunday that while he doubted Clint Woodard, 14, and Jeffrey Waddell, 13, both of Des Moines, had survived, the search would continue. The youths had been hunting near the bunker before the explosion, which officials said was likely triggered by gunshots from their .22-caliber rifles.

The 12½ tons of dynamite that exploded Saturday was five times the amount used to level the U.S. Marine headquarters in Lebanon last month, and left a crater 30 feet deep and 100 feet across. The blast damaged dozens of nearby homes and was felt as far as 45 miles away.

Rice said the boys' parents would examine the tattered cloth to determine if it might once have been parts of clothing worn by their children.

"We must assure the families of these boys," he said.

Des Moines police bomb squad Sgt. Frank Murray said some other possible explanations for the explosion, such as lightning or improper storage, have been ruled out. But he said it is possible a bullet other than one fired by the two missing boys could have caused the blast.

"In order to ignite a stick of dynamite, you have to have some kind of a shock. A bullet going into a stick of dynamite could be the shock, just like a cap set it off," said Reynold Hentges, assistant Iowa fire marshal.

Since the slugs from a .22-caliber weapon probably could not have penetrated the bunker's 4-inch-thick brick and concrete walls, the boys may have been on the sheet-metal roof of the structure, Murray speculated.

Another 17 tons of dynamite stored in a nearby bunker, which was damaged in the blast, were removed Sunday.

Both bunkers were owned by Laverty Elevator Co. of Indianola, about 15 miles south of Des Moines. The buildings were originally used by the military for munitions storage and are probably a century old, Rice said.

About 60 homes near the site were damaged by the blast, officials said.

David Fitch, who lives about a mile from the bunkers, was in his garage when the explosion occurred. He said it lifted a wall off its foundation and set it down about an inch away.

"The horses broke into a sweat," he said. Shattered glass sprayed from almost every window and cracks in the walls were visible throughout the house, he said.

"Everybody in this town knew there were powder houses down there," Fitch said, adding he had never given it a second thought.

Kansans gather at peace vigil

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Holding lighted candles beneath a full moon, more than 500 people gathered in a peace vigil after "The Day After" showed the devastation of their college town in nuclear war.

"I do not want this film to be a preview of coming attractions. This is still the day before," Mayor David Longhurst told the crowd Sunday night to cheers and applause. "We must not wait until the day after."

Longhurst, a 40-year-old businessman, began and ended his remarks by repeating a line spoken by a character in the ABC-TV movie following the nuclear attack: "This is Lawrence, Kansas. Is anybody there? Anybody at all?"

After a series of brief speeches, the crowd lighted candles as a brass quartet played and a soloist sang "America the Beautiful."

Sunday night's ceremony took place at a flagpole on a hillside just below the Memorial Campanile, a 120-foot-tall bell tower on the University of Kansas campus that honors alumni who died in World War II. At the base of the hill lies the university's football stadium, which was shown in the film with missiles lifting off in the background.

A pro-nuclear group planned a march through the university campus today, and a local peace group was holding a town meeting.

A few people staged a counterdemonstration Sunday night in favor of nuclear deterrence. Among more than a dozen placards was one reading "Peace Through Strength," and another proclaiming, "The Soviet Union Needs You. Support A U.S. Nuclear Freeze."

"We're here just to show that the program of deterrence has worked," said Scott Ramsey, president of the College Republicans at the University of Missouri-Columbia. "There is no reason to lay down our arms."

At one point, the pro-nuclear protesters burned a Soviet flag and sang "God Bless America." Occasionally hecklers interrupted the speakers, but there was no violence.

Allan Hanson, leader of Let Lawrence Live, the peace group which organized the vigil, said he was "overwhelmed and elated" by the turnout.

Most of those who attended the candlelight ceremony said they came out of curiosity or as a show of support for disarmament.

"We have three children sleeping at home and my wife said, 'Why don't you go and represent all of us,' " said Paul Berry, a 47-year-old Lawrence resident. "I guess we have a sense of hopefulness, not futility."

Defense official says film doesn't raise 'hard question'

By The Associated Press

Secretary of State George Shultz says the ABC-TV movie "The Day After" shows the "unacceptability of nuclear war," while Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle says the film "makes the easy point without raising the hard question."

Shultz, in an interview with ABC newsman Ted Koppel immediately after the Sunday night showing of the film, called on Americans to "rally around and support" a policy of deterrence and negotiation with the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear arms.

Perle, appearing today on the "CBS Morning News," said the hard question that the movie didn't deal with is "how to avoid nuclear war, any nuclear war, no matter how limited."

The movie shows the nuclear destruction of Kansas City and the aftermath in nearby Lawrence, Kan. Groups advocating nuclear disarmament have used the film as a rallying point, and the Reagan administration also took the opportunity to call on Americans to support its policies of using weapons as a deterrent to war.

Shultz said U.S. policy, "for decades now" has been "based on the idea that we simply do not accept a nuclear war, and we've been successful in preventing it."

Will 'The Day After' affect 1984 race?

An Analysis

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — The eventual impact of "The Day After" may not be seen until the nation moves deeper into the 1984 political debate, but the initial response from political leaders demonstrated their feeling that fear of nuclear war can be brushed off by politicians only at their peril.

Moments after the ABC-TV film ended, its bleak, unsettling message beamed into millions of American homes, Secretary of State George P. Shultz offered his view that the movie was "not the future at all."

He described the film as a demonstration of "the fact that nuclear war is not acceptable" and said Americans should be "rallying around and supporting" President Reagan's call for reducing the superpower stockpiles of nuclear weapons.

It was an unprecedented response to a television movie, a secretary of state defending an administration's commitment to preventing nuclear war. No more dramatic evidence than Shultz's brief appearance on television was needed to demonstrate the concern in the White House over this film.

Even before it was shown, Democratic presidential candidates were promoting it as a dramatization of a danger made more real by Reagan's policies.

Speaking in Portland, Maine, 48 hours before the broadcast, former Vice President Walter F. Mondale said the administration was guilty of "a radical breach of the common tradition of commitment to strong arms control. And so that's why they're worried about this film."

"The Day After" certainly wasn't your typical "Sunday Night Movie" on television. It depicted in the most graphic terms that could be broadcast the swift acceleration of a European conflict into full nuclear war and its impact on the area from Kansas City, Mo., to Lawrence, Kan.

And, nuclear war is not your typical political issue.

A generation of Americans has lived in a world in which political and military leaders speak of a "balance of terror," of "mutually assured destruction," and debate the wisdom of pursuing a policy of launching nuclear missiles on receiving warning that the Soviets have launched their nuclear rockets.

Yet, nuclear war has never been the dominant issue in a presidential campaign.

In the 1964 campaign, the Democrats ran a commercial showing a young girl plucking the petals from a daisy. The commercial ended with a picture of a nuclear explosion and an exhortation to vote for President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The clear implication was that the alternative, election of Republican Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, would increase the threat of nuclear war.

That was the election that demonstrated Ronald Reagan's abilities as a campaigner, as he strove to summon support for Goldwater. Sixteen years later, Jimmy Carter tried to depict Reagan as too eager to resort to military force.

That issue worried the Reagan campaign staff more than any other. But Carter's problems dwarfed any issues he could use against Reagan and the Republican won in a landslide.

Another presidential campaign is now beginning.

Will this be the one in which concern over nuclear war becomes a determining issue? And will a television movie be seen as the event that brought that issue to the forefront of political debate?

A group of Democratic governors watched the film together in a Washington hotel where they were holding a political meeting.

Later, Gov. Richard Celeste of Ohio called it "a powerful imagining...It helps us to see more clearly what we have to see."

Children: Destruction 'not that bad'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — David Roth's family munched popcorn as they watched their hometown destroyed by nuclear war on "The Day After," and his four children said the ABC-TV movie was not as scary as they had expected.

Asked what she would report to her classmates today, 8-year-old Natalie Roth quipped, "I'll tell them your parents should have let you watch it. It wasn't that bad."

Roth and his wife, Sara, said they had not hesitated to allow their children to watch the show, despite advice from their school to use discretion in letting children under 12 see it.

"I feel that it's something (nuclear war) that's a reality...And I think our children should be ready for it," said Roth, 43.

Snuggled in their comfortable living room, it appeared difficult for Natalie, Susie, 13; Mark, 12, and Ann, 10, to feel the impact of the nuclear holocaust in which families and buildings were shattered. There was spontaneous chatter, which Natalie sternly tried to quell. While the scenes of devastation elicited gasps, they seemed to have no deep emotional meaning for the youngsters.

Strikers protest at boss' house

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Garment workers marking the 100th day of a strike demonstrated outside the home of their boss in the city's Bel-Air section after holding a weekend rally at their downtown union hall.

About 150 chanting, singing strikers protested at the home of Eugene Davis, owner of Southern Cal-Davis Pleating, for about 45 minutes Sunday after riding buses from the downtown rally, said Miguel Machuca, organizing director of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

The strikers walked off their jobs on Aug. 12.

Some troops may be home for Thanksgiving

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — Some of the U.S. troops on Grenada may be home for Thanksgiving and those remaining will have turkeys airlifted to them for the traditional holiday dinner, U.S. military officials say.

Army spokesman Maj. Douglas Frey said Sunday he was "aware of" plans for withdrawal of more U.S. troops to get them back to their Fort Bragg, N.C., base for Thanksgiving. He did not elaborate.

Meanwhile, the private medical school whose operations on Grenada were a factor in the U.S.-led invasion is planning to resume classes here in January, Chancellor Charles Modica said.

President Reagan, in ordering the Oct. 25 invasion, said he feared for the safety of some 1,000 Americans on Grenada, including 631 students at the St. George's University Medical School.

U.S. military officials said plans were being made to fly turkeys to the Port Salines airstrip for the troops that will be still on the island Thursday.

Frey said about 2,300 combat troops remain on the island, along with 2,000 support troops. Pentagon officials in Washington said last week that the troops would be withdrawn "in two or three weeks."

The invasion came the week after Marxist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop was slain in a bloody power struggle within his pro-Cuban leftist government.

Walesa endorses protests against food price hikes

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa met with fugitive leaders of the outlawed Solidarity labor federation over the weekend and endorsed their call for protests against planned food price hikes, his wife said today.

A statement issued by Walesa and the four members of Solidarity's "Temporary Coordinating Commission" said Poland's working people "cannot agree with the price hikes and it is the duty of the union to organize a struggle in their interest."

In speaking out against the price hikes, slated for the new year, Walesa joins the Roman Catholic church, which issued a statement Friday claiming that the 10-to-15-percent increases would not solve Poland's three-year economic crisis.

It was not clear what response Poland's Communist authorities would make to Walesa's action, one of his boldest acts of defiance since being released from an 11-month martial law internment in November 1982.

Police interrogated Walesa repeatedly after his first meeting with the underground commission last April, when he endorsed their call for nationwide demonstrations on May 1.

The authorities, however, have called for public "consultations" on the price hikes, and may find it awkward to detain Walesa for speaking out on the issue.

The state-run media curbed a harsh campaign against Walesa after he won the Nobel Peace Prize on Oct. 5.

"The price hikes planned by the authorities...will not solve the country's economic problems," said the statement, signed by Walesa, Zbigniew Bujak of Warsaw, Bogdan Lis of Gdansk, Tadeusz Jedynak of Wroclaw and Eugenuisz Szumiejko of Katowice.

The increases, they said, "will lead to a further sharp drop in the standard of living of the working class, making it impossible for the majority of Polish families to satisfy their elementary needs."

The communique said Walesa and the underground leaders discussed "plans for the nearest future," but did not specify what forms the protests should take. Walesa's wife, Danuta, said from the family's apartment in Gdansk that the meetings took place Saturday and Sunday.

The underground commission earlier this month urged supporters to organize factory-level resistance to the price hikes. Although the union claims 1 million clandestine activists, no protest actions have been reported.

Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski has acknowledged wide popular opposition to the proposed price hikes, which he says are needed to balance higher payments to farmers. In a speech released Sunday, Jaruzelski said Poles face even higher prices and worse shortages unless they work harder.

He acknowledged that "a considerable segment of the working population experience...very difficult living conditions," and said authorities would make "no hasty decisions" on food price hikes planned for Jan. 1.

The price hikes are "necessary" he said, but would be lower "if we were farther down the road on our plan to curb inflation and cut waste...with better work discipline from top to bottom. To put it simply, better quality work and management."

Irish group wages terrorist campaign

DUNDALK, Ireland (AP) — Renegade guerrillas believed to be led by Dominic McGlinchey, the most wanted gunman in Ireland, are waging a terrorist campaign of killings, kidnappings and bank robberies along the Irish border, police say.

Police said today they have linked Sunday's machine gun attack on a Protestant church in County Armagh with a marauding guerrilla group led by McClinchey. Three church elders were killed and seven worshipers wounded in the attack.

Scores of pro-British Protestants, many living in remote farmhouses in the rugged countryside, have been killed by the mainly Roman Catholic guerrillas opposed to London's rule in Northern Ireland.

Harold McCusker, Protestant member of the British Parliament for the Armagh district, declared the guerrillas are waging "a war of genocide."

But Catholics, frequently targets of reprisal attacks by masked Protestant gunmen, also are becoming victims of their own side, police and locals say.

McGlinchey, a 29-year-old veteran guerrilla known as "The Mad Dog," is a leader of the outlawed Irish National Liberation Army, a Marxist offshoot of the Provisional Irish Republican Army fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

A senior police source in Belfast said McGlinchey is wanted for "between 20 and 30 killings."

He is based around Dundalk, a market town just south of the zig-zagging border that until a few years ago was known as "El Paso" because so many gunmen were holed up there drinking in the bars it resembled a frontier town in America's Old West.

Imelda Marcos resigns from committee

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Imelda Marcos resigned today from the powerful Executive Committee and publicly renounced any ambitions to succeed her husband, President Ferdinand E. Marcos, "at any time."

The 54-year-old first lady, in a rare speech in the National Assembly which was broadcast on government television, announced she will leave government when Marcos does.

Mrs. Marcos, a powerful politician whom the opposition has accused of nursing ambitions to rule the Philippines, read during her speech a letter she wrote to the ruling New Society Party formally tendering her resignation from the committee.

The Executive Committee is a 10-member body empowered by the constitution to assume the powers of the presidency and act as government caretaker if Marcos, 66, dies or leaves office.

Mrs. Marcos first broke the news of her decision to resign during a caucus of the governing New Society Party which was discussing the controversial issue of presidential succession.

Earlier, the party approved a resolution seeking to restore the vice presidency abolished by Marcos when he declared martial law in 1972, and calling for an election to the post in 1987, when Marcos' present term expires.

The resolution would amend the constitutional section which provides that the Executive Committee would take over the powers of president and act as government caretaker if Marcos dies or leaves office.

The proposed amendment, to be submitted for approval in a plebiscite early next year, would designate the speaker of the National Assembly as acting president if Marcos becomes incapacitated before the vice presidential election in 1987.

The Philippines' politically powerful first lady Imelda R. Marcos, right, accused of nursing presidential ambitions, shakes hands with leaders of the ruling New Society Party Monday during a party caucus in Manila, Philippines.

Mrs. Marcos' decision came amid opposition demands for her and her husband to step down, Marcos has rejected opposition charges that he was to blame for the assassination of chief political rival Benigno Aquino and says he has "a covenant" with the people who had elected him.

"Now that the economy of the country looks brighter and the future optimistic, I can now in good conscience announce that I am now resigning from the Executive Committee and that my public life is coterminus with that of President Marcos," Mrs. Marcos said.

Last week, Marcos said Aquino's assassination contributed to the nation's economic problems, which have led to a 21.4 percent devaluation of the peso and economic assistance from the United States.

Marcos' appointment of his wife last year to the Executive Committee, headed by Prime Minister Cesar Virata, renewed a long-standing opposition charge that he was lining her up as a potential successor.

Cowboys shoot Chiefs; Bengals drill Oilers

Strong passing didn't help Kansas City against Dallas

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The professor gave his former pupil, Kansas City Coach John Mackovic, another lesson Sunday on the National Football League law according to Dallas Cowboy Coach Tom Landry: You don't win without a running game.

The Cowboys yielded 391 yards and three touchdowns to Kansas City passers but rolled to a 41-21 victory behind the artful dashes of Tony Dorsett, who reached a rushing milestone.

"This is the stretch drive, the dash for cash," said Dorsett, who became the ninth National Football League player to rush for over 8,000 yards. "We have to run as well as we pass if we expect to accomplish the things we set out to do in July."

Dorsett bolted 28 and 32 yards for touchdowns and had 108 yards on 16 rushes as he passed the 1,000-yard mark for the sixth time in his seven-year NFL career.

"I guess 1,000 yards is still the criterion for a great back in the NFL, but I think for me it's just a mediocre season," said Dorsett. "I'll have to get 1,600 before I can say I had an outstanding year.

"It's my intention to play 10 years and after that I will reassess my desire to play."

Mackovic, the Dallas offensive coordinator for two years, could squeeze only 43 yards in rushing out of his attack.

He was envious of Dorsett.

"When they get execution with their offense like today and Dorsett gets some running room and makes the plays he did then the Cowboys are extremely difficult to beat," Mackovic said. "Rarely do they lose when they play that way."

Landry said "Tony was the difference. He made the two big runs for touchdowns.

"John has done a real good job coaching Kansas City but Dorsett's runs nullified what the Chiefs were trying to do — stop him."

THE COWBOYS upped their record to 10-2, good enough to stay in a tie with Wasington in the National Conference Eastern Division.

Kansas City dropped to 5-7 in the American Conference West in Mackovic's rookie year as an NFL coach.

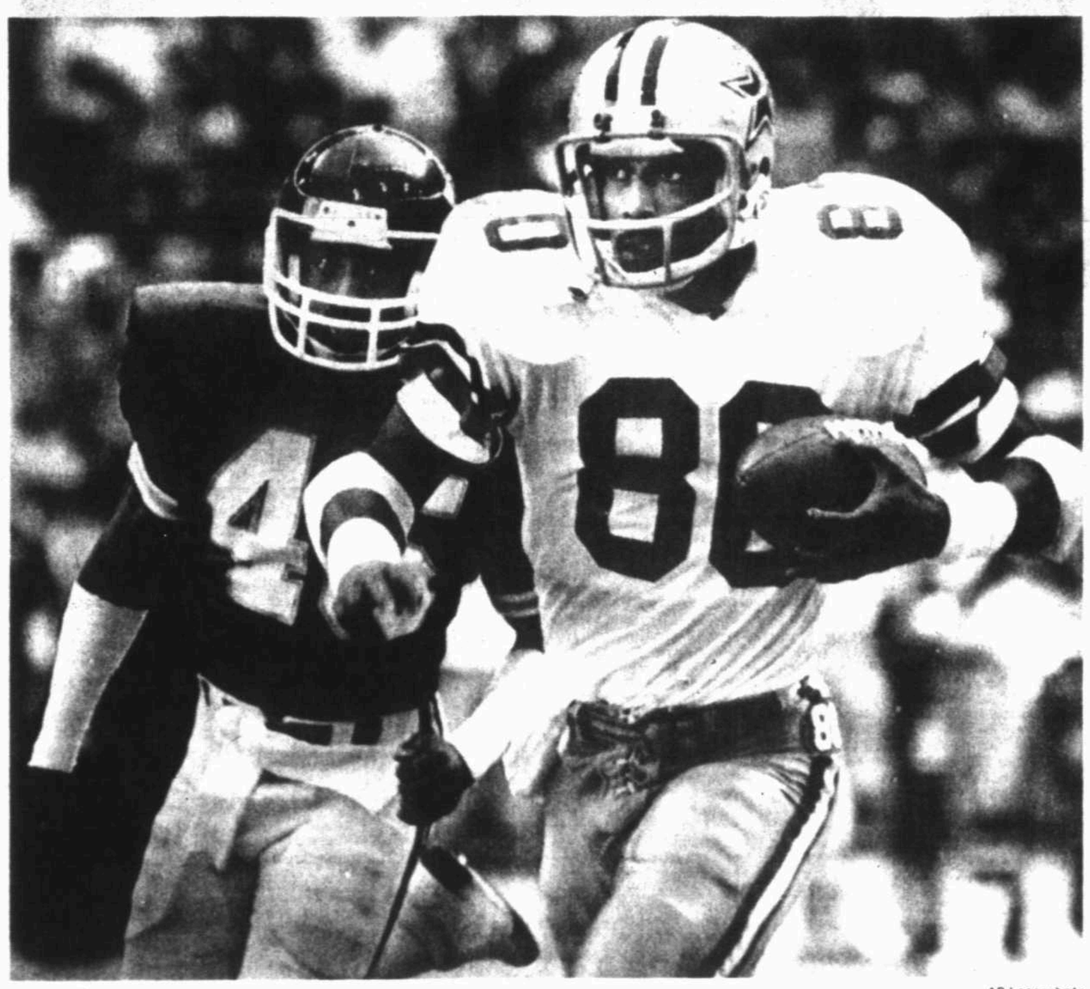

It was the first victory this year for the Cowboys where they didn't have to come from behind.

They built a 27-0 lead before Kansas City quarterback Bill Kenney hit Carlos Carson with touchdown strikes of 13 and 48 yards behind Everson Walls in the third period.

Timmy Newsome's seven-yard touchdown run and Gary Allen's 68-yard punt return for a touchdown put the Chiefs away.

Dallas must play St. Louis Thanksgiving Day apparently without wide receiver Drew Pearson, who sprained an ankle.

"We will have a tough assignment on Thursday," said Landry. "We are giving up a lot of 300-yard passing games and that worries you."

Houston's win streak ends at one

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Bengals have found the formula for an easy victory — play the Houston Oilers.

Quarterback Ken Anderson threw three touchdown passes to ignite a 38-point first-half scoring spree Sunday and send the Bengals to a 38-10 drubbing of the hapless Oilers.

It was Cincinnati's second resounding victory over the Oilers in three games. Just two weeks earlier, the Bengals rolled to a 55-14 victory in the Astrodome.

"I think it's fairly obvious that twice in three weeks we've been completely outclassed, completely outplayed, completely humiliated," Houston Interim Head Coach Chuck Studley said. "I don't know what else to say.

"They're just a completely, thoroughly better football team in every respect."

The 5-7 Bengals scored on their first six possessions to put the game out of reach of the 1-11 Oilers by halftime. Houston was trying for its second straight victory after snapping a 17-game losing streak.

"Maybe we can play with some of the teams in the league, but we certainly can't play with a team that has the talent and coaching and all the other aspects the Bengals have," Studley said. "They're just too good for us."

The ease with which the Bengals completed the sweep of Houston surprised Head Coach Forrest Gregg.

"I never would have thought we'd do this against Houston twice," Gregg said.

The only time the Bengals didn't get points in the first half was on their last possession, when they decided to run out the clock going into the intermission.

CINCINNATI EASED up in the second half, when heavy rain and swirling wind slowed the play.

"After you get a lead like that, there's really no need for pressing the matter," Gregg said.

Wide receiver Cris Collinsworth and tight end Dan Ross, a pair of Bengals headed for the United States Football League, fueled the first-half offensive explosion. Collinsworth and Ross combined for three first-half touchdown catches.

Fullback Pete Johnson added a pair of second-quarter scoring runs as Cincinnati raced toward its fourth victory in five games. Johnson also rushed for 137 yards in 30 carries, his second-best single game yardage as a pro, trailing only his 160-yard effort against Cleveland in 1978.

Hey Mustangs, at least you're in a bowl!

By The Associated Press

If Southern Methodist's Bobby Collins is upset about not going to a major bowl, how about Virginia Tech's Bill Dooley, whose team is going nowhere at all.

"If this isn't a bowl team, then I've never seen one," Dooley said after Virginia Tech dismantled Virginia 48-0 Saturday to finish its regular season 9-2. "We belong in the Top 20."

But unless they get a last-minute bid to the Liberty Bowl, Dooley's Gobblers will stay home and watch on television while Mississippi, a five-time loser, plays in the Independence Bowl.

Then there's Notre Dame, which has also lost five times and is mulling over a Liberty Bowl bid; and UCLA, Penn State, Missouri, Florida State, Oklahoma State, Kentucky and Fullerton State, all of whom have four losses.

The reason for Dooley's problem is that bowl people don't consider Virginia Tech a draw on television or at the gate. Collins thinks that's also the reason sixth-ranked SMU will go to the Sun Bowl ($400,000 to each team) instead of, say, the Sugar (about $2 million). "It's politics and pressure from the television people," he said last week.

The fact is, people will tune in to watch Penn State, Oklahoma or Notre Dame, no matter how many losses they have.

"Notre Dame has the most unusual appeal of anyone anywhere. They could be 3-8 and still be appealing," says A.F. "Bud" Dudley, executive director of the Liberty Bowl.

In fact, Dudley and the Liberty Bowl are now out on a very long limb because of Notre Dame. They invited the 6-4 Irish last week, then watched as they blew a fourth quarter lead and lost to Air Force 23-22 to drop to 6-5.

Now, the Notre Dame situation is in a muddle. Coach Gerry Faust says he'd like to go but that the decision is "up to the administration." Athletic Director Gene Corrigan said Saturday that if the Liberty Bowl couldn't come up with a replacement, the school might let the players vote.

And the players? They voted Sunday and the results were impounded, to be announced later.

"If they offer it, we'll go," said tailback Allen Pinkett, who ran for 197 yards and a touchdown Saturday. "We'll go in there smoking and use that game as a stepping stone for next year — then we'll play some ball."

The Liberty Bowl mentioned three possible replacements: 7-4 Washington State; 6-3-1 Arizona State and 7-3 Oklahoma, which has No. 1 Nebraska coming up this week and a Dec. 3 game in Hawaii. Oklahoma officials have said that with the game in Hawaii, they weren't interested in a bid to one of the minor bowls.

But the Virginia Techs and the East Carolinas (8-3, with three losses by 13 points to bowl-bound teams)? Well ... Blacksburg, Va. and Greenville, N.C. aren't exactly South Bend.

Another problem: while Saturday was the day that the bowl bids were to go out, the bowls had their teams lined up before Saturday's games, then kept their fingers crossed.

The reason for the early picks? Competition, particularly among the lesser bowls, which start getting nervous that someone else will get the team they lost.

One bowl, the Hall of Fame, committed itself to West Virginia and Kentucky, then watched both lose on Saturday. Nonetheless, Jim Simmons, the bowl's executive director, calls the game a "fantastic matchup" that will sell out Birmingham's 75,412 Legion Field.

Dick MacPherson, whose Syracuse team upset West Virginia Saturday for its third straight win and its first winning season since 1979, says he'd like to go on.

Player's death not result of football injury

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — A football injury did not cause the death of a Howard Payne University offensive guard who died after collapsing on the sidelines during his team's final game of the season, according to the pathologist who performed an autopsy on 19-year-old Paul Cunningham. Cunningham, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Earl Cunningham of Dallas, fainted during the third quarter of the Saturday game with Abilene Christian, but appeared to recover.

He later collapsed, and team physician Dr. Allan Spence performed cardiopulmonary rescusitation on him. Cunningham was taken to Brownwood Regional Hospital where Spence pronounced him dead at 5:05 p.m.

Dr. Thomas Gardner, a pathologist in Brownwood, performed an autopsy authorized by Cunningham's parents by telephone from Dallas.

"The only thing I can tell you right now is he didn't die from any football injury. I believe it was natural causes," Gardner said Sunday.

Gardner said he had not finished the autopsy and that the completed report would be given to Cunningham's parents and released by Spence.

CUNNINGHAM, WHO had started the previous three games after the original starter injured an ankle, came off the field late in the third quarter when the punting unit went in.

He then fainted, but quickly recovered. "As far as we know," coach Bill Hicks said, "there was no precipitating injury on the field."

Howard Payne lost the game, 35-6.

Team trainer Mike Chandler said Cunningham had no history of injury or illness. Cunningham spoke with Spence, who had come down from the stands.

"He did not complain of a headache or any injuries," Spence said.

Then, while sitting on the bench, Cunningham collapsed. His football jersey was ripped off and Spence began administering cardiopulmonary rescusitation.

Cunningham was taken by ambulance to the hospital but never regained consciousness.

Hicks, who described Cunningham as "what I'd like my son to be," said Cunningham's parents were supportive.

"They're great Christian people," Hicks said. "His dad was very comforting to me. He said, 'We don't want the kids or the team blaming themselves.'"

THE FOOTBALL players did not learn of Cunningham's death until a team meeting held after the game.

Howard Payne President Ralph A. Phelps Jr. on Sunday called Cunningham's death a "tragedy."

A memorial service was scheduled for 10 a.m. today at Howard Payne.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

It's still a homecoming game

When I left Memorial Dump Friday night following Midland Lee's 48-14 triumph over El Paso Irvin, I thought the Rebels were going to play Euless Trinity this week.

The first report we heard in the press box was that Trinity had a 21-6 lead over Fort Worth Trimble Tech.

When our game was over, the report read Trinity 29, Tech 26. Close, but the game had to be nearly over. It would still be Trinity and Lee at Texas Stadium or Ratliff Stadium.

I WAS really looking forward to that matchup as, I assume, most Midlanders. It would be a homecoming of sorts for former Midland High coach John Reddell. It would almost be like another Midland High-Lee showdown, especially for those of us who love Reddell.

Well, it didn't happen this year. Maybe it will sometime. Reddell's Trojans fell to Trimble Tech on a 48-yard pass with 2:07 left in the game. So, instead of Reddell, we get the Trimble Tech Bulldogs in Fort Worth Friday at 7:30 p.m. in Amon Carter Stadium — home of the "Killer Frogs" instead of the home of the Dallas Cowboys. We don't get to stage a Reddell reunion. At least, Tech has the Bulldog mascot.

In frustration, I wasn't ready to give up the idea of a reunion, so we went out and found one. Trimble Tech and Lee is going to be a reunion.

IT SEEMS that Lee assistant coach David Browning played football at Texas Tech with Tech head coach Quinton Robinson. That's a reunion, but there's more to this story.

It seems that David's wife helped Texas Tech recruit Quinton. "At least, she showed him around the campus," says Browning.

So there you have it — a reunion. It was promised and there it is. And this is Browning's chance to get a little revenge from the old Texas Tech days.

Despite the reunion, it will be Lee's secondary who better be ready to play Friday. Tech completed only five of 17 passes against Trinity, but three went for touchdowns, including bombs of 90 and 48 yards.

"Trimble Tech wasn't too consistent against Trinity, but they certianly have a big play offense," said Lee assistant Jack Tayrien. "They can score on you from anywhere on the field. They have a lot of talent at the skill positions and they are dangerous."

Lee defensive back Michael Wallace, who is beginning to turn in some big plays for the Rebels, still thinks Lee's secondary can handle whatever is thrown at them. "We're doing a good job in the secondary. We'll let those teams throw anytime they want. But we'll be there when they do."

IT'S BEEN strange to see how Lee's playoff opponents prepare for the Rebels. In District 4-5A play, teams seemed to say, "You can beat us with the fullback Isaac Garnett, but we are not going to let you go outside on us with that speed of Tyrone Thurman and Walter Jones." Playoff teams seem to be saying, "We are going to stop Garnett first and worry about the rest later."

Of course both theories are valid, but neither has been able to halt the Lee offense. The nine points scored against San Angelo is the lowest Lee point total this year and the Rebs stopped themselves with fumbles in that one.

Still, I favor the 4-5A approach. I don't know if you can stop Garnett by playing loose in the middle, but I'd rather take my chances with his six yards a carry than turn that speed loose outside.

Lee's playoff opponents — Amarillo High and El Paso Irvin — used eight and nine man fronts most of the time. Garnett hasn't been over 100 yards in a playoff game. Jones had 156 against Amarillo High and Tyrone had 115 against Irvin, which was the first time either had over 100 yards in a game this year.

A Garnett defeat is slow agony. A Thurman or Jones defeat is lightning quick. On the second play of both playoff games, the speed has exploded. Jones for 55 and a touchdown against Amarillo High. Thurman for 49 against Irvin. Field position and points quick both times.

Garnett, however, likes the 4-5A approach. "I can remember when 100 yards rushing was a bad night. Now I'd like to have 100 yards."

Flyers, Rangers score overtime victories

By The Associated Press

The Philadelphia Flyers worked an extra 163 seconds. The New York Rangers needed only eight. The result was the same for both National Hockey League teams: overtime victories.

Bobby Clarke scored at 2:43 of overtime Sunday night to lift the Flyers to a 6-5 victory over the Pittsburgh Penguins. In New York, it was Kent-Erik Andersson — a defensive specialist — who got the winner on the first shift of OT as the Rangers edged the Quebec Nordiques 6-5.

Elsewhere, it was Minnesota 4, Chicago 3, and Vancouver 8, Los Angeles 3.

Clarke popped a rebound over Penguins goalie Denis Herron to decide matters in Philadelphia. It was the second straight game the Flyers have gone into overtime: they tied Minnesota 5-5 in their last outing.

"It's the timing of the goal," Clarke said of his game-winner. "That's how you judge how important it is. this goal means something for the moment but it's not something you dwell on."

Brian Propp scored twice for the Flyers and Mike Bullard had two goals and an assist for Pittsburgh, which has won only one of its last eight contests.

"We had a great effort tonight," said Lou Angotti, coach of the Penguins. "That wasn't our problem. But the breaks didn't go our way. That's the way our season has been going."

Rangers 6, Nordiques 5

It was also the second consecutive OT game for the Rangers and Nordiques. New York tied Boston 6-6 and Quebec and Hartford ended up 4-4 on Saturday.

Andersson had Mike Rogers' pass from the left corner bounce off his chest and past Quebec goalie Daniel Bouchard, who was outstanding all night.

"It deflected off of one of their players' sticks and hit me in the chest," explained Andersson, who was scoreless before his lucky goal. "I was going for the net and the goaltender was down, which helped.

"I've never scored one like that before. Maybe this will start me scoring.

Quebec had deadlocked the game 5-5 with a late rally. Louis Sleigher scored his second goal of the night on a power play — Quebec had four goals with a man-power edge — at 13:06 of the third period. Then Wilf Paiement knocked in a rebound for his second score of the game with Bouchard lifted and only 16 seconds to go in regulation.

Rogers and defenseman Reijo Ruotsalainen had a goal and two assists apiece.

"The big thing after they tied it was not to get down on ourselves," said Rogers. "You treat every overtime as not wanting to get scored on. You have a point for the tie and you don't want to go away with worse than that."

North Stars 4, Black Hawks 3

Minnesota, which is unbeaten in its last six games, continued its climb up the Norris Division ladder and moved into first place, one point ahead of Chicago. Neal Broten's 15-foot shot with 2:23 remaining was decisive.

Keith Acton scored a pair for the North Stars and Steve Larmer did the same for Chicago.

"When he started to shoot," said Chicago goalie Murray Bannerman, "I made a move leaving a very small opening. Somehow, he got away from Doug Wilson and made the shot. It's the kind of thing that's been happening so often, I kind of wonder what I have to do to get on track."

Canucks 8, Kings 3

Vancouver, which had lost its last two games 5-2 to LA, got first-period goals in less than three minutes from Patrik Sundstrom, Rick Lanz and Thomas Gradin and coasted to victory.

Vancouver also got goals from Stan Smyl, Doug Halward, Tony Tanti, Gary Lupul and Mark Kirton. For Tanti, it was his 20th of the season.

Charlie Simmer had two goals and Jim Fox one for the Kings.

ENMU earns spot in playoffs

PORTALES (AP) — Eastern New Mexico University, which finished the season with an 8-1-1 mark, Sunday received a bid to play in the NAIA Division I football playoffs.

The Greyhounds tied defending national champion and No. 1 ranked Central State University of Edmond, Okla., 28-28 Saturday. Their performance against the tough Bronchos moved them up in the final NAIA rankings to No. 6. and clinched a playoff berth.

"It's a fitting way to wind up a regular season that saw us accomplish so much," said Coach Bill Kelly, who took over the ENMU program this season and turned it into an instant winner.

Eastern will meet Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference champion Mesa College Dec. 3 at Grand Junction, Colo.

Other teams receiving bids were Central State, Shepherd College of West Virginia, Carson-Newman of Tennessee, Saginaw Valley of Michigan, Northeastern Oklahoma and Central Arkansas.

Greyhounds claim third straight game

ALPINE, Texas (AP) — Eastern New Mexico University scored its third straight basketball victory Sunday with a 78-64 win over Schriener College of Kerrville, Texas, at the Sul Ross Tournament.

Walton's lob to Cummings gives Clippers victory

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego center Bill Walton practiced lob-passes Sunday afternoon. It paid off for the Clippers Sunday night.

Terry Cummings scored on an alley-oop play off a pass from Walton as time expired to give the Clippers a 99-97 National Basketball Association victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers.

NBA

The Clippers had called a timeout with one second remaining after Walton rebounded a missed shot by Cleveland's Jeff Cook.

On the ensuing out-of-bounds play from halfcourt, Walton lobbed a high pass which Cummings caught near the basket and, without coming down, dunked for the winning points.

"I practiced throwing lobs today, but not from halfcourt, from the three-point line," said Walton. "We look for the lob at the basket as a part of our game plan.

"This is the first time I've thrown one from halfcourt. I'm usually the one trying to catch those."

Cummings was lined up at the other side of the court from Walton, near the mid-court line, when the play began. Cummings came around a screen from a teammate and wasn't closely guarded when the ball arrived.

"We made a mistake," said Cleveland Coach Tom Nissalke. "We guarded the screen instead of Cummings."

Elliott wins race; Allison season title

By The Associated Press

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Both race winner Bill Elliott and first-time season champion Bobby Allison were thankful after things came out their way in Sunday's Winston Western 500 Grand National stock car race.

Elliott got past Benny Parsons to take the lead with just five laps to go on the way to his first Grand National victory, while Allison wound up ninth, a finish that closed out two-time defending Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip in the heated season point race.

"All the bad breaks I had in the past seemed to turn around today," said Elliott, who wound up the chief benefactor of a tangle involving Waltrip and hard-charging Tim Richmond eight laps from the end of the rain-dampened race.

The smiling Elliott admitted he was surprised to win his long-awaited first Grand National event on the only road course on the circuit, rather than one of the more traditional ovals. But he said, "I'll take it anywhere I can get it."

The jubilant Allison, winning his first season title in 22 years of Grand National racing and five second-place finishes, said tire problems and a fuel pressure problem during the race had him wondering if luck was going to against him again.

"The little things kept happening and I said, 'This can't be real.' But the guys (on his crew) responded every time.

"I'm telling you," added Allison, his voice choking for a moment with emotion, "this feels absolutely great."

"He told me he made $5,000 a week — then I found out he was a printer at the U.S. Mint."

Falcons' 'Rocket' falls on 49ers for 28-24 miracle

By The Associated Press

Some have called the play "Big Ben." Others have dubbed it "Hail Mary." Steve Bartkowski says the Falcons call it the "Rocket" because "the ball goes up and comes down like a rocket."

Atlanta won a 28-24 National Football League thriller Sunday on the last play of the game with San Francisco on a so-called "Big Ben" desperation pass by Steve Bartkowski.

"That play never works in practice, it only works in games somehow," Bartkowski said following the Falcons' latest miracle.

It came on a 47-yard touchdown pass thrown up for grabs. Billy "White Shoes" Johnson came down with it. Bartkowski lofted a high, long pass down the left sideline into a crowd of players at the 5-yard line. The ball was tipped twice before Johnson, who had slipped down, grabbed it on the 7 and barely reached the goal line for the winning touchdown.

The Miami Dolphins, meanwhile, opened some daylight for themselves in the tight American Conference East race with a 37-0 thrashing of the Baltimore Colts in one of four shutouts Sunday.

Along with the whitewashing of the Colts, the Cleveland Browns whipped the New England Patriots 30-0, the Chicago Bears beat the Tampa Bay Bucs 27-0 and the New York Giants blanked the Philadelphia Eagles 23-0.

NFL

In other games, the Washington Redskins clobbered the Los Angeles Rams 42-20; the Dallas Cowboys whipped the Kansas City Chiefs 42-21; the Minnesota Vikings upset the Pittsburgh Steelers 17-14; the Los Angeles Raiders edged the Buffalo Bills 27-24; the Detroit Lions defeated the Green Bay Packers 23-20 in overtime; the St. Louis Cardinals bombed the San Diego Chargers 44-14, the Cincinnati Bengals crushed the Houston Oilers 38-10 and the Denver Broncos outscored the Seattle Seahawks 38-27.

The New York Jets play the New Orleans Saints Monday night in the Superdome.

The game-winning play for the Falcons capped a 73-yard drive that started with only 1:04 remaining, six seconds after San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana had given the 49ers a 24-21 lead by scrambling 11 yards for a touchdown.

The desperation pass by Atlanta is getting to be old hat for the Falcons. They beat New Orleans twice on the same play in 1978, each by 20-17 scores, one going for a touchdown and the other drawing an interference call that set up a touchdown.

Johnson said had he not slipped down, he probably would have been in the crowd of players batting at the ball.

"I was surprised when the ball came into my hands," Johnson said. "I knew I had gotten in."

Dolphins 37, Colts 0

Dan Marino's 85-yard pass to Mark Duper and Mark Clayton's 60-yard punt return for Miami touchdowns only 42 seconds apart in the second quarter triggered the Dolphins' rout of the Colts. The victory gave the Dolphins an 8-4 record and a one-game lead in the AFC East over the Bills.

Duper's scoring catch, just one yard shy of Miami's longest pass play ever, boosted the Dolphins' lead to 17-0 with 1:42 to go in the first half and they were on their way.

Marino said Duper "came up, I looked at him and he took off and I just threw it as far as I could. It was a great play by Mark."

Browns 30, Patriots 0

Cleveland exploded for 17 points in less than four minutes, starting with linebacker Chip Banks' 65-yard interception return for a touchdown, and the Browns rolled to their second consecutive shutout. The second-quarter eruption gave the Browns a 20-0 halftime lead. New England was blanked for the first time in 125 regular-season games.

"They put us away for good early in the game," said New England offensive guard Ron Wooten. "I hate to say it, but we never really recovered from that interception. That had to take something out of us."

Bears 27, Bucs 0

Chicago's Walter Payton ran for 106 yards and two touchdowns in the rain and moved into third place on the NFL's all-time rushing list as the Bears remained in the thick of the Central Division title chase by crushing Tampa Bay.

Payton went over the 1,000-yard mark in a season for the seventh time in nine years on an 8-yard touchdown burst in the second quarter, and zoomed past the retired O.J. Simpson in the career standings with a 3-yard pickup in the third period. The shifty running back put together the 53rd 100-yard day of his career on 22 carries and boosted his nine-season total to 11,257, while Simpson rushed for 11,236 in 11 campaigns.

Giants 23, Eagles 0

Butch Woolfolk's first 100-yard plus game and a defense that allowed Philadelphia only 79 yards in total offense carried the Giants past the Eagles. Woolfolk gained 159 yards on 43 carries, an NFL record, and scored a touchdown as New York ended a streak of seven games without a victory.

Woolfolk, a second-year running back from Michigan, topped the single-game high of 42 set earlier this season by Tampa Bay's James Wilder.

Redskins 42, Rams 20

John Riggins smashed into the end zone on three short touchdown runs as the Redskins overpowered the Rams. The win kept the Redskins in a first-place tie with Dallas in the NFC East with a 10-2 record. The Rams, now 7-5, remain tied for first place in the NFC West with San Francisco.

Riggins' three touchdowns ran his 1983 total to 19 and tied him for the league lead in TDs with Rams' rookie Eric Dickerson and also equaled an NFL mark for touchdowns rushing in a single season, shared by three other players. The Redskins' defenders held Dickerson, the NFL's leading rusher, to just 37 yards on 12 carries.

Vikings 17, Steelers 14

Steve Dils rifled two TD touchdown passes and Benny Ricardo kicked a 39-yard field goal as Minnesota beat Pittsburgh and ended the Steelers' seven-game winning streak.

Raiders 27, Bills 24

Chris Bahr kicked a 36-yard field goal on the game's final play as the Raiders withstood a fourth-quarter surge by Buffalo to beat the Bills. Led by quarterback Matt Kofler, filling in for an injured Joe Ferguson, the Bills had rallied from a 24-3 second-quarter deficit to tie at 24.

Lions 23, Packers 20

Eddie Murray kicked a 37-yard field goal with 6:30 left in overtime to lift Detroit over Green Bay. Lynn Dickey, who didn't play in the second half after suffering a mild concussion, completed touchdown passes of six yards to John Jefferson and one to Paul Coffman. He set a Packers' season TD-passing mark of 26, breaking the mark of 24 set by Cecil Isbell in 1942.

"I've not had a bigger win in my career — even the Super Bowls I've been involved in," said Detroit Coach Monte Clark, whose team remained in contention in the NFC Central race. "It puts us in great shape in the race with Minnesota coming up."

Cardinals 44, Chargers 14

Neil Lomax tossed two touchdown passes and ran for two more, leading St. Louis over the Chargers and spoiling the homecoming of former Cardinals Coach Don Coryell. It was Coryell's first visit to Busch Stadium since stepping down as coach of the Cards in 1978.

Broncos 38, Seahawks 27

Rookie quarterback Gary Kubiak, who had never before taken a snap in an NFL game, passed for one touchdown and ran for another, and Rich Karlis booted five field goals as Denver beat Seattle. Kubiak was forced into a starting role when rookie John Elway came down with the flu Sunday morning.

Rutgers fires Burns, staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — Frank Burns, the winningest football coach in Rutgers University history, has been fired along with all but one of his 10-man coaching staff, school officials say.

No successor has been named for Burns, 55, who had served as head coach for 11 years. He had participated in 355 games at the school, including years as quarterback and assistant coach.

He compiled a record of 78-43-1 with eight winning seasons as head coach, but the club was a loser the last three years.

Burns was informed of the decision by Athletic Director Fred Gruninger on Saturday before Rutgers fell 24-23 to Temple in the final game of the season. Rutgers finished the season with a 3-8 mark, its worst in 30 years.

"It has been a very trying decision," Gruninger said in a prepared statement. "Frank is an outstanding individual and a respected coach who has shown great ability and loyalty.

"But we reluctantly concluded that the football program needs the kind of boost and redirection which comes only from new leadership," Gruninger said.

NTSU gets playoff bye

DENTON, Texas (AP) — Southland Conference co-champion North Texas State will get a bye in the first round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Division I-AA playoffs that begin this weekend.

The Eagles, 8-3, will play the winner of Saturday's first-round game between Nevada-Reno and Idaho State on Dec. 3, the NCAA informed North Texas State Sunday.

North Texas routed Texas-Arlington Saturday 52-15 to earn a tie with Northeast Louisiana for the SLC crown. Northeast Louisiana did not get a playoff berth.

Both the Eagles and Indians finished with 5-1 conference records, but NTSU won the game between the two teams.

North Texas entered the SLC in 1982 and was competing for the conference championship for the first time this season.

Inert Congress may hurt many Amercians

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As a result of congressional inaction, many Americans can expect their heating bills to rise 10 percent to 20 percent this winter. A few may see their bills drop, but not because of anything their government did.

Promises to do something about retail natural gas prices that jumped 50 percent the past two years proved empty in the waning days of Congress last week. The action, or lack of it, affects some 45 million American families who heat their homes with the fuel.

Drowned out in an ideological battle between the Reagan administration's support of a free market on one side and calls for more government regulation from the other side were possible compromises that might have brought some relief to both consumers and the natural gas industry itself.

Pride also played a role. A Congress that just five years ago had told Americans it had solved their natural gas problems with partial deregulation under the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act was reluctant to admit that its multi-tiered pricing system had failed.

No one in Washington was able to rally a majority for anything approaching a cure. Hundreds of producers, transporters, distributers and users — and all of their financial backers — were quick to form constantly changing alliances to lobby for and against each proposed fix.

While ideological purists carried most of the public debate, ultimately it was the differing self interests among producers, pipelines, local utilities and consumers — all protecting their stake — that prevented any action.

The Senate rejected by overwhelming margins in back-to-back votes last week both the Reagan administration's call to remove all government price controls on natural gas and efforts by consumer advocates and labor unions to extend and expand the controls.

In the House, its energy committee mustered a 23-19 majority against a plan by the panel's chairman, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., to roll prices back by 5 percent to 10 percent under government order.

But Dingell, who also wanted to extend two years beyond their scheduled 1985 expiration the federal price ceilings on about half the nation's gas, gaveled the meeting to a close immediately after the vote Thursday.

That denied Republicans and producer-state Democrats on his committee a vote on their plan to deregulate some of the gas now under permanent controls on the assumption that it still would be cheaper than some of the high-priced gas it would replace in the market.

"I took that action because ... their action would have resulted in the decontrol of substantial quantities of 'old' gas, which I have pledged would occur over my dead body," Dingell said afterwards.

The existing labyrinth of partial government controls divides gas into more than 20 categories based on the age and type of wells from which it flows.

Under that system, average wholesale prices vary, including $1.46 per 1,000 cubic feet for "old" gas from wells drilled prior to 1978 and $3.43 for "new" gas drilled in the past five years.

President Reagan last February blamed the 1978 law's tiered pricing system and the rigid, long-term contracts it inspired for creating chaos in a natural gas market unable to respond to changing economic conditions or price changes for competing fuels.

As a solution, the administration proposed letting anyone who wanted to tear up their present contracts and start over in an unregulated market with no government controls on wellhead prices.

That, the administration claimed, would bring all gas into a wellhead price range of $2.50 to $3.50 and reduce most retail residential rates, now averaging $6.42 after pipeline and distribution costs are included.

Consumer groups, however, contended that allowing the price of old gas, now about half the nation's supply, to double would more than offset any price reductions for new gas. Allied with them were producers of high-cost gas who did not want to see their prices come down.

Both Dingell and Senate Energy Committee Chairman James McClure, R-Idaho, the chief architect of a White House-endorsed gradual decontrol plan, have vowed to try again when Congress returns in January.

Dingell conceded that was his strategy all along, saying his call for mandated reductions in prices and expanded federal controls stood a better chance when consumers were upset over their winter heating bills and politicians were facing re-election.

McClure admitted that the momentum has moved "to their court." But he vowed to continue opposing any "quick fix" rollback in government price ceilings, saying that would only discourage new drilling and bring a return of the factory-closing shortages of the late 1970s.

"You don't really pick up where you left off," McClure said following three days of unsuccessful, behind-closed-doors efforts last week to find a compromise. "You go back to square one."

Japanese CEO sees both sides

By JACK SWANSON
Hearst Feature Service

HACHIOGI, Japan — Want to know why U.S.-made products have such a tough time competing in Japan? Ask YHP President Kenji Sasaoka.

Sasaoka is in a unique position to know both sides of the controversy over why the Japanese don't buy more U.S.-made products and whether Japan restricts access to its markets unfairly. Born in Japan, he heads a highly successful joint-venture company that imports and sells Hewlett-Packard products in Japan.

"People are most important," he says. "You should find out what the people want in order to be successful in the Japanese market." And what Japanese consumers want, he says, is more than just a quality product. That's important. But not enough.

"They worry about after-service," he continues. "If something goes wrong with your product, they want to be sure you will be around to fix it."

YHP, a joint venture between Yokogawa Electric Co. and Hewlett-Packard, imports 60 percent of the products it sells. Many of its products were developed by YHP itself. Hewlett-Packard has manufacturing plants in Singapore, Mexico, Brazil, Canada and the United States.

Last year, YHP won the coveted Deming Award, given each year to a company in Japan that demonstrates outstanding quality control procedures. Only two other international firms — Borg-Warner and Xerox — have won the award, which is named for W. Edwards Deming, the developer of statistical quality control methods who helped the Japanese improve the quality of their products in the 1950s.

Sasaoka, who is 57 but looks 15 or 20 years younger, is exuberant and articulate, and delights in pointing out the American influence on his company. He presides over a campus-like plant about 30 miles outside of Tokyo that employs 500 persons. The atmosphere is that of Silicon Valley rather than the Far East. Low dividers separate small manufacturing areas mixed in among cubicles for bookkeepers and engineers. There is surprisingly little noise. Sasaoka's office door is always open and workers can wander in at any time.

A former quality control manager who is known as "Mr. Quality" at Hewlett-Packard, he has strong opinions about how companies should correct defects in their products.

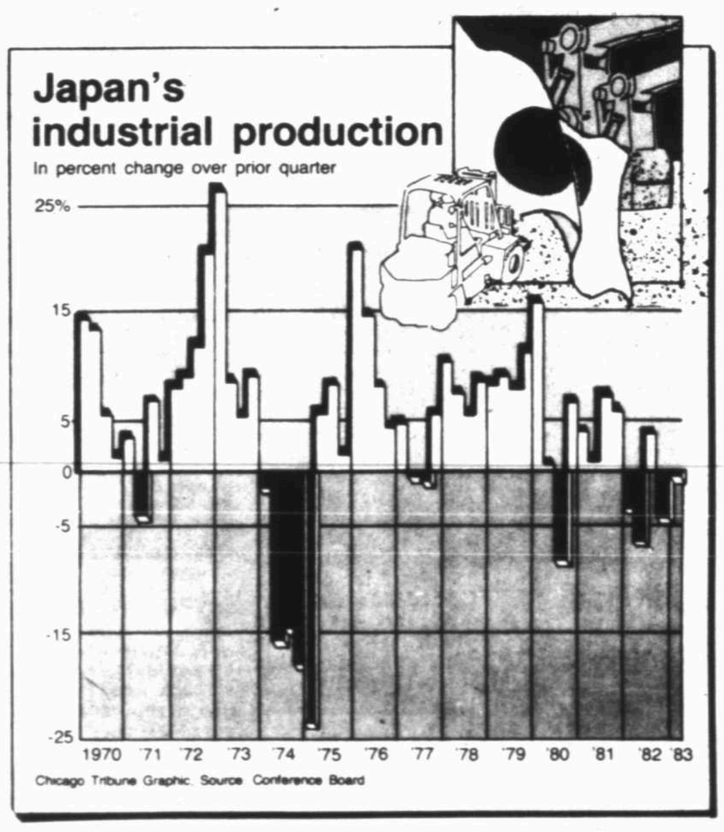

Sasaoka points out that in most companies a new product is designed by one or several bright young engineers. When the design is complete and the product is being manufactured, the designers are assigned a new product. But what happens when, after the product is in use for a while, customers find defects?

In the typical American company, the problems are assigned to a young engineer who may have had nothing to do with the original design. Not so in Japan, Sasaoka maintains. The original designers are held responsible for overcoming their own design problems.

Since the joint venture was formed in 1963, the company has expanded to the point where it controls the largest share of the test equipment market in Japan and is second or third in the minicomputer market, according to Sasaoka.

The big challenge for the next 10 years, he says, is to win a bigger share of Japan's business computer market.

"There are still some minor, disadvantageous practices in our customs and importation procedures," he says, his voice rising an octave on the word minor. "We strongly wish the Japanese government would make these practices much more free."

Customs inspectors, for instance, count every piece of a particular shipment. If the number of pieces doesn't agree exactly with the invoice, the inspector refuses to allow the shipment into the country. Most other countries leave quantity problems to buyers and sellers to thrash out.

Another aggravation is what is known as a "type acceptance test," which is required of all products imported into Japan. Each product is tested to be sure it does what the manufacturer says it will and that it doesn't contain hazardous materials.

"But domestic companies have a big advantage. They can apply much earlier for the test than someone outside the country," he says. "I want the Japanese government to provide the same kind of freedom to import products as other advanced countries do. By placing unnecessary restrictions on imports, we are only hurting ourselves."

Loving stockholders isn't always easy

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

It isn't easy to have a love affair with your stockholders while maintaining a pure balance sheet.

But some companies do it.

They have little or no debt — thus a clean balance sheet — but they manage to keep their shareholders happy by steadily increasing their dividends.

Some of the companies with spotless balance sheets not only have rising dividends — they have high dividends, too. Their yields are very high in relation to the market's yield.

Consider, for example, Exxon, the largest international oil company. Its long-term debt is just 10.6 percent of its total capitalization. "And it has raised its dividend 13 times in the past 10 years. And the growth of the dividend has been 191 percent over that time span," said Geraldine Weiss, editor of Investment Quality Trends, the dividend-monitoring newsletter. And the stock yields a juicy 8.6 percent.

Recently, Standard & Poor's asked its computers to round up stocks that have high yields and dividends that have been raised in each of the past five years. Also, those dividend increases had to exceed the rise of consumer prices.

Three of the stocks selected by S&P also have very little debt. Long-term debt is just 14 percent of the total capitalization of Standard Oil of California, yet the stock yields an impressive 6.9 percent.

Long-term debt is just 21 percent of Xerox's capitalization, but the stock yields 6.5 percent. Debt is just 12 percent of CPC International's capitalization, but it's yielding 5.6. For Standard Oil of Indiana, debt is 25 percent of capitalization, but the yield is 5.7 percent.

There are virgins out there — companies with absolutely no long-term debt. One is American Home Products. Its dividend has been upped 17 times in the last decade for a 300 percent cumulative increase. But it's yielding 4.6 percent.

Kellogg is almost pure — debt is less than 1 percent of capitalization. The dividend has gone up 11 times in the past 10 years — a 191 percent rise. And the yield is 5.2 percent.

Weiss pointed out that Lubrizol, with debt just 3.7 percent of capitalization, has raised its dividend seven times in the past 10 years, and the increase has been a whopping 414 percent. Moreover, the stock yields 4.6 percent. Eastman Kodak has little debt (7 percent of capitalization), has raised its dividend regularly and the stock yields more than 4 percent.

Companies with little debt and a history of raising their dividends "are the royal blue chips, as opposed to the blue chips or faded blue chips. The evidence indicates that these companies have superior managements, know what they are doing, continue to keep balance sheets clean and continue to pay good dividends," said Weiss.

NYSE, American capitalism share history

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — To visit the New York Stock Exchange is to visit the history of American capitalism, reaching back to 1792.

Brokers no longer trade shares under a buttonwood tree at 68 Wall Street; the Exchange has since moved to more elaborate quarters at 11 Wall. And the ticker tape doesn't come out of funny little machines; information is now fed into computers and read out of giant cathode ray tubes overlooking the floor — which even without the ticker is still littered with tiny scraps of paper from shortly after the Exchange opens at 10:00 a.m. until the final bell at 4 p.m.

The method of trading remains the same. Someone approaches a specialist with an offer to buy, another with an offer to sell, and the specialist "makes a market." It is a quaint, old-fashioned, and a very efficient way of doing business.

But the doyens of the NYSE are not standing still. Beginning in 1976 with the introduction of high-speed tickers capable of transmitting 36,000 characters a minute, they have been continually upgrading their systems to meet the demands of the electronic age. Part of this was due to their very accurate projections about the current burst in trading. Ten years ago, a 25 million share day would have been considered reason for glee. Today, a 100 million share day is not unusual (the record of 149.5 million shares was set Nov. 4, 1982).

"The Exchange has got to keep looking at itself," said Peter D. Moore, the Exchange's new, youngish (39) SVP for communications. "When you've been in business 191 years and you are the most significant financial institution in the world, you can't afford to be complacent."

William "Mil" Batten and John J. Phelan Jr. have been guiding the "genteel reformation." Besides inaugurating the Intermarket Trading System that permits regional exchanges around the country to trade in NYSE stocks throughout the day (and in some cases, improve on the terms being offered in New York), Chairman Batten and President Phelan have recently invested $7 million of the NYSE's easily-earned resources into leasing expensive trading space next door to provide a venue for a new Wall Street Institution — the New York Futures Exhange — where futures in a controversial, new product, the NYSE index, are traded.

The index allows investors to hedge portfolios. If you are heavy in high-tech stocks and you know because of Atari's and Texas Instruments' problems that the industry is going to take a fall, but the market will keep rising, you can buy a contract on the NYSE Composite Index — a weighted average price of more than 1,500 stocks traded on the Exchange.

The problem is that this seems to some a lot more like making book in Las Vegas than making "an investment in American capitalism." Instead of ending up owning a share of a going business and having a say in how it's run, the Index contract buyer has bet on where the market will be.

Decoys tolling profits

From Wire Reports

With wild fowl making their annual trek south to sit out the winter, hunters are looking for better ways to ambush some of them en route.

Canvasback Inc. of Memphis, Tenn., believes that its new line of animated decoys is the answer.

The realistic-looking battery-operated decoys are tethered in the middle or outer edge of a spread of regular decoys. R.E. "Pete" McCrory, who invented the Canvasback decoys, says that the decoys swim for a while, pause and move off in another direction, putting out a wake much like a wild duck's.

No propeller is used (the motor feeds on the tether, changing direction when it reaches a knot), eliminating jamming on marsh grass. The decoys don't use a remote-control device either, McCrory says, because hunters would rather spend their time hunting than operating "a motorboat that looks like a duck."

McCrory's decoys come in mallard, canvasback and pintail species and sell for $149.50 each.

Synfuels project supported by high officials

By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — White House counselor Edwin Meese III interceded personally two weeks ago with the chairman of the federal Synthetic Fuels Corp. in behalf of a giant North Dakota synfuels project that has a $2 billion government loan guarantee but now is seeking a further subsidy.

The project is the Great Plains coal gasification project in Beulah, N.D. Designed to convert coal into synthetic natural gas, it is being built by a consortium of five major energy companies led by Tenneco Inc. and American Natural Resources Co.

Even though the plant is 88 percent complete, these companies have threatened to abandon it unless the semi-independent Synthetic Fuels Corp. adds what amount to price supports to the loan guarantee already granted by the Energy Department.

The companies say they need the supports because of falling world energy prices. The corporation board voted on Oct. 22 not to grant the extra aid, however, unless the consortium also sought further help from Congress.

The companies then turned to friends in the White House and Congress.

ON OCT. 27 corporation Chairman Edward E. Noble was called to a session on Capitol Hill at which House Majority Leader James C. Wright Jr., D-Tex., Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee Chairman James A. McClure, R-Idaho, and Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., who helped pass the legislation setting up the corporation, all demanded that the agency help Great Plains.

Nobel was next called to the White House two weeks ago. There Meese also urged him to prop up the coal-gas project.

Finally, House conferees nine days ago put into the continuing resolution funding some government agencies for the rest of the 1984 fiscal year a provision calling on the corporation "in the strongest possible terms" to provide the price supports to Great Plains.

As a result, the corporation board is widely expected to reverse itself on Great Plains at its next meeting Dec. 1.

Noble declined to discuss his meeting with Meese and said through a spokesman that he continued to stand by the Oct. 22 board decision, but sources said he will recommend to the board that it move to open negotiations with Great Plains.

SOME MEMBERS of Congress with doubts about synfuels subsidies are upset about the pressure that has been placed on Noble.

"There's a real issue here and it is not whether the Great Plains project is deserving of the Synthetic Fuels Corp.'s support," said one congressional source who asked not to be identified. "The public policy issue is whether the White House and key congressmen ought to be telling a corporation set up to make independent judgments which projects to back."

The Energy Department, which has administered the federal loan to Great Plains, and the fuels corporation, established after Great Plains was launched, say the project — one of few to survive the economic shakeout caused by falling oil prices — should be completed.

Assistant Energy Secretary Jan W. Mares calls Great Plains "a valuable national asset" for the country's future energy security, and the Synthetic Fuels Corp. board has termed it "a crucial element in any U.S. synthetic fuels program."

But the corporation, which to date has committed less than 1 percent of the $13.2 billion it expects to distribute by mid-1984 in loan guarantees and price supports, has insisted that Great Plains is not one of its projects and that keeping it alive is the Energy Department's problem.

SOURCES SUGGEST, however, that the Synthetic Fuels Corp.'s reluctance to come to the aid of Great Plains also stems from concern that the consortium is painting a bleaker picture of the economics of the project than is warranted and is trying to "blackmail" the government into giving it more aid.

The owners of the plant have contended that instead of being able to earn a net profit of $1.2 billion in the first 10 years of operation as originally anticipated, they face "losses in excess of $770 million."

They blame the change in prospects on the fact that the pricing formula approved by the government for synthetic gas is tied to the price of heating oil and the producer price index, which have not been rising at the rate they were when the project was launched.

But studies commissioned by the Energy Department and Congress have concluded that the project, even at today's oil prices, is likely to be profitable for its owners when tax implications for the parent companies are considered.

The Synthetic Fuels Corp.'s finance department said its own study of the project's economics, based on confidential data provided by the project's sponsors on their tax situations and outlooks on energy prices, concluded that "the threat of abandonment at this time is, on balance, not yet sufficiently credible to substantiate the need of SFC assistance."

BUT FIVE DAYS after the Synthetic Fuels Corp. rebuffed Great Plains' request for aid it was summoned to a meeting on Capitol Hill with Wright, McClure and Domenici.

Noble was accompanied by Robert Monks, a member of the Synthetic Fuels Corp. board, and general counsel Jeffrey Lipkin. Also present at the meeting were Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel, Mares, and several congressional staff members.

The meeting was described later by one of those who attended as "one of the most heated that ever has taken place on ... (Capitol) Hill."

Wright and McClure, according to sources, told Noble there was "no way" Congress was going to enact new legislation that would enable the Energy Department to provide the aid Great Plains is seeking.

"Wright was really angry," one source said. "He told Noble: 'Here you are putting out all these solicitations trying to find a coal gasification project to fund, and yet one that is 95 percent complete and in trouble comes to you, and you do nothing. How credible do you look?' "

DOMENICI TOLD NOBLE "not to be so damn timid," another source said. "He said: 'If that project is in trouble, and it is, then by God it ought to get assistance.' "

Participants left the meeting believing Noble had gotten the message, but the follow-up meeting with Meese was arranged to make sure.

Meese said his role at the Oct. 27 White House meeting was to be "a referee" between Hodel and Noble. He said that even before the meeting, "the decision was pretty well made" that the Synthetic Fuels Corp. would move to assist Great Plains.

Sources said associate director Frederick N. Khedouri of the Office of Management and Budget, who also attended the White House meeting, emphasized that the administration opposed any effort to have price supports for Great Plains come from the Energy Department rather than the Synthetic Fuels Corp.

The sources said Meese then asked Noble to confirm that the Synthetic Fuels Corp. was drafting a solicitation that would be ready by Dec. 1 and that could open the door to aid for Great Plains, and told him: "This is a big project that is in difficulty and it needs some relief."

A SYNTHETIC FUELS Corp. source subsequently said that Meese "urged us very strongly to provide a framework for providing these price guarantees."

If the Synthetic Fuels Corp. agrees to provide the Great Plains partners with price supports linked to the consortium's repayment of its federally backed loan, the five companies involved in the project could receive an additional subsidy of as much as $1.6 billion.

However, sources suggested that the subsidy ultimately negotiated between the Great Plains partners and the Synthetic Fuels Corp. probably would total somewhat less than this amount.

GULF INVESTORS GROUP

Dear Fellow Gulf Shareholder:

The Gulf Investors Group is convinced that Gulf stock is greatly undervalued. We are dedicated to the goal of enhancing shareholder value and oppose any action that is contrary to that goal. For that reason, we are asking you to help defeat Gulf management's reincorporation proposal at the December 2 shareholders meeting. This proposal would eliminate important shareholder rights and stifle shareholder input.

In response to our legitimate opposition as shareholders to the reincorporation proposal, Gulf management has launched a vicious attack on the Gulf Investors Group and on me. In a recent interview, Harold Hammer, Gulf's executive vice-president, was quoted as saying:

> "We've got to roll up our sleeves and kick him where it really smarts." (The New York Times, November 6, 1983)*

In addition, Gulf's chief executive officer recently said:

> "We will fight anyone who criticizes management's motives and actions." (Pittsburgh Post Gazette, November 10, 1983)*

At Gulf, it seems that any idea that doesn't come from management will automatically be opposed. Based on Gulf's record—described in a November 13 guest column in The New York Times* as "one of the most lackluster records of financial and operating performance of the major integrated oils"—one would hope Gulf management would welcome new ideas.

WE'RE IN THIS TOGETHER

Gulf management has questioned our objectives and has attempted to persuade you that our interests are contrary to yours.

Do not be misled: Our sole objective is to participate in the enhancement of the value of Gulf stock on an equal basis with all Gulf shareholders. We will not sell one share of our Gulf stock back to Gulf unless all shareholders have the same opportunity.

Before we began our purchases, the price of Gulf stock was in the mid-30s. Gulf stock now trades at about $44. Ask yourself what Gulf stock will sell for if we do not defeat management's reincorporation proposal.

Remember:
Our Gain is Your Gain.
Our Loss is Your Loss.

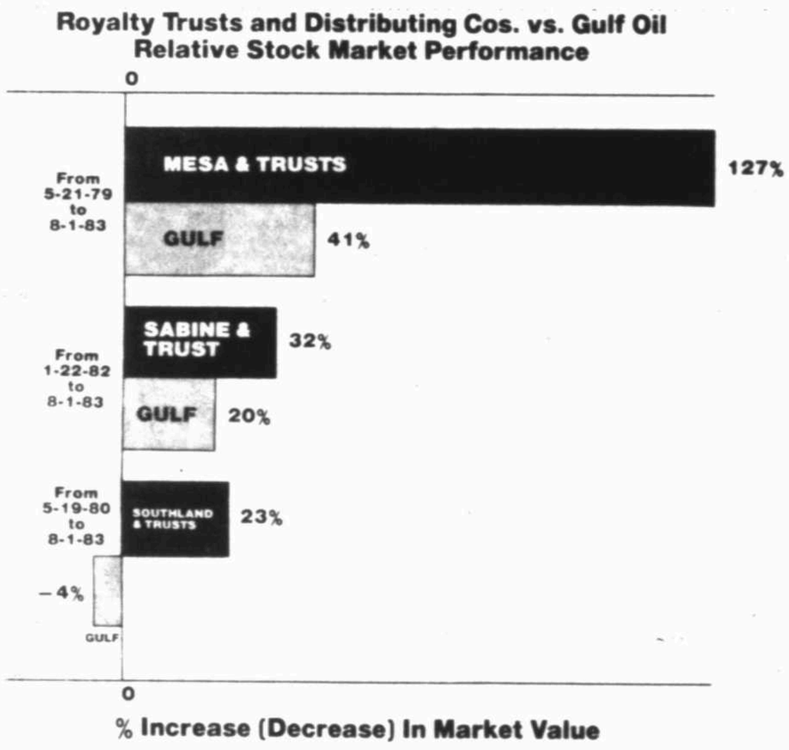

According to management's proxy materials, Gulf directors and officers as a group own only 324,693 shares. The Gulf Investors Group owns 17,932,700 shares—an investment of nearly $800 million—purchased at an average cost of about $44 per share. Ask yourself which group is more interested in maximizing the value of Gulf stock.

A GULF ROYALTY TRUST

We believe shareholder value would be increased by the creation of a royalty trust. A Gulf royalty trust would provide shareholders, in addition to their Gulf shares, with publicly traded securities entitling them to a direct interest in the net profits from a portion of Gulf's oil and gas properties.

A recent guest column in The New York Times pointed out that Gulf's "rich oil and gas reserves, which on their own could be highly profitable, are buried in a corporate body along with many low-value, even worthless, parts." (The New York Times, November 13, 1983)*

Another guest column on the same date stated that "since the shareholders are the owners for whom (Gulf) management works, it is questionable whether the current corporate structure works to their greatest advantage. Thus, Mr. Pickens's proposed plan makes good investment sense." (The New York Times, November 13, 1983)*

Even after creating a royalty trust covering 50% of Gulf's U.S. reserves, we believe Gulf would remain a very substantial major integrated oil company with sufficient cash flow to conduct an aggressive exploration program and carry out its other corporate objectives. Gulf would also continue to control the use of the oil and gas produced from the properties subject to the trust.

Gulf management opposes creation of a royalty trust because certain shareholders would have to pay taxes on the distribution of the trust interests and the distribution would not be accompanied by cash with which to pay taxes. Although there can be no assurance, we believe the enhancement in the value of the shareholder's investment which could be achieved by a trust would substantially exceed the related tax liability.

Personally, I'd rather make some money and pay some taxes than not make money at all.

Royalty trusts have a strong record of enhancing shareholder value over the near and longer term. The above chart compares the stock market performance of Gulf to companies that have distributed 25% or more of their U.S. oil and gas reserves in the form of royalty trusts. Stock market performance of the distributing companies includes the price of the distributed trusts and is measured from a date one month prior to announcement of each trust to August 1, 1983 (shortly before the Gulf Investors Group began its purchases of Gulf stock).

Vote AGAINST management's reincorporation proposal

- Don't give up the right of a 10% shareholder to propose a charter amendment and cause it to be voted on by all shareholders.
- Don't give up the right of a 20% shareholder to call a special meeting of shareholders.
- Don't give up the right of all shareholders to cumulative voting in the election of directors.

IMPORTANT: Through the reincorporation proposal, Gulf management is trying to insulate itself from shareholders' ideas such as a royalty trust. If we don't defeat management's reincorporation proposal, you may never even get the opportunity to vote on the royalty trust issue.

You don't have to decide whether you are FOR or AGAINST a royalty trust at this time. The most important thing for you to decide is whether you want to preserve your right to have shareholder ideas such as a royalty trust come before you at some future time.

Thank you.
On behalf of the Gulf Investors Group

Costume creator

The ivory lace has been carefully clipped from an antique dress, and now goes on the new version of a fashion re-creation fashion for the production of "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Mae Dawson rummages through one of the boxes for a particular fabric in creating a certain look for a costume.

As a child, Mae Dawson fancied herself dressed up in beautiful, glamorous clothes. Today, she creates them for others.

As costumer for Midland Community Theatre, Mrs. Dawson stitches together her vivid imagination, drawing skills and sewing talent into hundreds of costumes depicting almost every period in history.

Boxes with contents marked clearly in black ink, shelves of old hats, racks upon racks of used clothes and cabinets filled with laces stack up her world inside the theater's basement. It's a world she's woven since she was a teenager growing up in Midland.

At the age of 10, Mrs. Dawson learned to sew at the hands of her grandmother, "and I'm now 53," she laughed.

She began hanging around the theater when she was 16 and Art Cole, the former director, hemmed her in. "Art Cole trained me. I would say, 'I can't do that.' And he would say, "Oh, but you can. It's all up here,'" she said, pointing her index finger at her head.

THE GLAMOROUS world of the theater kept pulling her in, and she donated all her spare time for years just to be able to sew her creative talent into a concrete form. Five years ago, she was put on the staff.

"I've aged a lot down here," said Mrs. Dawson, her platinum hair pulled back. "Some shows more than others."

A costumer must read the script, research the time period and work with the director on the year and season he wants for the setting. Then there's the set designer to consider — colors of the costumes can't clash with the backdrop. And the volunteer seamstresses from all areas of the community are pressed for time as the show's opening nears.

Mrs. Dawson is facing an opening night and looking at unfinished costumes. On Dec. 2, "Arsenic and Old Lace" opens and all the clothes must reflect a 1910-1920 period.

She's pulled from her stock of antique clothes to re-create in a union of old and new costumes. Picking up the bodice of a plum-colored dress, Mrs. Dawson compared it with the original — an 1890s dress hanging in her stock of 73,000 garments. She had ripped it apart, drawing a pattern for the new counterpart, and carefully unstitched the ivory lace that will be placed on the plum fabric.

Fourteen hours already had been devoted to that one dress with its dozens of tiny tucks, and it wasn't near completion.

THE PLAY is about two eccentric old women, Abby and Martha, who still live in a Victorian house and dress in a Victorian style. People rent rooms in the house and the women feel sorry for those who have no family. To put these renters out of their misery, the women give them elderberry wine with arsenic. A nephew who thinks he is Teddy Roosevelt digs his "Panama Canal" in the basement each time the women want to dispose of a body.

Creating the costumes for opening night often isn't the only headache. Last minute cast changes can rip holes in a finely-tuned production in terms of costumes.

That happened in "Taming of the Shrew." Director Ted Strickland, who is over 6 feet tall, had to step in for a much smaller cast member. Mrs. Dawson and her volunteers had 1 hour and 15 minutes to design him a costume, sew it and get him dressed. "We got the clothes on Ted one minute before he walked on stage. It gets a little hairy here at times. You live on promises — 'we're going to make it.'"

Despite the intricate look of tucks and tiny buttons, most costumes are designed for fast changes. Pulling apart a strip of Velcro, Mrs. Dawson said they've opted for the new type of closure over zippers.

"You can get into a lot of trouble with zippers." On one dress, she had to replace a zipper 18 times, and that was after all her experienced efforts at repairing it failed.

Without donations from the community, the theater's supply of costumes, and especially the antiques, would be small. Mrs. Dawson keeps almost everything, knowing it can be ripped apart and used for a pattern and placed in pieces on 10 different costumers.

SHE'S KEPT A large supply of antiques, some so old that she's going to donate them to the Midland County Historical Society. "There are three hats going back to 1870. And a hoop skirt frame of ivory — the real McCoy. And a beaded black cape that could go back to 1860. In those days they sewed with silk threads and it all stayed together."

Before one production is on stage, Mrs. Dawson is thinking of the next, and the next. She's mulling over ideas in her head about "Annie." And she's already collecting items for the March production of "Lion in Winter," a play set in the 1400s, a time period that excites her.

It's these very old settings that pluck her creative juices. Her favorite production for costuming, she said, was "Tartuffe."

"We had gorgeous costumes for that. The year was 1570. They were all elaborate," all designed by Mrs. Dawson and sewn by her volunteers.

To get the fabrics she wanted, she raided a drapery shop going out of business and pulled draperies out of another woman's home. "You can't use polyester on these period costumes."

Once the production is over, these clothes go into the costume shop where they are rented to the public.

Walking among the clothes stacked three racks high, she said, "I have blood, sweat and tears hanging everywhere.

"I always imagined myself wearing beautiful clothes. Now I wear anything and create beautiful clothes for others."

She died Saturday evening in a Stanton hospital.

She was a homemaker and a member of the Church of Christ.

Betty Stark

Services for Mrs. Betty Stark of 3104 Auburn Dr., will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the chapel of Midland's First Baptist Church.

She died Sunday afternoon in a Midland hospital. Burial will be in a Midland cemetery, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Environmentalists battle over forest

LUFKIN (AP) — Environmentalists say they are making headway in their fight to keep chainsaws out of Texas national forests, but to East Texans who work for the timber industry, they are "fern fondlers" who want to take away jobs.

In Angelina National Forest, hundreds of giant oak and magnolia trees already marked for cutting were granted an unusual stay of execution last month when the U.S. Forest Service decided to delay a scheduled 36-acre timber sale.

The delay was hailed as a major victory by Texas environmentalists who are battling to preserve about 65,000 acres in the state's four national forests as wilderness.

A bill sponsored by U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, that would outlaw logging in the wilderness areas faces stiff opposition from an East Texas congressman labeled "Timber Charlie" for his support of the lumber industry.

U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, has introduced a rival bill, backed by the Forest Service, that would set aside only 9,000 acres of wilderness.

"When my constituents visit the woods, they shouldn't have to use machetes — they want picnic tables and toilets," said Wilson, who ridicules environmentalists as "fern fondlers" and "orchid sniffers."

Bryant's bill is stalled in Congress. Meanwhile, the Forest Service has stepped up its timber leasing programs in Texas, environmentalists claim. Another 400 acres of timber, included in the wilderness proposal, will be sold in January to the highest bidder.

"It's a Catch-22 tactic," said Ned Fritz chairman of the Texas Committee on Natural Resources. "As soon as they start cutting, the Forest Service can deny that the land is wilderness."

Opposition to the bill is strong in Lufkin where thousands of workers are employed in sawmills, pul mills and paper factories.

"Wilderness means no jobs," warned a bumper sticker distributed by the Texas Forestry Association. According to industry estimates, forest-product industries employ more than 20,000 workers in East Texas.

Although the proposed wilderness area represents less than 1 percent of the 16 million acres of commercial timberland in East Texas, it threatens to chip away at the power of the timber industry, conservationists claim.

"Clearly, 65,000 acres is nothing," said Carlton Carl, a Bryant aide. "It's a drop in the bucket. I think the timber industry is reacting mainly out of fear of the comino theory — that if they let a few acres go, it will all go."

The Forest Service said it agreed to postpone indefinitely last month's planned 36-cre timber cutting in Angelina because the tract was small and the sale had not been scheduled for long. However, there were no plans for other delays, officials said.

The feud over Texas' national forests has been raging off and on since 1936, when Congress voted to purchase four national forests in the state. The Forest Service has been attacked repeatedly for a management policy that favors the planting of fast-growing loblolly pines instead of native hardwood and pine trees.

"The public thinks that national forests are protected, but that's totally untrue," said Bryant. "The men of the Forest Service are interested in board feet and board feet only. They have no interest in wilderness at all. They're interested in raising trees as fast as possible and cutting them down for lumber."

Wall Street expects record high trading from Bell stock

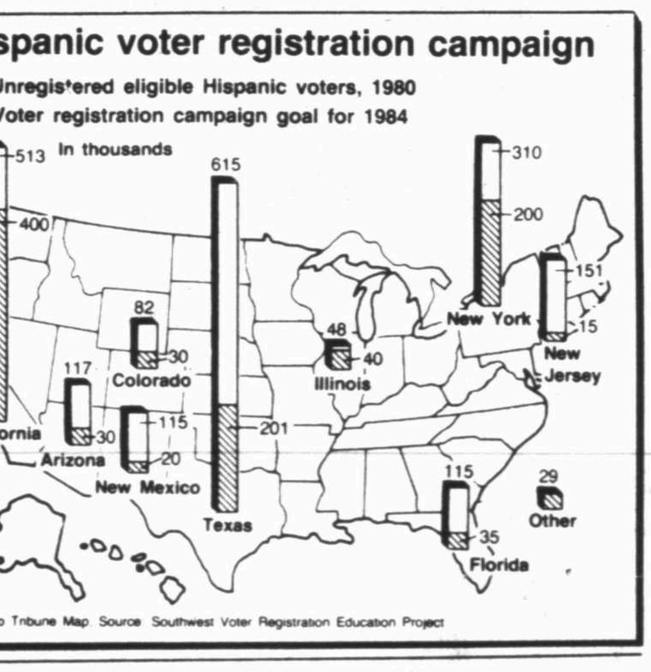

By CHET CURRIER
Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street's financial storekeepers braced for record business today as they put some long-awaited merchandise on their shelves — more than 1.5 billion shares of stock resulting from the breakup of Ma Bell.

The new pared-down American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and seven regional companies taking over local telephone service will not actually exist as separate entities until Jan. 1, when the Bell System divestiture becomes official.

But as part of the breakup plan, their stocks were slated to begin trading at 10 a.m. today on a "when-issued" basis, with sales and purchases made now to be settled through payment and delivery of stock early in 1984.

The 1.5 billion shares make up the biggest one-day introduction of new stock in the history of the New York Stock Exchange.

Study: Women officers more aggressive than men

DALLAS (AP) — A study of female police officers in Texas and Oklahoma has found that the women fear danger more than their male counterparts but are more aggressive because they believe they have to prove themselves.

"Women officers feel more danger than men do, but on the other hand they are less likely to overlook infraction," said James A. Davis, assistant professor of political science at Oklahoma State University who conducted the study.

"The bottom line is that women are trying harder. They are more conscientious," Davis said.

Davis surveyed 2,300 police officers in Texas and Oklahoma for his study, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

"Our concern for our safety has more to do with our size," said Dallas police Lt. Deborah Melancon, one of the department's highest-ranking women.

"Anyone would be a fool not to realize that a 6-foot-10-inch person can be better handled by someone who is also 6-foot-10," said the 5-foot-4-inch officer.

Dallas police officer Rose Germano said women officers are stricter because they feel they have to show they cannot be intimidated.

"A man is only tested once. We're tested day after day after day," she said.

"And it has to loom in the back of our minds that we don't want to take it too easy with some people because they will think they can take advantage of us. Some people think they can intimidate us because we're women," Ms. Germano said.

Women long have been given law enforcement status in the two states, but only in the last decade have large numbers been given patrol assignments.

One of every 14 law enforcement officers in the two states is now a woman, the report said.

The study also found that women are more cynical about why people obey the law.

"Women tend to think people follow the law out of fear of being caught rather than out of habit or because it is the right thing to do," Davis said.

Investigators examine wreckage from collision

BAYTOWN (AP) — Federal investigators have begun examining the wreckage of a Southern Pacific train that rammed a line of idle freight cars, killing four men and injuring a fifth.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board, the Federal Railroad Administration, the Texas Railroad Commission and Southern Pacific took measurements, checked equipment and reviewed operating procedures for clues to the crash, Southern Pacific spokesman Tony Aleman said Sunday.

He said initial evidence indicated that "the train should have been able to stop."

The wreck occurred Saturday in a yard where trains are assembled for cross-country hauling. Aleman said it was traveling at the maximum allowed speed of 20 mph.

"That's the fastest they can go. The restriction was set because there may be times where something is blocking the tracks," he said.

The accident was the second fatal train wreck in Texas in eight days.

Forty-one cars were parked on the track so they could be switched to another train, Aleman said. "It's done all the time," he said.

The train — an engine, a caboose and 12 tank cars — was traveling along a wooded gully near Baytown, about 30 miles east of Houston, when it hit the line of 41 parked freight cars, authorities said.

Two tank cars were knocked aside and a third tanker laden with jet fuel rammed into the cabin at the rear of the engine and came to rest on top of the crew cabin.

Aleman could not say when the investigation would be completed, the wreckage removed and the tracks repaired.

Four dead crewmen and a fifth who suffered broken legs and a broken arm, lay in the wreckage and jet fuel leaked from the tanker for two hours before other rail workers discovered the accident as they began hauling away cars from the undamaged end of the line.

The small leak was plugged Saturday evening, Aleman said.

The dead were identified as G.A. Stewart, 31, of Pasadena, and fireman C.C. Hutchison, 35; engineer J.R. Sandras, 33; and brakeman E.C. Hallmark, 59, all of Houston.

J.W. Muchow, 41, of Hempstead, a conductor, was flown by helicopter to Hermann Hospital in Houston, where he was in stable condition Sunday. He was the only one of the five crewmen still conscious when the wreckage was discovered.

On Nov. 12, four people died when an Amtrak train derailed near Marshall in East Texas.

Snakebite victim goes home

BROWNWOOD (AP) — Nurses pause and smile as they pass her old room.

The spry little woman in Room 211 has gone back home to the country.

She arrived at the Brownwood Regional Hospital Sept. 1 after suffering two bites from a rattlesnake. The nurses and therapists are going to miss 91-year-old Willie Dunn, who was a patient almost two months.

She was admitted to the hospital in the wee hours of the morning.

The nightmare began around 4 a.m. when the woman's dog barked outside. As she always did in the past, Mrs. Dunn grabbed her robe and a flashlight and, armed with a hoe, went out to see what was going on.

She heard the tell-tale rattles of the snake.

She reached the snake and began hitting at it with a hoe. Over and over she struck at the reptile and suddenly the rattling ceased. But in all the commotion, the batteries fell out of the flashlight and Mrs. Dunn thought the snake was dead. She reached down to the ground to gather up the batteries. The snake, apparently still very much alive, bit her twice right behind the index finger on the back of her right hand.

Texas nursing homes plan self-inspections

DALLAS (AP) — A program of "peer reviews" of nursing homes may be "one of the most significant" steps the industry has taken to police itself, according to the Texas Nursing Home Association, which approved the plan at its annual convention this weekend.

The unannounced inspections would be conducted by members of the association with expertise in various areas, such as nursing care, diet, pharmacy and medical records, association officials said.

Beginning in January, the inspections would be required before a nursing home or care facility could become a member of the association. Membership is renewed annually.

Those who fail inspection would have their memberships suspended or revoked, the association said.

The results of the inspections would not be made public, however, said Sidney Rich, president of the association.

"This may well be one of the most significant steps we have taken to assure quality care (in nursing homes)," said Rich. "It's our effort, if you will, to clean up our own industry."

The program was announced here Saturday at the organization's 33rd annual convention.

The association also unveiled a new "Assessment of Quality" manual for member homes to measure their own compliance with government standards.

The association's 1,400 members represent about 77 percent of the 105,000 licensed nursing home beds in the state, Rich said.

Texas Department of Health officials, who reviewed the manual before it was published, called it a "step in the right direction."

"They may help each other get in better shape," Howard Allen, chief of the health department's bureau of long-term care, told the Dallas Times Herald in an interview Friday.

Rich estimated that the association would need a pool of at least 50 inspectors. The reviews, which will take about a day, will be conducted by at least five members, he said.

The manual and inspection programs were announced in conjunction with the association's decision to expand its membership and change its name.

MMH expected to adopt plan in support of MISD

A resolution in support of Midland Independent School District is expected to be adopted during regular meetings of the Midland Memorial Hospital governing boards, beginning at noon Tuesday.

The regular meetings, moved up two days because of Thanksgiving Day, also will include approval of the architect's contract and that of the general contractor for the 77-bed expansion project. Both trustees and directors will hear committee reports, including one on the annual meeting of the Board of Governors.

A request from residents of the Ridgewood Subdivision in far west Midland County for the annexation of more than 4,000 acres of MISD land into the Ector County Independent School District is being fought by MISD officials. Hospital officials are expected to support the school district in its attempts to keep the area in MISD. Regardless of the school districts, the land will remain in Midland County and, therefore, under the jurisdiction of the Midland County hospital and junior college districts.

Blood test could speed detection of leukemia

DALLAS (AP) — Scientists say a new discovery may lead to a simple blood test that will help doctors detect recurrence of childhood leukemia earlier and less painfully and allow treatment to be started sooner.

The test was the result of a discovery by University of Texas Southwestern Medical School researchers. They found that children with acute leukemia have higher levels of a certin enzyme than other children.

The enzyme is known as terminal deoxynucleotidyl transferase.

Currently, doctors must use the painful procedure of extracting bone marrow through a large syringe to detect when a child is no longer in remission, researchers said last week.

"These (bone marrow tests) are done very two to three months," said Dr. George Buchanan, director of hematology-oncology at Children's Medical Center. "But they are painful and expensive. It's a big deal for the child and his family."

If the new test turns out to be effective, it could be done with a simple blood test taken routinely from leukemia patients, Buchanan said.

The test, he said, could "allow us to give those predicted for relapse larger doses of chemotherapy and those doing well smaller doses."

By the time the current test detects the recurrence, "there already are millions of leukemia cells," Buchanan said.

"Initial therapy of children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia produces a remission 95 percent of the time," he said. "But about 50 percent of the children will have a recurrence. There has been no way of predicting these relapses. By the time it comes back it comes back in a big way. Those kids almost always die."

Researchers using the test on 23 children in remission were able to pick seven of the nine children whose leukemia recurred before currently available tests were able to detect it. The 14 children without high levels of the enzyme stayed in remission.

Seven Midland firemen responded to a house fire Sunday afternoon while police investigated burglaries of an auto and a residence over the weekend.

A vacant house at 1109 Ainslee was blazing on arrival at noon Sunday, and 200 gallons of water were used to extinguish it. Owned by Lloyd A. Wright, the house sustained heavy damage to the furnace and attic and minor smoke damage throughout. Cause of the fire was determined to be from a faulty furnace.

Donnie Lawson, of rural Midland, reported the burglary of his automobile while it was parked at the Eagles Club, 4204 W. Highway 80 early Sunday morning. Three tool boxes containing assorted tools were reported missing. Total value was placed at $3,070.

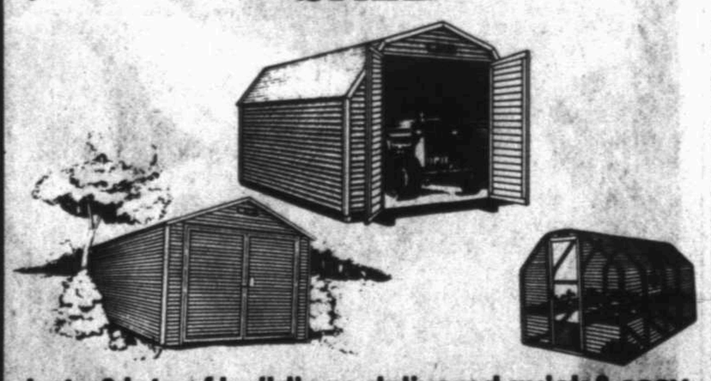

Carolyn Wallace, of 4709 W. Cuthbert, reported a burglary at 611 S. Calhoun at 4:40 p.m. Saturday. Entry was gained through a north window and household items worth $4,000 were reported taken.

Crimean wines known worldwide

The Magarach Research Institute, on the outskirts of Yalta in the Crimea of the Soviet Union, is one of the world's oldest institutions devoted to the study of wine. Since 1828 scientists at the institute have worked to improve the grapes and produce new wines.

The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

YALTA, U.S.S.R. — They call the southern coast of the Crimea the "Napa Valley of the Soviet Union."

Miles and miles of vineyards thread the mountain slopes and fill the valleys, a terrain markedly similar to coastal areas of Northern California.

There is in fact a touch of America here. The grapevines were all grafted to American rootstock to rid the Crimea of the pest phylloxera that once wreaked havoc here, as it did in many other parts of the world.

Moreover, one of Yalta's busiest streets is named for the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt met with Josef Stalin and Winston Churchill in February 1945. There are no streets here named for Stalin or Churchill.

The Soviet Union ranks third among the world producers of wine, after Italy and France. Its annual production is 909 million gallons, twice the output of the United States, and it exports wine to 20 nations. The United States is not one of them.

At a recent wine-tasting here. Natasha Koral'Kova held up a glass of rich red wine and said, "This is the wine our Soviet cosmonauts are drinking in space — Alushta, from the mountain valleys not far from here."

A dozen wines were made available, all wines of the Crimea, "Kokur," which tastes like sweet raisins, and a hearty wine called "Bastardo."

Another, called "the Pearl of the Steppes," has the aroma of a Crimean flower. The "piece de resistance" at the tasting was a sparkling wine, the Soviet answer to Champagne.

The biggest winery in Yalta is Massandra, which is renowned throughout the Soviet Union and traces its beginnings to the 18th Century. Massandra has one of the most impressive wine cellars in the Soviet Union with more than 700 types, including a 1775 Sherry and an 1837 Madeira.

Before the Germans invaded the Crimea in World War II, the Massandra wine collection was shipped out of the area and hidden until the war was over.

At the Magarach Research Institute, on Yalta's outskirts, scientists have been working since 1828 to improve the grapes, developing new varieties and hybrids and producing new wines. It is one of the oldest grape and wine research centers in the world.

Eugene Bouzni, a spokesman for the institute, told a recent visitor that tons of wild rootstock gathered in the Mississippi Valley were taken to the Crimea and local vines were grafted onto it to win the battle against phylloxera.

One hundred and fifty scientists from the eight wine-producing republics of the Soviet Union live and work at the institute, which is a graduate school for the country's leading enologists.

Researchers from many nations, including a handful of Americans, have also studied here. Maynard Amerine, a respected enologist at the University of California, Davis, has been a guest researcher here.

Amerine has written about Magarach and the Soviet wine industry in Wines and Vines, the industry's monthly publication.

"Magarach is a major grape and wine research station staffed by a number of outstanding scientists," Amerine has said. "It has played a key role in the modernization of the Soviet wine industry."

Dieters' refrain: Don't tell me bread isn't fattening!

NEW YORK (AP) — You are about to order a Scotch and soda when a voice inside you says, "Now, now — you're on a diet." With a sigh, you forget about the Scotch and order the dieter's drink of choice: a glass of white wine.

The fact is that a glass of white wine has about as many calories as a shot of Scotch. But don't try to tell that to the legions of dieters who swear by it.

And don't try to tell them that potatoes are a perfectly good, nutritious food. The dieters' gospel is that potatoes are fattening. But a dieter worth his starch knows better — it's the butter and sour cream that add calories.

The same thing goes for bread. How many dieters pat themselves on the back as they gobble a hamburger — a notoriously high fat item — but leave the bun?

Bread may actually help weight loss. One study found that volunteers required to eat eight slices of bread every day lost weight. The bread filled them up and they ate less of everything else.

Much information about dieting is spread by word of mouth and has no more truth to it than Chicken Little's warning that the sky was falling.

The fundamental law of dieting is that if you burn off more calories of energy than you consume in food, you will lose weight.

But trying to lose weight by simply cutting down on food is pure drudgery. And it might not work. The factors that control the body's metabolism and the size of our waistlines remain mysterious.

So we hungrily embrace countless myths and a never-ending succession of gimmicky diets.

An enlightened dieter, one blessed with vision and tenacity in his or her quest for the ideal weight, might turn to science for the truth. Unfortunately, the science of nutrition is a young one, and it often disappoints.

To take one example: It is sometimes said that the body burns up food more efficiently — and stores less fat — if food is eaten in five or six small meals during the day, rather than three normal meals.

"It doesn't make any difference whatsoever," says Dr. Jules Hirsch of the Laboratory of Human Behavior and Metabolism at Rockefeller University in New York.

"Animal experiments suggest it would be better to eat three meals than six," says Dr. Jerome Knittle, director of the nutrition and metabolism program at New York's Mt. Sinai Hospital.

"It's better to spread the food out. The best thing would be to eat a little bit all the time," says Gerald Combs, director of the human nutrition program of the Agriculture Research Service, part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

While the authorities are divided on that one, some things are clear. A sampling:

— Although many people who quit smoking gain weight, smoking itself seems to have little to do with keeping weight down. "People who stop smoking either eat more or become less active," says Hirsch.

— Skipping a meal, say breakfast or lunch, is not a good way to lose weight. "It turns out most people eat as much between meals as they would have if they'd eaten the meal," says Dr. Johanna Dwyer, director of the Frances Stern Nutrition Center at New England Medical Center Hospital in Boston.

— Contrary to what some believe, drinking a lot of water does not help speed weight loss. The idea, says Hirsch, is "silly." Drinking water doesn't burn calories faster or wash away fat, he says, although it might seem to have those effects in some people because it makes them feel filled up.

— There is no evidence to suggest that when you eat less, your stomach shrinks and you don't get as hungry. "I wish that were true," says Hirsch.

The claims that dieters make often "have a quasi-scientific basis," says Knittle. "Hunger is such a complicated phenomenon. There's so much mythology out there. ...

"You can't necessarily take an animal experiment and extrapolate it to the human experience, because rats are not people," he says. "You have to be very careful about what's in the scientific literature and how it applies to man."

As to whether there is a quick fix, a snappy, easy way to lose weight, the news is bad.

"There's no food that burns more calories or drive them away or anything of that sort," Hirsch says. "You can get very skinny on chocolate bars if you don't eat anything but that, and in very small amounts. What matters is following a diet that is not harmful and is low in calories."

Thanksgiving dinner stuffed with calories

By The Associated Press

A traditional Thanksgiving dinner with turkey, sweet potatoes, onions, green beans, cranberries, pumpkin pie and coffee has 1,471 calories per serving. A normal adult male consumes 2,400 calories each day, a woman 2,100 calories.

Here is a calorie breakdown per serving for that traditional turkey dinner:

— Roast turkey with mushroom-herb stuffing: 343
— Butter toasted green beans: 77
— Cranberry relish salad: 157
— Sweet potatoes with brown sugar, apricot sauce and pecans: 383
— Glazed bittersweet onions: 93
— Apple cider: 116
— Pumpkin pie with cream cheese topping: 300
— Coffee (black): 2

Copley News Service

Versatility is a major virtue of the ornamental pepper. This year, my plants have given our family a great deal of pleasure, both outdoors during the warm season and indoors as highly decorative houseplants.

This matter of plants which deliver double, even triple, value is a garden theme well worth considering. Seed companies realize the value of indoor-outdoor plants easily grown from seed, and there is much breeding being done these days to capitalize on the favorable reaction home gardeners have to such varieties.

This year I grew two mixtures of ornamental peppers. Inferno Mix, a blend of popular varieties like Holiday Cheer and Fiesta, yielded a pleasant diversity of plant and fruit shapes. Most of the fruit was long and tapered, bright red, held upright above the foliage. But some plants bore longer, more curved and elegantly tapered fruit than others.

One plant bore a compact mound of very small leaves, and small fruit dotted above the foliage. This one is still blooming and producing more and more fruit in a cool, sunny window. In the mix there were also purple-fruited peppers.

The other mixture was Candlelight, which was a 1983 all-America winner. It will be listed in many major seed catalogs coming out soon. Candlelight produced very uniform, compact and bushy plants without pinching back — a boon for me as pinching back is one of those little jobs I seem to routinely neglect. The cluster so upright, slender fruit turn bright red when ripe.

Seeds of ornamental peppers can be sown mid-February to early March. Like their larger-fruited sweet pepper relatives, they like a warm germinating temperature of around 70 F. Mine took about two weeks to germinate. To save labor, I planted two seeds to each used paper cup or small plastic pot, and thinned to leave the more promising looking once the plants were up and had begun to grow.

I transplanted my peppers to deep, 6-inch black nursery pots in which plants had been purchased. I use these pots a great deal in the garden, and ask friends to save them when they purchase nursery plants.

At tomato and pepper transplanting time, I set the pots along a sunny edge of lawn, for an ornamental edging, where nothing much will grow because of the woodsy background of evergreen trees and the tangle of roots in the soil.

This is a very pervasive garden problem and nursery and garden center people tell me they're always being asked by customers what can be grown under native evergreens. Here's one solution: sink potted plants where you can dig a hole.

The peppers, of course, need a sunny, hot exposure. Our woodland edge was ideal, with the tree branches headed back high and the exposure being a warm southwesterly one. Once the pots were set in along the lawn's edge, I placed black cinders from our fire pit around them, both to deter pests and to absorb warmth.

During the summer I kept their soil moist and added half-strength liquid fertilizer weekly.

Designers create men's underwear — for women

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

First, she stole his pants. Then his hat. After that his tie. And then the shirt off his back.

So what's left? Well, his underwear, of course. And now that malest of all male apparel has been claimed by women. The menswear influence on women's clothing has breached the final barrier.

Jockey International broke from the gate first, introducing its line a year ago. Ironically, however, it's the Calvin Klein line that's getting the credit for this latest gender-bender, even though their merchandise won't hit many stores until Dec. 1. The difference between the two is Klein's provocative ad campaign and the fact that Women's Wear Daily has hailed the line as the hottest look in women's lingerie since the bikini brief.

Both companies view their lines as more than just underwear; they also can be worn as swimwear, athletic wear and sportswear. And since the companies' expertise is in cotton-knit products, they're staying away from brassieres, which require an entirely different manufacturing process.

JOCKEY CROSSED over for several reasons, according to Carl Radtke, head of national sales for the Kenosha, Wisc.-based firm.

"We're a 107-year-old company, and we were looking for ways to expand our product line. When you're as well entrenched as we are in men's underwear (the company has about 95 percent of the name-brand business), it's difficult to achieve dynamic growth in the area."

It's common knowledge in the industry that women make 70 to 80 percent of underwear purchases for the men in their lives, so the company was convinced that women were familiar with the Jockey label. Though the makers of traditional lingerie, such as Maidenform and Vanity Fair, had added cotton crotches to their fancy panties for comfort reasons, Jockey's research showed a void in the lingerie market — a $2.7 billion a year business — for the kind of sturdy cotton bottoms and tops found in the men's end of the business. The clincher, as far as Radtke is concerned, was the flood of mail the firm has received in recent years from female consumers, requesting that Jockey manufacture products for them.

From ground zero in 1982, Jockey took three simple styles — bikini, hipster and brief, all with scalloped knit elastic waistbands imprinted with the Jockey name — and was able to chalk up sales that now account for 7 percent of the company's total underwear volume — a figure that industry sources estimate is well over $100 million. The physical fitness craze had generated demand for its brand of functional and comfortable undergarments. The line is selling well nationwide, and is strongest in the Northwest.

SIMILARLY, SOURCES at Calvin Klein explain the introduction of women's underwear as part of an overall expansion. They also were mindful that women were buying Calvin's underwear for men (which was launched during the summer of 1982) for their own use — bottoms as well as tops.

For Jockey, regional television commercials in the country's major markets have provided some exposure, and in September the company launched a print media campaign in magazines such as Cosmopolitan, Seventeen, Glamour, Self, Working Woman and People. Included are coupons offering a free underwear sample, and thousands of pairs have already been given away.

Jockey's straightforward four-color ad features three laughing but fully clothed women — a doctor with stethoscope and white coat, a business woman in a dressy tailored suit, and a more creative type in slacks and an argyle sweater — along with three inset shots of the underwear, which is currently available in seven solid colors and three striped versions.

Radtke explained the ad by pointing out that Jockey is "a very conservative company." He went on to remark that "although Diane Steigerwaldt, our chairman of the board and principal owner, is a very contemporary person, she expects a certain taste level. She sets the tone for our ads."

When questioned about the Calvin Klein ads, Radtke said, "We're flattered that Calvin Klein has decided to copy us with the uncovered waistband. But we would never do his kind of ads."

Klein's ads, like those for his jeans, are blatantly sexual in tone, providing an image for otherwise ordinary garments. But rather than dwell upon the sex appeal of those ads — in which a model in a reclining position is clad in a pair of briefs and an undershirt that's hiked up to reveal a breast — the designer says his aim is to satisfy the needs of women who want a look of robust health and fitness regardless of gender.

AS SEXY AS the ads are, the pure cotton underwear is obviously based on his men's styles. The four styles of tops and eight styles of bottoms — even in the wildest of the 24 colors — resemble men's underwear minus the fly. (The fly was kept in the boxer shorts because Klein found that sexy.) The string bikini with its thick elastic band emblazoned with the name Calvin Klein resembles a jock strap.

Bottoms range from $6 to $12.50, while shirts start at $8.50 up to $23 for a reversible style. Though considerably higher than Jockey's — $3.75 to $4.25 underpants and $12.50 for a set of three briefs — Klein's designs run less than what women often pay for other undies.

Not everyone is sold on the new idea. Lore Caulfield, owner and designer of Lore — the Rolls-Royce of elegant silk lingerie — says: "Women and men have wanted and have been waiting for beautiful lingerie for a long time, so I'm not sure who's buying this masculine underwear. As for me, I don't go for a butch look."

Entrepreneur brands old Mustangs

By JOHN L. MITCHELL
The Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — J. Orion Brunk, an energetic man with a toothy smile and an affable personality, contends that the basic ingredient for success in his business is a "good, rust-free body."

"Nine out of 10 times when someone comes in to sell me a car I know the engine ain't worth a damn. Don't talk to me about the engine. Just give me one of those good California rust-free cars with the black license tags."

Old rust-free bodies are essential in Brunk's business because he caters to a special class of fanatic. They call themselves Mustangers.

Brunk, the 49-year-old president of Beverly Hills Mustang Ltd., restores old Mustangs, but not just any Mustang, only those built from 1965 to 1968. "That's when cars were cars, before the plastic chrome," he said.

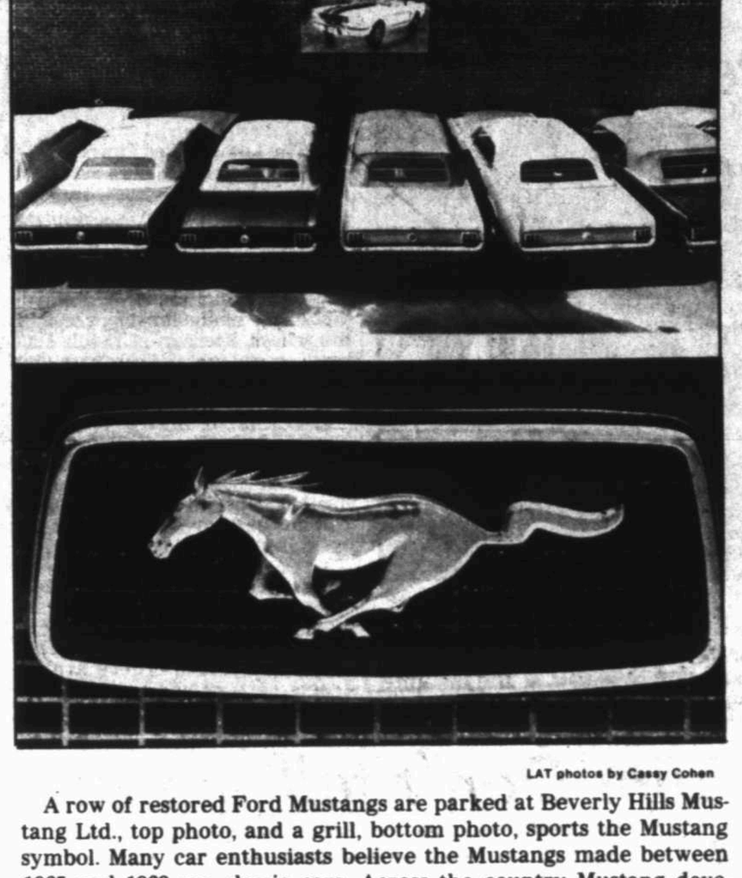

Brunk shops for old, bruised and battered Mustangs that sell for less than $2,000 each. He guts them, bangs out the dents, puts in new engines and interiors, new paint, some tires and sells each car for $8,000 and up.

"They're classics," he said. "They represent an era I want to keep alive, an era of man and his machine. The car is as powerful as all hell and can still beat most cars on the road today."

BRUNK'S RESTORATION company was born in a Beverly Hills warehouse in 1977. A few years later, he moved to Culver City and now he is located in an alley in West Los Angeles. The business is not as prosperous as it was before the recession, but Brunk is convinced that times are changing.

Indeed, he may be right.

Across the country Mustang devotees have formed clubs and organized car shows. There are stores that specialize in parts for the old cars. There are Mustang T-shirts, key chains, stickers and other paraphernalia. There is even a national magazine, Mustang Monthly, which claims a circulation of 25,000.

LAT photos by Casey Cohen

Twenty years ago, when the Mustang was first introduced, it sold for less than $2,500. Recently, two customized 1966 convertibles, built for entertainers Sonny and Cher, were sold to a dealer for $20,000 each.

Brunk keeps about 30 Mustangs in various states of repair, in his garage. In six years, he said, he has bought, restored and sold about 70 cars. Eigbty percent of his work involves repair and restoration work for others. Brunk, who oversees the operation but does none of the restoration work himself, employs about 10 people.

He prefers to swap car stories with the people who come to inspect his collection.

Brunk tells one story of a couple that wanted to have their burgundy-colored Mustang coupe restored. "The guy's grandfather gave the car to him when he was in medical school," Brunk said. "He wanted it restored just like new.

"After I finished the job, they came by to see it. The wife started crying and the doctor told me: 'You know, this car has a real sentimental value for us. Our first child was conceived in the back seat.' "

SINCE 1964, Ford has produced more than 6 million Mustangs. That year the car made the cover of Time and Newsweek, won awards for excellence in design and was named Motor Trend magazine's car of the year.

Ford Motor Co. is planning to mark the Mustang's 20th anniversary with the introduction of a limited edition Mustang that will carry the famous Mustang emblem, Bill Carroll, a Ford Division spokesman in Dearborn, Mich., said.

Recently, a survey of Mustang Monthly readers showed that the average subscriber owned 3.5 Mustangs and preferred the 1965 and '66 models.

"My granddaddy bought a brand new GT hardtop in 1966," Donald Farr, the editor of Mustang Monthly said. "My daddy bought me a brand new 1970 for high school graduation and those were my first close association with the Mustang." Farr owns two Mustangs. "I consider myself a conservative fanatic."

Included in Brunk's Mustang stock are four 1966 GT 350 Shelby Convertibles, Brunk's share of 12 cars commissioned by manufacturer Carroll Shelby. Back in 1966, when Shelby was making racing cars, he produced only six of those convertibles, considered very rare today.

Three years ago, Shelby contracted Brunk to make 12 more of the convertibles from old 1966 factory stock. Shelby took four of the convertibles, Brunk took four and they sold the remaining four at $40,000 each. The men planned to register the cars as original 1966 Shelbys, built in 1980.

DEAR ABBY

Runaway hotline brings parents peace of mind

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing your column of Nov. 17, 1981, with a request that you please run it again. It changed our lives. — ALSO GRATEFUL IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ALSO: With pleasure:

DEAR ABBY: Our problem daughter, not quite 17, ran away from home 14 months ago. She had been giving us a rough time for about a year — skipping school, staying out late and lying to us constantly. After a noisy scene, she stormed out of the house with only the clothes on her back. We didn't have a clue as to where she went.

Only a parent who has lived through this kind of nightmare can realize what we went through. After a year of heartaches and sleepless nights, we were told by the police to give up and assume she was dead. But parents never give up. We continued to search and hope and pray that she'd return to us one day.

Well, our prayers were answered when, out of the blue, we received a telephone call from someone who said he was a volunteer with Runaway Hotline (formerly Operation Peace of Mind) in Houston. (We live in Michigan.) We were told that our daughter had read of the toll-free number in "Dear Abby" and she wanted to let us know that she was well and happy in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.! The volunteer said our daughter would call him again on the following morning in case we had a message for her.

We told him we would welcome a collect call from her. Sure enough, she called us the next day! She sounded wonderful and said she was working and was going to night school to finish her education. This story has a happy ending. Our daughter is coming for Christmas!

Abby, will you please publish that toll-free number again so other runaway kids can establish communications with their families? Our daughter said that she had seen your column with the number posted near telephones where runaways hang out.

We will never be able to thank you enough for giving us the happiest holiday we've ever had! — GRATEFUL IN MICHIGAN

DEAR GRATEFUL: With pleasure. Runaways, call this toll-free number: 1-800-231-6946. If in Texas, use this number: 1-800-392-3352.

An operator will take your call and telephone your parents anywhere in the United States with a message from you. There will be no lecturing or recriminations. Your call will not be traced. And only one question will be asked: "Do you need anything?"

'Holiday impressions' event set

The Midland County Extension Service will present the fourth annual Holiday Impressions event on Tuesday at St. Mark's United Methodist Church Fellowship Hall, 1701 N. Main. The program will be conducted at 9 a.m. and again at 7 p.m.

Candies, floral arrangements, gift wraps and food specialties will be demonstrated and exhibited.

DIET CENTER

HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Because many families celebrate Thanksgiving in the month of November, a lot of time is spent planning and preparing a special and nutritious feast. Perhaps one of the nicest parts of this traditional day is that families sit down to eat together. What a nice change it can be to place the importance on the company, rather than on the foods involved.

Foods digest better when eaten in a calm, relaxed manner. This Thanksgiving, decide ahead of time to make it a pleasant day—a day to relax and appreciate life itself.

Diet Center suggests that you weigh yourself on Thanksgiving morning, just as you do every morning, and resolve that you will not gain weight. It is easy to eat until you feel stuffed and even uncomfortable, but you will enjoy Thanksgiving even more by eating only until you are comfortably full.

Oswald's daughter can't see papers

NEW YORK (AP) — The daughter of Lee Harvey Oswald, alleged assassin of President John F. Kennedy, says crates of information concerning her late father remain unexamined at a Texas university, and not even she has been allowed to look inside.

June Oswald Porter, 21, says the papers were part of her late grandmother's library, which was donated by her uncle to Texas Christian University in Fort Worth. "No one, not even my sister and I," has been allowed to see the collection, she says.

The library consists of "probably the most complete collection of material concerning my father," she says in a bylined article in the current issue of People magazine.

Ms. Porter, whose mother remarried when June was 3, says the papers were given to TCU after Oswald's mother, Marguerite, died without leaving a will.

"Though we have fought to obtain possession of the library, the matter needs to be pursued through the courts," she says.

She also says she first discovered "the hatred people have for the name Oswald" as a freshman at the University of Texas, when a roommate demanded that she move because "her father would not allow her life to be put in danger by living with me."

Ms. Porter describes herself as an aspiring journalist attending a university in the Northeast.

Guion Bluford

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lt. Col. Guion R. Bluford, Jr., the first black American astronaut to go into space, is coming home to a hero's welcome this week as honorary grand marshal of Philadelphia's Thanksgiving Day parade.

Bluford, 41, who blasted off aboard the space shuttle Challenger on Aug. 30., was to kick off a four-day visit today when Gov. Dick Thornburgh and Mayor William Green greet him at City Hall. Other plans for the day include an afternoon reception and an evening testimonial complete with filmed highlights of his space flight.

The mayor proclaimed this week "Guy Bluford Week," and the City Council passed a resolution expressing its "pride in the performance of Philadelphia-born Col. Bluford."

A Philadelphia booster all the way, Bluford took with him into space a city flag and a Liberty Bell lapel pin.

Herschel Walker

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Football star Herschel Walker was among well-wishers welcoming home a unit of Army Rangers that was in the first wave of the U.S. invasion of Grenada, and true to form, the Heisman trophy winner didn't fumble his words of admiration.

"I'd love you to be on my team because you're the best defense," Walker told the Rangers of the 1st Battalion, 7th Infantry, at a hometown salute on Saturday.

Walker, the University of Georgia great who now plays for the United States Football League's New Jersey Generals, joined Secretary of the Army John Marsh and other elected officials for "Ranger Appreciation Day."

The day featured speeches, food, entertainment and an overflight by two C-130 aircraft — the type of plane from which the Rangers leaped into Grenada. Five men from the battalion, based at Hunter Army Airfield, died in the invasion.

ROME (AP) — Michele Di Giesi, a leading member of Italy's centrist Social Democratic Party and a former Cabinet minister, died Sunday of a heart attack, party officials said. He was 56.

He held various Cabinet positions including minister of post and telecommunications and minister of labor. Di Giesi represented the Social Democrats' left-leaning faction and was re-elected in last June's general election.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Joseph G. Sheehan, who stuttered so badly as a boy that he couldn't say his own name then went on to become one of the world's leading authorities on speech, has died at his home of cancer. He was 65.

Sheehan, founder of the Psychology Speech Clinic at the University of California at Los Angeles, was the author of two books and hundreds of articles and had lectured around the world on the methods he found successful in treating stutterers.

Viewers felt favorable towards advertisers of film, poll shows

NEW YORK (AP) — Commodore Computers, with five commercials, headed the list of sponsors for "The Day After" — a list ABC-TV had kept secret to avoid pressure from groups opposing the controversial movie about nuclear war.

Dollar Rent-A-Car, Minolta Cameras and KTEL record albums each bought two spots. Schering-Plough Corp. also had two ads, one for Duration Nasal Spray and another for Maybelline Dial-a-Lash mascara.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of Moral Majority, asked his membership to boycott sponsors buying time in the film. He criticized the movie on grounds it presented a one-sided argument for disarmament, instead of the policy of deterrence he and the Reagan administration favor.

QUBE, a two-way cable TV system based in Columbus, Ohio, polled 5,500 viewers in six cities who watched the movie, and many said they felt more favorable to the advertisers because they had sponsored the show.

Sixty-three precent, or about 3,400 respondents, said they regarded the film as a public service, rather than as just another TV show or as propaganda. Of those, 32 percent said their opinion of the sponsors improved, 2 percent said it got worse, and 66 percent said it didn't change.

Almost all the ads were crammed into the first half of the film before the bombs dropped, sparing sponsors from having their products sold during the most depressing part of the movie. That made for a commercial-free span of 70 minutes — virtually unheard of on prime-time television.

ABC affiliates in Los Angeles and Boston reported receiving dozens of calls during the first hour from people complaining there were too many commercials.

H. Weller Keever, ABC's vice president for sales, said all available commercial time was sold, but he acknowledged the spots went for an average of $100,000, or $35,000 below the network's first asking price.

Keever denied that any inducements were offered to advertisers and added, "If you look at our sponsors, you won't see any of the normal buzzards.

The term "buzzards" refers to sponsors that join a broadcast at the last minute for fire-sale prices.

Other sponsors included Warner-Lambert Co. for its Certs breath freshener; the National Federation of Coffee Growers; Soloflex exercise machine; Orville Redenbacher Popcorn; English Leather cologne; Arm and Hammer carpet and room deodorizer; Mr. Coffee, and Magnavox.

Turkeys will continue to strut their stuff

CHALMETTE, La. (AP) — Tony the turkey has grown from a fluffy chick to a rather surly 40-pound adult. But plump as he is, he and his mate, Tina, don't have to worry — they'll still be strutting their stuff after Thanksgiving.

"We could never eat them," said owner Edward Pope. "We've had them too long now. It's almost a year and a half, and this is their second Thanksgiving with us."

Pope bought the birds as pets for his sons around Easter 1982. But 10-year-old Eric and 6-year-old Joshua don't play with them as much as they once did.

"It's like a dog or any other pet. After you have it a while, you start losing interest," Pope said last week.

Besides, age has made both Tony and Tina cranky, Pope said, and since Tina weighs in at 20 pounds and Tony at twice that, their temper tantrums can be impressive. As young turks, the birds walked at will through the house, but now they're kept in the back yard.

"They don't really hurt you, but if you're small they can really scare you," says Pope.

Elderly man bags 100th deer

GREY EAGLE, Minn. (AP) — August Feierabend has bagged his 100th deer — quite an accomplishment for a man 92 years old.

This marks Feierabend's 57th year of hunting, but he said Sunday that he almost didn't make the trip this time around.

"Darned near didn't go this year," Feierabend said. "My right hip hurt a lot. Arthritis."

Because of the ailment, he had to take his 100th deer in style — sitting down.

"Never had a better season," he said. "Had some real luck."

Estrogen replacement has disadvantages

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is in menopause and is having the same kinds of problems I remember having during the same period in my life. I know other women who took or are taking estrogen, and they say it helps them immensely. Yet it has not been prescribed for my daughter. Can you see any reason for this? — Mrs. E.J., Salt Lake City, Utah.

Dear Mrs. J.: It is true that estrogen replacement therapy may alleviate many of the symptoms associated with menopause, but this form of treatment is not without disadvantages as well. Specifically, estrogen therapy is not recommended for women who have had cancer of the breast or of the lining of the uterus, or who have had problems with blood clotting or who have experienced problems with liver dysfunction.

Dr. Charles Hammond, chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., lists a higher risk of cancer of the uterine lining as one of the disadvantages of estrogen-replacement therapy. It has also been suggested that estrogen increases the likelihood that a woman will develop gallstones.

A decision to initiate estrogen therapy is an individual matter that must take into account its risks as well as its benefits.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've known about wet dreams in men, but my girlfriend tells me that women also have orgasms while they are sleeping. Is this true or is she putting me on? — Phillip, Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Phillip: Both men and women can experience orgasms during sleep. According to Dr. Brian Truxal, of the Monmouth Medical Center in Long Branch, N.J., by 45 years of age about 40 percent of all women will have experienced a sexual dream that led to orgasm.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you tell me how effective the morning-after pill is suppose to be?
Gloria, San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Gloria: The contraceptive morning-after pill is said to be 98 percent effective and can be taken up to 72 hours after sexual intercourse. It has been suggested that the pill will not be used as a regular form of contraception because it may be associated with severe nausea

Rescuers continue on Sunday to probe ruins of a doll factory near Bangkok, Thailand, that collapsed Saturday, killing 34 persons. Almost two dozen people are still missing.

Death toll from collapse of factory in Bangkok, Thailand, rises to 34

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The death toll from the collapse of a doll factory rose to 34 today, and officials said as many as two dozen more victims may be buried in the rubble.

Officials at Bhumipol Hospital said 46 people were injured, 32 of them seriously, in the collapse Saturday at the Kongphet Asia factory about 19 miles northeast of downtown Bangkok.

Police said 86 workers were on duty at the three-story building but said several food vendors and at least 10 construction workers also were inside when the structure collapsed.

U.S. may sell arms to Argentina

LONDON (AP) — Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, says the United States finds no grounds for refusing to sell weapons to Argentina now that a civilian government has been elected.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, interviewed Sunday on British television, said the United States "will take into account" British views on arms sales to Argentina. But she said the issue "is one that you have to look at again from our point of view as well."

"The point is that we find no grounds to continue to refuse to sell arms to Argentina because the certification was based on the absence of democratic process and consistent human rights violation in Argentina," she said.

Chinese rely on powdered toad

PEKING (AP) — A remedy that includes powdered toad and a dose of strychnine is curing a serious blood vessel disease that has troubled the Chinese people for 2,000 years, the China Daily reported today.

The newspaper said that since 1979, the remedy has cured 87 percent of the 30,000 patients treated.

The cure combats vasculitis, or inflammation of the blood vessels which can cause thrombosis and other circulatory problems. The remedy combines poisonous ingredients in small quantities to stimulate the flow of blood and open blocked vessels, the paper said.

Although Chinese doctors and hospitals now dispense antibiotics and other 20th century drugs, traditional herbal and organic medicines remain popular, as does acupuncture.

World's newest sextuplets doing OK

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — The world's newest sextuplets and their mother are doing fine and could be home for Christmas, their doctors say.

Dr. Richard Cooke, a pediatrician on the medical team at Liverpool Maternity hospital that supervised Friday's Caesarean section birth of the six girls, said Sunday that the mother, Janet Walton, went into labor twice during the critical final phase of pregnancy.

The team administered a variety of drugs in a bid to stop the labor. "Had they been born then, the result would have been far less favorable."

Cooke described Mrs. Walton, 31, as "an exceptional mum."

Five of the six girls, weighing between 2 lbs., 1 oz. and 3 lbs., 9 oz., were breathing on their own, without help from respirators. The second oldest child was on a respirator, but Cooke said he was confident she would survive.

The babies' father, 33-year-old painter Graham Walton, said he was "over the moon" with joy.

Mexico celebrates 1910 Revolution

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Miguel de la Madrid and about 20,000 other Mexicans watched 15,000 athletes parade past the National Palace as the nation celebrated the anniversary of the 1910 Revolution.

The parade Sunday had fewer floats and military bands than in past years, in keeping with de la Madrid's austerity policies.

Hundreds of cavalrymen, draped in red and blue capes, criss-crossed paths as they galloped across the Zocalo, Mexico City's main square, in tribute to the armies of the Revolution.

Sudanese leader will ask for aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sudanese President Gaafar Nimeiri, whose turn to Islamic fundamentalism has provoked alarm among Christians in Africa's largest country, is expected to ask President Reagan for more U.S. aid during a two-day visit that began today.

Nimeiri, who ordered thousands of gallons of liquor poured into the Nile at Khartoum last September as part of his drive to impose Islamic law, has made some progress in battling Sudan's chronic economic problems, but still needs help, senior U.S. administration officials say.

"Obviously questions of economic assistance will arise" during the visit, a U.S. official said.

One of the officials, who briefed reporters on condition he not be identified, said U.S.-Sudanese relations are excellent and that "the visit represents a high point."

The United States is providing about $200 million in economic aid and $50 million in military aid annually, which makes Sudan the second-largest aid recipient in Africa after Egypt. The military aid is concentrating on improving maintenance and training, rather than providing new weapons, a U.S. official said.

After a private weekend in Washington following his arrival Saturday, Nimeiri, 53, was to be welcomed today at the White House for a meeting and lunch with Reagan.

Reagan and other U.S. officials apparently will steer clear of the Islamic issue.

"These are things that I would recommend we do not raise with him," said a senior administration official. "If somebody wants to emphasize an aspect of his religious traditions more than he did in his youth and early middle-age, that's his own concern."

Italian police search for kidnapped heiress

CAMPO DI CARNE, Italy (AP) — Police using helicopters and dogs combed vineyards, abandoned houses and factories south of Rome today, searching for a Bulgari jewelry store heiress and her teen-age son kidnapped over the weekend.

"We are analyzing information some anonymous callers have given us," said a Rome police official investigating the abduction of Anna Bulgari Calissoni, 56, and her 16-year-old son, Giorgio, from their country villa Saturday night.

Other police sources said the search has turned up no trace of the kidnappers or the victims. No ransom demands have been reported.

After questioning family members and servants, police termed the kidnappers "thorough professionals" who had intimate knowledge of the villa and the movements of the victims.

The kidnappers spoke with a heavy Sardinian accent, but police said they may have been attempting to mislead police investigators. Many of Italy's ransom-seeking kidnappers come from the island of Sardinia.

Police said they would question all former household employees of the Bulgaris, service contractors and others who had access to the estate. They also said searches were being conducted in mountainous areas north and east of here and the province of Umbria, north of Rome.

A jewelry designer, Mrs. Calissoni is co-owner with four of her cousins of the Bulgari jewelry stores in New York, Rome, Paris, Geneva and Monte Carlo.

Police gave this account of the abduction:

Three masked gunmen entered the estate near this village 18 miles south of Rome, after identifying themselves to eight employees in servant quarters as anti-terrorism police on a special mission. They herded the servants into a tiny room, bound and gagged them, cut the telephone lines, and broke into the three-story complex to await the arrival of the Calissonis from Rome.

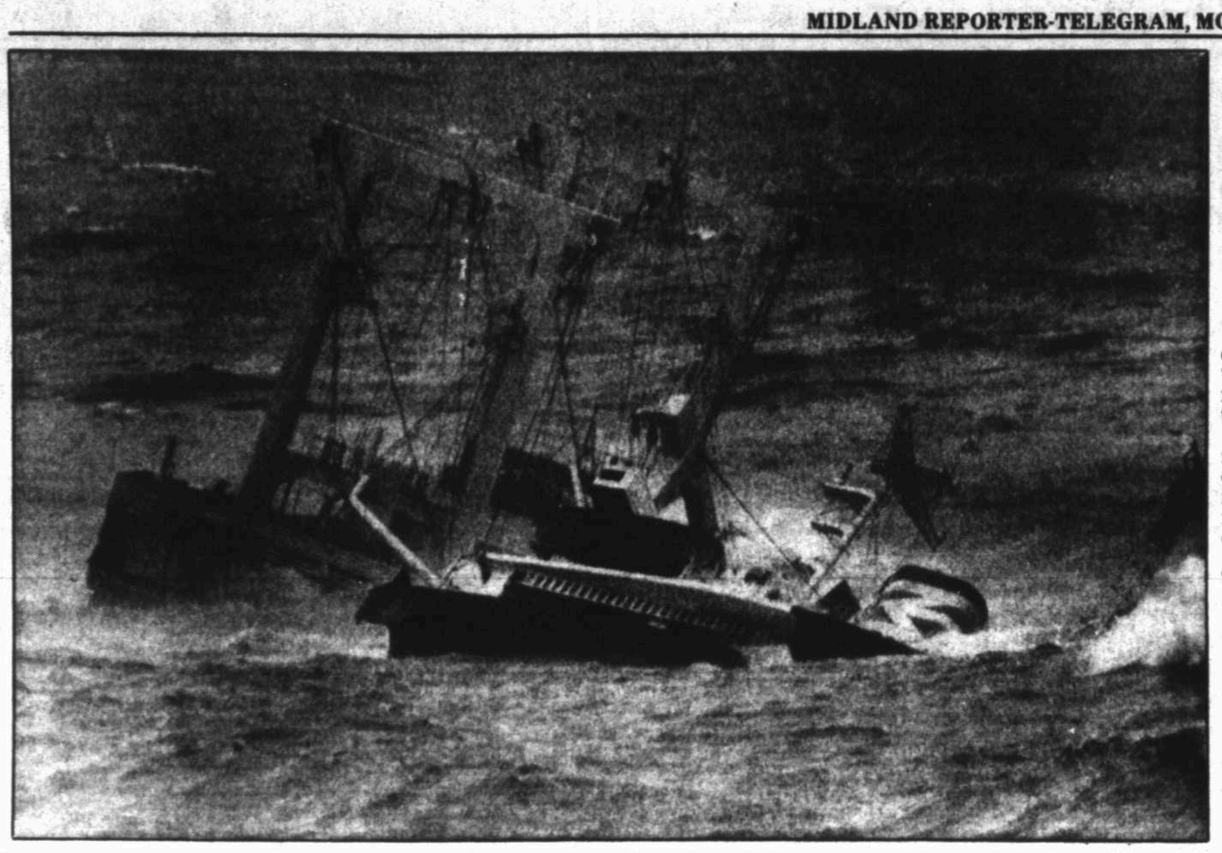

When the Calissonis drove up 20 minutes later, the kidnappers pounced as they got of their car. They slugged Mrs. Calissoni's husband, Franco, 76, on the jaw with the butt of a shotgun, dragged him into the house and left him tied up and gagged on a bed.

The Japanese freighter Blue Magpie is pounded by heavy seas Sunday after breaking into three parts on the North Jetty, marking the entrance to Newport Harbor, off the Oregon coast. Nineteen crewmen were rescued by the Coast Guard late Saturday night. The stern section, with the smokestack, lies at an angle to the midsection of the ship. The bow section is behind the superstructure of the ship. About 3,000 gallons of diesel fuel have spilled into the Pacific from the stricken ship.

Report claims administration harms children

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civil rights group leaders say the Reagan administration has caused "irreparable" harm to some children by scaling back enforcement of laws against discrimination in education.

The Civil Rights Leadership Conference Fund released a report Sunday cataloging what it claims has been a systematic effort by the administration to narrow students' rights to fair treatment and to dismantle the federal machinery for enforcing those rights.

The 47-page report titled, "An Oath Betrayed: The Reagan Administration's Civil Rights Enforcement Record in Education," claims the Education and Justice departments have sought to rewrite the civil rights laws. The report says the departments are thwarting the will of Congress, and have moved from strong enforcement "to appeals for voluntary compliance."

Education Secretary T.H. Bell was unavailable for comment and a spokesman, Russell Mack, said, "As far as I can tell, we haven't seen the report. We just can't react to this right off the bat."

William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, said "it has become a customary practice for reports of this sort to be generated periodically and released to the press without first providing any opportunity for the department to respond." Reynolds added that judging from details provided by a reporter, "it sounds like a rehash of all charges made and fully answered in the past."

The report criticizes the administration's efforts to reduce federal regulations governing the education of the handicapped and its unsuccessful effort to bar the Internal Revenue Service from revoking tax exemptions of schools with discriminatory policies. The report also criticizes the administration's attempt to narrow the reach of Title IX, a federal law against sex discrimination in education, and its handling of a decade-old court case requiring southern and border states to eliminate discrimination in once-segregated colleges.

The report concludes, "the administration systematically sought to narrow the rights of students to non-discriminatory treatment in schools and to dismantle the machinery that exists for enforcing these rights."

It said, "the harm inflicted by the Reagan administration on children, their ability to learn and to develop their talents to the fullest continues and for some may be irreparable."

The fund is an arm of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of 165 national organizations, according to its executive director, Ralph G. Neas. The fund's volunteer president is David Tatel, former director of the Office for Civil Rights in the Carter administration. A dozen groups contributed to the report, including the NAACP, Women's Equity Action League, the National Education Association.

The report was financed by four foundations: Rockefeller Family & Associates, Southern Education Foundation Inc., Bydale Foundation and New World Foundation.

The report does not specifically accuse anyone of violating their oath of office. But on its fist page, it juxtaposes the oath of office taken by Bell and Reynolds with statements from each man.

Plane made several passes at runway before crashing

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — A single-engine plane that crashed and burst into flames while trying to land at Boulder Municipal Airport, killing all four people aboard, had made three or four passes at the runway before touching down and flipping, officials said.

Three men and a woman, believed to be from the Denver area, were burned beyond recognition in Sunday's crash and their identities were not immediately known, Boulder County Sheriff Brad Leach said.

Leach said witnesses told him the rented Grumman Tiger appeared totally out of control as it made passes at the runway before its final landing attempt.

Gas prices down from year ago

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite tax hikes, average nationwide gas prices fell nearly 4 cents from a year ago and dropped a half-cent during the past two weeks, but pump prices under $1 on the West Coast are disappearing, says oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg.

The average price for gasoline nationally was nearly $1.215, down a half-cent since Nov. 4, Lundberg said over the weekend in his biweekly survey of 17,600 stations in all 50 states. At this time last year, the average price was slightly below $1.252.

Prices were lowest at self-service stations, which averaged almost $1.109 for regular leaded, about $1.183 for regular unleaded, nearly $1.351 for premium leaded and just over $1.302 for premium unleaded.

Black activist defeats creationist

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A black civil rights activist whose police mug shot was featured in his opponent's campaign ads has defeated the white author of Louisiana's creationism law in a runoff for a state Senate seat.

Shreveport City Councilman Greg Tarver defeated state Sen. Bill Keith 15,338 to 11,285, or 59 percent to 41 percent, on Saturday.

Keith's television ads, which showed a police mug shot of Tarver taken more than a decade ago after his arrest during civil rights protests, asked voters if they wanted to supprt a "lawbreaker or a lawmaker." Tarver called the tactic "cheap gutter politics."

Student hit by goal post critical

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A Harvard freshman who was hit on the head by a stadium goal post during the pandemonium following the 100th Harvard-Yale football game remained in critical condition today, slipping in and out of consciousness, hospital officials said.

Margaret Cimino, 18, of North Tarrytown, N.Y., was injured Saturday when she and hundreds of other spectators rushed onto the field at the Yale Bowl after Harvard's 16-7 victory, police said.

Miss Cimino was struck by a metal crossbar that snapped when fans tore down the goal post, police and witnesses said. She was being monitored by neurosurgeons at the Hospital of St. Raphael in New Haven.

Democrat votes his conscience

WASHINGTON (AP) — Following his conscience rarely puts Rep. Ted Weiss, a New York City Democrat, in as much limelight as it did last week when he voted against stiffening child pornography laws or the week before when he introduced a resolution to impeach President Reagan.

"I'm not for child pornography. I'm opposed to the sexual abuse of children," said Weiss, one of the most liberal House members.

He said he was concerned that the wording of the measure threatened the right to privacy, but he was outvoted, 400-1.

Weiss' belief that Reagan should have notified Congress before sending troops to Grenada led to the impeachment resolution. This time, six Democrats signed on, but the likelihood that hearings will be held is remote.

"There has been a tremendous amount of public and media discussion of the resolution," he says. "That's a major action even if nothing happens legislatively."

Weiss, 56, has fought notable losing battles since coming to Congress in 1976. Two years ago, he opposed a bill that would make it a crime to publicize the names of intelligence agents. Campaigns for homosexual rights and price controls also have produced one-sided defeats.

The rumpled lawyer and former prosecutor ignores setbacks, however, and talks instead about plans to revive the Equal Rights Amendment, the need for a nuclear freeze, the folly of federal cutbacks.

His ratings by liberal and labor groups like Americans for Democratic Action and the AFL-CIO often are close to 100 percent. Conservative groups like the Americans for Constitutional Action rank him much closer to zero.

"The fact is, I have a constituency that allows me to vote my conscience," Weiss says, eating lunch at his desk, an autographed picture of Eleanor Roosevelt on the wall.

Voters in the district encompassing Greenwich Village and the West Side of Manhattan demand liberalism, as indicated by their support of the volatile Bella Abzug, their representative before Weiss.

More than 10,000 constituents answered Weiss' latest questionnaire and told him that they, too, support a nuclear freeze, rent control, a federal jobs program. They, too, oppose military spending and Social Security reductions.

Weiss is one of the few representatives to campaign against a huge federal project for his district — Westway, a $2 billion highway and landfill. He would rather see the money go for mass transit. So would his district.

Weiss' image in Congress is tempered by his hard work and, colleagues say, sincerity. His sallies have made him more a moralist than a gadfly.

"There is no one who has been critical of him, even with that (child pornography) vote," said Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., whose district adjoins Weiss'.

"He came here as a kid from Hungary. He has a higher sense about what's in the Constitution than others," Rangel said.

Weiss, who sits on the Government Operations and Foreign Affairs committees, thinks a more formative experience in his evolution as a liberal and a dove was seeing Hiroshima shortly after the atomic blast.

"I'm a dove in the sense that I don't want to see the superpowers blow up each other and everyone else on the planet," he said. His view of government is that it should "provide the support services people can't provide for themselves."

Things got a little lonely for liberals after the 1980 elections that brought Reagan and other conservatives to power. But Weiss thinks that the resulting social spending cutbacks and fiscal deficits have turned the tide.

"The first two years were cuts, cuts, cuts," said Weiss, who sees himself as a spokesman for a silent minority that lacks the constituency to openly support a liberal program.

Who will ultimately pay for expensive organ transplants?

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — With the survival rate for organ transplants rising with improved methods and drugs, the federal government and insurance companies are grappling with the question of who will pay the staggering cost of the procedures.

In the past, liver, heart and heart-lung transplants were considered experimental, and Medicare and many insurance plans — the so-called third-party payers — were thus unwilling to pay the bills.

But with the advent of the anti-rejection drug cyclosporine, the survival rate for liver transplant patients has soared from 32 percent to 70 percent — making the surgery less risky than some other procedures considered routine.

Meantime, the comparable success of heart transplants has prompted a growing number of hospitals to offer them.

"But the question as to how and who is going to pay for them is wide open. There's a movement among the third-party payers to pay for more of these types of procedures," said John Dwan, spokesman for the University of Utah Medical Center.

The center performed the first permanent artificial heart implant last Dec. 2 on Barney Clark, who died 112 days later.

"THERE ARE thousands of people out there who need (transplants) but who can't afford them," Dwan said. "Will these operations only be available to the rich? Or should the federal government be expected to pick up these huge costs?"

The cost for a liver transplant is about $60,000-$90,000. A heart transplant costs $75,000 to $125,000.

Under Medicare, pancreas, heart, liver and heart-lung transplants are still considered experimental and the surgery is not covered. But that could change.

The federal Health Care Finance Administration has initiated an 18-month study on the cost, survival rate and impact of heart transplants to determine whether they should be covered under Medicare, said spokesman John Kitrell. The Public Health Service is doing a similar assessment of liver transplants.

Kitrell said the decision whether to cover the procedures under Medicare probably will be made by Congress, where interest in organ transplants has been heightened by pleas for organ donors from several congressmen and President Reagan.

Bills have been introduced to establish a national clearinghouse to match donors with recipients. On Thursday, the House Commerce Comittee approved a bill creating such a national center.

NONE OF the bills deal with the issue of financing, but Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., has introduced legislation that would require the U.S. Health and Human Services Department to produce an annual study on transplant survival rates.

Gore hopes the updates will spur the government and insurance companies to pay for transplants.

But despite growing interest in organ transplants, Jo Cratin, contracting specialist with the HCFA's Denver office, is not optimistic.

She points out that Congress approved financing for kidney transplants in 1973, but it "has been so expensive, I doubt that anything like it will ever happen again. The move has been away from adding more things that Medicare will pay for."

Medicare does pay costs not directly associated with a transplant, but which can amount to a significant share of a recipient's bill, said HCFA spokeswoman JoAnn Lorenz.

In Clark's case, for instance, Medicare officials refused to pay for the surgery, but determined that $197,489 of the $254,680 bill was allowable, said Medicare spokeswoman Jeri McGeahan.

Of that, Clark's private insurance paid $5,928 and Medicare picked up $57,762.

AT STANFORD University Medical Center, where the $7,500 cost of heart-transplant surgery is waived, attendant bills still can reach $125,000 and the recipient must guarantee payment. Some hospitals require a deposit of up to $60,000.

"Most of the people that come here have an insurance or third-party commitment," said Mike Goodkind, Stanford spokesman. "I haven't seen anybody that's been turned away because of money.

"The 10 percent of patients in a real financial bind turn to public fund-raising," Goodkind said. "That's not the most desirable, but that seems to be necessary at this time."

Of 33 major insurance companies surveyed in June, 82 percent said they would be willing to pay for liver transplants and 85 percent said they would pay for heart transplants, said Jennifer Stockdale, spokeswoman for the Health Insurance Association of America.

Nearly all routinely covered kidney transplants.

BLUE CROSS-Blue Shield of Massachusetts began offering a plan in August that specifically covered heart, heart-lung and liver transplants, said spokesman Ed Whittaker.

"We're the bellwether on this," he said.

A supplement to standard coverage, the plan covers from five days before to up to a year after a transplant at a monthly cost of $2 for a family, 55 cents for individuals and five cents for senior citizens.

It is in the area of private insurance that a change in the federal government's policy would have the largest impact, since many companies pattern their policies after Medicare, Goodkind said.

If Medicare began covering heart transplants as routine procedures, "we're hoping the remaining resistant third-party payers will declare it eligible," he said.

Fired EPA official confronts former boss

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time since she "groveled" in tears begging for her job, former Environmental Protection Agency official Rita Lavelle is confronting the woman who fired her — Anne Burford.

Mrs. Burford, former head of the Environmental Protection Agency, was to testify today for the prosecution in the perjury and obstruction trial of her former employee.

It was Mrs. Burford's decision to fire Ms. Lavelle last February that triggered a half-dozen congressional investigations into the EPA's handling of a $1.6 billion hazardous waste fund and led eventually to the resignation of Mrs. Burford and most of the people she brought with her to the agency.

Ms. Lavelle, who was indicted by a federal grand jury in August on five counts of perjury and obstructing a congressional inquiry, is the only EPA official to face criminal charges for her actions. If convicted, she could be sent to prison for up to 25 years.

In a published interview in August, Ms. Lavelle said she cried and begged for her job when she was abruptly summoned to Mrs. Burford's office late on a Friday afternoon and ordered to resign.

At the time Mrs. Burford was facing a contempt citation from Congress over her refusal to turn over sensitive files on waste cleanup efforts, and Ms. Lavelle, who headed the toxic waste program, was under attack for allegedly trying to fire an agency whistle-blower.

Informed of her firing, Ms. Lavelle said, "I, uh, groveled, saying I was not financially capable of supporting a trip back, of supporting myself in this period."

Ms. Lavelle, who now lives in San Diego, Calif., is writing a book and is on the lecture circuit, but is still looking for a full-time job.

Government prosecutors have presented witnesses who have testified that Ms. Lavelle used EPA funds to help the campaigns of two Republican senators and ignored repeated warnings to withdraw from a case involving her former employer, Aerojet-General Corp. of California.

Ms. Lavelle is charged with secretly warning Aerojet that it was a potential target of a government lawsuit during a period when she later testified under oath that she had no idea the firm had disposed of hazardous wastes in the Stringfellow Acid Pits in California.

She also is charged with lying to Congress when she denied that political considerations played any role in determining which dumps were cleaned up.

Prosecutors began calling witnesses Friday, including seven of Ms. Lavelle's former colleagues at the EPA and a Senate staff member.

The government witnesses testified that Ms. Lavelle had pushed her staff to negotiate a cleanup settlement for a dump at Seymour, Ind.

Striking bus drivers voting on contract

By The Associated Press

Striking Greyhound Bus Lines employees have begun voting on a new contract offer that one union leader predicts will lose "handily," and picketing continued peacefully while the FBI investigated two weekend incidents of strike-related violence.

Voting on the contract began over the weekend in some places and continues today and throughout the week. The results of the nationwide balloting will be announced Nov. 28, union officials said.

Members of the Cheyenne, Wyo., local of the Amalgamated Transit Union voted on the new offer Sunday, according to local Chairman Harry Freeman. He said Denver workers voted on the pact Saturday.

"I think it will be turned down 2-to-1," Freeman said.

In New Orleans, where the 220-member local was scheduled to vote today, local President Ken Shirk said Sunday, "I think it will be turned down handily...As soon as they have a reasonable offer, we'll talk to them."

Union officials have recommended rejection of the pact, which reportedly would cut wages 7.8 percent rather than the 9.5 percent proposed earlier. The company says the concessions are needed to keep the bus division competitive.

Greyhound's 12,700 union members overwhelmingly rejected the earlier pact and walked off the job Nov. 2. The company resumed limited service in 27 states Thursday using non-union replacement workers and some union members who have crossed picket lines.

Jim Cawley, president of Local 1210 in Phoenix, Ariz., where Greyhound is based, says he'll recommend rejection today when his workers get copies of the proposed contract.

"The company has taken the position the union is afraid to let the workers vote. So I'm going to let them vote, but we're hoping to come back with a strong rejection," he said.

Pickets marched peacefully at bus depots in several cities Sunday, sharply contrasting with the scattered violence near several terminals as Greyhound resumed service last week. The FBI has been called to look into at least two violent incidents.

Police in New Orleans said Sunday that the FBI was probing a shooting Saturday night that shattered a window and blew out a tire on a Greyhound bus pulling out of town, bound for Mobile, Ala.

Candidate Cranston says Reagan policy 'simplistic, paranoid'

NEW YORK (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Alan Cranston today called President Reagan's foreign policy "a simplistic and paranoid world view" and he urged cancellation of deployment of U.S. intermediate range missiles in Europe.

In a speech prepared for delivery at Columbia University, the California senator proposed offering the Soviets a treaty which would count British and French nuclear missiles in exchange for destruction of more than half the current Soviet missile force targeted on Europe.

Cranston also said that if elected president he would propose a U.S.-Soviet moratorium on new deployments of strategic nuclear weapons.

One of eight candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination, Cranston has made arms control the central issue of his campaign.

Referring to the ABC-TV movie "The Day After," broadcast Sunday night, Cranston said, "the nation saw a vision of its end...We are still drifting toward that unparalleled catastrophe we saw portrayed on television screens last night."

He said the president's world view involved the nation in shooting wars in Grenada, El Salvador, Lebanon and Nicaragua.

"It is a simplistic and paranoid world view," he said. "It sees the Soviets as the source of all our problems...Our president shows not the slightest hint of distress over the fact that Soviet-American relations have reached their most dangerous point since the Berlin blockade and Cuban missile crisis."

Cranston said the U.S. short-term goal "should be to get the Soviets to destroy enough of their intermediate range nuclear missiles to achieve rough parity between the Europe-based forces of the western allies and the Warsaw Pact without still more American nuclear deployments."

To achieve that he proposed a treaty under which the Soviets would retain 100 oftheir SS-20 missiles with three warheads each, to be balanced by 162 British and French missiles.

Under the proposed agreement, the remaining 143 SS-20's would be destroyed under international supervision as would older Soviet intermediate range missiles already deployed in Europe.

Finally, the agreement would call for cancellation of the planned deployment this winter of U.S. Pershing II and ground-launched Cruise missiles.
