A.M. BRIEFING

Juvenile curfew

Based on the recommendation of police Chief Richard Czech, the Midland City Council at its next meeting later this month will likely vote on expanding the hours of the current weeknight juvenile curfew. If approved, juveniles, ages 16 and under, will be required to be off the streets at 11:30 p.m. each week night instead of 1 a.m., as the law is currently written.

Cityline Community Pulse

Are you in favor of revising the current curfew law to require youths to be off the streets by 11:30 p.m., or are you opposed?

Call Cityline's Community Pulse Poll at 560-2400, category 7655. If you are in favor of the earlier youth curfew, press 1. If you are against the proposal, press 2.

You will be invited to leave your comments on the curfew issue when you vote. We ask that you leave your name, but that is optional.

The non-scientific sampling will remain open until noon today. Results will be published in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram.

Gay marriage

WASHINGTON — After two noisy days of Bible quotes and gay-baiting charges, the House voted overwhelmingly Friday to define marriage in federal law as a legal union of one man and one woman — no matter what states may say. The measure, approved 342-67, would underline federal refusal to recognize same-sex marriages.

Trace of rain teases parts of basin

From Staff Reports

While a brief rain cooled off some parts of the city Friday, other areas remained dry, according to a forecaster with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Instability along the remains of a near stationary front was responsible for the brief shower over parts of Midland, the forecaster said.

No rain was recorded at the airport terminal, he said.

Late Thursday, the mild stationary front, stretching east to west across the state, moved into the Midland area.

This front had since been reduced to a "trough line," which added enough instability to the area that the light showers erupted as air was heated by the sun, the forecaster said.

The forecast for today calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms. Otherwise the high should reach 90-95 with south winds at 5-15 mph.

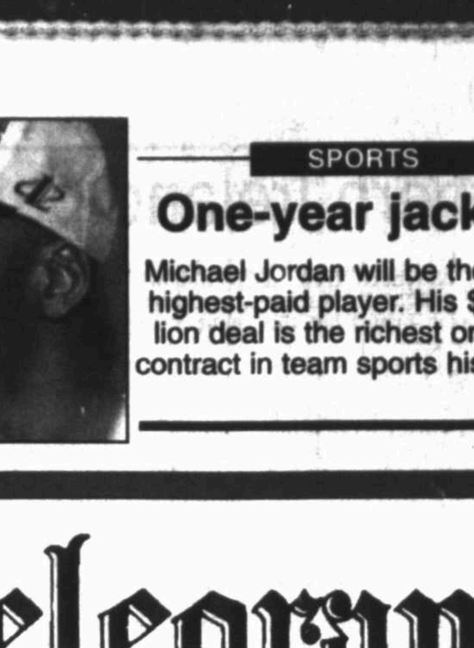

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low near 70 and a 20 percent chance of showers or thundershowers.

Sunday should be partly cloudy with a high near

Bertha batters Carolinas coast

250,000 flee before storm crashes ashore at 105 mph

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Hurricane Bertha slapped Cape Fear on Friday, then moved on to batter a string of coastal towns, ripping off roofs, washing away piers, toppling a Ferris wheel and flooding roads.

More than 250,000 people fled the beaches before the storm, which crashed ashore with top winds of 105 mph, drenching the coastline and spinning off tornadoes hundreds of miles inland.

As the storm moved north, more than 186,000 customers lost power in the Carolinas and a storm surge of 7-9 feet washed out dunes on fragile barrier islands, imperiling some beachfront communities.

"Everything's just torn apart," said Allen Sipe, who ventured out of his house to survey damage in his neighborhood in Kure Beach, a narrow island between the Cape Fear River and the Atlantic.

Sipe said at least three piers were damaged, and one neighbor's house "looks like you hit it with a wrecking ball." His own house, which he had boarded up, lost only a few shingles.

Bertha then moved north, with the eye passing over Camp LeJeune and the most punishing winds hitting barrier islands just to the east near Morehead City, snapping telephone poles, washing out dunes and flooding roads.

Bertha's top sustained winds later dropped to 100 mph, and it was expected to weaken further as it moved over land on a path that would bring the cen-

Seeking to bridge GOP gap, Dole backs abortion 'Tolerance Plank'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trying to head off a divisive convention fight, Bob Dole on Friday abandoned an effort to soften the party's anti-abortion plank and instead proposed new "tolerance" language elsewhere in the platform.

The new language, recognizing a diversity of GOP viewpoints, would appear once in the platform's introduction and again in a new "Tolerance Plank."

"The Republican Party should maintain its commitment to protecting the unborn. We are also a party that is tolerant of those who do not share our view on every issue," the prospective GOP presidential nominee said.

The move appeared broadly acceptable to a wide cross section of Republicans, judging from early reviews, although it drew fire from the most outspoken on both sides of the issue. While most anti-abortion groups welcomed the new Dole language, it drew scorn from renegade Republican Pat Buchanan.

Dole said the new language reflected an agreement with Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., chairman of the party's Platform Committee and a longtime outspoken abortion opponent.

Foundation: Public schools fail to adequately educate students

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The Texas Public Policy Foundation took public schools to task — before the Texas House Higher Education Committee Friday afternoon — for allegedly failing to turn out students who can pass college entrance exams.

The San Antonio-based nonprofit, nonpartisan group — which focuses on education reform — said "public primary and secondary schools are failing to adequately educate students and cause enormous burdens for higher education institutions."

Education professionals in Austin and Midland said the foundation's data analysis was questionable and doesn't take into account the large number of older students returning to college.

The foundation said increasing numbers of Texas students are failing the Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP) test upon entrance to public colleges and universities, causing a 259 percent increase in general appropriations for remedial instruction since 1991. The foun-

Northern Ireland path to peace winds through violent marching season

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The annual Protestant marching season brings out the worst in people here.

Protestants parade through the streets to commemorate 17th-century victories over Roman Catholics, and violence often follows at night. Catholics, always angered by the parades, respond with violence of their own.

■ News analysis

This year's season has been exceptionally violent, revealing just how difficult, perhaps even impossible, it will be to achieve peace in this British-ruled province.

The street warfare was sparked by a showdown over the parade by the Orange Order, the long-dominant Protestant fraternal order that holds the parades each year.

The Orangemen insisted on taking their traditional route through the main Catholic enclave in Portadown, southwest of Belfast, despite stern local opposition.

Police tried for five days to stop the march. But as Protestant riots and other civil disobedience spiraled out of control throughout the province, police changed their minds Thursday and pushed the march through.

On Thursday and Friday, Catholic youths battled police.

Catholic nationalists have now started talking openly about a likely resumption of violence here by the Irish Republican Army — and some clearly think, after being humiliated by police and Protestant marchers, it would be a good idea.

The audience for speeches about patience and peace is dwindling, and Northern Ireland's peace talks, begun June 10 under the direction of former U.S. Sen. George Mitchell, are in danger of going nowhere fast.

To outsiders, the idea that a local parade might derail two years of peace initiatives seems preposterous. But the showdown and outcome at Portadown provided the perfect catalyst for releasing tensions that Northern Ireland's peace process had long kept simmering.

As with the wider peace process, the Portadown dispute raised the fundamental, irreconcilable issue: What kind of Northern Ireland will people here accept — a staunchly British one, as Orangemen demand, or a flexibly Irish one as most Catholics want?

Now many Catholics, once enthusiastic about the prospects for a peace deal, talk as though resumed IRA killing here is inevitable.

"It's not about parades. It's about rights," said Gerry Adams, leader of the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party. The peace process "lies in absolute ruins," he said.

Three policemen in north Belfast were wounded Friday by unidentified gunmen — the first officers shot since the IRA formally lowered its guns in in 1994 hopes of joining negotiations. Protestants refused to join talks with Sinn Fein, citing the refusal of the IRA to give up its weapons.

"People should not expect law-abiding British subjects to negotiate their future — of their marches or of their country — with criminals," said John Taylor, deputy leader of the Ulster Unionists, the province's main party.

Like the other major pro-British party, Ian Paisley's Democratic Unionists, the Ulster Unionists withdrew from the talks when the Portadown deadlock sparked the first of four nights of Protestant rioting. Both were expected to attend the next session Tuesday.

Without a new cease-fire, however, the British and Irish governments say Sinn Fein will never be admitted to the talks. The IRA ended its truce by bombing London Feb. 9, and other attacks followed, but so long as the IRA remained dormant in Northern Ireland, some people hoped for a second cease-fire.

Key assumptions that promoted the 1994 IRA truce — a sympathetic Irish government, a potentially neutral British government, and a belief that both would push the Protestants to make a deal — are only painful memories for Sinn Fein.

This week demonstrated what happens when anyone tries to push Northern Ireland's Protestant hard-liners in a direction they don't want to go.

Catholic anger over Portadown will burn out and may stop short of a full resumption of IRA violence. But like the hazy smoke from five nights' rioting, this week will leave a legacy of disillusionment that the best efforts toward peace may not be able to disperse.

Lloyd's of London shows first profit in five years; still recovering from 1980s losses

LONDON (AP) — Lloyd's of London reported its first profit in five years Friday, but it still must clear several hurdles before it can say it has returned to financial health.

The insurance market said it made $1.68 billion in 1993 — breaking the spell of deep red ink just as Lloyd's takes several other steps crucial to its survival.

Lloyd's always takes three years to release annual results, but its market executives are already predicting similar earnings for 1994 and 1995 as Lloyd's tries to bounce back.

The market — famous for insuring everything from rock stars to jumbo jets — ran into trouble in the late 1980s, when it ran up losses of $12.4 billion over a five-year period, bankrupting many of its investors.

Lloyd's blamed natural disasters and pollution and asbestos lawsuits, although some of the investors who lost their personal fortunes blamed unscrupulous market insiders.

A big step in a complicated recovery plan comes Monday when investors, known as "names," will be asked to hand over part of their profits from the last three years to help keep Lloyd's afloat.

Lloyd's hopes to tap the investors for $682 million as part of a $4.81 billion settlement plan, but says they can get their money back in seven years.

"If they don't do that, then all bets are off and I'm off to the hills," the Lloyd's chairman, David Rowland, told a news conference.

Lloyd's announced on Thursday that it had come close to resolving another major problem. It reached a settlement — not yet approved — with a variety of American state regulators who are tied up in litigation with the market.

The settlement could eliminate a major threat to Lloyd's future and its efforts to win investors' approval of a global restructuring plan to clean up horrendous insurance losses.

Lloyd's has said it will face insolvency in August if the pieces to its recovery plan don't all fall in place — and it is unclear how British regulators would deal with such a predicament — unprecedented in more than three centuries of business at Lloyd's.

Assuming investors who make profits agree to set aside part of their returns to help bail out Lloyd's, the market must persuade many more names who lost millions to agree to the settlement package.

This would end all liability and lawsuits as Lloyd's moves all its past insurance claims into a new group known as Equitas, but Lloyd's says it needs to come up with an additional $558 million from the investors.

It is unclear how many of them will approve the deal. Some say there's nothing in it for them, and they are reluctant to give up their right to sue Lloyd's over what they view as improper insider trading.

When Lloyd's executives announced their profits Friday, they said they were among the market's strongest results ever — perhaps because after the devastation at Lloyd's wiped out many dealers, only the most skilled were around to keep doing business.

Lloyd's annual results always come out three years after the fact, since it takes time for all the various insurance claims and bookkeeping to be settled.

Second bus explosion brings crackdown, fear of terrorism in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Heavily armed Russian troops guarded subways, trolleys and bus stations against a feared wave of terrorism Friday after a bus bomb shattered Moscow's morning rush hour for the second straight day.

Eight of the 28 people injured in Friday's explosion were in serious condition.

President Boris Yeltsin, long assailed for Russia's descent into lawlessness, promised tough new measures in a city he said is "polluted with terrorists."

About 1,000 Interior Ministry soldiers were called out to beef up city patrols and police were put on round-the-clock full alert against the mystery bombers.

Moscow's riot police commander promised to station his armed men in every bus, trolley and metro car. Police checkpoints outside Moscow were tightened.

Yeltsin, speaking to a meeting of the Federal Security Service, said fighting terrorism "must become your priority."

"Moscow has not been cleansed," Yeltsin said. "The situation has become dangerous."

No public claim of responsibility has been made for this week's bombings. Official suspicion fell on Chechen separatist rebels, who have long threatened terrorist attacks in major Russian cities. The rebels swiftly denied involvement.

Some officials also suggested gangsters might be protesting an anti-crime decree that Yeltsin signed this week. The decree puts the fight against terrorism directly under his control.

Splatters of blood and shards of broken glass littered the pavement on Prospekt Mira (Avenue of Peace) where Friday's explosion occurred on a No. 48 trolley, three miles northeast of the Kremlin. The front of the bus was all but destroyed.

"I saw people being pulled out of the trolley. One woman had her arm blown off," said Lyudmila Ivanova, who heard the blast from her apartment.

The bomb was similar to — but stronger than — one that blew up on a trolley in central Moscow 24 hours earlier, injuring five people. Both bombs were hidden in cloth bags under seats near the middle door, police said.

Friday's bomb was the third on Moscow's public transportation system dating to June 11, when a subway blast killed four people just before the first round of the presidential election.

The two bus explosions came after Yeltsin and his new national security chief, Alexander Lebed, agreed Wednesday on a plan to crack down on crime in the capital.

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian forces beat back a rebel attack in southern Chechnya on Friday then bombed the rebel encampment, killing 60 Chechen fighters, the military said.

The air strike came on the fourth day of a fierce Russian offensive that has left over 100 civilians dead or wounded in rebel-controlled towns.

The offensive contrasts sharply with President Boris Yeltsin's campaign promises to end the unpopular war, and has made a mockery of the cease-fire he negotiated with the separatists.

The military command said a unit near Shatoi, a town 28 miles south of the Chechen capital of Grozny, beat back a rebel attack early Friday, suffering no losses.

Troops then located the rebels' base near the town and unleashed "a mighty missile and bomb strike," spokesman Igor Melnikov told the ITAR-Tass news agency.

The attack killed 60 rebels and destroyed a radio transmission center, he said.

There was no independent confirmation of the clash.

Russian forces also kept up their fierce siege of southern Chechen villages, attacking Gekhi and Makhkety with aircraft, artillery and rocket launchers, the Interfax news agency said.

Russian combat planes, helicopter gunships, artillery and rocket launchers have attacked the villages since Tuesday in what the military describes as an operation to wipe out separatist fighters. Russian commanders claim Makhkety is the headquarters of rebel leader Zelimkhan Yandarbiyev.

Reports Thursday said 38 civilians had been killed and more than 60 wounded in the villages.

Thousands of civilians remained trapped in the villages, but others have fled.

About 850 of them have arrived in the neighboring region of Dagestan, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said in Geneva.

They join 35,000 Chechen refugees already in Dagestan.

Chechen rebels have come under suspicion in two bus bombings in Moscow, with Mayor Yuri Luzhkov among those speculating they were behind the attacks.

No evidence has linked Chechens to Thursday's or Friday's explosions, and both the rebels and the leader of the rival pro-Moscow Chechen government denied any Chechen involvement.

STATE

Rain fell in appreciable amounts over much of Texas Friday and more is expected through the weekend.

In North Texas, most of Tarrant, Johnson, Bosque and the northeastern counties had showers by afternoon. Outside of the rain areas, the moist atmosphere and cloudiness presented humid conditions. Extremes were 73 degrees at Fort Worth Meacham Airport and 94 degrees in Wichita Falls.

The North Texas forecast calls for partly cloudy skies in the west and central areas with a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms. Mostly cloudy east with a chance of thunderstorms. Highs 89 northeast to 96 south central. Lows will be in the 70s.

Partly sunny skies covered the upper Texas Coastal Plain with a few showers and isolated thunderstorms between Beaumont and Liberty. Elsewhere in South Texas, skies were mostly sunny. Temperatures were into the 90s in most areas with heat indexes rising to 115 in some inland sections. Extremes were 99 degrees at McAllen to 83 degrees at Port Aransas.

The South Texas forecast calls for partly cloudy skies today with scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms. Winds will be 10 to 15 mph along the coast and 5 to 10 mph inland.

Skies were mostly sunny and thunderstorms developed over the West Texas and Panhandle region on Friday. Temperatures ranged from 81 to 91 degrees. Winds were 5 to 15 mph.

The West Texas and Panhandle forecast calls for partly to mostly cloudy skies through Sunday with a chance of late thunderstorms. Lows through tonight in the 60s and 70s. Highs through Sunday in the 80s and 90s except for some readings near 105 in Big Bend valleys.

NATION

Hurricane Bertha belted the Carolina coast Friday with powerful winds that smashed windows and ripped apart roofs.

Bertha weakened, then revived over the Gulf Stream, and its top sustained winds grew to 105 mph at its center as it made landfall on North Carolina's barrier islands.

High winds near 70 mph caused widespread power outages across Wilmington, N.C. Wind gusts were reported as high as 132 mph near the center of the storm.

Bertha was pushing possible storm surges of 7 to 9 feet and dumping up to 5 inches of rain, quickly flooding low-lying areas.

Hurricane conditions stretched from the Carolinas to southeastern Virginia. Wind gusts reaching 90-130 mph, some tornadoes and local rainfall amounts of 3 to 8 inches were possible near the coast from the Charleston, S.C., area to Norfolk, Va.

Elsewhere rain continued to fall across Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas. Central portions of Oklahoma were plagued by flash flooding early Friday morning.

Oklahoma City recorded 1.08 inches of rain in the 24 hours ending Friday morning, while McAlester, Okla., got 1.60 inches and Fort Smith, Ark., recorded 1.10 inches of rain.

A low pressure system moved across Minnesota and into northwestern Wisconsin on Friday, bringing rain showers.

In the Ohio and Tennessee valleys, fair weather was the norm with a few light showers popping up along a trough in Indiana and Kentucky.

The Pacific Northwest baked Friday with temperatures over the century mark across sections of Oregon. The mercury reached 90 in Seattle.

The highest afternoon temperature in the lower 48 was 102 at Palm Springs, Calif., while the cold spot was 37 at Yellowstone, Wyo.

PASS: Education officials question group's data

dation said the number of students failing the TASP test system-wide has increased 16 percent since 1991.

"Colleges and universities must bear the cost of these remedial courses that re-teach material students should know to graduate from high school," said TPPF President Jeff Judson in a news release. "Why should higher education institutions continue to foot the bill for the high schools' failure to effectively prepare students for college? In many cases, honor roll students who pass exit-level TAAS tests are unable to pass the TASP. The Legislature should strongly consider holding these schools financially accountable for their negligence," Judson said.

Several educators, however, questioned the foundation's use of percentages and numbers.

Three Midland College freshman, all Texas Scholars and honor students, have called the Reporter-Telegram in past weeks to say they had failed the math section of the TASP test. All three students said they also had struggled with passing the exit-level Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TAAS) test in high school. All three of the students took the TAAS more than once to pass the math and all students had taken algebra and geometry at Midland and Lee high schools.

"NOW AFTER taking algebra and geometry, I have to take remedial math for dummies before I can take any math class that counts toward my degree," one LHS graduate said. "It's a waste of my time and money, and it's an embarrassment." Other students however, said they thought the high school TAAS test was more difficult than the college entrance TASP test.

Don Cates, MC associate dean of student services and registrar, said, test data has become "as much a political mark as an academic measure."

Cates said about 40 percent of students taking the math TASP test at Midland College didn't pass it recently, requiring remediation. He said less than 20 percent fail the reading section, and less than 21 percent fail the writing, needing remediation. Cates said MC still has more students passing than the state norm.

"Our highest rate of students not passing the TASP test is in the math section," said Camal Dakil, MC vice president of student services.

He said part of the problem is that the college's average student is older, and often returning to college after being out of school for years. "People who have been out of school for awhile have difficulty with the math," he said.

ERMALEE BOICE, deputy executive director for Texas State Teachers Association in Austin, agreed. "There are some problems with the way the data is being used by the Texas Public Policy Foundation. They are looking at 280,000 incoming college freshman statewide. Well, the average age of that group is 29, the majority having been out of school for a number of years. They are looking at the entire pool when only 60,000 are recent high school graduates. If they were to look at that 60,000, they would see quite a different trend," the TSTA executive said.

Ms. Boice said Texas standardized test scores have been increasing since 1991. She said the Texas Public Policy Foundation's allegation that the number of students failing the TASP test systemwide has increased 16 percent since 1991 "is too generalized."

"Saying the number of failures have increased without saying who is failing or whether the number of students taking the test has increased doesn't back up the information," she said. "I find that data suspect."

Midland College students all pass the TASP test at a rate higher than the state norm, Cates said. "The state average is about 10 points worse than us in all areas," he said, noting he was generalizing when contacted by telephone away from his office. "We have the advantage of a good feeder system and a good education system in Midland," he said. "Teaching math to the extent that students need it is a national problem."

COMMENTING ON the Texas Public Policy Foundation notifying the Reporter-Telegram of Friday's presentation, Cates and a TSTA official, both said Midland Independent School District appears to be one of the most scrutinized districts in the state.

"I don't know of any city anywhere where so much public attention is paid on a school system," Cates said. He said he has lived in several West Texas cities, including San Angelo, Lubbock and Amarillo. "And I've never seen so much public participation in public education as there is in Midland. It puts a lot of pressure on teachers and administrators, but the high expectations have a positive effect."

Cates said the American public, as a whole, is demanding more math skills from high school graduates.

"We are demanding young students know more math than ever before. It's tougher than when many adults went to school. We've gone from an agrarian society to a technological society and some universities will not issue a college degree unless you pass Calculus I. A chicken farmer cannot graduate from Texas Tech without passing Calculus I. Economic majors didn't have to take any math in the past, but all of that has changed. Now, 20 acres and a mule is not going to cut it. You have to understand abstract math concepts."

"IN EUROPE, people used to judge levels of education by asking: 'What exams did you pass?' In the United States, we asked; 'What diploma did you earn?' Now, especially in Texas, we have become 'testing happy,' 'testing dependent,' and 'testing threatening.' There is no faith in the high school diploma anymore when you have to pass a test to graduate. There is no faith in a college associate degree when you have to pass a test to continue on in college. It's the Legislature, and not society, that doesn't have faith in a product unless it is tested."

Cates said that uneven standards across school districts may have lead to state standardized testing. "But there is this pressure not to have high dropout rates and a pressure to test. But dropouts could be increasing partly because of test pressure," he said. "When testing is your goal, it doesn't answer all the questions it purports to answer.

"Scholastic skills are easy to analyze and talk about, but it is not easy to teach math," Cates said. "We sometimes spend the same amount of time teaching math as American history and math is 100 times harder than American history."

The foundation also cited poor performance on the TASP by minority students. It said only 34 percent of African Americans statewide passed the TASP in 1994-95, and only 43 percent of Hispanics passed it.

MISD TRUSTEE James Fuller said he was concerned that the TPPF only released test passing rates on minorities and left out the statistics on Anglo students.

"The implication is that the minorities are the reason for low performance," Fuller said. "Let's stop concluding because someone is a certain color they can't achieve."

As for TPPF statistics showing Hispanic and black students fare poorly on the TASP, Cates said Los Angeles teacher and national celebrity Jaime Escalante proved that minority students who were labeled low-achievers could excel. Escalante's success story was portrayed in the feature-length film "Stand and Deliver."

"But those students spent six hours a day learning calculus," Cates said. "There are U.S. Marines who don't have it any easier than those kids. Are we willing to work the kids as hard and as many hours as football players trying to play for Odessa's Permian Panthers? Can we say: 'you won't play football or march in the band until you pull up on math?' We could. But America's expectations have to go up. And we have to ask if we need that many mathematicians."

"IF WE are going to focus on raising test scores, then we need to find a new way to teach math and to reach those students in the bottom quadrant. Escalante found that way. His students spent a lot of time on learning," Cates said. "I don't know if people really want that."

Fuller, who has the unique position of serving both the public schools as a board trustee and Midland College as an instructor, said even if the foundation's statistics don't present the whole picture, there is no doubt that students are coming to college unprepared to do the work. "We still have a problem with preparation relative to math as well as reading," he said. "The buck is passed to college instructors. We take on the responsibility of doing what should have been done prior to students coming to college."

Fuller said catching students up to college level before they go on to a four-year institution isn't always successful. "Then we have the four-year institutions pointing the finger back at us for not doing the job of preparing students," he said.

Cates and Fuller both said teaching math skills needs to begin at an early age.

"We need to train elementary school teachers in the area of teaching math," Fuller said.

HE AGREED with Cates that an intensified effort would bring academic results up. "If the same kind of effort and energy applied to athletics was applied to academics, it could solve the problem," Fuller said.

Fuller said, nonetheless, the testing standards are in place, and students must pass the TAAS test to graduate. He said he was appalled that the state approved MISD's policy of allowing students to walk across the stage at graduation when they are not graduating because of failing the state's requirement to pass the TAAS test.

"That means MISD is speaking out of both sides of the mouth," he said. "On the one hand we are saying students must be prepared to graduate, but on the other hand we say it's not important enough to keep them from graduation exercises, which gives the impression to the community that we have more students graduating than we do — that these students have done all that is required. If we are going to have standards, let's not dilute them with something less that allows students to move along the conveyor belt of education."

FULLER SAID that intensifying education using the "Escalante mentality is a solution. "The answer is to spend those long hours, and spend that money on staff development and materials, and we would see significant results," he said.

A TPPF spokesman said the presentation to the Texas House Higher Education Committee began at 10 a.m. Friday and involved several panels. The public hearing and testimony continued into the early evening Friday. Scott Nelson, representing Texas Community College Teachers' Association, was set to follow TPPF President Judson. Because of the hearing time being extended into the evening, no one at TPPF was available to comment further on the organization's statistics or study Friday evening.

(From 1A)

Hyde praised the "good-faith effort" to bridge internal GOP differences. "I will include this language in the draft document that will go to San Diego," Hyde said, referring to next month's GOP convention.

Although Hyde's panel still must vote on the language in advance of the convention, the fact that both Hyde and Dole are embracing it all but assures its acceptance.

The new GOP plan came a day after Democrats moved to smoothly bridge their own internal differences on the issue.

Democratic platform writers in Kansas City produced a draft declaring abortion rights a "fundamental constitutional liberty" while also recognizing "the individual conscience of each American on this difficult issue."

In an overture to the religious right, the GOP plan would leave intact the strict language against all abortions contained in the abortion plank itself, a mainstay of GOP platforms since 1984.

It also adds to the abortion plank a condemnation of President Clinton's veto of legislation to ban certain late-term abortions.

Dole had earlier sought to include the so-called tolerance language in the anti-abortion plank itself. Anti-abortion delegates to the convention threatened a floor fight if Dole had stayed on such a course.

Ralph Reed, director of the Christian Coalition, "wholeheartedly and unreservedly" applauded the agreement and asserted: "We anticipate no fireworks or floor flights at the Republican Convention over the abortion issue."

However, Buchanan's sister and campaign manager, Bay Buchanan, called the tolerance plank "unacceptable as written."

"Abortion is not an issue of 'personal conscience' as this plank states. It is a matter of morality, or right and wrong, life and death." She said if the plank were not changed, "we will fight to alter it or to replace it."

Dole's move also angered some moderate Republicans who favor abortion rights and had wanted to scrap the anti-abortion language altogether.

Ann Stone, director of Republicans for Choice Political Action Committee, called the new language "a disaster" and said the religious right "got everything they wanted."

Still, pro-abortion-rights Republicans as a whole have not been as vociferous on the issue as have the abortion opponents. It seemed likely the majority of them would accept the new language, if grudgingly.

"I feel extremely comfortable knowing that Bob Dole tried to do this and got this far," said Rep. Susan Molinari, R-N.Y., a Republican who supports abortion rights.

The plank got mixed reviews from some of the Republican governors who support abortion-rights. New Jersey Gov. Christie Whitman said that, even though she still opposes the anti-abortion plank, "I can fully support" the new language on tolerance.

Massachusetts Gov. William Weld, however, suggested the tolerance language was a "throwaway line" and that "I think it should be in the abortion plank."

Dole himself has been strongly anti-abortion throughout his career, but advocated the tolerance language as he turned his attention to the general election — and the need to attract the votes of Americans who favor abortion rights.

The so-called "Tolerance Plank" asserts: "We ... recognize that members of our party have deeply-held and sometimes differing views on issues of personal conscience like abortion and capital punishment. We view this diversity of views as a source of strength, not as a sign of weakness."

And a "Tolerance Principle" to be included in the platform's preamble asserts, with a high degree of vagueness: "Recognizing within our own ranks different approaches to achieving our common goal, we urge respect for the sanctity of human life."

BERTHA: Hurricane batters coastal towns

(From 1A)

At 8 p.m. EDT, Bertha's center was about 60 miles west of the Pamlico Sound, which separates the Outer Banks from the North Carolina mainland.

Bertha's 35-mile-wide eye passed over Bald Head Island at the mouth of the river at midday, then marched up the coast, bringing a brief respite from winds that gusted as high as 115 mph.

"They're taking a battering," said Tom Ditt of North Carolina's Emergency Management Division. "We don't know what the damages are yet, but they're considerable."

The storm's center brushed past Cape Fear and slammed ashore about 5 p.m. in Wrightsville Beach, a thin strip of condos, motels and beach cottages about 5 miles east of Wilmington, a city of 60,000.

New Hanover County officials said Wilmington escaped serious damage, but the nearby beachfront communities were swamped with water and had scattered damage to homes, piers and businesses. At Jubilee Park in Carolina Beach south of Wilmington, a Ferris wheel toppled onto a carousel, smashing several of the ride's horses. A train ride nearby fell onto its side.

A woman who ignored warnings to stay inside was killed Friday in a traffic accident in Kitty Hawk, the ninth death blamed on the storm.

Others who tempted fate included four young men drinking beer and jumping into waves that carried them swiftly down the beach at Kill Devil Hills. They were still alive — as were two wind-surfers chased off the beach by the Coast Guard while winds gusted to 70 mph nearby.

The eye of the hurricane first hit land at Cape Fear, the same site where Hurricane Hazel, North Carolina's most damaging storm in recent times, came ashore in 1954. Hazel barreled over Wilmington with 150-mph winds, killing 19 people and causing $136 million in damage.

Bertha was much less powerful, but emergency management officials were glad they aggressively evacuated beach areas well in advance of the storm.

"Wouldn't it be wonderful if all this turned out to be just an exercise?" Bill Nichols, a spokesman for South Carolina's Georgetown County emergency agency, said just before Bertha turned away from his area.

That's where the storm was originally predicted to hit, and county officials, remembering Hurricane Hugo in 1989, breathed a cautious sigh of relief as Bertha turned north.

The largest damage from the storm might be to the area's tourist-hungry economy. The 175,000 tourists who left South Carolina's Grand Strand usually generate $14 million a day, officials said, and Bertha blew away $4.5 million a day in sales along the Outer Banks alone.

Almost 14,500 people woke up in Red Cross shelters Friday after giving up on clogged highways and packed hotels. About 6,800 people stayed in more than 100 shelters, and the agency was preparing to open more in Virginia and Maryland if necessary.

At West Brunswick High School in Shallotte, about 5 miles from the ocean near the South Carolina line, 500 people crammed into the cafeteria for a breakfast of pizza and apple sauce — the only food available.

Fallen trees and blown-out windows were common across the state's southeastern counties. A tornado ripped off part of the roof of a barn in Raleigh where a 4-H Club horse competition was being held this weekend. None of the people or horses at the complex was injured.

Bertha also prompted worries farther up the coast, as forecasters posted tropical storm warnings from the North Carolina-Virginia line all the way to Rhode Island.

The Air Force flew 16 C-5 cargo jets from Dover Air Force Base in Delaware to Carswell Naval Air Station near Fort Worth, Texas. At Fort Bragg in Fayetteville, about 100 miles inland, all but essential employees were sent home.

Dangerous rip currents were reported as far north as Massachusetts, where scientists worried that beaches would wash out under 15-foot surf expected by today.

"These storms can double and triple our erosion rate," said Mike Reynolds, resource manager of the Cape Cod National Seashore.

Carolina beaches were closed, and high waves and threatening riptides caused officials to ban swimming along ocean destinations in New Jersey.

Joey's crib is in Children's Hospital, where he is being treated for a rare blood disease. His best hope for a life-saving bone marrow transplant is his cocaine-addicted mother, a woman who police say traded the family car for drugs last month.

Since being arrested June 6 for endangering a child's welfare, a misdemeanor that carries a penalty of up to a year in jail, Gina Mancini has been in a rehabilitation center, getting treated for her addiction.

At a hearing Friday, city court Judge Robert Russell adjourned Mrs. Mancini's case for two months to see whether she can stay off cocaine. Doctors say the 25-year-old woman could only donate her bone marrow to her child if she remains drug-free for a year, to ensure she doesn't have any infections that can result from drug use.

But it's uncertain Joey can survive that long, and the boy's grandmother is begging people to get tested to see if their bone marrow matches the child's.

Gina Mancini is the only person whose bone marrow matches her son's. Joey's father's marrow did not match, and he has no brothers or sisters.

"If Gina does clean up, great, but I don't have much faith in anything right now. Look at any kid in this hospital — why? Why are they here?" said Patricia Mancini as she watched her grandson in his crib.

"The bottom line is Joey will die if he doesn't get a bone marrow transplant," she said.

Joey suffers from Wiskott-Aldrich syndrome, a disorder that strikes just seven or eight baby boys a year in the United States. Girls do not get the disease.

Wiskott-Aldrich damages the blood's platelets, which prevents clotting and makes patients extremely vulnerable to bleeding to death; suppresses the immune system, making patients susceptible to common infections; and causes skin rashes.

CERSKA, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — All wore civilian clothes. Some had their hands bound with wire. Spent cartridges lying nearby indicated they were shot at close range.

As experts dug deeper into a mass grave Friday, the evidence pointed to a civilian massacre — just the fate many people believe befell thousands of Muslims as they fled Bosnian Serbs after the fall of the Srebrenica enclave a year ago.

Five days of digging here at Cerska, 17 miles northwest of Srebrenica, has uncovered the remains of some 60 people. Investigators from the international war crimes tribunal for Bosnia are looking for buried evidence to use in prosecuting war crimes suspects.

Serb leaders claim that any Muslims who died after the fall of Srebrenica died fighting. William D. Haglund, the team's chief scientist, said Friday that was obviously not the case.

Showing reporters one of the bodies, Haglund pointed to bones on the excavated surface of the grave site.

"Look at those hands. Do you see how they're crossed? And there is wire wrapped around them," he said. Thin silver wire could be seen wrapped around the brown wrist bones of a pair of skeletonized hands.

All of the bodies uncovered have been in civilian clothing. Cartridges found on the scene indicated they were shot at close range, and the shell casings were marked as recently as 1994, proving that the find couldn't be from the beginning of the war.

The position of the bodies suggested that the victims were lined up on an embankment and shot from across a narrow road, Haglund said. Soil was probably dumped on top of the bodies.

Clothing indicated that all of the uncovered bodies were male.

About 7,000 men disappeared after the Serbs captured Srebrenica last July. Most are thought to have been killed by the Serbs — either ambushed as they fled through woods, or captured and mowed down by firing squads.

The war crimes tribunal has charged Bosnian Serb Gen. Ratko Mladic with organizing the massacres around Srebrenica. On Thursday, it issued international arrest warrants for him and the Bosnian Serbs' political leader, Radovan Karadzic.

On Friday, thousands of people who fled Srebrenica gathered in the northern town of Tuzla and vowed to return.

"We will come back," said Naser Oric, the former military commander of Srebrenica who was pulled out weeks before the enclave fell. "We ask for the punishment of all war criminals. We want the truth about the missing, and a dignified burial for the dead of Srebrenica."

After arrests, 'Lady of Burma' won't reveal next move

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — "The Lady" made herself perfectly clear: She'll stay in Burma, open a dialogue with its ruling generals and eventually the country will come around to her democratic way of thinking.

Aung San Suu Kyi, Burma's 51-year-old pro-democracy leader, said Friday she believes a very different Burma will emerge within her lifetime, despite the military regime that crushed the uprising she led in 1988.

"It's not a matter of hope," she said in an interview with The Associated Press. "That's how problems are resolved in the end — through dialogue. But as I keep repeating ad nauseum, intelligent people get to dialogue quickly whereas the stupid guys take longer."

Suu Kyi, the 1991 Nobel Peace Prize winner widely known as "The Lady" has not said much about her next move against the military regime. After two months of tension, she and the junta — the State Law and Order Restoration Council — appear to have reached a stalemate.

"We never announce our next move.... But we have to carry on with our party work," she said. "It's not as if we sit and wait to see what's happening with SLORC."

After the 1988 uprising, the military council placed Suu Kyi under a six-year house arrest. Since her release a year ago, the council has refused to meet with her. But she has no plans to leave Burma.

Of official media reports last week that the military would compromise with democratic forces if Suu Kyi left Burma, she said: "When you consider the number of promises SLORC has made and broken, we're not interested. It's just a ploy."

In May, Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy announced — and later held — a conference to bring together candidates who won the 1990 election that had been annulled by the military.

The regime countered by arresting 273 of her followers and reportedly intimidating at least 14 party members into resigning. Many of those arrested since have been released, but Suu Kyi said 45 of the 1990 election winners remained behind bars.

Defections, she said, are "inevitable in any kind of revolution. You cannot achieve great changes without some casualties."

Still, she's convinced that through dialogue and "the desire of the people for change," a democratic Burma will emerge.

"What is eight years in the life of a nation?" she asked, referring to the regime's period in power. "Yes, of course it's long for those who have suffered. But change always takes place sooner or later."

Drug lords won't be extradicted, Columbia says

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — President Ernesto Samper urged his countrymen to unite against U.S. pressure Friday, calling the State Department decision to revoke his visa a threat to Colombia as a whole.

His interior minister also took a hard-line stance, insisting that Colombia will not extradite the Cali drug cartel's jailed leaders as American officials have requested.

"We must all close ranks to defend Colombia," Samper told 3,000 supporters in the central city of Ibague.

He said he regretted being stripped of his U.S. visa — but added it could have been worse.

"I prefer that (action) was taken against me, as the president and an individual, rather than against Colombia and its people in the form of commercial sanctions," he said.

Samper indicated Colombia wants to maintain good relations with the United States but not if Washington violates "principles of mutual respect ... or of nonintervention in the affairs of states."

He said Colombia would continue "with or without permission, alone or accompanied" to fight drug trafficking, and reiterated his contention that U.S. moves aimed at weakening his hold on power only benefited drug gangs.

Interior Minister Horacio Serpa said the revocation of Samper's U.S. visa amounted to "crystal clear and absurd persecution" intended to provoke Samper's downfall.

"It's all a pronouncement directed at showing us that we Colombians are pariahs, drug traffickers and bandits. And we are not that. We have had such undesirables in this country for awhile, but we're battling them," Serpa said.

Samper was cleared by Colombia's congress last month of charges he accepted a $6 million campaign donation from Cali cartel bosses Miguel and Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela. After the decision, the United States requested that Colombia extradite the two kingpins, who have been in jail for a year.

But Colombia's 1991 constitution forbids extradition of its citizens. Serpa told Caracol radio Friday that "it is not a priority of this government to present to congress" any modification of the ban on extraditions.

Serpa also said Samper has no intention of resigning, and suggested that Vice President Humberto de la Calle step down for not expressing full support for Samper in a statement Thursday.

De la Calle, a political rival of Samper and constitutionally the next in line, has expressed concern over the damage the scandal has caused to Colombia.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — By a lopsided 5-to-1 margin, the House voted Friday to limit same-sex marriages after an emotional debate that pitted gay-rights supporters against those who said homosexual marriage threatens traditional family values.

The bill passed 342-67 with support from 224 Republicans and 118 Democrats. One Republican, Steve Gunderson, R-Wis., who is gay, broke ranks to vote with 65 Democrats and independent Bernard Sanders of Vermont against it.

The measure, called the "Defense of Marriage Act," would define marriage as a legal union between a man and a woman and would allow states to refuse to recognize same-sex marriages performed in another state.

Lawmakers passed the bill after defeating two amendments that would have gutted it. They were proposed by Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., one of three openly gay lawmakers.

Bill supporters also defeated a proposal calling on the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, to look into the denial of benefits to gays living in domestic partnerships.

The GOP-sponsored measure, designed to combat a court case in Hawaii that is likely to result in legalizing gay unions there in the next few years, now goes to the Senate, which also is expected to pass it.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said after the House vote that President Clinton will sign the legislation because of his personal opposition to same-sex marriages.

But McCurry also said the bill is unnecessary, echoing the views of many House Democrats. He said the measure was an effort at "gay baiting, pure and simple ... a classic use of wedge politics designed to provoke anxieties and fears."

Saying that the Hawaii decision is not imminent, he asked, "is this a debate or a piece of legislation that's really necessary? It's hard to see how it is, and it is clearly going to provoke some animosities."

Congressional Republicans have said they are pushing the measure as a way to prevent gays from using the Hawaii case to force other states to recognize same-sex marriages performed in Hawaii.

Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ga., said Clinton's support "was important" in getting the bill approved. Passage showed that "America is not ready to change its definition of marriage," Barr said.

The Human Rights Campaign, the nation's largest lesbian and gay political organization, said the House "hit a new low in gay-bashing" with its action.

The Traditional Values Coalition, which represents religious conservatives, said the vote "protects the sanctity of marriage."

Gary Bauer, president of the Family Research Council, a conservative advocacy group, said, "We commend those pro-family champions who voted to protect marriage from the aggressive legal actions of homosexual activists and the ambitions of liberal judges."

Bauer said that legalizing gay marriages would mean that "the force of law would come against businesses, schools and all institutions — such as the Boy Scouts — that do not embrace homosexuality as a good and normal behavior."

Earlier, during the House debate Rep. Andrea Seastrand, R-Calif. made an argument that seemed to represent the majority view. She said that from time to time Congress should "reaffirm what is good" in society and that "traditional marriage is a house built on a rock."

But Rep. Jane Harman, D-Calif., arguing against the bill, charged that its GOP sponsors were addressing a "non-problem." She called the measure "divisive, untimely and possibly unconstitutional" and said marriage is an issue that states "are fully capable of handling without the federal government."

House Republican Whip Tom DeLay of Texas said the bill "doesn't tell people what they can do" in private but would make sure that states could not "force (other) people to condone it."

"Children do best in a family with a mom and a dad," DeLay said. Accepting same-sex marriage, DeLay said, "will only take us further down the road to social deterioration."

But Rep. Neil Abercrombie, D-Hawaii, said marriage is "a matter of state, not federal, control" and should continue to be.

Rep. Charles Canady, R-Fla., said, "All we are doing is reaffirming what has always been understood by (the term) marriage and what has always been understood by (the term) spouse."

The emotional high point of the debate came when Gunderson, the only openly gay Republican lawmaker, asked, "Why are we so mean? Why are we so motivated by prejudice and intolerance and unfortunately, in some cases, bigotry?"

Gunderson said he would have voted for the bill if members had agreed to study whether some federal benefits and certain rights, such as visiting a seriously ill spouse in a hospital, should be granted to homosexuals in domestic partnerships.

But his request for a study was refused, Gunderson said.

"Such action exposes this bill for the cheap, mean, political game it is," he said.

Democratic Rep. Nancy Pelosi of San Francisco called the bill "a blatant act of discrimination."

Pelosi asked her colleagues: "Should you find yourself in a situation where your child or close relatives or close friends find solace, happiness, confidence, love and support in a relationship that's appropriate for them, wouldn't you want them to have the legal recognition they deserve? It isn't a threat to anyone."

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., a leader in the civil rights movement of the 1960s, said he opposed the bill because it "denies gay men and women the right to liberty."

Rep. Steve Coburn, R-Okla., said people where he comes from believe "homosexuality is immoral, that it's based on perversion, that it's based on lust. My district says it is time to say that homosexuality should not be sanctioned on an equal level with heterosexuality."

"We hear about diversity, but we don't hear about perversity, and we should not be afraid to talk about the issues that are at the core of this. This is a great debate that we're going to have in our country, and it's not going to end with the debate on this bill," Coburn said.

His amendment to require the federal government to recognize the same-sex marriages in any state where they become legal locally — entitling them to federal Social Security and other spousal benefits — was defeated 311 to 103.

Public opinion surveys show a majority of Americans support most forms of gay rights, except marriage. Some polls show as many as 70 percent of respondents oppose gay marriage.

Defendant denies seeking Clinton's favor

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An Arkansas banker accused of Whitewater-related crimes dismissed a prosecution claim that he broke the law to win a state job from Bill Clinton as "the most ridiculous thing I ever heard."

Herby Branscum Jr., one of two bankers on trial in federal court, testified Friday that he had no need to curry favor with a politician he had known and supported for 22 years.

Branscum was appointed by then-Gov. Clinton to the influential Arkansas Highway Commission in January 1991. But from the witness chair, he painted a picture for jurors of two men with a warm relationship that began with Clinton's 1974 losing race for Congress.

He watched with a big smile as his lawyer showed jurors a photograph of a youthful Clinton after that race, with a scribbled inscription that said: "To Herby, with deep gratitude for your fine help which will yet find a better reward."

"He's been in my home. I know him well enough to know you couldn't ingratiate yourself with him," testified the former Arkansas Democratic chairman, who said he has donated his own money, raised funds from others, and worked in the campaigns of the president ever since the congressional race.

Addressing their theory in opening arguments, prosecutors working for Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr contended that Branscum and co-defendant Robert M. Hill sought to win Clinton's favor to obtain state appointments.

Branscum received his post in January 1991, five weeks after Hill — co-owner with Branscum of Perry County Bank — delivered more than $15,000 in campaign donations to Clinton. A Clinton staff memo said Hill wanted to discuss Branscum's appointment at the meeting.

An associate of Hill, who was at the meeting, testified that at the end of the meeting, Clinton asked whether Branscum would make a good highway commissioner.

The 11-count indictment of Branscum and Hill does not allege wrongdoing in those appointments, nor does it charge Clinton with wrongdoing.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to misuse their bank's money to reimburse themselves and others for political donations, including contributions to Clinton's 1990 gubernatorial campaign and his 1991 presidential exploratory committee.

They also are charged with concealing a $30,000 cash withdrawal in May 1990 and a $22,500 withdrawal in November that year by Clinton's campaign. Perry County Bank did not report those transactions to the Internal Revenue Service. Federal law requires notification of deposits and withdrawals of more than $10,000.

In three days of questioning by his lawyer, Dan Guthrie, Branscum emphatically denied that expense checks he and Hill received from their bank went to reimburse political contributions. Rather, Branscum said, he earned the money while working as his bank's lawyer and Hill was paid as the bank's accountant. Branscum said regulators never raised questions of impropriety over the work of the two for their own institution.

Branscum also repeatedly denied testimony by former Perry County Bank president Neal T. Ainley, the government's chief witness.

Rogue Avon lady defies court order

COEUR d'ALENE, Idaho (AP) — A defiant Avon lady who refuses to ring doorbells is calling on the courts to let her sell the cosmetics from home.

Rose Christmann, a great-grandmother and widow who was jailed five years ago for selling "Exotic Melon" lipstick to an undercover cop, has again been charged with illegal home sales.

The 74-year-old was ordered Tuesday to show up for a contempt hearing next week regarding her persistence in selling at home.

Christmann said Thursday that she gets too tired selling door-to-door — the traditional Avon method — and needs the money.

"I'm so bull-headed, I'm going to stick in there until I die," she said. "I'm not going to crawl for anybody. This is what I do. It's what I am."

Her battle goes back to 1988 when she was denied a permit to open a shop in a residential neighborhood. She reapplied a year later and was again turned down.

She set up shop anyway and was arrested in 1991 after police bought Avon products from her in an undercover sting.

Her latest scrape stems from a January 1995 court order to keep her shop closed. She agreed, but six months later was selling out of her house again and has continued to do so for months, police said.

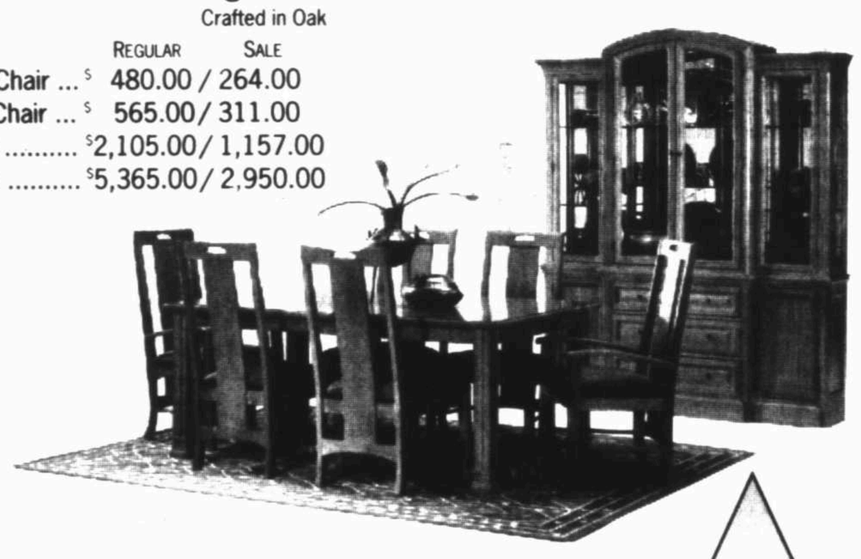

Christmann faces a a $500 fine and five days in jail for each alleged violation of the court order.

Divorce battle ends for British royal couple as agreement reached

LONDON (AP) — At last, the world's most avidly watched divorce battle is over. Now, perhaps, Prince Charles and Princess Diana have a real chance of living happily ever after.

Lawyers for the couple announced Friday that they have agreed to end their marriage, almost 15 years after millions watched their spectacular wedding at St. Paul's Cathedral and their shy kiss on the balcony of Buckingham Palace.

Diana will never be queen and will lose the coveted title "Her Royal Highness," but she remains a princess and instantly becomes one of the world's most eligible women. Her financial settlement was not disclosed but The Sun, the tabloid that broke the story of the final agreement, said she will get a lump sum of $26.35 million.

Charles gets his freedom.

Although aides have said he has no immediate plans to remarry, his old flame Camilla Parker Bowles is now also free.

The modern-day fairy tale romance of the beautiful princess and future king held endless fascination. But the real story of Charles and Diana's marriage was more like a tragedy: a mismatched couple whose problems were magnified by life in a relentless public spotlight.

In a candid television interview last fall, Diana said the marriage began to founder after the 1982 birth of their first son, Prince William. She fell into postnatal depression, injured herself and took comfort in the binge-and-vomit cycle of bulimia.

She said her husband's family saw her as manipulative and temperamental and decided she was "unstable" and "mentally unbalanced" — labels she said stuck through her marriage.

When Charles renewed an affair with Mrs. Parker Bowles in 1986, Diana said the marriage became "a bit crowded." By 1987, she and Charles were effectively leading separate private lives, but "we were a good, good team in public."

Charles admitted in 1994 to having had an affair after his marriage broke down. Diana also confessed to having an affair with retired army officer James Hewitt, whom she says she loved.

The divorce culminates years of reports on the troubled state of their marriage, ranging from best-selling books to tabloid stories leaked by friends to television interviews that riveted an international audience.

Queen Elizabeth II finally decided that enough dirty laundry had been publicly aired after Diana gave the TV interview without palace approval. In December, the queen told her son and daughter-in-law to divorce quickly.

Charles, 47, immediately agreed. Diana, 35, said yes in late February. Reports of acrimonious negotiations hit the newspapers, so the queen intervened again and final dealings were conducted privately.

On Friday, Diana was at Kensington Palace with her children, William, 14, and Prince Harry, 11. She later drove off in a car with a friend. Charles played host to visiting South African President Nelson Mandela in the morning and spent the rest of the day privately, Buckingham Palace said.

Lawyers Farrer and Co. on behalf of Charles, and Mishcon de Reya on behalf of Diana, said in a statement that after "amicable" negotiations, the couple had agreed on divorce terms and a "confidentiality clause."

An interim divorce decree will be granted on Monday. A final decree will be issued Aug. 28, the lawyers said.

Under the settlement, Charles and Diana will continue to share responsibility for their children.

Buckingham Palace said Diana will be regarded as a member of the royal family, will continue to live at Kensington Palace, and will occasionally be invited to state and national events.

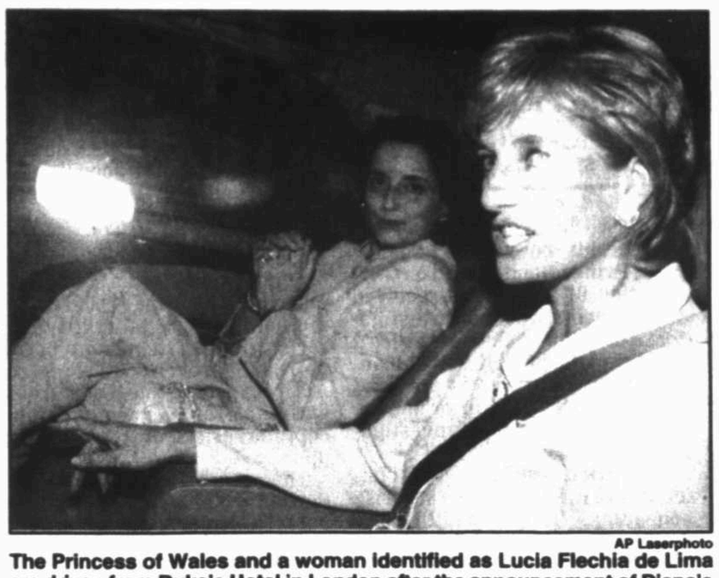

Her private office will be moved to Kensington Palace from St. James's Palace, where Charles lives. British media reports said Diana will receive $620,000 annually to run the office.

But Diana will lose the HRH prefix, for Her Royal Highness, and will simply be Diana, Princess of Wales.

Charles lives near Mrs. Parker Bowles, who was divorced in March 1995.

Diana wants to be a goodwill ambassador for Britain and said she will fight for a public role — but it is not clear what the role will be.

Study shows genetic testing could detect Alzheimer's

LONDON (AP) — Genetic testing could be an accurate way to detect Alzheimer's disease, according to a study by Duke University researchers published Friday in a British medical journal.

A British study also reported in The Lancet said a repetition of very exacting brain scans may also be useful in diagnosing Alzheimer's.

Currently, the only way a doctor can accurately diagnose the crippling neurological disease is by examining brain tissue after an autopsy.

A definitive diagnosis would allow doctors and family members to better plan for the care of Alzheimer's patients and could bolster efforts to find an effective treatment, said Dr. Allen Roses, head of the team investigating the genetics of Alzheimer's at Duke University in Durham, N.C.

Roses thinks his team's genetic discoveries — which were patented by Duke and licensed to test manufacturer Athena Neurosciences of California — have produced an extremely accurate diagnostic tool for patients with symptoms of the disease.

"If I had a patient who tested positive, I would tell them that the probability this is Alzheimer's is very high," Roses said.

The test, which has been on the market since March, detects the presence of a gene known as APOE type 4 that the Duke research team first linked to Alzheimer's in 1993. Medical experts, however, have been reluctant to endorse its widespread use until more solid data was available.

The study marked the first time researchers used autopsy results to confirm the findings of a diagnostic Alzheimer's test. They performed genetic tests on the brain samples from 67 suspected Alzheimer's patients and found that every patient who tested positive for the gene had autopsy-confirmed Alzheimer's.

According to the report in the Lancet, 57 of the 67 patients were confirmed as having Alzheimer's, including all 43 who had at least one APOE type 4 gene. None of the patients without Alzheimer's carried the gene, it said.

But Roses said the test's shortcoming is that a negative finding tells the patients virtually nothing. One out of four people who have the disease do not carry the gene for it, and researchers are not yet sure why.

The Lancet report concluded that "APOE genotyping predicts pathological verification of Alzheimer's Disease more specifically than any other test."

The British study was done by the Dementia Research Group at the National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery and Imperial College School of Medicine, both in London.

Although no effective treatment exists, doctors and advocates for Alzheimer's patients agree that an accurate diagnostic test would allow them to better manage patients with the unique type of memory loss and confusion that it causes.

The $200 Duke test could settle the matter, without requiring patients to undergo a battery of expensive tests in search of a diagnosis.

About 4 million Americans suffer from suspected Alzheimer's.

Roses thinks his study — along with the unpublished results of several others — should begin to satisfy skeptics who advised against the routine use of the test in a November article in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

FBI Director Freeh visits Saudi Arabia again to investigate bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director Louis J. Freeh is making his second visit to Saudi Arabia in little more than a week to resolve lingering problems with the investigation of a June 25 terrorist bombing of a U.S. military complex there.

It was learned that Freeh was in Jedda, Saudi Arabia, on Friday, having left Washington secretly on Thursday. He was to visit Riyadh as well and was expected to stay into the weekend for meetings with top Saudi officials, including Prince Bandar Bin Sultan, Saudi Arabia's ambassador to the United States.

A team of more than 70 FBI investigators has been sent to the Arab kingdom to help with the investigation, but it was learned that there remain problems with information flow and cooperation between the U.S. and Saudi investigators.

In response to questions, FBI spokesman John Collingwood confirmed that Freeh returned for his second visit this month "at the invitation of Saudi officials."

"He's being received by senior Saudi leaders and holding discussions regarding the investigation," Collingwood said. "Freeh's return to Saudi Arabia shows the importance of the investigation to the United States."

He declined to discuss details of the investigation.

It was learned that Freeh hopes to meet with officials senior enough to resolve the differences between investigators and get a complete agreement on how the investigation should proceed.

ABC News, which first reported Freeh's trip, said Saudi and U.S. investigators disagree over where the bombers might have gotten outside help. American officials say Iran is at top of list of suspects; the Saudis say their evidence points to Syria, the network said.

The June 25 truck bombing of the Khobar Towers complex in Dhahran killed 19 U.S. airmen and wounded hundreds of others. The apartments are home to 3,713 U.S. servicemen, more than half the American force in Saudi Arabia.

— FBI spokeman John Collin

On Wednesday of last week, Freeh first arrived in Dhahran to inspect the bomb site and talk with investigators during a several-day trip as sniping between officials of the two countries broke out in public.

U.S. officials have complained that on May 31 the Saudis beheaded four suspects in a car bombing last year in Riyadh without letting FBI agents question them. Five Americans were killed in that attack.

"There's always a possibility that they were linked somehow to this more recent attack," one U.S. investigator said last week. "Had we been able to talk to them, maybe we could have taken steps to avert this, but we don't know."

But Prince Bandar read on CNN a section of a letter he received from Freeh about that investigation. According to Bandar, Freeh's letter said, "The professionalism, dedication and services provided by the Ministry of Interior and the general direction of the investigation has been exceptional."

U.S. officials suggested that letter was written before the surprise beheadings. They added that the Saudis have since explained that they hurried the executions without notice to U.S. authorities for fear the plans for execution would leak in the United States.

Meanwhile, the United States is taking aggressive steps in Saudi Arabia to ward off what the Pentagon expects will be more attacks on U.S. forces, Air Force Gen. Howell Estes III said Friday.

"You can't sit here and wait to be attacked," said Estes, director of operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "You've got to get aggressive and try to stop it."

While Estes declined to detail the counter-terrorism steps, a defense official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they could include increased efforts to infiltrate terrorist groups, stepped-up border patrols to prevent outside terrorists from getting into Saudi Arabia, and quick-reaction teams to intercept terrorists or terrorist supplies.

The news briefing by Estes was the same one he has given in private to senior defense officials and congressional leaders. Defense Secretary William Perry has come under criticism from some Republicans on Capitol Hill in connection with the bombing.

U.S. military security experts, as well as FBI investigators in Saudi Arabia, are examining a new wave of threats directed at American forces in Saudi Arabia. Estes rated the chances of another attack as "likely" and said officials expect the magnitude of the attack to increase.

California health chief says warnings 'jumped the gun'

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — California's health chief on Friday accused Texas officials of too quickly blaming strawberries for a cyclospora outbreak in Houston, costing growers $11 million.

California's Health and Welfare Secretary Sandra Smoley delivered 1,200 baskets of the bright red berries to a national convention of county officials meeting in Houston and pronounced strawberries, a $608 million export from California, free of the parasite.

"This illness must not be taken lightly, but the cause is not California strawberries," Smoley said.

"We have tested the strawberries, we have tested the soil and we have tested the water. Californians eat a lot of strawberries and we have not had one case of cyclospora contracted in the state," she said.

Although about 1,000 cases occurred in several states and Canada, Houston had one of the highest concentrations, with a total of 65 confirmed cases of cyclospora. The parasite, originating in human fecal matter, in turn causes diarrhea, fatigue, loss of appetite and cramps.

But Smoley said Texas assessed blame without adequate testing.

"It was immediately said it was California . . . without any backup information," Smoley said.

Judy Pennycook, a supervisor in Monterey County, California, said growers will lose at least $11 million because of consumers snubbing strawberries and subsequent drops in price over the "three-week senseless scare" of blaming the berries for cyclospora.

Part of her jurisdiction includes the city of Watsonville, considered the strawberry capital of America.

"The farmers, growers and the community have been devastated. The trickle-down affect also impacted stores, restaurateurs, cold storage and carton manufacturers," Pennycook said. "We won't know until next year the entire loss."

But city of Houston and state of Texas health officials said Friday they took correct measures June 8 when an advisory was issued cautioning people against eating fresh strawberries after two clusters of 27 cases of cyclospora were initially thought to be linked to the consumption of fresh strawberries.

The advisory has since been lifted as of June 27, and health officials are now investigating whether Guatemalan raspberries may be linked to the cyclospora cases.

"We had a lot of sick people and all the initial information we had pointed to strawberries," said Dr. Kate Hendricks of the Texas Department of Health.

Interviews with patients in the initial investigation related that the fruit garnish on their desserts were strawberries and it was not until later that it was revealed that raspberries were also used, she said.

"To have dozens of cases within a short amount of time constitutes an outbreak and a cause for concern," Hendricks said.

Ken Faour, director of food services for Schoenmann Produce Co. in Houston, also claimed health officials "jumped the gun" in declaring the health advisory.

Bertha evacuation, heavy traffic had F-16 on indirect flight plan

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The F-16 fighter that crashed and killed a 4-year-old boy was taking a roundabout route to an Air Force base because of evacuations caused by Hurricane Bertha, officials said Friday.

The Fighting Falcon was among 49 planes being evacuated to Eglin Air Force Base, about 45 miles east of here, from Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., when it crashed into a house Thursday about a mile from Pensacola Regional Airport.

Instead of going straight to Eglin, a four-plane formation that included the doomed jet flew about 250 miles past the base, turned around over New Orleans and then headed back east.

The crash killed 4-year-old Sean Cannon and burned his mother, Robbin Cannon, 30, over 30 percent of her body. She was in serious condition Friday.

The boy's grandfather was angry the pilot had been so far from Eglin.

"If they don't court-martial that bastard, I'm going to kill him," Cannon said.

The flight plan was designed to create space between the F-16s and other planes using the base, said Maj. Jerry Renne, an Eglin spokesman.

Each day, Eglin averages 200 takeoffs and landings of military and commercial aircraft — the base has its own airline terminal — in addition to the planes expected from Shaw.

"You didn't want 50 aircraft arriving at Eglin all at one time," said Col. Bill Alford, who is in charge of the crash site. "As a result, they had the routing through New Orleans."

Renne said investigators have told him nothing about why the pilot, who reported having engine trouble 20 miles north of Pensacola, tried to land at a civilian airport surrounded by homes, businesses and schools instead of two nearby naval air fields in less densely populated areas.

Dole has yet to hit stride in White House race

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Four weeks after Bob Dole left the Senate to jump start his presidential campaign, even many Republicans acknowledge that the likely GOP nominee is still struggling to hit full stride.

To be sure, no one — least of all, President Clinton — is writing off Dole's chances in the November election. After all, Clinton has had problems of his own in the past month.

'When he left the Senate last month there was hope: Liberation might bring a new Dole. Instead he's wandering like some political vagabond.'
—Wall Street Journal columnist Paul Gigot on Dole's campaign

■ News analysis

Dole, who left the Senate on June 11 intending to take aim at his rival, instead spent much of the past month battling controversies over his own views on abortion, smoking and gun control. He also got into a high-profile scrape with the NAACP, the nation's oldest and largest civil rights group.

"I don't think he's done worth a durn," said Arizona GOP activist Jack Londen, a former Republican national committeeman. "He needs to get some momentum."

Conservative columnists have been equally harsh, raking Dole with the kind of criticism they usually direct at Clinton.

"When he left the Senate last month there was hope: Liberation might bring a new Dole. Instead he's wandered like some political vagabond," Paul Gigot wrote in Friday's Wall Street Journal.

Washington Times columnist Wesley Pruden decried the candidate's "addiction to flub-dubbery," and concluded: "Mr. Dole, whose grasp of how to run things in the Senate was steady and sure, has not yet grasped what it means to run for president."

Other Dole backers were only slightly less critical.

"His performance has been fair. I wouldn't say it's been good," said Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La. "He's got to get off tobacco and guns and get on the real issues."

Republicans are most critical of Dole's handling of the smoking issue. His troubles started just two days after he left the Senate at a campaign stop in Kentucky, where Dole suggested that smoking is not addictive.

"We know it's not good for kids, but a lot of other things aren't good," the candidate said. "Drinking's not good. Some would say milk's not good."

Dole later crossed swords on the issue with former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop and "Today" show host Katie Couric.

Georgia state Rep. Matt Towery, a Republican from suburban Atlanta, said Dole compounded the political damage by prolonging the controversy.

"It's a distraction because he's let it become a distraction," Towery said, adding that Dole's views could alienate the kind of suburban swing voters that he needs in November.

The GOP candidate has also been unable to shake two other difficult issues, abortion and assault weapons.

Shortly before leaving the Senate, Dole tried to resolve the internal Republican feud over abortion with a compromise. He reiterated his support banning the procedure in most cases but suggested that the party platform include an expression of tolerance for other views.

The details remained unclear until Friday, when Dole's campaign released the actual language that will be inserted in the party's statement of principles. Although the proposal satisfied most anti-abortion Republicans, GOP activists on the other side of the issue accused Dole of caving in to anti-abortion forces.

On assault weapons, Dole abandoned his commitment to seek a repeal of the federal ban on 19 specific semi-automatic weapons as well as copycat versions of the prohibited models.

The Clinton campaign quickly produced a March letter from Dole to the National Rifle Association in which the Kansan called repealing the ban "one of my legislative priorities."

At the same time, Dole also had to contend with a perceived snub of the NAACP. After declining an invitation to speak at the organization's convention, he accused its leaders of "trying to set me up."

Dole added that he will have other opportunities to discuss civil rights with an audience that he "can relate to."

In another disappointment for Dole, retired Gen. Colin Powell, has repeatedly indicated in recent weeks that he will not accept a high-profile campaign role.

Still, interviews with Republicans in several states indicate that party activists remain optimistic.

Towery, a confidant of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, argued that Dole's change of position on assault weapons was a master stroke that will help him win over crucial swing voters.

"This is the time to do all your mid-course corrections," he said. "Anybody who takes the position that assault weapons ought to be sold to the general public is asking for trouble."

Lamm says he has credibility to beat Perot

DENVER (AP) — Offering himself as a worthy alternative to Ross Perot, former Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm said Friday he's talked with many Reform Party petition circulators who don't want Perot for president.

Lamm, who announced his bid for the Reform Party nomination on Tuesday, put his chances at 50-50 in the race and admitted there might be some "bravado" even in those odds.

"The most common comment I get is: 'I'll sign your petition, and I don't want Ross Perot for president,'" Lamm said. "They think he's come up with some good ideas, but they realize he is not the person to carry it to the next step."

Perot signaled for the first time this week that he would contest Lamm for the Reform Party nomination.

Lamm, appearing at a conference on managed health care, appeared fatigued but was nevertheless upbeat about his low-budget campaign.

"I think you can run a grassroots campaign for president, but all the precedent is against me," he said. "People have tried it before — Jerry Brown, for example.

"The press realizes these are important issues I'm raising and I want to raise the level of dialogue. I think I spent a lot of time on the phone talking to people who are carrying the petitions, the men and women who are out there working."

"Ross Perot has a strong admiration in this group, and they respect him, but...."

Lamm told the managed health care survey group "no developed country denies as much health care to the people as this country," and it is, in effect, already rationing health care.

"We've got a problem, and some dramatic change has to take place," he said. "The role of health care is not to produce the best medicine — but to produce the best health."

■ For updates on the presidential campaign, call Cityline at 560-2400; enter category 6204

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concerned about their own election campaigns, House Republicans muscled GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole this week when they announced plans to pass stand-alone welfare reform legislation by the end of the year.

■ News analysis

At the same time, the decision signaled the end of the all-consuming GOP effort to force a balanced budget in the current Congress, and means that any election-year tax cut bill will be a mere shadow of the package that majority Republicans once sought.

"In an effort to continue moving this critical issue forward, I have today asked Speaker (Newt) Gingrich and Majority Leader (Trent) Lott to pass a sweeping welfare reform bill for the third time in eight months," Dole wrote the congressional leaders of his own party on Thursday.

But GOP sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the letter was dispatched after campaign aides had been notified — after weeks of internal discussions — that welfare would be moved separately in hopes that Clinton would sign it. Attaching the GOP prescription for Medicaid, which would have turned the program into a series of block grants to the states, was certain to draw a veto.

Dole had long opposed separating the two proposals, and congressional sources said he didn't want to give Clinton a chance to sign a major welfare reform bill so close to the election.

But the presidential candidate's interests and those of the rank-and-file House Republicans diverged, as Gingrich and the rest of the House leadership learned when they began receiving pressure from the rank and file.

"The system works when a freshman in the House of Representatives can actually convince enough other members, including committee chairmen, to buck the leadership and do that which makes the most common sense," Rep. John Ensign of Nevada, who helped lead the revolt, said in a statement.

He said action on welfare is essential to provide a "victory for children."

But in addition to policy reasons, after 18 months of struggle with the president, House members want to be able to present a tangible accomplishment to the voters, according to a variety of lawmakers and their aides.

Several aides also said the decision underscored the frustration that many Republicans feel with the Dole campaign, which lags badly behind Clinton's re-election effort. Given Dole's comments that he wouldn't seek to repeal the assault weapons ban this week, one aide said some lawmakers were growing fearful that "he's trying to draw distinctions between himself and the House."

There's no guarantee that the decision will produce a compromise with the White House on welfare, although spokesman Michael McCurry welcomed the move and said Republicans had at least removed a "poison pill" by dropping their Medicaid plan.

But GOP strategists believe at the least they will confront Clinton with a difficult choice — either sign a bill and anger many liberal voters whose support makes up a portion of his political base, or veto it and risk the wrath of the voters of the center who favor changes in the welfare system. The same political calculus applies to the House Democrats seeking re-election this fall.

Starr is investigating why Marceca, an Army investigator working at the White House, gathered hundreds of FBI files on officials, including some high-ranking figures from the Reagan and Bush administrations.

Responding to a request submitted July 5, a Texas court sent Starr this week a copy of a defamation suit Marceca filed in 1994 against two Texas women. Marceca claimed in the case that he was fired from the White House after the two women told the FBI that he was involved in organized crime.

In the complaint, Marceca said he had an opportunity to make "a cursory examination" of an FBI report conducted when the White House was doing a background check on him. He learned from the report the identities of the two women questioned by the FBI. Disclosure of law enforcement sources is prohibited by federal law.

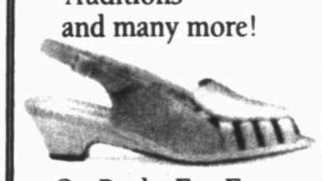

Marceca lived in Llano County, Texas, during the 1980s and worked as an investigator for the Texas attorney general.

In court papers that came to light Friday, it was learned that Marceca was arrested by the Llano County sheriff's office in 1983 after a woman said he threatened her.

Joyce Montag, a defendant in the 1994 defamation suit, accused Marceca of threatening to use his position as an investigator "to cause her harm or subject her to arrest," according to papers on file at the Llano County district attorney's office.

Marceca's lawyer, Montag and her lawyer all declined to comment.

From Staff Reports

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales announced earlier this week that his Child Support Division has suspended 101 licenses of parents who failed to pay their child support. Those parents have collectively withheld nearly one million dollars ($978,557) in support from their children, Morales said.

Included among the 101, are two from Ector County and one from Midland County.

The three (and the amount of money owed at the time of suspension) are: Mitchell Al Fay, Ector County, $7,877.46; Catarino Martinez, Ector County, $7,444.66; and Russell L. Johnson, Midland County, $8,225.13.

"Every month thousands of Texas children fail to receive adequate financial support from their parents," Morales said. "We will continue to use all legal tools available to us to collect child support from Texas children. License suspension is a last resort when all other options have failed."

The license suspension law went into effect Sept. 1, 1995. The Child Support Division has mailed more than 100,000 warning letters to delinquent parents. As of this past Monday, parents responsible for 29,453 delinquent cases responded to the warning and are now paying their child support, Morales added. Collections exceed $26.3 million.

Museum unveils postage stamp dedicated to Pecos Bill

From Staff Reports

The stamp is part of the Folk Heroes series designed by artist David LaFleur of Derby, Kan.; other stamps are of John Henry, Paul Bunyan and Mighty Casey.

Also during Friday's celebration, there was an unveiling of the prototype of the 25-foot-tall Pecos Bill statue that the city commissioned, and author Steven Kellogg signed copies of his children's book on the folk hero.

According to folk tales, a young Pecos Bill fell out of a wagon train into the Pecos River, where he was rescued by a coyote. Tall tales feature Pecos Bill squeezing the poison from a rattlesnake and using the snake for a lasso, riding a mountain lion bareback, drinking boiling coffee and wiping his mouth with a cactus and riding the back of a tornado.

Strong man John Henry, known for his ability to drive steel, was a hero of workers who built the nation's railway system. Giant lumberjack Paul Bunyan roamed the countryside with his ox, Babe, according to lore. Mighty Casey, the hero of the classic ballad "Casey at the Bat," is a young ball player who struck out and caused his team to lose an important game.

The stamps will be issued beginning today in 20-stamp sheets. Related merchandise includes First Day Cover, Kids Book and StampFolio. For information on ordering the merchandise, write Stamps Etc. Catalog, U.S. Postal Service, P.O. Box 57, Grand Rapids, Mich. 55744-0057, or call 1-800-STAMP24.

State Board of Education hands textbook censorship issue to Morales

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education has tossed the hot potato of textbook censorship to the attorney general, over objections from religious conservatives pushing for continued regulation of book content.

The board has battled over the issue in the wake of the 1995 education reform law, which curtailed the state panel's power and gave more authority to local school districts.

On Friday, members voted 10-5 for textbook rules that would allow them oversight of textbook content only if Attorney General Dan Morales issues a legal opinion saying they still have that power.

"We would like to have it (authority to force publishers to make content changes) back. But we're not going to be in the business of breaking state law," said board Chairman Jack Christie of Houston.

Opponents, who are backed by religious conservatives, didn't want textbook content rules to hinge on Morales' action. They said the rules should take effect, then be considered for withdrawal if the attorney general decides against them.

"The bottom-line issue here is not, I don't think, what's legal, what's not. If we happen to be out of line, the Legislature can correct that, or we can call for an attorney general's statement ...," said board member Richard Watson of Gorman.

"Why don't we do what is right and decent and good, and put this in here, and give ourselves the leverage to do that, that the Legislature has not taken away from us?" he said.

"Amen," said an audience member.

Joining Watson in voting against the textbook rules were Donna Ballard of The Woodlands; Jose Garcia De Lara of San Antonio; Bob Offutt of San Antonio; and Randy Stevenson of Tyler.

Under the 1995 law, the board is instructed to compile lists of textbooks that are error-free, meet physical specifications and contain essential elements that children are to be taught.

If textbooks meet legal requirements, school districts can buy them with state money.

Under the previous law, the board had used the threat of rejecting a book to force content changes.

But the most the new measure allows the board to do regarding content is express an opinion, say experts including Senate Education Committee Chairman Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, a sponsor of the 1995 law.

Some other lawmakers have said that's not what they intended. Board members supporting continued content regulation say the law is ambiguous and should be interpreted to allow state control.

The Legislature next meets in regular session in January 1997, and Christie said he hopes board authority over textbook content will be restored.

"There might be an outside shot that he (Morales) would give us content standards back, but if not, I think the Legislature ... would like to see the expertise at the state level," Christie said.

Officials say individual school district decisions on whether to buy a book won't pack the same wallop as a statewide decision, and that local school boards don't have the means to comprehensively review books.

Texas Supreme Court finds for Tilton

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court ruled Friday in favor of television evangelist Robert Tilton in a lawsuit brought by four former followers who claim Tilton fraudulently preached that cash offerings to his church would result in answered prayers.

In a 6-3 decision that evoked strong debate among the justices regarding First Amendment rights to freedom of religion, the court dismissed a portion of the case against Tilton, who presides over the Word of Faith World Outreach Center Church near Dallas.

"Given the standards that are set by this decision, I don't think they (the former followers) can prevail on their claims," said Bob Wellenberger, an attorney representing Tilton.

No trial date has yet been set for the case.

Attorney Gary Richardson, who is representing the former church members and has several other cases pending against Tilton, didn't immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

The court did, however, rule that the former followers of Tilton could pursue fraud and conspiracy charges against the televangelist for allegedly failing to keep promises to read, touch and pray over each prayer request he received.

"Plaintiffs may satisfy the falsity element of a fraud claim by proving that Tilton had no intention of personally reading, touching and praying over their prayer requests at the time he said he would do so," the court said in its majority opinion.

The former followers of Tilton can attempt to recover limited damages, including their donations to Tilton, the majority opinion said.

Murder trial overwhelms mother

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Paulette Everett can't bear to hear further details of her son's slaying last year and will not attend the rest of Hilton Crawford's capital murder trial, her attorney said Friday.

During some disturbing testimony on Thursday, Mrs. Everett hyperventilated and began wailing, prompting state District Judge Fred Edwards to end proceedings for the day and admonish jurors to disregard the outburst.

Crawford is on trial for the abduction and murder of 12-year-old McKay Everett, who was snatched from his Conroe home last Sept. 12 and later was found beaten and shot to death in a Louisiana swamp.

Prosecutors alleged that Crawford, a former police officer, needed money and hoped to collect $500,000 ransom from the boy's father, a Conroe builder.

Mrs. Everett, who testified Monday as the trial began, appeared on the verge of a breakdown and needed help taking the witness stand.

Mike Mays, an attorney representing McKay's parents in a civil case against Crawford, said Mrs. Everett's psyche is too fragile to watch the rest of the trial. She won't return unless called to testify, he said.

Monday launch set for MSNBC, expected mega-media giant

By Frederic M. Biddle
N.Y. Times News Service

"There will never be speaking pictures," cinema pioneer D.W. Griffith declared in 1924.

Is history repeating itself in the widespread — and perhaps equally shortsighted — scoffing at what NBC and Microsoft Corp. will attempt starting at 9 a.m. Monday?

That's when the NBC-owned America's Talking cable channel, now seen in 22.5 million US homes, converts to MSNBC.

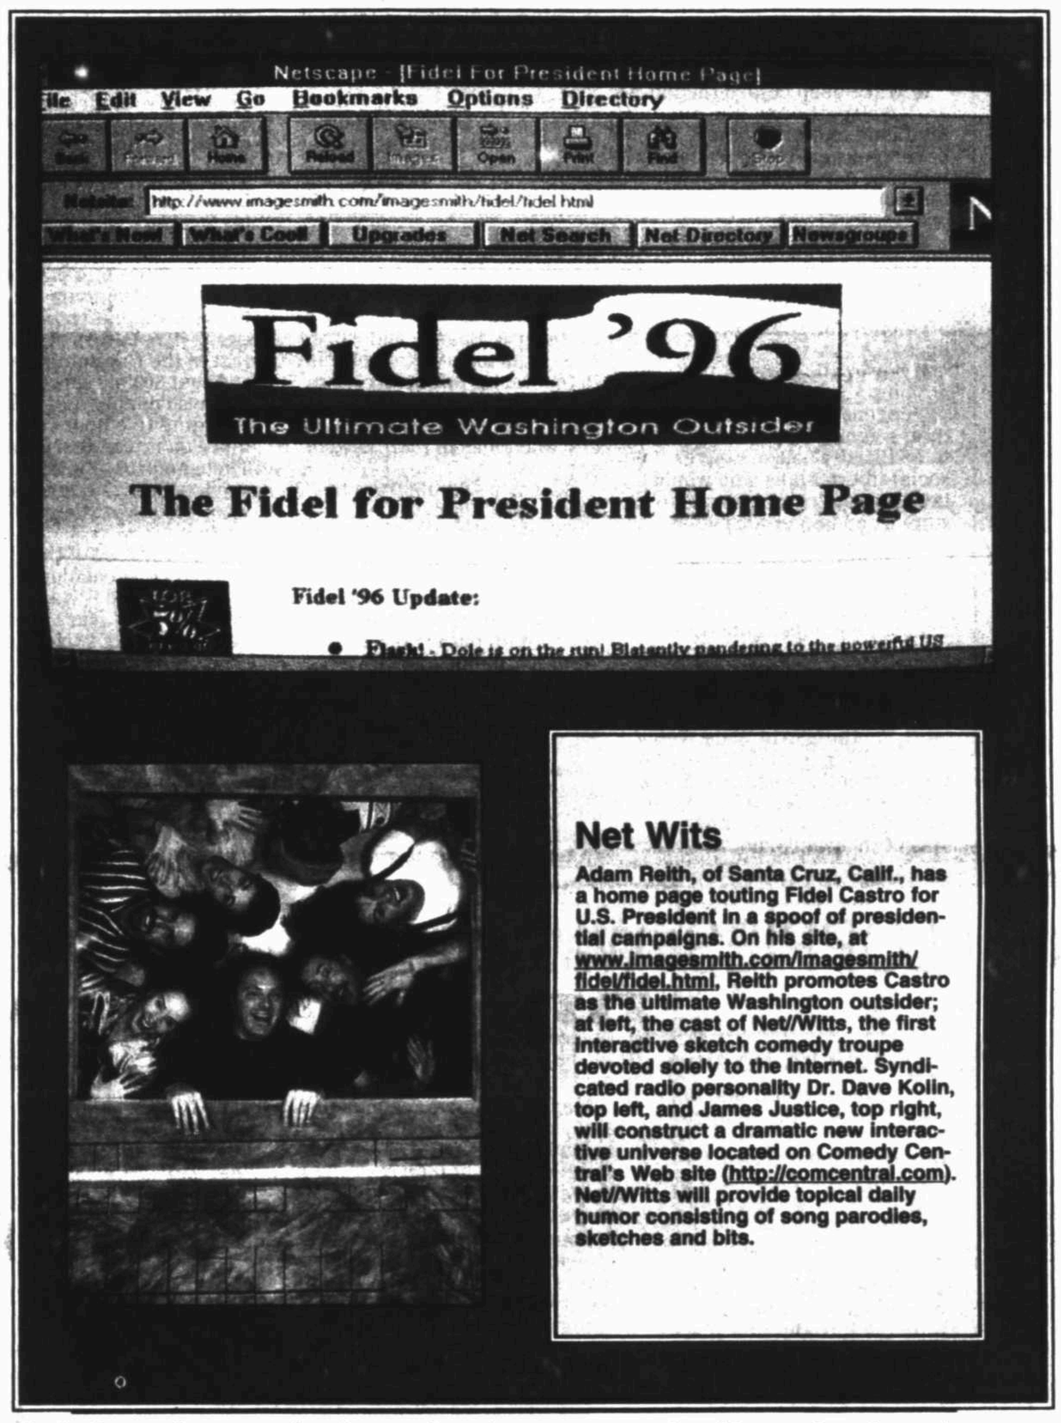

(There are no immediate plans to add MSNBC as a cable station locally, a spokesperson with Midland's Cox Cable said Friday.)

As a 24-hour cable news channel, MSNBC is the first contestant in a race to establish the next CNN (Fox will launch its own cable news channel by summer's end).

Whether television needs another round-the-clock news channel is, in itself, debatable. But the historic question is: How well will NBC's half of the $500 million joint venture synergize with Microsoft-'s half? MSNBC comprises the cable channel plus an MSNBC interactive on-line news organization (http://www.msnbc.com) that will not only repeat the news at a site on the World Wide Web, but greatly supplement it.

As August's Republican Party convention is covered by the cable channel, for example, an on-air caption might refer viewers to the on-line network, which would offer the entire text of Bob Dole's stump speech or full-motion video of his entire day's agenda, only seconds of which made it onto NBC's TV channels.

Netizens'

Internet surfers reveal a rather curious agenda

By David E. Rosenbaum
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — As if American politics were not already factionalized enough, what with militiamen and retirees and farmers and heterosexuals and fundamentalists and animal lovers and heaven knows how many other splinter groups, now comes word of yet another voting bloc for the politicians to reckon with: Netizens.

These are the guys (the vast majority are male) who get their kicks surfing the Internet hour after hour in search of cool sites and hot topics.

The views of most political factions are obvious. Old people want better pensions. Investors want lower capital-gains taxes. Now for the first time there is a good look at what the folks who surf the net under screen names want to do politically. Here are some of their positions:

■ Legalize drugs, not just marijuana but cocaine and heroin too.
■ Cut foreign aid to the bone.
■ Expand government environmental programs.
■ Spend more for scientific research, technology and the space program, but much less on the military.
■ Gradually replace Social Security with private retirement accounts.

Users eagerly await release of latest in Windows NT series

By Bill Husted
N.Y. Times News Service

Not every PC user is a fan of Microsoft's Windows 95, the latest in a long series of Windows programs.

Many businesses and some home users have been eagerly awaiting the release, perhaps as early as August, of Microsoft's Windows NT 4.0. Think of NT as Microsoft's industrial-strength Windows. It is less likely to freeze, provides better security features and — for those of you who care — offers a real 32-bit environment for programs.

But there have been some glitches and complaints about NT during the testing program. Among them are gripes that it does not support some printers and video cards, limits the number of connections possible on a network and has other problems that are highly technical in nature.

Despite all the complaints, though, NT does strike most of the testers as a winner. PC Week magazine in its July 1 issue said that "the beta was generally stable and fast" and that's extremely important to high-end business users.

NT will have a familiar look to Windows 95 users, by the way. It will use an almost identical arrangement of controls on the screen.

Adult-oriented sites losing popularity, study shows

N.Y. Times News Service

As more women begin venturing onto the Internet, adult-oriented sites are dropping in popularity, according to a new survey about online use.

Research tools such as search engines and directories that provide nationwide phone listings are gaining, reflecting the online choices that women are making, according to the marketing research firm NPD Group's study of home Internet use.

Playboy was the only adult site remaining in the Top 50 in the most recent survey, which measured online use in April. Penthouse and HotSex, both ranked in January's survey, dropped off the list. Adult content sites dropped from 25 percent to 19 percent of the online audience, according to NPD's PC-Meter survey, which tracks Web sites visited in 4,000 homes.

Another winner in the quarterly report was Prodigy, which pushed past CompuServe. The NPD survey measures only Web use, not online service subscribers, and Prodigy is further advanced in rebuilding its service on the Web. The leading online service, AOL, is also the most visited Web location. AOL lost audience in the last survey but continued in the top ratings spot.

Dear Alyson: It's awesome to meet people from other countries over the Internet, and there are lots of ways to do it. My mom says my little brother is too young to join a chat group, but it was OK for me if I posted the "Rules for Online Safety" on the wall next to the computer. I downloaded them from Yahooligans at http://www.yahooligans.com/docs/safety/ Your folks probably want to check out any place where kids are asked to register before you become key pals with other kids. Take them to http://www.kidscom.com/index1.html and see what they think. Another place where young people can learn more about important world issues is the Voices of Youth Web site sponsored by Unicef http://www.unicef.org/voy/

By Jack Warner
N.Y. Times News Service

People tend to think that we who write about computers have it easy. They think that either (1) we know everything there is to know about computers and software or (2) we have special places to find out anything we don't know.

Au contraire, in my case.

The computer press is divided into ill-defined levels the way I suppose any technical or semi-technical sort of field would be. On the top level you've got the sharks, the guys who swim fast with their fins out of the water, sending ill-informed readers screaming for the beach and creating havoc in the industry.

Those folks write for the specialist monthlies and weeklies. They speak in acronyms I haven't even deciphered yet. That's because I'm down here with the bottom-feeders, scraping up the stuff that falls through the teeth of all the shark, squid, octopi and barracuda swimming over my head.

What little I know about computers I learned the same way you did: by trying to figure out what I did wrong, by sitting on hold with tech support for hours, by reading the observations of my betters. Much of that hard-won knowledge, of course, was rendered irrelevant by the advent of Windows 95.

You probably thought that when a piece of software or hardware gives me trouble, I call some special number, bark my name and get the answers forthwith. Not likely.

Perhaps you've spent a lot of time on hold with various tech support desks, but I'll betcha I've spent more.

To begin with, you should never buy a computer from anyone who doesn't have toll-free tech support. That's not hard, since almost everyone does. Getting through is another matter, but at least it doesn't cost you to wait.

Most software publishers, however, don't have toll-free tech support. You pay the freight. I will admit I duck that one; I use a company credit card.

I didn't have to wait long in the call just finished, but I always like to act as though it's my money going down the tube. Actually I had to wait only four minutes. But when the supporter came on line, he wanted to ask me a lot of laborious questions like my address and phone number and all the details of my computer, which is understandable, but the annoying thing was that he was writing it all down on paper. That takes a long time, you know. I could hear him turning the pages. Seems like they'd give him a computer to type it into.

When it came time to tell him the problem, it was as though he was seeing a long-time friend. Oh, yes, we've seen a lot of that one. When we get it figured out we'll let you know right away.

Fifteen minutes isn't bad at all, and he was pleasant enough. There have been times I've spent so long on line with a tech support person that we've become friends, exchanging life histories while waiting for the computer to reboot fpr the 30th or so time.

I've run into very few real jerks, which is surprising since I should think it's a job that would turn you into a jerk rather quickly. Some people tend to get rather abusive when their computers or their software won't work.

The most annoying thing about tech support, of course, is the time you spend on hold. You can spend a lot longer on hold then you spend getting your problem solved, as I'm sure many of you can bitterly attest.

I'm always relieved when I find myself on a nice, silent hold line, into which a recording intrudes every few minutes to let me know there's still a connection. I hate it when they play music at me, because it's nearly always music I loathe. It's even worse, however, when an endless-loop recording harangues me with sales pitches.

The music, probably, is well intentioned, since most people think everybody loves the same music they do. However, I suspect the sales pitches are merely a cunning means of getting rid of callers. Survival of the fittest, don't you know.

MSNBC: Service gives celebrity to Microsoft

(From 1B)

"Our viewers' great complaint is they don't get enough context, don't get enough depth," says NBC News President Andy Lack. "'Your news is too shallow,' they say. 'We want more information and we want more context.'"

Hollywood's silents segued into talkies; in what Lack calls "a very interesting analogy," television is beginning to merge with the personal computer — and MSNBC's customized news on demand is the hybrid medium's first big test, one of the first so-called "killer applications" that may make cyberspace a truly competitive medium, enjoyed by tens of millions of people who still can't program their VCRs. NBC and Microsoft are anticipating that as more people become comfortable with more powerful, easier-to-use computers, they will prefer their news on line; MSNBC is intended as a bridge.

Of course, the requisite technology isn't available yet. The cool Bob Dole spy-cam scenario that Lack envisions won't exist on MSNBC this year, or next, because not enough pipeline is available to transmit it through cyberspace; nor are most home PCs powerful enough to download it.

For several years, theater projectionists fussed with gramophone records, cueing them up to silent movies as they played, with unintentionally hilarious results. Finally, Hollywood figured out how to synchronize sound on the film itself. Voila: "The Jazz Singer."

But nothing on MSNBC anytime soon will approach the wonder of Al Jolson singing onscreen at the local Odeon in 1927.

One might think that the channel would begin with a bang, because NBC owns rights to this year's Summer Olympics. But because the broadcast network will be so comprehensive in its coverage, Lack admits, the new cable channel won't offer much (if anything) that NBC doesn't.

Any visitor to the prototype web pages MSNBC has posted over the past few weeks can see that for now it's just another web site, emblazoned with the NBC peacock and summaries of a few stale NBC News series, such as the recent junket to Ireland taken by the "Today Show."

CNN already boasts better, if less ambitious, web sites of its own, and viewers interact daily with on-air talent by asking questions on line on programs like "Talk Back Live."

"We're doing today a lot of what MSNBC says it will doing in a few months," insists CNN President Tom Johnson. Meanwhile, CNN's 24-hour headline news channel continues to live up to its name, leaving the main CNN channel to cover important news events uninterrupted for hours on end — as with O.J. Simpson's trial or, more recently, the hearings on the White House's acquisition of FBI files.

That leaves critics charging that MSNBC Interactive won't sufficiently distinguish itself, leaving MSNBC an expensive also-ran to CNN. A venture that NBC and Microsoft would rather compare to the transition from the silents to talkies might, in fact, be more like 3-D or Cinerama — a gimmick with a very limited future.

'Microsoft has this reputation as a nerdy company, and here's the opportunity to put celebrity faces on it. It's getting a great deal if it's getting access to (Bryant) Gumbel and (Tom) Brokaw.'
—Gary Arlen, media analyst.

"You sound like all those people who predicted 500 television channels in two years," snapped one executive at a rival broadcast network who didn't want to be named, when asked about his own network's more timid steps at hedging its future. But he's got a point.

It's easy to overrate what MSNBC Interactive will be, at least at the beginning. For example: On-line users may be able to download all the news addenda they want at the web site, but they won't be able to watch the MSNBC cable channel side by side with the web site on their PC, unless they have a tuner that feeds the signal directly into their computer.

That's now standard procedure for anyone who wants to watch any kind of TV — even "The Price Is Right" — on his or her PC.

"To me, it doesn't add a lot of value" to watching the cable telecast and the MSNBC web site on the same appliance, says Peter Neupert, Microsoft's vice president of strategic partnerships. Microsoft and NBC think that MSNBC viewers wanting elaboration of the cable channel's reports will willingly switch over to their PCs from their TVs, and vice versa.

No one can guess the potential audience for this vision of MSNBC. Pressed for a prediction of how people will watch news on the day his contract expires in 2002, NBC News' Lack guesses that "there will be as many people getting their news from MSNBC (on line) as from cable, and maybe many, many more. Arguably, it may be two, three, five times more."

That's not the concrete sort of projection on which Microsoft or NBC's parent, General Electric Corp., usually relies when investing $250 million each over the next five years. But for Microsoft, Neupert says, "the objective won't be what will be reached in the next year or two. The objective is to create an asset of enormous value." Instead of worrying about whether MSNBC can immediately sell more product for the world's largest software company, Microsoft is amassing a trove of content to make irresistible the web and its corner of the web, the year-old Microsoft Network.

NETIZENS: Surfers generally social libertarians

(From 1B)

- Limit Medicare to retirees with less than $36,000 in assets, not counting their homes, and close veterans' hospitals.
- Make deep cuts in the federal contribution to welfare, Medicaid and most other poverty programs, but sharply increase government spending for food stamps and other food programs.
- Abolish all subsidies for farmers.
- Eliminate most government funding for the arts and all money for public broadcasting.
- Scrap all affirmative action.

Netizens, based on this less-than-scientific sample, turn out to be fiscally conservative social libertarians who would take money from veterans to support endangered species.

This latest political news was provided by Crossover Technologies, a company in New York City that specializes in interactive entertainment. Working with a grant from the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation, the company ran a federal budget simulation game on the World Wide Web called "Reinventing America" for six months, ending in June.

Surfers who found the site — and at one time or another, tens of thousands did, according to Eric Goldberg, president of Crossover Technologies — were given the opportunity to debate and discuss via e-mail and on bulletin boards the range of federal budget issues, from soil conservation to ballistic missiles.

Dozens of articles and other material presenting the different sides of various budget matters were available at the click of a mouse for the players to read.

Periodically, authorities like former Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York; Paul Volcker, the former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; and Alfred Kahn, the top aviation official in the Carter administration, logged into electronic chat rooms and answered the players' questions in their field of expertise.

"Moderator: From Kathy. What do you think of Newt Gingrich?"

In the last six weeks, 3,390 players who had taken the game especially seriously cast electronic ballots on scores of issues. The ballots were weighted according to an intricate formula so that each vote counted more or less depending on how strongly the voter said he or she felt about the issue in question.

The weighted balloting reflected real-life politics, Goldberg said. The notion is that a person who feels very strongly one way or another about, say, environmental protection is bound to have more political influence in that area than someone who is ambivalent about the environment but feels strongly about some other area, perhaps welfare.

The results of the balloting were written into more or less legislative language, and the bill is to be presented to a group of senators at a breakfast in the Capitol this week.

About 500 players got into the game so deeply that they were spending five hours a week or more on it, Goldberg said. Thousands of others, he said, spent at least 15 minutes a week for several weeks at a stretch.

The producer of the game at Crossover Technologies, Kevin Maroney, said it was clear that most of the players in the game, like Net surfers generally, were younger, more affluent and more likely to be white and male than the population as a whole.

Some nonbudgetary issues like abortion and gay marriage were widely discussed in the electronic back-and-forth but were never subjected to votes.

Lloyd Morrisett, president of the Markle Foundation, which is especially interested in communications and information technology, said he was so satisfied with the experiment that his foundation will sponsor another round of the game, beginning this week, on Time Warner's Web site at http://pathfinder.com/reinventing/.

Microsoft sues Texas company

Microsoft Corp. has filed suit against a Houston computer manufacturer as part of a nationwide crackdown on software piracy.

Premium Computers' owners could not be reached for comment. However, Premium denied the allegations in papers filed with the court.

The software giant targeted 13 other firms in the Houston area, but they came to terms with Microsoft without litigation, said Microsoft spokeswoman Karen Porter.

Porter would not identify the other retailers accused of piracy.

FLOPPIES: Watergate tapes captured on CD-Rom

(From 1B)

Bigger disks no flop

Hard disks have grown, too. The average size for a hard disk on a modern PC is 1 gigabyte. Just a few years back, that size disk was limited to high-end business applications.

But floppy disks have pretty much stayed the same size. Despite the introduction of special removable drives, most computers come with a floppy disk that stores 1.4 megabytes. Because the files created by modern programs sometimes are too big to store on a single floppy disk, you can expect to see changes in the floppy in the next few years.

Maxell, for instance, has just announced a floppy disk that holds 120 megabytes. That's the same amount of information held in 8385 conventional 1.4-megabyte floppy disks.

Compaq Computer began offering PCs with the special drives needed to use these floppies two months ago. Besides being able to use the new disks, these drives also will read and write information on a 1.4 megabyte floppy disk.

The LS-120 disks will have a suggested selling price of $15 for a single disk. But when you figure the amount of information held on one disk, that's much less expensive storage than with regular floppies. The new disks are available in limited quantities now but won't be generally available until August. You can expect to see drives for the new disks about that same time. These drives will mount in existing PCs.

White House History

Nixon on CD-ROM

A new computer CD-ROM called Nixon lets you compare the historical record of what happened during the Watergate days to the Oliver Stone movie.

For instance, you can click a button and hear one of the Watergate tapes, click another and explore the contents of the offices of White House staffers, and still another to see a time line of who did what to whom when.

The CD-ROM is published by Graphix Zone and should sell for about $40. There are versions available for both IBM PCs and Macintosh computers.

NEWT: Group urges Speaker for increased access

(From 1B)

Accountability Project has urged House Speaker Newt Gingrich to increase online access to congressional documents. While thanking Gingrich for kick-starting the Web- based THOMAS system of the Library of Congress, at http://thomas.loc.gov, the watchdog group petitioned Gingrich and Rep. David Dreier (R-Calif.) to go further with the Gingrich-inspired 21st Century Congress Project, charged with recommending new rules for Internet access to House documents. The CAP petition focuses on committee reports, hearing transcripts and lobbyist disclosure forms. It also requests that updated versions of draft legislation be posted on the THOMAS site. Such legislation often changes daily as it makes its way through congressional committees; the versions available on THOMAS are the bills as originally introduced. Updated versions are available to lobbyists but not the public, CAP charges.

From English to Arabic, group prints bible messages for world

By Christopher Wills
Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. — The messages are handed out in American prisons, African markets and Filipino villages. The words are English or Arabic or Tagalog, but the subject is always the same: Jesus.

For 58 years, a not-for-profit company in Bloomington has preached the Gospel with a flood of pamphlets. Bible Tracts Inc. gives the pamphlets to missionaries across the world and believers here in the United States.

The company — just four full-time workers and a handful of part-timers — says it has printed 472 million tracts in 99 languages since its 1938 founding.

The work has a simple purpose: converting people to Christianity. The philosophy is built around the Bible's command to "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

"We take that very literally, and we're trying to do that," said Ralph Blake, who runs the organization now that its founder is in poor health.

"It's a way of sharing the good news," Blake said. "Maybe you don't have time to stop and give a sermon, so you give people a little something they can take home and read at their convenience."

A brochure for people ordering tracts suggests mailing them to newlyweds or people in jail. Or they can be left with tips at restaurants or on buses and airplanes. Many are simply handed out on the street to passers-by.

But Blake says the tracts may be most useful to missionaries working overseas.

"Overseas, people are more eager for literature. They're not inundated with junk mail like we are," he said.

Jerrold Myers agrees. He is leaving soon for missionary work in Uganda and Rwanda, and Bible Tracts is giving him 625,000 tracts to take along.

Southern Baptists Convention, Disney pursue separate paths to glory

By Mary Foster
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — They were a marriage made in corporate heaven: the Walt Disney Co. and the Southern Baptist Convention.

For the nation's largest Protestant denomination, Disney represented a safe haven amid a hostile Hollywood culture that often glorifies casual sex, violence and profanity.

For Disney, the 16-million member church represented an ideal consumer base, people looking for the wholesome family entertainment the corporation built its empire upon.

But as the convention last month packed up its annual gathering at the Louisiana Superdome, and Disney prepared to move in for the premiere of its latest animated film "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the two were on the verge of a major breakup.

It leaves Baptists increasingly isolated from mainstream culture, and Disney wondering how far it could veer away from its traditional base before it causes an exodus of loyal customers.

"My kids were all excited about Disney's being here and the new movie," said John Jones of Nashville, Tenn. "But we won't be going to it now. We'll be praying for them instead, hoping they'll come back to the kind of company they used to be and the families that always supported them."

Jones, like thousands of other Southern Baptists, plans to boycott Disney unless it changes corporate policies that extend benefits to companions of gay employees and stops allowing gay and lesbian theme nights at its parks.

The nation's largest Protestant group is also upset over movies released by Disney's subsidiary, Miramax Films, such as "Priest," about a gay Roman Catholic cleric, and "Kids," a look at adolescent sex.

"When I think of Walt Disney I think of Mickey Mouse, Dumbo, Snow White," said Marion Park of Atlanta. "That's what I want the company to be, not an abomination to God."

The convention passed a resolution that said, in part: "In recent years, we have watched the world's largest family entertainment company with growing disappointment as Disney Company's moral leadership has been eroded by a variety of corporate decisions."

'In recent years, we have watched the world's largest family entertainment company with growing disappointment as Disney Company's moral leadership has been eroded by a variety of corporate decisions.'
—convention resolution

Disney, which now has assets ranging from the Mighty Ducks professional hockey team to Capital Cities-ABC, bears little resemblance these days to the 1928 company that released the first Mickey Mouse cartoon.

The company had $12.1 billion in sales in 1995 and now employs 71,000 people worldwide. Still its animated films are the heart of the business and the most widely recognized aspect of the company.

"It's really ironic that the company which has been most closely identified with family values is the company that is being singled out for criticism," said Dr. William Fore, a professor at the Yale Divinity School. "It's a symptom of a swing even further right theologically."

Despite such wholesome movies as "The Little Mermaid," "Pocahontas," and "Angles in the Outfield" in recent years, Southern Baptists feel betrayed by Disney, a company they once believed exemplified their standard for family values.

Disney's diversification in movies and corporate policies tolerant of alternative lifestyles comes at a time the Southern Baptists are reaffirming their fundamental beliefs.

Since the 1979 split that left the convention in the hands of theological conservatives, the Southern Baptists have embraced a strict Biblical view of issues ranging from science to entertainment and including corporate spinoffs.

"Once they cleansed the leadership of the middle-of-the-road members, there was no corrective in leadership," Fore said. "Without a moderate voice, it was easier for single-issue leaders to push the agenda further right."

During a convention that warned members of "creeping ecumenism" and "positive tolerance (which) declares that all viewpoints are equal," the Southern Baptists celebrated their conservative resurgence, acknowledging their move away from liber...sm.

Now they want Disney to make a similar stand.

"The Scripture is the inerrant, infallible word of God," said the Rev. Wiley Drake. "Disney needs to use it as their corporate policy."

Churches work to meet needs of twentysomething generation

AUSTIN — Robert Robbins' search is over.

For the better part of a year, the 27-year-old traveled from church to church, shopping for a spiritual home that best complemented his personal beliefs. His journey ended at University Presbyterian Church.

More and more twentysomethings are embarking on spiritual quests, defying the labels — "soulless," "clueless," "slackers" — that are often used to describe their peers.

And as they search, churches are searching themselves, struggling to meet the needs of a generation less trusting of institutions and less willing to accept religious doctrine on face value.

"There's really a spiritual longing for people our age," said Robbins, an Austin marketing specialist. "Everything is undefined for our generation. The things our parents counted on — a stable job, relationships, Social Security — aren't guaranteed for us."

With one exception.

"Someone is never going to pink-slip your religion," he added.

Still, Robbins and others say churches often neglect young adults in their congregations, directing programs toward families and older adults, the groups that tend to give the most money. Many young adults become frustrated or feel awkward, and don't come back.

A 1991 study by Minneapolis' Search Institute found that those between 20 and 29 are the least likely to consider themselves religious. Regular church attendance among them has dropped 12 percent since 1980.

Until recently, religious leaders didn't worry too much about young adults straying from their congregations. They assumed they would follow their baby boomer parents and return once they married and had children, said Paul Henderson, associate director of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

But as young adults stay single and childless longer, the journey back to the church gets harder.

"There's no guarantee they'll return or that they'll stay if they do come back," Henderson said. "(These) people don't have the same internal loyalty to one religion. ... They're looking for a religion that can really enrich their lives, which is not necessarily the same religion they grew up with."

Lack of automatic loyalty to religion is seen even in traditionally close- knit religious groups such as Jews, said Rabbi Kerry Baker.

"Forty years ago, if you wanted to run away from the Jewish faith, the outside world wouldn't let you," said Baker, director of Texas Hillel, a student organization. "Anti-Semitism was everywhere. ... The prejudice is by and large gone, and being Jewish has become much more a personal choice."

Twentysomethings question religious teaching more than their parents did, which can unnerve religious authorities who sometimes mistake honest inquisition for impertinence.

"I have a son who is a high school senior and he says things to me like, 'Do we really believe the Bible is divinely inspired? What's that about?'" said Stuart Tyner, director of the Hancock Center for Youth Ministry at La Sierra University in Riverside, Calif. "Those questions can be scary, and the first reaction can be to shut them out."

Monte Williams, 25, left his childhood Baptist church for this reason.

Williams has adapted beliefs from different religions, from the Protestant idea of a personal relationship with God to the Eastern idea of karma, in which bad deeds in this life carry over into the next.

"I think you make your own heaven," said Williams. "When I die, I think I'll be with my mom, and I'll live in her memories. If you go through life never making anyone happy, ... there will be no place for you."

Asked how he knows his beliefs are the truth, he shrugged. "How can anyone be sure?" he said. "Everyone follows a different path. Mine makes the most sense to me."

Unlike Williams, Robbins didn't turn away from Christianity. But Robbins said he has had to work hard to find a place within it.

"I spent months looking for a church that didn't treat single people like pariahs and wasn't an ultra-conservative, fundamentalist group," he said.

Robbins, who was raised in a Southern Baptist church, changed to a more liberal denomination once he went to college. By challenging church doctrine, he said, he thinks Generation X can bring new meaning and relevance to religion.

"I look at my father and he's never lived outside his mother, the Navy or marriage," Robbins said. "He doesn't know what it's like to be single and Christian. We don't have a rote path to find God."

Churches have much to lose if young adults choose a path to God that lies outside the bounds of organized religion.

"A church that does not regenerate itself dies," said Henderson, who works with youth issues at the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, which plans to vote this year on a plan to attract young adults to the church. "That's a real challenge for the church today. In some congregations, the median age is in the 60s. If these organizations don't refocus themselves, they're going to die off."

Some religious leaders fear that losing too many young adults to individualized forms of spirituality will weaken the country's already- crumbling moral foundation. "Personal spirituality might be better than nothing, but there's a tendency for that personalized religion to be self- deceptive," said David Schnittger, pastor of Oak Hill Bible Church.

Rick Willits, director of student ministry at Great Hills Baptist Church, said truth becomes more relative.

"The obvious consequences are that everybody does what is right in their own eyes," he said. "And everybody has a different idea of what's right."

Relative truth stems from young adults seeing too much hypocrisy in the church, where members don't always practice what they preach, Willits said.

"Generation X will not stand hypocrisy," he said. "They're looking for something practical, ... something that will work. So we have to show them that a strict moral life can be led successfully."

Hypocrisy also bothers Gar Demo, a student at the Episcopal Seminary of the Southwest. "Most of the people in our generation are tired of the intolerance of the church towards gays, women and different racial groups," he said.

Demo grew up in the Catholic Church but joined his mother in the Episcopal Church when she was refused communion after her divorce from Demo's father.

"We hear sermons about love and acceptance and how we are all children of God," he said. "Yet when it comes to women, they say no. When it comes to homosexuals, they say no."

Young adults need religion to be relevant to their lives for them to stay in the church.

Social activism can be one way for a church to achieve relevance.

"We've resigned ourselves that if we can't make the same amount of money as our parents, we may as well go out and do some good," said Demo.

Tarrytown United Methodist Church's youth group, for instance, will soon leave on its annual summer trip. In earlier years, Patton said, such a trip might have included a day at Six Flags or Disney World. Not anymore. The group is heading for the Rio Grande Valley to build houses for low-income families.

"Our kids are really socially active," says Patton. "If we have a game night, some kids will come, but if we have a service night, tons of kids will show up."

Denzel Washington turned to plenty of diverse sources for 'Courage' role

NEW YORK — Denzel Washington plays a complex character in the new movie "Courage Under Fire," so the Academy Award-winning actor turned to plenty of diverse sources for inspiration.

The 41-year-old plays a Gulf War tank commander turned investigator who examines whether a woman (played by Meg Ryan) deserves the Medal of Honor. Washington's character is wracked by guilt because of his involvement in a friendly fire incident.

"I sat down with the D.A., psychiatrists and alcoholics," Washington says in the July 19 issue of Entertainment Weekly.

Washington also went out on maneuvers with troops and fired tanks and took part in battle simulations with choppers and planes.

"(I) lived out in the field and sat with colonels and watched them almost break down talking about the loss of soldiers," he said.

The Chairman of the Board promised there would be an encore performance.

"We're going to do it in another 20 years," the 80-year-old said.

Thursday's guest list included Don Rickles, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme, Robert Wagner and Jill St. John, Milton Berle, Bob Newhart, Peggy Lee and Frank Sinatra Jr., Sinatra spokeswoman Susan Reynolds said.

The Sinatras renewed their vows in a traditional Roman Catholic ceremony at a local church. They were joined by 70 guests at the church and later, at their home, for an Italian dinner.

ATLANTA — Singer Celine Dion is used to big audiences, but the prospect of performing before a worldwide audience of billions is a little daunting.

The Canadian chanteuse will sing at the opening ceremonies of the Atlanta Olympic Games July 19. A TV audience of 3.5 billion is expected to tune in.

"Three billion people watching you is pretty frightening," Dion said in the July 22 issue of People magazine. "This moment is coming very fast now, and I have goose bumps."

The 28-year-old will sing "The Power of the Dream," a song by David Foster, Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds and Linda Thompson. The song was commissioned for the occasion.

Though all eyes will be on Dion, she won't exactly be alone. Sharing the stage will be 100 musicians and 300 backup singers.

"I'll have people surrounding me, supporting me, and making sure I'm not forgetting my words."

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Robert Guillaume, star of the old TV series "Benson," collapsed and vomited several feet behind mourners at a memorial service for Margaux Hemingway.

David said Guillaume received stitches for the cut and was to be looked at by his personal physician.

"He seems to be feeling good," David said. "I spoke to his wife and I could hear him yelling at me in the background so he must be fine."

Hemingway, 41, was found dead July 1. Her body was cremated and services were held July 7 in her hometown Ketchum, Idaho.

WASHINGTON — As he has so many times in the past, Col. John Bourgeois visited the White House Friday. But this time the director of the U.S. Marine Band wasn't their to perform for guests. He was a guest.

Bourgeois, band director for 17 years, led the band for the last time through "Semper Fidelis" Thursday night, before surrendering the baton to his successor, Maj. Timothy W. Foley.

The 25th director of the band is retiring at 62.

Bourgeois, a French horn player, joined the Corps in 1956 and two years later joined the band, known as "The President's Own." The band's chief military mission is making music for presidents and their guests.

Jordan signs $25M deal

By Rick Gano
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO BULLS

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan will be the NBA's highest-paid player — at least for one year.

The league's premier player and the Chicago Bulls agreed to a one-year contract Friday worth at least $25 million. It is the richest one-year contract in team sports history.

Terms of the contract were not divulged by the Bulls, but a team source, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, told The Associated Press the deal was worth at least $25 million. The contract still has not been signed.

While his agent David Falk and Bulls chairman Jerry Reinsdorf were negotiating over the phone in conversations that Reinsdorf said took less than an hour, Jordan was playing in a celebrity golf tournament in Stateline, Nev.

"This is something Jerry and I agreed upon. It really didn't take any negotiations, which is the way I wanted it," Jordan said, confirming the contract was for one year while declining to disclose the value. "I'm very happy with the agreement we have."

Jordan, who shot a 2-over-par 74 and was seven strokes off the lead of the Isuzu Celebrity Golf Championship, said a one-year deal was the best way to go.

"This team could have a good chance of winning the championship again. Then after that, you don't know," he said. "They may want to take a business approach to it and change the team. And I want to give them the flexibility to do that."

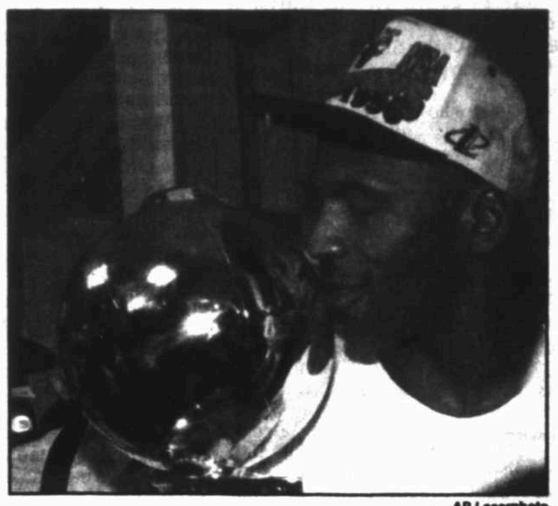

Jordan had said at the end of last season that he would be looking for at least $18 million per season. Falk quickly jumped in and said Jordan was worth much more. The $20 million to $25 million figures began to circulate.

"It is Michael's desire to be the highest-paid player in the game," Falk said earlier. Another Falk client, New York Knicks center Patrick Ewing, made $18.7 million last year, but that was part of a long-term contract and not a one-year deal.

Jordan's career of unparalleled excellence with the Chicago Bulls has featured four NBA titles, eight scoring championships, four MVP awards and a worldwide following.

He already makes an estimated $40 million in off-the-court endorsements but his contract had been a bargain for the Bulls, compared to

Green Tree CC Jamboree

The first round of a partnership is not where a two-man team usually wins a tournament but where it definitely can lose it.

Two teams, however, did much better than just staying alive, going to the top of the Championship Flight leaderboard of the Green Tree Country Club Jamboree held at Green Tree Country Club Friday.

After the first round of the three round-tournament, the team of Steve Whiteside and Doug Noah found themselves tied with Bobby Welborn and Burl Fuller after matching five-under-par 66s on Green Tree's West and North Courses.

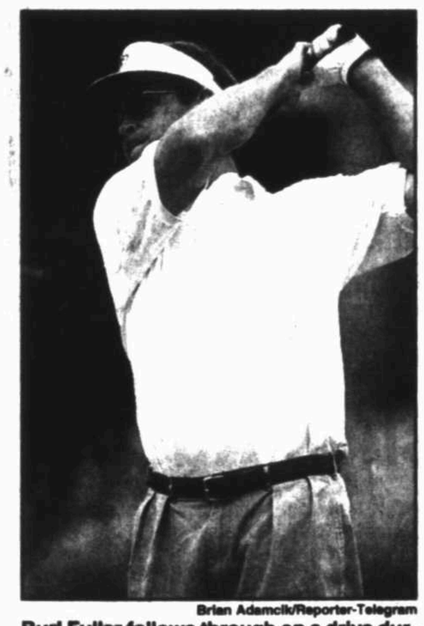

"We didn't want to shoot ourselves out of the tournament," said Welborn, whose birdie on 18 put his team at five-under-par for the day. "We wanted to be in touch with the leaders."

"We partnered well today and that is what it is all about," said Noah, the 1992 Green Tree Club Champion. "We are in first and that is where you want to be."

Trailing the leading teams are Bill and Doug McEntire, who fired a 68 to take sole possession of third.

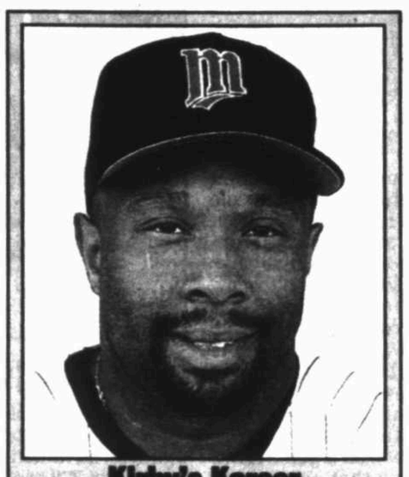

Consistency might have been the key

Puckett says goodbye, retires from baseball

Associated Press

MINNESOTA TWINS

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett, the roly-poly Minnesota Twins center fielder who was one of baseball's most beloved players, retired Friday after an operation revealed irreversible damage to his right eye.

Puckett, 35, underwent surgery early Friday in Baltimore and then flew back to Minneapolis with his retinal specialist, Dr. Bert Glaser, for a news conference at the Metrodome to announce his retirement.

"The world is not over," said Puckett, with his ever-present smile and a bandage over his eye. "Baseball has been a great part of my life. Now I have to close this chapter and go on with part two of my life."

Puckett was joined at a news conference by his wife, Tonya, and several Twins teammates, many of whom had tears in their eyes as he spoke.

"Don't take it for granted," Puckett said. "Tomorrow is not promised to any of us, so enjoy yourself."

One of baseball's most popular players in an era of sometimes snarling stars, Puckett won two World Series titles with the Twins. He retired with a .318 average in 12 seasons, and finished his career with 2,304 hits, 207 homers and 1,085 RBIs.

Puckett awoke on March 27 and was unable to see out of his right eye. He was diagnosed with glaucoma and underwent several laser surgery treatments.

On Friday, Glaser performed a vit-

Fights not KO'd at Garden

By James Barron
c.1996 N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — A day after a bone-crushing brawl between rival retinues and angry fans who began landing blows once the professional fighters had been stopped, Madison Square Garden officials said Friday that they would continue staging boxing matches.

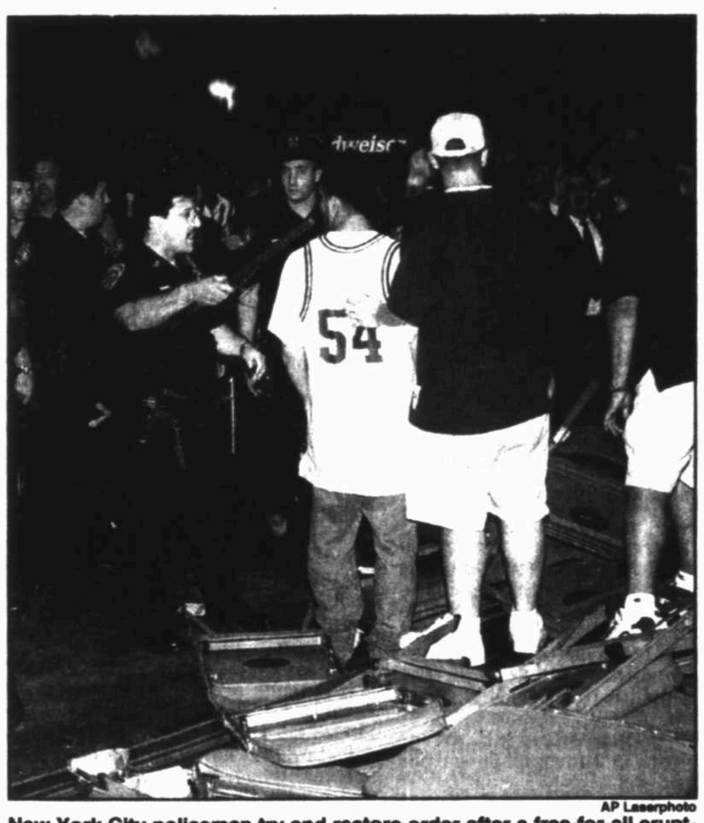

The fray followed a prizefight between Riddick Bowe and Andrew Golota. It raised questions about whether the Garden — where boxing legends like Muhammad Ali, Joe Frazier, Sugar Ray Robinson and Jake LaMotta fought their way to fame — had warned the police of the potential for violence among fans. Authorities also wondered whether the police, who subdued the brawl after a 911 call from a man watching it on cable television at home in Brooklyn, had mobilized fast enough.

"This was not handled as well as I'd like to see this handled," Dave Checketts, the president of Madison Square Garden, said.

But he added that the Garden — which got back into the fight business last year after staging boxing matches only sporadically in the 1980s and not at all since 1993 — would go ahead with the next scheduled match, on Aug. 13. Boxing has proved a big moneymaker for owners worried that the Garden had been dark too often.

Three people were arrested Friday in connection with the incident, which sent a dozen people to the hospital with minor injuries. The police say they expect to make six to 12 more arrests.

Dancer: Irvin used drugs at same hotel other times

By Melissa Williams
Associated Press

DALLAS — Michael Irvin personally strip-searched and threatened a topless dancer whose testimony he feared in his felony drug possession case, she tearfully testified Friday.

Under questioning by prosecutor Mike Gillett, Rachelle Smith, 24, told the court outside the presence of the jury that Irvin made her remove her clothes before searching her thoroughly on two occasions after she testified before a Dallas County grand jury on March 24.

Smith testified that during the second search, as she sat on the edge of a bathtub wearing only a towel, Irvin issued a warning to her and her boyfriend, then-Dallas police officer Johnnie Hernandez.

"He said, 'If I suspect that you're wired or that you've screwed me, you'll never see John or the light of day again,'" Smith said.

Irvin was indicted on a second-degree felony cocaine possession charge April 1. It carries a punishment ranging from probation to 20 years in prison.

The charge stems from a March 4 drug bust at a motel in the Dallas suburb of Irving where police say the Dallas Cowboys receiver was found with former teammate Alfredo Roberts, two topless dancers, and marijuana and

Lajoie continues roll, takes Stanley 200

By Mike Recht
Associated Press

LOUDON, N.H. — Randy LaJoie, enjoying success in a new race car, won his third Busch Grand National race of the season Friday, the Stanley 200 at the New Hampshire International Speedway.

LaJoie, who won $22,850, finished 1.7 seconds ahead of Terry Labonte. David Green was third.

Green and LaJoie started side-by-side, and Green led for the first eight laps before LaJoie took over and led for 173 of the remaining laps, including the last 74.

LaJoie's closest call came not from any car chasing him, but from two ahead of him. After a restart midway through the race, Bodine and Jeff Fuller apparently touched and spun in front of LeJoie, but they parted in time for him to drive through.

"When it's your day, it's your day," he said of the near miss.

But LaJoie gave most of the credit to the Chevy he was driving for the second time after finishing third in it last week in Milwaukee, another one-mile track.

"What a great car we've had," he said. "It's probably the best race car I've had all year."

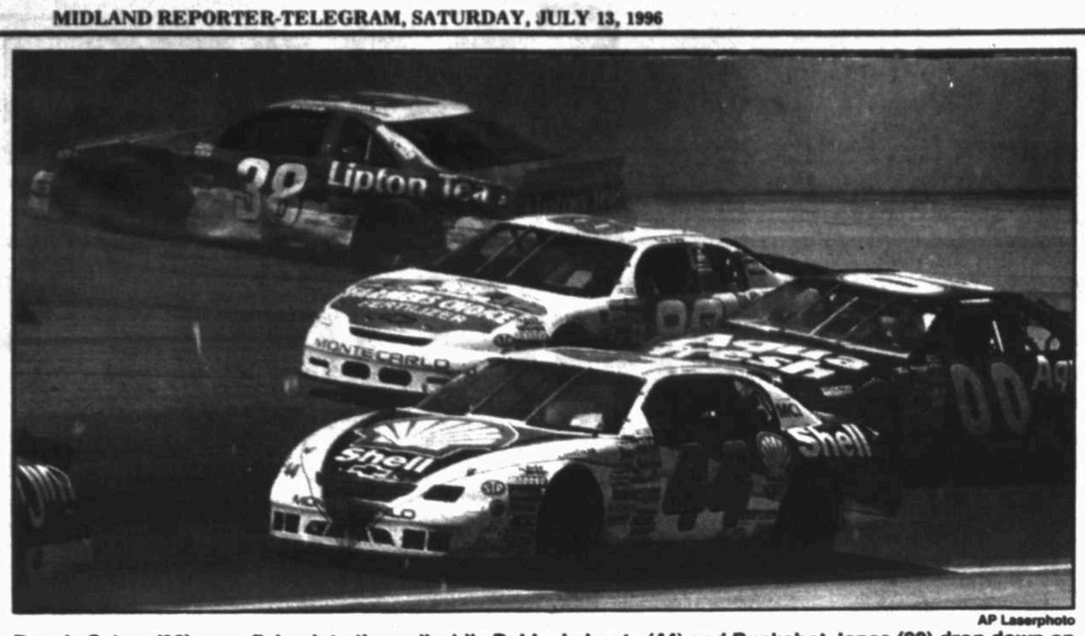

He won at Nazareth earlier this year in a similar car, but said this one is even better.

"We'll have to try it on a short track," he said.

"I've never had a package like I have this year," from owner, sponsor, crew and car, he said.

Hometown hero Craven wins Jiffy Lube 300 pole

By Mike Recht
Associated Press Writer

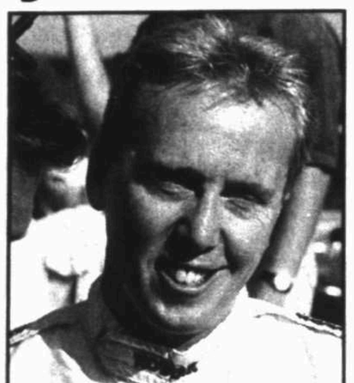

LOUDON, N.H. — Ricky Craven made it all the way back from Talledega on Friday, and he made the trip in record time with a home crowd waiting to welcome him.

"This is personal. I don't know if it compares to anything. This is the most rewarding situation I've been in in Winston Cup," he gushed, better than winning rookie of the year honors last year, he added. Certainly better than his other pole at Martinsville.

"This is as good as it gets. There is only one thing that can get me more excited, and you can guess what that is," he said of Sunday's race. It would be his first Winston Cup victory.

The emotions of returning home with a pole showed again and again as he talked about his record run of 129.379 mph over the 1.058-mile oval. Mark Martin held the mark of 128.815 set in qualifying last year when Craven finished a disappointing 31st.

No one came close to him Friday with Bobby Hamilton his nearest challenger at 128.806 mph. Bobby Labonte was third, Kyle Petty fourth and series point leader Dale Earnhardt fifth.

"It was a deal where I sacrificed the car," Craven said. "That's what you have to do to win the pole. I wasn't going to hold back anything here.

Craven's fame so far comes from the spectacular crash he survived on April 28 at Talladega. The sight of his car hurtling through the air, hitting a wall, was shown over and over on television. When it came to rest, it was smashed almost everywhere except the driver's seat. Miraculously, Craven was not seriously injured, and after a few days in the hospital, he was racing again a few weeks later.

"We were prepared to win early in the season — we came this close," he said, holding his fingers barely apart. "We were dealt a bad hand at Talladega and it set us back. This is a boost desperately needed for us to get back in the top 10.

"A lot of this is psychological and confidence, and my confidence is at an all-time high. Now it's time to start posting a win. We need a win."

Hurricane could affect NASCAR

By Mike Recht
Associated Press Writer

LOUDON, N.H. — Hurricane Bertha has become a factor in the weekend's racing at the New Hampshire International Speedway, and could threaten Sunday's running of the Jiffy Lube 300.

■ NASCAR Notes

After two near perfect days Thursday and Friday, rain was forecast for Saturday morning when Winston Cup practice and the second round of qualifying was scheduled. It didn't get any better in the afternoon when rain and winds were predicted.

Likely showers also were forecast for Sunday when the Jiffy Lube race is scheduled at 1:15 p.m.

Rain has been a major problem at the one-mile oval this year. The Stanley 200 Busch Grand National race and the Stanley 100 Busch North race were rained out during the spring, and held Friday, making the weekend a bonanza for race fans with five races in three days.

HELPLESS RUDD: Ricky Rudd also might have given a little thought to Hurricane Bertha this weekend.

"There's not much I can do about it," Rudd said before practicing Friday for the Jiffy Lube 300 Winston Cup race at the New Hampshire International Speedway.

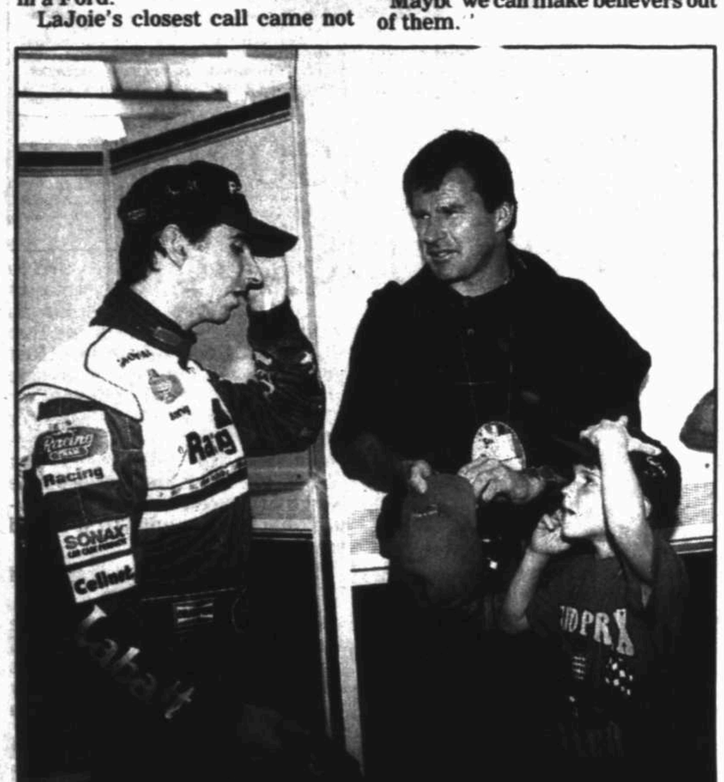

Rudd has not lived in the house for some time; his regular residence is in Charlotte, but he's had his hurricane problems there, too.

"it was pretty bad last year," he said. Hurricane Hugo and its 90-mph winds did $10,000 to $15,000 damage to his boat dock, boat house and other structures and trees, he said.

CREWMAN INJURED: A member of the Mark Rypien Motorsports pit crew suffered a broken left leg in Friday's Stanley 200 at the New Hampshire International Speedway.

British Formula 1 driver Damon Hill chats with fellow countryman and PGA Tour golfer Nick Faldo and his son Matthew after qualifying Friday for Sunday's British Grand Prix at Silverstone, England.

Hill struggling to get respect on F1 circuit

■ Victories have come easily to British Formula 1 driver, but Hill is looking to gain respect from his peers in the British Grand Prix.

By Stephen Wade
Associated Press

SILVERSTONE, England — While Damon Hill is having little trouble piling up victories, he isn't winning much respect.

A victory Sunday in the British Grand Prix — which would be his seventh in 10 races this season — would give the 35-year-old Briton the third-highest success rate in Formula One history and a nearly insurmountable lead in the quest for his first series championship.

Two-time defending series champion Michael Schumacher has 20 victories in 78 outings. Only Juan Manuel Fangio (24 of 51) and Jim Clark (25 of 72) were better to this point.

Still, Hill is not considered in their class. Eddie Irvine, Schumacher's partner at breakdown-prone Ferrari, says Hill is winning because of the dominance of his car — not because of his driving.

"Damon is in a tricky situation," Irvine said Friday. "While he is with Williams, you cannot judge him as a great driver because he has the best car. Great drivers show their merit in bad cars.

"You can see that with Michael (Schumacher) this year and so, until Damon leaves Williams, he will not get that much respect. But he would be a fool to leave Williams, wouldn't he?"

"Even if he wins the world championship, he won't be classed higher than Michael," Irvine said.

Teammate Jacques Villeneuve beat him in practice Friday. The 25-year-old Canadian, a Formula One rookie, remains the primary threat to Hill's title aspirations.

Hill knows it.

"I'll keep an eye on Jacques," he said. "He's a major factor this weekend, and I'll have to squeeze everything out of myself to beat him."

Asked if he'd like to ruin Hill's day by winning in Britain, like Hill did last month in the Canadian Grand Prix, Villeneuve nodded in agreement.

Hill has 63 points to 38 for Villeneuve in the standings through nine races. Schumacher is third with 26 points, and Jean Alesi of Benetton-Renault has 25 each. The constructors' title race is as one-sided, with Williams-Renault having 101 points to 35 each for Ferrari and Benetton-Renault.

Hill went around in 1:28.241, Alesi in 1:28.364 and Schumacher in 1:28.436. Qualifying is Saturday.

Seemingly above all the disrespect, Hill has carried on methodically, injecting a bit more humor into his basically reserved English character — and avoiding the bickering and exchange of insults he got into last year with Schumacher.

"Damon may equal my record of 20 wins this weekend, but I have won two titles and he hasn't," Schumacher said. "That tells you something."

Earlier in the week, Schumacher said Hill could have the title this season, but "on loan."

Hill brushed it off.

"It's not down to Michael where the championship goes," Hill said. "It is still very open and there are 70 points to be won. I'm not preempting anything, and I'm keeping my mind firmly on this race."

Schumacher, signed this season by Ferrari to Formula One's most lucrative deal ever, has plenty of problems of his own.

Ribeiro moves into Molson-Indy lead

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

TORONTO — Andre Ribeiro took the provisional pole Friday for the Toronto Molson-Indy, turning his fast lap in between a couple of meetings with the concrete barriers lining the temporary street circuit.

The young Brazilian, trying for his second career pole and first of the season, slid into the wall during the morning practice session, damaging his Lola-Honda enough that he had to move to his backup machine.

Late in the qualifying session that followed on the 1.784-mile, 11-turn downtown track, the 30-year-old turned a lap of 110.616 mph to move to the front of the pack during a flurry that saw several different leaders over the last five minutes.

"They both were in the same corner," Ribeiro said with a grin. "Out there, you have patches of concrete in the corners. On the asphalt, you have grip. On the concrete, you have no grip. So you slide across the concrete and hope you have the same grip as before when you get to the asphalt.

"You have to try it in all the corners and, in that corner, both times I went too hard and slid too far," he added. "But, the first time, I hit the wall. The second time, I just brush it. There was no damage."

His fast lap was good enough to relegate Italian rookie Alex Zanardi's Reynard-Honda to second at 110.455, followed by the 109.748 by Scott Pruett in a Lola-Ford and 21-year-old Canadian rookie Greg Moore's 108.691 in a Reynard-Mercedes.

"Traffic was very difficult," said Zanardi, a former Formula One regular who has two poles and a victory so far this season. "I couldn't get the best out of our tires and that's a shame."

Everyone will have another chance to knock Ribeiro off the pole on Saturday in the final round of qualifying for Sunday's race. In fact, that's what happened last month at Detroit, where Ribeiro won the provisional pole and Pruett wound up on the pole for the race.

"I think he did that one time and he will not do it again," Ribeiro said, joking with Pruett, who replied, "I disagree with that."

Zanardi, who was a witness to the exchange, said, "It will probably depend on who gets a clean lap at the right time. It's very close between many of us, just thousandths of a second."

Jimmy Vasser, Zanardi's teammate and the series leader, coming into the weekend just three points ahead of Al Unser Jr. and 10 in front of Gil de Ferran, was a disappointing 10th in Friday's qualifying at 108.585.

"We need to get more overall grip," said Vasser, who has lost most of a 44-point margin that he built while winning four of the first six races this season.

Dream Team crushes Australia

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Dream Team had its first international incident Friday night.

Playing against a physical and scrappy opponent, the U.S. Olympic team beat Australia 118-77 in a game highlighted by two altercations and a flurry of 3-pointers by the visiting point guard.

"We've grown up respecting those guys, but we won't back down from anybody," said Australia point guard Shane Heal, who nailed eight 3-pointers and confronted Charles Barkley, thereby supplanting Karl Malone and John Stockton as the fan favorite for one night.

When the game ended, Heal and Barkley exchanged smiles and laughs after a second half that was violence-free.

"I think they appreciated that we stood up to them. They respected us for that," Hale said.

Heal, shooting from as far as 30 feet, was 8-for-13 on 3-pointers and 10-for-17 overall as he scored 28 points — the most by any opponent in the Olympic team's four exhibition games.

Reggie Miller led the U.S. team with 19 points on 6-for-6 shooting. Shaquille O'Neal had 18 points, while Mitch Richmond added 16 and Malone 14. The United States shot 58 percent and had 13 dunks — almost half as many as they had in their last game against China.

Swaggering Athletics back

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Athletics, who lead the majors with 137 homers, have lived up to the saying on Jason Giambi's shirt: "Winning depends on where you put your priorities. It's usually best to put them over the fence."

The A's homer barrage, which has made them one of three AL teams on pace to break the record of 240 homers set by the 1961 New York Yankees, has fueled a surprisingly strong first half by the rebuilding team.

The Athletics are just two games below .500 and tied with the California Angels for third place in the AL West. That's far better than expected for the 1996 A's, who were picked by some analysts to lose 100 games.

But the A's have played solid defense and have overcome many of their pitching woes with homers. Mark McGwire has 28 homers despite missing the first three weeks with a torn right arch, and five other players also are in double figures in home runs.

Terry Steinbach already has a career-high 18 homers, Geronimo Berroa has 19 and Giambi has 16 to go with a .323 average in his first full major league season.

The A's have 137 homers in 88 games, a pace that would give them 252 for 162 games. Baltimore and Seattle, both of which have played fewer games than Oakland, are on pace for 255-homer seasons.

Oakland is averaging 1.56 homers per game, and has had significantly more than that in many games. The A's tied a major league record by hitting 18 homers in a four-game span in late June.

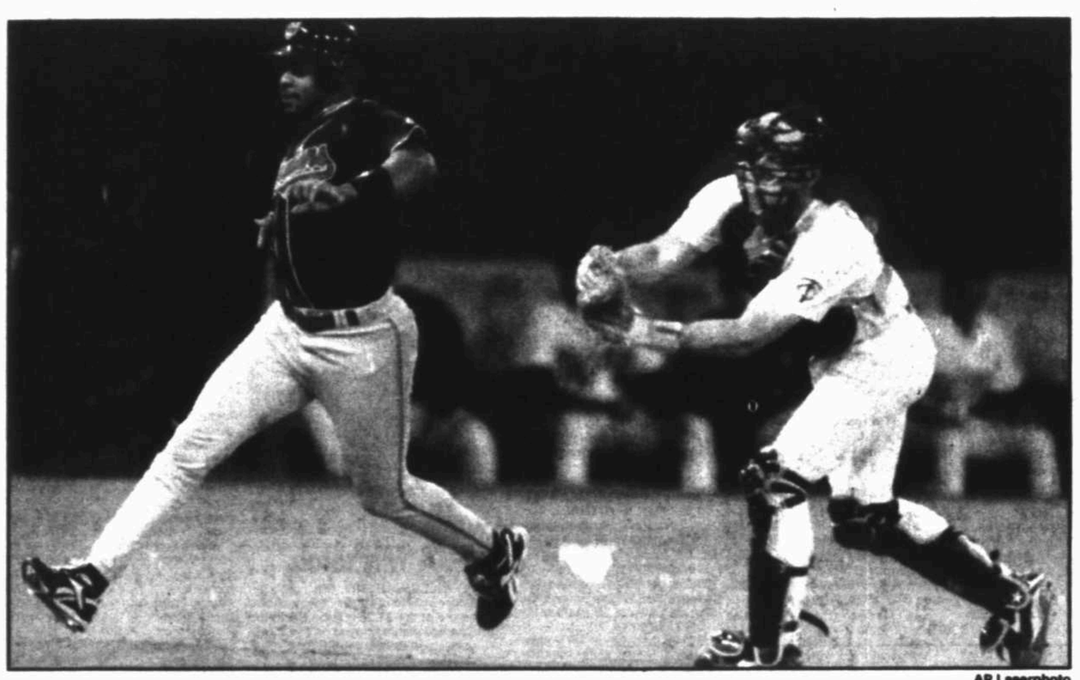

The record homer pace cannot be blamed on Las Vegas' cozy Cashman Field, where the A's played their first six home games in April because of stadium construction.

The A's hit nine homers in those six games, a pace of 1.5 per game. And McGwire wasn't around for any of those games.

And though the renovations to the Oakland Coliseum have made that park more friendly for hitters, it still remains significantly tougher to hit a ball out in Oakland than in many other AL ballparks.

The main reason for the homer barrage has been McGwire. Since missing the first 18 games of the season, he has not only led the power surge but has made everyone around him in the lineup more dangerous.

Angels fall to Captains

Staff Report

MIDLAND ANGELS
Angels 9
Captains 10

SHREVEPORT, La. — For the second night in different cities the Midland Angels were bitten by the comeback bug.

This time around, the Shrevport Captains scored three runs in the bottom of the fifth and held on to stop a late Angel rally to get a 10-9 win at Fairgrounds Field.

It ruined what had been an even better comeback by the Angels (10-15), who responded to a big-time gut check in the top of the same inning.

The Angels trailed 7-2 going into the top of the fifth when Leon Glenn doubled of Bob Howry to bring home Freddie Diaz and Keith Luuloa.

Greg Shockey followed with a single to score Glenn. Then Burke walked and that set the stage for Edgar Alfonzo who hit a double to right field to score Shockey.

The Angels took the lead when the next batter, Ben Molina, continued the two-out rally with a two RBI single off reliever Randy Phillips, who just came into the game. Phillips did pick up the win and is 1-3 on the season.

Jamie Burke's opposite-field RBI single drove in Basilio Ortiz from third to make the score 10-9.

Alfonzo came up to the plate and hit a fly ball to right field and with runners on first and second.

Burke trying to advance from first to second was tagged out and stopped the rally as Shockey had taken to third on the fly.

Reynolds pitches Astros by Mets

Associated Press

NL Roundup

NEW YORK — Shane Reynolds beat New York for the third time this season and Derrick May hit a two-run single in the first inning as Houston snapped a three-game losing streak and remained percentage points behind first-place St. Louis in the NL Central.

Reynolds (11-5), who won his third straight start, scattered seven hits, struck out five and allowed one walk in eight-plus innings. In 23 1-3 innings against the Mets, he has a 1.93 ERA.

Bobby Jones (8-6), who was 3-0 in six previous career starts against the Astros, allowed three runs and six hits in three innings.

Braves 6, Marlins 3

ATLANTA — Chipper Jones hit a two-run homer during Atlanta's three-run seventh inning as the Braves rallied from a two-run deficit in the seventh inning.

The Braves trailed 3-1 in the seventh before rallying against All-Star Al Leiter (9-8), who walked Jeff Blauser and Mike Mordecai. A groundout moved Blauser to third where he scored on Mark Lemke's sacrifice fly.

Reds 5, Pirates 2

CINCINNATI — Mark Portugal won his fifth consecutive start, and Eddie Taubensee and Reggie Sanders homered as Cincinnati snapped a three-game losing streak.

The Reds scored three runs in the first inning off Danny Darwin (7-9) and held on to snap the Pirates' five-game winning streak at Riverfront Stadium.

Portugal (6-5) gave up six hits over eight innings to remain unbeaten since June 14. Jeff Brantley, making his first appearance since back spasms sidelined him last weekend, got three outs for his 23rd save.

Phillies 5, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Terry Mulholland beat Montreal again with a complete game and improved to 12-2 lifetime in 18 appearances against the Expos as Philadelphia won for the fifth time in six games.

Mulholland (7-6), 3-0 this season against Montreal, allowed nine hits and three runs in pitching his second complete game this season, both against the Expos. He struck out six and walked none.

Todd Zeile, 4-for-20 with four homers and seven RBIs this season at Olympic Stadium, hit a two-run homer in the first inning off Pedro Martinez (7-4).

Dodgers 6, Giants 1

LOS ANGELES — Ismael Valdes allowed four hits in 8 2-3 innings and Raul Mondesi went 4-for-4 as Los Angeles sent San Francisco to its seventh straight defeat.

The Giants have lost 17 of their last 19 and have fallen 9 1/2 games behind the Dodgers in the West.

Valdes (10-5) struck out nine, walked two and allowed only one runner as far as third base. Dodgers interim manager Bill Russell replaced Valdes, who had thrown 136 pitches, with Scott Radinsky after Stan Javier singled with two outs in the ninth. Robby Thompson hit an RBI single off Radinsky.

Indians rally to top Twins

AL Roundup

MINNEAPOLIS — Pinch hitter Brian Giles hit a two-run homer in his first at-bat of the season to tie the game in the ninth, and Jim Thome hit a two-run single, rallying the Cleveland Indians to a victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Minnesota, playing hours after teammate Kirby Puckett announced his retirement, led 5-3 in the ninth before the Indians came back.

In the ninth, pinch-hitter Jeromy Burnitz reached on a forceout. One out later, Giles, recalled earlier in the day when pitcher Greg Swindell was placed on the disabled list, hit a two-run homer to right off Dave Stevens (1-1).

Stevens then walked Alvaro Espinoza and Omar Vizquel before Mike Trombley relieved and gave up an infield single to Mark Carreon. Thome followed with a two-run single to center.

Jose Mesa (1-3) pitched 1 1-3 innings for the win, despite allowing one run and two hits. Paul Shuey worked the ninth for his third save.

Trailing 2-0, Pat Meares hit a two-out double and took third on a throwing error by third baseman Thome on Chuck Knoblauch's grounder. Rich Becker singled to score Meares and Paul Molitor tied it with another single, moving Becker to third.

White Sox 7, Royals 6

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tony Phillips reached base five times and Kevin Tapani snapped a personal four-game losing streak to Kansas City, leading the Chicago White Sox past the Royals.

Tapani (9-5), who hadn't beaten the Royals in more than two years, struck out six and walked three and gave up five hits.

He was relieved with two on and one out in the seventh by Larry Thomas, who gave up an RBI double to Tom Goodwin and was immediately replaced by Matt Karchner.

With two outs, Craig Paquette delivered a two-run single to bring the Royals within 5-4.

The White Sox padded their lead to 7-4 with two runs in the eighth on Hipolito Pichardo's wild pitch and an RBI single by Phillips, who had two singles, three walks and scored twice.

In the bottom of the eighth, Jose Offerman's two-run triple off Roberto Hernandez again pulled the Royals to within a run. Hernandez got the last four outs for his 27th save.

Brewers 12, Blue Jays 5

MILWAUKEE — Ben McDonald won his sixth straight decision and Pat Listach drove in a career-high four runs as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Toronto Blue Jays.

McDonald (10-3) allowed two runs and three hits over six innings in snapping a five-game losing streak to the Blue Jays, whom he hadn't beaten since Aug. 12, 1992.

Listach, who was activated from the 15-day disabled list Thursday, Fernando Vina and Jeff Cirillo each drove in two runs in the second inning as the Brewers took a 6-1 lead.

Listach and Vina hit two-run doubles off Erik Hanson (8-11) and Cirillo added a two-run single. Listach's two-run single in the fifth off Scott Brow made it 10-1.

Red Sox 11, Tigers 3

DETROIT — Mo Vaughn hit a grand slam and Reggie Jefferson had four RBIs as the Boston Red Sox won their third straight game.

Tom Gordon (7-4) gave up three runs and six hits with 10 strikeouts in seven innings. The right-hander again received excellent run support. The Red Sox have averaged more than seven runs in Gordon's 19 starts.

Associated Press

Though small in stature, Kirby Puckett was looked up to by players in both leagues. His sudden retirement Friday after an operation revealed irreversible damage to his right eye, made major leaguers pause to praise one of baseball's biggest and most respected stars.

Here are some of their comments:

"It's a great loss to the game. He was one of the great characters in the game and will be sorely missed. He exemplified baseball."

"I always looked forward to seeing him in spring training and during the season." — Boston first baseman Mo Vaughn.

"I remember when I first came up and he was taking extra batting practice and came up to me and said, 'Kid, let me give you some advice. Play hard but never forget to always have fun. This is a game.' He always played that way. I'll always remember how much fun he had playing."— Milwaukee outfielder Greg Vaughn.

"He's going to be missed, not only by his peers but by the fans."

"He was certainly one guy who I'll always remember having a real enthusiasm for the game. I don't think there's one player who doesn't like him."

PUCKETT: Eye problem forces retirement

(From 1C)

rectomy to remove fluid from Puckett's eye, but the damage to his retina was too severe.

"There's very little, if any, blood supply nourishing the retina and, sadly, no further treatment is available," said Glaser, of the Retinal Institute of Maryland. "Basically, the retina will not recover from this status."

"It was a pleasure for me to be able to sit and watch every game that he played," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "How lucky am I?"

Kent Hrbek, Puckett's longtime teammate who retired in 1994, said the affable outfielder was "fun to play with and a joy to be around."

"I'm just happy I can say I played alongside of him," Hrbek said. "I had the best seat in the house to watch him. If we were kids and he was on my block, he'd be the first guy I'd pick for my team."

Puckett helped the Twins win the World Series in 1987 and 1991, but said that his greatest thrill was just making it to the major leagues.

"The only regret I have about this game is that I know I could have done so much better if I could have played," Puckett said.

He told his teammates that he loved them and would miss them. He also advised them not to get discouraged.

"You can't get four hits every game. Well, maybe Knobby can, and Molly," he said, referring to teammates Chuck Knoblauch and Paul Molitor.

Puckett said his immediate plans were to buy a boat and go fishing with Hrbek. He didn't rule out coaching, but indicated that he might be more interested in broadcasting.

"This is the last time you're going to see Kirby Puckett in a Minnesota Twins uniform," he said. "It's a tough day for me. I've missed baseball ever since March 28.

"I was so looking forward to playing with Molly (Molitor). There's nothing I wish I could do more than hit behind Molly and Knobby."

Puckett hit 20 or more homers six times and had three seasons with 100 or more RBIs. His best year was 1988, when he hit .356 with 24 homers and 121 RBIs. The following season, he won his only batting title with a .339 average.

Former teammate and pitcher Bert Blyleven said he remembered Puckett most for his defense.

"All those great catches he made leaping over the fence in center field," Blyleven recalled, "that was me who was serving up those pitches."

Trio share the lead in Senior Championship

Associated Press

PGA Senior Championship

DEARBORN, Mich. — Ray Floyd shot a 6-under-par 66 Friday and was tied for the lead with Hale Irwin and John Bland halfway through the Senior Players Championship, the tour's final major tournament of the year.

The trio had a 7-under 137 total for two trips around the 6,876-yard TPC of Michigan. Irwin had a 67 Friday, while Bland had a 69.

Lee Trevino, Bruce Summerhays and Jerry McGee were another stroke back, while defending champion J.C. Snead and Bob Charles were at 139.

First-round leader Tom Weiskopf followed Thursday's 66 with a 79 that included a double-bogey 6 on No. 12 and a double-bogey 7 on 17.

Floyd, who has struggled for about a month and hasn't won an official tour event since winning the Emerald Coast Classic last November, birdied No. 1 with a 10-foot putt after his tee shot ended up in a fairway bunker.

It was one of only two fairways Floyd missed in the round that included six birdies and one bogey. Floyd misjudged the wind on the par-3 8th hole and wound up with a bogey.

Irwin used an eagle 3 on 13 to vault into a share of the second-round lead. He hit a driver, then a 4-iron to the edge of the green and made a 35-foot putt.

He continued a string of 3s that began with a par on 12 with a 12-foot birdie putt on 14, a 6-foot putt for par on 15 and another 6-foot birdie putt on 16.

Bland, a little-known South African who is playing his first full season on the Senior PGA Tour and has won twice this year, had a steady round with four birdies and only one bogey.

Bland played 18 years on the European tour before joining the Senior PGA tour for two tournaments in 1995 with a tie for fifth place and a victory.

Trevino was three under for the round until he gambled for the green from the deep rough on 18 and landed in the water. His next shot landed six feet from the hole and he two-putted for a double-bogey 6 to finish with a 71.

Trevino, who has been plagued with back and knee problems and hasn't won this year, had five birdies and two bogeys in his round.

Summerhays started the day four under, two strokes behind Weiskopf, but the 52-year-old St. Louis, Mo., native completed the front nine in 5-under 31.

He birdied the first three holes, then made birdie putts on 5 and 7 to take a two-stroke lead. He fell back into the pack with bogeys on 12, 14 and 18.

PGA Michelob Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Scott Hoch wasn't buying one of golf's oldest axioms.

Hoch's putting stroke left him but his long game returned Friday, and his 3-under-par 68 in the second round of the Michelob Championship gave him a two-shot lead. It also put a bigger smile on his face than his 64 had on Thursday.

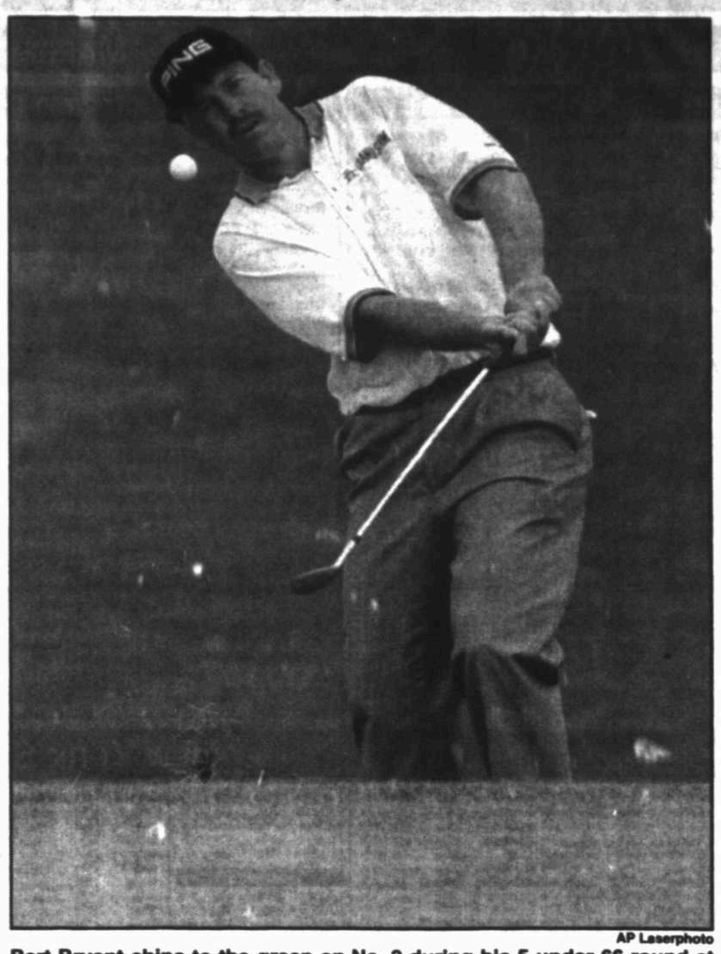

"Today was much better than yesterday. I just got the worst out of it after getting the best out of it yesterday," said Hoch, whose 32 putts were nine more than he needed Thursday on the 6,797-yard Kingsmill Golf Club.

"If you're playing well, it's easier than when you're scrambling, even if the putts are not going in," he said. "They say it all evens out, and it evened out today."

Fred Funk, Tom Purtzer, Tommy Armour III and Bart Bryant shared second place at 8-under 134 in the $1.25 million event, which was interrupted on and off by rain but never got the long-lasting downpour that forecasters said would threaten play.

Mark McCumber, the only two-time champion in the field, moved into contention at 135 after a 67.

Hoch, who on Thursday said he dislikes the British Open because of its generally wet, windy and cold conditions, didn't seem to mind Friday. He was even through six holes, then went on a tear just as the rain got heavy.

Bart Bryant chips to the green on No. 9 during his 5-under-66 round at Kingsmill Golf Club in the PGA Michelob Classic. Bryant is 8-under par for the tournament and is in a four-way tie for second place.

He eagled the par-5 7th, making about a 40-foot putt, then added three birdies in succession on Nos. 10-12. That moved him to 12 under, where he stayed until a plugged approach on 16 and a 3-putt on 17 yielded bogeys.

Funk, who shared second place with Curtis Strange after the first round, was a study in patience. He parred the first nine holes he played, then made three birdies before finishing with his first bogey of the tournament.

"I couldn't get anything going," he said of the run on pars, which came on the back nine. "When I birdied 1 and 2, it relaxed me a bit."

Funk's last birdie came after he flubbed a chip shot from the rough on the par-5 7th, then chipped in from about 25 feet.

Strange, meantime, fell apart. He bogeyed four of five holes in one stretch and wiped out his opening 65 with a 77, his worst round ever in the tournament played on his home course.

Purtzer, seeking his first victory since 1991, had three birdies and two bogeys over the first six holes, then strung together eight straight pars.

"I just didn't make very many putts," said Purtzer, who finally broke the string when he chipped in on the par-4 6th. "It's weird when you have all these putts for birdie that don't go in and then you chip one in."

With forecasts calling for significant rain from Hurricane Bertha and talk Thursday that the tournament would probably be shortened to 54 holes.

WARREN, Ohio — Amy Fruhwirth, Barb Mucha and Kelly Robbins shot 5-under-par 67s Friday and were tied for the lead after the opening round of the Youngstown-Warren LPGA Classic.

Fruhwirth played a bogey-free round, while Mucha and Robbins each overcame three bogeys by making eight birdies on the 6,308-yard Avalon Lakes Golf Course.

Kim Saiki, Catrin Nilsmark, Kathy Postlewait and Tammie Green were one shot behind in the $600,000 tournament that has a winner's share of $90,000.

Defending champion Michelle McGann was three over on the front side but finished with a 71, thanks in part to an eagle 3 on the 451-yard, 18th hole.

Fruhwirth, who has never won in her three years on the LPGA tour, began play on the back nine and quickly asserted herself by making an 18-foot birdie putt on the 382-yard, par-4 10th. She made the turn at 2-under 34 and added birdies on Nos. 3, 6 and 7.

Recently she went trough a stretch in which she missed four cuts in five weeks.

"When I was missing cuts, I wasn't concentrating," Fruhwirth said. "Today I was really consistent."

Kelly Robins hits up to the pin on No. 12 during the first round of the LPGA Youngstown-Warren Classic. She is in a three-way tie for first with Amy Fruwirth and Barb Mucha.

"I have quite a few people coming out; I needed a few extra passes," Mucha said. "It would be really special to win here, in front of my family. No one has seen me win in person."

Robbins was the lone player to reach six under on the round and she did that by making a 45-foot birdie putt on the par-4 13th. She bogeyed two of the next three holes before finishing with a birdie on 18.

Golfer closes with ace, double eagle

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Mario Tiziani had a perfect finish to a disappointing performance in the Hooters Classic, closing Friday's second round with a hole-in-one and a double-eagle.

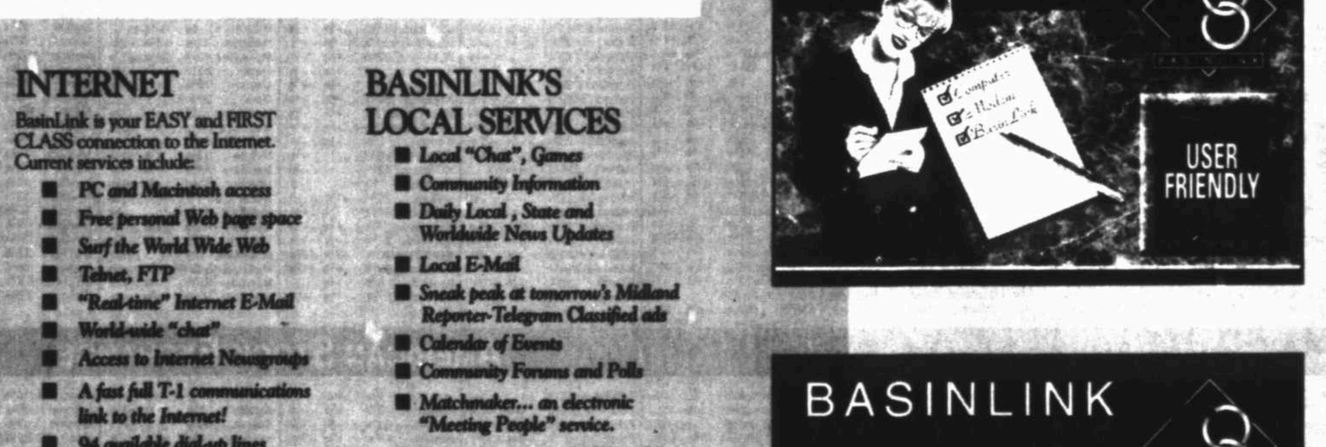

Tiziani, 25, of Madison, Wis., who ended up with a 3-under-par 69 to miss the cut by a stroke, aced the 191-yard, par-3 17th hole and holed his second shot on the 568-yard, par-5 18th.

"One thing I've always said was that I will never give up," said Tiziani, the son of University of Wisconsin golf coach Dennis Tiziani and brother-in-law of PGA Tour player Steve Stricker.

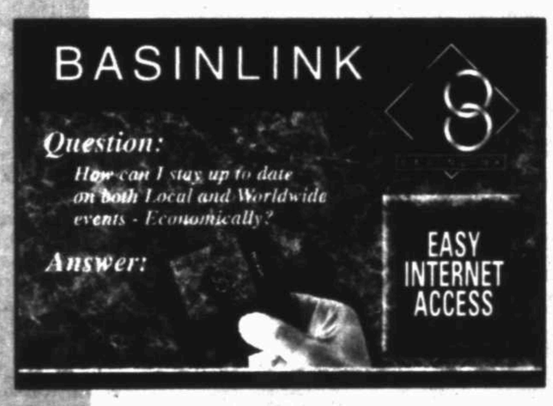

Tiziani had a 1-over 145 total on The Divide Golf Club course, 10 strokes behind leaders Vance Veazey and Casey Martin.

Cigar goes for record in Citation Challenge

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. — Cigar is more than a horse.

He's a superstar athlete, a celebrity, a hero. He's Michael Jordan in Air Horseshoes, the Beatles with one mane instead of four moptops.

As the most visible "personality" in an industry that for years has been losing fans to mainstream sports and other forms of gambling, Cigar faces more pressure than any sports figure of recent times.

In Saturday's $1.05 million Arlington Citation Challenge he will be trying to match Citation's modern North American record of 16 consecutive wins.

As the streak has grown, the 6-year-old Cigar has gained more and more followers from around the globe. Not since Secretariat more than two decades ago has a horse been so celebrated.

"The pressure doesn't bother him as much as me," Bill Mott, Cigar's trainer, said Friday after the horse arrived at Arlington International Racecourse. "I'm nervous right now. Terribly. There are people wearing caps and T-shirts and carrying banners. I don't want to let the fans down.

"Cigar? He doesn't get rattled. He's very professional. If he was another horse, you might worry. But not him."

Said Allen Paulson, Cigar's owner: "He's so competitive. He looks the other horses in the eye, sizes them up. And I've never seen a smarter horse than this. Maybe Mr. Ed."

Cigar's main rival in Saturday's 1 1/8-mile race, Kentucky Derby favorite Unbridled's Song, will carry 118 pounds. The other top contender, Metropolitan Mile winner Honour and Glory, will carry 116.

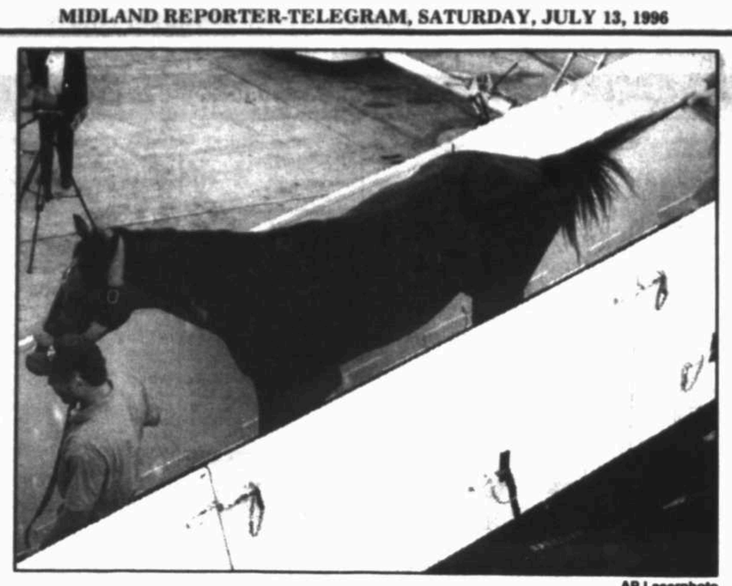

Unlike those 3-year-olds, Cigar will carry 130 pounds — and the weight of the entire thoroughbred industry.

"What do you do? You win," Paulson said. "It doesn't get easier because the pressure builds with each race. You hate to think that he ever would lose."

Cigar began his streak on Oct. 28, 1994. Since then, he has won at eight different tracks in two different hemispheres. He's taken on all comers, beating a total of 107 horses. His career earnings are $8,069,815.

His fame increased in 1995, when he won all 10 of his starts — including eight Grade I stakes — and was named Horse of the Year. Paulson, Mott and Jerry Bailey also earned Eclipse Awards as the year's top owner, trainer and jockey.

And as Cigar approached the record Citation set from 1948-50, he has become this generation's Secretariat — the horse even casual fans want to see, the horse every race track wants to attract.

Unbridled's Song arrives in Chicago on his way to the battle with Cigar in the Arlington Citation Challenge. The three-year old Cigar is going for a record-tying 16th consecutive victory.

"This race will be seen in Europe, Australia, Hong Kong, Japan and Dubai, and tens of millions of people will be watching. That's what this thing is all about," Arlington chairman Dick Duchossois said. "I'm sure we're going to build tens of thousands of new fans, which this industry desperately needs. If you put a star out there, a Michael Jordan, people will come."

Paulson has heard the Jordan comparisons often, and it's true that the Chicago Bulls star and Cigar have been two of the world's only sure bets.

"The only difference," Paulson said, "is they don't put lead weights into Michael Jordan's shoes."

If Cigar wins Saturday and comes out of the race healthy, he would go for the record in the Pacific Classic on Aug. 10 at Del Mar. Then Mott would like to return to New York's Belmont to prepare for the Breeder's Cup on Oct. 26 at Canada's Woodbine.

And then? Another superhorse would have to emerge to carry the industry.

"The plans are to retire Cigar at the end of the year," Paulson said. Asked if the horse's stud fee would be $100,000, he said: "That's a good round number."

JORDAN: Game's best is rewarded

other salaries for lesser players. Jordan made about $4 million in salary last season.

Reinsdorf said it was the 33-year-old Jordan who requested the one-year deal, "because he never wants to play if he is unable to meet his own high standards."

"This way, Michael and the Bulls will be able to discuss what is appropriate after each subsequent season," Reinsdorf said.

Another factor might have been Jordan's desire to play for coach Phil Jackson, who signed a one-year contract last month for $2.5 million.

During the season, Jordan had threatened to leave if Jackson did.

A statue of him stands in front of the United Center, proclaiming him the greatest player who ever lived. It was erected when Jordan was on a 17-month respite from basketball.

He ended his retirement after trying minor league baseball. He came back late in the 1994-95 season, only to see the Bulls eliminated in the playoffs by the Orlando Magic. Last season he led the Bulls to the best regular-season record in NBA history (72-10) and Chicago then rolled to another title, winning 15 of 18 playoff games.

Jerry Krause, the team's vice president of basketball operations, said in the statement that Reinsdorf and he shared a common goal — "to do whatever it takes to bring another NBA championship to the city of Chicago. Without a doubt, today we took another giant step toward accomplishing that goal."

Falk, who has 14 NBA free agents as clients, put it this way: "This contract is a testimony to Michael's unique contribution to the Chicago Bulls franchise, the United Center and the city of Chicago."

This past season, Jordan led the league in scoring with a 30.4 average, and also averaged 6.6 rebounds, 4.3 assists and 2.2 steals.

While Jordan was shooting a 2-over-par 74 in the Isuzu Celebrity Golf Championship, his agent and the Chicago Bulls were finalizing a contract worth at least $25 million.

Did he ever doubt he'd return to the defending NBA champions?

"No, I never doubted it," he said. "I think anything could have happened, quite naturally."

Deal for Retama Park announced by group

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Call Now Inc. announced Friday it has agreed to buy the majority interest of Retama Park's municipal bonds and to provide operating money for the troubled horse track.

Call Now is a publicly traded company based in Miami Shores, Fla., that has directors and stockholders from Texas. Businessmen, horsemen and investors are connected with the group.

It has agreed to purchase the majority interest of Retama Development Corp.'s municipal bonds. Retama Development Corp., a subsidiary of the city of Selma, owns Retama Park and is seeking Chapter 9 bankruptcy reorganization.

Retama Development Corp. issued $56 million in tax-exempt revenue bonds to help finance the $79 million track.

Five institutional groups currently hold the bonds. The track has been seeking new bond owners. The bond purchase is expected to be completed within 90 days.

"I am excited by this opportunity for Retama Park's success," said Joe Straus Jr., the track's chairman and chief executive officer.

Lee Katz, Retama Park's chief operating officer, said the deal with Call Now will provide needed operating capital for Retama Park and stability for the Texas racing industry.

"We are pleased that investors have come to the table just four months after our Chapter 9 filing in March," Katz said. "This is a major step in our efforts to reorganize and emerge from bankruptcy."

Lower than anticipated wagering during its inaugural season caused financial difficulties. Racing purses were slashed last year, jobs were cut and the quarter horse season ended two weeks early in November.

Live racing will be held Wednesday through Saturday each week through Sept. 28. The track's quarter horse season runs Oct. 11 through Nov. 30.

Strauss, Jelf highlight Invite

Twelve-year-old Catherine Jelf and 13-year-old Gregg Strauss each dropped several seconds off their best times Friday at the Texas Commerce Bank West Texas Invitational swimming meet at the Doug Russell Pool. The meet continues today and Sunday at 9 a.m.

Jelf swam a 5 minute, five and seven one-hundreths seconds time in the girls 11-12 year old 400-meter freestyle to qualify for the Texas Age Group championships later this month.

"She had been about eight seconds off the TAGS cut and made it," City of Midland Aquatics coach Brad Swendig said. "That's probably the big swim of the day right there."

Strauss also had a big swim in the next to last race of the evening. He finished second in his 1,500 freestyle heat to Lubbock High graduate Jim Svoboda with an 18:16.62. Swendig said that time was about 36 seconds under his previous best. It put Strauss in the TAGs state meet. The TAGs cut is 18:26.99.

COM leads the meet with 211 points.

Richard wins stage, Riis keeps Tour lead

Associated Press

LE PUY-EN-VELAY, France — Swiss cyclist Pascal Richard outwitted a nine-man break Friday to win a Tour de France stage for the second time in his career.

Richard pulled ahead of Denmark's Jesper Skibby and Mirco Gualdi of Italy to win the 89-mile stage while overall leader Bjarne Riis of Denmark kept the yellow jersey.

Riis, with a total time of 53 hours, 11 minutes, 26 seconds, led Yevgeny Berzin of Russia by 40 seconds. Tony Rominger of Switzerland, none the worst from a fall a day earlier, was third.

Richard said he pretended to be tired in the final climb in the shortest scheduled stage of this year's Tour in an otherwise unspectacular race from Valence to Le Puy-en-Velay where the overall leaders finished in the main pack, 15 minutes, 13 seconds back.

"I pretended I was blown on the last hill," said Richard, who beat American Lance Armstrong in a sprint finish in the Liege-Bastogen-Liege World Cup race in April.

Five-time defending champion Miguel Indurain lost no time in the rolling stage through France's Massif Central and remained eighth overall, 4 minutes, 38 seconds back.

FIGHT: Decision sends crowd into frenzy

(From 1C)

The fray began when the referee gave Thursday night's heavyweight bout to Bowe, the 252-pound former champion, disqualifying Golota for landing low blows. Bowe's manager, Rock Newman, jumped into the ring, where the fighter was lying on the canvas.

Soon, someone was pounding Golota's head with a walkie-talkie or a cellular phone. And fans waving Polish flags, who had come to root for the Warsaw-born Golota, were climbing into the ring.

The battle continued for several minutes before the two sides were subdued. Most of Bowe's fans were black and most of Golota's were white, but the police said they did not believe that racial antagonism had precipitated the fighting.

The police said Friday that they had filed charges against three men in Bowe's camp. Police Commissioner Howard Safir identified the man who had hit Golota as Jason Harris, a member of Bowe's entourage. Harris gave himself up Friday night, the police said.

Detectives from the Midtown South precinct made two additional arrests Friday. Stephen Bowe, 23, whom the police identified as Bowe's brother, was charged with assault for throwing punches in the ring. Also arrested was William Wright, 31, who was charged with assault and inciting to riot. Safir said Wright was "part of the Bowe group."

Safir said six to 12 more arrests were expected.

The police said they had learned of the fight about 10:45, when spectators scurrying out of the Garden told some of the 16 officers on crowd-control duty outside the Garden that fans were fighting inside. That was roughly six minutes after the seventh-round disqualification and six minutes after the chairs, beer cans and punches started flying.

Police supervisors ordered the officers at the Garden to report to 32nd Street and Seventh Avenue, where they gathered in a wedge-shaped formation, ready to move in and restore order, Safir said. "We were there in seconds," he added.

But they did not go in immediately because, under a protocol revised after a stampede at a City College basketball game several years ago, the police are supposed to wait for a security liaison from inside the building to invite them in.

Safir and Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said the invitation never came.

One person in the crowd who tried to summon help was Randy Levine, the city's former labor commissioner and now the chief negotiator for major-league baseball. Levine said he had called the police desk at City Hall within four minutes of the disqualification.

Then he called the mayor, who was doing an interview at WPIX-TV. He said Giuliani already knew about the tumult. The mayor soon left the station and went to the Garden.

At 10:48, the 911 system received its first call about the melee, from a man on Bedford Avenue in Brooklyn who said he was watching it on HBO, the cable network that had broadcast the bout. "About 100 people are fighting in the ring," the man said.

A minute later, 911 sent out a call for a mobilization and assigned all officers in the Midtown South sector to respond to the Garden. At the same time, a call of "officer in need of assistance" went out over the police radio, and the police went in.

Between 2,000 and 3,000 fans were still inside. The police report on the incident revealed that besides the pummeling going on in the ring, there were "several groups of fighting males in the crowd." Officers cordoned off the apron surrounding the ring and began breaking up the brawls. A total of 150 officers were on hand by 11:08, when the police declared the situation under control.

Reviewing the incident Friday, the mayor said that Madison Square Garden should have notified the Police Department of the potential for violence in a crowd that was younger and more aggressive than the usual Knicks, Rangers or Ice Capades crowds that often fill the same seats.

"You can't expect the Police Department to be omnipresent and able to predict every single thing that would happen," the mayor said. "They have to rely on the sports organization to come to them to ask for additional help."

But some spectators said the wait for the police had seemed frighteningly long.

"If indeed the police were there when they say," said Anthony Weiner, a City Councilman from Brooklyn, "they were nowhere near the action." Weiner, who was attending his first prizefight and was accompanied by his father, added:

"We waited, I'd say, a good 10 to 12 minutes, expecting the police to swoop down and stop this thing. The announcer said, more than once, 'If there are any New York City police officers, come to ringside.' First, it was security personnel to ringside. Then, at least twice, he said, 'New York City police officers report to ringside.'"

A Garden vice president, John Cirillo, defended the Garden's 70 security officers and 50 ushers. "They were prepared, and they acted accordingly," he said. "It was an unfortunate situation. We are going to make sure we take every precaution to do a better job in the future."

He said that Garden officials would meet with the mayor and Safir next week "to discuss making the Garden as safe a facility as we can."

Johnson headed to New York

Associated Press

"I definitely feel I'm getting out of a bad situation," said Johnson, the No. 1 pick in the 1991 NBA draft who signed a 12-year, $84 million contract with the Hornets three years ago.

Johnson's agent said Friday the All-Star forward is headed for New York.

"It's a done deal," George Bass, Johnson's agent, said of the widely reported deal with the Knicks for forward Anthony Mason and other considerations. "Everything has been worked out, and he's excited about going to New York. I think it's going to be a good situation for everybody."

Johnson said he would have some adjusting to do.

"The first thing I've got to do is get over the shock of being traded and not being on the same team with Muggsy Bogues, Dell Curry, Scott Burrell and those guys," Johnson said.
