Bush 'sick and tired' of innuendos

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush declared today that he is "sick and tired of the rumors and innuendos" blocking John Tower's confirmation by the Senate as defense secretary.

Using the beginning of a speech to a Veterans of Foreign Wars audience to get something "off my chest," Bush demanded that members of the Senate "put aside partisanship" and approve Tower's nomination.

Tower

"I've asked them to use their own experience with John Tower as an expert on defense issues, as a former colleague and as a tough hard-nosed negotiator to guide them as they move towards a vote on this nomination," the president said.

With the Senate preparing to resume debate at midday, Bush called the former Texas senator "a fellow veteran, a lifelong public servant" and "a fighter." Tower was not present for the speech, although the White House had said he would be. Officials said later that Tower had had a previous commitment.

"I stand by this man," Bush told his wildly cheering audience today. "I stand by him because he is uniquely qualified as the right man to take charge of the Pentagon..."

"Enough for that now," the president said. "Going to get it off my chest. I'm getting sick and tired of some of the rumors and the innuendo that are used against this decent man."

■ John Tower nomination first test of Bush administration, related story — 3,8A

Earlier today, White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater reiterated that administration officials are not searching for a substitute nominee and plan to carry the Tower fight all the way to a Senate floor vote.

"We aren't thinking of fallback positions," he told reporters. "We're supporting the candidacy of Senator Tower."

Tower said Sunday that his "excessive drinking" in the past does not indicate any long-term problem and he would welcome the chance to defend his nomination on the Senate floor.

Appearing on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation," Tower said he would not to ask that his nomination be withdrawn, arguing that the dispute over his selection has escalated beyond consideration of his qualifications.

The former senator repeated his pledge to stop drinking if confirmed as defense secretary, and he accused his detractors of hypocrisy.

Tower sought to deflect the most common criticism against him by drawing a distinction between the past heavy drinking he has acknowledged and an alcohol "abuse" problem that would disqualify him from sensitive military positions.

Basin weather expected to improve

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin will get a reprieve from arctic weather that clobbered the state over the weekend and produced snowfall up to five inches in some areas.

Following Sunday night's low temperature of 15, forecasters with the National Weather Service expected conditions to improve today, with sunny skies and a high in the 50s.

The cold front roared into the Permian Basin from the South Plains before dawn Saturday, sending temperatures into the upper 20s.

Sunday's high only reached 39 degrees and the overnight low of 15 broke the prior record of 16 degrees, set on this date in 1948.

Forecasters said skies are expected to be clear and temperatures won't be quite as cold tonight. The low will be in the mid-20s and winds will be out of the east at 5 to 10 mph.

The temperature Tuesday is expected to warm up into the low 60s, with winds shifting to the southeast at 5 to 15 mph.

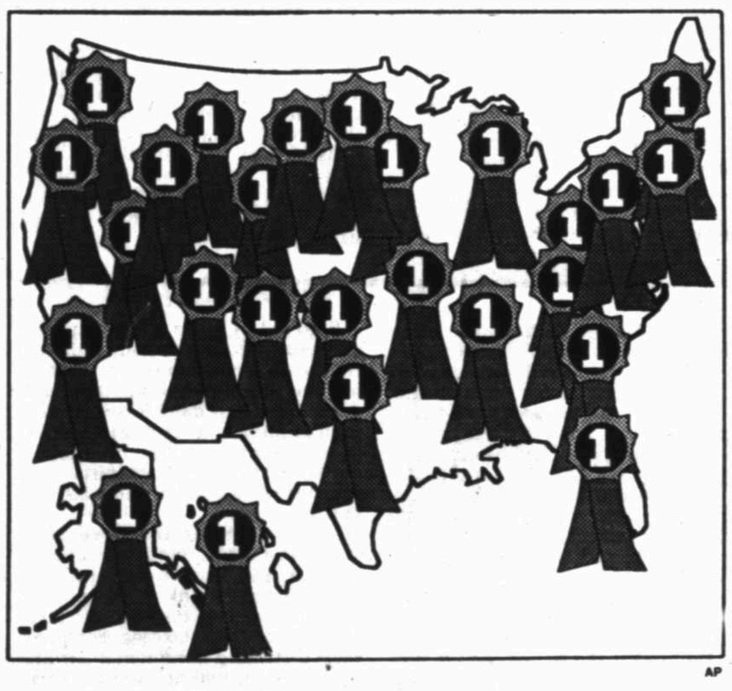

Feeling the brunt of the late-winter storm were eastern Pecos and northern Terrell Counties, and in Marfa and Alpine. Between four and five inches of snowfall were reported in Andrews, according to the weather service.

Blowing snow in rural areas at times reduced visibility to near zero and a winter storm warning was issued late Saturday and continued through Sunday.

Midland Police Department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said weekend motorists faired better than expected on ice-covered roadways. Only 18 weather-related accidents — a few with minor injuries — were reported Saturday to lawmen, he said.

State highways and county roads generally were in good condition this morning. However, patches of ice were reported on some bridges and overpasses, according to a Texas Department of Public Safety spokeswoman.

Commuter trains collide in Glasgow

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Two commuter trains collided today outside Glasgow, and initial Fire Brigade reports said one person was killed and as many as 40 may have been injured.

It was the second rail collision in Britain in 48 hours. A crash Saturday on the outskirts of London killed five people and injured 94.

Jack Stewart, a Fire Brigade senior divisional officer, said details of today's crash were sketchy, but that he knew of one fatality.

Stewart said two or three people were trapped in the wreckage. He said there were 30 to 40 other casualties, but added these could include people suffering only from shock.

"It is a serious incident. There are people trapped and casualties are being taken to the Royal Infirmary, Victoria Infirmary and Western Infirmary," the ambulance service reported.

Scotrail spokesman Archie Birt said the two trains were traveling in opposite directions between the Glasgow suburbs of Springburn and Nilngavie when they collided at 12:39 p.m. outside the Bellgrove station, two miles from the center of Glasgow.

At least one of the trains derailed, Birt said.

Scotrail is a branch of state-owned British Rail, whose safety procedures are under severe criticism following two serious accidents in the London area in less than three months.

After Saturday's crash outside London, investigators found signs the driver of one passenger train tried to stop at a red signal before his train struck another London-bound train.

Gordon Pettitt, general manager of British Rail's Southern Region, said Sunday that driver David Morgan made "a severe brake application" long before his train passed the red signal and smashed into the back of another passenger train.

Morgan was one of 94 people injured when his train, traveling from Littlehampton to London, hit a train traveling from Horsham to the capital. Police said today that 31 people remained hospitalized, 10 in serious condition.

Six cars rolled down a 60-foot embankment after the crash, and several came to rest in the yards of homes.

Authorities said the Horsham train was crossing from a slow track onto the main line when it was struck from behind near Purley Station on London's southern outskirts.

Morgan "has told us that the signal at the end of the platform at Purley Station was red, yet he went through it," Pettitt said. "He has not been able to offer any explanation for that."

Morgan was hospitalized with two broken legs and was "in shock," Pettitt told a news conference.

"The safety of our signaling system does obviously depend on drivers stopping at red lights," Pettitt said.

"We have quite a lot of evidence that a severe brake application was made prior to the collision and long before the signal," Pettitt said. He did not detail the evidence.

The possibility of driver error "is not uppermost in my mind at the moment, though it is obviously a main area of inquiry," he said.

Pettitt said the train's braking system was being examined.

He said there was no evidence of sabotage and the signaling equipment at Purley appeared to be working properly.

British Rail's board has accepted responsibility for the accident, Pettitt said, and "any claims will be sympathetically dealt with as soon as possible."

Three trains crashed near a busy south London junction during rush hour Dec. 12, killing 35 people. Railway officials believe a malfunctioning signal caused that crash.

City finds that being 'worst' not so bad

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Alphabetically speaking, Yuba City, Calif., was used to being last on lists. But catching the caboose in Rand McNally's "Places Rated Almanac" four years ago insulted residents right down to their toes.

At first, they fumed, they raged, they stamped their collective civic feet. Then they got smart.

City leaders decided "there are only two places to be on the list: the top — and the bottom," said Mary Knapp, Yuba-Sutter Chamber of Commerce executive vice president. "It depends what you make of both of them."

What Yuba Citians made from last place was a heap of first-rate public relations hay.

In the 50 years since one E.L. Thorndike created his "goodness index" for American cities, academicians, special interest groups, magazines and the federal government have cranked out a plethora of rankings identifying the best of all possible towns.

Stressed out? Live in State College, Pa., says one survey; Cedar Rapids, Iowa, says another.

Best place for a hip, contemporary career woman? Seattle, Savvy magazine says.

Easiest place to make friends? San Francisco, Forbes magazine says.

No. 1 overall? It's Pittsburgh, says one survey; Danbury, Conn., says another.

In a nation where everybody loves the underdog but nobody wants to be one, where everyone says it doesn't matter what other people think but no one believes it, city ratings have become a source of indignation, elation, frustration and, always, fascination.

Now, it's almost time for another edition of "Places Rated," the most objective and carefully researched of the bunch.

Eastern warns its pilots against honoring Machinists' picket lines

MIAMI (AP) — With rail commuters around the nation receiving a reprieve from chaos today, strike-torn Eastern Airlines warned pilots they were committing "economic suicide" by honoring Machinists' picket lines.

Most of the 3,600 pilots, who are critical to Eastern's operations, have honored the strike by the airline's 8,500 mechanics, baggage handlers and ground crew.

The strike, in its third day, began over Eastern's demand for contract concessions and escalated a 17-month battle at the nation's seventh-largest airline.

Most of the airline's 4,800 flight attendants also honored the Machinists' pickets. The effects of the strike could spread Tuesday if the nation's pilots followed their union's request to strictly observe aviation rules starting that day.

Only 92 of Eastern's 1,000 daily flights took off Sunday, said Eastern spokesman Robin Matell. The pilots' union put the figure at 68.

■ Greyhound buses ready to come to rescue in Eastern strike — 6C

The sharp cuts in operations have stranded thousands of Eastern's usual 100,000 daily passengers at airports around the country.

The strike had threatened to spill over into a sympathy action today against 12 commuter railroads around the country, but the Machinists called off their plans Sunday after a judge in New York issued a temporary order banning railroad workers from honoring Eastern picket lines there.

Eastern President Phil Bakes, admitting that service has "been a mess," urged the pilots to return.

"Come back now and make this airline work," Bakes told a news conference Sunday. "Come back for your families, come back for Eastern Airlines...We can make it work."

He also apologized to customers and admitted that the carrier had miscalculated when it had assured travelers there would be no major disruptions.

Charles Bryan, negotiator for the Machinists', did likewise.

"We feel very bad and certainly apologize for inconvenience to the traveling public," he said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

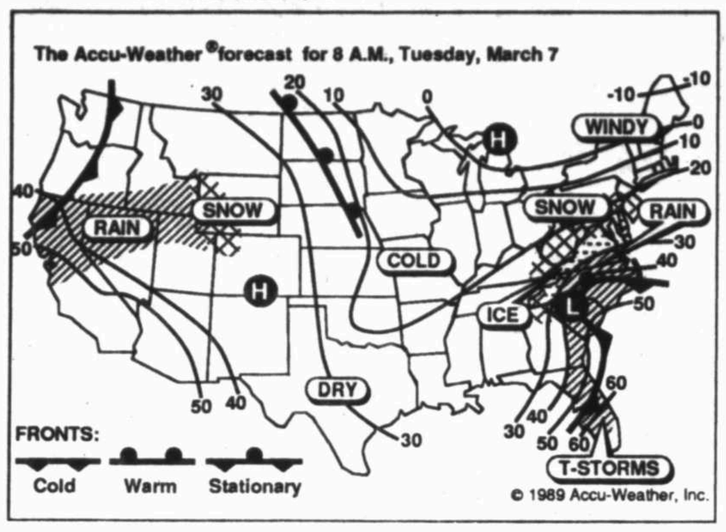

But, he added: "This is probably the purest classic case of evil versus good that's been seen in the history of organized labor...These people were not workers who were greedy or doing anything wrong."

By honoring the pickets and virtually shutting down the carrier, pilots threatened Eastern's "very existence," Matell said Sunday.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Low temperatures persist

Associated Press

For the second day in a row Texas experienced record low temperatures as the bitter cold continued its icy grip on the state.

Readings were in the teens and 20s over most of the state with some 30s in South Texas. Extremes at 4 a.m. ranged from 9 degrees at Dalhart to 39 degrees at McAllen.

Several locations set new record lows this morning across southeast and south Central Texas including Houston, Austin, Beaumont, Galveston and Corpus Christi. Wichita Falls in northwest Texas has also gone below the record for this date.

Strong winds were adding to the effect of the low temperatures by dropping wind chills. Northwesterly winds of 10 to 20 miles an hour over North Texas were dropping wind chills to as low as 10 degrees below zero.

In the Panhandle, wind chills were even lower. Light winds of 5 to 10 miles an hour were common over the south.

Skies were expected to be sunny today across the state with clouds in east texas moving out by afternoon. Temperatures, however, should remain cold with highs mostly in the 30s and 40s, some 50s in the deep south and the extreme far west.

NATION

The southeastern United States was getting drenched early today as strong thunderstorms moved in, and residents in Alabama and Georgia were cleaning up in the wake of at least eight tornadoes.

Thunderstorms Sunday night spawned five tornadoes in Alabama and three in Georgia, killing at least one person and damaging property in both states.

In Georgia, 1-inch diameter hail and high winds were causing problems in Tallapoosa. Similar conditions were reported in Lafayette, Ala.

Strong thunderstorms extended from northern Georgia across northwestern Florida and into the Gulf of Mexico early this morning. Showers and thunderstorms were producing heavy rain from the southern Appalachians to the upper Ohio Valley.

Heavier rainfall for the six-hour period ending at 1 a.m. EST included 2 inches at Columbus, Ga., and more than an inch at Jackson, Ky.

A snow advisory was posted in southeastern Oklahoma, and an advisory for snow and blowing snow was in effect in portions of Kansas.

Winter storm warnings were posted in Missouri, where snowfall totals in the Ozark region ranged up to 10 inches, and in central Arkansas, southern Illinois, southern Indiana and southern Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania was under an advisory for snow and freezing rain, and winter weather advisories were posted throughout the day for New Jersey and New York.

A cold front crossing over the Pacific Northwest brought wet and windy weather with it as showers extended from Washington to northern California. Fair skies and subfreezing temperatures were reported in much of the rest of the nation.

Today s forecast called for snow and ice in the Ohio Valley; snow from the middle Mississippi Valley through the Ohio Valley into New York City; and freezing rain and sleet in central Kentucky.

Rabbi calls for ban of 'Satanic Verses'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's chief Ashkenazi rabbi called in an interview published today for a national ban on Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses," saying the novel threatens Moslem-Jewish relations and world peace.

Militant Palestinian leader Ahmed Jibril vowed Sunday to make every effort to kill Rushdie "in defense of religion, God, and his prophet (Mohammed)." Speaking in Damascus, Syria, Jibril said he would use his Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command to carry out the threat.

Jibril said Rushdie's book was "a new conspiracy...a desperate attempt to defame God and his prophet."

Rushdie, a British citizen born into a Moslem family in India, has been in hiding since Feb. 14, when Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said he should be killed because his novel was blasphemous. Iranian clerics have put a $5.2 million price on his head.

The threat prompted the 12 European Economic Community nations and several other countries to withdraw their ambassadors from Iran. The Iranian Parliament voted Tuesday to break relations with Britain unless Britain within a week reversed its stand.

Nineteen people have died in Pakistan and India in violence related to the book. The novel is banned in Pakistan, India and several other nations.

Israel's Rabbi Avraham Shapira made his statements in an interview published today in the Hebrew-language newspaper Maariv. A spokesman confirmed that Shapira wanted the book banned in Israel.

"Every man of religion must see himself as hurt by a publication like this," Shapira was quoted as saying. "If there had been an attack, for example, on our forefather Moses or on the prophets, would we not be shocked?

"Here we are not talking about criticism, but an attack on the honor of a religion," he said.

Shapira acknowledged he lacks the power to order an end to the book's distribution in Israel. He also criticized the death threat of Khomeini, saying, "His fanaticism worries me."

Shapira is one of Israel's two chief rabbis. He leads the Ashkenazi Jews, who are of European heritage and comprise almost half the country's Jewish population. Chief Rabbi Mordechai Eliahu represents Jews of Middle Eastern heritage. He was unavailable for comment.

Rabbi Zalman Quittner, the spokesman for Shapira, said, "Ties between Jews and Moslems in this country are very tenuous, and we shouldn't do anything that jeopardizes them."

"The book causes conflicts between different communities and even threatens world peace," Shapira told Maariv.

'Sob-and-rob' gang blamed for robberies

MONTREAL (AP) — A roving band of women that uses sad stories to gain access to homes may be responsible for at least 180 robberies in which elderly Montreal residents lost cash, jewelry and other property, police say.

Police have named the marauding thieves the "sob-and-rob" gang because they use sob stories to get into homes they plan to rob.

One woman and two teen-age girls, carrying Danish and Swedish passports, are being held in connection with the Montreal robberies.

Lt. Det. Daniel Bissette was quoted by Canadian Press on Sunday as saying detectives doubt the girls' claims they are juveniles.

He was quoted by CP as saying this is the first time this type of ploy has been used in the Montreal area, although he has heard similar cases reported in Toronto and Vancouver. Similar reports come from some U.S. cities.

Montreal police say at least 90 elderly people have been robbed by the female con artists and another 90 reported thefts but refused to file formal complaints, CP said.

Police in the United States say families of nomadic thieves are using political refugee status, language barriers and aliases to avoid prosecution.

Women, often accompanied by teen-age girls, use a variety of pretexts — such as asking for a glass of water or use of a toilet or telephone — to gain entry into a home.

Based in New York and Chicago, the gangs travel from city to city to prey on elderly homeowners. Once inside, someone distracts the homeowner while the others quietly steal any valuables in sight, officials said, according to the news agency.

CITIES

Like the presidential election, it appears every four years — and a lot of people don't like the results.

The fallout has included threatened lawsuits, map and magazine burnings and, on a number of occasions, campaigns for civic improvements.

But ask researchers, city officials and municipal groups what city rankings mean, and how seriously to take them, and the answers seem to be not much, and not very.

"There's no best city, just like there's no best work of art," said Bert Sperling, a Portland, Ore., computer researcher who, despite that opinion, created software that rates cities. "Who's to say Van Gogh's 'Sunflower' is better than (da Vinci's) 'The Last Supper'?"

And who's to say there are 328 better places to live than Yuba City? Why, "Places Rated" authors David Savageau and Richard Boyer, that's who.

When Yuba City leaders reflected on how to make the best out of being the worst, they decided to lighten up.

"If you screamed and ranted and raved, you made a fool of yourself," Knapp said. "We decided to make a fun thing of it."

First, 1,000 residents burned hundreds of Rand McNally maps at a community pep rally, packaged the ashes in a walnut box and had a local mortician present them to a Rand McNally vice president, who flew out from Chicago just for the occasion.

Then the city helped a radio station in Pittsburgh — rated No. 1 in the same survey — award an all-expense paid trip to Yuba City as a contest prize. The happy winners toured the city by limousine and rode a float in the 105th Annual Bok-Kai Festival. A good time was had by all.

And at year's end, when Life magazine wrapped up 1985, it was Yuba City, not Pittsburgh, that received a full page. "And they spelled the name right," Knapp mused, a little amazed.

It took "Places Rated" to not only rocket Yuba City out of obscurity but to propel the metro ratings game onto the best-seller list.

The idea sprang from the authors' desire to move out of Boston and their discovery that there was no single source for good, solid data on life in U.S. cities. They decided to compile a comprehensive American cities reference guide, and sold Rand McNally on the idea in 1978.

The first edition, with Atlanta at the top and Lawrence, Mass., in the cellar, came out in 1981.

More than 300,000 book sales later, Savageau says he's a bit disappointed that the book is considered more the topic of cocktail party chitchat than the serious reference tool the authors intended, and he acknowledges its popularity still baffles him.

"I wouldn't go out and buy a book that said Pittsburgh was the best place in the country," he said, taking a rare break from his computer and the latest edition of "Places Rated," due out this fall from Simon & Schuster Inc., which acquired the series last year from Rand McNally.

When the statistics laid the exalted mantel of extreme livability on Pittsburgh, a city once known as "hell with the lid off," even Rand McNally didn't believe it at first.

The crowning of Pittsburgh illustrates the key difference between "Places Rated" and other city rankings.

The Savageau-Boyer study gives equal weight to climate, housing, crime, transportation, health care, recreation, education, the arts and economics. That might tend to give an edge to larger cities, which have more amenities, and doesn't take into account which factors people think are most important.

Other studies tend to focus on one aspect of life, such relief from stress — which the advocacy group Zero Population Growth found in Cedar Rapids and a study in Psychology Today magazine found in State College.

Or they consider the preferences of a specific group of people, as Money magazine does, polling 251 subscribers. In its 1987 survey, Pittsburgh was 43rd; Nashua, N.H., was No. 1. Last year, Pittsburgh moved to No. 20; Danbury, Conn., was top of the heap.

A change from one year to the next in what the subscribers consider most important — say, education over leisure, or transportation over weather — plus even a small shift in a city's vital statistics can account for a wild fluctuation, said Sperling, whose company, Fast Forward, has created a computer program called "Places U.S.A." used by Money.

"Some of the cities that have been disappointingly rated have used it to say, 'Oh, yeah?' and show they have a strong community support base," said Randy Arndt, spokesman for the National League of Cities. "It depends on the resourcefulness of the city."

The league wouldn't dream of ranking its 1,400 members. "I don't know who these surveys benefit, except the authors. Everybody doesn't live in the perfect place, but it's home to us," Arndt said. "Whether you live in Scarsdale or Saginaw, life is what you make of it."

The same can be said of city ratings.

In the next "Places Rated," Savageau and Boyer plan a section designed to make everyone happy by showing how under certain conditions, using factors in the book, any burg can be a Pittsburgh.

"For instance, if the only thing you're interested in are cities in California with a moderate climate and low cost of living," Savageau said, "Yuba City would be the best place in the whole country."

"I still have sip of wine now and again," Tower responded when asked whether he had stopped drinking since pledging a week ago to do so if confirmed by the Senate. "Once confirmed, I will give it up altogether."

The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., has said Tower would fail to qualify for a sensitive military position because of his history of drinking.

Tower denied that, and said "I would be disqualified if you could prove alcohol dependency or chronic alcoholism...In the final analysis, it is a decision to be made by the commanding officer that should be based on hard evidence. In my particular instance, the president of the United States is the commanding officer.

"The fact is I am not alcohol-dependent," Tower said. "There is no conclusive proof to the effect. As a matter of fact, the weight of proof seems to indicate otherwise.

"I've admitted to excessive drinking in the 1970s," Tower said. "I've said excessive drinking, not alcohol abuse...There's a difference."

Tower said he would relish a chance to appear on the Senate floor to defend himself, as suggested by Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

The full Senate must approve before a non-member can address the chamber. Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, has not said how he would react to such a move.

Dole, appearing on the ABCTV program, "This Week With David Brinkley," vowed "to fight this to the end."

"John Tower is the best-suited man in America. President Bush has said so, and he has the right to make the nomination because he won the election," Dole said.

The Tower nomination has threatened to undermine relations between the White House and Congress at the outset of the Bush administration. The Senate Armed Services Committee voted 11-9 against Tower on Feb. 23, splitting on partisan lines with Democrats in favor and Republicans against.

Democrats, led by Nunn, say they are troubled by reports of Tower's excessive drinking, extramarital affairs and his ties to defense and aerospace contractors.

One Democrat, Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, said on CNN that although many of the accusations against Tower had proved untrue, he decided to vote against the nomination because "it's risky to have someone with his background and the problems he has had in that office."

Tower said that the real issue is politics, not his personalit.

"Senators are quite capable of changing their minds. I think there is an imminent possibility that minds will be changed as this situation plays out and as the arguments against me appear to be more thin," said Tower, who served 24 years in the Senate, including a 1981-84 stint as chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Tower discounted the results of a public opinion poll released Sunday by the Los Angeles Times, showing that 44 percent thought the Senate should reject Tower, 35 percent thought he should be confirmed and 21 percent were unsure. The survey of 1,046 adults last Wednesday and Thursday had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

While Bush is publicly refusing to discuss possible successors should Tower be rejected, administration aides and congressional sources said the president was mindful of the odds against the nomination. They said some Republicans in Congress have been pressing Bush to give the job to his national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft.

STRIKE

"By continuing to stay out, the pilots are committing economic suicide," he said.

The company late Sunday sent pilots a letter telling them to return to work before noon Tuesday or be classified as being on strike. Pilots who are placed in that classification and later go back to work will be required to sign a "preferential recall list," according to the letter from Frank Causey, Eastern's chief of pilot operations.

The wording appears to refer to last week's U.S. Supreme Court ruling that allowed Trans World Airways Inc. to reward flight attendants who crossed picket lines during a strike by moving them up the seniority list over attendants who refused to work.

The pilots "wouldn't be surprised" if Eastern went to court charging the group with an illegal strike, union spokesman Skip Stokes said.

Thousands of anxious passengers holding tickets on canceled Eastern flights spent hours in lines that snaked around airport terminals, hoping to find seats on other airlines or get refunds.

"I'm not flying this stinking airline again!" yelled John Vannua of New York's Long Island, who had been waiting three hours at Miami International Airport to have his ticket validated for another carrier.

Pickets chanted and baggage piled up at airports from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to Los Angeles and from Miami to New York. Some Eastern planes were stranded on Caribbean islands without crews, the company said.

In Washington, Air Line Pilots Association President Henry Duffy said his union was asking all pilots nationwide to strictly follow aviation rules starting Tuesday "to ensure the safety of the (air traffic) system," which he said had been weakened by the Eastern disruptions.

Duffy said the action would slow air traffic, but insisted that was not the intent.

Battered by years of labor tension and growing competition in the deregulated airline business, Eastern has racked up nearly $2.5 billion in debt and claims daily losses of more than $1 million. It wants $150 million in concessions from the International Association of Machinists over four years; the union wants $50 million in raises.

Matell said his tough remarks were not a threat that pilots could be laid off. But Eastern may retaliate with firings. Frank Lorenzo, who controls Eastern through his giant Texas Air Corp. holding company, sacked striking Continental Airlines employees in 1983 and put the carrier into bankruptcy.

When weekend air traffic came to a virtual standstill in Dallas-Fort Worth, several local passengers found themselves stranded in Midland-Odessa.

American Airlines was forced to cancel several flights out of Midland International Airport due to ice-covered runways at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

However, Marcy Blauvelt, supervisor of administrative services at Midland International, said airport ground crews had no problems keeping Midland's runways clear of ice and snow.

Bush can't 'knuckle under' on Tower, GOP strategists say

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

■ Related story, Page 8A

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House struggle to save John Tower's nomination has turned into the first major test of President Bush's political mettle and is being watched as a barometer of how he'll deal with a Congress dominated by Democrats.

Republican strategists say the stakes are high for Bush, in office only six weeks.

"He's got to fight. To let the Democrats shove him around or to knuckle under to them this early in his presidency would only give them more feeling that they could go after him down the road," said Lyn Nofziger, who was the first political director for President Ronald Reagan.

Mitchell Daniels, another White House political director under Reagan, said Bush should make clear that there will be political consequences for anyone who opposes the administration.

"If he just sort of smiles and forgets it, I think it's the same as putting up a 'kick me' sign," Daniels said.

"He's got to put this in the memory bank and, as he has opportunities out of public view, he's got to get even" as he makes decisions and doles out political favors over the next four years, said Daniels.

While the White House still talked about victory, Nofziger and Daniels said there was virtually no chance Tower could win confirmation as secretary of defense, with the Democrats holding a 55-45 majority in the Senate.

Even among Republicans, there is a feeling that the White House has not done a good job with the Tower nomination. The former Texas senator has been buffeted by accusations of excessive drinking, womanizing and conflict of interest with defense contractors.

"Up until now, the Brits have had better scandals," said Rep. Lynn Martin, an Illinois Republican. "This one is understandable — drinking and sex."

The White House has not tried to pressure Congress by drumming up a groundswell of public support for Tower.

"The public's uncomfortable with the rumors," Daniels said. "There's no pro-drunkenness caucus out there."

In a speech last week, Bush observed, "This is a tough town — a lot of rumors out there." He has spoken out on Tower's behalf numerous times, discounting the allegations against his nominee as mere innuendo.

A White House official said Bush is not trying to mobilize a national campaign on Tower's behalf because it is not the kind of issue that can generate much public support. Instead, he said, Bush is struggling to find a few votes in the Senate.

"This is a battle with an audience of about eight people," said the official, who declined to be identified by name.

"I don't see any point in making this personal," Bush said recently. "There's no point making this into a fight."

Looking ahead to relations with Congress after the Tower affair, Bush said, "We're going to have to work together on a lot of other issues."

Andrew Card, a top lieutenant to Bush, said the president "understands politics and he knows that most people don't hold grudges and can move from one issue to the next without a lot of bias."

By the traditional rules of politics, Tower's nomination should have been safe. As a former senator, he was a member of the congressional club, the beneficiary of special courtesies and favors.

However, the normal scenario turned into chaos for Tower when Paul Weyrich, a conservative activist, testified publicly about Tower's drinking.

"What Paul Weyrich did was to present an uneasy group of senators who really didn't like John Tower anyway with a fig leaf," said Stephen Hess, a Brookings Institution specialist on the presidency.

"George Bush makes ethics and personal conduct almost a hallmark of his administration and gets hoisted on his own petard," Hess said.

The White House has acknowledged shortcomings in handling Tower's nomination, blaming some of the problems on incompetence and inexperience among the new staff.

Nofziger traces the mishandling back to December, even before Tower was actually nominated.

"They let the naming of him dangle for two months."

Aryan Woodstock 'boring, uncomfortable'

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — A concert billed as an "Aryan Woodstock" for skinheads and white supremacists turned out to be "boring and uncomfortable" because of rain, a lack of food and a court-ordered ban on music.

About 100 people representing half a dozen white supremacist groups gathered Saturday at a private ranch about 40 miles north of San Francisco, but were far outnumbered by about 400 protesters and 500 police officers.

"They talked about girls. They gropingly discussed 'white power.' They pranced about with Nazi flags and insignia, but they never discussed the ideology of fascism or of anything else," wrote Cherie Seymour, a former reporter who gained entrance to the event.

Seymour, who did not specify how she managed to attend the rally in the heart of California's wine country, described the event in an article in today's editions of the San Francisco Chronicle.

"It was simply boring — and uncomfortable," she said. "The great majority had brought neither rain gear nor food. Morale hit bottom when police refused to let the daughter of white supremacist Tom Metzger return with $100 worth of pizzas."

The event originally was touted as something to bring together thousands of white supremacist youths. The skinhead bands Midtown Boot Boys from Oklahoma, the Hammerheads from Wisconsin annd Kakenkreuz from Detroit were expected to perform.

But Napa County Superior Judge W. Scott Snowden ruled Friday that rally organizers couldn't have music without a permit.

So participants spent most of the day glaring at reporters and protesters from a hill.

The gathering was held out of view of the public, which was not allowed entrance to the ranch. There were a few clashes between white supremacists and protesters but no arrests or major violence.

"What you find is that the people of Napa rallied against this group that has no purpose other than hate. I was real proud of the way people stood up," said Mayor Ed Solomon.

Early Sunday, the last five white supremacists left the property.

Sheriff Gary Simpson estimated the cost of law enforcement at about $400,000.

Klan marches through site of 'Mississippi Burning' event

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. (AP) — Sixteen Ku Klux Klan members marched for "white power" and a Klan leader criticized the movie "Mississippi Burning," about the slayings of three civil rights workers here in the 1960s.

About 100 spectators watched the march and recruitment rally with a few people heckling the marchers. About 20 law enforcement officers also kept watch.

No incidents were reported in the march or during another march by about 20 Klan members later Sunday in Meridian, about 40 miles to the east.

Jordan Gollub, the Grand Dragon for Mississippi, said the march was held in Philadelphia because of the movie, which he said presented a "negative, hateful image of the Klan.

"Hollywood is run by Jews and integrationists," said Gollub, a Jew by birth.

The movie, which has received seven Oscar nominations, is loosely based on the 1964 slayings of three civil rights workers whose bodies were found in an earthen dam near Philadelphia, a town of about 7,500 in central Mississippi.

James Earl Chaney, 21, who was black, and Andrew Goodman, 20, and Michael Schwerner, 24, who were white, were shot to death. The federal government eventually convicted eight people of violating the civil rights of the three men, but no one was ever charged with murder.

The Klan marchers included 10 men and six women, with 10 wearing purple, green, gold and white robes.

Police cars preceded and followed the marchers through Philadelphia's small downtown area and six patrolmen walked with the group.

Philadelphia Police Chief Arden Gentry said his entire 16-member police force was on duty along with Neshoba County Sheriff Glen Waddell, one deputy and two county constables.

Pentecostals leaving U.S.S.R. as Jews, paper says

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Thousands of Soviet Pentecostals are leaving their country for the United States under the guise of being Jewish emigres, a newspaper reported.

The emigration of Pentecostals, who claim to suffer discrimination in their homeland, apparently has the blessing of government officials in several countries who are assisting their passage, The Buffalo News reported Sunday.

"We're not sure of the reason why the Soviets have allowed the Pentecostals to leave," said Serge Duss, a refugee specialist with the World Relief agency in Rome.

"The Soviets have turned a blind eye, the Israelis have turned a blind eye, but the important thing is they are getting out of the country."

"It's not a secret," said the Rev. Alexander Shevchuk of New York City, himself a Soviet emigre.

Refugee workers say Pentecostals renounce their Soviet citizenship in Moscow, obtain visas from the Dutch or American embassy and come to refugee camps in Italy.

A spokesman at the Dutch embassy in Moscow who spoke on condition he remain anonymous denied to The Associated Press his country was issuing visas identifying Pentecostals as Jews. Officials at the U.S. embassy didn't comment immediately.

The State Department's annual review of human rights last month found signs of significant reform in Soviet policies during the past year, including increased emigration for Pentecostals as well as Jews, Armenians and ethnic Germans.

Shevchuk has traveled throughout the United States raising funds to support Pentecostals in Italian refugee camps. He led a contingent of American Pentecostals to Italy in late Feburary to arrange sponsors for the refugees.

One of the pastors accompanying him, Rev. Paul Schenck of New Covenant Tabernacle Church in the Buffalo suburb of Tonawanda, said he hopes to sponsor 100 refugees.

Military paying some expenses for adoptions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department, in a test program ordered by Congress, has begun reimbursing some of the expenses of active-duty servicemen who adopt children.

The unusual program, which provides up to $2,000 to offset the expenses of legally adopting a child, is set to last through the end of the current fiscal year — or until Sept. 30 — unless Congress votes to make the benefit permanent.

The adoption reimbursement program was formally launched by the Pentagon's personnel chief, Grant S. Green, last September and as of Dec. 31, the Army had processed 69 claims. The Air Force and Navy lagged behind the Army in publishing their regulations and are only now handling claims.

The test was ordered in the Pentagon's fiscal 1988 budget bill and was championed by Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo.

It was proposed not only as a morale-building benefit that might play a role in keeping men and women in the military, but also as a benefit for adoptive parents that parallels the cost of health care provided to women bearing babies in military hospitals.

The Defense Department nonetheless opposed the program, arguing Congress wasn't providing any extra money for the payments and it couldn't afford to tap other accounts.

"In the current fiscal climate, this program might negatively affect the other personnel and family initiatives that benefit a greater percentage of the military population," the Pentagon argued unsuccessfully.

Orthopedic surgeon taking own 'holy war' to Afghanistan

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS

HOUSTON (AP) — Kermit R. Veggeberg, an orthopedic surgeon, looking to spread some goodwill and do a little traveling to faraway places, could have gone to the Dominican Republic in 1977. He chose Afghanistan instead.

Veggeberg has since made 11 trips bestowing medical aid to the people of that remote country beset by turf battles, holy wars, drug runners and the Soviet Union occupation — and he is about to make his 12th.

It was in 1985 that he lost his heart there to an Afghan girl. She was 6 years old. Her name was Hawa.

"When I saw her I went on my own 'jihad' (holy war)," he said. "She had been shot in the hip by the Russians, her parents told me, and whether it was a stray shot or deliberate, or an accident, I don't know.

"All I know is that she set something off in me, and I decided I would do what I could as a doctor to help those people."

Veggeberg saw the girl in the Afghan Surgical Hospital in Peshewar, Pakistan, just across the border from Afghanistan.

He could not operate on her then because he did not have the proper equipment, but he promised to return in six months and he did.

By then she had disappeared. He never saw her again.

In between trips, Veggeberg practices at the Spring Branch Hospital, and makes preparations for more medical aid to Afghanistan.

"There are 50,000 people in Afghanistan that need artificial limbs. They lost their arms and legs in the war, to mines or gunshots," Veggeberg said, adding that many of the maimed are children.

"All the bad things you have heard about the war in Afghanistan are true," he added, including booby-trapped ball point pens and tennis balls the Russians distributed, and which Afghan children played with.

"In most cases, the U.S.-backed rebel forces were without proper medical care. Anyone who suffered a chest wound, or a belly wound, died," he said.

He found the Afghanistan people to be a resilient and determined. "There are no beggars in Afghanistan," he said.

If Veggeberg has his way, he and his medical teams from Houston will see that there are 28 hospitals in place in Afghanistan, one in each province, within a few years.

The only obstacles are financial support for the team, and getting the hospitals, which are PDHs, or packaged disaster hospitals. In the 1950s, the U.S. government distributed 1,100 of these hospitals around the country to be used in case of a nuclear attack. They ended up in the hands of civil defense agencies. Each one consists of 60 crates and weighs 14 tons.

Each PDH includes five operating tables, operating instruments, anesthesia equipment, an X-ray machine, three operating room lights, 200 cots and other equipment.

"It's not the Mayo Clinic, but it'll do," he said.

Veggeberg's effort over the years to get medical aid to the Afghans has led him through a political labyrinth.

That labyrinth included visits to the Soviet embassy in Washington, where he tried to convince the Russians to call a cease fire in each of Afghanistan's provinces, one at a time, so that medical care could be given to the wounded.

The Soviets politely referred him to the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan. He got a no-go.

He also met in Geneva with the man in charge of taking care of the Afghan refugees in Pakistan, to ask for financial aid. That was Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, son of the late Aga Khan, and the uncle of the current Aga Khan, spiritual leader of the 15 million Ismailian Moslems.

Another no-go. The prince told him to get the United States to contribute money to the cause.

He has the enthusiastic approval of the U.S. State Department, but no government money.

Those political missions also brought Veggeberg into negotiations with the seven Mujahedeen (tribal) groups, which have been fighting the Russians — and sometimes each other. The warlords control great hunks of the countryside.

When Veggeberg finally emerged from the labyrinth, he had touched all the bases, raised all the flags, notified all sides of his peaceful intentions.

His last trip was on Dec. 27, when he traveled from Houston to Peshawar, Pakistan, and then to Asadabad, in Afghanistan, 30 miles away, through the Nawa Pass.

"In the past month (February) about 2,000 Afghan refugees have fled to Pakistan through the pass. The night before we arrived, four children died in the pass, from the cold and malnutrition," he said.

It takes a full day to travel the 30-mile pass in a jeep on dangerous roads recently carved into steep mountainsides by Afghans with dynamite and a bulldozer.

Asadabad once had 1,200 citizens. Today it has about 200. The citizens were killed, or they fled. There was fierce fighting.

Director gives music the brush off

Retired professor takes up painting

By LAURA TETRAULT

LUBBOCK (AP) — Although Dr. Gene Hemmle has retired from conducting the choir at Texas Tech University, he continues to orchestrate an art form.

He has traded his conductor's baton for a paintbrush, leading instead of a multitude of voices, a rainbow of colors.

"I've always had a great interest in art. I almost majored in art. I was always drawing," Hemmle said.

Despite his love of art, he was not able to pursue it during his music career. He served as chairman of Texas Tech's music department from 1949 to 1973, spearheading its growth from four faculty members to 43 during his tenure.

Upon his retirement from the university in 1979, he pursued his interest in art, studying as much as he could through visits to museums.

"I think one of the best ways to learn painting is to steep yourself in museums. You have to look at and see and feel great paintings. It has a carry-over into your paintings," Hemmle said.

For inspiration and to view interesting subject matters, Hemmle has traveled to Indonesia and French Polynesia.

He also treks periodically to art communities, such as San Miguel Allende, Mexico, and Santa Fe, N.M. He studies with prominent artists. This spring he plans to study pastels and sculpting in Scottsdale, Ariz., with George Carlson.

"I was fortunate enough that (Lubbock artist) Paul Milosevich let me stand side by side with him to paint. Of course, he was 10 strokes ahead of me. But, he's been an asset to me," Hemmle said.

Hemmle describes his art as figurative. "I really would like to do realism that is based on the abstracts," Hemmle said. "I like to experiment and even mix mediums."

Despite obvious artistic talents in childhood, Hemmle graduated from Southern Methodist University as a voice major. He studied privately in New York, undertook post-graduate work at the University of Texas and eventually earned master's and doctoral degrees from Columbia University. Prior to studying at Columbia, Hemmel served as director of choral operations at the University of Texas at El Paso.

He sang professionally with the Robert Shaw Chorale and worked with such conductors as Leonard Bernstein, Igor Stravinsky, Erich Leinsdorf and Arturo Toscanini.

In 1949, a friend from UTEP recruited Hemmle to come to Texas Tech to serve as chairman and director of choral organizations. Although the band program had always been strong at the university, the choral program was small and focused on music education.

"When I first came here, I taught everything in the book. Thank God that quit," Hemmle said. He was teaching voice, music literature, music education and chorale conducting. In addition, he also organized and directed the Tech Choir, now known as the University Chorale.

"We were heavily oriented to music education, but as far as I was concerned, every music educator should be an outstanding music performer," Hemmle said.

Under Hemmle's direction, the department of music developed from offering only a bachelor of science degree in music education to an array of bachelor's and master's degrees and a doctorate in fine arts.

During his tenure, the department developed a reputation of producing talented voice majors. Many students were accepted at outstanding music graduate schools, Hemmle said.

While trying to develop the music department, Hemmle turned the chorale over to another director.

The demands of the chairmanship also forced Hemmle to put his interest in art on hold until he retired.

In 1973, Texas Tech opened a recital hall named in Hemmle's honor the year he retired.

Today, Hemmle draws every day and paints as much as he can.

Since his retirement, Hemmle has had one-man shows at First Federal Bank, Regency Gallery and the University Faculty Club at Texas Tech. He also has been included in group shows and this winter has had paintings on exhibit at the Fenn Gallery in Santa Fe.

Retired Texas Tech University choir director Dr. Gene Hemmle poses at his home in Lubbock recently. Hemmle has traded his conductor's baton for a paintbrush and a rainbow of colors.

Hemmle said that his painting hobby is not much different from his musical career.

"I think they (music and art) are very related. We even use some of the same vocabulary," Hemmle said. "You'll say, 'This painting is well-orchestrated.'"

Hemmle attacks his painting with his whole body. He said that he stands at the canvas and uses his whole arm and moves his body with each stroke of the brush.

"It's almost a physical experience as well as emotional," he said. "I'm completely lost when I paint. You're transported. You forget where you are and what time it is. You get spaced out."

When he paints, Hemmle is concerned with conveying emotions and feelings, not reproducing details.

"To me, the high detail work that is like a photograph is boring," he said. "A great painting is not one that puts in every tiny detail and hair, but it captures the essence of it (subject)."

One painter that Hemmel admires is Andrew Wyeth. "Andrew Wyeth said that realism in painting is a bore unless it has an emotional quality."

When he is not painting, Hemmle is collecting antiques. He even bought the Bledsoe Santa Fe Depot in 1966 and moved it to his property on West 19th Street. The 75-mile move took two days because the height of the structure required the temporary cutting and restoring of power and telephone lines along its route, Hemmle said.

Some refurbishing has been done on the inside of the depot, but almost no alterations were made on the outside.

In the depot's study, Hemmle surrounds himself with his own and other artists' paintings, drawings and sculptures of Indians. He said he will continue to study, collect and learn as much as he can about art.

"One of the most deadly things in any art is feeling you have arrived. You keep reaching," Hemmle said.

El Paso wine industry climbs out of cellar

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso's wine industry spanned three centuries before Prohibition shut it down. Now the owners of a new winery are sparking a renaissance.

Bieganowski Cellars started selling wine late last year and already has grown to fourth place among Texas' 25 wineries, with a capacity of 85,000 gallons a year.

The quality — especially of the sparkling wine — has excited the owners and surprised some tasters.

Co-owner Arthur Bieganowski says grape-growing is a natural for the area.

"People started making wine here in the 1600s and it continued until Prohibition," he says. "El Paso was the state's primary winemaking area until then, and it was,pretty famous for having some good wines around the early 1900s."

Arthur Bieganowski, his brother, Chip, and consultant Vito Liso have little in common with the Franciscan monks who settled in El Paso almost 340 years ago and planted some of the first vines in the present-day United States.

Arthur is a neurologist and psychiatrist specializing in stress management. Chip is a Houston lawyer interested in lobbying to change what he calls antiquated winemaking laws. Liso is a native of Italy and a mechanical engineer who learned about viticulture while selling and servicing winemaking equipment in Europe.

The Bieganowskis moved to Texas from New York about five years ago. They met Liso two years ago, when he worked at a winery near Deming, N.M. After that winery shut down, the Bieganowskis hired Liso to buy grapes in West Texas and southern New Mexico and supervise the winemaking.

Liso grew up near Genoa on a small winery where all wine is fermented in barrels, poured rather haphazardly into bottles and sold quickly. He shakes his head now when he talks of the family business.

"If I do the wine how my father used to do, I can't sell it," he says. "I use the same system but different technology."

Technology gleams and sparkles in the Bieganowskis' chilly, 15,000-square-foot winery beside Interstate 10 east of downtown El Paso.

The white-walled rooms are dominated by five 5,000-gallon and 15 3,000-gallon stainless steel fermentation tanks. Each tank stands about 15 feet high and is surrounded by tubes and hoses.

No purple-footed grape-stompers clamber out of wooden vats, though a little of the old way survives. Two grape-pressing machines are parked behind a row of 50-gallon oak barrels where some wines are aged for three to 24 months.

Librarian's ashes lost in stacks

Attic's relics include missing remains of founder

By STEVEN LONG

GALVESTON (AP) — The first man to direct the Rosenberg Library has been misplaced. Somewhere in the attic, among the boxes of books, tattered battle flags and the dusty relics of Galveston bootleggers, Frank Patton's ashes rest in the institution he helped build.

John Hyatt, the current head of the Rosenberg Library, has puzzled over the missing ashes of his predecessor for years, yet he is reluctant to search for them himself.

"One of my great problems over the years has been to get people to go up into the attic," Hyatt said, shining a flashlight into the dark corners of the attic.

Hyatt stumbled across an open old wooden chest full of carpenter's tools and a shaving brush coated with a generation of dust. Fastidiously, Hyatt closed the lid. Under the grime, a name faintly appeared. Hyatt wiped away the dirt to read the name of Frank Patton.

"Would Frank be in there?" Hyatt's visitor asked. "Would you care to look deeper into the chest and see if the ashes are there?"

"No, not right now," Hyatt said.

Hyatt would rather look for less morbid items among the historical trash and treasure Galvestonians have been giving to the Rosenberg. He shuns the word museum when referring to the Rosenberg Library, but the parallel arises naturally in the attic, where silver tennis trophies from the 1920s, 19th century porcelain dolls, and political memorabilia such as yard signs, posters and buttons can be found.

LIBRARIANS have been unable to keep up with the slow process of sorting the treasure from the trash since the library, with walls 4 feet thick to withstand hurricanes, was built in 1905.

Molly McGill Rosenberg's carriage sits in pieces on the floor of the attic, part of more than 2 million items in the library. Curator Lise Darst, who is in charge of the institution's attic, says that of all the things under her care, the carriage is one of her favorites. She looks at it and sighs, "Someday, we hope someone will give us the money to have it fixed."

But not all of the items in the collection gather dust. Downstairs in the Rare Book Room are the institution's most prized possessions. In a glass display case are a Faberge egg, a silver pig that has ruby eyes with diamonds, a bowl and Czar Nicholas II's cuff links and desk clock. In a cabinet is a collection of 19th-century "horn books," once used in colonial schools.

A pair of Babylonian cuneiform tablets are the oldest items in the library, dating from 2350 B.C. Sitting under lock and key are a first edition of Boswell's "Life of Samuel Johnson" and a 1488 Suma Angelica list of indulgences similar to those Martin Luther pitched into a fire. Margaret Schlankey, custodian of the room, handles the items with white gloves.

Besides the treasure of the Rare Book Room, the library holds the world's largest collection of paintings by German artist Julius Stockfleth, larger even than the collection in the Stockfleth Museum in Germany. For a period around the turn of the century, the artist worked in Galveston. Hyatt says that while the Stockfleth collection is the library's most important, other artists' work is there as well.

"We are trying to gradually develop a collection of Texas painters, especially those who worked here," he said.

FROM TIME TO time the library sends part of its collection of historical oddities downstairs for display, or to museums across the country, including the Smithsonian Institute's Cooper-Hewitt Museum in New York.

Sam Houston's dueling pistols are downstairs on display, as is a lock of hair from the tail of Traveler, Robert E. Lee's horse. In a cabinet sit Santa Anna's cut-glass decanters. On a shelf is a spittoon from the Galvez Hotel, and a bed-warmer once owned by a Salem woman who was accused of being a witch and who was burned at the stake.

Galveston's first library began as the Galveston Mercantile Library, chartered in 1870 by the state after its creation by the Galveston Chamber of Commerce. Later, that library was turned over to the city of Galveston. However, the city fathers didn't have a real commitment to the library.

Philanthropist Henry Rosenberg gave an endowment of $300,000 to build a library that would rival those of much larger metropolitan cities. Rosenberg's original endowment, along with others given over the years, has grown to $5 million. Eventually, the city library was incorporated into the rival Rosenberg Library.

Until recently, the library had a collection of Civil War cannonballs on display.

"Kids used to use those things as bowling balls up on the top floor of the library. Someone came through here and said in a lecture that sometimes, even this long after the Civil War ended (124 years), the ammunition might still be live. We sent the cannonballs to Fort Polk, and sure enough, some of them exploded. We sure got lucky," Hyatt said.

ON A SHELF sit identification plates from early 20th-century Mardi Gras floats, the flag from the Civil War blockade runner Harriet Lane, and Indian artifacts. Next to them is an empty box that once contained the ashes of a Buddhist priest. Frank Patton is not the only person missing in the attic.

Patton was a colorful character. He once walked from Montana to Galveston for adventure and exercise, but when a search committee wrote to the New York public library asking if he would be interested in coming to Galveston to discuss the job of head librarian at the new Rosenberg, Patton wrote back and told them he was too busy to come to Galveston and discuss the matter. They would have to come to New York, and they did.

Hyatt looked around at the wealth of books and artifacts around him. "We didn't know what the library owned. We're still finding out," he said. Yet the problem of the missing ashes lingers.

"Somebody probably used them to fertilize the lawn," Hyatt said. "That's what they do with head librarians when they are used up."

The Rare Book Room of the Rosenberg Library in Galveston houses books and artifacts so delicate that they must be handled with gloves. The library was built in 1905 and only part of the 2 million items are on display.

Khomeini's motive to rally Moslems

The smoke is beginning to clear on all the speculation about why the Ayatollah Khomeini has twice called for the murder of Salman Rushdie, author of the novel "The Satanic Verses."

The international consensus seems to be that intellectual terrorism and various advantages for the Khomeini regime at home are at the roots of the Iranian leader's actions. But most have not fine-tuned their logic to his genuine long-term aims.

Khomeini is attacking the book because he truly sees it as blasphemous. And blaming the West for its publication serves his aim to unite the Islamic world. Rushdie wrote that Mohammed's scribe may have changed some of God's revelations, and the prophet also may have consorted with prostitutes. Whether one believes in the Koran or not, this is religious sacrilege. It has no place in a civilized world and those who perpetuate it defile the Islamic creed. To suggest, as some have done, that there are no limits to freedom is nonsensical.

Rushdie's work is analogous to someone writing that Moses twisted God's words to him because he was influenced by prostitutes. Or that Christ lied and slept with streetwalkers.

To suggest that Khomeini wanted to terrorize anti-Moslems in general and booksellers — the media — in particular is naive. The Ayatollah's aims are much more pointed. He has sought to rally Moslems worldwide to the Iranian cause at a time when neighboring Moslem countries — Afghanistan, Pakistan, and even parts of the Soviet Union — are at historic political junctures. Those who do not comprehend this simply do not understand Khomeini. He has been crystal clear on this.

Whether Rushdie lives or dies means nothing to Khomeini. It is his aim that matters — and that is solidifying the Moslem world under Iran's leadership.

Khomeini views the booksellers, who removed the novel from their shelves, as mere tools. No doubt he is astonished at the ease with which he has manipulated and terrorized the media and governments.

If this be terrorism — and it shake the world — Khomeini sees the moment as an unexpected gift from Allah. But his aim is only one — creating political and religious zeal that would lead to a Pan-Islamic world.

Another View:

Can't bomb freedom

As we set pen to paper today, are we to fear for our lives? A newspaper in Manhattan was firebombed Tuesday Feb. 28, apparently for running an editorial condemning the ayatollah's campaign of murder against Salman Rushdie and his novel, "The Satanic Verses."

We, too, have condemned the madness. We are about to do so again. So, do we don flak jackets and bullet-proof vests, fortify our office into a bunker and crawl beneath desks to write our words?

In Berkeley, also in the wee hours of Tuesday morning, Molotov cocktails were hurled through the windows of two very different bookstores — Cody's, one of California's premier independent booksellers, and Waldenbooks, a branch of the nationwide chain.

Their crime? Refusing to bow to the ayatollah's campaign of hate. They have continued to sell Rushdie's book. Walden keeps it discreetly behind the counter. But Cody's, which has a distinguished history of poetry readings and free-thought lectures, is characteristically bolder.

"All booksellers, all writers, all publishers, all readers are victims of the intellectual terrorism that is being directed against Mr. Rushdie," reads a banner hanging from Cody's ceiling. "We feel that (selling the book) is a small but important act if we are to triumph over terror."

For this courage, Cody's was not only firebombed. The terrorists left an additional memento for arriving employees, a foot-long pipe bomb hidden under a book cart.

So, are storekeepers across the nation now to order steel bars for display windows and stock only fireproof books?

Or are they destined to simply succumb to the horror and seek approval of dictators and madmen before they stock their wares?

And what about Rushdie himself, still hiding under heavy guard in England? What emotional horror is being inflicted upon him as he watches the intent of his imagination being perverted and politicized as the violence escalates throughout the world. Fourteen dead in India. Three dead in Pakistan. And now splinters of shattered glass litter the shelves of Berkeley bookstores and a New York newspaper.

Is it time to retrench, to succumb? Is free speech going belly up amid the stench of gunpowder?

No. Terrorism must serve only to strengthen this nation's resolve to answer ignorance and violence with knowledge and courage. If every bookstore in America proudly displays Rushdie's novel, lining up copies in windows, the books will be sentries guarding democracy's most basic rights.

"This country was founded on the principles of free speech and religious tolerance," President Bush said, responding to the bombings. "And we fought throughout our history to protect these principles. And I want to make unequivocally clear that the United States will not tolerate any assault on these rights of American citizens."

Those words should ring in the ears of those who would steal our most basic freedoms. We have sympathy for Moslems who are offended by Rushdie's work. But bombings are not the answer. Authorities should redouble their efforts to bring the perpetrators to justice. And Americans should take this time to reflect on precious freedoms that can be so suddenly challenged — and lost.

Kangaroos cause trouble down under

WASHINGTON — Nearly 4 million kangaroos will be killed in Australia this year so their hides can be turned into so-so leather. Most of that leather will end up in the United States in shoes, purses and golf bags.

Jack Anderson

But before you drop a tear for the cute marsupials, consider that some Australians think their national symbol is about as cute as a locust plague. Kangaroos trample agriculture crops and chomp their way through cattle and sheep pastures.

There are more kangaroos than people in Australia — so many kangaroos that the people haven't figured out an accurate way to count them. And that disputed count has American and Australian environmentalists wondering if it's time to stop the slaughter.

Four separate times, Rep. Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., has introduced a bill in Congress to ban the import of all kangaroo products into the United States until America is sure that the species is not endangered. And every time, Mrazek's bill quietly dies in committee, with the help of strong lobbying by the Australian government. Undaunted, Mrazek is seeking sponsors for his bill again this session. Greenpeace also has taken up the cause of the kangaroos and has made some athletic shoe companies nervous enough to stop using kangaroo leather.

A great deal of energy has been spent on both sides for an export business that is only worth about $10 million a year to Australia. John McCarthy, Australia's congressional liaison in Washington, explained that "culling" kangaroos must be done to keep the population in check whether or not Americans buy the leather. And the U.S. business is important to a small segment of the Australian economy.

The ban would not be a first. From 1974 to 1981, the U.S. government declared the Australian kangaroo preservation program to be inadequate and prohibited the import of all kangaroo products.

Then, along came the more accommodating Reagan administration and the ban was lifted. Australia convinced the United States that there were 32 million healthy kangaroos hopping around the outback and breeding like rabbits. On second count, the Australians admitted there were only 19 million, but the U.S. government said that was enough, and the imports have continued.

This year, the count is 18 million, and the government is considering allowing 3.7 million kangaroos to be killed for export. Countless others are killed for sport or because they are agricultural pests. Their carcasses and hides are either left to rot or slipped illegally into the export stream.

Their value is strictly in hides and pelts. Human consumption of kangaroo meat is only allowed in the state of South Australia, although the government is considering legalizing it in New South Wales also. Some farmers talk about domesticating kangaroos for meat, but no one can figure out how to keep them from leaping around a slaughterhouse, and slaughtering them in the wild poses health hazards. Most Australians are no more inclined to eat lovable kangaroos than Americans are to eat Mr. Ed.

Of the 49 kangaroo species, eight are extinct or endangered and five are at risk. The three that are the most plentiful are imported here. But environmentalists dispute just how plentiful they are.

Australian zoologist Peter Rawlinson told our associate Daryl Gibson that the lines blur when the numbers are in the millions: "They say there are millions of them. We're saying they're being killed by the millions." Rawlinson and other environmentalists don't trust the population numbers and don't think the U.S. government should trust them either. But U.S. officials say they are obliged to rely on the data they get from Australia, and are satisfied that the kangaroo population is not in danger.

William de la Mare, an Australian wildlife population expert, is afraid the kangaroos are being taken for granted. "By the time it's clear we've made a mistake, it will be a serious mistake indeed."

HOSTAGE PLAN — George Bush would love to be the president who negotiated the release of the American hostages in Lebanon. If the Ayatollah Khomeini has the sense to retire gracefully and let cooler heads prevail, Bush could open the door to negotiations by first easing export restrictions against Iran. He has sent signals to Tehran that he is willing to restore normal relations if the hostages are freed. Just in case, our sources say, Bush is exploring whether a military rescue operation would work, with help from the Lebanese Christians or even the Syrians. Some experts are telling Bush that the Iranian government doesn't really control the terrorists who hold the hostages, but the consensus is that Iran could arrange their release.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The United States spends about $4 billion a year in the war on drugs, and every year, you can kiss most of that money goodbye. No amount of herbicides, border guards or guns has been able to stop the booming international drug business. The money simply hides the fact that Americans aren't willing to accept the free solution — stop buying drugs.

Tower may have chosen best of his options

John Tower wants to be secretary of defense so badly he has pledged he will stop drinking if he gets the job.

That's good. You don't want to call the secretary of defense at one in the morning to tell him there is a strange blip on the radar screen and have him reply, "Blemp gud nari snotch," which is how some people who are still drinking at one in the morning talk, and have it misinterpreted as, "Tell the president to hit the Russians with all we've got."

Lewis Grizzard

What the observer must note, however, is that John Tower didn't say anything about giving up womanizing.

Tower, of course, has been charged with both drinking and womanizing, and what I'm led to believe here is that he decided to compromise and said to himself, "OK, I'll give up one, but which one will it be?"

Tough choice. First of all, drinking and womanizing sort of go hand in hand. If a man drinks, for instance, it makes womanizing a lot easier.

That's because the more a man drinks, the more his "cull factor" decreases. A woman a man might not look at twice when he hasn't had anything to drink looks a lot better after a few belts.

In other words, a man is not nearly as choosy when he's drinking and therefore doesn't have to waste a lot of time and effort hitting on only those women who are strikingly attractive.

The brilliant, touching country love song, "The Girls All Look Prettier at Closing Time," was at least partly inspired by this theory. It also inspired me to write my own brilliant, touching country love song titled, "Just Sit Here by Me, Honey, While I Drink You Pretty," which could turn up on a Conway Twitty album almost any day now.

Another reason Tower's decision had to be a difficult one was that drinking is a lot easier than womanizing once a man achieves some age!

All you need to drink is a bottle, a glass and some ice. In order to womanize, however, you've got to have a woman, and that usually requires shaving and taking a bath, and stalking about in various locations looking for prey. It also requires staying awake, which isn't that easy once you reach Tower's age.

All this to say that I admire Tower's decision to give up booze instead of women. It proves he is a man who still has some energy and is a man who has determined his womanizing would be less dangerous than his drinking were he to become secretary of defense.

Which would you rather have? A secretary of defense who's crocked at one in the morning when strange blips appear on the radar screen, or one who is high only on passion when the call comes?

For the security of my country, I'll take number two every time. Most all of us have been interrupted in the midst of passion by a telephone call, a knock at the door or the cat jumping in bed.

Although there can be some discomfort, as well as disappointment, one can regain one's wits much quicker in that situation than one who has been in the hootch.

Instead of "Blemp gud nari snotch," all John Tower will have to say in the face of a possible crisis is, "Give me five minutes to catch my breath, and I'll call you right back."

The very future of the world as we know it may have hinged on Tower's heroic choice.

Self-delusion keeping America in danger

Americans, many of them anyway, have become so addicted to self-delusion they do not even know they have already lost the Cold War.

A recent public opinion poll revealed that while a majority of Americans think Japan is a greater economic power than the United States, they still believe the United States has military superiority in the world. That's not true.

Charley Reese

The Soviets had conventional military superiority and achieved strategic nuclear superiority some years ago. Six developing countries, including Syria and Libya, have larger armored forces than the United States has in Western Europe, our single largest concentration of armored forces. The NATO commander has flatly stated that NATO forces could fight only two weeks before the nuclear button would have to be pushed.

We have allowed our merchant fleet to decline almost into non-existence, and we have not built the airlift and sealift capacity to reinforce and resupply our overseas forces. In other words, we adopt strategies but then we don't fund the forces necessary to make them work.

We have allowed our defense industrial base to decline into a perilous condition. Very few Americans know that many key components of American defense are entirely dependent on FOREIGN sources for critical parts. These include the integrated underwater surveillance system, defense satellite communication system, fleet satellite communications system, the F-16, the Aim-7 Sparrow missile, the Kiowa helicopter, the airborne radar system on the F-15s, the M1 Abrams tank, and the FA-18 hornet.

A cutoff of these foreign sources — quite likely in a world crisis — would halt production of these key weapons for as long as 6 to 14 months.

Since Mikhail Gorbachev has been in power the Soviet Union has vastly strengthened its forces in the Pacific and continued to turn out more tanks and warplanes each year than Great Britain and France have in their inventories.

The United States gave up Cuba to the Soviet Union. Now, after eight years, it has conceded Nicaragua. Despite a lot of blather and a public-relations style raid now and then, Libya continues to flourish. North Korea seized a U.S. Navy ship, an act of war, and the United States did nothing except court-martial the captain to make him a scapegoat. Iran seized our embassy, another act of war, and we did nothing. For 14 years, American politicians have been blathering about demanding a full accounting of our men missing in action in Southeast Asia and still we do not have it. We put troops into Lebanon and were chased out by terrorists.

What I want to know is where, since 1960, when America began its decline, are the victories? Or the successes? We are the only major nation in the world that cannot control its own borders. Half the patents granted in the United States are to foreigners. Half of the engineering graduate students are foreigners. Our fiscal affairs are in about the same shape as a third world developing country with a multi-trillion dollar debt, annual interest payments nearly four times the size of an Eisenhower era budget. Ten percent of our armed forces, way under strength given their missions, are women and a sizeable percentage of them are pregnant.

What victory? Did we overthrow the comic opera regime on Grenada, using a fleet and thousands of men for what should have been a small unit operation. Yes, but we couldn't make Danny Ortega in Nicaragua say uncle.

American influence in the world, even in small two-bit countries, is bordering on zilch. You think the United States is so powerful? Then why are we consistently outvoted in the United Nations by ragtag countries that have devoured American aid? Why is it that it's Americans who are killed, Americans who are taken hostage, American embassies that are assaulted — but not those of the Soviet Union?

Americans are so ill-informed and addicted to self-delusion that they think they're winning even as they are about to get their throats cut. As Nikita Khrushchev said, "We spit in their faces and they call it dew."

Stories decorate Texas inn

By MICHAEL ELWELL

INGLESIDE, Texas (AP) — Dwight D. "Ike" Eisenhower and a group of fellow soldiers stationed in San Antonio landed their biplanes on the flats between Dagger Island and the mainland for a weekend excursion here in 1915.

Their mission was to find a group of women who had driven from San Antonio to the Harbor Inn hotel for a weekend party. One of the women at that weekend party was the woman Eisenhower would marry a year later, Mamie Geneva Doud, according to Charlie Holmes, who was a young boy helping his parents run their hotel during Eisenhower's visit.

Holmes remembers watching in amazement as the pilots flew their Jennies to the flats for the first of what would become a tradition for the next three summers.

Eisenhower had just been commissioned a second lieutenant after graduating from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. His 164-member graduation class later gained fame for producing 59 generals.

For Ike, who ranked 125th in discipline and 61st academically, an impulsive chase to the Coastal Bend in search of the young women was not out of character, Holmes said. And although Eisenhower made only one trip to the hotel, his comrades returned annually for the next three years.

Parties at the Harbor Inn were unlike the parties thrown at hotels today, Holmes said. The only music the soldiers had came from a small, three-tube radio that Holmes had constructed from spare parts.

Because it was one of the few radios in the area, Holmes frequently shared the transmissions with neighbors. And that took some doing.

Holmes would place the radio's speaker next to the telephone and the Aransas Pass operator would connect residents to his line when they wanted to listen in.

"It didn't get too loud, but it was all we had," Holmes said. "We didn't ever have any bands or anything. The parties back then were a lot quieter than they are today."

Apparently, just one party at the Harbor Inn was all that Eisenhower needed to accomplish his mission. He and Mamie, daughter of a successful Denver meat packer, were married on July 1, 1916.

Eisenhower was literally a stone's throw from where Naval Station Ingleside's wharf is under construction, Holmes said.

All that remains of the hotel today is one of two palm trees that had been planted between the inn and the bay. Sun Oil Co. has its dock in front of the tree and towering, cylindrical oil reservoirs behind it. The other palm tree died in a hard freeze in 1925, Holmes said.

The Harbor Inn was built in the 1890s when promoters were advertising the small community of cottages and several multistory hotels as a resort community to rival Atlantic City, N.J., Holmes said.

In its heydey, the inn was a summer resort popular among families from Dallas and Fort Worth. Women and children would spend an entire summer at the hotel and the father would commute on weekends.

"It was like a big family when they were all down there," Holmes said.

The hotel's restaurant was a favorite with bay travelers on the Japonica, a boat that shuttled people between Corpus Christi and Port Aransas, Holmes said. The boat would stop at the Harbor Inn between shuttles to drop off people who wanted to dine there.

At the two-story Harbor Inn, visitors played cards and dominoes in the main-floor lounge and socialized in the lobby, which separated the lounge and the dining area.

The hotel's second floor had bathrooms at each end.

Visitors frequently strolled the covered, second-floor balcony that circled the hotel. At night, they would lean from the balcony's wooden railing and enjoy the breeze whipping off Corpus Christi Bay, Holmes said.

The hotel was perched atop a bluff on the southern tip of Live Oak Peninsula. It was simple in design with white, wood pillars on all sides of the brown, rectangular building.

On the bottom floor was a porch that encircled the building. Wooden stairs led from the porch down the bluff and to an 800-foot fishing pier.

"All the guests would fish off the pier," Holmes said. "They'd bring in what they caught, and we'd cook them up."

Beside the hotel was a golf course. Holmes recalls spending many days diving for golf balls in a pond on the course.

"A lot of times (golfers) would only have one golf ball, so they'd have to wait until I could find the ball so they could continue playing," he said. "Sometimes they'd bring a floating ball, and those were OK by me."

The attractions helped keep the hotel profitable during the time the Holmes family owned it, he said.

His parents sold the Harbor Inn to the Humble Oil Co. in 1924 and bought the Breakers Hotel on Corpus Christi's North Beach. The Breakers is no longer standing.

Holmes' parents quit the hotel business in 1929 when they sold the Breakers, he said.

Holmes moved to the San Fernando Valley in California in 1930 but eventually made his way back to Ingleside in 1960. Today he resides about three miles north of where the Harbor Inn stood.

"I liked the area and my wife liked it, so we've moved here," he said.

Building a better Midland is everybody's business

Diversification is number one goal

Membership open to interested citizens

The Chamber is a business organization, counting among its membership over 1,600 business and professional firms representing a broad cross section of business classifications and economic interests. But the Chamber is also a community organization, and its membership also includes retired persons, not-for-profit organizations, and other individuals interested in their community.

Business members invest in the Chamber's program depending on the type and size of the enterprise, from a base rate of $160 to several thousand dollars annually. Recently, the organization adopted a discounted membership fee structure for non-profit organizations, government employees, educators, and others not actively engaged in a business, beginning at $75 annually.

Membership is open to anyone interested in the future of the community. Members may participate on one or more of 27 volunteer committees dealing with a variety of community issues or projects.

"The Midland Chamber of Commerce is an organization which brings together the time, talent, and energy of hundreds of people and institutions, and focuses those talents on the solutions to community problems. It is the only organization working full-time for the best interests of the entire community. And it's the place where individual citizens, working in cooperation with others, can have an impact on the future of Midland," says Steve Davidson, Chairman of the Board.

Member services designed to inform, network, promote

Around 1,700 members comprise the "people power" of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Chamber members – business and professional men and women and other individuals interested in their community – are the "shareholders" and the principal customers of the organization. They also represent a tremendous volunteer resource, contributing time and services to the community valued at nearly $1 million annually.

Over one third of the Chamber's member-investors in 1988 served an active role on one of the Chamber's 27 committees and task forces, representing the city's largest year-round volunteer effort, unified by the common goal of improving their community.

Members join for a variety of reasons, from a desire to help stimulate economic growth to a sense of civic responsibility, or a need to become involved in their community. For others, it's an opportunity to promote their business and make new contacts. Most find that their annual membership investment pays dividends both directly and indirectly.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce offers a variety of member services designed to inform, to save money, or to promote local products and services. Networking and business contacts are available through "Business After Hours" mixers, membership breakfasts, and social events. A wide variety of publications, market research, and business resources are available free or at discounted prices. Trade shows, directories, and direct referrals to member firms help local businesses promote themselves. Members are kept informed on what's going on in the community through a monthly newsletter, the award-winning Citylife magazine, legislative updates, forums, and committee briefings. For new businesses joining the Chamber, the blue-clad M-Squad rolls out the red carpet with special grand opening and ribbon-cutting ceremonies.

As a special inducement, the Midland Reporter-Telegram is offering free advertising to new members. For more information contact the Membership Department, Midland Chamber of Commerce, 683-3381.

Community improvement a major goal of the Chamber

Economic development and community improvement go hand-in-hand. Having a good product to sell is an integral part of attracting new business, visitors, and new residents to the community, and retaining existing jobs.

"Product development" is the concern of the Community Development Division of the chamber, and various committees are active in 1989 to ensure Midland is the best it can be.

Community Development Vice President Jack Swallow, an indedent oil producer, oversees the work of volunteer committees involved in transportation, education, government affairs, and special projects which benefit the community. Many of these, such as the current efforts to secure additional commercial air service, are directly tied to the economic well-being of the area. Other "quality of life" programs help make the community a better place to live, contributing to the productivity of local business indirectly.

■ Recent projects of the Transportation Committee, chaired by Kyle Womack, include efforts to improve industrial access roads in Midland and recruitment of new airline service. A survey of major employers in December reflected a demand for airline service to Denver, and a special task force has been created to tackle the problem. Presentations have been made to two airlines, and additional contracts have been made to attract a carrier.

■ The Midland Spirit Committee, chaired by Darlene Gifford, raised funds for a bronze sculpture commemorating the rescue of Jessica McClure. The bronze, located at Midland Center, was dedicated on the first anniversary of her heroic rescue.

■ Through the Chamber Foundation, funds were raised to plant trees and beautify the entryways to Midland International Airport.

■ Excellence in education is the aim of the Chamber's Education Committee, chaired by Van Pearcy which recognizes an outstanding local teacher each month and hosts an appreciation event for area educators. The committee also works to encourage business participation in local schools.

■ The Governmental Affairs Committee, headed by Tommy Ortloff, monitors legislative issues affecting Midland and its business community and represents Midland in State, Federal, and Local governmental issues.

Chamber officials have been working to bring additional airlines to Midland International Airport to provide Midland-Denver service.

Visitor industry big business in Midland

Visitors spent over $140 million in Midland County in 1988, generating jobs for over 2,400 citizens. It's an invisible industry that, in the aggregate, has a greater economic impact than Midland's largest manufacturing employer.

It's no wonder then, that the Midland Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors Bureau has mounted an aggressive campaign to bring more visitors to the city. More convention delegates or tourists mean new dollars to the community, which trickle down throughout the local economy.

Norma Funderburk, Convention and Visitors Bureau Director, is convinced that the visitor industry in Midland is poised for growth. With assistants Kim Dyches and Betty Sundy, and over 100 dedicated volunteers, Funderburk has tackled the job of "selling" Midland as a destination with the fervor of an evangelist. And those efforts are paying off with new convention bookings and more leisure travel.

The bureau works closely with area, state, and regional allies to bring visitors to the Permian Basin. Joint initiatives with Odessa have recently proved the value of regional cooperation, such as a combined effort which landed the 1990 Texas Police Olympics, which will bring over 4,000 people and $1.5 million to the two cities. The Midland bureau also invited the participation of the Odessa Chamber in manning its new Visitor Center at Midland International Airport.

"We're excited that Midland and Odessa have shown the two cities can cooperate to land an event that will benefit both, and which neither city could have handled alone," Funderburk said.

A large majority of the conventions solicited by the bureau are fewer than 500 delegates, although larger regional and national groups are also wooed on occasion. The staff conducts extensive research on groups and associations, especially in Texas, which hold meetings of 50 to 2,000. Representatives frequently travel to make bid presentations, and supplement promotional advertising with direct sales contacts.

On the tourism front, the CVB participates in West Texas and statewide coalitions and advertises local attractions in its primary market area. A recent addition is a quarterly Calendar of Events of interest to potential visitors, sent to thousands of tourist centers, media, travel industry representatives, and others. And the bureau maintains contacts with tour brokers and bus tour operators to ensure Midland is included as a stopover in West Texas.

Funderburk estimates that the $150,000 annual operating budget of the bureau, funded by a portion of the lodging tax, returns some $20-$30 million in visitor expenditures to the local economy. That means greater revenues for schools and local government, jobs for the retail and service sectors, and a greater selection of goods and services for Midlanders. And despite intense competition, she believes Midland can increase its market share with a well-planned, aggressive strategy in the future.

Jane Wolf, chairperson of the CVB Advisory Council and one of the area's leading boosters for tourism, has helped the bureau assemble an extensive volunteer support network. Committees are involved in various facets of the program, including tourism, convention recruitment and services, and providing hospitality for visiting delegations.

"We are constantly striving to increase the number of visitors to our area, but we are equally interested in making sure their stay is an enjoyable one. Once they're here and enjoy our great weather, attractions, and wonderful hospitality, they usually want to come back."

Chamber works to stimulate growth

Economic diversification remains the top priority for the Midland Chamber of Commerce in 1989, and the Chamber's expanded program to create new jobs has begun to show results.

Under a new marketing strategy launched in 1988, the Chamber strengthened its efforts in new business recruitment and local business retention, and created new initiatives to build the economy. John Fowler, President of the Chamber, believes those efforts will pay long-term dividends in a stronger, more diversified economy.

Fowler said the community has responded to the problems of local businesses by creating a variety of self-help programs, such as the Chamber's Small Business Development Office, Export Assistance program, and Resource Center, Midland College business development programs, and the Permian Basin Bid Center.

Meanwhile, the organization has stepped up its efforts to attract new industry. Responses to the Chamber's national advertising campaign, targeted direct mail, and sales contacts have increased each quarter as more prospective investors realize that Midland is "open for business."

Among the local advantages touted by the industrial recruitment staff and volunteers are low start-up and operating costs, favorable tax structure, low average utility cost, a productive and educated work force, excellent quality of life, and a generally pro-business attitude.

The staff responds to an average of 80 business and industrial inquiries each month, around 30 of which are potential investors from outside the state. Each inquiry is handled personally and confidentially by a member of the professional economic development staff, headed by Jim Crider. Out of every 100 initial inquiries received, one or two may develop into "prospects" with a serious interest in Midland.

Industrial development is a continuous, long-term process that requires persistence, continuity, and patience, Crider said. A typical manufacturing plant may require two to three years or longer to develop from the initial site search to the announcement stage.

Fowler, also a professional industrial developer, agrees. "A few short years ago, Midland's rapid growth from a booming energy industry make diversification efforts impractical, if not impossible. That's all changed. But as a result, this area has not been consistently in the marketplace with an aggressive program of industrial diversification. We have a lot of ground to make up, but we're gaining rapidly."

During February, over 70 new jobs in primary sectors of the economy were added or announced. The Chamber has set a goal of 700 new industrial jobs per year, which in turn would create an additional 560 jobs in the retail, construction, and service sectors from the multiplier effect.

The attraction program is a public-private partnership, with the City of Midland participating in the cost under a services contract with the Chamber. The Chamber works closely with other economic and business development allies to coordinate programs and avoid duplication. An Economic Development Round Table has been formed to enhance communications among these agencies, including the Bid Center, minority Chambers, Midland College, UTPB, utility companies, city and county governbment.

The Economic Development Division, headed by attorney Gregg Owens, utilizes various committees to identify strategies and carry out certain programs. Currently, volunteer groups are working on such projects as Small Business Incubator, venture capital, Foreign Trade Zone, Enterprise Zone, and programs designed specifically for small business.

"Job growth and economic diversification is everybody's business," Fowler said. "Only by the entire community working together can we achieve our goals. The common thread that runs through all our efforts is a belief in the future of the community, and a desire to make it the best it can be."

Nunn attacked for taking partisan stand on Tower

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Tower and his formidable Washington reputation are under siege in the Senate, but the once-pristine reputation of his principal opponent, Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, has been assailed in the battle as well.

Nunn, hailed for years as a principled, non-partisan, hard-working Democratic chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, is now accused of making a purely partisan grab for power.

"There's a lot more going on here than meets the eye," says Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, who characterizes allegations against Tower of excessive drinking and suspect ties to defense contractors as "total character assassination."

"It's a power struggle," Stevens says. "John Tower's opponents are contending he is not the person to head the Department of Defense rather than admitting they disagree violently with his policies."

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas says Nunn is "obviously" partisan. He has said Republicans intend to examine "the allegation that Sam Nunn has some motive" in his conduct of the Tower affair.

In Nunn's case, what is under attack is the reputation he has built as a highly regarded and respected architect of defense policy who puts U.S. security interests ahead of other considerations.

"It is Sam Nunn's unique qualities of intelligence, thoroughness and thoughtfulness that have, with good reason, made him one of the most respected members — if not the most respected member — of the Senate," Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said last week.

Although many Republicans aim the "power play" charge against Nunn and the Democrats, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., the senior Republican on the Armed Services Committee, walks a middle line.

On the one hand, he implies there are partisan motivations behind the assault on Tower. On the other, he absolves Nunn from complicity.

"It's not a power grab of trying to run the Pentagon from Capitol Hill," he says.

Nunn's Democratic colleagues are — predictably — even more emphatic.

"There has been no power grab by Sam Nunn or anyone else; that's hogwash," said Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., a Tower opponent who opened a counterattack of his own.

"There is no question about the partisan nature of Sen. Dole and his assault on this body," he said.

Nunn says developments have put him in a no-win situation.

"When you agree with them, they say, 'He's a statesman,' " Nunn says. "If you disagree, they say, 'How can he be so partisan?'

"Either I would be a scapegoat because I was taking on a president, or I would be covering up the alleged transgressions of the nominee."

Is he upset by the "power play" accusations?

"That's part of the process," Nunn says. "They've got to find something to throw at me. The only way to handle a situation where you don't have the evidence on your side is to go after the person who is making the case. The effort here is to basically destroy my credibility."

Is he attempting to assert power over the Pentagon, to prevent a strong-willed leader like Tower from taking over?

"Bob Dole knows better than that," Nunn says. "It's preposterous to think that anyone can run the Pentagon from Capitol Hill."

As the battle over the Tower nomination raged in the Senate, The Wall Street Journal reprinted a December 1972 article from The Atlanta Journal reporting that Nunn had pleaded either guilty or no contest in 1964 — when he was 26 — to leaving the scene of an accident.

The article implied Nunn had been drinking at the time and the senator admits it.

"I pled guilty to leaving the scene, paid my fine, apologized to all concerned and, at age 26, learned a valuable lesson which I have not forgotten," he says.

"I don't know that this is relevant ... but I guess when you're in this kind of fight everything is fair game."

NATION in brief

Mushers head into range

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The leaders in the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race headed into the Alaska Range, where they faced tricky, dangerous trails today.

Martin Buser was out front Sunday as a pack of mushers pulled out of Skwentna, about 150 miles into the race, and still in first place pulling in to the Finger Lake checkpoint, 40 miles beyond Skwentna, were some mushers took their 24-hour layover.

Others among the leaders were Guy Blankenship; Joe Reddington Sr., known as the father of the Iditarod; four-time champion Rick Swenson; three-time winner Susan Butcher; and one-time champion Rick Mackey.

The 1,168-mile race began Saturday when 49 mushers left Anchorage amid 46 mph gusts and a wind-chill reading of 22 degrees below zero.

Launch may be delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A problem developed with a rocket separation control system today, threatening a postponement of Saturday's launch of space shuttle Discovery with a crew of five.

NASA spokesman Karl Kristoffersen said the trouble is with a Master Events Controller, one of two such shuttle systems that receive separation commands from the spaceship's main computer. The problem showed up early today during a routine test.

The controllers arm and fire explosive devices that separate the two solid fuel rockets two minutes after liftoff and the external fuel tank when the main engines burn out about 8½ minutes into a flight.

Oil tanker pumped dry

HONOLULU (AP) — The cleanup of a 33,000-gallon offshore oil spill continued Sunday as the 3.7 million gallons of crude oil remaining on a damaged tanker was transferred to a sister ship, officials said.

"That will remove the last serious threat from this thing," said Coast Guard Chief Petty Officer Rick Meidt.

Once the oil is safely aboard the Exxon Yorktown, Exxon Shipping Co. can decide what to do with the 800-foot Exxon Houston.

Community hopes to puncture dreams of tire recycling center

SUN, La. (AP) — Shelby Bush just wants a place to settle down with his 100,000 plus collection of old tires, but residents of this tiny southern Louisiana community don't want him to park them in their town.

"The whole community is against me," Bush said. "But I'm staying right here and fighting for my rights. They ran the Indians off several hundred years ago. But they're not running me off."

Bush, who has collected tires 18 years, began stockpiling them on his property here in November after his Junkyard and Tire Land three miles away was shut down by a court order.

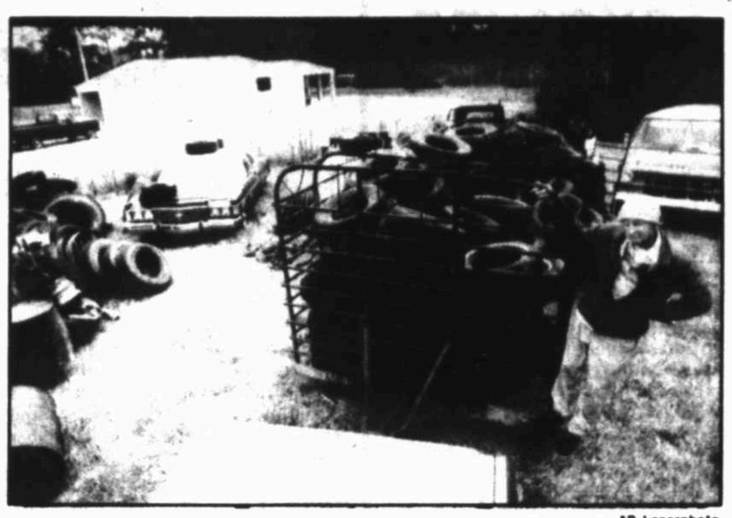

Now, Sun, a village of 500 about 40 miles north of New Orleans, is moving to do the same thing.

Mayor Nathan Wood, using the power of mayor's court, issued a temporary restraining order preventing Bush from accepting more tires within the village limits.

The Rev. Walter Lumpkin, pastor of First Baptist Church of Sun, near Bush's land, said the tires are an eyesore. He said they also create a breeding ground for mosquitoes, a home for vermin, and pose a fire threat.

Bush has 7,000 tires on land he owns in the village. Two tracts of his property wrap around the Sun post office on three sides. It's there that Bush wants to stockpile more tires and begin shredding them for recycling.

Bush has a village occupational license for "a junkyard and tire land." No ordinance specifically outlaws junkyards or tire depots. But Village Attorney William Magee said Sun can use state nuisance codes to block Bush's efforts.

Gumbel welcomed back despite critical comments

NEW YORK (AP) — Jane Pauley welcomed back "Today" co-host Bryant Gumbel today from vacation with a wry "you were never far from out thoughts" and Gumbel promised to discuss his memo criticizing coworkers later.

Two of the memo's targets, Willard Scott and Gene Shalit, weren't around today for an on-air confrontation. It was Gumbel's first day back on the NBC morning program since the memo made the front page of a New York newspaper last week.

As the show opened, Gumbel briefly referred to the flap.

"Good to be back after what should have been a quiet vacation. The fact that it wasn't is something we'll get into a little bit later, but first things first," said Gumbel.

Pauley added, "Welcome back, Bryant, and no, you were never far from our thoughts."

Gumbel's internal memo, written in August, claimed colleagues suffered from everything from bad taste to bad interviewing techniques.

Scott and Shalit are on vacation this week, and Gumbel was on vacation last week. Early in the two-hour show, Gumbel mentioned that he had talked to Scott this morning, but he didn't elaborate.

"Everybody is in good shape. We're anxious for him to come back," said Marty Ryan, "Today" executive producer, before the show began.

"I just think the whole episode has been very unfortunate," Ryan said Friday. "Bryant is very much a victim in this thing. Everybody feels badly. We're very angry at whoever did this to us."

Professor's widow donating papers to university which blacklisted him

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — A professor's widow is donating his scientific papers to the university that fired him in 1953 for refusing to say whether he had been a member of the Communist Party.

Alex B. Novikoff's personal and scientific papers will be presented Tuesday to the University of Vermont where the professor of biochemistry spent five years on the most important cancer research of his career.

"Alex didn't have any animosity about the people of the University of Vermont," said his widow, Dr. Phyllis Novikoff. "Alex never lived in the past. If something happened, you just forget it and go on."

Some are calling it a final act of forgiveness on behalf of the professor, one of many faculty members to be fired during that period in American history when the country was gripped by fear of communism.

Mrs. Novikoff said her husband, who died in 1987 at age 73, would have wanted the papers where he began his most important work, including development of a model for studying cancerous liver tumors.

Mrs. Novikoff, an associate professor at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City where her husband also worked, collaborated with him on many of the later papers.

Tuesday, she will begin delivering shopping bags full of manuscripts, photographs and personal correspondence dating to the early 1940s. Among the material are two films showing Nobel Prize-winning scientists repeating their most important experiments, movies that Novikoff made for the U.S. Army.

"I think the papers belong there," Mrs. Novikoff said.

Connell Gallagher, the university's curator of manuscripts, said Novikoff's scientific papers will shed light on the development of the university's medical school. The personal and political papers also will document the events of the late 1940s and early 1950s, including Novikoff's dismissal.

"These events should be studied by every generation of student so that they can ward against these kind of things happening in the future. That will be the lesson of the manuscripts," said Gallagher.

As in many other cases during the anti-communist hearings of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, many prominent people stood silent when Novikoff was called to Washington to testify before congressional committees.

Midland Soccer Teams Gear Up For New Season

Eric Oldfield, 8, of the Thunderbolts, lines up the soccer ball for a try at a goal.

By Curt Wilcott

In its 12th year in Midland, soccer has proven it is here to stay.

This season approximately 100 teams with players ranging from 4 years of age to 16 years of age are involved in the 1989 Spring soccer season, said Sebrina Smith, spokesperson for the Midland Soccer Association.

"Close to 1,500 kids of all ages are participating this season," said Smith, who coached a soccer team for two years prior to becoming involved with the Midland Soccer Association.

According to Smith, soccer is a "good team sport."

"We don't emphasize the competitive side of soccer," said Smith, "We want the kids to have fun and learn good team skills."

Leland asks Congress to correct inequity, give medal to blacks

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Mickey Leland is asking Congress to "correct an inequity in history" and award the nation's highest military honor to a black mess steward from Texas who shot down two to four Japanese aircraft over Pearl Harbor.

But Congress has only awarded two Medals of Honor in its 200-year history, and the Department of Defense balked at Leland's earlier attempts to single out posthumously two of the 1.5 million blacks who served in World War I and II.

Although ships and buildings have been named after some black World War heroes, according to the research of black historian Leroy Ramsey of Albany, N.Y., no black from either World War has received the Medal of Honor.

Leland is now asking Congress to recognize "extraordinary expressions of valor and patriotism by black people at that time" and recast history by giving Congressional Medals of Honor to Seaman Doris "Dorie" Miller of Waco and Sgt. Henry Johnson of Albany.

Miller, the son of a Texas sharecropper, became the first hero of Pearl Harbor when he dragged his mortally wounded captain to safety and then returned to man a machine gun on the USS West Virginia, shooting down between two and four attacking Japanese aircraft.

Miller was killed in a 1943 torpedo attack, and the Navy christened the USS Miller warship in his honor in 1971.

Johnson was a member of a black infantry unit from New York assigned to a French division when he and another soldier were attacked by 12 Germans during World War I. Using a knife, Johnson repelled the attack, and although wounded by gunshot and a grenade, managed to rescue his comrade. He earned the Croix de Guerre, France's highest military honor, and died in 1930.

Leland says there's no question he has an uphill fight convincing Congress to award the two medals, but hopes President Bush, an adopted Texan, is sympathetic because of Miller's Texas roots.

His bill last year to waive the five-year statute of limitations to allow the medals to be awarded failed because of lack of support from the Pentagon.

"The Army and Navy have expressed concern that awarding the decoration to Johnson and Miller could diminish the award's honor and prestige, and would do a disservice to other servicemen who may qualify for the award," said Leland, a Houston Democrat.

"Johnson and Miller clearly demonstrated a commitment beyond the call of duty. While France has awarded its highest honor to Johnson and the Navy has presented Miller with the Navy Cross, this is not sufficient," Leland said.

Although the Pentagon, with Ramsey's help, is re-examining records from World War I and II to identify possible recipients for the Medal of Honor, Leland said Miller and Johnson are still worthy candidates.

"It's just a matter of us correcting an inequity in history," Leland said.

"I have said all along I did not want it to be a symbolic gesture. I did not want it to be partisan politics. I did not want it to be a civil rights move. I did not want it to be an affirmative action gesture. And I did not want it to be something that was put out there to pacify blacks by bleeding heart liberals," Ramsey said. "I just wanted it to stand on its own merits."

Ramsey, a former associate professor of history at Hofstra University on Long Island, N.Y., said his research shows Congress has only given the Medal of Honor twice — to Charles A. Lindbergh, the first person to fly solo across the Atlantic, on Dec. 14, 1927; and to Maj. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, on March 21, 1935, for decades of service to the Army.

Galveston ready to give students a break

GALVESTON (AP) — Free music, surfing and sand-sculpting contests, tennis and volleyball tournaments are expected to attract hordes of college students to Texas beaches in the coming weeks.

"The out-of-staters are already starting to come in," Lt. Vic Maceo, commander of the Galveston County Sheriff's Beach Patrol, told the Houston Chronicle.

Spring break crowds officially are expected to begin arriving Thursday, with the largest number of Southwest Conference schools adjourning Friday for a week students traditionally spend partying at Texas beaches from Galveston to South Padre Island.

In the Corpus Christi-Port Aransas area, where a beach melee broke out last spring break after a girl was struck by a car, local, state and federal law enforcement officials were meeting Monday to coordinate water and traffic safety efforts.

Area officials say, however, they don't believe "overblown" accounts of beach violence last year will keep the students — or families — away.

Nueces County Commissioner J.P. Luby, whose precinct includes Mustang Island and North Padre Island beaches, estimates 100,000 college students will flock to area beaches this month. Officials expect students to spend between $40 and $50 a day and 70 percent of them to stay in Port Aransas.

Lanette Nolte, manager of the Chamber of Commerce and Tourist Bureau at Port Aransas, said the first signs of spring for her are heralded the blaring boom boxes of students traveling to the island on the ferry.

"I still get a thrill hearing the loud amplifiers going when they (students) get off the ferry. It is an indication that spring has sprung, and I look forward to it," Ms. Nolte said.

In Galveston, organized spring break activities begin Thursday with a five-kilometer fun run. Galveston College will sponsor a tennis tournament the next day.

Saturday, Texas A&M University-Galveston will sponsor a surfing contest. Bands will provide background music for the milling crowds at East Beach, or R.A. Apffel Park, on March 12 and 19, the two Sundays of spring break.

U.S., Soviet arms treaty shakes small town

By DAVE PEGO

KARNACK, Texas (AP) — A couple times a day, the ground quivers, roaring explosions last for minutes and huge balls of smoke rise above the pines. It feels like the world is coming to an end, but it may be quite the opposite.

Since September, officials have been destroying Pershing 2 missiles at the Longhorn Army Ammunition PLant in accordance with a U.S.-Soviet arms treaty, giving a literal twist to Karnack's reputation as a peaceful little town.

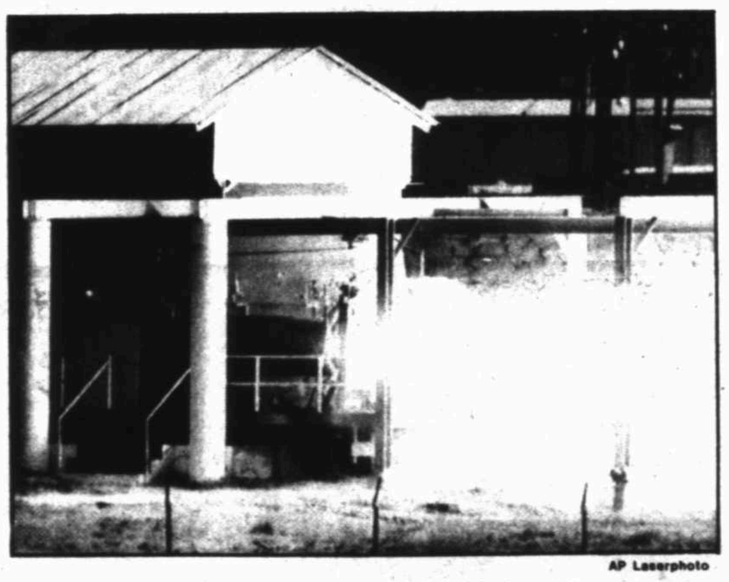

"It will sound like a bunch of damn wind blowing, then a big ball of smoke will rise up from beyond those pines," says Greg Gary, owner of one of the two white wooden service stations on the town square. "It'll boil up in the sky just like the entire world is on fire."

The commotion is practically nothing, though, compared to Sept. 8, 1988 — the day they first destroyed Pershing 2s at Longhorn. Hordes of officials and media folks descended on the town of about 600 to see the first American effort to comply with the Intermediate Nuclear Force treaty signed in December 1987.

"This is a modest first step toward world peace," says Dorothy Grant, a spokeswoman for the ammunition plant. "But I don't think anyone has recognized the magnitude of it except for a few of us who work here."

The World War II-vintage plant is among 11 missile sites, training facilities and industrial plants in the continental United States open to Soviet inspectors during the three-year destruction of medium-range and shorter nuclear missiles. As many as 20 Soviet inspectors are required to watch each time a 9-foot-long missile motor is rendered harmless by firing it, then cutting and crushing its components.

Grant expects the elimination process to continue without much fanfare until the last of 847 Pershing 2 missile motors is destroyed at the armament, munitions and chemical compound owned by contractor Morton Thiokol Inc. The exact date is uncertain because the countries are destroying missiles alternately, and weather can set back the schedule.

A Pershing II rocket motor burns at the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant at Karnack, Texas, under the terms of the INF treaty between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

Aside from the noise and an occasional visit by the Soviets for supplies or a courier for a bag of The Karnack Cafe's pan-sized hamburgers, the process has little effect on Karnack residents, who don't give it much thought.

"I just hope they don't let one get away," says Ann Brazzel, a part-time clerk at Hayner Grocery and Supplies. "I used to work there and I know what that stuff can do. If one gets away, that's the end of all of us."

This has long been known as a peaceful town, and a patriotic one. A year ago, the schoolchildren had their photos taken in front of an American flag and an oversized copy of the U.S. Constitution. On the small town square — actually a tiny triangle — a marker notes Karnack is the home town of Lady Bird Johnson.

The widow of former President Lyndon Johnson helped dedicate a recreation center by the railroad tracks that slice through the center of town.

Only occasionally do residents have any contact with the Soviet inspectors, who stay 30 days and then are replaced by a new observation team. Sometimes one of the vans the Soviets use will pull up at one of the stores in town.

"Some guy will get out and he'll buy 12 to 15 packs of cigarettes," Gary said. "They're always reds — Marlboro reds."

Karnack residents say they have no problem with Soviets in their midst. In fact, says one, many had always wondered what they looked like. One old man who didn't want to give his name said he was surprised that the Soviets he'd seen were all blond; he figured they'd have dark skin and hair.

Gary shakes his head when he's asked if he is wary of the Soviets.

"Nah," he said. "They seem like a bunch of good ol' boys."

Nelson, church unite to aid homeless

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin minister says his congregation wanted to mark its anniversary with a gift to the city, and the idea has blossomed into two fund-raising events that will benefit the homeless.

Singer Willie Nelson, former President Jimmy Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, headline the events, scheduled for April 2.

The Rev. Gerald Mann, pastor of the 3,000-member Riverbend Baptist Church, said 90 percent of the proceeds will be used locally and 10 percent will be used to build homes in foreign countries.

Money will be channeled through Habitat for Humanity, an organization that has spread to more than 300 U.S. cities and more than 25 foreign countries since it started more than 10 years ago, Mann said.

"We chose the solutions offered by Habitat for Humanity because of their attitude that the poor need capital, not charity," Mann said. "It's one of the best ways to help the poor without destroying their dignity in the process. Also, it is a process by which you bring together people from all economic levels to work side by side on the same project."

Habitat for Humanity renovates or builds homes for needy families around the world. Carter is a board member of the organization.

SOCCER

This idea is shared by Barre Simmons, coach of the Thunderbolts, one of the 100 soccer teams participating this season.

According to Simmons, a recent rule change by the United States Youth Soccer Association allows matches for players in the 4-7 year age range be totally non-competitive.

"The new rule takes the pressure off of young players who might worry about winning or losing a match," said Simmons, "and lets them get the benefits of the sport like learning teamwork and self sacrifice for the good of the team."

According to Smith, volunteerism is a big factor in keeping soccer alive in Midland.

"All of our coaches are volunteers who donate their time to work with the kids," said Smith.

She added that the Midland Soccer Association sponsors coaching clinics during the season and that they are always on the lookout for people interested in coaching.

Another factor for soccer's increasing popularity in Midland is the decision by the Midland Independent School District in 1988 to introduce soccer as a high school sport, said Smith.

"Now kids have another athletic option at the high school level besides football and basketball," said Smith.

The spring soccer season runs from February 25th until April 22nd, and additional action is offered in the fall from September to October, said Smith.

Games are played on Saturdays from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. at the soccer fields near Angel Stadium.

DEA drugs ending up on street, paper reports

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal agents conducting risky undercover operations have bent rules and lost control of tons of cocaine and marijuana in an escalating, multibillion-dollar drug war with no victory in sight, the Houston Chronicle reported.

The government's recent focus on seizure of the drug trade's assets has enriched the anti-drug war chest, but also has encouraged overzealousness and sometimes casual regard for rules governing seizures and forfeitures, the newspaper reported in a copyright story Sunday.

And despite enforcement efforts, most smuggling attempts succeed and the war on drugs is, even according to the most optimistic views, only holding its ground.

A two-month Chronicle investigation has revealed that tons of cocaine and marijuana smuggled into the country by operatives of the U.S. Customs Service and the federal Drug Enforcement Administration have ended up on the street because of botched undercover operatives.

Federal officials also have violated departmental policies and possibly federal law by taking shortcuts in the seizure of millions of dollars of personal property suspected of being used in drug-related transactions, the newspaper said.

David Westrate, the DEA assistant administrator of operations, denied his agency conducts its business improperly and said the criminal justice system provides the ultimate in oversight to detect governmental abuse — review by a federal judge and jury.

"I can guarantee that if we were doing things improperly, we would be hearing from the federal judges about it, and we're not," Westrate said. "We have an extremely high conviction rate and extremely high sentences. So I think the record shows that we're being quite successful."

But the Chronicle's investigation found that seizures of drug assets — much touted as a means of gutting high-level drug traffickers — sometimes may have violated federal policy and law.

At a media event in Houston last July, for example, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm presented the Texas Department of Public Safety with a $1.2 million plane seized by U.S. Customs in a drug operation. But the court action required to forfeit the plane wasn't filed until three weeks later. A federal judge awarded the plane to the state in December.

Between 5,000 and 7,000 pounds of marijuana got away from agents and operatives last year in a plot to gain the confidence of reputed Colombian drug lord Bernardo-Londono Quintero. The pot was part of a 26,000-pound shipment DEA operatives brought into the country for Quintero's associate, Saul Hernandez Rivera.

The DEA flew the marijuana to Phoenix, Ariz., in July 1984, but Hernandez became suspicious and refused to send his U.S. contacts to pick it up. The DEA sought other buyers for the marijuana and eventually agreed to sell the dope for $3.2 million to two groups in Michigan. The DEA delivered the pot in August 1984, split it up among the buyers and then moved in to seize it, but lost track of at least 5,000 pounds, agents testified.

The investigation failed to nab either of the original targets. Top federal officials acknowledge that dope occasionally has reached the marketplace as agents and informants assumed the role of drug importers in undercover investigations.

In fact, the DEA agent's manual sets out rules and guidelines for extraordinary circumstances in which drugs may be furnished by DEA or in which known drug shipments may get through without being seized.

Such action requires consultation with a U.S. attorney and a determination that it is necessary to avoid compromising an operation, to protect agents or informants, to prosecute top-level drug traffickers or to interrupt drug traffic.

But when the operations don't go as planned, drugs imported under federal scrutiny sometimes ends up on the streets, usually entering the United States along the Texas-Mexico border.

Heriberto Medrano, a defense attorney specializing in narcotics cases, said federal drug agents and prosecutors fully realize that criminal informants often double-cross their supervising agents and smuggle drugs into the country without authority. The informants are seldom prosecuted, he said, because federal authorities must protect the informants' credibility so they can testify against defendants in cases resulting from the undercover investigations.

Researchers making ill wind blow some good

LUBBOCK (AP) — Tornadoes are the study aid for Texas Tech University engineers who are researching windstorms, architectural designs and construction materials in an effort to strengthen buildings against the powerful storms.

The research runs year-round, but the university scholars are focusing their efforts on one deadly and destructive four-month period in the United States each year: the tornado season that begins in March and continues through June.

At Texas Tech, researchers are studying the effects of every major windstorm to determine the impact on buildings and to search for construction methods that could save lives and reduce damage.

Kishor C. Mehta, director of Texas Tech's Wind Engineering Research Center, said the university has been sending two- and three-person teams to major storms since 1970 to study the damage.

Last year, for example, the Insurance Information Institute reported that Texas' 89 tornadoes caused about $100 million in damage.

"We can learn a lot from documenting the damage itself," Mehta told The Dallas Morning News. "For example, what is the area of the house or building that is most likely to stand up?"

The studies, he said, not only have identified a small, central room as the safest during a storm, they also have led to recommendations for bolstering public buildings to withstand tornadic-strength winds.

Mehta said the construction proposals have been published and circulated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency. They include methods of reinforcing concrete, designs to prevent roof collapses and recommendations to reduce the amount of flying debris that can reach individuals seeking shelter.

"We're continuing to look at the glass on the high-rise buildings," he said. "They're designed for wind pretty well, but they're not always designed to withstand the debris that occurs in the wind storm."

Not only do Texas Tech teams visit disaster sites, they also have constructed a metal test building in a field at the Lubbock campus to study the effects of "thunderstorm-type winds" on the surface and roof.

The 30-by-45-foot structure, which stands 13 feet tall, can be rotated automatically on a circular track so researchers can "study the pressure when the wind is coming from different directions," Mehta said.

He said a 160-foot meteorological tower at the site enables researchers to collect data on wind, barometric pressure and temperature at four different levels.

Funnels often are spawned in violent thunderstorms resulting from the collision of cool, dry Canadian air, flowing east from the Rocky Mountains, and warm, moist air, moving north from the Gulf of Mexico.

"As we learn more and as we translate that into usage by architects and engineers," Mehta said, "they'll be able to construct buildings that are safer for people, that sustain less damage and that will be more economical."

Clements wants Landry as state's anti-drug czar

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry could be the new anti-drug czar of Texas, if Gov. Bill Clements has his way.

Clements reportedly is pursuing Landry for a newly created, senior administration job to coordinate the state's anti-drug efforts through all state agencies dealing with drug problems.

"Governor Clements has a long-time friendship with Tom Landry," Clements' top aide, Reggie Bashur, told the Dallas Times Herald Sunday. "The governor has tremendous respect for the coach, and he has said that he would like to talk with coach Landry and see what type of public service activity he might want to be involved in."

"Right now, it's in the very preliminary discussion," Bashur told The Associated Press.

Landry, 64, who was released from the Cowboys last month after 29 years as its only coach, is vacationing in Palm Springs, Calif., until the end of March and was not available for comment.

"Texas spends about $50 million on anti-drug efforts, which are dispersed throughout a number of agencies," Bashur told The Associated Press. "Coach Landry, as a drug czar, would become the leading spokesman in term of the education and informational programs and would help in terms of coordination."

umbrella — (noun) "Umbrella" can be traced to the Italian word "ombrella" meaning "little shade." In America we most commonly use an "umbrella" to protect us from the rain; however, in countries with warmer climates such as Italy, ladies originally used them to protect their skin from the hot and harmful rays of the sun. In England, where it often rains, an "umbrella" is an item that the English carry wherever they go. However, the English often call an "umbrella" by the slang term, "bumbershoot" — a combination of "umber" from "umbrella" and shoot from the "chute" of a parachute.

Protesters for Tibetan independence killed in rioting

BEIJING (AP) — Police opened fire today on Tibetan pro-independence protesters and reportedly killed at least four in the second day of violence in the Tibetan capital, foreign travelers said.

The reports from Lhasa were not immediately confirmed by official media, which reported 11 people killed in street clashes in the Tibetan capital Sunday.

Police stationed on rooftops in Lhasa's main square fired down into crowds of Tibetans at about 5 p.m., a traveler from New Orleans said in a telephone interview.

He said he arrived on the scene shortly after the shooting and was told by Tibetans that at least two people were killed.

A second American, also speaking on condition of anonymity for fear of police reprisal, said he saw police open fire several hours later on about 40 Tibetans who were marching toward the main square.

He said he did not see marchers fall, but said Tibetans told him two were killed.

China's official Xinhua News Agency said earlier that one policeman and 10 Tibetans were killed Sunday in clashes in Lhasa, while 40 police and more than 60 Tibetans were injured.

Another American said many Tibetans reported Sunday's death toll was closer to 30, but there was no way to confirm that.

Foreign travelers in Lhasa said police showed restraint throughout most of today as thousands of Tibetans marched through the streets chanting pro-independence slogans and hurling goods looted from Chinese-owned stores onto bonfires.

The clashes were the fourth time in 18 months that tensions have boiled over between Tibetans and Chinese, who rule the remote southern region.

At least 40 were killed in the earlier clashes, including 24 who died one year ago during a daylong battle.

Sunday's protest was begun by Buddhist monks and nuns who apparently were marking that anniversary.

Protesters today stoned any Chinese who tried to bicycle through the area and dragged some from their bikes, the witnesses said.

A second American said he saw a policeman dragged from his bike and chased down the street at knifepoint.

"The streets are thick with people. There's lots of whooping and shouting and throwing stones. There's no control whatever," said an Australian. He said the protesters set up barricades with tables and garbage cans on some streets.

Tibet remains largely closed to journalists and the only independent reports came from travelers, many of whom who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of police reprisals.

Xinhua said Sunday's violence began at noon when 13 monks and nuns paraded illegally through the Barkhor, the city's central market and location of its main temple, the Jokhang. They waved banners and shouted "Independence for Tibet," the report said.

They were joined by several hundred people, who stoned a nearby police station.

A Swedish traveler, who gave his name only as Pontus, said he ran to the roof of the Jokhang Temple for a better view.

"There were six people to the left of us taking pictures of the crowd... Then they dropped their cameras and started firing with hand guns into the crowd," Pontus said. He said no warning was given.

He said he and four companions, some of whom took pictures of the shooting, later had their cameras and passports confiscated.

At about 3 p.m., a group of Tibetan youths carrying the banned pre-Communist Tibetan flag began marching on a major street north of the Barkhor, said travelers who watched from a hotel on the street.

Hundreds of Tibetans joined them, but police moved in quickly firing tear gas and bullets, the travelers said. Skirmishes lasted until after nightfall, they said.

Xinhua said the protesters fired at police, and that police "were forced to fire as no other means could stop the rioters." It did not make clear which side began shooting first.

However, none of the nearly one dozen travelers interviewed reported seeing Tibetans with guns.

"Old people were picking up stones to give to the young people to throw," said one of the Americans.

China claims its sovereignty over Tibet dates to the 13th century.

WORLD

However, many Tibetans dispute the claim and demand independence under their former spiritual and temporal leader, the Dalai Lama. He fled to exile in India during a failed uprising in 1959, nine years after the region came under communist control.

Violators of Philippine smoking ban arrested

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Police in suburban Quezon City said today that they had already hauled into jail about 300 violators of a tough anti-smoking law that took effect a day earlier.

Those arrested were locked in holding cells until charges could be prepared against them. After a few hours, they were released pending trial.

The dragnet snagged unwitting violators as well.

One 19-year-old youth arrived today at the police station, puffing on a cigarette, carrying food for a friend arrested earlier for unauthorized smoking.

The teen-ager was thrown into the cell with his friend after police explained the smoking ban applies in police stations too.

The new ordinance bans smoking in most public places, including buses, restaurants, government offices, hospitals and theaters in the city of about 1 million, part of metropolitan Manila.

Violators who smoke in public places that are not designated for smoking face a $10 fine, 10 days in jail, or both.

"No complaints so far," said Col. Rodolfo Garcia, police station commander and a reformed smoker, speaking about the crackdown. "The people (of the city) are even pleased because we are protecting them."

City officials said they will put up signs along municipal boundaries warning people they are entering "a non-smoking city."

Vendors selling cigarettes to drivers and passengers of jeeps, the most common means of public transport, warned their customers to stash the cigarettes if their vehicles enter Quezon City.

But several people complained that they were unaware of the ban until they were hauled off public transportation or detained in public buildings.

"I just arrived from Cebu City, and I did not know that there was an anti-smoking ordinance here in Quezon City," salesman Cesario Ong said.

He was among 13 people arrested Sunday during spot checks of passenger jeeps along the city's Aurora Boulevard.

The ordinance is part of a larger anti-smoking campaign which Quezon City officials say will include a $10,000 media campaign against cigarettes.

Sajak surprised how easily his 'wheels of fortune' turning

By ANN HODGES
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Pat Sajak is surprised at how easily he's settled into the late night talk show circuit.

Sajak

"CBS is smiling, and we're doing TV shows every night, and I'm having a ball," he says. "There's a comfort level that I didn't expect. I'm pleased with it."

It has been a smooth transition for the king of game shows into this new CBS role opposite NBC's Johnny Carson, king of nighttime talk. The Pat Sajak Show airs at 11 p.m. weeknights.

There have been no unexpected problems. Guests are already calling him, asking to come on. The audience is full house, and they laugh in the right places. And the numbers, while hardly an avalanche to topple Carson from the throne, are respectable enough to please his network bosses.

"That's the nicest thing about our success," Sajak says. "It hasn't come at the expense of anyone else's late night show. Their numbers have stayed about the same, and our viewers seem to be coming from somewhere else."

All things considered, then, he's happy as a clam.

"Everything is on course, and everything feels good," Sajak says. "I'm not smug about it, but I do think that overall, if you were to sit me down and say what do you want to do on this show, I'd say this is it.

"We are in this for the long haul, you know. And very quickly, we have established ourselves as a viable, incredible alternative late night show. I guess I am proud of that.

"I would like to think that down the line we'll look at these early shows and be able to say to ourselves, 'Well, gee, look how we've changed since then.' But nothing I've seen on the air so far makes me say 'Gee, we need to work on this.'"

He's had no trouble at all being the interviewer instead of the interviewee, although some actor guests do freeze when they're out on their own, without a writer's script. "That has happened," he says. "Don't ask me to name names, but when it happens, you just work harder."

He's still hoping to find his own small company of quirky regulars. That's something that worked for Jack Paar, and Paar is one of his mentors in the TV talk business.

"It takes a while to find the right people," he says. "I've had Edwin Newman back a few times, because I enjoyed talking with him. And the other night, I was charmed by Garry Marshall (producer of TV hits going back to "Happy Days" and "Laverne & Shirley"). I told him that anytime he's driving by, he's welcome to poke his head in."

Some nights his conversational couch does get a little crowded, he admits. But he likes his guests to stick around for the whole show. "I think it adds a lot to have them there," he says.

Sajak has plenty to say about who the staff books as guests. And it doesn't bother him if they're there to plug something. "A lot of them are, and you see them on all the shows, and we have no problem with that, either," he says.

"We do also have some people out in other parts of the country, trying to find new people for us, though. They've been checking some of the local stations, for example."

Sajak still does the morning edition of "Wheel of Fortune," the show that spun him into late-night stardom.

"I do it on weekends," he says. "We tape five on Saturday and five on Sunday, and even though it's not anything like doing a talk show, I don't think my performance on 'Wheel' has suffered."

He recently hosted Vanna White's new "Wheel" partner, Rolf Benirschke, on his talk show. Sajak even made him look good.

"We had a little chat before he started on 'Wheel,'" Sajak says. "My only advice to him was don't think about replacing me or anybody else. Just be yourself. When he came on the show, I kidded him about all those crazy stories in the tabloids saying Vanna's in love with him. We had a lot of fun with that."

To hear him tell it, Sajak's having fun with everything these days.

One-time rodeo cowboy molds career as a sculptor

By LOIS LUECKE

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Cowpoke artist Jack Stevens talks like the range cowboy he used to be, although he dreams the dreams of a Michelangelo.

But if anyone had told the noted Western sculptor 10 years ago that he would be doing a bicycle sculpture, "I would have laughed in his face," Stevens said.

That was before Stevens was caught up in the Hotter'N Hell Hundred, Wichita Falls' largest single tourist attraction, that draws thousands of bike riders to the city and its outskirts.

Those outskirts include the area around Kamay, Texas, in western Wichita County, where Stevens works in a shop behind his home. Seeing the bike riders, including his daughter-in-law, Judy Stevens, pedaling along the rural byways inspired Stevens to do a desk model sculpture of the grass-roots event.

Now a committee from the Wichita Falls Bicycle Club that directs the bike ride has bought Stevens' desk model and is planning a larger-than-life statue.

"The life-size one to me will be much easier to cast than the small one. That was so small I couldn't put the spokes in the wheels," said Stevens, a stickler for detail.

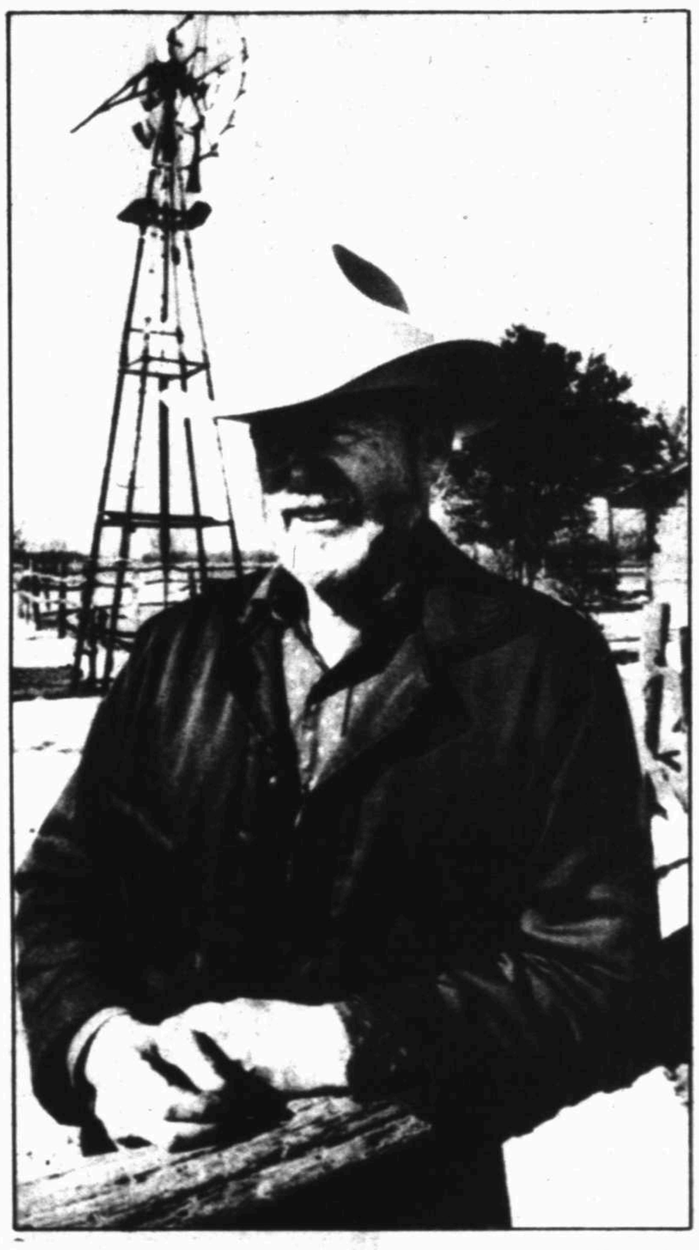

Just as he prepares ahead of time before he starts to work on all his other sculptures, Stevens did research on bicycles, bicycling and the Hotter'N Hell Hundred befored he finished the desk model.

He visited a bicycle shop and watched a video on the Hotter'N Hell ride. At the shop, he studied brake systems, and the tape, he said, showed him different styles of bicycles helmets and shoes.

Stevens figures it will take him eight months to do a statue. "I would try to have it by August," the month of the Hotter'N Hell Hundred, said Stevens.

Stevens' bicycle sculpture shows six bicycle riders, including one with a child in a special carrier seat. One of the riders has pulled out of the ride to fix a flat.

Using the lost wax method of casting, Stevens did the figures in wax, made the molds and then cooked them. The wax melted and flowed out. Stevens them poured the bronze, heated as high as 2,100 to 2,300 degrees Fahrenheit, into the molds.

Cowboy artist Jack Stevens poses recently outside his sculptors studio in Kamay, Texas. Stevens makes his models in lost wax, before casting in bronze.

"We cast those wax figures in separate pieces and them after I poured the bronze in, I broke them out of the molds and welded them together," he said.

Movies create tap dance renaissance

NEW YORK (AP) — In the jazz age, tap was queen to jazz's king, and then the unique dance form quietly slipped away.

But it's back now, in sizzling staccato style, the pounding rush of rhythmic feet — the energy and excitement of tap.

Tap dancing is big, as evidenced by the new movie, "Tap," the Broadway show "Black and Blue" and the rash of tap festivals around the nation.

"Tap" is the first non-documentary movie about tap dancing in decades. It stars Gregory Hines, tap's most visible practitioner and booster, who also tapped in the 1985 movie, "White Nights" with ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov.

"Black and Blue," a revue featuring tap dance, opened on Broadway in January with three singers and 24 dancers. Five are veteran hoofers, the eldest 79. There also is a trio of youngsters, including the wunderkind Savion Glover, who also co-stars in "Tap."

Last year tap festivals were held in Boulder, Colo., Boston and San Francisco, and more are scheduled for later this year in Portland, Ore., Houston and Washington. There's also been a resurgence in tap dance classes, which actively are competing with aerobics and dance-exercise classes for students.

In January, the Jazz Tap Ensemble performed Morton Gould's "Tap Dance Concerto" with the Minnesota Orchestra.

And if House Joint Resolution 662 passes, then May 25 will be National Tap Dance Day. It marks the anniversary of the 111th birthday of one of the greatest tappers of all time, Bill "Bojangles" Robinson.

The Four Step Brothers were given a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame last July, and the Young Step Brothers from St. Louis did some flashy dancing to celebrate it. Honi Coles won the Capezio Dance Award in 1988, a first for a tapper. And on March 17, PBS' "Great Performances: Dance in America" will present an hour devoted to tap dancing — another first.

Sammy Davis Jr. and the 71-year-old Sandman Sims co-star in "Tap" along with some other wonderful old-timers who recall vaudeville, the Cotton Club, 1940s Hollywood musicals and Broadway before ballet choreographers moved in and changed show dancing. They also remembered popular music before the big bands faded and rock and disco became too loud to hear the tapping of talented shoes. But "Tap" isn't nostalgia. Its storyline promotes one of Hines' pet contentions, that tap dancing can be an exciting, up-to-date art form. He taps to the music — and city sounds — of today.

"I can't fulfill all the work they give me. They all know me in Harlem. I can't walk out on the street without somebody showing me a time step," says Sims.

There's a difference between tap dancers and hoofers, he said. The Copasetics — a slang word once used to mean A-OK — seen in "The Cotton Club" movie, were tappers, using heel and toe. Hoofers use the whole foot and take their sounds from what they hear around them, as Hines' character does in "Tap."

"I told Gregory, 'At the end of this movie, people will know the truth,'" Sims said.

He remembers growing up in the desert near the California-Mexico border and dancing on sand. When he went to New York he got a box and made his sound and reputation dancing in sand. It wasn't salt, as some have said: "Salt's too sticky. You can't get your feet to move in salt."

When he was 14, he hungered to dance, but had no money and spent most of his time peeping in the windows of a Los Angeles tap school.

"I got put in jail," Sims said. "I had to go to court to get loose. This is a true story. I told the judge I wasn't loitering. I like to see how they dance because I try to be a buck dancer. He told them to clear the chairs and desks away and to let him see what I did. I danced a little bit and he said, 'Case dismissed!'"

Soon after, Sims moved to New York. "If I saw a dancer, I'd challenge him. I didn't care who it was. The way to get known in New York was to be the best. That's what I strived to be. It has kept me going."

Sims was part of the rhythm section of Lionel Hampton's band for nearly 15 years, and he recently performed in 53 countries in 11 months for the U.S. State Department.

Harold Nicholas started as a child at the Cotton Club with his older brother, Fayard, who played hooky from school and learned steps from vaudeville. Harold is in "Tap," and proves he can still do a split. Fayard choreographed one number in "Black and Blue."

When the brothers appeared in Hollywood movies in the '40s, choreographer Nick Castle thought up "mad tricks" for the pair to do, Harold said. Nick Castle Jr. wrote and directed "Tap."

Most of the tappers had to take other jobs during the lean years, said Henry Le Tang, 73, who choreographed "Tap" and most of "Black and Blue." Honi Coles weathered those years working at the Apollo Theater. Harold Nicholas spent the '50s working in Europe. Le Tang, who always loved to teach, opened a tap school when he was 20.

"Tap was my love," Le Tang said. When its popularity waned, he choreographed nightclub acts and, for seven years, TV's "The Gary Moore Show."

Fifteen-year-old Savion Glover, a tap prodigy as were the Nicholas Brothers, Donald O'Connor and Mickey Rooney, absorbs every style of tap, Le Tang said.

"The older dancers call him 'the little sponge,'" hs said. "As he keeps getting more spectacular, his own style will start to come out. It is beginning to happen and will continue to happen."

Parents pushed students to do well and many served as strong role models for their children.

Richard Watkins' family had high expectations of their children's performance. His grandfather had sent nine children to college.

Williams says he had developed a strong belief in himself from his father, a self-employed farmer who during the Depression was responsible for seven other families "using his teams and tools for farming on share."

Army officials question solider who disappeared

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — U.S. military officials questioned an American soldier Sunday whose 11-day disappearance led to speculation he had defected to communist East Germany.

The officials refused to say what may have prompted the absence of Spec. 4 Michael A. Peri, who they say had access to classified information. They said he returned a portable computer that was missing from the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment intelligence office where he worked.

Peri, 21, of Laguna Niguel, Calif., "returned voluntarily to his unit" about 5 p.m. Saturday, according to Lt. Col. Dennis Gauci, a spokesman for the U.S. European Command headquarters in Stuttgart.

Gauci said Peri was in military police custody in Fulda, 65 miles northeast of Frankfurt.

Peri made no statement about where he had been, said Lt. Col. Jake Dye, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's 5th Corps in Frankfurt. "He (Peri) is being questioned. He has been given legal counsel," Dye said.

Dye said Peri returned to his unit in civilian clothes and appeared to be in good health. Peri disappeared Feb. 21 from the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment in Fulda.

The disappearance baffled military officials, and speculation on his absence ranged from possible foul play to defection to East Germany.

Some officials speculated he had defected after a military vehicle he signed out was found Feb. 23 near the town of Obersuhl, at the East German border. Obersuhl is in a remote rural area 35 miles northeast of Fulda.

U.S. officials said Peri had an excellent record as a soldier, and they did not rule out foul play or illness as the reason for his absence.

Peri worked as an electronics warfare signal specialist. He was responsible for operating equipment that detects enemy radar and other signals. He has been stationed in West Germany since March 1988.

Gauci said Peri's relatives in California had been notified of his return.

In March 1987, U.S. Army Pvt. Wade E. Roberts, 22, of Riverside, Calif., defected with his West German girlfriend to the Soviet Union. Roberts returned to the United States in November 1987 and was court-martialed as a deserter.

He was given a bad conduct discharge after being found guilty of a lesser charge of being absent without leave.

188 Sikh prisoners to be freed

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A judge today ordered the release of 188 Sikhs jailed in a northern city since a 1984 army raid on the holiest Sikh shrine during which 1,200 people were killed, a senior government official said.

Among those to be freed is Gurcharan Singh Tohra, head of the Sikh temple management committee. The body, which controls most Sikh shrines and temple funds, is considered the most powerful Sikh organization.

The prisoners' release is part of a package announced last week by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to try to end ethnic violence that has wracked the northwestern state of Punjab for seven years.

Militants are fighting for an independent homeland.

In June 1984, then Prime Minister Indira Gandhi ordered the army to raid the Golden Temple in Amritsar to rout Sikh militants inside.

Four months later, she was assassinated by two Sikh bodyguards in retaliation for the raid.

Most of those killed in the raise were Sikhs and authorities arrested about 300 people, many of them pilgrims held for questioning but never charged.

Jodhpur District Judge Khemchandra Sharma, acting on a request by prosecutors, today ordered the release of 188 of the prisoners jailed in Jodhpur, said a Home Ministry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Ex-Hungarian party chief will not attend meeting

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Janos Kadar, who headed the ruling Communist Party for 32 years until his ouster last year, will not attend Tuesday's meeting of the party's governing Central Committee, a newspaper reported.

Vasarnapi Hirek (Sunday News) quoted party spokesman Laszlo Major as saying Kadar would not attend because he has not fully recovered from hand surgery — but there is speculation he may be staying away for other than health reasons.

The 76-year-old Kadar, who now holds the newly created post of party president, also missed the committee's last meeting.

In the last years of Kadar's rule, Hungary's economy fell into decline and independent groups agitating for multiparty democracy began to gain wide influence.

Reformers who advocate allowing opposition candidates to compete in elections have now obtained a foothold in the heights of the Communist Party.

The reformers include politicians thrown out of the leadership when Kadar was installed as party chief in 1956, the year Soviet tanks quashed the Hungarian uprising.

English-language film wins

OUAGADOUGOU, Burkina Faso (AP) — An English-language movie won the grand prize in the Pan African Film Festival for the first time in the event's 20-year history.

The filmmaker called on African governments to do more for the medium.

The film, "Heritage of Africa" was made by Ghanaian Kwah Ansah and recounts the story of a Ghanaian civil servant who discovers while moving up in the administrative system the British set in place in Ghana that he has lost all cultural bearings.

Previous winners of the film prize have been in African languages or French.

The prize, awarded Saturday night, includes about $13,000, twice that given to the 1987 winner. The film also won the Organization of African Unity prize.

Ansah said he will use the money to pay bills incurred in making the film, and added that it would be his last. "It is about time African governments saw the importance of filmmaking and try to help filmmakers."

Avalanche kills skiier

AOSTA, Italy (AP) — Four Austrian tourists were swept away by an avalanche as they were skiing Sunday in northern Italy, and one of them was killed, civil defense officials said.

Two skiiers managed to free themselves from the snow and another was rescued by Alpine guides who rushed to the scene in the Aosta Valley in a helicopter, the officials said.

The Italian news agency ANSA identified the dead man as Karl Schmeikal, 50, of Salzburg, Austria. He was skiing with his wife Hilde and two friends when the avalanche occurred near La Thuile, at an altitude of about 6,000 feet, ANSA said.

Mrs. Schmeikal and the two other members of the group trapped in the avalanche were not injured, civil defense officials said.

Hungary to allow reporter

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — A correspondent for the U.S. government-funded Radio Free Europe broadcast network will be permitted to work in Hungary without any restrictions, Hungarian radio reported.

That would make Hungary the first Soviet bloc country to accredit an RFE reporter. Two years ago, only journalists from East European countries were allowed as permanent correspondents based in Budapest.

RFE, headquartered in Munich, West Germany, broadcasts in all east European languages and has frequently been the target of strong attacks by Soviet bloc governments and newspapers.

Sooners Red: Blaylock busted for drunkeness

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — University of Oklahoma athletic officials haven't decided what action to take following guard Mookie Blaylock's arrest early Sunday for alleged public intoxication.

"We're in the process of determining the facts, and at this point we have not been able to do that," Athletic Director Donnie said Sunday. "I think we'll be able to reach a decision sometime in the morning (today)."

Blaylock, a starting guard on the nation's fourth-ranked basketball team, was arrested shortly after 4 a.m. Sunday and booked into the Cleveland County jail on a municipal public drunkness complaint, said police Sgt. Olan Nystrom.

Nystrom said Blaylock, 21, was released on bond and is expected to appear next week in municipal court.

Police said Cathy Patterson, 24, of Arlington, Texas, identified as Blaylock's companion, also was arrested on the same complaint and released after posting bond.

A convenience store employee called police to the store because Blaylock was arguing with a female companion, Nystrom said.

"He displayed the characteristics of an intoxicated person," Nystrom said. "He was arrested for public intoxication."

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said he was "aware of the situation involving Mookie and we are currently talking with everyone involved to make sure that all the facts have been checked out."

"After we are sure of everything then I will meet with Donnie Duncan and make the proper decision," Tubbs said in a statement released through the Oklahoma sports information office. "Most of all we want this to be handled fairly and not blown out of proportion by others who are not involved."

Duncan said he would "have to get the facts before I can comment on a speculative situation" when asked how the arrest would affect Blaylock's status on the team.

"Billy and I have talked. What we're trying to do is get all the information," Duncan said. "We have not reached a decision or discussed a decision that would affect Mookie and the team."

Blaylock' arrest came hours after fourth-ranked Oklahoma completed its regular season with a 103-76 home victory over Nebraska Saturday evening.

Blaylock, averaging 21 points a game, is Oklahoma's second leading scorer. He also has 208 assists and 117 steals, making him the only player in NCAA history to record 200 assists and 100 steals in consecutive seasons.

Blaylock, widely regarded as one of the top guards in the country, is a finalist for the Associated Press' college basketball player of the year award. He is expected to be a first-round draft choice in the NBA later this year.

Hoosiers, Tar Heels upset

Associated Press

For Indiana and North Carolina, a conference title is an elusive thing.

Both the third-ranked Hoosiers and the fifth-ranked Tar Heels had chances for championships Sunday and lost them.

North Carolina dropped an 88-86 decision to No. 9 Duke that gave North Carolina State the regular-season title in the Atlantic Coast Conference and left the Tar Heels and Blue Devils in a tie for second going into the ACC tournament starting next Friday.

Indiana, meanwhile, lost a chance to clinch the Big Ten title when Nick Anderson hit a desperation 3-pointer at the buzzer to give eighth-ranked Illinois a 70-67 victory.

The Hoosiers, who lead Illinois by two games, can still win the title by beating either Wisconsin at home Thursday or Iowa on the road next weekend. They can also clinch if the Illini lose one of their two.

The Duke-North Carolina and Illinois-Indiana games were two of three Sunday involving six of the nation's top ten teams. In the other, sixth-ranked Syracuse beat No. 2 Georgetown 82-76 in overtime.

Also Sunday, 12th-ranked Seton Hall routed Brooklyn College 88-55, No. 15 West Virginia downed St. Joseph's 79-59 and No. 18 Nevada-Las Vegas edged New Mexico State 75-73. East Tennessee State won the Southern Conference tournament and gained a berth in the NCAA tournament with a 96-73 victory over Marshall.

The North Carolina-Duke game was as much a boost for Duke as it was a downer for the Tar Heels.

"We haven't been in a lot of close games that we've won this year," said Quin Snyder, who hit two straight 3-pointers to spark the Blue Devils on a run that brought them back from a 70-60 second-half deficit. "We need that going into the tournament."

The game left the two teams at 9-5 in the final regular-season ACC standings, a game behind 10-4 North Carolina State. North Carolina is 24-7 overall; Duke is 22-6.

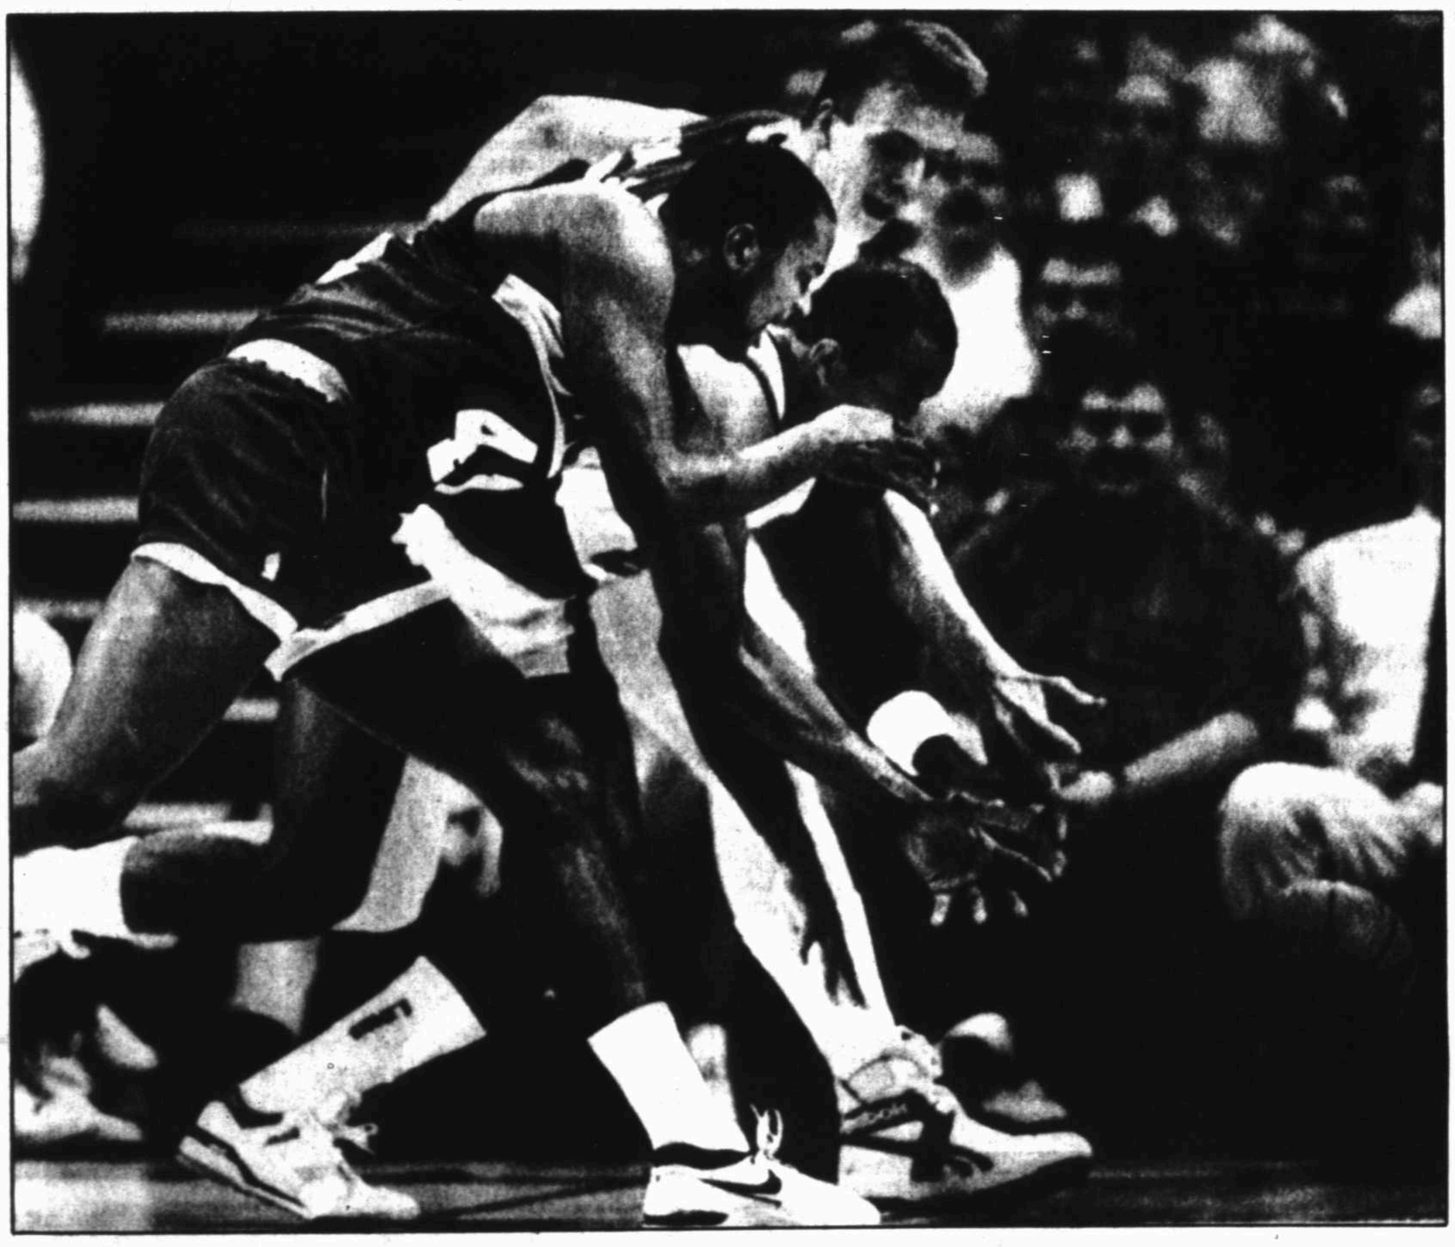

Illinois, 25-4 and 12-4 in the league, rallied from a 47-34 deficit in the second half to beat Indiana.

The Hoosiers, 24-6 and 14-2, managed to hold the lead until Stephen Bardo hit a 3-pointer for Illinois for a 67-65 edge with 1:38 left. Jay Edwards' fallaway jumper with three seconds left seemed to have sent the game into overtime but then came the heroics by Anderson, who led the Illini with 23 points.

On Saturday, Robert Morris and South Carolina State earned automatic berths in the NCAA tournament by winning their conference's postseason championships. Princeton also advanced to the NCAA tournament by winning the title in the Ivy League, one of two Division I conferences without a postseason tournament.

In Top Twenty games, it was top-ranked Arizona 89, UCLA 86; No. 4 Oklahoma 103, Nebraska 76; No. 7 Missouri 66, Colorado 65; No. 10 Michigan 119, No. 11 Iowa 96; No. 14 Louisville 87, Notre Dame 77; No. 16 Florida State 81, Southern Mississippi 78; No. 17 St. Mary's 86, Portland 48, No. 19 Ball State 92, Western Michigan 79, and No. 20 North Carolina State 110, Wake Forest 103 in the first

Mancini, Camacho duke it out

By TIM DAHLBERG

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Ray Mancini and Hector Camacho, who were supposed to fight nearly five years ago when both were in their prime, finally get their chance Monday night in a lucrative 140-pound bout.

Mancini ends four years of retirement to fight the unbeaten Camacho, a longtime irritant who provided Mancini with the excuse he needed to return to the ring.

"I had a lot of other offers to come back, but this was the only guy I really wanted," said the 28-year-old Mancini. "I just don't dig this guy at all."

Both Boom Boom and the Macho Man stand to make nearly $1 million apiece for the scheduled 12-round bout, which will draw a sellout crowd of more than 11,000 to Reno's Lawlor Events Center.

The fight, which will be televised on pay-per-view to some areas of the country, is expected to begin about 7:30 p.m. PST.

The fighters agreed to an unusual 2:30 a.m. weigh-in on Monday after both camps battled over the weigh-in time. Camacho's camp had wanted a Sunday night weigh-in, while Mancini's camp wanted an 8 a.m. Monday weigh-in.

Camacho is a 3-1 favorite in a bout being promoted as the "grudge match" of the fight that never took place when the former lightweight champions were at their peak.

"He should have stayed retired," said Camacho, unbeaten at 34-0. "I guarantee you, I'm going to smash his brains in."

Mancini returns to the site of his last bout — a bloody beating at the hands of Livingstone Bramble that prompted his retirement — to see if he can overcome ring rust and bring back enough of his old brawling skills to beat the flashy Camacho.

If Mancini needs any extra incentive, Camacho willingly provides it with his mouth.

"He's a has-been, a never-was," said Camacho. "Even when he was something he couldn't beat me. Who does he think he is trying to beat me without even having a comeback fight?."

Both fighters claim genuine dislike for each other, bad blood that goes back to the days when Camacho would show up at Mancini's post-fight press conferences to taunt him into signing for a fight.

"His whole life is a charade," said Mancini, who has pursued an acting career with only spotty success since retiring. "I don't think he does dignity to the sport, he's not a good role model."

"He thinks he's the All-American boy or something," replied Camacho. "I would never want to be Mancini, he thinks he's too goody-goody. I don't want to be good, I want to be bad."

Many think the fight itself will be bad, matching a rusty Mancini against an erratic Camacho who himself has fought infrequently in the last three years.

"I'm sharper than ever," insists Camacho, who was 162 pounds in early January before beginning his most rigorous training sessions in recent years. "It's because I'm motivated by him and I want to do it."

Mancini, who retired at the age of 23 with a 29-3 record and two straight losses, has trained more than two months for the fight, including lengthy sparring sessions in an effort to get his ring skills back.

New Miami coach may prove to be unpopular

By STEVEN WINE

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — The choice of Dennis Erickson as Miami's football coach will cause a "pretty violent reaction" from players and fans who wanted Hurricanes assistant Gary Stevens to get the job, a Miami assistant coach said.

Erickson, head coach at Washington State the past two years, on Sunday accepted the job of succeeding Jimmy Johnson. Athletic Director Sam Jankovich chose Erickson over Stevens, the only other candidate known to have interviewed for the post.

"There's a lot of ... animosity and bitterness toward the decision," Miami assistant Art Kehoe said. "In all the years I've been around here, I've never seen such unanimous public support for a guy as for Gary."

Players, boosters, fraternities, the media, two NFL quarterbacks and coaches at other schools had urged Jankovich to hire Stevens. Quarterback Steve Walsh even said he would turn pro rather than return to the Hurricanes this fall if Stevens was not named head coach.

Jankovich met with the team for 15 minutes Sunday to explain his decision, Kehoe said.

"He said the bottom line is he wanted a guy that has already been a head coach," Kehoe said. "He wanted a guy that had dealt with the media every day and had handled the academics and the recruiting."

Erickson, who has a 50-31-1 record in seven years of college coaching, said the job was the opportunity of a lifetime.

"Miami is one of the top programs in the country, and that's the main reason I accepted — to have a chance to compete for the national championship."

Miami won the national title in 1987 under Johnson, who became head coach of the Dallas Cowboys on Feb. 25.

Jankovich said Erickson, 41, is "the best football coach possible to take the premiere football program of the '80s into the '90s. We talked to or interviewed a number of people throughout the country regarding the job before deciding on Denny."

MHS, LHS soccer teams forced to try again

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

"Crosstown Rivalry: Part Two," didn't take place as planned Saturday due to thewintery conditions.

But Midland High and Midland Lee will vie in a crucial District 4-5A soccer match Thursday at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex.

In the only 4-5A action this past weekend, Abilene High put a lock on first place with a 3-1 win over Abilene Cooper. That match was played Friday night to beat the expected blustery weather.

AHS, 4-1 in 4-5A action, leads San Angelo and Midland High by 2½ games with three matches remaining. San Angelo and MHS are tied for second at 2-2.

An MHS win over Lee would give the 'Dogs a jump on that second and final bi-district playoff spot, while Lee, 1-3, needs to win the remaining four matches on its schedule to stay in the hunt. But both teams have suffered injuries to key players.

Midland High will miss the services of goalkeeper Justin Scharf for 10 days with a hyperextended knee, while Bulldog stopper Mike Savas finally gave up on the leg that he had been struggling with for three games when a hairline fractuce was detected last week. Savas may miss the rest of the regular season, though he is more likely to play should MHS make the bi-district round.

To that extent, Esikhati said the unexpected open date caused by Saturday's bluster could be a blessing.

"This is a good way for the kids to take care of their bumps and bruises."

For Lee, both goalie Chad Skipper and midfielder Shawn Castle suffered concussions when kicked in the head at Abilene High last week.

It looked like a boring weekend in sports. No misdemeanors or felonies reported. No adultery — that we know about. No drug busts. Jose Canseco even kept his car under 120 mph, avoiding any new unpleasantness with picky highway patrolmen.

But wait. Sure, no Oklahoma football players were arrested. This time, a basketball player was — Mookie Blaylock, the star guard of the Sooners, was booked for public drunkenness.

And the NHL hit alcoholic Bob Probert with a lifetime suspension after a customs agent found him with 14.3 grams of cocaine. Probert getting into substance abuse trouble is old news, almost like Mitch Green having his driver's license suspended.

The fun should continue this week: you are guaranteed all sorts of juicy tidbits on which to chew.

In Chicago, the trial of sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom resumes, providing an intriguing peek into the not always pretty wheeling and dealing world of college sports.

The list of prospective witnesses includes such diverse personalities as Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, former president of Notre Dame, and Joe Jackson, father of singer Michael Jackson. Their paths probably have not crossed before, but the nice thing about sports is how it brings people from all walks of life together.

Walters and Bloom have pleaded innocent to charges of racketeering, mail fraud, wire fraud and extortion. About the only thing the government indictment did not mention was kidnapping.

In Toronto, the Canadian commission investigating drug use by athletes can expect more riveting testimony this week. Last week Charlie Francis, Ben Johnson's track coach, told the hearing that Johnson had been using steroids since 1981 and had used them when he set the world record for the 100-meter dash at the 1987 World Championships in Rome.

And what's more, Francis said, Johnson wasn't the only one seeking better races through chemistry. The coach named three other Canadian runners who used drugs. Next, he is expected to testify about Johnson's final preparations for the 100-meter Olympic showdown with Carl Lewis, the race Johnson won on the track but lost in a test tube. It should be chilling.

Now, if your taste runs more to affairs of the flesh, there is the soap opera saga of Wade Boggs and Margo Adams, who is continuing her big city media tour this week to discuss Boggs' bedroom habits. This was a topic previously thought to be of interest only to Mrs. Boggs.

Olajuwon not yet impressed after win

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets had just played their best defensive game ever against the Los Angeles Lakers and snapped a seven-game losing streak in the process.

But Akeem Olajuwon was not dazzled by the Rockets' comeback to an 88-83 victory Sunday that ended the Laker's winning streak at four.

"We still have to make up for those seven games and this is just one game," Olajuwon said. "It feels good to beat the world champion Lakers on national television but now we have to keep going."

The Rockets didn't start out like they would have a chance to snap their losing streak, falling behind 48-39 at the half, their lowest output for a half this season.

But Sleepy Floyd and Mike Woodson rallied the Rockets in the third quarter and Floyd hit a crucial basket with 14 seconds to play that allowed the Rockets keep their lead.

"I just took the shot and it went it, I'd missed one like that earlier and I didn't want to miss that," said Floyd, who scored 22 points.

Floyd's basket gave Houston an 86-83 lead and he added two free throws with seven seconds to play for the Rockets' final points.

The Lakers' previous low score against the Rockets was 89 points in the 1974-75 season.

"They picked up the physical aspect of the game and 'bodied' us more than the last two times we played," Laker guard Magic Johnson said. "They were defensively more physical."

"Neither team played well offensive," Laker Coach Pat Riley said. "It was a real arm wrestling match. They just played better defense.

"They didn't allow us to post up and they did a good job hand hand-checking Johnson."

The game ended a frustrating part of the season for the Rockets, who lost to Seattle on Friday night when Olajuwon and Floyd both were ejected.

"To come out and end a losing streak against a power house like the Lakers just makes it that much more of a sweet win," Chaney said. "It takes a heavy weight off."

Pacers 121, Trail Blazers 118, OT

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Detlef Schrempf scored nine points in overtime, including two free throws with 20 seconds left, and Reggie Miller scored 29 points, leading Indiana to over Portland.

It was the Pacers' third victory in a four-game West Coast road trip, with the only loss coming to the Los Angeles Lakers. The Trail Blazers, who snapped a four-game winning streak, got 22 points apiece from Clyde Drexler and Jerome Kersey.

Chuck Person, who had six points in overtime, finished with 22 for Indiana. He had the first two baskets in the extra period, giving Indiana a 110-106 lead.

Schrempf's 15-footer with 2:19 remaining put the Pacers ahead 115-113 and they held on to the lead from there. Schrempf's two free throws with 20 seconds left completed the scoring as Anderson and Terry Porter each missed a 3-pointer in the last 13 seconds.

Portland led 101-92 with 2½ minutes left in regulation, but Miller scored five points in the 14-5 run that tied it 106-106 and forced the overtime.

NBA

Jazz 85, Hawks 83

ATLANTA — John Stockton and Bobby Hansen scored 20 points each and Karl Malone sank two free throws with 43 seconds left to give the Utah Jazz over the Atlanta Hawks.

Mark Eaton added 15 points and 23 rebounds, his high for the season and two shy of his career best, for the Jazz.

It was a game of streaks.

The Jazz used a 16-2 run to build a 24-14 lead in the first quarter but Atlanta came back wto take a 36-30 advantage with just under five minutes left in the half.

Stockton and Hansen each contributed five points, including a 3-point goal apiece, in a 12-0 spurt that gave Utah its biggest lead in the game, 67-54 with 47 seconds left in the third.

Atlanta then rallied as Dominique Wilkins scored six points and Antoine Carr added a three-point play in a 15-4 burst that cut the lead to 71-69 with 6:46 to play.

Atlanta got within two twice down the stretch before tying the game at 83 on Rivers' running 10-foot jumper with one minute to play.

After Malone made his two free throws, the Hawks missed two chances to tie.

Bucks 103, Cavaliers 98

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Cleveland went 2-for-16 from the field during a nine-point fourth quarter and Terry Cummings scored 26 points to lead Milwaukee as Bucks ended the Cavaliers' 22-game home winning streak.

Cleveland, 43-14, led 89-79 after three quarters, but the Cavaliers missed their first eight shots during a 12-2 Milwaukee run at the start of the fourth period that tied the game at 91.

The Bucks, 36-19, were unable to gain the lead until Ricky Pierce hit a fast-break layup off a bad pass by Cleveland's Brad Daugherty, putting Milwaukee up 97-96 with 2:20 left.

Larry Nance, who scored seven of the Cavaliers' nine points in the final quarter, made an 18-footer to put Cleveland back up 98-97, but a 10-foot baseline jumper by Pierce gave Milwaukee the lead for good with 1:30 to play.

Bullets 114, Hornets 101

LANDOVER, Md. — Jeff Malone scored 34 points and Washington reserves fueled a 14-1 fourth-quarter burst Sunday, leading the Bullets to their fourth straight victory, 114-101 over the Charlotte Hornets, who lost for the fourth consecutive time.

The game was tied 88-88 when Mark Alarie scored on a layup. Alarie also finished the spurt with a layup while Steve Colter scored five points, Ledell Eackles three and Harvey Grant two, giving the Bullets a 102-89 advantage.

Pistons 109, Heat 100

MIAMI — Isiah Thomas and Vinnie Johnson each scored 22 points as the Detroit Pistons grabbed a big early lead and held on for a victory over Miami.

The Pistons, hitting 13 of their first 17 shots from the field, put together runs of 10-2 and 10-3 for a 27-15 lead with 2:53 left in the first period. Bill Laimbeer was responsible for 14 of his 20 points during the early minutes.

The Heat's record dropped to an NBA-worst 8-49.

Moses Scurry scored 15 of his 17 points in the second half as Nevada-Las Vegas rallied from a nine-point deficit to beat New Mexico State for the 13th straight time.

UNVL improved to 23-7 overall and 16-2 in the Big West Conference. New Mexico State fell to 19-9 and 12-6.

E. Tennessee St. 96, Marshall 73

Keith Jennings scored all of his 16 points in the second half as East Tennessee State won its first Southern Conference tournament.

The Buccaneers, who joined the Southern Conference in the 1979-80 season, improved to 20-10. Marshall, which had won three of the five previous conference tournaments, fell to 15-15. It was the first time in 10 years that the Thundering Herd has not finished above .500.

These revelations do not appear to disturb Boggs, who is humming his way through spring training and batted .380 for the Red Sox after Adams first threatened to go public on him last May. Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, Boston's in-dugout expert on mental health, considered this nasty bit of business and suggested that his teammate is a sex fiend and ought to see a psychiatrist. Boggs shrugged that off, too.

Along the way, Adams spiced her recollections by casually dropping Steve Garvey's name, as well. Some folks already were winking at Garvey for allegedly causing two recent pregnancies, neither of them on the part of his new wife.

Not to worry, though. Garvey promised to take full responsibility if he turns out to be the cause of this sudden population explosion. Oil Can did not offer an opinion on this development, confining his advice to Boggs.

The Boyd-Boggs business was strictly verbal. Darryl Strawberry, however, decided to get physical with New York Mets teammate Keith Hernandez when Hernandez suggested he was acting like a little kid by pouting over his $1.4 million salary.

Strawberry took a swing at Hernandez but missed — he always did have trouble hitting left-handers — then marched out of camp to pout some more because the Mets refused to renegotiate his contract. The word from his agent was that this would be his last season in New York, that he would sit out 1990 — passing on the $1.8 million contract he has for that option year — and then become a free agent.

That changed a day later when, probably after studying the classified ads and seeing no other jobs in that salary range, Strawberry decided to play in 1990, after all. He celebrated his return by planting a theatrical kiss on Hernandez' cheek, the same one he swung at only two days earlier.

The message was obvious. Pay attention because things change fast in sports.

Still, the Rebels played their best game of the district season despite the 2-1 loss.

In the wake of those injuries, Bull criticized the looseness of games played in Abilene and San Angelo this season.

"We're going to wind up getting kids hurt, if the officials don't quit calling soccer matches like rugby matches.

"If they want to play (unnecessarily) rough, I'll just go recruit out of the halls and off the football team. That's what it could come to.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You finally find the right relationship. Your perfect partner is someone who thinks positive but has a firm grip on reality. A new work environment encourages success. You wonder why you did not make certain changes sooner. You now have more time to pamper yourself. Include loved ones. You are delighted to have greater variety in your work assignments. Learn a new skill.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: naturalist Luther Burbank, actor James Broderick, auto racer Janet Guthrie, sportscaster Lynn Swann, PTL co-founder Tammy Bakker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take advantage of today's slower pace to catch up on paperwork. Tackle detail work you tend to postpone. Romance is more exciting and passionate than in the recent past. Be discreet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Recycling an old idea or learning high-tech skills will boost your earnings. A relationship promises more than it can deliver. Look at a partnership realistically.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Certain sacrifices will be required today. Reach an agreement with a client or creditor before he changes his mind. Keep your eyes open if entering a relationship with a powerful individual.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on a long-term plan that will benefit you emotionally and financially. You need to know exactly what your resources will be after retirement. A family member provides stimulating company tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are more sensitive than usual to other people's feelings. Your private financial reserves will help you turn a clever idea into a gold mine. Relationship differences need to be resolved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be on edge today. Avoid emotional scenes or confrontations. Take advantage of a lull at work to get caught up on routine chores. Postpone signing legal papers until you can consult experts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put saving ahead of spending until you catch up a bit. Career matters deserve top priority. Your nesting instinct affects the decisions you make. You could find yourself in the spotlight again.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You need more time to reach your objectives. Be patient, especially with yourself. Family draws closer together. Seize every opportunity to make a relationship a success. Compromise on little things.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You feel more in harmony with yourself after communicating your hopes and dreams. If single, ask friends to help you meet someone campatible. Travel is iffy now. Stick close to home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can really let your hair down with a visitor. Get more sleep and you will have the extra energy you need to meet your responsibilities. Know your physical and financial limits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): This is the day to step forward and be counted. You face fewer limitations on what you can do. Send out resumes. If you have a grievance, discuss it face-to-face.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Hard decisions must be made. Luck is on your side. Look forward to new cash rewards. Settle minor problems and a relationship will be made whole again. Exercise your options without undue delay.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A5 ♡72 ◇A87 ♣J109542
Partner opens the bidding with a demand bid of two spades. What do you respond?
A.—Nothing's perfect. It is a choice between three spades and three clubs. For the former, you want a third spade; for the latter, you would like a better suit. Our own preference is for three clubs, since a club slam might be your best spot, but the arguments for three spades are weighty.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q7632 ♡AK1076 ◇7 ♣83
Your right-hand opponent opens one club. What action do you take?
A.—Unless you have a specialized bid available that shows a limited major two-suiter, such as a Michaels cue-bid, you should plan on showing both your suits. Therefore, overcall one spade, with the intention of bidding hearts at your next turn unless the auction is too high.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ762 ♡5 ◇AJ82 ♣J105
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—A tough problem. Despite the probable misfit, there should be a game somewhere. Since partner is showing a good, long suit, four hearts has considerable appeal, but it's a trifle unilateral. We would opt for three no trump—partner can still act if his hand is not suitable.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A8 ♡762 ◇J103 ♣KQ652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

What action do you take?
A.—An awkward hand. You are not strong enough for three clubs, yet you have too much to stay out of the auction. The only sensible bid is two hearts—even if your methods permit opening with a four-car major.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A8 ♡762 ◇J103 ♣KQ652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	2 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner has made a move toward game, and were it not for the quality of your heart support, you would consider going straight to four hearts since you have a maximum. Under the circumstances, though, we prefer showing partner where our length and strength is—bid three clubs.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J ♡AJ3 ◇AQ964 ♣A987
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you jumped to four hearts, you have judged your holding much too pessimistically. With three aces, a singleton and a trump fit, you are in slam territory. Complete the picture of your hand by bidding three clubs now, then jumping in hearts at your next turn, even if you have to go to the five-level.

Violinist receives award, pleads for Israel, Palestinian dialogue

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Sir Yehudi Menuhin, honored for promoting German-Jewish reconciliation, made a plea for dialogue between Israel and Palestinians.

"The chances for positive change are closer than we believe," the 72-year-old virtuoso violinist said Sunday during an address to West Germany's Societies for Christian-Jewish Cooperation.

Menuhin

Earlier, Menuhin was awarded the Buber-Rosenzweig medal for his outspoken efforts to promote dialogue between Jews and Christians. The award, established in 1968, commemorates the Jewish philosophers Martin Buber and Franz Rosenzweig.

The award cited his performances in Germany immediately after World War II, including giving concerts for fellow Jews and others who survived the Nazi Holocaust.

Menuhin said he hoped talks between Arabs and Jews could produce agreement on one state for both peoples.

"It may be the modest and lonely view of one man, but I believe there are only two possibilities: either two independent states, and that means a divided Jerusalem, or a united Jerusalem that would mean at the very least a united bi-national state.Israel must follow this second path if it wants to survive."

TOKYO (AP) — Empress Dowager Nagako, widow of Emperor Hirohito, celebrated her 86th birthday today with only a family luncheon scheduled because of the mourning period for her husband, the Togu Palace said.

Those attending the luncheon were her eldest son, Emperor Akihito and his wife, Empress Michiko; and the empress dowager's younger son, Prince Hitachi and his wife, Princess Hanako, according to a palace official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Nagako

The imperial family is observing a year of mourning for Hirohito, who died of cancer Jan. 7 at age 87, the official said.

The official declined to discuss the health of the empress dowager, who has used a wheelchair and has made few public appearances in recent years. She did not attend her husband's funeral last month.

Quoting the Imperial Household Agency, Kyodo News Service said the empress dowager is suffering from pains in the back and knees, but her condition has remained stable and her appetite is good.

Kyodo said she spends her days watching television and reading, apart from observing prayers for her late husband twice a day.

PARIS (AP) — Isabelle Adjani read from "The Satanic Verses" in an acceptance speech at France's 14th annual Cesar film awards in a gesture of support for novelist Salman Rushdie.

Ms. Adjani received the best actress award Saturday night for playing the title role in "Camille Claudel," the sculptress and lover of sculptor Auguste Rodin. It was her third best actress Cesar, France's Oscar.

"You should know what I have suffered...In the artist's condition there is something extreme," she read from the novel in her speech. "Angels are easy to calm. Human beings ... can doubt everything."

Rushdie has been in hiding in Great Britain since Ayatollah Khomeini called for his death for the novel, saying it blasphemes Islam.

There was little overt reaction from the audience to the recitation.

"Camille Claudel" received five Cesars, including best film, photography, decor and costumes.

Jean-Paul Belmondo, who said in advance he would refuse an award, was named best actor for his role in "Itineraire d'un Enfant Gate" (Itinerary of a Spoiled Child). Belmondo, 55, has said the audience reaction to his work was enough reward.

The West German film "Baghdad Cafe," directed by Percy Adlon, was voted best foreign film.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainers including Tammy Wynette, Pia Zadora and Ray Charles helped stir up pledges of more than $37 million to the National Easter Seal Society during its 18th annual telethon.

Zadora

"We found that the American public was very supportive. We had an even stronger turnout than we expected," said John Garrison, head of the non-profit organization. This year's pledges exceeded the goal of $36 million and last year's mark of $35 million, he said.

The 20-hour telethon was broadcast live on local television stations nationwide over the weekend. Singer Pat Boone was host for the ninth year and was joined by his daughter Debbie in singing a medley of their hits.

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Charles S. Scott Sr., an attorney who helped integrate public schools nationwide by bringing suit in the landmark Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case, died Friday. He was 67.

Scott

In 1951, Scott, his brother, the late John J. Scott, and the late Charles Bledsoe sued the Topeka Board of Education in federal district court on behalf of Linda Brown, a black elementary school student.

The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, which declared on May 17, 1954, that racial segregation in public schools was unconstitutional.

Scott also had a role in many other civil rights suits involving public accommodations in Kansas.

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Kitty Dukakis is expected to resume an active life when she returns home, probably later this week, after four weeks of treatment at a Rhode Island alcoholism center, according to a report published Sunday.

The wife of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis entered Edgehill Newport in Newport, R.I., on Feb. 5 because of excessive drinking after her husband lost the presidential election. Most patients undergo a 28-day rehabilitation program sometimes followed by three days of observation on the premises.

The Boston Sunday Herald, citing unidentified sources, said Mrs. Dukakis, 52, was due to come home this week.

Gas production cut to shore prices

HOUSTON (AP) — A relatively mild winter is blamed for falling natural gas prices, which in turn are prompting natural gas producers to begin holding back gas from the market.

Chevron U.S.A., Anadarko Petroleum Corp., Conoco Inc. and Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. are among the major producers that already have reduced natural gas production, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday. Others, including Mesa Limited Partnership, are considering a cutback of their gas sales.

Producers have taken some of their gas off the market at various times over the last three years, when prices have fallen below operating or replacement costs or crossed other designated thresholds. The latest round of production cuts, however, is occurring earlier in the year and at a higher price than in the past.

Natural gas spot prices have plummeted 30 percent since December, and they are 19 percent below levels a year ago, the Natural Gas Clearinghouse Inc. said in its monthly survey.

The drop from February to March ranged from 10 cents to 35 cents per million British thermal units on the pipelines surveyed. A million Btu is the energy content of about a thousand cubic feet of natural gas.

Prices peaked in early February when a major cold front spread ice and snow across the nation. Some pipelines experienced temporary gas shortages, but those problems — and the higher prices — disappeared in a few days when warmer weather arrived.

Houston Lighting & Power Co. Vice President L.G. Brackeen said the utility was able to arrange purchases for all of its March gas needs at prices 10 cents to 15 cents below the February level, but the utility did not receive as many sales offers from gas companies as last month.

"We are buying what we can for storage to use in the summer," Brackeen said. "I am looking for a rebound in prices similar to what we had last year."

Anadarko, one of the nation's largest independent oil and gas companies, had been selling up to 400 million cubic feet of gas a day on the spot market in late February. The company's volume had dropped to 250 million cubic feet a day by the end of last week, said Anadarko Vice President A. Paul Taylor Jr.

"We are shutting in at a higher price than we did a year ago," Taylor said. "We wish other producers would do the same thing."

Last year, Anadarko halted production wherever possible if gas prices dropped below $1.50 per million Btu.

Carol Freedenthal, principal in the Houston-based consulting firm Jofree Corp., said $1.50 remains a trigger point for many producers.

Time Warner merger fraught with problems

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Time Warner Inc. is coming into the world like an elephant, two years in gestation and a giant at birth. The path from conception to delivery was fraught with problems, including conflicts between the parents about who would bear the most responsibility for the upbringing.

But in the end, executives who negotiated the birth and the advisers who attended it said, it was a recognition that the opportunity to form the new company was passing quickly that led both sets of managements to act. After a month of intensive negotiations, they concluded a deal in time for their boards to approve it at the end of last week.

In interviews on Sunday, the chief executives of Time Inc. and Warner Communications Inc. recounted the events that led to their boards' decision Friday to approve the merger.

The process began one winter day two years ago when Steven J. Ross walked from his office at Warner in Rockefeller Center to visit J. Richard Munro, the chairman of Time, whose building is less than a block away.

Ross envisioned a partnership between Warner and Time to produce, distribute, and market programming around the world. It would be a way to respond to the invasion of foreign media companies that were buying American publishers, music companies and other communications properties. But they could retain their independence, allowing Ross to remain in control of the company he had built and allowing Munro, with his handpicked successor, Nicholas J. Nicholas Jr., to keep their posts at Time.

Refiners seek relief from gasoline rules

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The oil industry has been urging the Environmental Protection Agency to take steps this week that would lessen the effects of gasoline regulations by eight Northeastern states that are scheduled to take effect May 1.

The states' rules, part of a campaign to cut smog, would require changes in the formulation of gasoline sold within their borders.

The oil industry is pressing the agency to establish a national rule for the formulation of gasoline that would be less stringent than the Northeast standard. With a national standard in place, the agency could then pre-empt state and local rules.

Richard D. Wilson, director of the mobile source office of the EPA, said that the Northeast could easily prove that it has a pollution problem that requires action. But the federal agency may also want to consider the cost of the proposed changes.

Wilson said if there were further strain on refining capacity, "it's more likely to show up in gas prices than in shortages." He added that even now, before any new rules take effect, "everybody agrees that supplies are tight."

"It's clear that supplies will be tight; that's the best case," said Mark N. Cohen, a spokesman for Mobil. The worst case, he said, would be substantial price increases. But Cohen and spokesmen for other major oil companies refused to predict what the price change would be.

Because of strong demand, gasoline prices in the United States have stayed relatively high despite sharply falling prices for crude oil.

Estimates of what the states' changes in the gasoline rules would cost consumers range from 3 to 25 cents a gallon. The proposed changes have already produced unusual price movements in the gasoline futures markets, where refiners, distributors and retailers hedge their bets about future costs.

Philip K. Verleger Jr., an economist with Charles River Associates, predicted a price jump of up to 25 percent in a matter of weeks. "Prices may have to be increased to constrain demand," he said.

State officials say the changes would cost 3 cents a gallon or less, and are a far more cost-effective way to cut smog than many anti-pollution measures that have been enforced on factories in recent years.

"This is by far the most effective measure we have to reduce smog in 1989," said Michael J. Bradley, executive director of the Northeast States for Coordinated Air Use Management, based in Boston. The group organized the agreement that led to the rules by the eight states. The cost of removing a ton of potential pollutants from gasoline is $500, he said.

In contrast, he said that environmental officials have often required private industries to spend $5,000 to $10,000 to block a ton of pollutants from sources like metal finishing shops and bakeries.

At issue is the rule on the so-called volatility of liquid gasoline. Volatility is a measurement of the speed at which liquid gasoline turns to vapor, a quality that is necessary to allow cars to run because engines burn gasoline as a vapor, not a liquid. But volatility contributes to air pollution, because unburned gasoline vapors are a primary ingredient of smog.

The refining industry quantifies volatility in terms of Reid Vapor Pressure, with higher numbers indicating greater tendency to vaporize.

Greyhound buses head east to assist travelers

DALLAS (AP) — Two hundred extra Greyhound Lines, Inc., buses were standing by at several East Coast cities this morning, ready to roll into what could be heavier than usual traffic because of the Eastern Airlines strike.

Dallas-based Greyhound sent 200 buses from across the nation and added 32 express routes connecting New York, Boston, Providence, R.I., Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia in anticipation of a heavier demand for bus travel.

Greyhound spokeswoman Elizabeth Hale said top officers of the firm's East Coast subsidiary, Eastern Greyhound Lines, spent much of the weekend preparing to meet heightened demand on the nation's roadways.

Ms. Hale said 200 extra bus drivers were brought to the East Coast cities from as far away as Montreal and Richmond, Va., to drive the buses that will be sent off piggyback-style to meet demand.

"We should be able to maintain on-time expectations," she said. "Now that the commuter rails are open, there won't be as much of a traffic snarl as there could have been."

The Eastern strike had threatened to spill over into a sympathy action against 12 commuter railroads around the country, but when a judge in New York banned railroad workers from honoring Eastern picket lines there, the Machinists called off their plans.

U.S. District Judge Robert Patterson on Sunday signed a temporary order barnning employees from honoring picket lines at railroads in the New York area, with its 320,000 railway commuters.

The International Association of Machinists said the union would appeal that ruling on Monday.

Greyhound's 32 new routes are priced from $29 one-way between New York and Providence to $82 one-way between Boston and Washington.

David W. Batchelor, president of Eastern Greyhound, said he believes those taking the buses who might have otherwise flown will be surprised by the low prices and quality service, and may decide to become permanent bus commuters.

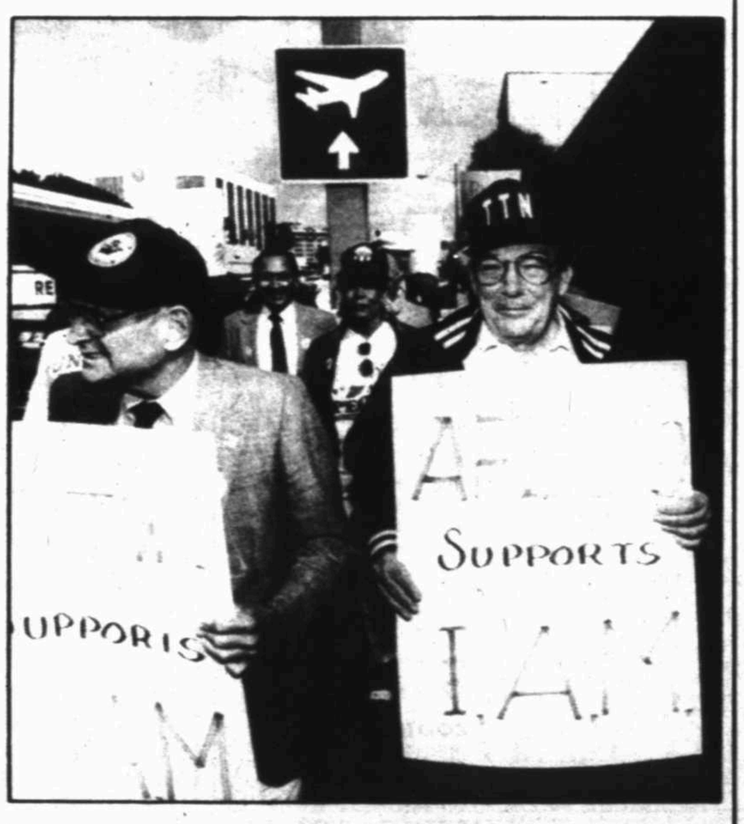

"This is our opportunity to show people how great bus service is," said Batchelor from New York.

He said many of those who will be riding won't have been on commercial buses since their college days, and Greyhound sees this as an opportunity to win them back as full-time riders.

Ms. Hale said travelers won't be turned away.

"We're not like airlines," she said. "We don't sell out of seats. We just keep adding buses and sending them out."

Bush hit for delay in naming high-tech head

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress are voicing concern over the Bush administration's delay in naming an official to head a newly reorganized drive to assist U.S. industry with high-technology innovation.

In addition to the absence of a permanent appointee to the new post of Commerce Department undersecretary for technology, the effort also is being hampered by lack of money for a key program at the department's National Institute of Standards and Technology.

"I'm deeply concerned about it," said Rep. George E. Brown Jr., D-Calif., who closely follows technology issues on Capitol Hill.

"I would say that at this point the administration has not got their act together: first, in terms of making the key appointments that would be involved in policy in this area; and, of course, establishing the policy framework necessary to be able to go ahead."

Brown is a member of the House science, research and technology subcommittee, which is set to hear testimony Tuesday by Ernest Ambler, who last December was named acting undersecretary for technology but is planning to retire at the end of March.

At his confirmation hearing in January, Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher said the role of the undersecretary for technology "is an extremely high priority" and that he was concerned about U.S. capability in high technology.

So far, however, Mosbacher has been unable find a willing candidate for the undersecretary job, which pays $82,500 a year.

Brown said a number of people — including Mary L. Good, chairwoman of the National Science Board, which oversees the National Science Foundation — had been offered the post but had turned it down.

Oil prices recoup Friday losses

From Staff and Wire Reports

Futures prices have more than recouped Friday's losses, with contracts for April delivery of West Texas Intermediate gaining 26 cents to stand at $18.83 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Energy futures prices fell in volatile trading Friday, with crude oil soaring toward the $19-a-barrel level before settling lower in a wave of technical selling.

Refined petroleum products also lost ground.

On the NYMEX, WTI settled 16 cents lower at $18.56 a barrel, after rising as high as $18.88 a barrel at one point during Friday's session.

Traders said prices declined in a wave of technical selling after the WTI April contract failed to pierce the psychologically important $19-a-barrel level.

"It was a volatile day," said Peter Beutel, an energy analyst with Elders Futures Inc.

Beutel said prices started out weak following reports that production among the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries had been higher than expected during January and February.

But he said the market started to rally later in the session after non-OPEC nations Mexico, Egypt and the Soviet Union announced 5 percent cuts in their oil output.

Stocks rise 8 points in quiet session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market pieced together a moderate gain Friday in a quiet session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 8.58 to 2,274.29, stretching its gain for the week to 28.75 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 865 up, 582 down and 498 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 151.79 million shares, down from 161.98 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 180.85 million shares.

Stock Market Gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market pushed ahead today in activity dominated by heavy buying of communications and entertainment issues.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.10 points to 2,278.39 by noontime on Wall Street.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 744 up, 501 down and 542 unchanged.

The big news of the session was the weekend merger agreement between Time Inc. and Warner Communications.

Analysts said the deal immediately touched off speculation that other companies in the entertainment and publishing industries might be candidates for mergers or takeovers.

Warner stock led the active list and jumped 3 to 48⅞, while Time's shares dropped 2⅛ to 107. Analysts said Time's decline in part reflected disappointment among traders who had been reckoning that the company might have itself become a takeover candidate at a higher price.

Elsewhere in the group, Gulf & Western rose 1⅞ to 45¼; MCA 1⅜ to 52¼; Columbia Pictures Entertainment ⅝ to 18, and American TV-Communications, traded in the over-the-counter market, 1 to 40.

Brokers also said the overall market benefited from a monthly report by a purchasing managers' group that suggested a slowing of economic growth.

That was interpreted as a favorable portent for the inflation outlook and a possible slackening of upward pressure on interest rates.

Ohio Mattress climbed 2⅞ to 24⅝. The company agreed to a $25.50-a-share buyout by the investment firm of Gibbons, Green, Van Amerongen.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .43 to 164.33. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .35 at 326.57.

Volume on the Big Board came to 73.35 million shares at noontime, against 72.31 million at the same point Friday.

The average price for strict low mid-dling 1 & 1-16 inch spot cotton advanced 78 points to 56.17 cents a pound Friday for the eight markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

If demand warrants, she said, the bus company will bring in more vehicles and draw in drivers from the firm's southern region, including Dallas.

Ms. Hale said the new bus travelers probably will be surprised by what they find. Since an ownership change in March 1987, Greyhound has begun a nationwide improvement program.

The company has started a five-year plan to upgrade terminals, installed a new computerized scheduling system, and has begun testing a new system in Denver that would match customers with tickets and their luggage by bar codes and electronic scanners.

"They're also going to find that our prices are at least 50 percent less expensive than airline tickets," Ms. Hale said. "They can take that savings and buy all the free airline peanuts they want."

PRICE

R. Gerald Bennett, president of the intrastate pipeline group of Enron Corp., said he has seen prices rise a few cents since the beginning of the month. He attributed the slight recovery to a combination of colder weather in the Midwest, non-performance by some suppliers and a withholding of gas from the market.

Chevron would not disclose the volume of gas production it is now withholding. But one broker said Chevron had taken at least 150 million cubic feet a day of its Gulf of Mexico supply off the market.

Conoco has cut back its production rate by about 75 million cubic feet a day, or around 10 percent of capacity, because of low prices, a spokesman said. If prices do not improve, the company plans to withhold up to 20 percent in April.

A voluntary industry standard limits Reid Vapor Pressure in the Northeast in summer to 11.5 pounds a square inch. (Around the nation, numbers are set higher in winter because smog is seldom a problem then and starting a car in cold weather requires a different blend of gasoline.)

But New York, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, and Massachusetts agreed in November 1987 to cut the Reid pressure to 9. Seven states have passed the rules, which cover the period May 1 to Sept. 15 each year, while New Hampshire is still considering them.

The government, meanwhile, is considering a standard of 10.5 pounds, which would require smaller changes than the state rules.

The states acted together because of the nature of smog, which is produced by the chemical interactions of various ingredients when cooked for hours in the sun, sometimes many miles downwind of the source of the pollutants.

For example, releases from the urban areas of New Jersey, New York, and Connecticut have contributed to unhealthy levels of smog in rural Vermont and Maine. Last summer, because of hot, hazy days and increases in gasoline consumption, smog levels set records in the Northeast.

But cutting the Reid pressure causes various problems for refiners, including requiring them to reduce the butane content of gasoline. Refiners like butane, Bradley said, because it adds volume to the gasoline but costs only about 40 cents a gallon.

In addition, experts say, butane raises the octane of the gasoline, and octane levels are posing a problem now because lead, another octane raiser, has been banned from most gasoline. In addition, marketing efforts by the oil companies have raised the public's taste for high-octane gasoline.

For months the oil companies have lobbied at the state level to block the change. Now the American Petroleum Institute, the oil companies' main trade group, is suing to stop the rule in New York.

Rep. Don Ritter, R-Pa., said the failure to implement a pay raise for Congress, the judiciary and top federal executives apparently figured in the decisions by several people who would have had to take a substantial cut from their private-sector incomes.

Under a reorganization plan approved by Congress late last year, Commerce's new Technology Administration includes:

—The Office of Technology Policy, a policy analysis and development organization;

—The Office of Commercial Affairs, which promote cooperative joint ventures with U.S. industry in areas of research and technology development;

—The National Institute of Standards and Technology, or NIST, which works in areas ranging from automated manufacturing, electronics and materials research to computer science and technology, building and fire research, and biotechnology;

—The National Telecommunications and Information Administration, responsible for developing federal telecommunications technology policies;

—The National Technical Information Service, which disseminates the results of government-sponsored research.

MERGER

Aside from the proximity of the companies' headquarters, both were major customers of the other. Time bought much of Warner's programming for its Home Box Office cable network, and Warner bought a lot of HBO for use on its local cable systems. Unknown to Ross, Time had already decided to expand its entertainment business, which is made up of HBO and Cinemax, another pay television cable service.

"I thought I would tell Dick and Nick my idea, and it would go from there," Ross said yesterday.

But the meeting in Munro's office, in the Time-Life Building on the Avenue of the Americas, went nowhere. Ross, whose entrepreneurial talent had built Warner into a $4.2 billion international entertainment group, had sketched his notion only with conversation and left the two Time managers baffled.

"I had thought all this out, but no one could digest what I was saying," Ross said.

Munro saw the idea as little more than a distraction. "When you have 20 meetings a day six days a week, you can't always grasp something that is a little out of the blue like that," he said.

Ross tried again. "I called back a few days later, and said I wanted to drop off a few pages for them to look at," he said. "The next day they called back and seemed excited. That's when I got excited."

What followed was a year of frequent meetings, usually in the living room or library of Ross's apartment on Park Avenue.

"We talked about philosophy and politics and the quality of our people," Munro said. "We wondered how a Brooklyn Jew — Steve — and a Greek immigrant — Nick — and the son of an upstate farmer — me — could get along together running a joint venture of the size we were contemplating."

The meetings went on for hours, often several times a week, as they shared their ideas about global markets, artistic and editorial independence, and the fragile process of passing corporate leadership from one generation of executives to another.

That was more of a worry to Ross, now 62, than to his counterpart at Time. Munro had already announced that he would retire in a few years and pass his authority to Nicholas, who is now 48. Ross had so far had difficulty getting along even with those he took in as partners in previous deals at Warner: the American Express Co. and Herbert Siegel, the chairman of Chris-Craft Industries.

In Nicholas, Ross began to feel he might have found someone he could get along with long enough to retire. "It was occurring to me, as we got to know each other better, that I might want to have Nick run my company even if I couldn't work out something with Time," Ross said.

The investment bankers and lawyers who were consulting with the three after nearly every meeting said that the idea of forming the joint venture became more complicated the closer it came to reality.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

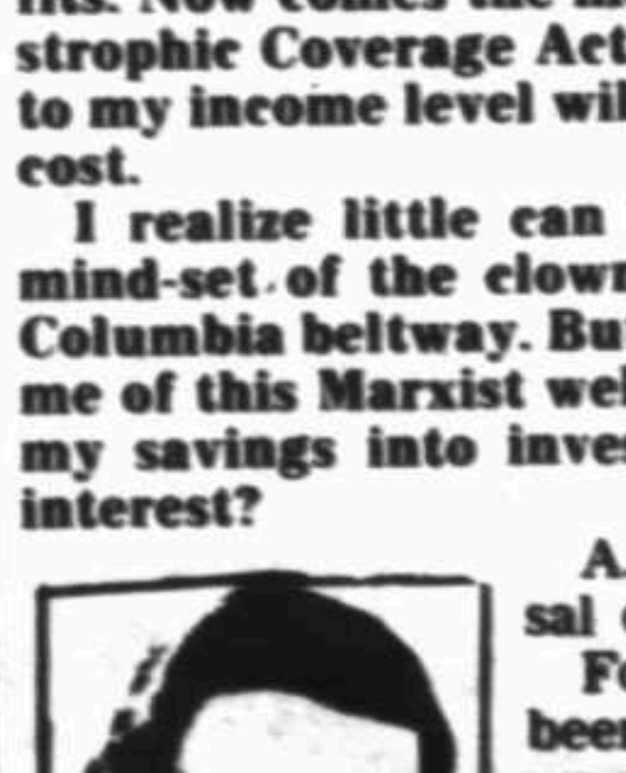

Tax-free investments can reduce impact of new Medicare tax

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Once again, I and other "near poor" senior citizens are being hit with taxes that really hurt by the pandering welfare wizards along the Potomac. I say "near poor" because annual income in the $35,000 range no longer is rich.

Since 1984, we have had to pay federal income tax on part of our Social Security benefits. Now comes the monstrous Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, for which seniors close to my income level will bear the lion's share of cost.

I realize little can be done to change the mind-set of the clowns inside the District of Columbia beltway. But can I reduce the cost to me of this Marxist welfare transfer by moving my savings into investments paying tax-free interest?

Doyle

A. Yes. And that's a reversal of my previous advice.

For all the years I have been pounding out this column, I cautioned that tax-free interest was suitable only for people whose high income put them in high tax brackets. That reasoning was simple enough. Tax-free interest from such things as municipal bonds is lower than the taxable income available from many other investments. So, unless you had high income, you ended up with more "keeping money" from taxable income.

The Medicare law passed by Congress last year changes that. Now, many moderate income senior citizens will get more keeping money from tax-free interest.

An excellent research report by John Nuveen & Co. shows that the marginal federal income tax rate for a married couple 65 or older with adjusted gross income between $33,801 and $43,000, before Social Security benefits, is 48.3 percent.

That means the couple will pay Uncle Sam 48.3 cents for every dollar of taxable income within that range. The marginal rate is the tax bite out of your highest taxable income — $33,801 to $43,000 in this example.

For senior citizens in this situation the marginal tax rate falls to 32.2 percent at $43,001 and to the so-called "maximum" 28 percent at $51,615. For lower-income retirees, the marginal bite will range from 15 to 25.9 percent.

This boils down to the unhappy fact that moderate income seniors will bear the brunt of Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act costs.

Q. I am 60. My husband is 66, still working and intends to work several more years. He does not collect Social Security benefits and has not applied for either Part A or Part B Medicare. Will he have to pay the Medicare catastrophic coverage surtax for 1989? If he does, it doesn't seem fair.

A. Your husband and everyone else 65 and older will have to pay, as a surtax on the 1989 federal income tax due April 15, 1990. There will be no additional charge on the first $150 of federal income tax. Beyond that, an extra $22.50 will be paid on each $150 due the Internal Revenue Service for 1989. That surtax will be capped at $800 — $1,600 when both husband and wife are 65 or older.

That extra tax is scheduled to rise to $37.50 per $150 of income tax in 1990, $39 in 1991, $40.50 in 1992 and $42 in 1993, with the annual caps moving up to $800, $850, $900, $950 and $1,050 — doubling when both spouses are 65.

Lots of senior citizens who have private medical insurance are screaming mad that this is unfair. But that's the way Congress wrote the law.

Q. In order to reduce our taxable income and the new Medicare tax, my wife and I are considering investing in municipal bonds. What is the safety factor of such bonds? Can those bonds be readily converted to cash? Does the interest remain constant?

A. Although there have been some defaults, the vast majority of municipal bonds — bonds issued by states and their political subdivisions — have paid interest as scheduled and have been redeemed at maturity.

You can convert those bonds to cash by selling them before their maturity dates. When you sell, you might get more or less than a bond's face value — depending on market conditions at that time. Virtually all municipal bonds pay fixed interest rates, set at the time each bond is issued.

Black students' achievements stifled by apathy, leaders say

By LISA TROW

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — In his 1964 Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech, the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. called for a new method to resolve human conflict.

"Man must evolve for all human conflict a method which rejects revenge, aggression and retaliation. The foundation of such a method is love," King said.

But love is not what Ulysses Watkins found in Huntsville in 1948 when he took a journey downtown that would fill his 13-year-old life with bitterness.

And love is not pushing young black Huntsville students to excel in school.

What was once thwarted by hate is now stifled in apathy and Huntsville's young are the new victims, local black leaders and educators say.

The beacon of black pride no longer lights the path to Martin Luther King's Dream because parents show less interest in their children's success and Huntsville has few black role models, they say.

That wasn't the case when Richard Watkins, 46, grew up in Huntsville, the son of a schoolteacher and the county's first black Army officer.

Watkins is the only black member of the Huntsville school board. His brother, Ulysses, is now a physician in Houston.

The support of a cohesive black community and the kindness of some white residents helped keep young Richard out of trouble, he says.

But his earliest memories of racism still anger him, he says. At age 5, Richard accompanied Ulysses to the post office with his family's last $20 to purchase a money order for their mother.

Ulysses stepped up to the window and handed the white postal clerk the bill, asking for the money order and awaiting his change.

The man asked the boys to step aside in the middle of the transaction so he could wait on another customer, a white man.

"They shot the breeze for a long time," Watkins says, and when the man left, the brothers went back to the window to get their money order and change.

The postal clerk pretended not to remember them and when they tried to get their money back, he ordered them to leave.

"That guy took our family's last $20," he says. "I'll never forget going home to watch my mother cry."

The incident left an emotional bruise on both brothers, Richard said.

"This is what made my brother so very bitter," he says. "And it did something to me. I had some very close calls with people in this community. No, I didn't accept it."

Huntsville during World War II was a place where young children like Richard would be kicked off sidewalks by white teens — or worse.

"We ran for our lives coming from the movies several times," he says.

Richard and his brother "hustled milk bottles and soda bottles" to earn their way into movies at the Avon downtown, where a ticket to the afternoon Westerns cost 9 cents.

Blacks occupied the balcony where there were no restroom facilities.

Blacks couldn't walk in the front of a Huntsville cafe, sit in the dining area and be served; they could get food to go from the back door or eat in the kitchen, a taboo that survived into the late '60s.

But during World War II, a German prisoner of war — held in a camp on Highway 19 — could accompany a guard for lunch at the Cafe Texan.

That angered Watkins, whose father fought in the Army against the Nazis but could not enjoy the same privileges, even in his hometown.

Blacks had a refuge in an enclave of black-owned businesses near 13th Street and Avenue M, the current site of Huntsville City Hall.

But educational and economic opportunities for young blacks were limited.

Watkins left Huntsville in 1961 to attend Prairie View A&M, a black university 75 miles away, because he could not walk to Sam Houston State Teachers College for classes. Blacks were not admitted.

But Watkins knows his life was easier than that of his parents and grandparents, even though they were well-thought-of in Huntsville's white community.

Watkins' grandfather had amassed 1,100 acres and a general store. An employee, who had been hired to kill him by envious whites, hit Watkins' grandfather with a hatchet. He survived — to age 95, in fact.

His father-in-law, a well-digger, was almost lynched in Huntsville after he defended himself against a white teen-ager.

He left Huntsville and raised his family in Houston.

Flight from violence was common among earlier generations of Huntsville blacks.

Walker County Commissioner Cecil Williams says the support of longtime white Huntsville residents still guarantees the acceptance of longstanding black families in the white community.

But Williams, 61, and other black leaders say when the civil rights movement hit Huntsville, black residents paid for changes with a loss of black pride and black economic power.

By 1969, the Huntsville school system was integrated without much of a hitch.

"You had your tensions, your innuendos and your attitudes but nothing serious happened," says Williams, who was a vocational agriculture teacher at the time.

But Williams and Morris Johnson, now principal at Samuel Houston Elementary, credit the commitment of the community and school system for making integration run as smoothly as it did.

"Huntsville had the smoothest transition of any East Texas county I know of," Johnson, 48, said. "But somewhere the identity of the black kids got lost."

Generations of students at Sam Houston High School — including Richard Watkins and Cecil Williams — say they are proud of the education they received there, regardless of a lack of supplies and equipment.

"Over the years," Williams says, "I've learned just how quality an education it was."

Home video game controversy continues

Psychologist John Rosemond believes a home-video games, with all their blasting and zapping, are a hazard to players' — especially younger ones — health.

Eight-year-old Adam Haverland, on the other hand, believes all the blasting and zapping is great and good fun.

Rosemond, who writes a nationally syndicated newspaper column about child behavior from his home in Charlotte, N.C., believes that video games are violent, frustrating, stress-producing, "addictive" machines that cause children to become obsessive, rageful and hostile.

He is not alone in his opinion.

Young Adam, however, believes video games can be "fun and exciting." He is not alone in his opinion, either.

Some 8.6 million home-video systems and some 42 million games worth close to $2 billion have been sold in the United States in the past two years, according to industry figures. The best-selling system — the Japanese-made Nintendo, which costs between $100 and $150 — has topped the toy charts for months.

And while some psychologists would like to ban video games, others say they may not be such bad Christmas presents after all.

"We couldn't find anything about them that was really bad," said Geoffrey Loftus, a psychology professor at the University of Washington.

LOFTUS AND his psychologist wife, Elizabeth, spent two years studying the mental effects of the games. "In fact, we found they had enormous motivational power."

In the early 1980s, the Loftuses interviewed hundreds of young video-game players for a book, "Mind at Play," and found a number of examples of video games doing good. Young Mark, for example, started off with a joystick and ended up with a college degree in computer programming after becoming curious about how his favorite games were designed.

"We found these games could be a powerful educational tool," Loftus said.

Patricia Marks Greenfield, a psychology professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, reported similar findings in her research on video games.

In her book, "Mind and Media: The Effects of Television, Video Games and Computers," Greenfield disputes the contention that video games are addictive. Instead, she writes, they may actually promote flexibility and independent achievement.

"... They are undeniably attractive, and there is something about that attraction that disturbs people," Greenfield writes. "Before deciding that video games are bad simply because they are attractive, it makes sense to consider what features make them so attractive."

What's a parent to think?

Rosemond, in a recent column, urged parents not to buy the systems, no matter how much their kids begged. He believes there is only one thing that keeps children coming back for more — an addictive obsession.

"It's very disturbing — they become hooked to the score or level of proficiency," Rosemond said. "Once a child becomes proficient, he becomes determined to increase his level, then increase and increase. If he's not able to do better, he's likely to go into a rage.

"IN CHILDREN who play a lot, I've seen a decrease in overall tolerance for frustration and an increase in conflicts with siblings and parents."

Parents and others who read his column apparently feel the same way. After Rosemond urged a boycott of the games, more than 300 people wrote to say they shared his concerns.

One writer, Robert Coates, a school psychologist from Spencer, Va., said at least four parents had complained to him that they had difficulty prying their children away from their Nintendo systems. In addition, after playing, children appeared frustrated and irritable.

"During the past school year, we occasionally allowed our own son to rent a Nintendo machine," Coates wrote to Rosemond. "However, we discontinued allowing this after we noticed him developing the same behavior patterns mentioned above."

Nolan Berman, a San Diego pediatrician, said he, too, is concerned about the use of home-video systems. He regularly speaks with parents about how much time their children are spending with television — either watching shows or playing games.

Berman worries about certain violent games in particular. Such as:

■ Metal Gear ($37.99). "Trained in hand-to-hand combat and skilled in every weapon known to man, you're code-named Solid Snake," reads the advertisement on the box.

■ Freedom Force, "The Ultimate Zapper Gun Game," ($34.99). "Standing in your way are two deadly units of extremist guerrillas, four stunningly lifelike and deadly airport scenarios and a climactic one-on-one duel with the most-feared anarchist in the world today," reads the box.

■ 1942 ($29.99). This game features warlike air battles.

NINTENDO SPOKESMAN Richard Lindner countered with a list of "playful" and "challenging" games, such as:

■ Excitebike ($27.95), which allows the player to choose from five different race tracks, or he designs his own race course.

■ Super Team Games ($37.95), in which players are placed in a summer camp-type environment and compete in a series of obstacle and team sports.

■ Mike Tyson's Punch-Out ($29.95). "Fight your way to the World Video Boxing Association's championship title against the champ himself."

Psychologist Robert Gordon of Allentown, Pa., says such video games — in fact, all video games — are terrific fun. He plays them and allows his two children, ages 5 and 8, to play them as well.

The concerns of Rosemond and others are just "fashionable scapegoating," Gordon said.

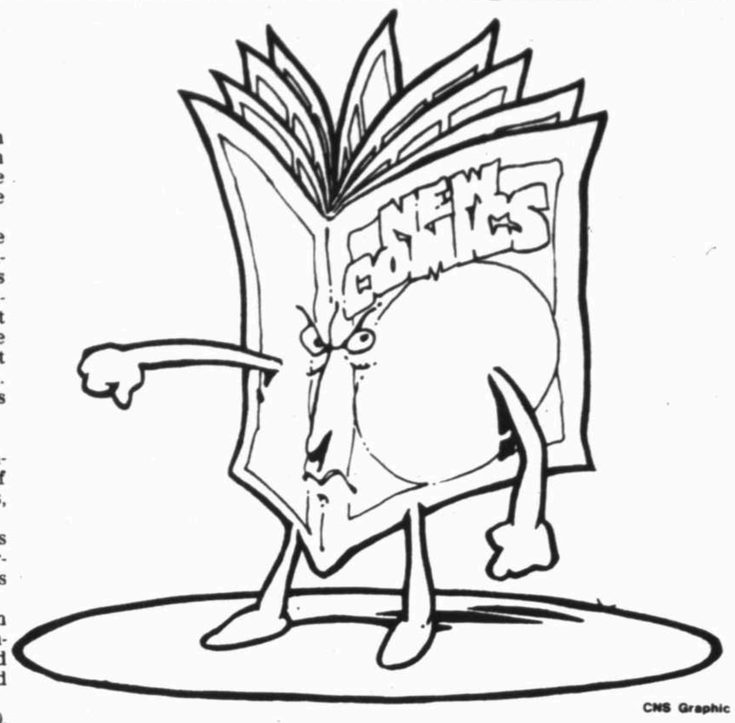

"People always project fears about what's affecting children," Gordon said. "I remember hearing the same things about comic books. I had to hide my comic books in the early 1950s."

Gordon believes video games help children with hand-eye coordination, patience and logical reasoning.

"It's the ideal psychological situation," he said. "The games reinforce ideal values. You have to follow rules and be logical and patient."

So what's all the fuss about addiction, irritability and hostile behavior among children who use the games?

"If you have a hostile child, there is only one reason why — a hostile or aggressive parent," Gordon said. "If you're having trouble with your kid, don't take away his video games. Go for family therapy."

New comic books reflect attitude, culture changes

By HERBERT LONDON
Copley News Service

When I was a young man, comic books were read for escape, adventure and to confirm my belief in the basic goodness of the United States. Superman fought to protect the American way, Joe Palooka preserved our moral standards and Captain Marvel kept our streets and cities free of crime. There was little ambiguity in these heroic tales; they were unapologetically patriotic and respectful of the status quo.

In the post-Vietnam period, comic books became a reflection of a new social and political sensibility that substituted titillation for escape and moral equivalence for patriotism. The heroes of yesteryear were shorn of their epiclike proportions and converted into neurotics, sex fiends, schizophrenics and perverts. Recently, politics with a decidedly anti-administration bias has insinuated itself into comic book portrayals. The new comic book is to adventure tales what courtship is to an orgy.

Warner Books has published "Batman: Year One," a comic book about a neurotic superhero who is the successor to the caped crusader. In this book Batman suffers from guilt about his role as a justice-seeking hero in a society where justice cannot be determined and where the criminal may indeed be the real social hero. This fall Warner will publish "Brought to Light," a comic about the Iran-Contra affair with the conclusion that this episode is endemic to Washington politics.

While the relative success of the new comic book has spawned a controversy, most of the debate deals with the quality of these books rather than the not-so-subtle effort at propaganda. Yet it should be obvious that the format disguises meaning since the picture transcends the words. Ling Lucas, an associate publisher at Warner Books, defends the comics by saying, "It is really just another way to get people to read, especially a subject that younger people normally consider dry, like politics."

Chewing gum for the mind may be the ultimate purpose of comic books. But the power of images digested daily cannot be overestimated. The new comic book is the MTV of print. It converts violence, sex, blood, gore, immorality into colorful pictorials that sanitize pain and humiliation. Moreover, it is not simply politics to which Lucas and his colleagues refer, it is a specific kind of politics inspired by the New Left in the 1960s.

It is not coincidental that the yippies were latter-day caricatures of comic book figures who employed the language and toys of comics to decry the evils of the Western world. Nothing was too extreme or bizarre to require inhibition by the yippies and nothing is so tasteless as to be unmentioned on the pages of the contemporary comic book.

In some sense comics are the latest manifestation of a countercultural ethos that has relentlessly assailed the national character for the last two decades. If comic books are different from television programs, films and books, it is in the extremism and monochromatic views they express. Only one sensibility sees the light of day in the contemporary comic book. And that sensibility involves unremitting criticism.

Traditional English working-class game imported to U.S.

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — In England, it's a class game. In the United States, it's becoming a classy one.

If you guessed that the game is darts, score a bull's-eye. As the working-class associations with darts become blurred by the rise of international darts play, the popularity of the game grows.

"With 150 teams of four to six players, the Houston Darts Association represents everyone from cab drivers to judges," said Rick Osgood of Rick's Darts and Games. "And there's a team of theater people, but they have two alternates because they're out of town so much," he said.

At 14 years, Rick's is one of the oldest darts stores in the country. He and wife Loretta run the shop and talk up the game.

"Darts is a good game for the times," Osgood said. For one thing, darts can be played almost anywhere — all you need is a wall. It requires no floor space, and can be played in a small apartment as well as a large, noisy pub. One person can play, and the weather is never a factor. Strength and stamina are of little consequence. Women and children can compete with men.

And it's almost always free, at least as played in pubs, bars or other public places. Electronic darts is another story, and one with its own partisans.

Fans like to call their sport user-friendly. "They say it's the only game where the players shake hands before and after the event," Osgood said.

Real players also call darts "arrows." Supposedly, darts began when archers in the 16th century had to spend time indoors on rainy days. They tied a tree stump to a wall, then used their arrows. The game got its first major publicity boost when Henry VIII gave Anne Boleyn a set of darts — before he beheaded her.

DEAR ABBY

Poor image ironic curse of public relations pros

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter, a high school senior (I'll call him John) accused a girl of stealing his girlfriend's expensive bomber jacket. He made this accusation publicly in a crowded school lunchroom. Actually, the girl had bought the jacket herself from money she had saved from baby-sitting. The poor girl was humiliated and fled in tears. John learned soon afterward that he had wrongly accused this girl, so he had flowers delivered to her in care of her classroom. The girl's mother thought this was an act of "chivalry," but you called it a "grandstand play," then added: "This kid is a natural showman. He should go far in the P.R. business."

Abby, it's sad that so many people perpetuate the myth that public relations professionals are "showmen," con artists and snake oil salesmen. Today's public relations professionals are ethical, conscientious and honest, and to suggest that the "showmanship" exhibited by that brash, insensitive young man qualifies him for a successful career in the P.R. business is an insult to all of us in that profession.

Please use the power of your column to set the record straight. I think you owe a public apology to all of us in the P.R. business. — A.J. SOLEY, JOLIET, ILL.

DEAR MR. SOLEY, and everyone else whom I offended: It was not my intention to denigrate the public relations profession. It's my understanding that one of the functions of a public relations firm is to create, improve and maintain positive images for people and businesses through publicity and advertising campaigns. (Remember the Tylenol tampering scare — and how well that product recovered?)

Back to John: Had this young man been able to hire a top-notch P.R. firm to restore his tarnished image, they could not have done a better job than he did. Brash as he was, he also had the kind of imagination and creativity one needs to go far in the P.R. business.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please straighten me out on something that has baffled me for years? When do you use "infer" and when do you use "imply"? I always confuse these two words.

Please don't send me to the dictionary. I have looked up both of these words a dozen times, and I still don't get it. — DETROIT DUMMY

DEAR DUMMY: "Imply" means to suggest or to say indirectly. "Infer" means to deduce, or conclude from facts or indications.

Corporal punishment foes back anti-paddling legislation

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Opponents of corporal punishment in Texas schools say its time has passed and liken the ritual to child abuse.

"It's totally counter-productive," Jimmy Dunne, president and founder of People Opposed to Paddling Students, said from his Houston home.

"It's not an effective way to discipline children. ... It only adds to violence in children," he added.

Of the more than 1,000 districts in Texas, only two — Alamo Heights in Bexar County and Clear Creek in suburban Houston — are believed to have banned corporal punishment, Dunne told the San Antonio Light.

Dunne, a former Houston teacher, and other anti-corporal punishment activists were in Austin last month to testify for an anti-paddling bill sponsored by state Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston.

The legislation would limit paddling in Texas public schools to those students whose parents sign a consent form allowing corporal punishment.

Texas requires districts to draft a "discipline management plan" that spells out a corporal punishment policy, but does not lay out specific guidelines on when or how students should be paddled, said Joe Lozano, a spokesman for the Texas Education Agency.

The only guidance given districts is a section of the Texas Penal Code concerning the relationship between an educator and a student, he said. The three-paragraph section states that corporal punishment is justified when an educator "reasonably believes ... force is necessary ... to maintain discipline in a group."

Consequently, there is no uniform discipline policy, leaving districts to devise their own standards. And virtually all choose to permit corporal punishment in one form or another.

The U.S. Supreme Court today let stand the Texas law that allows the use of all necessary corporal punishment short of deadly force.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had upheld the Texas law in dismissing a lawsuit filed on behalf of two kindergarten girls paddled severely for "snickering."

The decision barred students from suing teachers and school administrators in federal court over alleged Eighth Amendment violations, but left them free to sue in state courts under state laws.

In 1985-86, the most recent school year for which statistics are available, 260,399 Texas public school students were paddled — more than twice the number of students paddled in second-place Florida, according to a study by the National Coalition of Advocacy for Students.

Drawing on data furnished by the U.S. Department of Education, the Boston-based group's analysis revealed that Texas students were paddled at a rate of nearly eight of every 100 students during the year studied.

Texas requires districts to draft a "discipline management plan" that spells out a corporal punishment policy, but does not lay out specific guidelines on when or how students should be paddled, said Joe Lozano, a spokesman for the Texas Education Agency.

Six states had higher corporal punishment rates, or greater percentages of students paddled. Arkansas, for instance, led the nation with 13.7 percent of its public school students paddled.

Opponents of corporal punishment are both passionate and organized. They come armed with a wealth of studies, claiming to document the negative effects of corporal punishment.

One study shows that 1 million children are paddled a year, 20,000 of whom suffer injuries ranging from bruises to broken tailbones, according to Robert Fathman of the National Coalition to Abolish Corporal Punishment in Schools of Westerville, Ohio.

Fathman predicted that Texas, were it to abolish corporal punishment, would realize an almost overnight decrease in vandalism and high school dropouts.

"That's just common sense when you're spanking kids with boards," he said from his Ohio office.

Despite a 1977 U.S. Supreme Court decision upholding corporal punishment, several professional organizations have come out against the paddling, among them the American Bar Association, American Medical Association, American Psychological Association and the American Academy of Pediatricians.

Opponents note that juvenile delinquents are offered more legal protection than school children.

State law forbids children in detention centers from being beaten, said Bart Kelly, placement and counseling director for Youth Alternatives Inc., a private non-profit organization that provides temporary and long-term shelter and counseling to troubled youths.

So far, 12 states, mostly Northern, have banned paddling: California, Hawaii, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin.

College may hire agency to get bad debts

KILLEEN (AP) — The American Educational Complex is considering hiring a collection agency to help look for a few good men — about 8,000 military personnel who owe the college $1.5 million.

For at least five years, the Central Texas complex has allowed out-of-state military personnel to pay tuition and fees with promissory notes, signed documents pledging to pay the amount owed to the community college.

But about 8,000 of the soldiers, sailors and Marines who have enrolled in the college's worldwide education programs have shipped out — or skipped out — without paying, leaving the college holding the notes.

Chancellor Jim Anderson said the college will end the practice of accepting the notes as soon as it can set up a worldwide system to allow military personnel to charge the courses to credit cards.

The courses are taught by Central Texas College, one of the AEC's four operating units and the only one receiving state and local funds.

33 illegal aliens arrested in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal immigration officials arrested 33 illegal aliens at two Houston "drop houses" and seven others accused of smuggling them into the city in a rental truck, authorities said.

The Central American aliens were rounded up during weekend raids of two southeast Houston apartments in renewed attempts to thwart alien smuggling following the end of the immigration amnesty program, officials of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service said.

The anti-smuggling sweep targeted Houston, Brownsville and McAllen, said Michael McMahon, district INS director in Houston.

Twelve illegal aliens fled prior to a Brownsville raid after operators of a drop house were tipped off, McMahon said.

d. a text addition to explain emergency ringback.

The application is styled Docket No. 8565, Application of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company for Approval of Amendment of Universal Emergency Number Service (911) Tariff. It is anticipated that Docket No. 8565 will be evidentiary in nature.
