Six Lebanese injured in guerrilla bombing

KHALDE, Lebanon (AP) — A remote-controlled bomb narrowly missed an Israeli military convoy Saturday but wounded six Lebanese, including a man and his three children, on a crowded highway in this seaside resort south of Beirut. The bomb also shattered windows at the nearby U.S. Marine compound.

It was the latest in a series of guerrilla strikes that have killed five Israeli soldiers in Lebanon since Wednesday. The head of the Israeli Parliament's Security and Foreign Affairs Committee, Eliahu Ben-Elissar, told Israel Radio that Israel's patience was wearing thin with the attacks and that Syria should agree quickly to pull its troops out of Lebanon.

Israeli spokesmen said the blast was caused by an explosive charge on the side of the coastal road in Khalde, the Lebanese site of the four-month negotiations that led to the signing of the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement May 17.

An Israeli convoy of one armored personnel carrier, one jeep and one water tanker had just passed the spot and was 25 yards away when the thunderous blast kicked up two clouds of white smoke at 1:35 p.m. (7:35 a.m. EDT). An Associated Press correspondent was in a car 200 yards north of the blast site at the time of the explosion.

She said two girls and a boy, blood pouring from their heads, lay on the ground. Their middle-aged father, a green cloth wrapped around his bleeding forehead, was helped into a nearby Israeli jeep and screamed: "My forehead is killing me. I'm going to die." He then toppled to the ground but continued to breathe.

Hundreds of drivers lined up for more than a mile began to panic. Many honked their horns. Others tried to drive on the shoulders of the road or turn around. One man jumped into a bus and people tried to run in all directions, looking for their children and cars.

The explosion occurred a few hundred yards from a U.S. Marine position. Lance Cpl. George Davis, 19, of New York City, said a car had rushed toward the Marine gate on the highway moments after the blast, carrying a wounded man.

Davis said the man was holding his arm "as though trying to put it back together" and was bleeding from both sides of his chest.

Marine spokesman Maj. Fred Lash said of the bombing: "We could not tell what it was, but it was loud here at headquarters and windows rattled."

French, Italian and British troops also serve with the Marines in the 5,400-man international peacekeeping force.

The first major guerrilla strike this month occurred Wednesday when a remote-controlled car bomb killed two Israeli soldiers and wounded two others as well as seven Lebanese pedestrians.

The second fatal attack came Friday when guerrillas hiding in a lemon grove ambushed and killed three Israeli soldiers on a narrow road in a tiny village east of Lebanon's southernmost port of Tyre.

Terrorists resort to kidnapping

By EARLEEN F. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

ALEY, Lebanon — This sprawling mountain resort of honey-colored stone villas is now a ghost town where few people venture into the streets.

After seven months of fierce fighting, alternating with periods of tense calm between Maronite Christian and Druse militiamen in Aley and other mountain towns, the latest terror tactic is kidnapping.

People who have not fled the artillery shells and gunmen stay close to their shuttered homes in fear of being abducted for no reason other than their religion.

The Maronite Christians are an Eastern sect which has its own patriarch and is recognized by the Roman Catholic Church. The Druse are a secret sect whose creed is basically Islamic.

Survivors of the mass kidnappings, both Druse and Christian, speak of basement rooms where gagged and blindfolded victims were beaten with iron bars and wooden sticks until they fell to the floor, unconscious or dead. They tell of narrow stone bridges outside lonely hamlets where kidnap victims were shot through the head or knifed through the heart, their bodies thrown into the rocky gorges below.

Since Nov. 1, Lebanese police have counted 1,797 kidnappings in the mountains that begin a few miles from downtown Beirut, but not all cases are reported to police. Of the known kidnap victims, police say 159 were killed, 304 are still missing and the rest were freed.

The kidnappings happen behind Israeli army lines, behind Syrian army lines and sometimes in Beirut itself where the Lebanese army is deployed with back-up support from the multinational peacekeeping force that includes U.S. Marines.

"I saw the face of death," said a young businessman, who identified himself as one of 85 Druse abducted May 21 from their cars at a Christian checkpoint outside the village of Deir Dourit in the Israeli-occupied Chouf Mountains.

"The Christian said, 'We are going to kill you,' and they sharpened their knives. At that moment we thought we were going to die," the mustachioed Druse said, seated in a friend's office in Beirut.

The Druse businessman, who is in his mid-20s, eventually was released unharmed after hours of gunpoint interrogation. Fourteen of the Druse abducted at the same time, including five Lebanese army soldiers in uniform, were killed in retribution for the alleged murders of nine Christians by Druse gunmen earlier in the day, according to the businessman and others who said they saw the bodies.

"I was blindfolded and beaten for three days by men who laughed at my pain," he said.

Principal's resignation to be read

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The resignation of the Lee High School principal, expected to be accepted by Midland Independent School District trustees Tuesday, will leave the top positions at both high schools open.

Dr. Joe Smith

Dr. Joe Smith is resigning to enter private business after serving eight years as LHS principal, according to the board meeting agenda.

Smith declined to comment on his decision, and instead said a statement and a letter of resignation would be read to the board Tuesday.

When asked about previous positions held during his 20 years in the Midland school district, Smith replied, "I'd rather not comment about any of it."

Jack Stone, principal of Midland High School for the past five years, was promoted to a new post as director of staff development in February, leaving the principal position vacant.

According to Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, MISD superintendent, the position was created to supervise the district's staff development plan and assist the new teacher inservice program.

Stone also will be involved in teacher recruiting and assignments to schools.

According to Baressi, the MHS position will be filled by Aug. 1. No date for filling the LHS post was available Saturday night.

Stone, who has been with MISD since 1959, served as teacher and coach at San Jacinto Junior High, assistant principal at Austin Junior High and Lee High, and principal of Burnet Elementary and Alamo Junior High.

No background information on Smith was available.

Finalists chosen in logo contest

Thirty-one finalists have been selected in the Midland Reporter-Telegram's emblem contest. Announcement and display of the winning symbol at Midland Park Mall will be made Friday night.

A panel of 10 judges at the newspaper selected 10 winners in each of the contest's three categories. A tie in the category for youngsters in grades one through six resulted in the selection of 11 finalists in that category. After that initial process, the panel then selected one winner in each category and, finally, the winning emblem that will be used to identify the newspaper in the future. More than 200 entries were received in the contest.

The 31 finalists include:

About 20 injured in United plane fire

CHICAGO (AP) — An engine of a United Airlines 727 caught fire Saturday as the jet was taking off from O'Hare International Airport, forcing the evacuation of 148 people and slightly injuring 19, police said.

The injuries occurred as passengers were sliding down emergency ramps from the jet, Flight 200 from Chicago to Tampa, Fla., police officer Jerome Mallon said. The plane carried a crew of seven and 141 passengers.

Police officer Albin Troc said 14 passengers were given first aid at the scene and five were taken to the hospital. Only two remained hospitalized Saturday night.

The first sign of trouble was a loud "pop" as the plane was taxiing down the runway and began to accelerate, said one passenger, Jim Yunker of Chicago. The plane was never in the air.

"The pilot hit the brakes and taxied to an adjacent runway," Yunker said. "One of the pilots or engineers ran to the back of the plane and announced that everyone was to be evacuated.

"Everyone started to get off, and that's when the people got hurt," said Yunker, 36. "It was a very orderly evacuation. Everyone kept their heads."

Mallon said the fire in the left engine began about 5:30 p.m.

"The engine blew when the pilot accelerated," Mallon said. "The crew of the aircraft behind him said the plane had smoke and fire coming from its engine."

The fire was put out by firefighters and the plane's internal fire extinguisher system, Mallon said.

"It really wasn't that big a deal," said passenger Jim Frells of San Francisco. "I thought it was a flat tire."

Frells, 35, described the exit from the plane as "not so much quietly but orderly — it was kind of nerve-wracking."

Helen Weber, 38, of Western Springs, Ill., said she saw smoke out her plane window. "You have a minute of 'Is this for real?'" she said.

During the evacuation, Ms. Weber said she was prepared to "leave calmly until everyone started yelling." Once on the wing, she said she didn't know what to do. "It was much higher than I thought."

Ms. Weber slid down the emergency chute with the help of crew directions.

The plane was towed to a hangar at O'Hare for inspection. The Federal Aviation Administration will investigate the incident, according to FAA spokesman Mort Edelstein.

Air Canada flight lands safely after fire set

TORONTO (AP) — A disgruntled deportee set a small fire in the lavatory of an Air Canada jet on a flight from Toronto to Bermuda Saturday, but the fire was quickly extinguished and the plane landed safely, an airline spokesman said.

There were no injuries and damage from the fire, set as the plane was about 10 miles off Bermuda, was minimal, spokesman Brock Stewart said.

The aircraft, a Boeing 727, carried 63 passengers and a crew of eight.

A suspect was arrested by police when the plane landed in Hamilton, Bermuda's capital, according to Stewart, but his name and nationality were not immediately disclosed.

Stewart said the suspect apparently used a cigarette to ignite waste paper in the lavatory. Automatic extinguishers were activated and crew members moved quickly to prevent damage, he said. The incident occurred about 1:30 p.m. EDT.

The aircraft, Flight 942, was only slightly delayed before returning to Toronto, Stewart said.

Twenty-three people died June 2 when a fire of unknown origin broke out in the lavatory of an Air Canada flight from Dallas to Toronto. The badly charred plane managed to land in Cincinnati, and 23 other people aboard survived.

Judge sentences Reyos to 38 years in prison

ODESSA (AP) — A state district judge Saturday imposed a jury-recommended 38-year prison sentence and $5,000 fine on James Harry Reyos in the beating death of a Catholic priest Reyos said he killed after a homosexual encounter.

Reyos was convicted Friday and faced a possible life sentence. Jurors deliberated his punishment for about four hours Saturday. Judge Gene Ater, as required by law, imposed the sentence they recommended.

Reyos' attorneys, who argued that their client falsely confessed to the slaying last year out of guilt over having sex with the priest, said they would appeal the verdict.

Reyos, 27, of Chama, N.M. has remained in jail in lieu of $100,000 bond since his arrest in November 1982 in Albuquerque.

The dead priest's parishioners stood with hands clasped and heads bowed, and broke into tears when the verdict was read by 70th Judicial District Judge Gene Ater.

Attorneys for both sides refused comment after Reyos was convicted.

But before Friday's verdict, defense attorneys felt confident the 27-year-old Reyos would be acquitted.

"I feel we were able to present all the information that was available, and I feel that information created a reasonable doubt," said defense attorney John Cliff. "We feel the jury should reach a verdict of not guilty."

New Mexico police arrested Reyos last November when he told officers he killed Ryan in an Odessa motel room after a homosexual encounter with the priest.

But Ryan's brother, Rodger of San Jose, Calif., said the verdict gave his brother "somewhat of a pardon from those terrible descriptions" of him in the trial.

The brother sat through the trial.

"The character assasination of the previous days was very detrimental; the previous days were very difficult," he said after the verdict. "Father Paddy was put on trial before the people this week."

A maid found Ryan's body — nude, bound and beaten — in the motel room Dec. 22, 1981. He was identified after his Denver City parishioners became alarmed when he missed Christmas Eve services.

Reyos' statements to authorities were false confessions prompted by guilt over the defendant's homosexual contact with the priest, defense attorneys have contended.

Attorneys also introduced evidence that he was in Roswell, N.M. at the time of the slaying.

But prosecutors called Reyos' alibi "handy," and said Reyos confessed because the priest's killing began to "weigh on his mind."

Ector County Assistant District Attorney Anthony Foster told jurors that Reyos killed and robbed Ryan in the motel room.

"Suddenly he can't take it any more. The guilt consumes him. He gets it out and feels cleansed," Foster said of Reyos' confession.

Foster told the jury that later Reyos "became scared."

"Later he tries to backtrack. He's been backtracking ever since," Foster said.

Psychologist Dr. Samuel Roll told the court in testimony Thursday that Reyos was not likely to have killed the priest.

"It is extremely unlikely Mr. Reyos cmuld have committed a crime of this nature," said Roll. "It's my opinion that the confession he gave police concerning his killing Father Ryan is a false confession. That's my opinion based of a high degree of scientific certainty."

He said after extensive testing in May, he found Reyos has had homosexual tendencies from a very early age. Reyos had a very difficult time accepting hIs sexuality, which caused "him a great deal of guilt and a great deal of shame," Roll said.

Parties try to get handle on voters

By GARTH JONES

AUSTIN (AP) — How do you get the political attention of voters in fast growing suburban areas?

What can you do about voters who take part in party primary elections then go fishing when the general election comes around?

Those are two of the political questions the Texas Democratic and Republican parties are trying to answer now.

Both are important to the 1984 elections, just a year away, with the crucial balloting for next U.S. president and, in Texas, selection of a U.S. senator.

Suburban voters are largely a mystery to political campaigners because so many of them moved to the outskirts from the central city or from out of state. Many have changed addresses since the 1978 presidential elections and the 1980 state elections and are not on voter registration rolls. Most suburban areas do not have the tight political organizations found in larger cities.

Republicans are particularly interested in turnouts because that's where they were whipped by Democrats in Texas in 1980.

The strategy of any successful political campaign is to find the voters who are favorable to your candidates and get them to the polls.

"I envision the day when we will have a complete computer profile of Texas voters, but it is an expensive process and not around the corner just yet," says George Strake of Houston, state Republican chairman.

"We're in pretty good shape but we still have a lot of work to do," said State Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle of Sherman. "We've got computer tapes of about 1.2 million of those who voted in the Democratic primary last year, then we've got copies of tapes from the 29 urban and suburban counties in the telephone banks financed by the Mark White, Bill Hobby and Lloyd Bentsen campaigns last year, plus calling lists from about 40 other telephone banks we operated during the campaign."

"We are making progress in identifying voters in the larger cities," said Strake. "Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth have good plans to identify voters and get them registered. We will have phone banks later to get out the vote."

More definite plans will be made when the State Republican Executive Committee meets Saturday inAustin.

"At that time we will target precincts where we will have voter registration drives, such as the Houston program," Strake said. "In Houston, they have volunteers to get all the street numbers and then compare with registered voters lists to find out those not registered."

All efforts are pointing to the 1984 general election.

"The Democrats whipped us in November 1980 (when Repuboican Gov. Bill Clements was defeated)" Strake said. "They turned out 90 percent of those who voted for Jimmy Carter in 1978 but we had only a turnout of 55 or 60 percent of those who had voted for Ronald Reagan."

Slagle said Democratic party leaders have talked with Dan McClung of New Orleans, who has wide experience in organizing telephone banks, including operations in 34 key Democratic counties in 1980.

"We're considering hiring McClung, or others, for telephone and direct mail operations after the May (1984) primaries," Slagle said.

"As before, we will stress straight-ticket voting, although I don't know how much more we could do than we did last time. We will have more telephone banks I know."

Slagle plans to create a Task Force on Problem Areas at the next meeting "in the next week or 10 days."

"We've been teaching precinct and county workers in workshops all spring, but we need to do more.

"One of our big problems is what do we do in the suburbs. We are not sufficiently organized there," Slagle said.

Business back to normal after balcony collapse

GALVESTON (AP) — Business is back to "just like normal" at a tavern here after 26 people were injured Friday afternoon when the balcony collapsed under the weight of patrons trying to get to free beer.

"Everything's fine" but the balcony is out of use at the Sports Club Tavern, a spokesman said Saturday.

Three people were admitted to John Sealy Hospital after 26 were checked for injuries. Daniel Winn, 27, of League City was the only one still in the hospital early Saturday night. Winn, who had a knee injury, was in good condition, a hospital spokesperson said.

Witnesses at the tavern said partygoers continued to drink and dance Friday night as ambulance workers hauled off the 26 people injured in the accident. Some of those injured at the party, sponsored by Houston rock radio station KSRR-FM, returned to the bar after being treated at a local hospital.

Thomas Stewart, who was carried away on a stretcher but returned to the tavern, said he was fourth in line at the beer keg.

"They said, 'Form one line through here.' All of a sudden, the next thing you know, it (the platform) shifted," Stewart said. He said the 10-foot drop, which left him buried beneath 10 or 15 bodies, "sort of put me in a daze."

Smallest baby in stable condition

HOUSTON (AP) — A a 14-ounce baby born 4½ months premature, who may be the world's smallest human, is in critical but stable condition after being flown to Houston's Hermann Hospital by emergency medical helicopter.

Melissa Michelle Maurer was on a respirator Saturday in a neonatal intensive care unit at the hospital, said Sarah Sharpless, assistant director of Life Flight emergency helicopter service.

She was born June 1 in Victoria but was transferred to the Houston neonatal unit after her weight began dropping rapidly and suffered a buildup of carbon dioxide in her lungs, said an official with Citizens Memorial Hospital in Victoria.

Man jailed for running over couple

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND (AP) — A 25-year-old San Benito man remains jailed today connection with an involuntary manslaughter charge in the deaths of a young married couple who were run over by a van as they lay on the beach.

Joel Manrique, 25, is charged with involuntary manslaughter in the deaths of Patricia Sims McCarter 23, of Lipan and her husband, Michael J. McCarter, 25, who underwent an unsuccesful operation for extensive chest and abdominal injuries.

Natural gas negotiations begin

AUSTIN (AP) — Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said Friday negotiations have started with San Antonio for the purchase of state-owned natural gas.

"We have determined that we have the ability to take in-kind a sufficient amount of gas to supply the City Public Service Co. of San Antonio with 10,000 million cubic feet per day through a five year contract," Mauro said.

San Antonio currently uses 41 million cubic fett of gas daily. The portion supplied by the state would be almost 25 percent of the city's current usage.

LULAC head talks to ABC president

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The leader of a national Hispanic group traveled to ABC headquarters in New York to discuss efforts "to improve images and opportunities for Hispanics."

Tony Bonilla, president of the Corpus Christi-based League of United Latin-American Citizens, earlier had written ABC President John Severino to protest the cancellation of the "Condo" comedy series, contending "Condo" and NBC's "Hill Street Blues" were the only network shows that had "Hispanics playing Hispanics."

Bonilla said he met Wednesday with Severino to learn what ABC planned to do to increase Hispanic "accessibility and opportunity." He has already met with representatives of NBC, CBS, PBS and movie studios "in an effort to approve images of Hispanics."

Managers try to entice renters

HOUSTON (AP) — Attempting to bolster sagging occupancy rates that average only about 80 percent, apartment managers are cutting their rents and offering a variety of economic enticements to prospective residents.

One Houston complex is sending brightly brightly colored flyers to residents at a nearby competitor, offering a "summer savings special" of one to two months' free rent, a drawing for six months rent-free and payment of utility deposits.

The average apartment rent has dropped in the last three months by 15 percent — from $350 to $325 — said Paul A. Nichols, vice president of the Houston Apartment Association.

West Texas Utilities requests rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) — West Texas Utilities, which provides electricity for 161 cities, including Abilene and Ballinger, asked the Public Utility Commission on Friday for a $26.6 million rate increase.

The company wants to raise residential rates by 12 percent, and add 12.2 percent to commercial rates, according to PUC spokesman Rick Hainline.

The proposed rate hike would add 10.2 percent to commercial rates.

Burned body former Texas man

LAS CRUCES (AP) — New Mexico officials tentatively have identified the burned body of a man found in a Dona Ana County landfill as that of a former Texas man.

Dona Ana County Sheriff Henry Diaz said the dead man was identified as Calvin Johnson, 31, a former inmate at the Texas Department of Corrections in Huntsville.

The sheriff said investigators believe Johnson was murdered and that a preliminary report from the Office of the Medical Investigator said Johnson died from "blunt trauma to the head."

Defendant marries key witness

FORT WORTH (AP) — Prosecutors say they will not call a key witness to the stand in a murder trial because one of the defendants married her.

Defense lawyers surprised Assistant District Attorney Rufus Adcock on Thursday when they produced a marriage license and said 18-year-old defendant Marcial Vela had married Esther Martinez, 17, in Weatherford on Wednesday.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Teachers' wages only part of problem

Another part is teachers who can't teach

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Earlier this year, as the University of Texas at Austin began its year-long centennial celebration, UT President Dr. Peter Flawn raised the question of whether excellence is undemocratic.

Flawn's question fits into the long-running debate over UT-Austin's charge to be a university "of the first class," the charge laid upon it by the legislature at the time of its creation.

That argument is part of the larger debate over the role of education in a democracy.

Historically, Americans have looked to education as the key to individual advancement — to the "good life" — and as a socializing mechanism.

In early Texas, as in many other parts of the nation, the school and the church were the focal points for community activity.

Today, for many smaller communities in particular, it is often the school, as much as anything else, which provides a sense of community identity.

Unfortunately a University of Texas study on illiteracy indicates Texans need to feel concern as well as pride in their schools and should be taking a closer look at what's happening with education.

That study shows some two million Texans — 21 percent of the state's adult population — are functionally illiterate.

Taken together, those figures mean half the state's adults either can't function, or can function only with difficulty, in situations which involve basic reading, writing and computation skills.

Improving quality of public education is a topic which has been battered about by various experts and non-experts, including those in the Texas Legislature, with much argument over what causes the problems in schools, and what should, or can, be done about them.

Lawmakers, in their recently concluded session, talked about the need to raise teachers' salaries, to attract qualified and talented persons into teaching, and to keep them there.

Of course, after all the talk, there wasn't much money allocated to teachers' salaries, despite Gov. Mark White's warning that he would call lawmakers back for a special session if they failed to enact the 24 percent increase he'd promised teachers during his election campaign.

But whatever eventually happens on teachers' salaries, that's only part of the problem with the educational system.

Another part, as has been rightly pointed out by lawmakers, is teachers who can't teach.

That problem has been addressed by attempts at competency testing.

How much help that may provide is still open to question — but news accounts of recent testing of 3,200 Houston teachers contend there was widespread cheating — with teachers exchanging answers and test booklets.

Other states have found competency testing is far from being a cure-all; in Florida, the state test has been attacked as racially biased, and it will be surprising if similar challenges aren't raised in Houston or elsewhere in Texas.

School districts also find themselves bound up in almost endless paperwork which, as with other bureaucracies, becomes an end in itself, rather than a device to assure efficiency.

Schools also find themselves fenced in by state and federal regulation, and local policies as well, dealing with everything from the curriculum to the weight limits for cheerleaders.

Then there are the students. Or perhaps we should say pupils.

Too many of them are undisciplined and teachers find themselves reluctant or unable to impose discipline, due to the threat of complaints or even legal action.

Almost any teacher one might ask can relate incidents of verbal or physical abuse, or certainly has a colleague who has experienced such incidents — which aren't confined to the upper grades, either.

Disciplina praesidium civitatis — so the University of Texas seal proclaims, and indeed education is the bulkwark which protects society.

As Flawn also noted earlier this year, society must promote excellence in education in order that the society as a whole advances.

But the UT study on illiteracy shows that for public education, Texans may need to be worrying about adequacy as much, or more, than excellence.

Botulism corrects girl's crossed eyes

HOUSTON (AP) — It took eight years and two unsuccessful operations, but Michelle Clemens can see straight now after she was injected with trace amounts of a deadly poison to correct her crossed eyes.

The eight-year-old girl's severe strabismus, or cross-eye, is almost corrected after three botulism injections, according to her attending physician. Before the treatment, her family said she had trouble reading because of severe eye muscle coordination problems.

Only about 300 patients across the country have made use of the technique in the five years it has been used on humans, doctors said.

The treatment involves injecting a saline solution containing a small amount of botulism into the muscles that control the eye. Botulism can cause severe food poisoning and death.

"The dose injected is between one two-thousandth and one four-thousandth of that considered lethal," said Dr. Monte I. Stavis, Michelle's pediatric opthamologist.

Stavis is one of 35 eye experts trained to perform the botulism injections. Each injection takes five minutes, he said.

Michelle's mother, Diane Shoelen, said that before her daughter had the injections, she had had two operations, and had worn glasses and done eye exercises.

"But she really wasn't any better," Mrs. Shoelen said.

But for some patients not wishing to have standard surgery or who have moderately serious strabismus, he believes the injections will be advantageous.

Dr. Malcolm L. Mazow, an ophthamology professor at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston, cautioned against "overly aggressive" use of the injections. Mazow has supervised extensive animal studies of the injection method.

"The jury is still out on the real benefits of this investigational technique," he said.

Rains cause flooding in western Oklahoma

By The Associated Press

Overnight and early morning thunderstorms Saturday dumped as much as 4 inches of rain on western Oklahoma and caused local flooding.

Widely scattered afternoon showers extended from Iowa across Louisiana, and from eastern Nebraska across Oklahoma and the eastern two-thirds of Texas.

Florida also had scattered rain and thundershowers.

Record highs for the day were reported around the Great Lakes, with an 85 at Marquette, Mich., and 81 at Green Bay, Wis.

Temperature extremes at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 41 at Butte, Mont., and 102 at Gila Bend, Ariz. The low for the day was 33 degrees at Burns, Ore.

For today, scattered showers were forecast over northern New England, much of Florida and Upper Michigan. Rain was forecast from Idaho across Utah, Montana, Wyoming, the Nebraska Panhandle and the western Dakotas.

Highs in the mid 60s were predicted along the Washington coast; in the low 70s over the southern coast of California; near 80 along Lake Superior; in the low 80s through northern New England; in the 80s and 90s over Florida; in the 90s over southern Texas, and near 100 across southwestern Texas and through the inland Southwest.

Floodwater's flow through city stopped

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Crews plugged the diversion of floodwater down a mile-long sandbag canal on State Street on Saturday, drying up the downtown river that snarled traffic and became a tourist attraction.

Meanwhile, federal officials considered a request to add three new counties in Utah to a list of 13 receiving disaster aid in the flooding that has caused $300 million in damage and claimed the lives of three people, including an infant who drowned Friday.

Crews were foiled in plans to start clearing sandbags Friday from State Street and two others that have been used as temporary canals to handle overflow from flood-swollen mountain streams.

Transit plan rejected

HOUSTON (AP) — A $2.35 billion bond issue to fund a rail transit system in this sprawling city known for its freeway traffic jams was rejected decisively Saturday.

With 494 of 512 boxes counted, 61.7 percent had voted against the bonds. The vote count was 39,871 in favor, 65,870 against.

Turnout appeared to be running about 10 percent of the eligible voters in the 1,275-square-mile area served by the Metropolitan Transit Authority. Supporters of the bonds had said a light turnout would be a bad sign for the plan.

Houston has no rail service and its bus system is limited. The city depends largely on a freeway system that has been overwhelmed by an explosive population growth.

Metro was asking to borrow against future sales tax revenues to help finance a program worth $5.2 billion. Officials proposed no increase in the 1-cent sales tax the agency now peceives.

Metro proposes to use the bonds to build the 18.5-mile first stage of the rail project, to nearly double its fleet of 429 buses to 850 by 1990, and to build new maintenance facilities, satellite parking lots and transit terminals.

The 17-station rail system, elevated except for a two-mile subway downtown, would parallel major freeways running north and southwest from the downtown area.

Metro general manager Alan Kiepper wants to eventually build a 94-mile rail system, but has yet to decide what routes the trains would run.

The plan was backed by Mayor Kathy Whitmire and 11 other City Council members. Three members opposed it.

City Councilman John Goodner, who heads the Neighborhood Transportation Forum, an anti-rail-system group, said he opposed the bond issue "because we'd be taking 80 percent of available funds to address the needs of something like 3 percent of this city's residents.

"We're opposed to that kind of financing," Goodner said.

Supporters of the proposal said it would create jobs and improve the city's traffic problems.

"The city has obvious transportation needs," said Roliff Purrington, treasurer of the Committee for Houston Bus and Rail, a group that backed the proposal.

Another quake shakes California town

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — Another earthquake has struck the tremor-weary Coalinga area, destroying a house, shifting mobile homes and breaking up roads, six weeks after a devastating quake shattered the town.

No injuries were reported in the 10-second earthquake that shook the central California community of 7,000 people about 200 miles southeast of San Francisco at 8:10 p.m. Friday.

"It is definitely a new quake," said E.J. Fowkes, a geologist at Coalinga's West Hills Community College. "It is not an aftershock of the old quake."

Friday's quake measured 5.2 on the Richter scale of ground motion and was centered about 10 miles northwest of the small oil town, authorities said. It was one of the strongest jolts to hit the city since the 28-second tremor on May 2 that measured 6.5 on the Richter scale and caused $31 million damage.

"We have a surface rupture running northwest to southeast," Fowkes said. "It could be an offshoot of the 6.5 quake zone, but it is definitely a line that we can see this time that we could not see before."

"About 20 families live in the area where the brunt of the shock hit" in Los Gatos Canyon, said Fresno County Sheriff's Sgt. Dave Huerta. No one was evacuated, but some left voluntarily to spend the night in Coalinga.

Mike Walker, who drove through the canyon after the latest quake, said the pavement slipped six inches in some spots.

A toppled transformer started a small grass fire that was quickly controlled, and landslides tossed dirt onto narrow roads that wind through foothills.

The family in the lone Los Gatos Canyon home that was destroyed had time to flee. The house was damaged in the earlier quake and "this one pretty much did it in," said city spokesman Bob Semple.

"Some of the people said it sounded like a jet coming right on through there," said Sheriff's Lt. Donald Burk.

Craft becoming true pioneer

By ROBERT LOCKE
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES — Pioneer 10 on Monday becomes the first earthly spaceship to sail beyond the solar system when it begins an eternal voyage among the stars bearing a gold-plated greeting for the cosmos.

Launched March 3, 1972, the 570-pound ship challenged the uncharted hazards beyond Mars as it blazed a new trail through the asteroid belt and ran a gauntlet of radiation to take a close look at Jupiter.

Pioneer's trail, like a mountain pass discovered by explorers and used by settlers, opened a path for spaceships that followed — another Pioneer and two sophisticated Voyagers with high-resolution cameras.

With a dozen scientific instruments extending man's eyes and ears deep into space, Pioneer returned a wealth of knowledge as it explored gigantic Jupiter. It delights scientists still with a search for the edge of the sun's domain.

"I think the name Pioneer is very appropriate," said John H. Wolfe of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center. He was chief scientist for the Ames-directed mission.

"It's got so many firsts, but the biggie is that it is leaving the solar system," he said in a telephone interview.

At 5 a.m. (PDT) Monday, the Pioneer 10, racing away at 30,558 mph, will be 2.81 billion miles from the sun as it leaves behind the last of the nine planets of the solar system.

That's when it crosses the orbit of Neptune. Tiny Pluto is normally the most distant planet but its egg-shaped orbit has, for the next 16 years, brought it closer to the sun than Neptune.

News of the historic passage won't reach Earth until 9:20 a.m. Pioneer is so far from home its radio signals, traveling as fast as light, need 4 hours, 20 minutes to cross the expanse.

Pioneer, said Herbert A. Lassen, "is like an 18-year-old child that's about ready to be on its own.... It's a grand thing."

Lassen, of the TRW Inc. Space and Technology Group, was a key figure in conceiving the Pioneer mission and devising technological strategies that made it possible.

TRW built Pioneer 10 and its sistership Pioneer 11, which followed it to Jupiter, then went off on its own to probe Saturn, a beringed and lovely celestial jewel.

Pioneer 10 had a stipulated lifetime of 21 months. For 11 years, "It has performed beyond all our hopes or expectations," said Charles Hall, now retired, who was project manager for Ames and part of the Pioneer project since 1963.

"With one exception (a magnetometer that measures magnetic fields)," he said, "all of the equipment we turned on at the time of launch is the same equipment that we are using now. None of our redundant equipment was even turned on."

Mission controllers at Ames, who talk to the ship almost daily to calibrate instruments and keep its antenna aimed at Earth, expect to maintain contact through about 1991, and perhaps until 1995, said assistant flight director Alan Fernquist.

Once beyond the sun's atmosphere and into almost empty interstellar space, Pioneer will be in "one of the most benign environments one can imagine," Wolfe said. "There's absolutely nothing to stop it. It will last forever."

At the very least, scientists say, it should still be wandering about the outer rim of our Milky Way galaxy five billion years from now, when our sun is expected to die.

"That," Fernquist said, "is about as close to eternity as you can get."

On Pioneer's flank is a gold-plated plaque bearing a picture of a man and a woman, a chart showing the location of our sun, the nine planets and Pioneer's home planet.

It's there — "like a note in a bottle that you throw overboard in the middle of the ocean," Wolfe said — in case humans on Earth are not alone in the galaxy and some extraterrestrial neighbor stumbles across the ship in coming eons.

Don Bane, now with NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, was one of three science writers who conceived of the plaque and got it aboard the ship.

"I don't think anybody will ever find it out there," he said Thursday. "It's as much a message to the people of Earth as to any civilization that might be out there.... It makes us think: suppose there really are civilizations out there."

There were some tense moments en route to Jupiter. "There were scientists who felt the spacecraft could not get through the asteroid belt," a band of thousands of giant rocks, some hundreds of miles across, that orbits between Mars and Jupiter, Hall said.

"It was the little stuff we were worried about, the gravel," recalled Wolfe. "At the speed we were going, it was a bomb. It could have destroyed the spacecraft."

But Pioneer soared through unscathed.

Next came the intense radiation surrounding Jupiter — radiation that was much stronger much sooner than expected and seemed to be increasing steeply as Pioneer neared the big planet. Hall said he heard several scientists discussing the increase and "one of them said, 'Oh, my God, we've had it.' Then I got concerned."

Car stolen from scene of Chino family slayings found

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A car believed stolen by the killer of four people in a Chino Hills home last week was found here Saturday, 40 miles from the crime scene, police siad.

San Bernardino County Sheriff's Capt. Philip Schuyler, announcing the find at a news conference, initially asked radio stations not to broadcast the news because police were staking out the car. They believed the driver still might be in the area, he said.

"We are pulling the stakeout because there's been enough unfortunate media coverage," he said.

Schuyler said residents were being questioned about whether they might have seen anything and the car was being combed for evidence.

"We believe the car has been driven in the area for the past two or three days," he said.

He said the car was found about 8 a.m. in the parking lot of St. Anthony's Catholic Church by a man walking a dog who recognized the vehicle from media reports. The man said he had passed the same place Friday night and the car wasn't there.

Schuyler said searches were continuing in other areas.

"Our policy is not to put all our eggs in one basket," he said.

The hunt for the missing car, a white 1977 Buick station wagon bearing license plate 2ALL731, previously had focused on the Mexican border after San Diego authorities received a report it had been seen in the area.

Kevin Cooper, an escapee from the California Institute for Men in Chino, has been charged with the slayings and was the target of a nationwide manhunt Saturday.

Cooper, who escaped from the minimum security unit of the facility on June 2, is described as about 6 feet tall, weighing 155 pounds, with an afro haircut. He is considered armed and dangerous.

During the early morning hours of June 5, someone entered a Chino Hills ranch house and fatally slashed and stabbed F. Douglas Ryen, his wife Peggy Ann, both 41; their daughter Jessica, 10; and a neighbor, Christopher Hughes, 11.

Cooper was serving a four-year sentence at Chino after pleading guilty to two counts of burglary in Los Angeles.

Gov. George Deukmejian offered a $10,000 reward for Cooper's arrest and asked for a probe into how he was able to escape.

The Department of Corrections has admitted someone erred in sending Cooper to the minimum security facility after Pennsylvania authorities had notified California officials Cooper was being sought as an escapee from a state mental hospital.

Cranston wins straw poll held in Wisconsin

Alan Cranston

Cranston received 789 votes or 38.8 percent of the total, compared with 727 votes, or 35.7 percent, for Mondale. Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado finished third with 443 votes, or 21.8 percent.

Gary Hart

Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, who did not attend the convention and campaigned in the state only once, got 39 votes.

Walter Mondale

Former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida received 14 votes, and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina received one vote. There were 22 undecided votes.

Cranston, who in January conceded that he was among the "second tier" of Democratic candidates for the presidential nomination, said after Saturday's poll that he was now in the "front tier."

"The results clearly establish I am one of the top three contenders for president of the United States," he declared.

Hart said his showing did not hurt his candidacy, adding, "The race is wide open." He said he would leave the state with "500 or more active Democrats" solidly in his camp.

State party Chairman Matthew Flynn attributed Cranston's victory to his well-organized effort and intense campaign for delegate support in recent weeks.

"The strong organization paid off," Flynn said.

Before the vote, Hart backers had criticized Cranston supporters for allegedly recruiting newcomers to the party to attend the convention and for providing some with hotel accommodations.

Cranston admitted he bought 100 hotel rooms for delegates at a cost of about $4,000, but said he had not paid for delegates' party membership or convention fees and accused Hart of spending too much time criticizing him.

Mondale was considered the front-runner because he had the highest name recognition, having served for 12 years as a senator from neighboring Minnesota before his election as vice president in 1976.

"I'm going to do very well," Mondale said before the vote.

Cranston said he hoped to run a strong second to Mondale. The balloting "will have a great deal to do with the making of the president" in 1984, Cranston told the placard-waving delegates.

Hart declined to predict how he would finish but indicated he expected to get at least 10 percent of the vote.

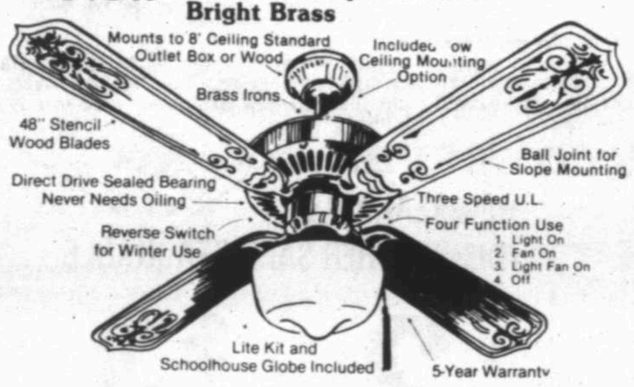

Those three candidates addressed the convention Saturday, calling for arms control and more jobs. Glenn's wife, Annie, also addressed the delegates in a plea for straw poll support.

Like Glenn, Hollings and Askew did not attend the convention.

Cranston, Mondale and Hart were interrupted frequently by applause Saturday, especially when they criticized Reagan and demanded nuclear arms control and jobs for the unemployed.

nation in brief

James Watt

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan defended his environmental record and his interior secretary today, saying that despite allegations to the contrary, "Our country remains America the beautiful."

In his weekly radio broadcast, the president complained that both he and Interior Secretary James Watt were being unfairly criticized on environmental matters.

The president said Watt was the "prime target for those who claim this administration is out to level the forests."

Reagan said a recent "firestorm" about whether more land should be designated as wilderness areas, to be totally preserved in its natural state, was unfair since most of the 174 million acres under study had been turned down by previous administrations.

Men conspire to launder money

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A man indicted with the manager of a store that illegally held migrant workers' savings has pleaded guilty to charges of conspiring to launder $14 million.

Edgar Richard Gallops, 48, was sentenced to three years in prison for conspiring to shift the money between firms and banks in Florida and the Bahamas.

Gerald Crawford is manager of Fred's Barn Market where about $164,000, mostly Haitian farmworkers' savings, was illegally "deposited," authorities said. It closed after one depositor tried unsuccessfully to withdraw $900, officials said.

Man convicted of fatal beatings

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A man whose previous death sentence was overturned on appeal has been convicted again of fatally battering two sleeping women with a cast-iron skillet.

A Superior Court jury convicted 32-year-old Vincente "Perry" Arcega of first-degree murder with special circumstances on Friday, and he could receive another death sentence.

Arcega, whose 1980 conviction and death sentence on the same charges were overturned when the state Supreme Court disallowed certain testimony by a psychiatrist, was found guilty of killing Marilyn Milner, 22, and Leila Faye Blessing, 16, on June 1, 1978.

Freighter carrying marijuana seized

MIAMI (AP) — A 130-foot freighter carrying 15 tons of marijuana valued at $12 million was seized by a Coast Guard boarding party and escorted toward port here Saturday, officials said.

The Rio Pon was seized and 17 Colombian crewmen arrested Friday 200 miles east of Miami, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Mike Kelley.

The prisoners, marijuana and ship were to be turned over to a federal crime control task force on arrival in Miami.

Grand Hotel fire suits postponed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A judge has put off trial until at least mid-October in cases stemming from the fatal MGM Grand Hotel fire in 1980. Trial had been scheduled to start July 11.

U.S. District Judge Louis Bechtle has set 13 wrongful death cases and four personal injury claims for trial. Twenty-eight defendant companies have not yet agreed to settle out of court.

The hotel and some companies that were sued have agreed to a $140 million settlement with most victims, but it has not been completed.

Burger speaks on prisons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soon-to-be-built American prisons should not be "human warehouses" but "training schools and factories with fences," Chief Justice Warren E. Burger told a group of college graduates Saturday.

"This is not simply a matter of compassion for other human beings. It is a hard matter for our own protection and our own pocketbooks," Burger said in remarks prepared for delivery at Pace University's commencement exercises in New York City.

"With 10 billion dollars of prison construction looming, we are at a crossroad on what kind of prisons were are to have," Burger said. "As we brace ourselves for the tax collector reaching into our pockets for these billions we have a choice: we can continue to have largely human warehouses with little or no educational training...or we can strike out on a new course."

Returning to the theme of his 1982 year-end report last January, Burger called for:

—Conversion of prisons "into places of education and training and into factories and shops for the production of goods."

—Repeal of laws that limit the amount of prison industry production or the markets for such goods.

—Repeal of laws discriminating against the sale or transportation of prison-made goods.

—Leaders of business and organized labor to cooperate in programs to permit wider use of prison production facilities.

"I cannot believe for one moment that this great country of ours, the most voracious consumer society in the world, will not be able to absorb the production of prison inmates without significant injury to private employment," Burger said.

Rabbi-doctor has six degrees

He received a doctorate from Fordham and a medical degree from New York University last month, giving him six academic degrees by the age of 30.

"It sounds ridiculous, I know," said Wexler. "It's not as crazy as it sounds. I graduated college and went into rabbinics and political science at the same time and then I got interested in medicine and enrolled in med school. It was basically two stages."

While simultaneously working for his doctorate in political philosophy at Fordham and his medical degree at NYU, Wexler was rabbi at Young Israel of Roosevelt Island Synogogue and senior Jewish chaplain at Goldwater Hospital.

A typical day started with mornings in medical school, afternoons teaching Hebrew School, evenings visiting patients at the hospital — and hours of study. He considered six hours of sleep a night a rare luxury.

Wexler, his wife, Dina Roemer, and their 6-month-old daughter, Tehila, are moving soon to Cleveland, where he begins his three-year residency in pediatrics at Rainbow Babies and Children's Hospital. He plans to aid children suffering blood diseases and cancer.

"I'm not going to be an active rabbi for the next couple of years," he said. "I'm getting old, I can only do one thing at a time now. I want to just specialize in medicine. I think medicine is a full-time job."

Wexler earned a bachelor's of arts in political science from Yeshiva University in 1974; a master's of science in Jewish Philosophy from Yeshiva in 1978; and he received his rabbinical degree and was ordained in 1978. He received a master's of political philosophy from Fordham in 1978 and his doctorate in May. He got his medical degree last week from NYU after four years in medical school.

He got married in 1977.

"It looks very hard, but I had a lot of help from my wife," he said. "When I was in school or in the hospital, my wife would help out with the synogogue or the hospital, so it was a family project."

Ms. Roemer said she taught Hebrew school classes, visited patients and coordinated religious services at the synogogue. Besides caring for their child, Ms. Roemer, 27, also was working toward a master's degree in public administration from Baruch College. She is two courses short and hopes to finish in Cleveland.

Ms. Roemer already has a bachelor's degree in pre-medicine and a master's in social work. "Have to keep up with the Wexlers," she said.

Wexler is the seventh in an unbroken line of rabbis. His father, Stanley, is a retired rabbi with a master's in sociology who returned to school several years ago and received a master's in computers.

"One of the reasons I was able to do what I did was because my father used to cover for me and help with services," the younger Wexler said.

He said both his mother and his father "set standards of excellence" that drove him to pursue the degrees.

What does he do when he's not working?

"Needlepoint," he said. "I do some rugs. My wife started it, but she didn't do it fast enough."

Isaac Dworetsky, a World War II veteran bomber pilot who earned a straight-A average while holding down two jobs, tips his mortar board after receiving a standing ovation for his speech as valedictorian at Bronx (New York) Community College. Dworetsky is 64 years old.

U.S. mayors warn hunger is spreading

DENVER (AP) — The country's mayors opened their annual convention Saturday with a warning that hunger is spreading in the United States and that 11 million unemployed people represent a "criminal neglect" of human resources.

Mayor Coleman Young of Detroit, president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said in an opening news conference that cities are in their worst financial condition since the Great Depression and the states are just as broke.

Young said the only real hope of deliverance is Washington but the Reagan administration refuses to help.

"More than any time since the Great Depression you'll find that cities are having increasing difficulties in meeting their budgets and providing the minimum services that their citizens demand," Young said.

"This comes at a time when city revenues are falling off because of the recession, lack of employment, which means lack of revenues," Young, a Democrat, said. "At the same time the federal government has cut off many of the supports the cities have a right to expect ... at the same time when many, many states are experiencing serious difficulties. I don't know of a time since that last depression when more states have literally teetered on the edge of bankruptcy as well as cities.

"Our human resources as well as our physical resources are in joepardy," Young added. "Where there are 11 million people unemployed, that's certainly a criminal neglect of human resources."

Young declined to say just who was guilty of criminal neglect. He said the unemployment problem is caused by a depression that has its roots in energy prices that have been rising for more than a decade and by mounting foreign competition.

But Young said only the federal government can attack the problem effectively and that the Reagan administration refuses.

"The cause of it is a depression," Young said. "In the last depression ... the federal government stepped in, recognized that there was a right to a job, estalished WPA, CCC, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, all types of government instrumentality to stimulate the economy and provide jobs and food and put the nation back on its feet.

"And I say that is what is needed today, and I think that's the central question," Young said. "But the present administration believes just the opposite, believes literally in laissez faire, let the economy right itself and let us build up big profits and these profits will trickle down."

Young also said as many as half the people in Detroit may be "in the border of malnutrition or actually have passed that borderline" and although Detroit's problems are unusually serious because of its high unemployment rate, its hunger problem "is an example of what's happening all around the country."

Poles seem pessimistic about Pope's visit

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Less than a week before Pope John Paul II's second pilgrimage to his homeland, Poles seem restrained and pessimistic that the visit will improve their lives under Communist rule.

On Krakowskie Przedmiescie, the historic "King's Road" the pope will travel to say Mass at Warsaw's cathedral, the only hint of the pope's impending arrival Thursday are white barricades for crowd control that line the old city's Castle Square.

Across the Vistula River in the Praga district, a welded metal frame for a 62-foot-tall cross towers over a rough wooden platform where the pope will also say Mass in a little-used stadium.

"Sure, we're coming to see the pope so the Communists won't say that we Christians don't know how to welcome our pope," said a worker rebuilding a crumbling stone wall at the base of the cross. "You can't say now if anything will change, so just let him come and we shall see."

The remark typifies the attitude of many people in this capital city, the first stop on the pope's second visit since 1979 when a different sort of feeling filled the air.

"Some people just went out into the streets and walked," said an artist who recalls the announcement of the first visit of a Polish pope as a high point in his life. "It was as if they just had to go out onto the streets to feel that it was really true."

Now, people have endured three years of labor, political and social upheaval that began one year after the last papal visit when strikes led to formation of Solidarity, the first independent union federation in the Soviet bloc.

Everyone believes now the visit will take place. There had been doubts last year, when the country was under martial law and the authorities argued it was too early for another papal pilgrimage. This one is being made principally to mark the 600th anniversary of the portrait of the Black Madonna, Poland's most revered religious icon.

"A couple of weeks ago, people were saying the pope wouldn't come at all, that the authorities will do something," said one young Pole. "But now, everybody is waiting, and we are ready to welcome him. They are saying, let him come and then we'll see."

The feeling seems to persist that the visit should be allowed before anyone gets excited.

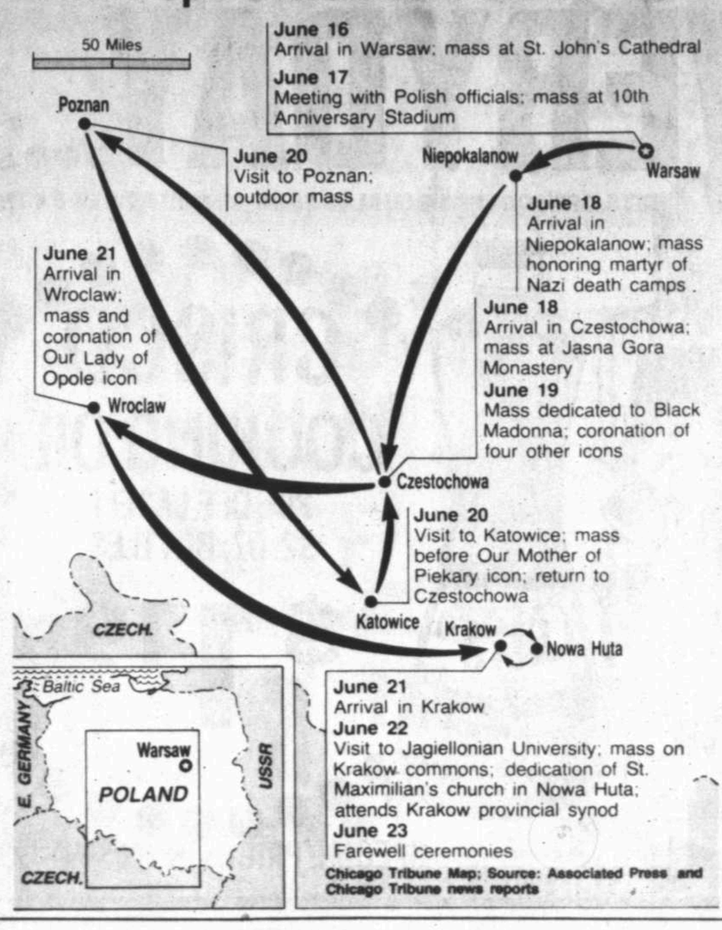

"I'm still enthusiastic about the visit," said one Polish journalist who fondly remembers the 1979 visit. "But I hope people's hopes aren't shattered."

Instead of huge posters of the pope, small posters have appeared in some church entrances, showing John Paul with outstretched hands standing over the word "Czekamy," Polish for "We're waiting."

"Maybe people are kind of restrained in what they show and what they do, seeing the crowd-control barriers going up in the city," the young Pole said. "Four years ago there was nothing like that."

At the stadium, workers were still hammering nails and painting props for the papal Mass, sweating in a spring sun under the eyes of a few police officers guarding the area.

Thatcher reshapes Cabinet after win

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reshaped her Cabinet Saturday following the Conservatives' decisive election victory, removing Foreign Secretary Francis Pym and another moderate from their key posts and replacing them with men farther to the right.

Mrs. Thatcher announced changes in 12 major Cabinet portfolios, keeping most top posts in the hands of close allies and rewarding ministers who helped push her conservative economic policies. The moves also reduced the Cabinet from 22 ministers to 21 by combining two jobs.

The prime minister had pledged not to purge Conservative Party moderates after her big victory last Thursday, which gave her a 144-seat majority in the House of Commons. Her office said the changes were "designed to reflect the range of opinions within the Conservative Party."

Mrs. Thatcher's Conservatives now have the biggest Parliament majority in half a century.

Summit deadlocked on new leader

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — After surviving the Western Sahara crisis, African leaders were deadlocked again Saturday over another issue: the election of Africa's top official.

Organization of African Unity sources said four ballots failed to produce a majority for any of three candidates for OAU secretary-general, and that support was growing for Nigeria's Peter Onu, an OAU assistant secretary-general for 11 years, as a compromise candidate.

The three other candidates were Foreign Ministers Abdulai Conteh of Sierra Leone and Alioune Blondin Beye of Mali, and presidential adviser Paul Okumba of Gabon.

Arms proposal 'propaganda ploys'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union issued another attack on President Reagan's new arms control proposals Saturday, calling them "propaganda ploys" designed to dupe Americans and Europeans into thinking Washington wants to limit nuclear arsenals.

The official Tass news agency, which has run daily criticism of Reagan's proposals since he unveiled them last Wednesday, said the United States "is still unwilling" to reach arms control agreements with Moscow "on the basis of equality and justice."

Early troop withdrawal predicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign Minister Elie Salem of Lebanon predicted Saturday an early meeting between Syria and the United States leading to a possible breakthrough in efforts to obtain the withdrawal of Syrian and other foreign troops from Lebanon.

"I believe we should be seeing soon a discourse taking place between the Lebanese and the Syrians, the Americans and the Syrians, and I don't believe there are any basic problems in this regard," Salem said.

The Lebanese foreign minister, emerging from a 90-minute meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, said a breakthough is near in the stalemate caused by Syria's dissatisfaction over the troop withdrawal agreement between Lebanon and Israel.

"We are intensifying the contacts with all the parties that are concerned," Salem said. "...I think that with the proper effort in the coming few weeks, we will make the necessary breakthroughs and Lebanon will get on the right course."

Syria so far has refused to meet U.S. representatives to talk about withdrawal.

Asked by reporters if his optimism was based more on hope than reality, Salem it was underpinned by the common interests of Lebanon, Syria and the Arab world.

"Therefore when we speak about breakthroughs we are talking about facts and we are talking about policies that are emerging from facts, and not from dreams," he said.

Although Syria has not agreed to meet U.S. representatives, Salem said, "I believe all the parties concerned are ready for discussion, without commiting oneself beforehand."

Salem said that a time frame for reaching agreement cannot be predicted. "I believe that we should in the not too distant future be making a great deal of progress," he said.

He said he is confident Syria and Lebanon can work out their own problems over the withdrawal of Syrian foreign forces, now estimated to number some 50,000.

And in an apparent reference to Israel, which now has about 35,000 troops in Lebanon, he said: "The Syrians may have problems with others which they want to discuss."

"But as far as the part of the problem that may be related to us, we have no doubt that we can reach an early accomodation...," Salem said.

"As far as I know, Syria has never said it would stop talking with Lebanon or is not interested in talking with the United States," Salem said. "I believe there has always been a climate for discourse.

Implementation of Lebanon's troop withdrawal agreement with Israel depends on the withdrawal of the Syrian forces and those of the Palestine Liberation Organization as well.

Joining Shultz in the meeting were a number of U.S. diplomats.

Dillard's

in Midland finding "Trousers That Fit" is as easy as finding Dillard's with Dillard's introduction of Thomas E. Wolfe "Trousers That Fit", American men can finally purchase trousers so well cut, proportioned and finished, they can be worn immediately. . . without waiting for alterations!

THOMAS E. WOLFE

If trousers do not fit in the crotch and seat before alterations, they most likely will not fit after alterations either.

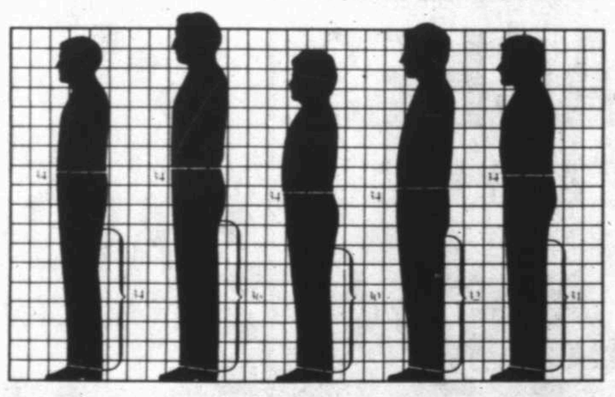

For proper fit in the thighs and seat, the fabric should be somewhat "forgiving."

An unfinished leg bottom is often an indication that the trousers will not fit you properly. For unless the bottoms are finished, the midsection or "rise" will probably not be properly proportioned.

Look for this distinctive label inside every pair. It is your assurance that you have purchased genuine Thomas E. Wolfe "Trousers That Fit".

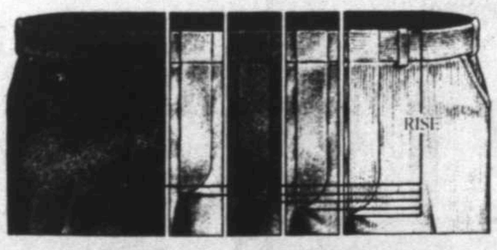

Ever since man purchased the first pair of trousers, he has had to wait to wear them. He has had to endure the inconvenience and embarassment of being pinned, chalked and pinched, only to be told that he is "hard to fit." But, gentlemen, you are not "hard to fit." It is simply that most pantsmakers have never taken the time and care to make trousers in the proper sizes, cuts and proportions to fit you correctly, without alterations. But now, your search for trousers that fit is over. Because Thomas E. Wolfe has designed, cut and proportioned their trousers so precisely, they will fit from the moment you put them on. They will fit in the waist, in the seat, in the thighs and in the crotch. They will fit from the bottom of the leg, to the top of the waistband, without alterations of any kind. So now it will take you no more time to buy a pair of perfectly fitting trousers than it takes to buy a dress shirt or a sweater.

how ordinary trousers are made, or, why your closet is full of trousers that don't fit

All these men have a size 34" waist. There is more to a well-fitting pair of trousers than the waist measurement. One must also consider leg lengths and "rise" as well. That is why Thomas E. Wolfe offers several different leg and rise proportions for each waist size, and why Thomas E. Wolfe trousers fit.

Most pantsmakers rely on only one measurement to determine your size: the waist. They do this despite the fact that men with the same waist size, but different heights and body shapes, cannot possibly fit in the same pair of trousers. So pantsmakers add lots of extra material in the seat and leg, and hope that the store alterationist will correct matters. But, as every man knows, alterations rarely work out as well as expected. The fact is, trousers made to be altered will never look as perfect as those proportioned to fit correctly in the first place.

Thomas E. Wolfe proportions the "rise" to the leg. The longer the leg, the longer the rise. It is the only way to insure a perfect fit from the moment you put them on.

Thomas E. Wolfe Co
TROUSERS · THAT · FIT

the most "forgiving" fabrics ever assembled

Thomas E. Wolfe does not rely on alterationists to make up for inexact proportioning and cutting. Instead, Thomas E. Wolfe uses many more patterns than most pantsmakers. Our greater number of patterns allows us to pay attention not only to the waist measurement, but also to the leg measurement, and to the all-important but generally overlooked area called the "rise"--the section from the crotch to the waist. You see, if trousers do not fit in the rise, they do not fit. And they will never fit, no matter how much altering is done. But by proportioning the rise, Thomas E. Wolfe can guarantee a fit without alterations. And that is why you must specify both waist and inseam when you purchase a pair of Thomas E. Wolfe trousers. You automatically obtain a rise and a seat which is proportioned to your body.

In addition to being finicky over fit, Thomas E. Wolfe also pays close attention to fabrics. These trousers are made of the finest and most "forgiving" woolens and cottons. "Forgiving" means that your trousers will give when you need to stretch. And last you much, much longer.

a few words about availabilty and price

Local firm's labor hearing now in recess

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

The hearing stems from a Jan. 25 walkout by 24 employees at the Claydesta Bank construction site in north Midland. At the time the employees complained the company was paying less-than-union-scale wages to its non-unionized interior mechanics and laborers.

The National Labor Relations Board, arguing on behalf of 14 former Midessa Construction Co. employees, last week completed its case in a hearing before an administrative law judge in which the board accused Midessa of unfair labor practices.

The hearing, conducted by Administrative Law Judge Richard Linton, was recessed Friday until July 25. The general counsel representing the employees called nine witnesses during the week, including some of the former employees and Midessa President Max DeVilbiss.

Charles High, Midessa's attorney, called three witnesses before the hearing was recessed. High is expected to call as many as 11 more witnesses when the hearing reconvenes.

Once testimony and cross-examination is complete, Linton could take several months to review the case and return a decision. The two parties, however, could reach a negotiated decision at any time during the hearing process.

If Linton rules in favor of the employees, Midessa may be forced to reinstate the 14 employees with back pay.

The hearing stems from a Jan. 25 walkout by 24 employees at the Claydesta Bank construction site in north Midland. At the time the employees complained the company was paying less-than-union-scale wages to its non-unionized interior mechanics and laborers.

Company officials responded that recent union wage increases had outstripped the company's ability to pay.

The employees walked off their jobs, sought assistance from the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 1428, and voted to accept union representation in negotiations with Midessa.

According to a complaint filed against Midessa by the NLRB, Midessa terminated the 24 employees on Jan. 25. Some of the employees later left the area or found other jobs, while the remainder were called back to work Feb. 1. Then on Feb. 11, 16 employees again were terminated.

Jim Purcell, Local 1428 representative, said 14 of the 16 employees terminated on Feb. 11 were participants in the walkout and are thus part of the NLRB case.

The NLRB charges that on or after Jan. 25, Midessa committed several violations of the National Labor Relations Act. The alleged unfair labor practices and dates they occurred include:

—Jan. 25, Midessa terminated the 24 employees.

—Jan. 26, a Midessa general superintendent interrogated the company's employees and threatened to fire them if they engaged in concerted activities.

—Jan. 27, an employee was rehired in a lesser job after engaging in protected activity.

—Feb. 1, a Midessa foreman threatened to fire the employees if they discussed union activity.

—The week of Feb. 1, the foreman harassed the employees regarding their production speed following the Feb. 1 recall.

—On or about Feb. 1, the foreman "announced and thereafter disparately enforced (company) work rules relating to the amount of work to be performed and the length of break and lunch periods.

—On or about the week of Feb. 7, the foreman harassed the employees about their production speed.

—Feb. 11, Midessa terminated the employees who were recalled.

At the hearing's outset, both parties "stipulated" — or accepted as fact — the charge that Midessa terminated the 24 employees on Jan. 25.

Purcell said regardless of the judge's ruling on the remaining charges, stipulation of the single charge should guarantee the employees five days back pay.

Home sweet hospice

Living in Glass House...

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Monta Jo Glass Johnson's precious memories of her childhood home won't allow her to let strangers live in it today.

And she wouldn't hear of the brick home on Texas Avenue and C Street to be torn down or converted into an office — so she and her brother, George H. Glass, donated the use of the home to Hospice of Midland for the next five years.

"It's a landmark," said Mrs. Johnson, who also is a Hospice board member.

"My mother and daddy built this home back in 1928," she added. "I wanted it to go to a worthwhile project. I had Hospice in the back of my mind, but it wasn't until somebody from the organization approached me that I made up my mind."

Today, Hospice of Midland invites the public to see its new home during an open house from 2 to 4 p.m.

Hospice is a physician-directed program which helps the terminally ill and their families to participate in the last days of life as fully as possible. It is funded through individual contributions, and Midland's Hospice is one of the few throughout the country that does not charge patients for its services.

Housed in a Sunday school classroom at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in its early stages in 1979, Hospice of Midland began assisting about six patients a month. Today the organization's four registered nurses, staff members and 70 volunteers help 40 patients a month.

In April, the Midland group hosted the hospice convention and the state organization was formed. Dr. Richard Lamerton, who worked with the founder of Hospice, complemented Hospice of Midland at the convention as one of the two best hospices in the United States.

Prior to its recent move, Hospice of Midland worked out of a house on Illinois Avenue, donated by the First Presbyterian Church.

Now, the Glass House, as it's commonly referred to, is the home office for Hospice. The two-story home, carpeted and draped in a deep maroon, has had three additions since 1928 with the final addition in 1960.

Although the house had been vacant since 1981 when Mrs. Johnson's father, George W. Glass died, it was left furnished and cleaned daily.

During Memorial Day weekend, Shirley Gist, along with 14 other Hospice volunteers, moved most of the original furnishings and replaced them with donated furniture.

"We painted, recovered chairs, moved furniture, put up shelves and hung pictures," she said. "We were down here all weekend getting the place ready."

Schley traded his robe for collar

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

My wife "married a skinny, curly-headed lawyer and, without the benefit of divorce, ended up with a fat, bald-headed priest."
— Father Joseph Schley Jr.

He used to wear a black robe and drive a Silver Shadow Rolls Royce with a red leather interior.

Now he wears the collar of a clergyman and drives a "wonderful Ford that looks like everyone else's."

He still giggles, but now, instead of having to swivel around behind the bench to regain his composure, he just relaxes.

"I found that once you take the Lord seriously, there's a lot in life you don't have to take seriously," said the rector of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church in Midland.

Father Joseph Hastings Schley Jr. was born in Dallas into a lineage of lawyers dating back to the late 1700s.

"I WAS AT LEAST 30 before I knew there were any other professions," he said.

Prior to receiving a law degree from Southern Methodist University, Schley enrolled in the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., and transferred to SMU, where he worked his way through a bachelor's degree by cleaning bathrooms, working as the night librarian in the law library and clerking at various law firms.

He also worked as a security guard.

"I played a little football in college," he explained, "but I was always getting injured. I was a very clumsy athlete. Now I'm just clumsy.

"I had great potential," he added, grinning. "With the exception of Don Meredith, we (the other team members) were mediocre at best.

"I've encouraged my children to play any sport except contact sports," he said, "although they are involved in karate. I'm probably the only father in town that calls his 13-year-old 'sir.'"

Schley decided to pursue law instead of sports.

"Before I left SMU, I was commissioned for the Air Force," he said. "The only problem was they didn't call me for seven months. Nobody wants to hire someone for seven months so I hung out a shingle of my own in Dallas and got lucky."

He won his first case defending a guy charged with writing hot checks.

Unfortunately, the check with which he was paid bounced and he never saw his first client again.

"I GREW UP in a hurry," he admitted with a grin.

After five years in the Air Force, he was offered a job as municipal court judge in Amarillo, replacing a man who was asked to resign.

"My day usually started with a drunk line-up," he said. "It was a very sad situation from the standpoint of trying to get people to do something with their life."

Most of those arrested for driving while intoxicated and public intoxication were regular faces, he said.

One drunk used to bring the Bible into the courtroom with him everytime he appeared before the judge. The man would point out passages and tell Schley he had no right to judge him.

"I'd tell him I'd take my chances with God and send him right to jail — where at least he dried out for a couple of days and washed police cars."

But Schley admitted he didn't like judging people.

"You put an hourly worker in jail and he loses his job," he said. "Then he can't make his car payment and he loses that, too.... You affect lives in so small a way — but it's way out of proportion.

"Actually, if I'd been God, I would have chosen to work with giraffes rather than people," he added, giggling. "I guess that's one reason I'm not God."

A successful businessman, lawyer and municipal judge, Schley, said, "By the time I was 30, I had achieved what I thought were my goals."

After running for the county judge seat and winning, Schley confided to his priest the victory didn't mean much.

The priest's wife asked him if he'd ever thought of going into the seminary.

"WE ALL JUST laughed and had another beer," Schley said.

"But that night, I stayed up all night thinking about it and at dawn, announced my decision to my wife. She just said I should have done it years ago and rolled back over.

"She's great," he said, grinning. "She married a skinny, curly-headed lawyer and, without the benefit of divorce, ended up with a fat, bald-headed priest."

Reflecting on his decision to become a priest, Schley said: "I'd already made most of the mistakes in life and God was so good to me, I wanted to repay Him.

Petition next step in annexation issue

Some residents living in the Midland Independent School District, wishing to annex into the Ector County Independent School District, will take the third step of a year-long process during a meeting of the Midland County Commissioners Court at 1:30 p.m. Monday.

"My understanding is that what we do won't make any difference," said County Judge Bill Ahders. "It will still be determined in Austin."

A petition, asking for annexation and signed by residents living in a 4,000-acre area in MISD and Midland County, will be presented to county commissioners during the meeting. Earlier this spring, the petition was approved by ECISD trustees and Ector County Commissioners.

The area includes the Ridgewood Subdivision, Odessa Country Club, a mobile home park, and Mission Estates, a HBF Corporation development.

MISD officials have charged HBF Corp. President Larry Bell has a conflict of interest in the annexation because he also serves as Midland Chamber of Commerce president.

Bell has denied the charges although he admits Mission Estates probably would develop more rapidly if students moving there could attend Odessa schools.

Attorneys for the residents said annual revenues from the annexation would be about $130,000 while MISD officials claim an immediate loss in revenues would be $17 million with a potential loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in the future as the area develops.

Sixty-seven of the 80 identified students in the area are attending Odessa schools on transfers. In spring 1982, ECISD trustees announced a $1,250 tuition would be charged to students transferring from MISD. That charge was waived last year so that residents could seek alternatives to paying tuition. MISD trustees denied an appeal to contract with ECISD last summer and the residents decided the only permanent solution would be to change the boundaries.

Ahders said the petitioners must be heard by both school boards and commissioner courts before a final decision is rendered by State Commissioner of Education Raymon Bynum.

According to Dr. Joseph Baressi, MISD superintendent, a hearing has been scheduled in Austin July 20.

Deadlines: Deadliest part of newspaper art

The most trying and tiring phase of newspapering is deadlines. They're an absolutely wretched nuisance, a bother, a tester of tempers, stamina and endurance and a bearer of stress. They should be abolished.

They're also sacred and, like the Ten Commandments, often are violated.

I am an offender. If I beg forgiveness, it's to keep my job and to keep in reasonably good stead with my powerful (but not quite omnipotent) editor. He hires and he may fire, so I don't want any near-misses or scores around my cluttered desk when he blows off steam. He's the boss and is not modest about that.

Yes, I revolt at deadlines about the way taxpayers decry April 15 and the paying of their dues to the federal government. But I am an abiding protester. I make the motions, the gestures and reluctant effort to "make" the deadline. And I pay taxes.

My inclination to chuck deadlines may have something to do with one of the more crudely refined traits of an aspiring writer; I procrastinate. But all my procastinating only leads to my rushing and then regretting that I put it off and had to rush.

Deadlines make my thick blood thin and run hot. I pound on the typewriter, or rather the keyboard with the television screen and computer hookup, in trying to make sense out of scribbled notes and images both vague and lucid. I'm supposed to be creating a story — not writing tripe or flack pieces. Here I am building a castle for King Edward and not hammering together a makeshift doghouse for Rover. Meanwhile, word-smithing gets bumped by the deadline.

While the prose is displayed just above the keyboard I'm attacking, an editor reminds me again and again what I don't want to hear: The deadline is near, the deadline is now, the deadline is past. Well, I knew it all the time.

You see, a story is never finished or rarely finished. There's always "something else to add" or to "polish up," so the avid readers of your widely-circulated newspaper will be reminded that some pretty famous authors, such as Ernest Hemingway, Mark Twain, Ambrose Bierce, William Faulkner and satirist H. Allen Smith (who called one West Texas newspaper the "Gut Rumble") wrote for newspapers.

Of course, they didn't pursue newspapering as a career; they wanted wider appeal and more money. But they probably busted a few deadlines in the name of literary excellence and out of the compulsion not to "let go" of a story. That's because you just never know what an editor or editors will do to a story or do for it. Sometimes they blotch but mostly they repair. Believe me, good editing saves the writer's ego from embarrassment and the newspaper from apologizing.

The newspaperman's deadline is a bearable pain. It runs from the intense frown on the deadline-busting writer's forehead to his aching gut and curled-up toes.

If the writer is late, the city editors howls. Then the copy editors have a fair chance at sassing and barking. If they're late, the backshop foreman causes quite a stir but has a scapegoat and passes the problem to the pressroom foreman. The foreman, as angry as the presses are loud, tells the circulation chiefs that some dodo down the line messed up and missed deadlines. Meanwhile, the publisher gets privy to all the down-the-line hassling and buck passing and wants explanations, names, times and costs.

Then, here comes the paying masses. Subscribers and news-stand customers, who are not particularly concerned about deadlines, want to know why their newspaper is late or where it is or if it is.

"Did you publish a paper today?" they ask caustically over the telephone. But you, inclined to be just as caustic, are tempered because of image and job-keeping reasons, and say, "Yes ma'am (or sir), but we had a production problem today."

Restoring youth centers considered

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The Midland and Lee youth centers may have a chance to be reopened after financial problems forced their doors shut May 1 — if $11,000 can be raised from public and private donations.

"We were so much in debt they were closed for the summer," said Mary Margaret Byrom, chairman of the Midland-Lee Youth Centers, Inc. board of directors. "It wasn't financially feasible to keep them open."

Open campus, which allows high school students to leave the campus at lunch, was cited as one reason for low participation and declining revenues at the centers.

According to some sources, however, the Midland Youth Center's financial troubles brought about the close of both.

The youth centers received funding from the United Way until May 1982. That funding, as well as all membership fees, lunch revenues and donations, was divided equally between the two centers.

According to Lee Youth Center Director Bill Collins, reserve funds for both centers were depleted to cover debts at the Midland Youth Center.

"Up until March of this year, for the past two years, our kids have supported us," Collins said. At that time, Collins said he approached the board for a portion of the reserve funds but "there wasn't any left."

"For the 12 years I've been there, our kids have always supported our youth center," Collins said. "I think it's a real sin for those kids who were supporting the youth center to have to pay for those that aren't. Those that are not supporting it don't deserve it anyway."

"I had our treasurer go back and check and see how much the difference (in revenues and debts of the centers) was," Mrs. Byrom said. "There is really not a lot of difference. Actually, as far as being self-sustaining, neither of them were."

A meeting, scheduled for 7 p.m. Monday at the Midland Youth Center, will be held to discuss changes in the center if they are able to be reopened, according to Mrs. Byrom. Board members, community leaders and all individuals interested in using the centers are invited to attend.

Persons wishing to make donations may send them to Midland-Lee Youth Center, Inc., P.O. Box 50490, Midland, Texas 79701.

"We don't know if we can reopen them or not," she said. "We need the money now to retire the debt but we're trying to be very honest (with persons making donations.) We have to have $11,000 to do it."

If the amount is received, Mrs. Byrom said the format of the centers would change.

"We want to totally change the program and have new programs and new ideas. We've had the same things at the youth centers for 10 years," she said.

The Midland center opened in 1953 while the Lee center opened in 1963. Both stemmed from the Midland Junior Canteen, opened in 1946, she said.

"The lunch is outdated, especially with the open campus. Probably, if we do reopen, we would not have the lunch program," she said.

"We'll continue to do the dances but we'd like to have more participation from some of the clubs within the schools.

"If we can relieve the debt, we want to have a plan ready to go," she said.

According to Collins, some individuals have expressed interest in donating to the Lee Center if the funds would not be divided with the Midland center.

"And I'm sure it's the same with Midland," he said. "I wish they'd split it up because I've had some calls from some pretty prominent people."

Two burglaries reported to Midland police

Police Roundup

A television and stereo equipment worth more than $1,000 was reported in one of two burglaries, which along with a thefts and a criminal mischief incident, were investigated by Midland police Friday and Saturday.

Sheryl McGrady, of 4513 W. Storey Ave., reported her residence had been burglarized at 6 p.m. Saturday. Entry was gained through a south window and a television set and stereo equipment valued at $1,650 were reported missing.

The burglary of another residence was reported by Doreen Bell, of 4400 N. Holiday Hill Road, No. 19L, Saturday evening. Coins and $2 bills totalling $170 were reported missing. No sign of forced entry was reported.

Criminal mischief resulting in $250 worth of damage was reported by Clifton Lee of 515 E. Montgomery about 9 p.m. Friday. According to reports, windows of a garage door were broken and electrical wiring was ripped off the garage and back of the house. The garage door also had been ripped off its hinges.

The theft of two air conditioners from Hollowell United Methodist Church, 400 S. Marshall, was reported at 7 p.m. Friday. The air conditioning units, which were locked when last seen Thursday, were valued at $205.

Association for retarded names executive director

Ray Unterbrink has been named executive director for the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens, replacing Marion Fisher, who is retiring.

Unterbrink, 46, and his family are coming from Springfield, Ill., where he had been employed as director of residential services with the Association for Retarded Citizens. He holds a masters degree in social work from Washington University, St. Louis, Mo. His background includes experience in education, child welfare and mental retardation.

The new MARC director views his job with enthusiasm. "I am very excited at the prospect of having the opportunity to help Midland continue efforts in improving, expanding and creating opportunities for all persons with mental retardation and their families.

Ray Unterbrink

"I am impressed with the commitment of the MARC board and with the support for services which is received from the citizens of Midland. I look forward to joining the community," he said.

Schley traded legal robes for collar of clergyman

"I'd been active in the church all of my life," he said. "Sometimes, though, I was there 'cause that's where the pretty girls were."

He sold his Rolls and enrolled in Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Can you imagine people's reactions to a clergyman driving around in a Rolls?" he asked with another giggle. Pausing, he added, "Actually, I should have kept it for investment purposes."

Out of law practice for 12 years, Schley admits he misses it at times.

"I STILL GO down to some court cases to, figuratively, hold the hands of people involved," he said, adding that as he listens to the bumbling presentations made by some lawyers, "I sure would like to have a crack at 'em.

Despite occasionally missing the courtroom, Schley said he's been happy with his four years in Midland.

He serves as president of Midland Association of Churches and the Council on Alcoholism, past president of Visual Aids and United Way and director of West Texas Pastoral Counseling Center. He also serves on the Midland County Families-in-Action.

"The people I've gotten to work with both in the community and the church, are remarkable.

"I have no ambitions beyond being a parish priest. I only hope I'm ready to leave here one month before the people are ready for me to leave."

One dead, two hurt in mishap

PECOS — A 69-year-old Hobbs, N.M., woman was killed and two passengers were injured when their car was rear-ended by a truck 12 miles east of Pecos on Interstate 20 about 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

Dead on arrival at Reeves County Memorial Hospital in Pecos was the driver, Petra Andreski. Her body was taken to Pecos Funeral Home.

Mary Ann Sandoval, 37, and Mary Lou Arenivas, 12, both of Hobbs, were listed in fair and good condition, respectively, at Reeves County Memorial with cuts and abrasions.

According to Department of Public Safety officials, Ms. Andreski was driving west on Interstate 20 when a truck pulling a trailer collided with her vehicle, causing it to overturn one time. Ms. Andreski was thrown from the car.

Driver of the truck, Daniel L. Burt, of Minden, La., was not injured.

DPS Troopers Salvador Moralez and Tom Cummings, both of Pecos, investigated the accident.

Stanton man killed in accident

STANTON — A Stanton man died early Saturday morning and another was injured during a one-vehicle rollover occurring two miles west of Stanton on Interstate 20 in Martin County.

James Mashburn, 18, died at 6:20 a.m. at Midland Memorial Hospital. He was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine and his body was taken to Gilbreath Funeral Home in Stanton.

Daryl Snell, 17, also of Stanton, was listed in stable condition at MMH with head injuries and fractured ribs.

According to Department of Public Safety officials, Mashburn was driving a pickup east on Interstate 20 when it ran off the road and overturned 3½ times. The accident occurred shortly after 1 a.m. Saturday.

DPS Troopers Wade Turner and Herb City, both of Stanton, investigated the accident.

Rare projectile point found

LUBBOCK — A rare obsidian projectile point dating back about 10,000 years has been unearthed in the first week of summer excavation at Lubbock Lake archaeological project.

"This is the first known record of an obsidian Plainview point," said Dr. Eileen Johnson, director of Lubbock Lake National and State Landmark. "Obsidian points representing any period are uncommon on the Southern High Plains because the volcanic glass is not natural material in this area."

She said the nearest source for obsidian is New Mexico, while other sources are Mexico, Montana and Wyoming. "This small point then tells us that there was some type of exchange — travel or trade — in this extinct culture," she said. "It could have come from any of those sources."

The Lubbock Lake Landmark, sponsored by Texas Tech University, will celebrate its 10th anniversary July 9. The new point and other artifacts will be displayed and free tours and demonstrations are planned for the public from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The project is also open for free public tours from 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays through July 16.

Project manager named

FORT DAVIS — Col. Gerald Carr, commander of Skylab 4, has been named project manager for McDonald Observatory's proposed 300-inch telescope.

He will oversee development of the instrument and do some design work.

"The conceptual design phase of the telescope...is just about finished, but the fund-raising phase is still in the works," he said. "The key will be to get a commitment from UT's regents for University funding and hopefully to get some donors for the project through them."

Carr retired from NASA in 1967 and, in 1982, became a parttime senior consultant for Applied Research Inc., a Los Angeles company involved in aerospace engineering.

Tae Kwon Do instruction offered

Tae Kwon Do, Korean karate, will be offered through the Midland Parks and Recreation Department starting Monday from to 6 to 7:30 p.m. Fee is $30 per month.

The program will be taught by Larry Griffin, first degree black belt, in conjunction with the Southwestern Martial Arts Association, headed by chief instructor Monte Monroe, fourth degree black belt.

The club will be affiliated with the American Tae Kwon Do Moo Duk Dwan Federation, which has schools located throughout Texas. Affiliates are located in East and West Texas.

Taught will be a traditional Tae Kwon Do. Emphasis will be on respect, discipline and hard training, which help to develop a strong mind and body for the conscientious student, as well as developing abilities of self-defense.

Certified promotion from white to black belt is available to the consistent student under qualifications and regulations of the American Tae Kwon Do Moo Duk Kwan Federation.

The student will be shown Tae Kwon Do, Moo Duk Dwan style, judo and Korean Hapkido. The Moo Duk Kwan style emphasises 80 percent feet technique, as opposed to other forms of karate which use 80 percent hand and 20 percent feet technique.

More information can be obtained by calling the Parks and Recreation Department, 683-4281, extension 316, or Larry Griffin, 689-7514.

Family swimming times offered

Parks and Recreation Department will begin a family night swim starting at 6 p.m. Tuesday at Halff Pool and Thursday at Ulmer Pool. Cost will be $1.50 per family.

If there is enough participation, this program will continue through the swimming season.

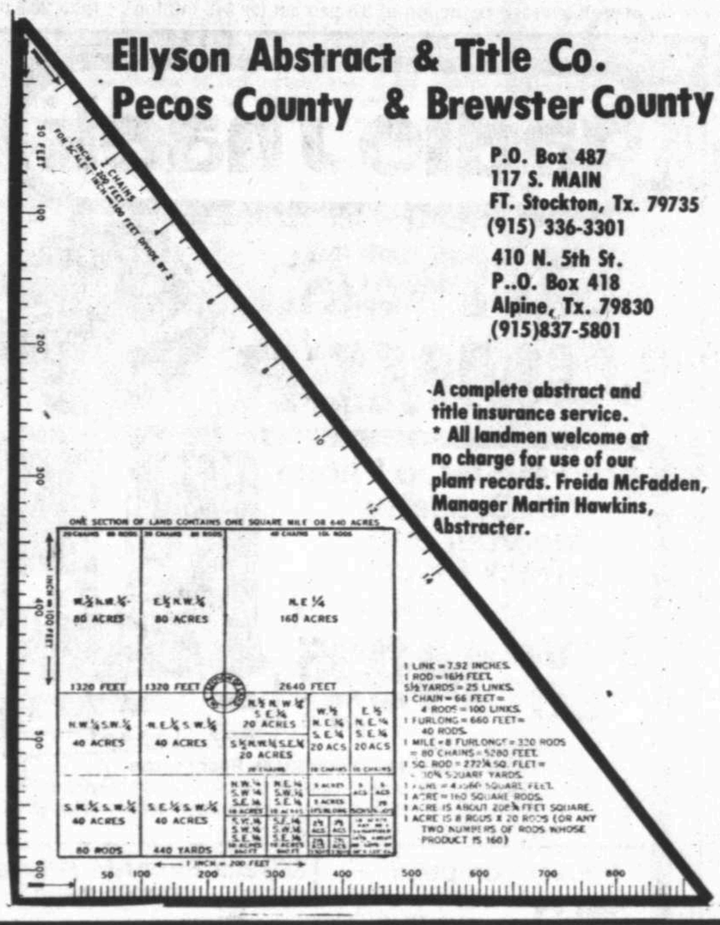

The family rate will apply only to five persons — at least one of which is an adult and will be responsible for the family he or she is bringing. Any more than five persons will have to pay the regular rate of 40 cents for children and $1 for adult. Two adults attending must be married; no teen-age couples unless accompanied by a family member.

Council to consider items

Midland City Council will tackle an agenda filled with miscellaneous items Tuesday, including a 4 p.m. public hearing to receive public comment on the 1983-84 proposed budget.

During a meeting beginning at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers, the council also will consider an ordinance that would eliminate the requirement of a second notice to all owners and lien holders on abandoned cars.

Another ordinance under consideration would establish maximum charges to be levied by Times-Mirror Cable Television of Midland.

The council will consider a request by Clay-Desta for a delay in the installation of sidewalks along all streets inside and bordering the development. They also will discuss the city's general policy in regard to sidewalk installation.

MISD Board of Trustees

During the first meeting since the end of school, Midland Independent School District trustees are expected to take action on a policy setting academic requirements for students participating in extra-curricular activities.

Year-end reports on various programs and the resignation of the Lee High School principal also are expected to be accepted at the meeting, which will be held in the administration building at 702 N. N St.

Following several discussions during the past few months, trustees are expected to adopt, for the first time, a policy setting certain academic standards for students to be eligible to participate in extra-curricular activities. Students in grades seven through 12 who participate in such programs, ranging from athletics to student council, may not fail more than one course to be eligible, according to the proposed policy. Grades will be monitored each six weeks.

Year-end evaluations of the GEM (Gifted Education Midland) and Hoffman Reading programs will be presented as will results of the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills (TABS) tests, taken by students in the third, fifth and ninth grades.

The resignation of Lee High School Principal Dr. Joe Smith is expected to be accepted. Smith, whose resignation will be effective July 31, is planning to enter private business.

Bids on the construction of the Instructional Materials Center Building will be accepted and trustees are expected to approve the designation of Oct. 10-14 as Midland Public Schools Week and the calendar for the 1984-85 school year.

Gifts from Rusk and Henderson elementary schools and Goddard Junior High School will be accepted and requests from Teen Challenge and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to use school facilities will be heard.

County Commissioners

Midland property appraiser Rusty Gifford will present his slant on the Midland County Appraisal District and the collection of property taxes when the Midland County Commissioners' Court meets at 9 a.m. Monday in the Midland County Courthouse.

Under the present setup, Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson sets property values for taxation purposes for the six taxing entities in the county: the city of Midland, Midland County, Midland College, Midland County Hospital District, and Midland and Greenwood Independent School Districts. Wilkinson collect taxes for four of the six: city, MISD, hospital and college. Frances Shuffield, Midland County tax-assessor collector, collects taxes for the county and Greenwood.

Gifford may propose a consolidation of the collections efforts.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Consider approving a plat for Pecan Plantation subdivision.

—Discuss a request of the Midland United Softball Association to obtain top soil.

—Consider recommendations for awarding contracts for putting in water and sewer lines under the federal community development program in a windowpane area in south central Midland.

—Conduct a hearing to consider detaching an area of MISD and annexing it to the Ector County ISD.

—Discuss contracting with the Bullock, Scott & Neisig law firm for representing the county in its library project.

Trash in Midland trucked up record loads during a recent city-wide cleanup campaign.

According to figures released by the city's Public Works Department, about 560 truckloads carrying more than 229 tons of debris were removed from the city's alleys during the two-week effort. This massive project required 1,300 man hours by public works employees and cost the city $16,500.

The cleanup was made possible by a cooperative effort between the city of Midland and Clean Midland, Inc.

Figures for the project were up "dramatically" from the last cleanup campaign conducted by the city in 1981. According to Assistant Public Works Director Mike Butler, the extra effort made by public works employees and the creation of Clean Midland, Inc., contributed to the success of this year's campaign.

"I think part of the reason (for the improvement) was that a cleanup campaign of this nature was not conducted last year," Butler said. "Another factor was the good publicity given to the campaign and the increased awareness Clean Midland has created as to the importance of maintaining a clean environment."

Nancy Sharp, executive director of Clean Midland, echoed Butler's remarks when referring to the public's overwhelming response to the campaign.

"We received more than 1,000 calls requesting trash pickup as compared to 586 in 1981," Sharp said. "In addition, we had several calls from neighborhood groups who had gotten together to clean-up their alleys as a combined effort. That's the kind of cooperation Clean Midland would like to see."

Ten Midland firms donated 57 hours of employee time to assist Clean Midland in manning the phones during the campaign. Companies providing employees were David Pine, Energy Plus, Exxon USA, First City National Bank, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Main Hurdman, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., Petroplex Savings, Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin and Browder, and Tipperary Corp.

Clean Midland, Inc., is a private, non-profit corporation formed in September 1982 and funded by private donations, the city of Midland and Midland Chamber of Commerce. President is Jim Everett.

County homeowners to receive insurance rate reduction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Homeowners in Midland County will receive a reduction of 1.4 percent on their homeowners' insurance policies under rates proposed by the State Board of Insurance staff at SBI's annual property rate hearing.

But under rate changes proposed by the Texas Insurance Advisory Association, those rates would have increased by 17.3 percent.

The State Board adopted the staff recommendations, with a proposed Oct. 1 date for the changes.

Statewide, changes for homeowners, tenant homeowners, farm and ranch owners, fire and extended coverage will produce an overall average reduction of 3.8 percent (or $42 million in premiums) under the staff proposal — while the industry proposal would have resulted in an overall increase of 13.5 percent.

Other changes in the North-Northwest rating territory, which includes Midland County, show the following for the staff (with TIAA recommendations in parenthesis):

—Tenant homeowners, plus 9.4 percent (plus 18.1 percent).

—Farm and ranch owners, minus 4.0 percent (plus 22.1 percent).

—Fire (average, all classes), plus 1.0 percent (plus 10.3 percent).

—Extended coverage (average, all classes), plus 2.7 percent (plus 20.4 percent).

'Wargames' brings to light man's fear of self-destruction

A Review

"Wargames," like "China Syndrome" in the Seventies and "Dr. Strangelove" and "Fail-Safe" in the Sixties, is about man's fear of his own destruction through his own means. It is something like giving a shotgun to a savage. Before he can learn to control the awesome force, all the chickens in his yard are blasted apart, destroying his world. That is, after all, the message of these movies — that we can reach technological answers before we can reach philosophical ones.

This time, director John Badham, who casts another wary eye at technology gone awry in this summer's "Blue Thunder," has provided us with the tense and sometimes funny "Wargames," starring Matthew Broderick (the teen-age son in "Max Dugan Returns") as an adolescent video freak who fits the FBI's description of a Communist youth target: "Bright, underachiever, who is alienated from his parents."

Broderick as David Lightman (anybody for symbolism?), arrives late to school by way of the nearby video arcade and spends his afternoons in his dark bedroom. A model of "teen-age alienation," it has a sign on the door forbidding entry to the unauthorized and a smattering of yesterday's or last week's laundry strewn around.

But it is the computer console in the corner, with all the paraphenalia, that suggests David is a child of the software generation. A whiz kid with wires, terminals and programs, David changes his school grades and a friend's (played by Ally Sheedy as Jennifer) by gaining access to the school computer and to the supposedly inaccessible.

And that's where the trouble begins — when David, in search of a challenging video game, taps into a video game company's computer (he thinks) and comes up with a program called "Thermo nuclear war." Sounds like the ultimate game but, in fact, it is the U.S. government's version of a doomsday scenario played out in infinite variation by a computer called WORP.

The analogy of the games is one that is carried throughout and even WORP realizes (as it is hoped we will) that there is no winner in thermo nuclear war, so why play? The message gets a light treatment in contrast with "China Syndrome" and may falter on that very point.

Also, the classic, age-old antipathy between the military establishment and civilian complex is caricatured to the point of the ridiculous. A four-star general, chewing tobacco in cheek, good 'ol boy accent intact, glares with malice at the government employee, arrayed in white short sleeves and tasteless tie, who believes in the god of technology and the ineffectualness of the human element.

While they snivel it out, it is David and the inventor of WORP, played by John Wood, who justify this movie. Both approach it with naive innocence and it is that quality that solves the dilemma and literally saves the day.

Rated PG, "Wargames" is not likely to affect our attitudes toward thermo nuclear war the way "China Syndrome" did toward nuclear energy. But the movie's climactic scene does bring Dr. Helen Caldicott and the nuclear disarmament movement to mind and is an urgent plea toward finding those philosophical answers before the technological ones leave us with our feathers flying.

"TRADING PLACES," doesn't do for Dan Aykroyd and Eddie Murphy what "48 HRS." did for Murphy and Nick Nolte, but there are a few laughs.

Going from rags to riches is Murphy as "Billy Ray Valentine — a Capricorn." And going the other way is Aykroyd as Exeter, Harvard grad, Louis Winthorpe III. Together they become the unwitting victims of two eccentric, power brokers of the right — brothers, Randall and Mortimer Duke (Ralph Bellamy and Don Ameche, respectively), who for lack of diversion, decide to investigate the influence of environment on the making of a man. In doing so, they force the question, can a con artist, street hustler make it on Wall Street and a down right, up right Brooks Brothers type survive the streets.

Aykroyd plays much the same character as he does in the recent "Dr. Detroit," even reprising the scene on the table where he launches forth on his life theme of light, right and might. And Murphy does a retake of his "48 HRS." character, refining the idea that "getting down" is sometimes a way of "getting up."

Nevertheless, they lack the tension and excitement stimulated by Nolte and Murphy in "48 HRS." — a problem of the screenplay by Timothy Harris and Herschel Weingrod. With jokes like the plaque posted on the broker's club, which reads "Liberty and justice for all — members," and Randall Duke's comment about blacks, "They're very musical people aren't they?" this movie one-lines its way toward the climatic turning of the worm scene at the stock exchange — where Aykroyd and Murphy try to make a comeback with comeuppance.

Rated R, "Trading Places" has nudity by way of Jamie Lee Curtis, who plays a prostitute with a heart and street obscenity from Murphy. An uneven comedy, it uses the old movie theme of switching places — which is supposed to be inherently funny. Only this time what should be inherently, is only occasionally.

The exhibit consists of 10 panels of photographs which illustrate major aspects of the Renaissance world and Shakespeare's world of the theater.

This production is partially funded by a grant from Wagner and Brown. For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Bacall in new 'Woman of the Year'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

"The show is almost an entirely new show. It's a landmark. When has a Broadway musical, considered a hit, been totally redirected to tour? Joe Layton's made this show really fun...."

Ah. The object of Lauren Bacall's uncharacteristic exultation was the new director and choreographer of "Woman of the Year" — or, to hear Bacall tell of it, of the new, improved "Woman of the Year." (Layton replaces the original director Robert Moore and the original choreographer Tony Charmoli.)

"What's important to me is quality," the voice continued. "I said I would never tour in a second-rate show and look at what he's done!"

According to Bacall, the John Kander-Fred Ebb-Peter Stone musical opening at the Ahmanson here on Tuesday under the auspices of the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera has been restaged, rechoreographed, reorchestrated, has "two terrific new songs," a new Halston wardrobe for its star and a new cast (except for herself, of course, leading man Harry Guardino and actress Marilyn Cooper).

Yet the burst of exuberance was a far cry from a less sanguine conversation that took place last winter in Bacall's Dakota apartment in New York. She had left the Broadway production of "Woman" the previous June. Raquel Welch had succeeded her. And aside from irritation at the gossip fueled by an alleged rivalry between them, Bacall was suffering from a bad case of disenchantment with Broadway as a whole.

" 'Woman' was certainly a large critical success for me," she had said, on that December afternoon in a high-ceilinged living-room crowded with books and antiques, "but I had a lot of unpleasant experiences with it — not with any of the creative people, but with some...."

"Broadway has changed," she said, inhaling deeply, "and I don't like what's happened. It's all about money, which makes me ill to begin with. Every time I've done something for money — which I've done about twice in my life — I've regretted it. It was always lousy.

"But if you have high standards, you're in trouble these days. Prevailing attitudes are, 'We'll do it — is it gonna make money? How much is this gonna cost?' Not: 'Is it good?' Not: 'Can we make it better?' Just: 'If you're gonna make changes, what's it gonna cost me?'

"A lot of producers automatically put themselves in an adversary position. I mean. Nobody's looking to waste money. All I care about is the quality of anything I'm associated with. I'm the one who's out there with a new audience eight times a week and, at the cost of tickets today, they're ... entitled to something good."

Actress Lauren Bacall laughs during a Boston news conference Tuesday at the Colonial Theatre, where she is starring in the new musical play, "Woman of the Year." Succeeding as a woman today is "a very individual thing," says Bacall. "I think if you stay alive, you're one step ahead of the game."

Bacall was sitting in an overstuffed chair, dressed casually in slacks and an open shirt, the familiar slit eyes darting about the room, one hand nervously running through her shoulder-length hair. Producer Joe Kipness, a friend, had died a few days before, which may have contributed to the palpable restlessness.

Zanuck's child wants La Grande

WAHOO, Neb. (AP) — The daughter of the late movie mogul Darryl F. Zanuck says she wants to buy the hotel where her father was born in 1902, possibly to make it into a Zanuck museum.

"All of his first memories were of the hotel" owned by his own father, said Darrylin Zanuck DePineda of Santa Monica, Calif. "That's where he lived and where he was born. It would hurt me terribly if it were torn down."

Mrs. DePineda said Friday that her son, Robert, would travel to Wahoo within the next two weeks to look over the LaGrande Hotel.

The vacant hotel has been condemned by the state fire marshal, but owner Charles Bartek said it could be brought into compliance if it were restored. He said he is asking $60,000 for the 75-year-old brick, three-story hotel.

Mrs. DePineda said she had no definite plans for the hotel if she buys it,

Reagan's letter helps patient

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The beaming face of 5-year-old leukemia patient John Dominguez upon receiving a letter from President Reagan could "make the whole world feel good," a hospital staff member says.

The boy, weary of painful treatments for the cancer he's battled for two years, was complaining to his doctors recently when one of them suggested he "tell the president" about it.

The boy did — and Reagan sent him a personal reply, encouraging John to keep up his spirits and adding: "You are an inspiration to other children who have had similar difficulties ..."

"The look on his face when we gave him the letter was so incredible," said Kitty Rogers, a counselor at Los Angeles County's Harbor-UCLA Medical Center near Torrance. "He said, 'For me?' If we could have captured that expression, we could make the whole world feel good."

Number gets pollution reports

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — For the 90 miles between Baton Rouge and New Orleans, the Mississippi River is an environmentalist's nightmare, lined with oil refineries and chemical plants.

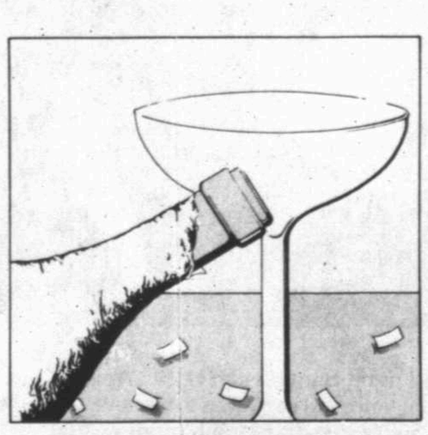

That's also the region from which the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources is getting most of several hundred calls a month on a new telephone hotline set up to encourage citizens to blow the whistle on polluters.

"We're getting about 15 calls a day, and a lot of them have very good information," said Robert Lawrence, who runs the 24-hour hotline service. "We've received the first notification of several hazardous waste discharges from it."

Among them was a gas chemical leak at a Shell Oil Co. plant in New Orleans for which the company was fined $50,000.

The department proposed the toll-free number after an anonymous caller reported that the Placid oil refinery in Baton Rouge was secretly dumping phenol into the Mississippi.

Placid was later fined $625,000 for that and other violations by the state, and is now facing federal charges.

Band returns to play 'room full of blues', rock

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

For the past five years they have maintained a rigorous schedule criss-crossing the country playing mostly one night stands in major metropolitan areas and West Texas.

Roomful of Blues played Midland last Halloween. "It didn't draw that well, but it was a good gig," Preston Hubbard said in a recent telephone interview. "It was kind of odd being in a cafeteria (The Cellar) because we're used to big clubs."

This time Roomful will perform at the American Legion Hall June 20 after playing Houston's Juneteenth Festival on the 18th. The following four nights will find them in Texas — June 22 at Nick's Uptown in Dallas, June 23 Blossom's Downstairs in Fort Worth and June 24-25 Rockefeller's in Houston — before playing Heartbreak in New York City June 27.

Not a new group, Roomful has performed out of Providence, R.I., for 12 years. Hubbard has worked two hitches with Roomful and is familiar with the group's history.

"The band originally was formed as a Chicago blues band and went through different changes. We went to three horns for a while, and then we had four horns for a while. We've had various personel changes over the years, but the core of the band has remained the same.

"Now, we have a five-piece horn section. The present band has been in this particular state for four years now."

Original members of Roomful include Greg Piccolo, Al Copley, Doug James, Rick Lataille and John Rossi. The newer members are Bob Enos, Ronnie Earl and Porky Cohen. Cohen, who used to play with Glenn Miller, is almost twice the age of the other members.

"For a long time we were just regional," Hubbard said. "We would go out on the road for short jumps. We've been going to Texas now for six years. We've been playing the East Coast for quite a while, but we didn't really go national until two or three years ago."

The reason for touring nationally is basic.

"You make more money out on the road," Hubbard said. "And you get the name around more so we've really become a touring band now. When we aren't on the road we're around the northeast. It's still on the road, but it doesn't seem like it to me," said Hubbard, who is now used to "performing over 300 nights a year."

"We never stop basically. When we're home we'll get usually three nights off a week. When we're on the road, it's usually nonstop — like this trip taking us to Midland. I think we're out for about 16 or 17 nights. It's all one city to the next."

Although Hubbard, who is single, agrees it's difficult to have a family or personal commitments and travel that extensively he looks at the advantages, rather than disadvantages.

n"It's something you adjust to." Pausing, he adds, laughing, "Actually, I think sometimes it helps keep marriages together. You get some time away from each other."

Of Roomful's music Hubbard said, "We take a lot of obscure tunes from the late '40s, early '50s and we've had some originals, too. But, basically it's a jump R&B band."

Roomful's repertoire includes works by B.B. King, Johnny "Guitar" Watson, Gatemouth Brown, T-Bone Walker, Albert Collins and Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson (with whom the band has just completed an album on Muse Records).

"We have one (album) out on Muse with Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson which was nominated for a Grammy this year," Hubbard said. In addition, Roomful cut two albums in the late '70s on Island, cut one on its own label, Blue Flame, about three years ago and the just recently released Muse label cut with Big Joe Turner.

When Hubbard, who used to "play with (jazz tenor) Scott Hamilton years ago" but left to join Roomful, summed up how he felt about returning to Roomful after a three year absence, the smile could be heard over the phone line.

"I came back home," he said. "Back to the family."

Roomful of Blues will perform at the American Legion Hall June 20. Tickets, priced at $8 in advance and $10 at the door, may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, Ned's in the Building of the Southwest and Leo's Oyster Bar downtown.

Quinn returns to hometown in triumph

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Anthony Quinn, a poor kid from Los Angeles who grew up to earn critical and popular acclaim as an actor, has come home again — triumphantly.

"My only concern is, can you ever be a hero in your own home?" Quinn worried by telephone from Denver before arriving in Los Angeles with a tour of the revised musical "Zorba." It is based on the same Nikos Kazantzakis novel as the 1964 film "Zorba the Greek," which also starred Quinn.

But the success of the film — which, like the musical, co-starred Lila Kedrova and was directed by Michael Cacoyannis — didn't necessarily spell success for the musical, said Quinn. The actor last appeared on the stage in Los Angeles 30 years ago in "A Streetcar Named Desire."

"Sometimes familiarity does breed a certain amount of contempt," said the star of more than 200 films. "Will they accept me for whatever I've accomplished?"

'Meditation' loaned to museum

DALLAS — Setting a precedent for the new Arts District in Dallas, the Trammell Crow Company is loaning a newly acquired sculpture, "Meditation" by Auguste Rodin, to the Dallas Museum of Art.

Ultimately, the life-size piece will be a permanent feature in the new LTV Center, now being built by the developer in downtown Dallas.

Rodin's bronze figure originally was part of the artist's immense, life-long "Gates of Hell" project. It was first seperated from the larger work about 1885, and given the title, "Meditation" or "The Inner Voice." A variation of the figure was later incorporated into Rodin's monument to Victor Hugo in the Pantheon in Paris.

The cast of "Meditation" acquired by the Trammell Crow Company is the 10th in the edition of 12. Standing 62½ inches high and signed by the artist on the top of the base mear the figure's right foot, it is an outstanding example of the superb craftsmanship of the Coubertin Foundry in France, producers of some of the finest bronzes cast since Rodin's lifetime.

"Meditation" will be displayed at the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts in its present Fair Park building until it is relocated for the opening of the new downtown museum in January 1984. The sculpture will remain on loan to the museum for about 18 months until the completion of the LTV Center.

Then the sculpture will be placed in the LTV Center rotunda, across Harwood Street from the site of the new Dallas Museum of Art.

Chromium measurement high

A new technique has proved that pre-1978 measurements of chromium in normal body fluids are 10 times too high.

Hatchet to perform June 16

ODESSA — Molly Hatchet brings its aggressive brand of rock'n'roll to Ector County Coliseum at 7:30 p.m. Thursday as part of the Budweiser Light Series.

Distinguished by heavy guitar instrumentals and rhythmic drive, the Jacksonville, Fla., band has released a new album "No Guts...No Glory." The group's previous gold and platinum sellers include "Beatin' the Odds," "Flirtin' with Disaster" and "Molly Hatchet."

Danny Joe Brown, the group's original lead singer, rejoined Molly Hatchet in mid-1982 after a bout with diabetes and a solo venture. Other veteran members include lead guitarists Dave Hlubek, Duane Roland, and Steve Holland. Bass guitarist Riff West and drummer B.B. Bordan complete the group.

Playing backup will be the southern rock group Blackfoot. Tickets are now on sale at Endless Horizon and at the coliseum box office the day of the show.

Water does well in Legislature, CRMWD manager says

BIG SPRING — Area water interests fared reasonably well in the 68th State Legislature in the opinion of O.H. Ivie, general manager of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

"What doesn't become law often is as important as what does," he said.

One measure which didn't pass and which affected the district was HB 1482, which was introduced to "cure" a 3rd Court of Appeals opinion which upheld CRMWD's Stacy reservoir permit. Although language was inserted to protect CRMWD in event its Stacy permit had to be relitigated, Ivie opposed the bill because he considered it unwise law for the state. Chairman Felix McDonald of the Texas Water Commission opposed a similar version in the Senate.

While a last-minute wrangle between the Senate and House resulted in failure of eight water bills, packaged as a water plan for maximum support, was disappointing in many respects, Ivie thought the bays and estuaries bill deserved to be put on the back burner. Like HB 1482, he felt it could impede Texas water development.

CRMWD received help from area representatives, particularly those on natural resource committees — Sen. John Montford, Lubbock, and Rep. Tom Craddick, Midland. In the House, Craddick kept HB 1482 in his committee for refinement until near the end of the session, then influenced a holding pattern in the calendar committee. Montford got SB 705 (for which HB 1482 was substituted) referred to subcommittee.

HB 1482 was introduced by Rep. Gerald Geistweidt of Mason after heads of several water authorities expressed concern that the 3rd Court of Appeals opinion by Justice John Powers would restrict appropriations to the amount of water put to beneficial use in three years. CRMWD did not believe that the "use it or lose it" doctrine would reduce appropriations.

"I can appreciate their concern, although I think it was unwarranted," Ivie commented. "When we got the Stacy permit, we recognized that it was subject to prior appropriations. HB 1482 was so worded that all water impounded in a reservoir, up to the permitted amount, would be considered as having been put to beneficial use.

"If that were the case," said Ivie, "the only way anyone could get a permit in the future would be to strike a deal with river authorities which now have those impoundment rights, or else agree not to impound any water until all the downstream reservoirs were overflowing. This would ignore need elsewhere, and I don't think this is in the best of Texas."

Nor did he consider the Senate bill requiring release of water sufficient to sustain the historic productivity of bays and estuaries to be in the best interest of Texas.

"Many say this resulted in the eight water bills, packaged to gain widest possible support, failing to pass," he said. "But as I see it, the language was so broad and indefinite it could choke upstream development. The measure called for release of 12 million acre feet of water a year to sustain certain marine life in bays and estuaries. There are no viable studies that pinpoint a practical quantity of water needed, for while too little salinity may adversely affect one specie, it may well benefit another.

BIG SPRING — Consumption in a dry May as compared to a relatively wet one a year ago has pulled Colorado River Municipal Water District deliveries even for the first five months.

Total deliveries by the district in May amounted to 1,851,889,066 gallons, a gain of 369,491,689 gallons or 24.93 percent over May 1982. Municipal deliveries of 1,650,229,700 were up 30.86 percent, while mining and industrial deliveries of 201,659,366 were down 6.67 percent.

For the first five months municipal deliveries stand at 5,793,639,400 gallons compared to 5,729,259,800 galons for the first five months last year. Industrial deliveries now sand at 1,009,63,262 gallons, compared to 1,008,584,015 for the initial five months of 1982.

The cities registered large gains for May over the same month last year. Midland used 394,090,000 gallons, up 14.93 pecent. Big Spring showed 295,310,000 gallons, up 28.58 percent. Odessa used 821,285,000 gallons, up 37.57 percent; Snyder 101,520,000 gallons, up 44.97 percent; and Stanton, 17,676,700, up 19.25 percent. In addition, Peyote and West Texas Children's Home used 9,015,300 gallons, a gain of 46.13 percent over May of last year.

By Franchelle Moore P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702

Enclosed is a copy of my check No. 141 for $11. As you can see, it was paid on March 30, 1983, by The First National Bank in Midland.

A surplus company advertised in your Sunday supplement, "Family Weekly," on or about March 13, 1983, for surplus field glasses costing $9 each plus $2 shipping and handling.

On April 15, I moved to 1208 W. Golf Course, Midland. At that time, I wrote to the company notifying them of the new address and asking the status of my order. Since then I've written another letter about my order. As of today, I have had no response.

I'm sure the Midland Reporter-Telegram does not condon false advertising or poor service to its readers. Can you offer any assistance on this matter?

Thank you very much in advance. — Roger Allen

ANSWER: A check was made with the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, and the information you gave was relayed to them. Donna Rushing with the BBB checked the files on the company you referred to and, according to the Long Island BBB report, the company has been contacted several times by the BBB in New York to obtain a report on substantiation of products and perfórmance on providing the merchandise. According to the Metropolitan BBB, the company in question has failed to provide the information.

Ms. Rushing asks that you write a letter to the BBB in Midland and they will try to obtain information from the company. Write the information you have given to Answer Line to the BBB of the Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland, Texas 79711.

I have two questions for Answer Line. First, I recently received a notice from the Midland County Appraisal District for tax on a bass boat I own. I keep this boat at Lake Amistad all the time, and I would like to know how can Midland County tax personal property which is not located in Midland County?

Also, I would like to know if the security deposits made for office space in buildings and which, in my case, have been held for about six years, are earning interest. If so, what about the interest? — J.A.

ANSWER: Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser with the Midland County Appraisal District, and Richard Carmean, appraiser with the district, say the state Constitution designates certain items which are not subject to taxation, which include, basically, property within a household. In Section 11.01 of the code, all real and tangible property is taxable by law. This includes recreational vehicles, boats, airplanes and motorcycles. Section 41.42 states that unless items are taxed in another county, they are subject to taxation in the county in which the vehicles are registered.

In other words, you must pay taxes on your bass boat either in Midland County or in Val Verde County. If you are paying tax on the boat in Val Verde County, you must provide the Midland County district with the proof that you are registered on the appraisal record in Val Verde County.

In answer to your second question, Peter Mehlert, manager of the Western United Life Building, says that security deposits paid by tenants are "put on hold" without bearing interest until disposition of the agreement. This is the usual procedure for any type of security deposits and the decision is up to the discretion of the landlord. Ninety-nine percent of the time, landlords hold the deposits, which are subject to refund, as non-bearing accounts, such as escrow money. Otherwise, a bookkeeping system would have to be established, and this would be a "tremendous task" for the landlords, Mehlert says.

United Way's 'loaned executives' to begin training for program

The foot soldiers of United Way's 1984 fund-raising campaign — 14 loaned executives — are scheduled for "combat" training Monday and Tuesday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the ARCO Oil and Gas Building training room at 300 N. Pecos St.

The executives are loaned by their employers to work part-time for the United Way during the six-week campaign. Loaned executives work half a day each day of the campaign helping organize employee fund-raising campaigns within other companies and explaining the United Way operation to employee groups.

Companies contributing loaned executives this year include: ARCO, Exxon, First City National Bank, First National Bank, Gulf, Marathon Oil, Southwestern Bell, Texaco, Texas American Bank, Texas Electric Service Co., Union Oil, Spectrum Seven Energy and Michael Williams law firm.

On Monday morning the loaned executives will tour three United Way agencies, the Salvation Army, Community Day Nursery and Casa de Amigos. They will listen to speakers from four other United Way agencies — Midland Rape Crisis Center, the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and their Children, Palmer Drug Abuse and the YMCA — during the afternoon.

Bell demonstrator answers call with telephone technology

In the future, the telephone may be used not only for chatting, but also toasting bread.

Bill Haehnel, a Southwestern Bell science demonstrator, will be in Midland from Monday through June 27 speaking to civic groups about future telephone gadgets. He will demonstrate a variety of recent innovations he says will mark the beginning of tomorrow's communications.

"Southwestern Bell intends to offer the most reliable, most efficient, most economical means to connect information suppliers with information seekers," he said. "I see broad new avenues opening to our future."

Local telephone companies "are at the very center of where the action is today and where it will be tomorrow, and for a whole lot of tomorrows to come," said Haehnel.

Haehnel, whose 25-minute presentation — "Blue Sky of Communications" — says the program will show there are no limits to how local telephone networks can enrich lives through communications.

"We are going to give you access to all kinds of information and data processing," Haehnel said. "When and where you want it, in your home, at your desk, in your car, even in your briefcase."

The presentation — complete with a lighted display and removable panels — begins with a demonstration of a Bell solar battery. By applying light, Haehnel can activate the battery and cause a music box to play. When he blocks out the light, the music stops.

The solar battery has paved the way for other intriguing uses of the sun, he said, including solar-powered cars, telephone lines, homes and satellites.

The 40-year-old veteran of the telephone company will present his program to adult groups in a non-technical manner. After each presentation, Haehnel will step back and activate the display of flashing sights and sounds that usher in the Information Age.

"From where I stand now," he said, "some of these avenues look like uphill grades, but that's no problem. No one ever reached new heights without climbing — and that's what we've prepared ourselves to do."

For more information, call Jay Allen at Southwestern Bell.

"Southwestern Bell intends to offer the most reliable, most efficient, most economical means to connect information suppliers with information seekers."

Midland funeral homes already in compliance

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A new Federal Trade Commission regulation governing funeral home operations will have little or no impact on Texas, according to state officials and spokesmen for local funeral homes.

Basically, the FTC rule calls for price itemization of "funeral components" and family permission before embalming is performed.

Spokesmen for the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home and the Thomas Funeral Home both agree that the FTC rule will not cause them any problems because they're already in compliance with state law.

"It's old hat," said Bill Thomas. "It really won't affect us."

Said David Baimbridge, general manager of Newnie Ellis Funeral Home, "It may mean a couple more forms to fill out, but that's about it."

Scheduled to go into effect in January, the rule forbids "a number of abuses associated with the funeral industry," said James Hacking, assistant legal counsel for the American Association of Retired Persons.

The 14.5 million member AARP was among the groups that fought a 10-year battle for funeral reform and says the rule places consumers "in a more equal bargaining position when confronted with the difficult task of making funeral arrangements."

As an example of how the public will benefit from the rule, according to Hacking, funeral directors will have to furnish price lists of "funeral components" and people will be able to pick and choose what they want "to build a funeral."

Currently, many funeral homes offer only package funerals that aren't itemized.

"One of the most glaring examples of abuse revolves around embalming, which is now done as a matter of course because people are told state law requires it," said Kent Brunette, legislative representative for the AARP.

"That's not so. No states require embalming, except under special circumstances," he added. "It was a way to slip something by the consumer and make an extra buck."

Embalming began during the Civil War when "a lot of people were killed far away from home and it took a long time to transport them," said FTC Attorney Mike Rodemeyer.

"It's generally not required in any state, except in special cases where interstate shipment is involved, or if the body is to be held without burial or cremation for an extended period of time. It's basically cosmetic and helps preserve the body for viewing."

Embalming materials cost funeral homes about $2, according to Rodemeyer, who said consumers typically pay $75 to $200 for the procedure.

Average price of a funeral today is $2,800. By contrast, cremation of a body that isn't held for viewing runs from $150 to $350, according to authorities.

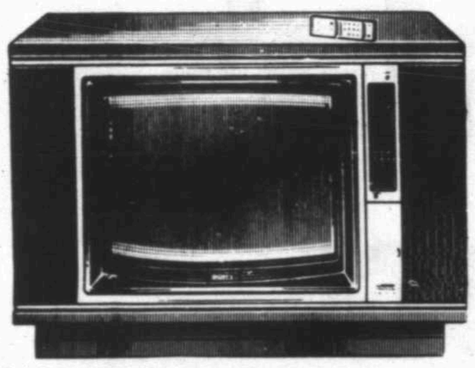

"The key (to the FTC rule) is that it offers people their choice of an expensive funeral or a cheaper one," said Brunette. "They don't have that choice now.

"By having a price list of available items, people can build their own funerals instead of being forced into a (take-all-or-nothing) package."

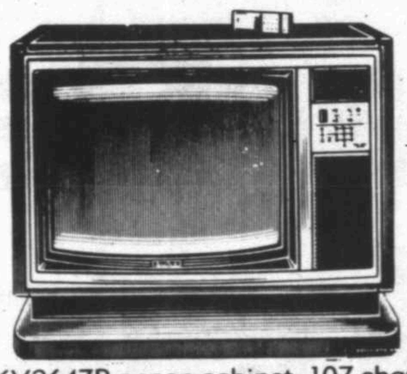

But according to John Shocklee of the state morticians board in Austin, Texas funeral homes already are operating under legislation passed in the late 1970s that incorporates many provisions of the FTC rule, which exempts states that comply with federal regulations.

"However, we will be reviewing the FTC rule to see if there's anything in it we don't have," said Shocklee, executive secretary of the morticians board.

Diverse activities slated for five-day Juneteenth celebration

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

It's popularly called Juneteenth. It's a day to rejoice.

While there is no one alive who remembers "freedom day" almost 118 years ago, thousands of Texans will celebrate that event called Emancipation Day, which marks the end of slavery of Texas blacks and the beginning of their freeedom.

On June 19, 1865, Major General Gordan Granger landed at Galveston to re-establish federal authority and immediately issued an order declaring that "in accordance with a proclamation from the Executive of the United States, all slaves are free."

That day, Galveston blacks held the first Juneteenth celebration. From there, the holiday spread throughout Texas, the South and the nation.

"But we'd like to see all people come out to celebrate," Roosevelt Campbell, representative of the Tall City Lions Club, said, referring to Midland's Juneteenth celebration Wednesday through June 19, sponsored by the Tall City's Lions Club and the Black Advisory Council.

"We like to look at ourselves as Texans — black nonetheless — we'd like this to be a day for all Texans — black and white," he said.

Campbell said he remembers many rollicking Juneteenths.

"It's a day to dance and eat," he said. "Back when everyone used to plank dance, a dance originating from Africa. Planks were laid on a board and they'd dance. No music, just the vibration — the sound of feet gave rythmn."

Although comtemporary funk and disc jockeys have replaced the simple tap on planks, Campbell said the celebration is the same.

"This is a time for gaiety. We want and welcome everyone," he said.

Activities will begin Wednesday and Thursday with a tennis tournament at 6 p.m. in Washington Park.

Friday, the official kick-off, will offer basketball at 6 p.m. in Washington YMCA and a marathon race at 7 p.m. in the park. At 6:30 p.m. the official announcement for the Juneteenth celebration will be made and food and music will be served until Sunday.

At 10 a.m. Saturday, the Juneteenth parade will travel from the Northgate Shopping Center at Nobles Avenue and Lamesa Road. Following the parade a basketball tournament is scheduled at noon in the Washington YMCA.

A swimsuit contest is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. by the pool in Washington Park. On Sunday, there will be a religious music program at 2 p.m. The celebration will come to an end at midnight.

PIK program costs may not reach estimated $25 billion

COLLEGE STATION — When the final verdict is in, the government's payment-in-kind (PIK) program may not be as costly a government program as some have suggested.

While the estimated cost of the program ranges from $10 to $25 billion, two economists with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service peg the cost at about $11 billion.

TAEX economists Dr. Ron Knutson and Ed Smith break the figure down to $7.5 billion on the value of PIK commodities, $2.3 billion for deficiency payments and $1.3 billion for diversion payments. Deficiency payments result when farm prices drop below a designated level; diversion payments are for taking cropland out of production.

PIK's estimated $11 billion cost includes $5.4 billion on corn; $3.1 billion on wheat; $1.4 billion on cotton; $700 million on grain sorghum, and $500 million on rice.

"Although the total cost of PIK may seem high compared to farm programs in the '70s, the figure is low compared to what the government's farm program would have cost without PIK," said the economists. They estimated farm program costs for 1982-83 will reach about $18 billion and cost for 1983-84 would total almost $21 billion without PIK.

The $21 billion would include $3 billion for the dairy support program and $2 billion on minor agricultural commodities and general administration expenses. The remaining $16 billion represents program costs for grains and cotton in the absence of PIK. So, if the $11 billion estimated cost of PIK stands up, the program could be viewed as causing a net savings of about $5 billion.

Ranchers to gather in August

SAN ANGELO — Ranchers from 25 states amd several nations will convene here Aug. 1-5 for the Third Annual International Ranchers Roundup in the San Angelo Convention Center.

The roundup, which will be keyed to the theme "Innovative Management," will feature general sessions of interest to ranchers and landowners plus three days of intensified concurrent sessions on beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing managemnt, wildlife, marketing, business management for the ranch family, and on computers.

Keynote speakers will include Dub Waldrip, president of the National Cattlemen's Association; U.S. Rep.Tom Loeffler; Cas Maree, South African rancher, and Dr. Arthur G. Hansen, chancellor of the Texas A&M University System.

Ranchers at the conference may choose from four ranch tours to be conducted Aug. 5. Tours will be to West Texas ranches noted for innovative management practices in beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing systems and to the scenic wildlife Texas Hill Country near Kerrville.

Altogether, 85 ranching experts are to address the roundup, which is to be attended by up to 750 ranchers and other landowners.

Ranchers and others interested in attending may write International Ranchers Roundup, P.O. Drawer 1849, Uvalde, Texas 78801 or call county extension agents.

Plains cotton production down

LUBBOCK — The 1982 cotton production from the 25 High Plains counties totaled 1,285,600 bales, which is a 63.5 percent reduction from the 3,522,000 bales produced in 1981 and the lowest since the 1,193,100 bales harvested in the weather-ravaged 1974 season.

Yield per harvested acre in 1982 averaged only 259 pounds of lint, according to the Plains Cotton Growers Inc. In the previous year, the average was 378 pounds. The reduction was 31.5 percent.

After the destructive 1982 summer hailstorms, the greatest change from 1981 is in the planted acres which were abandoned before the harvest. The Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service says 25 High Plains counties were planted in 3,685,700 acres in 1982 but that only 2,380,900 acres were harvested. Abandoned were 1,304,800 acres.

In Midland County in 1982, 34,400 acres were planted in cotton and 33,100 acres were harvested. The total of 480-pound bales was 24,000. The average yield per acre was 348 pounds.

Events in the 7 p.m. event will include the keyhole, barrel race, wheelie, osbtacle jumb, pole bending and the flat track.

Motorcycle and three-wheeler classes will be held for all age groups.

Entry forms, available at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service office in the Dawson County Courthouse, may be mailed to Jimmie Williams, 111 N.E. 24th St., Lamesa, Texas 79331, or may be filled out at the 5 p.m. registration just prior to the Rodeo.

Big wheat harvest anticipated

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's program to slash farm production from recent record levels is having an impact, but American winter wheat farmers are still headed for one of their biggest harvests on record.

Although Agriculture Department analysts reduced their 1983 winter wheat forecast by more than 10 million bushels from May to June, the crop at 1.88 billion bushels will still be only 11 percent less than last year's record and the fourth largest ever. Only the soaring crops of the three past years were better.

Under the incentives Reagan offered this year to keep land out of production, winter wheat farmers have idled 11.3 million of the acres they planted a year ago.

But they've intensified their production efforts on the 47 million acres seeded this year so that the yield will be an all-time high 40.1 bushels an acre. That's four bushels more than the yield that produced last year's 2.11 billion bushel crop.

According to the monthly harvest estimate, issued by the department's Crop Reporting Board Friday, winter wheat remains in fair to good condition across the nation.

Coalition seeks aid for hungry

WASHINGTON (AP) — A coalition of more than 30 religious, anti-poverty, labor and farm groups is pressing House members to create a special committee to coordinate U.S. efforts to eliminate hunger both at home and around the world.

"Policies affecting hunger are now split into the jurisdictions of at least seven committees," says Arthur Simon, a leader of the coalition. "In the face of rising world instability, we cannot afford an uncoordinated approach to world hunger problems."

Farm exports may stay down

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — There is little on the horizon to suggest that U.S. farm exports are going to rebound dramatically in the near future.

In fact, some experts say that if there is any growth in exports it may be on the weak side for some years, mainly because of lingering problems in the world economy.

The value of farm exports in the year that began last Oct. 1 is forecast at $35.5 billion, down $3.6 billion from 1981-82 and $8.3 billion below the record of $43.8 billion in 1980-81.

Agriculture Department trade analysts say a number of things have spoiled the U.S. farm export boom — which grew for 12 straight years until values dropped last year.

A depressed world economy, huge crops in some countries, a strong U.S. dollar — which make American goods more expensive — and competition from major competitors have put pressure on sales.

Department analysts said in a recent report that with U.S. economic recover underway "the world economy will likely expand later" this year but will mean only a slight benefit to exports.

"The recovery is apt to be too weak to provide much of a boost," the report said. "Unemployment in the industrialized countries will remain high and could even incresase during 1983, thus dampening consumer demand."

In the poorer developing countries, "Foreign exchange will probably continue to be in short supply, though an easing can be expected over the course of 1983 and into 1984."

Further, it said, there might be only a small easing of the dollar's value this year, which is not likely to affect U.S. exports much in 1983 but could have some impact in 1984.

But all of this may be understated. The department has not issued a definitive forecast of farm exports for next year, nor has it publicly examined export prospects for the next few years in view of recent developments.

However, a recent issue of Economic Review, published by the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, concludes that "the 1980s may well turn out to be a decade of weak growth" for U.S. farm exports.

"A sluggish world economy, a slow return of developing countries to financial strength, ample world food supplies, and relative strength in the dollar — all these point to slow growth for farm exports for the next few years," the report said.

In the 1970s, it said, agricultural exports showed "remarkable growth" that reshaped U.S. agriculture by boosting farm income, raising land prices and encouraging investments which increased productive capacity.

Now, with weaker-than-expected sales, there are "significant implications" for the nation's farms.

"Without strong export markets, farm income is not likely to return to the halcyon levels of the 1970s in the near future," the Federal Reserve report said.

Horses should receive encephalitis vaccine

Though sleeping sickness is no longer a major problem in the horse industry, it still exists and all equines should receive a protective vaccine each year.

A highly effective combination vaccine is available for horses. It protects against Eastern, Western and Venezuelan types of sleeping sickness, as well as tetanus.

Losing horses to sleeping sickness is unnecessary. Last year cases of the disease were reported in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama, probably due to an unusually high mosquito population during the summer months.

Equine encephalitis (sleeping sickness) is carried naturally by several species of birds. When mosquitoes bite an infected bird, the disease can then be transmitted by the mosquitoes to other animals.

Early signs of the disease include fever, loss of appetite and depression. The animal is usually restless, may walk aimlessly in circles and be sensitive go sound and touch.

One common symptom is a horse that stands with his head hung low like he's sleeping. He doesn't fully chew hay or forage, and as the disease progresses, the tongue may actually hang out of the mouth.

Once a horse is infected, treatment is generally unsuccessful. That's why proper immunization each year is so important.

The disease can also be transmitted to humans and some other animals. The virus has been found in dogs, goats, pigs and domestic birds.

All equines should be vaccinated each spring before mosquitoes become prevalent. This should give them the protection needed for another year.

Caveat runs home with Belmont victory

Three horses own Triple Crown jewels

NEW YORK (AP) — Caveat moved along the rail turning for home, took the lead from Slew o' Gold with about an eighth of a mile to go and won the $358,500 Belmont Stakes Saturday at Belmont Park.

Caveat's victory split the Triple Crown three ways. Deputed Testamony was unable to repeat his success in the Preakness. Sunny Halo's, the Kentucky Derby winner, did not start.

It was the second straight Belmont Stakes victory for trainer Woody Stephens and jockey Laffit Pincay Jr., who won last year with Conquistador Cielo. Caveat is owned by August Belmont IV, the great-grandson of the man for whom the race was named.

SLEW O' GOLD, a son of Seattle Slew, the 1977 Triple Crown champion, took the lead from pacesetting Au Point with about a quarter of a mile to go. At that time, Pincay had Caveat moving and, although he brushed the rail in the upper stretch, Caveat was not to be denied.

Slew o' Gold finished second, followed by lightly raced Barberstown and Megaturn.

Caveat, who finished a hard-closing third in the Kentucky Derby but skipped the Preakness, finished 3½ lengths in front of Slew o' Gold, ridden by Angel Cordero Jr. Slew o' Gold was 1¾ lengths in front of Barberstown.

A few minutes after the finish of the race, the "Inquiry" sign went on and it was announced that the stewards had called a general inquiry. But shortly thereafter the race was called official.

CAVEAT REACHED the end of the 1½ miles on a fast track in 2:27 4-5 for his second straight victory, third in 10 starts this year and sixth in 20 career races.

Caveat had prepped for the Belmont by winning a 1 1-16-mile allowance race in the mud at Belmont Park May 30.

Before the race, Stephens, the 69-year-old Hall of Fame trainer, said, "I skipped the Preakness because I thought he needed the rest, but he's ready for the race."

Caveat certainly was ready for that, although for much of the 1½ miles those who backed him in the betting must have wondered whether it would be his day. In fact, they might have wondered where he was.

Caveat, a son of Cannonade, who won the 1974 Derby but finished third in the Belmont, returned $7.20, $3.60 and $3.40. Slew o'Gold, owned by Equusequity Stable, paid $4.60 and $4. Barberstown, owned by Bell Bloodstock Co. and ridden by Fernando Toro, was $4.80 to show.

Slew o' Gold, on the rail, broke on top. But Au Point, who started from the outside post under Greg McCarron, quickly took the lead and led the field into the clubhouse turn.

AS THE field headed the backstretch with a half-mile gone, it was still Au Point on top, followed by Slew o' Gold and Deputed Testamony, who was to finish sixth.

Au Point was still ahead at the half-mile pole, followed by Slew o' Gold. High Honors replaced Deputed Testamony in third at that point.

Then, on the turn, Slew o' Gold began a serious challenge. So did Caveat, who snuck along the rail and suddenly was in contention at the top of the stretch.

While it was Caveat's day, it was nothing but trouble for El Cubanaso, an outsider who was a member of the mutuel field. He broke down, and after crossing the finish line he was taken from the track in a van.

Balboa Native, who was ninth in the Derby but skipped the Preakness, had problems even before the race began. He was taken out of the post parade while an assistant starter examined one of his blinkers. Before the start of the race, the blinkers were removed.

Another who had problems before the race was Jorge Velasquez, who rode High Honors. The veteran jockey fell in the sixth race when his mount clipped the heels of another horse. Velasquez suffered slight abrasions of the face, but was able to ride High Honors, who finished fifth.

COMPLETING THE order of finish after High Honors was Deputed Testamony, Canadian Factor, Princilian, Current Hope, Au Point, Law Talk, Balboa Native, White Birch, Dixieland Band and El Cubanaso.

Current Hope is trained by Roger Laurin, who was trying to duplicate the feat of his father, Lucien, who 10 years ago saddled Secretariat for his devastating 31-length victory in the Belmont that made him the first Triple Crown winner in 25 years.

A crowd of 60,661 turned out on the 10th anniversary of that fabled race to watch Caveat make it the second straight year that the Triple Crown series had three different winners.

Texas defeats 'Bama to win College World Series

Pitching, timely hitting give Horns series sweep

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — It came down to pitching and hitting. Texas had the pitchers and Alabama had the hitters, most of the time.

In the end, it was the Texas pitching and some timely hitting that gave the Longhorns an undefeated sweep in the College World Series and a fourth national baseball title with a 4-3 victory over Alabama Saturday night.

"Timely hitting and pitching...that's what did it for us," said Longhorn shortstop Mike Brumley, who scored the winning run. "That's what has done it for us all year. We've got to feel great, we won it.

Texas entered the CWS with four 11-game winners and a bullpen filled with starters awaiting their turn, including Roger Clemens, 13-5. He held Alabama to seven hits and fanned nine Tide batters.

Alabama entered the series with a .340 batting average, the highest of any team here. David Magadan, college baseball's leading hitter, led the Tide hitting attack coming into the series with a .323.

"I thought we had a very, very good shot at beating Texas, but their pitching was awfully tough and they did a good job again tonight," said Alabama Coach Barry Shollenberger. "(Roger) Clemens came in and went the distance, giving us only three runs and getting us out at the most crucial times.

DESIGNATED—HITTER Kirk Killingsworth's triple off the left-centerfield fence in the seventh inning scored Brumley and the Longhorns were on their way.

Texas, 66-14, erased a 2-0 deficit in the sixth inning when Killingsworth and Tolentino singled and Jeff Hearron was hit by a pitch to load the bases.

Alabama starter Rick Browne, 12-1, walked Steve Labay to force home Killingsworth. Tolentino then scored when Johnny Sutton grounded into a fielder's choice.

Alabama, 46-11, scored one run in the bottom of the ninth, when David Magadan, who went 11-for-20 in the series and tied a CWS record for most hits in a single game, 5, and for most consecutive hits, 8, hit a ground rule double. He scored on a single by Alan Stallings, but Texas starter Roger Clemens, 13-5, got Fermin Lake to fly out to center to end the game.

THE CRIMSON Tide struck for a run in the third and went up 2-0 in the fifth on Dee Smithey's homer.

It was the third consecutive trip here for Texas, which has played in this double-elimination tourney a total of 22 times, and won national championships in 1975, 1950 and 1949.

Alabama had been here only once before and that was in 1950 when the CWS found its permanent home here 33 years ago.

Texas became the 10th team to go undefeated in series play. The champions defeated James Madison, 12-0, Oklahoma State, 6-5 in 11 innings, and Michigan, 4-2.

Alabama had to bounce back with a 6-0 victory over Arizona State Friday night to remain in the tourney after a loss to Texas the night before. The Crimson Tide also beat Arizona State 6-5 in 11 innings in its opener, Michigan, 6-5, then lost to Texas 6-4 and 4-2.

Cubs rally to beat Gators, 10-9

BY TED BATTLES

Mike Anicich's two-run single up the middle gave Midland a 10-9 come-from-behind win over the Beaumont Golden Gators at Cubs Stadium Saturday night after the Cubs had trailed 9-6 coming to bat.

A win tonight in the final game of the series would give Midland a split with the Gators. Ron Richardson, 1-5, will start for the Cubs.

Beaumont appeared to have clinched the win with a run in the top of the ninth, but A.J. Hill beat out an infield chopper and Rick Baker tripled to plate a run and knock Marty Kain out of the game.

Trey Brooks singled to right to put Midland within a run and Bill Hatcher's long fly would have won the game on the spot a year ago when it was a homer if you hit the scoreboard. Tom Lombarski then was walked purposely and Anicich, who not too long ago had a batting average of .100, delivered his game-winner.

"THAT'S THE kind of win we've been looking for," said pitching coach Glenn "Goose" Gregson as the Cubs made it two in a row. "We've been playing with a lot more intensity the last two nights."

The comebacker delighted Manager Tom Harmon for several reasons, "For one, we won on a night when our ace, Darryl Banks, didn't have it. For another, Doug Welenc, who hadn't pitched in 11 days, turned in his best performance in his last five or six outings. He was getting his breaking ball over tonight, something he hasn't been doing lately. Defensively, we turned four doubles plays. As a result, on a night when we gave up 16 hits, we gave up only nine runs."

Banks lasted only 2 1/3 innings and was behind 6-2 after a two-run homer by Mike Martin, who had a 4-for-4 night for the Gators. With Welenc checking the Gators into the seventh, the Cubs cut it to 6-5 in the fourth on a couple of walks, Carlos Lezcano's double and a couple of sacrifice flies.

Steve Garcia's two-run triple, his second of the game, in the fifth made it 8-5 and the Cubs still trailed 8-6 going into the ninth.

WHEN Williamson walked Lombarski in the ninth, it ended a seven-game hitting streak, but it didn't prove to be a wise move. It gave Anicich, who had walked three times earlier, a chance to hit, which might have been good strategy earlier in the year, but hasn't been since he came off the Disabled List with his 4-for-40 .100 batting average.

Since then the former Arizona State University first baseman from Fair Oaks, Calif., has batted at a .385 clip with nine homers and 26 runs batted in.

Anicich signed with the Mets and last year hit 22 homers for Jackson before being traded to Midland at the end of spring training. "It was one of those 'for a player to be named later' deals and they still haven't named the player," Mike explained.

In high school he was overlooked by USC. "I was hurt as a junior and nobody knew I was around until I was a senior."

Anicich played on ASU's 1977 College World Series champions, the team that had Bob Horner, as an outfielder.

The Chicago Cubs' brass apparently thought highly of him, since he may be the only traded player in the organization who hasn't at some time or other been property of the Phillies. The plan is to give Mike experience at third, first and outfield.

"Jackson or Midland? I like it here. The ball carries." says Mike, who estimates that he hit about half of his 22 homers last year in Jackson's heavy air.

CUB PRINTS—Jay Lovigilio, who service with the Chicago White Sox and at Edmonton, PCL, last year has been assigned to Midland from Iowa. To make room, Bruce Chaney was given his outright release. "Jay has three or four years AAA experience. He's a second baseman, but will play third. Chicago wants to move him up to the big club next year as a utility player. He was with Chicago in spring training this year for a while," explains Harmon....A 36-base stealer last year, he will bat lead off. "That means we can drop Brooks down in the lineup where he can get more rbis." Harmon's mouth was watering at the prospect of Lovigilio, Baker and Hatcher at the top of the order.

"It helps when you pay the statistician $5 for every rebound he gives you," Milwaukee's Junior Bridgeman, Bucks' swingman, explaining an outstanding performance against Boston in the playoffs.

Stallions rip Breakers, 31-19

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Bob Lane and Lonnie Johnson accounted for two touchdowns each as the Birmingham Stallions defeated the Boston Breakers 31-19 in a United States Football League game Saturday night.

Lane ran for the game's first score and combined with Greg Anderson on a 25-yrad pass play for the second. Johnson scored the Stallions' final two touchdowns on short plunges.

The attendance of 20,500 gave Birmingham an average of 22,231 for its seven home games. The loss, Boston's first after four straight victories, left the Breakers at 9-6 and hurt their hopes for the wildcard spot in the playoffs. Birmingham is 8-7.

Johnnie Walton hit Louie Giammona and Charlie Smith on scoring tosses of 16 and 28 yards, and Smith took an 11-yard touchdown pass from Doug Woodward.

Cubs' real task lays beyond first half of season

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

When the Midland Cubs returned home from El Paso early in the week, they weren't mathematically out of the first half Texas League race, but realistically, they weren't in it either.

So how do you motivate a team that is faced with what could amount to a series of mid-season exhibitions?

It was a problem with which Midland Cub Manager Tom Harmon was forced to consider.

"All we can do is cause as much trouble as we can and hope that El Paso and San Antonio will knock each other off. And, maybe we aren't dead yet," he said.

EL PASO and San Antonio sure enough knocked each other off, but by winning three straight, Beaumont's Golden Gators were the ones who took advantage of it.

Regardless, of what happened, however, the real task lay beyond, the first half. "Some of our rookies, like Darryl Banks and Bill Hatcher, have AA experience under their belts now and adding Jim Wright and Carlos Lezcano will make us a better club. Whatever happens in the first half, our main objective is to build up a momentum in these final two weeks for the second half. I still think we are and will show we are a better club than our record indicates."

After his second win Friday night, Wright, the former major leaguer, hoping to comeback, expressed the same sentiments about the talent on this club. "It's struggling now, but it's a good club."

Pitching performances like Wright's could change things in a hurry, providing the Cubs don't squander them with a lack of support. Like that 10-9 loss Wednesday. In one inning, the Cubs had one run in, bases loaded and no one out and came away with just that one run as Walt Vanderbush disposed of the meat portion of the batting order.

What the Cubs need more of are games like Friday's. Wright pitched effectively, but timely hits, like Tom Lombarski's three-run homer, aggressive base running and defensive plays like Trey Brooks turned in at second helped Jim over the early-inning rough spots and made this one an 8-5 win instead of a loss.

IF YOU were watching the Chicago Cubs Friday, the normally staid, conservative Cubbies ran the modern day Gas Housers off the diamond by going for the extra base and forcing mistakes.

That's the kind of ball Midland has been trying to play this year. When it works, Harmon looks like genius. When the running game backfires, the response is "Hey, I could do a better job than guy."

The addition of Wright, the consistency of Banks, the insertion of Ken Pryce into the starting rotation, gives Midland the potential of a solid staff, much like last year when Doug Welenc, Jon Perlman, Pryce assured the Cubs good pitching three days and Carlos Gil came on to complete the picture.

If Wright, Pryce and Banks continue the good work, then it's up to one of the veterans (Welenc or Gil) or kids (Stan Kyles or Ron Richardson) to step forward and do the rest.

PITCHING coach Glenn "Goose" Gregson figures Wright, by deed, can exert a beneficial influence on the rest of the staff. "He gets the ball over, stays ahead of the hitters and after what he's been through..."

Wright was with Iowa this spring in Mesa, Ariz., and was hit hard the one time I saw him against Midland.

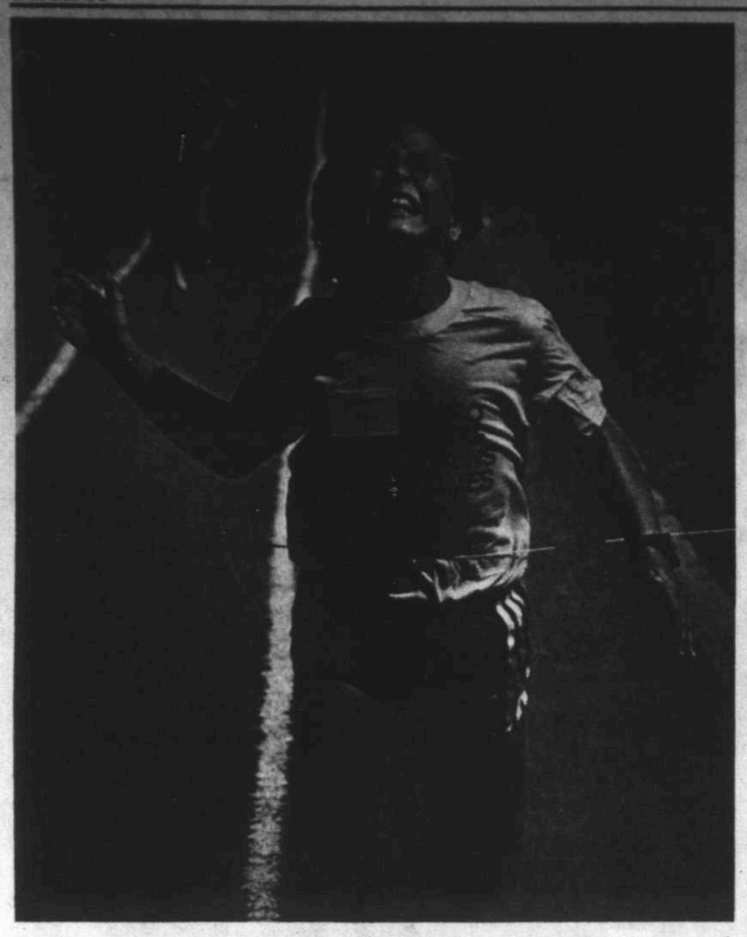

"He had no velocity," recalls Harmon, "but he went to extended spring training in Florida, worked his tail off and now he's not that far away from the bigs."

Since the discovery of a benign tumor in his pitching forearm after he was Pitcher of the Year in the American Association in 1977, it has been a long uphill strugle for Wright.

Operations, a stress fracture when after surgery he threw a ball and his arm just snapped in two, tendonitis...but Jim hopes it's all behind him now.

Strangely, despite all that has happened, unlike so many pitchers who lose their fastball and must restructure their pitching technique, he says, "I'm still a fastball, slider pitcher, just like before. Friday, I stayed mostly with the fast ball. I had trouble with my concentration and rhythm in the early innings and the good hitters jumped on my mistakes."

As the Cubs await the final six games of the first half against San Antonio, the race is over, but it's a time to regroup and develop that momentum Harmon came into the homestand looking for.

Call SWC League of Champions

DALLAS (AP) — The Southwest Conference has long been thought of as only a football power, but Texas' national championship in baseball Saturday night ended a banner year in which the league finished at least second in every sport but one that it competed in.

Texas beat Alabama 4-3 in Omaha, Neb., to win the College World Series just hours after the Longhorn golf team placed second in the NCAA Golf Championships Saturday afternoon.

League officials say the success last fall and this spring is probably unprecedented in SWC history.

"That's a tremendous tribute to the coaches and the institutions," SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby said Saturday night.

Southern Methodist won both the indoor and outdoor NCAA track championships and finished second in football, tennis and swimming.

THE UNBEATEN Mustang football team was ranked No. 1 in the Associated Precs poll until a season-ending 17-17 tie with Arkansas that left SMU in second despite a 11-0-1 record and a Cotton Bowl victory over Pittsburgh.

"We've won national championships before," said SWC information director Bill Morgan, "but I don't ever remember winning two in a year. Not many conferences do."

Houston's basketball team was ranked No. 1 before being upset by North Carolina State in the NCAA final in April.

Meet-favorite Texas and Houston finshed 2-3 on Saturday in the NCAA golf tournament at Fresno, Calif. The Texas swimming team placed third in the NCAA championships behind SMU.

Arkansas' third-place finish in the NCAA cross-country championships last fall was the league's poorest showing of the year in men's athletics.

"I think the perception (elsewhere in the country) is that the Southwest Conference is very strong in football, and basketball is on the way up," said Jacoby, who came to the SWC last year from the Mid-American Conference.

"But I quickly found that it has the balanced program from overall strength. So many conferences don't have that much balance throughout."

THE CONFERENCE'S success wasn't limited to men's sports, however. Texas Christian won the women's golf title and Texas A&M took the NCAA women's softball championship.

Jacoby said the league may not fare as well next fall and spring, but he said it should stay fairly balanced because of the member schools' commitment to balance and the attractive climate in Texas and Arkansas.

"We're hopeful that it (the success) will continue," he said. "The weather is one thing in our favor. You have outstanding coaches and a commitment on part of univershty administration on a balanced programs. By that I mean, they provide the financial resources and facilities and human resourcas."

Zoeller isn't worried about one shot

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) - Fuzzy Zoeller shrugged off the one-stroke advantage he provided Seve Ballesteros in the third round of the $450,000 Manufacturers Hanover-Westchester Classic.

"One shot is nothing to worry about at this stage," Zoeller said Saturday after his 17th hole bogey had broken the fourth tie of the day and allowed Ballesteros to escape with a one-shot lead.

"You don't worry about one shot," the free-spirit Zoeller said.

"You just go out tomorrow and play as good as you can. At the end, you add 'em up. If I'm on top, fine. If Seve is on top, then you congratulate the winner and get on down the road."

He's done some of both this year, winning the Heritage Classic and then losing the Colonial Invitation in a playoff.

BALLESTEROS, THE young Spaniard who is making his first American appearance since winning the Masters, edged into the lead with a third-round 70, 1-under par. He completed three trips over the hilly Westchester Country Club course in 206, 7-under par.

A notorious streak player, the young Spaniard who won the British PGA two weeks ago offered a comment that could be taken as a warning:

"I'm very confident right now," he said.

Zoeller, who started third round play tied for the lead with Ballesteros, could do no better than match par 71 on the hilly course in suburban New York and had a 54-hole total of 207.

During most of the hot, muggy afternoon, it appeared to be a two-man race, with the advantage shifting on almost every hole. Zoeller led on two occasions. At four different times, they were tied. Ballesteros led five times.

NEITHER PLAYED particularly well over the finishing holes, however, opening the door to potential challenges from Roger Maltbie and Lee Elder, who finished at 208, only two shots out of the lead going into Sunday's final round of the chase for an $81,000 first prize. Elder matched the best round of the tournament with a 65. Maltbie shot 70.

"I'm pleased with the way I'm playing," said Elder, a former winner of this title. "I've won about $46,000 for the year, so my exemption is set for next year. Now it's time to think about winning a tournament, something I haven't done since 1978. That's what I'll be trying to do tomorrow. I'll use the driver more. I'll go for the pins. I'll take some chances."

The group at 211 included Hale Irwin, Curtis Strange, Andy Bean, Mark McCumber, Chip Beck and Fred Couples, a winner last week in the Kemper.

Irwin had a third-round 65. Strange and Bean shot 70s. McCumber, Beck and Couples shot 71.

BOB GILDER, the defending titleholder had a 72 and was at 215. That's 23 strokes lower than his 54-hole total last year, when he matched an all-time Tour record.

Zoeller and Ballesteros were tied after 14 holes of play. Zoeller, still troubled by "a little soreness, a little stiffness," in his back, drove into the trees on the 15th, hit a limb coming out and eventually made a double bogey.

But he lost only one stroke to Ballesteros, who missed the green and bogeyed. It was the sixth consecutive hole he'd played without a par.

Zoeller regained a share of the top spot, dropping a 15 foot birdie putt on the next hole, the lost it again, missing the green and making bogey on the 17th.

Ballesteros had a chance to stretch the advantage to two strokes when he played a superb bunker shot to five feet. But he missed the birdie putt.

"We both played very up and down," Ballesteros said.

Barber one stroke ahead of Littler in TPC

CLEVELAND (AP) — Miller Barber shot a 70 Saturday for a three-round, 6-under-par total of 210 and a 1-stroke lead over Gene Littler in the Senior Tournament Players Championship at Canterbury Golf Club here.

Barber, 52, stormed back into the lead after bogeying four of the first five holes.

The Senior TPC, featuring a no-cut field of 50 golfers, is the richest tournament on the senior tour, with the winner collecting $40,000 of the $250,000 purse. The senior tour includes Professional Golfers Association players of at least 50 years old.

Barber, who has won 11 PGA tournaments and six senior titles in his 24-year career, shared the second-round lead with Littler at 4-under-par 140.

But Barber shot bogeys on the first three holes and, after parring the fourth hole, again bogeyed on the fifth.

"I don't believe I've ever started out like that in my life. I got off to as bad a start as you can get," Barber said. "After five holes, I said, 'My gosh, I don't know what's wrong with me.'"

Barber began his comeback, though, on the very next hole, when he eagled the par-5, 500-yard sixth.

"I put a 3-iron within about 4 feet of the sixth hole and eagled it. I was fortunate that I was able to hang in there and have the 1-stroke lead. I'm happy as can be," Barber said.

Barber didn't bogey another hole but rammed in birdies on the ninth, 12th, 13th and 15th holes.

Littler, the owner of 29 PGA victories and one on the senior tour, parred the first 13 holes before shooting two birdies and a bogey over the final five.

Aoki leads STO

SAPPORO, Japan (AP) — Isao Aoki, this year's winner of the Hawaiian Open, shot a 1-under-par 71 Saturday to maintain a slim lead over Taiwan's Chen Tze Ming heading into Sunday's final round of the $145,833 Sapporo Tokyu Open Golf Tournament.

Haynie joins Reinhardt for lead at seven under

MASON, Ohio (AP) - Sandra Haynie, bidding for the 43rd victory of her 22-year career, picked up four shots in four holes and moved into a share of the lead with Alexandra Reinhardt midway through the third round Saturday of the LPGA Championship.

The 40-year-old Haynie, the 1965 and 1974 champion of this women's golfing major, toured the front side of the Nicklaus Sports Center in 34, two strokes below par.

That gave the Hall of Fame member a 45-hole total of 173, 7 under for the $200,000 tournament.

Reinhardt, playing one group behind Haynie in the last threesome of the day, ran into consecutive bogeys on the sixth and seventh holes and struggled to a 2-over 38 on the opening nine holes.

The 30-year-old non-winner, who established a tournament record Friday for 36 holes with a 135 total, also started the back nine at 7 under on the 6,277-yard course north of Cincinnati.

AFTER FOUR holes, Reinhardt still was four strokes ahead of Haynie. But the veteran Texan birdied the fourth and seventh holes to move into a tie.

On the seventh hole, a par four of 340 yards, Haynie rolled in a 12-foot downhill putt for bird while Reinhardt watched 100 yards away in the trees.

Reinhardt punched out short of the green in heavy rough, pitched over the green in three shots and had to sink a short putt to salvage her bogey, creating the tie for the lead.

Then she missed a pair of seven-footers for birdies on the eighth and ninth holes that would have regained the sole lead.

No other challenger was closer than three shots on the warm, muggy day.

Jan Stephenson's bid for a second straight triumph in this, the second of four annual women's majors, appeared over. She slipped back to par for the tournament after posting 39 on the front side. She was seven shots behind with 27 holes left in the battle for the first prize of $30,000.

Kathy Young used a women's course record on the opening nine, a 5-under-par 31, for the early clubhouse lead at 214, two strokes under par.

Removing the old paint from a home's exterior, is difficult enough. But when an older home has in excess of five old coats, the job becomes mind boggling. Most people enlist the aid of chemical solutions or sanders for the job. However, there is an easier solution. A portable sandblaster, when carefully used, can do a remarkable job of removing old paint down to the bare wood. The amount of time and elbow grease saved is enormous and the sandblaster can do the job without damaging the wood. Your rental dealer will show you how to use this time-saving machine utilizing correct pressure, sand and nozzle bore size.

A workman is only as good as his tools and the final result of any job displays the quality and knowledge of such a person. Now you can do the job using the same equipment that the professionals do. Mobley to join MHS teammates at NMSU

When New Mexico State University decided to add girls' golf to its athletic program coach, Paul Brilliant got in touch with an old friend for some help.

The friend was a former Aggie golfer and held the job as assistant pro at NMSU before Brilliant took the job.

"I knew Paul from New Mexico State when I played golf there and was the assistant pro when my eligibility ran out," Worrell said.

Kelle Mobley

"Two years ago they started a girls program and that's when Paul and I got together."

Worrell, who has seen the best that District 4-5A had to offer, recommended two young ladies, Ann Coombs and Janice Littlefield.

Coombs had just completed her freshman year at Midland College where she was a member of the national championship team. She was named junior college All-American in 1982 a year after winning medalist honors in District 4-5A and finishing second at state.

Littlefield was finishing her senior year at Midland High where she was district medalist and finished third at state.

Brilliant recruited them both and off they went to Aggie land.

During the first year the former Bulldogs must have done something right because Brilliant was back in Midland the next year recruiting.

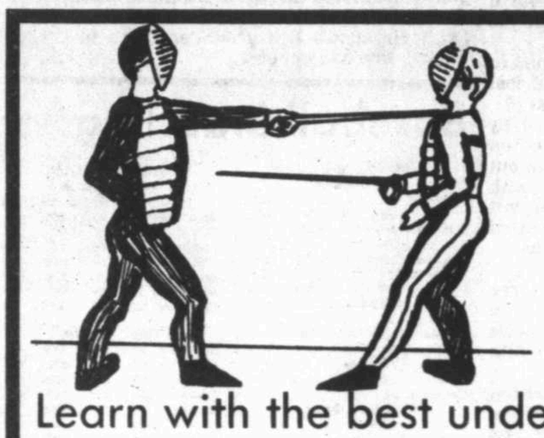

Knowing a good thing when he saw it, he came in quest of the District 4-5A medalist.

This time it was Kelle Mobley, another graduate of the Mary Baird school of golf at Midland High.

Mobley signed to play golf bringing the MHS—NMSU total to three.

All three played on the 1981 MHS team that went to state and finished third, the highest in the school's history.

"With those girls they're going to have an excellent team," Worrell said.

Connors, McEnroe to meet in finals

LONDON (AP) — Jimmy Connors gave Ivan Lendl a lesson in grass-court tennis today, whipping him 6-0, 6-3 and advancing to the finals of the $203,000 Stella Artois tournament where he will play John McEnroe.

McEnroe, in a much tougher semifinal earlier today, edged Kevin Curren of South Africa 7-5, 7-6 at London's Queen's Club.

The finals matchup is a repeat of last year's championship. Connors won in 1982 and went on to win Wimbledon.

"I was jumping on everything he did out there," Connors said. "No matter what he had done, I would have been ready for him. It was just one of those days."

Lendl, who skipped Wimbledon last year because of his dislike of grass courts, served powerfully and scored with four aces in the second set. But the third seed from Czechoslovakia was slow coming into the net behind his serve.

"He can play much better than that," Connors said. "He plays so well on other surfaces I don't think anyone can assume he can't play on grass."

He was violently swinging his racket after losing a point when it suddenly flew across the court and hit the net.

McEnroe did not argue over the warning but told newsmen later, "My racket just slipped out of my hand."

McEnroe and Curren slammed big services at each other and each hit six aces. But both had brief lapses, which turned the course of the match.

The first set went with service for 11 games, and McEnroe did not have a single break point in that time. But the 25-year-old South African's game wilted and he made a forehand error and double faulted twice to lose the set.

In the second set, McEnroe served for the match at 5-3, led 30-0, but then hit two double faults and netted a volley.

Curren won that game and forced the issue to a tiebreaker, which McEnroe won 7-5, finishing off the match with his sixth ace.

"It was unfortunate that I let up in the second set," McEnroe said. "At 5-3 and 30-all I thought it was over. It just shows how you have to keep your concentration."

Home runs, pitching give Rangers romp over Twins

By The Associated Press

American League

MINNEAPOLIS — Buddy Bell, Bobby Johnson and Wayne Tolleson belted two-run homers and Danny Darwin tossed a five-hitter Saturday night to lead the Rangers to an 11-0 romp over the Minnesota Twins.

Tolleson also scored three runs while teammate Bucky Dent added three hits and scored three runs in the Rangers' 17-hit barrage.

Darwin, 4-5, fanned four and walked two in hurling his fourth complete game of the year.

The Rangers nicked Twins starter Brad Havens, 4-6, for four runs on eight hits in three innings. Tolleson opened the game with a triple and scored on Bill Steij's single. Bell made it 3-0 in the second inning with a two-run double.

The Rangers made it 4-0 in the third on James Anderson's RBI single, then made it 5-0 in the fifth on George Wright's run-scoring double before Bell, who knocked in four runs overall, padded the Texas lead to 7-0 with his two-run blast in the sixth, his fifth of the season.

Johnson slammed his third homer of the season in the seventh, off reliever Pat O'Connor, to make it 9-0 and then Tolleson smacked his first major-league homer just two batters later.

Brewers 6, Yankees 2

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount and Cecil Cooper lined RBI doubles and Ted Simmons hit a run-scoring triple in a four-run Milwaukee fourth inning, and the Brewers went on to defeat the New York Yankees 6-2.

Bob McClure, 3-7, and Bob Gibson combined to scatter six hits for the Brewers, who had lost their previous four games and 12 of their last 18.

Milwaukee was held without a base runner by Ron Guidry, 8-4, until Rick Manning reached on shortstop Andre Robertson's error with one out in the fourth. Yount and Cooper followed with RBI doubles. Right fielder Steve Kemp then lost Simmons' fly ball in the light, and it fell behind him and rolled to the corner for an RBI triple.

Orioles 10, Red Sox 6

BOSTON — John Lowenstein drove in three runs with a pair of singles, and Ken Singleton lined a two-run double as the Baltimore Orioles extended their winning streak to six games with an 10-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Retired in order for three innings by Boston starter Bobby Ojeda, 3-2, the Orioles erupted for three runs in the fourth, three in the sixth, two more in the seventh and another pair in the ninth on 14 total hits.

Boston extended its longest losing streak since early in the 1981 season to seven games despite 15 hits, including Reid Nichols' third homer. The Red Sox, who were tied for the American League East lead one week ago, dropped six full games behind the first-place Orioles.

A's 5, White Sox 4

OAKLAND, Calif.— Tony Phillips drove in the winning run with a single in the bottom of the ninth inning, and Garry Hancock and Wayne Gross homered to lead the Oakland A's to their seventh victory in eight games, a 5-4 decision over the Chicago White Sox.

Tim Conroy, who pitched four innings of one-hit relief, gained the victory, his second in three decisions.

Hancock tied the score 4-4 in the eighth with his first homer of the year, a solo shot into the right-field stands. Hancock had entered the game as a runner for rookie Mike Davis, who sprained his ankle in the third.

Indians 9, Tigers 1

DETROIT — Broderick Perkins drove in four runs with a single and a bases-loaded double to back Juan Eichelberger and the Cleveland Indians to a 9-1 victory over Detroit, snapping the Tigers' six-game winning streak.

Eichelberger, 3-3, yielded four hits, walked three and struck out five in eight innings, and Dan Spillner pitched one hitless inning. After yielding a leadoff single to Lou Whitaker, Eichelberger did not allow another hit until there were two outs in the sixth.

Perkins drove in a run in Cleveland's two-run first inning with a single, and he drove in three runs in the ninth with a bases-loaded double. Toby Harrah had three RBI for the Indians.

Detroit scored its only run in the seventh when Larry Herndon's RBI grounder drove in Glenn Wilson, who had doubled.

Padres end Astros' winning streak

By The Associated Press

National League

HOUSTON — Terry Kennedy drove in two runs with a sixth-inning single and Kevin McReynolds slugged three singles and a sacrifice fly and knocked in two runs as the San Diego Padres snapped the Houston Astros' six-game winning streak 8-4 Saturday night.

Winning pitcher John Montefusco, 5-1, started the rally with a single with one out in the sixth. Gene Richards singled and Steve Garvey was intentionally walked by loser Vern Ruhle, 1-2, to load the bases.

Kennedy broke the 4-4 tie with his two-run single to center, and McReynolds made it 7-4 with an RBI single to left.

Montefusco followed starter Tim Lollar in the fourth and allowed no hits, struck out two and walked one in 3⅔ innings. Sid Monge finished up.

San Diego jumped in front 4-0 on Garvey's RBI single in the first and a three-run third inning. McReynolds had a sacrifice fly in the third-inning uprising and Mario Ramirez slugged a two-run triple to make it 4-0.

Phillies 9, Pirates 7

PHILADELPHIA — Tony Perez snapped a 4-4 tie in the seventh inning by belting his second game-winning home run in four nights and Steve Carlton ended a four-game personal losing skid to lift the Philadelphia Phillies past the Pittsburgh Pirates 9-7.

Mike Schmidt, who knocked in four runs for the Phillies, was hit by a pitch from Rod Scurry, 2-4, to begin the seventh. Perez then belted a 1-2 pitch over the left field wall for his fifth homer of the year.

Carlton, 7-6, struck out nine to run his career major-league leading strikeout total to 3,535. He gave up 13 hits and walked two before leaving in the ninth in favor of Al Holland. Carlton's eighth strikeout, in the sixth inning, gave him 17 consecutive years of 100 or more strikeouts.

Expos 5, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Bobby Ramos' two-run triple keyed a three-run sixth inning and Randy Lerch and Jeff Reardon combined on a six-hitter to give the Montreal Expos a 5-2 victory over the New York Mets.

The Expos, held hitless over the first five innings by Scott Holman, scored the first run of the sixth on three straight singles by Al Oliver, Tim Wallach and Warren Cromartie. One out later, Ramos, a .250 hitter, hit his triple to right.

Dodgers 3, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Bill Russell hit a two-out, two-run homer in the ninth inning to boost the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 3-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 4

CHICAGO — Darrell Porter's run-scoring single with two out in the 10th inning lifted the St. Louis Cardinals to a 5-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs, snapping a three-game losing streak.

Willie McGee started the winning rally with two away, extending his hitting streak to 18 games with an infield single. Jamie Quirk batted for pitcher Bruce Sutter, and drew a walk before Porter singled sharply to center, scoring McGee.

Giants 7, Braves 6

ATLANTA — Darrell Evans drilled two home runs and two singles and knocked in five runs to power the San Francisco Giants past the Atlanta Braves 7-6.

Evans, leading off the seventh, hit the first pitch from reliever Gene Garber, 1-1, over the center field fence to snap a 4-4 tie, giving him 15 to tie with Atlanta's Dale Murphy for the National League lead. It marked the third time this season Evans has hit two homers in a game.

Banks no longer a Cub

CHICAGO (AP) — Ernie Banks, whose hitting and fielding in a Chicago uniform put him in the Hall of Fame and earned him the nickname "Mr. Cub," is no longer a Cub.

Banks, the only Cub to have his jersey retired, has been informed by the National League ballclub that his part-time promotional contract will not be renewed because of budget cuts.

Gustafson's success leads to day dreams

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

Ever wonder what would have happened if Cliff Gustafson had managed the Houston Astros or the Texas Rangers?

On long summer nights in Arlington Stadium this corner does.

It's not overly bizarre to consider the University of Texas' highly successful coach (that's what they've always called 'em in the college ranks) at the helm of the Lone Star State's floundering professional franchises,

After all, he's taken "Gus Ball" to 11 College World Series.

How many World Series have the Rangers and Astros attended as participants? I believe the answer is none.

You don't visit a record number of NCAA Collegiate World Series gatherings in Omaha, Nebraska, without the proper coaching credentials.

Four-for-four ain't bad. In fact, make it five-for-five. Gustafson also carries himself with class, an attribute a number of major league managers have difficulty grasping.

No wild tirades by this gentlemen. No kicking dirt on umpires or club house can-kicking sessions. Ask a question. You get a calm, considerate answer.

Oh yes, Gustafson is a winner.

His overall winning percentage is amazing — over 80 percent. He also has won at least 69 percent of all games played against EACH Southwest Conference opponent.

Going to this year's NCAA World Series Gustafson was 750-159 in 16 campaigns at Texas. He's the winningest active coach in America.

Gus' teams have won 15 Southwest Conference titles.

At the College World Series (before the current one began) the Longhorns have finished third FOUR times, FOURTH three times and won the national title in 1975.

Gustafson has never actively sought a big league managing job.

Given the current state of pampered over-priced players, the 162-game schedule, the travel, the media pressures, why would he?

He's the coaching king of the collegiate baseball world. His team plays in its own park that many a minor league club would dearly love. (The Longhorn fans are perhaps the most devoted in college baseball word. Texas drew 7,200 fans for its regional playoff final against Mississippi State. Texas made over $200,000 on its baseball program in 1983).

Gustafson can just about have his pick of Texas high school baseballers.

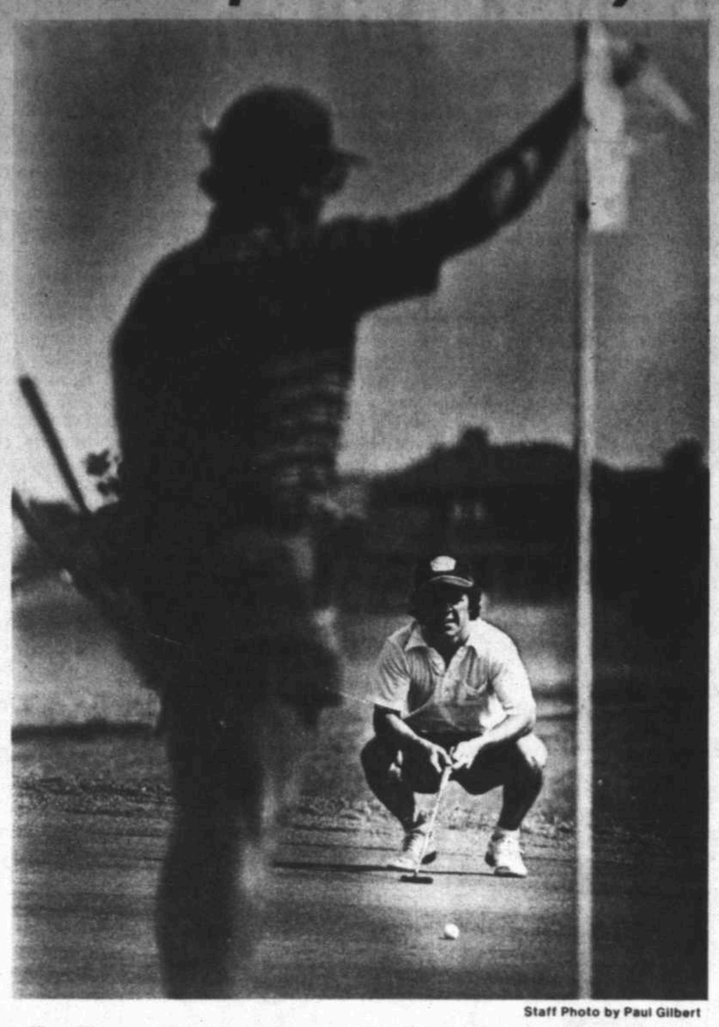

For an example, Johnny Sutton was the Most Valuable Player at the recent NCAA regional tournament in Austin. He was playing on a partial scholarship.

"I always wanted to play for Texas," Sutton said. "I would have come here in the first place if they had recruited me. I was ready to come for anything when SMU dropped baseball."

College coaches have successfully made the jump in football but not many have tried in baseball. Dick Howser of the Kansas City Royals is one college coach who has made the transition.

Campbell, Boyd hold lead

For the second straight day, the Midland Country Club duo of Craig Campbell and C.E. Boyd fought off the wolves to lead Green Tree Country Club's Jamboree golf tournament.

Boyd and Campbell slipped from a first round 66 Friday to a 68 Saturday, but it was good enough to stay one stroke in front of the Clovis, N.M., team of Ed Barnes and Larry Chapman, who also carded a 68 Saturday. With Boyd and Campbell at 134 and Chapman and Barnes at 135, it appears to be a two-team race, heading into today's final round of play.

Midland's Dave Leonard and Rick Rose own a 140 after two rounds of 70. Two teams are tied for fourth with Bob and Ernest Beck standing at 141 with Wayne Youngs and Tom Timble. Both those teams got into the championship hunt Saturday with rounds of 69.

The team of Harry and John Bettis, who were tied for third following Friday's play, fell back into the pack Saturday.

One of the big moments of play Saturday, however, was an ace by Mike Herron in the Colonial Flight. Herron aced the 205-yard No. 12 hole with a three iron. He was playing with Hal Gill.

Oklahoma State wins NCAA Golf title by 7

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Oklahoma State won the team title in the 86th NCAA Golf Championships by seven strokes Saturday, but Arizona State's Jim Carter won the individual championship after taking an extra hole.

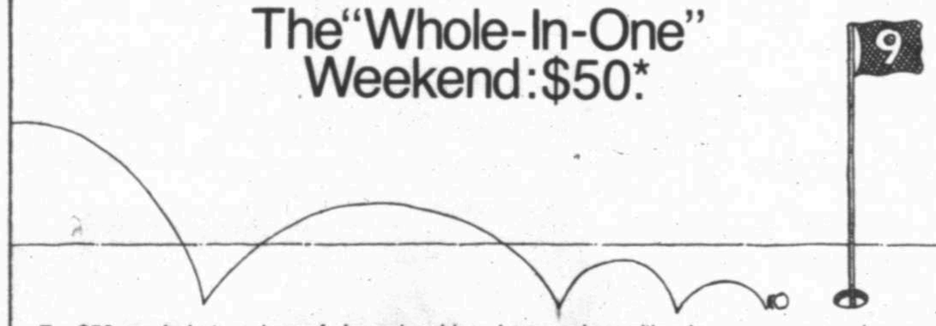

It was Oklahoma State's fifth team title, the most recent coming in 1980. The Cowboys were second to Houston last year.

Oklahoma State finished the four rounds at San Joaquin County Club with a score of 1,161, nine over par. Texas was second at 1,168, followed by Houston at 1,170, Ohio State at 1,173 and Clemson at 1,176.

Carter, who began the day four strokes off the pace, cooly made a par four on the first playoff hole to defeat Doug Harper of Fresno State, Paul Thomas of Texas and Scott Verplank of Oklahoma State.

The four had tied at 287, 1-under-par, in a tournament that saw a new leader after every round. Brad Faxon of Furman, who led by three strokes going into the final round, soared to a 77 Saturday and finished at 288, one stroke behind.

JIM MURRAY

Ron Kittle: A hit man with a baby face

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Someday, someone is going to have to explain to me why people are not always themselves. I call it the "Why doesn't Al Kaline look like Al Kaline?" syndrome.

Do you think Adolf Hitler looked like Adolf Hitler?

No wonder they never caught Jack the Ripper. They were probably looking for someone 9 feet tall with a face like a wolf.

Nature is not always a mass of contradictions. Just in sports. I mean, a lion looks like a lion. A cheetah looks like a running machine. A giraffe is unmistakably a giraffe.

But when you get into sports, you throw the book away. You've all heard of the young fan who thrust an autograph book$at Steve Garvey, and when Garvey signed it, the boy looked in disgust at the undersize, polite, smiling ballplayer with the neatly combed short hair and said belligerently, "You're not Steve Garvey!"

IT HAPPENS all the time. You take Al Kaline. All his playing days, Al Kaline looked as if he were fighting off a terminal case of mononucleosis. He looked as if his nose dropped. Yet he used to hit three home runs a day in the old Dodger Stadium when great sluggers couldn't average that in a season. You could compare him to a Bob Cerv, a powerful, scowling hulk who looked like 40 homers a year just standing there, and you would scratch your head to know Cerv would never come near the Hall of Fame or Kaline's stats and Kaline would make the Hall the first time out.

You think Mel Ott (5-8) looked like a 511 home runs hitter? You would guess, would you, Hack Wilson (5-6) would hit 56 homers in a year?

I was reminded of these whimsies of nature the other night when I traveled out to Anaheim Stadium to look at yet another guy who doesn't look like himself.

RON KITTLE hit 50 home runs last year. You know how many big league ballplayers have hit 50 homers in a season? Just 10. So few, it's a trivia question (Dazzle your bartender, it's Babe Ruth, Wilson, Roger Maris, Mickey Mantle, Ralph Kiner, Willie Mays, Johnny Mize, Hank Greenberg, Jimmy Foxx and George Foster.)

Ronald Dale Kittle hit 50 homers. Granted, it was in Edmonton, but you get a picture of a guy who hits 50 homers, 10 triples and 22 doubles and 144 runs batted in, and you see this guy 7 or 8 feet tall, with this big squirt of tobacco in his jaw, his beard is blue and his lip moves when he reads and he may or may not be eating bananas from a stalk.

Well, first of all, Ron Kittle wears glasses. You think Babe Ruth wore glasses? He's tall (6-4) but he has this kind of ingenuous baby face. If he shaves, it doesn't show. He'd have to be strong, but that really doesn't come across, either. He doesn't look as if he could tear phone books in half with one hand.

HITTING 50 homers in the minors is not to be confused with hitting them in Yankee Stadium. Or anywhere where the balls curve and the outfield is big-sky country.

But Ron Kittle has hit 14 big league home runs already. He's tied for the league lead this season with 13. He's second in runs batted in. These are Rookie-of-the-Year stats for the first weeks in June.

Waltrip sets Pocono Raceway record

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip set a Pocono International Raceway record Saturday, averaging 152.315 mph to take the pole for Sunday's Van Scoy Diamond Mine 500 NASCAR event.

Starting beside Waltrip's Chevrolet, the circuit's two-time defending points champion, will be Ricky Rudd, who averaged 150.938 mph on the 2.5-mile track. But Waltrip was confident after his record run.

"When you finish a lap like that, you know you had a good one," he said. "I figured at the time that anybody who could beat that deserved the pole. It seems I was always a half second or so faster than the next guy.

"From the moment we unloaded the car until we qualified, things went very well for us," he said.

Rudd, who won the June 5 Budweiser 400 at Riverside, Calif., said he ran only one lap in the qualifying race to save his engine for Sunday.

"I could see that the rest of the guys were running fastest on their first lap," Rudd said. "Besides, the water temperature was going up a little and this is the engine we'll use in the race, not a qualifying engine."

Geoff Bodine and his Chevy took the inside spot on the second row, averaging 150.759 mph, while Terry Labonte qualified fourth-fastest with a speed of 150.736 in a Pontiac, an effort he found disappointing.

"I thought we had a good shot at the pole until Darrell went out and ran that fast lap," Labonte said. "It was a little discouraging. We qualified about as fast as we practiced, but there wasn't anything left."

Fabi claims Rex Mays 150 pole position

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rookie Teo Fabi, who won the pole position for last month's Indianapolis 500, finished as the top qualifier Saturday for Sunday's Rex Mays 150-mile Championship Auto Racing Teams race.

Rick Mears of Bakersfield, Calif., was second in a Penske-Cosworth in 26.424 seconds and 136.245 miles per hour.

Fabi said he didn't think he had a chance to win the pole because his car is out of balance and hadn't run well in practice earlier Saturday.

Genalo's mistake costs $5,500, PBA crown

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — Jimmie Pritts, Jr. won his first title with a bizarre 2-pin victory over Don Genalo Saturday in the $100,000 Southern California Open bowling tournament.

Genalo struck on his first ball of the 10th frame to apparently clinch the victory. However, he miscalculated and it probably cost him the championship and the $13,000 top prize.

Believing he needed another strike, rather than just eight pins in two shots, Genalo left the 4-6-7-9-10 "Greek Church" split and then he disgustedly tossed his last shot into the gutter, believing he had lost.

In actuality, Genalo needed only three of the remaining pins on his last shot to win by one pin, but instead he wound up losing 214-212.

"I didn't even look at the score," said Genalo. "I thought I needed a double and when I didn't get the second strike, I just picked up the ball and threw it away.

"Believe me, if I thought I needed the three pins, I would have taken a lot more time."

The unfortunate turn of events for Genalo spoiled an otherwise outstanding comeback in the Professional Bowlers Association event at the Gable House Bowl.

Genalo had trailed by as many as 24 pins midway through the championship game before firing five straight strikes starting in the sixth frame to apparently turn things around.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Two aspirin dosages just as effective as four

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am taking aspirin for arthritis, and I don't mind taking it because I'm only too glad that there's something I can take which will give me relief. In other words, I'm ready to do whatever the doctor tells me to do. But I am now taking the aspirin four times a day and it would be a lot simpler for me if I could take it once or twice a day. Is this possible? — Mrs. T.H., Fort Worth, Texas

Dear Mrs. H.: First let me caution you not to change the dosing schedule recommended by your physician without his or her approval. Aspirin is a drug and, like all drugs, should be treated with respect. In addition, the schedule you are now following seems to be working for you, and you do not want to do anything that might upset it.

However, a team of Canadian researchers has reported that aspirin taken twice a day is just as effective as when taken four times a day by patients with arthritis. You may want to ask your physician about this. Patients who for any reason find it difficult to comply with physician instructions concerning dosage may find compliance easier if they are able to take their medicaton less often.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor says I have a tendency to develop infections of the urinary tract. Can you explain what causes this and whether there is anything that can be done about it besides taking medicine? — Ms. F.R., Topeka, Kan.

Dear Ms. R.: There are a number of causes of urinary tract infection in women. According to Dr. S. Grant Mulholland, of the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, some women harbor bacteria in their urinary tracts and this makes them susceptible to recurrent infection. These women should take extra precautions to keep their urinary tracts free of bacteria.

Since an acidic urine discourages bacterial growth, drinking cranberry juice may prove helpful in discouraging infection. In addition, drinking lots of water will help keep the urinary tract flushed.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband has psoriasis and sometimes it's better and sometimes it's worse. Since it does get better at times, is there any way to keep the improvement for longer periods, and shorten the times when it is bad? — Mrs. S.K., Pittsburgh, Penn.

Dear Mrs. K.: Many patients report that their psoriasis flares up after they suffer an injury to their skin or when they are under emotional stress. Therefore, avoiding injury to the skin or stressful situations may help alleviate the conditon in some patients.

Dr. Eugene M. Farber, of the Stanford University School of Medicine, points out that even the rubbing of pants on the knees, or leaning on the elbows, can trigger a flare-up of psoriasis. A patient who realizes the relationship between any skin irritation and the severity of the disease may be able to control it to some extent.

Avoiding stressful situations is not always easy, but many patients can be helped to at least reduce the amount of tension they are subject to and, in doing so, find their psoriasis is better controlled, the flare-ups fewer and less severe.

Dear Dr. Solomon: In the past I have been helped by some of the practical advice you give, and I would like some more. If a person has genital herpes, is it ever safe to have sex? — Leslie, The Bronx, N.Y.

Dear Leslie: Many physicians suggest that patients with genital herpes should refrain from having sexual relations during the time that visible lesions are present. For the two weeks following the disappearance of these lesions, sexual relations are permissible if the man uses a condom and the woman uses a spermicidal jelly. These jellies have been shown to suppress the herpes simplex virus. Men can stop using the condom two weeks after the visible lesions have disappeared.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some guy I work with claims he can drink more than anyone else and that he has a sex life to match. I think he's telling the truth about his drinking because I've seen him do his thing. But I think you once wrote that drinking hurts your sex life. Do you still feel that that is the case? — Tony, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Tony: There usually are isolated exceptions to every rule. In general, however, heavy drinking leads to a decrease in sexual ability. Your colleague may be an exception to the rule. However, it is more likely that his claim reflects desire rather than performance.

For Brad, Cheyenne, Wyo.: A hypertensive person who enters relaxation therapy with the expectation that it will work promptly will probably respond more readily. That is, the patient's expectations influence the effect of the therapy. For most hypertensive patients, however, relaxation therapy may not be sufficient.

For Phyllis, Niagara Falls, N.Y.: It is true that the incidence of cancer rises with age. This is another way of saying that the longer a person lives, the more likely he or she is to develop cancer.

One of the problems with cancer in older persons is that the disease is often masked by other problems the person may be experiencing as the result of advanced age. Regardless of age, however, every individual with cancer should be considered for whatever form of treatment would be appropriate. Treatment should not be withheld simply because a person has reached a certain age.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

POSITIVE THINKING

Mental image backed by faith form of prayer

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Near the end of World War II, a young American soldier named Lew Miller was caught in a burst of German machine-gun fire. Five bullets smashed into him: two in his left arm, one in his shoulder, two in his head. He was taken to a military hospital more dead than alive.

Weeks passed then months. His normal weight of 192 pounds dropped to 90. He was so weak that if he tried to stand, he fell on his face. He was a brave man and he struggled valiantly to regain his strength, but recovery was so slow and painful that it seemed almost hopeless.

He tried praying, but his prayers seemed feeble and futile to him. Doctors did their best, but their best seemed to make little difference.

Sometimes to make the endless hours pass more quickly, Lew Miller would try to recall happy scenes from the past, athletic triumphs he had had as a boy, or occasions when he had won scholastic prizes or honors. He would picture the applause of the crowds, the pride and happiness on his parents' faces, the satisfaction he had felt. He tried to visualize these events as vividly as possible, because when he did he could forget, momentarily, the hospital bed where he lay.

As he reviewed these memories, Lew Miller began to be aware that most of them seemed to have a common denominator. Each time he had scored a truimph or gained an objective, he had had a mental picture of the success before it actually happened. Whether it was winning a tennis tournament or placing in the first ten runners in a cross-country race he had "seen" himself doing it in advance, and when he clung to that image with unswerving faith, the actuality seemed in some uncanny way to follow the dream.

Lew Miller had plenty of time to think, and gradually he began to see a connection. He remembered that "what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and he shall have them." Was it possible, Lew Miller asked himself, that a strong mental image, backed by intense faith, could actually be a form of silent prayer, prayer unencumbered by words? And if that were so, might he not hasten his own recovery by visualizing it happening?

Lew Miller had believed all along in the power of God, but now he began to see that to liberate that power in his own life it was his responsibility to create the image of his own recovery and nurture it with faith. And so, with a sudden surge of determination and energy, he began to do just that. He saw himself returning home. He saw himself driving a car, holding down a job, resuming a normal, everyday sort of life. Looking beyond that, he saw himself raising a family, taking part in civic affairs, pursuing a career. Not only did he visualize these things over and over, with all possible intensity, but he also began to give thanks in advance for turning these visions into reality.

"We are essentially minds with bodies." Lew Miller told himself, "not the other way around. Therefore our minds can dominate and control our bodies. If I affirm and visualize my recovery, my thoughts will steadily be forming and producing their physical counterparts."

As soon as all these concepts came together in Lew Miller's mind, he felt a remarkable upsurge of hope and well-being. To the doctor's amazement, he began to mend rapidly. Today Lew Miller is a happily married man with two children. He leads the normal, happy and productive life that he imaged so vividly in that army hospital so many years ago. He is convinced that he groped his way to one of the most powerful healing combinations in the world: intense imaging plus unshakable faith. And it brought him back from the edge of the grave to the land of the living.

Scientists will try to determine cause of space motion sickness

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A team of earthbound scientists will conduct a series of experiments during an upcoming Spacelab flight to try to determine why astronauts suffer from "space motion sickness."

"While there have been no life threatening events on U.S. flights resulting from space motion sickness, there have been serious losses of productivity of crew members during these episode, which might last as long as two or three days on a seven-day mission,'" said David Anderson, a University of Michigan professor who will be part of the team.

"That is an expensive waste of work time," said Anderson, who will assist in a study measuring the effects of prolonged weightlessness on a spinal reflex.

Effects from space weightlessness on crew members of past space shuttle missions have included nausea and vomiting, a university statement released Saturday said.

Anderson, a professor of electrical and computer engineering and chairman of the university's bio-engineering program, is working on a study that measures the effects of prolonged weightlessness on what is called the "H" reflex.

This spinal reflex is part of a complex system that controls posture and muscles of the legs that normally resist the gravitational forces of the earth. Changes in the spinal reflex may be linked to space motion sickness, Anderson said.

The scientist, along with U-M graduate students and staff, developed and constructed computer equipment that will be used to test crew members' spinal reflexes, the statement said.

The equipment will deliver shock impulses to the underside of a Spacelab crew member's knee. he electrical impulse will travel along a nerve to the spinal cord, and the body's response will be relayed to computers in Houston Anderson said.

"In space travel, instead of using huge forces of the legs for running and walking, crew members use only small forces of the hands and fingers to locomote themselves about the spacecraft," Anderson said.

The scientist noted that without gravity, it difficult to develop a "concept of down," which is important to a sense of security and orientation.

"In space travel, crew members find themselves in a situation where they are continually getting new orientations," Anderson said. "It takes them a while to adapt."

Anderson and his co-researchers will be at Johnson Space Center in Houston on Sept. 30 to monitor two experiments on board the Spacelab, one at the beginning of the mission as the body begins to adapt to zero gravity and one at the end of the flight. Crew members also will be tested before and following the flight.

SUICIDE

TEXT BY DAVID LEE FORREST

Seven Midlanders have killed themselves in the just the first five months of this year, according to Midland Police Department figures.

Last year 17 people committed suicide here, more than three times the number of Midland suicides in 1981. There were only five suicide deaths in that year.

The recent hard economic times may have contributed to this tragic increase.

"I think there might be a tendency for there to be more now than, say, a year ago because of the changing economy," said Dr. John R. Howlett, Jr., psychiatrist with the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center of Midland.

"Whenever there's a change in finances, there's a lot of pressure," Howlett said. "It's like expectations have not been met. We live in a very technological era and people tend to think things are going to get better, that there'll be more jobs and better jobs.

"The reality of the situation is that this may not be the case."

"Percentage-wise I'd expect it's not much different from any other major city," Howlett said.

Nationally, suicide is the 10th leading cause of death. A 22 percent increase in suicides in the U.S. has been recorded for the decade ending in 1979, according to figures recently released in the Metropolitan Life Foundation's "Statistical Bulletin."

Suicide is the third-ranked cause of death among teenagers and young adults, according to the bulletin. Death rates from suicide have increased more than 60 percent for teenage males and more than 30 percent teenage females.

The highest rate of suicide deaths, however, is among the elderly, said Ken Wolf, program director of the Midland MHMR Center. This is because the elderly often have lost all their friends, may suffer from chronic illness, can feel useless and "put out to pasture," and may believe they have been deserted by their children, he explained.

Suicide "cuts across all age groups," Howlett said. "It does start fairly young and extend all the way up to old age. Children will even commit suicide."

Howlett said when a child is killed when he runs out in front of an automobile it may be a suicide rather than an accident.

"Perhaps more of these are suicides than is generally thought," he said. "You usually dismiss something like that as an impulsive action by a child, however, a lot of these kids may be reflecting a lot of stress at home and with their parents.

"They may not understand what death is and just actually do something to test death and get killed."

Women attempt suicide more frequently than men, but men actually die more often because they tend to choose more violent and less survivable methods than women.

In 1979, for example, firearms and explosives were used by 64 percent of the male suicides and only 38 percent of the females, according to the "Statistical Bulletin." Poisonous substances were used by 28 percent of the women and only 7 percent of the men.

Regardless of age or sex, a depressed person is much less likely to attempt suicide if he or she seeks treatment.

"If a person trys to get help, then they are usually workable," Howlett said. "The people who wind up killing themselves here are those that are not seeking help.

"If they come to a center they're usually asking for help. They don't want to die. If you get the right medicine or the right treatment to them, they'll be all right.

"There's a stigma, I think, associated with mental illness and depression and some people can't overcome that. They don't want to be labeled as 'mentally ill.' They'll dismiss psychiatry and the help that might be available."

Suicide warning signs

Ken Wolf, program director with the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center of Midland, gave the following list of "warning signs" which may indicate a person is considering commiting suicide:

— severe depression.

— speaking metaphorically about "taking a long trip," "going far, far away" or making statements such as "things will be better when I'm gone."

— sudden cheerfulness or relaxation of tension following an extended depression. This can be a sign that the person has been struggling with deciding whether or not to commit suicide and has decided to do it. He has cheered up or relaxed because he feels his problems will soon be resolved by his death.

— giving things away, seeing a lawyer about a will, or otherwise setting one's affairs in order.

— sleeplessness

— a large weight loss.

— a recent severe shock, such as the loss of a job or the death of a friend or family member, also increases the potential suicide risk.

"Take it real seriously when a middle-aged man loses his job," Wolf added. "That tends to be a high-risk period."

Wolf stressed that when people become concerned about a depressed person, they should encourage that person to talk about how he is feeling.

"Family and friends need to be supportive," said Wolf. "Provide the person with a listening ear."

"Extend love to that person," Dr. John R. Howlett, psychiatrist with the MHMR center said.

"They shouldn't be afraid to use the word 'suicide,'" Wolf said, stressing that it the subject should be brought out into the open and discussed.

A depressed person should also be encouraged to take positive action, he said, such as changing his old routine, getting more exercise, taking up a hobby, or perhaps even just going out to dinner with friends more often.

"I think it should be communicated to that person that there are alternatives to suicide," Howlett said.

"If nothing helps, don't be afraid to push that person toward professional help," said Wolf.

"If that person is really suicidal," Howlett said, "you'll have to get treatment." He added that relatives should be prepared to take any legal steps necessary to hospitalize the person if the situation is serious enough to warrant it.

If the depressed person resists the idea of seeking help, Howlett suggested "two or three close friends, relatives or loved ones get together at the same time and confront that person with the fact that they all think that person has a problem, they all love this person and they all want this person to get help.

"That would carry considerable weight."

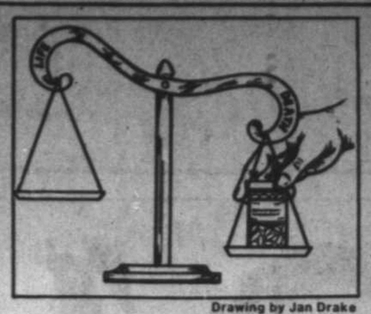

Wolf also gave a list of "don'ts" to keep in mind when talking with a depressed persons:

— don't try to convince him he is wrong to be feeling the way he does.

— don't attempt to make the person feel guilty.

— don't challenge the person to "just go ahead and do it."

Suicide attempts may be prevented

The Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center of Midland, 3701 N. Big Spring, is one place Midlanders who are suffering from depression or contemplating suicide can turn to for help.

The center is intended to be part of a "continuum" of resources individuals can get help from, along with clergymen, doctors, private psychiatrists or psychologists, according to its program director for mental health services, Ken Wolf.

The center has a trained clinical staff of eight people, some of whom specialize in one particular problem area such as alcoholism or drug abuse.

Between 11,000 and 12,000 different people have received help from the center since it opened in 1969. Currently it handles approximately 900 to 1,000 contacts each month.

"He doesn't have to jump through a bunch of hoops," Wolf said. "All he has to do is call and make an appointment."

The center first tries to evaluate the problems of individual patients to determine what kind of help they may need. Sometimes they need immediate hospitalization.

"That's in real severe cases," Wolf said.

More often a person will receive some form of anti-depression therapy on an out-patient basis. The MHMR's fees are based on a sliding scale according to the individual's ability to pay. Fees range from free to $40 an hour.

The emergency phone service is "designed to keep the situation together; to convince the person not to do anything rash," Wolf said.

Some callers may be very upset over a rather trivial problem, while others may at first talk about something minor but are actually troubled by very serious problems.

"The first step is to find out what's going on with this person to make him call," Wolf said.

"Most of our callers are people who just want to talk," he said, but enough are contemplating suicide that every call has to be treated very carefully.

Depressions spurred by stress

Depressions serious enough to lead to suicide can be sparked by a myriad of different stresses, but many are caused by a loss of some sort, according to Dr. John R. Howlett, Jr., psychiatrist with Midland's MHMR center.

It can be the loss of a friend, family member or loved one, loss of a job, or even loss of identification with a certain place when they move.

"Most of the time it centers around some major part of their life, something that gave stability to their life," said Howlett.

Guilt can also start a depression. Bright, young, successful people can become depressed by guilt if they feel their families will not accept any imperfections in them, Howlett said.

"If there's any shortcoming or weakness then the child starts to feel guilty, like he or she hasn't performed or lived up to expectations. Then he starts to lose self-esteem and starts to fall into depression," said Howlett.

"When such tremendous effort has been put into something like that, the depression is going to be correspondingly deep," he added.

"Some people are genetically predisposed to depression," Howlett said. "They just don't feel good in the beginning.

"What happens is these individuals tend to be sad to begin with and start seeing life events as negatives and they become more depressed. It's like a vicious cycle.

"The body chemistry changes through this. You'll actually get a build-up of the chemicals in the brain that mediate bad feelings, so to speak."

There are antidepressant drugs available which can counteract this condition.

Stresses linked to causes of disease

Copley News Service

The correlation between emotional stress and disease is being increasingly documented by medical research, according to San Diego stress-reduction expert Ann B. Sturgis, Ph.D.

Among the studies of this nature:

— Biochemist George Brooks and social psychologist Ernest Mueller, of the University of Michigan, found an excess of uric acid and, therefore, a higher incidence of gout, among professors who on psychological tests scored significantly higher than their colleagues in drive, leadership and achievement, reveling in their work.

The researchers concluded that a tendency to gout is a tendency to executive positions.

— In 1977, Gerald L. Klerman, professor of psychiatry, and Judith E. Izen, research analyst, of Harvard Medical School and Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, published a report producing evidence that cancer can be linked to bereavement and grief.

One study showed that 72 percent of adult cancer patients who died from the disease had experienced loss of a meaningful person or job, or a major role change, within six months to nine years before the onset of the cancer, as compared to loss of 10 percent among healthy people in a control group.

Another study revealed that the death rate for malignant growths doubled among the bereaved of all age groups and sexes compared to the death rates due to cancerous growths among married patients in the control group.

A third project on the background of patients suffering from breast cancer found that 22 percent of the women studied had experienced the death of an important person in their lives within two years of the onset of cancer, while 50 percent reported bouts of depression, anxiety, self-criticism and guilt in the 12 months preceding the discovery of the cancer.

Summer camps should offer healthy mix

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — It's been said that variety is the spice of life. The American Camping Association says it should be the spice of summer camps, too.

A spokesman for the association says parents who are considering sending their children to summer camp should make certain the camp includes a healthy mix of fun and educational activities.

Jim LeMonn of the association said a summer camp — either a resident camp or a day facility — should meet the needs and interest of the child, and be within the budget of the parents.

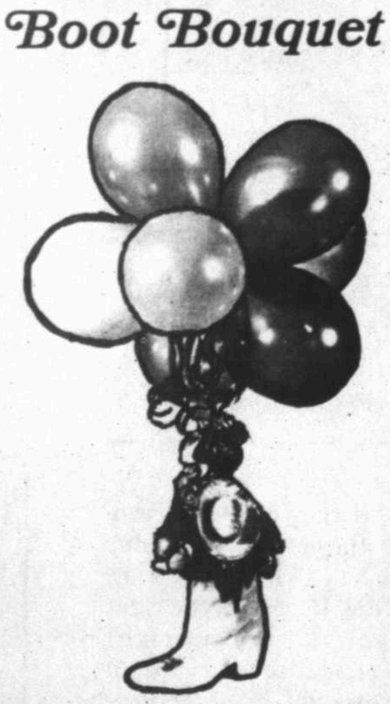

Camp programs available to children today are virtually limitless, LeMonn said.

Have you heard...

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Charming and lovely as ever, Academy award winning actress Dorothy Malone entertained a good-sized crowd at the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's monthly luncheon with stories of her Hollywood career. This was Miss Malone's second speaking engagement in Midland. Last year she came out to address the Pi Beta Phi alumnae. She has an affinity for that sorority as both her daughters, Mimi and Diane Bergerac, are University of Texas Pi Phis.

Although Dorothy's interest in acting dates back to her grammar school days when she got the lead in four successive plays and continued through high school (Highland Park) and college (Hockaday Junior College and SMU), she never aspired toward show business. Leaning more toward the literary, she considered teaching English or writing. But while playing the lead in "Star Bound" at SMU, she was spotted by a Hollywood talent scout, tested and given a contract at RKO. And as they say, the rest is history!

Dorothy's career has included movies, theatre, television (both live and film) and modeling, but despite the inconveniences and all the "hurry up and wait," she prefers working in movies to other entertainment forms. She recently enjoyed a new experience, though, when she read Ogden Nash poetry with the Dallas Symphony.

Dorothy returned to her native Dallas from California ten years ago to raise her daughters and provide them with a more conservative lifestyle. Mimi graduated from UT with a degree in finance, the field of study her younger sister also is pursuing. Their mother is delighted they have shown no interest in the performing arts.

An alumna of the American Theatre Wing, Dorothy has appeared in dozens of movies and television shows, but she gained her greatest acclaim for "Written on the Wind" when she received the prestigious Oscar. She also is remembered as Constance McKenzie on the long-running nighttime TV series, "Peyton Place."

The No. 1 regret of her career, she says with a smile, was turning down a part in a picture which as it turned out would have cast her opposite superstar Charlton Heston. When asked if she plans to pursue her expressed interest in writing, she says given the time and fewer responsibilities, she would like to try her hand at a novel. She also has toyed with the idea of writing her autobiography, but that project has been put on the back burner for the present.

In introductory remarks, Joan (Mrs. Pat) Baskin, in her inimitiable manner, expressed all our feelings when she stated: "A 10-year-old girl in today's world would want to be a neurosurgeon when she grows up. In our day, we all knew what we wanted to be — a movie star. Miss Malone has fulfilled our fantasies."

Dorothy only had time for a brief visit with her friend, Carol (Mrs. Peter) Crain, but we sincerely hope she will return to Midland soon for a longer stay as she not only has a great deal to offer professionally but is a delight to know.

OUR FAMILY has returned from a grand tour of Texas — tempers no more flared than you would expect after a 1,900 mile vacation trip by automobile. In an attempt to share with our sons their Texas heritage, we embarked on a journey that would take us north, east and south before returning to West Texas. We were well intentioned and thought their ages — 15 and 11 — conducive to absorbing history. Of course, our teen-ager wanted nothing more than to be back home with his peers, and he and his brother were more interested in stopping at all the video game parlors than seeing the sights. But if nothing else, we can tell you about every large mall in every major city we visited, where the boys searched for certain, hard-to-find issues fo comic books and accessories for their "Dungeons and Dragons" game.

Though the trip did have its moments. It began with the wedding of our niece, Carrie Martyn, and Tennessean Steve Butler in Quanah, which is located on the Red River in North Texas. Carrie's mother, Dorothy (Mrs. Bob) Martyn, was born and raised in Midland and is the daughter of Florence and Hap Harrison.

On to the Dallas/Fort Worth area, we paid the obligatory visit to Six Flags Over Texas, where the first rain we had seen in months dampened the boys' persons if not their enthusiasm. Our next stop was Tyler, where we visited with former Midlanders, Pat and John Kolb. En route to Galveston and a rendezvous with more ex-Midlanders, Roseann and Ches Herndon of Oklahoma City, we stopped off in Houston to tour the battleship "Texas" and the San Jacinto Monument.

We enjoyed the beautiful gulf beaches, the ocean and the swaying palms on Galveston Island and a tour of the city aboard a sightseeing train. Winding up our trip in San Antonio, the boys got their final crash course in state history, and we had a few chuckles overhearing a small boy at the Alamo asking, "Was John Wayne one of the fighters, Daddy?"

Last stop was Fredericksburg in the heart of the Hill Country. While touring the Admiral Nimitz World War II Museum, we encountered Odessans Karen and Monte Rogers, who had driven down for the Arts and Crafts Festival at Kerrville.

GUESTS AT THE Bill and Sonja Smyrl home at Horseshoe Bay recently were Pat Adamson, Dorothy Carruth, Pat Houck and Bess Baker. They also visited with former Midlanders, Josie and Jay Norwood, at Marble Falls.

The foursome enjoyed the natural beauty of the Hill Country, particularly as the bluebonnets were in full bloom. They wound their way through the LBJ State Park before stopping off in Austin to visit the Johnson library and the capital.

MOZELLE WEBB recently entertained in Midland at a family reunion, bringing together cousins from her mother's side of the family. Her guests were Mrs. Kenneth Shelton of Austin, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Burleson of San Antonio, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Randals of Hico and Mrs. Oscar Praehl of Canyon Lake.

Group celebrates successful unions

Hearst Feature Service

There is an organization of socially-prominent high achievers called the Society for the Preservation of First Wives and First Husbands that meets a few times every year to celebrate, in high humor, the fact that they have made their marriages work.

"The real glue that cements the group," Town & Country reports in the June issue, "is their belief in the commitment of marriage, their obvious delight in having 'made it.' Twenty-five years of marriage to only one spouse is mandatory for membership."

Those felicitous couples may be making their point. Last year, the article points out, there were 2,438,000 marriages in the U.S., an all-time record. About five million people are expected to marry this year. "More significantly, the divorce rate declined last year by four percent – the first drop in 20 years."

A 1982 Yankelovich poll showed young people of high school age now look more favorably toward marriage than they have in years, "a rather startling discovery after two decades of marital disillusionment and pervasivenes of divorce."

Samuel Johnson quipped that marriage was the triumph of hope over expectation, but, despite the cynics, marriges do endure.

Why do they endure, how can it be done? Emil (Bus) Mosbacher Jr., former chief of protocol and successful defender of the America's Cup, and his wife Patricia have been married 32 years. "Hopefully," says Mosbacher, "you have mutual respect, common goals and an understanding of each other's individual goals."

Dr. Martin Cohen of New York, a clinical psychologist and a specialist in marital and family relations, sees seven vital ingredients for marriages that work. Town & Country quotes them: "Communicating honestly, sharing, taking risks avoiding isolation from the outside word, becoming friends, being flexible about roles, enjoying physical warmth and sexuality."

But the pitfalls for those who strive to achieve an ideal marriage, Town & Counry notes, are mind-boggling and not new. Thousands of years ago, Euripides wrote: "Never say that marriage has more of joy than of pain."

A couple has to work at it to make a marriage endure.

Cleaning house often major dilemma for couples when both work

Hearst Feature Service

When both members of a couple work, who does the housework?

That's a dilemma facing many working duos.

Cleaning house is still work, even with the many conveniences available today. Dishwashing and clothing care have decreased slightly; but families today spend about as much time in household work as families did a decade ago, according to Cornell University experts.

And, they say, in the majority of families, it is still the wife who does most of the housework, even when she is employed outside the home.

The secret to keeping a home clean is to clean up as you go.

Busy people often think they don't have time for housework, says a spokesman for the Soap and Detergent Association, an organization whose business it is to make us all come clean. But, keeping a home neat is easier than living in a mess.

For example, you can make your bed in the morning while you are still in it. Stretch out in the middle of the bed and straighten the covers. If you billow them out as you get out of bed, all you have to do is straighten the top.

In the bathroom, wipe the shower stall dry after showering, so soap scum will not build up. Rub the walls of the tub before getting out, so it will be relatively clean after your bath. Or, use a water softener to prevent a bathtub ring from forming.

Wipe the sink dry after each use. Put all toilet articles away instead of leaving them scattered on a sink top. Putting things away immediately takes little more time than leaving them out.

Fit odd jobs around the house into the daily routine. If the place is getting dusty, give the furniture a "lick and a promise" with a dust cloth. A quick wipe is better than no wipe at all, or living amidst layers of dust. Always keep your cleaning supplies in stock and within easy reach so doing odd jobs will never turn into a big production.

Soil- and stain-resistant finishes and synthetic fibers make for easy care of today's furniture. But "easy care" doesn't mean "no care." All furniture fabrics need regular upkeep to look and wear their best.

Men list good, bad points

Copley News Service

Science is always doing studies on love. They get grants for this, but they get few definite answers. (Freud couldn't figure it out. I think the grant money is going down the drain.)

Science says love still figures in marriage, but it comes in a shaky fourth.

If you are wondering whom to ask to marry — doctor, lawyer, Indian chief — you have come to the right place.

Some East Coast newspapermen made a study a few years ago. Without a grant, I imagine. (Maybe a couple beers on the expense account.)

They went around asking various types of unmarried men, "What would be good and bad about marrying you?"

They got some surprisingly honest answers.

A doctor said: "Women rarely marry doctors. They usually marry the man when he is an intern, medical student or a resident.

"But it's like marrying two different men, because the man's standards will change in what he wants in a wife after he finishes training. The woman must change her role from being there and being nice to being active socially, meeting people well and being attractive.

"If the woman can't make the change, the doctor is likely to change wives."

The doctor said he preferred to remain anonymous.

An accountant said he figured an accountant's wife might find it hard to be a spendthrift. "An accountant would be watching every dime.

"However, she probably could go on a spree or two from Jan. 1 to income-tax reckoning. During those months an accountant works 12 to 14 hours a day, six or seven days a week — leaving little time for household accounting."

A bartender claimed he might not pay too much attention to a wife's complaints. "By the time I go home, I'm tired of listening to other people's problems," he said.

Weddings become bigger, more traditional

Hearst Feature Service

Well, folks, there's reassuring news today for tradition-minded parents and a variety of merchants and caterers. Among upscale young couples, the wedding on the mountain top or meadow with a barefoot bride and dungaree-clad groom is out. The church wedding and big reception is in.

How do we know? Town & Country magazine, in its June issue, reports its findings in its "State of the Union Poll," a three-page questionnaire filled in and mailed in by readers. Says Town & Country:

"Like their parents, a surprising 76 percent of whom remain married, they expect to stay together. They speak of lifelong commitment in an age when most marriages last barely six years. One couple said it simply: 'We love each other and want to spend the rest of our lives together.'"

Many of today's lovebirds speak from experience since, they note, first came love, then living together for a few months or even a year or two, leading naturally enough to marriage. "Marriage," said one couple, "is still the only way to legitimize loving each other."

So the father of the bride is spending, on average, $12,000 for the wedding, the happy couple expect family heirlooms from kin and proper silver and plate from friends, and look forward to children pronto, even if the bride has a good job and expects to pursue her career.

Says the report: "The 28-year-old vice president of an investment banking firm plans to hire a nanny to care for her two hoped-for offspring and is not planning to give up her $95,000-a-year job.

"If they are still wearing rose-colored glasses, these newlyweds face the future with optimism about each other and life. Traditionalists in many ways, their psychological orientation is pure Eighties. Asked how they might improve their marriages, they talk about 'communication' and 'sharing,' and 'willingness to compromise, give a little, to take into account what's good for us, not just me.'"

Condition hits hair

Alopecia areata, a mysterious, incurable condition resulting in hair loss, affects approximately two million men and women of all ages.

Dermatologists believe the disorder may be genetic and related to the bodies auto-immune system. They think the hair follicles are healthly and capable of growing hair, but the body's immune cells are confused and fight the follicles as though they were allergens.

Thought to be a hereditary condition, alopecia areata usually first appears as small bald patches on the head even though it is not like common male-pattern baldness.

While there is no known cure, the symptoms can sometimes be partially relieved by relaxation therapy.

Almond body facial

One solution to add sheen and life to rough and scaly skin, according to Beverly Hills skin care specialist Nance Mithcell, is to use an allover almond "body facial."

To give your skin extra polish this summer, Mitchell has adapted a favorite salon formulation for home use.

ALMOND BODY FACIAL

1 cup whole almonds, pulverized in a blender to fine meal
1 cup white bread crumbs
1 cup buttermilk, (approximately)
Juice of one lemon

Combine ingredients in a double boiler, blending well. Stirring constantly, allow mixture to simmer until it forms a paste, adding a bit more buttermilk if required. Allow to cool and massage into hands, feet, legs or any area that is especially vulnerable to drying and roughness.

Stereo AM coming

Copley News Service

There is a stampede toward stereo by AM radio stations across the nation, but it will be several months before listeners can enjoy it.

Until manufacturers begin turning out AM stereo receivers, the listening public won't be able to share in this latest audio revolution, the product of technological advance.

Still, some think that AM stereo will one day become as ubiquitous as FM stereo — and help AM radio regain some lost luster.

"Does AM stereo sound as good as FM stereo?" asked Steve Dana, publisher of Radio World magazine. "For 99.9 percent of us slobs, it sounds just as good."

By adapting their operations to stereo, AM stations are anticipating the introduction of consumer equipment that decodes the radio signal.

Delco, the electronics division of General Motors, and Sony also are tinkering with AM stereo car receivers, and hope to introduce them next year, company spokesmen say.

TV hurts diet

Too much television may be bad for your diet. Habitual TV viewers consume, on the average, about ½ more calories a day and exercise much less than non-viewers, according to a recent article in "Family Circle."

Love overcomes pair's handicaps

Copley News Service

At first glance, they seem like typical newlyweds — love-struck and dreamy-eyed. But they are extraordinary in that husband Mike Sumers has cerebral palsy and wife Becky is mentally retarded.

Mike, 28, is teaching Becky, 29, how to cook, ride the bus, do housework and handle finances. He speaks softly to her, offering simple instructions she understands but may forget unless reminded.

Becky interprets Mike's speech for those who find it slurred. Because of his disease, he suffers loss of muscle control, spasms, weakness and difficulty in speaking.

She is an affectionate, gentle companion for him — oblivious of his physical deformities. As a man who has lived with belittlement, poverty and rejection, he clearly basks in her wholesouled love.

And they are, as Becky says, "friends. I like being here with him. I help him out, making the bed. I do good dishes for Mike. I wanted my last name to be Sumers. He's nice. And he's a good cook."

"I help Becky with finances and life skills," says Mike. "I show her how to do something and she is very good at carrying it out. Also, we have the same hobbies and ideals."

Having spent his life struggling to succeed both professionally and personally, Mike sees his marriage "as a very important commitment, one that I have no remorse about undertaking."

"I used to spend four or five hours a night trying to button my pajamas. But I would do it myself. My father always said that if you want something, no one is going to help you. You have to help yourself."

It was through his volunteer work that he first met Becky in August 1979, at a camp for retarded citizens where Mike was a counselor. At a small dance, Mike first saw her and asked her to dance. They continued to see one another for a year at organized functions, then talk of marriage began.

If you like peaches, enjoy them in a sauce over ice cream. Crush four medium-sized peaches, peeled and cut in chunks. Place in a one-quart saucepan. Add one-half cup each sugar and orange juice. Traditions very old

Copley News Service

When Susan gets married this year, she will be wearing the same white satin wedding gown her mother wore in 1952. Linda, whose wedding is six months away, is already looking for the familiar "something borrowed, something blue." And, Cary has decided to use the 18th century "marriage cup ceremony" in her wedding.

Susan, Linda and Cary are just three of the brides this year who will be observing wedding customs that go back centuries. From the traditional ceremony in a big church to a shiny penny in the bride's shoe, these customs are finding their way back into contemporary nuptial festivities, adding a taste of old-fashioned romance to weddings large and small.

WHILE WEARING your mother's gown and collecting the required four "somethings" have enjoyed almost constant popularity among brides, many young women are learning for the first time about the old ceremony of the marriage cup. Veronica Williams of Reed and Barton Silversmiths recalls the history of this tradition, which dates back to Napoleonic France.

"The marriage cup, or 'coupe de mariage', was a silver chalice given to the bride by a friend or family members before the wedding. Engraved on the side were the names of the newlyweds and the date of their union. At the reception the bride and groom filled the cup with their favorite wine and drank a toast to their wedding vows while their guests looked on. Each year, on their anniversary, the couple repeated the ceremony as a reaffirmation of their promises to one another.

ANTIQUE MARRIAGE cups have been handed down over the generations, some engraved with the names of the children who were born into the family.

Priceless memories of wedding

Copley News Service

What better gift to give the bride and groom upon their return from the honeymoon than the photographs you took at their wedding?

Even if a professional photographer is on hand, there are still many opportunities to take priceless personal shots of the day's events. Concentrate on spontaneous, informal shots which have great appeal and provide priceless memories..

If you plan ahead, you'll be able to spend your time taking great photos instead of worrying about your camera gear. The photography experts at the Soligor division of AIC Photo, offer advice.

One of the first decisions you should make even before working up a preliminary shooting schedule is the equipment you'll require. If you have a 35mm single lens reflex camera, you're in good shape, especially if it's one of the newer automatic types. In addition to the camera body, one zoom lens is all you need.

Meal skipping poor method of dieting

Besides being bad for your health, skipping meals is a poor way to lose weight, according to a recent article on permanent weight-loss strategies in "Family Circle" magazine.

Research shows that eating one large meal a day is associated with increased fat production, elevated cholesterol and impaired glucose tolerance.

Above and beyond that, more people may actually add increased amounts of fat than if they have the same number of calories spread over three meals.

New sparkling wines worth tasting

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

We've all heard that the champagne explosion is on, that a dozen or two California wineries that previously made nothing but still wine are now making sparkling stuff.

And we've all heard that all of this new stuff is going to come on the market at a premium price. Will these wines be any good, you may be asking.

The answer is a qualified "yes," and evidence of that is revealing itself drip by drip.

The new sparkling wine from John Culbertson's new winery in Fallbrook is progressing beautifully. It has the characteristic yeasty aroma without being too full. Similarly, new releases from Korbel ($16, an attractive Blanc de Blancs), Domaine Chandon ($25, a reserve bottling), Mirassou ($15, Blanc de Noirs), Schramsberg ($25, Reserve), Sebastiani ($12.50) and Piper Sonoma ($13) all are excellent achievements.

Soon to be seen will be the sparkling wines of San Pasqual, Iron Horse, Chateau St. Jean, Wente, Mark West, Fetzer and many more.

Midland family

Wedding dresses

Ten brides marched down the aisle but not to exchange vows in a wedding ceremony.

June is traditionally the month associated with tying the knot, and in keeping with that theme, Midland Christian Women's Club presented a fashion show of bridal dresses at Midland Country Club Wednesday afternoon.

President Sherry Hewett coordinated the fashion show and provided commentary on the ten dresses which included a street-length black silk dress worn in 1928 and other gowns from different eras passed through family generations.

The gown was sewn in Waco where Mrs. Butler was married. It was made from hand-embroidered Chinese silk. The fabric was purchased by the Midland woman's aunt at Telham Manor Presbyterian Church in Westchester, N. Y. The fabric was sold at the church to raise money for missions in China, Mrs. Butler said.

Her aunt purchased the silk for herself, she said. "She learned I was getting married so she sent it to me."

The dress was designed to feature the individual embroidered panels, Mrs. Butler said. The bride wore a large horsehair hat and carried a white handkerchief which had been used in family weddings for years. She also wore white satin shoes when she walked down the aisle at St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

The dress was not worn again until Mrs. Butler put it on for her 50th wedding anniversary celebration in 1976. "It was a little bit snugger," she said, "but it fit."

Mrs. Doug (Karen) Scharbauer modeled the dress worn by her grandmother, Mrs. Mabel Holt Glass, on June 6, 1928 at the O. B. Holt Sr. home, which was located on North B Street at the corner of Wall Street. The house has since been torn down.

Mrs. Glass was wed in the black silk chiffon, pleated, flapper-style knee-length dress with a drop waist. Chantilly lace trims the cuffs and neckline.

In the '20s it wasn't unusual for a woman to wear a black dress to her wedding or a white dress to a funeral, said Mrs. Scharbauer. "Black was as appropriate as white."

The long-sleeved dress was worn with a single strand of pearls, the granddaughter said. "It was a dress you could wear to a cocktail party."

However, Mrs. Scharbauer said the dress wasn't worn again until her mother, Monta Glass Johnson, wore it to her daughter's first baby shower.

Mrs. Sam (Sue) Conner's wedding gown was modeled by Diana Hewett. Married in Ft. Smith, Ark. on August 8, 1944, Mrs. Conner chose a dress made of organza with a ruffled train. Worn with a petticoat, it was accessorized with a pearlized orange blossom tiara and a net veil.

Miss Florene Arldt became the bride of Walter Teinert in a dress fashioned from hand clipped rosepoint lace. Debbie Vasicek of Hobbs, N.M. modeled her mother's gown.

The dress, worn in Austin on Jan. 29, 1955, has a pointed basque-style waist and full yoke with long sleeves that taper to a point over the wrists. The long skirt has a double dust ruffle of nylon tulle. The ruffles cascade into a chapel-length train.

Mrs. Janet Pollard, who sang two wedding songs at the fashion show, was married in 1956 in Ft. Stockton. Her wedding dress was modeled by Shannon Burnett, a high school sophomore, because, Mrs. Hewett, show coordinator, said, it was difficult to find someone with a small enough waist to model the gown.

The all-lace dress has long petal sleeves and a tiny princess waistline with pleats below the waist. It is worn with a hoop and petticoats and trails off in a traditional chapel train.

The dress Mare Dare Resley wore when she exchanged her wedding vows was modeled by Kathleen Kelly. The Midland woman wore the silk poie de soie dress at the Methodist Church in Ft. Stockton in 1956.

The gown has a rounded neckline edged with beading and the bodice is smooth-fitting with tiny covered buttons leading to a chapel-length train hoop.

On Sept. 28, 1957, Mrs. John (Rhonda) Gibson Cutbirth was wed in a white satin and lace dress purchased from Grammer-Murphey's department store in Midland. Missy Rasnick modeled the gown Mrs. Cutbirth wore at her wedding at the First Presbyterian Church in Odessa, at Wednesday's fashion show.

The white satin and lace dress has a high neckline and fitted bodice. The long lace sleeves taper to points over the hands. The satin skirt is designed with a wide inverted v-shape that has scalloped edges flowing to the hemline forming a lace band around the edge of the full train in back.

According to Mrs. Cutbirth, the dress has been worn only twice since she boxed it up in 1957. In 1981, her daughter-in-law Sherry Cutbirth, the wife of her son Gary Alan Cutbirth, wore the gown for her Houston wedding.

On her wedding day, Mrs. Cutbirth recalled she wore a single strand of pearls and matching earrings, a veil and white satin pumps. She carried a white bible trimmed in pearls given to her by her grandmother. Instead of carrying a bouquet, she had a white orchid attached to the bible.

The long-sleeved dress with petal points and covered buttons has a scalloped decollette neckline etched with lace and seed pearls. Below the princess bodice is a pleated v-shaped cumberbund. The bouffant skirt decorated with lace and seed pearls falls into a chapel train.

Mrs. Craig (Dee) Holly showed off the dress she was married in thirteen years ago in Lubbock. The organza dress has an a-line venice lace bodice. Bands of satin ribbon and venice lace encircle the gown down to the chapel train.

The dress has a chiffon overskirt of schiffle embroidery, ruffles off the shoulder and yoke and a flounce at the bottom. The modern bridal dress look was topped off with a hat of matching chiffon and schiffle.

Strawberry jam: summer under glass

It's time to "put up" strawberry jam while fruit is plentiful. The homemade flavor can't be beat and canning is easy.

You can, of course, find good store-bought strawberry jam, but nothing tops the flavor of homemade. Putting up your own jam is easier than you think. All it takes is about an hour of your time, a little knowledge about jam-making and a few basic supplies.

Strawberry-Lemon Freezer Jam is especially quick since no processing is involved. Chunky Strawberry Rhubarb Jam and Quick and Easy Strawberry Jam are also time savers since powdered pectin is used to speed up the cooking and aid in "jell" formation.

Remember never to double a recipe, instead make two batches. Finely chop berries, but do not puree them as this will add too much liquid for good gel.

Canning newcomers will need a water bath canner, or a large pot with a cover and a rack. Home canning jars with two piece lids are essential, while a wide mouth canning funnel simplifies filling the jars.

STRAWBERRY LEMON FREEZER JAM

2 cups crushed strawberries (about 1 quart)
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
4 cups sugar
1 package (1¾ ounce) powdered pectin
¼ cup lemon juice
¾ cup water

Prepare freezer jars and lids according to manufacturer's instructions.

Place crushed berries and lemon rind in a large bowl. Add sugar, mix well, and let stand 20 minutes, stirring occasionally. Combine pectin, lemon juice, and water in a small saucepan.

Bring to a boil and boil 1 minute. Add pectin to strawberry mixture and stir 3 minutes. Pour into freezer jars, leaving ½ inch head space. Adjust caps.

Let stand 24 hours; then store in freezer. Yield: about six 8-ounce jars.

CHUNKY STRAWBERRY-RHUBARB JAM

1 pound rhubarb
1 quart strawberries
¼ cup frozen orange juice concentrate
1 package (1¾ ounce) powdered pectin
5 ½ cups sugar

Wash rhubarb; discard leaves. Cut into 1-inch pieces. Cut strawberries into halves. Combine rhubarb, strawberry halves, and undiluted frozen orange juice concentrate in a large (6 to 8 quart) saucepot. Stir in powdered pectin.

Place mixture over high heat and stir until it comes to a hard boil. Add the sugar and bring to a full, rolling boil; boil hard for 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat.

Skim and stir for 5 minutes to distribute fruit. Carefully ladle into hot jars, leaving ¼-inch head space. Adjust caps.

QUICK AND EASY STRAWBERRY JAM

2 quarts strawberries, washed and stemmed
1 package (1¾ ounce) powdered pectin
6 ¾ cups sugar

Crush strawberries and measure 4½ cups berries in a large saucepot. Stir in powdered pectin and bring to a full, rolling boil over high heat, stirring frequently. Add sugar and return to a full, rolling boil. Boil hard for 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and skim foam. Carefully ladle into hot jars, leavine ¼-inch head space. Adjust caps.

Process 10 minutes in a boiling water bath canner. Yield: about seven 8-ounce jars.

AT WORK

First job after college

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

College commencement is here and so are all those inspiring speeches. "The future is yours!" etc. etc. The trouble is, it might not seem that way to those graduates, sitting in their black robes in all those auditoriums throughout America, terrified about going from full-time schooling to full-time working.

College for the most part teaches us to follow directions, how to do research, how to be theoretical. It doesn't teach us how to act for ourselves, so we learn dependency instead of autonomy. And now is the time to learn that, because it's what the next part of life is all about.

There are several questions you need to ask yourself. One is, "What do I really want for myself?" It is hard to know. If you graduated from college without any internships or special guidance or inroads to specific careers, you may feel directionless.

Therefore, you have to get started and not worry about whether your first job is "it" for life. Take my word for it, it won't be. According to the Department of Labor, we will all change careers more than once or twice in our lifetimes — maybe three, four, five times. So the initial choice we make does not lock us into anything.

Secondly, don't be afraid of being demeaned by the job you may be offered. Armed with a college diploma, students tend to think they have a first-class ticket to the most stimulating jobs. You will be mightily depressed when those glamorous jobs seen on TV and movies just aren't offered. More likely than not, you will have to deal with personnel officers understandably unimpressed as hordes of graduates parade through with unrealistic goals, and a tight economy to boot.

So, to find that first job, go to your placement service, and get some leads or at least names of companies. Go through the alumni directory and find names and numbers of those who have graduated before you who are now in fields that hold some allure for you.

Introduce yourself and ask them to spare a 15-minute interview, (you'll keep strict time) so that they might tell you about their field, how they started, what surprises they found. Also ask them what they'd do differently if they could, and what advice they'd give you just starting out. There is even a chance they might be able to hire you or refer you to someone who can.

Then, ask some of your professors, especially those most connected to the business community, for referrals and advice about what to say about yourself.

A word about interviewing for that first full-time job. You are not expected to know a great deal about the job or the field, so don't pretend or try to exaggerate what you know. You must, however, demonstrate your enthusiasm for learning their business and contributing to it. Rehearse yourself so that you can tell them about some successes in your past — from class projects, part-time jobs, extracurricular activities.

You can even bring along some papers that you wrote for class or even had published in the newspaper. Don't be embarrassed to "show and tell" when you have good projects from school that exhibit how you think, write, or approach complicated issues.

Look for cues about the interviewer and learn to have a real conversation. Don't just answer their questions as if it were an oral test. If they have a tennis trophy on their desk and you play, talk about the game. If they are brusque, speed up your own rate; if they are more relaxed, you can be, too.

If the interview is nearly over and you know they are seeing others, take a risk in assertive behavior. Ask about your chances. What concerns do they have about you? If they want you to have some knowledge of a subject which you don't, ask if you can take a night course to learn. Or if they want more experience, ask if you can work on a probationary term which will let you learn as you go and demonstrate your value within a short, say three-month, period.

Show your willingness to work by taking a night shift or moving to a less desirable city where they have a branch office or plant.

And last, don't be put off by titles or positions lower than you had hoped. Start. Get in. Work as "go-fer," clerk, driver, deliverer. Observe and learn the business.

Or, if there is really something that pulls you, then go for it. Volunteer your time as an intern and work nights to afford taking that opportunity.

Only in the process of doing, no matter what your degree, can you make your interests, abilities and markets converge.

Pacifiers help babies gain weight

The magazine cites a study at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia which compared 15 preemies who were given pacifiers during their usual tube feedings with 15 others who weren't.

Besides developing a sucking reflex more quickly, the babies with the pacifiers reached the weight (4.4 pounds) at which they could go home from the hospital 6 days earlier.

Design & Decor

by Charlie W. Pierce

A summer house should convey cool comfort to all those who enter it. The philosophy "less is more" is especially apt to easy summer living. A minimum of furnishings are needed and the walls can be easily blended with the look of soft pastels. Relieved of clutter and commotion, the mind is free to relax on quiet space. Where white used to reign, clear pastels effortlessly compliment one another. Detail can be introduced with a splash of deeply colored fresh flowers. Make your summer home an escape from cramped reality. Open it up with pastels and allow the eyes to wander like a summer's breeze.

Wine image needs boost

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

American wine producers — who have witnessed the end of the wine boom of the '70s in the last 12 months — would do well to consider a public relations campaign to improve the image of their product.

The San Francisco-based Wine Institute has fought regulations that they feel would do little more than drive up the cost of a bottle of wine, but the institute has neither the people nor the budget to handle the massive public relations campaign needed to upgrade the image of American wine in the United States and in other countries.

It is estimated that more than a quarter of all Americans over the age of 21 don't consume any wine at all. Meanwhile, exports to other countries, though increasing, still represent a tiny percentage of wine made here. The millions of people who don't drink wine are the ones the French, Italians, Germans and others are attempting to win over to their products.

They are doing it through clever advertising campaigns, and through organizations set up to promote their products — organizations that in fact subsidize export, a system that doesn't exist in the United States.

"Most of the world's great wine regions have an organisation to help publicise their wines," said the British wine journal Decanter in its April 1983 issue. "The members, the local producers, have an excuse to dress up in colorful robes and hold ceremonies to induct the famous and the not-so-famous as honorary 'companions' or 'vignerons.' The French are perhaps best organised in this respect and even have a confrerie for cheese."

One of the earliest of these organizations was the Chevaliers du Tastevin, formed some 50 years ago in France ostensibly to promote the wines of the Burgundy region of France. Its headquarters is the famed Clos de Vougeot, where some of the region's most spectacular dinners are staged as dignitaries are presented the silver tasting cup, the tastevin, and ceremoniously inducted into the order.

And Les Compagnons du Beaujolais now promotes the wines of the Beaujolais region.

Now, even the long-neglected Port region of Portugal has its own organization, called the Confraria do Vinho do Porto, "complete with ... deep purple robes and black felt hats," said Decanter editor Colin Parnell.

Italy's latest promotional tool is a handsome facility in New York City called the Enoteca, where wine writers and enophiles may gather to sample new wines, interview Italian wine dignitaries, and generally brush up on Italian wine.

The need for an organization to promote wine is a financial necessity for California, which produces some 90 percent of all wine made in America. In California, grape growing is the third largest agricultural industry, after meat-dairy and cotton. Yet sales of wine in the last year have slowed to a crawl, while imports have grabbed a larger share of the market. Today some 23 percent of all wines sold in the United States were made in other countries.

The Wine Institute has attempted to keep laws regulating American wine to a minimum, but Institute President John De Luca says that is a monumental task — especially since the 50 states have, essentially, 50 different types of laws governing and regulating wine, and many of those laws the institute feels are restrictive and arbitrary.

With a staff of 50, the institute has 10 lawyers and eight public relations persons, yet it still needed 31 additional law firms, on retainer in 31 different states last year, to help it lobby for what it feels are more realistic laws. It has been an effective lobbying group, warding off many laws that could drive the cost of wine-making up.

Microwave stroganoff

Beef Stroganoff was originally developed by a French chef employed by a Russian nobleman, Count Paul Stroganov in the 19th century. Now the classic dish has been updated so that it can be cooked nwith ease in 20 minutes using na microwave oven.

1 tbsp. dry sherry
1 tbsp. tomato paste

People who count can add, not subtract

By MARIE DOTY
Copley News Service

Overheard in line at a fast-food counter: "The loan officer told me I didn't have enough experience. I asked him, 'Don't all my years as a volunteer count for anything?'"

She was a young woman in her early 30s. And she looked tired and frazzled.

This is because they see the need in a child's eyes, the pain in the eyes of the very ill or injured, the loneliness in the face of the old, the desperation in the hand clutching the prison bars.

And they've never learned to close their own eyes.

Nor to shake their head N-O, no.

"Next!" said the girl behind the counter, and I didn't hear whether being a volunteer counted with the man who was dispensing loans that day.

How many weary and discouraged volunteers, I've wondered since, sometimes ask the question: Don't I count?

But who answers?

Cheesy mushrooms

While guests wait for dinner, serve them Blue Cheese-Stuffed Mushrooms. Select two dozen, good-sized caps; wash and dry, then sprinkle lightly with salt. Combine one-half (1 stick) butter and one-fourth cup (one ounce) crumbled Blue Cheese; beat until smooth. Stir in one-half herb seasoned stuffing and one tablespoon finely chopped onion. Spoon about one and one-half tablespoons in each mushroom cap. Bake 10 to 15 minutes in a preheated 400 degree oven. Remove from baking sheet and serve immediately. Makes 24.

AT WIT'S END

Parents' I.Q.

By ERMA BOMBECK

It's time someone reassured parents.

There are eight stages of parental intelligence. These stages have nothing to do with an increase or decrease of brain cells. They have nothing to do with I.Q. or mental activity. The stages shift without warning or reason. Why? Because our kids tell us so, that's why.

Stage I is probably our lowest ebb. We have an infant in our home and we don't know anything, but it doesn't matter because the infant knows even less. Therefore, the infant's eyes follow us everywhere. We can stick out a finger and the kid will hang onto it without even questioning why. It's the best of both worlds.

Stage II occurs when the infant is about two years old. We are approaching our Oral Roberts plateau. We heal just by touching lips to a finger. We mend books with magic and replace a doll's head with the skill of a surgeon. We are on a roll.

Stage III has parents still holding ground as we unselfishly send him or her to school where they learn other adults know something too . . . some of them even more than Mommy or Daddy, but intellectually, we are still on firm ground.

At around age 12 (Stage IV), erosion takes place. This usually happens in some minor things like helping them with their homework and having them fail the course, or showing them how to ice skate and your ending up in a full body cast. You find them looking at you sometime like they wonder how you keep your job.

By the time Stage V occurs, your children are around 15 years old and you begin to regress at an astounding rate. You don't remember what you promised. You don't remember being a child. You're repetitious, boring and are incapable of doing anything except listen in on private phone conversations and say, "I only punish you because I love you."

The biggest change comes two years later at Stage VI. Parents are vegetables! Children begin to refer to them in the third person, anticipating their inability to comprehend anything. (Example: "How in the world did those two ever have children? Maybe they watched a video disc.")

At stage VII, children are the adults and parents are the children. They drive you in your car to your dental appointment. They plan the menus (pizza), they control the phone and the utilities, as well as the vacations and social life. ("You and Dad will be a lot more comfortable in your room away from the noise.")

Stage VIII comes the day after they're married, at which time you become a genius overnight. You know about money, loans and oven temperatures. It's your finest hour.

Women benefit from technology

TROY, Mich. (AP) — A recent study exploring the automated office scene from the staff point of view indicates that women are the major beneficiaries of the new technology.

According to the survey of nearly 500 electronic equipment users from 1,300 of the nation's largest companies, sponsored by Kelly Services, among all those who said they operated a word processor, 95 percent are women.

Moreover, 94 percent of these automated equipment technicians reported that their skills had opened up promotion opportunities.

Nature's own pest control done without chemicals

By SAM HAMILTON
Copley News Service

Looking for a way to take the bugs out of home gardening? Maybe you should begin by cultivating your insect friends instead of destroying them in an indiscriminate declaration of war.

At least that's the sentiment of Dr. Michael D. Atkins, president of Safer Agro-Chem., Inc., in Jamul, Calif. He's also been a professor of zoology at San Diego State University for 12 years.

Atkins, an entomologist, preaches a concept he calls "integrated pest management." And his Agro-Chem company markets a product which employs the concept.

It's a means of selective pest control which, as he describes it, uses the forces of nature — which include pitting "beneficial" insects against "destructive" ones — rather than an indiscriminate chemical arsenal. The method capitalizes on people's concern in recent years about the dangerous side effects of petrochemical-based insecticides.

The Agro-Chem product, Safer Agro-Chem soap, combines fatty acids with alkali, producing an insecticidal soap which kills destructive garden pests, the ones that eat your garden plants, without wiping out the beneficial ones. The product is registered and approved by the Environmental Protection Agency and the California Department of Food and Agriculture. It's available at some local nurseries and garden shops.

"There have always been friendly and enemy insects in gardens," says Atkins.

According to Atkins, beneficial insects come in two categories — predators (ladybugs and lady beetles, for example) "... that simply eat other bugs ..." and parasites that kill "bad" insects by laying eggs in them.

Together, the parasites and predators combat enemy bugs — aphids, whitefly, spider mites, mealybugs and similar pests — that weaken, damage or destroy plant life.

Fourteen girls representing four area schools have been named as the new members of Dillard's Teen Board for the 1983-84 school year.

The 1983-84 board will be officially introduced in August when Dillard's and "Seventeen" magazine will present a back-to-school fashion show. During the year, the board members will participate in activities sponsored by Dillard's, including modeling, hostessing store events, attending monthly meetings and community service projects.

They will receive training in modeling and grooming techniques and will also attend seasonal fashion trend presentations.

Also announced were second-year advisory board members Tammy Taylor, from Midland High School, and Celeste Elig, from Lee High School.

Pet germs

A dog, cat or even pet bird can be the cause of a child's strep throat, according to an article in "Family Circle."

Dr. Stuart M. Copperman, of the State University of New York College of Medicine at Stony Brook found 40 cases of recurrent strep sore throats in families whose dog or cat was infected by strep bacteria.

Safe pest control

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

Pests have bugged mankind perhaps forever — and, in recent years, the things we use to get rid of them have begun to pester mankind. What this country needs is some kind of pest control that's not only effective against vermin, but also safe around humans.

Recently in China, officials were concerned because an electric mousetrap was zaxping the citizenry. In the United States — East Islip, N.Y. to be specific — a home owner had to destroy his $86,000 dwelling because two pesticides had been improperly applied, environmental officials said.

So it's clear that getting rid of pests can be hazardous to your health. Whenever you use poisons or traps against pests, you yourself may be the unintended victim.

Today, consumers who have to fight insects and rodents in their homes are going to great lengths to find alternatives to poisons and traps.

Last June, for example, the Porter County League of Women Voters in Indiana ordered 400,000 ladybugs to control garden aphids and mealy bugs.

Energy Conservation Practices

- ❑ Do not use air conditioning until absolutely necessary.
- ❑ Keep your thermostat set as high as possible. We recommend 80° in the summer. For added comfort, use ceiling or portable fans to circulate the air.
- ❑ Check your air conditioner filters each month to see if they need cleaning or changing. And make sure that the outside unit is free of grass, leaves and trash.
- ❑ When leaving home, turn off air conditioning. If away for two days or more, turn off water heater.
- ❑ If you use an automatic dishwasher, set water heater to 140°; otherwise, set temperature to 120° or lower.
- ❑ Use scrap insulation to plug air leaks from attic and around window air conditioners.
- ❑ Repair water leaks in pipes and faucets, and seal air duct leaks.
- ❑ Use drapes, blinds, shades, awnings or plants to block sunlight.
- ❑ Try to minimize traffic through outside doors.
- ❑ Economize in the kitchen. Plan meals so several dishes can be cooked in the oven at the same time.
- ❑ Save when you do laundry. Wash and dry only full loads of clothes.

Energy Conservation Measures

These home installations and modifications require an investment, but may return their cost to you in the form of savings on utility bills.

- ❑ Caulk and weatherstrip around doors and windows to reduce air leaks.
- ❑ Add insulation to ceilings, walls and floors.
- ❑ Insulate ducts, especially in the attic.
- ❑ Insulate hot water pipes in attic.
- ❑ Install insulation blankets on water heaters, especially in garage or basement.
- ❑ Investigate cost-effectiveness of storm doors and windows.
- ❑ Add solar-reflecting materials to glass doors and windows on east/west exposures.
- ❑ As a convenience, install a clock thermostat to automatically set air conditioner and heating unit to desired temperature. Even when you're away from home, the clock thermostat can control your air conditioner for more economical operation.
- ❑ If your central air unit is more than five years old, you may want to consider replacing it with one that's more energy-efficient. We recommend new units with a Seasonal Energy Efficiency Rating (SEER) of at least 9. For information on how energy-efficient equipment can save you money, ask your dealer or call Texas Electric.

Farm getaways offer good life

By JERRY HULSE
By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Instead of a crowded mountain resort this summer (or a beach swarming with sunbathers), how about gathering eggs on a farm, listening to a rooster crow, milking a cow, breathing fresh air and feeding a barnyard full of animals?

It is the newest craze: farm-ranch vacations that give hope to pent-up Americans looking to get the cardiovascular system humming smoothly again.

For thousands of vacationers, a farm-ranch holiday provides a new lifestyle with a choice of endless destinations. A wilderness farm in Oregon or Idaho. A ranch in the wilds of Wyoming or Montana. A peaceful lodge in New England.

It is no big deal to get 'em back on the farm — not if they see (or talk with) Pat Dickerman. For 35 years she has been placing vacationers on farms and ranches from Maine to Minnesota, from Washington to Wyoming.

SHE ASKS: "Do you long for the uncomplicated life on a farm where the hosts become your friends? Or a ranch where you'll ride, take overnight pack trips and help round up the cattle? Does a rural lodge or inn fit your vacation picture?"

If the answer is an unequivocal yes, then Miss Dickerman will lead you swiftly back to the farm, a ranch, a Rocky Mountain retreat or dozens of other rural vacation destinations.

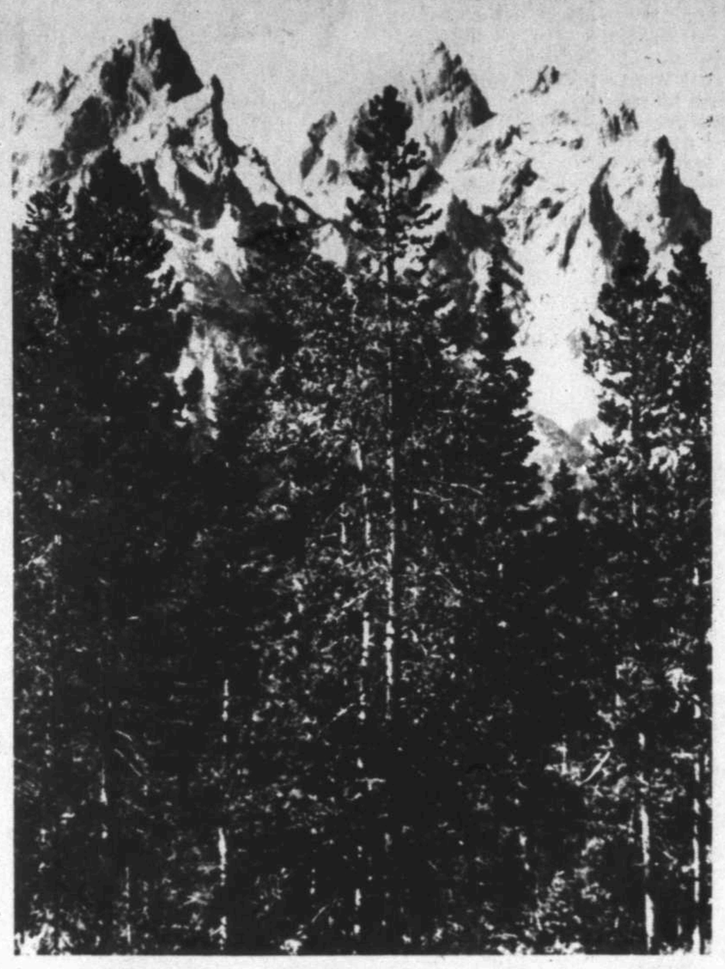

In Montana, for example, she has in mind Sweet Grass Ranch with miles of riding trails in a valley of the Crazy Mountains, a stream meandering past the cabins — an escape that costs the vacationer $275-$300 a week, meals and riding included.

Miss Dickerman sends others off to a 6,000-acre spread in Wyoming, a dairy farm in Idaho and an inn in the Smoky Mountains. Or there is the Bar M Ranch in Oregon where guests feed the horses and calves, fish for trout and catch glimpses of deer in the forest and eagles overhead. The cost for a week — meals and a horse included — comes to $235-$270.

ELSEWHERE THERE IS Partridge Inn in Washington State with its pear and apple orchards. Or Sycamore Spring Farm in Churubusco, Ind., with its herd of buffalo, an old millpond and garden-fresh vegetables.

More and more Americans are sensing the urge to see their own land, to recapture lost moments when the world was a simpler place, and the simple life was, after all, far more meaningful than any of us realized during our growing-up years, a time when youth and inexperience sent us off in pursuit of more ambitious dreams.

Miss Dickerman recalls her own summers when, as a girl, she vacationed at a cabin outside Duluth, Minn., picking raspberries, gathering eggs and playing in a hayloft. She was stung with the memory of a blissful world of pure air and newmown hay, and so in 1947 she began compiling a list of farms and ranches where families could experience the joys she had known as a child.

CNS Photo.

The Grand Teton Range rises 7,000 feet and more above the flat plain of Jackson Hole, Wyoming, forming a mystic western wall along the valley.

As the list began to grow she published a book titled "Farm, Ranch and Country Vacations" that has expanded year by year until today it lists hundreds of rural vacation destinations from California to Connecticut. At the same time, Miss Dickerman has turned from the typewriter to the computer to book these trips personally.

BESIDES FARMS AND ranches, she sends vacationers off on rafting, riding and pack trips. One tripper wrote to tell why she returns, year after year, to the wilds of Montana: "It's because when I stand on a mountaintop and can see 100 miles in four directions, I become the size I am supposed to be ... because once I saw a herd of elk and later the same day felt a trout nudge my boot ... because the early morning sun shining on a dew-spangled spider web is one of the loveliest sights in the world ... but mostly because I'm hooked!"

Among vacation selections Miss Dickerman has scheduled this summer are a pack trip into the Wyoming wilderness, a 15-day adventure between Jackson and Cody.

Before saddling up, guests will be driven through Grand Teton and Yellowstone national parks; they will spend a night at Turpin Meadow Ranch in Jackson and another at Rimrock Ranch in Cody. They will cross the Continental Divide at 12,000 feet, camp beside streams, fish for trout, and peer at elk and deer and an unsullied world populated only by themselves, a guide, wranglers and a cook.

MISS DICKERMAN WILL send other vacationers off to explore glacial valleys, alpine meadows and snow-fed streams in the Sawtooths of Idaho, followed by a six-day raft trip down the Middle Fork of the Salmon River, which she describes as a "sporty run" with more than 100 rapids, an adventure that totals up to $1,200, or $100 a day.

North Yellowstone and the Gallatin National Forest will be explored by another band of riders, with a couple of days off for rest and recreation at a remote cattle ranch in the mountain wilds of Wyoming.

Miss Dickerman's list also includes an adults-only trip that involves rugged trails and hard riding combined with stream and fly fishing, waterfalls, glaciers and dozens of lakes in what she describes as "the most beautiful and least traveled of all Wyoming's mountain ranges." The 10-day adventure costs $900.

IN OREGON SHE has in mind a "picturebook" ranch in the Rogue Valley that combines riding, tennis and "the best of meals," followed by four days of rafting down the Rogue, with overnight stops at wilderness lodges along the river. Beginning and ending in Grants Pass, it is an eight-day vacation package that costs $650.

In addition, Miss Dickerman lists a boating and camping trip in Utah and Arizona to visit Indian cliff dwellings, explore the rugged Rainbow Trail, Monument Valley and a remote Navajo trading post Zane Grey described in "Riders of the Purple Sage."

Her groups will go backpacking, canoeing, kayaking, sailing, ballooning and ski touring; others will join cattle drives and camp out in peaceful valleys and cross prairies by covered wagon.

Meanwhile, less adventurous souls will be content to daydream in a hammock or fish beside a stream at such charming retreats as Mountain View Farm and Merry Meadow Farm in Vermont where thoroughbreds and Morgan horses are corraled. A 200-acre working spread along the Connecticut River, the Merry Meadow, provides riding, picnicking, canoeing and "scrumptious family-style meals," in the words of Miss Dickerman.

With the success of her farm and ranch vacation program, Miss Dickerman has done a spinoff to include dog sledding, snowmobiling, scuba diving, hang gliding and other leisure trips grouped under the title, Adventure Travel. Her vacationers go mountain climbing in Peru, rafting in Turkey and camel touring in Australia; they travel by horse and wagon in Romania and Holland and by mule in Switzerland.

MISS DICKERMAN'S LOVE, though, remains the farm and ranch life. Of her hundreds of listings, a favorite is 2,000-acre Sixty-Three Ranch in Montana's Mission Creek Canyon: fishing, hiking, riding, rodeos, mountain climbing. Miss Dickerman promises: "You'll eat heartily, sleep soundly and be as active or relaxed as you please."

From her ivory tower in Manhattan, Pat Dickerman suggests that Americans return to the country to smell the richness of newly mown hay, to listen to a bluejay sing and to taste the icy waters of a meandering brook.

She gets downright emotional describing all this good life, which prompts one to ask: Then what in heaven's name, Miss Dickerman, are you living in the city for? (Her home base is New York.) To which she responds apologetically: "I'm earning a living...."

Still, once a year she heads off into the country to explore new destinations.

"THERE'S ONLY ONE way to really learn about country places," she says, "And that's to get in the car and drive. There's a whole lot about America most people haven't seen or experienced — a neighborliness and a gentleness. So much beauty remains in America."

For more information, write Miss Dickerman, care of Farm & Ranch Vacations Inc., 36 East 57th St., New York 10022.

Camps cater to everyone, from musicians to athletes

By MARIAN J. MEYERS
Hearst Feature Service

Summer camp – the words conjure up idyllic visions of hiking through the woods, canoeing and swimming in a sky-blue lake, singing around a blazing campfire at night.

Well, think again. Today's summer camps offer everything from competitive sports training to the latest teen-age craze – this year, it's computers. Your basic swimming-hiking-crafts-and-singing-around-the-campfire camp is still around, but it's facing stiff competition from specialty camps that have taken aim at your child's most recent hobby, passion, problem or passing interest.

There are camps to lose weight, bicycle through North America and Europe, sight-see across the country, sail the Caribbean, play baseball, football or tennis with the pros, ride horseback, survive in the wilderness, design computer programs, dance, act, make music, and even, for the more independent, plan an individual program.

If you haven't done it already, now's the time to decide where to send the young ones for their – and your – vacation. The trick is finding the right camp, so they won't hate you when they return.

To make the job easier, the American Camping Association has published a directory of more than 2,200 ACA-accredited camps, "The 1983 Parents' Guide to Accredited Camps." The camps listed all meet educational and recreational standards set by the ACA, a non-profit organization of 5,000 camp directors, educators and religious groups throughout the country, in the areas of facilities, health and safety, personnel and programming.

The idea behind ACA camps, says media relations director Jim LeMonn, is to provide a variety of outdoor, educational and recreational experiences in a group setting.

"Some of the workshop-type experiences are really capitalizing on our good name and the reputation summer camp has," says LeMonn. "The concept of the specialty camp isn't really what we're about. The idea of doing one thing for seven hours is not something you'd find in an ACA-accredited camp."

But Linda Holmberg, director of Ron Holmberg Tennis Camps, disagrees. "Comparing a specialty camp to a general camp is like comparing apples and oranges. Specialization is a step in another direction. As you get older, you decide there are some things you're interested in, and some things you're not."

Specialty camps are usually held on the campuses of colleges or prep schools, so participants don't have the same out-of-doors experiences as general campers.

"In a specialty camp, you're coming to gain proficiency in a particular sport or area of interest," Holmberg adds. "Not only is the child doing something he really enjoys, he's learning. This does not mean the child is not provided with other recreational activities."

What it does mean is that participants are there for a specific reason, and the goal of the camp is to concentrate on making sure they get what they came for. At the Ron Holmberg camp, which charges $400 a week and is located at Kent School in Connecticut, boys and girls from 10 to 16 years are required to spend a minimum of five hours a day on the court. Swimming, softball, volleyball, basketball and soccer are also provided, and bowling, a pizza party, a dance and movies are offered one night a week.

Pins are a necessary part of every sewing kit. Pin size is stated in sixteenths of an inch according to length. For instance, a size 16 is 16/16 inches, or one inch. For general sewing, No. 17 dressmaker pins are most commonly used. These slender pins are of medium diameter. For fine sewing and delicate fabrics, No.17 silk pins, which are very slender, with fine points, are usually best. Larger, coarser pins are advisable only on heavy, coarse or very loosely woven fabrics. Ball point pins should be used on knitted fabrics. Their round tips slip between the yarns to avoid snags. Use T-pins only on bulky fabrics as they will not slip though.

Summer travel a spin of the wheels

By JERRY HULSE
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

OK, get out the road maps. Pack a sleeping bag. Soon vacationers will be spinning their wheels. We're talking about summer.

That's the season when actives will be hitting the back roads of California, Colorado and New England in the greatest mass movement of bicyclists in memory. Others with appetites for distant adventure will pedal through France, England, Ireland, Israel and other destinations overseas.

For thousands of Americans, vacationing on wheels means escaping the rat race. Never mind that certain pedal pushers will end the day in pup tents and sleeping bags. That's the idea. There's this desire to give the raspberries to the hedonist's world of snug beds and hot showers. And for those who can't do without the creature comforts, there'll be hot tubs to soak in and home-cooked meals served in cozy country inns. In California, perhaps. Or the maple-covered world of Vermont.

A majorrallying point this summer will be Colorado and the opportunity to explore the Rockies on a 10-speed bike. Kathy and Roger Cox will be operating trips over mountain peaks and into pastoral valleys. One they've labeled the Gold Rush Tour. Bikers take off from Lake Dillon, pedal to the slick ski resort of Breckenridge and on to the Blue River Valley and the headwaters of Hoosier Pass.

After cooling their sprockets in the town of Fairplay, they'll follow the Arkansas River to the lofty old mining town of Leadville, looking in on the Tabor Opera House and Baby Doe's cabin.

Other bikers will spin off from Gunnison and circle the Elk and Sawatch ranges. In Aspen, they'll soak the frame in a hot tub and sleep at the Brass Bed Inn.

Another group of bikers will ride into the lofty San Juan Mountains to Slumgullion Pass. After catching their breath in the silver mining town of Creede, they'll cross the Continental Divide to Durango. Those with the legs for it will pump on to the colorful mining towns of Silverton and Ouray. It's a heart-thumper, so only advanced bikers with top-grade EKGs are advised to sign on. Colorado Bicycle Tours prices range from $199 for three days to $419 for a week.

Less strenuous are the adventures of Californians Tim Blake and Matt Ward who've been leading biker packs for six seasons now. In Northern California they take in the Russian River country and Point Reyes National Seashore. They loop along the Sonoma-Mendocino counties coastline and pedal through Napa Valley's vineyards and north to the redwoods.

DEAR ABBY

Wife hates retirement

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Do husbands change after they retire? Mine did. We will soon be celebrating our 45th wedding anniversary. My husband has been retired for six months, and I hate it!

When the mail comes, if there's a letter for me, he stands there while I read it, then wants to know what it says. I don't go for groceries alone anymore. I don't mind his going along, but he has to approve every item I put in the cart.

Because he's retired, wouldn't you think he'd offer to help a little around the house? No way. He won't even pour his own coffee. If I head for the door, he either tags along or wants to know where I'm going and how long I'll be. When the phone rings, he rushes to answer it, and if it's for me, he stands there listening to every word I say.

I can't speak for other women, but I was a lot happier before my husband retired. No names or town, please. I've got enough trouble as it is. Thanks. – BEEN HAPPIER

DEAR BEEN: If you think you're alone, you should see my mail. Your husband may need a little help in finding something outside the home to occupy his time. Investigate the senior citizen activities in your community and give yourself (and your man) a break.

DEAR ABBY: I've been invited to a bridal shower and I'm supposed to bring some "tips" for a bride on how to have a successful marriage.

This bride plans to make a career out of staying home to be a full-time housewife. – NEVER BEEN WED IN WISCONSIN

DEAR NEVER: I just happen to have 10 tips tucked away in my bridal file:

1. Don't keep telling him about all the other men you could have married.
2. Don't bring out the bills at breakfast.
3. Don't try to start a conversation with him while he's reading or watching a sports event on TV.
4. Don't correct him in front of other people.
5. Don't try to make him jealous.
6. Don't bad-mouth his relatives.
7. Don't put a shirt in his drawer with a button missing.
8. Don't call him at work unless it's absolutely necessary.
9. Don't use his razor.
10. Don't threaten to leave him unless you have a better place to go.

DEAR ABBY: You printed a letter from a bride-to-be who worried about what part her best friend (a man) could play in her wedding ceremony.

I am a woman attorney married to a Lutheran minister. There was no question in my mind as to who my best friend was when I married, so I had my brother at my side during the ceremony.

The church bulletin listed my brother as "Bride's Attendant," while my husband's best man was listed as "Groom's Attendant." Once we got past the jokes about what color dress my brother would wear, we created a beautiful ceremony. – NORTH CAROLINA

CONFIDENTIAL TO "ALWAYS WRONG" IN MILWAUKEE: Nobody is ALWAYS wrong. Even a clock that isn't working is right twice a day.

WHY THE VALUE OF A GOLD PATEK PHILIPPE GOES UP

There are, throughout the world, thousands of Patek Philippe timepieces still ticking silently (and accurately) in tribute to the hands that made them over a century ago.

Occasionally one is offered at auction by one of the world's distinguished salons. Like any other work of art by the acknowledged master, a Patek Philippe appreciates in value.

This would go without saying for the museum-worthy Pateks that belonged to scores of legendary 19th century figures–from Tolstoy to Tchaikovsky, from Wagner to Queen Victoria. Any antique Patek Philippe is a collector's item, simply because it is a Patek Philippe, a unique example of workmanship at its highest level.

But what of a Patek Philippe that was bought 10 years ago? Can it be a collector's item today? The price one paid for it reflected its value as the finest available timepiece of its kind–and as a work of art that was destined to increase in value, because the scarcity of such quality is growing at a disheartening rate.

Everything about a gold Patek Philippe that can be gold is gold–18 kt gold–right down to the winding crown, the strap buckle, even the spring bars that hold the strap to the watch. In automatic Pateks, for greater technical efficiency, the rotor is 18 kt gold (22 kt in one model). But gold has never represented more than 25% of the cost of a Patek Philippe watch. The real cost is in the time and patience and tradition and absolute dedication to flawlessness that make it a Patek Philippe.

Time: It takes eight to nine months to complete a single Patek. And once the watch is finally assembled and working perfectly, it is taken apart again to be further refined. Patience: Every element is microscopically hand-finished to a tolerance of no more than one one-hundredth of a millimeter. Every wheel, gear, pinion and cog is polished by hand until it is virtually frictionless. Tradition: Just as most Patek Philippes are handed down from one generation to the next, so are the tools that Patek watchmakers use to perfect them–heirlooms that have become as precious as they are indispensable. Flawlessness: After testing and regulating and refining to as near absolute perfection as human hands and minds can achieve, each Patek is lubricated–so delicately that it takes less than a cupful of oil for an entire year's production. A fact you may appreciate most in the silkiness you feel as you wind a Patek.

This year's production at Patek Philippe will reach a grand total of approximately 11,000. Which is terribly few compared with the numbers of appreciative people with the means to own one.

But not so few when you consider that most of them will be ticking silently (and accurately) a century from now. And when you take into account that Patek Philippe has been at this, undeviatingly, since 1839.

EVEN WHEN THE PRICE OF GOLD GOES DOWN.

Victoria, British Columbia's capital on the southern tip of Vancouver Island, draws hundreds of thousands of tourists every year. The Inner Harbor, in front of the legislative building, is the hub of visitor's activities. Bus tours to the world-famous Butchart Gardens and other big attractions are available here.

Victoria, charming garden city to the north

Genteel yet gentle Victoria acquires much of her allure, paradoxically, from the "salt chuck," or more specifically the waters of Juan de Fuca and Haro straits that wash her intricate, scenic shores.

British Columbia's charming capital, at Vancouver Island's southern tip, basks in the majestic Olympic Mountains' rain shadow, like a confident maiden, assured that she will not be deflowered by nature's excesses.

Victoria's location and the Pacific's moderating influences on the extensive lowlands and scattered rounded-yet-rugged uplands, give this unhurried, garden city a close resemblance to north Mediterranean climes. This means short, tenderly wet winters with temperatures rarely dropping below freezing, and long sunny and warm summers. This, combined with the longer daylight hours, makes it a dream vacationland.

After the glacial epoch, peoples belonging to the Straits Salish, or the Lekwungaynung language group - chiefly the Songhies and the Saanich - engaged in seine fishing here. They gave places colorful names that reflected their legends and landscape.

Thus, today's serene Beacon Hill Park was known as "Meequan" or "pot bellied person lying on his back," as this is an image from the strait; Esquimalt Harbor means "a place of the gradually shoaling water"; and Tlikwaynung meaning "Indian peas", was the name given to the Trial Islands.

This coastline had a long list of Straits Salish place names, but only a few survived after the Europeans arrived in these waters. Which person first came to the area from the Old World is a matter of conjecture.

One claim is that Sir Francis Drake came close in 1574. Thirteen years later, Greek mariner Juan de Fuca allegedly entered the strait named after him nearly two centuries afterward.

By 1774, Spain had claimed the area but relinquished it to the British 18 years later. In the early 1800s it was studied as a site for a Hudsons Bay Company depot and was described by one of the company's men, James Douglas, as looking like "a perfect 'Eden.'"

In the 1840s Port Camosack, shortly afterward renamed Fort Victoria after the colonists' Queen, was established. In 1852 the name was shortened to Victoria.

Today, over 125 years later, the heritage and recreational opportunities of the Greater Victoria coastline are being enjoyed by an increasing number of tourists.

Power and sailboat cruising are very popular in the area. There are some two dozen marinas, a dozen public wharves and a couple of yacht clubs around Greater Victoria providing over 5,000 berths for moorage. The weather is most favorable between May and October.

On land, Victoria has big name attractions — the Provincial Museum, the Inner Harbor, the Butchart Gardens, to name only a few — but it is the salt chuck that remains the raison d'etre for Victoria's great popularity as a vacation destination.

Victoria is also an excellent jumping off point to other destinations in scenic British Columbia. The lovely city of Vancouver is nestled at the foot of mountains not far away. Vancouver is currently preparing to host a World Exposition on transportation and related communications, from May to mid-October of 1986.

Over 13 million visitors are expected to come to British Columbia to attend Vancouver's Expo '86.

The Matterhorn: Alpine majesty looms, captivates

By RONI GALGANO
Copley News Service

All that morning the snow kept tapping on my glasses, keeping the visibility a frustrating tumble-length ahead of me. The tips of my skis nosed through the crisp snow, ignoring my dilemma.

But if my skis disregarded me, the Alps did not. Even disguised as a cloud bank to my right, I knew they were watching me like my conscience. From the very beginning, when we all crowded together in the gondola that lifted us from the Italian village of Cervinia, they examined us. My only hope was that they would not report my ski form to my strict ski guide.

Afternoon arrived and I was beginning to suspect that neither my ski form nor the weather would improve. I blamed my lack of finesse more on the elusive Alps than the blinding snow. How can anyone get any serious skiing done when someone — something — is always staring over your shoulder?

Then, on the last run of the day (of course), it was our turn to stare. The Alps removed their disguise and no introductions were necessary. The first mountain to disrobe itself of clouds was the largest: the Matterhorn — as the Swiss call it; or Cervino to the Italians; or Mount Cerven to the French; or Gran Becca to the ancestors of this Aosta Valley region.

To me, it was every cliche — massive, elegant, brilliant, strong — and everything new. Here was something solid and aloof from a world of swirling clouds, drifting snow, speeding skiers — and even the conquering Romans, Napoleon and Mussolini. It was the first time I had ever seen skiers stop, in unison, not for just a breath of thin air, but to admire their host. And I now know why residents of Cervinia take poles with them when they ski — to hold themselves up when they see the magnificent Cervino nod gracefully down upon them.

Most skiers take their last run of the day on the trail leading right onto Cervinia's main street. The village's main artery is a narrow one with shops, restaurants, bars, condos and hotels cramped together in about five blocks. It makes for a friendly atmosphere of shuffling skis and snow-topped umbrellas.

Somehow, the feelings transmitted from the Alps were transferred to the citizens of Cervinia. Restaurateurs, shopkeepers, residents just bumped into, were all gracious and friendly; and always watching out for bumbling tourists. They hovered over us during antipasto, pasta, meat, salad, fruit and ice cream. They patiently explained the exchange rate on items chosen for the folks back home.

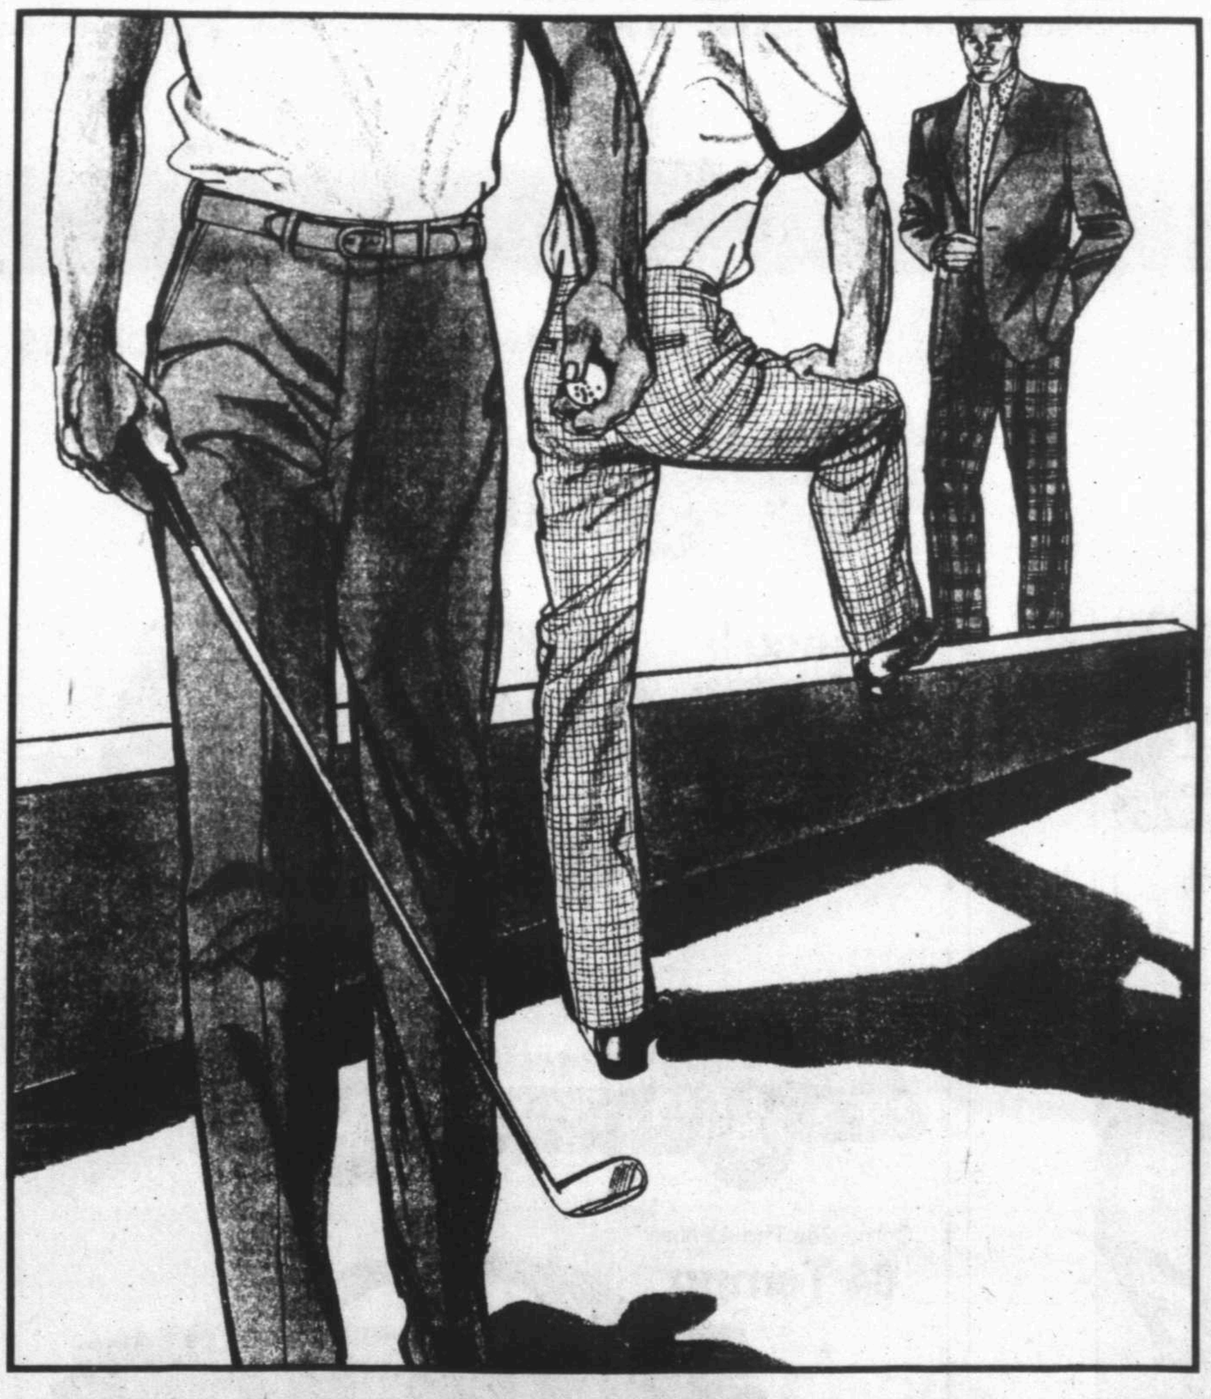

The easiest thing to explain about the exchange rate is this: The dollar is very strong. It takes 1,400 lira to equal one American dollar. It may take more money to get to Italy to ski, but once there the savings are quite substantial.

Many East Coast skiers have opted for Italy rather than the Colorado Rockies because the two places end up costing about the same. For example, a package offered by Trans World Airlines at first-class Hotel Cielo Alto in Cervinia costs $324 (two persons) for seven nights, including breakfast and dinner and motorcoach to and from Milan Airport. For those who would rather not have a package deal, hotels can be found from $100 to $10 a night. Buses and trains are available from Milan.

This Italian community is trying hard to lure American skiers away from Switzerland, especially from its nearby friendly rival, Zermatt. They emphasize the strength of the dollar in Italy and the expense of Switzerland. Many think this rivalry between the villages began on July 14, 1865, when the Englishman Whymper conquered the Gran Becca from the Zermatt side, beating by three days Jean Antoine Carrel, whose party climbed from the Breuil-Cervinia side (the village was originally called Breuil until fascist dictator Benito Mussolini changed it to Italian Cervinia in 1942). World attention focused on Zermatt and Gran Becca became known as the Matterhorn rather than Cervino.

Many skiers do make a day of skiing from Cervinia to Zermatt — a rewarding adventure to see both sides of the Matterhorn-Cervino and blue-green glaciers during a 20-mile round-trip ski run. For those who prefer to stay "on the sunny side of Cervino" there are four cableways, five chair lifts and 15 ski lifts from Cervinia's base. The skiing difficulty ranges from 20 percent beginner, 60 percent intermediate and 20 percent advanced. The longest run is six miles.

Sculptor Eli Kuslansky, with chisel and mallet in hand, recarves the figurehead of Texas tall ship Elissa. The figurehead is a stylistic representation of Mrs. Mary Moody Northen, the grand dame of Galveston.

Texas tall ship Elissa, an operational square-rigger sailing ship originally built in 1877 and maritime museum berthed at Pier 21 in Galveston, has undergone repairs to her life-size sculptured figurehead which was damaged last fall while sailing in the Gulf of Mexico.

After seven years of arduous restoration work, the historic sailing vessel made four day trips into the Gulf last September. This short voyages by the Elissa celebrated the culmination of all the restoration work and showed the world that Texas can truly make its own claim to the Age of Sail.

"I planed the figurehead down to a flat surface, and scarfed a new piece of the fine wood onto the sculpture," said Kuslansky. "Then began the job of redesigning the marvelous female figure.

"I was very pleased with the finished sculpture. She is a very lovely lady indeed," he added.

With the repairs completed, Elissa is serving the public as a maritime museum for all Texans. Summer touring hours are from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. seven days a week.

Admission charges are $3.50 for adults, $3 for those between ages 13 to 21 and those over 60, $2.50 for children ages four to 12, and children aged three and under are admitted free.

Going with the flow: From water boy to chief executive

Jay D.Schlichting

Sell drinking water in arid West Texas? That should be a real marketing snap, you say, kind of like selling popcorn at a Star Wars movie.

Not necessarily.

"You know, it's amazing how many people don't drink bottled water," Jay D. Schlichting said. "But if people will try it for two weeks, use it for their coffee and iced tea, they'll find it hard to live without."

Selling water is Schlichting's reason for going to the office each day. He is president of the Ampure Corporation, through which he owns Ozarka Drinking Water Corp. and recently acquired Airis Water Corp.

Ozarka has been in his family since 1958, when Schlichting's father, J. J., and Uncle, Dr. Henry, bought the company. But even before that, Schlichting drank the bottled water as a child.

SCHLICHTING IS president of Ozarka today. In January, he bought out family members' remaining interests. Now that he owns the company lock, stock and barrel, Schlichting plans to move it in a more aggressive way and expand deliveries to Dallas and Abilene within the next year.

After Schlichting graduated from college, he went to work for Ozarka in Midland as a truck driver. He used to have callouses on his shoulder then from hoisting heavy water bottles day in and day out — back when the bottles were made of glass.

SINCE BUYING OUT his family members' interest in Ozarka in January, Schlichting shoulders the whole thing — marketing, financing, employee relations and whatever else is associated with being president and sole owner of a drinking water company.

Now he feels free to run the company as he sees fit — more aggressively, he says.

"Being the owner now, I have freedom to give the company a lot more of the direction I want it to have."

For example, in February, Ozarka bought out Airis Water Company of Odessa. Schlichting formed a new entity called Ampure, The American Pure Water Company, to complete the merger.

"With the two companies combined, there will be better management in place and it'll do nothing but improve the service of each."

HE WILL CONTINUE to market the two waters separately, however, because they are two distinct waters, made by slightly different processes of reverse osmosis so they do not taste alike.

Ozarka is made by completely removing all minerals from Midland tap water and then injecting certain minerals back in by a specific formula. Airis is made by removing some of the minerals, not all. None are added back in.

"The reason we wanted Airis was because we felt it was a good opportunity to increase our product line," Schlichting explained. "It has a good name. The two companies combined will be stronger."

He aims to keep that choice for consumers.

"That market will continue, and Ozarka will be positioned as the quality product and will still be featured that way," Schlichting said.

AMPURE WILL ALSO sell reverse osmosis units for the home and offer bottled water through dispensers at which the consumer fills his own container.

Schlichting's next goal is to expand deliveries in the Permian Basin; and, within a year, to expand to the Abilene and Dallas markets also.

With that in mind, he recently changed advertising agencies and intends to change the company's strategy.

"We'll definitely be a more aggressive company," he said. "It reflects my personal style and goals."

He has followed bottled water trends closely for years. The introduction in the 1970s of Perrier, a bottled water from France, gave the industry a real shot in the arm.

"It made people more aware of bottled water; that it was a good thing. I drink some Perrier myself.

"There's a real transition going on now in America," Schlichting said. "Even though we are small, there is a lot of interest in our industry.

"In America, people have felt it was their God-given right to drink good water right out of the tap. But, that's not been true in Europe for years."

GROWTH IN THE bottled water industry seems assured because pollution is a problem in America and the cost of cleaning up water is becoming more prohibitive, Schlichting said. Also, reverse osmosis techniques are constantly being refined.

The biggest challenge facing the American bottled water industry is financing its growth and developing the market "that we know is out there," Schlichting said.

Historically, bottled water companies are fairly recession-proof, and in fact, they are the highest growth industry in the beverage industry — ahead of soft drinks, beer and wine, he said.

Schlichting's biggest year at Ozarka was 1980, when sales jumped 38 percent. Between 10- and 20 percent growth in dollar volume per year is considered very good in the bottled water industry.

But, bottled water is not immune to the economic ups and downs of its market area. The recession began affecting Ozarka in October 1982, he said. He reduced his staff by 10 people.

Schlichting sees the area economy picking up slightly this spring, "but we think Odessa is lagging a bit behind Midland, although it seems to be turning around, too."

FOR THE IMMEDIATE future, Schlichting doesn't anticipate a lot of capital expenditures

Owning the Ozarka Water Corp. was not Schlichting's goal when he first began work there in the late 1950s — the purchase in January evolved out of the family's situation, but Schlichting says all along, he was the one with the most interest in the business. Through the years, he has driven the delivery trucks, called on sales prospects, done collection work and for a while, was the mechanic for the bottle washing machine.

Ozarka began as an Arkansas company, which first sold its bottled water in Midland in 1935. The water was shipped here by rail from Hot Springs, Ark.

In 1970, Ozarka began "manufacturing" its water by reverse osmosis in Midland and distributing it from both Midland and Odessa. Ozarka purchases its water from the city of Midland.

"The decision was made by the people who owned the spring in Arkansas," Schlichting said. "Some pollution problems were encroaching on the spring and they decided it would be better to manufacture and disperse it at the end points."

Company officials also projected that, based on sales throughout the Southwest, eventually the Arkansas spring would not produce enough water to meet demand.

"They didn't realize the full financial impact of their decision," Schlichting said. "If we were hauling water from there today by rail, it would add at least a dollar to the retail cost of a five gallon bottle."

There are 12 dealers now who manufacture Ozarka water in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Kansas.

Billingsley plans smooth transition, setting sights

Grant Billingsley
New Executive Vice President
Midland Chamber of Commerce

By D.C. SODAMANN
Business Editor

Wednesday Midland will find out just how good a juggler Grant Billingsley is. It's the day the young man moves to the center ring at the Tall City's Chamber of Commerce, in the role of executive vice president. It's the day Billingsley assumes responsibility for keeping all the Chamber's projects "in the air;" a resonsibility now held by Paul Harvel, who recently resigned his chamber post to assume a similar postion at Amarillo.

Billingsley's been understudying the role for years, and the experience has taught him one thing about transitions:

"Everything that's in the air, you don't know about it until it hits the ground," Billingsley said. "We're trying now to find out where all of them are so we can keep them all in the air once he (Harvel) leaves. We're trying to make a transition as opposed to just waking up one morning and its all different."

BILLINGSLEY thinks the impending transition will be a smooth one.

"The organization itself is in excellent structural shape," he said " It's in similar shape to a lot of business; we are affected by ecconomic times here just like everybody, but our program, I think, is more effective because of Paul's having been here. We're going to try to maintain that and build on it," Billingsley said.

"I'm comfortable with the support that's been offered to me, that's been shown in me — in the faith some people have shown in me — I'm comfortable with that behind me, I can make it as smooth as I can."

Billingsley said the decision by the chamber's board of directors to promote him was "satisfying," but not surprising.

"ONE THING I've learned in this business," Billingsley related, "if you put together some of the best business people in a community, if given the opportunity for them to work out the details, they'll basically make the right decision for the community. And for that reason I respect their decisions and try not to be surprised by what they come up with."

Billingsley is already planning ways to leave his mark on Midland.

"I guess the mark that I hope to accomplish will be one of expanding upon the involvement that Paul (Harvel) helped to create," Billingsley said. "Our community is still growing. We're in a position now where we can grow as well or better than we've ever grown before. It's our opportunity to build on it, make it happen in the best way possible."

Billingsley has already set some goals.

"Mainly, one of the things I'm interested in," he said, "is the forward planning that's necessary for the community — and I don't mean one, two or even five years; I'm thinking about 10, 20 and 30 year plans."

"ONE OF MY personal goals would be to create an awareness of the need for long term planning," Billingsley said.

Billingsley, who now handles the chamber's economic development work, won't be swapping all his current responsibilities for those of executive vice president.

"I think economic development and the expansion of job opportunities is the single leading goal of any Chamber of Commerce," he said. "I'm going to be very involved in the economic development function of this organization.

"I'd like to see us diversify more, just like everybody. Talking about diversification is a lot easier than doing it. It's a long term program that's been started, and I'm interested in staying with it."

Billingsley said Midland shouldn't resign itself to waiting for another boom, rather, it should begin planning and building for growth now.

"This community and the leaders and the people of this community are action oriented. They're free enterprise, they're independent, they have a strong work ethic, and those are all factors that make things happen," Billingsley said.

As executive vice president of Midland Chamber of Commerce, Billingsley, will have responsibility for management of the chamber's day-to-day affairs, including supervision of a staff of 12, and administration of a $700,000-budget.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Legislature gave old agency new name, new board

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—Changes in the Texas Industrial Commission — including renaming the agency the Texas Economic Development Commission — were made by the 1983 Legislature as part of its "sunset" review of state agencies.

Under the legislation (SE 105 by Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana), the TIC will become the TEDC on Sept. 1.

The agency's board also is expanded from 12 to 15 members, giving Gov. Mark White additional appointments on that date.

SE 103 also gives White the authority to designate one of the commission members as chairman, instead of having the members do the selecting.

White's office and development interests became involved in arguments during the session over a more extensive overhaul of the panel, with rumors that White was seeking to abolish the agency altogether.

Supporters of TIC argued that would have been a mistake at a time when competition among states to attract new industry is particularly intense.

Former Gov. Bill Clements also attempted to overhaul the TIC to bring it more directly under the conrol of the governor's office as part of a "Department of Commerce," combining several other agencies.

That approach was looked at but rejected by the Legislature.

The bill also expands the list of projects for which industrial revenue bonds may be issued.

As amended, that list includes "development and expansion" of manufacturing, industrial and transportation facilities including ports, airports, mass transportation and parking facilities capable of serving as decentralized storage and distribution centers, and facilities which are related to any of the other facilities named.

The bill also adds language relating designation of "development areas" by cities, in which commercial enterprises are promoted, as well as "blighted areas" already provided for by law.

TIDC members "shall adopt guidelines that describe the kinds of areas that may be considered to be blighted or economically depressed," the bill provides, and cities "shll consider the guidelines" in making "findings and alternations" on such areas.

Members of advisory panels working with the State Treasurer's Office on changes in cash management, abandoned property, depository operations and similar concerns willmeet June 22 with State Treasurer Ann Richards.

An aide to Richards says the people aren't to make any final report as such, but will be part of "a continuing process" to assist the agency in working more efficiently.

The treasurer's office will also study rules and regulations of the State Banking Board to make certain they conform to requirements under the Administrative Procedures Act.

Richards said she wants to study the Banking Board's operations more closely now that the Legislature has completed its regular session.

She criticised the board (on which she serves as one of three voting members) this spring as appearing to be too protective of existing banks in its policy of granting new State bank charters.

State Board of Insurance will hold a hearing at 9 a.m. June 23 to consider proposed changes in the Texas personal auto policy, along with rules, forms, endorsements and incidental rate consequences.

Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office requested the hearing following a study by an advisory committee by SBI to conduct a continuing review of the two-year old policy.

The committee proposed some changes in an attempt to remove "possible ambiguities" from the policy and to broaden some coverages.

The Savings and Loan Department is looking at possible changes in regulations relating to 100 per cent loans by savings and loan associations, citing some possible abuses in the area.

A department representative says some associations have been including various fees and reserves as part of the sales price on real estate loans.

"That is something that may not be a safe practice," the representative reports, and the department is looking at some changes — through the Savings and Loan Section of the Finance Commission — to correct the situation.

Sierra Spring Water Co. has increased its market area in Texas to include Midland, Odessa, Amarillo and Lubbock. The Sacramento-based bottled water company purchased Ozarka Water Company of Amarillo and will begin new operations, known as Alpine Drinking Water, in Odessa to cover the Midland/Odessa market. Sierra Spring Water Co.'s complete product line will be available in more cities than any other bottled water in the states.

Previously, Sierra Springs Water's Texas oeration was confined to San Antonio, Austin, Houston and Corpus Christi.

Here's Why At ClayDesta National Oil & Gas Is Our Business.

Ever since the discovery of gas and crude in the Permian Basin, Midland has attracted countless independent energy pioneers who came here with a hat full of dreams and a pocket full of leases.

And with the kind of hard work (and a little luck) that only oil and gas people can understand, these operators have made our city one of America's great energy centers.

But factors like the economy, government regulations, and imports have changed the face of the oil and gas industry forever. And as a result, the kind of financial backing an oil and gas man needs now is a lot different from what he needed just a few years ago.

Backing the oil and gas industry is a major part of ClayDesta National Bank's business. It makes up the biggest single component of our loans. And because our bank was built by oil and gas men, we know how to handle the special needs of independent operators.

Quick response. Sometimes you've got to have an answer now! Oil men who deal with ClayDesta National will tell you they can usually measure response time in days not months.

Personal attention. Anyoil man's relationship should be one-on-one with his banker, not with a department. And frankly, our oil and gas customers tell us ClayDesta National is the friendliest bank they've ever been in.

Commitment. There aren't many things more important to an oil man than knowing his bank will stand by him. You get a commitment from ClayDesta National, and you've got a commitment.

Asset strength. We opened just a few months ago with the largest capital structure of any bank in West Texas history. Since then our deposit base has grown more than 300%, while our loan-to-deposit ratio is less than 40%. But most importantly, because of our sound relationships with other financial sources, truly no oil and gas deal is too big for ClayDesta National to handle.

Expertise. Not many things are worse than talking to a banker who doesn't understand your business. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks who have full-time oil and gas lenders on staff, ready to work with you.

Positive attitude. Let's be honest. A lot of people think energy loans are a dirty word these days. But those independent oil and gas operators who risked all they had to establish this great industry are still the backbone of it today. And we stand behind 'em. At ClayDesta National Bank, energy lending is OK!

The oil and gas industry has kept this part of Texas looking great for nearly a century.

And at ClayDesta National Bank, we think it's looking better all the time.

Arc announces life-time guaranteed paint job

Arc Truck and Auto Body announces a unique service to the Permian Basin and beyond. Starting this month, a life-time guaranteed paint job will be offered at prices starting from $995. Arc owner Allen Frasier explains, "we're not crazy, just confident."

The life-time guaranteed paint job is serviceable to all automobiles and trucks, both domestic and foreign. The paint employed in the service is a polyglycoat-like paint - polycoated paint.

A car treated with polycoated paint must be waxed and buffed for two years at six month intervals to properly preserve the paint. This insures life-time satisfaction at a minimal cost. An average paint job runs between $700/$800 yet will only last within the west Texas climate for approximately four years. The quality of this polycoated paint job by far outweighs its price.

Arc Truck and Auto Body, located at 2800 W. Francis, was established in Midland in 1977. Sole owner Allen Frasier offers complete service in paint and body work - from the classic automobile to the average American car. Arc specializes in color matching. All paint is mixed on the premises to insure color consistency throughout an automobile or truck.

Arc is proud to welcome recent staff addition Jimmy D. Duke. Jimmy is a full-line automobile adjuster qualified to aid customers in the handling of insurance claims. Jimmy acts as Arc's assistant manager overseeing the staff of six body technicians.

These six qualified craftsmen service domestic and foreign cars weekdays from 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. They work within Midland's largest body shop, which has ample space to house a diesel rig. Arc offers complete body and fender repair, fiberglass repair, framework, windshield crack/chip repair and optimum color matching. Customizing is offered according to the specific request.

Arc Truck is located at 2800 W. Francis in Midland. Any questions regarding truck/auto repair and customizing should be directed to Allen Frasier and staff at 682-9722.

For professional and thorough service call Arc Truck and Auto Body. Your automobile will thank you.

Midland Building Specialties is one business concerned with the conservation of energy. This subsidiary of Mid-West Glass and Mid-West Door & Window offers energy-efficient storm windows, storm doors, steel doors, screens, Levolor mini-blinds and replacement windows.

Midland Building Specialties is currently offering 20% off all replacement windows in stock. Replacement windows are designed to replace windows which have taken a beating due to the West Texas climate. They are available in various styles and colors. Midland Building Specialties stocks Diamond aluminum replacement windows and Marvin and Anderson wooden replacement windows.

Today, wooden replacement windows are designed to be air-tight. These energy-efficient windows alleviate West Texas dust from creeping in and cut air-conditioning costs. Moreover, wooden replacement windows will immediately add beauty to the appearance of your home.

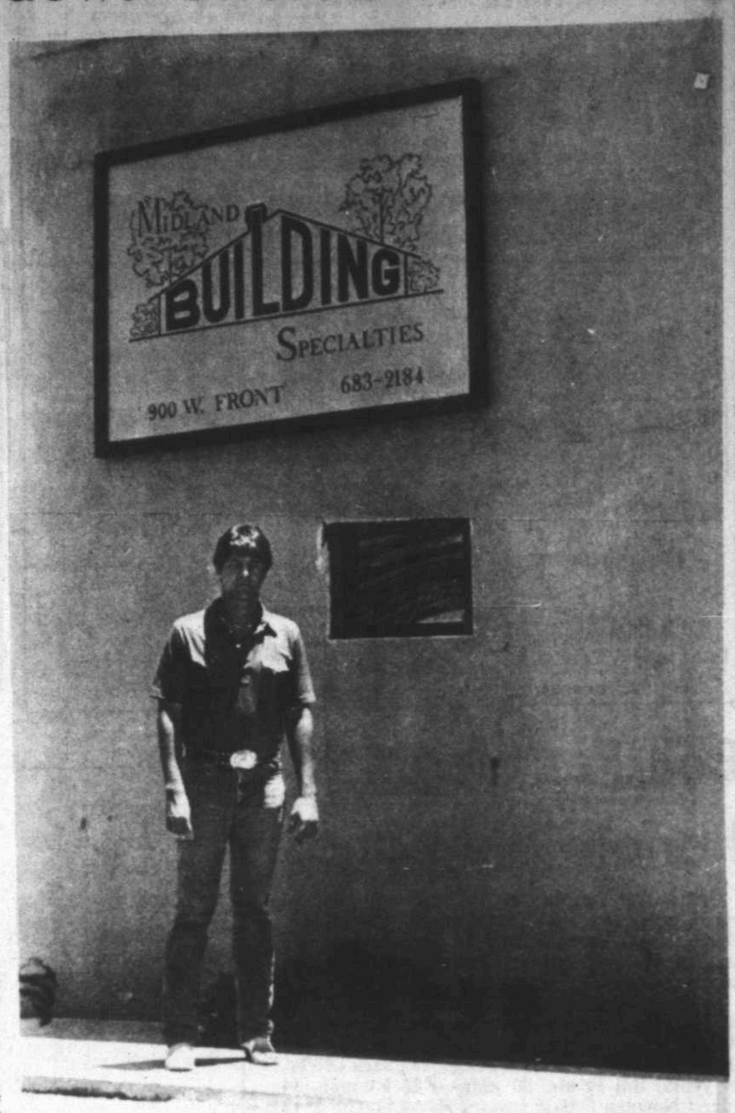

Replacement windows are available in various styles. They are available with either single glass or insulated glass. The option of tinted glass is offered to customers of Midland Building Specialties. Many opt to install tinted glass in windows with a western exposure. This cuts down on the glare and acts to keep the house cool and protected from intense summer sun rays.

Manager Ken Van Hoover says, "you can't beat 'em, they're the best windows available today. They last as long or longer than aluminum replacement windows."

Midland Building Specialties is currently offering a 30% discount on all Levolor mini-blinds to compliment windows of any shape or size. The Levolor mini-blinds are available in over 200 colors to provide a coordinated look to your home both inside and out. These sale prices are honored through July 29, 1983.

Midland Building Specialties is located at 904 West Front in Midland. They are open weekdays from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Any questions regarding replacement windows should be directed to Ken Van Hoover at 563-3031 or 683-2184.

Current drilling activity in the 10 most active states of 1982

Diamond Shamrock passes dioxin testing

Dallas (SWN) — Diamond Shamrock said Thursday it was encouraged by the state of New Jersey's initial off-site testing results near its former Newark Plant site where dioxin was detected last week.

"State officials have stated, and the test results support, that the site presently presents no health or safety threat to the public, and we agree," Dr. James B. Worthington, Diamond Shamrock's director of environmental affairs said.

"While we have not formally seen the results of the state's tests, from what we understand, the state found traces of dioxin in only three of 31 samples taken near the plant site," Dr. Worthington said.

Diamond Shamrock is providing a team of technical personnel and all available data needed to assist the state of New Jersey in ensuring the safety of its former Newark herbicide plant, which was closed nearly 14 years ago. The company is providing to appropriate state officials a site history, site plans, and a list of company employees who worked at the plant, Dr. Worthington said.

"We are moving as rapidly as possible in cooperating with state officials," he added. "Our officials met with state Department of Environmental Protection personnel last Friday. We are in the process of gathering and submitting the necessary data now, and intend to continue to cooperate fully with the state on this matter, as has been our practice for many years."

"As a point of perspective," Dr. Worthington said, "it should be remembered that when this plant was operating, environmental science was in its infancy and the level of scientific and medical knowledge was limited."

'Get Houstonized?'

Out-of-towners build apartments, offices

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Houston developers will be bringing onstream two apartment complexes and two major office buildings in Midland in the next two years.

It seems they think Midland's economy has already scraped bottom and is again on a steady course in its next boom (and bust) cycle.

One developer said last week, after eyeing Midland's situation, that a half-leased office building here was the least of his worries.

People with know-how will continue building quality projects in Texas cities even when the market is flooded, like the 2-year office space supply in Houston, developers say.

"OUR TIMING IS good," said Wei Chiu of the Judwin Companies. His company is building the 16-story, $10 million Independence Plaza next to The Summit on Illinois Avenue at Big Spring.

"We'll have our project coming online in late '84-early '85," Chiu said, "The oil industry is rebounding even now.

"We looked at Midland for over a year — it was the logical extension for (our company) because the prognosis is good for oil," he said.

With 20 percent of the oil in the U.S. coming from the Permian Basin, and many oil companies locating division offices here, these developers expect their offices and apartments will fill up gradually.

UNION TEXAS Petroleum Plaza, a $10 million structure, is being built on North Big Spring under the direction of Coventry Development, Houston. Its developer expects similar success because the project won't be ready for a year.

Chris Minnick, president of Coventry, said "To attract major companies from other areas, Midland must continue to gain office space and housing. Every "down" trend (current occupancy rates of these properties) has an advantage to it — Midland will be ready for more businesses to come in."

Houston's Campbell Housing and Manchester Associates have garnered permits for a two-phase apartment complex at Loop 250 and Manchester, named Countryside, for a total 278 units and about $5 million in construction costs.

"Countryside's success will be dependent on continued growth in Midland — we don't expect it to fill in two or three months," said Wayne Townsend, PR man for Campbell.

Ranchland Apartments, at Sage and Wadley near Ranchland Hills Country Club, will also be built by Campbell — 204 units for $3.8 million. It is a better bet as an investment, Townsend said, "...because it's right near ClayDesta — a hot employment area — and being convenient to the area, it can draw on those employees for residents."

TOWNSEND CALLED THE Midland apartment market 'temporarily overbuilt' and said "The absorption rate (for apartments) is fast enough that these projects should be reasonably successful." This totals nearly $9 million in commitments for the Campbell firm.

Townsend noted "There isn't much new construction now. Midland's absorption rate and the relative economic strength of the city should solve the temporary problems of its apartment industry."

The office structures have one factor on their side that apartments don't: major tenants have already promised to take 20 to 40 percent of the two structures. Union Texas Petroleum, a subsidiary of Allied Corporation, will be inhabiting a little more than half of its' namesake building for Coventry.

Estoril, an independent oil company, will be the major tenant for Independence Plaza — and Estoril gains the premium space at an advantage, selling the downtown land to developer Judwin Companies.

HBF CORP. RECENTLY signed Texaco as major tenant for Heritage Center. Dinero Operating Co. is moving to Dinero Plaza to become its major tenant.

These lead tenants lend their good names to developers — and with a tenant secured in a large part of their building, the other offices begin to get leased.

For apartment complexes, managers say occupancy rates are low — but they continue to pay their bills, advertise lavishly, and offer free trips, contests, and complimentary cable TV, as well as more amenities for "the good life" in Midland.

Advertising lineage at the Reporter-Telegram shows more rentals (apartments, homes, offices) and more housing available — but the newspaper has lost dramatically in help wanted ads and other ads used as economic indicators, such as auto advertising.

Chiu, of the Judwin Companies, said Independence Plaza here "...is one of the biggest investments we have made in any real estate project."

LIKE THE STOCK market, he said, it is often better to keep a steady portfolio of mixed performers than try to take spectacular profits in developing. The Judwin Companies' philosophy is building a quality structure and keeping it, pushing it into profitability.

"Healthy shakeouts" have occurred in development of housing, apartments, and offices, and some companies have gone bankrupt or made 11th-hour financial arrangements. The same shakeouts hit the oil industry in 1982.

Expecting improvement in Midland business cycles, Coventry Development's Chris Minnick said "Every place in Texas is down right now (for developers). You've got to have a boom or bust cycle in business...right now, the oil economy is also coming up from the down side."

TAKING AN OVERVIEW of Midland's economy, Minnick said "A building that's a little over half-leased in Midland is the least of my worries."

He said housing in Midland "...seems good for single-family — but right now the apartment market seems substantially overbuilt."

These developers and others with similar projects will continue Midland's impressive slate of real estate developments — building largely for the near future and not for now. Lead times involved seem to make new buildings come up at the most awkward of times.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

FINANCE CONTINGENCY CLAUSE

You want to buy a home-but want to be sure you can get the necessary financing before going ahead with the purchase. How do you handle a situation like this?

For example, you can agree to purchase the house you want contingent upon you obtaining a specified amount of financing on specified terms. Naturally, the seller must agree to this contingency.

You will normally be asked to meet the terms of the contingency or eliminate it within a relatively short period of time. For instance, the seller may grant you thirty days to obtain a mortgage committment. In the event you can't obtain a mortgage committment, the contingency may require you to decide between purchasing the property for cash or voiding the transaction.

When a purchase agreement contains a mortgage contingency clause, the seller will often grant an additional period of time to close the transaction once the buyer obtains a financing committment.

Cherish education

During recent weeks numerous stories appeared on the Reporter-Telegram's news pages recounting the accomplishments and honors of many high school graduates in Midland and the surrounding area. It has constituted a refreshing change from the report card on America's schools received not long ago from President Reagan and the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

While it's obviously true that the quality of education is slipping on the national level, just the number of local students who annually receive academic scholarships argues that locally Midland schools are doing an outstanding job of providing quality education to our youths.

It's a never-ending process, this thing called education. There is, as there should be, a continual effort to provide better quality education to our students. That's because it is engrained in our heritage that an education is the way to pull oneself up to a better life.

The school bells have ceased ringing for another year. Commencement exercises have been conducted and in many cases plans are being formulated for a tomorrow that likely includes a high level of education. We take this opportunity to extend our congratulations to all the graduates, most particularly to the honor graduates and specifically to the many recipients of academic scholarships in Midland and the area.

Cherish your education and enhance it. No one can take it away.

Why all the fuss?

President Reagan recently rejuggled the membership of the Civil Rights Commission, which is his right. It is an investigative body, without authority, that serves at the pleasure of the president and frequently renders opinions about civil rights abuses.

All Reagan did was to replace three commissioners who believe in forced racial busing and reverse discrimination with three who do not. But by the sound of the screams of protest you would think he had done something improper, or unpatriotic, or in the words of some, even "racist."

Jeffrey Hart of The Hearst Newspapers addressed himself to this phenomenon in a recent column titled, "Phony Civil Rights Uproar." He wrote:

"The reason for the furor, which will be tremendous, is twofold.

"First, liberals in general seem to have become obsessed with the issue of race. The word 'racist' has become a convenient hand grenade to throw at anyone who does not buy the entire liberal social agenda where blacks are concerned, including busing and reverse discrimination.

"And second, a sense of desperation is beginning to set in these days among Democratic politicians. The issues are disappearing out from under them. The economic issue is gone. They are fearful of being tagged as responsible for a disaster in Central America. The nuclear freeze seems to be in political meltdown. But there is always race, and they hope to heat that up as a saving issue, perhaps boosting black voter registration."

There are those who believe in quotas, and forced busing, and those who do not, but neither side deserves to have the racial mud of prejudice thrown at them. President Reagan has openly and honestly let it be known where he stands, and has appointed three open and honest civil rights champions (and Democrats) to the commission. Let us judge him by the record, and his commission by the record it establishes in the coming months.

Another View:

Notifying parents

If parents are notified that a dependent minor is receiving contraceptives, young people are not going to use family planning clinics. And if they don't use the clinics, teenage pregnancy, abortion and illegitimacy will become even greater social problems. That's the argument made by critics of the controversial parental notification rule.

The problem is there's no proof and no way of proving that Planned Parenthood and similar groups help prevent thousands of unwanted pregnancies each year, as they claim. Maybe they do and maybe they don't.

The groups say teenagers are already sexually active before they come to them. But in a recent article in The Washington Times, Gordon Jones, executive director of United Families of America, stated that frequency of sexual intercourse "increases dramatically after the teenagers come to the clinics and receive their 'protection.'" Planned Parenthood's own figures bear this out, Jones said.

The catch is that teenagers are notoriously poor "planners," according to Jones. They forget to take medication, they have irregular menstrual periods — for whatever reason, the planning often goes awry and pregnancy results.

What if teenagers are discouraged from using family planning services? Pregnancies do not necessarily increase, claims Jones. Indeed the opposite may be the case.

He cites a tough parental notification law enacted in Utah in 1981. The immediate and expected result was a sharp drop in the use of clinics. But, unexpectedly, there was also a reduction in teenage pregnancy.

"Rates of pregnancy for girls 15 to 17 fell from 45.7 per thousand in 1980 to 42.1 per thousand in 1981 ... sharply reversing a trend of some years. Abortion rates also fell from 9.1 in 1980 to 7.9 in 1981, per thousand girls," wrote Jones.

Jones acknowledged this is one case and the accumulated data are relatively insignificant. Nonetheless they represent fact, not opinion or speculation or supposition. As such they are a brand new ingredient in the complex stew of teenage morality and publicly financed family planning. And they deserve attention.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

CIA gets weapon to use on critics

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency has always played by its own rules. Nowhere has this been more evident than in the spy agency's guerrilla war with those who write about CIA deeds and misdeeds.

Jack Anderson

Now, a federal judge has given the CIA and its agents a veritable nuclear bomb to drop on anyone who has the temerity to criticize them. Here's the appalling story:

David Atlee Phillips is a litigious former spook who was accused by author Donald Freed of trying to cover up the CIA's alleged advance knowledge of plans to assassinate Chilean exile leader Orlando Letelier. The distinguished former ambassador was blown to bits on September 21, 1976, as he was driving along Embassy Row in Washington, D.C. A young American coworker, Ronni Moffitt, was also killed in the bomb blast.

Phillips filed a multi-million-dollar libel suit against Freed for the accusations contained in his book, "Death in Washington." But Phillips has refused to follow the standard rules of legal discovery and answer questions asked by the defendant's lawyer about CIA activities — which are obviously a vital ingredient of Freed's defense against the libel charge.

The CIA has backed Phillips all the way. The agency even sent a lawyer and a classification expert to Phillips' deposition to make sure he didn't answer any questions that would embarrass the agency. They hauled out the Watergate-tarnished shield of "national security" — and U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Jackson bought their arguments. He ruled that Phillips didn't have to answer questions about his CIA work, even though that's what the libel suit is all about.

It happens that I know something about the legalities involved here. Back in 1975, I brought suit against President Nixon over illegal CIA surveillance of me and my staff.

As part of the discovery process in Anderson vs. Nixon, my attorneys cross-examined former CIA director Richard Helms, who refused to answer several key questions because of "national security." Federal Judge Gerhard A. Gesell allowed him to keep silent.

Then the president's lawyers demanded that I reveal the sources of columns in which I had exposed White House wrongdoing. All but two sources agreed to let me identify them. So I refused to answer two questions, which would have revealed just two sources. In contrast, Helms refused to answer dozens of questions. But the judge compelled me to answer. When I wouldn't do it, he threw out my case.

Now again, an ex-CIA official is refusing to answer questions he doesn't want to. Yet the court lets him proceed with his lawsuit anyway. It is, to say the least, a double standard of jurisprudence.

The decision in the Phillips case has given civil liberties experts the chills. They point out that Judge Jackson's decision, if allowed to stand, would effectively muzzle anyone who writes something the CIA or its former agents don't like. The threat of a libel suit, in which the defense is shackled, is enough to scare off all but the most reckless writers and publishers.

David Sobel, former staff counsel for the Campaign for Political Rights, told my associate John Dillon: "If the principle is established that a plaintiff in a libel suit can refuse to answer questions but still proceed with the suit, then it will be open season on anybody who writes anything about intelligence agencies." That, of course, is precisely what the CIA would like.

Phillips was the logical choice to carry the CIA's banner in this disturbing case. After leaving the CIA in 1975, Phillips founded the Association of Former Intelligence Officers and later a "legal action" group called CHALLENGE. According to Phillips, the purpose of CHALLENGE was "to assist former intelligence persons who have been libeled or slandered."

In a fund-raising letter, Phillips explained his plans this way: "It's time to challenge this malicious treatment in public print and public forums. A test case should be mounted against writers who defame ex-intelligence officers."

According to court testimony, Phillips raised more than $30,000 for such a test — and the first one he brought was his own. He sued Washingtonian Magazine over a story that linked him to presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald. The libel suit was thrown out by a Montgomery County (Md.) judge. Phillips then used his CHALLENGE funds to go after Freed.

Freed had charged in his book that Phillips was head of Latin American operations until his retirement in 1975, and thus was closely tied to DINA, the Chilean secret police, whose chief was later indicted for the Letelier-Moffitt murders.

But when asked about his CIA background by Freed's lawyers, Phillips refused to answer, saying that to describe his work for the agency would violate his secrecy agreement. The CIA gladly backed him in his refusal.

Freed's lawyers asked for a dismissal. One judge did in fact order Phillips to answer details of his CIA work. But then the case was assigned to Judge Jackson, who reversed the earlier order and let Phillips keep mum.

GEORGE F. WILL

Oakland trying to raid Raiders

OAKLAND, Calif. — This City by the City by the Bay feels slighted. Tony Bennett sings about and everybody gushes about San Francisco, and — the last straw — Los Angeles has stolen the Raiders. But Oakland may force the return of its football team, using a legal maneuver of stunning boldness.

George F. Will

The Los Angeles Raiders have pictures of pirates on their helmets, an apt motif for their owner, Al Davis, a buccaneer who worships ardently, but only, those rules that serve him. Although Oakland built a colosseum and filled it for him every game through 13 straight seasons, Davis incited, and then surrendered to, the seduction of Los Angeles, which needed a tenant for its colosseum, the Rams having hightailed it to Anaheim.

The NFL constitution says three-quarters of the league's members must approve a move. But instead of asking, Davis, who has noticed that a court can be found that will do anything, got the NFL rule declared an antitrust violation. The federal court noticed the obvious with a sense of discovery — the obvious fact that professional sports leagues require collaboration to maintain competitive balance. The court allowed Davis to sell himself to Los Angeles, which cannot be sure how many millions of dollars are involved in its subsidies to Davis.

But persons who live by litigation deserve to die by it, and Davis may. Oakland is currently in a state court arguing that its power of eminent domain enables it to acquire the Raiders from Davis for "just compensation." California's Supreme Court has rejected Davis' argument that eminent domain permits only the taking of realty property, not "intangible property." It is odd to call NFL players intangible, but Davis means the web of franchise rights.

The Supreme Court held that no federal or state constitutional provision limits the nature of the property that may be taken by eminent domain, and neither does California's statute empowering municipalities. The most conservative justice wrote the opinion for the court. The chief justice, Rose Bird, the most liberal member, dissented while concurring.

Eminent domain is power that can be used only in furtherance of a legitimate "public use." But that restriction barely restrains.

In 1948, the U.S. Supreme Court rejected the distinction between government's power to acquire corporeal property and power "to resume or extinguish a franchise." In 1923, the court said "public uses" may encompass matters of recreation and enjoyment. (In such a case land was acquired to provide parking now used by Ram fans in Anaheim.)

Oakland makes economic arguments, citing lost jobs and revenues, arguments Los Angeles must respect because Los Angeles bought Davis to resuscitate the economy of its colosseum and environs. Oakland also argues that an intangible but nonetheless vital asset — the city's pride — is linked to the team, and that civic morale is a legitimate concern of urban statecraft.

If professional teams enjoy exemption from antitrust constraints, use talent trained primarily at public expense (in college football), benefit from huge public subsidies (stadiums) and receive guaranteed fortunes from a regulated semi-monopoly (network television), they can hardly claim unconditioned rights of private property. Given traditional judicial deference to municipalities' calculations of what is necessary for "public uses," Oakland may recover the lost Raiders. And Oakland's demonstration of the rewards of audacity may breed other audacities.

Competition between states to lure businesses — by tax breaks and other inducements — is natural to federalism. (Minnesota and South Dakota currently are at daggers drawn.) If Oakland wins, some municipality will try to use eminent domain to acquire, for resale to local ownership, some business attempting to relocate.

Although she felt "forced by the current state of the law" to concur with her court's holding, Chief Justice Bird, supposedly the Trotsky of America's judiciary, expressed deep misgivings. She deplored the "creeping statism" and the drastic invasion of property rights involved in allowing a government (Oakland) to condemn a viable business and sell it to another private party for the sole purpose of preventing relocation. But until there are legislatively imposed restrictions on the use of eminent domain, "there appears to be no ground for judicial intervention."

Businesses differ in the degree to which they are supported by public measures and permeated with the public interest. Legislative restrictions on the use of eminent domain can be related to those differences, and to some criteria for delimiting valid "public uses" of property acquired by eminent domain.

Oakland deserves to win because sports franchises are more subsidized than most businesses, and are peculiarly woven into the fabric of civic identity. But the increasingly blurred line between public and private sectors will be hazy indeed if the use of eminent domain is limited not by legislated restrictions but only by the self-restraint of municipalities inflamed by Oakland's example.

ART BUCHWALD

Two lawyers live better than one!

It may be my imagination but every young person I meet this June is graduating from law school. The question is how many lawyers can the country support? The answer is that nobody really knows.

Art Buchwald

Harlan McCugh, a senior partner with McCugh, McCugh & Moore McCughs, is one of those who believes the United States will never have enough lawyers to serve the needs of the people.

"The reason why I'm so bullish on the law as a profession is that the more lawyers you have the more business you generate for each other. We're the ones who make the problems for other lawyers to solve."

"I'm not too sure I understand."

"Well, there is a famous story about a lawyer in North Dakota who hung up his shingle in town and was starving to death. Then another lawyer moved in and hung up a shingle across the street. Suddenly they were both prospering. The rule of thumb in America is that it takes a minimum of two lawyers on opposite sides of the street before one can make any money."

McCugh continued, "The beauty of the American justice system is that one doesn't have to do anything wrong to have need of a lawyer. All somebody has to do is accuse you of doing something wrong, and then you have to seek legal help to defend yourself. Even if you aren't accused of doing something wrong, it's best to hire a lawyer in advance, just in case somebody might take a gamble that you did."

"Another reason why I'm bullish on the law business is that lawyers are taught to write contracts and legal papers that can only be decoded by other lawyers. So when one lawyer draws up a contract, he or she is automatically assuring a fee for another lawyer who has to read it and see that the person signing it is not getting a raw deal.

"I had an instance not long ago where a lawyer for a motion picture studio sent a one-page contract to a screenwriter I was representing. I took one look at it and became furious. I called up the studio lawyer and said, 'Are you crazy or something? My client could sign this contract today. Where the hell did you study law?'

"The studio lawyer apologized and said he had a paralegal draw up the agreement, and hadn't realized the young man had written it in plain English. He promised to send over the studio's usual 170-page contract right away. As soon as I got it, we started haggling over it for three months, and I was able to charge my client my normal outrageous fee."

"You were smart not to let your client sign the one page contract," I said.

"Another reason I'm bullish on lawyers," McCugh said, "is that almost every family in America has a relative who is a lawyer, and you don't even have to leave your house anymore to find one. Now when a mother calls up her lawyer son from the hospital and says, 'I fell on the sidewalk and broke my hip,' the first question he usually asks her is, 'Were there any witnesses?'

"There aren't enough lawyers in America to handle all the accidents that are happening all around us, much less the insurance companies who are refusing to pay."

"You paint a very rosy picture for young people just coming out of law school," I said.

"I'm not making it up," McCugh told me. "You've got government lawyers working day and night confusing everyone as to what the legislators had on their minds when they passed a law, or repealed one. You have people being poisoned by chemicals, crime is soaring, and the simplest business transaction cannot be consummated without two legal minds in the middle screwing it up. I would say the outlook for the law class of 1983 has never been brighter."

"What a wonderful message. Can I print it?"

"Of course. Why do you ask?"

"I didn't want you to sue me."

Will meaningful reform come by bullet or ballot?

EDITOR'S REPORT

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The war over Central American policy has been heating up in Congress as rebel and regime armies battle it out with mortal gunfire in the scarred, strategic regions on our doorstep. In the escalating arguments in Washington, the essential issue being debated seems to me: Should the administration be more concerned with defeating leftist guerrillas in El Salvador and their supporters in Nicaragua or try crash programs to correct economic ills?

I don't see how you can even attempt meaningful reforms unless outside threats are removed. In this respect, I wholeheartedly endorse President Reagan's program in which he told the country of the need to re-structure the Salvadoran army where we have sent less than 100 specialists. The neighboring Marxist-led Sandinista junta, which has Cuban "advisers" and Soviet-run technicians, keeps infiltrating El Salvador with weapons with the goal of overthrowing its elected government.

It's a weird situation, namely, 1) let's not be overly nasty to the Communists but 2) hold off substantial assistance to beleaguered Salvadorans. So I think that it's time to take a hard look and try to understand what gives in this raindance fancy our legislators perform for the public.

There are many things wrong down in those little Central American republics which we traditionally ignored. Land reform should be a "must," giving farmers the will to fight for their own property. Then, free elections. A little over a year ago El Salvador held free elections under guerrilla guns and threats.

What happened? The people at great personal risk voted resoundingly "no" to the guerrillas. The leftists, having refused to participate in the elections, bided their time. In the last few months their roaming bands have slaughtered peasants, burned villages and the other day tortured captured government soldiers before killing them savagely. Hardly a way to capture minds and hearts, I'd say.

This is the desperado outfit which the Sandinista junta supplies with so many tangled trails out of Nicaragua. Reneging on elections is nothing new to the Marxist-Leninist ideologues who run the Nicaraguan regime. After loftily promising twice free and unfettered elections for Nicaragua since taking power in 1979, masterminds down there just decided "no" again.

One of the glib reasons offered for no elections was the presence of two anti-Sandinista forces, one driving from the northwest down and the other up from the southern jungles. The regime says a national alert is, therefore, essential, so elections are out.

It also tried to strike a super-nationalist pose by charging that three American diplomats conspired to poison or incapacitate the Nicaraguan foreign minister, a self-made mediocrity until the junta gave him notoreity. The Americans were expelled. But the next day, the U.S. responded vigorously by ordering the expulsion of 21 Nicaraguan consular officials and closing all six consulates in this country. The Nicaraguan consul in New Orleans, ironically, has applied for political asylum.

The action is certain to spark partisan debate on the part of some Democrats who already are mumbling about "reckless" reaction by the administration. One of the leading double-domers I have in mind is U.S. Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif. He also happens to be what I call a rhetorical room-clearer, using innuendo but never saying what he means.

Long ago a declared candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, I have a hunch that Sen. Cranston is really trying to build himself up to run for a third six-year term as senator in 1984. His party's own polls show him consistently with 1-to-2 percent national popularity rating. Conversely, straight-from-the-shoulder criticism of administration policies is cause for concern. It comes from Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan. She usually supports the president but sincerely believes that in El Salvador there are similarities with mistakes committed in Vietnam.

Now Mrs. Kassebaum was bred into politics. Her father, Alf Landon, was the Republican presidential nominee in 1936 and had been governor of Kansas. After her election to the Senate, Sen. Kassebaum led a congressional delegation last year to observe the vote in El Salvador. She also helped shape a recent partisan compromise to continue economic aid with reduced military assistance. Sen. Kassebaum is a thoughtful and thorough legislator. She doesn't try to score cheap shots but warned: "Salvadorans must learn to fight their own war."

More in sadness than in a vein of I-told-you-so, she observed: "It's hard to understand why a guerrilla force of some 5,000 troops should be gaining the initiative against more than 20,000 government troops."

Drew Middleton, respected military affairs writer for the New York Times and an old friend of mine, supplied part of the answer when he was in El Salvador some time ago. Drew wrote that the officers were "9-to-5 soldiers," and had to be hauled away from boarding planes for weekends in the capital, San Salvador. Obviously, that must be changed and that's why we have Salvadoran officers and troops being trained in nearby Honduras and some up here in the States.

As this goes to press Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher won big in the British national elections. Her programs were similar to those of President Reagan who was described in Washington as highly encouraged by Mrs. Thatcher's resounding victory.

The prime minister swept to re-election with a 141-seat majority over the combined opposition in a 630-seat House of Commons. It was the worst debacle for the Labor Party since 1922 and it blamed its poor showing on the combined Liberal-Social Democratic Alliance that nearly finished second.

The prime minister, whom I've had the pleasure of interviewing several times, stayed the course. She licked inflation and huge deficit budgets. But with a 13 percent unemployment rate, it says a lot that the voters turned to her. In fact, a Thatcher era has begun in Britain and I look forward to seeing it prosper.

Soil conservation significant issue

By DICK HAGELSTEIN

Dick Hagelstein of Midland is district conservationist for the Soil Conservation Service. A resident of the Tall City for eight years, Hagelstein has been with the Soil Conservation Service 24 years.

Controversial issues always draw more attention. The subject at hand is not controversial. It deals with cold hard fact, and is probably one of the most important issues that faces this nation today. It is, however, taken lightly by a big majority of the people. From that standpoint only is the issue controversial. The question is whether we will or will not coordinate our efforts to conserve our most important natural resources — soil and water.

The history of this great land is a matter of record. From the time this nation came into being, land and water have been exploited. There was plenty of it, and we really did not know how to care for the abundant resources that were available.

I cannot overstate then, at this point, the importance of that relatively thin layer of earth that we call top soil. All life depends on this layer of soil, the thickness of which averages only six inches. Each one of us, whether we are farmers, ranchers, school teachers or truck drivers, depend on the products of the soil. Yet we seem to have little concern for the resources that sustain us and 30 percent of the rest of the world.

We should live and learn from lessons of the past. In Syria today, there are over 100 dead villages in the region between Antioch, Hama and Aleppo. The stand stark on bare rock, the soils completely washed or blown away. The countries in that region, including Iraq, Iran and others, are now completely dependent on oil exports, not agriculture abundance, for their wealth. In light of recent events in the area, it is truly not an enviable position in which to be.

According to some observers, it could never happen in this great nation. However, our complacency on certain other issues has proven very troublesome in the past. It seems that we cannot deal with an issue until it is almost beyond a solution. The problem here is once the resources are gone, the solutions become very limited.

I offer only one alarming statistic, based on the recently completed National Resources Inventory, carried out by the USDA Soil Conservation Service. The study shows that nationwide the average annual soil loss from sheet and rill erosion is in excess of 4 billion tons. If this were concentrated in one area it would mean the removal of all the top soil from four million acres. With this kind of loss, it will take only 100 years to wash away every single acre of cropland being farmed in the United States today. This does not include the devastating wind erosion that plagues the Southern High Plains area including Midland.

The solution is not simple. Farmers and ranchers who have control of the land must have an economic incentive in order to carry out the various conservation practices necessary to maintain productivity and at the same time prevent land damage.

Our efforts in the past have not even been coordinated within USDA agencies. Farm programs have, unwittingly, penalized landowners who were carrying out cropping systems to prevent soil loss. Not until 1983, did a farm program address the issue. The primary intent was to reduce surplus crops such as cotton by diverting a portion of the land from cotton to other conserving use crops. An incentive such as this is a step in the right direction.

The problem is that when administrations change, so do arm and ranch policies. We desperately need a conservation ethic that will address the problem and carry out a nationwide conservation program regardless of the party that is in power. This is where each one can contribute by letting our representatives in Washington know how we feel.

The right of every landowner to do as they wish with their land is part of our heritage. Conservation efforts on these lands in turn have always been on a voluntary basis. The concern here is if corrective measures to control erosion and conserve water are not taken on a voluntary basis, the federal government may take steps to enact some type of land use legislation that will control the use of land in the national interest. This would certainly be a drastic measure and not to anyone's liking.

When you get right down to it, it is incumbent on each one to care for the land whether you own one acre or a thousand. After all, we are only stewards of the land, charged with the responsibility of saving it for future generations. We're a nation that is blessed with soil and water resources that make us one of the richest agricultural countries in the world — and we want to keep it that way.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Street signs

To The Editor:

There have been several recent referrals to our traffic problems here in the Tall City. Some have criticized the one-way streets and others the traffic lights and some have elected to condemn construction in our downtown area.

Having operated motor vehicles on the city streets of hundreds of cities all over this world for the past 25 to 30 years, I have found that the traffic light, with its primitive, electrical, abortive cybernetic attempt at helping mankind weave his way in and out of traffic, is the unwitting pawn in most of our traffic problems.

Let's face it, traffic lights cannot think. Some say the same about light planners. My argument is with the instrument, not its master. Hundreds of hours are lost each year by people sitting at an intersection for no other reason than because a light says they have to. Multiply this by the amount of fuel required to idle in the standard automobile for 30 to 45 seconds over and over for each traffic light and it soon becomes obvious why there are so many foul oathes uttered at the innocent traffic light each day.

Now consider the growing number of unemployed workers in our country. Many of them would gladly return to work if the opportunity presented itself. Some would not. For those who would not work, read and weep. Years ago busy intersections had a uniformed traffic officer to direct traffic and keep it flowing in an orderly manner. Since there soon became too much crime and to few police, this function was delegated to the traffic light. One giant leap backwards! There are still some areas in our computer operated society where man is better than machine! No, I do not advocate placing an officer at each intersection with a whistle in his mouth. You may be getting ahead of me so this is my suggestion.

Take the unemployed or welfare recipient to the intersection, give him a control device to operate the light with and put him on the payroll. Getting him off welfare or unemployment compensation will save the taxpayer millions. In turn, the new light with a brain will stop useless idling at intersections for no reason. The worker has a sense of worth and is contributing to a necessary part of our lives. The lowly traffic light no longer has to endure abusive language and gestures. Traffic now flows smoothly whether the traffic is heavy or light. A man is at the controls and can foresee many problems and avoid them. The training program for such an undertaking would also provide more jobs. The loser? You tell me!

Monday's child

To The Editor:

I realize that most everyone prefers to receive praise rather than criticism, but I believe you will be fair minded enough to print this letter anyway.

When I buy a local paper, the Reporter-Telegram, I like to read a few articles regarding the happenings in Midland, Texas. Leaving out the want-ad and advertising sections in the Monday, June 6, paper, about the only two articles I could find that were of local interest was the annual bridge tourney and the pink and green house. Goodness knows that I have been taking Pepto-Bismol for 20 years because of it, and that is not much news.

I did a little checking on Monday's paper and found articles from 10 different nations, 15 different states, 10 Associated Press releases and few from other Texas cities. We get plenty of that kind of news from the TV a day or so before the paper is printed.

Oh well, we can't have everything. Maybe we will have a more exciting weekend next week. Who knows, they may come up with a new jail plan or maybe the city will tell the taxpayers how much money they spent on the "duck pond" at A and Cuthbert streets, or how many chug holes that they haven't repaired yet. It could be that they would offer a reward for anyone who makes two consecutive street lights on A Street without having to stop.

Something is bound to happen sooner or later so don't give up, readers. It could be that the Community Theatre will produce another high moral, uplifting piece of entertainment at the Yucca. Isn't it nice that Midland can have "something" that is the best in Texas.

Well shucks, that paper only cost me a quarter, so what am I griping about? I have seen worse things happen, because I was born the year the Titanic went down.

To The Editor:

I wish to express my personal appreciation to all Midlanders who have helped to make the Midland Community Theatre production of "The Best Little Whorehouse In Texas" such a success.

I have, of course, seen productions of the show all over the world. And nowhere — on Broadway, in Houston, London, Australia, or in the approximately 360 cities in the United States where the show has toured — have I seen a finer production than Midland's. I was particularly impressed with the excellent imaginative direction and staging accomplished by Don Bachmann and by the hard work of the talented cast.

It meant a great deal to me to come back to my old hometown in such circumstances. I am grateful to the people of Midland who turned out for the show and provided the money to pay for the restoration of the fine old Yucca Theater. It will always be a source of satisfaction that my show could be put to that purpose. The fine work done by all the volunteers who helped with the show, and with the restoration work at the Yucca is sincerely appreciated.

Best Little...

To The Editor:

The current production of the Midland Community Theatre — "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" — certainly was, from an aesthetic and artistic viewpoint, excellent. Larry King, the author told me that the local cast and the entire company was by far the best anywhere, which included Broadway.

The kindest thing I can say about the subject matter of the play was that it was offensive and in exceptionally bad taste. The gutter language, the graphic bodily gyrations of the performers, the erotic nuances which permeated the entire plot somehow demeaned all the participants, none of whom, I am sure, would in actuality, be so crass and blase' in their personal conduct.

Really, what is so sad, the play lionizes the "Madam" as some kind of "earthy" Madonna who is really providing a school for the social betterment of innocent but disadvantaged young ladies. Sadder still, in the name of art, it places the mantle of decency on the sleaziest of all human pursuits.

Sadder yet, the decadence, projected by the play seemed to have already been infused in the mores of the audience, (some of whom brought young children) who chose to give standing ovations after each exhibition of debauchery.

There are some who will be surprised by my "prudery," but I guess after having been engaged for several years in a constant battle with my children to prevent — in some measure — their watching R-rated movies and TV shows, I have become a real Pollyanna.

Graduation gift

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the businessmen of the city who furnished the beautiful Bibles to the graduates last year and also this year.

I think that this is the best gift they could get. With this year being the year of the Bible, I hope the students will cherish them and feel honored to receive them.

My children were students at Midland High School. Thanks again, a concerend Christian and parent.

Midland Memorial Hospital is establishing a chemical dependency unit to assist those who have addiction problems. Ironically, many of the subject addictive substances have valid uses, illustrating again that "it's the abuse, not the use" which creates the problem and enslaves the abuser.

Now, if we could just establish a Money Dependency Unit to help MMH and its management.

America must grow through agricultural dilemma

Bill Modisett

"We stand, in most places on earth, only six inches from desolation, for that is the thickness of the topsoil layer upon which the entire life of the planet depends," writes R. Neil Sampson in his revealing look at soil conservation entitled "Farmland or Wasteland."

The conclusions in Sampson's book are alarming, but he's not an alarmist. He's a conservationist who uses cold, hard facts to weave a not-too-promising picture for food production in the next couple of decades — if changes are not made in how man approaches conservation of the soil.

His book is full of startling statistics on how rapidly valuable farmland is disappearing around us. Sampson notes that every hour of every day this nation loses 220 acres of food-producing farmland to townhouses, shopping centers and coal mines. On top of that, every day 26 square miles of topsoil washes and blows off farmland.

Maybe you're asking yourself, how does that affect me? It affects you because every acre of farmland the United States loses translates into less land for food production. American farmers have kept up with the demand for food in this nation and annually export food to other nations, significantly reducing worldwide hunger. But population of the world is increasing and as it grows, and less farmland is available, cost of food production will increase. The reality, though, is that the nation needs more food production, not less.

Like the companion problems of fewer and fewer farms, increasing costs to farmers and poor prices for farm products, this agricultural dilemma is painting another stroke in the picture of an approaching disaster. That disaster can still be averted, given thoughtful leadership. The trick is deciding to avert the disaster before it's too late.

A number of years ago the area between Pecos and Balmorhea was a productive farming region. Farmers installed irrigation pumps and brought water to the surface from several hundred feet to irrigate the land. Crops grew; the farmers prospered. But that situation didn't last — for a number of reasons. Not least of the factors bringing to an end that farm venture was the escalating cost of energy. It soon became uneconomical to irrigate the land; when the irrigation ceased, the farming ended.

But there was another factor, too. Some of the water pumped to the surface contained salt. The salt ended up drying on the land. As a local farm expert noted, "I doubt if some of that land will ever be used again."

That tragedy is merely one local example of the approaching catastrophe. There is a solution to the dilemma. It's not an easy solution, but it's about the only one in sight. That's to bring about a change in our society's total approach to the farming question to the point at which conservation is stressed. Respect for the land is essential if the land is to give us the increase in food production tomorrow will demand. Bringing about that encouragement from government — policies that applaud conservation, more strenuous efforts to develop world markets for agricultural products, all the while resisting the temptation to "nationalize" the farming industry — will not be an easy task. But the future of American farming and, thus, all Americans rests on that decision.

As the late British philosopher Bertrand Russell once noted, "Undoubtedly the desire for food has been, and still is, one of the main causes of great political events."

What makes a chief executive's office special?

What are the current symbols of status that distinguish the offices of this nation's business leaders?

According to a just completed survey, while many top executive offices still are likely to be in a corner and offer a wide view, a significant number of executives no longer occupy the largest offices in their companies, nor are they always on the top floor.

In a further break with time-honored standards, executives seem to be moving from the traditional Chippendale and Hepplewhite towards modern decor.

However, despite the growing preference for modernity, when it comes to putting computer terminals in their offices, few business leaders opt for one.

These are some of the key findings of a study conducted by the American Society of Interior Designers, the largest group of professional designers in the world, to identify the design features of the offices of top U. S. executives.

The survey was conducted by mail among the chief executive officers of the 500 largest corporations as ranked by Fortune magazine. Completed responses were received from 143 executives — a 29 percent response rate.

The survey showed that while 75 percent of respondents' offices have a wide view and 73 percent are situated in a corner, other traditional symbols of status are less prevalent. For example, fewer executives than previously believed have offices on the top floors of their buildings (61 percent) and even fewer have the largest office in the company (59 percent).

In addition, a surprisingly large number — one third — indicated they prefer modern over traditional decor.

The survey also showed chief executive officers are doing a great deal more to personalize their offices — moving away from institutional standards toward designs that express a certain amount of individuality. To distinguish their offices from others in their companies and add an element of personal style, business leaders are expressing their taste through original artwork (67 percent); custom —built furniture (36 percent); authentic antiques (25 percent) and/or custom carpeting or Oriental rugs (51 percent).

"There was a time not too long ago, when most executives believed that paying attention to the design details of their offices was frivolous," says Martin Elinoff, president of the American Society of Interior Designers.

"They usually delegated the responsibility for such things to their office managers who worked out detailed space and furnishing standards to be applied to the various levels of the corporate hierarchy.

"But today many of the more traditional symbols of power are falling by the wayside and CEOs are using other, more personal and creative items to set themselves apart," he continues.

This new style in the executive suite is best characterized by one of the respondents to the survey, John Young, president and chief executive officer of Hewlett—Packard. His glass—walled, 430—square—foot office, on the second floor of a four —story building, contains custom—built furniture and custom carpeting. The modern decor is punctuated by original paintings and tapestries.

However, according to the survey, Young's office differs from that of other chief executives in one dramatic way: he has had a computer terminal installed for electronic mail and teleconferencing. Surprisingly, only 11 percent of the respondents have computer terminals in their offices.

"Though most of the executives polled are likely to be staunch advocates of the increased use of high technology by American industry, when it comes to putting computer terminals in their own offices, few choose to install one and many of those who do seldom use it," says Elinoff.

— private dining room (13 percent)
— wet bar (12 percent)
— conference table as a desk (12 percent)
— working fireplace (6 percent)
— exercise area (4 percent)

— 72 percent cover their walls with special materials such as paneling or fabric

TXO, Pacific Co. will buy Terra

LOS ANGELES (SWN) — Pacific Lighting Corp., an energy holding company, and Texas Oil & Gas Corp., Dallas, said Thursday they have agreed in principle to buy Terra Resources Inc., an oil and natural gas exploration and production subsidiary of Farmland Industries Inc. of Kansas City, Missouri.

Under the agreement, Pacific Lighting, based in Los Angeles, would buy all the common stock of Terra. Texas Oil & Gas Corp. would then buy a 30 percent interest in the acquired producing properties and undeveloped acreage.

Terra's properties are located in 18 of the "lower 48" states and consist of approximately 600 net producing oil and gas wells and 1.4 million undeveloped leasehold acres.

"This acquisition will greatly expand our existing exploration and production activities," Paul Miller, Pacific Lighting chairman and chief executive officer, said. "We are already involved in recent oil discoveries in the Dutch sector of the North Sea, and exploration activities in Canada and the U.S."

"Terra will continue to be operated from its headquarters in Tulsa," Miller said.

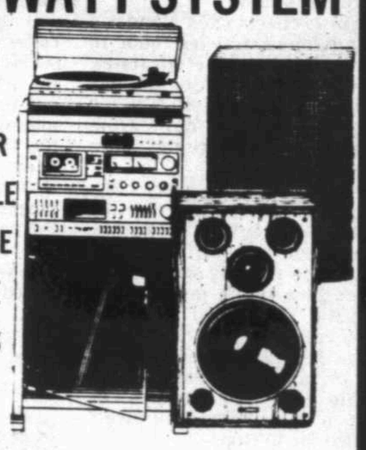

William L. Hutchison, chairman of Texas Oil & Gas, and Forrest E. Hoglund, president and chief executive officer, stated, "This acquisition offers Texas Oil & Gas the opportunity to acquire long-life reserves and undeveloped acreage in areas where we currently operate at an attractive rate of return. We believe there are additional opportunities for further development on the properties acquired."

Pacific Lighting Corp. is a diversified holding company whose principal subsidiary is Southern California Gas Co., a natural gas distribution utility. In addition, Pacific Lighting is involved in interstate pipelines, alternative energy, land development and equipment leasing.
