Hospital survey finds 60 percent substandard

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Sixty percent of 2,750 American hospitals surveyed in the past year have been found substandard by national accrediting officials for failing to meet tough new building safety or medical auditing rules.

Massachusetts General Hospital — teaching hospital for Harvard Medical School — and the University of Chicago Hospital have likewise been given limited accreditation.

Most of these and hundreds of other downgraded hospitals throughout the country failed to meet tighter "life safety" standards demanded by the federal government. Their physical plant deficiencies often included doors, windows and walls that would fail to keep smoke or fire from nearby patients.

Their medical deficiences were mainly failures to keep records properly, or failures in the ways their doctors "audited" each others' performance. Most experts believe medical records and audits reflect the quality of a hospital's care.

Dr. Charles A. Sanders, general director of Boston's famed Massachusetts General Hospital, was among a number of hospital administrators who criticized the new life safety standards as unrealistic and costly.

He said it would cost his hospital, and others like it, "millions of dollars" to remodel and rebuild, though it has not lost a patient to fire in its 156 years and there is "no objective evidence" that the new rules will save lives. He called the standards "often picky regulations" that threatened "to drive (hospital) costs into the stratosphere."

Instead of the two-year accreditation that hospitals cherish as a seal of approval, all these hospitals were given only a one-year accreditation — an accreditation conditional on repairing deficiencies — by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

The joint commission is a cooperative supported by the American Hospital Association, American Medical Association, American College of Surgeons and American College of Physicians. It has tightened both its life safety rules, in response to federal pressure, and its many rules on medical record-keeping and auditing.

Dr. George Graham, the commission's associate director, said in an interview: "One-year accreditation very definitely means we are telling hospitals there are things they must correct or they will not be re-accredited." He defended the tighter rules, saying, "We and the government are both looking at every standard we develop to ask, 'Is it cost effective? Will it do that much good?'"

The joint commission has been judging hospitals since 1918. And with the start of Medicare in the mid-1960s, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare began "deeming" accredited hospitals as automatically "certifiable" for federal payments.

Then senior citizens' groups complained that HEW was letting the private commission approve substandard hospitals. So in 1972, by order of Congress, HEW began its own "validation surveys": spot checks of accredited hospitals conducted at HEW request by state fire marshals and other state officials.

Of 105 accredited hospitals scrutinized in the first such round, 65 were found to have important life safety defects. Of 156 seen in the 1974-75 round, 91 were called deficient.

This — and the writing of a new life-safety fire protection code by the National Fire Protection Association, and pressure from many directions for tougher medical standards — led to the tighter inspections started by the commission a year ago.

If the "voluntary approach" to assuring quality health care fails, such inspections may "become a function of government," Dr. John

Renowned Argentine editor dies

The Los Angeles Times

BUENOS AIRES — Alberto Gainza Paz, whose life-long defense of press freedom in the Western Hemisphere won him an international reputation, died early Monday at the age of 78.

Owner, publisher and editor of La Prensa of Buenos Aires, one of the Spanish-speaking world's most respected newspapers, Gainza Paz had been ill with cancer of the esophagus since August.

In mid-October, he was forced to stop going to his newspaper office daily where he customarily made all important editorial decisions. He lapsed into a coma at his home on Christmas Day and died at 4 a.m. Monday.

It's Israel's move, Egyptian president says

By The Associated Press

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was quoted today as saying that Israel, under the leadership of Prime Minister Menahem Begin, has not yet made the tough decisions or concessions needed to bring about a Middle East peace.

The two leaders held a Christmas summit in Ismailia, Egypt, and came away still divided over the future of Palestinian Arabs living on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip.

"No, Israel has not yet taken the difficult decision," Sadat was quoted by Egyptian newspapers as saying. "Mr. Begin may be of the view that he has made concessions but I see that he has not."

Begin proposed self-rule for the 1.1 million Palestinian Arabs living on the West Bank and Gaza Strip with continued Israeli military presence. Sadat held out for creation of an independent Palestinian state and complete Israeli withdrawal.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli prime minister briefed his cabinet on the Ismailia summit and met with U.S. Ambassador Samuel W. Lewis apparently to report on the talks and current status of the peacemaking effort.

The semiofficial Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram reported that the summit talks did produce agreement on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Sinai Peninsula. Israeli troops still control more than 80 per cent of the 20,000 square mile Egyptian desert peninsula.

The newspaper said Israel wanted to announce the Egyptian-Israeli accord publicly but Sadat refused, saying their summit talks were aimed not at reaching a private agreement but a comprehensive settlement.

In Moscow, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda called the Sadat-Begin summit a failure and said that the only way to achieve an overall Mideast settlement is for all parties and their "allies" to cooperate.

The newspaper claimed the Israeli prime minister presented warmed-over peace proposals. "All gestures by Cairo were viewed in Tel Aviv as a sign of weakness and readiness to make considerable concessions."

Arabic language newspapers in Cairo stressed the positive aspects of the summit talks. But the English-

Calling cards often good for few chuckles

Now, nobody has "seen it all" or ever will.

But sometimes you think you have, especially on those occasions when you are handed some prankster's calling card.

The variations, like the extent of the universe, never cease — or so it would appear.

"Here," someone, oftentimes a friend, will say, "take my card."

Unsuspecting, you reach out in the changing name of courtesy, and take a card.

It bears two words in boldface capital letters: "MY CARD."

Thanks. And you return it.

"Be My Guest: This card entitles you to one night's FREE lodging at the Martin County Jail as a guest of Sheriff Dan Saunders."

U.S. officials believe Russians deploying new mobile missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of uncertainty, U.S. officials now believe that Russia has started deploying a new mobile land-based missile with potential to hit the United States.

In its present form, the Soviet SS-20 missile's estimated 3,000-mile range limits it to targets in Western Europe, China and the Middle East.

But U.S. specialists say its range can be extended easily to 5,500 nautical miles by adding a third rocket stage to the present two stages.

That would make it similar to the SS-16 intercontinental ballistic missile and put the United States within its range.

U.S. military officials are concerned the conversion could tip the nuclear balance against the United States quickly in a time of diplomatic crisis, especially since mobile missile bases would be hard to find and knock out.

Pentagon officials warned earlier about the potential for conversion of the SS-20, but noted then that the missile had not been deployed.

The months of uncertainty and conflicting reports on deployment apparently stemmed from difficulty in locating and identifying the SS-20's movable launch equipment at combat ready positions inside Russia.

However, U.S. military intelligence analysts now say the SS-20 is deployed in eastern Russia.

That suggests the first combat-ready SS-20s, which can carry three nuclear warheads each, are aimed at targets in China, with which Russia has been feuding for years.

Intelligence analysts also believe preparations are under way to deploy mobile missiles in western and central Russia. From western Russia, SS-20s could blanket Western Europe. From central Russia, the missiles could strike targets in the Middle East.

With their 3,000-mile range, the SS-20s are unlikely to be subject to limitations on strategic nuclear weapons now being negotiated by Soviet and U.S. diplomats.

That is because, although they could be converted to long range missiles, SS-20s as now deployed do not have long enough range to strike the United States from Russian soil.

Wreck kills Rankin youth

RANKIN — A 15-year-old Rankinite was killed Monday night just west of here when the motorcycle he was riding and a pickup truck collided.

Tony L. McKenzie was pronounced dead at the scene of the accident by Rankin Justice of the Peace Reba Price shortly before 8 p.m., according to the Department of Public Safety.

McKenzie's motorcycle and a pickup truck driven by Brian McLaughlin of Midkiff collided on Texas 329 .7 miles west of Rankin. Both vehicles were westbound on the highway when the accident occurred, troopers said.

Car customizer Don Bruce works on the roof of a Lincoln, which he will soon suit to the driver who wants more than can be purchased in an auto showroom. His work often adds $20,000 to a Lincoln's $15,000 price tag. (AP Laserphoto)

Car customizer caters to whims

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Don Bruce builds cars for folks who are tired of the mundane world of $15,000 Lincolns.

For a mere $20,000 above and beyond the already-handsome price tag on your next Lincoln, Bruce and his auto wizards will turn the luxury car into a more luxurious vehicle — reminiscent of the Lincolns of yesteryear.

"People have a quirk," says philosopher Bruce. "As soon as you say you can't have it, they say, 'I want it,' particularly if they have the money."

What they can't have now, without the money, is a Lincoln convertible. The last one rolled glamorously out of Detroit in 1948. But Bruce's crew of exacting specialists will add $20 per yard leather and the other niceties of life to make your common Lincoln into a thing of beauty.

Last year in this Fort Worth suburb, Bruce turned out 10 of the expensive rag tops. This year, he hopes to lighten the bank accounts of another 100 or so motorists who yearn for the years of the grand touring car.

Bruce's plan began a couple of years ago when he built a Cadillac station wagon convertible. The Caddy sold for $24,000. Now, he specializes in re-working Lincolns, which are sold through a Dallas dealership.

That first creation was bought by a Santa Monica, Calif., car dealer. The car caused such a commotion on the West Coast the dealer gave a cocktail party and auctioned it off. The buyer shipped it to Saudi Arabia.

"Just as well," he quipped. "It's too far to bring in for servicing."

Bruce doesn't think people buy his creations because they have a burning desire for windblown hair. Instead, he says: "They are buying a special car — something nobody else has."

The $20,000 includes more than simply carving a hole in the roof. The radio speakers are relocated in the rear armrests and every metal gizmo inside is chrome plated. The body is steel reinforced.

Bruce said the automobile has replaced the horse "in man's love of mobility."

And the whole idea is to provide a nicer way to get from Point A to Point B.

"The more luxury in your mobility, the more enjoyable the trip."

Rain clouds forecast

Rain is in the forecast for tonight and Wednesday.

And a dreary sky this morning seemed to more than support National Weather Service predictions for a 20 percent chance of rain tonight and Wednesday.

With or without rain, however, the Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal predicts considerable cloudiness through Wednesday.

The low tonight is expected to be in the mid-30s, while the high Wednesday is expected to be in the upper 50s.

The high Monday was 61 degrees and the overnight low was 37 degrees.

Cloudy skies loomed over much of the Permian Basin this morning, adding a wintry-feeling touch to temperatures which ranged from the mid- to upper-30s.

"It feels like moisture," said an official at the Howard County Sheriff's office.

Cloudy and cool weather was reported in Lamesa, Stanton, Rankin, Crane, Odessa and Andrews. Clear skies were reported at Big Lake, however.

Brisk, cold temperatures again jolted Texans out of their sleep today with many cities in the northeastern third of the state reporting readings in the 20s.

Dallas and Fort Worth had a predawn temperature of 27 degrees under partly cloudy skies while Wichita Falls recorded 25 degrees under cloudy skies.

Former CIA director testifies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former CIA Director William E. Colby testified today that he agrees with new restrictions on the agency's use of journalists abroad but opposes additional limits.

Appearing before the House Intelligence Committee, Colby said, "I strongly recommend that we not establish a blanket prohibition against any relationship whatsoever between American journalists and intelligence services."

New regulations, established by CIA Director Stansfield Turner, prohibit the agency from initiating relationships with journalists in most cases, but Colby said they still allow newsmen to volunteer information about what is going on in a foreign country.

Asked if he agreed with the regulations, Colby said he did. But he added that one danger with the rules is that other groups might also "clamor to be included in this charmed circle" which cannot be approached by the CIA. He did not specify which groups might seek such status.

Colby was asked by Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., who presided at the committee hearing, whether he thought the regulations had "gone about as far as they can go." Again, Colby said he did.

Colby also said he did not think the use of foreign journalists by the CIA should be prohibited. He said other nations make use of them in the United States and added, "I don't believe in unilateral disarmament."

Colby conceded that in a few instances false stories had been planted in the foreign press, but said that in some cases such a story eventually "becomes a real fact."

He gave as an example stories exaggerating the strength of a small resistance group, which then becomes stronger and is able to carry out a successful coup.

"In other words, if you do the job well, it becomes true?" Aspin asked.

"Yes," Colby answered.

"I am not sure that is what we want to have happen," Aspin said.

About 15 men and women wearing red, white and blue eyeglasses and identifying themselves as "Yippees" sat or stood in the hearing room during Colby's testimony. Some of them held signs, reading "Beware of War Criminal" and "There is Blood on that Witness."

Colby testified that intelligence agents doubling as journalists, before such activity was ruled out, were not told by the CIA how to write their news reports.

The former director, who headed the agency from 1973 to 1976, said he handled "CIA employes on intelligence missions abroad who served as real or pretended journalists."

However, Colby did not mention the names of any journalists who cooperated with the CIA or agents who posed as reporters.

"My agents and I had a clear understanding that they did their intelligence work for me, but that the news reports they wrote were a matter between themselves and their editors, and were not given prior clearance or direction by me," Colby told the House Intelligence Committee.

He acknowledged that this understanding "may not have been followed in some isolated instances."

Cards good for chuckle

one of these slick cards, is trying to drum up the nerve to call the sheriff's hand.

Down south, McCamey's Tom Spalding has a different kind of card — about index-card size — which he freely passes out to friends and amiable strangers.

The card, which bears verse after the likeness of a poem, begins with the woes of a spent youth and winds up on the obituary page of a newspaper.

It's cute but not original. Some salesman, possibly in the coffin business, passed it to Spalding, who is late of the undertaking business.

It starts off:

"How do I know that my youth is all spent?

"Well, my get up and go has got up and went."

And the lines of verses end like so:

"Since I've retired from life's competition,

"I busy myself with complete repetition.

"I get up each morning — I dust off my wits,

"Pick up the paper and read the 'Obits.'

"If my name is missing, I know I'm not dead.

"So I eat a good breakfast and go back to bed."

As comforting or dismal as these words may be, they certainly don't fit Spalding. He's as industrious as a West Texas dirt dauber and is as friendly as a moonbeam in running his country neighborhood grocery store in McCamey.

Survey of hospitals finds 60 percent substandard

Affeldt, commission president, recently warned.

If a hospital repeatedly fails to win accreditation, it may also lose approval as a training place for the residents or young doctors, who give much of the medical care, as well as for many other kinds of health workers. And other staff doctors and nurses and technicians will soon begin to look for other places to work.

The results of the commission's zeal actually began showing a few years ago. In 1975 St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington lost its long-standing accreditation.

Until this year, however, two-year accreditations outnumbered limited one-year approvals by three to one. This year, said Graham, 35 percent of all hospitals surveyed have been given one-year approvals because of life safety defects; 20 percent because of "quality assurance" deficiencies (mainly in adequate self-evaluation by medical staffs), and 5 percent for defects in both areas.

Last September Temple University Hospital in Philadelphia was disaccredited, though it is appealing the findings. Massachussetts General Hospital was downgraded on building safety and lack of enough medical audits. Duke University and University of Alabama hospitals, Boston Hospital for Women and Boston City Hospital were also on the new one-year list.

medium in Argentine public life almost from the day it was founded 108 years ago by Gainza Paz's maternal grandfather, Jose C. Paz. The paper quickly gained an international reputation for the thoroughness of its world news coverage.

Gainza Paz was its third editor, succeeding his late uncle, Ezequiel P. Paz, in 1943, and guiding the newspaper to its maximum renown as a champion of freedom of the press.

That defense cost Gainza Paz the temporary loss of La Prensa and forced him into exile during the first regime of Argentina's military dictator, the late Juan D. Peron.

The systematic harassment of the newspaper by Peron and his powerful second wife, Evita, followed by Peron's confiscation of La Prensa in 1951 drew international attention to the repressive nature of the Peron regime.

Gainza Paz escaped arrest by crossing the Rio de La Plata into neighboring Uruguay one night in a friend's small boat. From Uruguay and later from New York, he led a campaign to keep world opinion focused on Peron's excesses.

The newspaper was returned to its rightful owners, which then included Gainza Paz's late mother, Zelmira Paz de Gainza, five months after Peron's overthrow in 1955.

Under Gainza Paz, La Prensa kept an unrelentingly critical editorial eye on the second Peronist regime (1973-76), the only major newspaper in Argentina to do so. Among other stories, La Prensa first broke the news of malfeasance that led to the first of four criminal charges now pending against Peron's third wife and successor in the presidency, Maria Estela Peron.

Beyond cancelling all official advertising in La Prensa, Peron did not overtly harass the newspaper during his second regime. But La Prensa suffered serious financial losses as many private firms, including large U.S. companies based here, stopped advertising in the newspaper, fearing reprisals from Peron.

During his lifetime, Gainza Paz became a personal symbol of the ongoing fight for press freedom in the Western Hemisphere, winning many honors and prizes, including honorary degrees from Columbia and Northwestern universities.

Educated as a lawyer, he never practiced that profession. Instead, he devoted his entire adult life to La Prensa and journalism.

Gainza Paz was influential in the 1950 rejuvenation of the Inter-American Press Association, an organization of North and South American newspaper publishers committed to press freedom, and was a founder of the Argentine Newspaper Editors' Association.

He was an uncompromising friend of the United States from the time of his first visit in 1943. La Prensa often gave editorial backing to U.S. foreign policy initiatives, one of the few Latin American newspapers regularly to do so.

Gainza Paz was a member of the Society of Professional Journalists (Sigma Delta Chi) in the United States and an honorary member of the New York-based Overseas Press Club of America.

In recent years, he despaired for press freedom in Latin America, which has declined steadily since 1963 with the rise in military dictatorships throughout the region.

language Egyptian Gazette said that despite Begin's claim that the talks were successful, it is "obvious for all to see that very little progress has been made because of the continuing inflexibility of Mr. Begin and his strategists."

Man-in-the-street reaction in Egypt also reflected disappointment.

"The Israelis are still insisting on what they want," said taxi driver Saleh Awad. A Suez Canal authority worker in Ismailia added: "Either the Israelis have the intention to make peace in which case we can settle it, or they don't, in which case it is useless."

Sadat and Begin did agree to upgrade the Cairo conference to a ministerial meeting and set up political and military committees.

Great grain robbery

If our military intelligence is on par with economic information concerning Russia, we may be in real danger. In 1972 the Soviets were able to hide the fact that an alleged bumper grain crop was in fact a bust.

Anticipating no purchases of grain by Russia the price of United States grain was depressed and great amounts of cereal were purchased at the expense of our own producers.

Irate farmers called the result "The great Russian grain robbery." Although assured that it could not happen again the growers were not entirely placated and have not forgotten.

Now, fears are growing that the Soviets have again pulled off the same trick. There are reports that millions of tons of grain have been purchased at depressed prices.

Government officials were taken by complete surprise when the Soviet president announced Nov. 2 that the Russian harvest would amount to only 194 million metric tons. This is 10 per cent below the 215 million tons estimated by the CIA and the Agriculture Department and 19 million tons below the Russian goal.

The predictions of a big Russian harvest plus a heavy surplus kept prices of U.S. grains greatly depressed. The Soviet announcement took our officials by complete surprise.

These surprises were not supposed to happen. After the 1972 incident, the Soviet Union and the United States signed an agreement designed to prevent secret purchases of American grain.

The agreement calls for on-the-scene inspection of the major Russian grain producing areas by agricultural agency officials. Soviet crops are monitored via satellites by the CIA. The procedures were set up to keep the U.S. advised of Russian crop prospects.

When the 1972 purchases were divulged, grain prices soared to record highs. Consumers paid through the nose and grain farmers felt they had been cheated as they had already sold on a depressed market.

Our government officials now have expressed belief that surreptitious grain purchases have been made through third parties who are not required to report their trading. It is speculated that enough grain has been purchased this way to offset much of the Soviet short-fall in production.

If all this proves true, how much stock can we take true, in any agreement made with the Soviets? And the answer comes back: "none."

And where was the CIA? The agency certainly fell down on the job here.

Prisoner-swap lesson

We don't have to be devoid of compassion to recognize that the prisoner exchange with Mexico is not, after all, a reeneactment of the return of U.S. prisoners-of-war from Vietnam.

Complaints from friends and relatives of the first contingent of Americans returned to the Metropolitan Correctional Center in San Diego, Calif., focused on inconvenience and delay in efforts to visit and talk to the prisoners.

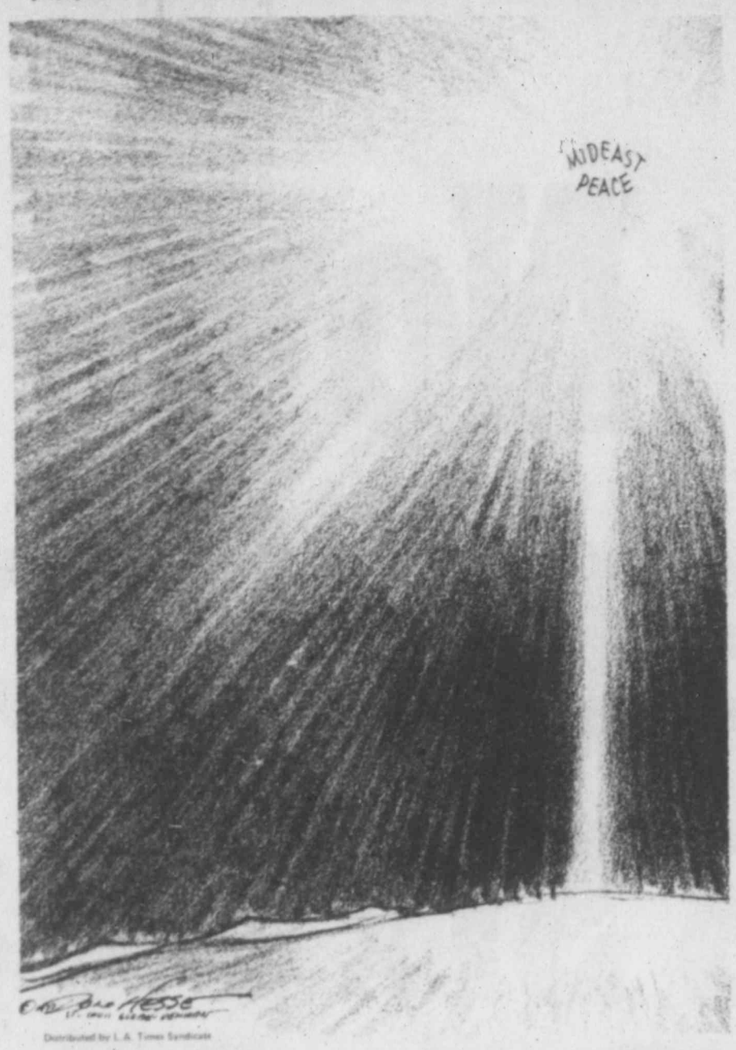

In the emotionalism of the moment, it was too easy, perhaps, to forget that the returnees are prisoners, found guilty of breaking the laws of a friendly nation and sentenced to prison terms. They have not been pardoned. They have been returned to the United States under an exchange treaty for continuation or adjustment of their sentences.

As it happens, most of the early arrivals were scheduled for early release under conditions established by federal authorities. It remains uncertain what constitutional questions may be stirred up by later arrivals when continued confinement may be indicated, but no U.S. law has been violated.

The grim stories related of the treatment suffered in Mexican jails and prisons stir sympathy, of course. The stories stimulated the treaty effort.

But the tales of horror should serve merely as a warning to others tempted to risk violation of laws abroad. They cannot obscure the fact that the prisoners in most cases created their own plight.

Carter's people unhappy at not being invited out

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — These are desperate times for newspaper people in Washington. The most we can come up with around the holiday season is that the Carter people refuse to come out of the closet and mingle with the Establishment in this town. The few times they have come out, they've made social faux pas of such proportions that their remarks cannot be printed in a family newspaper.

There are two sides to every story and while, under ordinary circumstances, it is not the job of a paper to print both I think the Carter people should be heard.

I received a telephone call last week from one of President Carter's speech writers who said, "The reason we never get out in Washington is that we've never been invited anywhere."

"I find that hard to believe."

"It's true," he insisted. "The only people that ever get invited to an Establishment affair are Ham Jordan and Jody Powell. I don't think the Carter Administration should be judged on the table manners of these two people when there are over 500 of us working in the White House who are dying to go to a Georgetown salon."

"But would you be up to mingling with the Washington Establishment?" I asked him.

"You bet I am. My wife and I have been studying etiquette since we came to town. We have pictures of Evans and Novak and Joe Kraft, and Clark Clifford and Averell Harriman and Liz Taylor on our walls, just so we can memorize their faces in case we ever run into them. But so far we haven't got the call."

"What about clothes? Do you have the right clothes for an Establishment party?" I asked.

"The best. We took all our money from the last White House pay raise and invested it in every type of outfit you can think of. We're even prepared to go fox-hunting if the right invitation comes along."

"And still you've struck out?" I said.

"I would say so. We only got four Christmas cards this year and three were from merchants we do business with."

"And the fourth?"

"It was from President Carter."

"Well, you certainly can't consider him Establishment," I told my friend. "It seems to me that except for Ham and Jody everyone in the White House has kept such a low profile that you're uninvitable."

"What exactly does that mean?" he wanted to know.

"If you were invited to one of our soirees no one there would know who you were, and you'd just be taking up a place that could be filled by someone from the Ford Administration."

"How are we going to get known if no one ever invites us out?" he said angrily.

"Don't get upset," I told him. "It's not your fault. But you see Washington operates socially on the revolving door principle. You go into the White House and then when your man loses, you go into a law firm or become a lobbyist, and then after four or eight years you're back in the government again. That's how it works.

"When Joe Califano worked for President Johnson no one ever heard of him and he was never invited anywhere. Then he went into law practice, and finally he came back as secretary of HEW, and now he's very much in demand. But it took 10 years for him to make it in this town.

"You can't expect to break bread with Joe Alsop just because you've been working in the White House for a year."

"All right," he said. "Then why do they keep writing that we Carter people are unsociable?"

"What would you write if you had a deadline and had to get to the British Embassy for Christmas carols and egg nog by eight o'clock?"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

A smudge on Sen. Stennis

By JACK ANDERSON and LESS WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — By the Senate's lights, the dignified and decent Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., is a model of personal integrity. He has always been guided by conscience and duty in his dealings with his colleagues.

It has been one of his basic convictions however, that the government, like the moon, should have its hidden side. Too much light on its ugly side, he fiercely believes, can shake public confidence in government.

Other senators looked upon him, therefore, years ego, as the ideal choice to head the first Senate Ethics Committee. He operated the committee on two assumptions, which he held to be inmutable — (1) that the inner workings of the Senate should be largely shielded from the public, and (2) that senators are distinct from lesser human beings.

"A Senator is extended an extraordinary measure of trust and confidence not given to ordinary members of society," he proclaimed. Thus, senators were required to report their outside income and assets, but the information was submitted in sealed envelopes that can be opened only by the Senate Ethics Committee.

Some senators are exemplary public servants, devoted to the national welfare, whose contributions will never be adequately appreciated. But others are irresponsible opportunists who slide through their careers without ever making any real contributions. The secrecy obscuring the unheralded dedication of the former also covers up the dereliction of the latter.

Sen. Stennis has always allowed the derelicts of the Senate to hide in the shadow of his own formidable reputation. Now we have discovered a slight smudge on the Stennis image, which he characteristically has sought to cover up.

As Senate Armed Services chairman, the 76-year-old Stennis wields tremendous power inside the Pentagon. He has used this influence to bring subtle pressure on the Navy to award a fat, $21 million contract to the Beech Aircraft Corp.

The discreet pressure was applied in the form of two private letters to the Pentagon, so carefully worded that Beech is not mentioned by name. But the implication is quite clear that Stennis wanted the Beech firm to supply the Navy with 22 light aircraft called the CTX.

By an interesting coincidence, a former Stennis aide named Bill Spell has now turned up as a paid consultant to Beech Aircraft. He handled the Washington end of the Navy contract for his company.

Both Stennis and Spell told us that the senator was acting to keep defense costs down. The Beech aircraft is less expensive, they explained, because it is similar to a plane already rolling off the production line for the Army and Air Force.

These contracts also wound up unerringly with Beech. When the Navy started its negotiations, Stennis insisted that the Navy should purchase the same type of plane as the other two services were already flying. Without mentioning names, this could be only the Beech aircraft.

As it happened, the Senate didn't consider the 22 planes particularly vital to the national defense. It took the strong insistence of Stennis to get the authorization in the first place. The Navy then prepared to seek competitive bids for the CTX, Pentagon sources told our associate Marc Smolonsky.

But Stennis fired off two private letters — one on Dec. 15, 1976, to then-Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, the next on Dec. 16, 1976, to Capt. R. L. Brace of the Naval Air Systems Command. Both letters urged that the Navy purchase aircraft already in the military inventory.

"If the Navy requirements for a utility transport aircraft are so substantially different from the Air Force and Army that a different aircraft is required," wrote Stennis, "I request that you take no action leading to purchase until the Senate Armed Services Committee has reviewed the matter."

By Washington standards, this language can only be defined as pressure on the Navy to buy the 22 planes from Beech, without bothering to seek bids.

Spell refused to discuss his conversations with Stennis about the CTX. But in a lengthy interview, he told us Congress never intended that the Navy procure the CTX through competitive bidding.

Apparently, this was not the understanding of Sens. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., and Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who called for bids. They even raised the question on the Senate floor.

"I ask the distinguished members of the Armed Services Committee..." spoke up Metzentaum, "if it was the intent of the conference report that the CTX be competitively procured?"

"Yes," said Stennis. "The senator is certainly correct."

"To me," broke in Goldwater, "it is competitive bidding. But I want to pin it down absolutely."

Stennis quickly assured his colleague: "There is no doubt that it is an open bid for any manufacturer who can meet these requirements."

The messy Canal Zone story: Too late to rectify

Nick Thimmesch

PANAMA CITY — Uncle Sam, who really isn't a bad fellow, has botched the Panama Canal problem.

Sure, the United States gets deserved high marks for its management and operation of the canal, to say nothing of the gumption, courage and hard work it took to build it.

But Uncle Sam — that's us — wasn't foresighted enough to learn to live successfully on the Isthmus of Panama. So now, alas, we are embroiled in an increasingly messy debate over the new Panama Canal treaties.

When I arrived at Panama City airport recently, there was a flare-up between U.S. citizens, who apparently work in the Canal Zone, and a number of arrogant, seemingly privileged men, apparently Latin, who had rudely pushed to the head of the line at passport control.

One young American denounced all Panamanians (forgetting that the arrogant louts had offended Panamanians and Americans alike) and cried out, "I don't care if the damned Torrijos police throw me in jail. I've been there before."

An older American couple I met on the plane coming home were quiet but firm in their unhappiness with Torrijos' Panama and the treaties.

This man and his wife, both in their 50s, said they worked in the Canal Zone for nearly 30 years and were happy to retire. They confided that neither had learned Spanish in all those years, made few trips into Panama, other than to Panama City, and admitted not knowing much about its culture and people.

They didn't feel bad about this, because for three decades they believed they had an infallible right to live on that solid American territory, the 10-mile-wide Canal Zone which bisects Panama. They were skeptical that the Panamanians could ever learn to operate the canal with U.S. proficiency and saw a punk future for it because of the treaties.

Oh, that some farsighted U.S. policy maker, back in 1920, has realized that for Uncle Sam to exist in the midst of Latin people, he must learn their language and culture. But it's too late now, so slick lawyers have written subtle treaties, and the U.S. establishment tries to ram them through the U.S. Senate, hoping for minimal fuss.

"We stole it fair and square," Sen. S.I. Hayakawa once wryly remarked on the 1903 acquisition. Now smooth-talking U.S. officials and senators are engaged in a low-key, assured sell of a treaty, which is really a 1977 version of the same steal.

There is not space here to back this claim of mine, but right-wingers must be fighting the proposed treaties more out of an emotional need to rally behind a cause than from any rational knowledge that Uncle Sam is giving up control over his big ditch of lore and legend. In a crunch, American power could overwhelm Panama, or any other force claiming the canal, in the year 1978 or 2000. Treaties are made of paper, a highly flammable material.

One of the most interesting conversations I had in Panama was with a bright young Latin lawyer, hardly a leftist, who argued that to scrutinize the treaties is to learn that Uncle Sam gets the best of the bargain.

It is significant that a long list of Wall Street law firms, bankers and corporation moguls sponsored an ad in the New York Times in strong support of the treaties. The establishment gang around the Council on Foreign Relations, and other high-domed groups that brought you events like the Vietnam war, also thump for ratification.

Wall Street and the Establishment would give up neither control of the canal nor their investment (estimated at $12 billion) in Panama. The payoff to Omar Torrijos, the swaggering general who runs Panama, is some $345 million in military and economic assistance. He needs it because he overpromised to his Pamanians.

Some arguments advanced for ratification are smug but specious. One is that Panamanians would blow up the canal and conduct bloody riots (Torrijos once muttered darkly, "Vietnam!") if the treaties aren't ratified. Well, the Panamanians might riot, but their history hardly points to any inclination to mix it up with the substantial U.S. military force in the Canal Zone.

Another sophistry is that if the treaties aren't ratified, other Latin American states will hate and disrespect us even more than they do now. Well, I have talked to many non-official Latin Americans, businessmen, technocrats and students, and the consensus is that they want the canal run well, and that the United States is certainly doing that. Latin control would be nice, but competency is more important. Since when do Latins admire weakness anyway?

Treaty backers like to sweep incongruities under the rug. The Carter Administration prods one-man rule in Nicaragua, but alibis for Torrijos, though the Nicaraguan president was elected and allows political opposition, and the Panamanian wasn't elected (he took office by force) and legitimizes only the Communists. Tsk, tsk.

Moreover, in our fishbowl democracy, Sen. Robert Griffin asked whether the American people should be allowed to vote on the treaties, and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, a Wall Street lawyer, answered absolutely not. Tsk, tsk.

Finally, wasn't it a bit much for the president to stage a grand dinner (shoulder-holsters optional) for Latin "leaders" after the treaty signing, when U.S. senators hadn't even read them yet? My, oh, my.

Still, I argue it is too late for Uncle Sam to change the situation in Panama. The world and the United States will go on, if the treaties are ratified. We aren't giving up much. Besides, the canal might be a white elephant in another generation.

Open Letter to Researchers at the Rat Place:

Enough is enough.

You people have succeeded in taking every bit of joy out of my life under the guise of sparing me disease and prolonging my life. For this I am appreciative.

Our relationship existed solely on blind trust. When you told me research rats succumbed from coffee, diet pills, loud noises, glue from envelopes, snow, I stopped drinking, dieting, listening, writing home and falling face down in the cold, wet stuff.

When you told me your rats expired from saccharine, cyclamates, X-rays, booze, cigarettes and too much sun, I swore off all those things.

Now I must insist that you arrange a meeting between a bleached blond rat with lipstick on her teeth and myself or it's all over.

Frankly, I'm beginning to feel like I'm in a Mel Brooks movie and Marty Feldman just issued a story to a newspaper warning, "Two bleached blond rats died mysteriously today on two little bar stools in Transylvania. Dom DeLuise, a bungling researcher, says their deaths could be the result of hair bleach—however, their sugar-free root beer and their rouge containing No. 2 red dye are under investigation."

I am not the only one who is becoming suspicious of anonymous rats. We sit around in groups and ponder where are the people who make their little cigarettes? Their little cocktail glasses? Who does their makeup? Sews their little beach towels?

And if no one has questioned it — they should — why is it only the wonderful things of life are hazardous? Why don't rats succumb to mince pie? (I hate mince pie.) Or rhubarb? Or working Saturdays? Or seeing your dentist twice a year? Or sweat? Or fresh-cut grass or castor oil?

I'm sorry to be a doubter, but you researchers have to understand there's a lot at stake here — my ultimate will to live.

I respectfully request that at some date in the near future you arrange a meeting between your research rats and myself. Even if they have expired, but have a smile on their faces and look terrific . . . that's good enough for me.

DEAR ABBY

Do not allow past to dictate the future

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for six years to a man who has some kind of hold on me and I can't shake it. I loved him once, but all my love for him is gone now. I've left him 11 times but he always begs me to come back and says if I don't he'll commit suicide, so I go back to him. We have two kids who are practically being raised by my mother because my husband refuses to work steady. He has a bad drinking problem, too. I can't count the places we've been kicked out of because we couldn't pay the rent. We can't get credit anyplace.

When he met me I was really no good. I was a 16-year-old prostitute with a drug habit. He keeps reminding me that he took me out of the gutter so I owe him my life.

Can you help me?—TRAPPED

DEAR TRAPPED: No. But you can help yourself. You need counseling, and so does your husband. There are mental health clinics in your area that offer excellent help, and it's free for those without funds. If your husband refuses to go, go without him. Don't let your past dictate your future. You need a better self-image, and the fact that you wrote to me indicates that you're looking for answers, which is half the battle. Get going and good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Why is the bride expected to write all the thank-you notes for the wedding gifts?

Most of the gifts are for the home—to be shared by the couple. So assuming the husband isn't illiterate, why shouldn't he write half the notes?—JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: Nowhere is it written that the bride should write all the thank-you notes for the wedding gifts.

Acknowledging wedding gifts should be a joint venture (even though some grooms may tear the joint apart at the suggestion).

DEAR ABBY: I recently went to the hospital for some exploratory surgery as I was concerned about the possibility of cancer. Two neighbor women, whom I do not know very well, came to visit me there. They took turns asking prying questions as to the nature of my illness, whether more surgery would be necessary, etc. I tried to fend off these questions as best I could.

After they left, a member of a fraternal group to which I belong called on me. The same line of questioning was pursued. Only this person spent nearly an hour telling me about "similar cases" in which all the patients died—of cancer. I was depressed beyond words. Why do people visit the sick and leave them sicker?—DEPRESSED

DEAR DEPRESSED: Because common sense is so uncommon. My advice on bedside manners: Make your visit short, sweet and cheerful. Leave the coughs and the kids at home. Ask no questions. If you can't do that, stay away.

A new look taken of American family

AUSTIN, — For several years popular wisdom has held that the family as an American institution is dying. Recent studies, however, show just the opposite.

"I would have to agree that the family is changing," concedes Dr. Linda MacNeilage, counseling coordinator at the University's Counseling-Psychological Services Center, "but I don't think it is dying or disintegrating. I think essentially what we are seeing is that there are changes in our society which have repercussions for family life."

Dr. Norval Glenn, UT professor of sociology, pinpoints one of the visible changes in the fabric of American family life when he observes that "marital instability has gone up very sharply."

"It's pretty easy to move in and out of marriage relationships today," agrees Dr. Guy Shuttlesworth, associate professor in UT's Graduate School of Social Work.

One pressure working to diminish family cohesiveness, says Dr. Shuttlesworth, is that "we put an awful lot of attention today on things like companionship, love, satisfaction, happiness—things that are very difficult to define even under optimum circumstances."

Another trend the panelists point to as significant in explaining the rising divorce rate is the current emphasis on self-realization as a primary personal goal.

"There is far more of a focus on self-awareness and self-assertion," Dr. MacNeilage says. "People are less willing to think in terms of a model that means that they must sacrifice for the family."

While concurring with her analysis, Dr. Glenn points out the cyclical nature of social attitudes. "I think we can predict with a fair degree of confidence that there will be some kind of reaction against that (emphasis on self) and a greater emphasis on obligation and responsibility," he asserts.

No one of the panelists believes the current high divorce rate is an accurate gauge of the quality of family life.

In fact, Dr. Glenn states, the family system may actually be weaker in societies where the divorce rate is low because marriage represents a purely formal contractual agreement, not based on lasting emotional ties.

Americans today are less willing to stay in unsatisfactory marriages, he explains, but that "doesn't mean the typical marriage in existence at any one point in time is any less satisfactory than was the case 10 or 15 years ago."

Dr. MacNeilage adds:

"Americans are essentially a society who value change and value flexibility and experimentation, and I think that flexibility and experimentation leave people to try out new ways of living."

Dr. Glenn deflates the notion that young people today are not marrying, although he says in many cases they are marrying at older ages than did earlier generations. Neither has cohabitation replaced marriage.

"Eventually, the people who live with someone of the opposite sex for a period of months or years end up marrying someone else.

The supposed loss of extended family ties as a result of increased mobility also draws the panelists' scrutiny.

"One thing family experts have come to realize in the last few years is that the cohesive extended family hasn't existed in Western society for several centures," Dr. Glenn states. "And it didn't disintegrate under the impact of industrialization. It wasn't there to begin with. So what we have in the comtemporary U.S. isn't that different from what we have had in the past."

In truth, Dr. Shuttlesworth maintains, the contact between persons more than one generation removed, such as children and their grandparents, actually may have increased in recent years.

The primary reason for that phenomenon, he explains, is quite simply that in the past, fewer people survived to know their grandchildren.

"That's kind of a luxury of the present," he observes.

That so-called luxury also may pose problems for some family members, particularly the middle-aged generations, he continues:

"Part of the stress on the family has been trying to deal with these sets of responsibilities, both financially and emotionally."

Dr. Shuttlesworth notes that recent data shows that 90 percent of old people have weekly contact with one or more of their children.

Judge sets $250,000 bond on man who hijacked plane

ATLANTA (AP) — A federal magistrate set bond at $250,000 today for an Austrian-born man charged with air piracy in the Christmas Day hijacking of an Eastern Airlines jet.

Federal Magistrate Owen Forrester set a Jan. 3 preliminary hearing for Nikolai Wischnewsky, 32, who was accused of commandeering the DC-9 about 50 miles from Atlanta on Sunday using a toy pistol and a portable radio taped to resemble a bomb.

Public defender Bruce Kirwin asked that Wischnewsky, a landscaper from Pearl River, N.Y., be given a thorough psychiatric examination. Forrester said he would be receptive to a motion for such an examination later.

Wischnewsky boarded the Miami-Indianapolis flight in Jacksonville, Fla., FBI agents said.

Agents said the hijacker passed a flight attendant a note demanding that the plane fly to Cuba.

Traffic helicopter crashes, kills two

By MICHAEL McPHEE

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — A radio station traffic helicopter trying to make an emergency landing slammed through the roof of an apartment building today and exploded, killing two persons and injuring four others, authorities said.

Two bodies burned beyond recognition were found near the wreckage of the helicopter, which started a fire where it came to rest on the second floor of the three-story, 23-unit red brick building.

On board the helicopter were Henry "Chip" Whitmore, 29, of Boston, reporter for station WEEI, and pilot Richard "Red" Banks, 50, of Marlboro.

William Amaral, 30, a shipyard worker who lives in the building, said, "I heard a loud bang. I ran into the hallway, and people were running through the building yelling 'fire!'"

Quincy Fire Chief Edward F. Barry said the charred bodies, one on top of the other, were found outside the burned tubular structure of the helicopter in a second-floor bedroom. He said he could not be certain they were the passenger and pilot, "but it appears that they are because the helicopter is the only thing in the room."

Persons in the building who were hurt in the crash were identified as Julia Verga, 62; Ronald Michelson, 28, and his wife, Lynn, 26, and their 10week-old daughter, Dawn.

The three adults were all hospitalized with burns over half their bodies. The baby was treated and released.

Ned Foster, a helicopter traffic reporter for station WBZ, witnessed the crash.

"It went into a dive and crashed through the roof of the apartment building," Foster said. "Then it exploded on impact."

Mechanic who rammed car into Klan rally escapes jail

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — Buddy Cochran, the truck mechanic convicted of ramming a car into a Ku Klux Klan rally in President Carter's hometown of Plains, escaped with another inmate from the Sumter County jail today, Sheriff Randy Howard reported.

The sheriff said Cochran, 30, and the other inmate, tentatively identified as Michael Proctor, sawed the lock to their cell door and ran out of the jail about 7:45 a.m.

Initial reports said they escaped in an automobile, but sheriff's officers said they were searching nearby woods where they were believed to be hiding.

The sheriff said that Cochran's wife, Mary Sue, who had visited the jail Monday, was taken into custody at a bus station in Americus shortly after the break.

Howard said Mrs. Cochran was being held for questioning and had not been charged.

Cochran, from Americus, was convicted Oct. 25 of eight counts of aggravated assault in the July 2 incident which injured 32 persons, many of them reporters covering the KKK rally.

The trial was highlighted by testimony from Carter's mother, Lillian, who said she was watching part of the rally from a distance but left when trouble broke out.

Cochran was sentenced on Nov. 17 to 12 years in prison and 8 additional years on probation.

His attorney argued during the trial that Cochran suffered from temporary insanity and he was given a psychiatric examination. However, the test results said that Cochran suffered no mental disorders and that he was "functioning in a normal range of intelligence functioning."

District Attorney Claude A. Morris argued that Cochran was not insane but drunk.

Items taken from home

A sliding glass door was broken at the residence, the report said.

Beverly Nicholson, Home Economist for Texas Electric, is trained and experienced in the efficient use of electric appliances.

"For every way to use electricity in the kitchen, there's a way to use it more efficiently."

"Keeping your heating and cooling costs down are the biggest ways to save electricity, but there are lots of little ways, too.

Part of my job is finding the most economical way to use your kitchen appliances. Here are some ideas I've found useful:

Use flat-bottomed pans. The flatter the pan the better its contact with the cooking unit. A tight-fitting lid on your pan will reduce cooking time.

Use less water. By cooking vegetables with the least amount of water possible, you'll improve their appearance, nutritive value, and save electricity.

Reduce cooking time. Thaw meats before cooking them. This will save cooking time and energy.

Use your oven timer. Opening your oven door unnecessarily causes heat loss and extended cooking time.

Middle East peace talks remain alive

The Washington Post

CAIRO — The Christmas summit between Egypt and Israel has failed to produce a sudden breakthrough toward peace, but the negotiating process remains very much alive, and with it the chance for compromises and achievements.

Perhaps it was inevitable that the world's soaring hopes, sent aloft in large degree by the participants themselves, would come to earth when the tough issues were confronted. The impact was a jarring thud, but not a crash. The opinion among many diplomats was that the return to reality need not be disabling.

The most serious question is whether President

Analysis

Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menahem Begin can sustain the popular and political backing for important steps in the face of increased disappointment and disagreement in their home constituencies.

As reality sets in, so does controversy. A main asset of Sadat's "television shock diplomacy" was its ability to overwhelm the critics and to mobilize an outpouring of public support.

Sadat and Begin did not seek to disguise their disagreement over the key issue of the West Bank and the Palestinian question in Monday's news conference in Ismailia. By placing the issue on the line in public, pressures for compromise as well as counterpressures against compromise will be generated in Israel, Egypt and elsewhere in the Arab world.

A fact of great importance is that Sadat refused to buy a vague resolution of the Palestinian question. Thus he showed his determination, at this stage, not to make the "separate peace" with Israel that is the hope of many in the Jewish state and the fear of many in the Arab world.

Informed sources said Begin was willing to describe his proposals for Palestinian "self-rule" as "interim" arrangements without stating what the final deal would be.

The Israelis had hoped Sadat would accept this delicate ambituity, but the Egyptian leader held out for better terms.

What he might settle for in the end is another question. Some close observers of the negotiations believe the Egyptian president will be flexible on details if he can stand behind general principles of Palestinian self-determination.

His press-conference rhetoric Monday suggested anew that Sadat is drawing a sharp distinction between "the Palestinians" and the "Palestinian Liberation Organization." He seems to have little use at the moment for the PLO.

Israeli withdrawal from nearly all of the occupied Sinai appears to be Sadat's for the asking, a prospect that must be extremely tempting to the Egyptian president. But he said again Monday that he is not seeking another "Sinai deal" in the Kissinger mold, but rather a comprehensive Arab-Israeli agreement.

The Egyptian people, whose outpouring of peace sentiment has surprised even Sadat, are weary of sacrifice and deprivation. One U.S. estimate is that as many as 90 percent of them would be willing to settle grudgingly for a "Sinai-only" deal with Israel if it would seem to offer peace.

Sadat would lose his standing in the Arab world if he were to accept a separate peace, and he might well lose his Saudi Arabian and Persian Gulf financing. The United States is also strongly opposed to a separate Israel-Egypt arrangement.

The newly formed defense committee headed by Egyptian War Minister Gen. Mohammed al Gamasi and Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman, will no doubt concentrate beginning next month on the Sinai in their Cairo talks.

The political committee headed by Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamal and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan will concentrate on the West Bank issue, with the United States and United Nations furnishing observers. These talks, in Jerusalem, will center on the possibility of a comprehensive settlement.

The balance of the two possibilities is likely to continue to hold the attention of the diplomats and the watching world.

It is certainly true, as Begin and Sadat declared, that they have come to a great turning point. It is not yet clear which way their talks — and the Middle East — will turn.

Change sought in children's poison warning

CHICAGO (AP) — A child who sees a skull and crossbones on a container of poison may think pirate food is inside, say researchers who want to replace the traditional warning symbol with "Mr. Yuk."

Mr. Yuk has a scowling green face, with his eyes scrunched closed and his tongue sticking out. He was born in 1971 in Pittsburgh, where pirate symbols are associated with the city's professional baseball team.

"In the last five years, there have been no deaths in Allegheny County (Pittsburgh) from accidental ingestions," said a spokesman for the National Poison Center Network, which is based at Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh.

The network estimates that between 1,000 and 5,000 children under 5 years of age die each year of accidental poisonings nationwide

Many of these deaths could be prevented by the use of new warning symbols like Mr. Yuk, according to a study by Kenneth C. Schneider, an assistant professor of marketing at St. Cloud State University in Minnesota. Schneider's research was published in the University of Illinois' Journal of Consumer Research.

Schneider concluded that the skull and crossbones symbol has lost much of its significance and reported that some children believe the once-frightening symbol designates "pirate food."

He also found that children seem to be more attracted to white containers than black or red ones, to square containers and to those with an odor — even those with unpleasant or antiseptic odors.

Mr. Yuk is used in about 20 Eastern cities now, the poison center said.

In Illinois, the state is experimenting with a different symbol to replace the skull and crossbones. It is a green snake with fangs bared and was chosen after interviews indicated the character was the one with which children would be most afraid to play.

Housewife in coma responds to blood therapy treatment

By NAOAKI USUI

TOKYO (AP) — Harriet Rosenberg, a 34-year-old mother of two from East Monroe, N.Y. who has been in a coma for almost a year, shows "small, first signs" she might regain consciousness through a new blood circulating therapy started last week, her husband said today.

"Doctors told me, there have been small improvements. First, her finger muscles softened. Now you can bend her fingers which we couldn't do before," Ted Rosenberg, 38, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Doctors also told him his wife now blinks her left and right eyelids to an equal degree and that she can swallow saliva, although unconsciously, Rosenberg said. She could do neither before the thereapy, he added.

"Doctors said the blood-circulating therapy is a step-by-step procedure, especially to a patient of her age. And I don't expect an overnight miracle. But let me say doctors and I are cautiously optimistic," Rosenberg said.

Mrs. Rosenberg underwent the first of a series of "autogenous blood pumping thereapy" sessions at the Iwate Medical College in northern Japan on Dec. 22. The treatment calls for pumping 20 cubic centimeters of patient's blood into an aspirator — a partial vacuum chamber — where a chemical is added and the blood then pumped back into the artery.

The 20-cc pumping process is repeated 30 to 40 times in a single treatment and repeated after two-week intervals. The chemical is added to dilate the patient's constricted arteries which persons in a coma suffer. The resulting dilation of the arteries helps the patient to receive an adequate flow of blood throughout the body, including the brain.

The treatment has been effective more than 50 percent of the time, including the case of an 11-year-old girl, Sachiko Iwadate, who regained consciousness after a three-year coma and now is back in school, Dr. Haruyuki Kanaya of the college reported earlier.

Mrs. Rosenberg is the 50th patient to undergo the treatment, hospital officials said.

Mrs. Rosenberg suffered brain damage in an automobile collision in January while she was taking her 5-year-old son, Barry, to nursery school. She has been in a coma ever since, although she started to blink her eyelids in March, Rosenberg said.

Calling the treatment at Morioka City, 300 miles north of Tokyo, "the ultimate therapy," Rosenberg said the improvements she has shown were "what doctors were exactly expecting to happen." Doctors earlier refused to provide day-by-day progress reports.

Chaplin buried in simple rites

CORSIER-SUR-VEVEY, Switzerland (AP) — Charlie Chaplin was buried this morning in a simple ceremony in the graveyard of this Swiss village where he died Christmas day at the age of 88.

The funeral was as he wanted — without fanfare in the little town overlooking Lake Geneva and the majestic French alps where he spent the last 25 years of his life.

Only about 30 relatives, close friends and household staffers attended the rain-swept, 20-minute ceremony for the cane-twirling Little Tramp of the silent screen.

About 150 reporters and curious villagers observed the ceremony from behind an enclosure set up by police around the burial site.

Chaplin's widow Oona, looking pale, drawn and tired, was surrounded by seven of their eight children as the Rev. David Miller of the Church of England in Lausanne, and the Rev. Richard Thomson, who looks after Anglicans in this region, officiated.

Miller delivered a brief eulogy on the life and work of the great London-born comedian in a low voice audible only to the small group surrounding the grave. Thomson recited The Lord's Prayer.

Thomson said Chaplin was not a member of the Church of England, "but he was a supporter."

After the prayer the family left, Chaplin's widow in the lead, and drove away in a fleet of Rolls Royce and Mercedes limousines, before the coffin was lowered into the grave.

California drought not over

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Three solid storms have dumped rain and snow across thirsty California since Thanksgiving, but the two-year drought may not be over yet, a forecaster says.

A wet weather depression meandering in the eastern Pacific funneled another storm into the state Monday, sending added snow to the Sierra slopes and widespread rains to lower elevations. More of the same was expected today.

Despite the storms, National Weather Service forecaster Ray Williams says: "So far this year precipitation is normal, but we don't know what the rest of the year really is going to do."

Williams noted the water table is still far below what it should be and that water rationing is still the rule in many areas.

Three of the largest reservoirs in California are still at critically low levels, the state Drought Information Center in Sacramento points out.

Shasta Dam, which has a capacity of 4.5 million acre-feet, has only 914,000 acre-feet in storage. Folsom Dam, with a million-acre-foot capacity, has 182,000-acre-feet; Oroville Dam has a third of its 3.5 millionacre-foot capacity.

A fair weather high pressure system had hovered over northern California for two years, diverting storms from the state. But the system has broken up and there is little evidence on weather charts to indicate any new high pressure formation in the offing, Williams says.

California utilities do not have enough water on hand to talk about an end to the drought. But they do have hope.

Opening lead — ♡J

When today's hand was played in a tournament, the bidding and opening lead were the same at all tables. Each declarer lost the heart finesse and won the heart return. But then they parted company.

Some declarers promptly led dummy's ten of diamonds. East played the king (playing low would give South the contract), and south won with the ace of diamonds.

When the diamonds produced only three tricks, these declarers were down one.

LEAD LOW CARD

Other declarers saw no reson to waste the ten of diamonds. They began the suit by leading the three of daimonds from dummy, east played low, and South won a finesse with the queen.

South returned to dummy with the ace of spades to lead the four of diamonds. East had to play the king, and South won with the ace. Now declarer could lead his low diamond to dummy's ten and could return to his hand with a club or spade to cash the jack of diamonds.

Don't lead a high card to start a finesse unless you're happy to have the high card covered by a singleton or doubleton honor.

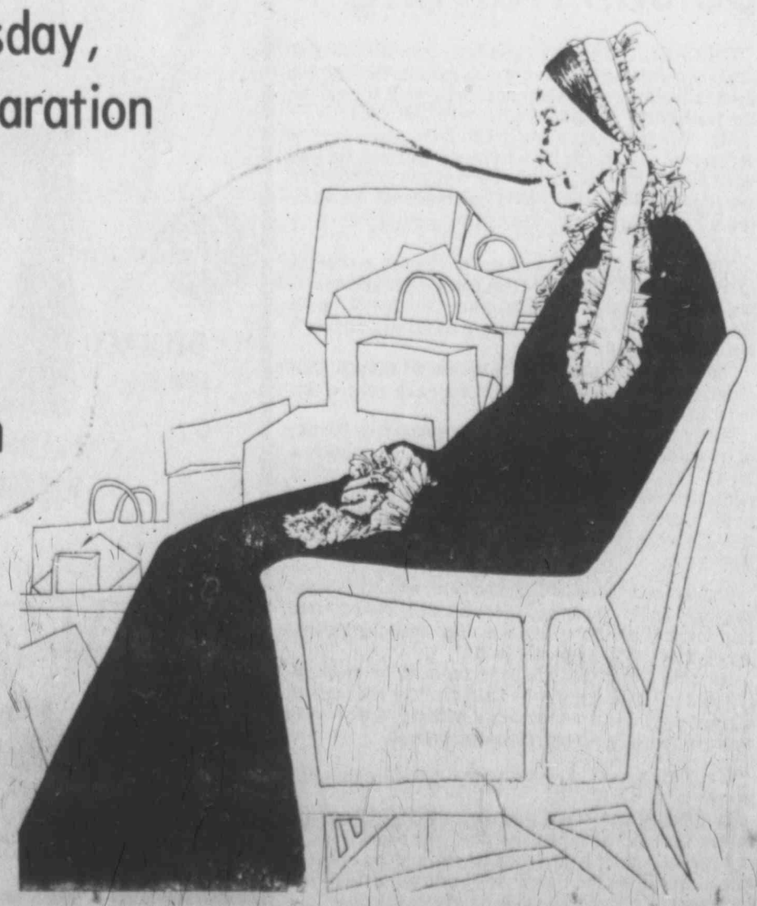

DAILY QUESTION

Partner bids 1-NT (16 to 18 points), and the next player passes. You hold: SQ1052 HK87 DK6 CQJ87. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs, the Stayman Convention, asking partner to bid a major suit of four or more cards. If he bids two spades, you will raise to four spades; if he bids anything other than two spades, you will bid 3-NT.

Bad weather heads list of top stories

By The Associated Press

A large part of the United States was under ice and snow as the year 1977 began. Natural gas had become scarce, factories had closed. Thousands suffered financially and physically. Many died.

It was the coldest weather "since the founding of the republic," the National Weather Service said.

And it was the year's top news story, the editors and broadcasters of Associated Press newspapers and radio and TV stations decided.

In balloting before Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's dramatic trip to Israel at year's end, the editors and broadcasters also placed these stories among the top 10:

2-The spread of international terrorism;
3-The Panama Canal treaty;
4-Bert Lance's resignation;
5-Elvis Presley's death;
6-Gary Gilmore's execution;
7-The collision of two jets at Tenerife,
8-The administration's energy policy,
9-The capture of the suspected Son of Sam murderer, and 10-The investigation of Tongsun Park's alleged influence peddling.

It was no secret that natural gas supplies were trailing demand, but it took the Winter of '77 to drive the point home. And rivers froze, blocking barges carrying fuel oil, aggravating the problem.

With residential customers having first claim on the limited gas, many industries had to shut down. On Feb. 2, the Federal Energy Administration said more than 8,500 plants had been closed, throwing 1.4 million Americans out of work.

The winter threw its severest blast in January. Temperatures in the Ohio Valley, for example, which were about 8 degrees below normal from December through February, averaged 15 to 20 degrees below normal in January. In New England, they were about 4 degrees below normal over the three months but 8 to 10 degrees below normal in January.

Mostly confined to the eastern part of the country, the unusual cold stretched from the extreme South to the North. A hard freeze damaged much of Florida's citrus crop, with some growers even witnessing snow on their trees.

In the North, the upstate New York city of Buffalo was paralyzed. On Jan. 28 a 17-hour blizzard added four inches of snow to the 37 inches already on the ground. Thirteen people died there that weekend.

Particularly hard hit were poor people in central cities, who shivered in freezing homes, their deliveries of fuel oil blocked by weather and their inability to pay.

When it was all over, the typical U.S. household had spent $139 more for heat than in a normal winter.

Judges named for contest

The five judges for this year's National Young Artist Competition have been announced by contest officials.

The panel will include Aube Tzerko, head of the piano department at the University of California at Los Angeles. He will judge the piano competition as well as all finalists. Tzerko has performed in concert extensively in Europe, the United States and Canada.

Also on the 1978 panel of judges is Tadeusz Wronski, professor of violin at Indiana University. In addition, this past year he taught master classes in Frankfort, Germany, and coached the string section of the Minnesota Symphony.

Judging in the voice category will be Janice Harsanyi, who appeared as a guest artist with the Midland-Odessa Symphony this past season. She has been chairman of the voice department at Westminister Choir College. She also has appeared as soloist with major symphonies throughout the U.S. and Europe. She has performed on radio and television and has made a number of recordings.

Elsa Ludwig-Verdehr is serving as judge for the second time. She is professor of music at Michigan State University. She has performed several times at the International Clarinet Clinics held in Denver. She has appeared frequently as a recitalist, clinician and orchestra soloists, including with the Houston Symphony, and has made numerous television tapes for NET-TV.

Jerome Lowenthal, international pianist, also is returning to judge for a second time. He annually makes a cross-country tour of the United States and Europe, playing recitals and appearing as soloist with major orchestras.

Midland youth selected for Washington program

Christopher Brown of Midland, recently was chosen as a staff assistant for the 1978 Presidential Classroom for Young Americans program in Washington, D.C.

The program gives high school students the opportunity to observe the federal government in operation and to tell their experiences to other people.

Brown is a 1977 graduate of Midland High School. He has worked as an information assistant for the program in 1976. He hopes to attend Texas Tech University next year to study political science and telecommunications.

Midlanders graduate

GEORGETOWN — Two Midlanders recently were graduated from Southwestern University here.

Harriet Ann Chapman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Garland Ray Chapman of 4408 Gulf Ave., received a bachelor of applied science degree with a major in allied health.

Mary M. Stump, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Stump of 2309 Gulf Ave., received a bachelor of science in education degree with a major in elementary education and a minor in French.

The two graduates were among nearly 60 persons to graduate from the state's oldest university.

KEEPING UP with the men, stride for stride, at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., is Stefanie Goebel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Goebel of Midland. Miss Goebel is a third classman, attending her second year at the academy. She is majoring in economics. Miss Goebel decided to come to the academy because it was an excellent school and she wanted to be assured of a career. "I can't think of a nobler or better career than that of a Naval officer," she said. After graduation, Miss Goebel said she would "like to fly, if I could" or work with a Naval security group.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Tomatoes go square

Dear Dr. Solomon: I heard something on the radio the other day about a square tomato. Are they kidding? Or can't they learn to leave food alone?—Anna D.

Dear Anna: There is indeed a square tomato—or, at any rate, a squarish tomato. It is more squarish than round and is being perfected by agricultural researchers at the University of California at Davis. The name, you will be delighted to know, is UC-82. The idea is to have a tomato that will survive mechanical harvesting and packaging better than the traditional one. And it is easier to cut. The scientists expect to save California farmers $20 million a year in reduced waste during shipment. And if some of this saving gets passed along to consumers, it will not only be a square meal but a square deal.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Does blood pressure have something to do with getting cataracts? My mother's and my father's families have had more than their share of cataracts and high blood pressure.—Susan G.

Dear Susan: The Framingham Eye Study covered 2,675 residents of Framingham, Mass., part of the group on which the famous heart study was based. It sought to determine how eye troubles might be linked with 550 health factors over a 16-year period.

The survey did turn up the fact that people with old-age cataract were more likely to have high blood pressure as well as high blood sugar levels and more of a kind of blood fat called phospholipid. But the researchers—Dr. Howard M. Leibowitz, head of ophthalmology at Boston University School of Medicine, and Professor Harold A. Kahn of Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health—caution that some of these links may be due to chance and that further studies are needed.

The Framingham Eye Study is important. It is the first big attempt to find out the frequency of eye disease in a specific group and to identify risk factors. Cataract was present in almost five percent of the people between 52 and 64, in 18 percent of those aged 65 to 74, and in 46 percent of the 75-85 age group.

Incidentally, another major cause of blindness, degeneration of the central part of the retina, or macular degeneration, was also found to be linked with increased blood pressure.

(If youf have a medical problem, see you doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Center names interim director

LUBBOCK — Dr. Marion O. Hagler, professor of electrical engineering, recently was appointed interim director of the Texas Tech University Center for Energy Research, John R. Bradford, dean of the College of Engineering, announced.

Bradford said Hagler will serve as interim director through the remainder of the academic year. At that time, he said, it is anticipated that a permanent appointment will be made.

Hagler succeeds Dr. Stanley R. Liberty, who resigned to become head of the Department of Electrical Engineering at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Va.

Hagler earlier had served as director of the Institute for Energy Research out of which the center grew. He is co-director of the Electrical Engineering Department's Plasma Laboratory.

Session signup slated

Registration for Midland College's Interim Winter Session will be open at 8:30 a.m. Jan. 3 in room 213 of the Learning Resource Center.

Students may sign up for one three-hour credit course in the following areas: English, history, government and mathematics.

The session runs from Jan. 3 through Jan. 13. Classes will meet from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. weekdays.

Students get degrees

STEPHENVILLE — A Midland student and a Big Spring student were awarded degrees from Tarleton State University during recent winter commencement exercises.

Carol Jan'n Garland received a bachelor of science degree in elementary education. Darrisa Kay Crooks received a bachelor of science degree in agriculture.

FEC seeks documentation on Carter debts

By GEORGE LARDNER Jr.
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter's 1976 campaign committee claims to have paid off more than 200 debts, totaling more than $300,000, without submitting the requisite documentation showing that the payments were made.

Officials at the Federal Election Commission noticed most of the discrepancies last fall and called for an accounting in a letter last month to the 1976 Democratic Presidential Camapign Committee Inc., the key organization for Carter in last year's general-election campaign.

White House aides in charge of the committee's affairs say there is a perefectly innocent explanation, and that they are in the process of refining their campaign arithmetic for the FEC.

"We might be inaccurate, but we're not dishonest," White House Counsel Robert J. Lipshutz explained with a laugh.

By far the biggest debt in question was $91,140 that the Carter campaign still owed at the end of 1976 to Citizens & Southern National Bank in Atlanta, the residue of nine loans aggregating more than $1,155,000 that the influential Georgia institution provided for Carter last year.

The unpaid $91,140 balance simply disappeared from the books in the Carter campaign's first accounting for 1977, covering Jan. 1 through March 31. In a report certified by Lipshutz as treasurer, the 1976 Democratic Presidential Campaign Committee Inc. listed all the loans it had gotten from Citizens & Southern — a total of $980,785 following Carter's election in November — as having been reduced by now to zero.

The payment should have been listed in detail in the 119 pages of itemized expenditures in the quarterly report, but it was not. Similarly there was no sign of payment of the additional $7,119 that Citizens & Southern loaned the committee on Jan. 2 to cover much of the interest due the bank.

Lipshutz told a reporter that despite the lack of documentation in the report, the Carter campaign made a final payment of $100,396.25, including all interest still due, on Jan. 18. He and another White House aide, Richard Harden, said it didn't turn up on the report to the Federal Election Commission because of the nature of the C&S loans.

"We used the 'accounts receivable' money owed to the Carter campaign as collateral for the loans," Lipshutz said. These consisted primarily of transportation bills sent to the press and the Secret Service for travels with the candidate.

As these checks came in, Harden said, "We booked them in as recepits, listed them and sent them direct to the bank. So we, in effect, never deposited the checks." Citizens & Southern, he said, didn't want the Carter campaign to cash them, since they were collateral for the loans. Instead, he said, the bank took charge of the payments when they came in and automatically reduced the loans until the debts were paid.

In addition to short-term loans from Citizens & Southern, which Lipshutz said were made in the spring of 1976 and again last November at a rate of 8 percent, the Fulton National Bank of Atlanta helped the Committee for Jimmy Carter — the key campaign organization during the Democratic primaries — with eight other loans last April, May and June aggregating $1,350,000.

Some of these were paid off before others were taken out, but at times the Carter campaign owed the Atlanta banks a total of approximately $1 million.

The loans from the Georgia banks during the primaries have been criticized in some quarters as having given Carter a remarkable edge over other, hard-pressed Democratic candidates who reportedly could not get similar bank credit. But White House officials have defended them as "completely proper."

Harden maintained the terms were no different from "the loans that companies and others would normally get." He added that the Carter campaign spent some $7,000 on legal advice from the banks to make sure the loans were proper.

As for the more than 200 other campaign debts in question, FEC staff director Orlando B. Potter told Lipshutz in a Nov. 16 letter that they had not been properly liquidated. In the letter Potter listed a sampling of those that needed to be explained, such as $2,205 owed to Carter confidant Charles H. Kirbo for travel expenses; $1,750 to "Mobil Johnny of Albany" for "vote getting," and $700 to Heart of the North Aviation.

Harden said all these debts had also been paid, although there was a different explanation for the lack of documentation. Although federal election laws require explicit itemization of all expenditures of $100 or more in any given year, the Carter campaign's computers, Harden said, weren't programmed that way.

Instead, he said, as many of the final debts were reduced to zero, "the computer dropped them down from 'itemized expenditures' to "unitemized."

The checks are now being tracked down one by one in Atlanta to satisfy the FEC, Harden said.

EPA proposes comprehensive regulation of drinking water

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency will propose in January the government's first comprehensive regulations limiting cancer-causing chemicals in drinking water.

The move is expected to spark widespread controversy when financially pressed cities are forced to spend millions of dollars on new water-treatment methods, passing the costs on to consumers in higher water bills.

The long-awaited regulations already are reopening the emotional debate over the safety of the nation's most basic commodity, pitting environmentalists against city officials, with EPA in the middle.

The alarming discovery that drinking water might contain small amounts of cancer-causing substances was first disclosed in November, 1974, when an EPA study found 66 chemicals in New Orleans' water supply.

Two weeks later, reviving a bill that had languished for four years, Congress passed the Safe Drinking Water Act requiring federal standards for the nation's 240,000 hitherto independent water supply systems.

Since then an EPA survey of 80 cities' water systems found chemicals in all of them, including chloroform, aldrin, dieldrin, DDT, carbon tetrachloride and benzene — all of which cause cancer in animals. In addition, several studies have found higher cancer rates among people drinking chlorinated river water as compared to nonchlorinated ground water.

With sophisticated new instruments to detect minute traces of chemicals "we are finding a whole variety of new substances we were not able to measure before," said Victor J. Kimm, head of EPA's water supply program.

"The adverse health effects are potentially very serious ...But it's very hard to say how big the risk is. We're at the limits of what's understood in the scientific community."

The regulations would set a limit of 100 parts per billion for a group of chemicals called trihalomethanes, of which chloroform is the best known. These organic chemicals are formed when natural substances such as decaying leaves or sewage mix with chlorine, used as a disinfectant.

The regulations also would try to reduce synthetic or man-made chemicals that flow into rivers from farms, industrial waste pipes and urban runoff. Cities that take water from dirty rivers, rather than underground aquifers or upstream reservoirs, would be required to install carbon filtering equipment.

Kimm sees the regulations as "an insurance policy" despite scientific doubts over how many people might die from ingesting small amounts of chemicals over a lifetime.

But the engineers and politicians who run the nation's water supplies would rather wait for more certainty. "It's accepted that chloroform causes cancer in test animals, but not that it causes it in man from trace quanitites in drinking water," said Eric Johnson, head of the American Waterworks Association.

"Until it's proved to be bad, I'd prefer to believe it isn't. Municipalities have plenty of things to spend their money on."

The controversy echoes the classic environmental health battles of the decade from pesticides and air pollution to saccharin. While most scientists accept the correlation between high doses in test animals and low doses on humans over the long term, many laymen would prefer evidence of deaths before accepting the scary ubiquity of cancer-causing substances.

Anticipating controversy, EPA is cautiously applying the regulations only to cities with populations exceeding 75,000. Thus, about half of the 190 million people who use public water supplies would be affected.

All the cities would be required to monitor their water regularly. Since quality varies dramatically from region to region, some will have to make only minor adjustments in their treatment plants.

However, EPA estimates that between 61 and 78 cities will need to switch from traditional sand-filtering techniques to running the water through granulated activated carbon beds, an expensive process since the carbon, which absorbs chemicals, must be changed as frequently as every eight weeks.

Coal producers plan to meet Carter goal

WASHINGTON — (AP) — About 100 of the nation's biggest coal producers plan to open or expand enough mines to meet President Carter's goal of doubling production by 1985, according to a study released by the National Coal Association.

The industry organization said Sunday that the producers plan 332 new or expanded mines and additional prodection of 594 million tons of coal annually.

Current capacity is 775 million to 800 million tons, which means that the new production will raise the total to the 1.2 billion tons the president wants, the coal association said.

Actual production could be considerably higher because the study did not include smaller coal producers, Carl E. Bagge, president of the association, said in a statement. These firms produced 250 million tons in 1976, he said.

"This analysis of the private sector's plans for increasing coal production shows that President Carter's goal can be met if the government does not impose unreasonable constraints," Bagge said.

Bagge said each 100 million tons of coal which can be used in lieu of imported oil means the nation can avoid importing nearly 400 million barrels of oil costing more than $5 billion.

The association study indicted that the major coal firms plan to expand 142 mines, adding 170 million tons of annual production through 1985. Another 190 new mines capable of producing 424 million tons a year will be opened, it said.

About 199 million additional tons would be produced in the East, most of it in underground mines, the report said. In the West, 359 million tons of new production would come from surface mines.

SPACE HABITAT, designed to hold some 10,000 persons, is pictured as conceived by a NASA artist. It would house members of a space manufacturing complex on the inner surface of a large sphere, nearly a mile in circumfrence and designed to provide gravity comparable to that of Earth. NASA believes the habitat could be in use by the end of this century if Congress approves a resolution allowing its development. (AP Laserphoto)

Judges rate court's performance

By PHILIP HAGER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — What do judges think of the Supreme Court?

The federal and state court judges questioned in a newly released survey seemed almost equally divided over the wisdom of the justices' recent decisions.

The survey, providing a rare insight into the views of the judges who interpret and apply high court rulings, strengthened the impression that the court under Chief Justice Warren E. Burger is seen as comparatively moderate — neither liberal, nor conservative.

"We had ideologically liberal judges complain that the Burger Court was too conservative and conservative judges saying the Burger Court wasn't far enough to the right," said Prof. Greg A. Caldeira of the University of Iowa, who headed the project.

"Overall, it verified the belief that while the Burger Court has sometimes been liberal and sometimes been conservative, on the whole it's been pretty much middle-of-the-road."

The survey was part of a project supported by the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration and several other institutions. Excerpts from the survey were published in Judicature, the journal of the American Judicature Society.

In a telephone interview last week, Caldeira noted that the judges' overall support for the Court tended to exceed the support expressed by the general public in previous opinion surveys. He acknowledge that judges, more than the public, would attach importance to the method and style of the Court's decision making and to its results.

Caldeira said he found, too, that a number of judges had not been reading Supreme Court decisions, at least until they were called on to apply them to particular cases.

"I was very surprised to find that an awful lot of state and federal judges don't read Supreme Court decisions," he said. "They said they were just too busy."

The survey was based on both interviews and on responses to questionnaires from 165 federal disrict judges throughout the junited States and 84 state trial judges in Colorado, New York and South Carolina.

Generally, the judges expressed approval of the Court as an institution —how well it does its job, its impartiality, its trustworthiness.

In terms of specific likes and dislikes about the justices' recent decisions, their complaints exceeded their praise — but by only 1 percent among federal judges and by just 4 percent among state judges.

The Burger Court's rulings on criminal justice — curtailing to some extent the rights established for defendants by the Court under Earl Warren — drew the most responses, both favorable and unfavorable, from the judges.

One critical judge, the survey reported, said the Burger Court was "trying to turn back the clock" in the criminal justice system, restricting the rights of defendants. Another judge said the Court had gone too far in protecting individual rights and had "disregarded the rights of the public."

Almost all the judges in the survey praised the Court's 1971 decision in the Pentagon Papers case, in which the justices struck down the government's attempt to prevent publication of secret documents about the Vietnam war.

Many judges criticized the Court's rulings extending abortion rights, saying the justices were usurping the function of the legislatures —making law instead of interpreting it. They also complained that the justices had failed to establish workable legal standards for defining obscenity — with one judge saying that leaving it up to local community standards "seems too dangerous to me."

Asked how well they thought the justices had been doing their jobs, 56 percent of the federal judges called the Court's performance "good" or "excellent." Of the state judges, 40 percent said "good" or "excellent." Only 5 percent of the state judges and 12 percent of the federal judges chose the lowest ratings — "poor" or "very poor."

Money problems to stay if postal system changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill to remove some of the Postal Service's independence would not, if passed, make the agency's financial problems disappear, Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar says.

In fact, the agency is in its best financial condition since it was reorganized in 1971, Bailar said in an interview. Its $700 million 1977 deficit compares to a $1 billion loss in each of the two previous years.

A bill introduced by Reps. James M. Hanley D-N.Y. and Charles H. Wilson, D-Calif, would allow Congress to veto postal rate increases, restore presidential power to appoint the postmaster general and abolish the Postal Service board of governors.

Currently, the president appoints the governors, who appoint the postmaster.

"Making changes in the structure of the Postal Service is not going to make the problems disappear," Bailar said. "You can't wish away all of the rising costs and other economic trends. You can't wish that it didn't cost $16 billion a year to run the Postal Service."

Bailar said he opposes a $2 billion annual mail subsidy contained in the legislation, because it would place an unfair burden on individual taxpayers. The current annual subsidy is $920 million.

"The Postal Service is used mainly by businesses, buf the majority of income tax revenue is paid by private individuals," Bailar said. "I think it is appropriate to have the mail service paid for by those who use it, rather than shifting a burden onto individual taxpayers."

Kremlin calls summit 'a blind alley'

The Washington Post

MOSCOW — In its first public response to the Christmas Mideast summit meeting, the Kremlin Monday labeled it a "blind alley" that forced Egyptian President Anwar Sadat into a major concession to the Isrelis while getting nothing in return.

The official government news agency Tass said that Sadat's agreement to send his foreign minister to Jerusalem for talks beginning next month "is regarded as a serious concession by Sadat to (Israeli Prime Minister Menahem) Begin, since the very presence of an Egyptian minister in Jerusalem is regarded in the Arab world as recognition of Jerusalem by Egypt as the capital of Israel."

This Soviet portrayal of the summit is consistent with the Politburo's anger at Sadat, its hopes for a Geneva peace conference at which it can play a role and its attempts to make common cause with the "rejectionist front" of Arab states opposed to the Sadat-Begin talks.

The Kremlin for a number of weeks has been criticizing and complaining about the Sadat peace initiatives, casting them always in the worst possible light and encouraging the other Arab states to reject them.

Senior Western diplomatic sources who have met recently with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko say the official Kremlin position "is no different" in character or content from the dispatches and commentaries of its controlled press.

Tass noted with what bordered on satisfaction that Sadat at a press conference Monday "admitted that the Palestine problem is the key one for a Middle East settlement."

The Kremlin has ostentatiously supported the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) and top Soviet leaders have met this year with its leader, Yassir Arafat. The Kremlin position is that any peace initiatives that exclude the PLO as spokesmen for Palestinians' aspirations must be opposed and is destined to fail anyway.

The news agency, quoting what it called "well-informed political observers," asserted that "the Israel leaders, far from bringing any of the 'concessions' they promised, have further toughened their position. It is said in Israeli circles that the maximum of what Israel is prepared to do proved to be well below the minimum asked for by Sadat."

At the same time the Kremlin continued its policy of keeping its own condemnation somewhat muted, using the device of quotes from Arab and foreign press and observers to make its derogatory points.

For example, Tass quoted in its dispatch from the French newspaper Le Figaro, saying "no one can any longer deny that Egypt and Israel are holding separate talks, and that only a separate peace and not peace for all will be established."

The Soviets, who have portrayed the Israelis as aggrandizing warmongers, maintained that theme Monday. Tass concluded, "All this shows that Israel has no intention of abandoning its aggressive designs.

Two held in slaying

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two men have been arrested in connection with what police believe may be a "copycat" slaying patterned after those of the Hillside Strangler.

Stephen D'Orsey Devezin, 40, was booked for investigation of murder Monday night in the death of 21-year-old Carolyn Williams, Lt. Don Foster said. Thomas Davis, 24, who police described as a friend of Devezin, had been booked on the same charge earlier.

Dallas Cowboys explode in Bears' face

DALLAS (AP) — The "difference" between the 1976 and 1977 models of the Dallas Cowboys wears No. 33 on his jersey. He is so good as a rookie he can give the National Football League's premier runner solace.

Dallas was bounced out of the first round of the National Football Conference playoffs last year by Los Angeles because it didn't have a runner.

NOW, THE Cowboys have a back who Monday outdueled the best — Chicago's Walter Payton.

The 37-7 Cowboy rout of the wild card Bears was a perfect example of how explosive Dallas can be with a Tony Dorsett in the backfield.

"We have got the game breaker we have needed," said Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach, who froze Chicago with play action fakes to Dorsett to post 134 yards passing, including a 28-yard touchdown pass to tight end Billy Joe DuPree.

Dorsett, the All-American from Pittburgh who gained 1,008 yards in his initial NFL campaign, was swarmed by the media in the Cowboy dressing room after the one-sided game.

"The playoffs are really a different season. . .the atmosphere in the locker room is really different," said Dorsett, a millionaire. "Of course, there's extra money involved."

DORSETT GAINED 85 yards on 17 carries, including touchdown gallops of 22 and 7 yards. The numbers for Payton were 60 yards in 19 tries, no touchdowns and dizziness.

"I have a lot of respect for Walter Payton, we're in this together," soothed Dorsett. "He's a great running back, there's no professional jealousy between us."

In the Bears locker room, Payton was trying to find his head. He had been gang-tackled by three or four Cowboys on almost every down.

"I got hit in the head and I just don't remember nothing," said Payton. "I feel real bad. I wish you fellows would give me a break. Maybe then I could get dressed."

Chicacgo linebacker Doug Buffone said, "With Dorsett around you can't concentrate on any one thing. . .they come at you from every direction."

"This is the best team I've played on in four or five years," said Cowboys veteran offensive tackle Ralph Neely, who will retire this year after the playoffs, Dallas' 11th in 12 years.

CHARLIE WATERS intercepted Chicago's Bob Avellini three times as the Cowboys advanced to their sixth NFC championship game.

Dorsett's influence was evident at the fullback position where Robert Newhouse tore through gaping holes for 80 yards as the Bears looked for last year's Heisman Trophy winner.

Dallas piled up a 17-0 halftime lead on Doug Dennison's 2-yard touchdown run, Staubach's pass to DuPree and the first of three Efren Herrera field goals, a 21-yard chip shot.

Dorsett's two TD runs and field goals of 31 and 27 yards by Herrera completed the Cowboys slaughter in the second half.

CHICAGO GOT a consolation touchdown late in the fourth quarter on Avellini's 34-yard pass to Steve Schubert.

"This has to be our best game of the year," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "Every phase of our game was excellent, from our offense to the defense and specialty teams. Newhouse was just exceptional. . .they may have been gearing too much toward stopping Dorsett."

Landry said he wouldn't even watch the Los Angeles-Minnesota because he didn't care who the Cowboys played in the NFC title game at 4:30 p.m., Jan. 1 in Texas Stadium.

"I never think about who I'm going to play. . .I just see who it is and get ready," he said.

CHICAGO COACH Jack Pardee whose Bears won their last six games to finish with a 9-5 season, said "Dallas' defense is something. I think we only had nine plays in the first quarter. We just couldn't get anything going.

"I didn't think the score would be this great but it always is when you have that many turnovers. I don't think Dallas did anything in particular to stop Payton. They have the flex which is designed to stop the run against Payton or anyone else."

There wasn't much talk in the Cowboys dressing room about next week's opponent. Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson mentioned, "I hoped we'd play LA because we have extra incentive after they beat us last year but we'll be ready for whoever comes in here."

THE COWBOYS compiled a 12-2 regular season record but Landry was still mystified by the up and down nature of the team.

"Right now we are playing good and we are confident and that's a good thing to have going for you in the title game," Landry said.

Cowboys forget last year's loss in first round

By BOB DILLON
R-T Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys started slowly, but what a finish!

Safety Charlie Waters picked off three Chicago passes for a new NFL playoff record in sparkling an alert Cowboy defense that came up with seven turnovers during the 37-7 Dallas victory.

"We were sick about that opening playoff loss to the Rams last year. I've been waiting all year long to make up for that loss," said Waters during the dressing room celebration.

Waters was elated over his three thefts and had nothing but praise for the defensive unit. "Cliff Harris and I are tight friends, in fact all of out defense are such good friends that when somebody does something good, it's sorta like you did it yourself."

WATERS WENT on to say that he felt that way Monday. "That's what this team is all about," added Waters.

On Water's first interception in the end zone, "Latta was open and Cliff and I had control of the whole field in a zone with two safeties. I must go to the wing if Avellini goes to the wing, but if he goes to the tight end, I was setting it up...saw him open. I was hoping that Avellini would throw it with a loft because he didn't think there was a chance I could get to it in time. I was anticipating him because I saw Latta open too and sure enough, the loft pass came and it gave me time to get to the ball."

Waters wasn't too happy about the return after the interceptions, however. "I decided to run it out and didn't do very well and I felt bad about it. The referee told me later had I gone on and touched my knee, he would have given me a touchback on the play."

"Everything seemed to go our way. I thought we were in trouble early when we lost the ball on fumbles in the first two possessions. That gave the defense a good challenge which we met," added the eight-year veteran from Clemson.

"I REALLY BELIEVE that we as a team played with as much intensity as we have all season long," said Waters.

Coach Tom Landy seemed to agree. "We played our best all-around game of the season and it couldn't come at a better time," said Landry, who even managed to smile a lot during the interview.

"This has to be our best game of the year. Every phase of our game was excellent, from offense to defense and the specialty teams too," added Landry.

Harris said that the Cowboys were near perfection on defense, probably near 95 per cent strategy-wise."

He went on to say that Landry's flex defense shuts out the run, then all you have to do is stop the pass and we did that.

IT WAS a playoff-poised team that overcame the two early fumbles to post a halftime lead of 17-0 and then added 20 more points on the scoreboard in the second half.

"Roger Staubach is the guy that beats you," commented Chicago linebacker Doug Buffone. "He hit the right man for the defense we called and ran when he needed to."

Chicago coach Jack Pardee, former Texas A&M great, praised his team. "I'm just proud of our team. They stayed in there and played as hard as they could. I think the turnovers were indicative of what happened. We had turnovers in seven of eight series in a row. Of course you can't do that and win, especially against a team as good as the Cowboys," quipped Pardee.

"This game meant a lot to the team. They were ready. Had we not had so many mistakes, we would have given the Cowboys a heckuva fight."

PARDEE PRAISED the Dallas defense. "That Cowboy defense is something else. I think we had the ball for nine plays in the first quarter. We just couldn't get anything going and we should have had a touchdown when Avellini overthrew Bo Rather."

On Payton, Pardee didn't feel that Dallas did anything special to stop the great running back for the Bears. "No, I didn't think the Cowboys did anything in particular to stop Walter. They have the flex defense which is designed to stop the run and our pass protection broke down at times, but most of the sacks came late in the game," added Pardee.

Tony Dorsett, who wound up with 85 yards in 17 carries, scored two touchdowns, but had to leave the hard-hitting game when his knee began to tighten up early in the fourth period.

"THE PLAYOFFS are really a different season... the atmosphere in our locker room is different, of course and there's always that extra money that makes it nice too," said Dorsett.

While Dorsett got his usual attention, it was Waters who was swarmed by the press and media in the Cowboy dressing room.

"I don't care who we play, but I know that the veterans want another shot at Los Angeles," said Dorsett.

Of course, that didn't pan out with the Rams losing to the Minnesota Vikings, 14-7, in the mud in Los Angeles.

While the Bears go into hibernation the Cowboys get ready to square off with the Vikings Sunday in Dallas with the winner moving into the Super Bowl, Jan. 15, against either Oakland or Denver.

Minnesota shocks Rams, 14-7

By DAVE BRADY
The Washington Post

LOS ANGELES — The Minnesota Vikings sprang the first upset of the 1977 pro-football playoffs Monday when they suqelched the Los Angeles Rams, 14-7, in a driving rain, behind reserve quarterback Bob Lee.

The Vikings appeared to have the game put away without an argument, 14-0, until Pat Haden directed a Los Angeles drive that resulted in a touchdown with a little more than a minute to play, scoring on a one-yard lob to Harold Jackson in the end zone.

The Rams then recovered an onside kick and moved to a first down on the Minnesota 39 with seven seconds left. Jeff Wright intercepted Haden's desperation pass inside the five-yard line to lock up the decision.

Once more coach Chuck Knox suffered a misfortune on a fourth-down call in a big game when the Rams tried for one yard and Lawrence McCutcheon was stopped for no gain in the first quarter.

The Vikings began earning their trip to Dallas on Sunday for the NFC championship game on their first possession, going 69 yards to score on Chuck Foreman's five-yard run. Lee connected on five straight passes in the drive.

The Vikings scored the insurance touchdown, on a one-yard plunge by Sammy Johnson in the fourth period after workhorse Chuck Foreman's runs set it up.

Haden thrice was intercepted, once in the Minnesota end zone and twice just outside it.

The loss was certain to renew speculation that Knox may be leaving the Rams.

The temperature was in the 50s and there was a driving rain that created puddles even though the tarpaulin was not removed until an hour before kickoff.

The Rams were favored by nine points in their third game this year against the Vikings. The Rams won a regular-season game, 35-3. The Vikings won an exhibition, 22-17.

Early on, the Rams came up to one of those fourth-and-one challenges that have resulted in so much second-guessing of coach Chuck Knox. This one failed when Lawrence McCutcheon was stopped without gain at the Minnesota 31-yard line, where the Vikings took possession.

They were put back to their 22 on a holding penalty against tackle Ron Yary, but Lee then took them 78 yards to score.

Lee hit all five of his passes in the thrust and Chuck Foreman ran five yards for the touchdown. Fred Cox converted.

The Rams tried to move the ball mostly on the ground, which was not productive at first.

In the second quarter, Pat Haden went to the air after defensive tackle Alan Page of the Vikings was offside on a punt by the Rams. That gave Los Angeles a first down at the Minnesota 41.

Haden dared a pass on third and two and connected with tight end Terry Nelson. Then, after the Rams were set back by a holding call against center Rich Saul, Haden passed to Nelson, who broke for 19 yards to the Minnesota nine.

John Cappelletti ran four yards for a first down on the five, but when Haden threw on first down, intended for reserve tight end Charles Young, Nate Allen intercepted in the end zone for the Vikings.

Haden later took the Rams to the Viking 31, mostly on a 17-yard run by McCutcheon, but an end-around by Nelson in the mud failed and on third and 10 defense back Allen held Nelson to a six-yard gain on a pass. Rafael Septien was wide on a 33-yard field-goal attempt.

There was no scoring in the third quarter, but the Vikings got field position that resulted in a one-yard touchdown plunge by running back Sammy Johnson in the fourth period. The conversion by Cox put the Vikings out in front, 14-0.

College cagers juggle positions

By The Associated Press

Four of the top five teams in The Associated Press Top Twenty college basketball poll juggled positions this week after No. 2 Marquette lost to Louisville.

The Warriors, last year's national champions, were beaten 61-60 Thursday and fell to fifth while the next three teams each moved up a spot.

No. 1 Kentucky remained at the top of the heap, walloping Iona, 104-65. The Wildcats, 8-0, received all 45 first-place votes cast by the nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Kentucky received a total of 900 votes.

North Carolina, 7-1, beat Tulane 108-103 to edge from third to second with 820 votes.

Arkansas, 8-0, one of last year's surprise teams, beat Hardin-Simmons 86-55 and Kansas 78-72 to rise from fourth to third with 614 votes.

Notre Dame, 7-1, routed St. Joseph's of Indiana 108-72 and totalled 560 points to move up from No. 5. Marquette, now 5-1, collected 519 points.

Indiana State, 7-0, did not play during the holiday week and remained sixth.

Louisville, 6-1, moved from eighth to seventh through its victory over Marquette and a 69-63 triumph over Dayton.

UCLA, 8-1, defeated San Jose State 109-69 and New Mexico State 86-67 but dropped one notch from seventh while unbeaten Nevada-Las Vegas held its ninth-place spot by edging Northwestern 100-95 and Iowa 85-84 to raise its record to 11-0.

Also holding its previous position was No. 10 Syracuse, 8-1, which was idle last week.

Cincinnati, 6-1, advanced from 12th to No. 11; Holy Cross, 6-0, moved from No. 13 to No. 12 and Providence, 6-0, rose from 14th to 13th.

Maryland, 7-1, leaped from 20th to No. 14.

Indiana, 6-1 and unranked a week ago, reached No. 15 this week thanks in part to its 66-57 victory over Alabama.

Rounding out the Top 20 were Virginia, 5-0; Kansas, 7-2; previously unranked Florida State, 8-0; San Francisco, 6-3 and Detroit, 6-1.

San Francisco lost twice and plummeted from 11th while Detroit fell from No. 15.

Falling out of this week's Top 20 were Alabama, 18th a week ago, and Utah, at No. 17 last week.

Casper glad it's over

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Oakland Raiders' 37-31 overtime playoff victory over the Baltimore Colts may have been fun to watch, but Oakland tight end Dave Casper said it wasn't nearly as much fun on the field.

"It was hell," said Casper, whose third touchdown reception of the afternoon gave the Raiders the victory 43 seconds into the second overtime period.

The contest, the third-longest game ever played in National Football League history, placed the Raiders in the American Football Conference championship game against Denver on New Year's Day.

"How would you like one guy punching you and then you punching him until one or the other gets knocked out? It was like an Ali-Frazier fight. It might've been fun to watch, but I'm sure it wasn't fun for them," Casper said.

"It's the type of game you like to play if you win," said Oakland defensive end Otis Sistrunk. "When Dave caught that touchdown pass, I said, 'Thank God it's over.'"

"We tried like crazy; we just didn't get it," said Baltimore quarterback Bert Jones after the Colts lost their third consecutive first-round game in the NFL playoffs. The lead changed hands six times in the second half alone.

"They played well and we played well," said Jones, who was sacked six times. "The only unfortunate part about it is that they won."

Sistrunk said, "When Bert Jones can't roll, the Colts can't rock."

"Last year, when we lost to Pittsburgh in the playoffs, we were embarrassed," said Baltimore Coach Ted Marchibroda. "But this year, I thought we played extremely well.

"Oakland made the big plays and won the game. We had opportunities but we did not win. There was no shame in losing that game to Oakland. The only shame is that someone had to lose that game. But that's the way of the business we're in."

It was that kind of day for Los Angeles Rams quarterback Pat Haden (11), who is sacked by a duo of visiting Minnesota Vikings Monday during the NFC playoff game. In addition to this crushing blow, Haden threw three interceptions. (AP Laserphoto).

Foreman rests elders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Chuck Foreman, at 26 a veritable youngster on the Minnesota Vikings squad, was kind to his elders and it paid off.

Foreman, the Vikings' powerful and durable running back, carried 31 times for 101 yards Monday, leading Minnesota to a 14-7 National Football Conference playoff victory over the Los Angeles Rams. The Vikings' ability to control the ball, particularly in the second half, gave considerable rest to their gray-templed defense.

"The main thing about this game," said 32-year-old defensive tackle Alan Page, "was the way both our offense and defense played. They played like a single unit and I'm really proud of that."

Page, smiling but looking extremely tired after the rainy afternoon's work, sounded grateful to the team's offense for allowing him some time on the sidelines.

He plays on a defensive unit that includes 39-year-old Jim Marshall and 35-year-old Carl Eller in the line, and 35-year-old Paul Krause and 33-year-old Bobby Bryant in the secondary.

Marshall, looking even more weary than Page after the Vikings had won an NFC championship date with Dallas next Sunday, was joining his teammate in complaining about the game's officiating.

"Look at this," said Marshall, fingering his muddy and almost completely shredded jersey. "It looks like somebody held a little, doesn't it?"

Foreman said he was happy the older Vikings were able to take it easy for awhile.

"We knew we had to control the ball some to give our defense some rest," he said. "They're old, sure, but they're good. It really helps if they can get some rest."

The Rams, considerably younger as a team than the Vikings, seemed just as tired and predictably a lot quieter after the loss.

Los Angeles defensive end Jack Youngblood, visibly upset, answered one newsman's question with, "That is a stupid question," and stalked off to the showers.

"My interception in the end zone midway in the second quarter was the turning point," said Rams quarterback Pat Haden, solemnly. "Charley Young ran his pattern perfectly but I just threw a lousy ball."

"It was just one of those days," said Los Angeles linebacker Isiah Robertson. "It was one of the worst defensive games we ever played in this stadium."

Archie tells brother to stay on defense

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Archie Griffin, the only college football player ever to win the Heisman Trophy twice, had some advice for younger brother Ray.

"Archie said, 'You'll be a real high draft choice if you stay on defense,'" the Ohio State senior remembered.

After the opening game with Miami this fall, Jeff Logan and Ricky Johnson, two top tailbacks, were hurt.

Suddenly, the Buckeyes' offensive runners were scarce. The SOS went out for Ray Griffin, one of the nation's premier safeties, to return to the attacking unit.

After all, it should have been an easy transition. Ray had won All-Ohio prep honors as a tailback and understudied his more famous brother as an Ohio State freshman.

It wasn't easy.

Griffin, one of seven brothers who play football, worked two games at tailback. He carried 21 times for just 74 yards.

"It was a lack of practice on offense for me," he said of the ill-fated switch. "It wasn't for a lack of confidence. It just takes time."

So it was back to safety in the fourth game. He stayed there the rest of the way, but the move, he concedes, hurt his chances to follow in Archie's footsteps as a concensus All-America.

"I agree," said the 5-foot-9, 182-pound Ray, swifter and lighter than Archie.

"But I wanted to make the change as far as the team was concerned. It was a good move for the team. It was not a good move for me personally. At Ohio State, I want to think more of the team."

Still, he does not believe the switch hurt his chances with the pros. "They already knew what I could do from my sophomore and junior years," he said.

Ohio State now has seven defensive backs in the National Football League — Jack Tatum, Neal Colzie, Tim Fox, Craig Cassady, Doug Plank, Mike Sensibaugh and Steve Luke.

"He'll rank with any of those players," said George Hill, the Ohio State defensive coordinator.

The younger Griffin may join Archie as a first-round National Football League draft choice. He's almost certain to go by the second round.

"I've never resented Archie at all, but I'd rather not be drafted by Cincinnati. I'd rather establish my own identity. I have no preference, although I'd rather be with a contender. I've played on winning teams all my life since Little League," he said.

His final collegiate season has been a personal disappointment. He ranked 12th in team tackles (35), fourth in interceptions (2) and had no tackles for loss or fumble recoveries.

It may have been his vaunted reputation as a tackler and pass defender. "They have thrown away from me. It was disappointing. I was looking for something big this year. It got boring," said the compact safety.

Bullets stick Atlanta

By The Associated Press

The Atlanta Hawks must be sick of seeing the Washington Bullets...and equally sick of losing to them.

The Hawks played the Bullets two consecutive nights in a home-and-home series and both times lost to them by indentical margins — the last one a 113-106 decision Monday night.

"It's hard to win after you have beaten the same team the previous night," said Washington Coach Dick Motta. "Traditionally, teams split when they play on consecutive nights.

"But the fact that we won two nights in a row by seven points does not mean that we are seven points better than they are. It just worked out that way."

Atlanta Coach Hubie Brown felt a bit chagrined, especially with the home-court loss.

"Well," he said, "that's two tough losses for us. It's the first time in a while we've been under .500. We are 9-5 at home now. But I guess we have to be objective. It's been two seven-point losses to a heck of a good team."

The Bullets won the first game 100-93 Sunday night."

In Monday night's other NBA games, the Detroit Pistons defeated the Boston Celtics 122-100; the Houston Rockets tripped the Kansas City Kings 113-99 and the Denver Nuggets whipped the Pheonix Suns 127-108.

Larry Wright scored 10 of his 17 points in the final period to spur Washington over Atlanta. Atlanta scored 30 points in the last period — including 14 by Steve Hawes — but the Bullets held on to their nearly gamelong lead with the help of Wright's burst at the end.

Hawes had a career-high 25 points for Atlanta, many of them in the Hawks' fourthquarter rally, but admitted, "It was a little bit late." Added Hawes, "We haven't played a strong game the last two nights. When we do play well, we can beat anybody."

Pistons 122, Celtics 100

Eric Money's 23 points led Detroit over Boston. Money's nine points in the third helped the Pistons to a 100-68 margin at the end of the quarter. The Celts, who have now lost six straight and 11 straight games on the road, were led by former Piston Dave Bing with 19 points.

"The defense won the game for us tonight," said Detroit's interim coach, Bob Kauffman. "We put a lot of pressure on them. All of our men moved very well and shot very well."

Rockets 113, Kings 99

Calvin Murphy and Moses Malone pumped in 22 points each to spark Houston over Kansas City. Murphy scored 20 of his points in the first half as the Rockets took an early lead and were never headed.

Nuggets 127, Suns 108

David Thompson and Dan Issel each tallied 24 points, leading six Denver players in double figures as the Nuggets defeated Phoenix. The Suns were led by Walter Davis' 23 points.

Scribe finally stands up

Texas plays Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl Monday, and that in itself is a surprise.

You can find a lot of soothsayers now who saw it coming, not only the Southwest Conference, but maybe even a shot at the national title.

As a matter of fact, we were one that couldn't see how the Longhorns could miss, not with all that backfield speed and Earl Campbell. Cynics suggested Texas didn't have a quarterback, but the reasoning here was that all they needed was someone to hand the ball off to the Tyler Rose and stand clear.

Funny, you say, how come you hadn't heard all this before? Well, like Morgan Copeland, we didn't want to be laughed at and, frankly, there was some question as to Campbell's durability.

AT LUBBOCK in 1976, Earl raved and ranted up and down the Jones Stadium field against Texas Tech and for most of a half it looked like one of those games that would be won by the team that had the ball last.

Then, Earl limped off the field sometime in the second quarter and with him went Texas' football season. So what was to prevent it from happening again?

For one thing, Copeland, the linebacker from Midland who will be seeking to help preserve the Longhorns' No. 1 status next week, says this was a different Campbell.

"He trimmed down to about 220, about a 25-pound weight loss, and he was quicker, faster and tougher," said Morgan, who could have added "more durable."

THAT, OF course, was one of the prime reasons for Texas' turn-around from a 5-5 year and Copeland attributes the arrival as Coach Fred Akers as another big plus.

The one-time Longhorns' assistant who revived football at Wyoming during a two-year hiatus, not only junked the Wishbone, "but he did an excellent job of coaching in the technical sense."

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

Copeland said, "Akers is dynamic, enthusiastic and tremendously positive. He's the best motivator I've ever been around."

Senior Copeland doesn't see any drop off in the Longhorns' fortunes in the immediate future, either.

"IN 1978, the defense will have nine starters back, eight sophomores, one junior. We had only two seniors on defense, Brad Shearer and myself."

Copeland doesn't figure he'll be missed. "They have lots of depth at linebacker. The young ones are good, big, physical and talented. Shearer, of course, will be hard to replace."

Copeland points out that offensively, "Texas will have three quarterbacks returning, Mike McBath, Jon Aune and Randy McEachern, plus wide receiver Lam Jones and running back Ham Jones."

Morgan does admit that the other guy may not be easy to replace. "A guy like Campbell comes along once in a lifetime and nobody is going to make fans forget him."

JIMMY POTEET, who played on one of Midland's first basketball teams, was a weekend visitor in the Tall City. Fans who recall that Jimmy was a skinny guard on Midland's 1959 team may dispute the "one of the Midland's first basketball teams" suggestion, but if you are a longtime follower of Midland cage fortunes, you know what is meant.

Midland's basketball program was almost non-existent until the mid-1950's, usually deposited in the hands of a football assistant whose main function was to conduct the sport as an off-season conditioning program for football players.

A 32-game district losing streak was the result.

Ken Sewell became Midland's first "basketball" coach and managed to break the hex back in 1954, but it wasn't until Bob Todd's '59 team that the Bulldogs finally gained respectability.

TODD'S CLUB that year lost only three games, but failed to win district. If memory serves, all three losses were to champion Odessa.

"I remember the 32-game losing streak and Tom Dyer, who went to Stanford, from that '54 team and the guard Joe Nicholson who broke that streak. I suffered through it all."

Poteet apparently still is battling jinxes as coach for Bethany, Okla. Nazarene. "I've been to the NAIA tournament in Kansas City three times, once as a player (Pasadena Nazarene), once as an assistant coach and once as a coach. My teams lost in the first round, by close scores, each time. Last year, we didn't even get to Kansas City, losing in the playoff game by two points."

POTEET VOWS, "I won't be satisfied until I make it back and win that first game, just to find out what it's like to be on the other side."

Heading for an eight-day stay in Hawaii this week where Bethany will play two games, that sounds more like a vacation, Bethany is 9-2 and Jimmy thinks he just might make it back to the NAIA this year, if things continue to break his way.

Poteet took over at Bethany five years ago and after a shaky start has developed a winning program.

"We can pack only about 2,000 into our on-campus gym, but we play some games in the Myriad (Oklahoma City) and draw 8,000."

Bethany officials also are looking toward knocking out a wall and expanding the campus gym to 4,000.

"That probably would be adequate, since we have a small student body," says Jimmy. But knowing Poteet's way with jinxes, would it be big enough for an NAIA champion?

Razorbacks to file suits

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A Little Rock attorney said Monday he will file a lawsuit in federal court today that will seek to have three suspended University of Arkansas football players reinstated for the Orange Bowl.

Running backs Ben Cowins and Michael Forrest and wide receiver Donny Bobo were suspended last week by Coach Lou Holtz, allegedly because of an incident involving a woman in an athletic dormitory. The suspension covers only the Jan. 2 Orange Bowl game against Oklahoma.

John W. Walker, attorney for the three suspended players, said the suit will also allege a tradition of racial discrimination in the university's athletic department.

"It will be a class action suit attempting to enjoin the university from imposing a dual standard against black athletes," Walker said.

Walker said he would seek a temporary restraining order to stop Holtz from withholding the players from the game.

Walker also released a lengthy statement from the players which accused Holtz of discriminating against black athletes, particularly those who associate with white women.

Last week, Walker said Holtz told the three players they had violated his "do right" rule, of which the Bible is a source for the rule.

Holtz said from Miami he would have no comment on the suit or the allegations made in the player's statement.

Part of that statement is as follows:

"...We are...confused because we don't understand the 'do right' rule as it has been applied. We are thus left with no conclusion about the reason for his action other than that we are black students who had a non-physical, social encounter with a white person.

"We had heretofore been reluctant to voice a charge of racism against our coach, but feel that there is no other explanation for his decision to impose such a harsh penalty upon us, and to do so in a manner which raises before the entire nation questions about our criminality or morality.

"We have arrived at the conclusion that Coach Holtz is adverse to black-male, white-female associations...."

About the suit, Walker said, "We will be seeking that the university provide as much assistance to black athletes as they do white so they can simply graduate from school. I think we can prove that only a small percentage of black athletes graduate.

"The university provides much more assistance to white athletes. We're also concerned about the assistance the university gives white athletes after they get out of school. The black athletes are sort of cast out into the street after they graduate.

"There are some long-term things involved in this thing. We seek to remedy some situations that have existed in the last nine or ten years."

The Arkansas football team arrived in Miami Monday afternoon. Workouts were to begin this morning in preparation for the Orange Bowl.

Fred Akers loses brother, nephew

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A brother and nephew of University of Texas football Coach Fred Akers were killed Monday in a one-car crash near Armorel, Ark. on Arkansas Highway 18, state police said.

State troopers withheld the identification of a third man killed in the wreck.

A spokesman for Cobb Funeral Service in Blytheville, Ark. identified two of the victims as Carl L. Akers, 36, and Lonnie O. Akers Jr., 22.

Warriors, Texas take victories

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Marquette seemed well on the way to winning its annual Milwaukee Classic holiday college basketball tournament, but the Warrior coach, Hank Raymonds, sounded anything but pleased.

"I don't like that kind of basketball," Raymonds said, referring to the free-wheeling, oneon-one play in the second half of Marquette's 90-73 victory over Eastern Kentucky Monday night.

The victory sent the defending National Collegiate Athletic Association champion Warriors (6-1) into the tournament final tonight versus Texas (8-1), which knocked off Army 74-73 Monday night. Eastern Kentucky (4-5) meets Army (7-4) in a consolation game tonight.

"We didn't have a basketball team. We had five players out there," Raymonds said of his team, which led 45-28 after the first half and won by the exact same margin of 17 points after the two teams played even at 45-45 through the second half.

"It was like we were playing playground ball. We'd let them take a shot and then we'd take a shot," he said. "You can't afford to play that kind of game against anybody."

Marquette, with Butch Lee totaling 25 points and Jerome Whitehead adding 21, established control by outscoring the Colonels 17-2 during a four-minute stretch midway through the first half to lead 35-16 with 6:27 remaining before intermission.

The Warrior players seemed to enjoy the "run and gun" style of play that developed as the game continued.

"I want them to have fun," Raymonds said. "Basketball should be fun, but it shouldn't be like it was in the second half."

He also said he sees Texas as a good competitor.

"They play match up defense. They move the ball very well. This is a good basketball team," Raymonds said of the Longhorns. "We're going to have to control tempo, and we've got to get the ball inside. We simply have to get the ball inside."

Texas survived a late Army surge to win its contest, as John Moore and Tyrone Branyan each hit two free throws in the closing seconds to insure the victory.

Forward Gary Winton led the Cadets with 24 points, slightly under his per-game average, while Moore had 18 to lead Texas, now riding an eight-game winning streak.

Texas outscored the Cadets 12-2 to pull away from a 41-41 during a second half spree, and Army Coach Mike Krzyzewski listed several factors in that scoring spurt.

"They (Texas) played pretty good defense at that point," he said. "Our shot selection wasn't the best. We played in different phases. The last 10 minutes of the first half and the last 10 minutes of the game we played pretty well. But when we didn't play well, they took advantage."

Denver one step away from fairy tale finish

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos, picked in many preseason polls to finish no higher than third in their division, are one step away from the Super Bowl and a fairy-tale finish to one of this year's most improbable stories.

It looms as one giant step, however. To get to New Orleans, the Broncos must beat their old foe, Oakland — something they've done only seven times in the 36 meetings between the two teams.

Complicating the task is the fact that Denver, while playing at home against the Raiders once each year, hasn't beaten Oakland here since 1962. This season, the Broncos won 30-7 in Oakland but the Raiders took the return bout here, 24-14.

The rubber match, for the American Football Conference championship, begins at 2 p.m., EST, on New Year's Day.

Denver, in the playoffs for the first time, advanced to Sunday's showdown with a 34-21 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers last Saturday. Oakland beat Baltimore 37-31 in overtime to complete the matchup.

The same formula that produced a 12-2 regular-season record worked for the Broncos in Saturday's playoff game: An aggressive defense which forces turnovers, an opportunistic offense led by consistent quarterback Craig Morton, a strong kicking game, and rabid fans.

"We didn't get many yards in the first half but we created a couple of breaks," noted Denver Coach Red Miller. "Then we just outplayed the Steelers in the second half."

The Broncos, despite generating just 44 total yards in the first half, were tied with the Steelers 14-14 at intermission. John Schultz blocked a punt and recovered it at the Pittsburgh 17-yard line in the opening period, helping Denver to a quick TD. In the second quarter, defensive end Lyle Alzado forced a fumble and linebacker Tom Jackson ran 30 yards with the loose ball to the Pittsburgh 10. Otis Armstrong ran it in on the next play.

The Steelers, meanwhile, got short-yardage touchdowns from Terry Bradshaw and Franco Harris, capping long drives.

Denver apparently got a lift from the intimidating tactics of Steeler defensive tackle Joe Greene, who slugged guard Paul Howard and center Mike Montler on successive plays late in the half. Denver fans chanted, "We Want Greene," but the Broncos declined to retaliate.

Instead, with the confidence usually associated with veteran playoff teams, the Broncos picked the Steelers apart in the second half.

Morton and Bradshaw traded TD passes before Jim Turner broke the 21-21 tie with a 44-yard field goal with 7:17 left. Less than a minute later, Jackson intercepted and returned 32 yards to the Steeler 9, setting up another Turner three-pointer.

With two minutes left, Jackson stole a second Bradshaw pass, and Morton followed with a clinching, 34-yard scoring pass to Jack Dolbin. Denver had converted the blocked punt, fumble recovery and two interceptions into 24 points.

Meladon favored in sweepstakes

LEOPARDSTOWN, Republic of Ireland (AP) — Meladon was strongly favored to win the Irish sweepstakes hurdles race at Leopardstown today in a contest that could bring riches to lucky Irish Sweepstakes ticket holders.

Bookies continued to offer steady odds of 7 to 2 against Meladon. But Decent Fellow, the second favorite, was at 6 to 1, compared with 7 to 2 before Christmas.

The bookies offer the lure of better odds on Decent Fellow because so many are backing Meladon to win.

Stock market declines

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today, showing little left-over strength from the rally it staged before the Christmas holiday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 23.65 points in the last three trading days last week, slipped back 2.17 to 827.70 by noontime today.

Declines outnumbered advances by a 6-5 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said investors were expecting some adverse news Wednesday when the government reports on the U.S. balance of trade for November.

A large trade deficit of late has been cited as a primary reason for pressure on the dollar in foreign-exchange markets.

Kroger Co. topped the active list, down ¼ at 27. A 175,000-share block traded at that price.

General Motors, which posted an 8.5 percent drop in mid-December car sales Friday, lost ⅝ to 63 in active trading.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gave up .06 to 52.20. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .01 at 126.27.

Volume on the Big Board slowed to 7.52 million shares by noontime from 10.13 million at the same point Friday.

Boy wonder rides again

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — The rain was continuous, the track muddy, and the crowd panicked when a gun fell from a patron's pocket.

But Steve Cauthen, the boy wonder from New York, showed 42,000 California railbirds the style that made him famous by winning four of his seven races on opening day at Santa Anita racetrack. He had been scheduled to appear in eight of the nine races on the first day of Santa Anita's 78-day season.

Cauthen missed the featured eighth race, however. His favored mount, Barrera, was scratched from the six-furlong, $40,000 Palos Verdes Handicap. Sandy Hawley of Canada won going away on Impressive Luck, and Maheras, ridden by Lafitt Pincay, was second.

Nearly 70 yards from the finish, Impressive Luck was far out in front, where he stayed. Afterwards, Hawley described the experience of riding a horse in muddy going: "You have to keep after the horses all the way. Your whip gets heavy from the wet, your clothes get damp and you feel real heavy. We wear three or four pair of goggles, sometimes five or six. Whenever a pair gets muddy we just pull it down and use the next pair."

A scuffle on a stairwell and resultant body-trampling panic by the crowd occurred just before the feature race when a gun fell from the pocket of one of the combattants.

Frightened racing fans screamed and shoved toward the doorways, trampling slowmovers. At least 20 people were injured and treated at the track's first aid station. Those with more serious injuries were taken to Arcadia Methodist and Santa Teresita Hospitals.

Arcadia police booked Gerardo Byrne on suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon.

Cauthen started with a 3-length first race triumph aboard Neumie's Boy. He pulled himself out of a box on the first turn of the 11-16th mile race, slipped through to the rail in the backstretch, caught the leaders in the stretch and pulled away from Hawley and Hunechin Chief. Bacanazo, ridden by Francesco Mena, was third.

Inverness Lad was Cauthen's $15.80 winning mount in the third race. Pincay nabbed a close second aboard Stand Pat, and Victor Mercado came third with Soft Market.

A Twinkling carried Cauthen to a sixth-race triumph and in the seventh, the youth rode Dr. Krohn to an $11.60 victory. Fernando Toro placed with El Visto Bueno and Frank Olivares on Antique was third.

Yule accidents claim 390 lives

By The Associated Press

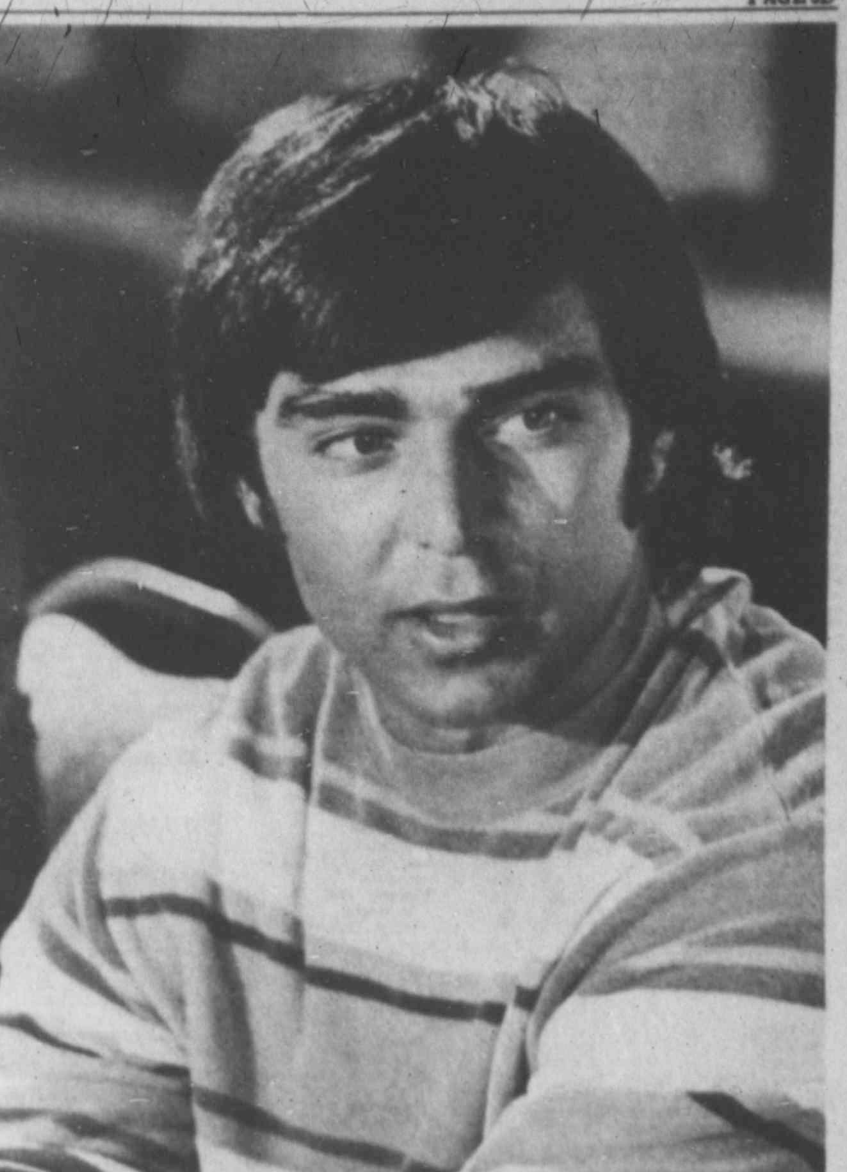

Traffic accidents over the three-day Christmas holiday claimed 390 lives — a toll below pre-holiday estimates and last year's three-day Christmas total.

The National Safety Council estimated before the count began at 6 p.m. local time Friday that between 380 and 480 people might die in highway accidents before the holiday ended at midnight local time Monday.

DICKIE POST
. . .changes uniform for jeans

Chargers' Post finds new life

By BOB ORTMAN
Copley News Service

The uniform is work-worn blue jeans instead of football togs, and the sign on the pickup truck advertises "professional horseshoeing, trimming." But there is no mistaking the driver...those dark good looks and shy, little boy's smile.

You knew him as Dickie Post, running back. Now he is Dick Post, farrier, who operates his mobile unit out of Campo, Calif.

"You make appointments," he said, "like house calls, is what they are."

American Football League Rookie of the Year in 1967 and AFL rushing champ in 1969 when he gained 873 yards, the 5-foot-9, 190-pound Post was one of the first of the compact models...those mercurial little scooters who make every play a breathtaking adventure.

"It's been so long ago, it seems like almost a different life," said the Oklahoma (Paulls Valley) farm boy who came to personify the Charger lightning bolt during a meteoric four-year career with the San Diego professionals in which he amassed 2,519 yards in 568 carries.

"It was a great experience," he acknowledged, "but I'm glad I'm out of it. I had a lot of fine opportunities and met a lot of fine people, but there are just other things a man can do and a guy needs to do. It doesn't matter what you're doing as long as you're happy, as the old saying goes."

And Post is happy. There are no regrets, even though at 30 he could be at the peak of his prowess as a runner had not his career been cut short by a succession of injuries. He spent so much time in the hospital — "four operations on my knees and one on my shoulder" — he could have established legal residence there.

"I'm sure I would have played as long as my legs held up," said the University of Houston product, "but that's just because you don't do anything different. Having had both experiences, I would choose to be out of it.

"I don't have to go to the hospital every winter for an operation," he observed, laughing. "That's kind of nice to have behind you."

When he turned his back on football, it was a complete about-face.

He has attended only one game — "I was forced into it" — and has seen very few on television. "I didn't even watch the Super Bowl or any of the play-offs," he said. "Other things were going on."

Dick has turned over a new leaf to an old love, horses.

"I was always interested in horses," said Dick, "but somewhere along the line, sports took over. Once you're involved in that, everything else pretty much has to take a back seat. So I just never got to express it until after I got out of sports."

While still with the Chargers, Post had helped establish a chain of men's clothing stores featuring mod fashions. He was his own best model. But he lost — no pun intended — his shirt. Dick Post Ltd. continues but without him.

Dick became involved in a construction business, and he figured to make that his life until sometime down the road when he hoped to breed and train Arabian horses. But...

"Things were a little slow," he reported, "so I went to school (Hillcroft Horseshoeing School). I had a couple Arabians. I just kinda wanted to learn how to take care of them myself.

"I liked it well enough that I decided to go into it as a business, incorporate it with breaking and training horses, the whole bit.

Dick brought his act to San Diego's backcountry approximately a year ago but now opportunity seems to be beckoning elsewhere.

Philadelphia gridders take game seriously

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The two-hand touch football played each fall on inner city playgrounds is more than a game. It's a chance for glory.

Missing are the huge stadiums with cosmetic grass, no-cut pro contracts with bonus clauses and recognition outside the neighborhood.

But 14,000 men and women — salesmen, plumbers, school teachers and other frustrated jocks — don numbered jerseys to play in the Philadelphia Recreation Department's 120 organized leagues. And they take their brand of football seriously.

"It's an autumn sickness. It's madness," said Tom Fitzpatrick, a 27-year-old weekend quarterback.

"It doesn't even look like we're having fun out there. Look at those guys. They're running around, hollering at each other, serious as they can be. My wife came to a game and said, 'You guys are definitely a bunch of ying-yangs'," he said.

"But it's fun. It's exercise. And this is a chance to get rid of a lot of frustrations. It's definitely some type of frustration outlet.

"Either you were never a good player when you were young or you were good and you want to hang on to it. It's like life and death with us," Fitzpatrick said.

Participants ranging in age from 14 to 40 with nicknames like Bingo, Bear and Weasel begin playing in September and finish their playoffs in December. One team even has a soccer-style kicker.

Usually, each team in a league pays a $50 entry fee for trophies and awards. Teams also put up money each game for officials, and the rules vary from league to league. The 30 women's teams play a variation called flag football, but basically, there are eight players to a team competing on a 100-yard field.

Since nobody wears helmets or protective padding, a tackle is made when a defender touches a ball carrier with two hands. But touch in this town usually means two hands and down. Games often get rough.

"There aren't too many injuries," said Steve Melchiore, a playground supervisor. "About two weeks ago, one guy lost five teeth — but that was in a fight after the game."

Organized touch football leagues are as old as anyone can remember. They are a natural progression of the game played in back alleys, where a street quarterback tells his receiver to go down two manhole covers and cut to the red Chevy.

The game has even produced bona fide heroes, like wide receiver Vince Papale of the Philadelphia Eagles. A track star in college, Papale quenched his competitive thirst for football by playing in the touch leagues. Then he made it to the National Football League as a 30-year-old rookie a year ago.

But Papale's story is one in a million. The overwhelming majority of combatants will always be amateurs, playing for cheap trophies, neighborhood pride and camaraderie.

Sports in brief

FOOTBALL

TEMPE, Ariz. — Fullback Matt Suhey scored twice as the eight-ranked Penn State Nittany Lions defeated Arizona State 42-30 in the seventh annual Fiesta Bowl.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Nine University of Arkansas football players decided to rescind their decision to boycott the Orange Bowl because of a disagreement over Coach Lou Holtz' suspension of three other players for the bowl game.

UNDATED — The Denver Broncos will meet the Oakland Raiders in the American Football Conference championship game next week and the Dallas Cowboys will face the Minnesota Vikings in the NFC title game after each of the four clubs won their quarter-final encounters in the National Football League playoffs over the weekend.

TENNIS

MELBOURNE, Australia — Australian John Newcombe defeated Stan Smith 6-3, 7-6, 7-5 in the third round of the $200,000 Australian Open tennis tournament.

Gentleman Joe forgets mean

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Forget the old "Mean Joe" nickname. Pittsburgh Steeler defensive tackle Joe Greene wants to be known as "Gentleman Joe."

"I'm a gentleman in this game all the way down the line — all the way down the line," Greene said Saturday, after punching two Denver Broncos in a nationally televised American Football Conference playoff game.

"My job is to try to get to the ball carrier on every play. If the guy across the line from me impedes my progress illegally, what am I supposed to do?" said Greene, whose punches gave Denver's 34-21 victory over the Steelers a bittersweet taste.

"I'm not sorry it happened," he said, adding that the smash that floored offensive guard Paul Howard and a subsequent slam into the ribs of center Mike Montler were retaliation for holding.

But Denver Coach Red Miller found Greene's actions far from gentlemanly.

"It was a very flagrant foul," said Miller. "I don't think it belongs in football. The referees should control it."

Denver's triumph quashed Pittsburgh's hopes for an unprecedented third Super Bowl victory, and sent the Broncos against the Oakland Raiders in next Sunday's AFC championship game.

Saturday's game was 14-14 at halftime, and some Broncos said Greene's late second-quarter intimidation tactics gave Denver a second-half lift.

"The way to take care of that and hurt them the most is to beat them," said Miller. "They go home losers, not winners."

It was not the first time this season that Greene, who has carried the nickname "Mean Joe," all his pro football career, had stirred controversy.

He boiled over in November after officials called him offsides three times in Baltimore.

"I'm on a crusade now against the striped shirts," he said at the time. "If I get half a chance, I'll punch one of them out."

Greene also threatened to cleat interfering officials in the spine, call them dirty names and insult their mothers.

Paterno still unhappy

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Penn State football coach Joe Paterno feels he's been portrayed as the heavy in the controversial choice of Arkansas over his Eastern champions for the Jan. 2 Orange Bowl game in Miami.

Paterno added more mystery to the incident after his team beat Arizona State 42-30 in the seventh annual Fiesta Bowl Christmas Day. The Nittany Lions took an early 14-0 lead on a first-period blocked punt and following an ASU fumble, and never were headed.

The Penn State coach admitted that despite the win over the 15th ranked Sun Devils and a final 11-1 record, he was disappointed that his team didn't have a voice in the determination of a national collegiate champion.

Paterno isn't bashful about his 1977 team. He believes it's just as good as the seven teams ranked ahead of the Lions in the Top Ten — Texas, Oklahoma, Alabama, Notre Dame, Michigan, Kentucky and Arkansas.

"This team would be awfully tough to beat right now," said Paterno, whose bowl record is 6-3-1 in 12 years of head coaching. "It's the best balanced team since 1971," noted college football's winningest coach. And that team had Franco Harris and Lydell Mitchell.

Then why did Paterno allow the American Broadcasting Company to switch the final game of the season against Pitt from Nov. 19 to Nov. 26? This left the major bowls in a dilemma, since Nov. 19, was the deadline for selections.

Didn't Paterno and Pitt let the greed for that national TV money create the situation?

"It wasn't greed," Paterno insisted. "I don't think that's what lost us the (Orange) bid. I think if people really got down to the reason they went for Arkansas, it goes deeper than that. I mean they (Orange Bowl Committee) could have waited.

"We had agreed to wait. It wasn't a queston that they had to go. They could have waited for the Arkansas-Texas Tech and Penn State-Pitt results. Why didn't they wait?"

A source told the Associated Press the reason concerned Pitt. In 1976, the source said, No. 1-ranked Pitt strung the Orange Bowl along, and finally the Panthers went to the Sugar Bowl where they walloped Georgia.

The Orange Bowl was angry at Pitt. And this November, when Pitt and others in Pittsburgh pressured the Orange Bowl people to wait, the Miami group in effect told the Panthers to go kick their footballs elsewhere. There was no way the Orange Bowl would take Pitt.

The source insisted that Penn State was caught in the middle. The Orange Bowl couldn't risk waiting, because if Pitt beat the Lions, it would leave the bowl in an untenable position—a team with two losses.

Penn State beat Pitt 15-13. The Pathers accepted an invitation to the Gator Bowl, the Lions the Fiesta. Arkansas got the Orange, and in the season finale beat Texas Tech in a cliff hanger.

Hospital survey finds 60 percent substandard

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Sixty percent of 2,750 American hospitals surveyed in the past year have been found substandard by national accrediting officials for failing to meet tough new building safety or medical auditing rules.

Massachusetts General Hospital — teaching hospital for Harvard Medical School — and the University of Chicago Hospital have likewise been given limited accreditation.

Most of these and hundreds of other downgraded hospitals throughout the country failed to meet tighter "life safety" standards demanded by the federal government. Their physical plant deficiencies often included doors, windows and walls that would fail to keep smoke or fire from nearby patients.

Their medical deficiences were mainly failures to keep records properly, or failures in the ways their doctors "audited" each others' performance. Most experts believe medical records and audits reflect the quality of a hospital's care.

Dr. Charles A. Sanders, general director of Boston's famed Massachusetts General Hospital, was among a number of hospital administrators who criticized the new life safety standards as unrealistic and costly.

He said it would cost his hospital, and others like it, "millions of dollars" to remodel and rebuild, though it has not lost a patient to fire in its 156 years and there is "no objective evidence" that the new rules will save lives. He called the standards "often picky regulations" that threatened "to drive (hospital) costs into the stratosphere."

Instead of the two-year accreditation that hospitals cherish as a seal of approval, all these hospitals were given only a one-year accreditation — an accreditation conditional on repairing deficiencies — by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

The joint commission is a cooperative supported by the American Hospital Association, American Medical Association, American College of Surgeons and American College of Physicians. It has tightened both its life safety rules, in response to federal pressure, and its many rules on medical record-keeping and auditing.

Dr. George Graham, the commission's associate director, said in an interview: "One-year accreditation very definitely means we are telling hospitals there are things they must correct or they will not be re-accredited." He defended the tighter rules, saying, "We and the government are both looking at every standard we develop to ask, 'Is it cost effective? Will it do that much good?'"

The joint commission has been judging hospitals since 1918. And with the start of Medicare in the mid-1960s, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare began "deeming" accredited hospitals as automatically "certifiable" for federal payments.

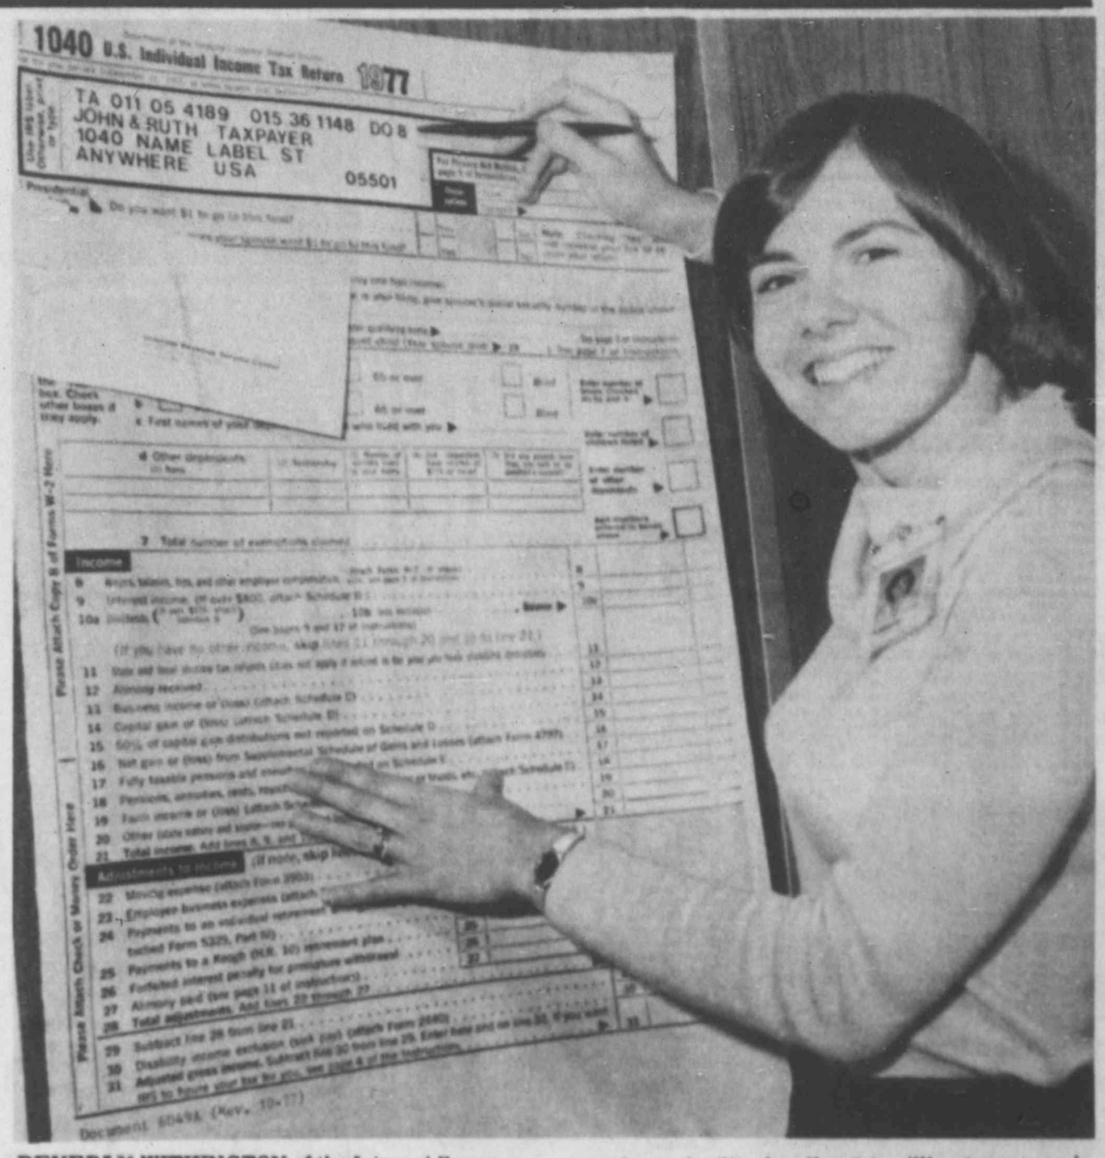

Then senior citizens' groups complained that HEW was letting the private commission approve substandard hospitals. So in 1972, by order of Congress, HEW began its own "validation surveys:" spot checks of accredited hospitals conducted at HEW request by state fire marshals and other state officials.

Of 105 accredited hospitals scrutinized in the first such round, 65 were found to have important life safety defects. Of 156 seen in the 1974-75 round, 91 were called deficient.

This — and the writing of a new life-safety fire protection code by the National Fire Protection Association, and pressure from many directions for tougher medical standards — led to the tighter inspections started by the commission a year ago.

If the "voluntary approach" to assuring quality health care fails, such inspections may "become a function of government," Dr. John

Renowned Argentine editor dies

The Los Angeles Times

BUENOS AIRES — Alberto Gainza Paz, whose life-long defense of press freedom in the Western Hemisphere won him an international reputation, died early Monday at the age of 78.

Owner, publisher and editor of La Prensa of Buenos Aires, one of the Spanish-speaking world's most respected newspapers, Gainza Paz had been ill with cancer of the esophagus since August.

In mid-October, he was forced to stop going to his newspaper office daily where he customarily made all important editorial decisions. He lapsed into a coma at his home on Christmas Day and died at 4 a.m. Monday.

It's Israel's move, Egyptian president says

By The Associated Press

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was quoted today as saying that Israel, under the leadership of Prime Minister Menahem Begin, has not yet made the tough decisions or concessions needed to bring about a Middle East peace.

The two leaders held a Christmas summit in Ismailia, Egypt, and came away still divided over the future of Palestinian Arabs living on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip.

"No, Israel has not yet taken the difficult decision," Sadat was quoted by Egyptian newspapers as saying. "Mr. Begin may be of the view that he has made concessions but I see that he has not."

Begin proposed self-rule for the 1.1 million Palestinian Arabs living on the West Bank and Gaza Strip with continued Israeli military presence. Sadat held out for creation of an independent Palestinian state and complete Israeli withdrawal.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli prime minister briefed his cabinet on the Ismailia summit and met with U.S. Ambassador Samuel W. Lewis apparently to report on the talks and current status of the peacemaking effort.

The semiofficial Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram reported that the summit talks did produce agreement on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Sinai Peninsula. Israeli troops still control more than 80 per cent of the 20,000 square mile Egyptian desert peninsula.

The newspaper said Israel wanted to announce the Egyptian-Israeli accord publicly but Sadat refused, saying their summit talks were aimed not at reaching a private agreement but a comprehensive settlement.

In Moscow, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda called the Sadat-Begin summit a failure and said that the only way to achieve an overall Mideast settlement is for all parties and their "allies" to cooperate.

The newspaper claimed the Israeli prime minister presented warmed-over peace proposals. "All gestures by Cairo were viewed in Tel Aviv as a sign of weakness and readiness to make considerable concessions."

Arabic language newspapers in Cairo stressed the positive aspects of the summit talks. But the English-

Calling cards often good for few chuckles

Now, nobody has "seen it all" or ever will.

But sometimes you think you have, especially on those occasions when you are handed some prankster's calling card.

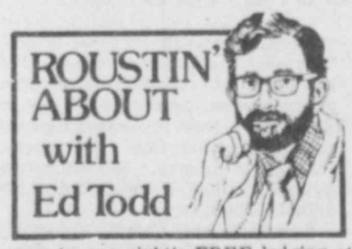

The variations, like the extent of the universe, never cease — or so it would appear.

"Here," someone, oftentimes a friend, will say, "take my card."

Unsuspecting, you reach out in the changing name of courtesy, and take a card.

It bears two works in boldface capital letters: "MY CARD."

Thanks. And you return it.

Over at Stanton, Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders hands out a card and expects you to do the calling. It reads like this:

"Be My Guest: This card entitles you to one night's FREE lodging at the Martin County Jail as a guest of Sheriff Dan Saunders."

U.S. officials believe Russians deploying new mobile missile

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of uncertainty, U.S. officials now believe that Russia has started deploying a new mobile land-based missile with potential to hit the United States.

In its present form, the Soviet SS-20 missile's estimated 3,000-mile range limits it to targets in Western Europe, China and the Middle East.

But U.S. specialists say its range can be extended easily to 5,500 nautical miles by adding a third rocket stage to the present two stages.

That would make it similar to the SS-16 intercontinental ballistic missile and put the United States within its range.

U.S. military officials are concerned the conversion could tip the nuclear balance against the United States quickly in a time of diplomatic crisis, especially since mobile missile bases would be hard to find and knock out.

Pentagon officials warned earlier about the potential for conversion of the SS-20, but noted then that the missile had not been deployed.

The months of uncertainty and conflicting reports on deployment apparently stemmed from difficulty in locating and identifying the SS-20's movable launch equipment at combat ready positions inside Russia.

However, U.S. military intelligence analysts now say the SS-20 is deployed in eastern Russia.

That suggests the first combat-ready SS-20s, which can carry three nuclear warheads each, are aimed at targets in China, with which Russia has been feuding for years.

Intelligence analysts also believe preparations are under way to deploy mobile missiles in western and central Russia. From western Russia, SS-20s could blanket Western Europe. From central Russia, the missiles could strike targets in the Middle East.

With their 3,000-mile range, the SS-20s are unlikely to be subject to limitations on strategic nuclear weapons now being negotiated by Soviet and U.S. diplomats.

That is because, although they could be converted to long range missiles, SS-20s as now deployed do not have long enough range to strike the United States from Russian soil.

Wreck kills Rankin youth

RANKIN — A 15-year-old Rankinite was killed Monday night just west of here when the motorcycle he was riding and a pickup truck collided.

Tony L. McKenzie was pronounced dead at the scene of the accident by Rankin Justice of the Peace Reba Price shortly before 8 p.m., according to the Department of Public Safety.

McKenzie's motorcycle and a pickup truck driven by Brian McLaughlin of Midkiff collided on Texas 329 .7 miles west of Rankin. Both vehicles were westbound on the highway when the accident occurred, troopers said.

Car customizer Don Bruce works on the roof of a Lincoln, which he will soon suit to the driver who wants more than can be purchased in an auto showroom. His work often adds $20,000 to a Lincoln's $15,000 price tag. (AP Laserphoto)

Car customizer caters to whims

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Don Bruce builds cars for folks who are tired of the mundane world of $15,000 Lincolns.

For a mere $20,000 above and beyond the already-handsome price tag on your next Lincoln, Bruce and his auto wizards will turn the luxury car into a more luxurious vehicle — reminiscent of the Lincolns of yesteryear.

"People have a quirk," says philosopher Bruce. "As soon as you say you can't have it, they say, 'I want it,' particularly if they have the money."

What they can't have now, without the money, is a Lincoln convertible. The last one rolled glamorously out of Detroit in 1948. But Bruce's crew of exacting specialists will add $20 per yard leather and the other niceties of life to make your common Lincoln into a thing of beauty.

Last year in this Fort Worth suburb, Bruce turned out 10 of the expensive rag tops. This year, he hopes to lighten the bank accounts of another 100 or so motorists who yearn for the years of the grand touring car.

Bruce's plan began a couple of years ago when he built a Cadillac station wagon convertible. The Caddy sold for $24,000. Now, he specializes in re-working Lincolns, which are sold through a Dallas dealership.

That first creation was bought by a Santa Monica, Calif., car dealer. The car caused such a commotion on the West Coast the dealer gave a cocktail party and auctioned it off. The buyer shipped it to Saudi Arabia.

"Just as well," he quipped. "It's too far to bring in for servicing."

Bruce doesn't think people buy his creations because they have a burning desire for windblown hair. Instead, he says: "They are buying a special car — something nobody else has."

The $20,000 includes more than simply carving a hole in the roof. The radio speakers are relocated in the rear armrests and every metal gizmo inside is chrome plated. The body is steel reinforced.

Bruce said the automobile has replaced the horse "in man's love of mobility."

And the whole idea is to provide a nicer way to get from Point A to Point B.

"The more luxury in your mobility, the more enjoyable the trip."

Rain clouds forecast

Rain is in the forecast for tonight and Wednesday.

And a dreary sky this morning seemed to more than support National Weather Service predictions for a 20 percent chance of rain tonight and Wednesday.

With or without rain, however, the Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal predicts considerable cloudiness through Wednesday.

The low tonight is expected to be in the mid-30s, while the high Wednesday is expected to be in the upper 50s.

The high Monday was 61 degrees and the overnight low was 37 degrees.

Cloudy skies loomed over much of the Permian Basin this morning, adding a wintry-feeling touch to temperatures which ranged from the mid- to upper-30s.

"It feels like moisture," said an official at the Howard County Sheriff's office.

Cloudy and cool weather was reported in Lamesa, Stanton, Rankin, Crane, Odessa and Andrews. Clear skies were reported at Big Lake, however.

Brisk, cold temperatures again jolted Texans out of their sleep today with many cities in the northeastern third of the state reporting readings in the 20s.

Dallas and Fort Worth had a predawn temperature of 27 degrees under partly cloudy skies while Wichita Falls recorded 25 degrees under cloudy skies.

Clearcuttings not likely cause of flooding in Pacific Northwest

SEATTLE (AP) — Did clearcutting contribute to flood damage earlier this month in the Pacific Northwest by increasing runoff or causing debris to block rivers and streams?

Probably not in most cases, according to forestry experts, hydrologists and others questioned in a recent survey, although most conceded that research to date provides few if any certain answers.

The survey of Oregon and Washington state officials, U.S. Forest Service experts, University of Washington and Oregon State University professors and a representative of the Sierra Club was conducted by the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

The survey report covered only general findings and did not quote any of those surveyed.

Although a living forest holds water, those questioned generally said clearcutting probably made little difference because, by the time the warm and heavy rains had started, even heavily forested lands were so wet they could hold little additional water.

In addition, according to the survey report, the melting of snow by rainfall on clearcut mountain slopes probably had no significant impact far downstream where major flooding occurred because major drainage basins include both logged and forested areas.

Proper logging practices minimize debris deposits in rivers and streams, but not all loggers take the necessary precautions, the report said.

For example, debris from clearcut areas is almost certain to wind up in a river unless the loggers remove it from natural drainage channels and flood plains.

However, the report noted that second-growth forests on former clearcuts frequently deposit less debris than old-growth forests in which decades of wind, disease and insect damage may left numerous dead trees and fallen branches.

The most spectacular case of flooding caused by a debris dam was in the southeast King County hamlet of Greenwater. The cause of that dam may wind up being debated in court.

one of these slick cards, is trying to drum up the nerve to call the sheriff's hand.

Down south, McCamey's Tom Spalding has a different kind of card — about index-card size — which he freely passes out to friends and amiable strangers.

The card, which bears verse after the likeness of a poem, begins with the woes of a spent youth and winds up on the obituary page of a newspaper.

It's cute but not original. Some salesman, possibly in the coffin business, passed it to Spalding, who is late of the undertaking business.

It starts off:

"How do I know that my youth is all spent?

"Well, my get up and go has got up and went."

And the lines of verses end like so:

"Since I've retired from life's competition,

"I busy myself with complete repetition.

"I get up each morning — I dust off my wits,

"Pick up the paper and read the 'Obits.'

"If my name is missing, I know I'm not dead.

"So I eat a good breakfast and go back to bed."

As comforting or dismal as these words may be, they certainly don't fit Spalding. He's as industrious as a West Texas dirt dauber and is as friendly as a moon beam in running his country neighborhood grocery store in McCamey.

Cancer claims renowned Argentine newspaperman

medium in Argentine public life almost from the day it was founded 108 years ago by Gainza Paz's maternal grandfather, Jose C. Paz. The paper quickly gained an international reputation for the thoroughness of its world news coverage.

Gainza Paz was its third editor, succeeding his late uncle, Ezequiel P. Paz, in 1943, and guiding the newspaper to its maximum renown as a champion of freedom of the press.

That defense cost Gainza Paz the temporary loss of La Prensa and forced him into exile during the first regime of Argentina's military dictator, the late Juan D. Peron.

The systematic harassment of the newspaper by Peron and his powerful second wife, Evita, followed by Peron's confiscation of La Prensa in 1951 drew international attention to the repressive nature of the Peron regime.

Gainza Paz erscaped arrest by crossing the Rio de La Plata into neighboring Uruguay one night in a friend's small boat. From Uruguay and later from New York, he led a campaign to keep world opinion focused on Peron's excesses.

The newspaper was returned to its rightful owners, which then included Gainza Paz's late mother, Zelmira Paz de Gainza, five months after Peron's overthrow in 1955.

Under Gainza Paz, La Prensa kept an unrelentingly critical editorial eye on the second Peronist regime (1973-76), the only major newspaper in Argentina to do so. Among other stories, La Prensa first broke the news of malfeasance that led to the first of four criminal charges now pending against Peron's third wife and successor in the presidency, Maria Estela Peron.

Beyond cancelling all official advertising in La Prensa, Peron did not overtly harass the newspaper during his second regime. But La Prensa suffered serious financial losses as many private firms, including large U.S. companies based here, stopped advertising in the newspaper, fearing reprisals from Peron.

During his lifetime, Gainza Paz became a personal symbol of the ongoing fight for press freedom in the Western Hemisphere, winning many honors and prizes, including honorary degrees from Columbia and Northwestern universities.

Educated as a lawyer, he never practiced that profession. Instead, he devoted his entire adult life to La Prensa and journalism.

Gainza Paz was influential in the 1950 rejuvenation of the Inter-American Press Association, an organization of North and South American newspaper publishers committed to press freedom, and was a founder of the Argentine Newspaper Editors' Association.

He was an uncompromising friend of the United States from the time of his first visit in 1943. La Prensa often gave editorial backing to U.S. foreign policy initiatives, one of the few Latin American newspapers regularly to do so.

Gainza Paz was a member of the Society of Professional Journalists (Sigma Delta Chi) in the United States and an honorary member of the New York-based Overseas Press Club of America.

In recent years, he despaired for press freedom in Latin America, which has declined steadily since 1963 with the rise in military dictatorships throughout the region.

Affeldt, commission president, recently warned.

If a hospital repeatedly fails to win accreditation, it may also lose approval as a training place for the residents or young doctors, who give much of the medical care, as well as for many other kinds of health workers. And other staff doctors and nurses and technicians will soon begin to look for other places to work.

The results of the commission's zeal actually began showing a few years ago. In 1975 St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington lost its long-standing accreditation.

Until this year, however, two-year accreditations outnumbered limited one-year approvals by three to one. This year, said Graham; 35 percent of all hospitals surveyed have been given one-year approvals because of life safety defects; 20 percent because of "quality assurance" deficiencies (mainly in adequate self-evaluation by medical staffs), and 5 percent for defects in both areas.

Last September Temple University Hospital in Philadelphia was disaccredited, though it is appealing the findings. Massachussetts General Hospital was downgraded on building safety and lack of enough medical audits. Duke University and University of Alabama hospitals, Boston Hospital for Women and Boston City Hospital were also on the new one-year list.

Yule accidents claim 364 lives

By The Associated Press

Traffic accidents over the three-day Christmas holiday claimed 364 lives — a toll below pre-holiday estimates and last year's three-day Christmas total.

The National Safety Council estimated before the count began at 6 p.m. local time Friday that between 380 and 480 people might die in highway accidents before the holiday ended at midnight local time Monday.

language Egyptian Gazette said that despite Begin's claim that the talks were successful, it is "obvious for all to see that very little progress has been made because of the continuing inflexibility of Mr. Begin and his strategists."

Man-in-the-street reaction in Egypt also reflected disappointment.

"The Israelis are still insisting on what they want," said taxi driver Saleh Awad. A Suez Canal authority worker in Ismailia added: "Either the Israelis have the intention to make peace in which case we can settle it, or they don't, in which case it is useless."

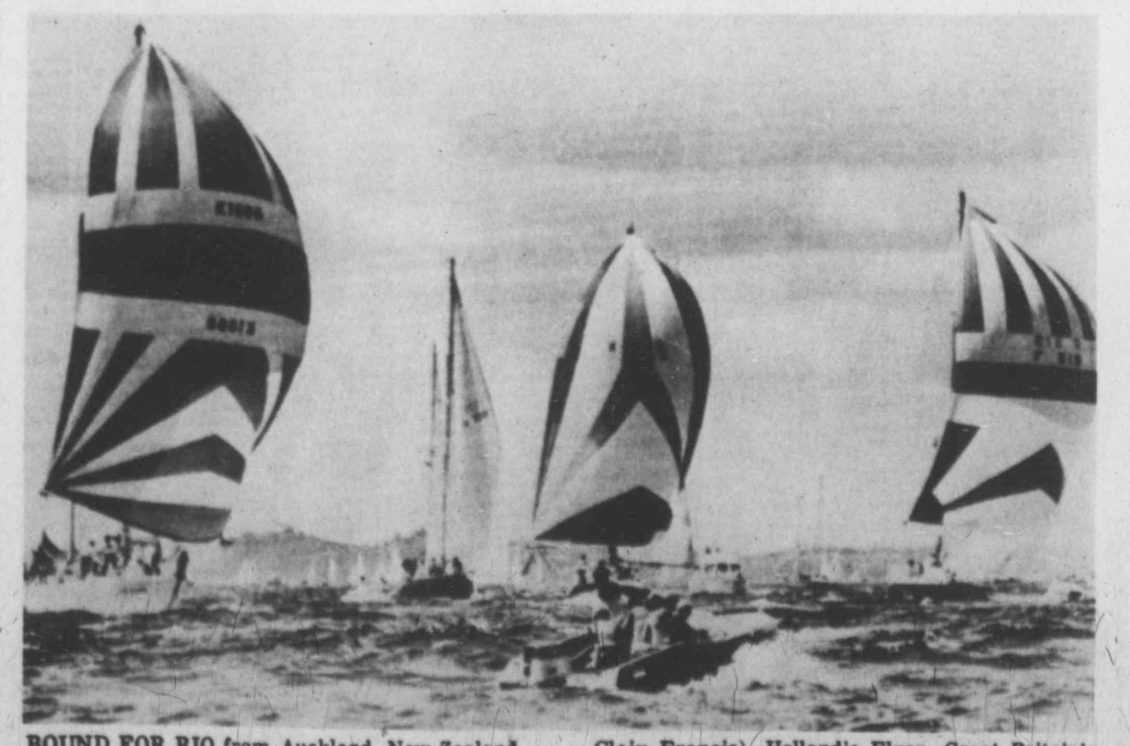

Sadat and Begin did agree to upgrade the Cairo conference to a ministerial meeting and set up political and military committees.

Odessan dies in Sunday crash

PECOS — An Odessa man was killed in a one-vehicle accident Sunday night about 21 miles south of Fort Stockton.

Roland Luis Byrd, 21, was pronounced dead early Monday morning in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital. He died from massive head and other internal injuries, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Byrd's pickup was traveling at a high rate of speed when it ran off U.S. Highway 385 and overturned several times, troopers said.

AT WIT'S END

Columnist desires confrontation with rodents, nose to nose

By ERMA BOMBECK

Open Letter to Researchers at the Rat Place:

Enough is enough.

You people have succeeded in taking every bit of joy out of my life under the guise of sparing me disease and prolonging my life. For this I am appreciative.

Our relationship existed solely on blind trust. When you told me research rats succumbed from coffee, diet pills, loud noises, glue from envelopes, snow, I stopped drinking, dieting, listening, writing home and falling face down in the cold, wet stuff.

When you told me your rats expired from saccharine, cyclamates, X-rays, booze, cigarettes and too much sun, I swore off all those things.

Now I must insist that you arrange a meeting between a bleached blond rat with lipstick on her teeth and myself or it's all over.

Frankly, I'm beginning to feel like I'm in a Mel Brooks movie and Marty Feldman just issued a story to a newspaper warning, "Two bleached blond rats died mysteriously today on two little bar stools in Transylvania. Dom DeLuise, a bungling researcher, says their deaths could be the result of hair bleach—however, their sugar-free root beer and their rouge containing No. 2 red dye are under investigation."

WOMEN'S NEWS

I am not the only one who is becoming suspicious of anonymous rats. We sit around in groups and ponder where are the people who make their little cigarettes? Their little cocktail glasses? Who does their makeup? Sews their little beach towels?

And if no one has questioned it — they should — why is it only the wonderful things of life are hazardous? Why don't rats succumb to mince pie? (I hate mince pie.) Or rhubarb? Or working Saturdays? Or seeing your dentist twice a year? Or sweat? Or fresh-cut grass or castor oil?

I'm sorry to be a doubter, but you researchers have to understand there's a lot at stake here — my ultimate will to live.

I respectfully request that at some date in the near future you arrange a meeting between your research rats and myself. Even if they have expired, but have a smile on their faces and look terrific . . . that's good enough for me.

DEAR ABBY

Do not allow past to dictate the future

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for six years to a man who has some kind of hold on me and I can't shake it. I loved him once, but all my love for him is gone now. I've left him 11 times but he always begs me to come back and says if I don't he'll commit suicide, so I go back to him. We have two kids who are practically being raised by my mother because my husband refuses to work steady. He has a bad drinking problem, too. I can't count the places we've been kicked out of because we couldn't pay the rent. We can't get credit anyplace.

When he met me I was really no good. I was a 16-year-old prostitute with a drug habit. He keeps reminding me that he took me out of the gutter so I owe him my life.

Can you help me?—TRAPPED

DEAR TRAPPED: No. But you can help yourself. You need counseling, and so does your husband. There are mental health clinics in your area that offer excellent help, and it's free for those without funds. If your husband refuses to go, go without him. Don't let your past dictate your future. You need a better self-image, and the fact that you wrote to me indicates that you're looking for answers, which is half the battle. Get going and good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Why is the bride expected to write all the thank-you notes for the wedding gifts?

Most of the gifts are for the home—to be shared by the couple. So assuming the husband isn't illiterate, why shouldn't he write half the notes?—JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: Nowhere is it written that the bride should write all the thank-you notes for the wedding gifts.

Acknowledging wedding gifts should be a joint venture (even though some grooms may tear the joint apart at the suggestion).

DEAR ABBY: I recently went to the hospital for some exploratory surgery as I was concerned about the possibility of cancer. Two neighbor women, whom I do not know very well, came to visit me there. They took turns asking prying questions as to the nature of my illness, whether more surgery would be necessary, etc. I tried to fend off these questions as best I could.

After they left, a member of a fraternal group to which I belong called on me. The same line of questioning was pursued. Only this person spent nearly an hour telling me about "similar cases" in which all the patients died—of cancer. I was depressed beyond words. Why do people visit the sick and leave them sicker?—DEPRESSED

DEAR DEPRESSED: Because common sense is so uncommon. My advice on bedside manners: Make your visit short, sweet and cheerful. Leave the coughs and the kids at home. Ask no questions. If you can't do that, stay away.

A new look taken of American family

AUSTIN, — For several years popular wisdom has held that the family as an American institution is dying. Recent studies, however, show just the opposite.

"I would have to agree that the family is changing," concedes Dr. Linda MacNeilage, counseling coordinator at the University's Counseling-Psychological Services Center, "but I don't think it is dying or disintegrating. I think essentially what we are seeing is that there are changes in our society which have repercussions for family life."

Dr. Norval Glenn, UT professor of sociology, pinpoints one of the visible changes in the fabric of American family life when he observes that "marital instability has gone up very sharply."

"It's pretty easy to move in and out of marriage relationships today," agrees Dr. Guy Shuttlesworth, associate professor in UT's Graduate School of Social Work.

One pressure working to diminish family cohesiveness, says Dr. Shuttlesworth, is that "we put an awful lot of attention today on things like companionship, love, satisfaction, happiness—things that are very difficult to define even under optimum circumstances."

Another trend the panelists point to as significant in explaining the rising divorce rate is the current emphasis on self-realization as a primary personal goal.

"There is far more of a focus on self-awareness and self-assertion," Dr. MacNeilage says. "People are less willing to think in terms of a model that means that they must sacrifice for the family."

While concurring with her analysis, Dr. Glenn points out the cyclical nature of social attitudes. "I think we can predict with a fair degree of confidence that there will be some kind of reaction against that (emphasis on self) and a greater emphasis on obligation and responsibility," he asserts.

No one of the panelists believes the current high divorce rate is an accurate gauge of the quality of family life.

In fact, Dr. Glenn states, the family system may actually be weaker in societies where the divorce rate is low because marriage represents a purely formal contractual agreement, not based on lasting emotional ties.

Americans today are less willing to stay in unsatisfactory marriages, he explains, but that "doesn't mean the typical marriage in existence at any one point in time is any less satisfactory than was the case 10 or 15 years ago."

Dr. MacNeilage adds:

"Americans are essentially a society who value change and value flexibility and experimentation, and I think that flexibility and experimentation leave people to try out new ways of living."

Dr. Glenn deflates the notion that young people today are not marrying, although he says in many cases they are marrying at older ages than did earlier generations. Neither has cohabitation replaced marriage.

"Eventually, the people who live with someone of the opposite sex for a period of months or years end up marrying someone else.

The supposed loss of extended family ties as a result of increased mobility also draws the panelists' scrutiny.

"One thing family experts have come to realize in the last few years is that the cohesive extended family hasn't existed in Western society for several centures," Dr. Glenn states. "And it didn't disintegrate under the impact of industrialization. It wasn't there to begin with. So what we have in the comtemporary U.S. isn't that different from what we have had in the past."

In truth, Dr. Shuttlesworth maintains, the contact between persons more than one generation removed, such as children and their grandparents, actually may have increased in recent years.

The primary reason for that phenomenon, he explains, is quite simply that in the past, fewer people survived to know their grandchildren.

"That's kind of a luxury of the present," he observes.

That so-called luxury also may pose problems for some family members, particularly the middle-aged generations, he continues:

"Part of the stress on the family has been trying to deal with these sets of responsibilities, both financially and emotionally."

Dr. Shuttlesworth notes that recent data shows that 90 percent of old people have weekly contact with one or more of their children.

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Underneath all the fuss and furor on the surface which seems to be holding you back from achieving results of importance, there is a very fine influence of a positive nature. You will accomplish some very worthwhile matters, especially in activities that have long-range implications.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Put those creative ideas to work that can bring you added success very soon. Know what you want and use positive methods to gain them.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Don't stir up a hornet's nest at home, but quietly get conditions improved. Arguments could lead to serious trouble.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Questionable situations should be handled intelligently so you avoid potential trouble. Take an interest in important civic matters.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Study monetary matters well and know where and how to improve them. Stop being so extravagant and cut down on expenses.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Don't be impulsive where gaining some personal goal is concerned, since it will take some time to do so and hasty action could ruin it.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Anything you want to do of a confidential nature should not be broadcast or you spoil it all. Do not be harsh with a loved one over something you are not sure of.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Fine time to be with friends, but don't force them into doing what you want or they would resent it. Know what you want and then go after it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You seem overly anxious to handle some civic matter for which you are not well prepared, so study it further first and avoid ill will from bigwig. Avoid one who is detrimental to your affairs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Study further into that outlet that will bring you added success. Forget about scattering your forces. Take no chances with reputation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You want to get into big expense and this would be very wrong at this time, so cut down on expenses instead. Avoid arguments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) An objective talk with a partner can bring fine results now. Be sure to keep it on a most courteous level. Wait for more developments before you make up your mind about a national situation.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Ideal time to delve into all that work awaiting your attention, but be sure to schedule well. Listen to ideas of a co-worker.

Water runs all day on Christmas as gift to Hong Kong residents

The Los Angeles Times

HONG KONG — The 4.5 million residents of this crowded British Colony got an unusual Christmas present over the long holiday weekend — running water, all day long.

Elsewhere running water may not be news, but Hong Kong has not had an around-the-clock water supply since May 31, when reservoirs depleted by a long spring drought reached the danger point and rationing was imposed.

At first the drought elicited only public appeals for water conservation. But the British authorities who govern this overwhelmingly Chinese enclave have never harbored democratic pretensions and were unwilling to stick with voluntary cutbacks. Without consulting anyone, they simply started turning off the taps on June 1.

During the month of June, Hong Kong existed on 16 hours of water a day. The summer monsoons that were expected to refill the reservoirs never materialized, so in July the daily water supply was again slashed to 10 hours.

Since then, with the water cut off from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., it has been impossible to flush toilets at midday or to take a late night shower.

The government's decision to leave the taps running from Christmas Eve until 10 a.m. Monday was just as abrupt as the original move to begin rationing. William Tucker, the director of the Water Dept., announced last week that the restrictions would be eased over the weekend as a reward to the people of Hong Kong for their cooperation in saving water the last six months. Water consumption has fallen 20 percent because of the rationing, other sources said to about 220 million gallons a day.

The Water Department's timing mystified many expatriates here because few Chinese celebrate Christmas and most seemed indifferent as to whether they had water all day Dec. 25. But the Chinese, wise to the ways of their long-time English masters, thought they detected a certain hard-headed practicality behind the Water Department's show of yuletide sentimentality.

"You can't cook a Christmas goose or a plum pudding without water," observed Lau Lin, a 50-year-old housekeeper, to one European family.

Apparently aware that their Christmastime generosity might arouse such criticism, Water Department officials were quick to add that rationing also would be dropped for the four-day celebration of the lunar new year in February, the holiday that matters most to Chinese.

Hong Kong has always prided itself on its ability to prosper while teetering on the edge of extinction, with the threat of a Communist Chinese takeover always looming.

Traffic helicopter crashes, kills two

By MICHAEL McPHEE

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — A radio station traffic helicopter slammed through the roof of an apartment building today and exploded, killing two persons and injuring four others, witnesses said.

Two bodies burned beyond recognition were found near the wreckage of the helicopter, which came to rest on the second floor of the two-story, 23-unit red brick building and started a fire there.

Occupants of the helicopter were identified as Chip Whitmore, a reporter for station WEEI, and pilot Red Banks.

Persons in the building who were hurt in the crash were identified as Julia Verga, 62; Ronald Michelson, 28, and his wife, Lynn, 26, and a 10-week-old baby.

All four were taken to hospitals. Their conditions were not immediately known.

Ned Foster, a helicopter traffic reporter for station WBZ, witnessed the crash.

"It went into a dive and crashed through the roof of the apartment building," Foster said. "Then it expoded on impact."

The crash on Station Street occured near the Southeast Expressway, where the helicopter reporter was watching traffic. Whitmore was filling in for WEEI's regular traffic reporter, Kevin O'Keefe, who was on vacation this week.

A few minutes before the helicopter went down, its occupants had radioed the station that they were having difficulties and would try to make an emergency landing near the expressway.

Mechanic who rammed car into Klan rally escapes

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — Buddy Cochran, the truck mechanic convicted of ramming a car into a Ku Klux Klan rally in President Carter's hometown of Plains last July, escaped from the Sumter County jail early today, Sheriff Randy Howard said.

Cochran, 30, and another prisoner escaped about 7:45 a.m., the sheriff said. A police radio broadcast had identified the other man as Michael Proctor.

Howard said the search was being concentrated in the area around Americus, about 20 miles east of Plains.

Police broadcast an alert that the two were driving an automobile with Mississippi license plates.

Cochran, from Americus, was convicted Oct. 25 of eight counts of aggravated assault in the July 2 incident which injured 32 persons, many of them reporters covering the KKK rally.

The trial was highlighted by testimony from Carter's mother, Lillian, who said she was watching part of the rally from a distance but left when trouble broke out.

Cochran was sentenced on Nov. 17 to 12 years in prison and 8 additional years on probation.

His attorney argued during the trial that Cochran suffered from temporary insanity and he was given a psychiatric examination. However, the test results said that Cochran suffered no mental disorders and that he was "functioning in a normal range of intelligence functioning."

District Attorney Claude A. Morris argued that Cochran was not insane but drunk.

Items taken from home

Midland police detectives today are investigating the reported theft of a stereo, television set and guitar estimated to be worth $575.

The theft was reported at the residence of Bill Brown, 2310 Cloverdale Rd. and is believed to have occurred sometime between Sunday and late Monday afternoon, according to police reports.

A sliding glass door was broken at the residence, the report said.

ATLANTA (AP) — A man held for the Christmas Day hijacking of an Eastern Airlines jet faced air piracy charges before a U.S. magistrate today.

Nikolai Wischnewsky, 32, of Pearl River, N.Y., allegedly commandeered the DC-9 about 50 miles from Atlanta on Sunday using a toy pistol and a portable radio taped to resemble a bomb.

The Austrian-born landscaper was being held without bond in the Fulton County jail.

Wischnewsky boarded the Miami-Indianapolis flight in Jacksonville, Fla., FBI agents said.

Agents said the hijacker passed a flight attendant a note demanding that the plane fly to Cuba.

Beverly Nicholson, Home Economist for Texas Electric, is trained and experienced in the efficient use of electric appliances.

"For every way to use electricity in the kitchen, there's a way to use it more efficiently."

"Keeping your heating and cooling costs down are the biggest ways to save electricity, but there are lots of little ways, too.

Part of my job is finding the most economical way to use your kitchen appliances. Here are some ideas I've found useful:

Use flat-bottomed pans. The flatter the pan the better its contact with the cooking unit. A tight-fitting lid on your pan will reduce cooking time.

Use less water. By cooking vegetables with the least amount of water possible, you'll improve their appearance, nutritive value, and save electricity.

Reduce cooking time. Thaw meats before cooking them. This will save cooking time and energy.

Use your oven timer. Opening your oven door unnecessarily causes heat loss and extended cooking time.

Get our free booklet, 'Tips To Help You Use Electricity More Efficiently Throughout Your Home.' Copies are available in our office or you can request one on the comment portion of your electric service bill."

Coal producers plan to meet Carter goal

WASHINGTON — (AP) — About 100 of the nation's biggest coal producers plan to open or expand enough mines to meet President Carter's goal of doubling production by 1985, according to a study released by the National Coal Association.

The industry organization said Sunday that the producers plan 332 new or expanded mines and additional prodection of 594 million tons of coal annually.

Current capacity is 775 million to 800 million tons, which means that the new production will raise the total to the 1.2 billion tons the president wants, the coal association said.

Actual production could be considerably higher because the study did not include smaller coal producers, Carl E. Bagge, president of the association, said in a statement. These firms produced 250 million tons in 1976, he said.

"This analysis of the private sector's plans for increasing coal production shows that President Carter's goal can be met if the government does not impose unreasonable constraints," Bagge said.

Bagge said each 100 million tons of coal which can be used in lieu of imported oil means the nation can avoid importing nearly 400 million barrels of oil costing more than $5 billion.

The association study indicted that the major coal firms plan to expand 142 mines, adding 170 million tons of annual production through 1985. Another 190 new mines capable of producing 424 million tons a year will be opened, it said.

About 199 million additional tons would be produced in the East, most of it in underground mines, the report said. In the West, 359 million tons of new production would come from surface mines.

Red Adair impresses owner of wild well

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Seasoned hands in the oil fields of central Alberta say Red Adair has lived up to his daredevil reputation since he was called in last week to tame a wild natural gas well.

The 62-year-old Texan, world famous for his dangerous specialty, drove a bulldozer to the fringe of a roaring gas fire Saturday to tow a drilling rig off the wellhead. The well, blowing wild since Dec. 6 about 80 miles southwest of Edmonton, had ignited earlier in the day.

"It was the feat of a superman," said a safety man working for Amoco Canada Petroleum Co. Ltd., owner of the well in the West Pembina field.

"He could have been fried alive. The area around the well was ablaze. The heat was fantastic."

Plans are underway to pump water from the Pembina River to cool off the blazing well, and set off a dynamite charge to snuff the fire by momentarily cutting off its oxygen supply.

Adair was 15 miles from the West Pembina well on Christmas Eve when he heard it had caught fire.

He had told Amoco officials he wanted to try and cap the well in time to get his men home for Christmas dinner.

"He jumped straight behind a bulldozer and towed the rig away," said company spokesman Dave McAsey.

"Another few seconds and the rig could have been a twisted mass of metal over the well and capping efforts could perhaps have been delayed for weeks."

The salvaged drilling rig collapsed after it was towed clear and the cables used to pull it free were destroyed by the heat of the fire.

Once the rig was out of the way, Adair went back to save a giant mobile crane and several pickup trucks.

The company could give no explanation why the wild well had ignited, but said that one spark from any loose metal banging together could have been responsible.

"We have been within seconds of closing the well several times," said McAsey. "But we're sure Red will eventually regain his unbeaten blowout record."

The Amoco well has been spewing natural gas and poisonous hydrogen sulphide gas in the three weeks it has been blowing out of control. The rotten-egg smell characteristic of hydrogen sulphide has been detected as far away as Edmonton.

On 24-hour potential test, the well flowed 356 barrels of 48-gravity oil, plus 214 barrels of water, through perforations from 13,189 to 13,202 feet after 250 gallons of acid.

The well is 20 miles southeast of Lenorah and 2,173 feet from south and 990 feet from east lines of section 2, block 7, University Lands survey.

The well was drilled to 13,218 feet and plugged back to 13,205 feet.

SPRABERRY WELL

Henry Petroleum Corp. of Midland No. 1 Allar has been completed in the Martin County sector of the Spraberry Trend Area field.

The well, four miles northwest of Lenorah, was finaled for a 24-hour pumping potential of 66 barrels of 37.6-gravity oil, plus 50 barrels of water, through perforations from 8,225 to 9,105 feet.

Location is 1,980 feet from north and east lines of section 19, block 36, T-2-N, T&P survey.

Gas-oil ratio was 797-1.

Total depth is 9,260 feet and plugged back depth is 9,231 feet. Operator set 4½-inch casing at total depth.

Extender completes

WINTER PARK, Fla. — Successful completion of a second significant development well in the Oakvale field in Mississippi has been announced by Florida Gas Exploration Co., the oil and gas exploration subsidiary of Florida Gas Co.

Selby Sullivan, chairman of the board and president of Florida Gas, said the No. 1-6-6 Unit, drilled to a depth of 16,800 feet, was completed in the Harper sand and flowed on production test at the rate of 6.9 million cubic feet of gas and 53 barrels of condensate per day, through a ¼-inch choke.

The Oakvale field is located about 50 miles southeast of Jackson in Jefferson Davis County. Florida Gas Exploration's discovery well, the No. 1 Davis, was completed last March. The Davis well flowed on initial test at a daily rate of 6.8 million cubic feet of gas and 65 barrels of condensate.

The No. 1-6-6 Unit is one mile south of the Davis well.

Discovery potentials

Getty Oil Co. No. 1-41-21 University has been completed as an Ellenburger discovery in Winkler County, seven miles southwest of Wink.

The strike finaled for a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 9,300,000 cubic feet of gas per day, through casing perforations from 19,758 to 20,157 feet after a 60,000-gallon acid treatment and a 35,000-gallon fracture treatment.

Total depth is 20,776 feet and plugged back depth is 20,608 feet. Five and one-half-inch casing is cemented at 20,775 feet.

Location is 1,980 feet from north and west lines of section 41, block 21, University Lands survey.

The discovery is four miles west of Montoya-Ellenburger production in the Wink, South field and the same distance southwest of the Apollo (Fusselman and Ellenburger) field.

Transplanted artists struggling to adjust

The Los Angeles Times

WEST BERLIN — The plaintive, mature female voice on the tape lamented, "I want to leave this place yet I have to stay...I don't know where I belong."

The woman singing was Christiane Wunder, until a year ago one of East Germany's most popular performers. Now, like dozens of other recent exiles from the Communist state, the 30-year-old singer is struggling to adjust to life in capitalist West Germany. It is not easy.

"Man, I'm a musician," Klaus Jentzsch said. "I want to play again and not constantly give interviews."

The 35-year-old Jentzsch was the leader of East Germany's top rock combo and was known as Klaus Renft. Now he works for a radio station in West Berlin.

The East German regime, seeking to quell political dissidence, encouraged dozens of intellectuals and artists to leave in the past two years. Some had applied for exit visas and others had their walking papers thrust upon them.

"Prominent people like us were allowed to take almost everything with them," Jentzsch said. "Those without a name got o jail or have to leave with only a suitcase in their hands."

Nearly all of the expellees have ended up in West Berlin, just across the tall Communist wall from their homeland. But others have settled uneasily in West Germany proper.

The adjustment for most of them has been painful and difficult. Although they share a common language and ethnic heritage with the people of their new homeland, the exiles are members of the postwar generation — raised in an orthodox, Soviet-style Communist society which has left them ill equipped to cope with life in the West.

Some recent arrivals did not want to live in West Germany at all. They had been taught that the capitalist two-thirds of prewar Germany is a materialistic state, always threatening to revert to its Nazi past.

Under the communism of the German Democratic Republic — the official name for East Germany — most of the expelled artists, writers and performers were a privileged elite who lived as well as anyone in their country.

The best known of the exiles is Wolf Biermann, a satirical writer and singer. He was expelled last year after giving a concert while visiting West Germany that was carried on television.

Although he was highly popular among an intellectual elite in the East, Biermann was not widely known to the East German public. The West German show introduced his critical comments on the Communist system to a vast new audience back home since 80 percent of the East Germans can see television from the West.

Biermann was expelled from East Germany as a result and sought citizenship in the Netherlands as a political exile. The Dutch authorities rejected his request, so he accepted a West German passport and bought a house near Hamburg.

Most other expellees were forced to leave after they signed protest statements against the expulsion of Biermann.

In his first months in the West, Biermann was heckled from both Left and Right — by anti-Communist conservatives because he publicly asserts his continued allegiance to Marxism and by Leftist radicals because he supports a democratic communism and has earned a lot of money in the West.

"For 350,000 marks, the Red Biermann buys himself a Red villa," the conservative, popular newspaper Die Bild proclaimed.

The price was equivalent to more than $150,000 and the sale was completed six months after his arrival in the West.

More recently, Biermann has been able to travel and give concerts across Europe without generating any extraordinary interest.

"Here, as well, I will have to take a stand on the conflicts, the ideas, the hopes, the passions and the struggles that affect people here," he told a West Berlin audience.

"And that means making myself useful for those people who are trying, on the side of progress, to change this society.

Biermann has reached a big Western audience through a full-length movie which includes some of his concert songs as well as comments on life in the West.

He also has criticized the factionalism that divides Communists and supported the development of "Euro-communism," a branch of Marxism which attempts to be independent of Moscow.

Gas-oil ratio was 1,182-1.

Location is 660 feet from south and east lines of section 38, block 39, T-4-S, T&P survey.

Hole is bottomed at 9,200 feet and plugged back to 9,161 feet. Five and one-half-inch casing is set at 9,200 feet.

Shallow test staked

The Three-B Oil Co. of Monahans announced location for a 2,300-foot operation in the Payton field of Ward County, three miles south of Grandfalls.

It is No. 20-A B lair, 8,700 feet from north and 1,090 feet from east lines of section 5, block 32, H&TC survey. It is 750 feet southeast of the closest well in the field.

Deep gas found

NEW ORLEANS, La. — Amoco No. 1 Georgia Pacific Corp., a project 12 miles north of Baton Rouge, tested 4.8 million cubic feet of gas and 672 barrels of condensate daily through a ¼-inch choke on production test.

The gas and fluid came from 16,600 feet in the lower Tuscaloosa sand. Amoco said tests are continuing at the wellsite.

Additional drilling is planned in the immediate area to evaluate the new reserves and other potentially productive zones.

Dallas Cowboys explode in Bears' face

DALLAS (AP) — The "difference" between the 1976 and 1977 models of the Dallas Cowboys wears No. 33 on his jersey. He is so good as a rookie he can give the National Football League's premier runner solace.

Dallas was bounced out of the first round of the National Football Conference playoffs last year by Los Angeles because it didn't have a runner.

NOW, THE Cowboys have a back who Monday outdueled the best — Chicago's Walter Payton.

The 37-7 Cowboy rout of the wild card Bears was a perfect example of how explosive Dallas can be with a Tony Dorsett in the backfield.

"We have got the game breaker we have needed," said Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach, who froze Chicago with play action fakes to Dorsett to post 134 yards passing, including a 28-yard touchdown pass to tight end Billy Joe DuPree.

Dorsett, the All-American from Pittburgh who gained 1,008 yards in his initial NFL campaign, was swarmed by the media in the Cowboy dressing room after the one-sided game.

"The playoffs are really a different season. . .the atmosphere in the locker room is really different," said Dorsett, a millionaire. "Of course, there's extra money involved."

DORSETT GAINED 85 yards on 17 carries, including touchdown gallops of 22 and 7 yards. The numbers for Payton were 60 yards in 19 tries, no touchdowns and dizziness.

"I have a lot of respect for Walter Payton, we're in this together," soothed Dorsett. "He's a great running back, there's no professional jealousy between us."

In the Bears locker room, Payton was trying to find his head. He had been gang-tackled by three or four Cowboys on almost every down.

"I got hit in the head and I just don't remember nothing," said Payton. "I feel real bad. I wish you fellows would give me a break. Maybe then I could get dressed."

Chicacgo linebacker Doug Buffone said, "With Dorsett around you can't concentrate on any one thing. . .they come at you from every direction."

"This is the best team I've played on in four or five years," said Cowboys veteran offensive tackle Ralph Neely, who will retire this year after the playoffs, Dallas' 11th in 12 years.

CHARLIE WATERS intercepted Chicago's Bob Avellini three times as the Cowboys advanced to their sixth NFC championship game.

Dorsett's influence was evident at the fullback position where Robert Newhouse tore through gaping holes for 80 yards as the Bears looked for last year's Heisman Trophy winner.

Dallas piled up a 17-0 halftime lead on Doug Dennison's 2-yard touchdown run, Staubach's pass to DuPree and the first of three Efren Herrera field goals, a 21-yard chip shot.

Dorsett's two TD runs and field goals of 31 and 27 yards by Herrera completed the Cowboys slaughter in the second half.

CHICAGO GOT a consolation touchdown late in the fourth quarter on Avellini's 34-yard pass to Steve Schubert.

"This has to be our best game of the year," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "Every phase of our game was excellent, from our offense to the defense and specialty teams. Newhouse was just exceptional. . .they may have been gearing too much toward stopping Dorsett."

Landry said he wouldn't even watch the Los Angeles-Minnesota because he didn't care who the Cowboys played in the NFC title game at 4:30 p.m., Jan. 1 in Texas Stadium.

"I never think about who I'm going to play. . .I just see who it is and get ready," he said.

CHICAGO COACH Jack Pardee whose Bears won their last six games to finish with a 9-5 season, said "Dallas' defense is something. I think we only had nine plays in the first quarter. We just couldn't get anything going.

"I didn't think the score would be this great but it always is when you have that many turnovers. I don't think Dallas did anything in particular to stop Payton. They have the flex which is designed to stop the run against Payton or anyone else."

There wasn't much talk in the Cowboys dressing room about next week's opponent. Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson mentioned, "I hoped we'd play LA because we have extra incentive after they beat us last year but we'll be ready for whoever comes in here."

THE COWBOYS compiled a 12-2 regular season record but Landry was still mystified by the up and down nature of the team.

"Right now we are playing good and we are confident and that's a good thing to have going for you in the title game," Landry said.

Cowboys forget last year's loss in first round

By BOB DILLON
R-T Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys started slowly, but what a finish!

Safety Charlie Waters picked off three Chicago passes for a new NFL playoff record in sparkling an alert Cowboy defense that came up with seven turnovers during the 37-7 Dallas victory.

"We were sick about that opening playoff loss to the Rams last year. I've been waiting all year long to make up for that loss," said Waters during the dressing room celebration.

Waters was elated over his three thiefs and had nothing but praise for the defensive unit. "Cliff Harris and I are tight friends, in fact all of out defense are such good friends that when somebody does something good, it's sorta like you did it yourself."

WATERS WENT on to say that he felt that way Monday. "That's what this team is all about," added Waters.

On Water's first interception in the end zone, "Latta was open and Cliff and I had control of the whole field in a zone with two safeties. I must go to the wing if Avellini goes to the wing, but if he goes to the tight end, I was setting it up...saw him open. I was hoping that Avellini would throw it with a loft because he didn't think there was a chance I could get to it in time. I was anticipating him because I saw Latta open too and sure enough, the loft pass came and it gave me time to get to the ball."

Waters wasn't too happy about the return after the interceptions, however. "I decided to run it out and didn't do very well and I felt bad about it. The referee told me later had I gone on and touched my knee, he would have given me a touchback on the play."

"Everything seemed to go our way. I thought we were in trouble early when we lost the ball on fumbles in the first two possessions. That gave the defense a good challenge which we met," added the eight-year veteran from Clemson.

"I REALLY BELIEVE that we as a team played with as much intensity as we have all season long," said Waters.

Coach Tom Landy seemed to agree. "We played our best all-around game of the season and it couldn't come at a better time," said Landry, who even managed to smile a lot during the interview.

"This has to be our best game of the year. Every phase of our game was excellent, from offense to defense and the specialty teams too," added Landry.

Harris said that the Cowboys were near perfection on defense, probably near 95 per cent strategy-wise."

He went on to say that Landry's flex defense shuts out the run, then all you have to do is stop the pass and we did that.

IT WAS a playoff-poised team that overcame the two early fumbles to post a halftime lead of 17-0 and then added 20 more points on the scoreboard in the second half.

"Roger Staubach is the guy that beats you," commented Chicago linebacker Doug Buffone. "He hits the right man for the defense we called and ran when he needed to."

Chicago coach Jack Pardee, former Texas A&M great, praised his team. "I'm just proud of our team. They stayed in there and played as hard as they could. I think the turnovers were indicative ot what happened. We had turnovers in seven of eight series in a row. Of course you can't do that and win, especially against a team as good as the Cowboys," quipped Pardee.

"This game meant a lot to the team. They were ready. Had we not had so many mistakes, we would have given the Cowboys a heckuva fight."

PARDEE PRAISED the Dallas defense. "That Cowboy defense is something else. I think we had the ball for nine plays in the first quarter. We just couldn't get anything going and we should have had a touchdown when Avellini overthrew Bo Rather."

On Payton, Pardee didn't feel that Dallas did anything special to stop the great running back for the Bears. "No, I didn't think the Cowboys did anything in particular to stop Walter. They have the flex defense which is designed to stop the run and our pass protection broke down at times, but most of the sacks came late in the game," added Pardee.

Tony Dorsett, who wound up with 85 yards in 17 carries, scored two touchdowns, but had to leave the hard-hitting game when his knee began to tighten up early in the fourth period.

"THE PLAYOFFS are really a different season... the atmosphere in our locker room is different, of course and there's always that extra money that makes it nice too," said Dorsett.

While Dorsett got his usual attention, it was Waters that was swarmed by the press and media in the Cowboy dressing room.

"I don't care who we play, but I know that the veterans want another shot at Los Angeles," said Dorsett.

Of course, that didn't pan out with the Rams losing to the Minnesota Vikings, 14-7, in the mud in Los Angeles.

While the Bears go into hibernation the Cowboys get ready to square off with the Vikings Sunday in Dallas with the winner moving into the Super Bowl, Jan. 15, against either Oakland or Denver.

Minnesota shocks Rams, 14-7

By DAVE BRADY
The Washington Post

LOS ANGELES — The Minnesota Vikings sprang the first upset of the 1977 pro-football playoffs Monday when they suqelched the Los Angeles Rams, 14-7, in a driving rain, behind reserve quarterback Bob Lee.

The Vikings appeared to have the game put away without an argument, 14-0, until Pat Haden directed a Los Angeles drive that resulted in a touchdown with a little more than a minute to play, scoring on a one-yard lob to Harold Jackson in the end zone.

The Rams then recovered an onside kick and moved to a first down on the Minnesota 39 with seven seconds left. Jeff Wright intercepted Haden's desperation pass inside the five-yard line to lock up the decision.

Once more coach Chuck Knox suffered a misfortune on a fourth-down call in a big game when the Rams tried for one yard and Lawrence McCutcheon was stopped for no gain in the first quarter.

The Vikings began earning their trip to Dallas on Sunday for the NFC championship game on their first possession, going 69 yards to score on Chuck Foreman's five-yard run. Lee connected on five straight passes in the drive.

The Vikings scored the insurance touchdown, on a one-yard plunge by Sammy Johnson in the fourth period after workhorse Chuck Foreman's runs set it up.

Haden thrice was intercepted, once in the Minnesota end zone and twice just outside it.

The loss was certain to renew speculation that Knox may be leaving the Rams.

The temperature was in the 50s and there was a driving rain that created puddles even though the tarpaulin was not removed until an hour before kickoff.

The Rams were favored by nine points in their third game this year against the Vikings. The Rams won a regular-season game, 35-3. The Vikings won an exhibition, 22-17.

Early on, the Rams came up to one of those fourth-and-one challenges that have resulted in so much second-guessing of coach Chuck Knox. This one failed when Lawrence McCutcheon was stopped without gain at the Minnesota 31-yard line, where the Vikings took possession.

They were put back to their 22 on a holding penalty against tackle Ron Yary, but Lee then took them 78 yards to score.

Lee hit all five of his passes in the thrust and Chuck Foreman ran five yards for the touchdown. Fred Cox converted.

The Rams tried to move the ball mostly on the ground, which was not productive at first.

In the second quarter, Pat Haden went to the air after defensive tackle Alan Page of the Vikings was offside on a punt by the Rams. That gave Los Angeles a first down at the Minnesota 41.

Haden dared a pass on third and two and connected with tight end Terry Nelson. Then, after the Rams were set back by a holding call against center Rich Saul, Haden passed to Nelson, who broke for 19 yards to the Minnesota nine.

John Cappelletti ran four yards for a first down on the five, but when Haden threw on first down, intended for reserve tight end Charles Young, Nate Allen intercepted in the end zone for the Vikings.

Haden later took the Rams to the Viking 31, mostly on a 17-yard run by McCutcheon, but an end-around by Nelson in the mud failed and on third and 10 defense back Allen held Nelson to a six-yard gain on a pass. Rafael Septien was wide on a 33-yard field-goal attempt.

There was no scoring in the third quarter, but the Vikings got field position that resulted in a one-yard touchdown plunge by running back Sammy Johnson in the fourth period. The conversion by Cox put the Vikings out in front, 14-0.

College cagers juggle positions

By The Associated Press

Four of the top five teams in The Associated Press Top Twenty college basketball poll juggled positions this week after No. 2 Marquette lost to Louisville.

The Warriors, last year's national champions, were beaten 61-60 Thursday and fell to fifth while the next three teams each moved up a spot.

No. 1 Kentucky remained at the top of the heap, walloping Iona, 104-65. The Wildcats, 8-0, received all 45 first-place votes cast by the nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Kentucky received a total of 900 votes.

North Carolina, 7-1, beat Tulane 108-103 to edge from third to second with 820 votes.

Arkansas, 8-0, one of last year's surprise teams, beat Hardin-Simmons 86-55 and Kansas 78-72 to rise from fourth to third with 614 votes.

Notre Dame, 7-1, routed St. Joseph's of Indiana 108-72 and totalled 560 points to move up from No. 5. Marquette, now 5-1, collected 519 points.

Indiana State, 7-0, did not play during the holiday week and remained sixth.

Louisville, 6-1, moved from eighth to seventh through its victory over Marquette and a 69-63 triumph over Dayton.

UCLA, 8-1, defeated San Jose State 109-69 and New Mexico State 86-67 but dropped one notch from seventh while unbeaten Nevada-Las Vegas held its ninth-place spot by edging Northwestern 100-95 and Iowa 85-84 to raise its record to 11-0.

Also holding its previous position was No. 10 Syracuse, 8-1, which was idle last week.

Cincinnati, 6-1, advanced from 12th to No. 11; Holy Cross, 6-0, moved from No. 13 to No. 12 and Providence, 6-0, rose from 14th to 13th.

Maryland, 7-1, leaped from 20th to No. 14.

Indiana, 6-1 and unranked a week ago, reached No. 15 this week thanks in part to its 66-57 victory over Alabama.

Rounding out the Top 20 were Virginia, 5-0; Kansas, 7-2; previously unranked Florida State, 8-0; San Francisco, 6-3 and Detroit, 6-1.

San Francisco lost twice and plummeted from 11th while Detroit fell from No. 15.

Falling out of this week's Top 20 were Alabama, 18th a week ago, and Utah, at No. 17 last week.

Casper glad it's over

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Oakland Raiders' 37-31 overtime playoff victory over the Baltimore Colts may have been fun to watch, but Oakland tight end Dave Casper said it wasn't nearly as much fun on the field.

"It was hell," said Casper, whose third touchdown reception of the afternoon gave the Raiders the victory 43 seconds into the second overtime period.

The contest, the third-longest game ever played in National Football League history, placed the Raiders in the American Football Conference championship game against Denver on New Year's Day.

"How would you like one guy punching you and then you punching him until one or the other gets knocked out? It was like an Ali-Frazier fight. It might've been fun to watch, but I'm sure it wasn't fun for them," Casper said.

"It's the type of game you like to play if you win," said Oakland defensive end Otis Sistrunk. "When Dave caught that touchdown pass, I said, 'Thank God it's over.'"

"We tried like crazy; we just didn't get it," said Baltimore quarterback Bert Jones after the Colts lost their third consecutive first-round game in the NFL playoffs. The lead changed hands six times in the second half alone.

"They played well and we played well," said Jones, who was sacked six times. "The only unfortunate part about it is that they won."

Sistrunk said, "When Bert Jones can't roll, the Colts can't rock."

"Last year, when we lost to Pittsburgh in the playoffs, we were embarrassed," said Baltimore Coach Ted Marchibroda. "But this year I thought we played extremely well.

"Oakland made the big plays and won the game. We had opportunities but we did not win. There was no shame in losing that game to Oakland. The only shame is that someone had to lose that game. But that's the way of the business we're in."

It was that kind of day for Los Angeles Rams quarterback Pat Haden (11), who is sacked by a duo of visiting Minnesota Vikings Monday during the NFC playoff game. In addition to this crushing blow, Haden threw three interceptions. (AP Laserphoto)

Scribe finally stands up

Texas plays Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl Monday, and that in itself is a surprise.

You can find a lot of soothsayers now who saw it coming, not only the Southwest Conference, but maybe even a shot at the national title.

As a matter of fact, we were one that couldn't see how the Longhorns could miss, not with all that backfield speed and Earl Campbell. Cynics suggested Texas didn't have a quarterback, but the reasoning here was that all they needed was someone to hand the ball off to the Tyler Rose and stand clear.

Funny, you say, how come you hadn't heard all this before? Well, like Morgan Copeland, we didn't want to be laughed at and, frankly, there was some question as to Campbell's durability.

AT LUBBOCK in 1976, Earl raved and ranted up and down the Jones Stadium field against Texas Tech and for most of a half it looked like one of those games that would be won by the team that had the ball last.

Then, Earl limped off the field sometime in the second quarter and with him went Texas' football season. So what was to prevent it from happening again?

For one thing, Copeland, the linebacker from Midland who will be seeking to help preserve the Longhorns' No. 1 status next week, says this was a different Campbell.

"He trimmed down to about 220, about a 25-pound weight loss, and he was quicker, faster and tougher," said Morgan, who could have added "more durable."

THAT, OF course, was one of the prime reasons for Texas' turn-around from a 5-5 year and Copeland attributes the arrival as Coach Fred Akers as another big plus.

The one-time Longhorns' assistant who revived football at Wyoming during a two-year hiatus, not only junked the Wishbone, "but he did an excellent job of coaching in the technical sense."

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

Copeland said, "Akers is dynamic, enthusiastic and tremendously positive. He's the best motivator I've ever been around."

Senior Copeland doesn't see any drop off in the Longhorns' fortunes in the immediate future, either.

"IN 1978, the defense will have nine starters back, eight sophomores, one junior. We had only two seniors on defense, Brad Shearer and myself."

Copeland doesn't figure he'll be missed. "They have lots of depth at linebacker. The young ones are good, big, physical and talented. Shearer, of course, will be hard to replace."

Copeland points out that offensively, "Texas will have three quarterbacks returning, Mike McBath, Jon Aune and Randy McEachern, plus wide receiver Lam Jones and running back Ham Jones."

Morgan does admit that the other guy may not be easy to replace. "A guy like Campbell comes along once in a lifetime and nobody is going to make fans forget him."

JIMMY POTEET, who played on one of Midland's first basketball teams, was a weekend visitor in the Tall City. Fans who recall that Jimmy was a skinny guard on Midland's 1959 team may dispute the "one of the Midland's first basketball teams" suggestion, but if you are a longtime follower of Midland cage fortunes, you know what is meant.

Midland's basketball program was almost non-existent until the mid-1950's, usually deposited in the hands of a football assistant whose main function was to conduct the sport as an off-season conditioning program for football players.

A 32-game district losing streak was the result.

Ken Sewell became Midland's first "basketball" coach and managed to break the hex back in 1954, but it wasn't until Bob Todd's '59 team that the Bulldogs finally gained respectability.

TODD'S CLUB that year lost only three games, but failed to win district. If memory serves, all three losses were to champion Odessa.

"I remember the 32-game losing streak and Tom Dyer, who went to Stanford, from that '54 team and the guard Joe Nicholson who broke that streak. I suffered through it all."

Poteet apparently still is battling jinxes as coach for Bethany, Okla. Nazarene. "I've been to the NAIA tournament in Kansas City three times, once as a player (Pasadena Nazarene), once as an assistant coach and once as a coach. My teams lost in the first round, by close scores, each time. Last year, we didn't even get to Kansas City, losing in the playoff game by two points."

POTEET VOWS, "I won't be satisfied until I make it back and win that first game, just to find out what it's like to be on the other side."

Heading for an eight-day stay in Hawaii this week where Bethany will play two games, that sounds more like a vacation, Bethany is 9-2 and Jimmy thinks he just might make it back to the NAIA this year, if things continue to break his way.

Poteet took over at Bethany five years ago and after a shaky start has developed a winning program.

"We can pack only about 2,000 into our on-campus gym, but we play some games in the Myriad (Oklahoma City) and draw 8,000."

Bethany officials also are looking toward knocking out a wall and expanding the campus gym to 4,000.

"That probably would be adequate, since we have a small student body," says Jimmy. But knowing Poteet's way with jinxes, would it be big enough for an NAIA champion?

Foreman rests elders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Chuck Foreman, at 26 a veritable youngster on the Minnesota Vikings squad, was kind to his elders and it paid off.

Foreman, the Vikings' powerful and durable running back, carried 31 times for 101 yards Monday, leading Minnesota to a 14-7 National Football Conference playoff victory over the Los Angeles Rams. The Vikings' ability to control the ball, particularly in the second half, gave considerable rest to their gray-templed defense.

"The main thing about this game," said 32-year-old defensive tackle Alan Page, "was the way both our offense and defense played. They played like a single unit and I'm really proud of that."

Page, smiling but looking extremely tired after the rainy afternoon's work, sounded grateful to the team's offense for allowing him some time on the sidelines.

He plays on a defensive unit that includes 39-year-old Jim Marshall and 35-year-old Carl Eller in the line, and 35-year-old Paul Krause and 33-year-old Bobby Bryant in the secondary.

Marshall, looking even more weary than Page after the Vikings had won an NFC championship date with Dallas next Sunday, was joining his teammate in complaining about the game's officiating.

"Look at this," said Marshall, fingering his muddy and almost completely shredded jersey. "It looks like somebody held a little, doesn't it?"

Foreman said he was happy the older Vikings were able to take it easy for awhile.

"We knew we had to control the ball some to give our defense some rest," he said. "They're old, sure, but they're good. It really helps if they can get some rest."

The Rams, considerably younger as a team than the Vikings, seemed just as tired and predictably a lot quieter after the loss.

Los Angeles defensive end Jack Youngblood, visibly upset, answered one newsman's question with, "That is a stupid question," and stalked off to the showers.

"My interception in the end zone midway in the second quarter was the turning point," said Rams quarterback Pat Haden, solemnly. "Charley Young ran his pattern perfectly but I just threw a lousy ball."

"It was just one of those days," said Los Angeles linebacker Isiah Robertson. "It was one of the worst defensive games we ever played in this stadium."

Razorbacks to file suits

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A Little Rock attorney said Monday he will file a lawsuit in federal court today that will seek to have three suspended University of Arkansas football players reinstated for the Orange Bowl.

Running backs Ben Cowins and Michael Forrest and wide receiver Donny Bobo were suspended last week by Coach Lou Holtz, allegedly because of an incident involving a woman in an athletic dormitory. The suspension covers only the Jan. 2 Orange Bowl game against Oklahoma.

John W. Walker, attorney for the three suspended players, said the suit will also allege a tradition of racial discrimination in the university's athletic department.

"It will be a class action suit attempting to enjoin the university from imposing a dual standard against black athletes," Walker said.

Walker said he would seek a temporary restraining order to stop Holtz from withholding the players from the game.

Walker also released a lengthy statement from the players which accused Holtz of discriminating against black athletes, particularly those who associate with white women.

Last week, Walker said Holtz told the three players they had violated his "do right" rule, of which the Bible is a source for the rule.

Holtz said from Miami he would have no comment on the suit or the allegations made in the player's statement.

Part of that statement is as follows:

"...We are...confused because we don't understand the 'do right' rule as it has been applied. We are thus left with no conclusion about the reason for his action other than that we are black students who had a non-physical, social encounter with a white person.

"We had heretofore been reluctant to voice a charge of racism against our coach, but feel that there is no other explanation for his decision to impose such a harsh penalty upon us, and to do so in a manner which raises before the entire nation questions about our criminality or morality.

"We have arrived at the conclusion that Coach Holtz is adverse to black-male, white-female associations...."

About the suit, Walker said, "We will be seeking that the university provide as much assistance to black athletes as they do white so they can simply graduate from school. I think we can prove that only a small percentage of black athletes graduate.

"The university provides much more assistance to white athletes. We're also concerned about the assistance the university gives white athletes after they get out of school. The black athletes are sort of cast out into the street after they graduate.

"There are some long-term things involved in this thing. We seek to remedy some situations that have existed in the last nine or ten years."

The Arkansas football team arrived in Miami Monday afternoon. Workouts were to begin this morning in preparation for the Orange Bowl.

Fred Akers loses brother, nephew

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A brother and nephew of University of Texas football Coach Fred Akers were killed Monday in a one-car crash near Armorel, Ark. on Arkansas Highway 18, state police said.

State troopers withheld the identification of a third man killed in the wreck.

A spokesman for Cobb Funeral Service in Blytheville, Ark. identified two of the victims as Carl L. Akers, 36, and Lonnie O. Akers Jr., 22.

Archie tells brother to stay on defense

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Archie Griffin, the only college football player ever to win the Heisman Trophy twice, had some advice for younger brother Ray.

"Archie said, 'You'll be a real high draft choice if you stay on defense,'" the Ohio State senior remembered.

After the opening game with Miami this fall, Jeff Logan and Ricky Johnson, two top tailbacks, were hurt.

Suddenly, the Buckeyes' offensive runners were scarce. The SOS went out for Ray Griffin, one of the nation's premier safeties, to return to the attacking unit.

After all, it should have been an easy transition. Ray had won All-Ohio prep honors as a tailback and understudied his more famous brother as an Ohio State freshman.

It wasn't easy.

Griffin, one of seven brothers who play football, worked two games at tailback. He carried 21 times for just 74 yards.

"It was a lack of practice on offense for me," he said of the ill-fated switch. "It wasn't for a lack of confidence. It just takes time."

So it was back to safety in the fourth game. He stayed there the rest of the way, but the move, he concedes, hurt his chances to follow in Archie's footsteps as a concensus All-America.

"I agree," said the 5-foot-9, 182-pound Ray, swifter and lighter than Archie.

"But I wanted to make the change as far as the team was concerned. It was a good move for the team. It was not a good move for me personally. At Ohio State, I want to think more of the team."

Still, he does not believe the switch hurt his chances with the pros. "They already knew what I could do from my sophomore and junior years," he said.

Ohio State now has seven defensive backs in the National Football League — Jack Tatum, Neal Colzie, Tim Fox, Craig Cassady, Doug Plank, Mike Sensibaugh and Steve Luke.

"He'll rank with any of those players," said George Hill, the Ohio State defensive coordinator.

The younger Griffin may join Archie as a first-round National Football League draft choice. He's almost certain to go by the second round.

"I've never resented Archie at all, but I'd rather not be drafted by Cincinnati. I'd rather establish my own identity. I have no preference, although I'd rather be with a contender. I've played on winning teams all my life since Little League," he said.

His final collegiate season has been a personal disappointment. He ranked 12th in team tackles (35), fourth in interceptions (2) and had no tackles for loss or fumble recoveries.

It may have been his vaunted reputation as a tackler and pass defender. "They have thrown away from me. It was disappointing. I was looking for something big this year. It got boring," said the compact safety.

Warriors, Texas take victories

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Marquette seemed well on the way to winning its annual Milwaukee Classic holiday college basketball tournament, but the Warrior coach, Hank Raymonds, sounded anything but pleased.

"I don't like that kind of basketball," Raymonds said, referring to the free-wheeling, oneon-one play in the second half of Marquette's 90-73 victory over Eastern Kentucky Monday night.

The victory sent the defending National Collegiate Athletic Association champion Warriors (6-1) into the tournament final tonight versus Texas (8-1), which knocked off Army 74-73 Monday night. Eastern Kentucky (4-5) meets Army (7-4) in a consolation game tonight.

"We didn't have a basketball team. We had five players out there," Raymonds said of his team, which led 45-28 after the first half and won by the exact same margin of 17 points after the two teams played even at 45-45 through the second half.

"It was like we were playing playground ball. We'd let them take a shot and then we'd take a shot," he said. "You can't afford to play that kind of game against anybody."

Marquette, with Butch Lee totaling 25 points and Jerome Whitehead adding 21, established control by outscoring the Colonels 17-2 during a four-minute stretch midway through the first half to lead 35-16 with 6:27 remaining before intermission.

The Warrior players seemed to enjoy the "run and gun" style of play that developed as the game continued.

"I want them to have fun," Raymonds said. "Basketball should be fun, but it shouldn't be like it was in the second half."

He also said he sees Texas as a good competitor.

"They play match up defense. They move the ball very well. This is a good basketball team," Raymonds said of the Longhorns. "We're going to have to control tempo, and we've got to get the ball inside. We simply have to get the ball inside."

Texas survived a late Army surge to win its contest, as John Moore and Tyrone Branyan each hit two free throws in the closing seconds to insure the victory.

Forward Gary Winton led the Cadets with 24 points, slightly under his per-game average, while Moore had 18 to lead Texas, now riding an eight-game winning streak.

Texas outscored the Cadets 12-2 to pull away from a 41-41 during a second half spree, and Army Coach Mike Krzyzewski listed several factors in that scoring spurt.

"They (Texas) played pretty good defense at that point," he said. "Our shot selection wasn't the best. We played in different phases. The last 10 minutes of the first half and the last 10 minutes of the game we played pretty well. But when we didn't play well, they took advantage."

Meladon favored in sweepstakes

LEOPARDSTOWN, Republic of Ireland (AP) — Meladon was strongly favored to win the Irish sweepstakes hurdles race at Leopardstown today in a contest that could bring riches to lucky Irish Sweepstakes ticket holders.

Bookies continued to offer steady odds of 7 to 2 against Meladon. But Decent Fellow, the second favorite, was at 6 to 1, compared with 7 to 2 before Christmas.

The bookies offer the lure of better odds on Decent Fellow because so many are backing Meladon to win.

Denver one step away from fairy tale finish

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos, picked in many preseason polls to finish no higher than third in their division, are one step away from the Super Bowl and a fairy-tale finish to one of this year's most improbable stories.

It looms as one giant step, however. To get to New Orleans, the Broncos must beat their old foe, Oakland — something they've done only seven times in the 36 meetings between the two teams.

Complicating the task is the fact that Denver, while playing at home against the Raiders once each year, hasn't beaten Oakland here since 1962. This season, the Broncos won 30-7 in Oakland but the Raiders took the return bout here, 24-14.

The rubber match, for the American Football Conference championship, begins at 2 p.m., EST, on New Year's Day.

Denver, in the playoffs for the first time, advanced to Sunday's showdown with a 34-21 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers last Saturday. Oakland beat Baltimore 37-31 in overtime to complete the matchup.

The same formula that produced a 12-2 regular-season record worked for the Broncos in Saturday's playoff game: An aggressive defense which forces turnovers, an opportunistic offense led by consistent quarterback Craig Morton, a strong kicking game, and rabid fans.

"We didn't get many yards in the first half but we created a couple of breaks," noted Denver Coach Red Miller. "Then we just outplayed the Steelers in the second half."

The Broncos, despite generating just 44 total yards in the first half, were tied with the Steelers 14-14 at intermission. John Schultz blocked a punt and recovered it at the Pittsburgh 17-yard line in the opening period, helping Denver to a quick TD. In the second quarter, defensive end Lyle Alzado forced a fumble and linebacker Tom Jackson ran 30 yards with the loose ball to the Pittsburgh 10. Otis Armstrong ran it in on the next play.

The Steelers, meanwhile, got short-yardage touchdowns from Terry Bradshaw and Franco Harris, capping long drives.

Denver apparently got a lift from the intimidating tactics of Steeler defensive tackle Joe Greene, who slugged guard Paul Howard and center Mike Montler on successive plays late in the half. Denver fans chanted, "We Want Greene," but the Broncos declined to retaliate.

Instead, with the confidence usually associated with veteran playoff teams, the Broncos picked the Steelers apart in the second half.

Morton and Bradshaw traded TD passes before Jim Turner broke the 21-21 tie with a 44-yard field goal with 7:17 left. Less than a minute later, Jackson intercepted and returned 32 yards to the Steeler 9, setting up another Turner three-pointer.

With two minutes left, Jackson stole a second Bradshaw pass, and Morton followed with a clinching, 34-yard scoring pass to Jack Dolbin. Denver had converted the blocked punt, fumble recovery and two interceptions into 24 points.

Bullets stick Atlanta

By The Associated Press

The Atlanta Hawks must be sick of seeing the Washington Bullets...and equally sick of losing to them.

The Hawks played the Bullets two consecutive nights in a home-and-home series and both times lost to them by indentical margins — the last one a 113-106 decision Monday night.

"It's hard to win after you have beaten the same team the previous night," said Washington Coach Dick Motta. "Traditionally, teams split when they play on consecutive nights.

"But the fact that we won two nights in a row by seven points does not mean that we are seven points better than they are. It just worked out that way."

Atlanta Coach Hubie Brown felt a bit chagrined, especially with the home-court loss.

"Well," he said, "that's two tough losses for us. It's the first time in a while we've been under .500. We are 9-5 at home now. But I guess we have to be objective. It's been two seven-point losses to a heck of a good team."

The Bullets won the first game 100-93 Sunday night.

In Monday night's other NBA games, the Detroit Pistons defeated the Boston Celtics 122-100; the Houston Rockets tripped the Kansas City Kings 113-99 and the Denver Nuggets whipped the Pheonix Suns 127-108.

Larry Wright scored 10 of his 17 points in the final period to spur Washington over Atlanta. Atlanta scored 30 points in the last period — including 14 by Steve Hawes — but the Bullets held on to their nearly gamelong lead with the help of Wright's burst at the end.

Hawes had a career-high 25 points for Atlanta, many of them in the Hawks' fourthquarter rally, but admitted, "It was a little bit late." Added Hawes, "We haven't played a strong game the last two nights. When we do play well, we can beat anybody."

Pistons 122, Celtics 100

Eric Money's 23 points led Detroit over Boston. Money's nine points in the third helped the Pistons to a 100-68 margin at the end of the quarter. The Celts, who have now lost six straight and 11 straight games on the road, were led by former Piston Dave Bing with 19 points.

"The defense won the game for us tonight," said Detroit's interim coach, Bob Kauffman. "We put a lot of pressure on them. All of our men moved very well and shot very well."

Rockets 113, Kings 99

Calvin Murphy and Moses Malone pumped in 22 points each to spark Houston over Kansas City. Murphy scored 20 of his points in the first half as the Rockets took an early lead and were never headed.

Nuggets 127, Suns 108

David Thompson and Dan Issel each tallied 24 points, leading six Denver players in double figures as the Nuggets defeated Phoenix. The Suns were led by Walter Davis' 23 points.
