Britain, Argentina dispute each other's claims

By The Associated Press

Despite the loss of a second warship and 20 of its sailors, Britain vowed Saturday to regain the Falkland Islands and said it had 5,000 men ashore in a secure beachhead. Argentina claimed only 400 British commandos landed Friday and said they were "being cleaned up."

The British Defense Ministry said Saturday evening it had no reports of any Argentine attacks on the beachhead and claimed two of its carrier-based Harrier jets "on routine patrol...attacked and severely damaged an Argentine patrol boat" in Choiseul Sound, about 25 miles south of Stanley, the capital of the Falklands.

An Argentine communique issued after the British announcement said Argentwne gunners shot down another Harrier as the fighter-bomber attacked Port Darwin, about 50 miles southwest of Stanley. That would be the fourth Harrier downed in two days according to the Argentines, who claimed they destroyed three during the British invasion Friday.

Britain has acknowledged one Harrier was missing and two reconnaissance helicopters were downed in Friday's assault.

British Defense Ministry officials said "poor" weather on the Argentine mainland reduced the threat of any major air strike "for the time being."

Argentina's claim that the British landing forces were being mopped up gave no details or any account of fresh fighting.

The British Defense Ministry said, "There have been no reports of any Argentine action against the task force or disembarked British forces" and the lull was being used "to continue our consolidation of the position."

In Buenos Aires, the U.S. Embassy stepped up evacuation of non-essential personnel. At the United Nations, the Security Council adjourned an emergency meeting on the Falklands crisis until Sunday morning after hearing requests that it hand Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar a mandate to revive his two-week-old personal effort to mediate the dispute.

Peru's official news agency Andina said Argentina had accepted a peace plan proposed by Peruvian President Fernando Belaunde Terry, but the Argentine ambassador in Peru said British conditions set on the plan amounted to a rejection.

Pope John Paul II appealed for peace and was reported leaving it up to Roman Catholic bishops in London to decide whether the escalation of the South Atlantic fighting should prompt him to abandon plans to visit Britain starting Friday.

The sinking of the British frigate Ardent by Argentine jets was announced by British Defense Secretary John Nott, who told reporters in London that about 30 men were wounded in Friday's attack against the warship in addition to the 20 lost crewmen. He said another British warship had an unexploded bomb in its engine room that was later defused, and that three other ships suffered minor damage.

Britain contended it knew the ships would be vulnerable but called it the calculated cost of a landing that Nott described as a "complete success."

The Ardent was the second British warship sunk since the crisis erupted April 2 with the Argentine seizure of the Falklands from Britain.

Cost-cutting conscience

One of the many ways the city of Midland has cut costs down through the years is the use of side-loading, automated garbage trucks that require a driver, not a crew of three or four.

Cutting costs not new idea in Midland

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The year was about 1970 and Midland was languishing in the midst of one of its "bust" periods.

City Manager James Brown was sitting in his third floor office at City Hall staring at the trash cans behind a building when the idea hit him — automated garbage pickup service. It was an idea that proved to be the biggest money-saver for the city over the years and put the municipal government on the road to other cost-cutting measures that have saved taxpayers upwards of $7.9 million.

While cities throughout the country have been tightening their belts as the grim reaper of economic gloom stands on their doorsteps, Midland has been finding ways of reducing the size of its grocery tape, so to speak, even though the local economy has been busting at the seams.

FROM THAT FIRST idea to install dumpsters and side-loading garbage trucks with one driver, the city has progressed through paid advertising on envelopes to energy efficiency studies to buying its own telephone system to implementing work efficiency programs.

"I was sitting here looking at the garbage cans and thinking of how to do things better," Brown recalled. Although dumpsters had been installed in the commercial district, the thought that they might work in residential areas popped in his mind.

Everyone had a trash can behind his house and each garbage truck had three men, according to Brown. These men had to get off the trucks and toss the cans' deposits into the vehicles.

"We had a new shipment of dumpsters come in and I told the staff to find an alley and space to put these out," said Brown. The alley chosen ran between Garfield and Ward streets.

Shortly afterward, Brown attended a city managers' meeting in Sweetwater and mentioned his experiment. He learned that Snyder already was trying it out, but with front-loading garbage trucks. "Midland had side-loaders and they work better," he added.

Slowly, Brown was adding one alley after another to the experiment. He planned on putting in one new route every year, "and that would have taken 19 years. But the cry got so loud from people all over town wanting dumpsters that the City Council finally told me to see how much money it would cost to do the whole city at once."

That tally came up to 4,200 dumpsters and $500,000.

"THE CITY WAS BUSTED," he remembered. "We didn't have any money." And when one of the council members questioned why the system was going in, Brown said, "I told him it would be cost effective."

City officials scraped together their plans and sought help from The First National Bank. "They said if we could put up $110,000, they would loan us the rest to be paid back. They bank would only look at the Reporter-Telegram begins own 'Bureau of Accuracy'

Beginning today if your name appears in The Midland Reporter-Telegram, you may receive a form in the mail from us a few days later.

It will have a copy of the story pasted to one side and it will ask you a few questions. Was your name spelled correctly? Did we publish your address, age and title correctly? Was the story factual, unbiased and fair? Was all essential information included? Was the headline accurate?

There also will be space for other comments either about the story or The Reporter-Telegram in general. A business reply envelope will be enclosed to eliminate most of the trouble and the expense of returning the form.

The program, which we are calling our "Bureau of Accuracy," is part of an effort to check up on our own accuracy and fairness and to dispel any doubts you may have that we care. We do.

This is the way the bureau will work internally:

Three to five stories will be chosen each day by the newspaper's librarian. People in the news department will not know which stories are being sent out. An effort will be made to select all types of local stories from throughout the newspaper. We're interested in receiving as broad a reading from as many people as we can.

As the forms come back, they will be routed to those involved. The editor and publisher will see all of them. The reporter who wrote the story will see the form as will any supervising editor across whose desk the story passed.

Any factual error will be corrected in our files so the error will not perpetuate itself. The form will go to a file and will be discarded after three months.

The replies are for use by news staff and management only. Beyond that, they are confidential. Responses will not be used as letters to the editor and published or for any other purpose than to give us informal feedback from you.

Our primary goal is to publish what we believe our readers want and what we know they deserve: a newspaper with a high degree of accuracy, balance and fairness that is published responsibly by responsible people.

So if you receive one of our Bureau of Accuracy forms in the mail, we hope you will help us by filling it out. We've tried to make it as easy as possible for you to do so.

Beyond that, don't wait to receive a form before letting us know what you think about a story, photograph or headline. We want to hear from you.

NEW YORK — President Reagan smoked the Kremlin out of its pious peace posture the past week by obtaining Soviet willingness to begin serious talks on strategic nuclear arms. The defensive Russian reply was delivered by ailing communist President Leonid Brezhnev who gave a composite "da" and "nyet" to our president's dramatic call for reductions in each super-power's arsenal of nuclear weapons.

Weeks before President Reagan spelled out the American presentation at his alma mater, Eureka College, he carefully divulged his views on the highly charged issues. They defused the growth of anti-nuclear protest demonstrations in Western Europe and this country. His plan set out lucidly at Eureka College had the effect of causing the U.S.S.R. to back away from anti-nuclear peaceniks and huddle for time.

Simply stated, I believe, the Russians were caught with their plans down. President Reagan's forceful ideas gripped people's imaginations at home and abroad. He also recast the acronym, "SALT," for Strategic Arms Limitations Talks, to "START," Strategic Arms Reductions Talks. He obviously has a way with words, nothing fancy mind you, but they strike a responsive note.

Brezhnev and his hard-nosed Kremlin comrades wanted to stall but President Reagan's proposals washed positively over the world. As a result, the Soviets replied reluctantly by badmouthing the Reagan suggestions as "one-sided" yet declaring that they are ready for talks soon. No date or site has been agreed on for a Reagan-Brezhnev summit but autumn seems a distinct possibility, with Geneva or the Republic of Ireland among potential places.

If there's a single word to describe President Reagan's move on the chessboard of arms control -reducing total strategic nuclear forces of the U.S. and the Soviets -it is stability. The U.S. wants to halt the upward spiral of nuclear weapons production and deployment and seek to close what we call the "window of vulnerability." President Reagan contends that both sides have parity in the number of warheads at 7,500 each. He proposes that this be cut by a third to 5,000 each with no more than 2,500 emplaced in land-based missiles.

In the war of nuclear words that fly from Moscow to the states and vice versa regular terms crop up based on technological uses. The latest and most familiar is "parity." Back at the Vienna

Water board sets Midland hearing

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland proponents and opponents of a $20 million sewage disposal plan have been given a date to present their sides before the Texas Water Development Board.

The public hearing will start at 9 a.m. June 29 in the auditorium of the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Word that the hearing had been set on the city's application for a permit to carry out the project came late last week and after the city staff rejected a proposal by the Glasscock County Underground Water District to send the effluent in their direction.

However, the City Council on Tuesday will hear a review of that proposal and will hold the option of accepting or rejecting it.

According to John Lowe, director of public utilities, representatives of the Glasscock district met with him and other staff persons, including City Manager James Brown and Assistant City Manager Fred Poe, to request the primary treated sewage water be piped to their farmland for use as surface irrigation rather than the plan the City Council has chosen.

The proposal which will be considered by the Water Development Board involves piping the primary effluent to a site about 15 miles southeast of the city to J. "Timber" Floyd's land. It will be channeled into a holding pond and then used for irrigating the land. Engineers and hydrologists hired by the city selected that site because of the poor quality ground water and lack of it in many spots.

For the state to approve a permit officials had informed the city the ground water must be a poorer quality than the effluent. City officials reported in previous City Council meetings that tests proved it met this criterion. If the effluent percolates through the ground and into the ground water, it will run into Johnson's Draw and eventually into Glasscock County.

Lowe said the city management listened to the Glasscock County people's ideas. "But our time fuse is too short to stop it and back off. In the future we may have excess effluent and we'll be glad to put something together then for the Glasscock people."

Backing up on the proposal would have meant setting the city back "to where we were last August. We're too far along to back up and start from scratch," Lowe said.

Recycling of waste water suggested

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Just as surely as Midland intends to get rid of its waste water, Bill Rapp reckons the city ought to keep it. His recommendation: Keep the effluent on the homefront and deal with it in innovative ways.

"You have to plan for the future," says Rapp, a civil engineer who openly disagrees with the Midland City Council on its handling of sewage effluent. "Sure, you have to look to the past."

Rapp is critical of the city's $20 million proposal to pipe primary-treated effluent 16 miles east of the city and, essentially, dump it and leave it to the ways and wiles of J. "Timber" Floyd and other landowners on whose land the city plans to build lagoons and cast the waste water.

That's a mistake, Rapp contends, and ultimately will not serve the best interests of the people, who already can sense omens of an acute shortage of potable water.

"FIRST THINGS FIRST," advises Rapp, who calls for "in-depth" discussions on the city's plans and on innovative and viable alternatives. "How can they (anyone) have constructive opinions if they don't know what's happening?"

Rapp's proposal is to spend that $20 million on the beginning stages of a water reclamation-recycling plant in readying for the inevitable: a dearth of fresh and plentiful water.

The irony is in the West Texas setting: a semi-arid region wherein rainfall is relatively scarce. Yet, notes Rapp, the city opts to pump out its "excess" water — to dump municipal waste water, which could be reclaimed and used as tap water. Now, though, the city is beset with too much municipal waste water and inadequate treatment and storage facilities due to the influx of people during the petroleum boom and the rush to the Sun Belt.

Essentially, the initial stages of the Rapp plan would be an improved extension of the city's current handling of its effluent. Holding ponds, or reservoirs, would be deepened and lined with an impervious — and expensive — liming to prevent percolation and seepage into the fresh-water zones. Water would undergo one more cleansing step than is currently the case. Then, additional agricultural land would be irrigated with the effluent.

Looking through some books at his office at the University of Texas at El Paso is sociology professor and anthropologist Dr. Ellwyn Stoddard. Stoddard recently wrote a paper theorizing about the social structure of space colonies of the future.

Earthlings will carry institutions into space, UTEP researcher says

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — If man ever colonizes space, life up there won't be as free and easy as some science fiction writers predict, says a researcher at the University of Texas at El Paso.

Ellwyn Stoddard, a professor of sociology and anthropology at UTEP since 1965, has been studying the possible social structures of space communities and he thinks space pioneers will have to answer to a strong central authority and give up many of their individual freedoms.

"Most of the people in this field have the mistaken idea that the farther we get away from Earth, the further we will be from Earth institutions," Stoddard said. "That's the last thing that will happen in space."

Although Stoddard is sure of his theories, he admits that studying the social life of space colonists is primarily speculation. His most recent paper on the subject is a blend of what is known and what is anticipated, drawing from both sociological sources and science fiction.

"I'm an avid science fiction reader," he said. "That's not easy. I have my heroes, like (author) Isaac Asimov, that I have to take to task on this."

Stoddard said most science fiction writers express the "liberal ideology" of space pioneers' being rugged individualists with a freedom of choice that he believes won't exist.

The liberal view is shared by many people in the space sciences, he said.

"I first presented this paper to the American Astronomical Society, which is dominated by space engineers and, well, idealists who say we have to learn to live in space so that we'll be able to escape when we blow up the world," he said. "This was not really the thing they wanted to hear."

Stoddard believes, first of all, that while colonizing space is an attractive idea, it will be a long time coming if it happens at all. The reason is money. He said economic resources will not be turned to taming the wilds of space until after problems here on Earth — particularly energy — are solved.

But if Earth can afford the ventures into space, the pioneers will need a structure for their social interaction and that's where Stoddard's theories come in.

There's little hard information to work from, he said, because there have been no projects where fairly large numbers of people worked together in space with some autonomy from Earth.

"The Skylab kind of thing does not tell us what a non-Earth colony will be like," he said. "It only tells us what a group of scientists in space will be like. . . It's very dependent on Earth. It's always going to be a messenger boy.

"A lot of people have talked about establishing a colony on Mars because it is probably the least harsh of the other environments in the Solar System. But Mars isn't exactly next door. You go a further distance from Earth and you have to be autonomous."

Stoddard worked with two models in writing his paper, which will appear in the fall edition of Space Journal. One is for colonizing space relatively close to Earth and the other is a "doomsday mode."

"I say doomsday mode because I don't know of any other reason for throwing a man out of the galaxy," he said. "There are two ways of thinking about how we would select people to carry on our civilization after we blow up the world. One version would be an Earth microcosm, like a little United Nations. If you put, say, 10,000 people on the colony, you would put some of every kind of person to broaden the genetic pool."

The other possibility is placing the "best and the brightest," the experts in various fields, aboard the colony.

Tombstone turns up in Austin creek

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The receding floodwaters of Shoal Creek recently revealed the tombstone of a former World War II soldier buried in Mississippi, and no one seems to know how the stone got there.

The former wife of Wisdom D. Martin insists the original tombstone is still atop his grave in Kosciusko, Miss.

The tombstone found in Austin is an exact copy of the one above Martin's grave, including birth date, death date and World War II Army rank, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

The words "PFC U.S. Army, World War II" on the tombstone indicate it was supplied by the Army, which uses its own monument makers, the paper said.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's office has contacted the Veterans Administration in Maryland for records that might reveal any Austin connection.

Rick Harris, who works at a downtown automobile dealership, found the tombstone on May 13 after floodwaters had receded in Shoal Creek.

"We had been moving cars because of the flood, and I just walked over to the creek, and lo and behold, there was this tombstone," Harris said.

He contacted the Bureau of Vital Statistics, and the stone eventually was traced to Mississippi and a woman named Ruth McFadden.

The paper said she was married to Martin when he died of natural causes at the age of 55 in 1968.

"This whole thing has me bothered since I first heard about it," she said. "The only thing I can think of was that maybe the people that make the tombstones made the wrong one, and sent it to somebody and they sent it back. All I know is that the original tombstone is still there."

"This thing is one bizarre little story," Harris said.

Robbery suspect dies in Bedford standoff

BEDFORD, Texas (AP) — A 39-year-old robbery suspect was shot to death early Saturday by tactical officers after holding a gun on a female hostage, authorities said.

Charles Edward Hardin was killed about 1:40 a.m. after he refused police orders to surrender and tried to escape with a hostage from a house in this Fort Worth suburb.

A standoff began when Irving police tactical officers and Bedford officers attempted to serve an arrest and search warrant about 12:15 a.m., according to Bedford Police Chief Glen Lightford.

Hardin was wanted on an aggravated robbery warrant issued in connection with a supermarket holdup in the Dallas suburb of Irving, Lightford said.

At about 12:45 a.m., police told Hardin over the telephone to surrender, but he refused.

When officers shined vehicle headlights into the house at about 1:40 a.m., someone inside the residence opened fire with a machine gun, police said.

Officers fired tear gas into the residence and a 27-year-old man and a 15-year-old woman fled the house and were arrested, Lightford said.

Hardin then ran out of the back of the house, holding a gun on a 24-year-old woman and threatening to kill her, according to Lightford.

An Irving officer fired one shot, striking Hardin in the head, Lightford said.

Cause of light plane crash at San Angelo investigated

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Investigators looked into the cause of the crash of a light plane that apparently went down in flames south of Mathis Field during a violent thunderstorm.

Gordon S. Moore, 60, of Sugar Land, was pronounced dead at the scene Saturday, according to Justice of the Peace Charles Long.

Initial reports indicated that a woman may have been on the plane, but authorities said no other bodies were found in the wreckage.

The plane was found about two miles east of the airport shortly after sunrise Saturday, authorities said.

Braniff International seeking space to store 40 idled planes

DALLAS (AP) — Braniff International is negotiating for space at the Grayson County Airport to store as many as 40 of its planes now standing idle at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

"I'm just negotiating with them now," said airport manager Doyle Dobbins. "We're talking about up to 40 aircraft."

Dobbins said he didn't know when Braniff wants to move the planes, but said an agreement could be hammered out within the next several days.

Braniff executives could not be reached for comment.

Grayson County Airport is a public facility, located near Sherman, on the site of Perrin Air Force Base, which closed in 1971.

There are 71 jets in the Braniff fleet, most of which are Boeing 727 jets.

Braniff also has contacted Evergreen Air Center, near Tucson, Ariz., about storage prices, according to Richard Funk, the facility's president.

Evergreen Air Center has about 100 planes in storage and is used frequently by airlines needing storage facilities for aircraft.

Dallas man given death penalty

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)— A 22-year-old Dallas man, convicted of capital murder in connection with a spree of robberies, has been handed the death penalty for the slaying of an Aledo man.

Following a six-week trial, Bruce Collins was found guilty of the robbery-slaying of Allen Huckleberry and the robbery of two other bar patrons in West Fort Worth.

Collins also on Friday was assessed two life sentences and two $10,000 fines for the robbery convictions.

Huckleberry, 27, was killed during a holdup on June 27, 1980.

Prosecutor Greg Pipes described Collins as "a one-man crime wave" who began a four-year spree of robberies in 1978.

"We went for the death penalty even after he got two life sentences because the only way to keep a man in prison now is with a death penalty," said Pipes.

Defense attorneys unsuccessfully tried to convince jurors that bar patrons were mistaken in their identification of Collins.

Group seeks Austin weapons vote

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A group urging an international freeze on nuclear weapons hopes to get the referendum proposal before Austin voters in August.

George Humphrey, an organizer for the Austin chapter of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, said 18,000 signatures have been collected on petitions. He said at least 21,300 signatures will be needed to get the proposal on the ballot.

The petition calls on President Reagan to propose to the Soviet Union that the testing, deployment and production of nuclear weapons and delivery systems be halted immediately.

"If Austin, as capital of the Sun Belt, comes out for the freeze, it will be a signal to the whole country in November that the freeze is something we should get behind," Humphrey said.

Lawyer fears deportation sweep

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Houston lawyer who specializes in immigration cases says immigration officials are gearing up for a deportation sweep of illegal aliens.

Isaias Torres said April raids by the Immigration and Naturalization Service that netted 5,000 illegal aliens were made to test public reaction.

After three stiff drinks, Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Sheldon, watches a breathalyzer show that he is legally drunk with a blood alcohol content more than .1 percent. The car landed in a ditch, landing Polumbo behind efforts to stiffen Texas' laws against drunk driving.

Drunk legislator fails driving test

He'll now fight for stiffer state laws

HOUSTON (AP) — The drunken driving test, designed to show that 0.1 percent alcohol in your blood makes you a dangerous driver, was done under close police supervision, and officers repeatedly assured participants it was all very safe.

But when Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Sheldon, tried to maneuver around the safety cones after downing three stiff cocktails, his erratic swerving, the squealing of his tires and the tell-tale trail of fallen cones gave even veteran police instructors a start.

"He's not going to make it!" muttered instructor Mike Bell, who warned others waiting near the starting gate to "take cover."

But before everyone could take cover, the four-term legislator who said he wanted to learn first hand about drunken driving, lost control of his test car, skidded off the concrete track and slid into the mud, where a wrecker had to tow him out.

Now Polumbo says he's ready to seek tougher laws against drunk drivers.

"It made me a lot more frightened to be on the road with a drunk driver," a sober Polumbo said the next day. "I don't drink, and it really threw me for a loop."

The drunken driving test was set up by the Houston Safety Council for Polumbo and two news reporters in hopes of increasing public awareness of the effects of alcohol on a person's driving skills.

Floyd McDonald of the police department crime lab served as bartender and mixed drinks to strengths based on body weight.

After consuming nine ounces of 86 proof Scotch in less than an hour, Polumbo registered 0.158 percent alcohol in his blood on a breath detecting machine.

The legal limit in Texas and most other states is 0.10 percent, meaning if you are caught driving with that much or more alcohol in your blood, you are driving while intoxicated.

Polumbo said he plans to introduce a bill in the next regular session of the Legislature to lower the legal limit in Texas to .08 percent.

The scores of all three participants, as predicted, dropped after they drank 6½ to 10 ounces of liquor on empty stomachs.

But Polumbo, who was more than 50 percent over the legal DWI limit for the test, did the worst as a drunk driver.

Lawmakers gathering in Austin for Monday's special session

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Legislators convene in special session Monday to take care of some three-year-old unfinished business. Critics claim it is a waste of time and money.

Gov. Bill Clements wrote the agenda: repeal of the state property tax, which, for the most part, exists in name only.

Pre-session signs, however, point to prison construction money as the real legislative emergency. Both issues could produce unfavorable political fallout for Clements, who is running for re-election this year.

The 1979 Legislature virtually eliminated the state property tax when it set the assessment ratio at 0.0001 percent, the equivalent of a $1 tax on $1 billion worth of property.

Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls and five other colleges that had depended on the tax for construction money filed a lawsuit, contending that only the voters at a statewide election — not the Legislature — could "repeal" a tax established by the Texas Constitution.

The trial was scheduled for June 2.

Clements reportedly felt the state would lose the suit, which could force Texans to pay $856 million in back property taxes, so he called lawmakers backed to Austin to repeal the tax. He also favors a one-time appropriation for 17 colleges that missed out on construction money, with the search for a permanent fund left to the 1983 Legislature.

Critics noted that the governor called the special session despite an offer by plaintiffs to postpone the suit until July 1983, which would give the 1983 Legislature time to find a solution.

Symbolizing a launch into summer, 24 students in Joyce McDonald's art classes at Midland High School attempted to launch helium-filled symmetrical shapes Friday morning. Although the students labored strenuously over the projects, only two of the four objects ever left the ground. According to Mrs. McDonald, this was the second year students have made the symmetrical shapes and filled them with helium. "And it will probably be the last," she added with a laugh.

Cost-cutting efforts not new to Midland

cans as collateral. The banker who approved the loan said, 'Well, if the city doesn't pay us back, I don't know what we're going to do with 4,200 garbage cans.' "

The bank didn't have to worry; the city repaid the loan.

Today, Midland ranks as one of the only cities in the country to operate a fully automated garbage system, said Brown.

The garbage division dropped initially from 74 employees to 40. "We figured that paid out in four years. Since it was started, it's saved us probably from $6 million to $8 million."

The U.S. Postal Service can be credited with forcing the city to come up with another cost-cutter. This idea recently was listed in a report by the National League of Cities.

To reduce its mailing costs on water bills, the city of Midland for the past three to four years has been selling advertising space on the return envelopes. This has been bringing about $5,000 each year into the city and covers the cost of buying envelopes.

Brown said that water bills had been nothing more than postcards with the amount owed printed on the back. But the Postal Service changed its required size and demanded they be put into an envelope of a certain size.

The city had to purchase a stuffing machine to accomplish the task and it could place four items into the envelope.

"WE WERE JUST batting the breeze one day and someone suggested that maybe we should sell advertising. And then Robert Massengale (former finance director) suggested letting someone furnish the return envelopes and let them put their logo on them," Brown said.

The city put the issue out for bids and had a taker in The First National Bank. The financial institution paid the city to furnish the envelopes with their logo on the back at 2 cents per envelope. The next year the bid dropped to 1.5 cents per envelope. And this year the high bidder was Midland National Bank, said Brown.

Figuring that the city mails out 24,000 water bills each month, the city gets a return of close to $5,000 each year on the project.

"We paid for the stuffing machine with that and we use the machine for other things," said Brown, adding that the income goes into the general fund.

In another cost-cutting move, Midland applied for and received a grant to conduct an energy survey on its 50 buildings to determine where and how energy costs could be slashed, Brown continued. "We're showing some progress of reducing the BTU demand," but he wasn't sure how much.

After many years of contracting out the annual street sealcoating job, the city decided 10 years ago to start doing it with its own employees, Brown said. "We bought a chip spreader, pneumatic roller, distributor and a hot tank. It cost $60,000 to $70,000 for all the equipment."

Today, it costs the city about 20 cents per square yard to sealcoat streets during the summer. To contract it out would cost 42 cents per square yard, he claimed.

"WE'RE SAVING ABOUT $330,000 a year by doing it ourselves," he said, adding that Midland sealcoats 1½ million square yards of streets each year. And the practice of sealcoating is another cost cutting measure in that it prolongs the life of streets.

Recently, Midland moved into the used car business to cut its costs on vehicles. When the city went shopping for four more cars, the contract went to a rental car agency where the bid was $8,000 cheaper for the vehicles than a bid for new cars, according to Brown.

And instead of continuing to pay Southwestern Bell monthly charges for renting equipment, the city has purchased its own phone system. Once installed, "We should save several thousand dollars a month. We can pay this out in a few years and then the equipment will be ours."

In addition, the city will be utilizing one of the cut-rate long distance fare companies to reduce the bills for calls made to other cities, according to Brown.

Currently, City Hall is sitting in the midst of what may prove to be one of the largest cost-cutters. The management study team of Kepner and Wolfberg has revamped the working schedule for the street department, is working on the parks department, and on Tuesday will be considered by the council to study the water and sewage departments.

The system set up by the company "controls the use of employees and employees' time and use of equipment," said Brown. A planner keeps track of all the jobs, how much time it takes to accomplish each and then sets up work standards and schedules.

"When a street foreman comes in in the morning, he is given a schedule of work. He can see how many people will be needed and the amount of equipment," he said. "We get them (employees) out of the yard and get them started."

The system has been in effect in the street department less than two years, and the firm figured that "we've saved $415,145 by doing it this way vs. the way we had been doing it."

Brown said the system gets more work out of each employee. "We weren't interested in cutting the number of employees. This town is growing and we need more work done," he added.

OTHER COST-CUTTERS include contracting city services when it can be done cheaper by outside firms, pushing the tax collector to bring in at least 96 to 97 percent of the taxes and charging fees for services used by only special interest groups, such as lights at softball fields.

Going from the days 12 years ago when the city had no extra spending money in its pockets for unplanned "goodies" in its grocery cart to today where the city is experiencing a strong, growing tax base hasn't meant city officials don't worry about money.

Brown said, "We make sure our money is invested to the hilt. Everything not programmed out for immediate spending is invested and we invest it to get the most interest."

By going this route, Brown said, the city has increased its income by $79,000.

"We don't take it lightly," the city manager explained. "It's too much money. The council demands professionalism from us."

Reflecting on the financial situation, Brown said, "How we control our funds, our expenses, is done as well or better than any business. We're under public scrutiny all the time. You try harder to make sure things go right."

More thunderstorms forecast

Midlanders may be spending most of Sunday dodging rain, hail and possible tornadoes if the predicted forecast of more thunderstorms is accurate.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, thunderstorms are predicted through Monday. There is a 40 percent chance today and a 50 percent chance tonight for possible thunderstorms.

The high today is expected to reach the low 80s, dipping in the low 50s tonight. Winds should travel southeasterly 10-15 mph.

Monday's high is expected to be in the mid-80s.

Saturday's high of 83 was a far cry from the record high of 107 set in 1953, but the overnight low of 54 was only four degrees short of the record low of 50 set in 1963.

Recycling of city waste water suggested

IN THOSE DAYS to come when tap water really becomes a premium and people will treat water as a precious commodity in a desert, Midland will be in the vanguard. After all, Rapp reasons, the generally affluent and reasonably enlightened society that is Midland can afford to lead in municipal planning and not have to look back and wonder why it was blind to omens or unwilling to be innovative in problem-solving.

But there's a hitch: apathy amid the masses.

"If you don't get mad about it and say something," warns Rapp, "then you don't have room to gripe."

And Rapp suspects that many people, including engineers who know or suspect what the city is up to or is getting into, haven't the moral courage or the inclination to challenge the city and to propose alternative solutions.

Furthermore, he suspects that the Midland Countians who live along Midland Draw from Midland eastward and into the Greenwood community and beyond are losing their spunk.

Once, the plucky folks were accusing Midland of dumping or otherwise letting the primary-treated waste water run down the draw or otherwise seep into their underground water zones and befoul their good drinking water. Now, they seem placated by the city's plan to pipe the effluent to Floyd's land and forever to rid them of the wastewater problem. But Rapp suggests that it's for other reasons: They dare not speak out for fear that their property values will decrease due to an awareness of the polluted aquifers.

AND, SAYS RAPP, Floyd certainly would have no reason to bellyache.

"It's a freebie," he says of the city's proposal. "It's a $20 million outlay with no benefits (to the people of Midland). It's passing the buck — shirking responsibility.

"The problem is due to the lack of preparedness on the part of city management and city staff" and their reliance on one hydrological firm (Ed Reed & Associates) and one consulting engineering firm (Black & Veatch) and not getting second and third outside evaluations and opinions.

"The proof is in the pudding; see what kind of situation we're in now," Rapp said.

The city's proposal to pipe the waste water eastward will benefit Floyd but, in the long run, not the city, contends Rapp.

"The pure truth is that he (Floyd) would be a fool to turn down such an offer: $20 million's worth of free lines, pumps, reservoirs, prepared areas and 9 to 15 million gallons per day of effluent to do with as he pleases with no return to the Midland citizens, who will pay for it through increased sewer charges and whatever."

The City Council and the city management can take measures to regain their credibility, according to Rapp, by effectively dealing with the effluent in the city's own backyard and not resorting to draining off its problem waters and possibly creating hazards for others. And that is exactly what Kathy Kohls and her cohorts in the Glasscock County Underground Water District think may happen. She and farmers in the St. Lawrence area are apprehensive that the effluent will get into their fresh-water zones and contaminate their water.

BUT MIDLAND MAYOR G. Thane Akins seems confident that the city's proposal, based on advice from professional and trusted consulting engineers and hydrologists, is both practical and affordable; Rapp's proposals are not, he says, though the mayor admits that he sees virtues in and likes Rapp's idea of cleaning up the water and preparing for reclamation and recycling the water in a manner similar to that of nature.

"Right now, the economics are just not there," says Akins, who is a petroleum engineer by trade and profession. "I'd like to do it, too."

The mayor, who is taking the "conservation" approach to the water problem, said that it's possible that "people will accept" the more costly cleaning-up process when the water shortage gets more acute and more painful, recycling becomes practical and essential, and people become willing to pay for good water.

Rapp, though, wants to plan now for those dire times.

On the speculation that Midland's effluent would pollute the ground water in the Floyd land along Johnson Draw and then would flow into St. Lawrence farmers' fresh-water zones and spoil that water, Akins says not so. Midland's effluent, which Akins says is equivalent to secondary-treated effluent and is "as good as Odessa's" waste water which flows down Monahans Draw south of Midland, is far better quality-wise than the existing underground water there. "It's hard to deal with ignorance," the mayor said.

TO RAPP'S ACCUSATIONS that the Midland city management lacked foresight and did not prepare for a booming prosperity at the omen of impending growth (the 1973 oil embargo and the resultant upswing in petroleum exploration and production), Akins says that he indeed did recognize the omen, but he did not envision a growth of the magnitude which has both blessed and cursed Midland in recent years.

"He (Rapp) could have been a voice crying in the wilderness" back in the early 1970s, Akins says. "I (too) thought that we'd grow, but it's the rate of growth that surprised me."

Next month — at 9 a.m. June 29 — at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Center, the Texas Water Commission will to hold a public hearing on Midland's application for a permit to pipe and dump up to 15 million gallons of effluent per day in storage lagoons 16 miles east of town. The water is to be used to irrigate 2,500 acres in the drainage area of Johnson Draw near the Midland-Glasscock County line.

"We're very confident that this is the only game in town," says the mayor, "and if the state does not permit it, I don't know what we'll do."

Rapp does. He proposes that Midlanders, instead of being timid and apathetic on issues, get involved in the decision-making process.

"But it has got to be economically feasible," said the mayor. "It can't be a pie-in-the-sky (solution). I wish they (people with better proposals) would come forth."

Arson blamed for fire

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Two fires that broke out hours apart at the Imperial Palace Hotel were the work of an arsonist, but do not appear to be related to a rash of unsolved fires here in December, authorities said Saturday.

The fires hit an unfinished section of the Strip hotel Friday and injured three guards and a firefighter, none seriously. Some 300 guests were evacuated briefly.

Clark County Fire Capt. Ralph Dinsman said there were no arrests or clues to the identification of the arsonist.

EDITOR'S REPORT

summit meeting in 1979 between Brezhnev and former President Jimmy Carter, the Soviets blandly rejected a halt -or freeze -on their production of SS-20 missiles. They were over-confident with their advantages which were being fed at a vast rate by Russian military production. Now it will be an arduous, long term negotiation as it always is with the U.S.S.R. since President Reagan insists on inspection and verification, which is only right, as a means of protection for all Americans and the West.

Brezhnev, who slurred his speech as Politburo members watched with stonily-fixed eyes on a Young Communist League meeting demanded a nuclear freeze as soon as arms talks begin. He said defensively that nuclear weapons reduction was something the USSR had always favored. Quite uncharacteristically, the sick Soviet Mr. Big conceded that President Reagan's offer to start talking was "a step in the right direction." That said, his claim that the Americans were seeking a missile advantage, I thought, fell flat.

One of the interesting and important developments in the area of nuclear weaponry is the "freeze" movement. Most Americans know in general terms that this means putting a stop to the manufacture and deployment of atomic arms, but some have forgotten just where and when the idea got started.

John Harris, veteran war reporter for The Hearst Newspapers and now a member of our Washington Bureau, obtained an exclusive with some first-class research in a recent column. "How was the freeze movement born?" he asked, and here's part of what Harris wrote:

"It began quietly and obscurely on February 8, 1980, when about 25 pacifists, doctors and clergymen met in a century-old house overlooking New York's ice-bound Hudson River.

"The group heard a woman defense analyst named Randall Forsberg, then aged 36, read a six-page paper that proposed a freeze on nuclear weapons development in the United States and the Soviet Union.

"'The idea is for this demand to be spread around the country,' said Forsberg, an articulate, Alabama-born former lecturer at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and a former manuscript editor at Sweden's Stockholm Peace Research Institute.

"Forsberg's meeting was held under the auspices of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, an international, inter-faith pacifist organization, at its headquarters in Nyack, N.Y., a few miles north of New York City."

John went on to point out that the freeze movement spread across the land, being endorsed by town meetings in New England and many city and county councils in other parts of the country. He also reported that, "The freeze movement is opposed by the Reagan administration and numerous arms experts who contend that a United States-Soviet moratorium on nuclear weapons development would leave the Soviets in a superior military position."

The pro-freeze sponsors are good people, but the use of that word, "freeze," tends to polarize the issue. It suggests that those opposed to the movement are opposed to peace which, of course, is nonsense. It is a matter of semantics.

President Reagan has been criticized unfairly because he objects to the word. But he stated clearly and forcefully at his last press conference that he wants the United States of America to be the world's greatest champion of peace. He simply thinks the freeze approach is an oversimplification.

Both sides of the freeze issue want the same thing for their children, and their children's children. But they use somewhat different terminology. Let us not dismiss the language of our president, who wants peace as devoutly as anyone. His and our key words are "inspection" and "verification."

New Key-spanning bridge dedicated

MARATHON, Fla. (AP) — Seven Mile Bridge, a $45 million concrete ribbon spanning a turquoise bay between two of the Florida Keys, was dedicated Saturday as the star of a renovation program for Florida Keys bridges.

A ceremony and a 10-kilometer run marked the dedication of the bridge, which will be open to traffic June 1.

Thirty-eight narrow, crumbling bridges built between 1908 and 1912 linked the 113-mile chain of tiny islands, or keys, with the only highway from the mainland to Key West, the southernmost point in the United States.

The opening next March of three smaller bridges will complete the $200 million, 38-bridge project, which officials say will make the Keys more accessible to visitors and developers.

A new $63 million, 13.5 million-gallon-a-day aqueduct also was dedicated Saturday. The pipeline, which for the first time ensures plenty of fresh water for the 65,000 Keys residents, was built in conjunction with the bridges.

The original bridges were built for a railroad. They were later converted to two-lane highway bridges that used the old tracks as guardrails. But the spans were barely 20 feet wide and became more and more dangerous as cars and trucks got larger.

"When I drive the old Seven Mile Bridge I don't take my eyes off the road," Marathon Chamber of Commerce Secretary Nancy Perry said Thursday. "You'll find people in Marathon who won't drive across it," she said. Marathon is on Vaca Key.

The new bridge still has only two lanes, but each lane is 12 feet wide with 6-foot shoulders. The old bridge had 10-foot-wide lanes with no shoulders. It leads from Vaca Key to Duck Key.

Water development board to hold hearing in Midland

A contract with Floyd should be finalized by the time of the June 29 hearing, he said.

After the public hearing is over, the hearing examiner will report his recommendations to the Texas Water Rights Commission, which is the judiciary branch of the Department of Water Resources, according to Lowe. There will be another public hearing before this commission.

"But by now, you've got all the objections heard and ironed out," he said. However, that hearing won't be held until 30 to 45 days after the June 29 meeting, putting the date no earlier than the first of August.

In addition, the bond sale, which is under way, would have had to be restructured, he noted. The $20 million in bonds to finance the project are being sold by the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Included in the permit draft is a provision that the time clock on getting the system built and implemented won't start ticking off the two-year time period until the day the permit is issued, Lowe said.

Last January, the city of Midland was issued a temporary permit to allow nearby farmers to take the treated effluent and use it for irrigation. But the state also set a two-year time clock then on when an alternate system would be working.

Suggestions by other interested citizens that the city clean the sewage up to drinking water standards were considered by the council, said Lowe. But the cost was prohibitive. Studies put the cost for the Timber Floyd proposal at slightly more than $1 per 1,000 gallons while the upgraded plan would have meant $4-plus per 1,000 gallons, he added.

Lowe said the Glasscock district's proposal hasn't been shoved out of the picture.

"It wasn't a snap decision we made with Glasscock. There were a lot of elements to consider. I've encouraged them to keep in contact," Lowe said.

Wallace at it again: Announces candidacy

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Former Gov. George C. Wallace, who said four years ago he was done with politics forever, said Saturday he would run for an unprecedented fourth term as governor, and promised no new taxes if elected.

Wallace, 62, a paraplegic from a 1972 assassination attempt, announced his candidacy before 2,000 supporters and spectators at an old-fashioned political rally that featured a barbecue and country music.

"I got paralyzed in the legs," he told the crowd in a steady drizzle. "I apologize to you for that. But I won't get paralyzed in the head."

A veteran of four presidential campaigns, Wallace noted the many national and foreign reporters at the rally: "No, I'm not going to run for president," he said. "That's over."

Wallace drew his loudest applause when he promised there would be no new state taxes if he were elected and also pledged to roll back property taxes.

He also drew loud applause when he pledged to get Alabama working again. During his last two terms, he told the crowd, Alabama led the South in new industries and jobs for six out of eight years.

Wallace is a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the Sept. 7 primary. But on Saturday, he was already looking ahead to the general election in November, saying the campaign would be difficult because the Republicans are mounting a vigorous campaign.

"They are determined to buy the governor's office again in 1982," he said.

Once a jut-jawed, fist-shaking firebrand, Wallace appeared tired and weak when he left office in January 1979 and he quietly told friends, "I'm through." He became a college administrator and kept out of the limelight.

Last August, however, his friends threw him a big birthday party, and hundreds of people attended, including some long-time foes.

"I think that encouraged him a lot," said Doug Benton, a former member of Wallace's Cabinet. "He may have looked at himself and stopped feeling sorry for himself. He seemed to have that attitude for a long time."

Wallace attributed his change in attitude to two things: a renewed interest in "serving the people of Alabama" and his third wife, 32-year-old country music singer Lisa Taylor.

Already in the race for governor are Montgomery Mayor Emory Folmar, a Republican, and Birmingham investment banker Frank Thomas Jr., a Democrat.

Two other Democrats, Lt. Gov. George McMillan of Birmingham and Alabama Speaker of the House Joe McCorquodale of Jackson, say they will announce their candidacies soon.

Gov. Fob James, the Democrat elected after Wallace decided not to run in 1978, has shown no interest in a second term.

Wallace won his first term as governor in 1962 by promising "Segregation Forever," but never mentions racial matters these days except to say his segregationist stand was a mistake.

Over 400 grieve for dead family

CAIRO, Ga. (AP) — More than 400 mourners joined in an emotional last tribute Saturday to 10 members of a Cairo family who died in a Baltimore rowhouse fire a week earlier.

The caskets crowded the front of Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church, where mourners spilled from the pews into the aisles after the 45-minute service.

The caskets were loaded into eight hearses followed by a dozen family cars and other vehicles winding through town during the procession to Crestview Cemetery for burial.

The 10, most of whom had moved to Baltimore about six years ago, were killed May 15 in a fire called the worst single-family dwelling fire in Baltimore's history. All were asleep when the fire swept through the home. Four others escaped the blaze.

Fire officials said the blaze apparently was started by a candle being used because electricity to the home had been cut off less than 24 hours earlier for non-payment of bills totaling $808.09.

Seven more people were killed in another rowhouse fire in Baltimore last Tuesday. That blaze was attributed to careless smoking and hiked the city's fire death toll this year to 48.

"God has not promised sunshine without rain or joy without pain," the Rev. W.M. Westbrooks Jr. told the congregation during the funeral. "But remember that God has promised joy in our trials and help in our trouble."

Most of the bereaved relatives sat quietly through the service, but a few women shrieked uncontrollably toward the end.

"Look up because God is watching over you, because God has his arms around you, because God cares," the Rev. Otis C. Holmes of Baltimore urged the mourners.

Some mourners clutched their breasts and gasped at the sight of the 10 caskets crowded near the flower-lined altar.

"I just couldn't go up there," said Virginia Shazer, who said she went to school with one of the victims.

Killed in the fire were James Williams, 41; his wife, Delores, 38; James E. Brown, 30, Mrs. Williams' brother; three of the Williams' children, Anita, 12, Teresa, 11, and Michelle, 5; Anthfya McGriff, 5; Mia McGriff, 18 months, and Lewis McGriff, 3, all children of Mrs. Williams' niece, and Anotoni Brown, 7.

Five indicted in child pornography case

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — A 19-month FBI investigation has led to a federal indictment charging five people with conspiring to produce and distribute child pornography, U.S. Attorney David Farber said Saturday.

The charges involve conspiracy, aiding and abetting the operation of a child pornography ring, and interstate transportation of pornographic and obscene material involving minors, Farber said.

Some pictures involved in the indictment were reproduced in magazines named "Little Dumplins," "Women and Little Girls — A Special Lolitas Magazine," and "Teenage Fantasy," Farber said.

Charged in the five-count indictment are Dean Raymond Martin, 36, Teddy G. Hedgecock, 48, and Eileen Shannon, 30, all of Huntington; Christopher L. Miller, of Columbus, Ohio; and James William Guthrie, 33, of Crown City, Ohio.

The Savin 895. It could make your Xerox an expensive antique.

Compared to our 895, the Xerox 3107 and 3109 really show their age. Ours gives you almost everything: High productivity at 37 copies per minute. Our unique document feed. Convenience of copy memory. Dual paper trays and multiple copies in reduction. Even energy saving automatic shut-off and snap-in supply cartridges.

Xerox gives you none of the above. In fact, you need a service man just to add their developer. Which strikes us as a bit behind the times. savin

Wounded man hits bus with car, dies

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — A man with a bullet wound in his left arm lost control of his car and hit a school bus, which then crashed into a third vehicle, officials say.

Ray Madison, 27, was pronounced dead following the Friday accident. There were no other injuries.

Police said Madison apparently was driving himself to a hospital for treatment of the gunshot wound when his car slammed into the empty school bus. The bus was shoved into a passing car, which crashed into the highway median.

Police said they did not know how Madison had been shot.

Deputies' car plunges down cliff

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Two Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies were injured when their car plunged 300 feet down a cliff early Saturday, according to authorities.

A department spokesman said the two were responding to a report of a woman screaming in the Santa Monica Mountains. The deputies said the car was going only about 20 mph when it failed to negotiate a sharp curve on the dark, twisting road.

One deputy was treated for minor cuts while the other, John Lofthus, 31, was hospitalized to determine the extent of his injuries.

Sgt. John O'Brien said there were no later reports about the woman. "Rabbits being killed by coyotes sound like a woman screaming," he added.

Kirkland urges Democratic voting

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland urged labor leaders Saturday to double their efforts to elect more Democrats to Congress in November.

"Reaganomics has turned into Reagamortis," Kirkland told 500 labor leaders from AFL-CIO-affiliated unions in the northeast.

Small business owners and members of the construction industry are re-learning the hard way that their survival depends "on a strong foundation of good wages and jobs for plain working people," Kirkland said.

Gas-stopping landlord in jail

BALTIMORE (AP) — A 70-year-old landlord has begun serving a 10-day jail sentence for shutting off a tenant's gas service for six weeks during the winter of 1981.

Criminal Court Judge Solomon Baylor said Friday he would consider releasing Lyon A. Miller from the city jail on Monday if Miller's attorneys came up with a plan for him to perform community service. Miller had been convicted of similar violations before, the judge noted.

The case arose when tenant Harvey Litvin refused to pay the gas bill after Miller had the account changed from his name to Litvin's.

Farmer axes wife, burns up self

JACKSONVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A farmer apparently killed his wife with an ax and then slashed his arms, neck and body and set himself on fire in a murder-suicide, authorities said.

The bodies of Joseph W. O'Meara, 48, a farmer, and Sallie L. O'Meara, 53, of rural Jacksonville, were found Friday, Morgan County Sheriff Henry Jackson Jr. said. The couple was believed to have died Thursday.

Mrs. O'Meara, a secretary, was found in a shed near their home. A bloodied ax was found hanging in the shed.

O'Meara's charred body, which had been doused with a flammable liquid, was discovered near two cigarette lighters.

Judge says Cryts ruling should be soon

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Federal Bankruptcy Judge Charles Baker said Saturday he would try to rule this week on a motion asking that Wayne Cryts, jailed for contempt of court, be freed pending an appeal to U.S. District Court.

Baker said in a telephone interview that Cryts' attorneys had filed an appeal of Cryts' contempt citation.

Baker is the same judge who ordered the Púxico, Mo., farmer jailed April 28 for civil contempt. Cryts, 35, refused to tell Baker who helped him remove 31,000 bushels of soybeans from a grain elevator near Bernie, Mo., in July in defiance of a court order. Cryts said the beans, entangled in a bankruptcy case, were his property.

Cryts' attorneys say the bankruptcy judge didn't have the authority to jail Cryts for refusing to testify.

The farmer returned to the Pope County Jail in Russellville on Friday night after almost a week of freedom and two appearances before legislative subcommittees in Washington, D.C.

Baker is involved in the case because Cryts first took the soybeans from a bankrupt James Brothers elevator in New Madrid, Mo., on Feb. 22, 1981. Cryts couldn't sell the grain, so he stored it in another company's elevator near Bernie, Mo. He later removed the grain from that elevator, too.

On May 16, Baker temporarily freed Cryts from jail at the request of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., who wanted the farmer to testify before the subcommittees, studying federal bankruptcy laws.

Friday, President Reagan endorsed a Senate-passed bill to resolve the problems with federal bankruptcy laws. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan thought the bill would help prevent dilemmas like Cryts'.

After learning of Reagan's endorsement, Cryts said Saturday through a spokesman: "I'm glad that my trip to Washington focused attention on the problem to the point that the president is personally aware of the situation."

The bill would give farmers a preferred position among creditors when an elevator goes bankrupt. The measure also would limit the time for court action on such bankruptcies. Wednesday, a House Judiciary subcommittee approved its version of the bill.

Cryts said the bill was a major step in the right direction. "Had it been in place earlier," he said, "I probably wouldn't be a temporary resident of Russellville."

Also Friday, it was learned that Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, has offered to take Cryts' place in jail for a day or work a day on Cryts' farm.

Grassley said he would encourage other congressmen to do the same "to help ease the pressure on this young farmer's wife and, hopefully, to resolve the legal quirk which jeopardizes his counterparts throughout the country."

After contacting Cryts' attorneys, Grassley said it was unlikely that he would be allowed to spend a day in the jail. "If that option isn't feasible," Grassley said, "I hope that by providing some manpower on his farm, I'll be able to draw attention to bankruptcy laws."

Officials disagree on whether gasoline shortage for real

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A fuel supplier to mid-Southern states is out of leaded gasoline, and industry officials disagree on whether it could be a sign of coming shortages and long gas lines.

"It's going to cause runouts and problems," said E.J. Malone of Malone Oil Co. here. "This part of the country consumes more leaded gasoline than most parts of the country."

However, one expert said a shortage isn't the problem, distribution is.

"There are still products to be had, it's just a matter of getting them to the right place," Dave Tinker, senior editor of Platt's Oilgram Price Report, said Friday in a telephone interview from Houston.

Sun Pipeline's terminal in West Memphis, Ark., ran out of leaded gasoline Thursday night and foreman Roy Sechrest said he was told it would be at least Tuesday before more leaded gas arrived.

Sechrest said the Sun Pipeline terminal, which serves parts of Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi and Missouri, has a 1.3 million barrel storage capacity. He said leaded gasoline accounts for only a third of the facility's fuel, and it has ample supplies of diesel, unleaded and premium unleaded gasolines.

But Malone said the shortage of leaded gasoline could have a snowballing effect if motorists who can't buy leaded gas deplete unleaded brands.

He said several trade publications have predicted long gas lines this summer.

"Some oil companies have said 45 days of shortages, some have said 90 days and some won't even make a prediction," he said. "I don't know who to believe."

But Robert G. Alexander, president of the Delta Refining Co. plant here, said there is no shortage of gasoline and no shortage is expected.

His 50,000-barrel-a-day refinery has been operating at 90 percent capacity because of logistics problems, but the plant should resume peak production by next week, he said.

Rescuers looking for worker who may be trapped in mine

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — Rescue workers digging into a 288-foot-deep abandoned mine shaft Saturday uncovered the top of a crane that slid into the pit, but found no trace of a man who was lost with it, officials said.

Efforts were underway to see if the man had gotten into a protected sideshaft.

The accident occurred Friday as Gerald White, 33, of Laflin, Pa., and other workmen were demolishing a concrete cap atop the shaft in preparation for filling in the pit, Mayor James McNulty said.

The shaft caved in, and other members of the crew, including White, operator of the 30-ton crane, ran for safety, McNulty said. But White, who was farthest from the shaft, was caught when earth slid into the shaft, leaving a depression measuring 52 by 44 feet.

President's behind Donovan, even if labor isn't

WASHINGTON (AP) — He's far from popular with organized labor and his chief defenders in the Senate are furious. But the secretary of labor has the kind of job security most Americans would love — his boss still believes in him.

With President Reagan's support, Raymond Donovan is riding out in virtual silence Senate and Justice Department investigations of allegations that Donovan was tied to organized crime figures while an official of the Schiavone Construction Co. in New Jersey.

The secretary is known to feel that partisan politics account in large part for his difficulties, and trusted aides say the secretary believes he must stay and fight for survival.

FROM THE VERY beginning, Donovan has been battling for his job.

Senate confirmation of Donovan came only after he assured Senate members that he and Schiavone were never involved in illegal payoffs for labor peace.

Nearly a year later, Donovan was accused by an FBI informant of witnessing a $2,000 payoff by Schiavone executives to the president of a blasters union local in Long Island City, N.Y., in 1977. The allegation triggered the current investigations. Donovan denied the allegation and called his accuser "a damnable and contemptible liar."

Last week it was revealed that the Schiavone company had hired private detectives to probe the Senate investigators who were probing Donovan. The same day it was revealed that one Senate committee staffer had his life threatened by an anonymous telephone caller.

Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, was furious. Another committee Republican, Daniel Quayle of Indiana, said he wondered whether Donovan would be confirmed if he were up for nomination today.

Donovan's response: "Dan Quayle is a friend of mine."

The secretary is under pressure because fresh allegations have surfaced recently suggesting that Donovan once had ties to organized crime figures.

One allegation by FBI informants, made public May 1, said Donovan once had business and social ties to Salvatore Briguglio, a reputed organized crime figure who was gunned down in a gangland style murder on a New York street.

And a recent FBI report told of allegations that Schiavone Construction once delivered $50,000 in building materials to the home of Anthony "Tony Pro" Provenzano, a Teamsters union official who is serving a 20-year federal prison term for labor racketeering.

DONOVAN WON'T PUBLICLY discuss his problems until special prosecutor Leon Silverman completes the Justice Department investigation. But he departed from this practice Thursday to say the death threat "saddens me and it angers me."

Donovon told White House spokesman Larry Speakes that he was aware of the counter-investigation, "but did not approve of it."

And Hatch said last week that while he was "personally offended" by the counter-investigation of his committee, he continues to believe in Donovan's innocence.

Donovan won Reagan's admiration as a New Jersey fund-raiser during the 1980 presidential campaign and was subsequently given the labor post.

Reagan has not said anything publicly about Donovan since last Dec. 18 — the day after the Justice Department announced appointment of the special prosecutor. Speakes said last week that Reagan "is not personally involved" in the Donovan matter, but he reiterated that Reagan retains confidence in Donovan.

During his news conference Dec. 18, Reagan told reporters "I have had assurances that there is no ground for these charges" against Donovan.

But one White House official, saying he could discuss Donovan only on grounds he not be identified publicly, said last week that the labor secretary's predicament is now making things awkward for the administration.

"What do you say to the man? 'How are you holding up?' " the official asked. "Or do you just talk about the weather?"

ON THURSDAY, THE president of the Communications Workers of America, Glenn E. Watts, described Donovan's performance as secretary as "notably unsuccessful" and called for Donovan's resignation.

Reagan blasts Democratic budget stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, trying to enlist public support for a 1983 budget proposal attuned to Republican priorities, took another swipe Saturday at the leadership of the Democratic-controlled House.

In his eighth weekly radio address, Reagan said the House leadership under Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., favors reducing deficits by eliminating the third year of the tax cut put in place in 1981 rather than by cutting spending.

He also complained that the House leadership wants to prevent future income tax indexing "under the phony claim that it only benefits the rich."

In a Democratic response to the radio message, Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona said Reagan's policies to increase defense spending without raising taxes are leading the nation into "the economic equivalent of Vietnam."

UDALL SAID REAGAN unrealistically believes that the government can make tax cuts of $750 billion over the next five years while increasing defense spending by $1.5 trillion.

"...That you can do all this and somehow balance the budget, cure dandruff, low back pain, arthritis and everything else," he said. "And, it isn't working."

Reagan said the GOP-controlled Senate, by a vote of 49-43, took a big step Friday night to get spending under control by passing a budget resolution that reduces projected deficits by $358 billion over the next three years.

The Senate passed a $784 billion budget outline which calls for higher taxes and less defense spending than Reagan requested in his original budget sent to Capitol Hill last February but still leaves a projected deficit of $116 billion. Reagan's plan drew virtually no support.

When the House and Senate have completed work on the measure, it will be used as a guide on a series of appropriations bills which provide the detailed provision of money for operations of the government. At present, the measure only outlines expected spending in 17 major categories such as defense, agriculture and so forth and does not go into detail.

"I'll be honest with you," the president said in his radio address. "I would have liked more reductions in spending, but at least it's another step in the right direction — the direction we started to go last year."

UNLIKE WHAT HE called the "responsible action by the Senate leadership," House Democratic leaders are "trying to spend more and to eliminate $150 billion or so of your tax cut," Reagan said.

He said the House leaders want to cut spending, but only defense spending. "Eliminating about 73 percent of our planned increase in the defense budget is their goal," he said.

O'Neill said Saturday that the top issue when the House begins debate Monday on the budget "will be the cruel and unwarranted Republican attack on the Medicare program."

In the formal Democratic response to Reagan's address, Udall said former President Carter came to Washington in 1977 promising and believing he could balance the budget but left with a four-year deficit of $194 billion.

A conservative estimate of four years under Reagan, he said, is a total of $749 billion in deficits — $119 billion the first year, $182 billion the second, $216 billion the third and $232 billion the fourth year.

"These are incredible, historic-size deficits," Udall said. "And it is basically wrong, and it won't work, and we can't do it. And the American people are going to see that."

He said the nation cannot "go out and borrow money to finance ourselves a tax cut."

"President Johnson made a mistake in not trying to finance Vietnam with higher taxes," Udall said. "If we actually need an increased national defense, let's be willing to pay the cost, and not go out to borrow the money for that on top of borrowing all the money for the tax cuts that we've needed."

IN HIS RADIO message, Reagan urged the American people to support a budget proposal sponsored by House Republicans and conservative Democrats and similar to the Senate resolution.

"It will preserve your tax cuts, reduce spending, and keep America strong," he said. "If you want interest rates to come down and the economy to get going, it wouldn't hurt if you told your congressman to vote for the bipartisan recovery budget."

Weinberger may have made $1 million in 1981

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger may have made more than $1 million last year, according to his official financial disclosure report.

At the least, the report indicated, his income came to about $679,000 in 1981.

Because of imprecision permitted in the financial report, it is impossible to figure out any more than the minimum and maximum amounts that Weinberger received apart from his federal salary of $69,630.

Weinberger filed his obligatory statement for 1981 on May 14. It was made available late Friday.

The 11-page statement shows income from investments and other sources with a possible total ranging from about $679,000 to slightly over $1 million in 1981, the year Weinberger became defense secretary.

Among the biggest items listed in the form is more than $200,000 in capital gains from Weinberger's sale of his stock in the Bechtel Group Inc. Before President Reagan chose him as defense secretary, Weinberger was vice president and general counsel of Bechtel, a group of firms engaged in construction internationally.

His form also reported $93,583 in salary from Bechtel during early 1981, before he became defense secretary on Jan. 20 with the inauguration of President Reagan.

One item in the report reflected Weinberger's receipt of $42,672 as a lump sum distribution from Bechtel pension and profit-sharing plans.

Hopeful Northwest Orient airline passengers crowd the check-in counter at Chicago's O'Hare Airport Saturday following a strike which began at 11 p.m. Friday. Baggage handlers and mechanics struck but many other employees of the airline reported to work, according to a Northwest Orient official. Many passengers were bumped from flights as the strike forced the airline to use smaller planes.

Striking workers ground airline passengers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A strike by about 3,600 mechanics and baggage handlers forced Northwest Airlines to cut its domestic service by two-thirds and prompted thousands of travelers to seek other accommodations Saturday at 36 affected airports.

Northwest Vice President Brent Baskfield said the airline was able to maintain all international service and hoped to restore domestic service to normal soon. The airline serves 71 cities in 29 states, seven European cities and eight cities in the Orient.

The strike by Local 143 of the International Association of Machinists began at 11:01 p.m. Friday after bargaining at Northwest headquarters here broke down over job security and wages.

No new negotiations were scheduled, Baskfield said.

The first pickets were at the airline headquarters, and soon after, pickets appeared outside the airport here.

It was unclear whether other Northwest unions would honor picket lines. Baskfield said other employees were working.

Arlo Bertsch, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks board, said some members of his union were honoring the machinists' union's picket lines. He said the local in Detroit was "out 100 percent" and "quite a few" were honoring picket lines at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport.

Bertsch's board services 15 locals in the Northwest system.

The Master Executive Council of the Airline Pilots Association was meeting Saturday afternoon to decide whether to honor picket lines.

Republic Airlines, also based in Minneapolis, said Friday it would add service to accommodate travelers between the Twin Cities and Milwaukee, Detroit, New York and Boston if a strike occurred.

Some air travelers here with Northwest reservations waited in long lines only to find their flights had been canceled. Others whose reservations were confirmed after the strike began said they were bumped from flights because Northwest had switched to smaller planes.

John Barnes of Richfield, Minn., said he was on his way to a family reunion in Los Angeles and reconfirmed his reservations Friday night because of the strike. However, when he arrived at the airport here Saturday morning he was turned away because Northwest had switched from a Boeing 747 jumbo jet to a smaller 727.

Guy Cook, president of the Northwest IAM local, said the airline wanted to transfer work now performed by the union's higher-paid employees to lower-paid workers and to establish part-time work. "We have never had part-time work in our union," Cook said.

On wages, Cook said Northwest offered a 21 percent salary increase over three years. Cook described the offer as "substandard to other carriers and other unions."

Legislative aides report Guatemala still violent

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional fact-finding team, just back from a five-day trip to Guatemala, claims army massacres of civilians are continuing in some parts of the country despite a sharp drop in government-sponsored violence in other areas.

The team's findings conflict with the Reagan administration's assessment that political violence attributable to the military has virtually stopped in the two months since a coup by junior officers put Gen. Efron Rios Montt in power.

The three-member team's findings could stiffen congressional resistance to administration plans to resume military aid to the Central American country, where leftist guerrillas are battling for power.

"I am far less inclined to go ahead with resumption of military aid following the trip," said Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., who sent one staff aide on the fact-finding visit. The two other aides worked for Reps. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, and Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass.

Harkin said that, based on what he's been told, "there seems to be a refocusing of the war on the Indians in the rural areas." He added that he is now "absolutely, irreversibly" against military aid to Guatemala.

Even before the trip, the administration was backing away from immediate plans to approve the sale of $2 million in military helicopter parts to Guatemala, moving instead to provide economic assistance, State Department officials said.

One official, who asked not to be identified, said economic aid to Guatemala would be announced "in the very near future" with the helicopter parts sale following in one or two months.

Key members of Congress had urged that the administration provide economic help first as a sign of approval for the reforms begun by the new president, Rios Montt. They recommended withholding military aid until the junta's policies became clearer.

U.S. military aid was cut off to Guatemala in 1977 because of the government's alleged role in hundreds of political assassinations. Rios Montt took power in March vowing to stop the politically motivated killings and wipe out government corruption.

Since then, the Reagan administration has praised the junta's success in ending "violence not directly connected to the insurgency" and has publicly suggested a resumption of military aid as a sign of support for the changes.

However, a number of mass killings involving civilians have been reported recently in the Guatemalan countryside. Although the government has blamed leftist guerrillas, the fact-finding team and some witnesses have said the evidence points to the military.

In an April 25 incident, 18 people were shot to death in a house in Chipiacul in western Guatemala. The government announced that guerrillas had committed the murders, but surviving villagers accused the army.

The congressional team said it found a dramatic drop in political killings in Guatemala City and in some parts of the countryside, and praised the peaceful handling of the May 12 leftist takeover of the Brazilian embassy.

But the team reported that based on numerous interviews and visits to the countryside, it concluded that the military is continuing to massacre civilians in rural areas where guerrillas have been active.

"The killings in rural areas where fighting has occurred have been as bad or worse than before," said one member of the team, who asked not to be identified.

He said the team had received "creditable reports" that the military was responsible for massacres in which whole families and villages were wiped out. Villages were being razed and hillsides burned to flush out guerrillas, he said.

Pope asks for end to Falklands battles

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II called for an immediate cease-fire in the Falkland Islands Saturday and said he still hopes to go to Britain next week despite the hostilities.

In a solemn early morning Mass at St. Peter's Basilica, the pontiff embraced Argentine and British cardinals in a symbolic "kiss of peace" and urged the two warring nations to demonstrate "magnanimous goodwill" and resume negotiations to settle their dispute.

John Paul's urgent call for an end to the hostilities was in identical telegrams he sent to President Leopoldo F. Galtieri of Argentina and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain.

"May the leaders of both countries heed the earnest desire of mankind and strive with all the means to avert further sacrifices and bloodshed," the pope said. An English-language text of the telegram was released by the Vatican.

John Paul said he was deeply disturbed at the news from the South Atlantic where the armed conflict is causing "grievous loss of human life and may produce alarmingly deteriorating consequences for the two countries."

At a Vatican audience for journalists following the Mass, John Paul was asked whether he will make a planned six-day tour of Britain starting next Friday.

"I still hope so," the pope replied, and said "all of us have the obligation to hope against every hope."

To a BBC television reporter who asked a similar question after the audience, the pope said:

"It depends on you. I am the pastor and it is my church and I am expecting...I cannot resign this visit. It's so important for ecumenism. I can't create a political situation."

John Paul did not elaborate and Vatican officials refused to comment on his remarks.

Cardinal Basil Hume, the primate of England and Wales, said Friday that the papal visit would be "inappropriate if there is a great escalation of hostilities."

The Roman Catholic Church is state-supported in Argentina, where 95 percent of the people are Catholics.

Several well-placed Vatican sources agreed with Hume's assessment and said the pope was under great pressure from British prelates to put off the announcement of a decision on the British visit as long as possible.

"But the news from the war certainly does not augur well," said a Vatican prelate who asked not to be identified.

In a joint statement, the Argentine and British prelates said they accepted the pope's "challenge for peace."

"We pledge ourselves to be witnesses of peace and reconciliation in the search for a just settlement of the conflict in the South Atlantic," they said.

It was signed by Hume, Cardinal Gordon Gray of Scotland, Archbishops Thomas Winning of Glasgow and Derek Worlock of Liverpool, and Argentine Cardinals Juan Carlos Aramburu of Buenos Aires and Paul Primatesta of Cordoba.

Cardinal says pope will make British trip

LONDON (AP) — Pope John Paul II will carry out his planned historic visit to Britain next week unless Catholic bishops here advise him not to, Cardinal Gordon Gray of Scotland announced Saturday on his arrival back from the Vatican.

Catholic leaders in Britain have been pressing John Paul to make the first-ever papal visit to this Protestant nation, despite the escalating conflict with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

Losses weighing heavier on some Britons' minds

LONDON (AP) — Britons appeared confident of victory and resigned to heavy losses Saturday in the battle for the Falkland Islands, but for some the year's top soccer game rivaled war news from the front.

Several hundred people lined police barricades to cheer the "War Cabinet" assembled at Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's No. 10 Downing St. office. Hundreds of bouquets were sent by well-wishers to Mrs. Thatcher, whose popularity has surged because of her tough stand in the seven-week crisis.

"It's not the islands, it's the principle and sometimes principles come hard," said Geoffrey Owen, a 45-year-old butcher among the crowd.

"It's very sad it's come to this and I think Britain will probably hand those islands over in the end. But we've got to show them no one can just take our territory."

Like Owen, many Britons saw no irony or futility in their servicemen coming home in body bags because of fighting over the windswept South Atlantic colony, nearly forgotten before Argentina seized it April 2. Each nation has claimed sovereignty over the islands for 149 years.

"I'm not sure about all this sovereignty business," said off-duty policeman David Dursley, 29. "But at the moment it's ours and they just can't walk in and expect to get away with it. We're right and of course we can win."

The more intense and costly the fighting becomes, the bigger the investment and greater the principle, many said.

"THE LOSSES ARE bad but inevitable," said bus driver Duncan Taylor, 27. "But we've got to kick 'em off and of course we'll win. Our troops are volunteers, professionals, they knew what their job would be when they joined up."

Only a few of 30 people interviewed at random dissented with the prevailing view that fighting for the Falklands was just, and some seemed to feel guilty about wanting to quit the islands.

"We should just be cowards and pull out," said Vanessa Curry, 17, whose cousin is a Royal Marine. "It's going to get worse and for what? I'd never heard of the Falklands before this."

Shaun Mangan, 19, a construction worker, said the name Falklands was vaguely familiar to him before the crisis.

"But we certainly know about them now. And Mrs. Thatcher's absolutely right. No one takes our islands."

Brian Goddard, 41, an engineer, said his main regret was Britain did not attack earlier.

"What can you do with a junta?" he said, referring to Argentina's ruling military generals. "They never wanted to talk anyway. I've nothing against the ordinary Argentines, I suppose they just go along with it like in all banana republics."

News of a second warship sunk by Argentine rockets in the British assault on the islands and warnings of more fierce fighting ahead flashed on television screens as 100,000 soccer fans jammed Wembley Stadium near London for the FA Cup Final, England's top soccer event.

The Falklands dispute directly affected the game. Argentine World Cup star Ricardo Villa, on contract to cup finalists Tottenham Hotspur, pulled out partly through fear of crowd abuse.

Dismayed Spurs fans chanted, "There's only one Ricky Villa," as the team took the field without him.

"SPORT IS SPORT. He's picked for his merits as a footballer, not a politician," said fan Colin Jenkins, 29. "I think they didn't want him to shake hands with Princess Anne."

Queen Elizabeth II's daughter Princess Anne was the royal guest at the game. Her younger brother Prince Andrew, 22, is a helicopter co-pilot with the Royal Navy task force.

With 46 British dead in 48 hours, the conflict came home in other ways.

Newspapers bannered "War," "The British are Back," and "Five Warships Hit." The mass-circulation Daily Mirror, which supports the opposition Labor Party, ringed its front page in black and declared: "Many Dead in the Battle for the Falklands."

Junta claims victory

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The military junta claimed success against Britain's Falkland Islands invasion force Saturday, saying its troops trapped the commandos near a beachhead and inflicted heavy casualties.

"It is going to be very difficult for them to recover from the losses suffered," Argentine President Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri told reporters at an unexpected news conference. He did not give specific details, but the claims contradicted British reports that at least 5,000 commandos had stormed ashore.

EARLIER, the official news agency Telam said Argentine defenders had pinned down 400 British soldiers near the Royal Navy's beachhead at San Carlos, about 50 miles west of the Falklands capital of Stanley.

The junta's Joint Chiefs of Staff said combat with British forces persisted around San Carlos. But it said Argentine forces had the situation "under control."

The privately-owned news agency DYN quoted air force sources as saying Argentine jet-fighters did not attack the British force Saturday "for lack of worthy targets." Earlier, Telam reported no ships had been seen around Falkland Sound, the scene of raging battles on Friday.

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez and three top military advisers were in New York Saturday for the U.N. Security Council session. Costa Mendez scheduled a meeting with U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar before the council's meeting.

There was no mention here of the number of troops reported to be fighting near San Carlos in the second day of Britain's assault on the colony Argentina seized seven weeks ago. There was also no word on casualties.

But the junta denounced what it called Britain's unprovoked attacks while there is still a chance for peace, and said Argentina would defeat invaders of the islands it calls the Malvinas.

"Coexistence is the path to international order," a Joint Chiefs communique said. "We want peace, but a peace that is fair and honorable."

TELEM earlier quoted what it called an authoritative military source as saying the British had landed 400 soldiers near San Carlos, but they "are completely controlled" and "are being cleaned up." The dispatch did not explain whether this meant the British had been taken prisoner.

The Joint Chiefs' communique was the day's first official report of fresh fighting in the islands, where the warring countries fought intensive land, sea and air battles Friday. The junta has decreed that only its reports of fighting are officially sanctioned.

Argentina's press claimed Argentine forces triumphed during Friday's battle in Falkland Sound, scoring heavy losses on the British.

"Great Reverse for the Invader," read the headline on the mass circulation tabloid Cronica. "Victory," said the tabloid Diario Popular.

More than 450 Chinese dead after heavy spring flooding

PEKING (AP) — Floods in the tourist city of Guilin and nearby areas in south China's Guangxi region have killed or injured more than 30 people, according to the China News Service, a domestic news agency.

The news agency's report, seen Saturday, said an average of 10 inches of rain fell in the area May 11-13. More than 200 houses were damaged and 62,740 acres of crops were ruined, the report said.

Coup attempt lands 73 in prison

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — All 73 defendants tried and convicted in an allegedly Iranian-backed coup plot here last December received prison sentences Saturday ranging from 10 years to life.

The Bahrain Supreme Appeals Court sentenced three defendants to life imprisonment, gave 60 others 15 years and sentenced the last 10 to seven years, the Gulf News Agency reported.

The 73 were arrested in December and accused of working with Iran to topple the government. The Interior Ministry accused them of planning to take Cabinet members hostage and institute an Islamic republic similar to Iran's.

Youngsters aid in murderers' capture

MOSCOW (AP) — Four 11-year-old boys who saw three men rob and murder an old man chased the trio and helped capture them, a Soviet newspaper reported Saturday.

One man was later sentenced to death by a firing squad and his two accomplices received long prison terms, the newspaper Sotsialisticheskaya Industria said in a rare press account of violent crime in the Soviet Union. The murder occurred near the town of Ulyanovsk 450 miles east of Moscow. Authorities say the robbers sought money to continue a drinking spree.

The four boys called to three 15-year-old friends and the seven boys began chasing the three men, the newspaper said. Armed with sticks and backed up by several adults, the boys detained two of the men, the newspaper said. The third man was arrested later.

Zaire losing foreign ambassadors

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Libya has decided to close its embassy in Zaire and recall its diplomats because of Zaire's decision to renew relations with Israel, the official Libyan news agency JANA said Saturday in a report monitored here.

Zaire's president, Mobutu Sese Seko, announced May 14 he was renewing diplomatic ties with Israel because of Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula last month.

Pakistan threatens to sever relations

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The government threatened Saturday to sever relations with Costa Rica unless that Central American nation rescinds its decision to shift its embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

A foreign office announcement said Pakistan would "regretfully" terminate diplomatic ties with Costa Rica because its decision to shift its embassy violated the United Nations Charter.

Korea commemorates U.S. relations

INCHON, South Korea (AP) — Ground was broken here Saturday for a monument marking the 100th anniversary of the start of diplomatic relations between Korea and the United States.

The monument will be located on a hill overlooking Inchon Harbor.

At the ceremony in Freedom Park, U.S. Ret. Gen. Lyman Lemnitzer noted the monument will be erected at the site where on May 22, 1882, Commodore Robert Shufeldt and representatives of Korea's King Kojong signed a treaty that inaugurated diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Pope meets privately with Mugabe

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II met with Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe in a private audience Saturday, Vatican officials said.

He also met with Libya's Maj. Abessallam Ahmed Jalloud.

There was no official statement on either meeting, but Vatican sources said the pope's discussion with Mugabe probably centered on the politics of southern Africa. In February the pope visited the African nations of Benin, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon and Nigeria.

Iranians claim success in oil province recovery

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SUSANGERD, Iran — After four major military offensives in 10 months, Iranian forces have succeeded in recovering more than two-thirds of the oil-rich southern province of Khuzestan, which was overrun by Iraq in a dramatic blitz that opened the Iran-Iraq war 20 months ago.

Invading Iraqi forces, at the easternmost edge of their advance, had reached the outskirts of Abadan, a major oil port on the crucial Shatt Al Arab waterway leading into the gulf, and had camped in the suburbs of Ahvaz, the capital of Khuzestan.

From September 1980 to January 1981, Iranian troops could only block the enemy advance.

But in early January 1981 Iranian forces mounted their first real counterattack, near the town of Hamidiyeh on the road leading from Ahvaz west to Susangerd. There they breached Iraqi lines, infiltrated the sector and stopped the advance of Iraqi armored tanks. Sixteen months later, the remains of the tanks can still be seen, scattered among fields where crops are once again being cultivated.

"You can count 70 of them along this road," said an Iranian officer, Major Mortezar Nabavi.

Seventy is a small figure compared to the losses recorded in more recent operations and is generally thought to reflect the limited means employed by both sides at the beginning of the conflict.

Standing amid the ruins of Susangerd, lost twice to Iraq and recapturted street by street, a revolutionary guard blames Iran's exiled former president Abolhassan Bani-Sadr for Iranian losses.

"He kept us from going further although we had the means to do it. We lost months because of his policies," he said.

The first major Iranian offensive was mounted Sept. 27, 1981. The war was then a year old. Iranian forces managed to break the Iraqi encirclement of Abadan on the side of the Karun River during an offensive they named the "Eighth Imam." The official Iranian count: Two thousand Iraqi troops killed and 1,700 captured.

In their second major offensive, launched two months later, Iranian forces retook Bostan, a town about 19 miles northeast of Susangered. For the first time in the war, Iran had reached its international border with Iraq.

The third Iranian offensive, called "fath" (victory), was launched March 22 and marked a "turning point" in the war, according to Iranian military leaders.

In less than one week, army troops, backed by revolutionary guards and youth volunteer groups, succeeded in capturing more than 15,000 enemy troops.

On April 30, Tehran launched its fourth major drive, called the "Holy City" offensive, the second major operation south of Ahvaz and west of the Karum River.

"Our crossing the Karum, which is over 200 metres wide, remains a real military achievement," said Major Nabavi. "The Egyptian army had several training exercises before crossing the Suez Canal in 1973 but we had no dress rehearsal and within a few hours our headway was spectacular."

According to Nabavi, after 10 months of fighting the Iranians now control 54 miles of the border by foot and another 45 miles is under the cover of their fire.

Three enemy enclaves remain, he said, one to the north along the border near Fakkeh, another about 60 miles north of Khorramsharh, and a third northwest of Khorramsharh, the key Iranian port of the Shatt Al Arab Waterway.

Gandhi to make late-July U.S. visit

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will pay an official visit to Washington July 29 and 30, the government announced Saturday.

She will spend a total of four or five days in the United States and will also visit New York City, government spokesman H.Y. Sharda Prasad said.

Details of the visit are still being worked out and no decision has been made on whether the visit to New York will be before or after her stop in the nation's capital, he said.

Mrs. Gandhi will hold talks at the White house with President Reagan on July 29. The two leaders met last October at the economic summit in Cancun, Mexico.

Prasad gave no details of what would be on the agenda when Reagan and Mrs. Gandhi meet, but it appeared likely that prime topics would be U.S. arms sales to Pakistan and a lingering dispute over America's refusal to provide fuel for India's U.S.-built nuclear power station.

Study indicates Soviet food trouble

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — A confidential study prepared for the top Soviet leadership has outlined a near-disastrous decline in the Soviet Union's ability to feed itself, demonstrating a compelling need for agricultural and other economic reforms.

The study, made available here, provided figures that showed a tenfold increase in Soviet food imports over the past decade, staggering levels of mishandling of agricultural equipment and "direct losses" of harvested crops due to negligence and lack of storage or drying facilities.

THE DOCUMENT, PREPARED by a special government commission during the past year, said one-fifth of the grain harvest is lost because it is harvested late or left to rot.

The figures given for losses for other crops are even higher, including the fact that one-third of the country's potato crop is left to rot. According to experts who took part in drafting the document, about half of potato production — or the equivalent of the entire annual American production — is lost each year because of a chaotic distribution system and lack of storage facilities.

As a result, the study said, an average Soviet citizen is poorly fed, consuming 54 pounds of meat per year less than the amount required by medical standards.

The commission, which prepared the study in cooperation with the state planning commission and 38 ministries and scientific institutes, concluded that "the existing economic mechanism does not provide necessary economic incentives for production increases and fuller use of the potentially available land."

The study provided the basis for an internal debate leading to a special Central Committee meeting on agriculture, to be held Monday.

THE GLOOMY ASSESSMENTS and devastating statistics suggest that the crisis in agriculture may become a touchy political problem. Just what course of action Kremlin leaders intend to take is not clear, although experts involved in the preparation of the study talked about financial incentives and about the need to adopt parts of the "Hungarian model." In Hungary most land is run by cooperatives that have become very profitable because of financial incentives for productivity. Hungary not only produces enough food for its own needs but also exports about $2 billion worth of food products.

A similar Central Committee meeting devoted exclusively to agriculture was held in March 1965, shortly after Leonid Brezhnev replaced former leader Nikita Khrushchev. At that time, most of the failures of previous years were blamed on Khrushchev.

As it stands, the study prepared for the Brezhnev Politburo appears to be an indictment of the present leadership.

Well-informed observers here said that recognition of the need for radical changes may suggest that the leadership is prepared for decisive action. In this view, president Carter's grain embargo two years ago forced Kremlin leaders to move toward reforms and reduce Soviet dependence on foreign sources of food.

The study covered the period 1966 to 1980, and it appeared to reflect a broad consensus that a decisive change in domestic policies is required.

Monday's plenum is expected also to deal with organizational problems, including the filling of Politburo slots vacated by the recent death of the No. 2 party secreatry, Mikhail Suslov. There are widespread rumors of a broader shakeup of the ruling body and there is an unusual atmosphere of intrigue prior to the meeting that was originally scheduled to deal exlusively with the government's new "food program."

MOSCOW'S EVER-INCREASING dependence on food imports is also cited as a major strategic concern.

For the period 1966 to 1970, the Soviet Union had to import 15 million tons of food, mainly grain and meat. From 1976 to 1980, food imports have risen to 80 million tons.

As an illustration of rising costs, the study said that Soviet food imports in 1970 cost $700 million while in 1980 Moscow had to pay $7.2 billion — 10 times more.

While before 1970 the country resorted to food imports in extraordinary circumstances, the study said, imports of grain, meat and other food products have now become "a permanent component" of Moscow's economic thinking.

While the document did not mention the 1981 grain harvest, Western experts said it was around 165 million tons, considerably below the disastrous yields of the preceding two years. The Soviets are expected to buy about 42 million tons of grain in the 12 months ending next September. Their food imports for this year are expected to be three times greater than the combined figures for the period from 1966 to 1970.

IT IS VERY DIFFICULT to say whether the food situation is worse, on a national basis, than a year ago or the year before that. The Soviet Union is not hungry. But demand and expectations have risen dramatically to make the issue of food one of the most critical problems faced by the Kremlin.

According to the study, the crisis that developed over the past 15 years was caused by several factors. They include "a decline in the level of growth" of agricultural production, increasing production costs accompanied by a drop in labor productivity, and an ever-growing discrepancy between relatively declining supplies and rising demand.

While incomes have doubled over the past 15 years, the production of food has risen by only 23.1 percent.

The problem is compounded by an enormous exodus from rural areas. According to official figures, 17 million persons have left villages and settled in urban areas in the years 1976 to 1980.

According to the study, production costs in the same period have risen tenfold as compared to the level of production increases — the statistical ratio given is 60 to 5.2.

As a result, the state is subsidizing an extraordinary price system. A pound of meat, when available in state shops, costs $1.40. The state buys the meat from collective farms for $4 a pound. The real market price at Moscow's open markets is around $6 a pound.

COLLECTIVE FARMS HAVE been complaining that, at $4 a pound, they are not able to cover their production costs and that the price should be increased next year. The current situation does not involve incentives for the young to stay on the farm — hence the exodus to the cities.

The study also reveals staggering problems caused by shoddy agricultural equipment, poor maintenance and inefficient use of machinery.

Despite the fact that the Soviet Union produces 550,000 tractors each year, the number of tractors available to collective farmers remains more or less constant. The total number of tractors functioning in 1976 was 2.4 million. Five years and more than 2.5 million new tractors later, the number available in 1980 was 2.4 million, the report said.

At the current rate of use and production, the Soviet Union will not have enough tractors before 1997, the study said. Experts also calculated that under current conditions the number of needed combines would not be reached for another 34 years.

To illustrate the inefficient production, the study said that the Soviet Union in its potato cultivation uses the land acreage that is 14 times greater than the combined total used by American potato farmers. Yet, it said, the Soviet production is only twice that of the United States. The Soviets lose 33 percent of their potato crop each year because of inadequate storage facilities or negligence.

In the case of fruits and vegetables, such losses amount to about 20 percent, the study said. An estimated 25 percent of the sugar beet crop is left to rot each year, it added.

It also pointed out that 55 percent of American potatoes are used for processed foods while the figure for the Soviet Union is less than 0.5 percent.

ALTHOUGH THE OVERALL figures for sugar beet production have increased, the production of sugar in 1980 was at the 1965 level.

A year and a half ago, Mikhail Gorbachov, an agricultural expert and former party secretary in the generally prosperous grain-producing Stavropol region, in northern Caucasus, was promoted to full membership in the Politburo. At 50, he is the youngest member of the ruling body and clearly a man to watch in the future. He is also said to be behind the push to restructure Soviet agriculture.

American woman dies in try to climb Everest

PEKING (AP) — Marty Hoey, lone woman member of an American expedition trying to climb Mount Everest, has died in a fall about 2,400 feet below the summit, the official news agency Xinhua said Saturday.

Ms. Hoey fell on May 15 while approaching the expedition's camp No. 6 at 26,600 feet on the 29,028-foot mountain, the world's highest, Xinhua said.

The accident led to abandonment of the group's first planned assault on the summit, the news agency said.

Xinhua said the second and final assault is planned Monday.

Word of Ms. Hoey's death was reported by expedition leader Lou Whittaker of Tacoma, Wash., after he descended to the base camp on May 19, Xinhua said.

Ms. Hoey was among five team members who had set up the expedition's advance base camp last month at 18,500 feet. The main base camp is at 16,900 feet.

A message received Saturday in Peking from the China-Everest Rainier expedition said it planned to break base camp on May 30 and reach the Tibetan capital of Lhasa by June 2, arriving in Peking by June 5.

The expedition's leader is the twin brother of Jim Whittaker, the first American to scale Everest from Nepal to the south.

If the Rainier group succeeds in its climb up the north face, it will be the first American expedition to climb Everest from China's Tibet region. China opened the Tibetan side to foreign climbers in 1979.

At the same time, a British group is attempting to reach the peak from the last unclimbed ridge up Everest, the narrow east-northeast ridge route.

In 1980 three members of a Japanese expedition and an Italian climbing alone reached the summit from Tibet. Two Chinese expeditions have climbed Everest up the north ridge.

Changes in crop insurance urged

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The new federal crop insurance program must be drastically improved if it is to protect farmers adequately from risks associated with abnormal weather and other conditions beyond their control, says National Cotton Council producer leader John S. Barr III of Oak Ridge, La.

Barr told the U.S. Senate Agriculture Committee that the program must attract far more cotton acreage than the 11 percent in the program in 1981. Increased participation would prevent program losses like those incurred in 1981, when yields were among the best in recent history.

The Council has long supported a widely affordable all-risk federal crop insurance program based on individual farm yields and area production costs, Barr said.

Cattle feeders to hold convention

AMARILLO, Tex. — The 1982 annual convention of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association is slated for Nov. 7-10 in the Hyatt Regency in Austin.

Jim Peterson, TCFA membership director, will handle convention arrangement.

Cottonseed products promoted

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Cotton Incorporated will promote the use of glandless cottonseed meal products in its "key thrust" of agricultural research and advertising, according to Cotton Board Chairman Aven Whittington.

"Cotton Incorporated is currently working cooperatively with the California Planting Cotton Seed Distributors in a test project in California that offers real potential in expanding further the use of glandless cottonseed meal as feed for poultry and swine," he said. "This will add value to the cottonseed, as demand and use for the product increases."

In addition to the traditional uses of cottonseed oil, research work being carried on cooperatively at the Food Protein Research and at Texas A&M University's Development Center appears promising in further developing protein-rich products from the gossypol-free cottonseed.

$9.5 billion in sales estimated

COLLEGE STATION — The 1981 sales of Texas agricultural products are estimated at $9.5 billion, which is up about $500 million from the previous year, according to Dr. Carl Anderson, an economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Yet, he said, farmers' and ranchers' net profits continue in a downward trend.

"Farmers and ranchers had a lot to sell in 1981, but they had less income due to low farm prices and rising production costs," Anderson said.

In 1981 sales, livestock, including beef, dairy and poultry production, contributed $4.9 billion to the ledger. Crop sales added another $4 billion, while sales from sources such as timber, horses, fish farming and hunting leases added another $600 million.

Beef cattle receipts alone totaled about $3.5 billion. Cotton sales added up to $1.3 billion. Poultry and dairy product sales were about even at $565-million and $570-million, respectively, while sheep and goats brought in $146-million and swine, $116-million.

Crop receipts included cotton, $1.3 billion; wheat, $517 million; grain sorghum, $410 million; other feed grains, $367 million; vegetables, $296 million; rice, $290 million; nursery plants, $225 million; peanuts, $115 million; forage, $114; soybeans, $70 million; citrus, $65 million; pecans, $45 million; peaches, plum and other fruit, $19 million.

Exports estimated at $3.7 billion

WACO — U.S. agriculture exports in March 1982 totaled $3.7 billion, which was down 21 percent from a year ago, and 14.7 million tons, down 9 percent. And the value of U.S. exports for the first six-month period of the current fiscal year is $21.8 billion, which is 10 percent below exports values for the comparable period a year ago, reports the Texas Farm Bureau.

Likewise, U.S. agricultural imports for March 1982 totaled $1.3 billion and were down 11 percent from March 1981.

The drop in import value is the latest in a continuation of monthly declines which have been experienced throughout the fiscal year. Reduction in the import value of sugar, cocoa, rubber and gums, fresh fruits and wines were chiefly responsible for the overall decline; however, the decline was somewhat offset by increased March imports of fruit juices and vegetable products. Coffee and beef, two of the largest agriculture imports, were virtually unchanged from last month's import values.

Feeder pig checkoff rate changing

DES MOINES, Iowa — The National Pork Producers Council feeder pig checkoff rate will increase on July 1 from five cents to 10 cents per feeder pig.

Feeder pig checkoff funds are divided between NPPC and the state pork producer councils. Sixty percent of the funds are returned to states and 40 percent are retained at the national levels.

Past feeder pig checkoff funds have been invested in feeder pig research at agricultural colleges and universities by both the national and state organizations. Additional funds are used to sponsor annual feeder pig seminars at the American Pork Congress, NPPC-sponsored production symposiums, and industry promotion and producer relations programs.

Tower opposes grain embargoes

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S. Sen. John Tower of Texas has endorsed a resolution to prevent agriculture-only embargoes.

"Our recent experience with a grain embargo against the Soviet Union proved this single-commodity boycott to be a singularly ineffective vehicle of foreign policy."

DIRT, SQUIRT AND QUIRT

Now is the time for insect control measures

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Based on accumulation of heat units from time of bud break, pecan nut casebearer moths should be active and laying eggs on pecan nutlets now through Tuesday. Insecticide application for control of the pecan nut casebearer then, should be made Wednesday through Saturday.

Control measures should be applied to control the small casebearer larvae just after the larvae hatch from the eggs and before they begin to tunnel into the nutlets (two days after hatch).

There will be some differences in the time that casebearer hatch between pecan varieties within orchards and in home yards. To determine the best time to control casebearer in individual orchards or home yards, the nutlets should be inspected daily for eggs and the first casebearer damaged nutlet. When the first damaged nutlet is observed, control measures should be applied. A thorough job of inspection must be done or casebearer could cause considerable damage before the damage is detected.

Homeowners can use Zolone, malathion or carbaryl (Seven) for casebearer control. Commercial producers may use azinphosmethyl (Guthion), carbaryl (Sevin), endosulfon (Theodan), malathion, phosalone (Zolone) or Torak. Follow the directions on the label for mixing and applying the spray treatment.

Zinc can be applied to the foliage of pecan trees when applying an insecticide for casebearer control. Regular zinc applications are needed for good development of pecans in Midland County.

Persons desiring to learn more about insect and disease control in pecans can attend a meeting Tuesday, May 25, in the County Extension Office located in the Courthouse Annex, 218 W. Illinois St., at 7:30 p.m.

Charles Neeb, area extension entomologist, and Dr. Harold Kaufman, extension plant pathologist, will present updated information on the subjects of pecan insects and diseases, respectively.

Both homeowners and commercial producers are welcome.

Night-flying moths, primarily cutworm moths, have become a nuisance to homeowners the past several weeks in some areas of Midland County. This is expecially true for homes located in rural areas or near such areas. The moths are attracted to light and are sometimes referred to as candle-moths.

Control of night-flying moths attracted to light is a very difficult matter, and is not accomplished by following a simple set of rules. However, a number of steps can be taken and any one of the steps, alone or in combination with others, may provide relief under favorable conditions.

Step 1. Reduce the attraction of the site; Step 2: Intercept the moths before they reach the site; Step 3: Exclude as many as possible from the house; and Step 4: Destroy the moths which gain entrance into the house.

Reduce attraction of house or buildings through proper light management. This step often provides substantial relief. Indirect lighting should be used where practical so that the source of light is shielded from the areas from which the moths may come.

Parting the waters

T.J. Melton III, right, supervises a painting crew on one of the water slides at Wild River Canyon Saturday afternoon. The Midland amusement park, which only a couple of months ago seemed destined to be closed, will open next Saturday.

Wild River Canyon safe — for at least a summer

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Once believed doomed to be dammed by steel and concrete, Wild River Canyon will still flow freely in northwest Midland for at least another summer.

The water amusement park between Idlewilde Drive and Holiday Hill Road is scheduled to open Saturday, but it appears that unless the city of Midland decides to foot the $1.67 million asking price through a bond election, the Canyon soon will house people rather than catfish, trains and arcades.

The problem, says part owner T.J. Melton III, is that the 12-acre site suddenly has become so valuable that many of the other six investors are anxious to sell it to developers for construction of an apartment complex. The land itself, he says, is worth $2 million on the trading block and the structures and other improvements another $2 million.

The irony of the situation is that only a few years ago, the site was a seemingly worthless caliche pit.

"About three weeks ago we reached the decision, after consultation with the investors, to go ahead and open it for another season, primarily because we've gotten a lot of encouragement from the general public," Melton said Saturday.

When word of the proposed sale to apartment developers broke earlier this year, there was considerable public outcry to "save Wild River Canyon." Referendum petitions calling for a bond election for consideration of purchase of the facilities by the city have been circulating for several weeks, with some 3,000 signatures already obtained, said Melton.

"We're going to try for 4,000," he said, to ensure that the necessary 10 percent of the city's registered voters are represented.

Melton said that while the other investors merely were looking at the best possible financial deal for the property, "speaking for myself I wanted to keep it for a park. There's such an intense demand for a young-people-type of recreation here in Midland that it didn't seem right to close the park."

Melton noted, however, that "I'm really afraid that after this summer, if it doesn't change hands, it will no longer (be in operation)."

In a survey conducted at Midland Park Mall, said the native Midlander, 99.8 percent of the 800 persons contacted "were upset that Wild River Canyon would be turned into an apartment complex. We want to work with the people here in Midland to meet the public demand."

Although the amusements park is valued at $4 million, said Melton, the investors are proposing to sell it to the city for $1.67 million under the condition that they lease the improvements from the city for five years, after which time the city would become sole owner.

"This was the most economical way to sell it to the city and still have it as a park," said Melton.

The park has grossed $400,000-$500,000 during each of its two years in existence. While most of that amount was channeled back into the park's development, Melton believes were the city to assume ownership, the facility would then be in a position to bring in enough funds not only to be self-sufficient but also to produce additional revenue for Parks and Recreation Department.

The sudden blossoming of the site as a valuable piece of property was not unexpected, said Melton, but the timing of it did prove a shock.

"We expected it to happen seven years from now, during which time we would develop around it and have it as a (central) recreational facility," he explained.

Wild River Canyon, which in the past has offered a mountain river ride, bumper boats, paddle boats, mini-golf, train ride, swimming and fishing, also will include an updated arcade and a full-fledged restaurant this year.

Park facilities will be open daily from noon until 7 p.m. except Tuesdays, with water rides closing at 6 p.m. The restaurant, which Melton envisions as a year-round facility, will be open daily from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. and Sundays from noon to 11 p.m.

Midland woman learning to pick up pieces of her life

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners.
— Shakespeare

Her hand is curled like a claw on an arm that won't do what she wants it to do. Her leg is equally unresponsive, the dragging foot turned inward. The left side of her face droops slightly. Her speech, though clear, comes slowly.

To all outward appearances, she's a stroke victim. But her hair is blonde and her blue eyes are bright. She's too young to have suffered a stroke.

It's coming back: the mobility, the ability to speak, the memories. All but the memory of what happened to her.

Thirty-three-year-old Grace Burfiend was on her way to a tennis tournament that day, a sunny Saturday morning last summer. Her two children, 9-year-old Mark and 11-year-old Amber, were safe at home. Her husband was working. All was well.

Suddenly....

She never saw the uninsured pickup truck that ran the stop sign and changed her life forever.

She has never met the young man responsible for instantly turning her from an active woman who cherished her independence to one who lay in a coma for months and who had to start all over again learning to talk, walk, cook, take a bath, comb her hair, pick up the pieces.

The man never even called to see how she was all those months in the hospital.

From Aug. 15 until mid-October she lay comatose in Midland Memorial Hospital, her brain swelling dangerously, her doctors at first fearing surgery might be required, her children not allowed to see her for the first month.

But a wait-and-see approach paid off. She began showing faint, sporadic signs of recovery and was transferred to the Warm Springs Rehabilitation Hospital at Gonzales, six miles from where her husband Bill — a Department of Public Safety helicopter pilot — grew up at Luling.

November passed into December. On Dec. 11, her husband received the best news he had heard in a long time: it looked as though she was finally regaining the ability to communicate.

He flew down the next day. It was true. She could make one and two-word responses to his questions. "They were largely unintelligible," he remembers. "But you could tell they were words. And she could identify members of the family from pictures.

"It surprised me. I had gotten to where I didn't expect anything. You can't afford to expect anything."

She can't recall that day. "I don't remember that much about Warm Springs at all," she says from her westside home as she sits in a wheelchair in front of a table full of the gleaming trophies she'd won for soccer, tennis and bowling.

"I want to get back to tennis and bowling. Being in a wheelchair is the worst part. The doctors say I'll be walking by myself in a few months. I don't think I'm doing well at all, but they say I am. One of the first things I'm going to do is swing a tennis racket when I'm able to walk."

Time to rebuild

"She's doing exceptionally well," her husband points out. "She's talking more. She's not forgetful. She's working very hard to get things back to normal."

Her therapists at the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center in Odessa, where she spends two hours a day, three grueling days a week, agree. They remember when she couldn't dress herself or even brush her teeth.

"Outside of needing help getting into the tub, she can bathe herself now," said Occupational Therapist Cindy Pulte. "There's been a lot of progress. We see it more than they (patients) do. She's bright, very independent and works hard."

One of the newer physical therapy innovations is bio-feedback. A walkie-talkie-like device is strapped to her arm and Grace learns to relate the beeps it emits to what is happening to her arm when she tries to move it. Said therapy intern Jimmy Villers: "It will take about three treatments before she gets a good understanding of what we're trying to do with bio-feedback.

"It doesn't work for everyone, but athletes or people who are well-oriented to their bodies usually do best."

"She shows a lot of courage," said Bonnie Forsyth, Grace's part-time nurse. "She really does. And it's amazing how the kids get up and take care of themselves. They're darling children."

Grace is getting to where she can move around on a special cane at home, and although it may be some time before she's through with therapy, she's not bitter:

"I had some hard feelings at first, but not now. I'm very religious. It's helped. I thank God for being alive every day. Bill and the kids have helped, too — Bill the most.

"I'd tell anyone else who's going through the same thing that everything will be all right, that the doctors and nurses know what's best.

"I wish it didn't happen to me. The only good thing is that it doesn't happen very often and the children weren't with me.

"I wouldn't want this to happen to the kids."

When all else fails: Programs offer varied help for dieters

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

After trying everything from eating grapefuit with every meal to eating nothing but eggs for two weeks while secretly munching on junk food, the dieter reaches a point where something else must be done.

And that "something" is usually a weight reduction clinic or program.

While the word diet means the usual food and drink consumed by a person, obesity is the result of an excessive intake of food or drink in proportion to the expenditure of calories.

And when obesity, which is the excessive accumulation of fat beyond that considered normal with regard to age, height and bone structure, occurs, Americans go on a diet.

But some are looking for that secret diet which will shed those extra 20 pounds immediately. Although it may have taken a period of time for the extra weight to appear, they usually want it off yesterday.

IN MIDLAND, there are five such centers — Medical Weight Control, two Diet Centers, Nutri-System Weight Loss Control and Clinical Hypnosis and Behavior Modificiation. Including Odessa, there are about a dozen such facilities with duplicate centers in each city.

An individual can pay anywhere from $85 for a two-week diet "try-out" plan to $600 for a full plan which provides a year maintainence program. To lose 20 pounds, most programs cost between $200 and $300.

The clinics offer a variety of services which include medical supervision and tests such as an electrocardiogram, blood and urine tests, daily weigh-ins, vitamins and supplements, money back guarantees, behavior modification classes, pre-packaged food, recipes with chemical combinations and hypnosis.

Representatives from each of the facilities agree that a balanced diet and behavior modification is the sure way to lose weight. But are there any secrets?

First, the reasons. They blame obesity on cultural factors, such as the American diet of purified high-caloric foods of low nutrient value; hereditary reasons, where overweight parents produce overweight children; and eating behavior, especially with high-caloric eating habits in the evening and the early life patterns of reward and punishment with food.

LUCY SAXTON, a registered nurse at Medical Weight Control, said their program includes medical supervision and tests, counseling and the traditional low calorie diet which includes fish, chicken and green vegetables, not allowing any pork or lamb.

"We try to work the diet to the individual's needs," Ms. Saxton said.

The center offers a free consultation to determine how much weight must be lost and a medical history must be given at this time.

Although there is not a set menu each day, there are supplements of vitamins and minerals that must be taken. Ms. Saxton said it is important to keep a close medical watch on a patient when he is on a food restrictive diet.

When the patient loses a certain number of pounds and then reaches a plateau, he is put on another diet to lose the additional pounds.

"We have people who want to lose from 5 to 200 pounds," Ms. Saxton said. "The price depends on how long we think it will take them to lose weight. You can lose 20 pounds in 30 to 40 days, but your desire to lose weight makes a tremendous difference."

Dr. John Gillett, a Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room physician who owns and operates the Midland, Odessa and San Angelo Medical Weight Control clinics, said there are so many different risk factors in surgery with overweight people that many physicians recommend these clinics to their patients.

Americans usually tip the scales looking for a magic way to shed their unwanted pounds. And sometimes that "magic" is the weight reduction clinics that promise effortless weight loss.

"WE WANT TO make them understand this (overeating) is a bad habit...they must change their eating and lifestyle habits," Gillett said.

But what's the secret?

Gillett says its a food restrictive diet with vitamin supplements and behavior modification.

"You can lose weight at home. There's not really any trade secret. You can also gain it back. We give the person support, diet and consultation," he said.

"So many places — when they have lost the desired weight — say that's it and don't encourage the patient to continue." Ms. Saxton said. We want this to be the last diet you're on."

Another clinc in Midland which offers medical supervision and tests is the Nutri-System.

The Nutri-System not only offers a guaranteed weight loss, but the loss can be tax deductible and you never have to buy groceries at the supermarket.The program is endorsed by movie actress Debbie Reynolds and a physician who writes a newspaper column, Dr. Neil Solomon.

IN ADDITION, classes in behavior modification and a free consultation are also offered.

Dale Langan, manager, said the diet includes pancakes, syrup and an orange drink for breakfast and a tossed salad, vegetable and a choice of 12 different entrees for dinner.

"Everything is safe. The foods are produced specifically for Nutri-System and you get to eat three meals a day," said Ms. Langan, who has been on the diet herself.

What's the secret?

If the physical and medical reasons don't encourage a weight loss, Ms. Langan said money would.

"We offer a 50 percent money back reward on the program cost," Ms. Langon said, adding that the food cost and medical examination are not included in the basic program cost.

It costs approximately $6 a day for meals, according to Ms. Langan. The meals are a balance of carbohydrates, fats and proteins.

"If you're not getting enough protein, the body will burn carbohydrates, then the proteins and finally the fats," Ms. Langan said, adding that with the packaged foods the fats would be burned off first.

BOTH THE MEDICAL Weight Control clinic and the Nutri-System programs throw the body into ketosis, when the body burns its own fat.

"As long as you get enough potassium, it's not going to hurt you," Ms. Langan said. "We have a physician on hand anytime."

"You need medical supervision anytime you're on a food restrictive diet," Ms. Saxton said, adding that a urine test is taken to check for ketosis.

The Diet Center offers "a sensible weight loss program that really works," according to the business' slogan.

Although it is not medically staffed, Carol Miller, Diet Center counselor, said the counselors have successfully lost weight and if there is a medical problem the dieter must have written permission from the doctor.

There is no guarantee. The secret?

"There is no way you can guarantee weight loss unless you're with the person 24 hours a day. People are looking for some magic trick. There is none. It takes total commitment and well balanced meals. We teach people how to get back to the basics. We don't count calories. We count nutrients," Ms. Miller said.

She added it is possible to lose 10-15 pounds in four weeks and 17-25 in six weeks and the dieter should lose an inch for every pound. Exercise is not included in the program, but is encouraged.

MOTIVATIONAL FACTORS include a daily weigh-in. Dieters are encouraged to drop by the center, which opens at 7 a.m. six days a week, and get weighed.

Foods include lean meats, fish, eggs, unlimited raw, green and leafy vegetables, fruits and bread, the four basic food groups, Ms. Miller said.

A clinic which offers no specific diet, pills or medical exam is the Clinical Hypnosis and Behavior Modification clinic.

"Anyone can lose weight on a diet, but the minute they go off the diet, the weight is back on. You've got to modify behavior," Dr. Moore said.

"Overweight people overeat because of the way they think," she said, adding that the way to help the overeater is to cure the problem.

With hypnosis, Dr. Moore said she has found that most of the time it is not a weight problem that people have, but some other problem that causes them to overeat.

Obesity is when a person is 30 pounds and over his actual weight, Dr. Moore noted.

"But a lot of people who think they're fat are not fat. You must be happy with yourself. The person who is 50 pounds overweight know they're obese," she said, adding that she has treated people who think they have from 5 to 100 pounds to lose.

DR. MOORE explained it takes three sessions to complete her program with the last hypnotic session taking place at the desired weight goal.

Tapes and weigh-ins are required once a week. Additional counseling sessions are available, should the person so desire. There is a set fee for the service no matter how much must be loss.

According to Dr. Moore, there are no contracts and no guarantees; it's entirely up to the individual.

"If they follow the program and listen to their tapes they will lose the weight," Dr. Moore said, adding that a dieter must eat balanced meals and enjoy eating, savoring and tasting the flavor.

She said hypnosis is not dangerous, but rather an altered state of consciousness where the person is in control, not the doctor.

But, the person has got to want to lose the weight.

"Ninety-nine percent of the overweight people I see don't eat breakfast or lunch, then they pig-out at dinner until bedtime. I can alleviate this habit," Dr. Moore said.

Organization banks on ability to locate organ donors

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

There's a bank that offers a high interest rate — in life — called the Living Bank.

Founded in Houston in 1968, the non-profit organization is dedicated to helping those who, after death, wish to donate part or all of their bodies for transplantation or research.

Over and over, hospital emergency room staff see young accident victims who in their death could have helped someone else.

"There is a drastic need for eyes, kidneys and skin (for burn patients)," said Jeanne Gilles, R.N., Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room supervisor.

One way a person can indicate his decision to become a donor is by signing the back of the driver's license, but this may not be good enough.

SGT. STEVE CARTER, Texas Department of Public Safety, said he wasn't sure about the legality of the driver's license designation, and it would probably be up to the family and the doctor to decide.

"All the law requires as far as the drivers' license is concerned is signing your name and having two witness over 18 years of age sign...and it becomes invalid if the license is suspended, expired, canceled or revoked. The statement must be done each time the license is reinstated or renewed," Carter said.

"The intent is great, but the license only gives the donor's permission, or desire," Ms. Gilles said.

She added that law enforcement officers and emergency room staff are usually the first to come in contact with an accident victim.

"When we notice this (signature) on the driver's license, we advise the doctors," Carter said.

At the hospital, the nurses and doctors talk to the family, but many times the staff is reluctant to approach them about organ donations because the next of kin may not be aware of their relative's decision.

"IF WE LOOK on the license and see that the person is a donor, we'll try to talk to the family. But it's a hard thing to do. It's a very sensitive time. Sometimes the doctor will talk to the family.

"If one member of the family says no, then that's it — no! A lot of young people come through here and a lot of good kidneys are wasted," Ms. Gilles said.

The 1981 figures show that about 62,000 Americans are on kidney dialysis with 10,000 to 12,000 people awaiting transplants. In addition, 25,000 cornea transplant operations were performed in 1981, with some 50,000 still waiting.

But, with a Living Bank donor card, many of these people waiting for transplants could be helped. The donor card also can eliminate a possible misunderstanding with the next of kin when a relative has decided to become a donor.

According to Sandra Tucker, Living Bank director of development and communications in Houston, the card and its symbol is well-known throughout the country, especially with emergency room staff and police officers.

"WE'RE FAMILIAR with the Living Bank symbol. In fact we have posters up so the public can see them," Carter said, referring to the Egyptian tree of life symbol that is on the donor cards and medallions.

Ms. Tucker said the Livng Bank's donor card, which is usually kept with the driver's license, is the only legal document needed in the U.S. under the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act.

Under the anatomical act the donor's wishes take legal precedence over the next of kin. However, Ms. Tucker and Ms. Gilles advised that everyone in the immediate family should be made aware of the donor's wishes.

Prior to receiving the card, the donor and the next of kin must sign for permission to remove an organ in case of death.

Because most donors are accident victims, people should not depend on a will to inform authorities of the desire to donate organs — a will is not read at the time of death, the donor card is.

The Living Bank, if contacted, will make an effort to see that the donations are utilized, Ms. Tucker said.

SHE ADDED THAT donations cannot be guaranteed, noting that parts of the body will be removed only if they are medically acceptable. Certain situations make utilization impossible, such as death in a remote location, age or condition of the organs, lack of a recipient or failure to make a tissue match.

The removal of the organs or parts does not disfigure the body or interfere with burial arrangements.

"It's a very personal decision," Ms. Tucker said. "We do what the person (donor) wants us to do. It's a family decision. But it is important to remember that the receiving institution wants the consent of the next of kin. And the Living Bank does just that."

In Midland, Mr. and Mrs. Ted Strickland have recently become donors.

"As a family, we have agreed on this," Strickland said. "When I die I'm virtually no use to anybody...so any part of my body that would be usable, I would hope it would be used to make a better life for another person."

THE LIVING BANK is not a storage facility and it does not receive donated organs and bodies.

It is a registry with some 85,000 prospective donors signed up. Ms. Tucker said the organization maintains a 24-hour telephone service to refer donations to medical schools, eye banks, kidney transplant facilities and other organ banks throughout the U.S. and near where the donor dies.

In Midland donations, Ms. Gilles said a surgical team, usually from Dallas, removes the organs. And, according to Sharon Sneed, assistant director of MMH emergency room, if a local doctor surgically removes the donor's organ, he must be a "third party" to the transplantation procedure to avoid a conflict of interest.

Ms. Gilles and Ms. Sneed both noted that Dr. Joseph Frank Ruda, a Midland ophthamolgist, has offered his services free of charge to remove a donor's eyes.

Time limits for retrieval, according to Ms. Tucker, vary depending on the organ. Kidneys and other internal organs must be retrieved minutes after death and the donor's body must be maintained on a life support system. Eyes are usually removed four to eight hours after death, but Ms. Sneed said there have been cases where eyes have been kept up to 48 hours. And skin, which Ms. Gilles said is "badly needed for burn patients" should be retrieved 18 to 24 hours after death and the time limit for the entire body varies.

Anyone interested in becoming a donor should contact the Living Bank, P.O. Box 6725, Houston, 77005, or call (713) 528-2971.

Donation 'bowls over' Baptist church, school

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Like they say, sometimes God moves in mysterious ways.

Consider the scenario: Baptist church and school in dire need of gymnasium; no funds available. Preacher turns to Jewish family, which owns bowling alley scheduled for demolition to make way for office complex. Jewish family responds, makes gift of the superstructure to the church, provided it is relocated to church property by Monday.

The scene was Midland; the actors, Oaklawn Park Baptist Church pastor David Piearcy and the members of Emory Isenberg's family.

The result: $70,000-$100,000 of material salvaged for future use, from what otherwise would have been a mass of scrap metal.

The unusual story began some 10 days ago when Piearcy was reflecting on the church school's need for a gymnasium. He was aware that the $350,000 needed to construct such a structure was prohibitive, so he decided to try to locate an old building and a possible donor.

"I just began driving around, looking for an building and came by (Air Park Lanes)," recalled Piearcy.

He gave the Isenberg family a call, explained the church's predicament and asked if they would be generous enough to donate the superstructure.

The bowling alley, which closed April 4, was scheduled to be demolished, and rather than see it be destroyed the Isenbergs presented the building to the church.

The only hitch was, it had to be re-located by the time the property was to change hands — on Monday, May 24.

The proximity of that date spurred the church into action, as a score of volunteers have worked from sunrise until almost midnight each day in an 11th hour attempt to tear down and salvage as much of the structure as possible for construction of the gymnasium in the 3000 block of North A.

"The property got too valuable to be a bowling alley," explained Randy Isenberg. "The returns off a bowling establishment wouldn't be what an office complex would be. It was strictly a business procedure."

But Isenberg's business savvy did not keep him from expressing his gratitude that the structure will rise again in a different form, only a few blocks distant.

"I think it's more practical to recycle something than throw it away," he explained. "Why let something go to waste?"

The gift, noted a thankful Piearcy, will make it possible for the church school to have an adjacent gymnasium as soon as January 1983.

He conceded lots of work remains to be done — not the least of which is meeting the sunrise deadline Monday. But, like the Hebrews who wandered in the wilderness 40 years, he expects church members to face up to their responsibilities.

"It's like manna from heaven," explained Piearcy. "They had to go out and gather it — God didn't throw it in their tents."

Portions of the ceiling plummet as Oaklawn Park Baptist Church volunteers work hurriedly to salvage the superstructure of Air Park Lanes. The former bowling alley is scheduled for demolition Monday, but church members hope to save enough steel to build a gymnasium in the 3000 block of North A St.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Midland City Council

Midland City Council will pick up the issue of freight loading zones and permits for those areas when the group meets at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

The council had passed an ordinance earlier this year in which companies would be limited to three permits with the cost to be $25 for the first, $50 for the second and $100 for the third. Requests for additional permits would be heard by the council.

In addition, the new law restricted the type of vehicles that could be issued freight loading permits.

But at the April 27 meeting, several businessmen objected to the new ordinance and the council instructed them to work out a compromise with Lt. Herman Wicker of the traffic division.

In a related matter, the council will consider establishing a freight loading zone for Energy Square Ltd. on Tennessee Avenue.

The council will consider a resolution to approve paying claims for crop damage. And the panel will look at a proposed lease for T-Bar Ranch about 60 miles west of Midland.

Interstate Equities will ask for the city to issue them a building permit prior to completion of the platting process.

A contract with the architects on the Public Safety Building remodeling project will be reviewed for approval. Money for the remodeling was given the OK by voters in the April 3 city election.

Public hearings are scheduled on zone change requests including a 2:25 p.m. session on an appeal by D.S.& P. Venture Group for a tract south of Bluebird Lane and west of Midkiff Road. In addition, Don Harvey is appealing a zone change request on land east of Holiday Hill Road and north of Anetta Drive with the hearing scheduled at 2:45 p.m.

The council will consider paying the final bills on water and sewer projects for I-20 Terminal Park and look at awarding a maintenance contract for heating and air conditioning equipment in four city buildings.

County Commissioners' Court

Sheriff Dallas Smith likely will fuel the Midland County Commissioners' Court with more fodder for jail expansion ideas in the 9 a.m. Monday meeting of the court on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

The sheriff and the commissioners are exploring ways and means legally to accommodate the influx of prisoners and possibly to put some on outside work programs.

The county jail, which makes up the fifth floor of the courthouse, has cell space for 102 inmates, has been averaging about 100 and is expected to gain more than it can legally and reasonably handle. Commissioners are considering building a stockade and converting the jail's "bull pen" into cells until a new jail can be built.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Hear a report by Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart.

—Consider industrial revenue bond finanacing for Ingersoll-Rand Co. and Aquila Aero Corp.

—Get with Constable Tom McGinnis to discuss striping and re-routing of courthouse parking space.

—Consider approval of a preliminary plat for Greenwood Estates.

—Discuss Don Johnson's proposal for a county annex.

—Discuss bonds to finance annex project.

—Consider transfer of funds from the county attorney's budget to the constable's budget.

MISD Board of Trustees

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will receive sealed bids and award the contract for the construction of the addition to Midland Freshman High School during its regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Administration Building, 702 North N St.

Trustees also are expected to renew property insurance policies and student accident insurance programs. Action will be taken on recommendations concerning performance-based salary supplements, salary schedules for support personnel and the summer board meeting schedule.

Board members will consider proposals for the operation of the food service division for the 1982-83 school year and will hear the results of a survey conducted by the Teacher Burnout and Morale Committee.

Bids on athletic equipment will be taken and a gift from the Washington Elementary School PTA will be accepted.

In executive session, trustees will consider individual administrator evaluations and recommendations as to salaries.

Is the 600 block of West Nobles zoned for business?

As far as I know it is not and is supposed to be a residential place clear up to A Street.

Was wondering why a plumbing service can be operated from a residence in the 600 block, as well as an insurance office from the same address.

There are so many of their cars and trucks parked in front of all their neighbors' places that it is hard for us to see out when we need to back out to go to work.

We bought here thinking it would be quiet, not for a bunch of noisy plumbing into all hours of the night. — D.M.J.

ANSWER: You are correct, the portion of West Nobles Street you refer to is not zoned for business, it is zoned M-1 for multiple family residences.

To register your complaint, contact Warren Cloyd at the Planning and Zoning Department of the City of Midland — 683-4281, Extension 238 — and he will make an investigation.

Could you give me the mailing address for Channel 13? — H.H.

ANSWER: The address for Channel 13, PBS, is 3000 Harry Hines Boulevard, Dallas 75201.

I understand there is a new medicine which may be a breakthrough in the prevention of asthma. Do you have any information about this? — L.P.

ANSWER: According to a news release from The Upjohn Co., there is a unique new drug that suppresses the body chemicals believed to trigger asthma attacks. This drug will be studied in humans this year. The announcement was made by Dr. Michael K. Bach of the The Upjohn Co. at the Fifth International Conference on Prostaglandins in Florence, Italy.

The new drug — U-60.257 — inhibits the body's production of powerful compounds called leukotrienes in both test-tube and animal studies.

Dr. Bach said, "However, it is important to recognize that with average United States drug development and approval time running eight to 10 years, it probably will be at least 1990 before the drug will be marketed."

I have called the Animal Control Center several times about a Doberman Pinscher being allowed to run loose at a business on West Indiana Street, but nothing has been done. Can you do anything? — J.S.

ANSWER: The Animal Control Center is aware of the Doberman Pinscher and has responded to your calls about the animal. The Doberman, which is an old dog, the pet of the owner of the testing lab, has been checked and found to be licensed and in good health. The dog has accompanied his owner to the business for many years, and is not considered a menace.

I read an article in The Reporter-Telegram about agoraphobia. Can you give me the name of someone to contact about the disease? — N.M.

ANSWER: A feature article was written about Wanda Ralston, who may be contacted at 563-4338. Another article mentioned an Agoraphobia Center located in Dallas. The center's telephone number is 214 386-6681.

I have electrical wires from the alley to my house which hang very low and are very worn. I am uneasy about allowing my children to play in the yard because of the possible danger to them.

I have called Texas Electric several times about the situation, but nothing has been done. I have even called the Midland Fire Department, but was given the run-around. I live at 4011 Pleasant Drive. Can you do something? — Eulalia Navarrette

ANSWER: Texas Electric Service Co. has been notified and your situation explained. Shirley Taylor with TESCO says that your name has been placed on the list of services to be performed, but, with the unusual and rapid growth of Midland, the company is experiencing a manpower shortage.

Mrs. Taylor has sent your request through again, and says you can contact her if something is not done in the near future. That TESCO number is 683-8600.

Two Midlanders among Tech scholarship winners

LUBBOCK — Paula Hanssen and Lowell S. Stokes of Midland are among 50 Texas Tech University students awarded scholarships for the 1982-83 academic year by the Texas Tech Dads Association.

Miss Hanssen, daughter of Bonnie Hanssen, 4417 Humble Drive, received the $700 Irene and Murray Gray Scholarship. She is a senior music major.

Stokes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon D. Stokes, 2502 Gulf, received the $650 Nancy Lynne Wilson Scholarship. He is a junior accounting major.

The Texas Tech Dads Association is an organization of parents with children at the university and of Texas Tech supporters. The association, which has raised a $260,000 endowment for student scholarships, is currently conducting a $500,000 fund drive to support a distinguished visiting professor program at Texas Tech.

UTPB summer class registration May 31

ODESSA — Summer registration at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin has been scheduled from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 to 7 p.m. May 31 in the UTPB student lounge.

UTPB Director of Admissions Robert Warmann said students planning to attend the 12-week whole summer term, the nine-week session or both six-week sessions may register on that date. Students registering for the first time for the second summer term only may do so July 12.

Warmann said registration will be by individual time assignment. "Registration notices will be mailed to all students enrolled within the past three semesters, to new students whose admission files are complete and who have received official acceptance letters, and to previously enrolled students who notify the admissions office that they wish to enroll," he said.

"Prospective students who have not received a registration card by Friday may pick up cards at the admissions office beginning Monday," he added.

Warmann suggested that students who have not already been assigned a faculty adviser should contact the advising coordinator at 367-2127.

Enrollment at UTPB is open to any student who has completed 60 credit hours or more at any accredited community college or university. Students not pursuing a degree, but who are interested in taking courses for enjoyment or for additional information in a particular field, may register through the university's ENCORE (no-grade) option. Classes will begin June 1.

Downtown Lions Club, Lion Tamers install officers at banquet

Officers of the Midland Downtown Lions Club and the Lion Tamers Club for 1982-83 were installed and the Lion of the Year was named at the annual Installation and Ladies Night banquet held Friday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Jack Darden is the new Lions Club president, succeeding Jerry Speck, and Mrs. Jack Darden heads the Lion Tamers, succeeding Mrs. David Hoff.

Directors are Dick Buckland, Ed Darnell, L.G. "Copper" Daugherty, Robert M. Faris and Wayne Martin, all one-year; and Roy Darden, Norman Henry, Tom Probasco and Charlie Sprayberry, all two-year.

Officers of the Lion Tamers Club, in addition to Mrs. Darden, include Mrs. Glenn Redmond, vice president; Mrs. Lester Van Pelt Jr., secretary; Mrs. Robert Stine, treasurer; and Mrs. Norman Gould, reporter.

George Thompson of Sweetwater, past district governor of Lions International, installed the Lions Club officers. The Lion Tamers Club officers were installed by Mrs. Victor Horn, a past president of the club. Thompson, in his inspirational address, challenged the officers and members as to their responsibilities and obligations as Lions.

W.H. "Bill" Collyns served as master of ceremonies.

Brad Blackburn, chairman of the Lions Club's Sight Conservation and Work With the Blind Committee, was named "Lion of the Year." The award was presented by Morris Hulsey, immediate past president.

The Lion Paul Murray Traveling Ticket Sale Award went to Charlie Sprayberry, who sold more than $4,500 worth of tickets for the club's annual Pancake Jamboree held in March. The award was presented by Mrs. J.C. McNeal, daughter of the late Paul Murray.

Special appreciation awards went to Lion and Mrs. Ray Gwyn for outstanding service to the club through the years. Gwyn, a past president, is retiring as editor of the club's weekly publication, "Downtown Lions TALE," after 25 years of service.

Gifts of appreciation also went to Jerry Speck for his outstanding service as president.

Speck, in turn, presented gifts to a number of Lions for dedicated service during the year.

Amy Messenger

Midland teacher still a Messenger

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

It seems appropriate that Amy Messenger's surname is the literal translation of the Biblical Greek word "angel."

For only someone with such a special and unique calling would give of herself the way this woman has, with 30 years of teaching in church schools and 10 years as an overseas missionary.

One might think that now, beyond retirement age, she would be content to lean back and relax during life's Golden Years, but not Ms. Messenger, who is returning for yet another missionary stint this summer — this time to Thailand for at least two years.

Midlander in Profile

The Midland resident says it is because missionary work "gets in your blood" that she is being drawn again to serve her God through assisting others. And too, there is the faith which sustains and leads her in seeking to fulfill the "Great Commission."

"It's the faith and the adventure," she explained. "It's something different — I like to become acquainted with other people, other nationalities, other customs."

Originally from Iowa, Ms. Messenger's entire life has revolved around the church of her faith: The Seventh Day Adventist. She was educated at the Seventh Day Adventist institutions of Union College in Lincoln, Neb., and Southwest Union College in Keen, Texas. Thereupon she embarked upon a lifelong teaching career in various Adventist schools around the nation. But after 21 years, her life took an abrupt turn in 1962, when she decided to face the greatest challenge of all: to help fulfill Christ's commission to evangelize the world.

The challenge first took her to Guam, where she stayed for a year as a missionary-teacher, then she moved on to Koror Palau in the Western Carolina Islands for four more years. There, she taught English as a second language and assisted in the instruction of national children.

Her next assignment took her across the world to Indonesia, where she taught the children of other missionaries, and it was there that she became most aware of the poverty and primitiveness of many nations in comparison to the United States. Plowing was still done by oxen, and a population explosion led to economic difficulties for most families.

"They were very curious about America," she noted. "But, I think as Americans, we were well-received."

Her experience in living on the opposite side of the world from the "amber waves of grain and purple mountains' majesty" led her to reflect deeply on what it was like to live in the United States.

"You learn to appreciate America that much more," she said, noting that too often Americans take their country for granted.

After a decade away from her homeland, she returned to the United States in 1972 and continued her church-related teaching career. She taught in Portales, N.M., for five years and Iowa for two before coming to Midland three years ago.

But her faith has summoned her again, and she leaves Midland in June and will arrive in late August at an isolated outpost 50 kilometers from Chiang Mai, Thailand. There, according to missionary authorities, she will have electricity "only when the generator works," and the water supply is unstable. It will be rough going for a person who had a choice of retirement, but for Ms. Messenger, it seemed an inevitability that she would return overseas.

"Again, it goes back to faith," she explained. And as far the hardships, "I came up through the Depression, which prepared me for some of the hardships that Americans haven't faced since."

And, she says, she is looking forward eagerly to a new and different land and lifestyle. "It widens your vision," she said. "Tourists don't go to the outposts, so I'm glad I've had the opportunity...to go to out-of-way places and see what the other side's really like."

While some friends may worry about her safety in such a locale, Ms. Messenger said the fringes of civilization offer no more spiritual dangers than that she has faced every day in the United States.

"You've just got to trust the Lord when you're (a missionary)," she said. "But you've got to trust Him here too — you've got to trust Him in Midland."

This "angel," who believes Christian education is the best way for a child to receive the moral and spiritual guidelines to face life, is one who obviously does.

Teacher has 'industrious' approach

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Ralph Schultz has put his energy into two different areas that affect each other. One area is the industrial arts program he has taught at Midland High School for the past 27 years. The other was as a member of the State Textbook Committee last summer.

Both are big responsibilities. Both are successful.

It is an honor to be chosen as one of the 15 members serving on the State Textbook Committee, Schultz said.

"What we select, the rest of the nation is going to follow," he said, sitting in his office in the middle of the industrial arts building at Midland High School. "We (Texas) purchase the largest amount of textbooks, too — over 27 million for this upcoming year. They'll be good from August 1982 for six years. And about $47 to $48 million is involved."

IN DEALING WITH numbers of that size, in addition to upholding the national reputation Texas has for its high education, members of the textbook committee, when selected through recommendations of state educators, face a hectic and pressure-filled summer.

"We were selected in April and the announcements were made in May," Schultz explained.

"The publishers really campaigned," he said. "It started in the second week of May when the publishing companies would fly down presidents and front men to talk to the members. They'd walk right in here," he said, looking out at the shop through the windows in his office. "Sometimes I'd eat breakfast with one publisher and maybe have four dinners with four others that same day. I would eat a little with one at one restaurant, and a little at another restaraunt — it was hectic.

"I enjoyed it because I had a chance to meet a lot of different people. But I don't think I'd want to do it again."

Although one member is selected from each district in the state, Schultz said they each had a number of advisers. Schultz had 56.

"It was difficult at times," he said. "Our first choice for a textbook was maybe the last choice somewhere else. The difference (between the members) was just a matter of philosophy of teaching.

"EVERYONE LOOKS for the textbook that goes along with his own philosophy, that reinforces his teaching. If this is what I believe, then it's a good textbook. We have to live with it for six years."

Schultz said he greatly depended on his advisers, who were selected with the help of curriculum coordinators from the Midland Independent School District. "I took notes, asked questions and listened to the advisers a lot," he said. "And we got our first and second choices in every category except social studies. We got second and third choices there."

He was especially happy with the industrial arts selections, he added with a grin.

In August, the committee met in Austin for protest hearings. According to Schultz, textbook critics such as Mel and Norma Gabler really don't influence the members.

"The publishers really respect the Gablers," he said. "I respect them for their beliefs but I don't think they influence many committee members. My own point of view about these protest hearings is that if I went down to Austin to vote, I'm going to vote the way my advisers tell me. If the Gablers were going to influence my vote, they'd have to influence my advisers."

THE PROTEST HEARINGS lasted one week. Committee members voted on textbooks in September. During that time, Schultz said the publishers were not allowed to speak with the members.

"They were real strict about that," he said. "They could wave and look at you but they couldn't talk to you at all."

Local textbook adoption was completed this month and Schultz said that the books will be in Midland for the first day of classes next August.

But Midland also has a system that serves as an advantage over other school districts in the state.

"We asked each publisher to give us a set of books so we could pilot them," Schultz said, with a smile. "It's a perfectly legitimate agreement made last summer. We've been using the texts all year long, testing them. It's really been an advantage to the kids and the teachers. As far as I know, we're the only group that does that."

While Schultz said he feels the process of textbook selection is a fair and successful one, he added that a few changes should be made.

"I THINK THE teacher who gives up his summer should be paid for it and I think that someone who serves on the textbook committee should have a secretary. I also think the advisers should get some kind of benefit because they gave up their summers, too. This free gratis attitude was fine maybe 20 years ago, but it's not anymore."

Schultz, who usually does contract work during the summer, said he didn't have the time last summer. And his love for that type of work shows in his 27 years of involvement with the MHS industrial arts program.

"I've been here so long that I've got maybe five or six second-generation students," he said laughing. And the other three industrial arts teachers at Midland High happen to be former students.

"People used to think of industrial arts as sort of a dumping ground," Schultz said. "That's not true at Midland High School."

The MHS industrial arts club, which usually has more than 200 members and is now down to about 160, has placed second in the state for the past four years. Results of this year's state competition have not yet been announced.

"The biggest problem for us in the last two years is that we've been down one section in enrollment," Schultz said. "Before the problem has been the classes were too big and I don't like operating with classes with over 24 students."

THE DECREASE in enrollment is due to a shortage of teachers, he said. "I think the shortage is in the neighborhood of about 600 teachers across the state. I read a study made by North Texas State University that said some 2,500 students in Texas are deprived of taking industrial arts because of the lack of teachers. At NTSU, only two out of 80 industrial arts majors are going into teaching. Industry is taking the others.

"It's almost like a country club in the sense that its hard to get into," he said of the MHS industrial arts program. "We've got a waiting list."

The success of the program at Midland High School is partly due to outside help received from some of Schultz's former students. "They ought to be on the rolls," he said. "They are my assistant professors. They are always helping with my classes."

The shop is open during the year at all hours. Saturday and Sunday afternoons, two nights a week during the fall, three in the spring. "We make it available for the students," he said. "This place gets used, I'll tell you that.

"The main thing I'm after in a student is a good attitude toward industrial arts," Schultz continued. "I just try to get the student to make something he wants or needs to make. As the student matures, he becomes ready for more challenging projects.

"The secret of any program is the kids, and we've had some really good kids. I think we've just been blessed with them."

Amazing Diet Breakthrough: CUT CALORIES BUT NOT CONSUMPTION

At last, medical science has discovered a way to lose weight without reducing caloric intake. No more strict regimentation, fad diets, or gnawing hunger pains! Eat regular, nutritious, well-balanced meals and still lose weight.

Eleven years of scientific research

A noted Biochemist directed twenty-five other scientists in an eleven-year research study that discovered an incredibly effective diet aid.

The scientific team noted that when laboratory animals were fed uncooked kidney beans, undigested starch was found in their digestive systems. Evidence suggested that some substance in the raw beans prevented the digestion of starch. After years of painstaking research, the scientists isolated the substance and named it Special Legume Protein Concentrate (SLPC).

Caloric absorption blocked

SLPC performs it's magic by prohibiting the carbohydrate-digesting enzyme, alpha-amylase, from digesting carbohydrates in the digestive tract. When SLPC is ingested prior to eating a meal containing starchy foods such as potatoes, rice, breads and pasta the SLPC inhibits the alpha-amylase from working. Undigested starch passes through the digestive tract and is eliminated--calories and all.

Convienient tablet formulation

Until now, SLPC has been restricted to use by physicians. But because SLPC is not a drug and is harmless when taken in combination with a variety of healthy foods, Nutrion Corporation has made this miraculous dietary breakthrough available to the public in tablet form, STARCH-LITE.

One STARCH-LITE tablet, taken at the beginning of each meal or snack, inhibits the ingestion of 400 starch calories--the amount of starch found in four baked potatoes, four slices of bread, two cups of rice, or two cups of pasta. While it is unlikely to consume such quantities of any one food in one meal, many fruits and vegetables also contain large amounts of starch, and thus each STARCH-LITE tablet is formulated to block the average starch content of one meal.

Food	Total calories	Starch calories blocked by STARCH-LITE	Calories remaining
Bread, one slice	110	100	10
Rice, 1 cup cooked	200	180	20
Macaroni, 1 cup cooked	210	168	42
Corn, 1 cup	174	160	14
Potato, 1 medium baked	120	100	20
Banana	120	104	16

The STARCH-LITE difference

Unlike most starch blockers on the market, STARCH-LITE is more than just granulated beans. The STARCH-LITE formulation includes a highly concentrated portion of the effective SLPC ingredient.

In addition to inhibiting carbohydrate absorption, STARCH-LITE tablets have been formulated with a bulking agent which serves as an appetite suppressant. In the stomach, each STARCH-LITE tablet expands to fifty times it's original size, creating a full, satisfied feeling which naturally reduces your desire for food.

Safe and stable weight loss

One STARCH-LITE tablet taken with every meal results in pound after pound of excessive weight loss. You'll realize losses of five to ten pounds almost immediately. But most importantly, your weight will come off and stay off. With the continued use of STARCH-LITE, you'll never again have to suffer the frustrations of dieting.

After singing some of their songs, Ted and Tom LeGarde, known as the LeGarde Twins, talked about their success in their home country of Australia as well as the success they hope to achieve in the U.S. in an interview prior to their Friday 8 p.m. performance at Odessa's Ector County Coliseum. Tickets, priced at $7.50, may be purchased at Ector County Coliseum. Those who attend the concert will also have a chance to win two free trips to Australia.

Perseverance pays off for Aussie brothers

Entertainment Writer

ODESSA — The youngest of nine children, they had to quit school at 13 to work in the plantation's fields cutting sugar cane. When they were 15, they left home to work at a cattle station.

They had a dream. And it wasn't cutting sugar cane or running cattle.

They wanted to be country singing stars.

"A country song's a country song, wherever you call home. The accent doesn't matter; it's the tapping of the feet," said the Australian-born and -raised LeGarde Twins, Ted and Tom.

Today's top country performers in a country which is very close in size to the U.S., they honored a promise they made their mother when they left home: "We promised we'd be big some day. We said, 'Mama, we're going to come back and take you around the world.' We did."

NOW THEY ARE moving from down under to seek popularity in a new market — the United States.

They will be performing a "Down Under Country" concert at 8 p.m. Friday at Ector County Coliseum. The $7.50 ticket price also entitles the bearer to a chance to win two free trips to Australia. The winning ticket will be drawn at the show's close.

In an interview Friday, Ted and Tom sang a number of their songs, interspersing their singing with talk about where they're from and where they hope to go. As they sang, both explained that a number of their songs are autobiographical.

Such is the case with the lyrics, "We gave mama the addresses for the places we'd played, but we didn't tell her they were on the street."

In Australia it's called "busking in the streets." All that's required of a performer is that he secure a permit from the police station. Then he can set up shop on the street corner and sing for what others are willing to pay. At one point the twins were busking on a street corner in Mackay, their home town, and "our brothers and sisters were really embarassed."

THEY WOULDN'T come down the street the twins were on, but instead avoided them.

On one of the round-ups they made from the cattle station, the twins "entered the rodeo events." At the rodeo, "a country singer, Buddy Williams, had a Wild West Show — Australia's Ernest Tubb — and he hired us to ride in his show."

The two were "buck jumpers" — U.S. translation: bronco riders.

"When we started traveling rodeos, we would get up and sing and play a little bit. We started making more money singing than buck jumping in the Wild West Show.

"After the show," Tom said, "Ted and I would go out front, shake hands and get the names and addresses of all those we could."

Their enthusiasm and perseverance were to pay off.

The two were offered a "one shot deal — if the first doesn't go out of the chute, then you don't get a second go-round," with an Australian record company when they were 19. The song was "Bad Brahma Bull."

AFTER BUYING thousands of postcards, the twins went to their collection of names and addresses. They wrote every person in their file and said "please buy our record."

"We were traveling, working the Wild West Show, and we heard on the wireless (radio) 'Here's the LeGarde Twins,'" Tom said. Before putting the record on, the disc jockey said, "Golly, we're getting lots of requests for this song."

"Bad Brahma Bull" made No. 1 in Australia.

"We thought we had it made. Little did we dream that that was just the beginning," they said.

"We started traveling. While we were traveling we saw a lot of Western movies," Ted said. The John Wayne and Hopalong Cassidy films the twins saw reinforced their "desire to come to America."

Although they have been working the U.S. market for five years, they are not discouraged.

THEY HAVE received standing ovations after performing as back-up for such country artists as Barbara Mandrell, Charlie Pride, Johnny Lee and Mickey Gilley, as well as in schools from high schools down to elementary grades. The twins are now moving their headquarters to Nashville, Tenn.

"We are trying to get that hit song, the one that separates the winners from the losers. You can strive for years and years, but without that hit it's no good.

"One example is Willie Nelson. He wrote many songs and never scored a hit until he came up with 'Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain' that had already been recorded by Roy Acuff and Hank Locklin.

"Look at Slim Whitman. After being so big in England he couldn't get arrested on a record label (in the U.S.). He went to New York and recorded 'Una Paloma Blanca.' It sold over 3 million records.

"The people are the ones. It's the people's choice. You have to create a demand, then you've got something. Either you're going to do it, or you're not."

THE LEGARDES hope to create that demand with their latest album — "Down Under Country." It contains 20 songs, half American and half Australian.

They hope not to wind up like the Australian country singer in "What's Going on Down Under?" from their soon to be released album "Rasing Cane."

In this selection, the singer wonders "what's going on down under? There's lots of things in New York City for a man with eyes to pity, but the saddest site of all, is an Australian boy who was due home last fall. But I'm still here singing for beer and a handout. Stardom, you elusive thing, I'm going to give you one last fling."

They have included in their "Down Under Country" album a number which they feel typifies what they mean by "a country song's a country song," it doesn't matter where you're from, its the tapping of the feet that counts. Although the song was originally recorded by Hank Snow, it was written by an Australian — "I've Been Everywhere, Man."

"I've been to Tulamore, Seymour, Lismore, Moorouchidoor, Kilmore, Woolongong...Reno, Chicago, Fargo, Minnesota, Buffalo, Toronto...I've been everywhere, man, I've been everywhere."

During a hectic one-day promotional visit to Midland for the movie "Night Screams," actress Susan Kiger and producer Chuck Ison relax for a bit and talk about their reason for visiting 20 or more Texas towns in two weeks. "Night Screams" opened at the UA Cine Friday.

Duo has fun promoting new movie

During the past two weeks, "Night Screams" opened in 140 theaters across Texas. Actress Susan Kiger and co-producer Charles "Chuck" Ison had visited every Texas town they could. Most days, they made numerous stops in two or more towns.

Midland-Odessa was the last visit on the two-week trip.

By 6 p.m. Thursday, after interviewing all day, the two were settled into the Veranda Room at the Midland Hilton for one more interview prior to heading for the premiere showing at the UA Cine IV. They had to be in their places ready for action by 6:45 p.m.

It wasn't long, but it was long enough to let them wind down, before winding back up again.

Ison had noticed during their Texas travels something which Texans have long taken for granted.

"You have to fly to Dallas before you fly anywhere in Texas," he said. Laughing, he added, "We've been in 14,000 airplanes in the last two weeks."

Laughing is mostly what the two did, as they bantered back and forth. It was not a serious interview, nor was it meant to be. After all, some questions can only be answered so many times before the answer becomes rote and the meaning nothing.

Of their travels, Miss Kiger said, "He's been giving out his room number," to which Ison responded, "No, I haven't."

"He's been a complete angel," she said, paused and added, "Darn. I've been good, too."

"Yeah, you have," Ison said, "It's surprised me."

The two met when "I was working in this furniture store and he was looking for a casting couch," Miss Kiger said, looking quite intent, before she added, "It's not true."

Shaking his head, Ison said, "She's been wanting to say that for weeks and now she has."

Continuing, Miss Kiger said, "He saw me in a film I had done. He was looking for someone who looked sweet and innocent, but still had some sex appeal. So he signed me." Pausing, she added, "It's been downhill ever since."

Ison added, "It was either her or Katherine Hepburn, and she was cheaper."

The film is Miss Kiger's seventh. She has appeared on numerous television shows, including "Starsky and Hutch," "CHIPS" and the "Redd Foxx Show," as well as being in the films "Galaxina," "Hots" and "Earth Trip."

Prior to acting, Miss Kiger worked for Playboy magazine for three years and was a centerfold subject.

"I did publicity for them for three years," Miss Kiger said. "The editor wanted me to do a film for a friend of his and that's how I got into films."

Ison, who co-created the Barbara Mandrell TV series, wanted in "Night Screams" to "go back to the old Alfred Hitchcock movies. What's scary and sexy is what you don't see."

It didn't work out that way.

"It does have elements of Hitchcock — it does have a plot. It has a 120-piece orchestra and the last 20 minutes I would put it up against any other picture for excitment. I didn't want to use a lot of blood and guts, but all the professionals told me we had to add it to sell it."

The movie was filmed out of Earl Owensby's studio at Shelby, N.C. It is the second movie Ison has produced there; the first was "Carnauba." His co-producer is Ernest Bouskos.

Of the location, Miss Kiger said, "There's nothing to do in Carolina but eat. We sat around for two months and ate."

The actual filming took much less time, but Ison said he believes in long rehearsal times, especially when he uses unknowns.

Miss Kiger said, "We arrived and four weeks later we were rehearsed to death." She then agreed that it had been necessary training.

Just before the two left, Ison said, on a more serious note, "I like to work with new talent. I have fun watching others' dreams come true. Pygmalion's my favorite film."

BOSTON — At 54, she is still beautiful.

She looks at you with those big, liquid brown eyes, her long artificial lashes touching her cheeks. She judges you. And she gives you a rare glimpse of her intelligence and sensitivity.

She is Gina Lollobrigida. And although she looks 34, she no longer likes to be regarded as a sex symbol.

"I never felt like a sex symbol," she says. "I had other needs in life. I painted. I did photography. It is now my greatest love."

Air Force Band of West to play at Chap Center

The United States Air Force Band of the West will perform at 2:30 p.m. June 6 at Chaparral Center. The public is invited to attend the free concert, which is sponsored by The Midland Reporter-Telegram and Midland College.

The concert will feature Aaron Copeland's "El Salon Mexico" and "Festive Overture" by Dmitri Shostakovich.

The most versatile group from the United States Band of the West, the Symphonic Wind Ensemble is a highly talented organization with a special role in representing the United States Air Force. The Wind Ensemble performs throughout the Southwest United States, presenting a wide range of music from established band literature to selections from the Broadway stage.

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble has received acclaim for its numerous performances in the Republic of Mexico. It also has made regular appearances at the Southwest's largest festivals and celebrations, including San Antonio's Fiesta, the Fiesta de Amisted and the Texas State Fair. The group also has performed for the Texas Bandmasters' Association Convention.

This is this group's first tour since performing for Vice President George Bush last year in Lubbock.

Under the leadership of Capt. Alan L. Bonner, the Wind Ensemble has greatly expanded both its performance schedule and its reputation.

Bonner's musical background includes a bachelor of music degree from Oklahoma University and a master of music degree from the University of South Florida at Tampa.

Prior to entering the Air Force, Bonner was first trumpet with the Oklahoma University Symphony Orchestra, appearing throughout the U.S. with the Oklahoma University Band. He also performed with the University of South Florida Wind Ensemble and the Gulf Coast Symphony at Tampa.

Bonner's career in the Air Force began as principal trumpet player with the United States Air Force Academy Band in Colorado. As an Air Force bandleader, he has commanded bands in Illinois, Folrida, New Jersey and California and directed tours throughout the U.S., Puerto Rico, Canada, Greenland and the Azores of Portugal.

He assumed command of the Air Force Band of the West in July of 1981. His responsibilities include the management of the four Air Force bands that fall within the command.

Tickets may be secured by going by Chaparral Center, or by writing Chaparral Center, 3600 N. Garfield St., Midland, Texas, 79701.

Requests for tickets are limited to four tickets per letter. Those writing in need to include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. All seats are general admission.

Daniels fans show up anyway

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Charlie Daniels

ODESSA — In spite of a tornado sighting in the Midland-Odessa area and heavy street flooding in Odessa, approximately 2,500 Charlie Daniels fans spent Friday night at Ector County Coliseum.

These fans weren't even discouraged when the coliseum's water was cut off. Most of those who knew accepted the inconvenience good naturedly. Many didn't even know. The water went off just before Daniels went on.

Performing many of his old songs as well as selections off his newest album, "Windows," Daniels made a hit with the crowd. The numbers he sang included blues selections as well as the Daniels form of country rock.

Circling the stage behind the band was a larger-than-life sized screen. During his singing of "Still in Saigon," one of the few songs Daniels has recorded that he didn't write, mountain scenery was projected onto the screen, providing an effective backdrop for the selection.

Some wonder about what they consider to be the divergent attitudes expressed in the songs "Still in Saigon" and "In America," written and recorded by Daniels. "In America" was written during the hostage crisis in Iran which began in 1979.

Daniels has said on that subject, "As far as me recording a patriotic song like 'In America' and then coming back and doing 'Still in Saigon,' all I can say is that I think 'Still in Saigon' is a patriotic song."

Of writing "In America," Daniels has said, "I wrote that song about a feeling. I talk to a lot of people, not just politicians or big businessmen, but carpenters and plumbers and truck drivers and college students and just rank-and-file U.S. citizens. And that's the feeling I got about this country when I wrote the song. I wrote it about something that these people talk to me about, something that was very important to them. I felt a uniting of people that I had not felt since the second World War in this country.

"I've been accused of writing a pro-war song and I've been accused of all kinds of things, but all I was trying to say was that I'm proud of being an American and I think this is a great country."

Daniels and the Charlie Daniels Band started their 1982 "Windows" tour April 9. The tour, which includes 75 stops, concludes Labor Day at Durham, N.H. Next the group will tour Europe, and possibly Australia, New Zealand and Mexico City.

Martin seems to be finding himself in 'Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid'

Dead men don't wear plaid. Why that is is anyone's guess since we never find out in Steve Martin's latest film, but it doesn't really matter. What does matter is that Martin finally seems to be finding his stride in the Aspen Society production, "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid," directed by Carl Reiner and written by Martin, Reiner and George Gipe.

After an uneven start in the comedy, "The Jerk" (another Martin-Reiner film), Martin took on his first dramatic role in "Pennies From Heaven," and now in "Dead Men..." goes for something of a blend. He plays private investigator Rigby Reardon, a 1940s protege of Phillip Marlowe.

In "Dead Men..." Reardon is hired by Juliet Forrest (Rachel Ward) to check into the death of her father, a renowned scientist and cheesemaker. During the search for Dr. Forrest, Reardon uncovers a fiendish plot by Nazi Field Marshall Von Kluck (Carl Reiner) to take over the world using the scientist's cheese mold formula as an instrument of blackmail.

This wild and crazy plot gets special treatment throughout with film clips of past great movies and movie greats facing off against Martin. Some convincing doubles were used to fill in during transition scenes and "Dead Men..." is expertly edited by Bud Molin to make the clips from these classic films for the most part match Martin's action. He appears to be in virtually the same film as his celluloid co-stars, among them Humphrey Bogart, Lana Turner and Burt Lancaster.

Shot in black and white to convey the quality and atmosphere of this film noir period, "Dead Men..." manages to pull off the gimmick, making it integral to the plot and the action.

Also working to authenticate the look and feel of the golden age of private eyes is Edith Head, designing costumes in this, her last film. As a parting effort, Miss Head gives us the classy predecessor of Steve Martin's famous white suit — this time with heavily padded shoulders, full-cuffed trousers and a wide art deco tie. But Miss Ward's costumes look like they are straight off the rack — the wrong rack. Little design detail has gone into the shapeless creations and this is especially evident when followed by scenes of Ava Gardner in "The Killers," and by Ingrid Bergman in "Notorius," both dressed to kill.

Miss Ward, in her second major feature film (she co-starred with Burt Reynolds in "Sharky's Machine") plays it straight to Martin's wise-cracking detective and she does it well. Indeed, she will be long remembered for her personalized survival training technique when she extracts a bullet from Reardon's arm.

Martin, who often shocks by going for the lowest common denominator in humor, is just a few strides off his comic pace in "Dead Men..." When he licks a piece of a dollar bill and puts it on his nose, you wonder where he is headed with the gag — the answer is nowhere. But when he makes a cup of his famous "java" for his jittery co-stars, you will laugh in spite of yourself at the oldest bit in the comic repertoire. That all the punch lines do not connect for a laugh will in the end be overlooked for the ones that do — more than making up for the discrepancy.

"Dead Men..." at its best is outrageous, nervy and endearing. At its worst, the film is too long — sometimes taking side trips into the film past — just because. Seeing Veronica Lake again in "The Glass Key" is a treat, but that scene and several others only pad the already complicated story line.

Rated PG, "Dead Men..." is packed full of suggestive material and jokes, and sometimes even the suggestion has been taken out.

But it is Martin who takes an opportunity at the end of the film to spoof the current trend in nudity in films by suggesting that a sequel to "Dead Men..." will appear in theatres this summer, complete with a nude scene of Miss Ward.

Midland tops nation in personal income gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Midland had the largest percentage increase in personal income in 1981 of any urban area in the country, according to Commerce Department figures released Saturday.

Last year, Midlanders' personal income rose 23.3 percent from 1980.

The Commerce Department said in releasing the figures that they indicate bigger overall personal income gains for city dwellers than rural residents — the first time that's happened since 1976 — but that recession took a lot of both groups' gains away.

Personal income rose 12.1 percent to a per capita average of $10,153 in the nation's 305 urban areas — known as standard metropolitan statistical areas or SMSA's — compared with just 8.7 percent, or $7,556 per capita, in non-urban counties, the Commerce Department said.

Gains had been greater for both categories in 1979 — 12.8 percent for city dwellers and 13.8 percent for rural Americans.

Inflation, as figured by a government index based on personal consumption spending, rose 10.2 percent in 1980, the report said. So many Americans, especially in rural areas, apparently saw their income gains more than eaten up by higher prices.

The short but steep 1980 recession apparently was the main reason that income gains were smaller that year, both in cities and in rural areas.

Implying that recessions hit rural areas harder, the report noted that, of the three times since 1969 that income growth in cities has outpaced growth in rural areas, "both 1974 and 1980 were periods of national recession." City dwellers also had greater income gains than rural Americans in 1976.

Often, when a regional manufacturing plant or big agriculture-related business goes bankrupt in a rural area, there are few alternative jobs for employees thrown out of work, and total income can be quickly affected. Good jobs can be tough to find in cities during recessions, too, but the overall effect sometimes is less evident.

"The national decline in farm income contributed to, but was not solely responsible for, the 1980 smaller increase in non-SMSA counties," the report said.

It said all but one of the 10 urban areas with the biggest percentage increases in personal income were clustered around the Gulf of Mexico.

Midland did well in mining and manufacturing during 1980, as did No. 2, Lafayette, La.; No. 4, Odessa, Texas; No. 8, Houston; and No. 10, Victoria, Texas, which had a 17.7 percent income gain.

Showing strength in trade, services, finance and real estate were the Florida urban areas of West Palm Beach-Boca Raton, No. 5; Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood, 6; Fort Meyers-Cape Coral, 7; and Melbourne-Titusville-Cocoa, 9.

Being deaf doesn't stop Jody

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

A whistle blows indicating a break in play. But while everyone else has stopped, one youngster keeps running toward the ball.

It is the most embarrasing part of a soccer game for 14-year-old Jody Dunn.

You see, Jody is deaf.

But his handicap, and the sometimes embarrasing moments it creates, hasn't dampened his enthusiasm for sports, or life.

Jody came to Midland from Pyungtaek, South Korea where he lived in an orphanage for three years. He was found abandoned in a train station in Soule when he was three years old and was taken to the missionary orphanage. It was there he learned to play his favorite sport, soccer.

Jody now plays with the Roughnecks in the Midland Soccer Association.

THE DUNN family had no particular inclination to adopt a deaf child. "Jody is what got us involved with deafness," Melvin Dunn said.

Since neither of the Dunn's knew any sign language before adopting Jody, communication was somewhat crude.

"We gestured and pantomimed a great deal for the first few months," Mr. Dunn said.

And when Jody first began to play organized soccer, the only way he could learn was through observation. Now however his mother and father attend his games snd they assist in translating what the coach wants Jody to know.

"There were a lot of problems at first with positioning and the offsides rule," Mr. Dunn said. "Offsides is tough for any youngster to understand and it was especially hard to explain it to Jody."

Not all of his mistakes are as easy to explain. Like most atheletes Jody sometimes suffers from an overly healthy ego.

As Mr. Dunn explains, "Sometimes he hogs the ball, but that has nothing to do with his deafness."

AS WITH all of Jody's learning it is not his mental capabilities that are in question. It is instead a problem of communication. "Jody can learn anything if it can be translated to him," Mr. Dunn said.

His school work may be an indication of that statement.

Jody, a sixth grader, is a straight A student and his father will proudly tell you of his son's "very developed talent for art."

Jody divides his school day between Fannin and Washington and in his 'regular' classes he has an interpreter.

Jody plans to attend Gallaudet University in Washington, D.C. It is the only university in the United States that caters exclusively to the deaf.

The school's entrance requirements are rigid and only the top 10 percent are accepted. Neither Jody nor his parents have any doubts he'll make it.

Roughneck Jody Dunn doesn't let his handicap keep him from playing the sport he loves.

SINCE COMING to America Jody has aquired a taste for football.

"Someday he wants to play for the Dallas Cowboys," Mr. Dunn said.

This coming season Jody will probably begin his first year in organized football.

Jody is 5-1, 98 pounds and Mr. Dunn doesn't think Jody realizes what football is all about. "He watches football a lot on television but I don't think he comprehends just how big those guys are." he said.

Because observation is Jody's prime mode of learning television has a large influence on him.

"I've seen him do things on the playing field that he couldn't have learned anywhere else," Mr. Dunn said.

As an example, know one ever taught Jody to pass the ball back to the goalie, but all of a sudden he did it, and Mr. Dunn knew where he got the idea.

JODY'S PRESENCE in the Dunn family has had some small, sometimes hard to recognize effects.

"Our youngest son, Scotty, began to 'sign' befor he learned to talk," Mr. Dunn said.

But for the most part Jody's handicap goes unoticed. It took Mrs. Dunn a few days to realize the mistake she inadvertingly made when filling out an application for summer camp. She had left a blank after the question, "Are there any limitations we should be aware of?"

Jody has been saving some of his money for a trip to Korea following high school graduation. He has a standing invitation from Neville Muir, a Missionary, to visit the orphanage where he spent some of his early years.

Some of Jody's goals are more immediate. For one, he would like a light connected to the doorbell to indicate when someone is at the door.

Cubs break .500 with double victory

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Cubs held a baseball celebration at Cubs Stadium Saturday night with a doubleheader sweep over the Tulsa Drillers. Not only did they get to play a baseball game for the first time since last Monday, but they climbed above the .500 mark for the first time this year.

The Cubs just must be foul weather players. They have to be or they don't play at all. High gusty winds put the first game on hold for 25 minutes in the fifth inning, but even that was better than the three straight rainouts they had suffered prior to Saturday night.

At least they were playing baseball and doing it very well, thank you. There were a lot of positives to consider while climbing to 19-18 for the season with 5-2 and 10-0 victories behind route going performances by Doug Welenc (5-3) and Mike King (2-4).

Going the distance is rare enough for the Cubs, but this was a rare night all around as the stinging wind came in from the east for a change, a pitchers rarely see that. King got the shutout on a nifty five hitter and Welenc was marred for only two runs in the third inning of the first game. In all, the two moundsmen gave up only two runs in 14 frames of action and you just don't get much better than that at Cubs Stadium.

And while the Midland hurlers were having a field day, the Cubs bats were exploding despite the long layoff against the beleaguered Tulsa pitching staff, which has been shackled by the lack of good starting pitching. They didn't get much help in relief either on this night.

Joe Carter ripped two singles and a homerun to drive in three of the Cubs' five runs in the first game and added two more RBIs in the second game for a bangup night at the plate.

Jim Gideon (0-4) took the opening game loss, but reliever Brad Mengwasser did little to help his cause as he gave up back-to-back singles to Carter and Carmelo Martinez with two outs in the fifth after coming in for Gideon, who was trailing 3-2 at the time.

The Cubs jumped to a 4-0 lead over Tulsa starter Al Lachowicz (3-4) with Dave Owen's double bringing home two in the fourth. But the Cubs got six more in the sixth against Tulsa reliever Kevin Richards after two errors by shortstop Mike Jirschele's two errors seemed to open the flood gates.

Carlos Lezcano greeted Richards to the game by giving the Marlboro Man in left field a belly ache. Jirschele then committed two errors and the Cubs responded with four straight hits to put the game in orbit.

King worked out of jams in four of the seven innings he worked, putting two men on in each of the second, third, sixth and seventh innings. But King did have the Tulsa batters hitting into the ground and that helped save his shutout.

Welenc, who got married in Tulsa last week when the Cubs were playing the Drillers there, didn't seem to suffer from the honeymoonless blues with his effort. He struckout seven and walked only two. Welenc gave up seven hits, three coming in the third when Tulsa scored on a single by Dave Stockstill and a sacrifice fly by Tracy Cowger.

Game three of the series will start at 6 p.m. tonight. The Cubs will face the Drillers through Tuesday and Wednesday they will begin a seven-game set with the Arkansas Travelers, a series that will feature two more doubleheaders.

Arguello admits confusion in WBC lightweight fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Alexis Arguello admitted he was confused Saturday by the southpaw style of challenger Andrew Ganigan.

But the World Boxing Council lightweight champion solved the puzzle quickly by knocking out Ganigan in the fifth round of their scheduled 15-round fight.

"I never saw that kind of style before," said Arguello, a veteran of 79 professional fights and one of only six men to win championships in three different weight divisions.

Arguello was knocked to the canvas by a Ganigan left hook in the first round, but came back to knock down the challenger in the third round and send him sprawling one second before the bell in the fifth round.

The challenger lay prone on the canvas for several minutes after referee Carlos Padilla completed the 10-count.

"I woke up in good condition with my mind in the right place," Arguello said of the first-round knockdown. "That time I was really positive that he hit hard."

After the knockdown, Arguello, a notoriously slow starter, said he was forced to alter his strategy.

"The left hand is the key," he said. "My left hand made the job tonight."

Ganigan said he was wary of Arguello's power going into the fight.

"I knew he had a good left hook and a good right hand," said Ganigan. "The thing was to hit him first but I guess he hit me first."

Ganigan, 135, kept Arguello, 134¾, off balance with his southpaw style in the first round and late in the round rushed in and caught the champion with a left hook that knocked him down.

But Arguello quickly got up, took the mandatory eight count and was able to finish the round.

In the third round, Arguello unleashed a right lead that put down Ganigan. He took the eight count, but Arguello hurt him again with a right that bounced the challenger off the ropes.

Arguello received $400,000 for the title defense, while Ganigan earned $130,000.

Nelson holds three-shot lead in Atlanta Golf Classic

ATLANTA (AP) — Larry Nelson made a late surge and birdied three of the last six holes to take w 3-shot lead with a 68 in the rain-delayed third round of the $300,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic Saturday.

Nelson, the reigning PGA king, had started the day with a 1-shot lead, but managed only to birdie the par-5 second hole, until he scored another at the par-3 13th.

He then reeled off consecutive birdies at Nos.16 and 17 to carry a 15-under-par 201 total into Sunday's final round over the 7,007-yard, par-72 Atlanta Country Club course.

Keith Fergus, who had shared the first-round lead with Nelson, Peter Jacobsen and Ray Floyd made the strongest runs at the leader.

Fergus fired a 66 and Jacobsen a 67, leaving the pair in a tie for second place at 204.

Floyd, who has been struggling all year, moved into contention with a brilliant 8-under-par 64 that left him with a 205 total.

The tournament, plagued by weather delays each day, was stopped for 2 hours, 15 minutes Saturday dufing a thundershower.

Roger Maltbie and Wayne Levi trailed Floyd after each shot 69 for 206 totals.

Tom Watson, the defending champion, had a 69-207 that left him tied with Lee Elder, 68, and Gibby Gilbert, who fashioned his third consecutive 69.

Scott Hoch, who started the day one shot off the pace, skied to 74-208 and was tied with Tommy Valentine, who had a 68.

Celtics trying to avoid thoughts of past postseason comebacks against Sixers

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics were trying to avoid thoughts of their past success at postseason comebacks against Philadelphia as they prepared to meet the 76ers in Game 7 of their playoff series Sunday.

The Celtics defeated the 76ers 88-75 at Philadelphia Friday night to tie their best-of-7 National Basketball Association playoff series 3-3.

A victory by the Celtics at Boston Garden Sunday would climax a comeback from a 3-1 series deficit, a feat they also accomplished against the 76ers last year and in 1968, each time in the Eastern Conference finals. The two previous comebacks by the Celtics from 3-1 deficits are among only four in NBA playoff history.

"The only thing important now is the seventh game," Boston Coach Bill Fitch said. "Nobody will remember Game 1 or 3 or 6."

"What happened in the past is history," Boston center Robert Parish said. "The only thing that matters is Sunday."

"The 76ers are capable of winning Sunday," Celtics forward Larry Bird added. "Each team has shown it can win away from home."

Bird and Parish, who each scored 14 points and combined for 30 rebounds Friday, led a Celtics defense that held Philadelphia to a record-low 27 points in the second half after Boston trailed by as many as 15 points in the first quarter.

The previous low was 28 points by the Los Angeles Lakers at Milwaukee on April 7, 1954.

The 76ers hit only seven of 34 shots in the second half and 35 percent for the game. Andrew Toney, who scored 39 and 30 points in two of Philadelphia's three victories in the series, was 1-for-11 from the field and scored three points.

"Defense will be the key again Sunday," Bird said. "If we play the same defense in Boston that we did in Philadelphia, we'll be in shape."

The Celtics did not get their first lead in Friday's game until midway through the fourth quarter, but they never lost it again. Twelve consecutive points late in the game, seven of them by Kevin McHale, sealed the outcome.

"When we got ahead in the fourth quarter, they looked shellshocked," Boston's Cedric Maxwell said. "It's not over, but if the 76ers said what they really feel inside, they would say they had lost a golden opportunity to end the series at home."

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said he was "tired of hearing about last year. We're down now ... but we'll be ready on Sunday. I'll guarantee it."

"I think the pressure is still on them because they're the defending world champions and they are expected to win it again," 76ers forward Bobby Jones said. "We just have to stay loose and not worry about it. This team is not going to give up. I think we will go out there not being afraid to lose, but expecting to win."

Awaiting Sunday's winner are the Los Angeles Lakers, who won the Western Conference playoffs by sweeping both the Phoenix Suns and San Antonio Spurs in four games each.

Girls teams fight hard for crowns

The three girls teams competing in the Championship Soccer Games Saturday went into overtime before a winner was decided and, in one case, beyond overtime into a shootout.

The Bombers, coached by George Logan, and Vikings were tied 2-2 at the end of regulation play in the Under 8 Girls game and, with one minute remaining in overtime, Amy Cromwell gave her team a 3-2 victory by booting in the winning goal. Teammate Hyla Hester also added a tally.

In the Under 12 Girls league, Courtney Broughton and Amy Farha each scored for Sharon McIntyre's Blue Bombers in overtime to give their team a 4-2 victory. K.K. Shelton and Hollen Johnson also added scores for the Bombers.

Neither the Blue Lightnings or the Red Raiders were able to score a goal in regulation play in the Under 12 Girls league, and the score was still 0-0 after the overtime period forcing a shootout to determine a winner. Blue Lightning's won the sudden death, outkicking Red Raiders 3-2. Mandy Thorpe, Michelle Sanchez and Michelle Malaise each scored for the winners in the shootout.

In other championship action, Duane Garmeson's Golden Eagles shutout the Purple Sting Rays 2-0 to claim the Under 6 Boys & Girls title. Andy Jones and Scotty Chote each scored.

Joe McIntyre's Blue Strikers were also shutout winners as Mike Melzer came through for two goals, one from an assist by Jason Schultz while Schultz and Kevin Hebert added one each.

In Under 14 Boys, Ken Fleeger's Destroyers outlasted the Vikings 2-1 for the win. Jason Hawkins and Bryan Wurster scored the Destroyers' goals.

Two more games are scheduled to be played today, ending the Spring Soccer Season.

Mets' Stearns scores winner in 12th

HOUSTON (AP) — New York catcher John Stearns raced home with the winning run on a bunt by pitcher Neil Allen in the 12th inning to give the Mets a 6-5 victory over the Houston Astros Saturday night.

The Mets had blown a four-run lead in the ninth when Allen, 1-2, loaded the bases and yielded a grand slam homer to Astros right fielder Terry Puhl.

Stearns walked with on out in the 12th, stole second and went to third on a fly to center by Hubie Brooks. Stearns then scored the winning run when Allen bunted down the third base line. Pitcher Randy Moffitt, 0-3, flipped the ball to catcher Alan Ashby, but Ashby lost the ball in a collision with Stearns.

Cubs get good pitching enroute to 2-1 victory

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Right-hander Allen Ripley and two relievers silenced San Francisco on four hits, and Steve Henderson belted a two-run single to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 2-1 victory over the Giants Saturday.

Ripley, 2-0, was impressive in his second start of the season for the Cubs, spacing three Giants hits over his seven innings. After blanking Houston for six innings in his only other start, Ripley held the Giants to a single run in the fifth inning, getting relief help from Lee Smith and Willie Hernandez.

The Cubs broke a scoreless tie in the fifth after Larry Bowa singled with one out and moved to third on Ryne Sandberg's single. Sandberg stole second, and Henderson scored both runners with a ground single to right for a 2-0 lead against Atlee Hammaker, 2-2.

Bird wins first game with Pawtucket, 7-5

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (AP) — Mark "The Bird" Fidrych, still talking to the ball between pitches as he did when he was a star pitcher six years ago, made his debut with the Pawtucket Red Sox Saturday night as the club defeated the Toledo Mud Hens 7-5.

In 1976, Fidrych was the biggest attraction of the major leagues as a rookie pitcher for the Detroit Tigers.

Saturday night, he pitched 5⅔ innings, giving up five hits and three runs, all of them earned. He threw 77 pitches, one of them a wild pitch, and struck out one and walked three.

He retired the side in order in the second and fourth innings and was pulled for reliever Jon Verhoeven with two outs and no one on in the sixth. Manager Joe Morgan was booed for taking out Fidrych, who, by contrast, was given a standing ovation by the crowd.

Back in 1976 Fidrych drew crowds of 45,000 people to Tiger Stadium. A year later, the talented pitcher was sent to the minors with arm and knee problems.

Saturday night, it was a different stadium for the man who once was famous, not just for his pitching form, but for his on-the-field antics.

An overflow crowd of 9,000 in Pawtucket's McCoy Stadium came to see the 27-year-old right-hander who now belongs to the Boston Red Sox Triple A club. Any other game between Pawtucket and Toledo might have attracted half as many people.

The Bird still talks to the ball between pitches, just as he did six years ago. He still gets down on his knees to tidy up the pitcher's mound, and even though he said he would have liked to have given a better performance in his nearly six innings, he said he was satisfied.

Phillies end losing streak, 5-2

ATLANTA (AP) — Pete Rose drilled a two-run double to cap a fifth-inning rally that powered Philadelphia past the Atlanta Braves 5-2 Saturday, snapping a four-game Phillies losing streak.

Rose's double, highlighting a three-run uprising, came off loser Larry McWilliams, 2-2, and scored pitcher Mike Krukow, 4-2, who had singled and Bob Dernier, who doubled. Rose then came home on a single by Bo Diaz.

After a thunderstorm delayed the start of the game for 40 minutes, the Braves took a 1-0 first inning lead on an RBI single by Claudell Washington.

Atlanta missed an opportunity to score more runs in the inning. Brett Butler and Glenn Hubbard had walked before Washington's hit. Butler scored on Washington's hit, but Hubbard was thrown out at the plate by Dernier when he tried to score on Dale Murphy's single to right.

The Braves, who had won three straight, had another runner thrown out at home in the next inning when Gary Matthews nailed Rafael Ramirez trying to score from second on Butler's single.

The Phillies went ahead 2-1 in the second inning when Diaz singled and Garry Maddox doubled. Diaz scored on Manny Trillo's grounder and Maddox came home on a wild pitch by McWilliams.

Rangers win in 12 innings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Pinch-hitter Randy Bass drilled a sacrifice fly to trigger a two-run rally and lift the Texas Rangers and knuckleballer Charlie Hough to a 3-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals in 12 innings Saturday night.

Bass's game-winning fly off reliever Dan Wuisenberry, 1-2, came with the bases loaded and scored Leon Roberts, who had opened the inning with a single.

George Wright then followed with a single for his fourth hit of the game to drive in Mario Mendoza from second base. Mendoza had reached on a fielder's choice and gone to second when John Grubb singled to load the bases for Bass.

Hough evened his record at 3-3 scattering six hits over 12 innings, striking out five and walking two.

George Wright opened the Texas sixth with a double for his third hit of the game. Mike Richardt's bunt single moved him to third and he came home on Buddy Bell's sacrifice fly to give Texas a 1-0 lead.

Kansas City tied the score in the bottom of the inning. Frank White led off with a single, snapping a string of 14 consecutive batters retired by Charlie Hough. White moved to third on a sacrifice by Onix Concepcion and an infield single by Willie Wilson before coming home on George Brett's RBI grounder to first.

Texas third base coach Wayne Terwilliger was ejected from the game in the fourth after contesting umpire Durwood Merrill's foul call on a hit down the third base line by Leon Roberts.

Morris, Tobik pace Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — Jack Morris pitched five no-hit innings and teamed with Dave Tobik on a two-hitter to pace the Detroit Tigers to a 5-1 victory over the California Angels Saturday.

Lance Parrish provided the offensive spark with a two-run triple as the Tigers won for the ninth time in their past 10 games. Detroit had an eight-game winning streak snapped Friday, losing the series opener to California, 7-9.

Morris, 6-3, allowed only one baserunner, on a second-inning walk to Reggie Jackson, until shortstop Tim Foli homered for the first time this year on the first pitch of the sixth inning. Foli also had California's other hit, an eighth-inning single off Tobik.

Morris was replaced at the start of the eighth inning by Tobik. Morris had complained of a stiff shoulder.

The Tigers took a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Tom Brookens grounded into a fielder's choice, scoring Larry Herndon.

Enos Cabell's RBI single in the seventh made it 5-1.

Red Sox post 7-4 victory over A's

BOSTON (AP) — Dave Stapleton punched a run-scoring single to right field to snap 4-4 tie, and Boston rapped three doubles in the eighth inning Saturday to beat the Oakland A's 7-4.

The victory was Boston's fourth straight, and the loss was Oakland's fifth in a row.

Stapleton's one-out hit followed a double by Carl Yastrzemski, who left for pinch runner Reid Nichols after legging out double to right field. Rich Gedman followed with a double that scored Stapleton, and one out later, a double by Rick Miller scored Gedman.

The tie-breaking hit came off A's starter Bo McLaughlin, 0-2. Bob Stanley, 4-1, pitched the final 81-3 innings, giving up three hits, walking two, and striking out three in relief of Bob Ojeda.

Oakland jumped on Ojeda for three runs in the first. Rickey Henderson led off with a single and stole second and third, giving him 41 swipes in 42 games this season. He scored on a single by Cliff Johnson, and Joe Rudi followed with a walk.

Johnson and Rudi advanced when a groundout, and both runners scored on a double by Mike Heath, chasing Ojeda.

Boston went ahead with four runs in the second. Gedman started the inning with a single. He went to second and Glenn Hoffman was safe at first when first baseman Jeff Newman threw wildly to second. Miller's single loaded the bases.

Second baseman Davey Lopes then fielded Jerry Remy's grounder, but shortstop Fred Stanley dropped the throw on the attempted force out, allowing Gedman to score. Dwight Evans walked to drive in another run, Jim Rice's single tied the game, and Yastrzemski's doubleplay grounder sent home Remy with the lead run.

The A's tied the game 4-4 on Heath's double.

Orioles record third consecutive shutout

TORONTO (AP) — Dennis Martinez pitched the Orioles' third consecutive shutout, and John Lownstein homered for the second day in a row Saturday to lead Baltimore to its fourth straight victory, a 6-0 triumph over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Lowenstein drove in three runs, two with his ninth homer of the season and another with a sacrifice fly, backing the six-hit pitching of Martinez, 4-3. The shutout extended to 33 the number of consecutive scoreless innings thrown by Orioles pitchers. Martinez struck out six and walked two.

Lowenstein, who hit a solo homer Friday, gave Baltimore a 3-0 lead in the first inning when he lofted an opposite-field, wind-aided fly ball into the left field seats. Rick Dempsey hit his second homer of the year in the Orioles fourth.

The Orioles scored all their runs in the first with two out against loser Dave Stieb, 2-5. Al Bumbry opened with a single and advanced to second on a grounder. One out later, Ken Singleton scored Bumbry on a single, and Lowenstein followed with his homer.

Lowenstein drove in his third run in the third inning. Jim Dwyer led off with a single to left and advanced to third on Singleton's bloop double. Lowenstein made it 4-0 with a sacrifice fly.

White Sox post 7-3 victory over Indians

CHICAGO (AP) — Harold Baines drove in three runs with a home run and a single and Tony Bernazard and Greg Luzinski had three hits each Saturday night to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 7-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The triumph was the sixth straight and 14th in the last 17 games for the romping White Sox.

Bernazard tripled, Luzinski doubled, and Baines singled as each drove in a run in a four-run first inning, and Bernazard singled in another run in the fourth.

Baines smashed his second homer after Luzinski had singled in the fifth inning off loser John Denny, 2-5, as the Indians tumbled to their fourth straight defeat.

Steve Trout, 4-3, was the winner but couldn't get through the sixth inning.

Cleveland scored a run in the second on a walk to Andre Thornton and singles by Alan Bannister and Bill Nahorodny. The Indians added another in the third on singles by Miguel Dilone, Mike Hargrove, and Thornton.

Trout was bailed out of a bases-loaded jam in the sixth by Ernesto Escagrega, who then needed help from Jerry Koosman in the seventh when Cleveland scored a run on a single by Toby Harrah, a double by Thornton, and an infield single by Bannister. Koosman finished the game to earn his third save of the season.

Maler's slam paces Mariners to 7-1 win

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rookie Jim Maler slugged a grand slam homer to cap a seven-run rally with two out in the third inning, and Gene Nelson tossed a four-hitter to give the Seattle Mariners a 7-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday.

Nelson, 2-6, walked four and struck out two in the first complete game of his career, helping Seattle break a three-game losing streak and handing the Brewers their eighth defeat in 12 games.

Bud Bulling began the Mariners big inning with an infield single, and Paul Serna bunted for a hit with two out against loser Randy Lerch, 3-4. Al Cowens was hit by a pitch, and Gary Gray singled home two runs.

Todd Cruz followed with an RBI single, and Dave Henderson reached base when shortstop Robin Yount fumbled his grounder for an error to reload the bases, making the next four runs unearned. Maler lined Lerch's first pitch to him into the left field bleachers for his fourth homer of the year and first career grand slam.

Yanks blank Twins

NEW YORK (AP) — New York's Dave Righetti, showing the form that earned him American League rookie of the year honors last season, shackled Minnesota on four hits in eight innings Saturday night as the Yankees blanked the Twins 1-0.

Righetti, who had a 5.26 earned-run average and 2-3 record in seven prior starts, struck out eight and walked four before leaving with a man on first and nobody out in the ninth.

Goose Gossage came on at this point and gave up a double to Dave Engle, who had three of the Twins' five hits, to put men on second and third. But the Yankees' relief ace left the runners stranded by striking out two batters and getting another on an infield popup.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

From time to time bargin hunting and fishing trips come about when a sportsman enjoys getting people together to participate with him in his favorite outdoor sport. For the sportsman who has always wanted to enjoy some exotic hunting or fishing trip but couldn't justify the expense, these various group-rate trips are the answer.

If your looking for a bargain on some bass fishing and whitewing dove hunting, check with the Hacienda Alta Vista in Harlingen. They cater to the sportsman and owner Dial Dunkin is always promoting his Lake Guerrero Resort with special bass and/or whitewing trips. I've visted Alta Vista numerous times and found it a pleasure. The fishing is good and the price is better. You can call Alta Vista at (512)423-2234.

Andy Aderson, Outdoor Editor of the Dallas Morning News, has rigged up a trip to Alaska for some of the world's best spinning and flyfishing for artic char, grayling, siklver salmon, and dolly varden. This trip will leave Sept.9 and is scheduled to return the 18th. Exact cost has not yet been determined but Anderson mentioned it would be a bargain.

Anderson has also scheduled a trip for Tarpon fishing in Costa Rica in Februrary. If you're interested in either of these trips you can contact Andy at (817)429-1024. You better hurry as Anderson puts together some fine trips and reservations go fast.

I will be taking some billfisherman to Mazatlan for two days of sailfishing in June. We will depart San Antomio June 16, and return on the 20th. Two days of the trip are scheduled of fishing while the third is set aside for sightseeing, shopping or relaxing on the sunny beaches. If your interested give me a call at (512)655-6601.

YOU CAN organize your own trip if you can't find one going where you want. Most airlines, travel agents, tour operators, hotels and the like will greatly reduce their prices for a tour group.

Golfing promoters

By REX WORRELL
Hogan Golf Pro

One of the goals of the Professional Golfers Association and most people who play golf is to promote the game to others.

Not only is golf the game of a lifetime, but it can be played by all members of the family, at almost any age.

With this aim in mind, The Parks and Recreation Department and Hogan Park Golf Course is sponsoring a series of instruction classes for beginning golfers. The series begins Monday, June 7 and continues through Friday, June 11. Golfers between the ages of 12 and 17 meet at 9 a.m. and those over 18 meet at 10:30 a.m.

The following week, the staff at Hogan Park will conduct a series of golf instruction either as a follow-up to the previous week's lessons, or for additional beginners. Classes will be held Monday, June 14 through Friday, June 18. Twelve and 13-year-olds will meet at 9 a.m.; 14 and 15-year-olds at 10 a.m. and 16 and 17-year-olds at 11 a.m.

The Hogan Park Men's Golf Association Memorial Day Tournament, a three-day, two-man low-ball event, is scheduled for May 29, 30 and 31. If you have not signed up in the pro shop, you need to hurry. Deadline is Wednesday, May 26 at 6 p.m.

We would again like to remind players of our new policy concerning weekend afternoon play. Anyone not having reservations for a weekend can get one by coming to the pro shop no earlier than 2:30 p.m. that weekend day. Reservations open at 3:30 and are on a first-come, first-serve basis. All green fees and carts must be paid for at the time the reservation is made.

PEOPLE ACTUALLY THINK A NEW CAR SHOULD LAST LONGER. WHO EVER GAVE THEM THAT IDEA?

For most people, those happy, carefree days when you could trade cars every two or three years may be gone forever.

Spiralling car prices and the high cost of money have caused consumers to expect more from their new cars than they've ever expected before. They expect them to be durable and well-built. Above all, they expect them to last.

Which explains why more and more people have been turning to Volvo.

Volvos are famous for lasting a long time in Sweden. And recent findings show they do well in the U.S., too. Volvo's life expectancy is 1/3 longer than the average life expectancy of all other cars on the road.*

Even more important, Volvo's combination of performance and comfort features make it the kind of car you'll want to keep for a long time.

So if economic realities are causing you to expect more from a car these days, come to Volvo.

We've always expected a lot from a car. VOLVO A car you can believe in.

*Analysis conducted by Ken Warwick & Associates, Inc. Based on a comparison of U.S. registration data for Volvo and for the automobile industry as a whole and not by individual make. Summary available at your Volvo dealer.

Once in a blue moon.

It's not often a car like the 1982 Honda Prelude Sport Coupe comes along.

A sleek, responsive automobile designed for uncomplicated sportive handling and fuel-efficient fun.

Equipped with front-wheel drive, 4-wheel independent suspension, a 5-speed transmission and rack and pinion steering.

And a car to be enjoyed for many moons. Both because of the attention to quality engineering that goes into all our cars, and the Prelude's standard power-operated moonroof.

The moon and stars come standard as well.

Anita Blackford thinks etiquette is as important today as ever.

And that's just one of the things she teaches in her Ms. A's Finishing School at San Miguel Square.

"A teacher of fifth grade students asked me to give a talk to her students on how to eat properly," said Anita. "It sounds funny to teach something as basic as that, but our eating habits have changed drastically over the years.

"Few families are able to sit at the table together everyday and eat their meals. Kids are now eating out of a paper bag, or in front of a television set."

She said that many parents just don't have the time to show their children how to set a table or which fork with which to eat salad or dessert.

"But this lack of training is evident when they go to a job interview, take a client to lunch or eat at the country club," said Anita. "Then they're embarrassed and uncomfortable because they don't know proper etiquette."

She explained that etiquette is more than that, however.

"It's knowing how to act in certain situations, how to talk and make others comfortable," she said.

Anita has been interested in helping others improve themselves for years, having been in the fashion retail business and a teacher at Midland College.

"I've been in the retail business for 12 years," she said. With her degree in home economics and business, she began as a buyer for J.C. Penney's and then went to Skibell's as area supervisor.

"In that time, I began teaching fashion merchandising at Midland College, and I enjoyed helping others to improve themselves then. I also taught management. I liked teaching both of those classes, but it wasn't the answer for which I was looking."

She discovered that there was only one self-improvement class being taught at Midland College, and it was principally a modeling course. "But every time the class was offered, it was full," she said.

Then, she had the opportunity to open her fashion store at San Miguel. The idea of opening a finishing school evolved from that and from her interest in self-improvement. Plus, she felt there was a need here and she wanted to meet that need.

Her scope in the area of self-improvement is wide, and her curriculum shows it. "We gear our self-improvement in different ways, depending on the individual needs of the students," she said. "For example, people 30 or 50 years of age have different wants than those in the 16-19 age group. But in all of them, we teach basic techniques.

She offers exercise classes, color key (in areas of fashion and makeup), modeling, and general self-improvement, among others.

Her students also range in age from six years to 60.

"Several people graduating from high school and college have come to us for help because they were going to be interviewed for scholarships, or for jobs. Their bearing and appearance will matter—it may make a difference between getting or losing that job or scholarship," she said.

Anita said that she and her staff are constantly evaluating and re-evaluating the school so that it can better meet the needs of Midlanders.

Dressing for a business image is popular now, and she often speaks to groups and businesses on how to package themselves, and how to look and be more professional.

She also discusses budgeting and wardrobe building.

She teaches to classes or individuals on the color key system, including analyzation of colors in fashion and makeup.

She also teaches private modeling and dance modeling, and, even more, prepares many for the big business of beauty pageants.

"We are not teaching anyone to be professional models," she explained. "We try and teach our students the basics. From there, we suggest that they go to a larger city and get experience. We are not acting as an agency and we do not get jobs for our students, though we can make recommendations."

In just one year, she has had 200 graduates of the school, not including those enrolled in the exercise classes or involved in her private consultations.

"I love teaching," said Anita. "Now I have the best of both worlds. I am still in retail—it's my first love—but I love self-improvement, too."

She explained what she considers the true rewards of her work.

"When the girls come up to me and tell me they got a job as a result of improvement in my classes, it makes me feel great," she said.

"One of the students told me that she wanted to take her class simply to improve her looks. She said that she didn't feel that she looked bad, but she had looked the same for the past 15 years.

Anita added that the woman recently returned to tell her that she had received a compliment from her husband. "He had told her she looked great.

"And that's what it's all about."

She said that many fathers sign up their teenage daughters. "One man who lives out of town is sending his daughter to our class one night a week," said Anita. "He told me that she has terrible posture, won't stand up straight, never washes her hair and wears nothing but jeans. He and his wife are concerned about her and feel the classes might help. It is worth it to him."

She encourages all of her students to express their individuality, both in what they wear and how they act. "I tell them to have fun with their clothes. I encourage them to pick clothes so that they can have both a variety and enjoy themselves. This is just one way to express personality."

She does prepare girls for beauty pageants, despite the controversy surrounding them.

"However, I think that, despite all the complaints about them, beauty pageants instill a lot of confidence in a girl and it's a good way to learn to compete. I think that boys, in growing up, just naturally learn to compete. But young women haven't yet learned to compete."

Anita said that several of her clients had entered beauty pageants and won. "We teach poise and posture, dress sense, hair care, skin care, makeup application, exercise and social etiquette."

The body pays a high price for a bad habit!

There are myths about the use of tobacco and there are facts.

While commercialized aspects of tobacco associates it with a more masculine or feminine look of symbolic stature, the truth about tobacco is that the body pays a high price for a bad habit.

Many studies have indicated that one cigarette reduces the life of a habitual smoker by ten (10) minutes. That is an alarming fact!

Every time a person smokes a cigarette, his thinking process slows down, his teeth become more discolored, irritation of the gums and throat increases and the possibility of heart and circulation diseases become more prominent.

The potential of lung cancer is also increased, and fingernails become stained. With every cigarette, physical endurance and ability decreases.

The use of tobacco is the single most cause of death in the world today. Yet, it is extremely difficult for an individual to quit smoking.

This is where we can help!

Through the procedure of hypnosis, we have helped hundreds of people stop smoking. We can also help you.

DEAR ABBY
Woman calls it quits on her missing husband

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was married to John in the Catholic Church back in 1956. John disappeared in 1968. He took a ride one Sunday afternoon and never came back. Nobody knows what happened to him. The police looked for him, but after several years they gave up.

I never filed for divorce because I kept thinking that one day John might turn up. He never did and his family say they have no idea where he is. For all I know he may be dead, or married to someone else.

Is there any way I can get a divorce? Or do I need one after all this time? I'd like to start my life over as a single woman, but how can I if I'm still married? I'm tired of waiting. I don't think the pope would have waited this long. — HELP ME IN MISSOURI

DEAR HELP: Your parish priest can help you. In recent years the Catholic Church has become more liberal concerning annulments. I am advised that your marriage could be annulled with very little difficulty.

DEAR ABBY: I'm crazy about the U.P.S. man who delivers the mail to my office every day. He seems plenty interested in me but isn't making any moves. I have reason to believe that he thinks I am not available, but I am.

What do I say to a guy I see for only as long as it takes me to sign his clipboard? I want him to know that I am available and would like to get to know him better. — LUCY IN BUFFALO

DEAR LUCY: You need a pal in the office to help further your cause. You could conveniently just happen to be away from your desk the next time Mr. U.P.S. delivers the mail. Your "co-conspirator" could then say to him, "I think Lucy could be interested in you; would you like me to arrange it?"

DEAR ABBY: "Loves Love, Not Sex" and her husband have a communication gap. I used to feel the same way she does and hated every time my husband wanted to have sexual relations. (Notice, I did not say "make love," because it wasn't LOVE.)

My husband was an unkempt, selfish boor who disregarded his partner's feelings as well as the basic rules of personal hygiene. I talked to him, I bought him underwear, soap, deodorants, but to no avail. Gradually, I was so repulsed, I became frigid and gave up. When I could no longer stand the smell, I divorced him.

Now I'm married to a man who "makes love" instead of just relieving himself.

Tell "Loves Love" if she really loves her husband she will tell him what she likes and what she doesn't like. And if he loves her he will change his habits and try to please her. And if he doesn't, she had better change husbands. — MAKING LOVE AT 52

DEAR MAKING: It's amazing how many readers (men as well as women) write to complain about their spouses' total disregard for hygiene. And as for lovemaking, the getting is always in the giving.

Hems a sign of the times

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — "Sign of the Times: Hemlines Have Dropped."

If designers were journalists, the above would have been one of the headlines during the fall showings here. Everybody from Adri to Zoran would have told their readers that these are somber times calling for serious clothes instead of the playful frippery of the miniskirt. The journalists of style also would have reported that Bermudas, harem and short-cropped pants are much too frivolous as well. After all, who has money to burn on such trendy togs?

So, to fit the times, designers have lowered hemlines. And while a few skirts still stop above the knee, the overwhelming majority hit well below — even descending as far as midcalf.

"Longer skirts are certainly the newest and most directional thing going," observed Adri. "People want to feel they're getting some substance for their money, though the style itself may be hard to understand at first," she continued. "Once the eye adjusts to the longer look, it will be accepted."

Mary McFadden is another designer who believes that longer is better. In a presentation with an eerie witchcraft theme — complete with black-hooded models clutching pentacle medallions — McFadden conjured up realistic separates with mostly below-the-knee skirts. The slimmed-down silhouettes came in silk and wool in rose, gray, mustard and black and white. For evening, McFadden supplemented her perennial favorite — the pleated dress — with slinky and sensuous styles in black lace and velvet.

Designer Tracy Mills also showed styles that land below the knee. Out of 79 garments, 70 were knee-length or longer. Mills' most exciting numbers were a black gabardine straight dress topped with a wool and mohair bouclet cape, a black wool crepe chemise with a trumpet skirt, and, for evening, a gold-crocheted, one-shoulder top over an ankle-length black velvet skirt.

Although Mary Ann Restivo drew upon a variety of lengths, she emphasized styles that either grazes the knee or the calf. Her straight-skirted suits in mannish glen plaid and birdseye check were some of the more sophisticated in the showings. For a more feminine feeling, her long, draped velvet dresses with boat necks and batwing sleeves were among the best.

McFadden, Mills and Restivo weren't alone in going to longer lengths. Other examples were Oscar de la Renta's tailored suits, jersey dresses and evening frocks, Geoffrey Beene's lace, wool and tweed fullswing skirts, Giorgio Saint' Angelo's wool tapestry dresses, Ralph Lauren's patchwork-quilt skirts and Harris' tweed suits, Calvin Klein's suits, shifts and evening dresses, Perry Ellis' suits, knit dresses and after-5 costumes and Anne Klein's straight, wrap and pleated skirts in wool and leather.

Shamask covered the knees with panel dresses, Bill Blass did likewise with windowpane check suits and hip-sashed long evening dresses and Albert Capraro met the challenge with everything from plaid suits for day to ribbon chiffon dresses for night.

Donald Pliner was the only designer who didn't make short shrift of the mini in his enthusiastically-received first major New York showing. Opening his show with four tight and thigh-high leather skirts, he closed with full-skirted and printed silk dresses that fell just above the knee. But consider his frame of reference: Pliner is from Beverly Hills, where minis would certainly go over better than maxis.

It's not so hard to finish those knit hems

Copley News Service

Have you ever wondered how the manufacturers manage to make those teeny-tiny hems you find on full skirts and dresses made of soft knit?

Well, I don't know how they do it, but I know how we can do it. It's easier than you think.

After marking for hem, trim hem allowance to only ⅝-inch wide. Turn under ½ inch and machine stitch barely ⅛ inch from fold. Trim close to stitching.

Turn stitched edge to inside. Stitch again. And that's it. It makes a very neat, and very tiny hem — perfect for bias cut, full skirts, for sheers and for ruffled edges.

Here is yet another way of finishing the raw edge on your hem allowance.

Cut ½ inch wide lengths of featherweight fusible interfacing. Fuse the interfacing strips to the wrong side of the hem allowance close to raw edge. You can leave as is for hemming, or go ahead and overcast for a professional hem.

This method works especially well on those fabrics that don't like to be overcast because they "wad up" under the stitching.

Cutting the strips is not fun, so do several at one time. Use ruler and pencil to mark cutting lines on interfacing. Cut, then wrap around an empty bias tape card. They will be ready when you are.

Fusible interfacings have been a boon to home sewing, but there are still those who have a bit of trouble with it. If you buy quality interfacing and if you apply it properly, you should not have any trouble.

Place fabric wrong side up on ironing board. Place interfacing "sticky" side down over fabric; adjust, but do not stretch either piece to fit the other. Place press cloth over area. Lower iron on work, steam. Do not move iron back and forth. Lift iron, move to next position, steam. Pay special attention to edges.

After fusing from wrong side, turn fabric over, cover with press cloth and fuse from right side.

Cognacs differ with age

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States now imports more cognac from France than does any other country, reports Jean Marie Beulque, spokesman for the Bureau National du Cognac.

All cognacs are a blend of brandies of different years, from the Cognac region. Unlike wine, cognac does not age or change once it is bottled, he points out. All aging takes place in oak barrels beforehand.

The way to judge the age of the contents is to understand the system of labeling, says Beulque, who offers this explanation:

— Three stars means that the average aging period of the cognac is five to nine years.

— V.O., V.S.O.P. (abbreviations of the English words "Very Old" and "Very Superior Old Pale") mean that the average age of the cognac used in the blend is from 12 to 20 years.

— V.V.S.O.P. and X.O. are terms applied to cognacs that contain a high percentage of cognac that has aged 20, 30, 40 or more years.

The older the cognac, the more expensive it is likely to be, Beulque says, adding that although cognac, like wine, is made from grapes, the brandy is a concentration of characteristics and thus the alcoholic content is approximately three times that of wine.

Some flowering bulbs require special care

Copley News Service

A common post-spring complaint from disappointed backyard gardeners arises from the poor performance of their bulb flowers, with tulips seeming to pose the greatest difficulties.

Fat, healthy bulbs planted in the fall give a magnificent display the first spring, only to diminish markedly in splendor next season. Hyacinths often tend to disappoint in the same way.

The reason the flowers disappoint gardeners in the seasons following that first splendid one is that tulip bulbs are multipliers. They soon begin multiplying into more, smaller bulbs, which produce fewer, smaller flowers.

The way to combat the problem is to dig the tulip bulbs once the foliage has dried up, and divide them. In the fall, the fattest can be placed in a display bed, the smaller ones planted in a nursery bed or in some out-of-the-way corner, grown, resorted and replanted until they too become flowering size.

The soil in which the bulbs are replanted should be deeply dug and enriched with compost and bone meal. The site should also receive at least partial sunlight.

There is another method which may suit your gardening practices better. This is what I tend to do with the bulbs in display beds that I want to replant with something else for the summer season.

I carefully lift the bulb with its foliage and some soil around the bulb, the flowers having been cut for use in arrangements previously. The bulbs are placed carefully in a tub or bucket so that no foliage is damaged.

These bulb plants then are carefully replanted in a corner of the garden where they can die down naturally. This new bulb site will have been deeply dug and enriched with any goodies available — compost, aquatic week, bone and blood meal. All this will help maintain normal growth and feeding of the bulb. Bulb plants lifted to mature at another site should be carefully replanted, kept fertilized and watered.

When they have died back, they can be lifted and stored in a cool, dark place. At planting time, the tulip bulbs can be sorted, with the plumpest ones going into a display bed, the smaller ones relegated to a fertile corner of the garden to grow and plump up eventually to flowering size.

Daffodils, where they are hardy, do not usually pose the same problem as tulips. They do multiply but not as quickly. Some daffodils bloom quite satisfactorily in fertile ground for up to eight years before they require dividing. Like so many other garden plants, the signal to divide is given by crowded foliage and few or small blooms.

When this occurs, the daffodil clumps should be lifted and divided once they have died back, and replanted in a new, well-prepared site. If your daffodils are not crowded but still are not blooming well, then either the bulbs are poor ones, the soil needs some amending or perhaps the site does not provide enough light. Daffodils will do in light shade, as under deciduous trees, but will not thrive in a darker site.

Now a word to those of you who have bulbs in pots that have been forced. These also should be kept watered so they can die back naturally. Replant these in the garden this fall, perhaps in a nursery bed or an odd corner, till you see what they will do. Make sure the spot contains fertile soil.

Higher secretary status

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New office technology will mean increased status and recognition for secretaries in the next decade, predicts Jack Nilles, a senior research associate at the University of Southern California's Center for Futures Research.

Besides relieving secretaries of many manual chores, the widespread use of computers will tend to blur the distinction between jobs in the office hierarchy, where the secretary has traditionally occupied a low place because the job includes such manual tasks, he says.

Building your own home still makes sense

By LOWELL PONTE
(Special from Reader's Digest)

For millions of Americans, the dream of owning a home seems to be slipping out of reach. In 1951, a young couple could buy a new tract home in Levittown, N.Y., for $8990, with only $100 down. And it was easy to get a fixed 30-year mortgage at five-percent interest. In 1981, however, the average price of a new home was $84,000; last fall's average interest rate on a new mortgage was around 18 percent.

Even if a couple could make the required 20-percent down payment of $16,800, they would still need to pay at least $12,096 each year in interest alone. Today, fewer than 5 people in 100 earn enough to qualify for a conventional home mortgage.

But a way to reclaim the home-ownership dream is beginning to emerge. This year, nearly 200,000 Americans will construct their own homes. Owner-builders are likely, in fact, to be responsible for almost one out of every five new homes.

"Maybe young couples can no longer afford to buy a ready-made house as their parents did," says 38-year-old building instructor Pat Hennin. "But they can still have a home. Like their pioneer ancestors, they can build it themselves — and at less than half the cost of a house built by developers."

Hennin and his wife, Patsy, completed a six-room home in Woolwich, Me., for less than $5000. In 1974, they founded the Shelter Institute in neighboring Bath to teach others how to build their own homes.

The first of more than two dozen such schools that have sprung up around the country, Shelter Institute gives intensive three-week classes at a cost of $375 for one person, $600 for a couple.

Students are taught how to choose a building site and design a house to fit it. They learn building-code rules and the rudiments of crafts such as woodworking, plumbing and electrical wiring. Part of the class time is spent at building sites, actually constructing homes. To date, say the Hennins, there are more than 6000 graduates who have acquired the know-how to put up a six-room home for roughly $15,000.

Robert Roskind, who with two friends founded a home-building school, Owner Builder Center, Inc., in Berkeley, Calif., estimates the cost of materials for owner-built homes at $17 to $30 per square foot — even in California, where contractors charge from $40 to $100 per square foot. A graduate of the center, he says, should be able to build his or her (a third of his students are women) 1500-square-foot home for as little as $25,500, plus cost of land and other site-development charges.

An astonishing 50 percent of owner-builders hammer every nail, lay every pipe, and wire every switch with their own hands. The rest contract for some parts of the task such as plumbing and wiring. But even those who just act as contractors and finish the insides of their homes can save from 30-45 percent of what a developer-built home would cost.

A do-it-yourself home builder can finish a house in about a year if he has time, self-discipline and determination. But most owner-builders are optimists and underestimate the time required.

"The beginner should plan to work 1-1/2 hours for every square foot in his floor plan," says Charles Wing, founder of the home-building school, Cornerstones Energy Group, Inc. in Brunswick, Me. By this rule of thumb, a modest 1500-square-foot house would require 2250 hours of labor.

Building from scratch is not for everybody. An alternative, requiring less work and time, is kit housing. More than 250 manufacturers in the country produce homes for $4000 to more than $100,000 that come precut or in prefabricated pieces.

Whether your dream home is modern or traditional, an A-frame or a New England saltbox, all these and more can now be bought in kits. And most kit homes can be put together with simple tools by people with no experience in house construction.

Precut-log-cabin kits, for example are intrinsically no more complicated to assemble than children's building blocks. In 1980, more than 70,000 such kits were sold at prices ranging from $4000 to $75,000, depending on size and quality.

But, before you purchase a kit home, be sure you know what the package includes and excludes. In the case of log-cabin kits, the finished home actually costs about three times more than the kit.

If you decide to build your own home, you should know that it can be a grueling and frustrating job — yet one that does work out for many people. Jack McLaughlin, who with his family built a three-bedroom, two-bath home in Clemson, S.C., says, "When you handle raw lumber, smell its resin and caress each knot, you participate in a craft that has evolved over centuries of building by millions of homemakers. You discover with every decision you make that you are really building — yourself."

Broadway is symbol of what New York is about

By BILL FREDDE
Special to Reporter-Telegram

NEW YORK CITY — Broadway: core of the Big Apple; the holy shrine of the worshippers of make-believe and dreams come true.

To me, Broadway is the symbol of what New York is all about — excitement, vitality, anticipation. Two, often three, times a year it draws me to the Big Apple to laugh, cry, applaud and sigh as I watch famous and soon-to-be famous performers sing, dance and act their way across the stages of the Great White Way.

The constantly buzzing theater life On, Off or Off-Off Braodway is what makes the dazzling diversity of New York homogenous with its perpetual carnival atmosphere.

Though the numbers do fluctuate as to the season, Manhattan usually boasts an average of 30 Broadway, 20 Off-Broadway and 10 Off-Off Broadway shows running simultaneously. There's probably no place in the world with more opportunities to experience all aspects of the theater than New York.

AND WITH SUCH shows as "Annie," "Barnum," "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," "Chorus Line," "Dancin'," "Evita," "42nd Street," "Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music," "The Pirates of Penzance," "The West Side Waltz," "Sugar Babies," "Woman of the Year" and newly opened "Special Occasions" lighting up Broadway, this may be the best time ever to savor the delights of New York theater.

This trip, I joined the thousands who've thronged to the famed Majestic Theater to applaud Gower Champion's last, and perhaps most inventive, creation, "42nd Street." The Tony Award Winner for Best Musical, 1981, it is a frisky, tapping musical wonder which has audiences applauding from first scene to final curtain. And I guarantee even the most hard-nosed critic will leave the theater fully satisfied and softly humming "Lullaby of Broadway."

What to see and how to get tickets may be the two biggest problems for the theater-goer who is visiting the Big Apple, especially for the first time. Prior to your trip, pick up a current copy of either The New Yorker, New York Cue or the Sunday New York Times for the latest and most complete Broadway theater listings.

Next I suggest you ask your travel agent to assist you in selecting one of the Broadway tour packages offered by many of New York's finest hotels. Most will include theater tickets, accommodations, some sightseeing and various extras.

But if your tour packages aren't your style and you prefer to obtain the show tickets yourself, there are a variety of options.

The most obvious is to order tickets in advance. For current sellout shows like "42nd Street," this may mean at least six months prior to your visit. For frequent sell-outs such as "Sugar Babies," "Chorus Line" and "Barnum," about three months in advance is adequate. Most Broadway theaters accept phone reservations with the use of a major credit card. The theater will usually ask that you pick up your tickets an hour before showtime, and this is very strictly enforced, so don't take a chance and lose a reservation you've had for months by being late.

CURRENT BORADWAY and Off-Broadway ticket prices for orchestra and first mezzanine seats (generally the best) range from $20 to $35 for a musical. The price difference between dramas and musicals is due to the higher cost of staging the latter and their usual ability to draw bigger houses.

If $35 seems like a lot of money and you don't absolutely have to see a certain show, then do what most New Yorkers (and an increasing number of tourists) do. Go to the "TKTS BOOTH." This city-supported project is run by the not-for-profit Theater Development Fund and is a clearing house for unsold theater tickets — at half price. Emblazoned with large, red "TKTS" letters, the main booth is located at 47th and Broadway on one of those little triangles that are called squares in New York-Duffy Square.

Each day, the participating theaters send over their unsold tickets for all seating areas to the "TKTS BOOTH," all tickets are sold at half-price plus a dollar service fee. The booth is open seven days a week and just prior to selling time, a list of the available shows is posted. For Wednesday and Saturday matinee tickets, the Duffy Square booth opens from noon to 2 p.m. and for evening shows at 3 p.m.

Also, tickets are just for that day only and no credit cards are accepted. Purchase must be made with cash or travelers checks.

If you want to be a little more ambitious, you can use the other "TKTS BOOTH" at 100 William St. but it's in the Wall Street area and a bit hard to find. This booth sells only evening tickets and they open at 11:30 a.m.

There are also scores of ticket agencies scattered throughout the city, there will probably be one in your hotel, that offer choice selections for the best shows. One advantage here is the opportunity to see exactly where you will be seated, as most have theater diagrams for this purpose.

NO MATTER HOW YOU buy your tickets, it's often confusing as to what seats to request, in what section. Since all the ticket sellers know the houses, the safest bet is to ask for "Best two..." or however many you need. Very often, what's left in the orchestra may not be as good as what's in the rear mezzanine. For "straight" plays and dramas, for example, almost all seats are good, as these shows play in the smaller theaters.

But, after traveling over 1,800 miles to the Big Apple, don't just limit your visit to its theatrical side.

I'll admit, especially, for first time visitors, the Big Apple can be an intimidating place. And just because there's now a lot of Stetsons bobbing up and down Fifth Avenue and rattlesnake skin boots high steppin' up Broadway, that doesn't make this Texas. Or that everytime you tell a native New Yorker that it's a "fer piece" from San Antonio to New York he'll think you're trying to sell him a coat made of Texas fur.

But New York is a terrific city when you get to know it a little, when you know where to go and what to do, and when you begin to get comfortable with it.

Oh, I know getting comfortable with a town that has more of anything than anywhere else isn't simple. But it can be done, and without too much effort.

THE MAIN THING to remember is that you can't do it all in one visit. It would take a lifetime to really see and do everything in the Big Apple. But, by selecting a hotel with a good location and budgeting your time wisely you can do enough to uncover the kaleidoscope pattern of the city in all its diversity.

A tourist who really wishes to bite into the Big Apple must stroll. That's the reason I selected to headquarter at the luxurious 21-story New York Statler. Immortalized by Glen Miller in the song, "Pennsylvania 6-5000," the hotel has enjoyed a long and glorious history and is undergoing a major renovation and refurbishing program. Located at 7th Avenue and 33rd Street it's within easy walking distance of the Empire State Building, Madison Square Garden, Macy's, Gimbels, Broadway and the stylish shops of Fifth Avenue.

I also prefer the Statler because I can enjoy some of New York's finest dining without leaving the hotel. The lobby level Penn Bar is open for luncheon, cocktails and hors d'oeuvres ad a popular gathering place for hotel guests and city residents. The Deli-Express, a moderately priced serve-yourself restaurant, is located on the lower lobby level of the Statler. Open from 6:30 a.m. until midnight, it specializes in bagels and lox, Danish pastries, delicious deli-style sandwiches, salads and beer and wine. The Statler's Haymarket Restaurant offers dining with a continental touch amidst a turn-of-the-century atmosphere.

New York has infinite sights to see, spots to shop and things to do — and some of her best offerings are those traditional touristy things such as: standing under the bright lights of Time Square and having your picture taken in front of the statue of Mr. Music, himself, George M. Cohan; watching the sight of Manhattan receding behind you from the deck of the Staten Island Ferry; cocktails at Maxwell's Plum; Wall Street's narrow financial canyons; bustling Chinatown and picturesque Little Italy; a carriage ride through Central Park; a nighttime view of the city Empire State Building Observatories; an after-theater snack at the Russian Tea Room or Sardi's; a symphony at Carnegie Hall or an opera at Lincoln Center; discovering Greenwich Village and SoHo; an evening of jazz at Eddie Condon's or Jimmy Ryan's; a drink at New York's most beloved bar, P.J. Clarke's, or her oldest bar, Costello's; dressing up and stepping out at the Stork Club, The Rainbow Room, the original Copacabana or the Cotton Club; watching the dazzling precision dancing of the Rockettes at the Radio Music Hall and of course, a boat to Liberty Island to see the grandest lady in the world, the Statue of Liberty.

New York is like no other city when shopping is your preferred activity. "If they don't have it in New York, it doesn't exist" is a popular Big Apple boast. And it's mostly true, when it comes to the sheer scope of marvelous merchandise available. It is the commercial center and fashion capital of the U.S. and styles and trends that originate in the Big Apple set the fashion pace for the rest of the nation.

Shopping is Fifth or Madison Avenues. F.A.O. Schwartz (58th and Fifth) is an exquisite toy store children of all ages should visit. Walk south on Fifth. From there, you can shop alongside the Rolls Royce set as they buy at Tiffany and Co., Richard-Ginori, Gucci and Saks.

ONE GREAT BARGAIN in this area is the Barnes & Noble bookstore at 48th and Fifth. New Yorkers flood in at lunchtime because they may have the best prices in the U.S.

And no visit to New York would be complete without at least purchasing one item from Bloomingdale's, Macy's, Lord & Taylor or Gimbels.

Visitors quickly learn Manhattan is one big Universal Eating Emporium. You can take a tour of the globe via the international cuisines of New York. You can choose to dine sumptuously at showplace restaurants famed far and wide, or go to plain cellar places in Chinatown for spicy Szechaun specialities at bare tables, at remarkably low prices. Or grab a delectible pastrami or corned beef sandwich at one of the Big Apple's famed delicatessans.

No one should miss dining at least once with all of New York laid at their feet. So splurge and enjoy dining with a view at the Rainbow Room, Top Of The Park or Top of the Six's.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. - Tex Beneke and Glenn Miller: Together they immortalized this town with a melody that very nearly became America's second national anthem during World War II.

If you were around in those desperate opening days of the war, you'll recall the song. Who could forget where they first heard it? London, perhaps with the buzz bombs falling. Somewhere in France, maybe, or off in the Pacific. Wherever it was, it caused soldiers and sailors and flyers to think of home. Never mind that they were from Jersey or the Carolinas or California. It was a song that aroused lonely men and women to remember the girls and boys back home and parents and the fleeting sweetness of their own youth.

Even today's kids are caught up by its catchy verse and melody.

Can you afford to board the Chattanooga choo-choo? I've got my fare and just a trifle to spare ....

WRITTEN BY HARRY Warren, recorded by Glenn Miller and sung by Tex Beneke, the song is a nostalgic reminder of a past that's gone, a simpler time when the world was a safer place. Yes, even with a war going on.

It's not just a made-up name. There really was a Chattanooga choo-choo, a small wood-burning steam locomotive that made its first run from Cincinnati in 1880. Operated by the Cincinnati Southern Railroads, it provided the first through passenger service to the South.

One of those stops was this Tennessee town where a newspaper reporter named it the Chattanooga Choo-Choo. Long afterward, Glenn Miller recorded the song and ever since then Chattanooga has drawn curious crowds.

You leave the Pennsylvania station 'bout a quarter to four, read a magazine and you're in Baltimore ....

Had it not been for the melody, it's doubtful that a group of local businessmen ever would have rescued Chattanooga's old railroad terminal, a monument of brick and mortar to America's pioneer past.

Built in 1909 at a cost of $1.5 million, it featured a grand dome rising 85 feet above the floor of the old waiting room. The design won an American student first prize in a competition at the Ecole de Beaux Arts in Paris. Chandeliers glowed overhead and travelers filed beneath an impressive 60-foot brick archway.

For 63 years the graceful terminal served passengers passing through the South. Puffs of steam rose from the old locomotive's stack as it ground to a stop and conductors would call out, "Chatt-an-ooga!"

GIs PASSED THROUGH the Tennessee town during the war and later, with the peace, the trains kept rolling right up until Aug. 11, 1970. That's when the last engine pulled away, its whistle announcing the end of a proud era.

The jet airplane had caught up with Chattanooga and the passenger train was dying. Southern Railway boarded up the terminal a year later and bids were sought for its demolition. This was when Allen Casey Jr. got his idea. Why not turn the old terminal and railroad yards into a family amusement park?

Casey went to the president of Southern Railway and told him, "I can save you $100,000."

"What are you talking about?" the railroad executive asked.

"Well," Casey said, "It's going to cost you that much to tear down the building. I'll take it over, let it stand, and it won't cost you a dime."

Southern Railway agreed and with 23 Chattanooga businessmen donating money for the purchase, Casey laid out his plans. First, he would build a conventional hotel under the Hilton banner — only there'd be several unconventional touches. One involved a string of Pullmans that Casey had converted into guest rooms for railroad buffs. Casey named his place the Choo-Choo Hilton, in no way do his Pullman cars represent the usual Hilton guest room.

WHEN YOU HEAR that whistle blowin' eight to the bar, then you know that Tennessee is not very far ...."

Besides the sleeper Pullmans and a shiny, jazzed-up steam locomotive, Casey's private little railroad consists of an old-fashioned trolley car he had hauled from a heap in New Orleans and whose conductor is a Jewish rabbi, David H. Steinberg, a railroad buff extraordinaire, who boards passengers for a breezy ride around the grounds.

In keeping with the romance of the Victorian era, gas lamps glow at night alongside the string of rail cars while a musical fountain with rainbow colors rises and falls in time with the melody.

There's gonna be a certain party at the station, satin and lace I used to call funnyface ....

Chattanooga remains a small Southern town (population 170,000) that makes sentimental fools of everyone who comes here. As evidence of the abiding interest in the legend of the Chattanooga Choo-Choo, ne of the quests of a Russian TV commentator was to visit the old railroad terminal. He remembered the song from the war.

Gila wilderness in New Mexico packed with splendor

By LANDT DENNIS
Copley News Service

SILVER CITY, N.M. — The setting was the Gila wilderness, over 200,000 acres of rugged mountainous landscape in southwestern New Mexico set aside by the government in 1926. The cast included Harley, Kayo, Mike, Lea and Janet. Their roles were that of packer, wrangler, hunter, cook and character — all interchangeable.

Extras were a dozen nimble-footed horses, eight infuriatingly stubborn mules and a half-dozen wide-eyed dudes — myself included. The plot was a week long pack trip into one of America's most primitive, spectacularly beautiful and least-known wilderness areas.

Our adventure began in Silver City, gateway to the Gila and a rough-at-the-edges mining town. Its reputation stems only in part from the gold and silver which continue to be unearthed here today. That Billy the Kid's first victim was a local man is the town's best-known fact. Whether Billy did it in defense of his mother's good name or while committing a theft in a chicken house remains unclear.

THAT HE COULD HAVE MADE a cleaner, faster getaway in the chartered plane our group boarded at the local airport is certain, however. We, too, needed to get out of Silver City fast.

"In 30 minutes we can fly where it would take us all day to drive," tour organizer Dave Wiggins hollered to us over the engines. We looked down from the aircraft on endless timbered mountain ranges and valleys, with Mexico visible far in the distance.

As the head of American Wilderness Ltd., headquartered in Boulder, Colo., Wiggins yearned for years to go backpacking in the Gila. The region's grandeur would appeal to the public, he knew, and its Sun Belt location would allow a May-to-October pack season. "There weren't any packers operating in the Gila, though," Dave said, as the plane put down on a meadow runway. "That is, until Harley and Lea started up."

Mother of two daughters, a former elected government official, Lea waited outside to drive us to the pack-trip starting point, an hour farther into the wild. Vivacious, slim, enthusiastic, she explained her role as co-partner in the operation: "Harley and I'd known one another for years. We both also knew the Gila well. One day we were talking and discovered that what we really wanted to do professionally was to be packers, right here. Before we knew it, Harley and I were partners — with 24 mules and horses, 30 saddles, 15 tents — and hundreds of thousands of acres of America to show the world."

A few days later, we clearly understood the reason early settlers had laid claim to the Gila. A former rodeo champ, Harley, with the looks of a Marlboro man and the charm of Gary Cooper, had snaked our pack train from the top of Loco Mountain down to the middle fork of the Gila River.

"Git along there, you lazy, no-good critters," wranglers yelled at the mules swaying from side to side with 70 pounds of equipment strapped to their sides. Way in the distance, male elks could be heard announcing their intentions. "Sounds like a flute, don't it?" one of the cowboys whispered. Later, we stopped for him to poke his hand inside a tree stump.

"We got a buddy system going 'round here," he said, pulling out a bottle of moonshine. "Anyone who knows these parts knows where to look for the liquor. We all got some hid somewhere."

FOR A WEEK WE explored the Gila, fishing and swimming in the streams; riding to its summits; falling asleep after lunch on a bed of pine needles. We spent one morning looking for the horses. They had been spooked by either a bear or a lion and had scattered. Other times, we broke camp to move on down the canyons. We passed through forests of aspens, through meadows full of deer and gazed in astonishment at towering, needlelike rock formations.

Each day, Harley and his wrangler sidekicks — Kayo, a hearty blend of Will Rogers and Gabby Hayes, and Mike, the bear hunter, a reincarnation of Jesse James, complete with drooping mustache, piercing eyes and a rakish weather-beaten hat — proved as competent on the trail as they are known to be roping a steer.

Lea and Jean demonstrated their skills equally well over a campfire — chicken fried steak, eggs over-easy, dutch-oven biscuits with gravy for breakfast and pork chops, fresh watercress salad, boiled new potatoes and green beans for dinner.

Also, there was the inevitable gallons of thickly brewed coffee which boiled on the fire from the moment we made camp. With our tents up, animals let loose with bells around their necks, firewood gathered and our faces and hands, sometimes even our bodies, scrubbed in the ice-cold streams, we would settle down each night to listen to mountain men spin yarns. Cloudless skies full of stars, wind in the ponderosas, the howl of a coyote, the atmosphere was perfect for hearing about Geronimo, a Gila legend.

"This is one of the Southwest's roughest terrains," Mike explained, stroking the ears of Cindy and Lilly, his two Walkers, a cross-breed of fox and bloodhound. The light from the fire danced in the eyes of man and dogs, all of whom frequently spend the winter in the Gila, trapping and hunting. "The U.S. Cavalry could never catch Geronimo. With his band of 100 Apaches, he would swoop down on a wagon train of supplies or a valley of settlers. He would kill everyone, take the guns and ammunition and disappear on the high peaks of the Mogollon Mountains, many more than 8,000 feet high. American troops could never corner him and his men."

"For eight years, more than 8,000 cavalry tried to capture Geronimo and couldn't," Harley joined in, passing a bottle of whiskey around. "Finally, the chief escaped over the border to Mexico where he decided to surrender to the more sympathetic American forces that were pursuing him than to the more hostile Mexicans."

Our own exit from the Gila proved equally dramatic. Passing through towering gorges of stratified red rocks, along riverbeds with boulders the size of Stonehenge, past Indian cliff dwellings which date back to the 13th century A.D., we rode out the last day under a sky churning with black clouds and shattered by lightning. Finally, when we reached the corral and unsaddled for the final time, the rain fell in torrents.

WE HAD COME TO EXPECT the dramatic in the Gila, so the background of ear-splitting thunder that accompanied our farewells continued the pattern. "Despite the terrain, the only misfortune we've ever had on a pack trip was when someone burned his finger on a roasted marshmallow," Lea laughed and said, waving goodbye. Fortunately for everyone, it was still raining. There was no point in wiping your eyes.

Travel Editor's Note: Silver City is a five-hour drive south of Albuquerque. There is also air service from Albuquerque once a day. For further information, write: American Wilderness Experience Ltd., P.O. Box 1486, Boulder, Colo. 80306.

Archaeological excavations unveiling Polynesian mysteries

Hearst Feature Service

Polynesia has fascinated the world imagination ever since Captain James Cook made his first Pacific voyage aboard Endeavour between 1768 and 1771. Yet until recently remarkably little was known about these seafaring people who had already settled all the major islands in a triangle of ocean twice the surface of the continental U.S., from New Zealand to Easter Island and north to Hawaii, by the time Charlemagne was crowned Holy Roman Emperor in A.D. 800.

Archaeological excavations are playing an increasingly vital part in unravelling the mysteries of Polynesian history, supplementing linguistic and botanical research. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the dramatic finds at Vaito'otia and Fa'ahia on the island of Huahine, 110 miles northwest of Tahiti, in the Society Islands of French Polynesia.

DISCOVERED ACCIDENTALLY in 1972 during construction of the Hotel Bali Hai Huahine, on a flat coastal plain about 300 yards inland, subsequent excavations revealed a village community dated by radiocarbon to between AD 780 and 1270. Its location was particularly well suited for marine exploitation, in a neighboring lagoon or the deep sea, and agriculture in an adjacent swampland where taro could be cultivated.

Described by the chief archaeologist, Dr. Yoshihiko Sinoto, of the Bernice P. Bishop Museum in Honolulu, as a "Polynesian Pompeii," the settement was destroyed by a massive tidal wave depositing coral sand and water thereby preserving organic substances such as vegetal material and wooden artifacts in the waterlogged ground.

The most spectacular artifacts recovered to date are parts of a large wooden canoe, the first evidence of canoe-building associated with a dated settlement anywhere in the Pacific. These finds include platform planks, spreaders (canoe braces), bailers, a large steering paddle, smaller paddles and a foreboom. They suggest, according to Dr. Sinoto, a large double-hulled canoe with a central platform, some 80 feet long, similar to the Tahitian "tipairua," known from sketches by John Webber, an artist aboard Resolution on Cook's third Pacific voyage between 1776 and 1780. A modern replica in plywood and fiberglass, the Hokule'a or "star of gladness," made the 2,500-mile journey in 1976 from Hawaii to Tahiti in 31 days using ancestral Polynesian navigational skills involving stars, trade wind, wave and land-bird flight patterns, to guide the 17-member crew.

UNFINISHED PARTS OF large canoes, and the presence of various stone and shell tools indicate that Huahine was a major canoe-building center in the ninth century. This traditional craft lasted close to a thousand years, long enough for Cook to learn that the people of Huahine, and nearby Raiatea, were reputed for building the best sea-going canoes in the Society Islands.

Structural remains from the Huahine settlement include rectangular wooden storage-houses on stone pillars, foundation posts, hearths, work areas, and a "marae" or ceremonial temple close-by.

Of special interest among the miscelaneous stone, shell and wooden artifacts from the site are basalt adzes, pearl-shell compounds shank fish-hooks and pendants, objects that have also been found in contemporary assemblages in the Marquesas Islands, and whalebone hand-clubs, similar to later Maori "patu" from New Zealand. The abundance of pearl-shell graters and scrapers, more than was needed locally, points to an export trade.

The preliminary picture that emerges from the Huahine excavations, to be continued next year, is of a small sentary community, living off land and sea. A sophisticated hierarchical social structure was necessary to provide a food surplus and support a class of craftsmen specialising in canoe-building and the manufacture of small trade goods.

CONNECTIONS WITH THE Marquesas Islands and New Zealand are reminders that Polynesia embraces a single culture spread widely across the Pacific, sharing common linguistic roots and material traditions. Polynesian origins are to be found in Southeast Asia, associated archaeologically with a particlar style of pottery, called "Lapita" after a new Caledonian site, recognised in contexts as early as 1,500 BC in Melanesia, and in Tonga and Samoa, via Fiji, by 1,000 BC. It reaches the Marquesas Islands in around AD 300. From these islands, considered an important dispersal center for the rest of eastern Polynesia, colonists were sent to the Society Islands, and by Ad 500 settlements are known from the major peripheral groups of islands, including Easter Island, Hawaii and New Zealand.

The "Drift theory," popularized by Thor Heyerdahl's Kon Tiki expedition, claiming that South American Indians colonized the Pacific Islands by allowing their boats to drift westward with the prevailing trade winds and currents is largely dismissed by linguistic, botanical, zoological and achaeological evidence. Linguistically, the Polynesian languages, from which at least 35 different cultures have been identified, belong to the great Austronesian family, recognized as far west as Madagascar in the Indian Ocean.

On their colonizing expeditions, the Polynesians brought with them numerous southeast Asian plants, as well as Asiatic jungle fowl, pigs, dogs and Polynesian rats, to stock the barren islands. A rare exception is the introduction of the sweet potato from South America, found on most Polynesian islands. Computer simulation have also ruled out the "drift theory."

A DOCUMENTARY FILM on the navigational genius of the Polynesians which includes segments from the Huahine excavations, is currently being made by Dr. Sanford Low, an anthropologist and producer of several programmes for "Odyssey" on national public television (PBS). The project, entitled "The Navigators," will relate what Dr. Low describes as "the story of the mental perfections of skills" by dealing with the origins and dispersal of Polynesian culture.

It was once thought that God had created Polynesians on their islands. Modern research, combining a variety of disciplines, has shown that Polynesian history is instead, as Dr. Low has pointed out, "a natural romance with the impact of human achievement."

Masada: Jewish past and future

Copley News Service

MASADA, Israel — "My loyal followers, long ago we resolved to serve neither the Romans nor anyone else but only God. ... Now the time has come to prove our determination by our deeds." — El'Azar's oration.

And so, nearly 2,000 years ago, 960 Jewish zealots chose mass suicide rather than surrender as slaves to a Roman army which had surrounded their mountain fortress, then breached their inner defenses from a 600-foot-long earthen and rock ramp which Jewish captives were forced to build.

Today, Masada is one of Israel's most important visitor attractions. It is a place where Jews go to understand their past and wonder about the future.

Israeli soldiers make the trek up the mountain the hard way, on foot, to rededicate themselves to the preservation of their tiny nation. "Masada shall not fall again," they chant.

Tourists, more than half a million annually, follow an easier path. They ride a cable car 1,000 feet, nearly to the rim, then trudge 60 feet up on steps. They reach the ruins of the fortress-castle built by King Herod of Judea in 73 A.D. and used by El'Azar Ben-Yair and his followers, in a last-ditch defense against 10,000 Roman soldiers below.

When the Romans breached Masada's defenses, 10 zealots were picked to slay all the rest, and one of the 10 to kill the other nine, then himself.

Elastic has many uses

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Elastic does a lot of jobs.

It holds up your pants, your skirt, your shorts and your undies. It nips in your waist, puffs your sleeves and holds up (if you're lucky) a strapless sundress.

So, what's the problem? Knowing how much elastic to cut.

Because there are so many strengths, widths, types and qualities of elastic, it is difficult to establish a rule-of-thumb for measuring. The best bet is to use the elastic itself to do the measuring.

Around your waist, wrist, arm or whatever, place a length of elastic. Tighten until it is comfortable. Mark. Cut elastic, adding at least ½ inch for overlap.

The width, strength, type and recovery ability of elastic will make a difference in how much you need to cut. Remember, too, that elastic measured around a a bare waist is going to be a bit tighter once put into a casing.

When feeding elastic through a casing, you will often run into trouble where there are seam allowances. The pin or bodkin you are using wants to hide under the seam allowance, rather than go on through. Before turning down the casing, machine stitch the seam allowances in place — no more problem!

Once you have the elastic through the casing, pin the ends together and try the garment on. Make any adjustments necessary. Now you are ready to stitch ends of elastic together.

Casings for elastic can be made from bias tape, Seams Great, lace seam binding, self fabric or nylon tricot. What you use for casing depends on the weight of your fabric and the width of the elastic. If the casing is going to be next to bare skin, you might want to use something other than the lace seam binding. It scratches just a bit.

Toys 'big business' despite inflation

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

Thoughts of sand castles and toasted marshmallows, rather than sugar plums, may be dancing through children's heads this time of year. But turn on the television or look at a newspaper and you'd think the Christmas toy-buying season already had arrived.

Warner Communication Inc.'s new Atari Pac-Man cartridge and Coleco Industries Inc.'s self-contained tabletop Pac-Man game have been advertised since March — two seasons and a good six months ahead of the traditional introduction of new toys.

LJN Industries' Inc. new Brooke Shields doll made its debut on regional and network TV in late April, and company spokesmen already are boasting that Brooke is a hot seller.

In fact, long before parents begin thinking about stocking-stuffers and filling Christmas wish-lists, business has been brisk at stores run by the nation's largest seller of toys — Toys "R" Us Inc.

The toy supermarket chain reported a 29 percent increase in sales for the first part of the year at stores that also were opened during the same period the year before. Considering the 19 new Toys "R" Us stores opened in the past year, sales were up 42 percent during the three months ended May 2.

Toys "R" Us is a success story of its own, its gains attributable to a creative, aggressive and colorful management team. But considered along with other toy sellers and toy makers, Toys "R" Us also is representative of changing dynamics within the toy industry.

Consider, there are more new toys than ever before being introduced early in the year on TV and in print advertisements.

There are more electronic parts to toys than ever before — even staid Monopoly by Parker Brothers has an electronic accessory this year.

And toy manufacturers are offering more toys to appeal to adults, who have been lured to toy stores in droves by popular, and expensive, electronic games.

A primary goal of the toy industry for years has been to spread sales over the full 12 months of the year instead of having them concentrated in the period just before Christmas. Some retailers do as much as 60 percent of their business in the final three months of the year, opening them up to great risk if, for instance, the economy should be weak during that quarter.

But the goal of all-year toy sales seemed unattainable until three things happened to the toy industry, spokesmen say. There was the introduction of electronics to toy-making, the subsequent growth of the adult market and the spread of such toy supermarkets as Toys "R" Us, which must advertise year-round to stay in business.

"The toy industry has long suffered with too many of its sales falling in the fourth quarter," said Douglas Thomson, president of the Toy Manufacturers of America Inc., the industry trade group. "This generates all kinds of problems in forecasting, inventories, cash flow and long-credit terms. There are some trends and activities that are helping us.

"Many of the manufacturers are attempting to get their new items out early in the year," Thomson said.

Said Monroe Greenstein, an analyst for Bear, Stearns Inc., who follows the retailing industry: "It will become more of a 12-month business, although statistics don't show it yet. People are not going to wait until Christmas for their Pac-Man. With the electronics, too, you get a much older market. Toys are just not for kids.

"Normally by 12, you're out of toys," Greenstein said. "But now you've got people, 20, 30 or 40 buying it (toys) for themselves."

There are no statistics to indicate how many adults actually are buying toys for themselves. But Toys "R" Us says sales of electronic products totaled 20 percent of its business in the first quarter, up from 10 percent a year earlier, and industry spokesmen say adults are their best customers for expensive electronic and video games.

So the industry is attempting to capitalize on its new adult market.

Besides a proliferation of brain-teasing puzzles modeled after the popular Rubik's Cube by Ideal Toy Corp., the toy makers are heavily promoting the nostalgia theme this year. And there's a strong emphasis on such old staples as Parker Brothers' Sorry and Risk board games that many adults knew well as children and word games such as Milton Bradley Co.'s Password.

Shirley Temple, the sweetheart of the 1950s, is being reintroduced by Ideal Toy Corp. as a collector item. Effanbee Doll Corp. has created the storybook Bobbsey Twins as well as reproductions of Mae West and John Wayne. And Revell Inc. has a new "History Makers" line of plastic models featuring the U.S.S. Olympia, a 1960 Corvette, a German V-2 missile, a self-propelled Howitzer and Apollo-Saturn V.

Says Revell salesman Frank Costello of his company's "History Makers" line, "A 50-year-old man comes in here and looks at this with tears in his eyes and says, 'I was torpedoed on that ship.'"

The growth of the adult market also has helped the toy industry survive during the past year of recession when many other industries have suffered.

The industry estimates that toy and game shipments rose by 18.5 percent to $5.4 billion last year, translating into more than $7 billion of business at the retail level. And Bernard Loomis, chairman of the Toy Manufacturers of America Inc., told the opening of the annual American Toy Fair in New York earlier this year that "the toy industry will have a pretty decent 1982."

Despite the catering to adults, toy manufacturers, however, haven't forgotten about kids — still their most important customers.

There's a continued emphasis on fantasy and adventure in new children's toys this year, much of it tied in to the still-popular "Star Wars" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" movies, and on back-to-basics, as evidenced by the reintroduction of military toys after a hiatus of several years.

G.I. Joe has been scaled down by Hasbro Industries Inc. to 3¾ inches and comes complete this year with his own support team of soldiers.

In addition, there has been a sharp increase in the number of licensed toys, such as the Brooke Shields doll, patterned after a popular celebrity or TV show. Industry spokesmen say perhaps as much as 50 percent of all the new toys introduced at the Toy Fair in New York this year were licensed.

Well-known characters such as Snoopy and Garfield are plastered on everything from drinking cups to toy jewelry. And there are dolls, games and various accessories and toys featuring Annie, the popular orphan and now movie star.

Toy store chain's owner becoming 'important force'

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

ROCHELLE PARK, N.J. (AP) — Charles Lazarus says it's simple to explain how he got into the toy business. Somebody walked into his juvenile furniture store back around 1948 and asked for a toy.

Since then, Lazarus, 58, as the brains behind the Toys "R" Us Inc. toy supermarket chain, has become one of the most important forces in the toy industry.

Analysts estimate, for example, that for every $10 spent on toys in the nation, about $1 is spent in a Toys "R" Us store, and the Toys "R" Us share is growing. Lazarus says his stores sold 150 million items last year.

Sales in the first quarter ended May 2 were $138.3 million, up 42 percent from the year-before period. And the company plans to add as many as 24 new stores this year to its 120-store chain, which is expanding into nearly every corner of the nation.

Some industry observers, in fact, say privately that Toys "R" Us has become so dominant in the industry that, besides dictating to manufacturers how toys are packaged so the merchandise can be stacked easily, they also dictate price.

"They have a lot of leverage, and you have to listen to them," says Douglas Thomson, president of the Toy Manufacturers of America Inc., the industry trade group.

Lazarus dates the concept of his toy supermarket — with toys and games stacked high to the ceiling like a grocery store — to 1955, when he opened his first large toy store in Washington, D.C. In 1966, with four stores open, Lazarus sold the operation to Interstate Stores for $7.5 million and stayed on as president of the toy operation. Lazarus remained after Interstate went bankrupt in 1974 and was forced to sell off many of its units. He managed to salvage the toy business, which by then had grown to 63 stores.

The reorganized company that emerged, with Lazarus as chief executive, was called Toys "R" Us.

Lazarus and industry analysts attribute the chain's rapid growth and healthy profit during the recent recession to several factors, particularly its wide selection, low prices and liberal return policy.

Toys "R" Us stores attempt to stock all popular, and sometimes even unpopular toys as well as juvenile furniture, personal computers, gym sets and even children's apparel.

It never runs a sale, but marks its merchandise regularly at 20 percent to 50 percent below list prices.

"We think sales are unethical," Lazarus says. "If you can afford to sell it at a low price and make money, why not sell it at that price every day? We don't say we're the cheapest. Somebody on a given day might sell it (a toy) cheaper, but not every day."

And, with no questions asked, Toys "R" Us accepts returned merchandise with or without receipts, damaged or untouched.

Children learn to cope with surgery

By BOB DVORCHAK
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — One was afraid to take a bath after surgery because he thought water would pour into his body through the incision. Another thought doctors would have to cut off her head to remove her tonsils.

Others dread bleeding to death during blood tests. Most are afraid to leave their parents.

A hospital can seem like a chamber of horrors to wide-eyed children thrust into an alien world of anesthesia, scary looking equipment and masked grown-ups wielding scalpels.

To ease the big fears of tiny tots, many pediatric hospitals are using trained specialists in a program called Child Life. The specialists look after the emotional needs of the youngsters, while doctors and nurses provide physical care.

"We can't take the hurt out of shots. But we can at least help the patients understand why people give shots," said Stephanie Stein, director of Child Life at Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh. It is one of 320 such programs around the nation.

"The purpose of Child Life is to help children adjust as positively as possible to the hospital," she said. "We are trying to minimize the stress of hospitalization and illness."

Health officials agree that emotional care helps children adjust better to a hospital.

"We can see from our program that the better prepared the child is, the more he accepts what's happening and the less apprehension he has," said Lillian Gerould-Nansteil, associate administrator and director of nursing services at Children's Hospital, a 242-bed pediatric center.

"We have some documentation that the child reacts better after surgery," she said. "If you tell the truth, kids can handle it. Kids are resilient. They're a lot more resilient than we give them credit for.

"We need to emphasize that we are particularly interested in taking care of the entire child," she said. "He's not a liver or a tonsil or an appendix. He's a human being with special needs. And we're most aware of how frightened he is."

In addition to helping youngsters cope with stress, Child Life helps them maintain as normal a life as possible and works for a normal growth development if they have a long stay in the hospital.

Is there 'type A personality?'

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was first told that I had high blood pressure when I was in college. I probably would have been told that same thing when I was in high school if I had ever gone to a doctor then. Today I still have high blood pressure for which I am being treated. Is there something about some people that makes them tense and therefore makes it more likely that they will get high blood pressure? — Tim, Macon, Ga.

Dear Tim: The idea of a type A personality — that is, the aggressive, competitive, hard-driving person — has been the subject of hundreds if not thousands of articles. Yet, according to Dr. Wendell M. Swenson, head of the section of clinical psychology at the Mayo Clinic, no real evidence of a hypertensive personality has every been uncovered.

In fact, says Dr. Swenson, people diagnosed as hypertensive appear to be closer to the normal than other medical patients as measured on the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory (a test that shows personality profiles).

It has been suggested that the more normal profiles are the result of hypertensive patients being more controlled and less likely to express their feelings on such a test.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I can't thank you enough for changing my life. Although I was only 10 pounds overweight, I yo-yoed, gaining — losing — and gaining back those 10 pounds hundreds of times over the past 10 years. After I saw you in Baltimore, and you gave me T3 medicine, I have never felt better. I have more energy, better skin and nails, and on your diet, I have lost and kept the 10 pounds off for over two years. What I would like to know is why my thyroid tests were always normal in the past. My doctor did several Thyroxine and PBI tests but was never able to find any thyroid problem. — Mrs. P.G., Dallas

Dear Mrs. P.G.: Your diagnosis was only made after I took a careful history, did a thorough physical examination, and if you recall, you had a list of blood and urine tests done. One blood test you had was a T3 which showed that you had a decreased amount of that particular thyroid hormone. This is rare, but it does occur. The tests you referred to as having been done previously would not show a deficiency in T3. That is why when your doctor took those tests in the past, they always came out normal. However, as you can see, that does not mean that you did not have a thyroid problem. I am glad that your treatment worked well. Continue with your success.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor says I should stop smoking if I want to keep from getting an ulcer, but that I can continue to take a drink now and then. Does that make any sense to you? — Lester, Burlington, Vt.

Dear Lester: Not everyone is in agreement on the exact causes or treatment of peptic ulcers, but your doctor's advice is in keeping with that of experts in the field.

Dr. I. Michael Samloff, professor of medicine at the University of California, Los Angeles, School of Medicine, says that risk factors for peptic ulcer include aspirin and cigarette smoking, but not alcohol, coffee or diet. Cigarette smokers have a higher incidence of both gastrice and duodenal ulcer, and a higher death rate from peptic ulcer. Moreover, their ulcers are less likely to heal.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Issues not as 'pure' as milk

By ED JAHN
Copley News Service

Milk usually stirs thoughts of well-being, human kindness, and balanced meals.

Lately, that food so common to all of us is brewing a maelstrom of health warnings, lawsuits, industry warfare and allegations of ignorance or pay-offs.

The issue is certified raw milk, the kind that comes straight from the cow and has no additives and is non-pasteurized.

Proponents claim raw milk, which costs about 50 cents more a gallon retail than pasteurized, aids digestion, can reduce cavities in adolescents, soothes arthritis and even tastes better than the pasteurized kind.

Health officials, though, say such diseases as diphtheria, typhoid fever, salmonella, brucellosis and spinal tuberculosis may become rampant if the drinking of raw milk becomes widespread.

"A renewed threat to public health," cautions the American Dietetic Association, labeling the problem a result of the current "so-called natural foods movement."

Recent outbreaks of salmonella and Campylobacter jejuni, a disease causing fever, headache and diarrhea, could spread "if this kind of misplaced enthusiasm for healthful foods continues on a nationwide scale," the association advised.

"I don't drink raw milk because there is a danger to it," says Dr. Donald Ramras, San Diego County health officer. "Some people are willing to take that risk. I'm not."

Ramras chooses his words carefully when it comes to raw milk. His associates on the state level are currently defendants in an $80 million lawsuit brought by Alta-Dena Dairy in the City of Industry, this state's major source of certified raw milk.

"There's just not much a health officer can do about this. We don't have jurisdiction over milk," Ramras said.

"I have to be awful careful about this," said Dr. James Chin, chief of the infectious disease section of the state Department of Health Services.

He is a principal defendant in the Alta-Dena lawsuit, he explains.

"Under the best situations, though, logic would say there is a possibility of fecal material getting into raw milk. There can be changes in the storage temperature, not especially the fault of the dairy, and organisms will grow," he said.

"There is ample documentation of salmonella problems. I don't know of an expert scientific group that would say the benefits of raw milk outweigh those of pasteurized."

Harold Stueve, a partner in Alta-Dena, thinks someone is "out to get" the growing raw milk business.

"Nobody ever got salmonella from raw milk," he contends. "The scare stuff you are hearing is from people who either have been paid off or are plain ignorant," he says.

And who is behind all this? "The big companies are working against the small producers. They have the market wrapped up and don't want to lose that," he asserted.

Norman Frazier, vice president of Frazier Farms, which markets raw milk, can't say enough good things about it.

"I've been drinking it for 10 years now and wouldn't think of giving it up. Remember milk when you were a kid? You might remember how good it tasted. Well, it still does. The flavor is better than pasteurized."

POSITIVE THINKING

Don't let 'little you' inhibit abilities

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Enrico Caruso on opening night at the opera startled everyone backstage. The great tenor, waiting in the wings for his entrance, suddenly rasped in loud whispers, "Get out of my way! Get out! Get out!" No one was in his way and stagehands and singers nearby got quite a scare. They thought he must be cracking up.

Then just as suddenly he was silent and composed. He made his entrance and sang his first aria with such beauty and power the audience stood, cheered and shouted, "Bravo! Bravo!"

Later Caruso explained his off-stage frenzied whispering: "I felt within the big me that wants to sing and knows it can, but it was being stifled by the little me that gets afraid and says I can't. I was simply ordering the little me out of my body." Caruso was at the time a young star on the rise, but it seems he never ceased to have spells of plaguing stage fright and self-doubt. His struggle with the little me continued even when he became one of the world's greatest operatic tenors.

Enrico Caruso had a tremendously dynamic and joyous personality on stage. I had the good fortune to hear him sing a time or two and was always spellbound by his "voice of gold" and by his vibrant aliveness. What stage presence — 200 people on stage but your attention centered on Caruso. His voice rose powerfully above all others.

Yet this extraordinary man said, "I never step on a stage without asking myself whether I will succeed in finishing the opera." Francis Robinson, a biographer, believes that much of Caruso's greatness lay in this very element of doubt and is his merciless demands on himself, his relentless self-appraisal. I think that figures.

We all have a big self, or best self. Also, a little self. The big self, seeking fulfillment, encounters interference by the little self. To be aware of this in yourself is to grasp an important secret of achievement and vitality. Rise to the challenge of overcoming the little self. Release your big self and you will be on your way.

Life is full of bright possibilities and golden opportunities. When your big self has the upper hand its magnetic power attracts more of these to you.

If this is not happening to you consider whether inferiority feelings, failure thoughts and negative thinking may not be repelling your opportunities. The little self appears in many guises! Perhaps a timid self holds you back. This is a common little self manifestation.

If you give in to the little self too long you can lull your mind to sleep so that you no longer hear the big self clamoring for release and achievement. There are many people in this sad state, and if you get them talking about themselves you are likely to find they are not realizing their objectives and desires. They are missing the boat. They know it and are miserable.

Well, no one has to stay frustrated. A person can break free from his little self. And just how? I believe such change comes in part with God's help — but you also have to do your part.

Some perceptive person once wrote: "There is an unseen battlefield in every human heart, where two opposing forces meet and where they seldom part." It is inherent in the scheme of things that we experience this incessant inner battle. What matters is which force, which self, triumphs.

Rufus Jones, Quaker educator and philosopher, pointed out that the word individual implies a being who resists being divided. When you throw yourself on the side of your big self and let it take over, you come alive, accomplish more, gain a sense of greater worth and live with joy. The effort which it takes really pays off in satisfaction.

Pest control chemicals best applied by reliable, licensed professional

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

With warm weather come the armies of pests that invade our yards and houses. Although more than 86,000 species of insects have been indentified in North America, making up approximately 85 percent of all living creatures on the continent, only about 1 percent can hurt you and damage or destroy your belongings. Don't classify anything as a pest unless it causes trouble.

The National Pest Control Association says the 10 most common household pests are cockroaches, mice, rats, termites, ants and carpenter ants, fleas, dog ticks, spiders and silverfish. Because each requires different tactics for eradication, many people hire exterminators to apply pest control treatments. According to Ed Scoggins of Hurt Exterminating, all businesses which use chemicals to control pests must be licensed by the Texas Structural Pest Control Board, therefore consumers should ask to see the license before deciding whom to hire.

In order to operate a pest control business in Texas, state law requires that at least one employee pass a test in one or more categories of pest control. The most common state licenses are issued for the pest control, termite, lawn and ornamental categories. Since the categories are listed on the license, a consumer can check to see if a business is qualified to perform his specific job. Other employees must obtain at least an applicator's license for which no test is required.

In addition, the business is required to paint the state license number on its truck and carry $30,000 worth of insurance for property or personal damage.

Scoggins warns that in the past a few individuals have solicited business door-to-door who were unlicensed and used chemicals that anyone can purchase in a retail store. To get the best possible satisfaction from your money follow these guidelines:

— Use only those businesses who are well-established in the community and can provide references. If a business is soliciting door-to-door and states you have a pest problem, especially termites, call another company for verification. Don't be rushed; even termite damage will not be significantly worse if you wait a week or two before authorizing treatment.

— Ask to see the certified applicator's license of the person who will be applying the chemicals and look for the State license number on the truck.

— A written warranty should be provided with each treatment. Read the warranty to find out what it covers, how long it lasts, what you must do to keep it in force, and what kind of continuing prevention control is necessary. Don't expect an application to last indefinitely, but do expect it to last a reasonable length of time.

— Since, in the past, exterminators have been known to apply the wrong treatment, apply a treatment that was not needed, or charge unreasonable prices, if a sizeable amount of money is involved, don't hesitate to get bids from several pest control companies. You may also want to obtain a written statement of the types of chemicals that will be used and their strength in case a question arises about the effectiveness of the treatment.

— If you feel the job was not done correctly and the business will not resolve the problem, call the Structural Pest Control Board at 512 454-3617. Usually an inspector will be sent to determine the nature of the problem and whether the job was correctly performed. He will then make a recommendation to the Board as to what action should be taken.

Scoggins states termites represent the biggest pest problem in this area. He recommends that before a house is built the soil be pretreated for termites. Signs of termite infestation in a house already constructed are mud tunnels built along obstructions that they cannot chew through and a soft wall where the paint is peeling away. For additional information on termites and other pests write for "Tips on Pest Control," BBB of the Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland 79701.

CDC rat control efforts continue

ATLANTA (AP) — Urban rat control programs serviced more than 19,000 city blocks and almost 2.8 million residents from October to December last year, the national Centers for Disease Control reported today.

Fifty-six communities were involved in the Urban Rat Control program, which began in 1969. Some 910 blocks were found to be essentially free from rats and placed in "maintenance." Another 1,231 blocks were found to have been free of rats for a year.

The program began as a federal-grant effort, and is now part of the federal block grant program to the states. Since its inception, local programs have served almost 9 million Americans in 61,000 city blocks, the Atlanta-based federal health agency said.

As a result of the efforts, 7.7 million people now live in rat-free, environmentally improved neighborhoods, the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

The rat control effort includes killing rats, cleaning up neighborhoods, educating residents on sanitation, enforcing local codes and improving municipal services.

Controversial surgery helps patients see again

By DAVID H. RHINELANDER
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

HARTFORD, Conn. — The patient was not needed in the operating room during the first hour. His surgeons were occupied in a corner of the room, using a $70,000 stainless steel lathe to shape a frozen piece of human cornea into a disk less than a quarter of an inch in diameter and six-thousandths of an inch thick.

Only when they had finished the precision work was the patient, 64-year-old John B. Walenticonis, wheeled into the room. In the next hour, the surgeons sliced open the cornea — the outermost layer — of his badly impaired left eye and precisely positioned the tiny circle of material inside. The corneal sandwich would serve as a new lens. Its thickness had to be correctly measured to within four ten-thousandths of an inch.

This delicate, exacting and controversial surgery at New Britain General Hospital is reserved for the few people whose vision cannot be corrected with thick spectacles, contact lenses or an artificial lens inside the eye. It is being performed regularly in only five other hospitals in the United States.

Walenticonis, a metal lathe operator with one good eye, was a perfect candidate.

HE COULD NOT BE FITTED FOR GLASSES because his face had been smashed in an industrial accident 26 years ago and his reconstructed nose was off center. He could not wear a contact lens because the front of his left eye had been split in another accident a year later, leaving a scar. Cataract surgery in 1975 ruled out going back into the eye to install a plastic lens.

Walenticonis, however, was not content with his poor vision. "I've been doing everything in the shop," he said recently. "They say I'm better on the lathe than some guys with two eyes.

"But when you want to drive a car at night, you can't with one eye....I can see the television at home, but it's hard. And my work is getting harder and busier. So I decided I've got to have vision in both eyes. Better vision means better work."

So a month ago, Walenticonis asked for the still experimental corneal surgery, called keratophakia, knowing the results could range from 20-20 vision in his left eye to continued near blindness. His surgeon was Dr. Daniel M. Taylor, a clinical professor of ophthalmology at the University of Connecticut Health Center. Dr. Alan L. Stern would assist.

Walenticonis would be Taylor's 18th keratophakia operation. He and Stern had performed their first on March 10, 1980, after being trained by Dr. Jose I. Barraquer, who had developed the technique in the mid-1960s in Bogota, Colombia.

THE TECHNIQUE WAS STILL new in the United States because of its complexity and the special equipment it required.

Taylor and Stern had prepared for that first operation by putting themselves and their New Britain General team through a dozen four-hour practice sessions using eyes from the Connecticut Eye Bank and wax models. Taylor was the founding medical director of the 20-year-old eye bank, which supplies Connecticut's two dozen corneal transplant surgeons with donor eyes, and also provides eyes for research and training.

The eye bank, which is housed at the hospital and supported by the Fraternal Order of Odd Fellows, played a crucial role in Walenticonis's operation. The donated cornea of an 84-year-old woman who died that morning was unsuitable for a transplant, but adequate for keratophakia. A shortage of donor eyes has kept more than 100 people waiting for corneal transplants for up to a year.

Taylor, Stern and other members of their team assembled in Operating Room 5 on the ground floor of New Britain General at 1:30 p.m. on March 22 for the surgery. There were three observers: a leading Japanese eye surgeon who was interested in the technique and a reporter and photographer.

It was the first time Taylor had allowed anyone to write about his work, in part because of an intense rivalry within ophthalmology. His concerns, however, had been outweighed by his enthusiasm for this surgery for carefully selected patients, and his interest in making the public aware of he eye bank.

"Look up John, as far as you can. Try to roll your eye up," Stern says.

The surgeons adjust the stitches to smooth out the corneal curve. The operation is almost over.

The doctors sew the eyelid shut and put a pressure pad over the eye. Then they tape on a shield. That bandage will stay in place for a few days.

"This kind of surgery is only for those patients who can't be treated by more conservative means," Taylor said afterward. His results have been encouraging — no operative failures, no infections. Seven of his first 10 patients have between 20-30 and 20-40 vision within a year.

The eyelid stitches and patch bandage on Walenticonis were taken off two days after the surgery and he was sent home.

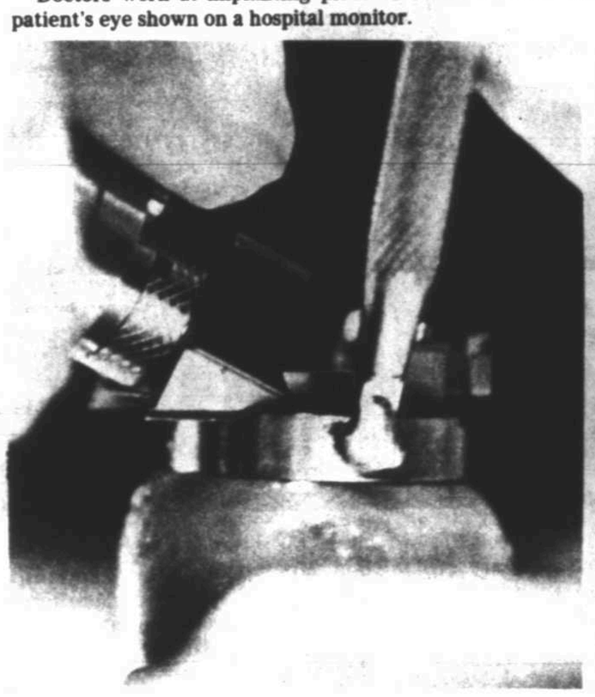
SINCE IT TAKES WEEKS for the eye to recover from the surgery, Walenticonis won't know for some time how successful Taylor has been.

"I just see light and flurry figures still," he said nine days after the operation. "That's what they told me to expect for a while. But I feel great. I don't remember much of the operation. I thought it took maybe five to 10 minutes, that's all."

"They told me it might not work, that I had to take my chances. But I asked Dr. Taylor to do anything he could to help me and I'm satisfied he did."

Hartford Courant Photos by MICHAEL MCANDREWS

Doctors work at implanting piece of cornea sliced from a donated eye in a rare surgical technique known as keratophakia, with patient's eye shown on a hospital monitor.



Surgeons use lathe, left, to shape a frozen piece of human cornea into a disk of precise dimensions, and then implant the tiny circle of material into a patient's eye.

OPERATING ROOM 5 — the eye room, as it is called — is at the end of a corridor, deliberately isolated from the rest of the surgical suite in order to keep it as clean as possible. Dust and dirt that settled in an eye during surgery could cause infection and permanently distort vision.

The doctors wear blue lintless paper gowns and tight-fitting plastic gloves. The sterile sheets on the instrument tables and over the patient also are paper. All the instruments, in addition to being sterilized, are washed with distilled water just before use.

The lathe is in a corner, under an air-flow hood that sucks off the dust and minute particles stirred up by the machine. The surface of the lathe and all its knobs have been sterilized.

A third physician, Dr. Barry Atlas, takes his place in front of a small computer just inside the door of the room. The computer, when fed precise measurements of Walenticonis's eye and the eye bank eye, will calculate exactly how thick the new corneal piece, called the lenticule, must be.

Taylor, working at a side table, opens a small bottle from the eye bank that contains the donated eye. He then puts together a small, stainless steel rotating knife called a microkeratome. The $11,000 instrument uses an inch-long razor blade which spins at 10,000 revolutions per minute. Taylor examines the blade through magnifying glasses and detects a nick. A second blade is perfect, and he inserts it.

Holding the eye bank eye in a suction ring, Taylor uses the microkeratome to slice off the top of the cornea. The piece is about a third of an inch in diameter and two one-hundredths of an inch thick. It is 2:06 p.m.

Taylor passes the piece to Stern, who is seated at the lathe. Stern measures the thickness of the piece and calls out the numbers to Atlas, a young eye surgeon Taylor is training at the University of Connecticut. The residual part of the donor cornea is measured and those numbers are entered in the computer.

Atlas then adds measurements made earlier on Walenticonis's eye, runs all the numbers through the computer, and calls out the proper lathe settings to Stern.

THE PIECE OF CORNEA is stained fluorescent yellow and mounted on the lathe, where a flow of carbon dioxide gas cools it to minus 21 degrees centigrade. The cornea must be frozen solid before it can be shaped.

Stern makes the precise adjustments needed to move the cutting edge slowly in and across the cornea, checking the readings several times as he works. At 2:25 p.m., the lenticule has been shaped.

The surgeons relax a little while Walenticonis, who is awake but tranquilized, is wheeled in and helped onto the operating table.

The doctors sit on stools at the head of the operating table. Their first task is to draw small lines, like the hands of a clock, on Walenticonis's cornea. They will be used as reference markers so the cornea can be put back exactly where it was.

Holding rings of various sizes are placed on Walenticonis's eye until one fits properly. Then the microkeratome is slid into grooves on the ring and the top of his cornea is sliced off. Drops of a salt solution are constantly squirted on the eye to keep it moist.

The slice of Walenticonis's cornea is then sewn back; a small section is left unstitched. The curved needle and thread are so thin that they cannot be seen from a few feet away.

AT 3:30 P.M. THE LENTICULE is taken from a dish and put on a tiny slotted spatula. The instrument looks like it belongs in the kitchen of a dollhouse.

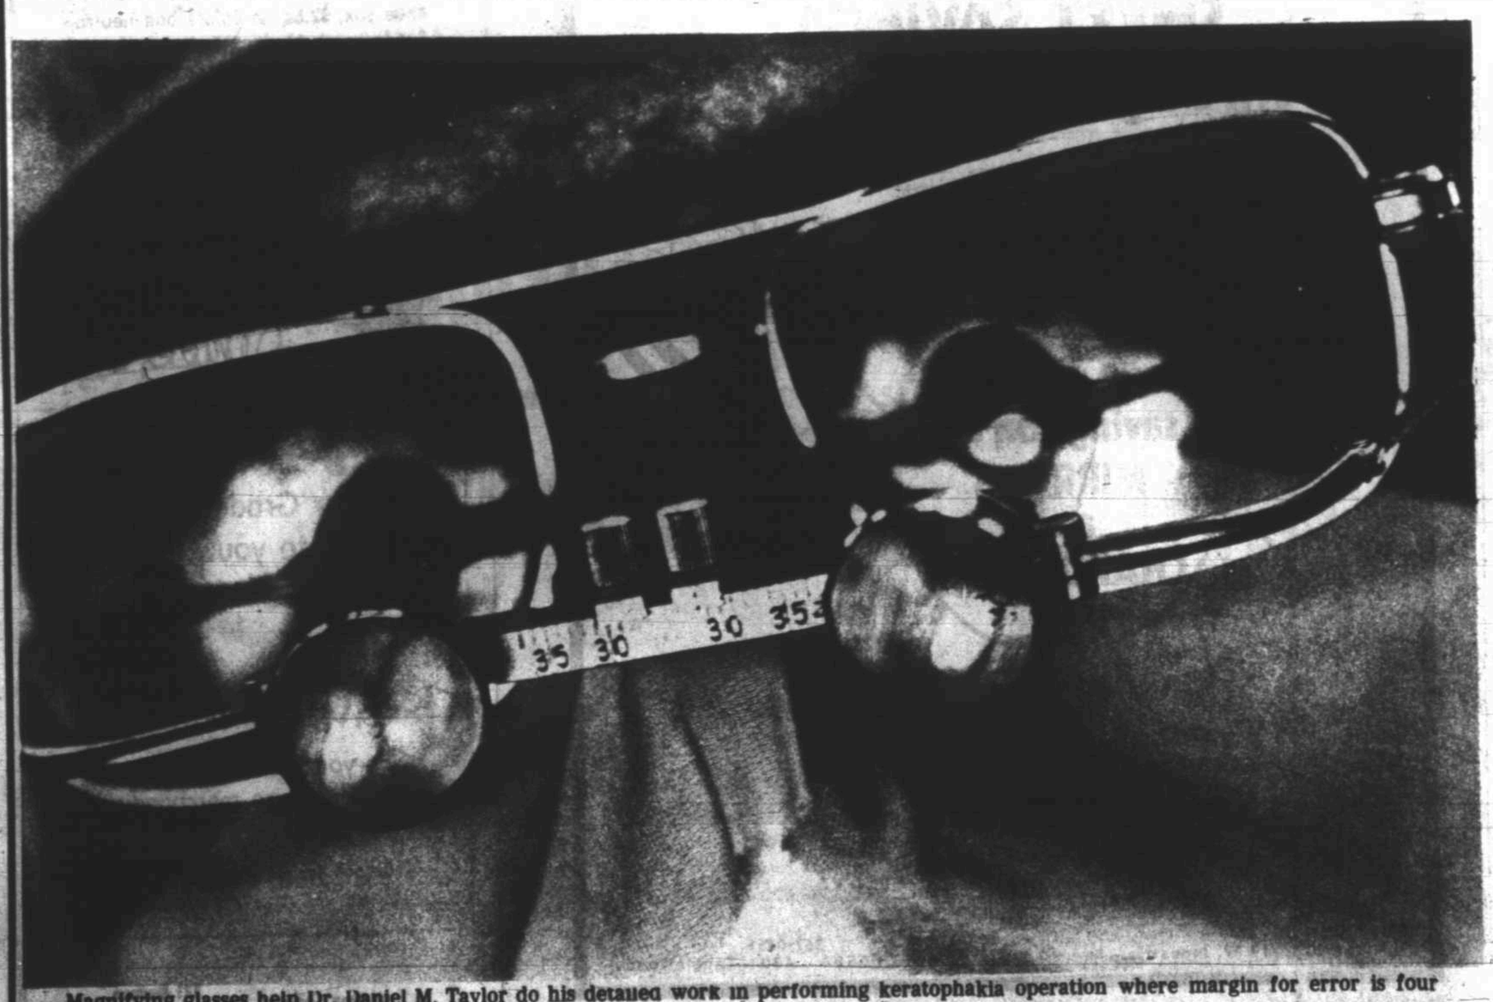
Taylor slides the lenticule in between the layers of Walenticonis's cornea, making a sandwich. Now more stitches are put in. Their tightness is crucial in determining whether vision will be improved.

In addition to insuring the sandwich is the proper thickness — if a few ten-thousandths of an inch too thin or thick, it will bend light entering the eye too much or too little to focus images correctly on Walentinconis's retina — the doctors check for astigmatism, an improper curvature on the cornea that also distorts images.

An attachment on the microscope projects a circle of dots of light on the cornea to measure the curvature. At first, they are not in a perfect circle.

"John, John, can you see the light?" Taylor asks.

"Not really see it, but I see some brightness," Walenticonis replies.



Magnifying glasses help Dr. Daniel M. Taylor do his detailed work in performing keratophakia operation where margin for error is four ten-thousandths of an inch.

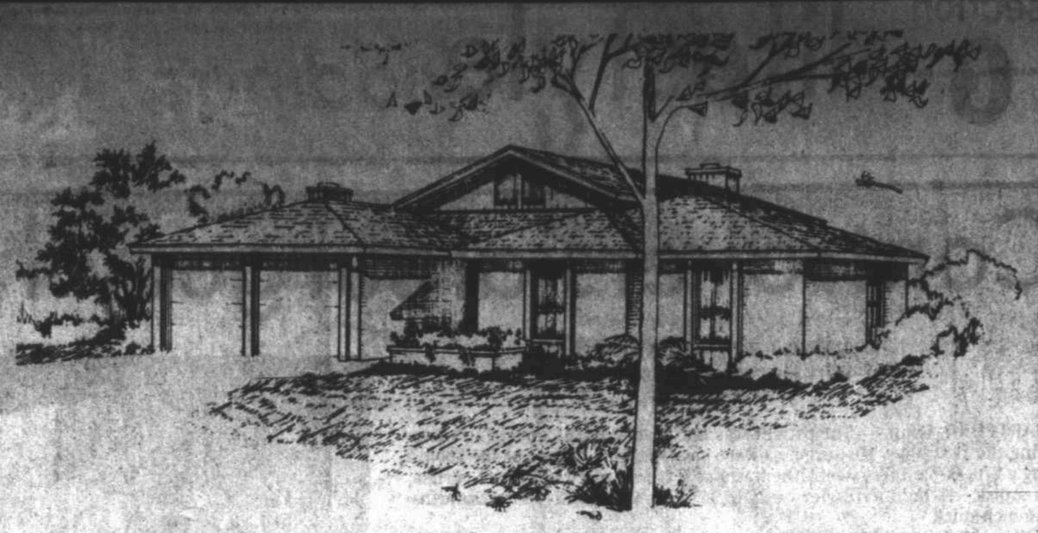
Parade of Homes entry features unusual ceiling



A Southwest ranch-styled home is the entry for Richard D. Hughes Builder in the 1982 Midland Homebuilders Association Parade of Homes.

A second parade of new homes, the event will be held August 22-29 in the Wydewood Addition, west of Midland Drive just off Neely Drive. The gate proceeds will benefit Christmas in April. Tickets, to be available at the gate, will be $2 to tour 30 homes.

"Ranchito Gold" style brick with accents of black mortar will form the exterior of the 1,850 square foot residence at 2104 Wydewood. The new home has a double door entryway that leads into a huge living area with a cathedral ceiling and a rock fireplace. The entryway is Mexican tile and there is a brick planter.

An unusual ceiling is the feature in the formal dining area. It has mirrors with ceramic tile around the ends and wooden beams crossing the mirrors for accents.

Carpeting throughout the spacious energy efficient home will feature a color accent strip around the edges of the room.

The kitchen and breakfast areas are adjacent to the dining room. Natural ash-stained cabinets feature raised panel doors. Butcher block counter top and almond appliances are just a few of the extras in this spacious area. Another highlight is the serving bar that extends onto the patio.

The master bedroom, one of three, features a double entry, a fireplace with a Mexican tiled hearth and ceramic tile around the opening, plus a scrolled recessed textured raised ceiling.

A sunken tub that features a glass enclosure is a unique item in the master bath which also has a double marble top vanity.

The yard will be landscaped and have a sprinkler system installed.

Hats return as fashion trend

By JUDI HUNT
Hearst Feature Service

If you buy a hat this spring — and you probably will if you're up on the latest trends — you can partly thank the economy and the motion picture business.

"When the economy is the pits like it is now, it's much easier and less expensive to buy accessory items such as belts, shoes and hats than a complete outfit," says Marsha Akins of Makins Hats in New York.

"Say you have a white shirt and pants that are too good to discard, but need updating. So you go out and buy red shoes, a red hat and a red belt, and you're right in style. And you haven't spent a lot of money, although hats aren't cheap anymore, thanks to expensive materials and high labor costs."

Even if the consumer isn't concerned about cutting expenses, she is likely to want a hat this year because they are being shown everywhere — on runways at fashion shows, in fashion magazines and in movies and on television, Akins said. "I don't know how much 'Brideshead Revisited" affected anyone else, but we believe it's had a tremendous influence on the hat industry.

"There was only one hat in 'Raider's of the Lost Ark,' but it's already an extremely important style. 'Chariots of Fire,' 'Reds,' 'The French Lieutenant's Woman' — all have helped bring hats to the attention of the public."

The effect of all this attention is only just beginning to be felt, Akins believes. "I think we'll see more and more hats in the fall, especially since the European collections didn't send anyone out (on the runways) without hats — both men and women.

"And designers are using hats not only in shows, but in press kits they're sending out to the media. So it looks as if fall will be very good for us hat designers and manufacturers."

But styles this fall will be different from what consumers are seeing for spring, Akins says. "This spring it is the pretty hat with satin ribbons, tiny flower buds and veilings that dominates, especially the picture hat with its enormous brim. And the boaters and sailor look are very good, too.

"In the fall, however, the hats will have oversized crowns rather than brims, and the fedora (a hat that usually, but not always, has a crease in the center) will be the hat to look for."

"But in the fall women are going to have a picnic because we, for example, have over 100 colors for them to choose from in the fall felts."

Thinly sliced scallions, if desired

In a medium saucepan heat the butter; add the onion and celery and cook gently until wilted. Add the broccoli and the broth; quickly bring to a boil. Cover and simmer until broccoli is tender — about five minutes. Puree in two batches in an electric blender.

Assertiveness Training workshop to be offered by Family Services

Family Services of Midland is presenting an Assertiveness Training Workshop beginning June 1. Participants will learn how to express thoughts and feelings in an honest straightforward fashion that shows respect for the other person.

Assertiveness Training is based on the theory that we have learned many ineffective ways of communicating, and therefore these ineffective ways can be unlearned, once a more effective means is established.

This training allows a person to break away from a self-limiting life style. It teaches one how to say no when you want to say no, how to resolve conflict and what to do with anger and other negative feelings. Assertive skills enhance an individual's self-confidence and effectiveness in both personal and professional relationships.

The workshop will be held from 1 to 2:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, June 1-17. Format consists of discussion, lecture and behavior rehearsals. Topics will include "differentiating between passive, aggressive and assertive behaviors," "identifying emotional blocks which prevent people from acting assertively," "reducing those blocks" and "learning techniques for dealing with anxiety."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

How to make fingerpaints

DEAR HELOISE:

With inflation eating a hole in our family budget, we've resorted to making a lot of the things we want or need.

Your book, "Help From Heloise," has been a big help to everyone in the family but I still cannot find a "recipe" I've heard exists. Do you know how to make fingerpaints?

My three-year-old thinks he needs this. — A. Render

+++

And who can refuse a three-year-old?

To make fingerpaints, you either can add food coloring to a thin paste of flour and water or to a thick cooked starch (allow the starch to cool before adding coloring).

You can add oil of cloves or a little vanilla flavoring to get a pleasing scent.

Fingerpaints made from starch can be put into a jar with a tight-fitting lid and stored in the refrigerator.

If you don't want to go to the trouble of mixing or cooking, let the little ones enjoy an afternoon of fun smearing Dad's shaving cream (no menthol — it'll burn the eyes) all over a countertop, kitchen table, or a large pan. The shaving cream can be tinted different colors too. Besides, when you wipe it up, you'll have a clean countertop.

Just be sure to put down an old plastic shower curtain or tablecloth to protect the floor or whatever. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cleanups! — Hugs, Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: My three-year-old daughter was visiting her grandmother when she spotted one of those neat little nylon net scrub brushes made with the handle of a milk jug.

She picked it up and said, "Grandma, tell me what this is."

My mother replied it was a clothes brush, used to brush lint and dirt off clothes.

"Oh," my daughter said, thoughtfully, "we wash our clothes."

Hope you get a laugh from this, as I did. — Clara Wilson

+++

You can bet I did! How do you reply to that? She's a doll. — Heloise

OUCHLESS JOB

Dear Heloise: What to do with sticky, thorny rose bush branches when you trim them?

On the ground, stretch out a string long enough to tie up the branches. On top of the string, put down several layers of newspaper.

Stack those branches on the newspaper as you trim them off the bush. When done, roll the newspaper around the branches and tie with the string.

You can carry the bundle with the string and dump it in the trash heap without ever coming in contact with the "stickery" trimmings. — Louise Borger

DUST MOP COVERS

Dear Heloise: Cut the legs off an old pair of flannel pajamas. Sew up one end and you have two dust mop covers.

Leave the leg long enough so there is sufficient give and secure the top to the handle with a tie or twist tie.

SPICE PUDDING

My sister Phyllis revived one of her good recipes.

2 large eggs
2 cups milk
2 tablespoons sugar
2 cups coarsely crumbled dry raisin-spice cake crumbs

Beat the eggs until foamy; add the milk and sugar and beat to blend. Divide the cake crumbs among six 6-ounce buttered custard cups; pour the custard mixture over the crumbs. Place in a 13 by 9 by 2-inch pan and add enough hot tap water to come halfway up the cups. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until a knife inserted in the center comes out clean — 40 to 50 minutes. Serve warm or cold. Makes 6 servings.

Dear Mr. McCollam: My parents bought this walnut bookcase at an auction and always referred to it as an antique.

Can you tell me if it really is an antique and, if so, how much is it worth? — N.E.D., Topoeka, Kan.

Dear N.E.D.: Your bookcase was made in the fourth quarter of the 19th century and just barely qualifies as an antique (100 years).

These are extremely popular with collectors and would sell in the $800 to $1,000 range.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This marble-top stand is one of a pair. They have been in the possession of my 90-year-old aunt for many years.

Can you tell me how old they are and their estimated value? — M.B.P., Cypress, Calif.

Dear M.B.P.: These are relatively modern versions of Louis XV style. They were meant to be used as night-stands or end tables.

They were factory-made in the early 20th century and would sell for about $150 to $250 for the pair.

How to get the most use out of leftover meals

By DENIECE SCHOFIELD
Copley News Service

Do you have a leftover problem?

It seems that many of us put leftovers back into the refrigerator with the best of intentions. "This time I'm going to remember what's in here and use it!"

Days and days go by and the leftover collection expands. Pretty soon the refrigerator is so full that we are forced to clean it out. With fear and trembling we open containers wondering what colors and odors await discovery. Most of our "good intentions" are tossed down the garbage disposal.

Sound familiar?

There are a few tings you can do to help in your battle against mold and fuzz. First, designate a certain area in your refrigerator where leftovers will be kept. Keep the leftovers in this assigned spot. In our refrigerator, for example, the second shelf is for leftovers and other food that needs to be used within a short period of time.

Second, putting leftovers in clear containers makes it easier for you to see what's inside, thus reminding you to use the contents.

Third, have a convenient place where you can quickly jot down leftover items, putting the date next to each listed item. A good place for such a list is inside the cupboard door where most of your food is kept. Hang a small pad and pencil out of sight and you have a quick, efficient place to keep track of your leftovers.

Whenever you're preparing a meal, check your list to see if any of the leftovers can be incorporated into your meal plans. Quickly cross out anything you decide to use. It will take a few extra seconds to write down an item on this list, but it will eliminate such waste and over a period of time, it will save you a lot of money!

When planning your menus, try to include as many leftovers as possible. Check your cookbooks for new ideas using leftovers.

Vegetables and meats are used well in soups and stews. Leftover roast or ham can be ground and mixed with other ingredients to make a tasty sandwich spread.

Leftover waffles? Wrap individually and freeze. When needed, pop into the toaster.

Chicken or turkey can be used in chicken salad or macaraoni salad. An array of easy-to-fix poultry casseroles fill the pages of any cookbook. Poultry can also be made into a delicious spread for canapes and other hors d'oeuvres.

Leftover ham is ideal in chef's salad or in a scalloped potatoes casserole. There's always ham-potato salad and ham-macaroni salad.

Pork has many uses in oriental dishes and is especially good heated in barbecue sauce, served in buns.

Shrimp, tuna or salmon are well used in salads and sandwich fillings. Creamed tuna or salmon can be the beginning of a flavorful, nutritious meal.

Beef, lamb or veal can also be served in a variety of casseroles; or, simply heat sliced meat in gravy and serve with potatoes, rice or bread. Don't forget the possibility of homemade meat pies.

In addition to their use in soups and stews, vegetables can be attractive and nutritious complements to salads and potato-egg dishes.

Why, you can even make watermelon pickles from the leftover watermelon rind!

With a simple, effective solution to help you to keep track of your leftovers and the unlimited possibilities for their use, there's really no reason to waste anything!

Food safety laws undergo constant re-evaluation

Hearst Feature service

U.S. food safety laws need a comprehensive re-evaluation, says the American Council on Science and Health.

"Making extensive changes in the U.S. food safety policy will be a challenging task," said Dr. Elizabeth M. Whelan, executive director of the ACSH, an independent, non-profit educational association.

Whelan says the last major changes in the food safety laws were made in 1958. Since then, she adds, there have been enormous scientific and technological advances in the field. But because these advances have not been incorporated into the laws, those concerned with food safety have faced difficult regulatory situations concerning food ingredients such as saccharin and nitrate.

In a recent report, the ACSH discussed the potential impact of the Hatch-Wampler bill (S.1442 and H.R. 4014), a current proposal to change the food safety laws. This bill has been the focus of intense public debate, with consumer advocates and food processors often taking opposing sides.

Among other revisions, the Hatch-Wampler bill proposes to modify the Delaney Clause (which instructs the FDA to ban food additives which cause cancer in man or animals). The bill will require the Food and Drug Administration to undertake risk assessment before banning potentially carcinogenic (cancer-causing) food additives. It proposes clarifying the difference between intentional direct food additives and what the bill calls "food contact substances," such as packaging materials and other substances not intended to be in food.

Crude Oil Profit Sharing Act

'Robin Hood' legislation may never see light of day

By DORY DEVLIN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A proposed law to transfer oil, gas and coal revenues from energy-producing states to energy-consuming states may "never see the light of day" as its opponents forecast. However, it has prompted a political debate over the growing disparity between different regions and different states within the nation which promises to intensify.

The "National Crude Oil Profit-Sharing Act of 1982" is a bill based on the premise that "the energy resources of this country, whether oil in Texas or coal in Montana or natural gas in Michigan, should be viewed as American resources, and the benefits derived from the taxation of these resources should be enjoyed by all of America, not just by the petroleum industry or those states which by geological chance find these resources within their borders," according to one of the bill's original co-sponsors, Rep. Howard Wolpe, (D-Mich.).

The bill, introduced by Wolpe in the House on May 6, has met with considerable opposition, mainly from representatives in the Texas and Oklahoma delegations who call the legislation a divisive effort by those interested in starting a regional war. But supporters of the bill counter that this legislation stands to benefit at least 43 states in the northeast and midwest as well as the south and the west — as opposed to about six prosperous energy-producing states which are now reaping benefits from an abundance of natural resouces.

"We are moving toward a serious kind of economic war between states," Wolpe said. "This legislation is designed to avoid this kind of warfare."

"This bill clearly impacts six states," said Rep. Claudine Schneider, (R-R.I.), a co-sponsor of the bill. "It is not a regional issue, rather a national issue looking for equity in energy supply and energy price."

Rep. Dave McCurdy, a Democrat from Oklahoma, disagrees. Calling the Wolpe-Schneider effort a "crazy, assinine bill," the congressman charged that the northern representatives "don't understand the (oil) industry. They read the profit sheets but they don't realize the effect the law would have on our independence and production," he said. "It would dry us up."

A week after the energy revenue-sharing bill was unvieled, McCurdy satirically introduced the "National Lobster Profit-Sharing Act of 1982" on the floor of the House: "This legislation is the work product of the regionalization of Congress ... the premise of the bill is that the lobster sources of this country, limited to a few northeastern states, should be viewed as national resources and the benfits derived from the taxation of these resouces should be enjoyed by all of America ... ."

The Wolpe-Schneider bill would estasblish a 30 percent permanent profit-sharing tax on crude oil, to be paid by producing companies. The effective tax rate after corporate income tax deductions would only be 16 percent, the bill's backers contend. Seventy-five percent of these tax revenues would go to reducing the federal deficit. If the bill were in effect in 1982, this portion of the tax would come to over $13.4 billion, Wolpe said.

The remaining 25 percent would go to an "Energy and Economic Development Trust Fund" to be divided up into two block grants. Half of the trust fund would be dispersed to the states to stimulate economic development and to revitalize industries and infrastructures, which include roads and water systems. The other half would go to fund programs to reduce dependence on imported oil by encouraging development of new energy sources. Further, the states' block grants would be determined by using a general revenue sharing formula which would reflect the states' population, and heating and cooling days.

The overall aim of the legislation, sponsored by the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, is to reduce the growing fiscal disparity between the few energy-producing states and the rest of the nation — which has increased because of the severance taxes levied by the few states producing oil, coal and natural gas against the energy-consuming states, Wolpe said.

But McCurdy, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, (D-Texas), and Rep. Charles Wilson, also a Texas Democrat, have labled the legislative effort a regional fight. McCurdy said he wonders why "my colleagues from the northeast and midwest did not propose a severance tax on natural resources familiar to their own areas. Iron ore, coal, zinc. Why pick on crude oil producers?" he asked.

Bentsen, in a statement issued the day the bill was introduced, said, "This is another attempt by the snow-belt coalition to carve out a bigger piece of the federal pie at the expense of the consumer and the oil-producing states in the sunbelt." He added, "This is a dumb and divisive effort that won't go anywhere."

Wilson, too, believes the bill "will never see the light of day." He said he believes the northern representatives ruined their argument by taxing domestic oil and not imported oil. "Why one and not the other?" he asked.

In response to the opposition's charge of regional warfare, Rep. Fernand St. Germain, (D-R.I.), said "this legislation is not divisive. It is merely in response to high severance taxes." He noted that in the past the northeast and the midwest were strong as the southwest was growing. "Now it (the southwest) is profiting at the expense of the northeast and midwest. Income is transferring from us to them," he said. "It's time to get some of it back."

Since its introduction, the bill has been referred to four committees, "not a design for success," as one of Wolpe's aides said. It has gone to the Ways and Means Committee, the Public Works and Transportation Committee, the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Judiciary Committee. Wolpe said he is hoping for some "serious hearings" to be scheduled this year, but not much beyond that. The bill has 15 co-sponsors now, all from the northeast or midwest. Wolpe noted that the personal lobbying of representatives has only just begun.

The bill has no Senate counterpart, and the bill's sponsors realize they face an uphill struggle.

"It can be done," Schneider said. "The question is how soon. I think we had better hurry up because this administration has no energy policy." She added she believes the Reagan administration has "a greater rapport with the south and west because of the makeup of the administration."

Rep. James Jeffords, (R-Vt.), who called the legislation "an attempt at a rational allocation of rewards from national natural resources," said he believes that if enough pressure is placed on the Ways and Means committee, the bill will move. He added it will have to be "the type of pressure that can move mountains."

FOCUS: Billy Wright

Talented from head to toe

Geologist Billy J. Wright is a talented man from head to toe.

During working hours, at the Permian Basin Sample Lab, (and sometimes at home in the wee hours), he strains his eyes by peering through a microscope at slides of rock cuttings. During these times, he is honing his published ideas about carbonate environment analysis using well cuttings.

In his free time, Wright dances up a storm.

Recently, he appeared in a dance recital with his 10-year-old protegee and friend, Nicolle Bailey. Several times a week, Wright dances in a studio he set up in his home, "to really work up a sweat." During these times, he is honing his footwork.

Wright has a very special relationship with Nicolle. When her family went through some hard times emotionally, he sort of informally adopted her, as far as giving her his time and love are concerned.

"I've sent her to ballet lessons for six years. She's very sweet and very smart. I look on her as my grand-daughter," said Wright, who has never married.

At the 1981 Septemberfest, the pair won first prize in a dance contest that was judged by the amount of audience applause. This year, they took tap dance classes together to prepare for her recital, which was held May 17.

They performed a tap routine to "Hey, Good Lookin'," by Hank Williams.

Wright grew up in the farm town of Seymour, Texas. He says he danced before he walked. His father was a dancer, but "Mother had two left feet." The music was the Grand Ole Opry on the radio from Nashville.

"For years, I was a jogger, but that is the boringest thing on earth, so now, I dance. My favorite is the jitterbug or the waltz," Wright says.

"When I was in college (at Texas Tech), I used to teach students and grown-ups. When some of my friends were working for 50 cents an hour, I was making six bucks an hour, teaching tap and ballroom."

By the time he graduated, with a degree in geology, Wright had saved enough money to give himself a present — a trip to Acapulco. His friends, meanwhile, had to go out job hunting right away.

Besides giving dance lessons, today Wright is well known in the Permian Basin for his class on well cuttings analysis, which he gives twice a year at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

His book, "Study of Carbonate Environments Using Well Cuttings," is a pioneering work of which 2,000 copies have been printed.

The class is unique. It presents a theory not taught in conventional geology classes at most universities. There is one professor in New York State, Dr. Jerry Friedman, who has used Wright's book, however.

Wright has talked about his theory at regional American Association of Petroleum Geologists meetings, in Oklahoma City, Amarillo, Kansas City and other places.

Wellsite geologists from as far away as Houston have come to Midland to take Wright's course, either at the PBGC or in his home.

Most carbonate petrologists (those who study limestone-like rocks) work with thin slices of rock, examined under a microscope, to determine the rock's origin and thus, whether oil and gas would be present.

"I feel like I lose so much in thin sections," says Wright. "I can see more in cuttings," the tiny, jagged pieces of rock brought up out of the well with the drilling mud.

By carefully examining average size well cuttings, with low power magnification in reflected light, Wright says, one can recognize the characteristics common to oil or gas producing limestones and dolomites.

The rock's characteristics indicate the type of environment in which the rock was formed - whether it formed deep in an ocean, or nearer to shore. Rocks formed in shallow waters are more likely to bear oil or gas than rocks formed in deep water.

"Geologists should concern themselves less with regional geology and concentrate more on detailed analysis of depositional environments of each well," if the oil producing reservoirs are to be found and developed, Wright's book says.

"The whole purpose is to try to teach someone drilling a well which way he should go," Wright says.

Both in the office and at home, Wright has boxes and boxes of well cuttings glued to glass slides.

"I think I could do this work anywhere in the world," Wright says, "because the oceans put the rock there. You might see a difference in some fossils," but basically, carbonate rock is the same anywhere.

Wright says that after looking at thousands of rock samples over the years, he sees nothing new — just variations on a theme.

"I enjoy doing this work, but it's awfully rough on your eyes staring through the microscope. After a number of years, you'd rather dance," Wright says with a grin.

He developing his theory while studying under the late Karl Klement, who came from Texas Tech to Midland in the 1960s to teach a course.

"He drove to Midland twice a week for class. It was a regular, full semester course, and I realized I hadn't learned enough from him."

In 1967, "in the smartest move of my life," Wright said, he became Klement's lab assistant, "to look, to listen, and finally, to start helping him, without pay, because I realized the brilliance of this man."

Billy Wright

After hours of study with a microscope, Wright learned that well cuttings could reveal as much as, or more than, thin slices, and his theory began.

Wright has a small breakfast bar at home, on which rests a microscope. "I would sometimes sit up until two, three, four in the morning, and go to bed with the sun in my eyes," after examining the well cuttings.

"I have total confidence now in myself. I could go anywhere, and look at the rocks, and determine the environment it came from; what is there and why it is there."

Wright credits the Permian Basin Graduate Center staff with helping him get his theory to the public.

"I knew that to get my theory over, which was definitely new, I would have to teach it. It's hard to get private students. I used to beg, borrow or steal to get two or three geologists to teach in my home."

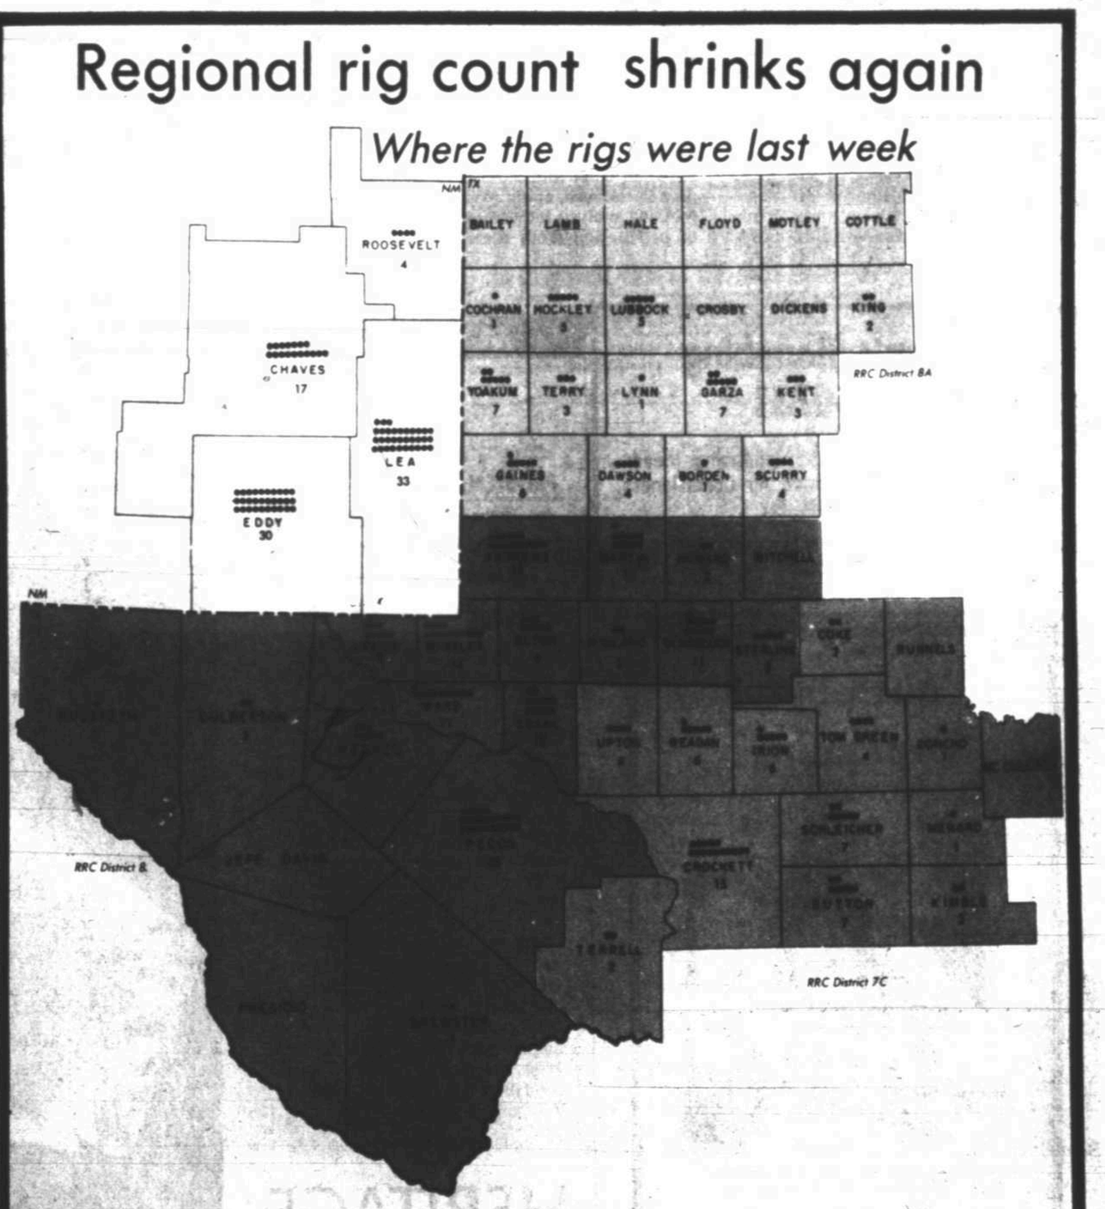
No more. Wright teaches a class on his well cutting theory twice a year, and also gives private classes at major oil companies for their staffs. Nearly every few days, someone drops by his office at Permian Sample Lab, where he has worked for 30 years, and is now the manager, to discuss the theory.

Wright polished his theory, and put it on paper, while recovering from viral pneumonia — the bed rest gave him the time he needed.

"I'm very grateful to have been able to do it. It certainly changed my life in the field of geology, and made it more interesting and useful. Dr. Klement wrote me a letter that was very complimentary, telling me how proud he was of his former student.

"I do hope the younger geologists will get into this because these eyes are getting pretty tired," says Wright laughing. "When you do environmental work, you have to stare (into the microscope) a lot harder and a lot longer."

Regional rig count shrinks again



Like London Bridge the Permian Basin rig count is falling down.

About 200 fewer rigs were counted last week than were counted in January. The figure is almost 100 short of matching the count one year ago.

According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. there were 327 rigs making hole last week in the area covered by the map. The week ending January 8, there were 518 rigs working the region. One year ago Reed spotted 423.

The numbers suggest that 40 to 50 percent of the rigs that were working the Permian Basin during the "Boom of '81" aren't working now; although there are no statistics indicating where they are, or what they're doing.

Other totals for past weeks are: 358, May 14; 356, May 7; 361, April 30; 366, April 23.

The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports 3,128 rigs were turning to the rightnationwide May 17. The previous week's count was 3,222. Almost without exception, the national count has dropped about 100 per week for the past few months. Apparently that trend will continue for awhile.

The IADC's latest figures show a total of 112 rigs working New Mexico; and 877 working inland Texas.

The count May 18, 1981 was 3,828.

Lexington Inns say 'Thanks Midland'

The Lexington Apartments & Motor Inn in Midland recently began construction of a $7 million addition. It will almost double the size of the motel.

Included in the construction program will be major renovation and new construction of 146 additional one and two bedroom suites, a large glass-enclosed lounge area and meeting rooms.

The original Midland Lexington was built in 1974 and consisted of 96 suites. A second stage of 68 suites was added in 1978. This third addition will make a total of 310 suites at the Midland Inn, making the Midland Lexington the largest in the chain of 23 properties.

"The Midland Lexington will actually become the 'flag ship' of the entire chain," said Joe R. Faulk, chief ececutive officer of the Lexington chain, during a recent interview.

"Because of the strong economy in the Permian Basin and the great spirit of cooperation that exists between the Lexington and the people of Midland and West Texas, we decided to make the Midland Lexington the flagship inn of our chain."

Faulk said because of the communities support, "we are taking the time and spening the money to say, 'Thank You Midland'."

"The Lexington is highly involved in an aggressive building campaign that includes not ony new facilities throughout the Southwest, but also major remodeling and addition to exisiting properties," Faulk said. "We're building for a national reputation."

The front desk area of the Midland Lexington will be expanded to handle a large number of guests faster and more conveniently. The large new lobby will be paneled in heavy wood. There will be several informal sitting areas for guests. The lobby furniture will be a mixture of traditional and English antiques. Adjacent to the front lobby will be a glass-enclosed elevator.

A large lounge, with glass walls and fully equiped coffee bar, will accomodate up to 50 people at a time. Each morning, a complimentary continental breakfast will be available to all guests. Bright colors, wicker furniture and a multitude of plants will be featured.

Surrounding the lounge will be a glass-enclosed wlakway with a vaulted glass-roof leading to the pool and sundeck. Built-in redwood benches and tables with umbrellas will highlight this area.

Meeting rooms ranging in capacity up to 200 people will be available. Each room will be equiped with full kitchen facilites.

"We're really creating our own little village environment," Faulk said. "A place to come for functions rather than just a motel."

MDI completes 10th Chapel Hill well

Mineral Development, Inc. has announced the successful completion and testing of an oil well in Smith County. The Walton Heirs "A" No. 1 flowed 264 barrels of oil and 710,000 cubic feet of natural gas over a 24-hour period on a 16/64-inch choke from four perforation intervals at depths ranging from 8,442 to 8,686 feet in the Travis Peak formation.

The Walton Heirs "A" No. 1 is the 10th well drilled on the 9,100-acre Chapel Hill Prospect, and all 10 have been productive from one or more formations. Mineral Development owns working interests ranging from 6.5 percent to 10 percent in the wells and acreage. The remaining interests are owned by privately held companies and individuals.

Mineral Development also announced the results of an independent petroleum engineering firm's evalutation of its reserves as of March 31, 1982. The study estimated the company's future net revenues from proved oil and gas reserves at $15.4 million undiscounted, and $8.8 million discounted at 10 percent. No comparable calculations were made in 1981.

The company emphasized that the reserve report does not include any wells completed after March 31, 1982. Not considered in the report are seven wells completed in a farmout program from Pennzoil Company, two of which Mineral Development considers significant — the Trevino A No. 1 in Zapata County, Texas, and the Riverside in McKenzie County, N.D., in the Williston Basin.

On a four-point test, the Trevino A No. 1 flowed at rates varying from 2.992 million to 1.474 million cubic feet per day through chokes ranging from 9/64-inch to 6/64-inch. Shut-in pressure was 6370 psi. Calculated absolute open flow potential was nine million cubic feet per day. The well produces from the Wilcox sand through perforations between 9,341 and 9,349 feet. Behind pipe in the well, at approximately 2,700 feet, log analysis indicates the presence of production from the Yegua sand. There are locations for four wells to test the Yegua sand on the lease block. Based on engineering estimates of the Wilcox sand in the Trevino A No. 1, Mineral Development estimates its net interest in the gas reserves from the well to be approximately 128 million cubic feet, which would represent an 8.7 percent increase in the company's natural gas reserves over the amount estimated in the March 31, 1982, reserve study.

The Riverside well, previously announced by Pennzoil, flowed 866 barrels of oil over a 24-hour period through a 26/64-inch choke from perforations between 13,104 and 13,136 feet in the Red River formation. Mineral Development owns an approximate two percent working interest in the well and 640-acre lease block.

An architect's idea of what Center Point office complex will look like when completed. The building is the former Sears store at Cuthbert and Midkiff.

Dallas builder bullish on Midland

The Austin L. Lewis Company, a Dallas-based real estate development firm, began last week the renovation of the former Sears store at Cuthbert and Midkiff. When completed, the devleopment, known as Center Point, will contain 85,911 square feet of office space and a restaurant.

Austin Lewis, founder of the company that shares his name, said, "We're producing a class-A building. It's going to be in everyway competitive with anything else in Midland."

Lewis said when putting together the project he had in mind businesses now in downtown Midland that are faced with a parking shortage. Center Point offers tenants 298 free parking spaces.

In concept, Lewis said, Center Point is "several small offices buildings under one roof." Corporations needing 5,000 square feet of office space or more should find it meets their needs.

The area around Center Point has a number of features tenants will find attractive, Lewsi said. Among them are restaurants and shopping places. It is also centrally located between the older downtown and newer northwestern business areas of Midland.

There are plans to include a well log library in the building, which those who explore for oil may find useful.

Although many now say Midland could soon have too much office space, Lewis isn't worried about filling Center Point.

'I feel that may be true (that there may be too much office sapce) starting about late '83," he said, "but we're going to be done about November. We feel we're going to hit a window in the market."

"We're really bullish on Midland," Lewis said. "There's so much momentum out here.

Midlanders are business oriented, Lewis said. "They're deal makers, not deal breakers."

Midland has a bright future so long as the nation continues to be a net importer of oil, Lewis said.

Developing nations pragmatic dealers

HOUSTON — Governments of developing countries are far more willing to make pragmatic exploration and development deals with multinational oil companies than in the recent past, according to Petroleum Information International.

Announced reductions in the companies' expenditure forecasts have accelerated the momentum.

The May 17 issue of PI International reports delegations from developing countries are coming to Houston and New York to drum up interest in their hydrocarbon potential. Moazambique's energy minister recently met officials from more than 50 countries on a tour of Europe and North America. At the Offshore Technology Conference in Houston this month, the chief of Malaysia's national firm reminded oil company executives of the country's favorable investment climate.

Jack Davidson, manager of exploration and production, South America and Asia, of Phillips Petroleum Comeany, told PI International, "I think a lot of developing countries that need exploration are wondering how they can cause it to happen."

The developing countries current eagerness to negotiate, spurred by their possible lack of technical and financial wherewithal for needed exploration projects, comes at a time when there is a shortage of cash. The 17 major American oil companies have downgraded their early '82 prediction of a yearly expenditure for exploration of $64 billion, up 19 percent from '81 in constant dollars, to flat or only slightly increased expenditures.

Learn to foil unions at seminar

The leagal aspects of maintaining a union-free operation will be discussed during an all-day industrial relations seminar Wednesday. The event is sposnosred by the Central Basin and Odessa Chapters of the Texas Association of Business. It will begin at 9 a.m. at the Perry Gas Company training center, 605 North Meadow, Odessa.

Tim Gorman, industrial relations manager, General Tire and Rubber Co., Odessa, will moderate a panel discussion and make closing remarks.

The panelist, togehter, have over 50 years of labor law experience. They are: Kenneth R. Carr, partner and head of the labor law section of Grambling, Mounce, Sims, Galatzan and Harris; Charles C. High Jr., partner and director of the labor law department, Kemp, Smith, Duncan and Hammond; and William A. Thurmond, senior partner and labor law section director of Hulse, Marshall, Feuille, Finger and Thurmond.

These three labor attorneys represent the largest law firms in El Paso. They will each discuss important steps a company must take if it wishes to maintain control of its operation without union intervention.

The seminar is intended primarily for TAB members, but, space permitting, others are welcome. Registration is $15 per person, which includes hand-out materials and coffee. To register call Tamara Marshall at Yale Key Co., Midland, 684-5721, by the close of business Monday.

Oil refinery saves community 61 million gallons of water a year

An oil refinery in Bakersfield, Ca., is saving that desert community 61 million gallons of water each year. In the process, the refinery has significantly reduced the amount of pollution discarge (effluent).

Working with Dr. Jack Matson, associate professor of civil engineering in the University of Houston's enviromental Engineering Program, the Tosco Oil Co. refinery has installed a water treatment and recycling systems.

This system, called a side stream softening unit, was developed by Matson over the past seven years. it works on the basic principle of getting the greatest use from available water, especially important in the arid Western U.S.

Water from the refinery's production processes is treated and recycled into the cooling system, reducing the plant's overall water requirement. The side stream softening unit treats 245 gallons of water each minute so it can remain in the cooling system. Wastes removed by the side stream system are concentrated and dried in lagoons.

Since the side stream unit came on line in March, Tosco has reduced its water demand by 168,000 gallons each day; from 2,362,290 to 2,194,290. Tosco's water is drawn from wells. Because the refinery's waste is converted into a solid, the only way water in the recycle system leaves the plant is by evaporation.

The Tosco design provided Matson and co-designer graduate student Larry McGaughey with several challenges. "It also provided an opportunity to verify work on side stream softening systems we did at a Houston-area plant," Matson adds.

"The biggest difficulty, removing silica from the water, required a change in the unit's softening agent," Matson says. In previous units, lime was added to remove minerals such as calcium and magnesium; the Tosco unit uses sodium hydroxide to remove silica and magnesium and soda ash to remove calcium.

Unlike the previous units, the Tosco refinery requires treatment and recycling of water from three internal sources; the boiler, the cooling system and the stack scrubber.

This is the first refinery in the country to install a side stream softening unit, according to Matson. It represents a $3.4 milliomn investment by Tosco. Tosco officials estimate it will cost $220,000 annually to operate the side stream unit.

Stanton named Young Explorationist

Pat Stanton, who works with her husband, James C. Stanton, consulting geophysicist, has won the J.C. Williamson $1,000 cash prize and the traveling trophy as Young Explorationist of the Year. He point total was eleven, with sixth, second and third place finishces in the series. She made a total of $12,241,859 profit investing her $3,000,000 (a make believe amount alloted at the beginning of the game).

Closely behind were: Craig Shapard (12), geologist for Adobe Oil & Gas Corporation; Lonnie Nichols (13) of Southwestern Crop Insurance; Barbara McBride (14), geophysicist for Getty Oil. Other finishers in order were: George Powell, rancher; John Fields, geologist with Terra Resources Inc.; Paul Suell, retired; and Randy Hall, geolgosits for Delta Drilling Company. The remainder of the 23 participants failed to finish.

It should be pointed out that two out of the top three are not geology graduates. Pat Stanton has a couple of geology courses in college and Lonnie Nichols only exposure to exploration was in taking Prospect Evaluation for Non-Geologists at the P.B.G.C. last year. Craig Shapard and Barbara McBride are geology graduatess fom U.T.P.B. and Eddy Pearson is from Texas Tech.

The World Series is designed to tach geological creativity and economics, and to give instant exploration experience to the young explorationist. For example, Pat Stanton drilled a total of 42 wells in the 15 weeks. She drilled seven wildcats, one of which was a discovery, and 22 productive and 13 dry development wells. How long does the young geologist have to work for a company to get a comparable exposure to this risky business? This series should be a real challenge to those who consider themselves real oil finders.

U.S. Court decision may have big impact on land and mineral owners

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

A United States Court decision handed down May 13 may have a big impact on land and mineral owners, independent producers and royalty owners in the Permian Basin and throughout Texas.

The 7th Circuit Court of Appeals has given a new interpretation to the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, which covers percentage depletion deductions for oil and gas production.

The 7th Circuit said, in Engle vs. Commissioner, that there is no requirement that oil or gas production occur in the year a lease bonus payment is received, in order for a taxpayer to claim a percentage depletion deduction on his tax return for that year.

The court is based in Kansas City, Mo., and hears appeals from Kansas, Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

The decision means landowners who receive lease bonuses or advanced royalties are entitled to claim percentage depletion deductions, whether or not production has occurred, under the Engle case.

"We regard it as a very favorable decision," said Stephen F. Huggins, tax partner with Price-Waterhouse in Midland."I do believe it's the right decision from a technical stand point.

"We looked at the word 'production' in the 1975 Act and a lot of people concluded you must have production to claim percentage depletions.

"Not all of us believed that. It was probably a minority view that believed that all the Act did was limit the quantity of production on which the percentage depletion deduction could be claimed."

The decision would also appear to apply to landmen performing sublease transactions where the landman retains a royalty interest, in Huggins' opinion.

"Say a landman acquires a lease, then turns around and conveys it to an oil and gas producer or a drilling contractor. He receives a sign-up fee or what we call a sublease income," Huggins said. "That sublease income also appears to be subject to the percentage depletion deduction, under the Engle case."

Taxpayer Fred L. Engle brought the case to the United States Tax Court in 1981, to question the percentage depletion deduction law in the Tax Reduction Act of 1975.

That act eliminated percentage depletion on oil and gas except for independent producers and royalty owners.

Lease bonuses paid to landowners or mineral interest owners were not subject to percentage depletion deductions for federal income tax purposes.

The Act said production must occur during the taxable year, so since 1975, most landowners and independent producers have not claimed the percentage depletion on their lease bonus or advance royalty payments.

Now, they apparently can, whether or not production has occurred, according to the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, which overturned the lower court's decison regarding Engle.

The lower court had said, "In our view, the express language of Section 631A (c) limiting the percentage depletion deduction to stated quantities of production is so clear that it permits no other reasonable interpretation."

The 7th Circuit Court of Appeals disagreed.

The 7th said on May 13 that the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 only placed a limitation on the amount of the percentage depletion, it being tied to the quantity of production from the lease in that taxable year.

The law had nothing to do with gross or taxable income from a producing property, the 7th Circuit Court said.

Usually, drilling activity doesn't occur in the year a lease bonus payment is made, but occurs the following year.

The U.S. Tax Court heard a second, similar, case in 1981, brought by litigants from Sterling City, Texas, who were questioning the law on lease bonus payments.

While the Engle case was appealed, the Sterling City group has not decided to appeal their case.

If it were to be appealed, it would be heard by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals which handles cases for Texas and Oklahoma.

Does the Missouri court's finding extend to Texas residents?

"We would feel stronger if it had been a 5th Circuit Court decision," Huggins said. "What you have here is another circuit has said you can claim it (percentage depletion), but our circuit has not ruled that you cannot claim it."

Huggins believes it's just a matter of time before someone goes to court seeking a favorable decision for landowners and royalty owners in the 5th Circuit's jurisdiction.

"I would think someone in the 5th Circuit would eventually do it. We're talking about a lot of dollars at stake. Someone will do it, but when that will be is pure speculation," Huggins said.

"In the interim, we have a very favorable decision by the 7th Circuit." He called the Engle's Case an aggressive one.

Since the case interprets the meaning of the 1975 Act, the decision is retroactive to 1975, Huggins said.

"The decison on whether to file (an amended tax return) boils down to a business decision, and he (the taxpayer) should be aware that the IRS may disallow it."

Because of the statute of limitations for tax matters, which is three years, amended returns could only be filed for 1979, 1980, and 1981, "and possibly for 1978, if you extended the due date of your return," Huggins said.

If the IRS disallowed an amended tax return, the taxpayer could take the case to court, appeal it to a higher level of the IRS, or agree with the decision and pay the 20 percent interest charged for tax deficiencies.

Huggins emphasized that before taking any action, a taxpayer should consult his tax advisor, whether it be a lawyer or accountant.

"It's not open and closed," agreed David Bradshaw, tax manager with Price-Waterhouse.

"Now we have a decision in our favor," but it is not from our court circuit, he added.

The men regard the 7th Circuit decision with "cautious optimism."

"We believe it is the correct decision," Huggins said, "and hopefully, this isse will evetually be decided by the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals," as well.

Anaylysts say gas increase likley to be passed along to pumps

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Analysts predict consumers will be paying more for gasoline by Memorial Day in the wake of decisions by major oil companies to raise wholesale prices by as much as a nickel a gallon.

Motorists will see the increases at the pump "rather quickly," said Ralph Scheele, who follows the industry for Shearson-American Express. "The dealers' margins have been depressed. There's no way the dealers can absorb the wholesale price increases."

Since Tuesday, oil companies have raised the wholesale per-gallon price of gasoline, and the increases range from 0.5 cents to 5 cents. The prices to dealers have have inching up for the past month as oil-producing countries — hiefly Saudi Arabia — cut back production to deplete swollen worldwide supplies of crude oil.

"Prices have been going back up since the so-called glut has been worked off," said Tenneco Inc. spokesman Frank Reed. "It's an opportunity for refining and marketing parts of the business, which have been under terrible strain, to bring their prices up and be profitable."

Tenneco on Thursday reported the steepest increase: 5 cents a gallon along the East Coast from North Carolina south. Prices were increased 2 cents a gallon to dealers in Virginia northward.

Scattered price increases of between 0.5 cents and 2 cents a gallon also were announced by Gulf Oil Corp. and Texaco Inc. Amoco Oil Co. raised prices 1 cent to 2 cents a gallon in the Northeast after similar increases the day before in various sections of the country and a May 18 price rise of 1 cent to 2 cents a gallon in the Midwest.

Wholesale price increases of between 1 cent and 3 cents a gallon were imposed Tuesday and Wednesday in various regions by Exxon Corp., Mobil Oil Co., Standard Oil Co. of California and Phillips Petroleum Co.

Jim Fair, a spokesman for the Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), Amoco's parent company, said Amoco's price increases have amounted to between 3 cents and 7 cents a gallon since the third week of April.

"There are a lot of things occurring," Fair said. "There is less crude being brought on the market. There is lower production by OPEC. We've seen an increase in prices on the spot market."

Hunt Oil recently opens Midland district office

Hunt Oil Company of Dallas has opened in Midland a district exploration office, under the direction of district exploration manager William A. Atlee.

The new office, which is involved in oil and gas exploration in West Texas and southeastern New Mexico, opened in One Petroleum Center, Building 8, Suite 212, and is Hunt Oil's second Midland-based office. The company's production office, headed by district production superintendent Tom Reed, remains in the Wilco Building.

Atlee, formerly district exploration manager for Belco Petroleum Corp. in Midland, comes to Hunt Oil with more than 20 years experience in the industry, many of which were spent with Humble/Exxon.

A graduate of Baylor University in Waco, Atlee earned bachelor's and master's degrees in geology. He also did a year of post-graduate geological study at The University of Texas at Austin.

Atlee has been a member of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists since 1958 and has been a Certified Petroleum Geologist since 1968. He is a past president of the Gulf Coast Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists and the Corpus Christi Geological Society.

Joining Atlee at Hunt Oil's new Midland office is district landman Dale Douglas, landman Bill Fleetwood, district geophysicist James Yahr, district geologist Davic Butts and geologist Charles Garvey.

The exploration district presently is doubling its office space, and plans are to increase the size of the technical staff, accordingly.

Challenge hearing set for SBI's proposal for rate discounts

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Board of Insurance has set a hearing for 9 a.m. Wednesday (May 26) on a challenge by the Texas Insurance Advisory Association and two insurance companies to SBI's proposal to grant homeowners discounts for taking anti-crime measures.

The Legislature authorized such credits last year (under a bill sponsored by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland) for installation of security devices, such as deadbolt locks, with inspectors certified by the Texas Crime Prevention Institute to determine whether homeowners have qualified with standards for obtaining the discounts.

SBI has approved a staff recommendation for premium credits of three to ten per cent in various rating territories - with insurance industry officials opposing the plan.

TIAA contends the new law is unconstitutional because it imposes on SBI a requirement to issue premium reduction certificates without an indication as whether the reduction is to be applied to the general insurance of the homeowners policy, or to the scheduled personal property, or both.

TIAA also contends the law attempts to grant rate-making authority to TCPI, which isn't a State agency.

Northern Insurance Co. of New York and American Insurance Co., Newark, N.J., have joined TIAA in challenging the law, and the Alliance of American Insurers, Chicago, has asked SBI to seek an opinion from Attorney General Mark White on whether the statute is "unconstitutionally vague" or unconstitutionally delegates authority to a non-State agency, or denies "the constitutional standards of equal rights and equal protection."

Governor's Task Force on State Trust and Asset Managment has adopted several recommendations for changes in the State Treasurer's Office, including allowing State revenues to be invested in U.S. government securities.

The panel voted to recommend the Legislature allow the treasurer to invest up to 10 per cent of the revenue currently held in time and demand accounts in banks in U.S. treasury bills.

The recommendation was among those of a subcimmittee chaired by former Education Commissioner Alton Bowen, Bryan.

Under the plan, the current prohibition on such investments would be lifted, and the 10 per cent figure would be based on the average revenue balance of the previous year.

Rep. Frank Hartung, R-Houston, a task force member, said there is no reason to limit the amount of revenue which may be put into "T-bills," but Chairman Don Houseman, Dallas, said the panel wants to assure that local banks still get a large portion of the State revenue invested in interest-bearing accounts.

Hartung lost in his attempt to win approval of an alternate recommendation which would have allowed investment in other government securities, savings and loan accounts, certificates of deposit and other instruments - and also failed to get a second for his proposal to put State accounts to banks out on competitive bids, rather than having rates set by the State Depository Board.

Houseman and other panel members argued that plan would result in smaller banks being eliminated from acting as State depositories - although Hartung argued a similar plan used in Illinois hasn't had that result.

The panel did vote to expand the State Depository Board from three to five members, with addition of two "citizen members" (the board currently is made up of one public member, with the State Treasurer and banking commissioner).

The Subcommitte on Capital Formation and Retention of the Governor's Task Force on Small Business reports that the Texas 2000 Commission and Bureau of Business Research, University of Texas at Austin, will help conduct a survey of 15 banks to gather information on using franchise taxes to create a loan "pool" for small businesses.

The task force has been looking at setting up such a program, using a portion of the franchise taxes paid by businesses to the State, and is expected to adopt that idea as a recommendation to Gov. Bill Clements this summer.

The survey is to determine possible effects on the economy from such a plan-but task force members say they've already had favorable responses from bankers on the proposal.

SBI reports 49 items-including rate changes-are to be considered at its 1982 property rules and rates hearing, set for June 2 in Austin.

The first item is the rates - but SBI says that item won't be taken up until after the other 48 are reviewed.

Commercial multi-peril package modifications will not be considered at the June 2 hearing, SBI says, but will be taken up at a separate hearing at some future date.

Most of the 48 items relate to amendments to policies, endorsements and forms, but some new forms are being proposed.

A chance for real wealth for Pakistanis is a Mideast job

By TYLER MARSHALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan — Zahoor is better off than most of his countrymen. As a trained mechanic and part-time taxi driver, he earns $90 a month and lives comfortably with his parents, his wife and a younger sister.

But like many young men in Asia, Zahoor, 22, dreams of getting a chance for real wealth — a job in the Middle East, where the work is hard but salaries sometimes run 10 to 20 times what they are at home.

To a generation of skilled and semi-skilled laborers in Pakistan, Bangladesh, India and other labor-abundant nations, the development boom in the oil-rich Persian Gulf region offers unknown affluence and social mobility, a step up in places where class rigidity is a part of life.

Nowhere is all this more evident than in Pakistan, which supplies nearly half of the 2.7 million or so migrant workers currently employed in the gulf region.

Last year, Pakistani workers sent home more than $2 billion, almost enough to bridge Pakistan's trade gap.

Automobiles, television sets, radios and other consumer durables brought home by these workers provide a veneer of affluence in a country where per capita income is about $260 a year.

Often, such goods are purchased more as status symbols than anything else.

One worker brought home a German-made washing machine, even though his village had no electricity to run it. After displaying it for a few months, so that admiring neighbors could appreicate his earning power, he brought the machine to Rawalpindi and sold it.

But such conspicuous consumption is only a superficial indication of fundamental changes taking place in a growing number of Pakistani families.

For them, unaccustomed prosperity has brought a new kind of life and awakened aspirations never before known to an Asian laborer, no matter how skilled.

The $300 a month sent home by Zahoor's older brother, a Saudi air force mechanic, has already transformed the way of life and the expectations of a family that once scraped by on the meager income from a small shop.

The additional money has helped add a second story to the modest family home and assemble a large dowry to attract a better mate for Zahoor's sister.

Zahoor, who attended school for only a few years before he had to go to work, talked of private school for his son and, God willing, college as well.

When his brother returns in a few years, Zahoor hopes to go out himself in order to sustain the prosperity and the dream.

Government planners are only now beginning to study the ramifications of such bright hopes, which some officials believe will lead to significant social change.

"There's a revolution in the thinking of these people," said Hassan Assad, deputy managing director of the Overseas Pakistani Foundation, a government organization established three years ago to help migrant workers and their families.

"A semiliterate skilled worker who would normally send his son to a village school for a couple of years suddently wants the best education possible because he has the money to pay for it."

Shahid Javed Burki, a World Bank vice president, wrote in a recent issue of the Pakistan and Gulf Economist that worker migration to the Middle East is causing "a social change of vast magnitude" in the labor-exporting countries of Africa and Asia.

The Pakistani government has started to react to some of these changes, but not on any significant scale. A modest construction program for primary and technical training schools has been ordered, specifically for the children of overseas workers.

In Islamabad, the capital, land has been set aside for a large boarding school for girls. Scholarships to study in Middle Eastern countries have also been established.

But with the majority of workers and their families only beginning to understand their new potential, the major push for change is still to come, some experts believe.

Planners fear that the new wealth and higher horizons could accelerate urbanizaton and place greater strains on Pakistan's few large cities. Migrant workers who have already returned have tended to reject village life in favor of the greater comfort and opportunity available in the cities.

"Their needs have changed," Assad explained. "The basic amenities and the kind of jobs available in their villages are no longer adequate."

The Overseas Pakistani Foundation has established a housing division to buy land in urban areas and sell it for families of migrant workers. Two such projects have been launched in Lahore, the second largest city.

How much time the government has before migrant workers start returning in larger numbers is not clear. The minister for labor, manpower and overseas Pakistanis, Ghulam Dastgir Khan, says it may be another three or four years before a large-scale return begins.

However, if the world oil glut continues to cool Middle East economies, this period could be shortened, economists say.

Dastgir Khan expressed confidence in a recent interview that Pakistan could absorb the returning workers.

"There will be jobs for them in our industrial development," he said.

Others are not so sure. They point out that vocational training programs set up to fill the gap left by the departure of skilled workers have created a pool of new skilled workers who could find themselves in direct competition for jobs with returning workers.

The returning workers are expected to encounter other problems, too.

"Their problems will be acute because incomes and the quality of jobs in many cases will have to fall," Assad said.

On a larger scale, if the net flow of workers to the Middle East drops substantially, Pakistan could be hard pressed to find a substitute for the $2 billion a year these workers send home.

But some experts, including the World Bank's Burki, predict annual growth of 10 percent in the labor demands of Persian Gulf countries thr3ough the end of the decade.

Meanwhile, the government is attempting to tap the savings built up out of money the workers send home.

The government has bought a $3.5 million dairy products plant, situated about 250 miles southwest of here in Multan, and hopes to sell shares to the returning workers.

"The idea is for the government to slowly disinvest and possibly get returning workers involved in running it," Assad said.

Economists split over interest rates, auto production up

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

A leading economist and a prominent banker split sharply Thursday on the outlook for interest rates in the next few months and at what point lower rates will permit economic revival.

Meanwhile, a trade journal said domestic automobile production had reached its highest level of the year, and analysts predicted that motorists will be paying more for gasoline at the pump following recent increases in wholesale prices.

Wall Street economist Henry Kaufman, in a speech to a bond conference in Venice, Italy, said current fiscal and monetary policies in the United States threaten to send long-term interest rates back to record highs, derailing economic recovery this year.

Kaufman, whose speech was released in New York, said the combination of federal deficits exceeding $100 billion and Federal Reserve Board efforts to restrain monetary growth will produce more "crowding out."

Crowding out is a term used to explain the competition between corporate and municipal borrowers in the bond markets for the limited funds left after the federal government finishes its heavy borrowing to finance the federal debt. That competition has led borrowers to offer record-high interest rates on their bonds to attract investors.

Kaufman, of Salomon Brothers Inc., said the only way for the economy "to break out of its sputter-and-spurt syndrome" is for Americans to oppose "fiscal laxity" by the government and urge a less-volatile monetary policy by the Federal Reserve.

But at a board of directors meeting in Sao Paulo, Brazil, John F. McGillicuddy, chairman of Manufacturers Hanover Corp., predicted that interest rates likely will decline moderately and the American economy will recover slowly late this year or early next.

McGillicuddy, however, said the level of interest and economic recovery will depend on what the Congress does with President Reagan's proposal for large cuts in the deficit.

He said if Congress accepts Reagan's proposal for large deficit cuts, interest rates will decline from the present prime rate of 16.5 percent to 10 percent or 12 percent by the end of the year or early 1983. But he said Congress is likely to settle for smaller cuts, and, therefore, "interest rates will likely decline only moderately, and recovery will be slow."

The prime is that base used by banks to calculate interest on loans to their best corporate customers. The prime does not directly affect consumer loan rates, such as interest on home or car loans, but consumer rates generally follow the direction of the prime.

Tipperary, Devco sign agreement

Tipperary Corporation has reported the signing of a letter of intent with Devco International, Inc., and Southland Oil and Gas Corporation for the sale of its Denton ammonia and gasoline plants in Lea County, New Mexico for $5.5 million in cash.

The sale is part of Tipperary's program to sell nonearning or low rate of return assets. The proceeds will be used to reduce high interest debt.

LAKEFRONT RANCH

Lake Whitney, Texas

"It's hard to imagine a privately-owned 'millionaire's ranch' property like this exists, so close to Dallas . . ."

This is the unqualified reaction we get from anyone who visits this 5,000 acre ranch that truly has the dramatic quality of a national park.

For openers, we have 4 miles of shoreline on the cleanest blue-water lake in Texas and much of our spectacular lake frontage features majestic 135 foot high bluffs, all facing the sunset. The terrain is lush and rolling with abundant trees, streams, lots of wildlife, 2 private inland lakes, and our own private 8 slip marina on the main (35 mile long) lake.

Talk prisons, too

Gov. Bill Clements said recently he is undecided whether to add consideration of the Texas Department of Corrections' current plight to the agenda for the special legislative session which begins Monday.

The answer is yes, he should do so. If he doesn't do so, in fact, a problem that appears to be in the beginning stages at the present time may grow to critical proportions before legislators have another opportunity to deal with it.

The session was called by Gov. Clements for the purpose of addressing what appeared to be a pressing state problem — the need to abolish the state property tax that funded college construction and to provide an alternate means for financing construction at 17 colleges and universities around the state.

That urgency was reduced significantly, though, when a lawsuit filed against the state by the schools was postponed in recent days. All of a sudden the state has operating room.

Of course that isn't to say that the subject of construction financing for the schools isn't important; it is and legislators already have avoided taking action on two occasions, a fact that does concern representatives of the schools.

Eclipsing the state property tax issue, though, is the urgency of the situation facing the Texas Department of Corrections and, coincidentally, the entire criminal justice system in the state. That situation neared the critical point in recent weeks when TDC officials, faced with a prison population that exceeded 33,900 and a ruling from U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice that, among other things, mandates 40 square feet of space for each prisoner, refused to accept new prisoners until the governor ordered that they do so.

Property tax repeal concerns every Texan, but to a far greater degree so does the continuation of the state's system of criminal justice. Gov. Clements has rightfully said the state cannot and will not allow the prison system to quit accepting prisoners. Such would necessarily wreak havoc with the criminal justice system by placing impossible demands on county and city jails like those in Midland that already are crowded and by allowing a general breakdown of law and order.

There is no question that the governor should expand the special session to include consideration of the prison system's troubles. A solution must be found for the immediate with an eye toward a long-term solution.

Resolving the prison crisis should, in fact, be the number one priority of legislators in the special session. Property tax repeal and college construction funding should be pushed to a back burner, but not so far back that they can't be resolved in the special session.

The flaws of Abscam

Few people could have watched the FBI's film of former Florida Congressman Richard Kelly stuffing Abscam cash into his pockets without feelings of incredulity and revulsion. Yet neither can many people fail to share the corresponding disgust expressed the other day by federal Judge William B. Bryant when he dismissed Kelly's bribery and conspiracy conviction.

The government investigation which led to Kelly's conviction, said Bryant, was "so outrageous that it transcends any standard of fundamental fairness." Using a convicted swindler, the FBI tempted Kelly with its Abscam cash and, when he declined to take the bait, kept trying until it succeeded.

"When improper proposals are rejected in these virtue-testing ventures," Bryant said, "the guinea pig should be left alone. In ordinary real-life situations, anyone who would seek to corrupt a congressman would certainly not continue to press in the face of a rejection for fear of being reported and arrested. The FBI, of course, had no such restraint..."

Bryant's decision, which the government intends to appeal, has no direct effect on the other Abscam convictions, several of which have already been upheld by courts of appeal. But it is, nonetheless, likely to have an influence not only in the many appeals yet to come, but in encouraging the government to pursue criminals, not in busying itself with the creation of new ones.

Bryant's distinction is reasonable. The test, he said, should be the sort of temptation which the individual is likely to encounter in the ordinary course of his activities. "To offer any other temptation does not serve the function of preventing crime by apprehending those who, when faced with actual opportunity, would become criminals. Instead, it creates a whole new type of crime that would not exist but for the government's actions."

When Kelly was arrested two years ago, he lamely tried to explain his acceptance of the FBI's cash by claiming that he had been conducting his own investigation — that he, in effect, was trying to entrap the other guys — a claim that Bryant quite properly characterized as a "bizarre, nearly farcical defense" which didn't have a scintilla of evidence to support it." Yet when the government, in the guise of Arab sheiks, approaches people like Kelly with cash offers seeking to entrap them into criminal conduct, the only difference between its actions and those of the people it entraps is that one of the "investigators" carries a badge while the other does not. But both are engaged in criminal conduct.

Another View:

A disarming rush

A great many America church people are practically stumbling over one another's feet in a rush to promote nuclear disarmament in the United States — not of course, in the Soviet Union, whose tough communist bosses do not put up with such activities.

Not surprisingly, one hotbed of nuclear-freeze sentiment is the Harvard Divinity School, where some 2,000 people including 80 percent of the faculty signed a resolution calling for an immediate halt to nuclear weapons productions and ultimate banning of all such arms.

This would be great if similar resolutions could be circulated and signed in the USSR and brought to the attention of the rulers in the Kremlin.

But as Salient magazine, published by Harvard students, noted: "Doubtless the signatories were possessed of good intentions — which may yet pave the road to the Gulag.

"But apparently the divine wisdom does not extend to understanding that initiatives which may have great influence in the United States, but which can make no headway at all in the Soviet Union, amount to calls for unilateral disarmament.

"And unilateral disarmament is worse than none at all, for it increases the risk of war by making the West a more inviting target."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. tilt to Britain damages Latin relations

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's announced "tilt" toward Britain in the Falkland Islands conflict has caused damage to U.S. interests in Latin America that will take years to repair.

Jack Anderson

The decision was untimely, undiplomatic and unnecessary. It apparently reflected Secretary of State Alexander Haig's predisposition toward the NATO allies, whose forces he once commanded, as opposed to our neighbors and potential friends in the hemisphere.

Much has been written about President Reagan's personal admiration for British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher as a beleaguered fellow conservative. Whether Haig played on this to persuade Reagan of the need for a public announcement of U.S. support for Britain is not clear.

What seems far more likely is that Haig, still influenced by his years at NATO, simply saw a need to make clear that the United States would stand by its NATO allies come what may. The tiny islands in the South Atlantic aren't even on Haig's Europe-oriented strategic chessboard.

Whatever the exact reasons for the decision to come down on Britain's side, the results have been disastrous beyond the wildest imaginings of the White House and the State Department.

By that act alone, Reagan and Haig succeeded in giving overnight credibility to the murderous, neo-fascist thugs who run Argentina. When the Falklands'-Malvinas' crisis first erupted, Argentina stood virtually alone in the hemisphere. Her neighbors, sympathetic though they were to her claims to the disputed islands, were reluctant to align themselves with the undisputed aggressor — especially one run by men who give even right-wing military juntas a bad name.

Tactically, the decision to support Britain was both too late and premature. If U.S. intentions had been made crystal clear to the Argentine junta in advance, the invasion might never have taken place. But once it was too late to stop the overt move, the only sensible course would have been to maintain formal neutrality, at least until all hope of a negotiated settlement was gone.

Had that been done, the peace negotiations would probably be taking place in Washington, instead of the United Nations. Both the British and the Argentines might have been disgruntled at Uncle Sam's posture as the "honest broker." But that would have passed in time.

Now all of Latin America is united in its anger and resentment at what it regards as U.S. championing of old-fashioned colonialism. Always suspect in the eyes of our neighbors to the south, we have given substance to their historical gut feeling that, when the chips are down, the "gringos" will stick together.

The extent of the solidarity behind Argentina was demonstrated at the meeting of the Organization of American States, when even leftist Nicaragua enthusiastically supported the Argentine junta that is its ideological blood enemy. Nicaragua's foreign minister, Miguel D'Escoto, was the first OAS delegate to stand and applaud the speech by his Argentine counterpart, Nicanor Costa Mendez. Cuba has even offered military aid to the Argentine generals.

The catalyst for such unprecedented unity among nations that normally are at odds with one another was Haig's announcement that the United States would support Britain — even, as it turned out, when other British allies were appalled at the stubbornness of the British and the bloodshed it brought. To the sensitive, suspicious Latin Americans, this is a clear case of "U.S. against us."

However and whenever the conflict is ended, it's likely the United States will be regarded by Latin America with more hostility than the British are. Britain, though wrong in Latin-American eyes, at least had a direct interest in the dispute; the United States' announced support of the British was considered a gratuitous insult.

The anti-American sentiment is strongest, of course, in Argentina itself. As one Argentine diplomat observed to my reporter Jon Lee Anderson, "When this is over, and the Malvinas are ours, Argentina and Britain will patch up their differences and things will go on pretty much as before. But relations will be different between us and the United States."

After a year of ardent courtship by the Reagan administration, which led the Argentine junta to agree to support the U.S. anti-leftist actions in Central America, the Argentines understandably feel they have been "used" one more time by Washington. Instead of winning U.S. support over the Falklands'-Malvinas' issue by their offer of help in Central America, the Argentines found that they were abandoned by their supposedly devoted suitor.

The idea of a right-wing Latin-American junta becoming a Soviet ally should be laughable, but the fiercely nationalistic Argentines are not in a laughing mood. They chalk it up as just another insult from the condescending North Americans.

"Sure, we have excellent trade relations with the Soviet Union and with Cuba," the Argentine diplomat said. "But the money we earn from our grain sales to Moscow goes to pay our debts to Washington."

With some bitterness, he pointed out that such criticism of Argentina — without acknowledging the advantage to the United States — is an old Yankee trick. "During World War II, Washington made a big thing out of our neutrality ... In fact, our being neutral insured the safety of the grain and meat cargoes we shipped to Britain ... And then, as now, the money we earned went to pay our debts to Washington."

It is old, barely suppressed resentments like this that the rash decision to support Britain has reawakened throughout Latin America. The damage may be irreparable.

GEORGE F. WILL

Issue of government today is 'purpose'

WASHINGTON — When a college recruits a hotshot football coach or a kid who can get his elbow over a basketball rim, that's news. No one notices when Samuel H. Beer, after a distinguished career at Harvard, becomes Boston College's first O'Neill Professor of Government.

George F. Will

That's O'Neill, as in Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill.

Tip's name has never before been associated with thinking as clear as Prof. Beer offered in his inaugural lecture, "The National Idea in American Politics." Beer takes elegant exception to this assertion in President Reagan's inaugural address: "The federal government did not create the states; the states created the federal government."

That proposition was central to the secessionists' argument before the Civil War. Lincoln argued that the Union created the states as states, and produced whatever independence and liberty they have. But what was at issue then was primarily a theory of authority. Today, the issue is a theory of purpose, a guide to the ends for which power should be used.

Reagan asserted the "compact theory" of the Union. Prior to the Civil War, that was used to justify "nullification" or state "interposition." According to that doctrine, the states, as authors of the federal government, are, individually, the proper judges of when it exceeds its authority. This argument was settled not by argument but by steel. But the essential political impulse of the "compact theory" lives today in the attitude of many conservatives toward the federal government.

America's challenge always has been to refute the theory that democracy is unsuited to a large society, because the central government, which should express national interests, will be dominated by parochial interests.

That problem did not preoccupy Jefferson, because he envisioned a homogenous, generally agricultural society, rather than the complicated commercial society Hamilton envisioned. But Hamilton lacked the poetry to express the romantic element essential to any potent concept of a nation. Lincoln had the poetry; so did Daniel Webster.

Defending the "national idea" in 1830, Daniel Webster cited the Delaware breakwater, an artificial harbor the federal government was constructing near the mouth of Delaware Bay. He argued that none of the neighboring states would have built it because it was not for the sole benefit of any one of them, so only the federal government could do it. But Webster — like Lincoln, and like another romantic nationalist, Edmund Burke — was unsatisfied merely with economic arguments for the central government's central role in American life. Webster urged a more organic concept of the nation — just as Burke had urged Britons to think of the nation as something more than a partnership agreement in trade, and just as Lincoln was to speak of "the mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone."

The Civil War established federal supremacy as a fact, not a theory, and was followed by federal initiatives concerning banking, currency, land, transportation, tariffs, higher education and other matters that promoted national integration. The next two great nationalizers were this century's two greatest presidents.

Teddy Roosevelt called his program for countering the disintegrative effects of industrialism — inequalities and class conflict — "the New Nationalism." And as Beer says, TR's cousin, Franklin's, thematic term was the adjective "national." FDR nationalized economic policy: Henceforth the president would be held accountable for the economy's aggregate performance. He made a minimum material entitlement a national concern. And under him, regional politics increasingly yielded to the national politics of urban and class blocs.

Contemporary conservatism awaits its Burke or Webster — someone who, when he speaks of the nation's expression of itself through the national government, speaks with the soul of a poet rather than a corporate comptroller. Too many conservatives have a crabbed and dispiriting attitude toward the central government. Most Americans — their occasional rhetoric notwithstanding — do not. Watch the faces of families tourning Washington; count the buses bringing high school students on class trips each spring. People visit New York; they make pilgrimages to Washington.

Conservatives worry too little about the disintegrative forces of the commercial dynamism they nurture. America has never suffered from too much unity, or excessive national purposefulness. Conservative rhetoric notwithstanding, the federal interest has never been too strong.

Not surprisingly, the "natural" governing party — the Republicans after the Civil War, the Democrats after the crash of 1929 — is the party that speaks with most conviction for using the federal government as an instrument of national integration. That is something Republicans can learn from the Tip O'Neill Professor.

ART BUCHWALD

Acrimony payments are safety!

The latest census has revealed there are still more people who are married than there are divorced. The only surprise was how many people are still married, but are not living together.

Art Buchwald

I know one named Marylou. She is a friend, and she told me at lunch the other day that she and Archie had been separated for seven years, but had never been divorced.

"How come?"

"Because if he gets a divorce he won't have any excuse not to marry the floozie he's living with."

"Do you mean to tell me Archie is using you to protect himself from having to marry somebody else?"

"That is exactly what he's doing. I heard from friends that he keeps telling everyone that I won't give him a divorce. He portrays me as some kind of vengeful ogre who refuses to give him his freedom."

"And he doesn't pay you for that?"

"Pay me?"

"Of course. He's using you so he doesn't have to make another permanent commitment, and you should be compensated for it."

"How do I do that?"

"You have to ask for Acrimony."

"Is there such a thing?"

"Well, the courts don't recognize it, but that doesn't mean you can't ask for it. I should think you would be entitled to $1,500 a month from Archie in Acrimony payments, as long as you stay married to him. That's a cheap price for him to save himself from another marriage."

"How do I get him to pay it?"

"You go to him and say 'Archie, unless you pay me Acrimony I'm going to tell your girlfriend I'm willing to get a divorce any time you want it.'"

"He'll blow his top," Marylou said.

"Let him. But when he cools down he'll realize it's cheaper to pay you than to get a divorce and marry somebody else. Don't you see where Archie is coming from now? He has the best of both worlds. I'll bet you every time he tells his girl what an obstinate dragon lady you really are, he's laughing all the way to the bed."

"Do you think $1,500 is enough?"

"You could make a deal with him. For $1,500 you'll just keep silent. But if Archie wants insurance, you could ask for $2,000 a month, in which case you'll promise to go around and tell everyone that you'll only give Archie a divorce if you want to get married again. And if he wants to pay the full Acrimony fee of $2,500, you could announce you were converting to Catholicism and Archie could only get a divorce over your dead body."

"He'll accuse me of blackmailing him."

"It's not blackmail. It's marital support. If he wants to keep you as a wife for his own nefarious purposes, he has to support you as a wife."

"Suppose he misses an Acrimony payment?"

"Then you put out the word that you are going to start divorce proceedings. If he really doesn't want to get married again he'll beg, borrow or steal the money to keep you from going through with your threat."

"Do you know anybody who is collecting Acrimony now?"

"I know at least half a dozen women. They were all treated as doormats until they asked for Acrimony. One lady I know gets $3,000 a month, and all she has to do is send her husband a registered letter every 30 days telling him that under no conditions will she grant him a divorce. It's one of the happiest separations I've ever seen.

"The only thing you have to be careful of is when you get a visit from the 'other woman' and she begs you to give your husband up. I know one wife who gave in, and instead of getting $2,000 a month in Acrimony, she was only awarded $750 a month in alimony, and since her husband had to marry the other woman he claims he can't even afford that."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 23, the 143rd day of 1982. There are 222 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 23, 1960, Israel announced that former Nazi official Adolf Eichmann had been captured in Argentina — and would be put on trial in Israel.

Also on this date:

In 1618, the Thirty Years War began — as Bohemian rebels triumphed in Prague.

In 1701, Captain William Kidd was hanged in London after being convicted of piracy and murder.

In 1939, the British parliament approved a plan for an independent Palestine by 1949 — a plan which was later denounced by Jews and Arabs in Palestine.

Ten years ago: President Richard Nixon met with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev for five hours of personal talks in the Kremlin. The two heads of state then signed two pacts pledging cooperation in research on environmental and health problems.

Cyclical fashion: Church, state separation again an issue

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — One of this spring's political fashions is a renewed debate on the question of separation of church and state — particularly in the area of education.

True enough, it's hardly a new fashion — but it's one which seems to never go out of style, and which appears remarkably enduring.

For generations, politicians, lawyers, preachers and citizens have argued over just what the writers of the Bill of Rights meant when they wrote that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof...."

At the time, it probably seemed fairly clear, since most of the American colonists had to be familiar with an official established church — which was the pattern in Europe — and many of them, or their immediate ancestors, had left the Old World because they didn't wish to be part of an official church.

But over the years, a sort of intellectual and legal schizophrenia has developed as successive generations have tried to accommodate changes in society and practice to that 1791 mandate.

Frequently, that struggle has been (particularly in recent years) in the area of education.

Up to the 19th century, education was a function closely tied to religion, with many schools, from the elementary to the university level, created by churches or church organizations.

But during the 19th century, the state began taking over the function of educating its citizens, so that today public education is seen as a principal duty of government — and indeed as a "right."

And public education is celebrated as a cornerstone in the American way of life.

"The most American thing about America," declared Adlai E. Stevenson in 1948, "is the free common school system."

At that time, most Texans probably would have said "amen."

But today, that's not such a sure bet.

For one thing, Texas school children, like school children nationwide, aren't supposed to be saying "amen" in their classrooms, since the U.S. Supreme Court has outlawed prayer in public schools on any organized basis.

That has led to calls for a constitutional amendment to permit voluntary prayer, with a number of Texans in support of that idea.

There also are a number of Texans against the idea — and the debates and arguments over that plan aren't likely to subside soon.

Regardless of the merit, or lack of merit, of that idea, allowing students to pray in schools isn't going to solve the problem faced by the schools.

Banning such praying undoubtedly has contributed to some public unhappiness with the public schools, but that's hardly the sole problem.

Forced busing of students also has angered a number of communities — and had led to calls for a constitutional amendment to prevent the practice.

And very likely the increasing tax burden required to support the public school system is as much a factor as anything else.

Whatever the causes, there seems to be less public support for public schools, at least generally speaking (and admittedly, there are exceptions).

And teachers seem to be sharing the disenchantment as much as anyone — although teacher organizations contend that the schools are doing a good job of educating students, even under difficult circumstances.

But teachers frequently complain they're allowed too little time for teaching too many students, and that too much is being asked from them — with too little support from parents, administrators and the community.

In many parts of Texas, parents — who are themselves the products of the public school system — are placing their children into private schools, and many of those schools are church-related.

Those parents surely listened with interest to President Ronald Reagan's proposal to give tuition tax credits to them.

That proposal has drawn outraged cries from a number of teacher organizations which contend such a plan will foster "elitism" and (in the words of the Association of Texas Professional Educators) "only thwart efforts to serve the youth of this country on a fair and equal basis."

Other groups have argued that such a practice will raise more questions about the separation of church and state.

Texas lawmakers decided some years ago that it's okay to provide "tuition equalization grants" to students attending private (and some of those church-related) universities, despite some arguments that that program was on dangerous ground.

At this point, the outcome of the current debate is unknown — and hard to guess — but it shows that for Texas and the nation, some fundamental questions remain unanswered.

SPEAKING OUT

From Page One to potholes, we have 'modern problems'

By ED THOMPSON

Ed Thompson, executive vice-president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, came to Midland 22 years ago from Dallas. An SMU journalism graduate, Thompson has been with the PBPA 20 years.

When it comes to speaking out, there are so very many areas it is difficult to know just where to begin so, will just start on the front page and work back.

The first thing that comes to mind is — is it really necessary that we be subjected to the Hearst meanderings each Sunday? Personally, the fact that he is buddies with this or that president, or that he and Mr. Rockefeller plan to do so and so or even that he's meeting his wife in Paris is of but passing interest, at most.

If such must be carried, and apparently it must, how about the editorial page for what it's worth. Frankly, most of the locals with whom I've visited about the demise of local news, would just as soon be reading about Andrews, Big Spring, Rankin, Odessa, etcetera written by The Reporter staff and let Copley News fill up what's left.

So far as energy coverage is concerned, the paper has finally done a turnaround and we do appreciate the overall coverage. We're still getting some information on the rest of the world, but not to the exclusion of the Permian Basin. Why not take a similar approach on sports, economics, government and the arts and let the readers react?

For instance, government, and the politics of some, really does need some spotlighting. We get it a bit heavy at times from Washington, and occasionally from Austin, but it really is tough to know that Santa Fe is functioning from our editorial pages. How about some live coverage, from time to time, on all three capitols which directly affect our lives? Mayhap, even an accounting from our senators and congressmen in Washington on some kind of continuing basis, since they've made it so very profitable to keep the shop open year-around. And, let those in Austin and Santa Fe also come out in your pages during their legislative session!

So, having done my bit on the local gazette, for the moment at least, let's turn the spotlight on the magnificent mish-mash called Midland downtown destruction derby. Who in the wild blue-eyed yonder did they get out of the nut house to oversee what is happening? You'd think "Ma" Bell would at least put zippers on 'em, not invite TESCO to get in on the act. First time I've ever seen 'em tear up what they've already torn up. Or, is it just their way of helping keep unemployment down in Midland?

Irregardless, you'd best be on double-guard when approaching downtown. We'd been hearing all about the improved traffic flow, with one way streets. Gad, have you tried to figure out the signs on all that magnificence known as one way. Just about the time you're starting to move, watch out, you've run out of street.

We're assuming Louisiana and Michigan will eventually be extended out to the Andrews highway and Loraine and Colorado to Scharbauer Drive, but it can't happen too soon. In the meantime, while we're learning to understand the cockamamie signs and with every other block torn up, why not eliminate all downtown left turns, except from the one ways. Of course, there are a few drivers in town (obviously kin to the "destroy the street planners") who seem to think that obeying traffic rules pertains to everybody but them. Some seem surprised when they get hit or are arrested — all seem to think they are darlin' in their stupidity.

A little planning in advance, not after the holes are opened, and a lot of genuine courtesy on everybody's part, can go a long way to alleviate much of the trouble and traffic on Texas, Missouri, Wall and Big Spring.

After all, most of the Permian Basin citizenry is well educated and well traveled, but they're earthy as well. Turn your people loose to write it like it is and you might be pleasantly surprised. Try it — you might like it. And thanks for instituting "Speaking Out."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Commendation

To The Editor:

I wish to commend reporter Richard Orr, for the in-depth coverage of incidents involving the Midland police department in recent weeks. For too long these type activities have been kept from the public's attention.

Having resigned from this agency last summer after 16 years service, several in a supervisory capacity, I know incidents of this type are kept quiet if at all possible to prevent embarrassment and possible litigation directed at the department and the city. In view of the incidents coming to light I hope the citizens realize the problems which exist in the police agency. The excessively high turnover rate of experienced personnel is a disgrace, and should alert citizens that something is very wrong. These officers are not always leaving because of low pay as city officials always allege. They are leaving because of frustration with conditions inside the agency, unfair promotions and administrative turmoil to name a few.

Officers are prevented from expressing their displeasure with existing conditions for fear of reprisals against them by supervisors for speaking out. Many ex-officers have committed this unspeakable infraction, and suffered the consequences. In the fall of 1981, several ex-officers met with a city official and advised him of incidents of undue force on civilians, and other administrative problems in the department. They were assured something would be done and we would be recontacted. No further contact was made, and it does not appear anything was done. I hope this letter prompts ex-officers to speak out with their true feelings of conditions in the agency.

I realize I will be labeled as a disgruntled ex-employee by department officials for this letter, and frankly I am disgruntled I feel with just cause. I am as knowledgeable of conditions inside this agency as anyone.

I do commend the many professional officers fighting the battle to remain true to their profession. Their own agency can inflict more pressure on them than the entire criminal element. I tried to better the system from within and failed in my attempts. I will continue my attempts as a private citizen.

Little help

To The Editor:

For those who find themselves in unfortunate situations requiring emergency room services at Midland Memorial Hospital:

It is our understanding that Midland Memorial Hospital's emergency room doctors are for the most part, flown in from another area. It is with great wonder how these men are chosen to service our area with as many qualified doctors as Midland supports, and why there should be such ineptitude permitted in our emergency room.

On May 8, 1982, around midnight, our 16-year-old daughter was involved in a major accident involving three vehicles. Gratefully there were no fatalities, but treatment was necessary.

The doctor on duty performed no examination, took no X-rays, and with very few questions and discussion, prescribed aspirin and dismissed us, totally ignoring swelling on the forehead, wrenched knees, middle and lower back pain. Subsequently, on Monday I took her to our family doctor and he ordered a series of x-rays and performed a complete examination on her. His findings — fractured ribs and spasms in the lower back.

We are fortunate and truly thankful, but what would have happened if complications were involved such as internal bleeding, a punctured lung or a concussion?

In exchange for the trust Midland residents place in the hands of hospital personnel, thoroughness and exactness is little to ask for in return.

Discrimination

To The Editor:

You suggested in your May 19th, 1982, editorial, all government trust funds (what funds?) be lumped with Social Security.

May I take your suggestion a little further and suggest all retirement funds in this country be lumped with Social Security funds?

Since Social Security was never meant to take care of full retirement — why should only federal employees be so privileged as to have their retirement lumped into a sinking ship? Surely that would be or could be called discrimination.

The 'right' view

To The Editor:

Responding to the "right" view in another letter, I agree with your observation that there are millions of people who share your view of the right approach to planned parenthood, and then there are millions more in this country who feel just as right about taking responsibility for their own family's future.

The world's population problem fortunately doesn't find it's roots in this country — yet. Ninety percent of the world's approximately three billion people are multiplying exponentially out of control. And the violent forces of billions of hungry people are more devastating than any type of conventional defense system short of a worldwide nuclear holocaust (that means us too).

Presently, the planet Earth's food supply can barely support half the world's population if everyone consumed at the level we do in this country.

Worldwide famine is not here in this country — yet. I can think of better ways of surviving my later years in life than watching my two children starve to death. At that risk I am willing to forego the luxury of "old fashioned" thinking and keep an open mind to any solutions however "inhumane" they may appear.

I am offering just another view of the problem.

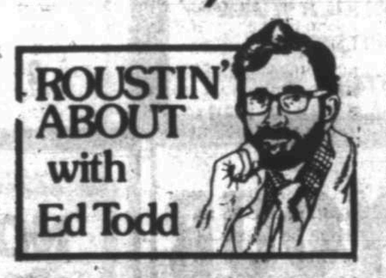
'Viva WPA': FDR's programs live on in some small ways



If any New Deal zealot 40-odd years ago ever cried "Viva WPA," the FDR follower today would be proud of the program's long-lasting effects.

The virtues of the Works Progress Administration and other Roosevelt-era innovations certainly are debatable and will be argued in blindness and enlightenment for as long as New Dealism is recalled. But who can reasonably question the need for the job-creating WPA at the zenith or nadir — depending on your vantage — of the Great Depression?

Aside from the renewed public interest in FDR and his times and programs, evidence of the FDR era are still very much in Midland and this country.

One minor reminder is the imprint "Works Progress Administration" on a sidewalk on Holloway Avenue; it's a mere whisper of the efforts to uplift a great but listing nation. And the significance of that imprint, like the meaning of the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps) stamp on dams and other natural resources-developing projects, is, of course, in the era; benefits have outlived many of the projects' visionaries, inventors, designers, planners, engineers and workers.

But another point is the apparent quality of workmanship. The WPA sidewalk, though mere concrete, is without flaw and has weathered the years; its sound workmanship is evident. Now, the quality workmanship may be credited more to the high-mindedness of craftsmen and artisans than to the WPA.

Doubtlessly, broke breadwinners, whose jobs in the free-enterprise market were wiped out in the wake of the Big Crash, were grateful for having work and a livelihood.

The WPA and the CCC proved vital to the survival of free-enterprise. And anybody who would cast aspersions, which reek of ills of socialism, on the programs certainly is not being just; free-enterprise, too, is vulnerable.

WPA, CCC and WWII really got the government and the people entwined. But the socialistic trends, such as is evidenced in Social Security, and the government's and bureaucracy's continued mingling in the marketplace cannot be blamed or credited entirely to FDR, though certainly he gave impetus to government-sponsored self-help programs.

Today, the the nation's investing countrymen are playing Russian roulette on the stockmarket and are banking that they'll escape the Big Bang and reap big fortunes. Their forefathers were doing that in '29. And some "victims," who helped bring about their own financial fall and who elected not to jump out of office buildings and dramatically end life on Wall Street, probably wound up among the grateful millions who toiled under the banner of WPA and CCC.

NATO makes far-reaching decision

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — In a move of far-reaching significance for the global security of Atlantic Alliance members, NATO has made an unprecedented decision which, in effect, recognizes the right of the United States to provide military aid to Great Britain in its undeclared war with Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

A spokesman for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization told the Hearst Newspapers by telephone from NATO headquarters in Belgium that a decision reached earlier this month provides that NATO members may assist militarily in deterring aggression outside the NATO security area.

The decision, reached by defense ministers of the 15 NATO countries, also states that member nations "may be required to facilitate out-of-area (military) deployments in support of the vital interest of all."

That covers the Reagan administration's decision to provide military aid to the British naval task force which is deployed off the Falkland Islands and engaged in attacking the Argentine forces on those islands.

Consultations are underway between the American and British Governments on U.S. military aid to the British naval force. The extent of such aid will depend on Britain's needs.

Pentagon officials refused to confirm or deny published reports that under contingency planning for such aid, the U.S. has earmarked a wide range of arms, including missiles and radar, for transfer to the British forces if they become bogged down in a long winter conflict with Argentina over the Falklands.

However, it is no secret in Washington that the American government is already extending what is, in effect, military aid to Britain in its war with Argentina. Pentagon sources confirmed that several U.S. aerial tankers have been assigned to Britain to replace British planes sent to Ascension Island, from where they provide in-flight refueling for Vulcan bombers and Nimrod radar planes participating in the Falkland operations.

Nor is it any secret that the U.S. has been supplying intelligence information to Britain on Argentine naval movements. This intelligence support is reported to have been extended to include information on weapons sold to Argentina.

Following collapse of the American government's mediative efforts to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the Falkland's dispute, Secretary of State Alexander Haig announced April 30th that President Reagan had "directed that the U.S. will respond positively for requests for material support for British forces." While Haig said there would be no direct American military involvement in the fighting, "material support" covers the supply of weapons and other military aid that might be needed by Britain.

The NATO decision to authorize its members to extend military aid to nations resisting aggression outside the NATO security zone in Europe is one of the most important steps taken by the Atlantic Alliance since its creation in 1949.

Furthermore, the decision provides that military aid can be extended outside the NATO area not only to NATO members but to any nation resisting aggression. It also implies that an Atlantic Alliance member can withdraw forces assigned to NATO to provide such aid anywhere in the world.

The text of the Defense Ministers' decision states that in "military operations in areas outside of NATO" that have "the potential to threaten the vital interests of members of the alliance" the member nations shall be "able to contribute either directly or indirectly to the effect of deterring aggression and to respond to requests by nations outside the NATO area to help in resisting threats to their security or independence."

For example, the NATO decision would allow the U.S. to withdraw forces from Europe to support defense of the Middle East oil supplies from a Soviet threat or an attempt by radical, anti-western revolutionary movements to overthrow the Persian Gulf sheikdoms. A specific reference is made in the decision statement to "the U.S. concept of Rapid Deployment Forces."

However, the immediate effect of the NATO decision is to approve American military aid to Britain in its war with Argentina.

Storm window installation suggested

Old man winter has gone on vacation, and summer's West Texas furnace is here for a visit. Midland Building Specialties suggests installing storm doors and windows to help ease the pain of those sky-high cooling costs. The necessity of having highly effecient, energy-saving storm windows cannot be overemphasized.

Properly installed, energy-effecient windows create a pocket of air between themselves and the regular window. This air pocket remains at a fairly constant temperature year-round. Therefore, during those hot, dry summer months ahead, coiled air remains inside your house, while the hot summer heat stays outside where it belongs. Likewise, during those cold winter months to come, heated air remains in the house as cold weather stays outside. By keeping your cool air in the house, your air conditioner has to work less, saving you money on high repair bills and energy used to cool your house.

The professionals at Midland Building Specialties, 904 West Front Street, would be happy to help you save money on repair and utility bills. They also give free estimates. Professional work guarantees you a reliable job and tremendous savings on your bills.

Frames for the energy-effecient windows are available in white, bronze, or natural aluminum colors. Glass comes in clear, grey tint, bronze tint, or sunglass.

One of the most important things to remember about energy-effecient windows is that they must fit properly in order to work well. Here, again, is where professionalism at Midland Building Specialties stands out.

Managing economy is federal government's responsibility

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Managing the economy to get the largest number of people working is a preeminent responsibility of the federal government. Changes in economic conditions determine presidential popularity — or lack of it — and the outcome of congressional elections.

Political control of the nation, therefore, is closely tied to economic conditions.

The latest unemployment statistics show the total number of jobless Americans at more than 10 million, or some 9.4 percent of the work force, the highest rate since 1941. For the present, the cost of unemployment benefits is taking its toll on government treasuries.

The latest statistics showed the unemployment rate for black teenagers at 46 percent, more than double the rate for white teenagers; unemployment among auto and construction workers at 17 to 18 percent, more than three times the rate for farm workers; and the rate for women who, with no husband present, maintain families, at 10.6 percent, compared with 5.5 percent for married men.

Unemployment is the biggest public worry now, topping inflation. With the number of unemployed people continuing to rise and major corporations still announcing labor force cutbacks, the situation is becoming desperate, especially in the Northeastern states where unemployment is the highest in the nation.

However, except for places like Texas and Oklahoma, all across the country state unemployment reserves are now being drained off steadily. In the first quarter of 1982, 10 states with heavy unemployment had to borrow more than $1.9 billion from the federal Treasury to meet weekly payments to the jobless. As a result, the unemployment trust fund, which finances the federal-state program, faces a $22 billion debt by the end of fiscal 1984.

In addition, more than 628,000 unemployed in 31 states stand to lose their eligibility for unemployment compensation in the next few weeks unless Congress acts quickly to extend benefits. At present, benefits cover 26 weeks of regular payments and 13 weeks of extra payments.

High unemployment during the 1970s prompted Congress to extend the period in which the unemployed could receive jobless benefits. But this year, concern over mounting budget deficits have made any spending increases difficult to sell.

The word on Capitol Hill is that unless conditions change considerably, pending proposals for emergency unemployment benefits will be doomed.

Even the most modest plan for repealing last year's cuts would cost $1 billion in fiscal 1983. The administration has strong support from much of the business community in its opposition to more spending on unemployment benefits.

It is a fairly sure bet that unemployment will figure more in campaign rhetoric than in legislative action this year.

It seems, however, that the Democrats, though anxious to illustrte the failings of Reagonomics, are doing it reluctantly.

"I don't think there's any need to play it up. It's there," said Rep. Tony Coelho (D.-Calif.), who is chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. "Even people who have no likelihood of losing a job are concerned because they see others who are out of work. There's an anxiety that's building."

Seattle maintains most women-owned businesses

By Brenda Fine
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — What does Seattle have that no other American city can claim?

The answer may surprise you — it's not the Space Needle, or the football Seahawks, or the Olymic Mountains — although all those treasures are, indeed, Seattle's own.

Seattle has a corner on the women-owned business market. Statistics on growth figures in that area make the rest of the country appear to be standing still.

The 1981-82 issue of Gulf Oil's "Women-Owned Business Directory" lists some 800 such businesses nationwide. Of those 800, 157 are located in the greater Seattle area, including suburban Bellevue.

Obviously, there are more than just 800 businesses owned by women throughout the entire United States. What Gulf's directory pinpoints are those businesses with some relevancy to their own industry. Which explains the abundance of such categories as "Contracting, Electrical," and "Supplies, Industrial," and "Security Services" and relatively few in the "Catering" or "Flower Shop" type of so-called women-oriented categories.

But figures are figures — and these would certainly seem to indicate that something interesting is going on in Seattle.

"I'd have to say it's because we have excellent networking and support systems," analyzed Gail Forde, President of Forde & Associates, a Seattle placement agency. "But I never realized we were anything unusual out here," she said. "Let's just say maybe women here are more assertive."

Assertiveness is one of several attributes singled out by Dr. Arthur A. Witkin, chief psychologist for the Personnel Sciences Center in New York, in support of his claim that women executives excel over their male counterparts in many areas. His observations are based on results of psychiatric tests and personal evaluational experiences.

Witkin points out that "women are generally superior in 'independence.' " They can, he believes, "make decisions without committees to support their decisions; and they possess an emotional detachment that allows them to view themselves and their surroundings objectively." As for assertiveness, he believes that this "results in an ability to react to criticism without sensitivity."

How do those Seattle go-getters themselves analyze the situation? Gail Forde, a member of the Seattle Women Business-Owners Association, decided to let her fellow members in on the news that they were spearheading the nation's women's entrepreneurial movement. While none of them had been consciously aware that other cities were lacking in what Seattle has in such abundance, each woman questioned was quick to give a share of the credit to the strong support given by other Seattle women.

"Support groups are very important in reaching goals, and we have many," asserts Sheryl Boileau, vice president and part owner of Verdon, Inc., jewelers. "Seattle is small enough to network with other women and to feel that you know people," explained Andrea Cook, a self-employed attorney. This belief was echoed by Jane Gerhardt, the owner and director of Gerhardt Research. "Seattle is a smaller city and yet it is worldly and open to new ventures."

Not only to new ventures, it would seem, but also to ventures that depart radically from "acceptable" businesses for women.

Take Patricia Goffette, for example, a general contractor who brought to her venture a remarkable backlog of past working experiences — bookkeeping, soil engineering, construction — all ideally suited to provide back-up for the contracting business. She began by building houses on spec, and now is so busy that about half her orders are for custom-designed houses.

"But it wasn't always easy," she recalls. "The first strike against me was that I'm a woman contractor. The second, that I'm a Polish woman contractor. However," she adds wryly, "so far I haven't yet built any houses upside down."

Perhaps the most eloquent summation of the Seattle situation was Sylvia Hedgebeth's. Hedgebeth, who heads a public relations firm, believes that a combination of several factors adds up to the magic whole.

CENSUS

You don't have to ask Washington for census statistics any more.

Now the numbers that help America's businesses and governments run better are available closer to home — in your state capital or perhaps even in your neighborhood public library.

In cooperation with state governments, the Commerce's Department's Bureau of the Census has developed a network of 44 State Data Centers that offers facts and figures from the bureau, other federal agencies and state sources.

Under a voluntary, cooperative agreement between the bureau and each state government, each State Data Center receives free copies of each census publication, microfiche, map, and summary computer tape produced for that state. In exchange for receiving these data products, each state sets up a depository for the materials, usually in an existing branch of the state government, a state university, or library.

In California, for example, the information can be obtained from the State Census Data Center, Department of Finance, Sacramento; in New York, from the Division of Economic Research & Statistics, State Department of Commerce; in Maryland, from Department of State Planning and Massachusetts from the Center for State Data, Executive Office of Communities & Development; in Washington, from Forecasting & Estimating Division, Office of Financial Management in Olympia, while in Texas from the Governor's Office of the Budget.

The latest data available includes such facts as:

— Highly educated American women appear to delay motherhood to accommodate their education and career goals;

— Housing costs shown in the 1980 census for owners and renters reflect increases in home values, mortgage payments, real estate taxes, utilities, fuels and rents. The 1980 median monthly housing costs for homeowners in mortaged units increased by 112 percent over the 1970 costs — from $172 a month in 1970 to $365 in 1980;

— Provisional 1980 census figures on income, poverty, education and housing for states and Metro areas

— Population highlights, including one parent families, growth of nonfamily households, commuting, education, and the labor force;

— The fact that the nation has gained 4.4 million persons since the 1980 census was taken, with the resident population estimated at 231 million, up from 226.6 million exactly two years ago;

— The median value of owner-occupied single-family homes built since 1970 was $67,300;

— Americans continue to identify with their ancestral roots and native tongues, with 83 percent of individuals surveyed reported at least one specific ancestry, and

— An incredible collection of data found in the Statistical Abstract of the U.S. — 1981, including facts that the number of Americans 65 and older increased by 28 percent and total farmlands under foreign ownership in the U.S. was 6.7 million acres.

LEGISLATION

A bill designed to address the short-term problems of the nation's thrift institutions while the process of deregulating the financial industry continues has been introduced by Senate Banking Chairman Jake Garn of Utah.

Among other measures affecting business and industry in the congressional hoppers are proposals to:

— Provide adequate funding for research on the Eastern Russet potato, Gypsy Moth control, soil conservation, farm safety, brucellosis control and the Federal Grain Inspection Service;

— Set tariff rates for fresh cut roses imported into this country at the same levels as those imposed by the European Economic Community and establish a moratorium until the year 2000 on offshore oil and gas drilling on the central and northern California coastline, both proposed by Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D.-Calif.

— Require federal agencies with research and development budgets in excess of $100 million to establish small business innovative research progams;

— For businesses with 20 or fewer employees eliminate the minimum wage, OSHA jurisdiction, reduce the corporate income tax to a flat 5 percent, allow cash accounting and eliminate Social Security taxes, and — Strengthen penalties for violating minimum wage.

S&P has placed nation's largest companies on list

By JACK SEARLES
Hearst Feature Service

Some of the nation's largest companies — from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to F.W Woolworth and General Telephone of California — have been placed on Standard & Poor's Corp.'s "CreditWatch," a list primarily made up of firms whose bonds and other debt instruments may be downgraded due to recent setbacks or uncertainties.

The recession, as might be expected, is responsible for CreditWatch having grown to some 50 companies and public agencies. The vast majority of these – more than 30 — are listed as "negative," meaning their credit ratings are in danger of being lowered.

Byron Klapper, the S&P executive who produces the list, won't say exactly how its current length compares with former years, since the information was kept secret among company analysts until last November. "There's no question that it's been growing, though," he concedes.

In past weeks, such well-known corporations as Woolworth and Zenith Radio Corp. have been added to the "negative" category because losses and other recent setbacks have clouded the quality of their credit.

In January, many Wall Streeters were shocked to learn that the bonds of giant American Telephone and some of its units had been listed as "developing" on the S&P list.

"That means we're watching them closely," Klapper explained. "Their rating could either be raised or lowered. Several factors, especially the proposed spinoff of local Bell companies, have raised some uncertainties about AT&T."

S&P, which along with Moody's Investor Service is one of the two leading bond appraisers, decided to make CreditWatch public because high interest rates and the recession were making credit markets more and more volatile, Klapper said. "We felt that investors need to know which companies and agencies we were watching especially closely."

Sophisticated investors in bonds as well as the stock market have been following the list, which is updated weekly in S&P's Credit Week magazine. A company's stock usually reacts as much as its bonds to changes in its financial condition.

Klapper pointed out that just because a company isn't on CreditWatch doesn't mean it's in great shape. Nor does every company listed end up having its rating changed.

"You won't find Marathon Oil on the list, but both it and U.S. Steel were there early this year when their merger was pending. We removed U.S. Steel without making a change, but Marathon's senior debt and commercial paper were lowered."

Dallas is least expensive city for family of four

By JEAN BLEVINS
Hearst Feature Service

According to the U.S. Department of Labor's Urban Family Budgets, the most expensive metropolitan area in the continental United States for a family of four with an intermediate budget is New York. The least expensive is Dallas.

The budget for that family — a hypothetical 38-year-old employed father, a wife who does not work outside the house, a 13-year-old son and an 8-year-old daughter — is nationally $25,407.

In New York, the amount is $29,540. In Dallas, it is $22,678.

The major reason for the difference between those two cities, according to Sharon Cohany, an economist with the Bureau of Labor Statistic's Southwest Regional Office in Dallas, is taxes.

"Texas doesn't have a state and local income tax," she said. "What replaces this revenue source in Texas is a tax on oil and gas as it leaves the ground. This is a major revenue source in Texas."

For the intermediate family of four, income taxes in Dallas are $2,877 and $6,586 in New York.

Samuel Ehrenhalt, regional commissioner for the Bureau of Labor Statistic's Region II office in New York, agreed that housing and income tax costs are two major reasons for higher New York costs. He said food also is a factor.

"The density of development means land is very expensive," Ehrenhalt said. "That raises the cost of a place to live or do business. And we're in the snow belt here, which means more insulation — meaning higher building costs — and more expenditure for fuel. It all adds up in housing costs."

Storm window installation suggested

Old man winter has gone on vacation, and summer's West Texas furnace is here for a visit. Midland Building Specialties suggests installing storm doors and windows to help ease the pain of those sky-high cooling costs. The necessity of having highly effecient, energy-saving storm windows cannot be overemphasized.

Properly installed, energy-effecient windows create a pocket of air between themselves and the regular window. This air pocket remains at a fairly constant temperature year-round. Therefore, during those hot, dry summer months ahead, coiled air remains inside your house, while the hot summer heat stays outside where it belongs. Likewise, during those cold winter months to come, heated air remains in the house as cold weather stays outside. By keeping your cool air in the house, your air conditioner has to work less, saving you money on high repair bills and energy used to cool your house.

The professionals at Midland Building Specialties, 904 West Front Street, would be happy to help you save money on repair and utility bills. They also give free estimates. Professional work guarantees you a reliable job and tremendous savings on your bills.

Frames for the energy-effecient windows are available in white, bronze, or natural aluminum colors. Glass comes in clear, grey tint, bronze tint, or sunglass.

One of the most important things to remember about energy-effecient windows is that they must fit properly in order to work well. Here, again, is where professionalism at Midland Building Specialties stands out.

Managing economy is federal government's responsibility

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Managing the economy to get the largest number of people working is a preeminent responsibility of the federal government. Changes in economic conditions determine presidential popularity — or lack of it — and the outcome of congressional elections.

Political control of the nation, therefore, is closely tied to economic conditions.

The latest unemployment statistics show the total number of jobless Americans at more than 10 million, or some 9.4 percent of the work force, the highest rate since 1941. For the present, the cost of unemployment benefits is taking its toll on government treasuries.

The latest statistics showed the unemployment rate for black teenagers at 46 percent, more than double the rate for white teenagers; unemployment among auto and construction workers at 17 to 18 percent, more than three times the rate for farm workers; and the rate for women who, with no husband present, maintain families, at 10.6 percent, compared with 5.5 percent for married men.

Unemployment is the biggest public worry now, topping inflation. With the number of unemployed people continuing to rise and major corporations still announcing labor force cutbacks, the situation is becoming desperate, especially in the Northeastern states where unemployment is the highest in the nation.

However, except for places like Texas and Oklahoma, all across the country state unemployment reserves are now being drained off steadily. In the first quarter of 1982, 10 states with heavy unemployment had to borrow more than $1.9 billion from the federal Treasury to meet weekly payments to the jobless. As a result, the unemployment trust fund, which finances the federal-state program, faces a $22 billion debt by the end of fiscal 1984.

In addition, more than 628,000 unemployed in 31 states stand to lose their eligibility for unemployment compensation in the next few weeks unless Congress acts quickly to extend benefits. At present, benefits cover 26 weeks of regular payments and 13 weeks of extra payments.

High unemployment during the 1970s prompted Congress to extend the period in which the unemployed could receive jobless benefits. But this year, concern over mounting budget deficits have made any spending increases difficult to sell.

The word on Capitol Hill is that unless conditions change considerably, pending proposals for emergency unemployment benefits will be doomed.

Even the most modest plan for repealing last year's cuts would cost $1 billion in fiscal 1983. The administration has strong support from much of the business community in its opposition to more spending on unemployment benefits.

It is a fairly sure bet that unemployment will figure more in campaign rhetoric than in legislative action this year.

It seems, however, that the Democrats, though anxious to illustrte the failings of Reagonomics, are doing it reluctantly.

"I don't think there's any need to play it up. It's there," said Rep. Tony Coelho (D.-Calif.), who is chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. "Even people who have no likelihood of losing a job are concerned because they see others who are out of work. There's an anxiety that's building."

Seattle maintains most women-owned businesses

By Brenda Fine
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — What does Seattle have that no other American city can claim?

The answer may surprise you — it's not the Space Needle, or the football Seahawks, or the Olymic Mountains — although all those treasures are, indeed, Seattle's own.

Seattle has a corner on the women-owned business market. Statistics on growth figures in that area make the rest of the country appear to be standing still.

The 1981-82 issue of Gulf Oil's "Women-Owned Business Directory" lists some 800 such businesses nationwide. Of those 800, 157 are located in the greater Seattle area, including suburban Bellevue.

Obviously, there are more than just 800 businesses owned by women throughout the entire United States. What Gulf's directory pinpoints are those businesses with some relevancy to their own industry. Which explains the abundance of such categories as "Contracting, Electrical," and "Supplies, Industrial," and "Security Services" and relatively few in the "Catering" or "Flower Shop" type of so-called women-oriented categories.

But figures are figures — and these would certainly seem to indicate that something interesting is going on in Seattle.

"I'd have to say it's because we have excellent networking and support systems," analyzed Gail Forde, President of Forde & Associates, a Seattle placement agency. "But I never realized we were anything unusual out here," she said. "Let's just say maybe women here are more assertive."

Assertiveness is one of several attributes singled out by Dr. Arthur A. Witkin, chief psychologist for the Personnel Sciences Center in New York, in support of his claim that women executives excel over their male counterparts in many areas. His observations are based on results of psychiatric tests and personal evaluational experiences.

Witkin points out that "women are generally superior in 'independence.' " They can, he believes, "make decisions without committees to support their decisions; and they possess an emotional detachment that allows them to view themselves and their surroundings objectively." As for assertiveness, he believes that this "results in an ability to react to criticism without sensitivity."

How do those Seattle go-getters themselves analyze the situation? Gail Forde, a member of the Seattle Women Business-Owners Association, decided to let her fellow members in on the news that they were spearheading the nation's women's entrepreneurial movement. While none of them had been consciously aware that other cities were lacking in what Seattle has in such abundance, each woman questioned was quick to give a share of the credit to the strong support given by other Seattle women.

"Support groups are very important in reaching goals, and we have many," asserts Sheryl Boileau, vice president and part owner of Verdon, Inc., jewelers. "Seattle is small enough to network with other women and to feel that you know people," explained Andrea Cook, a self-employed attorney. This belief was echoed by Jane Gerhardt, the owner and director of Gerhardt Research. "Seattle is a smaller city and yet it is worldly and open to new ventures."

Not only to new ventures, it would seem, but also to ventures that depart radically from "acceptable" businesses for women.

Take Patricia Goffette, for example, a general contractor who brought to her venture a remarkable backlog of past working experiences — bookkeeping, soil engineering, construction — all ideally suited to provide back-up for the contracting business. She began by building houses on spec, and now is so busy that about half her orders are for custom-designed houses.

"But it wasn't always easy," she recalls. "The first strike against me was that I'm a woman contractor. The second, that I'm a Polish woman contractor. However," she adds wryly, "so far I haven't yet built any houses upside down."

Perhaps the most eloquent summation of the Seattle situation was Sylvia Hedgebeth's. Hedgebeth, who heads a public relations firm, believes that a combination of several factors adds up to the magic whole.

CENSUS

You don't have to ask Washington for census statistics any more.

Now the numbers that help America's businesses and governments run better are available closer to home — in your state capital or perhaps even in your neighborhood public library.

In cooperation with state governments, the Commerce's Department's Bureau of the Census has developed a network of 44 State Data Centers that offers facts and figures from the bureau, other federal agencies and state sources.

Under a voluntary, cooperative agreement between the bureau and each state government, each State Data Center receives free copies of each census publication, microfiche, map, and summary computer tape produced for that state. In exchange for receiving these data products, each state sets up a depository for the materials, usually in an existing branch of the state government, a state university, or library.

In California, for example, the information can be obtained from the State Census Data Center, Department of Finance, Sacramento; in New York, from the Division of Economic Research & Statistics, State Department of Commerce; in Maryland, from Department of State Planning and Massachusetts from the Center for State Data, Executive Office of Communities & Development; in Washington, from Forecasting & Estimating Division, Office of Financial Management in Olympia, while in Texas from the Governor's Office of the Budget.

The latest data available includes such facts as:

— Highly educated American women appear to delay motherhood to accommodate their education and career goals;

— Housing costs shown in the 1980 census for owners and renters reflect increases in home values, mortgage payments, real estate taxes, utilities, fuels and rents. The 1980 median monthly housing costs for homeowners in mortaged units increased by 112 percent over the 1970 costs — from $172 a month in 1970 to $365 in 1980;

— Provisional 1980 census figures on income, poverty, education and housing for states and Metro areas

— Population highlights, including one parent families, growth of nonfamily households, commuting, education, and the labor force;

— The fact that the nation has gained 4.4 million persons since the 1980 census was taken, with the resident population estimated at 231 million, up from 226.6 million exactly two years ago;

— The median value of owner-occupied single-family homes built since 1970 was $67,300;

— Americans continue to identify with their ancestral roots and native tongues, with 83 percent of individuals surveyed reported at least one specific ancestry, and

— An incredible collection of data found in the Statistical Abstract of the U.S. — 1981, including facts that the number of Americans 65 and older increased by 28 percent and total farmlands under foreign ownership in the U.S. was 6.7 million acres.

LEGISLATION

A bill designed to address the short-term problems of the nation's thrift institutions while the process of deregulating the financial industry continues has been introduced by Senate Banking Chairman Jake Garn of Utah.

Among other measures affecting business and industry in the congressional hoppers are proposals to:

— Provide adequate funding for research on the Eastern Russet potato, Gypsy Moth control, soil conservation, farm safety, brucellosis control and the Federal Grain Inspection Service;

— Set tariff rates for fresh cut roses imported into this country at the same levels as those imposed by the European Economic Community and establish a moratorium until the year 2000 on offshore oil and gas drilling on the central and northern California coastline, both proposed by Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D.-Calif.

— Require federal agencies with research and development budgets in excess of $100 million to establish small business innovative research progams;

— For businesses with 20 or fewer employees eliminate the minimum wage, OSHA jurisdiction, reduce the corporate income tax to a flat 5 percent, allow cash accounting and eliminate Social Security taxes, and — Strengthen penalties for violating minimum wage.

Some of the nation's largest companies — from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to F.W Woolworth and General Telephone of California — have been placed on Standard & Poor's Corp.'s "CreditWatch," a list primarily made up of firms whose bonds and other debt instruments may be downgraded due to recent setbacks or uncertainties.

The recession, as might be expected, is responsible for CreditWatch having grown to some 50 companies and public agencies. The vast majority of these - more than 30 — are listed as "negative," meaning their credit ratings are in danger of being lowered.

Byron Klapper, the S&P executive who produces the list, won't say exactly how its current length compares with former years, since the information was kept secret among company analysts until last November. "There's no question that it's been growing, though," he concedes.

In past weeks, such well-known corporations as Woolworth and Zenith Radio Corp. have been added to the "negative" category because losses and other recent setbacks have clouded the quality of their credit.

In January, many Wall Streeters were shocked to learn that the bonds of giant American Telephone and some of its units had been listed as "developing" on the S&P list.

"That means we're watching them closely," Klapper explained. "Their rating could either be raised or lowered. Several factors, especially the proposed spinoff of local Bell companies, have raised some uncertainties about AT&T."

S&P, which along with Moody's Investor Service is one of the two leading bond appraisers, decided to make CreditWatch public because high interest rates and the recession were making credit markets more and more volatile, Klapper said. "We felt that investors need to know which companies and agencies we were watching especially closely."

Sophisticated investors in bonds as well as the stock market have been following the list, which is updated weekly in S&P's Credit Week magazine. A company's stock usually reacts as much as its bonds to changes in its financial condition.

Klapper pointed out that just because a company isn't on CreditWatch doesn't mean it's in great shape. Nor does every company listed end up having its rating changed.

"You won't find Marathon Oil on the list, but both it and U.S. Steel were there early this year when their merger was pending. We removed U.S. Steel without making a change, but Marathon's senior debt and commercial paper were lowered."

Dallas is least expensive city for family of four

By JEAN BLEVINS
Hearst Feature Service

According to the U.S. Department of Labor's Urban Family Budgets, the most expensive metropolitan area in the continental United States for a family of four with an intermediate budget is New York. The least expensive is Dallas.

The budget for that family — a hypothetical 38-year-old employed father, a wife who does not work outside the house, a 13-year-old son and an 8-year-old daughter — is nationally $25,407.

In New York, the amount is $29,540. In Dallas, it is $22,678.

The major reason for the difference between those two cities, according to Sharon Cohany, an economist with the Bureau of Labor Statistic's Southwest Regional Office in Dallas, is taxes.

"Texas doesn't have a state and local income tax," she said. "What replaces this revenue source in Texas is a tax on oil and gas as it leaves the ground. This is a major revenue source in Texas."

For the intermediate family of four, income taxes in Dallas are $2,877 and $6,586 in New York.

Samuel Ehrenhalt, regional commissioner for the Bureau of Labor Statistic's Region II office in New York, agreed that housing and income tax costs are two major reasons for higher New York costs. He said food also is a factor.

"The density of development means land is very expensive," Ehrenhalt said. "That raises the cost of a place to live or do business. And we're in the snow belt here, which means more insulation — meaning higher building costs — and more expenditure for fuel. It all adds up in housing costs."

ARMs require close borrower scrutiny

EDITOR'S NOTE: Ingenious ways to offer "affordable" home mortgages, and so beat prevailing high interest rates, may hide boobytraps that can explode a family's finances — and their dream of owning a home. Here's what to watch out for.

By Jane Hadley
Hearst Feature Service

Adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs), hailed as the mortgage of the 1980s, require close scrutiny by the borrower who does not want an unmanageable debt several years after receiving the loan.

ARMs, in which interest rate, monthly payments and/or loan balance are tied to fluctuations in the price of money, have superseded the traditional 30-year fixed-rate mortgage as the most readily available form of homeowner financing. They solve lenders' problems with inflation by shifting all the risk to the borrower.

Some initial defenders of adjustable rate mortgages said that because of this reduced risk, lenders could offer adjustable rate mortgages at 2 or 3 percentage points below what they would have to charge for fixed-rate loans.

But it hasn't worked out that way. The going rate for most adjustable rate mortgages is often only one-quarter to 1 percent less than that for a fixed-rate mortgage. Consequently, these new loans can't solve the current problem of a 16.5 percent interest rate.

Although many adjustable rate loans have initial monthly payments based on interest rates as low as 10.5 or 11.5 percent, borrowers are really being charged the full 16.5 percent rate, which they must pay later.

With one increasingly common type of adjustable rate mortgage, even if interest rates go down over the next 10 years, the monthly payment and loan balance will still be more in 10 years than they are today.

The need for borrowers to know exactly what they are getting has never been greater. Each mortgage should be studied individually and in detail and not assumed to be "standard."

WATCH OUT FOR TRADE-OFFS

Here are some things borrowers should consider:

— Look for trade-offs. If a lender is offering you a home loan at 11, 12 or 13 percent interest, there is a trade-off somewhere.

If the seller has paid the difference between the 16.5 percent market interest rate and the low rate you're paying, chances are he's added most of that amount onto the price of the home.

In most such "buy downs," the interest rate is not subsidized at a below-market rate for more than two to six years. After that, you're going to be hit with the prevailing market rate.

— Another kind of trade-off can be found in "deferred interest loans" or "graduated payment" loans.

The borrower qualifies for the loan at, say, 11.5 percent, and his monthly payments — initially — are based on an 11.5 percent rate. However, in the background, the meter is running full-speed.

The lender is really charging the borrower the prevailing market rate – 16.5 percent — and will expect the borrower to pay this "deferred interest" eventually.

In most cases, the lender charges monthly interest on the deferred interest. The lender adds the deferred interest onto the loan balance, meaning that the borrower's debt could be growing each month rather than shrinking.

'CAPS' MAY BALLOON PAYMENTS

— Some plans contain "caps" to try to allay consumer fears about unpredictability. That is, the loan contains a limit or cap on the amount the interest rate, monthly payment or loan principal can increase.

Caps generally are considered good features for consumers, but there's a need for caution here, too.

Caps generally are considered good features for consumers, but there's a need for caution here, too.

If a loan plan calls for a cap only on the amount the loan principal can increase, that could have the effect of causing monthly payments to skyrocket.

That's because when the amount you owe is building up, and the cap prevents an addition to the loan balance, the addition naturally will have to be made to the monthly payment.

In this case, the cap is not really protecting the borrower. The borrower still will have to pay because the monthly payment is not capped.

Similarly, if there's a cap on monthly payments but not on the amount the loan balance or interest rate can increase, the borrower could open himself up to an enormous mushrooming of his debt — even though he's faithfully making his monthly payments.

If interest rates are used to figure out how much the borrower owes, it's best for the borrower (1) if the cap is on the interest rate, or (2) if there are caps on both monthly payment and loan balance.

PICK A STABLE INDEX

— The interest rate on an ARM is tied to fluctuations of a given index. There is wide leeway in the indexes lenders can choose to use.

In practice, there are six common indexes. They are: six-month treasury bills, one-year treasury securities, three-year treasury securities, five-year treasury securities, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's monthly survey of interest rates on loans on existing homes and various cost of funds indexes.

According to Jonathan Brown, mortgage specialist at the Public Interest Research Group, a consumer organization based in Washington, the best index for borrowers is the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's existing homes mortgage index. That's because this index is based on interest rates or 30-year home mortgages and therefore tends to be stable.

Consumers should seek long-term indexes since mortgages are long-term, said Brown.

Cost of funds indexes measures the costs lenders have to pay to get funds to lend out. These indexes tend to be stable, said Brown, but they are almost sure to continue rising, even if other parts of the economy remain level or decline.

The treasury securities indexes, said Brown, are not as good for borrowers because they are short-term relative to the life of home mortgages. They can fluctuate sharply, sometimes in reaction to random political events.

— Consumers should watch out for extra fees that might be tacked on by a lender. This is one way some lenders increase their yield or make up for offering lower interest rates.

EXTRAS ADD TO YOUR DEBT

Don't just compare interest rates. Some lenders charge "discount points." Each "point" is 1 percent of the loan amount. If a lender charges 4 points on a $65,000 mortgage, that means the borrower has to pay $2,600 in cash to the lender to get the loan. Points in effect raise the real interest rate of the loan, but by how much depends on how long the borrower keeps the loan.

The earlier the borrower sells or refinances his home, the greater the impact of the points on the cost of the loan.

Loan origination or processing fees traditionally have been about 1 percent of the loan. The higher they are, the more they are boosting the lender's actual yield.

Mortgage insurance required by the lender is another charge that borrowers should take into account when figuring the cost of a loan. Comparing the "annual percentage rate" of loans is one way to compare the costs of different loans.

Lenders also typically tack on other closing fees, such as serving, placement, standby, appraisal, credit check or escrow fees. These also should be considered when comparing interest rates. Borrowers should seek loans without prepayment penalties or at least with low fees for paying off the loan early.

— Consumers should be wary about taking on a loan bigger than they can handle on the assumption that their home will appreciate in value, that interest rates will come down, or that their incomes will go up.

— Borrowers should work out exactly what could happen to them with an adjustable rate mortgage. The borrower should not rely on preprinted "scenarios" given by lenders, which sometimes are drawn up to present the loan in its best light. Though declining interest rates benefit the borrower, it's the worst-case scenario that borrowers must be concerned about.

Know the language

To figure out exactly how an adjustable rate mortgage works, it helps to understand some of the basic terminology.

AMORTIZATION: A schedule for paying off the principal in regular installments within a given period of time.

For example, a $65,000 loan at 16.5 percent interest with a 30-year amortization will have a monthly payment of $900.35. Payment of that amount each month for 30 years will pay off the principal and interest in full.

Loans advertised as having "30-year amortization" are not necessarily loans on which the interest rate will be fixed over 30 years.

NEGATIVE AMORTIZATION: A loan balance that is growing rather than shrinking because monthly payments do not cover all of the charges against the borrower.

Negative amortization is featured in some adjustable rate mortgages and generally occurs when the contract interest rate is higher than the monthly payments cover.

POSITIVE AMORTIZATION: A declining loan balance.

RE-AMORTIZE: To re-figure the monthly pyaments of a loan, using new figures for the loan balance or interest rate or both.

CONTRACT RATE: Also known as accrual rate or note rate. This is the interest rate that actually is being charged for the loan, excluding fees.

In the case of buy-downs, graduated payments or deferred interest loans, the monthly payments may be based on a different rate (often called the payment rate). But the rate the lender is actually charging over the life of the loan, excluding fees, is the contract rate.

DEFERRED INTEREST: Interest charged to the borrower which the borrower does not begin to pay until a later time during the loan term, typically at least three years after the loan is originally made. As it accumulates, the deferred interest is added to the borrower's loan balance and the borrower therefore must pay interest on the deferred interest.

BUY DOWN: A loan in which someone (usually the seller) pays money ahead of time to the lender in exchange for lowering the interest rate for a set period of time on the loan.

For example, under a typical formula for "buying down" a loan, the seller must pay 2.5 points (percent) "up front" for every percentage point of interest brought down over three years.

To get a 15 percent $80,000 mortgage down to 13 percent for three years, the seller would pay the lender $1,500 cash at the time of sale.

After three years is up, the borrower is on his own and is no longer subsidized by the seller.

GRADUATED PAYMENT: Below-market monthly payments in the early years of the loan increasing gradually to above-market rates in the middle and later years. They are geared towards young "upwardly mobile" couples. They are essentially deferred interest loans.

ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE (APR): The effective annual yield the lender is getting from the loan. This figure includes the contract interest rate plus finance fees, such as discount fees (points), loan origination fees and mortgage insurance that protects the lender.

This figure is dependent upon the term (normally 30 years) of the loan.

QUALIFY: Borrowers qualify for a loan when lenders consider their income (and other credit history) sufficient to ensure they will make the monthly payments faithfully.

The traditional "rule of thumb" has been that the monthly payments (covering principal, interest, property taxes and home-owners insurance) should not amount to more than 25 or 30 percent of the borrower's gross monthly income. During the past few years, that rule increasingly has been stretched.

INDEX: A method of charting changes in cost over time. All adjustable rate mortgages use some kind of index to determine adjustments in the interest rate or monthly payments over time.

It is the change in the index, rather than actual index numbers themselves, that are important.

MORTGAGE INSURANCE: There are two kinds of private mortgage insurance, both paid by the borrower. One type protects the lender against loss should the borrower default on the loan. The other protects the borrower should he die or become disabled and be unable to continue mortgage payments on his own.

The borrower takes out the first type only if the lender requires him to, because the lender considers the loan to have a higher than normal risk. Examples of "risky" loans are those in which the borrower makes a low down payment, such as 5 or 10 percent, or loans which involve negative amortization.

Best stocks aren't on the market yet

By NICHOLAS VON HOFFMAN
King Features Syndicate

Some of the best stocks to follow are those that aren't on the market yet. These are the pie in the sky stocks, shares in companies with wonderful ideas and magnificent prospects.

No firm is richer in speculative possibilities than Space Services Inc. of Houston. The firm, which has former astronaut Donald "Deke" Slayton as a consultant, hopes to put up commercial communication satellites at one seventh of the $38 million NASA will be charging private sector customers who want to book passage on the space shuttle Columbia for their equipment. Chicken feed by the standards of an agency like NASA with nearly unlimited government financial backing, Space Services has already spent about $2 million perfecting its rocket. At present the company does not sell any of its stock to the investing public but, as development costs mount, you may have a chance to invest in a potentially profitable sky blue deal.

Another company attempting to do the same thing is Gary Hudson's GCE, Inc. of Sunnyvale, Calif. GCE doesn't appear to be as far along as Space Services, but rumor has it that Mr. Hudson is looking for financial backing so if you are a well-heeled high roller this could be your rocket ride to multiplying your money. In any event, if you're interested in astral exotica, it pays to keep your eye on firms like this so that when they do go public, i.e. start selling their stock on the exchange, you can consider grabbing it while it's still relatively cheap.

Some mad, wonderful financial foolishnesses are already available to you at the cheapest of prices. You might want to take a peek at DNA Medical, recently selling at half a buck a share. This is a company that hopes to be specializing in the disposable paraphernalia that hospitals prefer to equipment that must be washed and sterilized by persons who have to be paid more than the minimum hourly wage. DNA also manufactures a wristwatch style cardiotachometer, that tells the wearer his pulse rate. If you buy the stock and it hits $30 a share some day, you may want one of these devices for yourself.

Another long shot is the Bulb-Miser Corporation of America. These folks sell a device which is supposed to triple the life expectancy of your lightbulbs. The gizmo retails at around $3 and doesn't wear out so that, given the going price of light bulbs, this could be a real dollar saver. Of late the stock has been selling for a penny-pinching price of 9 cents a share.

Bulb-Miser is in a pedestrian business compared to Biosonics, which hopes that it will soon be able to market what it refers to as a MEGS — a Male Electronic Genital Stimulator, a device which is supposed to overcome male impotence. If they've really got a patent on such a thing, the only more marketable product this Fool can think of is bottled water from the Fountain of Youth. Delicacy forbids describing how this device is said to work but somebody must believe in it because shares are going for 28 cents a share. (For more info please write, Biosonics, Inc. 810 Lombard Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19147.)

Of course from the point of view of the savvy investor it doesn't matter whether or not MEGS will be able to do what the good people at Biosonics hope it can. The anticipation that it may can drive up the price of the stock.

If you'd like to invest in a company making something which already exists you want to consider Liberty Homes, which has been selling at around $11 a share of late. That's up 20 plus percent since last autumn. Liberty sells mobile homes, which as we all know, aren't very mobile any more. They get towed to the site where they are going to be used, after which 80 percent of them are never moved again.

If you are of the opinion that interest rates are going to go down some but not as far down as they used to be for home mortgages, a solid mobile home manufacturer like Liberty isn't such a long shot. Liberty's homes run in price anywhere from $8,000 to $30,000 a unit depending on whether it's a double or a single and how fancy it is. Liberty is well priced, for people who have some money but not enough to buy a house built on the site. If you're willing to bet the economy is going to hover somewhere in the middle between awful and wonderful, Liberty may ring the bell.

DOE offers CO2 research

BARTLESVILLE, OKLA. — Research on the use of carbon dioxide in enhanced oil recovery, with emphasis on the fundamental features of displacement and recovery efficiency, is the focus of an annual report published by the Department of Energy.

The 188-page report, "Displacement of Oil by Carbon Dioxide" (DOE/BC/10331-4), was prepared by the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology under contract to DOE. Single copies are available free from the Bartlesville Energy Technology Center, Attention Bill Linville, P.O. Box 1398, Bartlesville, Okla. 74005.

The study centers on measuring the extent to which carbon dioxide mixes with and recovers oil under conditions imposed by several factors of displacement, such as phase behavior and fluid properties of the carbon dioxide-oil mixture.

Book helps women change their financial game plans

"From birth to 18, a girl needs good parents. From 18 to 35, she needs good looks; from 35 to 55, a good personality. After 55, hard cash."

— Sophie Tucker

By Linda Yglesias
Hearst Feature Service

Carole Phillips is used to being the lone woman at bank board meetings and financial planning sessions.

She's equally aware that few women construct total game plans for investing their money. But she wants to change that.

So the 39-year-old economist has written "The Money Workbook for Women," based on a money management course for women that she taught at Temple University. She also has taught finance at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School

In schoolbook binder form with oversize type, the book covers topics from establishing credit to buying stocks. It foregoes technical jargon for common-sense English.

"Women have been intimidated by what they consider 'busy, important' men," said Phillips. In a bank, "they would come in and sit like bumps on a log. 'Here honey,' they would hear. 'Sign here. Here's what we're going to do for you.'"

Of special importance for the woman beginning to analyze her own or her family's finances, Phillips stressed, is for her to realize that the process need not involve big bucks.

A second important realization for the female financial planner is that basic, non-technical information becomes a means of learning how to handle more complex money deals. She learns that she can shop for a loan or insurance; when negotiating her first loan or real estate investment, she knows what questions to ask.

If she has supported her family from her husband's wages, she becomes aware that her husband's retirement plan most likely will not allow her to continue in a lifestyle to which she's accustomed.

Whatever a woman's financial expertise, she shoud be aware that her financial future, despite well-laid plans, may not hold all that it set out to be, Phillips cautions.

One step that would not only expand areas in which a woman can make financial decisions but would also put more money into personal retirement funds would be to extinguish what Phillips defined as an inequity in the current Individual Retirement Account system.

Under present law, the only way that a woman without earned income can open an IRA is if the working husband is willing to set it up, dividing a maximum $2,250 per year between his and her accounts, provided that one account has $250. IRAs in which both husband and wife are working, however, allow savings of $2,000 per person per year, provided each earned annual income is the equivalent of $2,000.

It is important, Phillips noted, for women to have income in their own names. "If she's 55 and her husband leaves her for another woman, she doesn't have to get down on hands and knees."

A second inequity that would keep more money in-pocket affects men and women, said Phillips, but it is generally the woman who is harder hit.

"The marriage tax is absolutely absurd," she said. "The underlying idea that 'married' money is always pooled, therefore treated as a taxable entity, is inaccurate."

A combined income of $50,000 could mean 20 percent more in IRS taxes than two incomes of $25,000, Phillips explained. When she married, she was not in the 50 percent tax bracket, but her husband was. "My money was 50-percent taxable, though I was making less," she said. "I was horrified and angry."

CPI is most widely recognized cost of living index

By Richard Burke
Hearst Feature Service

The Consumer Price Index is probably the most widely recognized index compiled by the U.S. Department of Labor in charting the cost of living throughout the country. It is often the basis for statements by politicians or economists that the cost of living is going up or down. But the index is only one tool to measure such costs and does not show how costs in one area compare to another.

The CPI is based on what a combination of goods and services — called a "basket" — cost in 1967. Every month, labor department researchers check the prices for the same goods and services. The new costs are compared to those of 1967.

The March Consumer Price Index was 283.10, the first decline from a previous month registered in 17 years. That meant goods and services that cost $100 in 1967 cost $283.10 in March 1982.

The index, however, doesn't reflect how much more or less those items actually cost in different areas of the country. For that, the Labor Department uses what it calls Urban Family Budgets.

Department economists figure the costs for a hypothetical family of four: an employed 38-year-old husband, a wife who does not work outside the home, a 13-year-old son and an 8-year-old daughter.

For 15 years, the Labor Department's economists have been charting the expenditures for that family in three income categories: low, intermediate and higher.

The national average showed that in 1967 a family with a low income spent $5,915 for goods and services that included food, housing, transportation, clothing, medical services and miscellaneous items such as recreation, education and income taxes. The latest figures released in April show that the same goods and services cost that family $15,323.

For an intermediate income family, the expense went from $9,076 to $25,407 and for a higher income family it rose from $13,050 to $36,060.

University senior performs mental gymnastics

EDITOR'S NOTE: Arthur Benjamin's his name; magic-mathics is his game. Often able to calculate numbers faster than a machine, this young man has successfully combined a show business personality with rare mathematical abilities. The result: stunning acrobatics of the mind.

By KAY BARTLETT

NEW YORK (AP) — Faster than a speeding microchip (sometimes), a consummate show-off (always), a crack backgammon player (compulsively), Arthur Benjamin is also somewhat of a lyricist, a magician, a comedian, and a master of chutzpah.

This 21-year-old cluster of hyperactivity is a senior at Carnegie-Mellon University where he's studying mathematics — and the school is studying him.

Arthur ("You can call me Art") Benjamin, it seems, can multiply 462 times 318 (or any other three-digit combination times a three-digit combination) faster than a calculator. He can also spout out the square of a three-digit number in about one second and grinds down to 30 seconds when he's asked to come up with the square of a four-digit number.

All, of course, without pencil or paper.

His mother, back in Cleveland, once told a reporter Arthur was a genius and he still grimaces about that, apparently unaware of a mother's inalienable right to label her first born as such. Arthur insists he is not a genius, but having been interviewed once or twice already, has learned to say "no comment" when pressed about exactly what his IQ might be.

He was in the top 10 percent of his high school class and remains there at the more competitive Carnegie-Mellon.

ARTHUR CAME to be studied when a professor in a cognitive psychology class began lecturing about "lightning calculators," people who can perform amazing mathematical gymnastics. Some of the stunning acrobatics of the mind — such as telling the day of the week of a given date centuries ago in a matter of seconds — are simply tricks. Others are true lightning calculations.

The professor asked if anyone knew any tricks.

Arthur didn't do tricks. He did real lightning calculation, multiplying, dividing, squaring any numbers his classmated hurles at him.

He wowed them. Or, as the ever-reserved Arthur put it: "It stood the class on its ear."

None of them, you see, had ever been to his nightclub act where his magic-mathics are just one part of his routine, a routine that is often hilarious, closing with "The Raisin," a wonderful spoof of Edgar Allan Poe's "The Raven."

Arthur's career began when he was 14 and billed himself as "The Great Benjamini." He did magic shows for kids.

"I would make them scream and laugh," he recalls. "Not screaming in fear, but in glee. I would tell the story of 'The Three Little Pigs' and they would growl like the wolf. It doesn't take a wizard to be able to confuse 5-and 6-year-olds.

"TO MAKE them laugh, that's the magic," says Arthur.

The eldest of three children, Arthur was a real "pain in the neck" kid. He drove Mom crazy with questions, mostly abut relationships between numbers and geometric figures. Once he got to school, he took to correcting teachers.

Arthur was given medication to slow him down some, but his memory never rested. He figured out, for instance, that if he multiplied the numbers on the dart board above his head in any way, they always came out to 3,628,800. He memorized the states' names and can still say them in one word that starts out: "Alabamaalaskaa..."

As a result of his classroom displays, Arthur was introduced to William Chase, professor of psychology at Carnegie-Mellon. Arthur is now his research assistant and subject. Chase was interested in how Arthur's brain worked as the numbers came pouring out.

The first thing Chase discovered was that Arthur could retain 18 digits, well above the normal seven unrelated digits a person can remember. This was explainable by a system of mnemonics. Arthur assigns letters to numbers, thus creating words. So if you give him your Social Security number, followed by your telephone number, followed by your age, Arthur can spit it back for you.

But Chase figured that would not allow him to perform the kind of calculations he does. And Arthur had been doing it for so long, he couldn't explain it. He just did it.

CHASE ASKED him to square five digits — something he had never tried — and then tell him what he was doing. Arthur calculates from left to right, which he maintains is the more efficient way. It takes a little longer to learn, but it's better in the end, he says.

"I figured out a lot of relationships with numbers before I was prejudiced by school," he says.

Chase also learned that Arthur constantly clears his memory as he works. Let's say he comes up with the first three numbers of a five-digit square, such as 462 million. He says it out loud, content to let the audience remember it and clearing three more spaces in his brain for memory. When Arthur hits numbers he must reuse later in his calculation, he stores them in the order in which he will need them. Thus, he's constantly making room in his mind for more numbers.

Chase has programmed a computer to simulate Arthur's techniques and the work could lead to new ways of teaching arithmetic as well a better programming of computers.

Arthur first came to the attention of the university when a television crew phoned the school's public relations department about a piece they were doing on the wunderkind.

The public relations department said, "Arthur who?"

And then after a little more publicity, Arthur decided an extra toot or two on his horn never made anybody poorer. He dropped by to see the president of Carnegie-Mellon and allowed as how he had probably given the university a few thousand dollars worth of publicity and maybe the school could oblige with a small stipend....

WHO COULD refuse? Certainly not Carnegie-Mellon.

While figuring out abstract relationships of numbers, Arthur played Frisbee, volleyball (he's a member of Carnegie-Mellon's junior varsity) team, chased girls and always created jobs for himself.

"I decided at 14 I wanted to be a professional showoff," he says.

He's now eyeing the corporate world with the same zest.

He's got a summer job at International Business Machines.

"I can't tell you what it is. I don't want to get fired before I get hired, but it has to do with artificial intelligence.

"And," he can't resist, "I bet I'll be the first IBM going to work for IBM."

How's that?

"IBM. I'm a member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians."

Corita elaborates with paint brush

By ANNE BEATON
Hearst Feature Service

Corita Kent paints with hope. To Corita, work always is an expression of joy and renewal, a celebration of life over pain.

Paul LaPorte, former chairman of the art department at Immaculate Heart College in Los Angeles, where Corita taught for 32 years, says simply: "Corita's world is a world without shadow."

The former nun has produced more than 700 prints using her silkscreen technique. Her works are part of the collections of several leading museums throughout the country.

Corita's early prints in the '50s had a Byzantine flavor in keeping with traditional religious art. But when the turbulent '60s erupted, so did the pop art style for which she now is famous. By the mid-'60s she was being ranked with Jackson Pollock and Andy Warhol.

A tiny, slender woman with high cheekbones, long upswept graying hair and translucent blue eyes, Corita conveyes a sense of tranquility. She is not a verbal person. She chooses her words carefully; they are simple, unadorned.

"There is so much inside us — we just have to tap it," she will say when asked why she works. She doesn't elaborate — except with a paint brush.

With a brush, Corita Kent extends herself. For more than 30 years she has been doing prints with a distinctive mix of bright sharp colors, quotations and graphic symbols — a dove, a rainbow, a heart with the word "Love" beneath it.

She was commissioned to do a 50-foot mural of the Beatitudes in the New Testament for the Vatican Pavilion at the 1964 New York World's Fair. She has done ads and other work for numerous corporations, including IBM and Westinghouse.

At 68, she remains as prolific as ever, turning out 10 to 20 new prints each year. Only twice has she paused: in 1969, when she left the order of the Immaculate Heart of Mary and moved to Boston, and in 1975, when she battled cancer.

The wide exposure her work has received leads some critics to charge she is a commercial rather than a serious artist — a former nun who makes posters. Corita shrugs. "The more people who see my work the better. People are always coming up to me and asking, 'How much time do you spend on your fine art work?' Well, I don't distinguish between the work I do for IBM and the work I do for a museum."

But she wouldn't work for just anyone. She says she has turned down commissions. "It's hard to get up in the morning and not in some way be attached to something you may not completely believe in. But corporations or people with really foul policies? No."

Corita always has strong social convictions. In the '60s her work commented on Vietnam and the political assassinations that wracked the country. Today she is active in the anti-nuclear movement.

"In the '60s everyone took time out to accomplish what needed to be accomplished and then went back to their own thing. With the nuclear movement, it's upon us again."

For 32 years, Corita's sense of activism was defined by her Catholic faith. She grew up in the then-small town of Hollywood, Calif., and at 18 entered the teaching order of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. She taught elementary school and did art on the side, but later moved into art full time and eventually became head of the art department at Immaculate Heart College.

In 1968, Corita left the order and moved to Boston. That year she produced the "Circus Alphabet," a print depicting characters walking a tightrope with an Adlai Stevenson quote: "For freedom demands infinitely more care and devotion than any other system."

She has no regrets about leaving the order. "That way of thinking doesn't work for me anymore. I feel more comfortable belonging to the whole human family. We must learn to live as a community or die."

And being Corita, she is optimistic about the fate of her human family.

"There are many hopeful signs," she says. "Signs of people working together to accomplish change and not just looking up to the big father in the White House. I believe we will make it."

States fear economy bodes them ill

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A national organization of state legislatures has reported that virtually every state legislature meeting this year has had to boost taxes or cut spending because of the deteriorating national economy.

A National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) survey confirmed the findings of a separate study conducted by the National Governors' Association (NGA) which said prospects for an improved economy will continue to be dim unless there is a dramatic drop in unemployment ranks and in high interest rates.

"This nation is in trouble," said a spokesman for the NGA. "The federal budget is in shambles, and each day the economy continues to suffer."

"WITH A BREAKDOWN in negotiations for a bipartisan budget, we continue to believe that defense, indexed entitlements, taxes, tax expenditures and cost of living adjustments must be examined," the spokesman added.

The NCSL survey was taken in the 45 states where legislatures have or are currently meeting to pass budgets.

Of the 45 states, 28 have already approved their budgets, while the remaining 17 are embroiled in bitter fights on whether to hike taxes, slash spending or both to balance their budgets.

State tax action was significant during the first five months of the year, with five states raising personal income taxes, seven states hiking sales taxes, five boosting corporate income levies, three increasing revenues through severance tax, eight raising motor fuel taxes, five alcoholic beverage levies and seven tobacco excise taxes.

States making budget cuts during 1982 did so through across-the-board cutbacks, severe funding reductions in low priority programs or reductions in numbers of state employees.

So far nine states have made across-the-board cuts and nine are planning reductions in the work force.

NCSL completed a 50-state fiscal survey in January which detailed that 30 states were working under deficit scenarios based on declining revenues and other problems caused by the national recession.

"STATE BUDGETS ARE being thrown out of balance because the expected revenues that state lawmakers anticipated when they first formulated the budgets are not flowing into the treasury," a spokesman said.

"Instead, states are sustaining abnormally high unemployment levels and are watching their incoming tax revenues dwindle, while state welfare and unemployment related costs are sharply escalating," he added.

Across-the-board cuts were enacted in Arizona, Idaho, Oregon, Nebraska, West Virginia, Connecticut, Michigan and Kentucky.

States planning reductions in the work force include Florida, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, Idaho, West Virginia, Georgia and Vermont, with most trying to cut their employee ranks through normal attrition and early retirements.

In Washington, a hiring freeze is in effect and is operating under a "wait and see" policy by withholding cost-of-living adjustments until the last day in the biennium budget period.

Hospitals would like role change

HOUSTON (AP) — Hospitals for the poor here are leaders in two areas in which their administrators would just as soon finish second — delivering babies and treating emergency room cases.

Caught between a tenant that won't vacate three floors and a three-story hospital annex closed by fire code violations, Jefferson Davis Hospital has begun releasing many mothers and their newborns within 24 hours of birth.

"We've passed Los Angeles County for the past couple of years," assistant administrator Alan MacDonald said in noting his hospital leads the nation in deliveries, with 15,000 predicted this year. "But I don't think either one of us wants to win."

The hospital's overcrowding problems have been critical since March, when fire department inspectors forced the hospital to close an annex with 42 of its 150 beds for maternity patients, citing code violations including the lack of a sprinkler system, ventilation deficiencies and narrow stairwells.

Ben Taub Hospital, Harris County's other hospital for the poor, has no fire code problems but is every bit as crowded. Its emergency room treats more trauma patients than any other in the state or the central South, said Phillip Son, planning director for the hospital district.

Patients with a variety of gashes, gouges and fractures were packed into Ben Taub's emergency room last fiscal year at a rate more than twice what that facility was designed to hold, health officials say.

"We have patients waiting on beds all the time," said Mike Bullard, administrator at Ben Taub. "We could easily admit many more patients if we lowered our standards even a little bit.

"You've got to be very, very sick to get into Ben Taub."

Richard Durbin, head of the agency in charge of Harris County's two charity hospitals, said 114,027 emergency cases were treated last fiscal year in a facility designed to accommodate 50,000.

One complaint that will get you to the front of the line in an emergency room where patients frequently outstrip space in surgery and outnumber nurses 20-1 is repeated cardiac arrest.

Develop that and you will travel a tortuous path — nurses and attendants will wheel you down a corridor, past a visitors' area and take you up one floor with someone performing open heart massage the while.

"What you wind up with is everyone running down the hall, yelling 'Hold that elevator' with their hand in a chest," said Cheryl Bautsch, who directed Ben Taub's emergency room for five years.

She resigned in exasperation last November, complaining that administrators would not replace what she said were unreliable life-saving machines — defibrillators, used to shock a stopped heart back into action.

The hospital district is responsible for the physical health needs of 517,000 impoverished people in two hospitals and a handful of neighborhood clinics. Patients wait an average of three months for non-emergency surgery, Durbin said.

Watchmaker's kicked the habit

Washington Post News Service

MINEOLA, N.Y. — In December, when branded "the wheelchair bandit," Daniel Stettner was thin and wan and without a future. Stettner, at 21 a paraplegic who had buried his pain in drugs, was faced with first-degree armed robbery charges for the holdup of a Freeport, N.Y., gas station two blocks from his home.

He was back in Nassau County Court Tuesday to plead guilty to a reduced charge of second-degree armed robbery and faces up to 60 days in Nassau County Jail, yet his eyes now were clear and sparkled with hope. Stettner says he is off drugs and has become a student at the Joseph Bulova School of Watchmaking in Woodside, N.Y., where he is a scholarship student learning watch repair. The school offered him a place after the publicity about his arrest.

Stettner admitted that at first he had considered the school as an easy way out of the robbery charges. "I knew if I was just doing nothing there was a good chance that I'd go to jail," he said. "But then I started getting into the feel of the place. The graduates have a skill; they make good money. I thought I could gain a little respect."

His sentencing has been set for June 8, after which he still faces misdemeanor charges of possession of a hypodermic needle and telephone harassment.

Monday, the day before he pleaded guilty, Danny Stettner said that when he rolled into that gas station, "I was wired out from drugs. I wasn't worried about tomorrow." He didn't think about the consequences, didn't even realize that arrest was almost inevitable.

"I was a wreck," he said. Stettner, who underwent 13 operations and spent more than a year in the hospital in 1977 and 1978 after he fell from a roof, came out a habitual drug user who said he used drugs to kill the pain. "Demerol and morphine. But those aren't easy to get on the street."

When he was arrested, bail was set at $5,000, and his parents, Armando and Elaine Stettner, were forced to leave their son in jail overnight. "They didn't get me out until 8 p.m. the next day," Stettner said, speaking in staccato phrases as he stared at a wall of the Bulova School.

"I was kicking. I had stomach pains. The window in the cell was broken. It was cold. I was sitting in a wheelchair looking at the bars. Eating nothing. The first two days I was home I slept. It was all a nightmare. When I woke up I still had court facing me."

It was a few days later, Stettner said, that he received a letter from the Joseph Bulova School of Watchmaking, which was founded after World War II to train veterans and later expanded to include the disabled. The school, according to school spokesman David Aboulafia, felt it could help. "The director read about it in the papers and said 'Here is the person we were founded to help,' and we wrote to the Stettners," Aboulafia said. "Danny is reasonable. He knows why he's here."

Armando Stettner said Tuesday that "while I am always frightened — we've been through so many crises," he and his wife are pleased and looking forward to their son's future. "Everything looks rosy right now. He's never lasted more than three to four weeks in any environment."

And last Sunday, Stettner placed third in the first wheelchair race he had ever participated in. "My father didn't think I was going to complete the five miles," Stettner said. "I wanted to stop, but I couldn't." Stettner said he was inspired by his roommate at Bulova, Danny Velez, "the defending wheelchair race champion for the City of New York."

"My body is cleaned out," Stettner said. "Drugs — I did that to myself. But I'm never putting myself at the mercy of another person again, whether it's the court, or a drug dealer."

Thesis paralysis result

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — A man confined to a special bed since polio left him paralyzed 27 years ago has earned a doctorate degree with a thesis he believes may help astronauts communicate in space.

Louis Sternburg, 57, who says he made a decision when he was stricken not to "vegetate," was to be wheeled onto a stage at Brandeis University today to receive his Ph.D in psychology.

AFTER that, he'll begin post-doctorate work at the university.

Sternburg was 30 when polio left him almost entirely paralyzed.

Unable to move his diaphragm to breathe, Sternburg must spend 90 percent of his time in a special bed that rocks him back and forth 16 times a minute, forcing air in and out of his lungs.

The rocking bed "works like a see-saw to ventilate my body. When my toes go down, I'm inhaling. Toes back, I'm exhaling," he said.

Confined to the bed, Sternburg said he had to "make a major decision — whether I wanted to sit and vegetate or lead a productive life...I realized the only thing that I could do was with my mind."

STERNBURG earned his degree at home by listening to taped recordings of classroom lectures. James Lackner, chairman of the Brandeis psychology department, visited his home once a week to work with him.

"Fortunately I met the right professor," he said of Lackner.

With the aid of a duplicate respirator being prepared at Brandeis, Sternburg soon will be able to go to the Waltham campus for the first time to do post-doctoral work with Lackner in the laboratory, which is equipped by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

His thesis is based on his experience with respiratory paralysis.

"It all started when I asked how come if I'm paralyzed, I can talk," he said. "How does someone like me compensate to produce speech?

"When you speak, you have a thought and you take in enough air to speak. What I do is compress my thoughts to the air available to me. I speak in short bursts.

"I've made this compensation for over 26 years...The whole point is maximizing air available to me. Therefore, the human brain has made a compensation," he said.

"THIS has implications in the practical world. For example, I can feel when my toes hit bottom. I get a touch cue. That means that maybe the astronauts can use touch cues to communicate in space as opposed to feedback into the ears.

"Or suppose there is a child with cerebral palsy. That's an uncoordination of muscle and brain...It's possible, using the results of my thesis, to develop a machine that is more efficient in helping a cerebral palsy child adopt to speech coordination."

Sternburg's wife, Dorothy, became a manufacturer's representative after his paralysis and now operates a company called Dot's Sales.

Lessening power cited

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Despite a significant naval buildup in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, the Soviet Union's political influence in the region is weaker today than it was 30 years ago, according to American scholar Robert Scalapino.

Scalapino, who heads the Institute of East Asian Studies at the University of California at Berkeley, told reporters that three decades ago Moscow had strong alliances with China and North Korea, both of which it has lost. He also cited the rise of a pro-Western economic giant, Japan, and the fact that most revolutionary movements in Asia are not pro-Soviet.
