Fourth summit begins with clash on rights

■ Related stories — 3B

MOSCOW (AP) — President Reagan, welcomed to the Soviet Union by appreciative crowds and Kremlin pomp, began his fourth summit Sunday with Mikhail S. Gorbachev. The leaders immediately clashed over human rights, setting the stage for what one U.S. aide called "tumultuous conversations."

In receiving Reagan, Gorbachev told his guest their previous meetings have shaken loose the "enemy images" of old stereotypes. He thanked Reagan for having traversed "the great distance that lies between our two capitals, to continue our political dialogue." He noted that Reagan was finally visiting "a country which you have so often mentioned in your public statements."

Reagan, who once spoke of the Soviets as an "evil empire," made clear that serious differences remain.

"We've traveled a long road together to reach this moment," the American president told Gorbachev as they began the first of their talks. But he added, "We both know it will not be easy" to surmount obstacles standing stubbornly in the way of a pact to slash long-range nuclear weapons stocks.

Instead of signing a treaty to cut strategic arsenals by 50 percent, which both sides had hoped would come at this meeting, the two leaders will ceremoniously exchange the final, ratified copies of the treaty they signed at their last meeting in Washington: a far simpler agreement to scrap all medium-range nuclear missiles.

As the Reagans retired for the evening, working groups of specialists in the major areas of U.S.-Soviet relations began separate negotations on outstanding issues with the understanding they would report any progress as the leaders' talks continue.

Despite elaborate preparations by Soviet work crews and security forces, the White House abandoned an unannounced plan for the president and his wife, Nancy, to visit the home of a Jewish family whose 12-year-old daughter appealed to the Reagans for help in getting permission to leave the country.

Instead, they strolled through the historic Arbat district, at one point standing atop a carriage and waving to the crowd, before retiring to Spaso House, the nearby U.S. ambassador's residence where they are staying during the trip. Crowds at the Arbat, roughly treated by frantic KGB security officers, cheered and applauded the Reagans.

The agents roughed up reporters and members of the crowd, knocking over a fruit stand. The Reagans seemed stunned by the tumultuous scene and at times appeared to be jostled themselves. The president and first lady were completely encircled by KGB officers who locked arms in a tight circle, using elbows and shoulders to spew people out of their way.

White House chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr. said the leaders discussed human rights and Afghanistan "frankly and with a good deal of energy" during their first meeting, which lasted 1 hour, 11 minutes, about 20 minutes longer than scheduled.

Mother recalls son's loss in war

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Tebbie Cuthbirth knows that the stars and stripes which fly over Odessa's Sunset Memorial Gardens each Memorial Day once covered her 28-year-old son Kendall's casket.

The mother of seven will forever live with the agony she felt at losing her youngest son 21 years ago last February.

"You never forget," said Mrs. Cuthbirth, 83, whose 4x4-inch flag with a gold star in the center gives her membership in a group called Gold Star Mothers — those who paid the ultimate price of war, with the death of their young sons.

There used to be a large membership in Midland, but now only four Gold Star Mothers — most of whom are approaching their 90s — survive, according to the American Legion.

Mrs. Cuthbirth's three eldest boys — all of whom fought in either World War II, Korea or Vietnam — emerged from battle virtually unscathed.

Lynn Cuthbirth was a U.S. Air Force bombardier, who died in 1949 in Odessa four years after he returned home from Europe. "He did get a Purple Heart, but he never told us what happened," Mrs. Cuthbirth recalled prior to this year's Memorial Day. "All we know is that his nose looked different."

Otis Cuthbirth was a U.S. Marine, stationed in Korea. And his brother, Eddie Cuthbirth, enlisted in the U.S. Army at the same time, but didn't see active duty overseas.

On that fateful day in February 1967, Staff Sgt. Kendall Cuthbirth was leading his platoon out of a Vietnamese minefield when he stepped on a mine.

"He didn't know what hit him," the Cuthbirth family was told.

Kendall was a U.S. Marine Corps volunteer at the age of 17 and hoped to make military service a career. "He was so slight that he had to eat bananas and drink water to weigh enough to get in," Mrs. Cuthbirth said.

"Everytime Otis did anything, Ken wanted to do just exactly what he had done," she added. "Otis was in the Marines and Ken was determined that he was going to join up, too."

Kendall had just begun his first tour of duty in Vietnam and was eager to serve, according to his mother.

"You wouldn't have seen Ken burn his draft card," she said, recalling how many young men her son's age protested the war. "He felt that it was his duty and there was nothing I could do about it."

Eight injured at Pasadena cookoff

PASADENA (AP) — One person was shot and seven people were stabbed in a series of incidents as people were leaving a Memorial Day weekend concert and fajita cookoff at the Pasadena Fair Grounds Sunday, police said.

Police spokeswoman Betty Parks said it appears that no one was seriously hurt although at least two people were taken to Hermann Hospital in Houston by LifeFlight helicopters.

Three people were arrested and some other sought in the incident fled the scene, police said.

Both a woman who was shot and her suspected assailant were in unstable condition at the hospital late Sunday, Parks said. No condition reports were immediately available on the other injured people. Some of the inured may not have sought medical attention, witnesses said.

Parks said police in the Houston suburb were still attempting late Sunday to determine what triggered the argument and ensuing fight. At least one of the fights may have started after a minor traffic accident in the parking lot of the Pasadena Civic Center on the fairgrounds, officers said.

Gulf drilling rig evacuated after blowout

HOUSTON (AP) — More than 100 crewmen aboard a drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico were evacuated Sunday night after the rig sustained a blowout, a spokesman for Standard Oil Production Co. said.

The rig blew out about 5:45 p.m. CDT, said company spokesman Richard Wheatley.

According to Wheatley, the 102 crewmen were later taken aboard a supply vessel.

The Red Adair Co. was called to help control the blowout, he said.

Task force still examining the need for affordable housing

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of a two-part series on the housing shortage that has hit low- and moderate-income families in Texas.

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telgram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sensing the beginnings of a statewide housing emergency, the Texas Legislature created a task force on affordable housing in May 1987 to ease the economic strife caused by the 1986 plunge in oil prices.

The economic slump left widescale unemployment and thousands of families without the means to afford a home.

"The shortage in housing for low to moderate incomes has resulted in an increased burden on the state's social services and created an emergency situation for legislative attention," says the resolution that created the task force.

The task force — of legislators, private builders, public housing officials and social service administrators — has heard testimony statewide about the affordability problem and plans to devise a bill to relieve it. At the same time they know they must convince fiscally conservative statesmen that the programs will not further the state down the road to the poorhouse.

Thus, the task force is trying to find civic-minded leaders in the housing industry to join the public sector in its efforts to ease the dilemma.

Public-private partnerships are the trend in the 1980s, the years of budget deficits. The U.S. Conference of Mayors, meeting in Austin in early February, concluded that public-private coalitions are the best alternative. Local governments, they said, can no longer depend on federal handouts to subsidize housing.

Says Theodore Mann, mayor of Newport, Mass., "We the mayors of the people of America need to tighten our belts and open up our pocketbooks with the kind of energy now that we had during World War II."

Thus cities and private citizens must solve the housing crisis by making a spirited, joint financial commitment, Mann says.

But partnerships may not be so easy. Public and private officials are blaming each other for the problem, says task force chairman Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth. Public officials say the self-serving building industry is driving up housing costs, while builders blame expensive building codes and zoning restrictions.

"We need a balance between reducing regulation directly just toward density and aesthetics, and yet we don't want to reduce the infrastructure — the streets, the sewers," Parmer says.

Texas infant gets second heart transplant

DALLAS (AP) — A nine-month-old girl, who officials say is the first infant ever to receive a second heart transplant, remained in critical condition early Sunday, a nursing supervisor said.

Kiersten Jones, of the Dallas suburb of Flower Mound, received a new heart during 4½ hours of surgery at Children's Medical Center Saturday. Her body rejected the first transplant, which she received April 12.

She was in critical condition in the hospital's intensive care unit, where she was expected to remain for three or four days, said nursing supervisor Victoria Baxter.

A spokeswoman at Loma Linda University Medical Center in California, where the first infant heart transplant was performed in 1985, said the Jones child was the first infant to undergo a second transplant.

"Unless I'm missing something, that would be a first," spokeswoman Anita Rockwell told the Dallas Times Herald. "We've kept up with these things, and we'd know if there was another one out there."

"The operation went well. But the doctors said it will require a few days to fully evaluate her condition," said Barbara Portmann, spokeswoman for Children's Medical Center.

Kiersten is the daughter of Shields and Debra Jones of Flower Mound. Seven months ago, she was diagnosed as suffering from idiopathic cardiomyopathy, a deterioration of the heart muscle.

The transplant was performed by Drs. Hisashi Nikaidoh, R.P. Cochran and William Steves Ring, who has performed more than 100 heart transplants since 1984.

Young Kiersten's operation in April was the first infant heart transplant in Dallas.

There have been 37 infant heart transplants in the United States, including the Jones baby's second operation. Twenty-one babies are still living, including Baby Moses, who received the first transplant at Loma Linda.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Warm, windy weather due

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today should be warm and windy, with a chance of thunderstorms increasing by Tuesday, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Today will be partly cloudy and windy, with a less than 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Winds will be from the south 20 to 30 mph and gusty. The high will be in the upper 80s.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, a few possibly severe. The low will be in the lower 60s.

Tuesday will be cloudy and windy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high will be in the lower 80s.

Sunday's high of 82 was more than 20 degrees cooler than the record high of 104 set in 1938. The record low for the date was 46 set in 1937, 14 degrees cooler than Sunday's low of 60.

NATION

Warm temperatures graced much of the Northeast on Sunday, midpoint of the Memorial Day weekend, while an unseasonable cold air hit southern Florida and the western United States, with 60-mph wind gusts in the deserts of California.

A high wind warning was in effect during the afternoon and evening for the mountains and deserts of Southern California and gale warnings were posted along the Southern California coast.

High winds and seas closed Avalon Harbor on Santa Catalina Island after driving two boats ashore and scattering others, harbormaster Brian Bray said.

"We're missing probably a dozen ... they just blew off anchor and we have no idea where they are," he said.

High winds and thunderstorms also hit northern Arizona and parts of Utah. During the morning hours winds gusted to 58 mph in the White Mountains of east central Arizona.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from south central Texas to central Kansas, and over southern Florida.

Fair weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, with skies generally sunny east of the Mississippi River.

Temperatures were in the 40s and 50s in the Pacific Northwest in the morning, and were in the 30s and 40s in the Great Basin.

Record lows were in Jacksonville, Fla., with 53 degrees besting a 1934 record of 58, while in Tallahassee it was 51 degrees, where 53 was the previous low in 1968.

The low temperature for the nation Sunday was 27 degrees in Truckee, Calif. Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 31 degrees at Eureka. Nev., to 98 degrees at Jordan, Mont.

Delta yields traces of ancient culture

By ISAAC A. LEVI

XALAPA, Mexico (AP) — Deep in a mangrove swamp near the Gulf of Mexico, archaeologists have discovered traces of what could be another ancient Mexican civilization.

So far, the only clues to these mysterious people are a four-ton stele, or stone slab, covered with hieroglyphic writing and a 19-inch-high clay figure of a fertility-rite priest.

"But," says Fernando Winfield Capitaine, director of the Xalapa Museum of Anthropology, "the finds are so promising that the museum is planning to mount an expedition to that area of Veracruz state in cooperation with the National Geographic Society."

The stele was found in November 1986. It is covered with inscriptions in an unknown language but with some Mayan numerals.

The priest in the clay figure is wearing the human skin of a flayed sacrificial victim.

Both are about 1,800 years old.

"That would place them in the second century A.D., which is after the archaeological Olmecs, who flourished in the area from around 1050 to 500 B.C., and before the Mayas who emerged around the fourth century A.D.," Winfield said in an interview.

Adding to the intrigue, the Mayas lived in the Yucatan Peninsula, more than 700 miles to the east, Winfield said at the museum in Xalapa, where the stele and figure are kept.

"But there are two dates on the stele in Mayan writing, in their so-called Long Count Calendar made up of dots and bars, equivalent to May 22, 143 (A.D.), and July 13, 156 A.D.," Winfield said.

If the mysterious people did exist, Winfield said, they also appeared to be unrelated to the other two of the four known civilizations that inhabited the gulf coast: the Totonacas, who emerged around the seventh century A.D. in the area where the artifacts were found, or the Huaxtecas farther north, about one century later.

"They could be the Xicalancas, of which Clavijero briefly talked about," Winfield said, referring to the Rev. Francisco Javier Francisco Javier Clavijero (1731-1787), a Jesuit priest who was the first to systematically study Mexico's ancient languages and peoples.

In his "History of Ancient Mexico," Clavijero in three lines briefly mentioned the Xicalanca civilization in relation to the Olmecs, but did not go into details.

In "nahuatl," the trading language of the Aztecs, who came much later, Xicalanca means "the people who live by the Great Body of Salt Water," as the Gulf of Mexico was called.

The two artifacts were found within 130 feet of each other in the village of La Mojarra, where the Piojo River meets the Acula River. The crocodile-infested region is so swampy that it can be reached only by boat, Winfield said.

La Mojarra, with a population of fewer than 200, is up the Acula about 20 miles south of the port of Alvarado in Veracruz state. But neither the village nor the Piojo River can be found on any map of Mexico.

Carved in relief on the previously polished stele, which is of basalt, one of the world's hardest rocks, is the full length profile of a regal figure, a man about 25 years old, holding out in both hands a vessel in a gesture of offering.

"He was probably a ruler, or a chief warrior, or a high priest — or maybe all three since that was the custom in the gulf region in ancient times," Winfield said.

The figure wears ear-stops, a tall headdress adorned with four representations of something like a rain god, trimmed with eight feathers, and a breastplate full of other allegorical figures over what appears to be a pleated cotton shirt or tunic.

A total of 577 glyphs, or picture-words, divided into 21 neat rows running from top to bottom, plus 33 "elements" like the rain-god representations, cover the rest of the slab.

"It was all carved during one continuous period," Winfield said. "It was a single piece of work. It is the oldest and richest piece of writing found yet about this area of ancient Mexico."

About 7 feet tall, slightly oblong and with a gently rounded top, the stele once stood on the right bank of the Acula, just outside La Mojarra.

Over the years, erosion toppled it, and it lay in the river until a fisherman discovered it and dragged it out with the help of villagers.

Archaeologists retrieved the stele, but Winfield said he kept the find quiet for two years so work could proceed "without the pressure that such a discovery creates."

The second piece, the ceramic figure of a priest made with the region's thick orange clay, has a square base. It is the only one of two artifacts from that area with a base. The other, also in the museum, is so badly damaged it cannot be studied, Winfield said.

SUMMIT

The White House aide said, "Based on what we've seen so far, (subsequent talks) are going to be tumultuous conversations."

"They strike sparks off each other pretty well, and they did today," Baker said.

A White House spokesman, Roman Popadiuk, told reporters Reagan gave Gorbachev a list of 14 cases of refuseniks, divided spouses and consular matters the United States wants resolved. The presentation of such lists has become a regular part of high-level meetings between U.S. and Soviet officials.

A senior American official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said human rights "was one of the issues over which the two leaders differed, but not the only one."

The same source said Afghanistan also was discussed. The Soviet Union has indicated in recent days it might halt its troop withdrawal if Pakistan doesn't stop supplying arms to Afghan rebel.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters after the first meeting that the United States assumes the Soviets will abide by their agreement, signed in Geneva, to pull their forces out of the Asian nation.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov characterized the opening round of talks as businesslike and cordial, but he offered few details.

Gerasimov charged Reagan does not have a "concrete understanding" of the human rights issue in the Soviet Union and objected to others lecturing Soviets on how to conduct their affairs.

Reagan's position "is based on the past and does not take into consideration what is happening today," the spokesman said, apparently referring to Gorbachev's somewhat more tolerant emigration policies and "glasnost," which permits broader but still limited criticism of Soviet officialdom and society.

The Foreign Ministry official said his government knew about its drawbacks. "We are trying to correct" them, Gerasimov added, "but we don't like it when someone else is making us feel like a pupil."

During a picture-taking session at the outset of his first meeting with Gorbachev, Reagan was asked if he intended to lecture his counterpart on human rights. "I have no intention of trying to be a teacher," he said.

Gerasimov said Gorbachev, searching for ways to continue the improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations, suggested the superpowers might launch a joint manned mission to Mars or participate in an international conference or seminar on human rights. The United States has been cool to both Soviet initiatives in the past.

Baker, discussing the failure to reach agreement before the summit on nuclear testing and other pacts nearing completion, told NBC's "Meet the Press" that their not being signed in Moscow "underscores the careful and prudent way the administration is approaching this. Detail can kill you — literally — if you don't get it right."

Riding into Moscow from the airport in their armored limousine, the Reagans passed by clusters of Soviet citizens standing at the edge of forests of birch, poplar and evergreen trees. Some in the crowd waved.

Beginning at the city limits, each lamp post was decorated with the hammer and sickle red flag of the Soviet Union and the Stars and Stripes of the United States.

The flags of each country also were suspended over the city, hanging from blimps.

By the time Reagan reached downtown, onlookers were standing two to four deep along Lenin Prospect, and people stood on balconies of tall apartment buildings to get a glimpse of Reagan.

HOMES

Some city officials believe lessening building code standards for affordability may lead to structural problems in houses that will skyrocket costs in the end.

Polk Curtis, the community development administrator for Beaumont, says, "Who's going to come up with the $10,000 that was not put into it?" He adds, "If the wheel is already invented then there is a problem going back and reinventing it."

Mike McDonough, the director of municipal services in the Panhandle city of Plainview, says relaxing building codes might compromise safety and lead to building homes that are susceptible to fire hazards. Codes requiring minimum lot space for homes prevent construction of high density neighborhoods resembling big-city slums, he says.

The task force hopes that high technology, which some state economists say is the key to a successful economic future, will bail out the housing industry. Modern techniques are being developed to cut costs, but like any new technology, confidence has to be built to rely on new methods, Parmer says.

Builders are offering to build lower cost homes if the state will help them get "the city off their backs," Parmer says. Some have testified that people could find reasonably priced dwellings if city regulations would allow them to build homes closer together and ease up on building codes.

But Parmer says low- to moderate-income buyers should beware of builders insensitive to utility costs, or they could wind up paying utility bills that match their mortgage payments.

Two main problems are keeping low- to moderate-income families from purchasing homes, Parmer says. First, lending institutions are not willing to make loans for moderately priced homes of $40,000 to $50,000. Second, financing is virtually impossible for older homes because, though buyers want to refurbish them, insurance companies don't want to take the risk. In Fort Worth, most insurance companies will not insure older homes, Parmer says.

Though state fiscal conservatives see red with the mention of social programs, Parmer says he is confident the state can solve the crisis "if we can responsibly limit excessive regulation on the housing cost and not drive taxes up."

By encouraging lending institutions to make low-interest loans and insurance companies to insure affordable homes, more home buyers will enter the market, Parmer says.

Local leaders say the federal government has lost its commitment to affordable housing. Because city leaders see a dwindling concern in Congress for housing, they have begun forming a national housing trust fund to lay a "nest-egg" for future generations of home buyers and renters.

The trust fund would be a permanent treasury immune from the political budget battles of Congress. To preserve low-income housing, the mayors conference said in its February Austin meeting, local governments must begin a new commitment to discourage developers from destroying older, more affordable homes.

Mayor Frank Cooksey of Austin says "flexibility at the local level" is one of the primary hurdles that must be leaped. Federal and local housing programs can become wasteful and redundant if local governments are not given a free rein to use federal money to fund existing programs, he says.

Texas leaders at every level of government have even more incentive in the economic ebb of the late-1980s to get home buyers into the market. With the bottoming out of the economy, some counties and cities have seen dangerous drops in property tax revenues. Once relying on rich budgets created by the state's booming energy industry, some counties find themselves without money enough even to buy office supplies.

"Property taxes are also being exacted from developers for the countless unoccupied buildings statewide, thus further driving up home prices," Wayne Harwell, a San Antonio developer says.

Builders are adding the costs of property tax back into the houses. In addition, streamlining operations prior to building will help reduce costs. Now it usually takes a year before builders receive approval to build from local zoning boards and planning commissions.

The affordability problem may get worse as the economy bounces back. Landowners will be trying to recoup losses and cities will need to raise taxes to recover, Harwell says. Builders like himself, he says, will be asking how to "help cities recognize how to make house affordable and not tax their citizens at the same time."

Dallas vote fraud found

DALLAS (AP) — A canvass showed that more than one of every four votes cast last year in a Dallas precinct controlled by the politically powerful Medrano family were fraudulent, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story on Sunday.

A review of registration and voting rolls for the March 8 Super Tuesday presidential primary revealed similar irregularities, but on a lesser scale — about 1 in 10 votes were illegal, the newspaper said.

In his first letter home, Mrs. Cuthbirth noted that Kendall didn't understand why the fighting in Vietnam was necessary. However, in a second letter which was accompanied by a photograph taken of a dead Vietnamese girl, her young son wrote that he finally understood.

Learning of her son's death was so "awful," that Mrs. Cuthbirth claims "everything went blank" until the body arrived in Odessa nine days later.

"We waited nine days for his body to be shipped home. It was terrible that we had to wait so long," she said in hindsight. "But, at least we got to view the body. Had they not brought him back, I'd still be wondering about him."

Eight killed on Texas highways

Associated Press

At least eight people died Saturday in Texas roadway traffic accidents during the Memorial Day weekend, including a member of the Liberty High School basketball team.

David Smets, 16, was returning with a friend from a rodeo and dance in Georgetown when he fell asleep at the wheel. Smets was driving on U.S. 183 near Texas 29 at about 5:15 a.m., according to a report by Department of Public Safety Trooper Rudy Aleman. The passenger Clint Whitehead, also 16, suffered minor cuts and bruises.

"The difference was seat belts. Clint had his on and David didn't," said Whitehead's father, Larnce Whitehead.

Liberty Hill reached the Class 2A championship game the past two seasons but lost both. Smets was a swing man playing guard and forward on both teams.

Liberty Hill High School's faculty and students plan to hold a memorial service for Smets on the campus football field Monday at 10 a.m., said Liberty Hill basketball coach Rusty Segler.

Mattie Belle Cooper, 79, of Tomball, died about 2:30 p.m. when she reportedly was making a turn and hit a car with her truck on Farm-to-Market Road 149 which passes just outside of Tomball, about 20 miles north of Houston.

Saturday night, one person was killed and five people were injured in a two-car accident in Houston. The identity of the victim was not released. A third person died at about 9:15 p.m. in a Lake Houston-area accident. The identity of the victim also was not released.

In Wichita Falls, two people died in a 9:30 p.m. collision between a motorcycle and a car. The driver of the motorcycle and a passenger on the cycle were killed. Identities were not immediately available.

Police said a man and woman believed to be in their 70s died in a head-on collision in San Antonio at 8 p.m. Saturday night. The two were heading north on a major thoroughfare and collided in the northbound lane with a vehicle headed south.

Zoo staff stalked by fear of mauling

HOUSTON (AP) — The fatal mauling of a zoo worker by a Siberian tiger earlier this month has brought an outpouring of anger and concern from zoo employees who say the worker's death was the culmination of years of unsafe practices and conditions at the Houston Zoo.

Their overriding concern is that because of staffing shortages and mismanagement, zoo keepers are forced to work alone. Such was the case when the 450-pound tiger broke through a window and killed Ricardo Tovar on May 12.

Many zoo keepers feel Tovar's death could just as easily have been theirs.

"For some people, it's been a constant awareness, and now it's become a constant fear — that something will happen to them while they're alone," a zoo employee told the Houston Chronicle.

"I've worked for other zoos, and I was never by myself in a facility. Never. You just don't do that," another employee said.

About a dozen Houston zoo staff members, many well-respected veterans, and several former employees decided they needed to voice their fears, but none was willing to be identified because of another fear — that they would be punished or even fired for talking.

Among the alleged hazards are a variety of maintenance problems in areas where zoo keepers work with the animals; a lack of communications equipment, such as radios or phones or alarms in zoo keeper areas; crumbling asbestos ceilings in public and staff areas; and an inadequate system to check on or provide backup to keepers working alone.

Zoo keeper Delpha McDonald was startled last week when a 250-pound Sable antelope broke the latch on an aging wooden gate and opened the door into the yard where she was working.

Ms. McDonald said she quickly escaped by climbing over the tall, chain-link fence surrounding the yard and seemed unperturbed about the incident.

"It's sort of expected; you never trust anything over there," she said.

The zoo, like other city departments, has suffered severe staffing cutbacks. But unlike most other city departments, zoo employees say cutbacks can threaten their lives, stretching staff too thin in dangerous situations.

"The city is operating the zoo on a narrow safety margin and hoping that nothing will happen — but something did," one employee said.

Bill Olson, director of the city's parks department, said, "We're going to be going through the whole zoo looking for problems and trying to figure out how they'll be rectified." He said all animal confinement will be looked at particularly carefully and that staffing shortages will be reviewed.

Employees say they have already noticed a marked increase in attention to maintenance around the facility since Tovar was killed.

One employee said, "The city is trying to make an effort. But I'd like the point to be made, they're not making the effort until something unbelievably horrible happens first."

Medical examiner earns thousands harvesting bones

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Reports that Bexar County Medical Examiner Dr. Vincent DiMaio has earned thousands of dollars harvesting bone for the Bone Bank Foundation has renewed debate about regulating bone transplants.

During a five-month period in 1986, DiMaio billed the foundation for more than $27,000 for his services in the retrieval of bones, the San Antonio Light reported Sunday.

DiMaio's assistants can earn $50 for each permit signed by a next-of-kin, granting the legal rights to the body parts for the foundation. The foundation markets bone products to physicians and dentists.

The commercial use for bones is not always clear to prospective donors, who are told in pamphlets a bone donation is a "gift of life."

But Eric C. Sutton, a San Antonio attorney and president of the American Council on Transplantation, says a lot of money is involved in such transactions. The San Antonio-based Bone Bank Foundation charges $760 for a bone powder dentists use in oral surgery.

"I think the real attention should be paid to how families are being approached when asked to make donations and whether their confidence is shaken when they find out that people are making a lot of money out of it," Sutton said.

Marie Hendershot of San Antonio said she would not have signed away the rights to the organs of her son Alan had she known the gift could have meant money to DiMaio, his assistants or a marketing company.

Officials from the medical examiner's office were the first to notify Mrs. Hendershot of her son's drug overdose death April 1, 1987.

"Everything was done wrong," Mrs. Hendershot said. "I just signed the piece of paper to get them out of here. I was upset; my daughter was in hysterics. I don't think it was the right time."

The day after 27-year-old Danny David Perez died on Sept. 25, 1985, his mother, Nelda Perez, said representatives of the bone bank foundation arrived at her home, too.

"They just insisted on it," Mrs. Perez said. "At a time like that, I was just kind of forced to decide. They had to have it that day. I signed it (the release) just to get it out of the way. I regret it if I gave this and somebody else made money on it."

The district attorney's office is examining whether it is proper for DiMaio to harvest the bones for profit, even though the Commissioners Court approved that arrangement in 1983.

Sutton said there is an ongoing debate about whether to bring bone banking more in line with the stricter regulations governing the procurement of solid organs.

"Donations of organs and tissues are based on the faith that the people who take these tissues and organs are going to take and use them ethically," he said.

Loan to CTC chancellor questioned

HOUSTON (AP) — When Central Texas College employees' pension plan began making mortgage loans to college personnel, Chancellor Luis Morton Jr. was the first and only one in line, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

Morton's $475,000 loan secured by his spacious home in a country club subdivision near Killeen was the first employee loan funded by the pension plan. And at least through the beginning of this year, there were no others, the newspaper reported in a copyright story.

Morton, who stepped down as chancellor last month and is now a college consultant, received the loan in March 1987 — two months after the college board of trustees changed the rules to permit employee real estate loans.

Such a loan may have violated several sections of the U.S. Internal Revenue Service Code, said Alfred Sanchez, an employee plan specialist with the IRS regional office in Dallas.

He said the federal tax code specifies a $50,000 cap on employee loans to the highest paid employees covered in a pension plan. Also, plans that offer employee loans must make a demonstrable effort to make them available to all employees, Sanchez said.

Incumbent mayor defeated in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Former City Councilman Lee Cooke handily defeated incumbent Mayor Frank Cooksey in his bid for a second three-year term, besting the mayor by more than 15 percent of the vote in a weekend runoff.

Turnout for Saturday's election was put at about 20 percent by City Clerk Elden Aldridge, who said: "It's a lower turnout than anything we have had in a number of years. I would say it's lower because of Memorial Day weekend and people scattered here and there."

With all the vote in, Cooke had 36,985 votes, or 58.4 percent, to 26,308, or 41.6 percent, for Cooksey.

Cooke, 43, a former president of this capital city's Chamber of Commerce, captured 40 percent of the vote in the May 7 non-partisan primary to advance to the runoff against Cooksey, 54, who ran second in the field of eight with 32 percent.

At issue in the campaign were the city's sagging economy and rising taxes and utility rates.

Data ban was broken

HOUSTON (AP) — A Secret Service document contains evidence suggesting the intelligence division of the Houston Police Department broke the city's 1983 ban on gathering information on citizens solely on the basis of their political activities, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

The ban, part of the settlement of an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit, was supposed to end a scandal that started in 1975, when former Mayor Fred Hofheinz revealed that police had maintained dossiers since 1960 on more than 1,000 Houstonians, including judges, congressmen, civil rights activists and Hofheinz himself, the newspaper reported in a copyright story.

But the Secret Service memo, released to the Chronicle in response to a Freedom of Information Act request, shows that the agency received information from the police about the Church of Houston, a congregation of Taiwanese also known as the New Testament Church.

The church had applied for a permit to demonstrate against Pope John Paul II during his stop in San Antonio last September.

The memo said about 15 demonstrators were expected.

Ultralight plane crashes

AVALON (AP) — Two people were killed when the frame of their ultralight airplane broke and the craft plummeted 100 feet into a cotton field, authorities said.

Billy Bean, 44, of Avalon, and Kari Pierce, 20, of Waxahachie both died in the Ellis County crash at about 8:15 p.m. Saturday, said Texas Department of Public Safety dispatcher Paula Holt.

The ultralight plane hit the ground near a residence alongside State Highway 34, about one mile west of Avalon, Holt said.

Although investigators said a break in the plane's frame led to the crash, they have not determined a cause, Holt said.

Avalon is about 40 miles south of Dallas.

Area's erosion battled

SARGENT (AP) — Business leaders and federal officials are working to save a stretch of beach from erosion that would expose the Intracoastal Waterway to the Gulf of Mexico and produce a major headache for shipping.

A peculiar wave action carries sand along the Matagorda County coastline straight into the Gulf of Mexico without depositing it elsewhere. The result has been the erosion of 174 feet of shoreline in nine months, including streets and sidewalks.

Officials warn shipping all along the Texas coast could be disrupted if the Intracoastal Waterway is exposed to the Gulf.

Many confiscations, arrests result of 'zero tolerance' plan

DALLAS (AP) — Hundreds of cars have been confiscated and at least 78 arrests have been made in Texas under the controversial new "Operation Zero Tolerance" policy that demands prosecution of anyone entering the United States with even tiny amounts of drugs, a newspaper reported.

Federal officials say the policy, ordered March 21 by U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, serves notice that smuggling drugs of any amount will simply not be tolerated.

"It's a tough program, but it is legal, and it is fair," a spokesman for the U.S. Customs Service in Houston told the Dallas Morning News.

Through May 14, customs agents and the Coast Guard had arrested 967 people and confiscated 1,647 vehicles nationwide.

Texas has 78 of the arrests, and the southwest region, which includes Texas, claims 189 of those arrests and 465 seizures.

"If a person doesn't bring drugs into the country, he won't have any problems," said Charles Conroy.

Gara LaMarche, executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, doesn't see it that way. He thinks the policy is a political ploy.

"Having failed in their attempts to get (Panamanian Gen. Antonio) Noriega, they're going after the extremely casual user," LaMarche said. "I thought we'd gotten beyond that."

LaMarche suggested a scenario: five Texans drive into Mexico as tourists to stay two or three days. Upon returning, a small portion of a marijuana cigaratte is found in the possession of one of the tourists.

Not only can the person be arrested, but the car can be auctioned off within six weeks — with little chance for appeal — even if its owner had no idea his companion was carrying drugs, LaMarche said..

"Only in very specific cases, and I might add, rare cases, would the seizures be overturned," said Dennis Schinkoski, a spokesman for the Customs Service in Washington.

"It's assumed the driver knows what his passengers are like."

LaMarche and others cite the possibility of uneven enforcement.

For example, nine pounds of heroin were found in a closet aboard a Thai Airways jet at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport recently, and the plane was allowed to return to Asia.

Conroy said that incident is still under investigation, but said it is "not the American way" to seize an entire plane and arrest everyone aboard.

Gramm won't join in criticism of Wright

CLIFTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has clashed in the past with Speaker of the House Jim Wright, but Gramm refused to join other Republicans in criticizing Wright for alleged ethics violations.

Gramm, during a speaking engagement Saturday, said he knows little about the proposed investigation of Wright, a Democrat from Fort Worth.

Gramm added, however, that he believes Wright took some bad advice when he wrote his 1985 book, "Reflections of a Public Man."

"If you are asking me personally if I think Jim Wright is a crook, no, I do not," Gramm said.

U.S. Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Georgia, last week brought formal charges of four counts of alleged corruption by Wright to the House Ethics Committee. The charges were co-signed by 73 fellow Republicans.

Campaign moves to New Jersey

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis wooed New Jersey environmentalists Sunday while rival Jesse Jackson continued his attacks on the Reagan administration's drug policy as the primary campaign headed into the final stretch. Republican George Bush, vacationing in Maine, again met with advisers to map out his November strategy.

With the four remaining primaries just over a week away, the two Democrats spent their Memorial Day weekend campaigning in New Jersey, which has 109 delegates at stake. All total, 466 delegates are up for grabs on June 7 in California, New Mexico, Montana and New Jersey.

Dukakis is within striking distance of the 2,081 needed to nominate with 1,711 delegates. Jackson has 984 delegates.

Front-runner Dukakis, who leads Jackson in recent New Jersey opinion polls, took a boat cruise with environmentalists and also attended three private receptions.

While the candidate campaigned in New Jersey, the British Broadcasting Corp. televised a taped interview with Dukakis in which the Massachusetts governor said the Soviet Union's economic problems led Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to another summit with President Reagan.

Dukakis said Gorbachev is probably the first Soviet leader "to recognize that communism is a failure, at least the way it's been practiced in the Soviet Union."

"Unless the Soviet Union begins to devote significantly more resources to its domestic economy ... and less to the military, than they're going to become a third-rate economic power," he said.

Dukakis, who was interviewed by the BCC last week while he campaigned in California, said "most thoughtful observers agree that it is the very serious condition of the Soviet domestic situation that has been largely responsible" for Gorbachev's involvement in the summit.

Jackson, meanwhile, renewed his criticisms of the administration's decision to negotiate with Panamanian ruler Manuel Antonio Noriega, who faces charges of drug trafficking.

"They're negotiating with Noriega for silence," Jackson told a breakfast fund-raiser in Newark, N.J. and church-goers at the New Hope Baptist Church.

The Democratic candidate suggested that Reagan tried to work out a deal to force Noriega from power to silence him before the Moscow summit with Gorbachev.

Jackson said Bush would like to see Noriega silenced before the general election in November.

He also noted that Bush has been raising the drug issue.

"Bush has thanked me but he should ask me how to do it because he doesn't know how," Jackson said. "Now that I've set the agenda, I want to work out the plan."

Bush, who is spending the week at his vacation retreat in Kennebunkport, Maine, met with his close advisers Sunday to continue mapping his strategy for the November election.

Convention plans on track, party assured

By RITA BEAMISH

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats were elated with the photo, buried in the B-section of The New York Times, of a crane installing media booths in the hall that will host the party's convention this summer.

"It's the appearance of motion.... Things looked like they were screwed up and now it looks like things are happening," party spokesman Mike McCurry said, only half in jest as he referred to the convention's public relations debacle of a week earlier.

McCurry quickly added that the Atlanta convention plans are in fact on track, following a press walkthrough two weeks ago that left media representatives with a sinking feeling that things were nightmarishly behind schedule.

The party is scurrying to undo the perception that their July 18-21 presidential nominating convention will be a logistics disaster, and moving to keep that perception from becoming reality.

By way of damage control, convention Chairman Don Fowler rushed out a letter to all media organizations promising the staff is "vigorously pursuing appropriate action" to respond to questions that went unanswered at the walkthrough.

He promised a press packet June 1 to include such information as a critical vendor list, for necessities like furniture and utilities. Such a list went out about a month earlier at the party's 1984 convention.

Written materials and informed staff members were on hand to reassure the press at a second walkthrough a few days later that their concerns are being handled on such matters as housing, vendors and "turnaround credentials" that allow reporters to give their pass to a colleague when leaving the floor.

Emphasis is being placed on the fact there will be an increase of 10 to 15 percent above 1984 numbers of media credentials issued.

Convention veteran Wally Podrazik, who has handled media logistics in past years was brought on board the day of the first walkthrough, and this weekend will be joined by Cynthia Myers to help with media arrangements.

The person responsible for the media-tour foul-up was ousted, and McCurry, who headed the Democratic National Committee press office, has assumed overall responsibility as communications director for both the party and the convention.

"We're in a lot better shape than many people suspect," McCurry insisted.

He and others involved with the convention say the basics — housing, transportation and credentials — are more or less arranged. But the staff members knowledgeable on those matters were not at the first media tour on May 16.

"It is fair to say we did not put our best foot forward in that walkthrough," said convention press secretary Ruth Berry.

The presidential campaigns of Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson, however, say they are having no problems as they embark on their own convention preparations.

"All the things we feel we need to do are getting done," said Dukakis spokesman Leslie Dach.

Jackson logistics manager John O'Leary said he has had nothing but cooperation, and "It's basically a wide open door of information" from the convention officials.

But O'Leary, a veteran convention staffer who managed the hall for the 1984 convention in San Francisco, also said he sees the Atlanta operation as comparatively behind schedule even in light of his observation that "Democratic conventions are inherently complicated disorganized functions."

"I wish they would have picked up a greater number of experienced people earlier," said O'Leary. "The convention will happen. It's just a question of how much pain and grief will be suffered and by whom."

He noted the drumbeat of concerns being voiced about the size of the Omni basketball arena, which will seat 11,000, compared to the 15,000 seating capacity in 1984 at the Moscone Center Hall.

The Democrats have solved the problem — providing comparatively more total seating — by using the Georgia World Congress Center, across the street from the Omni, for media workspace, spillover viewing areas via large screens, and office and reception rooms.

But that does not mean that spectators and party bigwigs are going to be happy being relegated to watching the convention from across the street.

The Democrats are doing a hard sell to make the WCC seem an attractive alternative. There, said McCurry, people can sprawl out in comfort instead of being squished in the crowded Omni, and "be handed a refreshment by a young Democrat."

"We are going to be agressively promoting the World Congress Center as a place to hold meetings and briefings and press conferences," he said.

As for the Omni, everyone sighed with relief last week when the Atlanta Hawks were edged out of the National Basketball Association playoffs. That assured they would not tie up the Omni convention hall until late June.

"Thank God the Celtics beat the Hawks," said Marcia Hale, in charge of Dukakis campaign convention arrangements.

On January 4, millions of people saw "The Ann Jillian Story" on NBC-TV.

On June 18, you'll have a chance to hear it firsthand.

Actress Ann Jillian talks about surviving cancer, in a special personal appearance in Midland June 18.

Hers is a story of hope. Of courage. Of strength and survival. It's the story of a woman who battled cancer — and won.

Ann Jillian brings her message of hope to Midland on June 18 at the Midland Community Theater, in honor of those who have survived cancer.

Tickets to this special event are $10, which includes a noon luncheon. Ms. Jillian will speak at 1:00 p.m.

To reserve your tickets, call 685-1559 between 8:30 a.m. and 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Due to limited seating, reservations are requested by June 15. Tickets may be purchased and picked up at the Allison Cancer Center of Midland Memorial Hospital, 200 W. Illinois.

Ann Jillian's appearance in Midland is sponsored by the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center, Midland Memorial Hospital, Texas Oncology P.A., and the American Cancer Society.

10-year-old's drowning linked to cocaine use

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Despite his family's insistence that he couldn't have done it, a coroner's report says a 10-year-old boy drowned because of his use of cocaine.

"I'll go to my grave and they'll never convince me that my grandson used drugs," said Geraldine Baker, Andrew Baker's grandmother, who raised the boy for the first nine years of his life.

But the coroner's report says the fourth-grader apparently had used cocaine, causing him to lose consciousness and drown in a YMCA swimming pool on April 16, the Chicago Tribune reported in Sunday's editions.

Andrew's mother, Jolene Williams, with whom he has lived for a year, said she does not believe the lab results, and has sued the YMCA for negligence.

Closing arguments due

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Rose Cipollone's husband has spent five years fighting to get three cigarette makers to pay for his wife's lung cancer death. Very soon, he and the tobacco industry will have the answer in their landmark court battle.

Testimony in the product liability trial is over, and after closing arguments this week, the jury will begin deliberating whether the $22 billion-a-year tobacco industry should be held responsible and pay its first dollar in damages.

The four-month federal court trial has been monitored closely by both the industry and health groups, with both sides fighting for the attention of the nation's 50 million smokers.

A verdict against the companies could clear the way for other lawsuits totaling millions of dollars in potential damages.

Clovis woman killed

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — A woman listening to records in her living room was killed by a freezer that fell on top of her after it was pushed through the wall by her husband's out-of-control car, police said.

Ora Lee Byrd, 68, died instantly in the freak accident Saturday, they said.

Her husband, Joe, was parking the car when his foot slipped off the brake and hit the accelerator. The car went through the garage door, hit a freezer kept inside the garage and propelled it through the wall, police said.

The freezer fell on Mrs. Byrd, who was sitting on a couch on the other side of the wall, police said.

Young victim released

WINNETKA, Ill. (AP) — The third of six victims wounded in a May 20 grade school shooting rampage was discharged from a hospital Saturday.

Seven-year-old Kathryn Miller's discharge from Evanston Hospital left three others still hospitalized after Laurie Dann shot six students at Hubbard Woods Elementary School, killing one, officials said. Ms. Dann, 30, shot and wounded a 20-year-old man at a nearby home before killing herself, police say.

At Evanston Hospital, Lindsay Fisher was in good condition Saturday, said Marlene Senescu, evening administrator.

At Highland Park Hospital, Peter Munro, 8, and Philip Andrew, 20, remained in fair condition Saturday, said spokeswoman Sue Masaracchia.

One child shot at the school, Nicholas Corwin, 8, died of his injuries.

Crime rate stays same

WASHINGTON (AP) — Theft or violent crime struck one out of every four American homes in 1987, about the same rate recorded in the previous two years, the Justice Department reported Sunday.

The Bureau of Justice Statistics said 23.9 percent of white homes, 27.8 percent of black homes and 30.1 percent of Hispanic homes were hit last year by some sort of crime. The national average was 24 percent.

Homes in the Northeast were the least affected, 19 percent, while those in the West were the most vulnerable, at 29 percent. The rates were 25 percent in the Midwest and 24 percent in the South.

Since the bureau began collecting crime data on a household basis in 1975, when crime struck one in three homes, the rates have never shown a year-to-year increase and dropped substantially over the longer term.

Teamster ranks torn

WASHINGTON (AP) — Discontent with a new nationwide trucking contract and Teamster President Jackie Presser's worsening health are cutting a deep fissure in the hierarchy of the country's largest union.

The official reaction to questions about Presser, about the jockeying for position on who might succeed him and about the new National Master Freight Agreement is that the union is functioning smoothly under Secretary-Treasurer Weldon Mathis.

"Everybody hopes and is operating on the expectation Jackie will be back," Duke Zeller, the union's chief spokesman, said last week. "We all know his recuperative powers. For a power struggle to be going on, it's awfully quiet around here."

Engineer battles blame

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A former Morton Thiokol engineer who argued against launching the space shuttle Challenger says he has stopped blaming himself for the explosion that killed its seven astronauts and is ready to go back to work.

After two years of therapy and "the positive catharsis" of lectures on the disaster, Roger Boisjoly is seeking to reclaim the career that was shattered when the Challenger blew up.

Deserters from Vietnamese army languish in limbo

By PETER ENG

PHANAT NIKHOM, Thailand (AP) — An estimated 500 to 600 Vietnamese army deserters languish in Thai refugee camps, largely forgotten and unwanted.

Thailand doesn't want them to stay.

Vietnam won't take them back, even if they wanted to go back.

Western countries, including the United States, for the most part refuse to resettle them as refugees, even though they maintain they are victims of Vietnam's communist system.

The deserters are men who were sent to fight guerrillas opposing the Vietnamese-backed government in Cambodia.

The most are at the refugee camp here in Phanat Nikhom near Bangkok, where about 430 live together in ramshackle bamboo and canvas huts, isolated from other Vietnamese who fear them as part of the communist government they fled.

This rejection and the trauma of the war and their flight have created what one Western relief worker called a "hopeless, helpless, lost subculture."

In a camp where most refugees are preparing for new lives in the West, many deserters have remained for years, deep in depression. Some have attempted suicide, officials said. Still others have turned to drugs and violence.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and now has 125,000 troops fighting 50,000 or more guerrillas.

More than 1,000 Vietnamese soldiers have fled to Thailand since 1981, according to Thai officials, but desertions have decreased in more recent years, probably because the fighting no longer is near the Thai-Cambodian border, which made it easy for soldiers to desert.

Some 300 deserters arrived in Phanat Nikhom in 1985, when thousands of Vietnamese troops overran guerrilla bases near the border, but only 80 came in 1987 and just two so far this year.

The deserters, usually single males with few skills or ties abroad, are among the most difficult refugees in Thailand to resettle.

Canada has taken the most, nearly 150 since 1981.

Two-thirds of the 76 deserters resettled last year were taken by Scandinavian nations, which traditionally accept difficult cases.

The United States, by far the biggest resettler of Indochinese overall, has taken only about 100, largely because it considers the deserters part of an occupying army that persecuted others.

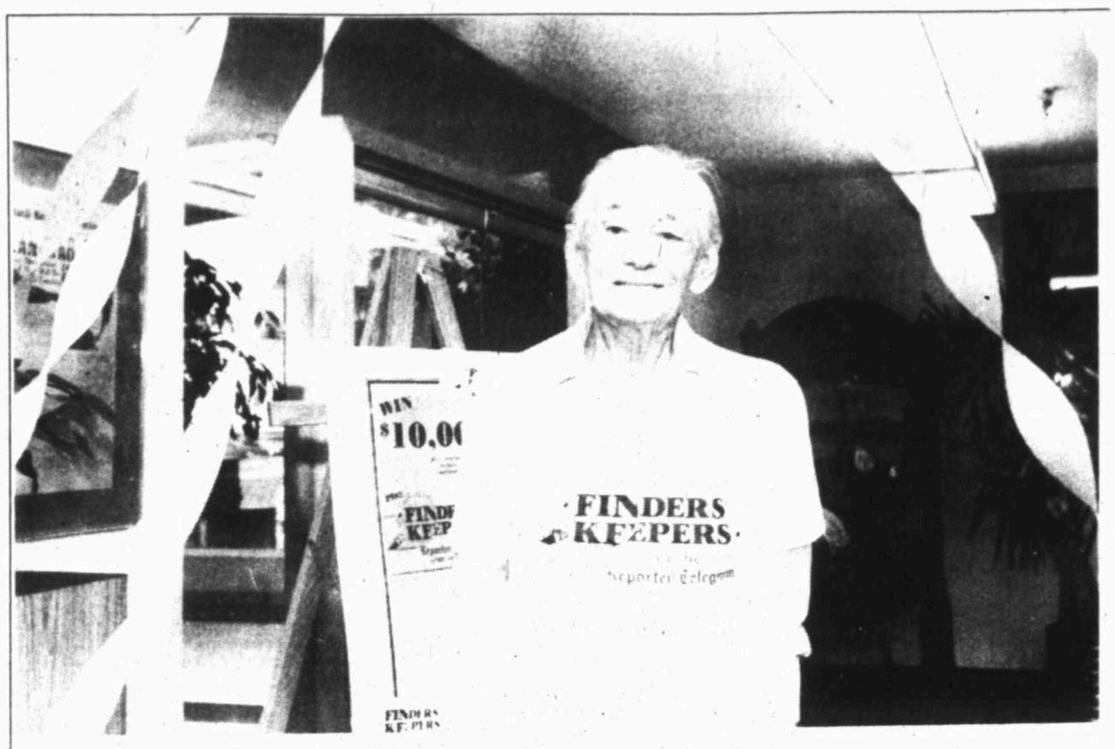

Some aid officials criticize the refusal to accept more deserters as being based on political, not humanitarian, considerations.

"People don't think of us as people who escaped the army of the communists," complained Hoang Manh Chuong, a 27-year-old deserter who has been here since 1984 and was rejected by the United States in January. "They think we are still bad people."

Chuong said he fled while on guard duty in August 1983, a month after arriving in western Cambodia. He wandered into the jungle for five days with nothing to eat, following the sunset to the Thai border, he said. He added that Khmer Rouge guerrillas held him captive for two months and beat him as a suspected spy. He was then jailed in Aranyaprathet in Thailand for 10 months before reaching Phanat Nikhom.

Like several others interviewed, Chuong said he deserted because the communists persecuted his family after 1975. He said his father, a former South Vietnam soldier, was held in political "re-education" camps for six years.

Chuong said Vietnamese who flee to Thailand as boat people and get more favored treatment as refugees are rich people who can afford to pay for boat passage. The deserters, he added, are poor.

Meaning of poppy should be taught

This is the day of the poppy.

But for some, the artificial, small red flowers may not hold the meaning they do for older Americans. In the years since the end of the Vietnam War, and before that, the Korean War, and before that World War II, World War I and all the other battles America has fought in the past, the meaning of the poppy may have been lost, pushed aside by the comfort of peace and prosperity showered on a younger generation.

Today is Memorial Day, the day of the poppy, the day of personal sacrifice for the love of a nation and a way of life, and that meaning should be made clear to those so young that the poppy has no meaning.

In this "me generation," the concept of giving one's life for one's country or the flag or honor may seem like a quaint sacrifice. Why would anyone choose to do it?

Perhaps the concept is "quaint" and not in vogue today. But, then, is the concept of liberty also out of fashion? Hardly. In fact, if one were even to suggest to some young people that the liberty they enjoy is less than guaranteed, they might not believe that a life without liberty is possible.

Yet, on the contrary, what Americans enjoy today was not merely inherited by birthright but, instead, bought and paid for with the blood of thousands of veterans who rose to the challenge when liberty was threatened and who gave their blood, sweat and tears — and their very lives — that this nation would continue to be the land of liberty and freedom.

Today is the day set aside to honor the memory of those patriots — the brave men and women who gave their lives for our futures. Today is the day to pin on a poppy to affirm that, yes, even after all these years we still remember what they endured and are thankful for their ultimate sacrifice.

The concept of giving one's life for one's country isn't out of fashion. It simply has been put aside until it needs to be resurrected. We hope that day never comes, of course, but if and when it does many more Americans will answer that call with their courage, blood and, if necessary, their lives to ensure the liberty of future generations.

Pin on a poppy today and remember. We must never forget the cost of liberty.

JACK ANDERSON

Propagandist making most of glasnost

WASHINGTON — At least one Soviet has discovered that there is gold in them thar hills of glasnost. Vladimir Posner, familiar to Americans from his talk show appearances as a slick Soviet mouthpiece, is an articulate communist making the most out of capitalism.

Jack Anderson

Last fall, Posner joined the U.S. speakers' circuit for a 10-speech tour averaging about $5,000 a speech — not as much as Henry Kissinger and Ollie North, but more than Dr. Joyce Brothers and Gordon Liddy.

It took Posner some time to realize how well it could pay to be a communist. It took his superiors even longer to warm up to the idea of Posner as a celebrity. But this fall, he will be on the circuit again, and the asking price is $10,000.

Posner first appeared on the American television screen in 1980 when he defended the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The forum was ABC's "Nightline," and host Ted Koppel pronounced Posner a "very bright propagandist." He spoke American English with all the idioms. He was charming, even handsome.

Soon Posner was in demand as the rare Soviet who could provide the counterpoint in a debate without looking like one of the guys who reviews the troops in Red Square. Moscow was happy with him, too, until a rave profile of Posner appeared in People magazine in August 1981. That was too much kitsch for the Kremlin, and he was banned from American appearances for almost a year.

By 1983, however, Posner was hot property again. Colleges and conventions wanted him as a speaker, but he could not legally accept the fees they were offering, which ranged from $1,500 to $10,000.

Salt Lake City radio commentator Jim Dabakis came up with a solution: Why not put the fees in a fund to pay for exchanges of Soviet and U.S. media personalities? Posner agreed, and the American Program Bureau (APB) headquartered in Massachusetts organized a tour for September 1983.

On Sept. 1, the Soviets shot down Korean Airlines flight 007, killing 269 passengers. It seemed like a perfect time for Posner to be in the limelight, but Moscow didn't think so. When Dabakis flew to New York City to meet Posner's plane and begin the tour, Posner wasn't on the plane. Dabakis told us he got a telegram the next day from Moscow saying Posner's superiors believed it was "too dangerous" for him to come to the United States.

APB set up another tour for 1984, with the surprising approval of the State Department. One department official called it "a game of chicken." Officials at the State Department didn't think Moscow would let Posner participate. They were right. Posner later told friends it was a case of professional jealousy. A superior at the state-run Moscow radio network disapproved the trip at the last minute.

APB was discouraged, but Posner wasn't. He abandoned any pretense of a charitable foundation and started talking money. One Posner confidant said Posner told APB officials to let him worry about how he'd get the money back to Moscow. "Let's talk about what you're going to get (the APB commission), and I'll handle the legalities of my cut," Posner reportedly said. The third attempt at a tour failed, too. Posner had to cancel because Mikhail Gorbachev wanted him at an international peace forum.

An APB spokesman declined to comment to us about the rise and fall of negotiations with Posner. As it turns out, Posner didn't need APB. He had a new friend in his corner, television talk show host Phil Donahue. It was Donahue's "representative" for speeches, Marilyn O'Reilly, who successfully booked Posner on a round of speeches last fall. She is marketing a second tour this fall.

Posner told a friend that Donahue urged him to try the speakers' circuit and advised him he could get more than $10,000 a speech. Donahue doesn't remember talking specifics with Posner. "If I did say something like that," Donahue told us, "it would be to the extent: 'If you're going to go all the way to California, you might as well get what other people in your position earn.' I guess maybe I was being somewhat protective. I didn't want him to tap dance for less than he was worth."

Donahue took a liking to Posner after they co-hosted two shows via satellite in 1985 and 1986. Posner was in Leningrad for both shows, with Donahue in Seattle and Boston. Donahue was most fascinated by Posner's background. He is a Russian Jew who was born in Paris and spent his early childhood in Manhattan. "There's a lot about America that he loves," Donahue said.

ILLUSIVE TOXINS — Toxic PCBs have been banned in the United States for more than 10 years, but the Environmental Protection Agency still has no clear idea of where the toxins turn up.

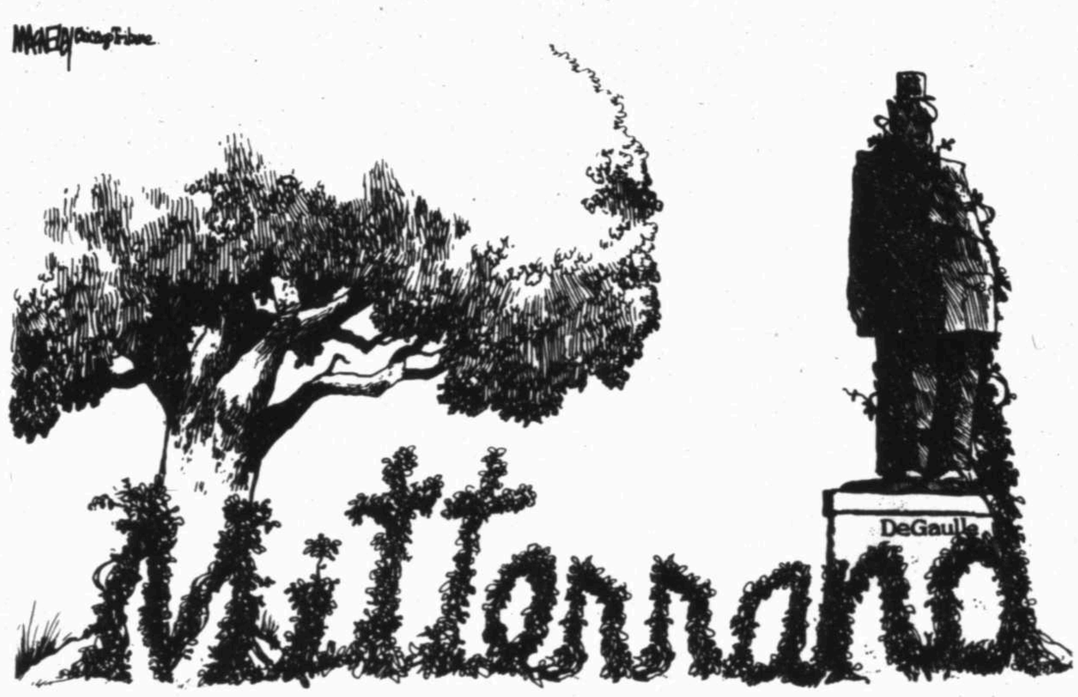

EPA inspectors are assigned to find and clean up the places where PCBs remain. They were widely used in industry for more than 40 years, primarily in electrical equipment. The General Accounting Office recently revealed that the EPA inspectors spend almost half their time looking in the wrong places.

The GAO said EPA inspectors waste time checking facilities when they should have been able to tell in advance that no PCBs were used there. Without adequate lists of potential PCB sites, some inspectors use a hit-and-miss method, with each inspection costing about $1,300.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Visa will advertise its credit cards in the Soviet Union this year, but the slogan had to be adjusted. Soviet officials said "everywhere you want to be" is illogical. Wait till they hear the competition's slogan, "don't leave home without it" — an illogical concept for those who can't leave home at all.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, May 30, the 151st day of 1988. There are 215 days left in the year. This is Memorial Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 30, 1431, Joan of Arc, condemned as a heretic, was burned at the stake in Rouen, France.

On this date:

In 1539, Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto landed in Florida.

In 1854, the territories of Nebraska and Kansas were established.

In 1883, 12 people were trampled to death when a rumor that the recently-opened Brooklyn Bridge was in imminent danger of collapsing triggered a stampede.

In 1911, Indianapolis saw its first long-distance auto race; Ray Harroun was the winner.

In 1922, the Lincoln Memorial was dedicated in Washington, D.C. by the chief justice of the United States, William Howard Taft.

Bet on Jim Wright

WASHINGTON — The House speaker is beleaguered by questions about his personal finances and efforts on behalf of Texas S&Ls, by calls for a House investigation of his ethics and by GOP grumbling about the fairness of his leadership.

Roberson

But the odds are overwhelming that he won't lose his 12th District (Ft. Worth) seat or his job as speaker.

"Jim Wright is more effective than ever before and probably is more solid with voters in his district than in his entire career," said 38-year-veteran Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, dean of the Texas delegation and a powerful congressional leader in his own right.

"This nitpicking is a 'sack-the-quarterback' effort by Republicans who are embarrassed" by such scandals as the Iran-contra affair and the administration's failure to oust Panama's strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega, Brooks asserted.

It would take a lot of evidence to make hometown folks believe Wright is unethical. "Wright is getting a bum rap," declared Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis, also of Ft. Worth.

Texans like the fact that one of their own is the second most important elected official in America and technically third in line for succession to the presidency. If his position makes it possible for him to bring home more bacon, well, that's okay, too.

The latest barrage of criticism aimed at Wright comes from Republican lawmakers who complain that during Wright's 17-month tenure the House has become autocratic and unfair.

Minority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., said that "creative rule-alteration procedures" — which he called "CRAP rules" had risen sharply and that they deny rights to the minority. Specifically, he charges that Democrats are ramming bills straight to the floor, avoiding committees.

Wright responded that he has "tried very hard to be bipartisan." But he said of Republicans: "Sometimes they choose to help, and sometimes they choose to sit on the sidelines and throw thumbtacks on the running field."

After calls for a House Ethics Committee probe of his political and campaign activities, Wright wrote Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., pledging his "full cooperation" with any investigation.

Formal requests have come from an old adversary, Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., and a former ally, Common Cause, the self-styled national citizens' lobby.

Gingrich's persistent attacks had been described by Wright as similar to a gnat's buzzing: "He can't hurt you, but he can get in your ear and distract your attention."

But when Common Cause, a respected government watchdog group, asked for an investigation, it lent credibility and focused new attention to Gingrich's complaints.

Common Cause urged Dixon to look into whether Wright improperly used his influence on behalf of the Texas savings and loan industry and whether House rules were violated by financial arrangements for publishing a book by Wright titled, "Reflections of a Public Man."

In recent years, Wright has received 55 percent in royalties, an unusually high rate, from his friend Carlos Moore, a former House staffer who published the book and also received money for services to the Wright campaign.

Wright defended himself recently in a closed meeting with some House Democrats, describing the charges as "baseless" and "politically motivated."

Wright admits he has a thin skin when it comes to press criticism. Last fall, he hired a former newspaperman and book writer who set out aggressively to refute allegations deemed unfair or inaccurate.

The aide, George Mair, fired off angry letters to offending journalists' bosses, causing Wright to apologize. Everyone thought Mair would be leaving at the end of this month, when his six-month trial period expired.

But look who's still here! Mair, who has been busy arranging get-better-acquainted dinner parties at Wright's home for small groups of influential people, insists that he's now on the Wright payroll "indefinitely."

CHARLEY REESE

Astrology is rubbish, but harmless rubbish

There is a large amount of intellectual sleaze in this country, illustrated by the flap over Donald Regan's book in which he reported that Nancy Reagan, the president's wife, consults an astrologer.

Charley Reese

There has been much expression of ridicule and mock horror, even by newspapers which themselves purchase and publish daily astrology columns.

Astrology, of course, is rubbish but harmless rubbish. And Nancy Reagan is not a scientist or a logician or a public official. She's a wife, a former actress, an attractive and gracious lady who loves her husband and is protective of him. If she's a bit superstitious, so what? It's none of our business. Millions of Americans are.

This little tidbit out of Regan's book has been blown out of proportion by people who are not really concerned about Mrs. Reagan's superstitions but who are political and ideological enemies of President Reagan. The sleaze comes in because rather than simply stating their real animosity they seize little tidbits of gossip for the purpose of discrediting the President.

Frankly, we should be much more concerned about the advice the President gets from Secretary of State George Shultz than we are about the advice his wife gets from some California astrologer as to which day it would be most auspicious to hold a press conference or make a speech.

Donald Regan himself, no fan of the First Lady, said it was inconsequential. The President's policy decisions were never influenced by anything his wife may have heard from her astrologer friend.

It is, like so much of the intellectual sleaze in our society, a ritual burning of a straw man.

People should be aware, too, that there is always a rivalry of sorts between the staff and the wife of a public official. A staff person is a person with no authority, no power, no public office, and no constituency of his own. All that he has is derived from the public official and there is often great competition among staff people as to who is closest to the official and therefore the most powerful.

Naturally, a man's wife is closer to him than any staff member and as strange as it sounds, staff people are quite frequently jealous. It's not uncommon at all to hear derogatory comments from staff about a wife whether it's in the White House, a governor's mansion, or a House or Senate office. Competition for the officeholder's ear is intense.

Nothing in any of these kiss and tell books that have come out of the Administration have revealed anything which people familiar with Ronald Reagan's public life didn't already know or should have known. The man, in both his virtues and his faults, hasn't changed except to the degree that age is taking a toll on him.

Though I have much fault to find with some of his policies, particularly recently, I'm still satisfied he was the right choice in 1980 and 1984. After all, the choice was not between Reagan and perfection but between Reagan and Jimmy Carter or Reagan and Walter Mondale. There's no question the country is infinitely better off than it was in 1979 or would have been had either Carter or Mondale been in the White House during the 1980s.

The Carter-Mondale administration was a disaster, one of the worst in American history. And don't let any Democratic revisionists kid you. History will look as unkindly upon the Carter Administration as the American people did. It's only redeeming virtue was its brevity.

And you may carp, if you like, about Mr. and Mrs. Reagan's friends from Hollywood but I would rather they were in the White House than the family friends of Mondale's vice presidential running mate, Geraldine Ferraro. Choosing her was all the example of Mondale's poor judgment the American people needed.

The president's administration has its flaws, as all do, but Ronald Reagan and his First Lady are a class act and have done much for which Americans should be grateful.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Religious vultures targeting Aunt Fannies!

Aunt Fannie, who's 90, never got married and never had any children. For the past several years, she has lived as a recluse in an apartment in Charleston, S.C.

Grizzard

Relatives tried to visit, but Aunt Fannie would refuse to open the door for them.

"She was living," said a grandniece, Beth Speaks, of Stone Mountain, "on powdered milk and cereal. A man who lived next door to her called and said when she walked to the mailbox, she was in shreds."

Beth Speaks' father, Aunt Fannie's nephew, finally talked to her landlord and was able to get inside the apartment, which he found in shambles.

He also found that Aunt Fannie, who was thought to be quite comfortable financially, was nearly broke.

"She had been eaten up," said Beth Speaks, "by religious vultures."

Beth's father obtained power of attorney for his aunt and found she had been giving away up to $500 a month in donations to religious organizations.

Most of her money had been sent to Feed My People out of Phoenix, Ariz., which is headed by a Rev. Don Stewart.

"Aunt Fannie still thinks this Stewart is the most wonderful person who ever hit this earth," Beth Speaks explained.

Here is part of the sort of letters Don Stewart has been sending out to the Aunt Fannies of the world:

"Dear Fannie:

"I must talk to you. I must talk to you NOW. Please listen. If I can't talk to you, who can I talk to?"

The letter continues with a discussion of how Feed My People needs $86,000 to pay off a contractor who has built something called an Emergency Relief Headquarters.

"Now, here is what I am asking you to do," Stewart's letter goes on.

"Rush $300 back to us today for this need. Just think, your $300 will be working for you long after you have gone to heaven.

"... if you don't have $300 now, you can use your credit card ... I knew I could talk to you. You love the children just as much as I do, don't you Aunt Fannie?"

"Those letters made Aunt Fannie think the entire cause depended on her," said Beth Speaks.

Aunt Fannie's situation got worse recently. She fell and no longer can take care of herself. She has been placed in a nursing home and faces welfare.

"I don't know," said Beth Speaks. "Maybe she felt she needed to make up for something by giving this way. I just don't know how those people can pick on old folks the way they do."

What Eline Conley of Feed My People said was, "We're sorry, but we have no way of knowing the condition of the people we send the letters to. We purchase our lists of names."

Beth Speaks father called Feed My People and demanded they send no more mail to Aunt Fannie.

Aunt Fannie, meanwhile, is worried because she isn't getting any more mail from her beloved Don Stewart.

By the way, Don. Now, Aunt Fannie needs your help. Right now. Send her her money back.

Don't have the cash? Use your credit card, Slick.

Some foreign embassies in Tokyo reap windfalls from property sale

TOKYO (AP) — Some foreign embassies are cashing in on the high value of real estate in central Tokyo.

Australia is selling its Tokyo property to help balance the budget back home.

Mainland China is doing it to finance a new ambassador's residence in Tokyo.

The Argentine Embassy has refused to comment on Japanese press reports that it is looking to sell its ambassador's residence to help pay for the building of Argentina's new capital city.

But the diplomatic missions of poorer countries complain of being priced out of Tokyo.

The African nation of Uganda, for example, closed its embassy in Tokyo last year and its mission in China now doubles as the embassy for Japan.

Embassy land sales have generated waves in diplomatic channels because local authorities are trying to lower prices in hopes of stemming further increases in property prices in the world's most expensive city.

"The Australian government decided it would reduce its current account deficit by selling some of its assets," including one-third of its land in Tokyo, said an embassy spokesman. "The high value of the yen and booming real estate were factors in the government decision to sell."

Australia's 1.5 acres of prime land with a pond and many trees is in the posh Minato ward and, according to the spokesman, was recently sold to a consortium of four Japanese and two Australian firms.

The bid price was $45.7 million or, according to news reports, 2.5 times the asking price for adjacent land.

"It wasn't exactly double the standard price, but it was slightly too high," said a metropolitan government official, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

"We told them to lower the price, otherwise it would jack up the price of the surrounding area," he added.

According to Japanese land law, foreign missions are free to sell their property at any cost, the metropolitan government official said. But in light of the recent acceleration in prices, sellers are required to report terms of sales to the government before signing contracts.

"We then advise them if the price is too high," the official said, but the city has no power to stop a sale.

According to the government-run National Land Agency, the cost of residential real estate skyrocketed a record 68.9 percent in fiscal 1987, almost double the previous high of 35.9 percent in 1973 and nearly three times the 1986 increase of 23.8 percent.

The agency attributed the phenomenal rise to speculative buying prompted by money surpluses and lowered interest rates.

While big powers like the United States and the Soviet Union seem settled on their prime embassy grounds, the Chinese Embassy is looking to unload part of its property for a reported $11.1 million.

Program provides role models

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Wendell Niles, a graphic artist who founded his own company, was telling a group of seventh graders from Harlem recently that there were all kinds of jobs for them.

For instance, he said, people were paid to design the textbooks they were reading, the packaging around their candy, the patterns on their clothes.

"Anyone can do these things," he said. "It has nothing to do with what you come from. It's your brain. You can do it. That's what's so great about America."

Niles is among more than 100 business, government and arts leaders who have signed up to visit a seventh-grade class twice a month, in an effort to provide encouragement and role models in a public school system with one of the highest dropout rates in the country.

Under the program, called Adopt-a-Class, each sponsor chooses a theme and creates a curriculum involving a mix of classroom sessions and outings. The Board of Education provides some advice and support services and will pay for the costs of the trips.

Niles, whose concern, Corporate Image Builders, designs such items as logos and stationery, plans to have the class he has adopted create both for an imaginary company. He will also take the children to see typesetting and printing operations.

The sponsors who have signed up so far range from Mayor Edward Koch and dozens of other city officials, to executives of large companies such as Peter Georgescu, the president of Young & Rubicam Advertising, and civic leaders such as Sally Goodgold, the president of the City Club of New York.

The themes each has chosen vary enormously. One man is teaching the children about making leather goods, another video production. An executive of a Japanese bank is combining a study of Japanese culture and banking.

At times, the sponsors are a little awkward, fumbling with the chalk as they try to write on blackboards or discombobulated by the ringing bells that are a routine part of the city's schools. Some even have stage fright.

But the encounters seem to abound with good will and youngsters dressed in their Sunday best, delighted with the excursions and eager to make friends.

The program, under way for only a few months, is the board's newest attempt to involve the public in the school system. Taraja Samuel, who runs Adopt-a-Class for the Board, said it was Koch who suggested the idea because he felt many New Yorkers wanted to reach out to the children but were not able to invest large amounts of money.

"The mayor thought the kids could get a lot out of just spending time with caring, successful adults even if there was no huge financial investment," Samuel said.

Many people in the program say they were drawn to it because it was a manageable, perhaps meaningful way of making a difference in the children's lives.

Some, like Niles, spoke of growing up in the city's poorer neighborhoods, without advice or mentors.

"I wanted them to have that kind of contact," Niles said. "And, I also wanted to say to them, 'Hey kids, the situation isn't the greatest for you, but things can be done, so do it.' "

In some cases, the sponsors are meeting children who have been battered by many of the city's ills — burned out of their homes, living with drug addicts, or surviving on welfare.

But the children remain children, they said, with the shyness, the awe, the hopes and the fears that might be expected of any adolescent.

Goodgold said that she had grown particularly fond of a boy who was often absent because his mother ran a crack den. The boy stayed home for fear that the younger children would be abused.

"One day," said Goodgold, "he said to me, 'Now listen, Mommy,' and I thought to myself, oh, God, he needs that so badly. The child-sweetness is still there in all of them."

Goodgold, whose theme in the program is "behind the scenes in New York City," has taken her class on a number of outings, including a visit to the 911 operators of the city's police department.

"The girls especially saw a pot of gold," said Goodgold, "a job that they might want."

For Niles, the morning went by with his description of different types of printing, an explanation of technical terms like typography and thermography, and the passing around of embossed stationery. He also used a magnifying glass to show the children how photographs in newspapers were made up of hundreds of dots.

Then Niles sat in the back of the room and asked each student to tell what he wanted to be when he grew up and consider how graphic design and printing might be a part of that field.

Drawing them out, Niles convinced Jose Hidalgo, who wanted to be a pilot, that graphics and printing would be in his life in the form of maps and manuals. Charmaine Johnson, he pointed out, would need a resume and portfolio as a model. Becky Morales would need books and report cards as a teacher.

"Faced with a young girl who said she had no ambition and would "Sole for anything, Niles drew a breath.

and don't want to hear that," Niles on t "That's not good enough for thum ou reach for the stars. Reach field." there, the world will bring n to reality."

'Plane Janes' take off

Text by Julie Hillrichs

When Gloria Thornton towed a Boeing 737 on to the Midland International Airport runway for the first time, she had an uplifting experience.

She found a career to boot.

"I love this job," said Ms. Thornton, a customer service representative who works with America West Airlines' all-woman ground crew each Thursday. "I would take this job over any office job any day."

Since that first tug, working the "ramp" has become a way of life for Ms. Thornton and other America West associates based in the Tall City. On Thursdays she loads and unloads baggage, empties waste from the jetliner's restrooms and marshals the plane on to the runway.

During her ten-hour shift — which gets underway at 6 a.m. — Ms. Thornton and her three female colleagues perform the same chores on each of America West's four daily flights. Remarkably, it takes the crew no more than 20 minutes to service each plane.

When they're not working a flight, the women pass the time completing daily flight logs, washing the tugs (carts use to transport baggage and to tow the jet away from the gate), and emptying lavatory carts.

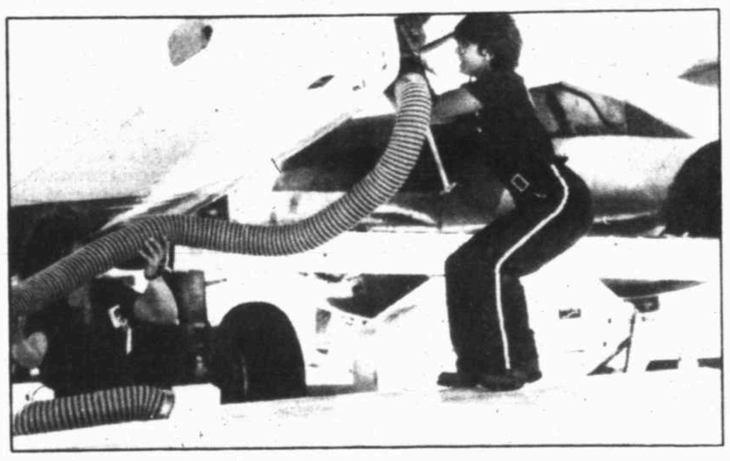

"I do have my limitations," said Ms. Thornton, even though she suggests that she's as capable as any man working the ramp.

In the beginning, the all-male crews working for other airlines had doubts about their female competitors' ability to do the job.

Ms. Thornton recalled the men would "just stand there and watch us struggle to lift the heavy cargo. Now, they'll help us because we've proven ourselves.

"They've accepted us," she said.

Ms. Thornton joined America West in December 1986 after stumbling across a help wanted advertisement in the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

"When I called, they asked if my height was in proportion to my weight and if I could type 25 words per minute," recalled Ms. Thornton. "They said if you can do all that be out here 10 o'clock in the morning."

Candice Ellithorpe, a wife and mother of three children, was hired at the same time.

"I was so excited about it that I took a part-time job, thinking it would turn into something full-time," she said.

Before the women were allowed to assume their duties, each had to undergo a "grueling" two-week training program that focused on such specialized areas as the ramp, operations and ticket counter, Mrs. Ellithorpe said.

"We knew enough just to get us by when we started...It was mind-boggling," she said, "but we had a lot of trainers who knew what to do, so they pretty much stayed by our side.

Texas twins share top honors at Barbers Hill High School

MONT BELVIEU (AP) — There is more to the close partnership of Sharon and Karen Porter than matching brown eyes and a shared birth date.

The identical twins, born 18 years ago, have turned unwavering support for each other and a keen determination to succeed into a winning combination in the classroom.

At Barbers Hill High School graduation ceremonies Saturday, Sharon was honored as valedictorian with a perfect 4.0 average, followed by Karen as salutatorian, only 0.2 points behind.

Their grade points would have been identical had Karen not received a B in Elementary Analysis and Probability Statistics.

"My sister's grades are always just a little bit higher than mine," Karen said with a shrug, "but we never feel any competition between us."

Says Eric Sandifer, the twins' physics and chemistry teacher, "The twins make the most of what God gave them. They might not be as naturally gifted as some, but they take every opportunity to do well."

Principal John L. Hall said the competition for class ranking was stiff among the 124 graduating seniors. "Among the students they beat were a National Merit finalist and a National Merit semi-finalist."

Neither girl is a National Merit scholar, although their SAT scores were above average.

"They study hard and apply themselves more than their brothers," says their mother, Kathy Vondenstein. "They always work hard to keep up their grades, studying an average of two hours a day, besides working after-school jobs."

The twins admit to being perfectionists.

"We always care about our grades. Worry about them," Karen said. "I don't know why. I just would hate to make a low grade."

The two usually take the same classes — including every honors course offered. They sit next to each other, study together and help each other with their homework.

"It is funny to watch them fight and fuss back and forth, if one or the other doesn't understand. They correct each other. Sometimes they finish each other's sentences," Sandifer said.

Sharon was picked by her peers as "most likely to succeed." Her sister, who is more gregarious, her mother said, was picked as "best all-around, most beautiful," and was a homecoming queen candidate.

DEATHS

Foy Proctor

Proctor

Funeral services for longtime Midland resident Foy Proctor, 92, have been set for 11 a.m. Wednesday in the sanctuary of the First United Methodist Church with Rev. J.B. Stewart officiating.

Proctor died at his home Saturday afternoon following an extended illness.

He was born Sept. 28, 1895 in Runnels County, the son of L.C. and Rieta Proctor. The Proctor family moved to Midland in 1906.

He began his ranching career near Seminole in 1917. In 1918 he joined the Marines with his brother, Leonard Proctor. After serving in France during World War I he returned to Midland where he married the late Hahl Mitchell.

Proctor ranched in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. In 1947 he leased the C Ranch and ranched until 1985. In 1953 he bought a ranch 16 miles west of Channing, N.M. from the Pederosa Corporation. It was a part of the old XIT Ranch.

Proctor was not only active in the ranching industry, but found the time for civic duties. He was president of the Midland School Board, president of the Midland Rodeo and Fair Association, a member of the Midland City Council, on the board of governors of Midland Memorial Hospital, president of Citizen Savings and Loan Association.

He was also a director of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, a director of Midland National Bank and later a director of the First National Bank, a charter member of the Lions Club, and for many years was a judge for rodeos that took him to Stamford, Abilene, Corsicana, and Las Vegas, N.M. His early years prepared him for rodeo judging, as he and his brother competed in many events.

Proctor received numerous awards for the conservation of water and soil. In 1985 he received the National Golden Spur Award, given to the most outstanding rancher in the United States by the Ranching Heritage Center in Lubbock.

Survivors include his brother, Leonard Proctor of Midland; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to West Texas Rehabilitation Center in Abilene or to a favorite charity.

James Day

Services for James Day, 81, of Midland will be held 1 p.m. Tuesday at the Glass Chapel of First United Methodist Church. Dr. Charles Lutrick and Rev. J. B. Stewart will officiate.

He died Sunday morning at a local hospital.

Day was born Feb. 4, 1907, in Hereford, and his childhood was spent in Floyd. He graduated from Floyd High School and attended Texas A&M College from 1925 to 1929, graduating with a bachelor of science degree in geology. He was employed by Rycade Oil Company in 1929, and later by Amerada Petroleum Corp. in San Antonio.

He came to Midland in 1933 and married Edna E. Johnson in San Angelo on Dec. 22, 1934. They remained in Midland until September 1942 when he entered the Army, and served as a first lieutenant in the corps of military police. After his discharge, he worked in Abilene for Pan American Products Company from 1946 to 1951. He returned to Midland and worked for Statex from 1951 to 1959. He later became an independent consulting geologist.

Day had been a member of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists since 1930, and was a charter member of the AIPG since 1964. He was a member of the Houston Geological Society, the San Antonio Geological Society, the New Mexico Geological Society, and the Abilene Geological Society, where he served as president in 1948.

He was also a member of the West Texas Geological Society.

Day was a member of the First United Methodist Church and of the McReynolds Bible Class, and he had served as an usher since 1958.

He was preceded in death by his wife, Edna, on Feb. 27, 1988.

Survivors include two brothers, L.D. Day of Telephone and Clyde W. Day of Kerrville; and a sister, Mrs. Randolph Harris of Del Rio.

Pallbearers will be Russell Cotton, Clark J. Matthew, Marvin McRee, R.O. Smith, Earl Wilson, and W.D. Ladd.

Honorary pallbearers will be the McReynolds Bible Class and H.A. Vogel.

Norman L. Woody

Services for Norman L. Woody, 81, of Midland will be held at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Chapel with Rev. J.B. Stewart officiating.

Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of the Ellis Funeral Home.

Woody died Friday night at a local hospital after an illness.

Pallbearers will be Johnny Wayne Woody, James Kenney, Jack Kenney, Jim Kenney, Houston Woody, Pete Woody, Gib Bell, Jim W. Kenney and John Cal Woody.

He was born July 23, 1906 in Brady and was reared in Glasscock County. Prior to moving to Midland in 1929, he had cowboyed in Arizona in the early 1920s and was a barber. He entered the U.S. Army, and served in the military police from 1942 to 1944.

Following his discharge, he worked at the D Ranch in Culverson County as a cowboy and ranch hand. He returned to Midland, and was owner-operator of the Tower Barber Shop with his brother from 1947 until his retirement in 1982.

He was preceded in death by his wife, Alice Walton Moody on June 25, 1984 and by five brothers and two sisters.

Survivors include a brother, Johnny M. Woody of Marble Falls; a sister, Stella Woody of Midland; three nieces and 10 nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas 79702.

Grace Mary Claus

Graveside services for Grace Mary Claus, 83, of Midland, will be held at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Pine Crest Cemetery in Atlanta, Texas under the direction of the Hanner Funeral Home.

Local arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Claus died Friday afternoon at a local hospital following a brief illness.

She was born Feb. 18, 1905 in Hammingsburg, Ohio, and was reared near Okmulgee, Okla. She married Walter Claus on June 21, 1922 in Okmulgee, Okla. Following the marriage, they moved to Cody, Wyo. for 12 years, then moved to Atlanta, Texas.

Black group threatening drug dealers

DALLAS (AP) — A black group plans to patrol with walkie-talkies and to hang posters threatening drug dealers in what Dallas authorities describe as one sign of a growing intolerance of drugs.

Fred Bell, a former member of the Black Panther Party and known for his South Dallas protests in the 1960s, said he is taking to the streets two decades later for a different reason.

"We intend to attack the drug pusher on a physical and psychological front to make it as difficult as possible for them to operate," said Bell, 48, who is known in the Muslim community as Fahim Jihad Minkah. "We're not afraid of those punks."

Beginning next week, Bell said, his group will start putting the heat on crack house operations in South Dallas, deploying two-man teams with walkie-talkies and cameras to snap evidence of suspected drug dealings.

It is the latest turn in a series of activist stances that have drawn the applause of police and community leaders.

North Texas city will pay customers to stay hot

DENTON (AP) — Residents may lose their cool this summer, but they'll be saving money at the same time.

Denton's electric company wants to pay its customers for turning off their thermostats when temperatures zoom during the dog days of summer.

"The purpose is to lower peak electrical demand and reduce the city's cost of wholesale power," said Utilities Director Bob Nelson.

Last year during a two-month test run of the program, nine large businesses saved $85,000, Nelson said.

The electric company pays industries $18 a kilowatt if they can reduce their electric loads by at least 100 kilowatts on any of the 10 to 15 days when the temperatures zoom and the demand for electricity peaks.

During the trial period, the Denton Independent School District saved about $17,000 by cutting power for one hour per day.

Amiable wives avoid touchy topics

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — Nancy Reagan and Raisa Gorbachev toured Kremlin churches Sunday, holding hands and dismissing their reported feuds as "rumors," but when talk turned to religious activities, the Soviet first lady abruptly cut the conversation short.

While President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev squared off over human rights inside the Kremlin's Great Palace, the two women wore smiles and strolled hand-in-hand toward the cameras in an attempt to put to rest the stories about the tense relationship that emerged from their last meeting at the Washington summit.

"We've gotten along very well every other time," a smiling Mrs. Reagan said in response to queries about the supposed frosty relationship.

The Soviet first lady, true to the forthright style she displayed at the White House, chimed in at length and insisted that she considered such reports frivolous.

"Rumors have it, and there was a question, that there is some misunderstanding between myself and the (president's) wife," she replied through an interpreter. "...I would like to say, I think it's not serious."

Mrs. Gorbachev said her contacts with Mrs. Reagan have been part of the improvement in relations between the two superpowers. "We do have a lot to talk about and we are going to have something to remember, which is very important. I welcome Mrs. Reagan here and the president to Moscow," she said.

At one point, Mrs. Reagan was asked whether former White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan incorrectly portrayed her in his book as having asked, after an extended dinner lecture from Mrs. Gorbachev, "Who does that dame think she is?"

Mrs. Reagan, with an icy stare, replied curtly, "Yes."

Even though the two women offered nearly constant smiles, the first lady did display a bit of the impatience she'd shown during the Washington summit as Mrs. Gorbachev maintained an extensive dialogue with the press corps.

During a tour of the Kremlin's sun-splashed Cathedral Square and its ancient, golden-domed stone churches, the two first ladies were often shoulder-to-shoulder, pointing at the sights and talking through interpreters about the fortress' collection of buildings that served as the residence, places of worship and tombs of the Czars.

Mrs. Gorbachev, attired in a fitted, winter white wool suit and dark suede high heels, repeatedly patted the back of her neck to smooth her closely-cropped red hair. On her left shoulder, she wore a gold and green-stone firebird, a famous figure in Russian fairy tales. Mrs. Reagan wore a black-and-white checked Oscar de la Renta two-piece suit, complete with black patent heels and purse and white pique bowed blouse, all set off by a matching set of gold and black bracelets, sparling earrings and a large stone ring.

The Soviet first lady quickly took charge of the tour as she put her arm about Mrs. Reagan's waist and guided her about the inside the 14th century Cathedral of the Annunciation, the largest and one of the oldest churches-turned muesums in the Kremlin.

The vaulted stone church, crowned with five gilded domes, has 40-foot high walls covered with a rich collection of priceless paintings and icons that show scenes from the life of Christ and the Virgin Mary. It is the repository of the finest and most revered icons in Russia, some dating from the 12th century, brought to the church and restored.

After they entered the Cathedral, Mrs. Gorbachev was asked about what she wanted to tell the American people about what the summit should produce.

"Peace and friendship and that they understand the Soviet people," she replied. Asked what else, the former university lecturer shot back, "What do you mean, what else? That's the most important thing."

Mrs. Reagan, appearing a bit bewildered, was asked her impressions of the Soviet Union. "Wonderful, very exciting, it's a little overwhelming," she replied, eyes wide and blinking.

At that point, Mrs. Gorbachev interrupted, insisting, "Please, I beg you, allow us to see the cathedral."

The Soviet first lady then guided Mrs. Reagan from reporters and launched into a lecture about the religious paintings that adorned the golden wall that divides the church sanctuary from its main hall. As they reached one icon depicting a sorrowful Virgin and the infant Jesus touching the mother's cheek, Mrs. Gorbachev remarked that it was one of the most beloved images in the nation.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet demonstrators worried about reforms

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviets are protesting on the streets and in the official press on perceived ballot-rigging by conservatives hoping to blunt Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms at a crucial Communist Party conference.

Demonstrations were reported in Moscow and Leningrad on Saturday and were said to have been sparked by reports that mid-level party officials forced slates of delegates through party meetings.

The weekly news magazine Ogonyok said Sunday that party bureaucrats have pushed people such as Moscow historian Yuri Afanasyev, a leading proponent of Gorbachev's reforms, out of positions at the June 28 conference.

Six Arab soldiers injured

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot and wounded six Arabs in clashes in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip on Sunday, and about 60 Palestinians were treated for tear gas and rubber bullet injuries, hospital officials said.

In the West Bank, classes resumed for about 70,000 Arab junior high school students. Sunday marked the second stage of Israel's plan to reopen 1,200 schools shut nearly four months ago because of the Palestinian uprising.

Israeli officials have said they are reopening schools because the uprising, which began Dec. 8, has quieted.

A militant Jewish settler said her car was stoned by about 150 schoolgirls near the West Bank town of Qalqiliya and that she had to fire into the air before the army rescued her.

Syrians in South Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Hundreds of Syrian troops with automatic weapons patrolled the slums of south Beirut on Sunday, and a leading Shiite Moslem cleric pledged to work for the release of foreign hostages believed held there.

"Although I possess no great means of pressure, I shall exert continuous efforts to resolve the question of the hostages," Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, spiritual guide of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah was quoted as saying.

"I am viewing the hostages' issue from both humanitarian and Islamic standpoints. It is hurting our credibility," the Beirut daily Ad-Dijar quoted Fadallah as saying in an interview published Sunday.

Fadlallah has made several such pledges in the past three years. Although Hezbollah, or Party of God, has publicly denied involvement in the kidnappings, the group is widely believed to be an umbrella for underground factions that are holding the hostages.

New cardinals named

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II named 25 new cardinals from 18 countries Sunday, including prelates from Lithuania and Hong Kong in a move to bolster the Roman Catholic Church in the Soviet Union and China.

Two Americans, Archbishops James A. Hickey of Washington and Edmund C. Szoka of Detroit, were on the list.

The new "princes of the church," who will be formally elevated at a June 28 Vatican session, bring the number of cardinals to 161.

Four new cardinals come from Italy, two each from the United States, Brazil, Spain and India, and one each from Canada, Mozambique, Colombia, Australia, Hungary, Cameroon, Austria, France, West Germany, Mauritius, Hong Kong, Switzerland and Lithuania.

Canonizations stir area

BANGKOK, Thailand (NYT) — The canonization in June of 117 Vietnamese and foreign Roman Catholic martyrs persecuted by 17th- and 18th-century Vietnamese rulers, has provoked angry protests from Hanoi, worsening already unstable relations between the Vatican and Vietnam.

Soviet Jews encourage emigration changes

MOSCOW (AP) — About two dozen Soviet Jews waving posters and yellow Stars of David outside the Kremlin walls urged President Reagan on Sunday to make a summit appeal to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev for relaxation of curbs on Jewish emigration.

Elsewhere in the Soviet capital, Armenians beseeched Reagan to bring up their demands for control over land in a neighboring republic. ans also called on Reagan to bring up their demand for control over land in a neighboring republic.

"We Demand Freedom of Emigration," read a poster held by Sasha Ostroverkh, 7, who wore a Mickey Mouse T-shirt and was the youngest of the Jewish protesters who gathered at the Lenin Library one block from the Kremlin.

Sasha's father, Vladimir, said his family has been trying to emigrate since 1979. The government says Ostroverkh had access to state secrets while working as a social psychologist for the Communications Ministry.

A few policemen kept their distance and made no attempt to disperse the demonstrators. But workers, who normally take Sunday off, noisily sandblasted the library steps and sprayed the protesters and reporters with clouds of dust.

Soviet aide claims U.S. rejecting key proposals

MOSCOW (AP) — A senior adviser to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev charged at the start of summit talks Sunday that the United States had rejected a pair of Soviet proposals aimed at clearing the way for drastic reductions in long-range nuclear missiles.

The accusation came as Gorbachev welcomed President Reagan to the Moscow summit with an appeal to end nuclear testing and preserve the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which would limit the president's Star Wars plan for a space-based missile defense system.

Reagan responded that U.S. and Soviet negotiators are making progress toward a treaty reducing strategic weapons by as much as 50 percent. Citing other joint efforts to ease East-West tensions, the president said that "our work has begun to produce results."

Yevgeny Velikhov, vice president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, told reporters that American neGotiators had rejected Kremlin proposals to ease the two countries' impasse over Star Wars and verify limits on submarine-launched cruise missiles.

The two issues are among the main obstacles to the proposed START or Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty being negotiated by U.S. and Soviet experts in Geneva. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci dismissed any attempt to link Star Wars to progress on a START agreement.

National Security Adviser Colin Powell held out little hope of completing a treaty before Reagan leaves office next January.

Velikhov, who has advised Gorbachev on the Star Wars issue, said the Americans had rejected a Soviet proposal to discuss what types of testing could be permitted under the 1972 ABM accord.

That treaty limits each side to a missile defense at one site. The joint statement issued after the Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Washington last December said both sides would be allowed to test "as required." The United States said that allows tests of potential Star Wars weapons but the Soviets disagree.

Velikhov said that "within the framework of the December statement, we need to settle some technical questions." But he charged that "the Americans want to destroy the treaty."

If the United States deploys "a nationwide defense, it will violate the (ABM) treaty, and jeopardizes effort to cut strategic offensive weapons," Velikhov said.

The two sides also agreed in December to negotiate ceilings on submarine-launched nuclear missiles.

'Ship of poison' will unload its toxic chemicals at Genoa

GENOA, Italy (AP) — A freighter known as the "ship of poison" docked Sunday after Genoa officials agreed to let it unload 2,200 tons of toxic chemical wastes that were refused by Djibouti, Venezuela, Syria and Greece.

"The condition of my crew is very bad," said Capt. Ahmed Tabalo of the Syrian freighter Zanoobia. "For three months we have not entered a port. Now we are all nauseous and sick to the stomach."

Lawyers for the ship's owner, Tabalo Shipping, say two people have died, possibly after being contaminated by the wastes — a boy in Venezuela and a Zanoobia crewman during the voyage to Italy.

The Syrian freighter Zanoobia, which the Italian press is calling "the ship of poison," arrived in Genoa port seven hours after leaving the northern Italian port of Carrara.

It had been moored outside that port since April 26, seeking permission to unload the cargo orginally shipped from Carrara in February 1987.

Officials said the Zanoobia docked in an isolated area of the port and will be monitored day and night as a precaution against fire or the spread of toxic fumes.

Giuseppe Francese, the port commissioner in Genoa, decided Friday that the Zanoobia could unload in Genoa. He said Genoa was the only Italian port that could safely load and incinerate the chemicals. The regional Ministry of Civil Protection gave its final approval Saturday.

Port official Giuseppe Telmon, who sailed into the harbor on the Zanoobia, said officials on Monday will begin a chemical analysis to determine what is in the approximately 12,000 drums of waste and how to deal with it. Workers, meanwhile, will begin to unload the ship.

All 18 members of the ship's crew made the voyage Sunday, including three who had been hospitalized Saturday near Carrara with symptoms blamed on exposure to the wastes. Two other crewmen were released from the hospital this month.

A doctor from the port's health service went aboard the Zanoobia on Sunday afternoon to examine the crew.

Francesco Rizzuto, a lawyer for Tabalo Shipping, said a group of Italian chemical companies paid the Milan-based company Jelly Wax about 36 cents a pound to dispose of the waste. He said the company instead shipped the waste out of the country.

The waste was sent first to Djibouti, in East Africa, and then Venezuela, Syria and Greece before returning to Italy.

The cargo was unloaded in Venezuela, but a young boy died reportedly after playing near an opened drum, and the government ordered the waste shipped out of the country, a lawyer for the Zanoobia's owners said.

It was sent to Syria and then on to Greece. After being refused in both places, the ship sailed to Carrara.

A Zanoobia crewman died during the trip from Greece to Carrara, and lawyers for Tabalo Shipping have asked Italian prosecutors to file charges against Jelly Wax if the death resulted from contamination.

Francese, the Genoa port commissioner, said earlier that the wastes will be burned at a local incinerator. Port sources said that will cost 72 cents to $1.86 a pound.

Yugoslavian stability shaken

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Communist Party chief Bosko Krunic said Sunday that Yugoslavia's political stability has been shaken, and he warned of major social upheavals as a result of the country's economic crisis.

But Krunic rejected a multi-party system and other radical reforms in a speech to about 800 Communist Party delegates meeting to find ways of dealing with Yugoslavia's social and financial problems.

"We are, I should say, in the epicenter of the crisis with economic stagnation on the brink of a recession, a high inflation that threatens to run away, and ever sharper social problems and political dissatisfaction," said Krunic.

Yugoslavia is saddled with a 170 percent inflation, a $21 billion foreign debt and a 15 percent unemployment rate.

The three-day conference comes halfway between two party congresses and follows rumors of an attempted military coup to suppress dissent in Slovenia, Yugoslavia's most advanced republic. Slovenia this month filed an unsuccessful motion in the federal Parliament requesting the removal of Premier Branko Mikulic.

"A society which enters such a crisis...cannot emerge from it without profound changes," said the party chief. "Social upheavals are certain to take place and may be grave."

The government launched an emergency economic program on Saturday, including an almost 24 percent devaluation of the ever-weaker national currency, the dinar, hefty price hikes and wage cuts of up to 30 percent.

Krunic said these measures "are not easy at all, but are causing and will cause many shocks, clashes of interest, great social problems."

The austerity package was expected to further erode sagging living standards, which have already dipped by one-third since 1980, and set off a new wave of social unrest. Sporadic worker strikes have flared in various parts of the country to protest of the belt-tightening moves, which were announced several weeks ago.

"The stability of the political system has been shaken," Krunic told the delegates.

Conference documents pledge a separation of party and state administration, curbs on red tape and more openness.

In a draft document circulated before the meeting, the party membership is called "to end the party's impotence and inertia and oppose bureaucratic and static rule which is believed to be the main cause of numerous deformations and failures."

The document demands that the party "abandon its leadership role and (instead) act as a leading force in society, whose major goals are freedom, democracy and the material well-being of the people."

But Krunic rejected changes toward a multi-party system and other radical reforms as a way of regaining control of the economy.

He made clear that the Communist Party intends to continue its one-party rule and a system of self-management that provides for limited worker power-sharing in managing companies.

The party chief asserted it was the historic mission of Yugoslav Communists "not to permit the blind forces to gain the upper hand or changes which, regardless of intentions, would objectively mean abandoning self-management."

Krunic claimed that recent calls for a new constitution and a reshaping of the political system according to Western models "are in fact counterrevolutionary."

Pakistani assembly dissolved

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq on Sunday dissolved the National Assembly, fired his prime minister and accused the lawmakers of failing to maintain law and order in Pakistan.

Zia made the announcement at a news conference minutes after the ousted prime minister, Mohammad Khan Junejo, returned home from a tour of China, South Korea and the Philippines.

Zia also disbanded Junejo's 33-member Cabinet.

The action could plunge the country into a new political crisis. Junejo, 56, was heading the first civilian Cabinet after eight years of martial law imposed by Zia in July 1977.

The National Assembly and Junejo's Cabinet were scheduled to remain in office until 1990. They were elected in December 1984. Junejo was appointed prime minister in March 1985.

Zia, an army general who took power in a bloodless coup in 1977, told reporters that legislators' inability to maintain law and order and failure to bring about an Islamic society led him to disband the Assembly and Cabinet.

He said the country's Constitution and the Senate — the upper house of the Parliament — would stay intact.

Zia said that according to the Constitution, elections should be held within 90 days. He said a caretaker government would be announced Monday. In a major policy change, he said political parties will be permitted to propose their own candidates to contest the assembly seats.

In the 1984 elections, political parties were not permitted to field candidates. That led opposition parties to boycott the vote.

"The National Assembly has failed to realize the objective for which it was elected," Zia said. "The prime minister has ceased to be the prime minister from today, because the National Assembly has been dissolved."

Air Force tries to lower sonic boom damage

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Three ear-shattering booms mark the flight of an F-111 thundering at supersonic speed just 200 feet above a test range in the Florida panhandle.

The fighter-bomber drops an experimental bomb, then the pilot yanks the throttle back to idle, cutting the jet's thrust 90 percent.

In seconds, the plane's speed drops from 940 mph to just under 600 — a radical maneuver designed to limit noise and damage from sonic booms.

Without it, windows might have shattered in Holley and Navarre, which lie near the end of the range; with it, residents might not even hear the booms.

"It's such a violent deceleration we are actually thrown forward in the cockpit, held back by our seat straps," said Maj. Dan Isbell in an interview. "We try our best to be good neighbors. We don't want to go around breaking people's windows."

Isbell, a test pilot from Chattanooga, Tenn., was describing a typical mission at Mach 1.2, or just over the speed of sound, at the Air Force's only supersonic test range in the eastern United States. The special low-level missions test non-nuclear weaponry being developed here, including so-called smart bombs that glide to their targets with pinpoint accuracy.

Col. Harvey Greenberg, Eglin's chief claims officer, said the Air Force nationwide received 265 claims for $465,138 in the 1987 budget year, but paid only $67,003 for 160 claims deemed valid while denying 80. Some claims carry over to the next year.

Eglin accounted for 27 of the valid claims and $4,931 in damages, Air Force records show.

But it has been worse in the past. A single boom in 1984 produced 34 claims that cost Eglin $15,865.

The only other places where the Air Force permits low-level supersonic flights are Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., and certain other desert areas in the West, Isbell said.

But none is as close to populated areas as Eglin's Range B-70. Holley and Navarre lie just five to seven miles to the west.

The 13-mile-long range is in the western half of a 720-square-mile military reservation, about 10 miles northwest of Fort Walton Beach, once billed as "Home of the Sonic Boom."

Local newspapers and radio stations carry Air Force news releases about impending supersonic flights so residents won't be startled if they hear the booms, said George Roberts, a civilian spokesman in Eglin's public affairs office. He said missions have been canceled when the releases failed to make the newspapers.

Predicting the strength of sonic booms is an inexact science that depends on such variables as aircraft size, speed, altitude and weather factors including wind, air pressure and temperature, Isbell said.

Temperature inversions are the most serious complication, capable of bouncing the sonic shock waves great distances. Isbell said inversions have been suspected of breaking windows as far away as downtown Pensacola, about 30 miles to the west.

The F-111 is the largest of several types of aircraft used in low-level supersonic testing and thus produces the loudest and most damaging booms.

An aircraft flying faster than the speed of sound generally creates three shock waves, one by its nose, another by its midsection and the third by its tail, Isbell said.

Shock waves are caused when air molecules cannot get out of the way of a plane flying faster than the speed of sound.

The booms, however, dissipate rapidly over distance. Those produced at high altitudes rarely are heard on the ground, and supersonic flight above 30,000 feet, or almost 6 miles up, is unrestricted, Isbell said.

Studies conducted by the National Aeronautic and Space Administration, which was checking the potential for damage from space shuttles, indicate window breakage is about the worst damage that can be caused by an aircraft.

Some people, however, give sonic booms credit for more.

A man living just across the Alabama state line about 50 miles west of Eglin once complained that a sonic boom knocked his mobile home off its foundation. The man later admitted he hadn't heard a sonic boom and wasn't even home at the time. He later told Isbell that he first thought it was caused by dynamiting at a quarry across the street.

Through knowledge, peace finally comes to MIA family

By MIKE McINTYRE
Copley News Service

BENJAMIN, Utah — Franklin Caras' name is painted on the mailbox of a house he never saw. His 1965 Ford Mustang — the car in which his four grown children learned to drive — is parked out front.

Like yellow ribbons around a tree, the mailbox, the car and the MIA bracelet Franklin's wife, Cathy, wears were once symbols of hope for his return. They now are reminders of a life come full circle — a circle that took almost 21 years to close.

Franklin was shot down over North Vietnam on April 28, 1967. Until his remains were returned by the Vietnamese government and officially identified by an Army medical team in Honolulu, his family did not know whether he was dead or alive.

Though missing, he was never forgotten. To a large degree, remembering Franklin has unified and strengthened three generations of Carases — a close-knit clan of more than 150, most of whom still live in this farming community.

After his plane was shot down, relatives gathered Sundays at Cathy's house. Sometimes 40 family members would squeeze into the living room, embracing, sharing stories and praying for Franklin's safe return.

As in most of Utah, the Mormon Church here is both the spiritual and social hub of the community. In addition to her family, Cathy has found great comfort in her religion over the last two decades of uncertainty.

When she heard he had been shot down, Cathy sat and stared at a picture of the resurrected Christ. "And as I looked at the picture and prayed and cried," she said, "I got a really warm, wonderful feeling that all is well.

"It was as if a great, wonderful voice said three times: 'All is well. All is well. All is well.'

"At that time, 'All is well' meant he'd be coming back to me," she said. "I had those feelings right up until the POWs came home."

SHORTLY BEFORE the American prisoners of war held by the North Vietnamese were released in 1973, Cathy felt Franklin would not be among them. Then "all is well" took on a new meaning.

"In the Lord's eyes there was no better way for Franklin," she said. "All was well with him."

But the Lord's work was one thing, and Cathy's was another. Until she had tangible proof, she would never give up hope.

In 1970, she joined the newly founded National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia. The Washington-based non-profit organization of 3,500 members has done perhaps more than any other group to keep the POW-MIA issue alive.

Cathy served several years as the league's Utah state coordinator, presenting programs to civic organizations, veterans' groups and schools.

The programs were a family activity. Cathy and Jacky, wife of Franklin's younger brother Jim, would speak on the issue. Franklin's sister Evelyn and a niece, Colleen, would sing. Cathy's children — Anna Marie, Tony, Cathy Lynn and Christopher — would sing a song called "My Dad":

He isn't much in the eyes of the world;
He may never make history.
No, he isn't much in the eyes of the world;
But he's the world to me.

For some families, waiting not yet over

Copley News Service

Uncertainty has ended for the family of Air Force Col. Franklin A. Caras. For the families of 2,404 other Americans still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia the uncertainty continues.

Of the 2,404 total, 1,767 were lost in what is now Vietnam, 549 in Laos, 82 in Cambodia and six in China. The total includes 42 civilians, two of them women.

The families range from those who feel nearly sure their loved ones are dead to those who believe they are being held prisoner.

Army Pfc. Thomas Frederick Green of Ramona, Calif., was 19 and had been in Vietnam one month when his helicopter was shot down and crashed in the sea on Oct. 26, 1971. The bodies of six crew members, including Green, were never found.

"I really kind of don't think he's alive," said his mother, Nathalie. "But you have to be prepared (for the possibility)."

She said that she and her husband, Walter, have "made peace" with the unknown. Their son's name is on a plaque marking an empty grave in a local cemetery.

"The vast majority are very realistic and recognize the odds," said Ann Mills Griffiths, executive director of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, and the sister of an MIA. "At the same time, human tendency is, until you have something final, there is hope."

Although the terms "POW" and "MIA" are commonly used, the status of all but one of those unaccounted for was changed during the late-1970s to "Killed in Action — Body Not Recovered."

Air Force Col. Charles E. Shelton is the only one currently listed as a POW. He was selected by the government to symbolize that it has not ruled out the possibility that Americans are being held alive. His wife, Marian, lives in San Diego.

Shelton was shot down over Laos on April 29, 1965, his 33rd birthday. For two years, he was known to have been a prisoner of Communist Pathet Lao forces.

Marian Shelton is angered by the "symbolic" nature of her husband's POW status. She said she is convinced that he and other servicemen are alive and that Washington is not doing enough to get them back.

Public awareness of the POW-MIA issue is at the highest level since the POWs were released in 1973. After being all but written off in the 1970s, the Reagan administration has revived the issue in the 1980s, calling it "a matter of the highest national priority."

Presidential Emissary Gen. John Vessey (retired) traveled to Hanoi last August and secured from the Vietnamese a pledge to work harder to resolve the issue. Dialogue is at its best since talks began in 1980.

"Our greatest danger now is misinformation, specious allegations that undermine the credibility of the issue," said Griffiths.

The league, which strives to generate non-partisan support for the issue, has always called for "the fullest possible accounting" of Americans missing in Southeast Asia.

"War is war, and we all recognize that a lot of us will never have answers," said the league's Griffiths. "But the one thing we want to be certain of in our own minds is that every effort was made to obtain those answers."

While Franklin is regarded as a war hero, relatives and friends alike describe Cathy herself in near-heroic terms.

"She's done a remarkable job of raising those kids," said Franklin's boyhood friend, John Parkinson. "She has the admiration of everybody who knows her."

"A lot of MIA wives looked to her," said Jacky. "She's touched a lot of people."

Jim and Jacky's son Clark, 28, recalled the summer days in the early 1970s when a National League of Families' POW-MIA information booth was set up at the state fair.

"It was supposed to be manned in shifts, but Aunt Cathy was always there," said Clark. "I remember her getting abuse from people — the Jane Fondas of the Vietnam War — but she stood there and took it."

Cathy Caras is a soft-spoken, gentle woman with an air of serenity. At 51, she has retained her slim figure and smiles shyly. She is a selfless, modest woman who would be the last to consider herself heroic.

"I think probably what made me keep going the most," she said, "was that I kept thinking in the back of my mind, I've got to do everything I can to make my kids' lives as normal as possible. I wanted Franklin to be proud of the way I handled it."

FRANKLIN'S CHILDREN have few memories of their father. The ones they do have are vivid, strengthened through repetition like an exercised muscle.

Cathy, for one, never let them forget. "When my kids were little," she said, "I never tucked them in bed without saying, 'Your mommy and daddy love you.' Not just, 'Your mommy loves you.'"

Cathy Lynn, Anna Marie and Tony recall how Franklin made "bubble gum" out of pink baby lotion, and how he tried to convince them he was an angel — Angel was his middle name, after his father — by disappearing through the bathroom window.

Cathy Lynn remembers getting bitten by a dog and her father holding her tenderly in a hospital, waiting for a doctor to stitch up her cheek. Anna Marie recalls the gallant way he rescued her tricycle from the deep end of a swimming pool, where she feared a dragon lived.

Christopher, who was 8 months old when Franklin left for the war, is the one child whose knowledge of his father is based solely on stories shared by other relatives.

"They could tell me a part of who he was and help me find out who I was," he said. "I took the images of their memories and basically built them into myself."

School was emotionally difficult for all four kids. Those forms that ask the status of the pupil's father never had a box marked "MIA." Teachers told the children to check the box marked "Deceased."

Anna Marie ached when she heard girlfriends bad-mouth their fathers in front of her over some petty matter. "I just wanted to strangle them," she said. "I'd be so thrilled if my dad would've cussed at me once for coming in late."

The nation's desire to forget the war troubled the kids, too.

"After the POWs came home and the war was about over, all of a sudden the Vietnamese said, 'That's all of 'em,' " Tony recalled. "It kind of took the wind out of all of our sails. It was hard to get people to believe there were still people missing in action."

Tony, now 25, is completing a double degree in computer science and electrical engineering at Brigham Young University in nearby Provo. Anna Marie, 26, is married and works as a medical technician. She and her husband, David, have just had their third child.

Cathy Lynn, 24, works at a handicrafts store and is studying to be a nurse in Salt Lake City. Christopher, 21, who married a girl named Marie, is majoring in agriculture at Utah Valley Technical College.

And now 21 years of uncertainty and frustration are over. Their father's remains had been identified, and his body was coming home.

ANGEL AND Mary Caras are 91 and 87, respectively.

Angel, a Greek immigrant who became prominent in the sheep and agriculture businesses, is revered in these parts. He has been confined to a wheelchair since suffering a stroke four years ago, but he remains sharp, able to tell you the price his sugar beets fetched in 1919.

"This boy missing — not just because he's our son — he was a wonderful guy," Angel said one recent evening in his living room. "I don't know why he was so good. Maybe the Lord knew he wasn't gonna be with us too long, so he gave him a good life. ... "

Franklin and his brothers Earnest and Jim became partners in a sheep business one month before he went overseas for the last time. He was to put so much a month toward the business until he retired, while Earnest and Jim ran things.

Earnest said it was "a good feeling" to know that Franklin's remains were identified and being returned. "It relieves you, and his poor wife, and it lets my mother and dad know for sure that that man is right there," he said, pointing to the ground.

About 1,000 people turned out Feb. 20 for Franklin's funeral — more than the population of Benjamin.

A church official announced that Cathy had asked that the services be extended to include "all those who had given their lives for their country."

Jim offered the invocation. "Thank you, Father, for the miracle of this day," he said, his voice quavering. "We are reminded again that we do receive answers to our prayers."

Cathy, who wore a white dress, played a 1970 tape of her children singing "My Dad." She spoke of the peace Franklin's return had given her. "Now I know all is well," she said. "All is well. All is well."

FRANKLIN'S GRAVE is on a hillside that faces West Mountain, his old hunting grounds. The tiny cemetery overlooks snow-covered fields of stubble. Horses and cattle roam in pastures.

It was an unusually warm day. Blue skies and a yellow fireball of a sun that melted the snow, turning the earth into mud.

Then, unannounced, four fighter jets came streaking across the sky, just as Franklin had years earlier to signal his return home. Overhead, one of the pilots lit the burner and shot straight up into the glorious sunlight. He banked sharply over West Mountain, and was gone.

Tony dedicated the grave as Air Force pallbearers held the flag over his father's casket. A firing line of seven shot three rounds in the traditional 21-gun salute. Then a white-gloved bugler played taps.

An officer from Hill Air Force Base sobbed as he presented the flag, now folded into a triangle, to Mary "with the deepest sympathy of a grateful nation." Retired Lt. Col. Wayne Rosenberry, Franklin's former wing commander, handed Cathy a second flag that had earlier draped the casket.

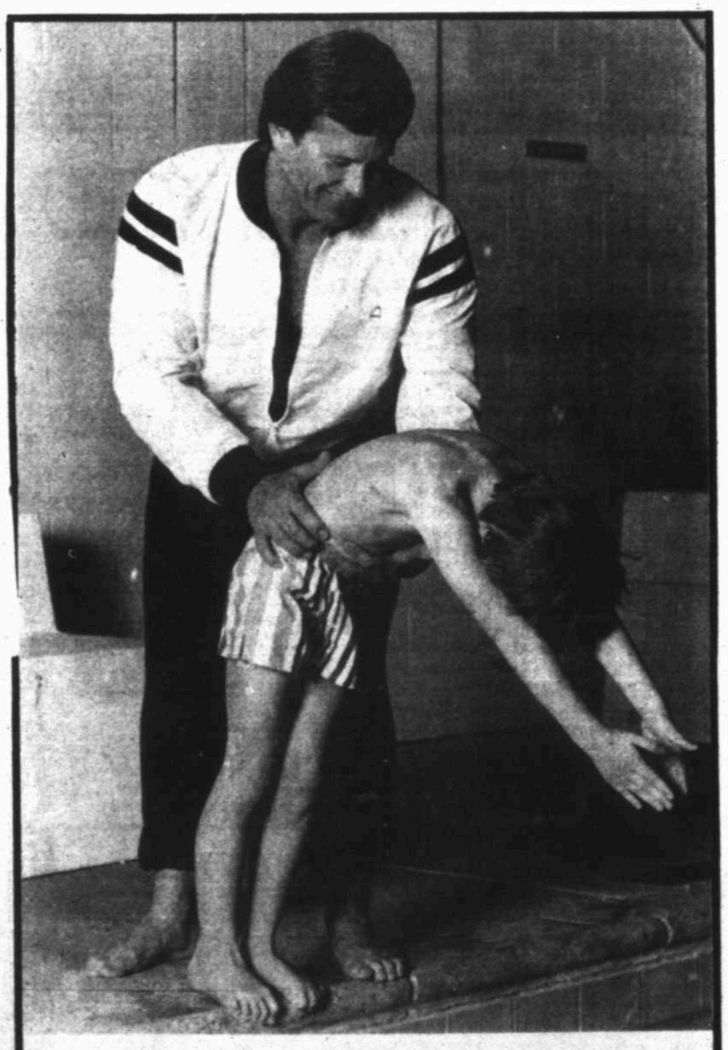

The mourners turned from the grave and slowly walked back up the hill to their cars. As the sun moved toward West Mountain, all that remained were a few stands of flowers, a fresh mound of dirt and Franklin's casket. Resting on top of it were six MIA bracelets.

After 21 years, Franklin Caras was finally home.

Army's CIL determines proper identification of soldiers' remains

By MIKE McINTYRE
Copley News Service

BENJAMIN, Utah — Everyone knew when Franklin Caras was home. The fighter jock would streak across the sky, dragging a sonic boom the length of the valley.

Chickens wouldn't lay eggs for a week. And women would remark at church the next Sunday: "Well, Franklin must be back. He stirred the dishes up in my sink the other day."

These were minor irritations, however, because everybody was always glad to see Franklin Caras. And Franklin Caras always came home.

So when word came that he was shot down over North Vietnam and missing in action, more than a few figured that if anyone could make it out, it would be Franklin.

But the war dragged on, and he didn't come home. The war ended, and he wasn't among the POWs released. The war was forgotten, and his family could only wonder if he were dead or alive.

The Caras family can grieve now. Last November, Vietnam turned over to the United States what were believed to be the remains of five Americans reported MIA during the war. Among them were remains later identified as those of Air Force Col. Franklin A. Caras.

He was buried at the snow-covered Benjamin Cemetery in February. He died nearly 21 years ago.

Franklin Caras' final flight home began the day before Thanksgiving 1967 at the Noi Bai Airport in Hanoi. A U.S. Air Force C-141 Starlifter transport plane landed at 10 a.m. to load its cargo — five crude wooden boxes containing skeletal remains.

A jeep carried the boxes across the tarmac to a table at the rear of the aircraft. Dr. Ellis Kerley, a forensic anthropologist and scientific director of the Army's Central Identification Laboratory (CIL) in Hawaii, quickly inspected the remains to verify they were human.

The wooden boxes were lowered into five aluminum coffinlike transfer cases and strapped down with elastic cords. A U.S. flag, folded in the ceremonial fashion into a triangle, was placed on top of each one. An honor guard saluted as the transfer cases were loaded onto the plane.

At 9 a.m. on Nov. 27, the plane touched down at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu. Five U.S. servicemen, all of them missing in hostile territory for more than two decades, were back in the United States.

Honor and color guards — made up of representatives of all branches of the service, because identity of the deceased was unknown — stood at attention. Four pallbearers appeared at the top of the ramp with the first Stars and Stripes-draped transfer case.

It was now up to the identification experts at the CIL to give names to those who had just been honored.

Folders containing health data and casualty reports on the 2,404 Americans still missing in Southeast Asia are filed in seven metal cabinets in the records room. Topographical maps of sites where MIAs were thought to be lost paper the walls from floor to ceiling.

Examination tables draped with white sheets dominate the laboratory. An X-ray machine sits on one side of the room, stainless-steel sinks on another. Fluorescent lights hang overhead.

The Vietnamese had numbered the wooden boxes containing remains from 1 to 5. Franklin's identification cards were returned with Box 3 and the Vietnamese said the remains inside were his. But the Vietnamese have often been wrong.

Box 3 was opened and its contents photographed. The remains were removed and the box burned.

Forensic anthropologists gently washed the bones with warm water and laid them out on a sheet-covered table. The teeth were turned over to CIL's forensic odontologist, Maj. Jon Curtis Dailey, who conducted an independent examination.

The bones were sorted and positioned until a human skeleton gradually took shape. The skeleton was about 70 percent complete, unusual for remains recovered from an air crash.

Not unusual was the extensive trauma the bones had sustained. The skull and ribs were in fragments. The right ulna and radius (the bones between the elbow and wrist) were fractured, as were the two thighbones. The pelvis also was broken.

The skull was pieced together like a puzzle and the fragments glued in place. Its features were consistent with those of a white male like Caras.

The pelvis, whose constituent bones fuse in distinct stages through the age of 50, yields the most precise age estimate. But the portion of the pelvis returned in Box 3 was too weathered to be of use.

Anthropologists instead examined the collarbone — another late-fusing bone — and the vertebrae to determine that the individual was between 25 and 35 at the time of death. Caras was 33 when his plane was shot down.

By applying a mathematical equation known as Trotter's Formula to the length of one of the long bones of the arms and legs, anthropologists can estimate the living height of an unknown skeleton with surprising accuracy.

The length of the leg bones better correlates with height than do the arm bones. Of the long bones returned in Box 3, only the right humerus — the bone that runs between the right shoulder and elbow — was complete and could be measured. It was 34.4 centimeters.

Trotter's Formula for the humerus of a white male is: 3.08 times the length in centimeters of the humerus plus 70.45 cm. The total was 176.4 cm, or 69.4 inches. According to his medical records, Caras was 5-foot-10 — 70 inches tall.

There is no formula to determine muscularity or build. Anthropolgists look at the ridges of the bones — where muscles were once attached — and assign the skeleton to one of three categories: slight muscularity/slender build, average muscularity/medium build, or well-developed muscularity/heavy build.

CIL anthropologists decided the bones in Box 3 belonged to a man of average muscularity/medium build. That description fit Caras, who weighed 171 pounds.

The chances of identification are greatly increased when dental remains are returned. Humans have a possible 32 teeth. Among the remains included in Box 3 were 24 teeth — a good amount for forensic odontologist Dailey to work with, considering identification can normally be made with a single tooth if it has a filling.

Dailey examined and charted the 24 teeth. Fifteen had fillings, nine didn't. He then fed his findings into the Computer Assisted Postmortem Identification (CAPMI) system, a data-base that contains the dental records of about 90 percent of the MIAs.

While the forensic experts conducted their examinations, analysts in the records room made a "circle search" to generate a list of names that might be associated with the remains in Box 3.

Caras' casualty data and medical records file was the logical place to start since the Vietnamese had provided a tentative name-association. A red pin was stuck into a map at the point of Caras' last known location — west of Hanoi in Nghia Lo province, near the Black River.

A circle 20 miles in diameter was drawn around that point. Analysts then looked for cases where MIAs were lost within the circle. The search produced one other casualty.

When the anthropologists, odontologist and records specialists finally sat down to compare findings, they agreed unanimously to recommend that the remains in Box 3 be identified as those of Caras.

An Air Force representative traveled to Benjamin to explain the identification to Caras' wife, Cathy, and her family. When she saw how Franklin's dental X-rays matched perfectly those taken of the teeth returned in Box 3, she was convinced that her husband had been found.

Science carries out sad, but necessary, duty

Copley News Service

HONOLULU — No war is pretty, but the Vietnam War extended the bounds of ugliness, bringing greater destruction to the bodies of those who died in battle.

Modern jets, carrying fuel and ordnance, turned crash sites into craters of devastation. Often, wreckage would burn for two days. It became unusual to find human remains larger than a fifty-cent piece.

Scientific and information advances in identifying the dead have kept pace with war technology. Today, identification can be made with as little as a handful of bone fragments, sometimes even a single tooth.

The sleuths who unravel the identities of war's missing are the forensic anthropologists, the forensic odontologist and the casualty-data analysts at the Army Central Identification Laboratory (CIL). The military and civilian staff of 42 work in two cinder-block buildings on a pier in the industrial section of Honolulu.

Remains arrive via CIL search-and-recovery missions, refugees or, as is most often the case, official returns by Southeast Asian governments.

The CIL is also responsible for the search, recovery and identification of those still missing from the Korean War and World War II. In 1982, specialists recovered and identified the remains of all 22 servicemen aboard a World War II aircraft that crashed in Papua New Guinea 38 years earlier.

Remains, particularly those recovered from the crash site of a multi-seat aircraft, are usually mingled. The forensic anthropologists' first and most time-consuming task is to segregate the bones into separate individuals.

Traits that can be read from unknown remains include sex, race, age, height, weight, build and right- or left-handedness. Age, for example, can be determined to within several years by examining a thin section of one of the long bones of the arms and legs under a microscope.

If teeth are recovered, the CIL's forensic odontologist, Maj. Jon Curtis Dailey, can narrow the search using the Computer Assisted Postmortem Indentification (CAPMI) system.

Dailey examines the teeth and enters his findings into a computer that contains dental records of 90 percent of the MIAs. The computer sorts Dailey's findings against the dental data base and produces a list of possible matches. He then visually compares the X-rays of all the possibles with postmortem X-rays of the remains and determines if a positive match exists.

While the anthropologists and odontologist conduct their examinations, CIL's casualty-data analysts study intelligence information to identify names that may correspond to the remains.

The CIL maintains biographical and casualty-data files on all those unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. If a recovery site is provided for remains, analysts identify all other incident and crash sites within a 10-mile radius.

The forensic experts then compare the biographical information of all those within the circle with the biological data they obtained from the remains. If there is no match, the circle is expanded until a match is made or until all possibilities have been discounted.

Identification is a tedious process — but CIL staff members realize the importance of their work.

Magazine for Vietnam vets

By VERNE GAY
Associated Press

LEESBURG,VA. — There are unusual magazine launches and there are predictable ones. Vietnam fits into neither class; it is unique.

Vietnam is edited by and for Vietnam War veterans, said Publisher Gregg Oehler, who, at 30, is not old enough to be one.

At first blush, a magazine about Vietnam seems not only unique but odd. Shouldn't the memory of Vietnam be laid to rest, rather than exhumed in a glossy, heavy-stock magazine? Oehler and his bosses, who own Empire Press, which publishes Vietnam, beg to differ. "Vietnam will not be a Rambo magazine," he said.

There have been movies and a TV series on the war. But don't expect show biz in this magazine. Vietnam will focus on various historical events of the war. The first issue contains articles on the blockade of South Vietnam's southern coast; an interview with Gen. Fred C. Weyand, a veteran battlefield commander in Vietnam and the general who supervised the U.S. military withdrawal from the country; and a feature on the Green Berets.

There's method to this diversity of topics, Oehler said. The idea is to inform veterans and their families about various campaigns or events that they may have never seen or experienced. "The goal we here at Vietnam magazine have set for ourselves is to find the key to unlock the enigma" of the war, said the editorial in the premiere issue. "And we think it can be found in an exploration of the complexities that made the war unique."

Pressrun was 175,000 for the first issue; Oehler expects to print 200,000 for the next issue, due in midsummer. He said it will "probably" come out every other month starting in the first quarter of next year.

Empire Press was founded five years ago by a couple of entrepreneurs who also happen to be history buffs. Carl Gnam, 34, and Adam Landis, 30, are its sole owners.

DEAR ABBY

Man finds beauty is in mind

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: There is no one in this world I can tell this to but you. My marriage was made in heaven. I have been married for 50 years to a man who adores me. We are financially secure and have a beautiful family of children and grandchildren.

We keep strong lights burning around our home at night for security reasons. About a year ago, my husband began wearing a sleeping mask. Naturally, I thought it was because of the brightness of our bedroom, but I learned differently. He wears it only when we make love. He talks to me at this time about how long and silky my hair is and how firm my body is — just as he did when we were first married, when I was 18 and he was 21.

When I questioned him about this, he said he was "fantasizing" and suggested that I wear a sleep mask, too, so we could both pretend that we are young again!

I can't do that, Abby. He is twice the size he was when we were married — plus, he's bald. Also my hair isn't long and silky now; it's short and gray. And my body at 68 is far from firm. However, since he started wearing the sleep mask, his lovemaking has improved so much, it's unbelievable.

Should I wear one, too? — PERPLEXED IN PASADENA

DEAR PERPLEXED: Why not? If a mask will enhance your enjoyment as it has his, go ahead and wear one.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for asking advertisers (and comedians) not to ridicule the hard of hearing.

Last Easter, I received a beautiful basket of fruit from my granddaughter. It was delivered by a local florist. I was so pleased — until I saw the card that came with it. On the outside of the envelope containing the card was written: "She is deaf, so please wait for her to answer the door."

Abby, dear, it spoiled my day. — HURT IN PATERSON, N.J.

DEAR HURT: To have written those instructions on the envelope for the recipient to see was insensitive. I hope you are not blaming your granddaughter for the thoughtlessness of the person who filled the order.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a telephone operator with the Bell system for 18 years, and I am continually amazed at the conduct of some customers on the telephone. I have had people curse, burp, yawn, cough, sneeze, chew and eat while requesting a telephone number, and I have yet to hear the first "Please excuse me, operator," or a simple "I'm sorry."

This rudeness is universal. One would expect physicians, lawyers, teachers, secretaries and other professionals who deal with the public to have better manners. Perhaps they have, but because they can't be seen, they don't bother to use them.

Telephone operators have to deal with abusive drunks and perverts who get their jollies by using obscene language on the phone, but we consider the source and carry on.

Although to some extent we are computerized, we are still real people manning those telephones, and there is no excuse for such rudeness. If this letter makes a half-dozen people realize that telephone operators are human beings with feelings, then writing it will have been worthwhile. — DISGUSTED IN AMARILLO

DEAR DISGUSTED: I'm sure you are not alone. Anonymity does not justify crudeness. But it certainly fosters it.

DEAR ABBY: As a longtime reader, I am aware that you frequently print educational items concerning public health.

Here's the 1988 dental patients' "Bill of Rights," courtesy of the California Dental Society:

YOU HAVE A RIGHT to see a dentist every time you receive dental treatment.

YOU HAVE A RIGHT to know in advance the type and expected cost of treatment.

YOU HAVE A RIGHT to expect dental team members to use appropriate infection controls, such as gloves.

YOU HAVE A RIGHT to ask about treatment alternatives and be told in language you can understand the advantages and disadvantages of each.

YOU HAVE A RIGHT to know what professional rules, laws and ethics apply to your dentist and the dental team.

Abby, if your dentist does not have the above "Bill of Rights" in evidence in his office, he or she should have. — CALIFORNIA DENTIST

DEAR DENTIST: Thank you. Next time I see my dentist for my routine checkup, I'll look. And if the dental patients' Bill of Rights is not in evidence, I'll open my mouth — even wider — and complain.

JCRC mission is to find men who are still missing

By MIKE McINTYRE
Copley News Service

HONOLULU — If the employees of the Joint Casualty Resolution Center (JCRC) succeed, they will someday be out of a job. Their sole responsibility is to resolve the fates of the 2,404 Americans still missing in Southeast Asia.

The JCRC gathers and analyzes POW-MIA information, much of it collected during interviews with Indochinese refugees at camps in Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, Hong Kong and the Philippines.

Since 1975, the JCRC has received from refugees 1,030 reports of live sightings of Americans in Southeast Asia. Of those, 688 correlated with people already accounted for, 223 are known or suspected fabrications and 119 are unresolved.

About six times a year, a team from the JCRC and the Army Central Identification Laboratory (CIL) meets in Hanoi with Vietnamese officials to exchange information. JCRC personnel prepare for the Vietnamese files on what are called "discrepancy cases."

Discrepancy cases involve "compelling" evidence suggesting the Vietnamese have information that could resolve the case. JCRC Commander Lt. Col. Joe Harvey cited as an example a pilot who ejected and parachuted into a heavily populated area.

Was he killed resisting capture? Was he captured, then died later? "You've got to believe somebody knew what happened to this guy," Harvey said.

Files presented to the Vietnamese contain a narrative of the incident, a map of the area where the man was lost, a photo of him, biographical data, foreign press clippings — in many cases, Vietnamese reporters wrote detailed articles on the capture of U.S. servicemen — and, if the incident involved a plane, serial and tail numbers.

Crash-site folders containing maps, data on aircraft personnel and equipment, serial numbers and photos of the aircraft are also prepared to assist in recovery operations.

A JCRC staff of 20 military and civilian personnel analyze data in a cinder-block building at Barbers Point Naval Air Station, west of Honolulu. Another six employees, including four refugee interviewers, are based at the JCRC liaison office in Bangkok, Thailand.

In theory, the Vietnamese use the case files and crash-site folders as leads to locate remains. However, the Vietnamese may not always be forthcoming. In 1980, for example, a former Vietnamese mortician testified before a House committee that the remains of more than 400 Americans were stored in a warehouse.

The United States and Vietnam do not have diplomatic relations. The accounting of Americans missing in Vietnam is supposed to be treated as a humanitarian issue, separate from political and economic concerns. Several times the Vietnamese have broken off talks to express their displeasure with U.S. actions, as happened in 1986 when the United States bombed Libya.

Dialogue improved last August after the United States agreed to address certain Vietnamese humanitarian concerns. The State Department subsequently released a report indicating how charitable organizations could fund prosthetics projects for Vietnam's 60,000 amputees.

Repatriations in September and November resulted in the return and identification of the remains of eight Americans. On March 2, Vietnam turned over 17 sets of remains believed to be those of Americans.

"You have got to say honestly that there are some of the (2,404) cases that are just not ever going to be resolved, no matter how much cooperation by the Vietnamese," said Harvey. "The main thing to focus on now is that we have a list of cases that can be resolved."

Mears beats yellow flags for third Indy 500 title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rick Mears overcame an early one-lap deficit, then overpowered the rest of the field Sunday on the way to his third Indianapolis 500 victory, in a race marred by crashes and a record 14 caution flags.

Many in the crowd, estimated at more than 400,000, booed as the last lap started under a yellow flag and spectators began filing out even before Mears crossed the finish line.

"They say the first one is always the best, and maybe that's so," Mears said. "But I know the second felt better than the first, and this one felt better than the second."

So, at only 36 years old, can Mears win five Indy 500s, more than anyone else?

"If I'm allowed to stay with this group, we just might be able to do it. It's a strong team."

Emerson Fittipaldi had to wait three hours Sunday before he could celebrate finishing second.

The early unofficial finish had Fittipaldi in seventh position because of a two-lap penalty.

He was penalized two laps for passing a car during a caution period.

But Chief Steward Tom Binford announced three hours after the finish of the race that a review of the incidents led him to rule that Fittipaldi had finished second.

After he was awarded second place, Fittipaldi said, "Going out of the pits, just at the end of the wall, I looked to my right. It was a yellow (flag) situation and there was no car there. When I got to turn one, Vogler passed me. He was doing a flying lap. He slowed down, in turn two, and he waved me back to my position.

"With all the experience I have I would be real stupid to pass a car under a yellow situation.

"The officials now confirm my second place."

This was just another Penske day at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, with Mears, the 1979 and 1984 champion, giving team-owner Roger Penske an unprecedented seventh victory and his fourth in five years.

Mears took control of the $4 million race after passing third place finisher Al Unser for the lead on lap 123 of the 200-lap event.

The slim charger from Bakersfield, Calif., the eighth winner of three or more of the 72 Indy races, pulled away, seemingly at will, after every caution period, going from as much as one lap down to as much as one lap up.

He led the last 78 laps, including the final three under caution after a piece of the right sidepod on Michael Andretti's car blew off on the main straightaway.

The 14 yellow flags broke the record of 11, set in 1980, and equaled in 1981. The race took three hours, 27 minutes, 10.2 seconds, with Mears averaging 144.809 mph.

During the race, 107 minutes, 41 seconds, nearly half the race, were run under a caution flag. There were a total of 79 laps under caution, the most since 1967, when they began keeping records.

Among the problems were eight crashes. But there were no serious injuries.

Unser, who celebrated his 49th birthday Sunday, has finished in the top three a record 10 times.

Andretti was fourth, followed by 1986 champion Bobby Rahal. Two laps behind the leader were Jim Crawford of Scotland, Raul Boesel of Brazil and Phil Krueger.

Results are not official at Indy until they are posted Monday at 8 a.m.

Mears is the first driver to win from the pole since Bobby Unser gave Penske an Indy victory in 1981. Mears also joined Johnny Rutherford as the only driver to win twice from the top starting position.

The three Chevrolet-powered Penske PC17s, which gave the team an unprecedented sweep of the front row in the 33-car field, dominated the entire race and Chevy broke a string of 10 straight victories here by the British-built Cosworth engine with the top three places.

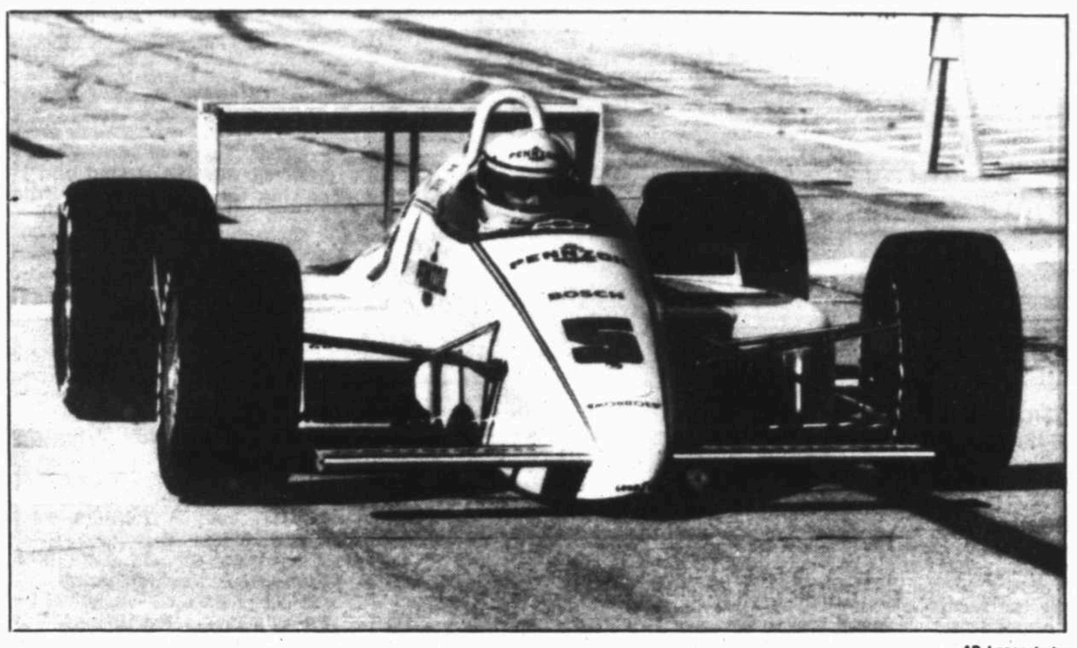

Danny Sullivan, who started between Mears and Al Unser, led 91 laps before crashing, while Unser, a four-time winner, led twice for 12 and passed the late Ralph DePalma in all-time Indy laps led with 624. DePalma had 613.

In all, Mears led three times for 89 laps and the dominating Penske cars were in front on 192 of the 200 laps.

Mears, who set one- and four-lap qualifying records of 220.453 mph and 219.198, respectively, lost the lead to Sullivan in the first turn at the start and fell behind with handling problems.

By the time he made his first pit stop, Mears had lost a lap.

However, using the rash of caution flags to his advantage, Mears regained the lead lap on his 93rd trip around the oval.

Cowboys may trade Dorsett to Broncos

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm said Sunday that he thinks an agreement can be reached that will send disgruntled running back Tony Dorsett to the Denver Broncos.

"We have reached a tentative (financial) agreement with Dorsett and he believes that he's reached a tentative agreement with Denver," Schramm said in a telephone interview from his home. "The agreement that hasn't been reached is what Denver will give us for his rights."

Schramm said he had not spoken over the weekend with Broncos officials, but added, "I have discussed the situation briefly with (Broncos coach Dan) Reeves and I think that we can reach some kind of agreement."

Dorsett, who has sought a trade from the Cowboys since assuming second-string duties behind Herschel Walker last fall, agreed in principle Saturday on a plan that would move him to Denver, his financial adviser said.

Schramm said he spoke Saturday to Dorsett's adviser, Bill Love of Austin, Texas, but that he had not yet talked to Dorsett and didn't expect to begin talks with Denver officials until Thursday or Friday.

"He (Love) is saying is that he has reached the agreement in principal with Denver as to what his (Dorsett's) situation would be if he is traded there," Schramm said. "And if they have, in fact, made that type of an agreement then we will see if we can make a trade agreement with Denver."

The Denver contract would reportedly pay Dorsett $500,000 in each of the next two years and about $200,000 per year toward an annuity. The refusal by both teams to pay the annuity had been a stumbling block in earlier talks.

Denver television station KCNC has reported a deal that would give Dallas a conditional middle-round draft pick for Dorsett, which means the pick could go higher depending on Dorsett's performance levels, but neither Reeves nor Schramm would confirm that.

Schramm did, however, say he would work toward an agreement that could move the 34-year-old Heisman Trophy winner to the Broncos.

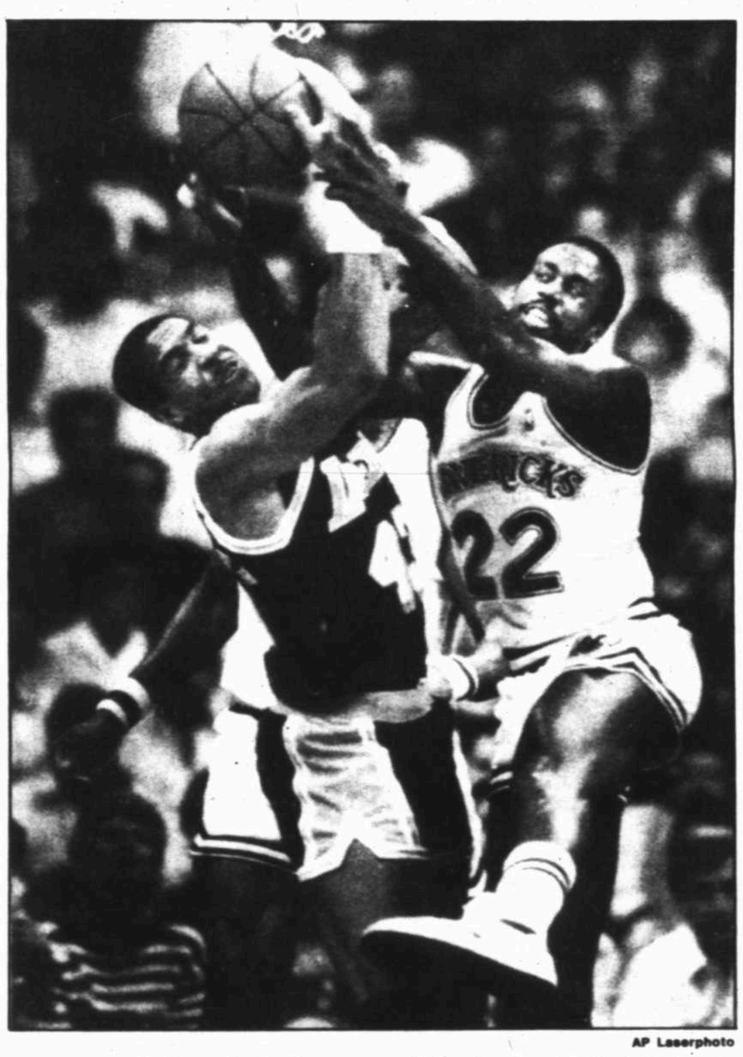

"We will (trade) if it can be accommodated because our situation with Herschel Walker, who is certainly going to be the centerpiece of our offense," Schramm said Sunday. "If Dorsett's trade can be accomplished to everybody's benefit, then that's fine."

Dorsett could not immediately be reached Sunday, but he earlier had told KCNC, "This is just a new chapter in Tony Dorsett's football career. I don't think I'll be looking back."

Reeves said, "Until that deal (between Dallas and Dorsett) is signed and sealed and agreed upon in writing, nothing will take place."

Broncos spokesman Jim Saccomano said it did appear that a restructuring of Dorsett's contract was taking place.

"You could speculate that would pave the way (for a trade)," he said. "That does not mean the deal is final or done."

Angels wipe out 9-0 deficit for win

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Slump or no slump, Midland Angels utilityman Jesus Alfaro was determined to make something happen in the ninth inning Sunday at Angels Stadium.

"The first time (against Jackson hurler Rich Rodriguez), he made a good pitch to strike me out. I didn't want to look bad again, so I just threw my bat at the ball," Alfaro said.

And with Tom Alfredson getting a good break off first base, Alfaro's opposite-field double capped a stirring comeback in the Angels' 10-9 win over the Jackson Mets.

The Angels scored nine runs in the eighth to erase a 9-0 deficit and put themselves in position for their second straight win on an otherwise lackluster homestand. Midland finished 4-6 against Arkansas and Jackson in the recent 10-game stand, but Manager Max Oliveras said the team's current two-game win streak may be enough to create momentum for the 12-game road trip to San Antonio and El Paso that starts Tuesday.

"Maybe this is a turning point," Oliveras said. "It was nice to see them come back like they did.

"Nine runs in one inning...a lot of teams would have quit, but not this bunch."

No, indeed. Not that bunch. Not even after Jackson's Kevin Tapani had thrown a three-hitter through seven innings and the Mets had crushed five home runs off Midland starting pitcher Shane Young.

Tapani was lifted after loading the bases with two singles and a walk. But reliever Todd Welborn failed to retire any of the four batters he faced and was subsequently yanked in favor of Rich Rodriguez.

Alfredson greeted Rodriguez with a two-run single that cut the Met lead to 9-6, but the Met hurler bore down to strike out pinch-hitter Alfaro and get Jeff Manto to fly out.

Then the real fireworks started. Oliveras took exception to a ball-strike call against Manto and was still simmering as C.L. Penigar came to the plate.

Plate umpire Jeff Henrichs soon had enough and ejected Oliveras with a one-strike count on Penigar. The Midland manager then charged home plate for an even more spirited argument, kicking a few clouds of dirt on the umpire's shoes for good measure.

After Oliveras finally left the field, Penigar worked the count to 2-2, then pounded a two-run double and scored the tying run on Mike Knapp's double.

Penigar said the Oliveras-Henrichs confrontation fired him up.

"He was standing behind his players 100 percent," Penigar said. "When a manager does that for you, you're going to do that for him."

Rodriguez finally got the side out in the eighth — after 14 Angel batters had appeared. But the Met stopper struggled again in the ninth.

With two out, Alfredson singled to bring up Alfaro. The veteran had seen his batting average drop 20 points since the Angels returned home on May 20, but he came through with an slicing drive to right field far past the reach of Jackson outfielder Joaquin Contreras that scored Alfredson and enabled Colby Ward to maintain his league lead in wins.

Ward ran his record to 9-1 despite walking two of the three batters he faced in the Jackson ninth.

The Angels have today off before traveling to San Antonio, where Steve McGuire will try to improve on his 1-5 won-loss record in Tuesday's opener against the Missions.

Mavs square NBA series with Lakers at 2-2

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

DALLAS — Suddenly, the playoff series that so many Los Angeles fans thought might be over in four games has turned into a nightmare for the Lakers.

The Dallas Mavericks, thought to be down and out after consecutive lopsided losses, evened the four-of-seven-game series at two games each Sunday afternon by pounding the world champion Lakers, 118-104, before a frenzied sellout crowd at Reunion Arena.

The fifth game in the series will be played Tuesday at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif. The sixth game will be back here Thursday.

Derek Harper, scoring from virtually every spot on the court and in every way, made 12 of 21 shots and finished with a career playoff high of 35 points. Mark Aguirre, burying long-range jumpers and hitting tough, leaning one-handed bank shots, scored 20 of his 26 points in the second half.

"I'd say I was definitely in the zone," said Harper, who is best remembered for a misadventure in the 1984 playoffs when, thinking incorrectly that his team was ahead, he held the ball and then ran off the floor as time expired.

"I was just in the flow and it really felt good. We did a good job of containing their fast breaks and extended our defense to stop them from getting so many easy baskets."

Harper said that the most important aspect of the game was that it continued to break the Lakers' momentum. "We've protected our home-court advantage and gained a little confidence from these wins," he said. "L.A. seemed a little tired out there. It's just difficult to win on the road."

After three quarters of a blow-for-blow slugfest led by Harper and the Lakers' Magic Johnson, Dallas simply snatched the game away in the final period, much as they had done on Friday en route to a 106-94 victory. This time, however, the snatching was more emphatic.

Only six National Basketball Association teams have come back from an 0-2 deficit to win a playoff series.

Soviet teen-ager spills Navratilova

French Open Tennis

PARIS (AP) — Soviet teen-ager Natalia Zvereva won a tennis summit meeting with Martina Navratilova Sunday, the final blow to the end of a 25-year domination of the French Open by American women.

American men did better, with 18-year-old Andre Agassi advancing to the final eight on a 6-4, 6-2, 4-6, 6-0 victory over Magnus Gustafsson of Sweden. He became the youngest U.S. man to make a Grand Slam quarterfinal in the 20-year-old "open" era.

Overall, it was a good day for youth. Of the eight winners, five were 18 or younger, and the women's field has only one quarterfinalist older than 19.

Zvereva, a 17-year-old from Minsk, eliminated Navratilova, the final U.S. woman in the field, 6-3, 7-6, to win a spot in the quarterfinals.

"It's not my idea of glasnost,' said Navratilova, who saved two match points in the tiebreak before finishing the upset by wacking a backhand volley into the net.

The winner of 17 Grand Slam singles titles and confident of regaining the top women's ranking as the tournament began, Navratilova said she was hindered by the constantly changing skies and winds that swept over Roland Garros. The match was held up by rain for abut 40 minutes.

But she also said she underestimated Zvereva, whom she had beaten 6-1, 6-2 twice before.

"If I played her right now, I know I wouldn't lose two sets," Navratilova said. "Every time I have a match like this I go into the locker room afterward and say, 'I must be dreaming.' I'm pinching myself. Maybe it's not real. But I didn't play the tennis I'm capable of."

Zvereva said she, too, had trouble realizing she had beaten a player ranked among the greatest ever.

"I can't imagine I won today," she said. "I was so surprised. I played so lucky today, not her."

After the upset of seven-time champion Chris Evert by 16-year-old Arantxa Sanchez of Spain on Saturday and Zina Garrison's 6-1, 6-2 loss to sixth-seeded Helena Sukova, a 23-year-old from Czechoslovakia, in Sunday's first match, Navratilova's loss left the French Open women's quarterfinals without an American for the first time since 1963.

In that stretch, Americans have won the women's crown 11 times, including seven of the last nine years.

The 31-year-old Navratilova said she might have been subconciously thinking about the loss of Evert, a close friend and companion through a storied 77-match series. But the two-time French Open winner said the Evert-Navratilova era would go on.

"The era is not over yet. The era is over when I say it's over, not when you say it's over," she said. "This result might suggest you are correct, but there's an old saying in Czech, 'Don't hop before you jump.' Don't jump the gun."

Zvereva won the French Open women's junior title a year ago and last year's men's junior champion sprang a surprise as well on center court.

Guillermo Perez-Roldan, an 18-year-old Argentine, upset second-seeded Stefan Edberg 7-5, 6-3, 6-3.

Another Swede advanced to the quarterfinals. Two-time French Open winner Mats Wilander, the men's third seed, ousted unseeded Ronald Agenor of Haiti 6-1, 7-6, 6-3.

Ramirez' grand slam breaks Cubs

Associated Press

Rafael Ramirez' grand slam highlighted a six-run sixth inning Sunday as the Houston Astros defeated the Chicago Cubs 7-1 to snap a four-game losing streak.

It was Ramirez's second homer of the season and the first grand slam in his eight years in the major leagues. He also singled in a run in the eighth.

Nolan Ryan, 5-2, allowed three hits, walked four and struck out four in 7⅓ innings. Ryan, who has beaten the Cubs more than any other NL team, gained the 266th victory of his career and upped his lifetime mark against Chicago to 16-5. Juan Agosto and Dave Smith finished up as the Cubs were held to four hits.

NL

Gerald Young singled to open the sixth and scored on singles by Jim Pankovits and Kevin Bass. Glenn Davis then hit a shot back to Moyer, who could have started double plays at third or second, but hesitated and finally threw to first to get Davis.

Steve Henderson was given an intentional pass to fill the bases. Mike Capel relieved Moyer and Ramirez hit his first pitch into the left-field bleachers. One out later, Chuck Jackson hit his first homer, also into the left-field bleachers.

Dodgers 2, Expos 1

Kirk Gibson and John Shelby hit home runs and Orel Hershiser scattered nine hits.

Hershiser, 7-2, struck out seven and did not walk a batter as he pitched his third complete game. It was Hershiser's first victory over Montreal since May 21, 1986.

Montreal rookie John Dopson, 1-2, allowed only four hits in eight innings. Dopson struck out three and walked four.

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead in the first on Gibson's eighth homer and made it 2-0 in the fourth when Shelby hit his first homer of the season.

A crowd of 35,311, the largest since opening day at Olympic Stadium, attended the game.

Padres 6, Mets 3

Keith Moreland's run-scoring double sparked a five-run seventh inning that broke a scoreless tie.

The Padres won their first game under Manager Jack McKeon, who took over when Larry Bowa was fired Saturday. It was only the fourth road victory in 20 games this season for the Padres, who also won their first series on the road since last Sept. 18-20 at Houston.

Tony Gwynn, a two-time batting champion, returned to the San Diego lineup for the first time in 21 days after a thumb injury and went 1-for-4.

Jimmy Jones, 4-5, allowed eight hits, walked none and struck out three. Jones, who had been hitless in 19 at-bats this year, also singled with two outs in the sixth inning for the first runner against Bob Ojeda, 4-4. Mark Davis relieved Jones with two outs and a runner on first in the ninth and earned his sixth save.

Jones and Ojeda were locked in a scoreless duel for six innings in front of 46,789. Ojeda breezed, striking out four while Jones allowed only a fourth-inning double to Keith Hernandez and a leadoff single in the sixth by Mookie Wilson before the Mets scored in the seventh.

The Padres broke it open with their biggest outburst of the season. Roberto Alomar and Gwynn opened the seventh with singles and Moreland's double made it 1-0.

John Kruk followed with a grounder at Keith Miller, making his first start of the season, and the second baseman made a wild throw that enabled two runs to score. Benito Santiago's RBI single finished Ojeda and Shane Mack singled home a run against Terry Leach, capping the biggest inning against the Mets this season.

Cardinals 3, Braves 1

Jose DeLeon and Ken Dayley combined on a four-hitter for St. Louis' 11th victory in their last 13 games against Atlanta.

DeLeon, 4-4, allowed four hits, walked one and struck out eight but lost his bid for a shutout when Albert Hall hit his first homer of the season with one out in the ninth. Dayley relieved and earned his second save.

St. Louis took a 2-0 lead in the first inning off Kevin Coffman, 2-5.

Ozzie Smith drew a one-out walk before Willie McGee singled, and Smith reached third when center fielder Hall bobbled the ball for an error.

Tom Brunansky raised his hitting streak to 14 games with a single that scored Smith.

Pirates 4, Reds 2

Andy Van Slyke drove in three runs with a grounder and a double and Bobby Bonilla hit his league-leading 12th homer.

John Smiley, 4-4, allowed just one hit over the first four innings, then gave up a pair of unearned runs in the fifth. Eric Davis' pinch-hit single drove in one run and Smiley balked to bring home Lloyd McClendon.

Smiley allowed seven hits, struck out three and didn't walk a batter in 6⅔ innings. Jim Gott pitched the final 2⅓ innings to earn his sixth save.

Bonilla homered in the ninth off reliever Jose Rijo.

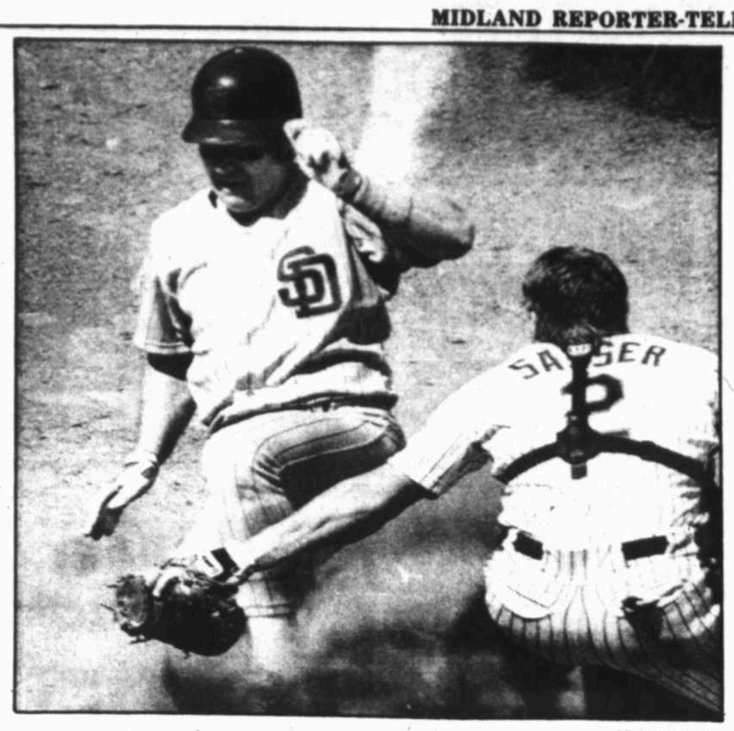

Phillies 4, Giants 2

Bruce Ruffin scattered nine hits over seven innings and Chris James homered and scored twice as Philadelphia completed a sweep of the three-game series.

Ruffin, 4-4, who was aided by four double plays, struck out two and walked two. Steve Bedrosian pitched two hitless innings to earn his third save. Mike Krukow, 4-3, took the loss, ending a personal three-game winning streak.

After the Giants took a 1-0 lead in the first on Candy Maldonado's RBI single, the Phillies came back with two in the second. James walked and scored on Milt Thompson's two-out triple. Thompson then scored on Krukow's wild pitch.

In the fourth, with two outs, James homered deep to left, his seventh of the season.

Royals bury Texas, 12-1

Twins run winning streak to eight

Associated Press

Willie Wilson drove in four runs and Bo Jackson hit a two-run homer as the Kansas City Royals batted around in successive innings Sunday and beat the Texas Rangers 12-1.

The Royals, who had dropped six of their previous seven games, scored seven runs in the second inning off Ray Hayward, 3-2, and added four more in the third off Dwayne Henry. The two pitchers contributed five walks and the Rangers committed an error in each inning.

Winner Bret Saberhagen, 6-5, scattered four hits in seven innings. Dan Quisenberry pitched the last two innings.

Danny Tartabull started the Kansas City second by walking, stealing second and continuing to third on catcher Geno Petralli's throwing error. He scored on Kevin Seitzer's single.

Jackson followed with a 450-foot home run that extended his hitting streak to seven games, tying a personal best. Frank White and Scotti Madison walked and pulled a double steal. After Mike Macfarlane struck out, White scored the fourth run of the inning on Kurt Stillwell's infield hit.

Wilson doubled to score Madison and Stillwell and George Brett's RBI single chased Hayward.

The Royals sent nine batters to the plate in the third, with Stillwell driving in two runs with a double and Wilson two more with a single. Wilson's four RBI were the most since he had four on July 2, 1982, in Toronto. Jackson started the inning with a double.

Twins 6, Tigers 3

Kirby Puckett drove in three runs with a pair of homers and the Minnesota Twins stretched their winning streak to eight games.

Puckett hit hit a solo homer in the third inning and a two-run shot in the fifth off Doyle Alexander, 4-4. The latter was his ninth of the season and gave the Twins a 4-3 lead. Minnesota starter, Allan Anderson, 2-3, went seven innings, allowing eight hits and the three Detroit runs.

The first three Detroit batters of the game gave the Tigers a 2-0 lead. Tom Brookens singled, took third on a double by Jim Morrison and they scored on Luis Salazar's single.

Brewers 7, Indians 2

Tom Filer continued his comeback from arm problems with his second straight five-hitter and stretched his major-league winning streak to 10 games over seven seasons.

Filer's winning streak stretches back to 1982. After going 1-2 with the Chicago Cubs that year, he was in the minors in 1983 and 1984 and went 7-0 for Toronto in 1985 before hurting his elbow. He didn't pitch again in the majors until he blanked Detroit last Tuesday night.

The 31-year-old right-hander didn't allow a hit over the final 5 1-3 innings. He struck out two, walked two and got 15 outs on ground balls.

American League

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 2

Rookie Pat Borders hit a solo homer and Sil Campusano scored the winning run on pitcher Dave LaPoint's throwing error in the seventh inning.

Winner John Cerutti, 3-2, scattered five hits over eight innings. Tom Henke started the ninth but gave way to David Wells after Ivan Calderon doubled with one out and Greg Walker singled him to third. Wells earned his third save when pinch hitter Harold Baines hit into a game-ending double play.

Orioles 3, Angels 2

The Angels lost by Sherm Corbett, who was called up last week from the Midland Angels, pitched three scoreless innings of relief in his major league debut.

Larry Sheets broke a tie with a two-run single in the eighth inning and Baltimore snapped its latest losing streak at four games.

Mike Boddicker, 2-8, allowed four hits in eight innings-plus for his second consecutive victory following a personal 13-game losing streak. He allowed solo homers to Jack Howell in the fifth inning and Brian Downing leading off the ninth. Tom Niedenfuer relieved after Downing's homer and earned his fifth save.

Athletics 5, Red Sox 4

Carney Lansford, the major leagues' leading hitter, singled and doubled to key two scoring innings and Gene Nelson pitched 3⅔ innings of one-hit relief to lead Oakland to its fifth consecutive victory.

Lansford, batting .396, paced an 11-hit attack against winless Jeff Sellers, 0-5, who pitched seven innings. The A's 34-14 record is the best in baseball and they lead second-place Minnesota by nine games in the American League West.

Yankees 7, Mariners 3

Dave Winfield drove in three runs, two with his 11th homer, and John Candelaria pitched five innings for his sixth straight victory before leaving with a sore elbow.

Winfield's homer off Mike Campbell, 3-6, followed a two-out double by Mike Pagliarulo in the fifth inning after Seattle scored all its runs in the fourth to pull within 4-3.

The Yankees have won seven of their last eight games and lead second-place Cleveland by 2½ games in the American League East.

Candelaria, 7-2, yielded four hits, all in the fourth inning. Neil Allen allowed two hits in 2⅔ innings and Cecilio Guante retired the final four batters for his fifth save.

The Yankees took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. Rickey Henderson drew a leadoff walk, stole second — one of five New York steals — and scored on a double by Willie Randolph, who left the game an inning later with a sore hamstring.

Aggies defeat Missouri, 6-2

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Third-baseman Scott Livingstone went 2-for-3, including a two-run second-inning single that lifted Texas A&M to a 6-2 win over Missouri in an elimination round game of the NCAA South Regional baseball tournament Sunday in Starkville.

Livingstone, now 6-12 with three tournament games, gave Texas A&M an early lead with a sacrifice fly to center field in the first inning. With base runners on second and third and one out in the third inning, he delivered a two-run single to right field to stake Texas A&M starter Randy Pryor, 8-4, to a 3-0 lead.

Pryor scattered nine hits and struck out four before Scott Centala entered the game in the sixth inning and picked up his 11th save of the year.

Steve Powers, 5-6, took the loss for Missouri, which concluded its season at 42-22.

Texas A&M, 52-14, advances to Monday's championship round and a 2 p.m. CDT matchup with Cal State-Fullerton.

Texas on brink of elimination

AUSTIN (AP) — Jim Kuehl's run-scoring double in the ninth inning gave California an 8-7 victory over top-seeded Texas Sunday and pushed the Golden Bears into the championship game of the NCAA CentraL Regional Tournament.

It was the first loss of the tournament for the fourth-ranked Longhorns, who fell to 57-10 and were thrown into an elimination game against Michigan at 1 p.m. today. Michigan and Texas were scheduled to play Sunday night, but the game was postponed because of rain.

California, the only remaining unbeaten team in the tournament, improved its record to 39-23.

The game was stopped in the seventh inning for an hour and 35 minutes because of rain. At the time, Joel Chimelis was on second with nobody out after doubling. California led 5-4.

California rallied with two in the top of the eighth before Texas tied it again in the bottom of the inning on a Craig Newkirk bloop single.

Starter Fred Corral, a unheralded senior righthander, came into the game with a 3-5 record and a lofty 5.27 earned run average, but kept the potent Longhorns off the basepaths.

Memorial turns Strange

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Curtis Strange rallied with a 5-under-par 67 Sunday to win the Memorial tournament by two strokes for his second victory of the season.

Strange twice trailed by one stroke and once blew a 3-shot lead in his three-way struggle with South African David Frost and Hale Irwin.

Strange, the PGA Tour's leading money-winner in 1985 and '87, took command with a bunker shot that set up a 2-foot putt for birdie-4 on the 15th.

He didn't trail again and got the 14th victory of his 12-season Tour career with a 274 total, 14 under par on Jack Nicklaus' Muirfield Village Golf Club course.

The victory was worth $160,000 from the total purse of $1 million and boosted Strange's earnings for the year to $362,965.

He also moved into the No. 6 spot on the all-time money-winning list — passing Lee Trevino and Ben Crenshaw — with $3,478,454.

Irwin, he 42-year-old veteran who led through the second and third rounds, chipped in from 30 feet for a birdie on the final hole that gave him a tie for second with Frost.

Irwin had a closing 70 and a 276 total. Frost, who once held sole control of the top spot, had a closing 69.

Frost, who last year led the American tour in scoring average, has yet to win in four seasons of competition in this country, and now has had seven runner-up finishes, two this year.

Turner wins another LPGA title

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Sherri Turner shot a 2-under-par 70 on Sunday to win the $325,000 LPGA Corning Classic for her second consecutive victory.

Coupled with Turner's victory last week at the LPGA Championship, her first in five years on the tour, the win gave Turner the first back-to-back triumphs on the tour this season.

Turner had a four-round total of 15-under 273 and pursed a first-place prize of $48,750.

Korea's Ok-Hee Ku, who battled Turner for the lead for most of the final two rounds, and JoAnne Carner, who had the day's best round at 6-under 66, finished two strokes off the pace at 13-under.

"I felt last week that I played good all four days and deserved to win," Turner said. "I felt the same way today."

She said she was nervous going into the round, and after a bogey on her third hole made her even with Ku, Turner said she "decided to start talking with myself."

She added, "I kept saying, 'Don't let it get away from you; don't let it get away.'"

Turner and Ku were both 14-under until Turner birdied the 14th. She holed a 7-foot putt on the par-5 hole while Ku two-putted for par.

Although Turner said other players had warned her she might have a letdown after her first tour victory last week, she said, "It worked different for me."

"I haven't come down yet (from last week)," she said. "I'm still up from last week."

Ku said she had problems concentrating all day.

"Usually, I can sleep very well," she said through an interpreter. "But last night (I didn't) and I was kind of nervous."

A birdie on the par-3 15th gave Turner some insurance. Her drive landed 18 feet from the pin and she rolled home the difficult putt.

She bogeyed the 16th, missing a 4-foot putt for par, but so did Ku, whose 5-foot putt for par missed by a half-inch.

Carner, who started the third round at even par, fired seven birdies to challenge but needed help from the leaders that never came.

"I knew they would have to bogey," Carner said. "I could tell from the roar of the crowd."

Still, the 49-year-old Carner said she was very pleased with her move into the money, saying, "Right now, I feel younger than anybody out there."

Patty Sheehan started the day at 6-under and shot a 3-under 69 to finish four strokes behind Carner and Ku at 9-under 279. Jerilyn Britz was next at 8-under.

Waltrip wins Coca-Cola 600 fourth time

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip held off a nine-lap threat from Rusty Wallace on Sunday to become the first four-time winner of the NASCAR Coca-Cola 600 at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Waltrip, taking his first victory this season, claimed the lead in NASCAR's longest race on lap 369, passing Brett Bodine. Some of his challengers began heading for the pits in the final 30 laps.

Then, on lap 387, Geoff Bodine's Chevrolet rolled to a stop on the apron in the fourth turn, bringing out the record-tying 13th caution flag of the 400-lap race. When the green flag came down on lap 391, Waltrip beat Wallace to the start-finish line with Alan Kulwicki and Brett Bodine giving chase.

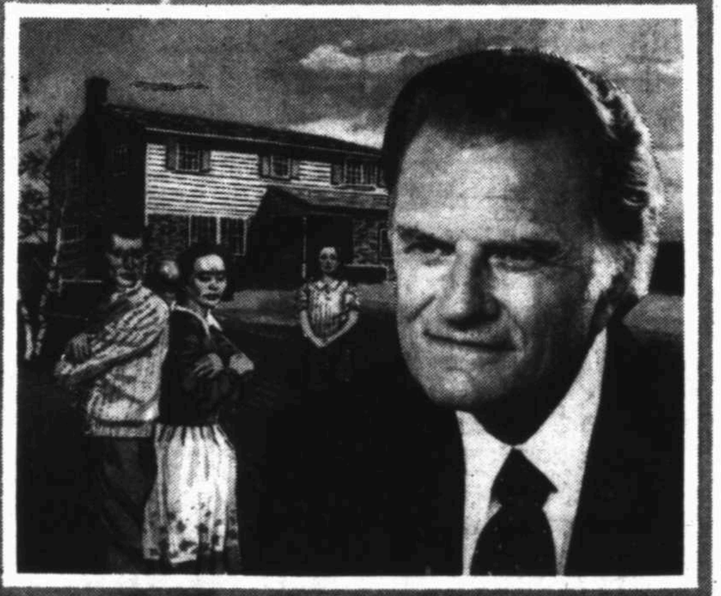

Waltrip opened up a wide lead over Wallace for seven of the last nine laps. Wallace closed the gap near the finish and tried to drive inside the leader at the end, only to finish two car lengths behind at the checkered flag. That brought an end to a five-hour race which turned into a battle of attrition under clear skies in central North Carolina.

Kulwicki was third, Brett Bodine fourth and pole-sitter Davey Allison was fifth.

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Enjoy your accomplishments, but do not rest on your laurels. If you seize the moment in September, you can turn a small opportunity into the chance of a lifetime! Work to repair a relationship you know is worth saving. You may have sent some signals you did not really mean. A last-minute change could turn important negotiations in your favor. You move up the leadership ladder more quickly than expected. Cash flow improves in October.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Brooke Shields, quarterback Joe Namath, actor Clint Eastwood, Monaco's Prince Rainier, comedian Fred Allen, poet Walt Whitman.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep career plans under wraps until everything is in place. A slip of the lip could prove costly. Move far away from those who have been draining you emotionally. Start fresh.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Others are impressed by your resilience and insight. Avoid the temptation to play psychologist. Spruce up your wardrobe. Personal appearance counts big in attracting job offers and customers. Dress to impress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your bohemian side emerges, leaving your partner laughing. Travel is necessary if you want to reach the sales goals you have set for yourself. Invest more of yourself in a close relationship.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You know how you feel, but you may be misreading member of opposite sex's intentions. Your relationship will work only if both of you are ready for commitment. Change can be healthy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have the kind of flair and daring that can make a project really roll. Offer your ideas and services, but be sure you will be compensated fairly. Romance suddenly blooms.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Procrastination can get you into trouble. Work hard. Your self-discipline will pay off in the near future! Set aside more time to spend with offspring. A close friend asks important questions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Complex projects will require considerable self-discipline to complete. Teamwork shortens hours, boosts profits. Be tactful when discussing differences of opinion with your mate or partner. Avoid bringing up old grievances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Making drastic changes in your routine could upset the apple cart. Higher-ups will express displeasure if you do not complete assignments on time. Buckle down to work. Romance alters your social plans.

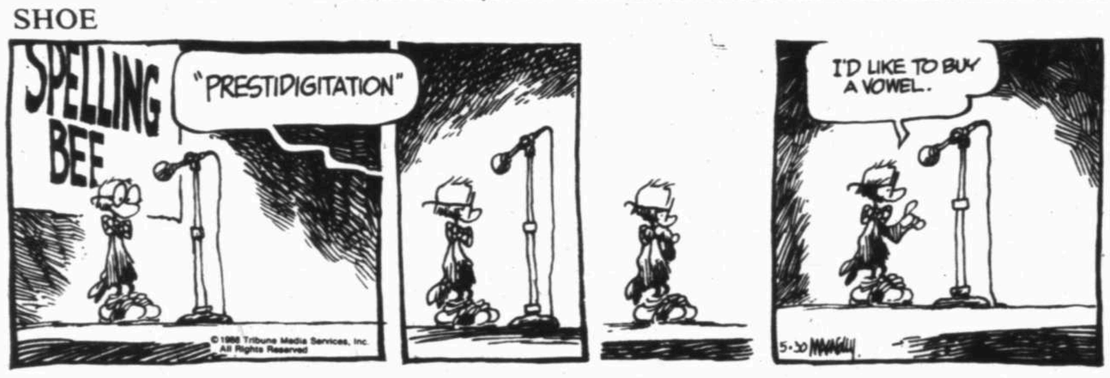

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Caution is necessary to protect your financial security. Consult tax experts before making new investments. Nourish your personal relationships. Write overdue notes and letters to loved ones living at a distance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Continue to move forward at a steady pace. You need variety. Coworkers turn to you for answers. Speak out if you have the authority to do so. Put romance on the back burner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Being an early riser will help you beat out your competition. Gather the materials you need to make a presentation. Close attention to detail is essential. Romance brings new delights. Be affectionate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Consult a friend about business matters and you will get quick results. Put new ideas into practice to lighten your workload. Office gossip is beneath your notice. Refuse to add to it.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AKJ8763 ♡Void ◇KQ542 ♣A

Your partner deals and opens four hearts. What action do you take?

A.—A hand that, at first glance, needed little for slam now might not even produce game, especially at this vulnerability. Since partner cannot hold two aces, you have one sure red-suit loser and who knows how many others, especially if the opening lead is a club. You have useful cards for partner. Pass, and hope he makes it.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKJ72 ♡6 ◇Q876 ♣A83

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Even if you play four-card majors, a bid of three spades now would promise a six-card suit. Suggest an unbalanced hand by bidding three diamonds. Don't worry about the quality of your suit. You are simply showing your distribution so that you and your partner can proceed intelligently to the best contract.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKJ72 ♡63 ◇Q87 ♣A83

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Don't develop a fixation about your five-card spade suit and heart weakness. Show a minimum balanced hand by raising to three no trump. With his no trump jump, partner promised a heart stopper and a balanced hand of 13-15 points.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQ652 ♡6 ◇Q876 ♣A43

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Since partner is a passed hand, he has, at most, 12 points and game is very unlikely. However, that does not relieve you of the responsibility of trying to find the best spot. Bid three diamonds, intending to pass whatever partner bids next unless it is forcing.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AJ93 ♡Q754 ◇J102 ♣62

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Unless partner is able to jump on the next round, you have enough for only one bid. That does not mean that you should depart from the normal principle of showing your suits up-the-line. Bid one heart, even though the quality of your spade suit is better.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠J9643 ♡A ◇A986 ♣A102

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—The problem with bidding two diamonds is what do you do if partner next bids two hearts? A preference to three clubs now shows a better hand than you have. You can avoid most rebid problems by raising to three clubs immediately.

Bob Hope celebrates birthday

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope is celebrating his 85th birthday Sunday by traveling to Louisville, Ky., to take part in a benefit golf tournament.

Hope said he played nine holes of golf Saturday to prepare. When asked how well he played he joked, "I don't want to talk about it. I'm trying to shoot my age. I think I'll make it if I live long enough."

Hope and his wife Dolores, whose birthday was Friday, will have a joint celebration dinner Sunday night after they arrive in Louisville for the Foster Brooks Celebrity Golf Tournament.

Mrs. Hope was in Michigan Saturday to attend a family graduation, and Hope's plane will pick her up Sunday en route to Louisville.

After the Louisville appearance, Hope plans to rest and play more golf at Fort Walton Beach, Fla., for a few days. Then he's heading for Nashville, Tenn., to serve as captain for one of the teams in the Barbara Mandrell Celebrity Softball game.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Mother Teresa says she would like to build a hospice for AIDS patients in Vancouver similar to facilities she has started in the United States.

"Our brothers and sisters suffering from AIDS are the people that need very tender, loving care," the Nobel Peace Prize-winning nun told reporters Saturday at Vancouver International Airport.

She said she was in Vancouver "to help the poorest of the poor."

But whether the Catholic archdiocese would support her plan was not immediately clear.

Archdiocese spokesman Rev. William Mendenhall said the establishment of a Catholic hospice would have to be discussed between Archbishop James Carney and Mother Teresa.

"She said she would like to care for them, but I guess the final aspects of her motion will be between her and the archbishop," said Mendenhall.

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Chicago music fans may love their football Bears, but in Colorado, the Broncos don't seem to have the same appeal.

A Boulder Philharmonic Orchestra concert that was to have featured members of the Denver Broncos football team manhandling the baton had to be canceled after only 40 advance tickets were sold.

The concert, patterned after a similar event in Chicago, had been scheduled Saturday at the University of Colorado Events Center in Boulder.

Billed as "The Denver Broncos Classical Rock Concert," it also was the first scheduled Boulder Philharmonic Orchestra concert to be canceled in 32 years, said orchestra general manager Jim Hanifin.

He thought he would have a box-office smash when he heard that 20,000 tickets were sold to watch Chicago Bears football legend Walter Payton conduct an orchestra in Chicago.

Among the Broncos who had agreed to participate were Vance Johnson, Ricky Nattiel and Mark Jackson — known as the Three Amigos — and Keith Bishop and Steve Watson. Proceeds were to benefit the Broncos Youth Foundation's efforts to combat substance abuse.

HUMBOLDT, Iowa (AP) — CBS reporter Harry Reasoner returned to Iowa to marry a New York health insurance executive in a private ceremony.

Reasoner, 65, a regular on the news show "60 Minutes," married 44-year-old Lois Harriet Weber in a 25-minute ceremony Saturday before about 30 people, mostly family, at the United Church of Christ.

"I'm happy to be back, but I'm not sure when I'll be back again," he said as he posed for photographers for a few minutes.

Reasoner, dressed in a gray suit and red tie, said he and his new wife would leave Sunday for a honeymoon in Colorado before returning to his home in Westport, Conn. Ms. Weber wore a calf-length pink dress.

"Growing up in Humboldt gave me a built-in defense against critics who accuse major media organizations of having an East Coast liberal bias," Reasoner said before the ceremony.

A private reception was held after the wedding.

LYNNFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Elizabeth Condon and Victor Novikov, separated for more than eight years by the Soviet government, were married on the eve of the summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Ms. Condon, who teaches Russian and French in the Woburn public schools, said, "It's rather nice" that the wedding Saturday coincided with the summit in Moscow.

Ms. Condon, 45, of Lynn and Nokikov, 56, an unemployed research chemist from Moscow, had planned to marry in the Soviet Union in 1979, but Soviet officials blocked the wedding.

Condon for years was denied visas to visit the Soviet Union and Novikov was not allowed to emigrate. But the couple learned five days before the December 1987 summit in Washington that Novikov could come to this country. They were reunited in New York City on March 26.

"They resolved us at the last one," she said of the 1987 summit, "and we're sort of resolving ourselves at the beginning of this one."

When Novikov arrived in the United States on a three-month visa, he wanted to marry Ms. Condon right away. However, she wanted time to assess their relationship. Earlier this month, Ms. Condon said, they decided to marry.

The two were married by a justice of the peace before 40 of Ms. Condon's friends and relatives at the home of her aunt.

ANAHEIM, Calif (AP) — California legislator Tom Hayden, the former radical protest leader, said at a booksellers' convention he has revised his thinking about the death penalty.

While being questioned about his recently published book, "Reunion: A Memoir," Hayden was asked Saturday if he's withdrawn his opposition to the death penalty.

"I've come to a kind of tortured conclusion that I'm not going to lead a fight to repeal the death penalty," said Hayden, a Democratic Assemblyman who represents Santa Monica.

"We live in a society in California that is very open and very violent," Hayden said. "People who commit murders are generally in prison about eight years and then they are back on the streets. Until that is corrected, I'm not going to oppose the death penalty."

Hayden, who is married to actress Jane Fonda, was at the 88th annual convention of the American Booksellers Association to promote his book, published by Random House.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Mort Drucker, the veteran caricaturist of Mad Magazine, has been named the best cartoonist of the year by National Cartoonists Society.

Drucker, enjoying the success of his Ollie North and Ronald Reagan Coloring Books, also won the the special features award at the annual awards ceremony Saturday night.

Chuck Jones, creator of Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck and Porky Pig, again was honored with the Reuben, as the awards are known, for best animator.

Another two-time winner was Jim Borgman, a political cartoonist for the Cincinnati Enquirer, selected as best editorial cartoonist by his peers for the second year in a row.

Jim Unger of the Bahamas was awarded best syndicated panel for his comic feature, "Herman." Will Eisner won best comic book artist for "The Spirit."

The best story strip artist was John Cullen Murphy, who draws the "Prince Valient" comic strip.

Banks pay piper for building bust

DALLAS (AP) — Texas' banks and savings and loans, now paying the price for the construction glut of the early 1980s, are likely to reach the peak of their distress this year, officials say.

The state's 1,710 banks lost $1.7 billion during the first quarter of this year and nearly $2 billion in 1987.

"I believe the economy has turned around in general," Texas Banking Commissioner Kenneth Littlefield said last week. "Of course, the condition of banks trails the general economy by 18 months, two years. The problem is that the status quo is not good enough.

"We need a substantial upturn to help the banks, and there is your chicken-and-egg situation."

William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and some industry officials believe that 70 banks could fail during 1988 — the worst year yet for Texas banks. To date, 29 institutions have collapsed, compared with 52 for all of 1987.

In Dallas County alone, only 35 percent of institutions generated income before extraordinary items last year. Overall, county banks posted $700.9 million in losses.

Recently released first-quarter 1988 data compiled by the FDIC includes a $1.5 billion loss incurred by Dallas-based First RepublicBank Corp. The FDIC gave First Republic a $1 billion cash bailout in March.

The search is on for a buyer for First RepublicBank, the state's largest bank holding company, and regulators say they are hopeful one can be found.

A total of 11.98 percent of Texas banks' real estate loans were non-performing in 1987, compared with just 1.27 percent in 1983, when the construction boom was at its peak, according to data gathered by Sheshunoff & Co. of Austin.

Dallas-area non-performing real estate loans amounted to 14.05 percent of banks' aggregate real estate portfolios, while in Houston the figure stood at 15.67. Non-performing real estate in the Austin market — regarded as the most overbuilt in the state — stood at 16.78 percent of all real estate loans.

Real estate lending declined last year, for the first time since the boom began, dropping to $42.5 billion from $45.4 billion in 1986.

Additionally, the energy troubles of the early 1980s that drove many institutions into real estate lending are being overcome.

Banks in Odessa and Midland, the heart of the Permian Basin, trimmed their losses to $10.9 million in 1987 after a $34 million shortfall the year before.

Institutions along the border were generally profitable, in part because of Mexican money fleeing from inflation-wracked Mexican pesos. El Paso County banks earned $20 million, while in Webb County, which includes Laredo, an $11 million profit was recorded.

Smaller banks outside the major metropolitan areas of Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio and Austin recorded nearly flat performance in 1987.

While the 778 institutions in big cities lost nearly $2 billion and saw non-performing loans increase by 50 percent in 1987, the 988 banks elsewhere lost $4.4 million, and non-performing credits rose by less than 1 percent.

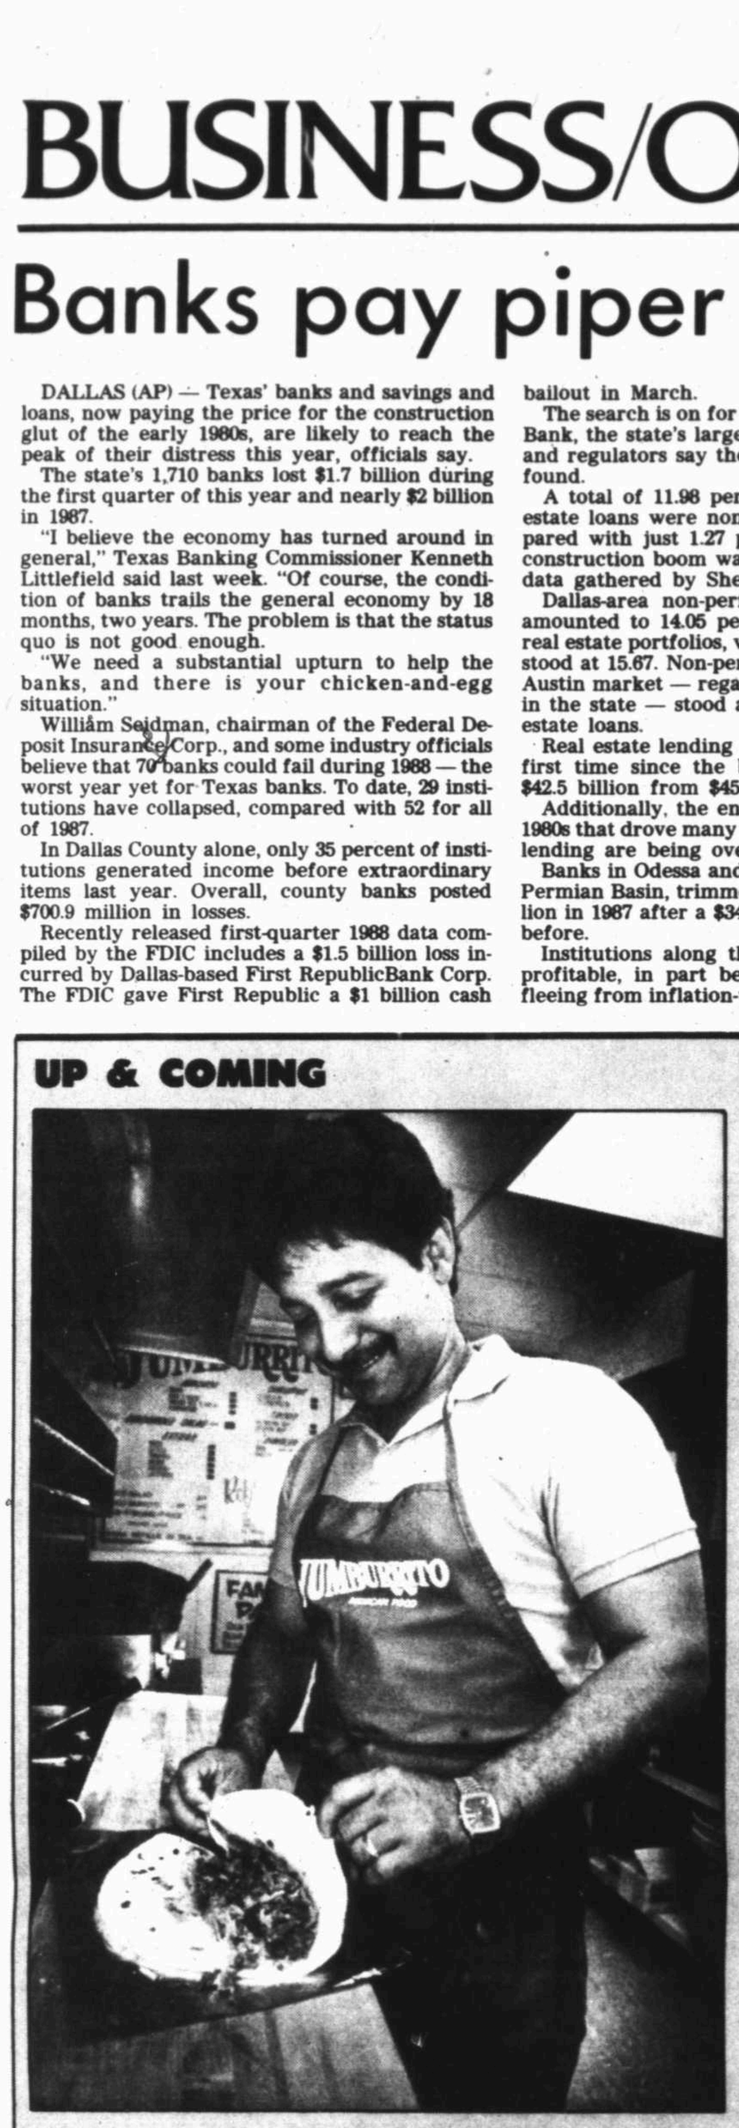

The trouble in Texas' banking and thrift industries has sullied the state's business reputation.

Dale Terry, executive vice president at North-Park National Bank, the largest independent bank in Dallas, said, "Texas is typecast as a place where you do not want to invest your money."

"I have sensed the reaction deeply, and inevitably all the banks are painted with the same brush," said Ben F. Love, chairman of Houston-based Texas Commece Bancshares Inc. "It hurts us that the other banks have had to call upon the FDIC."

Perception of Texas banks likely won't change until 1990, he said. "There are more skeptics than there are believers. It is going to take performance."

Jumburrito founder Jose Cuevas says the restaurant business is just like cooking for friends who come over — only on a larger scale.

Cuevas rolls Jumburrito toward third location

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Eight years ago, in a small building on Lamesa Road, Jose Cuevas opened Jumburrito with a $5,500 bank loan from First National Bank and pots and pans bought on a credit card.

Today, Jumburrito is one of the Permian Basin's most successful restaurant operations with three locations and combined sales of $1.4 million. A fourth location to be added soon is expected to push sales over $2 million.

The Jumburrito formula has worked so well that Cuevas has franchise in his eyes and plans to someday sell his big burritos in every major city in Texas.

"I've always been willing to take that extra step," says Cuevas. He says the desire was instilled in him at a young age while growing up in Kingsville, Texas.

"I was born in the barrio, and encountered some strong prejudice while I was growing up. That gave me the feeling that world wasn't always fair. I knew that if I wanted to be accepted, I would have to excel at what I did, and prove I was as good as, if not better, as everyone else, and that I deserved my position."

He credits that desire to take the extra step for getting him started in the food business, and making his restaurants a success.

Machine tool orders down slightly in April

NEW YORK (NYT) — Orders for American-made machine tools declined six-tenths of 1 percent in April from the previous month, to $253 million, according to a report to be released Monday by the industry's trade association.

The monthly figure represents a 94.2 percent increase over April 1987, the National Machine Tool Builders' Association said. For the first four months of this year, orders totaled $1.1 billion, up 85.7 percent over the comparable year-ago period, the report said.

Industry analysts said that they considered the April decline relatively insignificant and added that the figures continued to demonstrate increased capital spending and higher exports. They attributed the rise in exports to the weaker dollar and policies requiring certain government agencies to buy more domestically made machine tool products.

Machine tools are power-driven instruments that cut or shape metal parts. Economists consider their sales to be an important preliminary indicator of capital spending by the makers of products like automobiles, airplanes and manufactured goods.

"January and February saw a turnaround in orders, and the level has been maintained through March and April," said James A. Gray, the president of the machine tool association, which is based in McLean, Va. "We are happy that American industry is again investing in its future."

Gray said the industry was encouraged by the recently announced trade figures and the increasing level of machine tool exports. "The improvements we have been seeing in the capital goods industries are beginning to be felt by wider segments of the economy," he added.

Graduates advised to set aside funds for flexibility

By JAN M. ROSEN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When Edward W. Barrett was dean of the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism in the 1950s and '60s, he liked to give a special talk just before graduation. His advice to those about to embark on their careers: "Start a go-to-hell fund."

As new graduates settled into jobs and apartments, they face a myriad of financial demands. These include rent and security deposits, possibly furniture or moving costs, car costs in most parts of the country, expenses for a suitably professional wardrobe, perhaps student-loan repayments, and such routine costs as food, utilities, medical bills and entertainment.

It is very easy to get overextended. Then if dissatisfaction with the first job crops up, it's that much more frustrating for a person who feels financially trapped.

Those people with a "go-to-hell fund" have a psychological advantage. They can evaluate the situation, knowing they can afford to quit or to move across the country if they chose, and can decide whether they are overreacting to the stress of the moment or really should mount a job search. In extremis, they can use the fund.

Through the years some of Barrett's former students have had to use their emergency funds. And, said the dean, who is now retired in Greenwich, Conn., they have called to thank him for the advice — which is as suitable by today's standards of financial planning professionals as it was when first proferred.

"Take something off the top right from the beginning — 5 percent or 10 percent — on a monthly basis," said George E.L. Barbee, executive director of the Consumer Financial Institute, a division of the accounting firm Price Waterhouse in Waltham, Mass. "Do it regularly. The earlier people start the process of saving, the better they will do it through life," he added.

"Start getting in the savings mode, even if it's just a few dollars per paycheck," agreed Antonio Poglianich, founder and president of Metroplanning, in Manhattan, which is marketing its "New Beginning Financial Profile" at $500 as a present to get a new graduate onto the right track for life's financial journey.

Poglianich, a certified financial planner who works on a fee and commission basis, spends several hours with each client to develop a personal plan. "It's important to develop a nice foundation of trust," he explained. "Then I can work with these individuals as their planning needs change as they go forward in their careers."

Taxes take 0.9 percent more from April incomes

WASHINGTON (AP) — After-tax incomes fell 0.9 percent in April, the sharpest setback in a year, as tax filings took a big bite out of Americans' disposable income, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said it was the first decline in disposable income since a 0.6 percent drop last November and the biggest decrease since a 2.5 percent decline in April 1987, when changes prompted by the new tax law took an even bigger bite out of Americans' incomes.

Facing big tax bills, Americans cut back on spending last month as well. Personal consumption spending was basically flat in April following a 0.8 percent rise in March.

Before adjusting for taxes, personal income rose a weak 0.1 percent in April following a 1.1 percent jump in March. This performance was substantially below economists' expectations.

Many of them had been looking for a gain of around 0.6 percent based on the strong employment increase in April which pushed the jobless rate down to a 14-year low of 5.4 percent.

The big decline in disposable incomes pushed Americans' savings rate, savings as a percentage of disposable income, down to 3.8 percent last month, compared to a rate of 4.7 percent in March.

The report said personal tax payments climbed at an annual rate of $36.2 billion in April, compared to a March increase of $10.9 billion. Most of that gain came in payments taxpayers had to make when they filed their returns before the April 15 deadline.

Wages and salaries rose at an annual rate of $7.9 billion in April, down from a March increase of $15 billion, reflecting primarily the fact that wages were boosted in March by a payment of bonuses to workers at Ford Motor Co.

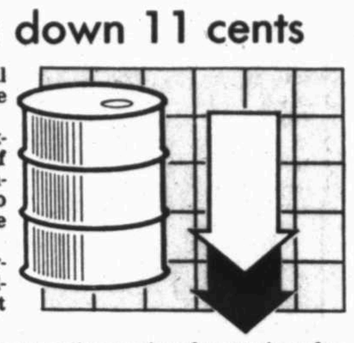

Farm income fell $7.6 billion last month compared to an increase of $19.4 billion in March, with federal subsidy payments accounting for the wide swing.

On the spending side, purchases of durable goods fell by $4.3 billion while purchases of non-durable goods dropped $14.1 billion. Purchases of services, which include housing costs, climbed $11.6 billion.

Oil closes week down 11 cents

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices fell as trading slowed Friday in advance of the holiday weekend.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude oil, fell 11 cents to $17.43 per 42-gallon barrel after a rise of 17 cents on Thursday.

Among refined products, the near-term contract for wholesale unleaded gasoline advanced, rising 0.20 cent to settle at 52.55 cents a gallon.

Analysts said trading was light after an active session the previous day.

"The market is getting flat," said Richard Redoglio of Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "People are finding no reason to take a position."

The analysts said traders appeared reluctant to establish positions in advance of the next meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, scheduled for June 8 in Vienna, Austria. The OPEC ministers are expected to resume their ongoing debate over production and pricing at the meeting.

"The market is taking a deep breath before it starts to trade headlines next week in pre-OPEC posturing," said Richard Donovan, head of the international energy group at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

But Donovan said he expected the $17 mark to provide a temporary floor for the near-term crude contract.

"I'd be surprised if a trapdoor opened on the downside (before the OPEC meeting)," Donovan said.

Analysts attributed the uptick in the June contract for unleaded gasoline to technical factors as traders squared positions in advance of the expiration of the contract next Tuesday.

Stocks drift lower in dull session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market drifted lower Friday in a meandering pre-holiday session.

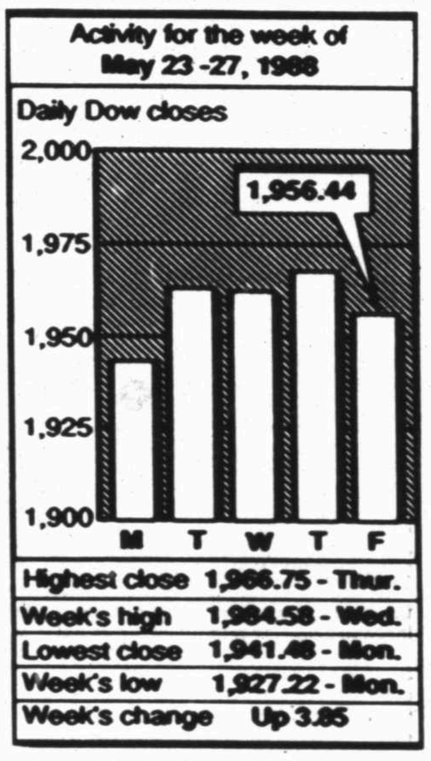

A late downturn in interest rates, which left bonds mixed on the day, failed to stir much enthusiasm for stocks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 10.31 to 1,956.44, finishing the week with a net gain of 3.85 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 618 up, 777 down and 506 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 133.59 million shares, down from 164.26 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 151.48 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $8.40 billion, or 0.33 percent, in value.

Highest close	1,966.75 - Thur.
Week's high	1,964.58 - Wed.
Lowest close	1,941.48 - Mon.
Week's low	1,927.22 - Mon.
Week's change	Up 3.85

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .57 to 143.66.

Standard & Poor's industrial index fell 1.76 to 292.55, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 1.21 at 253.42.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market slipped .63 to 366.66. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 290.50, off 1.56.

BUSINESS TRENDS

Oddity collector tours corporate America

NEW YORK (NYT) — Apple Computer executives keep popcorn machines in their headquarters lobbies and meet in rooms named after television soap operas. Owens-Corning Fiberglas executives hand out Fiberglas business cards.

Those are the kind of corporate oddities Paul Wolsfeld collects. A business researcher from California, Wolsfeld has bicycled across the country over the last two years trying to visit the headquarters of 600 companies, including the 500 that Forbes magazine listed as top revenue earners in 1986. Now he is in New York City, home to 86 Forbes 500 businesses. His aim is to write at least one book about his travels.

Wearing shorts and a T-shirt and with pen and metal clipboard in hand, Wolsfeld has appeared without appointment at about 450 headquarters so far, most of them chosen from the 1986 Forbes list.

While sometimes mistaken for a messenger, or in at least one case, for a nut, the lanky 35-year-old usually gets a gracious reception. Wolsfeld is clearly peeved, though, over his occasional encounters with rude receptionists and supercilious spokesmen.

"These guys in public relations," he said with a shrug of frustration. "There's a right way and a wrong way of handling people." For some companies that have told him to take a hike, Wolsfeld has wished the worst of corporate fates: a hostile takeover.

While in a headquarters, Wolsfeld tries to obtain a quick tour of the building and to soak in the company's particular style.

Sent to public relations at Walt Disney headquarters in Burbank, Calif., he was told matter-of-factly to "go down Snow White Lane and hang a left on Dopey Avenue," he said.

Wolsfeld also likes to see whether companies measure up in their purported expertise.

On the telephone with Pacific Telesis Group, a West Coast telephone company, he was disconnected each time the company tried to transfer his call, he said.

Approaching W.R. Grace & Co. at 42nd Street and Seventh Avenue in Manhattan last week, Wolsfeld wondered whether its operation was as efficient as J. Peter Grace, chief executive and former chairman of a presidential commision on Government waste, would like the federal bureaucracy to be. Asked to come back later, he didn't find out that day.

The questions Wolsfeld asks are generally innocuous. How many jets does the company own? Does it lease or own its headquarters? Do executives share parking spaces with other employees?

He also asks how far the closest airport is by taxi. Sometimes his hosts measure the distance in miles, sometimes in dollars of cab fare. New Yorkers answer in number of minutes.

Wolsfeld is uncertain where the questions will lead, but he hopes to draw from his amassed facts new insights into big business.

"To me, information is power," said Wolsfeld, who founded Preppy Gadfly Services, a newspaper and magazine clipping service in San Diego. "I like knowing things no one else knows."

His two-year odyssey has also been a way to indulge in bicycle riding, his favorite sport. But bicycle riding, like so many pursuits, is difficult in New York. Eleven days ago, still not flattened by his unyielding brethren, the bicycle messengers, Wolsfeld locked his bike outside Citicorp, on Lexington Avenue and 53rd Street. When he returned six hours later, a piece of cable was all that remained. Now he is exploring New York on foot.

Though he has the taut, somewhat weary face of a relentless exerciser, Wolsfeld is not the typical health enthusiast. His favorite breakfast food is White Castle hamburgers, and among his first discoveries about Manhattan was its vast number of pizza parlors.

A former business student at the University of Arizona, Wolsfeld is an avid reader of the financial press and a self-described groupie of chief executives.

"I get a kick out of coming to these companies," he said. "They don't think I know anything about them."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Discretionary power seat of liability

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Enclosed is a copy of the "customer's agreement" my husband and I signed when we opened a brokerage account. You will note it is not a margin account.

While we were out of the country on vacation last November, the brokerage firm bought one stock for our account and later sold that stock, as well as another stock we had purchased five months earlier.

After receiving monthly statements listing those transactions, I made numerous telephone calls and wrote several letters to the brokerage asking that the errors be corrected. No results.

Obviously, I have a problem and am turning to you. Can we be held responsible for stocks purchased and sold for our account, without authorization?

Doyle

A. Not unless you granted discretionary power over the account, giving the brokerage firm authority to buy and sell for you without specific approval of each transaction.

The customer's agreement you sent along makes no reference to discretionary authority. But that power often is spelled out in a separate agreement. Assuming you did not sign such an agreement, the brokerage firm was dead wrong buying and selling stocks for you, without your say-so.

If you had a margin account, through which you put up only part of the purchase price and borrowed the rest through the brokerage, your stocks could be sold if they dropped in price and you didn't meet a "margin call" by putting up more collateral.

Based on the situation as you explain it, you cannot be held responsible for the three unauthorized transactions in your account.

Since the brokerage won't square things away, you should go to arbitration through any stock exchange of which that firm is a member. If it's not a member of any exchange, go through the National Association of Securities Dealers arbitration process.

Q. The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that customers whose agreements with brokerage firms specify settling disputes through arbitration must go that route, rather than resorting to court action. But settlements of customer-brokerage disputes through arbitration often are not favorable to customers.

Is it possible for a customer to circumvent arbitration and go directly to the Securities and Exchange Commission?

A. You can always file a complaint with the SEC, directing it to that federal agency's Office of Consumer Affairs, 450 Fifth Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20549. Many minor problems have been straightened out that way, when the SEC queries brokerages. A letter from the SEC can do wonders getting a brokerage off its duff.

However, the SEC does not act as a collection agency. If you have a dispute involving money with a brokerage which the firm will not settle to your satisfaction, you have no choice other than going to arbitration.

Q. A few years back, I purchased a low-priced stock which was listed on NASD's Automated Quotation System. It has since been removed from NASDAQ listing. The company's annual report to stockholders says it is quoted in the "Pink Sheets." What are the Pink Sheets?

A. The Pink Sheets are printed daily by the National Quotations Bureau and distributed to brokerage firms. They contain bid and asked quotations on more than 11,000 infrequently traded over-the-counter stocks.

You can get quotations on Pink Sheet stocks from brokers. But be aware that many of the prices quoted in the Pink Sheets are more fiction than fact.

Q. I bought 10,000 shares of stock, at an average price of 85 cents per share. When I decided to sell, I learned it is not quoted anyplace — not even the Pink Sheets — anymore. My broker is unable to supply any information. Can you help?

A. Because that stock is not quoted any place, there is no market for it. That means it's worthless, giving you a painful $8,500 loss. The only possible help there will be as a tax loss.

TOOLS

Foreign orders for American-made machine tools soared 83.8 percent in April from the previous month's level, to $59.6 million. The amount of foreign orders was nearly twice that of April 1987.

For the first four months of the year, foreign orders rose 85.6 percent, to $162.6 million.

Orders for metal-cutting tools, including lathes and boring mills, increased 1.8 percent, to $195.3 million, from their March level. Foreign orders for such tools jumped 175.2 percent, to $48.9 million. Metal-cutting machines typically account for about two-thirds of the industry. Compared with April of last year, orders of metal-cutting tools were up 145.5 percent, the report said.

In the metal-forming segment of the industry, orders for such tools as large presses for making sheet metal were down 7.8 percent in April, to $57.7 million, from March. Foreign orders for such tools fell 27 percent. Compared with year-earlier levels, orders for metal-forming tools were up 13.7 percent.

GRADUATES

Poglianich is a Cornell graduate and many of his clients have come from a network of Cornell alumni, although he is now starting to work with graduates of Columbia, New York University and other schools.

The first step for a new graduate who has found a first job, he said, is to examine the employer-provided benefits, like health and disability insurance, and see if any gaps need to be filled. Next, look at credit. Some people are reluctant to use credit, while others quickly wind up in debt. The right way to use credit, he said, is to get an American Express card and a Visa or Mastercard and to pay the balance most months, but occasionally to take advantage of the credit line for a few months. This will lead to a good credit rating, which will be important in the future for obtaining a home mortgage or an auto loan.

Also, Poglianich said, focus on paying student loans on time. If they are impossible to pay — because of illness or job loss, for example — talk with the lenders. Some will allow the principal to slide a few months if the interest is paid, or will come up with another arrangement.

The next step is to work out a cash-flow and budget-management analysis. "Often when people first start working, they think $25,000 a year is a lot of money," Poglianich said. "In fact, it isn't, especially in the New York area."

"There are a lot of temptations in New York — restaurants, nightclubs," he added. "Get in a spending mode and it can get out of control and you wind up in debt. My primary role for these clients is to play their conscience."

The budget must include savings sufficient to set up an emergency fund equal to three months' total expenses. That money should go into a money-market fund. Once all the bases are covered, there can be savings for a special goal, like a trip to Europe or a share of a summer house, but the emergency fund should not to be touched for these purposes.

Bill seeks to hold healthy S&Ls in FSLIC

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Banking Committee's chairman introduced legislation Thursday that would prevent healthy savings institutions from fleeing the ailing federal fund that insures their deposits.

Sixteen Democrats and seven Republicans are backing a bill introduced by Rep. Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I. It would bar S&Ls from leaving the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. until Aug. 10, 1989 — one year longer than a ban currently in effect.

Congress last summer included the initial moratorium in legislation providing for a $10.8 billion industry-financed infusion into FSLIC, which insures S&L deposits up to $100,000.

Because the insurance premium charged by FSLIC is roughly 2½ times greater than the premium charged the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., legislators fear that thrifts eligible for admission to the FDIC will leave FSLIC and become banks.

CUEVAS

But his stroll to success was not a direct one. Cuevas' first job in the food business was at the Regency Hotel in Denver, setting up tables and chairs. Within six months he was made crew supervisor, and he was only 17.

After spending seven months in Houston as assistant manager at Charlie Brown Restaurants, he returned to Denver to work for the Postal Service. Deciding he was happier in the food business, Cuevas quit after four months and moved back to Texas to work in his uncle's McAllen restaurant.

"I really learned a lot there," he says. "I learned what it takes to run a successful restaurant, and about cooking."

He returned to Denver a third time, to work as a waiter at the Hilton. Within four months he was a maitre d' in the Charolais Room.

"That's where I really got excited about the food business," he recalls. "I loved the flare — I did a lot of flambe' dishes like Bananas Foster. It was an area that intrigued me, because there was real professionalism to it. It was a taste of the good life."

After a year in the Charolais Room, he moved to the Denver Marriott as an assistant maitre d', soon becoming one of their youngest maitre d's. He was sent through the Marriot's supervisory training program and asked to join the task force, but decided to move to Midland and open his own restaurant.

"I wanted to give myself a chance," Cuevas explained. "My dad had bought this building, the rent was low, and I decided it was now or never."

He enjoys his restaurants, saying it's like having a lot of friends coming over. "I like to cook for friends when they come over, so this is basically the same thing, just on a larger scale."

Since opening in 1979, Jumburrito has shown steady growth, grossing $210,000 in 1980, $375,000 in 1981, and $525,000 in 1982. His next goal, he says, is $5 million.

But to do that, he says he's going to have to expand to cities like Lubbock, Dallas and Houston. Asked if he's considering franchising, he replied, "I've looked into it. But I think company-owned units is the way for us. What I'd like to do is make some of these kids managers, give them 49 percent of the profits, so that down the road they can open a second unit and have 100 percent of that. It'd give some of them a chance to succeed that they might not have otherwise. And I think that's important."

He added that, in his opinion, miniunits — with double drive-in windows and a walk-in counter are the most cost-effective for his business, and would allow him to put in between five and 10 units in a major metropolitan market like Dallas-Fort Worth.

And he's determined to make that happen, especially after he settles a trademark dispute with Atlantic Richfield over the Jumburrito name. Arco claims they patented the name nationwide in 1982, which would limit Cuevas to using Jumburrito only in Texas. He claims to have trademarked the name in 1981.

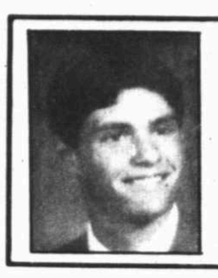

"I would love to see Jumburritos all over the country. And I'm willing to wait for that to happen. I'm in no hurry."

GENERAL NEWS

Countries immortalized in cap collection

BRIDGE CITY, Texas (AP) — One thing Canada and Mexico have in common is that they border the United States. The other is that they're immortalized on caps hanging from the ceiling inside Fred Bailey's fish camp.

That goes for Alaska, Hawaii, Germany and the Cayman Islands, too. And of course, Fred's ceiling sports a gimme cap from virtually every oil field equipment or offshore drilling company in the area.

"I've got 66 left to go," Fred tells customers as they walk in the door, the cowbell on the worn screen door clanging behind them. For people who are unfamiliar with fish camp tradition, he means hats left to go until he has his 1,000th-hat celebration.

Over the years, friends have learned that just about all it takes to make Fred happy is to bring him a hat. (He doesn't complain about shrimp, fish, steak, money or birthday cake, either.) Many of his customers don't get by his place down at the cattail-lined end of Ferry Road too often, so when they do they've got a whole car trunk full of hats they've saved up for an ultimate place on Fred's ceiling.

Now the fish camp has been in the family since 1926, when Fred's parents opened a dance hall at the ferry landing on the Orange County side of the Neches River. Its walls still bear the rules from years past: "No Cussing. Be Sensible. Respect Ladies."

But some things change with time: Fred closed the dance hall in when a man killed his cousin in a fight over a woman, and Fred even has a lone video game in the two-story building that went up before the advent of television and now serves as a watering hole for thirsty crabbers or the regulars who drop by to talk sports or politics.

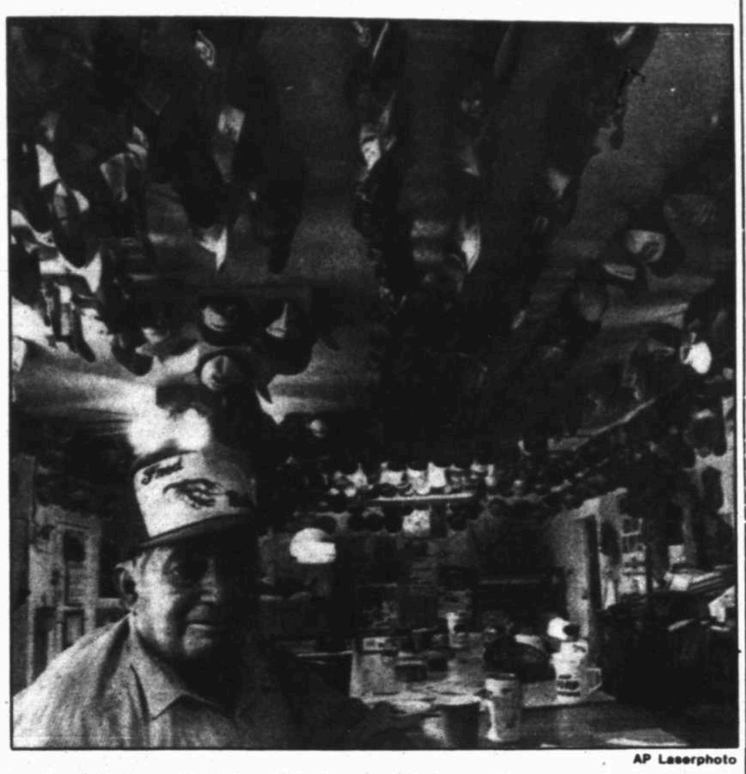

But the video game gets far less attention than Fred's hats, which cause regular customers and newcomers alike to slow their step and throw their heads back to look at the sea of colors on the ceiling when they first walk in.

"And it gives you something to do when you're knocking back a beer," longtime customer Norman Davidson offers in favor of the hat collection. Fred can't remember when he started the hat collection, although he will say he started it this decade.

A man was in from Alabama and verbally defended Crimson Tide coach Bear Bryant's honor against some of Fred's customers who didn't think too highly of him. Fred sided with the Alabama man, which won him a Crimson Tide hat the next time the man stopped by.

That hat, now covered with dusty spider webs, is in the exact same spot where Fred nailed it years ago.

There are the hats from various locations and companies, the authentic Mexican sombrero, and there's Fred's favorite, what he calls his "Reagan cap." It has two bills going in different directions and says, "I'm the leader which way did they go?"

AP Laserphoto

Fred Bailey of Bridge City began his hat collection in his fish camp with a Crimson Tide gimme cap, from a grateful customer sometime this decade. He now has only 66 caps left to collect until he has his 1,000th cap celebration.
