Rationing Spreads In East

By The Associated Press

Gasoline rationing came to New York and Connecticut today and was set for midnight in New Jersey, as officials in other states dealt with the eastern swing of the Gas Crisis of 1979 with minimum gas purchases.

Rhode Island hoped minimum gasoline purchases — $5 for small cars, $7 for large models — would discourage "topping off." Massachusetts energy director Joseph Fitzpatrick said minimums were likely in that state as well.

But officials were to make a final decision today whether to go ahead with plans for "odd-even" rationing in Maryland, Washington D.C., and northern Virginia, where minimum sales requirements have failed to shorten lines at pumps. They have said they will begin rationing at midnight unless the situation improves.

"I think people have finally adjusted to the fact that this is a gasoline crisis," said Kathy Godzik, spokeswoman for the Automobile Club of Maryland. "It used to be a crunch; now its a crisis."

Other states like Pennyslvania and Georgia held off on any measures, but kept an eye on gasoline supplies and the success of rationing elsewhere.

The odd-even rationing system — which alternates days on which gas can be bought between motorists with odd- and even-numbered license plates — began at 12:01 a.m. in the New York City area, where gas prices were over $1 a gallon in many places.

The plan, announced by Gov. Hugh Carey on Monday, also includes a minimum-purchase requirement, limits sales to drivers with half a tank or less, and requires some stations to stay open on weekends.

Many service station operators were not happy at the scheme, which Carey said would be extended to other parts of the state if needed.

"If the governor thinks we're going to stand around like a bunch of corner cops looking at license plates and gas gauges, he's got something else coming," said Russell Murway, president of the 1,200-member Long Island Gasoline Retailers Association.

"We have more regulations than we care to handle," Murway said. "We can't tolerate any more violence at the pumps. The answer is more gas."

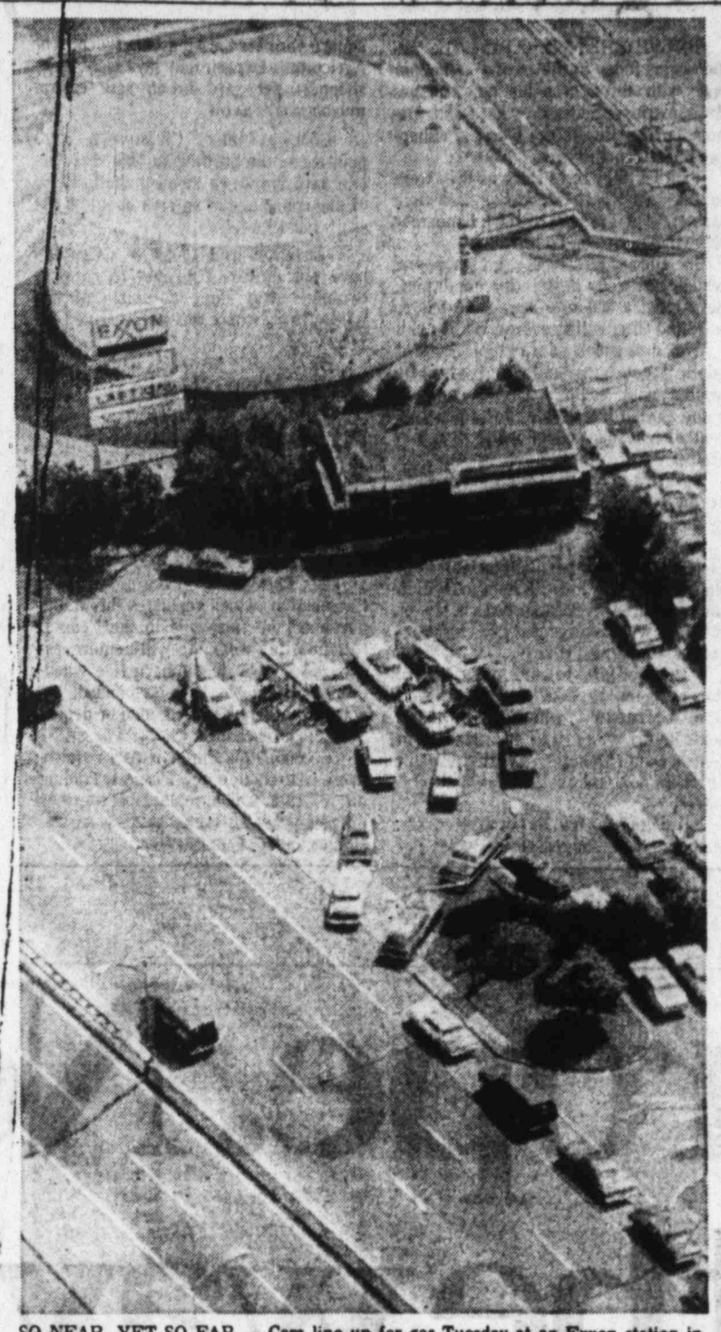
Gov. Ella Grasso began odd-even rationing in her state today after New York and New Jersey announced their programs. She said the state faced a 20 percent shortfall in gas supplies this month and "there was no community that was comfortable."

"It seems to me there was absolutely no way to avoid this," Mrs. Grasso said in announcing the rationing plan Tuesday.

While all of New Jersey goes on the odd-even system at midnight, its Garden State Parkway was already rationing gasoline at pumps, the first spot in the East to do so.

Rationing was slated to begin Monday in Texas' three most populous counties.

In California, which began odd-even rationing May 9, state officials said Tuesday the program had helped ease panic and cut down lines of gas-hungry motorists.



SO NEAR, YET SO FAR — Cars line up for gas Tuesday at an Exxon station in Perth Amboy, N.J., not far from a storage tank at a Citgo oil tank farm. The state will start odd-even rationing tonight. (AP Laserphoto)

Court Restricts Auto Searches

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that police must obtain a warrant before searching an unlocked suitcase taken from a car.

In a 7 to 2 decision, Justice Lewis F. Powell said, "The reasons for not requiring a warrant for the search of an automobile do not apply to searches of personal luggage taken by police from automobiles."

Powell said it presents no risk to police, or to the loss of evidence, to get a search warrant once luggage has been seized.

In another case involving rights of privacy for criminal suspects, the court said there was no need to obtain a search warrant before installing a device known as a pen register, which is used by the telephone company to keep track of outgoing telephone calls.

The court said there is no invasion of privacy by police in obtaining records of outgoing calls, unlike installation of wiretaps on actual telephone conversations which does require a court-approved warrant.

The Supreme Court also ruled today that children enjoy a constitutional right to have a "neutral fact-finder" decide whether their parents or guardians may commit them to state mental institutions.

But the justices, in a pair of 6-3 votes, ruled that children have no constitutional right to a full adversary hearing in which they may challenge their parents' decision to commit them.

The important statement on children's rights came in two related cases from Pennsylvania and Georgia. In separate decisions, the justices reversed lower-court rulings and reinstated the juvenile commitment procedures that had been used in each state.

The automobile search case was decided on an appeal by Arkansas law enforcement officials in a drug case stemming from the arrest of Lonnie James Sanders in Little Rock in 1976.

Acting on a tip from a confidential informant, police staked out the city's airport and observed Sanders pick up a suitcase and load it into the trunk of a taxi.

Although they had no search warrant, the officers asked the cab driver to open the trunk. Then they opened the suitcase and found 9.3 pounds of marijuana.

Sanders was sentenced to 10 years in prison and fined $15,000 on charges of possessing marijuana with intent to deliver.

The Arkansas Supreme Court threw out his conviction on grounds the police violated Sanders' constitutional rights of privacy by searching the suitcase without a warrant.

The Supreme Court ruling today upheld that decision and said that the marijuana could not be used as evidence against Sanders.

In the past, the Supreme Court has not required police to obtain warrants before searching cars because of their mobility.

Justice Powell said, "Where — as in the present case — the police, without endangering themselves or risking loss of the evidence, lawfully have detained one suspected of criminal activity and secured his suitcase, they should delay the search thereof until after judicial approval has been obtained."

Roloff Loses Final Round

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A state welfare official and the head of the Department of Public Safety intelligence division obtained final orders today to close evangelist Lester Roloff's youth homes.

One of the three homes already was closed without Roloff's approval. The preacher said the Anchor Home for Boys at Zapata was shut down. "They sent the boys home," he said, adding that about 35 youths had been housed there.

State District Judge Charles Mathews of Austin gave welfare workers the goahead to remove children from the Rebekah Home for Girls and the Lighthouse Home for Boys.

Marlin Johnston, associate commissioner of the Texas Department of Human Resources, and DPS Capt. Hugh Pogue flew from Austin to Corpus Christi to deliver certified copies of Mathews' order.

About 100 staff members of human resources department were massed near Corpus Christi, awaiting the order's arrival.

Mathews had given Roloff until Tuesday to apply for state licenses, which the evangelist says would invite anti-Christian control over his facilities.

The judge said his final order was sufficient and that further legal documents, or writs, were unnecessary.

Plans call for the young people to be returned to their parents or placed in foster homes.

Johnston said, "We have to play it by ear, step by step."

He explained that DHR staff members will not arrive at the homes with a convoy of buses.

Bill Woods, DHR information director, said, "The plans are to have a small group go in first to see if we are going to have any problems."

Steve Perrino, Texas Youth Council information director, said his agency is prepared to take youths in at the Corsicana State Home, the Waco State Home and the Tarris Haynes Ranch Farm near Killeen.

"We intend to enforce the order tomorrow morning," Assistant Attorney General David Young said Tuesday.

Roloff's top aide Wyley Cameron said today prayer sessions were held at the homes while they waited for the state to make its move.

Roloffs' attorneys Tuesday unsuccessfully asked two state courts and a federal appeals judge to keep Mathews from closing the homes.

The Texas Supreme Court and the 3rd Court of Civil Appeals in Austin refused to interfere with Mathews' order. Judge Tom Gee of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals also rejected Roloff's request.

City Market Gets Permit

A local meat market stripped of its health permit last week for alleged rodent contamination was reinstated Monday by the City Health Department following an inspection of the premises.

Discount Meat Center at 4116 Ave. Q was granted a health permit Monday after undergoing an examination by several health department inspectors.

"They (the meat market) had everything in good shape," Truett Fulcher, supervising sanitarian at the health department, said today. "They had cleaned up in general, and they had corrected all the violations on the report (of June 9 inspection)."

Fulcher said the health department will inspect the market on a monthly basis in the coming months to ensure compliance with city and state food sanitation requirements.

The market's health permit was suspended following a June 9 inspection, at which the health department contended the premises contained adulterated food from rodent contamination, food unprotected from rodents and food at improper temperatures.

Tornadoes Rumble Over Great Plains

A-J News Services

Tornadoes, heavy rain and hail pounded the Midwest late Tuesday and early today, uprooting trees and power lines, smashing buildings and light airplanes and destroying crops.

The National Weather Service in Kansas City, Mo., called the storm "the most widespread outbreak of severe weather over the Great Plains for this time of year that can be recalled."

Two people were killed and several others injured.

Nebraska took the brunt of the storm, which swept eastward with winds gusting up to 90 mph. Its main force was 140 miles wide and stretched some 200 miles from the Kansas border to the South Dakota line. Damage or injuries were also reported in Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas and the Dakotas.

Tornadoes caused an estimated $500,000 damage in Watertown, S.D., about 100 miles from the Minnesota border.

At least 23 Nebraska counties were hit and tornado warning sirens wailed in 10 of them at various times Tuesday afternoon.

Antelope County authorities said Randy Schwarting and Clarence Strahm were killed when 75-80 mph winds and large hail struck a farm shed about a mile and a half from tiny Oakdale.

There were reports of downed power lines, property damage and uprooted trees throughout the eastern one-third of the state.

In Omaha, the state's largest city, 60 mph winds blew down a house under construction. In Tilden, Neb., a tornado ripped the roof from a fertilizer plant and tore a catwalk off a grain elevator.

In southwestern Nebraska, hail damaged corn, wheat, bean and sugarbeet crops in Perkins, Keith and Deuel counties. A dust storm briefly cut off visibility at Cairo.

Minnesota homes and streets were cluttered today with broken windows, uprooted trees and downed power lines, leftovers of a parade of tornadoes and thunderstorms.

Sheriffs' departments in the southern part of the state reported 15 tornadoes touching down between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. Tuesday. The damage was just beginning to be tallied early today.

Motorists negotiating streets in downtown Minneapolis today had to avoid fallen trees and power lines at many intersections, and the pavement was littered with glass shards. Panes were blown out of windows at Daytons and Powers department stores and the Foshay towe, and the doors on the IDS skyscraper were damaged.

In Lakewood Cemetery, at least 50

Hijacked Airliner Lands At Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — An American Airlines Boeing 727 jetliner carrying 137 persons was hijacked today en route from New York to Chicago, the Federal Aviation Administration said. The FAA said the plane later landed at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago.

The FAA said the plane, Flight 293, took off from LaGuardia Airport at 10:16 a.m. CDT destined for Chicago, Oklahoma City and Dallas-Fort Worth. The plane landed at O'Hare at 12:03 p.m. CDT.

Chicago police declined to comment on reports that the hjacker wa a Croatian nationalist, one of a group that seeks independence from Yugoslavia. However, police said a spokesman for Chicago's Croatian community, Victor Vrdolyk, was on his way to O'Hare. Vrdolyk was instrumental last year in negotiating release of workers held at the German Consulate in Chicago.

The FAA said in Washington that there were 129 passengers and eight crew members aboard the flight.

The FAA said the hijacker was in the cockpit.

Nixon Will Entertain Astronauts

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP) — Former President Nixon has canceled plans to attend a moon-walk anniversary festival in Las Vegas next month, but he'll have his own party for the nation's astronauts at his Casa Pacifica estate.

Jean Magowan, a spokeswoman for the Dunes Hotel and Country Club where the astronauts' Las Vegas party will be held July 11-15, said Nixon had planned to attend the Las Vegas gathering marking the 10th anniversary of the first landing on the moon.

Now, however, about 100 persons — including astronauts, their wives and dignitaries — will attend Nixon's Mexican-theme poolside cocktail party and luncheon July 15, said Miss Magowan. She said the party is apparently the final function Nixon will host at the Spanish-style seaside estate, which the Nixons have sold.

Bayh Seeks More Cancer Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "if onlies" finally got to Sen. Birch Bayh he told members of Congress in an appeal to have more resources committed to the treatment and cure of cancer.

The Indiana Democrat, whose wife Marvella died of cancer in April, appealed to Congress Tuesday along with others who have lost loved ones to the disease.

"If you talk about what you learn when you go through an experience like this, there are more 'if onlies' than you can imagine," Bayh told the Senate Appropriations Committee which helps set limits on federal health spending each year.

"If only we had invested a little more money ... ," he said.

Also speaking before the panel were Mrs. Nat "King" Cole, whose husband died of lung cancer 14 years ago; Frances Humphrey Howard, sister of the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey; and Ann Morton, the wife of former Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton. Morton died April 19 after having cancer for six years.

The committee's chairman, Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., whose wife Mildred died of cancer earlier this year, spoke with former Rep. Helen Gahagin Douglas of California by telephone during the hearing. Mrs. Douglas, who is suffering from cancer and was too ill to attend the hearing, urged that more care and thought be given to the treatment of the terminally ill.

Pinball Wizard

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — For Sonny Ciavatta, 25 cents goes a long way. He's been playing the "World Cup" pinball machine for a week now and says he hopes to set a world's record.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

"I've created a monster," said Ciavatta, vowing he would not stop until he had beaten a record 216 hours of continuous play listed in the Guinness Book of World Records.

"If I make it through Saturday at 2 p.m., I'll have played 10 days and 10 hours. Anybody who can beat that deserves to have the record," he said Tuesday.

Ciavatta, 31, said he felt 'great.' The host bowling alley has been feeding the carpet salesman free hot dogs and Coke, and he naps between games.

He said his wife, Maria, was initially opposed to the endeavor.

"At first, she figured no one could win that many games," Ciavatta said. "But I've had the machine checked, and now she accepts that I'm just good."

Crop Dusters Begin War Against Grasshoppers

BELVIDERE, S.D. (AP) — The battle begins today in the great grasshopper war with three crop-dusting airplanes dropping insecticides on what South Dakota farmers say is the worst grasshopper infestation in 45 years.

"I think they're as thick as they were in the '30s," F.H. Ireland, a Belvidere farmer, said Tuesday. "But I remember them moving around more then."

In the early 1930s, grasshoppers, which thrive in dusty, dry conditions, devastated a 200-mile area from Pierre to Rapid City, eating everything in sight.

Today as much as a million acres of South Dakota grassland may have to be treated with Sevin 4 Oil, a common home garden insecticide in the news recently because of objections to its use in Maine.

Spraying in South Dakota was to have begun Tuesday, but was delayed a day by the first rain here in five weeks.

Agricultural specialists say crop losses so far have not been appreciable. But the grasshoppers must be sprayed within the next three weeks, the experts say, or the bugs will lay eggs and present an increased threat next year.

"They're just to the point where they're going to develop wings," said Gene Christensen, who ranches 10,000 acres up the White River near Kadoka in central South Dakota. "And if we don't get them now, they're going to be everywhere."

After multiplying for two years, the hoppers have increased to 250 per square yard on Christensen's ranch. The Agriculture Department says eight grasshoppers per yard in an acre eat as much grass as a cow.

"Look at this," Christensen said, pointing to the bustling stubble that several days ago was a thriving alfalfa field. "I can count five in an area about as big as my hand."

Christensen and 15 of his neighbors have put up about $30,000 to spray a two-mile strip along 24 miles of the White River, where the insects have congregated.

The federal government will pay one-third of the cost and the state Legislature this month appropriated $286,000 for programs throughout South Dakota.

The insecticide to be use, Sevin 4 Oil, may cause birth defects in dogs, tests have shown. Its label warns users to avoid streams and lakes. Despite environmentalists objections, however, it recently was used in Maine to control the spruce budworm, an insect that threatened timber used by paper companies.

Christensen said the $4,200 he will invest in the spraying project will be the least of his expenses because hay production will be sharply reduced.

That means Christensen will have to sell many of his 1,000 cattle this fall and truck the remainder to rented pastureland in Texas or Oklahoma because he can't feed them through the winter.

"I now know more than I want to know about grasshoppers," he said. "But when they get to eating your livelihood, you really get concerned."

Meanwhile, grasshoppers are also a problem in Oregon, where a legislative committee has approved a $470,000 appropriation for a spraying program.

New Regulation Affects Brokers

WASHINGTON (AP) — When a U.S. commodity exchange disciplines a member, the public will have to be told about it, thanks to a new government regulation taking effect July 18.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission, which regulates this trade, published the final rule in the Federal Register this week. It will require exchanges to provide public notice whenever a person has been suspended, expelled or otherwise disciplined or denied access to an exchange.

The regulation implements a requirement written into the Futures Trading Act of 1978 which replaces a previous provision that an exchange keep its disciplinary actions confidential.

Lawyers Hope To Delay Scheduled Executions

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Lawyers for Charles W. Proffitt and Robert A. Sullivan, whose death warrants have been signed by Florida Gov. Bob Graham, say they are confident neither man will be put to death as scheduled next week.

Sullivan's attorneys Tuesday asked the Florida Supreme Court to delay the executions scheduld for 7 a.m. June 27.

Follow-Up

Profitt's lawyers said they would file a similar request in Tampa circuit court this week.

If appeals fail, the men will become the second and third to die in the electric chair in little more than a month. On May 25, Florida State Prison inmate John Spenkelink became the first man executed unwillingly in the United States since 1967.

Proffitt, 33, was sentenced to death for the 1973 murder of a Tampa high school wrestling coach. The coach, 23-year-old Joel Medgebow, was asleep when Profitt plunged a breadknife into his chest.

Sullivan, 31, was sentenced to death for the 1973 shotgun slaying of motel and restaurant manager Donald Schmidt, who was abducted and murdered in the Everglades.

"They're not at the end of the road," said Proffitt's attorney Jack Boger of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's Legal Defense Fund. "Neither of these cases should result in execution anytime soon."

Both men lost appeals after their trials, but are allowed by law to try a second round. Neither has completed those appeals, which lawyers said generally deal with whether a trial met certain constitutional standards.

When those appeals end, the two men could press similar contentions in federal court. That approach spared the life of Willie Jasper Darden Jr., who had been scheduled to die along with Spenkelink.

"It's pretty easy to say it's not an imminent thing, but it's difficult for my client to contemplate that they're going to execute him in a week," said Sullivan's lawyer, Roy E. Black of Miami. "He's got to take it seriously. And I do, too."

Proffitt, a slightly-built man, has said he would rather die in a hospital as a guinea pig for research than "cook" in the electric chair.

"I mean, you stick a guy in a chair, he's hot. He can't help anybody," Proffitt said in a 1977 interview.

Sullivan, a former law student, once said if he had to die in the electric chair he wanted it shown on television.

"If people see what they want, they won't want it," the articulate, heavy-set man said in an interview two years ago.

Graham would not comment on his reasons for signing the death warrants. And lawmakers were divided in their reaction.

State Rep. David Lehman of Hollywood said two death warrants a month weren't enough to deplete the Death Row population of 133. "I think two a week would be better," he said.

Rep. Andy Johnson of Jacksonville, who watched Spenkelink die, said he had no real sympathy for those on Death Row.

"I just hope with the continued signing of these death warrants the people of Florida look at our capital punishment law and think about it and see that we don't need this law," he said. "As a matter of mercy, there's no reason why we can't have life sentences."

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Because you have great determination tomorrow, you could expect others to feel the same as you do. They don't, so don't push too hard.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Opponents won't bluff you tomorrow. Anything they can do, you can and will do better. However, don't bowl over those who aren't in your way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You won't want to waste your time with small stuff tomorrow, especially in adventuresome situations. Take care, however, that you don't become reckless.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Tomorrow could be a good day to work on any problems connected with your commercial affairs. You have the confidence and drive to straighten things out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Team effort is called for tomorrow, so no matter how energetic or industrious you feel, make certain that you work in harmony with your counterpart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Tackle all those difficult chores tomorrow. Your stamina is at a high point. You'll have plenty of it to give to all that needs to be done.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you don't have any plans for entertainment tomorrow, better make some, pronto. You need the change and won't be satisfied unless you do something pleasurable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In family dealings tomorrow, you may come on a bit stronger than is necessary. Walk softly, especially if you're carrying a big stick.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) There will be no mincing of words with you. Where normally you might hold your tongue, tomorrow you'll tell others exactly how you feel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's good to be aggressive, but anything extreme can be bad. If you're not careful you could appear too grabby, causing others to think you're selfish.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If things don't go your way tomorrow you're liable to overreact with great force. It'll be quite a shock to those who are used to your gentle ways.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're not normally one given to fits of emotionalism, but tomorrow something could be smoldering inside you that will bring about this reaction.

Rumors Cause Wheat Prices To Increase

KIOWA, Kan. (UPI) — The annual harvest of wheat has begun in the nation's breadbasket, and rumors of an impending deal with Russia have helped lift prices per bushel to more than a dollar higher than this time last year.

Kansas' first harvest of 1979 winter wheat was cut late last week on the farm of Sam Mott, just a mile west of Kiowa, along the Oklahoma border. A short load of 225 bushels was delivered at the OK Grain elevator and sold for $3.90 a bushel.

The first grain harvested during the 1978 season sold at Kiowa for $2.72, a much better price than the $1.80 per-bushel price during 1977.

OK Grain elevator manager Jim Reed said, "If the weather holds, it looks like we'll be getting into it all the way in a few days." Harvest in the western and central portions of the state normally take place a week or so later.

Pat Keast of the Kiowa harvest control office said Mott's ripe wheat, on many of his 320 acres, was "Early Triumph." She said some other varieties along the border were still green and probably would not ripen until the middle of next week.

U.S. Department of Agriculture officials have estimated 1979 Kansas wheat production at 332 million bushels this year, keeping Kansas the top producing state in the nation.

Wendell Ebright of Lyons, president of the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, said late Thursday the $3.90 certainly returns our out-of-pocket production costs, but I'd guess it's far short of an equitable return on the value of our land or of our labor."

And David Frey, a spokesman for the Kansas Wheat Commission in Hutchinson, said he had one answer for nonfarming pwople who ask him why wheat prices are going so high: "You should be asking 'Why has it been so low?'"

Industry experts said increasing grain prices — July futures closed 17¾ cents higher last week on the Kansas City Board of Trade at $4.20 per bushel — Were based on the outlook of less grain in some other producing countries, which could force Russie and China to look to the United States — and Kansas — for wheat. Frey said Australia and Argentina have committed their 1979 crops.

During 1978 Russia bought little U.S. grain because of a large harvest of its own, but China bought 100 million bushels and Japan bought 90 million bushels. Domestic food use of U.S. wheat was 600 billion bushels for several years, while exports last year were double that at 1.2 billion bushels.

"The customer of U.S. wheat is a foreigner," Frey said.

"What they've been telling us is that Russia and China have been looking at some more purchases; they're not anticipating the crops they had earlier," Reed said at his elevator.

"Too, you know, in southern Oklahoma they have been having rain and have not been getting too much wheat cut down there. Together these two things are creating a pretty fair market."

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

Human Tragedy At Sea

ANOTHER CHAPTER in the tragic story of Asia's "boat people" apparently is on the verge of being written.

According to reports from Malaysia, officials of that nation have made good on their threat to start expelling 76,000 refugees who have crowded into the country from Vietnam.

Some 2,500 Vietnamese men, women and children at last report had been set adrift on five unseaworthy wooden vessels in the South China Sea, lured aboard by false promises that U.S. rescue ships were nearby.

UN officials say that many, if not most, of those shoved into the ocean most likely will drown.

IN THE first place, there are no U.S. rescue ships nearby and other nations have vowed not to take on any new refugees.

The only other nations within easy sailing distance, Thailand, Singapore and Indonesia, have refused to accept any new refugees and have deployed reinforced naval units to prevent their landing.

More than 400,000 Vietnamese have fled their homeland since the Communist victory in April 1975.

As many as half of the "boat people" are believed to have drowned at sea. Only a few thousand have been picked up and resettled, while other groups, such as the 76,000 in Malaysia, are living in camps with little food, poor sanitation and no medical facilities.

SOLVING THE problem of the "boat people" is not easy, even by international standards. But, in seeking solutions, it should not be forgotten what has brought it about.

The primary cause, of course, was Hanoi's victory in the war with the United States.

Literally thousands of people have fled, or been forced to flee, the Communist "paradise" which was the result of the Viet Cong victory. It is interesting that many U.S. war protesters now condemn Hanoi for its treatment of the conquered.

Another reason is a worldwide one, a population explosion which puts strains on nations and food supplies. In seeking immediate solutions, long-range causes should be remembered.

"LACK OF INCOME and a patient mix which includes too few paying patients are the two main problems faced by the teaching hospital," the man told me.

No, he wasn't talking about the Lubbock County Hospital District's Health Sciences Center Hospital, which serves the Texas Tech medical school.

He was talking about the Dallas County hospital district's Parkland Memorial Hospital, which serves the University of Texas Health Science Center medical school.

And—would you believe it?—the heated squabble in Dallas includes charges and countercharges over the role the medical school faculty should or should not play in the running of the teaching hospital.

Also, while the financial crisis at Parkland isn't to the stage it is at the HSCH in Lubbock, the management situation there is in an uproar over the forced resignation of administrator Jack Price.

A split Dallas County Commissioners Court and a split Hospital District Board of Managers are wrangling over what moves to make and what the right answers might be.

PRICE HAD BEEN the administrator at Parkland for 17 years before he was ousted by a 4-3 vote last week, the four votes coming from the four newest members of the Board of Managers.

Shortly before I talked to my anonymous source Monday afternoon, the Commissioners Court—on a 3-2 vote—had asked the Board to consider its appointment of Dr. Charles Mullins as Price's successor as only temporary while conducting a nationwide search for an experienced administrator.

Mullins is a member of the medical school faculty and, for the last couple of years, also has been on the Parkland payroll as a liaison man between the two entities.

His selection, hailed by the medical school and some influential Dallasites, has been attacked on the other hand as confirming fears that the school is attempting a management take-over of the teaching hospital.

AS EXPLAINED to me, Parkland's problems are rooted in the fact that it got a reputation for catering mostly to the medically indigent.

Patients able to pay their own way began more and more to avoid Parkland. Then, under federal guidelines, welfare and Medicare patients also began having more freedom to choose which hospital they'd like.

"If you're going to train doctors," I was told, "you've gotta teach 'em more than how to sew up knife wounds or deliver babies."

Paying patients with the diseases the student doctors need to study—and with the money the teaching hospital needs to stay in financial health—are necessary.

New Dallas hospital board chairman Ralph Rogers studied the problem firsthand while recuperating at Parkland from a heart condition.

He decided that management was at fault, according to published reports in Dallas, and made the move to force Price's resignation.

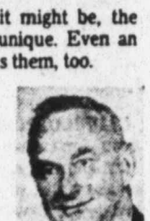
"NO EDICT OF ANY kind was given to Mr. Price. This was Mr. Price's decision after careful consideration," Rogers said after the resignation was accepted, however.

"I had people calling me all the time for a while saying they never got billed after their stay in the hospital," County Commissioner Jim Tyson, who supported the forced ouster, said, though. "In many instances, billing was three and four months late."

So, for whatever consolation it might be, the problems at HSCH here aren't unique. Even an established giant like Parkland has them, too.

Holmes Alexander:

'Decay' Eroding Soviet Society



(First of two parts)

WASHINGTON—Emmanuel Todd is something unusual among writers—he calls himself a Demographic historian.

A young Frenchman who has studied at Cambridge University and traveled in Russia, Todd is handicapped for acceptance in America by an obscure publisher (Karz, New York) but I was alerted by a Russian scholar and ran down the book at the Library of Congress.

I am very glad I did, for there is need of what the book tells as expressed in the subtitle: "An essay on the Decomposition of the Soviet Sphere."

Notice that Todd is predicting the falling apart of the "sphere" of the USSR, not the state or the society.

He sees Russia as a hidden country but one that cannot conceal the fact that its economic and social life is hidden.

RUSSIA HAS attained military dominance over the West at the cost of ruinous shortages of consumer goods, especially of grain, for which it is as dependent as the West is on imported oil.

Where Todd sees the disintegration of the Soviet sphere is in two soft spots. One is within the Soviet Union.

This vast political entity is run by bureaucrats, but they are superannuated bureaucrats whose management skills are dulled with age.

The author believes that a study of the Russian people must run parallel with a study of the Roman Empire. In a preface to this book, J. P. Revel interprets Todd as follows:

"Is the Soviet society stable? People are always talking abuot the crisis of capitalism.

"But the fact that the crisis of the Soviet system can be almost hidden from the outside world does not stop it from existing, or from producing fall-out in the non-communist systems...

"IN GENERAL, moreover, there can be only one reason why Soviet society is closed; it is aware of its own weakness and vulnerability and seeks to protect itself by self-imposed quarantine."

This internal weakness is where the rot will show, but the decay is double: breakdown within the USSR where totalitarian power imposes a bogus stability plastered over by means of terrorism; and breakdown also between the central government in Moscow and the satellite societies.

What America must expect, if Todd's analysis is valid, will be not the nuclear holocaust, but the sudden, dam-bursting flood of millions of people abruptly freed from Communist tyranny and swarming across borders.

In Todd's view the Soviet Union will have proved too much a failure to form any rapprochement with the United States.

Rather, the exchange of trade and culture will be carried on between the United States and the Third World and with the semi-democracies of Eastern Europe.

Russia's bloated military machine will have nowhere to turn except upon China. The author admits that Sino-Russian relations constitute one of the great unknowns of our century.

Whether these Communist powers will fight it out or find grounds for reconciliation is not known. But Todd's attention is fixed on Russia which he sees headed for "The Fatal Fall."

He closes his book with the confidence inherent in this title. Nothing, he writes, invalidates his prediction: "The decomposition of the Soviet continues."

Sylvia Porter:

Folks Pay Reduced Tax By Giving To Children

(First of seven columns)

NOW, NOT NEXT winter-spring, when you'll be filling out your federal income tax for 1979, is the time to act to make sure you are saving the legal maximum on your taxes for this current year.

If you wait until January-April 1980, you will be too late. All you can do then is try to hold your tax payments to the legal minimum, by taking advantage of all the obscure rules and court decisions of 1979 which are favorable to you, knowing what to do about the footnotes in the tax forms, etc.

But today, with almost 200 days left in 1979, you have time to plan a wise, tax-cutting and tax-saving strategy. You can still act until midnight Dec. 31, of course, but that's pushing far too tightly against the deadline.

It's so much sounder to plan at leisure to adopt proper procedures and to avoid common errors.

THUS, THIS SERIES of seven tax-saving columns, scheduled for mid-year. And without fear of misleading you, I'm virtually certain you'll find tax tips in these columns that you can adapt with profit in your real-life financial situation.

To begin, this is the peak season for graduations, weddings, as well as birthdays—weeks during which countless numbers of you who are parents, or even more likely grandparents, give money to the children of the family. The gifts reflect your generosity—but they also provide a family tax shelter. Here's why:

The income from the money you give will now be taxed to the children rather than to you, the adults. Since the children are almost always taxed at a lower rate than you are, there is a net tax saving to the family.

The popularity of family giving has led every state to adopt the Uniform Gift to Minors Act, which cuts to the lowest feasible level the red tape of giving securities or cash to your child.

YOU MAKE THE gift, and name yourself as custodian. For stock, you simply register the stock in your name "as custodian for son (daughter)." To make a gift of money to a minor child, all you need do is sign a form substantially as follows:

"I hereby deliver $—— to this savings institution for credit to a savings account in the said institution in the name of (custodian) as custodian for (minor) under (the state) Gifts to Minors Act."

While your child is a minor, you manage the property. You can sell and reinvest and collect income and accumulate it or apply it for the child's benefit.

When your child reaches majority (age 21 for Uniform Gift Act purposes in some states, age 18 in others), he or she gets the property outright. No trustees, guardians or courts are involved. And all the while, you're piling up tax savings.

THE FACT THAT the minor is getting income on a gift of money from you, the parent, doesn't in any way endanger the parent's dependency deduction for the child.

The child remains a dependent as long as (1) the parent contributes more than one-half the child's support, and (2) the child is under 19 or is a full-time student.

Gifts made to a minor under the Uniform Gift Act are subject to gift tax. But gifts of $3,000 or under are sheltered from tax.

In addition, your spouse also has a $3,000 annual gift tax exclusion and a unified gift and estate tax credit.

By joining together in a gift to your child (a so-called split gift), you and your spouse double the unified credit and the gift tax exclusion. As a result, by acting together, the two of you can often eliminate the tax bill on your gift.

But you may have an estate tax problem if you make a gift to your child and name yourself custodian. The IRS says that if a parent-custodian dies before the child reaches majority, the money will be considered part of the parent's estate for estate tax purposes.

YOU CAN AVOID this problem by naming someone other than yourself as custodian, Prentice-Hall points out. If the gift isn't made jointly, your spouse will do fine.

The problem arises only when the giver of the gift also is the custodian. If you're making a gift to your grandchildren, you can name one of their parents as custodian and get the same tax-saving result.

If you've already made a gift and named yourself custodian, consider naming another to take your place. In some states, this could involve a court proceeding, but it should be routine.

Tomorrow: Tax Breaks for You and Your Child on Summer Jobs.

James J. Kilpatrick:

He's Pro Business But Fed Up

SEATTLE, WASH.—American industry, by almost any yardstick, measures up as the most successful industry in the world. Old-fashioned capitalism, imaginative inventors, able executives and a productive working force have combined to give us an unmatched standard of living. Shall we have a cheer for American business?

Yeccch! I am, at the moment, fed up to the teeth with American business.

It is not just the matter of the DC-10, though the grounding of that misbegotten aircraft triggers these remarks.

Something seems to be happening in virtually every field of American enterprise—in manufacturing, in retailing, in the service occupations—and that something, whatever it may be, is not far removed from the long ago cry of "the public be damned."

The Federal Aviation Administration is catching a full load of blame for its indecisive handling of the DC-10. Fine with me. There is plenty of blame to go around.

BUT WHAT WAS the matter with the airline industry over all these years, that the airlines' own mechanics and engineers didn't perceive the pylon problem?

What was wrong at McDonnell-Douglas that this flaw went undiscovered? What else have these butterfingered fellows overlooked?

When the FAA's order came down, the airlines faced a suddenly chaotic situation. Thousands of passengers had to be rerouted. Tickets had to be rewritten.

Among the affected companies was Northwest Airlines, which does a tremendous business out of Seattle. But Northwest executives evidently felt no urgent compulsion to serve their stranded passengers.

At Seatac Airport on the Friday after the order, two exhausted counter agents—only two!—were struggling gamely with interminable lines of customers. Three counter positions were empty.

If Northwest had thrown additional agents and telephone service into the breach, it was surely not apparent to passengers who tried futilely for hours to get information.

THIS ATTITUDE is getting to be characteristic of the airlines. A few years ago, veteran air travelers would have voiced a quick consensus on the worst of the major airlines—Eastern, hands down. Now opinion is divided.

It is not that Eastern is much better; the others have gotten worse. Specific example: Trans World Airlines has a flight from Indianapolis to Washington that is supposed to leave at 7:15 a.m.

But one Friday morning last month, the crew that was to make the flight had become technically "illegal." Another crew had to be flown down from Chicago. But TWA felt no urgent desire to bring in the fresh crew by some special effort. No, indeed.

TWA, taking its own sweet time, put the crew on a routine American Airlines flight that didn't even get to Indianapolis until 8 a.m. So who cared if a hundred passengers were made an hour late? Not TWA.

The airlines are not the only offenders. My wife bought a suit from Brooks Brothers; a button popped off on the first wearing. I bought a suit from Joseph Banks; the right sleeve had been so carelessly put together that it promptly ripped loose.

WE ORDERED A turtle-shaped swimming pool float, made in Taiwan, from F.A.O. Schwartz; it arrived with a two-inch rip in a seam. We ordered some soap from Carswell-Massey, an old mail-order house in New York; they twice sent us somebody else's order, and they blamed it on their computer.

Our old reliable White Flower Farm delayed so long in sending 50 ajuga that the plants were worthless when they finally arrived. A tube of tub and tile grout, purchased at the local Peoples Drug, sprang a gusset at the first usage.

At Stouffer's Hotel in Arlington, Va., two bedroom lamps were recently unusable: Their bulbs had burned out.

Is my experience unusual? Not at all. I cannot recall a time when I have heard so many complaints, in casual conversations across the U.S., about insolent sales clerks, lazy lawyers, careless food service and malfunctioning machinery.

NO ONE WAS surprised when the Department of Transportation exposed a pattern of ripoffs in auto repair. Recalls of defective automobiles have grown routine.

The National Journal reports American businesses paid $3 billion in product liability premium costs last year—up 100 percent since 1975. It's easy to believe.

I'm ordinarily regarded as a "pro-business" spokesman, a free enterpriser to the core. But I would say to my friends in industry: This is your Dutch uncle speaking. Shape up!

So They Say...

A lady took her drinking husband to the hospital.

"How did you know he was sick?" asked the nurse.

"When he kept asking for water," said his wife, "I knew he was delirious."

Roadside Stand Way Of Life To Georgia Couple For 31 Years

CLAYTON, Ga. (AP) — Roadside stands selling everything from maps to moccasins come and go on the nation's highways. Not Carnes' Nectars of the Wild. It's been around for 31 years.

The tiny, red roadside stand, perched on old U.S. 441 on the side of Black Rock Mountain, is like many others throughout the country which sell the wares of local residents.

But Buford Carnes has made a life of the roadside fruit and vegetable business, putting four children through college and making friends from all across the United States.

Even progress — in the form of a new highway which bypasses Carnes' stand — hasn't stopped his yearly offerings of mountain haw jelly, cranberry chutney and wild gooseberry jam.

"If you don't want to get rich, this is the business to get in," the 63-year-old Carnes said in an interview.

"It's been a good life, but a hard one," he said. "But I've always liked working for myself. It's up to you. If you don't work for it, who will?"

The stand began in 1948 with Carnes growing and picking the needed ingredients and his wife, Pauline, doing the cooking on a wood stove.

The recipes for the 73 varieties of canned goods were "made up," he said. "We threw away a lot at the beginning, but we just kept at it 'til we got it right.

"We do all our own canning. That way if you have a bad jar you know who canned it."

Many of the ingredients Carnes uses are picked wild.

The wild fox jelly is made from wild muscadine berries. The wild coon jelly is made from tiny clusters of autumn grapes that grow high on the mountain.

But increased building by summer residents seeking an escape from the city has cut into Carnes' scavenging areas, he said. "The fences on the land that has been bought up keep us out, and you can't hardly find any wild blueberries any more."

In his small brick house that lies down a dirt road from his stand, Carnes and his wife do the canning and store their wares in a cold, cellar-like room.

In their best years, they can about 10,000 jars, selling them to passersby and operating a mail-order business that draws customers from all 50 states. Some regular customers have been returning for 30 years, he said.

"Mostly we've built the business by word of mouth," Carnes said. "We've met a lot of wonderful people and made a lot of friends.

"In all the time we've been selling and shipping we haven't had any bad checks and only two people have failed to pay — one was $12 and the other was $8," he said.

"The way I look at it is, if they can live with it, I can live without it," Carnes said of his errant customers. "For all I know, they could have died."

Grass To Be Studied In Underground Lab

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — It's back to the grass roots at Ohio State University where workmen are completing a $50,000 underground laboratory that scientists will use to watch grass grow.

"The most important part of the plant is the root and that's the part we know least about," said OSU agronomist Dr. Keith J. Kernock, who will be in charge of the lab. "Scientists only have a general idea now when and how much to fertilize."

Kernock said the lab, called a rhizotron, will be used to learn how much cold, heat, fertilizer, water, mowing and other practices make grass thrive.

The lab, which opens early next month, is Kernock's brainchild. He said its proper name is a rhizotron-lysimeter and it is perhaps the only one of its kind in the world because the lab is equipped to accurately measure how much water is being utilized by the lants.

Despite a plethora of pamphlets, gardening books and video advice on how to treat your lawn, Kernock said there is relatively little exact information about how turf grass develops, especially the roots.

Kernock said more detailed growth information is needed by golf course managers and groundskeepers, as well as by a few fanatical homeowners who are all part of Ohio's $300 million turf grass industry.

Kernock says $15 billion is spent on lawns each year in the United States.

He said watering and fertilization can be made to work better by knowing when and how much to put on.

The rhizotron is a space-age name, but the idea is simple. Scientists walk underground into a long hallway in the lab and observe the roots of grass growing on the surface in 30 glass-fronted compartments. The lab has time-lapse microscopic photography equipment. On the surface is a complete meteorological station used to keep tabs on wind speed, direction, rainfall, humidity and other weather factors.

Kernock said the lab will help homeowners. He said some gardners overwater their lawns and others overfertilize, especially in August when there isn't enough rainfall to support the extensive leaf growth the fertilization stimulates.

Kernock's lawn fertilization tips: apply nitrogen to your lawn in June and at the end of August at the rate of about three quarters of a pound per 1,000 square feet. Then apply 1½ pounds in October and another 1½ pounds next spring.

Same-Day Mail Delivery Set By Post Office

BALTIMORE (UPI) — For $9, the U.S. Postal Service is offering same-day delivery for letters and packages posted in the Baltimore and Washington metropolitan areas, and the service comes with a moneyback guarantee.

Postal Service spokeswoman Meg Ausman said a package or letter dropped off by 10 a.m. at 19 locations in Baltimore or 17 sites in Washington or by noon at the main post offce in downtown Baltimore will be delivered by 5 p.m. the same day.

The service carries a moneyback guarantee. The cost of delivery is $9 for an item weighing up to one pound, $12 for an item weighing one to eight pounds, and $15 for items between eight and 70 pounds.

Miss Ausman said materials dropped off by 5 p.m. will be delivered by 10 a.m. the next day. The service covers the Baltimore area, including parts of the five suburban counties, and the Washington area, including northern Virginia and Prince George's and Montgomery counties in Maryland.

The postal service will also pick up packages for delivery but at a $5 charge.

Similar express mail service will begin in Pittsburgh June 25 and Philadelphia July 2. Miss Ausman said pilot projects are now operating in three other cities.

She said the service was begun after a nationwide survey found that 75 percent of same-day deliveries were made by companies who used their own staffs to deliver the items.

She said the survey of 2,500 businesses in 22 metropolitan areas found that each group had their own people delivering about 68 items a month.

The survey also found that private, same-day messenger service was fragmentary, there was little overnight service and the cost varied from $1 to $50.

"We think it's going to save them time," she said. "We have a very large network of people. We think it will be very cost-efficient. A bank with branches around the city might want to use our service."

ZBA Scheduled To Hear EMS Special Request

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Zoning Board of Adjustment will be asked Thursday to allow Emergency Medical Services ambulances to operate from a mobile home to be located at 5012 50th St.

Doak Enabnit, acting director of EMS, will appear at the 8:15 a.m. meeting in city council chambers to ask that a special exception be granted to permit the ambulance station at the 50th Street location.

However, ZBA approval is only the first hurdle which must be cleared before the station becomes operational.

The mobile home will have to meet the building code, Zoning Administrator Jerrel Northcutt said. But which portions of the code must be met will depend on whether the mobile home will be used as a residence or an office.

If classified as a residence, since emergency medical technicians live at the station while on duty, the requirements would be less restrictive, Northcutt said.

EMS officials also will have to obtain a zone change from the present high density apartment zoning (A-2) to apartment-medical (AM).

Some opposition to the location of the ambulance station behind Lubbock County's Precinct One Club House is expected from neighbors, who claim 50th Street is noisy enough without listening to ambulance sirens at all hours of the night.

An unusual request on the ZBA agenda is that of Coy Harris, representing St. John's Parish, for a variance in height restrictions to allow an 80-foot tall windcharger to generate electricity.

However, there is a 35-foot height limit on structures in single family (R-1) zones. The charger is 16-18 feet in diameter.

The Heath Company, representing Steak and Ale at 50th Street and Utica Avenue, will ask the ZBA for a variance in height requirements on a sign at that location.

The restaurant wants the board to approve a sign which is 10 square feet larger than permitted by city regulations and a sign 10½ feet higher than allowed.

The allowable size of a sign is determined by the amount of frontage a business has, and the restaurant would need twice as much frontage to have the sign being requested.

Ellwood Keeney and Mike McPhaul will ask the board for a variance in the number of parking spaces required for a proposed restaurant at 2220 19th St. The restaurant is short about 20 parking spaces.

In a similar request, Kennett Hobbs, representing the Brittany Restaurant, will ask that the restaurant be allowed to provide part of the parking required off the development lot.

E. Reuel Nash, representing Raymond and Lelia R. Allen, will ask that additional parking for a shopping center under construction be permitted off the development lot at 20th Street and Louisville Avenue.

A request denied by the board last month is back on the agenda again. M.L. Collins, representing Double C., Inc., is seeking a special exception to allow self service gasoline pumps and a variance in the front yard setback at 8210 Hudson St.

The board was disturbed by the request, because the gas pumps would be located on the front half of the lot, effectively cutting off access and preventing future use of the back half.

But board members said they would re-evaluate the request if they received a plan on how the entire lot will be used.

Other requests on the agenda include that of:

— Burl D. Bourns, representing Luther T. Bourns, for a renewal of a special exception to allow a mobile home to be used for dwelling purposes at 3508 Avenue J.

— Martin P. James, representing Calvary Full Gospel Church, for a special exception to permit construction of a church at 1302 25th St.

— H.C. Lonis, representing Bernice Scott, for a special exception to allow a mobile home to be used for dwelling purposes at 504 81st St.

— Jason Ross for a special exception to allow a moblie home to be used for a dwelling at 1711 E. 49th St.

— Nolen O'Briant for a special exception to allow a mobile home to be used for a dwelling at 1101 E. 78 St.

— Janie C. Salinas for renewal of a special exception to allow a mobile home to be used as a dwelling at 1012 Zenith.

— Ray Chapman, representing the Association of Commercial Real Estate Brokers, Inc., for a variance in the parking requirements for an office at 1007 Broadway.

Gasoline Bomb Burns Resident Of Hub City

Four men trying to repair an engine in a pickup truck were startled by a homemade gasoline bomb thrown at them from behind a 2704 E. Ninth St. house about 10:30 p.m. Tuesday.

A 44-year-old Lubbock man, who owns the house, was burned on the feet but did not require medical treatment.

The bomb was made from a soft drink bottle with a rag wick.

A 62-year-old Lubbock furniture salesman said he was robbed of $10 at 1:50 a.m. today while he was working in a 23rd Street mini-warehouse.

The victim said he was working with some furniture when two men, both about 20 years old, approached him and asked directions to a local club.

They then reportedly told the man to hand over his wallet, which he threw on the ground.

The suspects took the money from the wallet and drove off in a blue vehicle, possibly a Ford Thunderbird, the victim said.

Police are investigating a rape reported Tuesday afternoon which a 24-year-old Lubbock woman said occurred about 2 a.m. Sunday.

The victim said she met the alleged rapist about a month ago in a Lubbock bar.

She said she went to the same bar Saturday night with a friend, where they met the suspect. She said the friend left early, and the suspect asked her to drive him to his home on 44th Street.

The woman claims the man refused to get out of her car, took her keys and raped her in the front seat of the vehicle.

She said the man kept her in the car until about 7 a.m., then gave her the keys and told her if she reported the rape to the police, he would kill her.

The woman reported the incident Tuesday to the Rape Crisis Center, which sent a representative with her to the police department.

A 52-year-old Lubbock man suffered a loss of about $4,000 in a house burglary sometime between Thursday and Tuesday.

The man discovered his 82nd Street house and barn, both vacant, burglarized and vandalized when he made a check of the property.

Missing were two refrigerators, a kitchen stove, two bedroom suites, a desk, a filing cabinet, a stable tack box and a day bed.

Windows and mirrors had been broken in both structures. A television was vandalized, the sheetrock in the house was broken out of the walls and the barn lights shattered.

Lubbock HUD Office To Be Downgraded

Lubbock's Housing and Urban Development office will be downgraded from an insuring office to a service office on July 1.

Gene Whitney, deputy director of the Lubbock HUD-FHA office, said the change is part of a nationwide reorganization of all HUD offices instituted 20 months ago by HUD Secretary Patricia Harris.

The major change in the duties of the Lubbock office relates to multifamily housing activities.

Whitney said virtually all multifamily dealings will be handled after July 1 by the Dallas Area Office. However, the Lubbock office will continue to handle multifamily mortgage servicing.

But Whitney said only five applications for multifamily units were processed in Lubbock last year, compared to the 800 to 1,000 single-family applications handled each month.

The Lubbock Service Office will continue to process single-family applications within the office's 71-county jurisdiction, issue conditional and firm commitments, endorse loans, process reconsiderations and service single-family mortgages.

Since the change has been in the works for more than a year, the conversion from insuring office to servicing office will only require about five persons to transfer from the Lubbock office.

However, the staff has gradually been reduced by about 10 employees since the announced reorganization.

Police Charge Two In Holdup

EDMONSON (Special) — Charles Blacksnake, 25, and Leavelt Tinner, 29, both of Plainview, were charged this morning with aggravated robbery in the holdup of an Edmonson food store Tuesday.

The two were apprehended about 4 p.m. Tuesday in downtown Plainview, almost an hour after the reported armed robbery of Page Food Store.

Bond was set at $25,000 for each suspect, and they remained in the Hale County Jail this morning.

Plainview police Sgt. Larry Keltz said the pair offered no resistance and no weapon was recovered.

About $639 was recovered from an auto in which the two were riding, police reports indicated.

The Edmonson store reportedly was robbed by one of the men around 2:40 p.m. One suspect "cleaned everything out of the cash register," said Hale County Chief Deputy Blake Gooch.

Just after the money was taken, one suspect was seen fleeing the store on foot and later got into a 1963 model auto occupied by a second man. The vehicle was last seen on State Highway 194.

The men, ages 25 and 29, were to appear before Justice of the Peace Glen Stone sometime Tuesday evening before being transferred to Hale County Jail.

Court Issues Tax Ruling

AUSTIN (AP) — In a decision worth millions of dollars in state revenue, the Texas Supreme Court today ruled that bank holding companies must pay franchise taxes on dividends and interest they receive from national banks in Texas.

Eight national bank holding companies had contested a 1974 ruling by Comptroller Bob Bullock that included bank income in the formula for computing their corporate franchise tax.

They sought through the suit to recover $2 million in taxes paid under protest, and the Supreme Court observed that their contention was "tantamount to a claim for exemption from the franchise tax."

Congress gave states the right to tax national banks in 1969, and the Texas Legislature passed a law in 1971 saying the congressional enactment did not mean the imposition of any new taxes on the "institutions affected."

The holding companies said this meant the state could not tax them on their banking profits.

Ormandy Stays In Hospital

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Philadelphia Orchestra Conductor Eugene Ormandy remained hospitalized today for observation and tests after suffering mild chest pains.

The 79-year-old maestro was admitted to Pennsylvania Hospital Tuesday because he had felt "uncomfortable," according to a hospital spokeswoman, who said he was "resting comfortably and doing nicely."

"His doctor admitted him and is doing a variety of tests for him," she said. "We will have a more complete statement for you (today)."

His physician, Dr. Edward Veiner, said he did not believe Ormandy had any coronary complications.

Louis Hood, spokesman for the Philadelphia Orchestra, said Ormandy has no history of heart problems.

Americans Probe Origin Of Mexican Painting

ATLANTA (AP) — Two Americans are trying to authenticate the reputed miraculous origin of Our Lady of Guadalupe, a centuries-old Mexican painting which tradition says appeared on the garment of an Aztec Indian.

The painting of the Virgin Mary is one of the most venerated and visited shrines of the Roman Catholic Church and is considered a national treasure by Mexico, which used it as a standard during its war of independence with Spain in 1810.

"What are we trying to prove? That it may be a miracle, as tradition says it is," explained Jody Smith, president of the U.S. Guadalupan Research Project.

"We can never prove that it is (a miracle), but we may progressively eliminate natural explanations — the known causes — and we may in fact wind up with the unknown," said Smith, a philosophy instructor in Pensacola, Fla.

According to tradition, the Virgin Mary appeared to Juan Diego on Dec. 9, 1531, and told him to ask a bishop to build a cathedral in her honor on a hill near Mexico City.

When the bishop demanded proof, the vision again appeared to Diego and told him to take the bishop a bunch of roses. The tradition says that when Diego opened his apron-like tilma to remove the roses, the painting appeared on the garment, which resembles a cape.

Legend aside, two factors considered peculiar about the painting are that it hasn't rotted and remains brightly colored after nearly 450 years.

Other paintings are as old, but the Guadalupe image is on a rough cactus fiber which would normally rot in about 20 years, according to Smith.

Also, the cloth is not sized, which means the holes in the fabric were not filled with a material to keep the paint from filling the pores and causing rot, Smith said in an interview in Atlanta.

Smith and Philip Callahan, a Gainesville, Fla., research biophysicist, had a four-hour, infrared-photography session with the painting at the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Mexico City in early May. They hope the photos will answer some questions about the image's origin.

The study is complicated because the image may have been applied in more than one medium — for example, oil and water-based paints — Callahan said.

Callahan said he would try to determine whether there was an underdrawing or sketch to guide the painter's strokes.

"If there wasn't an underdrawing, the picture becomes very mysterious," Callahan said.

"We are attempting to find out if it's a painting that can't be explained," Callahan said. "If it can't be explained, either you have a miracle, or you have to admit that people back in the 16th century knew something we don't."

Smith said he was acquainted with the research team investigating the Shroud of Turin, a relic which — according to tradition — was used to wrap the body of Christ.

Smith said the team, analyzing an image on the shroud which legend says is a likeness of Christ, had agreed to let him use its equipment for a computer analysis of the Guadalupe photographs.

"If with Our Lady of Guadalupe and the Shroud of Turin we may be given any indication that the world is greater than we know, certainly that would be good," Smith said.

"Although we are looking at this in a scientific and disinterested fashion," he said, "that doesn't mean that science and religion have to be kept in watertight compartments."

Panda Cub Rates As Biggest Attraction At Peking's Zoo

PEKING (UPI) — In the shade of poplar trees, watched by dozens of doting admirers, waddled China's newest sensation: the first panda ever produced through artificial insemination.

Yuan Ling, only the 11th panda to have survived birth in captivity, is an 8-month-old bouncy ball of black and white fur and the result of a unique experiment.

Peking Zoo biologists last year found their male panda in heat but their four females uninterested. They saved the male sperm and later impregnated all four females.

One became pregnant and gave birth to twins. One cub was rejected by the mother and died, despite feeding by attendants.

The other cub survived to draw throngs of admirers as she lazily drapes one leg around her swing.

"As pandas are precious and loved by people all over the world, we have tried to breed more and more of them," said zoo biologist Yeh Tse Tsung.

Pandas given by China to zoos in Londo, Paris, Tokyo and Washington have not produced offspring. When they have been able to mate, the event has been front-page news, such as the recent coupling of the Tokyo pandas.

But the Peking Zoo has been blessed with more than a dozen births since it first displayed pandas 24 years ago.

A few cubs died at birth, including six who were one of twins rejected by their mothers. Of 11 who survived birth, four died at around age 5 to 6.

Over tea in the zoo reception salon, Mrs. Yeh said China's panda successes were the result of proper diet and a choice of mates. China has many pandas.

"If one of our pandas is in heat and not the others, we can borrow a panda from zoos in Shanghaiu, Canton and Chengdu (Cheng-tu).

"Last year we decided to try artificial insemination."

"At first we did not know very much about the panda's habits and ours did not produce cubs," said the smiling, soft-spoken Mrs. Yeh.

"Later some of our staff and scientists from the Academy of Science went to the natural habitat of pandas in Sichuan (Szechwan) province, 2,000 meters (6,000 feet) above sea level in a dense forest in a temperate zone.

"Before our research, we gave them milk, eggs and rice. In the wild we discovered their main food is bamboo. We now know too much highly nutritious food gives them indigestion."

Mrs. Yeh said it is difficult to know if a panda gives birth because the cub is born very quickly and is the size of a furless mouse.

"It is so tiny that the mother can hold it in her paw and we cannot see it unless the cub cries out."

After the cub is weaned, it is fed eggs, porridge, vitamins and calcium plus a bit of bamboo. Beginning at one year it receives more bamboo.

Yuan Ling usually meets her public in her outdoor playground at the 135-acre zoo, established by Empress Ci Xi at the turn of the century and opened to the public in 1908.

The panda patio has a moat of water for summer baths, a rubber tire swing and a chute and a ladder construction atop of which the baby panda likes to snooze.

Indoors the cub, its parents and three other females sleep high up on table-like slabs.

The other day, the panda keepers prodded Yuan Ling gently with sticks to get her to climb down from her perch. At first she objected, barking like a dog, then swung coyly on the ladder.

Finally, a keeper picked her up as if she were a teddy bear and carried her down the ladder to the swing.

"We can pick her up, but carefully, as pandas can bite," said Mrs. Yeh.

Around the corner from the pandas in another open area, four smaller, red-brown animals chased each other up and down trees.

They look like a cross between a raccoon, a fox and a panda. Called "lesser pandas," they have never been exhibited outside China.

FIRST TEXAS SAVINGS HAS WHAT IT TAKES TO MAKE YOUR MONEY GROW. A GREEN THUMB.

Identifying the right financial institution for you isn't easy. They all seem pretty much the same.

But at First Texas Savings there is a difference. Because we give you something no one else can offer. Our green thumb.

It's the knack First Texas people have for making money grow. The professional ability and financial skill they can put to work for you. So your savings grow at the absolute maximum rate allowed by law.

First Texas offers a variety of savings plans, designed to meet your individual needs. A convenient Passbook account, for example, will keep your money immediately available, while it earns at the annual rate of 5.25%. For longer term investments at higher interest rates, our Savings Certificates are ideal. Both Passbook accounts and Certificates earn interest from day of deposit. And, First Texas increases your earnings with daily compounding for a higher annual yield.

If your money isn't growing where it is, come in and talk to a First Texas Savings Counselor. Because it takes more than money to make your savings grow. It takes First Texas people. And their green thumb.

Certificates of Deposit

Questions Surround Reader's Digest Sweepstakes

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — At 7:30 one morning last March, William Hogan of North Little Rock, Ark., received a telephone call from John O'Hara, the President of Reader's Digest, telling him he had won $25,000.

Hogan, said O'Hara, was the one-millionth sweepstakes winner since the Digest began the promotions in 1962. Until Hogan's name had been picked from a drum, he said, nobody knew who the winner would be.

As it turned out, the Digest probably was as lucky as Hogan, 35, his pretty wife Sheila, and their two children, a son McCall, 6, and a daughter, Kelly, 2. A nice American family from a nice American town.

But, in a way, unlucky too. The matter of credibility intrudes on the scene: was it mere chance, people were inclined to ask, that events fell into place so neatly?

"It was unreal," concedes Frank Ronnenberg, vice president and circulation director. Almost everyone, he said, thought the company had chosen a dozen candidates and then decided which would be the winner.

The credibility problem is long-term. People find it hard to believe, for example, that all prizes are awarded, that winnners are picked at random, that non-subscribers can win as easily as subscribers.

When they learn some of the other statistics their awe, and doubts, sometimes rise. A sweepstakes letter last January was sent to about 50 million households, and was guaranteed to provide 61,022 winners.

Every return is opened, said Charles Pintchman, a public affairs executive. They must be, he said, because people include letters and, inadvertently, personal items. One time $2,200 and a bank deposit slip were found and returned.

Nevertheless, a listener observed that a recent letter to the Digest drew no response. The accompanying check was cashed, but the writer was later dunned.

Analysis

Somewhat lamely, Pinchman conceded the fallibility of the Digest. Accidents happen, he said.

Each sweepstakes return goes into a barrel, he said, and each winner is drawn at random by the Reuben H. Donnelly Corp., in Mount Vernon, N.Y. He insists the process is as closely secured as a voter's ballot.

Nevertheless, the doubts. "I've never known anyone who won," is the typical complaint, even though the Digest claims that one in every 74 households has won at least a $5 prize, and that more than $15 million has been delivered to winners in the past 17 years.

Winner lists are available from the Digest, and are on file also with the states of New York and Florida. The Federal Trade Commission watches. And so, presumably, does the U.S. Postal Service.

Still, the magazine felt compelled to publish an article in 1976 that began, "Surprisingly, some misconceptions still persist ..." As with other articles of exceptional interest, the Digest has reprinted it.

Of equal interest is why the Digest involves itself in sweepstakes, which differ from lotteries mainly in that the entrant need not put up cash or its equivalent in order to win. He simply enters.

The reason is simple: it pays. Sweepstakes are tremendous promotional tools. They attract attention; they compel the recipient's undivided attention, if only for seconds. They aren't easily thrown away as junk.

"When you're sorting your mail we know we've got five seconds or less while you decide whether to chuck the envelope in the garbage," said Ronnenberg. A sweepstake envelope, he believes, is usually opened.

Because it is, and because the Digest is certain to include in the packet a return envelope, the next step — that of entering the stakes — is almost mechanical. And only a bit less so is the decision to buy.

" We believe the sweeps get people to read material describing our product, material they might not otherwise read," said Pintnhmen. They draw, he said. "They're like a brass band at a political rally."

The Digest believes sweeps provide the best use of the ad dollar, even though their postage bill for all company mailings totaled $75 million in fiscal 1978. And even though sweepstakes irritate some people.

Enough people are made happy so that the word spreads. The Hogans, whose winnings also include this coming weekend in New York at Digest expense, aren't likely not to tell their friends and neighbors.

Lawyer Does Job Despite Sight Loss

DOYLESTOWN, Pa. (UPI) — John Fiorvanti calls it blind ambition.

At 29, Fiorvanti, blind since birth, works as assistant public defender in Bucks County.

He takes notes rapidly with a metal Braille punch and tries to second-guess the inevitable problems that will come up at his first jury trial.

"There is a lot that can be missed by being blind," the handsome, impeccably tailored Fiorvanti explained in a recent interview.

"There's the appearance of the witness, the reaction of the jury. Not that I'm not excited about it. There are things I will have to compensate for, but there have been a lot of things I have had to compensate for all my life."

He was snubbed by county officials in his native Norristown, but in March, Fiorvanti met Bucks County Public Defender John McClure who scoffed at the idea that a law career "might be too difficult."

McClure said his newest public defender is "doing as good a job as anyone."

He estimated Fiorvanti will work his first jury trial in August or September, following the same schedule McClure uses for all his assistants, and he anticipates no problems.

Fiorvanti came to law by way of his restlessness as a pyschology major at Ursinus College in Collegeville, Pa. "I needed more of a challenge, so I went to law school," he said.

A cousin with a somewhat raw sense of humor, his parents and fraternity brothers at Temple University Law School in Philadelphia knocked any sense of dependence out of Fiorvanti.

"My parents showed no mercy. I cleaned the house, changed tires and got yelled at when my clothing didn't match," he said. "And my cousin — well, you might consider the things he did cruel and unusual punishment. I wonder myself how his mind works sometimes."

His cousin, who Fiorvanti says will remain nameless, cajoled him when they were both teen-agers into trying a dive from a bridge near his home, without mentioning the bridge was 30 feet high.

"I jumped and after an unusually long time hit the water. I heard my cousin laughing. With the facial perception blind people develop, I sensed something nearby. I reached out and realized I missed a rowboat by less than a foot."

That was nothing compared to Fiorvanti's college days.

"I used to travel all over, sometimes a little too drunk to move right. I can remember almost falling off the 69th Street elevated station in Philadelphia, and that's about a 20-foot drop."

These days his assistant, Kimli Day, drives Fiorvanti to his law office, because Bucks County has a fragmented public transport system.

As he talks, Fiorvanti, who was born with a scarred optic nerve, shifts his sightless brown eyes to the floor, then to the ceiling.

Are there advantages to being blind?

"Yes, but if I tell you, I might not be able to get away with them anymore," he says with a laugh.

Fishermen Return To Oil Slick Area

CIUDAD DEL CARMEN, Mexico (AP) — Fishermen have returned to 12 of the 45 square miles closed by pollution from the runaway oil well in the southern part of the Gulf of Mexico after tides and chemicals dispersed the oil in that area.

The well, a test hole 50 miles off the coast, has been pouring an estimated 1.26 million gallons of light crude oil into the gulf daily since it caught fire June 3. Pemex, aided by Norwegian experts, surrounded the oil slick with flotation beams so it could be pumped into tankers.

Tides and currents have taken the oil due west, toward Veracruz and away from the fishing area that produces $100 million worth of shrimp a year.

Two angular relief wells are being drilled to try to cut off the flow of oil and gas but that could take three months. Specialists are also trying to determine of blowout prevention valves in the well pipe can be repaired and activated.

Alcohol Big Issue In Beirut

By RICHARD SISK

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — It began sometime in early May when shopkeepers arriving for work in Moslem West Beirut found ominous handwritten messages under their doors.

The notes warned against the sale of beer, wine and liquor, and were signed "The Hawwa Movement," a previously unheard-of group preaching a brand of vigilante Islam that viewed the consumption of alcohol as a defiance of God's will.

"Because alcohol is harmful, God has prohibited it and everyone who trades in it cannot but be considered a corrupt member of society", the notes said. "You, our brother, are fighting God by doing what you are doing. So preserve yourself and your shop by obeying this order".

The notes ordered the shopkeepers to dispose of their liquor and concluded, "The time is short and watchful eyes are upon you. Do not take this matter as a joke."

A few days later, a number of restaurants catering to the Lebanese love of arak, the pungent local brew, posted sign on their windows. "We apologize to our customers," the signs read. "We do not offer any liquor."

Police sources said two beer distributorships in the southern port of Sidon had been destroyed by explosions. At least two stores in Beirut selling liquor also were bombed.

Beer and wine disappeared from the shelves of many groceries. A backdoor business in liquor continued but only regular customers were served.

Some storeowners speculated that militant Shiite Moslem women, encouraged by the example of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in Iran, may have distributed the warnings. "Hawwa" is Arabic for "Eve."

Perhaps as a result, rumors spread in Beirut that Islamic zealots also had launched a campaign against women "dressed as as prostitutes."

The Voice of Lebanon radio, an organ of the Phalange Party in Christian East Beirut, picked up on the rumors and broadcast reports that girls on the beaches of West Beirut had been attacked with acid. The radio reports could not be confirmed.

However, students at Beirut University college said there was a bombing incident at a campus dance on June 2. They said two men tried to enter without tickets and shouted at campus guards who stopped them, "You won't let us in because there are women dressed as prostitutes inside."

Later that night, two sticks of dynamite were hurled at the girl's dormitory, the students said. No injuries were reported.

News of the incidents attributed to the "committee of Eve", as it has come to be known, have filtered quickly through Lebanon's well-developed grapevine and their impact has been felt.

In Sidon, schoolgirls said they were staying away from the beaches. In Beirut, where a John Travolta T-shirt and tight jeans is as much the youth uniform as it is in New York, there was a noticeable trend toward long skirts and long-sleeved dresses.

Earlier this month, Shiite leaders and Moslem leftists denied any connections to the Islamic militants and denounced the anti-liquor campaign.

The National Movement, an umbrella group linking the leftists and the Palestine Liberation Organization, issued a statement urging citizens "to confront the aggressive acts which many suspect is being taken against individuals and property on the pretext of religious ethics".

EconomicBoom Continues In West Germany

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — West Germany's vigorous economic boom continued in the first four months of 1979, with those indicators already published for May confirming the trend, Deutsche Bundesbank said Tuesday in its monthly report for June.

At the same time, the West German central bank warned that the economic boom was accompanied by the threat of inflation and could run into bottlenecks on the labor market as the declining unemployment rate left certain skilled job openings unfilled.

According to the Bundesbank, the strongest indicator of a vigorous economy over the past few months has been investment in capital goods by industry. Deliveries of capital goods were up 14 percent in money terms and 11 percent by volume in the first quarter of this year compared to 1978, the bank said.

Seasonally adjusted, capital goods investment increased 3 percent in the first quarter of 1979 over what the Bundesbank called "the already high level" of the last quarter of 1978. The central bank's monthly report predicted a continuing high level of investment for the rest of the year.

The Bundesbank also cited the boom in the construction industry as a sign of continuing high investment by the private sector. Incoming orders to the construction industry in the first quarter of 1979 were 29 percent higher than in the year-earlier period.

The Bundesbank cited the decline in the unemployment rate to a seasonally adjusted 3.4 percent in May, down from 3.8 percent in April, as another indicator of an expanding economy. But at the same time, the central bank cited federal labor office statistics indicating that the labor market faced bttlenecks and shortages of skilled workers in a number of fields.

Turning to troubling aspects of the economic situation, the Bundesbank's June report expresses deep concern about the rising inflation rate and worry that monetary statistics don't yet show a slowing of expansion of the money supply, particularly through credit.

Acknowledging that oil price rises outside the control of German authorities had contributed to some sharp price rises, the Bundesbank points out that consumer prices not counting oil and oil products rose a seasonally-adjusted 3.5 percent in the year to date, compared to 2 percent for the like period in 1978.

Sculpture Donated To LA Museum

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The sculpture "Linear Construction in Space" by Naum Gabo has been given to the Los Angeles County Museum of Art by trustee Anna Bing Arnold.

"This sculpture," says Stephanie Barron, associate curator of modern art, "is a fully realized and extremely characteristic construction by Gabo. Together with Duchamp Villon's 'Large Horse,' also a gift of Mrs. Arnold, Matisse's 'Five Heads of Jeannette,' and Picasso's 'Head of a Woman,' it significantly adds to the museum's collection of 20th century sculpture."

Wealth Helps Win Senate Seats

By IRA R. ALLEN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Freshman Sen. John Warner, R-Va., is not generally thought of as one of the Senate's political or intellectual heavyweights. But he is rich.

The one assessment of his talents that may remain beyond his term of service was coined by "Doonesbury" cartoonist Garry Trudeau who said he "lucked, married and bought his way" into the Senate.

It was a reference to Warner's getting a chance at the GOP nomination because of the death of the original nominee, his famous wife (Elizabeth Taylor) and his millions of dollars — many of which came from his previous wife, banking heiress Catherine Mellon.)

Whatever merit Warner will yet show as a senator, the circumstances of his arrival point out the truth of Doonesbury's caustic commentary. Many of Warner's colleagues were helped to their position of high visibility and power by marrying right or being the sons or daughter of famous and wealthy parents.

According to financial records already made public, the Senate has at least 23 and as many as 38 millionaires among its 100 members. And about a dozen of them, including Ted Kennedy, H.J. Heinz and John Danforth, are multimillionaires simply by virtue of their name.

Washington Window

Money and name seem to go hand in hand, even among those not so fabulusly wealthy.

Consider these famous Senate names — Ted Kennedy, Russell Long, Herman Talmadge, Adlai Stevenson, Howard Baker, Harry Byrd, Alan Simpson and Nancy Landon Kassebaum.

They each had a famous father, mother or brother precede them in national political life, and all but Simpson and Baker are certifiable millionaires — and they are not far from being one.

Kennedy's heritage needs no explanation. Harry Byrd took over the Virginia seat held by his father, whose fortune was in apple orchards and newspapers. Danforth has as much as $17 million or so because his ancestors had the foresight to found the Ralston-Purina Co. Heinz, worth as much as $20 million, has the good luck of looking at his name on ketchup bottles in the Senate restaurant and millions of other tables around the world.

Mrs. Kassebaum has wealth of between $2.7 million and $4.1 million, mostly in broadcasting interests from both her father — 1936 GOP presidential nominee Alf Landon — and her former husband.

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., is worth between $1.1 million and $4.6 million, mostly in old family trusts. SQEN. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., may be worth as much as $8 million, much of it in old-line family wealth from his side and his wife's. They are from Newport, R.I.

Sen. Thomas Eagleton was left the bulk of his $1 million to $2.3 million fortune by his mother, whose family owned the Missouri Pipe Fittings Co.

Sen. Barry Goldwater is worth between $1 million and $1.9 million — conservatively estimated, of course — and his family wealth came from the Phoenix clothing stores bearing his grandfather's name.

Sen. Sam Hayakawa is not poor after a long life as an educator, author and real estate investor, but the bulk of his household money comes from his wife's inherited newspaper stocks.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey was a struggling young airline pilot when he ran for the Senate. During the campaign he married an aide and her blue chip stocks worth up to $1 million or so.

To be sure, it takes some political acumen to reach the Senate, but often it's a matter of accumulating the money first.

Carter Sees U.S.-Soviet Competition

By JIM ANDERSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter remains convinced that the Soviet Union and the United States will be global competitors for the foreseeabe future — in Africa, in Europe and now in Latin America.

But in his address to a joint session of Congress Carter saw that rivalry as a reason to reinforce the idea of a strategic arms accord, so the competiton can continue without escalating into an exchange of nuclear threats.

Analysis

The speech was in neat compartments:

—He argued it is necessary to cooperate with the Soviets in strategic weapons because it is not possible to cooperate with them in other areas.

—He called the signed SALT II treaty "the most detailed, far-reaching, comprehensive treaty in the history of arms control."

—He served notice he would take that case directly to the public, selling SALT II "throughout the nation." There was a hint of a warning to Senate opponents in that notice — that he would make the debate a kind of national Town Meeting on the question of dealing rationally with the Soviet Union.

Those with long memories were reminded of Woodrow Wilson's whistle-stop tour of the United States in 1919 to sell U.S. membership in the League of Nations directly to the people, despite powerful opposition in the Senate.

That trip didn't work, but Wilson didn't have the near universal exposure on television and radio enjoyed by modern presidents.

The president appeared somewhat sobered by the clear disagreements that remain between the Soviets and the United States, especially in the Third World.

He specifically mentioned he had made it clear to President Brezhnev that Cuban military activities in Africa — sponsored, supported and possibly directed by the Soviet Union — will have a poisonous effect on U.S. Soviet relations.

"We will compete where and when we must," he said. "We know how determined the Soviet leaders are to secure their interest. We are equally determined to protect and to advance our own."

That evoked another presidential memory: a shaken John F. Kennedy returning from his 1961 Vienna summit with Nikita Khrushchev, where the Soviet leader warned the new American president the western powers would have to leave West Berlin.

Carter sees the U.S. Soviet rivalry as a compelling reason to have an accord limiting nuclear arms.

But in his audience there were senators who took the same set of facts and reached the opposite concluson: since the United States can't trust the Soviets in Africa, then how can it trust the Soviets in the infinitely more dangerous world of strategic weapons?

U.S. Rights Extended For Use Of Air Base

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance exchanged notes with the Portuguese government extending until Feb. 4, 1983, U.S. rights to use the strategically-located Lajes Air Base in the mid-Atlantic Azores island chain.

The United States has been using the base for 28 years, and this is the fifth extension. For it, the United States will contribute $140 million in assistance, including $80 million for economic and social development in the Azores and $60 million for military hardware and services.

Carter Heading For Showdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is heading for a foreign policy showdown with the House over his Panama Canal treaties amid predictions from leaders that he may get bloodied.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said he thinks the House will pass some sort of bill tonight to carry out Carter's treaties turning the canal over to Panama.

But O'Neill and other leaders say opponents may be able to tack on amendments that, according to Carter's backers, would wreck the treaty.

Opponents — accusing Carter of giving away the canal and Panama of promoting revolution in South America — say they have the clout to kill the bill entirely.

"I very strongly predict to you that that bill will be defeated," Rep. Carroll Hubbard, D-Ky., chairman of the subcommittee that drafted the bill, predicted before the vote.

"That would be a disaster," said O'Neill.

Carter, lobbying dozens of congressmen at the White House, has already told them he'll take what he can get from the House and hope to patch the bill back together in the Senate.

The bill would carry out treaties turning the canal over to Panama Oct. 1, but providing that a U.S.-controlled commission run it until Dec. 31, 1999.

Primarily, the bill would set up the commission. But it also would set out pay and working conditions to keep skilled American employees running the canal, and legislate scores of other details.

A major amendment being proposed by opponents is one by Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, that would require Panama to agree to pay some $870 million in U.S. costs of carrying out the treaties.

Hansen calls it "The Honesty Amendment" because the State Department at first told the Senate the treaties would not cost U.S. taxpayers a dime and now estimates that cost may go to $870 million.

The U.S. costs are primarily for moving American military facilities out of what is becoming Panama's canal zone.

But Rep. David Bowen, D-Miss., a leading supporter of the bill, said Hansen's amendment "would wreck the whole concept and give Panama the canal this year."

Panama could declare the treaties broken, take over the canal immediately and order the last 10,000 U.S. troops guarding the canal out of the country, Bowen said.

Bowen said House Democratic Leader Jim Wright is correct in accusing many House opponents of spinelessly voting against the bill only because they think voters back home "have the illusion that if we defeat this bill, we'll get the canal back."

But a leading opponent, Rep. Robert Bauman, R-Md., said neither the public nor the opposition has any illusions about keeping the canal.

Further, opponents won hearings two weeks ago that produced evidence the Panamanian government has indirectly aided Sandinista guerrillas fighting to overthrow President Anastasio Somoza's government in Nicaragua.

U.S. officials said that is because Panama, like other countries in South America, opposes Somoza and not because it supports Marxist guerrillas.

Committee Wants Kissinger To Testify About SALT II

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee says it wants to hear from Henry Kissinger, but not Richard Nixon or Gerald Ford, during its televised hearings on SALT II.

Negotiations for the new strategic arms limitation treaty with the Soviet Union started under former President Nixon, continued under former President Ford and culminated in the signing of a treaty by President Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

Committee staff aides said it had been recommended that the two former presidents be called to testify.

But Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, the committee chairman, said most members felt that, because neither Nixon or Ford are familiar with the exact terms of the present treaty, they have little to add.

"It was decided the principal impact former presidents would have would be political in character and that we should concentrate on the terms of the treaty," Church told reporters.

Senate sources, who requested anonymity, said some Republican senators feared political embarrassment if Nixon appeared at a public hearing. His testimony could have come near the fifth anniversary of his resignation in the midst of the Watergate scandal.

Church says he expects one or all of the networks to televise the opening sessions of the committee hearings.

While the committee will not call Nixon or Ford, it does expect to hear from Kissinger, a principal architect of the SALT negotiating process during his tenure as national security adviser and secretary of state under Nixon and Ford.

Others to be called include former defense officials, present defense, diplomatic and intelligence officials, and current and retired military officers.

Church said the committee will open hearings July 9 with testimony from Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Secretary of Defense Harold Brown.

The committee is aiming at publishing its final report by Sept. 25.

In a related development, a Senate source who asked not to be named predicted Tuesday the Joint Chiefs of Staff will support the SALT II pact despite their misgivings. "The chiefs are going to support it," said the source. "The alternative is to resign. But I don't think they like it."

WASHINGTON

OAS Meeting To Seek Nicaraguan Solution

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Prompted by the United States, hemispheric foreign ministers meet in Washington Thureday to seek a political solution that would stop the bloodshed in Nicaragua's civil war.

A Dominican Republic-style collective military intervention by inter-American peacekeeping forces was ruled out Tuesday by the State Department, which stressed the need for a "peaceful political solution."

At least a dozen hemispheric foreign ministers were expected for the Organization of American States meeting at U.S. request.

It could result in a call on the Nicaraguan combatants for a cease-fire, and may also include a proposal for sending a high-level multi-nation peace mission to the area.

Based on earlier statements by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, the State Department also hopes the OAS ministers will call for an end to all foreign arms shipments to Nicaragua, both to the Anastasio Somoza regime and the Sandinista guerrillas.

But the OAS is expected to stop short of advocating any measures that could be interpreted as direct intervention in Nicaragua's internal affairs, particularly in the form of a military force as happened in the Dominican Republic in 1965.

"Our immediate concern," said State Department spokeswoman Jill Schuker Tuesday, "is to focus on the OAS meeting and to have a peaceful political solution within Nicaragua."

Asked whether Washington would favor collective hemispheric military intervention if OAS-sponsored peace efforts fail, she replied: "I have really nothing for you on any kind of military role that we would visualize at all."

In other developments Tuesday:

—Miss Schuker again indicated Washington's implicit recognition of the Sandinista movement as part of the anti-Somoza bloc: "We believe the political problem in Nicaragua has to be resolved through the establishment of a broad-based representative government," she said, "and those who are part of the announced provisional government clearly would play a role in developing the eventual political solution."

—Miss Schuker said U.S. evacuation flights for the first time used Managua's Las Mercedes International Airport. Earlier flights had used an airstrip on Somoza's country residence.

Watson Kind Of Envoy Kremlin Wants

By HARRY DUNPHY

MOSCOW (AP) — Businessman Thomas J. Watson Jr., President Carter's reported choice to be the next U.S. ambassador to Moscow, would be just the kind of foreign envoy the Kremlin wants, Western diplomatic analysts say.

The Soviet leaders are uncomfortable with specialists who speak Russian and have some familiarity with the country and its government through previous assignments or training, Western envoys said. Watson, the former head of IBM, is neither a Russian-speaking expert on the Soviet Union nor a professional diplomat with years of experience at dealing with foreign governments.

The Russians prefer to conduct their negotiations with foreign governments through their ambassadors abroad rather than by talking with the envoys accredited to them. They want to keep foreign ambassadors at a distance because this enables them to maintain their secretive way of operating.

"If they allowed ambassadors to perform their duties as they do elsewhere, the Soviets would have to open up their society because we'd insist on access to the people who hold the real levers of power," one Western ambassador said.

As a result, many ambassadors find the Moscow assignment one of the most difficult and frustrating of their careers. Their work is limited to reporting what is in the official press, exchanging speculation with colleagues, opening trade exhibitions and giving and going to cocktail parties and dinners.

"I've been here nearly four years and in that time I've had talks with (Foreign Minister Andrei A.) Gromyko once," a European ambassador complained. "The Soviet ambassador to my country has access to all levels of government."

Many ambassadors here believe their governments are wrong to accept the Soviet way of doing diplomatic business because there is a risk Moscow's ambassadors may misunderstand what they are told. But the Western governments go along in the interest of expediency.

The strategic arms limitation treaty Carter and President Leonid Brezhnev signed in Vienna Monday is a case in point. The final obstacles to the agreement were overcome during nearly 30 meetings starting last January between Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and the Soviet ambassador in Washington, Anatoly Dobrynin.

Vance has said he decided he had a better chance to clear up these issues with Dobrynin, who has been a trusted conduit between Washington and Moscow since the Cuban missile crisis in 1962. But this diminished the role of the U.S. ambassador in Moscow, Malcolm Toon, and the position of his successor.

Toon, who is retiring this summer, is a career diplomat as every U.S. ambassador here has been for 27 years, since George Kennan in 1952. He speaks Russian, has been ambassador to two other Soviet Bloc countries and had two previous assignments in Moscow at a lower level.

He has been part of the U.S. SALT negotiating team for the past two years and had made some progress in getting access to Brezhnev, Gromyko and some other Politburo members. "But the way things have been going since the beginning of the year, the United States doesn't need an ambassador here at all," one of his intimates quipped.

Toon believes ambassadors drawn from outside the Foreign Service mean a useful infusion of new blood. But he also believes the Moscow post should be reserved for professionals, and Soviet specialists.

In an interview last year he said: "I feel strongly that the ambassador here ought to be able to communicate with the local people and Soviet officials. And this means he should have a knowledge of the language."

Program Would Supply Areas With Vehicles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration proposes to rearrange federal programs to provide $2.7 billion worth of improved public transportation in rural areas of the nation.

Although the plan announced Tuesday would not allocate additional money, it envisions supplying hundreds of surplus federal vehicles to local governments for staffing by volunteer drivers.

The program also would divert more federal money to aid commuter airlines and small airports.

In all, the plan calls for spending up to $2.7 billion on rural transportation that otherwise would not have been spent for that purpose.

Lawrence D. Gilson, a presidential assistant, said it will combine grants, loans and loan guarantees already offered. "What we're talking about is better packaging," he said.

Jack Watson, Carter's secretary to the Cabinet, said 2.1 million persons living in rural areas commute at least 30 miles each way to their jobs in cities.

"If we would move a significant percentage of these folks into van-pooling, it would make enormously good sense," he said.

Watson said the General Services Administration and Defense Department will make available hundreds of vehicles "at very low cost" to operators of rural van pools.

He added that the Department of Energy has agreed to insure that cooperating groups registered with state energy agencies "will receive 100 percent of their required gasoline" during shortages.

The program also calls for:

—Providing 1,500 workers under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act to work as drivers, mechanics and dispatchers in rural transportation programs.

—An agreement by the Agriculture and Commerce departments to redirect an unspecified amount of existing federal aid to "rehabilitation of railroad branch lines and to support shippers on these lines."

KIDS-ONLY CLUB

Sports Card Experts Answer Questions

By SHARI LEWIS

A few weeks ago I did a Kids-Only Club column on sports card collecting. This week my mailbag is full of question from kids who have the beginnings of one of these bubble gum card collections, and want to know what to do next.

Rather than become an instant expert, I talked to four dealers. Here are their answers to your questions:

1 — "The old pictures of some athletes are selling for more than others. Which are really worth looking for?" Well, baseball star Roberto Clemente was killed in a plane crash, so his picture only appeared for a limited number of years. A 1955 Roberto Clemente is now worth $12-$14. Sandy Koufax, Mickey Mantle and Ted Williams are worth searching for, too.

2 — "How can I get the cards I'm missing from my sets?" To get individual cards, order by mail from hobby dealers. One is Reneta Galasso, Inc., 1170 75th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11228. Another is Goldfaden, P.O. Box 48677, Bicentennial Station, Los Angeles, Calif. 90048.

Of course, you can buy sets of bubble gum cards in candy stores, supermarkets and many other places where kids shop for gum and candy or you can order the sets direct from Topps Chewing Gum Inc., 254 36th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11232.

Cards turn up in antique shops, swap meets and flea markets. But garage sales are the best source. Parents often don't recognize the value of the childhood treasures their grown-up kids have left behind, and it's not hard to find valuable 10-year-old cards almost being given away in people's back yards.

Don't forget to question older brothers and cousins. Some young people feel that they are "too old" to collect, and want to get rid of all signs of being a kid. If you are a smart kid, you can put together these discards into a terrific collection.

YESTERDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: Get nine toothpicks or cotton swabs or blades of grass, and try this one: Put your sticks into this pattern. Now without breaking or bending them, can you rearrange the sticks so that you end up with three squares? Don't add any — just work with the original nine sticks.

ANSWER: (See illustration.)

TODAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: I'll bet you can't properly write eleven thousand eleven hundred and eleven the first time. (Look for the answer in tomorrow's Kids-Only Club column.)

(Mail to Shari should be addressed Kids-Only Club, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1111, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053.)

Dentist Turns Caboose Into Waiting Room

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — When it comes to taking the sting out of a trip to the dentist's office, Dr. John B. Ryan feels he's on the right track.

Youngsters just don't like to feel they've been taken for a ride in a sterile, white-walled dentist's office, he says.

"Every time I ever walked into a doctor's or dentist's office, I felt like I was walking into an autoclave. It was a joke," the Spokane Valley children's dentist said.

It was this train of thought and a lifelong interest in railroading that prompted Ryan to lay some track outside his office, buy a caboose, remove a couple of wheels, attach it to his dental building and turn it into a wating room.

"I like to do things that are different. I get a bigger kick out of this than the kids.I feel like I'm practicng in heaven."

Bells, sirens, whistles, tools and lanterns line the walls of the caboose. A pot-bellied stove, used on a Union Army train during the Civil war, sits in a corner under a cluster of pressure gauges.

"I played with toy trains as a kid, there's nothing like getting into the real thing," the dentist said.

For Ryan, buying and converting railroad cars is easy compared to the job of collecting gadgetry to decorate them.

He scoured flea markets and antique shops all over the Pacific Northwest in attempts to furnish his caboose. Most collectors of railroad memorabilia are reluctant to part with their holdings.

The metal plates hanging on one wall of the caboose are "builder's plates. They are sort of like a locomotive's birth certificate. The plates are put on just before the locomotive leaves the factory.

"These are called peanut whistles," he said, tapping one of several whistles. "With these, the engineer could communicate with his firemen."

Like most of Ryan's paraphernalia, the whistles don't just hang on the wall. They toot. Ryan has them hooked up to an air compressor which works much like steam power in a locomotive.

"This is all tremendously satisfying," Ryan said. "I really enjoyed restoring the caboose and getting together all of the equipment."

Ryan has two additional cabooses parked on a 180-foot piece of track outside his office. He plans to sell one, bring in a Pullman he's got stored in Hillyard, and buy a locomotive. The three-car train will then become his new dental office.

Professor Aids Foreign Students

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Although Arthur H. Tichenor Jr. works at a large Midwestern university, much of his job is dictated by international events.

Tichenor has been foreign student adviser at Purdue University since 1951, when he came from the University of California at Berkeley where he was assistant director of the International House.

Since then he has counseled several thousand students through their academic lives here, with problems ranging from homesickness to showing a student's wife how to do the laundry. Approximately 1,100 foreign students from 90 countries attend Purdue.

Tichenor maintains close contact with a foreign student from the time inquiries are made concerning Purdue until the student graduates. Some 8,000 requests for information and admission are received annually from foreign countries, with about 400 new students coming to the campus each year.

"There's a tremendous amount of very personal conversation done in this office — counseling or ventilating as some people would call it," Tichenor says of his job.

"The tension is so much at times that a student will just have to come in here and let it all fall out. The emotional pressures are terrific."

The counselor sees a large part of his role as being a pressure valve for the foreign students.

"We want to get them in here before they reach the breaking point," he says. "These people are brilliant and impatient. They tend to lose perspective and try to do too much too fast. The disappointment is overwhelming."

The foreign students are thousands of miles away from home but they are still deeply affected by events in their own countries, by recent developments in Iran and the Arab world, for example, Tichenor says.

He adds that he is often viewed with "a very unhealthy respect" by some of the freshman foreign students arriving on the campus.

"They're scared to death when they first come in," he says.

Tichenor has helped initiate several local and campus programs designed to make the foreign student feel more at home. One involves a luncheon at a nearby church the day of commencement. Adults from the community mingle with the students, congratulating the new graduates on their accomplishments.

"It's pretty hollow getting a diploma unless you have someone to share the joy with," he points out. "It's a little bit of public recognition for the students."

Tichener, who has traveled to some 45 countries, speaks Spanish, German and French fluently. Most of the students who come into his office have a good command of English.

Over the miles and years of international travel he has collected numerous souvenirs and mementos, many of which, he says, are gathering dust in the attic.

"I'm not a museum person," he says. "The things I get more satisfaction out of are the cards and letters from former students at Christmas and New Year's. That to me is one of the signs of someone's having had a pleasant experience here."

Cabinet Officials Earning Less

LONDON (AP) — More than 900 civil servants earn more than the Cabinet ministers in charge of them, Britain's civil service chief says.

British Cabinet ministers earn the equivalent of $30,030 a year, while 928 civil servants are being paid more than that, Civil Service Minister of State Paul Channon said last week. Channon holds the rank of junior minister and is paid the equivalent of $17,325.

John Wayne Leaves Large Estate

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A probate hearing has been scheduled for July 10 on actor John Wayne's $6.85 million estate, which excludes his third wife and a son-in-law.

According to a 27-page will filed Tuesday in Orange County Superior Court, the legendary film veteran's estate includes $1 million in real property, $5.75 million in personal property and $100,000 in income from his holdings.

Wayne died June 11 of cancer.

The actor's atttorney, John S. Warren, noted that although Wayne's wife, Pilar, was not included in the will, she was provided for in a 1973 separation agreement.

In addition to Mrs. Wayne, Donald La Cava, the husband of the actor's eldest daughter, Toni, was excluded from the will. La Cava also will be unable to collect his wife's portion upon her death, Warren said.

Warren declined to say why Wayne made that provision.

The will provides for a special bequest to his two children under 18, in the amount of $5,000 multiplied by the difference between 21 and the child's age at Wayne's death. This provision applies to John Ethan, 17, who will get $20,000, and Marisa, 13, who will receive $40,000.

Also, when Wayne's three youngest children — John Ethan, Marisa and 23-year-old Aissa — reach age 30, they will receive one-half the principal in their trusts, then at age 35 they'll get the remainder. It was not known how much was in each trust.

Wayne has four children over age 35. They are Michael, 44; Toni, 43; Patrick, 42, and Melinda, 41.

Each of those four was bequeathed a trust sum, which will go to the qualified spouse upon death. The only exception was that the trustees continue to administer Toni's share, which will go to her children after she dies and they reach age 21.

Wayne also left $10,000 to former secretary Mary St. John, and $30,000 to Pat Stacy, his secretary at the time of his death.

All of Wayne's art objects — paintings, sculptures, and American Indian artifacts — were given to organizations that can provide his estate with tax deductions.

The remainder of Wayne's estate will be placed into trust accounts, one of which will provide his first wife, Josephine, with monthly checks of $3,000 for life. Upon her death, the funds will be divided among her four children by Wayne.

Wayne's second wife, Esperanza, died soon after their divorce in 1953.

Lewis Johnson, Wayne's Arizona ranch partner, also is a trustee of the estate. The ranch is included in Wayne's personal property. Other major land holdings include his Newport Harbor home and property on Puget Sound in Washington.

Wayne bequeathed preferred stock in his movie production company, "Batjac" Productions Inc., to his eldest son, Michael, the third named administrator of the estate.

Court Delays Settlement

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli Supreme Court today ordered work stopped temporarily on a controversial new settlement in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and gave the government 30 days to justify the project, Israel Radio reported.

The government had seized about 200 acres of Arab-owned land for the Elon Moreh project near the city of Nablus and the landowners sued in the Supreme Court, charging the government with not providing advance notice the land would be taken.

The radio said that the three-justice panel was critical of the government's seizure of the private land. According to a spokesman for the Ministry of Justice, Prime Minister Menachem Begin will have to present the government's case for building the settlement.

The settlement was approved June 3 by the Cabinet, which split on the issue and the settlers started moving in to prefabricated homes that were quickly erected. The United States, Egypt and other countries protested establishing a settlement at a time when talks are in progress on autonomy for the Palestinian Arabs in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Begin has defended his government's settlement policy, claiming it is a Jewish right to settle in the Biblical land of Israel, which includes the West Bank.

Begin recently answered critics of the new settlement with the promise that there would be "many more Elon Morehs."

The court ordered that a security fence be set up around the existing structures at Elon Moreh and that no more settlers should be allowed into the complex.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, meanwhile, published a note in which he said Israel "totally rejects" European Common Market criticism of its settlement policy.

On Monday the Common Market members issued a statement that said the nine nations "consider in particular that certain positions or declarations of the Israeli government represent obstacles in the search for a global settlement," and called the settlements in occupied lands "illegal according to international law."

Earlier today, Israeli and Palestinian gunners traded rocket and artillery fire across the Israeli-Lebanese border for the second day in a row, the Israeli military command said.

Israel Radio reported that Soviet-made Katyusha rockets hit Israeli settlements in northern Galilee, damaging buildings but causing no injuries. Residents went to underground shelters, the radio said.

The command claimed, as it did on Tuesday, the Palestinians fired first.

The Palestine Liberation Organization confirmed that its positions were attacked, but said nothing of the Israeli claim that PLO artillery had fired on northern Israel.

The guerrilla communique called the Israeli attack a "massive barrage" that was aimed at positions stretching from the Mediterranean coast to 40 miles inland. The guerrillas did not mention casualties.

The shelling today and Tuesday followed an Israeli air attack on Palestinian positions in southwest Lebanon Monday. Beirut radio claimed the 40-minute bombing raid near the Lebanese port of Tyre klled or injured at least 10 persons.

Israel confirmed the attack but gave no reason for it. It was the first air attack on Palestinian positions in 10 days. Several months ago the Israeli government announced a policy of attacking Palestinian targets whenever it chose to.

LULL IN BATTLE — A Sandinista guerrilla relaxes near an escape tunnel during a lull in the battle for Leon, the second-largest city in Nicaragua. The leftist rebels gained control of Leon after a week of fierce fighting, although some pockets of resistance remain. The government said it will not try to retake the city until Managua is cleared. Somoza Presses Attack On Rebels In Managua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Anastasio Somoza's national guard attacked Sandinista guerrillas in the slums of eastern Managua today in a drive to clear the rebels from the capital.

"It's going very well for us," said a high-ranking government source. "We expect to finish the operation in Managua today."

The sounds of rocket, machine-gun and mortar fire mixed with heavy explosions through the nigt. The government source said convoys of troop reinforcements left the infantry training school at intervals through the night.

Smoke rose from the barrios on the east side of the city, which the guerrillas had controlled for more than a week.

The rebels of the Sandinista National Liberation Front appeared to have left or been driven out of the western half of the city, but were fighting from barricaded positions on the other side of Managua.

The rebels' clandestine Radio Sandino said an attack was imminent on Somoza's heavily fortified headquarters, known as the Bunker, inside the infantry training school. But reliable sources said some guerrillas were pulling out of the capital and possibly heading for Rivas, 30 miles north of the Costa Rican border, which the Sandinistas have vowed to capture and make a capital for the provisional government they named last weekend.

The Sandinistas announced Tuesday night that their forces in the south resumed their attack near La Virgen, south of Rivas. But Maj. Pablo Emilio Salazar, the 35-year-old commander of Somoza's forces in the south, denied the rebel claim in a television appearance.

"We have stopped them at the Rio Pita," said Salazar. "We figure there are now 400 to 600 guerrillas there. We are planning a major offensive."

The Pita River is five miles north of the Costa Rican border.

A Sandinista spokesman in neighboring Costa Rica said there were 600 guerrillas at La Virgen "with the heaviest weapon we have. We have also moved up for the battle all the armored cars and other weapons taken from the national guard."

La Virgen, on Lake Nicaragua, is 12 miles from the border.

The Sandinista commander in the south, Eden Pastora, told a reporter the guerrillas had overrun several barrios in Rivas and were battling the national guard garrison there late Tuesday.

There was no estimate of rebel casualties in the three weeks since the Sandinistas launched their second offensive in 10 months to try to end the 42-year rule of the Somoza family dictatorship. But reliable sources said 80 national guardsmen have been killed and 215 wounded, two of the guard's four Sherman tanks were disabled in Leon, and only five of its 10 rocket-firing Cessnas were still flying.

Foreign embassies continued to sponsor evacuation flights. More than 800 persons have left on U.S. Air Force C-130s. National guardsmen stopped a busload of Venezuelans and political refugees from the Venezuelan embassy and threatened to shoot them as Sandinistas, but the Venezuelan foreign minister arranged their release and departure from the country.

The Sandinistas control a number of cities in northwest Nicaragua, including Leon, the country's second largest, and in most of them have the national guard garrisons under siege. The government says no attempt will be made to recover those points until the rebels in Managua and the south have been defeated.

Report Shows U.S. Economy Slowing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government today increased its estimate of the nation's economic output in the first three months of the year to 0.8 percent, a large drop from the 6.9 percent growth in the final quarter of 1978.

The Commerce Department report also said that corporate profits increased at an annual rate of 2.1 percent in the first quarter to a record $229.8 billion.

After adjustment for the inflationary effects on inventory and capital investments, however, profits showed a decline of $7.9 billion from the fourth quarter, or 4.5 percent, to $168.7 billion.

The government also moved its estimate of inflation up a notch to an annual 9.7 percent rate, based on the performance of the economy in the first three months of the year. The original estimate two months ago had been 9.5 percent. The rate was 8.4 percent in the final quarter of 1978.

At a news conference today, Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal said the economy's slowdown from the "suprising burst of activity" in the fourth quarter indicated that President Carter's austere monetary and fiscal policies are "on the right track."

"I think it shows ... a slowing economy, not plunging into a major downturn as some have predicted," Blumenthal said. The slower growth, he added, should contribute "to a slowing of inflation in the remainder of the year."

Blumenthal also told reporters:

— The June 28-29 Tokyo summit meeting of officials from seven industrialized nations is likely to conclude that "we, as (energy) consuming countries, must do all we can to conserve the use of energy and the acceleration of (our) own production of oil and alternate forms of energy."

— That it "remains to be seen" whether the United states will propose establishment of a so-called buyers cartel of industrial nations to try to restrain the steady rise in oil prices by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

— There "is a possibility" that a global recession could result if OPEC continues to push prices higher, but added, "if we can work together, I think we can keep the situation under control."

— Although the dollar has dropped in world money markets in the past few days, Blumenthal predicted "the dollar would remain strong and stable." He said the recent drop was the result of higher interest rates in Japan and Germany as rates here have eased slightly. He added he did not expect further significant interest-rate changes.

Storms Pound Midwest Area

trees were blown over or uprooted.

There were no immediate reports of serious injuries, but city officials warned people to watch out for power lines downed by the storm. No travel was advised in the Minneapolis suburb of Deephaven because of the power lines. And the suburb of Minnetonka was without water after power went out.

In Iowa, several funnel clouds were reported Tuesday night, and at least four people were injured. Gusts up to 90 mph were reported in western Iowa and heavy rains sent one stream out of its banks.

Six light planes at the Spencer airport were destroyed by a tornado and two persons were injured when strong winds whipped through a campsite near Anita.

One of the hardest hit areas was Moville, Iowa, a community of 1,200 in north-central Woodbury County, where a tornado-like wind damaged several homes and businesses and caused at least one injury. A garage was ripped from its foundation at one residence and dropped on the other side of the house.

"There was no warning," said Mrs. Gene Belknap, whose husband is the town's mayor and police chief. "Usually we get a call from the Woodbury County sheriff's office to sound the alarm, but this came too fast."

High winds, heavy rain and hail in Sioux City downed power lines, causing spotted power outages.

Dozens of funnel clouds were reported in Minnesota, downing power lines and trees. At least 40,000 Northern States Power company customers were without electricity today and utilty spokesman Wayne Kaplan said it would be several days before all service was restored.

Tornadoes and high winds swept through eastern Kansas, injuring two occupants of an overturned mobile home near Hartford and damaging a grain elevator and bins near Courtland.

Elsewhere across the nation, thunderstorms continued today over southern Florida as well as across the Carolinas, and showers have moved from southern Arkansas into Mississippi. Skies were partly cloudy or clear across much of the rest of the nation this morning.

In Texas, a weak frontal system moving slowly eastward this morning along a line from Childress to Lubbock was doing little to break up the hot weather across the South Plains.

The forecast calls for clear to partly skies through Thursday and for temperatures in the mid-90s today and Thursday and in the high 60s tonight.

Winds were expected to be southerly at 10 to 15 mph today and light and southeasterly tonight.

Most Married Men Living In South

Two Suspects Held In $400,000 Heist

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — City police and FBI agents arrested early today a father and son who allegedly took $400,000 from a Wells Fargo armored truck in Kentucky because they were unhappy with their wages.

Hugh Higgins, FBI agent-in-charge in Rochester, said it appeared all the money stolen Monday in the so-called "Geronimo's Revenge" heist was recovered. The money was being counted.

Howard T. Kalsbeck, 49, surrendered in a friend's apartment where he had holed up with his son, Howard Dennis Kelly, 28. Kelly was captured earlier as he fled out a back door.

FBI Agent Clinton Van Zant said both men, originally Rochester residents who moved to Cincinnati, were "heavily armed" with handguns, shotguns and ammunition. But no shots were fired in the arrests.

Police and FBI agents had surrounded the house and sealed off a six-block area around the building with a dozen cruisers. The police department's 12-man SWAT team was brought in.

Van Zant, who arrested Kelly in 1977 on a charge of interstate transport of stolen motor vehicles, said he was on the verge of negotiating a peaceful surrender when Kelly bolted.

The father and son, both Wells Fargo employees, were arrested on a fugitive warrant. They were wanted in the robbery of an armored truck in which an estimated $400,000 was taken.

Authorities said the robbers left a long letter, pierced with an arrow and titled "Geronimo's Revenge," on the front seat of the truck after abandoning it in northern Kentucky on Monday.

The unsigned letter reportedly contained complaints that $4 an hour was not an adequate wage for Wells Fargo employees. Kalsbeck was a security guard for Wells Fargo. Kelly, also known as David Peter Preston, was an armored car driver.

FBI agent John Kelly said the armored truck's driver, Lester Addis, told authorities the robbery began when he and Preston were in the truck at a shopping mall just across the Ohio border in Newport, Ky. Addis said Kalsbeck appeared and said he had been assigned to the truck because the company suspected a robbery might occur.

Addis was overpowered at gunpoint and the truck was driven east and abandoned in Silver Grove, Ky., officials said. Addis was found handcuffed and with his eyes taped.

Police Face New Curbs

But Burger said there was no need for the court to decide whether a warrant is required before opening luggage when the police believe contraband goods are located somewhere in the vehicle, but do not know whether the goods are inside the luggage or located somewhere else in the car.

Justices William H. Rehnquist and Harry Blackmun, in a dissenting opinion, said that requiring police to get a search warrant in such cases was unnecessary and would only confuse authorities and possibly result in "highly relevant evidence" being excluded.

In the pen register case, Blackmun, writing the majority opinion in a 5 to 3 decision, said, "We doubt that people in general entertain any actual expectation of privacy in the numbers they dial."

The case arose in the appeal of Michael Lee Smith, who was sentenced to 10 years in prison by a Baltimore County court in a robbery-mugging.

Smith was charged with grabbing the pocketbook of Patricia McDonough as she was returning home late on the night of March 5, 1976.

After the robbery, she received a series of obscene telephone calls from a man who said he had stolen her pocketbook.

Housing Demand Remains Strong

WASHINGTON (AP) — Demand for housing remains strong despite the nation's economic problems, Jack Carlson of the National Association of Realtors said Tuesday.

"This is occurring in spite of a 26 percent increase in average monthly payments for interest and principal since 12 months ago, caused by record level interest rates and housing costs," said Carlson, the association's executive vice president and chief economist.

Carlson said his assessment was based on the Commerce Department's Monday report on housing starts, which showed an increases to an annual rate of 1.8 million units in May.

Concentration Creates Problems

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Concentration of share ownership remains a problem for the stock market, and so long as individuals remain away from the market the problem is likely to remain.

In fact, it might remain anyway, whether or not the individual returns. Institutions — insurance companies, bank-administrered trusts, mutual and pension funds and others — are growing larger all the time.

It means, of course, that they are also acquiring more securities all the time, but that in itself doesn't seem to create the major problems. What concerns many critics are the peculiarities of institutions.

Among them: they are overly conservative; they think alike; they don't push their rights as shareholders; they concentrate on a select group of stocks and, complain some companies, starve the rest of the market.

During the first quarter of the year, according to figures filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, institutions handling more than $100 million of assets owned almost half of IBM's outstanding shares.

The same report shows these institutions owned more than 40 percent of Exxon, 42 percent of General Electric and Eastman Kodak, 60 percent of Minnesota Mining, and 50 percent of duPont.

The value of shares held in IBM, now the nation's seventh largest manufacturer, amounted to nearly $22 billion, making it in dollar terms the most widely owned stock of the institutions.

For IBM, this migh be a mixed blessing, and probably is the primary reason why the company decided this spring to split its shares four for one.

At roughly $300, reasoned the premier electronic computer maker, its common stock was priced in a range that appealed primarily to those wealthy institutions. And, it would seem, it had enough of them.

What it could use, especially in view of its desire for broad support — for its products as well as its battles with government regulators — was more individual owners. Active owners. Supportive owners.

Analysis

How better to get them than to cut the price per share to around $75?

IBM undoubtedly was also aware that concentration can create other problems. If so many institutions already owned the stock, for example, where would future support come from?

And what might happen if those institutions soured on the stock at the same time, as they have been inclined to do with stocks of other companies at other times?

IBM might not have acted too soon. Following news that many customers were renting rather than buying outright, and that revenues might suffer, some institutions sold heavily. Shares dropped $3.75 last week.

While too many conclusions could be drawn from such a brief period, the action does suggest another trait of some institutional investors, i.e., a tendency to react to short-term rather than long-term factors.

Whatever is the long-term future of the giant electronic computer manufacturer, said some analysts this week, it isn't likely to be determined by what could be a relatively brief change of buyer habits.

Some institutional portfolio managers, however, are under pressure to perform — not just by the year but by the quarter. They want their records to look good at all times.

In pursuit of their goals, many have also become quite conservative, willing to invest in relatively low-risk securities, such as bonds and Treasury bills, that won't embarass them before their clients.

In fact, this conservative attitude — which the evaluation service of A.G. Becker Inc. says has left many customers dissatisfied with retuns — has resulted in a situation that could have a huge impact on stocks.

"As a result," said Fortune magazine in April, "an unprecedented cache of institutional money is currently waiting on the sidelines." By some estimates, it amounts to scores of billions of dollars.

And what happens when that money begins moving into the stock market? Depending on the speed of the movement, say analysts, it could push prices up sharply. For the favored 50 or 100, anyway.

Americans To Study Weather In China

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thanks to the Chinese, Americans may get better weather forecasts.

New agreements signed last month between the United States and China will give American scientists a chance to study weather occurrences in that part of the world. "We'll have more information on the weather in China," said Richard A. Frank, administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "The weather there affects the weather in the Pacific, and eventually the weather here." A new weather station is already up near Peking and China is sharing its data with the World Meteorological Organization.

Boy Resided In Backyard

WALNUT CREEK, Calif, (UPI) — The parents of a 15-year-old boy forced him to live in the backyard of their home for six years because they suspected he committed a sexual act with his younger sister, court records disclosed Monday.

Carol Michener, of the Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department, said the boy was allowed in the house once a week to bathe and to wash dishes and, for a period, was allowed to sleep in a bathroom in the house.

The youth was placed in a foster home April 14, authorities said, and his parents have pleaded innocent in Municipal Court to charges of child abuse.

A social worker said the teen-ager told inwestigators his parents banished him to the yard six years ago after they accused him of "committing a sexual act" with his sister.

School psychologist Shirley Gee said the youngster is attending classes but the ordeal "has retarded his learning abilities — his growth. It's hard for him to function with his school mates. I would imagine he's two years behind his classmates."

Mrs. Gee said the school district long ago suspected the boy needed help but his parents refused to allow any counseling or special education programs for him.

She said that in April the boy said he "couldn't stand it any longer and came to us saying he wanted something done. He said he just wanted to be treated like a person."

The identities of the boy and parents were withheld.

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: Are Elizabeth Taylor Warner's eyes hazel or violet? She must have been a beautiful baby. Was she? — Mrs. L.P.D., Victoria

A: Yes, Liz was a beautiful baby — still is in the eyes of many beholders. Yet her mother thought that brother Howard was the most beautiful.

"Howard had a mass of yellow curls all over his head. His eyes were large and very blue," Sara Taylor sighed. "Baby Elizabeth was as dark as Howard was blonde. Besides the black fuzz, her skimpy hair was coal black and straight." Little Liz was so slow in teething, mother jokingly suggested they ought to fit her for dentures.

About the beauty's eyes — yes, they are violet.

Q: What wit, invited to what he knew would be a dull party, went anyway and later said to the hostess, "I've had a lovely evening — but this wasn't it!" Sounds like it might have been Oscar Levant. — Elliott Regan, Trenton, N.J.

Q: Who "sponsored" PLO chief Yasser Arafat as an Arab leader? — O.R.N., Berkeley, Calif.

A: It was Nasser who decided Yasser would be a gasser — when the latter attended the University of Cairo. He was chosen to head up a guerrilla band used to stage raids against Israel. Arafat now lives in Beirut, Lebanon, and has no family.

Q: There's a rather pretty look-alike for Dolly Parton (at least above the waist!) I saw with Telly Savalas. Who is she? — Eleanor Roth, Las Vegas.

A: You must be thinking of an outstanding singing and instrumental talent named Shirley Evans. She's a composer who also pens poetry for children, plays an accordian superbly and entertains in nightclubs here and abroad. She has been featured with Eddie Fisher, George Jessel and other headliners.

To Barbara Walters: Your recent TV interview with Richard Pryor made many friends for the comedian, once considered a "bad boy." He came off like a real human being, even with some of your velvet-covered, brass-knuckled questions: "Were your father and mother married?" "After I was about three," Pryor responded. "I was born Richard Franklin Lennox Thomas Pryor III. I got names from pimps and gangsters and all that threw in."

On the subject of taking drugs, Richard stated: "I love drugs. I really do. But I can't do them a lot because it messes my life up, and every time I get in trouble it's because I end up drinking too much, or I end up snorting too much or smoking too much!"

His appearance on Johnny Carson's show also helped his image. Likewise the way Jet magazine treated the bright but often too blunt person.

Q: You wrote (some three or four years ago) that, joking aside, chicken soup is good for colds. Has that been proven to be a fact? — M. Thomas, Tampa, Fla.

A: Yes. "Chest," a journal of pulmonary diseases, credits Dr. Marvin A. Sackner, of the Miami Beach Mt. Sinai Medical Center, with conducting a study and determining that fresh chicken soup cleared mucus from nasal passages at the rate of 9.2 millimeters per minute, compared with 8.4 for hot water and 4.5 for cold water. Dr. Sackner measured the progress with X-rays.

Woman Keeps Track Of Birthdays

SMETHPORT, Pa. (AP) — As sure as birthdays bring cake, candles and gooey icing, they also guarantee a personal greeting for more than 3,500 people whom Shirley Keller calls her friends.

For the past 33 years, Mrs. Keller has been collecting birthdates, addresses and telephone numbers from people she meets. The list in her well-thumbed birthday book has grown steadily to 3,541.

"They look forward to it," she said. "Especially the people who don't have anyone and live by themselves. They really love it."

Most of the recipients of Mrs. Keller's birthday cheer live in and around this McKean County community, but some greetings make their way across the continent and even overseas.

Most of the local celebrants are contacted by telephone. Those who are out-of-town are mailed greetings.

For instance, exchange students from Germany, Japan and the Netherlands who have attended Smethport High School have made the pages of Mrs. Keller's birthday book.

Mrs. Keller, a night custodian at the county courthouse, says she can recall most of the names and dates with little trouble. Of course, she has missed a birthday or two, and she hears about it.

Mrs. Keller's standard operating procedure is to telephone the celebrant of the day and start right in with the song, "Happy Birthday."

"Most know immediately who it is and reply, 'Hello, Shirley, I've been waiting to hear from you,'" she said.

Many of Mrs. Keller's contacts remember her in turn. On her last birthday March 12, she received 136 telephone calls and 148 cards from people she had wished luck and happiness to many times before.

FTC Warns Makers Of Denture Products

WASHINGTON (AP) — Makers of denture adhesives have been warned not to claim their products let denture wearers eat apples or corn-on-the-cob unless they can back it up with evidence.

The Federal Trade Commission has sent letters to all major manufacturers of denture cleansers and adhesives detailing what the agency will consider unfair and deceptive ad claims for their products. The letters are based on a 1977 case against Block Drug Co., Inc., maker of Poligrip adhesive and Polident cleanser, said Mark A. Heller of the FTC staff. Companies sent the letters are: Warner-Lambert, Colgate-Palmolive, Johnson and Johnson, Richardson-Merrell and Norcliff-Thayer.

Bradford, Thomas Lead Contenders

By RUTHANNE BROCKWAY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Although Texas Tech regents have yet to formulate their criteria for selecting a new university president, two strong contenders for the position have been mentioned almost from the moment Cecil Mackey accepted the presidency of Michigan State University.

Dr. John Bradford, dean of Tech's College of Engineering, and a contender for the presidency in 1976, and Dr. Gerald Thomas, president of New Mexico State University and a former Tech dean of agriculture, are among the strongest of about 20 names offered to the board so far as presidential prospects.

Sources also say that Dr. Lorrin Kennamer Jr., former Tech professor and now dean of the College of Education at the University of Texas, also has been mentioned as a possible contender.

Kennamer, 54, was dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Texas Tech from 1967 to 1970.

Thomas was asked to submit his application to head Tech three years ago, but declined to have his name considered.

Thomas, who will celebrate his 60th birthday next week, was born in Idaho but has been in the Southwest since the 1950s. He received his bachelors from the University of Idaho in 1941 and his masters and Ph.D. from Texas A&M. He was at Tech from 1958 until 1970, when he was named president of NMSU.

Bradford's name surfaced almost immediately after Mackey announced his plans to become president of the Ann Arbor school.

"He's got to be a lead runner," one source said. "He was a finalist before (in 1976 when Mackey was chosen)."

Another Tech insider said Bradford "won't publicly push for it," but that, "of course he wants it."

Bradford maintains he has not considered the job. "I have not been approached," he added.

An Amarillo native, Bradford, 56, received his bachelor's degree in chemical engineering from Tech in 1942, an M.S. from Tech in 1948 and a Ph.D. in 1953 from Case Institute of Technology. He has been dean of engineering since 1955.

Some say that Dr. Glenn Barnett, vice president of planning, will lend his support to Bradford and bow out of the race. But others believe Barnett, a prospect for the presidency in 1976, will be considered this time as well.

Some observers note that the naming of College of Arts and Sciences dean Lawrence Graves as interim president frees all the vice presidents of the university, as well as other deans, to be considered for the job of president.

Another possible prospect, mentioned by one source, is Dr. Duane Leach, president of Texas A&I University in Kingsville. Leach has no former ties to Tech, but has been president at A &I for two years and formerly was president of a college in Montana.

In his post at Kingsville, Leach has dealt with the Texas Legislature and some say that is an important experience for a possible Tech president to have.

Guidelines for the presidential search will be set by a committee composed of regents Clint Formby, Robert Pfluger, Dr. Nathan Galloway and B.J. Pevehouse. The committee will report at the next regents meeting, July 6.

Bosworth's Job In Jeopardy

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Gerald Bosworth, administrator of the financially strapped county teaching hospital, probably will be asked to leave his position, one of Bosworth's staunchest backers conceded Tuesday.

Jack Strong, board chairman for the Lubbock County Hospital District, predicted that the recommendation of the administrative committee charged with studying Bosworth's contract — which expires June 30 — would be to find another administrator for Health Sciences Center Hospital.

Bosworth has been unavailable for comment since a Monday board meeting focused on his status with the hospital district. At that meeting Strong suggested that instead of another two-year contract, Bosworth should be offered the job on a month-to-month basis.

Strong said the hospital's inability to offer Bosworth a raise was behind his suggestion to leave Bosworth's contract on a monthly basis. However, once the subject of contract negotiations was broached, several board members suggested a complete change in administration might be in order.

Strong told The Avalanche-Journal that he met with Bosworth prior to Monday's board meeting to discuss renewal of his contract. Bosworth already had worked up a contract for himself, Strong said, which included a 10 percent cost of living raise tacked onto his present $55,000 annual salary.

The struggling hospital district faces a backlog of about $7 million in unpaid bills and could be nearing a shutdown in the months ahead if alternate funding is not found. Strong told Bosworth, as well as the board, that he doesn't feel the district is in a financial position to offer him more money.

Strong stressed that he personally supports Bosworth and believes he has done a good job. The momentum to look for another administrator came from two newly appointed board members, Dub Rushing and Steve Smith, who attended their first board meeting Monday.

"A new board member can take a fresh look," Strong said. He added that he doubts they will change their minds after more time on the board, even though more tenured board members generally are more supportive of Bosworth.

"They wouldn't have said it (the proposal to oust Bosworth) if they didn't think it was the thing to do," Strong said.

Reappraisal Notices Confuse Taxpayers

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

In the case of the city-school reappraisal notices mailed to Lubbock taxpayers Friday, the truth not only hurts, it confuses.

Since 20,000 property owners were notified their property values have increased 20 to 80 percent in the past four years, assessor-collector John Brooks said the tax office phones haven't quit ringing.

Surprisingly, most of the calls are about tax exemptions listed on the reappraisal notices, not about the amount of the property value increase.

Brooks said taxpayers are confused because of the differences in the exemptions listed on the school side of the notice, compared to the city side.

The reason the exemptions even are listed on the notices is the "truth in taxation" requirement enacted by the legislature. That same body also gets much of the blame for the confusion over the exemptions.

There are now five exemptions available to school taxpayers, but only two exemptions can be offered to reduce city taxes.

"It's not just a whim on our part," Brooks said. "We're giving everything we can give, but the city is just eligible for two exemptions."

Those exemptions are a $10,000 assessed value exemption for homeowners over age 65 and a disabled veterans exemption (listed as DAV exemption on the notices) that varies up to $3,000 in assessed value.

The identical disabled veterans exemption is offered in the same amount by the Lubbock school district — but there the similarities end.

The school district will offer either a $6,000 or a $9,000 assessed value exemption for homeowners over 65. A $3,000 exemption now is offered the elderly, but that may be repealed at the school board's June 28 meeting.

Regardless, taxpayers over 65 will be eligible for a $6,000 school tax exemption mandated by the legislature under the Tax Relief Amendment approved by voters in November.

If the school board does not change the elderly exemption now offered, those over 65 may get a $9,000 assesse value reduction.

To confuse the issue even more, only the $3,000 exemption is listed on the reappraisal notices because the forms were printed before the tax relief legislation finally was approved in Austin.

Another exemption applying only to school taxes is a homestead exemption available to those who own the house in which they live. This $3,000 assessed value exemption also was authorized by the legislature, but is listed on the reappraisal notices.

In the waning moments of the legislature last month, yet another exemption was mandated. A $6,000 assessed value exemption is offered persons who receive disability payments under Title II of the Social Security Act.

But, with the exception of the $6,000 disabled exemption, taxpayers must

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

You're looking at a real "decorator book" junkie. Years ago I decided it was more fun to read about a house than to clean it. Besides, it got me out of a lot of sticky situations. Every time someone came in and saw a diaper pail in the living room, a ladder in the hallway with a roaster on top of it, or the contents of a closet in the middle of the floor, I'd look up from my reading, shrug and say, "It's going slow, but it'll be worth it."

There isn't a magazine in the house that has not had a razor blade taken to it. But somehow the ideas never really worked for me and I finally figured out why. Their decorating styles are just too innovative for me. For example, I've never been able to adopt EARLY GROPING in my house. These are the rooms you see without a single light in them. There's a conversation pit where people's faces are illuminated in the fire and the candles, but no light. I cannot imagine walking across the floor without tripping over a lampcord and three extensions.

I'm too late for CONTEMPORARY CELIBACY. These are the austere, white-walled, white-carpeted, childless homes that are a cross between a space center and a recovery room. No fingerprints around the light switches, no basketballs in the entranceway, and no sweat socks on the countertop.

JUNGLE AMBIANCE never worked for me. I once counted 87 plants in a single living room — all in full bloom! Do you have any idea what the odds are for 87 plants to be in full bloom at the same time? (One was bearing bananas.) I have two African violets on the window sill in the kitchen. They won't die and they won't bloom and I'm stuck with them until planthanasia becomes legal.

PERCALE PERSUASION: It's a mystery how sheets on everyone else's windows and walls can look like imported brocade, but on mine they look like someone just slept on 'em.

The other day a dryer repairman presented me with his bill. I put down my decorator magazine to write him a check.

"I know what you're going through," he said. "When we moved into our house we nearly went crazy trying to get things finished."

I didn't have the heart to tell him we've lived here for eight years.

MEALS ON WHEELS — The Lubbock Meals On Wheels program, which provides meals for elderly, disabled and shut-in residents of the Lubbock community, is in need of volunteers to continue this vital service. Because many regular workers cannot drive during the summer months, the program finds itself short of volunteers; the gas shortage has increased the problem. Here Mr. and Mrs. Walter Grisby deliver a hot mid-day meal to Mr. and Mrs. Lee Mize, and stop for a brief visit. For more information, call Mary Williams at 765-8310. (Staff photo by Linn Scherwitz)

Program Provides Meals To Aged

WASHINGTON, D.C. (Special) Since its start in 1973 the national nutrition program for hot, nutritious meals to persons aged 60 and over has reached most parts of the country. Today it comprises 1,100 nutrition projects serving meals at 10,681 sites. About 135 million meals were served in the 1978 fiscal year under this program, an increase of about 35 percent over the previous year.

The Administration on Aging program emphasizes socializing and services as well as nutrition, and they may be as important an inducement as the meal itself. The services most often include transportation, escort and information and referral services, and sometimes extend into recreation, educational and health-related services.

Nationwide, about 17 percent of the meals last year were home-delivered to persons who cannot leave their homes because of limited mobility or other problems.

Through the nutrition program the Federal government helps communities meet some of the nutritional and social needs of older people. Priority goals of the program are to reach those who cannot afford an adequate diet or who lack skills to prepare their own meals or are too incapacitated to shop and cook, or who suffer depressive effects of isolation.

No income criteria govern eligiblilty. All persons 60 and over, and their spouses, may participate.

Most of the staff at nutrition sites and project are volunteers who serve without payment. In 1978, a total of 178,000 volunteers served in the program. About five of every six volunteers were themselves 60 years of age or older. Paid staff nationwide number about 25,000.

The average meal costs $1.80, including only food and preparation costs. Transportation and other services raise the average cost per meal to $2.25. U.S. Department of Agriculture provides some of the food. Its contribution is estimated at 29 cents per meal, on the average.

In most localities diners may make a volunteer contribution towards the cost of the meal if they wish.

Women representing 60 clubs in the 19-county Caprock District of the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs will meet for the annual summer workshop Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Municipal Garden and Arts Center, 4101 University Ave.

Group leaders for the workshops received their training in Houston at the TFWC convention in April, and will lecture on the following topics: Mrs. James Davis, "Yearbooks and Covers" in competition; Mrs. J.B. Austin, "Hands Up" crime prevention program; Mrs. T.W. St Romain and Mrs. C.A. Bickley, "Community Improvement Program"; Mrs. Harold Green, TFWC state third vice president, "Membership".

Weddings

QUINN—WILLIAMS

Vicki Ann Quinn and Roger Charles Williams were married Saturday in the Trinity Baptist Church. The Rev. Bob Utley officiated.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Travis D. Quinn. Williams is the nephew of Mr. and Mrs. C.T. Merritt of Hermiligh.

The bride was graduated from Lubbock High School and attends Texas Tech University. The bridegroom was graduated from Snyder High School and attended Tech.

Following a wedding trip to Ruidoso, N.M., the couple will live in Lubbock.

6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

The time for pessimism is when you are declaring a contract that appears to be a cinch. That is when precautionary measures should be taken to protect against the whims of distribution.

While South's opening bid might be a whit light in terms of high card count, he certainly cannot be faulted for opening with a demand bid on a hand that contains only two or three losers. West tried to muddy the waters with preemptive action—even if he were doubled, the loss could not be severe, and his tactic would make it more difficult for the opponents to reach their best spot. South chose to go for game rather than double for penalties, and now North made the key bid by raising to five hearts on the strength of his good trump support and singleton in the opponents' suit. South, of course, bid the slam cheerfully.

West led the king of clubs, ruffed by declarer. A careless declarer would have gone down in short order. He would lay down the ace of diamonds, preparing to ruff diamonds in dummy. Unfortunately, East would ruff and return a trump, and declarer, who has three diamond losers to take care of, would be left with only two trumps in dummy.

This declarer, however, recalled that West had preempted with four diamonds, and considered it well within the realm of possibility that West might have an eight-card suit for that action. He therefore abandoned the idea of trying to make all the tricks and instead elected to make sure of twelve tricks. At trick two, declarer led the deuce of diamonds!

That gave up a diamond trick but secured the contract. There was nothing the defenders could do to prevent declarer from ruffing his two other losing diamonds in dummy. When that task was completed, declarer drew trumps and was left with nothing but winners in his hand.

Hats off to South for finding an unusual safety play which, we venture, would have escaped the notice of many experienced players.

Have you been running into double trouble? Let Charles Goren help you find your way through the maze of Doubles for penalties and for takeout. For a copy of his Doubles booklet, send $1.70 to "Goren Doubles," P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J., 07648. Make checks payable to NEWSPAPERBOOKS.

DAY CAMPERS — On Canyon Lakes, near the Campfire headquarters, these youngsters are learning the basics of handling a canoe at Camp Dakona, the summer day camp sponsored by the Caprock Camp Fire Council. Another session on canoeing, for older youngsters and those who have completed the beginning course, will start July 23. The course teaches the youngsters the basics of water safety and handling a canoe; in the advanced course, the finer points and techniques will be taught. Other programs, for a variety of interests, are available through the summer day camp program of the Council. For more information call the Camp Fire Council office at 765-6394. Part-Time Father Finds Parenting Role Difficult

By BEVERLY O'BRIANT
Family News Staff

For the part-time father, who sees his children only on a visitation basis, the key to his relationship with them is letting go while showing love and caring, according to Ray Vickery, a minister and part-time father himself.

At a seminar on fathering held recently at First Baptist Church, Vickery, minister to single adults at First Baptist Church in Richardson, spoke on part-time fathering.

A divorced father himself, he explained that much of his knowledge about part-time fathering came from first hand experience.

A part-time father is a father who, because of divorce, does not have custody of his children, but sees them on a visitation basis. Many fathers do not know how to handle the situation, Vickery said. The most frequent question he receives from divorced fathers is: "what is my role?"

Vickery recognized the difficulty of communicating with the children's mother, showing the relationship of the parents to the children in a realistic way, and fitting into the children's life.

The key to a good relationship with the children, according to Vickery, is letting go of the children while showing love and caring.

A part-time father "cannot play a regular day-to-day role in the children's lives," said Vickery. "The father cannot compete with the mother."

Vickery suggested a series of actions which can ease tension and enrich the quality of the relationship a divorced father has with his children.

When a divorce is imminent, a couple needs to assure the children that the dissolving of the marriage is not their fault. According to Vickery, the oldest child tends to accept blame for the problem. A couple should decide what to tell their children and talk to them together if possible.

The children should be told that the situation is between the parents and no one else. The couple should "help the child(ren) see the relationship has broken down, but both are good people," said Vickery.

The explanation "needs to be repeated until the children understand fully; then the parents should act it out by showing respect for each other," Vickery remarked. Another good idea, according to Vickery, is to have somebody else, such as a minister, talk to the children about the divorce.

The next suggestion Vickery offered to part-time fathers was to handle communication with the children's mother in as businesslike a manner as possible. Communication should be through the mail and a request for the children should be in writing. This form of communication cuts down emotionalism, he said.

Once a father has his children with him, he is often at a loss as how to handle them. Vickery encourages a divorced father to give his children breathing space. He explained, a father should put his children "in his setting, then let them alone." The children should be allowed peer friends and a freedom to find their own entertainment.

A divorced father needs to be careful, said Vickery, not to vent his emotions on his children or to criticize their mother. Phone calls are the best way to communicate with children. The father is more relaxed and casual in calling, while there can be an "intense emotional climate in a letter."

"All parents have to learn to let go; divorced parents just have to do it sooner," said Vickery.

Divorced fathers should let their children know that they care for them, he explained. But if part-time fathers "relax the situation, it makes for a healthier, better relationship."

Home Energy Audit Reveals Sources Of Fuel Savings

June is an ideal time for a home energy audit, according to the White House Office of the Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs.

Begin by determining what home improvements are needed. Do the windows and doors need weatherstripping or caulking? Do storm windows need to be installed? How about insulation for the unfinished attic floor, is it adequate? Do the crawl space walls or the floor and basement walls need insulation? Are the thermostat, furnace, and air conditioner in good working condition or do they need servicing?

Some homes will require more energy-saving improvements than others. Decide what improvements to make, then figure out how much each one costs, which one will get your money back the fastest, and how much you will save by making that improvement now. Next, determine the difficulty of each project. List the tools, the materials and the procedures for every job.

You will save money if you can do the work yourself, but some jobs may require the technical skills of a private contractor.

To help you make informed decisions when you buy insulation and other weatherization materials or choose a contractor, the Department of Housing and Urban Development has published a step-by-step booklet of energy cost-cutting techniques for all types of housing. "In the Bank...Or Up The Chimney?" is HUD's dollars and cents guide to energy-saving home improvements. The 76-page booklet is packed with information about energy-saving work you can do and projects that require a skilled private contrctor. Copies of booklet No. 56G can be ordered from the Consumer Information center, Pueblo, CO. 81009, for $1.70.

And do not forget that many of the weatherization materials you use will qualify for a tax credit. You may claim a tax credit of 15 percent of your purchase price up to a maximum of $300 for items like insulation, storm windows and storm doors. And if your expenses exceed the limit, you may carry the excess over to successive tax years. It is not necessary to itemize your tax deductions in order to be eligible for this tax credit. For information and a free copy of Internal Revneue Service Publication No. 903, "Energy Credit," call toll free (800) 552-9500.

SUGAR VS. HONEY

There is little difference between the nutrients in sugar and honey, because the ratio of nutrients to calories is very low, points out foods and nutrition specialist Mary Sweeten. A person who must avoid sugar also needs to avoid honey, she cautions.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: The house is finally quiet. My husband and two teenagers are in bed, but I am so upset I can't sleep.

Our marriage has been so wonderful, plus we are blessed with two healthy children who have always been well behaved.

We were an exceptionally happy family until about a year ago. So what's the problem? LOUD MUSIC!

Abby, why must music be played so loud today? The only answer we get from our children is, "Because."

The words exchanged between my husband and son tonight were terrible. My husband asked our son politely to please turn down the stereo. Our son ignored him, so his father turned the stereo off and announced that neither of the children would be allowed to play music again until they agreed to keep the volume at a level that was comfortable for US.

I've never seen my husband so angry. The kids are mad and I'm upset.

Do other parents have this problem? And how do they handle it? AM-FM

Dear AM: Yes, many partners have that problem. And they handle it the same way your husband handled it — by exploding and finally laying down the law.

The upsetting scene could have been avoided had you laid down the law as soon as the kids started playing music at a volume that was disturbing to you.

Loud music is "in," but the price one pays for constantly assaulting his eardrums with loud sounds is impaired hearing.

DEAR ABBY: I have read many letters in your column from the family of the bride resenting bitterly the family of the bridegroom paying off their social obligations by inviting all their shirt-tail relatives, friends, neighbors and business acquaintances to a wedding paid for by the bride's parents.

I recently returned from the Orient where I attended a wedding, and was informed of their solution to the wedding-guest problem. Each family invites as many guests as they wish and each family PAYS for its own guests. Clever?

World Traveler

Dear Traveler: Very!

DEAR ABBY: My son has a lot of friends, and lately they have been getting married one after the other. Here is my gripe. He has to lay out $48 every time he rents one of those fancy tuxedos the bridegroom has picked out for him to wear to the wedding.

I think if the bridegroom wants his attendants to wear tuxes, he should pick up the tab for the rental. What is your opinion?

Pine Bluff, Ark, Mom

Dear Mom: It would be nice if the bridegroom could afford it, but most cannot, so it's customary for each attendant to pay for the rental of his own tuxedo.

DEAR ABBY: I'm expecting my first child in four months. All the beauty of pregnancy and motherhood are slowly being destroyed by the horror stories of other women.

Ladies I hardly know have told me how the doctor had to break the baby's arm for delivery, cords choking babies during delivery, etc. And as though that weren't enough. I've been hearing how "dangerous" hospitals are. (Unclean, mistakes made in the lab and pharmacy.) It's all so frightening.

These stories are entirely unsolicited and very unnerving.

Abby, how can I stop these horror stories.

First Timer

Dear First: You can't stop them from being started, but you can stop them from being finished by saying "Thanks, but I'd rather not hear it."

Aircraft Firm Executive Defends DC-10 Design

WASHINGTON (AP) — A McDonnell Douglas Corp. executive told Congress today that "these trying recent days ... have reconfirmed the stature of the DC-10 as a safe and dependable airplane."

Contending that the grounded jetliner should be returned immediately to worldwide service, John Brizendine said the company has "complete and undiminished confidence" in the plane despite the May 25 crash of a DC-10 in Chicago that claimed 273 lives.

Brizendine, president of the McDonnell Douglas' Douglas Aircraft division, said: "It was a great airplane when it first entered service and ... has proven itself yet again throughout these past weeks of intensive and unprecendented scrutiny."

"This scrutiny has not revealed to us any reason to doubt the DC-10's design or its continued ability to perform, he told the House Public Works subcommittee on aviation. "To our knowledge, no design flaws have been found that could have caused the Chicago tragedy."

Brizendine cited findings by federal investigators that indicated that cracks found in several DC-10 engine mountings, including the American Airlines plane that crashed after the left engine tore away from the wing, were caused by improper maintenance shortcuts.

He complained that "to a great extent, the desire of the news media to understand what happened at Chicago has caused speculation to outrun the immediately available information."

"A good example of this was the focusing of public attention, almost immediately after the accident, on a broken bolt that was widely presumed to have been the accident's cause. The work of experts soon proved this presumption wrong," he said.

"Much of the recent criticism of the DC-10 is not only absurd but obviously irresponsible for the clear and plain reason that there is no basis for it," Brizendine said. "I could cite other examples, but I trust my point is clear."

With inspections and proper maintenance procedures, he said, "there is no reason for the DC-10 fleet not to be in operation.

The Federal Aviation Administration suspended the plane's type certificate indefinitely on June 6 after discovering the cracks in some engine mounting assemblies.

"The pylon structure, the hydraulic and control systems and other parts of the airplane have all been put under the microscope both literally and figuratively, and always the results have been the same," Brizendine said. "No design flaws ... have been found."

Government investigators say that in some of the jets, an engine pylon flange had been cracked apparently because of a maintenance shortcut in which heavy metal parts were bumped into one another.

The shortened maintenance procedure was discussed during hearings Tuesday, with the FAA's John Bartell saying airlines are required to tell the agency if they make major changes in the procedures.

FAA Administrator Langhorne Bond said, in response to questioning, "Our system did not pick it up (the maintenance shortcut). I want to assure you that we will cure that difficulty."

The procedure concerns how the engine and pylon are removed from the wing and reinstalled during maintenance.

McDonnell Douglas recommends that the engine be taken off first, then the pylon.

But mechanics for some airlines apparently shortened the procedure by removing the engine and pylon together as a 14-ton unit.

When the giant assembly was put back into place, Bond said, the aft pylon bulkhead flange — a part that connects the pylon to the wing — could accidentally hit the wing support before the correct fit was found. The bumping produced the cracks, he said.

Meanwhile, William E. Fowler, chief administrative law judge for the National Transportation Safety Board will begin hearing on Monday an appeal of the FAA's order suspending the DC-10 type certificate.

McDonnell Douglas filed the appeal on Friday.

Talmadge Refuses To Defend Himself

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Herman Talmadge will not attempt to defend himself against allegations he diverted campaign funds to his own use and falsified Senate expense vouchers. His daring gambit likely means the Senate Ethics Committee, which lodged the charges against the Georgia Democrat, will decide the case against him on the evidence presented by its special counsel.

The committee met in secret for more than an hour today without taking any action. The next meeting — also expected to be in secret — was set for next Tuesday. The committee could:

— Subpoena Talmadge and force him to testify, a move that is considered unlikely.

— Decide simply to drop the charges.

— Go ahead with closing arguments from both committee counsel Carl Eardley and Talmadge's attorneys and then decide whether the evidence supports the allegations.

Many had expected Talmadge would voluntarily take the stand. After Tuesday's anouncement that there would be no defense, however, it seemed highly unlikely he would address the committee under oath.

The panel could recommend punishment ranging up to expulsion from the Senate. The full Senate, however, would decide what punishment, if any, to administer.

A committee spokeswoman, Lynne Murphy, said further public hearings were unlikely.

Talmadge, by declining to take the stand in his own defense or call any witnesses, gambled that the committee would find the evidence produced by its investigators insufficient to warrant any penalties against him.

That was the point his attorneys made in a letter sent the committee Tuesday. They said there was no "clear and convincing" evidence Talmadge "has engaged in conduct which requires sanctions.

"We perceive no need to rebut further the inadequate evidence special counsel has produced" in the six weeks of testimony, the letter said.

Talmadge's decision came only hours after the committee declined his request to immediately drop the allegations. The panel's chairman, Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., had said then the committee wanted to hear both sides of the case, hopefully including testimony from Talmadge, before ruling.

His attorneys, James Hamilton and Ronald Wertheim, said in the letter that the major charges against Talmadge — that he knew campaign funds were being diverted and that he knew his official Senate expenses were being overcharged — rested on the word of one man.

And they said to rule against Talmadge, the committee must find believable the testimony of that man — Daniel Minchew, Talmadge's top aide from 1971 through 1974.

"We submit it has been shown conclusively that Mr. Minchew is not worthy of belief," the attorneys said.

Talmadge has said the expense overcharges were the result of staff error. He has also denied any knowledge of the diversion of campaign funds, funneled through a secret Washington bank account.

Pentagon Persuaded AEC To Relax Safety Norms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Defense Department persuaded a reluctant Atomic Energy Commission in the 1950s to relax safety standards so soldiers could be placed less than four miles from nuclear explosions during combat exercises in Nevada, newly declassified documentsshow.

The department said at the time it would accept full responsibility for the safety of the troops during training exercises to condition them to nuclear warfare.

The AEC approved a request to move 4,500 soldiers to within 3.9 miles of the explosion site over the objections of an agency scientist who backed a seven-mile standard.

The documents detailing the debate between the Defense Department and the AEC, predecessor to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, were released Tuesday by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

In a March 7, 1952, letter to the commission, Air Force Brig. Gen. A.R. Luedecke asked permission to allow Army and Marine units and other troops "to occupy a position which is safe but not beyond a distance from ground zero which is reasonably sound from a tactical standpoint."

Luedecke also asked permission for the troops to "manuever in the vicinity of ground zero as soon as practicable after the explosion."

He said the seven-mile restriction was not tactically realistic for troops simulating nuclear warfare operations.

"The military services are prepared and desire to accept full responsibility for the safety of all participating troop units and troop observers," Luedecke said.

But there was opposition at the AEC. Dr. Shields Warren of the commission's division of biology and medicine said it was not his function "to set standards for the military nor to impede the operations of the Department of Defense," but he argued the responsibility for the tests belonged with the commission and troops should not be stationed inside the seven-mile limit.

Warren's views were detailed in a memo to Brig. Gen. K.E. Fields, director of military applications for the commission, who endorsed the close-in positioning of troops. Fields said safety precautions would be taken and military tests were justified despite potential hazards.

Commission chairman Gordon Dean, in an April 2, 1952, letter to the Defense Department, said the agency "would enter no objection to stationing troops at not less than 7,000 yards from ground zero. ..."

The commission said it was aware of the "necessity for realistic training by the military in all fields, often accompanied by serious injury."

It also approved exposing troops to six roentgens of radiation, compared to the commission's previous limit of 3.9 roentgens.

Numerous suits have been filed by residents of Nevada and by ex-soldiers who contend they the military subjected them to radiation hazards during nuclear weapons testing in the 1950s.

Amtrak Receives New Blood

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with a massive surge of passengers on Amtrak trains, the Carter administration agreed today to give the system an additional $65 million to maintain and increase rail service.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams said the administration remains firm in insisting that the present system cannot be maintained "because it wastes energy and an enormous amount of money."

Saying it would only be like "pumping formaldehyde into a corpse," Adams said.

Nonetheless, he said, the administration has become convinced that energy-efficient trains should be permitted to run and perhaps be expanded.

Adams said the administration is accepting a formula suggested by a House transportation subcommittee to preserve trains that have picked up ridership. That will cost up to $65 million, he said.

Adams and Rep. James J. Florio, D-N.J., vowed that there will be "no political trains."

They said the Amtrak board will decide which trains or routes to maintain or expand "on an objective basis."

"We are going to let people to vote by buying tickets," Adams said.

Adams said maintaining some rail service for which there has been increased demand "will not mean that there will be a train available for every person as there was 30 years ago."

And he said that prices will rise in an attempt to cut the subsidy paid by the federal government to run the Amtrak system.

"We're only paying 37 percent of the actual costs out of the fare box now," Adams said. "We want that up to 44 percent."

He said Amtrak management will decide how much fares will rise on individual routes.

The Carter administration originally proposed slashing 12,000 miles of track from the Amtrak system, but Adams said Amtrak itself will decide which of the routes will be retained, not the Transportation Department and not Congress.

The administration's plan, announced in January, called for eliminating 43 percent of the 27,700-mile system Oct. 1. The plan was intended to save $1.4 billion over five years. Even with the cutbacks and higher fares, Amtrak would need a $4.6 billion subsidy from taxpayers through 1984.

Amtrak says its ridership began climbing last October. In May, the system turned away 756,246.

"Ridership is up not only on the trains we plan to keep but also on the trains scheduled to be terminated," Amtrak spokesman Bob Casey said.

In the past, Adams has argued that Amtrak could not make much of a dent in an energy crisis.

Shotgun Blast Wounds Youth

AMARILLO (UPI) — An El Paso teen-ager, armed with eight weapons early today as he attempted to climb out a broken window at a downtown business, was critically wounded by a policeman's shotgun blast after he pointed a gun at an officer, police said.

The victim was identified by police as Antonio Silvas, 17.

A spokeswoman at Northwest Texas Hospital said the youth underwent surgery at midmorning and was listed in "extremely critical" condition.

Police said a patrolman spotted someone inside Jim's Auto Repair Store in downtown Amarillo about 1:10 a.m. today and requested backup units.

A special weapons and tactics team was called to the scene and the burglar was ordered out of the building, but fired two rounds instead, police said.

Officers reportedly attempted to "talk the man out" for about an hour, but spotted him attempting to climb through an open window.

When confronted, the suspect turned on an unidentified officer with a handgun and was struck by a shotgun blast in the upper chest, fired from about 60 to 70 feet away, information officer Lt. Marvin Richardson said.

"He left the officer no choice," said Col. Charles Hollis, assistant police chief.

Computer Picked City's Location

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
Associated Press Writer

CANCUN, Mexico — Only five years old, the Western Hemisphere's newest city since Brasilia already has 34,000 people, a graveyard, a 4-cell jail, 5 churches, a bullfight ring, a small red light district and some of the most spectacular architecture anywhere in the world.

Mulligan's Stew

The city also boasts one undertaker, an 80-man police force, 20 firemen, a pizza parlor, two movie houses, a dozen schools, a small zoo, a newspaper, the promise of a Mexican League baseball franchise and a computer up in Mexico City to tell Mayor Felipe Armano Santana what the future holds in store.

From his handsome, adobe-style city hall, his honor may preside over the only municipality in history that was entirely picked, programmed and packaged by a computer.

Cancun, now the proud sister city of Wichita, Kan., came into being when a computer put to work by FONATUR, Mexico's National Trust for Tourist Development, settled on the almost uninhabited northeast tip of the Yucatan Peninsula as the ideal place to build an idyllic resort.

The tape wheels churned, the blips blipped and the readout from the input came up with an L-shaped Caribbean island, 14 miles long a quarter-mile wide, blessed with 240 days of sunshine a year, cool evenings, miles of white beaches made of coral-based sand so fine it didn't retain the heat. The computer chose a site close to a depressed job market but well out of the hurricane track, with plenty of fresh water, a lovely turquoise-blue lagoon fringed with coconut palms, — all this and some new Mayan ruins which the bulldozers unearthed.

Before Harvard man Antonio Enriqus Svignac, the government's chief technician on the massive project, unleashed the 10,000-strong army of workmen, Port Juarez, the only settlement on the end of the peninsula, had three houses.

There were two or three commercial fishing boats and, off and on, some 65 to 70 field hands in temporary quarters who came to tape chicle, for making chewing gum, from the island's groves of sapodilla trees.

Now the island is visited by 100,000 tourist a year and since emerging from the womb of the computer already has been smiled upon by the likes of Henry Kissinger, Pierre and Margaret Trudeau, the Shah of Iran (in happier days), Ann Margret, the king and queen of Spain, and George Romney, who comes almost every year.

The crocodiles, iguanas and killer bushmaster snakes have been pushed further back into the mangrove swamps to make room for the civilizing influence of boutiques, discotheques, Club Mediterranne's topless beach and gringo tourists in "Hombre Nuclear" T-Shirts" munching on hamburguesas and pizza.

Raquel Quiroga de Alarcon, the wife of Cancun's first mayor, remembers when the city had no streets, no stores and "only 15 houses — we had Number 14." She remembers, because it really was only yesterday, when "everyone ran out of the temporary bank because there was an enormous poisonous snake in front of the teller's cage" and the "long lines outside the little telegraph office all day Saturday: the workers sending their money home to their families. They had been making 8 pesos (40 cents) a day in the fields and now suddenly were making 60 to 80 pesos a day building the roads and hotels."

"Kilometer 6" was the red light district then, named for its location on the first highway built across these tropical sands since the Mayans abandoned their nearby city a millenium and a half ago without leaving enough evidence for the computer to discover why. The girls have since moved closer to town and the tourist action.

Being a new city, designed to avoid the ills of this continent's blighted urban sprawls, Cancun already has a population-free sewage plant that irrigates the 18-hole golf course designed by Robert Trent Jones, miles of pink-paved bicicyle and jogging paths, telephone power lines buried underground, handsome government housing intended for private worker ownership at low down payments and interest rates. No billboards. No neon signs.

Public transportation is frequent and cheap. Buses into town from the beach hotel and condominium charge five pesos (25 cents), taxis, 40 pesos. Violent crime so far is rare. The four jail cells at the moment are empty while the island's 3,200 hotel rooms are running at 95 per cent occupancy.

Cancun has no TV, except a casette-cable system which shows the same show every day for a week, and the only radio programs heard are beamed by Radio Havana. Housing shortages are still a major problem, so are power failures. In fact, the whole city conked out while I was talking to the mayor's secretary. A lineman on a pole outside the window had electrocuted himself.

"Accidents of this kind are common," sighed the secretary. "Everyone is learning his trade at once."

There are other problems. Although the computer carefully monitors the city's master plan, even to controlling liquor prices and the type of shops that can be licensed, some blots already have besmirched the municipal motto: "The way it was is the way it is."

A new fish processing plant befouls the air and pollutes the bay. Hire gencies have been allowed to rent noisy, smelly motorbikes to the tourists who monopolize the jogging path with them. Traffic already is chaotic.

Cancun's greatest asset is not its computerized efficiency but its breathtaking architecture. Architect Moe Castro designed the luxurious Camino Real Hotel so the angle of its outer wall copies the great Mayan pyramid at Chichen-Itza, with the result that each balcony gives the impression of having none above it. He also created a 4,000-square yard lagoon swept by ocean tides created by its own pumps. The El Parian shopping center, near the masssive convention hall, is built like a bullfight arena. The Cuban government, which feels an affinity to Cancun and sends its ministers on frequent official visits, beautified the downtown square with the gift of an enormous sculpture in the shape of a cactus. FONATUR's own headquarters, built around a lovely fountain and courtyard, spreads the message that everything is lovely and up to date in computerized Cancun.

Boy Imitates Superman

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — "Too much TV" led 3-year-old Ronald Rockett to imitate his hero Superman by diving out a third-story window, the child's mother says.

Ronald, who landed head-first on a soft patch of dirt, suffered cuts and bruises on his head and complained his stomach hurt.

He was in guarded condition at Charity Hospital after his fall Monday.

"He was playing with my little nephew and I went into the bathroom," said Abigail Rockett, 18, his mother. "My nephew said, 'Ronald is playing Superman and he fell out the window.' They were playing Superman and he said he could fly."

She ran downstairs and picked up Ronald.

"He was crying a little, but he wasn't crying too much," Miss Rockett said. Ronald did not want to talk much about the incident, she said, but he was afraid other kids would tease him when he got home from the hospital.

"Thank God," she said. "I thought maybe he was more serious than what it was. My momma says that's what too much TV can do. I'm going to have to keep him away from TV so much."

Constant Care Necessary For Kitchen Cabinets

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

While kitchen cabinets these days are made of a variety of materials, including those faced with laminated plastic, many home owners still prefer wood surfaces, believing, quite properly, that they impart a kind of warmth to the room.

It must be admitted, though, that wood is a bit more difficult to maintain than plastic in an area which is continually subjected to grease and grime. Constant attention to the finished surfaces is necessary, not only because of the dirt that settles on the doors and frames of the cabinets, but because everything in a kitchen is handled more than in other rooms. That's why there are usually signs of wear and tear around the door handles of the cabinets.

The door-handle area can sometimes be made to look new again with a little cleaning, a little retouching and a little wax. Speaking of wax, it must be thoroughly removed before any attempt is made to match the marred portion with the surrounding surface. And, of course, that is also true if you decide to refinish the entire cabinet, no matter what type of finishing material you plan to use.

Should the old finish be removed entirely if the cabinet is to be redone? Not if the old finish is in reasonably good condition. Sometimes, you will find that all the cabinet needs is a thorough cleaning. Since the wood should be cleaned whether or not a new finishing material will be applied, you can make the decision after the cleaning procedure. The first step is to take off the old wax. Use a commercial remover, although turpentine or mineral spirits may be used if desired. Whatever you use, it's always wise to provide plenty of ventilation in the room. If some dirt still remains on the wood surface after the removal of the wax, wipe it with a soft, clean cloth that has been soaked in lukewarm water and a mild soap mixture. Dry the wood at once, section by section, rather than waiting until you complete the entirecabinet.

Remember that a new finish, whatever it is, will not adhere properly to a glossy surface. Therefore, all glossy areas must be given a light sanding.

If the old finish is lacquer, you can apply almost any finish over it except a penetrating material, which can be used only on raw wood. But don't apply lacquer over varnish or over anything else but lacquer, otherwise it may damage the old finish.

Briton Says Americans Suffer Acute Anxieties

By ROBERT MUSEL

LONDON (UPI) — Dr. Magnus Pyke views the efforts of American researchers to create a perfectly safe society with a measure of concern. In his opinion as one of the best known scientists in Britain, there can never be such a thing.

"We live on Earth not in heaven," he says, "and Earth is a dangerous place. The motor car is perfectly safe — if you put it down in concrete. The moment it moves there's an element of risk."

Pyke is tall, skinny and angular with arms that flail as he talks. A interview, in fact, involves ducking a series of rights and lefts. In action he looks like he was thought up in a cartoon story conference at the Disney studios. But his head is grey with the wisdom of many years and his opinion is eagerly sought on television and as a lecturer and author.

Americans, he said recently, seem to be suffering from a series of acute anxieties erupting in consumer protests and environment demonstrations on subjects ranging from nuclear contamination to saccharin in soft drinks. He shares very few of these forebodings.

Some of them, he said, are in fact provoked by the normal advance of science which can now refine its measurements to billionths and has discovered along the way that, for example, the delicious tuna contains some mercury as, indeed, it always has.

"If you were an unemployed Scottish laborer leaning against the post office in Aberdeen, you would be absorbing enough radiation from the granite of

"We now demand tests of food and drink so stringent that if Sir Walter Raleigh turned up today with the potato as a new and unknown food, he would never stand a chance of having it accepted. "Potatoes contain a poisonous substance, solanine. But the wide use of potatoes and the extreme rarity of harm from their consumption shows there is little cause for alarm from the knowledge they contain a toxic substance.

"What is it," mused the former secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, "that leads a community to regard the presence of some toxic chemicals with tolerant indulgence while viewing with outraged horror very much smaller concentrations of others?",

Pyke's questions are rhetorical — he has his own answers always ready. Take fresh air, he said. Does the average man really know what there is in the "fresh air" for which he is fighting — now that we can measure infinitesimal fractions?

Since science got to work on it we now know it to contain, along with nitrogen and oxygen, water vapor and carbon dioxide, a whole catalogue of other material — argon, neon, xenon, krypton and helium, organic chemicals from the waxes on the leaves of jungle trees in the Amazon basin, sulphur compounds from volcanoes, radioactive entities from granite rocks.

He does not dismiss the American protests. What he urges is calmer consideration than the subject usually merits in the United States.

"Clearly, prudent surveillance is desirable," he said. "Attention deserves to be paid to the estimate that about two cases of cancer a year could be due to the (nuclear) processing plant at Windscale (in Britain). But while this is so, equal attention must be given to the fact that in burning coal we distribute about 100 tons of uranium and its decay products a year into the environment."

He said present evidence implies that deaths from cancer would be considerably reduced if the power stations burning coal and oil were replaced by nuclear ones. But Pyke said man long ago weighed coal's advantages and disadvantages and found it useful.

DR. LAMB

Unadulterated Nonsense

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 15 years old and I weigh 150 pounds. I have tried exercising but that doesn't seem to help. Most all of my fat is in my legs and hips. I once tried an exercise class for the lower part of my body, but I heard a rumor that if you lose fat in your legs that it will go to your behind. Is this true? If it is, I don't know what I am going to do because my behind is big enough.

DEAR READER — That's pure unadulterated nonsense. If you lose fat from your legs, you'll lose it and it won't go anywhere else.

There really isn't any such thing as spot reducing. If you follow a program that causes you to lose fat calories, it will eventually affect the undesirable fat deposits.

Simply put, that means you have to be on a diet that limits your calorie intake below the level of the amount of calories your body uses. You can affect this relationship in two ways — through a diet that decreases your calories or through an activity program that increases your use of calories.

Your resting metabolism is important too because you use calories at rest, but there's a limited amount that you can expect to do about that unless you want to start a weight lifting program and develop muscles. I am sending you The Health Letter number 4-7, Weight Losing Diet. Other readers who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. You can consider this simply as a guide.

The Health Letter I'm sending you will provide the framework for a balanced 1300 calorie diet. You shouldn't consume less than that amount on a daily basis.

The rest of your weight control program should be achieved by exercise. Your should not try to lose more than one pound a week and you shouldn't stick to a rigid diet, even this one, for long periods of time. About every six weeks you should enjoy a six-week period of a balanced maintenance diet without weight gain or loss.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I'm a 36-year-old female. For the past two weeks I've been having hunger pains where my heart is located. About 15 minutes after I eat I feel hungry again. The pains are not intolerable but they are there. If I drink a cup of coffee they go away and start again in about 30 mintues and then I'll eat a cookie or some candy. I'm size 12 now and I don't want to gain weight. Maybe you can help me. Do you think I have an ulcer or is it my nerves or my heart?

DEAR READER — There's no way you'll know for certain what's causing your pain without a medical examination. Since you're a young woman it's most unlikely that the symptoms you're describing are related to heart disease, at least the type associated with heart attacks and fatty-cholesterol deposits in the coronary arteries.

Relief of pain with food is often a symptom of ulcers but before such a diagnosis is made, you should have X-ray studies.

In the meantime, I would suggest that you change your life style. That may significantly alter your symptoms. Don't use coffee to get rid of your pain. Eliminate all coffee, tea, colas or chocolate — all of which contain caffeine. Also, if you're a cigarette smoker, stop at once.

Judge Delays Sentencing

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Dan White, 32, whose voluntary manslaughter conviction for the shootings of Mayor George Moscone and gay Supervisor Harvey Milk led to a night of rioting, will be sentenced July 3.

White, an ex-supervisor and former policeman, had been scheduled for sentencing Monday, but the proceeding was delayed because Superior Court Judge Walter Calcagno was hospitalized for an undisclosed ailment.

White's conviction on May 21 was followed by rioting when homosexuals conducted a rally at City Halt to protest what they called a too lenient verdict. Windows at City Hall were smashed and police cars were burned.

The verdict carries with it a four-to-seven-year jail term. The prosecution had sought a conviction on a charge of first-degree murder which could have meant a death sentence.

Moscone and Milk were shot in their City Hall offices on Nov. 27 after the mayor refused to withdraw White's resignation from the Board of Supervisors.

Flooding To Cost Manitoba Millions

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Premier Sterling Lyon sai the bill from Manitob's severe springs floods probably will come to between $20 million and $30 million.

Lyon made the rough estimate Monday after announcing the receipt of 2,200 applications for compensation under the federal-provincial flood relief program.

He said about 800 more claims are expected before the end of summer.

Trapping, Breeding Slated For Condors

WASHINGTON (AP) — While conceding that "it may already be too late" to save the California condor from extinction, the government announced this week it would begin a program to trap the birds and breed them in captivity.

Lynn Greenwalt, director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said four immature birds will be trapped in Kern County north of Los Angeles.

"If there is any hope, it will be through captive breeding," Greenwalt said.

Fewer than 30 of the birds are believed to survive in the mountains north of Los Angeles. The 20-pound vultures — North America's largest land bird — have a nine-foot wingspan and black plumage and resemble the common buzzard.

Detroit Man Convinced Investments Will Double

NEW YORK (AP) — As a member of the Mutual Investment Club of Detroit, Tom O'Hara has invested $6,425, mostly in monthly $10 or $20 amounts, over a 39-year period. The investments now are valued at $71,658.

That's not the whole story. With funds he withdrew, O'Hara paid off the mortgage on a home, sent his two boys through an exclusive private school, and has just given one of them $10,000 to buy a house.

What remains, he says, is far underpriced. In the next few years he is confident the club's holdings will double, which would mean of course that his holdings would double too. Club members win or lose together.

The club's investments during this span totaled $121,668.91 at the end of April. At the same time, the 16 members counted assets of $628,000. An interviewer didn't insist on including the precise penny amounts.

Did members possess extraordinary investment skills? They were bright, obviously, and they had a deep interest in the market. Two of them are investment analysts, but the others pursue various callings.

"You don't have to be sophisticated," said O'Hara. "You simply follow your principles and be consistent." By that he means you don't "play" the market, but invest on a regular schedule for a long time.

You also reinvest all dividends. And you don't worry about market fluctuations; values are recognized and prices adjust themselves over a period of years. Moreover, the companies chosen grow with the economy.

Choice rather than trading skill is emphasized. The club picks some big institutional favorites, but it also searches out smaller, fast-growing companies — companies whose prices should double in five years.

O'Hara, an accountantand one of the founders of the club, now is administrative head of the National Association of Investment Clubs, which provides materials and advise to 4,300 independent clubs.

Working from an office in Royal Oak, a Detroit suburb, O'Hara can call on the expertise of many analysts who serve on the board or on advisory committees. And all benefit from the wisdom of George Nicholson.

Analysis

Nicholson, along with O'Hara a founder of the Mutual Investent Club, is also recognized as founder of the national — and now international — investment club movement. He is also a professional investment adviser.

Most members of the Mutual Club, however, consider themselves to be amateur, part-time investors. As openings occur because of death or geographical transfers, they purchase shares in order to join.

One writes automotive manuals, another runs a small-town store, two are retired. A factory owner, an insurer, a doctor, a veterinarian, another analyst, a salesman and a business manager complete the list.

Some members, past and present, owe more to the club than a healthy personal portfolio. One parlayed his investments into ownership of four restaurants. Another founded a factory employing more than 100 workers.

In most instances, club members also maintain private portfolios, some worth much more than their club investments.

O'Hara doesn't claim that other clubs can do as well. In fact, many clubs have disappeared in recent years. At its peak, association membership exceeded 14,000 clubs. Then the bad days came.

What O'Hara and Nicholson and others in the association maintain, however, is that a club that endures is one that succeeds.

In the past week, for example, some clubs have lost assets because some institutional investors have temporarily soured on International Business Machines.

Discount Bonds Recommended For Conservative Investors

NEW YORK (AP) — With speculation rampant on Wall Street that interest rates might be heading lower, investors are scrambling for ways to profit from such a downturn.

There are many ways to do this — some of them, such as the rapidly growing financial futures markets, suitable only for the sophisticated and well-to-do.

But John Dennis Brown, a Houston-based investment advisor who publishes a twice-a-month letter called "The Advisor," argues that there is a good, and less speculative, approach that investors of more modest means might consider.

He recommends buying so-called discount bonds, which he says have a double appeal — current high yields ranging up to 10 percent, and the possibility of capital gains as well should interest rates indeed come down significantly.

"Discount bonds" are not to be confused with "junk bonds" whose issuers' financial standing has fallen. The discount bonds Brown is talking about are from such top-rated entities as American Telephone & Telegraph, Ford and even the U.S. Treasury.

"They are in the hole not because of a poor credit rating but because interest rates have advanced since the issue was syndicated," he wrote. "If new issues are available at 10 percent yields, then old bond issues will decline to approximately a 10 percent yield level if the issues are of similar quality and maturity.

"It is these discount bonds we suggest conservative investors purchase now to immediately lock up funds for the unquestioned high returns and the certainty, if interest rates do turn here, of capital ains."

If, say, prevailing yields on bonds were to fall to 7 percent at some point, then American Telephone & Telegraph bonds carrying a stated interest rate of 7 percent would logically trade around "par," or 100.

As the bond market has rallied recently amid hopes for just such a decline, the AT&T 7 percent bonds maturing in 2001 have in fact climbed from 78½ about three weeks ago to 82 as of late last week.

In the period of declining rates from 1974 to 1977, those same bonds rose from 74 to above 96, Brown pointed out, for a long-term capital gain of close to 30 percent — and during that time anyone who bought them at 74 was getting a steady 9.45 percent interest return as well.

Of course, those bonds subsequently fell back into the 70s when rates went back up, a fact which illustrates the risk an investor takes in this situation. If the interest-rate bulls are wrong, and rates go higher still in the months ahead, those who bought them today would be faced with losses, at least on paper.

In 2001, AT&T is committed to paying off those bonds at 100. But some investors may not be prepared to wait out the next 22 years for that payoff, particularly if inflation continues to erode the value of the capital they have tied up.

Another problem small investors need to be aware of: Bonds can be bought and sold through brokers, just like stocks, but the bond market is more attuned to big orders than to small ones.

"Bonds trade much more thinly than stocks," Brown said. "Often, an unwary bond buyer has found that a market order in a small lot of bonds can be executed four or five points above the last trade."

For that reason, he recommends that instead of market orders — orders to buy at whatever price prevails — buyers use "limit orders," which specify a price.

Capitalist Incentives Introduced In Chinese Communes

LOKANG COMMUNE, China (UPI) — Capitalist-style incentives are being introduced in China's communes, effectively scrapping the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung's vision of rural socialism.

The 28,000 members of the Lokang Commune in China's Guangdong Province are paid on the basis of how hard they work, not how much they need. They are allowed to engage in "sideline occupations" by raising poultry, growing vegetables or making bamboo baskets and then selling the goods in the open market.

The commune is gradually being mechanized to help spur its production of lychee nuts, grapefruit, oranges, plums and other fruit, most of which is exported.

These changes spell a radical reversal of the commune concept introduced by Mao 20 years ago. Commune members would receive equal pay and their products sold to the state at fixed prices to help feed Chin's hungry masses. They would rely on raw manpower, not imported machines.

Lokang is obviously considered one of Guangdong Province's most successful communes or it would not have been shown to foreign visitors. Other communes, for example, are threatened with disintegration and a few face the prospect of widespread hunger, according to provincial radio broadcasts.

Despite the fact that Lokang is a model commune, a day spent on the 35-square-mile tract of land about 20 miles from Canton provided insight into China's agriculture, the most important sector of its economy.

Chung Hsiang-kuo, the 33-year-old, Cantonese-speaking commune leader, said Lokang was divided into seven "production brigades" and these in turn were subdivided into 102 "production teams."

"Members of the production teams are assigned points on the basis of how hard they work and their income is based on these points," he said through an interpreter.

The workers have become "very competitive" and their output has increased, he said. "Each commune member also may engage in sideline occupations and sell their products in the market," Chung said. "This income belongs to the commune members individually."

The bustling rural markets can be seen while driving throught the rural countryside. Peasants bring huge bundles of scallions and other fruits and vegetables to the markets on bicycles and then spread out their wares.

One recent broadcast from Canton's Nanfang Ribao southern daily newspaper said the sideline occupations have "been revived and developed more quickly, millions of private plots of the peasant households have been well cultivated and the number of households raising pigs and poultry has greatly increased."

As a result of these capitalist-style incentives, there are signs of a growing disparity of incomes on the commune, again hitting at the root of Mao's socialist vision.

The foreign visitors were guided to a series of "typical peasant homes" where they were allowed to sample the rural lifestyle. The peasants said their annual incomes ranged from $600 to $1,000.

A kind of "keeping up with the Joneses" syndrome had cropped up with each family seeking the better things of life. Some women had sewing machines, while others did not. One mother of three small children said she was saving up to buy a television set.

Chung, the commune leader, also spoke with pride of the commune's 145 tractors which plow 15 percent of the land under cultivation. Although the commune specializes in fruit, it grows grains and other foodstuffs to feed itself and its livestock.

Western analysts believe one of the most serious problems facing the agricultural mechanization drive is what to do with the tens of millions of peasants who could be displaced.

On a single acre of rice or sweet potato or other crop, as many as 50 or 60 peasants can be seen pulling weeds or using water buffalo to plow new ground. If, for example, one tractor can take care of 100 acres, that means 5,000 peasants are displaced.

But Chung dismissed this problem, saying he hoped mechanization would merely give the commune members more leisure time and not disrupt their way of life.

Another major shift in China's commune policy is away from grains and toward fruit and vegetables, which are exported. Lokang and other communes are exporting great quantities of fruit and vegetables, primarily to Hong Kong, even though China itself does not have enough food.

New Mexicans Earn Extra Money By Trapping

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI) — A growing demand in Europe for chic fur coats has turned into extra dollars in the pockets of New Mexicans who are trapping bobcats, coyotes and foxes.

"It's a lot of work, but it's profitable to a person who is willing to take the time," said George Merril, a trapper who is also assistant chief of game management with the New Mexico Game and Fish Department.

"Last year, I probably made about $1,500 from trapping, which was a nice help in paying for my son's way through college."

New Mexico is among the top three states in exports of bobcat pelts and one of the largest exporters of coyote and fox pelts. Last year, the state shipped out 19,774 coyote pelts, 4,606 bobcat pelts and 7,101 fox pelts. If trappers are successful, the number is expected to increase this year.

"The demand is strong and still growing because the price for the pelts continues to climb," said Game and Fish Department Deputy Director Wain Evans.

R.L. Cox, an Albuquerque fur and hide dealer, says many of the pelts are being shipped directly to Europe, where demand remains strong for fur coats.

One trapper, who asked not to be identified, said he believed many of the bobcat pelts were being used in Europe in coats represented as made from lynx fur, while the coyote was being represented as wolf fur.

Cox said he has no first hand knowledge of whether that was true, but said in the United States, all pelts must be accurately labeled and cannot be represented as being from another animal.

Evans said demand for bobcat fur is the strongest of the three major exported pelts.

"This is the last of the spotted cats available for use in fur coats," he said. "The quality of the spots, which are located on the belly, determines the price of a pelt. They can go for up to $400."

While bobcats are not on the endangered list, they are on a list of animals potentially threatened with extinction unless their numbers are carefully monitored. The list was prepared by the Convention on International Trade. Under that list, the pelts must be clearly tagged so an inventory may be maintained on the number of animals killed.

Evans said a study is underway to determine whether the number of bobcats in the state is declining. He said although the number of bobcats trapped last year was down compared to 1977, the decrease may be due a variety of factors, including weather or a higher mortality rate among bobcat kittens.

Coyotes, one of the livestock industry's major predators, and foxes are not on endangered lists. Coyote pelts can bring about $60 each while fox pelts go for about $50.

Game and Fish Department officials estimate there are between 1,000 and 2,500 trappers in New Mexico. Of those, about 50-75 percent are believed to be actively involved in trapping.

"Probably none of these trappers can make a full-time living off of trapping," said Merrill. "Mostly, they're subsidizing their regular income with trapping efforts."

Merrill said trapping is a time-consuming activity.

"You have to run your trap line almost daily," he said. "That means you go out in blizzards, in the rain, and most of the time at night. But it's enjoyable to me and profitable if you stick with it."

Most of the trapping is done from the late fall to the early spring, Merrill said.

Coyotes and foxes are usually caught with scent baits. Bobcats can be trapped with either scent baits or "flag sets" — items which flutter in the breeze and arouse the animals' natural curiosity.

"Even though they are the most trapwary, we catch more coyotes simply because there are more of them around," Merrill said. "Bobcats aren't as trap wary as coyotes, but they are fewer and further between."

Merrill said a trapper is lucky to trap 10 bobcats in a season. Last year, he said he trapped 21 coyotes and 7 foxes, but no bobcats. His son caught 11 bobcats last year, he said.

Disabled Cop Continues To Fight Crime

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — "I don't do anything average citizens couldn't do if they were observant," says crime fighter Bob Shelton, whose only weapons are binoculars and a police radio.

"Nothing goes on around here that doesn't happen in almost any neighborhood," said Shelton.

Because he is disabled by a heart condition, the 52-year-old Shelton wages his war on crime from his front porch or back yard.

Or he peers from behind curtains in his bedroom window where he can turn an experienced ear to a 16-channel police radio.

"I spend an awful lot of time back in that bedroom," Shelton said. "Watching for them."

"I'm lucky," Shelton said. "I'm at the right place at the right time."

The one-time Oklahoma Highway Patrol dispatcher has a stack of notebooks filled with suspects' names and descriptions and license-tag numbers of wanted vehicles. He's made the notations from the police radio.

Then he sits in a convenient vantage point and waits for criminals to drive by. Often, they do.

Sometimes, officers who take information from him don't take him seriously, Shelton admitted, adding, "There is one thing I don't like and that is being patronized."

But his information has led to recovery of stolen cars and the arrest of numerous felons. Twice, he has been called to testify about something he has seen from his bedroom window.

"I've never been one to run and hide from anything," Shelton said.

"If you watch people for 40 years the way I've done, you can tell if they're a drug addict or if they're running from something," he said. "You can see it in their faces through a pair of high-powered binoculars."

MARMADUKE by Brad Anderson

"A dogcatcher is roaming the neighborhood."

You and the Law

Presented by the State Bar of Texas

Q: Last week I filed for divorce. Can I require my husband to move out of our house until our divorce case is completed?

A: Yes. The judge who will consider your divorce decree can issue an order requiring your husband to leave until the case is tried in court. If your husband does not comply with the court order, you may ask the judge to direct the sheriff to enforce the order.

Q: How can I copyright water-colors I have painted?

A: Artists cannot always prevent unauthorized reproduction and distribution of their work. Their rights are controlled by common law copyright laws. Before art works are publicly displayed, the artist has absolute control. Once art works are publicly displayed, the artist must comply with federal copyright laws which require that a statutory copyright notice be affixed to the art work, and a copyright from be filed with the United States Copyright Office. The result of failure to comply is that the artist loses all control over reproduction and sale of his or her work.

Q: When I opened my new business, I was required to post a surety bond of what I considered to be a large amount before I could be issued a sales tax permit. A friend of mine in a similar business was required to post a much smaller bond. Why are bonding requirements different?

A: The bond is required under the Texas Sales Tax law for all new retail businesses. Normally, the bond amount is equal to three times the level of sales tax that the merchant estimates he will collect during three months. If that estimate proves too high or too low, his bond will be adjusted up or down to reflect his actual tax collections level. This adjustment will be made by the State Comptroller of Public Accounts through the Comptroller's field offices around the state. If the new retail merchant remits his sales tax collections properly during a two-year period, the bond requirement can be removed.

Q: I inherited several hundred shares of stock from my father. Is my husband's permission required for selling this stock issued in my name?

A: No. Under Texas law the property you inherit during your marriage is your separate property. You may manage your separate property — even to the extent of selling it — yourself, without the consent or signature of your spouse. In addition, the proceeds of the separate property remain your separate funds.

Q: I bought a pair of boots under a layaway plan, but am unable to complete the payments. Can I demand a refund of my payments made so far?

A: No. There is no law requiring the merchant to refund your payments on layaway purchases. You should ask the merchant whether he will make such a refund before you begin making payments. If the merchant agrees and makes refunds, this agreement should be in writing. You should keep a copy of this agreement until you have made full payment.

Q: Is there a law requiring a person to have a license to peddle goods or services from door to door in Texas?

A: There is no state law in Texas requiring such a license. However, any retailer should make provision to collect and pay state sales tax if he is required to do so. Contact the nearest field office of the State Comptroller for details.

Some municipalities attempt to prohibit, limit or license door-to-door salesmen. Check with your local city hall on this matter.

Send your question to "You and the Law," State Bar of Texas, P.O. Box 12487, Austin, 78711. Answers may appear in columns in hypothetical terms; personal answers not possible.

Southerners Adopting Yankee Dialects

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Mothers and fathers of the South take heed — there's a trend among yo' young'uns to abandon the southern dialect and adopt the speech patterns of the Nawth.

"This isn't a new idea — that Southern-American English is disappearing in the South," Kenneth Shields, an associate professor of English at Memphis State University, said in a recent interview.

But Shields and a group of graduate seminar students believe they are among the first to identify an age grading.

They surveyed 75 Shelby County residents, breaking them down by age — over 55; 26-to-55; and 25 or younger — and asked them to choose from five regional dialects.

The dialects used were North Midland, which is prevalent in Shields' home state, Pennsylvania; Inland North, the Great Lakes area; Eastern New England; South Midland, which includes Middle and East Tennessee; and Southern-American English, which takes in West Tennessee and the Deep South.

"Field workers played tapes of the five regional dialects and people were supposed to rate them," Shields said. "The over-55 group rated the southern dialect significantly higher than the others. It dropped to second in the second group and it dropped clear to third in the youngest group."

Shields said neither education, occupation or race had much influence on a person's preference.

"Age was the only one," he said.

North Midland dialect rated highest overall, he said, followed closely by Inland North.

Shields, 27, believes one of the main reasons young southerners lean toward the northern dialect is radio and television.

The theory is that young southerners who have been exposed daily to northern-speaking broadcasters and actors most of their lives, tend to mimic what some linguists call "network English."

"Probably, too, a nationally oriented education system might have something to do with it," Shields said.

The most pronounced change in the southern speech pattern, Shields said, is the return of the letter "r." It's now car instead of cah and poor instead of po, he said.

But he said he didn't mean to imply that one day there'd be an entire nation of Northern-sounding people.

"I don't think we'll ever reach a time when we have complete uniformity. That would be a shame," he said. "But we are all going to talk much more similarly."

MORE KENNEDY SUPPORT

NEW YORK (AP) — Six Democratic members of the City Council on Monday announced their support of Sen. Edward Kennedy as a candidate for president. "It is becoming increasingly clear that the choice that is opening to us is not one between Kennedy and Carter, but between Kennedy and Reagan," the council members said in a statement. The Democrats criticized President Carter. "No one wants to see a president fail. But ... this one has failed."

Growing Public Sympathy Seen For President

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — We are now starting to see published suggestions that Jimmy Carter take the Lyndon Leap — announce that he will not be a candidate for re-election.

The logic behind this friendly advice (mostly from ultras of the conservative and liberal stripe) is that Carter is so low down in the polls and so far over his head trying to deal with the nation's problems that his best move would be to step aside and let both the Democrats and Republicans put forward their best candidates for 1980.

The first impulse of the president and his friends upon hearing such suggestions probably is indignation, but perhaps they should recall the response of Marine Maj. James Devereaux when asked during World War II what his besieged and outnumbered Wake Island garrison needed.

The doughty leatherneck was reported to have said, "Send more Japs." Carter might say, "Send more critics." Why? Because it looks from here as if there is a small but growing wave of public sympathy for Carter forming.

Americans certainly are unhappy about inflation and the energy crunch. But that does not mean, as Carter's opposition in Congress and in industry seems to think, that the president will get all the blame from the public.

The public, with reason, probably is hopelessly confused by the continuing battle between the White House and Capitol Hill over energy. But it is a good guess that Americans are aware that

Commentary

Carter at least has offered a series of proposals, while Congress can't seem to come up with anything.

The same situation prevails on inflation. Carter has offered proposals for reducing the federal deficit and trying to persuade both business and labor to hold down price and wage increases. But liberals say more must be spent for social programs and conservatives demand more for defense hardware. And both unions and businesses seem to be looking for ways to evade the wageprice guidelines.

There is in this a perfect chance for Carter to run a Harry Truman type campaign — an appeal to the people to support the one person in Washington who is trying to represent them rather than some special interest. If people are starting to feel sorry for Carter, he might be able to convert that feeling into votes for the lonely little guy standing up to the big boys and catching a lot of flak for his efforts.

It would be strange to see Carter, after four years in the White House, running an "outsider" campaign once again. But Truman, who came to the presidency with more than a decade of Washington experience, managed to project the image of himself as a decent sort of fellow who was simply trying to do his job in the face of overwhelming opposition.

What came of that was Truman's 1948 "miracle" comeback. The conditions may be shaping up for Carter to try to duplicate it in 1980.

Report Says Schools Violating Decision

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly 20 percent of all U.S. law schools appear to be violating the Supreme Court's 1978 decision striking down admissions standards based on racial quotas, a new report says.

The report, published by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, said 23 law schools out of a sampling of 128 fell short of implementing the decision to some degree. In last year's case involving Allan Bakke, the high court declared illegal a special admissions program at the University of California Medical School at Davis.

Underground Home Cuts Heating Costs

CAVE DWELLERS — Margaret and Andrew Davis sit in front of the Franklin stove that provides heat for the stone and cement house they built into the side of a hill in Armington, Ill. Last winter Davis, a constructor, spent $1.29 to heat his new eight-room, earth-sheltered home. (AP Laserphoto)

ARMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — Several winters ago, Andy Davis got a monthly bill of $167 for heating his three-bedroom rented home with gas. He told his family, "I've had enough. We're going to move into a cave." And they did.

Five of Davis' nine children still were living at home when Davis, a son and a son-in-law began digging into the side of of a hill. Davis, who is in the construction business, eventually finished an energy-saving, eight-room underground home with gleaming stones embedded in concrete walls, large oval front windows, a fan system for even-flow ventilation and a Franklin stove.

For all of last winter, one of the worst in central Illinois history, Davis heated his home for $1.29. "That's what it cost me for gasoline to run my chain saw to cut up some logs into fire wood," he said.

"We're 15 feet underground and there's 5½ feet of earth on top of the specially constructed concrete roofing.

"The temperature varies very little. It's a natural constant 57 or 58 degrees, regardless of what it is outside, and this easily can be raised to the desired comfort level. And our ventilation system and construction and insulation methods do away with moisture," said Davis, 50. "I have no roof to patch, no gutters to clean, no painting to do and we're storm proof, fire proof and quiet. We might have to mow the roof now and then."

If this sounds like a sales pitch, it is. Davis has incorporated into Davis Caves Inc. — "Energy Efficient Earth-Powered Homes."

In two years he and his top assistant, Mel Wilcox, have sold 70 franchises in 25 states for "earth-powered homes."

"For years, we've been working against Mother Nature instead of having her working for us," said Wilcox. "Our homes are 5 to 10 percent less costly to build than the conventional home, but the big savings start when you live in it.

"The homes should last for generations and provide a stable environment," he said. "Most people who come to us are getting ready to retire, or are younger people who can see down the road.

"Davis Caves of Wisconsin, managed by Stephen Koch at Wautoma, has an entire self-sufficient undeground village on 27 acres, solar-and wind-powered," said Wilcox. "An underground apartment or condo complex is being planned for McHenry or Lake counties in Illinois by Mitchell Lazarus' Eco-Terra company of Lake Zurich.

"So far we have 3,000 dwellings with the underground concept and a church at Converse, Ind.

"One of the most elaborate family underground residences is being built in the Bloomington (Ill.) area by Dr. Harold McGinnis. For about $200,000 he will have a 14-room home with swimming pool and three-car garage, four baths and office space," said Wilcox.

Homemade Furniture Exhibited

Anyone who has ever looked at a piece of commercially-made furniture and sighed for the days of good, old-fashioned craftsmanship, should rejoice.

A small but vital group of American craftsmen is keeping alive the tradition of fine workmanship in handmade wood furniture of outstanding creativity.

These woodworkers, who are scattered all over the country, got a chance to show the public just how good "good" can be in an exhibition of handmade furniture which opened recently at the American Craft Museum in New York.

The exhibition will remain on view in New York through July 15, after which it will travel throughout the U.S. and Canada.

There are more than 40 pieces on display and another 60 shown on video slides. The pieces run the gamut from chairs to tables, bookcases, sofas, clocks, lamps and other accessories. You are unlikely to find anything like them on retail sales floors anywhere.

The woods, workmanship, creativity, liveliness and humor of the pieces are impressive. And a chat with some of the furniture makers at the opening of the show made it clear that intelligence, mastery of craft and respect for the tradition of woodworking are among their important assets.

Since many of the contributors to the show are on the south side of 40, it seems clear that today's young craftsmen are fully qualified to translate the values of the past into the idiom of the present.

What turns someone on to the anachronistic craft of making furniture by hand, we asked at the opening.

Judy Kensley McKie, an artist from Boston, put it very simply: "I needed a chair."

When she made her first chair 10 years ago, Mrs. McKie found the experience so satisifying that she readily found reasons to create more furniture for herself.

Eventually, friends and acquaintances began asking for custom-made piecs.

Today, Judy Kensley McKie maintains a studio and builds furniture to order.

She and other exhibitors who earn their living by their craft find a growing public for one-of-a-kind pieces that may qualify as the heirlooms of the future.

Group Names Secretary

ALLIANCE, Neb. (UPI) — The Nebraska Stockgrowers Association said Roy Lilley has been named executive secretary of the organization.

Pat McGinley, association president, said Lilley would start his job when arrangements were completed to move him to Alliance.

Lilley, born and raised on a ranch in Virginia Dale, Colo., graduated from Colorado State University with a bachelor of science degree in animal science in 1952.

Since 1965 he has been executive secretary of the International Brangus Breeders Association in San Antonio.

Lilley, his wife Maxine and three daughters and son live in Boerne, northwest of San Antonio.

CONFUSING REGULATIONS

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A U.S. Energy Department official, citing a morass of confusing regulations, told gasoline retailers to "dig in your heels" against his department's auditors. Jim Kirk of the agency's Kansas City office of hearings and appeals urged the retailers to resist the auditors "because the laws are just too complex for anyone to understand."

Movie Introduces Young Actor To New Audience

By JEFF WILSON

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Teenage idol Shaun Cassidy has been doing some serious thinking about his career and whether — perhaps "over the hill" at the age of 20 — he can keep the fickle bubble-gum set squealing.

His squeeky-clean, boyish good looks have kept his face on the covers of teen magazines for 4 years. And despite the monthly challenge of pretty-boy newcomers, Cassidy has managed to reign as THE Teeny-bopper heart throb.

But his critically-acclaimed dramatic debut in the television special "Like Normal People" has opened up the eyes of a much older audience. He has broken away from the shallow Joe Hardy role and become a convincing actor.

"I think the movie opened up an older audience to me," Cassidy said. "They may not buy my records or go to my concerts, out I may have gained some respect."

Cassidy is a bit surprised at the reaction from the film colony.

"Suddenly, I have received all these scipts to play crippled people and people with no arms and stuff," he said. "It seems their scope is so small."

He's also maturing into a convincing rock 'n' roller and is curious whether teen-agers will still jam the concert halls. He hopes the bubble-gum set will grow up with him.

"This is very strange," Cassidy said. "I have to find some sort of a way of doing both at the same time, but I haven't been able to figure that out yet. Every time I really go for a push in one direction, the other intrudes."

His latest push, a two-month tour to promote a new Warner Bros. album, "Room Service," starts July 4 in Harrsburg, Pa., where "we'll get a little energy to carry us through the tour."

"I'm a little bit nervous about what the response will be," he said. "I haven't been on tour for a year and this is my first album out in a year. I don't know what the reception will be out there, but you don't know unless you go out and see."

Thankfully, it's a disco-less LP.

"I couldn't do it," he laughed. "It may be stiff city for me from now on, but I don't like disco."

Cassidy enjoys Southern California's "fast lane" life style — when he's not on tour shuttling from city to city by jet, he's pulling gears in his new $50,000 black Porsche Carrera.

"The Porsche is the best thing I've bought in terms of a luxury-type thing," he said. "I don't splurge on myself much because I am very conscious of the way I spend money. I know I am making all this money in a short span of time and I have to make it last the rest of my life."

Cassidy is "very investment conscious" and has settled into his second Santa Monica Mountains canyon home — "mainly to avoid the kids who crowded into my front yard late at night."

"It became such an ordeal," he said. "I couldn't be rude to them and say 'get out of here.'"

He conceded most people in Los Angeles are "blase" about running into entertainers, but said he sometimes resorts to wearing disguises when dining out or, more often, stays at home.

"It's hard for me to relax much," he said. "I'm just very self-conscious. There is a little paranoia there, I guess. It seems people are always watching me eat, that sort of thing. And I don't like to go out somewhere and run into a bunch of photographers.

"I stay home quite a bit, but it's not a Howard Hughes-ish type of thing. It's important not to fall into that. You have to go out and be with the people a lot."

Right now, he said, his music career is most important. And Cassidy isn't worried about being dethroned as teen idol monarch.

"I really try not to worry myself about it," he says. "I think the magazines are kind of hurting for new faces right now. Both the teen magazines and the movie magazines ae writing fantasy type stories, but the movie magizines tend toward the negative sort of thing while the teen magazines go for the idol type of thing. I think they are healthy.

"I would no more want to remain in the teen magazines than the magazines would want to keep me in the magazines. I don't think you lose your audience just because you stop being the poster king."

Cassidy said he has "been conscious all along" of the generally fickle side of his teenage audience.

"I have never tried to milk the teen idol thing for all it was worth, then say, 'Okay, I'm serious now.'"

For those disappointed that he may be abandoning the puberty generation: relax. There's another Cassidy on the horizon.

Although his actress-mother Shirley Jones wants him to "avoid the teen-idol shuffle," 14-year-old Patrick Cassidy, Shaun's blond, blue-eyed brother, has already discussed his future with several business agents.

Actress Advocates 'Open Infidelity'

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Shirley MacLaine says she believes "open infidelity could save a lot of marriages," according to an article in the July issue of Ladies' Home Journal.

"The jealousy that hurts some marriages is actually a fear of the unknown," said the actress, herself married and involved at times in well-publicized romances. "You think your partner loves someone else because something passes between them in private so you feel jealous and rejected."

Miss MacLaine, 45, has been married since 1955 to Steve Parker, a businessman in Tokyo, and sees him twice a year. They have a 22-year-old daughter, Sachi. "Obviously the marriage is not important to us, but the friendship is everything," she said.

Miss MacLaine said her recent involvement with New York Daily News columnist Pete Hamill ended because he wanted to get married and "anything conventional would make me feel trapped."

In the Journal article, Miss MacLaine also claimed her Manhattan apartment was ransacked four times by the CIA because she was high on former President Richard Nixon's enemies list.

She said she was convinced the CIA was responsible because of information from a friend within the agency.

"Nothing was ever stolen," she went on. "just all the drawers dumped on the floor, the furniture turned over like a tornado hit."

Pornography Big Seller In Videotape Market

By PHILIP GREER
And MYRON KANDEL

Have you been wondering why your neighbor was so anxious to buy a videotape recorder when you can't find much on TV that you care to watch the first time around, let alone tape for viewing later on?

Maybe it's because of the features that can be found on cassettes that aren't likely to show up on the broadcast screen. Things like "Deep Throat" and "Behind the Green Door."

Pornography — mostly X-rated movies — is the hottest seller in the fledging videotape market and, according to a couple of observers, a large factor in the rapid growth of the home-TV business itself.

Lollos is vice president and creative director of Video Tape Network, a producer of cassette programs (but no porn) that's been selling to the college market for about 10 years and is just beginning to move into the home recorder market.

"The stuff is being sold in well-known stores," Lollos said. "It's the first time a guy can walk into a legitimate store with his wife or his girlfriend and bu pornography. They're selling like crazy."

People in the business say it's impossible to measure the size of the TV-porn market because of a welter of companies (many of them selling identical products) and all kinds of legitimate and under-the-table distribution systems. Some trade observers, though, have estimated that full-length movies racked up about $50 million in sales in 1978, at an average cost of about $80 for each cassette.

If that's true, it means the X-rated movies accounted for about 80 percent of sales in the entire market for pre-recorded home TV entertainment last year. And it isn't at all bad when you consider the fact that there were only about a half-million videotape players in American homes at the end of last year (that figure is expected to double, at least, by the Christmas season this year).

Lollos and John Friede, president of VTN, hope to cash in on the market for taped productions that's being created largely by the TV-porn business. They say they're the biggest independent producers of pre-recorded TV features (bigger competitors are tied to motion picture companies), but they concede that, up to now, they can't compete with the pornography.

"We've heard guesses that there are about three to three and one-half pornographic cassettes being sold now for every non-porn sale, "Friede said. "I don't know how they know that, but it wouldn't surprise me."

As the number of recorders grows, a lot of companies are going to pile into the cassette business — a number have done so already — but Friede and Lollos think they have an edge on the field because of their experience selling to colleges. "We have an audience of about 4 million students," Friede says, "and we get feedback from them — boy, do we get feedback. They let us know what they want, and it lets us keep up with the market."

VTN's first home retail catalog went into the mail about six weeks ago — they also sell through distributors and retail stores. From the orders that have come in (prices: $39.95 to $59.95), the company is piecing together a picture of the typical cassette buyer and the better-selling properties.

"They're about 35 years old," Lollos said, "and the stuff they've been buying reflects that. They want stuff they can't get on their TV sets — music, comedy. A Lenny Bruce show that we have is a very big seller, for instance. They also have small children and they buy programing for them, figuring, I guess, that if the kids are going to watch TV, at least they want them to see something better than they get on the commercial stations."

Actually, I guess, it isn't much different from the reasons people buy the porn films," Lollos continued. "That's also stuff they can't get on regular TV. And having some X-rated films around is a kind of status symbol, just like having the recorder itself."

Friede and Lollos think the porn-TV market will reach a saturation point, growing only a fast as the sale of recorders, and that then the market for other products will grow faster.

"After they have the top three or four porno pictures, they won't be buying any more," Lollos said. "The same thing's happening with feature films. They buy blockbusters like 'MASH' and 'The French Connection' and 'Patton,' but when you get past those, there isn't much. There isn't any market for the grade-B or -C pictures. I don't think there will be much of a market for the lower-grade porn pictures, either, but right now they're the biggest thing around."

Arctic Oil Exploration Regulations Proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders regulating the exploration, development and production of oil and gas in the Arctic Area Outer Continental Shelf have been proposed by the U.S. Geological Survey in anticipation of lease sale activities, the Interior Department has announced.

The proposed regulations were published in the June 13 edition of the Federal Register.

The department said the regulations were developed to assure that exploration and production in the Beaufort Sea, the Chukchi Sea and the Hope Basin are carried out without damage to the environment.

Life Unchanged For Mother Of Bianca Jagger

By TOM FENTON

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Bianca Jagger's mother, Dora Macias, runs a tiny, in-home diner in a humble Managua neighborhood, far from the glittering jet-set life led by her famous daughter.

The outside of her cinder-block home is covered with spray-painted slogans proclaiming the Sandinista guerrilla group, while the diner portion is a clutter of beer cases, books, stuffed animals and sewing.

"Life hasn't changed much for me. I live pretty much the same as always," said Miss Macias, a heavy-set woman with flashing brown eyes and short, dark hair flecked with gray.

The house is in the Barrio Centro America, middle class by Nicaraguan standards, poor by American standards. The neighborhood is the scene of frequent shootouts between guerrillas and President Anastasio Somoza's National Guard.

"I'm a virtual prisoner here," said Miss Macias, pointing to a heavy hutch pulled in front of one door.

"I thought the 1972 earthquake was bad. What we went through then doesn't seem so bad in comparison to what we have now," she said, referring to the ongoing guerrilla war.

She said she hoped Somoza would leave office soon, and that the United States would cut all ties with the government.

In the diner portion of the house, there is no evidence of Bianca, now enmeshed in a much-publiczed divorce with rock star Mick Jagger.

But in a sitting area in another part of the house, half-a-dozen 8-by 10-inch photos of Bianca's St. Tropez wedding to Jagger are hung.

"I haven't seen her in two years, but we talk by telephone a lot," Miss Macias, who divorced Bianca's father several years ago, said.

"This place I have, it's mainly for neighborhood people. They can get a sandwich or a taco, but there's not much business."

Ninosca, an inquisitive Pomeranian with a red rhinestone collar, skittered underfoot as the woman spoke. A black pillow with the words "Souvenir of Puerto Rico' lay on a chair.

"I'd rather not discuss personal things about Bianca's life," her mother said. "Even with the divorce, I can't say anything bad about Mick. After all, he is the father of my grandchild (Jade, 8.)."

Miss Macias, 49, remembers with fondness three visits the couple made to Nicaragua.

One was shortly after the earthquake, and Jagger gave a concert.

"Mick was here three times. We never got to know each other well. You can't on such short visits," she said.

"He spoke a little Spanish and I speak a few words of English and Bianca would help. You can understand each other a lot with a good smile."

The woman said she no longer keeps clippings because "material things haven't meant much to me since the earthquake."

Miss Macias said she has two other children, and that she is just as proud of them. They are Carlos Jose, 27, a lawyer who lives in Paris, and Indiana, 28, who works at a Managua bank.

Specialist Advises SPAG To Show Commitment

By TOM GRIESS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

South Plains communities may be able to obtain federal economic development funds in fiscal year 1980, but only if the region first demonstrates a united front and a commitment to fight unemployment in all sectors, minorities included.

Such was the message, brought home in enthusiastic fashion Tuesday, by Bill Burkett, an economic specialist for the Southeastern New Mexico Economic Development District, before a general assembly of the South Plains Association of Governments.

"There is one way, one answer, to really improving the lives of our citizens," Burkett said. "That is jobs."

He told the assembled SPAG board members and community representatives that national competition for Economic Development Administration funds is stiff and likely to become stiffer, with the Carter administration seeking to reduce the funding areas.

"From my perspective, having been a member of the EDA family for five years, I'd recommend you all be together or forget it," Burkett said.

Under the National Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1979, according to Burkett, EDA will be seeking to reduce its target areas from about 80 percent of the U.S. population to 59 percent. Some 175 areas in the country are in the same position as SPAG — seeking designation as an Economic Development District to obtain EDA funds — and there aren't funds for one-fifth of them, he said.

With this scenario, he said SPAG must act quickly and decisively to have any hopes of receiving funds in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, 1979.

One area of emphasis must be in preparing a sound proposal for Washington, D.C., officials, Burkett said, "I've seen your CETA (Comprehensive Training and Employment Act) program in action — the intent is there. Quite bluntly, though, I think they need to do a little more homework."

Burkett also cited a recent visit by several SPAG members to Washington, D.C., where they met with EDA officials, as an example of good intentions weighted with insufficient preparation.

In addition, Burkett said the region must convince the EDA it is dedicated to reducing minority unemployment.

"This has been the problem in the past," he said. "EDA has not been totally fair (to past SPAG requests for certification as an economic development district), and SPAG has not sold it well."

He suggested SPAG emphasize to EDA officials its involvement with the CETA job training program and regional affirmative action programs as proof of its commitment to minorities.

SPAG has been seeking EDA funding throughout the decade, and was refused designation as an economic development district once before because of representation conflicts on its board.

At a June meeting of the SPAG executive committee, board members reported the results of their Washington meeting with EDA officials in generally pessimistic tones. One member said he felt the trip accomplished little.

The crux of the June meeting was to continue to seek EDA funds if the region indicated its support. Letters asking a resolution of support for SPAG becoming an economic development district were sent June 11 to all government officials in the SPAG region, according to Glenda Robinson, acting SPAG executive director.

On Tuesday, SPAG had received about 10 resolutions, "a fair return," Mrs. Robinson said. She said nothing yet had been received from the City of Lubbock or Lubbock County.

Those attending the general assembly appeared mixed in their sentiments towards participation in the federal program. About one-half raised their hands in a show of support for SPAG requesting EDA funding while the other half indicated neither support nor disapproval.

Burkett called the EDA funding a success in southeastern New Mexico and attributed to the fact that "we can provide a tangible economic product."

He advised SPAG to devise a proposal of general needs first and then concentrate on specific projects.

In his introductory remarks, SPAG President Medlin Carpenter adopted the strategy, saying, "I think with the water table going down, the price of water going up, I think we're at a time when we need to move."

DPS Officials Say More Patrols Needed

Lawmen must strictly enforce the 55 mph speed limit, Gov. Bill Clements demanded Tuesday.

That's fine and dandy, say local highway patrolmen, but give us the manpower to do it.

"We doing the best we can with what we've got," said Sgt. O.C. Guthrie of the Department of Public Safety in Lubbock. "If we had more manpower, then we could come closer to enforcing the speed limits."

But even it the local highway patrol had all the patrols it wanted,the 55 mph speed limit could not be completely enforced.

"You just couldn't do it, no matter how many patrols you had, with the number of people driving over the speed limit today," said DPS Lt. L.A. Rheinhart. "It would almost have to be one patrol for every car on the highway."

Local officials say they would need to double the 15-car patrol DPS has in Lubbock County to adequately enforce speed limits. But during the past legislative session, the local DPS didn't receve enough funds to add one patrol.

Clements called for more strict enforcement of the 55 mph speed limit as part of his energy conservation plan for the state.

Rather than enforcement, local lawmen see the solution as getting drivers to want to drive slower.

"We've got to have belief by the public in the 55 mph speed limit," Rheinhart said. "It's a shame we can't convince people that the 55 mph speed limit saves lives and decreases injuries, which is much more important than saving fuel."

One reason people have refused to drive 55 is because, until recently, many have refused to believe in the fuel shortage, Guthrie said.

"Many people never believed in it because they'd already been lied to so many times," he said. "But if people get convinced that driving slower will save them gas, then they'll start obeying the law."

Guthrie said he has noticed that the overall speed of motorists has decreased in recent weeks, when gas prices jumped sharply.

With so many drivers disobeying the 55 mph speed limit, enforcement has been a problem for troopers when deciding whom to ticket.

"We're caught in the middle with some people complaining that we don't enforce the speed limit, while others holler when we ticket them about why we didn't stop the next guy, who was driving as fast as they were," Rheinhart said.

Guthre said the governor's call for stricter speed limit enforcement may lead individual troopers to reduce the leeway they allow drivers traveling over the speed limit.

Troopers now concentrate on "excessive" speeders — those driving 10 mph or more over the speed limit.

"A trooper might pass up someone who's driving 65 because he's clocking someone speeding even faster on down the road," Guthrie said.

Driving faster than the speed limit always has been more prevelant in West Texas than in other parts of the country because of the open spaces and the long distances between towns, said one trooper.

LCHD Board Chairman Admits Bosworth's Job In Jeopardy

lems rests with Hyatt Medical Management Services Inc., which was employed to open the hospital after years of negotiations with the Texas Tech School of Medicine over shared services. He said previously that if Hyatt had done the job it was hired for, the teaching hospital's billing system probably would not be facing its present problems.

"It's going to be uncomfortable for him from now on," Strong said of Bosworth's relationship with the board. He agreed with speculation that the members of the administrative committee — Rushing, Gwen Stafford and Don McInturff — probably will vote to look for another administrator.

"I'm sure Jerry sees it," Strong noted.

Strong said the administrative committee's recommendation usually is accepted by the full board.

Bosworth, 42, was reported to be the unanimous choice of the board as well as the medical school staff and administration when he was hired in June, 1977. He took over the administration of the hospital after the board forced the resignation of executive director Harold Coston in February, 1977.

New board member Rushing is sticking to his opinion that Bosworth should be replaced.

"When you get to this league," Rushing said, "you simply have to put on long pants and realize it's an occupational hazard." Replacing Bosworth would leave the board the option of changing policy without offending the person who created that policy, he said.

"I don't think anyone has to be knife happy," Rushing said about the possibility of replacing Bosworth. "But neither do you have to sit there and acquiesce to something that you know is wrong."

Rushing admitted his full-steam-ahead attitude might draw some criticism, especially from board members who have been involved with the hospital district for a long time.

But, he said, the commissioners appointed him to the job knowing he wasn't afraid to be criticized.

"I can stand the heat and I know what I'm doing," Rushing stressed. He drew parallels between the teaching hospital's problems and those faced by Methodist Hospital (where he served as chairman of the board for 17 years) when the Methodist Church took it over.

"It took guidance," Rushing said, "and it was a team effort. That board could have run General Motors," he said.

Traditionally, a new board member is expected to watch and learn for a certain period of time, Rushing said, but the district's financial problems have created the need for someone to be outspoken.

"Somebody has to do it because in October they are going broke," Rushing said.

Tax Confusion

have applied for the exemptions by April 30.

Persons may apply for the disabled exemption through July 20, however.

Although the tax office has been forgiving about late filers in past years, the loopholes in state law permitting such a grace period now have been tightly closed.

State law requires that taxpayers apply for the exemptions before the rendition deadline, or they will not receive the exemptions.

Officials Will Not Specify Charges Facing Higgs

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Air Force authorities have not specified what charges Staff Sgt. Wilmer W. Higgs Jr. — declared legally dead after disappearing 18 months ago — might face following his surrender to Lackland Air Force base officials.

"Higgs just walked up and turned himself in" Monday to his squardron commander at Lackland Air Force Base, where he had been a markmanship instructor before vanishing New Year's Eve 1977, a base spokesman said.

Officials declined to say what charges the 33-year-old serviceman might face. However, the spokesman, who asked not to be identified said servicmen who turn themselves in after being absent without official leave usually face only AWOL charges, instead of more serious desertion charges.

Higgs was reclassified a deserter earlier this month after FBI agents reopened the investigation into his disappearance.

Higgs vanished from his part-time job at a northside San Antonio service station and police feared he had been the victim of a robbery-abduction. The Air Force declared him legally dead and paid his wife military death benefits.

Higgs made his surprise appearance late Monday afternoon and was immediately placed under military arrest. He is restricted to his squadron area pending a complete investigation of his disappearance.

The 12-year Air Force veteran was moonlighting in an all-night Exxon station at the time of his disappearance. Police discovered an empty cash register in the station's blood-spattered office.

The sergeant's car was later found partially submerged in the San Antonio River south of downtown. Police reported signs of a struggle.

A statewide search, bolstered by a $1,000 reward offered by Exxon, failed to turn up a trace of the missing sergeant. He was declared legally dead in January 1978 and a memorial service was held for him four months later in Vidor.

But a recent FBI investigation, sparked by a tip, showed Higgs worked at two jobs in southeast Texas and had received a traffic ticket in Vidor last June under his real name.

Only last Friday, Higgs' father, W. W. Higgs of Vidor, made a public plea for his son to surrender. Higgs revealed to authorities that his son had called him from Galveston last month.

Defense Lawyer Expects Third Trial For Henley

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — While prosecutors tried to convince a judge that Elmer Wayne Henley voluntarily told police about his part in the Houston mass murders, a defense lawyer was boldly predicting that Henley will get a third trial.

"I would wager money on it if I had any," Will Gray of Houston told reporters Tuesday.

Henley, 23, is being re-tried here on six murder counts stemming from the homosexual torture and death spree that left 26 boys dead. He had been convicted of the killings at a 1974 trial. But Gray successfully on appeal that the defense had been improperly denied a change of venue hearing. The conviction was thrown out.

"We've got all the record we need (for a successful appeal)," Gray said. "The rest is just window dressing."

Gray believes State District Judge Noah Kennedy has committed an error that could force a third trial if Henley is convicted. He claimed that several jurors were improperly seated. He forecasted that "we'll do it again in two or three years."

But Harris County District Attorney Carol Vance said that he found nothing wrong with the jury selection process.

"The judge was very cautious in the jury selection. It's not the easiest thing to get a jury in a case with world-wide publicity."

Kennedy began hearing testimony Tuesday in a pretrial hearing to determine th admissability of a written statement Henley gave police after his 1973 arrest. The defense wants the statement suppressed.

Police Abandon Search For Fort Worth Sniper

FORT WORTH (UPI) — Police today called off a canine and helicopter search for a sniper who reportedly shot at a utility service crew and passing cars at the abandoned Greater Southwest Airport, a spokesman said.

Police canine units, a helicopter and a Special Weapons and Tactical Team converged on the old airport about 8 p.m. Tuesday when members of a Texas Electric Service Co. crew reported shots had been fired at them by someone on a catwalk on the control tower.

"They were working on the electric lines and they said someone started shooting at them," a police spokesman said, adding there were reports the sniper also had fired at cars on State Highway 360, which was blocked off by police after the alleged shootings.

"We have a helicopter and 10 police units, including a SWAT Team out there," the spokesman had said earlier.

An officer said no empty shell casings from a high-powered rifle believed used by the sniper were found on the catwalk although several broken beer bottles were discovered.

Police also said a Citizens Band radio report indicated a white male had been seen running in the woods near the airport.

However, police spokesman Kenneth McCoy said today canine units and a helicopter search were called off about 3 a.m.

"We've given up to the point that we've only got two units out there to kind of keep an eye on things," McCoy said.

Some ideas work and some won't! In 1978 over 2000 growers from California to Delaware and from Canada to Florida agreed that the Spray Sickle is one weed control idea that really works.

The 1979 Spray Sickle is better than ever — (Over 35 New Improvements.) If you have Johnson Grass (or any other problem weed) the Spray Sickle is really the only sure way to eradicate it.

Carter's Brother Signs Option To Sell Interest

ATLANTA (AP) — Billy Carter, whose financial troubles may cost him his south Georgia home, may also be on the way out as a partner in the family peanut business.

A foreclosure sale of Billy Carter's home in Marion County is scheduled for July 3. Carter said last week his attorney is trying to negotiate a settlement with the mortgage holder.

Meanwhile, court records show that while the president's brother was being treated at a Navy hospital in Long Beach, Calif., for alcohol abuse, he signed an option to sell his 15 percent interest in the family peanut warehouse to Carter's Farms Inc.

The option, signed March 1, expires Jan. 5, 1981, 15 days before the end of President Carter's current four-year term.

Atlanta attorney Charles Kirbo, who manages the president's financial interests in a blind trust, said Tuesday he was not sure whether the warehouse option would be exercised.

Billy Carter has said he understood the option would be exercised if Kirbo found a buyer for the warehouse, which is leased to an Atlanta agriculture cooperative.

Carter's Farms Inc., 91 percent owned by the president with the remainder held by family members other than Billy Carter, received the option in a complicated intra-family transaction involving the president's blind trust, Carter's Farms Inc., Billy Carter and the family warehouse partnership.

Billy Carter had borrowed $250,000 from Carter's Farms Inc. and had pledged 157 acres of property as security for the loan. Kirbo said the president's trust assumed the obligation to Carter's Farms in exchange for the property.

Carter's Farms received the option, according to court records in two southwest Georgia counties where the partnership owns property.

Kirbo said Billy would receive money if the option is exercised. He did not say how much.

President Carter owns 62 percent of the warehouse partnership. Billy Carter owns 15 percent, subject to the option, and their mother, Lillian Carter, owns the remaining 23 percent.

From 1970 until 1977, while Carter was governor of Georgia and a presidential candidate, Billy Carter managed the warehouse.

In 1975, he launched a major expansion of the business, financing construction of a sheller and storage bin and the purchase of large quantities of peanuts with loans from the National Bank of Georgia.

Leased for the second consecutive year to Gold Kist, an Atlanta-based agricultural cooperative, the warehouse lost money for the Carters in 1978, apparently because the rental was not enough to offset payments on the $1 million construction loan from NBG.

Solution To Rabies Baffles Physicians

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Faced with a spreading rabies outbreak along the U.S.Mexico border, five doctors admit there is little known about the "old disease" that has recently killed two children and severely incapacitated a third.

The doctors say the often-fatal disease, which attacks the central nervous system, is being spread through wildlife and domesticated dogs in border areas from Texas to California. At a news conference Tuesday, they urged pet owners along the U.S.-Mexico border to have their animals vaccinated and keep them penned.

In Piedras Negras, Mexican authorities were shooting and poisoning stray dogs on sight.

The physicians issued their warning at Santa Rosa Hospital where Gerardo Castano, 8, of Piedras Negras, Mexico, is suffering from acute rabies and being kept alive by a respirator and drug injections. Officials say he has already lived longer than most acute rabies victims.

Dr. Fernando Guerra said Castano was bitten May 10 while separating two pet dogs that were fighting. Later, because the boy had difficulty swallowing, his parents took him to the Mexican hospital where he was treated for a throat infection. He then developed an intense pain in hs arm, appeared agitated and was unable to sleep.

When given an inoculation, the child "went into a rage," Guerra said.

The disease finally was diagnosed Monday, 39 days after the boy was bitten.

Guerra and Dr. Ted Baker of Atlanta said diagnosing and treating rabies was difficult and that keeping rabid animls away from human beings was the surest way to stop the spread of the disease.

"As we've gotten into it, some of us have come to realize how little we know about a very old disease," Guerra said.

Baker, introducted at the news conference as a rabies expert, said, "I've been in rabies 12 years and I still don't feel I know much about the subject. We have to have more of an open mind now in regard to rabies."

Baker said the U.S. Center for Disease Control in Atlanta was particularly concerned about the dog-to-dog transmission of the disease at the border towns of Eagle Pass, Texas-Piedras Negras; El Paso, Texas-Juarez; and at Mexicali, Mexico, across the border from Imperial County, Calif., because pets can transmit rabies to human beings through their saliva.

One Mexican child died last weekend of the disease and another child was reported to have died in Juarez. As a result more than 50 people at Eagle Pass have undergone the 21-day series of painful rabies treatments in the border outbreak.

At El Paso, Texas-Juarez, officials have imposed a rabies quarantine because of more than 70 rabid animals found on both sides of the border.

Tanker, Freighter Crews To Testify

BOSTON (UPI) — All 69 crew members aboard the sunken freighter Regal Sword and the tanker Exxon Chester have been ordered to appear before a Coast Guard Marine Board of Investigation trying to find out why the two ships collided in the foggy Atlantic off Cape Cod.

All 38 men aboard the 575-foot Liberian-registered bulk carrier climbed into life boats before the ship went down 40 minutes after the accident Monday and were rescued by the tanker's 31-man crew.

No one was seriously injured in the crash.

The 625-foot tanker, its bow buckled and battered from the collision, was towed into Boston Harbor Tuesday with both crews aboard and docked at Exxon's teminal in suburban Everett.

A Coast Guard Board of Investigation held a preliminary closed-door hearing into the circumstances surrounding the collision Tuesday night. Formal hearings were scheduled to begin today.

"The crew members from both vessels have been issued subpoenas to appear before the Marine Board of Investigation," said Coast Guard Cmdr. James McDonald. "The purpose of the session will be to gather particulars from the individuals involved in the incident."

The formal inquiry, to be chaired by Lt. Cmdr. Roland Boughton, chief of the Coast Guard's investigative division, could last "several days to weeks," McDonald said.

The accident occurred about 5:15 p.m. EDT Monday, 30 miles southeast of Cape Cod, in what Coast Guard officials described as "a major shipping lane."

The Regal Sword was bound for Philadelphia from Portsmouth, N.H., with 3,000 tons of scrap iron when it sank. The Chester was headed from Linden, N.J., to Boston with 7.14 million gallons of liquid asphalt.

Seas were running 2-3 feet and the area was shrouded in patches of heavy fog at the time of the accident, the Coast Guard said. Visibility was about one-half mile.

A Coast Guard spokesman said both ships were required by law to be equipped with the latest navigational equipment, including radar.

Jack Bennett, manager of Exxon marine operations in Boston, said Tuesday, "All navigational aids on the Chester were in order and working.

"As far as we're concerned, there was no evidenre of human error (on the Chester). I cannot speak for the Liberian ship," he told a news conference.

WEATHER FORECAST — Sunny skies with warm weather in most areas areexpected in the forecast period for the western half of the nation. Cool weather is forecast from the Rockies across the northern Plains. Rain and showers are forecast from the central Gulf States to the Great Lakes. Warm weather is forecast for the Southeast. Child In Tennessee Attacked By Rats

LEBANON, Tenn. (AP) — "She was nearly eaten alive," said the pediatrician who treated Valerie Hearn, a 10-month-old child mauled by rats. "It was more than one rat, it appears. They had to be big rats, too."

Dr. Bernard Wiggins, who runs a children's clinic in Wilso County, said the attack that left Valerie in serious condition at a suburban Nashville hospital Tuesday was the worst he had ever seen.

"She had severe rat bites on multiple places of her body — both her hands, her lips, her ears, her nose, her legs and arms, her body, back and shoulders. Her right hand was nearly eaten through. Most of the fat pad in the central area of the hand was eaten out," he said.

However, Wiggins said he believes the child will survive.

"Her bites look like they're infected and she's running a fever, but I think she'll come out of it," he said.

"I interned at Washington's Walter Reed Hospital so I've treated rat bites. But this attack is the worst one I've ever seen."

Wiggins said the child might soon have died of malnutrition if her mother had not rushed her to the hospital after discovering the attack.

"It looks like she suffers from palsy. And she's a classic case of a failure to thrive. She's 10 months old and weighs just 10 pounds. That compares with an average weight for her age of 15 to 18 pounds," he said.

The child had suffered from a poor diet and lack of health care even before she was attacked, he said. "It's not an intentional thing. It is just a pathetic thing."

Wiggins said he had treated the girl once when she was a month old, but her mother never returned.

The mother called an ambulance early Tuesday morning after she heard the baby crying and "went right to it," said Wiggins.

Scientists Finish Skylab Maneuvers

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON (AP) — Controllers at Johnson Space Center today placed the aging Skylab into a position they hope will give them better control when the 85-ton spacecraft falls back to Earth, probably sometime next month.

Charles S. Harlan, chief of Skylab operations, said the orbiting laboratory responded to commands from the Skylab control center and all systems still functioning appeared to be in good shape during a pass over the Ascension Island tracking station.

Later passes were to be checked to verify the success of the maneuver.

Controllers placed Skylab in a sideways position, designed to stabilize the craft as it approaches the Earth's atmosphere.

Harlan said the craft would be monitored closely to observe if it remains in position.

Scientists believe the sideways position will increase drag and give controllers a better opportunity to help steer Skylab and its debris from inhabited areas when it begins to disintegrate during its re-entry plunge.

The North American Air Defense Command at Colorado Springs has estimated Skylab will fall sometime between July 7 and 25, with a 50 percent chance impact will occur by July 16.

Space officials have indicated NORAD may adjust its forecast to an earlier impact as a result of today's maneuver.

The sideways position has never been tried previously with a spacecraft, controllers said, but computer models indicate a disturbance-free condition would exist with the craft in that attitude.

Scientists say the craft would begin a tumbling motion and become completely uncontrollable if today's manever were not successful.

With less buffeting, controllers will be able to give additional commands as Skylab appoaches re-entry.

Controllers will be able to predict at that point where debris will strike the Earth. Should impact be indicated over an inhabited area, a command could be given to steer the craft to an ocean area where risks would be minimal.

Skylab now is orbiting Earth at an altitude of about 164 miles.

Today's maneuver had been scheduled Monday but was postponed so the orders could be transmitted while Skylab's solar panels were at the optimum angle to the sun.

Agency Notes Few Lot Sales

In an unusually quiet meeting, the Urban Renewal Agency Tuesday approved only one land sales bid for the month.

Agency members noted that unlike previous years, the agency has made few lot sales in April, May and June. These months usually are the agency's best lot sales times.

Deputy director Robert Stack recently returned from a meeting in Dallas with Holiday Inn representatives to discuss construction plans for a 200-room hotel to be built in the Memorial Civic Center area.

According to H.O. Alderson, executive director of Urban Renewal, the agency hopes to receive the plans by late summer.

Alderson indicated the agency is pleased with the pending hotel, to be constructed at Ninth Street and Avenue Q, as well as the fact that only four Civic Center parcels of land remain to be sold.

Two of the four are "smaller slivers and may be hard to sell," Alderson said.

In other business, agency members agreed to award Non-Interest Deferred Payment supplemental loans to bring four Lubbock residences up to city standards.

Members also agreed to award additional supplemental loans to two residences for work which exceeded the original loan amounts.

City Man Named To Rotary Post

Dr. J. Davis Armistead of Lubbock has been named to the top Rotary post for the Panhandle South Plains area by delegates to the Rotary International convention in Rome, Italy.

Armistead, a past president of the Downtown Lubbock Rotary Club, is one of 379 men from 152 countries elected as a Rotary district governor for the 1979-80 year. As governor of District 573, he will coordinate the activities of some 46 clubs.

Armistead served as Downtown Rotary president in 1975-76. He is a past president and sustaining member of the Lubbock Cerebral Palsy Center, and has served as president of the South Plains Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

He has been a practicing optometrist for 49 years and in 1976 was selected as the Outstanding Practitioner of the Year by the Texas Optometric Association. He was state chairman of the American Optometric Foundation and served as secretary treasurer, vice president and president of the South Plains Optometric Society.

During the coming year, Armistead will visit each of the 46 clubs in the large district at least once.

Inventor Develops Paper From Stone

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet inventor has developed a new type of paper made from stone that is five times thinner and much stronger than ordinary paper, Tass reports.

The Soviet news agency said the paper is made by melting basalt, then drawing thin filaments from the molten rock. The filaments are impregnated with resins before being used to make the paper.

"The newly obtained paper is heat-resistant and cold-and moisture-proof," Tass said.

Merit Smashes Taste Barrier.

—National Smoker Study

Read what smokers had to say about MERIT in a recent nationwide survey.

Confirmed: Majority of smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

Confirmed: Majority of smokers confirm taste satisfaction of low tar MERIT.

And in research conducted among current MERIT smokers:

Confirmed: 85% of MERIT smokers say it was an "easy switch" from high tar brands.

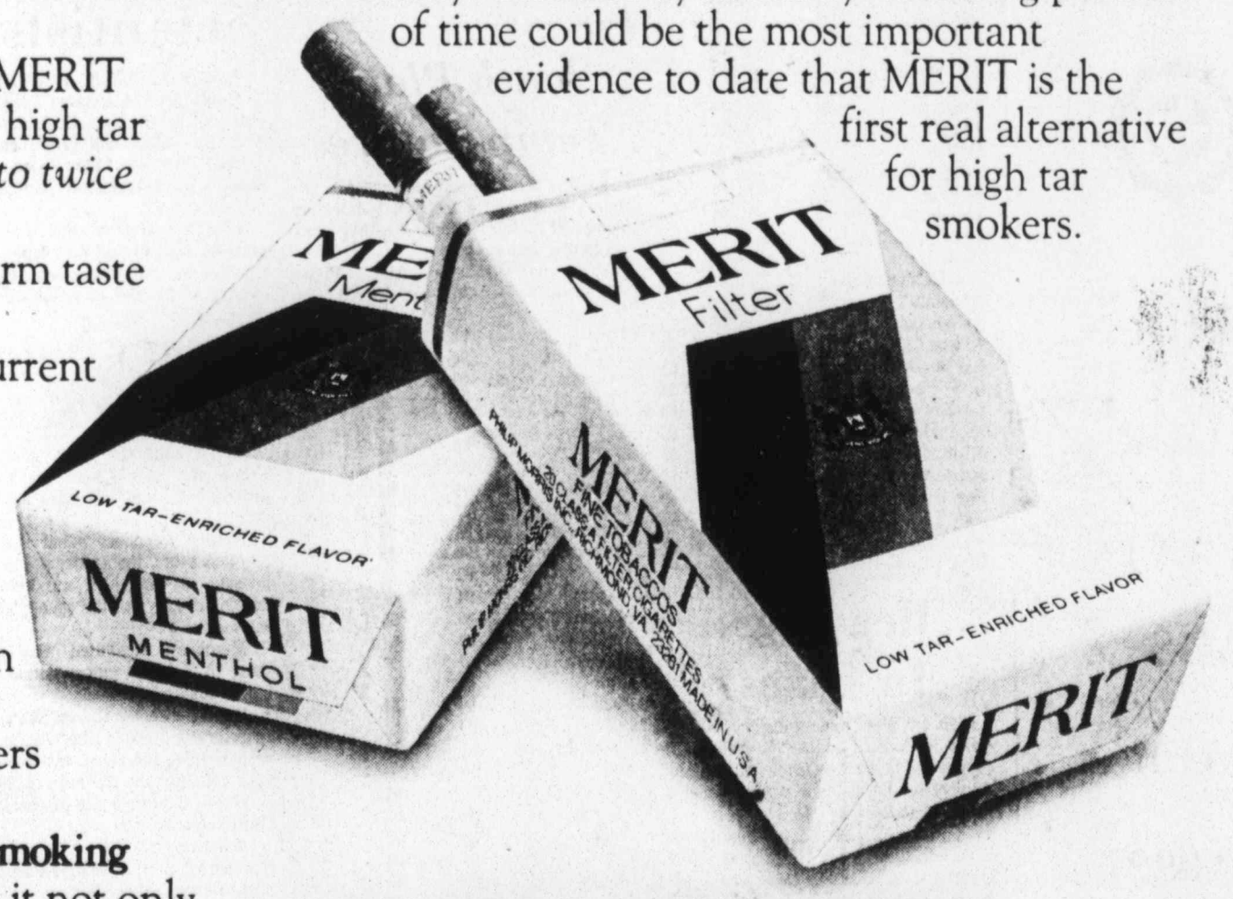
Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

First Major Alternative To High Tar Smoking

MERIT has proven conclusively that it not only delivers the flavor of high tar brands—but continues to satisfy! This ability to satisfy over long periods of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is the first real alternative for high tar smokers.



Kings: 8 mg "tar," 0.6 mg nicotine—
100's: 11 mg "tar," 0.7 mg nicotine av. per cigarette, FTC Report May '78

New Yankee Manager Billy Martin Flashes Signs From Third Base Box

Martin's Return Marred By Loss

NEW YORK (UPI) — Luis Gomez and Joe Cannon didn't just rain on Billy Martin's parade Tuesday night. They drenched it.

The two seldom-used Toronto players combined offensively and defensively to write a sad ending to a script which had begun so beautifully for Martin — who received a two-minute, standing ovation from the 36,211 New York fans before the Blue Jays' 5-4 triumph over the Yankees.

But even in the midst of all the celebration surrounding Martin's premature return to the New York managerial helm for the second time in 11 months, ominous signs could be found.

Amid the "We Want Billy" banners was one exclaiming: "The '79 Martin Better Not Be A Lemon," in an obvious reference to deposed Manager Bob Lemon, who replaced Martin last July only to switch roles with him Monday, when Martin was officially renamed manager.

After Martin told reporters before the game he was concerned about the way the Yankees were missing the cutoff man in recent weeks, Toronto's Alfredo Griffin opened the game with a double to the right-center field wall. He was thrown out trying to stretch it into a triple, but Juan Beniquez — who looked shaky all night in right field — overthrew cutoff man Willie Randolph and shortstop Bucky Dent had to make the relay.

Gomez, a lifetime .212 hitter in only his 15th game this season, capped a three-run rally in the sixth inning with a two-run single off Tommy John to put the Blue Jays ahead, 5-3, and set the stage for Cannon's heroics.

Martin said the Yankees didn't get the breaks when they needed it.

"Our luck was short and Cannon made that super catch in right field," Martin said. "But we were aggressive and hit the ball hard ... harder then they did."

After fielding questions with uncharacteristic cool, Martin tried to calmly describe the turbulent emotions churning within.

"I'm not a good loser so I can't say I'm in the happiest mood right now," said Martin, who managed from the third base coaching box. "One difference about being at third base is that a manager can't hide in the dugout when he's losing by two runs."

Martin, who was dismissed as New York's manager last July 24, now finds his club 9 1/2 games out of first place in the American League East and he knows his priorities.

"The most important thing now is to get my starting pitching staff together and working well," said Martin.

Toronto Manager Roy Hartsfield, a close personal friend to Martin, felt just a touch of regret at spoiling the party, but he won't lose any sleep over it.

"We're all elated over a win," said Hartsfield, who directs a 22-46 club

WBC Queens Shooting For Wilson For Post

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The search for Dean Weese's replacement as head coach of the Wayland Baptist Flying Queens may be coming to a halt.

Or is it?

According to Athletic Director Bob Clindaniel, the highly sought-after position was offered to Slaton coach Cathy Wilson during a "second interview" Tuesday afternoon. Now, it's up to Miss Wilson whether or not to accept the offer, Clindaniel said.

"We talked to three coaches," said Clindaniel. "And all three could do a superb job. But we (the WBC search committee) felt she (Miss Wilson) was what we were looking for. Now, there's the matter of agreeing on salary, camps, teaching and things like that."

Miss Wilson was unavailable for comment Tuesday night.

Considered one of the top high school coaches in the state, the former Flying Queen has won three consecutive state championships during her four-year coaching stint. She guided Slaton to Class AA titles in 1978 and 79, and Nazareth to a Class B crown in 1977. During her first year, she also led Nazareth to the state finals. Her Slaton team capped a 33-2 season last year by defeating Pflugerville 68-54 in the state championship game.

"You just can't ignore that she's won three state championships," said Clindaniel. "She also had a very good personality. We took both into account, too."

Should Miss Wilson accept the job, she will become the first woman to ever guide the Queens.

"That really didn't come into play when we interviewed her," commented Clindaniel. "We were just looking for someone who could do the best job. The fact that she is a woman wasn't our main consideration in offering her the job."

Clindaniel did say, though, that the vast majority of colleges and universities with fem basketball programs do have women as head coaches. In fact, no Southwest Conference program is which is already 22 1/2 games out of first place. "We don't get that many that we can be blase about them."

In St. Louis, John Fulgham waited all his life to pitch for the Cardinals and when the opportunity presented itself, he did a good job tled down to scatter eight hits,helping the Cardinals snap a six-game losing streak as they posted a 7-2 victory over the San Diego Padres.

"I've been a Cards' fan for a long time and Bob Gibson was my idol," said Fulgham, who struck out five and walked one in tossing a complete game. "If I were to fantasize about my major league debut, this would be even better than my fantasy."

St. Louis Manager Ken Boyer, who had watched his club surge to the top of the National League East only to fall three games behind Montreal during the losing streak, was impressed with Fulgham, who was called up from Arkansas of the Texas League to replace the injured Bob Sykes.

"He showed me a lot of poise," said Boyer. "Our defense has been really great and after the first inning it was great again." Elsewhere in the American League, it was Baltimore 6, Cleveland 4; Milwaukee 10, Minnesota 9; Seattle 7, Chicago 2; Detroit 10, Boston 4, in 14 innings; Texas 2, California 1 and Oakland 6, Kansas City 5.

In the National League, Atlanta clobbered Philadelphia, 10-4, Montreal edged Cincinnati, 3-2, Houston stopped New York, 3-1, St. Louis trimmed San Diego, 7-2, Pittsburgh downed San Francisco, 9-4, and Chicago outscored Los Angeles, 7-4.

Orioles 6, Indians 4

Eddie Murray cracked a solo homer in the seventh inning to spark Baltimore to its fifth straight victory.

Brewers 10, Twins 9

Mariners 7, White Sox 2

Tigers 10, Red Sox 4

Steve Kemp snapped a 4-4 tie with a two-run single during a six-run 14th inning and Lance Parrish drove in four runs to power Detroit over Boston.

Rangers 2, Angels 1

Newcomer John Henry Johnson and Jim Kern combined on a five-hitter and Larvell Blanks drove in the winning run with a fifth-inning double that carried Texas past California.

A's 6, Royals 5

Mike Heath's second homer of the game, an eighth-inning solo shot off reliever Al Hrabosky, snapped a 5-5 tie and carried Oakland over Kansas City.

Braves 10, Phillies 4

Gary Matthews belted a three-run homer in the seventh inning — his fourth in three games to spark the Braves over Philadelphia.

Expos 3, Reds 2

Bill Lee and Woodie Fryman combined on a six-hitter and Gary Carter singled home the winning run in the sixth inning as Montreal slid past the Reds.

Astros 3, Mets 1

Pirates 9, Giants 4

Phil Garner rapped out five hits and winning pitcher John Candelaria knocked in two runs with a third-inning double to lead Pittsburgh.

Cubs 7, Dodgers 4

Interesting Sidelight Seen In Jones Case

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Except for a few close friends, until very recently nobody knew about Ed "Too Tall" Jones' plan to walk away from professional football and into the world of boxing.

Why then, with his National Football League option expired, do you think that one of the game's top defensive ends could not attract so much as a single inquiry from any team about whether he might like to sack quarterbacks for them?

Jones' attorney, Don Cronson, thinks he knows the reason.

Sports Analysis

"The lid is on," Cronson said. "Free agency is not what it's supposed to be."

Believe the man. But that lid has been screwed into place by the players themselves. If NFL players truly enjoyed the right of flight under which their baseball brethren operate, a player with Jones' ability would be in great demand. Too Tall, however, was not.

"We did not get one legitimate phone call from one NFL team," Cronson said. "But I wasn't surprised in the least."

Not that the phone calls would have done any good. Jones insists that he decided two years ago to leave pro football and that nothing could have kept him in the game and away from boxing. But it might have been nice if some team had tried.

"There is no significant movement of free agents in the NFL," Cronson said. "Only six of 142 even got offers this year. The lack of same speaks for itself."

All six took those offers back to their original teams, and under the right of first refusal, the original teams retained the players.

The NFL players, you see, have painted themselves into a very neat corner. If a team does not want to lose a player, all it needs do is match his new offer. If it does match it, he cannot leave.

The players have no place to go, thanks to the collective bargaining agreement which attaches so high a price to signing a free agent that no team in its right mind would want to pay it. The compensation cost for a player in Jones' salary class, for example, is at least a first-round draft choice and probably a second as well. Too Tall is good, but few teams would be willing to surrender that kind payback to Dallas after signing him. The result is that he went unsigned and left football.

Don't blame the clubs. The players association often talks about collusion. But it's just good business practice. Before the collective bargaining agreement produced those formula payoffs, compensation was set by Commissioner Pete Rozelle. The players bristled at that arrangement but, under the circumstances, they may have been better off.

There are some skeptics who believe Jones' boxing gambit is nothing more than a ploy to squeeze a few more bucks out of the Cowboys. But Too Tall insists it's nothing like that. He says he never liked football very much anyway and now is committed to pursuing his real passion of prizefighting.

"My decision is not based on any negative reasons or feelings I have toward the Cowboys, financial or otherwise," he said. "I am not — repeat NOT — using my retirement as some sort of contract-negotiating strategy in order to obtain a better contract with the Cowboys. This is absolutely not a money decision. I will not consider any contract offers from the Cowboys, or any other football team, or from any field other than boxing."

Larry Holmes, sitting next to Jones at the news conference, shook his head.

"Boxing is not a sport that just anyone can get into," said the World Boxing Council heavyweight champion who defends his title against Mike Weaver in Madison Square Garden Friday night. "Boxing takes a lot out of you and your life. But the way he spoke, he can do it."

Did Holmes have any advice for Too Tall?

"Yeah," he said. "Keep your hands up and your butt off the floor."

Arkansas Tops All-SWC Team

Southwest Conference powers Arkansas and Texas paced the 1979 All-District Region 6 baseball team, Kal Segrist, Texas Tech baseball coach, announced. Outfielder Larry Selby, selected to the first team, was the only Red Raider to make the team.

Arkansas, which finished second in the College World Series, placed three players in the first team while Texas, which finished fourth in the tournament, named two players to the first unit.

Second baseman Johnny Ray, catcher Ronn Reynolds and designated hitter Ed Wallace represented the Razorbacks on the squad. Texas' players included pitcher Jerry Gleaton, the Texas Rangers No. 1 pick in the professional baseball draft, and outfielder Joe Bruno. Earlier this year, Gleaton was selected first team all-American.

Rounding out the first team were first baseman Bobby Hollas of Houston, shortstop Trey Brooks of TCU, third baseman Fritz Connally of Baylor, Leonard Tyrone of Pan American and pitcher Mark Ross of Texas A&M.

The second team included first baseman Luke Prestridge of Baylor, second baseman Gary Dipple of Pan American, shortstop Bryan Little of Texas A&M, third baseman Jeff Martin of Lamar, outfielders Jay Beard of Houston, Dale Holman of Louisiana Tech and Jim Young of McNeese, catcher Kevin Shannon of Texas, designated hitter Marc Brumble of Arkansas and pitchers Steve Krueger of Arkansas and Jon Perlman of Baylor.

Jockey Franklin Booked On Cocaine

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Young jockey Ronnie Franklin, who rode Spectacular Bid to Kentucky Derby and Preakness victories before a third place finish in the Belmont Stakes, has been booked for investigation of possession of cocaine, Anaheim police said Tuesday.

Sgt. Tom Beardman, a police watch commander, said that a security officer reported Monday he had observed someone in a car at the Disneyland parking lot "cutting a white substance with a razor." The arrest of Franklin was made at 1:30 p.m. Monday by Anaheim police.

Investigators later determined the substance was cocaine, Beardman said.

The arrested man, Ronald Joseph Franklin, 19, gave his occupation as a jockey, the police spokesman said. He gave a home address that matched the address of Franklin's parents in Baltimore, Md. Four others who were in the same car were released pending further investigation, Beardman said.

Franklin was freed late Monday after posting $1,500 bond. A court arraignment is expected to be held within 10 days.

The young jockey is scheduled to return to the Pimlico racetrack in Maryland today.

He was in Southern California to ride Sunday to ride in the Sixth Annual All-Star Jockey Race at Hollywood Park. He finished 10th in the 11-horse event aboard a 25-1 shot. But he indicated that he enjoyed the experience and hoped to return to western tracks to ride on a regular basis in future years.

Franklin rides regularly for Maryland-based trainer Bud Delp, who trains Spectacular Bid.

A conviction for possession of cocaine, a felony, carries a penalty of one year or more in state prison — but a judge can order probation instead.

The California Penal Code says probationary sentences in drug possession cases shall be accompanied by an order that the defendant "secure education or treatment from a local community agency designated by such court, if such service is available and the person is likely to benefit from the service."

Contacted at his home, Delp said he was "stunned" by the report. He said he had talked to Franklin Tuesday and the jockey never mentioned the incident.

"Gee, he's had a lot of trouble lately," Delp said. "But he's not getting any sympathy from Bud Delp."

Ali Retirement Due In July?

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — Muhammad Ali plans to give up his heavyweight championship title next month, a World Boxing Association official said Tuesday.

Mike Mortimer, chairman of the Championships Committee of the WBA, said in Durban, South Africa, that he had received a letter from Ali announcing that the 37-year-old champ was retiring from the ring on July 5.

There was no immediate confirmation of the retirement report from Ali, who was in Libya. Members of Ali's camp could not be reached for comment.

Under WBA rules, Ali must sign for a title defense by Sept. 15, one year from the date he regained the title from Leon Spinks.

Over the weekend, promoter Bob Arum said Ali had sent a letter of resignation to WBA authorities.

coached by a man. "I think there are only a few junior colleges that still have men coaches," commented Clindaniel.

According to Clindaniel "about 15 applications" were received after Weese stepped down earlier in the month to accept the post as head coach of the Dallas Diamonds, a franchise of the Women's Professional Basketball League. However, the search committee quickly narrowed its list to three coaches, including Miss Wilson and Duane Hunt of Borger.

"She's our first choice all the way," Clindaniel said about Miss Wilson.

If Miss Wilson does accept the position, she will then have to be OK'd by the School Board.

"They have the final say," said Clindaniel. "But I think they'll go along with recommendation.

"Now it's up to her."

Parallels Appear In Murder

SACRAMENTO (AP) — California Boxing Commissioner Jim Baiz says he will ask the state attorney general to take part in the investigation of the death of Los Angeles boxing manager Victor Weiss.

Weiss' body was found shot to death Monday.

Baiz said Tuesday that three years ago, Howie Scheindler, then manager of featherweight champion Danny "Little Red" Lopez, was killed under almost identical circumstances.

Also, Baiz said, the wife of Weiss' partner Edward Cutter was unable to start her own car last year, so she took her husband's car. While Mrs. Cutter was pulling out of her Los Angeles hills driveway, she drove through an embankment and over a cliff to her death.

He said that while Weiss and Scheindler apparently didn't know each other, they and Cutter had extensive business dealings in Nevada, and another of Weiss' partners is believed to be involved in organized crime.

Open Strengthens Field

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Tom Watson, Jack Nicklaus and Hale Irwin top the strongest field ever assembled for the Canadian Open Golf Championship, an event that grows in stature and prestige on an annual basis.

"It is a national championship," Nicklaus said. "Any national championship is of very considerable importance."

And the event, which gets started Thursday, holds a special lure for Nicklaus. A victory would be of more than normal importance for the man who is struggling through the poorest season of his matchless career.

First of all, he hasn't won this season. He needs to win to restore the confidence that has begun to erode in an erratic, unproductive season.

Secondly, he'd particularly like to win on the Glen Abbey Golf Club course, a 7,050-yard layout playing to a par-71 which Nicklaus designed in the Toronto suburbs.

And, finally, the Canadian Open is one of the few important titles that has eluded him.

He comes into the tournament, which carries a $350,000 purse, on a mild upswing and needs a strong, positive performance to set him up for the two remaining major titles of the year — the British Open and the American PGA.

Nicklaus had a strong 68, one of his better efforts of the year, in the final round last week in the U.S. Open. But it was too late to lift him into contention. A struggling 77 in the second round took him out of that one.

"At least I played one good round," he said. "It helps."

Watson, too, seeks to rebound. The game's outstanding performer over the last 2½ seasons, failed to qualify for the final two rounds of the U.S. Open. It was the result of erratic driving.

"It's not something you can force," Watson said. "I think I was trying to guide it into the fairways. My tempo was too fast. It's a problem I've had all my life. It just happened to occur at a bad time. It could be the same this week — or it could be better."

With a $63,000 prize going to the winner, a Watson victory could make him the first man to go past $400,000 in single-season winnings. He's collected $353,000 and four titles already this year.

Irwin, of course, will be fighting a let-down from the physical and emotional exhaustion of his struggling triumph in the U.S. Open.

Among the other outstanding players in the 156-man field are Tom Weiskopf, a two-time Canadian champion who challenged for the American Open title last week; Lee Trevino, another two-time Canadian winner, and defending champion Bruce Lietzke.

Also on hand are Masters champ Fuzzy Zoeller; Jerry Pate and South African Gary Player, who tied for second last week; Lanny Wadkins; Arnold Palmer; Ray Floyd; Andy Bean; Ed Sneed, and Ben Crenshaw.

Portions of the final two rounds will be telecast nationally in the United States by CBS and in Canada by CBC.

Evert Survives Scare

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd says her need for grass court play helped motivate her to come from behind and beat Anne Smith in the $100,000 International Grand Prix tennis tournament.

The former Wimbledon champion survived a match point Tuesday before going on to win 4-6, 7-6, 6-0 over the 19-year-old former student of religion from Dallas.

"I kept telling myself that two matches on grass were not good enough preparation for Wimbledon," Mrs. Evert Lloyd said.

"There is a big difference between playing matches and just practicing," she said. "It was vital I won, because until I get a few matches I don't know just how I am playing."

This is the first grass court tournament Mrs. Evert Lloyd, ranked No. 2 in the world by the computer, has played this year.

Miss Smith fully extended her.

"I got really discouraged," Mrs. Evert Lloyd said. "Anne was serving so well. Up to that point she deserved to win."

Chrissie was not the only seed to struggle Tuesday. Virginia Ruzici of Romania, seeded eighth, was taken to 22 games in the final set before overcoming the strong serving Barbara Potter 6-3, 4-6, 12-10.

One seed did fall by the wayside America's Ann Kiyomura, seeded No 16, squandered two match points and allowed South African Ilana Kloss to win 4-6, 6-3, 8-6.

The rest of the top players had a relatively easy day, although fourth seed Virginia Wade saved a set point in the first set against Pam Teeguarden.

Yanks React

NEW YORK (AP) — Perhaps the New York Yankees have grown immune to controversy and upheaval. At least it seemed that way Tuesday night when the players were asked for their reaction to Billy Martin's return as manager.

"I've got nothing to say to nothing," said outfielder Roy White, the oldest Yankee in point of service.

"It's the New York syndrome — if something happens, I didn't see it. I guess you could say we've learned not to say anything."

The Yankees weren't visibly clicking their heels over Martin's return. Neither were they grumbling or complaining about it. Despite a World Series-like atmosphere in a clubhouse overrun by media personnel, the Yankeestook it in stride.

"I'm gonna let everyone else do the thinking," said veteran pitcher Catfish Hunter, who has announced that this is his last season. "I'll pitch when they tell me. All I've got is 3½ more months and that's it. Then I'll read about it all. It's nothing new to me; I was with Oakland."

Slugger Reggie Jackson, the focal point of much of the controversy of the last few years, is on the disabled list and wsn't aroun either before or after the game. But he showed up during the contest for treatment on his injured leg and Martin said he spoke to Jackson "for a few seconds" in the clubhouse.

"Problems are always magnified here," said White. "Other contenders aren't playing well.

Garrett Wins 'Sunburn' Race

Lubbock's Malcolm Garrett Jr. blistered Greater Southwest Raceway at Dallas in the Sports Car Club of America's "Sunburn National" to gain his fourth victory in five starts in regional B Sedan racing.

Defending champion of SCCA's Southwestern Region, Garrett's Datsun 710 finished second overall after gridding behind the Alfa Romeo of E Production national champ Dave Coomer of Tulsa and another Alfa piloted by D Production standout Tom Mankin of Houston.

Mankin was the overall winner while Coomer posted a DNF. Second to Garrett in B Sedan was another Lubbockite, David Elle, who piloted a year-older Datsun 510 formerly wheeled by Garrett.

Elle has four second places for as many starts, while Garrett posted a second in the only race he failed to win.

Twenty-eight cars gridded in humid, upper 90s temperatures to make the race literally a "Sunburn." In-car race temperatures were well in excess of 100 degrees, Garrett said, but drivers nonetheless negotiated the 50-mile event over the 11-turn, 2.75 mile course at speeds reaching 145 mph.

Syria Merges Forces With Iraq

BAGHDAD,Iraq (AP) — Syria is having another go at matrimony despite the failure of its match with Egypt 21 years ago. This time the Arab nation has snagged a rich neighbor, Iraq.

The two militant Arab foes of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty announced in a joint communique Tuesday they have placed their combined Soviet-supplied armies under a unified command "pending the proclamation of the two nations' constitutional union."

The Baath Socialist governments of the two countries began to patch up a 13-year-old feud last Oct. 26 when they signed a "unity charter" at a summit meeting in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

The unification would end a split that began when an Iraqi-backed Marxist faction of the Baath Party — which rules both nations — staged a military coup in Damascus in February 1966 and ousted a Nationalist Baath faction.

The Nationalists regained control with another military coup in November 1970, and Lt. Gen. Hafez Assad became president. The bad feeling between the Marxist Baathists in Iraq and the Nationalists in Syria was heightened in 1975 by a dispute over territorial division of the waters of the Euphrates River and in 1976 by Syria's intervention in the Lebanese civil war to prevent victory for the leftist Lebanese Moslems and Palestinians supported by Iraq.

The reunion is a result of the two nations' opposition to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's peacemaking with Israel. Syria and Iraq have led the fight to isolate Egypt from the rest of the Arab world and sabotage the treaty.

The agreement to go ahead with unity plans was reached at a weekend meeting between Assad and Iraqi President Ahmed Hassan Al-Bakr in Baghdad. While acknowledging that the anticipated proclamation of union eluded the two leaders, Iraqi Information Minister Saad Kassem Hammoudi told reporters they had agreed in principle to join the two nations and their 21 million people into one country with one central government, one army, one flag, one national anthem and a federal parliament.

The military union produces a joint force of 439,000 men, supported by 4,300 tanks and 739 planes.

Egypt became Syria's first mate in February 1958 when the two countries formed the United Arab Republic at Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser's urging. The Syrians became disenchanted because Nasser and the Egyptians dominated them and seceded from the union in September 1961.

After the Syrian intervention in Lebanon in 1976, relations with Egypt improved again and the two countries announced a decision to form a "united political leadership" and to consider a return to their earlier union. That collapsed when Sadat went to Jerusalem.

Malaysia Tows Refugee Boats Beyond Territorial Limits

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Six boats carrying 585 Vietnamese refugees were towed from the east coast of Malaysia into international waters today and sent on their way, a military spokesman announced.

The spokesman told reporters the six boatloads arrived in Malaysia during the past two days and the refugees had not been admitted to government refugee camps, which now hold more than 60,000 Vietnamese awaiting resettlement in other countries.

The boats were towed away from the coast of Trengganu, about 170 miles northeast of Kuala Lumpur, and from Johore, 120 miles southeast of the capital, the spokesman said.

He said the refugees were given food, fuel and other necessities. Refugee officials said the boats were small, wooden, seaworthy, equipped with motors and should be able to be at sea for some time.

It was the second sizable expulsion of refugees this week. On Sunday, 450 were put into a repaired boat and towed away from Kota Bharu, on the northeast coast.

Last Friday, Deputy Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad announced that all Vietnamese refugees in Malaysia would be put out to sea and any more arrivals would be shot on sight. This touched off an international storm, and on Monday Prime Minister Hussein Onn withdrew the threat of mass deportation and shooting.

But at the same time Home Minister Ghazalie Shafie told a news conference Malaysia's declared policy since late last year has been to "turn away all new refugees entering Malaysin waters," and it would continue to do this.

Ghazali said since Jan. 1 a total of 267 boats with 40,459 Vietnamese aboard had been towed out to sea and had not returned.

The military spokesman today said more boats were being deployed to patrol the coasts to detect new arrivals. He said the air force would patrol to spot refugee boats and direct patrol boats to them.

Boats that are unseaworthy will be repaired, supplied with fuel, food and other essentials.

If the Vietnamese damage their boats beyond repair, they will be put into other boats and towed to international waters, they said.

Meanwhile, Home Minister Ghazali met with an Indonesian official to discuss the possibility of setting up a large camp on an Indonesian island south of Singapore that could accommodate 200,000 or 300,000 refugees to await transfer to the United States or Western Europe.

Of the approximately 76,000 Vietnamese refugees in Malaysia, about 12,000 to 15,000 are scattered along east coast beaches, and these are the "new arrivals" the government plans to expel.

American Mayors Finish Visit With Good Feelings For China

PEKING (UPI) — Thirteen American mayors concluded a four-day tour of the Chinese capital today with words of praise for Peking's use of bicycles over cars, its low crime rate and its liesurely lifestyle.

The mayors, representing a geographical cross section of U.S. cities, met with Vice Premier Li Xiannian Tuesday in what the official New China News Agency described as "two hours of frank discussions."

The group also met with U.S. Ambassador Leonard Woodcock. They flew to Nanking early today.

"Before I came here I'd heard the Chinese had too many bicycles," said Mayor Janet Gray Hayes of San Jose, Calif. There are 3 million bicycles among Peking's 8 million people. "I find that amusing. Our problem is too many cars. I wish we had more people with bicycles."

Mayor Daniel K. Whitehurst of Fresno, Calif., agreed. "I think they are wise," he said. "If they can avoid reliance on automobiles, they can avoid a lot of problems."

Mayor Lila Cockrell of San Antonio, Texas, said, "There is kind of peer group pressure in China for law and order. In this respect the United States has a lot to learn. This kind of peer group pressure against crime is something we have lost."

And Mayor Henry Marsh of Richmond, Va., noted, "People seem to move at a more leisurely pace than in Japan and European countries. Even people walking in the streets move at a more relaxed pace."

Marsh added, "Most people seem to be happy. That surprises me because wages are pretty low and there is a lack of organized leisure. You wouldn't expect them to be satisfied."

One mayor, Charles Royer of Seattle, Wash., had helped host Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping last January during the powerful leader's unprecedented goodwill trip to the United States.

"I think the right steps now are being taken in Chinese-American relations," said Royer. "I'd like to see a more rapid development of cultural exchanges. We'd like to see more acute exchanges of artists and performers and more exchanges of national treasures."

Mayor John R. Rousakis of Savannah, Ga., said he had expected "a carryover of anti-American feeling," but added, "I haven't seen a single anti-American incident."

The group will tour Nanking, Shanghai, Hanzhou and Canton before leaving China and arriving in Hong Kong June 27.

Agency Says Oil Spill Damage 'Delicate'

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Mexico's Fishing Department contradicted repeated assurances by state oil monopoly and said a 640-square-mile oilslick in the Gulf of Mexico has caused "significant" environmental damage.

The Ixtoc I well, crippled since a drilling accident June 3, has been gushing 30,000 barrels of oil a day into the Bay of Campeche, 42 miles north of Ciudad del Carmen.

The government news agency Notimex reported late Tuesday that a Fishing Department spokesman said the environmental contamination caused by the spill was "very significant and delicate," although it had not damaged shrimp breeding grounds.

The spokesman reportedly said the degree of environmental damage could only be determined after the well is sealed.

On Monday, Houston oil firefighter John "Red" Adair, who is trying to cap the crippled well, said the accident was "one of the world's worst oilspills, but I believe it will be under control shortly, in less than a week.

"The pollution will not reach the beaches," he said.

Adair, a 63-year-old short and pudgy daredevil, and his specially trained frogmen have been hampered by strong underwater currents and bad weather.

While half of the spillage was burning up in a raging fire over the well, one-sixth was evaporating into the atmosphere. Much of the rest was being vacuumed up by boats and floating booms of Petroleos Mexicanos (Pemex), the government oil monopoly.

Pemex General Director Jorge Diaz Serrano, who has personally supervised much of the clean-up operation, has said the environmental damage caused by the spill would be minimal and there would be no damage to the gulf's $110 million-a-year shrimping industry.

But one marine biologist warned that shrimp from the gulf might taste of oil from the spill and fishermen have charged that 20 percent of their profits over the first several months of the year had already been cut by Pemex spills.

Pemex officials have said if Adair fails, it could take three months to build two drills to divert the escaping crude into tankers.

Jurors' Deliberations Begin In Thorpe Trial

LONDON (AP) — After 28 days of testimony and arguments, the jury in the Jeremy Thorpe trial began deliberating today to decide whether the former Liberal party leader and three other men conspired to murder the former male model who claimed the politician had been his lover.

Judge Sir Joseph Cantley wound up his long summation in four minutes today after telling the nine men and three women on the jury Tuesday that the case against Thorpe was "almost entirely circumstantial."

"We are not here to decide whether he had a homosexual relationship or not," the judge said. "We have to decide ... if Mr. Thorpe had a motive which would really go so far as to impel him to conspiracy for getting rid of Scott."

The judge said Norman Scott, the 39-year-old target of the alleged murder plot, was a "fraud. He is a sponger. He is a whiner. He is a parasite.

"But, of course," he added, "he could still be telling the truth."

Thorpe, 50, and the three co-defendants were charged with plotting to kill Scott because they feared his talk of homosexual relations with the politician in the 1960s would wreck Thorpe's political career.

Police Suspect Terrorist Plan

ROME (UPI) — Antiterrorist police believe the Red Brigades planned to assassinate the American-born president of the Vatican Bank who also serve as personal bodyguard of Pope John Paul II, investigation sources said.

The sources said a slip of paper with the name and address of the priest, Paul Marcinkus, born in Cicero, Ill., was found in a raid on an apartment that also turned up the weapon used to murder former Premier Aldo Moro.

The weapon, a Czech-made Skorpion submachine gun, "is ideal for terrorists and for urban guerrilla use," said police ballistics expert Maurizio Coronato. "It's manageable, easily concealed, low-cost, with a notable rate of fire and can be easily silenced."

The apartment belonged to Adriana Farand, 29, and Valerio Morucci, 30, who were arrested on May 30 when police burst into their apartment and surprised them in bed.

Uganda Leader Quits Amid Internal Strife

KAMPALA, Uganda (UPI) — Ugandan President Yusufu Lule, his two-month old government wracked by internal dissension, resigned today, Uganda radio announced.

The radio broadcast a lengthy statement which was not attributed but clearly emanated from the office of the president.

The statement said: "We now hand over to our colleagues (the responsibility) to carry out the tasks of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country after eight years of Idi Amin, and to prepare for democratic elections within two years."

No successor to Lule was announced.

Lule, 68, became provisional president of Uganda April 13 when he was sworn in on the steps of the parliament building in Kampala just two days after Tanzanian forces liberated the city from forces loyal to Amin.

The government has been torn by constant bickering among the various political factions represented and Lule has carried out two government shakeups within 12 days. The latest occured Tuesday.

A major crisis developed when Lule refused to clear his government appointments with the consultative council. He was denounced as a "dictator" by some of his own ministers and members of the council.

In the statement, Lule made reference to the fact that the Uganda National Liberation Front — the movement of Ugandan exiles formed in March to overthrow Amin — had faced several problems.

"One of the difficulties has centered around the appointments to ministerial posts. These appointments have not pleased everybody," the statement said.

"The time ultimately came when some members of the consultative council felt there must be a change in the leadership of the front.

"This I accepted as I did not wish to see any conflict developing around my personality. Uganda has had enough of this," the statement said.

Lule then went on to list the tasks facing the government in the field of reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country following the overthrow of the Amin dictatorship.

"We now hand over to our colleagues to carry out these tasks and in this, we wish them every success," the statement said.

The statement did not make clear if the entire government was stepping down, or merely Lule.

Violence Mars Independent Truckers' Protest

An Alabama trucker was shot and killed today as violence flared up again in a nationwide protest by independent drivers. The head of the American Trucking Association appealed to President Carter for action to assure peace on the highways.

Vegetables were rotting in fields, meat remained in packing plants and motorists lined up for tightening gasoline supplies. Several states beefed up National Guard and police protection for trucks still on the road.

Bennett C. Whitlock Jr., president of the trucking association which represents 16,874 trucking firms, urged Carter in a telegram to use the FBI and Justice Department to "keep the highways open for commerce and for safe use by truck operators and motorists alike."

Alabama state troopers said Robert Tate of Birmingham was shot and killed while standing in a cotton field beside his disabled tractor-trailer rig which had jack-knifed off U.S. 72 near Tuscumbia. The officers said Tate bled to death when a shot fired by a medium-caliber rifle severed an artery in his left leg.

Alabama Gov. Fob James posted the maximum state reward of $10,000 for information leading to an arrest and conviction in the shooting. He posted a similar reward in the case of a Georgia truck driver's wife who was shot near Tuscaloosa while riding in her husband's rig last week.

Police in Utah reported two trucks hit by gunfire today after four such incidents Tuesday. Two more trucks were shot up in Kentucky. No injuries were reported.

The leader of the Independent Truckers Unity Committee urged the nation's 100,000 owner-operators to stop driving at midnight to protest high diesel fuel prices and the 55 mph speed limit.

Florida Agriculture Department officials, worried that ripe produce would rot in the fields, arranged for highway patrol escorts and police protection in 10 states for a convoy expected to pull out of Lake City today. As many as 100 trucks were expected to join the convoy, but by 9 a.m. today none had showed up.

Minnesota Gov. Al Quie declared a state of emergency Tuesday, saying he would call out the National Guard and law enforcement officers to shepherd truckers who wanted to keep driving.

Gov. Otis Bowen ordered police to restore gas deliveries to fuel-starved northern Indiana. And National Guardsmen were to refill storage tanks to keep some Alabama service stations open.

Troopers along the East Coast today were to escort a convoy of trucks hauling produce from Florida to markets in the Northeast.

A spokesman for Florida Gov. Bob Graham said states along interstate highways 75 and 95 had agreed to protect an estimated 100 trucks hauling watermelons and other freight.

"We don't want to hurt the people," said Florida gasoline hauler Jim Dailey. "But somebody's going to suffer when the stations aren't getting any gasoline. You can't get around if you don't have any gas. You can't get any produce if the produce haulers aren't delivering."

He predicted today the "overwhelming majority" of independents would have their rigs parked by the end of the week and said the council couldn't slow the strike momentum if it wanted.

"Actually we don't represent the majority of independent truckers. There's nobody in the nation that does," he said on NBC's "Today" show. "Through the coalition we put together mechanics where we're going to have to go through procedures to call this thing off. The independent haulers themselves would have to vote on an agreement."

"We think our people should more or less park their rigs at home and take an extended vacation," he said. "They shouldn't be blockading any truck stops. They shouldn't be blocking any highways. Violence is not needed."

Some businesses went to court to make sure their products would be delivered. East Highland Co., an Alabama sawmill, filed suit against 10 men accused of shutting down the mill in connection with the protest. The company wants $75,000 for each day it's closed.

The Armour pork processing plant won a temporary restraining order to keep truckers from blocking its Worthington, Minn., plant. The firm closed Monday due to a lack of trucks, but the plant manager said he hoped to have 400 workers back on the job Thursday.

South Dakota's largest meat-packing plant, John Morrell & Co., was holding 2 million pounds of meat Monday because there were no trucks to take it to market. By Tuesday, "the list is so long it scares me," said President Donald Slotkin. Layoffs were threatened.

In Michigan, Gov. William Milliken ordered state officials to draw contingency plans for moving food and medicine to areas paralyzed by the strike.

'Windfall Profits' Tax Approval Expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A toughened "windfall profits" tax is on its way to the full House where anger over long gasoline lines and high fuel prices is expected to lead to prompt approval.

The beefed-up tax, which would cost oil companies about $6 billion more over five years than President Carter's original plan, cleared the House Ways and Means Committee on a 20-16 vote Tuesday.

After clearing whatever hurdles it encounters in the House, the tax proposal is expected to face a stiff challenge when it goes to the Senate Finance Committee, which is headed by oil-state Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La.

In related developments:

— Three congressional committees are considering legislation to promote development of synthetic fuels, such as oil extracted from coal, and other alternatives to foreign oil.

— Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., chairman of a House energy subcommittee, said Tuesday home heating oil may be in such short supply in the Northeast this winter that people may have to leave their homes and go to public shelters to keep warm.

— Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal outlined to the Ways and Means Committee Tuesday the Carter administration's proposal to raise $500 million a year by limiting the oil companies' use of the foreign tax credit. Liberals on the committee are expected to press for their own proposal to eliminate the foreign tax credit for oil companies altogether and thus raise an estimated $2 billion a year.

The Ways and Means Committee's "windfall profits" tax bill would raise an estimated $27.8 billion between 1980 and 1984, compared with $21.8 billion under the president's bill.

The revised version would allow the oil companies to keep 17 cents to 23 cents of each dollar gained from oil price decontrol. Those pennies would total about $13 billion in extra oil company profits through 1984.

The committee adopted the president's plan for a special energy trust fund, paid for by the "windfall" taxes, but put off until later a decision on what types of projects the fund will support.

Carter has recommended using the fund to help finance improved mass transit and development of alternative energy sources and to help pay for the fuel bills of low-income Americans.

The committee rejected most efforts Tuesday to tamper further with the proposed "windfall" tax. However, it voted to exempt from the tax revenues contributed by oil companies to state educational funds.

Committee members said that exemption would reduce the revenue raised by the tax by about $700 million over five years. However, some congressional tax experts indicated they believe the figure might be closer to $1 billion.

And by an 18-17 vote, the committee approved a so-called closed rule for floor action on the bill. A closed rule would bar floor amendments aimed at toughening or weakening the tax when it goes to the full House.

The "windfall" tax accompanies the president's action to slowly lift price controls on U.S.-produced crude oil, a process that began June 1 and will continue until mid-1981 when domestic oil prices will have reached world levels.

Under price controls, U.S. oil prices have been averaging about $11 per 42-gallon barrel — compared with world prices averaging about $18, including surcharges. The nation imports roughly half of the petroleum it uses.

Station Owner Faces Trying Situations

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The OPEC countries and America's thirst for gasoline have given service station operators like Jim Sayegh a taste of the legendary life of a policeman — their lot, too, is not a happy one.

Jim feels like he is between the oil companies and the angry motorists who want gasoline.

During the worst of the shortage — it has eased and last month's long lines have gone away in California, though sales rationing continues — his station was without gasoline for a period. Lines of cars formed anyway until he barricaded the entrances with borrowed trucks.

He had problems with motorists ready to fight for gasoline, he said. "For awhile, about every other day it was something."

"But when you're in business, you don't want to fight everybody. Sometimes people have a problem and don't want to pay. The aggravaion is caused by the long lines.

"You have to make a judgment: Is this guy a real trouble-maker? Sometimes you let it go, let the money go rather than have the problem.

"You have to understand, the people have their own problems. I tell my people to bring it to me, or let it go.

"But very few people, really, give trouble. We try to avoid that problem.

"When there's no gas? Well, there's just nothing. We try to cut the hours in the afternoon and then open in the mornings and evenings. But we have to pay employees whether we have gasoline or not.

"We lose a few bucks. It really keeps you hanging there."

Fortunately, he said, his station's allocation is larger than some other, smaller, stations.

"We're pretty sure it's going to get better," he said, "maybe — with the price going up."

The service bays stay open but repair jobs won't keep his shop open. "They just don't amount to that much. We can't do heavy mechanical work, because of company policy. ..."

His service policies remain the same. The windshield and other windows get wiped. The attendants ask to check under the hood.

"We have to give service, get under the hoods. Just selling gas wouldn't pay off. The way rent is, and other expenses. We can't just live on gasoline alone.

"I know some people take advantage of the situation and are charging people to check under the hoods. But we don't do business that way."

He's hanging on.

"It gives me a job and keeps me off welfare."

Congressional Leaders Vow Bills To Develop Synthetic Fuels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders, attempting to show fuel-short Americans some progress on the energy front, today vowed action this summer on bills to boost U.S. production and to develop a new synthetic-fuels industry.

The centerpiece of the legislation is a proposal to pump billions of dollars in federal subsidies into development of coal oil and other synthetic fuels to reduce the nation's 50 percent reliance on imports.

Gasoline made from coal would be chemically indistinguishable from gas refined from oil. It probably would not cost any more at the pump — although consumers would find their tax dollars used to subsidize its production.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., summoning his Senate Energy Committee into a 7 a.m. session to begin work on the bill, asserted: "We are committed to acting on this legislatin or a form of it before the end of July."

Meanwhile today, a House Education and Labor subcommittee stepped outside its jurisdiction and approved a $5-billion-a-year government effort to produce gasoline from coal and other exotic sources.

The bill by Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., approved unanimously by voice vote, now goes to the full committee, which Perkins chairs.

The legislation would create a government corporation to produce or oversee production of synthetic fuel equivalent to 5 million barrels of oil per day, about one-fourth of the nation's current needs.

House leaders, however, have decided to press for House approval of a $2 billion synthetic-fuels bill before the congressional July 4th recess.

"The synthetic fuel thing is greased. You've never seen such a locomotive," said Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., who is skeptical about the measure but said that the House leadership has the needed votes already lined up to pass it.

Moffett attended a private session Tuesday with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and other House leaders to make plans for speeding the bill through the House.

Jackson opened three days of hearings before his panel on legislation sponsored by himself, Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd and a bipartisan group of 18 other senators.

In addition to providing full funding for a variety of multi-billion-dollar synthetic fuel plants, the bill would also speed federal approval for a variety of major energy projects — including pipelines and new power plants.

Carter To Unveil Solar Energy Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, trying out one of the stranger settings for a speech, is unveiling his solar energy proposals on the White House roof while also marking the operation of a new water heater powered by the sun.

But even before the president could pay hommage to the sun today in the combined water heater dedication-solar energy address, a critic complained that the president's proposals were insufficient.

Advance word indicated Carter would propose setting a goal of using solar power to meet 20 percent of the country's energy needs by the year 2000.

Other elements of the Carter plan — reported by Richard Munson, coordinator of the Solar Lobby, a private group backing solar energy development — include endorsing a Solar Energy Development Bank to finance solar power development and an increase in federal spending for solar power.

Munson said Carter rejected a proposal to challenge the nation to aim for a 30 percent dependence on solar power by the end of the century.

There would be no comment on the criticism, a White House spokesman said, before the president spoke.

Solar power now accounts for 6 percent of the nation's energy needs and would be expected to supply 13 percent by the end of the century without the president's program.

Munson also said Carter had chosen to increase fiscal 1981 spending for solar energy $100 million more than what the Budget Office recommended, but $350 million less than an Energy Department proposal.

Carter's solar energy budget for fiscal 1980, which begins Oct. 1, calls for spending $646 million.

"Most opinion polls would show people want to use solar energy and are willing to spend more for it," Munson said in an interview.

He also said the president was not providing enough incentive to push the nation to meet the 20 percent goal.

The Solar Energy Development Bank proposal is contained in a bill that, after languishing for two years in Congress, is making its way through subcommittees.

It would make approximately $450 million available in long-term, low-interest loans to homeowners and potential commercial users of solar energy.

Munson said the administration has opposed similar legislation and that it was likely to be approved this year even without Carter's support.

The setting for the president's speech was the terrace-like roof over the White House Cabinet room and press quarters.

There, workmen erected a $28,000 collection of pipes and glass panels that make up the solar energy system, which for a month has been heating water for the office section of the White House.

Presidential energy experts have been working on the solar energy program since Carter called for a review of solar energy developments in a speech on "Sun Day," May 3, 1978.

Texans Find Gasoline Supplies Dwindling

HOUSTON (AP) — In this summer of discontent for motorists, Texans are finding gasoline supplies dwindling more and more with each passing week while the price for the precious liquid continues its inexorable climb.

In its weekly survey of 423 service stations across the state, the American Automobile Association found that, compared with last week, almost twice as many stations were out of at least one grade of gasoline or were limiting purchases this week, especially in the large cities.

The AAA also reported that price increases this week were the largest in the seven-week history of the survey. Prices were up an average of 1½ cents per gallon for most grades, it said.

Of the stations surveyed, the AAA said, 11 percent were out of one or more grades of gasoline and 3 percent were limiting customers' purchases by dollar or gallon amount. Last week, just 6 percent were out of some grade of fuel and 2 percent were limiting purchases.

And more stations are closing weekday nights and Sundays, the AAA said, with 73 percent shutting down by 8 p.m. weekdays and 74 percent closing this Sunday, compared with 68 percent on weekdays and 73 percent on Sundays a week ago.

Nearly 100 percent of the 128 stations surveyed in the state's two major urban areas — Houston and Dallas-Fort Worth — are now closing nights and Sundays, and about 20 percent are out of at least one grade of gasoline, the AAA said.

The association report said Beaumont also was harder hit with 80 percent of its stations closing weekday nights now compared with 44 percent last week.

Across the rest of the state, two-thirds of the stations surveyed said they were closed on Sundays and 72 percent were closing by 8 p.m. on weekdays. Last week, 60 percent were closing on Sunday and 67 percent were not open weekday nights.

The AAA said fuel availability was best in the state along interstate highways and in small cities and rural areas.

The current average full-service prices across the state and last week's price were reported by the AAA as: Regular 81.7 cents a gallon this week, 80.3 last week; unleaded 85.5, 84.0; premium 87.2, 86.4. Self-serve prices are: Regular 79.3, 78.7; unleaded 83.4, 81.9; and premium 85.7, 84.1.

Diesel fuel jumped from 83.1 cents a gallon last week to the current 85.6 cents a gallon. The AAA said the average price of diesel has risen almost 13 cents a gallon since May 11, while gas has gone up about 6 cents.

Clements Announces Restrictions

AUSTIN (AP) — Here in brief are the gasoline purchase restrictions laid down Tuesday by Gov. Bill Clements for Harris, Dallas and Tarrant counties (Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth), effective June 25:

— Gasoline will be dispensed into vehicles with license plate numbers the last digit of which is an even number and, if only letters are on the plates, the last letter which is the first half of the alphabet (A to M) only on even days of the month. Gasoline will be dispensed into vehicles with licenses which end in odd numbers or, where there are only letters, those which have N to Z plates on odd days of the month.

— The minimum purchase price for any single transaction of gasoline is to be $6 unless the total tank capacity of a vehicle is 10 gallons or less.

— The maximum purchase for any single transaction will be 20 gallons.

— Filling of auxiliary containers in excess of two gallons will be prohibited.

— Emergency, out-of-state and identifiable commercial vehicles may purchase gasoline any day of the week.

— Supply and type of gasoline available should be prominently displayed through some flag system.

Economy Poses Test For Carter

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — In the months to come, President Jimmy Carter faces a test that leaders often have been unable to pass.

It is a test of mettle and tenacity, and it involves a choice of whether good economics or smart politics will be employed. The former would serve the nation best, but the latter might save the candidate.

Carter maintains he can meet the challenge. He has promised that no matter what the personal price, he will use what he perceives to be sound economics and will avoid expedients.

No matter how convincing that promise might be, it doesn't erase the question of whether an incumbent president can tolerate a weak economy, and particularly a recession, at election time.

For Carter, therefore, the next few months mean a test of fire. As piles of negative economic news make fire, the blaze grows hotter, the temptation to remove oneself from the heat grows more alluring.

Should he boost the already inflated economy? Should he ease up on his anti-inflation efforts? Should he cease to seek a balanced budget? Or should he hold firm, possibly sacrificing himself in doing so?

The economy is a big factor in any election. After losing to John Kennedy in the 1960 presidential race, for example, Richard Nixon blamed his political inheritance of a weak economy.

Nixon didn't forget. When, a decade later, the economy soared out of control, generally thought to precede a recession, President Nixon reversed his policies. He froze wages and prices. And won another term.

Carter's job isn't the same, except that it involves an economy with little self-discipline and that his job could be lost if voters find themselves in a recession they feel could have been avoided.

Analysis

But the challenge is similar: Does a candidate listen to a higher conscience, or does he accept the political expedient?

Economists commend Carter for saying he will fight inflation even to a bitter political end. But politicians ask if he can stand the heat.

Timing is a factor. Carter tacticians had expected the slowdown to have begun before now. Had it, the chances are fair, though probably no better, that we would have been through it and out by the elections.

That would have been a beautiful scenario. What is better for a candidate seeking re-election than to have economic growth coincide with his promises of better times to come? It's an upbeat theme.

The scenario is at least six months delayed. And, assuming we are now into the slowdown, there's a chance it could become a recession. That is, production would even decline rather than merely slow.

Nobody can tell, either, how long it will last. Nobody, not all the king's men nor all the president's advisers. What Carter looks for is a slowdown short and sweet. But he cannot be certain of it.

It now appears that without major economic changes the odds are better than 50-50 that people will be less than encouraged by economic signs as they go to the polls a year from this November.

With that situation ahead, many feel the president will be tempted to take extraordinary measures, as much for his administration's sake as for the country's good.

It could mean asking Congress for wage-price controls that would at least give a semblance of order and authority while at the same time providing temporary, though perhaps damaging, respite from inflation.

Or it might mean something very different. A recession threat could provide the president with an opportunity to slide his foot from brake to accelerator, just enough for a brief burst of pre-election speed.

Either course would likely mean more inflation troubles later on, but then there would be four full years in which to deal with them.

It's a tempting possibility and, with the stakes so high, a temptation probably great enough to make one abandon promises.

House Of Faberge Items On Display

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some 100 objects created in gold, enamel, and precious and semiprecious stones by the House of Faberge are on view through Oct. 28 at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

The House of Faberge was a firm that made luxury objects for the Russian imperial court and other influential persons under the direction of the Russian goldsmith, Peter Carl Faberge.

The objects date from 1870 through 1918 and are drawn from the Matilda Geddings Gray Foundation Collection in New Orleans, augmented by objects from California collections.

Sociologist Studies Urban 'Legends'

By LEE MITGANG
Associated Press Writer

Everyone knows stories like these: someone claims to find a mouse in a pop bottle. Or you read somewhere or other about worms in fast food burgers, or effervescent candy that makes your stomach explode.

Gary Fine, a professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota, collects and studies hundreds of these tall tales. He calls them "urban belief legends."

Fine contends that in an increasingly urban, impersonal, corporate world, people have a psychological need to express their anxiety and lack of control by telling these urban legends.

Some of the legends have a grain of truth — people have actually found mice in pop bottles. The vast majority are false. But their truth or lack of it almost doesn't matter — at least not to the spinner of the yarn.

"Whether or not there's truth behind it, it's told like a tall tale," says Fine.

"My argument is that these stories start from modern urban pressures. We no longer know or control who prepares our food or other aspects of life. As a result of the anxiety of being at the mercy of others, we make up these stories," says Fine.

Fine, 29, has taken his search for urban legends to his native New York City, and to Boston, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn. So far, he sees no distinction between the urban legends of the East or Midwest.

The folklore of modern urban man is not fundamentally different from ancient times, when Greeks and Romans invented myths and gods to account for the unaccountable.

But why do otherwise sophisticated modern city-dwellers need to tell tall tales?

While ancient man felt at the mercy of nature and the gods, corporations appear to be the unfathomable force behind many urban tall tales, says Fine.

"Typically, people believe that corporations are all-powerful, so why should they be ethical? Why not believe that there are worms in hamburgers?"

And new products that people don't understand give rise to urban legends. "It's like modern magic," says Fine. In that category, the effervescent candy that was introduced a few years ago gave rise to entirely false stories about people's stomachs being ruptured from eating too much of the stuff.

Or when microwave ovens came out, Fine unearthed a false, but widespread, story about a girl who had put her cat in an oven to dry — only to find 15 seconds later that the cat had exploded.

Whether true or false, says Fine, urban legends also are told because of their sheer entertainment value.

He adds that corporations are not always the bad guys in urban legends. One very widespread, persistent, and completely untrue tale claims that some kindly corporations will give free kidney dialysis if presented with enough cigarette wrappers or flip-top beer tabs.

But do people actually believe these modern urban legends? In a way, says Fine.

"Typically, people say to me that there may or may not be truth to what they've heard about hamburgers or ovens or whatever," he says. "They might not bet money on it, but they keep it stored in their minds as a fact for consideration."

Noise Pollution Becomes Growing World Problem

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A New United Nations report on the environment says noise pollution around the world is escalating so rapidly it is becoming "one of the major threats to the quality on human life."

No one can escape unwanted sound, the report said, and people slowly seem to accept noise and its consequences as an inevitable part of life.

"The problem knows no political or social frontiers," said the document prepared under the direction of Dr. Mostafa Kamal Tolba, the executive director of the United Nations Environment Program.

"It affects the rich who sleep in a quiet suburb, but travel by plane and cruise by motorboat just as much as the poor who must live next to a highway orrailway or near an airport runway."

The report, an annual look at the state of the world's environment, also focused this year on three other global problems — a debilitating water-borne disease called schistosomiasis, growing resistance of insects to pesticides and the impact of tourism on the environment.

The report noted that noise is everywhere and since it does not pose as obvious, and immediate danger as water or air pollution, action to limit noise pollution around the world has been modest.

The report said sudden and unexpected noise can affect the body in other ways too. Increased blood pressure, increased heart rate and muscular contractions have been observed from such noise.

"Even when a person is accustomed to an environment where the noise level ie high, physiological changes occur," the report said. And it said noise also has psychological effects such as irritability, tenseness, moodiness, insomnia and fear.

In addition, the report said noise can impair the efficiency of work, damage structures and even affect the output of farm animals.

It has been estimated, the report said, that 500 professions and occupations involve the danger of hearing impairment because of noise. To avoid this, some countries have set noise exposure limits for workers.

The United States, for example, has a limit of 90 decibels for eight hours a day but the report said it has been found that under such a standard, one-fifth of the exposed work force will suffer hearing damage. As a result, the report said some countries such as the Netherlands have lowered their limits to 80 decibels. Some studies indicate that a maximum of 75 would be better.

Noise is not just a problem on the job. The report said the modern home in developed countries contains many sources of annoying noise such as air conditioners, blenders, washing mechines, television and high fidelity equipment.

But of all the sources of noise today, the report said that caused by surdace transportation is found almost everywhere. It is particularly bad in Europe and Japan.

British Star's Show Praised

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — Armed with a fine voice, sharp wit, hoofing talent, cornball jokes and hoary game-show skits, Bruce Forsyth, a star in England but unknown here, has arrived on Broadway.

His one-man show, backed by a 28-piece band, premiered this week at the Winter Garden. It's only there through Saturday, but displays bits of all he's done in 36 years of entertaining in England.

He's worked music halls, revues, game shows and hosted a hit TV Variety series, "Sunday Night at the London Palladium," where his catch-phrase for the departing trouper was, "Didn't he do well?"

After a preview look, I'd give a qualified yes regarding Forsyth, 51, a tall, energetic man who bounds on stage, white teeth and mustache akimbo, and works his tail off to entertain.

It's hard to knock a guy who notes Fred Astaire once danced at the Winter Garden, then adds: "You can see the skid marks."

And you can't boo anyone who sits at the piano, studies the keys, grouses, "Who rubbed the mark off?" and then does a nifty "Misty" in the Erroll Garner manner after warning the patrons:

"I am to music what Paul Lynde is to the NFL."

But severe sag sets in when the ex-host of British TV's "The Generation Game" lures two couples on stage for game show skits, then asks the audience to indicate the winners by applause.

Not only did this sort of thing go out with Dish Night at the Bijou, so many game shows now befoul American TV that one on stage constitutes cruel, unusual and possibly illegal punishment.

Forsyth, who may not realize this, is in far better form when just kidding the audience, joshing his sidekick, Don Hunt — "my arranger, my conductor, my procurer" — or singing, dancing and loosing ancient jokes, puns and spur-of-the-moment funnies with cheerful abandon.

As a vocal impressionist, he neatly disposes of Tom Jones without even singing he just thrusts his hips back and forth. He's passable as a sloshed Dean Martin, but misfires with his Frank Sinatra.

It sounds more like Sammy Davis Jr., whom he later brilliantly mimics with an outthrust lower jaw, quick, nervous moves and superb tap-dancing and scat-singing in the familiar Davis manner.

He's a dandy singer in his own voice, too. He's got solid baritone pipes, good phrasing, can swing up-tempo wares with the best of them and is equally effective on ballads.

He comes here recommended by such Yanks as Neil Simon, Alan King and Davis (the last was to introduce him to Tuesday's premiere-night crowd), and is a trouper in the best, old-fashioned sense.

He's always working, always tries to give you your money's worth. That his act has its dull spots isn't for lack of effort by him.

It could be improved by axing the game-show bit, offering more song, not just snatches of same, and more of the ad libs and inspired bits of whimsy that flit about this two-hour proceeding.

Forsyth has the talent, lots of it. But you occasionally feel he's holding backn still testing the American reaction. If he ever cuts loose, I suspect hell have a great show, not just a good one.

Woman's Musical 'Thin Fare' On Broadway

By JAY SHARBUTT

NW YORK (AP) — A one-woman musical has bowed on Broadway. It stars Phyllis Newman, who co-wrote it with Arthur Laurents. It is "The Madwoman of Central Park West." It is no good.

It's the sort of terribly cute caper you find whenever Broadway's smart set gathers at penthouse canape festivals to be droll, sip Perrier and do songs that begin, "Love's a bore..."

Autobiographical in nature, "Madwoman" concerns coping, Broadway-style, by a woman torn between her family and her career. The tale, told in her messy Central Park West bedroom, seems this:

While young, she met and wed a famous Broadway writer, had success performing on Broadway, then dropped out for a while to tend him, their two kids and make a good home for all concerned.

But as middle-age approaches, she feels hemmed in, spinning her wheels. One detects this in the first tune, "Up, Up, Up," which has her seeking meaning from "the finest mantra on Central Park West."

She has the itch to perform again, resume the career. But how to do this without neglecting family and home?

The answer arrives after a series of vignettes in which she occasionally pauses to tell her never-seen tykes such motherly things as, "You are not allowed to watch television for the rest of your natural life!"

You learn many things. Her mother was a fortune teller, dad a hypnotist. She had a high school friend, Peggy the Cheerleader, married a "Prince of Broadway," won a Tony, attended self-awareness seminars, almost had an affair with a teacher at the school her kids attended. And so on and so forth, a night of rampant etceteras.

About the music: Miss Newman, married to Adolph Green, the noted lyricist-librettist famed for Broadway collaborations with Betty Comden, has a lot of top-name talent contributing tunes here.

Her husband and Miss Comden are represented, as are Leonard Bernsteinn Jerry Bock, Sheldon Harnick, Mary Rodgers, Martin Charnin, Stephen Sondheim, Carole Bayer Sager and Miss Newman herself.

It's mostly for naught. Only three of the shows 10 original songs stand out — "Dont Laugh" by Rodgers, Charnin and Sondheim, "Better" by Ed Kleban and Bernstein's "My New Friends."

The rest are sophisticatedly brittle, suitable primarily for those trying a new act at such intimate boites here as Les Mouches, where in fact "Madwoman" had its origins as Miss Newman's new club act.

It should have stayed there. Inspected at a preview, the Broadway version is very thin fare, despite the occasional spice she gives it with deft bits of mugging and funny vocal twists.

The humor is often strained. Laurents' direction plods. But Phillip Jung's messy-bedroom set, from which the star ventures from time to time, at least is a decent mess.

It's a pity Miss Newman, backed throughout the show by Herbert Kaplan's five-piece off-stage band, felt "Madwoman" might brighten the 22 Steps Theater, where it premiered last week.

She's a lady of great talent, as her Tony for "Subways Are For Sleeping" attests. And she makes a valiant effort in her new show. But her new show only has a Valium effect.

What other critics said:

Richard Eder, New York Times — Miss Newman's performance is mostly good and sometimes quite winning, though it lacks any very specific flavor. The problem is with the personage she plays...its unvarying quality of rueful kookiness becomes very tiresome after the first half-hour or so.

Douglas Watt, New York Daily News — She is bright, amusing and in full command of her material. But lighthearted as her approach is, the closed air becomes the least bit fetid..."

Critic Hails Premiere Of Ballet

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Jerome Robbins has choreographed a splendid new plotless ballet for Mikhail Baryshnikov, utilizing his superb classical form and ability to jump high. But Robbins hasn't overbalanced the work. The ballerina, Patricia McBride, and ensemble of 12 dancers are important, too.

The New York City Ballet performed the premiere of the 25-minute "Opus 19" recently at the New York State Theater. Robbins and George Balanchine are known for choosing good and interesting pieces of music for their ballets. Robbins has done it again, setting "Opus 19" to Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 1."

Baryshnikov, in white tights and short-sleeved leotard, is in the center of the stage most of the time, sometimes while the corps de ballet dances and whirls around the stage, circling him. He jumps and turns in the air, one leg tucked in; jumps and beats his feet together; jumps and turns, one leg held parallel to the floor.

There are mysterious passages in the music and sometimes Miss McBride, in a dark blue dress, would back away from a duet with Baryshnikov and join the blue-clad ensemble. He ends the first movement magnificently alone.

The second movement begins with the violin playing an exciting tempo and melody. Baryshnikov and Miss McBride have a pas de deux in which they are sometimes a distance apart but their quick steps mirror each other. The always appropriate lighting is by Ronald Bates, costumes by Ben Benson.

Whatever the mood of the moment, though, the overall mood is serenity. One could read into it the story of a man content to be alone, but also content to be with his mate.

The premiere was viewed by a discerning ballet audience. They clapped for the good job done by both principals and the ensemble. It was not at all the wild clapping of an audience which has come to see a star. Robbins took a bow during one of the repeated curtain calls, as did the violin soloist, Lamar Alsop.

The audience also clapped a good deal for solos by Merrill Ashley and Helgi Tomasson in the first ballet of the evening, "Donizetti Variations" and not much for their duets, which looked under-rehearsed. Miss Ashley was filling in for an injured Kay Mazzo.

Doctors Call For Aid To Cambodia

PARIS (AP) — Three French doctors, recently returned from a 10-day trip to Cambodia, said the Southeast Asian nation is threatened with widespread famine, malnutrition and epidemics.

The doctors, all working in Paris hospitals, also said at a press conference that medical standards throughout Cambodia were appalling and that almost all the nation's medical personnel had disappeared.

Jacques Belghiti, Richard Planells and Jean-Yves Follezou, invited to visit by the Cambodian Ministry of Health, called for international aid to be rushed to Cambodia "as fast as possible."

The hospital they found functioning the best had only three doctors, no surgeon and had no x-ray capability, they said.

"Antibiotics are cruelly lacking," Follezou said. "People are dying of diseases that are usually easily curable."

The doctors even found instances of anthrax, a disease transmitted to humans who eat decaying animals and has been unknown in France for 50 years.

The French volunteer group "Medecins Sans Frontieres" — Doctors Without Borders — offered at the press conference to send a medical team to Cambodia as soon as possible, if the Cambodian authorities agree.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Wheat and corn futures rose and soybeans declined today on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Corn futures rose partly in response to talk that the Soviet Union had begun to buy corn to import during the coming marketing year which begins this fall.

Wheat futures gained on talk of larger-than-expected exports of wheat last week, when the Agriculture Department said about 26 million bushels were shipped abroad. That quantity was 12 percent above the preceding week and 21 percent more than the same week a year earlier.

Veteran Character Actor Happy With Billing In NBC Program

By JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Henry Jones walked into the restaurant late for an interview and the reporter, who had ordered a drink, apologized for starting without him.

"Great," Jones said. "What have I said so far?"

Jones has been an actor for more than 40 years, and for most of them like many fine character actors he has been one of those familiar faces that everybody loves but nobody can stick a name to.

His roles have ranged from playing Cloris Leachman's stepfather-in-law in "Phyllis" to his Tony Award-winning Broadway charcterization of Louis Howe in Dore Schary's "Sunrise at Campobello."

His latest appearances were last season as editor Josh Alden in NBC's "Mrs. Columbo," which returns in the fall as "Kate Columbo," still starring Kate Mulgrew as the housewife-reporter-amateur detective.

Jones is delighted with his second billing in the show, instead of being listed with the also-rans at the end.

"People who don't know the business think all this problem with billing is a matter of ego," Jones said. "It isn't. It's dollars and cents. Always has been. The next producer sees your billing and thinks of you differently. You become a significant performer."

Jones doesn't deny that recognition shares a place with finances in all this — he grins broadly with delight at the fact that people are beginning to recognize him.

"It's very dismaying," he said, "to have people walk up and say, 'I know you — what have I seen you in?' When you've been around since 1935, that's discouraging.

"I don't know about ego, though. Moss Hart (the Broadway playwright) once said that he'd never known an actor who had a happy childhood. He said they were attracted to acting because they disliked themselves and were most comfortable being somebody else."

Jones, however, appears happy to have made his own acquaintance, with dozens of film credits inluding "Support Your Local Sheriff," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and "Vertigo," a long list of Broadway appearances, and more than 600 television appearances.

Henry Jones has never become a household word because that's the nature of character work. As for his role as Kate Columbo's editor, he said: "It's fairly minute but it's very well-written. He's a feisty old man.

Baseball Old-Timers To Spin Yarns On Dick Cavett Show

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dick Cavett, he of the nimble wit, stands before the cameras with a baseball glove on his left hand.

"PBS is not known as the sports network," he says, "so it's possible that you may not be familiar with this object that I have in my hand..."

It was a gentle jab, a kindly elbow to the ribs of public TV for its reputation (though fading) as being narrow, inaccessible and elitist.

Actually, PBS can have fun, as Cavett often proves on his nightly "Dick Cavett Show" on PBS. He proves it again this week when three nights are dedicated to baseball. The second part airs tonight and the third installment airs Thursday night.

Cavett's panel of guests is, as he put it, "a sort of baseball Olympus" — Mickey Mantle, Leo ("The Lip") Durocher, Henry Aaron and retired umpire Tom Gorman.

The spinning of yarns by baseball old-timers is one of America's richest entertainments, whether it occurs on a splintery bench in some backwater ballyard or on the pages of a ghost-written, autobiographical tome filled with outrageous, colorful lies.

But this particular bit of baseball repartee is especially rewarding. Cavett, the skinny intellectual, surrounded by these baseball men, elitists themselves in a world of flying spikes and cuss words and tobacco juice.

It is Cavett's show, but it seems more like a gallery tour; Mantle, Aaron, Durocher and Gorman are the guides, Cavett the tourist who is obliged to stop and smile appreciatively as the guides pause at various artworks they especially admire.

Such as:

Durocher telling of his days with the Gashouse Gang (St. Louis Cardinals, 1934-37) and the time Dizzy Dean went into the Chicago Cubs' clubhouse and told the Cubbies how he intended to pitch them that afternoon, an outrageous display of self-confidence.

"Of course," says Mantle, "nobody could hit Diz."

Or the famous shin-kicking match between Durocher and former umpire Jocko Conlan, back when Durocher was coaching the Los Angeles Dodgers. Durocher tells that when he would argue with umpires, he'd try to manuever them over to the baselines, which were made of lye.

Durocher did that so he could "kick the lye with my shoe on their pants. If they don't get it off, it'll burn a hole in there." On this particular night, Durocher continues, he missed the baseline and kicked Conlan in the shin.

"And he kicked me ... and I kicked him, and he kicked me. I finally realized, I'm getting the worst of it. He's got shin guards on."

There are other gems, including the time Mickey Mantle tried to sneak into the Yankee's Boston hotel room by stacking trash cans outside his window, and the time Tom Gormon, certain that the pitcher had thrown a pitch the batter couldn't hit, called strike three just as the ball was leaving the bat on its way out of the park.

It's a wonderful tour, with stops at some of the greatest baseball stories ever made. I recommend it to viewers who don't ordinarily watch PBS as well as to those who don't ordinarily care about baseball.

This panel ought to win fans for both institutions.

Teen-Ager Gets Top Spot In Ballet Competition

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Jessica Funt, a 17-year-old dancer from Wilmington, Del., has drawn the No. 1 spot when dancing begins in the International Ballet Competition.

"She said she felt a little bit nervous, but felt No. 1 was lucky," Khalia Mara, the head of Jackson's professional ballet company, said this week.

Miss Mara said Miss Funt, a former member of the Pennsylvania Ballet Company, recently drew the top spot in a competition in Switzerland and won a gold medal.

The 11-day festival, held on the campus of Millsaps College, opened Monday with competitors drawing numbers for their order of performance. The first competition will be held today.

Richard Freis, president of Mississippi Ballet International, said the competition "will be an opportunity for young dancers to make a showing before the international dance community in a way that can dramatically accelerate their development and careers."

Both amateur and professional dancers will compete in three rounds. Each round will be split into junior divisions for dancers ages 13-17 and senior divisions for dancers ages 18-25.

Medals and cash prizes totaling $55,000 will be awarded at the end of competition on June 27, said Margie Tyler, project coordinator.

She said competitors would be required to demonstrate classical ballet movements and artistic understanding in both classical and modern ballet.

Gov. Cliff Finch greeted dancers from China who arrived this week to join 70 other young dancers from 19 countries.

"Our home is your home," Finch told Madame Chen Gin-Qing, president of the Peking Dance Conservatory.

"All eight members are very, very glad to be here," Madame Chen said through an interpreter.

The Chinese will perform ethnic dances and Chinese classical ballet on June 27. Following their Jackson performances, they will be in New York and Durham, N.C.

Oregon Officials To Bury Whales

FLORENCE, Ore. (UPI) — Oregon state officials have decided to dig a deep trench for the burial of 41 sperm whales who beached themselves and died from undiagnosed ailments.

Val Jones, regional parks superintendent, said scientists took internal specimens from the whales in hopes of determining what caused the mammals to make the suicidal beaching during the weekend.

He said the whales came in on high tide and were unable to get back into the Pacific when the tide went out.

Jones said it was the third worst such beaching known in history and involved the largest number of whales ever to die in such a manner in the United States.

He said it would take three to five days to finish the trench, which will be 12 feet deep and from 500 to 600 feet long.

Talented Hosts Save New Comedy-Game Show 'Bedtime Stories'

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A new sideshow this week joined television's humiliation circus.

Joining "The Gong Show," "$1.98 Beauty Contest," "The Newlywed Game" and the rest of that lot is "Bedtime Stories," a syndicated comedy-game show that features interviews with married couples in bed.

Guess what they talk about? Their sex lives, of course. Doesn't everybody do that when a camera crew comes visiting? And then they go into the studio to play the game part, matching their wits against the Bedtime Stories poll.

The syndicated show started in New York, Los Angles, Washington and a few other cities, with still more stations joining later.

Embarrassment has become high entertainment on the tube. There's the lady on "Newlywed Game" telling the world that her husband's boss had an affair with one of the girls at the office. Make that former boss.

There's the fat lady who sings and dances and subjects herself to the ridicule of Rip Taylor (talk about humiliation) on "$1.98 Beauty Show." Or the fellow on "Dating Game" who is greeted by a disappointed grimace as he walks around the panel to meet his date.

But I can't really rail against theater-of-humiliation entertainment on the tube because, after all, people seem to enjoy embarrassing themselves on TV, or they wouldn't do it. And the proliferation of such shows suggests viewers love the spectacle. Sort of like seeing a guy slip on a banana peel, I guess.

"Bedtime Stories," strange as it may seem, isn't quite as degrading as some of the others. No, that's not right. It's just not as mock-serious.

It is saved by a pair of talented broadcast funnymen, Al Lohman and Roger Barkley, who seem to recognize the goofy enterprise for what it is.

"We're your bedroom ambassadors," they say in the introduction line, explaining that they'll be interviewing couples on "these phony, tacky looking beds" on the set.

The first couple are William and Patti (Patti, rather than Patricia, she explains, because "I'm not the type of person who's proper, and everything." We might not have guessed). William has a microphone taped to his bare chest. Patti is wearing a black nightgown William bought for her at K-Mart.

We learn that they have consulted how-to books in their search for romantic enhancement. We also learn that he's her "Muffin" and she's his "Puddin'."

"I guess you'd think it inappropriate," Lohman says to them, "if I would throw up at this time."

And so it goes. The winning couple is the one that can get the most matches with the Bedtime Stories poll. Among the questios:

"If you realized somebody was watching you make love, would you stop for intermission or go on with the show?

Seventy-six percent of the adults polled said they would stop. Maybe the other 24 percent can be signed for a new game show.

Pro-Smoking Group Formed In England

LONDON (AP) — From two distinguished members of Her Majesty's armed services, a clarion call to smokers went out Monday: "Every puff you take is a blow for liberty. A lighted cigarette is a torch of freedom."

Sir Christopher Foxley-Norris, an air chief marshal, and Sir Geoffrey Evans, a lieutenant general, held a news conference to publicize what they call "The Freedom Organization for the Right to Enjoy Smoking Tobacco" — FOREST for short.

At the moment FOREST doesn't have all that many members — only Sir Christopher and Sir Geoffrey.

"Smoking is the particular personal freedom currently under most heavy attack," said Sir Christopher, "and we want to protect the smoker from unfair discrimination."

Prospects Of Hit Movie Lift Alan Arkin's Spirits

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Very few things in life lift an actor's spirits like the smell of a hit movie, which accounts fo the ear-to-ear grin Alan Arkin is wearing today.

Arkin's new movie, "The In-Laws," was sneak previewed in 320 theaters in the past week and received unqualified praise. Reviews have been uniformly glowing.

Arkin's career has not exactly been meteoric. Among his 20 films were the likes of "Popi," "Catch 22," "Deadhead Miles," "The 7½ Percent Solution," "Woman Times 7" and "Rafferty and the Gold Dust Twins."

His first movie, "The Russians Are Coming, The Russians Are Coming," established Arkin as a superlative actor and comedian. Yet his subsequent films, with the exceptions, have been less than box office bonanzas.

It's been five years since his last hit, "Freebie and The Bean," with James Caan. That's a long dry spell in the life span of an actor of Arkin's gifts.

Warner Bros. already is discussing a sequel to "The InLaws," a riotous, insane comedy in which he costars with Peter Falk.

Arkin's grin is due in part to the fact that "The In-Laws" was his idea and he was executive producer.

"I got tired of waiting around to see what was offered me," the beetle-browed actor said, unable to mask his joy.

"You try to exercise a degree of selectivity when it comes to scripts. I look to enjoy a script so much I can hardly wait to get to the next page. But sometimes years go by before I find one with that kind of excitement.

"I've never generated a movie before. Most actors don't. One day I sat down and asked myself what actors I'd like to work with. The first person who came to mind was Peter Falk.

"We'd met a few times socially but we really weren't friends. So I called Pete and he agreed that it would be fun to work together. We talked it over to figure out what sort of relationship we'd have in a story.

"Then I discussed a basic idea with Warner Brothers. I approached Andrew Bergman who wrote 'Blazing Saddles' with Mel Brooks. The upshot was a terrific script about two guys who are thrown together as fathers-in-law.

"Once we started production Peter and I got along so well I felt confident we weren't involved in a disaster, despite the fact that Peter and I work very differently.

"Pete will rehearse a single line 100 times off in a corner by himself. He is a meticulous worker who cares desperately. He's so unselfish that he doesn't mind having his dialogue cut or a scene deleted if it will help the film.

"In contrast I get a general idea of the scene and then improvise when we get in front of the cameras.

"The characters and the story include a certain amount of madness, especially in Pete's role. Most people live with a bit of madness and they like to see that part of their personalities on the screen.

"There's no way of knowing if you've got a hit on your hands. But this feels like the biggest film I've ever been connected with.

"All the way around, it's a lot more fun making a move that has the taste of success about it. It's a lot less work, too. If you've got a good, solid script, you don't have to waste time tap dancing around it.

"I thought 'Freebie and the Bean' would just get by at the boxoffice. I knew it was funny and I knew it worked. But it surprised me by becoming a huge hit.

"After the sneak previews of 'The In-Laws' I was so confident I went out and bought a 65-foot yacht and Yugoslavia. I had no trouble getting mortgages for both. They are being hand delivered.

"It's amazing to me that we're talking about a sequel even before the picture goes into release. Audiences sense that Pete and I enjoyed ourselves. They talk about the relationship between the two characters.

"Matching a pair of actors is all important. I'd like to work with Walter Matthau, George C. Scott. Carol Burnett and I have got a project in the works.

"On the other hand, I don't think I would pair off very well with Woody Allen or Mel Brooks. It's one of those things."

TODAY'S STOCK PRICES

Stock Mart's Slow Trend Continues

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, unchanged in Tuesday's activity, dipped .09 to 839.31 by noontime today.

But gainers took a slight lead over losers in the mid-day tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said trading interest was dampened by energy worries, weakness in the dollar and uncertainty about where the economy was headed.

The dollar took a sharp drop Tuesday in foreign exchange, and gave more ground today in European markets.

Meanwhile, gasoline rationing plans based on odd-and even-numbered license plates were being put nto effect in several areas of the country.

Sterling Drug dropped ½ to 17¼ in active trading after falling 1⅜ Tuesday, when the company said some patients had shown side reactions to its heart drug Inocor in clinical testing.

Among actively traded energy issues, Charter Co. was up 2⅜ at 34⅝, and Exxon rose ⅛ to 51⅛.

The NYSE's composite index gained .05 to 57.63. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose .14 to 195.98.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 15.38 million shares at noontime, up from 13 million at the same point Tuesday.

President Reaffirms Blumenthal's Authority

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal has been designated as President Carter's chief economic spokesman — for the third time.

It is indicative of the disarray among Carter's economic policy-makers that the president must periodically say who is boss.

"It's a bit silly. It's basically a matter of leadership," said one high-level administration official who asked not to be identified. "If Blumenthal exerted the proper leadership, then Carter wouldn't have to keep showing him support."

It's not that simple. Blumenthal's authority repeatedly has been undercut by the White House staff, with whom he has never been popular.

The appointments first of Robert Strauss and later of Alfred Kahn to head Carter's anti-inflation program both were embarrassing to Blumenthal because they removed a major area of economic policy from his immediate supervision.

Even the latest presidential pronouncement that "the secretary of the treasury ... is the administration's chief economic spokesman ..." was handled in a way that raised doubts about its sincerity, at least in the minds of Blumenthal aides.

For one thing, reliable sources reported, Blumenthal had requested that it be issued because he felt he needed "a reaffirmation" of his authority, and it was drafted by the Economic Policy Group, which he heads.

For another, the statement, although short and to the point, languished on the president's desk for at least a week — two weeks according to one source. It was finally distributed as a routine press release at the White House late on a Friday afternoon, a manner and time of issue certain to draw little attention.

From the beginning of the administration, Blumenthal's authority and prestige were diluted by responsibilities given to former Budget Director Bert Lance and Charles L. Schultze, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

Analysis

Schultze voluntarily stepped down as co-chairman of the Economic Policy Group, the administration's top economic policy-making body, leaving Blumenthal solely in charge.

When Lance was forced from office later in 1977, it left Blumenthal in an ideal position to dominate the policy-making apparatus.

But he was frustrated in the attempt, in part by a White House staff unhappy with the apparent zest with which he pursued the Treasury Department investigation of Lance's private banking practices. That inquiry produced some of the information that led Lance to resign his budget post under a cloud.

Furthermore, Blumenthal faced criticism within the administration on grounds he was unenthusiastic in his support of Carter's tax reform legislation, which failed in Congress. Some Carter aides considered him a poor spokesman for the administration in its dealings with Congress and the business community.

As a result, new rivals emerged — some of them encouraged by the White House — amid occasional speculation that Blumenthal would resign. Besides Strauss and Kahn in inflation matters, there was Stuart Eizenstat, Carter's top domestic issues adviser, who began to assume a growing role in shaping domestic economic policy.

Blumenthal, former chairman of the Bendix Corp., a major conglomerate, did say recently he would not serve a second term as treasury secretary if Carter is reelected.

The new endorsement of Blumenthal probably won't change his position very much, for better or worse. When asked if Carter's latest statement meant Kahn is no longer the chief spokesman on inflation, a Blumenthal aide replied, "Kahn is still expected to speak on inflation matters."

But there is no real question that Blumenthal is the ranking economic authority in the administration after the president himself. The secretary of the treasury is supposed to be such an authority. The fact that Blumenthal and the White House need to reaffirm it periodically is what raises eyebrows.

Horse Costs Debated By Senators

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — Back in the good old days, before we ran out of gas, a favorite joke when Americans saw someone with a disabled automobile was, "Get a horse."

Maybe that's not such a bad idea.

Based on some debate in the Senate last week, a return to the cavalry could go a long way toward solving the gas crunch as well as balancing the federal budget.

The Senate was debating whether to approve purchase of a $1.8 billion aircraft carrier, when attention turned suddenly to cavalry horses, which sell for between $500 and $1,000, with no cost overruns.

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., was arguing that the aircraft carrier was a bad idea. It takes a lot of fuel to run an aircraft carrier.

"Where will that oil come from 20 to 30 years from now?" asked Bumpers.

He said the aircraft carrier would last 30 years and over that period would cost the government about $42 billion. His figure included not only the price of oil, but the cost of the airplanes, the crew, the spare parts, etc.

Sen. John Tower, a Texan and a Republican, who supports aircraft carriers, turned to Bumpers andsaid, "Maybe, the gentleman from Arkansas would prefer that we substitute horses."

Of course, Tower wasn't serious. But he offered some figures that sure make horses sound a lot more attractive than aircraft carriers.

"A good cavalry horse probably can be purchased for $500," said the Texas senator. "And if you turn him out to pasture and buy the feed for him, that would cost about an additional $400 a year.

"So the life cycle of a good cavalry horse, which is about that of a good tank, is about $6,500. ... Incidentally, during peacetime, the horse would be much more useful for ceremonial purposes than the tank."

But Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., also comes from horse country.

Melcher said he wouldn't argue with Tower about carriers.

"But I challenge his expertise on the price of cavalry horses," said the Montana senator. "When the cavalry was buying horses back in the 1930s and 1940s, the remount officers when they accepted an Army horse even in those days paid $100 or $125 and with inflation, I think the price should be at least $1,000 now.

"I think the senator has correctly estimated the cost of feeding a horse at about $400, but he has not included the cost of waste disposal. ... I think the senator should properly readjust his estimate another $600 or $700 just to handle the waste disposal of that stabled horse for an entire year."

Tower replied as a Texan he felt "humiliated that a senator from Montana should correct him on the cost of a horse. I was, of course, figuring a very low-cost horse."

Cutting Costs

It's safe to assume Congress won't opt for horses and the defense budget will never again drop below $120 billion. But don't think the congressional committee that passes on defense spending isn't looking for ways to save money.

Each year, the hearing record on the defense appropriation bill runs about eight volumes at 500 pages each. This year, the following notice appeared at the start of the first volume:

"To save the expense of printing, all prepared witness statements in excess of 20 typewritten pages are not reprinted in these volumes. All such statements have been made part of the permanent committee records and will be retained in the committee files."

DRUG TRAFFICKERS SENTENCED

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Two farmers were sentenced to life in prison and ordered to be caned nine times for trafficking in drugs. Judge Abu Bakar Away, sitting in Kedah, about 300 miles north of here,convicted Mohamed Hassan Musa, 35, and Ahmad Saad, 34, on the two charges they faced.
