O.J. Simpson poll

A California judge ruled Friday that former football star O.J. Simpson must stand trial on charges of murdering his ex-wife and another man. Based on the testimony you have heard thus far, do you believe the Simpson case will end in a plea-bargain arrangement, or do you think a jury will decide his guilt or innocence? We'd like to know your views. Call Cityline's Community Pulse poll at 560-2400 and enter Category 7655. If you feel Simpson's legal team will arrange for a plea bargain, press 1; if you feel a jury will decide his fate, press 2. You also are welcome to leave comments. The Reporter-Telegram asks you leave your name, but that is optional. The non-scientific poll will remain open until noon Tuesday. Results will be published in Wednesday's edition.

Gas well explodes

INTRACOASTAL CITY, La. — An explosion and fire at a natural gas well in south Louisiana killed one person, injured three others and sent authorities searching for another.

One ticket wins

One ticket bought in central Texas correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, lottery officials said. The ticket is worth an estimated $3 million. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 17, 27, 31, 45, 46 and 48.

Dam spills more

ALBANY, Ga. — An earthen dam spilled more water into the swollen Flint River on Saturday as volunteers worked frantically to gather up the quick and the dead — residents cut off by rising floodwaters, drowning victims and corpses that popped out of floating coffins./8A

Task force draws up blueprint to spur Lamesa Road growth

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Rezoning plans aimed at building development interests along Lamesa Road continue to move forward.

A task force — following research and discussion including two recently held public meetings — has prepared recommendations concerning zoning of Lamesa Road between Loop 250 and Garden City Highway.

The task force — made up of Lamesa Road-area residents, people with business interests in the area, and representatives of the City Council and the Planning and Zoning Commission — has recommended immediate rezoning of 18.5 acres for retail use. That would add to the 14.7 acres of existing retail and almost 17 acres now zoned for such use.

The plans for immediate rezon-

Agents seize nearly 4-ton 'coke' cache

■ DEA conducts one of largest busts in Midland, Pecos divisions; officers arrest one suspect.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Drug Enforcement Agency officers operating just outside Pecos seized more than 7,000 pounds of cocaine with an estimated street value of at least $32.6 million and arrested a suspect Thursday, but details surrounding the investigation remain sketchy. The investigation into the incident is ongoing.

In the bust, DEA agents arrested Khaled Alsawas, 42, of Los Angeles. Officials claim he had 7,172 pounds of cocaine in his possession at the time of his arrest.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery declined to comment on the investigation other than to say it was "ongoing" and other suspects are being investigated. The DEA agents' base city also was not disclosed.

Alsawas was arraigned before 238th District Court Judge John Hyde Friday morning because no federal magistrate was available.

A DEA agent appeared with Alsawas at the arraignment and presented a two-page signed affidavit regarding the case to the judge.

Hyde explained to the suspect that if he could not afford an attorney, one

Comet shards bear down on Jupiter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like mountain-sized slugs from a celestial machine gun, fragments of a shattered comet will ratta-tat-tat into Jupiter starting next Saturday. It could be the show of a lifetime — or a dud.

Comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 is a string of space rock or ice speeding in line toward Jupiter at about 130,000 miles per hour. The largest fragment is almost two miles in diameter.

When they hit, the comet shards will explode with the force of about 200,000 megatons of TNT. Each is expected to trigger a fireball more than 1,500 miles across and rising up more than 600 miles above the Jovian clouds.

"That's many times larger than any nuclear bomb ever exploded on earth,"

Poll: Grown-up worries shadow many teens, yet they're isolated from adults

By Susan Chira
N.Y. Times News Service

A nationwide poll of teen-agers suggests that many lead lives shadowed by adult concerns like violence, drinking and getting a good job, but these are worries that many say they cannot share with adults.

Many appear to live in virtually separate worlds from adults. Four in 10 say their parents sometimes or often do not make time to help them, and many say the people they both trust and fear the most are other teen-agers.

Forty percent of teen-agers surveyed said they knew someone who had been shot in the last five years, and most of those said that both the attacker and the victim were other teen-agers.

Thirteen percent said that at least half the students in their schools carried weapons like knives and guns, and another 16 percent said some students were armed. A third said at least some classmates had cheated

Classroom addition to expand restitution center role in rehab

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A classroom where offenders undergoing rehabilitation would be taught life skills, values, standards and responsibilities is scheduled to be attached to the Midland Community Restitution Center.

The center is operated by the Midland Judicial District's Midland Community Supervision and Corrections Department.

"The restitution-center concept is for folks who are not necessarily addicted to drugs or alcohol but whose lives have had no real structure," said Judge Dean Rucker, presiding judge of Midland's 318th Texas District Court. N. Koreans mark death of leader; son cements hold on power

■ Analysts: Potential new leader Kim Jong Il has little knowledge of world affairs, reputation as terrorist, playboy, erratic manager.

SEOUL, South Korea — With quiet tears and blaring music, North Korea on Saturday marked the death of dictator Kim Il Sung, while his mysterious son apparently cemented his new hold on power in the reclusive, Stalinist state.

Kim's death Friday at age 82 threw the Korean Peninsula into one of its most nervous phases since being divided into the communist north and capitalist south in 1945.

His death came amid preparations for North Korea's first summit with South Korea and the same day that high-level talks began with the United States about improving relations and resolving the dispute over whether North Korea is building nuclear weapons.

The talks, in Geneva, were suspended Saturday and prospects for restarting them were not clear.

Word of Kim's death from a heart attack was withheld by the North's official media for an entire day, suggesting that his son Kim Jong Il had needed time to consolidate his succession bid.

Indications were that he was managing to prevail. On Saturday evening, North Korea's radio broadcast a series of statements by top officials pledging loyalty to him.

The man who is expected to be the next leader of North Korea has been described as a ruthless terrorist, a spoiled playboy and an erratic manager who will have trouble keeping control of his country.

South Korea reacted with alarm. It immediately put its military on full alert, citing the threat of instability in the North. But no unusual troop movements were reported, and military officials said the border was tense but quiet.

And although China, North Korea's only major ally, endorsed Kim Jong Il as successor, unofficial reports have said Chinese leaders were unenthusiastic about him.

Some media reports in the South speculated that Kim's death could have been engineered by hard-line forces upset with his recent moves toward cooperating with Seoul and the international community, but none offered any proof.

The North stopped short of an actual succession announcement, but made statements suggesting the younger Kim was in control.

"Standing at the head of our revolution is comrade Kim Jong Il, the great successor to the revolutionary cause ... the outstanding leader of our party and people and the supreme commander of our revolutionary army," an official report said.

Kim Il Sung had built a pervasive personality cult around himself, with buildings and squares named after him, and schoolchildren singing his praises. That adulation continued in death.

Witnesses said North Koreans wept openly in the streets of the capital, Pyongyang. Red-and-blue North Korean flags flew at half-staff along the North-South border, and eulogies and mourning music blared from loudspeakers.

"The Great Leader Kim Il Sung Is Immortal," North Korean newspapers proclaimed on black-rimmed front pages.

News of Kim's death also galvanized the South. Strangers embraced in the streets, and people jostled to grab special editions of newspapers.

"I heard the news, but I couldn't believe it. I felt like the North Koreans must be playing a game," said Lee Sa-suk, a 56-year-old housewife.

If the younger Kim succeeds his father, it would be the first lineal transfer of power in the communist world.

It is a dynasty soaked in blood. Barely two years after being installed by the Soviets in 1948, the elder Kim launched a fratricidal war on the South.

Arafat to make Gaza home; prisoner dies

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Yasser Arafat will take up residence Monday in the Gaza Strip and Jericho, a Palestinian official said.

The PLO chairman will leave his home in Tunis after a farewell banquet by the Tunisian government, said Samir Ghosheh, the labor minister in Arafat's self-rule administration. He is to fly to Egypt and then drive or fly to Gaza.

Tunisia has been the base for the Palestine Liberation Organization since 1982, when it was driven from Lebanon.

Elsewhere, the Palestinian authorities have acknowledged that their security forces killed an Arab prisoner, the first known case of a suspect dying in custody since Palestinian rule began two months ago in the Gaza Strip and Jericho.

"It's clearly a case of maltreatment and torture, and it is a case that horrified everybody," said Hanan Ashrawi, the former Palestinian spokeswoman, who leads a new group called the Palestinian Independent Commission for Citizens Rights.

Palestinian human-rights monitors regard the incident as a test of the intentions of the self-rule leadership, which has promised to build a democracy and to avoid abuses that are commonplace across the Middle East. That commitment was affirmed several times over the last week by Yasser Arafat during his visit to Gaza and Jericho.

It is a sensitive matter for Palestinians, who for years have accused Israel of systematically torturing and mistreating prisoners in the occupied territories, charges denied by the Israelis but supported by international human-rights groups.

Particularly in turbulent Gaza, Palestinians skeptical about the new national authority have expressed wariness about how much of an improvement their police force will be.

So it came as a jolt for many Gazans to learn about the death this week of Farid Jarboua, 28, a taxi driver who was arrested on June 25 on charges of drug dealing and of having collaborated with Israel before the withdrawal of Israeli soldiers in mid-May.

King of Jordan, Israel's Rabin plan 1st summit

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan plans to meet Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in the first official summit between leaders of the two states, still technically at war.

Speaking Saturday to members of Jordan's Parliament — which includes Muslim fundamentalist leaders vehemently opposed to a settlement with Israel — Hussein said the meeting was pressed on him by the United States.

He did not say when or where the two leaders would meet. There have been numerous reports that Hussein has met with Israeli leaders in secret.

In a somber, one-hour speech, Hussein said Washington also demanded Jordan pursue a swift settlement with Israel. The two countries, which last fought in the 1967 Mideast War, have never signed a treaty.

The king said in return, the Clinton administration promised to ask Congress for "a total writeoff" of Jordan's $1 billion debt to the United States, and to provide Jordan "with sophisticated American weaponry."

The monarch said Washington had told him it could ask for congressional help only after he makes progress with Israel, and erases the perception of Jordan's tilt toward Iraq during the Persian Gulf War.

"If my encounter with the Israeli prime minister is the price to change the (negative) image (of Jordan), I will not hesitate at all and I consider it as a duty and honor to serve my nation," Hussein said.

on the last test they took, and most confessed to cheating at some time.

Amid these very grown-up troubles, many teen-agers still cling to some remnants of their early childhoods. Many say their most cherished possessions are stuffed animals or baseball card collections.

And while many sounded blase about drinking or cheating, they often made harsh moral judgments about themselves, wishing they could control their tempers or be nicer to others.

The survey, conducted May 26 to June 1 by The New York Times and CBS News, was a telephone poll of 1,055 teen-agers 13 to 17 years old. It has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points. This was the first poll of teen-agers these organizations have conducted, so this poll cannot be used to deduce changes in attitudes and behavior over time.

Like teen-agers from time immemorial, many of today's adolescents feel estranged from their parents. Four in 10 said their parents were sometimes or often unavailable to them, a result that did not appear to depend on whether their mothers worked outside the home.

In follow-up interviews, many said their parents were not spending much time with them or communicating well with them.

While many teen-agers said they would not want their parents riding herd on them anyway, hints of longing crept through the bravado.

"Even when my parents are here, it's like they're not because they don't have any time," said Aaron M., a 16-year-old who lives near Olympia, Wash., and who did not want his last name used. "We never do anything. We never go out to dinner. We used to do it all the time when we were younger."

LIKE MOST OF the teen-agers polled, Aaron usually eats dinner with his family — although half of those who do said the television was on at the same time — but the family dinner, it seems, does not necessarily spell togetherness.

"We never talk about anything," he said. "Maybe school. A lot of times they're paranoid about my friends. They always get on my case when I come home."

Aaron did not hold out much hope that he and his parents could draw any closer together. "It's stuck the way it is," he said.

For other teen-agers, though, parental relationships were less bleak.

"Sometimes I feel like my mom is unavailable to me because her job sometimes sends her away for a week at a time," said Cristina Smith, a 16-year-old from Chicago. "But if there was anything I needed, I could just ask her for it. I feel close to my parents. That's why I feel I can talk to them about anything. I get a lot of attention."

Many teen-agers described life across a divide from their parents. While 30 percent said they most enjoyed being with their friends, just 3 percent preferred the company of their families. These lives apart are shaped partly by a natural pull toward their friends and partly by a fear of telling their parents what they really do and think.

"IT'S JUST THAT some things are problems I just can't tell them about," said Jennifer Hester, a 16-year-old from a small Mississippi town that she preferred not to identify.

"They wouldn't understand or they'd get really upset. Like OK, say I'm at a party and I know there's going to be some things that I shouldn't be around. And I go and my parents ask me all about it. I can't tell them that."

Jennifer's mother does not work outside the home, but Jennifer said that did not give them that much time together. "She shops a lot," she said.

Although Jennifer said she was afraid to confide in her parents or other adults, she said she had worries she could not solve by herself.

"One of my friends has a drinking problem," she said. "She just broke up with her boyfriend. She's been drinking almost every night since then. I try to talk to her, but she says, 'You're acting like my parents.' I don't want to get her mad at me, but I want to get her some help. I'm not really sure where that would be."

IF TEEN-AGERS SEE in one another their greatest solace, they also see peers as the greatest menace. Most teen-agers polled said other teen-agers were far more likely than adults to commit crimes against them; only a few said that danger would come from adults.

They saw other teen-agers as less mature, more likely to act on impulse and more susceptible to group pressure.

"People are always telling them, if they were them, what they would do," said Mildred Davidson, a 17-year-old from Mantee, Miss., who has lost a friend and a cousin to shots fired by other teen-agers in the past year.

"Teen-agers are more likely to seek revenge. If they don't, they think people will think less of them, that they're not brave enough. An adult should be old enough to realize what's happening and to know they shouldn't be hurting or killing anyone."

Many teen-agers, even those living in affluent areas, said that they worried about violence and that some students in their schools carried guns.

For the majority of students, that fear overshadowed reality: while 4 in 10 said they worried a lot or some of the time about being threatened by violence, 82 percent said neither they nor members of their immediate families had been victims of a crime in the past two years.

VIOLENCE LOOMS far larger in the lives of black teen-agers than white ones. The black teen-agers polled were more likely to fear crime and to be victims of crime than white teen-agers. Seventy percent of black teen-agers knew someone who had been shot in the past five years, compared with 31 percent of whites.

One black student, Cristina Smith, lost a friend who was shot to death a year ago after an argument with another teen-ager over a girl. She said she was wary all the time.

"I don't associate with large groups of anyone," she said. "You have to be very careful of what you say and how you say it. I don't argue. I'll just leave it at that."

Even more common than incidents of violence are cheating and drinking. Fifty-three percent of those polled said at least half of their peers got drunk at least once a month. And 57 percent said they had cheated on a test, a result consistent with Gallup Youth Surveys since 1978.

Very few teen-agers expressed moral qualms about drinking or cheating. A 14-year-old boy, who asked to have his name withheld, said, "People are worried about getting caught, but afterward it's what's the big deal?"

Steve Huber, a 16-year-old from Wheaton, Ill., said that many of his classmates were cheating because they feared that bad grades would lead to second-rate colleges and no jobs. "The job market's so small, you have to," he said. "Whatever test you take, you're worried about your grade."

AT THE SAME TIME teen-agers wrestle with these adult problems, they show flashes of the children they still are. Asked to name their most cherished possession, many say things like "my bunny foxy," "my fishing pole my dad gave me" and "my blankie."

The largest group gave more expected answers, naming possessions like cars, stereos and computers, but the second-largest category was family keepsakes, like jewelry that had been handed down.

When the teen-agers were asked what they most wanted to change about themselves, many took themselves to task with the moral absolutism of youth, sometimes seeming to hold themselves to impossibly high standards.

The largest group of teen-agers spoke of changing their attitudes and behavior. Not far behind was the perennial frustration of adolescence: dissatisfaction with their looks and bodies.

In some cases, their replies sounded like eerie echoes of the adults in their lives, like "I've got a smart mouth." Some wanted to control "my bad temper" or "stop procrastinating."

Others said they wanted "not to judge people like I do" or to "learn to be kinder." One replied, "I wish I could think about the welfare of others most of the time instead of some of the time."

Through some of their comments, teen-agers suggested that underneath their often-monosyllabic replies to adults and their alienated airs, they still needed the approval of adults and their reassurance.

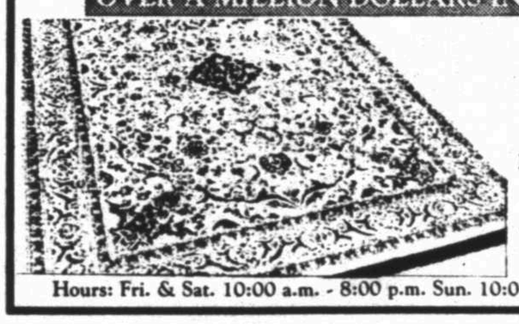

One wanted "not having to lie to my parents a lot." And another said, "I'd like to be good instead of bad."

Rain chance blips into forecast

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers, a high in the mid-90s and south-to-southeast winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the lower 70s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Monday should be fair with a high near 100.

After an overnight low of 72, Saturday's high reached 98, compared to the record high for that date of 103 set in 1964. The record low is 64 set in 1961.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms — some severe — rumbled across the state Saturday, cooling some regions to temperatures in the 70s.

Numerous showers and thunderstorms blanketed South Texas, where cloudy skies prevailed. Temperatures ranged from rain-cooled 70s over southeast Texas and Alice to 98 at McAllen and Laredo.

Today's South Texas forecast calls for scattered showers and thunderstorms, with temperatures in the 80s in southeast Texas to the 90s in the west.

Numerous thunderstorms blew through North Texas Saturday, bringing heavy rain — up to 5 inches in some places — and strong winds. Wichita Falls reported wind gusts at 74 mph Saturday morning.

Flooding was reported in the northern portions of the region. A flash flood watch was in effect in the eastern portions of the area Saturday afternoon. Skies were mostly cloudy with winds from the north to east at 10 to 15 mph.

Temperatures ranged from 67 degrees at Sherman to 94 degrees at Fort Hood.

Today's North Texas forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a chance of storms. Highs will be 89 to 93 degrees.

Showers and thunderstorms produced heavy rainfall across the Panhandle and South Plains. Skies in West Texas were cloudy. Temperatures were in the 80s and 90s.

Today's West Texas forecast calls for a chance of showers with highs from near 90 in the Panhandle to near 110 degrees in the south.

NATION

In the West, there were showers in Washington, Idaho and Oregon.

One thunderstorm in West Virginia produced a tornado south of Parkersburg. There were no reports of damage or injuries. Thunderstorms in Texas produced gusty winds as strong as 74 mph at Wichita Falls.

A flash flood watch was posted for parts of northern and eastern Texas. A severe thunderstorm watch was in effect for sections of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey and New York.

Morning lows were cool across the northern Plains, Rockies and parts of the Great Basin, where readings fell into the 40s and 50s.

The southern Plains and most areas east of the Mississippi River had overnight lows in the 60s and 70s. Some parts of the mid-Atlantic region and the Southwestern deserts saw readings dip only into the 80s.

Alamosa, Colo., tied their record low temperature for the date when the mercury dipped to 38.

West Yellowstone, Mont., dropped to a chilly 37, while Yuma, Ariz., had a warm low of 85 degrees.

With more temperatures in the 90s and high humidity, heat advisories were in effect for parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

REHAB: Classroom to expand center's role

tive and legal things that they could do."

The 1,440-square-foot classroom building, which is be linked to the center by a covered walkway, will expand the center's role in encouraging probationers to straighten out their lives and to develop work skills. For probationers, living in the center is an alternative to serving time in jails or prisons.

The Midland County Commissioners' Court, acting as an agent for the state of Texas, has awarded an $86,679 contract to the Midland-based Coats Construction Co. to build the single-story, pre-engineering metal building before the end of the Texas fiscal year on Aug. 31.

Architect for the classroom project is the Vandergriff Group of Midland.

And the addition of the classroom will increase the Midland Community Supervision and Corrections Department's "ability to meet the needs of these folks who are sent out there to live and (will) provide them with the necessary space they need to have their life-skills programs," Rucker said.

The 48-bed Restitution Center is a tool used by Midland's three district-court judges — Dean Rucker, John Hyde and George "Jody" Gillis — as a means to help rehabilitate offenders rather than sending them to prison.

For up to two years, offenders in the Restitution Center attend life-skill classes, work outside the center to learn legitimate ways of making a living, pay restitution to people they have harmed, and live in the center's dormitory-style rooms near the Midland County Central Detention Center or main jail.

"The district judges are very, very appreciative of the support that the Commissioners' Court and CJAD (Criminal Justice Assistance Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice) has shown in giving the green light to have this classroom facility built," Rucker said. "They (commissioners) have demonstrated that they, too, are interested in the viability of this restitution-center concept."

In addition to assigning probationers to the center as a rehabilitative tool, the judges may order offenders who are addicted to alcohol or other drugs to Substance-Abuse Felony Punishment (SAFP) facilities or to Court Residential Treatment Centers.

For their after-care program, some offenders from the Substance-Abuse Felony Punishment (SAFP) facilities may be assigned to Midland's Johnson Center, which operates an intermediate-care facility for people with drug and alcohol problems.

State funds for building the classroom are funneled to Midland through CJAD.

"The state is actually funding one of their mandates," said Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer. "They are mandating the additional educational requirements, and they are actually paying for the building" in which "those educational requirements are going to be satisfied or be used to satisfy. There will be no local money spent on his project. It's all state funding."

The state, through CJAD, is leasing the Restitution Center from Midland County, which eventually will own the classroom building.

Charles Johnson, assistant director of the Midland Community Supervision and Corrections Department, said the classroom is needed because of expansion of life-skill programs for probationers and the lack of adequate classroom space in the center.

Johnson said the classroom building "has to be finished and the (state) funds have to be expended (by Aug. 31) or, basically, they evaporate and go back to the state's general fund."

The Restitution Center offers "a good program from the standpoint it allows an individual to remain in the community, to continue to support his dependents" through legitimate jobs, and to pay court costs, fines and victim restitution while he's in the center, Johnson said.

The offender continues to work in the community, he added, pays taxes and "becomes involved in a lot of correctional programs that are going to help him be more successful."

SEIZE: Investigation's ongoing, DEA says would be appointed. He also asked Alsawas if he had any legal questions.

"I need to use the phone and I need some cigarettes," Alsawas said.

His reply broke the courtroom tension, bringing chuckles from the attorneys, as well as the defendant.

The prosecutor said he would arrange for Alsawas' needs to be met. The judge then asked him if he had any legal questions. The defendant smiled and said no.

The DEA agent's affidavit has been sealed and may not be made public for several days, Beery said.

No information regarding where the drugs may have come from, where they may have been headed or Alsawas' possible involvement was released.

U.S. officials requested what little information was available Friday be withheld for an additional day because "lives may be in jeopardy" if the information was released earlier

Beery estimated that this may be the largest "drug bust" of cocaine in both the Midland-Odessa and Pecos divisions of the Western District of Texas by a federal agency.

The last major cocaine-related case in this area was the "Thompson-Chambers incident," which involved 2,421 pounds of 93 percent pure cocaine.

Former Presidio County Sheriff Rick Thompson and former Alpine rancher Glyn Robert Chambers were both sentenced to life in prison for importing more than a ton of cocaine in 1991 in the Marfa area.

The cocaine in the Thompson-Chambers was estimated to be worth somewhere from $48 million to $1 billion in street values.

"This is a lot of dope," Beery said of the most recent seizure.

The U.S. prosecutor said that many times drug dealers "bust up and sell the coke on the streets" by reducing the purity or "cutting" the drugs.

He said once this is done, the value of the cocaine on the street is increased because the price for the pure cocaine and the cut cocaine is the same. Beery said DEA agents estimate that one gram of cocaine on the street sells for about $100.

The investigation continues. Alsawas will appear before a U.S. magistrate on Tuesday.

CROWN: Midlander places 4th runner-up land. She is a student at Baylor University.

Among the prizes awarded Miss Texas are a $10,000 scholarship, a mink jacket and the use of a Cadillac during her reign. She also wins a trip to Atlantic City for the Miss America Pageant on Sept. 17.

The first runner-up receives an $8,000 scholarship, along with the chance to fill the shoes of Miss Texas if the reigning queen becomes Miss America. Second runner-up wins a $6,000 scholarship, third runner-up gets a $4,000 scholarship, and the fourth runner-up receives a $2,000 scholarship.

Among the celebrities for Saturday night's statewide telecast were BaShara Chandler, Miss Texas 1993; Gloria Gilbert Barron, Miss Texas 1982 and this year's mistress of ceremonies; The Texas Boys Choir; and the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders.

The 64 contestants, ages 17 to 24, competed in three nights of preliminary competition before a panel of seven out-of-state judges. Preliminary scores determined the 10 contestants in last night's finals.

Forty percent of a contestant's score comes from the talent portion of the competition, 30 percent from interview, 15 percent from the swimsuit judging and 15 percent from on-stage personality in evening wear.

Judges evaluate the talent competition based on overall performance as well as the individual's selection. Also considered are poise, perseverance and discipline.

With every phase of competition, contestants were given a score from 1 to 10. The highest and lowest scores for each phase were thrown out. An average is then tallied from the five remaining scores.

ing would include the west side of Lamesa Road between Golf Course Road and Parker Avenue, and both sides of the road between Wall and Pennsylvania avenues. Smaller areas would include two blocks on the west side of Lamesa Road between Mississippi and Louisiana avenues, and portions attached to areas already zoned retail.

Among the criteria for those areas to be rezoned were: lots deep enough to support retail development and that the lots fronted Lamesa Road.

The task force recommendation will be presented to the Planning and Zoning Commission, then the City Council for final approval. Both entities are required to hold public hearings on the request.

The rezoning — if approved — could be completed by August or September, a city official said.

"I think there's a feeling that if more areas are rezoned for business development we've removed at least one roadblock for business development on Lamesa Road," said Assistant City Manager Glen Hackler. The city staff acted as advisors to the task force.

In addition to the immediate rezoning, the task force considered "development plans." That includes four areas along Lamesa Road that were deemed suitable for rezoning if someone wanted to develop each entire section, such as for a shopping center.

The locations are: east of Lamesa Road between Golf Course Road and Cottonwood Avenue, both sides of the road between Cherry and Walnut lanes, an area west of Lamesa Road bounded by South, Terrell and Front streets, and east of California Avenue and Cloverdale Road.

"We think they are the size and have the access . . . that's ideal for a large retail development," Hackler said.

The task force would like to see an "anchor store," such as a discount, department or grocery store, set up at one of the sites. There is also the pursuit of a theme shopping area — such as a "mercado" — at a site.

In their rezoning examination, the task force made other observations concerning how to motivate development in the area.

The task force discovered that housing development is necessary to sustain retail development. Current figures show — using an industry formula — that there are not enough residents in the area to sustain retail development if all vacant areas and target areas were used.

In addition, there is a need for business investment, through local banks, to get development going.

As a result, there has been talk of expanding the task force to concentrate on those issues.

"The rezoning really reflects more of an opinion that the opportunity is here," Hackler said.

COMET: Space rock to smash into Jupiter said Lucy McFadden of the University of Maryland, one of an army of astronomers who will watch the show.

Unfortunately, most of the fireworks will be shielded from direct view by telescopes on Earth. The impacts will occur just beyond Jupiter's western horizon, as viewed from Earth.

Even so, just about every major telescope on Earth, along with an array of instruments in space, will be aimed at Jupiter on July 16 for what most astronomers believe will be the most spectacular space collision they'll ever witness.

"This is the first time in history we've been able to predict a major impact and then prepare to observe it scientifically," said Gene Shoemaker, a U.S. Geological Survey scientist who is co-discoverer of the comet. "We're seeing an event that happens once in a millennium. There is about one chance in 10,000 that we would find something that would hit during a time period of a century or so.

"I've dreamed my whole life of an impact on the moon," he said. "It never occurred to me that I would have an opportunity to see an impact on Jupiter."

"We still do it the old-fashioned way," Shoemaker said. "We're right out in the open (observation) dome, guiding the telescope by hand."

The team has conducted sky searches for years and made previous comet discoveries.

Shoemaker said they found this one on a night when the weather was marginal and when the photo film was thought to be of poor quality because of an exposure accident. They took the pictures and hoped.

The comet was first sighted by Carolyn Shoemaker, who was analyzing the film with a flicker-device that picks up celestial movement. What she saw appeared to be an elongated point of light.

"It was clearly the strangest object we had ever seen," Shoemaker said. "Carolyn called it 'a squashed comet' when she first looked at it. Carolyn never had any doubt. She was sure it was a comet."

Soon, some of the most sophisticated astronomy instruments in the world, including the orbiting Hubble Space Telescope, were focused on the "squashed comet."

By May, the Hubble and other instruments had confirmed that Shoemaker-Levy 9 was actually 21 pieces, streaking along in a game of follow-the-leader.

Backtracking the orbit, experts determined that the comet apparently passed near Jupiter in July, 1992, and was shattered by powerful gravitational forces of the giant planet. The pieces lined up like freight cars and then swung far back into space, as if taking a running start toward a dive to oblivion.

Now they are bearing down on Jupiter at a speed of more than 37 miles per second.

The first rock hits the upper clouds of Jupiter at 2:54 p.m. CDT Saturday. Pieces keep flying in at irregular intervals for the next five days, with the last one hitting at about 2:53 a.m. CDT July 22.

Just what will what will be visible from Earth — 480 million miles from the action — is an open question. Some astronomers say the whole thing could be a dud, producing little effect.

Jupiter, the largest planet in the solar system, has a diameter 11 times that of Earth, but the giant globe is mostly hydrogen and helium. Objects falling into Jupiter could just disappear.

The speed and mass of Shoemaker-Levy 9 is expected to create explosions that send waves of light bouncing off of Jupiter's moons that will be visible by telescope from Earth.

Trade setback for Clinton, talks with Yeltsin highlight summit

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — President Clinton was forced to abandon a prized trade agenda at the Western economic summit Saturday, complicating his campaign to still doubts about his global leadership. Russia joined the elite club for political talks riveted on questions about North Korea's future.

Midway through a seaside summit, Clinton bowed to stiff opposition from France to his initiative to reduce trade barriers in such key sectors as telecommunications and financial services.

It was Clinton's second setback. On Friday, the value of the dollar dropped sharply when comments by Clinton and Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen were interpreted by jittery financial markets as ruling out more efforts to boost the currency's value.

Nevertheless, Clinton said, "We had a good summit this year. And, most importantly, the world is well under way to a significant economic recovery."

The leaders pledged $200 million to Ukraine as a down payment for closing the dangerous nuclear power plant at Chernobyl.

They also promised to help Ukraine get more than $4 billion from international lending agencies for the difficult transition from communism to capitalism — provided the former Soviet republic adopts tough economic reforms.

Meanwhile, Russian President Boris Yeltsin arrived for unprecedented political talks with the leaders of the United States, Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan.

Yeltsin — and Mikhail Gorbachev before him — had attended earlier Group of Seven summits but only as a guest after the formal conclusion of the meetings. This marked the first time a Russian leader attended as a full participant in the political talks, though he was excluded from the economic discussions.

World Cup fever grips Neapolitans

By Daniel J. Wakin
Associated Press

NAPLES, Italy — As Premier Silvio Berlusconi rushed off from a news conference at the economic summit, an aide whispered in his ear the real news of the day: Dino Baggio had scored.

The first day of the summit in the hushed, gilded rooms of the Palazzo Reale was ending. But Naples and the rest of this soccer-obsessed country were in the grip of World Cup fever.

Everywhere Neapolitans huddled around flickering television sets placed inside and outside coffee bars. Several hundred Italian reporters, technicians and government officials crowded around a television in a press tent in a palace courtyard — even during Berlusconi's press conference.

They roared at each near-goal.

Interest rates, the dollar, economic aid — it all became irrelevant when the Italian team took the field in Foxboro, Mass., against Spain to stay alive in the tournament. Italy's 2-1 victory put it in the semifinal.

After the game, Neapolitans poured into the streets in swirls of motor bikes and cars, waving flags and triumphant fists. But not in their usual places. Streets leading into the central squares are cordoned off for Group of Seven security. Police there turned back youths on motor bikes. A few fans stood around sheepishly, unsure whether to celebrate.

"We couldn't party like we wanted to," said unemployed Vincenzo Murolo, 26, who stood on a corner of Via Toledo and spoke over deafening roar of whistles, air horns, car horns and motors.

Soccer here has the popularity of all the major sports in the United States wrapped in one. When Roman Catholic Church figures suggested moving the traditional game day from Sunday to Saturday, league officials scoffed. The Italian league is the world's best, and richest.

"Soccer is in our blood, not like in America," said Gennaro Paduano, 50, a hospital worker. "When we saw the second goal, we all had a heart attack."

Berlusconi is perhaps Italy's No. 1 fan. He owns AC Milan, last season's European champion and the country's most successful team.

Business booms, life's more relaxed for Palestinians in Gaza

■ Women dry sunflower seeds where soldiers once stood, traffic flows down formerly barricaded streets, tear gas is no longer in air.

By Arieh O'Sullivan
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Yasser Arafat's brief visit to the Palestinian self-rule areas last week did little to set a government in motion, but business is booming.

Seven weeks after the Israeli withdrawal, apartment buildings are going up and stores remain open late into the night. People are more relaxed, but still worry about what lies ahead.

Where a platoon of Israeli soldiers manned a market lookout post, women now dry sunflower seeds. Traffic flows down streets formerly barricaded. The bite of tear gas is no longer in the air.

"I've suffered. I've been in prison. Now it's time to be compensated," said Imad Handuk, who is building a nine-story block of beachfront apartments for the expected influx of Palestinian officials and foreign businessmen. "So what if we make a buck building the homeland?"

Handuk said a minister of the Palestinian Authority, the new governing body, already had inquired about one of the apartments. They will cost $60,000, a fortune in a place with an average annual income of $700.

Arafat's five-day visit seems to have exhausted everyone. The Palestinian leader kept his usual insomniac hours, with meetings and meals lasting until around 4 a.m.

With the new status his visit bestowed, Palestinian Authority ministers now ask that appointments be made 24 hours in advance.

When the Israelis were here, people who wanted crimes solved turned to Islamic activists or gunmen of their own political factions. Some people foresaw violence lawlessness once the Israelis pulled out, but their fears have not been realized.

The thousands of Palestinian police get involved in the smallest disputes. They were even called in to halt rampant cheating on school exams. Traffic cops keep order at once-chaotic intersections. Police commanders have said they will be ruthless in cracking down on revenge killings.

Mohammed Abdel Aziz Awad has nothing but praise for the police. Five hours after he reported his van stolen, police returned it and put the thief in jail.

Some lawyers are concerned, however, that the police may be overly zealous. There have been reports of at least one politically motivated arrest and a death under interrogation.

Islam's hold appears to be slipping. Militants still challenge the peace accord by attacking Israelis - two were killed last week — but the usual Friday crowd of 10,000 at the Palestine Mosque in Gaza has dwindled to 3,000.

S. Yemen president plans 'unity' Cabinet, Saudi ties

SAN'A, Yemen (AP) — President Ali Abdullah Saleh plans to name a unity Cabinet to reconcile factions in Yemen after nine weeks of civil war and improve ties with neighboring Saudi Arabia, officials said Saturday.

Saudi Arabia and other oil-rich Persian Gulf states were accused of arming and financing the southern secessionists, souring relations with Saleh's government. Now that the north has proclaimed victory in the war, relations with the Persian Gulf states could be key to Yemen's stability.

A potential source of trouble may come from southern rebels, including Ali Salem al-Beidh, the southern leader, who fled to Oman. They have promised to form a government in exile and continue their fight against the north.

Thousands of people are believed to have died in fighting that began May 4, four years after North Yemen and South Yemen merged into a nation of 14 million people. The two sides, however, were plagued by political infighting.

Saudi Arabia and other Gulf states had supported the south, which was not recognized internationally. Saudi Arabia has long played the tribes against each other in Yemen, which rivals the Saudi kingdom in population.

A strong, united Yemen with democratic aspirations is seen as a threat by the Saudi Arabian monarchy and other family-ruled nations on the peninsula.

The government sources in Sana'a, speaking on condition of anonymity, could not say whether politicians from the south would be included in the new national reconciliation government.

But they said the likely choice to head the Cabinet as prime minister was northerner Abdel-Karim al-Iriyani, who now serves as planning minister.

The Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Seyassah reported that Saleh would convene Parliament this weekend to elect a new leadership that would include at least one rival from the south.

Official media in the capital said Saleh telephoned leaders of the United Arab Emirates, Jordan and Libya to discuss ways of reconciling with Persian Gulf and other states that backed the secessionists.

Hutu, Tutsi return home together in Rwanda

By Christopher McDougall
Associated Press

RUNDA, Rwanda — This was a town of 5,000. Herman, a Tutsi, and Gasana, a Hutu, know of only 34 of their neighbors who survived the clubs and machetes of the Hutu death squads.

Three months after their escape, they emerge in bare feet and tatters from the banana grove and slowly pick their way through the charred and gutted remains of their town.

Burned timber and rotting corpses reek in the hillside air.

The only one to greet them upon their return over the weekend was a small boy, almost lost among the rubbish, who sat silently clinging to a charred fence post.

How did you get away?

Tears welled in Herman's eyes. He turned away, lifting the lapel of his tattered coat over his face as he began to weep. Gasana put a hand on his shoulder.

"There were hundreds of men. They came running into houses. They said, 'You are RPF', or, 'You help the Tutsis' and they began killing," Gasana said.

The killers were members of civilian militias ostensibly trained by the government for quick mobilization in its three-year war against Tutsi rebels of the Rwandan Patriotic Front.

The RPF was formed by Tutsis who once dominated the tiny Central African nation, but escaped north to Uganda after thousands were massacred in Hutu uprisings in 1959 and 1963. Many of the Tutsi refugees were recruited into the Ugandan rebel army, gaining guerrilla training and combat experience.

The RPF launched its first attack on the Hutu government in 1990. Its fighters, battle-hardened and elusive, came close to capturing the capital of Kigali in 1993 before French troops came to the goverment's aid.

A peace treaty in August 1993 was supposed to end the fighting and join both sides under a unified goverment. But the rebels remained armed for insurance — and the goverment kept its militiamen ready.

On April 6, President Juvenal Habyarimana, a Hutu, was returning from talks in Tanzania aimed at ending ethnic violence between Hutus and Tutsis when his plane mysteriously exploded on approach to Kigali airport.

Hours after the crash, the militias went on the rampage.

Georgia flood death toll increases to 24; two die in Oklahoma

■ Rains ease, water keeps rising, rescue boats continue to patrol neighborhoods, evacuate residents.

Associated Press

ALBANY, Ga. — An earthen dam spilled more water into the swollen Flint River on Saturday as volunteers worked frantically to gather up the quick and the dead — residents cut off by rising floodwaters, drowning victims and corpses that popped out of floating coffins.

The state's death toll from the six-day deluge reached 24 with the discovery of a teen-ager's body in Americus. The heaviest rains from Tropical Storm Alberto had ended by Saturday, but rivers continued to rise.

In Oklahoma, National Guardsmen and dozens of law officers searched Saturday for two children who were in a car swept away by rising waters near Turner Falls in the southern part of the state.

Gov. David Walters sent in the Guard members after heavy rains stranded dozens of campers at the Davis park early Saturday.

The missing children are ages 2 and 4.

Their parents, from Ada, apparently were trying to cross a bridge over Honey Creek around 3 a.m. when their car was sucked into the water, witnesses said.

One person also died earlier in the week in Alabama, where high-water woes eased Saturday. In the Florida Panhandle, more than 3,200 people fled low-lying areas as water flowing from Georgia pushed rivers over their banks.

About 1,200 feet of the earthen dam at the 8,515-acre Lake Blackshear north of Albany was breached Saturday morning, but authorities said there was no immediate danger.

Albany remains cut in half by flooding, which spread as far as three miles from the river's edge. Mounds of fire ants floated in chocolate-colored water littered with parts of swing sets, yard furniture, tires and tree limbs.

About 20,000 of Albany's 80,000 residents fled their homes voluntarily. Makeshift shelters in schools, churches and private homes have housed about 5,000 evacuees over the last three days.

Rescue boats continued to patrol neighborhoods and evacuate residents.

About 50 coffins floated from their cemetery crypts as floodwaters rose Friday and Saturday. Some of the bodies popped out before workers could retrieve the coffins.

The recovered remains will be stored until relatives claim them, said County Coroner Buckey Brookshire.

Pro-lifers hold memorial service in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Pro-lifers wrapped up three days of protests Saturday with a memorial service for what they said was an aborted fetus and announced plans to attend President Clinton's church.

Abortion rights leaders pushed for federal charges to be filed against 30 people arrested Friday for trespassing at one clinic. U.S. Attorney Paula Casey of Little Rock said a decision on federal charges would be made in consultation with Attorney General Janet Reno.

The Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, signed by Clinton in May, provides for prison time and fines for those who bar clinic access, damage clinic property, or injure or intimidate patients or staff.

"The president has spoken out very strongly that these clinics will stay open," Katherine Spillar, national coordinator of the Los Angeles-based Feminist Majority Foundation, said Saturday. "I think they came here in an effort to embarrass him and they've done nothing but embarrass themselves."

The Rev. Flip Benham of Operation Rescue said the abortion battle was not over in Arkansas. "The real effectiveness is not what we do this weekend. It's what happens after we leave," he said.

Benham said the protests influenced some women against obtaining abortions. Spillar said the opposition had fizzled in recent months and that no women were prevented from getting abortions.

One protester bore a tiny wooden coffin to a vacant lot next to a women's clinic along one of the city's busiest thoroughfares for a 40-minute memorial service. In the coffin was a small jar that Benham said contained the remains of a male fetus aborted in Washington in 1988.

Police said possession of a fetus was a violation of state law, but that no one would be arrested. After the service, Rescue America executive director Ed Martin of Ocala, Fla., was escorted by a plainclothes officer to a local funeral home which was supposed to handle burial of the fetus.

Senators to consider Breyer for Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Stephen G. Breyer takes on the most public of job interviews before the Senate Judiciary Committee this week. The toughest questions may target his views on government regulation of business and his investment portfolio.

Abortion, church-state relations and other emotionally charged issues surely will be discussed as well during the nationally televised confirmation hearing that begins Tuesday. But Breyer's supporters believe all will remain calm.

Nominated by President Clinton to replace the retiring Harry A. Blackmun and become history's 108th Supreme Court justice, Breyer is expected to win approval easily from the 18-member committee and the full Senate.

"I'd say it looks good," Vice President Al Gore said Friday in assessing Breyer's chances of having as smooth a sail through the Senate as did Clinton's first high court pick, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, last summer.

Breyer once served as the Senate committee's top lawyer, and Republicans on the committee have been even more effusive than their Democratic colleagues in praising his nomination.

The only senator to voice any doubts is Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who believes Breyer's federal antitrust law decisions during his 13 years as a federal appellate judge show far too much sympathy for big business.

So does consumer advocate Ralph Nader, who will testify at the hearing.

Sidney Wolfe of Public Citizen, a Nader-founded organization, will also testify. He said he will criticize Breyer's "pro-industry view" on health and safety issues.

White House staffers who have helped Breyer prepare for the hearing anticipate sharp-edged questioning over reports that Breyer's participation in some cases created a conflict of interest because of his financial holdings.

By Beth Barrett
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Despite six days of dramatic and graphic testimony that convinced a judge O.J. Simpson should face trial in the murders of his former wife and her friend, legal experts and scholars say it's difficult to know how strong the prosecution's case really is against O.J. Simpson.

"It was a fairly bare bones preliminary hearing," said Laurie Levenson, a professor of criminal law at Loyola Law School and a former federal prosecutor. "The prosecution wanted to hit with some of its hardest evidence, but not show too much of its hand now."

Prosecutors will have to present a much more detailed case to win a conviction at a trial — where the standard of proof is higher than in the preliminary hearing, according to Levenson and other experts.

"The prosecution raised a lot of interesting possibilities, but they didn't close many of them," said Peter Arenella, a criminal law professor at University of California, Los Angeles.

"What happened to all the bloody clothing? What about the bag that Simpson wouldn't let anyone touch in his driveway — where is it? What about the blood evidence on the gloves, on the driveway, inside his house. There's a lot of evidence that hasn't been tied to Simpson," Arenella said.

Municipal Court Judge Kathleen Kennedy-Powell decided at the conclusion of the preliminary hearing Friday that there was ample evidence to hold Simpson for trial.

But the prosecution will be challenged to meet a much higher standard of proof — guilt beyond a reasonable doubt — at trial.

"A jury is told that the main rule is that if you have a piece of evidence with two interpretations and both are reasonable, and one points toward guilt and one toward innocence, then you must take the one that points to innocence," said Barry Levin, a veteran defense attorney.

'What happened to all the bloody clothing...the bag that Simpson wouldn't let anyone touch in his driveway...the blood evidence on the gloves, on the driveway, inside his house?.' — Peter Arenella, law professor

Defense attorney Robert Shapiro argued unsuccessfully in the preliminary hearing that the case is "needless and groundless and requires no further consideration at this time."

Typically, a preliminary hearing is of most advantage to the defense, because it forces the prosecution — in order to establish probable cause — to tip its hand and show at least some elements of its case.

And Shapiro did get a chance to test some of the prosecution's witnesses as well as to challenge some of the evidence.

"There were little things that were locked in, like the woman that looked away from the bodies right away. She can't come back at trial and say she got a good look," said John P. Dwyer, a Boalt Hall law professor at the University of California, Berkeley.

Prosecutors will refile the charges when Simpson is arraigned in Superior Court on July 22.

A trial must be held within 60 days if the defense insists, which could hamper the prosecution's preparation and reduce the likelihood that more damaging evidence emerges, legal experts said.

"If you're the defense — and especially if your client is locked up — you want to put it to the prosecution, hopefully before their investigation is done, before they can find the knife, or worse, before they can come across someone who might have seen it," Dwyer said.

During the pre-trial period, the defense could try to negotiate with the prosecution, or even change Simpson's not guilty plea, legal experts said.

"The case still could take some radical turns at a moment's notice," Dwyer said.

Legal experts said the preliminary hearing was predictable.

Despite more than 30 hours of testimony, Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark sought to establish a limited number of points: that Nicole Simpson Brown and her friend, Ronald Goldman were murdered; that Simpson had a possible motive and opportunity to kill them; that a piece of evidence, a blood drop, tentatively links Simpson to the crime scene; and that the crime scene, through one glove, potentially is linked to Simpson, because another glove was found at his estate, Levenson said.

Simpson, who turned 47, talked with children Jason, 24, and Arnelle, 25, through a glass partition in the jail's visiting area for about an hour. He also talked with Bailey for about the same length of time.

"He has his chin up," Bailey said outside.

Bailey refused to comment on his conversations with Simpson, as did Simpson's children. As they left the jail, a group of people waiting to visit other inmates began chanting, "O.J.! O.J.!," eliciting a smile from Arnelle.

Municipal Judge Kathleen Kennedy-Powell on Friday ordered Simpson bound over to Superior Court for trial in the June 12 stabbing deaths of his former wife Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and her friend Ronald Goldman, 25.

The District Attorney's Office has not yet decided whether to seek the death penalty. Arraignment was set for July 22.

In a Newsweek poll released Saturday, three-fourths of the respondents agreed with the judge that Simpson should stand trial, with 77 percent of whites saying "yes" compared to only about a third of blacks.

A CNN poll found 50 percent of whites surveyed believe Simpson can receive a fair trial, while only 29 percent of blacks believe that.

"I don't think you can separate this trial involving an African-American male from the general atmosphere in this country where racial polarization exists at many levels and in many categories," Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday."

"You have a black male and two dead white persons," he said. "But I'm not accusing anybody. I'm simply raising a question."

Support for Simpson remains high. The jail received 7,000 letters addressed to Simpson between Wednesday and Friday, said Deputy Fidel Gonzales.

The letters are picked up daily by employees for Simpson's defense lawyers, who decide which ones are given to their client, Gonzales said.

Jason and Arnelle Simpson are Simpson's children from his first marriage. Simpson also has two other children — Sydney, 8 and Justin 5 — from his marriage to Nicole Brown Simpson.

Lesbian colonel returns to old job after 2 years

CAMP MURRAY, Wash. (AP) — Two years after Col. Margarethe Cammermeyer was kicked out of the National Guard for being a lesbian, the highly decorated Vietnam veteran was back at her old job on Saturday.

A federal court ordered her reinstatement last month, ruling her discharge based on her sexual orientation was unconstitutional. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco on Thursday refused to delay that order.

A smiling Cammermeyer, dressed in a camouflage uniform, arrived in an white Mercedes-Benz and entered the main gate at Washington National Guard headquarters, south of Tacoma.

She returned to her full-time job as chief of nursing services for the 164th Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

"She has to catch up on some administrative things. She has to get a new ID card. She has to get a physical because she's overdue," Guard spokeswoman Donna Hubbert said.

Crews contain Colorado fire; locals mourn

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A wind-whipped wildfire that killed 14 elite firefighters and threatened this resort town was contained Saturday night with help from five new crews.

As a result of Wednesday's deadly blaze, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management will issue an emergency alert, warning firefighters nationwide that, "the burn conditions are phenomenal" and urging them to post extra lookouts, said Les Rosenkrance, the lead federal investigator.

Five new crews, about 100 firefighters, were brought in Saturday, bringing the total number of firefighters to about 550, including crews in helicopters and fire engines.

In the wake of the tragedy, area residents want to honor the dead, a memorial service was planned for today at a town park.

"The whole town is grief-stricken," said Ina Fritsch, who had turned over her garage to fire officials setting up a staging area in the neighborhood.

Glenwood Springs officials said they will light a cross on top of nearby Red Mountain for the next 14 nights in honor of the fallen firefighters.

Meanwhile, fires continued to dot the Western states.

■ In Texas, 27 Texas Forest Service firefighters on their way home found themselves back on the line Saturday when they were diverted to fight a 1,700-acre blaze in Presidio County to combat the lightning-sparked blaze near Marfa.

Women firefighters love jobs, lose lives

■ Fourteen elite firefighters, including four women, die in Colorado wildfire.

By Jeff Barnard
Associated Press

PRINEVILLE, Ore. — Bonnie Holtby and the four other women on the Prineville Hotshots loved the thrill of fighting forest fires. The love cost Holtby and three of the others their lives.

On Wednesday, 14 elite firefighters died in a wildfire outside Glenwood Springs, Colo., that quickly blew out of control and melted their shields. The dead included nine from the 20-member Prineville team in Oregon. Of the five women in the group, four died.

They weren't the first women to be killed fighting forest fires. But they were the most to die at once.

"Bonnie had a lot of heart and tenacity," recalled her high school physical education teacher, Debby Nickell. "Did you ever see the movie 'Rudy,' about the football player who had to work so hard? That would have been Bonnie."

Women began joining Forest Service firefighting crews 30 years ago. By 1988 they accounted for 12 percent. Now they make up 40 percent of the hotshots, wearing heavy logger boots, fireproof green jeans and yellow shirts and plastic hardhats. They toil over 12 hours a day.

"They've been challenged and met the muster," said Dennis Pendleton, branch chief for cooperative fire protection for the Forest Service in Washington, D.C. "A firefighter is a firefighter. When you call for 10 or 20, it doesn't matter the gender, it's whether you can do the work."

Hotshot crews carry equipment packs that weigh as much as 40 pounds. Using combination hoes and axes, they dig through the forest duff to mineral soil to create 3-foot-wide fire lines, which stop the spread of flames. They cut down trees with chain saws.

The pay is between $9 and $15 an hour. With overtime, a hotshot can earn $10,000 in a summer, more depending on the numbers of fires.

The nine firefighters who died were saluted at a memorial service Saturday in Prineville, a town of 5,300. About 1,500 people attended.

"Having the 'shots come to a fire was like sending the cavalry to the rescue," said Tom Schmidt, Ochoco National Forest supervisor. "It gave us a morale boost and made us think we could succeed."

Julie Treick remembers the fear of death she felt when she battled a forest fire in Idaho one summer as a member of a hotshot team in Wyoming. But she was addicted to the job.

"It's a thrill and a rush," said the 24-year-old Treick, who spent two summers with the crew earning money to help pay for college. "You love it and you hate it, just like any addict."

One of the Oregon crew who died, 24-year-old Kathi Beck, showed the determination needed for the job at early as age 9, her parents recalled. She insisted on going skiing, despite suffering from the flu. As she got older, she enjoyed sky diving and climbing mountains from Mount Hood in Oregon to Thailand.

"She lived on the edge," her father said. "We were dubious at times, but her love for adventure overpowered our concerns."

Friends of another firefighter who was killed, Tami Bickett, 25, said she was a fierce competitor who always wanted to be a firefighter.

"She died with her very special friends and she died doing what she loved most," said her mother.

Clinton faces hard choices in Haiti

■ Analysts: Aristide's strong stance against invasion complicates Clinton's decisions.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Statements by deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide forcefully opposing a U.S.-led invasion of Haiti could have a major influence on President Clinton as he decides whether to exercise that option, according to several experts.

Aristide had usually been coy when asked his views on an invasion but he dropped all pretense of ambiguity last month when he said, "I am against a military invasion. Never, never, never would I agree to be restored to power by an invasion."

Former Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said the statement undoubtedly will give Clinton second thoughts about an invasion.

"It has to deter him," Eagleburger said in a telephone interview. He said other countries would have grave reservations about joining a U.S.-led intervention force under a U.N. umbrella unless Aristide retracts the comment.

Administration officials reportedly have been sounding out countries around the hemisphere about their willingness to join an invasion force.

That search suffered a setback on Thursday when 13 Caribbean Community leaders agreed that the time for an invasion had not yet come, reversing a decision reached only a day earlier.

Bernard Aronson, a top aide on Latin America under President Bush, said, "It is difficult to justify an invasion when the elected president says he's against it." Aristide, elected in 1990, served only seven months before being deposed in a military coup.

Nonetheless, the prospects for an invasion appear to have heightened considerably in recent weeks as Haiti's military leadership remains determined to hang on to power despite a global trade embargo and other sanctions. Another contributing factor has been the surge in Haitian boat people; since July 1, an average of about 1,500 a day has been fleeing, straining facilities set up to shelter them.

William H. Gray, Clinton's special adviser on Haiti, indicated Friday that an invasion may be in the cards. "I think the prospect of an invasion grows as the coup leadership refuses to recognize that the world community has clearly called upon them to step down and allow democracy to be restored," he said.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole on Saturday blamed Clinton administration policies for escalating chaos in Haiti and called for a political solution.

"The issue is whether risking American lives to return President Aristide to power is in the U.S. national interest and in the interest of future U.S. Haitian relations," the Kansas Republican said in a statement.

Many on Capitol Hill oppose invasion

WASHINGTON (NYT) — As the Clinton administration talks more about using force to oust Haiti's military dictatorship, congressional leaders in both parties say most lawmakers oppose invading Haiti at this time.

"If you asked Congress to vote today on whether to intervene in Haiti, the answer would be, 'No, we would not,' " said Rep. Lee H. Hamilton, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

But that question is not likely to be put to a vote when it matters — beforehand — administration officials say, although they acknowledge that congressional opposition could complicate their decision-making and pose a significant political risk if an invasion went badly.

The current lineup on the matter is a sharp reversal of the way Congress divided over the use of force in Kuwait, Panama and Grenada. Republicans are almost unanimously against using force while Democrats are split three ways: many liberals and the Congressional Black Caucus support invading now, some oppose it altogether and some say it is too soon to invade because, in their view, diplomatic means first need to be exhausted.

Members of Congress offer a variety of reasons against invading Haiti. They say that there are no vital national interests at stake, that diplomatic means have not been exhausted and that American troops might have to remain in Haiti for years.

Many lawmakers say the two main reasons the administration has put forward to justify force — the flood of refugees and the destruction of democracy in a nearby nation — do not warrant putting American lives at risk.

Young blacks: Don't use white scapegoats

CHICAGO (AP) — Young blacks at the NAACP convention that opened here Saturday are sending a message to their elders: Stop complaining about the evils of white society and start looking within.

"We can't blame another race for our problems," said Angel Walters, one of the hundreds of black teenagers competing for writing and artistic awards at the 85th annual National Association for the Advancement of Colored People convention that runs through Friday.

"The new generation of black youth wants to stop blaming the white society. It's up to us to change," said Walters, a 17-year-old high school senior from Pasadena, Calif.

Speakers at the opening session — marking the 40th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark school desegregation decision in Brown vs. the Board of Education of Topeka, Kan. — called on the NAACP to work toward improving inner-city public schools.

"It's not a matter of integrated schools or equal schools, but we might not have schools at all," Rep. Major Owens, D-N.Y. told the convention delegates.

"Many school systems are near bankruptcy because the voters do not want to fund these schools," he said.

In the writing contest, judges who sampled poems, essays and plays said there is a common theme of hope, black pride and the need for a sense of community.

At the previous two conventions the theme was dominated by recurring messages of death and suicide, said Carol Rancifer Gearring, a Chicago educator and director of the humanities portion of the competition.

"Maybe they're sick and tired of being sick and tired," she said.

Stanley Pierce, one of the judges and a teacher at Malcolm X College in Chicago, said he came across only one poem submitted by the teens that was sad.

Buddy Drawdy of Albany, GA., paddles around to assess damage to his home and rental property which were almost completely submerged by rising floodwaters over the weekend. Drawdy was one of more than 15,000 people who were forced from their homes in Dougherty County due to flooding along the Flint River caused by heavy rains associated with Tropical Storm Alberto.

Killer weed grows six inches per day

■ Like mutant from science fiction movie, prickly Mile-a-Minute weed climbs over young trees, shrubs and kills them.

By Jake Fitzsimmons
Associated Press Writer

CUMBERLAND, Md. — They call it the Mile-a-Minute plant, and it's threatening forests and farmland in Maryland and other mid-Atlantic states.

The pesky thistle was brought into the United States accidentally in holly seed imported from Asia in the late 1930s by a nurseryman in York County, Pa.

It can grow 6 inches a day, smothering saplings, choking other vegetation and reducing crop yields.

"We call it Mile-a-Minute because it's fast-growing," said Nathan L. Hartwig, a professor of weed science at Pennsylvania State University.

"It's possible that this weed could spread from coast to coast, just like the Canada thistle. Now how long that will take, I don't know," he said.

The scientific name for the plant is Polygonum perfoliatum. It also is called "Devil's tear thumb," because prickly thorns on the vine can cut fingers and thumbs.

Mile-a-Minute has triangular leaves one to three inches across. From late summer until frost, the vine produces powder blue berry-like fruits that birds and rodents eat, spreading the weed.

Hartwig, who is tracking the weed, said it has been reported in 16 counties of southeastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware; two counties of West Virginia; at least one in New Jersey; the District of Columbia and a few counties of Virginia.

Hartwig said Mile-a-Minute can be a problem for Christmas tree growers, nurseries, orchards and those who grow ornamental shrubbery.

'If this weed gets in there and becomes the dominant plant, it's going to be bad news.'
— Philip Pannill, forester

The weed grows in bare patches of forests, along roads and on the edges of farm fields, said Philip Pannill, regional watershed forester for the Department of Natural Resources Forest Service in Maryland.

"It climbs over top of all the young trees and shrubs and shades them and kills them," Pannill said. "If this weed gets in there and becomes the dominant plant, it's going to be bad news.

Multiracial seek official recognition

By Richard Lorant
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Teja Arboleda says Uncle Sam has him boxed out.

While Arboleda accepts his unique looks, he can't accept the government's refusal to recognize him for what he is: a multiracial American.

"Look at my face. Just look at my face!" pleaded Arboleda, whose features show traces of his African, Danish, German, American Indian and Filipino-Chinese ancestry.

"Can you honestly say, without disgrace, that I am of pure race?"

Arboleda was testifying recently at an Office of Management and Budget hearing in Boston to review the agency's Directive 15, which allows Americans to classify themselves by one of five racial or ethnic categories: American Indian or Alaskan native, Asian or Pacific Islander, black, Hispanic or white.

All the rest are "others."

Or they're like Arboleda, born "white," then classified "Hispanic" — one thing he's not — by an exasperated census taker because Arboleda wouldn't limit himself to a single box.

"I am not mixed up. Just mixed," he testified. "I will not ignore my rich, colorful heritage. . . . And no one can tell me what I am and what I'm not."

It is unclear how many multiracial Americans there are, but their numbers are growing.

The number of interracial couples, for example, grew from 310,000 in 1970 to 1.2 million in 1992, according to the Census Bureau.

And 3.4 percent of all births in 1989 were of mixed race parents, up from 1 percent in 1968, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

People who want a multiracial box to check off on federal forms comprise just one group fighting for government recognition at the hearings, which continue this month in Denver, San Francisco and Honolulu.

Some Arab-Americans, native Hawaiians, Cape Verdeans and European-Americans also want their own category.

Then there are those who want to eliminate the classifications entirely. Still others oppose any changes.

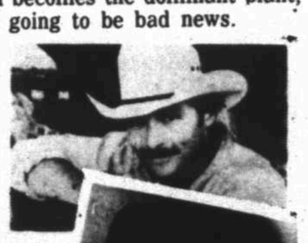

Some statisticians think adding categories would complicate efforts to keep tabs on America's increasingly varied racial and ethnic makeup.

Corporations trying to comply with affirmative action guidelines fear changes could force them to ask employees prying or even illegal background questions.

An effort in the mid-1980s to add a "multiracial" box met resistance from some traditional minority advocacy groups, who worried it could lower their numbers in federal population surveys, and reduce the flow of federal money into their communities.

"This is an exceptionally sensitive and significant task that we are undertaking," Sally Katzen of the Office of Management and Budget told the roughly 50 people at the hearing.

Indictment in fire

GRETNA, La. — Two former motel maids have been charged with the deaths of four Texas men who died in a fire allegedly touched off when one of the women tossed a cigarette into a linen room. A Jefferson Parish grand jury indicted Lillie Tickles, 18, and Ruby Washington, 20, both of New Orleans, on four counts each of negligent homicide and 12 each of negligent injury from the fire at Peacock Plaza Inn. Ms. Tickles, formerly identified as Lillie T. Harvey, and Ms. Washington are being held in lieu of $800,000 bond each. Negligent homicide is punishable by up to five years in prison on each count.

Attempted murder trial to begin

■ Jury selection to begin in case of Midland teen charged with beating store clerk with baseball bat.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Jury selection begins Monday in the attempted capital murder trial of a Midland teen charged with beating a convenience store clerk in the head with a baseball bat a year ago.

Mitchell

Mark W. Mitchell, 17, is charged with attempted capital murder, aggravated robbery and aggravated assault in connection with the April 2, 1993, attack on Kay Balog while she was working at the Town and Country Food Store, 7100 W. Highway 80.

'There is more to Mark Mitchell than what you hear about his case. He comes from a good family.'

—Glen Aaron, defense attorney

Mitchell is charged with striking Ms. Balog with the bat and taking a 12-pack of Dr Pepper.

Mitchell was certified to stand trial as an adult in May 1993 and was later indicted by a Midland County grand jury.

At Mitchell's certification hearing, a sheriff's investigator testified that officers received tips leading them to Mitchell as a suspect. He said a baseball bat was found in Mitchell's car following his arrest.

That baseball bat was one of the issues discussed during pre-trial motions heard last week by 238th District Court Judge John Hyde. Hyde will preside over the trial.

Motions made Thursday by the defense to suppress certain evidence and testimony from the trial were denied Friday by Hyde.

Following the certification hearing in November, defense attorney Glen Aaron called Mitchell a "clean-cut kid" indicating "there is more to Mark Mitchell than what you hear about his case. He comes from a good family."

Jury selection is set to begin at 9 a.m. Monday with a jury expected to be seated by mid-afternoon.

Midland County Assistant District Attorneys Teresa Clingman and Brian Carney will be prosecuting the case.

Ms. Clingman said she anticipated starting the prosecution of the case by late afternoon Monday.

The trial is expected to last most of the week.

Mitchell remains free on bond.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — When old-timers get together, as they do in the middle of summer each year in old Marienfeld town, now Stanton, there is plenty to talk about, many tales to tell, nostalgic music to listen to and cool lemonade to drink.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Kayla Straub pursues a steer in a roping event Saturday at the Martin County Old Settlers Reunion in Stanton.

Alton Turner, who at age 78 recalls bygone years as vividly as if they were yesterday, told a story or two at the 61st annual Martin County Old Settlers Reunion here on Saturday.

The other day, when the daytime temperature was peaking at a sizzling 116 degrees, Turner overheard a couple of fellows talking about the weather in this farming community.

"I don't know about the temperature," one said to the other, "but our hens are laying hard-boiled eggs."

It was a hot one, though not a record-breaking day, at the Old Settlers Reunion. The get-together was kicked off by the downtown parade in which Dan Saunders, Martin County's retired sheriff, played the "mystery rider" while riding in a buggy and donned in his farmer's get-up — straw hat, red long johns, overalls, tennis shoes and a pull-off beard.

Over at the Community Center, the folksy Martin County Old Sorehead Ragtime Band played old favorites, and the Anderson Cousins, featuring string instruments and drums, played waltzes and old standards, such as "Gardenia Waltz" and "Sweet Memories."

Billie Miles, who plays the mandolin in the cousins' band, said she shows up for the reunion not just to play music but "mostly I see all the people I know, and I enjoy them."

And Alton Turner recalled one of Martin County's most enjoyable all-time "old settlers" favorites, the late Jendo Turner, his sister-in-law who died at age 68 in 1981. He fondly recalled her request, which was honored:

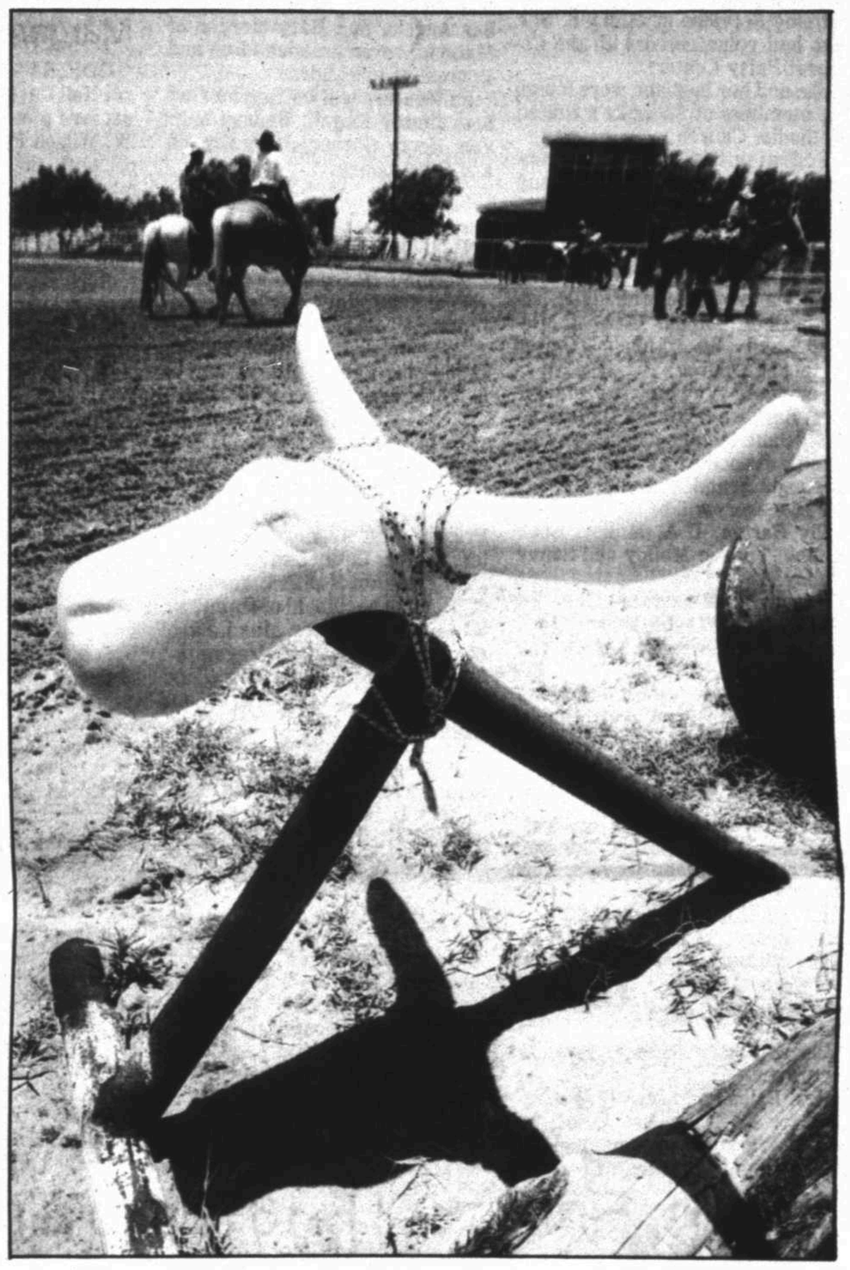

"When she died, she wanted to be buried next to the road (at the cemetery), so she could speak to people when they drove by," Alton Turner said.

Turner, admiring Jendo Turner's humor, said that it was so. And she, indeed, is buried up there next to the road along side her husband, his brother, Leo.

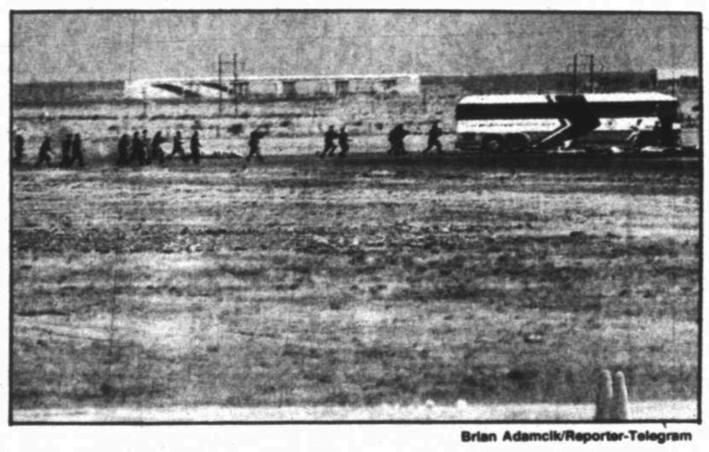

While many folks visited one another and celebrated the 50th reunion of Stanton and Courtney high school graduates, others toured the Old Convent, an adobe-and-brick former Carmelite monastery dating to 1884; ducked into the restored 1908 historic old Martin County Jail; visited The Connell House, which, in its beginnings in 1881, was the first home of Carmelite priests when the then-Catholic community was named Marienfeld for "field of Mary"; and greeted the Minnie Lee Jones family in the Martin County Historical Museum.

Back at the Community Center, Maxine McArthur of Midland returned to her old hometown.

Armed assault teams quickly move in to secure the "aircraft" following a series of detonations in Saturday's disaster drill at the Midland International Airport. The bus was used to simulate an aircraft that had been taken over by 'terrorists.'

Officials fight 'terrorism' in disaster drill

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland area emergency forces combined their special abilities in a massive simulation of airport terrorism Saturday, improving the skills and reaction time for police, federal officers, National Guardsmen, emergency medical crews, airport officials and city fire crews.

The scenario for the disaster drill centered around a group of "terrorists" who took control of an aircraft after leaving the Denver, Colo., airport and planted a bomb on board. The aircraft is to have landed for fuel in the Midland International Airport, explained Debbie Cappellucci, airport operations supervisor.

Federal Aviation Administration rules specify that an airport such as Midland's must have a disaster drill once every three years, but local airport officials try to have one every year, said Lyn Miller, assistant public information officer for the drill.

"We try to do one every year. We do different (kinds of drills) — last year we had a tornado," Ms. Miller said. "This one is a little more expensive," she said of Saturday's elaborately staged drill.

An actual passenger jetliner was supposed to be available for the drill, but the plane was unable to make its way to the Midland airport in time for the drill, organizers said. In its place, drill coordinators used a large bus borrowed from a federal agency.

Agents with the Federal Bureau of Investigations conducted simulated negotiations for the lives of hostages on board the plane. For about an hour, FBI agents worked with the pseudo terrorists, securing the release of two hostages.

In return for relinquishing the hostages, FBI agents al-

GARY OTT

Midnight phone calls can sometimes drop real bombshells

Ott

Maybe a death. Perhaps a crisis at the office. Maybe even a plea for bond money from a jailed friend. Take your pick, but more times than not, the news concerns something you would just as soon do without.

Still, there are those rare occasions when just the opposite occurs. An old friend who, after considerable drinks, decides it is time to — and I quote — "catch up" on all the gossip from the past year. So, forgetting the hour, he (or she) picks up the phone and dials your number.

The two of you spend the next couple of hours giggling and throwing out old names from the past.

It usually goes something like this:

You: "What's the latest on Kyle?"

Other person: "He got divorced for the third time and has started dating an 18-year-old."

You: "Why am I not surprised? He always did have an eye for the young ones. How about Mona?"

Other person: "Just had her fifth kid."

You: "Good Lord."

Other person: "What's the word on Terrance?"

You: "Still hitting the bottle hard. And he looks it too. His face has more lines than a road map."

Other person: "I wonder what he's like sober."

You: "Who knows? No one's ever seen him that way."

Other person: "Have you talked to the, ahem, Ravishing Ms. M lately?"

You: "Are you kidding? With that jealous husband of hers. I value my life too much."

Other person: "Why did she marry that basket case, anyway?"

You: "Probably for his money."

Other person: "Which he got dealing drugs, by the way."

You: "What! Tell, tell."

And, so it goes.

But the bottom line is this: These early-morning conversations are always far-reaching in nature and invariably include at least one bombshell, such as the above-mentioned drug dealing scenario. That's the beauty of these kinds of telephone calls. You pick up dirt on some person you didn't have before. And, as a result, you are free — no, make that OBLIGATED — to pass it on to your other friends who, in turn, will think you are the most knowledgeable guy in your group.

Which, of course, is what life is all about . . . being the best, even if it is "best mud-slinger."

The reason I bring all of this up, is because I just received one of those early-morning calls, and I must admit the bombshell dropped in my lap was a real doozy.

It seems, at least according to the caller, that

REUNION: 'Old settlers' gather in Stanton

(From 1B)

"I know everybody in Martin County," she said. "And if I don't, they know me."

Chris Robert Peters, whose father was among the old Marienfeld's original settlers, returned to Stanton from California to visit and to reminisce.

"I was born here in that (Metcalf) house (in 1916) that just fell over down the street," observed Peters, who soon will be 78.

His first cousin, George Peters of Midland, and another ex-hometowner, Doris Gregg Brewer of Odessa, returned to Stanton to see and visit with other "old settlers."

Peters ran into Modean Wyatt Wilkinson who enlivened their conversation when she asked him: "George, how did you get so old, and I'm so young?"

Who can explain the youth of growing older?

"I live in Odessa," said Ms. Brewer, who once lived in Midland, "and I never did get far from home. And before I die, I'll probably move back to Stanton" where "the best people I've ever known live.

"We don't ever forget each other," she said. "You get more hugs than you have ever had in your life."

Returning to Stanton is "just like (making) a sentimental journey," Ms. Brewer said. "We go way back to when we were kids and clear on up to right now. It's just like a big family."

And while in a small town "you can get pretty hurt by gossip, the people will stand up for you," Ms. Brewer said. "If you get down and out and really need help, they'll come to your rescue."

DISASTER: 'Terrorists' hijack plane in drill

lowed a refueling truck to be moved closer to the craft.

Negotiations broke down about 10:30 a.m., however, and two explosive charges were detonated outside the bus to simulate a detonation of a bomb inside.

At that time, heavily armed rifle teams quickly assaulted the bus, capturing terrorists as they exited, entering and securing the simulated aircraft.

Three heavy trucks for suppressing aircraft fires raced to the scene with foam turrets, hosing down the area. When the call came over the tactical channels that the fire was extinguished, ambulances began rolling toward the craft.

About 10 ambulance crews from Midland, Odessa and as far away as Midkiff were released on the scene at varying times to simulate the actual driving time from their normal duty stations.

Ms. Cappellucci said the exercise was a success. "We had a few problems at first, but it worked out all right," she said.

The exercise is intended to test communications and coordination between numerous agencies involved in a disaster. In this, the exercise provided valuable experience for when and if a disaster actually happens, she said.

The "victims" of the blast were played by students from area colleges and by the friends and family of other participants in the exercise, Ms. Cappellucci said.

Lead cleanup in Dallas public housing to begin

DALLAS (AP) — The long-awaited lead cleanup and demolition of abandoned parts of a west Dallas public housing project will begin in two weeks, the Dallas Housing Authority says.

The cleanup and tearing down of 167 buildings in Dallas' poorest and most polluted community will cost taxpayers about $6.5 million and should be completed by the end of the year, officials say.

Since the construction of the West Dallas project 40 years ago, its predominant population of black residents has been upset by lead, primarily the result of emissions from a now-abandoned smelter across the street.

In May 1993, EPA officials announced they were declaring parts of West Dallas — including the entire public housing project — a Superfund cleanup site. That designation is reserved for the nation's most polluted sites.

More than half of the apartments at the 3,500-unit West Dallas project have been vacant and abandoned for years. A 1987 settlement of a landmark public housing lawsuit called for demolishing and replacing most of those units, but seven years later nothing has happened.

"What we are doing is absolutely more than adequate," said Alphonso Jackson, president and chief executive officer of the Dallas Housing Authority. "It will eliminate lead as a problem on our property."

A plan outlined Friday calls for demolishing 1,134 apartments in the area most contaminated by lead. Jackson said 1,000 more apartments would be taken down early next year.

Lightning strikes, kills man while fishing

TEXARKANA (AP) — A 31-year-old man fishing with a friend was struck and killed by lightning Saturday morning while fishing in a boat on the Sulphur River, authorities said.

Thomas Barrett of Simms was standing in the boat when he was struck in the left shoulder by lightning that exited through both feet, said Bowie County Sheriff's Deputy Lloyd Cowley.

An unidentified friend who was fishing with Barrett said he heard a loud "pop" and saw Barrett fall into the water, Cowley said.

"He jumped into the water and pulled the victim out and started toward the shore when he saw another boat," Cowley said. "They (boats) stopped and people administered CPR, but it was too late."

Officials: Firm to sell F-16 jets to Singapore

FORT WORTH (AP) — Lockheed Fort Worth will sell 18 F-16 jet fighters to the Republic of Singapore in a deal worth up to $1 billion, officials from that nation said Saturday.

The sale proves that the F-16 can compete effectively in the international marketplace against the updated McDonnell Douglas F-18 fighter, Lockheed officials said.

Gordon England, president of Lockheed Fort Worth, said the sale "reaffirms that the F-16 is not only a highly effective and technologically advanced combat aircraft, but also the most-affordable high-performance fighter."

Singapore's defense minister, Lee Boon Yang, said the F-16 was the most cost-effective aircraft for that country's defense and security needs.

OTT: When there's mud, it should be slung

(From 1B)

Sydney, my old high school running mate who taught me some of early life's great lessons, including the proper way to take a drag on a cigarette without coughing up one's insides, has changed. More specifically, he has become — and this is the exact word that was used — "snooty."

"No," I exclaimed. "I refuse to believe that."

"It's true," the midnight caller insisted. "He even pretends to enjoy foreign films with subtitles."

I was crushed. "When did it occur?"

"No one seems to know for sure. First thing I remember is that he started slicking his hair straight back, sort of like Pat Riley, and then he began wearing real loose-fitting suits, and last I heard he was even eating a bunch of weird foods I can't pronounce. But they all end in 'ini' and none of 'em are served with grease and cream gravy."

"Maybe it's just a phase," I said.

"Perhaps," the caller said, "but I don't think so. He even goes to art galleries and stares at abstract paintings for hours on end, muttering absurd things like, 'The artist has the soul of God. He has captured the decadence that is mankind.'"

"Surely, he's pulling your leg," I said.

"Nope. In fact, when I mentioned that possibility the other day, he called me a mental midget. That's why I say he has become snooty."

There was a lengthy silence, and then we hung up.

I was alone with my thoughts. My oldest and dearest friend had become an intellectual snob. What could I do?

I'll tell you what I could do. I could pick up that telephone and call three other friends and immediately drop the bombshell in their laps.

After all, when there's mud around, you've got to sling it, especially during those wonderful early-morning phone calls.

Blaze at oil-filter recycling plant forces evacuations

ALVARADO (AP) — An afternoon fire swept through an oil-filter recycling plant Saturday, sending a dense column of oily, black smoke into the sky, authorities said.

The smoke forced the evacuation of several homes downwind and diversion of traffic from a nearby interstate highway, officials said.

Firefighters from 13 departments battled the blaze, which broke out about noon at Environmental Insight Inc., said Alvarado police dispatcher Steve Williams.

A tower of smoke from the fire could be seen about 25 miles north in Fort Worth.

No injuries were reported from the fire, Williams said. However, Fort Worth television station KXAS reported that three firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation.

Residents within a one-mile radius downwind of the fire had to leave their homes because of the heavy smoke, authorities said.

Firefighters had to shuttle water into the scene by tank because the nearest fire hydrant was too far away to serve their hoses.

Alvarado Fire Captain Wayne Lowrey said he was told the fire started after a machine exploded.

"At one time, they even tried to use some kind of foam or powder to put on it, and even that wouldn't put it out," said Police Chief Bobby Arriola. "So right now, they're just using water to try to contain the flames."

Southbound traffic along Interstate 35 West continued to be diverted to alternate routes as the fire continued to burn about 7:30 p.m., Williams said. Earlier in the day, traffic had been diverted from northbound lanes.

Representatives from the Texas Water Commission were en route to the city of 2,700 residents, Williams said.

State officials were coming "to check on the runoff of the water they're using to put the fire out, to make sure it doesn't contaminate any kind of ground water," he said.

State probes hospital-insurance discounts

■ Investigation to determine if companies require customers to pay greater portions of hospital bills than policies state.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Texas' insurance commissioner has ordered an investigation of agreements some hospitals and insurance companies make to discount bills without passing those savings along to the patients.

In an interview with The Dallas Morning News for its Sunday editions, Commissioner Robert Hunter said the inquiry will determine if any companies are requiring their customers to pay a greater portion of their hospital bills than called for in their policies.

The probe, he said, was prompted by recent investigations in Texas and Florida of billing practices at Humana Insurance Co. in 1991 and 1992.

Humana agreed April 12 to settle the allegations of Attorney General Dan Morales that it overcharged Texas policyholders. The company issued $25,000 in refunds to 542 patients treated in Humana-owned hospitals.

Last month, the Florida attorney general's office reached a similar settlement that forced Humana to refund $6.25 million to 37,000 customers.

Both settlements stemmed from Humana's use of its hospital discounts.

Humana denied the allegations in both cases, saying it never violated Texas or Florida laws and that it agreed to settle only to avoid costly litigation.

During the period covered by the settlement agreements, many Humana customers held policies advertised as 80-20 co-payment plans, meaning customers paid 20 percent of hospital costs while Humana picked up 80 percent.

Humana was accused of negotiating discounts with its hospital division but not applying those to the patients' portion of the bill.

For example, a $1,000 hospital bill called for a patient to pay $200 to the hospital. But because of the discounts, Humana would pay the hospital less than $800. The result was that customers were paying more than 20 percent of the total received by the hospital.

Humana spokesman Greg Donaldson said the company ended the disputed billing practice in February 1992 and sold its hospitals in March 1993.

The Texas settlement agreement leaves the door open for Humana to continue receiving hospital discounts without passing them on to customers.

Couple waits to gain custody of AIDS victim's children

HOUSTON (AP) — The wait continued Saturday for a Minnesota couple who had hoped to be reunited with twin girls whose grandmother brought them to Texas when their father died of AIDS.

A state judge ordered the girls be turned over to Kandi Geary and Lance Rhicard by 4 p.m. Friday, but the twins' paternal grandmother failed to meet the deadline.

Glenn Johnson, the couple's attorney, said Saturday he still did not know the whereabouts of the children or their grandmother, Phyllis Durichek.

"You're dealing with somebody I consider less than rational," Johnson said. "You have no idea what might be going on with those kids, or how far she might go."

"I really had to believe she wouldn't go this far. I really fear for their safety," said Ms. Geary, in tears over the twins' disappearance.

Johnson said his clients will ask the Harris County district attorney's office Monday to issue an order for authorities to find the children and return them to the couple.

Mrs. Durichek took the girls from Minnesota just before her son, Robert Schlaepfer, died of AIDS Sept. 2, 1993. The girls' mother committed suicide in 1990.

But Mrs. Durichek brought the girls to Houston where state District Judge John Peavy Jr. granted Mrs. Durichek custody Sept. 15. Just days before, however, a Minnesota court had granted custody to Ms. Geary and Rhicard.

Police arrest judge from Oklahoma on drunken-driving charges in Paris

PARIS (AP) — An Oklahoma judge has been charged with driving while intoxicated after his weaving car was stopped on a northeast Texas highway, police said.

Hack Welch, an Oklahoma associate district judge from Choctaw County, was charged after Paris police stopped his car on U.S. 271 at FM 1499, about 12 miles south of the Red River, records showed.

Police stopped a car driven by Welch at 11:15 p.m. Thursday when a patrolman determined it was not holding steady to its lane.

Welch had bloodshot eyes, unsteady balance and a strong smell of alcohol on him when his car was stopped, said city patrolman Kenneth Adams.

After failing a field sobriety test, Welch was taken to the Lamar County Jail, where two breath tests showed he had a blood alcohol level of .10 percent, Adams said. Legal intoxication in Texas is .10 percent or more.

Welch was arraigned before County Judge Deane Loughmiller early Friday and released on his own recognizance.

The 2 a.m. Friday arraignment ordinarily would have occurred before a justice of the peace.

Officials believe wildfires in Presidio County are under control

MARFA (AP) — Firefighters Saturday hoped to win their battle with a wildfire that scorched some 1,700 acres of brush on the Cibolo Creek Ranch in Presidio County.

Aiding local officials were 27 Texas Forest Service firefighters who were diverted from a trip back to their East Texas bases Thursday after fighting fires in Hudspeth County, a couple of hours to the northwest.

"They were estimating they'd get the fires under control sometime today," forest service spokesman Mahlon Hammetter said Saturday. "They've got Civil Air Patrol assistance on this, so they're going to try to go up and get some sort of aerial reconnaissance to see if there are other threats around that need attention."

The Marfa Fire Department sent two engines and six firefighters to the ranch, about 30 to 40 miles south of Marfa, and the forest service sent in three engines.

"They've been using a combination ax and grubbing hoe to carve out firebreaks in front of the fire and then light backfires to burn away fuel in the fire's path," Hammetter said.

"Toss in the rugged terrain, and it becomes back-breaking type of work. It's pretty tiring, and that's the type of work they've been doing for over a week."

Structures on the ranch were threatened for a while, Hammetter said.

Several crews that the forest service dispatched to Armstrong County, in the Texas Panhandle just southeast of Amarillo, have returned to East Texas, Hammetter said.

Dredging issue remains bitter, could go to court

PORT MANSFIELD (AP) — Supporters call it a vital economic asset. Skeptics deride it as "the ditch."

A 120-mile section of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway between Corpus Christi and Brownsville is the focus of a bitter environmental debate that could end up in court.

At issue is the Army Corps of Engineers' 45-year practice of dredging the Laguna Madre bay bottom and dumping the displaced "spoil" — muddy, silty watery sediment — back into the bay.

Ever since the final leg of the 1,100-mile barge canal from Florida to Brownsville was completed in 1949, it has gone largely unquestioned that periodic dredging was necessary to keep it navigable.

But a coalition of environmentalists, fishermen and a powerful ranch has emerged to oppose the uncontained dumping of spoil into the Laguna Madre, the shallow lagoon from Corpus Christi to the mouth of the Rio Grande.

"Simply put, if they dump it in the bay they'll be sued," says Walt Kittelberger, a Port Mansfield fishing guide and anti-dredging activist.

"Sooner or later you have to accept the fact that the bay is more important than the ditch," says Kittelberger, chairman of the Lower Laguna Madre Foundation.

Kittelberger's group and the National Audubon Society say open-bay dumping clouds the water and smothers seagrasses, which support the diverse stocks of marine and bird life.

"The only thing I can compare it to is having an aquarium and seeing how much mud we throw into it until everything dies. And that's what we're doing in the Laguna Madre," says Steve Thompson, manager of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Laguna Atascosa Refuge.

The canal is dredged to be 12 feet deep and 125 feet wide, displacing an immense volume of spoil over the decades.

The barge industry disputes claims of environmental damage, saying that seagrasses in many areas can revegetate.

Les Sutton, a barge industry lobbyist, says he fears that some environmental groups want to close the intracoastal south of Corpus Christi to discourage Mexico's plan to extend the canal through the Mexican Laguna Madre to the Port of Tampico.

"I'm telling them: 'Don't kill our dog because you don't want somebody else to have a dog,'" Sutton says.

The industry says the Laguna Madre leg of the waterway handles 2 million tons of cargo worth more than $300 million each year. Among the goods: gasoline, diesel, coils, sand, gravel, crude petrol, sugar, lube oils, fertilizers and chemicals.

"I think over the next 50 years you will see an exponential growth in the use of the Gulf Intracoastal," says Steve Valerius, president of the Texas Waterway Operators Association, an industry group.

He predicts the North American Free Trade Agreement will boost trade with Mexico on the canal.

An end to dredging on the Laguna Madre would cut business in half at the Port of Brownsville and completely shut off the Port of Harlingen, navigation authorities say.

"To me, it's just like deciding that you don't want Interstate 83 going through your town. It makes absolutely no sense to be talking about closing it down," Valerius says.

A closed canal would mean fewer jobs and higher gasoline prices in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, canal backers say. Critics point out the jobs in fishing, shrimping and tourism that depend on a healthy Laguna Madre.

Executive speaks about marketing to Hispanic population

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Targeting the Hispanic population with advertising and the reasons why it is economically advantageous was the message brought to the Midland Advertisting Club Friday by the president of a San Antonio advertisting firm.

"Marketing to Hispanics has been going on for years, really," said Carlos Montemayor. "But, it was mainly retailers who were trying to get people into their stores."

Montemayor is the president of Montemayor y Asociados Inc., which has handled such companies as the Chrysler Corporation, Miller beer, Proctor & Gamble and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Montemayor said focusing on Hispanics makes economic sense for advertisers not only because they are the fastest-growing ethnic group, but because they are more apt to spend their money.

"The total Hispanic population nationwide is about 25 million out of a total of 225 million people," he said. "That number is expected to grow by 37 percent in the next 10 years. And, this group will spend about $242 billion annually."

Montemayor said big corporations have to let go of the "melting pot" idea and see the nation's population as a salad bowl.

"Companies used to think that immigrants, once they were here for years, would just melt into the American way of life," he said. "However, with the salad bowl idea, each ethnic group maintains its culture and heritage, but fully participates in the American environment."

Companies should not, however, think one ad targeted to Hispanics as a whole will reach all the Hispanic sub-groups.

Montemayor said the Hispanic population is made up of five subgroups: Mexican-Americans, Cuban-Americans, Puerto Ricans, Tex/Mexicans and Central Americans.

"All these groups speak Spanish, but there are very different nuances in the different groups," he said. "There is a difference in Mexican food and Cuban food. You have to realize the differences and adjust your advertising to that."

State utility commission to decide certification for Cap Rock system

Staff Report

The second phase of a new West Texas electric transmission system, awaiting state certification and set for construction later this summer, will bring "lower-priced electricity and increased reliability" to electric consumers throughout the Permian Basin, according to officials with Cap Rock Electric.

The $32.8 million, two-phase project proposed by Cap Rock, a customer-owned electric cooperative with corporate offices in Midland, also is expected to add about 400 construction jobs to the local economy for a period of six months, officials said.

A Texas Public Utility Commission hearing examiner will hear testimony Monday in Austin over whether the line should receive a Certificate of Convenience and Necessity, required for construction. TPUC staff have recommended approval.

When completed, the new transmission system will consist of a giant 232-mile loop through much of the Permian Basin, with two interchanges at either end to receive power from Southwestern Public Service Co. (SPS), based in Amarillo. The southern interchange, near Gardendale, will receive power from an SPS line from Hobbs, N.M. The northern interchange, near Vealmoor, will receive SPS power via Lubbock.

'We are building the system to improve reliability and to provide for future growth.'

— David Pruit, Cap Rock president

"We are building the system to improve reliability and to provide for future growth," said David Pruit, Cap Rock president and chief executive officer. "But we are also building it to bring cheaper electricity into the market."

According to a report by TPUC's Rate Design Section, SPS's rates are among the lowest in state. Cap Rock currently buys most of its power from TU Electric.

Pruit said that in the short term, wholesale electricity bought from SPS and distributed by Cap Rock Electric may result in only slightly lower, or simply stabilize, rates for Cap Rock customers because "most of the cost difference will be applied to the cost of building the transmission system."

In the long run, however, he said the system is predicted to reduce increases in the projected cost of electricity by 50 percent by the year 2013. The new transmission system also will allow the cooperative to buy power from other sources as well, Pruitt added. "We can go shopping for power at the lowest price," he said.

Anti-smoking activist quits state job after discovery of falsified credentials

ARLINGTON (AP) — An anti-smoking crusader has quit his state job after a newspaper investigation discovered he had repeatedly falsified his credentials.

Gilbert John Flores Jr. represented the Texas Department of Health as a tobacco specialist in public hearings across North Texas.

The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday it had found in a 1989 investigation that Flores had falsely claimed to be a Rhodes scholar, a U.S. Olympic medalist and a biochemist at the University of Texas at Arlington.

More recently, the paper reported, the 39-year-old Fort Worth native claimed a degree from Texas A&M University that college officials say he did not earn. His employers have denied another claim that Flores testified before Congress on the dangers of second-hand smoke.

Flores turned in a letter of resignation Thursday. Beforehand, the newspaper reported, Flores denied in an interview that he had ever misrepresented himself or used false credentials. He said people in the tobacco industry have spread lies about him to derail his anti-smoking crusade.

"They want to discredit my name," he said. "This is typical of them."

Tobacco industry spokesman Thomas Lauria of the Tobacco Institute in Washington denied the allegation.

"I have never heard of Gilbert Flores," he said.

The paper reported that Flores had resigned after his employees began to investigate inquiries by the newspaper and complaints he had misrepresented himself.

The newspaper said it could not reach Flores for comment after his resignation.

Classes for Summer II to begin Wednesday at Midland College

Staff Report

Midland College's second summer session starts Wednesday with registration. Classes begin Thursday, along with a limited period of later registration.

Students who have obtained time permits are scheduled to register on Wednesday from noon-2 p.m. and again at 5 p.m. Those who did not obtain time permits in advance should come to the Student Center on Wednesday from 5-6:30 p.m. for processing and registration.

Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar, noted that fees must be paid at the time of registration to avoid a late-fee penalty.

Summer Session II classes meet daily, Monday through Thursday. Final day of classes, along with final examinations, will be Thursday, Aug. 18.

Summer II classes are being offered in: accounting, air conditioning, heating and refrigeration, alcohol and drug abuse counseling, biology, business administration, computer information systems, economics, English, environmental protection technology, geology, government, history, mathematics, music, physical education, physics, psychology, reading, sociology, Spanish, speech communication, and theater.

Some classes are offered in both daytime and evening, while others meet only in the daytime or in the evening.

Details about classes, meeting times, admission requirements and fees are contained in the Summer Session bulletin, which is available at the Student Center at the Midland College South Facility at 201 West Florida or at the Midland County Library.

First-time students must have transcripts, while those who are not TASP-exempt may be limited in their enrollment options. Midland College also requires preplacement testing in math and English classes. These tests may be taken Tuesday in the Student Center.

Call 685-4501 for more information about placement exams or other admission details.

OC to hold summer session registration

Staff Report

ODESSA — Registration for Odessa College's second summer session will be 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Tuesday in the registrar's office on the second floor of the Student Union Building.

All students must provide documentation of Texas residency for the past 12 months prior to enrollment to avoid paying the non-resident tuition rate.

All transfer students must provide an official transcript and TASP scores.

Late registration is set for 8:30 a.m.-1 p.m. and 3-6 p.m. July 14 and July 19.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

By H.A. Tuck

Summer Session I ends and Summer II begins in rapid succession this week. Tuesday is the final day of classes, plus final examinations, for Summer I students.

Tuck

That's also the day when first-time students need to report for counseling and pre-testing at the Student Services area of the Student Center.

Registration for Summer II takes place on Wednesday from noon-2 p.m. and 5-7 p.m., also in the Student Center. The period from noon until 2 p.m. has been filled with students who received time permits during the previous couple of weeks.

If you would like to take a course or two during the second summer term, you are asked to report for registration and processing between 5-6:30 p.m.

Summer II classes start on Thursday, July 14 and end on Thursday, Aug. 18. Summer classes are conducted daily Monday through Thursday, so there's a long weekend for studying and/or recreation each week.

If you aren't sure what's being offered, or how to enroll, come to the Student Services area Monday from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. to look over a course bulletin or talk with a counselor. Some questions can be answered over the phone if you call 685-4501.

Fall course bulletins have been printed and are available at the Student Center at the MC South Facility, located at 201 West Florida, or at the Midland County Library. The bulletins will tell you nearly everything you need to know about admission requirements, costs and the fall semester calendar.

There are several changes this year, mostly designed to assist freshmen students in getting started properly. There are four one-day orientation sessions for freshmen students, July 25-28. Those whose surnames begin with S-Z will have orientation on July 25, A-E on July 26, M-R on July 27, and F-L on July 28. If this presents a problem, please contact the Student Services office or call 685-4501.

Also planned for the first time is a special registration day just for freshmen. It's scheduled on Aug. 24 by permit only.

Placement examination requirements for math and English classes, TASP requirements and early registration for returning students is explained in the fall bulletin.

If you have already made your plans to attend MC this fall, classes begin Aug. 29 and end on Dec. 16.

To delight some small child or grandchild, perhaps even as an extra special birthday present, get that child enrolled for a class or several classes in the second session of Kids' College at Midland College. This is guaranteed fun for the child who has completed first through sixth grade . . . and it can be almost as much fun for the donor.

The cost is just $30 per class, with a maximum of three class sessions each day.

Kids' College Session II is July 18-28 with classes Monday through Thursday.

There are some openings left, so call 685-4747 or 685-4518 this week and get someone signed up. On July 28, you'll be invited to attend the child's classes to see what they've learned and/or created.

This summer's Midland College Cheerleader Camp takes place July 25-28, but you can save $10 by signing up no later than July 15. The camp is for children who have completed first through 12th grades. From 9 a.m.-12 noon for four days, those enrolled can learn cheers, chants, tumbling and dance from the award-winning Chaparral Cheerleaders.

The fee is $45 through this Friday, and $55 after that. Since the college is closed on Friday during the summer, contact cheerleader coach/sponsor Tommy Ramos at 685-4544 not later than Thursday.

Four classes are scheduled to start this week through the Continuing Education Department, one of them rather physical and three of them mental. Aerobics is a monthlong class that meets Monday through Thursday from 5:40-7:40 p.m.

Introduction to Business also meets Monday through Thursday for a month from 8-10 p.m.

Real Estate Agency Relationships meets for three weeks, starting July 14 and ending Aug. 2. The class meets from 6-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

A Real Estate Mandatory Continuing Education class is scheduled Saturday and Sunday, July 16 and 17, from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. both days.

You may register for any of these courses at the Continuing Education Department located in the Administration Building, or call 685-4518, either for more information or to register using a charge card.

BAYTOWN (AP) — Junk or art?

It's an age-old question that this time concerns an iridescent purple car filled with flowers that is parked in front of a body shop business.

The city has deemed the transformed 1975 Ford Mustang junk and ordered its removal, but the owner refused and has asked that a jury decide the car's fate.

Martha Barnett permanently parked the car in front of her Baytown Motors Body Shop three weeks ago.

"Our shop is set back from the road and a little hard to see," she said. "Nobody seemed to be noticing us, so I thought this might turn some heads."

It worked a little too well.

A day after it was parked beneath the body shop's sign, complaints began rolling into the city inspection department. The car was "red tagged" for removal and Ms. Barnett soon received a certified letter giving her 10 days to act.

This week, her attorney, Don Coffey of Baytown, requested a jury trial. No date has been set, but the city cannot tow the car until the matter has been resolved.

"I don't think this is a car any more," Ms. Barnett said. "It's an art object, sign or planter that suits my business. . . . We've even had people stop by and take pictures of their kids in front of it."

She said she also has received 16 telephone calls and a letter from people who oppose the car's removal.

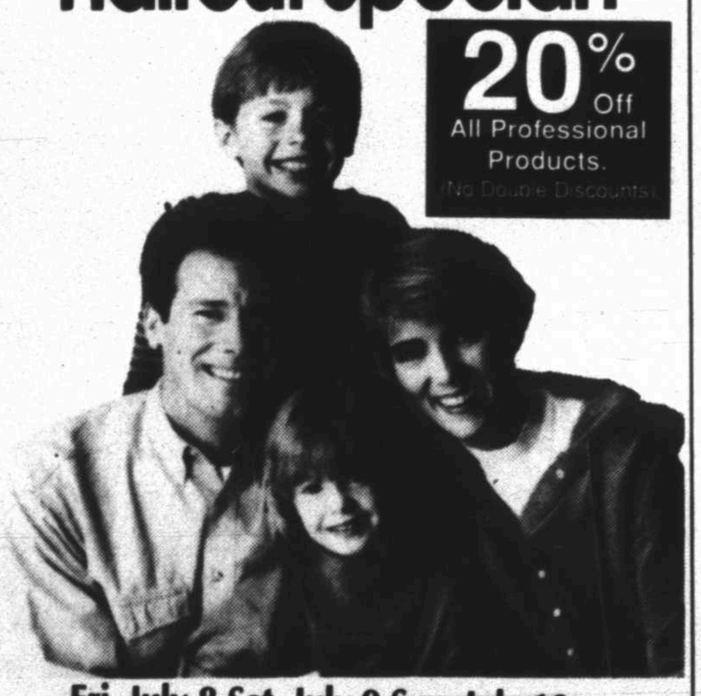

But the car also has its detractors.

"We stopped counting the complaints after 11 came in," said Debbie Barnes, chief enforcer of the city's new junk car ordinance. "Some were laughing when they called, but mostly all thought it was really ugly. Their biggest objection seemed to be the wild color."

RELIGION IN BRIEF

■ Kamaleson to speak

Dr. Samuel Kamaleson, a well known preacher and teacher, will be conducting a community-wide crusade for Snyder at First United Methodist Church, 2700 College Ave., today through Tuesday.

Kamaleson was born and reared in India where he earned his doctorate in veterinary science. In the late 1950s, he came to the United States and received his degree in Theology at Asbury Seminary, Wilmore, Ky. Since that time, he has served as a pastor in both India and the United States and as district superintendent in India. For the past 20 years, he has served as vice president at large of World Vision International where his specialized duties include evangelism, leadership development and pastoral conferences.

He will present special music and speak at 10:55 a.m. Sunday and 7 p.m. Sunday through Tuesday. For more information call the church, 1-573-5416.

■ Church marks 64 years

Macedonia Baptist Church, 201 S. Carver St., is celebrating the church's 64th anniversary today.

Services for the day will begin at 11 a.m. with the Rev. Boley Dunn, assistant pastor, speaking.

Then, at 2:30 p.m., the Rev. R.C. Jones, pastor of Mt. Rose Baptist Church, Sweetwater, will speak. All are invited to attend both services.

■ Camp meeting to begin

Victory Family Christian Center, 5200 W. Illinois Ave., is holding its Camp Meeting '94 July 17-22.

The "Return to Jesus" themed meeting will feature special speakers from Texas and Oklahoma. Sessions are set for 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. July 17 and 7 p.m. July 18-22.

Also, a Children's Crusade is planned during each session with features puppets, games and Bible stories.

Teaching will be held daily at 10 a.m. Also, Anita Maxwell of Fort Worth will speak to women at 10 a.m. July 21.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Bob Miller, invites all to attend.

■ Missionaries speak

Two foreign missionaries spoke at Ranchland Heights Baptist Church last Sunday.

Bernard and Annetta Fairchild are making arrangements to return to Yemen to work in a hospital. The previously served in Jordan. The couple dressed in Yemen traditional clothing and talked of their experiences, the customs of the people and their needs. Mrs. Fairchild is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Oma of Midland.

And, Wednesday following the evening prayer meeting, ice cream and cake were served to celebrate pastor Lucian Rudd's birthday. For more information on church activities call 697-4471 or 683-1947.

■ 'Faith in Action' is topic

The Rev. Albert E. Reincke, pastor at Holy Cross Lutheran Church, will speak on "Faith in Action" at 10:15 a.m. today at the church, 5400 N. Big Spring St.

The adult Bible class, which meets during Sunday School at 9 a.m., will begin a new topic for the next six weeks. Kevin Rabenaldt will lead the group in a study of "They Testify of Me." All are invited to attend.

■ Retailer attends meeting

Lanna Ruth Callender of Sonshine Corker, Midland, was one of more than 13,000 delegates representing all segments of the Christian retailing industry who attended the Christian Booksellers Association fourth annual International Convention this summer at the Colorado Convention Center in Denver.

Callender

"The Christian retailing industry is estimated to be approaching a three billion dollar business, a definite increase, and I think that there are several reasons for the growth," said Bill Anderson, CBA president. "Primarily, our industry is changing rapidly, and we're seeing increased professionalism, sophistication and growth. Christian bookstores have changed to catch up with the present pace of business and to face the future."

Attending the convention were representatives from 50 states and 50 foreign countries.

■ Outreach Aglow to meet

A buffet dinner will be served at 6:30 p.m. Cost is $6.50. The meeting begins at 7:20 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Dear Belle Crumley of Tolar. She and her husband are evangelists through "One on One Ministries." Mrs. Crumley is a teacher, counselor and intercessor. Her topic, from a book she coauthored, will be "Mommie, Please Come Home."

For more information call Helen Vaughn, 694-5456, or Jannie Linney, 1-756-3688.

■ Group hosts meeting

SAN ANGELO — Faith Teaching Ministries is sponsoring West Texas Campmeeting 1994 at the San Angelo Convention Center July 13-16.

Speakers include Sherlock Bally, Tulsa, Okla., Elaine Hollmer, Cleveland, Tenn., Claudine Chaney, Colorady City, and Jerry Roach, San Angelo. Music will be provided by Doug Fowler, Jacksonville Beach, Fla.

Services are at 2 and 7 p.m. Wednesday, and 10 a.m., 2 and 7 p.m. Thursday through July 16. No admission will be charged. A children's Ministry will be available evenings only. For more information call 1-944-2075.

■ SMILE plans meeting

ODESSA — SMILE — Singles Moving in Love and Evangelism — will be meeting at the Radisson, formerly the Odessa Hilton, 5200 E. University, at 7 p.m. today.

SMILE is a missionary outreach of Life Unlimited Church, Odessa.

"This is open to all denominations," said Jon Harrington. "We are under the covering leadership of Donald C. Palmer at Life Unlimited Church. We want to encourage every denomination to be a part of this. It is our desire to get the estimated 48,000 singles in Midland and Odessa plugged into the estimated 300 churches here."

For more information call Jon and Cindy Harrington, 550-0005 at work or 1-367-9344 at home.

■ Missionary to speak

ODESSA — Mike Crosslow will speak at Odessa Christian Faith Center, 8860 N. Andrews Highway, at 9 and 11 a.m. and 6 p.m.

He has been a missionary to East Africa since 1981 and is founder of Abundant Life Ministries in Uganda and Kenya. His ministry includes minister's training programs, church planting, children's outreaches, evangelistic crusades and Bible distribution.

He has established 20 churches in Africa. For more information call 1-368-7714.

■ Hope plans Bible study

Hope Lutheran Church, 2003 North A St., will offer a weekly Bible study Wednesdays through July.

The study will begin at 7 p.m. at the church. Mary Beth Anton, ministry assistant, will lead the study.

All are invited to attend. For more information call the church, 683-1936.

■ Presentation planned

"Something Special for Ladies" is planned for 1 to 4 p.m. today at N. Midland Drive Church of Christ, 5206 N. Midland Drive.

Guest speaker will be Hazel Fillamon of Abilene. She will speak on "Living With Our Second Choices." Also, a guest quartet from the Woodlawn Church of Christ, Abilene, will perform.

Refreshments will be served. Dress is casual. No offering will be taken. No child care will be available. For more information call Helen Trull, 682-6334, or Jo Fite, 689-0341.

■ Sermon to be on poor

Today's efforts to help the Third World poor will be among the subjects featured in a July 24 guest sermon planned for St. Nicholas Episcipal Church, 2900 W. Princeton Ave.

The guest speaker will be the Rev. Richard L. Southworth of "Food for the Poor," an international, interdenominational ministry currently serving in the Caribbean. Food for the Poor ships food, building and medical supplies, school furniture, equipment for self-help projects and other direct assistance to more than 20 countries, including Haiti and Guyana.

Southworth will be speaking during the 8 and 10:30 a.m. services. For more information about the organization write Food for the Poor, 550 S.W. 12th Ave., Building 4, dept. 3198, Deerfield Beach, Fla., 33442.

■ Sunday School Banquet

Cuthbert Avenue Baptist Church is hosting a Sunday School Banquet July 22 at the church.

The church offers rides to anyone needing one for church services. Those looking for a ride to services may call 694-6075 or 684-7802.

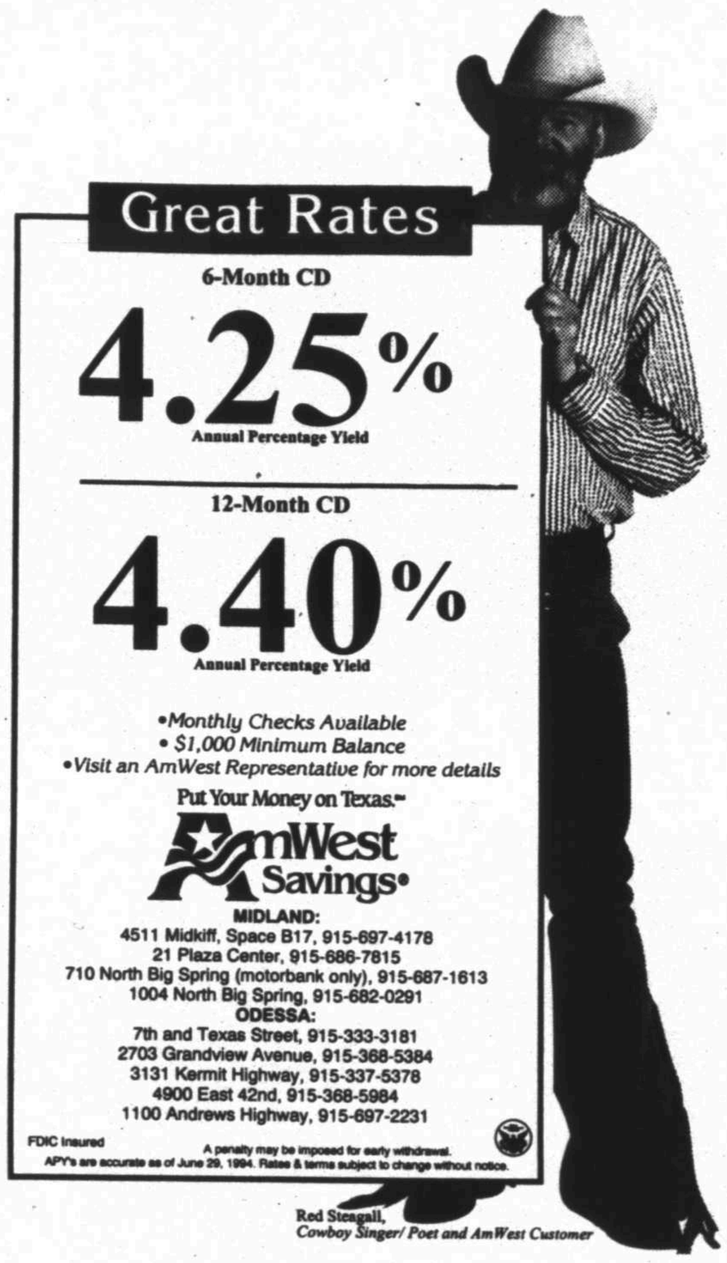

Also, the church is offering a Bible study conducted by its pastor, the Rev. Don Knight, Wednesdays. A question-and-answer session is being held each week.

For more information call the church.

■ Group plans bazaar

mThe Women's Guild of Holy Cross Lutheran Church is making plans for its annual fall bazaar set for Sept. 10 at the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Reservations are being taken for booth rentals. Booths will be 10 feet by 10 feet and rent for $20 per space. More than 50 have already been reserved. For more information call Karen Riff, 570-1110, or Thelma Leek, 520-8716.

Stop for barbecue gives glimpse of hospitality

By Rick Smith
San Angelo Standard-Times

ROBERT LEE — I should have listened to Butch Davis.

I was in Butch Davis's Grocery and Gas in Robert Lee recently, ordering a sliced barbecue sausage sandwich, when it began raining cats and dogs.

Big cats and dogs. Like leopards and wolves.

Let me say right here that I've never eaten in Davis's Grocery and Gas before, but I stopped in around noon for a Coke and inquired about bathrooms.

"You can use ours," the nice lady at the check-out counter said, giving me instructions to go through a door with a pink sign, turn right and turn right again.

See? That's the difference between big cities and small towns. You think they'd treat you that way in Houston?

But back to the story.

On the way to the restroom, I passed by the meat counter where Tim Bosworth and Butch were slicing up beef and sausage for sandwiches and plates.

So I bought one. A sliced barbecue sausage sandwich. Large. With regular — not jalapeno — sauce. $3.

"To go," I explained.

I need to add right here that you can eat in the store, if you like.

By the time Tim sacked up my sandwich, the above-mentioned thunderstorm was dumping dogs and cats all over town.

"Better stay here and eat with us," Butch said.

I should have listened to Butch.

After all, everyone from Willie Nelson to the Harlem Globetrotters have stopped in to eat Butch's barbecue.

Butch and his wife, Carolyn (who teaches fourth grade in Robert Lee), have worked hard to create a laid-back atmosphere in the store.

It's a pleasant place.

But I have a real problem eating sliced barbecue sausage sandwiches in public: the sausage slices tend to fall out and onto my lap.

And I figured I'd be much better off eating in the car on the drive back to Angelo. After all, I was in the newspaper's cop car, the one our hard-boiled police reporters use for covering crime. If I slopped barbecue sauce over the seat covers, I reasoned, the cop reporters would figure it was only blood and shrug it off.

So I bid farewell to the grocery store crew — Tim, Butch, Garland Davis, Angela Minjarez and Christi Smith — and sloshed off into the rain, clutching my sandwich sack.

And, friends, when I say rain, I mean it was coming down in sheets. And blankets. And down-filled comforters.

Then the hail started.

Rain! Hail! Thunder! Zero visibility!

And I was driving through a white cloud down what I hoped was the highway to to Angelo, munching my sliced barbecue sausage sandwich, wondering how things could possibly get any worse when the worst happened. The worst! The very worst.

That's right. The sausage in my sliced barbecue sausage sandwich from Davis Grocery and Gas squirted out of my sandwich, slid down the the front of my shirt and landed in the floorboard.

Evidence ruling was on target

Los Angeles Municipal Judge Kathleen Kennedy-Powell's ruling that a bloody glove and bloodstains found at O.J. Simpson's estate can be used as evidence against him was correct and fair.

Ever since Simpson's ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her male friend, Ronald Goldman, were brutally murdered outside Ms. Simpson's condominium on June 12, there have been ample indications that the forthcoming trial of Simpson would be turned into a "media circus." Judge Kennedy-Powell's ruling, however, put Simpson's fate back where it should be — linked directly to the evidence in the case. And the evidence gathered by police at the Simpson estate is critical to the case even though it was obtained without a search warrant.

There are many factors at play in the Simpson case, not the least being the former pro football Hall of Famer's outgoing personality and widespread appeal.

Regardless, that does not, and should not, make him immune to the same laws to which all Americans are subject. Simpson should be held to the same legal standard and afforded the same legal protections available all Americans. Otherwise, we'll be treading dangerously close to establishing a double system of justice in this nation, which would mark the end of justice as we have known it.

As Judge Kennedy-Powell noted, however, the Los Angeles police officers investigating the murder of Ms. Simpson and Goldman "were in fact acting for a benevolent purpose in light of the brutal attack, and they reasonably believed that a further delay could have resulted in the unnecessary loss of life" when they entered the Simpson home without a search warrant.

The issues raised in the preliminary hearing may be brought up again in Superior Court now that Simpson has been ordered to stand trial. That assures Simpson's rights will be protected. He is due that protection, but no more.

Curfews should be left on local option basis

OK, Gov. Ann Richards. With proper exceptions, nighttime curfews to keep juveniles at home and daytime curfews to keep them off the streets during school hours may be a good idea. But let's not have a state law requiring curfews everywhere.

Curfews can prevent some truancy and keep kids out of trouble. But each locality should determine whether it has enough police and community support to enforce one.

Houston, Dallas and Austin are experimenting with curfews. But curfews can be controversial. Many young people — even some of their parents — feel curfews violate civil rights. However, the U.S. Supreme Court has held the one in Dallas is legal.

If most parents in a particular area don't support a curfew, however, it is not likely to work well. Enforcing it may take too much police and court time away from other crime fighting. So leave this to local option.

In Austin, the city adopted curfews only in certain parts of town where citizens demanded them. That's a good way to start testing them.

Bald eagle recovery shows natural heritage commitment

It is no coincidence that federal officials chose last week to announce that the nation's emblem, the American bald eagle, is no longer in imminent danger of extinction. The majestic bird is now officially labeled a threatened species.

That was, of course, good pre-Fourth of July news. But it doesn't mean that the eagle is out of danger yet. Nor is the Endangered Species Act, which faces opposition every time it comes up for reauthorization.

But the eagle's move from endangered to threatened, in a period of only 15 years, demonstrates that our national commitment to protecting species from extinction can and does work, however imperfectly. . . .

So here's a salute to the American bald eagle, and to America for keeping the eagle a living, thriving symbol of our commitment to preserve our natural heritage forever.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 10, the 191st day of 1994. There are 174 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 10, 1940, during World War II, the 114-day Battle of Britain began as Nazi forces began attacking southern England by air. By late October, Britain managed to repel the Luftwaffe, which suffered heavy losses.

On this date:

In 1890, Wyoming became the 44th state.

In 1919, President Wilson personally delivered the Treaty of Versailles to the U.S. Senate, and urged its ratification.

In 1925, jury selection took place in Dayton, Tenn., in the trial of schoolteacher John T. Scopes, charged with violating the law by teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. has indefensible defense policy

It is the official policy of the United States that the armed forces shall be sufficient to fight two regional wars simultaneously without the assistance of allies.

It may be official, but it's nuts.

Reese

In the first place, even before the present cuts in defense, the United States was not able to fight a regional war — the Persian Gulf war — without the assistance of allies. George Bush had to go begging with a tin cup to get allies to help pay for it. And that was a war against an exposed expeditionary force of a Third World country with a total population of about 19 million. Not to take anything away from the pilots and soldiers, but the gloating by the politicians and the big brass was a bit unseemly, given what a one-sided affair it was.

There seems to be two things the Establishment cannot get through its pointy head. One, the United States is broke. Two, the American people have no desire to be the world's policeman.

Being world cop is what it's all about, of course — that and maintaining big bucks expenditures in the defense sector. A regional "enemy" by definition cannot be a threat to the United States. And if a country is not a threat to the United States, the United States should not go to war against it.

The military-industrial complex is ticked off, you know, that the Cold War is over. The American Establishment did everything it could to prop up the Soviet Union — lending it billions, never directly challenging it — and it still collapsed. So they are now desperately seeking new enemies.

Instead of real threats, of which they've run completely out, they give you political baloney such as "an interest in the stability of" whatever place they wish to meddle in. But what is stability and what difference does it make to us if some distant place is stable or unstable? I'm sure King George III was concerned about the stability of North America, but our revolutionary forefathers made it unstable. There is always stability under the heel of a tyrant.

Talk about our alleged interest in stability is just 100 percent dog breath to justify meddling where we have no legal or moral right nor any legitimate reason to meddle. Banks and businesses with seizable, burnable assets may have an interest in stability, but it's no concern of ours. If you invest your money overseas, then take your chances.

The American people have a national interest in freedom of navigation in international waters. They have a national interest in voluntary trade with other countries. They have a national interest in not being invaded by foreign forces.

Well, nobody is challenging our freedom of navigation or freedom to engage in trade. The only invasion is by Mexicans, Haitians, Cubans, Jamaicans and other immigrants.

Americans should not allow propagandists for intervention to confuse them by blurring the distinction between humanitarian assistance and political-military interference.

GEORGE WILL

Players may throw owners another strike

WASHINGTON — Poor Cleveland. The Indians have not been in a World Series for 40 years, have not finished within 10 games of first for 35 years, and today they are (as this is written) in first but a players' strike may truncate the season, preventing the World Series.

Will

The players' average salary is $1.2 million but the median salary is just $410,000, not so much for people with short careers at the peak of a $1.8 billion industry. The players may strike not to enforce new demands but to protect the status quo, under which this year they will get 58 percent of baseball's gross revenues, up from 41 percent just five years ago.

Nineteen owners say they are losing money as the 28 teams earn their significantly unequal portions of the $1.8 billion in revenues — a sum until recently beyond the dreams of baseball avarice. National television revenues this year may be half what they recently were, but baseball has set attendance records in 10 of the last 12 years. Three parks — Toronto's, Atlanta's and Baltimore's — are almost sold out for this season. Baseball's basic asset, the franchise, has appreciated handsomely. The Orioles sold for $12 million in 1979, $70 million in 1988 and $173 million in 1993. The Florida and Colorado expansion owners paid a $95 million entry fee and when baseball soon expands again, people will pay even more.

Baseball's troubling asymmetry is that the price of players is set by a national market but teams' revenues reflect vast local disparities, particularly regarding local broadcast revenues. The owners and players agree there should be more revenue sharing among the clubs.

However, the owners have made their sharing proposal contingent on the players accepting a cap on the total salaries teams can pay, limiting the players to 50 percent of baseball's gross. The players respond that the owners are just trying to share the players' revenues, and that the owners only want a cap that will set the aggregate compensation of players below where the market sets it.

The owners took a year and a half after reopening the labor agreement to propose the loathed salary cap, leaving the players two months to capitulate or strike. If the players play out the season without an agreement, the owners can seek government confirmation that an impasse exists and then impose a cap and much else. Under the owners' new rules, eight owners can block a settlement, and perhaps that many owners would profit from a strike by losing less than they are losing while playing.

The seven most recent negotiations (1972, 1973, 1976, 1980, 1981, 1985, 1990) involved work stoppages, and the owners lost every time. This time will be different, say the owners, as they do every time. The players, say the owners yet again, are making too much money to strike for long. The owners forget that the players are successful players because they are intense competitors who hate to lose.

Furthermore, they have shown through their union a concern for coming generations of players. They have been willing to make sacrifices rather than yield ground gained against employers who were arrogant before players won the right of free agency, and corrupt after. Remember, the owners' illegal collusion against free agents cost the owners $280 million in damages to players.

While players' salaries have soared, so have revenues, to $1.8 billion from just $625 million in 1985, the year owners first said a salary cap was imperative. When free agency arrived the owners predicted that big market teams would destroy competitive balance by cornering the market on talent. In fact, free agency has coincided with unprecedented competitive balance.

Perhaps no reasonable revenue sharing plan can save the teams in some markets.

And what of the fans now facing the eighth interruption of baseball in 22 years? Many agree with the former pitcher Jim Bouton: "While the players don't deserve all that money, the owners don't deserve it even more."

Declaration signers weren't politically correct

Button Gwinnett of Georgia was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. There were 56 altogether. All were dead white males.

Baker

No one deplored the utter lack of diversity. Not even Caesar Rodney of Delaware. Oliver Wolcott of Connecticut, commenting long afterward, was amazed that Caesar Rodney had not spoken out at least about the group's deadness.

"Exactly," said William Hooper of North Carolina, "because Rodney had to put up with a lot of ham-handed joshing about death."

"Nothing infuriated him more," William Paca of Maryland recalled, "than someone clownishly clapping him on the back and saying, 'Are you really dead, old chap, or was Mark Antony just spoofing about coming to bury Caesar, not to praise him?'"

This reminded Robert Treat Paine of Massachusetts of the time William Floyd of New York had cried, "Great Caesar's ghost!" when Rodney came down to breakfast looking the worse for wear after a congenial evening with Benjamin Franklin of Pennsylvania.

"And," said Edward Rutledge of South Carolina, "what about that time the poor devil upset the table and walked out just because Richard Henry Lee of Virginia said his favorite line of poetry was, 'Never blooms the rose so red as where some dying Caesar bled'?"

George Clymer of Pennsylvania, so famous for his interjections that he is called "The Interjecting Signer," interjected, "Dick Henry Lee couldn't have spoken that line in 1776 because Edward FitzGerald didn't write it until 1859."

Thomas Nelson Jr. of Virginia, who hated quibbles, said, "So what? The point is, if anybody should have had a raised conscience about his deadness it was Caesar Rodney of Delaware."

Years later when interviewing the ancient Stephen Hopkins of Rhode Island I begged him to announce that he was ashamed of himself for having taken part in such an important activity when women and blacks were excluded.

"I thought you were Willard Scott of NBC come to take my picture for the Today Show's gallery of Antique Citizens," Stephen Hopkins said, kicking me out of his house.

He was the only surviving dead white male signer when I set out to expose the scandal, but it's good to think I sent at least one insensitive signer to his grave with a bad conscience.

In an 1857 letter to Francis Lightfoot Lee of Virginia, George Ross of Pennsylvania said he had just been asked to join Samuel Adams, John Adams and Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts as well as Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple and Matthew Thornton of New Hampshire in publicly denouncing Thomas Jefferson of Virginia for the Declaration's sexist, politically incorrect language about "all men," rather than "all persons," being created equal.

Ross declined on grounds that not only was he himself dead, but that Jefferson was also dead, not to mention both Adamses, Gerry, Bartlett, Whipple and Thornton.

William Ellery of Rhode Island, who heard of the censure proposal in 1859, wrote John Witherspoon that he thought it would show a civilized regard for enlightened future Americans if all 56 signers issued a public apology for being dead.

Witherspoon urged the apology on his fellow New Jersey signers Richard Stockton, John Hart, Francis Hopkinson and Abraham Clark as well as Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis and Lewis Morris of New York.

When Samuel Chase of Maryland got wind of it, however, a row developed. "It's silly to apologize for being dead," he told his fellow Marylanders Thomas Stone and Charles Carroll of Carrollton. "How could we have avoided being dead?"

"The answer — by jogging and eating a high-fiber, low-fat diet — seems never to have occurred to these sedentary, rye-guzzling Marylanders," Carter Braxton of Virginia wrote in his Christmas circular letter to fellow Virginians George Wythe and Benjamin Harrison, as well as Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington and William Williams of Connecticut; Lyman Hall and George Walton of Georgia; George Read and Thomas McKean of Delaware; Joseph Hewes and John Penn of North Carolina; Arthur Middleton, Thomas Heyward and Thomas Lynch of South Carolina.

Dead John Hancock pondered insurance.

Censorship blocks real Davidian story

I am writing this in response to your articles on the Branch Davidians on June 17 and 18. I don't support the teachings of the Branch Davidians. However, I stand against what the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) did in attacking these people.

Your articles said there was a shootout between the ATF and the Davidians. That is not correct. The ATF did the shooting, and there is evidence that they shot at least three of their own men. In addition, military equipment was used against private citizens, in violation of federal law.

The real story on this event was censored by the national TV media beyond recognition. It is obvious that they and the ATF don't want the real story to get out. They knew they could get away with it because of the liberal federal judge in that area.

To me this was a violation of Second Amendment rights to keep and bear arms. I urge you to write your representative or senator in Washington and demand a full investigation of this event. Otherwise it could very well happen in West Texas soon.

Kessler should check roll-your-own papers

What's Dr. Kessler's problem with finding addictive nicotine additives in cigarette papers?

Why doesn't the young and naive research chemist analyze the cigarette papers separately, or why doesn't he just check some "roll-your-own" cigarette papers for the said addictive nicotine additives in cigarettes?

At 10 cents per pack (5 cents in a PX), back in 1933, many smokers found it too expensive to buy "tailor mades," and they rolled their own (cowboys could do it one-handed while riding a bronc) using Bull Durham sacked tobacco and free cigarette papers that had the kick of a mule.

That was how I found out, accidentally, about addictive nicotine additives in free roll-your-own cigarette papers — when I thought that they would make neat pre-cut spitballs for school classroom close combat with Lester Scholl and Burl Prinz.

On about the sixth spitball that I made, I got so dizzy that I had to leave the classroom and go to the restroom to vomit.

If you don't believe the God's truth, go suck a few roll-your-own cigarette papers and decide for yourself if that load of addictive nicotine additive got there by osmosis or on purpose.

VISTA makes search for former volunteers

Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) is trying to contact former VISTA volunteers for participation in events marking the program's 30th anniversary and its new role as a pillar of President Clinton's national service program, AmeriCorps.

VISTA does not have current addresses for many of the 100,000 Americans who served in the program, and we want to involve them in local, regional and national events commemorating three decades of VISTA service. VISTA also hopes to offer its alumni opportunities to get involved in current service projects and support volunteer recruitment efforts.

On Oct. 1, 1993, VISTA officially became part of the president's national service initiative. The VISTA program was signed into law in August 1964, and the first VISTA volunteers entered service in January 1965. Currently about 3,700 VISTA volunteers serve at more than 800 local projects in low-income communities across the country.

Readers knowing others who served in VISTA are asked to pass the word that VISTA needs their skills and energy once again. Former VISTA volunteers are urged to write VISTA, Washington, D.C., 20525, or call 1-800-424-8867.

North cartoon is distasteful to many

There appeared in the local section of the Reporter-Telegram on Sunday, June 19, a political cartoon regarding Oliver North that I feel did not deserve the dignity of display.

In my opinion, it had to be a real pinhead that would condone and permit such a distasteful caricature of an honorably discharged veteran whom many respect for having served our country as he did.

We should buy gas from certain stations

It's time to end the assault of the citizens of Midland by local oil companies. If you travel a modest distance from Midland, gas can be purchased for 5 to 18 cents less than it can be bought here. It's not the gas stations, it's the oil companies that dictate the price of gas.

There are a few gas stations in town that sell their gas for 4 to 6 cents less than the standard $1.15. There's a Citgo station on Midkiff Road, just south of Andrews Highway that sells for $1.11 a gallon and a Citgo on Front Street that's $1.09.

If Midlanders support these gas stations, we will not only save money, but we'll encourage the rest of the stations to pressure the oil companies to lower costs. There is a reason for high gas prices. The "market" will bear it; you and I, we are the market. We tolerate the inflated prices and do nothing. If we stop buying high-priced gas, the price will go lower.

Government practices representative aren't

Another nail has now been driven into the coffin of local representative government. In the past several years an alarming assault on local democracy has been made by the local "establishment." The Midland City Council has on more than one occasion handpicked appointees to vacancies created by resignations on that body. The newly appointed member then runs for re-election as an incumbent, with the endorsement of the Reporter-Telegram. This is not representative government.

Likewise, the Midland College Board of Trustees regularly appoints handpicked replacements to vacancies created by resignations. Thus the established oligarchy insures self-perpetuation. These collusive incumbents are consistently recommended and endorsed by the Reporter-Telegram editorial board of four.

Now the powers-that-be have established another of these non-representative oligarchies by the appointment of David Darmstetter to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of longtime hospital board member Stephen Wiesenfeld. The unconsulted and ignored voter-taxpayers can now anticipate that Darmstetter will run for re-election when his short term expires, with the contrived advantage over any challenger by being an incumbent endorsed by the Reporter-Telegram.

The only solution to this undermining of local democracy by the establishment and the several "elected" boards is to have elections to fill each vacancy that occurs. True, this will involve great expense, as each local election costs about $16,000, but what alternative is there to recapture voter control of our local governmental jurisdictions? Think about it.

Reader appreciates area's display of flags

I am extremely pleased to view the large number of flags that are prominently displayed throughout the Permian Basin on national holidays, such as the Fourth of July.

All too often, I have witnessed an indifferent attitude toward our national flag and all that it represents. As I have participated in numerous parades, I am dismayed at the relatively few numbers of citizens who stand, remove their hats or place their hands over the heart, as our national flag passes in front of them.

The American flag means a lot to me. I returned from a yearlong tour of duty in Vietnam in 1972 amid a strong anti-military sentiment. The only flag I recall seeing at the San Francisco airport was being carried by the young couple awaiting the Vietnamese orphan whom I was escorting for their adoption. I have vivid memories of the tears in our eyes as we listened to the patriotic music at the Officer's Club in DaNang on July 4th, 1972 and reflected on our duties there. I also remember how wonderful it was to see our flag and "Welcome to the United States" banners at JFK Airport in 1975 when I returned from an eight-day study tour of the former Soviet Union. When you have spent even a minimal amount of time in places such as Vietnam and the USSR, you gain a much deeper appreciation for our freedoms.

Many excellent young men and women died for our national flag. Many of us lost dear friends and family in pursuit of our liberties, and many others bear physical and emotional scars.

Please display our flag PROUDLY!

Discipline is answer to schools' problems

There have been a lot of small rumbles that seem to be getting larger and larger about the education system in our country, state, Permian Basin and in Midland too! Everyone has their explanation for why our test scores are going down and why in the state of Texas, our test scores are way down for the national average.

I've heard politicians say, "What we need is teachers and books, not more buildings!" I've heard teachers say, "What we need is better salaries for teachers!" (Which I agree is true, but not necessarily the answer to the BIG PROBLEM!) Others say that our schools started the decline when ONE person was successful in getting prayer taken out of the schools. This also is true. You can chart the decline in everything from grades to discipline since ending prayer and Bible reading in schools.

Which brings me to my solution to the decline and decay of our schools ... discipline! Or rather, the lack of discipline! Our educators' hands have been tied by the lack of discipline. Where there is no discipline ... there is failure! As adults, we are all acquainted with areas of our lives in which we feel we have been failures ... Why? ... We lacked the discipline to accomplish whatever it is we failed at ... whether it is our weight, our careers or our marriage. I believe that discipline MUST be returned to the classrooms or our education system is doomed!

Most people are not self-disciplined. Ask yourself where you would be today if the lack of discipline in the schools today had been present when you went to school. Basically, kids don't care how much you know until they know how much you care! Discipline is caring!

I want to go on record as saying I believe that we NEED good teachers, books, prayer and Bible reading in school ... but at the top of the NEEDS list must be DISCIPLINE!

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

DAVE BARRY

Springsteen gives band glory days of its own

Bruce Springsteen played my guitar. I am not making this up. It was the high point of my musical life. It was even better than the time when, for a few minutes, I was in the same airport as Ray Charles. I am never going to wash my guitar again. (Not that I ever did before.)

Barry

I should explain that I belong to a band called the Rock Bottom Remainders. It consists mostly of writers. The original concept was that people who spend all their time writing would enjoy a chance to express their musical talent. The flaw here is that most of us don't have any musical talent. So we compensate by playing amplified instruments loud enough to affect the weather. Also we stick to songs that are so well known that even when WE play them, people sometimes recognize them.

For example, we play "Louie Louie," an extremely well-known song. You know how scientists have been trying fruitlessly for years to contact alien beings by broadcasting radio signals to outer space? Well, I think they should broadcast "Louie Louie." I bet alien beings would immediately recognize this song and broadcast a response ("PLAY SOMETHING ELSE").

For a change of pace, the Rock Bottom Remainders also play "Wild Thing," a song performed in a style known to classical musicians as "molto accelerando con carne," which means "basically the same as 'Louie Louie.'" We employ two powerful musical weapons when we perform this song. One is Roy Blount Jr., a great humor writer who has the raw natural musical talent of a soldering iron. We give Roy two vocal solos in "Wild Thing." At the end of the first verse, the band pauses dramatically, and Roy is supposed to say, "I LOVE you"; at the end of the second verse, he's supposed to say, "You MOVE me." These two lines are Roy's sole musical responsibility for the entire night, and he takes it seriously, pacing around before the performance, muttering his lines over and over to himself. So when we get to the end of the first verse, we stop, and everybody turns expectantly to Roy, waiting for him to say "I LOVE you," and Roy, frowning with deep concentration, inevitably says: "You MOVE me." And then the rest of us, in a smooth professional manner, stagger around and try not to wet our pants.

Our other big musical weapon on "Wild Thing" is Joel Selvin, a writer and rock critic for The San Francisco Chronicle, who plays a flute solo, using a plastic flute that looks like the kind you get from gum ball machines, only cheaper. Joel, like most of your top international flute players, learned this solo by watching an instructional videotape at home. The problem is, when he gets on stage with the band, he tends to get nervous and blow REALLY HARD, so that instead of notes, the flute emits a series of extremely high-pitched squeaks, like a gerbil that fell into a french-fry machine.

I play lead guitar in this band. My sole musical qualification is that I am slightly more experienced than the guy who plays rhythm guitar, Stephen King, well-known author of children's books ("The Little Engine That Could Sneak Into Your Room At Night And Eat Your Eyes"). Stephen has a custom-made black guitar with little white mother-of-pearl spiders crawling up the neck. One time I was showing him how to play a certain chord, and I pointed at a spot on the neck and said, "Put your finger here," and he said, "Oh, on THAT spider."

In May, the Rock Bottom Remainders performed at a party in Los Angeles at the annual convention of the American Booksellers Association. It went very well. The audience members were receptive, by which I mean they had been drinking. Some people got so receptive that they demanded an encore, so we decided to play "Gloria," which we like because it's even simpler to play than "Louie Louie." You can throw a guitar off a cliff, and as it bounces off rocks on the way down, it will, all by itself, play "Gloria."

So we went back on stage, and I picked up one of the two guitars I'd been using, and just as we were about to start, Stephen King tapped me on the shoulder and said, "We have a special guest." I turned around, and there was Bruce Springsteen. I still don't know how he came to be at this convention; I don't believe he's a bookseller. All I know is, he was picking up the other guitar. My guitar.

"Bruce," I said to him. "Do you know the guitar part to 'Gloria?'"

This is like asking James Michener if he knows how to write his name.

"I think so," he said.

So we played "Gloria," and I say in all modesty that it was the best version of that song ever played in the history of the world, going back thousands of years.

Anyway, now I'm back in my office, tapping at my computer, being a columnist again. But from time to time my mind drifts back to that night, remembering how it sounded. I haven't polled the other members of the Remainders, but I think we would definitely let Bruce join the band, if he wrote a book.

By William Celis III
N.Y. Times News Service

To get into the college of his choice, Lyndon Allin knew that he needed good grades, high scores on his college entrance examination and a lot of financial aid. He also needed some gamesmanship.

Allin, one of the nation's top-ranked high school graduates, was accepted by some of the nation's leading institutions. Northwestern University, which costs $24,283 a year, offered him $8,700 in scholarships and loans; Vanderbilt University offered $13,000, about half its annual costs.

But Duke University, on which Allin had set his sights, offered him just $2,140 to help cover its $25,487 annual costs.

So Allin called Duke about the competing bids, noting, as he had in his aid application, that his family's financial status might soon worsen. The next day, he said, Duke increased its offer to $14,250 a year, saying it had erred in calculating his aid package.

Duke does not bargain with students over financial aid, said James A. Belvin Jr., Duke's financial aid director. But he said the institution is willing to review aid packages if there are changes in a family's financial status.

And students like Allin are bombarding colleges and universities with calls for such reviews, playing one institution against another, pointing up their own merits and their financial needs as would-be undergraduates.

Allin, for example, was the 1994 valedictorian of Woodrow Wilson High School in Washington. He is a National Merit Scholar whose combined score of 1510 out of 1600 on his Scholastic Assessment Test for college admissions put him in the top 1 percent of all high school graduates.

"You have these cards and you have to play them," said Allin, whose father, a retired federal employee, and mother, who works for a non-profit foundation, declined to disclose their combined incomes. "I'm being a good consumer."

Such consumerism, however, is fast becoming a nightmare for college financial aid officials. The combination of high college costs and smaller amounts of available aid has particularly made higher education more expensive for the middle class.

Some families will seemingly stoop to any bargaining ploy to pry a few more dollars out of an institution.

"Parents are not just willing to say that my kid is an extremely good student and take what they get in financial aid," said Lynn Caldwell, director of counseling at the Highland Park Independent School District in Dallas and a former member of the College Board's committee studying financial aid issues. "It's a consumer-conscious market."

Nearly 60 percent of all full-time college students receive some type of aid, according to a federal Education Department survey in 1990, the last available.

That figure could grow by 2 percentage points when the department's new survey is released later this year, college aid officials say, given higher college costs and dwindling aid.

To insure that all needy students receive the aid they needed and to curb bartering, the Ivy League and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have, for decades, met to compare their aid awards to the same student.

The Justice Department called that anti-competitive and had the practice halted in 1992. But last year MIT won the right to compare, on a limited basis, financial data with other institutions in what financial aid officials said would help cool the wheeling and dealing that occurs among all universities.

But still, the competition has heated up for top students among colleges in the second- and third-tier ranks. Indeed, as families demand more aid or push for more scholarships over loans, some applicants and their parents do not think twice about faxing competing offers.

German youths atone for elders' sins in project

By David Gonzalez
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Rose Welsch slowly pushed her family photos across the tiny dinner table, each one accompanied by a sigh, then silence. A distinguished-looking brother, elegant relatives at a spa, a child stuck in time with a frilly dress and faint grin. Each square offered faded proof that her family knew happiness before they knew Nazi Germany.

"This is my brother's wife," she said, adding another face to the table-top gallery. "Killed. Here are more. Not enough. Killed."

She clasped her hands to her chest and whispered.

"And I'm living."

Such a life. But each week, the pain, guilt and loneliness of survival are salved by an unlikely visitor — Christian Kirchner, a young German who is spending 18 months working with Project Ezra among the Lower East Side's elderly Jewish poor, providing household help and companionship.

He belongs to a church-sponsored network of volunteers who devote part of their youth to atoning for the crimes of their elders, first helping rebuild towns destroyed by the Nazis and later restoring lives through social service in Europe, Israel and the United States. A handful, like Kirchner, are assigned to Jewish groups in this country, where they often encounter people whose lives were unbearably altered by the Holocaust.

"It is important for young Germans to build peace connections and not forget what happened," said Kirchner, a 21-year-old volunteer with the Action Reconciliation Service for Peace, which is based in Berlin. "You know what's happening now in Germany with skinheads and neo-Nazis. It is important to know what happened in the past so it never comes again."

That her visitor comes to her each week matters more to Mrs. Welsch than where he comes from.

"He's a good boy, and I can forget a little about my troubles," she said one recent morning. "Somebody should come see me once or twice a week so I can come alive."

Action Reconciliation was founded in 1958 by a consortium of German Protestant churches whose clergy decided to send volunteers to work in those countries that had suffered at the hands of the Nazis. After working at projects in Europe and Israel, they expanded into the United States in 1968, sending volunteers to work in community projects, youth centers, with church-based service groups and in peace education.

Many of the male volunteers, who serve 18-month stints, are conscientious objectors who substitute their work for the military service that is required of them in Germany.

Eleven years ago a representative of the group set out to find a Jewish agency for their volunteers, wanting to bring their healing mission to other Holocaust survivors. It was not an easy task.

"It was hard to find Jewish programs where German volunteers could work," said Andrea Koch, a program coordinator for the group in Berlin. "There was a lot of distrust."

But the idea appealed to Misha Avramoff, a co-founder of Project Ezra, which provides elderly Jews of the Lower East Side with social and religious activities, home visits and financial and food assistance. He admitted that some of his members were initially wary, but he persuaded them to take a leap of faith past painful memories.

"We are mesmerized by history," he said. "I'd like to see ourselves free of that. Our history is one that sometimes paralyzes us because we keep thinking of that that was and we never think of that that could be."

Judge gives man 'Scarlet Letter' license plate

NEW YORK (AP) — A man with six drunken-driving convictions must hang a modern version of a scarlet letter on his license plate: a sign that reads "CONVICTED DWI."

The punishment imposed by Nassau County Judge Marc Mogil on Roy Letterlough of Hempstead was unanimously affirmed by a panel of judges from the state Appellate Division in a decision made public this week.

"I would never impose this on a first offender," Mogil said Thursday. "But this is a 56-year-old man and after six times, he's just about spit in the eye of society. So I had to take some measure that protects innocent people that walk along the street."

But Barbara Bernstein, who heads the Long Island Civil Liberties Union, called the sentence "a scarlet letter."

"This is a violation of his constitutional right to free speech because it compels him to say something that he doesn't believe in," she said. "If they want to suspend his license and get him off the road, fine. Drunk driving is a very serious offense. But I don't condone violating rights as part of the punishment."

Letterlough was sentenced in 1992 to five years' probation, a $500 fine and treatment after his sixth arrest for drunken driving.

His license was revoked, and Mogil ordered him to attach the sign to his license plate if his license was restored before the probation was up.

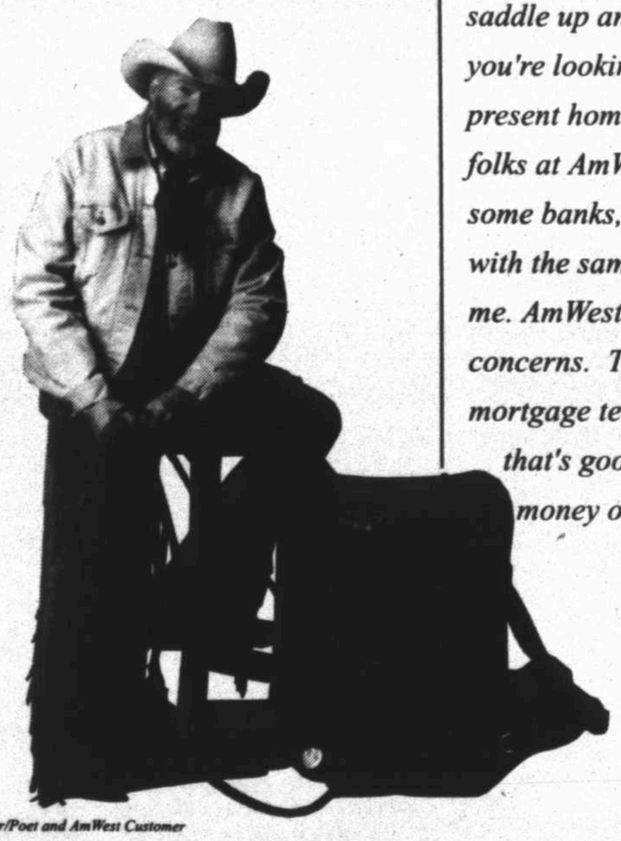

When he got his license back after two years, he challenged the judge's order to hang the sign, arguing that it was embarrassing and a violation of his rights. But the higher court upheld the unusual punishment.

Letterlough's phone was out of service Thursday.

Deputies arrest ex-Texas legislator for marijuana

EL PASO (AP) — Sheriff's deputies arrested former state legislator Tati Santiesteban Friday after allegedly finding a bag of marijuana in his briefcase while he was visiting an El Paso County Jail inmate.

Sheriff Leo Samaniego said Santiesteban — who spent 23 years in the Legislature — was arrested Friday afternoon during a routine search. Santiesteban, now a lawyer, was believed to be visiting a client, the sheriff said.

"He was asked to open his briefcase, and the guard saw a baggie of marijuana," Samaniego said.

Mexican collects muscle cars in Dallas

By Terry Box
Associated Press

DALLAS — Somewhere in Japan or Mexico or Europe, someone is daydreaming about the rumble and snort of a 1965 Corvette.

Juan Gonzalez, a millionaire Mexican businessman, and Gary Van Dam, his Southern California golfing buddy, are sure of it.

Now all they have to do is get the dreamers and their checkbooks to a 10,000-square-foot orange-brick warehouse near downtown Dallas. There, they have assembled a prime collection of 30 or so muscle cars and street rods, and are looking to buy more for Gonzalez's hobby-business, Car Amigo.

"Ten years ago, on the international market, it was the Ferrari everyone wanted," said Gonzalez, head of Mission Foods Inc., a subsidiary of his family's multinational Gruma Co., the world's largest producer of corn flour. "In the next couple of years, it will be muscle cars.

"And I see the international market just exploding," he said.

Although some observers of the collector car business doubt that the market will be as strong as Gonzalez anticipates, they agree that his approach to the business is somewhat unusual.

There are thousands of collector-dealers in the United States, but most sell only true antiques — cars 25 years old or more that are restored to their original condition — and deal primarily with domestic customers. Few have muscle cars, street rods and other highly customized cars. And fewer still plan to offer that eclectic collection to mostly international buyers.

Muscle cars, for instance, are factory-built American hot rods. Most were relatively small cars with big engines and emphasized acceleration over everything else.

Street rods are basically pre-1948 cars that usually have modern V8 engines and updated chasses and running gear but retain at least some of the cars' original exterior lines.

Despite others' skepticism about the market for these cars, Gonzalez sees encouraging signs.

Domestic demand for collector cars remains fairly soft, leaving the international market as the logical place to go, he said. And Gonzalez, who friends say spends more time in the air traveling than he does on the ground, said the economies of recession-stricken Japan and Europe are stirring.

In addition, many muscle cars were only mildly affected by the vicious swings in the collector car market during the 1980s. Consequently, he said, some potential buyers may consider muscle cars a more stable investment than other types of collector cars.

Gonzalez, who has homes in Mexico City and Monterrey and is moving into a home in North Dallas next month, said he bought the first two of his cars nine years ago. Most of the rest have been purchased in the last couple of years.

"I waited (on considering selling any cars) because I knew the economy wasn't ready," he said. "I concentrated on putting the collection together."

If he can find more warehouse space, he said, he wants to double the size of his collection in the next couple of years. But he seems largely unconcerned about whether the cars sell, saying he intends to keep a collection for himself no matter what happens.

"I have no limits," said Gonzalez, 37, whose family owns one of the larger banks in Mexico, Banco del Norte. "Every time I go to an auction, I buy one and usually two (cars). Thank God I have the time, I have the money. I just have to find the cars."

Gonzalez said he has been fascinated with American high-performance cars since a boy. In his 20s, he was interested in European cars. While getting his master's degree in business at San Diego State University, Gonzalez had a couple of BMWs and a rare, highly modified Porsche that he said he later sold to singer Rod Stewart.

Today, when he arrives in Dallas on business, he often goes directly to his warehouse to pick out a car for a drive.

Everything in his collection is American. It includes a restored 1957 Chevrolet convertible, a wild and much-modified 1955 Chevrolet Nomad, several rare Shelby Mustangs and a 1941 Willys street rod. He also has a red 1965 Corvette — with the coveted fuel-injected engine — that Mr. Van Dam says has 8,000 original miles on the odometer.

"I think he just likes the thunder of the cars," Van Dam said.

Gonzalez agreed, saying he is driven more by a love for cars than by a lust for profit.

"I always called all my cars 'car amigo,' and that's why I named the company that," he said.

Nevertheless, both he and Van Dam are keenly aware of what they say is the potential value of the cars. Gonzalez estimated that the collection is worth at least $2 million. Van Dam said the cars are worth an average of about $50,000 each, which would make the collection's value roughly $1.5 million.

Knowledgeable car people who have viewed Gonzalez's collection rate it highly, though they said it is difficult to put a value on it. His 1957 Chevy convertible, for example, could fetch $20,000 to $45,000, several experts said.

He and Van Dam have compiled a list of international collector car associations and clubs, and plan to send them articles and other information about Car Amigo.

"If things go well, we can even put the show on the road — pack up a few cars and take them there," Van Dam said.

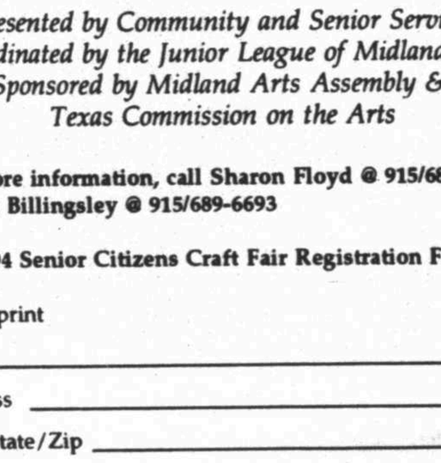

At the warehouse, potential buyers will find a spacious office whose white walls are thick with car photos and memorabilia. Out on the floor, clusters of highly polished cars — street rods on one end, Mustangs in the middle, Chrysler and Chevy products on other rows — fill the seemingly dust-free, well-lighted warehouse.

"When he (Gonzalez) called me, I thought I would come down, get the cars in shape and be back on the beach in L.A. in a month or so," said Van Dam, 37. "That was nine months ago."

Both think that the domestic market for collector cars will stay soft for a while.

This is not a particularly good time to jump into the business, said James T. Lenzke, an editor at Old Cars weekly and Old Cars Price Guide.

"It's a strange time," Lenzke said. "We're seeing increased activity in the buying and selling of cars, but we're seeing it because values have dropped from the astronomical level of a few years ago."

Children's imaginations can run wild with 'Phony Pony'

By Mike Copeland
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO — Children typically love swings and horses, be they real, the stick variety or those that bob up and down on merry-go-rounds.

Mac McCullough figures he's lassoed the best of both with his "Phony Pony," a swing made of old tires that looks like a black bronc.

Each horse comes with stirrups, a saddle, cute little pointed ears, a mane and tail made of nylon and eyes the size of washers — because they are.

Hang him — or her — from a tree with a stout rope and step aside as youngsters take turns riding off into the sunset.

"I've sold more than 500 since I started in 1990," said McCullough, 54, a Fort Worth native.

McCullough and his stepson, Scott Smith, make Phony Ponies at his home. They can polish one off in about three hours.

Nearby, a finished Phony Pony beckons from the limb of a pecan tree.

Usually, Derek Smith, 3, needs no prodding to put a steed through its paces. But this day there's a stranger on the premises with a notebook in his hand, and Derek's just not in the mood.

With some coaxing from mom, Robin Smith, Derek climbs aboard "Clipper," as dad and McCullough smile at the handsome figure he cuts in the saddle.

"He's our tester," said Scott. "He really gives them a workout."

The notion for Phony Pony struck McCullough one day in Ringold, Okla., as he examined a primitive version hanging in a tree.

He refined it, temporarily named it the "Ringold Rider," and sold enough to buy several suits for the volunteer fire department there.

McCullough, a disabled Vietnam vet, moved on — to Fort Payne, Ala.; Chattanooga, Tenn., Dallas, Fort Worth and now Waco — and continued to sell his Phony Ponies, most of them for $55 apiece.

"In Fort Worth, I sold 66 one week," he said. "I worked with a distributor who could move them as fast as I could make them."

They were popular with day-care centers there, as they are here.

McCullough said he's sold at least 120 horses since he moved to Waco eight months ago. Among the buyers was a group of visiting Japanese businessmen who spotted a corral full of galloping whitewalls at 17th Street and Lyle Avenue.

"That used to be my showcase area," said McCullough, adding, "they bought the seven I had on display and ordered 10 more."

Aimee Farr, who oversees Clean McLennan County, a county-based litter prevention and recycling program, said she, too, was struck by the sight of the black, horse-like swings.

"They really are neat," said Farr. "I stopped and gave him my card."

Farr said McCullough "isn't going to put a dent in the number of tires needing to be disposed of," but added that Phony Ponies "is a creative strategy in the recycling process that doesn't require the expenditure of energy — and that's the best use."

One tire makes one bronc.

McCullough cleans the rubber with Ajax and a scrub brush, marks patterns with a red pen and cuts them out with a jigsaw. He uses 5/16-inch carriage bolts topped with washers to hold the "horse" together.

Nylon twist rope makes a mean mane and tail; and 3/8-inch polyester rope works best for hanging.

The hanging rope attaches to the horse's head and tail, and McCullough uses a "separater bar" made of hickory or pecan wood to prevent the rope from tangling or wrapping around the rider's head.

"We put the wood in the microwave to dry it out, peel off the bark and write the name of the horse," he said. "Each swing has its own name."

Hedgehogs become 'hot' pet as sales soar

By Amy Walton
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO — What's black and white, spiny all over, a sucker for dry cat food and becoming the pet of choice for animal lovers with a penchant for something different?

Hedgehogs. That's right, hedgehogs, which resemble miniature porcupines, have joined the ranks of Vietnamese pot-bellied pigs and flightless birds in taking the exotic pet scene by storm.

They're selling like hot cakes to people who want to breed them for a quick buck, as well as to families who want a conversation piece in the form of a prickly, softball-sized, nocturnal insectivore with an attitude.

"They're really cute and they're definitely something different," said Linda LaFrentz, a hedgehog breeder in Levi in McLennan County. "Each one of them is unique, and they have their own personalities."

LaFrentz has 21 hedgehogs, most of which are the "salt-and-pepper" variety, which means they have black and white quills. She bought the first pair, "Flo" and "Pop," in November and has since bought more and traded some of their offspring for different bloodlines.

Anyone looking to buy a hedgehog can find breeders listed in the backs of exotic animal magazines or in the classified sections of newspapers, breeders said.

"I haven't sold any yet because I'm trying to build up my breeder stock," said LaFrentz, 51. "I want to raise them and eventually sell them."

LaFrentz's hedgehogs are kept in "the critter house," a building outside her home where she used to raise exotic birds. Inside the converted aviary, the hedgehogs live in pet carriers lined with wood chips and equipped with pieces of plastic pipe where they sleep during the day.

"They like a place to hide. At night is when they come out and play," she said.

Hedgehogs, which are native to northern Europe and Asia, New Zealand and parts of Africa, are about 9 inches long when fully grown. They have short ears and legs, a short tail and a long, pointed nose.

When they are afraid, they tuck in their head and feet and roll themselves into a spiny ball.

"The older ones can get a little bit huffy," LaFrentz said. "I have one mama that will cross her quills and even jump at you and try to stick you. But, generally, they are pretty good natured if you spend time with them."

For a while, the price of a pair of these critters soared to $2,500 or $3,000, LaFrentz said. But now that they are more common, the price of a pair has dropped to around $500, she said.

"Most people buy them in pairs because, right now, it's a breeders' market," said Debbie Wood, a breeder in El Campo in Wharton County who has about 40 pairs of hedgehogs. "It's been a real money-maker for us."

Hedgehogs are old enough to breed at about three and a half months, and their gestation period is only about 35 days, she said. Most females will have four litters a year with an average of four "pups" a litter.

"When they're born, they are about the size of the end of your thumb, and they look kind of like a cocklebur," Wood said. "They don't really get the quills on their backs until about an hour or so after they're born."

Wood also raises Rheas, large, flightless birds that resemble ostriches. She said many hedgehog breeders also raise large birds or other exotics.

Hedgehogs aren't very compatible, however, with household pets like dogs and cats, she said.

"They don't get along with other animals, especially cats, because they just get scared and roll up into a ball," Wood said. "The cat likes to paw at them and roll them around, but that doesn't do a lot for the hedgehog."

But by themselves, they make great pets, she said. They are easy to take car of and have few diseases.

Hedgehogs can be kept in small cages or aquariums inside, and most eat regular dry catfood, she said.

Wood expects that once the price of hedgehogs stabilizes, they will become common in pet stores.

"It's hard to have most exotic animals in an apartment, but for a hedgehog, that's fine," she said. "It's great because they're nocturnal, so when you come home from work they're ready to play.

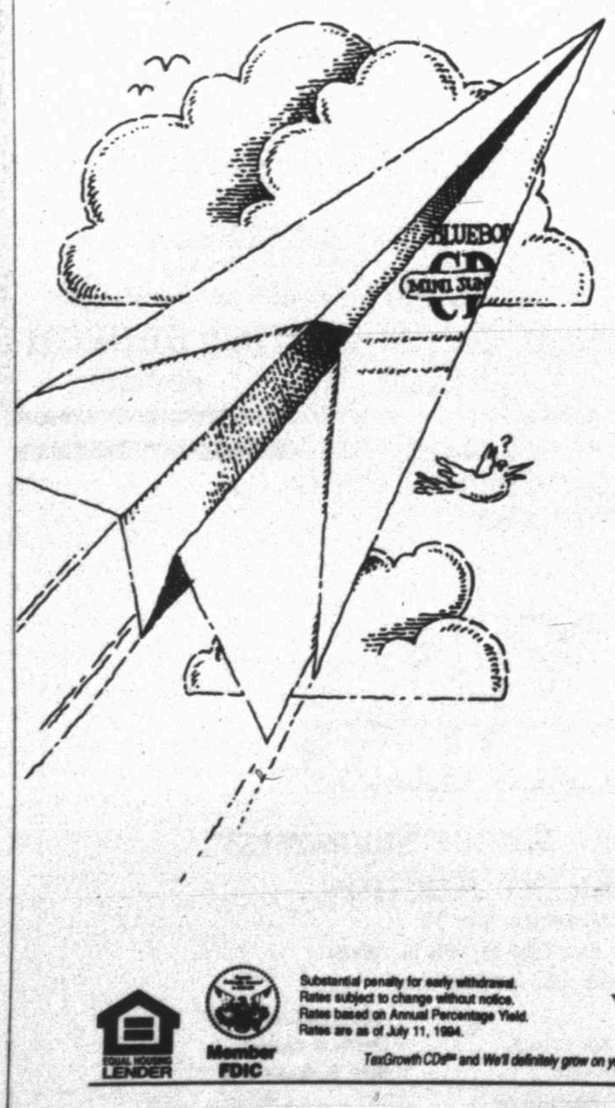

"They'll run around on your shoulder and crawl up your sleeve. When they get scared, they curl up and all you have is this little ball of quills," she said. "And when they first open up, all you see is these little black eyes and this little nose wiggling. The more you're around them, the cuter they get."

Tour update

FUTUROSCOPE, France — Jan Svorada of Slovakia won the seventh stage of the Tour de France in a sprint finish Saturday and Belgium's Johan Museeuw regained the overall lead.

Djamolidine Abdoujaparov of Uzbekistan and Olaf Ludwig of Germany, two other top sprinters, finished second and third, respectively, in the stage. Abdoujaparov won the first stage and Ludwig has been second three times already.

Museeuw and Yates finished in the same time as the rest of the main pack. But the Belgian gained 10 bonus seconds in intermediate sprints along the way to move past Yates by six seconds in the overall standings.

The two favorites, Miguel Indurain and Tony Rominger, stayed 28 seconds apart with an eye on the individual time trial on Monday. Sunday's stage is from Poitiers to Trelissac, 135 miles.

With five riders within five seconds in the overall standings, there was a lot of jockeying around throughout the stage, trying to win bonus seconds in sprints and at the finish. In a bonus sprint, six seconds are awarded to the winner, four for second and two for third.

The stage ended at the Futuroscope theme park just outside Poitiers in west central France. The Tour started there in 1990.

Texas connection pitches Drillers to win

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Tulsa's Drillers make their home in Oklahoma. Saturday night they used two pitchers with Texas connections to beat the Midland Angels 7-4 in a Texas League game.

The Drillers, a Double A farm club of the Texas Rangers, started James Hurst, a left-hander who played with Rangers earlier this year. They closed with side-arming slider/slurve baller Mark Brandenburg, who hales from Humble, Texas, and had two standout years at Texas Tech in 1991 and '92.

"It's nice getting to see some of the places you used to watch games," said Brandenburg, who got his third save by striking out five batters in the last two innings at Christensen Stadium. "I had a coach (Frankie Anderson) come up from Tech to watch today."

Hurst made the Rangers' squad out of spring training and spent a month in Arlington in April where he was a long reliever. He ended up in Triple A Oklahoma City where he said he struggled.

Saturday he gave up only one earned run in seven innings.

"They (the Rangers) said they didn't think I was getting the help I needed, and since I worked well with (Driller pitching coach) Jackson Todd before, they sent me back here to work with him," Hurst said.

Brandenburg made all-american in '91 at Tech and was on the all-Southwest Conference team both seasons with the Red Raiders. He went 22-10 the two years.

His slider fooled the Angels, who have lost five of their last seven games, enough to hold them to a run on two hits in the last two innings.

"Actually I've been a (long reliever)

Brazil unleases Branco on Dutch

By Raf Casert
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Anybody could figure Romario and Bebeto would do it for Brazil. Who would expect a slow old warhorse like Branco to unleash the samba celebrations?

In a World Cup classic that produced all five goals in the second half, Brazil beat the Netherlands 3-2 Saturday to keep the hopes of a soccer-made nation alive for a record fourth title and a first championship since 1970.

Veteran defender Branco broke a 2-2 tie in the 81st minute with a searing 28-yard free kick that went through the wall, split two other players and grazed the inside post before giving Brazil the final lead.

"It was with the help of all players and with the help from above," Branco said.

"It's terrible," said Dutch midfielder Rob Witschge. "It's one of the saddest things in my career."

The victory sends Brazil into the semifinals on Wednesday against Romania or Sweden. The Netherlands, which rallied gallantly until the finish, heads home, unable to improve on runner-up finishes in 1974 and 1978.

After a plodding first half in which both teams displayed too much respect for each other and too few skills, Brazil came alive with lightning goals from Romario in the 52nd minute and Bebeto in the 63rd, the last on a disputed offside call.

Within a minute, Dennis Bergkamp brought the Dutch within a goal. Aron Winter tied it on a header from a corner kick in the 77th minute, setting the stage for Branco.

"I proved I can be part of the first team," said Branco, who gained a spot in the starting lineup because of the suspension of defender Leonardo.

With the Dutch still dazed, Bebeto capitalized on the confusion in the defense to elude Jan Wouters, then dance around de Goey and walk the ball into the goal

New generation meets Clemente

■ City of Pittsburgh uses All-Star Game as tool to introduce baseball great Roberto Clemento to new generation.

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — Ken Griffey Jr. could hit two home runs, and this All-Star game would not be his. Randy Johnson could strike out all nine batters he faces, and it would not be his.

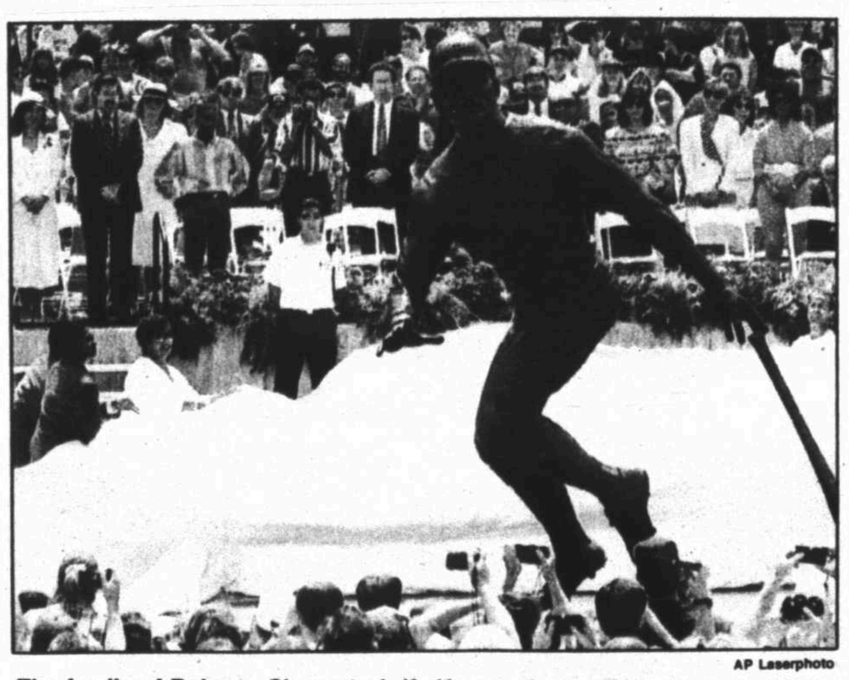

The unseen yet undeniable star of the 1994 All-Star game won't get a hit, won't steal a base, won't get a single at-bat. Instead, he will bring to baseball's showcase a majestic and regal presence, an aura that has graced only a chosen few.

The Griffeys, Bagwells and Bondses will not walk beside him in Three Rivers Stadium, where his motivation came not from contract incentives but an intense Latin pride and machismo.

Twenty-one years since his posthumous induction into the Hall of Fame, where he finally achieved the equal footing with the game's greats, Roberto Walker Clemente will again be an All-Star.

On Tuesday, the Pittsburgh Pirates will utilize the stage of baseball's biggest show to introduce a new generation of fans to No. 21 — an athlete who was not only larger than life, but was revealed to be an even bigger man in death.

Maybe it will be only in the mind, but for one star-filled night, Clemente will again nail a runner off first with a frozen-rope throw from the right-field corner, will again contort and crane his neck in a home-plate regimen before unleashing another line drive.

Twelve times during a Pirates career that began in 1955 and ended prematurely in 1972, Clemente made the All-Star game his personal showcase, one he shared with the more popular, more publicized players of his era: Mickey Mantle, Willie Mays, Hank Aaron.

Now, it will be Clemente's game again.

"We wanted to do something to make this All-Star game even more special,

Switzer ready for 'Royal' treatment

■ Barry Switzer tries to shake 'Okie' label as training camp begins for the Dallas Cowboys this week.

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — How could this be?

America's Team, the two-time defending Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys, returning to Austin for training camp beginning July 15 led by, gulp, the former coach of the Oklahoma Sooners?

You mean, the home of the Texas Longhorns has to be home to the once-, maybe still-hated Barry Switzer for the next month?

The Red River rivalry lives. Break out the riot gear. There will be chaos.

But wait. Who is that coming over the Hill Country horizon?

Why it's Darrell Royal, a former standout player for the Sooners and, as any Longhorn will tell you, the greatest coach in Texas history. He did win three national championships after all, just like Switzer at OU.

Surely Royal can make peace,

Forget posts upset of Russian at Swiss

Associated Press

■ Tennis Roundup

GSTAAD, Switzerland — Guy Forget of France upset sixth-seeded Yevgeny Kafelnikov of Russia 7-5, 6-3 Saturday to grab a spot in the final of the Swiss Open tennis tournament.

Top-seeded Sergi Bruguera also breezed through his semifinal match, stopping Andrea Gaudenzi of Italy 6-4, 6-1 to reach his third consecutive title match in this Alpine resort.

For the 29-year-old Forget, the semifinal win reinforced his comeback from a knee surgery which had sidelined him for almost a year and saw his ranking plummet to 1,130 from as high as No. 4 in the world.

Forget will not play Davis Cup for France next week. He said that medically his knee is still not ready for the stress of Davis Cup competition on hard courts.

Swedish Open

BASTAD, Sweden — Title defending Austrian Horst Skoff and unseeded German Bernd Karbacher advanced to the final of the Swedish Open clay court tournament Saturday.

The sixth-seeded Skoff defeated unseeded Frenchman Jean-Philippe Fleurian 1-6, 6-4, 7-5, performing some of the best tennis played during this year's Swedish Open.

In the other semifinal, Karbacher downed the 1991 Bastad titlist Richard Fromberg of Australia 6-2, 3-6, 7-6 (7-5).

The Swedish Open has a total prize sum of $313,750.

Mercedes-Benz Trophy

PALERMO, Sicily — Second-seeded Irina Spirlea of Romania defeated Austria's Sandra Dopfer 7-5, 6-4 Saturday to reach the final of the Mercedes-Benz Trophy women's clay court tennis tournament.

Spirlea battled back with strong net play after being down in both sets to the Austrian, who led 3-0 in the first set and 4-3 in the second.

Spirlea will face the winner of the late Saturday match between top-seeded Brenda Schultz of the Netherlands and the fourth-seeded Sandra Cecchini of Italy.

Hall of Fame

NEWPORT, R.I. — Sixth-seeded Byron Black of Zimbabwe, the only seed remaining in the Hall of Fame Tennis Championships, lost in the semifinals to Australian Todd Woodbridge on Saturday.

Woodbridge won 4-6, 6-4, 7-6 (7-1) at the Newport Casino, site of the International Tennis Hall of Fame. Black's loss means that for the fifth time in the past six years, an unseeded player will win the tournament.

Woodbridge will face David Wheaton, a 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 winner over Britain's Mark Petchey, in today's final of the only grasscourt tournament in the United States.

In the first semifinal, Wheaton, formerly ranked in the top 15 in the world, rallied from a one-set deficit to advance.

Wheaton trailed 3-1 in the third set after his serve was broken in the fourth game, but won the next four games, with two breaks of Petchey's serve, for a 5-3 lead.

Petchey saved three match points in the ninth game to hold serve, but Wheaton served out the match.

Rangers pummel Tigers on 18 hits, 10-4

AP Laserphoto

Texas Rangers outfielder Rusty Greer makes a leaping catch for an out in the Rangers' 10-4 win over Detroit Saturday at Tigers Stadium.

Associated Press

DETROIT — Juan Gonzalez and Ivan Rodriguez homered, leading Kenny Rogers and the Texas Rangers over the Detroit Tigers 10-4.

Rogers (10-4) pitched three-hit ball for seven innings. He has worked at least seven innings in 10 of his last 11 starts and leads the Rangers with four complete games.

The Rangers, who had 18 hits, jumped on John Doherty (6-7) for three runs on five hits in the first. By the time Doherty left, after 5 2-3 innings, the Rangers had tagged him for eight runs, 14 hits and two walks.

Travis Fryman hit a two-run homer in the Detroit first, his 13th, and Juan Samuel hit his fourth homer in the seventh.

The rest was all Texas and the Rangers broke it open with a four-run sixth.

Jose Canseco, Will Clark and Manuel Lee drove in runs in the first. Rodriguez hit his 10th homer, a two-run shot, in the fourth.

Gonzalez connected for a three-run homer, his 13th, in the sixth. Storm Davis relieved, yielding a double to Dean Palmer and an RBI single to Randy Greer for a 9-2 lead.

Mariners 7, Red Sox 4

BOSTON — Edgar Martinez hit two solo home runs and Tino Martinez hit a three-run shot, giving Seattle a win over Boston and handing Chris Bosio his first road win of the year.

Seattle shortstop Alex Rodriguez, the top choice in the 1993 draft, got his first major-league hit and stolen base in the fourth.

■ AL Roundup

He had two singles in four at-bats and also reached on third baseman Scott Cooper's error.

Rodriguez, who made his major-league debut Friday night, is the youngest player to appear in the majors this season. He will be 19 on July 27.

Bosio (4-10) is 3-2 with a 2.84 ERA at home, but was 0-8 on the road before struggling to beat Boston. He barely made it through the fifth inning, allowing four runs on nine hits before Milt Hill took over in the sixth.

Blue Jays 9, Royals 4

TORONTO — Pat Hentgen pitched seven effective innings and Toronto stopped its seven-game home losing streak, beating Kansas City.

Hentgen (11-5) won his fifth straight decision, giving up two runs on six hits. He struck out nine and improved to 3-0 against the Royals this season.

Ed Sprague's three-run homer off the foul pole in left field gave the Blue Jays a 4-1 lead in the fourth. He hit his eighth home run after errors by second baseman Terry Shumpert and left fielder Vince Coleman.

The Blue Jays were helped out by two more errors in the fifth, adding five runs for a 9-1 lead.

Randy Knorr and Devon White opened the inning with singles and Roberto Alomar followed with a bunt single that pitcher Bob Milacki threw wildly to first, allowing Knorr to score.

Angels 10, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Spike Owen drove in three runs, including an RBI single during a five-run fifth inning that sent California over New York.

Matt Nokes homered twice for the Yankees. Pat Kelly also connected for New York, which led 3-0 after four innings.

Owen hit an RBI single in the fifth and scored the tying run on Chili Davis' double. Owen had a two-run single during a three-run seventh that made it 8-3.

Phil Leftwich (4-7), who had lost his last three decisions, allowed three runs and four hits in seven innings. He struck out seven.

Orioles 8, Athletics 7

BALTIMORE — Jeffrey Hammonds homered leading off the ninth inning as Baltimore rallied from a five-run deficit to beat Oakland.

Rafael Palmeiro had three hits, scored twice and drove in a run for the Orioles, who have won six of seven to move within one-half game of the New York Yankees in the AL East.

Alan Mills (3-3) struck out the side in the ninth for the win.

Oakland's Ruben Sierra went 4-for-5 with a homer and three RBIs. Sierra, who had been mired in a 2-for-21 slump, doubled twice, scored three runs and stole a base. It was the 19th four-hit game of his career, the second this season.

Mike Bordick also homered for the A's, who have lost two straight, after winning 13 of 14.

Indians 4, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Dennis Martinez earned his seventh straight victory and Eddie Murray hit a two-run homer, lifting Cleveland past Minnesota.

Martinez (8-4) retired the Twins in order only once in his seven innings, but still extended his streak of starts without a loss to 11, dating to May 11. He allowed six hits in seven innings, struck out seven and walked two.

Jeff Russell pitched the ninth and got his first save for Cleveland and 13th overall. Russell, who had 12 saves with Boston, was acquired on July 1 in a trade that sent pitchers Chris Nabholz and Steve Farr to the Red Sox.

Kirby Puckett drove in a pair of runs for the Twins, moving into a tie with Jeff Bagwell of Houston for the major-league lead with 81 RBIs.

White Sox 11, Brewers 7

MILWAUKEE — Frank Thomas hit his 32nd homer and drove in five runs Saturday night, leading Chicago to its fifth straight win.

Thomas went 3-for-5 with two doubles for the White Sox, who remained in a virtual tie with the Cleveland Indians atop the AL Central. Chicago, which has won 17 of its last 21, trails Cleveland by percentage points.

Norberto Martin and Tim Raines each had three hits for the White Sox.

Greg Vaughn drove in three runs for the Brewers, who have lost five of their last six.

Scott Sanderson (8-2) allowed eight hits and six runs in six innings.

The White Sox roughed up Ricky Bones (7-7), Milwaukee's lone All-Star representative, for 11 hits and eight runs in six innings.

Pudge grows into All-Star status

By T.R. Sullivan and Maria Durand
N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON — Ivan "Pudge" Rodriguez is not a player who draws neutral opinions. At the tender age of 22, about to play in his third All-Star Game, Rodriguez seems to be either loved or loathed by those who watch him play.

It almost seems that the Texas Rangers have two catchers named Rodriguez, both occupying the same immensely talented body.

In a sport that frowns on self-expression, Rodriguez is an unrepentant showman who jokes with opponents, clowns with umpires and loves to show off his arm with hopeless pickoff attempts to first base. He would fit in well with the Brazilian World Cup team.

"The game of baseball is a game," Rodriguez said. "Yeah, they are paying you to play. That's fine, but you still have to take it as a game. You have to play ball as if you were in your back yard with little sticks, with balls, with great joy. I take this like a game because I enjoy it."

Proud father Jose Rodriguez will be in Pittsburgh on Tuesday watching his third consecutive All-Star Game.

His son is in his fourth season with the Rangers, but sometimes it's still hard for Jose Rodriguez to believe that Ivan Rodriguez belongs on the same field as the best baseball players in the world.

"It is very emotional," Jose said. "Sometimes me and my other son sit in front of the television and watch him play, and we can't believe it's him. It's like a dream or a fantasy. He does his work and gives his best effort and he gives us pleasure, and that is what takes him to the All-Star Game — his everyday work."

Jose will get so emotional that he might even shed a tear when the American League team takes the field with his son starting at catcher.

"He cried at the All-Star Game last year," Ivan Rodriguez said. "When I retire, I want to thank my dad for everything he did to get me to the big leagues. My dad never failed me. He was my first coach in Little League. He was there at every game."

Jose Rodriguez knows Pudge better than anybody, having watched him grow up from a third baseman in Little League in the small Puerto Rican town of Vega Baja to one of the best catchers in baseball.

The elder Rodriguez also knows the struggles and tribulations that Pudge has gone through, signing with the Rangers at the age of 16, trying to adapt to a new country, a new culture and a new language.

He knows his son's considerable talents as well as his faults. He knows that although many admire Pudge's talents, others are turned off by other facets of his personality.

There is the Ivan Rodriguez who has won two Gold Gloves and shuts down opposing running games with his peerless throwing arm.

There also is the Rodriguez who has trouble blocking balls in the dirt and calling the correct pitches.

There is the Rodriguez who has been voted a starter in two All-Star Games, appeared as a reserve in another and, as Rangers general manager Tom Grieve puts it, has "met and gone beyond all the high expectations that everybody had for him."

Canada beats Italy in SuperCup

BERLIN (AP) — J.D. Jackson made a key steal down the stretch and led all scorers with 25 points as Canada slipped past Italy 95-86 Saturday at the SuperCup.

Italy cut Canada's lead to 80-77 with 1:45 left before Jackson's play sealed the game. The former University of British Columbia player swiped a pass, then fed reserve guard Steve Nash for an easy 3-pointer.

Canada (2-0) is now the only unbeaten team at the four-nation tournament which serves as a tuneup for the World Championships Aug. 4-14 in Toronto.

Canada erased a 12-point deficit in the first half with a barrage of 3-pointers. In the second half, the lead switched hands numerous times before Jackson's long-distance bomb put his team ahead for good at 71-70.

"This was important for us to know we can come back like that," said national Coach Ken Shields. "J.D. had a tremendous second half."

Canada faces host Germany in its final game Sunday. The defending European champions bounced back from Friday's loss to Italy to beat Russia 85-72 Saturday.

Canada's offense sputtered while Rick Fox was held in check by being double-teamed. The Boston Celtics player finished with just nine points.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa drove in three runs and Anthony Young won for the first time in eight starts as the Chicago Cubs defeated the Houston Astros 7-3 Saturday.

■ NL Roundup

Young (4-6) gave up one run and three hits in five innings. He left early because of a strained right elbow.

Chuck Crim relieved to start the sixth and Jeff Bagwell led off with his 27th home run. Two outs later, Luis Gonzalez hit a solo homer.

Brian Williams (5-5) gave up six runs on seven hits and four walks in three innings. He also allowed a run to score with a throwing error.

In the first, Jose Hernandez walked, Mark Grace singled and Sosa hit a sacrifice fly.

Mark Parent singled to lead off the second and later scored on Hernandez's bloop single for a 2-0 lead. Grace walked to load the bases and Sosa followed with a two-run single. Derrick May added an RBI single for a 5-0 lead.

Reds 5, Pirates 3

CINCINNATI — Hal Morris drove in a pair of runs and pitcher Jose Rijo doubled and scored the game-winner as Cincinnati extended Pittsburgh's misery at Riverfront Stadium.

The Pirates have lost nine straight at Riverfront since July 2 of last year. They've also dropped four in a row overall and eight of 10.

The Reds have won eight of nine to open a 3½-game lead over Houston in the NL Central and improve to a season-high 18 games over .500 (52-34).

Rijo (8-4) gave up homers to Jay Bell and Dave Clark to account for all of the Pirates' runs. The right-hander allowed seven hits over six innings.

Dodgers 8, Mets 3

LOS ANGELES — Raul Mondesi homered and drove in four runs and Mike Piazza and Henry Rodriguez also hit home runs as Los Angeles beat New York.

Ramon Martinez (8-5) allowed three runs and five hits in 7 1-3 innings. He walked two and struck out eight, helping the first-place Dodgers pad their lead to five games over the Colorado Rockies in the National League West.

Marlins 4, Rockies 2

MIAMI — Pat Rapp lost his no-hit bid when Mike Kingery hit a two-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning — Colorado's only hit — as Florida defeated the Rockies.

Rapp (5-5) got the first two outs in the seventh before walking pinch hitter John Vander Wal. Kingery followed by hitting Rapp's 3-1 pitch over the wall in right for his third homer.

Rapp, who struck out six and walked a club record eight, was removed from the game for John Johnstone, who finished the eighth.

Robb Nen pitched a perfect ninth for his ninth save to complete the combined one-hitter, the first in Marlins' history.

Marvin Freeman (7-2) gave up two runs and seven hits in six innings.

Florida took a 2-0 lead in the fifth. Jeff Conine hit his 14th homer, and Dave Magadan reached on an error by first baseman Andres Galarraga. Kurt Abbott's single moved Magadan to second.

Colorado had a chance to get out the inning on Bret Barberie's grounder to short, but after recording the forceout, second baseman Nelson Liriano dropped the ball while attempting to make the realy throw to first. Rapp followed with an RBI single to make it 2-0.

Florida added a run in the sixth on Magadan's ru-scoring single, and the Marlins made it 4-2 in the seventh on Greg Colbrunn's RBI double.

Giants 3, Phillies 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Steve Scarsone led the attack as San Francisco handed All-Star pitcher Danny Jackson his first road loss of the season.

Scarsone had two hits, scored twice and drove in a run in support of William VanLandingham (4-1). Rod Beck got the final four outs for his 18th save, sending the Phillies to their fifth straight loss, matching their worst run this season.

Jackson (11-3) entered 6-0 with a 3.16 ERA in eight previous road starts. He allowed three runs, two of them earned, on 10 hits over six innings. He struck out eight and walked two, one intentionally.

VanLandingham struck out seven and walked one while allowing two runs on nine hits in six-plus innings.

Braves 5, Cardinals 3

ATLANTA — Fred McGriff's two-run homer made Tom Glavine a 10-game winner before the All-Star break for the fourth straight year as Atlanta downed St. Louis.

Glavine (10-7), gave up eight hits and three runs in eight innings for his third straight win. He struck out seven and walked one.

Greg McMichael struck out the side in the ninth for his 18th save.

Expos 5, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO — Larry Walker hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning and Montreal remained unbeaten against San Diego this season.

Walker's 16th home run broke a 1-1 tie as the Expos improved to 8-0 against the Padres. In the last two years Montreal has won 18 of 20 games against San Diego.

Butch Henry (6-1) held San Diego to one run and six hits in 7 2-3 innings. He has allowed just one earned run in his last two starts covering 14 1-3 innings.

Players union to meet to discuss strike deadline

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Players agree it's coming. They just aren't sure when.

When the executive board of the Major League Baseball Players Association meets Monday in Pittsburgh, union head Donald Fehr will recommend that they don't set a strike date yet.

"There are some people who are angry," he said. "You don't make these decisions when you're angry. You wait until when you're colder."

Management's insistence on a salary cap seems likely to provoke baseball's eighth work stoppage — and fifth strike — since 1972. Fehr finds it difficult to imagine the union allowing the season to conclude without either a new collective bargaining agreement or a walkout aimed at forcing one.

"Three weeks ago, I thought we were going to strike, and I still think we're going to," Baltimore pitcher Mike Mussina said. "We've gotten some points across in the last 18 months ... but it's been a year-and-a-half and it doesn't seem to change much."

Mussina and other player representatives have been conducting strike authorization votes among their clubs in the past week. The authorization will allow the executive board to set a strike date and vote on a strike date. Given past history, approval of the authorization will be overwhelming.

"From our team, we back the union 100 percent," California pitcher Mark Langston said.

Monday's meeting likely will be spent considering what proposals the union wants to make. It's expected players will ask for the threshold for salary arbitration to be lowered again to two years, as it was from 1974 through 1986, when it was raised to three.

"We'll just try to get caught up on the issues and the negotiations," said Tom Foley of the Pittsburgh Pirates. "A proposal to the owners is always in the works. It's a continuous process."

In 1985, the union set a strike date on July 15 — the first day of the All-Star break — and walked out Aug. 6. That strike was settled after two days.

The most-mentioned strike dates this time are Aug. 16 and Sept. 1 — both days following a payday. The union staff doesn't believe it's necessary to set a strike date far in advance of the potential walkout.

"I don't feel at this moment there's a need to strike," Foley said. "That's not something we feel we have to do Monday night. If it does come to that, we'll take whatever action seems appropriate."

Owners insist a salary cap is necessary to allow small-market clubs to compete, a notion the union doesn't believe. Management negotiator Richard Ravitch keeps asking the union to make a counterproposal.

"We like to know what they believe it's going to cost us to play baseball," he said. "How are we going to know that unless they tell us what they want?"

Fehr says the union should have time to make its proposal because owners took 18 months to make theirs. Owners reopened the collective bargaining agreement Dec. 7, 1992, then took until last Jan. 18 to reach a revenue-sharing deal among themselves — one that is contingent on the union agreeing to a salary cap. Ravitch finally made the salary cap proposal to the players June 14.

"The owners have been extremely slow on their end of it, so hopefully we can step forward and help the progress a little," said Chris Donnels of the Houston Astros. "They took an awful long time to give us a proposal that from my reading doesn't seem like they put in that much effort."

Fehr says the atmosphere around these talks reminds him of 1981, which was a test of will rather than a negotiation. Both sides think the other will fold —even if it takes until the middle of the 1995 season.

"Nobody wants a strike," Donnels said. "It's money coming out of our pockets. But we can't wait around. ... We need some kind of leverage so we can bargain with them. There hasn't been much bargaining. If they get the upper hand, they're going to just force us to do whatever they want. Nobody wants a strike, but when it comes down to it, we're ready."

Junior's Circuit dominates NL in Classic

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

PITTSBURGH — Believe it or not, there was a time when the National League used to win the All-Star game.

The NL ruled during the 1960s, when Willie Mays, Hank Aaron and Roberto Clemente were in the outfield. It romped during the 1970s, when Pete Rose, Joe Morgan and Mike Schmidt were in the infield. It rolled into the 1980s, when Steve Carlton, Mario Soto and Bruce Sutter pitched.

Those days, Ken Griffey Sr. and Bobby Bonds still were stars. Seems like a long time ago, huh?

These days, though, there's no doubt: the American League — once the Junior Circuit but now Junior's Circuit — is as dominant as the NL ever was.

"I find there to be a vast difference between the talent in the two leagues," said Andre Dawson, in his second year with Boston after 17 years in the NL.

"I just feel the guys over here in this league are bigger and stronger and you see more emphasis on weight training," he said. "I think guys over here, the big guys, more or less look at themselves as power hitters and do what they need to keep themselves that way."

And, it shows up in the All-Star game.

The AL has won six straight, its longest winning streak ever, and has done it by out-homering the NL 8-3 during that span.

Ken Griffey Jr. and Cal Ripken Jr. have led the way, while Dawson and Will Clark — now both in the AL — are among the few to connect for the NL.

No surprise that it's been no contest the past three years in the home-run derby, held the day before the All-Star game.

Griffey, Juan Gonzalez, Cecil Fielder and Albert Belle combined to beat Barry Bonds, Bobby Bonilla, Mike Piazza and David Justice 21-12 last summer, with Griffey becoming the first player ever to hit the B&O Warehouse beyond right field at Camden Yards in Baltimore.

"From what I've seen, there are a lot of good young superstars in the American League, starting with Ken Griffey, Frank Thomas and Juan Gonzalez, Kenny Lofton and Albert Belle," said Clark, an All-Star in his first year with Texas.

"After going through the league for half a season, it's evident there's a lot of good young talent in this league," he said. "It's sure a good enough league now that it shouldn't be called the Junior Circuit."

That's how the NL mockingly referred to the AL back when it won 19 of 20 All-Star games from 1963 to 1982. In that period, the NL outhomered its counterparts 34-15, although Rose running over Ray Fosse in 1970 symbolized the NL's mastery more than anything.

At that time, the AL had a lot of big, slow sluggers, guys like Harmon Killebrew, Boog Powell and Frank Howard. The NL, meanwhile, already had adapted its game to artificial turf and seemed to have all the fast and flashy stars.

Publicly, the NL used to say those All-Star results meant nothing, that the game was just an exhibition. Privately, the NL believed its annual wins proved it was a better league.

That all has changed, with the AL stars getting better and younger. Last year at Baltimore, the AL brought nine everyday players who were 25 or under; the NL had only two.

"I think it's definitely shifting on the younger player level," said Kansas City pitcher David Cone, an All-Star in both leagues.

"You think of great young players in the National League, you think of Mike Piazza," he said. "But over there, there are half a dozen guys you can name — Ken Griffey, Albert Belle, Kenny Lofton. There seems to be a tremendous influx of young superstars in the American League right now."

Too many for the NL, apparently. Last summer, Kirby Puckett and Roberto Alomar homered as the AL romped 9-3. The previous year, Griffey and Sierra connected in a 13-6 rout.

"The guys are powerhouses over there, and they're tearing us up," Barry Bonds said after the latest loss.

It's been that way in the World Series, too. The AL has won five of the past seven, led by the two-timing Toronto Blue Jays.

"I think there is more power in the American League," said Gregg Jefferies, who played in 1991 with Kansas City. "They have that extra hitter and that gives them more offense."

"I didn't particularly like the American League," he said. "I didn't like that style of pitching because I'm not a home-run hitter. But for guys who like to hit home runs, that's definitely the place to go."

Thomas will start at first base for the AL. He's batting .384 with 31 home runs and 72 RBIs, along with a .516 on-base percentage. Among the AL first basemen who didn't make the All-Star team were Mo Vaughn (.310, 21 home runs), Rafael Palmeiro (.331, 15 home runs) and Fielder (19 home runs).

"Most of the stars in the game are here now," said Baltimore pitcher Sid Fernandez, formerly with the New York Mets. "I'll take Bonds and (Matt) Williams and put them against any two in this league, but there's more overall power here."

Of course, the smaller ballparks and the designated hitter lead AL teams to look for power. Still, read the roster of other hitters who didn't make the AL squad this season — Jose Canseco (24 homers, 74 RBIs), Julio Franco (.312, 75 RBIs) and Carlos Baerga (.304, 59 RBIs).

CLEMENTE: Pirates honor former star

so it was obvious to us that Roberto Clemente had to be a part of this game," said Steve Greenberg, the Pirates' vice president of marketing. "An All-Star game is special, but Roberto Clemente will make this a very special event."

A lifelike Clemente statue whose $300,000 cost was covered by fan donations will be unveiled at Three Rivers' main entrance. His image also appears on T-shirts, glasses, calendars, buttons, pennants and stamps licensed by the Pirates and Clemente's wife and three sons.

There are two newly issued Clemente books, two TV specials in Pittsburgh commemorating Clemente's life and career, and a newly released video. Two restaurant chains are marketing Clemente drinking glasses and holograms.

When the Pirates began licensing Clemente articles, they soon realized how popular he remains more than two decades after his death.

"It is frightening," said Roberto Clemente Jr., who returned to Pittsburgh to run the Baseball Is Great program that is reintroducing baseball to inner-city youth.

And, perhaps, unprecedented. Clemente is more popular today than when he got his 3,000th and last hit on Sept. 30, 1972 — only three months and a day before his death.

The Pirates' right fielder from 1955-72, Clemente won four batting titles, batted .317 for his career, won 12 Gold Glove awards and hit in all 14 World Series games he played for the champion 1960 and 1971 Pirates. A 12-time All-Star and the 1966 National League most valuable player, Clemente died with four others in a Dec. 31, 1972, plane crash while carrying relief supplies to earthquake-stricken Nicaragua.

ANGELS: Midland plays twinbill today

more but right now our pull pen is really short and we have a doubleheader tomorrow so it just happens I closed it out tonight," Brandenburg said. He has won three games in 15 appearances with a 0.64 ERA for Tulsa coming into Saturday. Brandenburg came to Tulsa from Single A Charlotte June 1.

"I didn't feel like I had anything (tonight) so I kept going to the slider," Brandenburg said. "I don't have a fastball really anyway."

The Drillers (9-10) took a 5-0 lead in the fifth inning and never trailed. Midland (8-11) didn't score until the fifth, making it 11 innings in a row without a score after being shut out Friday in the final seven innings in San Antonio.

The Angels rallied for three runs in the fifth to cut Tulsa's lead to 5-3. J.D. Ramirez got his team-leading eighth home run to lead off the frame. Chris's Pritchett and Smith got RBI singles. But Hurst threw two more shutout innings before giving way to Brandenburger.

"I was pretty happy with my fastball but I need to be more consistent with by offspeed pitches and my breaking pitches," Hurst said.

The Angels hurt their cause hitting into three double plays. One came in the first inning with the bases loaded. The other in the seventh with runners on first and third. Both plays ended innings.

Hurst, a fifth-year pro, was signed by the Rangers as a free agent in '91. He said he would rather stay in Tulsa than go back to Oklahoma City before returning to the Rangers.

"They're 31-52 ... I like this environment," Hurst said.

Anything's better than 21 games under .500.

ANGEL DUST: Today is "Turn back the Clock Night" at Christensen Stadium. Admission for the 6 p.m. doubleheader vs. Tulsa is $1. The Angels will wear replica uniforms modeled after the 1948 Midland Indians. Pitchers for Midland are John Fritz (2-2) and Omar Bencomo (1-1). Tulsa counters with Julio Santana (1-0) and Chris Curtis (3-10) ... Infielder Brian Grebeck returns to Midland from Triple A Vancouver after Eddie Perez came off the disabled list in Vancouver ... Luis Raven has not played for the Angels since May 26. But he still was tied for the lead in home runs in the Texas League with 18 coming into Saturday's game ... Pritchett led the league in on base percentage at .424 before Saturday. He also came into Saturday's game fourth in RBIs (56) and third in runs scored (57).

Williams deflects gunshot wound to stay in hunt

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) — Kim Williams' struggle to overcome the effects of a gunshot wound suffered last week haven't kept her from being in contention in the Jamie Farr Toledo LPGA Classic.

Williams shot a 1-over-par 72 Saturday and is one of six golfers at 2-under 140, three shots behind the leaders heading into today's final round.

Williams was shot last Saturday night while entering a drug store in Niles, Ohio. She was forced to withdraw from the Youngstown-Warren Classic last week.

She is playing with a bullet lodged in her rib cage. The bullet remained deeply imbedded in her body after hitting her in the neck and traveling through her shoulder.

"I'm feeling good, but tired," Williams said after Saturday's round. "If it had been hot like yesterday, I don't think I could have played."

Before starting play Saturday, Williams went to the Medical College of Ohio in Toledo for treatment.

"They came up with the grand idea to put an IV in me, they packed me full of fluids," Williams said. "I was tired all day, my legs were tired.

"The swelling where the bullet went in was worse and that's the main reason I went to the hospital," she said.

"I just want to feel like I did before, I'm tired of not feeling well."

After finishing the tournament, Williams plans to play Monday in a qualifier for the U.S. Women's Open in the Detroit area.

Tammie Green, Lauri Merten, Sherri Turner and Meg Mallon are tied for first at 5-under 137.

Green and Merten, who were in a three-way tie for the lead after Friday's play, had rounds of even-par 71 at the 6,319-yard Highland Meadows Golf Club. Turner had a 68 and Mallon, a former Ohio State golfer, shot 70.

Green, of Somerset, Ohio, is bidding for consecutive victories in her home state after winning last weekend's Youngstown-Warren Classic. She bogeyed the 18th hole to fall from sole possession of the lead.

Green hit her approach shot to the 532-yard, par-5 hole into a greenside bunker. She failed to get up and down, missing a 20-foot par putt which would have maintained a one-shot advantage.

"I felt I had great direction with my shots but, because of the wind, I was second-guessing myself," Green said. "I felt I was striking it OK, but the trees make the winds swirl a little more. You've got to respect this golf course."

"The wind was playing havoc with my brain and my swing," said Merten, who won the tournament in 1984, its first year.

"I felt I had a pretty respectable round, but I have to try to be patient," she said. "I was fortunate to hit the right shots at the right time to keep it going."

Mallon was one stroke off the lead after Friday's round and a 5-foot birdie putt on the 390-yard 16th hole allowed her to tie for the lead.

"The game humbles you so quickly it's unbelievable," Mallon said. "I hit it close Friday, but today I had a lot of long putts. It's all a matter of guessing and hitting it at the right time."

Turner, who has struggled in recent years after leading the tour in earnings in 1988, started strongly on Saturday with three birdies on the first five holes. Two of the birdies came on putts of 40 and 45 feet.

"I know those are the two longest putts I ever made back to back in my life," she said.

She also finished strongly with a birdie on the final hole, chipping in from 35 yards after hitting her approach shot over the green and against the grandstand.

McCumber grabs lead after third round

■ Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mark McCumber and Justin Leonard accomplished something Saturday that hadn't been done by anybody in the first two rounds of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic: They put some serious heat on Bob Lohr.

Lohr, who opened the event at Kingsmill Golf Club with a 10-under-par 61 and followed that by setting a 36-hole scoring record for the event, slipped to a 73 on Saturday, capped by a double bogey on the 18th hole.

That knocked Lohr out of the lead and installed McCumber, the 1987 Anheuser-Busch winner, in the front-runner's spot heading into today's final round of the $1.1 million event.

McCumber charged from seven shots off the pace with a 6-under 65, leaving him at 12-under 201 — one shot ahead of Lohr — after three tours of the 6,797-yard layout along the James River.

Leonard, the 1994 NCAA champion from Texas who is appearing in just his third event as a pro, had a 67 and was at 203.

"I'll just have to get it done a different way now," said Lohr, who had enjoyed three-shot leads after 18 and 36 holes.

"If he had shot 5-under today, he would have put himself out of reach," McCumber said of Lohr. "But it's hard to do that. Hey, I can't believe he backed up a 61 with a 68. That's remarkable."

Not everyone in the field was able to take advantage of Lohr's round.

Glen Day, who began the day alone in second, never seemed comfortable in the final pairing. He had a pair of front-nine bogeys on the way to a 1-over 72 that left him at 9-under 208.

And Curtis Strange, the two-time U.S. Open champion who lives at Kingsmill, had a pair of double bogeys in a 76, his worst-ever score in 52 career rounds in the Anheuser-Busch.

McCumber, who has seven career victories but none since 1989, birdied three of his first five holes.

AP Laserphoto

Mark McCumber's 65 gives him the lead at the Busch Classic after three rounds.

Actually, he birdied four of his first five, but there was the matter of a one-stroke penalty on the 437-yard fourth hole, where he hit his approach shot to the front fringe, about 16 feet below the hole. Playing partner Ronnie Black's ball was just behind McCumber's, so he asked McCumber to mark it.

McCumber leaned over, picked up the ball and walked away to allow Black to play his shot. That's when the realization hit McCumber.

"I never marked it," he said. "We called the officials, and sure enough, it was a one-stroke penalty."

McCumber recovered nicely, rolling in the putt to save par.

From there, McCumber had five birdies the rest of the way, offsetting a bogey on the 18th, where his approach was off line and he chipped to 5 feet before missing.

Lohr, a 10-year PGA Tour veteran seeking his second victory, was even on his round when he came to the tee at No. 18, a 435-yard par-4 with a pond running down the left side of the fairway.

Colbert equals tourney record with 64 at Kroger

■ Kroger Seniors

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Jim Colbert strung together five consecutive birdies en route to a 7-under-par 64 to break away from the field after Saturday's second round of the $850,000 Kroger Senior Classic.

His 12-under-130 equaled the tournament record for 36 holes and gave him a six-stroke lead over Ray Floyd, Bob Murphy, Rocky Thompson, DeWitt Weaver and Kermit Zarley, the first-round leader.

"I wish it was over," Colbert said. "But those guys know it's not over and I do, too. I expect to play well tomorrow, but I won't make any excuses. I'll put it all out there and hope it's good enough."

Colbert, who started the day at 5-under, birdied No. 2, then Nos. 7-11, and 13, 15 and 18 to tie the tournament record, which Zarley had matched Friday.

Bogeys on No. 5 and No. 17 kept Colbert from matching the course record of 62 shot by Jack Nicklaus in 1973.

The 6,628-yard Grizzly Course at The Golf Center at Kings Island, formerly known as the Jack Nicklaus Sports Center, was not nearly as friendly as it had been Friday.

Rain before and during the first round had kept the greens soft; on Saturday, they dried out and became less predictable. Only 22 players broke par Saturday, after 29 had done so Friday.

"It's hard out there," Colbert said. "Those greens are really getting crusty. On 18, I couldn't find my ball mark."

Floyd made a charge before cooling off and finishing with his second consecutive 68. At one point, he had picked up five strokes on Colbert, but bogeyed No. 12 and No. 16.

Murphy's charge was even more impressive. He started the day at par-71 and used a pair of eagles on No. 9 and No. 18 to go to 6-under-136. His 65 was the second-best score of the day.

Zarley had a steady round with one birdie and two bogeys.

"My day was boring," Zarley said.

Thompson finished at 1-under-par 70, thanks to an 11-foot eagle putt on 18.

"It hit the right lip of the hole and went more than a full circle — it went 375 degrees," Thompson said. "I've never had a putt do that in my whole life, from any distance."

Thompson believed that Colbert could be caught, despite his six-stroke lead.

Mason's birdie on final hole captures Scottish Open

GLENEAGLES, Scotland (AP) — England's Carl Mason birdied the final hole at the King's Course Saturday for a one-stroke victory in the Scottish Open and a place in next week's British Open at Turnberry.

By overtaking third-round leader Peter Mitchell, Mason earned only his second win in 20 years on the tour, his first coming in February.

The 41-year-old twice chipped in, then made birdie on the final hole to finish with a 15-under-par total of 265. His closing 68 in the wind and rain also earned him a spot in December's Johnnie Walker World Championship in Jamaica.

Mitchell, who led by one stroke when play began, finished with a 70 for a total of 266, one stroke ahead of Sweden's Jesper Parnevik, who also shot a 2-under-par 68.

It took 455 tour events for the popular Mason to become a winner on his home circuit, but he waited only 10 more to win again.

Heat causes Slick track to be sticky

■ Temperatures in the high 90's cause track to crumble for Slick 50 300.

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) — The prognosis for the patient got better as the temperature went down.

In this case, the patient is the 1.058-mile oval at New Hampshire International Speedway. It was in sickly condition as recently as Friday when the temperature reached 96 degrees and the asphalt surface broke up in all four corners as the 3,500-pound Winston Cup stock cars practiced and qualified for today's Slick 50 300.

Track workers toiled late Friday night to repair and clean the track, and more work was scheduled Saturday night.

"The track is in good shape today, but the sun's not out," Jeff Gordon, who will start alongside pole-winner Ernie Irvan in the 42-car lineup, said Saturday. "They sealed it last night and, it helped. Hopefully, they'll be able to do it again tonight and it'll help more.

"But that's just a temporary thing. It just depends on how hot it gets. If the temperature stays down, it'll be fine. Once it goes up, who knows."

Saturday's temperatures were surprisingly mild, remaining in the low 70s under overcast skies. That kept the track cool and allowed the drivers to find considerably more speed than on Friday.

■ Slick 50 300

Bill Elliott, who was far off the pace in Friday's qualifying, led second-day time trials with a lap of 128.005 mph, breaking the track record of 127.197 set Friday by series point leader Irvan.

The forecast for Sunday called for variably cloudy skies and highs in the mid-80s, with a slight chance of afternoon showers and thunderstorms.

"If it stays cloudy, we'll be in great shape," said Brett Bodine, one of the four drivers who were faster Saturday than Irvan's pole speed.

"You've got to consider they lay asphalt at 180 degrees. Yesterday, the track temperature was 165 degrees, so it was soft. And it will get soft again if it gets that hot. But there's a good chance the weather will cooperate."

Whatever the conditions, though, there will be a 300-lap race today.

"The biggest challenge you face is you've got to make your driver understand that the track conditions are the same for everybody," said Steve Hmiel, crew chief for Mark Martin, the former track record-holder who will start 10th.

"You'll hear drivers say, 'Oh, the track is terrible,' but if it is, it's terrible for everybody, so you've still got to get your car to go faster than everybody else's.

"We faced a situation like that at Michigan (last month). The third turn was patched and the patch was breaking up bad, but the show went on and the people who bought tickets went home satisfied they'd seen a great race."

The track broke up last year in several spots during the inaugural Winston Cup race at New Hampshire, which was run in hot conditions. So this situation is nothing new.

"Last year, the track tore up and we were actually going into the third turn on the apron and sliding up into the groove," said Darrell Waltrip, starting 14th Sunday, just six days after firing crew chief Barry Dodson and engine-builder Lou LaRosa.

"If you get in that sand, you're out of here. You're either going to get out of the groove and lose a hundred positions or hit the wall. You know all that and you've got to be mentally prepared to deal with it. It's very frustrating to get shoved out of the groove and have everybody pass you.

"You've got to have some patience. Anytime there's a track problem, like at Michigan, Pocono, Dover and now here, you've got to race the track and not the competition."

Irvan goes into the race with an 88-point lead over Dale Earnhardt, who will start 28th Sunday. Rusty Wallace, who won last year and will start 18th today, is 319 points behind in third.

Unser Jr. swipes bonus from Tracy at Cleveland

■ Cleveland GP

CLEVELAND (AP) — Al Unser Jr. cost Penske teammate Paul Tracy a shot at a $1 million bonus, beating the Canadian by .11 seconds for the pole for today's Budweiser Cleveland Grand Prix.

Unser clinched his third pole of the year Saturday, matching his career total prior to 1994. He has won four races this season, including the Indianapolis 500 and the most recent race in the Indy-car series at Portland.

Overall, Unser and his two teammates, Tracy and Emerson Fittipaldi, have won the last six Indy-car events.

Unser averaged 143.983 mph for his best lap around the 2.37-mile, 10-turn temporary road course at Burke Lakefront Airport, to Tracy's 143.716 mph. Fittipaldi made it a sweep of the first three spots for Marlboro Team Penske, going his fastest lap at 143.387 mph.

Tracy had won the provisional pole Friday and needed to stay on top for a chance at a $1 million bonus offered by International Management Group, the race promoter. The bonus was offered to a driver fulfilling four criteria:

■ Victory at Detroit, which Tracy won last month.

■ Victory at Cleveland.

■ A race record at either race; Tracy set a record at Detroit.

■ A pole at either race; Nigel Mansell won the pole at Detroit.

"The incentive to win the pole is the PPG Cup, the championship," Unser said. "That's a million dollars at the end of the year that I want a piece of. That's what I'm working for. It's a shame Paul had a shot at the million and lost it."

Mansell held the highest qualifying speed at the time, and the top speed over the next few laps went to Unser, then Fittipaldi, then to Unser again.

Midlanders fall in LL tournament

Two Midland teams fell from the District 3 Little League tournament at Bluebird Park Saturday night.

Midland North Central lost an 8-2 loser's bracket contest to Odessa Jim Parker while Midland Eastern fell to Odessa Floyd Gwynn in a narrow 10-9 decision.

Jim Parker's Josh Bishop was the winning pitcher against North Central and Seth Langford hit a homer in that game while Heath Herrington and Ben Farmer had doubles. Jeff Cramer was the losing pitcher.

Floyd Gwynn's Jeff Marns was the winning pitcher against Eastern. Alfonso Moreno had a home run while doubles went to Mike Martinez, Dedrick Clay, Tyrone Broa and Michael Munoz.

Odessa Sherwood and Coahoma were the other two survivors in the loser's bracket Saturday as Sherwood eliminated Big Spring International 3-1 behind the pitching of Louis Lopez and Mike Smith had a triple while Adam Hyatt took the loss in a strong outing.

Coahoma nipped Odessa Salinas 4-3 as Cody Teeler was the winning pitcher. Mario Garcia had a homer.

Winner's bracket action resumes Monday at 7 p.m. at Bluebird as Midland Northern will face Midland Tower. One of those teams will fall into the loser's bracket. Midland Mid City will face El Paso Frank Manning.

Also Monday at 7 p.m., there will be two elimination games between Odessa Jim Parker and Odessa Floyd Gwynn and Coahoma and Odessa Sherwood, both at 7 p.m.

Midland American beats Salinas, 6-3

Midland American stayed alive in the District 3 Junior League tournament Saturday with a 6-3 win over Odessa Salinas behind the pitching of Tony Zarate, who did give up a triple to Brian Porras. Salinas fell from the tournament.

In the other game Saturday, Big Spring eliminated El Paso Frank Manning 2-1 in eight innings. Delvin White drove in Aaron Boadle with the winning run. Blake Nichols' RBI in the sixth inning tied the game at 1-1. Frank Manning fell from the tournament. Manning's Dennis Dukes doubled and tripled in the game and Noah Cardenas made a big catch in the outfield after a collision with a teammate.

On Monday, Midland National will take on Odessa Sherwood at 5:30 p.m. and that winner will face Big Spring at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday at Redfern Field. Also Monday at 8 p.m., Odessa Jim Parker will face Odessa Floyd Gwynn. That winner will play Midland American at 8 p.m. on Tuesday.

Western ignites in Senior tourney

Midland Western used a nine-run fifth inning Saturday to defeat Odessa Floyd Gwynn 15-11 in the District 3 Senior League tournament at Simon Field.

David Smith got the win for Western and also doubled in the game. He was aided by two doubles and a single from Blake Moravick and Jim Valadez had a triple and three RBIs. Floyd Gwynn got two triples and eight RBI from Scotty Perez.

In the other tournament game Saturday, Lamesa defeated El Paso Frank Manning by a 6-4 margin as Jamie Garcia got the win.

The teams are off today, but Midland Eastern will face Odessa Salinas at 8 p.m. Monday at Simon Field while Lamesa will take on Big Spring at 5:30 p.m.

Mid City wins 9-10 District title

ODESSA — Midland Mid City's All-Star team won the 9-10 year-old District 3 Little League championship here Friday by defeating Odessa North Ector, 19-10.

Nathan Spencer and Shane Wright both hit doubles while Robert Friday had two singles. Spencer was the winning pitcher, giving up three walks and eight hits in going the distance.

Tennis world inducts 2 into Hall

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Hana Mandlikova, winner of four Grand Slam singles titles, and Arthur "Bud" Collins Jr., the dean of American tennis television broadcasters, were inducted into the International Tennis Hall of Fame Saturday.

In ceremonies held on Center Court at the Newport Casino prior to the semifinals of the Miller Lite Hall of Fame Championships, Collins and Mandlikova joined 160 players and other individuals honored for their achievements and contributions to tennis since enshrinement began in 1955.

Mandlikova, 32, won singles titles at the 1980 Australian Open, the 1981 French Open, the 1985 U.S. Open and again in Australia in 1987.

Kersee excites home crowd at Festival

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jackie Joyner-Kersee, fresh off a record-setting performance in the 100-meter hurdles, hoped to put on another good show in the high jump Saturday night in the U.S. Olympic Festival.

It didn't work out that way. It took her three tries to clear her first height, 5 feet, 11½ inches, then she missed all three times at 6-1½.

Joyner-Kersee performed as an exhibition before her home fans. If she had officially been in the field, she would have finished second.

"I felt comfortable out there. I felt good jumping but inconsistent on the run," she said.

Joyner-Kersee, who won the hurdles Friday night in a Festival-record time of 12.69 seconds, has been bothered by an ankle problem since early in the year and hasn't been working hard on her approach to the bar.

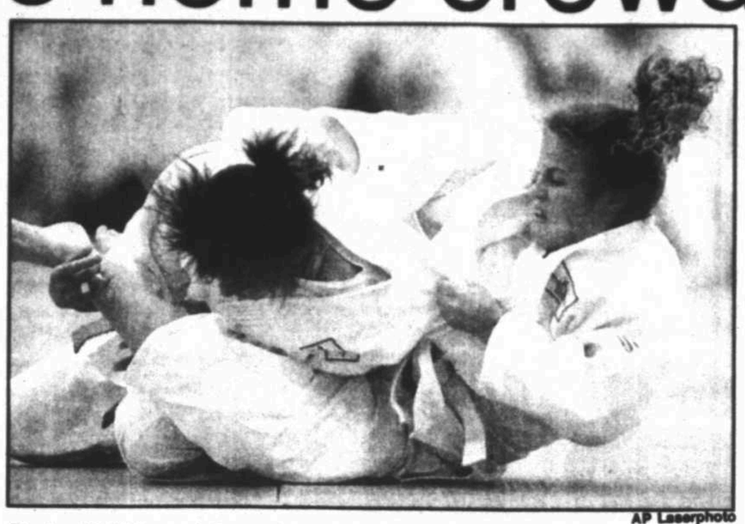

■ Olympic Festival

A native of East St. Louis, Ill., Joyner-Kersee may close out her Festival visit on Sunday by running in the 1,600-meter relay. She's preparing for the Goodwill Games in St. Petersburg, Russia, later this month.

A teen-ager from Georgia made news Saturday in weightlifting, one of 19 sports that were contested on the next-to-last day of the Festival.

Stephanie Bodie, 16, of Savannah, Ga., virtually assured herself of a spot on the U.S. women's team for the World Championships, which would make her the youngest ever to make the team.

Bodie, who competes at 130 pounds, set women's junior American records in the snatch, clean-and-jerk and total. Her clean-and-jerk weight was a senior women's American record.

She lifted 165¼ pounds in the snatch, 214¾ in the clean-and-jerk, and had a total of 380¼.

She missed her first two tries in the clean-and-jerk at 203¾ pounds. She then needed to add weight to the bar and make her last lift to win the gold and all but lock up a spot on the world team.

"I'm on top of the world right now," she said. "After the first two, I was so mad at myself. I was yelling at myself inside. On the last lift, I guess I was focused because I don't remember it.

"Everything I've been working for the past few years rode on that one lift.''

She will not know until after Sunday's final round whether she is on the team, but the only way she won't make it is if two of the 12 females who compete shatter their career-best performances.

Another lifter put his name in the record books. Tim McRae of Daytona Beach, Fla., competing at 167½ pounds, set American records in the snatch (314 pounds) and with his total (699¼).

Saturday's schedule also included the final night of men's gymnastics, where gold medals were determined in each of the six disciplines.

The big winner in gymnastics was Steve McCain of UCLA, who won two gold medals, two silvers and a bronze.

McCain won the vault with a score of 9.55 and finished in a three-way tie for first in the parallel bars with a score of 9.3. He shared that gold with Rob Kieffer of Austin, Texas, and Bill Roth, an assistant coach at Temple.

Another double gold medalist was Mehai Bagiu of Albuquerque, N.M., who won on the high bar and the pommel horse.

Roth, 24, won silver medals in the floor exercise and the vault.

Jeff Lutz of Norman, Okla., the oldest competitor at 25, picked up a gold on the rings and was bronze medalist in the vault and high bar.

Restructuring debate could split NCAA

■ Debate between Division I schools, others rages on with football playoff lurking.

By Wendell Barnhouse
N.Y. Times News Service

May and June are the months for collegiate meetings.

Conference representatives, athletic directors, commissioners, College Football Association members gather at various venues for business and social discussions. At all of these congregations, a torrid but complicated topic has been NCAA restructuring.

The Division I-A schools that play football on a "big-time" basis — the NCAA's upper class — want to separate themselves and their money from the rest of the NCAA's rabble. At least, that's the have-nots' point of view. The haves believe that money should buy power and autonomy.

Last month's CFA meeting featured a panel discussion on NCAA restructuring. One of the speakers was Arkansas faculty representative Al Witte, a former NCAA president.

"When I talk to people who aren't in I-A, they ask what we want that we don't have," he said. "I've been too gracious to tell them. The truth, of course, is we don't want anything to do with them.

"We want to pass our own rules, make all our own decisions. As far as I'm concerned, I don't want to tell 'em where we're meeting or what's on the agenda. But I guess that's not politically correct."

Witte's "up the establishment" opinions reflect what a number of I-A leaders think but won't say.

"The feeling for many of us is that the whole process of existence in the NCAA is extremely complicated," Big East commissioner Mike Tranghese said. "There is an incredible level of frustration in trying to meander through the system. What we're asking the NCAA staff to do is near impossible. Herculean, in fact."

The NCAA's diverse melting pot is made up of about 850 schools classified into three divisions, with Division I subdivided into I-A, I-AA and I-AAA. When it comes to NCAA-wide votes at annual conventions, Division I-A's 106 institutions are in the minority.

The upper echelon of Division I-A — the expanded Big 12 and Western Athletic, the Big Ten, Southeastern, Atlantic Coast, Pacific-10 and Big East conferences plus Notre Dame — generates the majority of athletic revenue, and it is that group that wants to separate itself.

"What we're trying to say is that if it's a Division I-A issue, we want the majority of votes," Southwest Conference commissioner Steve Hatchell said. "In some of the (committee and governance) structures we have now, the non-I-A people can gang up."

At the NCAA Convention in San Antonio last January, I-A conference commissioners proposed a restructuring plan with criteria based on athletic budgets, football and basketball attendance and scholarships awarded. Think of that proposal as the Fort Sumter of the coming NCAA civil war.

There is no consensus in Division I-A about how to restructure, nor is there enough broad-based support to back legislation. At next January's NCAA Convention, conference commissioners want a resolution passed that calls for studying the issue.

CUP: Dutch scream foul

for a 2-0 lead.

The Dutch screamed foul, although no call was made.

"The linesman must have been blind," Witschge said. "He was offside by 3 meters."

Brazil must have thought it was through to the semis, but Bergkamp ran onto a throw-in, found Brazil's defense sleeping, and only had to beat Marcio Santos before curling in a shot from close range past Taffarel.

Now Brazil was stunned. The Dutch kept pressuring and Winter found Taffarel badly off his line to score on a textbook header.

It was the first time Brazil reached the semifinals since 1970, when Pele led it to a third title, and the thousands of yellow-clad fans among the crowd of 63,998 in the Cotton Bowl started immediate celebrations.

Samba soccer finally emerged just after halftime with a play involving a half dozen Brazilians, although a pressured Romario could not finish it off.

Early in the second half, Bebeto finally found Romario with space. But despite a perfect pass, Romario let Valckx creep back upon him to deny him an open chance.

The two teams last met in the World Cup in the 1974 semifinal, when Johan Cruyff and the Dutch outplayed Brazil 2-0 to reach its first of two straight finals.

Italians breakaway from Spain for win

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — After all the doubt, after so many predictions of doom, after so much — as the Italians put it — sofferenza, it appeared as if this would be Italy's final collapse.

The Italians had blown a one-goal lead Saturday and Spain was pouring on the pressure. The headline writers in Italy were sharpening their knives and the commentators were preparing all those "I told you sos."

But then, with just two minutes to go in regulation, Roberto Baggio was streaking down the middle on a breakaway. The world's player of the year jumped over the leg of charging goalkeeper Andoni Zubizarreta, then beat sliding defender Abelardo Fernandez with an angled shot into the far corner of the net.

Italy had a 2-1 victory. Again the Azzurri had been saved. Now, against almost all expectations back home, they advance to Wednesday's World Cup semifinals against either defending champion Germany or Bulgaria.

"By now, all games are like wars," Italy coach Arrigo Sacchi said, thankful for what he called Italy's "buona fortuna," or good fortune.

The fans in Foxboro Stadium burst into joy that reverberated all the way back to the piazzas of Rome and Milan. The Spanish players slumped to the field in despair, looking like white pup-tents that had collapsed.

"We suffered through the very last seconds," said forward Guiseppe Signori, whose looping left-footed pass to Baggio led to the winning goal.

Nothing has come easy for Italy, still trying to overcome the stigma of failing to qualify for the 1992 European Championship. The three-time world champions lost their World Cup opener to Ireland, then overcame a one-man deficit against Norway to win. They wasted a lead against Mexico, wound up in a tie and had to wait hours to find out they had qualified for the second round.

Baggio saved them with a goal in the 88th minute against Nigeria that forced overtime, then won the second-round game with a penalty kick. And now this, the victory that justified Sacchi's three-year reign as coach.

"If he continues this way, the last part of the game will be called the 'Baggio Zone,' " Sacchi said of his star.

Baggio's goal came after Nicola Berti got off a pass to Signori from midfield.

"I heard Baggio screaming for the ball. so I gave him the ball immediately," Signori said. "But I thought (the pass) was too long."

How tough was the game? Defender Maoro Tassoti broke Luis Enrique's nose with an elbow and didn't even get called for a foul.

At first, it looked like this one might be a bit easier for Italy. Dino Baggio, who scored what the Italians called the "heroic" goal against Norway, beat Zubizarreta with a 27-yard shot in the 26th minute that swerved into the corner of the net.

But in the 100 percent humidity of an overcast, foggy afternoon, Italy seemed to wilt after halftime and was outshot 10-2 in the second half.

Jose Luis Caminero tied the score in the 59th minute after a pass from Luis Enrique Martinez caught the defense flat. Caminero's shot nicked the left leg of defender Antonio Benarrivo and beat goalkeeper Gianluca Pagliuca, who returned after a two-game suspension.

Pagliuca, whose expulsion caused the man disadvantage against Norway, looked at this game as a chance for redemption.

"Had we lost, I might have been blamed," he said.

DALLAS: Switzer ready for invasion of Austin and keep those hostile orange bloods away from Switzer while he attempts to take control of the Cowboys.

A summit? A greeting card? Anything?

"I think I am scheduled to play in the Cowboys' golf tournament (July 18). If Barry's there, I will certainly say hello," Royal said.

Whoosh. Call off the police protection.

It ain't settling the Middle East, but a round of golf with Royal can't hurt Switzer's image in a city that even Switzer acknowledges, "I used to have to sneak in and out of."

The 71-year-old Royal says the golf game is about all he can do on these 100-degree days.

"I am not a welcoming committee," Royal said. "And as far as going out there, I don't care about watching the Cowboys at football practice in that heat. I don't even go to see the Longhorns in this kind of heat."

And as far as Switzer's claim about sneaking in and out of Austin, Royal isn't buying it.

"He never did sneak in and out of town," Royal said. "He made a lot of noise when he was in town. He goes in breaking china. He is not a shrinking violet."

The Cowboys come to Austin with quarterback Troy Aikman, running back Emmitt Smith and wide receiver Michael Irvin all in camp together for the first time since 1991. Irvin is still recovering from surgery but is expected to be in attendance.

Chances are Cowboys fans from across Texas will make the pilgrimage to St. Edward's University to see their favorite players and how Switzer's devil-may-care persona fits atop America's Team.

This is a man who once prided himself for running a college program he characterized as a "loose ship."

"Cowboys fans are Cowboys fans," Royal said. "They will go see that team no matter who is coaching, no matter where the guy coached before."

"You have got the former Oklahoma Sooners coach as one of the main topics in Longhorn land," said John Lucas, vice president of student services at St. Edward's and one of the camp's chief organizers.

"It will be interesting to see how the people welcome him to town given his previous role. But I think most see him as the current coach of the Cowboys rather than the former coach of the Sooners.

"I may be wrong. I have never been in the middle of the Texas-OU fray," Lucas said.

Cowboys spokesman Brett Daniels says Switzer has a knack for winning over skeptics.

"I don't know if there is going to be any love lost from Texas Longhorns fans towards Switzer, but I think he will win over the Cowboys fans," Daniels said.

NFL kicks off new season with camps

By Frank Litsky
N.Y. Times News Service

The pro basketball and hockey playoffs ended less than a month ago. Major league baseball reaches the All-Star break today. World Cup soccer is down to its last six games. Temperatures in much of the nation have been flirting with 100 degrees.

Obviously, it is time for pro football, or at least pro football training camps.

They start today when the Los Angeles Raiders open for business in Oxnard, Calif. On Wednesday, four more teams open camp — the Indianapolis Colts, the San Diego Chargers, the Seattle Seahawks and the Minnesota Vikings. The New York Giants start work next Sunday, the New York Jets the following Saturday.

Most teams have two reporting dates, generally allowing veterans to report a few days after the rookies. For example, the Raiders expect 48 players today and the remaining 32 on Saturday.

Their first group comprises rookies and new players, young veterans and players coming off injuries. Their newcomers include tight end Jamie Williams, offensive tackle Kevin Gogan, defensive tackle Jerry Ball, linebacker Steve Hendrickson and cornerback Albert Lewis, all signed as unrestricted free agents.

Why such an early start? To begin with, the Raiders will play the Denver Broncos on July 31 in a pre-season game in Barcelona, Spain. And they feel they must be ready quickly for the regular season because they open with a Monday night game against the San Francisco 49ers followed by division games against the Seahawks, the Denver Broncos and the San Diego Chargers.

Unrestricted free agency and its fallout have brought an almost endless shuffle of quarterbacks — Warren Moon to the Minnesota Vikings, Jeff George to the Atlanta Falcons, Chris Miller to the Los Angeles Rams, Mark Rypien to the Cleveland Browns, Jim Harbaugh to the Indianapolis Colts, Bernie Kosar to the Miami Dolphins, Scott Mitchell to the Detroit Lions, Jim McMahon to the Arizona Cardinals, Erik Kramer to the Chicago Bears, Jim Everett to the New Orleans Saints and more.

Some quarterbacks, notably Mitchell, will earn much more money. Some, notably Rypien, will earn far less. Some, notably Moon, are stepping into good situations.

For 10 years, Moon had been a productive quarterback for the Houston Oilers. But when the new salary cap left the Oilers unable to accommodate two highly paid quarterbacks in the 37-year-old Moon and 30-year-old Cody Carlson, they traded Moon to the Vikings.

"I think it's a very positive move for me," Moon said last week from his home in Houston. Then, in a backhanded slap at the Oilers, he added, "It's probably the best thing for me at this point in my career because Minnesota is geared toward winning and is doing everything needed to win."

Moon said he was not concerned with moving from the run-and-shoot offense to the Vikings' balanced offense and short-passing game.

With all the quarterback shuffling, there are still veterans available, notably 40-year-old Steve DeBerg and 37-year-old Phil Simms. Once the preseason games start and young quarterbacks struggle, the DeBergs and the Simmses may find buyers.

This is also a key week for unrestricted free agents who are still unsigned. If they do not sign with a new team by Friday, they revert to their old team. Among those unsigned players are offensive guard William Roberts and center Bart Oates of the Giants, wide receiver Rob Moore of the Jets and inside linebacker John Offerdahl of the Miami Dolphins.

In Memory of Tomas S. Gonzales
1-2-52
7-9-93

One Sad, lonely year has passed since our Great sorrow fell. The shock we received that day we still remember well. God gave us strength to meet it and courage to bear the blow. But what it meant to Lose you. No one will ever know. It's so Lonesome here without you. We miss you more each day for life is not the same to us since you were called away. You bade no one a last farewell not even said Goodbye you were Gone before we realized it and only God know why.

Sadly missed by his family
Mr. & Mrs. Zaragosa H. Gonzales & family

Text by Tonya Bullard

Within walking distance of Emerson Elementary and Goddard Junior High Schools, and a short drive from Midland High School, the home at 2606 Emerson is conveniently located for a family with school-age children.

However, the location is not the only thing convenient about this home.

For example, this brick structure, graced with finely-trimmed shrubbery lining the front yard, has a covered front porch. Also in the front yard are the neighborhood mailboxes.

Once inside, a viewer observes the quality outline of this home. Textured, wheat-colored wallpaper and split-paver brick floors frame the entryway.

To the left of the entryway, a huge picture window, covered with custom drapes and mini-blinds, is truly the highlight of the formal dining room, which has a door that leads to the kitchen.

The window, which overlooks the front yard, which is convenient for monitoring a young child's outdoor play.

Across from the window, shelves and open areas expand both the formal dining room and the home's cozy den.

Overhead, the built-in wooden bookshelves offer display space for any prized collection.

Walnut-stained, raw-wood paneling, which details these shelves and covers the three remaining wall, reflects the convenience of planned design as well as the softness of recessed lighting.

Such wall-covering may also be found in the breakfast area of the house. In this room, the paneled lower halves of the room are replicas of the den's walls, which may be seen through the door that leads to the den.

The top halves of the breakfast area's walls are covered in a Southwest print wallpaper, shaded by grapevines that grow outside the window and cooled with a color-coordinated ceiling fan. This room is conveniently combined with the kitchen.

Appliances in the kitchen include a dishwasher, a garbage disposal, a continuous cleaning double oven and a separate gas cook-top range with an overhead vent-a-hood.

A bar, lit by a florescent light, separates the food preparation area and the breakfast nook.

Also adjacent to the kitchen is the utility room. In this area, a desk and overhead shelves provide a work. Plenty of storage cabinets and a pantry add increased space to this room.

Two clothes closets in the hallway add still more space.

Ample space may also be found in the home's master suite as well.

This large bedroom has a ceiling fan and a walk-in closet.

Both these bedrooms have spacious closets and ceiling fans. The west wall in one bedroom is teal green.

In the fenced, green backyard, which is accessed through a solid. wooden door, a semi-circular covered patio surrounded by a wooden fence, which divides the patio and the remainder of the yard, could be enjoyed any time of the year.

A separate smaller fence with gates is great for dogs.

The double garage, with one side controlled by an electronic opener, shields both a car and an elaborate space for a workbench. Beside the garage, an exterior fence creates abundant shade for a garden area.

Beside the home, between the garage wall and the fence, a concrete slab will easily store a supply of firewood. A basketball goal provides a place for outside amusement.

Also in the garage is attic space. And earth-tone carpet and smoke detectors are found throughout the home.

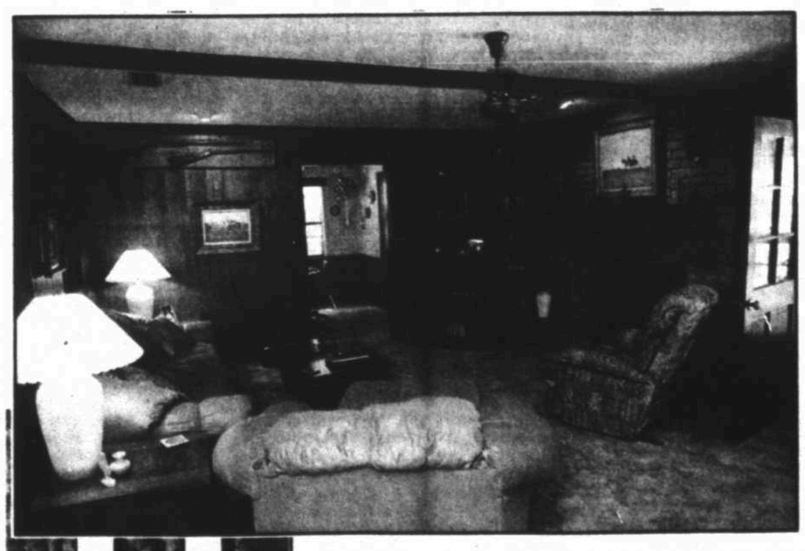

The heat for the home is gas-powered and the home has an electric air conditioner. The hot water heater, too, is gas-powered.

The average monthly utility bills for this home are quite low: the electric is $111.02, the gas is $29.85 and the water is $50.76.

Reserved items include the bar-b-que pit and the lead work benches.

Less than a month old, a new shingle roof tops this 18 year old, one owner home, listed for $69,500.

For more information about this home, or to schedule a private appointment with Realtor Karen Foster of Don Harvey Realtors, please call her at 683-5333, or fax inquiries to her ar687-8634.

Checklist provides guide to worry-free vacation

Pat Orseth
President/Midland
Association of Realtors

It is the season for vacationing. With lower air fares and reasonable gas prices, many Americans are headed out of town this summer. The Midland Association of REALTORS reminds you that planning a trip means more than just pulling out a map and taking off from work. It also should include a "vacation checklist" of things to do to protect your home and valuables while you are away.

Regardless of how long you will be gone, it is important to be sure that your home has a lived-in appearance. Tell-tale signs that invite burglars or vandals include overgrown lawns, piled up newspapers, a full mailbox and no lights at night.

This checklist will help you enjoy your vacation with the knowledge that you have not forgotten to take the proper steps to protect your home.

• Ask a friend or neighbor to pick up your mail, or go to the post office and place a hold on delivery until you return.

• Plug certain lights into automatic timers. These devices are inexpensive and are among the most effective means of giving your home a lived-in appearance. They will also make it more difficult for a burglar to work undetected by your neighbors. Some models have variable timers, which alter the times which your lights go on and off from day to day.

• Leave a radio turned on. Tune it to an all-news or talk show station. A burglar would have a tough time deciding if the voices are coming from the radio or the people living in the home.

• Arrange to have someone cut your grass. Leave a house key with a friend or neighbor in case of emergencies. This person also could open and close shades and drapes to alter the appearance of your home.

• Prune shrubbery around the house near windows and doors so that potential entrances are not obscured.

• Let the police know if you are going to be away for an extended period. In some communities, they will occasionally be able to check on your home while you are gone.

• Leave an itinerary with a neighbor or relative in case you need to be reached in an emergency.

• Just before you leave, be sure that all appliances are turned off and that all windows and doors are securely locked.

• Do not hide keys under the door mat, in flower pots or any place outside the home. Burglars know all the usual hiding places.

• Separate house keys from car keys. Put them on different key rings. Burglars have been known to take jobs as parking attendants just to make copies of house keys that are left with them.

• Be suspicious of telephone survey questions that ask how many televisions or what type of stereo or video cassette player you hame. The person on the other end may be a thief trying to decide if your home is worth the effort.

Neighbors, relatives and police are your best friends when you are away.

The Midland Association of REALTORS is one of 1,800 local boards and associations of REALTORS nationwide that comprise the National Association of REALTORS. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice for Real Estate," representing nearly 750,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

EXECUTIVE SALES

Are you a sincere person? Are you a hard worker & a willing learner? Are you enthusiastic, aggressive, ambitious & goal-oriented? ARE YOU ABLE TO TRAVEL OVERNIGHT 3-4 nights per week? Would you like to earn a minimum of $30,000 to $35,000 per year?

If you answer "yes" to these questions, you may be the person we're looking for and we may have the opportunity you're seeking. We're a 54-yr-old company with a unique business service. The service we sell helps the civic-minded business person make friends & new customers. If selected, you'll participate in intensive 30-day training program. You'll call on business owners & executives in cities of 4,000-20,000 population offering them a business service. Nationwide, 35% of our customers are banks, auto dealers, funeral homes & insurance agencies. The responses & results the business people realize from buying our service are so great that a very high percentage of our accounts renew year after year.

Our employees operate on commission basis with a draw against commission & most of your expenses are paid while you are training. Excellent company benefits include incentive program, achievement awards & free life insurance. We also offer hospital & major medical w/prescription. Average commission for fiscal year 1992-93 earned was $41,881.28. Our representatives are employees, not independent contractors.

Business background advertising specialty sales or direct sales experience would be very helpful, but not necessary. As part of our work involves calling on ministers, a strong church background is helpful, but not necessary. This is creative one-call close selling. If you're the type of person who would not sacrifice values for personal gain but are motivated by the potential for high earnings and the satisfaction that comes from doing something worthwhile for your fellow man we invite you to call:

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, July 10, 1994 — SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Oil Show

Directors of the Permian Basin Oil Show say they expect the show to be one of the largest and best attended in the show's 54-year history.

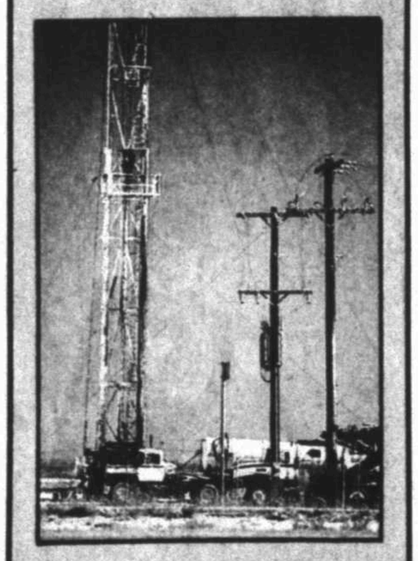

The show is 97 percent sold out, with over 800 companies signed as exhibitors.

Oil Show officials said they plan to focus on technology this year, hoping to introduce visitors to new technology that will help oilmen run their businesses more efficiently with less expense.

Environment and technology will be a major theme, with officials saying there are a larger number of companies involved with the environment signed on as exhibitors than ever before.

Jay Alvey, executive director for the Oil Show, said there would be an all out push this year to increase attendance at the Show, because technology transfer would be a key factor in the success of the Permina Basin oil industry.

"We want as many operators, engineers and production and drilling personnel as possible to attend the show to see what technology is new and useful."

A well service rig works at close quarters.

Prices slip

Oil prices slumped during the week as traders, no longer concerned about tight supplies, sold contracts as they began to worry about a rise in supplies.

West Texas Intermediate for August delivery closed late in the week at $19.12 while the posted price was $17.75 a barrel.

After getting a boost from reports of strikes by Brazilian oil workers and the civil war in Yemen, prices eased in the week as a Yemen oil field resumed production and Brazilian workers called off their strike.

Natural gas contracts for August delivery closed at $2.07 per thousand cubic feet on the Merc.

Please see PRICE GRAPHIC/9E

Rigs steady

Drilling activity was little changed for the week ended July 1, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The Permian Basin rig count slipped one to 108 for the week, just above the 106 counted last year.

Lea County, N.M. was the most active in the county with 21 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 13 rigs and Midland County with nine rigs.

Among major producing states, Texas showed the sharpest drop, seven rigs.

Computers connect oil firms

■ The oil patch finds its way onto the information superhighway.

By Ellen Hopkins

Majors in the Permian Basin are using a variety of communications technology to keep up with the information superhighway. Vehicles used in this flow of information, between wellsites and every office/location, are constantly upgraded and enhanced.

From month to month, every bit and byte of data moves faster, every employee's access to the data is simplified, and every report is generated quicker — or not at all as the paperless office draws closer.

Among the advanced communications abilities — that only recently were considered brand new — are local and national networks, EDI (Electronic Data Interchange), data transmission via microwave, radial telemetry and satellites, wellsite monitoring via SCADA systems, and some unique in-house designed programs to fit companies particular needs.

Chevron's Midland office and five field offices are part of a Local Area Network (LAN). All six locations are connected via a computer network, and all six routinely transfer electronic mail and a variety of data.

"Along with electronic mail we routinely access accounting, ac-

Computers help design office space

As oil companies restructure and downsize a continuing challenge is how to restructure office space.

Rearranging office space is not as easy as it seems, because it often involves designing new configuerations, modules and creative arrangement of furniture and equipment. Yet, having the properly designed work space allows workers to operate more efficently and maximize performance and profits.

Now, computer technology is

EDI use in oilpatch is growing

■ The oil industry finds varied uses for EDI.

By Ellen Hopkins

Just when you thought it was safe to wait another year before you upgraded your company's computer capabilities, along comes yet another "must-have" type of software. It's called EDI, electronic data interchange, and it's part of the paperless office of the future.

EDI software's oil industry uses are numerous and include linking manufacturers with distributors, wholesalers with retailers, well service contractors with operators, and shippers with receivers.

This wave of the future software is currently being used by all the above. Its applications are unlimited and almost essential -- especially when economics demand streamlined operations, improved efficiency, cost-cutting and edging the competition.

The basic premise of EDI is to electronically "link" one company with another, reducing the amount of actual paperwork that is exchanged and eliminating the need to mail any of it. Any two companies that need to exchange information can benefit from EDI.

Computer-to-computer electronic "documents" are exchanged via EDI software. The software is tied to a Value-Added Network (VAN) which sorts the electronic messages into mailboxes. Each company can retrieve whatever messages are in its mailbox as often as desired. The process takes only seconds.

VANs provide a linking capability between companies similar to telephone lines. They are national networks over which an unlimited number of message transactions can take place.

Some companies build their own in-house proprietary lines, or links, to other companies instead of accessing a VAN. However, the cost of proprietary lines is usually as prohibitive as stringing individual phone lines to every customer or vendor would be.

TRC plan could transform Texas oil

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Pitts

Flushed with pride from the success of its first package of oil and gas incentives, which has thus far saved thousands of Texas wells from abandonment and created millions in revenues, the Texas Railroad Commission is now considering an even more ambitious incentive package that could literally transform the Texas oil industry.

Described by some who have seen the plan as the most creative and far-reaching set of energy proposals ever presented by an energy agency anytime, anywhere, the programs, if enacted, could make Texas the undisputed world leader in oil and gas research and technology, while saving thousands more marginal wells in the state.

"I think the industry will be very happy with this plan," said Commissioner Barry Williason. Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers has called the plan "the ground work for the future of the U.S. oil and gas industry." And Jim Nugent, chairman of the Commission, has expressed equal optimism.

The plan contains 15 possible action items — all designed to strengthen the Texas oil and gas industry, save producing wells and create jobs. Ten of the proposed action plans address the expansion of energy reseach and technology in the state and five list incentives for saving marginal wells.

But there is such a synergy between the individual proposals that it will make it very difficult for the Texas Legislature to pick and choose.

For instance, one technological proposal calls for an incentive package to cause oil and gas research facilities to relocate to Texas by removal of direct taxes on facilities. At the same time the state would offer a large supply of inactive oil and gas wells to be used as guinea pigs in research projects.

The inactive wells would come from a well re-cycling program, to be created by TRC. The program, Texas Experimental Research and Recovery Activity (TERRA), would accept non-polluting, mechanically sound wells and hold them in trust for the future.

An advisory panel would determine which wells would be accepted into the project, and operators could put wells into TERRA by paying one-half the plugging cost. While in the holding project the wells would be made available for research at no cost to the operator. Should research and new technology make the wells economically viable at some point in the future, the operator could reclaim them by paying double the plugging cost.

One plan for attracting energy research to Texas calls for converting the SSC project to a major federal oil and gas research center, making it a magnet for attracting other similar research laboratories.

The Railroad Commissioners also want to write a number of incentives to encourage environmental research programs that will result in marketable technology that is needed by the rest counts payable, production, production history and land information via our network," said Mark Berkstresser, senior systems analyst at Chevron's Midland office.

CONNECT: Oil patch uses computers to communicate

Along with data transfer and exchange, the company has increased employees' accessibility to data. Berkstresser said Chevron has integrated new technology in its Land Information System (LIS). He described it as a PC based application that stores all related land information.

LIS stores geographic information for each lease and agreement the company has, and each data item is accessible through a point and click type of retrieval. Scanned copies of legal documents are also stored.

"On the screen a user can go to the area of interest, click on the operating agreement listed there and view the scanned version of the agreement," he explained.

Berkstresser said geographic information for each document is also retrievable so a user can see how various documents spatially interrelate or overlap one another. If there are four leases inside an operating agreement, data on all four leases can be viewed on the screen instead of having to dig through separate file folders.

He said LIS was designed in-house. It integrates a number of outside vendor products and was implemented in Midland during the last year.

As an example of the corporation's intercommunications ability, he said a number of Chevron's Permian Basin wells are connected to SCADA (Supervisory Control And Data Acquisition) systems that are controlled by PCs and communicate over Chevron's LAN.

SCADA systems are computer production management systems which monitor electronic signals from sensors, gauges and transducers at the wellsite. These signals, which are transmitted from the wellsite to any of Chevron's offices, provide information, data, and alarms which notify personnel of potential problems.

Berkstresser said some of Chevron's supervisory personnel are set up so they can dial into their home computers and check the status and information without having to be at the office.

"This arrangement is used mainly for supervisors to look for alarms," said Berkstresser. "They're looking for indications that a tank is full, or an alarm telling them that something is out of normal."

He said where SCADA systems are not in place, pumper gaugers use hand held data terminals for wellsite communication. They enter daily production runs, well test data, well down information, etc.

The wellsite data can be entered in the hand held terminal while the pumper gauger is on location. That evening at a nearby field office, the data can be "uploaded" via an office PC and transferred to the Midland office the next day where it can be accessed by engineers or production accounting.

Berkstresser said inputting well information just one time in the field has helped eliminate the need for written pages that were hand-input for each office's needs. It has also reduced the number of errors associated with re-inputting the same data.

"We actually have some SCADA systems in which the well data is gathered electronically, transferred to a PC at a field office and then directly to Chevron's accounting office in California without any hand entering of the information," he said. This is a new capability that he said Chevron is trying on a limited basis.

The software that runs Chevron's SCADA systems was purchased from a company in Houston, but Berkstresser said it was modified in-house to fit Chevron's needs.

To supply Chevron's need for current production history data, the company subscribes to Petroleum Information's (PI) monthly CD-Rom service in which all data is linked by API number.

Through PI's service, production history on over three million wells is readily available and updated monthly. Analysis that used to take days and weeks to perform can be done quickly.

PI's system provides the ability to view split screens of well and historical production data simultaneously.

Phillips Petroleum's Odessa offices are split in three separate buildings, and are connected by fiber optic cable to enhance communications between employees. Les Gilbert, senior telecommunications analyst for Phillips, said this type of fiber optic setup provides an essentially unlimited range of data that can be exchanged.

Gilbert said data communications between the corporation's major locations makes use of technology known as T-1s.

"A T-1 is a high capacity data circuit which is like a huge data pipe that we pump information through," said Gilbert. "For the Permian Basin, Phillips leases a number of T-1s from AT&T and Southwestern Bell."

He compared the communicative capability of a T-1 with a modem. Most modems transfer data at a baud rate such as 2400. Gilbert said communications via a T-1 are at 1.544 megabytes per second, or 643 times faster.

He said Phillips has a T-1 between Odessa and the home office in Bartlesville, one between Odessa and Houston, one between Hobbs and Bartlesville, and another T-1 between Bartlesville and Houston. There are about 10 T-1s in the Permian Basin, including those that connect employees at Phillips locations in Spraberry, Goldsmith and the Lea plant in New Mexico.

"There is some redundancy that has been set up in case a T-1 breaks or goes down," he said. "We collect total flow information that has to be reported to Bartlesville, so we've made sure we can do that."

Throughout the corporation there are 28 T-1s. Among the information exchanges are production volumes, drilling reports and electronic mail (e-mail).

Gilbert said for remote locations without facilities and the use of T-1s, Phillips has installed a microwave system.

In some cases, more than one system of communication is used. For example, he said to report gas flow measurement volumes from some remote areas, a combination of copper, fiber optics and a microwave link may be necessary.

He said Phillips also has radial telemetry which connects certain individual locations such as wellsites to nearby plants via radio.

He also talked about Phillips own radio system which communicates employees' voices between company vehicles. In the near future, data will also be exchanged between vehicles. The result is similar to faxing or using a modem, but this transfer will be through Phillips radio system.

Phillips also uses video conferencing between its offices in Bartlesville, Houston, Odessa and Hobbs. Gilbert said with teleconferencing, employees are not only heard in another location but also seen. He added that it's being used more all the time and has cut down on travel extensively.

Also, Gilbert said Phillips has been using EDI for many purposes and will soon be required by the State of New Mexico to file lease information via EDI.

Texaco's Systems Analyst Don Hopkins said that with EDI, Texaco is moving more vendors into automatic billing for two reasons.

"For one thing it gets vendors their money quickly," said Hopkins. "EDI helps reduce paper handling, and possibly losing an important piece of paper.

"We also notice that it cuts down on translation errors. There is certainly still a validation process for invoices we receive via EDI before payment is approved, but the whole process is faster."

Hopkins said in the same way that EDI has changed invoice handling, invoice payment is also changing and may soon be deposited directly in a vendor's bank account similar to direct deposit of employee paychecks or Social Security payments.

Hopkins said that Texaco's Midland office is on a Wide Area Network (WAN) which incorporates all of Texaco's sites. Through this WAN, employees receive electronic mail, access data bases, and get whatever information they need in a minute's access.

He added that Texaco is currently standardizing e-mail within the corporation, so that regardless of geographic area the same mail system will be used.

"Four or five years ago as various Texaco locations around the country were learning networks, they purchased different systems from local vendors and used whatever was available in their location," said Hopkins.

"Over time, more sophisticated software packages have been designed and everything is constantly being upgraded," he said. "Depending on when an office came on-line, they purchased the package in their area that best suited their needs.

"Now the corporation is going to have one package."

Although some of the required hardware and software is purchased at the corporate level, Hopkins said Texaco likes to support local vendors whenever possible. He said almost all of Texaco's local computer equipment is bought in Midland.

Alan Simon, a Midland division programmer for Texaco, said the company has several ways to monitor activity at a wellsite. A direct link from the office to the wellsite provides information on pump speed, amount of fluid lifted and the load on the pump.

At locations where these data are not automatically monitored via computer, pumpers use laptop computers from their pickups to enter tank levels, well test results, etc. And data from truly remote locations can be transferred to an office via satellite.

Simon said historical well production is automatically made available to Texaco's other locations from a CD tower in Midland.

"For the past year we've been subscribing to P.I.'s CD-Rom service," said Simon. "They send us eight CDs each month covering wells in all our geographic regions and we place them in a CD tower. The tower is kind of like a jukebox, only you can play all the CDs at the same time and any Texaco location tied into our LAN can access the data."

EDI: Popular with oil companies

(From 1E)

A prime example of first attempting to build a proprietary system and then replacing it, is Mobil Oil Corporation's distributor system. Mobil found its own system too cost-prohibitive to maintain and opted for a customized version of readily available EDI software.

"Mobil Link PLUS," a customized program developed through a partnership with Harbinger*EDI -- a software, network and services provider of EDI -- now electronically links Mobil's entire lubricant distributor base.

Now order processing, funds reimbursement and general communications are all electronically linked.

Mobil inspired its distributors to adopt its customized EDI program by providing the software and computer hardware through a 100 percent co-op reimbursement program. Described in a recent issue of EDI WORLD magazine, Mobil's intent in funding its EDI distributor program was to encourage them to send business to Mobil rather than the competition.

The Mobil Link PLUS program is simply designed and adaptations of it have many uses for other companies wanting to implement an electronic ordering system.

Distributors place orders via the EDI system and Mobil retrieves them four times a day. Transmissions are linked through a VAN. The orders go directly into Mobil's ordering system and are acknowledged by electronic purchase orders. This automatic step replaces distributors phoning in their orders and receiving paper purchase order acknowledgments. But the real time savings is found in funds reimbursement.

EDI software shortens the time it takes distributors to receive payment once products have been delivered to end-users/customers. Rather than send signed delivery tickets through the mail, which then have to be matched with invoices before payment is authorized, distributors now use EDI software to communicate delivery ticket information. Processing and payment has been reduced from weeks to 24 - 48 hours.

Locally, well service contractors are using EDI to facilitate service invoicing to operators. Lynn Massingill, owner Well-Co Service Co. in Brownfield, said "EDI really is quicker and more efficient. There is less paper used with EDI and fewer mistakes made."

Although her company still signs field tickets, she feels that step will be eliminated once EDI has been fully integrated in the well service industry. Time savings is realized by billing all services on one invoice instead of a separate invoice for each service.

"And the customer only has one invoice to deal with," Massingill said, "just one invoice to match tickets against."

Matching and processing invoices can become a company's most time-consuming accounting task, and for this reason EDI software has been integrated by the majors. Amoco Production Co. began using EDI in March 1993; since then over 500 of its vendors have incorporated EDI.

For a company like Amoco, which processes about 700,000 incoices each year, EDI makes a lot of sense. In an effort to acquaint its vendors with EDI, Amoco arranged 23 seminars -- five of which were held in Levelland, Odessa and Hobbs.

Accompanying Amoco to these vendor conferences was its software provider Harbinger*EDI. Together they explained the benefits of using EDI from both the suppliers' point of view and Amoco's.

An immediate advantage to vendors is quicker and more accurate payment. A more subtle benefit, but one that will become increasingly obvious as more companies incorporate EDI software, is the competitive feature. EDI can be considered an offensive tool in that it implies companies which have it are forward-thinking and easy to do business with.

Realizing the benefits and seeing the future of EDI software, Texaco Inc. began using it years ago. Texaco's Manager of EDI products and services, Betty Zimmerman, recapped the corporation's EDI use in a recent issue of EDI World.

From the 1970s to the 1980s, the company's EDI use grew from intra-industry to retail. Soon more retail and industrial customers requested Texaco to use EDI for business transactions.

Within the oil industry today, Zimmerman said the company's EDI system handles 50,000 transactions each month with over 150 trading partners. The company predicts that by the end of 1995, the number of its suppliers using EDI software will increase from 25 to 2,500.

So quickly did its demand for EDI increase, the company developed a "traffic jam" of sorts. Through Texas Instruments, gateway software was developed to analyze data transmission problems, resolve them and ensure messages get through to the correct recipient no matter how many messages are sent simultaneously.

T.I. EDI gateway software logs each transaction and, if necessary, puts a message "on hold" until a clear line is available.

For Texaco, gateway software replaces a multitude of other communications software packages. Its applications include receiving and sending purchase orders, invoices, wire transfers, advance shipment notices, requests for quotes, product activity and shipping schedules.

Although it sounds complex, EDI can actually be installed on a single PC with a modem which is just enough to get a company started. A company can begin with one application, such as order entry and invoicing. Following this, users find that continuous inventory replacement is an advantageous next step, along with electronic payment. Rebates, shipping and receiving and other EDI capabilities can be added as systems grow.

Ray Jimison, Petroleum Industry Manager with Harbinger*EDI, said when he came to West Texas for Amoco's vendor seminars, that the incremental cost of sending invoices via EDI was really no more than the cost of a stamp and envelope.

He added that generally companies spend under $100/month for EDI, and that most consider it an investment in future business rather than an expense.

Jimison said companies investigating EDI possibilities are often concerned with its technical complexity. He said startup can be accomplished in about 45 minutes and the software is very user-oriented.

To assist companies who wish to jump on the EDI bandwagon, resources such as the EDI Directory, EDI Yellow Pages and EDI Data Interchange Standards are available.

EDI users, in the oil industry and elsewhere, are convinced the technology is here to stay. And if their future customers are using EDI, then being EDI-capable is the future.

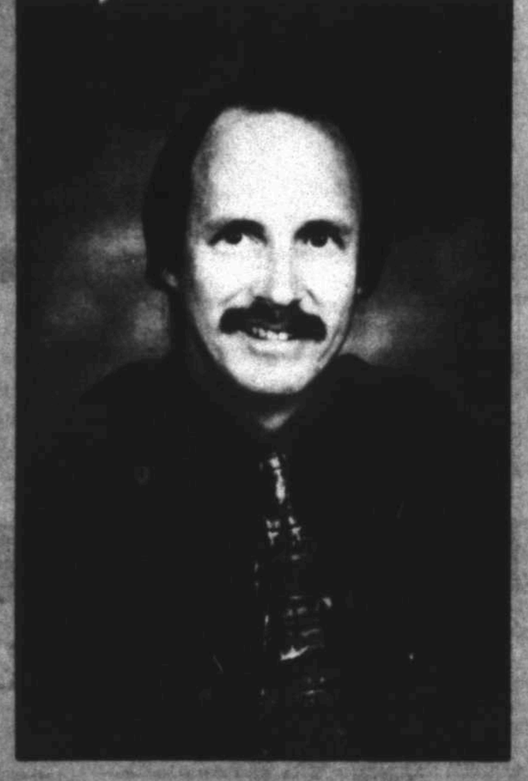

Pipeline names new executive

HOUSTON (AP) — Panhandle Eastern Corp. has named Gregg McBride, a former vice president for one of its subsidiaries, as director of investor relations.

McBride will replace Bradley Porlier, who has been named vice president of subsidiary company 1 Source Development Co., the company said.

McBride has been vice president of rates and regulatory affairs for Trunkline Gas Co. since 1991. He joined Trunkline in 1979 as an accountant and became a rates analyst for Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. in 1981.

Houston-based Panhandle Eastern operates one of the nation's largest network of natural gas pipelines.

Bridon American is part of the world-wide BRIDON group headquartered in Doncaster, U.K., the leading manufacturer and distributor of wire, wire rope and other lifting products. The addition of Stoehr Wire Rope to the BRIDON group complements its existing well servicing company, Graham Wire Rope, in Graham and Pampa, TX.

DA & S OIL WELL SERVICING — headquartered in Hobbs and with locations in Eunice, New Mexico and Andrews, Texas – has opened another yard in Carlsbad at the end of May.

Kyle Rieger, director of sales and marketing, said the activity level in Eddy County and especially in Indian Basin prompted the expansion.

ADAMS CHEMICAL & EQUIPMENT CO. in Odessa is carrying the "Landa Water Maze" wash water recycling system designed for companies that use pressure washers and other cleaning equipment which could potentially damage the environment.

Company President Glen Adams said waste water either needs to be cleaned and recycled in a system like the Water Maze, or it needs to be hauled and disposed of as hazardous waste.

Adams reminds oil and gas related companies that the EPA is not only fining polluters but jailing them also for discharging oil and detergents onto the ground or into the sewers at levels above 10 parts per million (ppm). He described 10 ppm as equivalent to 10 inches in 16 miles, 10 minutes in two years or 10 cents in $10,000. He added that the EPA has been tough in enforcing this rule in many parts of the country.

HOLMES WIRELINE SERVICE, a production logging company in Odessa, has upgraded its Digital Data Acquisition System (DDAS) to include "ACCU-Log" computerized logging capability.

Owner Norris Holmes said one of his three trucks has been converted and the company has been running surveys since the middle of May. The computerized production logging surveys include tracers, temperature surveys, capacitance tools, spinners, caliper surveys and cement bond logs.

'Environmental' key word for Oil Show

■ Oil Show officials anticipate the largest, most versatile show in its history.

Staff Report

With 54 years of service to the petroleum industry, the 1994 edition of the Permian Basin Oil Show will undoubtedly display the largest and most versatile line of tools and services ever.

"The key word this year seems to be 'environmental' from both the producers and consumers," noted Jay Alvey, Executive Director of the Permian Basin Oil Show. "Never before have we had so many companies involved with the environment as we have this year."

With more than 800 companies signed as exhibitors, this will be the largest oil show ever for the Permian Basin. For those companies wishing to be admitted to the show, they are advised to get their names on the waiting list which is working on the first-come, first served basis.

This year's exhibitors will be coming to Odessa from throughout the United States and possibly several foreign countries.

The following are some of the exhibitors, their products and services, and their oil show booth location.

The Abbott Companies of Odessa, OS-44 and 58, is comprised of Abbott Building Co., Abbott Supply Co., and Abbott Development Co. It began in 1954 as Abbott Building Co. Headquartered in Midland, Abbott is in the business of engineering and constructing mainly industrial metal buildings, providing building supplies to the end-user. The firm also features pre-packaged buildings in various sizes.

Compressor Engineering Corp. of Houston, H-11, is the industry's single source for "OEM Superior" compressor engine replacement parts. OEMs include Ingersoll Rand, Clark Cooper, Joy, Worthington, Gardner-Denver, and more. They also custom engineer and manufacture poppet valves, actuators, clearance pockets, deactivators, and fuel gas modulators. Over 45,000 parts are in service.

TU Electric of Dallas, B-91, is a full service utility company headquartered in Dallas. The company provides electric service to over 370 incorporated cities in Texas, including the Permian Basin. The company provides free confidential site location services to companies considering the Texas market.

Wall Company Corp., of Madison Hts., Mich., G-11, will feature Colmonoy 88, a new, patented nickel-based hard-surfacing alloy comprised of compiled bi- and tri-metallic borides for maximum abrasion and corrosion resistance. Results of wear tests show it to be superior to ion nitriding and hard chrome plating.

Hasco Manufacturing Co., of Sapulpa, Ok., D-98, has developed the Hasco Environmental Safety Seal Liner because of environmental concerns regarding the possibility of an open hole when a polished rod breaks. The new rod includes a safety clamp and an automatic check valve.

Plains Enterprises of Andrews, D-80, is the distributor for the Baker Hughes workover bit which is setting new standards for high-quality workover bits that lower drilling costs. All Baker Hughes bits are for fluid circulation and conform to API gauge specification.

Butler Grain Systems, a Division of Butler Manufacturing of Kansas City, MO., E-118, will feature Butler Containment Rings at this year's Permian Basin Oil Show. The Containment Rings are designed to replace earthen dams around pumps and storage tanks. They come in round and square designs and enhance the appearance of a well site.

The H.O. Trerice, J-91, is among the world leaders in the manufacturing of specialized engineerined products for industrial temperature and pressure measurement and control. Trerice features products widely recognized by contractors specifying engineers and maintenance personnel in the oil and gas industry. Trerice has served the industry since 1923.

Markel Products Company of Johnson City, TN., C-51, has been the leading manufacturer of electric heating products since 1921. The company is among the leaders of the manufacturers of space heating and controls in the nation.

Linco-Electromatic, Inc., of Midland, C-84,85, provides products and services for liquid metering, oil field automation, and process instrumentation/control. A manufacturers' representative-/distributor for over 28 years, Linco offers such names as Smith Meter, Schlumberger Measurement, and Invalco. The company offers designing, engineering and manufacturing to customer specifications.

Don-Nan Pump & Supply Co., of Midland, D-96,97, has been in the oil business since 1962 as a distributor of Norris-Obannon products. On March 7, 1994 they acquired an API license to manufacture subsurface pumps and components which will be featured at this year's oil show.

Adams Chemical & Equipment Co., of Odessa, B-22, will be displaying their line of high pressure hit water washers, manufactured by Clarke/Delco and their cleaning supplies for the oil fields. They feature high pressure washers and steamers and biodegradable industrial detergents.

Rice Engineering Corp., of Midland, B-115,116, will feature internal insert linings offering an alternate but proven technology to internal corrosion control in steel tubulars. Rice Engineering is currently developing a new insert liner for the DUOLINE lining process for use in high temperature corrosive environments.

Turbine Specialties, Inc., of Harvey, La., J-122, is the complete turbocharger center for overhauling and repairing large bore engine turbochargers. In addition to manufacturing new components to replace parts that cannot be repaired to meet tolerance, TSI had capabilities of testing and retrofiting.

Palmer of Texas, of Andrews, G-5, will feature two fiberglass storage tanks with a portion of the top and wall cut away to display internal options available, as well as graphite impregnated fiberglass electrical grounding rods. The company also manufactures tanks with dome or cone bottoms, insulated walls, heat tracing, and horizontal haul tanks.

Sidewinder Pumps, Inc., of Lafayette, La., and Odessa, D-64, will feature air and gas powered chemical injection pumps for metering. Discharge capabilities of 10,000 PSI and volumes as high as 180 gallons per day, there is a Sidewinder Pump to fit your needs. Jet Speciality is the company's stocking agent in Odessa.

M & H Enterprises of Houston and Midland, C-13, will feature it's computerized approaches to development and management of process safety information. The company provides engineering services to the oil, gas, petrochemical and refining industry with experience in design, drafting, as-builts operating procedures, training, and process hazards.

Mico Tool & Turbulator, Inc., of Odessa (Milam Turbulators), J-28, has the only positive standoff spiral vaned centralizer that has been thoroughly tested by major independents to prove it does what it is designed to do. The turbulator is used wherever primary cementing is done and has been used on various lengths of strings.

M B C, Inc., of Great Bend, KS., D-50, will display the Down Hole Injection Tool (DHI), which removes water from gas wells and disposes of it by pumping it down the existing well bore into a disposal zone below the productive formation. No water ever reaches the surface, saving the expense of drilling a disposal well or hauling the water to someone else's disposal well.

PITTS: TRC package good for Texas

of the world. On the work sheet for the plan, which is yet to be named, the Commission points out that environmental technology can help reduce production costs caused by regulations imposed by society.

To complement research efforts, other plans call for incentives to bring even more oil and gas manufacturing facilities to Texas by eliminating direct taxes as possible and to provide a pool of engineering talent by creating a competition that would allow the top 25 engineering students in the state to attend the next semester free.

To give even more assistance to marginal wells, the Commission would write incentives to exclude non-producing fields from direct taxes, provided they begin production again. Also, active fields that participate in new technology projects would be excluded from paying production taxes for the duration of the project.

Other proposals call for an all-out incentives and deregulation plan to save marginal wells on the edge.

Marginal wells making less than three barrels per day would be excluded from production taxes, period. The exclusion, however, would be phased in so as not to interfere with revenue projections.

Marginal wells making less than $20,000 per year would be deregulated to bring reporting costs to zero. That means wells would no longer have to report production or tests and would no longer have to reclassify from oil to gas or back.

While it has no specific plans, the Commission says it will also develop every possible efficiency for handling water, which is listed as the single greatest factor in the loss of marginal wells.

For the rest of the marginal wells, the Commission would devise a system of chits, in which every new well drilled, after a period of stabilized production, would receive a chit for each barrel of oil equivalent (BOE) produced. The negotiable chits could be used to gain exclusion from production taxes, with each chit being equivalent 1 BOE equivalent from taxes. For instance, a lease with five wells making four barrels per day, could be excluded from production taxes by turning in 20 chits.

The Commissioners say the purpose of the plan is to recover as much as possible of the $14 trillion in hydrocarbon reserves that might be left in the ground without incentives, while making Texas the foremost developer of advanced recovery techniques in the world. After reading a draft of the TRC proposals, I would have to agree.

The Texas Railroad Commissioners are to be applauded for formulating a sane, practical program that is low on cost, high on return, does not involve citizens giving up individual rights, higher taxes or the formation of a new massive bureaucracy. Washington should take note. Government officals can do good things when they have the right motives, and are not driven by political agendas.

In effect all the commissioners have done is sit down, put their one Republican and two Democrat heads together and find a way to remove every disincentive and regulative obstacle in order to keep marginal wells alive in Texas.

When Midland's Martin Allday took the same tack at FERC and initiated his sweeping Rule 636, he executed a major regulatory house cleaning and transformed the natural gas industry. The TRC plan, whatever it is eventually called, could do the same thing for the oil and gas industry in Texas.

USX-Delhi to sell plants, pipelines

DALLAS (AP) — USX-Delhi Group has authorized the sale of four gas processing plants and certain gas pipelines in five Southwestern states.

The USX board of directors gave its approval to the disposal of what it termed non-strategic assets in Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas.

David M. Kihneman, president of Delhi Group, said Delhi will record a pretax charge of approximately $47 million in the second quarter.

USX-Delhi Group, a unit of USX Corporation, includes Delhi Gas Pipeline Corporation and related companies that are subsidiaries of USX.

OFFICE: Software program helps with design stepping in to address the problem, developing software that can design an office full of workstations in minutes.

"This lets the client take ownership in the project," noted Stephanie Cooper of Business Products & Services Inc. "They all feel they have a part in the design. It's a team concept."

BPSI is an office furniture dealer with an office in Midland and territory that ranges from El Paso in the West to Big Spring in the east, Amarillo in the north.

Cooper uses a system called Z-Axis, developed by Phoenix Designs at a cost of approximately $6 million, that can design an office, display and print the design in 3-D and provide installation plans and an inventory and pricing list.

Max Reneau, owner of TMR Business Systems, is a local representative for a number of modular furniture manufacturers. To design office space for oil company clients, he said he uses a Computer Assisted Design system.

"The first thing you have to do," he said, "is sit with the people, find out what they want to do and what they'd like to accomplish, and see if that's practical. If, for example, you have a 12 foot by 12 foot office, there's no way to put eight people in it and really be efficient.

"By using CAD drawings, you can look at it, the flow and traffic charts, see if there's a bottleneck somewhere, or if, say someone has to walk along a corridor from one end of a huge room to a person at the other end, it might be efficient to put them one door down. We're able to show the floor plans, what we plan to do, how much space the client has, how well it fits in a given area," he said.

Cooper will be using Z-Axis with one of her newest clients, actually two companies that are merging. She will be interviewing the 70 employees of the two companies and helping them consolidate three locations onto one floor.

Cooper and Reneau both agree the modular cubicles — Reneau calls them acoustical dividers with components hung from or set in the dividers — offer flexibility and are cost-efficient.

While cubicles have been around for a number of years, they are growing in popularity. Paul O'Neill, chairman of the Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa) is trading in his executive suite for a cubicle.

Reneau said the acoustical dividers can cut sound between workstations by between 60 and 85 percent. And, he said, by using panels over five feet high, a company's productivity can rise by as much as 30 percent.

"Employees would have to stand up and look over their dividers in order to talk," he explained.

Too, if a company wants to rearrange its workspace or a new company moves into the workspace, the modular workstations allow for easy and inexpensive reconfiguration and keeps drywall out of the landfill.

"To change the configuration of a modular work area, you can figure about $1 a running foot, whereas, if you're literally moving walls, you're looking at $50 a running foot."

"The cost of modular or, when including the workspace, the storage space and the file space together, overall can end up being less than the cost of a desk, credenza and filing cabinets and all that's associated with it," Reneau said.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Fusselman pay opened in Howard field

Staff Report

PARALLEL PETROLEUM CORP., Midland, has opened Fusselman pay in the Patience field of Howard County, 15 miles north of Big Spring.

On potential test, the No. 1 Hamlin "16" flowed 165 barrels of 50 gravity condensate and 25 Mcfd on an 8/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 950 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,341 to 10,343 ft., which had been acidized with 250 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid.

Permitted as a 10,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,448 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 10,403 ft.

Formation tops, on kelly bushing elevation of 2,666 ft., include the San Andres at 3,577 ft., Spraberry at 6,370, Canyon Reef at 8,960, Strawn at 9,408 and Fusselman at 10,342 ft.

The company also completed two Pennsylvanian Reef producers in the field, both 14 miles north of Big Spring.

The No. 1 Phillips Unit was completed to flow 580 barrels of crude and 1.49 Mmcfd on a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,050 psi. The well flowed from open hole interval 9,053 to 9,062 ft.

Total depth was 9,062 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 9,053 ft.

The No. 1 Schuelke "28" was finaled to flow 161 barrels of 50.4 gravity condensate and 610 Mcfd on a 6/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 1,940 psi. The well flowed from open hole interval 8,894 ft. to 8,906 ft.

Total depth was 8,908 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 8,894 ft.

Lea plugback nets San Andres strike

A Lea County plugback operation has resulted in a San Andres discovery.

YATES PETROLEUM CORP. plugged back the No. 1 Burton "AER" Com. to pump 26 barrels of 25 gravity crude and 14 barrels of water from perforations 4,966 to 4,974 ft. The interval was acidized with 11,500 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid.

Originally drilled to 11,933 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 5,450 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,765 ft., include the Rustler at 2,082 ft., Yates at 3,268, San Andres at 4,888, Glorieta at 6,390, Tubb at 7,926, Drinkard at 8,054, Abo at 8,620, Cisco Shale at 11,040 and Strawn at 11,483 ft.

Location is 2,400 ft. from south and 1,850 ft. from east lines of Section 26, T16s, R37e.

The well was originally producer in the Casey (Strawn) field, completed in December 1987 to pump six barrels of crude and six barrels of water from Strawn perforations 11,543 to 11,575 ft.

Second well added to King County field

A second producer has been completed in the Bacon 107 (Tannehill) field of King County, a quarter-mile north of the discovery well, nine miles south of Guthrie.

ANATHEMA INC. potentialed the No. 1 Crum to pump 36 barrels of 38.9 gravity crude and seven barrels of water from perforations 3,205 to 3,215 ft. No treatment was reported.

Drilled as a 3,500 ft. wildcat, the well reached total depth of 3,275 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Stockwether at 3,184 ft. on ground elevation of 1,749 ft.

Location is 2,200 ft. from east and 467 ft. from north lines of Section 106, Block F, H&TC survey, Abst. 744.

The field was opened in February of this year with completion of Anathema's No. 2 Truman & Tommy Bacon, tested to pump 50 barrels of crude and seven barrels of water from perforations 3,220 to 3,226 ft.

Dawson field gets northeast extension

The Adcock (Spraberry) field of Dawson County has gained a northeast extension, two miles south of O'Donnell.

MURPHY H. BAXTER tested the No. 1 Hoss to pump 112 barrels of 39 gravity crude, 68 Mcfd and 35 barrels of water from perforations 6,854 to 6,861 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 10 percent acid.

Permitted as an 11,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,850 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 7,785 ft.

On kelly bushing elevation of 3,049 ft., formation tops include the Rustler Anhydrite at 1,873 ft., Yates Sandstone at 2,519, San Andres at 3,876 and Spraberry at 7,806 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and east lines of Section 11, Block 34, HE&WT survey, Abst. 337.

"MEET OUR ELITE"

Wendy Hernandez is congratulated by Vickey Banks, Manager of Temporary Resources.

Wendy Hernandez has qualified as a Temporary Resources "Elite Temp" by receiving a superior rating from her current longterm assignment. Wendy is a bright pleasant individual who can work well in any situation. She and her husband are the parents of three children. The family is involved in numerous church activities at a local Catholic Church.

Wendy makes the following statement: "Temporary Resources has been GREAT! They have helped prepare me for job placement in professional work environments. Thank You Temporary Resources for the wonderful opportunities you have given me."

The personnel professionals at Temporary Resources can handle all your employment needs whether they be temporary or permanent. Let us payroll your summer or full time employees so that you won't have to deal with any government reporting.

Abraxas signs new credit facility

SAN ANTONIO — Abraxas Petroleum Corp. has disclosed terms of a new $40 million revolving credit facility entered into with First Union National Bank of North Carolina.

Robert Watson, chief executive officer of Abraxas, indicated that approximately $12 million of the new line was utilized to prepay existing indebtedness to Endowment Energy Partners L.P. and Endowment Energy Co-Investment Partnership. Additionally, Watson disclosed that 80 percent of the overriding royalty interests previously granted to EEP and EECIP were acquired for $600,000 in cash and 45,741 shares of a new class of $8 preferred stock which is convertible into 508,182 shares of the company's common stock. The effective date of the repurchase of the overriding royalty interest was Jan. 1, 1994.

Watson also stated that the combined effect of the royalty repurchase and reduced interest costs from the new credit facility would increase yearly cash flow by over $800,000.

Rod Pumping Optimization
Software & Training
DOS and Windows versions available.
See us at the Oil Show and at the SPE Petroleum Computer Conf. in Dallas
RODSTAR: "Smart" Wave Equation predictive program. Calculates spm, plunger size, rod string design (steel or fiberglass) and motor size to get "target" production, monthly electricity bill, $/bbl lifting costs, rod string cost, and a lot more. Has well-organized single page output report with graphs. Batch-run mode for overnight runs.
XDIAG: The ultimate weapon against inefficient wells. Combines expert knowledge and dynamometer pattern recognition with wave equation. Prints expert diagnostic report in plain English. Detects and corrects load cell errors and creates summary spreadsheet files. Works with supervisory pump off controllers for automatic analysis, etc.
CBALANCE: Computer assisted pumping unit balancing program. Calculates counterweight positions to balance unit in one step. For more information or for a "Rod Pumping Optimization" school brochure, call or write to:

Santa Rita legacy

These men pose in front of the Santa Ritas No. 1 and 2. The Santa Rita No. 1, spudded in August 1921, blew in on May 28, 1923, the discovery well of the Big Lake field in Reagan County. The well produced until approximately 1991, when it was quietly plugged. Its offset, the Santa Rita No. 2 was spudded on July 23, 1923, 800 feet to the west, and was completed in February 1924, good for 18 barrels a day, a disappointment compared to the No. 1.

American oil workers try to adapt to overseas duty

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUMA, La. — When Jimmy Josey left for work recently, he hugged his two young sons and kissed his wife goodbye. But instead of heading to nearby Bilco Tools in his pickup truck, he drove about 40 miles northeast to New Orleans International Airport.

Then, starting his 28-hour journey to the oilfields of Kazakhstan, he moved into the routine that is now part of his life in the domestic oil industry: He heads overseas, for a month at a stretch, to teach Kazakh, Hungarian and Russian workers to operate drill pipe-handling equipment made by his company.

Stocky and deep-voiced, Josey, 38, has worked on rigs across the Gulf of Mexico and thought he always would.

"If you worked hard and hustled," he said, "there was always a place for you because there was so much activity."

Now that activity is shifting, to Russia and other former Soviet republics, Brazil, China, Angola and, soon, to Vietnam. And oil workers like Josey are learning to adapt in mid-career — a time when many Americans expect to be settled into a work and home routine — to spending up to half their time working abroad, living in dormitories and struggling to learn other languages, diets and ways of life.

Though energy companies have always gone overseas in search of oil and natural gas, that activity has picked up in the last four years and is likely to accelerate as more deals are completed.

Encouraged by firming oil prices and promises of big profits from abroad, big oil companies now spend almost 65 percent of their exploration budgets overseas, up from 51 percent in 1990, according to the American Petroleum Institute.

The industry does not tally how many of its employees work abroad, but executives and blue-collar workers say there is no question that companies are increasingly relying on overseas projects for future earnings. Being in the domestic energy industry, they say, now means being willing to go overseas.

"I didn't anticipate I'd be working in a foreign country, but that's what it takes these days," said Jim Henley, regional manager for Chevron Corp.'s offshore operations in Cabinda, Angola. He is gone from his wife, Frances, and their home in Mandeville, across Lake Pontchartrain from New Orleans, for a month at a time.

Josey once believed that the oil in the warm, rich gulf would always put a paycheck in his pocket. But now he and other lone men, lugging duffel bags and trunks, are seen more frequently among the travelers at the New Orleans airport.

Josey's neighbor, Kirby Falcon, routinely heads to Norway and the North Sea for Hydraulic Well Control, a drilling support company also based in Houma. Another man from Houma, John Triagle, oversees oil-rig crews for Halliburton Co. in the Far East. And Jeff Cetodal teaches Brazilians about Bilco technology that helps bring oil wells into production.

All had expected to finish their careers in the gulf. All now work overseas several months or more each year.

Josey is gone for up to four times a year, 28 days at a stretch. When he is overseas, he quadruples his usual weekly paycheck in Houma. But the work takes a toll on him and his family.

Overseas, many men work in such remote areas that they can call home no more than once a week, and their employers try to limit them to 15 minutes a call on scarce phone lines.

So many men from Houma and the small nearby cities of Thibodaux and Morgan City work overseas that their wives have formed small support groups to ease their lives as single mothers.

Josey's wife, Dana, belongs to a group that she and four local friends call the Oilfield Wives.

"Sometimes you just feel that the whole burden is on you," said Mrs. Josey, 35, lighting a cigarette. The mother of two sons, ages 4 and 8, said the boys tested her when their father was not around. "You have to be real tough like daddy," she said, looking at the two. "Then you have to be tender like mama."

Jamie Falcon, 23, says that when her 2-year-old son hears a plane overhead, he sometimes asks: "Is Daddy coming home?" Recently, her husband was home for two days before his schedule changed and he had to board a flight back to Norway. This time, he'll be gone for several months.

The changes have hit blue-collar workers and managers alike. Henley, Chevron's manager in Angola, is 50 years old and had worked his way up the corporate ladder to become manager of environment and safety in an area that includes the gulf.

But seven years ago, when Chevron decided to step up its exploration and production in Africa, it sent him to Angola. He recently left Houma for a 28-day stint there.

"After a few years, you get used to it," said his wife, Frances, who teaches piano and plays the organ at the First Baptist Church in Mandeville. Dorms and 12-Hour Shifts

The men adjust, too, but differently. In Angola, Henley works 12-hour shifts, six days a week, overseeing drilling and production platforms. He lives in a self-contained complex with dormitories that house 580 workers.

Josey has learned to work on rigs in temperatures that sink 40 degrees below zero. In the Tengiz oilfield of Kazakhstan, he works 12-hour shifts, communicating with the workers through translators.

He has widened his palate by eating local foods like pig lung soup, cooked by his Kazakh colleagues, but he stays close to the Americans.

"We sit at the same table," he said of his American co-workers from Mississippi, Texas and Oklahoma. "You have somebody to talk to."

In their efforts to cope, the Joseys have found some rewards. Mrs. Josey, for instance, has developed more of her own interests. She has set up a small workshop in her home where she makes colorful ceramic bowls and lamps.

But her boys get restless during the weeks of their father's absence, and when he returns she gives him three days to recover before handing them over to him. The rebonding is intense.

"It just means so much to see the boys," Josey said. And Dustin, who is 8, likes to pull the pay stub out of his father's shirt pocket and marvel that the amount on it can be as high as $1,200 a week.

The need to send workers overseas is unlikely to change anytime soon, even though a small recovery in drilling in the gulf is expected later this year.

Tucker closes sale of interests

SAN ANGELO — Tucker Drilling Co. Inc. has closed the sale of its interests in 35 producing oil and gas wells in Irion County, announced in June.

The sale was for cash in the amount of $981,000. It resulted in a gain of approximately $295,000 which will be recognized in results of operations for the three months ended June 30, 1994.

Tucker Drilling Co. Inc., a diversified energy company headquartered in San Angelo, is engaged in contract drilling and exploration and development of oil and natural gas. The company has 12 drilling rigs available for operation in Texas and Oklahoma, and has producing oil and gas wells and unproved oil and gas acreage, primarily in Texas.

Apache debt rating upgraded

CHICAGO — Duff and Phelps Credit Rating Co. has upgraded the senior notes of Apache Corp. to 'BBB+' (Triple-B-Plus) from 'BBB' (Triple-B). Approximately $175 million in debt securities are affected.

This upgrade recognizes Apache's ability to maintain solid financial protection measures despite volatile oil and natural gas prices and an operating strategy that can cause significant shifts in debt leverage. The company manages a fairly balanced oil and natural gas production mix and applies its operations expertise across a diverse geographic base. Apache's relatively low cash operating costs (which included production expense, overhead and financing costs) contribute to strong operating cash flow and help insulate the company from weak commodity prices. Financial and operating flexibility is further enhanced because the company operates, and thus directly controls, properties constituting over 75 percent of its production.

The rating also recognizes management's demonstrated ability to consistently increase reserves and production by following a low-to-moderate risk strategy of acquisition and exploitation of proved and probable reserves, largely in areas of existing comany expertise. Although this strategy has led to demands for cash which exceed internally generated funds, financial strength has been quickly restored through enhanced internal cash flow and measures such as sales of non-strategic assets and equity issuance. While we expect that acquisitions will continue to play an integral role in the company's growth strategy, the rating assumes management is committed longer term to maintaining a fixed-obligation ratio between 40 percent and 45 percent.

Texaco to cut 2,500 jobs, sell some producing properties

Asset sales and employee cuts announced Tuesday by Texaco will put approximately 120-160 Texaco jobs in the Midland Division at risk, but the actual number of jobs lost in the Permian Basin could be less if asset sales go as planned.

Jobs affected in the Midland Division will be spread over production districts at Big Spring, Hobbs, Levelland, Odessa, and Farmington, N.M., according to Bill Johnson, Midland Division manager for Texaco. He said there are a total of 835 employees in the division, with 315 employed in the Midland office.

Johnson said he would not know how many would be cut from the Midland office until the end of August.

Texaco announced Tuesday that it would sell approximately half of its U.S. producing properties and reduce its employees by 2,500 nationwide. Texaco, one of the nation's largest oil companies, already has eliminated 13 percent of its worldwide workforce over the past two years. A Texaco spokesman said the company had not yet determined how many job cuts will be through layoffs, attrition or early retirements. The reductions are intended to reduce overhead.

News of the Texaco restructuring follows an announcement by Exxon last week that it would downgrade its Mid-Continent Divison to a production district and reduce the number of jobs in Midland by 140 employees. It also follows an announcement by Mobil last week that it would cut 2,300 workers from its chemical operations.

"For the past several years we have been evaluating and rationalizing all our upstream and downstream assets in the U.S. so that we can shed or non-core assets and focus on core assets," Johnson said.

He said the Permian Basin is and will remain a core asset area for Texaco, and that the company would be selling about 200 of its non-core properties in order to concentrate on core assets in the basin. He said the sale would affect Texaco production in the basin by less than 10 percent, and should add to cash flow.

"These are properties that we have determined to have little upside potential to us, and we will sell them and redeploy the proceeds for upstream projects. I would not be surprised if we had an increase in spending and activity next year," Johnson added.

While 120-160 jobs are at risk because of the asset rationalization, Johnson said Texaco hoped to reduce the number of unemployed by selling to a buyer who would take all or most of the employees.

"We plan to lump all the Texaco properties nationwide into a single package, in the hopes that someone who needs the employees will buy it. We will certainly encourage this, but we cannot require it of a buyer."

Johnson said that the Mabee and Slaughter properties were core properties and would not be sold, but that Texaco would not use any of the sale proceeds to launch other enhanced oil recovery (EOR) projects. "The price of oil makes EOR uneconomical at this point," he said.

In making the announcement Tuesday, Texaco said it was shifting its focus from aging domestic production sites toward more promising oil and gas ventures here and abroad, including the North Sea, the Tarim Basin in China and Timan Pechora in Russia.

The White Plains, N.Y.-based company is also selling less profitable overseas operations, such as its heavy-oil production site in Colombia.

Texaco said it will report a $165 million charge in the second quarter for layoffs, property writedowns and other expenses, including $49.5 million set aside for the sale of its chemical unit to Huntsman Corp., completed in April.

Texaco stock was up $1.50 at $61.62½ in Tuesday morning trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Administration nears ending ban on Alaskan oil exports

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Clinton administration moved closer to recommending that the ban on exporting oil from the North Slope of Alaska be lifted, issuing a study that showed that such exports would create jobs and stimulate domestic production.

Hazel R. O'Leary, the secretary of energy, cautioned, however, that some trade issues would first have to be resolved before Congress could be asked to lift the 1973 ban.

The study by the Energy Department concluded that if the ban was lifted, Alaskan crude could be exported to Asian nations -- Japan, in particular -- creating thousands of jobs and stimulating new investment and production in Alaska and California. These gains could be attained without increasing gasoline prices on the West Coast, the report said.

Japan, which imports all its oil at the rate of about 4.38 million barrels a day, would be the most likely foreign customer of Alaskan crude, the report said.

"The energy and economic issues clearly compel lifting the ban," Mrs. O'Leary said.

Thursday's statements were the strongest yet from the secretary in favor of lifting the ban, which she described as an "economic anomaly" left over from the energy crisis of 1973. The administration has indicated in the past that it supports lifting the ban, and in a recent meeting with lawmakers from energy states, Clinton said he would favor ending the ban if trade issues could be resolved.

Ms. O'Leary said the administration would have to resolve whether the exported oil would continue to be shipped on American vessels, using American crews, as required by law. Such a requirement, aimed at preserving maritime jobs, could complicate attempts by the administration to ease trade restrictions with other nations.

The 1973 ban was included in the law authorizing the construction of the Alaskan pipeline and was aimed at cutting the nation's dependence on imported oil. Limiting the oil for domestic use was also a concession to environmentalists, who had opposed the pipeline.

But the chief effect of the ban, Thursday's report said, has been to provide California refiners with crude oil cheaper than oil on the world market. The deputy energy secretary, William H. White, said on Thursday that the ban created "a subsidy" for California refiners that had not been passed on to consumers.

Lifting the ban would raise Alaska crude prices to world market levels, which should attract investment to Alaska's oil fields, where production has been falling.

The Energy Department said it was concerned about the increasing loss of jobs in the domestic energy industry as many oil companies have been and are cutting back on domestic production and shifting investment into exploration abroad.

Lifting the ban is expected to help in particular small independent oil refiners in California, which buy crude on the open market.

Carol Currie, a spokesman for the California Independent Petroleum Association, a trade group, said that the smaller producers have lost about 32,000 jobs in the last nine years.

Some oil economists and California refiners have challenged the assumption that the price of crude would rise in California if the ban on exports from the North Slope of Alaska is lifted. They have argued that there is now little difference between the world price and prices for crude coming from California fields.

The Energy Department's study also found that no environmental problems would be created by lifting the ban. It noted that the Clinton administration remained firm in opposing exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

State agency adopts rules covering alternative fuels

AUSTIN (AP) — A state environmental agency adopted rules Wednesday that its chairman said gives Texas an ambitious pollution reduction program for motor vehicle fleets.

The Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission delayed until Dec. 31, 1996, a decision on whether private fleets and local governments in polluted areas could be required to use natural gas or other alternative fuels.

That decision will include a recommendation on whether reformulated gasoline and low-sulfur diesel should be added to the state's list of approved alternative fuels.

"We heard comments from some that reformulated gasoline should not be allowed and comments from others that some alternative fuels are cost prohibitive. This gives both us and the Legislature time to look at some hard evidence before making these decisions," said Commissioner Pam Reed.

Reformulated gasoline is gas that has been refined one more step to make it 20 percent cleaner than what consumers buy at the pump. Proponents of natural gas and propane say reformulated gasoline isn't clean-burning enough by state standards, which are higher than federal standards.

Chairman John Hall said, "Texas will still have one of the most aggressive alternative fuels programs in the country, and this will allow more time for that program to be revisited by the Legislature if they choose and (be) fine-tuned."

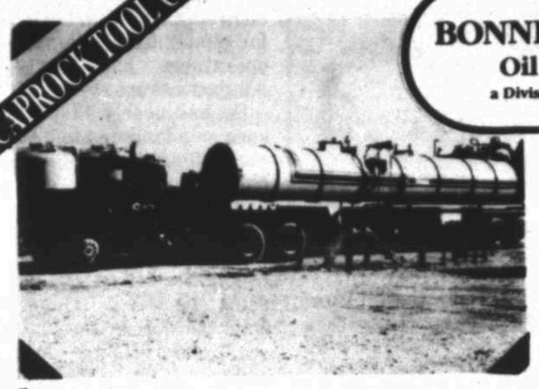

Four parts of the state are considered "nonattainment zones," where air quality is generally considered poor. They are El Paso, Beaumont-Port Arthur, Houston and Dallas-Fort Worth, officials said.

Under the rules, approved 3-0, the natural resources commission:

- Delayed until Dec. 31, 1996, making a decision on whether an emissions reduction is achieved from use of various fuels, including reformulated gasoline and low-sulfur diesel.
- Ordered a study by an independent firm on acquiring and operating alternatively fueled vehicles.
- Preserved state requirements for school districts with 50 vehicles or more, transit authorities and state fleets to convert to natural gas, propane and other alternative fuels beginning in 1994.
- Required that new purchases after Sept. 1, 1998 by those fleets meet federal low-emission vehicle standards.
- Said that, in new purchases after Sept. 1, 1998, local government and private fleets of 15 vehicles or more, plus small school fleets of 15 to 49 vehicles, must meet the low-emission standards using the fuel of choice.
- As an alternative to purchase requirements, said fleet operators could comply by making 30 percent of their total fleet meet the low-emission standards by Sept. 1, 1998; 50 percent by 2000 and 90 percent by 2002.

NAME DROPPING

Carleton

Green

Gresham

A.J. "TOBY" CARLETON, a Midland geologist, has assumed the presidency of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists and will lead the association's Executive Committee for 1994-95.

Carleton is president of Tocor Exploration and served last year as president-elect of the AAPG. He was chairman of the AAPG House of Delegates in 1984-85, representing that body on the Executive Committee.

Another Midlander, WILLARD GREEN, has assumed the presidency of the AAPG's Division of Professional Affairs. An independent geologist, he will lead the AAPG's largest division of over 3,800, which certifies petroleum geologists and deals with other matters affecting the profession.

Other AAPG officers include EUGENE F. "BUD" REID of Santa Barbara, Ca., president-elect; STEWART CHUBER, Schulenburg, Texas, vice president; LEE T. BILLINGSLEY, San Antonio, treasurer; and ED W. HEATH, Dallas, chairman of the House of Delegates.

JIM L. GRESHAM has been named senior vice president, western hemisphere, of Atlas Wireline Services, a division of Western Atlas Inc. He will oversee operations in both North and South America and will be based in Houston.

RANDALL K. CLICK has joined Hugoton Energy Corp. of Wichita, Kansas, as manager of land and contracts. He will be responsible for managing the company's land operations and for contract administration.

He has nearly 15 years experience as a landman and various aspects of management and lease acquisition efforts for domestic oil and gas companies, primarily in South Texas, the Permian Basin and Mid-Continent areas of the United States. Before joining Hugoton, he was a senior landman with Arco Oil & Gas Co. for three years and worked as district manager for TXO Production Corp.

Mobil Oil executive B.J. WHITE has joined Jofree Corp. as president.

He began his career in the industry as a reservoir engineer with Atlantic Richfield Co., working for major companies such as Amoco Oil Corp., Union Carbide Corp., Ashland Oil, Superior Oil Co. and Mobil.

Jofree Corp. is a Houston-based information services company specializing in the analysis of economic, marketing and technical trends for the natural gas and energy industries.

Conoco, Energen form partnership

HOUSTON (AP) — Conoco has joined an Alabama company to develop natural gas from underground coal beds.

Conoco officials said they had signed an agreement June 22 with Energen Corp. of Birmingham, Ala. to share expertise and experience in hopes of improving their existing coal-bed methane projects and pursuing additional investments.

Houston-based Conoco, the energy subsidiary of DuPont, has nearly 1,000 coal-methane wells worldwide, said Eric Miller, a Conoco project director.

In the United States, Conoco is producing methane from coal beds in the San Juan Basin in New Mexico and in Virginia, he said.

Energen operates nearly 1,000 coal-bed methane wells in Alabama, said Julie Ryland, an Energen spokeswoman.

Taurus Exploration, Energen's oil and gas exploration and production subsidiary, will provide Conoco with consultation and training. The company expects to receive about $1.2 million from Conoco over the next two years.

Extracting methane from coal is a unconventional way to produce natural gas. Although all underground coal contains methane, it's not always economically feasible to extract.

The gas is held on the surface of the coal by water. The methane is released as the water is pumped. Extraction involves fracturing the coal formation so the cracks can serve as a conduit for the water and gas, Ryland said.

Originally, the purpose of extracting methane from coal was to get rid of the gas, which is dangerous to miners. The business of capturing it as a fuel took off in the late 1980s when the federal government started offering a tax credit.

Vietnam will host trade show for U.S. oil, gas companies

RICHARDSON — In the aftermath of the recent lifting of the 19-year-old United States trade embargo on Vietnam, U.S. companies have focused their attention on this country's burgeoning market where business opportunities abound. This is especially true for the oil and gas industry, one of Vietnam's stated priorities. As such, PetroVietnam '95 - scheduled March 1-3, 1995, in Ho Chi Minh City - represents an excellent marketing opportunity.

"Vietnam is one of the world's last remaining undeveloped markets," said Vu Van Mao, director of PetroVietnam's Petroleum Information Center, who addressed an exhibitor "briefing" at the Offshore Technology Conference (OTC) in Houston, May 4. "Over the past few years, many Asian and European nations have been working to lock in market share for their products with many U.S. companies watching from the outside. The U.S. now must play a quick game of catch-up."

"A recent survey of 110 U.S. companies projects that during these first two years (following the embargo), trade and investment opportunities in Vietnam will top $2.6 billion and more than $8 billion over the next five years," said Liz Hitchcock, vice president of international sales/Americas for Reed Exhibition Companies. "American companies have much to gain from the re-establishment of U.S.-Vietnam trade relations."

"Opportunities to launch new expositions (in Vietnam), however, continue to be limited to organizers with close ties to the Vietnamese government," observed Douglas Ducate, associate executive director of the Society of Petroleum Engineers (SPE). "It is not an overstatement to say that, in Vietnam, government contacts are of the utmost importance in dealing with emerging markets such as oil and gas."

As the official sponsor for PetroVietnam '95, SPE, along with exhibition organizer Reed Exhibition, have far-reaching presences in Vietnam. SPE is in the process of opening a local chapter/section in Ho Chi Minh City, while Reed has been organizing trade events in Vietnam since 1987.

SPE's sponsorship of the 1995 event will ensure a high-caliber representation from the industry worldwide, Ducate noted. "It is significant to recognize that PetroVietnam '95 is the only international trade exhibition co-organized by the state-owned and operated PetroVietnam in Ho Chi Minh City," Hitchcock said. In fact, PetroVietnam '95 is the second presentation of Vietnam's International Oil & Gas Exploration & Production Technology Trade Exhibition. The inaugural event in 1993 provided participating exhibitors the opportunity to market directly to 5,000 business professionals.

The 1993 event also attracted more than 190 leading companies from the service, supply, and manufacturing sectors of the worldwide industry, with some 16 countries having company representation. Amoco Production, BHP Petroleum, British Gas, Dresser Industries, Mobil Oil, Shell Exploration, and U.S. Steel were among participating companies who took advantage of this special opportunity to penetrate the Vietnam market.

The conference's supporting organizations - the Ministry of Heavy Industry and the Vietnam National Petroleum Import-Export Corp. (PETROLIMEX) - have indicated the specific products and services that will be receiving purchasing priority. These include offshore exploration and services; drilling and production technology; subsea and offshore platform technology; pipeline products and technology; pumps and valves; oilfield maintenance; engineering and consultancy services; construction management and technology; telecommunications; paint and anti-corrosion products; power generation, electrical, and lighting equipment; construction management and technology; and refinery technologies.

During his OTC presentation, Mao confirmed industry reports that indicate almost all of Vietnam's petroleum fields are either unexplored or under-explored. Several oil and gas discoveries have been made, namely Bach Ho, Rong and Dai Hung. However, at present, Vietnam only produces oil from Bach Ho, Mao said.

"PetroVietnam's oil and gas development goals, set forth by the Prime Minister, are ambitious," Mao said. "To achieve these goals, the need for outside assistance is real and fundamental."

Among many objectives, Mao said the national oil company seeks to:

— significantly increase the annual oil and gas production by the year 2000;

— determine the onshore and offshore oil and gas potential of Vietnam through advanced investigation techniques;

— build an industry infrastructure, including a refinery, LPG processing plant, and field to shore pipelines from known offshore fields;

— bring the oil center cities of Vung Tau, Da Nang and Hai Phong into this "national" infrastructure to provide service support;

— construct offshore drilling rigs, production platforms and oil and gas pipelines;

— support an enhance the operation of Vietnam-based research institutions to apply worldwide technological advances in all spheres of national oil and gas industry activities;

INTEGRATED GEOPHYSICAL AND GEOLOGICAL TRENDS APPLIED TO GAS EXPLORATION IN THE WESTERN DELAWARE BASIN: The purpose of this course is to present the geologist or geophysicist unfamiliar with the western margin of the Delaware Basin with a number of concepts in data processing and play trends, in order to aid their exploration effort. The course will examine an integrated geological and geophysical approach to exploration. While the specific area of study is the western flank of the Delaware Basin, the techniques and concepts discussed have broad application. A number of seismic and subsurface structural and stratigraphic play trends will be examined and discussed. Fee $40; Dr. Richard J. Erdlac, Douglas B. Swift, and Dr. James J. Reeves, instructors; Thursday, 7-10 p.m.

For registration or further information call 683-2832.

MEETINGS

Desk and Derrick Club meets Thursday

The Midland Desk and Derrick Club will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club. The meeting will begin with social hour at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Daniel T. Jefferson, who will speak on "Visualizing Solids Transport in High-Angle Wells."

Reservations can be made by calling 682-5371.

Small Business center plans seminars

The Small Business Development Center of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will hold two seminars on July 18 and July 19 at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, Highway 191 and FM 1788.

The first seminar is entitled "Small Business Hunan Resource Management" and is designed to help the small business owner keep up with equal opportunity laws and other concerns in managing personnel. It will be held July 18 from 1 to 5 p.m. Cost is $25.

The second seminar is entitled "Salesmanship in the Retail Environment." It is designed to help small retailers improve customer service and salesmanship. It will be held July 19 from 1 to 5 p.m. Cost is $20.

STRETCH Your Dough

Canned biscuits can be so much more

The old saying about great things coming from humble beginnings (mighty oaks from little acorns, and so on) was never more true than when it is applied to the humble canned refrigerator biscuit. How many college students, young just-out-of-the-nest adults and kitchen illiterates have used canned biscuits as an easy way of keeping themselves fed.

But when the old kitchen creativity kicks in, cooks find themselves dreaming up other, more unique ways to used canned biscuits — after all, already-prepared dough can be molded and shaped into a myriad of other dishes.

Donuts

Probably everybody's mother has used canned biscuits to make quick, easy donuts. All you have to do is open the can and separate the biscuits; cut out a hole in each one (you can make donut holes too); and fry. Drain on paper towels. While the donuts are cooling off a little bit, put some powdered sugar in a small paper bag; put still-warm donuts in the bag (preferably one at a time), and shake. Or you can make a glaze using powdered sugar, a little butter or margarine, a touch of liquid such as milk or water, and a favorite flavor (lemon or vanilla, for example), and top each warm donut with the glaze. Either way, the children will be pleased, and the mess will be minimum.

Cinnamon Rolls

Even homemade cinnamon rolls can be made easily, thanks to canned biscuit dough. Open the can and remove the biscuits onto a floured surface. Roll all biscuits into one large, flat, oblong piece of dough. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon; dot with butter. Roll up lengthwise, and cut roll to form individual cinnamon rolls. Place rolls in buttered baking dish and bake at 350 degrees until tops just turn brown. Drizzle with glaze if desired.

Sopapillas

Hungry for Mexican food but don't want to make a big fuss? Sopapillas, or fried bread, can be made easily out of canned biscuit dough. Open can and separate biscuits. Roll each out into individual circles; cut each in half. Fry in deep fat fryer or skillet. Drain on paper towels. Serve hot. Some people like them topped with honey, others prefer them coated with cinnamon and sugar.

Pizza

Canned biscuit dough can be used to make both regular-sized and individual pizza crusts. For a regular pizza, open the can and remove the biscuits. Roll them all together to form one large round, flat crust; place on pizza pan or cookie sheet. Top with pizza sauce, cheese and any of your favorite toppings, such as hamburger meat, pepperoni, sausage, peppers, anchovies, mushrooms, onions, pineapple or anything your heart desires. For individual pizzas, roll out each biscuit separately to form individual crusts, and top as desired. Bake in 350 degree oven until crust is golden brown and top is bubbly.

Monkey Bread

Children seem to like monkey bread too, which is wonderful since it is so easy to make. Open a can of biscuit dough and separate the biscuits. Tear each one into six or eight bits (or more if you like). Roll or toss the bits of dough in a cinnamon-sugar combination and bake in buttered baking pan at 350 degrees until the tops just turn brown. Drizzle with glaze if desired.

When it comes to ingenuity, nobody beats the Girl Scouts — which is why it should come as no surprise that that illustrious organization has a variety of recipes for using canned biscuit dough when cooking over a camp fire, including the following four:

Chili Skillet

2 small onions, chopped
3 cans (No. 303) tomatoes
2 teaspoons chili powder
2 cans refrigerator biscuits
3 cans ranch style beans
2 teaspoons salt

Cook meat and onion together until browned. Drain fat. Add salt, chili powder, tomatoes and beans. Layer biscuits over top. Cook until biscuits are done. Use Dutch oven with lid. Serves 24 around the campfire. (Although the recipe doesn't say, you could easily make this recipe at home on the stove.)

Bread on a Stick

1 can refrigerator biscuits
¼ cup margarine
Sugar and cinnamon to taste

Knead biscuits and wrap each around wood or metal stick that can be placed over a fire. Roast biscuit over fire until baked. Dip first in margarine and then in sugar/cinnamon combination.

Apple Cobbler

4 cups apples, sliced
1⅓ cups sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
12 refrigerator rolls

Mix sugar and cinnamon with sliced apples and cook in saucepan until tender, using just enough water to prevent burning. Put cooked apples into two shallow pie plates. Arrange six biscuits on each pie. (You may need to flatten biscuits to make them cover the pie.) Set each on sheet of foil, leaving half of foil exposed. Fold exposed portion on three edges up and over pie pan to form small oven. Set either on the ground or on rocks before a hot blazing fire. The portion of the pie under the foil will turn brown first from reflected heat. Turn pie within the foil to brown evenly. Bake 15-20 minutes. Serves 12. (Again, this can probably be made easily in an oven. Instead of baking on foil in front of a fire, try baking in a 350 degree oven until top is brown.)

Open Fire Dessert

⅓ can water
1 cup sugar
½ teaspoon lemon juice
1 can refrigerator biscuits

Mix peaches with water, sugar and lemon juice. Pour into large skillet. Place 1 can refrigerator biscuits over top. Brush with butter; sprinkle with mix of ¼ cup sugar and 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Cover and simmer over hot coals for about 20 minutes. (Alternate preparation could be over burner at home.)

These are just a few of the ways canned biscuits can be used in home (or camp) cooking. Now it's up to you to create a few of your own.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Class reunion is fun event

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

If you have a high school class reunion coming up this year or anytime in the coming years, we strongly advise you to attend. We recently returned from a gathering of the Class of '54 in the heartland of America (El Dorado, Kansas, to be exact), probably the most fun of any we have attended. We don't know if this stems from the fact we have all mellowed, or because no one can remember what really happened in high school, but old rivalries and the existence of cliques have all melted away, and everyone is genuinely glad to see one another again.

McKnight-Harrison

But first of all, you must be prepared to accept some realities. Note that there is nothing wrong by glancing down at the name tags of one's fellow classmates of yore. You will soon learn that over the ensuing years, your classmates have changed a great deal (you, of course, have not)! Also, don't be so vain as to go without your glasses. They will be necessary for everything from reading the name tags to distinguishing the chips from the dips at the parties.

And if the D.J. insists on playing "The Bunny Hop" at the reunion dinner-dance, don't humiliate yourself by dropping out. Prove you have the same stamina you did at the Senior Prom, even if it is killing you.

It is especially nice if someone in the class now owns a restaurant (as in my case, one of the married couples does). They will invite the entire class to their establishment for get-togethers between the main events, and everyone will go, whether hungry or not, just to "hang out" together a little longer.

If one of the mixers takes place at the Senior Citizens Center (as ours did), do not take it as a sign you are growing older. Consider the fact it is a busy weekend in town and therefore, the only available facility.

If you are asked to co-emcee a mock school assembly (as I was), do not spend hours writing a prepared script or lying awake at night worrying that you will make a fool of yourself (as I did). Just go with the flow! You'll end up tossing the script over your shoulder as "the bad boy" of the class (your co-announcer) threatens to tell jokes better left untold, use props (such as a mechanical mouse) to scar the performers and in general, upstage you. You'll find you are a better ad-libber than you ever thought, and the gay repartee you so laboriously penned was unnecessary.

Now that we had a perfectly wonderful time reliving the past, it is back to the future and business as usual. The curtain has come down on another successful reunion, but the memories linger on, and we will continue to remember the good ole days when we were the El Dorado High School Wildcat Fans!

WORD HAS BEEN received here that Elecia Osadchuk has been selected to represent Midland at the 40th annual Jewel Ball Week of the Austin Women's Symphony League. As a duchess on the 1994 Visiting Jewel Court, she has been named The Sapphire of Midland.

Jewel Ball Week has been set for Sept. 10-17 in the Capital City. This year's theme is Rachmaninoff's Russia, bringing the grandeur and mystery of the Czarist country to Austin. Special events, all leading up the Jewel Ball on Sept. 17, will include the Soiree Dansante, a black tie event for high school students; a fall fashion show by Julian Gold's San Antonio store, and the Austin Symphony's opening concert of the season.

The daughter of Grace and Walter Osadchuk, Elecia is a student at the University of Mississippi, where she is a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority. A 1993 graduate of Lee High School, she departed July 1 for Germany to participate in a summer study program.

THE MIDLAND COUNTY Republican Women honored Billie (Mrs. James) Ross for her tireless efforts to the party at The Tribute to Women Brunch recently in Fort Worth. The event was held prior to the opening of the Republican Party's state convention.

Sen. Phil Gramm presented Billie with a yellow rose, and his wife, Wendy Gramm, gave her an award certificate and pin.

Billie began her political volunteer work in the early 1960s while living in Dallas, as she campaigned door-to-door for Barry Goldwater. After moving to Midland, she joined the Midland County Republican Women, serving in many capacities, including president in 1989. She is now the Political Action Committee (PAC) chairperson.

Billie was Midland County co-chair for Kay Bailey Hutchison's successful 1993 special election campaign for the U.S. Senate and continues as Kay's county co-chair.

In 1992, she was county co-chair of George Bush's presidential campaign and was an alternate to the 1992 national convention. She has been a delegate to the GOP's state and county conventions, as well as those of the Texas Federation of Republican Women.

Billie continues to work in the Midland headquarters for local, state and national candidates.

Guide children to healthier diets

By Susan A. Merkner
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Unlike cars, children don't come equipped with instruction manuals listing recommendations for regular service. So when kids are stalling and balking about food at the kitchen table, who ya gonna call?

It's considerable consolation that even the experts in this area — registered dietitians who make their living studying the kinds and quantities of food needed for a healthy lifestyle and planning meals and diets for others — can have just as much trouble feeding their kids as do the rest of us. But they have learned a few tricks and are willing to share them.

Turner has rejected the old notion of three meals a day and no snacks in between. Instead, Kelly tends to eat every two hours.

"She doesn't eat very much at one time and you have to get her while she's hungry," her mother noted.

To appeal to her daughter, Turner serves Kelly's food on a snack tray, with small portions of her daughter's favorites: fruit, cheese, cottage cheese, crackers, yogurt, unsweetened cereal, 100 percent fruit juice or skim milk. Turner strives to include a few items from each food group on each snack tray.

The federal government's nutrition recommendations call for two to four servings of fruit per day and three to five servings of vegetables daily, but Turner said it's fine to use fruits and vegetables interchangeably. However, parents should try to serve their children fruits that are high in vitamins A and C and rich in fiber, such as kiwi fruit.

Kelly won't eat any vegetables, her mother reported, but enjoys drinking V-8 Juice. She also still likes eating baby food out of jars, especially apricots and other fruits.

For protein, Kelly appreciates an open-face peanut butter sandwich with a design on it made out of raisins, or low-fat, pork-based hot dogs.

Beth Senne-Duff, chairwoman of the nutrition program at the College of Nursing and Sciences at Incarnate Word College, advises parents to offer their offspring a wide variety of foods, including lots of fruits and vegetables. But don't insist that a child eat something if he doesn't want it, she warned.

"For young children especially, eating often becomes a power struggle," said Senne-Duff, the mother of two sons, Alan, 2½, and Michael, 3 weeks.

When introducing new foods, it's often best to have the child help prepare the food first, Senne-Duff said. Depending on the child's age, he can help stir, add spices or even chop.

Letting kids help in the kitchen at an early age also can be beneficial later, when they're older and can start some food preparations on their own while their parents are at work. It also boosts their self-esteem, Senne-Duff said.

Families should decide together what snack foods they will make available at home, she said.

Items such as cookies and chips, which are not very nutritious, can be purchased occasionally but should not be available all the time, she said. On the other hand, if they are banned from the home, children may seek them out elsewhere and will never learn how to make sensible food choices later in life.

Anita Branstetter, a registered dietitian at Methodist Hospital, has watched her three daughters' tastes evolve over the years.

Now 17, 14 and 11 years old, the Branstetter girls have learned to make good decisions about food because they have been given options, their mother said.

One of the challenges of raising children is coping with the food-related idiosyncracies they develop over the years.

Teen-agers, especially girls, become very conscious of their appearance and fret a good deal about what they eat, Branstetter said.

She cautioned against limiting calorie intakes for children. A 13-year-old who stays reasonably active, for example, easily can take in 3,000 to 4,000 calories daily without becoming overweight, she said.

Here are some healthy snack tips offered by registered dietitians, arranged according to food group.

■ Breads/cereal/rice/pasta: Snack on unsweetened cereal, dry or with low-fat or skim milk. Microwave a baked potato; top it with vegetables or cheese. Select fat-free crackers or graham crackers.

■ Vegetables: Leave a bowl of cut-up raw vegetables in the refrigerator.

Use vitamin-rich red leaf, romaine and other dark green lettuces. Add alfalfa sprouts and coarsely shredded carrots to a sandwich.

■ Fruits: Make frozen fruit pops using 100 percent fruit juice. Wash and freeze grapes for a cool treat. Add fresh fruit or drained, juice-packed canned fruit to sugar-free flavored gelatin.

■ Milk/yogurt/cheese: Use nonfat yogurt as a dip for vegetables or fruits, or as a topping for baked potatoes; add spices or picante sauce to plain yogurt for added flavor. Select low-fat cheeses, part-skim mozzarella, ricotta and cottage cheeses.

■ Meat/poultry/fish/dry beans/eggs/nuts: For a sandwich filling, use tuna, chicken, turkey, egg salad or peanut butter stirred with raisins or other chopped dried fruit. Stir up a nut and fruit trail mix.

■ Fats/oils/sweets: Fig bars, gingersnaps, vanilla wafers and animal crackers are among the best choices in cookies. Air-popped popcorn, pretzels and fat-free tortilla chips are reasonable picks for crunchy snacks.

Encourage children (and adults!) to drink six to eight glasses of water per day, especially during hot summer months. Don't let toddlers fill up on juice or milk before meals.

Following are some recipes for healthy snacks. These recipes have not been tested by the San Antonio Express-News.

FRESH FRUIT DRINK

4 scoops vanilla frozen yogurt
1 banana
½ cup strawberries

Put all ingredients in blender and process. For a thicker consistency, use less milk. Makes 2 servings.

Note: Any variation of fruit will work.

TV TREAT

4 cups round oat cereal
1 cup thin pretzel sticks
1 cup salted peanuts
¼ teaspoon onion or garlic powder

Place oil, cereal, pretzels and peanuts in pan. Add seasoning and cook 5 minutes over medium heat. Cool. Makes 6 cups.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Insects can be beneficial or harmful

By Deborah A. Benge

If it's not searing heat and wind taking out your plants, it's bugs. Insects can do lots of damage when it comes to cultivated plants. There are several steps that need to be taken when it comes to critters:

Benge

■ Correctly identify pest and determine if it is harmful or beneficial.

■ If harmful, determine whether it warrants control.

■ If control is necessary, look at all the control options (cultural practices, mechanical control, biological control and when necessary, chemical).

Below are a few questions that come from the public this time of year dealing with insect pests.

Question: What are those huge wasps that have taken up residence in my yard? I think their nest is in my side yard, in the ground. Are they a genetic mutation, killer bees or what?

Answer: Undoubtable, you are referring to the cicada killer wasp, a solitary wasp marked with black, reddish brown and yellow markings. This is the largest wasp in North America with an average length of one and a half inches, but often two inches. They nest in the ground where females lay their eggs. Sometimes several females will share the same network of tunnels. Shortly after cicadas (commonly called locusts) appear, you will begin to see cicada killer which prey on the cicadas, using them to provide food for their young.

The question in everyone's mind is, yes, but do they sting? The males can't sting and the females won't unless absolutely forced into it. Considered a beneficial insect because they reduce the cicada populations, this insect should be left alone.

Q: On my roses there are funny little crescent shapes cut out of the leaves. I've looked but can't see anything that might be doing this damage. What could it be?

A: The pest is actually a beneficial — an alfalfa leaf cutter bee. These small black bees cut perfect little half moon shapes out of the newest most tender leaves of plants like roses, redbuds and crape myrtles. The leaves are put in the nest to make provisions for the young. If you are watching at the right time of day, you can see a bee cut with great precision little circles of leaf tissue and fly off with it.

There are no recommended control measures for this bee for two good reasons: one, the insect is considered a beneficial pollinator and, two, it doesn't ingest the leaf tissue, so anything you might spray with would have little effect. You might want to select plants with a stiffer, hairier, less desirable textured leaf. For example, leaf cutter bee is less likely to cut circles from a Mexican or Texas "Oklahoma" redbud like they will from an Eastern redbud due to the stiffer leaf texture. Roses would probably be the same — an antique rose with a coarser textured leaf will probably be bothered less than some of the hybrid teas.

Q: I see June bugs at the lights at night. Is it time to treat for grub worms?

A: About the second week of July until early August is a good time to treat if there's a problem which warrants control of this pest. Grub worms are grossly and incorrectly over treated. This type of irresponsible use of chemicals can only produce negative results in our environment.

If you keep a very lush, green, rapidly growing lawn of Bermuda, hybrid Bermuda or fescue grass you might be a candidate for a damaging grub attack. Females select lush lawns with moist soil to lay their eggs in. They have to dig so it only makes sense that lawns that are watered frequently would be more likely to have a problem.

Check your lawn in several locations by digging up a one-square-foot of sod, slicing it just under the majority of roots and searching for small white grub larva. If you find four or more in a sample square, you might want to consider treatment. If the other sample areas don't have that number of larva, it would be best to isolate the treatment to where the problem exists.

If you treat, water heavily, apply the treatment and follow with a good irrigation. Watering heavily beforehand will bring the grubs to the soil surface to get air so when the insecticide is applied and watered in the grubs will be located in the same vicinity and control will be better.

Q: My pine tree has dead spots in the branch tips. Four to five inches of the branch ends are dead and I have seen an orangy-appearing worm inside the branch. What is this and what can I do?

A: The problem is a pine tip moth. A moth lays eggs on the growing points of pines, the eggs hatch and the larvae burrow into the stem tissue feeding, eventually pupating, and emerging as an adult moth. While in this destructive larval form, its feeding can kill the new growth.

Afghan pine, Pinus eldarica, is probably the hardest hit and most susceptible pine to this pest, but it also the most tolerant pine of this pest damage.

Controlling the pest is very difficult. Cover sprays of a recommended pesticide must be made on a timely basis. April 1, June 1, July 15 and Sept. 1 are the spray dates recommended to help control PTM. Dimethoate and acephate are two of the pesticides recommended. If you cut infested tips off the tree, collect them in a sealed plastic bag to be disposed of.

Q: Someone told me I've got aphids in my pecan tree and I must have it sprayed. Since the tree is large and would be difficult to spray, what can I do?

A: You can depend on a few aphids each July, August and September in your pecan trees. Their presence is made known by the excrement that floats down on the leaves and on anything below — cars, patios, porches and of course your favorite outdoor chaise lounge. It's called honeydew and it is shiny, wet-looking and sticky. It can make a summertime mess for you that is quite aggravating.

Control is not easy. There are few pesticides that will control the critters and coverage of large trees is very difficult for home gardeners. If it can be ignored, that is the best option — the aphids themselves don't do that much damage. If it can't be, try using an insecticidal soap on the tree. If it is very large, you'll need to get a professional pest control operator to do it for you.

If you are planning to plant a pecan tree, don't plant it close to the drive, patio, entrances or other areas where the honeydew will be a big bother. You might consider a "Pawnee" variety because it is showing some aphid resistance.

Q: My grape vine has some leaves that look brown and eventually drop off and there is something eating on the leaves that makes the leaf look lacy. What's going on?

A: There's probably two problems. One is a leaf hopper which begins to feed on the backside of the oldest leaves causing them to slowly turn brown and drop. These insects are very small and fast so they aren't easy to hold down to look at. The damage will appear as a stippling of leaf color and many times you can see transparent shed skins or nymphs (immature) on the back side of the leaf.

The other problem I would suspect to be the Western Grape Skeletonizer, a worm that has yellow, black and blue stripes around their bodies. These feed in side by side fashion on the backside of grape and Virginia creeper leaves. They eat only the good green part of the leaf, leaving behind the clear epidermal tissue — thus the name skeletonizer.

Control both easily with carbaryl dust or spray. The WGS can be controlled with Bt, which is an organic pesticide that controls worms and caterpillars only.

They're out there, quietly doing their thing. Keep insect pests in check by making daily visits throughout the garden, getting insects correctly identified, evaluate the situation and if necessary, control with a recommended pesticide. For more information on these and other insect pests, be sure to contact your local county Extension office. In Midland, the address is 2445 E. Business Loop 20 in Midland, telephone 687-1351.

Life devoted to criminal activity

WALTHAM, England (AP) — Plotting, conspiring and larceny were the life work of Thomas Dangerfield (1650-1685). He began by robbing his farmer father and went on to coining counterfeit currency and serving prison terms.

Boldly, he tried to accuse the Duke of Monmouth of involvement in a false Presbyterian plot against the throne.

Proved a liar, Dangerfield then claimed to have discovered a Catholic plot against Charles II. He made other charges against the Duke of York, the Countess of Powis and the Earl of Peterborough.

He was finally tried for libel and in 1685 was sentenced to be pilloried for two days, to be whipped from Aldgate to Newgate and later from Newgate to Tyburn.

On the way, Dangerfield was struck in the eye with a cane by barrister Robert Francis and died from the blow.

WHAT SHOULD YOU EXPECT FROM A "CHILD-CENTERED" PRESCHOOL?

Research has shown that children attending a "child-centered" preschool program demonstrate the following attributes:

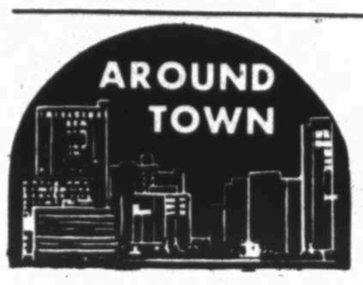

- Enhanced verbal ability
- Appropriate social skills when interacting with peers and adults
- Low levels of aggression
- A lively curiosity towards new situations and experiences
- An acceptance of people different from themselves, either physically, socially, or culturally
- Strengthened motor skills, fine and gross
- Confidence in his/her own ability to learn
- Positive self-image

DEAR ABBY

Frisky sailors abounded that day on Times Square

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: An update on that now-famous picture that appeared in Life magazine. It showed an unidentified sailor impulsively kissing a nurse in Times Square on V-J Day, marking the end of our war with Japan. Joseph G. Chrenko of Palm Desert, Calif., sent a clipping of that picture taken from an out-of-print publication titled "Memories."

Van Buren

The following caption appeared beside it:

"August 14, 1945: When nurse Edith Shain, 27, heard on the radio at New York's Doctors' Hospital that World War II was over, she jumped on the subway to Times Square. No sooner had she gotten there than 'someone grabbed me and kissed me. He held me for a long, long time. It was a lovely kiss,' she remembers. 'I really enjoyed it. The sailor was bubbling over, he was so happy.'"

Edith Shain (now Cullens) has three grown sons. She's retired and lives in California, and says she's still in touch with Alfred Eisenstaedt, the photographer who made her briefly famous. (He is now 95 and still at Life magazine.) "He's a darling man," she says. "That photo has enriched my life. I got to come back to New York; I got to be a celebrity for a few minutes. I think it's fantastic."

I have been deluged with letters from readers who claim either to be the sailor in that picture, or know who he was. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: You asked if anybody knew the name of the sailor who was photographed on V-J Day kissing a nurse in her white uniform and cap. The photographer was Alfred Eisenstaedt. The sailor was Bill Swicegood. His cousin, Beatrice Shipp Nunn, was a friend of mine in Lafayette, Ga. She told me about this many years ago, and showed me the copy of Life magazine in which it appeared. — ELIZABETH O'NEAL DWINDELL

DEAR ABBY: I was told that the sailor pictured in Life magazine on V-J Day in 1945 was Walker Irving of Portland, Maine. He telephoned his mother to tell her that his picture had been taken in Times Square, and it would soon appear in Life magazine. — A NEIGHBOR OF THE IRVINGS

DEAR ABBY: In response to the letter concerning the sailor kissing the nurse on V-J Day: I was that sailor!

I was stationed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. While celebrating V-J Day in Times Square, I noticed a photographer headed my way. I knew that in order to be photographed, I had to do something dramatic, so I grabbed a nurse, bent her over and kissed her. The photographer said, "This is going to be a great picture, which will be published!" He took our names, and we departed, going our separate ways.

Years later, after it was published in Life, I wrote to Alfred Eisenstaedt, telling him I knew the identity of the sailor. I received a letter in return saying that others had made the same claim. — THEODORE NICHOLAS PHAKOS

DEAR ABBY: The name of the sailor kissing the nurse is George Mendosa. His home was Providence, R.I. I don't have the source of this information, but I wrote his name down in a book I have kept all these years. — PAUL DOUGLAS, PLANTATION, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: The unknown kisser in that famous Life magazine picture was Seaman James Medlin of the U.S.S. Enterprise. I was dating him at the time.

Jimmy is now deceased, but he has a son living in Dallas. I hope this is helpful. — HELEN RUSSELL, BALCH SPRINGS, TEXAS

Art gallery in former distillery

FECAMP, France (AP) — One of the world's most unusual art galleries is housed here in a 19th-century distillery.

The Palais Benedictine was erected in the 1800s by art patron and distiller Alexandre Le Grand as both a distillery for Benedictine and B & B liqueurs and a museum to house Le Grand's huge art collection.

This includes antiques, ivories, statuaries, religious artifacts and numerous contemporary artworks. The gallery hosts about 140,000 visitors yearly.

To honor the 50th anniversary of D-Day, the gallery is currently featuring a display by American artists such as Lichtenstein, Calder, Warhol, Noland and Basquiat.

AT WIT'S END

TV covers too much

By Erma Bombeck

It was called the most riveting television in history. About 75 million viewers thought so as they watched the car carrying O.J. Simpson on a tour of the L.A. freeways from heaven. They were kinder and gentler highways than most remembered, where cars pulled over to let you by and a dozen police cruisers followed to make sure you arrived home safely.

Bombeck

In the lower right-hand corner of the TV screen the fifth game of the NBA finals between the New York Knicks and the Houston Rockets was being played out.

Add to this drama, two people in Phoenix (my husband and me) going nuts trying to follow it all at the same time.

It was a lot like those beer commercials where the women want to watch one event on TV and the men want to watch another, so they end up with luge/bowling or sumo wrestling/diving competition. This was car chase/NBA basketball.

"Would you listen to those fans? They're really fired up," said my husband.

"From New York?"

"No, the ones lining the freeway and the overpasses waving to O.J's car."

"The problem is he has no defense," I complained.

"O.J.?"

"No, Patrick Ewing."

"Look, they're accelerating," he said.

"They'd better. There's only four seconds left on the shot clock."

"I'm talking about the getaway car."

"I hate to see them dig a hole for themselves. It's going to be tough for them," I said.

"O.J.?"

"Houston."

As the evening went on, the spectacle, which took on the look of a "Chips" rerun, got bigger, and the basketball picture got smaller. The players looked like trolls. The station's logo was covering the time left in the game, and at the same time an announcer was saying O.J. was going to leave the car. You could die from the excitement.

We sit around that TV set for months at a time watching tasteless game shows, hucksters selling doorknobs with built-in alarm systems for $19.95, and more bad drama than we care to remember. Then, on the same night, at the same time, we get more action than we can follow.

As an average viewer I'm telling you, Mr. Network, "Don't EVER offer two things like this on the same night again!"

Zuni artists, craftsmen create furniture

By Nancy Walz

ZUNI PUEBLO, N.M. (AP) — Zuni artists and craftsmen, well known for their pottery, carved fetishes and intricate turquoise jewelry, have turned their talents to furniture.

The Zuni Furniture and Woodworks Enterprise is working not only as an artistic outlet but as an economic development effort for the 9,000-member tribe that struggles with 40 percent unemployment.

The 3-year-old furniture company employs 10 carpenters, painters and carvers who build and decorate benches, cabinets, doors, chairs, sofas, cradles, jewelry boxes, blanket chests and other items.

The pieces are available at the pueblo and in galleries and stores around the country, including outlets in Dallas, Tucson, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco and New York City.

"They are wonderful pieces, and they sell very well," says Rosemary Rodriguez, owner of the Shell and Stone gallery in Fayetteville, N.Y. "They are works of art. Our customers buy Zuni furniture for the workmanship and for the hand paintings on each piece. Each one is an individual."

Furniture making is not a traditional Indian craft, and Zuni is one of just three Indian tribes producing furniture, the others being the Yakimas of Washington and the Cherokees of North Carolina.

THE ENTERPRISE is located in a 5,500-square-foot production facility in Black Rock on the Zuni pueblo, south of Gallup.

The business, established in 1991 with a $42,000 grant from the U.S. Forest Service, is a joint venture with the University of New Mexico at Gallup, which offers woodworking classes to Zuni students who later go to work in the furniture shop.

Some of the Zuni's pine and cedar furniture is intricately carved and some is brightly painted in traditional Zuni designs such as black, white and red pottery images and characters from children's stories and fables. The furniture is made with pegs or mortise and tenon joints, without screws or nails.

Furniture sales have increased steadily from $10,000 in the first year to projected sales of $100,000 this year.

Customers at the pueblo can expect to pay about $150 for a small table to $500 for a blanket chest. Prices vary at shops around the country.

"We're selling everything we make," says production manager Roberto Sandoval. "We get customers mainly through word of mouth."

The early buyers were people familiar with the acclaimed artistic tradition of the Zunis. The hallmarks of Zuni design are intricately detailed animal figures and symbolic beings imbued with a sense of spirituality, and geometric designs inspired by tribal patterns from the 16th century.

An early commission that gave the project a needed boost was to furnish the new state Visitors' Center near the Capitol in Santa Fe. The visibility of that project led to an order from Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., for pieces for his office.

THE FURNITURE business is keeping up with a growing list of orders for custom work and established designs, and is breaking even, Sandoval says.

But Sandoval wants to return a profit to the tribe, and foresees that happening when the enterprise can step up production.

"One constraint is labor," Sandoval says. "It takes a couple of years to train a woodworker."

The shop has enough equipment to employ 25 people, and Sandoval says he hopes to increase production by training more woodworkers and adding to the product line while building the clientele.

"In any new business you need to develop the product then go after the market. You make it good, then have it grow. People are just becoming aware of the furniture," says Jim Ostler, general manager of Zuni Arts and Crafts. "I envision it growing and becoming a major industry here in Zuni."

The tribe recently got an $18,000 grant from the Forest Service to buy machinery for and run an old sawmill on Zuni land. The mill will provide lumber for the furniture, eliminating the need to travel the 130 miles to Albuquerque to buy wood.

"We will harvest pine and juniper from tribal land," Sandoval says. "It will give us a better quality of lumber."

The furniture enterprise is but one of several economic development efforts at Zuni, which has been trying to diversify its economy. The main source of income for most Zuni households is the production and sale of handmade jewelry, but the demand for silver and turquoise jewelry fell off in recent years, leading to a rise in unemployment.

THE TRIBE gets $49,000 a year from the U.S. Department of Commerce to devise an economic development strategy.

"Our strategy is to work in a comprehensive way to develop infrastructure, jobs and job training options and to help governing capabilities to obtain self sufficiency," says Rod Waller, the tribe's economic development specialist.

Along with the furniture program, the Zunis also operate a recylcing center, an automotive shop and a program to train residents health sciences and nursing and construction technology. Construction of a landfill transfer station is expected to begin this summer.

Other projects on the drawing board include an arts and crafts pavilion, a tribal computer system and a water pipeline and public transportation system.

Create a home office that works with the family

By Ava Van de Water
N.Y. Times News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Still using the dining room table for paperwork?

We may have gotten away with paying monthly bills and writing a letter or two before dinner, but when a home computer enters the picture, the dining table just doesn't cut it anymore.

While it's nice to have a spare bedroom to create an elaborate home office, it's not your only option. Depending on what time of day (or night) you plan to use the work space, you can carve out a niche in your bedroom, living room or family room.

Before you decide where to set up shop, define how you will use your home office. We consulted members of our interior design panel for advice.

"Is it just to pay the bills? Then you don't need a lot of space," said interior designer Roger Zwickel.

But if you run a full-fledged business from your home, you'll probably want to avoid competition from the television, children and household distractions. If you have the space, a spare bedroom — or even a closet — might be better.

Yet, if you are a family sharing a computer (many children now use them for homework as well as games), the kitchen might be more suitable.

"The kitchen is the nerve center of the house," said Peter Werner, a decorator and design chairman of the Red Cross Showhouses. "And kitchens are so huge now — it's sort of the ideal space."

NEXT YOU'LL want the right equipment. As more and more people are shying away from spending 40, 50 or 60 hours in the office, furniture manufacturers are responding with units that will accommodate a computer, yet not stand out like a commercial sore thumb in the home.

Herman Miller, the Michigan-based office furniture manufacturer noted for its modern designs (remember the molded plywood "potato chip chair"?), just teamed up with Crate & Barrel to produce a line of sleek cherry desks, storage cabinets and bookcases that fit neatly into any home.

Besides its good looks, Herman Miller's TD Collection is functional. Drop leaves extend for extra work space and fold down for access to closets or guest beds.

And new armoires that include fold-down work surfaces are an easy way to carve a working niche in the master bedroom, family room or even living room. Close it up and there's no evidence of the stack of bills, computer equipment and work in progress.

In addition to a good desk, you'll need proper lighting and a comfortable chair. You can use any type chair at your desk, from dining chairs to ergonomic office chairs. If your office is in the living room or other public area of your home, you probably want something compatible with your decor.

LIGHTING SHOULD be twofold. First, make sure the general lighting in your work area is good and doesn't produce a glare on the computer screen. Then add a shaded fixture (a frosted bulb is easy on the eyes) for paperwork. Many of the members of our interior design panel recommended fluorescent lighting strips for work spaces that include an over-the-desk bookcase or cabinet.

Before buying furniture for your work space, take stock of furniture you already have. While you can spend a fortune on home office furniture, you certainly don't have to.

"You want it to be beautiful to look at, but the utilitarian thing is workability," said interior decorator Rick Luke.

Margie Yansura of Wordsmith Communications in West Palm Beach took advantage of a former efficiency apartment next to her garage. The space was perfect — far enough to avoid interruptions from the children, but close enough to be there when needed. A closet and built-in dresser provide ample storage space for papers and other materials. Her desk, computer table and chair all were inexpensive finds at charity thrift stores.

After scrubbing everything (including Dade County pine ceiling and 1920s ceramic tile floor) and painting the walls a blush pink, she dressed up the space with curtains made from floral sheets (using the sheet's top ruffle for the curtain bottom).

"The whole key to having your own office is to keep the cost down," she said.

In some households, it makes sense to have more than one home "office."

ALTHOUGH LENNY Hollander of Boca Raton tends to much of his personal insurance business from the house, he and wife, Harriet, decided they needed an office area for the family, too. With the help of decorator Rick Luke, they chose an antique desk for a nook between the kitchen and family room. It acts as a family message center and bill-paying space.

"It's where the family business is taken care of, instead of the business business," Luke said.

800 number calls aren't always free anymore

By Terrence L. Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

Calls to 800 numbers aren't necessarily free anymore.

Many phone pornography, psychic hot lines and other pay-per-call services jumped from the maligned 900-number lines to the once toll-free 800-number circuit.

Billings on 900 numbers reached $975 million in 1991, but plummeted to $540 million last year, largely because of the success of 900-blocker devices and a government crackdown to cut use by minors.

In November, the Federal Trade Commission and Federal Communications Commission adopted new rules that allow companies to charge fees for calls to 800 numbers. The rules also stipulate that any 800 pay-per-call service must specify all terms and conditions, including fees, before consumers are charged.

Consumer advocates are worried, though. They're concerned people will ignore recorded messages explaining the charges because they've been programmed to believe all 800-numbers are toll-free.

"It's inherently deceptive to charge people for using 800 numbers because historically (that) has been used as a toll-free number," said Ken McEldowney, executive director of Consumer Action in San Francisco.

Sharon Jones of Dayton, Ohio, for example, called an 800-number psychic hot line in April and talked for 32 minutes before a psychic told her to hang up and call back on the company's 900 number. Jones didn't follow through, but called the 800 number again, assuming the call was free.

Within weeks, however, Jones received a $423 phone bill from the pay-per-call service.

"It's done underhandedly the way they charge you," said Jones. "I was under the impression I was calling a free number."

Jones, who says she does not recall any message before talking with a psychic, refuses to pay the bill and is working with Ameritech and officials from the 800-service company, InfoAccess Inc., to resolve the situation.

Although she refuses to pay the disputed pay-per-call portion of her bill, Jones is in no danger of losing her regular phone service, according to FTC guidelines.

Repeated calls to New York-based InfoAccess Inc., which offers 800 lines for pay-per-call service, and other services were not returned.

After the beginning of the year, when some companies began switching to 800 lines because the service is cheaper, complaints increased across the nation. In Ohio, Ameritech has received an average of about three calls a month since March.

Although not a money issue, consumers also are complaining that 900-blocker devices won't work on 800 pay-per-call services. Instead consumers must call each service and request a block.

Here's an example of what can happen when you call 800-numbers that offer consumer services:

A recorded message requests that callers under 18 hang up. You're then given an access or PIN (Personal Identification Number) number. The recording advises you to press 1 and enter the number you were given. If you don't, you're told to hang up or the company will begin billing within several seconds.

Jones, and customers who refuse billings, must notify the company listed on their bill within 60 days after the first statement containing the error was issued. The company must acknowledge your notice in writing within 40 days.

If that doesn't work, consumers should contact Ameritech, their state Attorney General's office or the FCC in Washington.

Expert reveals flower arranging techniques

Associated Press

As if they were just cut from an idyllic garden, the flowers in a design by Tom Pritchard don't seem arranged. Their naturalistic styling follows Pritchard's heartfelt belief in letting the inherent beauty of flowers always be evident.

For 20 years, Pritchard has displayed an unerring eye for creating sublimely elegant floral designs. His unstudied style — a hallmark of the New York-based flower and home furnishings store Pure Madderlake, which he cofounded — was widely emulated after the publication of his landmark book, "Flowers Rediscovered."

Here are some flower arranging techniques he shared with Traditional Home magazine:

■ The main thing is having great choices — an interesting selection of bold and colorful flowers that don't look stiff.

■ Pick a container that offers a balance with the flowers. How much container do your flowers need for good proportion?

■ Use crossed branches wedged against the insides of the container to anchor the flowers more naturally.

■ Start with the boldest flowers (usually the largest). Place these to outline the basic shape you want — the highest point, the lowest point, the widest point. Then add the progressively smaller blooms to fill out the arrangement.

■ Use soft drooping flowers at the bottom edge to blur the abrupt line between the arrangement and the container.

■ Stop adding when it looks finished.

LIFESTYLE POLICIES

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle section of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Monday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographs will be published for winners only, not runners-up. These annoucements are published Thursdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Monday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after one month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

"This is my first villainous role in a play," said Ms. Spector, who plays, along with Olsen, the evil duo of Lilly and Rooster. "I usually get to play the saintly people or ingenues."

"I've never played a bad guy before," said Olsen, the Playhouse's educational theater director. He laughed, then added, "This is a real stretch for me because I'm such a nice guy."

Playing a villainous role means, Olsen said, "Getting down and dirty. I think of all the people I don't like and put them all together and come out with a character."

Unlike Olsen, whose on stage theater experience is totally in musicals, "Annie" also represents Ms. Spector's first role in a musical, She is learning, she said, about the challenge of singing and dancing and acting at the same time.

"It's scary, and I'm very nervous," said Ms. Spector, who finds it impossible to answer questions about her participation in "Annie" without laughing. "I never know what's going to come out of my mouth while I'm singing. But, its a comedic part so hopefully it won't be too bad. It is a lot of fun and a challenge. I was shocked I got cast in a role. I was never cast in a musical before."

So why did she audition?

"I just love the show," said Ms. Spector, a Midland attorney. "I've loved it ever since I was a little girl, and I've always wanted to be in it so I tried out."

Paula Olsen, choir director at Midland's Abell Hanger and Alamo schools, had a more pragmatic reason for auditioning.

"My husband works at the theater and he wanted to do it, and I figured if I wanted to see him at all this summer that might be a good idea," said Ms. Olsen, who graduated from Texas Tech University in 1992. "And I haven't done anything since I left college, and I miss it."

"It was a chance for us to be on stage again together," said Olsen, adding that the last time he and his wife were in a musical together was "Little Show of Horrors" at Texas Tech in 1991. "What's really funny is we're not really on the stage together ex cept two scenes because she's a good guy and I'm a bad guy."

If she hadn't auditioned and been cast, Ms. Olsen said, "I probably would have been bored stiff. And I do still have a lot of free time during the day, so that's nice."

She wouldn't be able to commit herself to a musical, especially in Odessa because of the drive time back and forth, during the school year. And her husband has found himself also-unable to commit the time required to be in a production.

"I haven't been on stage in a while due to working with kids over here," said Olsen, referring to the Playhouse's youth performing troupe, the Kaleidoscope Company and theater school. "And, this summer, due to the fact we aren't doing a children's production, I can participate in an adult production."

For Midlander Robin Smith, who "likes all kinds of theater," "Annie" represented the chance to be in another show.

"I've done three (plays) in Odessa and three (plays) in Midland," said Smith, who works as an electronics technician at Caldwell Music. "I knew that 'Annie' was a pretty big musical so I thought it would be fun."

Although this native Odessan said he has been interested in theater "pretty much all my life," he wasn't in a play until 1991. He was too busy traveling and had spent the previous 12 to 13 years touring the southern United States as a member of a band based in Austin called The

He and his brother, Byron Smith, both played in the band, doing weekend gigs when Smith was in high school and then traveling full time once he graduated. In 1985, Smith's life changed.

"I got married," Smith said. "I was gone more days than I was home so I decided to come home, and that's when I decided to be go back to school and got into theater."

Both he and his wife, Becky Neighbors-Smith, who works for Channel 2, are night people, Smith said. So they rendezvous when she gets off work and he is through with theater for the evening, somewhere around 11 p.m.

"Theater gives me me a creative outlet — some form of expression," said Smith, who sings and plays the guitar. But it is different being on stage as a member of a band and acting on stage in a play.

"Both are in front of an audience, but with theater I feel more exposed," Smith said.

Charles Strouse's "Annie," set in New York during the 1930s, will be on stage at the Playhouse, 310 W. 42nd, at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturdays through July 30. Sunday matinees are scheduled for 2:30 p.m. July 24 and 31. Admission is $12 for adults, $10 for seniors and students, including those in college with a valid ID, and $6 for ages 4-12. For reservations call 1-362-2329.

The production marks the first at the Playhouse since a new lighting system was donated this spring by Mrs. W.D. Noel.

Other principals in the production include Laci James as Annie, Jack Harding as Daddy Warbucks, Jo Richards as Miss Hannigan, Mike Schlueter as President Roosevelt, Victor Lopez as Drake and Gregg Hagelstein as Howe.

Also in the production from Midland are Abbie Broughton, 11, who plays the orphan Duffy, and adult ensemble members Arwayne Bishop, and mother and son, Kay Eskew and Owen Eskew.

Other orphans include Angie Leckbee, Veronica Dye, Kristi Waltha!, Marisol Caballero, Mark Leckbee, Christina Leckbee, Christina Leavitt , Hali Perkins and Aparna Ramanathan.

Adult ensemble members include Chris Borgman, Laura Englert, Kristin Hagelstein, Ron Houston, Beth Leckbee, Chuck Leckbee, Chris Leckbee, Brenda Myers, Kitt Richmond, Tina Leckbee, Lopez and Smith.

"They've been great; they are a real good group of people," Barbara Robinson, the Playhouse's director who joined the staff in the fall of 1994, said of the "Annie" cast. "We're having a new lighting system installed, and we've had nights when the air conditioner wasn't working very well. So, it's been a little warm. And they don't mind. They still work very hard. It's a hard-working group — very flexible and really talented.

Stage managers are D'Alice Belanger and Mary Lou Birney. Scenic and lighting designs are by Pete Simon.

"I'm also doing a lot of the scene art for it," Olsen said. "And we're really going for a cartoon feel like the original script so a lot of the scenery is cartoon stylized. We really want it to be fun entertainment."

The final principal in the play is Sandy, who was adopted from the Midland Animal Shelter for this show by the Permian Basin Obedience Training Club and will be available for adoption at the close of the run. All proceeds will go to benefit the Midland SPCA.

The Playhouse plans to start a tradition this summer.

"We're going to be trying to do this every year," Ms. Robinson said.

Cost of the musical, which is sponsored in part by the Odessa Cultural Council, is $16,000.

Outdoor musical

"VIVA El Paso!," the outdoor musical drama held annually in McKelligon Canyon, captures the city's multi-cultural qualities. The production is on stage through Sept. 3. Dinner is at 6:30 p.m. The show begins at 8:30 p.m. For details or ticket information call 1-565-6900 or 1-800-915-VIVA.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JULY 10, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR: The idea of starting a business holds more and more appeal. Do your homework before approaching potential investors. A romance that has lasted for some time could become permanent. Travel to important family events. Hearing about them after the fact is not nearly as good as being there! Early in 1995, you find a way to realize a long-cherished dream. A change of lifestyle could mean greater domestic contentment.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: tennis players Arthur Ashe and Virginia Wade, folk singer Arlo Guthrie, playwright Jean Kerr.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The emphasis today is on using your eyes and ears to find out what is really going on. An innocent youngster could land in hot water unless you get involved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pour all your energy into helping others today; you will never regret it! Demand the best of others as well as yourself. Settling for less would be a mistake.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): All work and no play could hamper your efforts to develop warm family relationships. Consistency is the key to handling parent-child conflicts. Set some ground rules and enforce them.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Something that looks like a negative can be turned into a positive. Share any good news you receive with family members. Strike a better balance between work and play.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stop fretting and be grateful for what you have. The future looks brighter than ever! Support from your partner heaps you pick yourself up after a disappointment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Many answers will be found over the next few weeks. Finalize plans for a family vacation after checking newspapers for travel bargains. An older relative is feeling neglected.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Bring your idealism down to earth. Check with experts before altering your financial plans. Without a practical approach, a project will founder. Travel and romance go hand-in-hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It should be easy to shift gears today and win the admiration of a friend or neighbor. Rewards for things done in the past finally arrive. An evening telephone call could bring peace of mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Although you still have mountains to climb, today's events will greatly improve your chances for reaching the top. A personal computer could save you valuable time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone may encourage you to leap into the fast lane when it would be wiser to glide along the slow track. Loved ones may be irritable for no particular reason.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Common sense is telling you to listen carefully to your mate or partner. A lot can be gained if you bend but don't break the rules. Try to replace bad habits with good ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try to cool any friction between you and an authority figure. An uplifting family event will boost your spirits and put things in perspective. Forget past grievances.

TODAY'S CHILDREN: Although these youngsters take a long time making up their minds, once they reach a decision, they never look back. Optimistic and enthusiastic, they are fun to be around! Parents can expect them to excel in English and art. Their top passions are the outdoors and animals, especially dogs. These Cancerians' keen intuition will be a big help in the executive suite or personnel office. They are quick to sense other people's strengths and weaknesses.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣ Finesses come in various guises. There is a complex finesse, known in the trade as the "intra-finesse," that crops up with some degree of frequency, yet is often overlooked in the play.

Although the North hand contained only 14 points in high cards, its perfect distribution made it well worth a takeout double even at the three-level. East boosted the preempt to the five-level, but South held too much to be shut out of the auction. East's double was based on the fact the high cards were behind the strong hand.

Had West led a diamond there would have been no story to tell, but it is impossible to fault the defender's choice of the ace of clubs. Despite the reprieve, declarer still had a hard row to hoe. To avoid going down, South would have to establish the table's spades while losing only one trick in the suit.

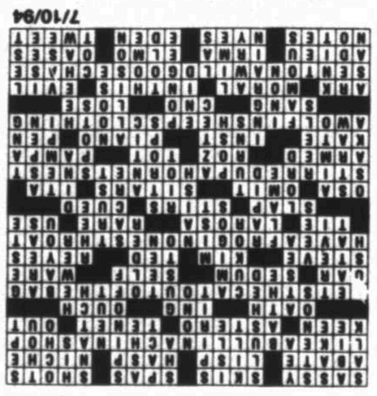

The obvious method would be to play West for the king of spades, but the bidding made it dollars to doughnuts that East held that card. The intra-finesse, which depended on West holding either the ten or jack of spades guarded no more than once, was more appealing.

The opening lead was ruffed high in dummy and, since trumps were going to be needed as entries to the table, declarer could not afford to draw two rounds. Instead, the closed hand was entered with a trump and low spade was led to the eight, losing to the jack. East exited with a trump, won on the board. The queen of spades was led and, when East followed low, so did South. When that pinned the ten, all was well. Declarer cashed the ace of spades, crossed to dummy with a trump, discarded two diamonds on the good spades and cheerfully conceded a diamond trick to the defenders.

Disney's 'Lion King' stays No. 1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Lion King" again finished No. 1 at the box office with $34.2 million, easily beating out five new films.

The animated Disney musical has made $104.6 million in its first three weeks, according to industry figures released Tuesday.

Debuting over the Fourth of July weekend were "The Shadow," "Blown Away," "I Love Trouble," "Baby's Day Out" and "Little Big League."

The two family films, competing against "The Lion King," fared the worst. "Baby's Day Out," an infant version of "Home Alone," grossed a mere $4 million in ticket sales. Equally anemic was the debut of "Little Big League," about a boy who inherits the Minnesota Twins baseball team. It managed $3.1 million.

"The Shadow" made $11.7 million; "Blown Away," $10.4 million;

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Workshop scheduled

The Company, a touring fine arts team from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, will lead a workshop on the basics of acting, staging, stage movement and script writing from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at Alamo Heights baptist Church, 1305 N. Midland Drive.

Cost is $10 and participants will be offered the opportunity to perform with The Company in a sketch during the 7 p.m. worship Saturday.

In addition, The Company also will perform at 11 a.m. July 17 at Alamo Heights Baptist Church.

"I've seen about a dozen Christian theater performance groups, but none has had a better balance of talent and commitment to Christ than The Company," said Ben Condray, the church's pastor. "We hope that this workshop will provide a spark to churches with a working drama ministry in our community and will give other churches an incentive to start one. Reaching people for Christ through the arts has been an effective means for centuries."

A nursery will be provided through age 3 for both worship services. The public is invited to attend.

■ Watercolors displayed

Oils and watercolors by Mary Tucci are hanging at Midland National Bank this month.

Ms. Tucci is taking watercolor and oil classes from Judy Morrison Griffin and Bill Hagerman. she has studied with Debbie Pinkstaff and Kathy Martin. In April, she attended a watercolor workshop with Betty Lynch in Sedona, Ariz.

She is a member of the Midland Arts Association, the Odessa Art Association and The Palette Club, where she serves on the board of directors and is an officer.

Each month Midland National Bank offers a member of MAA's the opportunity to display paintings in the lobby.

■ Show to return

Show time for "Creepy Crawlies" or "How Snakes and Bugs Live Happily in West Texas" is 10:30 a.m. Bring lawn chairs. Depending upon the size of the crowd, the show may be held in front of the store.

■ Production moves

The production of the musical "The Wondrous Elf," originally scheduled for later this month, has been moved to Sept. 22-25 and Sept. 30-Oct. 2.

The opening night program, at $20 a seat, will benefit the children's programs at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum. All other performances will be $5.

The show is written and produced by Ellen Gossett and directed by Andy Salcedo.

To purchase tickets call 684-4230 or go by 2311 Elizabeth Ave. between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Thursday.
